3. On October 29, 2004, the debtor filed a motion to reopen the 1983 case and vacate the appointment of the trustee.
Dkt. # 4 (Exh. 30 & 31). On October 3, 2005, the day of the hearing of the motions (after several delays), the debtor filed another series of motions, see, supra, p.2. The district court, on April 3, 2006, ruled that Renaissance's various and "confusingly captioned" motions were efforts to reopen, and as such, were untimely and without merit.

B. Grounds for summary affirmance.

1. Renaissance's attempts to vacate the appointment of the bankruptcy trustee are barred by res judicata.

Renaissance's ultimate goal is to undo the appointment of the bankruptcy trustee in the 1983 bankruptcy case, and regain its broadcast license. It unsuccessfully attempted to achieve this goal in 1983, by directly seeking to challenge the appointment in the 1983 bankruptcy proceeding and taking an appeal to the district court which affirmed the appointment. The debtor later challenged the conversion of the Chapter 11 case to a Chapter 7 case in bankruptcy court, which conversion, under 11 U.S.C. 701(a)(1), automatically gives rise to the appointment of a Chapter 7 trustee. See, supra, n.3 (chapter 11 case converted to chapter 7 case). The debtor never took an appeal of this conversion. Renaissance then continued its efforts by filing a civil rights action in 1985 through its principal, and a subsequent 60(b) motion to reopen the civil rights lawsuit in 1995. In both instances, McMeans appealed to this Court, which affirmed the district court's decisions without opinion. In this present case, under the guise of several confusing motions, the debtor seeks the same result – to undo the appointment of the trustee in the 1983 bankruptcy case.

Any challenge to the appointment of the trustee is plainly barred by res judicata. Under the doctrine of res judicata, "a final judgment on the merits of an action precludes the parties or their privies from re-litigating a claim that was or could have been raised in that action." Federated Dep't Stores, Inc. v. Moitie, 452 U.S. 394, 398 (1981). See also Nanavati v. Burdette Tomlin Memorial Hospital, 857 F.2d 96, 111 (3d Cir. 1988), cert. denied, 489 U.S. 1078 (1989). Here the debtor plainly had the opportunity in 1983 and 1984 to challenge the appointments of the bankruptcy trustees under Chapters 11 and 7. In fact, it actually litigated these issues in bankruptcy court and, during the case, never appealed the Chapter 7 trustee's appointment (the final trustee in the 1983 bankruptcy case) to this Court.

2. The debtor’s motion to withdraw reference of the 1983 bankruptcy case under 28 U.S.C.157(d) is likewise barred by res judicata.

Under 28 U.S.C. 1334(b), district courts have “original but not exclusive jurisdiction of all civil proceedings arising under title 11, or arising in or related to cases under title 11.” 28 U.S.C. 157(a) provides in turn that a district court may refer to a bankruptcy court “any or all cases under title 11, and any or all proceedings arising under title 11 .” By standing order of July 23, 1984, the United States District Court for the District of New Jersey referred all such cases and proceedings to the bankruptcy court. Dkt. # 4 (Exh. 36). Title 28 also provides that a district court “shall, on timely motion of a party”, withdraw any case or proceeding, in whole or in part, referred to a bankruptcy court “if the court determines that resolution of the proceeding requires consideration of both title 11 and other laws of the United States regulating organizations or activities of interstate commerce.” 28 U.S.C. 157(d).[4] The debtor below asserted that because Federal Communications law governing broadcast licenses were implicated in the bankruptcy proceeding, section 157(d) mandates the withdrawal of reference of the 1983 case from the bankruptcy court.

[4] The second sentence of 157(d) refers to a mandatory withdrawal of reference. The first sentence of this section refers to a discretionary withdrawal of reference for cause shown.

However, by filing a new motion seeking to withdraw reference of the long-closed 1983 bankruptcy case under 157(d), the debtor is in reality attempting once again to undo the appointment of the trustee appointed over 20 years earlier. The debtor's claim, however styled, is barred by res judicata for the reasons stated above. Moreover, as soon as the US Trustee filed the motion to appoint a Chapter 11 trustee, the debtor was on notice that the potential involuntary transfer of its broadcast license could, and did occur, in the bankruptcy proceeding. Thus, Renaissance had ample opportunity to raise the issue of a 157(d) withdrawal of reference from the bankruptcy court. In fact it could have raised this issue at any point in the bankruptcy proceeding but Renaissance chose not to do so. For this reason also, its motion to withdraw reference is barred by res judicata.

Nor does framing the motion to withdraw reference as a challenge to the subject-matter jurisdiction of the bankruptcy court in 1983 alter the application of res judicata principles to this case. It is well settled that even where "non-waivable subject matter jurisdiction is lacking but not raised, a final judgment has res judicata effect in a subsequent proceeding , and a collateral attack in a subsequent proceeding on the want of subject matter jurisdiction is barred." Chemical Leaman Tank Lines v. Aetna Cas. Sur., 177 F.3d 210, 219-220 (3d Cir. 1999). See also Insurance Corp. of Ireland v. Compagnie Des Bauxtes, 456 U.S. 694, 702 n.9 (1982); Hodge v. Hodge, 621 F.2d 590, 592-93 (3d Cir. 1980). This rule applies whether or not the claim was actually litigated, Chemical Leaman Lines, supra, at 220. In the 1983 bankruptcy proceeding, Renaissance had plenty of opportunity to assert the lack of subject-matter jurisdiction. Furthermore, filing a motion under Fed. R. Civ. P. 60(b)(4) does not overcome the principles of res judicata; final judgments are not rendered "void" under this provision because of a lack of subject matter jurisdiction. Hodge v. Hodge, 621 F.2d at 593. Moreover, the absence of jurisdiction was not so clear "that its assumption 'was a manifest abuse of authority.'" Hodge, supra, at 593, such that the normal rule of res judicata would not apply.

To be sure, there is another exception to the general rule of res judicata – namely that the assumptions of jurisdiction "'would substantially infringe the authority of another tribunal or [governmental] agency.'" Hodge, supra, at 593. Here, however, the bankruptcy trustee's acquisition of the broadcast license from the debtor by operation of federal law does not substantially infringe on the FCC's authority.

Federal communications law recognizes two kinds of license transfers: voluntary and involuntary. Voluntary transfers, such as when a licensee wishes to sell the license to another party, require prior FCC approval and are governed by 47 C.F.R. 73.3540. Involuntary transfers take place by operation of law upon death or legal disability of the license holder such as when a receiver or bankruptcy trustee is appointed, and is governed by 47 C.F.R. 73.3541. Involuntary transfers do not require prior FCC approval; rather the new holder created by operation of law has 30 days to seek FCC approval.

The appointment of the Chapter 11 trustee does not by itself substantially interfere with these regulations, or non-title ll law under 157(d). In the context of bankruptcy, the FCC has “consistently held that the [FCC] will not generally question the appointment of a bankruptcy trustee or receiver where a court is seeking to protect the creditors of a financially disabled licensee.” In Re Application of D.H. Overmyer Telecasting Co., Inc., 1983 WL 182836, at ¶9. See also LaRose v. FCC, 494 F.2d 1145, 1147-48 (D.C. Cir. 1974) (in a case under the Bankruptcy Act of 1898, “[t]he [FCC’s] regular practice is to approve an involuntary assignment of the license to a receiver in bankruptcy[.]”). The FCC’s long-held view is that the appointment of trustees under title 11 does not interfere with the regulation of broadcast licenses, and there is no Commission requirement that bankruptcy court’s orders appointing trustees be contingent upon the Commission’s approval of broadcast licenses.

In any event, the FCC approved the involuntary transfer of the broadcast license upon the appointment of the trustee, and it also approved the trustee’s voluntary transfer of the license when the estate’s assets were subsequently sold. Had the FCC thought the bankruptcy court’s appointment of a trustee substantially infringed upon its authority over license transfers, it would presumably have raised that issue over twenty years ago rather than approve these transfers.

Thus, for all the above reasons, the motion to withdraw reference under 157(d) is barred by res judicata.

3. In any event, the debtor’s motion for a mandatory withdrawal of reference under 157(d) is on its face meritless as well as untimely.

The mandatory withdrawal of reference provision under 28 U.S.C. 157(d) requires an existing case or proceeding before a district court can withdraw the reference. See In Re Pruitt, 910 F.2d 1160, 1169 (3d Cir. 1990) (holding that there was no cause for discretionary withdrawal of reference when the bankruptcy court had entirely disposed of the case). Here, there is no pending bankruptcy case or proceeding. The bankruptcy proceeding has been closed for almost two decades. The terms of 157(d) foreclose a withdrawal where, as here, there is no case.[5]

[5] The debtor’s motions apparently do not ask the district court to reopen the 1983 bankruptcy case in the first instance, but rather seek a withdrawal of the reference of the motion to reopen filed in the bankruptcy court by Renaissance in 2004. The debtor’s motions regarding a case closed in 1987 are unintelligible, and for this reason also, summary affirmance is warranted. Moreover, the debtor cannot offer a substantial and compelling reason for reopening the case 19 years after it was closed, especially when the former estate assets have likely passed through at least a few subsequent purchasers. Finally, with respect to the bankruptcy court’s appointment of the

Moreover, the mandatory withdrawal of reference provision expressly requires a “timely motion by a party”. 28 U.S.C. 157(d). The bankruptcy case was closed in 1987. Filing a motion for withdrawal of reference 19 years later is by no stretch of the imagination “timely.”

The district court thus properly denied mandatory withdrawal of reference under 157(d).

4. Any challenge to the sale of the broadcast license is foreclosed under 11 U.S.C. 363(m).

One further consideration warrants summary affirmance. At the end of the day, the debtor is really seeking to overturn the sale of the broadcast license in the 1983 bankruptcy case under 11 U.S.C. 363(b). Section 363(m), however, forecloses such a challenge, and under this section, as this Court has held, any such appeal would be moot. Cinciola v. Scharffenberger, 248 F.3d 110,123 (3d Cir. 2001); Krebs Chrysler-Plymouth Inc. v. Valley Motors, Inc. 141 F.3d 490, 498-499 (3d Cir. 1998) (an appeal seeking the reversal or modification of the sale of the estate’s property is moot if it would affect the sale’s validity and there is no stay pending appeal).

trustee, the court was well within its discretion to decide that an appointment was justified to protect the interests of the creditors of a financially disabled debtor/licensee. See 11 U.S.C. 1104 (grounds for the appointment of a trustee).

CONCLUSION

For the foregoing reasons, the US Trustee, respectfully moves for summary affirmance of the district court's order of April 3, 2006.

Respectfully submitted,

BASIS OF APPELLATE JURISDICTION

Appellee, Ira Bodenstein, the United States Trustee for the Northern District of Illinois (the "U.S. Trustee") agrees with Appellant, Repurchase Corporation (the "Debtor") that this Court has jurisdiction over this appeal under 28 U.S.C. §158(a).

ISSUES PRESENTED

1. Whether the bankruptcy court abused its discretion when it granted the U.S. Trustee's Motion to Dismiss the Bankruptcy Case pursuant to 11 U.S.C. §1112(b).

2. Whether the bankruptcy court was clearly erroneous when it denied confirmation of the First Amended Plan of Reorganization pursuant to 11 U.S.C. §1129(a)(11), based on its finding that the Amended Plan was not feasible.

3. Whether the bankruptcy court abused its discretion when it denied the Debtor's Motion to Amend Order Denying Confirmation of Amended Plan and Motion to Vacate Dismissal Order, declining to reopen the evidence in the confirmation hearing on the Amended Plan, based on its finding that: (a) such evidence was not newly discovered or unknown at the time of such hearing; and (b) there was no error of law in the rendering of each decision.

APPLICABLE STANDARD OF REVIEW

The U.S. Trustee agrees with the Debtor that the decision to dismiss a case pursuant to 11 U.S.C. §1112(b) is within the sound discretion of the bankruptcy court. See In re Woodbrook Assoc., 19 F.3d 312, 322 (7th Cir. 1994). This Court reviews the bankruptcy court's findings of fact with the clearly erroneous standard. Conclusions of law are reviewed de novo. Id. at 316.

STATEMENT OF THE CASE

The Debtor appeals five orders issued by the bankruptcy court for the Northern District of Illinois: (1) the Order Granting the U.S. Trustee's Motion to Dismiss, dated July 25, 2005; (2) the Order Denying Confirmation of Chapter 11 Plan, dated July 25, 2005; (3) the Order denying Debtor's Motion to Amend Order Denying Confirmation of Amended Plan, dated October 31, 2005; (4) the Order Denying Debtor's Motion to Vacate Dismissal Order, dated October 31, 2005; and (5) the Memorandum Opinion Denying Debtor's (a) Motion to Amend Order Denying Confirmation of Amended Plan and (b) Motion to Vacate Dismissal, dated October 31, 2005 (the "Opinion"). An evidentiary hearing on confirmation of the First Amended Plan of Reorganization (the "Amended Plan") was held on July 12, 2005, and, a hearing on the U.S. Trustee's Motion to Dismiss the bankruptcy case was held on July 25, 2005. A hearing on the Motion to Amend Order Denying Confirmation of Amended Plan and the Motion to Vacate Dismissal Order (collectively, the "Motions to Reconsider") was held on August 23, 2005. The Debtor appeals from the bankruptcy court's decisions to deny confirmation of the Amended Plan and to dismiss the chapter 11 case, which decisions the bankruptcy court declined to reconsider.

STATEMENT OF THE FACTS

The Debtor filed a voluntary petition for relief under Chapter 11 of the Bankruptcy Code on September 3, 2004. [Docket #140, p.2]. At the time of the filing, it was not an operating business. [Docket #69, p.7]. The sole asset of any value was net operating loss carryovers for federal income tax purposes. [Docket #69, p.1].

On December 30, 2004, the Debtor filed its Disclosure Statement for Repurchase Corporation's Plan of Reorganization (the "Original Disclosure Statement") and Plan of Reorganization (the "Original Plan"). [Docket #s 34 and 35]. Under the Original Plan, Leon Greenblatt ("Greenblatt"), who currently owns and/or controls all of the outstanding shares of the Debtor, was to pay to the estate $100,000 and receive in consideration a minimum of 20% of the equity of the Debtor post-confirmation. [Docket #35, p.1]. Unsecured creditors were to receive a pro-rata distribution of the $100,000, as well as the option to purchase a pro-rata share of 800 shares of new stock. [Docket #35, pp. 1-2, 13]. The Original Disclosure Statement provided that the issuance and distribution of the new stock was exempt from the securities laws pursuant to 11 U.S.C. §1145. [Docket #35, p.17].

Both the U.S. Trustee and the Securities and Exchange Commission filed objections to the Original Plan in that it contemplated issuing the new stock in violation of 11 U.S.C. §1145, and, that it discharged the Debtor in violation of 11 U.S.C. §1141(d)(3).[1] The Debtor responded by arguing, inter alia, that whether the Original Plan violates securities laws is irrelevant to whether the plan is confirmable pursuant to 11 U.S.C. §1129(a). [Docket #51, pp. 3-4].

The bankruptcy court found as a matter of law the Debtor could not rely on 11 U.S.C. §1145 to exempt the issuance of the new stock from the securities laws. The bankruptcy court granted leave to the Debtor to amend the Original Plan and Original Disclosure Statement to provide for the exact legal exemption it intended to rely upon when issuing the new stock. [Docket #75]. The only material change the Debtor made in its Amended Disclosure Statement and the Amended Plan was to suggest it would attempt to rely on §4(2) of the Securities Act of 1933 to issue the new stock. [Docket #69, p.17].

[1] James Stephenson, the Trustee of MJK Clearing, Inc. ("MJK"), also filed an objection to the Original Disclosure Statement alleging certain inaccuracies relating to the equity security holders and to Greenblatt contributing $100,000 to the Estate. [Docket #44].

The U.S. Trustee, MJK, and, Credit Suisse First Boston LLC ("CSFB"), an unsecured creditor which the Debtor listed in its Schedules of Assets and Liabilities as owed $702,443.61 [Docket #84, p.2], all filed objections to the Amended Disclosure Statement and the Amended Plan. [Docket #s 75, 77 and 84]. The Debtor filed its Report of Balloting on the Debtor's First Amended Plan of Reorganization which showed that the Amended Plan was accepted by the two creditors who timely voted.[2] The two creditors who voted were Robinson Curley & Clayton, PC, a law firm that holds a claim against the Debtor and continues to represent affiliates of the Debtor, and, Loop Properties, an affiliate of the Debtor. [Docket #81, footnote #1].

The bankruptcy court held an evidentiary hearing on confirmation of the Amended Plan on July 12, 2005. [Docket #118]. The Debtor offered the testimony of Greenblatt in support of confirmation. Greenblatt testified that the Debtor's business was investments in securities and in the oil business, however, the Debtor had not purchased a single security since 2001. [Docket #118, pp. 24 and 34-35]. He further testified that as of the date of the hearing, he had: (1) no source of employment income; (2) no cash and no demand deposit accounts; and (3) he had not filed any tax returns for the years 2001, 2002, 2003 or 2004, because, amongst other reasons, he had no taxable income. [Docket #118, pp. 36-37]. Shareholder contributions by his wife in the amount of $500,000 would provide the source of capital to start up the investment business, however, Greenblatt did not have a written commitment to contribute that amount or a current balance sheet showing her assets and liabilities. [Docket #118, pp. 52-53]. Greenblatt also testified that another source was to "...enter into the tax-type sharing agreements in which we would benefit cash in exchange for the utilization of our NOLs through either leasing or other– some other mechanism.” [Docket #118, p.54]. Greenblatt, however, had “absolutely not” entered into such agreements yet. [Docket #118, p.54]. After Debtor’s counsel represented to the bankruptcy court that,

> [t]he only other piece of evidence that the debtors were going to offer was with respect to the funding of the $100,000 in the plan. And we had planned to have with us today a certified check...[but] we don’t have that right at this moment...,

the Debtor rested its case. [Docket #118, pp. 58 and 61].

Based on the record before it, the bankruptcy court denied confirmation of the Amended Plan. In reaching this decision, the bankruptcy court noted that,

> You [the debtor] have a burden to show me feasibility and legality, and in this case they are about the same. You have to show me that engaging in business is feasible...you would have to show me that you could engage in business and would engage in business both in terms of feasibility and in terms of 1141(d)(3).

[Docket #118, p.7-8]. Feasibility, the court stated, “...is something that we take into account seriously” in Chapter 11 [Docket #118, p.77].

The U.S. Trustee then filed the Motion to Dismiss Pursuant to 11 U.S.C. §1112(b) (“Motion to Dismiss”). [Docket #116]. The Motion requested dismissal because the Debtor had been in bankruptcy for almost a year, and, had twice attempted unsuccessfully to confirm a plan. Continuation of this case would only serve to further delay and prejudice the creditors. [Docket #116, p.2]. After notice, and, a hearing on July 25, 2005, the bankruptcy court dismissed the case. [Docket #119].

Thereafter, the Debtor filed the Motions to Reconsider the dismissal order and to the order denying confirmation of the Amended Plan. [Docket #s 125 and 126]. The Debtor alleged that there was clear error of law in denying confirmation. Further, the Debtor claimed that,

> ...it has reached an agreement for funding of the plan, and will have evidence of available funds. The Debtor's agreement with another entity will allow the Debtor to engage in business and utilize the NOLs post-confirmation.

[Docket #126, p.8]. The Debtor also stated that prior to the hearing on the Motions to Reconsider, it would present a second amended plan and second amended disclosure statement.[3] [Docket #126, p.7]. The Debtor did not allege that this evidence existed but was unavailable when confirmation was denied. [Docket #140, p.5].

A hearing on the Motions to Reconsider was held on August 23, 2005 whereby the Debtor, the U.S. Trustee, MJK and CSFB orally argued their respective positions.[4] At the hearing, the Debtor attempted to offer evidence of a merger agreement to fund the capital requirements of the reopened business. [Docket #135, p.17]. At the conclusion of the hearing, the bankruptcy court stated that it intended to write an opinion on the Motions to Reconsider. The court did indicate that it disagreed with the Debtor that it made a legal error, and, further, it would decline to exercise its discretion to reopen the proofs. [Docket #135, pp. 48-49]. On October 31, 2005, the bankruptcy court issued the Opinion denying the Motions to Reconsider. [Docket #140].

[3] The Debtor did not tender a second amended plan and second amended disclosure statement at or prior to the hearing. [Docket #135, p.31].

[4] MJK also filed a written objection to the Motions. [Docket #130].

SUMMARY OF ARGUMENT

The bankruptcy court properly exercised its discretion when it dismissed the Debtor's Chapter 11 case. The case had pended for almost one year, and, the Debtor made two unsuccessful attempts at confirming a plan of reorganization. Without addressing the other grounds for dismissal, the Debtor argues that the bankruptcy court erred when it denied confirmation of the Amended Plan as not feasible. The Debtor, as the proponent of the Amended Plan, had the burden of proving by a preponderance of the evidence that the Amended Plan complies with the statutory requirements for confirmation, including feasibility. The Debtor did not meet this burden. The Amended Plan is premised upon outside financing. At the confirmation hearing, the Debtor introduced no written commitment to provide such financing. The bankruptcy court properly found that the availability of such financing was sheer speculation, and, denied confirmation. After the debtor rested its case, and, during the hearing on the Motions to Reconsider, the Debtor attempted to introduce evidence of a purported merger agreement that would provide the financing for the Amended Plan. The bankruptcy court properly declined to consider such evidence, finding that the Debtor was essentially requesting a 'do-over'. As the bankruptcy court noted, if the debtor did indeed now have the financing necessary to fund a plan, the proper course would be to file a new case. Instead, the Debtor filed this appeal.

ARGUMENT

I. The Bankruptcy Court Properly Exercised Its Discretion When It Dismissed the Bankruptcy Case

11 U.S.C. §1112(b) governs conversion or dismissal of a Chapter 11 case. Section 1112(b) provides, in pertinent part,

> ...on request of a party in interest or the United States trustee...and after notice and a hearing, the court may convert a case under this chapter to a case under chapter 7 of this title or may dismiss a case under this chapter, whichever is in the best interest of creditors and the estate, for cause, including — ...
> (2) inability to effectuate a plan;
> (3) unreasonable delay by the debtor that is prejudicial to creditors...

11 U.S.C. §1112(b). A bankruptcy court has broad discretion to dismiss or convert a Chapter 11 case for cause, and, its decision is reviewed for an abuse of discretion. In re Woodbrook Assocs., 19 F.3d 312, 316 (7th Cir. 1994); In re Han, 2002 WL 31049846 at *4 (N.D.Ill. Sept. 12, 2004).

In the Motion to Dismiss, the U.S. Trustee alleged that cause existed in that there was an inability to effectuate a plan, and, unreasonable delay by the Debtor that was prejudicial to creditors. [Docket #116]. The bankruptcy case had pended for almost a year. Further, the Debtor had two unsuccessful attempts to confirm a plan. As the bankruptcy court noted in the Opinion, bankruptcy judges are given great discretion in determining when a Chapter 11 case that is otherwise floundering should be dismissed. See Docket #140, p.14 quoting In re Woodbrook Assocs., 19 F.3d 312, 322 (7th Cir. 1994) ("Chapter 11 provides reasonable opportunity for corporate reorganization [;] it does not guarantee reorganization nor does it permit an indefinite suspension of creditors' rights and remedies pending the unsuccessful attempts of any party to effect a reorganization of debt...[B]ankruptcy courts are given a great deal of discretion to say when enough is enough.")[5] The bankruptcy court properly exercised its discretion when it said enough and dismissed the bankruptcy case.

II. The Bankruptcy Court Correctly Found that the Amended Plan was not Feasible

The Debtor complains that the bankruptcy court initially denied confirmation on the sole basis that the Amended Plan violated 11 U.S.C. §1141(d)(3) by providing a discharge to a liquidating chapter 11 debtor, and, only upon reconsideration, stated new grounds for denial as not feasible in violation of 11 U.S.C. §1129(a)(11). The Debtor misconstrues what occurred at the July 12, 2005 Hearing on Confirmation. At the Hearing, the bankruptcy court noted that feasibility is something that is seriously taken into account in Chapter 11. [Docket #118, p.77]. The Debtor had the burden to show to the bankruptcy court feasibility and legality, which the bankruptcy court found to be about the same thing in this case. [Docket #118, p.78]. As the bankruptcy court amplified in the Opinion,

[5] Just as in Woodbrook Assocs., the Debtor was afforded an opportunity to amend the Original Plan. The Amended Plan was substantially similar to the Original Plan, the only material change being to provide the exact legal exemption it intended to rely upon when issuing stock under the Amended Plan. Id.

confirmation was denied for two reasons, with the overriding one being lack of plan feasibility. [Docket #140, p.8].[6] This finding that the Amended Plan was not feasible is correct.[7]

The Debtor, as the plan proponent, had the burden of proving by a preponderance of the evidence that the Amended Plan complies with the statutory requirements for confirmation, including feasibility. In re Arnold & Bakers Farms, 177 B.R. 648, 654-53 (BAP 9th Cir. 1994), aff'd, 85 F.3d 1415 (9th Cir. 1996), cert. denied, 519 U.S. 1054 (1997). Section 1129(a)(11) of the Bankruptcy Code mandates that "[c]onfirmation of the plan is not likely to be followed by the liquidation, or the need for further financial reorganization, of the debtor or any successor to the debtor under the plan, unless such liquidation or reorganization is proposed in the plan." 11U.S.C. §1129(a)(11).[8] Feasibility must be established regardless of whether a plan is accepted by creditors. See In re M & S Associates, Ltd., 138 B.R. 845, 848-49 (Bankr. W.D.Tex. 1992) (where the court found that "[a] bankruptcy court has an affirmative obligation to scrutinize a reorganization plan to

[6] Specifically, the bankruptcy court held that "[e]ven if Debtor is correct that inclusion of the discharge provision in its Amended Plan was not illegal since the Plan did not expressly provide for 'liquidation' of the NOLs, it overlooks the overriding issue determined at confirmation– lack of plan feasibility. Under evidence heard at the confirmation hearing, Debtor's Amended Plan was not feasible." [Docket #140, pp. 8-9].

[7] In the Appellant's Opening Brief (the "Brief"), the Debtor suggests that the bankruptcy court erred in denying confirmation of the Amended Plan because it did so based upon a misinterpretation of 11 U.S.C. §1141(d)(3). [Brief, pp. 6-9]. This argument is wrong on the merits, but, more significantly, it is irrelevant. As previously discussed, the bankruptcy court was clear that confirmation of the Amended Plan alternatively was denied because the Plan was not feasible. [Docket #140, pp. 8-9]. Lack of feasibility formed a separate and independent basis for denial of confirmation that merits affirmance of the order entered below.

[8] In the Brief, the Debtor attempts to minimize the importance of feasibility, arguing that if the $100,000 contribution by Greenblatt did not arrive, creditors would have options under the Bankruptcy Code. [Brief, p.11]. The burden, however, does not shift to creditors to assure payment under a plan. The purpose of confirmation is to end litigation, not be the basis of further disagreement.

determine whether it is feasible. In order to confirm a plan, the court must make a specific finding that the plan, as proposed, is feasible").[9]

A reorganization plan under chapter 11 must be more than a nebulous speculative venture and must have a realistic chance of success which would lead to rehabilitation, and if outside financing is needed, it must be clearly in sight. In re Original IFPC Shareholders, Inc., 317 B.R. 738, 744 (Bankr. N.D.Ill. 2004) (citing In re K.C. Marsh Co., Inc., 12 B.R. 401 (Bankr. D.Mass. 1981)). The Amended Plan is premised upon a $100,000 contribution to be made by Greenblatt to the Debtor (the "Contribution"). [Docket #67, p.3]. The Contribution is the sole source of funding of any distribution to unsecured creditors under the Amended Plan. The Amended Disclosure Statement itself admits that "...the [Amended] Plan's feasibility is based on the payment of the Contribution." [Docket #69, p.25].

At the July 12, 2005 Hearing on confirmation, the Debtor provided no evidence that the Contribution would be available to fund the distribution to unsecured creditors. Greenblatt testified that as of the date of the hearing he had: (1) no source of employment income; (2) no cash and no demand deposit accounts; and (3) he had not filed any tax returns for the years 2001, 2002, 2003, or 2004, because, amongst other reasons, he had no taxable income. [Docket #118, pp. 36-37]. Instead, Greenblatt testified that his wife would be the contributing source for the Contribution, but, the Debtor provided no corroborating evidence that his wife had agreed to provide such funding, and, that she had the financial ability. Greenblatt had no balance sheet for his wife showing her assets and liabilities. [Docket #118, pp. 52-53].[10]

[9] In the Brief, the Debtor suggests that the bankruptcy court erred by just not accepting the creditors' vote on the Amended Plan. [Brief, p.11]. That is not the law. Id. at 848-49. Further, while it is true that the Amended Plan was accepted by the two creditors who timely voted, one of which was an affiliate of the Debtor, CSFB filed a motion to file a late ballot rejecting the Amended Plan, and, CSFB and MJK filed objections to confirmation. There was no overwhelming creditor support of the Amended Plan.

The bankruptcy court found that Mr. Greenblatt's testimony amounted to nothing more than wishful thinking. [Docket #140, p.10]. Specifically, the bankruptcy court found that,

> We have nothing but sheer speculation from the witness without the slightest corroboration as to plans to raise a half a million dollars from his wife, without even a piece of paper from his wife making a promise to undertake to do that, and without the slightest evidence as to her resources.

[Docket #118, p.84]. The bankruptcy court correctly found that the Debtor had failed to prove by a preponderance of the evidence that the Amended Plan was feasible, as required by 11 U.S.C. §1129(a)(11). As such, the bankruptcy court properly denied confirmation of the Amended Plan.

III. The Bankruptcy Court Properly Exercised Its Discretion When It Denied the Motions to Reconsider

As shown above, there was no mistake of law or fact in the bankruptcy court's decisions to grant the U.S. Trustee's Motion to Dismiss, and, to deny confirmation of the Amended Plan. Accordingly, the bankruptcy court properly denied the Motions to Reconsider pursuant to F.R.Civ.P. 59(e). See Gendron v. United States, 154 F.3d 672, 674 (7th Cir. 1998) (where the court held that motions to alter or amend a judgment based on Rule 59(e) of the Federal Rules of Civil Procedure will only be granted if there has been a mistake of law or fact to which the judgment is based upon or where there is newly discovered evidence that was not previously available).

[10] Greenblatt similarly testified, without any corroborating evidence, that his wife would contribute the $500,000 required to restart the business. [Docket #118, p.53].

The Debtor, however, complains that the bankruptcy court refused to consider evidence of a purported written merger agreement between the Debtor and another entity at the August 23, 2005 Hearing on the Motions to Reconsider. [Brief, p.13].[11] A bankruptcy court has broad discretion in ruling on motions to reopen a judgment pursuant to F.R.Civ.P. 59(a). Sellers v. Baisier, 792 F.2d 690, 693 (7th Cir. 1986). Under F.R.Civ.P. 59(a), a "court may open the judgment once one has been entered, take additional testimony, amend findings of fact and conclusions of law or make new findings and conclusions, and direct the entry of a new judgment." F.R.Civ.P. 59(a). A motion premised on Rule 59(a) "is not intended to secure a forum for the relitigation of old matters or to afford the parties the opportunity to present the case under new theories; instead, the motion is a device properly used to correct manifest errors of law or fact or to present newly discovered evidence." Fort Howard Paper Co. v. Standard Havens, Inc., 901 F.2d 1373, 1380 n.4 (7th Cir. 1990).

In the Opinion, the bankruptcy court clearly sets forth its reasons for declining to reopen the judgment to consider evidence of the purported merger agreement. July 12, 2005 was the date set for the hearing on confirmation of the Amended Plan. Necessary evidence should have been prepared and presented at that time. [Docket#140, p.13]. The bankruptcy court found that,

> What the Debtor is essentially requesting is a 'do-over' so that it can correct glaring deficiencies in its initial attempt to satisfy its burden of proof. Furthermore, the newly created evidence should have been prepared and presented during the confirmation hearing. (citations omitted).

[Docket #140, p.13]. As the bankruptcy court noted, if the Debtor did indeed now have such funding available to it, it could have simply filed a new Chapter 11 case. [Docket #140, p.15]. The bankruptcy court did not abuse its discretion when it declined to consider the evidence, and, denied the Motions to Reconsider.

[11] The Debtor does not allege that this agreement had existed but was not available at the time of the hearing on confirmation of the Amended Plan. [Docket #140, p.5]. In fact, Greenblatt testified at the confirmation hearing that he had "absolutely not" entered into any agreement. [Docket #118, p.54].

CONCLUSION

For these reasons, the U.S. Trustee respectfully asks this Court to affirm the orders entered below.

BASIS OF APPELLATE JURISDICTION

Appellee, Ira Bodenstein, the United States Trustee for the Northern District of Illinois (the "U.S. Trustee") agrees with Appellant, Repurchase Corporation (the "Debtor") that this Court has jurisdiction over this appeal under 28 U.S.C. §158(a).

ISSUES PRESENTED

1. Whether the bankruptcy court abused its discretion when it granted the U.S. Trustee's Motion to Dismiss the Bankruptcy Case pursuant to 11 U.S.C. §1112(b).

2. Whether the bankruptcy court was clearly erroneous when it denied confirmation of the First Amended Plan of Reorganization pursuant to 11 U.S.C. §1129(a)(11), based on its finding that the Amended Plan was not feasible.

3. Whether the bankruptcy court abused its discretion when it denied the Debtor's Motion to Amend Order Denying Confirmation of Amended Plan and Motion to Vacate Dismissal Order, declining to reopen the evidence in the confirmation hearing on the Amended Plan, based on its finding that: (a) such evidence was not newly discovered or unknown at the time of such hearing; and (b) there was no error of law in the rendering of each decision.

APPLICABLE STANDARD OF REVIEW

The U.S. Trustee agrees with the Debtor that the decision to dismiss a case pursuant to 11 U.S.C. §1112(b) is within the sound discretion of the bankruptcy court. See In re Woodbrook Assoc., 19 F.3d 312, 322 (7th Cir. 1994). This Court reviews the bankruptcy court's findings of fact with the clearly erroneous standard. Conclusions of law are reviewed de novo. Id. at 316.

STATEMENT OF THE CASE

The Debtor appeals five orders issued by the bankruptcy court for the Northern District of Illinois: (1) the Order Granting the U.S. Trustee's Motion to Dismiss, dated July 25, 2005; (2) the Order Denying Confirmation of Chapter 11 Plan, dated July 25, 2005; (3) the Order denying Debtor's Motion to Amend Order Denying Confirmation of Amended Plan, dated October 31, 2005; (4) the Order Denying Debtor's Motion to Vacate Dismissal Order, dated October 31, 2005; and (5) the Memorandum Opinion Denying Debtor's (a) Motion to Amend Order Denying Confirmation of Amended Plan and (b) Motion to Vacate Dismissal, dated October 31, 2005 (the "Opinion"). An evidentiary hearing on confirmation of the First Amended Plan of Reorganization (the "Amended Plan") was held on July 12, 2005, and, a hearing on the U.S. Trustee's Motion to Dismiss the bankruptcy case was held on July 25, 2005. A hearing on the Motion to Amend Order Denying Confirmation of Amended Plan and the Motion to Vacate Dismissal Order (collectively, the "Motions to Reconsider") was held on August 23, 2005. The Debtor appeals from the bankruptcy court's decisions to deny confirmation of the Amended Plan and to dismiss the chapter 11 case, which decisions the bankruptcy court declined to reconsider.

STATEMENT OF THE FACTS

The Debtor filed a voluntary petition for relief under Chapter 11 of the Bankruptcy Code on September 3, 2004. [Docket #140, p.2]. At the time of the filing, it was not an operating business. [Docket #69, p.7]. The sole asset of any value was net operating loss carryovers for federal income tax purposes. [Docket #69, p.1].

On December 30, 2004, the Debtor filed its Disclosure Statement for Repurchase Corporation's Plan of Reorganization (the "Original Disclosure Statement") and Plan of Reorganization (the "Original Plan"). [Docket #s 34 and 35]. Under the Original Plan, Leon Greenblatt ("Greenblatt"), who currently owns and/or controls all of the outstanding shares of the Debtor, was to pay to the estate $100,000 and receive in consideration a minimum of 20% of the equity of the Debtor post-confirmation. [Docket #35, p.1]. Unsecured creditors were to receive a pro-rata distribution of the $100,000, as well as the option to purchase a pro-rata share of 800 shares of new stock. [Docket #35, pp. 1-2, 13]. The Original Disclosure Statement provided that the issuance and distribution of the new stock was exempt from the securities laws pursuant to 11 U.S.C. §1145. [Docket #35, p.17].

Both the U.S. Trustee and the Securities and Exchange Commission filed objections to the Original Plan in that it contemplated issuing the new stock in violation of 11 U.S.C. §1145, and, that it discharged the Debtor in violation of 11 U.S.C. §1141(d)(3).[1/] The Debtor responded by arguing, inter alia, that whether the Original Plan violates securities laws is irrelevant to whether the plan is confirmable pursuant to 11 U.S.C. §1129(a). [Docket #51, pp. 3-4].

The bankruptcy court found as a matter of law the Debtor could not rely on 11 U.S.C. §1145 to exempt the issuance of the new stock from the securities laws. The bankruptcy court granted leave to the Debtor to amend the Original Plan and Original Disclosure Statement to provide for the exact legal exemption it intended to rely upon when issuing the new stock. [Docket #75]. The only material change the Debtor made in its Amended Disclosure Statement and the Amended Plan was to suggest it would attempt to rely on §4(2) of the Securities Act of 1933 to issue the new stock. [Docket #69, p.17].

The U.S. Trustee, MJK, and, Credit Suisse First Boston LLC ("CSFB"), an unsecured creditor which the Debtor listed in its Schedules of Assets and Liabilities as owed $702,443.61 [Docket #84, p.2], all filed objections to the Amended Disclosure Statement and the Amended Plan. [Docket #s 75, 77 and 84]. The Debtor filed its Report of Balloting on the Debtor's First Amended Plan of Reorganization which showed that the Amended Plan was accepted by the two creditors who timely voted.[2/] The two creditors who voted were Robinson Curley & Clayton, PC, a law firm that holds a claim against the Debtor and continues to represent affiliates of the Debtor, and, Loop Properties, an affiliate of the Debtor. [Docket #81, footnote #1].

The bankruptcy court held an evidentiary hearing on confirmation of the Amended Plan on July 12, 2005. [Docket #118]. The Debtor offered the testimony of Greenblatt in support of confirmation. Greenblatt testified that the Debtor's business was investments in securities and in the oil business, however, the Debtor had not purchased a single security since 2001. [Docket #118, pp. 24 and 34-35]. He further testified that as of the date of the hearing, he had: (1) no source of employment income; (2) no cash and no demand deposit accounts; and (3) he had not filed any tax returns for the years 2001, 2002, 2003 or 2004, because, amongst other reasons, he had no taxable income. [Docket #118, pp. 36-37]. Shareholder contributions by his wife in the amount of $500,000 would provide the source of capital to start up the investment business, however, Greenblatt did not have a written commitment to contribute that amount or a current balance sheet showing her assets and liabilities. [Docket #118, pp. 52-53].

[2/] CSFB filed a motion to file a late ballot rejecting the Amended Plan. [Docket #118, p.4]. As the bankruptcy court denied confirmation, it did not decide the motion.

Greenblatt also testified that another source was to "...enter into the tax-type sharing agreements in which we would benefit cash in exchange for the utilization of our NOLs through either leasing or other– some other mechanism." [Docket #118, p.54]. Greenblatt, however, had "absolutely not" entered into such agreements yet. [Docket #118, p.54]. After Debtor's counsel represented to the bankruptcy court that,

> [t]he only other piece of evidence that the debtors were going to offer was with respect to the funding of the $100,000 in the plan. And we had planned to have with us today a certified check...[but] we don't have that right at this moment...,

the Debtor rested its case. [Docket #118, pp. 58 and 61].

Based on the record before it, the bankruptcy court denied confirmation of the Amended Plan. In reaching this decision, the bankruptcy court noted that,

> You [the debtor] have a burden to show me feasibility and legality, and in this case they are about the same. You have to show me that engaging in business is feasible...you would have to show me that you could engage in business and would engage in business both in terms of feasibility and in terms of 1141(d)(3).

[Docket #118, p.7-8]. Feasibility, the court stated, "...is something that we take into account seriously" in Chapter 11 [Docket #118, p.77].

The U.S. Trustee then filed the Motion to Dismiss Pursuant to 11 U.S.C. §1112(b) ("Motion to Dismiss"). [Docket #116]. The Motion requested dismissal because the Debtor had been in bankruptcy for almost a year, and, had twice attempted unsuccessfully to confirm a plan. Continuation of this case would only serve to further delay and prejudice the creditors. [Docket #116, p.2]. After notice, and, a hearing on July 25, 2005, the bankruptcy court dismissed the case. [Docket #119].

Thereafter, the Debtor filed the Motions to Reconsider the dismissal order and to the order denying confirmation of the Amended Plan. [Docket #s 125 and 126]. The Debtor alleged that there was clear error of law in denying confirmation. Further, the Debtor claimed that,

> ...it has reached an agreement for funding of the plan, and will have evidence of available funds. The Debtor's agreement with another entity will allow the Debtor to engage in business and utilize the NOLs post-confirmation.

[Docket #126, p.8]. The Debtor also stated that prior to the hearing on the Motions to Reconsider, it would present a second amended plan and second amended disclosure statement.[3/] [Docket #126, p.7]. The Debtor did not allege that this evidence existed but was unavailable when confirmation was denied. [Docket #140, p.5].

A hearing on the Motions to Reconsider was held on August 23, 2005 whereby the Debtor, the U.S. Trustee, MJK and CSFB orally argued their respective positions.[4/] At the hearing, the Debtor attempted to offer evidence of a merger agreement to fund the capital requirements of the reopened business. [Docket #135, p.17]. At the conclusion of the hearing, the bankruptcy court stated that it intended to write an opinion on the Motions to Reconsider. The court did indicate that it disagreed with the Debtor that it made a legal error, and, further, it would decline to exercise its discretion to reopen the proofs. [Docket #135, pp. 48-49]. On October 31, 2005, the bankruptcy court issued the Opinion denying the Motions to Reconsider. [Docket #140].

[3/] The Debtor did not tender a second amended plan and second amended disclosure statement at or prior to the hearing. [Docket #135, p.31].

[4/] MJK also filed a written objection to the Motions. [Docket #130].

SUMMARY OF ARGUMENT

The bankruptcy court properly exercised its discretion when it dismissed the Debtor's Chapter 11 case. The case had pended for almost one year, and, the Debtor made two unsuccessful attempts at confirming a plan of reorganization. Without addressing the other grounds for dismissal, the Debtor argues that the bankruptcy court erred when it denied confirmation of the Amended Plan as not feasible. The Debtor, as the proponent of the Amended Plan, had the burden of proving by a preponderance of the evidence that the Amended Plan complies with the statutory requirements for confirmation, including feasibility. The Debtor did not meet this burden. The Amended Plan is premised upon outside financing. At the confirmation hearing, the Debtor introduced no written commitment to provide such financing. The bankruptcy court properly found that the availability of such financing was sheer speculation, and, denied confirmation. After the debtor rested its case, and, during the hearing on the Motions to Reconsider, the Debtor attempted to introduce evidence of a purported merger agreement that would provide the financing for the Amended Plan. The bankruptcy court properly declined to consider such evidence, finding that the Debtor was essentially requesting a 'do-over'. As the bankruptcy court noted, if the debtor did indeed now have the financing necessary to fund a plan, the proper course would be to file a new case. Instead, the Debtor filed this appeal.

ARGUMENT

I. The Bankruptcy Court Properly Exercised Its Discretion When It Dismissed the Bankruptcy Case

11 U.S.C. §1112(b) governs conversion or dismissal of a Chapter 11 case. Section 1112(b) provides, in pertinent part,

> ...on request of a party in interest or the United States trustee...and after notice and a hearing, the court may convert a case under this chapter to a case under chapter 7 of this title or may dismiss a case under this chapter, whichever is in the best interest of creditors and the estate, for cause, including — ...
> (2) inability to effectuate a plan;
> (3) unreasonable delay by the debtor that is prejudicial to creditors...

11 U.S.C. §1112(b). A bankruptcy court has broad discretion to dismiss or convert a Chapter 11 case for cause, and, its decision is reviewed for an abuse of discretion. In re Woodbrook Assocs., 19 F.3d 312, 316 (7th Cir. 1994); In re Han, 2002 WL 31049846 at *4 (N.D.Ill. Sept. 12, 2004).

In the Motion to Dismiss, the U.S. Trustee alleged that cause existed in that there was an inability to effectuate a plan, and, unreasonable delay by the Debtor that was prejudicial to creditors. [Docket #116]. The bankruptcy case had pended for almost a year. Further, the Debtor had two unsuccessful attempts to confirm a plan. As the bankruptcy court noted in the Opinion, bankruptcy judges are given great discretion in determining when a Chapter 11 case that is otherwise floundering should be dismissed. See Docket #140, p.14 quoting In re Woodbrook Assocs., 19 F.3d 312, 322 (7th Cir. 1994) ("Chapter 11 provides reasonable opportunity for corporate reorganization [;] it does not guarantee reorganization nor does it permit an indefinite suspension of creditors' rights and remedies pending the unsuccessful attempts of any party to effect a reorganization of debt...[B]ankruptcy courts are given a great deal of discretion to say when enough is enough.")[5/] The bankruptcy court properly exercised its discretion when it said enough and dismissed the bankruptcy case.

II. The Bankruptcy Court Correctly Found that the Amended Plan was not Feasible

The Debtor complains that the bankruptcy court initially denied confirmation on the sole basis that the Amended Plan violated 11 U.S.C. §1141(d)(3) by providing a discharge to a liquidating chapter 11 debtor, and, only upon reconsideration, stated new grounds for denial as not feasible in violation of 11 U.S.C. §1129(a)(11). The Debtor misconstrues what occurred at the July 12, 2005 Hearing on Confirmation. At the Hearing, the bankruptcy court noted that feasibility is something that is seriously taken into account in Chapter 11. [Docket #118, p.77]. The Debtor had the burden to show to the bankruptcy court feasibility and legality, which the bankruptcy court found to be about the same thing in this case. [Docket #118, p.78]. As the bankruptcy court amplified in the Opinion,

[5/] Just as in Woodbrook Assocs., the Debtor was afforded an opportunity to amend the Original Plan. The Amended Plan was substantially similar to the Original Plan, the only material change being to provide the exact legal exemption it intended to rely upon when issuing stock under the Amended Plan. Id.

confirmation was denied for two reasons, with the overriding one being lack of plan feasibility. [Docket #140, p.8].[6/] This finding that the Amended Plan was not feasible is correct.[7/]

The Debtor, as the plan proponent, had the burden of proving by a preponderance of the evidence that the Amended Plan complies with the statutory requirements for confirmation, including feasibility. In re Arnold & Bakers Farms, 177 B.R. 648, 654-53 (BAP 9th Cir. 1994), aff'd, 85 F.3d 1415 (9th Cir. 1996), cert. denied, 519 U.S. 1054 (1997). Section 1129(a)(11) of the Bankruptcy Code mandates that "[c]onfirmation of the plan is not likely to be followed by the liquidation, or the need for further financial reorganization, of the debtor or any successor to the debtor under the plan, unless such liquidation or reorganization is proposed in the plan." 11U.S.C. §1129(a)(11).[8/] Feasibility must be established regardless of whether a plan is accepted by creditors. See In re M & S Associates, Ltd., 138 B.R. 845, 848-49 (Bankr. W.D.Tex. 1992) (where the court found that "[a] bankruptcy court has an affirmative

[6/] Specifically, the bankruptcy court held that "[e]ven if Debtor is correct that inclusion of the discharge provision in its Amended Plan was not illegal since the Plan did not expressly provide for 'liquidation' of the NOLs, it overlooks the overriding issue determined at confirmation– lack of plan feasibility. Under evidence heard at the confirmation hearing, Debtor's Amended Plan was not feasible." [Docket #140, pp. 8-9].

[7/] In the Appellant's Opening Brief (the "Brief"), the Debtor suggests that the bankruptcy court erred in denying confirmation of the Amended Plan because it did so based upon a misinterpretation of 11 U.S.C. §1141(d)(3). [Brief, pp. 6-9]. This argument is wrong on the merits, but, more significantly, it is irrelevant. As previously discussed, the bankruptcy court was clear that confirmation of the Amended Plan alternatively was denied because the Plan was not feasible. [Docket #140, pp. 8-9]. Lack of feasibility formed a separate and independent basis for denial of confirmation that merits affirmance of the order entered below.

[8/] In the Brief, the Debtor attempts to minimize the importance of feasibility, arguing that if the $100,000 contribution by Greenblatt did not arrive, creditors would have options under the Bankruptcy Code. [Brief, p.11]. The burden, however, does not shift to creditors to assure payment under a plan. The purpose of confirmation is to end litigation, not be the basis of further disagreement.

obligation to scrutinize a reorganization plan to determine whether it is feasible. In order to confirm a plan, the court must make a specific finding that the plan, as proposed, is feasible").[9/]

A reorganization plan under chapter 11 must be more than a nebulous speculative venture and must have a realistic chance of success which would lead to rehabilitation, and if outside financing is needed, it must be clearly in sight. In re Original IFPC Shareholders, Inc., 317 B.R. 738, 744 (Bankr. N.D.Ill. 2004) (citing In re K.C. Marsh Co., Inc., 12 B.R. 401 (Bankr. D.Mass. 1981)). The Amended Plan is premised upon a $100,000 contribution to be made by Greenblatt to the Debtor (the "Contribution"). [Docket #67, p.3]. The Contribution is the sole source of funding of any distribution to unsecured creditors under the Amended Plan. The Amended Disclosure Statement itself admits that "...the [Amended] Plan's feasibility is based on the payment of the Contribution." [Docket #69, p.25].

At the July 12, 2005 Hearing on confirmation, the Debtor provided no evidence that the Contribution would be available to fund the distribution to unsecured creditors. Greenblatt testified that as of the date of the hearing he had: (1) no source of employment income; (2) no cash and no demand deposit accounts; and (3) he had not filed any tax returns for the years 2001, 2002, 2003, or 2004, because, amongst other reasons, he had no taxable income. [Docket #118, pp. 36-37]. Instead, Greenblatt testified that his wife would be the contributing source for the Contribution, but, the Debtor provided no corroborating evidence that his wife had agreed to provide such funding, and, that she had the financial ability. Greenblatt had no balance sheet for his wife showing her assets and liabilities. [Docket #118, pp. 52-53].[10]

The bankruptcy court found that Mr. Greenblatt's testimony amounted to nothing more than wishful thinking. [Docket #140, p.10]. Specifically, the bankruptcy court found that,

> We have nothing but sheer speculation from the witness without the slightest corroboration as to plans to raise a half a million dollars from his wife, without even a piece of paper from his wife making a promise to undertake to do that, and without the slightest evidence as to her resources.

[Docket #118, p.84]. The bankruptcy court correctly found that the Debtor had failed to prove by a preponderance of the evidence that the Amended Plan was feasible, as required by 11 U.S.C. §1129(a)(11). As such, the bankruptcy court properly denied confirmation of the Amended Plan.

III. The Bankruptcy Court Properly Exercised Its Discretion When It Denied the Motions to Reconsider

As shown above, there was no mistake of law or fact in the bankruptcy court's decisions to grant the U.S. Trustee's Motion to Dismiss, and, to deny confirmation of the Amended Plan. Accordingly, the bankruptcy court properly denied the Motions to Reconsider pursuant to F.R.Civ.P. 59(e). See Gendron v. United States, 154 F.3d 672, 674 (7th Cir. 1998) (where the court held that motions to alter or amend a judgment based on Rule 59(e) of the Federal Rules of Civil Procedure will only be granted if there has been a mistake of law or fact to which the judgment is based upon or where there is newly discovered evidence that was not previously available).

The Debtor, however, complains that the bankruptcy court refused to consider evidence of a purported written merger agreement between the Debtor and another entity at the August 23, 2005 Hearing on the Motions to Reconsider. [Brief, p.13].[11/] A bankruptcy court has broad discretion in ruling on motions to reopen a judgment pursuant to F.R.Civ.P. 59(a). Sellers v. Baisier, 792 F.2d 690, 693 (7th Cir. 1986). Under F.R.Civ.P. 59(a), a "court may open the judgment once one has been entered, take additional testimony, amend findings of fact and conclusions of law or make new findings and conclusions, and direct the entry of a new judgment." F.R.Civ.P. 59(a). A motion premised on Rule 59(a) "is not intended to secure a forum for the relitigation of old matters or to afford the parties the opportunity to present the case under new theories; instead, the motion is a device properly used to correct manifest errors of law or fact or to present newly discovered evidence." Fort Howard Paper Co. v. Standard Havens, Inc., 901 F.2d 1373, 1380 n.4 (7th Cir. 1990).

In the Opinion, the bankruptcy court clearly sets forth its reasons for declining to reopen the judgment to consider evidence of the purported merger agreement. July 12, 2005 was the date set for the hearing on confirmation of the Amended Plan. Necessary evidence should have been prepared and presented at that time. [Docket#140, p.13]. The bankruptcy court found that,

> What the Debtor is essentially requesting is a 'do-over' so that it can correct glaring deficiencies in its initial attempt to satisfy its burden of proof. Furthermore, the newly created evidence should have been > prepared and presented during the confirmation hearing. (citations omitted).

[11/] The Debtor does not allege that this agreement had existed but was not available at the time of the hearing on confirmation of the Amended Plan. [Docket #140, p.5]. In fact, Greenblatt testified at the confirmation hearing that he had "absolutely not" entered into any agreement. [Docket #118, p.54].

[Docket #140, p.13]. As the bankruptcy court noted, if the Debtor did indeed now have such funding available to it, it could have simply filed a new Chapter 11 case. [Docket #140, p.15]. The bankruptcy court did not abuse its discretion when it declined to consider the evidence, and, denied the Motions to Reconsider.

CONCLUSION

For these reasons, the U.S. Trustee respectfully asks this Court to affirm the orders entered below.

BRIEF FOR APPELLEE

JURISDICTIONAL STATEMENT

The bankruptcy court had jurisdiction under 28 U.S.C. §§ 157, 1334. On September 5, 2002, the bankruptcy court issued a final order dismissing Benedict Reischel's case under 11 U.S.C. § 707(a) and imposing a 180-day bar prohibiting the filing of a new bankruptcy petition under 11 U.S.C. § 109(g)(1). Appellant timely filed a notice of appeal to the district court on September 16, 2002, within the 10-day period required under Federal Rule of Bankruptcy Procedure 8002(a) and 9006(a). The district court had jurisdiction under 28 U.S.C. § 158(a)(1). The district court entered a final order affirming the bankruptcy court's order on September 17, 2003 and an order denying reconsideration on September 30, 2003. Appellant filed a timely notice of appeal on November 26, 2003, within the 60-day period permitted by Federal Rule of Appellate Procedure 4(a)(1)(B). This Court has jurisdiction under 28 U.S.C. § 158(d). As we explain below, however, because the issue raised by appellant is now moot, there is no longer Article III jurisdiction over this appeal.

STATEMENT OF THE ISSUES PRESENTED FOR REVIEW

Whether the bankruptcy court properly imposed a statutory 180-day prohibition on re-filing appellant's petition for bankruptcy after appellant willfully failed to appear at a creditors' meeting and willfully failed to appear in court for a hearing on a motion to dismiss his case.

STATEMENT OF THE CASE

Appellant voluntarily filed a petition under the debt liquidation provision of the Bankruptcy Code, 11 U.S.C. § 701 et seq. When he failed to appear at a creditors' meeting, the case trustee moved to dismiss his case under 11 U.S.C. § 707(a). Appellant then failed to appear at the hearing on the motion to dismiss. In September 2002, the bankruptcy court dismissed appellant's case for failure to appear at the creditors' meeting and failure to appear at the hearing, and imposed a 180-day re-filing bar under 11 U.S.C. § 109(g)(1) for the same reasons.

Appellant appeals the imposition of the 180-day bar on filing a new bankruptcy petition.

STATEMENT OF FACTS

I. STATUTORY BACKGROUND

1. In 1978, Congress established the United States Trustee Program "to aid in the administration of bankruptcy cases." Morgenstern v. Revco D.S., Inc., 898 F.2d 498, 500 (6th Cir. 1990). Under the program, the Attorney General appoints twenty-one United States Trustees to oversee bankruptcy cases within specified geographic areas, 28 U.S.C. § 581(a), who serve, in part, as "'watchdogs . . . prevent[ing] fraud, dishonesty, and over-reaching in the bankruptcy arena,'" In re A-1 Trash Pickup, Inc., 802 F.2d 774, 775 (4th Cir. 1986). U.S. Trustees "may raise and may appear and be heard on any issue in any case or proceeding under [Title 11]." 11 U.S.C. § 307; see also Morgenstern, 898 F.2d at 500 (discussing trustee as a proper party on appeal). Those U.S. Trustees, in turn, establish panels of individuals eligible to serve as case trustees in bankruptcy cases, 28 U.S.C. § 586(a), and the U.S. Trustee may then appoint a case trustee to oversee a particular case, 11 U.S.C. §§ 701, 702(d).

2. A bankruptcy court may dismiss a debtor's chapter 7 case "for cause," including an "unreasonable delay by the debtor that is prejudicial to creditors." 11 U.S.C. § 707(a)(1). If a debtor's case is dismissed because of a "willful failure of the debtor to abide by orders of the court, or to appear before the court in proper prosecution of the case," then the debtor is barred for 180 days from filing another petition for bankruptcy. 11 U.S.C. § 109(g)(1).

II. FACTS AND PROCEEDINGS BELOW

1. On January 28, 2002, appellant Benedict J. Reischel filed in the Eastern District of Wisconsin a voluntary petition under Chapter 13 of the Bankruptcy Code. See 11 U.S.C. § 1301 et seq. Upon Reischel's motion, the petition was converted into a Chapter 7 proceeding. Supplemental Appendix ("App.") 25.[1] See also Black v. United States Postal Serv., 115 F.3d 521, 522 (7th Cir. 1997) ("The Chapter 13 debtor proposes a plan for the payment of creditors over time, in lieu of liquidation of the debtor's estate as in Chapter 7.").

The U.S. Trustee appointed a case trustee to represent the bankruptcy estate and oversee the bankruptcy case. The case trustee convened a meeting of creditors on June 10, 2002, at which Reischel was required to attend and cooperate. See 11 U.S.C. §§ 341(a), 343, 521(3). See App. 25. At that meeting,

All of the Government's Appendix citations are to the Supplemental Appendix bound with this brief.

Reischel was unable to answer the trustee's questions and did not provide his social security verification information. App. 25. The trustee adjourned the meeting until June 19, sending Reischel notice by certified mail. Reischel failed to claim the letter and it was returned to the trustee. Reischel then failed to appear at the June 19 meeting. App. 8, 25-26. Reischel has never explained his failure to attend the meeting.

2. The case trustee then moved to dismiss Reischel's action for failure to appear. App. 26; see 11 U.S.C. § 707(a)(1) ("The court may dismiss a case . . . for cause, including . . . unreasonable delay by the debtor that is prejudicial to creditors."). Reischel requested that the hearing be conducted by telephone or postponed until August 15, 2002; the bankruptcy court scheduled the hearing for the date Reischel requested. Reischel then asked to defer that hearing date, and the bankruptcy court once again accommodated him by rescheduling the hearing for September 5, 2002. On August 27, 2002, Reischel admitted that he was aware of the September 5 hearing date, but for the third time asked the court to defer the hearing. The court retained its hearing date of September 5, 2002. App. 26.

Reischel failed to appear at the September 5 hearing. App. 2, 26. On the motion to dismiss, the trustee explained that Reischel "did not appear" at the creditors' meeting on June 19, and the court therefore "dismissed for failure to appear." App. 3; see also App. 7.

The bankruptcy court also barred Reischel from filing a new bankruptcy petition for 180 days. Under 11 U.S.C. § 109(g)(1), "no individual . . . may be a debtor . . . who has been a debtor in a case pending . . . at any time in the preceding 180 days if . . . the case was dismissed by the court for willful failure of the debtor to abide by orders of the court, or to appear before the court in proper prosecution of the case." The bankruptcy court explained:

> [T]he 180 days [bar] applies if the case was dismissed by the Court for willful failure of the debtor to abide by order of the Court [or] to appear before the Court in proper prosecution of the case. That is true here. He has not appeared before this Court in proper prosecution of the case.

App. 4-5. The bankruptcy court subsequently amended its finding in a September 11 minute order, finding that Reischel failed to cooperate at the June 10 creditors' meeting, "did not appear at the adjourned meeting" on June 19, and "further failed to appear for [the September 5] hearing." App. 8. Accordingly, the bankruptcy court "dismissed the case due to the debtor's failure to appear at the adjourned § 341 meeting of creditors, as well as the willful failure of the debtor to appear before the court in proper prosecution of the case," and imposed the 180-day bar under § 109(g)(1). Ibid.

Reischel subsequently moved the bankruptcy court to stay its orders pending an appeal. Reischel failed to appear at that hearing as well, and the bankruptcy court denied his motion. App. 14.

3. Reischel appealed the bankruptcy court's order imposing a 180-day re-filing bar to the district court.[2] Reischel filed his brief to the district court on June 23, 2003, and the trustee filed his brief on July 8, 2003, within the 15-day limit required under Federal Rule of Bankruptcy Procedure 8009(a)(2). See App. 11 (District Court docket number 21). Reischel then had 10 days (until July 18) to file his reply brief, see F.R.B.P. 8009(a)(3), but rather than do so, he sent a fax on July 31 to the district court claiming that the trustee had not timely filed or properly served his brief, pointing out that the file stamp stated that the trustee's brief was filed "'after hours'" on July 8 (specifically, at 4:36 PM). App. 20. The trustee responded that a brief filed "'after hours'" is still timely, and attached an affidavit of service establishing timely service. App. 21-23. Reischel subsequently withdrew his argument that the brief was not timely served. App. 24.

[2] Reischel originally appealed both the order dismissing his case and the order imposing a 180-day bar on his filing a new petition. The district court subsequently permitted him to voluntarily dismiss the former. App. 15; Br. at 5 ¶ 4.

4. On September 17, 2003, the district court entered an order affirming the decision of the bankruptcy court. The district court sustained the bankruptcy court's finding that Reischel's failure to appear in proper prosecution of the case was "'willful,'" holding that his repeated misconduct supported the bankruptcy court's conclusion. Specifically, the district court cited Reischel's failure to cooperate with the trustee at the June 10 creditors' meeting; Reischel's failure to appear at the June 19 creditors' meeting; and Reischel's failure to appear at the bankruptcy court's September 5 hearing despite that court's repeated scheduling of the hearing at Reischel's own request. App. 28-30.

Reischel also argued that once the bankruptcy court dismissed his case, it had no authority to then impose upon him a 180-day bar under § 109(g)(1). App. 30. In support of that argument, he cited the bankruptcy court's September 11 minute order relating to the 180-day bar, and pointed out that this came 6 days after the bankruptcy court's September 5 dismissal. App. 30; see also App. 8 (September 11, 2002 Minute Order). The district court rejected that argument as well, holding that the bankruptcy court made its finding imposing a 180-day bar at the September 5 hearing at the same time that it dismissed Reischel's case, and that the September 11 order "merely amended the September 5, 2002, oral order to reflect that finding." App. 30.

5. On September 30, 2003, the district court denied Reischel's motion to reconsider. Although Reischel argued that he had been denied an opportunity to submit a reply brief, the district court observed that "the court has endeavored to accommodate Reischel's incessant requests for more time to file an initial brief and a reply brief," that Reischel never submitted a reply brief, and that "over the course of almost a year, it has become more than clear to the court that Reischel has no intention of briefing the merits of his appeal." App. 32-33. "Indeed," continued the district court, "to have delayed the resolution of this matter any longer would have rewarded what can best be described as perpetual obfuscatory tactics on the part of Reischel. More to the point, the succinct factual and legal analysis addressed in the court's September 17, 2003 order make it equally clear that, on the merits of his appeal, Reischel is entitled to no relief whatsoever." App. 33. Thus, the district court denied his motion for reconsideration.

6. On November 26, 2003, Reischel filed a timely notice of appeal to this Court. Reischel was ordered to file his opening brief by January 30, 2004, and subsequently granted an extension until March 1, 2004. Rather than file a brief, however, one day after this Court's deadline expired, Reischel filed a motion for "summary disposition." This Court ordered Reischel to show cause why his appeal should not be dismissed for want of prosecution.

Reischel responded on March 31 that, as a pro se plaintiff, he misunderstood the applicable rules and required additional time to file his brief. This Court subsequently ordered him to file his brief by May 17, 2004.

Reischel's appeal of the imposition of a 180-day bar on re-filing a bankruptcy petition is moot. That bar was imposed on September 5, 2002, and has long since expired. Accordingly, he suffers no injury and this Court can grant no relief that would benefit him. The appeal should therefore be dismissed as moot.

On the merits, the bankruptcy court correctly imposed the 180-day statutory prohibition. There is no dispute that Reischel's case was properly dismissed, and Reischel does not appeal his dismissal. Nor is there any dispute that Reischel failed to appear at the June 19 creditors' meeting and failed to appear at the September 5 hearing before the bankruptcy court. And Reischel's repeated misconduct amply supports the bankruptcy court's finding that his conduct was "willful." Accordingly, he falls squarely within 11 U.S.C. § 109(g)(1), which imposes a 180-day bar on re-filing when a debtor's "case was dismissed by the court for willful failure of the debtor to abide by orders of the court, or to appear before the court in proper prosecution of the case."

The bankruptcy court was under no obligation, contrary to Reischel's argument, to permit him to appear by telephone at the September 5 hearing, especially after that court had twice scheduled the hearing date at Reischel's specific request. In any event, Reischel's failure to appear at the June 19 creditors' meeting was alone sufficient to impose a 180-day bar under § 109(g)(1).

Although Reischel has waived the argument on appeal, the bankruptcy court's dismissal did not deprive it of jurisdiction to subsequently impose the 180-day prohibition. That argument is factually and legally mistaken: it is factually wrong because the court simultaneously dismissed the case and imposed the bar; it is legally incorrect because the court retained jurisdiction, even after dismissing the case, to decide collateral issues unrelated to the merits of Reischel's bankruptcy petition, such as imposing the bar at issue.

Finally, Reischel's argument that the district court erred in failing to rule on whether the trustee's brief was timely filed is meritless. The record is entirely clear that the trustee's brief was both timely filed and served. Equally meritless is Reischel's complaint that he never had an opportunity to file a reply brief. The failure is his own, not the district court's. And in any event, as the district court pointed out, Reischel's arguments on the merits were so frivolous that a reply brief would not have changed the analysis or outcome.

STANDARD OF REVIEW

In an appeal of the district court's affirmance of a bankruptcy court's decision, this Court upholds the bankruptcy court's factual findings unless clearly erroneous and reviews its conclusions of law de novo. In re Crivello, 134 F.3d 831, 835 (7th Cir. 1998).

ARGUMENT

I. REISCHEL'S APPEAL OF THE EXPIRED 180-DAY FILING BAR IS MOOT

"Article III of the United States Constitution limits the jurisdiction of the federal courts to actual cases or controversies." Jordan v. Indiana High Sch. Athletic Ass'n, 16 F.3d 785, 787 (7th Cir. 1994). An actual case or controversy "must exist at all stages of appellate review," and if it does not, the appeal is moot and must be dismissed. Id.

Reischel's appeal is moot. He does not appeal the dismissal of his bankruptcy case, but only appeals the imposition of a 180-day re-filing bar. The bankruptcy court imposed that bar on September 5, 2002. The bar has long since expired and no longer precludes him from re-filing a bankruptcy petition. Compare 11 U.S.C. § 349(a) (authorizing bankruptcy court to bar all future discharge of debts in a dismissed case); Colonial Auto Ctr. v. Tomlin, 105 F.3d 933, 936-38 (4th Cir. 1997) (discussing difference between § 109(g)(1) and § 349(a)). Consequently his appeal is moot and should be dismissed. Orion Sales, Inc. v. Emerson Radio Corp., 148 F.3d 840, 842 (7th Cir. 1998) ("injunction entered by the district court in this case is patently moot" because it "expired by its own terms on March, 31, 1998, over two months prior to the oral argument of this appeal" and thus any relief sought "would have no effect, as the injunction has expired"); Jordan v. Indiana High Sch. Athletic Ass'n, 16 F.3d 785 (7th Cir. 1994) (dismissing as moot a challenge to an expired permanent injunction).[3]

II. THE BANKRUPTCY COURT CORRECTLY IMPOSED THE 180-DAY STATUTORY BAR

Because the appeal here is moot, there is no need or jurisdiction to address the merits of Reischel's claims. They are, in any event, without merit.

A. As noted above, if a debtor's case is dismissed because of a willful failure to follow the court's orders or a willful failure to prosecute the case, then the debtor is barred for 180 days from filing another petition for bankruptcy. 11 U.S.C.

[3] The mootness exception for cases "capable of repetition, yet evading review" applies "only if there is a reasonable expectation that the same complaining party would be subjected to the same action again." Orion Sales, 148 F.3d at 842 (internal quotation marks and citation omitted). In this case, there is no reasonable expectation that Reischel will again engage in willful behavior leading to the dismissal of a future bankruptcy petition, and thus the imposition of another 180-day re-filing bar.

§ 109(g)(1) ("no individual . . . may be a debtor under this title who has been a debtor in a case pending under this title at any time in the preceding 180 days if . . . the case was dismissed by the court for willful failure of the debtor to abide by orders of the court, or to appear before the court in proper prosecution of the case."). Here, Reischel failed to appear at a creditors' meeting mandated by 11 U.S.C. §§ 341(a), 343, and then failed to appear at a bankruptcy court hearing that was specifically set to accommodate his schedule. As a result, the bankruptcy court properly imposed a 180-day re-filing bar.

Reischel does not appeal the dismissal of his bankruptcy case. See supra note 2; Br. at 5 ¶ 1. Nor is there any dispute that his case was dismissed for "failure of the debtor to abide by orders of the court," namely, failing to appear at the June 19 creditors' meeting. See Colonial Auto Ctr. v. Tomlin, 105 F.3d 933, 940 (4th Cir. 1997) (when a debtor "fail[s] to appear at the initial creditors' meeting," the "usual remedy . . . is the § 109(g) temporary bar to filing"); id. at 941 (debtor's "failure to attend the initial creditors' meeting . . . is the very behavior for which Congress formulated § 109(g)"); Montgomery v. Ryan, 37 F.3d 413, 414 (8th Cir. 1994) ("Failure to attend a creditors meeting is a failure to obey a court order within the meaning of section 109(g)(1)."). Nor, finally, is there any dispute of Reischel's "failure. . . to appear before the Court in proper prosecution of the case” at the September 5 hearing. App. 4-5 (Reischel “has not appeared before the Court in proper prosecution of the case”); App. 8 (“The debtor further failed to appear for this hearing.”).

While he does not challenge the dismissal of his bankruptcy case, Reischel appears to argue on appeal that his failure to appear at the September 5, 2002 hearing could not properly be a basis for imposing a 180-day re-filing bar under § 109(g)(1), because he requested, but was not granted, permission to appear by telephone. Br. at 4. Reischel appears to claim that the bankruptcy court could not therefore deem his conduct “willful” under § 109(g)(1).

A finding of willfulness, however, is subject to review for clear error. As the district court noted, the bankruptcy court had ample evidence to support willfulness: Reischel’s failure to cooperate with the trustee at the June 10 creditors’ meeting; his failure to appear at the June 19 creditors’ meeting; and his failure to appear at the bankruptcy court’s September 5 hearing despite that court’s repeated scheduling of the hearing at Reischel’s own request. See supra at 8. Moreover, Reischel was sent notice of the June 19 meeting and September 5 hearing, but never provided an explanation for his failure to attend.

Accordingly, the finding of willfulness was not clearly erroneous.[4]

As to Reischel's argument that the bankruptcy court should have allowed him to appear by telephone, Reischel can cite no authority suggesting that the bankruptcy court had an obligation to permit appearance by telephone – especially after it had already accommodated Reischel's two requests to schedule the hearing at a date of his choice. Nor does the court's declining to permit appearance by telephone excuse Reischel's failure to appear in person despite having notice of the hearing. In any event, even if his failure to appear at the September 5 hearing were not an adequate basis for the 180-day re-filing bar, Reischel's failure to appear at the June 19 creditors' meeting surely was, see supra at 14, and Reischel does not even discuss that basis for imposing the bar.

B. Although not pursued on appeal to this Court, Reischel argued below that once the bankruptcy court dismissed his case, it was without jurisdiction to impose a 180-day re-filing bar.

[4] Reischel's subsequent conduct only reinforce the bankruptcy court's correct finding of willfulness: Reischel moved the bankruptcy court to stay its orders, but then failed to appear at the hearing on that motion. See supra at 7. Before the district court, Reischel failed to properly prosecute his case by failing to submit any reply brief, leading the district court to comment that "over the course of almost a year, it has become more than clear to the court that Reischel has no intention of briefing the merits of his appeal." App. 33. And in this Court, Reischel failed to timely file an opening brief, but instead filed a one page motion for "summary disposition."

Because Reischel has not raised the argument in his brief, he has waived the issue. See, e.g., Duncan v. Wisconsin Dep't of Health & Family Servs., 166 F.3d 930, 934 (7th Cir. 1999). In any event, as the district court correctly noted, Reischel's factual premise is mistaken: the two orders were imposed simultaneously at the September 5, 2002 hearing. While Reischel points to the subsequent September 11, 2002 minute order, that order "merely amended the September 5, 2002, oral order to reflect that finding." App. 30.

Even if the bankruptcy court had first dismissed the case, that would not have deprived it of jurisdiction to impose a § 109(g)(1) re-filing bar. "It is well established that a federal court may consider collateral issues after an action is no longer pending." Cooter & Gell v. Hartmarx Corp., 496 U.S. 384, 395 (1990). For example, a court may impose Rule 11 sanctions even after dismissal of the underlying action. Id. This is because imposing Rule 11 sanctions is "not a judgment on the merits of an action" but "requires the determination of a collateral issue," namely, "whether the attorney has abused the judicial process, and, if so, what sanction would be appropriate. Such a determination may be made after the principal suit has been terminated." Id. at 396. Likewise, "even after the [underlying] action . . . has been terminated," a court may award costs or attorney's fees, or consider a criminal contempt charge, because such orders are "not part of the original action" but are "'independent proceeding[s] supplemental to the original proceeding.'" Id. at 395-96. Similarly, even if the bankruptcy court had first dismissed Reischel's case, that would not deprive the court of jurisdiction to subsequently impose a 180-day re-filing bar, because that order would not be a judgment on the merits of Reischel's bankruptcy petition, but simply a collateral issue to determine whether Reischel had abused the legal process in prosecuting his petition.[5]

III. THE DISTRICT COURT DID NOT ERR IN DECLINING TO RULE ON THE TIMELINESS OF THE TRUSTEE'S BRIEF

Reischel argues that the district court erred in failing to rule on his argument that the trustee's district court brief was belatedly filed. Br. at 9. As noted above, however, the record is perfectly clear that the brief was timely filed and served. Furthermore, Reischel did file an opening brief, and it was considered by the district court, as is evident in the fact that the district court considered and rejected the arguments made in Reischel's brief. App. 25-30. While Reischel did not file a reply brief, that failure was his own doing, not the district court’s. And as the district court noted, App. 33, his arguments were so meritless that a reply brief would not have changed the analysis or outcome. Accordingly, the district court committed no error.

[5] Rule 11 sanctions do not generally "preclude the refiling of a complaint," or if they do, it is not as "a consequence of the dismissal," 496 U.S. at 396-97. But those characteristics are relevant to whether Rule 11 sanctions are consistent with a voluntary dismissal under Federal Rule of Civil Procedure 41 (one of the issues considered in Cooter & Gell); they do not relate to whether a court has jurisdiction to impose Rule 11 sanctions post-dismissal.

* * * *

This Court should dismiss Reischel’s appeal of the 180-day re-filing bar as moot, because the bar has expired and imposes no on-going consequences for Reischel. On the merits, the bankruptcy court properly imposed the bar as a result of Reischel’s failure to attend a creditors’ meeting and his failure to appear at a court hearing. The bankruptcy court did not err in finding Reischel’s conduct to be willful, was under no obligation to permit Reischel to appear by telephone, and had jurisdiction to impose the bar. Finally, the district court did not err in failing to rule on Reischel’s patently meritless claim that the U.S. trustee’s brief was untimely, and any missed opportunity to file a reply brief was Reischel’s own doing, not the district court’s.

CONCLUSION

For the foregoing reasons, this Court should affirm.

Respectfully submitted,

(b) After notice and a hearing, the court, on its own motion or on a motion by the United States trustee, but not at the request or suggestion of any party in interest, may dismiss a case filed by an individual debtor under this chapter whose debts are primarily consumer debts if it finds that the granting of relief would be a substantial abuse of the provisions of this chapter. There shall be a presumption in favor of granting the relief requested by the debtor. In making a determination whether to dismiss a case under this section, the court may not take into consideration whether a debtor has made, or continues to make, charitable contributions (that meet the definition of "charitable contribution" under section 548(d)(3)) to any qualified religious or charitable entity or organization (as that term is defined in section 548(d)(4)).

Legislative History:

JURISDICTIONAL STATEMENT

On June 8, 2010, the United States Bankruptcy Court for the Middle District of Pennsylvania entered a final order granting the Amended Motion of the United States Trustee to disqualify Jacques H. Geisenberger, Jr., P.C. (referred to herein as "Geisenberger")[1] from acting as debtor's counsel, and seeking denial of compensation. The bankruptcy court had jurisdiction over the proceeding pursuant to 28 U.S.C. §§ 157 and 1334. On June 21, 2010 Geisenberger filed a motion asking the bankruptcy court to extend the time to file a notice of appeal. The motion was granted by Order dated June 22, 2010 and Geisenberger filed a timely notice of appeal on July 12, 2010. See 28 U.S.C. § 158(c)(2); Fed. R. Bankr. P. 8002. This Court has jurisdiction pursuant to 28 U.S.C. § 158(a)(1). See generally In re BH & P , Inc., 949 F.2d 1300, 1307 (3d Cir. 1991) (holding that an order disqualifying counsel in a bankruptcy case is final and appealable for purposes of 28 U.S.C. § 158).

COUNTERSTATEMENT OF ISSUES

A. Did the bankruptcy court clearly err by finding that Geisenberger failed to comply with the disclosure requirements of 11 U.S.C. § 329(a) and Federal Rule of Bankruptcy Procedure 2016(b)?

B. Did the bankruptcy court clearly err by finding that Geisenberger failed to comply with the disclosure requirements of 11 U.S.C. § 327 and Federal Rule of Bankruptcy Procedure 2014?

C. Did the bankruptcy court clearly err by finding that Geisenberger held an interest that was adverse to the bankruptcy estate?

D. Did the bankruptcy court abuse its discretion in concluding that disqualification of Geisenberger and denial of fees were appropriate remedies for Geisenberger's failure to meet the requirements of 11 U.S.C. §§ 327 and 329 and Federal Rules of Bankruptcy Procedure 2014 and 2016?

[1] The bankruptcy court found no reason to distinguish between Mr. Geisenberger and his law firm, simply using the term "Geisenberger" to mean both. See Bankr. Docket no. 505 at p. 1, n.1. The United States Trustee adopts the same convention here.

STANDARD OF REVIEW

The bankruptcy court's findings of fact are reviewed for clear error; its conclusions of law, de novo, and its exercise of discretion, for abuse. In re O'Brien Envtl. Energy, Inc., 188 F.3d 116, 122 (3d Cir. 1999). A bankruptcy court's factual determination of an attorney's disinterestedness or conflict of interest is reviewed for clear error. See, e.g., Federal Ins. Co. v. Grace, Nos. 04-844, 04-845, 2004 WL 5517843, *4 n.8 (D. Del. Nov. 22, 2004); In re Ponce Marine Farm, Inc., 259 B.R. 484, 491 (D. In re BH & P, Inc., 949 F.2d 1300, 1321 (3d Cir. 1991). Likewise, the bankruptcy court's decision to deny or return attorney fees is reviewed for abuse of discretion. See, e.g., Hale v. U.S. Trustee, 509 F.3d 1139, 1147 (9th Cir. 2007); In re Robinson, 189 Fed. Appx. 371, 374, 2006 WL 1716702, *2 (6th Cir. June 22, 2006); In re Clark, 223 F.3d 859, 863 (8th Cir. 2000).

STATEMENT OF THE CASE

This is an appeal from a contested matter heard by the United States Bankruptcy Court for the Middle District of Pennsylvania. Ressler Hardwoods and Flooring, Inc. ("Ressler") filed the underlying chapter 11 case on May 27, 2008. On the same date, Ressler filed an application under 11 U.S.C. § 327(a) seeking the court's permission to employ Geisenberger as its bankruptcy counsel. (Bankr. Docket no. 4).[2] Based on the representations in the debtor's application and Geisenberger's declaration in support, and in the absence of any objections, the bankruptcy court entered an Order approving the application on June 26, 2008. (Bankr. Docket no. 76).

On March 31, 2009, the United States Trustee filed a motion to disqualify Geisenberger and to compel the return of fees. (Bankr. Docket no. 187). On May 13, 2009, the United States Trustee filed an amended motion. (Bankr. Docket no. 202). On July 30, 2009, Geisenberger filed a response to the amended motion (Bankr. Docket no. 252) and, after several continuances, the bankruptcy court conducted a hearing on December 10, 2009. (Bankr. Docket no. 363).

On June 8, 2010, the bankruptcy court entered an order granting the United States Trustee's motion, disqualifying Geisenberger and directing him to return $17,500 in fees to the bankruptcy estate. (Bankr. Docket no. 504). This appeal followed.

STATUTORY FRAMEWORK

Section 329(a) of the Bankruptcy Code governs the employment of attorney(s) by a debtor-in-possession. It states that "[a]ny attorney representing a debtor . . . shall file with the court a statement of the compensation paid or agreed to be paid, if such payment or agreement was made after one year before the date of the filing of the [bankruptcy] petition, for services rendered or to be rendered in contemplation of or in connection with the case by such attorney, and the source of such compensation." 11 U.S.C. § 329(a). If the reported compensation exceeds the reasonable value of any such services, the court may cancel the agreement and/or order the return of any excessive amount. 11 U.S.C. § 329(b).

In addition to section 329, Bankruptcy Rule 2016(b) provides that "every attorney for a refer to Adversary Case No. 1:08-ap-109.

debtor whether or not the attorney applies for compensation shall file and transmit to the United States Trustee . . . the statement required by § 329 . . . .”

Employment of a professional person by a debtor in possession is also governed by 11 U.S.C. § 327. Section 327(a) provides in relevant part:

> (a) Except as otherwise provided in this section, the trustee, with the court’s approval, may employ one or more attorneys . . . or other professional persons, that do not hold or represent an interest adverse to the estate, and that are disinterested persons . . .

Although by its terms section 327(a) applies only to professionals employed by the “trustee,” 11 U.S.C. § 1107(a) provides that a “debtor in possession” has “all the rights . . . of a trustee serving in a case under this chapter.”

The term “disinterested person” is defined at 11 U.S.C. § 101(14) as a person that -

> (A) is not a creditor, an equity security holder, or an insider;
>
> (B) is not and was not, within two years before the date of the filing of the petition, a director, officer, or employee of the debtor; and
> (C) does not have an interest materially adverse to the interest of the estate or any class of creditors or equity security holder, by reason of a direct or indirect relationship to, connection with, or interest in, the debtor, or for any other reason.

Federal Rule of Bankruptcy Procedure 2014 is designed to assist the court in implementation of section 327. Rule 2014 requires that an application seeking approval to employ a professional must state, among other things, any proposed arrangement for compensation, as well as the professional’s connections with the debtor, creditors, and any other party in interest. In addition, the application must be accompanied by an affidavit from the professional which also sets forth the professional’s connections with the debtor, creditors, and any other party in interest. Fed. R. Bankr. P. 2014. The purpose of Rule 2014 is to provide the court with information necessary to determine whether the professional’s employment meets the requirements of section 327.

Section 328(c) of the Bankruptcy Code authorizes the bankruptcy court to deny compensation to an attorney who has been employed if it comes to light that the attorney is not disinterested or holds an interest adverse to the estate. That section provides, in pertinent part:

> the court may deny allowance of compensation for services and reimbursement of expenses of a professional person employed under section 327 or 1103 of this title if, at any time during such professional person's employment under section 327 or 1103 of this title, such professional person is not a disinterested person, or represents or holds an interest adverse to the interest of the estate with respect to the matter on which such professional person is employed.

COUNTERSTATEMENT OF FACTS

A. Geisenberger's Pre-petition Connections with Ressler.

Ressler was a flooring manufacturer owned and operated by Kenneth and Karen Ressler and their son, Keith Ressler (collectively the "Resslers"). On or about March 6, 2006, Ressler suffered fire damage that "totally destroyed" its place of business. Nt. 37.[3] On October 23, 2006, the Resslers had an initial conference with Jacques H. Geisenberger, Jr., the sole principal of Jacques H. Geisenberger, Jr., P.C. (collectively referred to herein as "Geisenberger"), to discuss the "financial and operational problems" caused by the failure of Erie Insurance Company to compensate Ressler for business interruption. Nt. 36, 37; UST trial Exhibit 1. During the ensuing months, Geisenberger represented Ressler in connection with the Erie insurance dispute as well as matters involving a lease of Ressler's place of business (Nt. 40), a loan default with Sovereign Bank (Nt. 38, 39), a sale of stock to CQ (one of debtor's vendors)

(Nt. 42-45), and an aborted sale of a majority interest in Ressler to James Little (Nt. 44, 45, 46).

Despite the breadth of Geisenberger's work for Ressler, the terms of the attorney/client relationship were not documented until May 7, 2007, when Geisenberger sent Ressler a letter to "confirm several of the things which we discussed during our several meetings since our initial conference back on October 23, 2006." The "engagement letter" referenced unpaid fees for the first six months of representation and noted that future invoices would be submitted on a monthly basis. The letter listed as its subject "Various Problems," but specifically referenced only one matter: "the recent legal action commenced by Sovereign Bank."[4]

"Shortly after" the date of the engagement letter, Ressler paid Geisenberger the past-due fees. Nt. 41. The only other record of payments is found in an attachment to Ressler's Statement of Financial Affairs (Bankr. Docket no. 35; UST Trial Exhibit 3).[5] The attachment titled "Account Register" is intended to reflect all payments made by Ressler during the 90 days preceding the commencement of the bankruptcy case. The following payments to Geisenberger are reported, each of which was confirmed by Geisenberger during his trial testimony (Nt. 56-60):

Date	Check no.	Amount
02/06/08	1035	$7,033.17

B. Geisenberger's Involvement in the Little Litigation.

On or about January 14, 2008, James Little ("Little") filed a complaint against Ressler in the United States District Court for the District of Maryland alleging a violation of the Maryland Securities Act. Little claimed that Ressler and its principals issued stock to him and that the stock was neither registered nor exempt from registration under the Maryland Securities Act and that, therefore, he was entitled to a judgment against the defendants in the sum of $400,000. In Counts II and III of his complaint, Mr. Little sought relief based on securities fraud and assumpsit, respectively. The Little complaint was transferred to the Bankruptcy Court for the Middle District of Pennsylvania on July 22, 2008, and was assigned adversary number 1-08-ap-109. (Bankr. Docket no. 97; UST Trial Exhibit no. 4).

In support of his claims, Little alleged that during the spring of 2007, he began negotiating with Kenneth, Keith and Karen Ressler for a controlling interest in Ressler. (Bankr. Docket no. 97; UST Trial Exhibit no. 4 at ¶ 9). According to Little, the agreed purchase price for a 51% share was $1.2 million. (Id. at ¶ 10). A final sale agreement was contingent on the negotiation of, among other items, employment and non-compete agreements with the Resslers. (Id. at ¶ 9).

Little further alleged that in early July 2007 the Resslers asked him to make two advance deposits, each in the amount of $200,000, so that the business could meet various financial obligations. (Id. at ¶ 11). Little paid the money. Unfortunately, negotiations broke down and Little demanded the return of both deposits. (Id. at ¶¶ 13, 14; Nt. 46). Instead of returning the money, Ressler issued Little a stock certificate for 26,021 shares of its stock. (UST Trial Exhibit no. 5).

The Ressler board of directors authorized the issuance of the stock certificate at a meeting held on December 10, 2007 (UST Trial Exhibit 5; Nt. 64, 66). Geisenberger attended the meeting and prepared and mailed the certificate that contained the following legend:

> These shares represented by this certificate are subject to restrictions upon transfer contained in the bylaws of the corporation. These securities have not been registered . . . They may not be sold or offered for sale in the absence of an effective registration . . . or an opinion of counsel satisfactory to the corporation that such registration is not needed.

(Id.). Geisenberger did not provide an opinion of counsel in connection with the issuance of the certificate and, at the time, did not know whether the certificate was exempt from registration. (Nt. 67, 68).

Upon receipt of the stock certificate, Little's counsel sent a letter to Geisenberger asserting that issuance of the stock to Little was contrary to the laws of the State of Maryland (Little's place of residence). (UST Exhibit 7; Nt. 72-76). Little's counsel offered to return the certificate in exchange for the funds advanced. Ressler refused and Little filed the above-described action in the United States District Court for the District of Maryland.

After the Little complaint was transferred to the bankruptcy court, Ressler and the individual defendants filed a motion for summary judgment. (Adversary Case 1-08-ap-109 Docket no. 40). On March 31, 2009, the bankruptcy court entered an order granting the defendants summary judgment on Little's claim that they had violated the Maryland Securities Act ("MSA"). The bankruptcy court denied summary judgment on Counts II and III.

In connection with the dismissed count, the court found that the shares issued to Little were “covered” securities and, therefore, exempt from registration under the MSA. (Adversary Case 1-08-ap-109 Docket no. 53 - Opinion at 14). The court opined, however, that Ressler was required to file a Form D with the Securities and Exchange Commission (“SEC”) and to satisfy the notice filing requirements of the MSA. Opinion at 16. It had not done either.[6] Opinion at 17. The court conducted a trial on the two remaining counts and judgment was entered in favor of Little. (Adversary 1-08-ap-109 Docket no. 111).

C. The Application to Employ Counsel and Geisenberger’s Declaration in Support.

Ressler filed an application under 11 U.S.C. § 727(a) to employ Geisenberger as its bankruptcy counsel on May 27, 2008, the day it filed for bankruptcy. (Bankr. Docket no. 4). As Fed. R. Bankr. P. 2014 requires, Geisenberger supplied a “Declaration of Disinterestedness” in support. In the declaration, Geisenberger affirmed that he did not represent an interest that was adverse to Ressler as debtor-in-possession. He also affirmed that he was a disinterested person who did not represent or hold an interest adverse to the bankruptcy estate. (Bankr. Docket no. 4 at Exhibit A).

At paragraph 4 of its application to employ Geisenberger, Ressler stated that it had consulted with and employed Geisenberger pursuant to a written engagement letter beginning in early 2007. (Bankr. Docket no. 4). Ressler also represented that it had paid a pre-petition retainer of $17,500 for future services and $2,000 as advanced costs including the bankruptcy

Gilmore, 539 F.Supp.2d 1299, 1304 (W.D. Wash. 2003) and exposes the debtor and its principals to the possibility of criminal sanctions under 15 U.S.C. §77x. In addition, the failure of the debtor to meet the noticing requirements of the MSA exposes debtor to a variety of enforcement actions including a civil penalty up to $5,000, the appointment of a receiver, a freeze of the debtor’s assets and restitution. filing fee. The "engagement letter" described above was attached to the application as Exhibit A, along with the "Declaration of Disinterestedness" signed by Geisenberger.

Neither the section 327(a) application nor Geisenberger's declaration disclosed the scope of Geisenberger's prior representation of Ressler other than general references to "various problems," "problems caused by Erie's failure to pay you what you claimed" and "the recent legal action commenced by Sovereign." There was no mention of Geisenberger's role in the issuance of a stock certificate to Little. There was no reference to his work regarding lease negotiations. And there was no mention of his work regarding the sale of stock to CQ.

Based on the representations in the application and declaration, the bankruptcy court approved Geisenberger's employment on June 26, 2008. (Bankr. Docket no. 76).

D. The Statement of Attorney Compensation

On June 6, 2008, Geisenberger filed the mandatory Statement of Attorney Compensation as required by 11 U.S.C. § 329 and Bankruptcy Rule 2016(b) (Bankr. Docket no. 36). Geisenberger stated that he had been paid for all pre-petition services and that he had accepted a pre-petition retainer in the amount of $19,500. No other pre-petition payments were disclosed.

E. The United States Trustee's Reasons for Seeking Review of Geisenberger's Employment as Counsel.

Based upon a review of the Little adversary record, the United States Trustee[7] determined that Geisenberger may have acted negligently in the issuance of the stock certificate to Little and that Ressler might hold a claim against Geisenberger for losses incurred as a result of that negligence. The United States Trustee also determined that Ressler's application and Geisenberger's declaration failed to properly disclose: 1) Geisenberger's role in the issuance of stock to Little; 2) that Geisenberger was a potential fact witness in the Little litigation; and 3) that he received fees totaling $49,290 during the 90 day preference period.

[7] United States Trustees are Department of Justice Officials appointed by the Attorney General to supervise the administration of bankruptcy cases. See 28 U.S.C. § 581-589(a). See also H.R. Rep. No. 95-595, at 88 (1977), reprinted in 1978 U.S.C.C.A.N. 5963, 6049 (United States Trustees "serve as bankruptcy watch-dogs to prevent fraud, dishonesty, and overreaching in the bankruptcy arena."). "The United States trustee may raise and may appear and be heard on any issue in any case or proceeding under this title [11]." 11 U.S.C. § 307.

The United States Trustee raised her concerns to Geisenberger by letter dated March 20, 2009 and requested that he either respond to the concerns or immediately withdraw as counsel. (Geisenberger's Trial Exhibit 1). Geisenberger chose to respond by letter dated March 28, 2009. UST Exhibit 9. On the second page of his correspondence, Geisenberger opined that the United States Trustee's conclusions were unfounded. He acknowledged, however, that at the conclusion of his subsequent deposition (held on October 28, 2008 - Nt. 77-80), that Little's counsel, Richard Magid, asserted that Geisenberger had a conflict of interest.[8]

Not satisfied with Geisenberger's response, the United States Trustee filed the subject motion to disqualify and deny fees.

SUMMARY OF ARGUMENT

The bankruptcy court's denial of fees and disqualification of counsel can be affirmed on three separate and independent bases.

First, it can be upheld under section 329(a) of the Bankruptcy Code. That section requires an attorney employed by a debtor-in-possession to disclose all compensation received during the year preceding the commencement of the bankruptcy case for services rendered or to be rendered in connection with or in contemplation of the case. Bankruptcy Rule 2016(b) provides that "every attorney for a debtor whether or not the attorney applies for compensation shall file and transmit to the United States Trustee . . . the statement required by § 329 . . ..” Here, the bankruptcy court did not clearly err in finding that Geisenberger failed to disclose payments totaling at least $36,855.

Second, section 327(a) of the Bankruptcy Code states that in order to be employed by a debtor-in-possession, a professional must not hold or represent an interest adverse to the bankruptcy estate and must be disinterested. To assist the court in making those determinations, Bankruptcy Rule 2014 requires that an application seeking approval to employ a professional must be accompanied by a verified statement of the professional’s connections with the debtor, its creditors or other parties in interest. Here, Geisenberger failed to disclose his prior representation of Ressler in a variety of matters including the sale of stock to Little. Moreover, as counsel to Ressler, Geisenberger had a duty to evaluate the merits of the Little litigation. Based on Geisenberger’s admitted failure to provide adequate legal guidance on the underlying issues, it was impossible for Geisenberger to evaluate the merits with disinterest. Accordingly, the bankruptcy court did not clearly err in finding that Geisenberger did not meet the requirements of 11 U.S.C. § 327.

Third, based on the record, the bankruptcy court did not abuse its discretion in disqualifying Geisenberger and ordering return of his fees. 11 U.S.C. § 328(c). An appropriate remedy for an attorney’s failure to comply with the requirements of sections 327 and 329 and Bankruptcy Rules 2014 and 2016 is denial of all compensation and disqualification of the professional, and section 328(c) authorizes the bankruptcy court to effectuate this remedy.

ARGUMENT

In an ordinary civil case, a party typically can pick the counsel of its choice. But in bankruptcy, the situation is different. Under 11 U.S.C. § 327 and § 1107, a bankruptcy chapter 11 debtor in possession cannot employ the counsel of its choice without court approval. Court approval can be obtained only if counsel satisfies two criteria: (1) that counsel is "disinterested" under 11 U.S.C. § 101(14); and (2) that counsel holds no interest adverse to the bankruptcy estate. Independent of these requirements, 11 U.S.C. § 329 requires bankruptcy attorneys to disclose all agreements to be paid by the debtor and all fees that they may have collected from the debtor within one year prior to the bankruptcy filing.

The Bankruptcy Code imposes these rigid requirements because a debtor in possession is a fiduciary of its creditors. See generally Commodity Futures Trading Com'n v. Weintraub, 471 U.S. 343, 355 (1985) (observing that a debtor in possession owes "the same fiduciary obligation to creditors and shareholders as would the trustee for a debtor out of possession"). A chapter 11 debtor proceeds through bankruptcy in order to protect its creditors, and the bankruptcy court determines what attorney can best help accomplish that goal. See 11 U.S.C. § 327(a) (the court "may" appoint the attorney recommended by the debtor).

Courts take a dim view of any failure by the debtor or nominated counsel to fully disclose all business relationships and fees, and courts consistently uphold the bankruptcy courts' power to deny an application for employment and deny all fees when attorney disclosures fall short of the mark. See, e.g., In re Kisseberth, 273 F.3d 714, 721 (6th Cir. 2001) (upholding denial of all fees where counsel failed to disclose fees pursuant to section 329); In re Park-Helena Corp., 63 F.3d 877, 882 (9th Cir. 1995) ("Even a negligent or inadvertent failure to disclose fully relevant information may result in a denial of all requested fees"); Rome v. Braunstein, 19 F.3d 54, 62 (1st Cir. 1994) (finding that counsel "can lay no claim of right to a lesser sanction" than disgorgement of all fees when counsel fails to disclose all material facts relevant to a conflict of interest under section 327(a)); In re Interwest Business Equipment, Inc., 23 F.3d 311, 317 (10th Cir. 1994) (upholding bankruptcy court's denial of application for employment even where bankruptcy court raised the issue sua sponte, because the "bankruptcy judge the responsibility and power to oversee professionals involved in a bankruptcy case without any requirement that the issues be raised by a party in interest").

A. The Bankruptcy Court Did Not Clearly Err in Finding that Geisenberger Failed to Comply With the Disclosure Requirements of 11 U.S.C. § 329(a) and Federal Rule of Bankruptcy Procedure 2016(b).

Section 329 of the Bankruptcy Code "was enacted because 'payments to a debtor's attorney provide serious potential for evasion of creditor protection provisions of the bankruptcy laws, and serious potential for overreaching by the debtor's attorney, and should be subject to careful scrutiny.'" In re Campbell, 259 B.R. 615, 625 (Bankr. N.D. Ohio 2001) (quoting H.R.Rep. No. 95-595 at 329 (1977)). See also In re Halbert, 225 B.R. 336, 346 (E.D. Mich. 1998). Compliance is, therefore, mandatory. In re Investment Bankers, Inc., 4 F.3d 1556, 1565 (10th Cir. 1993). Moreover, the disclosures made pursuant to section 329 must be "precise and complete." In re Berg, 356 B.R. 378, 381 (Bankr. E.D. Pa. 2006). "Coy or incomplete disclosures" that force the court "to ferret out pertinent information" are unacceptable. In re Park-Helena Corp., 63 F.3d 877, 881 (9th Cir. 1995) (quoting In re Saturely, 131 B.R. 509, 517 (Bankr. D. Me. 1991)), aff'd in part and rev'd in part 165 B.R. 339 (9th Cir. 1993).

Disclosure of pre-petition payments in a debtor's statement of financial affairs is not adequate to meet an attorney's obligations under section 329. In re Smitty's Truck Stop, 210 B.R. 844, 848 (B.A.P. 10th Cir. 1997). Nor are an attorney's obligations under section 329 vitiated by negligence or inadvertence, In re Maui 14K, Ltd., 133 B.R. 657, 660 (Bankr. D. Haw. 1991), and sanctions may be imposed even in the absence of harm to the estate. Id.

Here, Ressler's Statement of Financial Affairs admitted that Geisenberger received pre-petition payments totaling $56,355 during the 4 months preceding the commencement of the bankruptcy case. (Bankr. Docket no. 35; UST Trial Exhibit 3). But Geisenberger misrepresented in his Statement of Attorney Compensation the receipt of only $19,500. (Bankr. Docket no. 36). And at no time since the facts came to light did Geisenberger argue either that he did not receive an additional $36,855 or that this amount did not have to be disclosed. Accordingly, on this record, the bankruptcy court did not clearly err in finding that Geisenberger failed to meet the requirements of section 329 and Bankruptcy Rule 2016(b). See, e.g., In re Downs, 103 F.3d 472, 477 (6th Cir. 1996) (upholding disgorgement of all fees due to counsel's failure to "obey the mandate of § 329 and Rule 2016 concerning disclosure").

B. The Bankruptcy Court Did Not Clearly Err in Finding that Geisenberger Failed to Comply With the Disclosure Requirements of 11 U.S.C. § 327 and Federal Rule of Bankruptcy Procedure 2014.

As with section 329, the disinterestedness requirements of section 327 are strictly enforced. In re Hot Tin Roof, Inc. 205 B.R. 1000, 1003 (1st Cir. 1997); Beal Bank, S.S.B. v. Waters Edge Ltd. Partnership, 248 B.R. 668, 695 (D. Mass. 2000) ("These disinterestedness requirements [of 11 U.S.C. § 327] must be strictly enforced"); accord In re Greystone on Payette, LLC, 410 B.R. 900, 904 (Bankr. D. Idaho 2009) ("strict enforcement of the ethical rules to which estate professionals are subject under the Code is required in order to protect the integrity of the bankruptcy system"). The purpose of section 327 and Bankruptcy Rule 2014 is to shine a light on a professional's connections with the bankruptcy estate and to ensure that professionals "tender undivided loyalty and provide untainted advice and assistance in furtherance of their fiduciary responsibilities." In re Leslie Fay Companies, Inc., 175 B.R. 525, 532 (Bankr. S.D.N.Y. 1994) (quoting Rome v. Braunstein, 19 F.3d 54, 58 (1st Cir. 1994)). Sufficient information must be disclosed "so that the bankruptcy court may preserve the integrity of the judicial process, guard against potential conflicts, address actual conflicts, and ensure that the debtor's counsel is primarily concerned with the estate's best interest." In re Halbert, 225 B.R. 336, 346 (E.D. Mich. 1998).

It is the professional's responsibility to make a full, candid and complete disclosure. In re B.E.S. Concrete Products, Inc., 93 B.R. 228, 237 (Bankr. C.D.Cal. 1988). A professional cannot pick and choose which connections are irrelevant or trivial, In re EWC, Inc., 138 B.R. 276, 280 (Bankr. W.D. Okla. 1992), and cannot withhold information because it is not apparent to the professional that a conflict exists, In re Condor Systems, Inc., 302 B.R. 55, 69-70 (Bankr. N.D. Cal. 2003) (citing In re Park-Helena Corp., 63 F.3d at 880)). Moreover, the good faith or negligence of a professional does not excuse a failure to disclose. In re Halbert, 225 B.R. at 346; In re B.E.S. 93 B.R. at 237.

The disclosures must be made in the application for employment and/or the accompanying affidavit of the professional. As with section 329, neither the United States Trustee nor the court, nor any other party in interest, should be required to ferret out facts which the Bankruptcy Rules require that the lawyer plainly, openly, and timely disclose. See In re TJN, Inc., 194 B.R. 400, 403 (Bankr. D.S.C. 1996). "It is not the bankruptcy judge's responsibility to examine all the documents in the file to determine if the statements . . . are true . . . ." In re Chestnut Hill Mort., Corp., 158 B.R. 547, 551, n.3 (Bankr. D. Mass.1993).

Here, the record reflects that Geisenberger represented Ressler for approximately 18 months before the bankruptcy case was commenced. During that time, he represented Ressler in a variety of matters that related to Ressler's financial distress including the failed stock sale transaction involving Little. When the deal with Little fell through, Geisenberger prepared a stock certificate to deliver to Little, but admitted he did not know whether the issuance was an exempt transaction. (UST Trial Exhibit 5; Nt. 64, 66, 67, 68). By the time the bankruptcy case was filed, Geisenberger knew or should have known that he was a fact witness in a matter that was pivotal to Ressler's reorganization and that his role in the issuance of the stock certificate was being questioned.

But these problematic "connections" with Ressler were not disclosed in the application for employment or Geisenberger's "Declaration of Disinterestedness." (Bankr. Docket no. 4 & Exh. A thereto). Geisenberger suggested that he omitted the information because he believed it was of no consequence and did not create a conflict. (UST Exhibit 9; Geisenberger Deposition Nt. 77-80). As noted, however, it is not the role of the professional to pick and choose which connections are irrelevant or trivial. All connections must be disclosed so that the bankruptcy court and other parties in interest can evaluate the professional's qualifications to serve.

In rebuttal to the bankruptcy court's finding, Geisenberger notes that the Little litigation was discussed during the meeting of creditors and suggests that, therefore, the duties imposed on him by section 327 of the Bankruptcy Code and Bankruptcy Rule 2014 were satisfied. In making his argument, Geisenberger ignores the clear weight of legal authority that neither the bankruptcy court nor parties in interest should be forced to ferret out facts which the Bankruptcy Rules require that the lawyer plainly, openly, and timely disclose. See In re Park-Helena Corp., 63 F.3d at 881; In re TJN, Inc., 194 B.R. at 403; In re Chestnut Hill Mort., Corp., 158 B.R. at 551, n.3.

Based on all of the above law and facts, this Court can conclude that Geisenberger's inadequate disclosures were not an innocent mistake, and that the bankruptcy court did not clearly err in finding that Geisenberger failed to satisfy section 327 and Rule 2014. Disclosure of "[a]ll of these facts" was required in Geisenberger's "Declaration of Disinterestedness." See In re

Tomczak, 283 B.R. 730, 735 (Bankr. E.D.Wisc. 2002) (where the court ruled that special counsel to Chapter 7 trustee should have disclosed that a member of the firm might be called as a witness for the party named as defendant in litigation that counsel was retained to pursue). And, as discussed in more detail below, because Geisenberger's disclosures were inadequate, the bankruptcy court did not abuse its discretion by disqualifying counsel and denying all fees.

C. The Bankruptcy Court Did Not Clearly Err in Finding that Geisenberger Held an Interest That Was Adverse to the Bankruptcy Estate.

Section 327 of the Bankruptcy Code requires the bankruptcy court to deny employment of a professional if it finds that the employment creates an actual conflict of interest. Disqualification is mandatory if the conflict is "actual" and discretionary if the conflict is potential. In re BH & P, 949 F.2d 1300, 1315-16 (3d Cir. 1991). In BH & P, the Third Circuit found no error in the following articulation of the standard governing conflicts of interest:

> [t]he court should generally disapprove employment of a professional with a potential conflict, with certain possible exceptions. First of all, ... there may occasionally be large cases where every competent professional in a particular field is already employed by a creditor or a party in interest....
> The other exception is where the possibility that the potential conflict will become actual is remote, and the reasons for employing the professional in question are particularly compelling. This court will not attempt here to define the parameters of this exception, which necessarily will depend upon the facts of a particular case. I will, however, note that even in such situations, employment of a professional with a potential conflict is disfavored.

949 F.2d at 1316 (quoting In re BH & P, Inc., 103 B.R. 556, 564 (Bankr. D.N.J. 1989)) (emphasis added).

The record of this case reflects that Geisenberger played a pivotal role in the issuance of stock to Little which led to a lawsuit by Little alleging stock fraud. (UST Trial Exhibit 5; Nt. 64, 66, 67, 68). Geisenberger was present when Ressler's board of directors approved the issuance of stock, but did not offer any caution or advice regarding the need to meet the registration requirements of either federal or state law. (Id.). When the bankruptcy was filed and Geisenberger sought approval of the bankruptcy court to represent Ressler, Geisenberger knew or should have known that he may have fallen short of his professional duty to provide his client with competent representation and that he may face personal liability for any losses occasioned by Little's lawsuit.

As the attorney for Ressler, Geisenberger had the responsibility to decide whether to continue defense of the litigation. That decision would require, however, that Geisenberger reevaluate his own conduct. The bankruptcy court noted the conflicting interests as follows:

> It is difficult to see how Geisenberger could approach this decision objectively. To justify his prepetition legal advice, Geisenberger would be inclined to recommend defending [Ressler's] decision to transfer the shares as consideration for the $400,000 Little advanced. However, an objective review of Geisenberger's actions would disclose that he failed to investigate one of the pivotal issues in the suit — whether the stock offering was subject to state or federal security laws. . . . As counsel for a debtor-in-possession Geisenberger had an obligation to reevaluate the decisions that were made leading up to the bankruptcy filing. As a participant in those decisions, it was impossible for him to review those decisions with disinterestedness.

(Bankr. Docket no. 505 at pp. 13-14). Geisenberger has pointed to no fact in the record that would render the bankruptcy court's findings on this point clearly erroneous. To the contrary, the record supports the bankruptcy court's findings that Geisenberger held an interest that was adverse to the bankruptcy estate and was not qualified to represent Ressler in the bankruptcy case.

D. The Bankruptcy Court Did Not Abuse its Discretion in Concluding that Disqualification of Geisenberger and Denial of Fees Were Appropriate Remedies for Geisenberger's Failure to Meet the Requirements of 11 U.S.C. §§ 327 and 329 and Federal Rules of Bankruptcy Procedure 2014 and 2016.

The bankruptcy court is authorized to disqualify counsel when the facts establish that counsel is not disinterested or has an interest adverse to the bankruptcy estate. See, e.g., Pierce v. Aetna Life Insurance Company (In re Pierce), 809 F.2d 1356, 1362 (8th Cir. 1987) ("Although framed conjunctively, the conditions [in 11 U.S.C. § 327] are applied disjunctively; failure to meet either will result in disqualification."). These requirements "are congressionally established per se rules that a bankruptcy court must apply in exercising its approval power over the appointment of professionals." In re Harold & Williams Dev. Co., 977 F.2d 906, 909 (4th Cir. 1992). Accordingly, in this case, counsel's interest adverse to the bankruptcy estate, found without clear error, required the bankruptcy court to disqualify Geisenberger. The bankruptcy court did not abuse its discretion in doing so.

Moreover, 11 U.S.C. § 328(c) expressly authorizes the bankruptcy court to deny all compensation to an attorney that has been appointed under section 327 if it comes to light that counsel is not disinterested or holds or represents an interest adverse to the estate at any time during the representation. 11 U.S.C. § 328(c); In re Crivello, 134 F.3d 831 (7th Cir. 1998).[9] In Crivello, as in this case, the bankruptcy court had approved the debtor-in-possession's application to employ counsel and then revoked the employment order after learning of counsel's conflicts. Id. at 833-34. Under those circumstances, the Seventh Circuit held that the bankruptcy court had discretion under section 328(c) to deny the law firm's fees in whole or in part. Id. at 837. This Court may reach the same conclusion on parallel facts. Here, after approving Geisenberger's employment, the bankruptcy court found that Geisenberger had an interest adverse to the bankruptcy estate. As discussed above, this finding was not clearly erroneous. Therefore, the bankruptcy court was within its discretion under section 328(c) to deny compensation.[10]

[9] A debtors cannot waive a conflict of interest because the requirement that counsel be disinterested is mandatory. See 11 U.S.C. § 327(a) (requiring that a professional employed by a debtor-in-possession must not hold or represent an interest adverse to the bankruptcy estate and must be disinterested).

Moreover, courts have found that the failure to provide adequate disclosures under either section 327 or 329 is grounds for denial of compensation. See In re Waldo, 417 B.R. 854, 894 (Bankr. E.D. Tenn. 2009); In re Smitty's Truck Stop, 210 B.R. at 848; In re Vann, 136 B.R. 863, 873 (D.Colo 1992); In re Maui 14K, Ltd., 133 B.R. at 660. In addition, a failure by the professional to disclose any facts that may influence the court's determination of employment may result not only in the forfeiture of all compensation, but the removal of counsel. In re Halbert, 225 B.R. at 357; In re Hot Tin Roof, Inc. 205 B.R. at 1003; In re EWC, Inc., 138 B.R. 276, 280 (Bankr. W.D.Okla. 1992); In re Marine Outlet, Inc. 135 B.R. 154, 156 (Bankr. M.D.Fla. 1991).

As noted, the bankruptcy court found that Geisenberger failed to disclose four payments received from Ressler preceding the commencement of the bankruptcy case. Geisenberger has not argued that he did not receive the payments or that the payments were not required to be disclosed pursuant to section 329 or Bankruptcy Rule 2016(b). The bankruptcy court also found that Geisenberger failed to meet the requirements of section 327 of the Bankruptcy Code and Bankruptcy Rule 2014 when he failed to disclose his extensive connections with Ressler including Geisenberger's involvement in the Little stock transaction. Given these findings, the bankruptcy court acted well within the limits of its discretion to disqualify counsel and require return by Geisenberger of his pre-petition retainer.

[10] This Court, sitting as an appellate court, can affirm on the basis of 11 U.S.C. § 328(c) even though the bankruptcy court did not cite it. See generally Oss Nokalva, Inc. v. European Space Agency, 617 F.3d 756, 761 (3d Cir. 2010) ("It is an accepted tenet of appellate jurisdiction that we 'may affirm a judgment on any ground apparent from the record, even if the [lower] court did not reach it.'") (quoting Kabakjian v. United States, 267 F.3d 208, 213 (3d Cir. 2001)).

REPLY BRIEF FOR THE APPELLANT

I. THE DISTRICT COURT ERRED IN DISMISSING THE UNITED STATES TRUSTEE'S APPEAL FOR LACK OF STANDING.

1. The dismissal decision of the district court cannot be justified as a bringing forward of the pre-reform doctrine of bankruptcy standing. There never was a "pecuniary interest rule" for standing in bankruptcy law even under the 1898 Bankruptcy Code. Notwithstanding appellees' repetition of the "directly and adversely affected pecuniarily" formulation of the "persons aggrieved" requirement (appellees' merits brief, at 11-14), those case decisions do not hold that a monetary stake was a sine qua non to confer appellate standing in bankruptcy cases under the 1898 Code (appellant's initial brief, at 11-14). The Supreme Court so held in Securities and Exchange Comm'n v. United States Realty & Improvement Co., 310 U.S. 434, 459-60 (1940). In that case the SEC's interest "in the maintenance of its statutory authority and the performance of its public duties" rendered the Commission a "party aggrieved." That interest of the United States trustee here is the same, and appellees are unable to reconcile the United States Realty decision with the district court's dismissal on standing grounds.

It was necessary for Congress to amend the Bankruptcy Code and add a specific provision, 11 U.S.C. 1109(a), to preclude the SEC from taking appeals. Section 1109(a) is agency-specific; it has no effect upon other government agencies not precluded. See, In re Co Petro Marketing Group, Inc., 680 F.2d 566, 572-73 (7th Cir. 1982). Needless to say, the SEC rarely, if ever, has a pecuniary interest in the bankruptcy proceedings in which it becomes involved. Unless 11 U.S.C. 1109(a) is meaningless surplusage, government law enforcement entities enjoy standing to appeal in bankruptcy cases, based upon their interest in law enforcement, unless otherwise prohibited. Any other view would squarely conflict with the rule of in pari materia construction employed with respect to the Bankruptcy Code. Lynch v. Johns-Manville Corp., 710 F.2d 1194, 1198 (6th Cir. 1983).1

2. Appellees' analysis of the office of the United States trustee (appellees' merits brief, at 18-23) does not provide convincing arguments for concluding that a United States trustee lacks standing to appeal from an adverse order denying his request for an examiner pursuant to 11 U.S.C. 1104(b)(2). The supervisory and law enforcement duties of the United States trustee are indeed adversely affected by an erroneous failure of a bankruptcy court to appoint an independent examiner, [FN2] and the United States trustee has the same standing as any other federal regulatory agency not expressly barred from taking an appeal when its statutory authority has been impaired.

More importantly, appellees' analysis diverts attention from the substance of the central provision in dispute in this appeal, 11 U.S.C. 1104(b)(2). That statute adds, to the traditional parties in interest, the United States trustee as a person who may insist upon the appointment of an independent examiner in certain large public debt bankruptcies. A law enforcement official, who can seek the appointment of an examiner on the same basis as a "party in interest," must be accorded the same entitlement to an appeal, when his motion is denied, on the same basis as any other person enjoying the identical rights under the statute.

[*4] 3. Appellees note that the United States trustee has appealed in other cases where he enjoyed no pecuniary interest in the proceeding, citing In re Lathrop Mobile Investors, 55 B.R. 766 (Bankr. 9th Cir. 1985), and In re Kontaratos, 15 B.R. 298 (Bankr. 1st Cir. 1981). (Appellees' merits brief, at 22-23). Appellees would distinguish those cases by acknowledging an adverse effect to the United States trustee's right in those cases, while contesting it here. In doing so, appellees would have the court seriously misapply standing doctrine with this argument.

The question, for purposes of standing analysis, is not the ultimate determination of the United States trustee's rights; the question is whether the United States trustee raises matters arguably in the zone of the United States trustee's interest. Association of Data Processing Serv. Org. v. Camp, 397 U.S. 150, 153 (1970). [FN3] Hence the United States trustee, without any standing controversy, was allowed to seek appellate review of his asserted duty to conduct an investigation (Kontaratos) or the refusal of a bankruptcy judge to appoint a particular trustee (Lathrop Mobile Investors). The United States trustee had a right to appeal regardless of whether the merits of his appeal were abundantly clear, or highly argumentative.

The logical extension of appellees' standing argument is that, in every case where the United States trustee has (in retrospect) misconstrued his rights, he lacked standing to appeal. Or, stated differently, the appellees would have this Court hold that the United States trustee has standing to appeal on a question of his legal rights, but only when the bankruptcy court erred on the merits of the underlying issue. This cannot be a correct expression of standing doctrine.

4. Appellees' argument that policies of sound judicial administration support the district court's standing decision (appellees' merits brief, at 23-24) is ill-founded. Appellees can point to no unnecessary delay of the proceedings in this case. Their abstract arguments for the maintenance of an appellate standing rule for bankruptcy cases is no different from appellant's (appellant's initial brief, at 9-10).

But appellees' perspective is too simple. The courts allow appeals in bankruptcy cases from decisions that might otherwise be classified as interlocutory outside of the bankruptcy context because an error could prejudice and unravel many months of work. A bankruptcy standing decision that erroneously eliminates a district court from considering the merits of an appeal, as here, can compound the impact of the bankruptcy court's error.

The United States trustee's responsibilities in bankruptcy cases are all directed to promote the just and expeditious resolution of bankruptcy cases. Neither he, nor his attorneys, have any incentive for delay. Artificial standing rules are not needed to discipline his office. In this case, it is the erroneous standing dismissal, not the United States trustee's appeal, that is most likely to cause costly and unnecessary delay in these proceedings.

II. THE BANKRUPTCY COURT ERRED IN REFUSING TO APPOINT AN EXAMINER UNDER 11 U.S.C. 1104(b)(2).

[*5] 1. Appellees (merits brief at 31-34) propose a bizarre reading of 11 U.S.C. 1104(b)(2). They contend that the party seeking the appointment of an examiner must prove that the proposed investigation would be "appropriate" by providing evidence, in advance, of matters such as fraud, dishonesty, incompetence, etc. Unless we are to conclude that the draftsmen of section 1104 were extraordinarily inept, appellees' explanation of the plain language of the statute cannot be adopted. Any fair reading of this statute demonstrates that it was meticulously constructed. Congress may often provide us with frustratingly ambiguous, or hopelessly complex, statutory provisions. Section 1104 of the Bankruptcy Code suffers from no drafting infirmities. Congress knows the difference between "shall" and "may," and Congress meant what it said with such care.

The provision directs the appointment of trustees or examiners when certain conditions are met. Section 1104(a), respecting the possible appointment of a trustee to displace a debtor-in-possession, expressly sets forth matters that require findings of "cause, including fraud, dishonesty, incompetence, or gross mismanagement,  or [that] such appointment is in the interests of creditors, any equity security holders, and other interests of the estate ." Section 1104(b)(1) too, requires similar, highly discretionary findings findings that must precede the appointment of an examiner; in those cases where the unsecured public debts are less than $5 million, the mandatory appointment is triggered by "the interests of creditors, any equity security holders, and other interests of the estate[.]"

But, section 1104(b)(2) sets forth only an objective, jurisdictional requirement to trigger the mandatory appointment of an examiner: "the debtor's fixed, liquidated, unsecured debts, other than debts for goods, services, or taxes, or owing to an insider, exceed $5,000,000." [FN4] Because of the broader social and economic impact of these larger corporate reorganization cases, Congress decided that when either the United States trustee, or a party in interest, could insist upon the appointment of an examiner. No showing, beyond meeting the statutory debt amount, is necessary. [FN5]

If section 1104(b)(2) is construed to require an evidentiary showing of "cause," or that the appointment of an independent examiner is in the "best interests" of one of the parties, then section 1104(b)(2) becomes totally redundant to section 1104(b)(1). An entire, carefully crafted paragraph of the statute becomes meaningless surplusage, [FN6] and the Congressional deliberations that led to the compromise dividing paragraphs (1) and (2) [FN7] were a sort of senseless theater.

2. The bankruptcy court below confused the decision to utilize an independent examiner as an aid to the proceedings with the control over the scope and direction of his or her examination. This Court should reject appellees' proposal to perpetuate this confusion. (Appellees' merits br., at 32).

[*6] Appellant certainly agrees that the bankruptcy judge maintains the authority to direct an investigation of a type and scope that is "appropriate." But this in no way alters the obligation of the bankruptcy court to commence an independent investigation with an appointment of an examiner. Section 1104(b)(2) does not permit the refusal to appoint an examiner on the essentially discretionary grounds relied upon by the bankruptcy court in this case. Here, everyone agrees that some investigation of the leveraged buy-out is appropriate, and the dispute is about who (an examiner or the committees' accountants) should perform it. The statute answers the question when the United States trustee requests an examiner.

3.a. Appellees' discussion of the legislative history of section 1104(b)(2) (appellees' merits brief, at 29-31) is erroneous. The quotation appellees select (id. 29-30) from House Report No. 595 [FN8] admittedly would appear to describe a permissive, rather than a mandatory, legislative provision. However, the House Report was not describing 11 U.S.C. 1104(b)(2). Instead, in this passage, the House Report was describing language from its Bill, H.R. 8200, that was never enacted. Section 1104(b) of H.R. 8200 would have provided (emphasis added):

> If the court does not order the appointment of a trustee under this section, that at any time before the confirmation of a plan, on request of a party in interest of the United States trustee, and after notice and a hearing, the court may order the appointment of an examiner to conduct such an investigation of the debtor as is appropriate, including an investigation of any allegations of fraud, dishonesty, incompetence, or gross mismanagement of the debtor of or by current or former management of the debtor, if --
> (1) the protection afforded by an examiner is needed; and
> (2) the costs and expenses of an examiner would not be disproportionately higher than the value of the protection afforded. [FN9]

b. Proposed section 1104 of the Senate Bill was at the opposite extreme from the House Bill. As noted above, the House Bill, H.R. 8200, supra, left the matter of an independent examiner within the bankruptcy court's discretion, subject to that judge's cost/benefit analysis. Section 1104 of the Senate Bill, S.2266, [FN10] would have made the appointment of a trustee to run the affairs of the firm pending reorganization mandatory in every "case of a public company." [FN11] The compromise, so carefully wrought by Congress, allowed "public companies" to remain in the hands of the debtor-in- possession in the absence of misconduct; it permitted any party in interest or the United States trustee to obtain an independent examiner if the debtor- in-possession remained in charge; and it allowed the bankruptcy court to exercise control over the "appropriate" scope of the independent investigator's conduct.

Hence, as we explained in our initial brief (at 27-30), this is not a case where Congress stumbled accidentally into mandatory language, the application of which produces absurd results. In this instance, Congress considered various formulations and carefully crafted the shared decision- making provisions with respect to the appointment of an examiner set forth in 11 U.S.C. 1104(b). The language is precise and absolutely deliberate. Because the plain language is unambiguous, there should be no occasion to resort to the legislative history. E.g., Burlington Northern R. Co. v. Oklahoma Tax Com'n, 107 S.Ct. 1855, 1859-60 (1987). In any event, the legislative history confirms that this Court may order the appointment of an examiner under 11 U.S.C. 1104(b)(2) with the full confidence that this is exactly what Congress wanted.

[*7] 4.a. Appellees' rhetorical flourish, that their interpretation is supported by "overwhelming authority" (appellees' merits brief, at 26), is somewhat overstated. Not a single court of appeals, so far as counsel of either side of this appeal can determine, has addressed the statutory construction issue at bar. As appellant indicated in his initial brief (at 26 n.12), the reported lower court decisions are roughly divided on the matter. Several bankruptcy court decisions adopt the straightforward view that the statute means what it says. In re Lenihan, 4 B.R. 209 (Bankr. D. R.I. 1980); In re 1243 20th St., Inc., 6 B.R. 683, 685 n.3 (Bankr. D.C. 1980); In re the Bible Speaks, 74 B.R. 511, 514 (Bankr. D. Mass. 1987); cf. In re San Juan Hotel Corp., 71 B.R. 413, 418 n.3 (Bankr. D. P.R. 1987), affirmed in part and reversed in part, 847 F.2d 931 (1st Cir. 1988). Contra, in addition to the bankruptcy court below, see, In re Shelter Resources Corp., 35 B.R. 304, 305 (N.D. Ohio 1983) and In re GHR Companies, Inc., 43 Bankr. 165 (D. Mass. 1984), aff'd after transfer of venue on other grounds sub nom. Matter of GHR Energy Group, 792 F.2d 476 (5th Cir. 1986). None of these judicial pronouncements on the duty to appoint an examiner under section 1104(b)(2) is controlling here, and, appellant submits, none of these decisions provide the Court with useful guidance, let alone overwhelming authority.

b. The general rule is that "shall" means "shall," not "might," or "may." See, e.g., Escoe v. Zerbst, 295 U.S. 490, 493 (1935) (Cardozo, J.). "The form of the verb used  is the single most important textual consideration ." Sutherland, Statutory Construction, §57.03.

Appellees point to several bankruptcy court decisions, cited by the bankruptcy court below, where the word "shall," appearing elsewhere in the Bankruptcy Code, was not perceived as a mandatory instruction. (Appellees' merits brief, at 30 n.8). In re General Oil Distributors, Inc., 42 B.R. 402, 409 (Bankr. E.D.N.Y. 1984), simply holds that any finding of incompetence or dishonesty must consider whether the misconduct has risen to such a level as to constitute cause for the appointment of a trustee under section 1104(a)(1), i.e., where there is "cause." The court recognized that "the word 'shall'  circumscribes the court's discretion," once the criteria of the particular paragraph section 1104(a)(1) are met. In contrast, section 1104(b)(2) has no "cause" or "interests" criteria, and its physical, objective conditions have been met by the parties' stipulation.

The two remaining cases, relating to the requirements for a debtor's personal appearance in 11 U.S.C. 343 and 542(d), illustrate the rarity and extreme judicial reluctance to ignore the mandatory statutory command. In re Garber, 4 Bankr. 684, 685 (Bankr. C.D. Cal. 1980) (citing, First National Bank of Helena v. Neill, 13 Mont. 377, 34 P.180 (S.Ct. Mont., 1893), poses that the command may be waived, "when no advantage is lost, when no right is destroyed, when no benefit is sacrificed, either to the public or to the individual ." The court in In re Stewart, 14 B.R. 959, 960-61 (Bankr. N.D. Ohio 1981), required a showing of "extreme hardship" or "defeat of the statute's purpose" to overcome the literal language of the statute. If those cases were correctly decided, then they would fall within a narrow category of very rare cases. The bankruptcy court below lost sight of the extremely strong showing required and overruled the command of the statute without justification.

III. THIS APPEAL IS NOT MOOT AND THE COURT SHOULD EXERCISE ITS DISCRETION TO REACH THE MERITS OF THE UNDERLYING DISPUTE.

[*8] On June 23, 1989, the bankruptcy court allowed the Trade Creditor's committee to retain the accounting firm of Touche Ross & Co. for the limited purpose of assisting the Trade Creditors' Committee to conduct an investigation of the LBO. Appellees contend that this order has mooted the United States trustee's appeal (appellees' merits brief, at 38-39). Appellee's analysis is based upon the assumption that, because the Touche Ross accountants will likely cover the same territory as the independent examiner sought by the United States trustee, the retention of Touche Ross will serve the "same purpose" as the appointment of the examiner. This assumption is incorrect.

1. The Committee's accountants and the examiner proposed by the United States trustee do not perform the same functions. An examiner appointed pursuant to section 1104 must, unless affirmatively ordered by the bankruptcy court to the contrary, "investigate the acts  of the debtor  and the desirability of the continuation of such business, and any other matter relevant to the formulation of a plan" (11 U.S.C. 1106(a)(3), incorporated by reference in 1106(b)). The examiner must also, >  as soon as practicable  file a statement of any investigation conducted under paragraph (3) of this subsection, including any fact ascertained pertaining to fraud, dishonesty, incompetence, misconduct, mismanagement, or irregularity in the management of the affairs of the debtor, or to a cause of action available to the estate ***.

11 U.S.C. 1106(a)(4).

The accounting firms retained by the committees pursuant to 11 U.S.C. 1103(c)(2) are different. They aid the voluntary investigation of the committee that retains them. The independent examiner's role is thus legally distinct from that of the committee's accountants in crucial respects: The accounting firm retained pursuant to section 1103(c)(2) will serve, and report to, the committee. The examiner, appointed under 1104(b)(2) and 1104(c), serves the Court. [FN12] Because the accountants serve the committee, the information they obtain is shared with the committee's lawyers, but not necessarily with anyone else. The examiner files a report with the bankruptcy court setting forth the results of any investigation [FN13]; there is no parallel obligation on the part of the committee.

2. There is, naturally, a potential overlap in the factual territory explored by the committee's accountants and the examiner. Congress was completely aware that, to some extent, as very frequently happens in complex litigation of all sorts, each of the parties might wish to investigate, with the assistance of their own experts, the same subject matter as another party. Here, once again, the legislative history proves that the statute was carefully considered. In the Senate Bill, S.2266, section 1103(c)(2) would have allowed a committee to conduct an investigation only "if no trustee or examiner is appointed ." In enacting the Bankruptcy Reform Act, Congress deleted those words from the Senate Bill. Section 1103(c)(2) of the Bankruptcy Code thus permits a committee to conduct an investigation that may overlap the subject matter of a trustee or an independent examiner appointed pursuant to section 1104. However, the bankruptcy judge may refuse a committee's proposed employment of "attorneys, accountants, or other agents, to represent or perform services for such committee." 11 U.S.C. 1103(a). Through this device, rather than through the elimination of the independent examiner, the bankruptcy court can control undue duplication. [FN14]

[*9] 3. The scheme contemplated by Congress is that, in a reorganization proceeding brought under Chapter 11 by a large public company, where no case trustee has been appointed, and no party in interest has requested an examiner, a responsible United States trustee will evaluate whether an independent examiner should nevertheless conduct an investigation. If the United States trustee perceives that an independent examiner is needed, "the court shall order the appointment of an examiner to conduct such an investigation of the debtor as is appropriate ." No showing of cause, or cost effectiveness is required: "In order to insure that adequate investigation of the debtor is conducted to determine fraud or wrongdoing on the part of present management, an examiner is required to be appointed in all cases in which the debtors' fixed, liquidated, and unsecured debt, other than debts for goods, services, or taxes, or owing to an insider, exceed $5 million." [FN15]

Thus, when an independent examiner is appointed pursuant to section 1104(b)(2), the bankruptcy court should then evaluate the committees' requests for accountants, lawyers, and other agents, for the conduct of their investigation, in light of the anticipated activities of the independent examiner whose appointment is mandatory.

But, in this case, the Congressional plan has been turned upside down. The United States trustee's early application for an examiner, to avoid duplication and waste, was deemed "premature." He has been directed to justify the appointment of an examiner in terms of the activities of the committees' investigations, rather than vice-versa. Appellant asks this Court to reset the proceedings to conform with the Congressional plan.

The failure of the bankruptcy court to follow the statutory road map has compromised the efficiency of the process, and threatens to compromise its integrity. Nevertheless, an examiner, appointed at this juncture, may be able to utilize the data collected by the parties' accountants and attorneys, as well as any reports that can be shared. The appellant strongly desires the examiner to minimize duplication to the greatest extent possible. [FN16] But the report by the independent examiner is crucial if the United States trustee is to perform his proper role under the Bankruptcy Reform Act. [FN17] Thus, this appeal will certainly not be moot at any time prior to the final confirmation of a reorganization plan. Since a proposed plan has not yet been submitted, and this Court has granted the United States trustees' motion to expedite the proceedings, there is ample time for meaningful participation by an examiner, without disruption or delay. [FN18]

Every day that this case proceeds without the appointment of an independent examiner, and the committees proceed without regard to the conduct of an examiner's investigation, the potential for wasteful duplication increases. The dispute regarding the United States trustee's request for the appointment of an examiner ought to be resolved as soon as possible. Appellant submits that this court should exercise its appellate discretion to correct the error of the bankruptcy court, as well as that of the district court.

CONCLUSION

[*1]0 For the foregoing reasons, the judgment of the district court dismissing the appeal of the United States Trustee should be vacated. The case should be remanded to the district court with instructions to reinstate the United States Trustee's appeal. This Court should also hold that the appointment of an examiner pursuant to 11 U.S.C. 1104(b)(2) should have been ordered by the bankruptcy court, and the district court should proceed consistent with that holding.

FOOTNOTES

FN1. Appellees suggest that Congress did not prohibit the United States trustee from taking appeals in order to preserve his appellate rights for the rare occasions when the United States trustee serves as a case trustee. (Appellees' merits brief, at 17-18). This would be a very strange and unlikely explanation of Congress's silence, and it does bear scrutiny.
If the United States trustee is serving as a case trustee, and determines that a decision should be appealed, it necessarily follows that the pecuniary interest of the estate would be at stake. In that instance, the United States trustee would not be appealing as a United States trustee, but only in his capacity as the trustee and on behalf of the estate he represents. 11 U.S.C. 323. A United States trustee is not acting as a governmental entity when he serves as a case trustee. 11 U.S.C. 101(26). Thus, a statute precluding appeals by the United States trustee, written in terms parallel to those 11 U.S.C. 1109(a) or 11 U.S.C. 1164, would not bar his capacity to appeal as a case trustee on behalf of an estate.

FN2. For example, the United States trustee is directed to take such action as he deems appropriate "to ensure that all reports, schedules, and fees  are properly and timely filed[.]" 28 U.S.C. 586(a)(3)(D). The United States trustee must also notify "the appropriate United States attorney of matters  which may constitute a crime" and assist "in carrying out prosecutions  [.]" 28 U.S.C. 586(a)(3)(F). Perhaps most pertinent here, the United State trustee is responsible for "monitoring plans and disclosure statements in cases file under chapter 11 of title 11 and filing with the court, in connection with hearings under section 1125 and 1128 of such title, comments with respect to such plans and disclosure statements[.]" 28 U.S.C. 586(a)(3)(B).

FN3. See, also, Chrysler Corp. v. Fedders Corp., 643 F.2d 1229, 1235 (6th Cir. 1981) (admonishing against making a determination on the merits under the guise of assessing claimant's standing); Stone v. William Beaumont Hospital, 782 F.2d 609, 616 (6th Cir. 1986) (Holschuh, D.J., concurring in the judgment).

FN4. Of course, a controversy could, in many cases, arise with respect to whether the $5 million statutory cutoff level had been met, and a hearing might be necessary to permit findings of fact on the matter. For such disputes, section 1104(b) provides for notice, hearing, and court approval. In this case, the facts underlying the jurisdictional level were stipulated by the parties. (Stipulation of October 7, 1988).

FN5. A very close parallel to this statutory structure is found in Fed. R. Civ. Pro. 11, which states in part (emphasis added): "If a pleading, motion, or other paper is signed in violation of this rule, the court, upon motion or upon its own initiative, shall impose  an appropriate sanction ." The district court judges enjoy very wide discretion in selecting what sanction might be appropriate, but, "[t]he mandatory word "shall" is intended to remove the exercise of discretion by the court in imposing Rule 11 sanctions once it has found a violation." Davis v. Crush, 862 F.2d 84, 88 (6th Cir. 1988).

FN6. Such a construction would, of course, be extremely disfavored. See, e.g., Reiter v. Sonotone Corp., 442 U.S. 330, 339 (1979); Colautti v. Franklin, 439 U.S. 379, 392 (1979).

FN10. Resnick and Wypyski, supra, document 53, also reproduced in pertinent part in the Addendum to this brief.

FN11. Section 1101(3) of the Senate Bill would have defined a "public company" as "a debtor who  had outstanding liabilities of $5,000,000 or more, exclusive of liabilities for goods, services, or taxes and not less than 1,000 security holders.

FN12. Compare, Matter of Hamiel & Sons, Inc., 20 B.R. 830, 832 (Bankr. S.D. Ohio 1982) (examiner is a "court fiduciary and is amenable to no other purpose or interested party") with In re Toledo Equipment Co., 35 B.R. 315, 318 (Bankr. N.D. Ohio 1983) (the purpose of a committee is to "protect [] the rights of its constituents and those creditors similarly situated"); Matter of Enduro Stainless, Inc., 59 B.R. 603, 605 (Bankr. N.D. Ohio 1986) (member's of creditors' committee act as fiduciaries); and Matter of Proof of the Pudding, Inc., 3 B.R. 645, 647 (Bankr. S.D. N.Y. 1980) (professionals hired by the creditors' committee represent the committee's interest), 3 B.R. 645, 647 (Bankr. S.D. N.Y. 1980) (professionals hired by the creditors' committee represent the committee's interests).

FN13. As noted above, the examiner's report must "includ[e] any fact ascertained pertaining to fraud, dishonesty, incompetence, misconduct, mismanagement, or irregularity[.]" The examiner's discoveries cannot, for example, become bargaining chips to be used in confidential negotiations among financially interested parties.

FN14. As one scholar explained:

> The appointment of a trustee or examiner should not supercede the investigation function of a committee inasmuch as the purposes of the investigations may differ. The committee's primary concern is determining, from the viewpoint of the class it represents, the advisability of permitting the debtor to continue operating its business and gathering information with which to negotiate a plan on behalf of its class. To the extent that the trustee or examiner may be developing similar information, it may be inappropriate to duplicate these efforts. Therefore, the various committees and the trustee or examiner should coordinate their efforts in the exercise of the investigation function as much as possible.

FN16. When Touche Ross was authorized to aid in the investigation of the leveraged buy-out on behalf of the Trade Creditor's Committee, the accounting firm was admonished to seek assistance from the previously-authorized accounting firms. Order of June 26, 1989, authorizing retention of Touche Ross, etc., at 2 ¶2. The bankruptcy court could impose the same requirement upon the examiner as well within the bankruptcy court's power to insure that the examiner's investigation is appropriate.

FN17. Comments by the United States trustee on any proposed disclosure statement or reorganization plan are proper and expressly authorized under 11 U.S.C. 307, which accords the United States Trustee authority to "raise and appear and be heard on any issue in any case or proceeding ." Indeed, "whenever the United States trustee considers it to be appropriate," the United States trustee is directed to "monitor[] plans and disclosure statements filed under chapter 11  and fil[e]  comments with respect to such plans and disclosure statements[.]" 28 U.S.C. 586(a)(3)(B).

Appellees' assertion (merits brief, at 34 n.9), that an examiner is being sought for the "improper purpose" of providing advice to the United States trustee, is devoid of merit. Since an examiner is disinterested, it is difficult to fathom how he could act for only one party. See In re Baldwin United Corp., 46 B.R. 314, 316 (Bankr. S.D. Ohio 1985).

FN18. As the appellant indicated in his motion to expedite proceedings (at 3- 4), he has refrained from seeking a stay of bankruptcy court proceedings.

BRIEF FOR CONRAD J. MORGENSTERN, UNITED STATES TRUSTEE, Appellant

STATEMENT OF THE ISSUES PRESENTED FOR REVIEW

1. Whether the district court erred in holding that the United States Trustee lacked standing to appeal from an adverse bankruptcy court ruling on the United States Trustee's motion for the appointment of an examiner pursuant to 11 U.S.C. 1104(b)(2).

2. Whether the bankruptcy court erred in denying the United States Trustee's motion to appoint an examiner pursuant to 11 U.S.C. 1104(b)(2).

STATEMENT OF THE CASE

1. Nature Of The Case And Dispositions By The Courts Below.

Debtors are seeking reorganization relief under Chapter 11 of the Bankruptcy Code. The United States Trustee moved for the appointment of an examiner, pursuant to 11 U.S.C. 1104(b)(2), to investigate the facts surrounding the leveraged buy-out (sometimes referred to as the "LBO") transactions that preceded the bankruptcy petitions, but his motion was denied. The United States Trustee was permitted by the district court to take an interlocutory appeal to the district court pursuant to 28 U.S.C. 158(a) and (d). Thereafter, however, the district court dismissed the United States Trustee's appeal on the ground that the US Trustee lacked standing.

2. The Revco Reorganization Petitions And The United States Trustee's Request For The Appointment Of An Examiner.

Revco D.S., Inc. ("Revco") is a large discount drug store chain. In late 1986, a holding company acquired, through a subsidiary, all of the Revco common stock by means of a leveraged buy-out ("LBO"). In July, 1988, the holding company, Revco, and its operating subsidiaries filed for reorganization under Chapter 11 of the Bankruptcy Code. (Bankruptcy Court opinion 5-6). [FN1] The U.S. Trustee moved for the appointment of an examiner pursuant to 11 U.S.C. 1104(b)(2) to investigate the facts and circumstances surrounding the pre-petition LBO. On October 24, 1988, the bankruptcy court (Hon. H.F. White) held that, contrary to the U.S. Trustee's position, the term "shall" in section 1104(b)(2) does not impose a mandatory duty to appoint the examiner. (Bankruptcy court opinion 11-15). The bankruptcy judge denied the motion in the belief that the appointment "would burden the Debtors with administrative expenses and possibly hinder its merchandise activity at this crucial time." (Id. 16). The bankruptcy court therefore denied the U.S. Trustee's motion, without prejudice to the possible refiling of a similar motion by a party in interest at a later date.

3. The US Trustee's Appeal And The District Court's Dismissal.

The U.S. Trustee appealed to the district court. On December 29, 1988, district court (Hon. Sam H. Bell) ruled that, in its discretion, the U.S. Trustee should be permitted to pursue an interlocutory appeal on this matter. (R 18: Order of December 28, 1988). Thereafter, the Noteholders' Committee moved to dismiss the U.S. Trustee's appeal on the ground that the U.S. Trustee lacked standing to pursue the matter (R 24) and, by order entered April 25, 1989, the district court granted this motion (R 33). Prior to amendment in 1978, the Bankruptcy Code provided for the appeal of an order of the bankruptcy court by "a person aggrieved." As amended, the "person aggrieved" language was deleted, but, the district court observed, other courts have nevertheless continued applying this requirement. (R 33: slip op. 2-3). Under these "person aggrieved" decisions, the district court held, the courts require an appellant to have a direct, pecuniary interest in the matter. (Id. 3). The district court indicated the U.S. Trustee, as his role was contemplated by Congress, should be a disinterested party, one who will not be "aggrieved" in the pecuniary sense. (Id. 5). Although, virtually by definition, the United States Trustee will never have a pecuniary interest in an 1104(b) motion, the district court disclaimed any holding that the U.S. Trustee could never appeal. "There may, indeed, be circumstances or situations posed which would [give] standing to the Trustee for that purpose" (R 33; slip op. 5):

> [*4] Contrary to his protest that to foreclose his appeal of an adverse ruling by the bankruptcy court is to render him a watchdog without teeth, the simple fact is that his function is to be a neutral administrator and not an advocate. This appeal in fact illustrates precisely why the standing doctrine is required. Here, all of the interested parties opposed the action proposed by the U.S. Trustee and ultimately denied by the bankruptcy court. To allow the U.S. Trustee to appeal the ruling would permit a party with no pecuniary interest to delay the resolution of the case and involve the interested parties in a needless appeal. This is especially true in this case where all interests are represented by committees.

INTRODUCTION AND SUMMARY OF ARGUMENT

I.

The question of whether the United States Trustee has standing to appeal to the district court from a bankruptcy court's adverse ruling is a matter of very great importance to the administration of bankruptcy proceedings. Although the district court speculated that there "may" be some circumstances where the United States Trustee will be permitted to appeal, none readily come to mind. Cutting off the right to appeal will undermine the autonomy of the United States Trustee as contemplated by Congress.

[*5] Under the Bankruptcy Act of 1898, the district courts were required to sift out appeals of those who were not "persons aggrieved" by the order of the bankruptcy court. 11 U.S.C. 67(c) (1976) (repealed). Although Congress deleted the "persons aggrieved" test in the 1978 Act, the courts have continued to apply it. Appellant United States Trustee agrees that an appellate standing rule should be retained in bankruptcy cases. The error of the district court was not so much in accepting the premise of the "persons aggrieved" standard. Rather, the district court erred in the specific application of that requirement to the United States Trustee's appeal in this case.

A "person aggrieved" may ordinarily refer to a person whose financial stake has been irrevocably reduced. But injury to a pecuniary interest did not describe all "persons aggrieved" recognized by the courts under the 1898 Bankruptcy Code. A person may be "aggrieved" by an order that diminishes property, increases, or detrimentally affects a person's rights, Matter of Fondiller, 707 F.2d 441, 443 (9th Cir. 1983), or by impairment of "an interest which the Bankruptcy Act seeks to protect or regulate," In re Harwald Co., 497 F.2d 443, 444 (7th Cir. 1974). The district court erred in imposing an improbable pecuniary interest test to the appeal of the United States Trustee.

To the extent that the district court's dismissal was based upon a holding that the United States Trustee's non-pecuniary interests were not injured by the order of the bankruptcy court, the holding would also be incorrect. The district court defined the United States Trustee's interest as his right to bring the motion for the appointment of the examiner in the bankruptcy court. But the United States Trustee's interest, for purposes of standing analysis in this case, is the appointment itself. The district court's inverted analysis confuses the issue of statutory construction raised by the United States Trustee's appeal with the resolution of that issue. This type of standing analysis is erroneous. Association of Data Processing Serv. Org. v. Camp, 397 U.S. 150, 153 (1970).

Any doubt on this issue should have been resolved in favor of the United States Trustee in view of 11 U.S.C. 307, which accords the United States Trustee authority to "raise and appear and be heard on any issue in any case or proceeding ." By this provision, Congress intended that the United States Trustee should be "given standing to raise, appear, and be heard on any issue in any case. In this manner, the U.S. Trustee is given the same right to be heard as a party in interest ." H.R. Rep. No. 764, 99th Cong., 2d Sess. 27, reprinted in 1986 U. S. Code Cong. & Admin. News 5227, 5240 (emphasis added).

In addition, other governmental entities are given statutory authority to proceed in bankruptcy cases. See 11 U.S.C. 1109(a) (SEC); 11 U.S.C. 1164 (ICC, DOT, "and any State or local commission having regulatory jurisdiction over the debtor). But those agencies "may not appeal from any judgment, order, or decree entered in the case." The United States Trustee's power to appear and be heard on any matter is subject to no similar restriction. The district court's decision violates the rule of pari materia construction, which is especially strong with respect to the "detailed and calculated scheme" of the Bankruptcy Code. Lynch v. Johns-Manville Corp., 710 F.2d 1194, 1198 (6th Cir. 1983).

II.

[*6] Should this Court agree that the district court erred in dismissing the United States Trustee's appeal, we ask this Court to also adjudicate the underlying dispute respecting the interpretation of 11 U.S.C. 1104(b). The issue is a straightfoward legal question and there is good cause to expedite the resolution of this dispute. E.g., Pinney Dock & Transp. v. Penn Cent. Corp., 838 F.2d 1445, 1461 (6th Cir.), cert. denied, 109 S.Ct. 196 (1988).

The plain language of section 1104(b)(2) says that, if the jurisdictional requirements are met, [FN2] the bankruptcy court "shall order the appointment of an examiner" "on request of  the United States trustee ." Only with the very strongest showing of an absurd result, utterly at odds with legislative intent, should the courts refuse to give force and effect to such unambiguously mandatory language. A search through the legislative history proves that, in fact, Congress meant exactly what it said. The Statute juxtaposes a permissive appointment, when the moving party shows cause (section 1104(b)(1)), against a mandatory provision for appointment in relatively large public bankruptcies (section 1104(b)(2)). The line was drawn as a result of extensive negotiation and legislative compromise: "In order to insure that adequate investigation of the debtor is conducted to determine fraud or wrongdoing on the part of present management, an examiner is required to be appointed in all cases in which the debtors' fixed, liquidated, and unsecured debt, other than debts for goods, services, or taxes, or owing to an insider, exceed $5 million." 124 Cong. Rec. 32403 (1978) (statement of Rep. Edwards). As the leading commentator summarized the matter:

> [T]he court must appoint an examiner under Sec. 1104(b)(2). In such case, the party requesting the appointment is not required to prove that the interests of creditors or equity security holders are well served by such appointment.

5 Collier on Bankruptcy, § 1104.03[4][a] (15th ed. 1988) (emphasis added) (footnotes omitted).

Accordingly, the decision of the bankruptcy court, as well as the decision of the district court, should be reversed, and the investigation by the independent examiner should commence with celerity.

ARGUMENT

I. THE UNITED STATES TRUSTEE HAS STANDING TO APPEAL FROM THE ORDER DENYING HIS MOTION FOR THE APPOINTMENT OF AN EXAMINER.

A. THE DISTRICT COURT ERRED IN APPLYING A PECUNIARY INTEREST TEST TO THE APPEAL OF THE UNITED STATES TRUSTEE.

1. Appellant does not, in this appeal, seek to eliminate or even curtail an appropriate standing rule for appeals from the bankruptcy courts to the district courts. Bankruptcy cases, especially the larger corporate bankruptcy cases, frequently include a large number of parties, and present many junctures where the financial interests of a debtor or creditor may become permanently impaired. To prevent the proceedings from becoming bogged down in a mire of frivolous interlocutory appeals, section 39(c) of the Bankruptcy Act of 1898 limited appeals to "persons aggrieved." 11 U.S.C. 67(c) (1976). [FN3] This "persons aggrieved" requirement was frequently referred to as the "appellate standing" rule in bankruptcy proceedings.

[*7] The 1978 Bankruptcy Reform Act [FN4] revisions repealed 11 U.S.C. 67(c). However, the courts have perceived that the bankruptcy appellate standing rule remains "necessary to insure that bankruptcy proceedings are not unreasonably delayed by protracted litigation that does not serve the interests of either the bankrupt's estate or its creditors." In re El San Juan Hotel, 809 F.2d 151, 154 (1st Cir. 1987). Accordingly, the courts have continued to require that bankruptcy appeals may be brought to the district court only by "persons aggrieved." E.g., In re San Juan Hotel, supra; In re Cosmopolitan Aviation Corp., 763 F.2d 507, 513-14 (2d Cir. 1985), cert. denied sub nom., Rothman v. New York State Dep't of Transp., 474 U.S. 1032 (1985); In re Fondiller, 707 F.2d 441, 442-43 (9th Cir. 1983).

The United States Trustee does not dispute the desirability of an appellate standing rule in bankruptcy cases. The bankruptcy "standing" doctrine is salutary; properly employed, it eliminates unnecessary appeals by debtors or other persons whose material interests would not be advanced even if the appeal were successful. The United States Trustee, whose role is to promote the efficiency and integrity of the bankruptcy process, would encourage the district courts to continue to weed out unnecessary bankruptcy appeals.

2. In this case, however, the district court misapprehended and misapplied the bankruptcy standing doctrine.

The district court's central holding was: "It is clear that the U.S. Trustee has no pecuniary interest in this case and is thus not a 'person aggrieved' to enable him to appeal." (R 33: slip op. 5). However, the appellate standing rule for bankruptcy cases never required a direct pecuniary interest for every party in every case.

Ordinarily, "persons aggrieved" are those parties "directly and adversely affected pecuniarily." In re San Juan Hotel, supra; Fondiller, supra; In re Cosmopolitan Aviation Corp., supra. The vast majority of parties in a bankruptcy proceeding -- the debtor and creditor interests -- are there for money. To determine whether such a party has standing to appeal, one would logically look to the "direct pecuniary interest" of such a party in the possible outcome of the appeal. For example, a bankrupt whose assets are substantially exceeded by his debts, so that debtor will received no net proceeds, has no standing to appeal from the attorneys fees awarded by the bankruptcy court. In re J.M. Wells Inc., 575 F.2d 329 (1st Cir. 1978). For parties whose interests are defined in terms of net financial recovery in the aftermath of the bankruptcy process the search for a direct pecuniary interest provides a valid test for determining whether an appellant has been "aggrieved."

However, the bankruptcy appellate standing requirement that appeals may be taken only by "persons aggrieved" has never meant the application of a universal direct-pecuniary-interest test to every party in every case.

[*8] Prior to the Bankruptcy Reform Act of 1978, which repealed the "persons aggrieved" language of 11 U.S.C. 67(c), the generally-valid application of a direct-pecuniary-interest test to "persons aggrieved" was not utilized to foreclose the valid appeals of others whose non-pecuniary interests were substantially impaired. Because of its relevance in the vast majority of bankruptcy cases, the courts often set forth the direct- pecuniary-interest test as if it were an alternative expression for "persons aggrieved." Those decisions, however, do not purport to define "persons aggrieved" for every case.

The possibility that persons without a direct pecuniary interest might nevertheless be aggrieved is recognized in other judicial formulations which, if applied here, would readily establish the United states Trustee's standing to pursue his appeal to the district court below. For example, a person would be "aggrieved" by an order that "diminish[ed] her property, increase[d] her burdens, or detrimentally affect[ed] her rights." Matter of Fondiller, 707 F.2d at 443 (emphasis added). See, also, In Re El San Juan Hotel, 809 F.2d at 155; In re J.M. Wells Inc., 575 F.2d F.2d at 331. A "person aggrieved" under former section 39(c) was one who incurred "injury in fact" to "an interest which the Bankruptcy Act seeks to protect or regulate." In re Harwald Co., 497 F.2d 443, 444 (7th Cir. 1974) (emphasis added). In sum, "persons aggrieved" was "broadly construed, but required generally that the appellant [had] a direct and substantial interest in the decision from which he appealed." [FN5] As the instant case illustrates so well, an interest can be direct and substantial without being pecuniary. [FN6]

The Supreme Court has expressly upheld the government's standing to appeal on the basis of a non-pecuniary interest in a bankruptcy proceeding in Securities and Exchange Comm'n v. United States Realty & Improvement Co., 310 U.S. 434, 459-60 (1940) (emphasis added):

> This interest of the [SEC] does not differ from that of a liquidator under a state statutory proceeding who may, in a proper case, intervene in an equity receivership in a federal court to ask the court to relinquish its jurisdiction in favor of the state proceeding.  Neither the liquidator not the state has any personal, financial or pecuniary interest in the property in the custody of the federal court. Their interest, like that of the Commission, is a public one, to maintain the state authority and to secure a liquidation in conformity to state property.  The Commission was  a party aggrieved by the court's order refusing to dismiss and was entitled to appeal .[[FN7]]

3. In any event, even if there had ever been an inflexible pecuniary interest rule, to be applied without exception to government administrative agencies, such a rule could no longer be valid. Congress deleted the "persons aggrieved" requirement in 1978, an action that might best be viewed as a fully deliberate decision to eliminate the bankruptcy appellate standing doctrine. Levin, Bankruptcy Appeals, 58 N.C.L. Rev. at 976-77 (1980). [FN8] At a minimum, the use of any continued rule of appellate standing in bankruptcy cases would have to accommodate the new non-pecuniary interests of the United States Trustee whose position was created simultaneously with the repeal of 11 U.S.C. 67(c) in the Bankruptcy Act of 1978.

[*9] B. THE INTEREST OF THE UNITED STATES TRUSTEE IN THE APPOINTMENT OF AN EXAMINER IS CONFERRED BY 11 U.S.C. 1104(b).

As noted above, the district court dismissed the United States Trustee's appeal solely because he had no pecuniary interest in the proceeding. The district court's decision continues (R 33: slip op. 5):

>  The bankruptcy order from which he appeals neither diminishes his property nor impairs his rights. The U.S. Trustee argues that his burden is significantly increased due to the refusal to appoint an examiner. This facet of the test, however, does not apply to the scope of his workload as an administrator. He has been given the opportunity to appear, raise and be heard in the bankruptcy court in relation to the appointment of an examiner as authorized by statute. 11 U.S.C. §1104(b).

To the extent that the district court intended to dismiss the appeal on the alternative ground that the bankruptcy court's decision had no substantial impact upon the United States Trustee's rights under the statute, this analysis is also erroneous. The appraisal completely misunderstands the United States Trustee's interest in this matter. The United States Trustee's interest is in the appointment of the examiner under 11 U.S.C. 1104(b); his rights are not limited to filing a motion and being heard.

The district court's reasoning is thus not a proper standing analysis. The district court's statement [FN9] erroneously conflates the assertion of an interest, which creates an issue, with the resolution of the issue on the merits. As the Supreme Court explained in Association of Data Processing Serv. Org. v. Camp, 397 U.S. 150, 153 (1970) (emphasis added):

> The "legal interest" test goes to the merits. The question of standing is different. It concerns . . . the question whether the interest sought to be protected by the complainant is arguably within the zone of interests to be protected or regulated by the statute ***.

See, also, In re Harwald Company, 497 F.2d at 444 (7th Cir. 1974).

The United States Trustee suffered "injury-in-fact"; his claimed right to the examiner appointment has been destroyed by the decision of the bankruptcy court. The United States Trustee is a statutory party expressly authorized to bring on the motion for the appointment of an examiner under 11 U.S.C. 1104(b). Under any reasonable rule of bankruptcy appellate standing, the United States Trustee's assertion of a statutory requirement of the examiner's appointment falls well within the zone of interest protected by the Bankruptcy Code.

C. THE UNITED STATES TRUSTEE'S STANDING TO PURSUE APPEALS MAY ALSO BE INFERRED FROM SECTION 307 OF THE BANKRUPTCY CODE.

With the nationwide expansion of the United States Trustee program in 1986, Congress made many important changes to the Bankruptcy Code to reflect the expanded United States Trustee's role, including section 307, which states:

> The United States trustee may raise and appear and be heard on any issue in any case or proceeding under this title but may not file a plan pursuant to section 1121(c) of this title.

[*1]0 The statute confers broad authority for the United States Trustee to act in bankruptcy matters in any court. The legislative history of section 307 confirms that Congress intended the United States Trustee to have the same procedural rights as a party in interest, notwithstanding his lack of pecuniary interest.

> Section 208 creates a new section 11 U.S.C. 332 [later codified as 307] setting forth the authority of the U.S. Trustee. The U.S. Trustee is given standing to raise, appear, and be heard on any issue in any case or proceeding under title 11, U.S. Code -- except that the U.S. Trustee may not file a plan in a chapter 11 case. In this manner, the U.S. Trustee is given the same right to be heard as a party in interest, but retains the discretion to decide when a matter of concern to the proper administration of the bankruptcy laws should be raised. By not designating the U.S. Trustee as a party in interest, the legislation ensures that there is no confusion over the U.S. Trustee's role in a case. A party in interest normally has a pecuniary interest in a case; the U.S. Trustee has no pecuniary stake in any case, and functions only as an impartial administrator.

H.R. Rep. No. 764, 99th Cong., 2d Sess. 27, reprinted in 1986 U. S. Code Cong. & Admin. News 5227, 5240 (emphasis added).

D. THE UNITED STATES TRUSTEE'S AUTHORITY TO APPEAL FROM THE DENIAL OF HIS SECTION 1104(b)(2) MOTION IS PROVED BY OTHER PROVISIONS OF THE BANKRUPTCY CODE EXPRESSLY PRECLUDING APPEALS.

This perspective becomes compelling when one reads section 307 in pari materia with other provisions of the Bankruptcy Code. Section 1109(a) of the Code confers the right to raise and be heard on any issue upon the Securities and Exchange Commission, "but the Securities and Exchange Commission may not appeal from any judgment, order, or decree entered in the case." Similarly, in section 1164 of the Code, the Interstate Commerce Commission, the Department of Transportation, and any State or local commission having jurisdiction over a chapter 11 railroad debtor may appear and be heard on any issue, but cannot appeal any judgment, order or decree. Congress' failure to impose a similar restriction on the United States Trustees in section 307 is extremely strong evidence of intentional differentiation.

> It is a fundamental rule of statutory construction that inclusion in one part of a congressional scheme of that which is excluded in another part reflects a congressional intent that the exclusion was not inadvertent. See: Equal Employment Opportunity Commission v. Kimberly Clark Corp., 511 F.2d 1352 (6th Cir.), cert. denied, 423 U.S. 994 (1975). In particular, this Court has acknowledged that Bankruptcy Act as a detailed and calculated scheme particularly appropriate to in pari materia construction. See: In re Bell, 700 F.2d 1053 (6th Cir. 1983) (constructing Chapter 7 and 13 in pari materia); In re Fulghum Construction Corporation, 706 F.2d 171 (6th Cir. 1983) (construing subsections of 11 U.S.C. § 547 in pari > materia). ***

[*1]1 Lynch v. Johns-Manville Corp., 710 F.2d 1194, 1197-98 (6th Cir. 1983). More generally, see, e.g., Russello v. United States, 464 U.S. 16, 21, 23 (1983); Kyle v. Director, Office of Workers' Compensation, 819 F.2d 139, 143 (6th Cir. 1987).

E. THE DENIAL OF STANDING TO TAKE APPEALS IS INCONSISTENT WITH THE ENFORCEMENT FUNCTIONS OF THE UNITED STATES TRUSTEE AS CONTEMPLATED BY CONGRESS.

The office of the United States Trustee is new to the bankruptcy system. [FN10] No similar office existed under the Bankruptcy Act of 1898. The program was created to address historical problems that were uniquely associated with the bankruptcy process.

Of particular importance here, Congress recognized that there is a public interest in the proper administration of bankruptcy cases; that, unlike other, more conventional litigation, the adversary process could not be relied upon; and, therefor, bankruptcy cases require special, close supervision:

> [T]here is a public interest in the proper administration of bankruptcy cases. Bankruptcy is an area where there exists a significant potential for fraud, for self-dealing, and for diversion of funds. In contrast to general civil litigation, where cases affect only two or a few parties at most, bankruptcy cases may affect hundreds of scattered and ill-represented creditors. In general civil litigation, a default by one party is relatively insignificant, and though judges do attempt to protect parties' rights, they need not be active participants in the case for the protection of the public interest in seeing disputes fairly resolved. In bankruptcy cases, active supervision is essential. Bankruptcy affects too many people to allow it to proceed untended by an impartial supervisor.

H.R. Rep. No. 95-595, 95th Cong., 1st Sess. 88 (1977), reprinted in 1978 U.S. Cong. Code & Admin. News 5963, 6050 (footnotes omitted).

This supervision was undertaken by the bankruptcy judges prior to the establishment of the United States Trustee program, but Congress found the administrative duties compromised the bankruptcy judge's ability to be impartial in hearing disputes. Furthermore, between the judge's role in appointing trustees and supervising cases, close working relationships developed between the judge with "his" trustee. The whole structure of the system created an institutional bias and the appearance that disputes were not being fairly resolved by the court. "The law must be changed to afford bankruptcy litigants the fair and impartial justice to which all other litigants in the federal courts are entitled." Id. at 91, 1978 U.S. Code Cong. & Admin. News 6053.

Congress also recognized that bankruptcy cases were controlled more by professionals receiving lucrative compensation, than by the creditors they represented:

> Creditor control in bankruptcy cases is a myth . In practice, creditor control has become attorney control, and the bankruptcy system operates more for the benefit of attorneys than for the benefit of creditors. The practices  often work to the detriment of both debtors and creditors. They benefit only those administering bankruptcy cases. [Id. at 92, 1978 U.S. Code Cong. & Admin. News 6053 (footnote omitted).]

[*1]2 Congress had to confront the manner by which case trustees were compensated by the judges who appointed them. This contributed to an apparent and, oftentimes, real appearance of cronyism between the judges and the trustees. The feeling existed that a "bankruptcy ring" operated the bankruptcy system. The unusually close relationship between bankruptcy judges, trustees and the bankruptcy bar contributed to an appearance of favoritism that was viewed with suspicion and distrust. Id. 95-96, 1978 U.S. Code Cong. & Admin. News 6056-57.

Against this historical backdrop, Congress created the United States Trustee program to supervise bankruptcy cases and trustees, to protect the public interest and to ensure bankruptcy cases are conducted according to the law. The United States Trustees were to >  serve as enforcers of the bankruptcy laws by bringing proceedings in the bankruptcy courts in particular cases in which a particular action taken or proposed to be taken deviates from the standards established by the proposed bankruptcy code. [Id. 109 (emphasis added), 1978 U.S. Code Cong. & Admin. News 6070].

The United States Trustee sought to enforce the bankruptcy laws in this case by moving for the appointment on an independent examiner. Congress envisioned that the United States Trustees would take an active part in the proposed bankruptcy system and "serve as bankruptcy watch-dogs to prevent fraud, dishonesty, and overreaching in the bankruptcy arena." (Id. at 88, 1978 U.S. Code Cong. & Admin. News 6049).

The United States Trustee, emphatically, is not an adjudicator. Congress deliberately rejected placing United States Trustees under the supervision and control of the Administrative Office of the U.S. Courts. The contemplated active participation in bankruptcy litigation would have been inconsistent with the traditional role of the judiciary, and Congress recognized that the responsibility for execution of the bankruptcy laws should be vested with the executive rather than the judicial branch of the government. (Id. at 112).

The United States Trustee's lack of standing to appeal would very significantly impair the independence and effectiveness of that office, compromise its supervisory capacity, and would be inconsistent with the active executive branch enforcement role contemplated by Congress. The district court's decision would, contrary of Congress's intent, relegate the office to the status of an administrative appendage or advisor to the bankruptcy judge.

F. CONSIDERATIONS OF JUDICIAL ADMINISTRATION DO NOT JUSTIFY THE CURTAILING THE UNITED STATES TRUSTEE'S RIGHT TO APPEAL.

The district court also indicated that its decision was influenced by considerations of administrative judicial policy (R 33: slip op. 6):

>  Here, all of the interested parties opposed the action proposed by the U.S. Trustee and ultimately denied by the bankruptcy court. To allow the U.S. Trustee to appeal the ruling would permit a party with no pecuniary interest to delay the resolution of the case and involve the interest parties in a needless appeal. This is especially true in this case where all interests are represented by committees.

[*1]3 The overarching legal error of this distressing passage is that these matters are irrelevant to the question of the United States Trustee's standing. The fact that the United States Trustee sought an appointment that no other party was interested in does not mean that his motion was inappropriate. Contrary to the district court's reaction, this episode proves only that the United States Trustee was, in this case, doing his job. As explained above, Congress established the role of the United States Trustee in bankruptcy proceedings to provide a public interest independent of both the traditional financial interests and the bankruptcy court itself. If it were appropriate to rely upon the creditors' interests, there would be no purpose in permitting the United States Trustee to make the motion. Congress added the United States Trustee's authority to section 1104(b)(2) for a reason. It should come as no surprise that such a motion receives no support from any creditors.

The district court's fears of delay are misplaced. The United States Trustee, unlike the other parties in a bankruptcy proceeding, is there to maintain the fairness and efficiency of the system, and there is no basis for the district court to have concluded that the United States Trustee, by exercising his intended role, will create unnecessary protraction. No delay was contemplated by the request for an examiner in this case. No stay or other delay of the proceedings has been sought, thus far, pending the United States Trustee's appeals. More importantly, this potential problem, if it exists, is not properly solved by partially immobilizing the United States Trustee program.

Thus, we agree that "an adverse ruling does not always necessitate an appeal." (R 33: slip op. 6). But there is no reason to believe that the United States Trustee will bring on unnecessary or frivolous appeals in a bankruptcy case. [FN11] On those occasions where the United States Trustee's appeal is truly "unnecessary," the district courts will surely utilize the usual arsenal of procedures to dispose of the matter.

The presence of the United States Trustee, and his potential role in bankruptcy cases, is perhaps novel. However, whether or not an appeal by the United States Trustee seems somehow awkward or inconvenient is a matter that might be addressed to Congress. The perception of the district court that the United States Trustee ought have no concern with respect to the outcome of his motion for the appointment of an examiner is totally contrary to the thrust of the United States Trustee program. Just as one would expect the United States Trustee to be a forceful advocate for the rulings he seeks in the bankruptcy courts, he must also be expected to appeal in suitable cases.

II. THE BANKRUPTCY COURT ERRED IN REFUSING TO APPOINT AN EXAMINER PURSUANT TO 11 U.S.C. 1104(b)(2).

A. THIS COURT SHOULD EXERCISE ITS DISCRETION TO REACH THE MERITS OF THE UNDERLYING DISPUTE.

Because the United States Trustee's appeal was erroneously dismissed on standing grounds, the district court never reached the merits of this dispute. Appellant would nevertheless urge this Court, in the exercise its appellate discretion, to resolve the underlying dispute as to whether the bankruptcy court should have appointed an examiner pursuant to 11 U.S.C. 1104(b)(2).

[*1]4 Under section 1104(b)(2), the examiner must be appointed before a reorganization plan is confirmed. As of this writing, the parties anticipate that a reorganization plan will be proposed by January 1, 1990. In order that an examiner can perform his task, and for his or her work product to be of use to the United States Trustee, the parties, and/or the bankruptcy court in considering the proposed plan, the appointment should occur as soon as possible. The merits issue presents a pure question of law, fully briefed by the parties below and fully addressed by the bankruptcy court. As the previous discussion indicates, there is considerable overlap between the standing and merits questions, and the issues can become confused, as we believe they were by the district court below. Complete appellate adjudication by this Court at this juncture would serve to advance the resolution of the dispute and would be in the interests of justice. Pinney Dock & Transp. v. Penn Cent. Corp., 838 F.2d 1445, 1461 (6th Cir.), cert. denied, 109 S.Ct. 196 (1988). See, also, e.g., Quinn v. Robinson, 783 F.2d 776 (9th Cir.), cert. denied, 479 U.S. 882 (1986).

B. THE PLAIN LANGUAGE OF THE ACT MANDATES THE APPOINTMENT OF AN EXAMINER UNDER 11 U.S.C. 1104(b)(2). [FN12]

Section 1104(b) of the Bankruptcy Code provides that (emphasis added), "If the court does not order the appointment of a trustee under this section, then  on request of a party in interest or the United States trustee the court shall order the appointment of an examiner to conduct such an investigation of the debtor as is appropriate ." The appointment is mandatory if either --

> (1) such appointment is in the interests of creditors, any equity security holders, and other interests of the estate; or
> (2) the debtor's fixed, liquidated, unsecured debts, other than debts for goods, services, or taxes, or owing to an insider, exceed $5,000,000.

It is undisputed that the Debtor, Revco D.S., Inc., owes more than $5,000,000 of the type of unsecured debt set forth in Section 1104(b)(2). The clear meaning of Section 1104(b)(2) is that the statute confers a mandatory duty upon the bankruptcy court to order the appointment of an examiner under these circumstances. This express mandate is not within the bankruptcy court's discretion to second-guess.

The search for congressional intent begins with the language of the statute. Mississippi Bank of Choctaw Indians v. Holyfield, 109 S.Ct. 1597, 1607-08 (1989); Steadman v. SEC, 450 U.S. 91, 97 (1981). In examining the language of a statute, "the fundamental canon of statutory construction [is]  that  words will be interpreted as taking their  ordinary common meaning." Perrin v. United States, 444 U.S. 37, 42 (1979). The criteria set forth in Section 1104(b)(2) for ordering the appointment of an examiner are clear and direct. A more focused statement is difficult to comprehend.

C. A REVIEW OF THE LEGISLATIVE HISTORY OF 11 U.S.C. 1104(b) SHOWS THAT CONGRESS MEANT EXACTLY WHAT IT SAID.

[*1]5 The courts are not super-legislatures. As the Court stated in TVA v. Hill, 437 U.S. 153, 194-195 (1978):

> Our individual appraisal of the wisdom or unwisdom of a particular course consciously selected by the Congress is to be put aside in the process of interpreting a statute. Once the meaning of an enactment is discerned and its constitutionality determined, the judicial process comes to an end. We do not sit as a committee of review.

In this case the Court is spared the task of deciding between the literal and the rational result. The language of 11 U.S.C. 1104(b)(2) need not be tortured to correct some legislative "mistake." This not a case where the plain language of a statute, literally applied, works some absurd result, inconsistent with legislative intent. To the contrary, the legislative history of section 1104(b) reaffirms that the statute means exactly what it so bluntly says. The mandatory language of section 1104(b)(2) was no accident.

The provision was a compromise between those interests supporting the mandatory appointment of a trustee and those favoring a more discretionary standard of appointment. The House bill, H.R. 8200, would have restricted the appointment of a trustee to those circumstances where the need for a trustee would outweigh the costs and expenses. H.R. Rep. No. 95-595, 95th Cong., 1st Sess. 402 (1977), reprinted in 1978 U.S. Code Cong. & ad. News 6358. In contrast, the Senate bill, S. 2266, provided that the appointment of a trustee would be mandatory for a public company defined as one that had $5 million in liabilities, excluding tax and trade obligations, and 1,000 security holders. S. Rep. No. 95-989, 95th Cong., 2d Sess. 115, reprinted in 1978 U.S. Code Cong. & Admin. News 5901 (1978).

When the floor managers of both Houses met to resolve the differences between their bills, the compromise bill that resulted contained the final version of Section 1104 at issue here. In exchange for making the appointment of a trustee discretionary, the floor managers acceded to the concerns raised by the Senate bill and made the appointment of an examiner mandatory under certain circumstances. The joint explanatory statement of the floor managers, which both Houses published following their floor debates on the compromise bill, states that the appointment of an examiner is required when the circumstances set forth in the Section 1104(b)(2) are presented. It also makes it clear that the two standards for appointing a trustee or examiner, i.e., for cause or the best interests of creditors, do not apply in the Section 1104(b)(2) situation.

> The new consolidated chapter 11 contains no special procedure for companies with public debt or equity security holders.  In order to insure that adequate investigation of the debtor is conducted to determine fraud or wrongdoing on the part of present management, > an examiner is required to be appointed in all cases in which the debtors' fixed, liquidated, and unsecured debt, other than debts for goods, services, or taxes, or owing to an insider, exceed $5 million. This should adequately represent the needs of public security holders in most cases. ***.

[*1]6 124 Cong. Rec. 32403 (1978) (statement of Rep. Edwards); 124 Cong. Rec. 34003 (1978) (statement of Sen. DeConcini) (emphasis added.)

The floor managers' statements also confirm that Congress intended Section 1104(b)(2) to be mandatory.

> In large cases, an examiner is appointed to investigate the affairs of the debtor, but there is never a mandatory appointment of a trustee. The examiner's investigation will not slow down the reorganization in any way.

124 Cong. Rec. 32419 (1978) (statement of Rep. Butler).

> In the business reorganization chapter the Senate succeeded in obtaining special protection for the large cases having great public interest. There will be automatically appointed an examiner in those cases, but not a trustee as in the Senate passed bill. I am convinced that debtor and creditor interests, as well as the public interest, will be preserved and enhanced by these provisions.

124 Cong. Rec. 33990 (1978) (statement of Sen. DeConcini) (emphasis added). [FN13]

CONCLUSION

For the foregoing reasons, the judgment of the district court dismissing the appeal of the United States Trustee should be vacated. The case should be remanded to the district court with instructions to reinstate the United States Trustee's appeal. This Court shpould also hold that the appointment of an examiner pursuant to 11 U.S.C. 1104(b)(2) should have been ordered by the bankruptcy court, and the district court should proceed consistent with that holding.

FN1. Altogether, including later-filed petitions, there are now 67 Revco- related petitions pending in the Bankruptcy Court. Revco employs 28,000 persons and operates about 2,000 retail outlets. The debtors have over $610 million in assets and $1.3 billion in liabilities.

FN2. I.e., "the debtor's fixed, liquidated, unsecured debts, other than debts for goods, services, or taxes, or owing to an insider, exceed $5,000,000." These conditions are undisputedly met in the instant case.

FN3. A person aggrieved by an order of a referee may, within ten days after the entry thereof or within such extended time as the court upon petition filed within such ten-day period may for cause shown allow, file with the referee a petition for review of such order by a judge ***."

FN6. It is worth at least passing note that Congress used the same concept of an aggrieved person in setting forth the standing requirements for seeking judicial review of an administrative decision rendered under the Administrative Procedure Act, 5 U.S.C. 702. "That interest, at times, may reflect ' aesthetic, conservational, and recreational' as well as economic values. A person or family may have a spiritual stake in First Amendment values sufficient to give standing to raise issues concerning the Establishment Clause and the Free Exercise Clause. We mention these noneconomic values to emphasize that standing may stem from them as well as from  economic injury ." Association of Data Processing Serv. Org., v. Camp, 397 U.S. 150, 154 (1970) (citations omitted).

FN7. Summarizing the pre-1978 law, the leading bankruptcy treatise observed that a "personal, financial or pecuniary interest is not always necessary." 1 Collier on Bankruptcy (14th ed. 1979) ¶ 25.08[1] at 931.

FN8. The author suggests that new standards should be developed based upon the "extent of the interest of appellant, need for accountability of the officers of the estate, and economy and efficiency of the system." Id. at 977.

FN9. The district court's holding that the United State's Trustee could not be a "person aggrieved" because he lacked a pecuniary interest completely disposed of his appeal. It is not clear whether the analysis rejecting the United States Trustee's interest in the proper administration of section 1104(b) of the Bankruptcy Code is dictum or an alternative holding.

FN10. After operating seven years as a pilot program in 14 judicial districts, the United States Trustees became a permanent, nationwide program in 1986. Bankruptcy Judges, United States Trustees, and Family Farmer Bankruptcy Act of 1986, Pub. L. No. 99-554, 100 Stat. 3088 (1986) ("1986 Act").

FN11. A proposed appeal by the United States Trustee to a district court must be reviewed and approved by the General Counsel of the Executive Office of the United States Trustees. A United States Trustee's appeal to a circuit court must be reviewed and approved by the Solicitor General. It is arguable that there will be relatively fewer unnecessary appeals brought by the United States Trustee than there will be by the traditional parties to bankruptcy proceedings.

FN12. This issue has not, to our knowledge, been addressed by a circuit court of appeals. The lower courts have issued a smattering of brief comments on section 1104(b)(2). The bankruptcy court cited in In re Shelter Resources Corp., 35 Bankr. 304 (N.D. Ohio 1983) and In re GHR Companies, Inc., 43 Bankr. 165 (D. Mass. 1984), aff'd, 792 F.2d 476 (5th Cir. 1986). (Bankruptcy court op. 12-15). Other courts have adopted the view advocated by appellant here: In re The Bible Speaks, 74 Bankr. 511, 514 (Bankr, D. Mass. 1987); In re Lenihan, 4 Bankr. 209, 211 (D. R.I. 1980); In re 1243 20th St., Inc. 6 Bankr. 683, 685 n. 3 (D.D.C. 1980).

The Fifth Circuit in GHR expressly stated that the lower court's decision was not to be regarded as a decision on the merits interpreting section 1104(b). 792 F.2d at 478. Indeed, most, perhaps all, of the pronouncements in these cases are dicta.

FN13. This perspective of congressional intent is supported by the commentators.

> [T]he court must appoint an examiner under Sec. 1104(b)(2). In such case, the party requesting the appointment is not required to prove that the interests of creditors or equity security holders are well served by such appointment.

REQUEST FOR ORAL ARGUMENT

Appellant United States Trustee requests oral argument. The challenged order declared the "debt relief agency" provisions of the Bankruptcy Abuse Prevention and Consumer Protection Act of 2005 ("BAPCPA"), 11 U.S.C. §§ 526-528, unconstitutional as applied to attorneys and interpreted the definition of a "debt relief agency," 11 U.S.C. § 101(12A), to exclude attorneys licensed to practice law.

STATEMENT OF THE BASIS OF APPELLATE JURISDICTION

This Court has jurisdiction over this appeal pursuant to 28 U.S.C. § 158(a).

STATEMENT OF ISSUES PRESENTED FOR APPELLATE REVIEW

The Bankruptcy Code imposes certain restrictions and obligations on those entities that qualify as a “debt relief agency,” 11 U.S.C. §§ 526-528, and under section 101(12A) of the Bankruptcy Code, a “debt relief agency” only includes those persons who provide bankruptcy assistance “in return for payment of money or other valuable consideration.”

1. Did the Bankruptcy Court lack jurisdiction to issue an advisory ruling on whether pro bono counsel is a debt relief agency when no actual controversy has been raised by the parties involved?

2. Did the Bankruptcy Court err by raising sua sponte and ruling on the issue of the constitutionality of 11 U.S.C. §§ 526-528?

3. Did the Bankruptcy Court err by raising sua sponte and ruling that the issue of whether an attorney who provides bankruptcy assistance to assisted persons in return for a fee is a debt relief agency as defined by 11 U.S.C. § 101(12A)?

APPLICABLE STANDARD OF APPELLATE REVIEW

This appeal raises only issues of law. The standard of review on appeal is de novo as to conclusions of law. In re New Power Co., 438 F.3d 1113 (11th Cir. 2006); In re Empire for Him, Inc., 1 F.3d 1156 (11th Cir. 1993); In re Verola, 336 B.R. 547 (S.D. Fla. 2004).

STATEMENT OF THE CASE

I. Statutory Background

The BAPCPA is "a comprehensive package of reform measures" designed "to improve bankruptcy law and practice by restoring personal responsibility and integrity in the bankruptcy system and ensure that the system is fair for both debtors and creditors." H.R. Rep. No. 109-31, 109th Cong., 1st Sess. 2 (2005), reprinted at 2005 U.S.C.C.A.N. 88, 89. After conducting a series of hearings, Congress found that one of the problems was "misconduct by attorneys and other professionals." Id. at 92.[1]

For example, the evidence before Congress indicated that some bankruptcy attorneys were failing to provide clients with sufficient information regarding their options and the consequences of bankruptcy. The Honorable Edith Hollan Jones, United States Court of Appeals Judge for the Fifth Circuit and member of the National Bankruptcy Review Commission, testified as follows:

> Most debtors never see a judge. Many bankruptcy lawyers never

[1] The BAPCPA is the product of nearly eight years of proposals and hearings on reform of bankruptcy law and practices.

> talk to their clients. The first time they see their clients often is when they are in a herd of people in bankruptcy courts and the lawyer raises a hand, and says, "Anyone's who's my client needs to step forward right now."

Bankruptcy Reform Act of 1998: Part I, Hearing on H.R. 3150 before House Judiciary Comm., 105th Cong., 2d Sess. 15 (1998). In this same vein, a study conducted by Tahira K. Hira, a Professor at Iowa State University, revealed that the two most common complaints of people who had their debts discharged in a bankruptcy proceeding were a lack of information and concern about the practices of their lawyers. The Consumer Bankruptcy Reform Act: Seeking Fair and Practical Solutions to Consumer Bankruptcy Crisis, Hearing on S. 1301 before Senate Judiciary Comm., 105th Cong., 2d Sess. 29 (1998).

Congress also found problems with advertisements by attorneys for debt relief. The House Judiciary Committee took note of a consumer alert issued by the Federal Trade Commission, which warned that some advertisers promising debt relief may actually use bankruptcy as the method for such relief. Bankruptcy Reform Act of 1998: Part III, Hearing on H.R. 3150 before House Judiciary Comm., 105th Cong., 2d Session 90-92 (1998). See also Bankruptcy Reform Act of 1999 (Part II), Hearing on H.R. 833 before House Judiciary Committee, 106th Cong., 1st Sess. 122-23 (1999) (creditor describing examples of customers misled by such advertisement into thinking that they had consolidated their loans and "didn't even realize that they filed" for bankruptcy).

To correct these problems, Congress included in BAPCPA "provisions strengthening professional standards for attorneys and other who assist consumer debtors with their bankruptcy cases." 2005 U.S.C.A.A.N. at 103. These standards are known as the "debt relief agency provisions." 11 U.S.C. §§ 526-528. The BAPCPA defines the term "debt relief agency," with certain exceptions not applicable here, as "any person who provides any bankruptcy assistance to an assisted person in return for the payment of money or other valuable consideration." 11 U.S.C. § 101(12A). "Bankruptcy assistance" includes "providing information, advice, counsel . . . [and] legal representation with respect to a case or proceeding under this title." 11 U.S.C. § 101(4A).

Section 526 prohibits a debt relief agency from (1) failing to perform any service that it informed the assisted person it would provide in connection with a bankruptcy case, (2) advising an assisted person to make untrue or misleading statements in bankruptcy filings, (3) misrepresenting the services it would provide or the benefits or risks of filing for bankruptcy, and (4) advising an assisted person to incur more debt in contemplation of filing for bankruptcy or for the purpose of paying an attorney or bankruptcy petition preparer for bankruptcy services. 11 U.S.C. § 526(a).

Section 527 requires that debt relief agencies provide certain disclosures and notices to an assisted person, including (1) a description of the various types of bankruptcy proceedings and the costs and benefits of proceeding under each chapter, (2) an explanation of the information that the debtor is to provide during the bankruptcy proceeding (e.g., an accurate accounting of assets and liabilities), and (3) a warning that the assisted person's failure to provide such information may result in the dismissal of the case or other sanction, including a criminal sanction. 11 U.S.C. § 527(a). A debt relief agency must also provide an assisted person with a separate specified notice explaining, inter alia, that the assisted person may proceed pro se or hire an attorney or a bankruptcy petition preparer, and that the attorney or preparer must furnish the person with "a written contract specifying what the attorney or bankruptcy petition preparer will do for you and how much it will cost." 11 U.S.C. § 527(b). In addition, a debt relief agency must provide an assisted person with reasonably sufficient information regarding valuation of assets and determining liabilities, income, and other information required to be provided in the proceeding (except to the extent that the debt relief agency itself completes the relevant forms on behalf of the debtor). 11 U.S.C. § 527(c).

Section 528 provides that a debt relief agency shall execute a written contract with the assisted person explaining the agency's services and fees. 11 U.S.C. § 528(a)(1). It also requires a debt relief agency to insert in any advertisements of "bankruptcy assistance services" the following statement or a substantially similar one: "We are a debt relief agency. We help people file for bankruptcy relief under the Bankruptcy Code." 11 U.S.C. §§ 528(a)(4), (b).

The BAPCPA establishes various remedies for violations of these debt relief provisions. First, a debt relief agency shall be liable to an assisted person for (a) "any fees or charges" paid to him or her by the debtor-client, (b) "actual damages," and (c) "reasonable attorneys' fees," if the debt relief agency is found, after notice and a hearing, to have "intentionally" or "negligently" violated any requirement imposed on it by §§ 526-528. 11 U.S.C. § 526(c)(2)(A). Second, in addition to such other remedies as are provided by State law, the BAPCPA authorizes state attorneys general to bring actions to enjoin violations of Section 526 and recover damages for debtors. 11 U.S.C. § 526(c)(3). Finally, "notwithstanding any other provisions of Federal law and in addition to any other remedy provided by Federal or State law, the court, on its own motion or on the motion of the United States trustee or debtor" may enjoin violations or impose an appropriate civil penalty, if the court "finds that a person intentionally violated [Section 526] or engaged in a clear and consistent pattern or practice of violating this section." 11 U.S.C. § 526(c)(5).

II. Procedural History

On November 17, 2006, Gloria Reyes ("Debtor") filed a voluntary petition under Chapter 7 of the Bankruptcy Code with the assistance of an attorney, Heather Yonke. R. 1. On December 19, 2006, the Debtor filed a motion seeking an order "determining and/or clarifying" that the Debtor's counsel is not a debt relief agency as defined in 11 U.S.C. § 101(12A) because she is representing the Debtor on a pro bono basis. R. 16. The motion noted that while Debtor's counsel will not accept any compensation for her services, she will attribute the hours spent on representation of the Debtor towards the annual pro bono requirement of the Florida Bar. Id. The motion, thus, raised two narrow statutory issues: (1) whether an attorney who provides bankruptcy assistance on a pro bono basis fits within the definition of a "debt relief agency," and (2) whether receipt of credit from the Florida Bar for such pro bono services constituted "other valuable consideration" under 11 U.S.C. § 101(12A).

On January 4, 2007, the United States Trustee filed a response stating that the motion should be denied as unnecessary because there was no dispute between any parties given that the plain language of 11 U.S.C. § 101(12A), which defines a "debt relief agency," includes only individuals who provide bankruptcy for a fee or other valuable consideration. R. 29.

On January 16, 2007, the Bankruptcy Court held a hearing on the motion. Instead of limiting the focus to the two narrow issues raised by the Debtor's motion, the Bankruptcy Court raised two other issues sua sponte: (1) whether the debt relief agency provisions were unconstitutional as applied to attorneys and (2) if they were constitutional, whether the provisions apply to attorneys. R. 35, at 4. The trial attorney explained that he was not prepared to address these new issues and requested that the proceeding be continued if the Bankruptcy Court was going to entertain those issues. Id. at 4-5. The court refused to continue the hearing but indicated that it would allow the United States Trustee to make an additional submission if he were to submit it before the Court made its ruling. Id. at 5-6.

Debtor's counsel then addressed the two issues raised by her motion. Id. at 8. Debtor's counsel did not address the new issues raised sua sponte by court. The trial attorney responded by stating that while the United States Trustee agreed that attorneys who provide pro bono services were not debt relief agencies, the motion should not be granted because there was no disagreement on the narrow issues raised by the Debtor in her motion. Id.

The Bankruptcy Court concluded the hearing by stating that "the simplest thing to do would be to then grant the debtor's motion" on the narrow issues raised by the debtor in her motion because "that's the scope of the motion" and "we don't have to go further than that." Id. at 10. The court stated, however, that it might "include some dicta" on the two other issues that he had raised sua sponte. Id. Based on that representation, the United States Trustee did not request to file a brief on those issues.

The next day, January 17, 2007, the Bankruptcy Court issued an order. R. 30. In its order, the court acknowledged that the only issues raised by the Debtor were (1) whether an attorney who provides bankruptcy assistance to an assisted person but who receives no money or other valuable consideration for the assistance is a debt relief agency, and (2) whether "attributing the hours on such representation to the annual pro bono requirement set forth by the Florida Bar Association constitute[s] 'other valuable consideration' under 11 U.S.C. § 101(12A)." Id. at 3.

The court, however, stated that two other issues "should be addressed before reaching the issues raised by the Motion[:]" (1) "If Debtor's counsel is a 'debt relief agency' pursuant to 11 U.S.C. § 101(12A), are the provisions of 11 U.S.C. §§ 526, 527 and 529 unconstitutional as applied to attorneys?" and (2) "If 11 U.S.C. §§ 526, 527, and 528 are constitutional, do those sections apply to attorneys who are licensed to practice law . . . ?" Id. at 4.

The Bankruptcy Court summarily concluded that the provisions were unconstitutional as applied to attorneys. Id. at 4. The Bankruptcy Court then stated that "the Court does not believe Congress intended the scope of the statute to include attorneys." Id. at 5. After addressing the issues not raised by the motion, the Bankruptcy Court turned to the narrow issues raised by the Debtor in her motion. Id. at 6-8. The Bankruptcy Court found that under the plain language of the provision, attorneys who provide pro bono services were not debt relief agencies. Id. at 7. The Bankruptcy Court further found that "receipt of credit toward the fulfillment of state bar requirement" did not "constitute 'valuable consideration' as the term is used in 11 U.S.C. § 101(12A)." Id. Although the Bankruptcy Court acknowledged that courts should "attempt to resolve the issues raised in a motion on other than constitutional grounds" (id. at 6) and that it was possible to resolve the motion without reaching the issues raised by the court sua sponte, the court included its findings on those issues in its order. Id. at 8-9. Specifically, the court issued an order finding that "the application of 11 U.S.C. §§ 526, 527, and 528 to Debtor's counsel is unconstitutional" and that "Sections 526, 527 and 528 of the Bankruptcy Code do not apply to an attorney licensed to practice law by the state, regulated by the laws of the state wherein the attorney is admitted and admitted to practice in United States Bankruptcy Courts." Id.

ARGUMENT

The Bankruptcy Court did not have jurisdiction to consider Debtor's motion seeking a clarification that attorneys who provide bankruptcy assistance on a pro bono basis are not debt relief agencies. Article III of the Constitution limits courts to the resolution of actual "cases and controversies." In this case, there was no disagreement between the Debtor and the United States Trustee with respect to the legal question presented by the motion. Moreover, even if there were a disagreement, the Debtor lacked standing to raise the issue because she has not alleged any injury to herself. Instead, the Debtor sought such an order because she alleges that other attorneys may be reluctant to provide pro bono services to other debtors. The Debtor has no standing to raise the rights of other attorneys or other debtors.

Even if the Bankruptcy Court, however, had jurisdiction to consider the two statutory issues raised in the motion, the Bankruptcy Court's finding that 11 U.S.C. §§ 526-528 are unconstitutional as applied to attorneys should be vacated on three jurisdictional and procedural grounds. First, the Debtor did not challenge the constitutionality of the provisions, not did she have standing to do so since the court found (and the parties agreed) that the provisions did not apply to attorneys, such as Debtor's counsel, who provided bankruptcy services on a pro bono basis. Accordingly, the court had no jurisdiction to consider the constitutionality of the debt relief provisions. Second, even if the Bankruptcy Court had jurisdiction to consider the constitutionality of the provisions, the Bankruptcy Court violated the doctrine of constitutional avoidance by reaching the issue since, as the court itself found, it was possible to resolve the Debtor's motion on the two statutory grounds raised in her motion. Third, even if the Bankruptcy Court could raise and resolve the constitutional issue, it improperly failed to provide the United States Trustee adequate notice and a meaningful opportunity to address the constitutionality of the provisions.

The Bankruptcy Court's finding that an attorney who provides bankruptcy assistance for a fee is not a debt relief agency should also be vacated. Like the constitutional issue, this was not an issue raised by the Debtor in her motion. Nor was it an issue that the Debtor had standing to raise because her counsel did not receive a fee or other valuable consideration in return for providing bankruptcy assistance to the Debtor. Thus, like the constitutional issue, the Bankruptcy Court had no jurisdiction to consider the issue of whether attorneys who provide bankruptcy assistance for a fee are debt relief agencies. Moreover, even if the court had jurisdiction, its decision on this issue should be reversed. Under the plain language of the statute, attorneys fall within the definition of the term "debt relief agency," as defined by 11 U.S.C. § 101(12A).

I. THE BANKRUPTCY COURT DID NOT HAVE JURISDICTION TO CONSIDER DEBTOR'S MOTION BECAUSE THERE WAS NO CASE OR CONTROVERSY.

"[I]t is well settled that the jurisdiction of the bankruptcy courts to hear cases related to bankruptcy is limited initially by statute and eventually by Article III." In re Lemco Gypsum, Inc., 910 F.2d 784, 787 (11th Cir. 1990). Although a bankruptcy court is not itself an Article III court, see Northern Pipeline Constr. Co. v. Marathon Pipeline Co., 458 U.S. 50, 60-61 (1982), it is a "unit of the district court" and therefore bound by Article III. See 28 U.S.C. § 151; In re Goerg, 930 F.2d 1563, 1565 (11th Cir. 1991); In re Nunez, Nos. 98-CV-7077 and 98-CV-7078, 2000 WL 655983 (E.D.N.Y. March 17, 2000).

Article III of the Constitution limits the federal courts to the resolution of live "cases and controversies." Lujan v. Defenders of Wildlife, 504 U.S. 555, 559-60 (1992); Diamond v. Charles, 476 U.S. 54, 61-62 (1986); Allen v. Wright, 468 U.S. 737, 750 (1984). This limitation encompasses several related principles. It prohibits a court from issuing an advisory opinion on a legal issue upon which there is no actual dispute. Preiser v. Newkirk, 422 U.S. 395, 401 (1975). It also prohibits a court from considering an issue that a party has no standing to raise. Allen v. Wright, 468 U.S. at 750. In this case, the motion filed by the Debtor falls within both of these prohibitions.

A. The Debtor's Motion Did Not Present A Justiciable Case or Controversy.

The Supreme Court has held that the term "controversies" in Article III "implies the existence of present or possible adverse parties." Muskrat v. United States, 219 U.S. 346, 357 (1911). Thus, judicial power under Article III is limited "to determin[ing] actual controversies arising between adverse litigants." Id. at 361. It does not include the power to issue "advisory opinions not founded upon the facts of a controversy between truly adverse parties." Scott v. Pasadena Unified School District, 306 F.3d 646, 654 (9th Cir. 2002). Accord Preiser v. Newkirk, 422 U.S. 395, 400 (1975) (noting a federal court "has neither the power to render 'advisory opinions' nor 'to decide questions that cannot affect the rights of the litigants in the case before them'"); United States v. Johnson, 319 U.S. 302, 305 (1943) (dismissing as non-justiciable a suit brought at the request of the defendant because "it [was] not in any real sense adversary."). Based on this Article III limitation, courts have denied motions seeking advisory opinions in bankruptcy proceedings. See, e.g., In re Nunez, 2000 WL 655983, * 6; In the Matter of Hamlin's Landing Joint Venture, 81 B.R. 651, 653 (Bankr. M.D. Fla. 1987) (denying motion by debtor seeking clarification of whether automatic stay applied to non-debtor guarantors).

In this case, there has been no controversy between the parties regarding the narrow issues presented by the Debtor's motion. The United States Trustee agrees with Debtor that her counsel is not a debt relief agency, when, as here, she is providing bankruptcy assistance on a pro bono basis. R. 29, at 2-4. See also http://www.usdoj.gov/ust/eo/trustees_faqs.htm#dra_issue. Thus, the Debtor's motion did not raise an issue upon which there is an actual dispute or disagreement regarding the proper interpretation of the term "debt relief agency." Because there was no such disagreement, the Bankruptcy Court lacked jurisdiction to consider the motion.

B. The Debtor Lacked Standing to Raise the Issues Presented by Her Motion.

Even if there were an actual disagreement between the Debtor and the United States Trustee with regard to the issue of whether an attorney providing pro bono services fits within the definition of "debt relief agency," 11 U.S.C. § 101(12A), the Bankruptcy Court lacked jurisdiction because the Debtor had no standing to raise the issue. As the Supreme Court has stressed, "[t]he presence of a disagreement, however sharp and acrimonious it may be, is insufficient by itself to meet Art. III's requirements." Diamond v. Charles, 476 U.S. at 62. Instead, Article III's standing doctrine requires a plaintiff > to "show that he personally has suffered some actual or threatened injury as a result of the putatively illegal conduct of the defendant," . . . and that the injury "fairly can be traced to the challenged action" and "is likely to be redressed by a favorable decision. . . ."

Valley Forge Christian College v. Americans United for Separation of Church and State, Inc., 454 U.S. 464, 472 (1982) (citations omitted). Accord Harris v. Evans, 20 F.3d 1118, 1121 (11th Cir. 1994).[2]

Based on these criteria, courts have dismissed motions by debtors or their attorneys seeking declarations that attorneys who practice before a bankruptcy court are not debt relief agencies, ruling that the debtor has no real, actual or direct harm or injury, and thus cannot establish standing. In re David Cantor on Behalf of Himself and Members of the Bar Practicing Before the U.S. Bankruptcy Courts for the Western District of Kentucky, Case No. 05-2005 (Bankr. W.D.Ky. May 23, 2006) (Appendix A); In re Ella Srymanske, Case No. 05-60519 (Bankr. D. N.J. April 7, 2006) (Appendix B); In re Michelle Moore, No. 05-24651 (Bankr. W.D. Wash. Feb. 23, 2006) (Appendix C); In re McCartney, 336 B.R 588 (Bkrtcy. M.D. Ga. 2006); In re Harvey Beaver, No. 05-04080 (Bankr. W.D.N.C. Nov. 15, 2005) (Appendix D).

The motion here suffered from the same defect because the Debtor did not allege that she had personally suffered any injury as a result of the purported confusion over whether a pro bono attorney fits within the definition of debt relief agency. Instead, the Debtor's counsel stated that she sought a declaratory order because "there are a lot of law firms refusing to take pro bono cases" because of the purported ambiguity of whether receipt of credit constituted "valuable consideration." R. 30, at 8. But, even if this allegation were true, the Debtor had no standing to seek relief based on that alleged injury because she has counsel.

Nor did she have standing to file the motion on the behalf of other attorneys or individuals who seek such pro bono services. As courts have stressed, the usual rule is that an individual must "'assert his own legal rights and interests, and cannot rest his claim to relief on the legal rights or interests of third parties." Kowalski v. Tesmer, 543 U.S. 125, 129 (2004) (quoting Warth v. Seldin, 422 U.S. 490, 499 (1975)). Courts have recognized exceptions to this rule only where the individual can show that (1) he or she has suffered some injury in fact, (2) he or she has a "close" relationship with the person who possesses the right, and (3) there is a "hindrance" to that person's ability to protect his own interest. Id. at 129-130. Accord Singleton v. Wulff, 428 U.S. 106, 116 (1976); Harris v. Evans, 20 F.3d at 1122; Corey v. Dallas, 492 F.2d 496, 497 (5th Cir. 1974).

Applying these standards, courts have rejected similar attempts by attorneys to adjudicate the rights of others where there is no obstacle to the individual's ability to protect his or her own rights. Kowalski v. Tesmer, 543 U.S. at 131-34 (attorney lacked standing to assert the rights of indigent defendants denied appellate counsel); Conn v. Gabbett, 526 U.S. 286, 292-93 (1999) (rejecting an attorney's attempt to adjudicate the rights of a client); Juvenile Matters Trial Lawyers Ass'n v. Judicial Department, 363 F. Supp. 2d 239, 249 (D. Conn. 2005) (plaintiffs lacked standing to assert that low rates paid to attorneys representing indigent children violated their right to effective representation).

In this case, the Debtor has not alleged that she suffered any injury. She also has not alleged that she has a close relationship with either the attorneys who are reluctant to accept pro bono cases or their potential clients. Nor has she alleged that there is any barrier preventing them from protecting their own rights.

Accordingly, because the Debtor cannot show any injury to herself, the decision should be vacated because the Bankruptcy Court lacked jurisdiction to consider the motion.

II. THE BANKRUPTCY COURT'S FINDING THAT 11 U.S.C. §§ 526, 527 AND 528 ARE UNCONSTITUTIONAL AS APPLIED TO ATTORNEYS SHOULD BE VACATED.

Even if the Bankruptcy Court had jurisdiction to reach the two statutory issues raised by the Debtor, the Bankruptcy Court's finding that the debt relief provisions are unconstitutional as applied to attorneys should be vacated on at least three jurisdictional and/or procedural grounds:

(1) The Bankruptcy Court lacked jurisdiction to consider the constitutionality of Sections 526, 527 and 528 because it found (and the parties agreed) that the provisions did not apply to Debtor's counsel; (2) even if the Bankruptcy Court had jurisdiction to consider the constitutionality of the provisions, it violated the doctrine of constitutional avoidance because, as the court itself acknowledged, it was possible to resolve the narrow issues raised by the Debtor without reaching the constitutional issue, and (3) even if the court could raise and resolve the constitutional issue, the court improperly failed to provide the United States Trustee adequate notice and a meaningful opportunity to address the constitutionality of the provisions. The United States Trustee also contends that the court's finding that the provisions are unconstitutional as applied to attorneys is incorrect on the merits.[3] However, because the case can be resolved on narrower, non-constitutional issues, there is no need for this Court to consider that constitutionality of the provisions.

A. The Bankruptcy Court Lacked Jurisdiction to Consider the Constitutionality of the Debt Relief Provisions Because They Do Not Apply to Debtor's Counsel.

As explained supra at 10-11, a court only has jurisdiction to consider to claims which present an "actual case or controversy." This limitation prohibits a court from considering an issue that a party has no standing to raise. Allen v. Wright, 468 U.S. at 750. In this case, the

[3] The Bankruptcy Court based its finding that Sections 526, 527 and 528 were unconstitutional as applied to attorneys on Milavetz, Gallop & Milavetz v. United States, 355 B.R. 758 (D. Minn. 2006). The court's reliance on Milavetz is, however, misplaced because the district court in Milavetz in fact only found Sections 526(a)(4) and 528(a)(4) and (b) unconstitutional. It did not address the constitutionality of Section 527 or any of the other subsections of Sections 526 and 528. Moreover, two other district courts have specifically held Sections 527 and 528(a)(4) and (b) to be constitutional. Hersh v. United States, 347 B.R. 19, 25-27 (N.D. Tex. 2006), appeals pending, Nos. 07-10226 and 07-10265 (5th Cir.); Olsen v. Gonzales, 350 B.R. 906, 917-921 (D. Ore. 2006).

Debtor had not challenged the constitutionality of the debt relief provisions. Indeed, she had no standing to raise the issue. The Bankruptcy Court concluded (and all parties agreed) that Debtor's counsel was not a debt relief agency since she did not accept any fee or other valuable consideration in return for her services. Accordingly, since the requirements placed on debt relief agencies under 11 U.S.C. §§ 526-528 do not apply to Debtor's counsel, the constitutionality of the provisions was a purely abstract issue in the context of this case. As the Supreme Court has held a court "has no jurisdiction to pronounce any statute, either of a state or of the United States, void, because irreconcilable with the constitution, except as it is called to adjudge legal rights of litigants to actual controversies." Liverpool, New York & Philadelphia Steam Ship Co. v. Emigration Commissioners, 113 U.S. 33, 38 (1885). The Bankruptcy Court's finding regarding the constitutionality of the debt relief provisions should, therefore, be vacated because the Bankruptcy Court lacked jurisdiction to consider the constitutionality of the debt relief agency provisions.

B. The Bankruptcy Court Failed To Comply With The Doctrine of Constitutional Avoidance.

Even if the Bankruptcy Court had jurisdiction to consider the constitutional issue, it violated the doctrine of constitutional avoidance by reaching that issue. It is well-established that a court will not "anticipate a question of constitutional law in advance of the necessity of deciding it." Liverpool , N.Y. & Philadelphia Steamship Co. v. Emigration Commissioners, 113 U.S. at 355. Indeed, even where a constitutional question is properly presented by the parties, a court should not "pass upon a constitutional question . . . if there is also present some other ground upon which the case may be disposed of." Ashwander v. Tennessee Valley Authority, 297 U.S. 288, 347 (1936) (Brandeis, J., concurring). In short, "if the case can be decided on either of two grounds, one involving a constitutional question, the other a question of statutory construction or general law, the Court will decide only the later." Id. (emphasis added). Accord United States v. $38,000/00 in U.S. Currency, 816 F.2d 1538, 1547 n.21 (11th Cir. 1987) (court decided issues on statutory grounds "in order to avoid unnecessarily deciding the constitutional issues"); State of Texas v. Daniel Grundstrom, 404 F.2d 644, 648 (5th Cir. 1968) ("courts do not anticipate questions of serious constitutional import but wait until a case is presented which requires a decision of the constitutional issue.")

Applying these principles, the Supreme Court has vacated decisions reaching constitutional issues when it may be possible to resolve the case on other grounds. See, e.g., Escamba County, Florida v. McMillian, 466 U.S. 48, 51 (1984); Alma Motor Co. v. Timken-Detroit Axel Co., 329 U.S. 129, 136-141 (1946).

This Court should vacate the findings made by the Bankruptcy Court on the constitutionality of the debt relief agency provisions for the same reason. In this case, while the Bankruptcy Court recognized the doctrine of constitutional avoidance, it did not follow the doctrine. The Debtor has not raised the issue of the constitutionality of the debt relief provisions as applied to attorneys in her motion. Instead, the Bankruptcy Court raised the issue sua sponte. R. 30, at 4. Then, instead of deferring the constitutional issue to determine whether it was possible to resolve the motion on the limited issues raised by the Debtor, the Court proceeded to address and decide the constitutional issue first. Id. Only after addressing the constitutional issue and the broader statutory issue that it raised sua sponte did the Bankruptcy Court consider the narrow statutory issues raised by the Debtor. Id. When the court considered the narrow statutory issues, it concluded that Debtor's counsel was not a debt relief agency under the plain language of the 11 U.S.C. § 101(12A) because she had not received a fee or other valuable consideration for her service. Id. Despite the fact that the court found that it could resolve the case without reaching the constitutional issue, the Bankruptcy Court issued an order which specifically found that the application of the debt relief agency provisions to Debtor's counsel was unconstitutional.

In short, instead of avoiding a constitutional issue, the Bankruptcy Court took every step possible to reach the constitutional issue. The court (1) inserted the constitutional issue into the case, (2) proceeded to decided the constitutional issue without first determining whether the motion could be resolved on other grounds, and (3) issued an order finding the provision unconstitutional even though it had specifically found that the motion could be resolved on narrow statutory grounds. Accordingly, the findings made by the Bankruptcy Court on the constitutionality of the debt relief provisions should be vacated.

C. The Bankruptcy Court Should Have Provided The United States Trustee Adequate Notice And A Meaningful Opportunity To Address The Constitutionality Of The Provisions.

Even if it were appropriate for the Bankruptcy Court to raise and consider the constitutional issue, the Bankruptcy Court erred by failing to provide the United States Trustee adequate notice and an opportunity to address the issue. As the Supreme Court has stressed, '[n]otice of issues to be resolved by the adversary process is a fundamental characteristic of fair procedure." Lankford v. Idaho, 500 U.S. 110, 126 (1991) (state court violated a defendant's due process rights by failing to provide notice that it was considering the death penalty after the state had indicated that it was not seeking the death penalty). Because of the fundamental importance of notice and opportunity to be heard, courts have repeatedly held that making a ruling without providing the adversely affected party with adequate notice and an opportunity to heard is "itself grounds for reversal." Snider v. Melindez, 199 F.3d 108, 113 (2d Cir. 1999)(quoting Square D Co. v. Niagara Frontier Tariff Bureau, Inc., 760 F.2d 1347, 1365). As the court in Snider explained in reversing a sua sponte dismissal of a complaint:

> providing the adversely affected party with notice and an opportunity to be heard plays an important role in establishing the fairness and reliability of the order. It avoids the risk that a court may overlook valid answers to its perception of defects the plaintiff's case. Furthermore, denying a plaintiff an opportunity to be heard "may tend to produce the very effect [the court] seek[s] to avoid – a waste of judicial resources – by leading to appeals and remands."

199 F.3d at 113 (quoting Perez v. Ortiz, 849 F.2d 793, 797 (2d Cir. 1988). Accord Jefferson Fourteenth Assoc. v. Wometco De Puerto Rico, 695 F.2d 524 (11th Cir. 1983)(reversing a district court's sua sponte dismissal of third party claim because the court failed to provide adequate notice and opportunity to respond). Cf. Massey v. Congress Life Ins. Co., 116 F.3d 1414 (11th Cir. 1997) (a court must provide sufficient notice before granting summary judgment sua sponte).

In this case, the Bankruptcy Court failed to provide the United States Trustee adequate notice and an opportunity to address the constitutionality of the debt relief provisions. The Bankruptcy Court raised the constitutional issue sua sponte at the hearing without any prior notice. Although the trial attorney explained that he was not prepared to address the constitutional issue and requested a continuance if the Bankruptcy Court was going to consider the issue, the Bankruptcy Court denied the request. Moreover, while the court stated that the trial attorney could file make a supplemental filing if he did so "expeditiously" before the court ruled, it later made comments which suggested that a supplemental brief would not be necessary. The Bankruptcy Court stated that while he might "include some dicta on the other two points," he would issue an order on the two issues raised by the Debtor since "that's the scope of the motion."

R. 35, at 10. The very next day, however, the Bankruptcy Court entered an order which specifically held that Sections 526, 527 and 528 were unconstitutional. In short, the United States Trustee had no meaningful opportunity to defend the constitutionality of the provisions before the Bankruptcy Court issued its ruling.

Accordingly, the Bankruptcy Court's findings regarding the constitutionality of the debt relief provisions should be vacated.

III. THE BANKRUPTCY COURT'S FINDING THAT AN ATTORNEY WHO PROVIDES BANKRUPTCY ASSISTANCE TO ASSISTED PERSONS FOR A FEE IS NOT A DEBT RELIEF AGENCY SHOULD BE VACATED.

The Bankruptcy Court's finding that an attorney who provides bankruptcy assistance to assisted persons for a fee is not a debt relief agency should also be vacated. Like the constitutional issue, it was not necessary for the Court to raise and resolve this broader statutory question. As the Bankruptcy Court itself acknowledged, the Debtor had not raised the issue and the Debtor's motion could be resolved without reaching broader statutory issue. Moreover, the Debtor had no standing to raise that issue in this case because the court found (and all parties agreed) that Debtor's counsel did not receive a fee or other valuable consideration in return for providing bankruptcy assistance to the Debtor. Therefore, the court's finding on this issue should be vacated because it is an advisory opinion regarding an issue that the Debtor had not raised and had no standing to raise.

However, even if the Bankruptcy Court had jurisdiction and authority to raise and resolve this new issue, the court's conclusions on this issue are erroneous. The plain language of this provision supports the proposition that attorneys fall within the purview of the “debt relief agency” provisions. The BAPCPA defines the term "debt relief agency," with certain exceptions not applicable here, as "any person" that, for a fee, "provides any bankruptcy assistance to an assisted person." 11 U.S.C. § 101(12A). "Bankruptcy assistance" includes "providing information, advice, counsel . . . [and] legal representation." 11 U.S.C. § 101(4A). Thus, while the definition of "debt relief agency" does not specifically mention attorneys, its plain language, when coupled with the definition of the term "bankruptcy assistance," clearly covers attorneys who provide "advice," "counsel," or "legal representation" to consumer debtors with respect to a bankruptcy proceeding. Hersh v. United States, 347 B.R. 19, 22 (N.D. Tex. 2006), appeals pending, Nos. 07-10226 and 07-10265 (5th Cir.) ("[a] reading of the text for plain meaning indicates that the term 'debt relief agency' includes bankruptcy attorneys such as Hersh"); Olsen v. Gonzales, 350 B.R. 906, 912 (D. Or. 2006) ("the plain language of the Act . . leads to the conclusion that attorneys are to be included in the definition of 'debt relief agency'").[3] As the court in Hersh explained, "as only attorneys are authorized to provide legal advice and '. . . providing legal advice' is part of the definition of bankruptcy assistance, it seems clear that bankruptcy attorneys such as Hersh fit within the definition of 'persons providing bankruptcy assistance.'" Hersh, 347 B.R. at 22-23.

Aside from the statutory language used to define "debt relief agency" and "bankruptcy assistance," other provisions of the BAPCPA also demonstrate that Congress intended to include

[3] Contra Milavetz, Gallop & Milavetz v. United States, 355 B.R. 758, 767-68 (D. Minn. 2006); In re Attorneys at Law and Debt Relief Agencies, 332 B.R. 66, 69 (Bankr. S.D. Ga. 2005). The decision in Milavetz was issued in the context of denying defendant's motion to dismiss. Based on that decision, plaintiffs filed a motion for summary judgment, and the United States opposed on the grounds that plaintiffs were not entitled to judgment as a matter of law. The district court granted plaintiffs' motion for summary judgment and issued a final judgment on April 19, 2007. The decision by Bankruptcy Court for the Southern District of Georgia in In re Attorneys as Law and Debt Relief Agency was made sua sponte, without benefit of briefing by any party.

attorneys within the definition of "debt relief agency." For example, § 527(b) specifically requires the written notice to also contain the following statements:

> IMPORTANT INFORMATION ABOUT BANKRUPTCY ASSISTANCE SERVICES FROM AN ATTORNEY OR BANKRUPTCY PETITION PREPARER. . . . THE LAW REQUIRES AN ATTORNEY OR BANKRUPTCY PETITION PREPARER TO GIVE YOU A WRITTEN CONTRACT SPECIFYING WHAT THE ATTORNEY OR BANKRUPTCY PETITION PREPARER WILL DO FOR YOU AND HOW MUCH IT WILL COST.

11 U.S.C. § 527(b) (emphasis in the form of underlining added). The reference to an attorney in connection with one of the specific obligations imposed on a debt relief agency (i.e., the provision of a written contract) shows that an attorney falls within the definition of a debt relief agency. Indeed, the reference to the law requiring an attorney to provide a written contract to the debtor would make little sense unless an attorney were a debt relief agency.[4]

Thus, the term "debt relief agency" clearly encompasses an attorney who provides bankruptcy assistance to an assisted person. Where, as here, the plain language of an Act is broad enough to encompass attorneys, the courts have refused to imply an exception. For example, in Heintz v. Jenkins, 514 U.S. 291, 297 (1995), the Supreme Court held that lawyers who regularly engaged in litigation to collect consumer debts fell within the definition of "debt-collector" under the Fair Debt Collection Practices Act even though the definition did not mention "lawyers" or [4] Even if the plain language of the statute left any room for doubt, the legislative history of the provision likewise demonstrates that Congress intended the term "debt relief agency" to encompass attorneys. Hersh, 347 B.R. at 23. In the House Report, Congress specifically found that there was "misconduct by attorneys and other professionals" in the bankruptcy system. H.R. Rep. No. 109-31, 109th Cong., 1st Sess. at 4, reprinted in 2005 U.S.C.C.A.N. at 92. Congress also described that debt relief provisions as "provisions strengthening professionalism standards for attorneys and others who assist consumer debtors with their bankruptcy cases." Id. at 103.

the "practice of law." Similarly, in Goldfarb v. Virginia State Bar, 421 U.S. 773, 786 (1975), the Supreme Court refused to imply an exemption for attorneys in the Sherman Act, which prohibits those engaged in a "trade or commerce" from price fixing. As the Supreme Court emphasized, "our cases have repeatedly established that there is a heavy presumption against implicit exemptions." Id. at 787. That presumption applies with particular force here because BAPCPA expressly excepted from the definition of "debt relief agencies" certain other types of persons or organizations (i.e., nonprofit organizations). See 11 U.S.C. § 101(12A). As the Hersh court stressed, since the provision contains certain exemptions, "if Congress had wanted attorneys excluded from the term 'debt relief agency' (and as a result, the requirements of BAPCPA at issue here) it surely would have taken this opportunity to exclude them from what otherwise they are so plainly within." Hersh, 347 B.R. at 23. Accord Detweiler v. Pena, 38 F.3d 591, 594 (D.C. Cir. 1994) ("Where a statute contains explicit exceptions, the courts are reluctant to find other implicit exceptions.").

The Bankruptcy Court also tried to find some support for its interpretation in 11 U.S.C. § 526(d)(2). R. 30, at 6. But that provision demonstrates the opposite, namely that the debt relief agency provisions do cover attorneys. Section 526(d)(2) states that no language in Sections 526, 527, or 528 shall . . .

> (2) be deemed to limit or curtail the authority or ability –
>
> (A) of a State or subdivision or instrumentality thereof to determine and enforce qualifications for the practice of law under the laws of the State; or
> (B) of a Federal Court to determine and enforce the qualifications for the practice of law before that court.

11 U.S.C. § 526(d)(2). If the debt relief provisions did not apply to attorneys, this provision would be rendered meaningless. As the Supreme Court has recognized, courts are reluctant to treat statutory provisions as "surplusage." TRW Inc. v. Andrews, 534 U.S. 19, 31 (2001); Duncan v. Walker, 533 U.S. 167, 174 (2001); United States v. Mandhai, 375 F.3d 1243, 1248 (11th Cir. 2004); United States v. Canals-Jimenz, 943 F.2d 1284, 1287 (11th Cir. 1991).

Moreover, the Bankruptcy Court's reliance on Section 526(d)(2) ignores the difference recognized by the BAPCPA between restrictions on conduct and qualifications to practice law. Compare 11 U.S.C. §§ 526(d)(1) and (d)(2). The debt relief provisions at issue here do not relate to bar admission or other "qualifications for the practice of law" imposed by State or Federal courts. Instead, they are standards of conduct setting forth the notices and other requirements that attorneys must follow in representing clients in bankruptcy proceedings. Thus, while Section 526(d)(2) specifically provides that nothing in the debt relief agency provisions limits or curtails the power of the State or Federal court to determine the "qualifications" for practicing law, the BAPCPA treats state law governing conduct differently. State laws governing conduct are preempted "to the extent that such law is inconsistent with [Sections 526, 527 and 528], and then only to the extent of the inconsistency." 11 U.S.C. § 526(d)(1).

Accordingly, the Bankruptcy Court's finding that an attorney who provides advice and legal representation to an assisted person with regard to filing for bankruptcy for a fee is not a debt relief agency should be vacated because it was not necessary for the Bankruptcy Court to reach that issue or, alternatively, should be reversed because the finding is erroneous.

CONCLUSION

The Court should reverse the order of the Bankruptcy Court because it did not have jurisdiction to consider the Debtor's motion. In the alternative, even if the Bankruptcy Court had jurisdiction to consider Debtor's motion, the findings made by the Bankruptcy Court regarding the constitutionality of Sections 526, 527 and 528 and the broader statutory issue of whether attorneys who provide bankruptcy assistance for a fee fit within the definition of a debt relief agency should be vacated for the reasons stated herein.

CASES

STATUTES

INTRODUCTION

In this action, the Debtor sought a declaration upon a matter in which there was no dispute, namely that the definition of a "debt relief agency," 11 U.S.C. § 101(12A), does not include the Debtor's attorney, who did not receive a fee or other valuable consideration for her services. Although the court had no jurisdiction to consider the motion because it did not present a "case" or "controversy," the Bankruptcy Court compounded its error by raising sua sponte issues regarding the constitutionality of the statute's debt relief provisions and their application to attorneys who provide bankruptcy assistance for a fee, and then by addressing those broader issues first. Although the Bankruptcy Court later found that it had been unnecessary to reach those broader issues to resolve the narrower statutory issue raised by the Debtor, the Bankruptcy Court nevertheless included its findings on the broader issues in its order. None of the arguments presented by the Debtor supports the actions taken by the Bankruptcy Court.

I. THE BANKRUPTCY COURT DID NOT HAVE JURISDICTION TO CONSIDER DEBTOR'S MOTION BECAUSE THERE WAS NO CASE OR CONTROVERSY.

As explained in our initial brief, the Bankruptcy Court did not have jurisdiction to consider Debtor's motion seeking a declaration that attorneys who provide bankruptcy assistance on a pro bono basis are not debt relief agencies for two reasons. Initial Brief of Appellant, United States Trustee ("UST Br.") at 10-14. First, there was no actual "case" or "controversy" because there was no disagreement between the Debtor and the United States Trustee ("UST") with respect to the narrow statutory question presented by the motion. Second, even if there were a disagreement, the Debtor lacked standing to raise the issue because she has not alleged any injury to herself. Instead, the Debtor sought such an order because she alleges that other attorneys may be reluctant to provide pro bono services to other debtors. R. 30, at 8. The Debtor has no standing to raise the rights of other attorneys or other debtors. None of the arguments presented by the Debtor provide a basis for finding that the Bankruptcy Court had jurisdiction.

A. The Debtor's Motion Did Not Present A Justiciable Case or Controversy.

In her brief, the Debtor makes no attempt to show that there is any actual controversy between the Debtor and UST on the narrow issue raised by her motion. Instead, she seeks to avoid this fundamental jurisdictional defect by recasting the issue as a question of ripeness. Appellee's Answer Brief ("Debtor Br.") at 7-12. She then argues her motion is ripe for judicial review because she contends that the scope of the statute is unclear and, as a result, her attorney faces the threat of being prosecuted for violating debt relief provisions. Id. at 8.

This attempt to create a justiciable controversy is unpersuasive. As the Supreme Court has emphasized, in order for an action to be ripe, the threat of prosecution must be "credible," not merely "imaginary." Babbitt v. United Farm Workers Nat'l Union, 442 U.S. 289, 298 (1979). In this case, the purported threat of prosecution is not credible. Indeed, none has ever been alleged. As the Bankruptcy Court itself found, nothing in the definition of "debt relief agency" even remotely suggests that a pro bono attorney is a "debt relief agency." R. 30, at 7. Section 101(12A) "states clearly that the term 'debt relief agency' means 'any person who provides any bankruptcy assistance to an assisted person in return for the payment of money or other valuable consideration.'" Id. (emphasis added). As the Bankruptcy Court emphasized:

> [t]he use of the words "in return for" clearly imply an exchange. Under the circumstances described herein, there is no exchange between the Debtor and the attorney. The Debtor is receiving the pro bono services and is giving nothing in return for the same.

Id. (emphasis added). Moreover, the UST has explicitly stated that she agrees that pro bono attorneys are not debt relief agencies. R. 29, at 2-1.[1] Thus, any fear that the Debtor's attorney may have of being prosecuted for violation of the debt relief agency provisions in connection with her representation of the Debtor is purely imaginary.[2]

The Debtor also seeks to create a "controversy" by alleging for the first time that the debt relief provisions violate her First Amendment right to receive legal advice while her bankruptcy case is pending and being administrated. Debtor Br. at 9-11. This claim is misguided. First, her motion did not make any reference to any infringement of her First Amendment rights. Her motion was based solely on her statutory claim that pro bono attorneys did not fit within the definition of a debt relief agency, 11 U.S.C. § 101(12A). The issue of the constitutionality of debt relief provisions was raised sua sponte by the Bankruptcy Court at the hearing. R. 35, at 4. Indeed, even after the Court raised the issue, the Debtor's counsel never provided argument on that issue, but confined her remarks to the narrow statutory issue of whether pro bono attorneys were included in the definition of debt relief agency. Id. at 7-10. Second, her new First Amendment claim, like her "ripeness argument," is predicated on the erroneous assumption that the definition of debt relief agency could be read to include her pro bono attorney. But as explained above, pro bono attorneys do not fall within the plain language of the statute. She thus has no standing to challenge the constitutionality of the debt relief agency provisions. See UST Br. at 5-6; infra at 4-6.

[2] The facts here are readily distinguishable from the facts in the cases cited by the Debtor. In those cases, the threats of prosecution were credible. See, e.g., Secretary of State of Md. v. Joseph H. Munson, Inc., 467 U.S. 947, 951 (1984) (plaintiff alleged that the State "had informed it that it was subject" to the challenged statute and "would be prosecuted if it failed to comply with the provisions"); Dombrowski v. Pfister, 380 U.S. 479, 487 (1965) (plaintiff had been arrested for violation); New Mexicans for Richardson v. Gonzales, 64 F.3d 1495, 1502-1505 (10th Cir. 1995) (finding that the threat of prosecution was credible because the State had "not affirmatively disavowed any intention of bringing criminal prosecution against Congressman Richardson").

Debtor also cannot rely on 11 U.S.C. § 105 to avoid this jurisdictional defect. Section 105 addresses the court's authority to grant relief; it does not serve as a basis for the Court's jurisdiction. Matter of Zale Corp., 62 F.3d 746, 751 (5th Cir. 1995); United States Dep't of Air Force v. Carolina Parachute Corp., 907 F.2d 1469, 1475 (4th Cir. 1990); American Hardwoods, Inc. v. Deutchse Credit Corp., 885 F.2d 621, 624 (9th Cir. 1989); In re Nunez, Nos. 98-CV-7077 and 98-CV-7078, 2000 WL 655983, at *8 (E.D.N.Y. March 17, 2000).

In short, no matter how the Debtor tries to frame the issue, she cannot escape the fact that her motion sought an advisory opinion on a statutory issue on which there was no dispute.

B. The Debtor Lacked Standing to Raise the Issues Presented by Her Motion.

Even if there were an actual disagreement between the Debtor and the United States Trustee with regard to the issue of whether an attorney providing pro bono services fits within the definition of "debt relief agency," 11 U.S.C. § 101(12A), the Debtor had no standing to raise the issue. The "injury in fact" prerequisite for standing "requires that the party seeking review be himself among the injured." Lujan v. Defenders of Wildlife, 504 U.S. 555, 563 (1992). Therefore, in order to have standing to raise the issues presented by her motion, the Debtor had to establish that she personally suffered an injury as a result of the purported confusion over whether a pro bono attorney fits within the definition of debt relief agency. In this case, the Debtor failed to alleged any personal injury in her motion or at the hearing.

The Debtor now tries to meet this prerequisite for standing by alleging in her brief that she suffers an actual injury as a result of the debt relief provisions. Debtor's Br. at 13. This belated attempt to show injury is misguided because the debt relief provisions are directed at attorneys, not debtors. For that reason, as noted in our initial brief, courts have consistently found that debtors have no standing to challenge the application of the debt relief agency provisions. See In re Ella Srymanske, Case No. 05-60519 (Bankr. D. N.J. April 7, 2006); In re Michelle Moore, No. 05-24651 (Bankr. W.D. Wash. Feb. 23, 2006); In re McCartney, 336 B.R 588 (Bkrtcy. M.D. Ga. 2006); In re Harvey Beaver, No. 05-04080 (Bankr. W.D.N.C. Nov. 15, 2005).[3]

The Debtor nevertheless attempts to demonstrate an injury by suggesting that the legal advice that she receives "is currently distorted by confusing 'debt relief agency' BAPCPA provisions." Debtor Br. at 13. See also id. at 8 ("as Appellee's bankruptcy is pending and being administrated, she is denied her constitutional right to have informed pro bono legal advice"). Nowhere in her brief, however, does she identify which specific debt relief provisions allegedly limit the advice which she would otherwise receive during the pendency of her bankruptcy proceeding or what type of advice she otherwise would receive. Indeed, she cannot. The only two restrictions on advice are 11 U.S.C. §§ 526(a)(2) and (4). Section 526(a)(2) prohibits a debt relief agency from advising a debtor "to make a statement in a document filed in a case or proceeding under this title, that is untrue and misleading." Surely, the Debtor is not suggesting that her attorney would otherwise advise her to make a statement which is untrue or misleading. Section 526(a)(4) only prohibits advising a debtor to "incur more debt in contemplation of such person filing" a petition for bankruptcy. That provision does not limit any current advice from her attorney because it relates only to advice prior to filing for bankruptcy.

Accordingly, because the Debtor cannot show any injury to herself, the decision should be vacated because the Bankruptcy Court lacked jurisdiction to consider the motion.[4]

II. THE BANKRUPTCY COURT'S FINDING THAT 11 U.S.C. §§ 526, 527 AND 528 ARE UNCONSTITUTIONAL AS APPLIED TO ATTORNEYS SHOULD BE VACATED.

Even if the Bankruptcy Court had jurisdiction to reach the narrow statutory issue raised by the Debtor's motion, the Bankruptcy Court's finding that the debt relief provisions are unconstitutional as applied to attorneys should be vacated on at least three jurisdictional and/or procedural grounds: (1) The Bankruptcy Court lacked jurisdiction to consider the constitutionality of Sections 526, 527 and 528 because it found (and the parties agreed) that the provisions did not apply to Debtor's counsel; (2) it violated the doctrine of constitutional avoidance because, as the court itself acknowledged, it was possible to resolve the narrow issues raised by the Debtor without reaching the constitutional issue, and (3) the court improperly failed to provide the UST adequate notice and a meaningful opportunity to address the constitutionality of the provisions. See UST Br. at 14-20. None of the arguments made by the Debtor demonstrate otherwise.

First, as explained supra, the Bankruptcy Court and all parties agreed that the Debtor's

[4] In her brief, the Debtor tries to turn the fact that her motion did not establish a case or controversy into an advantage by suggesting that if there was no "case" or "controversy" presented by her initial motion, the UST has no standing to prosecute this appeal. Debtor Br. at 12 n. 3. In re Attorney at Law and Debt Relief Agencies, 353 B.R. 318, 312 (S.D. Ga. 2006), which she cites as support for this position, has no application here. In that case, the challenged order was not issued in connection with an actual bankruptcy case or proceeding. Therefore, although 11 U.S.C. § 307 provides that the UST "may raise and may appear and be heard on any issue in any case or proceeding under this title," the district court found that this provision did not apply in that case because there was no underlying bankruptcy case or proceeding. In this case, the challenged order was issued in the Debtor's bankruptcy case.

Moreover, unlike here, the order by the Bankruptcy Court in Georgia did not declare any provisions of the BAPCPA unconstitutional. It is clear that the United States has standing to challenge a decision declaring a federal statute unconstitutional. See 28 U.S.C. § 2403(a). A UST is a senior Department of Justice official. 28 U.S.C. § 581(a)(21).

attorney was not a debt relief agency since she did not accept any fee or other valuable consideration in return for her services. Accordingly, in this case, the constitutionality of these provisions was a purely abstract issue, which the Bankruptcy Court had no jurisdiction to consider.

Second, even were a constitutional question properly presented by the Debtor, the Bankruptcy Court's decision should be vacated because it violated the doctrine of constitutional avoidance regarding the order in which legal issues should be addressed. The doctrine is often referred to as the "last resort rule." It provides that court should not "pass upon a constitutional question . . . if there is also present some other ground upon which the case may be disposed of." Ashwander v. Tennessee Valley Authority, 297 U.S. 288, 347 (1936) (Brandeis, J., concurring). In short, "if a case can be decided on either of two grounds, one involving a constitutional question, the other a question of statutory construction or general law, the Court will decide only the latter." Id. (emphasis added). Accord Brooks v. Central Bank of Birmingham, 717 F.2d 1340, 1342-43 (11th Cir. 1983).

In this case, the Bankruptcy Court did just the opposite. See UST Br. at 17-18. Instead of addressing the narrow statutory issue raised by the Debtor's motion first, the Bankruptcy Court addressed the constitutional issue first. R. 30, at 4. When the Court finally considered the narrow statutory issues, it concluded that Debtor's counsel was not a debt relief agency under the plain language of the 11 U.S.C. § 101(12A) because she had not received a fee or other valuable consideration for her service. Id. at 7-8. Despite the fact that the Court found that it could resolve the case without reaching the constitutional issue, it issued an order which specifically found that the application of the debt relief agency provisions to Debtor's counsel was unconstitutional. Id. at 8-9. In short, it made a finding on a constitutional issue it should never have reached had it followed the "last resort rule."

In her brief, the Debtor seeks to obscure this point by confusing the "last resort rule" with a related but different rule – a rule for "choosing between two plausible interpretations of a statutory text." Debtor Br. at 15 (quoting Clark v. Martinez, 543 U.S. 371, 381 (2005).[5] Unlike the "last resort rule," this rule does not deal with the order in which constitutional and statutory issues are resolved. Instead, it is a rule of statutory construction, which provides that "where an otherwise acceptable construction of a statute would raise serious constitutional problems, the Court will construe the statute to avoid such problems unless such construction is plainly contrary to the intent of Congress." Edward J. DeBartolo Corp. v. Fla. Gulf Coast Bldg. & Constr. Trades Council, 485 U.S. 568, 575 (1988). As the Debtor acknowledges, this statutory construction "comes into play only when, after the application of ordinary textual analysis, the statute is found to be susceptible of more than one construction." Debtor Br. at 18 (quoting Clark v. Martinez, 543 U.S. at 385).

Contrary to the Debtor's suggestion, this rule of statutory construction has no application in this case. Unlike the Supreme Court cases cited by the Debtor, the statutory issue raised by the Debtor did not require the Bankruptcy Court to choose between two plausible interpretations of the statute. In this case, there was only one plausible interpretation of the statute: the Bankruptcy Court found (and all parties agreed) that pro bono attorneys did not fall within the plain language of the definition of a debt relief agency. R. 30, at 7-8. Indeed, the Court's decision demonstrates that it did not rely on this tool of statutory construction to resolve the statutory question presented by the Debtor's motion. In the portion of the decision in which the Court addressed the statutory question of whether pro bono attorneys fit within the statutory definition of a debt relief agency, the Court stated that is was "assuming . . . that 11 U.S.C. §§ 526-528 are both constitutional and applicable to attorneys." R. 30, at 6-7. Likewise in its concluding paragraph, the Court found that "even if 11 U.S.C. §§ 526, 527 and 528 pass constitutional muster," they "do not apply to attorneys providing pro bono representation to debtors and who receive no payment whatsoever, whether money or other valuable consideration, in return for their representation." Id. at 8. Accordingly, the Debtor's attempt to suggest that Bankruptcy Court complied with the doctrine of constitutional avoidance is based on a misunderstanding of both the doctrine and the Court's findings.

[5] As noted in Ashwander v. Tennessee Valley Authority, 297 U.S. 288, 346 (1936) (Brandeis, J., concurring), there are in fact "a series of rules under which [the Supreme Court] has avoided passing upon a large part of all the constitutional questions pressed upon it for decision." While each rule serves to avoid constitutional issues, each rule is distinct and should not be confused with the others. The "last resort rule" is the fourth rule listed by Justice Brandeis (id. at 347), and the statutory construction rule is the seventh rule listed. Id. at 348.

Finally, even if it were appropriate for the Bankruptcy Court to raise and consider the constitutional issue, the Bankruptcy Court erred by failing to provide the United States Trustee adequate notice and an opportunity to address the issue. UST Br. at 18-20. The Debtor's suggestion that the Bankruptcy Court provided the UST with an opportunity to file a supplemental brief ignores two critical points. First, while the Court stated that the trial attorney could file a supplemental brief if he did so "expeditiously" before the Court ruled (R. 35, at 6), it later made comments which suggested that a supplemental brief would not be necessary. When the trial attorney for the UST started to explain to the Court that he was not sure how long he would need to file a supplemental brief, the Court interrupted and said that it would later determine what further needs to be done after he heard the arguments. Id, at 7. After hearing argument on the narrow statutory issue, the Bankruptcy Court stated that while it might "include some dicta on the other two points," he would issue an order on the two issues raised by the Debtor since "that's the scope of the motion." Id. at 10. Second, the Bankruptcy Court did not provide the UST a realistic time to file a brief because it signed its order on the very next day. Thus, the Debtor's suggestion that UST had a meaningful opportunity to address the constitutional issue is not correct.

Accordingly, the Bankruptcy Court's findings regarding the constitutionality of the debt relief provisions should be vacated on each of these independent grounds.

III. THE BANKRUPTCY COURT'S FINDING THAT AN ATTORNEY WHO PROVIDES BANKRUPTCY ASSISTANCE TO ASSISTED PERSONS FOR A FEE IS NOT A DEBT RELIEF AGENCY SHOULD BE VACATED.

The Bankruptcy Court's finding that an attorney who provides bankruptcy assistance for a fee is not a debt relief agency should also be vacated. Like the constitutional issue, this was not an issue raised by the Debtor in her motion. Nor was it an issue that the Debtor had standing to raise because her counsel did not receive a fee or other valuable consideration in return for providing bankruptcy assistance to the Debtor. But even if the Court had jurisdiction of this broader statutory issues, its decision on this issue should be reversed because under the plain language of the statute, attorneys fall within the definition of the term "debt relief agency," as defined by 11 U.S.C. § 101(12A). Hersh v. United States, 347 B.R. 19, 22 (N.D. Tex. 2006), appeals pending, Nos. 07-10226 and 07-10265 (5th Cir.); Olsen v. Gonzales, 350 B.R. 906, 912 (D. Ore. 2006), appeal pending, No. ___ (9th Cir.) (filed July 24,2007). As the Court in Hersh explained, "as only attorneys are authorized to provide legal advice and 'providing legal advice' is part of the definition of bankruptcy assistance, it seems clear that bankruptcy attorneys . . . fit within the definition of 'persons providing bankruptcy assistance.'" 347 B.R. at 22-23. See also UST Br. at 20-25.

In her brief, the Debtor cites Milavetz, Gallop & Milavetz v. United States, 355 B.R. 758, 768 (D. Minn. 2006), appeal pending, No. 07-2405 (8th Cir.), as support for the Bankruptcy Court's contrary reading of the statute. Debtor's Br. at 20.[6] In that decision, the court acknowledged that BAPCPA's definition of a debt relief agency "might include attorneys" but suggested that 11 U.S.C. § 526(d)(2)(A) created an ambiguity on this point. 355 B.R. at 768. Citing to this purported ambiguity, the court then held that the definition should be read to exclude attorneys because including attorneys under BAPCPA's restrictions would unconstitutionally infringe "on the state's traditional role of regulating attorneys." Id. (citing Leis v. Flynt, 439 U.S. 438, 442 (1979)).

The analysis used by the Milavetz court is flawed. First, contrary to the Milavetz court's conclusion, 11 U.S.C. § 526(d)(2) actually demonstrates that the debt relief agency provisions do cover attorneys. See UST Br. at 23-25. If the debt relief provisions did not apply to attorneys, there would be no need for a provision stating that the debt relief provisions do not limit the authority or ability of the state "determine and enforce qualifications for the practice of law under the laws of that State." 11 U.S.C. § 526(d)(2)(A).[7] Nowhere in her brief does the Debtor address this point.

[6] The Debtor also tries to find some support for the Bankruptcy Court's interpretation by noting that the words "attorney" or "lawyer" do not appear in the definition of debt relief agency. But where, as here, the plain language of a statute is broad enough to encompass attorneys, the fact that attorneys are not mentioned is irrelevant. See Heintz v. Jenkins, 514 U.S. 291, 296-97 (1995)(the Supreme Court held that lawyers who regularly engaged in litigation to collect consumer debts fell within the definition of "debt collector" under the Fair Debt Collection Practices Act even though the definition did not mention "lawyers" or the "practice of law").

[7] The Milavetz court's reliance on Section 526(d)(2) also ignores the difference recognized by the BAPCPA between restrictions on conduct and qualifications to practice law. Compare 11 U.S.C. §§ 526(d)(1) and (d)(2). The debt relief provisions do not relate to bar admission or other "qualifications for the practice of law" imposed by State or Federal courts. Instead, they are standards of conduct setting forth the notices and other requirements that attorneys must follow in representing clients in bankruptcy proceedings. Thus, while Section 526(d)(2) specifically provides that nothing in the debt relief agency provisions limits or curtails the power of the State or Federal court to determine the "qualifications" for practicing law, the BAPCPA treats state law governing conduct differently. State laws governing conduct are preempted "to the extent that such law is inconsistent with [Sections 526, 527 and 528], and then only to the extent of the inconsistency." 11 U.S.C. § 526(d)(1).

Second, there is no legal support for the Milavetz court's conclusion that application of the debt relief provision to attorneys would unconstitutionally infringe on the state's tradition role to regulate attorneys. While the Supreme Court in Leis v. Flynt acknowledged the traditional role of the states in regulating the practice of law in their boundaries in its dicta, nothing in that decision suggested that the Constitution precludes the federal government from regulating the conduct of attorneys when an attorney practices federal law in a federal forum. Indeed, that case did not involve a challenge to any federal statute or regulation. Instead, in Leis v. Flynt, plaintiff's claim was that a state could not preclude an attorney licensed in another state from representing a defendant in a state criminal proceeding.

The Supreme Court has specifically recognized that the federal government can regulate the conduct of attorneys. Heinz v. Jenkins, 514 U.S. 291, 298 (1995) (Supreme Court held that lawyers who regularly engage in litigation to collect consumer debts fell within the definition of debt collector under Fair Debt Collection Act even though the term "lawyer" or "practice of law" is not explicitly mentioned); Goldfarb v. Virginia State Bar, 421 U.S. 773, 792-93 (1975) (Supreme Court refuses to imply an exception for attorney in the Sherman Act); see also Sperry v. State of Fla. ex rel. Fla. Bar, 373 U.S. 379 (1963) (Florida may not "enjoin a nonlawyer registered to practice before the United States Patent Office from preparing and prosecuting patent applications in Florida"). Moreover, the Bankruptcy Clause authorizes Congress "to establish . . . uniform Laws on the subject of Bankruptcies throughout the United States." U.S. Const., art. I, § 8, cl. 4. The provisions at issue clearly come within that power. Thus, contrary to the finding of the Milavetz court, there is no reason to construe the provisions so as not to apply to attorneys.

The Bankruptcy Court's finding on the broader statutory issue should, therefore, also be vacated.

CONCLUSION

The Court should reverse the order of the Bankruptcy Court because it did not have jurisdiction to consider the Debtor's motion. In the alternative, even if the Bankruptcy Court had jurisdiction to consider Debtor's motion, the findings made by the Bankruptcy Court regarding the constitutionality of Sections 526, 527 and 528 and the broader statutory issue of whether attorneys who provide bankruptcy assistance for a fee fit within the definition of a debt relief agency should be vacated for the reasons stated herein.

BRIEF FOR APPELLEE UNITED STATES TRUSTEE

STATEMENT OF JURISDICTION

This appeal arises from an adversary proceeding filed in the bankruptcy case of Jayson Reynoso against the preparer of his bankruptcy petition, Mr. Henry Ihejirika doing business as Frankfort Digital Services, Ltd. and Ziinet.com

[1] William T. Neary recently resigned as the United States Trustee for the region. Sara L. Kistler is now Acting United States Trustee for the region. Therefore, Ms. Kistler should be substituted for Mr. Neary, pursuant to Fed. R. App. P. 43(c)(2).

(hereinafter collectively "Frankfort Digital"). The United States Trustee[2] filed a complaint seeking the assessment of fines, disgorgement of funds, injunctive relief, certification to the district court for damages, sanctions, fees, and costs, 11 U.S.C. §§ 110 (b),(c),(h),(i),(j), 329 , against Frankfort Digital. ER[3] 54-67. The bankruptcy court had jurisdiction over the adversary proceeding under 28 U.S.C. § 1334 and § 157(b)(1) and (b)(2)(A). The bankruptcy court entered judgment against Frankfort Digital on April 25, 2003. ER 12. Frankfort Digital filed a timely notice of appeal to the Bankruptcy Appellate Panel ("BAP") on April 25, 2003, which had jurisdiction under 28 U.S.C. § 158(b), (c). ER 1. On September 20, 2004, the BAP affirmed the judgment. In re Reynoso, 315 B.R. 544, 554 (B.A.P. 9th Cir. 2004).

On October 19, 2004, Frankfort Digital filed a timely notice of appeal. ER

A-1. This Court has jurisdiction under 28 U.S.C. § 158(d).

STATEMENT OF THE ISSUES PRESENTED

I. Whether the bankruptcy court erred in holding that Frankfort Digital cannot relitigate the issues of whether it was acting as a bankruptcy petition preparer and engaged in the unauthorized practice of law when those issues were already fully litigated and decided on the merits against Frankfort Digital.

II. Whether the bankruptcy court clearly erred, in its alternative holding, in finding that Frankfort Digital was a bankruptcy petition preparer and had engaged in the unauthorized practice of law, given the overwhelming evidence that Frankfort Digital prepared bankruptcy documents for filing for compensation and was not an attorney or employee of an attorney, and where the evidence showed that Frankfort Digital solicited information from debtors which was then entered into a bankruptcy schedule, and advised debtors of exemptions from which to choose, or actually chose exemptions for debtors without explanation.

III. Whether the bankruptcy court abused its discretion in determining that Frankfort Digital's conduct was fraudulent, unfair, or deceptive, and granting appropriate relief.

STATEMENT OF THE CASE

I. NATURE OF THE CASE

This appeal challenges a judgment by the United States Bankruptcy Court for the Northern District of California which determined after a trial that Frankfort Digital was a bankruptcy petition preparer within the meaning of 11 U.S.C § 110(a)(1) and had engaged in the unauthorized practice of law, and in fraudulent, unfair, or deceptive conduct. The bankruptcy court ordered Frankfort Digital to pay fines and disgorge fees, enjoined it from acting as a bankruptcy petition preparer or otherwise assisting in the preparation of documents to be filed in a bankruptcy case, and certified the facts to the district court for entry of an order for damages under 11 U.S.C. § 110(i). The judgment and order was reviewed and sustained by the Ninth Circuit BAP.

II. STATUTORY FRAMEWORK

When enacting the Bankruptcy Reform Act, Pub. L. No. 103-394, 108 Stat. 4106 (1994), in 1994, Congress recognized the "growing problem of bankruptcy preparers who abuse the system in the course of preparing documents for debtors to file in bankruptcy court." 140 Cong. Rec. S4504, S4506 (daily ed. Apr. 20, 1994) (statement of Senator Metzenbaum). Congress found that there was an urgent need to regulate petition preparers, noting that "Bankruptcy petition preparers not employed or supervised by any attorney have proliferated across the country" and "[w]hile it is permissible for a petition preparer to provide services solely limited to typing, far too many of them also attempt to provide legal advice and legal services to debtors." H.R. Rep. No. 103-835, 56 (1994), reprinted in 1994 U.S.C.C.A.N. 3340, 3365. Recognizing that "[t]hese preparers often lack the necessary legal training and ethics regulation to provide such services in [an] adequate and appropriate manner," Congress feared that "[t]hese services may take unfair advantage of persons who are ignorant of their rights both inside and outside the bankruptcy system." Ibid.

Negligence and fraud were widespread, with "[h]undreds of typing mills * * * luring customers with vague promises of solving their credit problems, charging the customers hundreds of dollars while inducing them to sign bankruptcy petitions they often do not understand, and then improperly filing bankruptcy on their behalf." 140 Cong. Rec. S14597, S14597 (daily ed. Oct. 7, 1994) (Senator Metzenbaum). Moreover, there was concern in Congress that most of the "petition mills" were located in poor and minority communities and "prey[ed] on the poor and unsophisticated." Ibid.

Congress responded to this widespread problem by enacting the protections now codified at 11 U.S.C. § 110.[4] That section defines as a bankruptcy petition preparer ("BPP") any "person, other than an attorney or an employee of an attorney, who prepares for compensation a document for filing" in a bankruptcy case. 11 U.S.C. § 110(a)(1). A "document for filing" is a "petition or any other document prepared for filing by a debtor in a United States bankruptcy court or a United States district court in connection with a case under this title." Id. § 110(a)(2).

The statute requires bankruptcy petition preparers to sign each document filed in the bankruptcy, and to include on each document the preparer's name, address and social security number. Id. § 110 (b),(c). Petition preparers must also supply the debtor with copies of each document filed. Id. § 110(d). Section 110 prohibits petition preparers from executing documents on behalf of debtors (id. § 110(e)), from advertising their services as "legal" services or using a similar term (id. § 110(f)), and from collecting payment from the debtor for court fees (id. § 110(g)). The statute also requires petition preparers to file a declaration disclosing all fees received from or charged to the debtor. Id. § 110(h)(1). In addition, Section 110 also provides remedies for the victims of negligence, or any "fraudulent, unfair, or deceptive act." Id. § 110(i).

In terms of remedies, Section 110 authorizes bankruptcy courts to impose fines for non-compliance with its requirements. See, e.g., 11 U.S.C. § 110(b)(2), (c)(3), (d)(2), (e)(2), (f)(2), (g)(2), (h)(4) (establishing fines for the violation of specific provisions of the statute). The statute grants the bankruptcy court specific authority to review the fees of bankruptcy petition preparers and also authorizes the court to disallow and order the disgorgement of fees found to be in excess of the value of services rendered. Id. § 110(h)(1), (2). See also 11 U.S.C. § 329. In addition, if a bankruptcy court finds that a bankruptcy petition preparer's negligence causes a bankruptcy case or related proceeding to be dismissed, or it finds that the preparer has committed "any fraudulent, unfair, or deceptive act," it must certify that fact to the district court, which, after a hearing can impose damages. Id. § 110(i).

Section 110 also includes two provisions that authorize injunctive relief against petition preparers. First, specified types of conduct may be enjoined (1) where a petition preparer's conduct might be subject to a criminal penalty; (2) where the preparer has "misrepresented [his or her] experience or education as a bankruptcy petition preparer"; or (3) where the preparer has "engaged in any other fraudulent, unfair, or deceptive conduct", if "injunctive relief is appropriate to prevent the recurrence of such conduct." 11 U.S.C. § 110(j)(1)-(2)(A). Second, the statute provides that a court "may enjoin [a] person from acting as a bankruptcy petition preparer." Id. § 110(j)(2)(B). An injunction prohibiting a person from acting as a petition preparer is available to restrain a petition preparer who has "continually engaged in" conduct that may be enjoined under Subsection (j)(2)(A) if "an injunction prohibiting such conduct would not be sufficient to prevent such person's interference with the proper administration of" the bankruptcy code. Id. § 110(j)(2)(B). In addition, injunctive relief under Subsection (j)(2)(B) is also available in cases where a petition preparer "has not paid a penalty imposed under this section." Ibid.

III. FACTS AND PRIOR PROCEEDINGS.

A. Henry Ihejirika owns and operates Frankfort Digital Services, Ltd., a Bahamian corporation. ER 209-10. Frankfort Digital does business under at least 16 different names, including "www.ziinet.com" and "www.700law.com." Ibid. In December 2001, Ihejirika applied on behalf of Frankfort Digital for registration of a trademark with the United States Patent and Trademark Office. Id. at 210. Frankfort Digital described itself as providing "Internet based computer software for preparing legal documents" and sought to protect its "ziinet power" mark, representing that it was first used in August 2000. Ibid.

Frankfort Digital advertised its internet-based software, Ziinet, on its websites on the world wide web and advised prospective users that it was "an expert system and knows the law." ER 185, 237. The website explained that "[u]nlike most bankruptcy programs which are little more than customized word processors the Ziinet engine is an expert system. It knows bankruptcy laws right down to those applicable to the state in which you live. Now you no longer need to spend weeks studying bankruptcy laws." ER 185, 237 (emphasis in original). The website claimed that it could "automatically select bankruptcy exemptions for you" and that a user would merely have to "enter your information and Ziinet automatically figures where to put the data." ER 185, 238 (emphasis in original). Among the many "loopholes" and "little known techniques" on which the website promised to advise debtors, included: "You have heard that if you are married and have joint debts that you both must file to get rid of debts. Right? * * * Find out how to throw your creditors off your spouse's trail when you file alone", "[h]ow would you like to file bankruptcy and keep 3, 4 or even 5 cars with two little known techniques that are perfectly legal in all 50 states," and "[l]earn how to legally keep your secured furniture, big screen TV and much more without making payments." ER 229-30.

Ihejirika created an account with the internet-payment company known as Pay Pal, Inc., on April 5, 2001, to allow payments for Ziinet use to be made via Pay Pal for providing "access to barnkuptcy {sic} engine - for filing" by "ziinet.com bk engine - frankfort Digital[.]" ER 210. As of March 27, 2003, payments totaling more than $1,760,000 had been made to this account for preparing bankruptcy documents for filing. Id. at 211.

B. On October 28, 2002, the United States Bankruptcy Court for the Central District of California entered a judgment against Frankfort Digital in which Frankfort Digital was held to be a bankruptcy petition preparer, to have violated various parts of 11 U.S.C. § 110, and to have engaged in the unauthorized practice of law. In re Pillot, 286 B.R. 157, 163 (Bankr. C. D. Cal. 2002). Frankfort Digital did not appeal from the Pillot judgment.

C. 1. This particular litigation arises out of a chapter 7 bankruptcy filed by Jayson Reynoso on February 28, 2002. ER 188. Tevis Thompson, the chapter 7 trustee, conducted the first meeting of creditors relating to that case on March 27, 2002. Ibid. When Thompson asked Reynoso if he had assistance preparing his bankruptcy papers, Reynoso responded that he had paid for the assistance of an online bankruptcy engine. Ibid. Thompson asked about certain errors in the documents, for example the fact that Reynoso's schedule B showed no "household goods" or "wearing apparel," and Reynoso responded that the website had not asked for such information. Ibid. Reynoso was required to amend his schedules and statement of financial affairs to correctly reflect his financial condition. Ibid.

On October 2, 2002, the U.S. Trustee filed a complaint against Frankfort Digital in the United States Bankruptcy Court for the Northern District of California, which was later superceded by an amended complaint and a second amended complaint, ER 9-10, 54-67. The second amended complaint sought the assessment of fines, disgorgement of funds, injunctive relief, certification to the district court for damages, sanctions, fees, and costs, 11 U.S.C. §§ 110 (b),(c),(h),(i),(j), 329, against Frankfort Digital. ER 54-67. The second amended complaint was based on allegations as to debtor Reynoso and a number of other debtors who had used Frankfort Digital's services. ER 58-60.

2. The bankruptcy court held a trial on April 7, 2003, on the issues of whether Frankfort Digital was a bankruptcy petition preparer, had violated Section 110, had charged unreasonable fees, had engaged in the unauthorized practice of law and had engaged in fraudulent, unfair, or deceptive conduct. At trial, Reynoso and three other debtors who had used Frankfort Digital's services (Laurie Coggins, Lewis Martin and Diane Amaral) testified on behalf of the U.S. Trustee. See Transcript 14, 31, 45, 49. Trustee Thompson also testified. Transcript, 38:25-44:18. Frankfort Digital offered no witnesses and did not cross-examine witnesses Thompson, Martin, or Amaral. Although the U.S. Trustee was prepared to present several more witnesses, see ER 134, Frankfort Digital and the U.S. Trustee met during a recess at trial in which they shortened the trial by stipulating to most of the findings of fact, see Transcript, 13:19-25; 43:2-18; 44:9-13.

Reynoso testified at trial to the following facts: He searched the internet for a way to file for bankruptcy. Transcript, 14:7-15:1; ER 184-85. Reynoso paid Frankfort Digital $219 to assist in preparing his bankruptcy papers for which Reynoso ultimately received a printed and filled out voluntary petition, schedules, statement of financial affairs and statement of intention. Transcript 14:7-16:23; ER 185; In re Reynoso, 315 B.R. at 248. Frankfort Digital's website,[5] Ziinet, prompted

[5] For the sake of simplicity, we refer to Ziinet as a website though it might also be described as web-based software. Nothing turns on the nomenclature.

Reynoso to respond to certain questions through the use of dialog boxes that solicited various information such as personal identification, assets, debts, income, etc. Transcript 17:18-20:2; ER 185-88; In re Reynoso, 315 B.R. at 548. The website advised Reynoso of various items for which he might claim exemptions including cars, boats, and apparel. Transcript, 18:10-17, 20:14-22:7. The website advised him "you don't need to enter certain things, if it's certain things that may seem complicated, as far as when you file your bankruptcy." Transcript, 21:15-21:18. This advice led Reynoso not to list any "Wearing Apparel" or "Household Goods" in Schedule B. Transcript, 21:9-22:6, 24:2-25:2; ER 188. Reynoso also testified that the website presented available exemptions for him to claim and selected exemptions for him which were not specifically chosen or typed by him but instead tied in automatically. Transcript, 18:7-20:20, 30:2-18. This included the website entering in specific code numbers into Schedule C under the column calling for "Specific Law Providing Each Exemption." Transcript, 18:7-19:3, 30:3-18; ER 186.

Additional evidence established that in response to question number 9 (payments related to debt counseling or bankruptcy), the software automatically inserted into Reynoso's statement of financial affairs a paragraph reading:

> Realizing that this document is signed under penalty of perjury, I declare that I prepared my own bankruptcy by myself using a computer and that I as not assisted by an attorney, paralegal or bankruptcy preparer. I downloaded the software into my computer's browser as a web page, > typed in my bankruptcy information and printed my bankruptcy documents on my printer in the privacy of my home without any human intervention other than mine. The software printed the official Federal bankruptcy forms with the information I typed in within a few seconds of my pressing the print button and no one other than myself inputted, edited or reviewed my bankruptcy information or handled my bankruptcy documents at any point in the process. The contents of my documents are based entirely on my own research and no one gave me legal advice or told me to include or omit any information from my documents.

In re Reynoso, 315 B.R. at 548; ER 187. After Reynoso entered his responses to the questions posed by the website, a set of bankruptcy documents were revealed for the first time with Reynoso's responses appearing in certain portions of the documents. ER 187; In re Reynoso, 315 B.R. at 548. Reynoso took his printed documents and filed for bankruptcy on February 28, 2002. ER 188. Similar testimony was offered by the three other debtors who testified at trial. See Transcript, 31:18-38:10 (Laurie Coggins), 45:12-48:15 (Lewis Martin), 49:14-51:6 (Diane Amaral). The evidence showed that those debtors' experience with Frankfort Digital's website was similar to Reynoso's, and that neither Frankfort Digital's involvement in the document preparation nor the fees it charged were disclosed in the documents. See id. ER 198-99 (Laurie Coggins), 203-05 (Lewis Martin), 205 (Diane Amaral). In all cases, fees charged for use of the software were in excess of the $125 authorized under the Northern District of California's Bankruptcy Petition Preparer Guidelines ("BPP Guidelines"). E.g., In re Reynoso, 315 B.R. at 549; ER 185, 198, 203, 205.

Evidence was also offered as to a portion of Frankfort Digital's website known as "The Bankruptcy Vault" or "the Vault." This portion of the website provided advice on "[h]ow to hide your bankruptcy from the credit bureaus", Supp. ER. 25, including "[i]f you do not put your social security number on your initial bankruptcy papers, they cannot match you," ibid., and "you can file a partial bankruptcy and the court clerk will dismiss your case in just 15 days. Filing a partial bankruptcy means leaving off some of the documents when you file the first time," id. at 33. Reynoso testified and the bankruptcy court found that Reynoso received an email providing more information on "the Vault." Reynoso testified he accessed "the Vault" and read through it, but that he declined to use the techniques contained in "the Vault" because he had serious concerns about their legality. See ER 185; Transcript, 20:14-21:4; In re Reynoso, 315 B.R. at 548. It is undisputed that "the Vault" was up and running when Reynoso used the website. ER 185; In re Reynoso, 315 B.R. at 551. No testimony was offered as to whether the other representative debtors viewed "the Vault."

3. On April 11, 2003, the bankruptcy court found that Frankfort Digital was a bankruptcy petition preparer within the meaning of 11 U.S.C § 110, had continually and intentionally violated Section 110, had engaged in the unauthorized practice of law, and had engaged in fraudulent, unfair, or deceptive conduct. ER 11, 213-16. The bankruptcy court ordered Frankfort Digital to pay fines and to disgorge fees to each Northern District of California debtor who was Frankfort Digital's customer. Id. at 214-18. The bankruptcy court also enjoined Frankfort Digital from acting as a bankruptcy petition preparer or otherwise assisting in the preparation of documents to be filed in a bankruptcy case in the Northern District of California, and certified the facts to the district court to allow for entry of an order for damages under 11 U.S.C. § 110(i). Id. at 216-20.

Although the bankruptcy court certified the facts to the district court, none of the creditors, debtors nor trustees moved in the district court for an entry of an order for damages pursuant to 11 U.S.C. § 110(i), and no damages were imposed. ER 11; Supp. ER 150-52.

On May 9, 2003, Frankfort Digital moved for a Partial Stay Pending Appeal. On June 4, 2003, the bankruptcy court denied the motion for a partial stay, making clear that it intended the fines to be assessed only as to Reynoso's case, but that it intended to require Frankfort Digital to disgorge fees as to all the debtors which had used its service in the Northern District of California. ER 14; Supp. ER 154-55; Appellants' Revised Br. 8 & n.2.

4. Frankfort Digital appealed to the Bankruptcy Appellate Panel on the same grounds it marshals in this appeal. The BAP sustained the Bankruptcy Court judgment in all respects. In re Reynoso, 315 B.R. 544 (B.A.P. 9th Cir. 2004). Frankfort Digital filed this appeal on October 19, 2004. ER A-1.

SUMMARY OF ARGUMENT

Frankfort Digital is paradigmatic of the type of entity that motivated Congress to enact 11 U.S.C. § 110, a business that targets desperate and poor debtors, promises more than the law allows, delivers less than what it promises, and leaves debtors high and dry when problems in their filings are noticed.

The bankruptcy court and BAP were presented with an overwhelming amount of evidence that Frankfort Digital not only acted as a bankruptcy petition preparer but engaged in conduct outside the permissible bounds of that role and engaged in the unauthorized practice of law. This was, in fact, how Frankfort Digital advertised its service to prospective customers, representing it to be an "expert system" that "knows bankruptcy laws right down to those applicable to the state in which you live" and could "automatically select bankruptcy exemptions for you," such that a user need only enter his data and the system "automatically figures where to put the data." ER 185 (emphasis in original).

The bankruptcy court's findings were well-supported by the record. Testimony by debtors proved that Frankfort Digital's website solicited information such as personal identification, assets, debts, income which it then transformed into a set of bankruptcy documents, with the only task left for the debtor to do was printing. But Frankfort Digital's service did not merely transform information it solicited from debtors into completed bankruptcy documents, which would alone be enough to constitute the preparing of bankruptcy documents for filing, but automatically selected exemptions for debtors. For example, Frankfort Digital inserted statute numbers in portions of Schedule C calling for "Specific Law Providing Each Exemption." E.g., ER 186. It also automatically inserted text into bankruptcy documents without debtors' permission including a statement "signed under penalty of perjury" that the debtor had prepared his or her own document and "was not assisted by an attorney, paralegal or bankruptcy preparer." In re Reynoso, 315 B.R. at 548; ER 187.

The bankruptcy court and BAP were not clearly erroneous in finding this evidence sufficient to prove that Frankfort Digital was a bankruptcy petition preparer, defined by statute as "person, other than an attorney or an employee of an attorney, who prepares for compensation a document for filing." 11 U.S.C. § 110(a)(1). Frankfort Digital does not dispute that it is not an attorney or employee of an attorney nor that it was compensated for its services. Frankfort Digital only disputes whether it prepared documents for filing, but the evidence that it did so was overwhelming.

Frankfort Digital's claims that it is not liable under Section 110 because its services are limited to licensing software which allows debtors to fill out their own bankruptcy petitions was correctly rejected by the bankruptcy court and BAP and has no basis in fact or law.

The bankruptcy court and BAP also did not clearly err in finding the evidence proved that Frankfort Digital engaged in the unauthorized practice of law in California because it (1) solicited information from a debtor which was then entered into a bankruptcy schedule, and/or (2) advised a debtor of exemptions from which to choose, or actually chose an exemption for the debtor without explanation.

In any event, that Frankfort Digital was a bankruptcy petition preparer under Section 110 and had engaged in the unauthorized practice of law was determined in a previous litigation from which Frankfort Digital did not appeal, In re Pillot, 286 B.R. 157 (Bankr. C.D. Cal. 2002), and the bankruptcy court and BAP did not clearly err in the alternative holding that those determinations be given issue preclusive (collateral estoppel) effect.

The bankruptcy court also did not abuse its discretion in finding Frankfort Digital's conduct was fraudulent, unfair, or deceptive, entering an injunction and certifying the case to the district court for entry of damages. Case law establishes that engaging in the unauthorized practice of law is itself sufficient to constitute fraudulent, unfair, or deceptive conduct, and, in any event, the bankruptcy court had ample evidence of other conduct that supported its determination. The bankruptcy court also did not abuse its discretion in ordering Frankfort Digital to disgorge fees it charged to all customers in the Northern District of California, including those who were not parties to the case, given its finding that the value of the services provided by Frankfort Digital was negligible.

Frankfort Digital has not really disputed any of the facts in this case, but instead attempts to avoid their significance by suggesting that they were merely a "mass adoption" of the suggested findings of the U.S. Trustee which the court "simply signed" without examination. Appellants' Revised Br. 26. This baseless accusation ignores the bankruptcy court judge's statement on the record that it had "reviewed each line and phrase," Transcript, 67:8-12, and the numerous changes to the proposed findings of fact made by the court. Any similarity between the U.S. Trustee's proposed findings of fact and the court's findings of fact are better explained by the fact that Frankfort Digital's counsel stipulated to most of the findings, offered no witnesses of his own, and engaged in very limited cross-examination of the Trustee's witnesses. In any event, Frankfort Digital has pointed to nothing in the findings that are clearly erroneous.

STANDARD OF REVIEW

This Court applies the same standard of review as the BAP did. In re Morrissey, 349 F.3d 1187, 1190 (9th Cir. 2003). In conducting this review, a bankruptcy court's findings of fact are upheld unless clearly erroneous while its conclusions of law are reviewed de novo. In re Bevan, 327 F.3d 994, 997 (9th Cir. 2003) (citing Figter Ltd. v. Teachers Ins. & Annuity Ass'n of Am. (In re Figter Ltd.), 118 F.3d 635, 637-38 (9th Cir. 1997)). A bankruptcy court's decision to impose discretionary penalties for a violation 11 U.S.C. § 110 is reviewed for abuse of discretion, In re Agyekum, 225 B.R. 695, 698 (B.A.P. 9th Cir. 1998). Under this standard, a court "must have a definite and firm conviction that the court below committed a clear error of judgment in the conclusion it reached, before reversal is proper." In re Crowe, 243 B.R. 43, 47 (B.A.P. 9th Cir. 2000), aff'd, 246 F.3d 673 (9th Cir. 2000) (quoting In re Tong Seae (U.S.A.), Inc., 81 B.R. 593, 597 (B.A.P. 9th Cir. 1988)).

ARGUMENT

I. THE BANKRUPTCY COURT DID NOT CLEARLY ERR IN DETERMINING THAT FRANKFORT DIGITAL WAS A BANKRUPTCY PETITION PREPARER AND HAD ENGAGED IN THE UNAUTHORIZED PRACTICE OF LAW

Section 110 of the Bankruptcy Code establishing numerous requirements and restrictions on the acts of bankruptcy petition preparers. A bankruptcy petition preparer is defined by statute as a "person, other than an attorney or an employee of an attorney, who prepares for compensation a document for filing[.]" 11 U.S.C. § 110(a)(1). Frankfort Digital conceded that it was not an attorney or an employee of an attorney, Appellants' Revised Br. 10, and there is no dispute that it had received compensation. The only thing that it contested was whether it "prepare[d] any 'document for filing'." Id. (emphasis added).

In this case the bankruptcy court had two alternative bases for concluding that Frankfort Digital was a bankruptcy petition preparer within the meaning of Section 110. First, it gave issue preclusive effect to the decision in an earlier case that Frankfort Digital was a bankruptcy petition preparer. ER 212. Second, it concluded on the merits that, based on the ample evidence before it, Frankfort Digital was a bankruptcy petition preparer within the meaning of Section 110. Id. at 213. Similarly, it had two alternative bases for concluding that Frankfort Digital was engaged in the unauthorized practice of law. First, it gave issue preclusive effect to the decision in an earlier case that Frankfort Digital was engaged in the unauthorized practice of law. Id. at 212. Second, it concluded on the merits that, based on the ample evidence before it, Frankfort Digital was engaged in the unauthorized practice of law. Id. at 216.

The BAP affirmed as to both issues on both the issue preclusion and merits grounds. In re Reynoso, 315 B.R. at 550-53. The bankruptcy court did not clearly err as to either ground, and sustaining its decision on either ground would be sufficient to affirm the judgment below.

A. The Bankruptcy Court Did Not Clearly Err in Applying Issue Preclusion Where Previous Adjudications Had Determined Frankfort Digital to Be a Bankruptcy Petition Preparer and Engaged in the Unauthorized Practice of Law.

The doctrine of issue preclusion (sometimes referred to as "collateral estoppel") forecloses the relitigation of matters that have already been actually litigated. Federal law governs the issue preclusive effects of a case decided by a federal court, including a bankruptcy court. Grogan v. Garner, 498 U.S. 279, 285 n.11 (1991); Fireman's Fund Ins. Co. v. Int'l Mkt. Place, 773 F.2d 1068, 1069 (9th Cir. 1985); In re Berr, 172 B.R. 299, 305 (B.A.P. 9th Cir. 1994). Under federal law, issue preclusion is appropriate when

> (1) there was a full and fair opportunity to litigate the issue in the previous action;
> (2) the issue was actually litigated in that action;

> (3) the issue was lost as a result of a final judgment in that action; and
> (4) the person against whom collateral estoppel is asserted in the present action was a party or in privity with a party in the previous action.

Pena v. Gardner, 976 F.2d 469, 472 (9th Cir. 1992). In In re Pillot, 286 B.R. 157 (Bankr. C.D. Cal. 2002), the U.S. Trustee filed a motion in the bankruptcy court for the Central District of California against Frankfort Digital alleging that it was a bankruptcy petition preparer under 11 U.S.C. § 110(a)(1), had violated Section 110(b)(1), (c)(1), and (h)(1), and had engaged in the unauthorized practice of law. The Bankruptcy court determined that "Henry Ihejirika, Ziinet.com, and Frankfort Digital Services, Ltd. are bankruptcy petition preparers, as that term is defined under 11 U.S.C. § 110(a)(1)" and ordered them to pay fines and disgorge fees. Id. at 162-63.

As the BAP concluded, all the elements of issue preclusion are met here and the Bankruptcy Court was correct to determine that the Pillot decision ought to be given issue preclusive effect, and find Frankfort Digital precluded from arguing it was not a bankruptcy petition preparer. In re Reynoso, 315 B.R. at 551. Frankfort Digital has not disputed that it was party to the Pillot case, that there was a full and fair opportunity to litigate these issues, that these issues were actually litigated and that they were essential to the final judgment. See Appellants Revised Br. 24-25. Its argument instead is that the issues at stake in this case were not identical to the ones in Pillot, because after the injunction in the Pillot case Frankfort Digital allegedly altered its website by removing "the Vault," and that the U.S. Trustee did not make a showing that the website viewed by Jayson Reynoso was the same as the one viewed by debtor in the Pillot case. Appellants' Revised Br. 24-25.

1. Frankfort Digital Waived Its Argument Against Issue Preclusion by Failing to Raise it Before the BAP.

As a threshold matter, this Court should find that, as the BAP noted, Frankfort Digital waived any argument against issue preclusion by failing to raise it before the BAP. In re Reynoso, 315 B.R. at 550. The same rules as to the preservation of arguments that apply to appeals from a district court proceeding apply when the appeal is from a bankruptcy proceeding. In re Bishop, Baldwin, Rewald, Dillingham & Wong, Inc., 104 F.3d 1147, 1148 (9th Cir. 1997) ("[O]ur case law on the preservation of issues from a district court's judgment also controls appeals from bankruptcy proceedings.") Frankfort Digital waived this argument by failing to raise any challenge to issue preclusion in its briefing before the BAP or even mentioning the Pillot case. See e.g., Med. Lab. Mgmt. Consultants v. Am. Broad. Cos., 306 F.3d 806, 820 n.8 (9th Cir. 2002) (finding argument waived because appellant "failed to raise them in its opening brief"); Laboa v. Calderon, 224 F.3d 972, 981 n.6 (9th Cir. 2000) (claims not specifically and distinctly argued in an appellant's opening brief are waived on appeal).

2. In Any Event, Frankfort Digital's Argument Against Issue Preclusion Is Utterly Without Support in Fact or Law.

Assuming, arguendo, that Frankfort Digital has not waived its argument against issue preclusion, the bankruptcy court and BAP nevertheless correctly determined that issue preclusion applied. Contrary to Frankfort Digital's suggestion, Appellants' Revised Br. 24-25, the BAP found that "the Vault" was available through Frankfort Digital's websites at the time Reynoso used the software, In re Reynoso, 315 B.R. at 551, a finding amply supported by the bankruptcy court's own findings of fact and Reynoso's own testimony, see ER 185-86; Transcript, 20:14-21:4.

Moreover, most of the facts relied on by the Pillot court to support its determination that Frankfort Digital was a bankruptcy petition preparer had nothing to do with the information available in "the Vault." The Pillot court determined that, as in this case, Frankfort Digital prepared documents for filing by transforming information it solicited from the debtor into completed bankruptcy documents, did so for compensation, and was not an attorney or an employee of an attorney. See In re Pillot, 286 B.R. at 159-60. The Pillot court also determined, again just as in this case, that Frankfort Digital itself inserted a response to question number 9 in the statement of financial affairs that was not the work of debtor, and concealed that it had assisted in preparing the documents including by failing to sign the documents as required by Section 110. Id. at 159.

Similarly, most of the facts relied on by the Pillot court to support its determination that Frankfort Digital was engaged in the unauthorized practice of law had nothing to do with the information available in "the Vault." The court noted that a number of statements on the website advised debtors that the website could automatically select exemptions for them, which constituted unauthorized practice of law. Id. at 160. As is discussed below, the bankruptcy court in this case explicitly found that the website automatically chose exemptions for debtors. Furthermore, the court noted that certain statements on the website "created an aura of expertise," statements such as "[a]ll you do is answer a few questions and leave the rest to Ziinet," "[i]f you cannot afford a trained bankruptcy attorney, then use Ziinet. Ziinet is an expert system * * * In fact Ziinet has a leg up on them [attorneys]" and "[i]f you use Ziinet, you answer a few questions and Ziinet takes care of the statement of intentions. You do not even need to know that there is such a thing as the statement of intentions." Id. at 160-61.

Therefore, the issues in the Pillot case were identical to the ones here, and Pillot ought to be given issue preclusive effect as to the issue of whether Frankfort Digital was a bankruptcy petition preparer and had engaged in the unauthorized practice of law.

3. Frankfort Digital Had Been Found to Be A Bankruptcy Petition Preparer and Engaged in the Unauthorized Practice of Law in A Number of Other Cases Where it Did Not Even Bother to Contest the Matter.

Pillot represents only one in a string of decisions finding that Frankfort Digital violated Section 110 and sanctioning it. In September 2002, the Bankruptcy Court for the Eastern District of Pennsylvania found Frankfort Digital Services, Ltd., Ziinet.com, and 700law.com to be bankruptcy petition preparers and enjoined them from acting as such. ER 211; Supp. ER 62-67. In November 2002, Frankfort Digital Services, Ltd., Ziinet.com, and 700law.com were enjoined from engaging in bankruptcy petition preparer activities by the bankruptcy court for the Western District of Tennessee. ER 212; Supp. ER 71-74. In February 2003, Frankfort Digital was found to have engaged in unauthorized practice of law and enjoined from engaging in bankruptcy petition preparer activities by the Bankruptcy Court in the Southern District of Iowa. ER 212 ; Supp. ER 75-78. In March 2003, this same bankruptcy court again found Frankfort Digital to have violated Section 110 and engaged in unauthorized practice of law, levied fines, and certified its conduct to the United States District Court for the district for an award of damages. ER 212; Supp. ER 79-84. In March 2003, Frankfort Digital was fined for violations of Section 110, found to have engaged in the unauthorized practice of law, and enjoined from engaging in bankruptcy petition preparer activities by the Bankruptcy Court for the District of Minnesota. ER 212; Supp. ER 85-109.

Although no one disputes that Frankfort Digital was given adequate notice, it nonetheless never appeared to defend itself in any of these cases, each of which resulted in a default judgment against it.

While the bankruptcy court and BAP did not rely on these cases for issue preclusion, relying instead on the Pillot case, this Court could also affirm on this ground. E.g., United States v. Smith, 389 F.3d 944, 955 (9th Cir. 2004). In the cases heard in the Eastern District of Pennsylvania and the Western District of Tennessee it appears that Henry Iherijika himself was not a named party. Nevertheless, issue preclusion is appropriate when a party in the current action was in privity with a party in the previous action, e.g., Pena, 976 F.2d at 472, and no one has disputed that Iherijika was in privity with Frankfort Digital Services, Ltd., Ziinet.com or 700law.com. Moreover, Iherijika was a named party in the cases before the Southern District of Iowa and the District of Minnesota.

Unlike Pillot, each of these four decisions was the product of a default judgment. As this Court has recognized, under California law a default judgment can form the basis for issue preclusion so long as (1) the party against which issue preclusion is being asserted has been personally served with summons or has actual knowledge of the existence of the litigation, and (2) the issue for which preclusion is asserted was properly raised by a party's pleadings or otherwise, was submitted to the court for determination, and actually determined by the court. E.g., In re Harmon, 250 F.3d 1240, 1247 (9th Cir. 2001). Neither of these prerequisites are in dispute here. That said, as noted, this case depends on the federal law of issue preclusion because it is a bankruptcy court decision which is asserted to have preclusive effect. It is not clear from this Court's precedents whether the federal law of issue preclusion follows California law in allowing default judgments to form the basis of issue preclusion. While dictum from a case decided more than twenty years ago in this Circuit suggests it may not, see In Re Gottheiner, 703 F.2d 1136, 1140 (9th Cir. 1983), a more recent decision by the Eleventh Circuit suggests that in certain circumstances federal issue preclusive effect can be given to a default judgment, In re Bush, 62 F.3d 1319, 1323-25 (11th Cir. 1995).

In any event, this Court need not reach this question if it determines that the Pillot decision itself should be given issue preclusive effect or it finds that the bankruptcy court did not clearly err in concluding that Frankfort Digital was a bankruptcy petition preparer and engaged in the unauthorized practice of law.

B. The Bankruptcy Court Did Not Clearly Err in Its Alternate Holding that Frankfort Digital Was a Bankruptcy Petition Preparer Within the Meaning of Section 110, Where the Only Contested Issue Was Whether it "Prepared" Documents for Filing and There Was Overwhelming Evidence to That Effect.

1. The Bankruptcy Court Had Overwhelming Evidence That Frankfort Digital Prepared for Compensation Documents for Filing.

Even if the Court determines that the Pillot case should not be given issue preclusive effect, the BAP correctly concluded that the bankruptcy court was not clearly erroneous in its alternative holding that Frankfort Digital was a bankruptcy petition preparer under Section 110. In re Reynoso, 315 B.R. at 551.

The Bankruptcy Code defines a "bankruptcy petition preparer" as "a person, other than an attorney or an employee of an attorney, who prepares for compensation a document for filing." 11 U.S.C. § 110(a)(1). "Document for filing" is defined as "a petition or any other document prepared for filing by a debtor in a United States bankruptcy court or a United States district court in connection with a case under this title." Id. § 110(a)(2).

Frankfort Digital does not dispute that it received compensation for preparing voluntary bankruptcy petitions, schedules, statements of financial affairs and statements of intention, which debtors filed in the United States bankruptcy courts. Frankfort Digital also admits that it is neither "an attorney or an employee of an attorney." Appellants' Revised Br. 10. There appears to be no dispute that the documents produced by Frankfort Digital for the debtors in this case were "document[s] for filing" that were in fact filed. E.g., ER 188, 200, 205, 206. Thus, the only dispute on appeal is whether they prepared a "document for filing". See Appellants' Revised. Br. 10 (describing this issue as "the crux of this case.")

As the bankruptcy court and the BAP recognized, however, the evidence on this element was overwhelming.

In its filing for trademark protection, Frankfort Digital described itself as providing "Internet based computer software for preparing legal documents." ER 210 (emphasis added). Frankfort Digital advertised its internet-based software, Ziinet, on its websites on the world wide web as "an expert system and knows the law. Unlike most bankruptcy programs which are little more than customized word processors the Ziinet engine is an expert system. It knows bankruptcy laws right down to those applicable to the state in which you live. Now you no longer need to spend weeks studying bankruptcy laws." ER 185, 237 (emphasis in original). The site claimed that it could "automatically select bankruptcy exemptions for you," and that a user would merely have to "enter your information and Ziinet automatically figures where to put the data." ER 185, 238 (emphasis in original).

At trial Reynoso testified that he searched the internet for a way to file for bankruptcy. Transcript, 14:7-15:1. Reynoso paid Frankfort Digital $219 to assist in preparing his bankruptcy papers for which Reynoso ultimately received a printed and filled out voluntary petition, schedules, statement of financial affairs and statement of intention. Transcript 14:7-16:23; ER 185; In re Reynoso, 315 B.R. at 248.

Frankfort Digital's website prompted Reynoso to respond to certain questions through the use of dialog boxes that solicited various information such as personal identification, assets, debts, income, etc. In re Reynoso, 315 B.R. at 248; ER 185-86.

After Reynoso entered his responses to the questions posed by the website, a set of bankruptcy documents were revealed for the first time with Reynoso's responses appearing in certain portions of the documents. In re Reynoso, 315 B.R. at 248; ER 186. Various portions of Reynoso's bankruptcy documents were filled out without Reynoso having offered any information and without his prompting or typing, including the insertion of statute numbers in a portion of Schedule C calling for "Specific Law Providing Each Exemption." In re Reynoso, 315 B.R. at 548; ER 186-87. As the BAP and bankruptcy court noted, the website also inserted a statement "signed under penalty of perjury" into Reynoso's statements of financial affairs that the debtor had prepared his own document and "was not assisted by an attorney, paralegal or bankruptcy preparer." In re Reynoso, 315 B.R. at 548; ER 187. Similar evidence was provided as to other debtors. Transcript, 31:18-38:10 (Laurie Coggins), 45:12-48:15 (Lewis Martin), 49:14-51:6 (Diane Amaral); ER 198-99 (Laurie Coggins), 203-05 (Lewis Martin), 205-06 (Diane Amaral).

In formatting and translating information the debtor provided (by responding to the website's prompts) into bankruptcy forms which were then filed, Frankfort Digital was acting as a bankruptcy petition preparer. All steps to produce the debtor's bankruptcy papers, other than the ministerial printing of the documents, were completed by Frankfort Digital. As such, Frankfort Digital "prepare[d] for compensation a document for filing" in bankruptcy court under Section 110(a)(1).

2. The Bankruptcy Court Correctly Rejected Frankfort Digital's Claim That it Was Immunized from Liability Because it Was Only "Licensing" Software.

Frankfort Digital does not actually dispute these key findings of fact by the bankruptcy court, which were affirmed by the BAP. Instead, its argument is that it is not liable under Section 110 because its services are limited to licensing software which allows debtors to fill out their own bankruptcy petitions. As the BAP held, the bankruptcy court did not clearly err in rejecting this argument. In re Reynoso, 315 B.R. at 552-53. The bankruptcy court soundly rejected Frankfort Digital's argument that it was merely a software licensor, noting it was "thoroughly unconvinced" by the argument "that someone can set up a website and have it sponsored by a particular entity or individual and then claim that it isn't them that's providing assistance." Transcript, 43:20-43:24. Observing that several other courts had rejected such an argument, the court noted that "websites don't just grow out of thin air and aren't maintained out of thin air. They're put together by people; they're put on the Internet; and it's not the website that provides the assistance. It's the people who develop the website that provide the assistance." Transcript, 44:1-8. This determination was amply supported by statute and case law.

To begin with, the law clearly establishes that if Frankfort Digital had engaged in the same behavior not by way of a website, but instead through mail or some other means, it would be a bankruptcy petition preparer, notwithstanding the claim that the charge was for licensing a product. For example, in In re Crowe, 243 B.R. 43 (B.A.P. 9th Cir. 2000), aff'd, 246 F.3d 673 (9th Cir. 2000), Appellant Ferm sold a book for a large fee entitled "Do It Yourself Bankruptcy", which guaranteed to its readers that "[i]f you buy my book and can't complete the forms yourself, I will do it for free." Id. at 49. Defendant claimed he was not a bankruptcy petition preparer but instead merely an author. Ibid. The panel correctly rejected his claim, noting that Ferm's "characterization of himself as an author is a disingenuous attempt to sidestep the 'for compensation' component of the definition of petition preparer under § 110(a)." Id. at 50. Instead, the panel concluded that "the book is a mere front for his services" and "[b]ecause what he really sells are his services, Ferm is subject to the court's jurisdiction for violations of § 110." Ibid. By the same token, Frankfort Digital's claim in this case that it was merely "licensing software" is a "mere front" for its services, what it is really selling is its services of preparing bankruptcy petitions.

Similarly, in In re Agyekum, 225 B.R. 695 (B.A.P. 9th Cir. 1998), Appellant Hastings charged a "$135 fee [,which] included $15 in costs and a nonrefundable $25 'document license fee' for the use of 'copyrighted intellectual property' prepared by Hastings. The pre-printed materials consisted of literature entitled 'Fast Facts Guide' and 'InfoForm Questionnaire.'" Id. at 697. The Guide "provided information about the bankruptcy process, and the Questionnaire functioned to obtain a client's pertinent information for the completion of a bankruptcy petition." Ibid. For the debtor in question, Hastings reviewed the debtors' completed Questionnaire and determined that she had omitted 15 items of information necessary for the proper completion of the petition, and sent a multi-page form detailing the omissions and requesting that the debtor furnish the missing information. Ibid. After the debtor filled in the missing information, Hastings mailed her a completed bankruptcy petition. Ibid. The court concluded that Hastings was a bankruptcy petition preparer within the meaning of Section 110 and was engaged in unauthorized practice of law. See id. at 701-02. Specifically, the court rejected the claim that charging a "document license fee" for the use of Hastings' "copyrighted intellectual property" was a service not covered by Section 110, id. at 701-02.

Obviously, the mere fact that Frankfort Digital engaged in the same behavior by way of its website rather than through the mails makes no difference. See In re Jolly, 313 B.R. 295, 300 (Bankr. S.D. Iowa 2004) (the fact that a person provides computerized bankruptcy preparation services and does not place data directly on the forms does not excuse that person's failure to reveal that role in the preparation of documents for filing under Section 110).

3. The Bankruptcy Court Did Not Clearly Err in Rejecting Frankfort Digital's "Turbo Tax" Defense Given That Bankruptcy Petition Preparers and Income Tax Return Preparers Are Regulated Through Two Entirely Different Regimes.

Frankfort Digital makes a final attempt to avoid liability by offering what might be characterized as a "Turbo Tax defense." It argues that it is not a bankruptcy petition preparer because it offers a service similar to the one offered by many online tax preparation software packages. Appellants' Revised Br. 10-11. Frankfort Digital complains that "[t]he court would not allow any testimony at trial regarding use of a computerized tax program to prepare tax returns." Id. at 11. The BAP properly regarded this argument as "irrelevant". In Re Reynoso, 315 B.R. at 552. Tax law does have restrictions on tax return preparers like the ones set forth in Section 110. The language of Section 110, however, imposes specific restrictions and disclosure requirements only upon bankruptcy petition prepares and in no way incorporates the rules applicable to tax preparers under the federal tax laws. Compare 11 U.S.C. § 110 (defining bankruptcy petition preparer), with 26 U.S.C. 7701(a)(36) (defining income tax return preparer). Thus, there is no dissonance in the fact that the same behavior might be lawful as to tax preparation when it is unlawful as to bankruptcy preparation.

As discussed above, in enacting Section 110 Congress was moved by the reality of widespread negligence and fraud disproportionately targeting minorities with "[h]undreds of typing mills * * * luring customers with vague promises of solving their credit problems, charging the customers hundreds of dollars while inducing them to sign bankruptcy petitions they often do not understand, and then improperly filing bankruptcy on their behalf." See 140 Cong. Rec. S14597 (daily ed. Oct. 7, 1994) (Senator Metzenbaum). Different concerns moved Congress in the tax context, resulting in a different regime.

It may in fact be the case that a website that offered services comparable to Frankfort Digital's in the tax context would be an income tax return preparer. See Rev. Rul. 85-189, 1985-2 C.B. 341(discussing computerized tax preparation software); see also Reynolds v. Commissioner, 296 F.3d 607, 619 (7th Cir. 2002) (noting the question of whether Turbo Tax is a "tax preparer" without deciding the matter); Ohrman v. Commissioner, 86 T.C.M. (CCH) 499 (2003) (describing Turbo Tax as a "a tax preparation program.") But the more important point is that rules governing tax return preparation are different from the ones governing bankruptcy petition preparation and are not relevant in this case.

C. The Bankruptcy Court Did Not Clearly Err in Its Alternate Holding That Frankfort Digital Was Engaged in the Unauthorized Practice of Law Where There Was Overwhelming Evidence That Frankfort Digital Solicited Information From Debtors it Transferred Into Bankruptcy Documents and Chose Exemptions for Debtors.

Bankruptcy courts have the power to regulate the activities of bankruptcy petition preparers under 11 U.S.C. § 110, but preparers may also be subject to sanctions beyond those of Section 110. Section 110(k) states that nothing in the Section shall be construed to permit "the unauthorized practice of law," 11 U.S.C. § 110(k), and bankruptcy courts generally look to state law for guidance when determining whether a person has engaged in the unauthorized practice of law. Taub v. Weber, 366 F.3d 966, 968 (9th Cir. 2004); In re Kangarloo, 250 B.R. 115, 123 (Bankr. C.D. Cal. 2000). See also 2 Collier on Bankruptcy, ¶ 110.12 (15th ed. 2004) ("Section 110(k) provides that the ability of nonlawyers to practice before bankruptcy courts in a given jurisdiction will be governed by '[relevant state] law, including rules and laws that prohibit the unauthorized practice of law,' as well as by section 110 itself.")(alteration in original).[6]

Under California law, the state law relevant in this case, the practice of law "includes legal advice and counsel and the preparation of legal instruments and contracts by which legal rights are secured although such matter may or may not be pending in a court." In re Agyekum, 225 B.R. 695, 701 (B.A.P. 9th Cir. 1998); In re Glad, 98 B.R. 976, 977 (B.A.P. 9th Cir. 1989); Birbrower, Montalbano, Condon & Frank v. Superior Court, 949 P.2d 1, 5 (1998); People v. Sipper, 142 P.2d 960, 962 (1943), overruled on other grounds by, Murgia v. Municipal Court, 540 P.2d 44 (1975). Frankfort Digital agrees that this is the relevant definition under California law. Appellants' Revised Br. 16.

[6] Because determining whether a bankruptcy petition preparer engaged in the unauthorized practice of law depends on the jurisdiction in which that practice took place, Frankfort Digital's discussion of what constitutes unauthorized practice of law in Texas, Appellants' Revised Br. 19-22, is simply not relevant. Moreover, even under Texas law bankruptcy courts have found conduct similar to Frankfort Digital's to constitute the unauthorized practice of law. In re Guttierez, 248 B.R. 287, 296 (Bankr. W.D. Tex. 2000) (advising clients about exemptions or determining which exemptions apply to client's property is unauthorized practice of law).

In the bankruptcy context, two types of conduct relevant in this case have been singled out as constituting the unauthorized practice of law under California law: (1) "Soliciting information from a debtor which is then typed into [bankruptcy] schedules," In re Agyekum, 225 B.R. at 702; see In re Glad, 98 B.R. at 978; In re Nieves, 290 B.R. 370, 379 (Bankr. C.D. Cal. 2003); In re Farness, 244 B.R. 464, 471 (Bankr. D. Idaho 2000); In re Kaitangian, 218 B.R. 102, 110 (Bankr. S.D. Cal. 1998) ("Plugging in solicited information from questionnaires and personal interviews to a pre-packaged bankruptcy software program constitutes the unauthorized practice of law."). (2) "[A]dvising of available exemptions from which to choose, or actually choosing an exemption for the debtor with no explanation." In re Kaitangian, 218 B.R. at 110; see In re Agyekum, 225 B.R. at 702; In re Glad, 98 B.R. at 978.[7] The [7] Although, as discussed earlier, only California law is directly relevant on the question of what constitutes unauthorized practice of law in California, we note that a number of bankruptcy courts in a number of other states have found that advising bankruptcy court had overwhelming evidence before it that Frankfort Digital engaged in both of these types of prohibited conduct, though its finding that they engaged in either type of conduct would itself be sufficient to uphold a determination that Frankfort Digital engaged in the unauthorized practice of law.

1. The Bankruptcy Court Had Overwhelming Evidence Before it That Frankfort Digital Solicited Information From Debtors Which Was Then Transferred Into Bankruptcy Documents.

The bankruptcy court had overwhelming evidence before it that Frankfort Digital solicited information from debtors which was then transferred into bankruptcy documents. Reynoso testified that as he navigated through Frankfort Digital's website he was prompted by a series of dialogue boxes. ER 185-86. Transcript, 17:15-24, 22:22-23:2. Through these dialogue boxes, Frankfort Digital's software solicited such information as Reynoso's name, his property and its value, his debtors about available exemptions or simply choosing exemptions for debtors is unauthorized practice of law in that state. See, e.g., In re Bush, 275 B.R. 69, 76-78 (Bankr. D. Idaho 2002) (identifying possible exemptions found to be unauthorized practice of law even where the identification is done by bankruptcy software); In re Moffett, 263 B.R. 805, 814 (Bankr. W.D. Ky. 2001) ("advising clients about exemptions, or determining which exemptions apply to a client's property, is the unauthorized practice of law"); In re Guttierez, 248 B.R. 287, 296 (Bankr. W.D. Tex. 2000) (advising clients about exemptions or determining which exemptions apply to client's property is unauthorized practice of law).

automobile and its value, as well as other types of financial information. ER 185-86; Transcript, 17:15-19:3, 22:22-24:9. Once Reynoso had given his information, the software automatically placed the information into various places throughout the petition, schedules, and statements. ER 186. In so doing the website was delivering on the representations it made to Reynoso and other users which described it as an "expert system," where "[y]ou just enter your information and Ziinet automatically figures where to put the data." ER 185 (emphasis in original). Reynoso printed the bankruptcy documents which had been prepared reflecting not only the solicited information that Reynoso had provided but also additional information not provided by Reynoso. Other debtors in the Northern District of California who were assisted by Frankfort Digital testified to similar facts.[8] Given this uncontroverted evidence, the Bankruptcy Court did not clearly err in finding that Frankfort Digital engaged in the unauthorized practice of law.

2. The Bankruptcy Court Had Overwhelming Evidence Before it

[8] As to debtor Laurie Coggins, see ER 198-200; Transcript 35:18-36:23; id. at 35:25-36:3 ("they asked me to list the property and the value, and then they figured the exemption number for me, according to what I put in that box.") As to debtor Lewis Martin, see ER 203-05; Transcript 47:1-48:14; id. at 47:19-22 ("It asked me a basic question about the assets * * *. And on the basis of that answer, it then fills in the exemption.") As to debtor Diane Amaral, see ER 205-07; Transcript 50:3-51:5; id. at 50:13-17 ("it would tell you to fill in certain things, and when you filled in those certain things, then you would go into the forms, and that would automatically then show up on the forms, unless you ask about it.")

That Frankfort Digital Advised Debtors About Available Exemptions From Which to Choose or Actually Selected Exemptions for Them.

As the BAP noted, In re Reynoso, 315 B.R.at 552, the bankruptcy court also had overwhelming evidence before it that Frankfort Digital advised debtors about available exemptions from which to choose or actually selected exemptions for them. Frankfort Digital's website advised users that it was "an expert system and knows the law. Unlike most bankruptcy programs which are little more than customized word processors the Ziinet engine is an expert system. It knows bankruptcy laws right down to those applicable to the state in which you live. Now you no longer need to spend weeks studying bankruptcy laws." ER 185, 237. The website promised that Ziinet could "automatically select bankruptcy exemptions for you" and "eliminate[] the need to choose which schedule to use for each piece of information. You just enter your information and Ziinet automatically figures where to put the data." ER 185, 238.

Debtor Reynoso testified that the website advised him of various items for which he might claim exemptions including cars, boats, and apparel. Transcript, 18:10-17, 20:14-22:7. The website advised him "you don't need to enter certain things, if it's certain things that may seem complicated, as far as when you file your bankruptcy." Transcript, 21:15-21:18. This advice lead Reynoso not to list any

"Wearing Apparel" or "Household Goods" in Schedule B. ER 188; Transcript, 21:9-22:6, 24:2-25:2. Reynoso also testified that the website presented available exemptions for him to claim as well as advice on how to file for bankruptcy and selected exemptions for him which were not specifically chosen or typed by him but instead tied in automatically, including printing in specific code numbers into Schedule C under the column calling for "Specific Law Providing Each Exemption." ER 186; Transcript, 18:7-20:20, 30:2-18.[9]

For these reasons, the bankruptcy court made no error in finding that Frankfort Digital had engaged in the unauthorized practice of law.

3. Whether Similar Conduct in the Tax Context Would Constitute Unauthorized Practice of Law Is Irrelevant Given That Bankruptcy Petition Preparers and Income Tax Return Preparers Are Regulated Through Two Entirely Different Regimes.

Although it does not develop any sustained argument to this effect, Frankfort Digital's brief hints that its actions do not constitute the unauthorized practice of law because tax preparation software offers similar assistance. Any such argument should be deemed waived for failure to develop it, Laboa, 224 F.3d at 981 n.6, but in any event, such a comparison is utterly wrong-headed. For one thing, unlike the statute defining "income tax return preparer", 26 U.S.C. § 7701(a)(36), Section 110 explicitly reserves that "[n]othing in this section shall be construed to permit activities that are otherwise prohibited by law, including rules and laws that prohibit the unauthorized practice of law." 11 U.S.C. § 110(k). This difference is an outgrowth of different congressional purposes in establishing each regulatory regime. As discussed above, in enacting Section 110 Congress was moved by the reality of widespread negligence and fraud disproportionately targeting minorities with "[h]undreds of typing mills * * * luring customers with vague promises of solving their credit problems, charging the customers hundreds of dollars while inducing them to sign bankruptcy petitions they often do not understand, and then improperly filing bankruptcy on their behalf." 140 Cong. Rec. S14597 (daily ed. Oct. 7, 1994) (Senator Metzenbaum). Different concerns moved Congress in the tax context, resulting in a different regime.

[9] Once again, several other debtors offered similar testimony that the bankruptcy court credited in its findings of fact. E.g., ER 198-99; Transcript, 35:18-36:23 (debtor Laurie Coggins); ER 203-05; Transcript, 47:13-48:14 (debtor Lewis Martin); ER 205-07; Transcript 50:3-51:5 (debtor Diane Amaral).

More importantly, it is well understood that tax return preparation, even when done by an attorney, is not regarded as the practice of law. See,e.g., United States v. Frederick, 182 F.3d 496, 500 (7th Cir. 1999). The same cannot be said in the bankruptcy context. See, e.g., In re Guttierez, 248 B.R. at 295; In re Farness, 244 B.R. at 467.

D. Frankfort Digital's Unsubstantiated Allegation That the Bankruptcy Court Committed Clear Error in Making a "Mass Adoption" of the U.S. Trustee's Proposed Findings of Fact is Without Any Support in Law or Fact.

Frankfort Digital failed to challenge almost any of the factual allegations at trial. It has been unable to identify on appeal any findings of fact that were clearly erroneous. Instead, it now desperately attempts to challenge the method by which the findings were adopted, contending that the bankruptcy court's findings of fact were simply a "mass adoption" of the suggestions of the U.S. Trustee and that "the court simply signed the Judgment and the Findings of Fact that were place in front of him by" the U.S. Trustee. Appellants' Revised Br. 26. As the BAP recognized, the bankruptcy court did not commit clear error in its findings of fact since each finding was carefully reviewed and supported by the evidence. In re Reynoso, 315 B.R. at 551.

As the BAP noted, the bankruptcy court made the following comment at the conclusion of trial: "I'm prepared to sign off on the U.S. Trustee's proposed findings, [of] which I have reviewed each line and phrase, and it appears quite – really without any controverting – that those facts are as they've been stated. The documents are all here." In re Reynoso, 315 B.R. at 550; Transcript, 67:8-12 (emphasis added). Frankfort Digital's position amounts to the suggestion that the bankruptcy court judge was lying when he made this statement, but they have presented nothing to substantiate this serious accusation. On the contrary, other statements by the bankruptcy court judge in the hearing demonstrate that he had thoroughly examined the proposed findings of fact and was familiar with them. See, e.g., Transcript, 43:2-18 (colloquy on proposed finding of fact number 142), 64:20-65:13 (colloquy on the request for a nationwide injunction in the proposed findings).

Moreover, Frankfort Digital's opening brief ignores the fact that Appellants and the U.S. Trustee met during a recess at trial in which they shortened the trial by stipulating to most of the findings of fact, Transcript, 13:19-25; 43:2-18; 44:9-13, although, as the BAP noted, there was no clear written stipulation in the record. In re Reynoso, 315 B.R. at 548. This left only a few proposed findings to be litigated related to various debtors' payments to Frankfort Digital for assistance (e.g., ER 185 at ¶ 9, ER 198 at ¶ 103, ER 203 at ¶ 145, and ER 205 at ¶ 163) and the debtors' responses to Frankfort Digital's queries and how those were reflected in their schedules (e.g., ER 186 at ¶ 17, ER 188 at ¶ 29, ER 189 at ¶ 40, ER 198 at ¶ 109, ER 203 at ¶ 146, and ER 205 at ¶ 164). Frankfort Digital did not produce any testimony to dispute the facts presented at trial, engaged in very little cross-examination of the U.S. Trustee's witnesses, and did not make evidentiary objections other than to relevance, objections which the court overruled. Transcript, 32:2-3, 67:2-6. None of the evidentiary rulings have been challenged on appeal. These facts better explain whatever similarities there are between the court's findings of fact and the ones proposed by the U.S. Trustee.

The proposed findings of fact that were originally submitted to the court appear in the record, and are clearly different from the findings of fact ultimately adopted by the court. To assist the panel in making the comparison, we include a "redlined" document from the BAP record that compares the proposed findings of fact with the ones settled on by the court. See Supp. ER. 111-49. Changes made by the court include the addition of several case citations, id. at 140, 143, the issuing of an injunction for the Northern District of California rather than the national one initially sought by the U.S. Trustee, id. at 145-47, and a host of smaller changes, id. at 130, 139, 140, 149. Thus, this is not a case of "verbatim adoption" meriting "careful scrutiny." L.K. Comstock & Co. v. United Eng'rs & Constructors Inc., 880 F.2d 219, 222 (9th Cir. 1989).

Even if, arguendo, the bankruptcy court's Findings of Fact were merely a verbatim adoption of the Trustees proposed findings, that in and of itself would not constitute reversible error. While this Circuit regards the practice of wholesale adoption of the prevailing party's findings as "disapproved" it also regards it as "permissible" in certain cases. Ibid. Indeed, "[t]he verbatim adoption of findings suggested by a party is not automatically objectionable * * * so long as those findings are supported by the record." Ibid. (quoting Unt v. Aerospace Corp., 765 F.2d 1440, 1444-45 (9th Cir. 1985)). Even in the case of findings adopted verbatim, contrary to what Frankfort Digital's brief suggests, Appellants' Revised Br. 26, although "the appellate court is to engage in 'careful scrutiny,' the 'clearly erroneous' standard still applies." L.K. Comstock & Co., Inc., 880 F.2d at 222 (quoting Photo Elecs. Corp. v. England, 581 F.2d 772, 777 (9th Cir. 1978)). Frankfort Digital has said nothing as to why specific findings are clearly erroneous but essential to the court's ruling. Even assuming dubitante that there was an error, this Court should find that any error was harmless. See 28 U.S.C. § 2111; Fed. R. Civ. P. 61, incorporated by Fed. R. Bankr. P. 9005; In re Maximus Computers, Inc., 278 B.R. 189, 194 (B.A.P. 9th Cir. 2002).

II. THE BANKRUPTCY COURT DID NOT ABUSE ITS DISCRETION IN FINDING FRANKFORT DIGITAL TO HAVE ENGAGED IN FRAUDULENT, UNFAIR, OR DECEPTIVE CONDUCT AND GRANTING APPROPRIATE REMEDIES.

Under 11 U.S.C. § 110(i), if a bankruptcy court finds a bankruptcy petition preparer to have violated section 110 or committed "any fraudulent, unfair, or deceptive act," it must certify that fact to the district court, which, after a hearing can impose damages. 11 U.S.C. § 110(i). Similarly, under 11 U.S.C. § 110(j), a bankruptcy court may "enjoin a bankruptcy petition preparer from engaging in any conduct in violation of this section or from further acting as a bankruptcy petition preparer" if the Court finds that a bankruptcy preparer has inter alia engaged in "fraudulent, unfair, or deceptive conduct" and "injunctive relief is appropriate to prevent the recurrence of such conduct." 11 U.S.C. § 110(j)(1)-(2)(a). In order to "enjoin the person from acting as a bankruptcy petition preparer" the court must further find that "the bankruptcy petition preparer has continually engaged in" this conduct "and that an injunction prohibiting such conduct would not be sufficient to prevent such person's interference with the proper administration of this title." Id. § 110(j)(2)(b). Section 110 also provides for a remedy of disgorgement in Subsection (h), which requires a bankruptcy petition preparer to "file a declaration under penalty of perjury disclosing any fee received from or on behalf of the debtor within 12 months immediately prior to the filing of the case, and any unpaid fee charged to the debtor" and provides that the "court shall disallow and order the immediate turnover to the bankruptcy trustee of any fee" that is "found to be in excess of the value of services rendered for the documents prepared." Id. § 110(h). See also 11 U.S.C. § 329; In re Glad, 98 B.R. at 977-78 (allowing disgorgement under 11 U.S.C. § 329 for fees for services provided by non-attorneys).

In the present case, the bankruptcy court certified the fact of Frankfort Digital's violations of Section 110 and its "fraudulent, unfair, or deceptive" acts to the district court. ER 12, 216, 221. However, no party moved in the district court for damages, see 11 U.S.C. § 110(i)(1), so no damages were imposed. The bankruptcy court entered an injunction against Frankfort Digital from acting as a bankruptcy petition preparer or otherwise assisting in the preparation of documents to be filed in a bankruptcy case in the Northern District of California. ER 237. The bankruptcy court also ordered Frankfort Digital to disgorge all fees collected by Frankfort Digital from every debtor in the Northern District of California who was its customer. ER 216-17.

Although there are a few stray sentences in Frankfort Digital's brief devoted to these three remedies, it is not clear Frankfort Digital offered an argument, much less a sustained and developed argument, either here or before the BAP, which would be necessary to preserve these issues for review. Thus, any such argument should be deemed waived. Laboa, 224 F.3d at 981 n. 6. But in an abundance of caution we will set out why the bankruptcy court in no way abused its discretion in granting these remedies.[10]

A. The Bankruptcy Court Did Not Abuse its Discretion in Finding That Frankfort Digital Repeatedly Engaged in [10] As to the certifying of facts to the district court under 11 U.S.C. § 110(i), Frankfort Digital's argument faces still another stumbling block. No party ever moved for damages so no damages were ever imposed. Thus even assuming, dubitante, that the bankruptcy court abused its discretion in certifying this fact to the district court, any error was harmless, and it is not clear Frankfort Digital even contends otherwise.

Fraudulent, Unfair, or Deceptive Conduct and Violated Section 110.

The bankruptcy court did not abuse its discretion in finding Frankfort Digital engaged in fraudulent, unfair, or deceptive conduct in this case. ER 216-17. The bankruptcy court is given wide latitude in this regard, and a court "must have a definite and firm conviction that the court below committed a clear error of judgment in the conclusion it reached, before reversal is proper." In re Crowe, 243 B.R. at 47 (internal quotation marks omitted). Frankfort Digital says nothing that comes even remotely close to meeting that high standard. Except for repeating its assertion that it is not a bankruptcy petition preparer, Frankfort Digital does not seem to even challenge the bankruptcy court's decision on this ground much less suggest why it is an abuse of discretion. In any event, the bankruptcy court had multiple separate bases for determining that Frankfort Digital committed fraudulent, unfair, or deceptive conduct, each of which would have been sufficient on its own.

First, as the BAP recognized, the unauthorized practice of law is itself sufficient to support the bankruptcy court's conclusion that Frankfort Digital's conduct was fraudulent, unfair, or deceptive. In re Reynoso, 315 B.R. at 553. Accord In re Bush, 275 B.R. 69, 83 (Bankr. D. Idaho 2002); In re Dunkle, 272 B.R. 450, 456 (Bankr. W.D. Pa. 2002); In re Moffett, 263 B.R. 805, 813 (Bankr. W.D. Ky. 2001); In re Gomez, 259 B.R. 379, 386-88 (Bankr. D. Colo. 2001); In re Guttierez, 248 B.R.

287, 294 (Bankr. W.D. Tex. 2000); In re Moore, 232 B.R. 1, 8 (Bankr. D. Me. 1999).

The bankruptcy court also had a number of other grounds for concluding that Frankfort Digital had engaged in conduct that was fraudulent, unfair, or deceptive. The bankruptcy court noted that Frankfort Digital (1) repeatedly concealed their involvement as bankruptcy petition preparers, (2) repeatedly violated the court's guidelines with respect to bankruptcy petition preparer activities by not giving debtors copies of those guidelines and (3) repeatedly failed to disclose the compensation they received in violation of the statute. Transcript, 67:14-68:7. See also In re Kaitangian, 218 B.R. at 117 ("the intentional failure * * * to disclose all fees paid by the debtors under penalty of perjury constitutes an unfair and deceptive act within the meaning of § 110(i)(1).")

Far from offering a "low-cost" solution to filing bankruptcy as Frankfort Digital's website suggested, the bankruptcy court found that the website charged an excessive fee without delivering the valuable service it claimed to deliver. Transcript, 68:8-69:13.

The court also concluded that Frankfort Digital repeatedly failed to sign the disclosure of the identity of the petition preparer as required by Section 110(b) and to sign or provide social security numbers in various places throughout the bankruptcy petitions prepared by Frankfort Digital. See, e.g., In re Reynoso, 315

B.R. at 548; ER 186-87, 198-99, 203-05; Transcript, 31:18-38:10, 45:12-48:15, 49:14-51:6.

Frankfort Digital's advice to debtors not to "complicate" their bankruptcies by disclosing too much resulted in Reynoso's schedule stating "none" where he was supposed to list "wearing apparel" and "household goods" he had. Transcript, 21:9-22:6, 24:2-25:2.

Frankfort Digital's website automatically inserted a statement "signed under penalty of perjury" into Reynoso's statements of financial affairs that the debtor had prepared his own document and "was not assisted by an attorney, paralegal or bankruptcy preparer." In re Reynoso, 315 B.R. at 548; ER 187. Reynoso did not write or authorize this passage. Id. A similar statement was inserted into the text of other debtors and not authorized by them. ER 199. See also In re Stacy, 193 B.R. 31, 37 (Bankr. D. Or. 1996) (bankruptcy petition preparer's insertion of information on the schedules that was not based on information provided by debtor constitutes fraudulent, unfair, or deceptive conduct).

Given all this uncontroverted evidence, the bankruptcy court did not abuse its discretion in finding Frankfort Digital had engaged in fraudulent, unfair, or deceptive conduct.

While the above-mentioned facts are more than sufficient to show the bankruptcy court did not abuse its discretion in finding fraudulent, unfair, or deceptive conduct, the portion of the website called "the Vault" provides still more of this type of conduct. "The Vault" promised debtors advice on "[h]ow to hide your bankruptcy from the credit bureaus," Supp. ER. 25, including "[i]f you do not put your social security number on your initial bankruptcy, they cannot match you," ibid., and "you can file a partial bankruptcy and the court clerk will dismiss your case in just 15 days. Filing a partial bankruptcy means leaving off some of the documents when you file the first time," id. at 33. Reynoso testified and the bankruptcy court found that Reynoso received an email providing more information on "the Vault," accessed and read the information in "the Vault," but that Reynoso declined to use the techniques contained in "the Vault" because he had serious concerns about their legality. See ER 185-86; Transcript, 20:14-21:4; In re Reynoso, 315 B.R. at 548.

There is a very brief and cryptic suggestion by Frankfort Digital, not developed by any argument, that the bankruptcy court somehow erred because the U.S. Trustee "offered no evidence that Appellants engaged in any fraudulent, unfair or deceptive conduct (Conclusion of Law # 232 1ER216) much less to every single person or entity who used the software to prepare his or her schedules." Appellants' Revised Br. 15. The first part of this assertion is flatly refuted by the voluminous evidence as to fraudulent, unfair, or deceptive conduct reviewed above. The second part of the assertion is also in error. In order to certify a case to the district court for damages or enter an injunction, there is no requirement in the statutory text or case law that the United States Trustee prove that defendants' conduct was fraudulent, unfair, or deceptive as to each and every debtor who used the service. To the extent that Appellant means instead to challenge the bankruptcy court's determination under 11 U.S.C. § 110 (j)(2)(B) that Frankfort Digital has "continually engaged" in this conduct, the court's determination is amply supported by the existence of evidence as to multiple debtors in this case as well as "appellants' history of § 110 violations, established in other districts," In re Reynoso, 315 B.R. at 554; In re Pillot, 286 B.R. 157.

B. The Bankruptcy Court Did Not Abuse its Discretion in Ordering Disgorgement of All Fees as to Every Debtor Who Had Used Frankfort Digital's Services in the Northern District of California.

Without developing the argument, Frankfort Digital contends that it "was error to order disgorgement to every person who used the software in the Northern District in the twelve months prior to Jayson Reynoso without any evidence of the value of the services to any other individuals." Appellants' Revised Br. 8. The argument should be deemed waived for lack of development. Laboa, 224 F.3d 972, 981 n.6. In any event, the BAP correctly rejected this argument, noting that "Appellants have not challenged, much less shown clearly erroneous, the bankruptcy court's finding that the value of the services provided by appellants was negligible. It was not an abuse of discretion to predicate an order of disgorgement on this finding." In re Reynoso, 315 B.R. at 553. In this appeal, Frankfort Digital does not even challenge the authority of the bankruptcy court to order disgorgement. As to Frankfort Digital's challenge to the valuation of the services it provided to debtors, it does not even address the bankruptcy court's finding that the value of the services provided by them was negligible, ER 216, much less show it to be clearly erroneous.

CONCLUSION

For the foregoing reasons, the judgment of the Bankruptcy Appellate Panel should be affirmed.

BRIEF OF APPELLEE UNITED STATES TRUSTEE

PRELIMINARY STATEMENT

Ritchie Special Credit Investments, Ltd., Rhone Holdings II, Ltd., Yorkville Investments I, L.L.C., Ritchie Capital Structure Arbitrage Trading, Ltd., and Ritchie Capital Management, L.L.C. (collectively "Ritchie") have appealed the order of the bankruptcy court[1] overruling their objection to the appointment of Douglas A. Kelley ("Kelley") as chapter 11 trustee, and approving his appointment in the jointly administered cases of Petters Company, Inc., et al. (Bankruptcy Court No. 08-45257) ("Trustee Order"). The United States Trustee[2] appointed

Rep. No. 95-595, at 88 (1977), as reprinted in 1978 U.S.C.C.A.N. 5963, 6049 (United States Trustees "serve as bankruptcy watch-dogs to prevent fraud, dishonesty, and overreaching in the bankruptcy arena.") Their express statutory powers include authorization to move for the appointment of a trustee, 11 U.S.C. § 1104(a), and the naming of a trustee if the court orders a trustee's appointment, 11 U.S.C. § 1104(d).

Kelley pursuant to the bankruptcy court's Order for Appointment of Trustee(s) entered December 17, 2008. Kelley's appointment as trustee was supported by the Unsecured Creditors' Committee for the Petters cases ("the Petters Committee"), Ronald R. Peterson, Esq., Chicago, as trustee for the bankruptcy estates of Lancelot Investors Fund, L.P., et al. ("Lancelot trustee")[3] and the Unsecured Creditors' Committee in In re Polaroid Corporation, et al., Bky 08-46617) ("the Polaroid Committee").

BASIS FOR APPELLATE JURISDICTION

Jurisdiction for this appeal is premised upon 28 U.S.C. § 158(a)(1) which grants "district courts of the United States . . . jurisdiction to hear appeals from final judgments, orders, and decrees" of bankruptcy judges. Ritchie has appealed the order of the bankruptcy court overruling its objection to the appointment of Douglas A. Kelley as the chapter 11 trustee in these cases. Although the Eighth Circuit has not yet specifically ruled on this issue, other courts have held that such an order appointing (or denying) a trustee is a final order for appeal purposes. In re Marvel Entertainment Group, 140 F.3d 463, 470 (3d Cir. 1998) ("Using the liberal finality rules which apply in bankruptcy matters of this nature, we believe that jurisdiction is proper over the order appointing a trustee here."); *In re Cajun Elec. STATEMENT OF ISSUES AND STANDARD OF REVIEW

THE BANKRUPTCY COURT DID NOT ERR IN APPOINTING KELLEY AS TRUSTEE FOR BOTH PGW & PCI

A. No disqualifying conflict of interest prevents Kelley from serving as a common trustee for these Debtors.

B. Kelley's pre-petition status as court-appointed Receiver for the Debtor entities did not disqualify him from serving as trustee for PGW.

C. The bankruptcy court's denial of Ritchie's request for expedited discovery is not properly before this Court on appeal, because Ritchie did not appeal the bankruptcy court's order of January 23, 2009.

STATEMENT OF THE CASE

The petitions commencing the Chapter 11 cases of Petters Company, Inc. ("PCI") and Petters Group Worldwide, LLC ("PGW") were filed on October 11, 2008. Within one week following, the petitions commencing the Chapter 11 cases of PC Funding, LLC; Thousand Lakes, LLC; SPF Funding, LLC; PL Ltd., Inc.; Edge One, LLC and MGC Finance, Inc., PAC Funding, LLC and Palm Beach Finance Holdings were filed. All the cases were filed by Douglas A. Kelley in his capacity as the federal court-appointed receiver of these entities. An order for joint administration of the above-entitled cases was entered on October 22, 2008.

On December 2, 2008, the United States Trustee filed his motion under 11 U.S.C. § 1104(a) seeking an order directing the appointment of a chapter 11 trustee. UST App. 91-115. Ritchie filed its motion requesting the appointment of two trustees: one for PCI and one for PGW. The bankruptcy court held a hearing on the motion on December 16, 2008. The Court granted the United States Trustee's motion and also "held that the issue of whether a trustee should be appointed for Debtor Petters Group Worldwide, LLC, with a different person or persons to be appointed as trustee(s) for the other Debtors, was not ripe until the United States Trustee had first exercised his authority under 11 U.S.C. § 1104(a), as to all of the Debtors." App. A-65, 66. On December 24, 2008, the United States Trustee, acting under the authority of 11 U.S.C. § 1104(d) and Fed. R. Bankr. P. 2009(c)(2), appointed Douglas A. Kelley ("Kelley") as Chapter 11 Trustee of these jointly administered cases, and filed a motion under Fed. R. Bankr. P. 2007.1(c) seeking approval of his appointment with the bankruptcy court. UST App. 151-167.

On January 7, 2009, Ritchie timely filed its objections[5] to the United States Trustee's appointment of Kelley, alleging disqualifying conflicts of interest arising from Kelley's status as pre-petition receiver for the Debtor entities as well as conflicts of interest arising from Kelley's role as trustee for both PCI and PGW. Ritchie also sought to conduct expedited discovery into certain of Kelley's actions in that regard. Kelley opposed the requests for discovery. A hearing was held on January 22, 2009 regarding Ritchie's motion to compel discovery. The bankruptcy court denied the request and quashed all such discovery attempts. UST App. 149-150. Ritchie did not appeal this order.

The United States Trustee's motion seeking approval of Kelley's appointment was heard on January 27, 2009. The Petters Committee, the Polaroid Committee and the Lancelot trustee appeared in support of the United States Trustee's appointment. Ritchie was the only creditor that opposed the motion.[6] At the hearing, no evidence was taken; the parties presented oral

[5] In its order entered December 17, 2008, the bankruptcy court set deadlines regarding the appointment process. App. A-65, 66.

[6] In a colloquy with the bankruptcy court, Ritchie appears to have "backed off" its initial request to disqualify Kelley as trustee for all the Debtor entities, stating its "primary objective is to have a separate trustee appointed for PGW" and leaving Kelley in place for the other nine Debtor entities. Trustee Order, 401 B.R. at 403; UST App. 42. This position is consistent with argument regarding their respective positions.

On February 26, 2009, the bankruptcy court issued its order approving the appointment of Kelley as common trustee for all of the Debtor entities. App. 344-378. Pursuant to the court's order, Kelley, on March 5, 2009, filed his acceptance of appointment as Chapter 11 Trustee and in the same pleading attached his turnover of assets. UST App. 168-172.

Ritchie timely filed its Notice of Appeal from the bankruptcy court's order on March 9, 2009. Docket Entry # 1.

STATEMENT OF THE FACTS

PCI and PGW[7] are both privately held limited liability companies owned 100% by Thomas J. Petters ("Petters"). PCI is the sole member and owns 100% of the membership interests of PC Funding, Thousand Lakes, SPF Funding, PL Ltd., Edge One, MGC Finance, PAC Funding and Palm Beach Holdings. PCI was utilized as the venture capital arm of the Petters enterprises. It utilized single purpose entities to obtain billions of dollars of funding, purportedly to acquire merchandise for sale to wholesalers and retailers nationwide. PGW has investments in companies across the globe; however, its principal asset was 100% ownership of the stock of Polaroid Corporation. UST App. 117-118.

As a result of a federal criminal investigation, Petters, PCI and PGW were indicted on charges of mail fraud, wire fraud, money laundering and conspiracy to commit those offenses.[8] Other Petters executives implicated in this Ponzi scheme had also been arrested and have since pled guilty to certain crimes. According to the government, more than 20 lenders and investors had been defrauded out of more than $3.45 billion as a result of this alleged scheme.

On October 6, 2008, pursuant to 18 U.S.C. § 1345(a)(2), the United States District Court for the District Court of Minnesota appointed Douglas A. Kelley, Esq., as a Receiver for PCI, PGW and all of their affiliates and subsidiaries except for MN Airlines, LLC dba Sun Country Airlines (the "Receiver").[9] From October 11, 2008 to October 19, 2008, the Receiver filed bankruptcy petitions for the various Debtors. By its order of October 22, 2008, the bankruptcy court ordered these cases to be jointly administered. UST App. 173-174.

Pursuant to the authority granted to him as Receiver, Kelley sought relief under Chapter 11 "to reorganize and/or preserve their operations, sell assets and preserve potential avoidance [actions] and claims." UST App. at 83. At the time of filing the petitions in bankruptcy, the Receiver was: (i) operating the Debtors' businesses, (ii) preserving the Debtors' assets, and (iii) based on the district court's order appointing him as a receiver, purporting to act as a debtor-in-possession under §§ 1107 and 1108 of the Bankruptcy Code. In point of fact, the only entities conducting any business operations at the time of filing were PCI and PGW.[10] UST App. at 80-90.

The United States Trustee filed his motion under 11 U.S.C. § 1104(a) seeking the appointment of a chapter 11 trustee. The United States Trustee's motion was premised on two considerations – 1) the Bankruptcy Code did not recognize the authority of a "receiver" continuing on as a debtor in possession and 2) the Debtor entities had no management structure in place to operate the businesses since those individuals had either been indicted and/or plead guilty to certain federal crimes. UST App. 91-111. The bankruptcy court granted the motion and directed the United States Trustee to appoint a trustee or trustees for the debtors' estates. See 11 U.S.C. § 1104(d). The United States Trustee appointed Kelley to serve as trustee for the jointly administered estates, Fed. R. Bankr. P. 2009(c)(2), and filed an Application for Order Approving the Appointment of Trustee. Fed. R. Bankr. 2007.1(c).

The bankruptcy court held a hearing on the United States Trustee's Application for Order Approving the Appointment of Trustee. The Petters Committee, the Polaroid Committee[11] and the Lancelot Trustee supported the appointment of Kelley, while Ritchie continued its opposition. UST App. at 33-58.

The bankruptcy court issued its order on February 26, 2009. The court ruled that Kelley could serve as trustee for both the PCI estate and the PGW estate, overruling Ritchie's argument that he could not serve as trustee for both. The bankruptcy court cited Fed. R. Bankr. P. 2009(d), stating that "Ritchie (has) not made a prima facie showing that, at present their interests, or the interests of the creditors of any particular debtor, are actually prejudiced at present by the [11] Polaroid Corporation and nine affiliated companies ("Polaroid entities") filed petitions under Chapter 11 of the Bankruptcy Code on December 18, 2008. By order of the bankruptcy court dated December 23, 2008, the Polaroid cases were ordered to be jointly administered bearing Case No. 08-4661, Docket Entry # 21. existence of conflicts of interest that arise out of the configuration of the Debtors' rights against each other, pre- or post-petition. At this time, there is no 'internal conflict' that prevents Kelley from serving as trustee for all of the Debtors, pursuant to the U.S. Trustee's appointment." Trustee Order, 401 B.R. at 414.

The court also held that Kelley's pre-petition status as the court-appointed receiver for Tom Petters and several of his business entities (including all the Debtors) did not prevent Kelley from serving as a common trustee in these cases. "In sum, Kelley's past status as trustee (sic) does not make him not disinterested so as to bar his appointment as trustee for these cases. Any such status he may technically retain after a full effectuation of his appointment as trustee will not do so either. The 'external conflict' urged by the Ritchie Parties is not a ground for disapproving the United States Trustee's appointment." Trustee Order, 401 B.R. at 410.

A trustee for multiple estates with claims against one another need not be automatically removed. Removal must be based on some evidence of an actual conflict which prejudices the creditors of one of the estates. Ritchie has failed to meets its burden of establishing that it will suffer actual prejudice if Kelley is allowed to serve as a common trustee.

The selection of a common trustee in these jointly administered cases would be economical, would avoid unnecessary duplication of actions and would provide for an orderly administration of the cases. As the trustee, he acts in a fiduciary capacity and must act in conformity with the mandates of the Bankruptcy Code. His duties are to identify potential assets, prosecute avoidance claims and to monetize the same. Contrary to the assertions of Ritchie, Kelley does not have the power to pursue forfeiture actions, nor is he an "agent" of the federal government in its criminal action against Petters, PCI and PGW.

Ritchie did not appeal from the bankruptcy court's order denying its discovery requests. Accordingly, this Court lacks jurisdiction to consider this argument. Even if the issue was properly preserved, Ritchie still is unable to show that the bankruptcy court abused its discretion in denying its request.

ARGUMENT

THE BANKRUPTCY COURT DID NOT ERR BY APPROVING KELLEY'S APPOINTMENT AS TRUSTEE FOR BOTH PGW & PCI

A. No disqualifying conflict of interest prevents Kelley from serving as a common trustee for these Debtors.

1. Ritchie has not met its burden under Fed. R. Bankr. P. 2009(d).

Ritchie argues that an appointment of a separate trustee for PGW is mandated because of a conflict of interest between PGW and PCI. As the party challenging the appointment of a common trustee in these cases, the burden rests upon Ritchie to establish actual prejudice to them arising from any conflict of interest the common trustee may have vis a vis the other jointly administered entities. Fed. R. Bankr. P. 2009 (d) states: "[o]n a showing that creditors . . . of the different estates will be prejudiced by conflicts of interest of a common trustee who has been . . . appointed, the court shall order the selection of separate trustees for estates being jointly administered." (emphasis added). Fed. R. Bankr. P. 2009(d). If the appointment is that of a single trustee, a party in interest may challenge such appointment upon a showing of prejudice to creditors arising from conflicts of interest of a common trustee. Id. For the following reasons, Ritchie's assertion that Kelley cannot serve as a common trustee for all Debtors falls short of the mark.

Ritchie's sole basis for arguing that prejudice will result if Kelley serves as trustee for both PGW and PCI and its subsidiaries is that claims are likely to exist among those entities.[12] The existence of interdebtor claims is not, however, automatic grounds for removal of a trustee for multiple estates and accordingly does not constitute grounds to mandate the appointment of separate trustees. Removal must be based on evidence of an actual conflict which prejudices the creditors of one of the estates. The court in In re BH&P, Inc., 949 F.2d 1300 (3d Cir. 1991), rejected the notion that a trustee who, in a jointly administered case, asserts a claim on behalf of one estate against another, becomes a "creditor" as defined under 11 U.S.C. § 101(14)(A). The court held that section 101(14) should not be read to disqualify a trustee because of actions taken by the trustee in his representative capacity. Any trustee appointed under 11 U.S.C. § 1104 must be disinterested as defined under section 101(14). The appointment of a separate trustee requires a showing that creditors will suffer actual prejudice by conflicts held by a common trustee. "Before a trustee may be removed, some actual injury must be shown." Id. at 1311.

The cases cited by Ritchie contain facts which established an identifiable conflict between two or more entities. Such is not the case here. The interrelatedness of these Debtor entities and affiliates of other Petters entities is obviously complex. "Upon reviewing the schedules, it becomes immediately obvious that the Debtor Entities, along with the dozens of other subsidiary entities of these Debtor Entities, and affiliates of other entities owned by Thomas J. Petters, have accrued inter-company obligations, engaged in extensive transferring of funds between PCI, PGW and subsidiary entities of each, and incurred inter-company obligations on behalf of other entities at hundreds of million dollar levels." Appointed Trustee's Response to Objection to Appointment of Douglas A. Kelley as Trustee for all of the Debtors in these Jointly Administered Proceedings, UST App. 125. The response of Kelley outlined his proposed "plan of action" — to recover and liquidate assets, pursue avoidance claims and fraudulent transfers, and then to distribute the proceeds in accordance with the statutory priorities envisioned by the Bankruptcy Code.[13] Id. at 127.

[12] This position is inconsistent with the one Ritchie took when it sought the appointment of a single receiver for both PGW and PCI in the Circuit Court of Cook County, Illinois. In that proceeding, Ritchie sought the appointment of a "William Procida as Receiver for the Collateral, including PGW and PCI and all its operations, with all of the usual powers of a receiver, . . ." See Appointed Trustee's Response to Objection to Appointment of Douglas A. Kelley as Trustee for All of the Debtors in these Jointly Administered Proceedings, UST App. 116-132. The state court granted Ritchie's request and appointed William Procida "Receiver of the Petters Entities," which was defined to include PGW and PCI. Id. at 119-120. Ultimately, however, the Illinois state court deferred to this Court's Receivership Order and suspended further proceedings. Trustee Order, 401 B.R. at 398.

The selection of a common trustee in these jointly administered cases will be economical, will avoid unnecessary duplication of actions and will provide for an orderly administration of the cases. "[I]t has long been recognized that joint administration, and the appointment of a common trustee, are favored means to save expense." In re Ben Franklin Retail Stores, Inc., 214 B.R. 852, 858 (Bankr. N.D. Ill. 1997). Appointing a single trustee to investigate and locate all available assets is in the collective best interest of the creditors, and it does not present a conflict of interest. See In re International Oil Co., 427 F.2d 186, 187 (2d Cir. 1970); In re H&S Transp. Co., 55 B.R. 786, 791-92 (Bankr. M.D. Tenn. 1982).

The bankruptcy court recognized these considerations of economy and efficiency in declining to accept Ritchie's argument regarding this so-called "internal conflict." The additional expenditure of time and professional expense weighs heavily against appointing another trustee for PGW. “The Ritchie Parties have not even made a squawk about economy or efficiency supporting or ultimately vindicating the appointment of a second trustee, and there is no credible way they can.” Trustee Order, 401 B.R. at 413.

Based on the foregoing, the bankruptcy court correctly held that Ritchie has not met its burden under Fed. R. Bankr. P. 2009(d). “The structure of Rule 2009(d) imposes a burden of proof on the party that asserts a disqualifying prejudice - both a burden of production of evidence if the existence of the prejudice is fact-dependent, and burden of persuasion if the arguments pro and con are in equipoise. The Ritchie Parties have not carried that burden(.)” Trustee Order at 414.

2. No inherent difference between Ritchie and other creditors, or between PGW and PCI, mandates the appointment of a separate trustee for PGW.

In an effort to support its contention that PGW is “different” and therefore must have a separate trustee, Ritchie seeks to differentiate between “regular creditors” and victims of Petters’ fraud. Ritchie claims “regular creditor” status for itself. Furthermore, it seeks to draw a line between PGW and the remaining Debtor entities, claiming that PGW was a legitimate business enterprise and that PCI and its subsidiaries were engaged in unrelated fraudulent activities. These are distinctions without a difference. Victims of fraud and commercial creditors are treated the same in bankruptcy cases, and whatever relationships existed between PGW and the remaining Debtors, including PCI, will be sorted out during the administration of the bankruptcy cases. In any event, the record does not support Ritchie’s attempted distinctions.

Ritchie’s characterization of its relationship with PGW as being that of a “true creditor” is belied by the underlying documentation (as reflected in Exhibit A to Debtor's Response to United States Trustee's Motion to Appoint a Chapter 11 Trustee and Motion of the Ritchie Group for Appointment of a Chapter 11 Trustee in the Bankruptcy Case of Petters Worldwide, LLC). A - 324-326. According to the financial history of the money "loaned" to PGW, the entire $146 million was wired directly by Ritchie into the bank account of PCI at M&I Bank. "This demonstrates how loosely funds were distributed around the various Petters companies, although notably no funds appear to have gone to PGW. Virtually all of these funds went immediately to pay other investors." A - 316. In this sense, Ritchie is most likely not a true creditor as it suggests, but instead another victim of Petters' vast Ponzi scheme. In such cases, appellate courts have consistently determined that innocent victims should share equally in any recovered funds because equity demands equal treatment.[14] See generally United States Securities and Exchange Commission v. The Infinity Group Company, 226 Fed. Appx. 217 (3d Cir. 2007) (per curiam) (unpublished) (collecting cases).

Ritchie also contends that "PCI was the vehicle for the fraud — not PGW." However, the indictment returned by the grand jury charges both entities with a variety of federal offenses. "From at least in or about 1995 and continuing through in or about September 2008, in the State of Minnesota and elsewhere, the defendants, THOMAS JOSEPH PETTERS, PETTERS COMPANY, INC., AND PETTERS GROUP WORLDWIDE, LLC, aided and abetted by persons and affiliated business entities, . . . did knowingly and unlawfully devise and participate in a scheme and artifice to defraud and to obtain billions of dollars in money and Count 11 alleges that Thomas Joseph Petters, PCI and PGW "did knowingly and willfully combine, conspire, and agree with each other and with . . . others known and unknown to the Grand Jury, to commit offenses against the United States, that is, mail fraud and wire fraud as described in Counts 1 through 10 above, in violation of Title 18, United States Code, Sections 1341 and 1343." (emphasis added) Id. at ¶ 15, A - 300. Count 12 of the Indictment alleges that Petters individually, along with both PCI and PGW, were involved in a money laundering conspiracy in violation of 18 U.S.C. § 1956(h). Id. at ¶20, A - 301-302.

Ritchie's attempt to minimize the role of PGW in the fraudulent scheme stands in stark contrast to the allegations in the indictment. According to the indictment, the actions of PGW and PCI were intertwined in this complex criminal scheme to defraud victims. The Grand Jury found probable cause to believe that both entities were instrumentalities in Petters' criminal enterprise.

B. Kelley's pre-petition status as court-appointed Receiver for the Debtor entities did not disqualify him from serving as trustee for PGW.

As the trustee for these bankruptcy cases, Kelley is obligated to follow the mandates of Title 11 of the United States Code. The district court who appointed him receiver recognized this requirement when it amended the Receivership Order to require "(a)ny bankruptcy cases . . . shall during their pendency be governed by and administered pursuant to the requirements of the United States Bankruptcy Code, 11 U.S.C. section 101 et seq., and the applicable Federal Rules of Bankruptcy Procedure." Second Amended Order for Entry of Preliminary Injunction, Appointment of Receiver, and other Equitable Relief,[15] , Section IV, ¶ B. 2. c, UST App. 73. The bankruptcy court's order also recognizes this obligation: ". . . Kelley has committed to proceeding with the administration of the estates in these cases in accordance with the values and priorities of bankruptcy law. Kelley acknowledges that this will entail maximizing the value of all assets collected, and then distributing them to the holders of all allowed claims against the Debtors, pursuant to statutory priorities and pro rata if necessary, all as the Bankruptcy Code envisions." Trustee Order, 401 B.R. at 409. (footnote omitted). In no event, however, would Kelley's obligations as trustee of these bankruptcy estates be materially adverse to his obligations as receiver in the district court.

In short, Kelley as trustee is duty-bound to administer these estates according to the dictates of the Bankruptcy Code. He is no longer a "receiver" and, contrary to the assertion of Ritchie, is not placed "in the untenable position of having to advance the interests of two distinct groups seeking recovery from the same assets."[16] Kelley is not a "receiver" over these bankruptcy cases or their respective estates.

Ritchie's objection to the appointment of Kelley as trustee for all of these Debtor entities totally misstates his role. The entire premise for the United States Trustee's motion for the appointment of a chapter 11 trustee in these cases centered on the inherent tension between the traditional duties of a court-appointed equity receiver and a trustee (or debtor-in-possession) in bankruptcy. As was explained in his motion seeking the appointment of a trustee, a bankruptcy court cannot order the appointment of a receiver under the Bankruptcy Code. "A court may not appoint a receiver under . . . title [11]." 11 U.S.C. § 105(b). Although it may be conceded that Kelley, as receiver under the District Court's order, had the authority to file the petitions initiating these bankruptcy cases, once they were filed, the United States Trustee contends that his authority as receiver terminated by operation of law. Although the bankruptcy court did not wholly adopt the United States Trustee's position that Kelley's role as receiver terminated by operation of law, it recognized the effect of the District Court's receivership order "that these Chapter 11 cases will go ahead fully governed by the substantive law of bankruptcy." Trustee Order, 401 B.R. at 408. The bankruptcy court, citing the mandates of 11 U.S.C. § 543(b)(2),[17] ordered the turnover of all property Kelley had as receiver to himself as chapter 11 trustee. Trustee Order, 401 B.R. at 408-409.

The mandate of the Receivership Order[18] that Kelley "(c)oordinate with representatives of the United States Attorney's office and Court personnel as needed to ensure that any assets subject to the terms of this Order are available for criminal restitution, forfeiture, or other legal remedies . . ." does not create any materially adverse conflicts vis a vis Kelley's obligations to these bankruptcy estates. The mere allegation of forfeiture in the indictment against Petters, PCI and PGW does not mandate the appointment of a separate trustee for PGW. Kelley, in his role as Receiver, is not empowered to pursue restitution or forfeiture. The power to prosecute any forfeiture against any asset rests exclusively with the United States Attorney.[19] Contrary to the assertion of Ritchie, Kelley is not "an agent for the Government." "The notion of having the assets in Kelley's hands 'available for criminal restitution, forfeiture,' and the like signifies a duty to fully disclose their form and whereabouts and to maintain transparency that our legal system makes incumbent on any entrusted officer of a court, in the performance of obligations to the appointing court. It reflects no more than that." Trustee Order, 401 B.R. at 407. (emphasis in original).

[17] 11 U.S.C. § 543(b)(1) provides: "A custodian shall — deliver to the trustee any property of the debtor held by or transferred to such custodian, or proceeds, product, offspring, rents or profits of such property that is in such custodian's possession, custody, or control on the date that such custodian acquires knowledge of the commencement of the case(.)"

Kelley's status as Receiver of any Petters entities does not conflict with his status as trustee of these Debtor entities. His fiduciary duties are mandated by Title 11 of the United States Code. In this regard, Kelley must collect and preserve all available assets, and make them available for distribution to the creditors of these estates according to the priorities set forth under the Bankruptcy Code. Kelley is powerless to determine what assets, if any, may be subject to forfeiture and/or restitution. Those decisions are left to the discretion of the United States Attorney and the district court. Accordingly, his current or former status as a receiver does not disqualify him from serving as trustee in these cases.

C. The bankruptcy court's denial of Ritchie's request for expedited discovery is not properly before this Court on appeal, because Ritchie did not appeal the bankruptcy court's order of January 23, 2009.

Prior to the hearing on the United States Trustee's appointment of Kelley as trustee, Ritchie sought to compel discovery from him. The bankruptcy court conducted a hearing on Ritchie's requests on January 22, 2009. Kelley and the United States Trustee resisted such efforts. The bankruptcy court concluded that "there (wasn't) any basis for the discovery in the first instance here. So I'm certainly not going to either order the expediting of the responses nor am I going to delay the hearing. I'm going to address the issues as have been framed . . . next Tuesday for the formal hearing addressing these questions as matters of law." UST App. 30. The court entered its order denying Ritchie's request and further quashed all such discovery requests. UST App. 149-150.

Ritchie has not appealed the bankruptcy court's order denying its discovery requests. The only order Ritchie has appealed is the bankruptcy court's order entered February 26, 2009. Docket Entry # 1. As such, this Court does not have jurisdiction to entertain Ritchie's claim of error. Powers v. Mesaba Aviation, Inc., d/b/a Mesaba Airlines, ___ F.Supp.2d ___, 2007 WL 2261690 (D. Minn. Aug. 3, 2007) ("Under Rule 8002(a), a notice of appeal must be filed 'within 10 days of the date of the entry of the judgment, order, or decree appealed from.'") (citation omitted); Accord, Veltman v. Whetzal, 93 F.3d 517, 520 (8th Cir. 1996) (failure to timely file a notice of appeal "deprives the district court of jurisdiction to review that [appealed-from] order"), affirming Veltman v. Whetzal, 192 B.R. 201 (D.S.D. 1996) .

Even if Ritchie argues that the discovery issue is part and parcel of the bankruptcy court's order approving Kelley's appointment as trustee, Ritchie must show an abuse of discretion. Such matters are soundly left to the discretion of the court. Pleasants v. Am Express Co., 541 F.3d 853, 859 (8th Cir. 2008) ("We review the district court's order for an abuse of discretion, allowing the court 'great latitude' in discovery matters") (citing Executive Air Taxi Corp. v. City of Bismarck, 518 F.3d 562, 570 (8th Cir. 2008)). See also, Miscellaneous Docket Matter #1 v. Miscellaneous Docket Matter #2, 197 F.3d 922, 925 (8th Cir. 1999) (abuse of discretion standard applies in discovery matters in proceeding ancillary to principal action). The bankruptcy court correctly concluded that disposition of the matter of approving Kelley's appointment as common trustee could be determined as a matter of law. Accordingly, Ritchie's claim of error concerning its discovery requests falls short.

CONCLUSION

For these reasons, the United States Trustee hereby respectfully requests this Court affirm the bankruptcy court's order overruling Ritchie's objection to Kelley's appointment as trustee for these jointly administered chapter 11 cases and approving his appointment.

Attorneys for Appellee United States Trustee

SUMMARY OF THE CASE AND REQUEST FOR ORAL ARGUMENT

This appeal concerns the appointment of a chapter 11 trustee in ten jointly administered chapter 11 cases.[1] The United States Trustee sought the appointment.[2] He did that because pre-petition management had been replaced by a district court-appointed equity receiver who then filed chapter 11 petitions on behalf of the Petters debtors. Under 11 U.S.C. § 543, the receiver as a custodian was obligated to turn property of the estate over to a trustee or debtor in possession. Because old management was not qualified to serve as fiduciaries, the appointment of a trustee was necessary to assure that the debtors' estates were administered in conformity with the Bankruptcy Code.

[2] United States Trustees are Department of Justice Officials appointed by the Attorney General to supervise the administration of chapter 11 bankruptcy cases. See 28 U.S.C. § 581-589(a). See also H.R. Rep. No. 95-595, at 88 (1977), reprinted in 1978 U.S.C.C.A.N. 5963, 6049 (United States Trustees "serve as bankruptcy watch-dogs to prevent fraud, dishonesty, and overreaching in the bankruptcy arena.") Their express statutory powers include authorization to move for the appointment of a trustee, 11 U.S.C. § 1104(a), and the naming of a trustee if the court orders a trustee's appointment, 11 U.S.C. § 1104(d).

While the United States Trustee sought the appointment of a single trustee for all of the Petters debtors, the Appellants, collectively referred to herein as "Ritchie,"[3] sought the appointment of a separate trustee for one of the debtors, Petters Group Worldwide ("PGW"), because they have claimed that PGW is indebted to them for more than $200 million. After adjudicating that request, the bankruptcy court ruled that the United States Trustee was allowed to appoint one trustee for all of the Petters entities.

The United States Trustee then appointed Douglas A. Kelley ("Kelley") to serve as trustee for all of the Petters debtors, and the bankruptcy court approved the appointment, overruling Ritchie's subsequent objections to the common appointment of Kelley as chapter 11 trustee for the Petters debtors. See Petters Co., Inc., 401 B.R. 391 (Bankr. D. Minn. 2009). Jt. App. 151-167.

Ritchie then appealed the bankruptcy court's order to the district court, which affirmed.[4] Ritchie Special Credit Investments, Ltd. v. U. S. Trustee, 415 B.R. 391 (D. Minn. 2009). The district court agreed with the bankruptcy court's analysis on each primary issue presented on appeal. The district court found no justification for multiple trustees, and concluded that the appointment of a single trustee for all of the Petters debtors resulted in an economical, cost-efficient, and orderly administration of those estates. The district court also found that no materially adverse interest precluded Kelley's dual status as pre-petition receiver and bankruptcy trustee.

The United States Trustee requests oral argument in this case.

STATEMENT OF JURISDICTION

The bankruptcy court had jurisdiction to decide the trustee-related disputes involved in this appeal under 11 U.S.C. § 157(d). On March 9, 2009, Ritchie filed a notice of appeal from the bankruptcy court's February 26, 2009 trustee order. It was timely under 11 U.S.C. § 158(c)(2) and FED. R. BANKR. P. 8002(a). The district court had jurisdiction under 28 U.S.C. § 158(a)(1) or (2). On September 23, 2009, Ritchie timely filed its notice of appeal from the district court's September 9, 2009 order affirming the bankruptcy court. FED. R. APP. P. 4(a)(1)(B). This Court has jurisdiction under 28 U.S.C. §§ 158(d)(1) and 1291 (authorizing appeals from district courts to circuit courts).

On October 14, 2009, a fellow appellee, the official committee of unsecured creditors, filed a motion to dismiss this appeal for lack of jurisdiction on the ground that the bankruptcy court's order was interlocutory. On November 9, 2009, this Court denied the motion to dismiss in a summary order in which it adopted the reasoning of In re Marvel Entertainment Group, Inc., 140 F.3d 463, 470-471 (3d Cir. 1998).

- Pleasants v. Am. Express Co., 541 F.3d 853 (8th Cir. 2008)

STATEMENT OF THE CASE

The petitions commencing the chapter 11 cases of Petters Company, Inc. ("PCI") and Petters Group Worldwide, LLC ("PGW") were filed on October 11, 2008.[5] Jt. App. 50. Within one week following, the petitions commencing the chapter 11 cases of the other eight Petters debtors were filed. Id. All the cases were filed by Douglas A. Kelley in his capacity as the federal court-appointed receiver of these entities. App. A47, A346. An order for joint administration of the above-entitled cases was entered on October 22, 2008. Jt. App. 103-104. The joint administration order meant that the procedural aspects of the debtors' cases would be treated as though there was one debtor. See FED. R. BANKR. P. 1015(b).

Shortly after the cases were filed, the United States Trustee filed his motion under 11 U.S.C. § 1104(a) seeking an order directing the appointment of a chapter 11 trustee. Jt. App. 105-129. Ritchie filed its own motion requesting the appointment of two trustees: one for PGW (the debtor against whom the Ritchie creditors had claims), and one for the other nine debtors — although at times Ritchie has cast its argument as seeking one trustee for PGW and one for PCI, which owns and controls all of the debtors aside from PGW. App. A8-A9, A12-A22, A51-A52.

After conducting a hearing, the court granted the United States Trustee's motion. App. A1-A64. It also granted Ritchie's motion, but only "to the extent of ordering the United States Trustee to appoint [one] trustee or [multiple] trustees for these cases, one or more in number as the United States Trustee's judgment dictated." App. A65-A66. The court found "the issue of whether a trustee should be appointed for debtor Petters Group Worldwide, LLC, with a different person or persons to be appointed as trustee(s) for the other debtors, was not ripe until the United States Trustee had first exercised his [statutory] authority under 11 U.S.C. § 1104(a), as to all of the debtors" "to name a specific person, or persons, as trustee." Id.; 11 U.S.C. § 1104(a).

Subsequently, the United States Trustee, acting under the authority of 11 U.S.C. § 1104(d) and FED. R. BANKR. P. 2009(c)(2), appointed Douglas A. Kelley ("Kelley") as chapter 11 trustee for all ten Petters debtors. Jt. App. 151-167. He next filed an application under FED. R. BANKR. P. 2007.1(c) seeking approval of that appointment with the bankruptcy court. Id.

Ritchie timely filed its objections[6] to the United States Trustee's appointment of Kelley as a trustee for all ten debtors; it alleged disqualifying conflicts of interest arising from Kelley's status as pre-petition receiver for the ten Petters entities as well as conflicts of interest arising from Kelley's role as trustee for both PCI and PGW. App. A67-A83. Ritchie contended that Kelley could serve as trustee for nine of the debtors, but a different trustee needed to be appointed to serve for PGW. Jt. App. 317-318. Ritchie also sought to conduct expedited discovery into certain of Kelley's actions. Id. at 209-221. Kelley opposed Ritchie's request for discovery. Id. at 221-229. A hearing was held regarding Ritchie's motion to compel discovery. Id. at 207-259. The bankruptcy court denied Ritchie's request and quashed all such discovery attempts. Id. at 260-261.

The bankruptcy court next held a hearing on the United States Trustee's Rule 2007.1(c) application seeking approval of Kelley's appointment. Id. at 278-388. appointment. Id. at 335-345. Ritchie was the sole party to oppose the motion.[8] Id. at 285-318. Ritchie expressed its desire to have a separate trustee appointed for PGW, but indicated it had no objection if Kelley remained in place as trustee for PCI and the other eight Petters debtors. In re Petters Co., Inc., 401 B.R. at 403, Jt. App. 312, 318. At the hearing the bankruptcy court allowed the parties time to present their arguments regarding their respective positions. Id. at 278-388.

The bankruptcy court issued a memorandum opinion approving the appointment of Kelley as common trustee for all of the debtor entities. App. A344-A378. The bankruptcy court held that there was no actual conflict of interest created by Kelley's pre-petition role as federal equity receiver and his role as bankruptcy trustee. In re Petters Co., Inc., 401 B.R. at 410. The court also held that under the present circumstances, there was no actual conflict of interest which precluded Kelley from serving as trustee for both PCI and PGW. But the court also left open the possibility for Ritchie (or any party in interest) to come forward at some future point to establish an actual conflict had ripened. Id. at 414.

[8] In a colloquy with the bankruptcy court, Ritchie"backed off" its initial request to disqualify Kelley as trustee for all the debtor entities, stating its "primary objective is to have a separate trustee appointed for PGW" and leaving Kelley in place for the other nine debtor entities. In re Petters Co., Inc., 401 B.R. at 403; Jt. App. 317-318. This position is consistent with Ritchie's prayer for relief "the Trustee Order should be reversed, and a new trustee should be appointed for PGW." Ritchie Brief at 47.

Pursuant to the court's order, Kelley filed his acceptance of appointment as chapter 11 trustee and in the same pleading attached his turnover of assets. Jt. App. 401-405.

PCI and PGW[9] are both privately held limited liability companies owned 100% by Thomas J. Petters ("Petters"). Jt. App. 51, 171. PGW has investments in companies across the globe; however, its principal asset was 100% ownership of the stock of Polaroid Corporation. Id. PCI was the venture capital arm of the Petters enterprises. Id. PCI owns 100% of the membership interests of eight out of the ten Petters debtors.[10] Id. It utilized single purpose entities to obtain billions of dollars of funding, purportedly to acquire merchandise for sale to wholesalers and retailers nationwide. Id.

On October 3, 2008, prior to the bankruptcy filings, Mr. Petters was arrested on federal charges of mail and wire fraud, money laundering, and conspiracy as a result of a federal criminal investigation into a Ponzi scheme. In ruling that Kelley could serve as trustee for both the PCI estate and the PGW estate, the bankruptcy court relied on FED. R. BANKR. The court also held that Kelley’s pre-petition status as the court-appointed receiver for Tom Petters and several of his business entities (including all the debtors) did not prevent Kelley from serving as a common trustee in these cases. “In sum, Kelley’s past status as trustee [sic] does not make him not disinterested so as to bar his appointment as trustee for these cases. Any such status he may technically retain after a full effectuation of his appointment as trustee will not do so either. The ‘external conflict’ urged by the Ritchie Parties is not a ground for disapproving the United States Trustee’s appointment.” In re Petters Co., Inc., 401 B.R. at 410.

Ritchie timely appealed the bankruptcy court’s order to the United States District Court, District of Minnesota. On appeal, the district court affirmed the bankruptcy court’s exercise of discretion. In ruling, the district court found no justification for multiple trustees, and concluded that appointment of a single trustee for all of the Petters debtors resulted, at present, in an economical, cost-efficient, and orderly administration of those estates. Ritchie, 415 B.R. at 400-401. The district court also found that Kelley was not precluded from serving. Ritchie had alleged that Kelley could not serve as trustee because he had a materially adverse interest arising from his dual status as pre-petition receiver and bankruptcy trustee. The district court disagreed. Id. at 399-400. Thus, the district court agreed with the bankruptcy court's analysis on each primary issue on appeal. This appeal followed.

SUMMARY OF THE ARGUMENT

No party in this case opposed the appointment of a trustee for the ten Petters debtors. Only one party, Ritchie, believed two trustees were necessary. It unsuccessfully sought one trustee for nine related debtors, and a different trustee for the tenth — PGW. Under the law, a single trustee can represent multiple estates unless the bankruptcy court finds, based on the evidence before it, that an actual conflict prejudices one of the estates. The bankruptcy court did not commit clear error in finding Ritchie's assertions failed to demonstrate that multiple trustees must be appointed here.

First, the bankruptcy court did not commit clear error in finding the selection of a common trustee in these jointly administered cases presented no actual conflict and would be economical, would avoid unnecessary duplication of actions and would provide for an orderly administration of the cases. A trustee acts in conformity with the mandates of the Bankruptcy Code. His duties are to identify potential assets, prosecute avoidance claims and to monetize the same. Contrary to the assertions of Ritchie, Kelley does not have the power to pursue forfeiture actions, nor is he aligned with or biased in favor of the federal government in its criminal action against Petters, PCI and PGW.

Second, the district court did not commit clear error in finding that the facts surrounding Kelley's status as pre-petition receiver for the Petters debtors did not create an actual conflict with his proposed status as chapter 11 trustee of those entities. Therefore, the court did not err in finding Kelley was a "disinterested person"as that term is defined under the provisions of 11 U.S.C. § 101(14).

Third, the absence of reversible error in the bankruptcy court's findings is underscored by the court's statement that any party in interest could raise an objection to the trustee's appointment if an actual conflict ever arises in the future.

Finally, Ritchie is unable to show that the bankruptcy court abused its discretion in denying its discovery requests. There was no error in the district court's determination that the bankruptcy court did not abuse its discretion in denying Ritchie's discovery request as overbroad and irrelevant.

ARGUMENT

I. THE BANKRUPTCY COURT DID NOT ERR BY APPROVING KELLEY'S APPOINTMENT AS TRUSTEE

A. Statutory Framework

Chapter 11 bankruptcy cases are run either by debtors in possession or trustees. Compare 11 U.S.C. § 1107 (debtors in possession), and 11 U.S.C. § 1104 (trustees) . Under section 1104 of the Bankruptcy Code, the court is required to order the appointment of a chapter 11 trustee for "cause," including fraud, dishonesty, incompetence, or gross mismanagement of the affairs of the debtor by current management either before or after the filing of the petition. 11 U.S.C. § 1104(a)(1).

Once the court orders the appointment of a trustee, the United States Trustee, after consulting with parties in interest, appoints, subject to the court's approval, a "disinterested person" to serve as trustee. 11 U.S.C. § 1104(d). The definition of a "disinterested person" is set out in section 101(14) of the Bankruptcy Code.[19]

[19] 11 U.S.C. § 101(14) provides:

(14) The term "disinterested person" means a person that –

(A) is not a creditor, an equity security holder, or an insider;

(B) is not and was not, withing 2 years before the date of the filing of the petition, a director, officer, or employee of the debtor; and

Further, the Bankruptcy Rules contemplate that while a common trustee may be appointed for jointly administered chapter 11 bankruptcy estates, the court shall order the selection of separate trustees when creditors or equity security holders demonstrate that the different estates will be prejudiced by a common trustee's conflicts of interest. FED. R. BANKR. P. 2009(c)(2), (d).

As an alternative, a party in interest may, within 30 days after the order requiring the appointment of a trustee, request that a trustee election be held, and the United States Trustee will convene a meeting of creditors for the purpose of holding such an election. 11 U.S.C. § 1104(b). The election must be held pursuant to procedures established in sections 702(a), (b), and (c) of the Bankruptcy Code, and the person elected must be disinterested. Id. The ability of creditors to demand a trustee election provides them with a means to select, as a group, a disinterested person to serve as chapter 11 trustee if they are not satisfied with the person appointed to serve as trustee by the United States Trustee.[20]

> (C) does not have an interest materially adverse to the interest of the estate or of any class of creditors or equity security holders, by reason of any direct or indirect relationship to, connection with, or interest in, the debtor, or for any other reason.

[20] Ritchie invoked its rights under these provisions of the Bankruptcy Code. Jt. App. 168-169. On April 22, 2009, the United States Trustee convened a meeting of creditors in the PGW case. App. A339. The United States Trustee filed his report of disputed election, concluding that the voting quorum threshold

B. The bankruptcy court did not commit clear error in finding that creditors of Petters Group Worldwide were not prejudiced by Kelley's common appointment as chapter 11 trustee in the Petters debtors' cases.

1. The bankruptcy court did not commit clear error in finding no actual conflict existed at the time of appointment and stating that it would revisit the issue if an actual conflict ever arose.

The bankruptcy court did not commit clear error in finding Ritchie's assertion that Kelley cannot serve as a common trustee for all the Petters debtors falls short of the requirements of FED. R. BANKR. P. 2009(d). App. A67-A83. Ritchie's sole basis for arguing an impermissible actual conflict would have arisen from Kelley's appointment as trustee for PGW, PCI, and PCI subsidiaries is that claims are likely to exist among those entities.[21] was not met for holding a trustee election, and alternatively, the votes did not meet the 50 percent statutory threshold for electing a new trustee. Ritchie objected. Jt. App. 439-461, 462-483. A hearing was held on July 15, 2009, before the bankruptcy court. The matter remains under advisement. Id.

[21] This position is inconsistent with the one Ritchie took when it sought the appointment of a single receiver for both PGW and PCI in the Circuit Court of Cook County, Illinois. In that proceeding, Ritchie sought the appointment of a "William Procida as Receiver for the Collateral, including PGW and PCI and all its operations, with all of the usual powers of a receiver, . . ." See Appointed Trustee's Response to Objection to Appointment of Douglas A. Kelley as Trustee for All of the Debtors in these Jointly Administered Proceedings, Jt. App. 170-186. The state court granted Ritchie's request and appointed William Procida "Receiver of the Petters Entities," which was defined to include PGW and PCI. Id. at 173-174. Ultimately, however, the Illinois state court deferred to the district court's Receivership Order, suspended further proceedings, and expressly relegated the Ritchie parties to "their rights on appeal or otherwise with respect to the Minnesota

But, as other courts have recognized, the existence of such interdebtor claims is not automatic grounds for removal of a trustee for multiple estates, and accordingly does not constitute grounds to mandate the appointment of separate trustees. Removal must be based on evidence of an actual conflict which prejudices the creditors of one of the estates.

In In re BH&P, Inc., 949 F.2d 1300 (3d Cir. 1991), for example, the Third Circuit rejected the notion that a trustee who, in a jointly administered case, asserts a claim on behalf of one estate against another, becomes a "creditor" as defined under 11 U.S.C. § 101(14)(A). The BH&P court instead held that section 101(14) does not disqualify a trustee because of actions taken by the trustee in his representative capacity. As the Third Circuit explained, the appointment of a separate trustee requires a showing that creditors will suffer actual prejudice by conflicts held by a common trustee. "Before a trustee may be removed, some actual injury must be shown." BH&P, 949 F.2d at 1311.

The cases cited by Ritchie contain facts which established an identifiable conflict between two or more entities. Appellants' Br. at 26. Such is not the case here. The interrelatedness of the Petters debtors and affiliates of other Petters entities is obviously complex. "Upon reviewing the schedules, it becomes immediately obvious that the debtor entities, along with the dozens of other subsidiary entities of these debtor entities, and affiliates of other entities owned by Thomas J. Petters, have accrued inter-company obligations, engaged in extensive transferring of funds between PCI, PGW and subsidiary entities of each, and incurred inter-company obligations on behalf of other entities at hundreds of million dollar levels." Appointed Trustee's Response to Objection to Appointment of Douglas A. Kelley as Trustee for all of the Debtors in these Jointly Administered Proceedings, Jt. App. 179. Kelley's response outlined his proposed "plan of action" to recover and liquidate assets, pursue avoidance claims and fraudulent transfers, and then to distribute the proceeds in accordance with the statutory priorities envisioned by the Bankruptcy Code.[22] Id. at 181-182.

Finally, the trial court recognized that conflicts are not necessarily static. As the bankruptcy court found, Ritchie (or any party in interest) is free to challenge Kelley's appointment at some future point to if an actual conflict arises. 401 B.R. at 414. Perhaps it is telling that well into these cases, Ritchie has never sought to do so. Under these circumstances, the bankruptcy court did not commit clear error.

II. The bankruptcy court did not commit clear error in finding that Ritchie's arguments did not establish prejudice under FED. R. BANKR. P. 2009(d).

The Bankruptcy Rules expressly contemplate that a common trustee may be appointed for jointly administered chapter 11 bankruptcy estates. FED. R. BANKR. P. 2009(c)(2). Indeed, "[j]oint administration by a single trustee is commonplace in the scheme of bankruptcy administration and its positives outweigh any negatives." BH&P, 949 F.2d at 1310-1311. Nevertheless, if different estates will be prejudiced by a common trustee's conflicts of interest, the appointment of separate trustees is permissible. FED. R. BANKR. P. 2009(d).

The subjective nature of this inquiry requires a case-by-case analysis, and a court should intervene only upon a showing that the conflicts of interest are serious, and only "in case of special and peculiar necessity for the protection of rights which cannot be adequately protected by a common trustee or by creditors directly." See 9 ALAN N. RESNICK & HENRY J. SOMMER, COLLIER ON BANKRUPTCY ¶ 2009.04, at 2009-6-7 (15th ed. rev. 2006) (quoting In re Wood, 248 F. 246 (6th Cir. 1918), cert. denied, 247 U.S. 512 (1918)). "'Horrible imaginings alone cannot be allowed to carry the day. Not every conceivable conflict must result in sending [the trustee] away to lick his wounds.'" BH&P, 949 F.2d at 1313 (quoting In re Martin, 817 F.2d 175, 183 (1st Cir. 1987)).

The bankruptcy court employed these principles when considering whether the selection of separate trustees in these cases was required under FED. R. BANKR. P. 2009(d), and in particular whether the creditors of PGW were prejudiced by Kelley's common appointment. As articulated by the bankruptcy court:

> The real issue is whether the conflicts bode actual and particularized prejudice — real detriment — to the creditors of one of the debtors, or to a particular creditor-constituency of one of the debtors, as the estates go through administration under the control of a single person, and that administration passes through the procedural and substantive permutations that that one person elects.

In re Petters Co., Inc., 401 B.R. at 412. While the bankruptcy court acknowledged that such conflicts could potentially emerge during the joint administration of these cases, it concluded that those conflicts were not presently ripe. Id. at 412-414 (noting, inter alia, that Kelley's activities as trustee would "not entail any action or process that would pit the distribution rights of Petters Group Worldwide's creditors directly against those of the creditors of any of the other debtors until most or all recoverable assets [had been marshaled]."). That finding was not clearly erroneous and should be affirmed.

Further, the bankruptcy court did not commit clear error in finding that the particular circumstances associated with these cases "powerfully support the concentration of attention and effort into one fiduciary steward." Id. at 413; see also Ritchie, 415 B.R. at 402 (district court opinion, quoting extensively from bankruptcy court's decision and concluding that "[t]he bankruptcy court properly engaged in a case-specific analysis and concluded that at this stage of the bankruptcy proceedings, the present, palpable, and substantial benefits of economy and efficiency prevail over concerns of future, abstract, and unripened conflicts that have yet to or may not materialize."). Thus, the bankruptcy court did not commit clear error in finding that Kelley could adequately serve as common trustee in each of these cases, and that the creditors of Petters Group Worldwide were not prejudiced by that common appointment.

Moreover, the selection of a common trustee in these jointly administered cases will be economical, will avoid unnecessary duplication of actions and will provide for an orderly administration of the cases. "[I]t has long been recognized that joint administration, and the appointment of a common trustee, are favored means to save expense." In re Ben Franklin Retail Stores, Inc., 214 B.R. 852, 858 (Bankr. N.D. Ill. 1997). Appointing a single trustee to investigate and locate all available assets is in the collective best interest of the creditors, and it does not present a conflict of interest. See In re International Oil Co., 427 F.2d 186, 187 (2d Cir. 1970); In re H&S Transp. Co., 55 B.R. 786, 791-92 (Bankr. M.D. Tenn. 1982).

The bankruptcy court recognized these considerations of economy and efficiency. In re Petters Co., Inc., 401 B.R. at 412. The additional expenditure of time and professional expense weighs heavily against appointing another trustee for PGW. Indeed, as the court found, the " Ritchie Parties have not even made a squawk about economy or efficiency supporting or ultimately vindicating the appointment of a second trustee, and there is no credible way they can." Id. at 413.

Based on the foregoing, the bankruptcy court did not commit clear error in finding that there was no conflict under FED. R. BANKR. P. 2009(d). Id. at 414.

3. No inherent difference between Ritchie and other creditors, or between PGW and PCI, mandates the appointment of a separate trustee for PGW.

In an effort to support its contention that PGW is "different" and therefore the court below abused its discretion in not giving it a separate trustee, Ritchie seeks to differentiate between "regular creditors" and victims of Petters' fraud. Ritchie claims "regular creditor" status for itself. See, e.g., Appellants' Br. at 25. Furthermore, it seeks to draw a line between PGW and the remaining debtor entities, claiming that PGW was a legitimate business enterprise and that PCI and its subsidiaries were engaged in unrelated fraudulent activities. Id.

First, these are assertions. The bankruptcy court never made such factual findings. Second, these are distinctions without a difference. Victims of fraud are not given higher priority than commercial creditors in bankruptcy cases,[23] and whatever relationships existed between PGW and the remaining debtors, including PCI, will be sorted out during the administration of the bankruptcy cases. If Ritchie thinks it has special rights, it can assert those rights, and appeal if it loses.

In any event, Ritchie's attempt to distinguish between itself as a "creditor" and the "victims of PCI's diverting business fraud," e.g., Appellants' Br. at 28, is belied by the underlying documentation (as reflected in Exhibit A to Debtor's Response to United States Trustee's Motion to Appoint a Chapter 11 Trustee and Motion of the Ritchie Group for Appointment of a Chapter 11 Trustee in the Bankruptcy Case of Petters Worldwide, LLC). App. A322-A326. According to the financial history of the money "loaned" to PGW, the entire $146 million was wired directly by Ritchie into the bank account of PCI at M&I Bank. "This demonstrates how loosely funds were distributed around the various Petters companies, although notably no funds appear to have gone to PGW. Virtually all of these funds went immediately to pay other investors." App. A316. In this sense, Ritchie is most likely not a true creditor as it suggests, but instead another victim of Petters' vast Ponzi scheme.[24] In such cases, appellate courts have consistently determined that innocent victims should share equally in any recovered funds because equity demands equal treatment.[25] See generally United States Securities and Exchange Commission v. The Infinity Group Company, 226 Fed. Appx. 217 (3d Cir. 2007) (per curiam) (unpublished) (collecting cases).

Ritchie also contends that PCI, not PGW, was the vehicle for the fraud. Appellants' Br. at 20. However, the indictment returned by the grand jury charges both entities with a variety of federal offenses. "From at least in or about 1995 and continuing through in or about September 2008, in the State of Minnesota and elsewhere, the defendants, THOMAS JOSEPH PETTERS, PETTERS COMPANY, INC., AND PETTERS GROUP WORLDWIDE, LLC, aided and abetted by persons and affiliated business entities, . . . did knowingly and Defendants fraudulently omitted this information when inducing Plaintiffs to sign the Note Purchase Agreement and the Ritchie Lenders to purchase Notes - actions that would not have been taken absent the fraudulent omissions." Count 12 of the Indictment alleges that Petters individually, along with both PCI and PGW, were involved in a money laundering conspiracy in violation of 18 U.S.C. § 1956(h). Id. at ¶ 20, A301-A302.

[26] On June 3, 2009, the Grand Jury issued a Superseding Indictment against Petters, PCI and PGW; the same underlying offenses were charged, however, some changes were made in the specific counts. See Jt. App. 484-499.

Ritchie's attempt to minimize the role of PGW in the fraudulent scheme stands in stark contrast to the allegations in the indictment. At most, these are allegations, not factual bases for reversing a trial court's exercise of discretion. And, according to the Indictment and the Superseding Indictment, the actions of PGW and PCI were intertwined in this complex criminal scheme to defraud victims. The Grand Jury found probable cause to believe that both entities were instrumentalities in Petters' criminal enterprise. Against this backdrop, the bankruptcy court did not abuse its discretion in rejecting Ritchie's assertion that the differences in the alleged criminal culpability of PGW and PCI warranted appointment of a separate trustee for PGW.

C. The bankruptcy court did not commit clear error in finding that Kelley did not have an actual conflict from serving as the pre-petition Receiver and the trustee.

Once a court orders the appointment of a trustee, the United States Trustee, after consulting with parties in interest, is directed to appoint, subject to the court's approval, a "disinterested person" to serve as trustee. 11 U.S.C. § 1104(d). The requirements of a "disinterested person" as set out in 11 U.S.C. § 101(14), have been liberally construed. See In re BH&P, Inc., 949 F.2d 1300, 1309 (3d Cir. 1991). In this appeal, Ritchie asserts that Kelley is not a "disinterested person" under subsection (C) of section 101(14). See 11 U.S.C. § 101(14)(C) (defining "disinterested person," in part, as someone who "does not have an interest materially adverse to the interest of the estate or of any class of creditors or equity security holders, by reason of any direct or indirect relationship to, connection with, or interest in, the debtor, or for any other reason.").

As the trustee for these bankruptcy cases, Kelley is obligated to follow the mandates of Title 11 of the United States Code. The district court who appointed him receiver recognized this requirement when it amended the receivership order to require "(a)ny bankruptcy cases . . . shall during their pendency be governed by and administered pursuant to the requirements of the United States Bankruptcy Code, 11 U.S.C. section 101 et seq., and the applicable Federal Rules of Bankruptcy Procedure." Receivership Order, Section IV, ¶ B. 2. c. Jt. App. 144. The bankruptcy court's order also recognizes this obligation: ". . . Kelley has committed to proceeding with the administration of the estates in these cases in accordance with the values and priorities of bankruptcy law. Kelley acknowledges that this will entail maximizing the value of all assets collected, and then distributing them to the holders of all allowed claims against the debtors, pursuant to statutory priorities and pro rata if necessary, all as the Bankruptcy Code envisions." Trustee Order, 401 B.R. at 409. (footnote omitted). In no event, however, would Kelley's obligations as trustee of these bankruptcy estates be materially adverse to his obligations as receiver in the district court.

In short, Kelley as trustee is duty-bound to administer these estates according to the dictates of the Bankruptcy Code. The district court recognized this fiduciary obligation in affirming the order of the bankruptcy court. "As receiver, Kelley must adhere to the mandates of the bankruptcy forum for which he opted, but remains the receiver nevertheless." Ritchie, 415 B.R. at 399, n. 7. Indeed, the bankruptcy court, as part of its order approving Kelley's appointment, required him, as Receiver, to turnover all of the assets of the Petters debtors' bankruptcy estates to the appointed trustee. In re Petters Co., Inc. 401 B.R. at 415, UST App. 168-172.

Contrary to Ritchie's assertions, however, Kelley is not placed in an untenable position with conflicting loyalties.[27] Ritchie's objection to the appointment of [27] Ritchie's objection also misapprehends Kelley's role as Receiver, suggesting that he owes a fiduciary duty to the victims of Petters' fraud and serving as an agent for the government. The rights, powers and duties of a federal equity receiver are governed by 28 U.S.C. § 959(b). A receiver's primary duty is as an officer of the court in which he was appointed; he is not an employee of any party to the litigation. See FED. R. CIV. P. 66. Smallwood v. Lay, 443 F.2d 535, 539 (8th Cir. 1971); Culhane v. Anderson, 17 F.2d 559, 561 (8th Cir. 1927). "A receiver is the agent only of the court appointing him; he represents the court rather than the parties. He is the custodian of property which is under the control of the court." Ledbetter v. Farmers Bank & Trust Co., 142 F.2d 147, 150 (4th Cir. 1944).

Kelley as trustee for all of these debtor entities misstates his role. The entire premise for the United States Trustee's motion for the appointment of a chapter 11 trustee in these cases centered on the fact that bankruptcy cases must be administered by trustees when "cause" exists because a bankruptcy court cannot order the appointment of a receiver under the Bankruptcy Code. 11 U.S.C. § 105(b) ("a court may not appoint a receiver under . . . title [11]."). But the Code nowhere provides that a pre-petition receiver can never be appointed to act as a chapter 11 trustee. If no actual conflict exists, he can. And, as the bankruptcy court correctly observed, "these chapter 11 cases will go ahead fully governed by the substantive law of bankruptcy." In re Petters Co., Inc., 401 B.R. at 408. Acting in conformity with this law, the bankruptcy court, citing the mandates of 11 U.S.C. § 543(b)(2),[28] ordered the turnover of all property Kelley had as Receiver to himself as chapter 11 trustee. In re Petters Co., Inc., 401 B.R. at 408-409.

[28] 11 U.S.C. § 543(b)(1) provides: "A custodian shall — deliver to the trustee any property of the debtor held by or transferred to such custodian, or proceeds, product, offspring, rents or profits of such property that is in such custodian's possession, custody, or control on the date that such custodian acquires knowledge of the commencement of the case(.)"

Likewise, the mandate of the receivership order[29] that Kelley "(c)oordinate with representatives of the United States Attorney's office and Court personnel as needed to ensure that any assets subject to the terms of this Order are available for criminal restitution, forfeiture, or other legal remedies . . ." does not create any materially adverse conflicts vis a vis Kelley's obligations to these bankruptcy estates. Appellants' Br. at 36-37, 40-41. The mere allegation of forfeiture in the indictment against Petters, PCI and PGW does not mandate the appointment of a separate trustee for PGW. Kelley, in his role as Receiver, is not empowered to pursue restitution or forfeiture. The power to prosecute any forfeiture against any asset rests with the United States Attorney acting through the Department of Justice.[30] Contrary to the assertion of Ritchie, Kelley is not aligned with or biased in favor of the Government. E.g., Appellants' Br. at 19, 20, 36-37, 40-41. "The notion of having the assets in Kelley's hands 'available for criminal restitution, forfeiture,' and the like signifies a duty to fully disclose their form and whereabouts and to maintain transparency that our legal system makes incumbent on any entrusted officer of a court, in the performance of obligations to the appointing court. It reflects no more than that." In re Petters Co., Inc., 401 B.R. at 407. (emphasis in original).[31]

Kelley's status as Receiver of any Petters entities does not conflict with his status as trustee of the Petters debtors. His fiduciary duties are mandated by title 11 of the United States Code. In this regard, Kelley must collect and preserve all available assets, and make them available for distribution to the creditors of these estates according to the priorities set forth under the Bankruptcy Code. Kelley is powerless to determine what assets, if any, may be subject to forfeiture and/or restitution. Those decisions are left to the discretion of the United States Attorney and the district court. See 18 U.S.C. § 982(a)(2)(A) (criminal forfeiture). Accordingly, his current or former status as Receiver does not disqualify him from serving as trustee in these cases.[32]

[31] For these reasons, Ritchie's reliance on In re Big Rivers Elec., 355 F.3d 415 (6th Cir. 2004) is unavailing. Appellants' Br. at 34. Kelley has no personal stake in the outcome of the Petters debtors' bankruptcies, in contrast to the bankruptcy examiner in Big Rivers, who improperly sought to arrange a side-deal that would tie his personal compensation to one creditor's recovery. Big Rivers has no bearing on this case.

[32] In addition, both the Second and Third Circuits have held that, for the purposes of section 101(14), in order for an individual to be considered not

THE BANKRUPTCY COURT DID NOT ABUSE ITS DISCRETION IN DENYING RITCHIE'S REQUEST FOR EXPEDITED DISCOVERY.

Prior to the hearing on the United States Trustee's appointment of Kelley as trustee, Ritchie sought to compel expedited discovery from him. Kelley and the United States Trustee objected to such efforts. Jt. App. 207-259. Ritchie had "disinterested" that individual "personally must 'have' the prohibited interest." See Bank Brussels Lambert v. Coan (In re Arochem Corp), 176 F.3d 610, 629 (2d Cir. 1999); BH&P, 949 F.2d at 1310 n.12 ("Where section 327 explicitly applies to persons who hold or represent adverse interests, disqualifying both, section 101(14)(E) refers only to those who have disqualifying interests. We do not think that this difference in terminology was accidental."). See also BFP v. Resolution Trust Corp., 511 U.S. 531, 537 (1994) ("[i]t is generally presumed Congress acts intentionally and purposely when it includes particular language in one section of a statute but omits it in another").

Both Arochem and BH&P construed section 101(14)(E) of the Bankruptcy Code, as in effect prior to October 17, 2005. On October 17, 2005, the Bankruptcy Abuse Prevention and Consumer Protection Act of 2005 became effective. See Pub. L. No. 109-8, 119 Stat. 23. Under the 2005 Act, section 101(14)(E) was re-codified at section 101(14)(C) of the Bankruptcy Code, although no change was made to its language. Thus, both Arochem and BH&P are instructive with respect to how section 101(14)(C) should be construed.

Under this construction, the bankruptcy court did not commit clear error in finding Kelley could not possibly be disqualified from serving as a common trustee in the Petters debtors' cases because his engagement as a pre-petition receiver for those entities occurred solely while acting in a representative capacity. See BH&P, 949 F.2d at 1310 (citing In re O.P.M. Leasing Services, Inc., 16 B.R. 932, 938 (Bankr. S.D.N.Y. 1982) for the proposition that actions which individual undertakes as a fiduciary do not cause that individual to be ineligible for the purposes of section 101(14)). Accordingly, both the bankruptcy and district courts below properly concluded that Kelley's status as a pre-petition receiver did not bar his appointment as a trustee.

served Kelley's counsel with interrogatories, requests for production and a notice of deposition, the subject matter of which revolved around Kelley's role as the court-appointed federal receiver. Id. at 241.

Ritchie asserted that it needed the discovery for its argument that Kelley, because of his status as Receiver, was precluded from being disinterested as required by 11 U.S.C. § 101(14)(C). The bankruptcy court ruled that discovery was not necessary on this point because it could determine the question of Kelley's disinterestedness by reviewing Kelley's duties as Receiver as set forth in the district court's receivership order and Kelley's duties as trustee as set forth in the Bankruptcy Code. Jt. App. 250.

As to Ritchie's alternative argument that Kelley could not serve as common trustee of the Petters debtors because of competing interests as between the estates, the bankruptcy court opined that issue could be "measured by the content of statements in schedules and other documents that are available of public record." Id. at 252. The bankruptcy court further ruled that Ritchie's request for discovery was overbroad and was not necessary for a determination of the ultimate determination of whether Kelley's appointment as common trustee for the Petters debtors should be approved. Id. Thus, the court denied the request for expedited discovery in all respects. Id. at 260-61.

Discovery matters are soundly left to the discretion of the trial court — or in this case, the bankruptcy court. See, e.g., Pleasants v. Am. Express Co., 541 F.3d 853, 859 (8th Cir. 2008) ("We review the district court's order for an abuse of discretion, allowing the court 'great latitude' in discovery matters") (citing Executive Air Taxi Corp. v. City of Bismarck, 518 F.3d 562, 570 (8th Cir. 2008)). See also, Miscellaneous Docket Matter #1 v. Miscellaneous Docket Matter #2, 197 F.3d 922, 925 (8th Cir. 1999) (abuse of discretion standard applies in discovery matters in proceeding ancillary to principal action).

To prevail on its argument, Ritchie must show an abuse of discretion. This it cannot do. The bankruptcy court correctly concluded that disposition of the matter of approving Kelley's appointment as common trustee could be determined without the need for discovery. Indeed, as established above, the bankruptcy court did not err in basing its approval of Kelley's appointment as trustee upon the receivership order, schedules and other matters appearing on the public record. In re Petters Co., Inc., 401 B.R. at 395, n. 6. The district court agreed. Ritchie, 415 B.R. at 403. Accordingly, Ritchie's claim of error concerning its discovery requests falls short.

CONCLUSION

For these reasons, the United States Trustee respectfully asks this Court to enter an order affirming the bankruptcy court's order overruling Ritchie's objection to Kelley's appointment as trustee for these jointly administered chapter 11 cases and approving his appointment.

For The Western District Of Michigan

BRIEF FOR THE APPELLEE

STATEMENT OF JURISDICTION

The bankruptcy court had subject matter jurisdiction under 28 U.S.C. sections 1334 and 157. The district court had jurisdiction over the appeal pursuant to 28 U.S.C. section 158(a). This Court has appellate jurisdiction under 28 U.S.C. section 158(d). The bankruptcy court's June 16, 2003, Final Order Pursuant to the Opinion and Order of April 16, 2003, which prohibited Allan J. Rittenhouse (hereinafter, "Mr. Rittenhouse" or "Appellant") from collecting any unpaid fees for pre-petition bankruptcy counseling was entered on the docket on June 20, 2003. (District Court Docket ("R.") 2, Notice of Transmittal, Appendix ("Apx.") ___ (Bankruptcy Court Docket ("Bankr. Dkt.") #57)) Mr. Rittenhouse filed a timely notice of Appeal on June 26, 2003. (R.2, Notice of Transmittal, Apx ___ (Bankr. Dkt. # 32)) The district court entered an opinion and final judgment affirming the bankruptcy court's judgment on February 11, 2004. (R. 15 (opinion) and 16 (order), Apx. ___) The district court's judgment was a final order, resolving the only outstanding claims between the parties. Mr. Rittenhouse filed a timely notice of appeal to this Court on February 26, 2004. (R.17, Notice of Appeal, Apx. ___)

STATEMENT OF THE ISSUE PRESENTED FOR REVIEW

Whether the bankruptcy court properly held that 11 U.S.C. sections 523 and 727(b) discharged any unpaid pre-petition attorneys' fees that were owed by the debtor prior to the filing of the bankruptcy petition.

STANDARD OF APPELLATE REVIEW

The district court factual findings are examined for clear error, while all conclusions of law are reviewed de novo. City of Baltimore v. State of West Virginia (In re Eagle-Pitcher Industries, Inc.), 285 F.3d 522, 527 (6th Cir. 2002); Federal Rule of Bankruptcy Procedure 8013. The district court's decision that 11 U.S.C. section 727(b) discharged all unpaid pre-petition attorneys' fees that were owed prior to the filing of the bankruptcy petition was a conclusion of law, which is reviewed de novo.

STATEMENT OF THE CASE

This appeal addresses whether a debt owed to a chapter 7 debtor's attorney for legal services performed before the bankruptcy case was filed is discharged under sections 523 and 727(b). Mr. Rittenhouse alleges that he owns an account receivable for pre-petition work performed by Michael K. Pepin, Esq., on behalf of the debtor, Sara L Chandlier (the "debtor"). The United States Trustee took the position that the debt was discharged in the debtor's case, and requested the imposition of sanctions against Mr. Rittenhouse for attempting to collect a discharged debt. On April 16, 2003, the bankruptcy court issued an opinion holding that the attorneys' fees claimed by Mr. Rittenhouse were discharged pursuant to sections 523 and 727(b) during the debtor's bankruptcy case. (R.2, Notice of Transmittal, Apx. ___ (Bankr. Dkt. # 41)) In so holding, the bankruptcy court followed the substantial weight of authority and rejected Mr. Rittenhouse's argument that 11 U.S.C. section 329(b) operated as an additional, implied exception to discharge beyond those set forth in 11 U.S.C. sections 523 and 727(b). (R.2, Notice of Transmittal, Apx. ___ (Bankr. Dkt #41)) On June 16, 2003, the bankruptcy court issued a final order, based on the April 16, 2003, opinion that prohibited Mr. Rittenhouse from collecting any unpaid, pre-petition attorneys' fees. (R.2, Notice of Transmittal, Apx. ___ (Bankr. Dkt. # 57)) On appeal, in a decision entered on February 11, 2004, the district court affirmed the ruling of the bankruptcy court. (R.16, Order affirming order of bankruptcy court, Apx. ___) This appeal followed.

STATEMENT OF FACTS

On April 17, 2000, in the case of In re Ernest J. Desilets, Case No. GM99-90364, the United States Bankruptcy Court for the Western District of Michigan, entered an opinion and order finding that Mr. Rittenhouse was not authorized to practice in that court because he was not a member of the Michigan bar. Rittenhouse v. Delta Home Improvement, Inc., 255 B.R. 294, 296 (W.D. Mich. 2000), rev'd 291 F.3d 295 (6th Cir. 2002). Mr. Rittenhouse appealed that order. On September 26, 2000, while the order was on appeal, Mr. Rittenhouse consented before the bankruptcy court, sitting en banc, to the entry of an order suspending him from the roll of attorneys and enjoining him from practicing law in the Bankruptcy Court for the Western District of Michigan, pending resolution of his appeal of the order of April 17, 2000. Rittenhouse v. Delta Home Improvement, Inc., 255 B.R. at 296 n.2.

Approximately two months later, on November 6, 2000, while Mr. Rittenhouse was suspended from practice, Sara L. Chandlier (the "debtor") filed a petition for relief under chapter 7 of the Bankruptcy Code. The petition listed the attorney for the debtor as Michael Pepin, Esq. (R. 2, Notice of Transmittal, Apx. ___ (Bankr. Dkt. #1)) According to the response to Question 9 of the Statement of Affairs, and the Statement Filed Under Rule 2016(b), prior to the filing of the petition, the debtor paid Mr. Pepin nothing for his pre-petition bankruptcy counseling services as attorney for the debtor. Instead, the petition disclosed only that the debtor agreed to pay Mr. Pepin an $800 attorneys' fee in the future. (R. 2, Notice of Transmittal, Apx ___ (Bankr. Dkt. #1))

The debtor's meeting with the chapter 7 trustee and the creditors, required under 11 U.S.C. section 341, was scheduled for December 7, 2000, but was adjourned to December 21, 2000, because no attorney appeared on behalf of the debtor at either meeting. The debtor appeared on December 21, 2000, and was examined; her attorney did not represent her at that meeting. (R. 2, Notice of Transmittal, Apx ___ (Bankr. Dkt. No. 8 and 9; Transcript of Hearings Held on December 7 and 21, 2000, Bankr. Dkt No. 34; Bankruptcy Court Opinion of April 16, 2003, at 2, Bankr. Dkt. No. 41))

The bankruptcy court granted the debtor a discharge of all pre-petition debts on May 3, 2001, under 11 U.S.C. § 727(a). (R. 2, Notice of Transmittal, Apx ___ (Bankr. Dkt. No. 23)) That discharge has never been set aside, nor has any motion been filed for an exception of any particular debt from the discharge. (R. 2, Notice of Transmittal, Apx ___ (Bankruptcy Docket))

On June 3, 2002, a divided panel of the United States Court of Appeals for the Sixth Circuit reversed the order of April 17, 2000, which prohibited Mr. Rittenhouse from practicing in the United States Bankruptcy Court for the Western District of Michigan. Rittenhouse v. Delta Home Improv., Inc. (In re Desilets), 291 F.3d 925 (6th Cir. 2002). The majority held that Mr. Rittenhouse did not need Michigan state bar licensure to practice before the United States Bankruptcy Court for the Western District of Michigan. The Sixth Circuit issued its mandate on September 11, 2002. Thereafter, the bankruptcy court rescinded the orders, suspension and injunction of April 17, 2000, and September 26, 2000. Mr. Rittenhouse was restored to the bar for the Bankruptcy Court for the Western District of Michigan, effective on September 19, 2002.

On or about November 19, 2002, Mr. Rittenhouse wrote to the debtor claiming to have been her attorney in her 2000 bankruptcy filing, demanding payment of the $800 attorneys' fee to him as attorney for the debtor, and threatening to sue in order to collect. (R. 2, Notice of Transmittal, Apx ___ (Attachment to the United States Trustee's Motion Requesting Review and Disgorgement, Bankr. Dkt. No. 28)) Mr. Rittenhouse attached a draft state court complaint to the letter, along with six pages of proposed document requests, requests for admissions, and interrogatories.

The interrogatories referenced a motion for contempt for violation of the automatic stay of 11 U.S.C. section 362, and were apparently form interrogatories which bore no relationship to the debtor's situation. In the draft complaint, Mr. Rittenhouse alleged that the debtor contracted with him to act as her attorney and that the debtor agreed to pay him $800 in attorneys' fees. (R. 2, Notice of Transmittal, Apx ___ (Attachment to the United States Trustee's Motion Requesting Review and Disgorgement, Bankr. Dkt. No. 28)) The complaint did not explain how Mr. Rittenhouse was able to continue practicing bankruptcy law during a time he had been suspended voluntarily from practicing before the bankruptcy court, or why the attorney listed as the debtor's attorney on the petition had not been the attorney in the debtor's bankruptcy case.

On December 17, 2002, the United States Trustee[1] filed a Motion Requesting Review and Disgorgement of Attorney Compensation Under 11 U.S.C. section 329(b) and Rule 2017, and Sanctions Under 11 U.S.C. section 362. (R. 2, Notice of Transmittal, Apx ___ (Bankr. Dkt. No. 28)) The motion asserted that: 1) Mr. Rittenhouse was not the debtor's attorney, although he might have acted as Mr. Pepin's paralegal around the time this case was filed; 2) Mr. Rittenhouse had not proven that he had any right to collect the fees from the debtor; 3) the services performed for the debtor did not justify a fee of $800; and 4) that all of the debtor's pre-petition obligations, including the agreement to pay $800 in attorneys' fees, were discharged in bankruptcy under 11 U.S.C. section 727(b).

The United States Trustee's motion was argued on January 16, 2003. During that hearing, Mr. Rittenhouse did not explain the inconsistency between the debtor's bankruptcy petition, which represented that Mr. Pepin was debtor's counsel, and the draft complaint, which asserted that Mr. Rittenhouse had been the attorney for the debtor. Instead, he told the bankruptcy court that he had purchased this account receivable from Mr. Pepin. Mr. Rittenhouse put no documents into evidence establishing this claim, and provided no testamentary evidence regarding who was actually the debtor's counsel, who did the work, or what arrangement, if any, Mr. Rittenhouse had with Mr. Pepin regarding this particular debtor during the time Mr. Rittenhouse was suspended from practice. Mr. Rittenhouse admitted at the January 16, 2003, hearing that he had no documentary evidence to prove his alleged

On April 16, 2003, the bankruptcy court issued an order and opinion, holding that the debtor's pre-petition obligation to pay the attorneys' fees was discharged by the filing of the bankruptcy petition. The April 16, 2003, order scheduled a hearing for May 16, 2003, to determine the sanctions that should be levied upon Mr. Rittenhouse for attempting to collect a discharged debt. (R. 2, Notice of Transmittal, Apx ___(Bankr. Dkt. No. 41)) The bankruptcy court's decision addressed the discharge issue only and did not resolve the identity of the debtor's counsel in the bankruptcy proceeding, or whether Mr. Rittenhouse had purchased this "account receivable."

Following the May 16, 2003, hearing on sanctions, the bankruptcy court held that the only sanction to be imposed upon Mr. Rittenhouse would be to prohibit him from collecting the $800 fee from the debtor, until and unless the bankruptcy court opinion and order of April 16, 2003, were reversed upon appeal. (R. 2, Notice of Transmittal, Apx ___(Bankr. Dkt. No. 55)) The bankruptcy court's Final Order Pursuant to the Opinion and Order of April 16, 2003, was entered on the docket on June 20, 2003. (R. 2, Notice of Transmittal, Apx ___ (Bankr. Dkt. No. 57)) Mr. Rittenhouse filed his notice of appeal from the Final Order on June 26, 2003. (R. 2, Notice of Transmittal, Apx ___ (Bankr. Dkt. No. 58)) The district court's order affirming the bankruptcy court's June 16, 2003, order was entered on the docket on February 11, 2004. (R.16, District Court Order, Apx. ___)

SUMMARY OF ARGUMENT

As of the filing of this bankruptcy case, the debtor owed her attorney an unpaid debt of $800 for attorneys' fees incurred for pre-petition work. By operation of law, the filing of this bankruptcy case stayed any act to collect, assess, or recover a claim against the debtor that arose before the commencement of the case. 11 U.S.C. section 362(a)(6) (creating an automatic stay, which is a mandatory injunction, prohibiting such collection efforts post-petition). In her bankruptcy case, the debtor received a discharge under 11 U.S.C. section 727(b) from "all debts that arose before" the filing of her bankruptcy petition. Under the Bankruptcy Code, the only debts that were not discharged were those specifically excluded from the discharge under 11 U.S.C. section 523(a).

Although section 523(a) excepts nineteen specifically enumerated debts from discharge under section 727(b), there is no exception for pre-petition attorneys' fees owed to the debtor's attorney. Once the debtor's discharge was granted, therefore, section 524(a)(2) operates as a permanent injunction, thereby enjoining Mr. Rittenhouse from commencing or continuing to collect, recover or offset any discharged debt against the debtor. Since unpaid pre-petition attorneys' fees owed to debtor's counsel were not excepted from the discharge, the debtor's obligation to Mr. Rittenhouse was discharged and Mr. Rittenhouse was enjoined from taking any steps to collect that debt from the debtor.

These statutory provisions plainly prohibit the fee recovery Mr. Rittenhouse sought post-discharge. Given that, it is not surprising that the Second, Seventh and Ninth Circuits have squarely rejected attempts by others to collect fees post-discharge. These well-reasoned circuit decisions are indistinguishable and this Court should apply the Bankruptcy Code's discharge provisions in the same way they have.

Not surprisingly, Mr. Rittenhouse does not assert that pre-petition attorneys' fees are one of the nineteen specific exceptions to discharge set forth in section 523. Instead, he seeks to avoid the consequences of that discharge, by invoking what is essentially a consumer protection statute for debtors, section 329 of the Bankruptcy Code. The Second, Seventh and Ninth Circuits also squarely rejected this argument, because section 329 is a disclosure provision that requires attorneys to disclose all fees they have charged and will charge debtors. Nothing in section 329's language or legislative history supports any contention that it either awards attorneys' fees or guarantees attorneys that any pre-petition attorneys' fees will be paid. To the contrary, nothing in that provision purports to give attorneys any rights to fees beyond the express provisions of sections 727(b), 524(a)(2) and 523.

I. ARGUMENT

A primary purpose of the Bankruptcy System is to allow honest debtors to unburden themselves of the weight of oppressive indebtedness and start afresh. Local Loan Co. v. Hunt, 292 U.S. 234, 244 (1934). A fresh start is made available to debtors by the discharge of all or a portion of a debtor's debts. In re Krohn, 886 F.3d 123, 125 (6th Cir. 1989). By operation of law, the filing of a bankruptcy case stays any act to collect, assess, or recover a claim against the debtor that arose before the commencement of the case. 11 U.S.C. section 362(a)(6) (creating an automatic stay, which is a mandatory injunction, prohibiting any collection efforts post-petition). In chapter 7, in exchange for liquidation of the debtor's assets for the benefit of creditors, a discharge is awarded pursuant to section 727(b) of the Bankruptcy Code, which provides as follows:

> Except as provided in section 523 of this title, a discharge under subsection (a) of this section discharges the debtor from all debts that arose before the date of the order of relief under this chapter . . . and any liability on a claim . . . as if it had arisen before the commencement of the case . . . except as provided under § 523.

11 U.S.C. 727(b) (emphasis added).

By its express terms, section 727(b) discharges all debts other than those listed in section 523 of the Bankruptcy Code. In turn, section 523(a) creates nineteen specific exceptions to the discharge, none of which apply to a debtor's pre-petition obligation to pay attorneys' fees. Given that plain language, the only three circuits to address the issue have prohibited attorneys from pursuing pre-petition fees from a debtor who has received a discharge in a case. Fickling v. Flower, Medalie & Markowitz (In re Fickling), 361 F.3d 172, 175 (2d Cir. 2004) (pre-petition attorneys fees are not among the debts excepted from discharge by section 523); Bethea v. Robert J. Adams & Assoc. (In re Bethea), 352 F.3d 1125, 1127(7th Cir. 2003) (same); Hessinger and Associates v. United States Trustee (In re Biggar), 110 F.3d 685, 687 (9th Cir. 1997) (same).

Those decisions were correctly decided. Once a debtor's discharge is granted, section 524(a)(2) of the Bankruptcy Code operates as a permanent injunction, thereby enjoining a creditor from commencing or continuing to collect, recover or offset any discharged debt against a debtor. Thus, the stay and discharge provisions of the Bankruptcy Code are integral in providing a debtor with a fresh start.

A. Pursuant To The Plain Language Of Section 727(a), Unpaid Pre-Petition Attorneys' Fees Are Not Excepted From Discharge.

The Supreme Court has repeatedly made clear that exceptions to discharge are to be limited to those expressly set forth in section 523(a) of the Bankruptcy Code. Federal Communications Comm'n v. Nextwave Personal Communications, Inc., 537 U.S. 293, 304 (2003) ("A preconfirmation debt is dischargeable unless it falls within an express exception to discharge.");[2] Ohio v. Kovacs, 469 U.S. 274 (1985) ("[e]xcept for the . . . kinds of debts saved from discharge by 11 U.S.C. section 523(a), a discharge in bankruptcy discharges the debtor from all debts that arose before bankruptcy. "); and Kawaauhau v. Geiger, 523 U.S. 57, 62 (1998) (exceptions to discharge "should be confined to those plainly expressed.") (quoting Gleason v. Thaw, 236 U.S. 558, 562 (1915)). See also, In re Meyers, 196 F.3d 622, 624 (6th Cir. 1999) (exceptions to discharge narrowly construed consistent with the policy of providing the debtor with a "fresh start").

Contrary to Mr. Rittenhouse's argument, the plain language of sections 727(b) and 523 is dispositive of the issue in this appeal. Because pre-petition attorneys' fees are not among the nineteen debts excepted from the discharge under section 523(a), a debtor's pre-petition obligation to pay such fees does not survive discharge. United States v. Turkette, 452 U.S. 576, 580,(1981) (unambiguous statutory language, in the absence of a clearly expressed legislative intent to the contrary, must ordinarily be regarded as conclusive). Consequently, the attorneys' fees that Mr. Rittenhouse seeks to collect did not survive discharge and he violated section 524(a)(2) of the Bankruptcy Code by threatening to sue the debtor unless she paid them.

B. Section 329 Does Not Create Any Implicit Exception To Discharge For Pre-Petition Attorneys' Fees.

Mr. Rittenhouse does not contest that the debtor was granted a discharge. Instead, he argues that an agreement to pay pre-petition attorneys' fees post-petition is controlled by section 329 of the Bankruptcy Code, and the bankruptcy rules that implement it. Appellant's Brief at 7- 9. In this regard, he relies on the untenable argument that there is a conflict between section 329, on the one hand, and sections 727(b) and 523 on the other, which conflict must be resolved in favor of allowing payment of the fees. Appellant's Brief at 7-11. This argument is incorrect. There is no direct conflict between the discharge provisions and section 329. The plain language of section 329[3/] states that an attorney for a debtor "shall file with the court a statement of the compensation paid or agreed to be paid," and that "the court may cancel any such agreement, or order the return of any such payment, to the extent excessive." 11 U.S.C. section 329.

The effect of this language is to require a debtor's attorney to report all compensation paid or agreed to be paid within a year prior to the filing of bankruptcy. It also authorizes the bankruptcy court to review those payments or agreements, to modify them and to order disgorgement if fees are found to be excessive. Contrary to Mr. Rittenhouse's argument that it is intended to guarantee payment of attorney compensation, the true purpose of section 329 is to prevent overreaching by debtor's counsel. See, In re Bethea, 352 F.3d at 1127; H.R.Rep. No. 595, 95th Cong., 1st Sess. 329 (1977)("some attorneys may be tempted to divert . . . funds to themselves by charging excessive fees."). See also, S.Rep. No. 989, 95th Cong., 2d Sess. 39 (1978) U.S.Code Cong. & Admin.News 1978, pp. 5787, 5825, 5963, 6285 ("[p]ayments to a debtor's attorney provide serious potential for evasion of creditor protection provisions of the bankruptcy laws, and serious potential for overreaching by the debtor's attorney, and should be subject to careful scrutiny.").

Section 727(b), in contrast, establishes the substantive rights of debtors to a discharge of "all debts" that arise prior to the filing of bankruptcy, limiting that discharge only by reference to the specific list of nineteen exceptions found in section 523. It is grounded in the most fundamental goals of the Bankruptcy Code: providing a fresh start for debtors and ensuring equal treatment for creditors. See In re Meyers, 196 F.3d at 624.

Nothing in the language or effect of section 329 creates an exception to discharge for pre-petition attorneys' fees, or even guarantees the payment of such fees. Absent such an express provision, Mr. Rittenhouse's request that this Court should craft an implied exception to discharge that justifies ignoring the plain language of sections 727(b) and 523 must be rejected. See Nextwave, 537 U.S. at 304; Kawaauhau v. Geiger, 523 U.S. at 62; Ohio v. Kovacs, 469 U.S.at 277; Gleason v. Thaw, 236 U.S. at 562. In re Meyers, 196 F.3d at 624 (exceptions to discharge should be narrowly construed consistent with the policy of providing the debtor with a "fresh start"). See also, In re Juzwiak, 89 F.3d 424, 427 (7th Cir. 1996) ("Consistent with the 'fresh start' policy underlying the Code, these exceptions to discharge [in section 523] should be construed strictly against the creditor and liberally in favor of the debtor").

Section 329 simply does not support the expansive reading Mr. Rittenhouse would give it. Significantly, the three circuit courts that have been presented with this construct of section 329 have rejected it. Fickling, 361 F.3d at 175-76 ("there is no basis for . . . asserting that § 329 conflicts with § 727(b)"); Bethea, 352 F.3d at 1127 ("the structure of the Bankruptcy Code does not support treating § 329 as an implicit exception to § 727"); Biggar, 110 F.3d at 688 ("Because there is no conflict between the discharge and disclosure provisions [in section 329], the plain meaning of the discharge rules must be given effect.").[4/]

In further support of his argument that there is a conflict between section 329 and sections 727 and 523, Mr. Rittenhouse contends that the discharge of pre-petition attorneys' fees would render section 329 review meaningless. Appellant's Brief at 10. In Biggar, however, the Ninth Circuit demonstrated that this argument is unpersuasive, noting that section 329 would continue to have force in chapter 11 and 13 cases, because in those types of cases a plan might call for review of post-petition payments to an attorney. Biggar, 110 F.3d at 688. The court also found that even if pre-petition attorneys' fees were subject to discharge, section 329 had continued applicability in a chapter 7 case, observing that a court could review post-petition payments if a chapter 7 debtor re-affirms an obligation to an attorney. Id.[5] Because the two statutes were capable of co-existing, the court held that there was no conflict between section 329 and sections 727(b) and 523, and that the plain language of section 523 must be given effect. Id. at 688 (citing Ruckelshaus v. Monsanto co., 467 U.S. 986, 1018 (1984) ("statutory provisions should be given effect where capable of coexistence").

The Seventh Circuit In re Bethea, also dismissed this argument: "§ 329 has plenty to do in Chapter 7 cases, even if debts for legal fees are subject to discharge." The court noted several applications section 329 under such a circumstance, including assessing : whether pre-paid fees exceed the "reasonable" value of and could be recovered for the benefit of creditors; whether post-petition fees are reasonable; and, whether the fees are reasonable if the debt is reaffirmed during the proceeding. Bethea, 352 F.3d at 1127. See also Fickling, 361 F.3d at 175-76 (agreeing with Seventh and Ninth Circuits that the discharge of pre-petition attorneys' fees does not render section 329 superfluous),

As the reasoning of the circuit courts demonstrate, section 329[6] and the discharge provisions

[5] A debtor may, under prescribed conditions and with court approval, re-affirm a pre-petition debt pursuant to 11 U.S.C. section 524(c).

[6] Mr. Rittenhouse makes the insubstantial argument that Federal Rules of Bankruptcy Procedure, Rules 1006, 2016 and 2017 support his section 329 argument. Rules 2016 and 2017 are reporting and disallowance provisions, drafted to implement section 329, among others. Mr. Rittenhouse appears to contend that Rule 2017(b) will be rendered null in chapter 7 cases if pre-petition fees are discharged. For the reasons discussed above in the text, section 329 has continued applicability. Consequently the rules implementing it will likewise not be rendered null. Rule 1006(b)(3) specifically provides any installment payment of the filing fee must be completed before payment of any attorneys' fees or fees to other persons retained in connection with the case may be paid. Even if pre-petition fees are discharged, this rule would still prohibit payment of post-petition attorneys' fees until the filing fee is completely paid. It thus continues to serve different purposes and are not in conflict. Consequently, Mr. Rittenhouse's contention that the plain language in sections 727(b) and 523 should not be given effect is insupportable.

Finally, Mr. Rittenhouse asserts that the discharge of pre-petition attorneys' fees may prevent indigent debtors from access to counsel, because competent counsel will be unwilling to represent chapter 7 debtors who might seek to discharge the fees owed. Appellant's Brief at 34-36. This is an inappropriate policy argument and should be rejected. Bethea, 352 F.3d at 1127-28 (rejecting the same argument and stating "[t]hat argument about what makes for good public policy should be directed to Congress; the judiciary's job is to enforce the law Congress enacted, not write a different one the judges think superior.") (citing Banrhart v. Sigmon Coal Co. 534 U.S. 438, 460 - 62 (2002) and United States v. Kras, 409 U.S. 434 (1973). See also Nat'l Life and Accident Ins. Co. v. United States, 524 F.2d 559, 560 (6th Cir.1975) ("The Courts . . . do not have the power to repeal or amend the enactments of the legislature even though they may disagree with the result; rather it is provide an incentive for debtors to complete the payment of all filing fees and is not rendered ineffective by the discharge of pre-petition fees.

Mr. Rittenhouse's arguments concerning these rules are, therefore, without merit. Further, these rules cannot provide an independent basis for an exception to discharge, because the Federal Rules of Bankruptcy Procedure cannot "abridge, enlarge, or modify any substantive right." 28 U.S.C. 2075. Indeed, any construction of the bankruptcy rules that purports to create an implicit exception to the discharge over and above those granted under section 727(b) must be rejected as abridging the debtor's substantive right to a discharge granted under the express terms of section 727(b). Finally, any such construction would also be contrary to the Supreme Court's mandate that exceptions to discharge are narrowly construed. Nextwave, 537 U.S. at 304; Kawaauhau v. Geiger, 523 U.S. at 62; Ohio v. Kovacs, 469 U.S.at 277; Gleason v. Thaw, 236 U.S. at 562.

their function to give the natural and plain meaning effect to statutes as passed by Congress."). Moreover, as the bankruptcy court below recognized, this issue rarely arises because there are a number of creative solutions available to debtors that enable them to pay their attorneys fees before the case is filed. (R.2, Notice of Transmittal, Apx ___ (Bankr. Dkt. # 41, at 6))

C. The Legislative History Of Section 329 Does Not Support The Existence Of An Implicit Exception To Discharge

"[W]here as here, the statute's language is plain, 'the sole function of the courts is to enforce it according to its terms.'" U.S. v. Ron Pair Enterprises, Inc., 489 U.S. 235, 240 (1989) (quoting Caminetti v. U.S. 242 U.S. 470, 485 (1917)). As discussed above, nothing in the plain language of section 329 provides for an exception to discharge for unpaid attorneys' fees earned prior to the filing of the petition. Fickling, 361 F.3d at 175-76; Bethea, 352 F.3d at 1127; Biggar, 110 F.3d at 688. Consequently, it is inappropriate to resort to an examination of its legislative history to construe that provision. See In re Comshare, Inc., 183 F.3d 542, 549 (6th Cir.1999) (resort to a review of congressional intent or legislative history only when the language of the statute is not clear) (citing Consumer Prod. Safety Comm'n v. GTE Sylvania, Inc., 447 U.S. 102, 108 (1980)).

Nonetheless, nothing in Mr. Rittenhouse's discussion of section 329's legislative history supports his argument that section 329 creates an implicit exception to the discharge provided for by section 727(b). Mr. Rittenhouse argues that section 60d[7/] of the Bankruptcy Act of 1989 (the

[7/] Former section 60d provided:

> d. If a debtor shall, directly or indirectly, in contemplation of the filing of a petition by or against him, pay money or transfer property to an attorney at law, for services rendered or to be rendered, the transaction may be predecessor of section 329) was a discrete, exclusive regulation of debtors' attorneys' fees that was enacted to protect a debtor's right to competent counsel by controlling the compensation of counsel. Appellant's Brief at 12-13. This, Mr. Rittenhouse contends, was the prior practice for three-quarters of a century and Congress evidenced no intention in the Bankruptcy Code or its legislative history to change prior practice. Id. at 13-14. Mr. Rittenhouse argues, therefore, that section 60d's successor, section 329, should also be construed similarly. In response to this argument, it must be noted that section 60d did not except from discharge the pre-petition obligation to pay for pre-petition services. Section 60d authorized the bankruptcy court to review any payment or promise of payment of attorney fees, no matter whether it was made pre-petition or post-petition, and that such payments or promises were valid only to the extent reasonable, with any excess to be recovered by the estate.

Further, appellant's brief (at 13-14) cites various Bankruptcy Act opinions in support the proposition that the courts recognized the importance of safeguarding a debtor's right to choose counsel: In re Wood, 210 U.S. 246 (1908), In re Cummins, 196 F. 224 (S.D.N.Y. 1912), > examined by the court on its own motion or shall be examined by the court on the petition of the trustee or any creditor and shall be held valid only to the extent of a reasonable amount to be determined by the court, and the excess may be recovered by the trustee for the benefit of the estate.

> If, whether before or after the filing, a debtor shall agree orally or in writing to pay money or transfer property to an attorney at law after the filing, the transaction may be examined by the court on its own motion or shall be examined by the court on petition of the bankrupt made prior to discharge and shall be valid only to the extent of a reasonable amount to be determined by the court, and any excess obligation shall be cancelled, or if excess payment or transfer has been made, returned to the bankrupt.

Michelbacher v. Haar (In re Falk), 30 F.2d 607 (2d Cir. 1929), and Caldwell v. Valley National Bank of Phoenix, 208 F.2d 645 (10th Cir. 1953). Upon close review, however, those decisions did not confront the issue of whether unpaid attorneys' fees for pre-petition work are dischargable. These decisions merely state that if an attorney did receive a pre-petition payment for pre-petition services, that payment could not be recovered by the bankruptcy estate as a preference.[8/]

Finally, even if there were an implicit exception from the discharge under section 60d of the Bankruptcy Act for debtors' attorneys' fees, if the drafters of the Bankruptcy Code had wanted such an exception to continue under the Bankruptcy Code it is logical to conclude that they would have thought such a provision important enough to make it explicit along with the other explicit exceptions to the discharge found at section 523(a). For all these reasons, Mr. Rittenhouse's reliance upon section 60d is misplaced.

[8/] A preference payment made shortly before the filing of the petition to a specific creditor is recoverable by the estate for the benefit of all creditors. The right to pursue such a claim is currently set forth in section 547 of the Bankruptcy Code.

Conclusion

For all the above reasons, the United States Trustee asks this Court to affirm the order of the district court.

STATEMENT OF THE BASIS OF APPELLATE JURISDICTION

The appellant appeals as of right under 28 U.S.C. 158(a)(1) from the Bankruptcy Court's June 16, 2003 Final Order Pursuant to the Opinion and Order of April 16, 2003, prohibiting the appellant from collecting postpetition any unpaid fees for prepetition bankruptcy counseling services. (Bankruptcy Court Docket Sheet Document No. 57)[1] This was a final order of the Bankruptcy Court. The Bankruptcy Court had jurisdiction over this issue under 28 U.S.C. Section 157(b)(1).

STATEMENT OF THE ISSUE PRESENTED

The bankruptcy court properly held that 11 U.S.C. Section 727(b) discharged all unpaid prepetition attorney fees that were owed as of the filing of the bankruptcy petition.

Bankruptcy Court's decision that 11 U.S.C. Section 727(b) discharged all unpaid prepetition attorney fees that were owed as of the filing of the bankruptcy petition was a conclusion of law.

STATEMENT OF THE CASE

On April 17, 2000, in the case of In re Ernest J. Desilets, Case No. GM99-90364, the Honorable James D. Gregg, Chief Judge of the United States Bankruptcy Court for the Western District of Michigan[2], entered an opinion and order finding that Allan J. Rittenhouse (hereinafter, "the appellant"), was not authorized to practice in that court because he was not a member of the Michigan bar. Mr. Rittenhouse filed an appeal of the order of April 17, 2000. On September 26, 2000, Mr. Rittenhouse consented before the Bankruptcy Court en banc to the entry of an order suspending Mr. Rittenhouse from the roll of attorneys and enjoining him from practicing law in the Bankruptcy Court for the Western District of Michigan, pending a resolution of his appeal of the order of April 17, 2000.

Sara Chandlier, the debtor, filed a petition for relief under Chapter 7 of the Bankruptcy Code on November 6, 2000. The petition listed the attorney for the debtor as

According to the response to Question 9 of the Statement of Affairs, and the Statement Filed Under Rule 2016(b), prior to the filing of the petition, the debtor paid Mr. Pepin nothing for his debt or bankruptcy counseling services as attorney for the debtor. Instead, the debtor agreed to pay $800 to Mr. Pepin as his fee, with a balance due of $800. (Docket Sheet Document No. 1.)

The debtor's meeting with the chapter 7 trustee and the creditors, required under 11 U.S.C. Section 341, was scheduled for December 7, 2000, and adjourned to December 21, 2000. No attorney appeared on behalf of the debtor at either meeting. The debtor appeared on December 21, 2000 and was examined without her attorney present, with the debtor's consent. (Docket Sheet Document No. 8 and 9; Transcript of Hearings Held on December 7 and 21, 2000, Docket Sheet Document 34; Bankruptcy Court Opinion of April 16, 2003, page 2, Docket Sheet Document No. 41.)

The Bankruptcy Court granted the debtor a discharge of all prepetition debts on May 3, 2001. (Docket Sheet Document No. 23.) That discharge has never been set aside, nor has any motion been filed to except any particular debt from the discharge. (Bankruptcy Court Docket Sheet.)

On June 3, 2002, a divided panel of the United States Court of Appeals for the Sixth Circuit reversed the order of April 17, 2000 prohibiting Mr. Rittenhouse from practicing in the Bankruptcy Court for the Western District of Michigan. Rittenhouse v. Delta Home Improv., Inc. (In re Desilets), 291 F.3d 925 (6th Cir. 2002). The majority held that Mr. Rittenhouse did not need Michigan state bar licensure to practice before the United States Bankruptcy Court for the Western District of Michigan. Pursuant to the mandate of the Sixth Circuit, on September 19, 2002 the Bankruptcy Court rescinded the orders, suspension and injunction of April 17, 2000 and September 26, 2000. Mr. Rittenhouse was restored to the bar for the Bankruptcy Court for the Western District of Michigan.

On or about November 19, 2002 Allan J. Rittenhouse, Esq., wrote to the debtor claiming to have been her attorney in her bankruptcy filing, demanding payment of the $800 attorney fee to him as attorney for the debtor, and threatening to sue the debtor to collect the $800. (Attachment to the United States Trustee's Motion Requesting Review and Disgorgement, Docket Sheet Document No. 28.) Mr. Rittenhouse attached to the letter a draft state court complaint, and six pages of proposed document requests, requests for admissions, and interrogatories. (The interrogatories reference a motion for contempt for violation of the automatic stay of 11 U.S.C. Section 362, and are apparently form interrogatories which bear no relationship to the debtor's situation.) In the complaint Mr. Rittenhouse alleges that the debtor contracted with Mr. Rittenhouse to act as attorney for the debtor and the debtor further agreed to pay Mr. Rittenhouse $800 as an attorney fee. (Attachment to the United States Trustee's Motion Requesting Review and Disgorgement, Docket Sheet Document No. 28.) The complaint did not explain how Mr. Rittenhouse was able to continue practicing bankruptcy law during a time he had been suspended voluntarily from practicing before the bankruptcy court, or why the attorney listed on the debtor's petition as the debtor's attorney actually had not been the attorney in the debtor's bankruptcy case.

On December 17, 2002, the United States Trustee[3] filed the Motion Requesting Review and Disgorgement of Attorney Compensation Under 11 U.S.C. Section 329(b) and Rule 2017, and Sanctions Under 11 U.S.C. Section 362. (Docket Sheet Document No. 28.) The motion alleged: 1) that Mr. Rittenhouse was not the debtor's attorney, although he may have acted as Mr. Pepin's paralegal when this case was filed; 2) Mr. Rittenhouse had not proven he had any right to collect the fees from the debtor; 3) that the services performed for the debtor did not justify a fee of $800; and 4) that the filing of the bankruptcy petition had discharged all of the debtor's prepetition obligations, including the debtor's prepetition agreement to pay the $800 attorney fee.

The Bankruptcy Court heard argument on the motion on January 16, 2003. (Docket Sheet Document No. 37.)

On April 16, 2003 the Bankruptcy Court issued the Opinion and Order holding that the debtor's prepetition obligation to pay the attorney fee was discharged by the filing of the bankruptcy petition. The order of April 16, 2003 scheduled a hearing for May 16, 2003 to determine the sanctions that should be levied upon Mr. Rittenhouse for attempting to collect a discharged debt. (Docket Sheet Document No. 41.) The bankruptcy court did not resolve the factual question regarding who had been the debtor's counsel in the bankruptcy proceeding, or whether the appellant had purchased this account receivable.

On April 21, 2003 Mr. Rittenhouse filed an interlocutory appeal of the Bankruptcy Court's interim order of April 16, 2003. (The District Court dismissed that interlocutory appeal, see File No. 2:03-CV-86, on August 11, 2003.)

On May 16, 2003 the Bankruptcy Court held a hearing on sanctions and concluded at the end of the hearing that the only sanction to be imposed upon Mr. Rittenhouse was to prohibit him from collecting postpetition any unpaid fees owed for prepetition services, until and unless the Bankruptcy Court opinion and order of April 16, 2003 were reversed upon appeal. (Docket Sheet Document No. 55.) The Bankruptcy Court entered the Final Order Pursuant to the Opinion and Order of April 16, 2003 on June 16, 2003. (Docket Sheet Document No. 57.) Mr. Rittenhouse filed his notice of appeal of the Final Order on June 26, 2003. (Docket Sheet Document No. 58.)

ARGUMENT

I. Summary of Argument

As of the filing of this bankruptcy case, the debtor owed her attorney an unpaid debt of $800 for attorney fees incurred in the filing of this case.[4] By operation of law, the filing of this bankruptcy case stayed any act to collect, assess, or recover a claim against the debtor that arose before the commencement of the case. 11 U.S.C. Section 362(a)(6) (creating an automatic stay, which is a mandatory injunction, prohibiting such collection efforts post-petition). The debtor subsequently received her discharge under 11 U.S.C. Section 727(a); under Section 727(b) that discharged the debtor from "all debts [of hers] that arose before" the filing of her bankruptcy petition, except for debts which are specifically listed under 11 U.S.C. Section 523(a) as excluded from the discharge.

Section 523(a) excepts eighteen specifically enumerated debts from discharge under Section 727(b); there is no exception for prepetition attorney fees owed to the attorney for the debtor. Once Sara Chandlier's discharge was granted, Section 524(a)(2) enjoined Mr. Rittenhouse from commencing or continuing to collect, recover or offset

[4] Although the debtor's bankruptcy petition represented that another attorney, Mr. Pepin, was debtor's counsel, Mr. Rittenhouse's draft complaint asserted that he had been the attorney for the debtor. Mr. Rittenhouse did not explain this to the bankruptcy court. Instead, he told the bankruptcy court that he had purchased this account receivable from Mr. Pepin. Mr. Rittenhouse put no documents into evidence establishing this, and provided no testamentary evidence regarding who was actually the debtor's counsel, who did the work, or what arrangement, if any, Mr. Rittenhouse had with Mr. Pepin regarding this particular debtor during the time Mr. Rittenhouse was suspended from practice. Mr. Rittenhouse admitted at the January 16, 2003 hearing that he had no documentary evidence to prove his alleged purchase of the accounts receivable from Mr. Pepin. (Docket Sheet Document No. 37, page 13.)

any discharged debt against the debtor. Since prepetition attorney fees owed to Mr. Rittenhouse were not excepted from the discharge, Ms. Chandlier's obligation to the appellant, if she ever in fact actually had one, was discharged and the appellant was enjoined from taking any steps to collect that debt from the debtor.

Rather than abiding by the law, Mr. Rittenhouse sought to intimidate Ms. Chandlier, a person of limited means, by bombarding her with a dunning letter, a draft complaint, and an onerous set of interrogatories. This was wrong. Ms. Chandlier had followed the rules in bankruptcy and she had a right not to be pursued, much less hectored, over discharged debts.

Mr. Rittenhouse does not contest that Ms. Chandlier's discharge wiped away her dischargeable debts. Mr. Rittenhouse does not contest that pre-petition attorney fees are not one of the eighteen specific exceptions to discharge. Instead, he seeks to side-step those statutory prohibitions, which deal specifically with the effect of Ms. Chandlier's discharge, by invoking, of all things, a consumer protection statute, Section 329 of the Bankruptcy Code. Section 329 serves two purposes. First, it requires attorneys to disclose all fee arrangements with clients, both legal and illegal ones. Second, it allows a bankruptcy court to review all fee arrangements between a debtor and the debtor's attorney, and reduce fees as appropriate.

It is dispositive of Mr. Rittenhouse's appeal that Section 329 is not an authorization provision. Neither its language nor its legislative history even hint that Section 329 authorizes attorneys to charge anything, supercedes provisions of the Bankruptcy Code that limit or prohibit compensation, or preempts state law restrictions upon attorneys' ability to represent and charge fees to clients.

Even Mr. Rittenhouse concedes that the majority of cases that have considered this issue have held that Section 727(b) discharges all prepetition debts, including attorney fees. Faced with Section 727(b)'s plain inclusion of his fees within the scope of Ms. Chandlier's discharge, Mr. Rittenhouse seizes upon a single aberrant case, Bethea v. Adams (In re Bethea), 275 B.R. 284, 292 (Bankr. N.D. Ill. 2002), aff'd, 287 B.R. 906 (N.D. Ill. 2003)[5], that erroneously concluded that Section 329 creates an implicit exception to the discharge of debts found in Section 727(b).

Bethea diverges from the weight of authority and its reasoning is flawed. First, Section 329 is not a provision that creates an entitlement to fees; it's a fee disclosure and fee reduction provision. Fees must be otherwise appropriate and allowable under applicable law. Second, under accepted canons of statutory construction Section 329 cannot overrule Section 727(b) and therefore Section 329 is not an implicit exception to Section 727(b).

Only the explicit exceptions created by Congress in 11 U.S.C. Section 523(a) survive discharge. Properly understood then, Section 329 does not conflict with Section 727(b), and in fact confers no independent right to compensation upon the appellant.

[5] An appeal of this decision is pending before the Seventh Circuit Court of Appeals. The appeal was filed on February 6, 2003 and bears the case number 03-1303.

II. There Are No Implicit Exceptions To The Section 727(b) Discharge

Section 727(b) of the Bankruptcy Code provides as follows:

> Except as provided in section 523 of this title, a discharge under subsection (a) of this section discharges the debtor from all debts that arose before the date of the order of relief under this chapter, and any liability on a claim that is determined under section 502 of this title as if such claim had arisen before the commencement of the case, whether or not a proof of claim based on any such debt or liability is filed under section 501 of this title, and whether or not a claim based on any such debt or liability is allowed under section 502 of this title.

11 U.S.C. Section 727(b). By its express terms, Section 727(b) discharges all debts other than those listed in Section 523. In turn, 11 U.S.C. Section 523(a) creates eighteen explicit exceptions to the discharge.

A debtor's pre-petition obligation to pay attorney fees therefore does not survive discharge because such fees are not among the eighteen debts excepted from the discharge under Section 523. Equally significantly, Section 523 does not except from discharge a fee reviewed, or even theoretically approved, under Section 329 of the Code. For these reasons, Mr. Rittenhouse's fees did not survive discharge and he should not have threatened to sue Ms. Chandlier for fees after she received her discharge and successfully completed her bankruptcy.

Mr. Rittenhosue relies heavily upon an aberrant decision, Bethea v. Adams (In re Bethea), 275 B.R. 284, 292 (Bankr. N.D. Ill. 2002), aff'd, 287 B.R. 906 (N.D. Ill. 2003), which held that Section 329 creates an implicit but necessary exception to the discharge of debts found in Section 727(b). The Bethea bankruptcy court wrote, "this Court reads sections 362(a)(6), 727(b), and 524(a)(2) in a manner that will preserve the right that Section 329(b) implicitly, but necessarily, grants to chapter 7 debtors and their attorneys to agree to the payment of fees after the order for relief." Id. The Bethea bankruptcy court and district court opinions do not cite any authority which expressly holds that there are implicit exceptions to the discharge other than the express exceptions found in Section 523.

The Bethea decisions were entered before the Supreme Court issued its decision in Federal Communications Commission v. Nextwave Personal Communications, Inc., - U.S. -, 123 S.Ct. 832 (2003). In Nextwave, the Supreme Court forcefully rejected the idea that there are implicit or unwritten exceptions to the discharge other than the express exceptions to the discharge set forth in 11 U.S.C. Section 1141(d), which restricts exceptions to the discharge in Chapter 11 cases to those set forth in Section 523 in the same way that Section 727(b) does in Chapter 7. In interpreting Section 1141(d), the discharge provision of Chapter 11, Nextwave held, " [a] preconfirmation debt is dischargeable unless it falls within an express exception to discharge. Section 1141(d) of the Bankruptcy Code states that, except as otherwise provided therein, the 'confirmation of a plan [of reorganization]...discharges the debtor from any debt that arose before the date of such confirmation,' 11 U.S.C. 1141(d)(1)(A)(emphasis added), and the only debts it excepts from that prescription are those described in Section 523, see 1141(d)(2). Thus, '[e]xcept for the nine[6] kinds of debts saved from discharge by 11 U.S.C. Section 523(a), a discharge in bankruptcy discharges the debtor from all debts that arose before bankruptcy. Section 727(b). Ohio v. Kovacs, 469 U.S. 274, 278 (1985)." 123 S.Ct. 840. (Emphasis as in Nextwave.)

Thus, Section 1141(d)(1)(A) discharges a debtor from "any debt" except those expressly listed in Section 523; and Section 727(b) discharges a debtor from "any debt" except those expressly listed in Section 523. The Supreme Court's reasoning in Nextwave is equally applicable to Section 727(b).

In the case relied upon by Nextwave, Ohio v. Kovacs, 469 U.S. 274, 105 S. Ct. 705 (1985), the Supreme Court held that even a Chapter 7 debtor's obligation under a state court injunction to clean up a hazardous waste cite pursuant to state law was a debt discharged by Section 727(b) in the debtor's subsequent bankruptcy filing. "Except for the nine [at that time] kinds of debts saved from the discharge by 11 U.S.C. Section 523(a), a discharge in bankruptcy discharges the debtor from all debts that arose before the bankruptcy. 727(b)." 105 S.Ct. 708. At the end of the Kovacs opinion the Supreme Court makes it clear that the debtor might still be prosecuted for the violation of the state environmental laws or for criminal contempt.

[6] At the time that Ohio v. Kovacs, 469 U.S. 274 (1985) was decided, there were only nine exceptions to the discharge listed in Section 523(a). Subsequent amendments to the Bankruptcy Code have increased the number of enumerated exceptions to the discharge to eighteen. Although Congress has amended Section 523(a) several times to add new exceptions to the discharge, it has never included pre-petition fees owed to the debtor's attorney among the listed exceptions.

The Supreme Court also noted that had a fine or a monetary penalty for violating the state law been imposed prior to the bankruptcy, that would have been excepted from discharge under Section 523(a)(7). It is interesting to note that even though there is an express exception under Section 523(a)(7) for fines and penalties, the Supreme Court did not attempt to base an unwritten or even expanded exception to the discharge for violation of environmental laws upon the text of Section 523(a)(7). Instead, Kovacs concluded, "As the case comes to us, however, Kovacs has been dispossessed and the State seeks to enforce his cleanup obligation by a money judgment," which was discharged. 105 S. Ct. at 712.

The Supreme Court has also addressed this issue in Kawaauhau v. Geiger, 523 U.S. 57, 118 S. Ct. 974 (1998). The issue in Kawaauhau was whether a debt arising from a medical malpractice judgment, attributable to negligent or reckless conduct, fell within the Section 523(a)(6) exception to the discharge. (Section 523(a)(6) expressly excepts from discharge a debt for "willful and malicious injury by the debtor to another.") The debtor physician's decision to discontinue all antibiotics because he incorrectly believed the patient's infection to have subsided caused the eventual amputation of the patient's right leg below the knee. The patient obtained a malpractice judgment, and the physician filed a bankruptcy petition.

The bankruptcy court held that the malpractice judgement was nondischargeable under Section 523(a)(6), and the district court affirmed. The court of appeals reversed, holding that Section 523(a)(6) was limited to intentional torts. The Supreme Court agreed, holding that “the ‘well-known’ guide that exceptions to discharge ‘should be confined to those plainly expressed.’ Gleason v. Thaw, 236 U.S. 558, 562, 35 S.Ct. 287, 289 (1915)” prevented every intentional act which results in an unintended injury from being held non-dischargeable under Section 523(a)(6). 118 S. Ct. 977. The malpractice judgment was therefore discharged under Section 727(b).

Nextwave, Kovacs and Kawaauhau are both controlling and persuasive. By prohibiting exceptions other than those set forth in the Code they prohibited Mr. Rittenhouse from pursuing Ms. Chandlier after she received her discharge.

These Supreme Court decisions consistently hold that a court may not add exceptions to a statute that already contains express exceptions: “exceptions to the discharge ‘should be confined to those plainly expressed.’” Kawaauhau, 118 S.Ct. at 977. Because Section 727(b) limits exceptions to those contained in Section 523, no other exceptions, including those Mr. Rittenhouse seeks to squeeze into Section 329, are appropriate.

The appellant cites Citizens Bank of Maryland v. Strumpf, 516 U.S. 16, 116 S.Ct. 286 (1995) and Kelly v. Robinson, 479 U.S. 36, 107 S.Ct. 353 (1986), in support of his argument that an explicit exception to the discharge for debtors’ attorneys fees is not required. Appellant’s Brief, page 24. However, neither case is applicable here. In Strumpf, the Supreme Court considered whether a “the creditor of a debtor in bankruptcy may, in order to protect its setoff rights, temporarily withhold payment of a debt that it owes to the debtor in bankruptcy without violating the automatic stay imposed by 11 U.S.C. Section 362(a)." Section 553 of the Bankruptcy Code provides that, except as provided in Section 362 and 363, nothing in the Bankruptcy Code affects the right of a creditor to offset mutual debts with the debtor. Section 362(a)(7) stays any offset until and unless the bankruptcy court grants relief from the automatic stay.

In Strumpf, a bank had placed an administrative freeze on a Chapter 13 debtor's account while the bank's motion for relief from stay was pending. In deciding Strumpf, the Supreme Court did not find any conflict between Section 362(a) and Section 553, nor did the Supreme Court then create an implicit exception to either section of the Code. Instead, the Supreme Court held that imposing an administrative freeze was not an act of set off, and therefore it did not violate Section 362(a)(7), for the reason that accomplishing a set off requires three steps to effect the set off which are not present in an administrative freeze. The Supreme Court further held that the administrative freeze was not an act of dominion over property of the debtor, but merely a temporary refusal to pay a debt. None of this reasoning is applicable to this case. Nor does Strumpf even mention Section 727(b), let alone construe its reach, as the Supreme Court opinions cited above have.[7]

[7] Interestingly, neither the Bethea bankruptcy court nor the district court opinions see as much support for their position in Strumpf and Kelly as does the appellant. The Bethea bankruptcy court opinion cites Strumpf for the proposition that the Supreme Court merely narrowed the scope of Section 362(a)(7), 275 B.R. at 292, and it cites Kelly for a general rule of statutory construction, 275 B.R. at 288. The Bethea district court opinion cites Strumpf and Kelly only for general rules of statutory construction. 287 B. R. at 909. If these opinions were Kelly v. Robinson does not authorize the creation of an implicit exception to Sections 727 and 523. The issue in Kelly was whether restitution obligations, imposed as probation conditions in criminal proceedings, are dischargeable. As noted above, Section 523(a)(7) excepts from the discharge fines and penalties payable to a government unit. Kelly did discuss extensively the history of the current Bankruptcy Code of 1978 and the prior Bankruptcy Act of 1898, how the Code and the Act treated fines and penalties, and the federal relationship to state court criminal penalties in general, and that discussion did inform the consideration of the issue. Ultimately however, Kelly held that restitution obligations were not dischargeable because they are imposed as a remedy for wrongdoing, and payable to the state directly, and to the victim only indirectly, and that therefore they are fines or penalties and are excepted from the Section 727(b) discharge by Section 523(a)(7). Kelly thus did nothing more than interpret specific provisions of Sections 727 and 523 as themselves creating an exception to discharge based upon the facts of that case. No such provisions in those statutes apply in Mr. Rittenhouse's case.

III. Section 329 Does Not Conflict With Section 727(b), Creates No Right To Compensation, And Sections 727 And 523 Would Trump Section 329 Even If It Did compelling authority for the proposition that there are implicit exceptions to the Section 727(b) discharge, then the Bethea opinions would certainly have cited them for that proposition.

11 U.S.C. Section 329. The appellant's argument depends upon finding in Section 329 some implicit authorization for postpetition payments by the debtor of a prepetition debt owed to the debtor's attorney. For this point, Mr. Rittenhouse relies principally upon both Bethea opinions, which read Section 329 as a fee granting provision, not as a fee reporting and fee limiting provision.

First, even if the Bethea courts' readings of Section 329 were correct, their holdings would still be in error. Section 727(b) excepts from discharge only those things contained in Section 523. Even if Section 329 could be read as both approving fees and excepting those fees from the discharge, that exception to the discharge would still not be effective because Section 727(b) references only those exceptions to the discharge found in Section 523; Section 727(b) does not refer to any exceptions found in Section 329.

More fundamentally, Section 329 does not award fees. It merely requires the disclosure of fees obtained under other provisions of the Code, or state law, or private contract, and allows bankruptcy courts to order those fees to be returned if they are excessive. Like all statutory provisions, a construction of Section 329 must begin with its words. Pennsylvania Department of Public Welfare v. Davenport, 495 U.S. 552, 557-58, 110 S. Ct. 2126 (1990)(main holding superceded by statute). Section 329(a) states in part that any attorney for the debtor "shall file with the court a statement of the compensation paid or agreed to be paid," and Section 329(b) states that "the court may cancel any such agreement, or order the return of any such payment, to the extent excessive."

Section 329 differs fundamentally from the two sections of the Bankruptcy Code which do authorize compensation of attorneys, Sections 330 and 331. Section 330 states in various places that the "court may award ...to a professional person...reasonable compensation," (a)(1)(A); "the court may...award compensation that is less..." (a)(2); "In determining the amount of reasonable compensation to be awarded..."(a)(3)(A); "In a chapter 12 or chapter 13 case...the court may allow reasonable compensation to the debtor's attorney..." (a)(4)(B); "The Court shall reduce the amount of compensation awarded..." (a)(5); and "Any compensation awarded..." (a)(6)." Section 331 provides in part that "A trustee, an examiner, a debtor's attorney[8], or any professional person employed under section 327 or 1103 of this title may apply to the court...for such [8] Sections 330 and 331 concern the awarding of compensation from the estate. Although the appellant is a debtor's attorney, as a Chapter 7 debtor's attorney he is not entitled to compensation from the estate under the terms of Section 330, and therefore cannot seek interim compensation under Section 331.

compensation for services..."

Sections 330 and 331 use terms such as "award compensation," "may allow reasonable compensation," and "may apply to the court." By contrast, Section 329(a) requires that any attorney representing a debtor "shall file with the court a statement of compensation paid or agreed to be paid." Section 329 states that if the compensation reported pursuant to Section 329(a) is excessive, "the court may cancel any such agreement, or order the return of any such payment." Section 329 speaks in terms of requiring that the attorney for the debtor "shall file" and the court "may cancel." Section 329 has no terms like "may award compensation" or "may apply to the court." "[W]here as here, the statute's language is plain, 'the sole function of the courts is to enforce it according to its terms.'" U.S. v. Ron Pair Enterprises, Inc., 489 U.S. 235, 240, 109 S.Ct. 1026, 1030, (1989) (quoting Caminetti v. U.S. 242 U.S. 470, 485, 37 S.Ct. 192 (1917)).

The language of Section 329 plainly does not approve the payment of compensation at all; Section 329 requires the debtor's attorney to report all compensation paid or agreed to be paid, and Section 329 further authorizes the bankruptcy court to review those payments or promises and to cancel those that are excessive. If payments have been promised, Section 329 merely requires the reporting of those promises; it does not authorize the honoring of those promises. This language should be enforced by the courts.

Given the clarity of the language of Section 329, it is not necessary to refer to the legislative history. Nonetheless, nothing in the legislative history of Section 329 supports the appellant's argument that Section 329 creates an implicit exception to the discharge of Section 727(b). The legislative history provides in part, "Payments to a debtor's attorney provide serious potential for evasion of creditor protection provisions of the bankruptcy laws, and serious potential for overreaching by the debtor's attorney, and should be subject to careful scrutiny." H.R. Rep. 595, 95th Cong. , 1st Sess. 329 (1977); S.Rep. 989, 95th Cong., 2d Sess. 39 (1978). As the Sixth Circuit has held concerning Section 329, "[t]he provisions of the Bankruptcy Code and the Bankruptcy Rules that regulate attorney fees are designed to protect both creditors and the debtor against overreaching attorneys." Henderson v. Kisseberth (In re Kisseberth), 273 F.3d 714, 721 (6th Cir. 2001). Far from giving attorneys an implicit exception to the discharge afforded to no other prepetition creditor, Congress intended Section 329 to be a limit and a restraint upon attorneys for the debtor.

The appellant's argument stands upon Section 329(a)'s requirement that all attorneys for the debtor "shall file with the court a statement of the compensation paid or agreed to be paid..." The appellant sees in this language an implicit grant of an exception to the discharge for prepetition promises to pay fees due to a debtor's attorney. However, viewed in light of the Congressional purpose to scrutinize all fees paid to the debtor's attorney, it is clear that this language was made as broad as possible in order to insure that debtors' attorneys did not evade the reporting requirements by trying to restructure the payment schedule to avoid having to disclose payments, or by characterizing payments as mere promises to pay that did not have to be reported.[9]

The appellant, and the Bethea opinions, also argue that since Section 60d of the former Bankruptcy Act, which was superceded by the Bankruptcy Code in 1979, was a discrete, exclusive regulation of debtors' attorneys' fees, then Section 60d's successor, Section 329, should also be construed as a discrete, exclusive regulation of debtors'

[9] When Section 329 was drafted and enacted, the Bankruptcy Code did allow postpetition payments to debtors' attorneys for prepetition services. As originally drafted, 11 U.S.C. Section 330(a) allowed compensation to, among others, "the debtor's attorney" from the bankruptcy estate. Therefore, a debtor's attorney who was not paid in full prepetition could petition the bankruptcy court for a payment of the balance due from the bankruptcy estate. Under those circumstances, Section 329 had to be drafted in order to make it clear that these promises of future payment from the bankruptcy estate had to be reported to the bankruptcy court and explicitly made subject to the bankruptcy court's review. Otherwise, debtors, creditors and estates would not be protected from the overreaching that Congress was determined to prevent. The Bankruptcy Reform Act of 1994, Pub. L. No. 103-394, enacted on October 22, 1994, deleted the reference to "the debtor's attorney" from Section 330(a). In the place of the former language, the current and controlling version of Section 330(a)(1), allows compensation only to trustees, examiners, and professional persons employed under Sections 327 and 1103. The current Section 330(a)(4)(B) allows compensation to the attorney for a debtor only in Chapter 12 or Chapter 13. Therefore, apparently an attorney for the debtor in Chapter 7 is no longer entitled to compensation from the estate under the current and controlling version of Section 330(a)(1). United States Trustee v. Equipment Services, Inc. (In re Equipment Services, Inc.), 290 F.3d 739 (4th Cir. 2002); Ingelsby, Falligant v. Moore (In re American Steel Product, Inc.), 197 F.3d 1354 (11th Cir. 1999); but see, Vergos v. Hilburn's Paint and Body Shop, Inc. (In re Hilburn's Paint and Body Shop, Inc.), 268 B.R. 127 (6th Cir.BAP 2001)(appeal to the Sixth Circuit pending). Be that as it may, the appellant cannot argue that the deletion of debtors' attorneys from the list of those entitled to compensation from the estate somehow created an implicit exception to the discharge for debtors' attorneys' fees. The appellant notes in his brief that the cases holding that debtors' attorney fees are discharged were not decided until 1994 and thereafter, even though the Bankruptcy Code was enacted in 1978. Appellant's Brief, page 17. Although the 1994 appeals were filed before the amendment of the Bankruptcy Code, it is interesting to note the coincidence of the amendment of Section 330 in 1994 to delete the reference to "the debtor's attorney" and the increase in the number of opinions that now address the issue of whether debtor's attorney's fees are discharged. Before the 1994 amendment, the issue may not have been so pressing because debtor attorneys could look to the estate in at least some of the cases for compensation.

attorneys' fees. In re Bethea, 275 B.R. at 292-93, and 287 B.R. at 910-11. Since Section 329 is a discrete, exclusive regulation of debtors' attorneys fees, the Bethea opinions argue, the debtors' attorneys' fees must be implicitly exempt from the discharge of Section 727(b), as that was the prior practice and Congress evidenced no intention in the Bankruptcy Code or its legislative history to change prior practice.

In response to this argument, it must be noted that nothing in the text of Section 60d of the former Bankruptcy Code provided that a debtor's obligation to pay prepetition attorney fees was excepted from the bankruptcy discharge.[10] The second half of Section 60d addressed payments made after the filing of the petition, but did not except from the discharge the prepetition obligation to pay for prepetition services.

The Bethea opinions do not cite a single case decided under Section 60d that held that the prepetition agreement to pay for prepetition services was excepted from the discharge. The Bankruptcy Act opinions cited by the Bethea opinions, In re Wood, 210

[10] Former Section 60d provided:
d. If a debtor shall, directly or indirectly, in contemplation of the filing of a petition by or against him, pay money or transfer property to an attorney at law, for services rendered or to be rendered, the transaction may be examined by the court on its own motion or shall be examined by the court on the petition of the trustee or any creditor and shall be held valid only to the extent of a reasonable amount to be determined by the court, and the excess may be recovered by the trustee for the benefit of the estate.

If, whether before or after the filing, a debtor shall agree orally or in writing to pay money or transfer property to an attorney at law after the filing, the transaction may be examined by the court on its own motion or shall be examined by the court on petition of the bankrupt made prior to discharge and shall be valid only to the extent of a reasonable amount to be determined by the court, and any excess obligation shall be cancelled, or if excess payment or transfer has been made, returned to the bankrupt.

U.S. 246, 28 S.Ct. 621, 52 L.Ed. 1046 (1908), In re Cummins, 196 F. 224 (S.D.N.Y. 1912), Michelbacher v. Haar (In re Falk), 30 F.2d 607 (2d Cir. 1929), and Caldwell v. Valley National Bank of Phoenix, 208 F.2d 645 (10th Cir. 1953), do at times use the phrase that attorneys for the debtor do not have to take chances as a general creditor. However, upon reading those opinions, it is clear that in those cases the attorney for the debtors had received a prepetition payment for services already performed and also yet to be performed. A general creditor who received such a payment would be subject to a suit to recover that payment as a preference. (A preference is a payment from a debtor to a creditor on an antecedent debt which may be recovered by the bankruptcy trustee if the payment was made within a certain period of time prior to the bankruptcy filing.) Just as any general creditor in the same position would be subject to a suit to recover the preference, the question in the Act cases cited by the Bethea cases was whether the attorney for the debtor had therefore received a preference that could be recovered since the attorney had received payment upon an antecedent debt. The opinions hold that the payment was not a preference, but they do not hold that the debt, if it had not been paid, was not dischargeable.[11]

[11] Indeed, if there was an implicit exception from the discharge for debtors' attorneys' fees under the Bankruptcy Act which has survived under the Bankruptcy Code, it seems to have escaped the notice of the United States Supreme Court, which has held in Federal Communications Commission v. Nextwave Personal Communications, Inc., 123 S.Ct. 832 (2003); Ohio v. Kovacs, 469 U.S. 274, 105 S. Ct. 705 (1985); Kawaauhau v. Geiger, 523 U.S. 57, 118 S. Ct. 974 (1998); and Gleason v. Thaw, 236 U.S. 558, 35 S.Ct. 287 (1915) that exceptions to the discharge should be confined to those plainly expressed in the statute. If the prior practice under the Bankruptcy Act was to except debtors' attorneys' fees from the discharge and that practice was continued under Section 329 of the Bankruptcy Code, then all those

Even if the Bankruptcy Act did except debtors' attorneys's fees from the discharge, that does not mean that the exception can continue under the Bankruptcy Code. The Bankruptcy Code definition of what constitutes a "claim" under 11 U.S.C. Section 101(5), and therefore the scope of the discharge under the Bankruptcy Code, is much broader than the definition of a claim under the Bankruptcy Act and represented a significant departure from the Act. The legislative history for the definition of "claim", which was originally found at 11 U.S.C. Section 101(4), but is now found at 11 U.S.C. Section 101(5), states:

> The effect of the [Bankruptcy Code definition of 'claim'] is a significant departure from present law. Under present law, 'claim' is not defined in straight bankruptcy. Instead, it is simply used, along with the concept of provability in section 63 of the Bankruptcy Act, to limit the kinds of obligations that are payable in a bankruptcy case. The term is defined in the debtor rehabilitation chapters of present law far more broadly. The definition in paragraph 4 [now paragraph 101(5)] adopts an even broader definition of claim than is found in the present debtor rehabilitation chapters....By this broadest possible definition, and by use of the term throughout the title 11, especially in subchapter I of chapter 5, the bill contemplates that all legal obligations of the debtor, no matter how remote or contingent, will be able to be dealt with in the bankruptcy case. It permits the broadest possible relief in the bankruptcy court.

H.R. Rep. No. 595, 95th Cong., 1st Sess. 309 (1977), S.Rep. 989, 95th Cong., 2d Sess. 21 (1978)(emphasis added). "In fashioning a single definition of 'claim' for the 1978 Bankruptcy Code, Congress intended to 'adop[t] an even broader definition of claim than [was] found in the [pre-1978 Act's] debtor rehabilitation chapters." Johnson v. Home State Bank, 501 U.S. 78, 111 S.Ct. 2150, 2155 (1991)(emphasis as in opinion, quoting

Supreme Court opinions are mistaken.

H.R.Rep. No. 95-595, at 309, U.S.Code Cong. & Admin.News 1978, p. 6266), see also, Pennsylvania Dept. of Public Welfare v. Davenport, 495 U.S. 552, 558, 110 S.Ct. 2126, 2130, 109 L.Ed.2d 588 (1990)(Congress intended the "broadest possible" definition of the term "claim": "A 'claim" is a 'right to payment, whether or not such right is reduced to judgment, liquidated, unliquidated, fixed, contingent, matured, unmatured, disputed, undisputed, legal, equitable, secured or unsecured,'" citing then 11 U.S.C. Section 101(4)(a), now cited as 101(5)(a)(emphasis as in opinion)). The Bankruptcy Code defines "debt" as "liability on a claim," 11 U.S.C. Section 101(12), and 11 U.S.C. Section 727(b) provides that a discharge under chapter 7, such as the discharge the debtor here received, "discharges the debtor from all debts that arose before the date of the order for relief." Therefore, the Bankruptcy Code may discharge debts that may not have been discharged under the Act, there may not be a perfect analogy between the provisions of the Act and the Code, and there may be no correlation between the debts that are excepted from the discharge under the Code and those that were excepted from the discharge under the Act.

The theory of the appellant's argument, and the Bethea cases, is that Section 60d created an implicit exception to the discharge and that when the Bankruptcy Code and Rules superceded the Bankruptcy Act, no one thought to make that unwritten, implicit exception an explicit statement in Section 523(a), Section 329(b), Section 727(b) or anywhere else in the Bankruptcy Code or Rules. At best this is wild conjecture based neither upon one word in the Bankruptcy Code or even a single statement in its legislative history. Moreover, such reasoning must be rejected, for it would lead to a situation where no one could possibly know what the law is. Even if there were an implicit exception from the discharge under the Bankruptcy Act for debtors' attorney fees, one would assume that if the drafters of the Bankruptcy Code wanted such an exception to continue under the Bankruptcy Code they would have thought such a provision important enough to make it explicit along with the other explicit exceptions to the discharge found at Section 523(a). Otherwise, the law becomes whatever we think it might once have been. For all these reasons, the appellant's reliance upon Section 60d is misplaced.

The intent of Section 329 was to protect creditors and debtors from overreaching and evasion by attorneys for the debtor. The appellant's argument, if endorsed by this court, would strike down that protection and make all debtors' attorney fees nondischargeable. It would be highly ironic if Section 329, which was meant to be a restraint upon debtors' attorneys and to protect debtors and creditors from the debtors' attorneys, were to instead be construed as a special benefit for debtors' attorneys only, and as sanctioning the practices Mr. Rittenhouse employed against Ms. Chandlier in this case.

IV. Section 103 And The Bankruptcy Rules Do Not Support The Argument That There Is An Implicit Exception To The Discharge.

The appellant argues that the United States Trustee's construction of Section 329 will destroy that section, and violate 11 U.S.C. Section 103. In support of his interpretation of Section 329 the appellant also cites Federal Rules of Bankruptcy Procedure 2016, 2017 and 1006. That argument is flawed.

The debtor cites 11 U.S.C. Section 103(a), which states "Except as provided in section 1161 of this title, chapters 1, 3, and 5 of this title apply in a case under chapter 7, 11, 12, or 13 of this title." The appellant argues that the United States Trustee's construction of Section 329 (which is found in chapter 3 of title 11) will make Section 329 inapplicable in Chapter 7. Such a construction, it is argued, will destroy Section 329, making it a nullity, at least in Chapter 7. The appellant's argument assumes that if Section 727(b) is applied as written, there will be no fees for the Bankruptcy Court to review under Section 329. That is incorrect. If the debtor had paid the attorney fee of $800 in full prepetition to secure both prepetition and postpetition services, the appellant would have had to disclose that payment under Section 329(a) and Rule 2016(b) and the Bankruptcy Court could have reviewed the reasonableness of that fee under Section 329(b).[12]

Thus, Section 329 would have worked in this case, just as it works in hundreds of thousands of chapter 7 cases, year in and year out. If the appellant required debtors to pay [12] Contrary to the appellant's argument, there are other payments a Chapter 7 debtor might make to an attorney postpetition beside payment for prepetition services, such as a debtor who files the bankruptcy petition pro se and who then decides postpetition that they need to retain an attorney, perhaps to defend their discharge if an objection to discharge or dischargeability is filed. These payments would be captured by the disclosure requirements of the Code and Rules and would be subject to review under Section 329(b). Of course, the impermissible postpetition payment of discharged prepetition attorney fees would be subject to disclosure and review, as in this case. Therefore, the United States Trustee's reading of Section 329(b) does not deprive that section of all meaning, as the appellant argues, but in fact fully reflects that Section's meaning.

his fee in full before the filing of the bankruptcy petition, there would be no violation of Section 727(b), the appellant would be able to disclose his compensation as required by Section 329(a), and the bankruptcy court could review that compensation as allowed by Section 329(b). Requiring debtors to pay the attorney fee in full before the filing of the bankruptcy case is a simple solution that entails no violations of Section 727(b) or Section 329, yet preserves the function of Section 329.

Indeed, this appeal disproves the appellant's argument. The United States Trustee was proceeding under Section 329 of the bankruptcy court when the motion was filed which gave rise to this appeal. In filing the motion for review and disgorgement under Section 329 against the appellant, the United States Trustee was using Section 329 as it was meant to be used, to allow the bankruptcy court to prohibit an attorney from receiving compensation he should not receive, and to prohibit overreaching by a debtor's attorney. It is the appellant's construction of Section 329 that would destroy Section 329 by transforming its protection of the creditors, debtors and estates into an implicit exception to the discharge which would benefit only attorneys for the debtor.

The appellant also cites Federal Rules of Bankruptcy Procedure 2016, 2017 and 1006 for the proposition that the Rules reveal an understanding of the Code as allowing postpetition services for prepetition work, which understanding of the Code was contemporaneous with the drafting of the Code. The Rules do not and cannot support that proposition.

Before reviewing the individual rules cited by the appellant it is important to review 28 U.S.C. Section 2075, which grants the United States Supreme Court the power to prescribe general rules, forms and procedures in cases under title 11. Section 2075 provides in part, “Such rules shall not abridge, enlarge, or modify any substantive right.” Therefore, any construction of the bankruptcy rules that creates a implicit exception to the discharge granted under Section 727(b) must be rejected as abridging the debtor’s substantive right to a discharge granted under the express terms of Section 727(b).

Rule 2016(b) requires every attorney for the debtor to file within fifteen days after the filing of a case an initial statement of all compensation paid or agreed to be paid, and to file a supplemental statement within fifteen days after any payment or agreement not previously disclosed. Rule 2017(a) permits the bankruptcy court to review transfers from the debtor to the attorney for the debtor before filing, and Rule 2017(b) permits the bankruptcy court to review transfers from the debtor to the attorney for the debtor made after the filing. Rule 1006(b)(1) allows a debtor to apply for permission to pay the bankruptcy filing fee in installments; the application must state that the debtor is unable to pay the filing fee except in installments, the proposed terms of the installment payments, and that the debtor has not paid any money or transferred any property to the debtor’s attorney. Rule 1006(b)(3) provides that the filing fee must be paid in full before the debtor may pay the attorney for the debtor. The appellant argues that these rules make sense only if the Code permits Chapter 7 debtors to make postpetition payments for prepetition legal services.

However, these rules do make sense even though the Code does not permit debtors to make postpetition payments for prepetition legal services. Rules 2016 and 2017 are reporting and disallowance provisions, drafted to help implement Section 329, among others. As such, they are drafted as broadly as possible. The inclusion of a transfer or payment within their scope does not indicate that the transfer is authorized, merely that it is subject to review. It would make little sense to prohibit a transfer, and then not to require the disclosure of that transfer to the bankruptcy court.

For example, Rule 2016(b) also requires every attorney for a debtor to disclose whether that attorney has agreed to share the compensation paid for services in the case with any other entity, and if such a sharing agreement has been entered into, to disclose the particulars of the sharing agreement. By the appellant's reasoning, the express inclusion of fee sharing agreements within the scope of Rule 2016(b)'s disclosure requirement should mean that all fee sharing agreements are authorized. However, 11 U.S.C. Section 504 strictly limits the situations in which fees may be shared, and in some instances prohibits fee sharing altogether. Indeed, some fee sharing agreements may be violations of criminal law. 18 U.S.C. Section 155. The inclusion of an act in a reporting requirement or in a disallowance provision does not and cannot mean that every act included within the scope of the reporting requirement is thereby authorized.

Rule 1006(b) requires debtors to state that they are unable to pay the filing fee except in installments, and that they have not yet paid any fees due to their attorney. Rule 1006(b)(3) states that the filing fee must be paid in full before the debtor may pay the attorney fees. Preliminarily, it should be noted that Rule 1006(b)(3) does not contain any language expressly authorizing the payment of prepetition attorney fees postpetition. Even if Rule 1006(b)(3) expressly provided that the debtors' attorney's fee were excepted from the Section 727(b) discharge when the debtor pays the filing fee in installments, 28 U.S.C. Section 2075 would require that the discharge prevail. However, the language of Rule 1006(b)(3) does not contain an express exception to the discharge; if there is an exception to Section 727(b) here, it is, again, implied, not express. As the Ninth Circuit has noted,

> The language [of Rule 1006(b)(3)] does not indicate that fees for pre-petition services are appropriate, let alone that an obligation to pay such fees must be exempt from automatic stay and discharge. Even if such an exemption were an arguable implication of the rule's language, a Bankruptcy Rule cannot create an exception to the Bankruptcy Code.

In re Jastrem, 253 F.3d 438, 441 (9th Cir. 2001). The appellant's argument fails to explain how the alleged implicit exception to the discharge in Rule 1006(b)(3) can prevail when an express exception to the discharge in Rule 1006(b) would not prevail over the express terms of Section 727(b).

It is true that federal rules are strongly presumed to be valid under both constitutional and statutory constraints, In re Zimmerman, 156 B.R. 192, 196 (Bankr. W.D. Mich. 1993)(en banc opinion)(citing Burlington Northern Railroad v. Woods, 480 U.S. 1, 6, 107 U.S. 967, 970, 94 L.Ed.2d 1 (1987)), but there is no conflict here. Even if there were, and the statute and the rules implementing that statute conflict, then 28 U.S.C. Section 2075 requires that the statute prevail over the rules. "'[A]ny conflict between the Bankruptcy Code and the Bankruptcy Rules must be settled in favor of the Code.'" In re Jastrem, 253 F.3d 438, 441- 442 (9th Cir. 2001)(quoting, United States v. Towers (In re Pacific Atlantic Trading Co.), 33 F.3d 1064, 1066 (9th Cir. 1994)).

Furthermore, the presumed validity of the rules also argues for the rejection of any construction of the rules, such as the appellant's, that would create a conflict with the express bankruptcy discharge of Section 727(b). "The Bankruptcy Code and Rules must be harmonized unless it is impossible to do so." Zimmerman, 156 B.R. at 199 (Judge Gregg, concurring opinion).

Similarly, compliance with Rule 1006(b)(3) does not require the creation of an implicit exception to the discharge and the express terms of Sections 727(b) and 523(a). Rather, the appellant can require all debtors who are able to pay both the filing fee and the attorney fee in full to pay him both sums before the filing of the case so that the appellant may pay the filing fee for his client at filing. As to those who are truly and deeply unable to pay the filing fee and the attorney fee before filing, the appellant may decline to represent such debtors, or he may accept the case on a pro bono basis or he may refer them to an attorney who will. This may restrict the number of cases filed in which the filing fee is paid in installments. However, that is consistent with the terms of Rule 1006(b)(1), which limits the request for permission to pay the filing fee in installments to only those who are "unable to pay the filing fee except in installments"; those who would find paying the filing fee in full at filing merely inconvenient or difficult are not allowed to request permission to pay the filing fee in installments.

V. The Weight of Authority Is Unified In Holding That Section 727(b) Discharges All Prepetition Debts, Including Unpaid Prepetition Attorney Fees.

The appellant and the Bethea opinions concede that theirs is a minority position. The majority of the opinions that have considered this question have held that the filing of the bankruptcy petition discharges all unpaid prepetition obligations, including unpaid attorney fees. See, e.g., Hessinger and Associates v. United States Trustee (In re Biggar), 110 F.3d 685 (9th Cir. 1997); Gordon v. Hines (In re Hines), 147 F.3d 1185 (9th Cir. 1998); Sanchez v. Gordon (In re Sanchez), 241 F.3d 1148 (9th Cir. 2001); In re Jastrem, 253 F.3d 438 (9th Cir. 2001); In re McNickle, 274 B.R. 477 (Bankr. S.D. Ohio 2002); In re Nieves, 246 B.R. 866 (E.D. WI 2000); In re Toms, 229 B.R. 646 (Bankr. E.D. Pa. 1999); In re Voglio, 191 B.R. 420 (D.Ariz. 1996); In re Symes, 174 B.R. 114 (Bankr. D. Ariz. 1994); In re Haynes, 216 B.R. 440 (Bankr. D. Colo. 1997).

The appellant criticizes these cases, pointing out that some of these cases construe the discharged "prepetition debt" as including all of the agreement to provide services and make payment, while others construe the discharged "prepetition debt" as including only the prepeptition agreement to pay for prepetition services, and exclude postpetition payment for postpetition services from the discharged debt. It is true that these cases disagree as to some details of the extent of the debtors' attorney fee discharged. However, it is important to note that none of these cases have repudiated the basic principle that the discharge discharges a debtor from all prepetition debts, which is the question presented by this appeal. Nor is the degree of their disagreement important; even if every case that had considered this issue had held that there was an implicit exception to the discharge for prepetition attorney fees, the correct answer based upon the Bankruptcy Code would still be that there is no implicit exception for prepetition attorney fees which are discharged by the bankruptcy discharge granted under Section 727(b).

Bethea is not merely a minority position, it is an anomaly. To address a simple problem, Bethea proposes a solution that does all of the following: violates Section 727(b); distorts the meaning of Section 329; has no support in the legislative history, the caselaw, or the prior Bankruptcy Act; and awards debtors' attorneys fees in chapter 7 an extraordinary unwritten exception from the discharge.

There is a simple solution to this problem: the appellant should require that all clients pay their filing fee and their attorney fee in full prior to the filing of the bankruptcy petition. The vast majority of chapter 7 debtors who retain counsel apparently pay their attorney a flat fee prior to the filing of the bankruptcy petition. See, Teresa A. Sullivan, et al., As We Forgive Our Debtors 23 (1999)("Because most attorneys insist on being paid in advance, the debtor must find some money for fees and filing before bankruptcy is possible. Some people are literally saving up for their bankruptcies."); Amy L. Good and Dean P. Wyman, Representing Consumer Debtors: Fiduciary Duties of Counsel, Prac. Law., Mar. 1999, at 33 ("Chapter 7 attorneys are generally paid a one-time fee immediately before the filing of the bankruptcy petition."); Stanley B. Bernstein, et al., Collier Compensation, Employment and Appointment of Trustees and Professionals in Bankruptcy Para. 3.02[1], at 3-2 (2001)("In the majority of [chapter 7] cases, the debtor's counsel will accept an individual or a joint consumer chapter 7 case only after being paid a retainer that covers the 'standard fee' ...and the cost of filing the petition.")

Paying the debtor's attorney before the filing of the case also makes sense because that is when the bulk of the attorney's work must be done. "Proceedings under Chapter 7 differ from cases under other Chapters of the Code in that the bulk of the legal and fact-finding work is done before the petition is filed." Rosemary E. Williams, Bankruptcy Practice Handbook Section 5:1, at 5-4 (2d ed. 2002); accord United States Trustee v. Garvey, Schubert & Barer (In re Century Cleaning Services, Inc.), 195 F.3d 1053, 1064 (9th Cir. 1999)(Thomas, J., dissenting)("In many Chapter 7 cases, there is little for the debtor's attorney to do after the petition is filed.")

Compared with other chapters, the Bankruptcy Code imposes very limited duties upon a chapter 7 debtor. The debtor must complete a bankruptcy petition, schedules of assets and debts, a statement of financial affairs, a statement of intentions as to secured debts, and supporting documents. 11 U.S.C. Sections 521(1) and (2); Federal Rule of Bankruptcy Procedure 4002; 11 U.S.C. App. Official Forms 1, 6 and 7. Those duties may generally be performed before the debtor files for bankruptcy. The debtor must also cooperate with the chapter 7 trustee, surrender all property of the estate to the chapter 7 trustee, and appear at any discharge hearing in the rare event the bankruptcy court convenes such a hearing. 11 U.S.C. Sections 521(3)-(5); Federal Rule of Bankruptcy Procedure 4002(2) and (3).

After the filing of the bankruptcy petition the chapter 7 debtor must submit to examination by the chapter 7 trustee and any creditors who appear. 11 U.S.C. Sections 341 and 343. The chapter 7 debtor's attorney typically analyzes the debtor's financial position, advises the debtor whether to file bankruptcy at all, and if so, whether to file under chapter 13 or chapter 7, prepares the schedules, statement of affairs and other supporting documents, and appears at the 341 meeting with the client. Representing Consumer Debtors, supra, at 40. Other than attending the meeting with the chapter 7 trustee, the rest of the services can be performed before filing the chapter 7 petition, and some, such as analyzing the debtor's finances and advising the debtor whether to file, must be preformed before the filing of the bankruptcy petition. Therefore, not only does requiring the debtor to pay the filing fee and the attorney fee in full before the bankruptcy filing avoid having to take post petition payments on the attorney fee in violation of the Section 727(b) discharge, it also makes practical sense.

As of filing, this debtor owed her attorney a prepetition debt of $800 for the filing of the bankruptcy case. The attorney for the debtor should have seen to it that this fee was paid in full before the bankruptcy case was filed. The appellant demanded that the debtor pay the $800 prepetition debt even though it was discharged. This is the kind of attorney overreaching which Congress intended to prevent by enacting Section 329. The parties asked the bankruptcy court if that debt was discharged under Section 727(b). The bankruptcy court properly held that the debt was discharged, and should be affirmed.

CONCLUSION

For all the above reasons, the United States Trustee asks this Court to affirm the order of the Bankruptcy Court.

Respectfully submitted,

ON APPEAL FROM THE UNITED STATES DISTRICT COURT FOR THE CENTRAL DISTRICT OF CALIFORNIA

BRIEF FOR APPELLEE/CROSS-APPELLANT

STATEMENT OF JURISDICTION

1. The bankruptcy court had jurisdiction under 28 U.S.C. §§ 157(b) and 1334. After that court entered a final order, the United States Trustee filed a timely notice of appeal to the district court. The district court had jurisdiction under 28 U.S.C. § 158(a).

2. As we explain below, see pages 11-14, although the district court remanded the case to the bankruptcy court for further proceedings, its order is nevertheless final. This Court therefore has jurisdiction under 28 U.S.C. §§ 158(d) and 1291.

3. The district court entered judgment on June 14, 2004. See Appellant's Excerpts of Record ("E.R.") 331. Ringgold filed a notice of appeal in No. 04-56147 on June 25, 2004, see E.R. 332, and the United States Trustee filed a notice of cross-appeal in No. 04-56401 on August 13, 2004, see E.R. 335. Both appeals are timely under Federal Rule of Appellate Procedure 4(a)(1)(B).

STATEMENT OF THE ISSUE PRESENTED FOR REVIEW

The Bankruptcy Code provides that "the court, on its own motion or on a motion by the United States trustee, but not at the request or suggestion of any party in interest, may dismiss a case" if it finds that granting relief would be a "substantial abuse" of the Code. 11 U.S.C. § 707(b). In this case, the United States Trustee filed a motion to dismiss after receiving a suggestion from a creditor.

The question presented by the appeal is whether the bankruptcy court may consider the United States Trustee's motion. The question presented by the cross-appeal of the United States Trustee is whether the United States Trustee must show that he conducted an "independent investigation" before he filed the motion.

STATEMENT OF THE CASE

Patricia Ringgold sought relief under Chapter 7 of the Bankruptcy Code. After a creditor noted that Ringgold appeared to have sufficient income to pay her debts, the United States Trustee moved to dismiss the case under 11 U.S.C. § 707(b), which permits the bankruptcy court to dismiss a case for "substantial abuse" either "on its own motion or on a motion by the United States trustee, but not at the request or suggestion of any party in interest." The bankruptcy court held that the United States Trustee's motion was improper because it had been made at the suggestion of a party in interest. The district court reversed, but it held that the motion could be proper only if the United States Trustee had conducted an "independent investigation," and it remanded to the bankruptcy court to determine whether such an investigation had occurred. Ringgold appealed, and the United States Trustee cross-appealed.

STATEMENT OF FACTS

A. Statutory Background

The United States Trustee is an official of the Executive Branch of the federal government and is responsible for "protecting the public interest and ensuring that bankruptcy cases are conducted according to the law." H.R. Rep. No. 95-595, at 109 (1977), reprinted in 1978 U.S.C.C.A.N. 5963, 6070. United States Trustees have a statutory responsibility to "supervise the administration of cases" under Chapter 7, 11, 12, or 13 of the Bankruptcy Code. 28 U.S.C. § 586(a)(3). Congress expected them to "serve as bankruptcy watch-dogs to prevent fraud, dishonesty, and overreaching in the bankruptcy arena." H.R. Rep. No. 95-595, at 88, 1978 U.S.C.C.A.N. at 6049; see also In re Castillo, 297 F.3d 940, 950 (9th Cir. 2002) ("The United States Trustee is the 'watchdog' of the bankruptcy system, charged with preventing fraud and abuse and with 'fill[ing] the vacuum' caused by possible creditor inactivity.") (citations omitted). Congress therefore provided that "[t]he United States trustee may raise and may appear and be heard on any issue in any case or proceeding" under the Bankruptcy Code. 11 U.S.C. § 307; see also In re Donovan Corp., 215 F.3d 929, 930 (9th Cir. 2000).

Of particular relevance to this case, a United States Trustee may move to dismiss a Chapter 7 case for "substantial abuse":

> After notice and a hearing, the court, on its own motion or on a motion by the United States trustee, but not at the request or suggestion of any party in interest, may dismiss a case filed by an individual debtor under this chapter whose debts are primarily consumer debts if it finds that the granting of relief would be a substantial abuse of the provisions of this chapter.

11 U.S.C. § 707(b).

B. Facts and Prior Proceedings

1. Patricia Ringgold filed a petition under Chapter 7 of the Bankruptcy Code. See E.R. 38. Her petition listed two creditors: Harvey Baker, who had won a judgment against her in state-court litigation, and David Dimitruk, who had represented her in that litigation and was owed attorney's fees. See E.R. 52.

About a month after Ringgold filed her petition, Baker's attorney wrote a letter to the Office of the United States Trustee. See E.R. 216. The letter suggested that Ringgold's petition was "fraudulent, and should be dismissed," because Ringgold, an attorney employed by the State of California, "has plenty of discretionary income to pay" her debts. E.R. 216-17.

Thereafter, the United States Trustee moved to dismiss Ringgold's case under 11 U.S.C. § 707(b). See E.R. 32. The motion noted that Ringgold had a disposable income of $2,710 per month that was available to pay creditors, making it possible for her to pay off 75% of her debts within three years, and to more than pay off her debts within five years. See E.R. 33. Since "a finding that a debtor is able to pay his debts, standing alone, supports a conclusion of substantial abuse" under section 707(b), the United States Trustee argued that dismissal under that provision was appropriate. In re Kelly, 841 F.2d 908, 915 (9th Cir. 1988).

2. The bankruptcy judge denied the United States Trustee's motion to dismiss the case. See E.R. 221. The court did not consider the merits of the motion. Instead, it found that the United States Trustee's motion "was requested and suggested by" a creditor and therefore was improper under section 707(b). E.R.

244. In its view, section 707(b) prohibits the United States Trustee from acting “at the request or suggestion of any party in interest.” And as the court explained in denying a motion for reconsideration, “the communication by this creditor to the United States Trustee . . . constitutes a request or suggestion within the meaning of Section 707(b).” E.R. 298.

3. The United States Trustee appealed to the district court, which reversed and remanded to the bankruptcy court. See E.R. 316. The district court held that section 707(b) “bars a party in interest from bringing a motion to dismiss directly to the court,” but does not prohibit the United States Trustee from bringing such a motion, “even where a creditor initially suggested the substantial abuse.” E.R. 326. When the United States Trustee files a motion under section 707(b) after receiving a suggestion from a creditor, “it must demonstrate that it has independently investigated any allegations of substantial abuse prior to filing the motion.” E.R. 327 (quoting In re Morris, 153 B.R. 559, 563 (Bankr. D. Or. 1993)). “Failure to make this showing,” the court explained, “may result in the dismissal of the motion without a hearing on the merits.” Id. (quoting Morris, 153 B.R. at 563). The district court remanded the case to the bankruptcy court to determine whether the United States Trustee had conducted the requisite investigation.

Ringgold appealed, and the United States Trustee cross-appealed.

SUMMARY OF ARGUMENT

This Court has jurisdiction over both the appeal and the cross-appeal in this case. The bankruptcy court's order denying the United States Trustee's motion to dismiss was final. And although the district court remanded to the bankruptcy court for further factual findings, its order is also final under the "pragmatic approach to determining finality" that this Court applies in bankruptcy cases. In re Saxman, 325 F.3d 1168, 1171 (9th Cir. 2003). The issues presented by the appeal and cross-appeal are purely legal, and resolving them now could eliminate the need for the factfinding ordered by the district court.

On the merits, the district court's judgment should be affirmed insofar as it held that the United States Trustee may move to dismiss a case under 11 U.S.C. § 707(b) even after receiving a suggestion from an interested party. The statute provides that "the court, on its own motion or on a motion by the United States trustee, but not at the request or suggestion of any party in interest, may dismiss a case" for substantial abuse. The only logically and gramatically permissible interpretation of this provision is that the clause "but not at the request or suggestion of any party in interest" governs what the court may do, not what the United States Trustee may do. All three courts of appeals that have considered the issue have determined that section 707(b) does not prohibit the United States Trustee from filing a motion after receiving a suggestion from an interested party. See In re Stewart, 175 F.3d 796, 803-05 (10th Cir. 1999); In re Kornfield, 164 F.3d 778, 784 (2d Cir. 1999); In re Clark, 927 F.2d 793, 797 (4th Cir. 1991).

The legislative history supports the plain text of the statute. Congress prohibited interested parties from filing motions to dismiss because it was concerned that debtors would be harassed by creditors. There is no need to fear such harassment from the United States Trustee, who is a neutral and disinterested official. So there is no reason that the statute should restrict the United States Trustee's ability to file a section 707(b) motion.

The district court erred, however, in holding that the United States Trustee must show that he conducted an "independent investigation" before filing a motion under section 707(b). Because the statute limits only what the court may do, it imposes no obligation at all on the United States Trustee. Indeed, it would be very surprising if the statute did require proof of an investigation. Judicial enforcement of such a requirement would make it necessary for the bankruptcy court to conduct an intrusive examination of the internal decisionmaking processes of an agency in the Executive Branch. Nor would an "independent investigation" requirement serve any practical purpose. The Bankruptcy Rules already require that the United States Trustee, like any other party, have evidentiary support for the factual assertions in any motion. And since the United States Trustee is a government official, his actions enjoy a presumption of regularity.

STANDARD OF REVIEW

Because this Court "is in as good a position as the district court to review the findings of the bankruptcy court, [it] independently review[s] the bankruptcy court's decision." In re Emery, 317 F.3d 1064, 1069 (9th Cir. 2003). The only issues in this appeal are questions of law, and the bankruptcy court's legal conclusions are reviewed de novo. See id.

ARGUMENT

I. This Court Has Appellate Jurisdiction Because Both the Bankruptcy Court and the District Court Entered Final Orders.

This Court has jurisdiction over "appeals from all final decisions, judgments, orders, and decrees" entered by district courts in bankruptcy cases. 28 U.S.C. § 158(d); see also id. § 1291. To determine whether a decision is final, the Court must look first to whether the bankruptcy court's order is final, and then to whether the district court's decision is final. See In re Kelly, 841 F.2d 908, 911 (9th Cir. 1988). In this case, both finality requirements are satisfied.

The bankruptcy court entered a final order when it denied the United States Trustee's motion to dismiss the case under 11 U.S.C. § 707(b). That order left no unresolved issues in the case, and it meant that Ringgold could obtain a discharge of her debts. See E.R. 245-46 (bankruptcy court ordered that entry of a discharge order would be stayed pending appeal). Courts have determined that a bankruptcy court's denial of a section 707(b) motion is a final appealable order. See In re Koch, 109 F.3d 1285 (8th Cir. 1997); In re Brown, 916 F.2d 120 (3d Cir. 1990).

The district court's decision is also final, even though it remanded the case to the bankruptcy court for further proceedings. This Court applies "a pragmatic approach to determining finality" in bankruptcy cases. In re Saxman, 325 F.3d 1168, 1171 (9th Cir. 2003); see also In re Olshan, 356 F.3d 1078, 1082 (9th Cir. 2004) ("In recent cases we have employed a more liberal approach to determining finality."). The Court examines four factors in determining whether a district court's decision is final: "(1) the need to avoid piecemeal litigation; (2) judicial efficiency; (3) systemic interest in preserving the bankruptcy court's role as factfinder; and (4) whether further delay would cause either party irreparable harm." Saxman, 325 F.3d at 1171.

In the context of a district court order remanding a case to a bankruptcy court, this Court has asked whether the "matters on remand concern primarily factual matters about which there is no dispute." In re Bankruptcy Estate of Markair, Inc., 308 F.3d 1057, 1060 (9th Cir. 2002) (citation and internal quotation marks omitted). If so, "the policies of judicial efficiency are best served by [this Court's] resolving the question." Id. (citation and internal quotation marks omitted). Even if the factfinding on remand relates to a "central issue" in the appeal, appellate jurisdiction is still appropriate if the issue "is legal in nature and its resolution either (1) could dispose of the case or proceedings and obviate the need for factfinding; or (2) would materially aid the bankruptcy court in reaching its disposition on remand." Id. (citation omitted).

Under this standard, the Court has appellate jurisdiction over the United States Trustee's cross-appeal. The district court has directed the bankruptcy court to determine whether the United States Trustee conducted an "independent investigation" before filing a motion under section 707(b). The argument presented in the cross-appeal is that this inquiry is unnecessary, because the statute does not require an independent investigation. The cross-appeal therefore poses "an independent question of law," and there is no need for "factual development to clarify a central legal issue." Saxman, 325 F.3d at 1172; see also In re Dawson, ___ F.3d ___, No. 02-16903, 2004 WL 2827663, at *3 (9th Cir. Dec. 10, 2004) (finding jurisdiction to review a remand order because "this appeal concerns primarily a question of law, and indeed a question of first impression in the Ninth Circuit"). And if the United States Trustee prevails, this Court's decision would "dispose of the . . . proceedings and obviate the need for factfinding." Markair, 308 F.3d at 1060.

Other factors also favor resolution of the cross-appeal. Hearing the cross-appeal now would not result in piecemeal litigation; this Court can conclusively resolve the issue raised in the cross-appeal, so there is no danger that the Court will be required to "review the same issues in the same case a second time." In re Lakeshore Village Resort, Ltd., 81 F.3d 103, 107 (9th Cir. 1996). And resolution of the issue is necessary in order to prevent irreparable harm to the United States Trustee. As we explain in Part III.B, the factfinding contemplated by the district court's order will require an inappropriate intrusion into the internal decisionmaking processes of the Executive Branch. The harm caused by this intrusion could not be fully redressed in a subsequent appeal.

The Court also has jurisdiction to consider Ringgold's appeal. Ringgold argues that the United States Trustee's dismissal motion in this case was improper regardless of whether there was an independent investigation. Therefore, if she were to prevail, further factfinding by the bankruptcy court would be unnecessary. Cf. Markair, 308 F.3d at 1060. In addition, since the appeal and cross-appeal present such closely related issues -- both concern the interpretation of the same clause in the same statute -- the interests of judicial economy would be served by considering them together.

II. Section 707(b) Allows the United States Trustee to Move to Dismiss a Case for Substantial Abuse Even After Receiving a Suggestion from a Party in Interest.

The district court correctly held that the United States Trustee may move to dismiss a case under 11 U.S.C. § 707(b) even after receiving a suggestion from an interested party. The statutory language makes clear that it is the court, and not the United States Trustee, that may not act upon the request or suggestion of an interested party. All three courts of appeals to consider the question have concluded that an interested party's suggestion does not disable the United States Trustee from filing a motion under section 707(b). Because the statute is clear, there is no need to consider legislative history, but here the legislative history is fully consistent with this interpretation of the statute.

A. The plain text of section 707(b) shows that it restricts what the bankruptcy court may do, not what the United States Trustee may do.

Section 707(b) provides that "the court, on its own motion or on a motion by the United States trustee, but not at the request or suggestion of any party in interest, may dismiss a case" for substantial abuse. The statutory phrase "but not at the request or suggestion of any party in interest" modifies "may dismiss" and not the intervening phrase "on a motion by the United States trustee." Accordingly, all three courts of appeals to consider the question have determined that the statute limits requests to the court, not requests to the United States Trustee. See In re Stewart, 175 F.3d 796, 803-05 (10th Cir. 1999); In re Kornfield, 164 F.3d 778, 784 (2d Cir. 1999); In re Clark, 927 F.2d 793, 797 (4th Cir. 1991).

The conclusion reached by the courts of appeals is plainly correct. The subject of the first sentence in section 707(b) is "the court," and the verb is "may dismiss." In between the subject and the verb, there are two clauses: "on its own motion or on a motion by the United States trustee," and "but not at the request or suggestion of any party in interest." The only logical reading of these clauses is that both of them modify "may dismiss," so they therefore govern what the court may do. See Clark, 927 F.2d at 797 ("The phrase 'but not at the request or suggestion of any party in interest' modifies what the court can do, since 'the court' is the subject of the sentence."). While the court may not act at the request or suggestion of an interested party, the United States Trustee is under no such disability. See Kornfield, 164 F.3d at 684 ("Section 707(b) does not bar the U.S. Trustee from using information obtained from . . . parties in interest in deciding whether to file a substantial abuse motion.”).

Ringgold does not explain exactly how she would parse the statutory language, and neither did the Bankruptcy Court for the District of South Dakota -- the only court, other than the bankruptcy court here, to have adopted her position. See In re Restea, 76 B.R. 728 (Bankr. D.S.D. 1987). But for Ringgold to be correct, the clause “but not at the request or suggestion of any party in interest” would have to modify all or part of the clause that precedes it. Reading the clause to modify both parts of the preceding clause creates a redundancy, because a court acting “on its own motion” is by definition not acting “at the request or suggestion of any party,” so the modifying clause would add nothing. An interpretation that makes part of a statute redundant is disfavored. See Sierra Club v. Babbitt, 65 F.3d 1502, 1509 n.10 (9th Cir. 1995).

On the other hand, reading the clause to modify only the phrase “on a motion by the United States trustee” would create two anomalies. First, it would mean that the statute contained no explicit prohibition on the court’s acting at the request of a party. It is difficult to see why Congress would have wanted to prevent interested parties from making requests of the United States Trustee while leaving them free to make requests of the court directly. Second, such a reading would require, at least implicitly, filling in missing words in the statute: “on a motion of the United States trustee, but not on one that is made at the request or suggestion of any party in interest." Cf. Lamie v. United States Trustee, 124 S. Ct. 1023, 1032 (2004) (rejecting an interpretation of a statute that "would have us read an absent word into the statute," producing not "'a construction of [the] statute, but, in effect, an enlargement of it by the court.'") (quoting Iselin v. United States, 270 U.S. 245, 251 (1926)).

If Congress had intended to prevent the United States Trustee from making a motion under section 707(b) based on a "request or suggestion of any party in interest," it could hardly have chosen a more obscure and ungrammatical formulation. There are several more coherent ways of expressing such an intent. In addition to the example suggested above, Congress could have said, "on the motion of the United States trustee, who shall not act at the request or suggestion of any party in interest;" or "on the motion of the United States trustee, but such motion shall not be made at the request of suggestion of any party in interest." Alternatively, Congress could have omitted the phrase and inserted a new sentence between the two sentences currently in section 707(b): "No such motion may be made at the request of suggestion of any party in interest."

The district court was therefore correct when it held that section 707(b) prevents only the court from acting at the request or suggestion of a creditor. If the United States Trustee decides to make a motion to dismiss, it is irrelevant what might have motivated the decision, and the court may consider the motion on the merits.

B. The legislative history supports this interpretation of the statute.

Because the text of section 707(b) is clear, it is unnecessary for the Court to consider the legislative history. See United States v. Meek, 366 F.3d 705, 719 (9th Cir. 2004). But in any event, the legislative history is entirely consistent with the plain language of the statute.

When first enacted in 1984, section 707(b) provided: "[T]he court, on its own motion and not at the request or suggestion of any party in interest, may dismiss a case" for substantial abuse. Bankruptcy Amendments and Federal Judgeship Act of 1984, Pub. L. No. 98-353, § 312(2), 98 Stat. 333, 355 (1984). The statute reflected a legislative compromise. On the one hand, the possibility of dismissals for substantial abuse prevented consumers from "using the bankruptcy system, not to extricate themselves from an unfortunate situation, but rather as a method of avoiding debts even though they were not suffering economic hardship and possessed future income sufficient to meet their obligations." In re Padilla, 222 F.3d 1184, 1194 (9th Cir. 2000) (citation omitted). On the other hand, the restriction on motions by creditors helped "to prevent creditors from harassing the debtor or unnecessarily increasing the debtor's litigation costs." In re Joseph, 208 B.R. 55, 60 (B.A.P. 9th Cir. 1997) (quoting 4 Collier on Bankruptcy § 707.05, at 707-18 (15th ed. 1996)). As Senator Metzenbaum explained, by "prohibit[ing] creditors from filing motions attempting to deny bankruptcy relief to individuals," the statute "preclude[d] creditors from making bankruptcy too expensive for the debtor by filing harassing motions." 130 Cong. Rec. 17,158 (1984).

In 1986, Congress amended the statute to its present form to make clear that United States Trustees could bring motions to dismiss. See Bankruptcy Judges, United States Trustees, and Family Farmer Bankruptcy Act of 1986, Pub. L. No. 99-554, § 219(b), 100 Stat. 3088, 3101 (1986). The report of the Conference Committee noted that Congress "anticipate[d] that the panel trustee will work closely in conjunction with the United States Trustee to assist in the discharge of the specific authority granted under Section 707(b)." H.R. Conf. Rep. No. 99-958, at 47 (1986), reprinted in 1986 U.S.C.C.A.N. 5227, 5248. Specifically, Congress expected that the Chapter 7 trustee would "brin[g] to the United States trustee's attention any information or evidence of fraud or abuse which may provide the basis for dismissal of a case under Section 707(b)." Id.

This legislative history supports the district court's holding in two ways. First, Congress's concerns about creditor harassment have no application to a motion brought by the United States Trustee, a neutral and disinterested party who acts as an independent watchdog over the bankruptcy system. Even when creditors are permitted to communicate requests and suggestions to the United States Trustee, a motion brought by the United States Trustee is not brought at the behest of creditors; it is brought in the interest of the proper administration of the bankruptcy system.

Ringgold’s interpretation would extend the statutory prohibition well beyond Congress’s purpose. It also would impede the United States Trustee’s ability to fulfill his responsibilities. As the district court noted, “should a well-meaning (or even not so well-meaning but nevertheless correct) creditor make the unfortunate mistake of bringing abuse to the [United States Trustee’s] attention,” the United States Trustee would then be disabled from investigating the matter and carrying out the statutory mandate to “supervise the administration of [the] cas[e].” E.R. 330; 28 U.S.C. § 586(a)(3).

Second, Congress contemplated that Chapter 7 trustees could deliver suggestions to the United States Trustee in cases of substantial abuse. But under Ringgold’s interpretation of section 707(b), this would be impossible, since a Chapter 7 trustee is a party in interest. See In re Edmonston, 107 F.3d 74, 77 (1st Cir. 1997); In re Christian, 51 B.R. 118, 119 (Bankr.

D.N.J. 1985), aff'd, 804 F.2d 46 (3d Cir. 1986). That interpretation should be rejected.

III. The District Court Erred in Requiring the United States Trustee to Show That He Conducted an "Independent Investigation" Before Filing a Motion Under Section 707(b).

The district court directed the bankruptcy court to determine whether the United States Trustee had conducted an "independent investigation" before filing the section 707(b) motion in this case. This was error. A requirement that the United States Trustee demonstrate an "independent investigation" is not contained in the statute, would be inconsistent with principles of prosecutorial discretion, and would create serious practical problems.

A. The text of section 707(b) contains no "independent investigation" requirement.

Nothing in 11 U.S.C. § 707(b) requires the United States Trustee to conduct an investigation before filing a motion to dismiss for substantial abuse. The statute provides that "the court, on its own motion or on a motion by the United States trustee, but not at the request or suggestion of any party in interest, may dismiss a case." As we have explained, the clause "but not at the request or suggestion of any party in interest" governs what the court may do, not what the United States Trustee may do. The district court erred in subjecting the United States Trustee to an obligation that has no basis in the statute.

The district court's holding is inconsistent with the decisions of the Fourth and Second Circuits. In In re Clark, the Fourth Circuit explained that the statute's "request or suggestion" clause "modifies what the court can do" and does not restrict the actions of the United States Trustee. 927 F.2d 793, 797 (4th Cir. 1991). Although the court did observe that "the trustee must make an independent judgment about whether it is appropriate to file a § 707(b) motion," it said nothing to suggest that the United States Trustee is legally obligated to conduct any particular kind of investigation. Id. (emphasis added).

Likewise, the Second Circuit held in In re Kornfield that "Section 707(b) does not bar the U.S. Trustee from using information obtained from . . . parties in interest in deciding whether to file a substantial abuse motion." 164 F.3d 778, 784 (2d Cir. 1999). But under the district court's theory, the provision sometimes does bar the United States Trustee from using information from interested parties, at least when the United States Trustee is unable to show that there has been an "independent investigation."

The district court cited the Tenth Circuit's decision in In re Stewart, but that case provides little support for the district court's reading of the statute. See E.R. 322-23; 175 F.3d 796 (10th Cir. 1999). In Stewart, the bankruptcy petitioner argued that section 707(b) requires the United States Trustee to prove, before filing a "substantial abuse" motion, that there has been an independent investigation of the facts underlying the motion. See 175 F.3d at 805. Perhaps because it was clear in that case that the United States Trustee had conducted an investigation, no party argued that an investigation was not required at all. The court, in turn, simply noted that the record showed that an investigation had occurred, adding that "[i]t is sufficient for the Trustee to make such a showing after filing his or her § 707(b) motion to dismiss." Id. The court had no occasion to address the issue presented here.

B. An "independent investigation" requirement would be inconsistent with principles of prosecutorial discretion.

Even if the statute were ambiguous, any ambiguity should be resolved so as to make the statute consistent, rather than inconsistent, with the general rule that courts will not inquire into the exercise of prosecutorial discretion. Cf. Astoria Fed. Sav. & Loan Ass'n v. Solimino, 501 U.S. 104, 108 (1991) ("[W]here a common-law principle is well established . . . the courts may take it as given that Congress has legislated with an expectation that the principle will apply except 'when a statutory purpose to the contrary is evident'") (quoting Isbrandtsen Co. v. Johnson, 343 U.S. 779, 783 (1952)). The district court's ruling disregards that principle and threatens to create an intrusive and impractical regime of bankruptcy-court supervision of executive-branch decisionmaking.

The Supreme Court has held that "[w]hether to prosecute and what charge to file . . . are decisions that generally rest in the prosecutor's discretion." United States v. Batchelder, 442 U.S. 114, 124 (1979); see also Reno v. American-Arab Anti-Discrimination Comm., 525 U.S. 471, 489 (1999) (noting that prosecutorial discretion is "a special province of the Executive"). As this Court has explained, "[i]t would raise serious separation of powers questions -- as well as a host of virtually insurmountable practical problems -- for the district court to inquire into and supervise the inner workings of the United States Attorney's Office." United States v. Redondo-Lemos, 955 F.2d 1296, 1299 (9th Cir. 1992).

Although the United States Trustee is not a criminal prosecutor in this case, he is an official of the Executive Branch who exercises responsibilities similar to those of a prosecutor. As the Eighth Circuit has recognized, a "United States Trustee 'may be compared with . . . a prosecutor.'" In re Charges of Unprof'l Conduct, 249 F.3d 821, 824 (8th Cir. 2001) (quoting H.R. Rep. No. 95-595, at 110 (1977), reprinted in 1978 U.S.C.C.A.N. 5963, 6071). In deciding "to place the United States trustee system in the Department of Justice," Congress observed that the United States Trustee, like a prosecutor, "has an independent executive duty to pursue" and does not serve "as an arm of the court or as a service agency for the courts." H.R. Rep. No. 95-595, at 110-11, 1978 U.S.C.C.A.N. at 6072; see also In re Revco D.S., Inc., 898 F.2d 498, 500 (6th Cir. 1990) ("Congress specified that the U.S. Trustees were to be independent of direct court supervision . . .; it likened the U.S. Trustee's relation to that of a prosecutor.").

It is unclear precisely what kind of inquiry the bankruptcy court would conduct in order to determine whether the United States Trustee had undertaken an "independent investigation" before filing a section 707(b) motion. But in a case where the debtor disputes the adequacy of the investigation, it might be necessary for the United States Trustee's counsel to testify as a witness and to describe how he or she decided to file a motion. Cf. Redondo-Lemos, 955 F.2d at 1299-1300 (noting that judicial inquiry into a prosecutor's charging decisions "would require that the government divulge minute details about the process by which scores, perhaps hundreds, of charging decisions are made"). And the United States Trustee might be asked to disclose sensitive information about pre-litigation investigations -- information that could well be protected by the deliberative process privilege. See Assembly of the State of Cal. v. Department of Commerce, 968 F.2d 916 (9th Cir. 1992). In the absence of a clear statement from Congress, this Court should not read the statute to require such an inquiry.

C. Requiring proof of an "independent investigation" would be impractical and would serve little purpose.

The district court's "independent investigation" requirement is not only contrary to the statute; it also would serve little practical purpose. Instead, it would be a time-consuming waste of judicial resources. This is especially so because the inquiry that the bankruptcy court would have to conduct is entirely standardless. The statute does not even mention investigations, let alone provide criteria for evaluating their adequacy, so it would be necessary for courts to develop some test for when an investigation is sufficiently inadequate to justify dismissal of an otherwise meritorious section 707(b) motion.

So far as we are aware, there is no other context in which a movant is required to show affirmatively how he or she obtained and reviewed the evidence supporting the motion. Nor is there anything about this context that creates a special need for such a showing. After all, the United States Trustee already bears the burden of proof when filing a motion to dismiss. See Stewart, 175 F.3d at 805 n.7. And the bankruptcy rules require, on pain of sanctions, that all motions be signed and that the factual representations they contain be supported by evidence. See Fed. R. Bankr. P. 9011.

Unlike the other parties in a bankruptcy proceeding, the United States Trustee is a disinterested official with a duty to "prevent fraud, dishonesty, and overreaching." H.R. Rep. No.

95-595, at 88, 1978 U.S.C.C.A.N. at 6049. And since the United States Trustee is a government official, his actions are entitled to a presumption of regularity. See United States Postal Serv. v. Gregory, 534 U.S. 1, 10 (2001). So even if the United States Trustee receives information from creditors, there is no reason to believe that he would mindlessly rubber-stamp their suggestions of "substantial abuse." Cf. Sosa v. Alvarez-Machain, 124 S. Ct. 2739, 2763 (2004) (noting that "the check imposed by prosecutorial discretion" is present when a statute is enforced by government officials rather than by private parties). An affirmative showing of an independent investigation is therefore unnecessary.

CONCLUSION

The judgment of the district court should be affirmed in part and reversed in part, and the case should be remanded to the district court with instructions to remand to the bankruptcy court for an evaluation of the merits of the United States Trustee’s motion to dismiss the case under 11 U.S.C. § 707(b).

REPLY BRIEF FOR CROSS-APPELLANT

INTRODUCTION

Both the appeal and the cross-appeal in this case turn on the interpretation of section 707(b) of the Bankruptcy Code, which provides that "the court, on its own motion or on a motion by the United States trustee, but not at the request or suggestion of any party in interest, may dismiss a case" if it finds that granting relief would be a "substantial abuse" of the Code. 11 U.S.C. § 707(b). In our opening brief, we explained that this provision prohibits the court from dismissing a case based on a request or suggestion from a party, but that it imposes no limit on the ability of the United States Trustee to file a motion. Therefore, the United States Trustee may move to dismiss a case even after receiving a request or suggestion from a party. All three courts of appeals to consider the issue have reached the same conclusion. See In re Stewart, 175 F.3d 796, 803-05 (10th Cir. 1999); In re Kornfield, 164 F.3d 778, 784 (2d Cir. 1999); In re Clark, 927 F.2d 793, 797 (4th Cir. 1991).

The specific issue presented by the cross-appeal is whether the United States Trustee must prove that he conducted an "independent investigation" before being allowed to prosecute a motion to dismiss under section 707(b). Ringgold claims that the United States Trustee has conceded the existence of such a requirement, but this is incorrect. Far from conceding the issue, the United States Trustee has consistently urged a plain-language interpretation of section 707(b) that is irreconcilable with an "independent investigation" requirement.

On the merits, the district court's "independent investigation" requirement should be rejected. Because section 707(b) limits only what the court may do, it imposes no obligations on the United States Trustee. Ringgold asserts that other courts have required a showing of an independent investigation, but the cases she cites do not support this claim. And Ringgold does not address the presumption of regularity that attaches to the actions of government officials. That presumption makes it inappropriate to impose on the United States Trustee the unusual -- and, so far as we are aware, unique -- burden of explaining the decisionmaking process that led him to file a motion.

ARGUMENT

I. The United States Trustee Has Not Waived the Argument That Section 707(b) Contains No "Independent Investigation" Requirement.

Ringgold asserts that the United States Trustee has waived the issue raised by the cross-appeal. In her view, "[h]aving argued below the existence of an implied investigation requirement, the [United States Trustee] on cross-appeal, may not now take the opposite position." Br. 11. Specifically, she asserts that the United States Trustee "conceded the applicability of the 'independent investigation' requirement in the present case." Br. 16; see also id. at 8 ("The [United States Trustee] conceded throughout his reply papers, that an 'independent investigation' showing is required in those jurisdictions permitting a hearing on the merits for dismissal motions brought by the [United States Trustee] at a creditor's request.").

Tellingly, Ringgold's claim of waiver is not supported by any quotation from any of the United States Trustee's filings in this case. Indeed, the United States Trustee has never argued, either explicitly or implicitly, that section 707(b) requires the United States Trustee to prove that he conducted an "independent investigation" as a condition precedent to prosecuting a section 707(b) motion. On the contrary, he has consistently maintained that section 707(b) restricts only what the bankruptcy court may do, and that it in no way limits the ability of the United States Trustee to file a motion to dismiss after receiving a suggestion from a creditor. As we explained in our opening brief, since the statute does not restrict the activities of the United States Trustee, it cannot be read to require that he conduct an independent investigation. See Opening Br. 22. Far from endorsing an "independent investigation" requirement, the United States Trustee has consistently taken a position that is irreconcilable with the existence of such a requirement.

Before the bankruptcy court, the United States Trustee argued that section 707(b) does not restrict his ability to move to dismiss a case. The two sections of the argument in his filing were entitled "THE U.S. TRUSTEE'S MOTION IS NOT TAINTED BY A CREDITOR OR OTHER PARTY-IN-INTEREST REFERRAL," Appellant's Excerpts of Record ("E.R.") 210, and "STATUTORY LANGUAGE PERMITS THE U.S. TRUSTEE TO PROPERLY BRING § 707(b) MOTIONS EVEN IF A PARTY-IN-INTEREST REQUESTS THAT SUCH A MOTION BE FILED," id. at 212. In support of this second point, the United States Trustee explained that the statute "modifies what the Court can do and does not limit the U.S. Trustee." Id. Nowhere in his filings, or in his motion for reconsideration, see id. at 223, did the United States Trustee suggest that section 707(b) imposes an requirement of an independent investigation when a party in interest suggests that he file a dismissal motion.

Likewise, before the district court, the United States Trustee renewed his argument that section 707(b) limits only the bankruptcy court, not the United States Trustee. See Appellee/Cross-Appellant's Supplemental Excerpts of Record 19 ("[T]he prohibitive language [of section 707(b)] applies to the court's sua sponte motions to dismiss and not § 707(b) motions brought by the United States Trustee."); id. at 37 ("The overwhelming weight of authority interprets section 707(b) as permitting a court to hear a United States Trustee's motion to dismiss a debtor's case even when a party in interest makes a 'request or suggestion' to the United States Trustee."). Again, the United States Trustee nowhere suggested that affirmative proof of an adequate independent investigation was required. And the brief requested that the district court "reverse the order denying the dismissal of this case and remand the case with a direction to the bankruptcy court to rule on the merits." Id. at 32. It did not request a remand for determination whether there was an adequate independent investigation.

Ringgold maintains (Br. 15) that because the United States Trustee relied on In re Clark and In re Stewart, he necessarily accepted the "independent investigation" requirement which, in her view, those cases adopted. But as we explained in our opening brief, neither case held that such a requirement exists. See Opening Br. 22-24.

To be sure, the United States Trustee did point out that, in this particular case, he conducted his own investigation before filing the motion to dismiss. See, e.g., E.R. 213, 262. But this was simply an argument in the alternative; the United States Trustee nowhere suggested that an investigation was required by the statute. Instead, he urged an interpretation of a statute that forecloses any such requirement. Accordingly, Ringgold's claim of waiver should be rejected.

II. Section 707(b) Does Not Require the United States Trustee to Show That He Conducted an "Independent Investigation" Before Filing a Motion to Dismiss.

Nothing in 11 U.S.C. § 707(b) requires that the United States Trustee establish that he conducted an investigation as a condition precedent to filing a motion to dismiss for substantial abuse. The statute's qualifying language -- "but not at the request or suggestion of any party in interest" -- governs what the court may do, not what the United States Trustee may do. There is therefore no statutory basis for imposing any investigatory requirement on the United States Trustee.

A. In our opening brief, we noted that Ringgold had not explained exactly how she would parse the language of the statute. See Opening Br. 16. She still has not done so. In particular, Ringgold does not explain where in the statute she finds an "independent investigation" requirement. Instead, she asserts (Br. 17-18) that "[a]ll of the courts" that have permitted the United States Trustee to bring a section 707(b) motion after receiving a suggestion from a party in interest have required "a proper showing that the [United States Trustee] conducted an independent investigation." This is incorrect.

As we explained in our opening brief, all three courts of appeals that have considered the issue have determined that section 707(b) does not restrict the United States Trustee from bringing a motion to dismiss after receiving a suggestion from an interested party. See In re Stewart, 175 F.3d 796, 803-05 (10th Cir. 1999); In re Kornfield, 164 F.3d 778, 784 (2d Cir. 1999); In re Clark, 927 F.2d 793, 797 (4th Cir. 1991). In none of these cases did the court hold that the United States Trustee must prove that he conducted an independent investigation. In Clark, for example, the court noted that the United States Trustee would exercise "independent judgment," but it did not even mention the possibility of an "independent investigation" requirement. 927 F.2d at 797. In Kornfield, the court stated flatly that "Section 707(b) does not bar the U.S. Trustee from using information obtained from . . . parties in interest in deciding whether to file a substantial abuse motion." 164 F.3d at 784. It said nothing to suggest that the United States Trustee could use such information only after proving that he had conducted an independent investigation. And in Stewart, although the court mentioned the United States Trustee's investigation, it did not state that one was required -- indeed, since it was clear that an investigation had occurred, any such statement would have been dicta. See 175 F.3d 805.[*]

B. Application of an "independent investigation" requirement is inappropriate for the additional reason that it would be inconsistent with principles of prosecutorial discretion. Ringgold correctly observes (Br. 22-23) that this case does not involve a criminal prosecution. But as we have

[*] In our opening brief, we stated that in Stewart, "no party argued that an investigation was not required at all." Opening Br. 24. We based this statement on the Stewart court's description of the parties' arguments. We have since learned, however, that the brief for the United States Trustee in Stewart did assert, albeit in a footnote: "[T]here is no requireement that the U.S. Trustee prove he has conducted an independent investigation under the statute. The suggestion to the contrary in In re Morris, 153 B.R. 559, 563 (Bankr. D. Ore. 1993), is mistaken." Brief for Appellee at 31 n.12, In re Stewart, 175 F.3d 796 (10th Cir. 1999) (No. 98-5000). Nevertheless, the opinion in Stewart suggests that the court did not consider this issue, no doubt because it was clear that an investigation had in fact occurred. See Stewart, 175 F.3d at 805 ("As the Panel noted, and we agree, the record demonstrates the Trustee undertook an independent investigation concerning Dr. Stewart's possible abuse of the provisions of Chapter 7 prior to filing the motion to dismiss."). For this reason, Stewart cannot be read as holding that an investigation is required.

explained, the United States Trustee's decision to bring a motion under section 707(b) is in many respects analogous to a United States Attorney's decision to seek an indictment, and judicial supervision of either decision is equally inappropriate.

In response, Ringgold asserts (Br. 23) that in this case, "[t]he [United States Trustee]'s motives and decision-making were not subjected to outside inquiry -- or judicial supervision." But such "inquiry" and "supervision" are precisely what the district court has called for. Ringgold suggests (Br. 26-27) that no further factual inquiry would be necessary in this case, but under the district court's order, the bankruptcy court must make a factual determination on remand. See E.R. 327. The bankruptcy court may well conclude that compliance with the district court's remand order requires holding a hearing and obtaining additional evidence concerning the nature of the investigation that the United States Trustee conducted.

In any event, whether or not further factual development would be necessary in this case, the district court's approach would surely require an extensive inquiry in many other cases. If a debtor challenged the adequacy or the independence of the investigation, the United States Trustee might well be asked to describe the investigation that he conducted. Depending on the facts of the case, the United States Trustee could be asked to identify the witnesses he interviewed and the documents he reviewed, as well as to explain the basis for his investigatory decisions. As we have observed, much of this material could be protected by the deliberative-process privilege, and requiring its disclosure would be inappropriate.

C. As Ringgold acknowledges (Br. 19-20), the United States Trustee already bears the burden of proof when filing a motion to dismiss. And like all litigants, he must certify that the factual representations in his motion are supported by evidence. See Fed. R. Bankr. P. 9011. Ringgold does not address the presumption of regularity that attaches to the actions of government officials. See United States Postal Serv. v. Gregory, 534 U.S. 1, 10 (2001). But in light of that presumption, there is no reason why the United States Trustee should bear the unique additional burden of explaining how he obtained and evaluated the evidence supporting his motion.

CONCLUSION

The judgment of the district court should be affirmed in part and reversed in part, and the case should be remanded to the district court with instructions to remand to the bankruptcy court for an evaluation of the merits of the United States Trustee’s motion to dismiss the case under 11 U.S.C. § 707(b).

STATEMENT OF APPELLATE JURISDICTION

This Court has jurisdiction over Ted and Mary Roberts' appeal from the judgment and other orders entered in the Adversary (Case No. 06-05121) under 28 U.S.C. § 158(a)(1) granting the United State Trustee's Complaint to deny the Roberts' discharge under 11 U.S.C. §§727(a)(2), (a)(3) and (a)(4) . The debtors also appeal from the following orders entered in their bankruptcy case, Case No. 04-55897 (the "Main Case"): 1) order allowing employment of counsel for John Patrick Lowe, Chapter 7 Trustee, entered on January 23, 2007 (Case Doc. No. 197) and 2) order overruling the debtors' objection to the application to employ counsel entered on March 6, 2007 (Case, Doc. No. 201) (collectively, the "Employment Orders"). The debtors failed to timely appeal, and this court is without jurisdiction to review the Employment Orders. *See Texas Gulf Trawling Co. v. STATEMENT OF ISSUES PRESENTED

1. Did the Bankruptcy Court err in denying the debtors' discharge?
2. Did the Bankruptcy Court err in its pre-trial discovery rulings?

STATEMENT OF THE CASE

On October 13, 2004, Ted Roberts and Mary Roberts filed a petition for relief under Chapter 11 of the Bankruptcy Code (Adv. Doc. Nos. 1, 151).[3] On March 29, 2005 the debtors voluntarily converted their case to a Chapter 7 liquidation. (Adv. Doc. Nos. 1, 151). Mr. John Patrick Lowe was appointed as the Chapter 7 trustee. On July 11, 2006, the United States Trustee[4] timely filed a Complaint pursuant to 11 U.S.C. §727 seeking denial of the debtors' discharge for multiple false oaths and statements in the debtors' bankruptcy schedules, transfers and concealment of assets, and the debtors' failure to keep complete financial records. (Adv. Doc. No. 1, the "Complaint"). On May 4, 2007, after a three (3) day bench trial, held on April 3 through 5, 2007, the bankruptcy court denied the debtors' discharge. The court denied the debtors' discharge: (a) under §727(a) (4) finding that they had made multiple material false oaths by failing to disclose assets such as businesses, (Counts I and II of the Complaint), a bank account, (Count III of the Complaint) an escrow deposit (Count IV of the Complaint), stock (Count V of the Complaint) and claims against their professional corporation (Count VII of the Complaint); (b) under §727(a) (2) finding they concealed and transferred assets, (Counts IX, X and XIV of the Complaint); and (c) under §727(a)(3) finding they failed to maintain records (Count IIIA of the Complaint). (Adv. Doc. No. 179). The debtors appeal from the bankruptcy court's judgment denying their bankruptcy discharge. (Adv. Doc. No. 190). The debtors also appeal from pre and post trial orders relating to procedure and discovery and the order denying their first amended motion for sanctions. (Adv. Doc. No. 190).

STATEMENT OF THE FACTS

I. The Bankruptcy Case, Schedules, Statements of Financial Affairs, and Creditors' Meetings

On October 13, 2004, the debtors filed a voluntary Chapter 11 bankruptcy case (the "Main Case." (Adv. Doc. Nos. 1, 151) and later voluntarily converted the case to a Chapter 7 liquidation. The debtors are attorneys, licensed in Texas since 1991 for Ted Roberts and since 1993 for Mary Roberts. (Trial Tr., Vol. 1, p. 224, L. 8-10, Vol. 3, p. 518, L. 12-16). According to the State Bar of Texas website, Ted Hopkins Roberts is currently indefinitely suspended from the practice of law starting June 15, 2007. www.texasbar.com Public Disciplinary History. Prior to his suspension, Ted Roberts was an experienced litigation attorney certified by the Texas Board of Legal Specialization in Civil Trial and Personal Injury Law. (Trial Tr., Vol. 1, p. 220, L. 5-7). The United States Court of Appeals for the Fifth Circuit has described the debtors as "prominent local attorneys". Lowe v. Hearst Communications Inc., 487 F.3d 246, 249 (5th Cir. 2007).[5] Ted Roberts also held a Masters Degree in Business Administration. (Trial Tr., Vol. 1, p. 224, L. 14-16). The debtors were represented in their bankruptcy case by Jerome Brown, a board certified attorney in business and consumer bankruptcy law. (Trial Tr., Vol. 1, p. 221, L. 6-11, Vol. 3, p. 519, L. 12-15, Case Doc. No. 24). The debtors testified their bankruptcy counsel was competent and qualified to represent them. (Trial Tr., Vol. 1, p. 221, L. 12-25, p. 222, L. 1-20; Vol. 3 p. 519, L. 5-19). At the time they commenced their bankruptcy case the debtors filed signed sworn bankruptcy schedules and financial statements, containing a declaration the signatures were under penalty of perjury. During the case, the debtors signed and filed amended schedules six (6) times and amended statements of financial affairs two (2) times (each containing a declaration under penalty of perjury) (collectively "Schedules" Case Doc. Nos. 20, 27, 30, 49, 93, 143, 195; and collectively "Statements of Financial Affairs" Case Doc. Nos. 19, 29, 94; Pl.'s Ex. 3-12, 3A-12A). The debtors appeared on November 15, 2004 and December 1, 2004 for creditor meetings (as adjourned) in the Chapter 11 case. The debtors testified under penalty of perjury at the creditor meetings they read the Schedules and Statements of Financial Affairs before they signed them; and they testified that, subject to minor corrections stated by their counsel, the Schedules and Statements of Financial Affairs were true and correct. (Trial Tr., Vol. 1, p. 246, L. 19 – 25, p. 247 L. 1-3; Vol. 3, p. 522, L. 4-25, Defs.' Ex. 3, p. 12-14). The debtors also testified they understood all their assets and property were to be disclosed in the Schedules and Statements of Financial Affairs. (Trial Tr., Vol. 1, p. 249, L. 10-15, Vol. 3 p. 522 L. 4-7, Defs.' Ex. 3, p. 14). As licensed attorneys the debtors knew the meaning of signing documents under penalty of perjury. (Trial Tr., Vol. 1, p. 248, L.25, p. 249, L. 1-3, Vol. 3, p. 523, L. 13-19).

II. The United States Trustee's Role in Bankruptcy Cases

United States Trustees are officials of the Department of Justice appointed by the Attorney General, charged with appointing private trustees in bankruptcy cases and supervising the administration of bankruptcy cases. 28 U.S.C. §581. See generally 28 U.S.C. §586 (specifying some of the powers and duties of the United States Trustee). See also In re Castillo, 297 F. 3d 940, 950 (9th Cir. 2002)("The United States Trustee is the 'watchdog' of the bankruptcy system . . . charged with preventing fraud and abuse and 'fill[ing] the vacuum' caused by possible creditor inactivity.")[6] United States Trustees "supervise the administration of cases and trustees" in all bankruptcy cases within their region through a range of oversight responsibilities. 28 U.S.C. §586(a) (3). See generally Morganstern v. Revco D.S. Inc., (In re Revco D.S., Inc.), 898 F. 2d 498, 500 (6th Cir. 1990)(explaining United States Trustees oversee the bankruptcy process, protect the public interest, and ensure that bankruptcy cases are conducted according to law). The United States Trustee may raise and may appear and be heard on any issue in any case or proceeding under the Bankruptcy Code. 11 U.S.C. §307; see also Revco, 898 F. 2d at 499-500 (affirming the appellate standing of United States Trustees).

III. The Debtors' Compliance with the Debtor in Possession Guidelines

These debtors received the United State's Trustee's written Debtor-in-Possession Guidelines, which govern the conduct of Chapter 11 cases, and reviewed them with their counsel before their creditor meeting. (Trial Tr., Vol. 1, p. 251, L. 4-6, p. 255, L. 5-9, Vol. 3, p. 531-532, Pl.'s Ex. 13). Both debtors signed statements certifying they understood and would comply with the DIP Guidelines, advising them to close all pre-petition bank accounts and open new DIP bank accounts. (Trial Tr., Vol. 3, p. 532, L. 18-23, Pl.'s Ex. 13). The debtors also signed a sworn statement given to the United States Trustee that they had closed all their pre-petition bank accounts. (Trial Tr., Vol. 1, p. 255, L. 20-24, Vol. 3, p. 533, L. 3-9, Pl.'s Ex. 14). However, the statement the debtors gave to the United States Trustee in early November 2004 about their bank accounts was false because the debtors had another undisclosed pre-petition bank account they did not close and continued to use. (Trial Tr., Vol. 1, p. 257, L. 12-15, Vol. 3 p. 532 L. 24-25, p. 533 L. 1-13).

[6] See also In re Donovan Corp., 215 F. 3d 929, 930 (9th Cir. 2000)(United States Trustee may intervene and appear at any level of the proceedings, from the bankruptcy court on, as a party or an amicus).

IV. Debtors' Omissions, Concealment, Failure to Disclose on Their Schedules and the Statements of Financial Affairs; and Their Failure to Maintain Records

The United States Trustee filed the Complaint seeking denial of the debtors' discharge under 11 U.S.C. §§727(a)(2), (a)(3) and (a)(4) after reviewing the debtors' conduct in their bankruptcy case and after questioning the debtors at their creditor meetings. The Complaint included fourteen (14) fact specific Counts[7] for the denial of the debtors' discharge pursuant to 11 U.S.C. §§727(a) (2) (A) and (B), 727(a) (3), and 727(a) (4). (Adv. Doc. No. 1). The denial of a debtor's discharge means the debtor remains liable for their debts after their bankruptcy case terminates. The debtors in their Amended Answer (Adv. Doc. No. 151) admitted they made omissions on the Schedules and Statements of Financial Affairs; and argued they lacked fraudulent intent or that the omissions were not material. The debtors also admitted to other omissions on their sworn Schedules and Statements of Financial Affairs not addressed in the Complaint including the: 1) sale of certain items of furniture; 2) ownership of stock in Simtrol Corp.; 3) existence of a co-debtor; 4) existence of a sanctions motion (relating to Hearst Corp.); 5) an additional signatory on a safe deposit box; 6) source of the filing fee; 7) a stamp collection; and 8) a $1,400 credit card rebate. (Adv. Doc. No. 151, pp. 14-15, Trial Tr., Vol. 3 p. 712, L. 14-23).

A. Ezekiel I and Roberts Foundation For Children

On the Statement of Financial Affairs the debtors failed to disclose their interests in and roles as general partners and directors of two entities, Ezekiel I and Roberts Foundation for Children ("RFC"). Question 18 of the Statement of Financial Affairs[8], signed by the debtors under oath,

[7] The Statement of Facts will only address the Counts of the Complaint on which the bankruptcy court found for the United States Trustee.

[8] Question No. 18 on the Statement of Financial Affairs asked the debtors to list "the names, addresses, taxpayer identification numbers, nature of the businesses, and beginning and ending dates of all businesses in which the debtor was an officer, director, partner, or managing executive of a corporation, partnership, sole proprietorship or was a self employed individual within the six years immediately preceding the commencement of the case, or in which the debtor owned 5 percent or more of the voting or equity securities within the six years immediately asks the debtors to disclose information concerning businesses in which they were involved during the six years prior to the bankruptcy filing. During the six years prior to the bankruptcy filing, the debtors were partners in the Texas general partnership, Ezekiel I. Ted Roberts was a general partner of Ezekiel I through at least 2002, and the managing general partner of Ezekiel I though 2003. (Trial Tr., Vol. 2, p. 344, L. 10-18). Mary Roberts was a general partner in Ezekiel I at least through 2002. (Trial Tr., Vol. 2, p. 344, L. 16-18). On June 15, 2000, Ted Roberts executed an Assumed Name Certificate for Ezekiel I and filed the certificate with the Bexar County Clerk. (Trial Tr., Vol. 2, p. 344, L. 24-25, p. 345, L. 1-23, Pl.'s Ex. 47). Ezekiel I was never formally dissolved. (Trial Tr., Vol. 2, p. 357, L. 10-12). The debtors failed to disclose both their positions as general partners and their partnership interests in Ezekiel I in response to question 18 of their initial Statement of Financial Affairs. (Pl's Ex. 3).

The debtors were also directors of RFC within six years before the bankruptcy case. The RFC Articles of Incorporation filed with the Texas Secretary of State on December 28, 2001, named both debtors as directors. (Trial Tr., Vol. 2, p. 371, L. 17-24, Vol. 3, p. 575, L. 1-2, Pl.'s Ex. 62). Ted Roberts received monies as described in a criminal case. The State of Texas v. Ted H. Roberts, Case No. 2006-CR-6404B (District Court 226th District, Bexar County; (Pl.'s Ex. 82 Charge of Court and Jury Verdict). He deposited those funds, relating to the criminal case, into RFC bank and investment accounts sometime in 2002. (Trial Tr., Vol. 1 pp. 218-220, Vol. 2 pp. 423-429; Pl.'s Exs. 82, 64, 65). Ted H. Roberts, P.C. (the "P.C.") borrowed these funds, no less that $69,000, from RFC, for the P.C.'s overhead. (Trial Tr.,Vol. 2, p. 373, L. 17-20, p. 374, L. 8-12, Vol. 3, p. 578, L. 3-6, p. 579, L. 22-25; Pl.'s Exs. 66, 67). The P.C. never repaid RFC. (Trial Tr., Vol. 1 p.241, L. 12-15, Vol. 3, p. 578, L. 12-15, p. 579, L. 22-25 p. 580 L. 1-4) RFC's Articles of Dissolution, filed with the Texas Secretary of State on January 22, 2004, less than ten months before the debtors filed bankruptcy, were signed by Mary Roberts as Chairman of the Board of Directors. (Trial Tr., Vol. 3, p. 575, L. 18-25, p. 576, L. 1-3, Pl.'s Ex. 63). Despite their involvement in the RFC, the debtors failed to disclose both their positions as directors and their interests in RFC in response to question 18 of the Statement of Financial Affairs filed on November 8, 2004. (Pl's Ex. 3).

B. Lawyers' Title Deposit/Broadway Bank Account

The debtors failed to disclose a bank account they owned and used both before and after they filed the bankruptcy case. The debtors did not disclose this asset on their bankruptcy Schedules until required by court order to do so in January 2007. (Case Doc. No. 193, Pl.'s Ex. 12). Mary Roberts, on June 12, 2004, paid $1,000.00 to Lawyers' Title to hold as earnest money (the "Lawyers' Title Deposit"). (Trial Tr., Vol. 3, p. 538, L. 12-16, Pl.'s Ex. 21). The debtors failed to disclose the Lawyers' Title Deposit on their Schedules. (Pl.'s Ex. 4).

The Chapter 7 trustee could not fully determine the disposition of the Lawyers' Title Deposit until sometime after the Complaint was filed. The Chapter 7 trustee made repeated requests to the debtors in 2005 for additional supporting documentation concerning the disposition of the Lawyers' Title Deposit. (Trial Tr., Vol. 1, p. 94, L. 8-24, p. 99, L. 4-7). On May 25, 2006, the Chapter 7 trustee filed a motion to compel the debtors to provide the requested documentation concerning the Lawyers' Title Deposit. (Case Doc. No. 165, Trial Tr. Vol. 1, p. 96, L. 24-25, p. 97, L. 1-4). The Chapter 7 trustee also demanded the return of what he considered estate assets. (Trial Tr., Vol. 1, p. 96, L. 14-17, Pl.'s Ex. 20). The debtors and the Chapter 7 trustee entered in an agreed order on the motion to compel on August 14, 2006 (Case Doc. No. 178, Trial Tr., Vol. 1, p. 99, L. 11-14); and the debtors finally produced a copy of a $1,000 check from Lawyers' Title (the "Refund Check") payable to the debtors showing a refund of the Lawyers' Title Deposit on August 23, 2004. (Trial Tr., Vol. 1, p. 100, L. 1-8, Pl.'s Ex. 24).

Despite producing a copy of the Refund Check, the debtors failed to disclose into which financial account they deposited the Refund Check. The Chapter 7 trustee made additional inquiries to the debtors concerning the identity of the account into which the Refund Check was deposited. (Trial Tr., Vol. 1, p. 102, L. 1-5; Pl.'s Exs. 23, 24, 25). On November 2, 2006, over two years after the bankruptcy filing, the debtors, through their bankruptcy counsel, admitted to the Chapter 7 trustee that the Refund Check was deposited, in August 2004, into the Broadway Bank Account,[9] a bank account not disclosed on the Schedules and Statements of Financial Affairs. (Trial Tr., Vol. 1, p. 102, L. 14-23, Pl.'s Ex. 25). The debtors further stated that they would amend the Schedules to include the undisclosed Broadway Bank Account. (Pl.'s Ex. 25)

On December 15, 2006, the United States Trustee filed a motion to compel the debtors to disclose the Broadway Bank Account (Case Doc. No. 190); and on January 11, 2007, the bankruptcy court entered an order granting the United States Trustee's motion to compel. (Case Doc. No. 193). On January 15, 2007, the debtors filed their sixth amended Schedules finally disclosing the Broadway Bank Account. (Pl.'s Ex. 12).

C. Martinez Deposit

The debtors did not disclose an earnest money deposit of $5,000.00 or that their funds, used for the deposit, were later credited and thus transferred for the "benefit" of a relative. On or about August 3, 2004, the debtors and Ernest and Mary Ann Martinez executed an earnest money contract wherein the debtors agreed to lease, with a purchase option, 9514 Burwick, San Antonio, Texas (the "Burwick Property"). (Trial Tr., Vol. 3, p. 583, L. 10-16, Pl.'s Ex. 70). Mary Roberts, on August 3, 2004, paid $5,000.00 to the Martinez to hold as a deposit (the "Martinez Deposit") pursuant to the earnest money contract. (Trial Tr., Vol. 3, p. 584, L. 3-7, Pl.'s Ex. 22).

[9] Broadway Bank Account is Account No. 1393277 , a multiparty account with right of survivorship owned by Daniel F. Schorlemer, or Mary S. Roberts, or Ted Roberts (Pl.'s Ex. Nos. 12, 16, 30 through 38).

After the debtors filed bankruptcy, they filed Schedule G stating their intention to assume the earnest money contract. (Pl.'s Ex. 4, Trial Tr., Vol. 3, p. 586, L. 5-12). The debtors continued to make rent payments to the Martinez after the bankruptcy filing both from the Debtor in Possession account and the Broadway Bank Account. (Trial Tr., Vol. 3, p. 545-546, p. 552-553, p. 572-573, Pl.'s Ex. 31A, 32B, Defs.'Ex. D-1/D-5).

In May 2005, the debtors executed an Assignment assigning their rights in the earnest money contract and Martinez Deposit to Daniel and Caroline Schorlemer (the "Schorlemers"), Mary Roberts' parents. (Trial Tr., Vol. 3, p. 586, L. 15-22, p. 587, L. 13-20, Pl.'s Ex. 71). Also, the debtors, on May 12, 2005, corresponded with the Chapter 7 trustee to determine whether he opposed the Schorlemers' purchase of the Burwick Property. On May 13, 2005, the Chapter 7 trustee responded and clearly stated that bankruptcy estate was not relinquishing any rights in the Martinez Deposit. (Trial Tr., Vol. 1, p. 103, L. 19-25, p. 104, L. 1-2, Pl.'s Ex. 26). The debtors never returned the Martinez Deposit to the Chapter 7 trustee and never amended their Schedules and Statements of Financial Affairs to disclose the Martinez Deposit. (Trial Tr., Vol. 1, p. 96, L. 21-23, Pl.'s Exs. 4,5, 7, 8, 9, 9A, 11, 12,).

On or about June 1, 2005, the Schorlemers purchased the Burwick Property (Trial Tr., Vol. 3, p. 587, L. 21-24, Pl.'s Ex. 72) and received a credit for the undisclosed Martinez Deposit to fund their purchase despite the Chapter 7 trustee's claim to the deposit. (Trial Tr., Vol. 1, p. 109, L. 4-18, Pl.'s Exs. 23 and 27). The debtors, who reside at the Burwick Property, also effectively retained the benefit of the Martinez Deposit. (Trial Tr., Vol. 3, p. 546, L. 6-8).

D. ACIS, Inc. Stock

The debtors did not disclose stock they owned. The debtors owned the ACIS Stock, 4,500 shares in ACIS, a privately held company. The debtors valued the stock at $1,500 in July 2003 on their financial statement (the “Financial Statement”) (Pl.’s Ex. 39). When they filed their bankruptcy the debtors failed to disclose the stock on the Schedules, or as part of the contents of their safe deposit box on the Statement of Financial Affairs filed on November 8, 2004. (Pl.’s Exs. 3, 4). The debtors later admitted the ACIS Stock was in a safe deposit box at Compass Bank (Pl.’s Ex. 6); but they failed to examine the contents of the safe deposit box prior to filing the Schedules and Statement of Financial Affairs on November 8, 2004. (Trial Tr., Vol. 2, p. 394, L. 2-9, Vol. 3, p. 582, L. 10-25, p. 583, L. 1-4). Although the ACIS Stock was listed on their Financial Statement, the debtors testified they did not review the Financial Statement before preparing the Schedules and Statement of Financial Affairs filed November 8, 2004. (Trial Tr., Vol. 1, p. 225, L. 9-18, p. 228, L. 6-16,Vol. 2, p. 392 L. 10-20; Vol. 3, p. 580, L. 21-25, p. 581, L. 1-2, L. 10-21, Pl.’s Ex. 39). Ted Roberts testified he prepared the Financial Statement, which both debtors signed, and that he remembered the ACIS Stock in July 2003 without the need to review the contents of the safe deposit box. (Trial Tr., Vol. 2, p. 393 L. 4-9). The debtors amended the Statement of Financial Affairs and the Schedules in late November 2004, disclosing the ACIS Stock as part of the contents of their safe deposit box, and as personal property, valued at $100.00. (Pl.’s Exs. 5, 6 and 7).

E. Claim Against Ted H. Roberts, P.C.

The debtors did not disclose claims they owned against their P.C. The debtors owned a $35,625 claim (the “PC Claim”) against the P.C., which was wholly owned by the debtors, when they filed their bankruptcy. (Trial Tr., Vol. 2, p. 501, L. 1-20, Vol. 3, p. 596, L. 4-10, Pl.’s Ex. 8). But they failed to disclose the claim on the Schedules filed on November 8, 2004. (Trial Tr., Vol. 3, p. 597, L. 12-23, Pl.’s Ex. 4). Although the debtors listed they owed the P.C. $154,930.00 on Schedule F, this amount was a gross amount not including any set off or reduction for the PC Claim. (Trial Tr. Vol. 2, p. 503, L. 14-17, Pl.’s Ex. 4). They listed the value of the P.C. as unknown. (Pl.’s Ex. 4; Trial Tr., Vol. 2 pp. 399-400). The source of the monies for their PC Claim was advances made by the debtors mostly from their own credit cards. (Trial Tr., Vol. 2, p. 501, L. 21-25).

F. Debtors' Failure To Maintain Records

The debtors did not keep complete financial records relating to a deposit of their monies into the undisclosed Broadway Bank Account. The debtors admit in paragraphs 20 and 74 of their Amended Answer that they either failed to maintain or discarded the records concerning the disposition of the Lawyers' Title Deposit. (Adv. Doc. No. 151). The debtors admitted they did not keep the deposit records for the Refund Check. (Pl.'s Ex. 23). The Chapter 7 trustee did not get complete records from the debtors for the Broadway Bank Account; and the other bank records he got from the debtors were not complete. (Trial Tr., Vol. 1, p. 100, L. 14-21, p. 93, L. 13-18). (See Appellee's brief at, pp. 9-10 concerning the Chapter 7 trustee's efforts to obtain bank accounts and information concerning the Lawyers' Title Deposit). The debtors' admission of the Broadway Bank Account to the Chapter 7 trustee was after they responded to the United States Trustee's discovery requests when they first disclosed the account on November 1, 2006. The Chapter 7 trustee testified he did not receive all the records he was seeking regarding the Lawyers' Title monies when he filed his motion to compel turnover in May 2006. (Case Doc. 165, Trial Tr., Vol. 1pp. 181-182, L. 10-25, 1-4). Only on November 2, 2006, over two years after the bankruptcy filing, did the debtors produce to the Chapter 7 trustee an incomplete copy of an August-September 2004 Broadway Bank Account statement and say the statement showed the deposit of the Refund Check (Trial Tr., Vol. 1, p. 102, L. 14-23, Pl.'s Ex. 25). As customers and account holders the debtors could have obtained all the Broadway Bank documents for the account they were listed as owners of, according to the bank's representative. (Trial Tr., Vol. 1, p. 35 L. 1-4). Furthermore, the debtors had access to the Broadway Bank Account records not only from the bank, but from Mr. Schorlemer. (Trial Tr., Vol. 3, p. 543). Despite having access to account records for the Broadway Bank Account they were owners of, (Trial Tr., Vol. 1, p. 35, L. 1-4, Vol. 3, p. 543, L. 4-15), the debtors failed and refused to produce complete bank records for the account to the Chapter 7 trustee.[10] (Trial Tr., Vol. 1, p. 102, L. 24-25, p. 103, L. 1-3, Pl.'s Ex. 25).

V. Trial on the Complaint

After a three (3) day bench trial on April 3, 4, and 5, 2007, the bankruptcy court ruled in favor of the United States Trustee, holding that the debtors were not entitled to a bankruptcy discharge under ten separate counts, including three separate and independent legal grounds, in the Complaint. The court denied the discharge under 11 U.S.C. §727(a) (4) by granting judgment on Counts I, II, III, IV, V and VII of the Complaint. The court denied the discharge under 11 U.S.C. §727(a) (2) by granting judgment on Counts IX, X and XIV of the Complaint. And the court denied the discharge under 11 U.S.C. §727(a) (3) granting judgment on Count III A of the Complaint.[11] (Trial Ruling Tr. 5/4/07, p. 3, L. 7-11). The court found the debtors' failure to list the Broadway Bank Account, put into issue by the Lawyers' Title Deposit, Ezekiel I, Roberts Foundation for Children, the ACIS stock, the Martinez Deposit, and the claims against the P.C. were material omissions. The court found some of the debtors' omissions were not material: not listing their CPA and not disclosing a children's trust for which Ted Roberts, is trustee, and in his trustee capacity holds title to real property. (Trial Ruling Tr.5/4/07 pp. 3-4). The court found these false oaths and errors and omissions in the Schedules and Statements of Financial Affairs were "not corrected until the Debtors were prompted to do so". (Trial Ruling Tr. 5/4/07 p. 6-7). The court found the debtors' material false oaths, errors and omissions were "made with reckless indifference to their truth and accuracy." (Trial Ruling Tr. 5/4/07 p. 7). This appeal followed.

[10] Mary Roberts testified she did not know what happened to the Broadway Bank Account records. (Trial Tr. Vol. 3 p. 543 L. 16-19).

[11] The court denied relief on Counts VI, VIII, XI, XII and XIII.

VI. Pretrial Discovery Matters

The debtors appeal from various discovery rulings. To aid it in ruling on discovery matters, the court had two hearings on discovery disputes. The court properly denied some of the parties' discovery requests controlling discovery by the debtors and the United States Trustee and enforced its own Scheduling Order[12]. (Adv. Doc. Nos. 58, 65, 67, 129, 130, 131, 132, 133, 134, 135).

A. The Written Discovery

On September 8, 2006, the United States Trustee served written discovery requests on the debtors. On November 1, 2006, the debtors responded and objected to the discovery requests, and, subject the restrictions imposed by the bankruptcy court, (Adv. Doc. Nos. 58, 65 67), the debtors finally produced documents to the United States Trustee on December 31, 2006.

In response to the debtors' multiple discovery requests, the United States Trustee, on October 30 and November 30 of 2006, timely served his objections and responses. (Adv. Doc. No. 113, 114, 115, 116). The United States Trustee produced relevant non-privileged documents to the debtors on October 30, 2006 and November 30, 2006. (Tr. 1/24/07, p. 62, L. 1-3, Adv Doc. Nos. 115, 116). The United States Trustee, subject to his objections, also produced documents to the debtors which they requested; and among the many documents the United States Trustee produced were letters from Ms. Lemler-Clark to the United States Trustee, with enclosures, which enclosures were publicly available documents or research from public data. (Defs.' Record on Appeal Nos. 52 and 53, Defs' Exs. D-2/D-1 and D-2/D-2)[13]

[12] On August 16, 2006, the bankruptcy court entered a Scheduling Order in the Adversary setting an October 30, 2006 discovery deadline and a trial docket call on January 9, 2007. (Adv. Doc. No. 9). After a number of requests for continuances, the bankruptcy court, on November 16, 2006, entered orders extending the discovery deadline to January 31, 2007 and setting the trial on April 3, 2007[12]. (Adv. Doc. Nos. 55 and 56), [13] These documents were not admitted as evidence below and are incomplete copies of documents the United States Trustee produced. The Appellee objects to the Appellants including in the record on appeal documents they neither offered, nor did the court admit, as evidence at trial. The court should not consider these documents as part of the record on appeal for multiple reasons. Since the debtors raised no issues on appeal about the court's evidentiary rulings excluding their Exhibits, the issues are waived. GGM, P.C., v. Jenkins (In re GGM, P.C.), 165 F. 3d 1026, 1031-1032 (5th Cir. 1999); Martin v. Sanderson Farms, Inc., 222 Fed. Appx. 360,362 (5th Cir. 2007) ("If an issue is

B. The Debtors' Motions to Limit Discovery And The Motions to Compel

On October 16, 2006 and On October 17, 2006, the debtors asked the court to limit the United States Trustee's discovery. On November 9, 2007, the United States Trustee filed a motion to compel. The bankruptcy court held hearings on the various discovery disputes on November 15, 2006. On November 16, 17, 21 and December 1, 2006, the bankruptcy court entered orders limiting the scope and controlling the United States Trustee's discovery.[14] (Adv. Doc. Nos. 56, 58, 65, and 67). On December 31, 2006, the debtors produced records to the United States Trustee. On January 19, 2007, the debtors filed motions to compel, without requesting expedited hearings, concerning the United States Trustee's responses, made in October and November 2006, to the debtors' discovery requests to which the United States Trustee timely responded. (Adv. Doc. Nos. 86, 87, 89, 90, 113, 114, 115, 116).[15] On March 6, 2007, the bankruptcy court entered orders denying each of the debtors' motions to compel. (Adv. Doc. Nos. 129, 130, 131, 132, 134). The debtors appeal from these discovery orders.

not included in this statement, even if it was raised in and decided by the bankruptcy court, it is not preserved for appeal and is waived."); Id.; Trevino v. First National Bank, 2005 WL 1473966 (D. W.D. Tex. 2005); Fed. R. Bankr. P. 8006. The bankruptcy court specifically ruled the extraneous documents the debtors cite in their brief and include in the record on appeal were not relevant and excluded from evidence below. (Tr. 1/24/07 p. 34, L. 14-20). And, the debtors never offered or moved to admit Defs. Exs. D-2/D-1 through D-2/D-6, debtors' Amended Designation Nos. 52, 53, 54, 55 and 56 at trial. (Trial Tr. Vol 1 – 3; Adv. Doc. No. 191). Moreover, since these extraneous documents were both excluded evidence in hearings, and not offered by the debtors, or admitted at trial, the court should not consider the documents as evidence on appeal since they were not considered by the bankruptcy court. The extraneous documents are simply not proper grounds for attack of the bankruptcy judge's rulings.

[14] The United States Trustee complied with the court's discovery orders obtaining documents from the Chapter 7 trustee, and by subpoena to non-parties, Broadway Bank, the CPA and the real estate agent on the Burwick Property, instead of from the debtors.

[15] As part of his responses to the motions to compel, the United States Trustee supplemented his responses to interrogatories (Adv. Doc. Nos. 113, 114). On February 11, 2007, the debtors filed a motion to compel further responses to which the United States Trustee timely responded. (Adv. Doc. No. 122, 124).

C. The Debtors' Subpoenas and Resulting Motions to Quash And For Protective Orders

On December 13, and 15, 2006, the debtors delivered Notices of Deposition, and several Subpoenas, requesting the testimony of the Assistant U.S. Trustee, the Trial Attorneys of the United States Trustee (James W. Rose, Jr. and Kevin Epstein), and the United States Trustee's designated representative. (Adv. Doc. No. 69, attached Exs. 1,2,3,4,5,6). The debtors sought deposition testimony and production of documents from the Assistant U.S. Trustee and the Trial Attorneys, all employees of the United States Trustee, who have been acting as counsel to the United States Trustee in this action. (Id. Adv. No. 69). Also in December 2006, the debtors served Subpoenas seeking deposition testimony and documents on non-parties Rochel Lemler-Clark[16] and the Chapter 7 trustee. (Adv. Doc. Nos. 70,75, attached Exs. A, B). On December 20, 2006, the United States Trustee filed his motion for protective orders and to quash subpoenas. (Adv. Doc. No. 69). On January 2 and 5, 2007, Lemler-Clark and the Chapter 7 trustee filed motions to quash and for protective orders. (Adv. Doc. Nos. 70, 75). On January 24, 2007, the bankruptcy court held hearings on the motions to quash subpoenas and for protective orders. (Tr. 1/24/07, p. 1-2; Adv. Doc. Nos. 71, 78). At the hearings, the debtors stated to the bankruptcy court that the purpose of the discovery sought from Ms. Lemler-Clark and the Chapter 7 trustee related solely to the debtors' motion for sanctions, not the Complaint. (Tr. 1/24/07, p. 9, L. 6-17). The bankruptcy court held that the information sought from Ms. Lemler-Clark and the Chapter 7 trustee was not relevant to either the Complaint or the motion for sanctions and granted Ms. Lemler-Clark's and the Chapter 7 trustee's motions to quash and for protective orders.[17] (Tr. 1/24/07, p. 34, L. 14-20, p. 37, L. 18-25, P.

[16] The debtors assert, without any competent evidence, the United States Trustee acted at the behest and direction of Ms. Lemler-Clark. Ms. Lemler-Clark is not a creditor in the case, and receives no direct benefit by the denial of the debtors' discharge.

[17] On January 24, 2007, the bankruptcy court entered orders granting Lemler-Clark's and the Chapter 7 trustee's motions to quash subpoenas and for protective orders. (Adv. Doc. No. 99 and 100).

38, L. 1-9). The court reasoned a free flow of information was elemental for the bankruptcy system to function.[18]

The bankruptcy court granted in part and denied in part the United States Trustee's motion to quash and for protective orders and allowed the debtors to take a deposition of the United States Trustee's designated representative on eight (8) of the thirteen (13) matters the debtors designated (the "Protective Order"). (Tr. 1/24/07, p. 93, L. 10-24, Adv. Doc. No. 104). The bankruptcy court also denied the debtors' request for a privilege log from the United States Trustee. (Tr. 1/24/07, p. 99, L. 10-15). The United States Trustee did not agree to extend or waive the discovery cut off of January 31, 2007; and the court did not extend the discovery cut off during the hearings.[19] (Tr. 1/24/07, p. 119, L. 2-3).

The United States Trustee complied[20] with the Protective Order (Adv. Doc. No. 104) and provided the debtors with proposed dates to depose the United States Trustee's authorized representative. Rather than scheduling or taking the deposition of the United States Trustee's representative within the discovery cut off, Ted Roberts, on January 30, 2007, filed a motion to extend the discovery period to which the United States Trustee objected on February 1, 2007. (Adv. Doc. No. 119, 121). On January 30, 2007, Ted Roberts also filed a motion for an order denying his request for a privilege log. (Adv. Doc. No. 120). On March 6, 2007, the bankruptcy court entered orders denying the debtors' motions to extend the discovery period and for an order denying the privilege log (Adv. Doc. Nos. 135,133). The debtors appeal from these discovery orders.

[18] "If the flow of information is inhibited by going back and questioning and suing people for providing information to the trustee and the U.S. Trustee, then we are not going to get any more information about misconduct or alleged misconduct in bankruptcy cases." (Tr. 1/24/07 pp. 35-36).

[19] Rather, the bankruptcy court advised the parties the court would rule on pending discovery motions without further hearings; and the court would consider requests, if any, by the debtors to extend the deadlines, if they did not complete the deposition of the United State's Trustee's designated representative by January 31, 2007. (Tr. 1/24/07, p. 118 L. 2-24, p. 121 L. 8-20), [20] After obtaining a copy of the Protective Order, the United States Trustee, at 11:47 a.m. on January 26, 2007, sent a letter, via facsimile, to the debtors stating that the United States Trustee's designated representative was available for a deposition on January 29, 30, or 31, 2007. (Adv. Doc. No. 121, p. 4, Para. 13).

VII. Debtors' Motions For Sanctions

A. Initial And Reissued Motions For Sanctions

On September 29, 2006, the debtors filed a motion for sanctions claiming among other things that the United State's Trustee's §727 Complaint was frivolous and filed for an improper purpose in violation of Fed. R. Bank. P. 9011. (Adv. Doc. No. 11).[21] On October 6, 2006, the United States Trustee filed a motion to strike the debtor's procedurally defective motion for sanctions and a response. (Adv. Doc. Nos. 12, 13). The court set the motion for sanctions for a hearing on November 15, 2006 (Adv. Doc. Nos. 18, 25) along with hearings on various discovery motions. On October 18, 2006, the debtors withdrew the motion for sanctions saying they were "profoundly committed to the development and presentation of their motion For sanctions." (Adv. Doc. Nos. 23, p., 2, Para. 5, 27). On October 23, 2006, the bankruptcy court entered an order dismissing the motion for sanctions as withdrawn. (Adv. Doc. No. 32).

During the November 15, 2006 hearings on discovery matters the debtors argued the substance of their withdrawn motion for sanctions.

On January 4, 2007, the debtors, pursuant to Fed. R. Bankr. P. 9011, filed their reissued motion for sanctions, a pleading identical to the withdrawn motion except for the filing date. (Adv. Doc. No. 72) On January 19, 2007, the United States Trustee filed his response denying the allegations in the reissued motion for sanctions. (Adv. Doc. No. 83). The court set the hearing on the reissued motion for sanctions on January 24, 2007. The debtors asked to continue the hearing. The United States Trustee opposed a continuance of the January 24, 2007 hearing on the debtors' motion for sanctions, suggesting the sanctions motion should not be heard at the same time as the trial on his Complaint. (Tr. 1/24/07 pp. 102-108). The court continued the hearing to April 3, 2007, [21] The debtors stated in the motion that "[b]ased upon investigation by Movants and others, the Complaint was prepared, presented, and filed for an improper purpose." (Adv. Doc. No. 11, p. 2, Para. 9).

at the debtors' request. (Adv. Doc. No. 74, Tr. 1/24/07, p. 116, L. 15-25).

B. First Amended Motion For Sanctions

On February 21, 2007, the debtors filed their first amended motion for sanctions pursuant to Fed. R. Bankr. P. 9011 (the "amended motion for sanctions"). (Adv. Doc. No. 123). The debtors alleged, again, the Complaint was unsupported, without evidentiary or legal support, the United States Trustee did not conduct a reasonable inquiry before filing the Complaint, and the Complaint was filed for an "improper purpose". (Adv. Doc. No. 123). The debtors identify their alleged improper purpose as shown by a "lengthy history of animosity" by Ms. Lemler-Clark and Bankruptcy Judge Clark toward the debtors, and a "vendetta". (Adv. Doc. No. 123). On February 28, 2007, the United States Trustee filed his response denying the allegations in the amended motion for sanctions. (Adv. Doc. No. 125).

C. Motion to Sever and Denial of Amended Motion For Sanctions

On March 21, 2007, the United States Trustee filed a motion to sever for trial the amended motion for sanctions asking the court to try the issues on the Complaint prior to considering the amended motion for sanctions. (Adv. Doc. No. 150). The United States Trustee asked the court to consider the evidence at trial of the Complaint in connection with the amended motion for sanctions. However, the United States Trustee alleged if he prevailed at trial on his Complaint there might be no need to litigate the amended motion for sanctions. (Adv. Doc. No. 150, p. 4). The debtors agreed with the motion to sever, as they said at trial.

The trial on the Complaint took place April 3 through April 5, 2007. During trial the court did not enter any orders either granting or denying the motion to sever. Both the Appellants and the Appellee rested on evidence presented and made closing arguments. (Trial Tr., Vol. 3, pp. 651, L. 1-8; p. 656, L. 6-21). At the end of the trial, the court continued the trial for a ruling on April 26, 2007, (Trial Tr., Vol. 3, p. 721, L. 14-17) and subsequently to May 4, 2007 (Adv. Doc. 170). Also, the court continued the amended motion for sanctions stating that the motion may or may not go forward after the ruling on the Complaint. (Trial Tr., Vol. 3, p. 724, L. 22-25, p. 725).

On May 4, 2007, the court entered a judgment denying the debtors' discharge, an order dismissing the motion to sever as moot, and an order denying the amended motion for sanctions. (Adv. Doc. Nos. 176, 178, 179).The debtors also appeal from these orders.

SUMMARY OF ARGUMENT

The bankruptcy court's judgment denying these debtors a discharge merits affirmance under 11 U.S.C. §§ 727(a)(4), (a)(2)(A) and (B) and (a)(3). The court denied the discharge on ten separate and independent grounds. Unless this court concludes all of these rulings were erroneous, this court may affirm the judgment below on any of them. The court below had ample and sufficient evidence to support its findings. Although this brief is necessarily long because the Appellants appeal from sixteen orders, the issues are simple: did the court below commit clear error in denying the debtors a bankruptcy discharge? It did not.

Nor did the court err in determining the debtors were not entitled to sanctions against the United States Trustee. The court held two hearings, before trial and even during trial in which the debtors argued for sanctions, namely denial of the Complaint and as a sanction against the United States Trustee an award of money damages of $50,000 for the debtors' attorneys' fees in defending the Complaint. The court properly denied the debtors' requested sanctions based upon the debtors' own pleadings, arguments and their testimony during the case. The United States Trustee's positions were based upon the facts; and the court's ruling in support of the United States Trustee on the Complaint seeking to deny a discharge demonstrates the Complaint was not brought for an improper purpose.

Finally, the court did not err in denying the debtors' attempted discovery from the United States Trustee after the court ordered discovery cut-off. The bankruptcy court did not abuse its discretion in the other rulings in multiple procedural and discovery orders. The bankruptcy court properly applied the correct legal standards.

ARGUMENT

I. The Bankruptcy Court Did not Abuse its Discretion in Denying Discharge Under 11 U.S.C. §727

A. The Bankruptcy Court Did not Abuse its Discretion Under §727(a)(4)

The bankruptcy court properly denied the debtors a discharge under 11 U.S.C. §727(a)(4). In doing so, it weighed the evidence and the credibility of the witnesses[22] concluding the debtors had made multiple material[23] misstatements and false oaths in their Schedules and Statements of Financial Affairs. Section 727(a) (4) (A) provides that a debtor's discharge shall be denied if the debtor "knowingly and fraudulently, in or in connection with the case ... made a false oath or account." The United States Trustee proved by a preponderance of the evidence that (1) the debtors made statements under oath, (2) the statements were false, (3) the debtors knew that the statements were false, (4) the debtors made the statements with fraudulent intent, and (5) the statements related materially to the bankruptcy case. Beaubouef v. Beaubouef (In re Beaubouef),

Ted Roberts testified during the trial on the §727 Complaint he caused the monies related to the guilty counts in Pl.'s Ex. 82, the Verdict and Charge of the Court, to be placed in RFC accounts. (Trial Tr. Vol. 1, pp. 219-220, L. 15-25, L.1; Vol. 2, pp. 426).

[23] The Fifth Circuit has held: "[t]he subject matter of a false oath is material, and thus sufficient to bar discharge, if it bears a relationship to the bankrupt's business transactions or estate, or concerns the discovery of assets, business dealings, or the existence of disposition of his property." In re Beaubouef, 966 F.2d at 178-79 (holding that the debtor's failure to disclose a company was material even though the company no longer did business and had no assets).

966 F.2d 174, 178 (5th Cir. 1992). The court below found the debtors' multiple material false oaths, errors and omissions in the debtors' Schedules and Statements of Financial Affairs were sufficient to deny their discharge. Moreover, the court found although the debtors, after prompting, eventually disclosed most, but not all of the assets and interests they made unilateral decisions not to disclose certain assets and interests establishing their intent or reckless indifference. (Trial Ruling Tr. 5/4/07, pp. 5-7).

The court also found the debtors' material false oaths on the Schedules and Statements of Financial Affairs were their: (a) failure to disclose that the debtors were general partners of and owned interests in Ezekiel I through 2002 or 2003 (Count I of the Complaint) and that the debtors were owners, stockholders, directors or officers of the RFC (Count II of the Complaint) on the Statement of Financial Affairs filed on November 8, 2004; (b) failure to disclose the Broadway Bank Account into which the $1,000 Refund Check, property of the debtors, was deposited (Count III of the Complaint); (c) failure to disclose the Martinez Deposit on the Schedules (Count IV of the Complaint); (d) failure to disclose the ACIS, Inc. stock on the Schedules and the Statement of Financial Affairs filed on November 8, 2004 (Count V of the Complaint); and (e) failure to disclose the claim against Ted H. Roberts, P.C. on the Schedules filed on November 8, 2004 (Count VII of the Complaint). (Trial Ruling Tr. 5/4/2007 p.3). The court was not clearly erroneous. Finally, the court considered and implicitly found the debtors' explanations of their errors and omissions and argument they lacked fraudulent intent were not sufficiently credible. (Trial Ruling Tr. 5/4/07, p. 7).

The court granted judgment under 11 U.S.C. §§727(a)(4) finding the debtors acted with reckless indifference to the truth and accuracy of their Schedules and Statements of Financial Affairs and thus made false oaths. (Trial Ruling Tr. 5/4/07 p. 7). The debtors argue on appeal the court failed to specifically find "knowing false oaths" were made under §727(a)(4). (Appellants' brief, p. 13).

The debtors fail to appreciate that the court's express "reckless indifference" finding fully satisfied section 727(a)(4)'s intent requirement as the Fifth Circuit and other courts have held. In Beaubouef the Fifth Circuit expressly held that a finding of reckless indifference is "the requisite intent to deceive." 966 F.2d at 178; Accord, Sholdra v. Chilmark Financial LLP (In re Sholdra), 249 F. 3d 380, 383 (5th Cir. 2001) cert. den. 534 U.S. 1042 (2001)("cumulative effect of all the falsehoods together evidences a pattern of reckless and cavalier disregard for the truth [to support] fraudulent intent [citations omitted]"); In re Dupre, 145 Fed. Appx. 855, 856 (5th Cir. 2005).

Thus, under Fifth Circuit law the lower court's reckless indifference finding satisfied the requirements of §727(a) (4). See also, In re Dupre, 145 Fed. Appx. at 856; The Cadle Company v. Mitchell (In re Mitchell), 102 Fed. Appx. 860, 862 (5th Cir. 2004) ("Fraudulent intent may be proved by showing either actual intent to deceive or a reckless indifference to the truth."). Courts in other circuits also expressly hold reckless indifference is the equivalent of fraud. Boroff v. Tully, 818 F.2d 106, 112 (1st Cir. 1987); In re Kaiser, 722 F. 2d 1574, 1584 fn. 4 (1st Cir. 1983) "See In re Diorio, 407 F. 2d 1330, 1331 (2d Cir.1969) (per curiam) ("reckless indifference to the truth . . . is the equivalent of fraud.")[citation omitted]; In re Chavin, 150 F.3d 726, 728 (7th Cir. 1998)(Reckless disregard is, for the purposes of the provisions of the Bankruptcy Code governing discharge, the equivalent of knowing that the representation is false and material.) [citations omitted]. "An intent to deceive may be inferred from reckless disregard for the truth or falsity of a statement combined with the sheer magnitude of the resultant misrepresentation." In re Acosta, 406 F.3d 367, 372 (5th Cir. 2005)(§523(a)(2)(A) dischargeability standard for false representation or actual fraud).

The court did not commit clear error in finding that the debtors' unilateral decisions[24] about what they did not need to disclose were not the full complete and honest upfront disclosure required in the bankruptcy system. Since a bankruptcy discharge is a privilege and not a right, only debtors who play by the rules and make "a good faith effort in producing an entire picture of their financial affairs" are entitled to a bankruptcy discharge. In re Hobbs, 333 B.R 751, 755 (Bankr. N. D. Tex. 2005)[citations omitted]; Grogan v. Garner, 498 U.S. 279, 286 (1991). Each of the debtors' omissions and non-disclosures was integral to understanding their financial picture.

Nor did the court commit clear error by relying upon the evidence (See Appelle's brief at pp. 6-14) in finding the debtors did not deserve a discharge under §727(a)(4). When the debtor amends bankruptcy schedules after errors and omissions are brought to light but fails to clear up all inconsistencies and omissions at the first chance, or there is more than one false oath, this evidences intent, particularly when the errors and omissions would be obvious to the debtors from a careful review of their schedules. Beaubouef, 966 F. 2d at 178; In re Sholdra, 249 F.3d at 382-83 (debtors' false oaths in schedules are not excused merely by amendment); In re Acosta, 406 F. 3d at 372; In re Dreyer, 127 B.R. 587, 593-94 (Bankr. N.D. Tex. 1991); Buckeye Investment Col, v. Bullough, (In re Bullough), 358 B.R. 261, 281,282, (Bankr. N.D. Tex. 2007). The paramount duties of the debtors to fully disclose all relevant information without being asked, compelled or confronted defeats typical explanations that the undisclosed property was of no value or the debtor believed the information was not necessary.

Contrary to the debtors' suggestion that at any point the Chapter 7 trustee or the United States Trustee could ask the court to compel the debtors to amend their Schedules every time a party believed it was necessary, the bankruptcy process is not designed as a debate or a "laborious tug-of-war to drag the simple truth into the glare of daylight." Boroff v. Tully, 818 F.2d at 110. "Full disclosure of assets and liabilities in the schedules [under federal law] required to be filed by one seeking relief under Chapter 7 is essential, because the schedules 'serve the important purpose of insuring that adequate information is available for the Trustee and creditors without need for investigation to determine whether the information provided is true.'" In re Beaubouef, 966 F.2d at 178-179 [citations omitted]; In re Sholdra, 249 F.3d at 383 (negative inference raised by debtor's failure to amend until after errors and omissions are brought to his attention); In re Gartner, 326 B.R. 357, 373 (Bankr. S.D. Tex. 2005).

The court in In re Dreyer, confronted a debtor's assertion in a §727 complaint that a Chapter 7 trustee can file a motion and obtain a court order (Trial Tr., Vol. 1 p. 140, L. 9-15) to make the debtors amend the schedules, and prove the Chapter 7 trustee is correct something must be disclosed in bankruptcy schedules when a debtor disagrees or has a difference of opinion. That court explained: "[t]he bankruptcy system relies on a debtor to deal honestly with his creditors by making full, complete and honest disclosure in his statements and schedules [citations omitted]. Instead, Mr. Dreyer took a course of action designed to furnish only the information he wished to furnish. Other matters were revealed only when he got caught. The bankruptcy court cannot tolerate such an approach." In re Dreyer, 127 B.R. at 593.

The debtors highlight in their brief that no creditor asked them to amend the Schedules or Statements of Financial Affairs. (Appellants' brief p. 15). However, both the Chapter 7 trustee and the United States Trustee did move to compel the debtors to amend their Schedules; and the Chapter 7 trustee moved to compel them to turn over the Lawyers' Title Deposit, the Martinez

Deposit and records showing "where the money is now" relating to the Lawyers' Title Deposit. (Trial Tr., Vol. 1 p. 142 L. 7-25; Case Doc. Nos. 165,190) Moreover, the debtors' disclosed Ezekiel I and RFC after being asked at the creditor meeting, information not among their voluntary amendments on November 8, 2004. (Trial Tr., Vol. 2, p. 357, L. 19-24, p. 365, L. 16-25, p. 366, L. 1-21). The debtors disclosed the ACIS stock after the United States Trustee asked them to provide full details about the contents of their Compass Bank safe deposit box. (Defs' Ex. 3 pp. 120-121). The debtors disclosed the PC Claims after being asked about them. (Defs' Ex. 4, p. 23-24)

Also, the court properly weighed the debtors' defenses of their errors and omissions, and reasons for the multiple amendments to the Schedules and Statements of Financial Affairs and found them not credible. (Trial Ruling Tr. 5/4/2007 pp. 5-7). Not only did the court conclude the debtors did not provide full complete and honest disclosure, the court discounted their explanations, considering their obvious level of education, sophistication and that they were assisted by board certified counsel. (Trial Ruling Tr. 5/4/2007 pp. 5-6). For example, the Chapter 7 trustee testified on cross examination that someone with a higher education was held to a "higher standard of care" under the "sophisticated debtor line of cases."[25] (Trial Tr. Vol. 1 p. 150 L. 1-11).

Thus, the bankruptcy court, applying the case law, did not commit clear error finding creditors were entitled to have complete and truthful information from the debtors in the first instance in order to make decisions. (Trial Ruling Tr. 5/4/07, pp. 5-7). Nor did the court commit clear error inferring fraudulent intent from the evidence showing the debtors' Schedules and Statements of Financial Affairs were false in multiple material areas. Omissions of information in schedules or the statement of financial affairs are affirmative oaths the undisclosed information does not exist, and therefore may be false oaths. In re Gartner, 326 B.R. at 367. The court properly applied the legal standards when analyzing the facts and evidence relying on what is commonly termed in the case law as “reckless indifference”. The finding of reckless indifference is sufficient to support the judgment and the court should be affirmed. Contrary to well established Fifth Circuit authority, the debtors ask the court to reverse and render the judgment and grant them a discharge. (Appellants’ brief, pp. 8, 15, 48).

1. Ezekiel I and Roberts Foundation for Children

The court did not commit clear error finding the debtors made false oaths omitting their positions and interests in these two businesses. The court weighed the debtors’ explanations of their omission of these assets: because the entities were not businesses in the debtors’ opinion, the use of an outdated worksheet, that the debtors did not read the question, only the answer to Statement of Financial Affairs, (Trial Tr. Vol. 2, p. 438 L. 17-25; p. 439 L. 1-4, Vol. 3, p.525, L. 3-14) and that they amended the Statement of Financial Affairs after being asked at the creditor meeting. (Trial Tr., Vol. 2, p. 357, L. 19-24, p. 365, L. 16-25, p. 366, L. 1-21). The debtors’ admitted they did not disclose these entities. (Trial Tr. Vol. 2, pp. 358-359, pp. 361-362, p. 462; Vol. 3 p.528 L. 13-25, p. 615). The debtors’ counsel agreed Ezekiel I should have been disclosed. (Trial Tr., Vol. 2, pp. 358-359; p. 499, L. 2-6; Defs. Ex. 3 p.71-72). The Chapter 7 trustee testified while Ezekiel I in his view was a business, “at first blush” he could see why someone would leave [RFC] out. (Trial Tr., Vol. 1, p. 146 L.22-25, p. 147, L. 1-10). The Chapter 7 trustee also testified that ultimate determinations about what is correct or wrong in bankruptcy schedules are made by the court. (Trial Tr., Vol. 1, p.182, L. 12-24). The evidence showed Ezekiel I was never formally dissolved and therefore remained in existence both within six years prior to October 13, 2004 and within two years prior to the date of filing. (Trial Tr., Vol. 2, p. 357, L. 10-12, Vol. 3 p. 614, L. 19-25, p. 615 L. 1-14 [Ezekiel I “still exists today.”]). The testimony of the debtors at trial showed Ezekiel I was the focus of litigation they were involved in during 2001 and 2002. (Trial Tr., Vol. 2, pp. 411-416). Ted Roberts, as managing partner pledged Ezekiel's collateral for loans from Compass Bank for the benefit of the debtors' P.C. (Pl.'s Ex. 48). Ezekiel I and RFC had financial and/or legal activity controlled and directed by the debtors during the two year period prior to bankruptcy. RFC remained in existence until its formal dissolution on January 22, 2004 when the Articles of Dissolution signed by Mary Roberts, as the Chairman of the Board of Directors, were filed. Mary Roberts later filed corporate tax information documents for RFC in April 2004. (Pl.'s Ex. 63). Money in RFC financial accounts from 2002 had in part, as its source, actions of Ted Roberts, described in the State of Texas v. Roberts, resulting in his criminal conviction (Trial Tr., Vol. 1, pp. 218-220; Vol. 2 pp. 423-429; Pl.'s Ex. 82). Some of the same monies from RFC were lent to the P.C. and never repaid. (Trial Tr. Vol 1 p. 241 L. 12-15, Vol. 2, p. 373 L. 17-20, p. 374 L. 8-12; Vol. 3, p. 578 L. 3-6, p. 579, L. 22-25). The Statement of Financial Affairs the debtors actually signed under the penalty of perjury (as opposed to the outdated worksheet they claimed to rely upon) and filed on November 8, 2004 clearly stated on question 18 that the debtors were providing information for the period beginning six years prior to October 13, 2004, during which Ezekiel I and RFC were in existence. Given that, the debtors' response to question 18 was clearly false.

The court properly applied the law to the debtors' defenses that Ezekiel I and RFC were not businesses. The Fifth Circuit has rejected similar explanations of non-disclosure in response to question 18 of the Statement of Financial Affairs holding: "[s]uch a straightforward question obviously calls for a direct answer..." In re Beaubouef, 966 F.2d at 179; see also In re Dreyer, 127 B.R. at 593-94 (debtors have a duty to read each question and answer and respond fully and completely). The court properly applied the law. The debtors' defenses that Ezekiel I and RFC were not both businesses, using their understanding of a business have failed in the Fifth Circuit.

Beaubouef, Id. at 178-179 (entity "did no business" failed or the company was worthless).

The court also properly weighed the debtors' defenses concluding they did not effectively mitigate the debtors' own non-disclosure even though Ezekiel I and RFC were later disclosed in an amended Statement of Financial Affairs. (Trial Ruling Tr. 5/4/2007 pp. 5-7). The court here appropriately analyzed the debtors' defense of lack of fraudulent intent shown by their amendments to the Statements of Financial Affairs to include Ezekiel I and RFC after the United States Trustee asked about Ezekiel I and RFC at the November 15, 2004 creditors' meeting and asked the debtors to amend their Schedules and Statements of Financial Affairs. Under applicable Fifth Circuit law, the debtors' amendments to their Schedules only after being questioned at a creditors' meeting creates a negative implication from which the court can infer fraudulent intent. Sholdra, 249 F.3d at 382-83; In re Gartner, 326 B.R. at 373-374. Given that, the court did not abuse its discretion in denying the debtors' discharge 11 U.S.C. §727(a) (4).

2. Lawyers' Title Deposit/Broadway Bank Account

Independent of that, the court also did not commit clear error by finding the debtors made a false oath through their omission of the Lawyers' Title Deposit and Refund Check which they deposited into the Broadway Bank Account. (Ruling Tr. 5/4/2007 p. 3). The evidence showed the debtors were owners of the Broadway Bank Account on the date they filed their bankruptcy. The debtors signed the signature card with Broadway Bank along with Mary Roberts' father, Mr. Schorlemer, although they both testified they did not recall signing, or signing as owners, but did not dispute they did so. The court implicitly found the debtors' claims that they did not recall or know they were "owners" of the Broadway Bank Account, and could not recall being signatories on the account or they "didn't think of it" when they completed their Schedules were less than credible when weighed against their ongoing use of the Broadway Bank Account before the bankruptcy filing and after, through March 2005. (Trial Tr., Vol. 2, p. 335 L. 12-22, Vol. 3, pp. 540-543, 627-628; Pl.'s Exs. 30-38). The evidence showed the debtors exercised continuing ownership and control over the Broadway Bank Account. (Pl.'s Exs. 30-38). The debtors used the Broadway Bank Account before and after the bankruptcy case filing on October 13, 2004. The debtors used the Broadway Bank Account during the Chapter 11 to pay the same types of personal expenses they used their Debtor in Possession bank account for. (Def's Ex. D-1/D-5; Pl.'s Exs. 30-38) The evidence also showed not only the Refund Check was deposited by the debtors into the account, other property belonging to the debtors was deposited, the $1,800 proceeds from the sale of the pool table and possibly proceeds from sale of other furniture and deposit of other funds of the debtors. (Trial Tr., Vol. 2, p. 494 L. 1-19, pp. 495-496; Vol. 3 p. 549, L. 10-12).

The Chapter 7 trustee testified the Broadway Bank account was property of the bankruptcy estate. (Trial Tr., Vol. 1, p. 180, L. 21-25; p. 181). Ted Roberts testified the Broadway Bank account was property of the debtors on October 13, 2004. (Trial Tr. Vol. 2, p. 336, L. 11-21). Although the debtors appeared to claim they lacked access to the Broadway Bank account records, the bank's representative testified as customers and account holders the debtors could obtain the records for the Broadway Bank account. (Trial Tr. Vol. 1, p. 35, L. 1-4). The court properly discounted the debtors' assertions they lacked access to information about the Broadway Bank Account because the bank statements were mailed to Mr. Schorlemer, not to the debtors, considering the debtors' use of the bank account, and Mary Roberts' own testimony that she would "ask Daddy is there money in the account to cover it" if she was uncertain about funds in the bank account when she was writing checks. (Trial Tr. Vol. 1, p. 137, L. 11-16; Vol. 3 p. 542, L. 13-25, p. 543, L. 1-3). Moreover, Mary Roberts testified she had access to the Broadway Bank Account records at her parents' home, the same Milldale address where the Broadway Bank statements were sent, where she had "most of her stuff" and took most of her meals during some portion of 2004. (Trial Tr., Vol. 3, p. 543, L. 1-15).

The Chapter 7 trustee testified he asked for and did not receive all the original bank account records from the debtors. (Trial Tr., Vol. 1, p. 93, L. 13-18). The Chapter 7 trustee further testified he did not receive complete records from the debtors regarding the Broadway Bank Account. (Trial Tr., Vol. 1, p. 100, L. 14-21). Only when compelled by court order, and in the course of discovery on the Complaint, the debtors' disclosed the Broadway Bank Account in November 2006, and on their Schedules in January 2007.

The evidence also showed the Broadway Bank Account with a balance of $3,962.46 on October 15, 2004, $4,048.00 on the date the case was filed, and $3,325.80 on the Schedules, was the largest dollar balance for financial accounts the debtors' listed on their Schedule B of personal property. (Trial Tr., Vol. 1, p.263, L. 18-23; Pl.'s Exs. 4, 12).

The court also did not commit clear error by finding the Lawyers' Title Deposit/Refund Check/Broadway Bank Account was material. (Trial Ruling Tr. 5/4/2007 pp. 3, 6). The Chapter 7 trustee testified why bank accounts like the Broadway Bank Account mattered, as assets, leading to assets or avoidance actions, and confirming other financial information about the debtors. (Trial Tr., Vol. 1, p. 105, L. 24-25, p. 106-107). "Few, if any, assets are more material to a consumer debtor's financial affairs than a bank account, for it is from that kind of assets that the creditors can discern not only an overall picture of the debtor's financial affairs, but also detail of the debtor's finances." In re Pratt, 411 F.3d 561, 567 (5th Cir. 2005)(now deceased debtor with chronic drug problems lacked intent regarding multiple omissions); see also In re Guenther, 333 B.R. 759, 768 (Bankr. N.D. Tex. 2005) (holding that bank accounts are included in the "basic matters about which creditors and the Court are most concerned."); In re Bullough, 358 B.R. at

Nor did the court commit clear error by rejecting debtors' assertion the Refund Check was expended pre-petition against their non-disclosure of the Broadway Bank Account with a balance in excess of $4,048. on the day the case was filed. (Trial Tr., Vol. 1, p. 137, L. 24-25; p. 138, L. 1-6, p. 178, L. 11-17; p. 180, L. 2-20) The debtors' own testimony showed the Broadway Bank Account contained other proceeds from their property, not just the Refund Check. (Trial Tr. Vol. 2 p. 494-496, Vol. 3, pp. 549-550). Furthermore, in considering a false oath regarding a bank account, the court need not engage in a First In First Out (FIFO) or Last In First Out (LIFO) analysis. In re Post, 347 B.R. 104, 113 (Bankr. M.D. Fla. 2006). In Bullough, for example, the court analyzed similar defenses a debtor asserted regarding belatedly disclosed bank accounts finding a debtor could not "forget" a bank account he used to pay personal and household expenses; and his omission of a third account because he did not think he needed to disclose it "makes no sense". Moreover, the debtor's omission of the accounts he used compared to the date he filed his original schedules showed "reckless indifference" when he did not correct the omission for six weeks. Bullough, 358 B.R. at 271-272, 283. Here the debtors failed to disclose the Broadway Bank Account they used on an ongoing basis for more than two (2) years. Because the debtors' failure to disclose the Broadway Bank account into which they deposited the Lawyers' Title Refund was a false oath made with fraudulent intent the court properly denied their discharge. 11 U.S.C. §727(a) (4).

3. Martinez Deposit

In the same way the court did not commit clear error finding the debtors made a false oath through their failure to disclose the Martinez Deposit on the Schedules and Statements of Financial Affairs. The court did not engage in clear error rejecting the debtors' preferred defenses the Martinez Deposit was forfeited and was not required to be disclosed. The evidence showed the Martinez Deposit was not forfeited; instead it was used as a credit for the Schorlemers, Mary Roberts' parents, to purchase of the Burwick Property, where the debtors currently reside. (Trial Tr., Vol. 1, p. 109, L. 13-18; p. 169, L. 12-19). The Chapter 7 trustee also asserted the Martinez Deposit was property of the bankruptcy estate and never returned to him. The Chapter 7 trustee also testified he might counsel the debtors to disclose the Martinez Deposit, even if it was forfeited; and in his view the transaction was a constructively fraudulent transfer. (Trial Tr., Vol. 1, p.173, L. 20-25; p. 174, L. 1-2, 13-21).

The court did not commit clear error rejecting the debtors' defenses of disclosure of the contract on Schedule G, that there was no place on the Schedules to disclose the Martinez Deposit, finding they still failed to make proper disclosure. Arguments, such as not knowing where on the schedules to list assets, that disclosure in another part of the schedules is enough, that a question does not call for the disclosure, or the information can be found in documents the debtor produced to the Chapter 7 trustee, generally fail. E.g., In re Mitchell, 102 Fed. Appx. at 863 (holding that the availability of correct information elsewhere in the petition did not cure the debtors' omissions on the schedules). Because the debtors made false oaths concerning the Martinez Deposit with fraudulent intent or at least reckless indifference to the truth, their discharge was properly denied under 11 U.S.C. §727(a)(4)(A).

4. ACIS Stock

The evidence showed the debtors failed to disclose the ACIS Stock on the Schedules or in response to Statement of Financial Affairs question 12. Again, the court did not commit clear error concluding the evidence and testimony that the debtors included and remembered the same ACIS stock on their Financial Statement which they prepared and signed and gave to the IRS in 2003, without having to locate the stock in their safe deposit box and that the debtors did not review the Financial Statement in preparing their Schedules. (Trial Tr., Vol. 1, p. 225, L. 9-18, p. 228, L. 6-16, Vol. 2, p. 392, L. 10-20, Vol. 3, p. 580, L. 21-25, p. 581). The court properly considered the debtors' defenses and explanations that the ACIS stock was later disclosed after they looked in their safe deposit box at Compass Bank after the first creditor meeting and found the stock in a manila envelope. The court considered the debtors' defense that their subsequent amendment to the Schedules showed their lack of intent. However, disclosure after the fact does not negate fraudulent intent in a discharge complaint but is a factor that the court can and did weigh here. In re Sholdra, 249 F. 3d at 382-383.

The debtors admitted they did not review the contents of their safe deposit box in preparing the Schedules and Statement of Financial Affairs. Only after the United States Trustee asked the debtors to review the contents of their safe deposit box at the November 15, 2004 creditors' meeting did the debtors' locate the ACIS stock. (Defs.' Ex. 3, p. 120-121). The debtors' failure to undertake even a modicum of review of their own prior Financial Statement, or inventory the contents of the safe deposit box are evidence of the debtors' "pattern of disregard for the truth that supports fraudulent intent." In re Dupre, 145 Fed. Appx. at 856; In re Bullough, 358 B.R. at 285-286 ("At some point errors and omissions in schedules and SOFAs leave the realm of honest mistakes and enter the realm of purposeful deceit or, at the very least, reckless indifference to the truth."). Given all this, the court did not err in denying the debtors' discharge for their false oath through their non-disclosure of the ACIS stock under 11 U.S.C. §727(a) (4) (A).

5. Claim Against Ted H. Roberts, P.C.

Finally the court did not err in concluding the debtors made a false oath by failing to disclose their $35,625 claim against their own P.C. and such non-disclosure was material even if had a net "zero" result. The evidence showed the P.C. was their largest personal asset valued at $8.1

million dollars on their July 2003 Financial Statement. (Trial Tr., Vol. 1, p. 227, L. 4-8; Pl.'s Ex. 39). In valuing the P.C., Ted Roberts deducted the P.C.'s liabilities from its assets. (Id.; Trial Tr. Vol. 1 p. 227, L. 4-16; Pl.'s Ex. 39). The debtors admitted they advanced the P.C. monies which the debtors borrowed over time.[26] (Trial Tr., Vol. 1, p. 79, L. 1-25; Vol. 2, p. 501, L. 21-25). The debtors argued their claim against the P.C. was either hard to determine and so they could not disclose the claim without an accounting, and/or subject to offset by loans the P.C. made to them. (Trial Tr., Vol. 2, p. 489, L. 1-18). The debtors listed the value of the P.C. as "unknown" throughout the case (Pl.'s Exs. 4,5,7,8,10,11,12; Trial Tr. Vol. 2 pp 399-400). The Chapter 7 trustee testified a claim by the debtors against the P.C. might be something he would pursue, or might affect whether the P.C. would get a distribution for the claim it filed in the case. (Trial Tr., Vol. 1, p. 124, L. 21-25, p. 125, L. 15-22). When the Chapter 7 trustee abandoned the P.C., he required the P.C. to subordinate its claim in the case and reserved certain potential litigation recoveries owed to the P.C. for the bankruptcy estate. (Trial Tr., Vol. 1, p. 126, L. 1-18; Case Doc. Nos. 125, 140, 146). Ted Roberts testified the P.C.'s $154,000 claim in the case was a "gross amount" and that the $35,000 claim against the P.C. could possibly reduce or set off the P.C.'s claim. (Trial Tr., Vol. 2, p. 503, L. 14-17, p. 501).

The court was well within its discretion finding the debtors' failure to list the PC Claim, even if the net result would have been zero, was a material misstatement made with intent or reckless indifference to the truth. (Trial Ruling Tr. 5/4/2007 pp. 3, 6). With respect to the set-off, the debtors decided for themselves that the disclosure of the PC Claim was not necessary; and they argue this supports their belief they did not have a "claim" against the P.C. when they filed the [26] The evidence also showed the P.C. had listed loans to shareholders on its year 2003 and 2004 federal income tax returns in the amount of $146,531 with no change. (Pl.'s Exs. 45, 46). The evidence also showed Mr. McElroy, who prepared the P.C.'s tax returns, would have had some information to make the line item entry for the P.C. loans to shareholders; and Ted Roberts, who signed the tax returns, expected the line item information in the P.C.'s tax returns he signed has some basis in documents or facts. (Trial Tr., Vol. 1, p. 236-237).

bankruptcy case. However, the debtors now acknowledge "technically" they have a claim against their P.C. (Trial Tr., Vol. 1, p. 501, L. 9-19). In Gartner, the court, confronted with a similar argument, held that it is without merit for a debtor to omit assets because he believes the asset has no value, for it is for the creditors to judge for themselves "what will benefit, and what will prejudice them." In re Gartner, 326 B.R. at 372 (citation omitted). The debtors' material false oaths concerning the PC Claim were made with at least reckless indifference to the truth supporting the denial the debtors' discharge pursuant to 11 U.S.C. §727(a)(4)(A).

B. The Court Should Allow a Limited Remand for More Specific Findings and Conclusions Under §§727(a)(2) and (3).

The court below granted judgment on the United State's Trustee's counts in his Complaint alleging the debtors should be denied a discharge under 11 U.S.C. §727 (a)(2)(Counts IX, X and XIV of the Complaint) and under §727 (a)(3)(Count III A of the Complaint) (Trial Ruling Tr. 5/4/2007). Unfortunately the court below issued few findings regarding why it reached those rulings. Thus, out of an abundance of caution, and to ensure fairness to the Roberts, the United States Trustee has on this same date filed a separate Motion for Stay and Limited Remand. Contrary to the debtors' request that this court reverse and render, granting them a bankruptcy discharge (Appellants' brief at pp. 8, 15, 48), relief for which they include no legal authority, the appropriate remedy under long standing Fifth Circuit authority is for this court to grant a specific limited remand. See In re Texas Extrusion Corp., 836 F.2d. 217, 221 (5th Cir. 1988) cert. den'd 488 U.S. 926 (1988) (When a trial court fails to make findings, the appellate court normally remands for appropriate findings. Further, findings are not a jurisdictional requirement of appeal and cursory findings and conclusions or even the complete lack of findings and conclusions do not require reversal or remand of the judgment if a full understanding of the issues on appeal can be determined by the appellate court.); Chandler v. City of Dallas, 958 F.2d 85, 88-89 (5th Cir. 1992)(The Fifth Circuit ordered remand to the trial court for additional findings of fact and conclusions of law, but noted that the failure to meet the technical requirements if Fed. R. Civ. P. 52 does not warrant reversal or remand as long as the purposes behind rule are effectuated and that that the rule requires "neither punctilious detail nor slavish tracing of the claims by issue and witness and witness."); Sample v. Miles, 2007 WL 486770 (5th Cir. 2007) (The Circuit Court, in rejecting a challenge to the sufficiency of findings, stated that the trial court's findings need not be in great detail, but must be sufficient for appellate court review.); Matter of Luce, 960 F.2d 1277, 1284-1285 (5th Cir. 1992) (The Fifth Circuit held that the bankruptcy court's findings were incomplete and remanded for additional findings.).

C. Alternatively, The Court Did Not Abuse its Discretion in Denying the Debtors' Discharge Under 11 U.S.C. §727(a) (2) (A) and (B) Given its Reasonable Conclusion They Concealed Or Transferred Assets Thereby Hindering, Delaying, and Defrauding Creditors And the Trustee

Section 727(a) (2) (A) and (B) require a denial of discharge when there is: (1) a transfer [or concealment] of property; (2) belonging to the debtor; (3) within one year of the filing of the petition [or after the date of the filing of the petition]; and with intent to hinder, delay, or defraud a creditor or officer of the estate. In re Pratt, 411 F.3d at 565-566. While intent must be actual, the court can properly infer intent from the debtors' actions considering circumstantial evidence. Id. citing In re Chastant, 873 F.2d 89, 91 (5th Cir. 1989)("Because a debtor is unlikely to testify directly that his intent was fraudulent, the courts may deduce fraudulent intent from the facts and circumstances of a case." Id., 873 F. 3d at 90. There are factors or "badges of fraud" that may be used to show actual intent to defraud.[27] Moreover, there is a presumption of fraudulent intent when a debtor transfers property to relatives. In re Pratt, 411 F.3d at 565-566. Once this presumption attaches, the burden shifts to the debtor to demonstrate that he lacked fraudulent intent. In re Pratt, 411 F.3d at 565-566. Further, section 727(a) (2) reads in the disjunctive – hinder, delay, or defraud. Accordingly, a transfer or concealment made with intent to hinder or delay a creditor or an officer of the estate is sufficient for denial of discharge, even if there is no fraudulent intent. NCNB Texas Nat'l Bank v. Bowyer (In re Bowyer), 916 F.2d 1056, 1059 (5th Cir. 1990), rev'd on other grounds, 932 F.2d 1100 (5th Cir. 1991).

Here, the bankruptcy court acted within its discretion finding by a preponderance of the evidence that the debtors with the intent to hinder, delay or defraud creditors concealed and transferred their assets, the Broadway Bank Account into which the Refund Check was deposited and the Martinez Deposit and the transfer and credit of the deposit to relatives. In making that conclusion the court considered the same facts and evidence described in the Appellee's brief at pp. 9-11, regarding the Lawyers' Title Deposit/Refund Check – Broadway Bank Account and Martinez Deposit in granting Judgment on Counts IX, X and XIV of the Complaint. (See also Appellee's brief at pp. 30-34). The court found it had ample and sufficient evidence to deny the debtors' discharge and to conclude their concealment of the Lawyers' Title Deposit, the transfer of the Refund Check, and the concealment of the Broadway Bank Account, involving a relative, Mr. Schorlemer, was a transfer made by the debtors of their property within a year prior to filing the bankruptcy or property of the estate after filing bankruptcy made with the intent to hinder delay or defraud creditors or the estate. (Trial Ruling Tr. 5/4/2007 p.6). (See Appellee's brief at pp. 9-11).

[27] The "badges of fraud" are: (1) The lack or inadequacy of consideration; (2) the family, friendship or close associate relationship between the parties; (3) the retention of possession, benefit or use of the property in question; (4) the financial condition of the party sought to be charged both before and after the transaction in question; (5) the existence or cumulative effect of the pattern or series of transactions of course of conduct after the incurring or debt, onset of financial difficulties, or pendency or threat of suits by creditors; and (6) the general chronology of the events and transactions under inquiry. Id.; see also In re Dennis, 330 F.3d at 701-02.

Similarly, the court had sufficient evidence to conclude the debtors' concealment and transfer of the Martinez Deposit coupled with the post-petition transfer of the Martinez Deposit as a credit for the Schorlemer's purchase of the Burwick Property was a transfer of the debtors' property within a year before bankruptcy or of property of the estate after bankruptcy made with intent to hinder delay or defraud the creditors or the estate. 11 U.S.C. §727(a)(2)(A) and (B). (See Appellee's brief at pp. 10-11). Indeed, the Chapter 7 trustee testified in his view this was a constructively fraudulent transfer. Further, the debtors ultimately retained the benefit of the Martinez Deposit because it was used to purchase the Burwick Property where they currently reside. (Pl.'s Exs. 27, 72; Trial Tr., Vol. 1, p. 174, L. 13-21). The debtors retention of the benefit of the concealed Martinez Deposit is one of the badges of fraud discussed in Pratt and Dennis. In re Pratt, 411 F.3d at 565-566*; In re Dennis*, 330 F.3d at 701-702. The court properly determined the debtors concealment and subsequent post-petition transfer of the Martinez Deposit to the Schorlemers were done with the intent to hinder, delay, or defraud creditors and the Trustee, and the denied the debtors' discharge pursuant to 11 U.S.C. §727(a)(2)(A) and (B). The debtors failed to meet their burden of proof under U.S.C. §727(a) (2) (A) and (B) to demonstrate they have acted without the requisite intent regarding the Broadway Bank Account and the Martinez Deposit. In re Chastant, 873 F.2d at 91 (affirming the denial of discharge of a debtor who set up trust for his children under section 727(a)(2)(A)). The debtors' argument that the court "received no evidence" supporting its finding under 11 U.S.C. §727(a)(2) is without merit. (Appellants' brief, p. 13), Because the appropriate remedy is a limited remand for more specific findings, the court should not reverse and render on this separate legal ground. (Appellants' brief, pp. 8, 15, 48).

D. Alternatively, the Court Did Not Abuse its Discretion By Denying The Debtors' Discharge Under 11 U.S.C. §727(a) (3) Given Their Failure To Maintain Records From Which Their Financial Condition Or Business Transactions Could Be Ascertained.

A discharge should be denied under 11 U.S.C. §727(a)(3) if the debtor fails to keep or adequately maintain financial records that could assist any creditors or trustee in ascertaining the debtors' financial condition. In re Dennis, 330 F.3d at 703; In re Gartner, 326 B.R. at 375-76. The United States Trustee established by a preponderance of the evidence under section 727(a)(3) that: (1) the debtors failed to maintain and preserve adequate records; and (2) such failure makes it impossible to ascertain the debtors' financial condition and material business transactions. Id. Once the United States Trustee established a prima facie case, the debtors had the burden of establishing their failure to keep adequate records was justified under all circumstances. Id. Under 11 U.S.C. §727(a) (3), the United States Trustee did not have to show intent or recklessness of the debtors. In re Gartner, 326 B.R.at 375; see also In re Jones, 327 B.R. 297, 303 (Bankr. S.D. Tex. 2005). The debtors' negligence in failing to keep or produce records is sufficient to deny their discharge. In re Jones, Id. "Creditors are entitled to written evidence of the debtor's financial situation and past transactions; maintenance of such records is a prerequisite to a discharge." Pher Partners v. Womble (In re Womble), 289 B.R. 836, 856 (Bankr. N.D. Tex. 2003) aff'd 108 Fed, Appx. 993 (5th Cir. 2004). The records produced by debtors must be sufficient so that creditors need not be forced to undertake an independent investigation of the debtor's affairs. See In re Juzwiak, 89 F.3d 424, 428-429 (7th Cir. 1996). Further, the standard for disclosure of records of sophisticated debtors is higher than that of an unsophisticated debtor. In re Gartner, 326 B.R. at 375. Attorneys, such as the debtors, are held to a higher standard of disclosure of records. See Meridian Bank v. Alten, 958 F.2d 1226, 1231 (3rd Cir. 1992).

Just as the debtors' concealed the Broadway Bank Account, they failed to keep or maintain typical bank records, such as proof of the deposit of the Refund Check. While the Broadway Bank Account statements were mailed to Mr. Schorlemer, the debtors had access to them from the bank, or through relatives; and they either failed to obtain records for the bank account they owned, failed to keep records, and/or failed to timely turn over records when asked. The court properly denied their discharge for their failure to keep or maintain adequate financial records.

In this case the debtors not only admitted they either failed to maintain or discarded the records concerning the disposition of the Lawyers' Title Deposit, they had no reasonable justification or explanation. The court was well within its discretion concluding "I don't know what happened to them [the Broadway Bank Account records]" was not a reasonable justification for why the debtors did not have or keep records for the Broadway Bank Account. (Trial Tr., Vol. 3 p. 543). The debtors admitted they did not keep the deposit ticket showing the deposit of the Refund Check into the Broadway Bank Account. (Pl.'s Ex. 23). In making the conclusions under §727 (a) (3) the court considered the same facts described about concerning the Broadway Bank Account. (See Appellee's brief at pp. 9-10, and at pp. 30-33). The United States Trustee, like the Chapter 7 trustee, asked the debtors for copies of records all bank accounts to which debtors had access, which included the Broadway Bank account. (Case Doc. Nos. 165, 168, 178, 190, 193, Adv. Doc. Nos. 56, 58, 65, 67, Trial Tr. Vol. 1, p. 92-93, 102-103, 181-182, Pl.'s Exs. 19, 20, 23, 24, 25, Defs.' Ex 22). The debtors responded to the United States Trustee this was overly burdensome for them and he should get the records from Broadway Bank, which he did, pursuant to a subpoena to the bank. (Adv. Doc. Nos. 58, 65, 67; Pl.'s Exs. 15, 16). Although the Chapter 7 trustee may have subsequently concluded he had adequate financial records, after receiving documents in his response to compel, and after the Complaint was filed, this does not relieve the debtors of their obligations, or excuse their failure to keep or maintain the most basic of financial records, for the Broadway Bank Account. Given that, the court did not abuse its discretion concluding the debtors failure to cooperate in producing the Broadway Bank Account records violated section 727(a)(3) and justified the denial of their discharge. See In re Gartner, 326 B.R. at 377 (holding that debtors failure to fully open his records and allow free access to information that could assist in ascertaining the debtor's financial position was a violation of section 727(a)(3) supporting denial of discharge.). The debtors' argument that the court "received no evidence" supporting its findings under 11 U.S.C. §727(a)(3) is without merit. (Appellants' brief, p. 13). Because the appropriate remedy is a limited remand for more specific findings the court should not reverse and render on this separate legal ground. (Appellants' brief, pp. 8, 15, 48).

II. The Bankruptcy Court Did Not Abuse its Discretion in its Pre-Trial Discovery Rulings And, Even if They Had Been Erroneous, the Rulings Constitute Harmless Error

The bankruptcy court properly limited both the scope and timing of discovery resolving both the debtors' requests to limit discovery from them and the debtors' motions to compel discovery during the course of the case. (Adv. Doc. Nos. 58, 65, 129, 130, 131, 132, 134). Moreover, the bankruptcy court properly enforced its own scheduling order by denying the debtors' request to depose the United States Trustee's designated representative outside the court ordered deadline. (Adv. Doc. No. 135). Moreover, as the Fifth Circuit explained, "vague assertions that additional discovery will produce needed, but unspecified facts" will not meet the "for cause" standard justifying continuances of scheduling order and pre trial order deadlines. Beattie v. Madison County School District, 254 F. 3d. 595, 606 (5th Cir. 2001). [citations omitted].

Because the court properly concluded the objections to the debtors' discovery and assertions of various privileges by the United States Trustee were appropriate, the court also properly denied the debtors' request for a privilege log (Adv. Doc. No. 91) and the motion for a separate order denying request for privilege log. (Adv. Doc. Nos. 120, 133, Tr. 1/24/07, p. 99, L. 10-15).

The court acted within its discretion because the United State's Trustee asserted the attorney client, attorney work product and investigative files privileges, supported by its offer to the court for an in camera inspection of privilege logs in the court room during hearings on January 24, 2007. (Tr. 1/24/2007 pp. 58-59). The court may, but need not, order the exchange of the privilege logs or their filing with the court, particularly if the court sustains an assertion of attorney client privilege. United States of America v. Philip Morris Inc., 347 F.3d 951, 954 (D.C. Cir. 2003)(court can first decide asserted privilege and rule on objection before party needs to include document in a privilege log). [28]

Even if the bankruptcy court erred in restricting or allowing discovery, errors made concerning allowance of discovery do not require reversal unless the result in "substantial prejudice" to a party's case. Leatherman v. Tarrant County Narcotics Intelligence & Coordination Unit, 28 F.3d 1388, 1394 (5th Cir. 1994). The bankruptcy court restricted both the debtors' and the United States Trustees' pre-trial discovery; but, the debtors received responses to their written discovery, access to the documents in the United States Trustee's possession, and opportunity to depose the United States Trustee's designated representative. Although the debtors were not permitted to take the depositions of Ms. Lemler-Clark and the Chapter 7 trustee, the debtors were not prevented from calling them as witnesses at trial. Consequently, the bankruptcy court's pre-

Nichols Construction Co., LLC,* 2007 WL 1792352 (D. E.D. La. 2007)(party may be required to compile privilege log and exchange it only after court orders exchange); BG Real Estate Services Inc. v. American Equity Insurance Co., 2005 WL 1309048 (D. E.D. trial discovery rulings did not prejudice the debtors in the presentation of their defense to the Complaint or their amended motion for sanctions; and any errors by the court were harmless.

III. The Bankruptcy Court Did Not Abuse its Discretion in Denying the Debtors' Amended Motion for Sanctions Against the United States Trustee And Did Not Abuse Its Discretion in its Procedural Rulings on the Motion to Sever.

The debtors presented both pleadings, their own testimony at trial, and arguments in multiple hearings prior to trial why they were entitled to sanctions against the United States Trustee. (Adv. Doc. Nos. 11, 72, 123, Tr. 1/24/2007 pp. 9-19, 34, 63-70, 73, 88-90, Trial Tr., Vol. 3, p. 710-711, 713-714). So, they cannot properly claim, nor does the record support, the court "summarily denied" them any relief to which they were entitled. The court scheduled hearings on the debtors' motions for sanctions on November 15, 2006 and January 24, 2007. (Tr. 1/24/2007, Adv. Doc. Nos. 25, 26, 74). The debtors asked for and were given a continuance of the hearing on their motion for sanctions from January 24, 2007 to April 3, 2007. (Adv. Doc. Nos. 11, 72, 84, 94, 105). Contrary to their suggestion, (Appellants' brief at pp. 40-41) the bankruptcy court did not "summarily" deny their motion for sanctions after granting the United States Trustee's motion to sever. First, the debtors agreed to the motion to sever, in which the United States Trustee asserted if he prevailed on his Complaint there may be no need to litigate further the motion for sanctions. (Adv. Doc. No. 150 p. 4). Second, during trial the court did not enter an order granting of denying the motion to sever; rather the court stated after both the debtors and the United States Trustee rested and made closing arguments: "And the motion for sanctions, we'll decide what to do after the ruling on this, - - . . . . - - whether that goes forward or whether it does not." (Trial Tr., Vol. 3, pp. 724-725). The debtors also suggest they did not receive a separate evidentiary hearing[29] on their amended

[29] The debtors cite no authority that they were entitled to a separate evidentiary hearing. Rather, Rule 9011 requires only that a party or attorney be given a "reasonable opportunity to respond" to the alleged violation prior to the imposition of sanctions. Fed. R. Bankr. P. 9011(c)(1)(A); Merriman v. Security Insurance Co. of Hartford, 100 F.3d 1187, 1191-1192 (5th Cir. 1996)("In the Rule 11 context, due process demands only that the sanctioned party be motion for sanctions. (Appellants' brief, pp. 40-41). This was something they never asked for, and something they did not pursue in January 2007, when a hearing on their motion for sanctions was scheduled. (Tr. 1/24/2007, Adv. Doc. Nos. 84, 94, 105). Rather, a complete review of the court proceedings below shows the court allowed the debtors adequate discovery,[30] a number of hearings, and the opportunity to present their arguments in support of why they were entitled to sanctions against the United States Trustee. The debtors did not produce testimony from Ms. Lemler-Clark, their stated "key fact witness" for the alleged improper purpose at trial. (Tr., 1/24/07, p. 73). Although the debtors complain the court did not allow them to depose Ms. Lemler-Clark on their motion for sanctions, they presented no evidence showing why they did not present her at trial as a witness by subpoena.[31] Moreover, the court's holding sustaining the United States Trustee's positions on multiple counts of his Complaint refutes the Appellants' allegations the United States Trustee pursued the Complaint for an "improper purpose"[32] or afforded notice and an opportunity to be heard." {citations omitted]). The 1993 Advisory Committee Note to Fed. R. Civ. P. 11 states: "[w]hether the matter should be decided solely on the basis of written submissions or should be scheduled for oral argument (or, indeed, for evidentiary presentation) will depend on the circumstances." See Travelers Insurance Co. v. St. Jude Hosp. of Kenner, La., 38 F.3d 1414, 1418 (5th Cir. 1994)(The circuit court held that a hearing on a motion for sanctions is necessary only when a hearing would assist the court in its decision.).

[30] The United States Trustee timely responded to the debtors' discovery requests aimed at their theory of the alleged "improper purpose" by denials. Although the United States Trustee objected to many of the requests, he produced documents received from non-parties Ms. Lemler-Clark and the trustee and responded, subject to his asserted objections. The United States Trustee also produced documents filed by Mr. Mays seeking recusal of Bankruptcy Judge Clark, and Judge Clark's opinions in the Moerbe and Valles cases, as responsive to the debtors requests for admissions that the United States Trustee was "familiar with" a State Bar disciplinary proceeding regarding Ms. Lemler-Clark in which Mr. Mays was the complaining attorney and in which Ted Roberts testified as a witness against Ms. Lemler-Clark. These documents are available on PACER as public documents; and decisions of the court appear on the court's web page. The United States Trustee denied the alleged "improper purpose" and further denied that U.S. Bankruptcy Judge Clark had a role in the Plaintiff's prosecution of the Adversary, or that the Plaintiff had provided documents about the debtors to Judge Clark. (Adv. Doc. Nos. 113 Ex. 1 pp. 9-11; 114 Ex. 1 pp. 6-7; 115 Ex. 1 pp. 5-6; 116 Ex. 1 pp. 3 – 5). The United States Trustee denied soliciting information from Lemler-Clark and denied speaking to Judge Clark about the debtors, or speaking to U.S. Bankruptcy Judge Ronald B. King (except in court hearings) about the debtors. (debtors' Amended Designation No. 49, United States Trustee's Response to motion to compel – admissions, Defs.' Ex. D-2/D-11 not admitted at trial, Adv. Doc. No. 112).

[31] Nor did the debtors produce at trial testimony from their own expert, Mr. Mays, designated as an expert on "statistical analysis" of the "relative frequency" of United States Trustee §727 complaints, or their "not yet designated" expert witness on whether the United States Trustee conducted a reasonable inquiry regarding his §727 Complaint. (Ted H. Roberts First Amended Initial Disclosures - DR #34 p. 15).

[32] The Fifth Circuit has held that: the filing of a complaint that is well grounded in fact and warranted by existing law cannot, as a matter of law, constitute harassment for purposes of Rule 11, "regardless of the plaintiff's without a reasonable inquiry into the facts.

The debtors claim they were "singled out" and "received special attention". (Appellants' brief at p. 7; Adv. Doc. No. 123, Tr. 1/24/07 pp. 16-19).[33] When asked by the court if Ms. Lemler Clark had "commandeered the U.S. Trustee", Mr. Roberts responded "No'. (Tr. 1/24/07, p. 66, L. 2-23). The court also asked if Mr. Roberts thought this was the first time someone with a "vendetta" contacted the U.S. Trustee; and Mr. Roberts responded "No, I don't." (Tr. 1/24/07, p. 64). The court considered and weighed all the facts and evidence both denying the debtors' discharge and then finding their amended motion for sanctions against the United States Trustee was without merit. Merely taking and prevailing in adverse positions to the debtors in this case is not sufficient evidence of the alleged improper purpose. (See Appellee's brief, pp. 19-20)

The debtors argue in their brief that documents they received in discovery from the United States Trustee (Appellants' brief p. 7; DR #52, 53, 54, 55, and 56) should be weighed by this Court to support their theory of the alleged improper purpose. The debtors claim these documents were "noteworthy" such as the "scurrilous newspaper article;"[34] and the article was not relevant to their bankruptcy. (Appellants' brief at p. 7). Had the Chapter 7 trustee prevailed in the Hearst litigation, Mr. Roberts testified it was possible a substantial dollar recovery would result in payment of all the debtors' total scheduled debt of over $3,654,000 and resulted in a surplus distribution to the debtors. (Trial Tr., Vol. 2 p. 499 L. 7-21). Therefore, it is neither "noteworthy" nor subjective intent." Jennings v. Joshua Independent School District, 877 F.2d 313, 320 (5th Cir. 1989) cert. denied 496 U.S. 935 (1990). Likewise, in the underlying case, the United States Trustee's well grounded complaint cannot constitute harassment of the debtors under Fed. R. Bankr. P. 9011(b)(1).

[33] The debtors argue the statement of Trial Attorney James W. Rose, an employee of the United States Trustee, made at their creditor meeting, about debtor mistakes in bankruptcy schedules demonstrates the court committed clear error. (Appellants' brief, at p. 8) Yet, Mr. Rose was not a witness at trial. The debtors did not provide any expert witness testimony on the proper functioning of the bankruptcy system or completion of bankruptcy schedules on their behalf at trial. The bankruptcy court did not clearly err based on the evidence in this case.

[34] The published newspaper article they refer to in the brief related to an asset of their bankruptcy estate, and formed the basis for the Chapter 7 trustee's lawsuit in federal court against Hearst Corporation. (Trial Tr., Vol. 2 pp. 416-429; Pl.'s Ex. 5 Schedule B, Potential Causes of Action and/or Sanctions Against Hearst Corp./San Antonio Express News).

surprising the United States Trustee's file would contain the June 2004 Hearst article or that the U.S. Trustee would provide the Hearst article to the Chapter 7 trustee when the case was converted in March 2005, as it formed the basis for an asset, the causes of action, the debtors put on their Schedules and resulted in litigation the Chapter 7 trustee pursued to the Fifth Circuit. It is unclear to the United States Trustee why the debtors conclude the newspaper article was not "relevant" to the bankruptcy based on the debtors' own Schedules, Mr. Roberts' testimony, and the litigation concluded at the Fifth Circuit. (Appellants' brief at p. 7).

Even if the United States Trustee had engaged in misconduct, which he denies, the remedy the debtors sought was total denial of the Complaint, and granting their discharge. Indeed in their brief they ask the Court to reverse the court's judgment and grant them a discharge. (Appellants' brief, pp. 8, 48). The only remedy the debtors sought in their motions for sanctions was the most draconian, possible denial of the United States Trustee's Complaint and an award of money damages. The relief the debtors seek, a grant of a discharge and remand of the motion for sanctions, would penalize their creditors, since $1.2 million dollars of unsecured creditor claims would be released and unpaid. These creditors include individuals, the debtors owed money to: Zenaida Oliva, Ronny and Wade Petty, the estate of Erin Kent, the bankruptcy estate of Ruth Langston Daniels, and various entities, including Bank of America, Chase Visa, Ethan Allen, and Southwestern Bell Yellow Pages. (Pl.'s Ex. 4, Schedule F). Even if the United States Trustee had not pursued factually well grounded legally supportable adversarial litigation and a sanction was merited, which he denies, only the least restrictive sanction to deter inappropriate conduct would have been appropriate. Spallone v. United States, 493 U.S. 265,280 (1990); Krim v. First City Bancorporation of Texas, Inc., 282 F. 3d 864, 867 (5th Cir. 2002). The debtors never asked for any lesser sanctions. So, the court properly denied their inappropriate and draconian amended motion for sanctions that would hurt innocent creditors. The bankruptcy court acted well within its discretion[35] in the context of the litigation, denying the amended motion for sanctions. The court properly applied the fact-dependent legal standard mandated by Fed. R. Bankr. P. 9011. The bankruptcy court properly entered the judgment, denied the sanctions, and properly mooted the motion to sever. None of this was wrong much less an abuse of discretion.

CONCLUSION

For these reasons, the United States Trustee respectfully asks this court to affirm the judgment denying the debtors' discharge under 11 U.S.C. §727(a)(4), grant a limited remand for additional findings under 11 U.S.C. §§727(a)(2) and (a)(3), or in the alternative affirm the judgment under §§727 (a)(2) and (a)(3), affirm the court on pre-trial discovery orders and post-trial procedural orders and affirm the court's order denying the debtors' motion for sanctions.

[35] The court also did not abuse its discretion in declining to allow the debtors to the depose the United States Trustee's counsel litigating the complaint, or obtain his file containing privileged documents, including attorney work product and attorney client privileged materials. (Tr. 1/24/2007, p. 35-36) The court found the debtors' purported evidence of the alleged "improper purpose" was not relevant or admissible regarding either the Complaint or their motion for sanctions. (Tr. 1/24/2007, p. 34, L. 14-20). The court explained that the bankruptcy system required a free flow of information from interested persons both to the Chapter 7 trustee and the United States Trustee. (Tr. 1/24/2007, p. 35, L. 15-25, p. 36, L. 1-4).

STATEMENT OF APPELLATE JURISDICTION

This appeal is taken from a final order entered by the United States Bankruptcy Court for the District of Delaware. This Court has appellate jurisdiction under 28 U.S.C. § 158(a)(1).

COUNTER-STATEMENT OF ISSUE PRESENTED

The issue on appeal is whether the bankruptcy court abused its discretion in finding "cause" that required dismissal of the Debtors' bankruptcy cases under 11 U.S.C. § 1112(b)(1), where the record clearly established that: (i) the Debtors neglected to respond to an offer to purchase one of the Debtors' properties; (ii) the Debtors failed to file tax returns since 2004; (iii) the Debtors' estates were losing money and the Debtors did not demonstrate the viability of their businesses; (iv) the Debtors mismanaged cash that was arguably property of the Debtors' estates by storing it in a safe located at a gas station; and (v) the Debtors failed to prepare a business plan.

STATEMENT OF APPROPRIATE STANDARD OF APPELLATE REVIEW

This appeal presents a question of whether the bankruptcy court abused its discretion in finding "cause" that required dismissal of the Debtors' bankruptcy cases under 11 U.S.C. § 1112(b)(1). A bankruptcy court abuses its discretion when its decision is based on "a clearly erroneous finding of fact, an errant conclusion of law, or an improper application of law to fact." In re Marvel Entertainment Group, Inc., 140 F.3d 463, 470 (3d Cir. 1998). A bankruptcy court's legal conclusions are subject to plenary review, while factual findings are subject to review for clear error. See In re Sharon Steel Corp., 871 F.2d 1217, 1222-23 (3d Cir. 1989).

STATEMENT OF THE CASE

On March 16, 2009, the Debtors filed voluntary petitions for relief under chapter 11 of the Bankruptcy Code. R.4 (Docket entries) at D.I. 1.[1] On September 16, 2009, the bankruptcy court issued an order directing the Debtors to appear at a hearing on September 21, 2009 to show cause why the Debtors' cases should not be dismissed or a chapter 11 trustee should not be appointed in the cases. R.3 (9/16/09 "show cause" order). The bankruptcy court's "show cause" order followed (and was prompted by) a hearing on a secured creditor's motion for relief from the automatic stay held on September 14 and 15, 2009. R.3.

Roberta A. DeAngelis, Acting United States Trustee for Region 3 (the "United States Trustee")[2] and certain of the Debtors' creditors appeared at the September 21, 2009 "show cause" hearing. R.3 (Tr. 9/21/09). On September 22, 2009, the bankruptcy court issued an order dismissing the cases. R.2 (9/22/09 dismissal order). On October 2, 2009, the Debtors filed a notice of appeal from the September 22 dismissal order. R.21 (Notice of appeal).

On October 13, 2009, the Debtors filed a motion for a stay pending appeal. R.4 at D.I. 303. By order dated October 19, 2009, the bankruptcy court observed that, while the Debtors had not made out a case for a stay pending appeal, a limited stay was appropriate given the workload of this Court. D.I. 2 (Emergency stay motion) at Ex. F (10/19/09 stay order). Accordingly, the bankruptcy court ordered a limited stay which was set to expire on October 26, 2009 or upon a ruling by this Court on a stay motion, whichever occurred first. D.I. 2 at Ex. F.

On October 21, 2009, the Debtors filed an emergency motion for a stay pending appeal with this Court. D.I. 2. By order dated October 26, 2009, this Court directed that the Bankruptcy Court's October 19, 2009 order remain in effect until further notice. D.I. 12 (10/26/09 stay order).

On October 26, 2009, the Debtors filed a "response" to the United States Trustee's designation of the record that sought to strike nearly all of the designated items. D.I. 10 (Debtors' response to U.S. Trustee designation). On November 5, 2009, the United States Trustee responded to the Debtors' filing. D.I. 17 (U.S. Trustee reply). To the extent that the Debtors' filing is properly characterized as a motion, it remains pending.

STATEMENT OF THE FACTS

On March 16, 2009, the Debtors filed voluntary petitions under chapter 11 of the Bankruptcy Code (R.4 (Docket entries) at D.I. 1) and, upon doing so, became debtors in possession.[3] The Debtors' operations are based in Shawano, Wisconsin, a town with less than 10,000 residents located approximately thirty-five miles northwest of Green Bay. R.5 (Isaacson affidavit) at 1. In their filings with the Bankruptcy Court, the Debtors described themselves as being in the business of "property acquisition and management, sales of gasoline and petroleum products, and funding for charitable activities." R.5 at 1. One Debtor, Midwest Oil of Shawano, LLC, is an operating entity. R.3 at 22:8-12. The remainder of the Debtors are holding companies that own real estate which is leased to the Debtors' wholly-owned, non-debtor subsidiaries. R.3 at 22:8-12. Two hotels, gas stations, an amusement park/racetrack for motorized carts, and a fudge shop are operated by the Debtors' non-debtor subsidiaries at the Debtor-owned locations. R.3 at 22-25. Other properties owned by the Debtors are leased to entities with no connection to the Debtors. R.3 at 40-42.

Under the Bankruptcy Code, the filing of the Debtors' bankruptcy petitions gave rise to an "automatic stay." The automatic stay assists the equitable administration of bankruptcy cases by preventing a race for estate assets; the stay generally prohibits a creditor from commencing or pursuing civil action against the Debtors and/or their assets unless the creditor obtains a bankruptcy court order permitting the creditor to act. See 11 U.S.C. § 362. In order to obtain "relief" from the automatic stay, a creditor must file a motion and demonstrate grounds for such relief. See 11 U.S.C. § 362(d). In the case of property, relief may be granted if, inter alia, the creditor's interest in the property is not adequately protected, if the debtor does not have equity in the property, or if the property is not necessary to an effective reorganization. See id.

On May 14, 2009, Vermillion State Bank ("Vermillion") sought relief from the automatic stay with respect to real property located at 3355 Hadley Avenue, Oakdale, Minnesota ("the subject property"). R.4 at D.I. 109. The Debtors had entered into a loan agreement with Vermillion in 2005 whereby the Debtors granted Vermillion a mortgage on the subject property in exchange for a loan in the approximate amount of $1.3 million. R.6 (Vermillion amended motion) at ¶ 5. The purposes of the loan were to refinance existing debt and to rehabilitate certain aspects of the subject property; the subject property had been operated as a gas station, and the Debtors were seeking to refurbish the property after they lost the gas pumps in a commercial dispute with the prior owner. R.11 (Tr. 9/14/09) at 269:24 - 270:23. From May 2005 through July 2006, the Debtors operated a convenience store at the subject property. R.11 at 273:13-16. At the time of the Debtors' bankruptcy filings, the subject property had been vacant since October, 2008, when it was burglarized. R.11 at 275:13-19.

In its motion for relief, Vermillion averred that it had foreclosed on the subject property prior to the Debtors' bankruptcy filings, and that a sheriff's sale of the subject property was scheduled for April 7, 2009, but was stayed by the Debtors' bankruptcy filings. R.6 at ¶¶ 16, 18. Vermillion asserted a secured claim of approximately $1.9 million. R.6 at ¶ 15.

The Debtors objected to Vermillion's motion for relief. R.4 at D.I. 155. On September 14 and 15, a contested evidentiary hearing was held on the Vermillion motion for relief from the automatic stay. R.4 at D.I. 281-82. At the hearing, Naomi Isaacson (the Debtors' Chief Executive Officer) testified that there were approximately $42,000 of unpaid real estate taxes on the property, R.11 at 18:20-23. Isaacson also testified that the Debtors had failed to make post-petition mortgage payments and tax payments related to the Minnesota property. R.11 at 18:24 - 19:9. Additionally, both Vermillion and the Debtors offered expert testimony regarding the value of the subject property at the hearing. R.11. The Debtors' expert witness, Steven T. Hosch, testified that the land value of the subject property was $2.55 million. R.11 at 90:13-18. He acknowledged that the Debtors had received an offer of $2.5 million from the "development arm" of Walgreens, a retail pharmacy chain (R.11 at 124:17-24) for the subject property, which he believed established a "floor to value for the subject property" ranging between $2 million and $2.7 million for its highest and best use, net of costs. R.11 at 121:21 - 122:18. Isaacson, however, testified that the Debtors' board of directors had decided that it wanted $7 million for the subject property, so she did not respond to the offeror. R. 11 at 278:18 - 279:4.

At the close of the hearing, the bankruptcy court made the following observations:

> Before we talk about the specifics of this case, it relates, obviously, to Vermillion's issue, but, frankly, I'm very disturbed with the testimony that I heard here today or yesterday, I should say, and it leads me to do something somewhat unusual.
>
> You know, we have a nonoperating property here. It has been nonoperating for a very long time. And there has been testimony that there is a party that is chomping at the bit to purchase this property at a price which, by the debtors' own admission, is a price which reflects the value of this property.
>
> There is not even a response to repeated calls from this party that is interested in making this purchase, and there is testimony yesterday from Ms. Isaacson that management would not even consider selling this property for seven million dollars.
>
> Well, to me that is a, at least prima facie, a situation which represents gross mismanagement and a breach of fiduciary duty to the creditors of these debtors. And under these circumstances, I don't see, where there are substantial and continuing losses, I don't see any reasonable prospects for rehabilitation of these debtors.
>
> So, I am sua sponte going to issue an order for a rule to show cause why I should not dismiss these cases or appoint a Chapter 11 trustee. And we will have that hearing on the 21st.
>
> I will also note that I very carefully reviewed our docket last night in this case, and in the six months that we have been in this case, there is virtually no activity in advancing toward a confirmation or resolution of these cases.
>
> Now, I recognize that the debtors have been busy defending motions to lift the automatic stay. But those motions to lift the automatic stay, frankly, are the result of the debtors' continuing non-payments, non-paying taxes [sic], and in effect using their creditors as their debtor-in-possession lenders, and that just isn't going to happen.
>
> So on the 21st I would like to know why, what specific plans for rehabilitation of these debtors are in play, whether they are reasonable, and how they are going to turn around these businesses, because I'm not going to have these cases continue with continuing losses and motions to lift automatic [sic] stay which, frankly are – it has just been too long.

R.12 (Tr. 9/15/09) 93:8 - 95:13.

On September 16, 2009, the bankruptcy court issued an "order on rule to show cause" which memorialized the court's September 15 comments and scheduled the "show cause" hearing for September 21, 2009 at 9:00 A.M. R.1 at 1. The bankruptcy court directed the Debtors to appear in court on September 21, 2009, at which time they "must show cause why the Court should not dismiss the cases or appoint a Chapter 11 Trustee." R.1 at 2.

The Debtors appeared at the September 21 "show cause" hearing and offered the testimony of two witnesses, Issacson and Howard Brod Brownstein of NachmanHaysBrownstein, the Debtors' proposed financial advisor. R.3. The Debtors did not seek a continuance of the "show cause" hearing or otherwise indicate on September 21 that they were not prepared to address the issues raised by the court order. R.3.

With regard to the potential sale of the subject property, Isaacson acknowledged that an entity that purchased land for Walgreens was interested in the property prior to the Debtors' bankruptcy filings. R.3 at 17:13-22. However, Isaacson testified that she did not want to respond post-petition because she thought that disclosing the Debtors' bankruptcy filings would weaken the Debtors' negotiating power. R.3 at 17:13 - 18:15.

Isaacson testified that, notwithstanding the fact that the Debtors' secured creditors had refused to discuss refinancing or other restructuring alternatives without reviewing the Debtors' business plan, the Debtors had not formulated a business plan as of the time of the "show cause" hearing. R.3 at 45:2 - 47:3.

The bankruptcy court specifically questioned Isaacson regarding the Debtors' continuing losses as reflected in the Debtors' July 2009 monthly operating reports. R.3 at 21:21 - 22:3. Isaacson admitted that Debtors Midwest Properties and R.C. Samanta Roy Institute of Science and Technology, Inc. were not paying all of their secured lenders post-petition. R.3 at 23:25 - 24:18;

14:24 - 15:4. The Debtors' proffered reason for not paying certain of their secured lenders was that they believed there was equity in those properties.[4] R.3 at 15:6-12. With regard to the amusement part/racetrack operations, Isaacson testified that the Debtors were not able to pay the operating expenses; employees worked without pay and board members paid certain expenses (including event-related insurance) out-of-pocket as "contributions." R.3 at 25:24 - 26:11; 27:5-8, 13-14.

On the subject of the filing of tax returns, Issacson testified that Debtor Dr. R.C. Samanta Roy Institute of Science and Technology, Inc. is a charitable, not-for-profit entity that had not filed tax returns since 2004 and was being audited by the Internal Revenue Service. R.3 at 30:15 - 31:8; 52:7-11. Isaacson further testified that the other Debtors were not charitable entities and that, with a couple of exceptions, they filed a combined tax return with Dr. R.C. Samanta Roy Institute of Science and Technology because they were wholly-owned, single member entities. R.3 at 32:10-13.

With regard to cash management, Isaacson testified that approximately $60,000 of proceeds from the amusement park/racetrack operations were stored in a safe located at one of the gas stations. R.3 at 57:21 - 62:8. In closing, Debtors' counsel acknowledged that there was "a question . . . as to whether or not it is debtor or non-debtor money." R.3 at 71:3-4. The bankruptcy court directed, and the Debtors agreed, to move the funds in the safe to a bank account. R.3 at 70:12 - 71:09.

At the September 21 hearing, the Debtors did not ask the bankruptcy court to find that there were "unusual circumstances" which established that dismissal of their cases was not in the best interests of creditors and the Debtors' estates. See 11 U.S.C. § 1112(b)(1).

[4] Implicit in the Debtors' conclusion that the Debtors should not pay these lenders is a bet that the bankruptcy court would not permit them to foreclose on their collateral in state court because the collateral had an equity cushion protecting their respective interests.

After the close of the evidence, counsel to the United States Trustee orally moved for conversion of the cases to cases under chapter 7 or, alternatively, for appointment of a chapter 11 trustee. Counsel to the United States Trustee based the oral motion on (i) the Debtors' continuing losses and the absence of a reasonable likelihood of rehabilitation and (ii) the Debtors' failure to properly manage the funds that were parked in the safe. R.3 at 73:20 - 76:16. The Debtors did not object, procedurally or otherwise, to the United States Trustee's motion at the September 21 hearing. R.3.

On September 22, 2009, the bankruptcy court issued an order dismissing the cases. R.2. The dismissal order does not mention the United States Trustee's oral motion for dismissal or appointment of a chapter 11 trustee. R.2. In the dismissal order, the bankruptcy court noted that the Debtors "belatedly responded to the interested purchaser but only in the face of the Show Cause Order" and that the court "was left to its concern regarding other lost or delayed opportunities and, moreover, to Debtors [sic] inattention to actions it could or should be taking to market its assets." R.2 at 3.

The bankruptcy court also found that the Debtors had failed to file tax returns since 2004, including the 2008 return. R.2 at 2.

With respect to the Debtors' monthly operating reports, the bankruptcy court found that the "Debtors [sic] Monthly Operating Reports reveal that they are suffering continuing losses. Despite those losses, they do not have a business plan and were unable at the hearing to meet their burden of proving a reasonable likelihood of rehabilitation." R.2 at 2, 3.

Finally, the bankruptcy court noted the Debtors' admission that they were holding approximately $60,000 in a safe at one of the Debtors' gas stations and that the Debtors had failed to disclose to "creditors, the Court or the Office of the United States Trustee where or the manner in which they were holding the funds." R.2 at 3. The court found that "such 'cash management' constitutes not only gross mismanagement but, as well, a lack of candor." R.2 at 3.

SUMMARY OF ARGUMENT

The bankruptcy court acted within its discretion when it found "cause" that required dismissal of the Debtors' bankruptcy cases under 11 U.S.C. § 1112(b)(1). In its dismissal order, the bankruptcy court properly identified five separate bases for dismissing the cases:

- Failure to Consider Purchase Offer – The testimony of the Debtors' own witnesses established that they failed to give due consideration to an offer to purchase one of the Debtors' properties at a market price.

- Failure to File Tax Returns – The Debtors admitted that Dr. R.C. Samanta Roy Institute of Science and Technology, Inc. and certain of its Debtor-affiliates failed to file tax returns for 2005 forward.

- Continuing Loss to/Diminution of the Debtors' Estates, Absence of a Reasonable Likelihood of Rehabilitation – The Debtors' CEO testified that the Debtors were not making mortgage payments with respect to certain properties – in other words, the Debtors were not current with respect to their post-petition expenses related to administration of their estates. That fact alone establishes a continuing loss to, and diminution of, the Debtors' estates. As noted previously, it was also undisputed that the Debtors did not have a business plan in place at the time of the September 21 hearing.

- Cash Mismanagement – The record detailed an inappropriate system of handling cash that was arguably estate property (specifically, storing same in a safe located at a gas station) that is inconsistent with standards that both companies outside of bankruptcy proceedings and debtors in possession in bankruptcy proceedings are typically held to.

- Failure to Prepare Business Plan – The Debtors did not have a business plan prepared six months after they filed for bankruptcy protection.

Additionally, none of the Debtors' remaining arguments warrant reversal of the bankruptcy court's dismissal order.

ARGUMENT

Section 1112(b)(1) of the Bankruptcy Code provides that a bankruptcy court "shall"[5] convert or dismiss a case, whichever is in the best interests of creditors, if "cause" is established, absent "unusual circumstances . . . ." 11 U.S.C. § 1112(b)(1). Section 1112(b)(4) sets out examples of "cause" sufficient to justify conversion or dismissal. See 11 U.S.C. § 1112(b)(4) ("[f]or purposes of this subsection, the term 'cause' includes . . .") (emphasis added). Because the list in section 1112(b)(4) is not exclusive, the bankruptcy court may convert or dismiss a case for reasons other than the examples set forth in the statute. See 11 U.S.C. § 102(3) (establishing the rule of construction that "'includes' or 'including' are not limiting"); In re SGL Carbon Corp., 200 F.3d 154, 160 (3d Cir. 1999) ("Section 1112(b), by its terms, therefore, does not preclude consideration of unenumerated factors in determining 'cause.'"); 7 COLLIER ON BANKRUPTCY ¶ 1112.04[1] (15th ed. rev. 2008) ("[T]he court may also convert or dismiss a case for reasons that are not specifically enumerated in the section, provided that these reasons are sufficient to demonstrate the existence of cause.").

The Debtors contend that the bankruptcy court erred in dismissing their cases for two general reasons. First, the Debtors contend that the bankruptcy court erred in dismissing the cases prior to the expiration of their exclusive period to file a disclosure statement and plan of reorganization. Appellants' Br. at 7, 8. In order to facilitate the reorganization process, the Bankruptcy Code gives debtors in possession the exclusive right to file a plan (and solicit votes thereon) for a period of 120 days (filing) and 180 days (solicitation) after the inception of their cases. See 11 U.S.C. § 1121(b, c). These "exclusive" periods to file a plan and solicit votes thereon may be extended by the bankruptcy court for "cause," subject to certain limitations. See 11 U.S.C. § 1121(d). At the time of the September 21 hearing, the Debtors' exclusive periods had been extended by prior court order(s) and had not expired. Appellants' Br. at 8.

[5] Prior to the enactment of The Bankruptcy Abuse Prevention and Consumer Protection Act of 2005, Pub. L. 109-8, 119 Stat. 23 (Apr. 20, 2005) (the "BAPCPA"), bankruptcy courts had greater discretion to deny relief under section 1112(b) following a determination that there was "cause" for dismissal or conversion. The Debtors do not appear to realize that the BAPCPA curtailed that discretion. Appellants' Br. at 7 ("A bankruptcy matter may be dismissed or converted pursuant to §1112 of the Bankruptcy Code if the movant establishes cause.").

The Debtors' argument that their exclusive periods preclude dismissal of their cases conflicts with the plain language of the statute. The statute does not establish the Debtors' exclusive periods as a "safe harbor" from conversion or dismissal of their cases." To the contrary, the "failure to file a disclosure statement, or to file or confirm a plan, within the time fixed by this title or by order of the court" is but one of at least sixteen independent grounds for dismissal of the Debtors' cases. None of the cases cited by the Debtors stand for the proposition that, as a matter of law, the court cannot dismiss or convert a case until the plan exclusivity period has expired. All of the cases cited by the Debtors in their brief pre-date the BAPCPA amendment which curtailed the bankruptcy court's discretion. In addition, the express language of section 1112(b)(1) requires the bankruptcy court to grant relief if "cause" is established, absent "unusual circumstances."

Second, the Debtors contend that they were not given sufficient notice of the September 21 "show cause" hearing. Appellants' Br. at 9-11. The Debtors' contention is incorrect, as notice of the "show cause" hearing was sufficient. The requirement that there be "notice and a hearing" in section 1112(b)(1) "means after such notice as is appropriate in the particular circumstances, and such opportunity for hearing as is appropriate in the particular circumstances." 11 U.S.C. §

102(1)(A).[6] Here, the bankruptcy court properly set the "show cause" hearing for September 21 in light of its concerns regarding the Debtors' apparent mismanagement of their chapter 11 cases. Further, the Debtors' contention that notice was insufficient is curious, as the Debtors did not object to going forward at any time at or prior to the hearing on grounds that notice was inadequate.[7] The Debtors waived their notice objection by failing to claim inadequate notice before the bankruptcy court. See Kirk v. Raymark Indus., Inc., 61 F.3d 147, 156 (3d Cir. 1995) ("'[I]t is well established that failure to raise an issue in the district court constitutes waiver of that argument.'") (internal citation(s) omitted).

The bankruptcy court found at least five grounds for dismissal, and the Debtors' remaining arguments are unavailing.

A. The Debtors' Failure to Consider the Purchase Offer for the Subject Property Constitutes Gross Mismanagement of Their Estates and Unreasonable Delay That Is Prejudicial to Creditors.

At the September 14-15 hearing, Isaacson testified that the Debtors had not pursued the sale of the subject property because they were concerned that tipping the potential purchaser off about the existence of the Debtors' bankruptcy filings would scare the bid away. R.3 at 17:13 - 18:15. In the September 22 order dismissing the cases, the bankruptcy court found that the Debtors' explanation did not excuse their failure to pursue the purchase offer. R.2 at 3.

[6] While notice of a motion to convert or dismiss a chapter 11 case is ordinarily subject to a twenty-day notice requirement, see FED. R. BANKR. P. 2002(a)(4), "the court for cause shown may in its discretion with or without motion or notice order the period reduced." FED. R. BANKR. P. 9006(c)(1).

[7] In contrast to the Debtors' silence regarding the bankruptcy court's "show cause" order, the Debtors did respond in writing to papers filed by certain of the Debtors' secured lenders on procedural grounds. In their response, the Debtors asserted that they "have not had adequate notice of the relief sought by the Lenders, nor the opportunity to prepare therefor." R.17 (Debtors' Response to Carlyle Financial, LLC, et al.) at 2.

"Gross mismanagement of the estate" and unreasonable delay that is prejudicial to creditors are both grounds for relief under section 1112(b). "Gross mismanagement of the estate" is an enumerated example of "cause." See 11 U.S.C. § 1112(b)(4). Additionally, prior to the BAPCPA, section 1112(b) expressly listed "unreasonable delay by the debtor that is prejudicial to creditors" as an example of "cause." A leading treatise observes that, while the "unreasonable delay" example of "cause" is no longer expressly listed in section 1112(b), it still has vitality. See 7 COLLIER ON BANKRUPTCY ¶ 1112.04[5][c] (15th ed. rev. 2008) ("If it appears that a debtor has engaged in unreasonable delay that is prejudicial to creditors, this may justify a finding of cause to convert or dismiss the case regardless of whether the specific instance is not enumerated in revised section 1112(b).").

The bankruptcy court's conclusion that the Debtors had done too little, too late to pursue the purchase offer is supported by the record and does not constitute clear error. The Debtors did not advance discussions with the potential purchaser of the subject property for six months. The Debtors' proffered justification was fear that the potential purchaser might discover that the Debtors were bankrupt. R.3 at 17:13 - 18:15. The bankruptcy court acted within its discretion in concluding that the six-month delay constituted "unreasonable delay" under 11 U.S.C. § 1112(b)(4); the bankruptcy court properly refused to credit the Debtors' proffered justification for the delay, as it was an unacceptable excuse for a fiduciary charged with maximizing estate value. R.2 at 3.

B. The Debtors' Failure to File Tax Returns Constitutes Gross Mismanagement of Their Estates.

The Debtors' failure to file tax returns for pre-petition periods constitutes "gross mismanagement" of their estates. See In re Evans, 48 B.R. 46, 48 (Bankr. W.D. Tex. 1985); see also In re Euro-American Lodging Corp., 365 B.R. 421, 426 (Bankr. S.D.N.Y. 2007) ("'Gross mismanagement' includes the chronic failure to pay taxes, particularly where the failure leads to liability for interest and penalties."). Here, Debtor Dr. R.C. Samanta Roy Institute of Science and Technology is a not-for-profit, 501(c)(3) organization that, along with its subsidiaries, has not filed tax returns for the past four tax years (2005 - 2008). R.3 at 30:23 - 31:8, 32:9-25. Accordingly, the bankruptcy court's dismissal of the Debtors' cases due to their failure to discharge their tax reporting obligations was well within the bankruptcy court's discretion.

In their opening brief, the Debtors suggest that they were excused from filing tax returns because they had been subject to audit by the Internal Revenue Service since 2004. Appellants' Br. at 8. The Debtors introduced no evidence at the "show cause" hearing to support this suggestion. R.3. Further, the Debtors contend that, because Debtor Dr. R.C. Samanta Roy Institute of Science and Technology is a not-for-profit, 501(c)(3) organization, "the [Debtors] have no tax liability; the obligation to file the return is merely a reporting requirement." Appellants' Br. at 9. Again, nothing in the record supports the Debtors' assertion in this regard; to the contrary, there are penalties associated with the failure by a 501(c)(3) organization to timely file returns (Internal Revenue Service, Tax Information for Charitable Organizations, Filing Requirements, (Nov. 23, 2009) < http://www.irs.gov/charities/article/0,,id=96103,00.html>), and the Debtors did not establish that they have no tax liability. R.3.

Finally, the Debtors argue that dismissal under section 1112(b)(1) is not warranted because the failure to fulfill post-petition obligations to file tax returns or pay taxes – not pre-petition obligations – alone constitutes "cause" for dismissal. Appellants' Br. at 8. The cases cited by the Debtors do not support their argument. In re Pittsfield Weaving Co., 393 B.R. 271 (Bankr. D.N.H. 2008) is silent on the issue of whether a pre-petition failure to file tax returns or pay taxes constitutes "cause" for relief under section 1112(b)(1). In re Berryhill, 127 B.R. 427 (Bankr. N.D. Ind. 1991)[8] supports the United States Trustee's position. In Berryhill, the Debtors' cases were dismissed because the Debtors violated a court order requiring them to file past-due tax returns for pre-petition periods. See id. at 428.

C. There Is a Continuing Loss to/Diminution of the Debtors' Estates and the Absence of a Reasonable Likelihood of Rehabilitation.

Continuing loss to or diminution of the Debtors' estates and the absence of a reasonable likelihood of rehabilitation constitutes "cause" for relief under section 1112(b). Continuing negative cash flow is sufficient to establish a continuing loss to the Debtors' estates. See Loop Corp. v. United States Trustee (In re Loop Corp.), 379 F.3d 511, 515-16 (8th Cir. 2004). Isaacson admitted that Debtors Midwest Properties and R.C. Samanta Roy Institute of Science and Technology, Inc. were not paying all of their secured lenders post-petition. R.3 at 23:25 - 24:18; 14:24 - 15:4. The Debtors' failure to make the post-petition mortgage payments on all of their properties evidences negative cash flow sufficient to establish a continuing loss to, or a diminution of, the Debtors' estates.

Further, as the bankruptcy court found, a reasonable likelihood of rehabilitation is absent here because the Debtors did not carry their burden on this point at the September 21 "show cause" hearing. R.2 at 4. The Debtors did not have a business plan to share with the bankruptcy court to prove their viability. R.2 at 3.

[8] The citation to Berryhill in the Debtors' brief at page 8 (189 B.R. 483 (N.D. Ind. 1995)) is incorrect.

D. The Mismanagement of Funds That Were Arguably Estate Property Constitutes "Cause" for Dismissal.

The storage of funds that are arguably estate funds in a combination safe at a gas station constitutes an inadequate cash management practice. Courts have found "cause" to order the appointment of a chapter 11 trustee under section 1104(a)(1) of the Bankruptcy Code where current management is responsible for a failure to "institute formal internal accounting controls and effective, responsible management practices." In re State Capital Corp., 51 B.R. 400, 403 (Bankr. M.D. Fla. 1985); see In re New Orleans Paddlewheels, Inc., 350 B.R. 667, 679-80 (Bankr. E.D. La. 2006) (holding that the debtor's failure to properly maintain books and records, among other factors, warranted appointment of a trustee); In re McCorhill Publ'g., Inc., 73 B.R. 1013, 1017 (Bankr. S.D.N.Y. 1987) ("[W]hen a debtor fails to maintain complete and accurate financial records, or fails to substantiate undocumented transactions, so that there appears to be a confusion in the debtor's accounting system, the courts have viewed these facts as gross mismanagement and have directed the appointment of a Chapter 11 trustee."). The bankruptcy court acted within its discretion when it found that the Debtors' unorthodox cash management practice warranted dismissal of the Debtors' cases.

The Debtors suggest that, because there was a temporary restraining order prohibiting the use of cash against which certain secured creditors asserted a lien, the storage of the cash in a safe at one of their gas stations was permissible. Appellants' Br. at 18-19. The Debtors' position is a non sequitur. The bankruptcy court identified the cash mismanagement as "cause" for dismissal because the chosen manner for holding the cash did not comport with standard cash management practices outside of bankruptcy and fell woefully short of the conduct expected of fiduciaries in bankruptcy. R.2 at 3, 4. Further, several of the Debtors, their principals and/or employees are subject to the temporary restraining order and had actual custody of the cash. Finally, Debtors' counsel conceded at the "show cause" hearing that there was a "question" as to whether the funds were estate property. R.3 at 70:25 - 71:4. Under these circumstances, the bankruptcy court did not abuse its discretion in determining that there was a failure to properly safeguard the cash and that such failure warranted dismissal of the Debtors' cases.

E. The Debtors' Failure to Prepare a Business Plan Constitutes Unreasonable Delay That Is Prejudicial to Creditors.

At the September 21 "show cause" hearing, approximately six months into the Debtors' bankruptcy cases, the Debtors had not prepared a business plan. The Debtors' failure in this regard constituted an unreasonable delay that was prejudicial to creditors; by Isaacson's own admission, the Debtors were not going to make any progress negotiating with their various secured creditors without having completed a business plan. R.3 at 45:2 - 47:3; s*ee* 7 COLLIER ON BANKRUPTCY ¶ 1112.04[5][c] (15th ed. rev. 2008) ("If the debtor's failure to timely take some other important step in the reorganization process results in prejudice to creditors, such as the failure to timely formulate a business plan, the court may conclude that cause exists to convert or dismiss the case."). The bankruptcy court properly identified the Debtors' failure to timely prepare the business plan as "cause" warranting relief under section 1112(b).

F. The Debtors' Remaining Arguments Do Not Warrant Reversal.

The Debtors contend that the bankruptcy court erred by basing its decision upon alleged assertions not of record in the Debtors' cases. The Debtors' contention rests upon several erroneous premises. First, the Debtors erroneously posit that the bankruptcy court was obligated to adjudicate two motions for relief from the automatic stay that it had taken under advisement before it could consider whether relief under section 1112(b) was warranted. Appellants' Br. at 12. The bankruptcy court was free to rely upon the Debtors' admissions made during the course of the stay relief proceedings in addressing whether the Debtors' cases should remain in chapter 11. Further, the Debtors erroneously assume that the bankruptcy court relied upon the alleged assertions in rendering its decision.

Next, the Debtors argue that the bankruptcy court improperly relied upon the United States Trustee's oral motion to convert. Appellants' Br. at 16-18. The Debtors' argument lacks merit. First, the United States Trustee's oral motion in open court was properly tendered. See Fed. R. Bankr. P. 9013. Second, the Debtors did not lodge a procedural objection to the United States Trustee's oral motion at the September 21 hearing. R.3. Third, nothing in the dismissal order indicates that the bankruptcy court ruled upon the United States Trustee's motion; the dismissal order does not mention the motion. R.2.

Finally, the Debtors claim that the bankruptcy court erred in interpreting the Debtors' monthly operating reports. Appellants' Br. at 14-15. The Debtors assert that the bankruptcy court "only had before it the Monthly Operating Reports for July 2009." Appellants' Br. at 14. That assertion is incorrect; in issuing the "show cause" order, the bankruptcy court indicated that it had reviewed the Debtors' monthly operating reports without specifying a particular month. R.1 at 1. Regardless, even if the bankruptcy court had only examined the July 2009 reports, the inference that the Debtors want this Court to draw from that assertion – namely, that the bankruptcy court did not examine the Debtors' operating results for other, post-bankruptcy filing months – is incorrect. In addition to reporting on the month in question, the Debtors' monthly operating reports contain cumulative income statements which enabled evaluation of a particular month's results in light of the Debtors' overall operating performance during the bankruptcy cases. When the information on the Debtors' income statements is evaluated in the context of (i) the Debtors' admission that they had not paid certain of their secured lenders (R.3 at 23:25 - 24:18; 14:24 - 15:4) and (ii) the fact that the bankruptcy court had not approved any applications for compensation by estate professionals (R.4), it is clear that the bankruptcy court did not err in concluding that the monthly operating reports "show" continuing losses.

CONCLUSION

WHEREFORE the United States Trustee requests that this Court issue an order affirming the bankruptcy court's September 22, 2009 order.

ADDENDUM – TEXT OF 11 U.S.C. § 1112(b)

(b)(1) Except as provided in paragraph (2) of this subsection, subsection (c) of this section, and section 1104(a)(3), on request of a party in interest, and after notice and a hearing, absent unusual circumstances specifically identified by the court that establish that the requested conversion or dismissal is not in the best interests of creditors and the estate, the court shall convert a case to a case under chapter 7 or dismiss a case under this chapter, whichever is in the best interests of creditors and the estate, if the movant establishes cause.

(2) The relief provided in paragraph (1) shall not be granted absent unusual circumstances specifically identified by the court that establish that such relief is not in the best interests of creditors and the estate, if the debtor or another party in interest objects and establishes that –

(A) there is a reasonable likelihood that a plan will be confirmed within the timeframes established in sections 1121(e) and 1129(e) of this title, or if such sections do not apply, within a reasonable period of time; and

(B) the grounds for granting such relief include an act or omission of the debtor other than under paragraph 4(A) –

(i) for which there exists a reasonable justification for the act or omission; and

(ii) that will be cured within a reasonable period of time.

(3) The court shall commence the hearing on a motion under this subsection not later than 30 days after filing of the motion, and shall decide the motion not later than 15 days after commencement of such hearing, unless the movant expressly consents to a continuance for a specific period of time or compelling circumstances prevent the court from meeting the time limits established by this paragraph.

(4) For purposes of this subsection, the term ‘cause’ includes –

(A) substantial or continuing loss to or diminution of the estate and the absence of a reasonable likelihood of rehabilitation;

(B) gross mismanagement of the estate;

(C) failure to maintain appropriate insurance that poses a risk to the estate or the public;

(D) unauthorized use of cash collateral substantially harmful to 1 or more creditors;

(E) failure to comply with an order of the court;

(F) unexcused failure to satisfy timely any filing or reporting requirement established by this title or by any rule applicable to a case under this chapter;

(G) failure to attend the meeting of creditors convened under section 341(a) or an examination ordered under rule 2004 of the Federal Rules of Bankruptcy Procedure without good cause shown by the debtor;

(H) failure timely to provide information or attend meetings reasonably requested by the United States trustee (or the bankruptcy administrator, if any);

(I) failure timely to pay taxes owed after the date of the order for relief or to file tax returns due after the date of the order for relief;

(J) failure to file a disclosure statement, or to file or confirm a plan, within the time fixed by this title or by order of the court;

(K) failure to pay any fees or charges required under chapter 123 of title 28;

(L) revocation of an order of confirmation under section 1144;

(M) inability to effectuate substantial consummation of a confirmed plan;

(N) material default by the debtor with respect to a confirmed plan;

(O) termination of a confirmed plan by reason of the occurrence of a condition specified in the plan; and

(P) failure of the debtor to pay any domestic support obligation that first becomes payable after the date of the filing of the petition.

STATEMENT OF JURISDICTION

This appeal is taken from a final order entered by the United States District Court for the District of Delaware, which affirmed a final order of the United States Bankruptcy Court for the District of Delaware. The bankruptcy court had jurisdiction over this chapter 11 proceeding under 28 U.S.C. § 157(a). The district court had appellate jurisdiction over the bankruptcy court's final order under 28 U.S.C. § 158(a)(1). This appeal was timely filed on May 28, 2010. This Court has jurisdiction over the district court's final order entered May 25, 2010, under 28 U.S.C. §§ 158(d) and 1291.

STATEMENT OF THE ISSUE PRESENTED

The sole issue on appeal is whether the district court erred in determining that the bankruptcy court did not abuse its discretion in finding that cause existed under 11 U.S.C. § 1112(b)(1) to dismiss the debtors' bankruptcy cases, when such finding was supported by ample evidence in the record.

STATEMENT OF THE CASE

On March 16, 2009, the Dr. R.C. Samanta Roy Institute of Science and Technology, Inc., and certain of its subsidiaries (collectively the "Debtors") filed voluntary petitions for relief under chapter 11 of the Bankruptcy Code. Bankr. Ct. Dkt. 1.[1] On September 14 and 15, 2009, the bankruptcy court held a hearing on a secured creditor's motion for relief from the automatic stay. J.A. 0073-478 (transcript); See 11 U.S.C. § 362. The day following the hearing, September 16, 2009, the bankruptcy court issued an order directing the Debtors to appear at a hearing on September 21, 2009, to show cause why the court should not either dismiss the Debtors' cases or order the appointment of a chapter 11 trustee. J.A. 0899-90.

The September 21, 2009 hearing was attended by counsel for Roberta A. DeAngelis, the United States Trustee for Region 3, who was then the Acting United States Trustee for Region 3 (the "United States Trustee"),[2] counsel for the Debtors, and counsel for certain of the Debtors' creditors,.

On September 22, 2009, the bankruptcy court issued an order dismissing the cases. J.A. 0006-10. On October 2, 2009, the Debtors filed a notice of appeal to the District Court for the District of Delaware. J.A. 980-83.

On May 25, 2010, after the appeal was fully briefed, the district court entered an order affirming the bankruptcy court’s order. J.A. 0004-5. On May 28, 2010, the Debtors filed a notice of appeal to this Court. J.A. 0001-3.

The bankruptcy court’s dismissal order was stayed through the district court appeal process. See Bankr. Ct. Dkt. 306 (order of 10/19/09); Dist. Ct. Dkt. 12 (order of 10/26/09). However, both the district court and this Court denied the Debtors’ motions for a stay pending resolution of the appeal to this Court. See Dist. Ct. Dkt. 50 (6/7/10 Order); Ct. App. 7/1/10 Order.

On July 26, 2010, the Debtors Midwest Oil of Minnesota LLC and Midwest Properties of Shawano, LLC withdrew their appeal to this Court. On that same date, Midwest Oil of Minnesota LLC filed a new bankruptcy case in the Bankruptcy Court for the District of Minnesota.[3] Midwest Properties of Shawano, LLC had filed a new bankruptcy case in the Bankruptcy Court for the Eastern District of Wisconsin on July 13, 2010, prior to withdrawing its appeal.[4] The remaining Debtors continue to be Appellants in this appeal.

STATEMENT OF APPROPRIATE STANDARD OF APPELLATE REVIEW

This appeal presents a question of whether the bankruptcy court abused its discretion in finding cause that required dismissal of the Debtors' bankruptcy cases under 11 U.S.C. § 1112(b)(1). See In re SGL Carbon Corp., 200 F.3d 154, 159 (3d Cir. 1999) (dismissal of chapter 11 case "is committed to the sound discretion of the bankruptcy or district court"). 11 U.S.C. § 1112(b).

STATEMENT OF FACTS

On March 16, 2009, the Debtors filed voluntary petitions under chapter 11 of the Bankruptcy Code and, upon doing so, became debtors in possession.[5] Bankr. Ct. Dkt. 1 (petition). The Debtors' operations are based in Shawano, Wisconsin. J.A. 0030 (Isaacson Aff.) In their filings with the bankruptcy court, the Debtors described their business as "property acquisition and management, sales of gasoline and petroleum products, and funding for charitable activities." Id. One Debtor, Midwest Oil of Shawano, LLC, is an operating entity. J.A. 1005 (9/21/10 Tr. 22:8-12). The other Debtors are holding companies that own real property, which they lease to the Debtors' wholly-owned, non-debtor subsidiaries, as well as to entities with no connection to the Debtors. J.A. 1005, 1023-25 (9/21/10 Tr. 22:8-12; 40:10-42:5). Affiliates of the Debtors operated two hotels, gas stations, an amusement park/racetrack for motorized carts, and a fudge shop on Debtor-owned properties. J.A. 1005-08 (9/21/10 Tr. 22-25).

Vermillion's Lift-Stay Motion

On May 14, 2009, Vermillion State Bank ("Vermillion"), a secured creditor of the Debtor Midwest Oil of Minnesota LLC, sought relief from the automatic stay with respect to real property located at 3355 Hadley Avenue, Oakdale, Minnesota (the "Oakdale Property").[6] Bankr. Ct. Dkt. 109. That motion was amended on June 8, 2009 (the "Lift-Stay Motion"). J.A. 003747. In its Lift-Stay Motion, Vermillion stated that it had foreclosed on the Oakdale Property, but a sheriff's sale scheduled for April 7, 2009 was stayed by the Debtors' bankruptcy filings. J.A. 0038-39, at ¶¶ 16, 18.

The Hearing on Vermillion's Lift-Stay Motion

The Debtors objected to the Lift-Stay Motion. J.A. 0048-64. On September 14 and 15, 2009, a contested evidentiary hearing was held (the "Lift-Stay Hearing"). J.A. 0073-0478. At the Lift-Stay Hearing on [6] Under the Bankruptcy Code, the filing of the Debtors' bankruptcy petitions gave rise to an "automatic stay" in each case, which generally prohibits creditors from commencing or pursuing civil actions against the Debtors or their assets. See 11 U.S.C. § 362. Relief from the automatic stay may be granted with respect to property, if, inter alia, the creditor's interest in the property is not adequately protected, if the debtor does not have equity in the property, or if the property is not necessary to an effective reorganization. See 11 U.S.C. § 362(d).

September 14, 2009, the Debtors' Chief Executive Officer, Naomi Isaacson, testified that the Debtors had operated the Oakdale Property as a gas station and convenience store. J.A. 0341-42, 0345 (Tr. 269:24–270:23; 273:13-16). The property had been vacant since it was burglarized in October 2008. J.A. 347 (Tr. 275:13-19). In addition, the gas pumps on the property had been removed due to a dispute with the prior tenant, who had leased the pumps. J.A. 0341-42 (Tr. 269:24–270:9). Ms. Isaacson further testified that approximately $42,000 in unpaid real estate taxes was due on the Oakdale Property, and that the Debtors had failed to make any post-petition tax payments or mortgage payments related to the property. J.A. 0090-91 (Tr. 18:20–19:9).

An expert witness produced by the Debtors at the Lift-Stay Hearing, Steven T. Hosch, testified that the market value of the Oakdale Property was $2.55 million, after subtracting delinquent taxes. J.A. 0164 (Tr. 92:12-24). Mr. Hosch further testified that the Debtors had received an offer from the "development arm" of the Walgreens retail pharmacy chain to purchase the Oakdale Property for $2.5 million (J.A. 0193-94, 196 (Tr. 121:21- 122:2; Tr. 124:3-24)), which he believed established a "floor to value" ranging between $2 million and $2.7 million for the Oakdale Property's highest and best use. J.A. 0159, 0193-94 (Tr. 87:11-22; 121:21–122:18). Even though Walgreens' offer fell within the Debtors' own expert's value range, Ms. Isaacson testified that she did not respond to the offer because the Debtors' board of directors had decided it wanted $7 million for the Oakdale Property. J.A. 0350-51 (Tr. 278:18–279:4).

At the close of the hearing on September 15, 2009, the bankruptcy court remarked that it was "disturbed with the testimony" with respect to, inter alia, the Debtors' failure to respond to the offer to purchase the long vacant, non-operating Oakdale Property "at a price which, by the debtors' own admission, is a price which reflects the value of this property." J.A. 0467-68 (Tr. 93:8–94:6). The bankruptcy court also noted that the Debtors had been in chapter 11 for six months with "virtually no activity in advancing toward confirmation or resolution of these cases." J.A. 0468 (Tr. 94:16-21). The bankruptcy court further expressed concern over the Debtors' continuing non-payment of taxes. J.A. 468-69 (Tr. 94:22-95:5). The bankruptcy court indicated that the facts presented at the Lift-Stay Hearing indicated, at least on a prima facie basis, "gross mismanagement and a breach of fiduciary duty to the creditors of these debtors," "substantial and continuing losses," and the lack of "any reasonable prospects for rehabilitation of these debtors." J.A. 0468 (Tr. 94:3-10). Therefore, the bankruptcy court stated that it would issue an order for a rule to show cause why it should not dismiss the Debtors' cases or appoint a chapter 11 trustee. Id. (Tr. 94:11-15).

The Bankruptcy Court's Show-Cause Order

The following day, September 16, 2009, the bankruptcy court issued an "order on rule to show cause" directing the Debtors to appear in court on September 21, 2009, at which time they "must show cause why the Court should not dismiss the cases or appoint a Chapter 11 Trustee." J.A. 899-90 (the "Show-Cause Order"). The Show-Cause Order also provided explicit notice to the Debtors as to certain particular issues that prompted the September 21 hearing:

- The Debtors' "refus[al] to even consider" the offer to purchase the Oakdale Property;
- The fact that the "Monthly Operating Reports indicate that Debtors are operating at a continuing loss;"
- A concern that the "Debtors' substantial or continuing loss to or diminution of the estate maybe [sic] the result of gross mismanagement and breach of fiduciary duty;" and
- The Debtors' "prospects for rehabilitation."

Id.

The Debtors did not seek to adjourn the September 21, 2009 hearing due to insufficient notice, nor did their witnesses or counsel indicate at the September 21, 2009 hearing that they were not prepared to fully address the issues raised by the Show-Cause Order. See J.A. 0984-1073 (9/21/09 Transcript).

The September 21, 2009, Show-Cause Hearing

At the September 21, 2009, hearing on the Show-Cause Order (the "Show-Cause Hearing"), the Debtors' Chief Executive Officer, Ms. Isaacson, testified that she did not respond to Walgreen's offer to purchase the Oakdale Property because she thought that the Debtors' negotiating power would be weakened if Walgreen's learned that the Debtors had filed for bankruptcy protection. J.A. 1000-01 (Tr. 17:13–18:15). She also testified that, subsequent to the Lift-Stay Hearing, she had finally responded to Walgreens and advised them that the Debtors were now willing to sell the Oakdale Property for $2.7 million. J.A. 1001 (Tr. 18:16-19).

Ms. Isaacson further testified that, at the outset of the bankruptcy cases, she had approached a number of potential lenders to seek financing for the Debtors in their bankruptcy cases, but the potential lenders all refused to consider lending money until the Debtors had formulated a business plan. J.A. 1028-29, 1037 (Tr. 45:2–46:14; 54:13-24). Nevertheless, as of the Show-Cause Hearing six months into the case, the Debtors still had not formulated the business plan that would be required to obtain post-petition financing. J.A. 1029-30 (Tr. 46:15–47:3). The Debtors had an application pending to retain a financial advisor to assist with preparing a business plan, but that application had not been filed until August 18, 2009, after the bankruptcy cases had been pending for five months. See Bankr. Ct. Dkt. No. 235; J.A. 1047-49 (Tr. 64: 20-66:10).

The bankruptcy court questioned Ms. Isaacson regarding the Debtors' operations as reflected in the Debtors' monthly operating reports,[7] and stated that the July reports, which were the most recent ones filed, "show losses for virtually each of the operations." J.A. 1004-05 (Tr. 21:21–22:3). Neither Ms. Isaacson nor any other witness called by the Debtors during the Show-Cause Hearing challenged or disagreed with the court's assertion that the monthly operating reports showed that the Debtors were incurring losses; indeed, Ms. Isaacson admitted that, of 23 loans secured by liens on the Debtors' property, the Debtors were only making post-petition payments on 14 or 17 of them. J.A. 0997-98 (Tr. 14:24–15:5). The Debtors' proffered reason for incurring continuing unpaid post-petition obligations on the remaining properties was that the Debtors believed there was equity in those properties.[8] J.A. 0998 (Tr. 15:9-12). Moreover, as to the properties on which the Debtors received rent, Ms. Isaacson testified that the rents received exceeded the mortgage payments only “slightly,” if at all. J.A. 1021 (Tr. 38:4-8).

Ms. Isaacson also testified that the Debtors were unable to pay the ongoing operating expenses of their amusement park/racetrack operations. J.A. 1008-10 (Tr. 25:13-27:20). Employees worked without pay, and board members made “contributions” to pay certain expenses out-of-pocket, including event-related insurance, utilities, and food costs. Id. The Debtors even had to turn down potentially profitable opportunities for the racetrack due to insufficient funds to cover the cost of insuring large events. J.A. 1009 (Tr. 26:11-22).

Ms. Isaacson further testified that the Debtors had not filed tax returns since 2004, and were in the midst of being audited by the Internal Revenue Service. J.A. 1013-14, 1035 (Tr. 30:15–31:8; 52:7-11). Although the Dr. R.C. Samanta Roy Institute of Science and Technology, Inc. is a not-for-profit entity, the other Debtors are not; with a couple of exceptions, the other Debtors filed a combined tax return with the Dr. R.C. Samanta Roy Institute of Science and Technology because they were wholly-owned, single member entities. J.A. 1014, 1015 (Tr. 31:24-25; 32:9-13).

With regard to the Debtors' cash management, Ms. Isaacson disclosed for the first time in her testimony at the Show-Cause Hearing that approximately $60,000 of cash proceeds from the amusement park/racetrack operations were being stored in a safe located at one of the gas stations owned by the Debtors. J.A. 1040-45 (Tr. 57:14–62:8). Ms. Isaacson testified that she saw "no reason" to deposit the money rather than store it in a safe. J.A. 1041-42 (Tr. 58:19 – 59:2). Ms. Isaacson also testified that no ledger was kept for the monies in the safe, nor were the monies regularly inventoried. J.A. 1041(Tr. 59:13-18). In addition, Ms. Isaacson testified that, while the gas station was open 24 hours a day, it had no security. J.A. 1044-45 (Tr. 61:19–62:5).

Debtors' counsel acknowledged at the Show-Cause Hearing that there was "a question . . . as to whether or not [the money in the safe at the gas station] is debtor or non-debtor money." J.A. 1054 (Tr. 71:3-4). The bankruptcy court directed the Debtors to move the funds from the safe to a bank account, and the Debtors agreed to do so. J.A. 1053-54 (Tr. 70:12–71:09).

After the close of the evidence, counsel to the United States Trustee orally moved “for the relief that’s cited in [the] Show Cause Order.” J.A. 1056 (Tr. 73:20-22). The oral motion was based on Ms. Isaacson’s testimony, and highlighted (i) the Debtors’ continuing loss to or diminution of the estate, (ii) the Debtors’ failure to establish a reasonable likelihood of rehabilitation, and (iii) the Debtors’ failure to previously disclose the cash being held in the safe. J.A. 1056-59 (Tr. 73:20–76:16). The Debtors did not object, procedurally or otherwise, to the United States Trustee’s oral motion at the Show-Cause Hearing. J.A. 1056-59 (Tr. 73:8-76:20).

The Bankruptcy Court’s Dismissal Order

On September 22, 2009, the bankruptcy court issued an order dismissing the Debtors’ cases (the “Dismissal Order”). J.A. 0006-10. In the Dismissal Order, the bankruptcy court set forth a number of factual findings of “cause” to dismiss the cases under Section 1112(b), including the following:

- The “Debtors have, beyond cavil, abused the bankruptcy process” (J.A. 0009);

- The Debtors “belatedly responded to the interested purchaser but only in the face of the Show Cause Order,” which caused the bankruptcy court “concern regarding other lost or delayed opportunities and . . . Debtors inattention to actions [they] could or should be taking to market its assets” (J.A. 0008);

- The Debtors "have not filed tax returns since 2004, including the return for 2008 which was due after the petition date" (J.A. 0007);

- The "Debtors Monthly Operating Reports reveal that they are suffering continuing losses. Despite those losses, they do not have a business plan and therefore were unable at the hearing to meet their burden of proving a reasonable likelihood of rehabilitation" (J.A. 0007-8); and

- The Debtors' previously undisclosed storage of approximately $60,000 in cash in a gas station safe constituted "not only gross mismanagement but, as well, a lack of candor" (J.A. 0008).

The District Court's Order

On October 2, 2009, the Debtors filed a notice of appeal of the Dismissal Order to the District Court for the District of Delaware. J.A. 0980-83. After the parties fully briefed the appeal (J.A. 1094-1135), the district court affirmed the Dismissal Order by order entered on May 25, 2010. J.A. 0004-05. The district court's order expressly found that "dismissal was not an abuse of discretion and was appropriate for the reasons stated in the Bankruptcy Court's Order of Dismissal." J.A. 0004. The district court's order further held that the bankruptcy court "properly found gross mismanagement" warranting dismissal "based upon, among other things: 1) the debtors' failure to consider the purchase offer for the property located in Oakdale, Minnesota; 2) the debtors' failure to file tax returns both before and after the filing of their petition; and 3) the debtors' failure to report and account for nearly $60,000 in cash they were holding in a gas station safe." Id., n.1. The district court further found the Debtors' assertions that the bankruptcy court committed legal error "are without merit." Id.

SUMMARY OF ARGUMENT

Under Section 1112(b), a bankruptcy court "shall" convert or dismiss a case, whichever is in the best interests of creditors and the estate, if cause is established, unless the debtor can show "unusual circumstances." 11 U.S.C. § 1112(b). Here, the bankruptcy court found that the following grounds constituted cause to dismiss the Debtors' cases: (i) the Debtors were experiencing continuing loss or diminution of their estates; (ii) the Debtors had still not obtained post-petition financing six months after filing for chapter 11 because they still had not prepared a business plan, and so had no reasonable likelihood of rehabilitation; (iii) the Debtors had not considered Walgreens' offer to purchase the Oakdale Property, and so had engaged in gross mismanagement, unreasonable delay prejudicial to creditors, and a breach of their fiduciary duties; (iv) the Debtors engaged in further gross mismanagement by storing approximately $60,000 in a gas station safe, which money was potentially estate funds but had not been disclosed to the court or the United States Trustee; and (v) the Debtors had failed to file tax returns since 2004, including the post-petition return due for 2008.

All of the bankruptcy court's findings were based on the testimony of the Debtors' Chief Executive Officer at a hearing on a motion for automatic-stay relief filed by a secured creditor and the hearing on the bankruptcy court's ensuing Show-Cause Order. The bankruptcy court's findings, therefore, were not clearly erroneous. As the Debtors were unable to prove the "unusual circumstances" required to avoid dismissal under Section 1112(b)(1) and (2), the bankruptcy court's dismissal of the Debtors' cases was not an abuse of discretion.

None of the Debtors' arguments on appeal support reversal of the bankruptcy court's decision. First, the Debtors argue that the bankruptcy court's interpretation of their monthly operating reports was erroneous, but ignore that at the Show-Cause Hearing the Debtors' own witness did not disagree with the bankruptcy court's characterization and admitted that the Debtors were not paying their post-petition obligations every month. Second, while the Debtors claim that they chose not to market the Oakdale Property and to keep the prospective purchaser ignorant of their chapter 11 status for strategic reasons, the Debtors' decision to hold out for a price three times the value assessed by the Debtors' own expert constitutes gross mismanagement, unreasonable delay, and a breach of fiduciary duty. Third, the Debtors assert that the money in the gas station safe might not be estate property, but until the court determine ownership of the money, the Debtors should have safeguarded it and disclosed the amount and location to the court and the United States Trustee. Fourth, the Debtors introduced no evidence at the Show-Cause Hearing to support their current claim that they were not yet required to file a 2008 federal tax return, and therefore their failure to file that return constitutes cause to dismiss. Fifth, contrary to the Debtors' argument, there is nothing in the Bankruptcy Code that precludes a court from dismissing a case before the expiration of a debtor's exclusive period to file a plan of reorganization, if it is in the best interests of creditors and the estate to do so. Sixth, the Debtors assert that the bankruptcy court erred by considering facts learned during Lift-Stay Hearing in making its finding of cause, but there is no evidence that the court based its decision on anything other than the testimony provided by the Debtors' own witnesses. Seventh, the United States Trustee's oral motion at the Show-Cause Hearing was properly interposed, and, in any event, there is no evidence that the court relied on the United States Trustee's oral motion.

The Debtors also argue that they did not receive adequate notice of the Show-Cause Hearing, but that argument is misguided. As an initial matter, the Debtors never raised the issue at the bankruptcy court, they expressed a readiness to proceed, and they provided considerable testimony. As a result, the Debtors waived the issue of the reasonableness of notice. In any event, the Show-Cause Order on its face was very clear that dismissal under Section 1112(b) would be considered at the hearing, in light of the Debtors' continuing losses, questionable prospects for rehabilitation, failure to consider Walgreens' offer to purchase the Oakdale Property, gross mismanagement and breach of fiduciary duty. As the Debtors had sufficient notice of the matters to be considered, their due process arguments are groundless.

As the bankruptcy court's findings of fact were based on the record and the Debtors have not shown that dismissal was not in the best interests of creditors and the estate, the bankruptcy court's decision to dismiss the Debtors' cases was not an abuse of discretion, and should be affirmed.

ARGUMENT

I. THE BANKRUPTCY COURT'S FINDING OF CAUSE TO DISMISS WAS NOT AN ABUSE OF DISCRETION.

A. Section 1112(b) Requires Conversion or Dismissal Once Cause is Established, Unless the Debtor Shows "Unusual Circumstances."

Section 1112(b)(1) provides that a bankruptcy court "shall" convert or dismiss a case, whichever is in the best interests of creditors and the estate, if "cause" is established. Although Section 1112(b)(4) provides a list of findings that may constitute cause, that list is nonexclusive. See 11 U.S.C. § 1112(b)(4) ("[f]or purposes of this subsection, the term 'cause' includes . . .") (emphasis added). As a result, the bankruptcy court may, at its discretion, find cause to convert or dismiss a case for reasons other than those set forth in the statute. See 11 U.S.C. § 102(3) (in the Bankruptcy Code, the terms "'includes' or 'including' are not limiting"); In re SGL Carbon Corp., 200 F.3d 154, 160 (3d Cir. 1999) ("Section 1112(b), by its terms, therefore, does not preclude consideration of unenumerated factors in determining 'cause.'"); 7 Alan N. Resnick & Henry J. Sommer, Collier on Bankruptcy ¶ 1112.04[1] at 1112-20 (16th ed. rev. 2009) ("[T]he court may also convert or dismiss a case for reasons that are not specifically enumerated in the section, provided that these reasons are sufficient to demonstrate the existence of cause.").

The statutorily-enumerated factors constituting cause to convert or dismiss include "substantial or continuing loss to or diminution of the estate and the absence of a reasonable likelihood of rehabilitation" (Section 1112(b)(4)(A)), "gross mismanagement of the estate" (Section 1112(b)(4)(B)), and "failure timely to pay taxes owed after the date of the order for relief or to file tax returns due after the date of the order for relief" (Section 1112(b)(4)(I)).

In addition, a debtor's unreasonable delay may constitute cause to convert or dismiss. See 7 Alan N. Resnick & Henry J. Sommer, Collier on Bankruptcy ¶ 1112.04[5][c] at 1112-43 (16th ed. rev. 2009)("If it appears that a debtor has engaged in unreasonable delay that is prejudicial to creditors, this may justify a finding of cause to convert or dismiss the case regardless of whether the specific instance is not enumerated in revised section 1112(b).").

Furthermore, a chapter 11 debtor in possession is charged with certain powers and duties of a trustee, including "the trustee's fiduciary duty to maximize the value of the bankruptcy estate" and "the duty to protect and conserve property in its possession for the benefit of creditors." See Official Committee of Unsecured Creditors of Cybergenics Corp. v. Chinery, 330 F.3d 548, 573 (3d Cir. 2003) (en banc) (duty to maximize value of estate); In re Marvel Entertainment Grp., Inc., 140 F.3d 463, 474 (3d Cir. 1998) (duty to protect and conserve property in its possession); see also 11 U.S.C. § 1107 (duties of a debtor in possession); 11 U.S.C. § 1106 (duties of chapter 11 trustee); 11 U.S.C. § 704 (duties of a trustee). The failure to comply with the fiduciary duties of a debtor in possession constitutes cause to convert or dismiss under Section 1112(b). See, e.g., In re Nugelt, Inc., 142 B.R. 661, 666 (Bankr. D. Del. 1992) ("The court finds section 1112(b) cause based on misuse of estate funds and other breaches of the debtor-in-possession's fiduciary duty to the estate and its creditors."); In re Wells, 71 B.R. 554, 557 (Bankr. N.D. Ohio 1987) ("A chapter 11 debtor as debtor in possession has certain fiduciary duties, a dereliction of which will subject the case to dismissal.").

Once the bankruptcy court finds cause, the burden shifts to the debtor to prove under Section 1112(b)(1) "unusual circumstances" establishing that conversion or dismissal is not in the best interests of creditors and the estate, or to prove under Section 1112(b)(2) that "there is a reasonable likelihood that a plan will be confirmed . . . within a reasonable period of time" and that the debtor's failures other than "substantial or continuing loss to or diminution of the estate and the absence of a reasonable likelihood of rehabilitation" are subject to "a reasonable justification" and "will be cured within a reasonable period of time." See, e.g., In re Van Eck, 425 B.R. 54, 63 (Bankr. D. Conn. 2010) ("Once the movant has established 'cause' . . . , the burden shifts to the Debtor to establish the exceptions provided for by Section 1112(b)."); In re Gateway Access Solutions, Inc., 374 B.R. 556, 561 (Bankr. E.D. Pa. 2007) ("If the Movants establish 'cause,' then the burden shifts to the Debtor to prove it falls within the § 1112(b)(2) 'unusual circumstances' exception to § 1112(b)(1)'s mandatory conversion.").

B. The Bankruptcy Court's Finding of Cause to Dismiss Was Supported by the Record Developed at the Lift-Stay Hearing and Show-Cause Hearing.

1. The Evidence Before the Bankruptcy Court Supported the Finding of a Continuing Loss to or Diminution of the Debtors' Estates and the Absence of a Reasonable Likelihood of Rehabilitation.

Under Section 1112(b)(4)(A), "substantial or continuing loss to or diminution of the estate and the absence of a reasonable likelihood of rehabilitation" constitutes cause to dismiss a chapter 11 case. The bankruptcy court found that that the Debtors were "suffering continuing losses," "were unable at the hearing to meet their burden of proving a reasonable likelihood of rehabilitation," and "have been unable to obtain necessary financing without a business plan." J.A. 0007-08 (Dismissal Order). As the record before the bankruptcy court supported these factual findings, the dismissal of the Debtors' cases was not an abuse of discretion and should be affirmed.

a. The Debtors' Testimony Reveals Continuing Loss to or Diminution of Estate Assets.

When a debtor in possession cannot meet its post-petition obligations, the ensuing accumulation of unpaid expenses exemplifies a negative cash flow, which is sufficient to establish a continuing loss to or diminution of the estate. See Loop Corp. v. United States Trustee (In re Loop Corp.), 379 F.3d 511, 515-16 (8th Cir. 2004), cert. denied, 543 U.S. 1055 (2005).

The bankruptcy court found, based on the evidence introduced at the Lift-Stay Hearing, that the Debtors had a "precarious cash flow status" and "continuing operational loss," and based on the evidence introduced at the Show-Cause Hearing that "Debtors['] Monthly Operating Reports reveal that they are suffering continuing losses." J.A. 0006-07 (Dismissal Order). As a result, the bankruptcy court held that under Section 1112(b) "dismissal is mandatory." J.A. 0007.

The bankruptcy court's findings regarding the Debtors' cash flow and continuing losses were consistent with the evidence presented by the Debtors. At the Lift-Stay Hearing, the Debtors' Chief Executive Officer, Naomi Isaacson, testified that Debtor Midwest Oil of Minnesota LLC had not made any post-petition mortgage or real estate tax payments on the Oakdale Property. J.A. 0090-91 (9/14/09 Tr. 18:20–19:9). At the Show-Cause Hearing, the Debtors' Chief Executive Officer testified that Debtors Midwest Properties of Shawano LLC and R.C. Samanta Roy Institute of Science and Technology, Inc. were not paying all of their secured lenders post-petition. J.A. 0997-98, 1007-08 (Tr. 14:19–15:8; 23:25–24:18).

In addition, at the Show-Cause Hearing the bankruptcy court stated that the Debtors' July monthly operating reports "show losses for virtually each of the operations" and asked the Debtors' Chief Executive Officer to explain. J.A. 1004 (Tr. 21:21–22:3). In response, Ms. Isaacson did not disagree with the court's characterization of the content of the monthly reports, and she certainly did not testify that each of the Debtors was actually showing a net profit every month. To the contrary, she testified that Midwest Oil of Shawano "had kind of an unusual month in July due to some competition in the marketplace so hence the loss." J.A. 1007 (Tr. 24:1-3). Ms. Isaacson also testified that the Debtors had a decrease in rental income. Id. (Tr. 24:13-15). She further confirmed that the Debtors were only making mortgage payments to two-thirds of their lenders. Id. (Tr. 24:15-17). In addition, Ms. Isaacson testified that the Debtors did not have sufficient cash flow to fund their amusement park/racetrack operations, causing them to turn business away. J.A. 1008 (Tr. 25:18–27:12).

The Debtors argue in their opening brief that the bankruptcy court's interpretation of the monthly operating reports was inaccurate, and that at the Show-Cause Hearing the court only considered July 2009 reports rather than all of the reports filed through the entirety of the Debtors' cases. Appellants' Brief at 32. The Debtors' belief that the bankruptcy court viewed only the July 2009 operating reports appears to be based on the court's specific mention of those reports in its questioning of Ms. Isaacson at the Show-Cause Hearing. See Appellants' Brief at 32, citing J.A. 1004 (Tr. 21). But in the Show-Cause Order itself, the bankruptcy court indicated that it had reviewed the monthly operating reports in identifying the "continuing loss" that caused the court concern, without specifying a particular month or months. J.A. 0899. The Debtors had ample opportunity to present evidence that they were operating profitably – if such evidence exists – but they did not do so. As a result, the record before the bankruptcy court reflected only Ms. Isaacson's testimony acknowledging continued losses and diminution of the Debtors' estates, with no evidence to the contrary.

Ms. Isaacson's testimony at the Lift-Stay Hearing and Show-Cause Hearing indicates that the Debtors' cash flow problems were such that they were unable to pay post-petition obligations as they became due, which constitutes a continuing loss. In addition, her testimony regarding "competition in the marketplace," the decrease in rental income, and the turning away of business all indicate a diminution of the Debtors' estates. As a result, the bankruptcy court's decision to dismiss the Debtors' cases was supported by the record, and should be affirmed.

b. The Debtors' Testimony Reveals the Absence of a Reasonable Likelihood of Rehabilitation.

The second element of "cause" under Section 1112(b)(4)(A) is "the absence of a reasonable likelihood of rehabilitation." The bankruptcy court found that the Debtors still did not have a business plan and could not show a reasonable likelihood of rehabilitation. J.A. 0007-08 (Dismissal Order). The court's findings are supported by the admission of the Debtors' Chief Executive Officer that, six months after filing for bankruptcy, the Debtors still did not have a business plan, despite the fact that all potential post-petition lenders had insisted that they would not even consider lending to the Debtors in the absence of a business plan. J.A. 1-28-30, 1038 (9/21/09 Tr. 45:2-47:3; 55:13-24). The bankruptcy court acknowledged that the Debtors had recently hired a financial advisor to help develop a business plan, but found that they had waited too long to do so, and during the interim their businesses continued to falter. J.A. 0008.

In light of the testimony, it was not clear error for the bankruptcy court to find that the Debtors' continuing losses, "when joined with the absence of a plan to rehabilitate and lengthy inaction in obtaining financing or bringing efforts to the Court for maximizing the value of their assets for the benefit of creditors," necessitated dismissal. J.A. 0009.

2. The Debtors' Failure to Consider Walgreen's Offer for the Oakdale Property Constitutes Gross Mismanagement, Unreasonable Delay Prejudicial to Creditors, and Breach of Fiduciary Duties.

Under Section 1112(b)(4)(B), "gross mismanagement of the estate" constitutes cause to dismiss a chapter 11 case. In addition, unreasonable delay prejudicial to creditors and breach of fiduciary duty may constitute cause to dismiss. The bankruptcy court found that the Debtors had initially "not responded to a party interested in purchasing valuable real property which was vacant and therefore a financial drain rather than an income producing asset," and had "belatedly responded to the interested purchaser but only in the face of the Show Cause Order." J.A. 0007-08 (Dismissal Order). This caused the bankruptcy court "concern about other lost or delayed opportunities and, moreover, to Debtors['] inattention to actions [they] could or should be taking to market [their] assets." J.A. 0008. The bankruptcy court held that the Debtors' "lengthy inaction in . . . bringing efforts to the Court for maximizing the value of their assets," combined with its other factual findings, necessitated dismissal as they were "at odds with the requirements for maintaining a Chapter 11 case." J.A. 0009.

At the Lift-Stay Hearing, the Debtors' Chief Executive Officer testified that she had not pursued an offer from Walgreens to purchase the Oakdale Property – a vacant, non-operating gas station on which the Debtors were not making mortgage or real estate tax payments. J.A. 0090-91, 0347, 0350-51 (9/14/09 18:20-19:19, 275:13-19, 278:18 – 279:4). The testimony further established that the rejected offer price of $2.5 million was within the range of reasonableness established by the Debtors' own expert. See J.A. 0164, 0193-94 (9/14/09 Tr. 92:8-24; 121:21-122:18). Nevertheless, Walgreens' offer was not pursued because, for some unknown reason, the Debtors' board of directors was holding out for $7 million – an amount nearly three times what their own expert determined the property was worth. See J.A. 0350-51 (9/14/09 Tr. 278:18-279:4). The Debtors also did not pursue Walgreens' offer because they were concerned that their negotiating power would weaken once Walgreens learned they were in bankruptcy. J.A. 1000-01 (9/21/09 Tr. 17:13–18:15). It was only after the Lift-Stay Hearing that the Debtors responded to Walgreens' offer. J.A. 1001 (9/21/10 Tr. 18:16-19).

As a fiduciary, the Debtors were charged with maximizing the value of their estates for the benefit of their creditors; since they did not pursue reasonable offers to purchase estate assets, they breached their fiduciary duty. In addition, the Debtors' failure to pursue Walgreens' offer constitutes both "gross mismanagement of the estate" and unreasonable delay that is prejudicial to creditors. And, at the Show-Cause Hearing, the Debtors were unable to prove that their failures as a fiduciary are subject to a "reasonable justification" and "will be cured within a reasonable period of time," as required by Section 1112(b)(2). As a result, the bankruptcy court's dismissal of the Debtors' cases was not an abuse of discretion. See, e.g., In re Robino, 243 B.R. 472, 488 (Bankr. N.D. Ala. 1999) (case dismissed due to debtor's failure to market properties to "reap maximum benefits"); In re Halpern, 229 B.R. 67, 75 (Bankr. E.D.N.Y. 1999) (case dismissed where debtor was given ample opportunity to sell estate's real property but chose not to do so).

The Debtors argue in the Appellants' Brief at 34 that their reason for not responding to Walgreens' offer boils down to one word: "strategy." Of course, this is the problem – as a fiduciary for the estate, it was incumbent upon the Debtors to maximize the value of the estates, not to engage in gamesmanship. As any sale of the Oakdale Property would be subject to court approval under 11 U.S.C. § 363, there would have been no way to sell the property during the chapter 11 case without all parties involved being keenly aware that the Debtors were in bankruptcy.

As a result, Debtors' argument that they refused to market the Oakdale Property in order to increase its sale value makes no sense. See Appellants' Brief at 35. By refusing to negotiate with prospective purchasers while they were in bankruptcy, the Debtors ensured that they would never sell the Oakdale Property assets while they were in bankruptcy – so the bankruptcy estates never stood to benefit from the "strategic" inaction of their fiduciary. Either the Debtors planned to surreptitiously sell their assets outside of the knowledge of the bankruptcy court and creditors (to unwitting purchasers ignorant of the Debtors' bankruptcy filing), or they never actually planned to sell their assets for the benefit of creditors during the bankruptcy case. Either way, for six months they engaged in gross mismanagement, unreasonable delay, and breach of fiduciary duty.

As the bankruptcy court's finding that the Debtors had not timely responded to Walgreens' offer to purchase the Oakdale Property was supported by the record, it was not clearly erroneous. This finding led the bankruptcy court to understandable concern about other opportunities that may have been lost or delayed due to the Debtors' inattention to marketing its assets. J.A. 0008 (Dismissal Order). The Debtors did not carry their burden to show "unusual circumstances" that made it in the best interests of creditors and the estate to allow the cases to continue in chapter 11. In light of this record, the bankruptcy court's dismissal of the Debtors' case was not an abuse of discretion, and should be affirmed.

3. The Mismanagement of Funds That Were Arguably Estate Property Constitutes "Cause" for Dismissal.

In furtherance of its fiduciary duties, a debtor in possession must safeguard estate funds, or money that might ultimately be found to be estate funds, by "mak[ing] such deposit or investment of the money . . . as will yield the maximum reasonable net return on such money, taking into account the safety of such deposit or investment." 11 U.S.C. § 345(a). Thus, "safeguarding cash is important in every case, particularly when the debtor is a business of any sort." 3 Alan N. Resnick & Henry J. Sommer, Collier on Bankruptcy ¶ 345.02 at 345-4 (16th ed. rev. 2009). As a result, a debtor in possession "should not allow funds to remain in non-interest bearing accounts for any length of time." Id. ¶ 345.03 at 345-6; cf. Judge v. Pincus, Verlin, Hahn & Reich, P.C. (In re J & J Record Distrib. Corp.), 84 B.R. 364, 369 (E.D. Pa. 1988) (counsel to debtor in possession has affirmative duty to deposit or invest funds when it appears they will remain idle for a long period of time).

The bankruptcy court found that the Debtors were holding approximately $60,000 in a gas station safe, which had not previously been disclosed to the court or the United States Trustee. J.A. 0008 (Dismissal Order). The court found that "[s]uch 'cash management' constitutes not only gross mismanagement but, as well, a lack of candor." Id. Indeed, the court found that the Debtors' nondisclosure of these funds and the way they were maintained constituted "malfeasance." J.A. 0009.

In her testimony at the Show-Cause Hearing, Ms. Isaacson testified that the money kept in the safe was not maintained in a ledger or inventoried, and the gas station where it was stashed had no security. J.A. 1040 (Tr. 59:13-18); J.A. 1045 (Tr. 62:4-5). In addition, Debtors' counsel at the Show-Cause Hearing acknowledged that there was "a question . . . as to whether or not [the money in the safe at the gas station] is debtor or non-debtor money." J.A. 1054 (Tr. 71:3-4).

The Debtors argue in the Appellants' Brief at 38 that the funds at issue were "not conclusively owned" by the Debtors, as the bankruptcy court "had not yet ruled on the issue" as to whether the money was owned by the Debtors or a non-debtor affiliate. As a result, the Debtors felt they "were under no obligation to report" the existence of these funds to the bankruptcy court or the United States Trustee. Appellants' Brief at 37. In addition, as Ms. Isaacson testified, the Debtors felt no imperative to deposit the money rather than stash it in a safe, because, until the bankruptcy court ruled on ownership, the Debtors "couldn't use it." Appellants' Brief at 39 (citing J.A. 1041 (Tr. 58:21-22)).

To the extent that there was any question about whether these funds could possibly belong to one of the Debtors, they had to be safeguarded in an appropriate manner, such as depositing them in a bank account – not keeping $60,000 in cash in a safe in a gas station open 24 hours a day with no security. The Debtors were also required to account for all funds that came into their possession by reporting them in their monthly operating reports and other court filings, even if accompanied by a notation that there was a question as to whether the funds were owned by the Debtors. See 11 U.S.C. § 704(a)(2) (trustee must "be accountable for all property received"); 11 U.S.C. § 1106(a)(1) (making § 704(a)(2) applicable to chapter 11 trustees); 11 U.S.C. § 1107 (making § 1106(a)(1) applicable to debtors in possession).

In addition, the Debtors did not make any showing of "unusual circumstances" that made it better for creditors to keep the case in chapter 11 rather than dismiss it, as would be required under Section 1112(b)(1) to avoid dismissal. Similarly, the Debtors did not make a sufficient showing that their cash management was subject to a "reasonable justification" or would be "cured within a reasonable period of time," as would be required under Section 1112(b)(2) to avoid dismissal.

In light of the record developed at the Show-Cause Hearing, the bankruptcy court's dismissal of the Debtors' cases was not an abuse of its discretion and should be affirmed.

4. The Debtors' Chronic Failure to File Tax Returns Constitutes Cause to Dismiss.

Under Section 1112(b)(4)(I), the failure to pay taxes owed after the Debtors' chapter 11 petitions were filed, or to file tax returns due post-petition, constitutes cause to dismiss. The bankruptcy court found that the Debtors had failed to file tax returns since 2004, including the returns for 2008 – which became due after the Debtors filed their bankruptcy petitions. J.A. 0007 (Dismissal Order). As the record before the bankruptcy court supported this finding of fact, such finding was not clearly erroneous and the bankruptcy court's dismissal of the Debtors' cases was not an abuse of discretion.

The Debtors' Chief Executive Officer testified at the Show-Cause Hearing that the Debtors had not filed federal tax returns since 2004 (which included the 2008 returns that were due post-petition). J.A. 1013-14, 1015 (Tr. 30:23 - 31:8, 32:9-25). The Debtors' failure to file the 2008 tax return is statutory cause to dismiss under Section 1112(b)(4)(I). Furthermore, although the failure to file pre-petition tax returns is not included in Section 1112(b)'s nonexclusive list, it may still constitute cause to dismiss when combined with a number of other failings of a faithless fiduciary. As a result, the bankruptcy court did not abuse its discretion in dismissing the Debtors' cases under Section 1112(b)(4)(I).

The Debtors assert at page 24 of the Appellants' Brief that Section 1112(b)(4)(I) applies only to tax returns and tax payments for post-petition "periods." The Debtors' interpretation finds no support in the statutory language – the Debtors' 2008 income taxes were "owed," and their 2008 tax returns "due," after their March 16, 2009, filing date. The statute makes no mention of the period in which the taxes were incurred.

The Debtors' interpretation also finds no support in the cases cited in the Appellants' Brief at 24, neither of which stands for the proposition that a case cannot be dismissed for the failure to file tax returns for pre-petition periods that are due to be filed with the taxing authorities after the petition filing date. In In re Pittsfield Weaving Co., 393 B.R. 271, 274 (Bankr. D.N.H. 2008), the case was dismissed for nonpayment of $180,000 in "unpaid post-petition taxes"; the court did not state that the taxes were all incurred during post-petition periods, nor did it specify whether the taxes in question were income taxes, real estate taxes, or other taxes. In addition, the Pittsfield Weaving court made no reference to pre or post-petition tax returns. In In re Berryhill, 189 B.R. 463 (N.D. Ind. 1995), the case was dismissed for nonpayment of post-petition federal income taxes for 1993, in a chapter 11 case filed in September 1993; the IRS's motion was filed in 1994, and the court did not state that the taxes were all incurred during post-petition periods. Thus, Berryhill actually supports the United States Trustee's position. Given the fiduciary duties of a chapter 11 debtor in possession, it is no surprise that the Debtors were unable to find a case that says a debtor in possession may flout the tax laws and still avoid having its case converted or dismissed.

In addition, the Debtors assert in the Appellants' Brief at 24 that their 2008 tax returns were not yet due at the time of the Show-Cause Order, as they had received an extension. But the Debtors introduced no evidence at the Show-Cause Hearing to support this alleged "fact," so it cannot be used in this appeal to assess whether the bankruptcy court's factual findings were clearly erroneous. See J.A. 1013-14 (9/21/09 Tr. 30:23-31:1)(testimony of Ms. Isaacson that the Debtors "have not filed the current returns," but providing no testimony that such return was not yet due). The Debtors' attempt to introduce facts on appeal that were not before the bankruptcy court is improper, as "[t]he only proper function of a court of appeals is to review the decision below on the basis of the record that was before the [bankruptcy] court." Fassett v. Delta Kappa Epsilon (New York), 807 F.2d 1150, 1165 (3d Cir. 1986), cert. denied sub nom. Turgiss v. Fassett, 481 U.S. 1070 (1987). Filing a notice of appeal does not afford the Debtors a second chance to introduce evidence they never introduced at the Show-Cause Hearing.

Furthermore, the Debtors argue at page 24 of the Appellants' Brief that they had not filed tax returns since 2004 because they were in the midst of an IRS audit. But the Debtors cite no authority to support the theory that taxpayers under audit do not have to comply with their ongoing obligations to file tax returns and pay taxes.

The Debtors further assert at page 24 of their brief that they "have no income tax liability," and their "obligation to file the return is merely a reporting requirement," because Debtor Dr. R.C. Samanta Roy Institute of Science & Technology, Inc. is a not-for-profit organization under Internal Revenue Code section 501(c)(3) (26 U.S.C. § 501(c)(3)). This argument in misguided, as even a section 501(c)(3) organization may still be liable for tax on its unrelated business income, and it may still incur penalties for failing to timely file returns. See Internal Revenue Service, the Tax and Filing Requirements, http://www.irs.gov/publications/p598/ch02.html; Internal Revenue Service, Annual Exempt Organization Return: Penalties for Failure to File (page last reviewed or updated Nov. 13, 2009), http://www.irs.gov/charities/article/0,,id=152725,00.html. In any event, the Debtors have not established that they have no tax liability, and nothing in the record supports the Debtors' assertion in this regard.

As none of their explanations are satisfactory, the Debtors failed to demonstrate the "unusual circumstances" required by Section 1112(b)(1) to avoid dismissal. Similarly, the Debtors were unable to prove that their failures to pay taxes and file tax returns were subject to a "reasonable justification" and "will be cured within a reasonable period of time," as is required by Section 1112(b)(2) to avoid dismissal.

In sum, the bankruptcy court's dismissal of the Debtors' cases was not an abuse of the discretion in light of the Debtors' failure to file post-petition tax returns.

C. The Debtors' Remaining Arguments Do Not Support Reversal.

1. The Bankruptcy Court Did Not Err By Dismissing the Debtors' Cases Before the Expiration of the Exclusive Period to File a Plan.

The Debtors argue at pages 22 and 23 of the Appellants' Brief that the bankruptcy court erred as a matter of law by dismissing their cases before expiration of the exclusive period during which only the Debtors may file a plan of reorganization. Under 11 U.S.C. § 1121(b), "only the debtor may file a plan until after 120 days after the date of the order for relief." The exclusive period may be extended upon a showing of cause. See 11 U.S.C. § 1121(d). Nothing in this or any other section of the Bankruptcy Code, however, provides that a case cannot be dismissed during the exclusive period if, in the bankruptcy court's discretion, it finds that dismissal is in the best interests of creditors or the estate.

The Debtors' interpretation of 11 U.S.C. § 1121 as providing a "safe harbor" from dismissal in cases of continuing losses, gross mismanagement, and breach of fiduciary duty is untenable. All of the cases cited by the Debtors are distinguishable based on the grounds on which dismissal was sought, and none stand for the proposition that, as a matter of law, the bankruptcy court is prohibited from dismissing a case until the exclusive period has expired. See In re Century/ML Cable Venture, 294 B.R. 9, 36-37 (Bankr. S.D.N.Y. 2003) (dismissal sought for bad faith filing; § 1121(b) not analyzed by court); In re Coleman Enterprises, Inc., 266 B.R. 423, 440-41 (Bankr. D. Minn. 2001)(debtor's motion to dismiss denied so that creditor could pursue its own plan); In re Toyota of Yonkers, Inc., 135 B.R. 471, 476-77 (Bankr. S.D.N.Y. 1992) (dismissal sought for bad faith filing and failure to effectuate plan).[9] Each of the cases cited by the Debtors refers to [9] The Debtors' citation of In re Coleman Enterprises, Inc. is misleading at best. In that case, the debtor sought to dismiss its own case, the United States Trustee sought to convert the case to chapter 7, and a creditor asked superseded Section 1112(b), which prior to the 2005 amendments to the Bankruptcy Code included "inability to effectuate a plan" in the nonexclusive list of factors that may constitute cause to dismiss. The bankruptcy court below, however, did not base dismissal on the Debtors' failure to file a plan of reorganization – it based dismissal on the Debtors' continuing losses, delay in formulating a business plan, failure to maximize the value of estate assets, mismanagement of funds, and failure to file post-petition tax returns.

As a result, the Debtors' argument that the bankruptcy court committed legal error by dismissing the cases before the expiration of the exclusive period "is without merit." See In re McDonald, No. 93-4176, 1994 WL 160484 at *2-3 (E.D. La. Apr. 22, 1994) (affirming dismissal of chapter 11 case during exclusive period; district court refused to "imply a mandatory waiting period before a party is granted access to [Section 1112(b)]").

the court to invoke its equitable powers under 11 U.S.C. § 105(a) to keep the case in chapter 11 so that it could pursue its own plan. See 266 B.R. 423 (Bankr. D. Minn. 2001). Thus, the court in Coleman Enterprises did not, as the Debtors suggest, hold that dismissal during the debtor's exclusive period was inappropriate; instead, debtor's motion to dismiss was denied as "fundamentally inconsistent with the requirements and protections of the bankruptcy process," the United States Trustee's motion to convert was "held in abeyance," and it was the creditor, QAL, which the court thought should be "given a chance" to confirm its plan. Id. at 438, 440, 441.

2. The Bankruptcy Court Did Not Err By Considering Facts Learned During Lift Stay Proceedings.

The Debtors contend at pages 29 through 32 of the Appellants' Brief that the bankruptcy court erred by basing its finding of cause to dismiss on "assertions outside of the record." As the Dismissal Order gave no indication that the bankruptcy court's decision was based on anything other than the evidence developed at the Lift-Stay Hearing and the Show-Cause Hearing, it is not clear what point the Debtors are trying to make. The Appellants' Brief is all the more indecipherable as it is based on what the Debtors think "appeared" to be the basis for the bankruptcy court's decision, without any record or case citation to support their position.

The crux of the Debtors' argument seems to be that the bankruptcy court dismissed the Debtors' cases while motions for relief from the automatic stay were pending, and the court may have applied what it learned in those proceedings to its determination of whether the cases should be dismissed. There is no legal basis for the Debtors' suggestion that 11 U.S.C. § 362 provides a "safe harbor" whereby chapter 11 cases cannot be dismissed while there are pending motions for stay relief. To the contrary, Section 1112(b) affords the bankruptcy court the discretion to find cause and, absent unusual circumstances, requires dismissal or conversion upon the finding of cause.

It should come as no surprise that evidence presented by the Debtors at the Lift-Stay Hearing may have formed part of the basis of the bankruptcy court's decision to dismiss the cases, as it was the Debtors' Chief Executive Officer's testimony at the Lift-Stay Hearing that caused the bankruptcy court to enter the Show-Cause Order. The Debtors have cited no authority to suggest that the bankruptcy court cannot base a finding of cause to dismiss on the debtor's own sworn testimony. In any event, the same matters that caused concern at the Lift-Stay Hearing were fully developed at the Show-Cause Hearing.

Indeed, Ms. Isaacson's testimony at the Show-Cause Hearing introduced even more concern, as she disclosed that the Debtors were storing cash – which may or may not be estate funds – in a gas station safe. The Debtors acknowledge at page 30 of the Appellants' Brief that "the ownership of the cash was . . . still undecided" by the bankruptcy court. This admission does not support the Debtors' argument for reversal; to the contrary, it is an indictment of the Debtors' cash management and candor. If it was not clear before, it is certainly clear after reading the Appellants' Brief – the Debtors had no intention of disclosing, marketing, or doing anything unless they were forced to by the court. This was not in keeping with their fiduciary duty to creditors and the estate, so dismissal was appropriate.

As the bankruptcy court's decision was based on evidence presented by the Debtor at the Lift-Stay Hearing and Show-Cause Hearing, and the Debtors have presented no record or legal citation supporting their suggestion that the court's decision was based on "assertions not of record," the Debtors' arguments in this regard are unavailing.

3. The Bankruptcy Court Did Not Improperly Rely on the United States Trustee's Oral Motion.

The Debtors also argue at pages 36 through 37 of the Appellants' Brief that the bankruptcy court improperly relied upon the United States Trustee's oral motion made at the Show-Cause Hearing. The Debtors' argument lacks merit. As an initial matter, the hearing was a Show-Cause Hearing at which sua sponte dismissal was already to be considered, and the resulting Dismissal Order referenced only the Show-Cause Order and did not mention the United States Trustee's oral motion at all. Thus, there is no basis to assume that the Dismissal Order was based on anything other than the evidence adduced at the Show-Cause Hearing.

In any event, the United States Trustee's oral motion was properly tendered, and the Debtors did not lodge a procedural objection at the Show-Cause Hearing. See Fed. R. Bankr. P. 9013. Counsel to the United States Trustee did not "rely[ ] upon information not before" the court at the Show-Cause Hearing, as suggested by the Debtors at page 36 of their brief; instead, the motion was expressly based on "[the court's] questions directed to Ms. Isaacson and the responses thereto." J.A. 1057 at 74:5-6. Thus, the Debtors' due process argument is unavailing as it relates to the United States Trustee's oral motion – since the Debtors knew dismissal under Section 1112(b) and the appointment of a trustee under 11 U.S.C. § 1104 were to be considered at the Show-Cause Hearing, and the United States Trustee's motion was based on the testimony of the Debtors' own witness, the Debtors were not prejudiced in any way by the United States Trustee's oral motion.

And, as the oral motion was procedurally sound and the bankruptcy court's finding of cause to dismiss was supported by the facts developed at the Show-Cause Hearing, the Dismissal Order would not have been an abuse of discretion even if it had been based on the United States Trustee's oral motion.

II. THE NOTICE AND HEARING RECEIVED BY THE DEBTORS WERE ADEQUATE FOR PURPOSES OF SECTION 1112(b).

A. Debtors' Failure to Raise the Issue of Adequacy of Notice Before the Bankruptcy Court Constitutes a Waiver of the Issue.

The Debtors contend that they did not receive "sufficient notice of the subject matter" of the Show-Cause Hearing, were unprepared to make the required evidentiary showing, and thus "were deprived of their due process rights." Appellants' Brief at 25-28. But the Debtors never objected, either before or during the Show-Cause Hearing, that they had inadequate notice of the subject matter, inadequate time to prepare, or an inadequate opportunity to present all evidence relevant to a Section 1112(b) motion.[10] To the contrary, Debtors presented evidence that they clearly thought responsive to the bankruptcy court's concerns. Indeed, Debtors' counsel expressly stated at the Show-Cause Hearing that the Debtors "will be prepared to and can present the testimony to you to demonstrate that we have been moving this along." J.A. 0994 (Tr. 11:5-6).

By participating in the Show-Cause Hearing without objecting in bankruptcy court to the sufficiency of the notice, the Debtors waived the issue, so it is not properly before this Court on appeal. See, e.g., First Nat'l Bank of Peoria v. Muller (In re Muller), 851 F.2d 916, 919 (7th Cir. 1988), cert. denied sub nom. Rogers v. First Nat'l Bank of Peoria, 490 U.S. 1007 (1989) ("If, as Rogers argues to this court, the notice of trial was not adequate to alert him that it was a trial, then he should have revealed that concern when he appeared, but before he actively participated."); 9 Alan N. Resnick & Henry J. Sommer, Collier on Bankruptcy ¶ 2002.02 [6][j] at 2002-25 (16th ed. rev. 2009); see also Kirk v. Raymark Indus., Inc., 61 F.3d 147, 156 (3d Cir. 1995) ("[I]t is well established that failure to raise an issue in the district court constitutes waiver of that argument.") (internal citation(s) omitted).

[10] In contrast to the Debtors' silence regarding the Show-Cause Order, the Debtors did respond in writing to papers filed by certain of the Debtors' secured lenders on procedural grounds, asserting that they "ha[d] not had adequate notice of the relief sought by the Lenders, nor the opportunity to prepare therefor." Bankr. Ct. Dkt. 288 (Debtors' Response in Opposition to Statement of Southwest Guaranty, Ltd. and its Lender Affiliates in Support of Dismissal or Conversion of the Debtors' Chapter 11 Cases), at 2.

B. The Notice and Hearing Afforded to the Debtors Were Adequate Under the Circumstances.

Even if the Debtors are not deemed to have waived the notice issue, the amount and extent of the notice and hearing provided to the Debtors was sufficient, and the dismissal of the Debtors' cases should be affirmed. While Section 1112(b) provides that a chapter 11 case may only be dismissed "after notice and a hearing," that phrase "means after such notice as is appropriate in the particular circumstances, and such opportunity for a hearing as is appropriate in the particular circumstances." See 11 U.S.C. § 102(1)(A). Thus, the determination of whether the Debtors received adequate notice and hearing is fact-sensitive, and the bankruptcy court's decision is merely reviewed for abuse of discretion.

In September 2009, Federal Rule of Bankruptcy Procedure 2002(a)(4) ("Rule 2002(a)(4)") generally required a Section 1112(b) motion to be made on at least 20 days' notice by mail to all parties in interest.[11] Rule 2002(a)(4) is subject to Federal Rule of Bankruptcy Procedure 9006(c)(1), however, which allows the bankruptcy court to reduce the required notice period "for cause shown."

Here, the bankruptcy court properly set the Show-Cause Hearing for September 21, 2009, in light of its concerns regarding the Debtors' apparent mismanagement of their chapter 11 cases, based on the testimony introduced at the Lift-Stay Hearings held on September 14 and 15, 2009. The potential harm to creditors and the estate from the Debtors' gross mismanagement and breaches of fiduciary duty was such that the bankruptcy court obviously determined that a hearing on the Show-Cause Order had to take place as soon as possible. This decision was not an abuse of discretion given the record developed at the Lift-Stay Hearing. Although they were afforded less than one week's notice, the Debtors nevertheless had sufficient time to put together the evidence required to carry their burden under Section 1112(b). They were unsuccessful because such evidence did not exist, not because of insufficient notice and hearing. Even now, the Debtors do not contend that they were deprived of an opportunity to present evidence that would have yielded a different result at the Show-Cause Hearing.

[11] Rule 2002(a)(4) has since been amended to provide 21 days' notice.

The Debtors' argument that the Show-Cause Order did not provide sufficient notice of the subject matter of the Show-Cause Hearing is misguided. The Show-Cause Order on its face notified the Debtors that at the hearing they were to "show cause why the Court should not dismiss the cases or appoint a Chapter 11 Trustee." J.A. 0900. Indeed, the Show-Cause Order actually itemized the specific issues that would be addressed at the hearing, including the Debtors' failure to consider the offer to purchase the Oakdale Property, their failure to make post-petition payments, their continuing losses as reflected in their monthly operating reports, the gross mismanagement and breach of fiduciary duty suggested by such "substantial or continuing loss to or diminution of the estate," and their prospects for rehabilitation. J.A. 0899. The Show-Cause Order even cited Section 1112. Id. As a result, the Debtors clearly had sufficient notice that at the Show-Cause Hearing they would be required to make the showing necessary to overcome a Section 1112(b) motion.[12] [12] The only case cited by the Debtors in support of their due process argument, Martin v. Brown, 63 F.3d 1252 (3d Cir. 1995), is inapposite. That case dealt with attorney sanctions, not Section 1112(b) dismissal, and the sanctioned attorney had not received prior notice of the provision pursuant to which sanctions would be assessed. Id. at 1264. Here, on the other hand, the Show-Cause Order clearly identified dismissal under Section 1112(b) and appointment of a trustee under 11 U.S.C. § 1104 as the remedies that would be considered at the Show-Cause Hearing.

The only significant issue addressed at the Show-Cause Hearing that was not specified in the Show-Cause Order was the Debtors' placement of approximately $60,000 in cash in a gas station safe – which was not known to the bankruptcy court until it was disclosed by the Debtors' Chief Executive Officer at the Show-Cause Hearing, and so could not have been referenced in the Show-Cause Order. The Debtors knew about that money all along, however, so they cannot be heard to complain that they were caught by surprise by their own witness's testimony at a hearing at which dismissal under Section 1112(b) was being considered.

The same "inadequate notice" argument made by the Debtors here was rejected in Argus Group 1700, Inc. v. Steinman (In re Argus Group 1700, Inc.), 206 B.R. 757 (E.D. Pa. 1997). In that case, the debtors argued on appeal that they were not provided with adequate notice of and opportunity to respond to the bankruptcy court's sua sponte motion to dismiss. Id. at 763. The debtors "assured the bankruptcy court that they were prepared to present evidence" at the hearing, and the debtor's principal then provided testimony. Id. at 764. In light of these facts, the district court stated that "it is clear that the bankruptcy court provided the debtors with adequate notice and an opportunity to respond, and that the debtors actively participated in the proceedings, fully aware that the bankruptcy court might dismiss their cases sua sponte." Id. (emphasis added). The same is true here.

As the notice, albeit short, was warranted in light of the seriousness of the bankruptcy court's concerns and sufficient to enable the Debtors to prepare the necessary defense to a Section 1112(b) motion, the Debtors' due process arguments are unwarranted.

CONCLUSION

For the reasons set forth above, the United States Trustee respectfully asks this Court to affirm the district court's order affirming the bankruptcy court's Dismissal Order.

Respectfully submitted,

STATEMENT OF ISSUE PRESENTED

The issue to be decided in this appeal is whether the bankruptcy court erred in denying the United States Trustee's motion to dismiss Mr. Rudler's bankruptcy case under 11 U.S.C. § 707(b)(1) based on the presumption of abuse that arises under the means testing provisions of 11 U.S.C. § 707(b)(2). The bankruptcy court's interpretation of the means testing provisions of 11 U.S.C. § 707(b)(2) raises the following issue for resolution by this Court:

> Whether, under 11 U.S.C. § 707(b)(2)(A)(iii), a debtor qualifies for an expense allowance for future payments on secured debts when no payments will be made because the debtor is surrendering the property securing the debt.

STATEMENT OF APPELLATE JURISDICTION

The United States Bankruptcy Court for the District of New Hampshire (the "bankruptcy court") had jurisdiction under 28 U.S.C. §§ 157(b), 1334(a) over the bankruptcy case Glen H. Rudler ("Mr. Rudler") initiated by filing a voluntary chapter 7 petition on August 15, 2006. This appeal is taken from a final order of the bankruptcy court entered on February 20, 2007, interpreting 11 U.S.C. § 707(b)(2)(A)(iii) and denying the United States Trustee's motion for an order dismissing the case for abuse under 11 U.S.C. § 707(b)(2). On March 1, 2007, the United States Trustee filed a timely notice of appeal from that order under 28 U.S.C. § 158 and Fed. R. Bankr. P. 8002. This Court has jurisdiction over this appeal under 28 U.S.C. §§ 158(a) and 158(b)(1).[1]

STANDARD OF REVIEW

Reviewing courts apply a clearly erroneous standard to findings of fact and a de novo standard to conclusions of law. See T.I. Fed. Credit Union v. DelBonis, 72 F.3d 921, 928 (1st Cir. 1995); Western Auto Supply Co. v. Savage Arms, Inc. (In re Savage Indus., Inc.), 43 F.3d 714, 719-20 n.8 (1st Cir. 1994). "Accordingly, where the issue on appeal is essentially one of statutory interpretation, it will be subject to de novo review." In re Kibbe, 361 B.R. 302, 305 (B.A.P. 1st Cir. 2007). See also McMullen v. Sevigny (In re McMullen), 386 F.3d 320, 331 (1st Cir. 2004). Here, there are no facts in dispute, and the bankruptcy court's denial of the motion to dismiss was premised on its interpretation of 11 U.S.C. § 707(b)(2). That interpretation of the Bankruptcy Code is a conclusion of law subject to de novo review.

STATEMENT OF THE CASE

Mr. Rudler is an above-median income debtor who stated his intention to surrender his homestead rather than affirming the mortgages thereon, which otherwise would have obligated him to make payments totaling $4,000 per month. Mr. Rudler subtracted the average monthly cost of these mortgages as future payments on secured debt as part of the means testing calculation required by section 707(b)(2). Before the bankruptcy court, the United States Trustee moved to dismiss Mr. Rudler's case on the ground that the presumption of abuse arose under section 707(b)(2). The United States Trustee argued that Mr. Rudler had sufficient disposable income to repay his creditors, because Mr. Rudler was not entitled to deduct payments on surrendered property as a future expense on account of secured debt.

The United States Trustee moved to dismiss Mr. Rudler's case under section 707(b)(2), asserting that it would be presumptive abuse of chapter 7 of the Bankruptcy Code to grant the debtor a discharge because he had sufficient disposable income to repay his unsecured creditors at least $166.67 per month. On February 20, 2007, the bankruptcy court denied the United States Trustee's motion to dismiss. This appeal followed.

STATEMENT OF FACTS

I. Statutory Framework -- Overview of 11 U.S.C. § 707(b)(2)

Under section 707(b)(1) of the Bankruptcy Code[2], an individual's chapter 7 case merits dismissal when the individual has primarily consumer debts, and the granting of relief would be an "abuse" of the provisions of chapter 7. See 11 U.S.C. § 707(b)(1). In the Bankruptcy Abuse Prevention and Consumer Protection Act of 2005 ("BAPCPA"), S. 256, Pub. L. No. 109-8, 119 Stat. 23, Congress significantly amended section 707(b) of the Code to establish a new statutory presumption: a case is presumptively abusive of chapter 7 if a detailed mathematical formula set out in the statute, commonly referred to as the "means test," yields more than a specified amount of monthly disposable income. See 11 U.S.C. §707(b)(2). Each debtor with primarily consumer debts is now required to file, in conjunction with his or her bankruptcy schedules and statement of financial affairs, a Statement of Current Monthly Income and Means Test Calculation, Official Form 22A of the Federal Rules of Bankruptcy Procedure ("Form 22A").[3] 11 U.S.C. § 521 and § 707(b)(2)(C).

The means test, as embodied in Form 22A, is calculated through a two-step analysis. The first step determines whether a debtor's annualized current monthly income is above the applicable state median family income. See 11 U.S.C. §§ 101(10A), 707(b)(7)(A). Generally, if a debtor's income is above the applicable state median family income, as is the case here, the case will be presumed to be abusive unless under the second step of the means test, a deduction of allowed expenses, brings the debtor's net monthly income to less than $167.67 per month.[4] 11 U.S.C. §§ 101(10A), 707(b)(2)(A)(i).

[3] At the time this case was filed, the Official Form filed by Mr. Rudler was called "Official Form B22A." We will use the Official Form's current name, "22A," throughout.

Section 707(b)(2)(A)(iii) allows debtors to deduct payments on secured debt that will be "due in each month of the 60 months following the date of the petition." 11 U.S.C. 707(b)(2)(A)(iii). Accordingly, Line 42 of Form 22A provides for a reduction of current monthly income ("CMI") for average payments on secured debt, calculated as the total of "all amounts contractually due to each Secured Creditor in the 60 months following the bankruptcy case, divided by 60." Form 22A, Line 42.

If a case is presumed to be abusive, the presumption "may only be rebutted by demonstrating special circumstances." 11 U.S.C. § 707(b)(2)(B)(i). If the presumption of abuse does not arise or is rebutted, section 707(b)(3) provides that a case still may be dismissed if the debtor filed the petition in bad faith or if "the totality of the circumstances" demonstrates abuse.

II. Factual Background

Mr. Rudler filed his voluntary chapter 7 petition on August 15, 2006, and identified himself as an individual with primarily consumer debts. See Appendix (hereinafter "(A. ___)") at 5, 10 – 46. Mr. Rudler has three dependents and earns $106,241 per year.

[4] The presumption does not arise if an above-median debtor's monthly disposable income is less than $100 per month (or $6,000 over 60 months). 11 U.S.C. §707(b)(2)(A)(i). If the debtor's monthly disposable income is equal to or exceeds $166.67 per month (or $10,000 over 60 months), the presumption of abuse arises. Id. If an above median debtor's monthly disposable income is between $100 and $167.67 per month, the presumption of abuse arises if that amount, over 60 months, is sufficient to pay at least 25% of the debtor's nonpriority unsecured debt. Id.

Under 11 U.S.C. § 104, the dollar amounts set forth in title 11 and applicable to the threshold amounts for determining when the presumption of abuse arises under the means test were adjusted based on the consumer price index for cases filed on or after April 1, 2007. This case is not subject to the dollar amount adjustments.

Form 22A, Lines 13, 14 (A. 14). Mr. Rudler's annual income exceeds the New Hampshire median family income for a family of four by $21,323. Id.

Along with his petition, Mr. Rudler filed schedules itemizing his assets and liabilities, Form 22A, and a Chapter 7 Individual Debtor's Statement of Intention indicating his intent to surrender his homestead property. (A. 13-46). Mr. Rudler's required schedules and statements disclosed the following:

- Mr. Rudler owned a residence located at 40 Dorothy Drive, Epping, New Hampshire (see schedule A) (A. 24);
- Mr. Rudler's homestead was encumbered by first and second mortgages totaling $418,670; the first mortgage on Mr. Rudler's homestead had a monthly payment of $3,076, and the second mortgage had a monthly payment of $924 (see Form 22A, Line 42) (A.17); and
- Mr. Rudler was surrendering his residence (see Debtor's Statement of Intention) (A. 39).

On December 21, 2006, Sovereign Bank, the holder of a first mortgage on Mr. Rudler's residence, filed a motion for relief from stay to foreclose on his house. See Docket #27 (A. 8). Mr. Rudler did not oppose the motion, and the bank was granted relief from the automatic stay by entry of an order on January 10, 2007. See Docket #29 (A. 8).

Mr. Rudler claimed a deduction of $4,000 at Line 42 on Form 22A for the average monthly amount of mortgage payments on the property he was surrendering, and on which the bank is foreclosing. Form 22A, Line 42 (A.17). After deducting all expenses on Form 22A on Line 42, including the mortgage payments on property he intended to surrender, Mr. Rudler calculated that he had disposable income of $-2,376 per month. Form 22A, Line 50 (A. 17).

Under 11 U.S.C. § 704, the United States Trustee reviewed all materials filed by Mr. Rudler and performed her own means test analysis ("UST 22A"). (A. 61). The United States

Trustee excluded Mr. Rudler's Line 42 mortgage payments of $4,000 per month on the residence he was surrendering, and instead based her means test analysis on a $1,439 standard mortgage/rent expense as specified by the Local Standards for housing and utilities issued by the Internal Revenue Service.[5] UST 22A, Line 20B. (A. 63). The United States Trustee concluded, based on Mr. Rudler's surrender of his homestead, that Mr. Rudler had monthly disposable income of $1,461. Id. at Line 50. Thus, the United States Trustee concluded that the presumption of abuse arose.[6]

III. Procedural History

After the first meeting of creditors was held on September 11, 2006 (A. 5), the United States Trustee moved to dismiss Mr. Rudler's case under 11 U.S.C. § 704(b)(2), asserting that it would be presumptive abuse of chapter 7 of the Bankruptcy Code to grant Mr. Rudler a discharge because he had sufficient disposable income to repay his creditors at least $166.67 per month.[7] (A. 47). In her motion, the United States Trustee argued that Mr. Rudler was not entitled to claim a deduction from his current monthly income on Line 42 of Form 22A for average monthly payments on his homestead because he intended to surrender it. (A. 47).

On February 20, 2007, the bankruptcy court denied the motion to dismiss, concluding the debtor could deduct payments for surrendered collateral on his means test and, therefore, the presumption of abuse did not arise. (A. 3). On March 1, 2007, the United States Trustee

[6] Under the United States Trustee's calculations, Mr. Rudler had sufficient disposable income to repay his unsecured creditors $87,665, or more than 100% of the total scheduled unsecured claims, in a 60-month chapter 13 repayment plan.

[7] The United States Trustee did not move to dismiss Mr. Rudler's case based on the criteria set forth in section 707(b)(3).

filed a timely notice of appeal. (A. 1).

On April 12, 2007, this Court issued an order to show cause why the appeal should not be dismissed for lack of jurisdiction, ruling that the order on appeal was interlocutory. The United States Trustee responded, and shared her view that the bankruptcy court's order was final. On May 29, 2007, this Court issued an Order Regarding Order to Show Cause stating that it had reconsidered its initial ruling on the finality of the bankruptcy court's order and stating that the panel hearing argument on the merits of the case would also pass upon this jurisdictional question.

SUMMARY OF ARGUMENT

In applying the means test, the bankruptcy court interpreted 11 U.S.C. § 707(b)(2) as authorizing the deduction of expenses that Mr. Rudler will not incur on a monthly basis. The bankruptcy court's ruling was incorrect for two reasons. First, Mr. Rudler could only claim future expenses for secured debt under section 707(b)(2)(A)(iii), and he had no future expense on the mortgage because he had stated his intention to surrender the residence. Because Mr. Rudler will have no secured debt payments on account of his mortgage, the bankruptcy court erred in holding that he was eligible to deduct this expense under the means test.

Second, the bankruptcy court's order conflicts with sound notions of public policy and the primary purpose of Congress in passing bankruptcy reform legislation in 2005, including the amendments at issue in this appeal. The 2005 legislation was intended to ensure that debtors would repay their debts when they can. By allowing Mr. Rudler to claim phantom expense for payments on his mortgage, the bankruptcy court's order undercuts that purpose, and allowed a debtor who had the ability to repay his debts to avoid doing so.

ARGUMENT

I. Excluding Payments for Collateral Mr. Rudler Is Surrendering Is the Proper Interpretation of 11 U.S.C. § 707(b)(2)(A)(iii).

This appeal presents a single legal issue, whether the use of the words "as contractually due" and "following" in the phrase "the total of all amounts scheduled as contractually due to secured creditors in each month of the 60 months following the date of the petition" allow section 707(b)(2)'s means test to take into account cases, like this one, where secured payments are zero because the debtor is surrendering the underlying property. Section 707(b)(2)'s text does allow the means test to take these circumstances into account, for two reasons.

First, the terms of section 707(b)(2)(A)(iii) clearly contemplate that future expenses will be used to determine whether a debtor will have sufficient disposable income to fund a chapter 13 plan going forward. It provides: "[t]he debtor's average monthly payments on account of secured debts shall be calculated as the sum of ... the total of all amounts scheduled as contractually due to secured creditors in each month of the 60 months following the date of the petition."[8] 11 U.S.C. § 707(b)(2)(A)(iii) (emphasis added). The "time-honored tenet" of statutory construction is that '[a]ll words and provisions of a statute are intended to have meaning and are to be given effect, and no construction should be adopted which would render statutory words or phrases meaningless, redundant or superfluous.'" Kibbe, 361 B.R. at 312 (quoting Lopez-Soto v. Hawayek, 175 F.3d 170, 174 (1st Cir. 1999)). Thus, any construction of section 707(b)(2)(A)(iii) must consider the word "following" as well as the phrase "scheduled as contractually due."

The dictionary defines "following" as "subsequent to," "next in the order of time" or in the future. Merriam-Webster Online Dictionary (2007), [http:www.m-w.com/dictionary/following]. Accordingly, this meaning should be imparted to the term "following" as it appears in section 707(b)(2)(A)(iii), absent clear indication that Congress intended to give the term a different meaning. See Clark Equip. Co. v. United States, 912 F.2d 113, 117 (6th Cir. 1990) (applying dictionary definition to ascertain common meaning of term not defined by statute); United States v. Knott, 256 F.3d 20, 28 (1st Cir. 2001) (courts typically read statutory terms to convey their ordinary meaning, including as reflected in dictionary definitions). Using the common, ordinary meaning of "following," therefore, section 707(b)(2)(A)(iii) would only allow deductions for mortgage payments to secured creditors that will be made "subsequent to" or "after" the petition date, and payments for surrendered property that will never be made would not qualify.

Second, the fact that Congress also has used the term "scheduled as contractually due" in the section is consistent with this reading of the term "following." Significantly, Congress has "used the phrase 'scheduled as' several times in the Bankruptcy Code . . . to refer to whether a debt is identified on a debtor's bankruptcy schedules." In re Skaggs, 349 B.R. 594, 599 (Bankr. E.D. Mo. 2006). The Skaggs court cited to 11 U.S.C. § 1111(a) as an example (“wherein a claim or interest is not deemed filed if it is scheduled as disputed, contingent or unliquidated”). Skaggs, 349 B.R. at 599. Other examples where the term “scheduled” is used to refer to a debtor’s bankruptcy schedules include 11 U.S.C. § 523(a)(3)(individual debtor not discharged from debt “neither listed nor scheduled under section 521(1) of this title…”) and 11 U.S.C. § 554(c)(“ Unless the court orders otherwise, any property scheduled under section 521(1) of this title not otherwise administered at the time of the closing of a case is abandoned to the debtor and administered for purposes of section 350 of this title”).

“When Congress amends a law, as it did with BAPCPA, the prior statute’s . . . longstanding meaning forms the background against which Congress legislates . . . [and] [t]he courts presume that Congress will use clear language if it intends to alter an established” meaning. Skaggs, 349 B.R. at 599 (citing Firstar Bank v. Faul, 253 F.3d 982, 988 (7th Cir. 2001)). Accordingly, a debtor’s “schedules and statements form the basis from which . . .[a] court should determine whether a debt is ‘scheduled as contractually due.’” Id. Mr. Rudler’s schedules and statements, including his Statement of Intention, form the basis from which the court should determine whether he will be making future payments “with respect to the property of the estate which secures those debts.”[9] Statement of Intention. (A. 39). The entire phrase “average monthly payments on account of secured debts scheduled as contractually due in each month of the 60 months following the date of the petition” is “best construed as contemplating a forward-looking calculation.” In re Ray, CA No. 06-03988-DD, 2007 WL 690131, at *5 (Bankr. D. S.C. Feb. 28, 2007).

[9] Because he is surrendering the collateral, Mr. Rudler should not have listed his average monthly mortgage payment on Schedule J. (A. 37). Mr. Rudler is under a continuing duty to amend his schedules to accurately reflect his monthly expenses. Pursuant to 11 U.S.C. § 521, all debtors are obligated to complete bankruptcy schedules accurately and completely and to amend those schedules when necessary.

Two lines of cases take an opposite view of section 707(b)(2)(A)(iii), one holding that the words "contractually due" are controlling, and the other holding that the words "contractually due" control unless the collateral is actually surrendered. The "contractually due" courts read the phrase "scheduled as contractually due" as permitting debtors to reduce CMI for payments owed pursuant to the underlying contract when debtors are surrendering, or have surrendered, the property. See e.g., In re Walker, No. 05-15010, 2006 WL 1314125, at 4* (Bankr. N.D. Ga. May 1, 2006) (surrender of collateral does not change the fact that payments are contractually due); see also In re Mundy, No. 1-06-BK-00875, 2007 WL 620971, at *4-5 (Bankr. M.D. Pa. Mar. 1, 2007), and In re Hartwick, 352 B.R. 867, 870 (Bankr. D. Minn. 2006). The "contractually due unless actually surrendered" courts allow debtors to deduct payments on secured debt except when the collateral has actually been surrendered. See e.g. In re Singletary, 354 B.R. 455, 467 (Bankr. S.D. Tex. 2006); see also In re Nockerts, 357 B.R. 497 (Bankr. E.D.Wis. 2006); c.f., In re Brandenburg, No. 07-20244, 2007 WL 1459402 (Bankr. E.D. Wis. May 15, 2007) (finding mortgage debt not "scheduled as contractually due" as of date of state law foreclosure sale).

These lines of cases present no unified structure for the analysis of section 707(b)(2)(A)(iii). Their analyses are fundamentally irreconcilable – the first holds that the means test is designed to be a historic reading of a debtor's financial condition as of the petition date, while the second requires that events occurring after the petition date be considered. More importantly, neither line of cases is textually satisfying because each fails to take into account or give effect to "all words and provisions of" section 707(b)(2)(A)(iii) for the reasons just discussed. Kibbe, 361 B.R. at 312.

Section 707(b)(2)(A)(iii) "allows debtors to deduct their average monthly payments on secured debts based upon those amounts that will be contractually due during the 60 month period following the petition." In re Edmunds, 350 B.R. 636, 645 (Bankr. D. S.C. 2006). The method used to determine whether an expense for secured debt may be deducted under the means test must therefore consider the amount, if any, that will actually be paid by the debtor in the future. Moreover, "[i]n considering whether debtors are abusing chapter 7, it is proper to construe the statute in such a way as to determine whether [debtors] have an ability to repay their general unsecured creditors once they have carried out their stated intentions." Ray, 2007 WL 690131, at *5. Proper application of section 707(b)(2)(A)(iii) thus requires courts to credit a debtor's intent to surrender collateral and make no future payments to secured creditors.

Correct application of the means test would accurately reflect Mr. Rudler's true financial circumstances, namely that he had $1,461 in monthly disposable income presumptively available. In allowing Mr. Rudler to subtract future expenses that he will not incur on a monthly basis, the bankruptcy court below misconstrued the means testing provisions of section 707(b)(2) and eliminated disposable income otherwise disclosed on Mr. Rudler's schedules and statements and available to repay his creditors.[10] For that reason, this case should be remanded, so the court below can conduct additional proceedings to determine whether special circumstances exists to rebut the presumption of abuse under section 707(b)(2)(B).

[10] The additional "phantom" mortgage expenses reduced Mr. Rudler's disposable income by $2,561 [the difference between his historical average monthly mortgage expense ($4,000) and the applicable Line 20B(a) IRS Housing Standard allowance for mortgage/rental expenses ($1,439)]. The United States Trustee's calculations show that Mr. Rudler had monthly disposable income of $1,461 (Line 50), an amount sufficient to yield plan payments totaling $87,665, or more than 100% of the total scheduled unsecured claims. (A. 65).

II. The United States Trustee’s Construction of Section 707(b)(2)(A)(iii) Is Superior because It allows the Means Test to Accomplish the Goal Congress Set for It: Ensuring Debtors like Mr. Rudler Who Can Repay Debts Do So.

Mr. Rudler has the ability to repay all of his unsecured debt. When the $1,439 standard IRS mortgage/rent expense is substituted on the means test for Mr. Rudler’s Line 42 mortgage payments of $4,000 per month to reflect the reality that Mr. Rudler will not have prospective mortgage payments, he has monthly disposable income of $1,461. This amount is sufficient to repay Mr. Rudler’s unsecured creditors $87,665, or more than 100% of his total scheduled unsecured claims, in a 60-month chapter 13 repayment plan.

Congress intended that debtors make such repayments when, as here, they can. The construction advanced by the United States Trustee is superior because it is the only one that accomplishes that goal in cases where debtors are surrendering mortgaged or encumbered property. The means test was intended to create a gatekeeping mechanism to identify debtors who have sufficient disposable income to fund a repayment plan and to direct them to either voluntarily proceed in chapter 13 or be dismissed out of bankruptcy entirely. In re Barraza, 346 B.R.724, 729 (Bankr. N.D. Tex. 2006). Allowing a debtor to deduct more than the IRS Standard for housing expenses, even though the debtor will not expend this higher amount, defeats the purpose of the means test. If debtors are permitted to deduct secured debt expenses on surrendered property, section 707(b)(2) will not operate as the gatekeeper to chapter 7 that Congress intended. Rather, many debtors would “pass” through the means test by being allowed expense deductions for non-existent payments on surrendered collateral; cases would be considered for dismissal only under the totality of the circumstances analysis set forth in section 707(b)(3)(B). Mundy, 2007 WL 620971, at *5.

The bankruptcy court’s interpretation of the means test conflicts with Congress’ stated intent to make certain “that those who can afford to repay some portion of their unsecured debts be required to do so....” 151 Cong. Rec. S2470 (Mar. 10, 2005). As the Kibbe court noted, quoting the legislative history surrounding the enactment of BAPCPA:

> The heart of [BAPCPA’s] consumer bankruptcy reforms consists of the implementation of an income/expense screening mechanism (“needs-based bankruptcy relief” or “means testing”) which is intended to ensure that debtors repay creditors the maximum they can afford.
> H.R. Rep. No. 109-31, pt 1, at 2 (2005) (emphasis supplied).

Kibbe, 361 B.R. at 314. Here the bankruptcy court reasoned that Congress’ intent in creating a “mechanical” formula for presuming abuse precluded it from looking to postpetition developments in applying the means test, because to do so would require an exercise of discretion reserved to the court only under section 707(b)(3). Op. at 1 (following In re Hartwick, 359 B.R. 16 (Bankr. D. N.H. 2007)) (A. 3). The means test is not entirely mechanical because debtors do not rely solely on standardized IRS allowances. Although much of the test works in that manner, other parts, including section 707(b)(2)(A)(iii)(I), require courts to look to a debtor’s actual expenses. Once those expenses are determined, they are applied as mechanically as the rest of the means test.

For the means test to have utility in cases where debtors are surrendering secured debt, debtors must estimate the residual income available to them each month after the deduction of the projected monthly expenses at the time the case is filed. There is no utility in permitting debtors to calculate their repayment ability by including past expense amounts that are not projected for future payment. Rather, a debtor who does not have a monthly mortgage payment is allowed to take as a monthly expense the amount set forth in the IRS Local Housing Standards for a family the size of the debtor’s located in the same county. Permitting Mr. Rudler to take secured debt expense deductions for collateral he surrendered frustrates the purpose of the mean test, and conflicts with Congress' intent in enacting the BAPCPA.

CONCLUSION

For these reasons, the United States Trustee respectfully asks this Court to reverse the order entered below and remand this case for further proceedings consistent with this Court's ruling.

Respectfully submitted,

ON APPEAL FROM THE UNITED STATES BANKRUPTCY
APPELLATE PANEL FOR THE FIRST CIRCUIT

BRIEF FOR THE APPELLANT

STATEMENT OF JURISDICTION

The bankruptcy court had jurisdiction under 28 U.S.C. § 157(a) and (b) to hear the underlying case, a voluntary petition under Chapter 7 of the Bankruptcy Code, 11 U.S.C. § 1101 et seq. See also 28 U.S.C. §§ 151, 1334(a). On February 20, 2007, the bankruptcy court denied the United States Trustee's motion to dismiss the petition for abuse of Chapter 7 under 11 U.S.C. § 707(b)(1). Addendum 7. As explained in Section I of the argument below, the bankruptcy court's decision was a final and immediately appealable order. See Perry v. First Citizens Fed. Credit Union (In re Perry), 391 F.3d 282, 285 (1st Cir. 2004). The United States Trustee filed a timely notice of appeal from the order denying the motion to dismiss to the United States Bankruptcy Appellate Panel for the First Circuit. Appendix ("App.") 5. The Bankruptcy Appellate Panel had jurisdiction to hear the appeal under 28 U.S.C. § 158(a). On May 22, 2008, that court affirmed the bankruptcy court's order denying the United States Trustee's motion to dismiss. App. 55. On July 16, 2008, the United States Trustee filed a timely notice of appeal to this Court. App. 55. This Court has jurisdiction to hear the appeal under 28 U.S.C. § 158(d).

STATEMENT OF THE ISSUE PRESENTED FOR REVIEW

Under 11 U.S.C. § 707(b)(2), a bankruptcy petition is presumptively abusive if, for the 60 months following the petition, the debtor's monthly income minus allowable expenses, as calculated by a statutory formula, would be equal to or greater than a specified threshold dollar amount. Section 707(b)(2)(A)(iii) defines the "debtor's average monthly payments on account of secured debts," which is one of the allowable expenses under the statutory formula, as "the sum of the total of all amounts scheduled as contractually due to secured creditors in each month of the 60 months following the date of the petition . . . divided by 60." 11 U.S.C. § 707(b)(2)(A)(iii). The debtor in this case included monthly payments on two mortgages in the calculation of his "average monthly payments on account of secured debts," even though his petition for bankruptcy was accompanied by a statement that he intended to surrender the home securing those mortgages.

The question presented is whether mortgage payments can be deducted as "amounts scheduled as contractually due to secured creditors in each month of the 60 months following the date of the petition" when the debtor has made clear that he will not make those payments because the debt is secured by a mortgage on a home that he intends to surrender.

STATEMENT OF THE CASE

The United States Attorney General appoints United States Trustees to supervise the administration of bankruptcy cases and trustees. See 28 U.S.C. §§ 581-589a. United States Trustees "serve as bankruptcy watchdogs to prevent fraud, dishonesty, and overreaching in the bankruptcy arena." H.R. Rep. No. 595, 95th Cong., 1st Sess. 88 (1977). Among the Unites States Trustees' duties is the duty to review petitions for bankruptcy filed under chapter 7 to determine whether a statutory presumption that the filing is an abuse of chapter 7 applies. See 11 U.S.C. § 704(b)(1)(A).

After debtor Glen H. Rudler filed his petition for bankruptcy, United States Trustee Phoebe Morse moved to dismiss the filing as an abuse of Chapter 7 on the ground that Rudler should not have deducted his monthly mortgage payments when he calculated his monthly income, because he intended to surrender the house securing those mortgages. The bankruptcy court denied the United States Trustee's motion to dismiss, concluding that the debtor properly deducted the mortgage payments under 11 U.S.C. § 707(b)(2)(A)(iii), which defines the "debtor's average monthly payments on account of secured debts" as "the sum of the total of all amounts scheduled as contractually due to secured creditors in each month of the 60 months following the date of the petition . . . divided by 60." The United States Trustee appealed to the United States Bankruptcy Appellate Panel for the First Circuit, and that court affirmed the bankruptcy court's decision. The United States Trustee then brought this appeal.

STATEMENT OF THE FACTS

I. Statutory Background

A. History of the Means Test

1. Before 1984, a bankruptcy court could dismiss a chapter 7 bankruptcy case only for "cause." See Bankruptcy Reform Act of 1978, Pub. L. No. 95-598, § 707 (codified at 11 U.S.C. § 707); S. Rep. No. 95-989, at 94 (1978); H.R. Rep. No. 95-595, at 380 (1977). A bankruptcy court had "cause" to dismiss a case if, for example, the debtor had unreasonably delayed the proceedings in a manner that prejudiced his creditors. See Pub. L. No. 95-598, § 707(1) (codified at 11 U.S.C. § 707). Congress made clear, however, that "the ability of the debtor to repay his debts in whole or in part" did not "constitute[] adequate cause for dismissal." S. Rep. No. 95-989, at 94; H.R. Rep. No. 95-595, at 380 (same).

2. In the early 1980s, Congress became concerned about a "dramatic[]" rise in the number of consumer bankruptcy cases, and, as a result, it amended provisions of the Bankruptcy Code pertaining to consumer bankruptcies. See Bankruptcy Amendments and Federal Judgeship Act of 1984, Pub. L. No. 98-353 (1984); S. Rep. No. 98-65, at 3 (1983). As part of these reforms, Congress enacted 11 U.S.C. § 707(b), which gave a bankruptcy court, "on its own motion or on a motion by the United States Trustee," authority to "dismiss a case filed by an individual debtor under this chapter whose debts are primarily consumer debts if it finds that the granting of relief would be a substantial abuse of the provisions of this chapter." 11 U.S.C. § 707(b) (2004); Pub. L. No. 98-353, § 312; S. Rep. No. 98-65, at 53. By enacting Section 707(b), Congress sought to ensure that bankruptcy courts would have the authority to dismiss bankruptcy cases in which debtors could repay a substantial portion of their debts. See S. Rep. No. 98-65, at 53-54; In re Kornfield, 164 F.3d 778, 781 (2d Cir. 1999) (Congress was "[c]oncerned that debtors who could over time easily pay their creditors might resort to chapter 7 to erase their legitimate obligations"); In re Stewart, 175 F.3d 796, 812-13 (10th Cir. 1999); In re Lamanna, 153 F.3d 1, 3 n.6 (1st Cir. 1998).

3. In 2005, again concerned about the rise in bankruptcy filings, Congress enacted the Bankruptcy Abuse Prevention and Consumer Protection Act of 2005 (the "2005 Act"), Pub.L. No. 109-8, 119 Stat. 23 (2005). The 2005 Act removed the requirement that the party seeking dismissal show "substantial abuse," so that Section 707(b) now requires a showing of "abuse" rather than "substantial abuse," 11 U.S.C. § 707(b)(1), and eliminated a presumption in favor of discharge. The 2005 Act also added a means test to identify chapter 7 cases that are presumptively abusive. Under the means test, there is a presumption that the case is an abuse of chapter 7 if the formula set out in Section 707(b)(2)(A) reflects monthly disposable income equal to or greater than a specified threshold amount. See 11 U.S.C. § 707(b)(2)(A). In enacting these changes, Congress called "the implementation of an income/expense screening mechanism ('needs-based bankruptcy relief' or 'means testing')" the "heart of the [2005 Act's] consumer bankruptcy reforms," and it explained that the means test "is intended to ensure that debtors repay creditors the maximum they can afford." See H.R. Rep. No. 109-31 (I) at 1 (2005), reprinted in 2005 U.S.C.C.A.N. 88, 89.

B. The Means Test

The first step of the means test is determining whether the debtor's monthly income exceeds the state median family income for his family size. A debtor's current monthly income, as defined in 11 U.S.C. § 101(10A)(A), is based on the debtor's average monthly income from all sources for the six full calendar months immediately preceding the bankruptcy filing. If the debtor's monthly income is equal to or below the state median family income for the same household size, a safe harbor exists and a presumption of abuse will not arise. See 11 U.S.C. § 707(b)(7). If the debtor's current monthly income exceeds the state median income for the same household size, however, the debtor is an "above-median income debtor." Above-median income debtors are subject to the means test.

Under the means test, net monthly disposable income is calculated by deducting statutorily prescribed monthly expenses from current monthly income. If the resulting net monthly disposable income is above the amount specified in the statute, the bankruptcy case is presumptively abusive: the means test requires courts "presume abuse exists if the debtor's current monthly income reduced by the amounts determined under" the statute exceeds a threshold dollar amount specified in the statute and periodically adjusted by the Judicial Conference of the United States. 11 U.S.C. § 707(b)(2)(A)(i). At the time relevant to this case, that threshold was $167.[1] The means test calls for the deduction of statutorily prescribed monthly expenses rather than actual expenses. Deductible expenses include living expenses as set forth in national and local standards prescribed by the Internal Revenue Service, see, e.g., 11 U.S.C. § 707(b)(2)(A)(ii)(I); certain actual expenses subject the requirement that they be "reasonably necessary," see, e.g., id. (allowing deduction for "reasonably necessary" health insurance and disability insurance expenses); and other actual expenses capped by a maximum allowable deduction, see id. at 707(b)(2)(A)(ii)(IV)(allowing deduction for actual expenses for a minor child "not to exceed" $1650 a month).

In addition to the deduction of these monthly expenses, the means test also allows the deduction of projected monthly payments on account of secured debts and priority claims. See 11 U.S.C. § 707(b)(2)(A)(iii)-(iv). Section 707(b)(2)(A)(iii) defines the debtor's "average monthly payments on account of secured debts," the statutory term at issue in this case, as the sum of "the total of all amounts scheduled as contractually due to secured creditors in each month of the 60 months following the date of the petition" divided by 60. 11 U.S.C. §

[1] The $167 threshold is the result of dividing $10,000 by 60 under the formula set out in 11 U.S.C. 707(b)(2)(A)(i). Under Section 104 of the Bankruptcy Code, this dollar amount was increased by the Judicial Conference of the United States effective April 1, 2007. See Revision of Certain Dollar Amounts in the Bankruptcy Code Prescribed Under Section 104(b) of the Code, 72 Fed. Reg. 7082, 7082-83 (Feb. 14, 2007). This increased dollar amount does not apply to this case.

707(b)(2)(A)(iii). The Code does not define the term "amounts scheduled as contractually due to secured creditors."

To facilitate application of the means test, all individual chapter 7 debtors must file Schedule J, Current Expenditures of Individual Debtor, and Federal Rules of Bankruptcy Procedure Official Form 22A, Statement of Current Monthly Income and Means Test Calculation ("Form 22A"), with their schedules and Statement of Financial Affairs. See 11 U.S.C. §§ 521(a)(1)(B)(ii) and § 707(b)(2)(C). Debtors must also file a statement of intention as to whether they will retain or surrender property secured by debt within 30 days of the earlier of the filing date and the date of the meeting of creditors. See 11 U.S.C. § 521(a)(2)(A), see also Interim Fed. R. Bankr. P. 1017(b)(2) (requiring individual debtors in chapter 7 cases to file a statement of intent on the appropriate Official Form). The statement must specify whether the debtor intends to claim the property as exempt, redeem the property, or reaffirm debts secured by the property. Id. Section 521(a)(2)(B) requires debtors to perform their expressed intention within 30 days after filing the statement of intention.

The United States Trustee reviews these forms and all other materials to determine whether a presumption of abuse arises. See 11 U.S.C. § 704(b)(1)(A). The United States Trustee has 10 days from the meeting of creditors to "review all materials" filed by the debtor (including the statement of intent to surrender) and file a statement as to whether the debtor's case is presumed abusive under Section 707(b). Id. When a chapter 7 bankruptcy case is presumptively abusive under the statute, the United States Trustee must either seek its dismissal or conversion, or file a statement declining to seek dismissal. See 11 U.S.C. § 704(b)(2). The United States Trustee has an additional 30 days after filing the statement regarding abuse to file a motion to dismiss for presumed abuse. Id. Because the meeting of creditors must be held "no fewer then 20 and no more than 40 days after the order for relief," see Federal Rule of Bankruptcy Procedure Rule 2003, which in a voluntary petition under chapter 7 is the date of the petition, see 11 U.S.C. 301(b), the United States Trustee should know whether a debtor intends to surrender real or personal property subject to a security interest before the United States Trustee's deadline to file a motion to dismiss for presumed abuse under Section 707(b)(2). See 11 U.S.C. §§ 521(a)(2), 704(b)(2). A debtor may attempt to rebut the presumption of abuse by showing "special circumstances" that justify an income adjustment or additional expenses. 11 U.S.C. § 707(2)(B)(i).

II. This Proceeding

Appellee Glen H. Rudler filed for chapter 7 bankruptcy relief in August 2006. App. 2 (bankruptcy court docket), App. 7 (petition). At the time of his filing, he earned $8,853 a month. App. 10. He owed a combined monthly payment of $4,000 on the two mortgages secured by his house. App. 14. He also owed roughly $20,000 for domestic support obligations and $70,000 for credit card debt. App. 28, 29-30.

Rudler filed a statement of intention with his petition stating that he intended to surrender the home securing the mortgages. App. 36. But when Rudler calculated his monthly disposable income on Form 22A (Statement of Current Monthly Income and Means Test Calculation), he deducted the $4000 in monthly mortgage payments from his income. App. 14. This deduction, together with the deductions allowed under the means test for reasonable living expenses (as described above), resulted in monthly disposable income of negative $2,376.

If Rudler did not deduct the monthly mortgage payments, he could instead claim a statutorily prescribed housing allowance of $1439.[2] In that event, his monthly disposable income would be $1,461.[3] That amount is almost 9 times the

[2] Rudler actually deducted both the mortgage payments and the statutory housing allowance. See App. 10 (Rudler's Form 22A). There is no basis for taking both deductions. In determining "net mortgage/rental expense" at Line 20B of Form 22A, the debtor is required to subtract the average monthly payment for the mortgage secured by the debtor's home from the IRS Standard. See Form 22A, Line 20B (instructing debtor to subtract "Average Monthly Payment for any debts secured by [debtor's] home…"). See also In re Meek, 370 B.R. 294, 311 -312 (Bankr. D. Idaho 2007) ("[B]ecause § 707(b)(2)(A)(ii)(I) provides that monthly expenses pursuant to the IRS Standards 'shall not include any payments for debts,' and debtors are permitted to deduct actual mortgage … amounts separately, debtors must deduct from the IRS Standard expenses for their monthly mortgage …payments to avoid double-dipping."); In re Hardacre, 338 B.R. 718, 726 -727 (Bankr. N.D. Tex. 2006) (11 U.S.C. § 707(b)(2)(A)(ii) requires that IRS standard allowances for housing costs be reduced by average monthly payments for debts secured by debtor's home in applying means test). This process allows a debtor whose actual mortgage expenses are less than the IRS Local Standard to claim those secured debt expenses plus the balance of the IRS standard. See In re Meek, 370 B.R. at 311-312. But when the debtor has mortgage payments greater than the IRS standard and can deduct those payments because he has reaffirmed the debt, the net mortgage/rent expense allowance properly calculated at Line 20B is $0.

[3] The United States Trustee filed with its motion to dismiss a side-by-side comparison of the deductions that Rudler took and the United States Trustee's own calculation of appropriate deductions. Addendum ("Add.") 17-22. The $1461 figure comes from the United States Trustee's calculation of appropriate deductions. Add. 21. The $162 discrepancy between the $1461 monthly disposable income figure arrived at by the United States Trustee and the $1621 figure that results when the

$167 monthly disposable income threshold for presumptive abuse set by 11 U.S.C. § 707(b)(2)(A). Indeed, if Rudler were to proceed under chapter 13, he would have roughly $87,000 to repay creditors.[4]

Because the presumption of abuse would apply if Rudler were to eliminate the secured debt payments on surrendered collateral from the means tests and, instead, claim only the statutory housing allowance, the United States Trustee moved to dismiss the case under Section 707(b)(2). The United States Trustee argued that Rudler should not have included the mortgage payments in his listing of monthly payments on account of secured debts because he did not intend to make those payments.

The bankruptcy court denied the motion to dismiss. That court concluded that "the means test includes a deduction from current monthly income for all scheduled contractual payments to secured creditors regardless of a debtor's intent with respect to . . . actual payment of the secured debt." Add. 7.

The United States Trustee appealed the case to the United States Bankruptcy Appellate Panel for the First Circuit. After concluding that it had $4000 in mortgage payments are added back in to Rudler's claimed negative $2376 in monthly disposable income reflects the United States Trustee's allowance for $162 in chapter 13 administrative expenses on line 45 of Form 22A. Add. 21.

[4] Chapter 13 effectively requires above-median income debtors to commit their projected disposable income to repaying creditors for the 60 month period following bankruptcy. See 11 U.S.C. §§ 1325(b)(1) and (b)(4)(A)(ii)(I) (prohibiting courts from approving a repayment plan proposed by an above median-income debtor where the plan does not commit all of the debtor's projected disposable income over 60 months to repay creditors). $1461 a month for 60 months is $87,665.

jurisdiction to review the order denying the United States Trustee's motion to dismiss, the appellate panel affirmed. The court concluded that Rudler properly included mortgage payments on Form 22A even though he had made clear that he intended to surrender the home securing the mortgages, because secured debt payments remain due regardless of whether the payments are made, the debt is reaffirmed, or the property is surrendered. Morse v. Rudler (In re Rudler), 388 B.R. 433, 438 (1st Cir. BAP (N.H.) 2008). The court took the view that the Section 707(b)(2)(A)(iii) calculation is based on "a 'snap-shot' of the debtor's situation as of the petition date," not a forward-looking approach that takes account of whether the debtor will actually make the mortgage payments. Id. The court rejected the government's argument that interpreting the statute to allow deductions for payments that the debtor will never make would frustrate the statutory purpose of requiring those who can afford to repay some portion of their debts to do so. Id. at 438-439. Instead, the court determined that Congress's purpose was to "limit judicial discretion" using a "mechanical test," and that its interpretation furthered that interest. Id. at 439.

SUMMARY OF ARGUMENT

1. The bankruptcy court order denying the motion to dismiss was a final appealable order under the flexible standard of finality in 28 U.S.C. § 158. The order resolved the question whether the debtor's chapter 7 petition was abusive and left no opportunity for further consideration of whether the case should be dismissed as an abuse of chapter 7. It thus met the test for finality that it "finally dispose of all the issues pertaining to a discrete dispute within the larger proceeding," Perry v. First Citizens Fed. Credit Union (In re Perry), 391 F.3d 282, 285 (1st Cir. 2004), and this Court has jurisdiction to hear this appeal.

2. Section 707(b) of the Bankruptcy Code authorizes a bankruptcy court to dismiss a chapter 7 consumer bankruptcy case if the court "finds that the granting of relief would be an abuse of" chapter 7. 11 U.S.C. § 707(b). The provision thus requires bankruptcy courts to evaluate whether it would be appropriate to grant a debtor the relief offered by chapter 7 – a discharge of his past debts. In order to make that determination, a bankruptcy court must consider whether the debtor will have sufficient future income to repay his past debts. And to facilitate that inquiry, Congress has established a means test to identify cases that are presumptively abusive because the debtor has sufficient means to repay some of his debts.

The means test allows a debtor to deduct from his current monthly income his "average monthly payments on account of secured debt," and as relevant here it defines those payments as "the sum of the total of all amounts scheduled as contractually due to secured creditors in each month of the 60 months following the date of the petition . . . divided by 60." 11 U.S.C. § 707(b)(2)(A)(iii). The question in this case is whether the debtor correctly deducted $4000 in monthly mortgage payments from his income instead of taking the statutorily prescribed housing allowance, even though his petition made clear that he would never make the mortgage payments because the mortgage was secured by property that he intended to surrender. The question is significant, because if the debtor properly took those deductions, then all of his debts – including approximately $70,000 in unsecured credit card debt – will likely be discharged, but if the monthly mortgage payments were not properly deducted from his monthly disposable income, then his monthly disposable income would be $1461 and his petition would be presumptively abusive. Assuming he could not rebut the presumption of abuse (a question that the bankruptcy court did not need to reach, because it concluded that the presumption did not apply) and opted to proceed under chapter 13, this disposable income would give him roughly $87,000 to repay his creditors over the course of a 60 month plan.

The bankruptcy appellate panel concluded that the debtor was entitled to deduct his mortgage payments because the payments were and would remain "contractually due" even when the debtor surrendered his property. But the bankruptcy appellate panel erred by focusing in isolation on the phrase "contractually due." Read as a whole, the statute allows the deduction only of payments that the debtor actually intends to make.

By using the phrases "scheduled as contractually due" (rather than simply "contractually due") and "60 months following the date of the petition," the statute calls for a forward-looking assessment of which payments on secured debts will actually be made and are thus properly listed (or "scheduled") as "payments on account of a secured debt." Reading the means test this way makes it consistent with the mean's tests treatment of the debtor's other expenses, which are also forward looking.

Contrary to the reasoning of the bankruptcy appellate panel, a forward looking assessment of payments on account of secured debt cannot include payments that the debtor will never make. In many cases, when a debtor surrenders the collateral securing a debt, nothing remains "contractually due." Even in those situations where a debtor is liable for a deficiency, once title to the property securing the debt transfers, the remaining liability is not "contractually due to [a] secured creditor," as required by the statute. Accordingly, the debtor will not be liable for any payments that fit within the statutory terms.

Finally, allowing debtors to deduct only those payments that they actually will make best serves Congress's purpose in enacting the means test. The 2005 Act established a means test to ensure that those who can afford to repay some portion of their unsecured debts be required to do so. That purpose is best served by limiting the debtor to deductions that reflect his true financial circumstances rather than allowing him to shelter disposable income behind phantom payments on secured debt.

This court should reverse the decision of the bankruptcy appellate panel and rule that the means test does not allow Rudler to claim roughly $87,000 in mortgage payments that he will never make. In that event, Rudler's creditors will likely recover most – if not all – of what Rudler owes them, while Rudler will still be entitled to the standard IRS housing allowance provided by Section 707.

Conversely, if this Court accepts the views of the bankruptcy appellate panel, debtors who surrender property will be allowed to claim payments on that property that they will never make, and many debts will be discharged in bankruptcy based upon that fiction. That inequitable result is contrary to the better reading of Section 707(b)(2)(A), and it conflicts with Congress' stated purpose for enacting the 2005 Act.

STANDARD OF REVIEW

This Court reviews the legal conclusions of the Bankruptcy Appellate Panel de novo. See In re Marrama, 430 F.3d 474, 477 (1st Cir. 2005).

ARGUMENT

I. THIS COURT HAS JURISDICTION TO HEAR THIS APPEAL

Appeals to the United States Bankruptcy Appellate Panel for the First Circuit and to this Court are governed by 28 U.S.C. § 158 and 28 U.S.C. §§ 1291-1292. See In re Northwood Properties, LLC, 509 F.3d 15, 21 (1st Cir. 2007). The bankruptcy appellate panel, like a district court sitting in its appellate capacity in bankruptcy proceedings, has jurisdiction to review "final judgments, orders, and decrees" of the bankruptcy court. 28 U.S.C. § 158(a)(1). This Court has further appellate jurisdiction over "all final decisions, judgments, orders, and decrees" issued by the bankruptcy appellate panel. 28 U.S.C. § 158(d)(1); see also 28 U.S.C. § 1291. This limitation on this Court's appellate jurisdiction "recognizes that 'the 'finality' of a bankruptcy court's decision may be affected by the district court's disposition of the appeal,'" Northwood Properties, LLC, 509

F.3d at 21, quotation omitted; a remand by the bankruptcy appellate panel for purely ministerial action, however, does not deprive this Court of jurisdiction, id.

To be final, "a bankruptcy order need not resolve all of the issues in the proceeding, but it must finally dispose of all the issues pertaining to a discrete dispute within the larger proceeding." Perry v. First Citizens Fed. Credit Union (In re Perry), 391 F.3d 282, 285 (1st Cir. 2004). Because "bankruptcy cases typically involve numerous controversies bearing only a slight relationship to each other, 'finality' is given a flexible interpretation in bankruptcy." Northwood Properties, 509 F.3d at 21, quoting In re G.S.F. Corp., 938 F.2d 1467, 1473 (1st Cir. 1991), abrogated on different grounds by Connecticut National Bank v. Germain, 503 U.S. 249 (1992).

The bankruptcy court's decision denying the United States Trustee's motion to dismiss was a final and appealable order. A motion to dismiss under Section 707(b) is not akin to a motion to dismiss under 12(b)(6) of the Federal Rules of Civil Procedure, where the case proceeds if the motion is denied. A Section 707(b) motion institutes a cause of action – a "contested matter" – within the larger bankruptcy case, see Federal Rule of Bankruptcy Procedure 9014 (in "a contested matter not otherwise governed by these rules, relief shall be requested by motion"); see also Fed. R. Bankr. P. 1017(f)(1) (Rule 9014 governs proceedings to dismiss a case), alleging that the bankruptcy petition is an abuse of chapter 7. Unlike the denial of a 12(b)(6) motion, a bankruptcy court order denying a motion to dismiss for abuse finally settles the contested matter of whether the petition is abusive; denying the motion to dismiss means that the debtor's debts will be discharged unless some party files a separate action to block the discharge under 11 U.S.C. § 523 or 727. The bankruptcy court's order denying the motion to dismiss finally resolved the United States Trustee's claim that granting relief to Rudler would be an abuse of chapter 7. The order was thus a formal and final adjudication of the Section 707(b) proceeding.

Moreover, because the deadline for filing a motion to dismiss had passed when the court entered its order denying the motion to dismiss, the question whether the petition should be dismissed as an abuse of chapter 7 could not be reopened. See 11 U.S.C. § 704(b)(2) (establishing a 30-day deadline for the United States Trustee to file a motion to dismiss under Section 707(b)(2) measured from the date of the United States Trustee's filing an initial statement under Section 704(b)(1) regarding whether the case would be a presumed abuse under Section 707(b)(2)); Interim Fed. R. Bankr. P. 1017(e)(2) (establishing that a motion to dismiss for abuse under Section 707(b)(3) must be brought within 60 days after the first date set for the meeting of creditors).[5] The bankruptcy court's order thus "finally dispose[d] of all the issues pertaining to a discrete dispute

[5] By contrast, other types of motions to dismiss bankruptcy cases are not subject to the time bar that restricts Section 707(b) motions. For example, a motion to dismiss a chapter 7 case for "cause" under Section 707(a) has no statutory or Bankruptcy Rule deadline and could be renewed if denied. See also 11 U.S.C. § 1112(b) (permitting dismissal of chapter 11 case for "cause" but establishing no deadlines for seeking such dismissal; the Bankruptcy Rules also set no relevant deadline); 11 U.S.C. 521(i) (setting grounds for "automatic []" dismissal but establishing no deadlines for seeking orders dismissing such cases; the Bankruptcy Rules also set no relevant deadline).

within the larger proceeding." In re Perry, 391 F.3d at 285. Likewise, the bankruptcy appellate panel's decision affirming the bankruptcy court's decision finally resolved the discrete issue raised by the motion.

Although the United States Supreme Court and this Court have not addressed whether orders denying Section 707(b) motions are final, three United States courts of appeals – the Eighth, Third, and Fifth – have adjudicated appeals from bankruptcy court orders denying Section 707(b) motions to dismiss under the "substantial abuse" standard in the pre-2005 version of the statute. Two expressly held such orders are final, see Stuart v. Koch (In re Koch), 109 F.3d 1285, 1289 (8th Cir. 1997); In re Christian, 804 F.2d 46, 47-48 (3d Cir. 1986) (same), and the third treated as final a bankruptcy court order denying the United States Trustee's Section 707(b) motion to dismiss for substantial abuse, see In re Cortez, 457 F.3d 448, 453-54 (5th Cir. 2006).

While the Eleventh Circuit recently concluded in In re Donovan, 532 F.3d 1134 (11th Cir. 2008), that an order denying a motion to dismiss a chapter 7 case for substantial abuse was not appealable, that conclusion relied on cases concerning motions to dismiss under chapter 11, even though chapter 11 is distinguishable. Unlike a motion to dismiss for abuse under Section 707(b), nothing prevents a party in a chapter 11 case from filing multiple motions to dismiss while a case is open. See 11 U.S.C. § 1112(b) (permitting dismissal of chapter 11 case for "cause" but establishing no deadlines for seeking such dismissal; the Bankruptcy Rules also set no relevant deadline). An order denying a motion to dismiss in a chapter 11 case thus lacks the finality of the order denying the motion to dismiss here. This Court should follow the Eighth, Third, and Fifth Circuits and conclude that the bankruptcy court order at issue here is an final order subject to appeal under 28 U.S.C. § 158(a)(1).

II. SECTION 707(B)(2) DOES NOT ALLOW A DEBTOR TO DEDUCT MORTGAGE PAYMENTS THAT HE WILL NOT MAKE

Section 707(b) of the Bankruptcy Code authorizes a bankruptcy court to dismiss a chapter 7 case that involves "primarily consumer debts" (or with the debtor's consent, convert the case to chapter 13) if the court "finds that the granting of relief would be an abuse of the provisions of this chapter." 11 U.S.C. § 707(b). In the 2005 Act, Congress amended Section 707(b) to provide a means test to identify presumptively abusive filings. See 11 U.S.C. § 707(b)(2)(A). Congress called "the implementation of an income/expense screening mechanism ('needs-based bankruptcy relief' or 'means testing')" the "heart of the [2005 Act's] consumer bankruptcy reforms," and it explained that the means test "is intended to ensure that debtors repay creditors the maximum they can afford." See H.R. Rep. No. 109-31 (I) at 1 (2005), reprinted in 2005 U.S.C.C.A.N. 88, 89.

The means test requires the court to assess the debtor's current monthly income, reduced by projected allowable expenses for the period following the bankruptcy filing specified in 11 U.S.C. § 707(b)(2)(A)(ii)-(iv), and determine whether that income is above the threshold set out in the statute for presumptive abuse. Among these expenses is the debtor's "average monthly payments on account of secured debts." 11 U.S.C. 707(b)(2)(A)(iii). Section 707(b)(2)(A) defines "average monthly payments on account of secured debts" as the sum of "the total of all amounts scheduled as contractually due to secured creditors in each month of the 60 months following the date of the petition," divided by 60. 11 U.S.C. § 707(b)(2)(A)(iii). Contrary to the conclusion of the bankruptcy appellate panel, this definition of "average monthly payments on account of secured debt" does not include mortgage payments that the debtor will not make.

A. Read as a Whole, Section 707(b)(2)(A) Makes Clear That the Means Test Is Forward Looking

Section 707(b)(2)(A)(iii), like any statutory provision, must be read as a whole. See Koons Buick Pontiac GMC, Inc. v. Nieh, 543 U.S. 50, 60 (2004) (calling for a "holistic" approach to reading statutes). The phrases "scheduled as" and "following the date of the petition" call for a projection of what the debtor's payments on account of secured debt will be following bankruptcy. And in light of the means test's more general approach to identifying allowable expenses, the phrase "average monthly payments on account of secured debt" must be understood to include only payments on account of secured debt that the debtor actually will make.

1. While the bankruptcy appellate panel concluded that the phrase "scheduled as contractually due" required it to look at a current "snapshot" of the debtor's obligations on account of secured debt, Morse v. Rudler (In re Rudler), 388 B.R. at 438, even read in isolation the phrase "scheduled as contractually due" is not best understood this way. Reading the phrase "scheduled as contractually due” to include all current contractual obligations fails to give independent meaning to the words “scheduled as.”

If Congress meant for debtors to deduct all “contractually due” payments without regard to whether they would actually be made, it could have left out the phrase “scheduled as” and defined “payments on account of secured debts” as payments that are “contractually due . . . following the date of the petition” instead of “scheduled as contractually due . . . following the date of the petition.” Reading the phrase “scheduled as contractually due” to call for a forward-looking assessment of whether the payments will actually be made gives separate effect to the term “scheduled as” in the phrase “scheduled as contractually due,” and thus honors the rule that “whenever possible, every word and phrase in a statute should be given effect.” Aguilar v. U.S. Immigration and Customs Enforcement Div. of Dept. of Homeland Sec., 510 F.3d 1, 10 (1st Cir. 2007). By contrast, the bankruptcy appellate panel’s reading gives no independent meaning to the phrase “scheduled as.” As one court explained, considering the phrase “scheduled as contractually due” from Section 707(b)(2)(A)(iii) in a chapter 13 case, the word “scheduled” is best understood to “contemplate[] a forward looking approach. That is, one schedules something which one expects to take place in the future and not an event which one plans to avoid.” In re Love, 350 B.R. 611, 613-14 (Bankr. M.D. Ala. 2006).

The phrase “scheduled as contractually due” should also be read to mean something more specific than “contractually due” because the phrase “scheduled as" is a term of art in the Bankruptcy Code – the Code refers to a claim or debt being "scheduled as" due if the debt is properly listed on a debtor's bankruptcy schedules. See In re Skaggs, 349 B.R. 594, 599 (Bankr. E.D. Mo. 2006). The only provision of the Code other than Section 707(b)(2)(A)(iii) that uses the phrase "scheduled as" is 11 U.S.C. § 1111(a). Section 1111(a) provides that a "proof of claim or interest is deemed filed under section 501 of this title for any claim or interest that appears in the schedules filed under . . . section 521(1) or 1106(a)(2) of this title, except a claim or interest that is scheduled as disputed, contingent, or unliquidated." (Emphasis added). The second part of the provision excepts claims that are "scheduled as disputed, contingent, or unliquidated." In context, "scheduled as" thus means "appears on the schedule" or "appended to" the schedule. Because of the "'normal rule of statutory construction,' Sorenson v. Secretary of Treasury, 475 U.S. 851, 860, 106 S.Ct. 1600, 1606, 89 L.Ed.2d 855 (1986), that 'identical words used in different parts of the same act are intended to have the same meaning,' Atlantic Cleaners & Dyers, Inc. v. United States, 286 U.S. 427, 433, 52 S.Ct. 607, 609, 76 L.Ed. 1204 (1932)," Commissioner v. Keystone Consol. Industries, Inc., 508 U.S. 152, 159 (1993), "scheduled as contractually due" in Section 707(b)(2)(A) should be read to include contractual obligations on secured debts that are properly listed on a bankruptcy schedule because the debtor intends to honor them.

The bankruptcy appellate panel rejected this argument on the basis of In re Nockerts, 357 B.R. 497 (Bkrtcy. E.D. Wis. 2006). But Nockerts considered a broader argument about the word "scheduled," not the phrase "scheduled as." Nockerts reviewed each use of the term "scheduled" in the Code and concluded that the term sometimes refers to the placement of a claim or debt on a bankruptcy schedule but sometimes is used in a more general sense. See Nockerts, 357 B.R. at 502. Nockerts thus does not address the meaning of the narrower phrase "scheduled as," which appears only in Section 1111a and Section 707(b)(2)(A)(iii). Reading "scheduled as contractually due" to call for a forward looking assessment of whether a payment on a secured debt is properly listed on a bankruptcy schedule has the benefit of making the phrase "scheduled as" mean the same thing in Section 707(b)(2)(A)(iii) that it means in Section 1111(a).

2. Allowing a deduction for mortgage payments that will never be made on the basis that the payments remain "contractually due" also fails to take account of the phrase "following the date of the petition" in the statute. See In re Naut, 2008 WL 191297 at *9 (Bankr. E.D. Pa. Jan. 22, 2008) (unpublished disposition); In re Harris, 353 B.R. 304, 308-10 (Bankr. E.D. Okla. 2006); In re Skaggs, 349 B.R. 594, 599-600 (Bankr. E.D. Mo. 2006). The word "following," used as a preposition, means "subsequent to" or "after in time." Webster's Third New International Dictionary, 833 (1993). By requiring courts to look at payments due "subsequent to" or "after" the date of the petition, the statute makes clear that it contemplates a projection of future expenses rather than a snapshot of current expenses. Accordingly, the means test allows the debtor to deduct from his current monthly income only those payments on account of secured debt that he actually will make after he files the petition. As the court explained in Naut, "[i]ncluding a loan payment as a deduction from income must be based on the loan payment actually being due in each of the 60 months after the bankruptcy petition is filed. Only this interpretation properly gives effect to every clause and word in the statute." In re Naut, 2008 WL 191297 at *9. See also In re Ray, 362 B.R. 680, 683 n.5 (Bankr. D. S.C. 2007).

3. The term "payments on account of secured debts" should also be read to call for a forward-looking assessment of what payments the debtor actually will make because that reading treats the deduction for payments on secured debts most consistently with the treatment of other expenses under the means test. It is a general rule of statutory construction that "'a word [in a statute] is known by the company it keeps,' a rule that 'is often wisely applied where a word is capable of many meanings in order to avoid the giving of unintended breadth to the Acts of Congress.' Jarecki v. G.D. Searle & Co., 367 U.S. 303, 307, 81 S.Ct. 1579, 6 L.Ed.2d 859 (1961); see also Dole v. Steelworkers, 494 U.S. 26, 36, 110 S.Ct. 929, 108 L.Ed.2d 23 (1990) ('[W]ords grouped in a list should be given related meaning' (internal quotation marks and citations omitted))." Dolan v. United States Postal Serv., 546 U.S. 481, 486-487 (2006).

The other deductions allowed by the means test are forward looking. Section 707(b)(2)(A)(ii) does not use actual expenses to define the expenses that the debtor may deduct from current monthly income. Rather, it requires the debtor to calculate and deduct only those expenses allowed under the statute. The statute sets allowable expenses using several different methods. For example, living expenses are based on Internal Revenue Service standards. See 11 U.S.C. § 707(b)(2)(A)ii)(I). The statute sets other expenses, such as health and disability insurance, as actual expenses subject to a "reasonably necessary" standard. See id. Finally, the statute sets expenses for a dependant child at actual expenses "not to exceed" a dollar amount specified in the statute and periodically adjusted. 11 U.S.C. § 707(b)(2)(A)(ii)(IV). By requiring the debtor to project his expenses as defined under these rules and deduct only those expenses, rather than allowing him to deduct actual expenses, the statute calls for a forward-looking assessment of the debtor's disposable income in the months following bankruptcy. In light of these forward-looking definitions of allowable expenses, the definition of "payments on account of secured debt" is best read to be forward looking as well.

By focusing on the single term "contractually due" without giving due consideration to the phrases "scheduled as" and the phrase "following the date of the petition," the bankruptcy appellate panel "miss[ed] the actual meaning and the intent of § 707(b)(2)." Skaggs at 600. Read as a whole and in light of the other deductions allowed under the means test, Section 707(b)(2)(A)(iii) requires a forward-looking assessment of the secured payments that the debtor actually will make.

B. Looking Forward, Payments That the Debtor Will Not Make Cannot Be Considered "Payments on Account of a Secured Debt"

The bankruptcy appellate panel reasoned that it ultimately did not matter whether the statute was forward looking, because "nothing the debtor does or does not do," including surrendering the secured property, "changes the fact that scheduled payments remain contractually due." Morse v. Rudler (In re Rudler), 388 B.R. at 437. But that reasoning reflects a misunderstanding of the law of secured debts. Contrary to the bankruptcy appellate panel's conclusion, the surrender and transfer of title of collateral securing a debt changes the nature of the debt, so that any remaining obligation on the debt is not an obligation "on account of a secured debt" and any payment would not be made to a "secured creditor," as required by the statute. Accordingly, the forward looking nature of the means test is critically important; it means that payments that are due on a secured debt but the debtor will never make cannot be deducted from monthly income under the means test.

While a debtor's obligation on account of a secured debt after he surrenders the collateral varies under state law, surrender and transfer of title either eliminates the obligation or turns the debt into an unsecured debt. Some states are non-recourse states, in which a borrower may surrender property and will not be liable for any deficiency. See Baxter Dunaway, State Laws and Practices Regarding Confirmation of Sale and Deficiency Judgments, Appendix 19A, Law of Distressed Real Estate (2008). And even in recourse states, once the debtor surrenders the collateral and title transfers to the lender, the debt becomes an unsecured debt rather than a secured one, which means that any payment on a contractual obligation that follows would not be a "payment on account of [a] secured debt[]," and would not be made to a "secured creditor." See In re Wright, 492 F.3d 829 (7th Cir. 2007) (concluding that where debtors owed more on their purchase-money automobile loan than the car was worth, any shortfall had to be treated as an unsecured debt under the Bankruptcy Code, because the creditor was entitled only to an unsecured deficiency judgment after surrender of the car).

While the bankruptcy appellate panel in this case noted that surrendering the secured property would not change "the fact that scheduled payments remain contractually due," Morse v. Rudler (In re Rudler), 388 B.R. at 437, the court failed to recognize that any obligation that remains "contractually due" would not be due to a "secured creditor," as specified in the statute. Once the surrender (or foreclosure) takes place and title is transferred to the lender, any obligations become unsecured, and that fact is relevant to the debtor's monthly expenses, and thus relevant to whether granting the debtor a chapter 7 discharge would be an abuse. As one court has explained, when "a debtor surrenders collateral, the debtor is no longer required to make the scheduled installment payments. If there is a deficiency after application of the collateral proceeds to the indebtedness, an unsecured claim remains, but a secured debt no longer exists and no payment is due except for an unsecured deficiency balance." In re Harris, 353 B.R. at 309. "'Indeed, debtors return collateral to secured parties for the express purpose of lowering their monthly living expenses.'" Id., quoting In re Love, 350 B.R. 611, 614-15 (Bankr. M.D. Ala. 2006). A court assessing a motion to dismiss a filing as presumptively abusive will know whether the debtor intends to make payments on the debt or forfeit the collateral. A debtor must file a statement of intention as to whether he intends to retain or surrender property secured by debt within 30 days of the earlier of the chapter 7 petition date and the date of the meeting of creditors. See 11 U.S.C. § 521(a)(2)(A); Interim Fed. R. Bankr. P. 1017(b)(2) (requiring individual debtors in chapter 7 cases to file a statement of intent on the appropriate form); In re Burr, 160 F.3d 843, 849 (1st Cir. 1998). This means that the latest possible date for the debtor to file the statement is 30 days after he files the chapter 7 petition. United States Trustees have 10 days from the meeting of creditors to "review all materials" filed by the debtor (including the statement of intent), and file a statement as to whether the debtor's case would be presumed abusive under Section 707(b), and 30 days to file a motion to dismiss for presumed abuse. 11 U.S.C. § 704(b)(1) and (2). Because the meeting of creditors must be held "no fewer then 20 and no more than 40 days after the order for relief," see Federal Rule of Bankruptcy Procedure Rule 2003, which in a voluntary petition under chapter 7 is the date of the petition, see 11 U.S.C. 301(b), the United States Trustee should know by the deadline for filing his statement on presumptive abuse whether the debtor intends to surrender property secured by debt.

In this case, Rudler not only stated his intent to forfeit the property, he actually failed to make mortgage payments prior to his bankruptcy filing. See App. 46 (Secured Creditor's Motion for Relief from Automatic Stay, noting a pre-petition arrearage of $21,259). Accordingly, allowing him to deduct his mortgage payments would not even provide an accurate snapshot of his current payments on account of secured debts as of the date of the petition. See In re Naut, 2008 WL 191297 at *8 ("debts must be included on a debtor's Schedule J [the statement of current expenses required by 11 U.S.C. § 521(a)(1)(B)(ii)] to be deducted from income through the means test.").[6] Rather, as explained above, it would allow him to shelter approximately $1461 a month in disposable income that otherwise could be used to pay his creditors. For all these reasons, a debtor's intent to surrender the collateral securing a debt means that payments due on that debt should not be deducted as "payments on account of a secured debt" under the means test.

C. Disallowing Deductions for Payments That Will Never Be Made Best Serves the Purpose of the Means Test

1. Allowing a deduction only for mortgage payments that actually will be made is not only compelled by the statutory text, but also best serves Congress's purpose in enacting the means test. The 2005 Act established the means test – the "heart of the [2005 Act's] consumer bankruptcy reforms," H.R. Rep. No. 109-31

[6] Rudler filed for bankruptcy on August 15, 2006, but the record reflects that his mortgage was in arrears prior to the filing. App. 2 (petition date), 46 (Motion for Relief from Automatic Stay noting arrearage). Because Rudler had stopped making mortgage payments when he filed, his case does not present the question of how to account for mortgage payments made between the date of a bankruptcy filing and the date of the forfeiture of the property securing the mortgage. Moreover, Rudler's experience appears to be typical; other decisions note that the debtor had stopped making payments on the debt at least as soon as he stated an intent to forfeit, if not before, even though the actual forfeiture had not yet taken place. See, e.g., In re Naut, 2008 WL 191297 at *7 (Bankr. E.D. Pa. Jan. 22, 2008) (noting that the debtor "ceased making payments on the [secured] debt at least at the time he filed his petition in this case."); In re Nockerts, 357 B.R. at 500 (noting that the debtors testified at the meeting of creditors that they were "not making the monthly payment on the mortgages"). Accordingly, how to apply Section 707(b)(2)(A)(iii) where the debtor makes a mortgage payment after filing for bankruptcy but before forfeiting his property appears to be a purely theoretical question.

(I) at 1 (2005), reprinted in 2005 U.S.C.C.A.N. 88, 89 – to identify which debtors have the means to pay something to their creditors, and which do not. Congress intended the means test to ensure that those who can afford to repay some portion of their unsecured debts be required to do so. See H.R. Rep. No. 109-31 (I) at 1 (2005), reprinted in 2005 U.S.C.C.A.N. 88, 89 (stating intent to make certain that debtors "repay creditors the maximum they can afford."). That purpose is better served by allowing the debtor to include only those payments that the debtor actually will make. Reading the means test to allow the deduction of payments that the debtor has no intention of making would make the means test a less accurate picture of the debtor's "average monthly payments on account of secured debts." By contrast, reading the statute to allow only those payments that actually will be made gives a more accurate picture of what the debtor's resources will be in the period following the petition, which is the key fact for determining whether the petition is presumptively abusive. In this case, the difference is stark. If the ruling below stands, Rudler's debts will be discharged even though he has $1461 in disposable income and could repay his creditors roughly $87,000 over the course of a 60 month chapter 13 plan.

The bankruptcy appellate concluded that its interpretation of the statute served Congress's intent to create a "mechanical" means test. See Morse v. Rudler (In re Rudler), 388 B.R. at 439. The history of the 2005 Act makes clear, however, that Congress's primary intent in creating the means test was to decrease the number of abusive filings by ensuring that debtors "repay creditors the maximum they can afford," and its effort to make the means test a mechanical one was subsidiary to the effort to eliminate abuse. And in any event, the means test is more accurate, and no less mechanical, if it requires a court to take the debtor's intent to surrender property securing a debt into account when projecting the debtors payments on account of secured debt in the 60 months following the filing of the bankruptcy petition.

2. An analogy to this Court's interpretation of the factors for dismissing a chapter 7 petition prior to the 2005 Act also suggests that the means test should not be read to allow the deduction of payments on account of secured debt that will not be made. Prior to the 2005 Act, Section 707(b) provided a presumption in favor of discharging the debts of a chapter 7 debtor, and a party seeking dismissal under Section 707(b) was required to show that permitting the case to proceed under chapter 7 would be a "substantial abuse" of the provisions of chapter 7. The 2005 Act changed this statutory framework by removing both the presumption in favor of discharge and the term "substantial." A chapter 7 case may now be dismissed or converted upon a showing that the grant of relief under chapter 7 would be only an abuse (not a substantial abuse) of the provisions of chapter 7. 11 U.S.C. §§ 707(b)(1), 707(b)(2)(A). Interpreting the "substantial abuse" requirement that applied prior to the 2005 Act, this Court held that, to determine whether a petition would be a "substantial abuse" of chapter 7, bankruptcy courts should consider whether the debtor could repay a substantial portion of his past debts. See In re Lamanna, 153 F.3d 1, 4 (1st Cir. 1998). The other courts of appeals agreed that the key question was whether the debtor could repay a substantial portion of his debts. See In re Behlke, 358 F.3d 429, 434, 437 (6th Cir. 2004); In re Price, 353 F.3d 1135, 1140 (9th Cir. 2004); In re Stewart, 175 F.3d 796, 809 (10th Cir. 1999); In re Kornfield, 164 F.3d 778, 781, 784 (2d Cir. 1999); Fonder v. United States, 974 F.2d 996, 999 (8th Cir. 1992); In re Krohn, 886 F.2d 123 (6th Cir. 1989).

Because Congress eliminated the presumption in favor of discharge and the requirement that the abuse of chapter 7 be "substantial," the standard for whether a bankruptcy petition should be dismissed under Section 707(b) must now be understood to be less demanding than it was before the 2005 Act. If "substantial abuse" requires the ability to repay a substantial portion of one's debts, then simple abuse must require the ability to repay something less than a substantial amount one's debts. But reading the means test to allow the deduction of payments on account of secured debt even though those payments will never be made would effectively allow the debtor to shelter a substantial portion of his income, which would make the standard for dismissal of a chapter 7 petition harder to meet, rather than easier. As one court has explained, the debtor "would be artificially reducing his current monthly income to defeat the purpose of the means test and to avoid paying his debts to his creditors, when he could in fact afford to pay." In re Naut, 2008 WL 191297, at *8.

IN RE GLEN H. RUDLER, DEBTOR.

PHOEBE MORSE, United States Trustee for the Districts of Maine, Massachusetts, New Hampshire and Rhode Island, Appellant,

v.

GLEN H. RUDLER, Appellee.

ON APPEAL FROM THE UNITED STATES BANKRUPTCY
APPELLATE PANEL FOR THE FIRST CIRCUIT

This case concerns the proper treatment under the means test of approximately $87,000 in mortgage payments that the debtor acknowledges he will never make. The means test allows debtors to deduct "average monthly payments on account of secured debts," 11 U.S.C. § 707(b)(2)(A)(iii), from their monthly income when determining whether that income is above the threshold at which a bankruptcy filing is presumptively abusive. Section 707(b)(2)(A) defines "average monthly payments on account of secured debts" as the sum of "the total of all amounts scheduled as contractually due to secured creditors in each month of the 60 months following the date of the petition," divided by 60. 11 U.S.C. § 707(b)(2)(A)(iii). The United States Trustee understands these provisions to prohibit a debtor from deducting payments on secured debts that the debtor will never make, because a payment is not "scheduled as contractually due" following the petition, i.e., properly listed on a bankruptcy schedule as a payment that will be made even after the bankruptcy, if the debtor has made clear that he will not make it. In concluding that a debtor can deduct mortgage payments that he will never make, the bankruptcy appellate panel reasoned that the means test is intended to provide a mechanical "snap shot" of the debtor's situation at filing. But that reasoning not only reflects an incorrect understanding of the statute, it does not even support the panel's decision. In any event, the United States Trustee's treatment of the test is no less mechanical than the panel's, and it provides a more accurate picture of whether a filing is presumptively abusive. This court should reverse the panel's decision.

Debtor William Rudler argues that he should be permitted to deduct mortgage payments that he will never make because those payments remained due at the time that he prepared his filing, even though he made clear that he would not make them. Rudler's reading of the statute misreads the term "scheduled as contractually due" and fails to take account of the phrase "following the date of the petition" that follows it. Rudler's brief also contains no response to our argument that the United States Trustee's reading of Section 707(b)(2)(A)(iii) treats payments on secured debts most consistently with other expenses deductible under the means test, and makes no attempt to reconcile his reading of the section with Congress's purpose in adopting the means test.

ARGUMENT

Section 707(b) of the Bankruptcy Code authorizes a bankruptcy court to dismiss a Chapter 7 case (or convert it to Chapter 13) if it finds that "the granting of relief would be an abuse of the provisions of this chapter." 11 U.S.C. § 707(b). In the 2005 Act, Congress added the means test to the Bankruptcy Code to identify presumptively abusive filings. See 11 U.S.C. § 707(b)(2)(A). Contrary to Rudler's arguments, the means test does not allow him to deduct mortgage payments that he will not make when calculating his current monthly income reduced by projected allowable expenses for the period following the bankruptcy filing.

I. Read as a Whole, Section 707(b)(2)(A) Is Forward Looking

A. Rudler argues for his interpretation of the statute on the ground that it is compelled by plain meaning. He suggests (Br. at 6) that the phrase "scheduled as contractually due" includes payments that will be contractually due after the filing, regardless of whether they will be made, because "[o]therwise, the word 'scheduled' would have no meaning." But it is his reading that fails to give any independent meaning to the phrase "scheduled as."

If Congress meant for debtors to deduct all "contractually due" payments without regard to whether they would actually be made, it could have left out the phrase "scheduled as" and defined "payments on account of secured debts" as payments that are "contractually due . . . following the date of the petition" instead of "scheduled as contractually due . . . following the date of the petition." Reading the phrase "scheduled as contractually due" to call for a forward-looking assessment of whether the payments will actually be made takes account of the debtor's intent to reaffirm or disavow a debt and thus gives separate effect to the term "scheduled as" in the phrase "scheduled as contractually due." That approach is consistent with the rule that "whenever possible, every word and phrase in a statute should be given effect." Aguilar v. U.S. Immigration and Customs Enforcement Div. of Dept. of Homeland Sec., 510 F.3d 1, 10 (1st Cir. 2007).

As we explain in our opening brief (at 22-23), the phrase "scheduled as" is a term of art in the Bankruptcy Code. Something is "scheduled as" in the meaning of the Code when it is properly listed on a debtor's bankruptcy schedules. While Rudler contends (Br. at 12-13) that "scheduled as" does not have this special meaning in the Code, noting that the Code sometimes uses the term "scheduled" to refer to the placement of a claim or debt on a bankruptcy schedule but sometimes uses in a more general sense (Br. at 12-13, quoting In re Nockerts, 357 B.R. 497, 502 (Bankr. E.D. Wis. 2006)), that general contention misses the narrower point. Nockerts addresses the use of the term "scheduled" generally, not the meaning of the narrower phrase "scheduled as," which appears only in Section 1111a and Section 707(b)(2)(A)(iii). Accordingly, Rudler's reliance on Nockerts is unresponsive.

B. Allowing a deduction for mortgage payments that will never be made on the theory that the payments are contractually due even if the debtor will never make them also ignores the phrase "following the date of the petition." As we have explained, the word "following," used as a preposition, means "subsequent to" or "after in time." Webster's Third New Int'l Dictionary, 833 (1993). By requiring courts to look at payments contractually due “subsequent to” or “after” the date of the petition, the statute makes clear that it contemplates a projection of future expenses rather than a snapshot of current expenses. The means test thus allows the debtor to deduct only payments that he actually will make.

C. The term “payments on account of secured debts” should also be read to call for a forward-looking assessment of what payments the debtor actually will make because that reading treats the deduction for payments on secured debts most consistently with the treatment of other expenses under the means test. It is a general rule of statutory construction that “‘a word [in a statute] is known by the company it keeps.’” Dolan v. United States Postal Serv., 546 U.S. 481, 486-487 (2006).

As our opening brief explained (at 25-26), the other deductions allowed by the means test are forward looking. Rudler makes no response to this point about the other provisions of the means test. Instead, he contends (Br. at 10) that Congress could have used more specific language in the means test to indicate that a debtor cannot deduct payments on secured debt that he will not make, pointing to the second clause of Section 707(b)(2)(A)(iii) as an example. But the second clause of Section 707(b)(2)(A)(iii) actually supports rather than undermines the United States Trustee’s position that the means test is forward looking, because the second clause provides that only payments that actually will be made should be factored in to the test.

As is now familiar, the first clause of Section 707(b)(2)(A)(iii) – the one at issue here – provides that the debtor’s average monthly payments on account of secured debts shall be calculated as the sum of the “total of all amounts scheduled as contractually due to secured creditors in each month of the 60 months following the date of the petition." The second clause also allows "any additional payments to secured creditors necessary for the debtor, in filing a plan under chapter 13 of this title, to maintain possession of the debtor's primary residence, motor vehicle, or other property necessary for the support of the debtor and the debtor's dependents, that serves as collateral for secured debts." The use of the word "additional" and the relationship of these two provisions is telling. The payments in the second clause can only be "additional payments" (as opposed to simply being "payments") if they are additional to the payments referred to in the first clause. By providing that only "additional payments" necessary to maintain possession of certain allowable items should be factored in under the means test, the second clause makes clear that the first clause also refers to payments, i.e., amounts that actually will be paid.[1]

D. Contrary to Rudler's suggestion (Br. at 6), Sovereign Bank's Motion for Relief from Stay does not show that Rudler properly deducted the payments that he will never make, for two reasons. First, the bank's motion did not purport to interpret the provisions of the statute. Second, while the bank used the term "contractually due" at one point in its motion and separately referred to the "next scheduled payment," it never referred to a particular payment as being "scheduled as contractually due." That a payment might be commonly referred to as being due under a contract ("contractually due") even if it will not be made does not show that

[1] The second clause excludes luxury items from cure calculations under a bankruptcy plan by making clear that only the primary residence and other items necessary for support should be reaffirmed and deducted as monthly expenses.

the payment is a "payment on account of a secured debt" that is "scheduled as contractually due" within the meaning of the Code. The United States's Trustee's argument does not depend on the "contractually due" language in isolation. Rather, it is the United States Trustee's position that, by using the phrases "scheduled as contractually due" (rather than simply "contractually due") and "60 months following the date of the petition," the statute calls for a forward-looking assessment of which payments on secured debts will actually be made and are thus properly listed (or "scheduled") as payments on account of a secured debt.

II. Contrary to Rudler's Arguments, Payments That the Debtor Will Not Make Cannot Be Considered "Payments on Account of a Secured Debt"

As our opening brief explains, the bankruptcy appellate panel was wrong to conclude that "nothing the debtor does or does not do," including surrendering the secured property, "changes the fact that scheduled payments remain contractually due." Morse v. Rudler (In re Rudler), 388 B.R. 431, 437 (1st Cir. BAP (N.H.) 2008). The surrender and transfer of title of collateral securing a debt changes any remaining debt from a secured debt to an unsecured one See In re Wright, 492 F.3d 829, 833 (7th Cir. 2007). Once the debtor surrenders the collateral, any remaining obligation on the debt is not an obligation "on account of a secured debt" and any payment would not be made to a "secured creditor," as required by the statute. Because any remaining obligation would not be "on account of a secured debt" or to a "secured creditor," the bankruptcy appellate panel was wrong to conclude that surrender would not change the status of Rudler's remaining contractual obligations within the meaning of the statute.[2]

Rudler does not dispute that surrender and transfer of title changes the nature of the debt. Instead, he contends (Br. at 8) that the logical consequence of this point is that "all parties would have to wait until the debtor had surrendered his homestead and the bank had foreclosed on the homestead satisfying the debt, before the court could correctly determine the number of months that the debtor could be permitted to include payments on the secured debt." Rudler's contention misunderstands the significance of this point about the law of secured debts; the point is not that the means test requires parsing individual payments, but rather that the court below was incorrect when it concluded that the debtor should be permitted to deduct payments he was contractually obligated to make without regard to his intent to surrender because surrender and transfer of title does not change the fact "that scheduled payments remain contractually due" within the meaning of the statute. Contrary to the court's reasoning, the debtor's intent to surrender has significant implications for his contractual obligations and for the best estimate of the debtor's monthly disposable income following bankruptcy.

[2] Several Courts of Appeals have followed the Seventh Circuit's decision in Wright, which concerns the proper treatment of a debt secured by a vehicle under Chapter 13 when the debtor surrenders the vehicle. Like the Seventh Circuit, those courts have each recognized that, once a debtor surrenders secured property, any remaining obligation on the debt becomes unsecured. See DaimlerChrsyler Financial Services Americas LLC v. Barrett (In re Barrett), __ F.3d __, 2008 WL 4378739 *7 (11th Cir.) ("creditor may pursue an unsecured deficiency claim") (emphasis added); Tidewater Financial Co. v. Kenney, 531 F.3d 312, 318 (4th Cir. 2008) ("the creditor may pursue an unsecured deficiency claim under state law") (emphasis added); DaimlerChrsyler Financial Services Americas LLC v. Ballard (In re Ballard), 526 F.3d 634, 638 (10th Cir. 2008) (A creditor may pursue an unsecured deficiency claim when the debtor surrenders the vehicle") (emphasis added); Capital One Auto Finance v. Osborn, 515 F.3d 817, 822 (8th Cir. 2008) (under state law, "an unsecured deficiency judgement is allowed when the creditor complies with [the] law governing disposition of collateral after default")(emphasis added); see also AmeriCredit Financial Services, Inc., v. Long (In re Long), 519 F.3d 288 (6th Cir. 2008) (recognizing general principle but calling for national rule regarding deficiencies).

Congress added the means test to Chapter 7 as a safeguard against abusive filings. The means test is an estimate of the debtor's monthly disposable income for the 60 month period following bankruptcy, not an after-the-fact accounting of disposable income. The test estimates the debtor's monthly disposable income to determine whether the debtor would have sufficient means to repay some or all of his debts under a Chapter 13 plan. The means test provides a more accurate estimate if it disallows deductions of payments on secured debt where the debtor intends to surrender the property securing the debt and cease making payments on the debt than it is if it allows deductions for the life of the secured debt without regard to surrender, even if in some cases debtors end up making a few payments that are not factored into the estimate. Because Section 521(a)(2)(B) requires the debtor to surrender shortly after filing the statement of intention, see 11 U.S.C. § 521 (a)(2)(B) ("within 30 days after the first date set for the meeting of creditors under section 341(a), or within such additional time as the court, for cause, within such 30-day period fixes, the debtor shall perform his intention with respect to such property, as specified by subparagraph (A) of this paragraph."), debtors in any event should never make many post-statement of intention, pre-surrender payments.

More to the point, while Rudler is correct as a theoretical matter that a debtor might continue making payments until the surrender actually takes place, and that any such payments would be payments to a secured creditor, Rudler's case does not present the question how such payments should be treated under Section 707(b)(2)(A)(iii), because Rudler stopped making payments even before he filed for bankruptcy. See App. 46 (Secured Creditor's Motion for Relief from Automatic Stay, noting a pre-petition arrearage of $21,259). Moreover, his case appears to be typical; other decisions in this area also note that the debtor had stopped making payments on the debt prior to surrender. See, e.g., In re Naut, 2008 WL 191297 at *7 (Bankr. E.D. Pa. Jan. 22, 2008) (noting that the debtor "ceased making payments on the [secured] debt at least at the time he filed his petition in this case."); In re Nockerts, 357 B.R. at 500 (noting that the debtors testified at the meeting of creditors that they were "not making the monthly payment on the mortgages"). Rudler's argument that debtors should be allowed to deduct up to 60 months worth of mortgage payments that they will not make because otherwise the bankruptcy court "would have to wait" to determine the number of monthly payments that the debtor "could be permitted to include" depends on a purely theoretical scenario, and one that is in any event not presented by this case.

Rudler also contends (Br. at 6) that the debtor's intent to surrender property securing debt is irrelevant under the means test because "the means test does not make reference to the statement of intention filed by the Debtors pursuant to § 521(a)(2)(A)." But as our opening brief explains, Section 521(a)(2) requires the debtor to file the statement of intention at a point early enough in the proceedings to ensure that the United States Trustee will know whether the debtor intends to reaffirm secured debts or surrender the property securing those debts when evaluating whether the filing is presumptively abusive, and the debtor's intent to surrender is clearly relevant to the ultimate question addressed by the means test: whether the filing is presumptively abusive. The debtor must file the statement of intention within 30 days of the earlier of the Chapter 7 petition date and the date of the meeting of creditors. See 11 U.S.C. § 521(a)(2)(A); Interim Fed. R. Bankr. P. 1017(b)(2) (requiring individual debtors in Chapter 7 cases to file a statement of intent on the appropriate form). This means that the latest possible date for the debtor to file the statement is 30 days after he files the Chapter 7 petition. United States Trustees have 10 days from the meeting of creditors to "review all materials" filed by the debtor (including the statement of intent), and file a statement as to whether the debtor's case would be presumed abusive under Section 707(b), and 30 days to file a motion to dismiss for presumed abuse. 11 U.S.C. § 704(b)(1) and (2). Because the meeting of creditors must be held "no fewer then 20 and no more than 40 days after the order for relief," see Federal Rule of Bankruptcy Procedure Rule 2003, which in a voluntary petition under Chapter 7 is the date of the petition, see 11 U.S.C. § 301(b), the United States Trustee will know by the deadline for filing his statement on presumptive abuse whether the debtor intends to surrender property secured by debt.

Rudler also argues (Br. at 8) that the United States Trustee's position is "impractical and unreasonable" because it suggests that a formerly secured creditor would have to file an unsecured claim for any deficiency resulting from foreclosure. Contrary to Rudler's suggestion, there is nothing surprising about that suggestion – as Wright and the cases that follow it explain, that is precisely the effect that would be expected from surrender and transfer of title of collateral securing a debt. See In re Wright, 492 F.3d at 833.

III. Rudler Offers No Argument That His Interpretation of the Statute Serves the Purpose of the Means Test

Prohibiting deductions for mortgage payments that will not be made best serves Congress's purpose in enacting the means test. The 2005 Act established the means test to make certain that debtors "repay creditors the maximum they can afford." See H.R. Rep. No. 109-31 (I) at 1 (2005), reprinted in 2005 U.S.C.C.A.N. 88, 89. That purpose is better served by allowing the debtor to deduct only those payments that the debtor actually will make. That way, the means test gives a more accurate picture of what the debtor's resources will be in the period following the petition, which is the key fact for determining whether the petition is presumptively abusive. In this case, the difference is stark. If the ruling below stands, Rudler's debts will be discharged even though he has $1461 in monthly disposable income and could repay his creditors roughly $87,000 over the course of a 60 month Chapter 13 plan.

Rudler argues (Br. at 4) that the means test was intended to "reflect the debtor's financial condition at the time of the filing of the petition." But Rudler's interpretation has the opposite effect. His intent to surrender the property means that he will no longer make payments on the property, and thus that he has additional funds to repay his creditors. The means test is best understood to reflect that reality. Rudler provides no explanation for how it is "more accurate" to deduct payments that the debtor has explicitly declared at the time of the filing of the petition that he will not make than it is to take account of the debtor's intention to surrender his home.

Ultimately, Rudler offers no argument that allowing him to deduct the payments that he will not make serves the goal of ensuring that those who can afford to repay some portion of their unsecured debts be required to do so. Rudler contends (Br. at 3) that the United States Trustee's statements as to "what amount of money . . . would be available to pay creditors under a Chapter 13 plan would seem to be an argument made pursuant to a Motion to Dismiss [] considering the totality of the circumstances." He does not deny, however, that he has claimed roughly $87,000 in mortgage payments that he will never make or explain why that information is not directly relevant to the question whether his petition is presumptively abusive. Without those deductions, Rudler's creditors would likely recover most of what Rudler owes them. Conversely, if this Court accepts the views of the bankruptcy appellate panel, Rudler will be allowed to deduct payments that he will never make, and his debts will likely be discharged in bankruptcy based upon that fiction. That result is contrary to Congress' stated purpose for enacting the 2005 Act.

CONCLUSION

The judgment of the Bankruptcy Appellate Panel should be reversed.

STATEMENT OF JURISDICTION

The bankruptcy court had jurisdiction, under 28 U.S.C. § 157(a) and (b), to hear the underlying voluntary case under Chapter 7 of the Bankruptcy Code, 11 U.S.C. § 701, et seq. This Court has jurisdiction over appeals from final bankruptcy orders. 28 U.S.C. §§ 158(a) and (b)(1); Interim Fed. R. Bankr. P. 8001(a) and (e); Fed. R. Bankr. P. 8002(a); U.S. District Court Local Rules 2200 .2(b) and 2200.6. "A bankruptcy court order is final and thus appealable 'where it 1) resolves and seriously affects substantive rights and 2) finally determines the discrete issue to which it is addressed." In re AFI Holding, Inc., — F.3d — , 2008 WL 2420706 p. 6 (9th Cir. June 17, 2008) (citing In re Lewis, 113 F.3d 1040, 1043 (9th Cir. 1997)).

STATEMENT OF ISSUES

1. Did the bankruptcy court abuse its discretion in ruling on the motion by Mulheim Boyd ("MB") to withdraw as counsel for Debtor Wendy Ryan ("Ryan")?

2. Did the bankruptcy court's rulings violate MB's due process rights by offering MB the option of waiving its fees as a condition of withdrawal, despite the fact that MB had the opportunity, in an evidentiary hearing, to justify its fees?

3. Would MB's continued representation of Ryan, pursuant to an order of the bankruptcy court, have violated Oregon Rule of Professional Conduct 1.16?

4. Should this Court remand this appeal so the bankruptcy court can conduct an 11 U.S.C. § 329 review to determine what attorney fees, if any, are appropriate under that section of the Bankruptcy Code?

STANDARD OF REVIEW

A bankruptcy court's legal conclusions are reviewed de novo, while its factual findings are reviewed for clear error. E.g., In re Myrvang, 232 F.3d 1116, 1120 (9th Cir. 2000).

Application of a rule of law to established facts is generally reviewed de novo if the question requires consideration of legal concepts in a mix of facts and law. United States v. McConney, 728 F.2d 1195, 1202-04 (9th Cir. 1984) (en banc), cert. denied, 469 U.S. 824 (1984).

A bankruptcy court's choice of remedies is reviewed for abuse of discretion, since it has broad equitable remedial powers. In re Straightline Investments, Inc., 525 F.3d 870, 882-83 (9th Cir. 2008) (citations omitted).

STATEMENT OF THE CASE

I. Nature of the case.

In this appeal, MB challenges a series of bankruptcy court orders that offered the choice of 1) waiving its fees as a condition of granting the firm's motion to withdraw as attorney for Ryan; or 2) not waiving its fees, resulting in denial of MB's motion to withdraw and leaving the firm's status as Ryan's attorney unaltered. MB substituted in as Ryan's attorney, in place of her initial attorney, Kimberly Covington ("Covington"), following the United States Trustee's filing of a motion to dismiss Ryan's case as an abuse of Chapter 7 of the Bankruptcy Code.[1] MB appeared on Ryan's behalf at a preliminary hearing on that dismissal motion. Thereafter, on February 12, 2008, just two days before Ryan's written response to the dismissal motion was due

[1] United States Trustees are officials of the Department of Justice appointed by the Attorney General to supervise the administration of bankruptcy cases and trustees. See 28 U.S.C. §§ 581-589; In re Columbia Gas Sys., Inc., 33 F.3d 294, 296 (3rd Cir. 1994) (United States Trustees oversee the bankruptcy process, protect the public interest, and ensure that bankruptcy cases are conducted according to law) (citing H.R. Rep. No. 95-595, 109 (1977)). "The United States Trustee is the 'watchdog' of the bankruptcy system . . . charged with preventing fraud and abuse and with 'fill[ing] the vacuum' caused by possible creditor inactivity." In re Castillo, 297 F.3d 940, 950 (9th Cir. 2002). Section 307 of the Bankruptcy Code authorizes the United States Trustee to appear and be heard on the matters at issue in this appeal. See 11 U.S.C. § 307; In re Donovan Corp., 215 F.3d 929 (9th Cir. 2000) ("The United States trustee may . . . intervene and appear at any level of the proceedings from the bankruptcy court on . . . as either a party or an amicus.") (internal quotation marks omitted).

(and with discovery requests of Ryan pending, and with Ryan's deposition scheduled for February 20, 2008), MB moved for the bankruptcy court's permission to withdraw as Ryan's attorney. The United States Trustee opposed MB's motion to withdraw because of its timing.

An expedited hearing was held on the motion to withdraw, and the bankruptcy court's order resulting from that hearing constituted the first of the series of orders MB now appeals. The last of those orders required MB to file a declaration with the court, within ten days, stating it would not waive it's fees, if the firm so chose. If MB did not file such a declaration, it's motion to withdraw would be deemed granted and its fees deemed waived. MB has never filed a formal declaration as provided in that order, and the ten-day period has now passed. However, within the ten-day period, MB filed its notice of appeal.

II. Factual background.

A. Events preceding the February 20, 2008, hearing.

On October 30, 2007, Ryan filed a voluntary petition under Chapter 7 of the Bankruptcy Code. See Chapter 7 Voluntary Petition, Docket Entry #1, District of Oregon Bankruptcy Case No. 07-63072-aer7. Covington, as Ryan's initial attorney of record, prepared and filed Ryan's bankruptcy petition, schedules, Statement of Financial Affairs, and other related documents, and appeared with Ryan in a November 26, 2007, 11 U.S.C. § 341 meeting of creditors. Id.; ER 105.

On December 5, 2007, the United States Trustee filed a motion to dismiss Ryan's case as an abuse of the provisions of Chapter 7 of the Bankruptcy Code ("§ 707(b) Motion"), pursuant to 11 U.S.C. §§ 707(b)(1) and (2); or, alternatively, §§ 707(b)(1) and (3). ER 1. Section 707(b)(1) provides for dismissal of a consumer debtor's case if the court finds "granting relief would be an abuse of the provisions of" Chapter 7. As revised by the Bankruptcy Abuse Prevention and Consumer Protection Act of 2005 ("BAPCPA"), § 707(b) provides for a statutory "means test," set forth under § 707(b)(2)(A) (applicable only to above median income debtors, and based on historic income and certain standardized expenses).[2] If a debtor "fails" the means test, a presumption of abuse arises which may only rebutted as specified under § 707(b)(2)(B) (providing for rebuttal if "special circumstances" warrant adjustment of debtor's income or expenses). Regardless of whether the presumption of abuse arises, a debtor's case may still be dismissed under § 707(b)(1) if granting Chapter 7 relief would be an abuse based on bad faith or the totality of the circumstances of the debtor's financial situation. §§ 707(b)(3)(A) and (B). The United States Trustee alleged that granting Ryan Chapter 7 relief would have constituted an abuse because she had sufficient disposable income under § 707(b)(2)(a)(i)(II) to trigger the presumption of abuse. Alternatively, the United States Trustee alleged that bad faith factors and the totality of the circumstances of Ryan's financial situation warranted dismissal of her case. See ER 3 (United States Trustee's memorandum supporting the § 707(b) Motion).

The United States Trustee's memorandum in support of the § 707(b) motion stated factual and legal bases supporting dismissal of Ryan's case. ER 3. On December 11, 2007, the bankruptcy court noticed a January 10, 2008, preliminary hearing on the § 707(b) Motion. See Docket Entry #28, Case No. 07-63072-aer7.

On January 10, 2008, the same date as the preliminary hearing on the § 707(b) Motion, MB attorney Loren Scott ("Scott") substituted in as attorney of record for Ryan, in place of [2] Former § 707(b) provided for dismissal of cases found to be a substantial abuse of the provisions of Chapter 7. The BAPCPA reduced the requisite level of abuse to simply abuse. Under the means test, a presumption of abuse arises if a debtor's monthly disposable income calculates (based on § 707(b)(2) criteria) as at least $109.59, and over 60 months would provide for payment of at least 25 percent of the debtor's general unsecured debts; or, alternatively, if the debtor's monthly disposable income calculates as at least $182.50. § 707(b)(2)(a)(i)(I) and (II).

Covington.[3] ER 24. Scott appeared on Ryan's behalf at the preliminary hearing. ER 27. In that hearing, Scott stated to the bankruptcy court that:

> I've noted at the outset [Ryan's] clear ineligibility for Chapter 13 [due to her] exceeding the debt limits, and the question then becomes does [Ryan] want to make an effort to explore this in Chapter 11, dismiss the case, or fight the [United States Trustee's § 707(b) Motion].[4]

ER 31. Scott further stated:

> I think there are potential defenses to the presumption of abuse which I will probably certainly end up conceding arises, although I'm not exactly prepared to do that here today, both under § 707(2) and (b)(3) defenses, but we would like a little bit of time to make sure that this is a fight worth fighting. . . .

ER. 32.

On January 15, 2008, the court entered a stipulated scheduling order for litigating the § 707(b) Motion (the "Scheduling Order"). ER 38. Ryan's written response to the § 707(b) Motion was due no later than February 14, 2008. Id. On January 31, 2008, the bankruptcy court noticed a March 6, 2008, evidentiary hearing on the § 707(b) Motion. ER 41.

U.S. District Court for the District of Oregon Local Rule 83.11(a) specifies that "[a]n attorney may withdraw as counsel of record only with leave of Court, if doing so leaves the party unrepresented. . . ." Local Bankruptcy Rule (LBR) 9010-1(A) of the Bankruptcy Court for the District of Oregon makes LR 83.11 applicable in bankruptcy cases. In accordance with LR 83.11, Scott "and" MB filed a Motion for Authority to Withdraw as Ryan's Counsel on February 12, 2008, (the "Withdrawal Motion"). ER 42. In a supporting declaration, Scott represented that Ryan requested, on February 12, 2008, that Scott file a motion to withdraw as her counsel so she could finish the case pro se, including opposing the § 707(b) Motion. ER 43. In Scott's declaration, he characterized the Withdrawal Motion as urgent, because of pending Scheduling Order deadlines.

The day after the Withdrawal Motion was filed, Scott filed a Disclosure of Compensation of Attorney for Debtor ("Scott's Disclosure"). ER 45. In Scott's Disclosure, Scott represented he had agreed to provide legal services "[h]ourly" and that he had received $1,000 from Ryan. Id. Under paragraph 6, Scott certified his agreement with Ryan did not include "[a]dversary proceedings and contested matters, other than opposition to the U.S. Trustee's 707(b) motion." Id. He also represented that, subsequent to their agreement regarding compensation, Ryan instructed Scott to withdraw as Ryan's attorney. Id.

The United States Trustee objected to the Withdrawal Motion the same day that motion was filed, because of its timing. ER 52.[5] The United States Trustee's objection emphasized that the final evidentiary hearing on the § 707(b) motion was less than three weeks away (March 6th); the parties were to exchange witness and exhibits lists in just two days (February 14th); the parties' objections to exhibits were due in 9 days (February 21st), or the exhibits would be deemed admissible; and the parties were to provide the court with witness and exhibit lists and trial briefs within sixteen days (February 28th). ER 53-54. Additionally, the United States Trustee's objection noted the Debtor had not yet responded to a portion of discovery requests that had been presented to Scott. ER 54. The objection also noted that on January 14, 2008, the United States Trustee sent Scott a request to schedule Ryan's deposition, and followed that with a February 4, 2008, reminder. Because Scott was unable to confirm a deposition date (and due to other impending Scheduling Order deadlines), the United States Trustee scheduled Ryan's deposition to occur in eight days (February 20th). ER 54-55. Failure to meet any of the deadlines cited in the United States Trustee's objection to the Withdrawal Motion could have resulted in substantial prejudice to Ryan's defense, and to the United States Trustee's ability to prepare its case.

On February 14, 2008, the bankruptcy court noticed a February 20, 2008, evidentiary hearing on the Withdrawal Motion. ER 57. Before the court ruled on the Withdrawal Motion, Scott filed a February 14, 2008, "response" to the § 707(b) Motion. ER 58. That response was merely a "cover sheet" for a narrative response Ryan drafted herself. ER 171. Specifically, Scott electronically filed the cover sheet, with Ryan's response attached, while still her attorney of record. He represented that he filed the document on Ryan's behalf because she intended to oppose the § 707(b) Motion pro se, and had requested that MB cease representing her. ER 58; ER 171.

B. February 20, 2008, hearing regarding the Withdrawal Motion.

In the February 20, 2008, hearing, Scott began by stating Ryan had discharged him. ER 67. Scott cited ORPC 1.16, which he characterized as stating "a lawyer shall not represent a client if among other things the lawyer is discharged." ER 68.

The bankruptcy court then asked Ryan whether her decision to terminate Scott was financial or whether she was dissatisfied with Scott's services. Ryan's response was: "Financial matter." Id. The bankruptcy court then commented regarding Scott's Disclosure, and Scott stated, in part, "when the [$1,000] retainer is exhausted, she will pay monthly bills as they are remitted by [MB]." ER 69. Ryan agreed with that characterization of the fee arrangement.

The bankruptcy court inquired of Ryan regarding Scott's substitution for Covington. Id. Ryan stated that Covington told her that she (Covington) did not have the expertise to continue with a § 707(b) defense; and Covington thus referred Ryan to other counsel, who ultimately referred Ryan to Scott. Id. The court asked whether Ryan had been informed, at the outset of their attorney-client relationship, that Covington's experience was limited. Id. Ryan stated Covington had not done so; rather, Ryan had understood Covington would handle her case from start to finish. Id.

The court then stated it was "loathe to force [Scott] to continue on the case if [he did not] want to continue." ER 73. The court went on to characterize Scott's representation (in the Withdrawal Motion) that he had been discharged as "somewhat misleading because your client is simply indicating she does not have the funds to pay you[,]" which the court did not equate with "discharging a lawyer, which . . . would normally mean to indicate that the client doesn't want [the lawyer] anymore." Id.

The court then stated Scott could either stay on or refund the $1,000 he had received, but that he could not do both. Id. Scott responded: "Your Honor, we'll refund the $1,000 to Ms. Ryan. She's indicated she doesn't want the money back from me but I will do so." Id. Scott then added:

> She has indicated that she does not have the financial wherewithal to continue to pay ongoing fees to my firm for services in the event I am to stay on as her attorney. So she continues to wish for me to withdraw and I will refund the money that I've received.

ER 73-74. Shortly thereafter, Ryan stated, "I would love to be represented but I can't afford it." ER 75. Ryan also stated she was "not sure how many hours Mr. Scott has put in. I was afraid to open his bill when I got it." Id. Ryan then stated:

> But for me to hire another attorney and to start from scratch, they're going to want a retainer. And they're going to want an hourly [fee]. And it's going to cost me a fortune and I don't have it. No one will want to take the case based on a set fee. . .

ER 75-76. In response, the court advised Ryan that, while the court could not change her financial situation, "Mr. Scott is going to be giving you money back." ER 76.

After subsequent discussion regarding Covington, the serious nature of Ryan's situation, and pending deadlines regarding the § 707(b) Motion, the following exchange occurred:

> [THE COURT]: Mr. Scott, since your motion was filed shortly before the deadline, I don't feel too much need to give you too much time to make the payment. So I'm going to give you three days to return the money to Ms. Ryan and to file an affidavit or declaration to the court indicating that's been done.
>
> MR. SCOTT: Will do, your Honor.
>
> THE COURT: And your motion is contingent upon that. If I don't receive that declaration within the next three business days, then your motion to withdraw is denied.

ER 78. Further on, the Court reiterated:

> As a result of today's hearing, Mr. Scott's motion to withdraw is allowed contingent on his refunding the retainer within the next three business days to Ms. Ryan and filing a certificate with the court to that effect.
>
> Again, failing that, the motion to withdraw is denied without further notice or hearing or action by this court.

ER 85.

That ruling was formalized in a Summary of Proceedings & Minute Order filed February 13, 2008 ("Minute Order"), which stated: "If Mr. Scott remits his $1,000 retainer to Ms. Ryan and files a declaration as to same, both within 3 business days of today's date, his motion to withdraw is granted. If he fails to timely remit and declare, the motion is denied. . . ." ER 98.

C. Interim events between February 20 and March 6, 2008, hearings.

On February 22, 2008, Scott filed a declaration stating: "On February 22, 2008, the $1,000 retainer was refunded to [Ryan]." ER 99. In his declaration Scott further represented "MB is issuing this refund to comply with the [Minute Order] and, notwithstanding the issuance of the refund, MB hereby reserves the right to appeal the entry of the [Minute Order]." Id.

On February 25, 2008, the United States Trustee filed a motion for clarification of the Minute Order. ER 101. Specifically, the United States Trustee asked the bankruptcy court to clarify "whether, after remittance of his retainer to [Ryan], Scott is precluded from billing [Ryan] for attorneys' fees incurred through the date of his withdrawal." ER 103.

On February 27, 2008, the United States Trustee filed a stipulated order disgorging $1,701 of Covington's attorneys' fees.[6]

An order supplementing and clarifying the Minute Order was filed February 29, 2008 ("Clarifying Order"). The Clarifying Order stated:

> IT IS HEREBY ORDERED AND ADJUDGED that Mr. Scott's withdrawal from representation of [Ryan] is conditioned on waiver of all fees in the case in addition to refund of his $1,000 retainer; and
> IT IS HEREBY FURTHER ORDERED AND ADJUDGED that unless Mr. Scott files a Declaration within 5 days of this Order's entry that he is not waiving his fees, his [withdrawal motion] is granted, and his fees are deemed waived. If such a declaration is filed, his [withdrawal motion] is denied, and he is permitted to require payment from [Ryan] for the $1,000 previously refunded.

ER 108-09.

On March 3, 2008, MB filed a motion to alter or amend the Minute Order and the [6] In the February 20th hearing, the United States Trustee reported that (based on circumstances described by Ryan during the hearing) the United States Trustee would be seeking disgorgement of Covington's fee. Clarifying Order ("Motion to Alter or Amend") "and for findings." ER 110. In a supporting memorandum, MB argued that 1) its withdrawal was mandatory under ORPC 1.16 and "[t]he court should not have sidestepped that rule . . ." (ER 116); that 2) the bankruptcy court improperly exercised its authority under § 329 to require disgorgement of MB's retainer because a) the statute did not apply, and b), even if it did, the court failed to comply with applicable rules, by failing to give adequate notice and hold a hearing on the issue of MB's fees pursuant to § 329 and Fed. R. Bankr. P. 2017 (ER 119); and that 3) requiring MB to refund the retainer and denial of all fees without notice and a hearing violated MB's rights without due process of law. ER 121.

On March 5, 2008, the United States Trustee filed a response objecting to MB's Motion to Alter or Amend. ER 126.

D. March 6, 2008, hearing regarding the Motion to Alter or Amend.

On March 6, 2008 the bankruptcy court held a hearing on the Motion to Alter or Amend ("March 6th hearing"). Ryan did not personally appear. ER 146. In opening remarks, the court stated that, at the February 20th hearing, it "developed through representations made by [Ryan] and [Scott], that it was a stretch of the terminology to use the word 'discharged.' [Ryan] was in essence, quote, 'discharging [MB],' unquote, because she could not afford to pay the fees, and that's what was made clear to the Court." ER 151. The court added Ryan had "indicated . . . she was not dissatisfied. She did not indicate that this was a situation where she did not want to pay more legal fees. She indicated this was a situation where she could not pay any legal fees." ER 152. The court went on to state:

> I would agree that fees were not noticed for hearing. I would agree with the moving parties that the Court has not made any findings that the fees charged by [MB] were reasonable or unreasonable, or excessive; and the Court did not > reach any issues, at least so far, under [§] 329.

> Frankly, the Court did not feel that the matter of a normal fee hearing to determine the reasonableness of fees was before the Court. What was before the Court was [the Withdrawal Motion]. The Court indicated to [MB] that if [it] wished to withdraw, that withdrawal was conditioned upon a refund and waiver of the fees. It was not an order denying fees, because [MB] could choose to remain on the case, in which case [MB] I suppose could continue to bill Ms. Ryan for its services. Whether or not she had the ability to pay that bill is a matter between [MB] and Ms. Ryan, but there were no fees denied. It was simply a choice that was provided to the firm.

ER 153-54. The court subsequently reiterated the February 20th hearing was not "a hearing to determine whether fees were excessive or reasonable, and this hearing is not such either. [The February 20th hearing] was a hearing on [the Withdrawal Motion]." ER. 157-58.

Under MB's direct examination, Scott testified he was Ryan's attorney in connection with opposing the United States Trustee's § 707(b) Motion. ER 159. MB then offered, as an exhibit, an engagement letter, sent to Ryan, dated December 27, 2007, ("Engagement Letter"). Scott testified that he and Ryan proceeded in their attorney/client relationship based on that letter. ER 160. Scott further testified that at no time did he directly or indirectly suggest or state to Ryan that he would withdraw from representing her because she had not paid any sum of money. ER 162. Scott also testified he never asked Ryan for permission to withdraw; but, rather, she instructed him to withdraw. ER 163. Specifically, Scott testified Ryan "had instructed [him] to withdraw, and as her testimony in court on February 20th indicated, she did so because she did not wish to incur additional legal fees to [MB]." ER 164. Scott also testified that in the February 20th hearing, he "did not make a choice." Id.

Under cross examination, Scott testified that Ryan's "was the first [§] 707(b) motion [he] had ever defended" and that he had called the United States Trustee's attorney and asked her "what happens at the preliminary hearing" on such a motion . ER 171. He further testified he did not have anything to do with drafting Ryan's response to the § 707(b) Motion (i.e., ER 59-63). ER 171. Scott also testified he had estimated to Ryan that his fees for services through trial on the § 707(b) Motion would total $5,000. Id. He also testified he had advised her of ways those fees might be reduced. ER 172.

After arguments, the court stated it would take the matter under advisement. ER 187. The court also observed that it had received a proposed stipulated order whereby Ryan and the United States Trustee agreed Ryan's case should be dismissed. ER 187-88. Regarding that proposed order, the court explained:

> My problem with that, so that you'll understand the Court is not sitting on it — my problem with that is that at the time that stipulation was entered into [Ryan] did not have the benefit of counsel. And if indeed for one reason or another [MB] continues to represent her, there should certainly be the opportunity for some input from counsel as to whether or not dismissal is in [Ryan's] best interest, or whether she should go forward with the hearing.

The Engagement Letter stated Ryan was considering MB "to represent [her] in matters related to opposing the [§ 707(b) Motion]." ER 194. The Engagement Letter further described MB's "mission as providing the finest legal services available to those who find themselves ensnared by the legal web surrounding commercial disputes and financially distressed businesses. We offer a broad range of experience in representing local and national clients in all phases of commercial law and business disputes. . . ." Id. The Engagement Letter further stated MB limited its "practice to what we do best. We accept clients and referrals only when the legal issues facing them require our fields of expertise. . . ." Id. The Engagement Letter further provided MB could "withdraw as your attorney at any time, so long as in doing so we comply with the Rules of Professional Responsibility for the Oregon State Bar. . . ." ER 195.

In a February 12, 2008, letter to Ryan, also entered into evidence at the March 6, 2008, hearing, Scott stated that Ryan had indicated she wanted to continue to oppose the United States Trustee's § 707(b) Motion pro se, because she did not want to incur legal fees necessary for MB to represent her. ER 202. Scott's letter also advised Ryan that MB remained her attorney of record until a court order approving MB's withdrawal was signed by the court. Id.

E. The bankruptcy court's ruling from the March 6th hearing.

In a March 20, 2008, letter opinion ("Letter Opinion"), the bankruptcy court denied MB's Motion to Alter or Amend. ER 210. The court held that MB had not shown manifest error such as would support altering or amending the Minute Order or entering a clarifying order under Fed R. Civ. P. 59 (incorporated by Fed. R. Bankr. P. 9023). ER 207-210. In reaching its decision, the court noted that even assuming MB had been discharged, ORPC 1.16(c) requires a discharged attorney to continue representation if ordered to do so. ER 208. The court added, however, that it had not ordered MB to continue representing Ryan; rather, the court had given MB "a choice." Id.

The court further explained that its duty was to balance all of the parties' interests. ER 209. The court also noted that, in exercising its discretion, it had appreciated Ryan's indication that she "would love to be represented" and that its ruling was an attempt to facilitate that representation, by giving Ryan a source of cash to retain new counsel, and by relieving her of the obligation of paying MB additional fees. ER 209-210.

The Letter Opinion concluded by noting MB had not yet filed a declaration stating the firm would not waive its fees, as provided for by the Clarifying Order. The court thus gave MB one more chance to do so — within ten days. If no declaration was filed, MB's Withdrawal Motion was denied; if the declaration was timely filed, the Withdrawal Motion would be granted and the fees deemed waived. ER 209. A separate order denying MB's motion to alter or amend was then filed March 20, 2008. ER 211.

Thereafter, on March 28, 2008 — within the additional 10 days the court allowed MB to file a declaration that it would not waive its fees — MB filed its Notice of Appeal of the Minute Order, Clarifying Order, and the order denying the Motion to Alter or Amend. ER 212.

F. Dismissal of Ryan's bankruptcy case.

On April 2, 2008, the bankruptcy court approved a stipulated order dismissing Ryan's case pursuant to the § 707(b) Motion and the parties' stipulations. ER 220. That same date, the court entered a separate Order of Dismissal and Administratively Closing [Ryan's] Case. ER 222. Dismissal of the case terminated MB's status as Ryan's attorney (because MB's role was limited to defending Ryan on the § 707(b) motion). Id.

SUMMARY OF ARGUMENT

The bankruptcy court had the authority and discretion to order MB to continue as Ryan's attorney. Yet, the court did not simply order MB to continue. Instead, it gave MB the choices of staying on as Ryan's attorney or, alternatively, withdrawing and waiving its fees. Although MB never filed a declaration objecting to a waiver of its fees, on appeal the firm contests wavier of its fees, and contends its withdrawal should not have been conditioned on such a waiver. At the initial hearing on the Withdrawal Motion, the firm had multiple opportunities to raise issues regarding reasonableness of its fees, but failed to do so. There thus has not been any determination regarding whether the fees MB seeks from Ryan are reasonable. Under those circumstances, the United States Trustee respectfully submits this Court should remand this appeal to the bankruptcy court, to allow for examination of MB's fees under § 329.[7]

ARGUMENT

I. The bankruptcy court had authority to order MB to continue as Ryan's counsel.

A. The decision to grant or deny a motion to withdraw is committed to the court's sound discretion, and trial courts are granted considerable deference in such decisions.

The decision to grant or deny a motion to withdraw is committed to the trial court's sound discretion. Whiting v. Lacara, 187 F.3d 317, 320 (2nd Cir. 1999); LaGrand v. Stewart, 133 F.3d 1253, 1269 (9th Cir. 1998); United States v. Gardner, 417 F.Supp. 703, 718 (D.Md. 2006) (citing United States v. Gallop, 838 F.2d 105, 107 (4th Cir. 1988)); Rusinow v. Kamara, 920 F.Supp. 69, 71 (D.N.J. 1996); Liang v. Cal-Bay International, Inc., 2007 WL 3144099 p. 1 (S.D.Cal. October 24, 2007) (citing LaGrand). A bankruptcy court abuses its discretion if it bases its decision on an erroneous view of the law or on clearly erroneous factual findings. AFI Holding, Inc., 2008 WL 2420706 p. 11 (Ninth Circuit Court of Appeals adopting, as its own opinion, In re AFI Holding, Inc., 355 BR 139 (9th Cir. BAP 2006)) (citation omitted).

Trial courts are due considerable deference in deciding whether to deny a motion for an attorney's withdrawal. Whiting, 187 F.3d, 320 (citing Washington v. Sherwin Real Estate, Inc., 694 F.2d 1081, 1087 (7th Cir. 1982)). "The trial judge is closest to the parties and the facts, and [appellate courts] are very reluctant to interfere with [trial] judges' management of their very busy dockets." Whiting, 187 F.3d at 320. See also Gallo v. U.S. District Court for the District of Arizona, 349 F.3d 1169, 1179 - 1180 (9th Cir. 2003) (federal courts have inherent and broad regulatory authority to make rules respecting the admission, practice and discipline of attorneys in the federal courts) (citations omitted).

[7] Because the case closure order was entered after MB filed its notice of appeal, that order was ineffective. See In re Padilla, 222, F.3d.1184, 1190 (9th Cir.2000) (timely filing of notice of appeal divests court of control over those aspects of case involved in appeal).

B. The bankruptcy court considered appropriate factors in ruling on MB's Withdrawal Motion.

Factors considered when ruling on a motion to withdraw include: 1) the reasons why withdrawal is sought; 2) the prejudice withdrawal may cause to other litigants; 3) the harm withdrawal may cause to the administration of justice; and 4) the degree to which withdrawal will delay the resolution of the case. Rusinow, 920 F. Supp at 71; Liang, 2007 WL 3144099 p. 1 (citing Irwin v. Mascott, 2004 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 28264 at 4 (N.D.Cal. December 1, 2007)). Even where an attorney is able to demonstrate good cause to withdraw, equitable factors may, at the trial court's discretion, preclude allowing withdrawal. Rusinow, 920 F.Supp. at 72 (citing Haines v. Ligget Group, Inc., 814 F.Supp 414, 425 (D.N.J. 1993)).

For example, failure to demonstrate availability of substitute counsel may preclude allowing an attorney to withdraw. Id.; In re Lands End Leasing, Inc., v. Blue Mack Transport, Inc., 220 B.R. 226, 235-36 (Bankr. D.N.J. 1998). See also Carter v. City of Philadelphia, 2000 WL 537380 (E.D.Pa. April 25, 2000) (in denying motion to withdraw, court found that compelling plaintiff to proceed pro se, when he would prefer to be represented by a qualified attorney, "must be considered prejudicial"). Similarly, where withdrawal would significantly impair a party's ability to maintain the action, courts have denied motions to withdraw. Rusinow, 920 F.Supp, 72 (citing Haines, 814 F. Supp. at 425) (additional citation omitted)).

In the February 20th hearing, the bankruptcy court queried Ryan regarding circumstances precipitating the Withdrawal Motion. ER 68; ER 70-72. The court also inquired of Scott regarding the nature of his fee arrangement (ER 68-70); and sought clarification regarding Covington's prior involvement (i.e., how much Covington was paid, and what services Ryan understood Covington would provide). ER 70-73. In so doing, the court elicited from Ryan that her decision to no longer have Scott/MB represent her was a "financial matter," rather than any dissatisfaction with legal services Scott or his firm provided. ER 68. Scott echoed that, telling the court that Ryan "[did] not have the financial wherewithal to continue to pay ongoing fees to [MB] for services in the event [MB was] to stay on as her attorney." ER 73-74.

The court also noted the serious nature of the § 707(b) Motion, and advised Ryan that it wanted to allow her an opportunity to be represented if she so desired. ER 75; ER 77. In response, Ryan stated she would "love to be represented but I can't afford it." Id. The court also heard and considered Ryan's concerns that "for [her] to hire another attorney and start from scratch, they're going to want a retainer. And they're gong to want an hourly [fee]. And it's going to cost a fortune and I don't have it." ER 75-76. The impending deadlines governing litigation of the § 707(b) Motion were also noted and were the subject of considerable discussion by the court. ER 71; ER 74; ER 77-87.

In the Letter Opinion, the court summarized that, in exercising its discretion, it considered the seriousness of Ryan's situation (i.e., potential dismissal of her case). ER 209. The court further considered that scheduling deadlines and an evidentiary hearing were imminent. Id. A refund of MB's retainer and relief from having to pay additional MB fees (together with a potential refund by Covington) would provide Ryan with some flexibility in obtaining new counsel. ER 209-210. The bankruptcy court's summary of factors it considered in this case thus mirrors those described in Rusinow, 920 F. Supp at 71.

Specifically, the court considered 1) why withdrawal was sought (Ryan could not afford MB's fees); 2) the prejudice withdrawal might cause other litigants (impending discovery deadlines and a hearing regarding the § 707(b) Motion); 3) the harm withdrawal might cause the administration of justice (the court recognized, and warned Ryan, that the § 707(b) Motion was a serious matter); and 4) the court recognized resolution of the § 707(b) Motion would likely be delayed were Scott/MB to withdraw (deadlines might have to be extended, delaying action on the stipulated dismissal order the United States Trustee had submitted).

The bankruptcy court thus considered appropriate factors in ruling on MB's Withdrawal Motion.

C. The bankruptcy court's view of the law applicable to motions to withdraw was correct.

In the Letter Opinion, the bankruptcy court, citing Darby v. City of Torrance, 810 F.Supp. 275, 276 (C.D.Cal. 1992), correctly observed that an attorney may only withdraw with leave of court. ER 208. The court also correctly noted that LBR 9010-1.A (adopting LR 83.11(a)) implements that axiom.[8] Id. The court further correctly observed that ORPC 1.16(c) supercedes ORPC 1.16(a)(3), if a court orders a "discharged" attorney to continue representation. Id. Notwithstanding its hesitancy to construe the situation as one of attorney "discharge" (see ER 73 and ER 151), the court also correctly discerned that whether Ryan had or had not "discharged" MB was ultimately a "distinction without difference" because ORPC 1.16(c) supercedes both ORPC 1.16(a) and (b). ER 209. Finally, the court correctly cited factors to be considered in ruling on the Withdrawal Motion, including its duty to consider equitable factors (i.e., "[court's] duty was to balance all of the parties interests"). Id.

In sum, the bankruptcy court's decisions were based on a correct interpretation of

[8] The Letter Opinion cites "LBR 9011-1.A.1," but no such rule exists. Rather, LBR 9010-1.A.1(a) is the rule that adopts LR 83.11(a). The reference to "LBR 9011-1.A.1" in the Letter opinion thus appears to simply represent a scrivener's error.

applicable law. The record thus does not support a support a finding that the court abused its discretion, insofar as requiring MB to continue representing Ryan (if the firm chose, from the two options it was given, to object to waiver of its fees).

D. The bankruptcy court's factual findings were correct.

The bankruptcy court's factual findings were expressly stated in the Letter Opinion. ER 205-210. In pertinent part, those included: 1) that Scott's representation of Ryan was limited to opposing the § 707(b) Motion (ER 205-06); 2) that the United States Trustee had opposed the Withdrawal Motion on the basis that (because of the motion's timing) allowing Scott/MB to withdraw would prejudice Ryan and the administration of justice (ER 206); 3) that the notice of the February 20th hearing on the Withdrawal Motion stated testimony could be received (Id.); 4) that in the February 20th hearing, Ryan "confirmed she no longer wanted [Scott] to represent her" (ER 209); 5) that the basis for Ryan no longer wanting Scott to represent her was "financial," rather than any dissatisfaction with his/MB's services (Id.); 6) that Scott also said Ryan had stated she did not have "the financial wherewithal to continue to pay ongoing fees" to him or his firm (Id.); 7) that Ryan would "love to be represented but couldn't afford it" (Id.); and 8) that Ryan's "only reason for not wanting representation was 'financial.'" Id.

All findings summarized above are supported by the record. Accordingly, the court's findings were not "clearly erroneous," such as might support a finding of abuse of its discretion.

II. The bankruptcy court did not violate MB's due process rights by offering it the choice of waiving its fees as a condition of granting the Withdrawal Motion.

Generally speaking, some sort of hearing is required before a bankruptcy court materially reduces the amount of fees an attorney requests. In re Eliapo, 468 F.3d 592, 602 (9th Cir. 2006) (citing In re Busy Beaver Bldg. Centers, Inc., 19 F.3d 833, 846 n. 16 (3rd Cir. 1994)). For purposes of the Bankruptcy Code, however, the phrase "after notice and a hearing" is interpreted flexibly, pursuant to 11 U.S.C. § 102(1).[9] Id. at 603. The important point is that counsel be given a meaningful opportunity to be heard, by appraising counsel of the court's concerns, and by giving counsel a reasonable opportunity to argue or present evidence in support of counsel's position. Eliapo, 468 F.3d 603.

Here, the bankruptcy court did not unequivocally order disgorgement of any fees. Rather, any fee reduction as a result of the court's ruling was based on a choice (i.e., waiver) that was entirely MB's to make. ER 208. Yet, notwithstanding that point, the February 20th hearing was prompted by the Withdrawal Motion. ER 42. After the United States Trustee's objection (ER 52), a notice apprised MB the hearing would concern the Withdrawal Motion and the United States Trustee's objection thereto, and that testimony could be received. ER 57.

During the hearing, the nature of Scott's fee agreement was almost immediately addressed. ER 68-70. When the court first offered Scott the choice of continuing to represent Ryan or refunding MB's retainer, Scott — without any qualification whatsoever — offered: "Your Honor, we'll refund the $1,000 to [Ryan]." ER 73 (emphasis added). Subsequently, Scott again — again without any qualification — reiterated he would refund the retainer. ER 74 Thereafter, the court apprised Ryan that "Scott is going to be giving you money back," which elicited no comment from Scott. ER 76. When subsequently informed he would be allowed three days to "return the money to [Ryan]," Scott yet again — again without qualification —

[9] Section 102(1)(A) states that "after notice and a hearing" means "after such notice as is appropriate in the particular circumstances, and such opportunity for a hearing as is appropriate in the particular circumstances; . . . ." Moreover, "after notice and a hearing" also "authorizes an act without an actual hearing if such notice is given properly and if — (i) such a hearing is not requested timely by a party in interest; or (ii) there is insufficient time for a hearing to be commenced before such act must be done, and the court authorizes such act[.]" § 102(1)(B).

stated only: "Will do, Your Honor." ER 78. Finally, when the court more formally decreed that granting the Withdrawal Motion was contingent on Scott refunding the retainer within the next three days, Scott again failed to voice any objection. ER 85.

During the February 20th hearing Scott had, as characterized in Eliapo, "reasonable opportunity to present legal argument and/or evidence to clarify or supplement" why the retainer he received from Ryan should not be "refunded." Specifically, Scott had at least five opportunities during the hearing to explain or argue why MB should not have to refund the retainer. In every instance, however, Scott failed to do so. "So long as fair notice and an opportunity to be heard are afforded, the bankruptcy court has considerable freedom to fashion procedures for notice and a hearing that are 'appropriate in the particular circumstances.'" Eliapo, 468 F.3d at 603 (quoting and citing § 102(1)(A)).

Such was the case here, and MB failed to raise any issues regarding reasonableness of its fees during the February 20th hearing, despite having had multiple opportunities to do so.

III. The bankruptcy court's ruling did not impose any ethical dilemma.

A. Local U.S. District Court rules, applicable to bankruptcy proceedings, provide that attorneys may not withdraw without court approval.

District Court Local Rules 83.1 through 83.12 apply, generally, to attorneys appearing in the Bankruptcy Court for the District of Oregon. LBR 9010-1.A.1. When Scott substituted in as attorney for Ryan, he became Ryan's attorney of record. LBR 9010-1.A.1.b. After his appearance, Scott was required to obtain court approval to withdraw if withdrawal would leave Ryan unrepresented. LBR 83.11(a). That Scott's withdrawal would have left Ryan unrepresented is undisputed. See ER 43 (Scott's declaration supporting the Withdrawal Motion, citing Ryan's intent to proceed pro se). Moreover, by filing a motion to withdraw, MB acknowledged its withdrawal was contingent on the bankruptcy court's approval.

B. ORPC 1.16(a)(3) is expressly subject to local rules requiring leave of court to withdraw.

Oregon Rule of Professional Conduct 1.16 (as amended by the Oregon Supreme Court, effective December 1, 2006) governs both mandatory and permissive attorney withdrawals. Rusinow, 920 F.Supp. at 71 (construing analogous rule); Lands End Leasing, Inc., 220 B.R. at 235 (same). The rule provides, in pertinent part:

> (a) Except as stated in paragraph (c), a lawyer shall not represent a client or, where representation has commenced, shall withdraw from the representation if:
> > (1) the representation will result in violation of the Rules of Professional Conduct or other law;
> >
> > ***
> >
> > (3) the lawyer is discharged.
> >
>
> (c) A lawyer must comply with applicable law requiring notice to or permission of a tribunal when terminating representation. When ordered to do so by a tribunal, a lawyer shall continue representation notwithstanding good cause for terminating the representation.

ORPC 1.16 (emphasis added).

Application of subsection (a) of ORPC 1.16 is expressly limited by subsection (c). Subsection (c) requires a lawyer to continue representing a client when ordered to do so by a tribunal. Consequently, in its full context, ORPC 1.16 defers to the discretion of tribunals to order a lawyer to continue, even when the lawyer is "discharged."

Nonetheless, MB asserts "the text of ORPC 1.16 does not support a conclusion that subsection (c) applies to situations of mandatory withdrawal in subsection (a)" because "[g]ood cause [referred to in ORPC 1.16(c)] is only used in ORPC 1.16(b) . . . ." Appellant's Opening

Brief, p. 20 n. 6. That assertion, however, simply cannot withstand the express provision that ORPC 1.16(a) governs mandatory withdrawals "except as stated in paragraph (c) . . . ." Based on that, ORPC 1.16(c) "limits withdrawal pursuant to both [O]RPC 1.16(a) and (b)[.]" Lands End Leasing, Inc., 220 B.R. at 235; Rusinow, 920 F. Supp. at 71 (withdrawal pursuant to both RPC 1.16(a) and (b) limited by RPC 1.16(c)).

"'[E]ven if withdrawal is otherwise appropriate, other considerations must sometimes take precedence, such as maintaining fairness to litigants and preserving a court's resources and efficiency.'" Id. (citing Haines, 814 F.Supp at 423). Regarding the latter concern, "a pro se debtor presents often monumental problems of case administration." In re Cuddy, 322 B.R. 12, 17 (Bankr. D.Mass. 2005); see also In re Edsall, 89 B.R. 772, 775 (Bankr. N.D.Ind. 1988) (pro se litigants present the court with important concerns; more often than not they are unfamiliar with legal procedures or the formality of trial practice, and can be a danger to themselves). Rule 1.16(c) thus allows for "[t]he balance [to be] struck by the judge, and the lawyer must abide by that decision." Cherokee Nation of Oklahoma v. United States, 42 Fed. Cl. 15, 17 (Cl. Ct. 1998) (citing GEOFFREY C. HAZARD, JR., & W. WILLIAM HODES, THE LAW OF LAWYERING, § 1.16.401 (1998)).

Thus, regardless of whether cause for a lawyer's withdrawal is framed as mandatory or permissive, ORPC 1.16(c) defers to the authority of tribunals to order the lawyer to continue, notwithstanding any other of the rules provisions.

C. Neither MB nor Scott faced any ethical dilemma by continuing to represent Ryan if the Withdrawal Motion was denied.

An attorney who seeks to withdraw, but who is ordered to continue, is, relieved of any ethical conflict that might otherwise be perceived based on ORPC 1.16(a) or (b). Gardner, 417

F.Supp. at 718 (although defendant unequivocally stated he fired his lawyers, court deemed it in "best interests of justice" that lawyers continue); Securities and Exchange Commission v. Poirier, 2007 WL 2462173 p. 2 (D. Ariz August 24, 2007) (even where client did not wish attorney to continue, because local rule "require[d] an order of the Court to withdraw, [attorney] would not be in violation of his ethical obligations should the Court refuse to permit his withdrawal."). See also In re Lathen, 294 Or 157, 166, 654 P.2d 1110, 1114 (1982) (even though attorney was required, under former DR 5-102(A), to withdraw upon learning member of his firm ought to be called as a witness, attorney was not subject to discipline for continuing as his client's counsel, as required by trial judge's order).

As noted above, LR 83.11(a) and LBR 9010-1(A) unequivocally require that an attorney who has appeared for a debtor must obtain leave of the bankruptcy court to withdraw from representation "if doing so leaves the [debtor] unrepresented . . . ." See In re Covert, 16 DB Rptr 87, http://www.osbar.org/_docs/dbreport/dbr16.pdf (OR Disciplinary Board 2002) (order approving disciplinary stipulation stated lawyer "failed to obtain permission to withdraw from the bankruptcy proceeding, as provided by LR 83.11). Here, on January 10, 2008, Covington withdrew and MB substituted in as Ryan's attorney. ER 24. MB then complied with LR 83.11(a) and LBR 9010-1(A) when Scott filed the Withdrawal Motion. ER 42.

Via the Minute Order, the Clarifying Order, and the order denying the Motion to Alter or Amend, the bankruptcy court refused to unconditionally grant MB's Withdrawal Motion. ER 98; ER 108; ER 211. Instead, the court offered MB the alternative choices of 1) refunding the retainer Ryan paid, and waiving its fees; or 2) opposing waiver of its fees, in which instance MB's Withdrawal Motion would be denied and the firm would remain Ryan's attorney. ER 73; ER 78; ER 85; ER 98; ER 108; ER 152-53; ER 154; ER 210; ER 211.

In its opening brief, MB suggests the bankruptcy court's rulings were premised in part on the view "that [Ryan] had not 'really' discharged MB as her attorneys." Appellant's Opening Brief p. 20. The bankruptcy court did, initially, question whether MB was "discharged," given that Ryan testified she was not unhappy with Scott's services; but, rather, she simply could not afford continued fees. ER 73; ER 151-52. In the Letter Opinion, however, the court noted that whether Ryan discharged MB (such as would implicate the mandatory withdrawal provision of ORPC 1.16(a)(3)) or "simply could not afford to pay for past and future services" (such as would implicate the permissive withdrawal provisions of ORPC 1.16(b)) was "a distinction without a difference on the facts at bar" because Ryan's "only reason for not wanting further representation [by MB] was 'financial.'" ER 209. That finding was correct.

Specifically, whether MB was or was not discharged is irrelevant. Even, however, if the firm was "discharged," the bankruptcy court still had authority — pursuant to LBR 83.11(a) and the express language of ORPC 1.16(a) and (c) — to order the firm to continue, notwithstanding ORPC 1.16(a)(3).[10] The bankruptcy court's ruling thus posed no ethical dilemma for MB. Gardner, 417 F.Supp. 703 at 718; Poirier, 2007 WL 2462173 p. 2. See also Or Eth. Op. 2005-1 p. 2, http://wwwosbar.org/_docs/ethics/2005-1.pdf (Or.St.Bar.Assn. 2005) (if court refuses to permit lawyer to withdraw, lawyer must continue and provide competent representation) (citing Lathen); Or Eth Op. 1991-1 p. 2, 1991 WL 279142 (Or.St.Bar.Assn. 1991) (same).

IV. Given that on appeal MB objects to waiver of its fees, remand for a determination of the reasonableness of the firm's fees is appropriate.

When MB sought leave to withdraw discovery deadlines and an evidentiary hearing regarding the § 707(b) motion were imminent. The Withdrawal Motion was filed only 35 days after Scott substituted in as Ryan's attorney. In that time, Scott made one appearance (at the preliminary hearing on the § 707(b) Motion) on Ryan's behalf. The record thus does not show what, if any, benefit Ryan received for the fees MB seeks from her.

[10] Moreover, even if LR 83.11(a) conflicted with ORPC 1.16(a)(3), that would be irrelevant, because LR 83.11(a) controls in federal cases.

The ruling appealed by MB provided that, if the firm filed a declaration refusing to waive its fees, the Withdrawal Motion would be denied "without further notice or hearing or action" (ER 85). Arguably, MB would then have been free to bill Ryan as it continued to represent her. If MB did not file such a declaration, the bankruptcy court's ruling provided that the Withdrawal Motion would be granted, and MB's fees would be deemed waived. ER 108-09. The bankruptcy court's ruling was thus self-executing. The ten-day period ultimately granted by the Letter Opinion has expired, and MB has never filed a declaration objecting to waiver of its fees. Given, however, the position it has taken in this appeal, the firm clearly does object to waiving its fees. See Appellant's Opening Brief at 4 n. 2 (stating MB never filed a declaration refusing to waive its fees, but "took other action to contest being forced to waive its fees.").

Under those circumstances, to clarify the record, the United States Trustee submits it is appropriate to remand this case to allow for review of MB's fees, in the context of § 329(b), to determine whether, and to what extent, the firm should be allowed to seek payment from Ryan.

CONCLUSION

For the foregoing reasons, the United States Trustee respectfully asks this Court to remand this appeal to the bankruptcy court to consider the reasonableness of MB's fees in the context of a formal § 329(b) hearing.

Facts and Procedural Background

For purposes of addressing Appellant, Mulheim Boyd's ("MB") response to this Court's order to show cause why this appeal should not be dismissed, Appellee, the United States Trustee,[1] accepts Appellant's statement of facts as recited in MB's January 30, 2009, memorandum, except as follows.[2]

MB's representation of the debtor, Wendy Ryan ("Ryan") was limited to the defense of the United States Trustee's motion to dismiss her case pursuant to 11 U.S.C. § 707(b). MB filed its motion to withdraw on February 12, 2008. The bankruptcy court did not issue its order on MB's motion until March 20, 2008. Nevertheless, Ryan has been, in effect, proceeding in pro per ever since the February 12, 2008, motion to withdraw was filed. The only action MB has taken in this case, after February 12, 2008, has been to litigate and appeal its motion to withdraw. Ryan drafted and signed her own response to the United States Trustee's 11 U.S.C. § 707(b) motion to dismiss.[3] Ryan also signed, on her own behalf, a stipulated order granting the United States Trustee's motion to dismiss (the "Dismissal Order"). ER 9 - 10. Finally, MB did return the $1,000 retainer that Ryan paid MB. At this point, the bankruptcy case has been dismissed, and it appears that MB has not been paid anything for its services in representing Ryan up to the date MB moved to withdraw (except for the $1,000 retainer that See 28 U.S.C. §§ 581-589; In re Columbia Gas Sys., Inc., 33 F.3d 294, 296 (3rd Cir. 1994) (United States Trustees oversee the bankruptcy process, protect the public interest, and ensure that bankruptcy cases are conducted according to law) (citing H.R. In re Castillo, 297 F.3d 940, 950 (9th Cir. 2002). Section 307 of the Bankruptcy Code authorizes the United States Trustee to appear and be heard on the matters at issue in this appeal. See 11 U.S.C. § 307; In re Donovan Corp., 215 F.3d 929 (9th Cir. 2000) ("The United States trustee may . . . intervene and appear at any level of the proceedings from the bankruptcy court on . . . as either a party or an amicus.") [3] The response was, however, electronically docketed by MB on Ryan's behalf. However, the only input MB had on the response was to attach a "cover sheet" to the response Ryan drafted showing MB's signature. MB had nothing to do with the content of the response. ER 1 - 7; 8.

MB returned to Ryan).

Summary of Argument

MB's appeal should be dismissed on two alternative bases. First, the order MB appeals from is not a final order and, consequently, this Court lacks jurisdiction. Alternatively, the dismissal of the bankruptcy case renders MB's request to withdraw moot (because MB was hired solely to defend the United States Trustee's motion to dismiss which has now been resolved).

Argument.

The district court's remand order is not a final order.

In In re Lakeshore Village Resort, 81 F.3d 103 (9th Cir. 1996), this Court made clear that the four criteria set out in Vylene Enterprises, Inc. V. Naugles, Inc. (In re Vylene Enterprises, Inc.), 968 F.2d 887 (9th Cir. 1992) must be considered in determining whether an order is final for purposes of appellate jurisdiction under either 28 U.S.C. § 158(d) or 28 U.S.C. § 1291. Those four factors include:

1. The need to avoid piecemeal litigation;
2. Judicial efficiency;
3. The systemic interest in preserving the bankruptcy court's role as a finder of fact; and
4. Whether delaying review would cause irreparable harm.

All four factors favor of dismissal for lack of jurisdiction. First, conducting a hearing on the amount MB is owed will avoid piecemeal litigation. The district court astutely observed that MB's appeal of the bankruptcy court's order effectively demonstrated MB's refusal to waive its fees. What MB purports to seek (by its motion to withdraw and the ensuing appeals) is to be relieved of its obligation to represent of Ryan (on the United States Trustee's motion to dismiss) and to be allowed to bill Ryan for the work that it did before withdrawal.[4] The district court remanded for the bankruptcy court to hold a hearing on MB's fees under 11 U.S.C. § 329. Subsection (b) of that section provides that the court may cancel any fee agreement if the court finds that the compensation paid or agreed to be paid to the attorney is excessive. If, on remand, the bankruptcy court finds that MB is owed nothing (because MB's fees were excessive), then it would be likely that MB would appeal again to raise additional issues presented by the lower court's ruling on the reasonableness of the fees. Therefore, awaiting the adjudication of MB's fees until the remand proceeding is completed ensures the Court will not need to adjudicate two appeals concerning MB's fees (a) in this appeal and (b) a subsequent appeal from a § 329 order that cancels MB's contract with Ryan and orders the return of the same $1,000 at issue here.

The second consideration, judicial efficiency, also favors of dismissal. The bankruptcy court's withdrawal order was conditional. MB argues that this Court should, in essence, reverse the district court and order the bankruptcy court to grant MB's motion to withdraw without conditions. Even if this Court were to so rule, a remand would be appropriate so that the bankruptcy court could consider its prior ruling in that context. This is not a case where the bankruptcy court simply denied MB's motion. Nor did the bankruptcy court grant MB's motion outright. The bankruptcy court's order was conditional. ER 11-16. Ryan wanted MB to withdraw so as to avoid further expense associated with the litigation. Although the bankruptcy court declined to determine the reasonableness of MB's fees at that juncture, this Court's ruling on whether such a conditional order is appropriate might be different if the record regarding those expenses is more fully developed before this Court reviews the decisions below. Moreover, should the bankruptcy court, on remand, determine that MB's fees were reasonable and should be paid, there may be no reason for MB to further appeal.

Third, the record thus far contains insufficient evidence or findings on the issue of whether and to what extent MB should be allowed compensation at all. See 11 U.S.C. § 329. The bankruptcy court is the proper forum for presenting and considering those matters. Dismissing this appeal preserve's the bankruptcy court's role as a fact finder by allowing the bankruptcy court to hear evidence on the fees issue under section 329 as directed by the district court.

Finally, delaying the review of this matter will not cause any party irreparable harm. If the bankruptcy court determines that MB is not entitled to any fees, MB could appeal that decision. On the other hand, if the bankruptcy court determines, on remand, that MB is entitled to full compensation, the need for any further appeal might be eliminated altogether. In other words, MB will still have the ability to seek review, albeit with a more complete record.

The remand involves factual issues necessary to a central issue on appeal.

One of the options given to MB under the bankruptcy court's conditional withdrawal order in this case was for MB to waive its fees. Additional fact finding as to whether, and to what extent, MB should be compensated for its services would lend context to the choices that MB was presented and is, therefore, central to the appeal of whether the bankruptcy court's order was proper. That evidence should, therefore, be developed prior to this Court hearing an appeal of those issues.

Appellant also relies on the collateral order doctrine in support of its contention that the bankruptcy court's orders it appeals are final orders. Appellant cites Law Offices of Nicholas A. Franke v. Tiffany (In re Lewis), 113 F.3d 1040, 1043 (9th Cir. 1997) and points out that, in order for an order to be final and appealable, it must "finally determine the discrete issue to which it is addressed." Appellant's Memorandum at p.13. The bankruptcy court's order, however, was conditional. MB never directly made one of the elections provided in the bankruptcy court's order. Rather than elect one option or the other, MB filed its notice of appeal to the district court. The bankruptcy court's order, therefore, did not finally determine whether MB was or was not Ryan's counsel. It was the eventual dismissal of Ryan's case (as more fully discussed below) that ultimately determined MB's status as Ryan's counsel (due to the limited terms of MB's engagement).

Dismissal of Ryan's bankruptcy case renders MB's appeal moot.

MB seeks an order reversing the district court's ruling that the bankruptcy court did not err in conditioning MB's withdrawal from the case on MB's agreement to waive the fees it billed. That issue has been rendered moot by a series of events that has occurred after MB filed its notice of appeal to the district court.

MB's representation of Ryan was limited to defending against the § 707(b) dismissal motion. Prior to dismissal of Ryan's case, the bankruptcy court gave MB two options: 1) to have its motion to withdraw granted, conditional upon the firm waiving its fees; or 2) to oppose waiving its fees, in which case MB's withdrawal motion would be denied, and MB could seek further payment from Ryan. MB was ultimately allowed until March 29, 2008, to file an opposition to waiving its fees. ER 11 - 16, at 16 (the "Letter Opinion").

The district court, on appeal, recognized that by its notice of appeal filed March 28, 2008 — one day prior to the 10-day deadline stated in the Letter Opinion — MB effectively opposed waiving its fees. Consequently, MB's withdrawal motion was, as a practical matter, denied as of its notice of appeal and MB remained Ryan's attorneys of record. Because MB had not waived its fees, and no order had been entered expressly denying MB's fees, MB remained free to seek payment from Ryan, unhindered by any order entered in Ryan's case.

MB, by moving to withdraw, sought leave of court to end its representation of Ryan without impediment to seeking payment from her. Although Ryan continued to act on her own, MB was still Ryan's attorneys of record at the time the case was dismissed. When, however, the dismissal occurred, MB's representation terminated, because 1) it never agreed to provide any services beyond opposing the § 707(b) Motion; and 2) the dismissal motion was granted by Ryan's pro per stipulation. Additionally, because MB's withdrawal motion was never granted — and because waiver of its fees was conditional upon withdrawal — MB remains free to seek payment from Ryan for services performed in opposing the § 707(b) motion pre-dismissal.

Under the unique facts of this case, it is impossible for any effective relief to be granted. MB has already received, in full, the result sought by its withdrawal motion (albeit for different reasons than those it has advanced here). Accordingly, because no effective relief can be fashioned, this appeal is moot. In re Di Giorgio, 134 F.3d 971, 974 (9th Cir. 1998) (doctrine of mootness precludes federal court decision of "questions that cannot affect the rights of litigants in the case before them" citing and quoting from North Carolina v. Rice, 404 U.S. 244, 246, 92 S.Ct. 402, 404, 30 L.Ed.2d 413 (1971)).

The dismissal of Ryan's bankruptcy case has never been an issue on appeal. MB is simply seeking a ruling allowing it to be formally released as Ryan's counsel and allowing it to bill Ryan for its fees. As a practical matter, the Dismissal Order did just that. Because, under the unique facts of this case, the Dismissal Order was not central to MB's appeal, the bankruptcy court had jurisdiction to enter that order notwithstanding the pending notice of appeal filed a few days prior to the entry of the Dismissal Order. In re Padilla, 222 F.3d 1184, 1190 (9th Cir. 2000).

Although MB's motion to withdraw is moot, its request for fees is not. While the case remained open, the bankruptcy court could have considered any issues presented under 11

U.S.C. § 329 involving the reasonableness of MB's compensation. MB initially sought remand for that purpose, and the district court ultimately ordered a remand for that purpose. On remand, the bankruptcy court will consider that matter and MB can appeal any order adversely affecting the fees it receives in this case.

Conclusion.

The district court's remand order is not a final order and this appeal should, as a consequence, be dismissed. Moreover, the relief MB is seeking – relief from acting as Ryan's counsel and ability to seek compensation – has already been granted by virtue of the dismissal of the case.

For the foregoing reasons, this appeal should be dismissed.

Respectfully submitted February 10, 2009.

Debtor. Bankruptcy Case No. 07-63072-aer7

Written response to motion to dismiss

With regards to the presumption of abuse, the court has not been given true facts and correction of errors indicated in the 20 page memorandum in support of 707(b) motion.

*It is stated that there is unsecure debt of $166,652, "all described as credit card debt." In addition to the unsecured debt, the secured debt, although I previously quit claimed on 2 out of the 3 properties, creditors quickly began to pursue me as a co-debtor. A list of all mortgages was properly stated with my bankruptcy papers. I wish the court to note that the unsecured debt was allocated in my divorce decree to my ex-husband with exception of about $35-$39,000 of which up until I filed for bankruptcy, I was NEVER LATE. Although the debt was allocated in the divorce decree to my ex-husband, Jeffrey M. Ryan, he charged credit lines and credit cards weather in my name or his and the statements went to his home in California, so I never saw all the charges and became aware of all the debt when we separated in 2004, at which time I made it clear that he would pay these debts as he had been doing. When his earnings as a Mortgage Broker began to decline, he stopped paying on all credit cards and mortgages and the creditors quickly came to me for recourse. Although as stated above, the balances of credit cards in my possession of approximately $35-$39,000 were current with zero delinquencies, I was advised by legal counsel that when I file for bankruptcy that I could not selectively pay the credit cards that were "mine." Looking back at my divorce decree the courts should shame themselves for issuing a decree and then that very 'LEGAL" document or judgment does nothing to protect the individual as it was so ordered by the court! He didn't close accounts, rather he charged more, and he didn't refinance and remove my name as also ordered by the court. Had he closed the accounts and paid as ordered by the court and removed my name on said real property, I wouldn't be in bankruptcy.

*Regarding the judgment that dissolved my prior marriage, my ex-husband, Jeffrey M. Ryan wages have decreased to under $300,000 according to him and he is indicating his need to lower child support. It is unknown to me at this time what the figure will be lowered to.

*An error in paragraph 6, pg. 3-20 indicates "the judgment provides that Debtor's ex-husband shall pay for the cost of Rosa Meza." For the courts records, Rosa Mesas' services were terminated when I moved to Oregon in 2006. Also noted, that I pay for all child care and out of pocket medical expenses.

*Paragraph 8, pg 3-20 should be noted to the court that I NEVER took spousal support, but could have taken a substantial amount at the time of my divorce in 2004. If my attorney indicated in my divorce decree that "spousal support is reserved," it would have been out of her wishes to protect me as her client who was married over 10+ years and declined spousal support. She strongly discouraged me from waiving my right to spousal support and my attorney at the time put the statement in my divorce decree. I told my ex-husband at the time of our separation that I didn't want any spousal support. Also noted, I am re-married and have been since 2006, so this statement in the "Motion to Dismiss" is clearly one of many errors that Ms.

Kamitsuka failed to note. Ms. Kamitsuka should have the legal knowledge that once re-married you lose any right to spousal support and I am clearly married and could not seek spousal support from my ex-husband that I have been separated from since 2004.

*Paragraph 9, pg 4-20 Please note to the court that my husband, Mr. Todd Kurilo is still unemployed at this time and any reference of my positive feedback to his soon becoming employed is simply trying to remain positive for him and our family. He has diligently been sending out his resume and applications and has yet to find employment in his field of home building. The housing industry as a whole is at our nations all time lowest with foreclosures and builders laying off many quality employees. This is what led to Hayden Homes terminating my husband in October 2007.

*Our current residence at 3520 Celeste Way, which we bought at the time of our relocating to the Eugene area in 9/06 for $550,000 is over the "standards" for Lane County (I realize), however at the time when my husband was hired at Hayden Homes, he was making I'm sure more than the "standards" for Lane county and our home, when we purchased it was not extravagant or out of our league by any means. We were financially fine up until my ex-husband filed for bankruptcy and all the creditors came looking to me. Having my husband out of work still, we have to consider the possibility of selling our home.

*Paragraph 11, pg. 5-20 refers to tuition to St. Paul School. This like many other items in the Motion to Dismiss is a way to waste time on items that are of unimportance. To go through mathematical analogies' to come down to a difference of $26.46/mo difference in tuition is our justice system wasting energy and not focusing on true facts. With that being said, the tuition of ~~$428.50~~ plus an additional $400 per year a the end of the year, unless parents put in 40+ hours at the school, plus $200 registration, the actual total tuition is $4885 divided by 12 is $407.08 divided by 2 is $203.54/ea. per month. The calendar year of 10 months vs. 12 months is why I pay $428.50, but my ex-husband pays child support 12 months, so to keep payments the same we don't adjust it. This is the difference of $26.46/month. Again, to go on and on about a $20 something dollar error and to dismiss that I am in bankruptcy because of Mr. Ryan (my ex-husband) and that because of him I have lost my credit rating, which was impeccable, my dignity, my name as a good standing citizen and to top it off he has cost me thousands in legal fees because of a divorce and a divorce decree that didn't do what it was set out by our judicial system to do. I am a Girl Scout leader here in Eugene and my background check when they opened a checking account for our troop was degrading. Ms. Kamitsuka says that this bankruptcy has nothing to do with Mr. Jeff Ryan's but she is very wrong. I wouldn't be in bankruptcy if it wasn't for Mr. Ryan. In addition to the above, I was forced to file bankruptcy just after having a baby, who is just 4 months old. Mr. Ryan has caused undo stress in my life including stress to my husband, Todd Kurilo, who has nothing to do with the obligations of my ex-husband.

*Page 6 indicates another error of an $18,000 deposit, which I gave copies to Kim Covington's office with other documentation all labeled, including all credit card statements, bank statements, my husbands earnings to date, insurance policies, etc. This $18,000 was done in May (I believe) of 2007, when I had no idea what was about to hit me by Mr. Ryan's bankruptcy. And during which time my husband was still employed and I consolidated my credit cards and paid off credit cards with the $18,000. This $18,000 was a check from a credit card company that I deposited and paid other credit cards off with. All documentation was previously provided back in December 2007. I have done more than my part in collecting, copying and giving all account information as ordered by the court. I regret that copies provided to Ms. Covingtons office either never made it to the UST office or that the UST office has the same filing system as Ms. Covington. To note, this $18,000 was not additional income to me as insinuated in the Motion to Dismiss by Ms. Kamitsuka.

*In close, had Mr. Ryan (my ex-husband) not filed for bankruptcy, I wouldn't be writing this document today. I have no financial means of taking care of the obligations either secured or unsecured that so unjustly landed on my lap. With my husband unemployed and worried about what the future brings, I ask the court to consider my very unusual situation and not try to fit me in a box that doesn't exist.

Counsel:

This letter will announce my findings of fact and conclusions of law regarding the above-referenced motion.

History:

Debtor Wendy McKenzie Ryan filed her Chapter 7 petition, herein, on October 30, 2007, through attorney Kim Covington. On December 4, 2007, the United States Trustee (UST) filed a motion to dismiss under 11 U.S.C. § 707(b).[1] On January 10, 2008, Loren Scott of the Muhlheim Boyd firm (the firm) filed a substitution for Ms Covington as Debtor's counsel. That same day I conducted a hearing on the UST's motion. As a result of that hearing, a scheduling order was entered on January 15, 2008. The order gave Debtor 30 days to file a response to the UST's motion. The parties were to exchange witness and exhibit lists at least 21 days before the evidentiary hearing on the motion.[2] Objections to the exhibits needed to be served on the opposing party at least 14 days before the hearing. Witness and exhibit lists, as well as trial memoranda were to be filed at least 7 days before the hearing. At least 11 days before the hearing the parties were required to meet and confer and file a certification as to such conference at least 7 days before the hearing.

On February 12, 2008, Mr. Scott moved to withdraw. The motion was supported by his declaration stating that Debtor had that day communicated to him that she no longer wanted him to represent her and that she wanted to proceed pro se. The declaration further states that Debtor had been notified of all pending deadlines, especially the February 14, 2008, deadline to file a response to the UST's motion. Mr. Scott requested an expedited hearing on the motion so that Debtor could file her response pro se. On February 13, 2008, Mr. Scott filed his own § 329 attorney fee disclosure statement, indicating the firm had been paid $1,000, and that any balance due was "hourly." As for services to be rendered, the statement excluded adversary proceedings and contested matters. Excluded from this exclusion was "opposition to the U.S. Trustee's 707(b) motion." The statement also indicated that "[s]ubsequent to the agreement w/the debtor regarding compensation, the debtor instructed me to withdraw from my representation of her in the case." The UST filed an opposition to the Motion to Withdraw, indicating that the Debtor's deposition was scheduled for February 20, 2008, arguing that withdrawal would be prejudicial to Debtor and to the administration of justice, particularly in view of the imminent scheduling deadlines.

On February 14, 2008, Mr. Scott filed a cover page, attaching Debtor's pro se response to the UST's Motion. On that same date, the court served notice of a hearing set for February 20, 2008 on Mr. Scott's motion to withdraw. The notice stated that testimony may be received.

On February 20, 2008, I conducted the hearing on the motion to withdraw. Mr. Scott and Debtor appeared as did Ms Kamitsuka of the UST's office. At the February 20 hearing, I orally announced my conclusions which were reduced to a minute order entered February 21, 2008 (the minute order). The minute order provided that if Mr. Scott refunded the $1,000 retainer and filed a declaration as to same within 3 business days, his motion to withdraw would be granted. If not, his motion would be denied. Mr. Scott then timely filed a declaration that he had refunded the $1,000, but that notwithstanding the issuance of the refund, the firm reserved the right to appeal entry of the order.

The UST and Mr. Scott then disagreed as to whether the minute order prohibited the firm from subsequently billing for its services after refund of the $1,000. The UST filed a motion to clarify the order. On February 29, 2008 an order was entered clarifying and supplementing the minute order (the supplemental order). The supplemental order provided that the grant of the motion to withdraw was conditioned on Mr. Scott waiving all fees in the case. If he did not want to waive fees, he could file a declaration within 5 days, upon which his motion to withdraw would be denied, he could then require repayment of the $1,000 previously refunded. If no declaration was filed, the fees were deemed waived and the motion would be granted.[3]

[3] As the parties recall, at the February 20, 2008, hearing Ms Covington's fees were discussed at some length. It appeared from her § 329 disclosure statement that defense of a motion to dismiss was covered in her $1,701 flat fee. The UST advised it would file a § 329 motion to review her fees. Before

On March 3, 2008, the firm filed the present motion to alter or amend the minute and supplemental orders, which the UST opposed. On March 6, 2008, I conducted a hearing on the motion to alter or amend. Mr. Scott testified as to his representation of the Debtor. I also received several exhibits.

Discussion:

The issue before me is whether the firm has shown sufficient grounds to alter or amend the minute and supplemental orders.[4] The motion is under FRCP 59(a) and (e), and FRCP 52(b).[5]

Under Rule 59(e):

> [R]econsideration of a judgment after its entry is an extraordinary remedy which should be used sparingly. There are four basic grounds upon which a Rule 59(e) motion may be granted. First, the movant may demonstrate that the motion is necessary to correct manifest errors of law or fact upon which the judgment is based. Second, the motion may be granted so that the moving party may present newly discovered or previously unavailable evidence. Third, the motion will be granted if necessary to prevent manifest injustice.... Fourth, a Rule 59(e) motion may be justified by an intervening change in controlling law.

McDowell v. Calderon, 197 F.3d 1253, 1255, n.1 (9th Cir. 1999) (quoting, 11 Charles Alan Wright et al., Federal Practice and Procedure § 2810.1 (2d ed.1995)).

Under Rule 59(a), granting a motion for a new trial is appropriate if the moving party demonstrates 1) a manifest error of fact; 2) a manifest error of law; or 3) newly discovered evidence. Janas v. Marco Crane and Rigging Co. (In re JWJ Contracting Co., Inc.), 287 B.R. 501, 514 (9th Cir. BAP (Az.) 2002), aff'd., 371 F.3d 1079 (9th Cir. 2004) (internal citation omitted). The same standards apply to a motion to amend or for additional findings under FRCP 52(b). Weiner v. Perry, Settles & Lawson, Inc. (In Re Weiner), 208 B.R. 69, 72 (9th Cir. BAP (N.D.Cal.) 1997), rev'd on other grounds, 161 F.3d 1216 (9th Cir. 1998).

The firm has not argued there has been an intervening change in controlling law, nor has it argued the motion should be granted to allow it to present newly discovered or previously unavailable evidence. This leaves the firm's contentions that I committed manifest errors of law doing so, Ms Covington and the UST stipulated to an order fully refunding Ms Covington's fees to the Debtor. Ms Covington has since filed a declaration that she has done so.

[4] As I announced at the March 6th hearing, the minute and supplemental orders do not constitute findings and conclusions under § 329 of the reasonableness of Mr. Scott's fees.

[5] FRCP 59 and FRCP 52(b) are made applicable by FRBP 9023 and FRBP 7052 respectively.

and fact or that altering or amending the minute and supplemental orders would prevent a "manifest injustice." I will discuss these grounds in turn.

For an error of law or fact to be "manifest," it must be "an error that is plain and indisputable, and that amounts to a complete disregard of the controlling law or the credible evidence in the record." In re Oak Park Calabasas Condominium Association, 302 B.R. 682, 683 (Bankr. C.D. Cal. 2003) (quoting, Blacks Law Dictionary 563 (7th ed. 1999)). The firm has not shown manifest error.

It is axiomatic that an attorney may not withdraw as counsel except by leave of court. Darby v. City of Torrance, 810 F.Supp. 275, 276 (C.D. Cal.1992). LBR 9011-1.A.1 implements this axiom.[6] The decision to grant or deny withdrawal is committed to my discretion. Liang v. Cal-Bay Intern., Inc., 2007 WL 3144099, *1 (S.D. Cal. 2007). Despite this general rule, the firm argues I had no discretion but to unconditionally allow withdrawal because it had been "discharged", citing Oregon Rule of Professional Conduct (ORPC) 1.16(a)(3).[7] This argument was raised at the February 20th hearing. Mere reiteration of duly considered and rejected arguments are inappropriate in a Rule 59 motion. Taylor. v. Knapp, 871 F.2d 803, 805 (9th Cir. 1988). Further, on the merits, the argument fails. Even assuming arguendo the firm was "discharged," the ethical rules allow even a "discharged" attorney to continue representation if ordered to do so.[8] ORCP 1.16(c);[9] see, also, SEC v. Poirier et. al., 2007 WL 2462173 (D. Az. 2007) (construing Arizona's analogous rule). In any event, I did not order the firm to continue its representation. I gave it a choice. The conditions I put on withdrawal were pecuniary. They did not put the firm in any sort of ethical bind.[10]

At bottom line, the firm objects to the conditions I put on withdrawal. It argues I committed manifest error in evaluating the evidence. It posits the evidence plainly indicated

[6] LBR 9011-1.A.1 makes LR 83.11 applicable. LR 83.11 provides that an attorney may withdraw as counsel of record "only with leave of court, if doing so leaves the party unrepresented or without local counsel."

[7] ORPC 1.16(a)(3) provides: "Except as stated in paragraph (c), a lawyer shall not represent a client or, where representation has commenced, shall withdraw from the representation of a client if . . . the lawyer is discharged."

[8] LBR 9011-1.A.1 also incorporates LR 83.7 which requires lawyers practicing before the court to "comply with the standards of professional conduct required of members of the Oregon State Bar . . . ."

[9] By its terms, ORPC 1.16(a)(3) is expressly subject to ORPC 1.16(c). ORPC 1.16(c) states that: "A lawyer must comply with applicable law requiring notice to or permission of a tribunal when terminating a representation. When ordered to do so by a tribunal, a lawyer shall continue representation notwithstanding good cause for terminating the representation."

[10] The firm has noted that Debtor advised Mr. Scott at the February 20th hearing she did not want the $1,000 back. If this is true, she is free to gift it back to the firm. She is also free to voluntarily pay any outstanding fees. The minute and supplemental orders simply prohibit the firm from compelling such payment.

Debtor had "discharged" the firm because she no longer wanted to incur future legal fees, not that the firm was withdrawing because Debtor couldn't afford to pay fees. Again, these points were argued and duly considered at the February 20th hearing, and are not appropriate for reconsideration. Taylor, supra.

In any event, I have carefully reviewed the transcript of the February 20th hearing.[11] I believe the findings upon which I exercised my discretion by no means constituted a "complete disregard of the . . . credible evidence in the record." Oak Park, supra. At the hearing, Debtor confirmed she no longer wanted Mr. Scott to represent her. Upon my further questioning, she advised it was a "financial matter," not dissatisfaction with Mr. Scott's services. Tr. at 4:17-20. Mr. Scott later represented that Debtor indicated she did not have the financial wherewithal to continue to pay ongoing fees to his firm for services in the event he was to stay on as her attorney. Tr. at 9:23-10:1. Debtor stated at one point that she would love to be represented but couldn't afford it. Tr. at 11:10-11. Whether these representations indicated "discharge" or simply a client who wanted continued representation but could not afford to pay for past and future services is a distinction without a difference on the facts at bar. Debtor's only reason for not wanting further representation was "financial."

My duty was to balance all of the parties' interests. In exercising my discretion, I may consider (1) the reasons why withdrawal is sought; (2) the prejudice withdrawal may cause to other litigants; (3) the harm withdrawal might cause to the administration of justice; and (4) the degree to which withdrawal will delay the resolution of the case. Liang, supra 2007 WL 3144099 at *1 (citing, Irwin v. Mascott, 2004 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 28264 at 4 (N.D. Cal. December 1, 2004)).[12] Here, there were imminent scheduling deadlines and an imminent evidentiary hearing. Debtor had dismissal of her case at stake. She indicated she would love to be represented. My ruling was an attempt to facilitate that representation. The firm could either stay on or refund and waive its fees. The latter would facilitate Debtor retaining another attorney if she chose, by giving her a ready source of cash, as well as relief from the burden of paying the firm's accrued fees. I was also aware that it was highly probable Debtor would be getting some or all of Ms Covington's fees refunded, which would also facilitate employment of new counsel. In fact, this refund occurred soon after the February 20th hearing. See, f.n. 3, supra. I recognize [11] The evidence admitted at the March 6th hearing is not relevant to this issue. A motion to alter or amend is not an opportunity for a party to re-try its case. Rather, the only relevant new evidence on a motion to alter or amend is that which the moving party submits could not have reasonably been produced at the original hearing. Ponzar v. Cornerstone Mtg., Inc., 2007 WL 2048671 (E.D. Mo. 2007). The firm has proffered no such evidence.

[12] ORPC 1.16(c) acknowledges these concerns. As one court notes:

> RPC 1.16(c) recognizes the notion that even if withdrawal is otherwise appropriate, other considerations must sometimes take precedence, such as maintaining fairness to litigants and preserving a court's resources and efficiency. Criteria such as the proximity to trial and the possibility for a client to obtain substitute counsel are also relevant considerations.

Rusinow v. Kamara, 920 F.Supp. 69, 71 (D. N. J.1996) (construing New Jersey's analogous rule)(internal citations and quotations omitted).

Debtor stated at the February 20th hearing that she could not get new counsel because they would charge too high a fee. My order allowed Debtor at least some flexibility should she change her mind and seek such representation. Further, my order recognized the stage of the proceedings and the potential cost to Debtor to bring new counsel up to speed.

The last possible ground for reconsideration is to prevent a "manifest injustice," which has been held to be "an error in the trial court that is direct, obvious, and observable, such as a defendant's guilty plea that is involuntary or that is based on a plea agreement that the prosecutor rescinds." Oak Park, supra. For the reasons discussed above, the minute and supplemental orders do not memorialize a "manifest injustice."

The firm's motion to alter or amend will be denied. An order consistent herewith will be entered. The above constitute my findings of fact and conclusions of law under FRBP 7052. They shall not be separately stated.

I note that the firm has not filed a declaration that it is not waiving its fees per the supplemental order. Under the circumstances, I feel it is appropriate to give the firm further time to consider its election in this matter. Accordingly, I shall give the firm a period of 10 days from the date of this letter to file a declaration that it is not waiving its fees. In such event, the motion to withdraw will be denied and the firm shall remain as counsel for the debtor. If such a declaration has not been filed within the 10 day period, the firm's motion to withdraw is granted and its fees, relative to this matter, shall be deemed waived.

Very truly yours,

Albert E Radcliffe

JURISDICTIONAL STATEMENT

In its order of January 26, 2011, this Court stated that the sanctions order granting the United States Trustee attorney fees "appears to be a final order from which no timely notice of appeal was ever filed." Order at 2 (Doc. 9169625). The United States Trustee agrees.[2] For the reasons set out in Section I of the Argument section of this brief, the United States Trustee respectfully requests that this Court dismiss the appeal of Appellants Timothy Wilson and Ori Blumenfeld ("SAH Counsel") as it pertains to the United States Trustee. SAH Counsel did not file a timely appeal of the final order awarding sanctions to the United States Trustee, thereby failing to create a basis upon which this Court can assert jurisdiction. 28 U.S.C. § 158(c)(2); Fed. R. Bankr. P. 8002.

The United States Bankruptcy Court for the Northern District of California otherwise had subject matter jurisdiction over the underlying chapter 11 case and the proceedings for the determination of sanctions against SAH Counsel. 28 U.S.C. §§ 157(b) and 1334. The bankruptcy court's order imposing sanctions in favor of the United States Trustee were final, appealable orders. 28 U.S.C. § 158(a)(1); 28 U.S.C. § 158(c)(1).

[2] Although this Court suggested that the parties address the issue of jurisdiction over the sanctions awarded to the United States Trustee in their briefs, Appellants Timothy Wilson and Ori Blumenfeld ("SAH Counsel") failed to do so. See SAH Br. at 2 (asserting this Court has jurisdiction because "all parties have consented to this Court's jurisdiction").

STATEMENT OF THE ISSUES

SAH Counsel has raised 22 issues on appeal, grouped into seven categories. SAH Br. at 2. However, the majority of those issues do not pertain to the United States Trustee or have not been properly raised.

Consequently, there are only two issues before this Court, as relate to the United States Trustee:

1. Does this Court have jurisdiction under 28 U.S.C. § 158(c)(2) and Fed. R. Bankr. P. 8002(a) to hear SAH Counsel's appeal of the sanctions awarded to the United States Trustee although the Notice of Appeal is out-of-time?

2. If this Court has jurisdiction, the issue becomes whether the bankruptcy court abused its discretion in awarding sanctions against SAH Counsel for filing SAH's bankruptcy case in order to frustrate the bankruptcy court's lifting of the stay in the prior bankruptcy case of Gold River.

FACTS

I. Prologue: Gold River Apartments LLC's Chapter 11 Case

In March 2009, Gold River Apartments LLC filed a chapter 11 petition in the United States Bankruptcy Court for the Northern District of California (Oakland Division). In re Gold River Apartments, LLC, No. 09-41589 LT (Bankr. N.D. Cal. filed Mar. 2, 2009). At that time, JPMCC 2002-C1 Tuolumne Drive

Limited Partnership, Gold River's secured lender, was in the process of foreclosing on the Gold River apartment complex. (Dkt. #31-2).[3] On December 2, while Mr. Blumenfeld and Mr Wilson – the appellants here – were counsel to Gold River, the bankruptcy court granted JPMCC's lift stay motion. No. 09-41589, Dkt. #142, SER 0006. Then JPMCC initiated foreclosure proceeding in the Superior Court of California (Sacramento County). Case No. 34-2009-00035774-CU-OR-GDS (Cal. Sup. Ct. filed Dec. 17, 2009) (Dkt. #31-3). While the state court proceedings were pending, the principals of Gold River transferred the apartment complex to a new corporation – Sacramento Apartment Holdings. (Dkt. #31-5 at 8-9) (corporation registration and quitclaim deed). The Bankruptcy Court did not authorize this transfer.

II. Sacramento Apartment Holdings's Chapter 11 Case

Counsel for Sacramento Apartment Holdings initiated a second chapter 11 case on December 22, 2009 in the San Francisco Division of the Bankruptcy Court of the Northern District of California. In re Sacramento Holdings, No. 09-34054 LT (Bankr. N.D. Cal. filed Dec. 22, 2009). They filed the petition the same day

[3] As explained in the Appellee Secured Lender's brief (Doc. 9172441), the name of the secured lender has changed three times in the course of this litigation – from JPMCC 2002-C1 Tuolumne Drive Limited Partnership to German American Capital Corporation to LB-RPR Notes Holdings, LLC. Appellee Br. at 1 (Doc. 9172441). The United States Trustee will refer to the secured lender as "JPMCC" because that was the entity's name at the time the events in this case took place.

that they finalized the transfer of the apartment complex from Gold River to Sacramento Apartment Holdings. (Dkt. #31-15). This apartment complex is Sacramento Apartment Holdings' sole asset. It is the same property that JPMCC was authorized to foreclose upon in the Gold River case. This is also the same apartment complex at issue in the superior court foreclosure proceedings in Sacramento County.

On December 24, 2010, JPMCC filed a motion to transfer the case back to the Oakland Division, which was granted on January 7, 2010. Sacramento Holdings, No. 09-34054 (Dkt. #30). The next day, JPMCC filed a motion under 11 U.S.C. § 362(d)(4) to have the automatic stay in the Sacramento Holdings case lifted. In re Sacramento Holdings, No. 10-40200 (Bankr. N.D. Cal. filed Jan. 8, 2010) (Dkt. #31). The bankruptcy court lifted the automatic stay ordering that "[u]pon recordation, this [lift-stay] order shall be binding in any other case filed under Title 11of the United States Code not later than 2 (two) years after the date of entry of this order[.]" (Dkt. #60).

III. The United States Trustee Seeks Sanctions Against SAH Counsel, Mr. Blumenfeld and Mr. Wilson.

The United States Trustee filed a motion for sanctions against SAH Counsel under Federal Rule of Bankruptcy Procedure 9011 on January 12, 2010. (Dkt. #38). The United States Trustee alleged that they had filed the underlying bankruptcy case to delay foreclosure on the apartment complex first owned by Gold River and then by Sacramento Holdings. Id. at 3. JPMCC filed a joinder in the United States Trustee's motion the next day. (Dkt. #41). The SAH Counsel opposed the motion, arguing that its actions had been proper and therefore no basis existed to impose sanctions. (Dkt. #56).

At the February 16, 2010, hearing, when the bankruptcy court lifted the stay, it also considered the sanctions issue. At the outset, SAH Counsel withdrew all of their motions in both the Gold River and the Sacramento Apartment Holdings cases. Feb. 16 Tr. at 6. (Dkt. #121). SAH Counsel also agreed that their client would "participate in the foreclosure" and not "obstruct it." Id. SAH Counsel admitted that their litigation strategy "wasn't a good approach." Id. Finally, they asked "the Court to accept our apology for the kind of mess that we've created, but we're doing what we can to mitigate it, turn it over, and let everybody go on their way." Id. at 7.

On March 1, 2010, the bankruptcy court entered an order memorializing the February 16th hearing at which it granted the United States Trustee's motion for sanctions, in addition to lifting the stay to allow the foreclosure proceedings against the apartment complex to resume. (Dkt. #65). The order stated that the "Court shall determine the amount of sanctions." Id. It accordingly ordered the United States Trustee and JPMCC to file declarations “indicating the fees and costs they incurred because of the sanctionable conduct.” Id.

The trial attorney representing the United States Trustee filed a declaration stating that he spent seven hours working on the motion for sanctions and requesting a rate of $350 per hour. (Dkt. #62). In addition, he requested compensation for 1 hour of a colleague’s time, at $400 per hour, for appearing at the February 16th hearing. Id.

The United States Trustee’s total fee request was $2,850. JPMCC filed a separate fee request for $69,195.88, reflecting the work of several attorneys at different hourly rates starting on December 22, 2009. (Dkt. #64).

SAH Counsel did not file an opposition to the United States Trustee’s request for $2,850 in sanctions. During the response period, SAH Counsel opposed neither the amount of sanctions requested by the United States Trustee nor the method by which the $2,850 was calculated.

SAH Counsel did oppose JPMCC’s $69,195.88 fee request. (Dkt. #67). In that document, SAH Counsel made two general statements that they should not have to pay sanctions to the United States Trustee because they had learned their lesson. Id. at 3, 4 (stating that the United States Trustee “has made their [sic] point regarding the Code”). Aside from averring that monetary sanctions were not necessary to deter similar action in the future, SAH Counsel did not challenge any aspect of the United States Trustee's motion or declaration asking for $2,850.

The bankruptcy court considered the fee requests and SAH Counsel's opposition to the JPMCC fee request before entering two separate orders. On March 22, 2010, the court docketed an order awarding JPMCC $50,000, payable in ten monthly installments of $5,000 each. (Dkt #70).

The order awarding the United States Trustee $2,850 was dated March 31 and entered on the docket on April 1, 2010. (Dkt #76).

In a filing dated and filed on March 31, 2010, SAH Counsel filed a motion to reconsider the "Order Granting Payment of Sanctions To Duane Morris and Office of the United States Trustee entered by this Court on March 22, 2010." (Dkt. #74). In this motion, SAH objected to the $2,850 amount awarded to the United States Trustee and to the method by which it was calculated. Id. at 3. The bankruptcy court denied the motion for reconsideration, and an order to that effect was entered on April 21, 2010. (Dkt # 81).

The SAH Counsel filed a second motion for reconsideration on April 30, 2010 (Dkt # 83). They filed third and fourth motions for reconsideration on June 12, 2010 and June 18, 2010, respectively. (Dkt #s 90, 91). The bankruptcy court did not rule on any of these motions because they did not raise new issues. Dkt.

#107 at 2, 3 (stating that "Wilson [SAH Counsel] has no right to require the Court to consider and rule on an unending series of motions for reconsideration, stating no new grounds"); see also July 6 Tr. at 4 (Dkt. #113).

JPMCC filed a motion for an order holding the SAH Counsel in civil contempt on May 18, 2010 because they had not made any sanction payments. (Dkt. #86). The United States Trustee did not join that motion. The bankruptcy court entered its order on July 15, 2010 granting JPMCC $200 for each day that SAH Counsel continued to be in arrears on their $5,000 monthly payments. (Dkt. #97). That order did not set a specific sanction amount. The final order awarding JPMCC $87,014.50 in sanctions, compensatory contempt sanctions, and civil contempt sanctions was entered on January 19, 2011. (Dkt. #151). That order did not mention the sanctions award made to the United States Trustee.

On July 29, 2010, the SAH Counsel filed a notice of appeal of 1) the original sanctions order of March 1, 2010; 2) the March 22 Order setting the amount of sanctions payable to JPMCC at $50,000; 3) the April 1 Order setting the United States Trustee's award at $2,850; and 4) the July 15 Order granting JPMCC's motion for contempt. (Dkt. #101).

STANDARD OF REVIEW

This Court reviews questions of law de novo and factual findings for clear error. In re Ferrell, 539 F.3d 1186, 1189 (9th Cir. 2008). A bankruptcy court's imposition of sanctions under Federal Rule of Bankruptcy Procedure 9011 is reviewed for abuse of discretion. Valley Nat'l Bank of Arizona v. Needler (In re Grantham Bros.), 922 F.2d 1438, 1441 (9th Cir. 1991). A court abuses its discretion when the record contains no evidence to support its decision. MGIC Indemnity Corp. v. Moore, 952 F.2d 1120, 1122 (9th Cir. 1991).

ARGUMENT

I. The Appeal of the Sanctions Awarded to the United States Trustee Must be Dismissed Because SAH Counsel Filed Their Notice of Appeal Three Months Beyond the Statutory Deadline in 28 U.S.C. § 158(c)(2), so that this Court Does Not Have Jurisdiction to Hear it.

A. The deadline for filing a Notice of Appeal under 28 U.S.C. § 158(c)(2) is jurisdictional and therefore this Court does not have the power to hear this case as it pertains to the United States Trustee.[4]

This Court does not have jurisdiction to hear SAH Counsel's appeal of the sanction awarded to the United States Trustee because the July 15, 2010 Notice of Appeal is untimely. A litigant in bankruptcy has 14 days to file a notice of appeal of a final order. 28 U.S.C. § 158(c)(2) (stating that appeals are taken in the "time provided by Rule 8002 of the Bankruptcy Rules). This deadline is mandatory and [4] At this point in the litigation, the finality analysis regarding JPMCC differs from that pertaining to the United States Trustee. JPMCC filed a motion for civil contempt due to SAH Counsel's failure to obey the sanctions order. The United States Trustee did not join that motion. The bankruptcy court entered the contempt order on July 15, 2010. (Dkt. #97_____). SAH Counsel timely appealed the contempt order on July 29, 2010.

jurisdictional. In re Wiersma, 483 F.3d 933, 938 (9th Cir. 2007) ("[T]he failure to timely file a notice of appeal is a jurisdictional defect barring appellate review.") (citation and internal quotation marks omitted). SAH Counsel appealed the bankruptcy court's order awarding fees to the United States Trustee nearly three months late. Thus, this Court does not have jurisdiction to hear their appeal.

This case is governed by the Supreme Court case Bowles v. Russell, which held that if Congress established a time limit for taking an appeal in a statute, "that limitation is more than a simple 'claim-processing rule.'" Bowles v. Russell, 551 U.S. 205, 213 (2007). It is jurisdictional. Id. at 206; Kingman Reef Atoll Invs., L.L.C. v. United States, 541 F.3d 1189, 1196 (9th Cir. 2008) (quoting Bowles).

The Bowles holding applies to appeals in bankruptcy for two reasons. First, the Rule 8002(a) requirement that appeals be timely filed is incorporated into title 28. Section 158(c)(2) of title 28 provides that appeals in bankruptcy shall be taken "in the time provided by Rule 8002 of the Bankruptcy Rules." This reference to Rule 8002 is located in the same section of the statute that grants district courts jurisdiction to hear bankruptcy appeals. See 28 U.S.C. §§ 158(a)-(b). Because the time limitation is statutory, it is mandatory and jurisdictional.

Second, federal case law has for over 100 years treated time limits for filing a notice of appeal as jurisdictional. Bowles, 551 U.S. at 206 (stating that it has "long and repeatedly [been] held that the time limits for filing a notice of appeal are jurisdictional in nature"). The failure of SAH Counsel to file a timely notice of appeal deprives this Court of jurisdiction to review the bankruptcy court's award of $2,850 in sanctions to the United States Trustee. Anderson v. Mouradick (In re Mouradick), 13 F.3d 326, 327 (9th Cir. 1994) (holding a court does not have jurisdiction to hear an untimely appeal).

B. SAH Counsel filed four motions for reconsideration but this does not change the fact that their appeal of the sanctions award to the United States Trustee was untimely.

SAH Counsel filed a timely motion for reconsideration of both sanctions orders on March 31, 2010. Fed. R. Bankr. P. 9023. (Dkt. #74).[5] An initial motion for reconsideration tolls the appeal period. Fed. R. Bankr. P. 8002(b)(2). The bankruptcy court denied the reconsideration motion on April 21, 2010. (Dkt. #81). The SAH Counsel therefore had 14 days from April 21, 2010 to file a notice of appeal. Wages v. IRS, 915 F.2d 1230, 1234, n.3 (9th Cir. 1990); see In re Brewster, 243 B.R. 51, 55 (B.A.P. 9th Cir. 1999) (citing cases). But they did not do so.

[5] Although the order setting the sanction amount due to the United States Trustee was not entered until April 1, 2010, the motion for reconsideration filed the day earlier was also timely. Calculators Hawaii, Inc. v. Brandt, Inc., 724 F.2d 1332, 1335 (9th Cir. 1983) (holding that a motion to reconsider filed before entry of judgment was timely for the purposes of calculating appeal period).

Instead of filing a notice of appeal, SAH Counsel filed three more motions for reconsideration in the bankruptcy court. (Dkt. #s 83, 90, 91). Additional motions for reconsideration do not toll the appeal period for the underlying judgment. Ysais v. Richardson, 603 F.3d 1175, 1178 (10th Cir. 2010) (holding that a second motion for reconsideration tolled the appeal period for the first motion of reconsideration but not the time to appeal the judgment itself).[6] Because SAH Counsel did not appeal the bankruptcy court's sanction orders within 14 days of its first denial of reconsideration, namely by May 5, 2010, their appeal is untimely and must be dismissed. Anderson v. Mouradick (In re Mouradick), 13 F.3d 326, 327 (9th Cir. 1994).

II. The Bankruptcy Court's Award of Sanctions to the United States Trustee Became Final on April 21, 2010, Thus Starting the Appeal Period, Which Ended on May 5, 2010, Nearly Three Months Before SAH Counsel Filed Their Notice of Appeal.

An appeal of right from a bankruptcy court decision applies only to final "judgments, orders, and decrees." 28 U.S.C. §§ 158(a)(1) and (c). The bankruptcy court's order awarding sanctions to the United States Trustee became final on April 21, 2010, as described below.

Initially, the bankruptcy court's initial sanctions order, issued March 1, [6] Furthermore, the second and third motions for reconsideration were also untimely. Fed. R. Bankr. P. 9023.

2010, was not final because it did not establish the amount of sanctions. Jensen Elec. Co. v. Moore, Caldwell, Rowland & Dodd, Inc., 873 F.2d 1327, 1329 (9th Cir. 1989) (holding that a sanctions order is final when the amount of sanctions is determined). Instead, the bankruptcy court ordered the parties to submit declarations so that it could determine the appropriate dollar amount. Brown v. Wilshire Credit Corp. (In re Brown), 484 F.3d 1116, 1121 (9th Cir. 2007) (holding that an order that demonstrates court's intent for future action is not a final order).

The bankruptcy court entered the sanctions order as to the United States Trustee on April 1, but SAH Counsel filed a motion for reconsideration, thus continuing the litigation. Fed. R. Bankr. P. 8002. When the bankruptcy court denied the reconsideration motion on April 21, the order awarding the United States Trustee $2,850 was final and appealable because there was nothing else for the bankruptcy court to decide. Catlin v. United States, 324 U.S. 229, 233 (1945).

A. Although the underlying bankruptcy case is still pending, the order granting sanctions to the United States Trustee is final.

Cases holding that sanctions orders cannot be appealed until the litigation is complete do not apply in this case. In Cunningham v. Hamilton County, the Supreme Court held that a lawyer could not appeal discovery sanctions imposed upon her until the underlying case had been adjudicated. Cunningham v. Hamilton County, 527 U.S. 198, 200 (1999); see also Markus v. Gschwend (In re Markus), 313 F.3d 1146, 1151 (9th Cir.) (stating that a sanctions motion in an adversary proceeding is not final until judgment has been entered). Even the Cunningham Court acknowledged, however, that sanctions orders are "conclusive." Cunningham 527 U.S. at 205. The applicability of Cunningham therefore depends upon the procedural posture of the underlying case. In re Rimsat, Ltd., 212 F.3d 1039, 1044 (7th Cir. 2000) (stating it was "unclear" after Cunningham whether sanctions orders are final and appealable in bankruptcy because they resolve a discrete dispute within the bankruptcy case as a whole).

The reasoning in Cunningham does not apply in this case. The Supreme Court gave three reasons why a sanctions motion should not be final in civil litigation. First, an appeal while the case was pending could interfere with the independence of the district court judge. Cunningham, 527 U.S. at 203. Second, prohibiting an immediate appeal would prevent the interference with the litigants' interests and avoid the "cost of a succession of separate appeals." Id. Third, delaying the sanctions appeal to the end of the litigation would promote judicial efficiency. Id. at 204.

None of the grounds for the decision in Cunningham are implicated here. First, the bankruptcy court's independence is not at stake. Second, there is no danger of piecemeal appeals. Third, judicial efficiency would be undermined if this Court were to hear an untimely appeal.

Here, the merits of the case have been adjudicated, as Cunningham envisions. As the Seventh Circuit has held, the resolution of the issues in a bankruptcy case makes Cunningham inapplicable. In re Rimsat, Ltd., 212 F.3d at 1044 (allowing the sanctions process to proceed because the dispute between the creditor and the debtor had been resolved, allowing for the final distribution of the bankruptcy estate).

Here, the bankruptcy court lifted the stay order on February 18, 2010, allowing the foreclosure of Sacramento Holding's sole asset and resolving the chapter 11 issue in the case. (Dkt. #60); Cf. SAH Resp. at 6 (filed Dec. 13, 2010) ("The legal proceedings in the SAH case are over except for the issues of sanctions and civil contempt."). Then the bankruptcy court resolved the sanctions issues. (Dkt #s 62, 64, 65, 70, 76, 81). Because the substantive bankruptcy issue had been decided, the order awarding sanctions to the United States Trustee was final. See Rimsat, 212 F.3d at 1044.

And this Court has also distinguished Cunningham to hold that it does not necessarily govern in bankruptcy cases. Stasz v. Gonzalez (In re Stasz), 387 B.R. 271, 275 (B.A.P. 9th Cir. 2008) (stating that "neither Cunningham nor Markus directly addresses the procedural context of the case at hand"). Although Stasz was a contempt case under Rule 9020, rather than a sanctions case under Rule 9011, the reasoning in Stasz is apt here as well.

In Stasz, this Court reasoned that an "order entered resolving a contested matter has the status of a judgment under Federal Rule of Civil Procedure 58. Fed. R. Civ. P. 58, incorporated by Fed. R. Bankr. P. 9021. It follows that the court's award of sanctions was a final order that ended the particular contested matter." Id.; accord In re Brown, 484 F.3d at 1121 (stating that "We follow a 'pragmatic approach' to finality in bankruptcy – 'a complete act of adjudication need not end the entire case, but need only end any of the interim disputes from which an appeal would lie'") (citation omitted)).

The United States Trustee's motion for sanctions was a contested matter and was the sole issue before the court at the time the sanctions were awarded. Fed. R. Bankr. P. 9014; Snyder v. Dewoskin (In re Mahendra), 131 F.3d 750, 754 (8th Cir. 1997) (stating that a motion for 9011 sanctions is a contested matter). Once the bankruptcy court denied reconsideration of the sanction award to the United States Trustee, the contested matter ended. See Stasz at 276 (stating if a sanctions award were not appealable even though it resolved the final issue in the case, "it is unclear when the order would become final and appealable").

III. Alternatively, To the Extent That SAH Counsel Have Asserted That this Court Has Jurisdiction over the United States Trustee's Sanctions Order, Their Position Has No Merit.

In its January 26, 2011 order, this Court invited the parties to address whether SAH Counsel had timely appealed the order awarding sanctions to the United States Trustee. SAH Counsel did not address the issue in their brief other than to assert, without citation, that this Court can decide all aspects of this appeal because "all parties" have submitted to the jurisdiction of this Court. SAH Br. at 2. It is black-letter law, however, that if jurisdiction is improper, a court does not have power to hear a case. United States v. Cotton, 535 U.S. 625, 630 (2002). Therefore "jurisdiction can never be forfeited or waived." Id. Nor can it be created by mutual consent. See Seminole Tribe of Florida v. Florida, 517 U.S. 44, 127-128 (1996) (stating that consent of a private party is "wholly insufficient to create subject-matter jurisdiction where it would not otherwise exist").

In response to this Court's November 8, 2010 order questioning jurisdiction, SAH Counsel also argued that their failure to comply with the deadline to appeal should be excused on two grounds: 1) the "unique circumstances" doctrine and 2) "excusable neglect." SAH Resp. at 4-6 (filed Dec. 13, 2010). Bowles rejects both theories. First, federal courts have "no authority to create equitable exceptions to jurisdictional requirements, [therefore] use of the 'unique circumstances' doctrine is illegitimate."[7] Bowles, 551 U.S. at 214. Second, appeal deadlines in Federal Rule of Bankruptcy Procedure 8002 are incorporated into 28 U.S.C. 158(c)(2), making them jurisdictional; therefore, they cannot be mitigated by equitable principles such as "excusable neglect." [8] Id.

IV. Alternatively, The Bankruptcy Court Did Not Abuse its Discretion in Awarding Sanctions.

A. The bankruptcy court did not abuse its discretion when it sanctioned SAH Counsel for filing the Sacramento Apartment Holdings chapter 11 case to avoid the foreclosure action that had been authorized in the Gold River case.

SAH Counsel filed the chapter 11 bankruptcy case at issue here in order to delay foreclosure of the apartment complex their client owned, prompting the United States Trustee to file a motion for sanctions because the petition was filed for an "improper purpose" and to "cause unnecessary delay." Mot. at 1, 3 (Dkt. #38-1); Fed. R. Bankr. P. 9011(b)(1).[9] Filing a bankruptcy case to impede state court litigation constitutes an improper purpose. Dressler v. Seely Co. (In re Silberkraus), 336 F.3d 864, 868 (9th Cir. 2003). Courts may also dismiss chapter

[7] SAH Counsel cite only cases decided before Bowles for this argument.

[8] SAH Counsel cite cases involving late proofs of claim under Fed. R. Bankr. P. 9006 to support their argument. See e.g., Pioneer Inv. Servs. Co. v. Brunswick Assoc. Ltd. P'ship, 507 U.S. 380 (1993). These cases are inapposite because accepting a late proof of claim is irrelevant to the Court's jurisdiction.

[9] Because the United States Trustee sought sanctions for the filing of a petition to institute a case, the Rule 9011(c)(1)(A) safe harbor provision did not apply. Id.

11 petitions filed for “tactical reasons unrelated to reorganization.” Marsch v. Marsch (In re Marsch), 36 F.3d 825, 828 (9th Cir. 1994). “The test is whether a debtor is attempting to unreasonably deter or harass creditors or attempting to effect a speedy, efficient reorganization on a feasible basis.” Id.

The actions taken by SAH Counsel are a classic example of “New Debtor Syndrome,” a pattern of conduct that indicates that there is cause to dismiss a chapter 11 case. In re Duvan Apt. Inc., 205 B.R. 196, 200 (B.A.P. 9th Cir. 1996) (listing indicators). SAH Counsel transferred the distressed property from Gold River Holdings to a newly-created corporation, Sacramento Apartment Holdings. Id. The transfer occurred the same day that SAH Counsel filed the second chapter 11 case in another division of the bankruptcy court. Id. The apartment complex was Sacramento Apartment Holdings’ sole asset and the rents from the property were the only source of funds for servicing its debt. Id. At the very least, these facts were sufficient to create a prima facie case that SAH Counsel failed to rebut. Id.

The bankruptcy court did not abuse its discretion in finding that SAH Counsel filed this chapter 11 case for improper purposes. (Dkt. #65). In fact, SAH Counsel conceded as much. After the United States Trustee filed his sanctions motion, SAH Counsel attempted to withdraw all its filings rather than demonstrate that SAH could reorganize. Marsch, 36 F.3d at 828; Feb.16 Tr. at 6. SAH Counsel admitted that the procedure they followed was not "well-founded." Feb.16 Tr. at 5. They admitted that their actions were "not a good approach," Id. at 6, and that they had created a "mess." Id. at 7. The bankruptcy court did not abuse its discretion in deciding that the conduct of SAH Counsel warranted sanctions.

B. The other arguments of SAH Counsel have no merit.

1. Due Process

SAH Counsel have not been denied due process. SAH Br. at 8, 22. Three conditions must be met to satisfy due process in a sanctions proceeding. First, the party being sanctioned must receive notice. Second the party must be given an opportunity to respond. And third there must be a hearing. Kirshner v. Uniden Corp. of Am., 842 F.2d 1074, 1082 (9th Cir. 1988). In this case, all the prerequisites have been met. The Court held a hearing. (Dkt. #58). It did not bar SAH Counsel from presenting witnesses or arguments. (Dkt. #121) (transcript). Therefore, due process rights were respected.

2. SAH Counsel are incorrect that the bankruptcy court ignored their arguments about mitigation and their financial situation.

Contrary to SAH Counsel's assertions, the bankruptcy court did consider their arguments 1) that they have mitigated the damage caused by their actions and 2) they cannot afford to pay sanctions. The bankruptcy court simply was not persuaded by their arguments.

In its opinion denying reconsideration, the bankruptcy court rejected SAH's claim that they had saved JPMCC money because they had withdrawn their appeal in the Gold River case because the Gold River can had been dismissed, thus "the appeal would have been dismissed as moot in any event." Mem. Op. at 11-12, n.2 (Dkt. #78). The bankruptcy court also instructed SAH Counsel "confer with Secured Creditor to substantiate their contentions concerning their limited finances and attempt to work out a reasonable payment plan." Id. at 12, n.3. SAH Counsel did not attempt to do so. July 6 Tr. at 5. The bankruptcy court did not abuse its discretion in rejecting SAH Counsel's claims they could not afford to pay the sanctions.[10]

CONCLUSION

The United States Trustee requests that this appeal be dismissed with respect

[10] SAH Counsel's argument that the bankruptcy court abused its discretion in awarding sanctions in the amount of $2,850 to the United States Trustee has been waived. SAH counsel did not oppose the United States Trustee's motion that requested $2,850 in sanctions, nor did they object to the method the United States Trustee used to establish that amount, thus waiving their ability to do so now."It is a fundamental rule of federal appellate procedure that only such points as are made in the court below or such questions as are there raised will be reviewed on appeal[.]" Kottemann v. Commissioner of Internal Revenue, 81 F.2d 621, 623 (9th Cir. 1936). Furthermore, it is also black-letter law that a new argument may not be made in a motion for reconsideration, which was the first time that SAH Counsel questioned the methodology used to calculate the $2,850 fee request. See Boardman v. Estelle, 957 F.2d 1523, 1535 (9th Cir. 1992) (new arguments impermissible in petition for rehearing). Therefore, the fact that SAH Counsel first raised this issue in their motion for reconsideration did not preserve it.

to sanctions awarded to the United States Trustee. In the alternative, the United States Trustee requests that the bankruptcy court's sanctions orders in favor of the United States Trustee be affirmed.

REPLY MEMORANDUM IN SUPPORT OF UNITED STATES TRUSTEE'S MOTION TO DISMISS APPEAL

W. Clarkson McDow, Jr., the United States Trustee for Region Four, appellee herein ("United States Trustee"), by and through undersigned counsel, files this reply memorandum in support of his motion to dismiss the appeal filed by Simmons & Associates, Chartered (hereafter, "the Law Firm" or the "Appellant"), counsel for the Debtor, Safeway Van Lines, Inc. ("Debtor").

I. The Debtor Has No Standing to Pursue This Appeal.

On October 9, 2009, the United States Bankruptcy Court for the District of Maryland (Mannes, J.) entered an Order granting the Debtor's motion to convert this case to a liquidation under the provisions of Chapter 7 of the Bankruptcy Code, 11 U.S.C. § 101 et seq. (the "Bankruptcy Code").[1] Michael M. Wolff has been appointed the Chapter 7 Trustee. As such, the Debtor is no longer in possession or control of its assets, its operations, or this appeal. The Debtor no longer has standing to pursue this appeal. The decision as to whether to continue the appeal rests solely with the Chapter 7 Trustee. Indeed, it was improper for the Law Firm to file its Opposition to the United States Trustee's Motion to Dismiss Appeal without first (1) being employed by the Chapter 7 Trustee, and (2) obtaining the Chapter 7 Trustee's consent. Given that this appeal does not benefit the bankruptcy estate, it most likely will not be pursued by the Chapter 7 Trustee.[2]

In view of these developments that strip the Debtor of standing, this Court may dismiss the appeal without ruling on the Law Firm's arguments about mootness. Nonetheless, if the Court elects to reach those arguments, it should not rule in favor of the Law Firm. Specifically, the Law Firm argues that the appeal is not moot because, if this Court reverses the Bankruptcy Court, the Law Firm will be entitled to file an application for compensation. The Law Firm cites United States Trustee v. Equipment Services, Inc., 290 F.3d 739 (4th Cir. 2002), aff'd, Lamie v. United States Trustee, 540 U.S. 526 (2004), for the proposition that even after a case is converted to Chapter 7 from Chapter 11, debtor's counsel is entitled to payment for services performed pre-conversion. Lamie is distinguishable. In Lamie, unlike here, the Bankruptcy Court had approved counsel's application for employment before conversion to Chapter 7. Here, the Debtor converted to Chapter 7 after the application to employ the Law Firm was denied and while the issue was on appeal. Thus, before its attorneys can submit a fee application for services rendered to this Debtor, the Debtor first must obtain approval to employ counsel. This critical step had been completed in Lamie before the appeal was taken. In this case, the Law Firm is seeking permission for the Debtor to continue to pursue its application to employ. However, because it has converted to Chapter 7, the Debtor is no longer authorized to seek employment of counsel. Lamie, 540 U.S. at 535. As such, this Court should dismiss.

II. The Order Appealed from Is Not Final, and Insufficient Grounds Exist for an Interlocutory Appeal under 28 U.S.C. § 158.

As noted in our original motion and as conceded by the Appellants, to hear this interlocutory appeal, this Court must find (1) the existence of a controlling question of law, (2) as to which there is substantial ground for a difference of opinion, and (3) immediate appeal would materially advance the termination of the litigation. KPMG Peat Marwick, L.L.P. v. Estate of Nelco, Ltd., 250 B.R. 74 (E.D. Va. 2000). An order involves a controlling question of law when either (1) reversal of the bankruptcy court's order would terminate the action, or (2) determination of the issue on appeal would materially affect the outcome of the litigation. In re Travelstead, 250 B.R. 862 (Bankr. D. Md. 2000).

A. There is No Controlling Question of Law.

This case does not involve a controlling question of law because it does not deal with a question of "pure law." An issue is characterized as a controlling question of law if it deals with a question of "pure law, or deals with matters that can be decided quickly and cleanly without having to study the record." McFarlin v. Conseco Servs., LLC, 381 F.3d 1251, 1258 (11th Cir. 2004) (quoting Ahrenholz v. Bd. of Tr. of Univ. of IL, 219 F.3d 674, 677 (7th Cir. 2000)); see also Allapattah Servs., Inc. v. Exxon Corp., 333 F.3d 1248, 1252-53 (11th Cir. 2003); Pittway

Corp. v. Fyrnetics, Inc. 9 F.3d 977 (Fed. Cir. 1993) (Table) (For proper certification of interlocutory appeals, "the order [must] involve a clear-cut question of law against a background of determined and immutable facts."). Questions of fact or matters for the discretion of the trial court are not appropriate issues for interlocutory appeals. Garner v. Wolfinbarger, 430 F.2d 1093, 1097 (5th Cir. 1970).

The decision below involved a matter of discretion for the bankruptcy court, not a question of "pure law." See generally In re Lincoln Hosp. Med. Ctr., Inc., 234 Fed.Appx. 426, 427 (9th Cir. 2007) (a bankruptcy court's decision to deny employment of counsel is reviewed for "abuse of discretion"). Furthermore, the appeal raises questions of fact — the Law Firm asserts that the fees in question were generated solely from work performed to prepare this bankruptcy case, but the record is not clear on that issue because appellant adduced no evidence — such as invoices — below. Thus, because the appeal involves matters of discretion and factual analysis, the issue presented is not one of "pure law," and this appeal cannot be heard as interlocutory.[3] [3] The Law Firm's argument that it is not a pre-petition creditor because the fees owed were for preparing the bankruptcy filing relies heavily on the case of In re Roberts, 46 B.R. 815 (Bankr. D. Utah 1985). The United States Trustee pointed out in his Motion to Dismiss that the Roberts case had been reversed by In re Roberts, 75 B.R. 402, 407 (D. Utah 1987). The Law Firm responded by claiming that Roberts was affirmed in part and reversed in part, which is correct. However, the issue upon which Roberts was reversed is the issue upon which the Law Firm is relying. In reversing the Bankruptcy Court, the United States District Court for the District of Utah unequivocally held: "A law firm which is a pre-petition creditor does not meet the 'disinterested person' criteria set forth in 11 U.S.C. § 101(13) and therefore is disqualified from representing a Chapter 11 debtor in possession." In re Roberts, 75 B.R. at 407. The law firm was therefore not eligible to represent the debtor, Roberts, Inc. Id. at 409.

B. There is No Substantial Ground for Difference of Opinion.

Even if the Law Firm could establish that the appeal involves a controlling question of law, there is no substantial ground for a difference of opinion as to the central legal question. Although there is no need for the Court to reach the underlying merits of the case to decide whether it has jurisdiction, the Court may note that, under 11 U.S.C. § 327(a), the overwhelming majority of courts have held that an attorney is ineligible to represent a debtor and not disinterested if that attorney is owed fees for pre-petition work. See, e.g., United States Trustee v. Price Waterhouse, 19 F.3d 138, 141 (3d Cir. 1994); In re Patterson, 53 B.R. 366 (Bankr. D. Neb 1985). The Court in In re Eastern Charter Tours, Inc., 167 B.R. 995 (Bankr. M.D. Ga. 1994), analyzed the construction of disinterestedness standards of the Bankruptcy Code and categorized the Roberts and Martin cases, upon which the Law Firm relies, as "caveat" positions to the majority view expressed by the Price Waterhouse case. Three rogue – or "caveat" – cases do not substantial disagreement make. In re Eastern Charter Tours, Inc., 167 B.R. 995, 997 (Bankr. M.D. Ga. 1994). See also Oyster v. Johns-Manville Corp., 568 F.Supp. 83, 88 (D. Pa. 1983) (A "single case [in opposition] demonstrates that while there may be grounds for differences of opinion, they are not, however, substantial) (emphasis in original); KPMG Peat Marwick, 250 B.R. at 82 (citations omitted) ("'the difference of opinion must arise out of genuine doubt as to the correct legal standard'").

Against this backdrop, the Law Firm unconvincingly cites three cases, including one from the First Circuit. However, none of these cases is more recent than 1987 and one, Roberts, has been reversed.[4] Contrary to the authority cited by the Law Firm, there has been significant litigation --- and agreement --- on the question of statutory construction of the phrase "disinterested person" since 1987. The courts' analysis comports with Supreme Court holdings that, although bankruptcy courts retain significant discretion, that discretion "can only be exercised within the confines of the Bankruptcy Code" and cannot be used to eviscerate plain statutory language. Norwest Bank of Washington v. Ahlers, 485 U.S. 197, 206, 108 S. Ct. 963, 968-69, 99 L.Ed.2d 169 (1988). Under this analysis, the majority of courts now hold that Section 327(a) of the Bankruptcy Code bars a law firm-creditor from serving as counsel to the debtor in a bankruptcy case. See, e.g., United States Trustee v. Price Waterhouse, 19 F.3d 138, 141 (3d Cir. 1994); Childress v. Middleton Arms, L.P. (In re Middleton Arms, L.P.), 934 F.2d 723, 724-25 (6th Cir. 1991). See also United States Trustee v. Bloom (In re Palm Coast, Matanza Shores L.P), 101 F.3d 253 (2d Cir. 1996) (concluding that language in Section 327 prohibits case trustee from hiring his real estate firm). In short, it is well-settled that this Law Firm, which concedes that it is owed money for pre-petition services, is not disinterested and thus could not be employed as counsel.

C. Immediate Appeal Will Not Materially Advance the Termination of this Litigation.

Finally, the determination of the issue on appeal would not materially affect the outcome of the litigation. The Law Firm argues that the resolution of this appeal will terminate litigation between the Debtor and the United States Trustee. The Law Firm is mistaken – the resolution of this appeal will not necessarily terminate the litigation.[5] Any reversal on appeal would be the

[5] The Law Firm advances two theories as to why its application for employment should be granted: (1) it claims that it is not a pre-petition creditor because its fees were generated for preparing the bankruptcy petition and accompanying papers, and (2) if it is considered a pre-petition creditor, then it will agree to waive its pre-petition fees. Contrary to its first step in a longer process. If this Court reverses the lower court's decision and remands for further proceedings, the Law Firm first must obtain approval below of its application for employment. If that hurdle is cleared, the Law Firm must then prepare and file a request for compensation under Section 330 of the Bankruptcy Code before any fees can be awarded. At that juncture, the United States Trustee and other creditors and parties-in-interest would have an opportunity to object to the Law Firm's application for compensation. If an objection is filed, the Bankruptcy Court generally holds a hearing on the matter.[6] At this hearing, the Law Firm would bear the burden of proving that its fees were inter alia actual, necessary and reasonable. The Court could sustain any objections or could deny any and all fees sua sponte. See In re Busy Beaver Bldg. Ctrs., Inc., 19 F.3d 833, 840-41 (3d Cir. 1994). Thus, contrary to the Appellant's assertions, if it is successful in this appeal, the litigation road will only get longer – not shorter. In other words, a determination now will not materially advance the litigation.

In conclusion, the Law Firm has not demonstrated that its motion for leave to appeal should be granted. Further, the Law Firm's prosecution of this appeal does not benefit the Debtor, who will never be required to pay this bill; the creditors, who are likely to receive only a assertions, the Law Firm never has agreed to waive its pre-petition fees to eliminate its conflict of interest. It has consistently stated that it will waive its outstanding pre-petition fees only if a court requires such waiver as a condition of employment. This is too little, too late. Professionals who seek to eliminate a conflict of interest caused by an outstanding amount due waive the amount due and owing long before any litigation on the issue in or conclusion reached by the bankruptcy court.

[6] The requirement for a hearing is governed by Section 102 of the Bankruptcy Code, which grants bankruptcy courts broad discretion to fashion the type of "hearing [that] is appropriate in the particular circumstances; . . ." 11 U.S.C. § 102(1)(A). Further, Section 102 empowers a bankruptcy court to take action without a hearing if "such a hearing is not timely requested by a party in interest" or if there is not sufficient time to hold a hearing. 11 U.S.C. § 102(1)(B).

small percentage, if any, of their claims, and will receive even less if the appeal succeeds; or the bankruptcy estate. This appeal benefits only one party – the Law Firm. This Court should dismiss.

WHEREFORE, for the foregoing reasons, the United States Trustee for Region Four, including the District of Maryland, respectfully requests that the Court deny the Appellant's Motion for Leave to Appeal, dismiss the appeal as interlocutory, and grant such other and further relief as is necessary and appropriate.

REQUEST FOR ORAL ARGUMENT

Appellant United States Trustee requests oral argument. The challenged order dismissed the United States Trustee's complaint pursuant to Fed. R. Bankr. P. 7012(b)(1) on the grounds that the United States Trustee lacks authority to seek civil sanctions against a creditor in a bankruptcy case for abuse of the bankruptcy process, and on the grounds that the United States Trustee failed to state a claim for equitable relief.

STATEMENT OF THE BASIS OF APPELLATE JURISDICTION

The bankruptcy court had jurisdiction over the underlying chapter 13 bankruptcy case under 28 U.S.C. §§ 157(a) and (b) and 1334(a). The bankruptcy court dismissed the United States Trustee's adversary complaint by order entered on October 2, 2008. The United States Trustee timely appealed that order under 28 U.S.C. § 158(c)(2) and Fed. R. Bankr. P. 8002(a) on October 14, 2008. This Court has jurisdiction over this appeal under 28 U.S.C. § 158(a)(1).

STATEMENT OF ISSUES PRESENTED FOR APPELLATE REVIEW

In the adversary proceeding below, the bankruptcy court dismissed the United States Trustee's complaint, which requested that the bankruptcy court exercise its discretion to impose sanctions and appropriate equitable relief, pursuant to 11 U.S.C. § 105(a) and its inherent equitable powers, against Countrywide Home Loans, Inc. ("Countrywide") for Countrywide's misconduct in the bankruptcy case of Jose and Fanny Sanchez. This appeal raises the following issues:

1. Did the Bankruptcy Court err by holding that the United States Department of Justice, acting through one of its officers, the United States Trustee, lacks authority to request that the court exercise its discretion by imposing monetary sanctions under its inherent authority and 11 U.S.C. § 105(a) against a party that has abused the bankruptcy process?

2. Did the Bankruptcy Court rely on an incorrect legal standard when it held that the allegations of the United States Trustee's complaint were insufficient to state a claim for injunctive relief against Countrywide?

3. Did the Bankruptcy Court err by presuming that the only possible equitable relief it was empowered to grant pursuant to the United States Trustee's complaint is an injunction for Countrywide to obey the law?

APPLICABLE STANDARD OF APPELLATE REVIEW

This appeal raises only issues of law. The standard of review on appeal is de novo as to conclusions of law. In re New Power Co., 438 F.3d 1113 (11th Cir. 2006); In re Empire for Him, Inc., 1 F.3d 1156 (11th Cir. 1993); In re Verola, 336 B.R. 547 (S.D. Fla. 2004).

STATEMENT OF THE CASE

I. Countrywide's Abuse of the Bankruptcy System.

This appeal arises out of a series of abusive actions by Countrywide that the bankruptcy court, in the decision below, characterized as "reprehensible conduct by an apparently overreaching mortgage lender." (Op. at 11).[1] In 2001, the debtors, Jose and Fanny Sanchez, were the owners of a home on which Countrywide held a second mortgage. (Compl. at Exh. 1). On November 19, 2001, the Sanchezes filed a bankruptcy petition under chapter 13 of the United States Bankruptcy Code (Compl. at ¶ 7), and on January 17, 2002, they proposed a first amended chapter 13 plan. (Compl. at ¶ 8). With respect to Countrywide's second mortgage, that plan contained a "strip-down" provision, which alleged that the value of Countrywide's junior security interest was zero, and proposed to treat Countrywide's claim as a wholly unsecured claim. (Compl. at ¶ 9). Countrywide never objected to the Sanchez plan, and on January 17, 2002, the bankruptcy court entered an order confirming the plan. (Compl. at ¶ 10-11).

On February 19, 2002, Countrywide filed a proof of claim in the Sanchez bankruptcy case, in which it incorrectly characterized its claim as secured. (Compl. at ¶ 12). In response, the Sanchezes filed a motion for recordable order, requesting that the court confirm that Countrywide's lien had been stripped by the plan and that Countrywide's claims were unsecured. (Compl. at ¶ 13). Countrywide was served with a copy of the motion, but again filed no objection, and the bankruptcy court granted the motion for recordable order on April 24, 2003.

(Compl. at ¶¶ 14-15).

Despite the entry of two bankruptcy court orders eliminating its security interest, in late 2003, Countrywide commenced a series of proceedings in which it sought to foreclose on the Sanchezes' property. On November 13, 2003, Countrywide filed a motion for relief from the automatic stay in the bankruptcy court, which the bankruptcy court subsequently denied for lack of prosecution. (Compl. at ¶ 16-17). On January 9, 2003, Countrywide filed a second motion for relief from the stay, which it later withdrew without prejudice. (Compl. at ¶¶ 18-19). Both of Countrywide's motions for relief from the stay falsely recited that Countrywide was the holder of a secured claim. (Compl. at ¶¶ 16-18).

The Sanchezes completed their chapter 13 plan and received a bankruptcy discharge on December 13, 2006. (Compl. at ¶ 20). Six months later, in apparent disregard of the Sanchezes' discharge and the bankruptcy court's orders regarding its claim, Countrywide commenced a foreclosure action against the Sanchezes in state court. In response, the Sanchezes moved to reopen their bankruptcy case and sought an order holding Countrywide in contempt of the bankruptcy discharge order. (Compl. at ¶ 23). Countrywide voluntarily dismissed its foreclosure complaint on October 29, 2007. (Compl. at ¶ 24). On October 30, 2007, the Sanchezes dismissed their contempt motion. (Compl. at ¶ 25). The Sanchezes did not otherwise settle or release their rights of action, if any, against Countrywide.

Countrywide's actions in the Sanchez case form part of a broader, nationwide pattern of misconduct, which recently has led to the imposition of sanctions against Countrywide and its representatives in several districts. See, e.g., In re Parsley, 384 B.R. 138 (Bankr. S.D. Tex. 2008) (sanctioning Countrywide's counsel and criticizing Countrywide for its failure to ensure the accuracy of its pleadings); In re Ennis, Case No. 05-11985 (Bankr. W.D. Pa. July 31, 2006) (sanctioning Countrywide and its counsel for failing to make reasonable inquiry prior to filing factually inaccurate motion for relief from the automatic stay); In re Allen, Case No. 06-60121, 2007 WL 1747018 (Bankr. S.D. Tex. Jan. 9, 2007) (sanctioning Countrywide's attorneys upon finding that Countrywide's objection to a chapter 13 plan "had no basis in fact or law and was materially disruptive to the efficient and effective operation of this Court"); In re Mann, Case No. 03-82973 (Bankr. M.D.N.C. March 8, 2004) (awarding punitive damages against Countrywide for repeated violations of the automatic stay and finding that Countrywide's conduct was "aggravated and egregious").

II. The United States Trustee's Complaint.

The plaintiff, the United States Trustee for Region 21, is a senior official of the United States Department of Justice who is charged with representing the interests of the United States and in overseeing the administration of the bankruptcy system in, among other jurisdictions, the Southern District of Florida. See 11 U.S.C. § 307; 28 U.S.C. §§ 581(a)(21), 586. By his complaint, the United States Trustee requested that the bankruptcy court exercise its discretion to impose appropriate sanctions against Countrywide pursuant to both the bankruptcy court's inherent equitable powers and its statutory power to "prevent an abuse of process," see 11 U.S.C. § 105(a). In particular, the United States Trustee's complaint requested two specific forms of relief. First, the complaint requested that the bankruptcy court "impos[e] appropriate monetary sanctions against Countrywide" to deter it from similar abuses of the bankruptcy system in the future. Second, the complaint requested that the bankruptcy court enter an order "enjoining and restraining Countrywide from engaging in bad faith and abusive practices" in connection with its filing of proofs of claim, pleadings, and foreclosure complaints.

On May 28, 2008, Countrywide moved to dismiss the United States Trustee's complaint. (Dkt. 24), and on June 30, 2008, the United States Trustee responded to the motion to dismiss. (Dkt. 42).

III. The Bankruptcy Court Decision.

On October 2, 2008, the bankruptcy court granted Countrywide's motion to dismiss the complaint. The bankruptcy court concluded that the United States Trustee had standing to assert his claims (Op. at 3), that the complaint was not moot (Id.), and that it had subject matter jurisdiction over the United States Trustee's claims. (Id.).

Nonetheless, the bankruptcy court dismissed the United States Trustee's complaint on three narrow grounds. First, with respect to the United States Trustee's claim for monetary relief, the bankruptcy court held that, although it had jurisdiction to impose a monetary sanction against Countrywide, and although the United States Trustee had standing to be heard on such a matter, the United States Trustee was not "authorized" to raise a request for civil sanctions on behalf of the public. (Op. at 5). Instead, the bankruptcy court held, without any explanation or support, that such action could only be taken by the United States Attorney, another officer of the Department of Justice. (Op. at 6).

Second, with respect to the United States Trustee's claims for non-monetary relief, the bankruptcy court held that the United States Trustee "failed to plead facts showing an imminent threat of future injury or any continuing, current injury warranting any sort of injunction." (Op. at 10). As a result, the bankruptcy court concluded that with respect to the United States Trustee's request for an injunction against future misconduct, "the 'injury' requirement of standing is not satisfied." (Op. at 9).

Third, the bankruptcy court dismissed the United States Trustee's non-monetary claims on the alternative grounds that any equitable relief obtained by the United States Trustee would take the form of an injunction against conduct already prohibited by other rules and law, and thus "would be an unnecessarily duplicative decree." (Op. at 10). As a result, the bankruptcy court held that the United States Trustee's claim for equitable relief would be denied on the grounds that it "lacks any degree of specificity and fails to provide any real guidance for Countrywide's future conduct." (Op. at 10).

SUMMARY OF ARGUMENT

The bankruptcy court erred when it concluded that the United States Trustee lacks authority to request that the court impose civil sanctions against Countrywide. As the officer of the United States Department of Justice responsible for overseeing the integrity of bankruptcy cases, the United States Trustee has been charged by Congress with the duty to investigate and prevent abuses of the bankruptcy system. The United States Trustee's request that the bankruptcy court exercise its discretion to sanction Countrywide for misconduct falls well within the scope of that duty.

In this case, by ruling that the United States Trustee lacked authority to bring an instance of party misconduct to the court's attention, the bankruptcy court relied on an erroneous statutory interpretation that is irreconcilable with the text of the Bankruptcy Code and Title 28, United States Code, and which also conflicts with well-established decisions of the Eleventh Circuit and other federal courts.

The bankruptcy court's determination that the United States Trustee failed to state an equitable claim for relief was also erroneous. By holding that the United States Trustee was required to plead a particularized injury to himself to obtain equitable relief, the bankruptcy court relied on a pleading standard that is inapplicable to governmental units seeking relief on behalf of the public interest. Furthermore, by basing its decision on speculation as to the form of the injunction that the United States Trustee would eventually request after the completion of discovery, the bankruptcy court improperly considered matters beyond the scope of a motion to dismiss under the notice-pleading standard set forth by Fed. R. Bankr. P. 7008 and Fed. R. Bankr. P. 7012. Finally, even if the issue of possible remedies were properly before the court, the bankruptcy court erred by presuming that its power to order injunctive relief against Countrywide is limited, at most, to an order requiring Countrywide to obey the law in the future.

ARGUMENT

I. THE UNITED STATES TRUSTEE STATED A CLAIM FOR MONETARY RELIEF AGAINST COUNTRYWIDE

The bankruptcy court correctly recognized that it has both inherent and statutory authority to sanction Countrywide for its abuse of the bankruptcy system, and further held that the United States Trustee "has standing." (Op. at 3).[2] Nevertheless, the bankruptcy court dismissed the

[2] The bankruptcy court's sanctioning authority in this matter arises both from section 105(a) of the Bankruptcy Code, which authorizes courts to issue any order appropriate or necessary to "prevent . . . an abuse of process," as well as the inherent authority of all federal courts to punish bad faith conduct in litigation. The existence of a non-statutory, inherent source of sanctioning power has been settled law since the Supreme Court's decision in Chambers v. NASCO, Inc., 501 U.S. 32 (1991), which upheld the power of a district court to sanction bad faith conduct even where such conduct could not be sanctioned under Rule 11. Id. at 43. Although Chambers involved a sanction issued by a district court, the Eleventh Circuit subsequently recognized that the same powers are also inherent in federal bankruptcy courts. See In re Walker, 532 F.3d 1304, 1309-10 (11th Cir. 2008). The Eleventh Circuit has also held that the inherent power sanctions available to a federal court include, among other things, non-compensatory civil fines. See Kleiner v. First Nat. Bank of Atlanta, 751 F.2d 1193, 1209 (11th

United States Trustee's claims for monetary relief on the grounds that the United States Trustee is not "authorized" to seek such relief. (Id. at 5). The bankruptcy court opined that such relief could only be sought by the United States Attorney. (Id. at 6). The bankruptcy court did not explain its reasons for distinguishing between the standing and authority of the United States Trustee, and it cited no authority in support of its assertion that the United States Attorney, and not the United States Trustee, is vested with exclusive authority to request sanctions on behalf of the Department of Justice.

The bankruptcy court's holding is erroneous for at least three distinct reasons First, the bankruptcy court's decision misstates the purpose and statutory mandate of the United States Trustee program. The mission of the United States Trustee is not, as the bankruptcy court suggested, limited to the mere investigation of possible abuses. Rather, Congress provided the United States Trustee with a broad statutory mandate to commence appropriate litigation wherever abuses arise. The bankruptcy court's decision undermines this legislative purpose. Second, the bankruptcy court's ruling is based on an erroneous statutory interpretation. By suggesting that the United States Trustee lacks authority to perform duties not specifically enumerated by statute, the bankruptcy court's decision not only contradicted the plain terms of the statutory provisions on which it relied, but also failed to give effect to section 307 of the Bankruptcy Code. Third, the bankruptcy court's decision conflicts with more than two decades of rulings by federal appellate courts, which have uniformly recognized the broad nature of the United States Trustee's power to combat abuses of the bankruptcy system.

Cir. 1985) (affirming $50,000 noncompensatory fine imposed against counsel pursuant to trial court's inherent powers).

A. The United States Trustee Program was Created by Congress in Order to Litigate, as Well as Investigate, Misconduct in Bankruptcy Cases.

The United States Trustee Program has its genesis in the Commission on the Bankruptcy Laws of the United States, which was created by Congress in 1970 to study the structural problems inherent in the bankruptcy laws existing at the time. See Act of July 24, 1970, P.L. 91-354, 84 Stat. 468 (1970). Among the most longstanding and systemic of these problems was the lack of an effective administrative mechanism to protect against self-dealing, conflicts of interest, and other abuses in the bankruptcy process. These problems stemmed from the fact that bankruptcy is fundamentally different from typical litigation, which involves only a few parties who are actively motivated to defend their own self-interest. In contrast, a bankruptcy case often involves debtors who lack the sophistication or financial wherewithal to protect their own interests, and creditors whose small stake in proceedings or distance from the bankruptcy forum effectively denies them the ability to protect their rights. As a result, while courts recognized that "[t]he conduct of bankruptcy proceedings not only should be right but must seem right," In re Ira Haupt & Co., 361 F.2d 164, 168 (2d Cir. 1966), there was a widespread perception that in practice, bankruptcy proceedings fell well short of meeting this goal.[3]

In particular, the structural shortcomings of the former bankruptcy laws often meant that debtors and creditors would have no incentive to commence litigation to combat abuses. Moreover, because bankruptcy judges served in the dual role of administrator, which included the duty to supervise the conduct of cases and investigate abuses, as well as the trier of law and fact in any proceedings to punish those abuses, the Commission expressed concern that "participation in administrative aspects of bankruptcy proceedings tends to impair the litigants' confidence in the impartiality of the tribunal's decision." Report of the Commission of the Bankruptcy Laws of the United States, H.R. Doc. No. 137, 93rd Cong. 1st Sess. (1973).

[3] The severity of these problems was first exposed in a report submitted by William J. Donovan, a prominent New York attorney, to Congress in 1931, and was subsequently reiterated by then Solicitor General Thomas Thacher. See House Committee on the Judiciary, Administration of Bankrupt Estates, 71st Cong. 3d Sess. (Comm. Print 1931); Report to the President on the Bankruptcy Act and its Administration in the Courts of the United States, (1931), reprinted in S. Doc. No. 65, 72nd Cong. 1st Sess. (1932).

Echoing the recommendations of previous critics, the Commission concluded that it was essential to separate the administrative functions of the bankruptcy court from its judicial functions, and recommended the creation of an agency that would supervise bankruptcy cases. See Id. Congress carefully considered the Commission's suggestions, and in 1977, the United States House of Representatives issued a report that fully concurred in the Commission's determination and recommended the creation of the United States Trustee Program, a new entity to be located within the Department of Justice, to assume the administrative functions of the bankruptcy courts. See H.R. Rep. No. 595, 95th Cong. 1st Sess. (1977), reprinted in 1978 U.S.C.C.A.N. 5963. The House's recommendation was largely adopted in the legislation eventually enacted as the Bankruptcy Reform Act of 1978, which created the United States Trustee Program.[4] See P.L. 95-598, 92 Stat. 2549 (1978).

The legislative history relating to the creation of the United States Trustee Program reflects Congress's intention that the United States Trustees would not merely be a passive administrator, but would act as a "watchdog" whose role "may be compared with . . . a prosecutor." H.R. Rep. No. 95-595 at 109. Thus, one report described the proposed United States Trustee as the "enforcer[] of the bankruptcy laws," and noted that the United States Trustee would be responsible for bringing "proceedings in the bankruptcy courts in particular cases in which a particular action taken or proposed to be taken deviate[d] from the standards established by the . . . bankruptcy code." H.R. Rep. No. 989, 95th Cong., 2d Sess. 88, 109 (1977), quoted in A-1 Trash Pickup, Inc. v. United States Trustee (In re A-1 Trash Pickup), 802 F.2d 774, 775 (4th Cir. 1986). See also Morgenstern v. Recvo D.S, Inc. (In re Revco D.S., Inc.), 898 F.2d 498, 500 (6th Cir. 1990) (holding that United States Trustee could be likened to prosecutor with standing to litigate appeal on behalf of the public interest); In re Charges of Unprofessional Conduct Against 99-37, 249 F.3d 821, 825 (8th Cir. 2001) (comparing United States Trustee to federal prosecutor for purposes of sovereign immunity).

[4] The 1978 Reform Act initially created a pilot United States Trustee Program that served eighteen of ninety-four federal districts. See Reform Act § 224. However, just eight years later, the United States Trustee Program was expanded nation-wide as part of the Bankruptcy Judges, United States Trustees, and Family Farmer Bankruptcy Act of 1986. See P.L. 99-554, 100 Stat. 3088 (1986).

The United States Trustee's authority to enforce bankruptcy laws on behalf of the public further arises from the fact that, when creating the United States Trustee Program, Congress assigned to the United States Trustee many of the functions that previously had been performed in bankruptcy cases by the Securities and Exchange Commission. See H.R. Rep. 95-595 at 109 (stating that United States Trustees "operate much as the Securities and Exchange Commission operates under current chapter X of the Bankruptcy Act, protecting the public interest and ensuring that bankruptcy cases are conducted according to law"). As the Supreme Court held in an influential early decision, the SEC's functions included a broad authority, in addition to its prescribed statutory duties, to litigate in bankruptcy cases wherever the public policy of the bankruptcy laws was threatened. See Sec. & Exch. Comm'n v. U.S. Realty & Improvement Co., 310 U.S. 434, 459-60 (1940) (holding that SEC's "duty and its interest extends not only to the performance of its prescribed functions," but also to the prevention of any "violation of the public policy of the [Bankruptcy] Act"). The same principle is equally applicable under current law to the United States Trustee. See Revco, 898 F.2d at 499 (analyzing standing of United States Trustee under rule stated in U.S. Realty).

The present case provides a stark example of the policy Congress had in mind when it empowered the United States Trustees to litigate against abuses of the bankruptcy system. As a practical matter, few individual debtors will have the resources or sophistication to detect, or obtain redress for, abuses by large creditors. Even where debtors eventually resolve their disputes independently, as the Sanchezes appear to have done in this case, there is no incentive for those debtors or the creditor to resolve such abuses on a systemic basis. For this reason, as one bankruptcy court recently observed in another case involving Countrywide, the United States Trustee plays an essential role in combating creditor abuse. See Parsley, 358 B.R. at 145 (noting that "[b]ut for the extremely thorough investigation by the Office of the United States Trustee . . . the court may never have become aware of the numerous issues discussed herein").

Accordingly, the bankruptcy court erred when it held that Congress had not authorized the United States Trustee to act against bankruptcy abuses by requesting civil sanctions on behalf of the public.

B. The Bankruptcy Court Erroneously Construed the Statutes Defining the Scope of the United States Trustee's Powers.

In holding that the United States Trustee lacked authority to initiate a proceeding for sanctions, the Bankruptcy Court relied on the fact that pursuing sanctions is not among the United States Trustee's functions listed by 28 U.S.C. § 586 or set forth by a specific provision of the Bankruptcy Code. (Op. at 5-6). However, the bankruptcy court erred by concluding that the United States Trustee lacks authority to perform any functions not expressly mentioned in 28 U.S.C. § 586 or a specific Bankruptcy Code section.

In particular, the bankruptcy court's interpretation fails to account for section 307 of the Bankruptcy Code, which expressly authorizes the United States Trustee to raise and be heard on "any issue," except that the United States Trustee may not file a plan of reorganization. 11 U.S.C. § 307. The language of this provision is deliberately open-ended, and reflects a Congressional intent that the United States Trustee's standing is a rule, rather than the exception, in bankruptcy cases.[5] See United States Trustee v. Columbia Gas Sys., Inc. (In re Columbia Gas Sys., Inc.), 33 F.3d 294, 296 (3d Cir. 1994) (noting, with respect to section 307 of the Bankruptcy Code, that "[i]t is difficult to conceive of a statute that more clearly signifies Congress's intent to confer standing").

Furthermore, nothing in 28 U.S.C. § 586 limits the broad effect of 11 U.S.C. §307. Although 28 U.S.C. § 586 sets forth a list of examples of supervisory duties that the United States Trustee is authorized to perform, nothing in that statute limits the United States Trustee's power to perform duties other than those listed. Instead, the statute expressly authorizes the United States Trustee to assume all additional duties prescribed by titles 11 and 28, see 28 U.S.C. § 586(a)(5), including the power to "raise" issues relating to party misconduct pursuant to section 307. As a result, as every other court to have examined the issue has agreed, the structure of 28

[5] Indeed, if the bankruptcy court were correct that the United States Trustee lacks authorization to act except where expressly permitted, the exception contained within section 307 would be meaningless, since no other provision of the Bankruptcy Code generally authorizes the United States Trustee to file plans.

U.S.C. § 586 is illustrative, not exclusive. See, e.g., In re Miles, 330 B.R. 848, 849-51 (Bankr. M.D. Ga. 2004) (noting that "nothing in the Code suggests that [the list contained in 28 U.S.C. § 586] is exclusive"); In re B&B Enterprises, Inc., 100 B.R. 982, 985 (Bankr. W.D. Tenn. 1989) (noting that section 586(a)(5) is intended as a "catchall" authorizing United States Trustee to perform duties not specifically listed elsewhere).

C. The Bankruptcy Court's Decision Conflicts With More Than Two Decades of Federal Appellate Precedent.

Contrary to the bankruptcy court's analysis, the question of whether the United States Trustee may perform duties absent specific statutory authorization was settled more than two decades ago. In A-1 Trash Pickup, a case decided prior to the enactment of section 307, the Fourth Circuit was faced with the question of whether the United States Trustee had the authority to commence a proceeding to combat bankruptcy abuse (in that case, by moving to dismiss an abusive bankruptcy filing) where, at the time, no provision of the Bankruptcy Code explicitly empowered the United States Trustee to do so. The Fourth Circuit found that the United States Trustee did have such authority, stating that Congress "expected the [United States Trustee] . . . to intervene whenever particular actions threatened an abuse of the bankruptcy system or its procedures." A-1 Trash Pickup, 802 F.2d at 776.

Courts in other jurisdictions have unanimously followed the holding of A-1 Trash Pickup. Thus, in Thompson v. Greenwood, 507 F.3d 416, 420 n.3 (6th Cir. 2007), the Sixth Circuit recognized the authority of the United States Trustee to file an objection to venue, even though the United States Trustee is not specifically authorized to file such a motion by Title 28, United States Code, the Bankruptcy Code, or the Federal Rules of Bankruptcy Procedure. In Columbia Gas Systems., 33 F.3d at 295-96, the Third Circuit upheld the authority of the United States Trustee to object to a debtor's investment guidelines, rejecting the debtor's contention that the United States Trustee lacks enforcement powers except on matters where the Bankruptcy Code expressly authorizes him to intervene. Other appellate courts have also upheld the authority of the United States Trustee to file appeals despite the fact that appellate litigation is not among the functions of the United States Trustee specifically listed in 28 U.S.C. § 586. See Stanley v. McCormick (In re Donovan), 215 F.3d 929, 930 (9th Cir. 2000) (holding that United States Trustee had standing to appeal order); In re Clark, 927 F.2d 793, 796 (4th Cir. 1991) (same); In re Plaza de Diego Shopping Ctr., 911 F.2d 820, 824 (1st Cir. 1990) (same).

Additionally, courts in this circuit have upheld the authority of the United States Trustee to bring actions for disgorgement and injunctive relief, even though such proceedings are not specifically mentioned in the Bankruptcy Code. See Walton v. Watts (In re Swift), 185 B.R. 963, 970 (Bankr. N.D. Ga. 1995) (holding that "broad supervisory powers" under 28 U.S.C. § 586 authorized United States Trustee to file adversary complaint for disgorgement and injunctive relief against persons who engaged in unauthorized practice of law); Walton v. Jones (In re Shirley), 184 B.R. 613, 617 (Bankr. N.D. Ga. 1995) (noting that "ample authority exists" for the United States Trustee to file motion for sanctions and injunctive relief against party engaged in unauthorized practice of law).[6] [6] The Eleventh Circuit has not published any decision in which the issues raised by A-1 Trash Pickup were in dispute. In at least one case, however, the Eleventh Circuit has referenced the principle stated in A-1 Trash Pickup and its progeny as settled law. See also United States Trustee v. Fishback (In re Glados, Inc.), 83 F.3d 1360, 1361 n.1 (11th Cir. 1996) (noting, without discussion, that United States Trustee has standing to appeal order regarding compensation of chapter 7 trustee).

The bankruptcy court's decision not only represents a rejection of the long-settled principle stated in A-1 Trash Pickup, but would have grave consequences for the efficiency and integrity of the bankruptcy system as a whole. In order to combat abuse of the bankruptcy system, among other duties, United States Trustees regularly commence proceedings to disgorge funds improperly paid to professionals, see Quarles & Brady v. United States Trustee (In re Jennings), 199 Fed. Appx. 845 (11th Cir. 2006) (affirming order granting United States Trustee's motion for disgorgement against law firm); file motions to dismiss for improper venue, see Thompson, 507 F.3d at 420; and litigate appeals, see Glados, 83 F.3d 1360, 1361 n.1. The United States Trustee's power to take such actions, which has long been settled, rests on no greater or less statutory authority than its power to request that the bankruptcy court impose sanctions against Countrywide in the present case.

Even apart from the United States Trustee's broad authorization to combat bankruptcy abuse, the United States Trustee is authorized as an officer of the court to bring misconduct to the court's attention and to request that the court exercise its discretion to impose sanctions. See In re Gopman, 531 F.2d 262, 265 (5th Cir. 1976) (noting that whenever an officer of the court "discovers a possible ethical violation concerning a matter before the court, he is not only authorized but is in fact obligated to bring the problem to that court's attention"); In re Paradyne Corp., 803 F.2d 604, 608 n.7 (11th Cir. 1986) (same); see also Brown & Williamson Tobacco Corp. v. Daniel Int'l Corp., 563 F.2d 671, 673 (5th Cir. 1977) (holding that issue of attorney's disqualification could be raised by any other party before the court, regardless of whether that party was itself aggrieved by ethical violation).

Notwithstanding the weight of authority recognizing the United States Trustee's authority to take action to prevent an abuse of the bankruptcy process, the bankruptcy court held, without explanation or support, that only the United States Attorney is authorized to request that the court exercise its discretion to impose noncompensatory civil sanctions on behalf of the public. No other court has ever limited the sanctioning powers of federal courts in such a manner. Rather, courts regularly have affirmed sanctions orders pursuant to the court's inherent powers in proceedings initiated by parties other than the United States Attorney, including the United States Trustee. See, e.g., Methode Electronics, Inc. v. Adam Technologies, Inc., 371 F.3d 923, 928 (7th Cir. 2004) (holding that district court was "well within its authority" when it ordered noncompensatory fine, payable to clerk of court, upon motion of opposing party); Hale v. United States Trustee, 509 F.3d 1139, 1144 (9th Cir. 2007) (affirming sanction of disgorgement and monetary penalty payable to United States Trustee in proceeding initiated by United States Trustee).[7]

Accordingly, this Court should reverse the bankruptcy court's determination that the United States Trustee lacks authority under 28 U.S.C. § 586 and 11 U.S.C. § 105(a) to request civil monetary sanctions against Countrywide.

[7] In distinguishing the Hale decision, the bankruptcy court incorrectly stated that "[t]he United States Trustee's actions in Hale, in contrast to the UST's here, involved a Rule 9011 motion - a remedy not sought by, nor available to the UST here." (Op. at 8, n. 4). In fact, as the Ninth Circuit's opinion makes clear, the United States Trustee expressly sought sanctions under 11 U.S.C. § 105(a) and the court's inherent powers as well as under Bankruptcy Rule 9011. See Hale, 509 F.3d at 1143 (stating that the United States Trustee's motion "argued that sanctions were authorized under 11 U.S.C. §§ 105(a) . . . 'and the inherent authority of the court to sanction bad faith conduct'")(citations omitted). Moreover, because the Ninth Circuit eventually concluded that the requirements of Rule 9011 were not met, the sanction in Hale was ultimately analyzed and affirmed solely as an exercise of the court's inherent powers. Id. at 1148.

II. THE UNITED STATES TRUSTEE STATED A CLAIM AGAINST COUNTRYWIDE FOR NON-MONETARY RELIEF

A. The United States Trustee Alleged All Facts Necessary to Sustain His Claim for Equitable Relief Under Eleventh Circuit Law.

Under the doctrine of notice pleading set forth by Fed. R. Civ. P. 8 and Bankruptcy Rule 7008, a complaint is not required to contain "heightened fact pleading of specifics," but must set forth "only enough facts to state a claim to relief that is plausible on its face." Bell Atlantic Corp. v. Twombly, 550 U.S. 544, 127 S. Ct. 1955, 1974 (2007). In this case, the United States Trustee's claim for equitable relief satisfies the four prima facie elements of a claim for equitable relief under federal law: (1) an irreparable harm; (2) the inadequacy of any legal remedy; (3) a showing that the balance of hardships favor an equitable remedy; and (4) a showing that the public interest would not be disserved by the injunction. See eBay, Inc. v. MercExchange, 547 U.S. 388, 391 (2006) (reciting "well-established" elements of claim for equitable relief).

The United States Trustee's complaint meets the pleading requirements set forth by Twombly because it contains plausible allegations that, if proven, would entitle the United States Trustee to permanent equitable relief. First, the complaint alleges a series of specific abuses that constitute an ongoing harm to the bankruptcy system. (Compl. ¶¶ 25-28). Second, the complaint alleges that Countrywide has continued to engage in such misconduct notwithstanding the imposition of non-injunctive sanctions. (Compl. ¶¶ 30-32). As such, the complaint contains allegations sufficient to conclude that a legal remedy would be inadequate. Finally, as the bankruptcy court itself observed, the allegations of the complaint describe "reprehensible conduct by an apparently overreaching mortgage lender." (Op. at 11). Such allegations are pertinent both to the balance of the equities and to the issue of the public interest.

The Eleventh Circuit has recognized that permanent injunctive relief is available under such circumstances. In Riccard v. Prudential Ins. Co., 307 F.3d 1277 (11th Cir. 2002), a litigant filed a series of frivolous lawsuits against his former employer. Based on the trial court's finding that the litigant was unlikely to be deterred by monetary sanctions and was likely to continue his abusive conduct in the future, the Eleventh Circuit upheld an injunction requiring the litigant to obtain leave of the court before filing future lawsuits. Id. at 1295. For similar reasons, in Cofield v. Ala. Pub. Serv. Comm'n, 936 F.2d 512 (11th Cir. 1991), the Eleventh Circuit upheld in part a permanent injunction against a prisoner-litigant based upon the district court's finding that the prisoner regularly filed meritless lawsuits for the purpose of extorting settlements. Id. at 516. See also Martin-Trigona v. Shaw, 986 F.2d 1384, 1387 (11th Cir. 1993) (listing cases in which courts have upheld permanent injunctions against abusive litigants); Procup v. Strickland, 792 F.2d 1069, 1072-73 (11th Cir. 1986) (same). Accordingly, the complaint alleges "enough facts to state a claim to relief that is plausible on its face" and satisfies the pleading standard set forth by Twombly.

B. The Bankruptcy Court Erred by Requiring the United States Trustee to Demonstrate an Individualized, Imminent Injury to Himself.

The bankruptcy court applied an incorrect legal standard when it dismissed the United States Trustee's claim on the grounds that the complaint "fails to suggest a specific imminent threat of future harm," and that "[w]ithout 'continuing present adverse effects,' the injury remains 'wholly inchoate,' and the 'injury' requirement of standing is not satisfied." (Op. at 9-10). In so holding, the bankruptcy court incorrectly relied on Elend v. Basham, 471 F.3d 1199 (11th Cir. 2006), a case involving a private litigant who sought to enjoin governmental action.

The rationale and holding of Elend, however, is wholly inapplicable to a request for injunctive relief brought by the United States Trustee acting on behalf of the public interest, and the bankruptcy court's reliance on this decision was in error.

Elend arose out an attempted challenge to the establishment of a "protest zone" at a presidential rally by a political protestor, whose complaint sought permanent injunctive relief prohibiting the United States Secret Service from engaging in "any further constitutional violations." Id. at 1203. The United States moved to dismiss on the grounds, among others, that the plaintiffs lacked standing to raise claims involving the rights of other protestors at future events. The Eleventh Circuit agreed. The Eleventh Circuit noted that the issues before the court could be "distilled to a single question: whether the Plaintiffs have sufficiently alleged an imminent and concrete threat of future injury by stating their intention to protest at an unspecified, prospective event supervised by the Secret Service?" Id. at 1205. Because there was no assurance that the plaintiffs would ever suffer such an injury in the future, the Eleventh Circuit held that the requirement of standing was not met. Id.

The rationale of Elend is inapplicable to the claims of the United States Trustee. First, the United States Trustee's standing does not depend on the existence of an injury to itself, but derives from its role as the representative of the public interest in bankruptcy cases. See Glados, 83 F.3d at 1361 n.1 (11th Cir. 1996) (noting that United States Trustee is "charged by statute with the duty to oversee and supervise the administration of bankruptcy cases"); United Artists Theater Co. v. Walton, 315 F.3d 217, 225 (3d Cir. 2003) (holding that United States Trustee was not required to demonstrate pecuniary interest or injury as prerequisite to standing); Revco, 898 F.2d at 499 (holding that "public interests" provided United States Trustee with standing even in the absence of pecuniary interests).

Second, as the complaint specifically alleges, Countrywide's abuses in the Sanchez case appear to form part of a systemic pattern of misconduct that has led to substantially similar abuses in other recent cases, and if unchecked will lead to similar abuses in future cases.(Compl. at ¶¶ 30-32). Accordingly, the bankruptcy court erred when it relied on Elend for the proposition that the United States Trustee's complaint was too speculative to warrant equitable relief.

C. The Bankruptcy Court Erred by Dismissing the Complaint on the Basis of its Speculation as to the Eventual Remedy.

The bankruptcy court additionally found that the United States Trustee failed to state a claim for injunctive relief because of its speculation that the terms of the eventual injunction would lack "specificity and clear guidance" and violate Bankruptcy Rule 7065. (Op. at 9). In so ruling, however, the bankruptcy court improperly relied on facts not in evidence and considered matters beyond the scope of a motion to dismiss under Bankruptcy Rule 7012.

No proposed injunction is yet before the bankruptcy court. As courts have long recognized, "the hallmark of equity is the ability to assess all relevant facts and circumstances and tailor appropriate relief on a case by case basis." Rosario-Torres v. Hernandez-Colon, 889 F.2d 314, 321 (1st Cir. 1989). In this case, no discovery has taken place, and there has been no evidence as to why or how Countrywide's abuses in the Sanchezes' bankruptcy case occurred. Until such discovery is taken and such evidence is heard, it is impossible to predict the exact terms that an appropriate injunction might take.

Moreover, the bankruptcy court's discussion of the perceived limitation of a hypothetical remedy, rather than on the United States Trustee's right to relief, was beyond the proper scope of a Bankruptcy Rule 7012 motion to dismiss. Such a motion "properly addresses the cause of action alleged, not the remedy sought. Only when that remedy has been determined may defendants contest its application on grounds of vagueness or some other violation of Rule 65(d) of the Federal Rules of Civil Procedure." City of New York v. A-1 Jewelry & Pawn, Inc., 247 F.R.D. 296, 353 (E.D.N.Y. 2007). Accordingly, the bankruptcy court erred when it required the United States Trustee's complaint to contain a statement as to the exact equitable remedy that the bankruptcy court would impose after discovery and trial. See In re GSSI Liquidation, Inc., 355 B.R. 691, 708 (Bankr. N.D. Ill. 2006) (holding that where adversary defendants were on notice that trustee would seek relief relating to violation of automatic stay, trustee was not required to plead specific remedy that would be sought).

D. The Bankruptcy Court Erroneously Presumed that the Only Equitable Remedy Available to it was an Injunction to Obey the Law.

Even assuming that the issue of the form of equitable remedy was properly before the bankruptcy court on a motion to dismiss, the bankruptcy court further erred by presuming, without explanation, that any injunctive remedy would consist only of an injunction to simply "obey the law." (Op. at 8-9).

It is well recognized that courts have the discretion to fashion remedies against litigation abuse that go beyond mere commands to obey the law. Thus, in Riccard and Cofield, the Eleventh Circuit affirmed case-specific injunctions designed to curb litigation abuses by vexatious litigants, notwithstanding that the misconduct targeted by those injunctions was already proscribed by Rule 11 and other rules. In those cases, the court fashioned effective equitable remedies by requiring the sanctioned parties to submit to procedural safeguards not otherwise required by federal law. See Cofield, 936 F.2d at 516; Riccard, 307 F.3d at 1295.

In addition, the bankruptcy court has both inherent power and broad statutory authority to issue appropriate injunctions to prevent illegal or sanctionable conduct on a preventative basis. See 11 U.S.C. § 105(a) (affirming power of bankruptcy court to "tak[e] any action . . . to prevent an abuse of process"). As a result, bankruptcy courts have traditionally crafted a broad range of injunctive remedies, other than simple commands to obey the law, to protect the integrity of the bankruptcy process. See, e.g., Hale, 509 F.3d at 1145 (upholding order requiring attorney to sign bankruptcy petitions which he helped to prepare and to formally advise clients of his ethical obligations); In re Williams, 226 Fed. Appx. 384 (5th Cir. 2007) (upholding bankruptcy court sanctions order enjoining creditors' attorney from filing future complaints under 11 U.S.C. §§ 523 or 707 without obtaining prior leave of court); In re Dragoo, 219 B.R. 460, 467 (Bankr. N.D. Tex. 1998) (requiring attorneys to undergo additional ethics training prior to appearing in future bankruptcy cases); In re Latanowich, 207 B.R. 326, 338 (Bankr. D. Mass. 1997) (permanently enjoining creditor from attempting to enforce security interest that was subject to invalid reaffirmation agreement); In re Palumbo Family Ltd. P'ship, 182 B.R. 447, 479 (Bankr. E.D. Va. 1995) (issuing admonition against attorneys responsible for inadvertent violation of court orders and requiring attorneys to prepare report outlining corrective measures).

At the present stage of this case, it is premature to predict which, if any, of the foregoing injunctive remedies will be appropriate safeguards to dissuade Countrywide from engaging in future misconduct. Nevertheless, it was error for the bankruptcy court to conclude, without any evidence, that no such remedies will be available.

CONCLUSION

For the foregoing reasons, this Court should reverse the bankruptcy court's order dismissing the United States Trustee's adversary complaint.

FEDERAL CASES:

INTEREST OF THE UNITED STATES

The Court below held that in calculating the Debtors' disposable income on Form B22C, it was permissible for the Debtors to deduct the IRS Local Standard expense amount for vehicle financing costs even though they do not make monthly note or lease payments. Whether debtors in Chapter 13 cases may claim a deduction for vehicle financing costs under these circumstances is of substantial interest to the United States.

The Attorney General appoints United States Trustees to supervise the administration of bankruptcy cases and trustees in regions comprising the vast majority of federal judicial districts. 28 U.S.C. §§ 581-589a. United States Trustees "serve as bankruptcy watchdogs to prevent fraud, dishonesty, and overreaching in the bankruptcy arena." H.R. Rep. No. 595, 95th Cong., 1st Sess. 88 (1977). The United States Trustee Program thus "acts in the public interest to promote the efficiency and to protect and preserve the integrity of the bankruptcy system." U.S. Dep't of Justice, United States Trustee program Strategic Plan FY 2005-2010, at 2 (visited Sept. 28, 2006) <http://www.usdoj.gov/ust/eo/ust_org/StrategicPlanFY2005-2010.pdf>. United States Trustees "supervise the administration of cases and trustees" in all bankruptcy cases within their region through the exercise of a range of oversight responsibilities. 28 U.S.C. § 586(a)(3). See generally Morganstern v. Revco D.C. Inc. (In re Revco D.S., Inc.), 898 F.2d 498, 500 (6th Cir. 1990) (explaining that United States trustees oversee the bankruptcy process, protect the public interest, and ensure that bankruptcy cases are conducted according to law.). By statute, "[t]he United States trustee may raise and may appear and be heard on any issue in any case or proceeding under this Title." 11 U.S.C. § 307. See also In re Revco D.S., Inc., 898 F.2d at 499-500 (upholding broad appellate standing of United States trustees).

In this matter, the United States Trustee has two separate and distinct interests. First, the United States Trustee has the statutory duty to oversee the administration of Chapter 13 cases, which includes monitoring, and if necessary objecting to, Chapter 13 plans under 11 U.S.C. § 1324. 28 U.S.C. § 586(a)(3)(C). Second, the United States Trustee has an interest in this appeal because the issue on appeal directly implicates 11 U.S.C. § 707(b), which the United States Trustee oversees pursuant to duties set forth in 11 U.S.C. § 704(b), and under which United States Trustees regularly seek relief involving the same legal issue.[1]

The question of law involved in this appeal is not limited to the Sawdys. To the contrary, it will apply globally to thousands of debtors in a myriad of different financial circumstances who will file bankruptcy cases in this district and nationally. For this reason, the United States Trustee submits this brief as amicus in support of reversal.

[1] The same issue is on appeal before Judge Griesebach in the context of a Chapter 7 case. See In re Ross-Tousey (Neary v. Ross-Tousey), Case No. 07-C-0065. The United States Trustee is a party to that appeal.

STATEMENT OF ISSUES PRESENTED FOR REVIEW

The Chapter 13 Trustee objected to confirmation of the Debtors' modified plan on the grounds that it did not commit all of the Debtors' disposable income to the plan, as required under 11 U.S.C. § 1325(b)(1)(B). The Bankruptcy Court overruled the Chapter 13 Trustee's objection and confirmed the plan holding that the Debtors could properly claim the IRS Standard expense allowance for vehicle ownership notwithstanding that Debtors had no vehicle loan or lease payment, thereby reducing to zero the funds available to pay creditors under the plan.

Given this, the issue presented to this Court for determination is whether the court below erred by ruling as a matter of law that the Debtors could claim the IRS Standard expense allowance for vehicle financing in the calculation of their disposable income even though these Debtors had no automobile vehicle financing expense because they owned their cars debt-free.

STATUTORY FRAMEWORK & BACKGROUND

I. Statutory Framework

The Bankruptcy Abuse Prevention and Consumer Protection Act of 2005 ("BAPCPA") altered the analysis bankruptcy courts must employ when determining whether to confirm proposed Chapter 13 repayment plans. When, as here, a trustee or holder of an allowed unsecured claim objects to plan confirmation, 11 U.S.C. § 1325(b)(1) conditions plan confirmation upon the debtor committing all of his or her "projected disposable income" to payments to unsecured creditors through the Chapter 13 plan. "Disposable income" is the current monthly income received by the debtor (other than child support payments, foster care payments, or disability payments for a dependant child) less amounts reasonably necessary to be expended. 11 U.S.C. § 1325(b)(2). The term "current monthly income" is the average monthly income from all sources that the debtor receives during the six-month period ending on the last day of the calendar month immediately preceding the date of the commencement of the case, including any amount paid by a third party on a regular basis for the household expenses of the debtor or the debtor's dependents but excluding benefits received under the Social Security Act. 11 U.S.C. § 101(10A). For above-median-income debtors the "amounts reasonably necessary to be expended" are determined "in accordance with" section 707(b)(2)(A)[2] and (B), which

[2] As amended by the BAPCPA, Section 707(b)(2) repealed the former presumption in favor of the debtor, and replaced it with a new presumption: A case is an "abuse" of chapter 7 if a detailed mathematical formula set out in the statute, commonly referred to as the "means test," yields a minimum amount of monthly disposable income. The means test uses a series of calculations to determine whether the Section 707(b)(2) presumption provides various specific expense categories from which debtors may reduce "current monthly income."[3] 11 U.S.C. § 1325(b)(3).

The "means test" provisions of sections 707(b)(2)(A) and (B) are used in determining the expenses of Chapter 13 debtors, like these debtors, whose income exceeds their state's family median income. 11 U.S.C. § 1325(b)(3). In determining expenses, section 707(b)(2)(A)(ii)(I) provides that a debtor's "monthly expenses shall be the debtor's applicable monthly expense amounts specified under the National Standards and Local Standards and the debtor's actual monthly expenses for the categories specified as Other Necessary Expenses issued by the Internal Revenue Service for the area in which the debtor resides . . . ." 11 U.S.C. § 707(b)(2)(A)(ii)(I) (emphasis added).

II. Factual Background

The Debtors own two vehicles, a 1996 Ford Explorer and 1993 Ford Escort. R. 7, p. 10.[4] They own them outright; neither vehicle is encumbered by debt. Id. In their original and amended Forms B22C, Debtors claimed the IRS Standard "transportation ownership/lease expense" for both vehicles in the amounts of $471 and $332, respectively, of abuse arises in chapter 7 cases. See 11 U.S.C. § 707(b)(2)(A).

---

[3] Form B22C, which debtors must file pursuant to Interim Federal Rule of Bankruptcy Procedure 1007(b)(6), serves, in part, to calculate debtor's "current monthly income."

[4] In this brief, "R." followed by a number refers to the record on appeal set forth in docket entry #1 of the district court docket for this case.

on lines 28 and 29 of the Form B22C.[5] R. 7, p. 41; R. 9.

The Debtors' modified Chapter 13 plan proposed paying nothing to unsecured creditors. R. 10. The Chapter 13 Trustee filed an objection to confirmation of the Debtors' modified plan, claiming that the modified plan failed to provide all of the Debtors' disposable income, contrary to 11 U.S.C. §§ 1325(a)(3) and (b)(1)(B). R. 12, ¶4. The Chapter 13 Trustee argued that the Debtors had more income to devote to paying creditors because they were improperly claiming that IRS Standard expense for vehicle financing expenses even though that expense deduction was not applicable because these debtors had no a vehicle loan or lease payments. R. 12, ¶¶ 4 and 5. The trustee noted that the Debtors could pay their unsecured creditors in full by excluding that inapplicable deduction. Id.

On February 20, 2007, the United States Bankruptcy Court for the Eastern District of Wisconsin entered its decision and order overruling the Chapter 13 Trustee's objection to the Debtors' modified plan. R. 15. On February 28, 2007, the Court issued its Order confirming the Debtors' modified plan. R. 16. The Court ruled that the Debtors were entitled to reduce their disposable income by the amount of an IRS Standard expense allowance for vehicle financing costs even though they had no vehicle financing costs. On [5] These amounts are in addition to the "vehicle operation expense" for two or more vehicles of $336 taken by the Debtors on Line 27. Because the vehicles are each over six years old, the Unites States Trustee would also allow the Debtors an additional $200 operating expense per vehicle, based on the Internal Revenue Manual which allows such an additional vehicle operating expense. See Internal Revenue Manual, Part 5 (entitled Collecting Process), Chapter 8, § 5.8.5.5.2, Treatment of Non-Business Transportation Expenses, which may be found on the IRS website at http://www/irs/gov/irm/part5/ch08s05.html.

March 1, 2007, the Chapter 13 Trustee filed a timely notice of appeal of the orders dated February 20, 2007, and February 28, 2007.

ARGUMENT

The court below allowed the Debtors to reduce their current monthly income by the IRS Standard for vehicle financing costs for two vehicles, a total of $803, even though they have no monthly loan or lease payment obligation associated with their vehicles. That ruling merits reversal because it misreads 11 U.S.C. § 707(b)(2)(A)(ii)(I), deviates from longstanding Internal Revenue Service practice, and conflicts with the legislative purposes underlying the Bankruptcy Abuse Prevention and Consumer Protection Act of 2005.

I. Section 707(b)(2) of Title 11 does not allow debtors like the Sawdys, who have no monthly loan or lease payments, to claim an IRS local standard vehicle acquisition expense. That reading comports with section 707(b)(2)'s legislative purpose and draws substantial support from decisions interpreting it.

A. 11 U.S.C. § 707(b)(2) limits the IRS local standards, including the local standard referred to as vehicle ownership expense, to debtors for whom the expense is "applicable."

Section 707(b)(2)(A)(ii)(I) of the Bankruptcy Code provides that a debtor's monthly expenses "shall be the debtor's applicable monthly expense amounts specified under the . . . Local Standards . . . issued by the Internal Revenue Service." 11 U.S.C. § 707(b)(2)(A)(ii)(I) (emphasis added). The statute thus specifically provides that before the specific IRS expense amounts may be included in the debtor's allowed monthly expenses, the expense itself must first be applicable to the debtor.

The Bankruptcy Code does not define the word "applicable." Nor has the United States Trustee identified any Supreme Court decision that provides a definition. But the Seventh Circuit has made clear that "'Applicable' is a protean word that takes color from context; it lacks a single enduring meaning." Sierra Club v. Environmental Protection Agency, 375 F.3d 537, 541 (7th Cir. 2004). The dictionary defines "applicable" similarly: applying or capable of being applied; relevant; suitable; appropriate. Random House Unabridged Dictionary (2006).

The United States Trustee's construction of "applicable" in section 707(b)(2)(A)(ii)(I) comports with the Seventh Circuit's construction of the word and with its dictionary definition. By using the word "applicable" in section 707(b)(2)(A)(ii)(I), Congress limited eligibility for expenses under the Local Standards to debtors for whom the expenses actually apply. In re Devilliers, ---- B.R. ----, 2007 WL 92504, *6 (Bankr. E.D. La. January 9, 2007). Only after "a determination is made as to the type of expenses allowed and applicable to the debtor" may the debtor claim the amount set forth under the IRS Local Transportation Standards. Id.; see also In re Wiggs, ---- B.R. ----, 2006 WL 2246432, *2-3 (Bankr. N.D. Ill. 2006) (in applying Section 707(b)(2)(A)(ii)(I) in context of Section 1325, court finds that the statute is "clear and unambiguous," and that the "term 'applicable' modifies the amounts specified to limit the expenses to only those that apply," such that debtors were not allowed to include the standard ownership expense for transportation ownership when they did not have a payment on the vehicle). Accord, In re Demonica, 345 B.R. 895, 904 (Bankr. N.D. Ill. 2006).[6]

[6] Demonica is relied on by the bankruptcy court in In re Fowler, 349 B.R. 414 (Bankr. D. Del. 2006), a case that is cited by the court below. The Fowler court misconstrues In re Demonica. In fact, In re Demonica, like the In re Wiggs decision, held that a loan or lease payment was required in order to qualify for the IRS Transportation Ownership Expense Standard. The Demonica court allowed the debtor to take an expense adjustment because the debtor in that case established that he actually made payments on the vehicle at issue, even though he did not have a contractual liability on the vehicle loan. In re Demonica, 345

Given this, the court below should have refused to confirm these Debtors' plan, which proposed to pay unsecured creditors nothing. Given these debtors had no ownership or lease payments on their car, the IRS Standard expense was not applicable to them. By excluding that inapplicable expense, the creditors in this case will receive full payment of their debts. The order entered below should be reversed and this case remanded so that can happen.

B. The Internal Revenue Service's application of its own local standard for vehicle acquisition costs, and interpretive case law, support the United States Trustee's reading of 11 U.S.C. § 707(b)(2)(A)(ii)(I).

Construing the word "applicable" in the IRS Standards like the Chapter 13 trustee and the United States Trustee does draw substantial support from the Internal Revenue Service's longstanding application of the IRS Standards. When Congress developed the means test, it "could have started from scratch, and created a system that was rigid but easy to administer, such as how many view workers' compensation or social security schemes." In re Slusher, ---- B.R. ----, 2007 WL 118009, *12 (Bankr. D. Nev. January 17, 2007). Instead, Congress "incorporated into the Bankruptcy Code an existing, administrative system that the IRS had long had in place." Id. This incorporation "strongly suggests that courts should look to how the IRS determined those standards; that is, as to how the IRS would have applied them in similar circumstances." Id. at *14. Thus, "if guidance is sought on the meaning of the IRS standards Congress incorporated into the Bankruptcy Code, practical reason would suggest that court should consider the full manner by which the IRS uses these standards." Id.

Considering IRS practice in interpreting "applicable" expenses in section 707(b)(2)(A)(ii)(I) does not negate the section's later allowance of "actual" monthly expenses in the IRS categories of Other Necessary Expenses. Rather, "a natural reading" of Section 707(b)(2)(A)(ii)(I) indicates that the words "actual" and "applicable" limit the relevant expense deductions in different ways. In re Slusher, ---- B. R. ----, 2006 WL 118009 at *13. "Had Congress intended to indiscriminately allow all expense amounts specified in the National and Local Standards, it would have written section 707(b)(2)(A)(ii)(I) to read, 'The debtor's monthly expenses shall be the monthly amounts specified under the National Standards and Local Standards . . .' rather than 'The debtor's monthly expenses shall be the debtor's applicable monthly expenses amounts specified under the National and Local Standards.'" In re Slusher, 2007 WL 118009, *13 (Bankr. D. Nev. January 17, 2007) (emphasis in original). Given the IRS' historic application of its National Standards and Local Standards up to the time of BAPCPA's enactment, "it would be quite odd if Congress intended to preclude courts from examining the context in which the authoring agency, the IRS, used and employed those standards." Id. Nothing compels such an odd reading, and the court below erred by interpreting the term contrary to the IRS.

The IRS' construction fully supports the United States Trustee's construction of the term applicable. On page two of its Collection Financial Standards under the heading "Transportation" the IRS provides as follows:

> The transportation standards consist of nationwide figures for monthly loan > or lease payments referred to as ownership costs, and additional amounts for monthly operating costs . . . . The ownership costs provide maximum allowances for the lease or purchase of up to two automobiles if allowed as a necessary expense . . . . If a taxpayer has a car payment, the allowable ownership cost added to the allowable operating cost equals the allowable transportation expense. If a taxpayer has no car payment, or no car, the operating costs portion of the transportation standard is used to come up with the allowable transportation expense.

See IRS Collection Standards (emphasis added), available at ww.irs.gov/individuals /article/0,,id=96543,00.html; see also Internal Revenue Manual, Financial Analysis Handbook, Pt. 5, ch. 15, § 5.15.1.7(4.B), available at www.irs.gov/irm/part5/ch15s01.html.

Thus, according to the IRS, if the debtor does not have a loan or lease payment obligation, then the Local Standard referred to as vehicle ownership deduction is not "applicable." If the debtor's vehicle is subject to a monthly loan or lease payment obligation, however, then in addition to the vehicle "operating cost" expense, the "ownership cost" is also "applicable" and shall be the dollar amount specified by the IRS. This application of the statute is supported by significant bankruptcy court authority. See In re Barraza, 346 B.R. 724, 728-29 (Bankr. N.D. Tex. 2006) (debtor not entitled to standard ownership allowance for vehicle without a loan or lease payment); In re McGuire, 342 B.R. 608, 613-14 (Bankr. W.D. Mo. 2006) (chapter 13 debtors not permitted standard ownership allowance for vehicle owned free and clear of liens); In re Ceasar, ---- B.R. ----, 2007 WL 777821, *5 (Bankr.W.D. La Mar. 6, 2007) (following McGuire, and noting that cases holding to the contrary place "undue emphasis [on] the term 'shall' in Section 707(b)(2)(A)(ii)(I)"). See also, In re Harris, 353 B.R. 304, 307-309 (Bankr. E.D. Okla. 2006); In re Hardacre, 338 B.R.

718, 723-24 (Bankr N.D. Tex. 2006); In re Oliver, 350 B.R. 294, 301 (Bankr. W.D. Tex. 2006); In re Wiggs, ---- B.R. ----, 2006 WL 2246432, at *2-3 (Bankr. N.D. Ill. August 4, 2006); In re Carlin, 348 B.R. 795 (Bankr. D. Or. 2006); but see In re Fowler, 349 B.R. 414 (Bankr. D. Del. 2006) (debtors may deduct ownership expenses for a vehicle for which they do not make car payments); In re Haley, 354 B.R. 340 (Bankr. D. N.H. October 18, 2006) (same); In re Farrar-Johnson, 353 B.R. 224 (Bankr. N.D. Ill. 2006) (debtors entitled to deduct IRS Local Standard for housing even though they had no actual housing expense); In re Zak, 2007 WL 143065 (Bankr. N.D. Ohio January 12, 2007).

In addition to the IRS Collection Financial Standards themselves, the IRS also publishes guidelines, including the Internal Revenue Manual. Those support a reading of Section 707(b)(2)(A)(ii)(I) that requires debtors to have an actual loan or lease payment obligation on a vehicle before the Local Standard referred to as ownership expense "applies." Recent revisions to the Collection Financial Standards also make clear that the "ownership cost" is calculated by the IRS based on the "five-year average of new and used car financing data compiled by the Federal Reserve Board of Governors." See IRS Collection Financial Standards, supra (emphasis added). As such, the "ownership cost" is intended to account for the reasonable expense of financing a vehicle over five years and is inapplicable if a debtor has no such acquisition financing expense. See In re Devilliers, 2007 WL 92504, *10 (Bankr. E.D. La. Jan. 9, 2007) (The ownership allowance "is not the equivalent of an allowance for depreciation or an invitation for a debtor to 'save' for the ultimate replacement of an existing vehicle. Instead, the deduction is designed to assist with the acquisition of a vehicle on credit.").

Accordingly, guidance in applying its expense standards published by the IRS makes clear that the vehicle "ownership cost" portion of the Local Transportation Standards is intended to apply only in situations where the debtor has a monthly vehicle acquisition financing expense, i.e., has a monthly vehicle lease or loan payment. Cf. McGuire, 342 B.R. at 613 ("Thus, if a debtor is not incurring expenses for the purchase or lease of a vehicle, the debtor cannot claim a vehicle ownership expense under the IRS standards.") "Because the Local Standards are issued by the IRS, it is instructive to refer to publications of that organization for guidance as to the types of 'debt payments' that can reduce allowances under the Local Standards." Hardacre, 338 B.R. at 726.

Finally, the court below refused to accept the IRS' longstanding interpretation of its own standard because an unenacted 1998 predecessor to BAPCPA, H.R. 3150, included a specific reference to the IRS' financial analysis handbook, which is not found in BAPCPA. However, that is not significant given that the IRS' Financial Analysis Handbook "has been expressly adopted by Congress in Section 707(b)(2)(A)(ii)." In re Lenton, 358 B.R. 651, 658 n.15 (Bankr. E.D. Pa. 2006). To the extent the statute is not clear, BAPCPA's legislative history clarifies that "the debtor's monthly expenses--exclusive of any payments for debts (unless otherwise permitted)--must be the applicable monthly amounts set forth in the Internal Revenue Service Financial Analysis Handbook." Id. (quoting H.R. Rep. 109-31(I), at 13-14, as reprinted in 2005 U.S.C.C.A.N. 88, 100).

Moreover, the wording of the 1998 draft language highlighted by the Court below is not so markedly different as to evidence any special congressional intent to eliminate use of the IRS' application of its own expense standards. It is equally likely that the change in phrasing from "expense allowances under the applicable Local Standards as determined under the Internal Revenue Service financial analysis" in 1998 "to the debtor's applicable monthly expense amounts specified under the Local Standards" in 2005 merely restates the same methodology in a more summary fashion. The court's reliance on legislative history from a predecessor of BAPCPA is misplaced and should be rejected.

II. The bankruptcy court's interpretation of the vehicle ownership expense is contrary to the major goals of BAPCPA.

The Chapter 13 Trustee's and the United States Trustee's reading comports with the congressional policies underlying BAPCPA's enactment. Congress enacted BAPCPA to rectify perceived abuses in the bankruptcy process. "Among the abuses identified by Congress was the easy access to chapter 7 liquidation proceedings by consumer debtors who, if required to file under chapter 13, could afford to pay some dividend to their unsecured creditors." 151 Cong. Rec. S2459, 2469-70 (March 10, 2005); Hardacre, at 720. See also, e.g., Owner-Operator Independent Driver's Ass'n, Inc. v. New Prime, Inc., 192 F.3d 778, 785 (8th Cir. 1999) (while court's principal focus must be on the language of the relevant statute, court cannot ignore the broader perspective and may use legislative history to confirm most plausible construction of statute) (citing Wisconsin Public Intervenor v. Mortier, 501 U.S. 597, 610 (1991)).

Section 1325(b)(1)(B) requires that the above-median-income debtor's plan commit "all of the debtor's projected disposable income to be received in the applicable commitment period . . . to make payments to unsecured creditors under the plan." By authorizing every debtor who owns a car to take the vehicle financing expense deduction, in addition to the operating expense allowance, regardless of whether the debtors actually incur monthly vehicle acquisition finance expenses,[7] the bankruptcy court allowed these Debtors to reduce their monthly disposable income by a total of $803. By so ruling, this amount can be used indiscriminately by Debtors rather than to pay creditors. Instead of furthering BAPCPA's goal of providing that disposable income be paid to unsecured creditors, the Court's determination turns the BAPCPA on its head, and creates for the Debtors the very "slush fund" the Court said it was opposed to providing. In re Sawdy, ---- B.R. ----, 2007 WL 582535, *9 (Bankr. E.D. Wis. 2007).

Finally, the approach supported by the United States Trustee neither punishes those debtors who own vehicles without a current car payment, and thus cannot take the financing expense deduction, nor rewards those debtors who have only one or several payments left on their vehicle loan at the time of filing and thus are eligible to take the vehicle financing expense deduction on Form B22C. For cases involving the former, debtors may modify their plan under 11 U.S.C. § 1329 to account for the additional vehicle financing expense when such an expense is actually incurred. For cases involving the latter, the change in financial circumstances may be examined by the court pre-confirmation with an appropriate adjustment made to the debtor's projected disposable income that is required to be committed to the plan, or post-confirmation through a plan modification. See In re Jass, 340 B.R. 411, 418-19 (Bankr. D. Utah 2006) (calculation of projected disposable income when changed circumstances exist); In re Nowlin, ---- B.R. ----, 2007 WL 1095449 (Bankr. S.D. Tex. Apr. 11, 2007) (when an event will occur that "will significantly alter the amount of [debtor's] disposible income . . . under Section 1325(b)[, the debtor's] plan must account for this change in circumstances); In re Devilliers, 2007 WL 92504 at *10 (trustee may challenge vehicle expenses under Section 1329 if actual expenses differ substantially from standard deduction) .

CONCLUSION

For these reasons, the United States Trustee respectfully asks this Court to reverse the orders entered below.

v.

GERALD ANTHONY SMITH, Debtor;
RICHARD CLIPPARD, United States Trustee,

Appellees.

ON APPEAL FROM THE UNITED STATES DISTRICT COURT FOR THE WESTERN DISTRICT OF KENTUCKY

PROOF BRIEF FOR THE APPELLEE

STATEMENT OF SUBJECT MATTER AND APPELLATE JURISDICTION

This appeal arises from the Chapter 7 bankruptcy of Gerald Anthony Smith. The bankruptcy court had jurisdiction over the bankruptcy proceeding under 28 U.S.C. §§ 157 and 1334.

The bankruptcy court denied fees to the Law Firm of J. Baxter Schilling, counsel to J. Baxter Schilling, Esq., who was the Chapter 7 trustee in Mr. Smith's case. The bankruptcy court entered its final order denying fees and ordering the disgorgement of interim fees on December 6, 2002.

Mr. Schilling appealed to the district court, which had jurisdiction under 28 U.S.C. § 158(a). The district court affirmed the decision of the bankruptcy court in a final judgment entered on August 6, 2003. On October 3, Mr. Schilling filed a timely notice of appeal to this Court. See Fed. R. App. P. 4(a)(1). This Court has jurisdiction under 28 U.S.C. § 158(d).

STATEMENT OF THE ISSUE PRESENTED FOR REVIEW

Whether the bankruptcy court abused its discretion when it ordered the disgorgement of the fees paid to counsel for the trustee in bankruptcy.

STATEMENT OF THE CASE

This case is an appeal from an order of the district court, affirming the bankruptcy court's determination that the Law Firm of J. Baxter Schilling (whose sole member is J. Baxter Schilling, Esq.) should disgorge fees it received from acting as counsel to J. Baxter Schilling, debtor Gerald Smith's Chapter 7 Trustee. The bankruptcy court found, and the district court agreed, that Mr. Schilling's law firm was not “disinterested” within the meaning of 11 U.S.C. § 327(a), and that it therefore was ineligible to receive fees under the Bankruptcy Code.

FACTS AND PRIOR PROCEEDINGS

A. Statutes Principally At Issue.

i. The Appointment and Compensation of Professionals.

This appeal involves the provisions of the Bankruptcy Code that apply when the trustee in a Chapter 7 debt liquidation bankruptcy case employs legal counsel on behalf of the bankruptcy estate.

Several Code provisions work together to ensure that professionals who assist the bankruptcy trustee have certain characteristics that allow them to loyally perform their fiduciary obligations. First, the Code does not authorize the trustee to retain a professional at all unless that professional does not “hold or represent an interest adverse to the estate.” 11 U.S.C. § 327(a). A professional must also be a “disinterested person[]” to be eligible to serve the estate. Ibid. A disinterested person does not have “an interest materially adverse to the interest of the estate or of any class of creditors * * * by reason of any direct or indirect relationship to, connection with, or interest in, the debtor * * * or for any other reason.” 11 U.S.C. § 101(14)(E). The Code expressly provides that the bankruptcy court “may authorize the trustee to act as attorney or accountant for the estate if such authorization is in the best interest of the estate." Id., § 327(d). In addition, and independently of any particular provisions of the Code, bankruptcy professionals are fiduciaries who owe fiduciary obligations to those whose interests they serve. See United States v. Schilling (In re Big Rivers Electric Corp.), 355 F.3d 415, 433 (6th Cir. 2004) (explaining that Congress in enacting the Bankruptcy Code "legislated against the backdrop of centuries of common-law decisions about the duties of trustees and other fiduciaries").

As well as requiring professionals to meet certain criteria of disinterestedness to be eligible for appointment, the Code also gives the bankruptcy courts broad authority over professionals' compensation. The Code generally authorizes professionals to be compensated "on any reasonable terms and conditions of employment" (11 U.S.C. § 328(a)), and to receive "reasonable compensation for actual, necessary services" and "reimbursement for actual, necessary expenses." Id., § 330(a)(1). The Code, however, also authorizes a court to "deny allowance of compensation for services and reimbursement of expenses * * * if, at any time during such professional person's employment" authorized by the Bankruptcy Code, "such professional person is not a disinterested person, or represents or holds an interest adverse to the interest of the estate * * *." Id., § 328(c).

In addition to authorizing the denial of all professional compensation, the Code also allows bankruptcy courts to "award compensation that is less than the amount" sought by the professional for his services. 11 U.S.C. § 330(a)(2). The Code further safeguards fee determinations by providing that professional compensation requests are subject to "notice to the parties in interest and the United States Trustee and a hearing" and that compensation must be awarded consistently with the requirements of Section 327, including the requirement of disinterestedness.[1] Finally, as part of the United States Trustees' oversight obligations, the Bankruptcy Code gives United States Trustees responsibility for "monitoring applications filed under section 327 of title 11 and, whenever the United States trustee deems it to be appropriate, filing with the court comments with respect to the approval of such applications." 28 U.S.C. § 586(a)(3)(H).[2]

[1] A professional may apply for interim fees. See 11 U.S.C. § 331 (authorizing an award of interim fees "[a]fter notice and a hearing"). Interim fees are treated as an advanced portion of the final award under Section 330. See id., § 330(a)(5) ("The court shall reduce the amount of compensation awarded under this section by the amount of any interim compensation awarded under section 331, and, if the amount of such interim compensation exceeds the amount of compensation awarded under this section, may order the return of the excess to the estate").

[2] Congress has authorized the Attorney General to appoint twenty-one United States Trustees ("U.S. Trustees"), each to serve in a specific geographic region of the United States. See generally 28 U.S.C. § 581 et seq. (establishing U.S. Trustee Program). The U.S. Trustee must "supervise the administration of cases and trustees"

ii. Chapter 7 Bankruptcy.

In a Chapter 7 bankruptcy, the debtor's assets are collected, liquidated and distributed according to priorities established by the Bankruptcy Code. See generally 11 U.S.C. §701-728. When an individual debtor files a voluntary Chapter 7 petition, that filing constitutes an "order for relief" under Chapter 7 (see 11 U.S.C. § 301), creates a bankruptcy estate, and triggers the automatic stay (see id., § 362(a)), thus protecting the debtor and the estates from further collection activity.

After the order for relief, the United States Trustee appoints an interim trustee to administer the case. See id., § 701. The debtor files schedules showing his financial assets and obligations, and may claim certain property as exempt from distribution under 11 U.S.C. § 522(b). The bankruptcy court sends notice of the case to the creditors, including notification of the deadline for filing proofs of claim. Collier On Bankruptcy, § 700.03, 700-3 (15th Ed. Rev. 2002 ed). A meeting of the creditors is held (see 11 U.S.C. § 341(a)), and if the creditors do not themselves elect in all bankruptcy cases within his or her region through a range of oversight responsibilities. 28 U.S.C. § 586(a)(3). The U.S. Trustee's responsibilities include monitoring bankruptcy court filings, such as plans and disclosure statements, monitoring creditors' committees and the progress of bankruptcy cases, and bringing to the attention of the United States Attorneys any possible criminal activity occurring in the bankruptcy context. Id., § 586(a)(3)(B), (C), (E), (F).

a trustee, then the interim trustee becomes the permanent trustee. See 11 U.S.C.§ 703(d).

The Bankruptcy Code requires the trustee to gather the assets of the estate, convert them to cash, and distribute them to creditors under the priority scheme established by Section 726. See Collier, supra, at 700-4. Secured creditors are "paid in satisfaction of their liens on property that has been liquidated to the extent of their interests in such property." Ibid. Unsecured creditors are generally paid in the order established under Section 507(a) of the Code. When the estate has been liquidated, the debtor is granted his discharge. See 11 U.S.C. § 727.

The Bankruptcy Code also explains how the Chapter 7 bankruptcy trustee's fee is generally to be calculated (see 11 U.S.C. § 330, discussed supra at 4-5), and imposes an upper limit upon the amount of that fee. A Chapter 7 trustee is eligible to be compensated up to a certain percentage of "all moneys disbursed or turned over in the case by the trustee to parties in interest * * *." Id., § 326(a). Significantly for this case, however, money turned over to the debtor is excluded from the amount of disbursement used to calculate the cap upon the trustee's fees. Ibid. Thus, a trustee who turns over substantial sums to the debtor will be eligible for a smaller maximum fee than a trustee who distributes the estate to parties other than the debtor.

B. Facts and District Court Proceedings.

i. The Initial Bankruptcy Proceedings.

In February, 2001, Gerald Anthony Smith filed a voluntary petition for bankruptcy under Chapter 7 of the Bankruptcy Code. R. 73 (Bankr. Ct. Op. ("Op.") at 1). The next day, J. Baxter Schilling ("Mr. Schilling") was appointed interim trustee. Ibid. Mr. Schilling secured the appointment of his law firm, the Law Firm of J. Baxter Schilling (of which he is the sole member), to represent the trustee. Ibid.

Mr. Schilling informed the bankruptcy court after the creditors' meeting that there were assets in the estate for distribution. R. 73, Op. at 2. Accordingly, the bankruptcy court notified the debtor and creditors in March, 2001 of the "bar date," the deadline for filing proofs of claim, and of the deadline for filing objections to the debtor's discharge. Ibid. One creditor, MBNA America Bank NA, filed a timely claim before the bar date. Ibid.

ii. The First Fee Request.

In October 2001, Mr. Schilling timely filed a complaint against the debtor, Mr. Smith, objecting to the debtor's discharge. R. 73, Op. at 2. In November, he filed his first request for attorneys' fees, seeking approximately $16,500 in fees and $300 in expenses. Id. at 3. The debtor objected to the fees as excessive, and the bankruptcy court awarded Mr. Schilling the full amount of his expenses but $1,743.64 less in fees – representing ten hours of work – than Mr. Schilling had requested. See ibid. The court disallowed the fees "because the Trustee spent excessive amounts of time researching" an issue that was "not novel to an experienced bankruptcy trustee." R. 73, Op. 8.

iii. The Adversary Proceeding And Settlement.

In February 2002, Mr. Schilling filed an adversary proceeding against Mr. Smith's brother, Robert Smith, alleging that the debtor's transfer of a mortgage to his brother should be set aside as a fraudulent transfer. R. 73, Op. 2. After negotiations with the debtor and his counsel, the parties agreed to settle all issues in the bankruptcy case for a payment of $50,000 from Mr. Smith, the debtor, into the bankruptcy estate.

Mr. Schilling assumed sole responsibility for drafting the settlement agreement. R. 66, U.S. Trustee's Report at 3. The settlement agreement provided, among other things, that neither the debtor nor his brother would have standing to object to the allowance of claims against the estate. It also provided that the $50,000 settlement amount, as well as previous payments from the debtor to the estate, were "non-exempt assets of the estate which will be used to pay administrative and unsecured claims of the estate," excluding any payments to the debtor himself. R. 56, para 4.

In addition, the settlement agreement included a non-negotiated provision relating to Mr. Schilling's fees as attorney. See R. 66, U.S. Trustee's Report at 3 (explaining that both parties agreed that Mr. Schilling's fees were not a topic of the settlement negotiations). The fee provision provided that Mr. Schilling would "request in his final fee application that the Court reconsider the disallowance of attorney fees for the ten (10) hours which were billed" to the estate, but disallowed by the bankruptcy court in response to Mr. Smith's objection. R. 56, para 5. The settlement agreement further provided that "[t]he Debtor shall support the aforestated application." Ibid.

Mr. Smith's lawyer, Jan Morris, first saw the fee provision when Mr. Schilling faxed him the settlement agreement for signature. Mr. Morris later explained to the United States Trustee that although "he was annoyed by the insertion of the provision," he "did not object to it since he thought it would not impact his client financially." R. 66, U.S. Trustee's Report at 3.

Mr. Schilling filed in the bankruptcy court a motion to approve the settlement agreement. R. 73, Op. at 2. No objections were filed, and the bankruptcy court approved the settlement on April 8, 2002. Ibid.

iv. The Second Fee Request.

In May 2002, Mr. Schilling submitted a second request for attorneys' fees, seeking approximately $10,300 in fees and $136 in expenses. R. 73, Op. 3; see also R. 33 (fee application). Among other things, Mr. Schilling asked the bankruptcy court to revisit the issue of his previously disallowed fees. Ibid. Mr. Schilling pointed out to the bankruptcy court that the settlement agreement included a provision expressly addressing the fees disallowed after the first fee application. Ibid.

Indeed, Mr. Schilling represented that "[t]he only objection to the prior attorney fee application was by the debtor, and pursuant to the settlement agreement filed in this case, and approved by the Court, the debtor has agreed to support the efforts of the Trustee to have this Court reconsider, and award, the previously disallowed $1743.64 in interim fees to Trustee's counsel." Ibid. (quoting Mr. Schilling's fee request).

Mr. Schilling also justified his fee request on the ground that the distribution to creditors would be "100% of the allowed timely filed claims, and a substantial percentage to all tardily filed claims." R. 33, p.3. At the time, there were no tardily filed claims, and MBNA's claim was the sole allowed timely claim. Mr. Schilling nonetheless told the bankruptcy court that "Trustee's counsel should be fully compensated for his legal services which provided this 100% distribution." Ibid.

Later, in June 2002, about a year after the bar date, Mr. Schilling filed seven proofs of claim on behalf of creditors listed on the debtor's schedules.

No objections were filed to the fee request. R. 73, Op. 3. The bankruptcy court, however, directed the United States Trustee to assess whether it was proper for the Trustee to include a provision regarding his fees in an agreement settling disputes over the assets of the estate. Ibid. The United States Trustee accordingly prepared his report recommending that the bankruptcy court disallow Mr. Schilling's fees, primarily because Mr. Schilling had filed the tardy claims not to benefit the creditors, but to justify his fee request. R. 66.

v. The Bankruptcy Court's September 2002 Opinion and Order.

On September 17, 2002, the bankruptcy court granted Mr. Schilling's fee request in part and explained why the remaining fees should be disallowed. R 73. The court warned that a trustee's decision to act as his own counsel should be treated with caution because "where the trustee uses his legal services to pursue [estate] assets while getting paid his/her counsel fees from the assets of the estate, the potential for overreaching and self-interest through pursuit of litigation is much greater than for the trustee who does not employ himself." R. 73, Op. 6. The bankruptcy court also pointed out that if it allowed the tardily filed claims and granted in full both Mr. Schilling's request for attorney's fees totaling $25,143 and his proposed request for a trustee's commission of $8,034.79,[3] then "the Trustee and his counsel would receive 46.15% of the total assets disbursed." Id. at 5-6.

Reviewing the facts and the United States Trustee's Report, the bankruptcy court held that Mr. Schilling "overreached and acted in his own self-interest during the course of preparing and tendering the executed Settlement Agreement to the Court and filing the Tardy Trustee Claims." R 73, Op. 7. The court explained that Mr. Schilling's "use of the Settlement Agreement requiring the Debtor to support the Trustee's motion for attorney fees, including reconsideration of previously disallowed fees, evidences his self-interest in the outcome of the litigation and in the estate itself." Id. at 8. It concluded that "[t]he act of enlisting an agreement which has no purpose other than to inappropriately influence this Court's evaluation of the requested fees and which solely serves the self-interest of the Trustee is against public policy, constitutes overreaching and is insupportable." Ibid. Indeed, the court could see the fee agreement as nothing but "direct evidence of the Trustee's self-interest in his Trustee's attorney fees rather than the estate." Ibid.

[3] The commission of a trustee may be calculated as a percentage of disbursements from the estate, less disbursements to the debtor. See 11 U.S.C. § 326(a).

The bankruptcy court also held that Mr. Schilling had acted improperly in including in the settlement agreement the provision depriving the debtor of standing to contest claims filed against the estate. R 73, Op. at 9. It determined that Mr. Schilling had erred in filing creditor claims long after the bar date when he had a duty to oppose procedurally improper claims. Ibid. Finally, the court concluded that "the Trustee overreached when he attempted to or believed he had the Debtor's waiver of a distribution from the estate." Id. at 10. Pointing out that the debtor has a statutory right to a distribution from the estate if there is a surplus after all claims are paid, the court held that "[n]o legitimate estate purpose could be served by a trustee seeking a debtor's waiver of a right to participate in a distribution of the surplus." Ibid.

Based upon these multiple findings of misconduct, the bankruptcy court held that "the Trustee and Trustee's counsel hold an interest adverse to the estate and are not disinterested persons pursuant to 11 U.S.C. § 327(a)." R. 73, Op. 11.

Exercising its authority under 11 U.S.C. § 330 to award an amount of fees lower than Mr. Schilling's request, the bankruptcy court performed a lodestar analysis to calculate an appropriate fee. R. 73, Op. 12. First, the court determined that Mr. Schilling had failed to supply any evidentiary justification for his contention that the prevailing rate in Kentucky for bankruptcy work was $205 per hour in 2001 and $210 per hour in 2002. Ibid. Instead, the bankruptcy court relied upon its own experience of bankruptcy fee requests and determined that an appropriate rate was $150 per hour.

Next, the bankruptcy court calculated how many of hours of legal work should properly be compensated from the funds of the estate. R. 73, Op. 13. The court carefully reviewed each of Mr. Schilling's time entries. Ibid. It disallowed the fees charged for preparing the settlement agreement because "the Settlement Agreement has been found to evidence the Trustee's counsel's lack of disinterestedness" and, for the same reason, held that "all fees thereafter[] are disallowed in their entirety." Ibid. Next, after identifying specific instances of charges for excessive time spent upon discovery in the fraudulent conveyance proceeding, legal research and the preparation of fee applications, the court disallowed a total of 13.8 of the 41 hours for which Mr. Schilling sought compensation. Id. at 14-15.

In calculating a reasonable rate of compensation for the 27.3 allowable hours of work by Mr. Schilling, the bankruptcy court determined after "considering the matter at great length" that "a substantial downward adjustment of the lodestar analysis" would be necessary to take account of Mr. Schilling's misconduct. R. 73, Op. 15. As the court explained, the "only mitigating factor in the Trustee's favor" was his collection of substantial assets for the estate. Ibid. Balancing Mr. Schilling's misconduct against his substantial work on the case, the court applied a 50% downward adjustment to the lodestar amount to reach a final award of $2,047.50 in fees. Ibid. In addition, the court allowed Mr. Schilling's claim for expenses in full.

vi. The Bankruptcy Court's December 2002 Opinion.

In December 2002, the bankruptcy court amended its order in response to the United States Trustee's motion explaining that the court's findings that "the employment of Trustee's counsel was not in the best interest of the estate, that he held an interest adverse to the estate and that he was not disinterested" required a denial of all compensation. R. 80, Op 2 at 1. Relying upon Mapother & Mapother, P.S.C. v. Cooper (In re Downs), 103 F.3d 472, 479 (6th Cir. 1996), the bankruptcy court acknowledged that when a fee claimant exhibits a "callous disregard" for his fiduciary duties, it may be "an abuse of discretion for the Bankruptcy Court to allow the claimant to retain any fees." Id. at 3.

The bankruptcy court next found that Mr. Schilling's conduct "demonstrate[s] 'callous disregard' for [his] duties." R. 80, Op 2 at 3. It concluded that it would be an abuse of discretion to allow Mr. Schilling to retain any of his fees. Ibid. Rather, "[t]otal denial of the fees requested and previously allowed is a sanction commensurate with the egregiousness of the conduct set forth in the Court's prior factual findings." Ibid.

vii. The District Court's Opinion.

On Mr. Schilling's appeal to the district court (R. 85), the district court affirmed the bankruptcy court's judgment denying fees. The district court pointed out that"by procuring [debtor] Smith's support for his fee application, Schilling effectively silenced all objections to his fees, and then attempted to use the agreement to gain approval of his renewed fee application." R. 85, Op. at 6. The district court accordingly expressly agreed with the bankruptcy court's finding that the settlement agreement itself is "'direct evidence of the Trustee's self-interest * * *.'" Id. at 7 (quoting the opinion of the bankruptcy court). It also affirmed the bankruptcy court's determination that Schilling had breached his duty to the estate when he filed untimely claims against the estate. Id. at 9. The district court concluded that "[h]aving determined that Schilling was not disinterested, the bankruptcy court did not err in failing to approve his fee application." Ibid.

STATEMENT OF THE STANDARD OF REVIEW

In this appeal from a judgment of the district court, exercising its appellate jurisdiction over a judgment of the bankruptcy court, this Court reviews "directly the decision of the bankruptcy court." Brady-Morris v. Schilling (in re Kenneth Allen Knight Trust), 303 F.3d 671, 676 (6th Cir. 2002).

This Court reviews fee awards in bankruptcy for abuse of discretion. United States v. Schilling (In re Big Rivers Electric Corp.), 355 F.3d 415, 429 (6th Cir. 2004). In ascertaining whether the bankruptcy court abused its discretion, this Court will "adopt the [bankruptcy] court's underlying factual findings unless clearly erroneous" and will "review [the court's] underlying construction of the Bankruptcy Code de novo." Ibid.

SUMMARY OF THE ARGUMENT

This Court recently confirmed in United States v. Schilling (In re Big Rivers Electric Corp.), 355 F.3d 415, 429 (6th Cir. 2004), that bankruptcy professionals must exercise their fiduciary obligations with great loyalty to the entities they represent. Moreover, strict compliance with that obligation of fiduciary loyalty is a condition of receiving professional compensation under the Bankruptcy Code. As this Court pointed out, compensation simply is not "reasonable" within the meaning of 11 U.S.C. § 330 unless it represents payment for "'loyal and disinterested service in the interest of those for whom the claimant purported to act.'" Big Rivers, 355 F.3d 432.

Here, the bankruptcy court found that Mr. Schilling was not a proper person to receive fees under the Bankruptcy Code for two reasons; first, he was not a disinterested person as required by the Code, and second, he had acted in violation of his fiduciary obligations. The bankruptcy court therefore denied Mr. Schilling's fee request in full. The bankruptcy court's factual findings regarding Mr. Schilling's self-interested conduct were not clearly erroneous. Moreover, the court did not abuse its discretion when it held that a complete denial of fees was appropriate in light of those facts.

1. The bankruptcy court's finding that Mr. Schilling acted in his own self-interest when he inserted the fee provision into the settlement agreement between the debtor and the bankruptcy estate is fully supported by the facts. The fee provision, which provided that the debtor would support Mr. Schilling's request for reconsideration not only of the previously-disallowed fees, but future fee requests as well, obviously benefitted nobody but Mr. Schilling himself. Moreover, Mr. Schilling in the fee provision asserted a personal right to property of the bankruptcy estate by seeking an award of fees that the court had already held were not properly payable and should be retained by the estate. The bankruptcy court therefore did not err in holding that the fee provision was clear evidence that Mr. Schilling acted in self-interest, rather than as a fiduciary.

2. The bankruptcy court's two other findings of misconduct are also fully supported by the undisputed facts in the record. First, both the record evidence and Mr. Schilling's arguments in the bankruptcy court and this Court show that Mr. Schilling overreached when he sought to force the bankruptcy court to award him fees that had previously been disallowed. Mr. Schilling argues in this Court that the bankruptcy court was legally required to award him the previously disallowed fees because the court had granted Mr. Schilling's unopposed motion to approve the settlement agreement contemplating the award of those fees. In Mr. Schilling's view, when the bankruptcy court approved the settlement agreement, the agreement and each of its terms represented the court's "adjudication" of factual disputes and established the "law of the case" on legal matters. Under the circumstances, Mr. Schilling argues, the bankruptcy court was bound by the terms of the settlement agreement, including the agreement to reconsider and award the disallowed fees.

As the bankruptcy court held, however, not only is Mr. Schilling's view that a court's approval of a settlement agreement precludes it from adjudicating disputes implicating the terms of the settlement agreement mistaken, but both that view and Mr. Schilling's conduct violate a bankruptcy trustee's obligations of candor to the court. The bankruptcy court found that Mr. Schilling acted improperly when he sought to evade meaningful inquiry into his fee request by representing that the court had already ruled that it would reconsider and award the disallowed fees and by barring the debtor from objecting to the fee request. The bankruptcy court's finding of misconduct is fully supported by the record and it is not clearly erroneous.

Second, the bankruptcy court's finding that Mr. Schilling acted improperly in filing claims on behalf of creditors long after the bar date is not clearly erroneous. Although a trustee's decision to file tardy creditor claims is not necessarily a breach of the trustee's fiduciary obligations, nonetheless the Bankruptcy Code does not provide for the payment of late-filed claims fled by the trustee on behalf of creditors if other parties in interest object. Here, the settlement agreement waived the debtor's right to file further objections to claims against the estate. Moreover, the late-filed claims effectively cut out the debtor from sharing in the distribution of the estate's surplus funds and had the immediate and direct result of both increasing the potential amount of the trustee's fee (see 11 U.S.C. § 326(a) (capping the trustee's fee at a percentage of moneys disbursed to parties other than the debtor)) and producing a greater distribution that might justify a more substantial award of attorneys' fees. The bankruptcy court therefor did not err in finding that under the facts of this case, the trustee filed the late claims not as a fiduciary, but rather, in breach of his fiduciary duties.

3. In light of its findings that Mr. Schilling was not disinterested and that he breached his fiduciary obligations when he acted in his own self-interest, rather than in the interests of the estate, the bankruptcy court did not abuse its discretion in denying Mr. Schilling all fees in the Smith Chapter 7 bankruptcy. On the contrary, when a bankruptcy professional is not disinterested and violates his fiduciary duty, the court must deny compensation under the Bankruptcy Code. The bankruptcy court therefore did not abuse its discretion in applying that principle here.

ARGUMENT

I. The Bankruptcy Properly Exercised Its Discretion In Denying Mr. Schilling's Request For Fees Because Mr. Schilling Was Not A Disinterested Person, As The Bankruptcy Code Requires, And Mr. Schilling Breached His Fiduciary Obligations.

A. This Court's Decision In Big Rivers Confirms That Compensation Under The Bankruptcy Code Turns Upon A Fiduciary's Faithful And Disinterested Performance Of His Obligations.

This Court recently clarified in United States v. Schilling (In re Big Rivers Electric Corp.), 355 F.3d 415, 429 (6th Cir. 2004), ("Big Rivers"), the standards that govern awards of compensation for bankruptcy professionals. The legal principles set forth in Big Rivers are controlling here.[4]

This Court in Big Rivers emphasized that bankruptcy professionals' fiduciary obligations lie at the core of their responsibilities under the Bankruptcy Code. It explained that Congress required bankruptcy professionals to be "disinterested" because those professionals "must satisfy the unbending standards of fiduciary duty that the law and society long have come to expect of trustees in general and that the Supreme Court has required of bankruptcy trustees in particular." Big Rivers, 355 F.3d at 431. Moreover, this Court pointed out that the Code's compensation provisions grow out of Congress's understanding that bankruptcy professional must honor their fiduciary obligations as a condition of receiving compensation authorized by the Code. See id. at 432. As this Court explained, the statutory requirement that compensation be "reasonable" incorporates an ethical component; it "suggests that trustees * * * must remain loyal to all relevant parties in the bankruptcy and must act as fiduciaries in doing so." Ibid.

[4] Although this Court decided Big Rivers on January 8, 2004 and Mr. Schilling filed his opening brief on January 30, Mr. Schilling does not mention Big Rivers anywhere in his brief.

This Court in Big Rivers also clarified more specifically the scope and content of bankruptcy professionals' fiduciary duties in bankruptcy proceedings.[5] See generally Big Rivers, 355 F.3d at 433-434. Of particular relevance here, this Court emphasized that the statutory requirement of "disinterest" ensures that a trustee "may not have a 'material adverse' interest to any party to the bankruptcy 'for any * * * reason' either at the time of appointment or during the course of the bankruptcy." Id., 355 F.3d at 433 (quoting the Bankruptcy Code). In addition, by acknowledging bankruptcy trustees' fiduciary obligations as an aspect of "reasonable compensation," this Court recognized that "bankruptcy law 'seeks to avoid * * * delicate inquiries * * * into the conduct of its own appointees by exacting from them forbearance of all opportunities to advance self-interest.'" Ibid. (quoting Mosser v. Darrow, 341 U.S. 267, 271 (1951)). This Court's law is thus unmistakably clear – if a bankruptcy fiduciary wishes to receive compensation under the Bankruptcy Code, then he cannot develop interests adverse to the interests of parties to the bankruptcy, and, in particular, cannot act in his own self-interest.

[5] Although Big Rivers involved the compensation of a bankruptcy examiner, rather than of counsel to the trustee, this Court's analysis applies to this case despite "modest differences" between the duties of trustees and examiners. Big Rivers, 355 F.3d at 430. Indeed, the fundamental statutory requirements of disinterestedness and reasonable compensation apply equally to both trustees and examiners. See 11 U.S.C. § 1104(d) (examiners must be disinterested); id., § 328(a) (counsel to the trustee must be disinterested); id., § 330(a) (compensation for all professionals, including examiners and trustees' counsel, must be reasonable).

This Court in Big Rivers also confirmed that a complete denial of fees is generally appropriate when an applicant for fees has acted in self-interest, rather than as a loyal fiduciary. See Big Rivers, 355 F.3d at 436. Recognizing that "'a fiduciary may not receive compensation for services tainted by disloyalty or conflict of interest'" (ibid., quoting Wolf v. Weinstein, 372 U.S. 633, 642 (1963)), this Court reasoned that "[a]bsent 'peculiar and unique circumstances' * * * a court must deny all compensation when a party is not disinterested at the time of appointment." Ibid. (quoting Michel v. Federated Dep't Stores, Inc. (In re Federated Dep't Stores, Inc.), 44 F.3d 1310, 1319-20 (6th Cir. 1995)). And as this Court added in Big Rivers, the fact that a trustee "breache[s] these duties at some time after his appointment does not change matters." Ibid.

B. Based On The Fee Agreement Alone, The Bankruptcy Court's Determinations That Mr. Schilling Was Not Disinterested And That He Breached His Fiduciary Obligations Are Not Clearly Erroneous.

The bankruptcy court held that Mr. Schilling's "use of the Settlement Agreement requiring the Debtor to support [Mr. Schilling's] motion for attorney fees, including reconsideration of previously disallowed fees, evidences his self-interest in the outcome of the litigation and in the estate itself." R. 73, Op. 8. For this and other reasons, the court concluded that Mr. Schilling and his law firm "hold an interest adverse to the estate and are not disinterested persons pursuant to 11 U.S.C.§ 327(a)." Id. at 11. Far from being clearly erroneous, this finding is fully supported by the undisputed evidence.

The provision concerning Mr. Schilling's fees that Mr. Schilling inserted into the settlement agreement – representing that the debtor would support Mr. Schilling's efforts to recover the previously disallowed fees and support any application for future fees – was plainly an attempt to co-opt the debtor's objection to any fee request, and benefitted nobody but Mr. Schilling and his law firm, ultimately at the debtor's expense. Not only had the debtor previously objected to the disallowed fees as excessive, but the bankruptcy court had agreed that they were excessive and not properly compensable under the Bankruptcy Code. See R. 46 (fee disallowance). Despite the court's ruling, however, Mr. Schilling inserted into the settlement agreement the provision representing that Mr. Smith would support a motion for reconsideration of the disallowed fees. See R. 73, Op. at 5. This provision had nothing to do with the substance of the settlement (terminating the adversary proceedings), and nothing to do with furthering the interests of the estate or its creditors. On the contrary, as the bankruptcy court found, the fee provision can be interpreted only as "direct evidence of the Trustee's self-interest in his Trustee's attorney fees rather than the estate." Id. at 8.

Of course, it is improper for a bankruptcy trustee to promote his own self interest in settling disputes concerning the bankruptcy estate. As this Court carefully explained in Big Rivers, a trustee "'owes single-minded devotion to the interests of those on whose behalf the trustee acts.'" Big Rivers, 355 F.3d at 434. See also Op. 7 ("The Trustee must never 'perform as a self-serving party to himself'" (quoting In re Redman, 69 B.R. 27, 28 (Bankr. D. Haw. 1986)). Here, instead of looking to the interests of the bankruptcy estate and the creditors, Mr. Schilling unilaterally inserted a provision to bind the debtor and the estate to an agreement that included pursuit of legal fees previously disallowed by the bankruptcy court and therefore subject to retention by the estate. In so doing, Mr. Schilling violated his fiduciary obligations, asserted a personal interest in the property of the bankruptcy estate, and ceased to be disinterested. The bankruptcy court's finding that Mr. Schilling was not a "disinterested person" (Op. 11) accordingly was not clearly erroneous.

In his brief on appeal to this Court, Mr. Schilling makes no effort to justify his conduct in inserting the fee agreement into the settlement between Mr. Smith and the estate. Indeed, he nowhere argues either that he did not act in self-interest in drafting and inserting the fee provision into the settlement, or that the disallowance of fees would not be the appropriate consequence of such conduct.[6]

Rather, Mr. Schilling's sole argument touching on the fee issue is the contention that the bankruptcy court erred by denying fees for Trustee's counsel based upon findings that "the Trustee was not disinterested and held an interest

[6] Mr. Schilling's representation that the United States Trustee's Report found no conflict of interest in the negotiation of the settlement agreement (Br. at 20, 54) is misleading. Although the Report concluded "[‘t]here was no conflict of interest in the sense that the trustee agreed to accept less than the $50,000.00 in exchange for the debtor's support of the second fee application" (Rpt. at 4), that statement merely acknowledges that Mr. Schilling did not include his fee request in the negotiations. The limited statement is a far cry from a blanket conclusion that the fee provision created no conflict of interest at all. Rather, in light of its finding that Mr. Schilling had a conflict because he "manipulated the court's record by filing unallowable proofs of claim so that he could justify his attorney fees" the Report had no reason to address other potential improprieties in Mr. Schilling's conduct. Id. at 5.

In any event, even if the United States Trustee's Report overlooked certain elements of Mr. Schilling's wrongdoing, the bankruptcy court's application of the law to the undisputed facts is nonetheless correct and it warrants affirmance.

adverse to the estate." Br. 52 (emphasis added). In Mr. Schilling's view, because the bankruptcy court "dealt solely with an award of attorney fees," it was improper for it even to consider the conduct of the trustee in evaluating the fee request. Ibid. Mr. Schilling attacks the bankruptcy court's decision in this regard on both substantive and procedural grounds. See Br. 52-55.

Contrary to Mr. Schilling's contentions, there is no substantive distinction in the context of the fee dispute between J. Baxter Schilling, Esq., Trustee, and J. Baxter Schilling, Esq., sole member of the Law Firm of J. Baxter Schilling. Rather, this Court expressly recognized in Big Rivers that malfeasance by an individual acting as bankruptcy examiner justified disallowing fees sought by the examiner's law firm, of which the examiner himself was the sole member. See Big Rivers, 355 F.3d at 437. Here, when J. Baxter Schilling, Trustee, inserted the fee provision into the settlement agreement, he did so, as the bankruptcy court correctly found, to benefit himself. As this Court in Big Rivers implicitly acknowledged, the fact that payment of the previously-disallowed funds would benefit him through a check paid to the Law Firm of J. Baxter Schilling, rather than through a check paid to himself personally as Trustee, is simply immaterial to the question whether Mr. Schilling was pursuing his own interests, rather than the interests of the estate.[7]

Moreover, as this Court observed in Big Rivers, rejecting similar arguments based upon supposed distinctions between Mr. Schilling and his law firm, "Schilling in the end may not retain what Schilling must disgorge." Big Rivers, 355 F.3d at 443. The bankruptcy court's goal in ordering disgorgement – ensuring compliance with the Bankruptcy Code's command that only "disinterested person[s]" receive professional compensation – would be frustrated if trustees could benefit themselves without running afoul of the Code simply by arranging for estate funds to be diverted to their solely owned law firms, rather than to themselves as individuals.[8]

[7] Of course, drawing a distinction in other contexts between the trustee and trustee's counsel might be both meaningful and consistent with the Bankruptcy Code. The case Mr. Schilling cites for that proposition (Br. 52), however, was reversed on appeal. See Connolly v. Harris Trust of California (In re Miniscribe Corp.), 309 F.3d 1234 (10th Cir. 2002), reversing Connolly v. Harris Trust of California (In re Miniscribe Corp.), 257 B.R. 56 (Bankr. D. Colo. 2000).

[8] Nor is there any merit to Mr. Schilling's complaints that his procedural rights were violated because the bankruptcy judge "had never advised Trustee or his counsel that she was contemplating entering an opinion in which she would conclude the Trustee and Trustee's Counsel had overreached the Debtor, were not disinterested and held an interest adverse to the estate." Br. 55. Certainly, both Mr. Schilling and his law firm were on notice of the dispute over his fee request from its inception and Mr. Schilling had the opportunity to be heard at all stages of the fee litigation. Mr. Schilling never even requested a hearing on his fee application. Contrary to Mr. Schilling's suggestions, therefore, the bankruptcy judge's failure to advise Mr.

C. The Bankruptcy Court's Findings That Mr. Schilling's Other Conduct Also Violated His Fiduciary Obligations Also Are Not Clearly Erroneous.

In addition to finding that Mr. Schilling had displayed self-interest in negotiating the fee provision, the bankruptcy judge also found that Mr. Schilling violated his fiduciary obligations when he "used the Settlement Agreement to silence objections to his actions in execution of his duties as Trustee in this case." R. 73, Op. 7. The bankruptcy judge found that Mr. Schilling "attempted to or believed he had effectively eliminated the Debtor as a potential beneficiary of the estate" and then, having sidelined the Debtor, used the fee provision in the settlement agreement "in an attempt to slide through not only the current fees requested but also to encourage the Court to reconsider its prior Order." Id. at 8. The bankruptcy court also found that Mr. Schilling had acted improperly in filing the "Tardy Trustee Claims." Ibid.[9]

Schilling of the precise contents of her forthcoming opinion did not violate his procedural rights.

[9] As we explain in more detail below (infra, at 37), the bankruptcy court's broad legal conclusion that a trustee generally has a duty to the debtor that precludes him from assisting creditors by filing late claims (see R. 73, Op. at 8), is not fully consistent with the trustee's obligations under the Bankruptcy Code. Under the facts presented here, however, the bankruptcy court could have reached the same conclusion – that the Tardy Trustee Claims were filed for improper reasons – on the narrower grounds we discuss below.

As we now show, the bankruptcy court's findings are not clearly erroneous. There is ample support in the record for both the finding that Mr. Schilling improperly used the settlement agreement as a vehicle for forcing the court to reconsider the disallowed fees, and for the finding that Mr. Schilling violated his fiduciary obligations when he filed the Tardy Trustee Claims.

a. The Improper Use Of The Settlement Agreement As A Device To Force The Bankruptcy Court To Allow The Previously Disallowed Fees And To Shield Future Fee Requests From Scrutiny.

The bankruptcy court's finding that Mr. Schilling improperly used the settlement agreement as an indirect means of forcing reconsideration of the disallowance of fees is not clearly erroneous. Rather than straightforwardly asking the judge herself to reconsider the disallowance, Mr. Schilling sought to reinstate the fees indirectly by inserting the fee provision into the settlement agreement, obtaining approval of the settlement from the court, and then presenting the judge with her own order apparently endorsing the terms of the settlement, including the fee provision. In addition, obtaining the debtor's waiver of the right to object to future fee requests was a transparent device to shield Mr. Schilling's future fee requests from meaningful scrutiny by the bankruptcy court.

As the bankruptcy court pointed out, however, "an agreement by a party in interest to support a trustee's fee or establish such fee is not enforceable or binding on the Court." Op. 8. Rather, "[t]he act of enlisting an agreement which has no purpose other than to inappropriately influence this Court's evaluation of the requested fees and which solely serves the self-interest of the Trustee is against public policy" and inconsistent with the trustee's obligations under the Bankruptcy Code. Ibid.

The bankruptcy court similarly found that Mr. Schilling had acted improperly in negotiating the terms of the settlement agreement "which have the specific purpose of waiver of the Debtor's right to be heard on any matter or motion relating to the allowance of any claim filed in the estate * * *." R. 73, Op. 8-9. As the court pointed out, "absent comments or objections by interested parties," the court is unlikely to become aware of issues in the bankruptcy case. Ibid. The court accordingly concluded that Mr. Schilling "used the Settlement Agreement to silence objections to his actions in execution of his duties as Trustee" (id. at 7), and with the intent to "keep meaningful input from this Court" (id. at 10).

There is an ample factual and legal basis for the bankruptcy court's finding that Mr. Schilling acted improperly by inserting the fee provision into a settlement agreement and then trying to use the bankruptcy court's approval of the settlement as conclusive evidence that the court had agreed to reconsider and award the fees. Although the Bankruptcy Rules require court oversight of settlements if objections are filed (see Fed. R. Bankr. Pro. 9019), a settlement need not necessarily be approved by the court if there is no objection from interested parties. See 11 U.S.C. § 362(b)(1). No rational bankruptcy judge would devote the same resources to scrutinizing an unopposed motion for approval of a settlement agreement as to resolving an issue directly presented by motion, and a bankruptcy trustee accordingly ought not to bury important and controversial fee issues in uncontested settlement agreements, particularly not when the settlement agreement itself limits the debtor's standing to file objections. As the bankruptcy court pointed out, "shrouding matters involving the estate and the trustee's performance of his/her fiduciary duties * * * in the form of any agreement settling litigation" falls short of the trustee's obligation to be open and honest with the court. Op. 10. See also Big Rivers, 355 F.3d at 432 (explaining that trustees are also fiduciaries of the court). C.f. Downs, 103 F.3d at 478-79 (discussing a professional's deliberate failure to disclose compensation); In re Kisseberth, 273 F.3d 714, 721 (6th Cir. 2001) (explaining that even a negligent failure to disclose may justify disgorgement).

The undisputed facts are more than adequate to support the court's finding that Mr. Schilling acted improperly in this case by trying to use the settlement agreement to obtain indirectly what he had failed to obtain directly. Obviously, the parties to a bankruptcy proceeding should not be able to undermine a court order by reaching a private settlement inconsistent with that order, having the settlement approved by the bankruptcy court on an uncontested motion, and then raising the court's approval of the settlement as a bar to any further adjudication regarding matters related to the settlement.

Even in his brief in this Court, Mr. Schilling repeatedly invokes the bankruptcy court's approval of the settlement agreement as conclusive evidence of the propriety of his fee request and as a bar to the bankruptcy court's even considering the facts underlying the settlement agreement in resolving the fee dispute. See, e.g., Br. at 26, 32 (bold typeface). Mr. Schilling argues that because the bankruptcy court approved the settlement agreement, approval of the agreement and all of its terms is "the law of the case" (id. 26), and to the extent that the bankruptcy judge's findings in the fee litigation are inconsistent with the terms of the settlement agreement they are "contrary to [the bankruptcy judge's] Order of April 8, 2002 [approving the settlement agreement], and are contrary to law." Id. 36. See also id. at 44 (mistakenly alleging that the money the debtor paid the estate was "adjudicated to be" nonexempt property that would be used to pay administrative and unsecured claims because the settlement agreement provided that the funds would be treated in that manner). And compare id. at 43-44 (arguing that "the plain language of" the Order approving the settlement agreement bars the debtor from receiving any distribution of surplus funds from the estate) with Op. 10 (reviewing the underlying facts and finding, contrary to the terms of the settlement agreement, that Mr. Schilling overreached the debtor in securing a waiver of any distribution from the estate because "[n]o legitimate estate purpose could be served by a trustee seeking a debtor's waiver of a right to participate in a distribution of the surplus" both because the Bankruptcy Code itself gives debtors a right to participate (11 U.S.C. § 726(a)), and because bankruptcy policy "favors the Debtor's fresh start with exempt assets").

Mr. Schilling's reliance upon the law of the case doctrine is misplaced. As this Court has explained, "[t]he law-of-the-case doctrine does not remove a [] court's jurisdiction to reconsider, or otherwise preclude a [] court from reconsidering, an issue previously decided in the case." United States v. Dunbar, 357 F.3d 582, 594 (6th Cir. 2004). Rather, despite the law of the case doctrine, "'[p]rejudgment orders remain interlocutory and can be reconsidered at any time.'" Ibid. Mr. Schilling's argument – that because of the law of the case doctrine, the bankruptcy court's approval of the settlement agreement bars any further examination of matters relating to agreement – is therefore mistaken. The bankruptcy court had the authority, and indeed the obligation, to look to the facts underlying Mr. Schilling's fee request and, because the request turned upon the Settlement Agreement, to investigate the circumstances of that Agreement. See R. 65 (bankruptcy court's Order requiring an investigation by the United States Trustee into "the propriety of the Trustee's fees as a material term of the Settlement Agreement").

Even if the law of the case doctrine were relevant, it would not prevent the bankruptcy court from looking to the substance of the settlement here because the court made no findings and issued no rulings about the substance of the settlement. See Rouse v. DaimlerChrysler Corporation UAW, 300 F.3d 711, 715 (6th Cir. 2002) (law of the case doctrine did not apply when the court had not decided the issues that were later claimed to be barred). Mr. Schilling is therefore mistaken in contending that the bankruptcy court's order approving the settlement "specifically determine[d]" that the underlying facts are as the agreement represents them to be. Br. at 35. Similarly, the order approving settlement does not represent the bankruptcy court's "adjudicat[ion]" of disputes settled under the agreement (id. at 44), or establish "law of the case" by accepting as binding the parties' agreement on legal issues (id. at 26).

Mr. Schilling's continued reliance in this Court upon the bankruptcy court's approval of the settlement agreement as a bar to review of his fee application only confirms that the bankruptcy court committed no error when it found that Mr. Schilling violated his obligations to the court when he used the court's approval of the settlement agreement as a shield against meaningful adjudication of the fee dispute. See Op. 10. The bankruptcy court's holding that Mr. Schilling improperly included the fee provision in the settlement agreement in an attempt to evade the order disallowing his fees is therefore not clearly erroneous, and it should be sustained.

b. The Tardy Trustee Claims.

The bankruptcy court also found that Mr. Schilling did not act in the best interests of the estate when he filed claims on behalf of creditors over eleven months after the bar date. Op. 9. The bankruptcy court suggested that the late filings were "in breach of [Mr. Schilling's] duty to the estate and the Debtor as a party in interest." Id. at 8.

Although the bankruptcy court's apparent view that a trustee necessarily breaches his or her duty by filing late claims on behalf of creditors is overbroad – a Chapter 7 trustee's primary fiduciary obligation is to the estate and the creditors, see Big Rivers, 355 F.3d at 431-32, and a filing outside the bar date will not necessarily undermine the interests of the estate – there is nonetheless ample evidentiary support for the court's finding that Mr. Schilling did not act in the best interests of the estate when he filed the tardy claims in Mr. Smith's Chapter 7 proceeding.

Although the Bankruptcy Code may sometimes authorize a trustee to file late claims on behalf of creditors without violating any fiduciary duty, nonetheless "[n]o provision is made for the payment of claims filed tardily under [11 U.S.C.] § 501(c)" by the trustee or the debtor. Drew v. Royal (In re Drew), 256 B.R. 799, 804 (10th Cir. B.A.P. 2001) (emphasis added). See also Op. 9 n.1 (pointing out that "while a tardy claim filed by a creditor is entitled to a distribution, a tardy claim filed by a debtor or the trustee on behalf of a creditor is not"). Accordingly, these claims may be disallowed if a party in interest objects to them. See ibid.

Here, Mr. Schilling engaged in a transparent scheme to use the tardily filed claims to increase both his fee as trustee and his attorney fees. With regard to the trustee fee, the settlement agreement included the provision barring the debtor from objecting to claims filed against the estate. See R. 73, Op. 9. Having silenced the debtor's objections, Mr. Schilling could thus be sure that even tardy claims in this case would effectively cut out the debtor from participating in the distribution of the surplus, because the tardy claims would account for the residue of the estate. The debtor thus would be ineligible for any distribution, despite his rights under the Bankruptcy Code to participate in that distribution and make his fresh start. See 11 U.S.C. § 726(a)(6). Cutting out the debtor, of course, would increase the fee available to Mr. Schilling as trustee, because his trustee fee is capped at a percentage of the funds distributed, excluding funds distributed to the debtor. See id., 326(a). Under these circumstances, the bankruptcy court's finding that Mr. Schilling had acted improperly by filing procedurally invalid claims at the expense of the debtor, who had a legitimate interest under the Bankruptcy Code in the surplus distribution, was not clearly erroneous.

In addition to increasing his trustee fee, Mr. Schilling could use the tardily filed claims to increase his attorney fees. Mr. Schilling himself agrees that a trustee acts improperly if he files "proofs of claims solely for the purpose of increasing [his] trustee compensation." Br. 45. See also In re Nettles, 251 B.R. 899 (Bankr. M.D. Fla. 2000). The United States Trustee concluded in his Report, after interviewing Mr. Schilling and Mr. Morris and reviewing the documentary evidence (R. 66, United States Trustee's Report at 1), that Mr. Schilling "filed unallowable claims on behalf of those creditors who had failed to do so" because he was "unable to justify all of his attorney's fees" unless substantial additional funds came into the estate. Id., 4. As the United States Trustee pointed out, Mr. Schilling's second fee application justified his request for fees – including the previously disallowed fees – by representing to the bankruptcy court that Mr. Schilling had secured a distribution of "'100% of the allowed timely filed claims and a substantial percentage to all tardily filed claims.'" Id. at 2 (quoting R. 63, Second Fee Application at 3). But at the time of the second fee application, there were no tardily filed claims; rather, only MBNA's timely claim had been filed. Mr. Schilling filed the seven claims on behalf of creditors after he filed his fee application, and over a year after the bar date. Because Mr. Schilling had justified his fee request to the bankruptcy court in reliance upon "tardily filed claims" that did not even exist, the United States Trustee concluded that Mr. Schilling's justifications for the fee request were unreliable.

Mr. Schilling's brief in this Court is almost entirely devoted to challenging the bankruptcy court's decision on the Tardy Trustee Claims, even though that decision in fact constitutes only one aspect of the bankruptcy court's analysis. See Br. at 36-52. Mr. Schilling makes two principal arguments, both of which are misplaced.[10]

First, Mr. Schilling's claim that the Bar Order in Mr. Smith's Chapter 7 bankruptcy should be ignored because of an order entered in Mr. Smith's earlier, Chapter 13 bankruptcy (Br. at 39-40), lacks any basis in law or fact. The Chapter 13 case was dismissed, rather than converted, and an order relating to creditor claims in the Chapter 13 case therefore has no relevance at all to creditors in the new Chapter 7 proceeding, which is an entirely separate bankruptcy case.

Second, there is no merit to Mr. Schilling's contention his late filings were in fact timely because the Chapter 7 Bar Order itself is invalid and "cannot stand." Br. 42. According to Mr. Schilling, the Bar Order is invalid because it provides broadly that creditor claims filed after the bar date "will be barred from receiving any distribution of assets." Ibid. (quoting the Bar Order). Mr. Schilling's argument assumes that the Bar Order is akin to a legal ruling or procedural rule that must be struck down if it is not fully consistent with the Bankruptcy Code. Compare United States v. Cardinal Mine Supply, Inc., 916 F.2d 1087 (6th Cir. 1990) (invalidating a Bankruptcy Rule that was inconsistent with the Bankruptcy Code).

[10] As we have explained, the United States Trustee, like Mr. Schilling, does not interpret the Bankruptcy Code to bar a trustee from filing late creditor claims in all circumstances.

Mr. Schilling's assumption is mistaken. The Bar Order is not a judicial ruling or a procedural rule, but rather a routine document sent out in a Chapter 7 case to notify creditors of the bankruptcy proceedings and inform them of the bar date for filing claims. Collier on Bankruptcy, § 700.03, 700-3 (15th Ed. Rev. 2002). There is no reason why a Bar Order should explain in intricate detail all of the classes of claims that might, perhaps, be payable in the unusual situation presented in this case, where surplus funds remain in the estate after distribution to all creditors who filed timely claims. In the mine run of Chapter 7 liquidations, it is true that a creditor who misses the bar date will, as a practical matter, be barred from receiving any distribution of assets. The Bar Order was accordingly not invalid because it warned creditors forcefully of the likely consequence of any failure to file timely claims.

Mr. Schilling is therefore mistaken in arguing that the Bar Order was facially invalid. His contention that his creditor claims filed over a year after the bar date were in fact timely, because the invalidity of the Bar Order meant that “no valid bar date for filing claims existed” in the Smith bankruptcy, is therefore meritless. Br. 42.

D. The Bankruptcy Court Did Not Abuse Its Discretion In Ordering Disgorgement.

“[T]he bankruptcy court is given a great deal of latitude in fashioning an appropriate sanction” for a professional’s wrongdoing. Mapother & Mapother, P.S.C. v. Cooper (In re Downs), 103 F.3d 472, 478 (6th Cir. 1996). As this Court reaffirmed in Big Rivers, therefore, a bankruptcy court’s decision regarding the appropriate sanction “‘should not be disturbed unless a clear abuse of discretion is found.’” Big Rivers, 355 F.3d at 436 (quoting Downs).

The bankruptcy court here did not abuse its discretion in ordering full disgorgement. It found, based upon undisputed facts, that Mr. Schilling had acted in his own self-interest when he inserted the fee provision into the settlement agreement had ceased to be “disinterested” within the meaning of the Bankruptcy Code, and had violated his fiduciary obligations. These are grounds enough for disgorgement. As this Court emphasized in Big Rivers, “a court must deny all compensation when a party is not disinterested at the time of appointment” and the fact that a fiduciary breaches his duty “at some point after his appointment does not change matters.” 355 F.3d at 436.

Moreover, the bankruptcy court found Mr. Schilling's conduct to be sanctionable in other ways as well. It found that Mr. Schilling had acted improperly when he tried to force the court to allow the previously disallowed fees by securing the debtor's agreement not to contest the renewed application for fees, and representing to the court itself that it had approved the fee request when it approved the filing of the settlement agreement. And the bankruptcy court found that Mr. Schilling had acted improperly in using the settlement agreement to take away the debtor's right to contest further fee applications, and to prevent the debtor from objecting to future claims against the estate. That agreement allowed Mr. Schilling to secure himself larger trustee and attorney fees by filing claims for creditors long after the bar date. These findings relating to Mr. Schilling's self-interest and breach of duty are also not clearly erroneous.

Mr. Schilling in his brief argues that disgorgement was inappropriate in this case because his efforts turned Mr. Smith's Chapter 7 bankruptcy from a no distribution case into a case with substantial assets. See, e.g., Br. at 57. Certainly, Mr. Schilling was successful in identifying assets in the Smith bankruptcy and in securing those assets for the estate through adversary proceedings. But Mr. Schilling's obligations as trustee required no less. See 11 U.S.C. § 704(1) (requiring trustees to collect estate assets). Moreover, Mr. Schilling had every expectation of being compensated for his services; the Bankruptcy Code "neither expects nor requires [trustees] to volunteer their time." Big Rivers, 355 F.3d at 430.

Finally, even if the bankruptcy court had abused its discretion in ordering full disgorgement – and in light of Mr. Schilling's obvious self-interest in inserting the fee provision, it did not – there would nonetheless be no reason for this Court to award any more than the amount the bankruptcy court calculated under its lodestar analysis in its original opinion and order resolving Mr. Schilling's second fee application. See R. 73, Bankruptcy Court Opinion at 12-15. The bankruptcy court's careful analysis of each of the relevant factors (the hourly fee, the number of hours reasonably chargeable and the downwards adjustment for improper conduct), was supported both by reason and by the facts identified in the bankruptcy court's opinion.

The bankruptcy court's subsequent order requiring Mr. Schilling to disgorge his fees, however, is fully consistent with the law of this Court and based upon factual findings that are not clearly erroneous.

CONCLUSION

The judgment of the district court should be affirmed.

PROOF BRIEF FOR APPELLEES

JURISDICTIONAL STATEMENT

PLAINTIFFS INVOKED THE DISTRICT COURT'S JURISDICTION

UNDER 28 U.S.C. §§ 1331 AND 1334. OCTOBER 19, 2007 THE DISTRICT COURT GRANTED DEFENDANTS' MOTION FOR SUMMARY JUDGMENT AND DISMISSED PLAINTIFFS' COMPLAINT ON MAY 14, 2007. (R. 30 ORDER, APX. P. __; R. 31 JUDGMENT, APX. P. __.) PLAINTIFFS FILED A TIMELY NOTICE OF APPEAL ON MAY 16, 2007. (R. 33 NOTICE OF APPEAL, APX. P. __.) THIS COURT HAS JURISDICTION UNDER 28 U.S.C. § 1291.

STATEMENT OF THE ISSUES

TITLE I OF THE BANKRUPTCY ABUSE PREVENTION AND CONSUMER PROTECTION ACT OF 2005 (THE ABUSE PREVENTION ACT), PUB. L. NO. 109-8, 112 STAT. 23, CREATED A MEANS TEST FOR DETERMINING ELIGIBILITY FOR BANKRUPTCY UNDER CHAPTER 7 OF THE BANKRUPTCY CODE, WHICH PROVIDES FOR LIQUIDATION OF THE DEBTOR'S NON-EXEMPT PROPERTY AND DISCHARGE OF DEBTS. IT ALSO ESTABLISHED A MEANS TEST THAT DETERMINES WHETHER A DEBTOR'S REPAYMENT PERIOD WILL BE THREE OR FIVE YEARS FOR BANKRUPTCIES FILED UNDER CHAPTER 13, AND THE AMOUNTS TO BE REPAID.

THE QUESTIONS PRESENTED ARE:

1. WHETHER PLAINTIFFS HAVE STANDING TO CHALLENGE THE CONSTITUTIONALITY OF THE ABUSE

PREVENTION ACT MEANS TEST PROVISIONS ESTABLISHING THE PRESUMPTION OF ABUSIVE FILING UNDER CHAPTER 7; AND

2. WHETHER THE MEANS TESTS CREATED BY THE ABUSE PREVENTION ACT VIOLATE ARTICLE I, SECTION 8, CLAUSE 4 OF THE U.S. CONSTITUTION, WHICH VESTS IN CONGRESS THE AUTHORITY TO ESTABLISH "UNIFORM LAWS ON THE SUBJECT OF BANKRUPTCIES THROUGHOUT THE UNITED STATES."

STATEMENT OF THE CASE

IN NOVEMBER, 2006, PLAINTIFFS FILED FOR BANKRUPTCY UNDER CHAPTER 13, A PROVISION OF THE

BANKRUPTCY CODE REQUIRING SATISFACTION OF CREDITORS' CLAIMS FROM FUTURE INCOME. (R. 2 AMENDED COMPLAINT, P. 1, APX. P. __.) INDEPENDENTLY, PLAINTIFFS BROUGHT SUIT IN THE DISTRICT COURT. PLAINTIFFS' COMPLAINT ALLEGED THAT, BUT FOR THE ABUSE PREVENTION ACT'S AMENDMENTS TO THE BANKRUPTCY CODE, PLAINTIFFS WOULD HAVE FILED FOR BANKRUPTCY UNDER CHAPTER 7, WHICH DOES NOT REQUIRE REPAYMENT OF CREDITORS FROM FUTURE INCOME. (R. 2 AMENDED COMPLAINT, P. 9, APX. P. __.) THE COMPLAINT FURTHER ALLEGED THAT, BUT FOR THE ABUSE PREVENTION ACT'S AMENDMENTS TO THE BANKRUPTCY CODE, PLAINTIFFS WOULD HAVE BEEN ELIGIBLE FOR A THREE-YEAR REPAYMENT PLAN UNDER CHAPTER 13 INSTEAD OF THE LONGER FIVE-YEAR PLAN AND THAT MORE OF THEIR INCOME WOULD HAVE BEEN EXEMPTED IN THE PLAN'S REPAYMENT CALCULATIONS. (IBID.)

THE COMPLAINT SOUGHT A DECLARATION THAT THE ABUSE PREVENTION ACT'S AMENDMENTS TO THE BANKRUPTCY CODE ESTABLISHING A MEANS TEST TO DETERMINE ELIGIBILITY FOR

DISCHARGE UNDER CHAPTER 7 AND FOR THE SHORTER REPAYMENT PERIOD AND INCOME CALCULATIONS UNDER CHAPTER 13 ARE UNCONSTITUTIONAL BECAUSE THEY VIOLATE THE REQUIREMENT THAT CONGRESS ENACT "UNIFORM LAWS ON THE SUBJECT OF BANKRUPTCIES." U.S. CONST. ART. I, § 8, CL. 4; (SEE R. 2 AMENDED COMPLAINT, P. 10, APX. P. __.) IT ALSO SOUGHT AN INJUNCTION PROHIBITING ENFORCEMENT OF THOSE PROVISIONS. (IBID.)

THE PARTIES FILED CROSS-MOTIONS FOR SUMMARY JUDGMENT. THE DISTRICT COURT GRANTED DEFENDANTS' MOTION, CONCLUDING

THAT THE ABUSE PREVENTION ACT AMENDMENTS SATISFY THE BANKRUPTCY CLAUSE'S UNIFORMITY REQUIREMENT. (R. 29 MEMORANDUM, APX. P. __.) ACCORDINGLY, THE DISTRICT COURT DISMISSED PLAINTIFFS' CLAIMS. (R. 30 ORDER, APX. P. __.) PLAINTIFFS NOW APPEAL THE DISTRICT COURT'S ORDER OF DISMISSAL.

STATEMENT OF THE FACTS

I. STATUTORY BACKGROUND

THE BANKRUPTCY CODE ESTABLISHES TWO BASIC FORMS OF BANKRUPTCY FOR INDIVIDUAL DEBTORS. UNDER CHAPTER 7, "AN INDIVIDUAL DEBTOR RECEIVES AN

IMMEDIATE UNCONDITIONAL DISCHARGE OF PERSONAL LIABILITY FOR CERTAIN DEBTS IN EXCHANGE FOR RELINQUISHING HIS OR HER NONEXEMPT ASSETS TO A BANKRUPTCY TRUSTEE FOR LIQUIDATION AND DISTRIBUTION TO CREDITORS." H.R. REP. 109-31(I), AT 10; SEE 11 U.S.C. §§ 701–727. BY CONTRAST, UNDER CHAPTER 13, "A DEBTOR COMMITS TO REPAY SOME PORTION OF HIS OR HER FINANCIAL OBLIGATIONS" OVER A SPECIFIED PERIOD "IN EXCHANGE FOR RETAINING NONEXEMPT ASSETS AND RECEIVING A BROADER DISCHARGE OF DEBT THAN IS AVAILABLE UNDER

CHAPTER 7." H.R. REP. 109-31(I), AT 10; SEE 11 U.S.C. §§ 1321–1330. UNDER THE BANKRUPTCY REFORM ACT OF 1978, PUB. L. NO. 95-598, 92 STAT. 2549, A DEBTOR COULD FREELY CHOOSE WHETHER TO FILE FOR BANKRUPTCY UNDER CHAPTER 7 OR CHAPTER 13. SEE H.R. REP. 109-31(I), AT 11.

IN 1984, CONGRESS AMENDED CHAPTER 7 TO PERMIT DISMISSAL OF A BANKRUPTCY PETITION FILED UNDER THAT CHAPTER IF A COURT FOUND "SUBSTANTIAL ABUSE." BANKRUPTCY AMENDMENTS AND FEDERAL JUDGESHIP ACT OF 1984, PUB. L. NO. 98-353, § 312, 98 STAT. 333, 335,

CODIFIED AS AMENDED AT 11 U.S.C. § 707(B)(1) (1988). CONGRESS ENACTED THIS AMENDMENT TO RESPOND "TO CONCERNS THAT SOME DEBTORS WHO COULD EASILY PAY THEIR CREDITORS MIGHT RESORT TO CHAPTER 7 TO AVOID THEIR OBLIGATIONS." H.R. REP. 109-31(I), AT 12 (QUOTATION MARKS OMITTED). TWO YEARS LATER, CONGRESS AGAIN AMENDED THIS PROVISION TO AUTHORIZE THE UNITED STATES TRUSTEE TO SEEK DISMISSAL OF CHAPTER 7 PETITIONS FOR "SUBSTANTIAL ABUSE." BANKRUPTCY JUDGES, UNITED STATES TRUSTEES, AND FAMILY FARMER BANKRUPTCY

ACT OF 1986, PUB. L. NO. 99-554, § 21, 100 STAT. 3088, 3101; CODIFIED AT 11 U.S.C. § 707(B)(1) (1988).

AFTER TWENTY-YEARS' EXPERIENCE, CONGRESS FOUND THAT THESE AMENDMENTS WERE INSUFFICIENT TO CONTROL ABUSE OF THE CHAPTER 7 BANKRUPTCY PROCESS. AMONG OTHER PROBLEMS, THE HOUSE REPORT ACCOMPANYING THE ABUSE PREVENTION ACT IDENTIFIED THE "INHERENT[] VAGUE[NESS]" OF THE "SUBSTANTIAL ABUSE" STANDARD, WHICH LED TO DISAGREEMENT IN THE COURTS ABOUT WHETHER A DEBTOR'S ABILITY TO REPAY A SIGNIFICANT PORTION OF HIS OR HER DEBTS OUT OF FUTURE INCOME CONSTITUTES SUBSTANTIAL ABUSE, MERITING DISMISSAL. H.R. REP. 109-31(I), AT 12. ANOTHER PROBLEM WAS THAT CONGRESS HAD ESTABLISHED "A PRESUMPTION IN FAVOR OF GRANTING THE RELIEF REQUESTED BY THE DEBTOR," WHICH INFLUENCED COURTS' DECISIONS WHETHER TO FIND SUBSTANTIAL ABUSE. 11 U.S.C. § 707(B) (2000 SUPPL. 4); SEE H.R. REP. 109-31(I), AT 12.

RESPONDING TO THESE PERCEIVED SHORTCOMINGS OF THE BANKRUPTCY CODE, CONGRESS HELD HEARINGS OVER FIVE YEARS TO DETERMINE WHAT MEASURES IT COULD ADOPT "TO ENSURE THAT DEBTORS REPAY CREDITORS THE MAXIMUM THEY CAN AFFORD." H.R. REP. 109-31(I), AT 2; SEE ID. AT 12. AS A RESULT OF THOSE HEARINGS, CONGRESS DETERMINED THAT IT SHOULD ADOPT "NEEDS-BASED REFORMS," WHICH WOULD LIMIT THE AVAILABILITY OF CHAPTER 7 RELIEF TO THOSE WHO CONGRESS BELIEVED COULD NOT AFFORD TO REPAY A PORTION OF THEIR DEBTS OUT OF FUTURE INCOME, AS IS REQUIRED UNDER CHAPTER 13. ID. AT 12.

THE ABUSE PREVENTION ACT IMPLEMENTED THESE NEED-BASED REFORMS. TO ADDRESS THE VAGUENESS OF THE "SUBSTANTIAL ABUSE" STANDARD, THE ACT AUTHORIZES THE BANKRUPTCY COURT TO DISMISS A PETITION FILED UNDER CHAPTER 7 OR, WITH THE DEBTOR'S CONSENT, TO CONVERT SUCH A PETITION TO A CASE UNDER CHAPTERS 11 OR 13 "IF IT FINDS THAT THE GRANTING OF RELIEF WOULD BE AN ABUSE OF THE PROVISIONS OF THIS CHAPTER." 11 U.S.C. § 707(B)(1). THE ACT THEN PROVIDES SPECIFIC CRITERIA WHICH, IF SATISFIED, REQUIRE A

COURT TO PRESUME THE EXISTENCE OF ABUSE, REQUIRING "DISMISSAL [OR CONVERSION TO CHAPTER 13] BASED ON A CHAPTER 7 DEBTOR'S ABILITY TO REPAY." H.R. REP. 109-31(I), AT 15.

FIRST, A COURT IS TO COMPARE THE DEBTOR'S ANNUALIZED "CURRENT MONTHLY INCOME" TO THE "MEDIAN FAMILY INCOME" OF A SIMILARLY SIZED FAMILY IN THE DEBTOR'S STATE. IF THE DEBTOR'S CURRENT MONTHLY INCOME IS BELOW THE MEDIAN, THEN THE PRESUMPTION OF ABUSE DOES NOT ARISE AND THE COURT MAY NOT DISMISS THE CHAPTER 7 PETITION

FOR ABUSE BECAUSE OF ABILITY TO REPAY DEBTS. 11 U.S.C. § 707(B)(7); SEE H.R. REP. 109-31(I), AT 15. BOTH "CURRENT MONTHLY INCOME" AND "MEDIAN FAMILY INCOME" ARE DEFINED TERMS. THE FORMER GENERALLY INCLUDES "THE AVERAGE MONTHLY INCOME FROM ALL SOURCES THAT THE DEBTOR RECEIVES" OVER A SPECIFIED SIX-MONTH PERIOD. 11 U.S.C. § 101(10A). "MEDIAN FAMILY INCOME" IS THE MEDIAN INCOME FOR A PARTICULAR FAMILY SIZE IN THE APPLICABLE STATE, AS REPORTED BY THE BUREAU OF THE CENSUS. ID. § 101(39A); ID. § 707(B)(7)(A).

[1] THE BENCHMARKS ARE ADJUSTED EVERY THREE YEARS "TO REFLECT THE CHANGE IN THE CONSUMER PRICE INDEX." 11 U.S.C. § 104(B)(1)(A).

NECESSARY EXPENSES UNDER NATIONAL STANDARDS; (2) NECESSARY EXPENSES UNDER LOCAL STANDARDS; AND (3) OTHER NECESSARY EXPENSES ACTUALLY INCURRED. THE ABUSE PREVENTION ACT DEFINES THOSE CATEGORIES, IN THE FIRST INSTANCE, BY REFERENCE TO THE INTERNAL REVENUE SERVICE'S FINANCIAL ANALYSIS HANDBOOK. IBID.; SEE INTERNAL REVENUE SERV., INTERNAL REVENUE MANUAL, FINANCIAL ANALYSIS HANDBOOK (IRS HANDBOOK), AVAILABLE AT HTTP://WWW.IRS.GOV/IRM/PART5/

CH15S01.HTML.[2] THE IRS HANDBOOK EXPLAINS THAT THESE THREE CATEGORIES TOGETHER COMPRISE "NECESSARY EXPENSES," THAT IS, "EXPENSES THAT ARE NECESSARY TO PROVIDE FOR A TAXPAYER'S AND HIS OR HER FAMILY'S HEALTH AND WELFARE AND/OR PRODUCTION OF INCOME." IRS HANDBOOK § 5.15.1.7.

THE NATIONAL STANDARDS DEFINE AMOUNTS FOR FIVE NECESSARY EXPENSES: "FOOD, HOUSEKEEPING SUPPLIES, APPAREL AND SERVICES, AND PERSONAL CARE

[2] THE IRS USES THE FINANCIAL ANALYSIS HANDBOOK TO DETERMINE THE AMOUNTS THAT DELINQUENT TAXPAYERS MUST PAY. SEE IRS HANDBOOK, § 5.15.1.1.

PRODUCTS AND SERVICES," AND A FIXED "MISCELLANEOUS" AMOUNT. ID. § 5.15.1.7(3). AS APPLIED IN THE BANKRUPTCY CONTEXT, THE NATIONAL STANDARDS ARE GEOGRAPHICALLY UNIFORM AMOUNTS FOR THE CONTINENTAL UNITED STATES BUT VARY ACCORDING TO A DEBTOR'S GROSS MONTHLY INCOME AND FAMILY SIZE. SEE U.S. TRUSTEE, IRS NATIONAL STANDARDS FOR ALLOWABLE LIVING EXPENSES (CASES FILED BETWEEN OCTOBER 1, 2006, AND JANUARY 31, 2007, INCLUSIVE), AVAILABLE AT HTTP://WWW.USDOJ.GOV/UST/EO/BA PCPA/20061001/BCI_DATA/NATIONAL_EXPENSE _STANDARDS.HTM. THE U.S. TRUSTEE EXPLAINS THAT, "[D]UE TO THEIR UNIQUE GEOGRAPHIC CIRCUMSTANCES AND HIGHER COST OF LIVING, SEPARATE STANDARDS HAVE BEEN ESTABLISHED FOR ALASKA AND HAWAII." IBID.

THE LOCAL STANDARDS DEFINE AMOUNTS FOR TWO NECESSARY EXPENSES: HOUSING AND TRANSPORTATION. IRS HANDBOOK § 5.15.1.7(4). HOUSING EXPENSES, WHICH INCLUDE UTILITIES (SEE ID. § 5.15.1.9(1)(A)), "ARE ESTABLISHED FOR EACH COUNTY WITHIN A STATE" (SEE ID. § 5.15.1.7(4)(A)).

TRANSPORTATION EXPENSES "CONSIST OF NATIONWIDE FIGURES FOR LOAN OR LEASE PAYMENTS REFERRED TO AS OWNERSHIP COST, AND ADDITIONAL AMOUNTS FOR OPERATING COSTS BROKEN DOWN BY CENSUS REGION AND METROPOLITAN STATISTICAL AREA." ID. § 5.15.1.7(4)(B). THUS, LOCAL STANDARDS INCLUDE SOME GEOGRAPHIC VARIATION. SEE U.S. TRUSTEE, MEANS TESTING: CENSUS BUREAU, IRS DATA AND ADMINISTRATIVE EXPENSES MULTIPLIERS (CASES FILED BETWEEN OCTOBER 1, 2006, AND JANUARY 31, 2007, INCLUSIVE), SEC. 2, LOCAL STANDARDS, AVAILABLE AT HTTP://WWW.USDOJ.GOV/UST/EO/BAPCPA/20061001/ MEANSTESTING.HTM.

THE IRS HANDBOOK PROVIDES A NON-EXHAUSTIVE LIST OF OTHER NECESSARY EXPENSES, BUT INCLUDES WITHIN THIS CATEGORY ANY EXPENSE THAT "MEET[S] THE NECESSARY EXPENSE TEST," THAT IS, ACTUAL EXPENSES THAT "PROVIDE FOR THE HEALTH AND WELFARE OF THE TAXPAYER AND/OR HIS OR HER FAMILY OR [ARE] FOR THE PRODUCTION OF INCOME." IRS HANDBOOK § 5.15.1.10(1).

THE ABUSE PREVENTION ACT ALLOWS SOME DEVIATION FROM

THE NATIONAL AND LOCAL STANDARDS, BASED ON ACTUAL EXPENSES. THUS, IT PERMITS A DEBTOR TO INCLUDE "AN ADDITIONAL ALLOWANCE FOR FOOD AND CLOTHING OF UP TO 5 PERCENT OF THE FOOD AND CLOTHING CATEGORIES AS SPECIFIED BY THE NATIONAL STANDARDS," IF THE DEBTOR DEMONSTRATES THAT THE ADDITIONAL ALLOWANCE IS REASONABLE AND NECESSARY. 11 U.S.C. § 707(B)(2)(A)(II)(I). IT ALSO PERMITS A DEBTOR TO CLAIM "AN ALLOWANCE FOR HOUSING AND UTILITIES, IN EXCESS OF THE ALLOWANCE SPECIFIED BY THE

LOCAL STANDARDS * * * BASED ON THE ACTUAL EXPENSES FOR HOME ENERGY COSTS IF THE DEBTOR PROVIDES DOCUMENTATION OF SUCH ACTUAL EXPENSES AND DEMONSTRATES THAT SUCH ACTUAL EXPENSES ARE REASONABLE AND NECESSARY." ID. § 707(B)(2)(A)(II)(V). THE ABUSE PREVENTION ACT ENUMERATES CERTAIN SPECIFIC EXPENSES (WHICH WOULD FALL UNDER THE IRS HANDBOOK'S UNDEFINED "OTHER NECESSARY EXPENSE" CATEGORY) SUCH AS "REASONABLY NECESSARY HEALTH INSURANCE, DISABILITY INSURANCE, AND HEALTH SAVINGS ACCOUNT

EXPENSES FOR THE DEBTOR, THE SPOUSE OF THE DEBTOR, OR THE DEPENDENTS OF THE DEBTOR"; EXPENSES THAT ARE "REASONABLE AND NECESSARY FOR CARE AND SUPPORT OF AN ELDERLY, CHRONICALLY ILL, OR DISABLED HOUSEHOLD MEMBER OR MEMBER OF THE DEBTOR'S IMMEDIATE FAMILY"; AND CERTAIN ACTUAL EDUCATIONAL EXPENSES (UP TO A SPECIFIED AMOUNT) FOR A DEPENDANT'S EDUCATION. ID. § 707(B)(2)(A)(II)(I), (II), (IV).

AFTER THE COURT REDUCES THE DEBTOR'S CURRENT MONTHLY INCOME BY THESE NECESSARY

EXPENSES, THE ABUSE PREVENTION ACT DIRECTS THE COURT TO APPLY A MATHEMATICAL FORMULA AND DETERMINE WHETHER THE RESULT IS ABOVE OR BELOW CERTAIN BENCHMARKS. ID. § 707(B)(2)(A)(I). IF THE RESULTING NUMBER IS ABOVE THE BENCHMARKS, THE COURT "SHALL PRESUME ABUSE EXISTS." IBID. AND, UNLESS THE DEBTOR REBUTS THE PRESUMPTION, THE COURT MAY DISMISS THE CHAPTER 7 PETITION OR, WITH THE DEBTOR'S CONSENT, CONVERT IT TO A PETITION UNDER CHAPTER 11 OR CHAPTER 13. ID. § 707(B)(1). THE PRESUMPTION OF ABUSE CAN BE

[3] EVEN IF THE DEBTOR REBUTS THE PRESUMPTION OF ABUSE, OR IF THE PRESUMPTION NEVER ARISES, A COURT MAY NEVERTHELESS FIND ABUSE IF IT DETERMINES THAT THE DEBTOR FILED IN BAD FAITH, OR IF THE TOTALITY OF THE CIRCUMSTANCES DEMONSTRATE ABUSE. 11 U.S.C. § 707(B)(3).

CONGRESS ENACTED ENFORCEMENT PROVISIONS TO ENSURE THAT THESE REFORMS WOULD BE IMPLEMENTED. UNDER THE ABUSE PREVENTION ACT, THE U.S. TRUSTEE (OR THE BANKRUPTCY ADMINISTRATOR) REVIEWS A CHAPTER 7 DEBTOR'S PETITION AND FILES WITH THE COURT A STATEMENT EXPLAINING WHETHER THE PRESUMPTION OF ABUSE ARISES UNDER SECTION 707(B). ID. § 704(B)(1). IF THE U.S. TRUSTEE DETERMINES THAT THE PRESUMPTION OF ABUSE ARISES, THEN HE FILES EITHER A MOTION TO DISMISS OR CONVERT THE CHAPTER 7 PETITION, OR A STATEMENT EXPLAINING WHY HE BELIEVES SUCH A MOTION IS NOT APPROPRIATE. ID. § 704(B)(2).

THE ABUSE PREVENTION ACT ALSO AMENDED TWO ASPECTS OF BANKRUPTCY PETITIONS UNDER CHAPTER 13, THE PROVISION OF THE BANKRUPTCY CODE UNDER WHICH A DEBTOR REPAYS CREDITORS OUT OF THE DEBTOR'S DISPOSABLE INCOME FOR A SPECIFIED PERIOD IN EXCHANGE FOR DISCHARGE OF DEBTS.

FIRST, THE ABUSE PREVENTION ACT DEFINES "DISPOSABLE INCOME" TO INCLUDE "CURRENT MONTHLY INCOME RECEIVED BY THE DEBTOR

* * * LESS AMOUNTS REASONABLY NECESSARY TO BE EXPENDED." 11 U.S.C. § 1325(B)(2). IF THE DEBTOR'S ANNUALIZED CURRENT MONTHLY INCOME IS BELOW THE MEDIAN FAMILY INCOME FOR A SIMILARLY-SIZED FAMILY IN THE APPLICABLE STATE, THE "AMOUNTS REASONABLY NECESSARY TO BE EXPENDED" INCLUDE AMOUNTS FOR "THE MAINTENANCE OR SUPPORT OF THE DEBTOR OR A DEPENDENT OF THE DEBTOR, OR FOR A DOMESTIC SUPPORT OBLIGATION, THAT FIRST BECOMES PAYABLE AFTER THE DATE THE PETITION IS FILED"; FOR CERTAIN CHARITABLE

CONTRIBUTIONS; AND FOR CERTAIN BUSINESS EXPENSES. IBID. IF THE DEBTOR'S ANNUALIZED CURRENT MONTHLY INCOME EXCEEDS THE MEDIAN FAMILY INCOME FOR A SIMILARLY-SIZED FAMILY IN THE APPLICABLE STATE, THE ABUSE PREVENTION ACT REQUIRES THE COURT TO DETERMINE THE "AMOUNTS REASONABLY NECESSARY TO BE EXPENDED" IN ACCORDANCE WITH 11 U.S.C. § 707(B)(2)(A) AND (B), THAT IS, IN ACCORDANCE WITH THE IRS HANDBOOK'S NATIONAL, LOCAL, AND OTHER STANDARDS, AS MODIFIED BY THE ABUSE PREVENTION ACT. 11 U.S.C. § 1325(B)(3).

SECOND, IF A DEBTOR'S ANNUALIZED CURRENT MONTHLY INCOME EXCEEDS THE APPLICABLE MEDIAN FAMILY INCOME, THE COURT MUST REQUIRE A REPAYMENT PERIOD OF "NOT LESS THAN 5 YEARS." ID. § 1325(B)(4)(A)(II). IF THE DEBTOR'S ANNUALIZED INCOME IS LESS THAN THE MEDIAN, THEN THE REPAYMENT PERIOD IS THREE YEARS. ID. § 1325(B)(4)(A)(I).

BY REPLACING THE BANKRUPTCY CODE'S "PRESUMPTION IN FAVOR OF THE DEBTOR" UNDER CHAPTER 7 "WITH A MANDATORY PRESUMPTION OF ABUSE THAT WOULD ARISE

UNDER CERTAIN CONDITIONS" (H.R. REP. 109-31(I), AT 13), BY MODIFYING THE DISPOSABLE INCOME AND REPAYMENT PERIOD CALCULATIONS UNDER CHAPTER 13, AND BY EMPLOYING MEANS TESTS TO EFFECT THESE CHANGES, CONGRESS ACTED "TO ENSURE THAT DEBTORS REPAY CREDITORS THE MAXIMUM THEY CAN AFFORD" (ID. AT 2).

II. THE PROCEEDINGS BELOW

A. PLAINTIFFS ARE A HUSBAND AND WIFE WHO FILED A CHAPTER 13 PETITION IN THE UNITED STATES BANKRUPTCY COURT FOR THE EASTERN DISTRICT OF TENNESSEE IN NOVEMBER 2006. PLAINTIFFS ALSO BROUGHT A SEPARATE SUIT AGAINST THE UNITED STATES IN THE DISTRICT COURT TO ARGUE THAT THE ABUSE PREVENTION ACT'S MEANS TESTING VIOLATES THE BANKRUPTCY CLAUSE'S UNIFORMITY REQUIREMENT.

THE DISTRICT COURT COMPLAINT ALLEGES THAT PLAINTIFFS' ANNUALIZED CURRENT MONTHLY INCOME IS GREATER THAN THE MEDIAN FAMILY INCOME FOR THE STATE OF TENNESSEE, THE STATE IN WHICH PLAINTIFFS RESIDE, BUT BELOW THE MEDIAN FAMILY INCOME OF OTHER STATES. (R. 2 AMENDED COMPL., P. 4, APX. P. __.)

PLAINTIFFS ALLEGE THAT THEY WOULD HAVE BEEN SUBJECT TO A MOTION TO DISMISS BY THE U.S. TRUSTEE HAD THEY FILED A PETITION UNDER CHAPTER 7 BECAUSE THEY WOULD HAVE BEEN "SUBJECT TO THE PRESUMPTION OF ABUSE UNDER 11 U.S.C. § 707(B)(2)." (R. 2 AMENDED COMPL., P. 6, APX. P. __.) PLAINTIFFS FURTHER ALLEGE THAT, BECAUSE THAT PROSPECT HAD A "CHILLING EFFECT" UPON THEM, THEY FILED A PETITION UNDER CHAPTER 13 INSTEAD OF CHAPTER 7. IBID. PLAINTIFFS' COMPLAINT ALLEGES THAT THEIR CHAPTER 13 PLAN, WHICH WAS CONFIRMED IN

JANUARY 2007, IMPOSES A FIVE-YEAR REPAYMENT PERIOD AND THAT, BECAUSE OF THE MEANS TESTS, THEY WERE UNABLE TO TAKE ADVANTAGE OF MORE GENEROUS INCOME EXCLUSIONS THAT ARE AVAILABLE TO CHAPTER 13 FILERS WHOSE INCOME IS BELOW THE MEDIAN. (R. 2 AMENDED COMPL., PP. 1, 9, APX. PP. __, __.)

PLAINTIFFS' COMPLAINT ASSERTS THAT FIVE PROVISIONS ENACTED BY THE ABUSE PREVENTION ACT VIOLATE THE BANKRUPTCY CLAUSE'S UNIFORMITY PROVISION. PLAINTIFFS CONTEND THAT THE "SAFE HARBOR" CREATED BY 11 U.S.C.

§ 707(B)(7), UNDER WHICH THE PRESUMPTION OF ABUSE DOES NOT ARISE FOR DEBTORS WHOSE INCOME IS LESS THAN THE MEDIAN FAMILY INCOME FOR THE APPLICABLE STATE, IS NOT UNIFORM "BECAUSE IT IS BASED UPON THE APPLICABLE MEDIAN FAMILY INCOME FOR THE STATE OF THE DEBTORS RESIDENCE WHICH VARIES WIDELY FROM STATE TO STATE." (R. 2 AMENDED COMPL., P. 5, APX. P. __.) THEY CLAIM THAT 11 U.S.C. § 707(B)(2)(A)(II) IS NOT UNIFORM BECAUSE THE EXPENSES IT IDENTIFIES TO BE SUBTRACTED FROM A DEBTOR'S CURRENT MONTHLY INCOME "ARE BASED UPON THE NATIONAL AND LOCAL STANDARDS ISSUED BY THE INTERNAL REVENUE SERVICE AND ARE NOT UNIFORM FOR DEBTORS WITH THE SAME ANNUALIZED [CURRENT MONTHLY INCOME] AMONG THE VARIOUS STATES AND AMONG THE VARIOUS COUNTIES OF THE SAME JUDICIAL DISTRICT." (R. 2 AMENDED COMPL., P. 5, APX. P. __.) AND BECAUSE THE U.S. TRUSTEE MAY FILE A MOTION TO DISMISS OR CONVERT UNDER 11 U.S.C. § 704(B) ANY TIME THE PRESUMPTION OF ABUSE ARISES, BUT NOT IF THE DEBTOR'S CURRENT MONTHLY INCOME IS BELOW THE FAMILY MEDIAN INCOME FOR THE APPLICABLE STATE, PLAINTIFFS CLAIM THAT SECTION 704(B) ALSO VIOLATES THE UNIFORMITY REQUIREMENT. (R. 2 AMENDED COMPL., PP. 5-5, APX. PP. __.) FINALLY, PLAINTIFFS CONTEND THAT 11 U.S.C. § 1325(B)(3)'S DETERMINATION OF "AMOUNTS REASONABLY NECESSARY TO BE EXPENDED" AND 11 U.S.C. § 1325(B)(4)'S DETERMINATION OF THE REPAYMENT PERIOD FOR CHAPTER 13 PLANS BOTH LACK UNIFORMITY BECAUSE THEY TURN ON "THE APPLICABLE MEDIAN FAMILY INCOME FOR THE STATE OF THE DEBTORS RESIDENCE WHICH VARIES

WIDELY FROM STATE TO STATE." (R. 2 AMENDED COMPL., P. 5, APX. P. __.)

PLAINTIFFS'S COMPLAINT SOUGHT A DECLARATION THAT THESE FIVE PROVISIONS VIOLATE THE BANKRUPTCY CLAUSE'S UNIFORMITY REQUIREMENT AND AN INJUNCTION, PROHIBITING THE UNITED STATES FROM ENFORCING THOSE PROVISIONS. (R. 2 AMENDED COMPL., P. 10, APX. P. __.)

B. THE PARTIES FILED CROSS-MOTIONS FOR SUMMARY JUDGMENT. THE DISTRICT COURT GRANTED THE GOVERNMENT'S MOTION AND DISMISSED PLAINTIFFS' COMPLAINT. (R. 29 MEMORANDUM, APX. P. __.)

THE DISTRICT COURT BEGAN ITS ANALYSIS "WITH THE PROPOSITION THAT THERE IS A PRESUMPTION THAT BANKRUPTCY LAWS ARE CONSTITUTIONAL." (R. 29 MEMORANDUM, P. 4, APX. P. __.) IT EXPLAINED THAT "[T]HE ISSUE HERE IS VERY SIMPLE AND STRAIGHTFORWARD. IS [THE ABUSE PREVENTION ACT] A UNIFORM LAW ON THE SUBJECT OF BANKRUPTCY?" IBID. THE DISTRICT COURT THEN CANVASSED THE SUPREME COURT'S APPLICATION OF THE BANKRUPTCY CLAUSE OVER THE LAST HUNDRED YEARS. IT NOTED THAT THE SUPREME COURT UPHELD THE

INCORPORATION OF EXEMPTIONS DEFINED BY STATE LAW IN THE BANKRUPTCY ACT OF 1898 AS, "'IN THE CONSTITUTIONAL SENSE, UNIFORM THROUGHOUT THE UNITED STATES'" BECAUSE "'[T]HE GENERAL OPERATION OF THE LAW IS UNIFORM ALTHOUGH IT MAY RESULT IN CERTAIN PARTICULARS DIFFERENTLY IN DIFFERENT STATES.'" (R. 29 MEMORANDUM, P. 4, APX. P. __ (QUOTING HANOVER NAT'L BANK V. MOYSES, 186 U.S. 181 (1902).) THE DISTRICT COURT OBSERVED THAT THE SUPREME COURT UPHELD CONGRESS' INCORPORATION OF STATE FRAUDULENT CONVEYANCE STATUTES ON THE SAME RATIONALE, "EVEN THOUGH THE OPERATION OF THOSE STATUTES VARIED FROM STATE TO STATE." (R. 29 MEMORANDUM, P. 5, APX. P. __ (DISCUSSING STELLWAGEN V. CLUM, 245 U.S. 605 (1918).) AND THE SUPREME COURT ALSO HELD THAT, IN THE ABSENCE OF POSITIVE FEDERAL LAW, "STATE TORT AND CONTRACT LAW DETERMINES THE VALIDITY OF CREDITORS' CLAIMS." (IBID. (DISCUSSING VANSTON BONDHOLDERS PROTECTIVE COMM. V. GREEN, 329 U.S. 156 (1946).) THE DISTRICT COURT DETERMINED THAT THIS PRECEDENT "MAKES IT CLEAR THAT

THE UNIFORMITY REQUIREMENT DOES NOT PROSCRIBE DIFFERENT RESULTS IN DIFFERENT STATES BECAUSE OF STATE LAW VARIATIONS." (IBID.)

THE PLAINTIFFS ARGUED THAT WHILE THE BANKRUPTCY CLAUSE PERMITS CONGRESS TO INCORPORATE STATE LAW CLASSIFICATIONS THAT PRODUCE DIFFERENT RESULTS, THE UNIFORMITY REQUIREMENT PROHIBITS CONGRESS FROM ENACTING FEDERAL STANDARDS THAT HAVE THE SAME EFFECT. (IBID.) THE DISTRICT COURT FOUND THIS ARGUMENT UNPERSUASIVE

"FOR SEVERAL REASONS." (IBID.) FIRST, "[P]LAINTIFFS HAVE SUPPLIED NO PRINCIPLED REASON FOR CONCLUDING THAT VARIATIONS RESULTING FROM FEDERAL STATISTICS CREATE UNCONSTITUTIONAL NON-UNIFORMITY, WHEREAS VARIATIONS RESULTING FROM STATE LAW DO NOT." (IBID.) IN ANY EVENT, "THE EXEMPTIONS THAT PRODUCE DIFFERENT RESULTS IN DIFFERENT STATES ARE ALSO THE RESULT OF FEDERAL LEGISLATION INCORPORATING THOSE EXEMPTIONS INTO BANKRUPTCY LAW." (IBID.) IN FACT, "[T]HE

(R. 29 MEMORANDUM, P. 6, APX. P. __ (DISCUSSING RWY. LABOR EXECUTIVES ASS'N V. GIBBONS, 455 U.S. 457 (1982).) AND EVEN IN THAT CASE, THE SUPREME COURT RECOGNIZED THAT BANKRUPTCY CLAUSE PERMITS CONGRESS "'TO DEFINE CLASSES OF DEBTORS AND TO STRUCTURE RELIEF ACCORDINGLY.'" (R. 29 MEMORANDUM, PP. 6, APX. P. __

(QUOTING GIBBONS, 455 U.S. AT 473).) AND THAT, THE DISTRICT COURT HELD, "IS PRECISELY WHAT CONGRESS HAS DONE IN THE [THE ABUSE PREVENTION ACT]." (IBID.) "DISPOSABLE INCOME MAY VARY FROM PLACE TO PLACE, BUT IT IS BASED ON UNIFORMLY CALCULATED NATIONAL STATISTICS." SUMMARY OF ARGUMENT

I. PLAINTIFFS CHALLENGE FIVE SEPARATE PROVISIONS ENACTED BY

THE ABUSE PREVENTION ACT, BUT PLAINTIFFS LACK STANDING TO CHALLENGE TWO OF THOSE PROVISIONS. 11 U.S.C. § 707(B)(2) ESTABLISHES A PRESUMPTION OF ABUSE, REQUIRING DISMISSAL OR CONVERSION, IF A DEBTOR'S ANNUALIZED CURRENT MONTHLY INCOME IS GREATER THAN THE APPLICABLE MEDIAN FAMILY INCOME AND IF THE DEBTOR'S CURRENT MONTHLY INCOME, WHEN REDUCED BY ALLOWABLE NECESSARY EXPENSES AND SUBJECT TO A MATHEMATICAL FORMULA, IS GREATER THAN A STATUTORY BENCHMARK. AND UNDER 11 U.S.C. §

704(B), THE U.S. TRUSTEE EVALUATES A DEBTOR'S PETITION AND INFORMS THE COURT WHEN HE BELIEVES THE PRESUMPTION OF ABUSE ARISES AND FILES A MOTION TO DISMISS OR CONVERT, WHEN APPROPRIATE.

PLAINTIFFS CHALLENGE SECTION 707(B)(2) BECAUSE, THEY SAY, THEY ARE SUBJECT TO THE PRESUMPTION OF ABUSE. BUT THEY POINT TO NO EVIDENCE IN THE RECORD TO SUBSTANTIATE THAT CLAIM. ALTHOUGH PLAINTIFFS HAVE ESTABLISHED THAT THEIR ANNUALIZED CURRENT MONTHLY INCOME IS ABOVE THE APPLICABLE MEDIAN FAMILY, THEY HAVE NOT

ALLEGED THAT THEIR CURRENT MONTHLY INCOME, WHEN REDUCED AND SUBJECT TO THE MATHEMATICAL FORMULA, IS ABOVE THE STATUTORY BENCHMARK. ACCORDINGLY, PLAINTIFFS HAVE NOT ADEQUATELY ALLEGED THE REQUISITE INJURY TO CHALLENGE EITHER SECTION 704(B) OR SECTION 707(B)(2).

PLAINTIFFS ARGUE THAT THEY HAVE STANDING TO CHALLENGE THESE PROVISIONS BECAUSE A PETITION FILED UNDER CHAPTER 7 THAT IS SUBJECT TO THE PRESUMPTION OF ABUSE CAN BE DISMISSED RATHER THAN

CONVERTED INTO A CHAPTER 13 PROCEEDING, AND BECAUSE THEIR ATTORNEY COULD BE SUBJECT TO FEES AND PENALTIES FOR FILING A PETITION GIVING RISE TO THE PRESUMPTION OF ABUSE. FOR THESE REASONS, THEY SAY SECTIONS 704(B) AND 707(B)(2) COERCED THEM INTO FILING A CHAPTER 13 PETITION. BECAUSE PLAINTIFFS HAVE NOT SHOWN THAT THE PRESUMPTION OF ABUSE WOULD APPLY TO THEIR PETITION, NEITHER OF THESE ARGUMENTS HAS MERIT. AND THEY LACK MERIT EVEN ON THEIR OWN TERMS. A DEBTOR WHO FILES UNDER CHAPTER 7 HAS A RIGHT TO

CONVERT TO A CHAPTER 13 PROCEEDING SO LONG AS THE DEBTOR HAS NOT FILED IN BAD FAITH OR OTHERWISE ACTED INAPPROPRIATELY. AND A DEBTOR'S ATTORNEY IS SUBJECT TO FEES AND PENALTIES ONLY IF HE FILES FRIVOLOUS OR INAPPROPRIATE DOCUMENTS, A SANCTION WHICH APPLIES IN CHAPTER 13 PROCEEDINGS AS WELL.

II. IN ANY EVENT, THE FIVE ABUSE PREVENTION ACT PROVISIONS PLAINTIFFS CHALLENGE ARE A VALID EXERCISE OF CONGRESS' BANKRUPTCY CLAUSE POWER.

A. PLAINTIFFS CONTEND THAT, BECAUSE THE ABUSE PREVENTION ACT PROVISIONS EMPLOY STANDARDS THAT TAKE INTO ACCOUNT REGIONAL ECONOMIC VARIATION, THIS COURT MUST ENGAGE IN SOME TYPE OF HEIGHTENED SCRUTINY, AND THEY SUGGEST THAT IT IS THE GOVERNMENT'S BURDEN TO ESTABLISH THE CONSTITUTIONALITY OF THE PROVISIONS. THAT IS MISTAKEN. ALL CONGRESSIONAL ACTS ARE ENTITLED TO A PRESUMPTION OF CONSTITUTIONALITY AND A PLAINTIFF ALWAYS BEARS THE

BURDEN OF ESTABLISHING INVALIDITY. CONGRESS' USE OF GEOGRAPHIC CLASSIFICATIONS IN A BANKRUPTCY STATUTE DOES NOT CHANGE A PLAINTIFF'S BURDEN. AND, CONTRARY TO PLAINTIFFS' SUGGESTION, WHEN EVALUATING A GEOGRAPHIC CLASSIFICATION USED IN A BANKRUPTCY ACT, THE SUPREME COURT DOES NOT ENGAGE IN HEIGHTENED SCRUTINY. AS IS CLEAR FROM THE COURT'S DECISION IN BLANCHETTE – A CASE INVOLVING AN EXPLICIT GEOGRAPHIC CLASSIFICATION – THE COURT SIMPLY EVALUATES THE TEXT OF THE LEGISLATION AND ANY

LEGISLATIVE HISTORY TO DETERMINE WHETHER THE CLASSIFICATIONS SATISFIES THE UNIFORMITY REQUIREMENT, AS THAT REQUIREMENT HAS BEEN INTERPRETED BY THE COURT.

B. THE SUPREME COURT AND THIS COURT'S PRECEDENT RECOGNIZE THAT THE BANKRUPTCY CLAUSE GIVES CONGRESS BROAD POWER TO FASHION BANKRUPTCY LEGISLATION THAT RESULTS IN REGIONAL VARIATION.

THE SUPREME COURT HAS UPHELD INCORPORATION INTO FEDERAL BANKRUPTCY LAW OF VARIOUS STATE LAWS, EVEN THOUGH THE APPLICATION OF THE

RESULTING LAW PRODUCES DIFFERENT OUTCOMES IN DIFFERENT STATES. THIS PRECEDENT FURTHER SHOWS THAT CONGRESS HAS EXTREMELY BROAD POWER TO DEFINE CLASSES OF DEBTORS AND TO PRESCRIBE DIFFERENT TREATMENT UNDER THE BANKRUPTCY LAWS FOR THE DIFFERENT CLASSES. AND THE SUPREME COURT HAS EXPRESSLY RECOGNIZED THAT CONGRESS HAS THE POWER, UNDER THE BANKRUPTCY CLAUSE, "TO TAKE INTO ACCOUNT DIFFERENCES THAT EXIST BETWEEN DIFFERENT PARTS OF THE COUNTRY." BLANCHETTE, 419

U.S. AT 159. INDEED, THE SUPREME COURT HAS ONLY ONCE INVALIDED A BANKRUPTCY LAW, AND THAT WAS WHEN CONGRESS CREATED A PRIVATE BANKRUPTCY BILL TO GOVERN THE BANKRUPTCY OF A SINGLE DEBTOR, AN ACTION THE BANKRUPTCY CLAUSE WAS MEANT TO PREVENT.

THE SUPREME COURT'S AND THIS COURT'S SETTLED PRECEDENT ESTABLISH THAT THE ABUSE PREVENTION ACT PROVISIONS ARE A VALID EXERCISE OF CONGRESS' BANKRUPTCY CLAUSE POWER. SECTIONS 707(B)(7), 1325(B)(3), AND 1325(B)(4) DISTINGUISH AMONG

CLASSES OF DEBTORS AND PRESCRIBE DIFFERENT TREATMENT FOR EACH CLASS OF DEBTORS. THE TREATMENT THE MEMBERS OF EACH CLASS RECEIVE IS UNIFORM THROUGHOUT THE UNITED STATES. THAT IS ALL THE BANKRUPTCY CLAUSE REQUIRES. SIMILARLY, CONGRESS WAS AUTHORIZED TO ADOPT THE MEANS TEST ESTABLISHED BY SECTION 707(B)(2)(A) AS A MECHANISM FOR ENSURING THAT DEBTORS REPAY CREDITORS TO THE MAXIMUM THEY CAN AFFORD. IN ADDRESSING THAT PROBLEM, CONGRESS WAS NOT REQUIRED TO IGNORE THE

VARIATIONS IN REGIONAL ECONOMIES THAT AFFECT DEBTOR'S ABILITY TO REPAY. AND BECAUSE THAT PROVISION IS WITHIN CONGRESS' AUTHORITY, SO TOO IS SECTION 704(B), WHICH CONGRESS ENACTED TO ENFORCE THE REQUIREMENTS OF SECTION 707(B)(2).

PLAINTIFFS' ARGUMENTS TO THE CONTRARY LACK MERIT. FIRST, THEY CONTEND THAT, WHILE CONGRESS MAY PERMISSIBLY INCORPORATE STATE LAW INTO BANKRUPTCY STATUTES, IT MAY NOT PERMISSIBLY EMPLOY REGIONAL CLASSIFICATIONS AS A MATTER OF FEDERAL LAW. THAT CONTENTION IS FLATLY INCONSISTENT WITH THE BANKRUPTCY AND TAX CASES IN WHICH THE SUPREME COURT UPHELD FEDERAL STATUTES THAT EMPLOY REGIONAL CLASSIFICATIONS AGAINST UNIFORMITY CHALLENGES. THE ARGUMENT ALSO IGNORES THE COURT'S REPEATED HOLDING THAT CONGRESS MAY TAKE INTO ACCOUNT REGIONAL DIFFERENCES WHEN ENACTING BANKRUPTCY LEGISLATION.

NEXT, PLAINTIFFS ARGUE THAT THE ABUSE PREVENTION ACT PROVISIONS ARE INCONSISTENT

WITH THE SUPREME COURT'S TREATMENT OF UNIFORMITY IN ITS TAXATION CASES. BUT THAT, TOO, IS MISTAKEN. THE COURT HAS UPHELD FEDERAL TAXES THAT RESULT IN REGIONAL VARIATION WHEN IT DETERMINES THAT CONGRESS DID NOT ENACT THE TAX FOR REASONS OF FAVORITISM TOWARDS OR DISCRIMINATION AGAINST THE CITIZENS OF A STATE. PLAINTIFFS HAVE NOT ESTABLISHED THAT CONGRESS ACTED WITH THAT IMPROPER INTENTION IN ENACTING THE ABUSE PREVENTION ACT OR THAT THE STATUTE HAS

DISCRIMINATORY (AS OPPOSED TO DISPARATE) EFFECT.

FINALLY, PLAINTIFFS CONTEND THAT THE MECHANISM CONGRESS ADOPTED DOES NOT APPROPRIATELY REMEDY THE EVIL CONGRESS SOUGHT TO REMEDY. BUT WHETHER CONGRESS' CHOICE OF REMEDY WAS WISE HAS NO BEARING ON WHETHER THE CLASSIFICATION CONGRESS EMPLOYED SATISFY THE UNIFORMITY REQUIREMENT.

ARGUMENT

I. BECAUSE THEY HAVE NOT ADEQUATELY ALLEGED THAT THEY ARE SUBJECT TO THE PRESUMPTION OF ABUSE, PLAINTIFFS LACK STANDING TO CHALLENGE 11 U.S.C. §§ 704(B) AND 707(B)(2).

PLAINTIFFS HERE CHALLENGE FIVE SEPARATE PROVISIONS OF THE ABUSE PREVENTION ACT. BUT THEY HAVE FAILED TO ESTABLISH THEIR STANDING TO CONTEST THE VALIDITY OF TWO OF THOSE PROVISIONS.

A. ARTICLE III, SECTION 2 OF THE CONSTITUTION LIMITS THE FEDERAL COURTS' JURISDICTION TO "CASES" AND "CONTROVERSIES." "ONE COMPONENT OF THE CASE-OR-CONTROVERSY REQUIREMENT IS STANDING, WHICH REQUIRES A PLAINTIFF TO DEMONSTRATE THE NOW-FAMILIAR ELEMENTS OF INJURY IN FACT, CAUSATION, AND REDRESSABILITY." LANCE V. COFFMAN, 127 S. CT. 1194, 1196 (2007). TO ALLEGE INJURY IN FACT, A PLAINTIFF MUST ALLEGE "AN INVASION OF A LEGALLY PROTECTED INTEREST WHICH IS (A) CONCRETE AND PARTICULARIZED, AND (B) ACTUAL OR IMMINENT, NOT CONJECTURAL OR HYPOTHETICAL." LUJAN V. DEFENDERS OF WILDLIFE, 504 U.S. 555, 560 (1992).

"[A] PLAINTIFF MUST DEMONSTRATE STANDING FOR EACH CLAIM HE SEEKS TO PRESS * * * [AND] MUST DEMONSTRATE STANDING SEPARATELY FOR EACH FORM OF RELIEF SOUGHT." DAIMLERCHRYSLER CORP. V. CUNO, 126 S. CT. 1854, 1867 (2006). TO HAVE STANDING FOR FORWARD-LOOKING, INJUNCTIVE RELIEF, SUCH AS IS SOUGHT HERE, A PLAINTIFF MUST SHOW THAT HE FACES "A REAL AND IMMEDIATE THREAT" OF FUTURE INJURY. ADARAND CONSTRUCTORS, INC. V. PENA, 515 U.S. 200, 211 (1995).

"[S]TANDING CANNOT BE INFERRED ARGUMENTATIVELY FROM

AVERMENTS IN THE PLEADINGS, BUT RATHER MUST AFFIRMATIVELY APPEAR IN THE RECORD," AND "IT IS THE BURDEN OF THE PARTY WHO SEEKS THE EXERCISE OF JURISDICTION IN HIS FAVOR, CLEARLY TO ALLEGE FACTS DEMONSTRATING THAT HE IS A PROPER PARTY TO INVOKE JUDICIAL RESOLUTION OF THE DISPUTE." SPENCER V. KEMNA, 523 U.S. 1, 10-11 (1998) (QUOTATION MARKS OMITTED). MOREOVER, "ARTICLE III STANDING IS A JURISDICTIONAL REQUIREMENT THAT CANNOT BE WAIVED, AND SUCH MAY BE BROUGHT UP AT ANY TIME IN THE PROCEEDING." ZURICH INS. CO. V. LOGITRANS, INC., 297 F.3D 528, 531 (6TH CIR. 2002).

B. HERE, PLAINTIFFS HAVE FAILED TO SHOW THAT THEY HAVE BEEN INJURED BY 11 U.S.C. § 707(B)(2), THE ABUSE PREVENTION ACT MEANS TEST ESTABLISHING THAT A DEBTOR WITH AN ANNUALIZED CURRENT MONTHLY INCOME EXCEEDING THE APPLICABLE MEDIAN FAMILY INCOME IS NOT SUBJECT TO THE PRESUMPTION OF ABUSE.

PLAINTIFFS' COMPLAINT ALLEGES "THAT, BECAUSE THEIR ANNUALIZED [CURRENT MONTHLY INCOME]

EXCEEDS THE MEDIAN FAMILY INCOME FOR RESIDENTS OF THE STATE OF TENNESSEE, [PLAINTIFFS] ARE SUBJECT TO THE PRESUMPTION OF ABUSE UNDER 11 U.S.C. § 707(B)(2)." (R. 2 AMENDED COMPL., P. 9, APX. P. __.) AND, ON APPEAL, THE PRINCIPAL INJURY ON WHICH THE PLAINTIFFS RELY TO ESTABLISH THEIR STANDING TO CHALLENGE SECTION 707(B)(2) IS THE SUPPOSED APPLICATION OF THE PRESUMPTION OF ABUSE TO THEM. PLS.' BR. 35-37. BUT THE FACT THAT A DEBTOR'S ANNUALIZED CURRENT MONTHLY INCOME EXCEEDS THE MEDIAN FAMILY INCOME IS NOT ITSELF

SUFFICIENT TO CREATE THE PRESUMPTION OF ABUSE. AS EXPLAINED ABOVE, IN THAT CIRCUMSTANCE, A COURT MUST REDUCE THE DEBTOR'S CURRENT MONTHLY INCOME BY ALLOWABLE NECESSARY EXPENSES. 11 U.S.C. § 707(B)(2)(A)(I). AFTER THE COURT REDUCES THE DEBTOR'S CURRENT MONTHLY INCOME, THE ABUSE PREVENTION ACT REQUIRES IT TO APPLY A MATHEMATICAL FORMULA AND TO COMPARE THE RESULTING NUMBER TO SPECIFIED BENCHMARKS. IBID. IF THE RESULTING NUMBER IS BELOW THE BENCHMARKS, THEN THE PRESUMPTION OF ABUSE DOES NOT ARISE. IBID.

AT NO POINT IN THE DISTRICT COURT DID PLAINTIFFS ALLEGED THAT, AFTER THE APPROPRIATE REDUCTIONS AND CALCULATIONS, THEY WOULD BE SUBJECT TO THE PRESUMPTION OF ABUSE. ON APPEAL, PLAINTIFFS STATE THAT "SECTION 707(B)(2) REQUIRES THE BANKRUPTCY COURT TO 'PRESUME ABUSE EXISTS' UNDER CERTAIN MATHEMATICAL CALCULATIONS, WHICH THE APPELLANTS ADMITTEDLY EXCEED." BR. 35 (EMPHASIS ADDED). BUT A PLAINTIFF MAY NOT ESTABLISH

STANDING BY "ADMITTING" INJURY, AS PLAINTIFFS ATTEMPT TO DO. HE OR SHE MUST, INSTEAD, AVER SPECIFIC FACTS TO ESTABLISH STANDING. SEE, E.G., SPENCER, 523 U.S. AT 11 ("[I]T IS THE BURDEN OF THE PARTY WHO SEEKS THE EXERCISE OF JURISDICTION IN HIS FAVOR, CLEARLY TO ALLEGE FACTS DEMONSTRATING THAT HE IS A PROPER PARTY TO INVOKE JUDICIAL RESOLUTION OF THE DISPUTE." (QUOTATION MARKS OMITTED)). PLAINTIFFS POINT TO NOTHING IN THE RECORD TO SUPPORT THEIR CLAIM THAT THEIR CURRENT MONTHLY INCOME, WHEN REDUCED

BY ALLOWABLE EXPENSES AND SUBJECT TO THE STATUTORY CALCULATION, WOULD EXCEED THE BENCHMARKS. ACCORDINGLY, THEY HAVE NOT ADEQUATELY ALLEGED THAT THEY ARE SUBJECT TO THE PRESUMPTION OF ABUSE, AND SO THEY LACK STANDING TO CHALLENGE SECTION 707(B)(2).[4]

[4] PLAINTIFFS WERE CLEARLY ON NOTICE IN THE DISTRICT COURT THAT THEY HAD FAILED TO ADEQUATELY ALLEGE THAT THEY WOULD BE SUBJECT TO THE PRESUMPTION OF ABUSE. (SEE, E.G., R. 15 DEFENDANTS' STATEMENT OF MATERIAL FACTS, P. 3, APX. P. __ ("[P]LAINTIFFS, AND DEBTORS GENERALLY, ARE NOT SUBJECT TO A PRESUMPTION OF ABUSE IN A CHAPTER 7 CASE MERELY BECAUSE THEIR ANNUALIZED CURRENT MONTHLY INCOME EXCEEDS THE MEDIAN FAMILY INCOME FOR THE

AND BECAUSE PLAINTIFFS HAVE NOT ESTABLISHED THAT THEY WOULD BE SUBJECT TO THE PRESUMPTION OF ABUSE, THEY ALSO LACK STANDING TO CHALLENGE 11 U.S.C. § 704(B), UNDER WHICH THE U.S. TRUSTEE INFORMS THE COURT WHEN HE BELIEVES THE PRESUMPTION OF ABUSE APPLIES.

C. ON APPEAL, PLAINTIFFS IDENTIFY TWO OTHER INJURIES THEY CONTEND THEY HAVE

STATE WHERE THEY RESIDE.").) PLAINTIFFS TOOK NO STEPS TO AMEND THEIR COMPLAINT IN LIGHT OF THIS OMISSION. IN ANY EVENT, WHETHER OR NOT THEY WERE ON NOTICE, THE BURDEN OF ESTABLISHING STANDING IS THE PLAINTIFFS'. CUNO, 126 S. CT. AT 1867.

SUFFERED AS A RESULT OF SECTIONS 704(B) AND 707(B)(2). FIRST, THE ARGUE THAT, HAD THEY FILED A PETITION UNDER CHAPTER 7 AND, HAD THE COURT FOUND ABUSE, THEIR ATTORNEY COULD POSSIBLY HAVE BEEN SUBJECT TO FEES AND CIVIL PENALTIES. PLS.' BR. 36. THEY ALSO ARGUE THAT, BECAUSE WERE THEY SUBJECT TO THE PRESUMPTION OF ABUSE, THE COURT COULD DISMISS THEIR CHAPTER 7 PETITION OUTRIGHT RATHER THAN CONVERT TO A CHAPTER 13 CASE BECAUSE THERE IS NO ABSOLUTE RIGHT TO CONVERT. PLS.' BR. 35-36. FOR THESE REASONS, PLAINTIFFS CONTEND THEY WERE "COERCED" INTO FILING A CHAPTER 13 PETITION. ID. AT 36. AND THEY ARGUE THAT IT IS TO AVOID SUCH THREATENED INJURY THAT THE SUPREME COURT HAS RECOGNIZED THAT A PLAINTIFF NEED NOT VIOLATE THE LAW IN ORDER TO HAVE STANDING TO CHALLENGE IT, IF THE LAW EFFECTIVELY COERCED COMPLIANCE. ID. AT 32-33 (DISCUSSING MEDIMMUNE, INC. V. GENETECH, INC., 127 S. CT. 764 (2007)).

BUT PLAINTIFFS HAVE NOT ESTABLISHED THAT THEY WERE COERCED INTO FILING A CHAPTER 13 PETITION. THE U.S. TRUSTEE MAKES

PUBLICLY AVAILABLE THE RELEVANT DATA UNDER THE NATIONAL AND LOCAL STANDARDS. SEE, E.G., U.S. TRUSTEE, MEANS TESTING: CENSUS BUREAU, IRS DATA AND ADMINISTRATIVE EXPENSES MULTIPLIERS (CASES FILED BETWEEN OCTOBER 1, 2006, AND JANUARY 31, 2007, INCLUSIVE), AVAILABLE AT HTTP://WWW.USDOJ.GOV/UST/EO/BAPCPA/20061001/MEANSTESTING.HTM. AND THE REMAINING RELEVANT DATA – A DEBTOR'S OTHER NECESSARY EXPENSES ACTUALLY INCURRED – IS IN THE POSSESSION OF EACH DEBTOR. THUS,

PROSPECTIVE DEBTORS (OR THEIR ATTORNEYS) CAN DETERMINE FOR THEMSELVES WHETHER THEIR CURRENT MONTHLY INCOME WHEN REDUCED BY ALLOWABLE NECESSARY EXPENSES AND SUBJECT TO THE STATUTORY FORMULA WILL COME WITHIN THE BENCHMARKS, THUS ELIMINATING THE PRESUMPTION OF ABUSE. AS EXPLAINED, PLAINTIFFS HAVE NOT ALLEGED THAT THEIR REDUCED CURRENT MONTHLY INCOME WOULD PRODUCE THE PRESUMPTION OF ABUSE. ACCORDINGLY, THEY HAVE NOT ADEQUATELY ALLEGED THAT THEY WERE "COERCED" INTO FILING A CHAPTER 13 PETITION.

NOR DOES THE ABSENCE OF AN "ABSOLUTE" RIGHT TO CONVERT A CHAPTER 7 PETITION INTO A CHAPTER 13 CASE DEMONSTRATE COERCION. PLAINTIFFS CANNOT DISPUTE THAT THE ABUSE PREVENTION ACT GIVES A DEBTOR THE RIGHT "[TO] CONVERT A CASE UNDER THIS CHAPTER TO A CASE UNDER CHAPTER 11, 12, OR 13 OF THIS TITLE AT ANY TIME" IF THE CASE HAS NOT PREVIOUSLY BEEN CONVERTED, PROVIDED THAT THE DEBTOR IS ELIGIBLE TO BE A DEBTOR UNDER THE NEW CHAPTER.

11 U.S.C. § 706(A), (D). RELYING ON THE SUPREME COURT'S RECENT DECISION IN IN RE MARRAMA, PLAINTIFFS SUGGEST THAT, HAD THEY FILED A CHAPTER 7 PETITION, AND HAD THE PRESUMPTION OF ABUSE APPLIED, "THERE IS NOTHING IN THE SECTION 707(B) THAT PREVENTS THE BANKRUPTCY COURT FROM SIMPLY DISMISSING THE CASE." PLS.' BR. 15; SEE ID. AT 16 (CITING IN RE MARRAMA, 127 S. CT. 1105 (2007)).

HOWEVER, IN IN RE MARRAMA, THE SUPREME COURT HELD THAT THE DEBTOR "FORFEITED HIS RIGHT" TO CONVERT HIS CHAPTER 7 PROCEEDING TO A CHAPTER 13

PROCEEDING BECAUSE THE DEBTOR'S REQUEST TO CONVERT WAS MADE IN BAD FAITH AND WOULD BE AN ABUSE OF THE BANKRUPTCY PROCESS. 127 S. CT. AT 1109. FOR THAT REASON, THE COURT HELD, THE DEBTOR WOULD NOT BE ELIGIBLE TO BE A DEBTOR UNDER CHAPTER 13. ID. AT 1109-1111. ACCORDINGLY, "THE TEXT OF § 706(D)," WHICH AUTHORIZES CONVERSION ONLY IF THE DEBTOR COULD BE A DEBTOR UNDER THE NEW CHAPTER, "PROVIDES ADEQUATE AUTHORITY FOR THE DENIAL OF HIS MOTION TO CONVERT." ID. AT 1111.

PLAINTIFFS CITE NO AUTHORITY TO SUPPORT THEIR SUGGESTION THAT, IN THE ABSENCE OF BAD FAITH OR OTHER IMPROPRIETY ON THE PART OF A DEBTOR, A COURT WOULD DISMISS A CHAPTER 7 PETITION RATHER THAN COVERT IT TO A CHAPTER 13 PROCEEDING, IF THE DEBTOR WOULD PREFER CONVERSION TO DISMISSAL. IN FACT, DISMISSAL IN THAT CONTEXT WOULD BE INCONSISTENT WITH THE STATUTORY TEXT. COMPARE 11 U.S.C. § 706(A), (D) (ESTABLISHING A RIGHT TO CONVERT A CHAPTER 7 PETITION INTO A CHAPTER 13 CASE "AT ANY TIME" IF THE DEBTOR IS ELIGIBLE TO BE A DEBTOR UNDER CHAPTER 13 AND THE CASE HAS NOT PREVIOUSLY BEEN CONVERTED) WITH ID. § 707(B)(1) (AUTHORIZING A COURT TO "DISMISS A CASE FILED BY AN INDIVIDUAL DEBTOR UNDER [CHAPTER 7] WHOSE DEBTS ARE PRIMARILY CONSUMER DEBTS, OR, WITH THE DEBTOR'S CONSENT, CONVERT SUCH A CASE TO A CASE UNDER CHAPTER 11 OR 13 OF THIS TITLE, IF IT FINDS THAT THE GRANTING OF RELIEF WOULD BE AN ABUSE OF THE PROVISIONS OF THIS CHAPTER).

SIMILARLY, THE POSSIBILITY THAT PLAINTIFFS' ATTORNEY

COULD BE SUBJECT TO FEES AND CIVIL PENALTIES IF THE COURT DETERMINED THAT PLAINTIFFS' CHAPTER 7 PETITION WAS AN ABUSE DOES NOT SHOW THAT THEIR FILING UNDER CHAPTER 13 WAS COERCED. UNDER 11 U.S.C. § 707(B)(4), A COURT MAY IMPOSE FEES AND PENALTIES IF IT DETERMINES THAT THE DEBTOR'S ATTORNEY "VIOLATED RULE 9011 OF THE FEDERAL RULES OF BANKRUPTCY PROCEDURE." THAT RULE IS THE "BANKRUPTCY ANALOG TO FEDERAL RULE OF CIVIL PROCEDURE 11." H.R. REP. 109-31(I), AT 14 N.68. IT "AUTHORIZES A COURT TO IMPOSE

SANCTIONS AGAINST AN ATTORNEY OR PARTY WHO COMMENCES A FRIVOLOUS ACTION[] OR FILES OTHER INAPPROPRIATE DOCUMENTS IN VIOLATION OF THIS RULE'S REQUIREMENTS." IBID. IT IS UTTERLY MERITLESS TO SUGGEST, AS PLAINTIFFS DO, THAT A PARTY MAY BE COERCED INTO FILING UNDER CHAPTER 13 BECAUSE OF THE POSSIBILITY THAT THE PARTY'S ATTORNEY COULD BE SANCTIONED UNDER CHAPTER 7 FOR MAKING FRIVOLOUS OR OTHERWISE INAPPROPRIATE FILINGS. THAT IS ESPECIALLY SO BECAUSE AN ATTORNEY IS SUBJECT TO

SANCTIONS FOR MAKING INAPPROPRIATE FILINGS IN CHAPTER 13 PROCEEDINGS AS WELL. SEE FED. R. BANKRUPTCY 9011(C).

BECAUSE PLAINTIFFS HAVE NOT ESTABLISHED THAT THEIR REDUCED MONTHLY INCOME FALLS ABOVE THE STATUTORY BENCHMARKS, THEY HAVE NOT ESTABLISHED THAT 11 U.S.C. §§ 704(B) AND 707(B)(2) HAVE INJURED THEM OR WOULD CAUSE THEM FUTURE INJURY, SHOULD THEY SEEK TO CONVERT THEIR PETITION TO A CHAPTER 7 PROCEEDING. ACCORDINGLY, THEY LACK STANDING TO CHALLENGE

THOSE PROVISIONS AND TO SEEK AN INJUNCTION TO PROHIBIT THEIR ENFORCEMENT.[5]

[5] WE DO NOT DISPUTE THAT PLAINTIFFS HAVE STANDING TO CHALLENGE 11 U.S.C. §§ 707(B)(7) AND 1325. PLAINTIFFS HAVE ALLEGED THAT THEIR ANNUALIZED CURRENT MONTHLY INCOME EXCEEDS THE MEDIAN FAMILY INCOME. THUS, IT "AFFIRMATIVELY APPEAR[S] IN THE RECORD" THAT PLAINTIFFS RECEIVE LESS FAVORABLE TREATMENT UNDER THOSE PROVISIONS THAN DO DEBTORS WHOSE CURRENT MONTHLY INCOME FALLS BELOW THE MEDIAN. SPENCER, 523 U.S. AT 11 (QUOTATION MARKS OMITTED).

II. THE ABUSE PREVENTION ACT AMENDMENTS SATISFY THE BANKRUPTCY CLAUSE'S UNIFORMITY REQUIREMENT.

A. THERE IS NO HEIGHTENED SCRUTINY FOR UNIFORMITY CHALLENGES TO BANKRUPTCY STATUTES EMPLOYING GEOGRAPHIC CLASSIFICATIONS.

As an initial matter, we address plaintiffs' contention that the court must employ some type of heightened scrutiny in reviewing the constitutionality of the Abuse Prevention Act amendments. Plaintiffs and their amicus attack the district court for "start[ing] with the proposition that there is a PRESUMPTION THAT BANKRUPTCY LAWS ARE CONSTITUTIONAL." (R. 29 MEMORANDUM, P. 4, APX. P. __.) THEY ARGUE THAT THE DISTRICT COURT ERRED BY SUPPOSEDLY CONDUCTING A "DEFERENTIAL" REVIEW OF THE ABUSE PREVENTION ACT PROVISIONS CHALLENGED HERE. PLS.' BR. 30. INSTEAD, THEY CONTEND, THE DISTRICT COURT SHOULD HAVE ENGAGED IN A "CLOSE" (ID. AT 31) OR "PROBING" (AMICUS BR. 15) INQUIRY OF THE PROVISIONS TO DETERMINE WHETHER THEY VIOLATE THE BANKRUPTCY CLAUSE'S UNIFORMITY REQUIREMENT.

THAT ARGUMENT IS INCORRECT. THE SUPREME COURT HAS MANY TIMES STATED THAT "[W]HENEVER CALLED UPON TO JUDGE THE CONSTITUTIONALITY OF AN ACT OF CONGRESS * * * THE COURT ACCORDS GREAT WEIGHT TO THE DECISIONS OF CONGRESS." ROSTKER V. GOLDBERG, 453 U.S. 57, 63 (1981); SEE ALSO UNITED STATES V. MORRISON, 529 U.S. 598, 607 (2000). IT IS FOR THIS REASON THAT COURTS BEGIN, AS DID THE DISTRICT COURT HERE, WITH THE PRESUMPTION THAT A CONGRESSIONAL ENACTMENT IS CONSTITUTIONAL. SEE, E.G., MORRISON, 529 U.S. AT 607 ("WITH

THIS PRESUMPTION OF CONSTITUTIONALITY IN MIND, WE TURN TO THE QUESTION WHETHER § 13981 FALLS WITHIN CONGRESS' POWER UNDER ARTICLE I, § 8, OF THE CONSTITUTION."). AND COURTS INVALIDATE A STATUTE ONLY IF A PLAINTIFF ESTABLISHES THAT THE PRESUMPTION HAS BEEN OVERCOME. SEE, E.G., WALTERS V. NAT'L ASS'N OF RADIATION SURVIVORS, 473 U.S. 305, 366 (1985) (STEVENS, J., DISSENTING) ("THE COURT CORRECTLY NOTES THAT THE PRESUMPTION OF CONSTITUTIONALITY THAT ATTACHES TO EVERY ACT OF CONGRESS REQUIRES THE CHALLENGER TO BEAR THE BURDEN OF DEMONSTRATING ITS INVALIDITY.").

PLAINTIFFS AND THEIR AMICUS CONTEND THAT WHEN CONGRESS EMPLOYS GEOGRAPHIC CLASSIFICATIONS IN A BANKRUPTCY STATUTE, COURTS MUST ENGAGE IN SOME UNSPECIFIED HEIGHTENED SCRUTINY. PLS.' BR. 30-31; AMICUS BR. 14. BUT THAT IS MISTAKEN, AS THE REGIONAL RAIL REORGANIZATION ACT CASE SHOWS. THERE, THE SUPREME COURT CONSIDERED A UNIFORMITY CHALLENGE TO A BANKRUPTCY STATUTE THAT, BY ITS TERMS, APPLIED ONLY TO

RAILROADS IN A SPECIFIED GEOGRAPHIC REGION. SEE BLANCHETTE, 419 U.S. AT 108 N.2, 156. IN EVALUATING THE STATUTE, THE COURT GAVE NO INDICATION THAT GEOGRAPHIC CLASSIFICATIONS ARE INHERENTLY SUSPECT. SEE ID. AT 158-61. INSTEAD, THE COURT UPHELD THE STATUTE AFTER DETERMINING THAT IT DID NOT VIOLATE THE UNIFORMITY REQUIREMENT, AS THAT REQUIREMENT HAS LONG BEEN CONSTRUED BY THE COURT. IBID.

PLAINTIFFS AND THEIR AMICUS RELY ON THE SUPREME COURT'S DECISION IN UNITED STATES V. PTASYNSKI, 462 U.S. 74 (1983), TO SUPPORT THEIR CONTENTION THAT COURTS MUST ENGAGE IN HEIGHTENED SCRUTINY WHEN EVALUATING UNIFORMITY CHALLENGES TO GEOGRAPHIC CLASSIFICATIONS. PLS.' BR. 30-31; AMICUS BR. 14. BUT PTASYNSKI DOES NOT SUPPORT THEIR ARGUMENT. PTASYNSKI INVOLVED A STATUTE THAT GAVE FAVORABLE TAX TREATMENT TO CERTAIN ALASKAN OIL. PLAINTIFFS THERE ARGUED THAT THE TAX VIOLATED THE CONSTITUTION'S REQUIREMENT THAT TAXES BE "UNIFORM THROUGHOUT THE UNITED STATES." 462 U.S. AT 80 (QUOTING U.S. CONST.

ART. I, § 8, CL. 1). THE COURT EXPLAINED THAT THE UNIFORMITY CLAUSE DOES NOT PROHIBIT CONGRESS "FROM CONSIDERING GEOGRAPHICALLY ISOLATED PROBLEMS." ID. AT 84. BUT, WHEN CONGRESS "FRAME[S] A TAX IN GEOGRAPHIC TERMS, [THE COURT] WILL EXAMINE THE CLASSIFICATION CLOSELY TO SEE IF THERE IS ACTUAL GEOGRAPHIC DISCRIMINATION," THE EVIL MEANT TO BE AVOIDED BY THE UNIFORMITY REQUIREMENT. ID. AT 85; SEE ID. AT 81 (EXPLAINING THAT THE UNIFORMITY REQUIREMENT WAS ADOPTED TO PREVENT THE

NATIONAL GOVERNMENT FROM USING "ITS POWER OVER COMMERCE TO THE DISADVANTAGE OF PARTICULAR STATES"). IN ENGAGING IN THIS "CLOSE[]" EXAMINATION, THE COURT DID NOT SHIFT THE BURDEN OF PERSUASION TO THE GOVERNMENT OR ASSUME THE GEOGRAPHIC CLASSIFICATION WAS INHERENTLY SUSPECT. INSTEAD, IT SIMPLY EXAMINED THE STATUTORY TEXT AND LEGISLATIVE HISTORY FOR EVIDENCE "THAT CONGRESS SOUGHT TO BENEFIT ALASKA FOR REASONS THAT WOULD OFFEND THE PURPOSE OF THE

CLAUSE." ID. AT 85. FINDING NONE, THE COURT UPHELD THE PROVISION.

HERE, IT IS PLAINTIFFS' BURDEN TO SHOW THAT THE ABUSE PREVENTION ACT PROVISIONS THEY CHALLENGE ARE NOT CONSISTENT WITH "THE FLEXIBILITY INHERENT IN" THE UNIFORMITY REQUIREMENT. ID. AT 158. THE PROVISIONS' USE OF GEOGRAPHIC CLASSIFICATIONS IN NO WAY LESSENS OR SHIFTS PLAINTIFF'S BURDEN. AS THE DISTRICT COURT DETERMINED, AND AS WE EXPLAIN BELOW, PLAINTIFFS HAVE NOT ESTABLISHED THAT THE ABUSE PREVENTION ACT PROVISIONS THEY CHALLENGE ARE UNCONSTITUTIONAL.

B. THE ABUSE PREVENTION ACT ESTABLISHES CLASSIFICATIONS THAT ARE UNIFORM WITHIN THE MEANING OF THE BANKRUPTCY CLAUSE.

1. THE CONSTITUTION AUTHORIZES CONGRESS TO ENACT "UNIFORM LAWS ON THE SUBJECT OF BANKRUPTCIES THROUGHOUT THE UNITED STATES." U.S. CONST. ART. I, § 8, CL. 4. PRIOR TO THE CONSTITUTION'S RATIFICATION, STATES WOULD RELIEVE INDIVIDUALS OF THEIR DEBTS BY ENACTING PRIVATE ACTS. GIBBONS, 455 U.S. AT 472. BUT GIVEN EACH

STATE'S SOVEREIGN STATUS, IT WAS UNCLEAR WHETHER ONE STATE HAD TO RECOGNIZE THE DEBT RELIEF GIVEN BY ANOTHER. IBID.; SEE CENT. VA. CMTY. COLLEGE V. KATZ, 546 U.S. 356, 377 (2006) ("[TH]E FRAMERS, IN ADOPTING THE BANKRUPTCY CLAUSE, PLAINLY INTENDED TO GIVE CONGRESS THE POWER TO REDRESS THE RAMPANT INJUSTICE RESULTING FROM STATES' REFUSAL TO RESPECT ONE ANOTHER'S DISCHARGE ORDERS."). FOR THIS REASON, "[U]NIFORMITY AMONG STATE DEBTOR INSOLVENCY LAWS WAS AN IMPOSSIBILITY AND THE PRACTICE OF PASSING PRIVATE

BANKRUPTCY LAWS WAS SUBJECT TO ABUSE IF THE LEGISLATORS WERE LESS THAN HONEST." GIBBONS, 455 U.S. AT 472. RESPONDING TO THIS PROBLEM, THE FRAMERS ADOPTED THE CONTRACT CLAUSE, WHICH "PROHIBITS THE STATES FROM ENACTING DEBTOR RELIEF LAWS WHICH DISCHARGE THE DEBTOR FROM HIS OBLIGATIONS." ID. AT 472 N.14. AND IT ADOPTED THE BANKRUPTCY CLAUSE "TO PROVIDE CONGRESS WITH THE POWER TO ENACT UNIFORM LAWS ON THE SUBJECT ENFORCEABLE AMONG THE STATES" AND "TO PROHIBIT CONGRESS FROM ENACTING PRIVATE BANKRUPTCY LAWS." ID. AT 472.

IN LIGHT OF THIS PURPOSE, THE SUPREME COURT HAS CONSISTENTLY INTERPRETED THE BANKRUPTCY CLAUSE PRINCIPALLY AS A BROAD GRANT OF AUTHORITY TO CONGRESS RATHER THAN A RESTRICTION ON CONGRESSIONAL POWER. THUS, IN ONE OF THE EARLIEST CASES INTERPRETING THAT PROVISION, CHIEF JUSTICE MARSHALL EXPLAINED THAT: "THE PECULIAR TERMS OF THE GRANT CERTAINLY DESERVE NOTICE. CONGRESS IS NOT AUTHORIZED MERELY TO PASS LAWS, THE OPERATION OF WHICH SHALL BE UNIFORM, BUT TO ESTABLISH UNIFORM LAWS ON THE SUBJECT THROUGHOUT THE UNITED STATES." STURGES V. CROWNINSHIELD, 17 U.S. (4 WHEAT.) 122, 193-94 (1819); SEE IN RE DEHON, INC., 327 B.R. 38, 56 (BKRTCY. D. MASS. 2005) ("AS JUSTICE MARSHALL'S STATEMENT IN STURGES IMPLIES, THE USE OF THE WORD 'UNIFORM' IN THE BANKRUPTCY CLAUSE WAS NOT PRIMARILY INTENDED AS A RESTRICTION ON CONGRESSIONAL POWER, BUT AS A GRANT OF POWER TO CONGRESS.").

FOR THIS REASON, THE SUPREME COURT AND THIS COURT HAVE

REJECTED ALMOST EVERY UNIFORMITY CHALLENGE TO A BANKRUPTCY LAW. THUS, AT THE TURN OF THE TWENTIETH CENTURY, THE SUPREME COURT UPHELD THE BANKRUPTCY ACT OF 1898'S ALLOWANCE OF EXEMPTIONS THAT DEBTORS COULD CLAIM UNDER STATE LAW. THE COURT EXPLAINED THAT, ALTHOUGH CONGRESS MUST ENACT BANKRUPTCY LAWS THAT ARE "UNIFORM" THROUGH THE UNITED STATES, "THAT UNIFORMITY IS GEOGRAPHICAL, AND NOT PERSONAL." MOYSES, 186 U.S. AT 188. ELABORATING, THE COURT EXPLAINED THAT THE 1898 ACT'S

APPLICATION OF DIFFERENT STATE EXEMPTION LAWS TO DIFFERENT DEBTORS DID NOT VIOLATE THE UNIFORMITY REQUIREMENT BECAUSE "[T]HE GENERAL OPERATION OF THE LAW IS UNIFORM ALTHOUGH IT MAY RESULT IN CERTAIN PARTICULARS DIFFERENTLY IN DIFFERENT STATES." ID. AT 190. IN THAT CASE, THE "GENERAL OPERATION OF THE LAW" WAS UNIFORM BECAUSE "THE TRUSTEE TAKES IN EACH STATE WHATEVER WOULD HAVE BEEN AVAILABLE TO THE CREDITOR IF THE BANKRUPT LAW HAD NOT BEEN PASSED." IBID.

SEVENTEEN YEARS LATER, THE COURT UPHELD A DIFFERENT PROVISION OF THE 1898 ACT, WHICH INCORPORATED STATE FRAUDULENT CONVEYANCE STATUTES BY AUTHORIZING THE TRUSTEE TO AVOID ANY TRANSFER OF PROPERTY THAT A CREDITOR COULD HAVE AVOIDED. CLUM, 245 U.S. AT 613-614. IN SO HOLDING, THE COURT REITERATED THAT "[N]OTWITHSTANDING THIS REQUIREMENT AS TO UNIFORMITY THE BANKRUPTCY ACTS OF CONGRESS MAY RECOGNIZE THE LAWS OF THE STATE IN CERTAIN PARTICULARS, ALTHOUGH SUCH RECOGNITION MAY LEAD TO DIFFERENT RESULTS IN DIFFERENT STATES." ID. AT 613; SEE ALSO GREEN, 329 U.S. AT 161 ("WHAT CLAIMS OF CREDITORS ARE VALID AND SUBSISTING OBLIGATIONS AGAINST THE BANKRUPT AT THE TIME A PETITION OF BANKRUPTCY IS FILED, IS A QUESTION WHICH, IN THE ABSENCE OF OVERRULING FEDERAL LAW, IS TO BE DETERMINED BY REFERENCE TO STATE LAW.").

THIS COURT REBUFFED A UNIFORMITY CHALLENGE TO A DIFFERENT PROVISION OF THE BANKRUPTCY ACT OF 1898. IN LEIDIGH CARRIAGE CO. V. STENGEL,

PLAINTIFFS CHALLENGED A PROVISION THAT DISTINGUISHED BETWEEN NATURAL AND ARTIFICIAL PERSONS, AND "BETWEEN CLASSES OF ARTIFICIAL PERSONS," AND PROVIDED FOR DIFFERENT TREATMENT FOR EACH CLASS. 95 F. 637, 646 (6TH CIR. 1899). UPHOLDING THE PROVISION, THIS COURT HELD THAT THE BANKRUPTCY CLAUSE

> IMPOSES NO LIMITATION UPON CONGRESS AS TO THE CLASSIFICATION OF PERSONS WHO ARE TO BE AFFECTED BY SUCH LAWS, PROVIDED ONLY THAT THE LAWS SHALL HAVE UNIFORM OPERATION THROUGHOUT THE UNITED STATES. THE OBJECT WHICH THE FRAMERS OF THE CONSTITUTION HAD WAS TO ENABLE CONGRESS TO PREVENT THE ENFORCEMENT OF AS > MANY DIFFERENT BANKRUPTCY LAWS AS THERE WERE STATES. * * * [THE TEXT OF THE BANKRUPTCY CLAUSE] LEAVES NO DOUBT THAT THE UNIFORMITY REQUIRED IS GEOGRAPHICAL, AND NOT PERSONAL, IN THE SENSE OF BEING ALIKE APPLICABLE TO ALL MEMBERS OF THE COMMUNITY.

IBID.

MORE RECENTLY, IN BLANCHETTE V. CONNECTICUT GENERAL INSURANCE CORPORATION, THE SUPREME COURT EXPLAINED THAT THE UNIFORMITY REQUIREMENT DOES NOT LIMIT CONGRESS' ABILITY TO RESPOND TO REGIONAL DIFFERENCES THAT HAVE IMPLICATIONS FOR BANKRUPTCY. THE COURT'S DECISION IN

BLANCHETTE IS CRITICAL TO THIS CASE. THERE, THE COURT CONSIDERED A BANKRUPTCY STATUTE, THE REGIONAL RAIL REORGANIZATION ACT OF 1973, THAT, BY ITS EXPRESS TERMS, APPLIED TO RAILROADS IN REORGANIZATION IN A GEOGRAPHICALLY DEFINED REGION OF THE COUNTRY, PRINCIPALLY IN THE NORTHEAST AND MIDWEST. SEE 45 U.S.C. § 702(17).

THE STATUTE WAS ATTACKED ON UNIFORMITY GROUNDS, "BECAUSE THE RAIL ACT'S PROVISIONS APPLY ONLY TO RAILROADS IN REORGANIZATION IN THE 'REGION.'" BLANCHETTE, 419 U.S. AT 156. IN

REJECTING THAT ARGUMENT, THE COURT OBSERVED THAT "[T]HE PROBLEM DEALT WITH UNDER THE BANKRUPTCY CLAUSE MAY PRESENT SIGNIFICANT VARIATIONS IN DIFFERENT PARTS OF THE COUNTRY." ID. AT 159 (QUOTATION AND ALTERATION MARKS OMITTED). ACCORDINGLY, THE COURT HELD THAT "[T]HE UNIFORMITY PROVISION DOES NOT DENY CONGRESS POWER TO TAKE INTO ACCOUNT DIFFERENCES THAT EXIST BETWEEN DIFFERENT PARTS OF THE COUNTRY, AND TO FASHION LEGISLATION TO RESOLVE GEOGRAPHICALLY ISOLATED PROBLEMS." IBID. THE CRISIS THAT GAVE RISE TO THE RAIL ACT "CENTERED IN THE PROBLEMS OF THE RAIL CARRIERS OPERATING IN THE REGION DEFINED BY THE ACT, AND THESE WERE THE PROBLEMS CONGRESS SOUGHT TO ADDRESS." IBID. BECAUSE NO RAILROAD REORGANIZATION PROCEEDING WAS PENDING OUTSIDE THE REGION, "THE RAIL ACT APPL[IED] EQUALLY TO ALL CREDITORS AND DEBTORS" AND THIS WAS ALL THE BANKRUPTCY CLAUSE REQUIRED. ID. AT 160.

THE COURT NOTED THAT THIS CONSTRUCTION OF THE BANKRUPTCY CLAUSE'S UNIFORMITY

REQUIREMENT WAS CONSISTENT WITH ITS CONSTRUCTION OF THE SIMILAR REQUIREMENT IN THE TAXATION CLAUSE. IBID. THUS, IN THE HEAD MONEY CASES, THE COURT UPHELD AGAINST A UNIFORMITY CHALLENGE A STATUTE THAT IMPOSED A TAX FOR NON-U.S. CITIZENS WHO WERE PASSENGERS ARRIVING AT U.S. PORTS FROM A FOREIGN PORTS BY STEAM OR SAIL VESSEL. IBID. (DISCUSSING 112 U.S. 580 (1884)). THE STATUTE WAS CHALLENGED BECAUSE IT DID NOT IMPOSES A SIMILAR TAX ON NON-U.S. CITIZENS ENTERING THE COUNTRY BY RAIL OR OTHER MEANS OF

INLAND TRANSPORTATION. IBID. THE COURT REJECTED THE CHALLENGE BECAUSE "'THE EVIL TO BE REMEDIED BY THIS LEGISLATION HAS NO EXISTENCE ON OUR INLAND BORDERS, AND IMMIGRATION IN THAT QUARTER NEEDED NO SUCH REGULATION.'" ID. AT 161 (QUOTING 112 U.S. AT 595). THE BLANCHETTE COURT HELD THAT THE RAIL ACT SIMILARLY "IS DESIGNED TO SOLVE 'THE EVIL TO BE REMEDIED,' AND THUS SATISFIES THE UNIFORMITY REQUIREMENT OF THE BANKRUPTCY CLAUSE." IBID.

THE SUPREME COURT AGAIN ADDRESSED THE BANKRUPTCY

CLAUSE IN GIBBONS, THE ONLY CASE IN WHICH THAT COURT HELD A BANKRUPTCY STATUTE VIOLATED THE UNIFORMITY REQUIREMENT. GIBBONS INVOLVED A BANKRUPTCY ACT, THE ROCK ISLAND RAILROAD TRANSITION AND EMPLOYEE ASSISTANCE ACT, THAT OVERRODE THE APPLICATION OF THE GENERAL BANKRUPTCY ACT AND IMPOSED CERTAIN REQUIREMENTS ON THE TRUSTEE OF A SINGLE BANKRUPT RAILROAD. 455 U.S. AT 461-63. WHILE RECOGNIZING THAT THE UNIFORMITY REQUIREMENT ALLOWS CONGRESS TO ADDRESS "DISTINCTIVE AND SPECIAL

PROBLEM[S]," AND ALLOWS IT "TO TAKE INTO ACCOUNT DIFFERENCES THAT EXIST BETWEEN DIFFERENT PARTS OF THE COUNTRY, AND TO FASHION" APPROPRIATE LEGISLATION, THE COURT HELD THAT THE STATUTE AT ISSUE VIOLATED THE BANKRUPTCY CLAUSE BECAUSE, "[B]Y ITS TERMS, [THE ACT] APPLIES TO ONLY ONE REGIONAL BANKRUPT RAILROAD." ID. AT 469-70. BECAUSE THE CHALLENGED PROVISIONS "COVER NEITHER A DEFINED CLASS OF DEBTORS NOR A PARTICULAR TYPE OF PROBLEM, BUT A PARTICULAR PROBLEM OF ONE BANKRUPT

RAILROAD," THE STATUTE WAS "NOTHING MORE THAN A PRIVATE BILL," WHICH THE FRAMERS SOUGHT TO PREVENT BY ADOPTING THE BANKRUPTCY CLAUSE. ID. AT 470-71; SEE ID. AT 472.

[6] WE HERE ADDRESS THE CONSTITUTIONALITY OF ALL THE PROVISIONS PLAINTIFFS CHALLENGE

CONGRESS AMENDED THE BANKRUPTCY CODE IN 2005 BECAUSE IT CONCLUDED THAT THE CODE WAS NOT ADEQUATELY CONTROLLING ABUSIVE CHAPTER 7 BANKRUPTCY CASES. AS EXPLAINED ABOVE, CHAPTER 7 PROVIDES FOR DISCHARGE OF DEBTS IN EXCHANGE FOR LIQUIDATION OF A DEBTOR'S PROPERTY, FOR DISTRIBUTION AMONG THE CREDITORS. SEE 11 U.S.C. §§ 541, 726. CHAPTER 13, BY CONTRAST, REQUIRES REPAYMENT OF CREDITORS WITH A DEBTOR'S FUTURE INCOME. SEE 11 U.S.C. §§ 1306,

IN CASE THIS COURT DETERMINES THAT PLAINTIFFS HAVE STANDING TO ASSERT ALL OF THEIR CLAIMS.

1326. CONGRESS BELIEVED THAT, BECAUSE DEBTORS COULD FREELY CHOOSE TO FILE UNDER EITHER CHAPTER 7 OR CHAPTER 13, AND BECAUSE OF THE EXISTING PRESUMPTION IN FAVOR OF AFFORDING RELIEF UNDER CHAPTER 7, SOME DEBTORS WERE SEEKING DISCHARGE UNDER CHAPTER 7 RATHER THAN UNDER CHAPTER 13, EVEN THOUGH THEY "ARE ABLE TO REPAY A SIGNIFICANT PORTION OF THEIR DEBTS." H.R. REP. 109-31(I), AT 5. CONGRESS ENACTED THE MEANS TESTS PLAINTIFFS CHALLENGE IN ORDER TO REMEDY THE "LOOPHOLES AND INCENTIVES THAT ALLOW AND – SOMETIMES – EVEN ENCOURAGE OPPORTUNISTIC PERSONAL FILINGS AND ABUSE." IBID.

AS THE PRECEDING DISCUSSION SHOWS (AND AS PLAINTIFFS RECOGNIZE (SEE PLS.' BR. 16)), THE SUPREME COURT AND THIS COURT HAVE REPEATEDLY RECOGNIZED THAT THE BANKRUPTCY CLAUSE PERMITS CONGRESS TO "DISTINGUISH AMONG CLASSES OF DEBTORS" AND TO TREAT DIFFERENT CATEGORIES OF DEBTORS DIFFERENTLY. GIBBONS, 455 U.S. AT 469; SEE ALSO STENGEL, 95 F. AT 646. THAT IS WHAT THREE OF THE FIVE CHALLENGED PROVISIONS DO. 11

U.S.C. §§ 707(B)(7), 1325(B)(3), AND 1325(B)(4) DISTINGUISH BETWEEN DEBTORS WHOSE ANNUALIZED CURRENT MONTHLY INCOME IS ABOVE THE FAMILY MEDIAN INCOME FOR THE APPLICABLE STATE AND THOSE WHOSE ANNUALIZED CURRENT MONTHLY INCOME IS BELOW THE MEDIAN. THESE PROVISIONS AFFORD DIFFERENT TREATMENT FOR THESE TWO CLASSES OF DEBTORS. THUS, UNDER SECTION 707(B)(7), CHAPTER 7 DEBTORS WHOSE INCOME IS BELOW THE MEDIAN ARE NOT SUBJECT TO THE PRESUMPTION OF ABUSE. BY CONTRAST, DEBTORS WITH INCOMES

ABOVE THE MEDIAN MUST APPLY THE MEANS TEST TO DETERMINE WHETHER THE PRESUMPTION ARISES. SIMILARLY, UNDER SECTION 1325(B)(3) AND (4), CHAPTER 13 DEBTORS WHOSE INCOME IS BELOW THE MEDIAN HAVE ONLY A THREE-YEAR INSTEAD OF A FIVE-YEAR REPAYMENT PERIOD AND ARE SUBJECT TO MORE FAVORABLE TREATMENT IN DETERMINING THEIR DISPOSABLE INCOME (FROM WHICH REPAYMENT IS MADE) THAN ARE THOSE WHOSE INCOME IS ABOVE THE MEDIAN.

THESE PROVISIONS ARE AN UNEXCEPTIONAL EXERCISE OF

CONGRESS' POWER UNDER THE BANKRUPTCY CLAUSE. THE CLASSIFICATIONS THEY MAKE AND THE TREATMENT THEY PRESCRIBE FOR DEBTORS IN EACH CLASS "HAVE UNIFORM OPERATION THROUGHOUT THE UNITED STATES." STENGEL, 95 F. AT 646. ALL DEBTORS WHOSE INCOME FALLS ABOVE THE MEDIAN FAMILY INCOME ARE TREATED ALIKE AS ARE DEBTORS WHOSE INCOME FALLS BELOW.[7] ACCORDINGLY, "[T]HE

---

[7] AN EXCEPTION EXISTS FOR DEBTORS WHO ARE DISABLED VETERANS WHOSE INDEBTEDNESS OCCURRED PRIMARILY DURING A PERIOD OF ACTIVE DUTY OR HOMELAND DEFENSE ACTIVITY. THE PRESUMPTION OF ABUSE DOES NOT ARISE FOR SUCH DEBTORS, EVEN IF THEIR ANNUALIZED CURRENT

GENERAL OPERATION OF THE LAW IS UNIFORM ALTHOUGH IT MAY RESULT IN CERTAIN PARTICULARS DIFFERENTLY IN DIFFERENT STATES." MOYSES, 186 U.S. AT 190. AND THE LEGISLATIVE HISTORY DEMONSTRATES THAT CONGRESS ADOPTED THESE CLASSIFICATIONS IN ORDER "TO ENSURE THAT DEBTORS REPAY CREDITORS THE MAXIMUM THEY CAN AFFORD." H.R.

MONTHLY INCOME EXCEEDS THE APPLICABLE MEDIAN FAMILY INCOME, AND EVEN IF THEY WOULD OTHERWISE FAIL THE MEANS TEST. 11 U.S.C. § 707(B)(2)(D). THIS EXCEPTION IS ANOTHER EXAMPLE OF CONGRESS' DETERMINATION TO RECOGNIZE A DISTINCT CLASS OF DEBTORS AND PRESCRIBE A UNIFORM RULE THAT APPLIES TO THE CLASS.

REP. 109-31(I), AT 2. THAT IS A NEUTRAL PURPOSES THAT IS NOT GEOGRAPHICALLY DISCRIMINATORY AND THAT APPLIES UNIFORMLY TO DEBTORS THROUGHOUT THE COUNTRY.

SIMILARLY UNEXCEPTIONAL ARE THE MEANS TEST PROVISIONS IN 11 U.S.C. § 707(B)(2)(A), WHICH ARE USED FOR DETERMINING WHETHER THE PRESUMPTION OF ABUSE ARISES FOR CHAPTER 7 DEBTORS WHOSE ANNUALIZED CURRENT MONTHLY INCOME EXCEEDS THE MEDIAN FAMILY INCOME, AND FOR DETERMINING THE DISPOSABLE INCOME OF A CHAPTER 13 DEBTOR

WHOSE ANNUALIZED CURRENT MONTHLY INCOME IS ABOVE THE MEDIAN (SEE 11 U.S.C. § 1325(B)(3)). CONGRESS ENACTED THE ABUSE PREVENTION ACT "TO ENSURE THAT DEBTORS REPAY CREDITORS TO THE MAXIMUM THEY CAN AFFORD." H.R. REP. 109-31(I), AT 2. IN DECIDING HOW BEST "TO SOLVE 'THE EVIL TO BE REMEDIED,'" (BLANCHETTE, 419 U.S. AT 161), CONGRESS WAS NOT REQUIRED TO BLIND ITSELF TO THE FACT THAT THE COST OF LIVING AND RELATIVE PURCHASING POWER VARY ACROSS THE COUNTRY. RATHER, IT MAY CONSTITUTIONALLY ADOPT A SOLUTION THAT "TAKE[S] INTO ACCOUNT DIFFERENCES THAT EXIST BETWEEN DIFFERENT PARTS OF THE COUNTRY" (BLANCHETTE, 419 U.S. AT 159) AND THAT ADDRESSES "A PARTICULAR TYPE OF PROBLEM" (GIBBONS, 455 U.S. AT 470).

IT BEARS NOTING THAT, OF THE THREE EXPENSE STANDARDS THAT ARE USED IN SECTION 707(B)(2), ONLY ONE – THE "LOCAL" STANDARDS – HAS ANY SIGNIFICANT REGIONAL VARIATION. AS EXPLAINED ABOVE, "NATIONAL" STANDARDS ARE UNIFORM THROUGHOUT THE CONTINENTAL UNITED STATES. AND THE "OTHER NECESSARY EXPENSES"

STANDARDS RELATE TO CERTAIN OF THE DEBTOR'S ACTUAL EXPENSES. PLAINTIFFS' COMPLAINT ALLEGES THAT THE NATIONAL STANDARDS VIOLATE THE BANKRUPTCY CLAUSE "[B]ECAUSE THE NATIONAL STANDARDS ARE HIGHER FOR RESIDENTS IN THE STATES OF ALASKA AND HAWAII." (R. 2 AMENDED COMPL., P. 7, APX. P. __.) BUT THE ABUSE PREVENTION ACT'S INCORPORATION OF THE NATIONAL STANDARDS TAKE INTO ACCOUNT THE "UNIQUE GEOGRAPHIC CIRCUMSTANCES AND HIGHER COST OF LIVING" OF THOSE TWO STATES. U.S. TRUSTEE, IRS NATIONAL STANDARDS, AVAILABLE AT HTTP://WWW.USDOJ.GOV/UST/EO/BAPCPA/20061001/BCI_DATA/NATIONAL_EXPENSE_STANDARDS.HTM. THAT IS A PARADIGM EXAMPLE OF CONGRESS "FASHION[ING] LEGISLATION TO RESOLVE GEOGRAPHICALLY ISOLATED PROBLEMS." BLANCHETTE, 419 U.S. AT 159. IN ANY EVENT, PLAINTIFFS HAVE NOT PRESSED THIS ARGUMENT ON APPEAL AND SO HAVE ABANDONED IT. SEE ENERTECH ELEC., INC. V. MAHONING COUNTY COMM'RS, 85 F.3D 257, 259 (6TH CIR. 1996).

FINALLY, BECAUSE THESE PROVISIONS ARE WITHIN CONGRESS'

BANKRUPTCY CLAUSE POWER, SO TOO IS 11 U.S.C. § 704(B), WHICH DIRECTS THE U.S. TRUSTEE TO EVALUATE CHAPTER 7 PETITIONS TO DETERMINE WHETHER THE PRESUMPTION OF ABUSE ARISES, AND TO SUBMIT AN APPROPRIATE FILING IN THE BANKRUPTCY COURT.

3. PLAINTIFFS' VARIOUS ARGUMENTS TO THE CONTRARY LACK MERIT. FIRST, PLAINTIFFS ARGUE THAT, ALTHOUGH CONGRESS MAY PERMISSIBLY "INCORPORATE[ ] BY REFERENCE THE LAWS OF THE SEVERAL STATES" INTO FEDERAL BANKRUPTCY LAW, IT NEVERTHELESS VIOLATES THE UNIFORMITY REQUIREMENT FOR CONGRESS TO ADOPT A FEDERAL STANDARD THAT TAKES INTO ACCOUNT DIFFERENCES AMONG DEBTORS THAT ARE THE PRODUCT OF REGIONAL ECONOMIES. PLS.' BR. 12; SEE ID. AT 18, 21.

PLAINTIFFS PROVIDE NO RATIONALE TO EXPLAIN THIS DISTINCTION, NOR DO THEY CITE ANY PRECEDENT ADOPTING IT. THEIR ONLY ARGUMENT APPEARS TO BE THAT THE SUPREME COURT HAS NOT ADDRESSED CLASSIFICATIONS SUCH AS THOSE IN THE ABUSE PREVENTION ACT AND HAS TO DATE ONLY UPHELD BANKRUPTCY LAWS

THAT INCORPORATE STATE LAW. ID. AT 12-13, 23. BUT THAT CONTENTION IS SIMPLY MISTAKEN. THE BANKRUPTCY LAW IN BLANCHETTE (AND THE TAX LAW IN PTASYNSKI) ESTABLISHED A REGIONAL CLASSIFICATION UNDER FEDERAL LAW. IN ADDITION, PLAINTIFFS' ARGUMENT IGNORES THE RATIONALES UNDERLYING THE SUPREME COURT'S UNIFORMITY CASES, UNDER WHICH CONGRESS MAY PERMISSIBLY ENACT BANKRUPTCY LEGISLATION THAT "TAKE[S] INTO ACCOUNT DIFFERENCES THAT EXIST BETWEEN DIFFERENT PARTS OF THE COUNTRY." BLANCHETTE, 419 U.S. AT

159. IT ALSO IGNORES THE FACT THAT THE SUPREME COURT HAS ONLY ONCE HELD THAT A STATUTE VIOLATES THE UNIFORMITY CLAUSE, AND THAT STATUTE WAS A PRIVATE BANKRUPTCY BILL, WHICH APPLIED TO ONE AND ONLY ONE DEBTOR.

PLAINTIFFS' AMICUS DOES EXPLAIN WHY, IN HIS VIEW, THE BANKRUPTCY CLAUSE PERMITS CONGRESS TO INCORPORATE STATE LAW BUT NOT TO ENACT FEDERAL BANKRUPTCY LAWS THAT TAKE REGIONAL VARIATIONS INTO ACCOUNT. ACCORDING TO HIM, CONGRESS CANNOT DISCRIMINATE

AGAINST THE CITIZENS OF PARTICULAR STATES BY INCORPORATING STATE LAW, "[B]ECAUSE A STATE CAN CHANGE ITS LAWS TO MATCH THOSE OF ANY OTHER STATE." AMICUS BR. 5. BUT BECAUSE STATES CANNOT SIMILARLY ADAPT TO FEDERAL LAW, PLAINTIFFS' AMICUS ARGUES THAT FEDERAL LAWS THAT TAKE REGIONAL VARIATIONS INTO ACCOUNT ARE IMPERMISSIBLE. IBID.

THAT THEORY IS NOT ONLY BEREFT OF PRECEDENTIAL SUPPORT, IT IS ALSO INCONSISTENT WITH THE SUPREME COURT'S UNIFORMITY

CASES IN BOTH THE BANKRUPTCY AND (AS WE EXPLAIN BELOW) TAX CONTEXTS. THE SUPREME COURT HAS UPHELD CONGRESS' POWER "TO TAKE INTO ACCOUNT DIFFERENCES THAT EXIST BETWEEN DIFFERENT PARTS OF THE COUNTRY," AND TO FASHION APPROPRIATE LEGISLATION. BLANCHETTE, 419 U.S. AT 159. WHEN A PLAINTIFF CHALLENGES A FEDERAL BANKRUPTCY OR TAX LAW THAT USES GEOGRAPHIC CLASSIFICATIONS AND ARGUES THAT THE CLASSIFICATIONS ARE DISCRIMINATORY, THE COURT REVIEWS THE STATUTE AND ANY

LEGISLATIVE HISTORY TO DETERMINE WHETHER "CONGRESS INTENDED TO GRANT [GIVE CITIZENS OF ONE STATE] AN UNDUE PREFERENCE AT THE EXPENSE OF OTHER" STATES. PTASYNSKI, 462 U.S. AT 86. THE ABUSE PREVENTION ACT'S STATUTORY TEXT AND THE LEGISLATIVE HISTORY DISCUSSED ABOVE DEMONSTRATE THAT CONGRESS MADE A DETERMINATION, "BASED ON NEUTRAL FACTORS" (ID. AT 85), THAT ELIGIBILITY FOR BANKRUPTCY RELIEF SHOULD BE BASED ON A DEBTORS' ABILITY TO REPAY CREDITORS, AND THAT ABILITY TO PAY IS AFFECTED BY

REGIONAL ECONOMIC VARIATIONS. THE ABUSE PREVENTION ACT'S PURPOSE AND EFFECT ARE CONSISTENT WITH THE BANKRUPTCY CLAUSE'S PROHIBITION AGAINST REGIONAL DISCRIMINATION.

NEXT, PLAINTIFFS ARGUE THAT CONSIDERATION OF THE UNIFORMITY REQUIREMENT UNDER THE TAXATION CLAUSE SHOWS THAT THE ABUSE PREVENTION ACT VIOLATES THE SIMILAR REQUIREMENT IN THE BANKRUPTCY CODE. PLS.' BR. 24. PLAINTIFFS ARE CORRECT THAT THE SUPREME COURT HAS LOOKED TO ITS

INTERPRETATION OF THE TAXATION CLAUSE'S UNIFORMITY REQUIREMENT TO AID IN ITS INTERPRETATION OF THE SIMILAR REQUIREMENT IN THE BANKRUPTCY CLAUSE (AND VICE VERSA). SEE, E.G., BLANCHETTE, 419 U.S. AT 160 (DISCUSSING THE HEAD MONEY CASES). BUT PLAINTIFFS ERR IN SUGGESTING THAT THE SUPREME COURT'S TAXATION CASES CALL INTO DOUBT THE VALIDITY OF THE ABUSE PREVENTION ACT PROVISIONS THEY CHALLENGE.

PLAINTIFFS RELY HEAVILY ON THE SUPREME COURT'S DECISION IN PTASYNSKI. IN THAT CASE, THE COURT CONSIDERED THE VALIDITY OF A TAX LAW THAT PROVIDED AN EXEMPTION FOR "ALASKAN OIL." 462 U.S. AT 77 (QUOTATION MARKS OMITTED). PLAINTIFFS SUGGEST THAT PTASYNSKI STANDS FOR THE PROPOSITION THAT A TAX SATISFIES THE UNIFORMITY REQUIREMENT ONLY WHEN THE TAX "'OPERATES WITH THE SAME FORCE AND EFFECT IN EVERY PLACE WHERE THE SUBJECT IS FOUND.'" PLS.' BR. 24. THAT IS MISTAKEN. THE QUOTED LANGUAGE IS ACTUALLY FROM THE HEAD MONEY CASES. SEE 112 U.S. AT 594. AND THE PTASYNSKI COURT EXPLAINED THAT IT WAS A

MISTAKE TO UNDERSTAND THAT PRECEDENT TO "PROHIBIT ALL GEOGRAPHICALLY DEFINED CLASSIFICATIONS." PTASYNSKI, 462 U.S. AT 84. RATHER, "[T]HE UNIFORMITY CLAUSE GIVES CONGRESS WIDE LATITUDE IN DECIDING WHAT TO TAX AND DOES NOT PROHIBIT IT FROM CONSIDERING GEOGRAPHICALLY ISOLATED PROBLEMS." IBID. BECAUSE THE COURT DETERMINED THAT, IN GRANTING THE EXEMPTION, CONGRESS DID NOT ENACT THE EXEMPTION TO GIVE ALASKA A PREFERENCE AT THE EXPENSE OF OTHER STATES – ONE OF

THE EVILS THE UNIFORMITY REQUIREMENT WAS ADOPTED TO PREVENT – THE COURT UPHELD THE STATUTE. ID. AT 85-86.

THUS PLAINTIFFS ARE FURTHER MISTAKEN IN SUGGESTING THAT THE UNIFORMITY REQUIREMENT PROHIBITS TAXES THAT HAVE DIFFERENT EFFECT IN DIFFERENT REGIONS OF THE COUNTRY. SEE PLS.' BR. 26. INDEED, THE SUPREME COURT HAS REPEATEDLY UPHELD SUCH TAXES AGAINST UNIFORMITY CHALLENGES. THUS, FOR EXAMPLE, IN KNOWLTON V. MOORE, THE SUPREME COURT UPHELD A PROVISION OF THE WAR REVENUE

ACT, UNDER WHICH "THE PRIMARY RATE OF TAXATION DEPENDS UPON THE DEGREE OF RELATIONSHIP OR WANT OF RELATIONSHIP TO A DECEASED PERSON." 178 U.S. 41, 107 (1900). THE PLAINTIFFS IN THAT CASE ARGUED THAT THE TAX VIOLATED THE UNIFORMITY REQUIREMENT, "INASMUCH AS TESTAMENTARY AND INTESTACY LAWS MAY DIFFER IN EVERY STATE." ID. AT 107-08. THE COURT REJECTED THAT CONTENTION BECAUSE "[I]T IS CERTAIN THAT THE SAME DEGREE OF RELATIONSHIP OR WANT OF RELATIONSHIP TO THE DECEASED, WHEREVER EXISTING, IS LEVIED ON AT THE SAME RATE THROUGHOUT THE UNITED STATES. THE TAX IS HENCE UNIFORM THROUGHOUT THE UNITED STATES, DESPITE THE FACT THAT DIFFERENT CONDITIONS AMONG THE STATES MAY OBTAIN AS TO THE OBJECTS UPON WHICH THE TAX IS LEVIED." ID. AT 108.

THE ABUSE PREVENTION ACT PROVISIONS EASILY SATISFY THIS STANDARD. THEY DEFINE CLASSES OF DEBTORS, TAKING INTO ACCOUNT "DIFFERENT CONDITIONS AMONG THE STATES" AND AFFORD UNIFORM BANKRUPTCY RELIEF TO EACH DEBTOR WITHIN A CLASS. THAT IS

ALL THE BANKRUPTCY CLAUSE REQUIRES.

FINALLY, PLAINTIFFS CONTEND THAT THE ABUSE PREVENTION ACT'S COMPARISON OF ANNUALIZED CURRENT MONTHLY INCOME TO FAMILY MEDIAN INCOME IN THE APPLICABLE STATE AND THE STATUTE'S USE OF THE MEANS TEST DO NOT ACCURATELY REFLECT "THE COST OF LIVING EXPENSES FROM ONE PART OF THE COUNTRY TO ANOTHER." PLS.' BR. 29; SEE ID. AT 26-30. PLAINTIFFS EXPRESSLY DISCLAIM ANY CHALLENGE UNDER THE EQUAL PROTECTION CLAUSE "OR ANY OTHER CLAUSE OF THE CONSTITUTION" OTHER THAN THE BANKRUPTCY CLAUSE. ID. AT 10. BUT WHETHER CONGRESS SELECTED THE BEST MEANS TO ADDRESS THE EVIL IT IDENTIFIED HAS NO BEARING ON WHETHER THE LAW APPLIES UNIFORMLY. ACCORDINGLY, EVEN IF PLAINTIFFS WERE CORRECT THAT THE ABUSE PREVENTION ACT'S CLASSIFICATIONS ARE "ARBITRARY," (PLS.' BR. 29) – A CONTENTION WE DISPUTE – THAT WOULD NOT ESTABLISH A VIOLATION OF THE BANKRUPTCY CLAUSE.

QUESTION PRESENTED

Whether a Chapter 7 trustee is required by Federal Rule of Bankruptcy Procedure 4003(b) or this Court's decision in Taylor v. Freeland & Kronz, 503 U.S. 638 (1992), to object to a debtor's claimed exemption when the debtor is entitled to an exemption in the amount claimed, but the debtor incorrectly lists the market value of the property as equal to the amount of the exemption.

WILLIAM G. SCHWAB, PETITIONER

v.

NADEJDA REILLY

ON WRIT OF CERTIORARI
TO THE UNITED STATES COURT OF APPEALS FOR THE THIRD CIRCUIT

BRIEF FOR THE UNITED STATES AS AMICUS CURIAE SUPPORTING PETITIONER

INTEREST OF THE UNITED STATES

Respondent, a debtor in a Chapter 7 bankruptcy proceeding, filed a form (Schedule C) on which she claimed an exemption, in a specified amount, for property used in her business. On the same Schedule C, respondent also stated her belief that the actual value of the property was equal to the amount of the claimed exemption. Petitioner, the bankruptcy trustee, did not object to the claimed exemption. Petitioner determined, however, that the property was worth substantially more than the amount of the claimed exemption, and he proposed to sell the property and divide the proceeds, giving respondent the amount of the exemption and distributing the rest to creditors. The courts below found that petitioner was barred from selling the property because he had not objected to the claimed exemption within the 30-day period provided by Federal Rule of Bankruptcy Procedure 4003(b). That holding raises an issue of substantial importance to the United States.

The Attorney General appoints United States Trustees, who are Justice Department officials, to supervise the administration of bankruptcy cases and to oversee trustees in regions comprising the vast majority of the federal judicial districts. 28 U.S.C. 581-589a. By statute, "[t]he United States trustee may raise and may appear and be heard on any issue in any case or proceeding under this title." 11 U.S.C. 307. United States Trustees "serve as bankruptcy watchdogs to prevent fraud, dishonesty, and overreaching in the bankruptcy arena." H.R. Rep. No. 595, 95th Cong., 1st Sess. 88 (1977). The United States Trustee Program thus "acts in the public interest to promote the efficiency and to protect and preserve the integrity of the bankruptcy system." United States Dep't of Justice, United States Trustee Program Strategic Plan FY 2005-2010, at 2 (visited July 16, 2009) <http://www.usdoj.gov/ust/eo/ust_org/StrategicPlanFY2005-2010.pdf>. The United States therefore has a substantial interest in the effective implementation of the bankruptcy system and in the avoidance of unwarranted burdens on bankruptcy trustees' performance of their duties.

In addition, the United States is the largest creditor in the Nation. Numerous federal agencies frequently appear as creditors in Chapter 7 cases. Because a bankruptcy estate's assets are typically scarce, the United States has an interest in preventing and deterring Chapter 7 debtors from undervaluing assets in a way that might prevent their use to satisfy claims of the United States.

STATEMENT

1. A debtor commences a voluntary bankruptcy case by filing a petition in bankruptcy court. 11 U.S.C. 301. Individual debtors typically file for relief under Chapter 7 or Chapter 13 of the Bankruptcy Code. The present case arises under Chapter 7, which provides for a liquidation of a debtor's non-exempt pre-petition assets in exchange for a discharge of debts. 11 U.S.C. 701-727. Commencement of a Chapter 7 case creates an "estate" that includes all of the debtor's "legal or equitable interests * * * in property as of the commencement of the case." 11 U.S.C. 541(a). The debtor must surrender all non-exempt estate property to the Chapter 7 trustee, who takes custody of such property, liquidates it, and disburses the proceeds to creditors in accordance with their rights and priorities under the Code. 11 U.S.C. 507, 521(3) and (4), 704(1), 726.[1]

A debtor is entitled, however, to claim various statutory exemptions to prevent the distribution of specified categories of property. 11 U.S.C. 522. Generally speaking, "property exempted [from the estate] is not liable during or after the case for any debt of the debtor that arose * * * before commencement of the case." 11 U.S.C. 522(c). Section 522(d) specifies the types of property that a debtor may exempt from the estate under the Bankruptcy Code.[2]

Under Section 522(d), there are two basic types of exemptions. A few exemptions allow a debtor to exempt particular types of property regardless of their value. For instance, a debtor may fully exempt unmatured life insurance contracts (other than credit life insurance contracts), 11 U.S.C. 522(d)(7); professionally prescribed health aids, 11 U.S.C. 522(d)(9); some forms of public assistance, veterans' or disability benefits, 11 U.S.C. 522(d)(10)(A)-(C); and awards under a crime victim's reparation law, 11 U.S.C. 522(d)(11)(A).

Most of the Code's exemptions, however, allow a debtor to exempt only an "interest" in a type of property, typically up to a maximum dollar value.[3] For instance, a debtor may exempt an interest in a residence up to $18,450, 11 U.S.C. 522(d)(1); an interest in a motor vehicle up to $2,950, 11 U.S.C. 522(d)(2); an aggregate interest in household goods up to $9,850, 11 U.S.C. 522(d)(3); an aggregate interest in jewelry up to $1,225, 11 U.S.C. 522(d)(4); and an aggregate interest "in any implements, professional books, or tools, of the trade of the debtor" up to $1,850, 11 U.S.C. 522(d)(6). In addition, the so-called wild card exemption allows a debtor to exempt an aggregate interest "in any property" up to [2] States are permitted to opt out of the federal bankruptcy exemptions and thereby require debtors to claim exemptions under state and federal nonbankruptcy law. 11 U.S.C. 522(b)(1). Respondent resides and filed for bankruptcy in Pennsylvania, which has not opted out of the federal bankruptcy exemptions. J.A. 26a, 56a.

[3] Some exemptions are limited not to a maximum dollar value, but to the value "reasonably necessary for support of the debtor." 11 U.S.C. 522(d)(10)(D)-(E); see 11 U.S.C. 522(d)(11)(B), (C) and (E).

$975, plus up to $9,250 of any unused amount of the residence exemption. 11 U.S.C. 522(d)(5).[4]

2. Within 15 days after filing the petition, the debtor must file several schedules of assets and liabilities. 11 U.S.C. 521(1); Fed. R. Bankr. P. 1007(c); Fed. R. Bankr. P. Official Form 6, Schedules A-J. One of those schedules, Schedule C, requires the debtor to specify "a list of property that the debtor claims as exempt." 11 U.S.C. 522(l); see Fed. R. Bankr. P. 4003(a) (requiring, in tandem with Rule 1007(b)(1), that the debtor "list the property claimed as exempt" on Schedule C). For each claimed exemption, Schedule C contains four columns on which the debtor provides a "description of [the] property," the "law providing [the] exemption," the "value of [the] claimed exemption," and the "current market value of [the] property without deducting [the] exemption." Fed. R. Bankr. P. Official Form 6, Schedule C (capitalization omitted); see J.A. 57a-58a.

"Unless a party in interest objects" to the exemptions set forth by the debtor on Schedule C, "the property claimed as exempt on such list is exempt." 11 U.S.C. 522(l). A party in interest > may file an objection to the list of property claimed as exempt only within 30 days after the meeting of creditors held under § 341(a) is concluded or within

[4] The exemption amounts are adjusted every three years based on the Consumer Price Index. 11 U.S.C. 104(a). The exemption amounts were last adjusted in 2007. See 72 Fed. Reg. 7082 (2007) (11 U.S.C. 104 note). The pre-2007 amounts listed in the text apply to the present case because respondent filed her petition in April 2005. See 11 U.S.C. 104(b)(3); see also 11 U.S.C. 522(d); 69 Fed. Reg. 8482 (2004) (11 U.S.C. 104 note (Supp. IV 2004)).

> 30 days after any amendment to the list or supplemental schedules is filed, whichever is later.

Fed. R. Bankr. P. 4003(b). The bankruptcy court may extend the 30-day period for filing objections upon a showing of cause. Ibid. The objecting party bears the burden of proving that the challenged exemption has not been properly claimed. Fed. R. Bankr. P. 4003(c).

3. When a Chapter 7 petition is filed, the United States Trustee designates a private trustee to administer the bankruptcy estate. 11 U.S.C. 323, 701, 704; 28 U.S.C. 586(a)(1). The trustee is a fiduciary of the estate, charged with securing the estate's assets, defending the estate against improper claims or other adverse interests, and liquidating the estate for the benefit of creditors. 11 U.S.C. 704. That process generally begins with a required meeting of the debtor's creditors, held between 20 and 40 days after the petition is filed. 11 U.S.C. 341; Fed. R. Bankr. P. 2003(a). At that meeting, the trustee can verify the debtor's financial affairs, assets, and liabilities by questioning the debtor under oath. 11 U.S.C. 343.

Based on the debtor's schedules, the testimony at the creditors' meeting, and any factual investigation, the trustee may determine that the estate does not have sufficient non-exempt assets to liquidate for the benefit of creditors. 11 U.S.C. 341, 521(1), 704(4), and 704(9); Executive Office for United States Trustees, United States Dep't of Justice, Handbook for Chapter 7 Trustees, at 8-1 (July 2002) <http://www.usdoj.gov/ust/eo/private_trustee/library/chapter07/docs/7handbook1008/Ch7_Handbook.pdf>. Historically, approximately 95 to 97% of Chapter 7 cases yield no assets for creditors. United States Trustee Program, United States Dep't of Justice, Preliminary Report on Chapter 7 Asset Cases:

1994 to 2000, at 7 (June 2001) <http://www.usdoj.gov/ust/eo/private_trustee/library/chapter07/docs/assetcases/Publicat.pdf>. The trustee currently receives a $60 fee for the administration of a no-asset case. 11 U.S.C. 330(b).

In the remaining Chapter 7 cases, the trustee generally liquidates the estate property through either a private sale or a public auction. The trustee then typically prepares a report for the bankruptcy court that describes the disposition of the estate assets and proposes a plan for distribution of proceeds to creditors. 11 U.S.C. 704(9); Fed. R. Bankr. P. 2015(a)(2) and 5009. Through the trustee's distribution, the debtor receives the amount of her exemptions and creditors receive the remaining proceeds according to their statutory priority. 11 U.S.C. 726. In addition to the trustee's $60 fee, the trustee may move in such cases for additional "reasonable compensation." 11 U.S.C. 326(a).

4. Respondent owned a catering business in Conynham, Pennsylvania. Pet. Br. 14. In April 2005, she filed a petition for Chapter 7 relief. Pet. App. 2a. On her Schedule C, respondent invoked two Bankruptcy Code provisions as bases for exempting specified interests in kitchen equipment that respondent had previously used in her business. J.A. 58a.

First, respondent invoked 11 U.S.C. 522(d)(6), which allowed her to exempt an interest in "tools[] of the trade" of up to $1,850. J.A. 58a. Respondent listed the value of the claimed exemption as $1,850. Ibid. Second, respondent invoked 11 U.S.C. 522(d)(5), the wild card exemption, which allowed her to exempt an interest in "any property" of up to $10,225 (because she did not claim a residence exemption). J.A. 58a. Respondent listed the value of the claimed exemption as $8,868.

Ibid. In the fourth column of Schedule C, respondent identified the current market value of the business equipment as $10,718, an amount equal to the sum of the two claimed exemptions of $1,850 and $8,868. Ibid.

Petitioner was appointed trustee for respondent's estate. Believing that the kitchen equipment might be worth more than $10,718, petitioner obtained an appraisal indicating the equipment was worth approximately $17,000. Pet. Br. 15. On June 22, 2005, petitioner held the creditors' meeting required by 11 U.S.C. 341(a). J.A. 11a. Petitioner did not file within the next month an objection to the "list [of] property claimed as exempt," Fed. R. Bankr. P. 4003(a), including respondent's claimed interests in kitchen equipment, see J.A. 11a-13a.

Seven weeks after the creditors' meeting, on August 10, 2005, petitioner filed with the bankruptcy court a motion to sell the kitchen equipment. J.A. 13a, 141a-143a. By selling the equipment, petitioner could distribute $10,718 of the proceeds to respondent as her exempt interest, while distributing any remaining after-expense proceeds to creditors. See J.A. 142a-143a. Respondent objected to the proposed sale, contending that she had claimed an exemption for the kitchen equipment in its entirety and that petitioner's failure to object to the exemption foreclosed him from consummating the sale. See J.A. 145a-148a.

5. a. After a hearing, the bankruptcy court denied the motion to sell without written opinion. Pet. App. 27a-28a. On appeal, the district court affirmed. Id. at 19a-26a. The court stated that, because respondent had identified the same sum ($10,718) as both the amount of the claimed exemption and the value of the kitchen equipment, her clear intent was to exempt the entire value of the asset. Id. at 24a-25a. Relying substantially on this Court's decision in Taylor v. Freeland & Kronz, 503 U.S. 638 (1992), the district court concluded that "[a]s [respondent] exempted the entire value, and the trustee never objected, she is entitled to the entire value, even if the trustee asserts it is worth more than she estimated." Pet. App. 25a.

b. The court of appeals affirmed. Pet. App. 1a-18a. Relying on Taylor, the court found it "important" that respondent had "valued the business equipment at $10,718 and claimed an exemption in the same amount." Id. at 11a. The court stated that "[s]uch an identical listing put [petitioner] on notice that [respondent] intended to exempt the property fully." Ibid. The court of appeals concluded that "once Rule 4003's 30-day period elapsed without [petitioner] filing an objection or a request for an extension, the property became fully exempt from the bankruptcy estate regardless of its ultimate market value." Id. at 12a.

SUMMARY OF ARGUMENT

1. a. Under Section 522(l) and Rule 4003(b), the Chapter 7 trustee must object to a claimed exemption within a specified period of time or the relevant property will be treated as exempt. To claim an exemption, a debtor must include on Schedule C, as on all its predecessor schedules, a description of the property, the legal basis for the exemption, and the value of the claimed exemption. Most of the statutory exemptions, including those (11 U.S.C. 522(d)(5) and (6)) that respondent invoked for the kitchen equipment at issue in this case, allow the debtor to exempt an "interest" in particular types of property up to a specified dollar amount. Where, as here, a debtor accurately describes an asset that is exemptible in the claimed amount under applicable law, the debtor has stated a facially valid exemption that is not subject to any objection.

b. At various points in time, Schedule C and its predecessor schedules have required the debtor to supply the trustee with additional information, such as the property's location, use, or market value. In accord with the demands of the current Schedule C, respondent identified a supposed market value for the property in question. That additional information, however, has no bearing on the validity of a debtor's claimed exemption. A claim of exemption informs the trustee that, according to the debtor, she has an interest in property that does not belong to the estate. By contrast, a market valuation informs the trustee whether, according to the debtor, there is an additional interest in the same property that does belong to the estate. If the trustee doubts the accuracy of the debtor's valuation, he may seek to have the property appraised, but such doubt provides no basis for objecting to an otherwise valid exemption. For that reason, a trustee's failure to object to a claimed exemption in the manner or within the time period prescribed by Rule 4003 does not preclude the trustee from selling the asset and distributing to creditors any proceeds in excess of the debtor's exempt interest.

2. a. Contrary to the court of appeals' conclusion, respondent's Schedule C did not suggest an intent to exempt her kitchen equipment in its entirety regardless of the equipment's actual value. Rather, by claiming an exemption in a particular dollar amount, respondent indicated her intent to exempt only a definite, fixed interest in the property. Respondent might have indicated her intent to exempt the kitchen equipment in its entirety by using terms such as "unknown" or "100% of its value" to describe the value of the claimed exemption, but she used no such terminology.

Respondent's use of a specific dollar figure to describe the claimed exemption distinguishes this case from Taylor v. Freeland & Kronz, 503 U.S. 638 (1992), in which the debtor claimed an indefinite interest by listing the value of her exemption as "unknown." Because the property at issue in Taylor (a claim for lost wages in a pending lawsuit) was not one of the assets that a Chapter 7 debtor may exempt in its entirety regardless of its value, that claimed exemption was invalid on its face. Although the Court in Taylor held that the trustee had forfeited his objection to that exemption by failing to object within Rule 4003(b)'s 30-day deadline, the Court did not suggest that a trustee who questions the debtor's separate market valuation must object to a facially valid exemption in order to preserve his right to obtain an appraisal, sell the property, and distribute any excess proceeds to creditors. Nothing in Taylor, moreover, supports the court of appeals' conclusion that respondent, by using the same dollar figure to identify both the amount of the claimed exemption and the market value of the property, had manifested an intent to exempt the kitchen equipment in its entirety regardless of its actual value.

Petitioner's contrary understanding—that respondent's use of specific dollar amounts in the third column of Schedule C reflected an intent to claim as an exemption the amounts stated—reflects a much more natural reading of the form. That interpretation of respondent's Schedule C also has other advantages: it places the responsibility on debtors, who know best what they intend to claim, to complete their schedules in a way that accurately communicates their intent; and it sensibly resolves any ambiguity in a way that renders claimed exemptions valid rather than invalid. Presuming that respondent intended to claim a valid exemption is particularly reasonable here because respondent invoked two statutory subsections (11 U.S.C. 522(d)(5) and (6)) that are limited by their terms to "interest[s]" in property up to specific dollar amounts, and the dollar amounts she listed as the value of the claimed exemption fell within the applicable statutory caps.

b. Contrary to the court of appeals' conclusion, the expiration of the objection period gave respondent no right to assume that she would be allowed to keep her kitchen equipment. To be sure, petitioner's failure to object within that period meant that the property respondent claimed as exempt would be treated as exempt. Properly understood, however, respondent's Schedule C claimed an exemption for an interest in the kitchen equipment in the amount of $10,718. Whether respondent would receive that amount in cash (if petitioner sold the property) or in physical property (if he did not) was left to petitioner to decide during the administration of the estate.

ARGUMENT

I. A TRUSTEE IS REQUIRED TO OBJECT ONLY TO THE PROPERTY CLAIMED AS EXEMPT, NOT TO THE DEBTOR'S MARKET VALUATION OF THAT PROPERTY

A. A Trustee Is Required To Object To A Debtor's Description Of The Property, Asserted Legal Basis For The Exemption, Or Claimed Value Of The Exemption

1. Section 522(l) of the Bankruptcy Code establishes the basic process by which debtors claim exemptions and trustees and other parties in interest object to those exemptions. Section 522(l) requires the debtor to file "a list of property that the debtor claims as exempt." Section 522(l) does not specify, however, the precise manner in which debtors must claim their exemptions or trustees must file their objections.

Rule 4003 of the Federal Rules of Bankruptcy Procedure supplies those details. It requires that the debtor "list the property claimed as exempt under § 522 of the Code on the schedule of assets required to be filed by Rule 1007." Fed. R. Bankr. P. 4003(a). Rule 1007, in turn, requires the debtor to file "schedules of assets and liabilities, * * * prepared as prescribed by the appropriate Official Forms." Fed. R. Bankr. P. 1007(b)(1). Official Form 6 contains the schedules of assets and liabilities that a debtor must file, and Schedule C requires the debtor to list "property claimed as exempt." Fed. R. Bankr. P. Official Form 6, Schedule C (capitalization omitted).

Rule 4003 also provides that any party in interest, including a trustee, > may file an objection to the list of property claimed as exempt only within 30 days after the meeting of creditors held under § 341(a) is concluded or within 30 days after any amendment to the list or supplemental schedules is filed, whichever is later.

Fed. R. Bankr. P. 4003(b). The bankruptcy court may extend the time for filing objections upon a showing of cause. Ibid. Absent a timely objection, "the property claimed as exempt on such list is exempt." 11 U.S.C. 522(l).

2. Under the Code, a debtor may exempt some types of property, regardless of their value. See 11 U.S.C. 522(d)(9) (professionally prescribed health aids); 11 U.S.C. 522(d)(10)(C) (disability benefits); 11 U.S.C.

522(d)(7) (unmatured life insurance contracts); 11 U.S.C. 522(d)(10)(A)-(C) (public assistance, veterans', illness, and unemployment benefits); 11 U.S.C. 522(d)(11)(A) (awards under a crime victim's reparation law). Most of the Code's exemptions, however, including the two exemptions that respondent invoked with respect to the kitchen equipment at issue, are limited to the debtor's "interest" in particular types of property up to a maximum dollar amount. See 11 U.S.C. 522(d)(5) and (6); J.A. 58a. When an asset is worth more than the interest that the debtor has exempted, the excess value belongs to the estate, not the debtor. Under those circumstances, the trustee may liquidate the debtor's exempt interest and the estate's non-exempt interest by selling the asset, and he may then distribute to the debtor and creditors their respective shares of the proceeds.

3. Because the nature of the asset determines whether the debtor can claim it in whole or only in part, "the list of property that the debtor claims as exempt" under Section 522(l) must include (a) a description of the asset, (b) the legal authority that provides the exemption, and (c) the value of the claimed exemption. See Fed. R. Bankr. P. Official Form 6, Schedule C. Those are the three pieces of information that a trustee needs in order to determine whether a claimed exemption is valid. So long as the debtor has an interest in property that is potentially exemptible; the debtor identifies the legal basis for her claimed exemption; and the debtor's claimed exemption does not exceed any applicable legal limit, then the debtor has asserted a valid exemption that the trustee has no reason to challenge. Conversely, a challenge to any of those three things—the property description, legal basis for the exemption, or value of the exemption—is an objection to the exemption itself, and thus must be made within the 30-day time period provided by Rule 4003(b).

4. In the present case, petitioner had no valid basis for objecting to respondent's claimed exemptions for her interests in the kitchen equipment. With respect to that equipment, respondent claimed an exemption of $1,850 under 11 U.S.C. 522(d)(6) (the tools of the trade exemption) and an exemption of $8,868 under 11 U.S.C. 522(d)(5) (the wild card exemption). J.A. 58a. It is undisputed that respondent properly described the kitchen equipment; that the statutory subsections she invoked apply to the property at issue; and that the values of her claimed exemptions did not exceed the maximum values permitted by those subsections. Respondent therefore claimed two valid exemptions for her interests in the kitchen equipment.

Because respondent's exemptions had an adequate basis in law and fact, petitioner did not object to either exemption within the 30-day time period provided by Rule 4003(b). The absence of an objection from petitioner (or any other party in interest) means that "the property claimed as exempt on such list is exempt." 11 U.S.C. 522(l). The property claimed as exempt on respondent's Schedule C were two interests in kitchen equipment valued at $1,850 and $8,868. Because petitioner did not object within the 30-day time period provided by Rule 4003(b), respondent is entitled to receive the value of those property interests during the administration of the estate.

B. Because The Debtor's Estimated Market Valuation Is Not Part Of Her Claim Of Exemption, A Trustee's Disagreement With That Valuation Provides No Basis For Objecting To The Exemption

A claim of exemption informs the trustee that, according to the debtor, she has an interest in property that does not belong to the estate. A market valuation informs the trustee whether, according to the debtor, there is an additional interest in the same property that does belong to the estate. The market valuation provided by the debtor on the fourth column of Schedule C thus facilitates the trustee's administration of the estate by helping him to discern whether particular assets have sufficient non-exempt value to justify liquidation by sale or auction. The presence or absence of additional value belonging to the creditors, however, has no bearing on whether the interest that the debtor claims as exempt is in fact exempt under the applicable statutory provisions.

That understanding of the Code is confirmed by the history of the relevant provisions and schedules. Since the Bankruptcy Act was enacted in 1898, Schedule C and its predecessors (Schedules B-4 and B-5) have required the debtor to provide the information necessary to determine the validity of her claimed exemptions: namely, a description of the property, a specification of the legal basis for the exemption, and a statement of the value of the claimed exemption. Compare General Orders and Forms in Bankruptcy, 172 U.S. 653, 677 (1898) (Form 1, Schedule B.(5)), and Fed. R. Bankr. P. Official Form 6, Schedule B-4 (1973), with Fed. R. Bankr. P. Official Form 6, Schedule C (1991). At various points in time, however, Schedule C and its predecessors have required other types of information that do not bear on the validity of the debtor's claimed exemptions.

Prior to 1991, for example, Schedule B-4 required the debtor to state the location of the property and its present use, although it did not require the debtor to estimate the market value of the property. That was true even though then, as now, the debtor was required to file on Schedule B-4 "a list of property that the debtor claims as exempt." 11 U.S.C. 522(l) (1988); see Fed. R. Bankr. P. 4003(a) (1990) (requiring, in tandem with Rule 1007(b)(1), that the debtor "list the property claimed as exempt" on Schedule B-4). In 1991, Schedule B-4 was amended and retitled Schedule C. Inter alia, those amendments required the debtor to state the property's location on Schedule A (real property) and Schedule B (personal property) instead of Schedule C; eliminated the prior requirement that the debtor state the property's present use; and required the debtor to state the property's market value. See Fed. R. Bankr. P. Official Form 6 advisory committee's note (1991). The recency of the requirement that the debtor identify the market value of property for which exemptions are claimed reinforces the conclusion that such valuations do not bear on the propriety of a debtor's claimed exemptions.

In order to preserve his challenge to a claimed exemption, a trustee or other party in interest must "object[]" within a specified period to the "list of property that the debtor claims as exempt." 11 U.S.C. 522(l); see Fed. R. Bankr. P. 4003(b) (establishing 30-day time limit, subject to extension for cause, for "[o]bjecting to a claim of exemptions"). As explained above, the "list of property that the debtor claims as exempt" includes a description of (a) an interest in an asset (b) of a particular value (c) that is exempt from the bankruptcy estate under applicable law. So long as the interest for which the debtor claims an exemption is less than or equal to the relevant statutory cap, the trustee's belief that the debtor has understated the value of the asset provides no basis for objecting to the claimed exemption. That is because the claimed exemption—the interest that the debtor claims as hers under the applicable law—stands separate and apart from the value of the asset; the two bear no necessary, or even likely, relationship to each other. In deciding whether to object to a claimed exemption, the trustee naturally looks only to the claimed exemption—not to the independent statement of property value. For that reason, neither Section 523(l) nor Rule 4003 speaks to the time or manner in which the trustee may seek to determine (for purposes of possible liquidation) whether the debtor's statement of property value is correct.

II. RESPONDENT'S ARGUMENTS THAT PETITIONER WAS REQUIRED TO OBJECT TO HER MARKET VALUATION OF HER PROPERTY LACK MERIT

A. Respondent Did Not Indicate An Intention To Exempt The Full Value Of The Asset

1. Respondent's Schedule C is most naturally read as claiming exemptions only for a definite, fixed interest

On her Schedule C of property claimed as exempt, respondent identified kitchen equipment as one category of property; invoked 11 U.S.C. 522(d)(5) and (6) as the applicable statutory provisions; claimed exemptions of $8,868 and $1,850 respectively under those provisions; and stated the current market value of the equipment as $10,718. J.A. 58. Relying substantially on this Court's decision in Taylor v. Freeland & Kronz, 503 U.S. 638 (1992), the court of appeals concluded that, by claiming exemptions totaling $10,718 while valuing the kitchen equipment in the same amount, respondent had expressed her intent to claim an exemption for the full value of the equipment, whatever that value turned out to be. See Pet. App. 11a, 13a, 17a. Petitioner, by contrast, construed respondent's Schedule C as claiming a definite, fixed exemption of $10,718, while indicating respondent's belief that the kitchen equipment was worth precisely that sum. Pet. Br. 23. Petitioner's interpretation of the form is more natural, and this Court's decision in Taylor provides no support for the court of appeals' contrary view.

1. Where, as here, a debtor's Schedule C assigns a particular dollar amount to an exemption, the form is naturally read to claim an exemption limited to the specified amount, not an indefinite exemption in whatever value the property is ultimately determined to have. See, e.g., In re Barroso-Herrans, 524 F.3d 341, 346 (1st Cir. 2008) ("[T]he trustee's reading of the exemptions as limited to [the claimed amount] of a $4,000 share of the proceeds from each law suit is objectively reasonable."); In re Hyman, 967 F.2d 1316, 1319 (9th Cir. 1992) ("[T]he [debtors] did not sufficiently notify others that they were claiming their entire homestead as exempt property; their schedule only gave notice that they claimed $45,000 as exempt, which is the proper amount of their homestead allowance.").

That is particularly true because respondent could have claimed an indefinite interest by listing the value of her claimed exemption as "unknown," "to be determined," or "100% of its value." Courts and commentators have recognized that such terms "'are red flags to trustees and creditors,' and therefore put them on notice that if they do not object, the whole value of the asset—whatever it might later turn out to be—will be exempt." Barroso-Herrans, 524 F.3d at 345 (quoting 1 Collier on Bankruptcy ¶ 8.06[1][c][ii], at 8-75 to 8-76 (Alan N. Resnick & Henry J. Sommer, eds., 15th ed. rev. 2007) (Collier)). Use of such terms may be unproblematic with respect to property that is exempt in full regardless of its value. But if respondent had used such terms in claiming exemptions under 11 U.S.C. 522(d)(5) and (6), which are limited to a debtor's "interest" in particular categories of property up to specified dollar amounts, petitioner would have been clearly placed on notice of the need to object because the exemptions would have been invalid if the value of the kitchen equipment exceeded the sum of the relevant statutory thresholds.

Respondent used none of those "red flag" terms, but instead claimed exemptions to which she assigned the definite and fixed values of $1,850 and $8,868, for a total of $10,718. Her Schedule C is most naturally read to indicate that she intended to claim an exempt interest limited to that amount and that she estimated $10,718 to be the actual market value of the property. Indeed, if a debtor believes that her exemptible interest is equal to the market value of a particular asset, but wishes to make clear that she is claiming only a specific dollar interest within the applicable statutory cap in the event that the property turns out to be worth more, the debtor has no other way to communicate that intent than by using the same dollar amount in the third and fourth columns of Schedule C.

2. This Court's decision in Taylor provides no support for the court of appeals' reading of respondent's Schedule C. In Taylor, a debtor listed the value of her claimed exemption in a pending lawsuit as "unknown," and the debtor's attorneys informed the trustee that the suit had a potential value well in excess of any available exemption. See 503 U.S. at 640, 642. After the creditors' meeting (which triggered the 30-day objection period in Rule 4003(b)), the trustee informed the debtor that he considered the lawsuit's proceeds to be property of the estate, but he elected not to file a formal objection based on his belief that the lawsuit lacked sufficient value. Id. at 640-641. When the lawsuit settled for a substantial sum and the trustee belatedly demanded that the debtor turn over the proceeds, the debtor's counsel responded that the trustee's failure to file a timely objection meant that the lawsuit was fully exempt. Id. at 643-644.

The trustee in Taylor did not dispute that, by listing "unknown" as the value of the lawsuit proceeds, the debtor had claimed an exemption for the full value of the lawsuit, whatever that turned out to be. Rather, the trustee argued that, notwithstanding his failure to object to an exemption that was invalid on its face, "courts may invalidate a claimed exemption after expiration of the 30-day period if the debtor did not have a good-faith or reasonably disputable basis for claiming it." 503 U.S. at 643. The Court rejected that argument, explaining that, once Rule 4003(b)'s 30-day deadline expires without an objection, "Section 522(l) [makes] the property exempt," and the trustee "cannot contest the exemption * * * whether or not [the debtor] had a colorable statutory basis for claiming it." Id. at 643-644. While recognizing that Rule 4003(b)'s 30-day deadline "may lead to unwelcome results," the Court observed that the deadline also "prompt[s] parties to act" and "produce[s] finality." Id. at 644.

The decision in Taylor sheds no light on the question presented here. In Taylor, all agreed that the debtor had claimed an exemption for the full recovery in her discrimination suit, whatever that amount turned out to be. The parties in Taylor also "agree[d] that [the debtor] did not have a right to exempt more than a small portion of these proceeds either under state law or under the federal exemptions specified in § 522(d)." 503 U.S. at 642. The trustee in Taylor declined to object within Rule 4003(b)'s 30-day period, not because he reasonably construed the form submitted by the debtor to claim an exemption that was within an applicable statutory cap, but because he judged that the certain costs of objection outweighed the speculative benefits to the estate. Id. at 641.

Here, by contrast, respondent used specific dollar figures, totaling $10,718, to identify the value of the claimed exemption. J.A. 58a. Petitioner had no occasion to object to respondent's claimed exemption because he construed that exemption exactly as it was written, as limited to a $10,718 interest in the kitchen equipment—and that amount was within applicable statutory limits. Nothing in Taylor supports the court of appeals' view that, by using the same $10,718 figure as the market value of the kitchen equipment, respondent signaled her intent to exempt the full value of the equipment, whatever that value turned out to be. Indeed, Taylor cannot support that view, both because (a) the debtor in Taylor described the value of her claimed exemption as "unknown" rather than specifying an exact dollar amount, and (b) the Court in Taylor was not confronted with any interpretive question analogous to this one, given the parties' agreement in that case that the debtor had sought to exempt the full value of the lawsuit. See Barroso-Herrans, 524 F.3d at 344 ("Taylor does not tell us what has been claimed as exempt—only that whatever has been claimed as exempt is beyond the estate's grasp once the deadline has elapsed.").[5]

2. Related provisions of the Bankruptcy Code and Rules reinforce the conclusion that respondent's claimed exemption in her kitchen equipment was limited to a specific dollar amount

As explained above, respondent's Schedule C identified two dollar figures ($1,850 and $8,868), which totaled $10,718, in the column entitled "value of claimed exemption." Respondent's use of those specific figures is most naturally understood as claiming an exemption for a $10,718 interest in the equipment. Related provisions of the Bankruptcy Code and Rules reinforce that conclusion.

1. Under the Rules, a trustee has limited time to review a debtor's schedules and file objections to claims of exemption. The burden should therefore be placed on the debtor, who knows best what she intends to claim as exempt, to complete her schedules in a way that accurately communicates her intent. See In re Hyman, 967 F.2d at 1320 n.6. Specifically, Rule 4003(b) requires objections to exemptions within 30 days of the creditors' meeting, which generally must be held 20 to 40 days after a debtor files her petition. Fed. R. Bankr. P. 2003(a). Thus, absent an extension for cause, objections to claimed exemptions must be filed within 50-70 days

[5] Indeed, the debtor in Taylor was not called upon to estimate the market value of her lawsuit because the forms used at that time did not require her to do so. The debtor in Taylor filed for bankruptcy in 1984, seven years before then-Schedule B-4 was amended to require any estimate of market valuation from the debtor. See 503 U.S. at 640; p. 17, supra; Pet. Br. 28. The interpretive question that the court of appeals addressed in this case therefore could not have arisen under the law in effect at the time of the bankruptcy petition in Taylor.

after receiving the debtor's Schedule C. In light of that "relatively short" objection period, "it is important that trustees and creditors be able to determine precisely whether a listed asset is validly exempt simply by reading a debtor's schedules." In re Hyman, 967 F.2d at 1319-1320 n.6; In re Barroso-Herrans, 524 F.3d at 345 ("[A]fter Taylor, a failure to object to a claimed objection exemption has very harsh consequences for the estate, and so it is most fair to place on the debtor the burden of claiming exemptions unambiguously.").

While the Rules' time frame for asserting objections allows a trustee to identify claimed exemptions that are invalid on their face, it will often be insufficient to conduct appraisals to determine whether particular assets are worth more than the applicable exemption caps. That practical consideration reinforces the view that the time limits for "object[ing]" to a claimed exemption do not apply to a trustee's reassessment and possible rejection of the debtor's valuation of listed property. To be sure, if petitioner had construed respondent's Schedule C to claim an exemption for the full value of her kitchen equipment, he might have objected (without first performing an appraisal) on the ground that the exemption was potentially invalid since the kitchen equipment might be worth more than the applicable exemption limits. A rule of construction that encouraged such objections, however, would engender needless litigation in cases where the debtor in fact intended to claim an exemption of a specific dollar amount.

Recognizing the debtor's responsibility to state her claimed exemptions accurately also accords with the larger purposes and structure of the federal bankruptcy system. That system is premised on the notion that an "honest but unfortunate debtor who surrenders for distribution the property which [s]he owns" deserves "a new opportunity in life and a clear field for future effort." Local Loan Co. v. Hunt, 292 U.S. 234, 244 (1934). For the system to function effectively, the debtor must honestly and accurately report her assets, liabilities, and exemptions so that the property can be divided between the debtor and her creditors in accordance with applicable Code provisions. See, e.g., In re An-Tze Cheng, 308 B.R. 448, 458 (B.A.P. 9th Cir. 2004) ("The efficacy of the bankruptcy system depends in important respects on accurate self-reporting by debtors."), aff'd, 160 Fed. Appx. 644 (9th Cir. 2005) (mem.). When a debtor seeks to claim an exemption for a listed asset in its entirety, rather than for a specific monetary interest in that asset, the debtor can and should so indicate on her Schedule C.

2. To the extent that a particular Schedule C is ambiguous, the trustee should seek to resolve the ambiguity so as to render claimed exemptions valid rather than invalid. Respondent contends, and the court of appeals held, that petitioner should have interpreted her Schedule C to claim the full value of the kitchen equipment, whatever that value turned out to be. But respondent's kitchen equipment was not among the categories of property that may be exempted from the bankruptcy estate regardless of its value. Respondent thus argues in effect that petitioner should have presumed the worst—i.e., that respondent was claiming an exemption potentially in excess of the Code's limits. The more usual and sensible presumption is that debtors are aware of the statutory limits and are attempting to claim exemptions to which they are legally entitled. See United States v. Budd, 144 U.S. 154, 163 (1892) ("[N]o man is presumed to do wrong or to violate the law, and every man is presumed to know the law.").

That presumption is particularly sound in the circumstances of this case because respondent correctly identified 11 U.S.C. 522(d)(5) and (6) as the bases for the claimed exemption. J.A. 58a. The exemptions authorized by those provisions are limited to a debtor's "interest" in particular types of property up to specified dollar amounts. The amounts that respondent claimed as exempt under those provisions fell within the statutory caps. Given respondent's express reliance on statutory provisions that are limited by their terms to "interest[s]" having specified maximum values, and given her use of precise dollar figures falling within those statutory maxima, petitioner had no reason to conclude that respondent was claiming a potentially invalid exemption for the full value of the equipment.

3. The court of appeals' approach has the perverse effect of rewarding respondent for her inaccurate assessment of the market value of her kitchen equipment. If respondent had correctly listed that market value as $17,000, she would have had no basis for opposing petitioner's subsequent motion to sell, and she would have received a total exemption of $10,718. But the court of appeals held that by undervaluing her property, respondent had the opportunity to receive a greater exemption—in the amount of the actual value of the property, or $17,000.

As explained above (see p. 16, supra), requiring the debtor to identify the market value of the property listed on her Schedule C assists the trustee in determining whether the property has significant additional value, beyond the interest that the debtor claims as exempt under applicable Code provisions, that may feasibly be liquidated and distributed to creditors. The information currently required to be included in the fourth column of Schedule C thus facilitates the administration of the bankruptcy estate, even though it is irrelevant to the trustee's determination whether a claimed exemption is valid. A debtor who believes that an asset has significant non-exemptible value, however, might perceive an incentive to list on her Schedule C a market value at or very close to the claimed exemption, in order to dissuade the trustee from undertaking an appraisal and sale. Acceptance of the interpretive approach adopted by the court of appeals would create an additional incentive to such undervaluations of property.

4. Petitioner's approach entails no unfairness to debtors. If a debtor intends to exempt the full value of an asset, whatever that value may be, she may convey that intent by saying so explicitly or by using "unknown" or similar language to describe the value of the claimed exemption. See pp. 19-20, supra. In addition, a debtor may amend her Schedule C "as a matter of course at any time before the case is closed." Fed. R. Bankr. P. 1009(a). If a debtor claims as exempt a specific dollar interest that is beneath the applicable cap, based on the mistaken belief that the dollar figure represents the asset's true market value, nothing prevents her from claiming a larger exemption when she discovers her mistake (when, for example, the trustee moves to sell the property). The Rules therefore provide a straightforward solution for debtors who mistakenly undervalue property and who are entitled to claim larger exemptions: express amendment by debtors of those claimed exemptions, not implied enlargement of those exemptions by courts.[6]

In the present case, there was little reason for respondent to amend because she was not entitled to claim a larger exemption.[7] Nevertheless, respondent had ample opportunity to claim a larger exemption if she believed that one was authorized under the Code. At the creditors' meeting, petitioner informed respondent's attorney that the likely value of the kitchen equipment was approximately $17,000, and that petitioner intended to sell the property in order to generate funds for unsecured creditors. Br. in Opp. 3-4 & n.1. That statement of intent strongly suggested that petitioner understood respondent to be claiming an exemption limited to a $10,718 interest in the equipment. At that point, if respondent had intended to claim an exemption for the kitchen equipment in its entirety, she could have amended her Schedule C to claim the full value of $17,000

[6] Absent bad faith, a debtor could convert her case from Chapter 7 to Chapter 13, and her property would remain her own rather than being transferred to a bankruptcy estate. 11 U.S.C. 706(a), 1306(b); Marrama v. Citizens Bank, 549 U.S. 365 (2007). In addition, a Chapter 7 debtor could use her post-petition income to repurchase property given over to the bankruptcy estate.

[7] Indeed, respondent's total claimed exemptions under the Code's wild card provision actually exceeded the applicable statutory cap. Respondent invoked the wild card exemption for an interest of $8,868 in the kitchen equipment, as well as for interests totaling $26 in bank accounts and interests totaling $2,306 in food goods at her restaurant. J.A. 57a-58a. Thus, respondent claimed a total wild card exemption of $11,200, or $975 more than she was permitted at the time. 11 U.S.C. 522(d)(5). When petitioner did not object (apparently because the foodstuffs were perishable items that could not be readily sold), respondent received a windfall of the additional $975.

(to which petitioner presumably would have objected, as in excess of the wild card exemption limit of $10,225).

But respondent did not amend—which makes this case the flipside of Taylor. In Taylor, the debtor told the trustee that she intended to claim the asset's full value, and the trustee asserted no objection to that facially invalid exemption. Here, the trustee told the debtor that the asset was worth more than her exemption and that the trustee intended to liquidate the property, and the debtor neither amended her Schedule C nor informed the trustee that he had misunderstood the extent of the exemption that she intended to claim. Moreover, because trustees must apply to sell property and provide notice of that application to the debtor, 11 U.S.C. 725; Fed. R. Bankr. P. 2002, 6004, the Court need not be concerned that debtors in future cases will lack notice of any undervaluation.

B. Petitioner's Proposal To Liquidate The Kitchen Equipment And Divide The Proceeds Between Respondent And Her Creditors Did Not Undermine Any Legitimate Reliance Interest Created By Expiration Of The 30-Day Objection Period

The court of appeals asserted that its approach "accords with bankruptcy's promise of a fresh start," because "[o]nce the period for objection lapses, all parties know what property belongs to the bankruptcy estate and what remains with the debtor." Pet. App. 16a. That assertion is correct as far as it goes. Once Rule 4003(b)'s 30-day period expires, "the property claimed as exempt" on a debtor's Schedule C "is exempt." 11 U.S.C. 522(l). But the "property claimed as exempt" on Schedule C is not always or even typically an entire asset or tangible item. See pp. 4, 14, supra. The Code permits only a handful of in-kind exemptions for entire assets. Most of the Code's exemptions instead allow a debtor to exempt an "interest" in property, up to a maximum dollar value. Accordingly, the "property claimed as exempt" on Schedule C is often an interest worth a certain dollar amount, which the debtor will receive in cash if the trustee liquidates the asset by sale or auction.

By specifying precise dollar figures as the value of her claimed exemptions in the kitchen equipment, and by relying on statutory provisions (11 U.S.C. 522(d)(5) and (6)) that are limited by their terms to "interest[s]" in property up to a specified amount, respondent's Schedule C expressed an intent to claim as exempt an interest in kitchen equipment worth a total value of $10,718. Once the period for filing objections expired, respondent knew that she would be allowed to retain that interest, either in cash (if the trustee sold the equipment) or in physical property (if he did not). But the trustee's failure to object gave respondent no basis for assuming that she could retain the physical property rather than the dollar value of the interest claimed to be exempt. That choice is always the trustee's, and it is frequently made after the period to object has expired.

The court of appeals was therefore wrong in stating that, if respondent's "listing were construed to exempt only that portion of the property having the value stated[,] the provisions finalizing exemptions if no objections are filed would be rendered meaningless." Pet. App. 16a-17a n.4 (quoting 9 Collier ¶ 4003.02[1], at 4003-5). If respondent's Schedule C had identified $17,000 as the correct market value for the kitchen equipment, and the trustee had failed to object to her claimed $10,718 exemption, respondent would have known that the equipment was subject to liquidation, in which case she would receive her exempt interest in cash proceeds from the sale. On petitioner's approach, respondent will have precisely that same certainty when she undervalues property. What respondent actually seeks, and what the court of appeals granted her, was a different kind of certainty: the certainty that she could keep an asset's full value, which she had not claimed as exempt and to which she was not statutorily entitled.

CONCLUSION

The judgment of the court of appeals should be reversed.

Respectfully submitted.

ON APPEAL FROM THE UNITED STATES DISTRICT COURT FOR THE DISTRICT OF IDAHO

BRIEF FOR UNITED STATES TRUSTEE

STATEMENT OF JURISDICTION

Judith M. Scott, d/b/a We The People Forms and Service Center of Boise, appeals from a final decision of the United States District Court for the District of Idaho, which affirmed a final decision of the United States Bankruptcy Court for the District of Idaho. The bankruptcy court had jurisdiction under 28 U.S.C. § 157(b) and issued its final decision on July 3, 2002. On July 11, 2002, Scott filed a notice of appeal to the district court, which had appellate jurisdiction under 28 U.S.C. § 158(a). On March 31, 2003, the district court rendered its final decision. On May 7, 2003, Scott filed a notice of appeal to this Court, which has jurisdiction under 28 U.S.C. § 158(d).

STATEMENT OF THE ISSUES

1. Whether the bankruptcy court abused its discretion in holding that Scott committed an “unfair or deceptive act” under 11 U.S.C. § 110(i).

2. Whether 11 U.S.C. § 110’s prohibition of “fraudulent, unfair, and deceptive” acts by bankruptcy petition preparers exceeds Congress’s authority under the Bankruptcy Clause.

3. Whether 11 U.S.C. § 110(i)’s prohibition of “fraudulent, unfair, or deceptive” acts by bankruptcy petition preparers violates Scott’s First Amendment rights.

STATEMENT OF THE CASE

This case arises from the bankruptcy court’s determination that Scott violated 11 U.S.C. § 110 while preparing a Chapter 7 bankruptcy petition for Kevin and Laura Doser. The bankruptcy court found that Scott violated 11 U.S.C. § 110(g) by receiving and delivering payment of the Dosers’ court fees, that Scott’s fees were excessive under 11 U.S.C. § 110(h), and that Scott violated 11 U.S.C. § 110(i) by committing unfair and deceptive acts. The district court affirmed each of the bankruptcy court’s rulings.

STATEMENT OF FACTS

1. As part of the Bankruptcy Reform Act of 1994, Pub. L. 103-394, Congress enacted 11 U.S.C. § 110 to create "standards and penalties pertaining to bankruptcy petition preparers." H.R. Rep. 103-835, 103d Cong., 2d Sess. 40-41 (Oct. 4, 1994). The term "bankruptcy petition preparer" includes all persons, apart from attorneys and their employees, who are paid to prepare bankruptcy documents filed in court. 11 U.S.C. § 110(a)(1). By enacting Section 110, Congress sought to impose legal limits on preparers who "often lack the necessary legal training and ethics regulation" to provide debtors with legal advice and legal services. H.R. Rep. 103-834, at 40-41. Congress determined that when preparers try to provide an expansive range of services, they may mislead or "take unfair advantage of persons who are ignorant of their rights both inside and outside the bankruptcy system." Ibid.

Congress responded to such problems by enacting protections that are now codified in 11 U.S.C. § 110. In relevant part, Section 110 forbids bankruptcy preparers from committing any "fraudulent, unfair or deceptive" act. See 11 U.S.C. § 110(i). Section 110 also requires preparers to sign filed documents and disclose their Social Security number, to give debtors a copy of filed documents, and to disclose any fees charged within a year of the bankruptcy case's filing. See 11 U.S.C. § 110(b), (c), (d), & (h). Preparers are forbidden from executing documents on a debtor’s behalf, using the word “legal” in advertisements, or receiving the debtor’s court fees. See 11 U.S.C. § 110(e), (f), & (g). Bankruptcy courts must disallow a preparer’s fees to the extent that they are excessive. See 11 U.S.C. § 110(h)(2).

2. On December 4, 2001, Kevin and Laura Doser filed a bankruptcy petition under Chapter 7 of the Bankruptcy Code. The petition disclosed that it was prepared by Scott, and that the Dosers paid Scott $214.00, which included $199.00 for document preparation and $15.00 for photocopies.

On December 27, 2002, the bankruptcy court sua sponte ordered Scott to show cause that she did not violate 11 U.S.C. § 110 through her services and compensation concerning the Dosers’ petition. That order invited Scott, the Chapter 7 Trustee, and the United States Trustee to file written submissions.[1] On February 19, 2002, the bankruptcy court held an

3. On July 3, 2002, the bankruptcy court issued a decision outlining Scott's business methods, and holding that she violated 11 U.S.C. § 110. The bankruptcy court explained that Scott operates, under the name "We The People Forms and Service Center of Boise," an Idaho franchise of "We The People Forms and Service Centers USA, Inc.," a California-based corporation. Bankr. Op. 5. Scott informed the Dosers that she was not an attorney, directed them to sign a "purchase order," and collected a $214.00 fee. Id. at 6-8. Scott then gave the Dosers two documents: a "Bankruptcy Overview," and a "Workbook." Id. at 8-9.

a. The Overview is a twenty-page document that describes general concepts of Chapter 7 bankruptcy and offers "tips" on how customers should represent themselves in bankruptcy proceedings. Bankr. Op. 9. The Overview contains "detailed, substantive material," listing "all exemptions allowed under Idaho law" and recommending how such exemptions should be documented on a customer's bankruptcy schedule. Id. at 10. Furthermore, the Overview informs Scott's bankruptcy customers that:

> The bankruptcy law regarding the scope of a Chapter 7 discharge is complex. Know your rights. Should you have any doubts about the appropriateness of bankruptcy

> In addition, don't forget that you enjoy the right, as a WE THE PEOPLE customer, to chat with our Supervising Attorney, at no additional cost to you.

Overview 7. The "Supervising Attorney" is a lawyer retained by Scott's California-based franchisor and represents only the franchisor; the Overview does not inform customers that the attorney does not represent Scott or Scott's customers.[2] Bankr. Op. 11.

b. Scott's other document, the Workbook, is a questionnaire that her bankruptcy customers use to describe their assets, debts, and financial affairs. Bankr. Op. 9. Customers return the Workbook to Scott, and she checks the information for legibility and typographical errors. Then, she faxes the Workbook to the franchisor's office in California, and the franchisor's employees transfer information from the Workbook to official bankruptcy forms. The official forms are electronically transmitted to Scott, who prints them and asks debtors to sign the papers in her office. Id. at 8-9. After the Dosers signed Scott's non-bankruptcy business includes services associated with divorce, wills, copyright, trademark, name changes, incorporation, and probate. See http://www.boisewethepeople.com (visited January 14, 2004). Scott pays her franchisor a portion of her gross revenues and a $200 monthly fee for the Supervising Attorney. Bankr. Op. 20 & n.13, 22-23.

their bankruptcy forms, Scott made three copies. The Dosers gave Scott a money order payable to the clerk of court, and Scott delivered the documents and the money order to the bankruptcy court. Id. at 9.

c. In her show-cause proceeding before the bankruptcy court, Scott argued that she did not receive adequate notice and hearing, and that she did not violate 11 U.S.C. § 110. The bankruptcy court disagreed, holding that the show-cause proceeding satisfied due process, and that Scott's business practices violated two provisions of 11 U.S.C. § 110.

Under 11 U.S.C. § 110(g), the bankruptcy court held that Scott illegally collected and received the Doser's money order for "the court fees in connection with filing the petition." See Bankr. Op. 34-39 (quoting 11 U.S.C. § 110(g)). The court fined Scott $10.00 for that misconduct. Id. at 40.

Under 11 U.S.C. § 110(i), the bankruptcy court held that Scott engaged in three "unfair or deceptive" acts. First, as to the Supervising Attorney, the bankruptcy court determined that although "this lawyer does not represent Ms. Scott's bankruptcy customers * * * , it is undisputed that Ms. Scott in person, and the [Overview] * * * , expressly instruct the customers to contact this lawyer for advice." Bankr. Op. 23. The bankruptcy court held that, by "hyp[ing] the availability of the supervising attorney as an advantage to customers who deal with We the People," Scott risked misleading customers. Specifically, customers might adopt the "illusory" belief that, "because of the association of an attorney in the process, [Scott's] approach to processing bankruptcy forms is more beneficial and reliable than others providing similar services." Id. at 23-24. In fact, the bankruptcy court found, "customers gain no advantage because Ms. Scott has a lawyer available to 'review' and approve her blank forms." Id. at 24.

The bankruptcy court also held that "there is no real advantage to customers' having access to the lawyer to 'chat.'" Bankr. Op. 24-25. Rather, "Ms. Scott's customers are at risk if they think they are receiving reliable, personal guidance about bankruptcy law. By necessity, the information the lawyer provides them is no more customized or trustworthy than they could obtain consulting a book at the library." Id. at 25. The bankruptcy court found that Scott's layperson customers could be misled by undisclosed distinctions between, on the one hand, repeated offers to "chat" with an attorney about general bankruptcy "advice," and on the other, the hidden impossibility of that lawyer's representing them in their particular case. Id. at 25-26.

Second, as to the Overview, the bankruptcy court found that "Ms. Scott's practice of distributing her publication to her customers is fraught with the potential for confusion and damage.” Bankr. Op. 27. Specific shortfalls include the Overview’s failure to mention the option of Chapter 13 bankruptcy and its failure to explain evidentiary requirements for Chapter 7’s exceptions to discharge. Id. at 27-28. Also, the Overview omits discussion of certain exceptions from discharge, thereby jeopardizing debtors’ efforts to obtain anticipated relief under Chapter 7. Id. at 29. The bankruptcy court found one of the Overview’s “tips” about overzealous trustees “laughable,” id. at 29-30, and ultimately concluded that “[i]t is clear on this record that * * * Ms. Scott recommended, either expressly or impliedly, that her bankruptcy customers consult [the Overview] as accurate and reliable information for use in filing for bankruptcy and completing their forms.” Id. at 30. “[Preparers] may not make such suggestions consistent with their proper role as transcribers of bankruptcy forms. This is the sort of recommendation that constitutes prohibited legal advice in this context.” Ibid. (emphasis added).

Third, with respect to the Workbook, the bankruptcy court noted as a general matter that efforts to “simplify” questions in official bankruptcy forms often require preparers to exercise impermissible legal judgment when they transfer information from the Workbook to official bankruptcy documents. Bankr. Op. 32. The bankruptcy court then listed specific examples of ambiguities and errors from Scott’s Workbook, including the Workbook’s use of “quick-sale value,” analysis of “pets,” advice regarding government-guaranteed student loans, and treatment of “net income” from a debtor’s second job. Id. at 32-33. A debtor who followed the Workbook’s inaccurate instructions on those issues would, absent substantive correction or legal advice, be unable to complete official bankruptcy forms accurately. The bankruptcy court concluded that Scott’s substantively flawed Workbook risked “potential debtor prejudice, and represents a deceptive and unfair practice in violation of § 110.” Id. at 33.

Despite holding that Scott violated 11 U.S.C. § 110(i), the bankruptcy court in its discretion declined to impose any injunctive or monetary relief based on Scott’s “unfair or deceptive” acts. Bankr. Op. 39-40.

d. The bankruptcy court also found Scott’s $214.00 fee excessive under 11 U.S.C. § 110(h)(2), which directs courts to “disallow * * * any [preparer’s] fee * * * found to be in excess of the value of the services rendered.” Bankr. Op. 40. The bankruptcy court noted that other bankruptcy preparers typically charge $50-$60 for normal bankruptcy petitions. The bankruptcy court also stated that few Chapter 7 cases “could involve a simpler set of bankruptcy paperwork” than the Dosers’ case. Id. at 41-42. Moreover, the bankruptcy court in Idaho offers free bankruptcy forms on its website, allows forms to be completed on-line, and sells hard copies of such forms for $3.00. Id. at 42.

Given the simplicity of the Dosers' case, the bankruptcy court discredited Scott's documentation of four hours she allegedly spent on their petition, including one hour of photocopying and collation, but not including the word processing performed by Scott's franchisor. Bankr. Op. 44. Based on the bankruptcy court's experience in other cases, decisions from other jurisdictions, testimony at the hearing, and various case-specific circumstances, the bankruptcy court calculated Scott's reasonable compensation as three hours at $30.00 per hour and $10.00 for copying and postage expenses. Id. at 44-52. Thus, the court ordered Scott to surrender $114.00 of her fee to the Dosers' Chapter 7 trustee under 11 U.S.C. 110(h)(2). Id. at 52.

4. On July 11, 2002, Scott appealed to federal district court. She asserted for the first time that 11 U.S.C. § 110 is constitutionally invalid under Article I. Scott also argued that her conduct did not constitute unauthorized practice of law or an unfair or deceptive act, and that Section 110 violates the First Amendment.[3]

[3] Scott further argued that Section 110 is unconstitutional under Article III, that the bankruptcy court failed to provide notice and hearing, that Section 110 did not authorize the show-cause order, that she did not violate Section 110(g) by accepting the Dosers' money order, and that her $214.00 fee was not excessive under 11 U.S.C. § 110(h). See Scott Dist. Ct. Br. i-iii. The district court rejected each of those arguments, and none of them appears in Scott's opening brief before this Court.

The district court affirmed the bankruptcy court's decision in all respects. The district court held that Section 110 does not violate the Constitution, and that Scott engaged in unfair and deceptive conduct. Noting that Scott did not challenge any of the bankruptcy court's operative factual conclusions, Dist. Op. 9-10, the district court affirmed the bankruptcy court's finding that to offer Scott's customers a "chat" with her franchisor's Supervising Attorney "misleads debtors into believing that the services offered by We The People are more reliable than those that do not offer attorneys. This is a deceptive and unfair act." Id. at 11. The district court also affirmed the bankruptcy court's finding that "information provided to potential debtors" in the Overview and Workbook is misleading. Id. at 11-12. The district court therefore determined that for Scott to give the Dosers such documents was a "fraudulent, unfair, or deceptive act" in violation of Section 110. Id. at 12.

5. On May 7, 2003, Scott filed a timely notice of appeal to this Court.

SUMMARY OF ARGUMENT

1. This case turns on three factual findings, each of which is reviewed for clear error. First, the bankruptcy court found that for Scott to "hype" her association with the franchisor's Supervising Attorney was deceptive and unfair because it risked misleading customers about the value of that attorney's participation. Second, the bankruptcy court found that it was deceptive and unfair for Scott to recommend an erroneous Overview to her customers in connection with their bankruptcy filing because that risked misleading debtors about the operation of bankruptcy law. Third, the bankruptcy court found that Scott's Workbook inaccurately "simplified" Chapter 7 bankruptcy concepts, thereby implicitly rendering legal judgments, risking inaccurate bankruptcy filings, and causing unfair prejudice to potential debtors.

The district court affirmed each of those findings, and Scott makes no effort to refute them. Nor can Scott deny that her actions, as detailed by the bankruptcy court, qualify under federal bankruptcy law as "unfair or deceptive" conduct pursuant to 11 U.S.C. § 110(i). As the courts below determined, each of Scott's actions conveyed inaccurate information, risked misleading debtors, and inflated the perceived value of Scott's services.

Scott mistakenly focuses on whether her conduct constituted "unauthorized practice of law" under Idaho state law. See Appellant's Br. 35-43. Scott's arguments are dubious even on their own terms, but the dispositive legal question is whether Scott violated federal law, namely 11 U.S.C. § 110(i), by committing an "unfair or deceptive" act. Unauthorized practice of law often constitutes a violation of 11 U.S.C. § 110(i). But the Bankruptcy Code does not indicate that preparers only violate Section 110(i) if they also violate state authorized practice laws. Cf. 11 U.S.C. § 110(k) (noting that Section 110 neither codifies nor preempts such laws). The present appeal depends on the interpretation of Section 110(i) as a matter of federal bankruptcy law, not on details of Idaho state law.

2. a. Scott claims (Br. 19-29) that Section 110 exceeds Congress's power under the Bankruptcy Clause of the Constitution. Scott has waived that argument by failing to raise it in the bankruptcy court. Even if this Court opts to reach the issue, no court has found Section 110 invalid, and this Court should not either. Scott admits (Br. 2) that 11 U.S.C. § 110(i) provides important debtor protection from "scam artists and others [who were] * * * counter-productive and were charging their customers exorbitant fees." Without Section 110, such dishonest or incompetent preparers might mislead Chapter 7 debtors or extract undue fees, thereby dissipating assets that would otherwise be part of the bankruptcy estate. Because Section 110 is inextricably related to initiating a bankruptcy case, and because it safeguards assets of potential Chapter 7 debtors and the bankruptcy system's integrity, Section 110 represents a valid exercise of Congress's power under the Bankruptcy Clause.

b. Scott also argues that Section 110(i) violates her First Amendment rights. Section 110(i), however, does not target protected speech. Section 110 bars only fraudulent, unfair, and deceptive acts, without imposing any limitation on particular content or viewpoints. Moreover, Section 110 does not restrict any communication directed to the public at large. Instead, Section 110 only prevents bankruptcy preparers from engaging in “unfair or deceptive” acts that would undermine the heavily regulated relationship between preparers and their customers. Scott concedes (Br. 2) that protecting debtors is important and that Section 110 significantly protects against “scam artists” and incompetent preparers. Such interests do not target protected speech. Because any effect of Section 110 on communication is incidental to its valid regulation of unprotected conduct, the First Amendment allows Congress to regulate “misleading and unfair” conduct in the narrow context of preparers and their vulnerable customers.

Furthermore, Section 110 regulates only the efforts of paid bankruptcy preparers to promote and execute their commercial enterprise improperly. For example, Scott’s documents in this case were distributed as mere tools to help customers gather data for their paid petition preparation. Accordingly, any communication affected by Section 110 would constitute deceptive commercial speech. The First Amendment permits the government to “ban commercial expression that is fraudulent or deceptive without further justification.” Edenfield v. Fane, 507 U.S. 761, 768 (1993).

Finally, Scott claims that Section 110 suffers from unconstitutional vagueness and overbreadth. Scott fails, however, to argue that Section 110 is unconstitutionally vague as applied to the specific conduct condemned by the bankruptcy court. Nor can any facial challenge succeed. Because Section 110 does not impose any criminal sanction or implicate free speech concerns, a facial challenge would require Scott to “establish that no set of circumstances exists under which [Section 110] would be valid.” Hotel & Motel Ass’n of Oakland v. City of Oakland, 344 F.3d 959, 971 (9th Cir. 2003). Scott has not carried that burden.

STANDARD OF REVIEW

This Court reviews a district court’s appeal from a bankruptcy court using the same standards employed by the district court. Accordingly, this Court reviews the bankruptcy court’s factual findings for clear error and its legal conclusions de novo. In re Mantz, 343 F.3d 1207, 1211 (9th Cir. 2003). The bankruptcy court’s application of law to fact under Section 110 is reviewed for abuse of discretion, In re Agyekum, 225 B.R. 695, 698 (9th Cir. BAP 1998), and this Court “must have a definite and firm conviction that the court below committed a clear error of judgment * * * before reversal is proper." In re Crowe, 243 B.R. 43, 47 (9th Cir. BAP), aff'd 246 F.3d 673 (9th Cir. 2000); see Smith v. Jackson, 84 F.3d 1213, 1221 (9th Cir. 1996) (same).

ARGUMENT

I. The Bankruptcy Court Properly Held That Scott's Conduct In Preparing The Dosers' Bankruptcy Petition Violated 11 U.S.C. § 110(i)

Congress enacted Section 110 in 1994 to address the "growing problem of bankruptcy preparers who abuse the system in the course of preparing documents for debtors to file in bankruptcy court." 140 Cong. Rec. S4506 (daily ed. April 20, 1994) (Sen. Metzenbaum). The original need to regulate preparers derived from the fact that, in Congress's view, "far too many [bankruptcy petition preparers] * * * attempt to provide legal advice and legal services to debtors. These preparers often lack the necessary legal training and ethics regulation to provide such services in [an] adequate and appropriate manner." H.R. Rep. No. 103-835 at 56 (1994). Negligence and fraud were widespread, with "[h]undreds of typing mills * * * luring customers with vague promises of solving their credit problems, charging the customers hundreds of dollars while inducing them to sign bankruptcy petitions they often do not understand, and then improperly filing bankruptcy on their behalf." 140 Cong. Rec. S14597 (daily ed. Oct. 7, 1994) (Sen. Metzenbaum). Moreover, there was legislative concern that most of the “petition mills” were located in low-income, minority communities and “prey[ed] on the poor and unsophisticated.” Ibid.; see also Appellant’s Br. 2, 16 (admitting that Section 110 serves the important national policy of protecting debtors from abuse by preparers).

Congressional efforts to alleviate such harm to debtors and the bankruptcy system include 11 U.S.C. 110(i), which forbids bankruptcy petition preparers from committing any “fraudulent, unfair, or deceptive act.” In this case, the bankruptcy court held that Scott’s conduct violated Section 110(i) in three respects. The bankruptcy court’s factual analysis of that conduct is undisputed. Appellant’s Br. 18 (averring that all “issues presented by this appeal are issues of law”).

A. The Supervising Attorney

Scott “hype[d]” the fact that she cooperates with a “Supervising Attorney.” Bankr. Op. 23-24. She also informed customers that they should contact the Supervising Attorney for a “chat.” The bankruptcy court correctly found such conduct unfair and deceptive because customers might easily be misled about the Supervising Attorney’s practical value to them. Scott did not inform customers that the Supervising Attorney represents the franchisor, not the customers or herself.

The bankruptcy court held that neither the Supervising Attorney’s limited assistance to Scott nor the possibility of a "chat" provides any cognizable benefit to debtors like the Dosers. On the contrary, "this arrangement may lead her customers to believe that, because of the association of an attorney with the process, Ms. Scott's approach to processing their bankruptcy forms is more beneficial and reliable than others providing similar services. Any such reliance is illusory." Id. at 23-24. Explaining part of the problem at length, the bankruptcy court stated:

> While customers are encouraged [by Scott's Overview] to exercise their 'right' to 'chat' with the lawyer about their bankruptcy problems, no attempt is made to inform them that they cannot * * * rely upon the lawyer's advice in the traditional manner where a client seeks counsel from an attorney. Absent the existence of an attorney-client relationship, Ms. Scott's customers are at risk if they think they are receiving reliable, personal guidance about bankruptcy law. By necessity, the information the lawyer provides them is no more customized or trustworthy than they could obtain consulting a book at the library. The Court concludes Congress did not intend that a [preparer] require customers to attempt such complex distinctions.

Id. at 25-26.

Scott's brief never disputes the bankruptcy court's finding that her relationship to the Supervising Attorney is misleading. Cf. Appellant's Br. 8, 13, 35. In fact, Scott's Overview explains that customers should "seek the advice of an attorney" if there are "any doubts about the appropriateness of bankruptcy in your particular case." Overview 7. The Overview then states that customers "enjoy the right, as a WE THE PEOPLE customer, to chat with our Supervising Attorney, at no additional cost."

Ibid. The bankruptcy court was correct in finding that Scott's conduct and statements regarding the Supervising Attorney were incomplete, unfair, and self-serving. Such conduct falls within the prohibition of 11 U.S.C. § 110(i), and is precisely the kind of misleading activity that Congress sought to excise from the preparer-customer relationship.

B. The Overview

Scott gave her customers an alleged "Overview" of Chapter 7, which contained "tips" about how to complete bankruptcy schedules and how to represent oneself in bankruptcy proceedings. The bankruptcy court rightly held that conduct impermissible under Section 110, quoting other courts' warnings that lay bankruptcy preparers ought not to provide legal advice and that "[l]egal advice is legal advice whether it comes directly from the petition preparer or indirectly via * * * a bankruptcy treatise being recited by that preparer." Bankr. Op. 27 (quoting In re Bush, 275 B.R. 69, 78-79 (Bankr. D. Idaho 2002)). The particular harm caused by advice in the preparer-customer context is that "[p]ersons seeking legal assistance tend to place their trust in an individual purporting to have expertise in that area." Ibid.

In this case, the bankruptcy court explained that Scott's Overview was "fraught with the potential for confusion and damage," and the bankruptcy court listed the Overview's various omissions, ambiguities, and "laughable" misstatements. Id. at 27-31. "[B]y giving her customers a short, summary description of [Chapter 7 bankruptcy], Ms. Scott may lead them to believe that the decision whether to seek Chapter 7 relief is one they can effectively make without counsel, something which may be far from correct." Id. at 39. The bankruptcy court concluded:

> It is clear on this record that in giving them the Overview, Ms. Scott recommended * * * that her bankruptcy customers consult this publication as accurate and reliable information for use in filing for bankruptcy and completing their forms. [Preparers] may not make such suggestions consistent with their proper role as transcribers of bankruptcy forms. * * * Ms. Scott is in no position to know * * * whether a given publication is a reliable and accurate bankruptcy law resource, or whether the pamphlet contains enough information about the subject to answer her customers' critical questions.

Id. at 30-31. After detailing some of the Overview's errors, the bankruptcy court held that, "[e]ven were this book accurate and complete," it was "deceptive and unfair" for Scott implicitly to hold out herself and her Overview as adequate legal resources. Id. at 31. The bankruptcy court also found that, given Scott's role as a petition preparer, distributing the Overview to her customers constitutes unauthorized practice of law. Ibid.

Although Scott's brief (p. 38) states a "disagree[ment] that there are any material inaccuracies in the Overview," it offers no substantive analysis to contradict the bankruptcy court's holding. Similarly, Scott does not mention the bankruptcy court's determination that to offer legal information in the context of a preparer-customer relationship is inherently unfair and misleading because it lends undue credibility to the proffered “advice.” Cf. Appellants Br. 38-39. To distribute such written materials is particularly unfair and deceptive where — as the bankruptcy court found in this case — the relevant materials are oversimplified, incomplete, and inaccurate. Accordingly, Scott’s conduct regarding the Overview also constitutes a violation of 11 U.S.C. § 110(i).

C. The Workbook

Scott distributed to her customers a Workbook that, the bankruptcy court found, contained “deviations from the official forms” and a number of substantive “problems.” Bankr. Op. 32-33. The bankruptcy court properly held that Scott’s Workbook violates Section 110. The bankruptcy court determined that, although the Workbook asks for the “quick-sale value” of personal property, official bankruptcy forms require “current market value.” The Workbook instructs customers to list “farm animals” as assets, but not “pets,” even though official bankruptcy forms require disclosure of all assets without that distinction. The Workbook also erroneously advises customers not to disclose government-guaranteed student loans or gross income from a second job.

The bankruptcy court concluded that “depending on the facts of a particular case, the [preparer’s] attempts to ‘help’ customers complete the forms via the instructions in the Workbook, while arguably well-intentioned, can easily constitute prohibited legal advice." Id. at 33 (emphasis added). "In this case," the bankruptcy court held, Scott's "use of the Workbook in its present form may cause a potential debtor prejudice, and represents a deceptive and unfair practice in violation of § 110." Ibid. (emphasis added). The bankruptcy court advised that, "[i]f Ms. Scott * * * insist[s] on using a 'workbook' instead of the official forms in their business, in order to comply with the Bankruptcy Code such a tool must religiously adhere to the format and substance of the forms prescribed by the Rules." Ibid.

Scott's brief ignores all of the foregoing analysis and states, without explanation, that the Workbook "collects exactly the same information sought on the official bankruptcy forms." Appellant's Br. 39. Scott never disputes the bankruptcy court's holding that the Workbook's inaccuracies, ambiguities, and oversights make it unfair and deceptive for Scott to sell her services as though she were accurately "simplifying" official bankruptcy forms.

D. Unauthorized Practice

Instead of addressing the bankruptcy court's dispositive factual and legal analysis, Scott's brief focuses only on whether her conduct qualified as "unauthorized practice of law" under Idaho jurisprudence. Appellant's Br. 35-43. That issue is at most peripheral to this appeal. This Court sits to review the bankruptcy court’s decision, and all of the bankruptcy court’s rulings regarding 11 U.S.C. § 110(i) are supported by findings of “unfair or deceptive” conduct independent of any unauthorized practice of law. See supra.[4]

Scott mischaracterizes the bankruptcy court’s opinion in suggesting that its analysis depends on unauthorized practice. Appellant’s Br. 35. In fact, although the bankruptcy court’s opinion warns in dicta of unauthorized practice, the opinion held that Scott committed unauthorized practice only in one regard: distributing her Overview. That holding was correct in the context of bankruptcy preparers who provide legal advice. See infra. More importantly, the bankruptcy court found that distributing Scott’s Overview to customers was an “unfair and deceptive” practice under Section 110(i) because the Overview was “fraught with the potential for confusion and damage” and contained omissions, ambiguities, and “laughable” errors. The latter holding is not disputed in Scott’s opening brief, and Scott also fails to contest the factual finding that the Overview’s errors risked misleading, confusing, and damaging her customers. Thus, as a matter of federal bankruptcy law, Scott cannot unseat the bankruptcy court’s determination that the [4] Similarly irrelevant are Scott’s comments about general definitions of legal practice. Appellant’s Br. 4-5. Scott has not argued that she or other bankruptcy preparers are allowed to “practice law” under any definition of that term.

Overview violated Section 110(i) — much less the bankruptcy court's independent holdings about the Workbook and Supervising Attorney — regardless of whether her analysis of Idaho state law is correct.

Scott's brief seems to recognize that law concerning unauthorized practice and Section 110(i) prohibit types of misconduct that may overlap, but are not identical. For example, Scott (Br. 40) characterizes the district court's reasoning as having two independent "prongs": unfair and deceptive conduct under Section 110(i) and unauthorized practice under Idaho law. Scott then correctly criticizes any "restrictive interpretation" of Section 110(i) that would limit the term "unfair or deceptive" to encompass only acts that are also unauthorized practice. Id. at 41. The courts below, however, never adopted that sort of "restrictive interpretation," and Scott's own brief fails to answer the Section 110(i) "prong" of the case against her. See supra.

Section 110(k) confirms that section 110(i) is not limited to unauthorized practice. Section 110(k) states that nothing in Section 110 "shall be construed to permit activities that are otherwise prohibited by law, including rules or laws that prohibit the unauthorized practice of law." 11 U.S.C. 110(k). Section 110(k) thus recognizes that state law may, in some instances, be more restrictive than Section 110 and that Section 110 does not preempt such state-law restrictions. Regardless of whether a particular State's prohibitions against unauthorized legal practice in general are more or less restrictive than Section 110's provisions specific to bankruptcy, state law does not define what constitutes a violation of Section 110.

Although this Court need not address Scott's arguments concerning Idaho law, that analysis is also incorrect. As the Idaho Supreme Court explained, the practice of law includes "legal advice and counsel, and the preparation of instruments * * * by which legal rights are secured." Idaho State Bar v. Meservy, 80 Idaho 504, 508 (1959). In this case, although Scott was certainly permitted to prepare customers' bankruptcy forms and perform other ministerial functions, the bankruptcy court found that Scott's business methods went too far. See supra.

Similar facts were involved in In re Bush, 275 B.R. 69, (Bankr. D. Idaho), where the court found that:

> [The preparer] does not merely type what the debtors elect to provide. He assists them, and he steers them with his worksheets and "pro se" materials. He manipulates their raw data into a form he believes comports with the requirements of law. * * * [He] provides his customers with a worksheet which identifies for them exemptions which he believes are available under Idaho law. He identifies for them the Idaho Code sections which give rise to the exemptions. He identifies the amounts available under each exemption. * * * In doing all of this, he not only violates § 110, he engages in the unauthorized practice of law.

Id. at 83. The Bush court thus entered an injunction to prevent the preparer from, inter alia, “advising or assisting customers in the preparation of their bankruptcy forms, specifically including but not limited to provision of information regarding exemptions.” Id. at 84.

Scott does not quarrel with the result in Bush. Instead, she tries to distinguish the case on its facts. Scott maintains (Br. 41) that the Bush preparer gave customers more “specific information” than Scott did. Even if so, the Bush opinion makes quite clear that preparers cannot legally provide even “general” substantive advice concerning exemptions, other provisions of Chapter 7, or the litigation of pro se bankruptcy cases. And, as the bankruptcy court detailed at length (see supra), Scott’s Overview and Workbook offered advice very similar to that which Bush condemned as unauthorized practice.

Scott’s insistence that unauthorized practice means more “‘than the mere filling in of blank forms’” or “being a mere scrivener” is irrelevant because those are not the facts that the bankruptcy court found. See Appellant’s Br. 36 (quoting In re Matthews, 57 Idaho 75, 83 (1936)). In this case, the bankruptcy court found that Scott provided substantial legal assistance, and that the scope of such assistance exceeded the strictures of Idaho state law. Scott’s Overview, for example, offers general advice about Chapter 7 bankruptcy, including “detailed, substantive material" that purports to list "all exemptions allowed under Idaho law." Bankr. Op. 10. The Overview also recommends how Idaho's exemptions should be documented on a bankruptcy schedule, and offers "tips" about how customers should undertake their own representation. Id. at 9. Scott cites no case that has allowed bankruptcy preparers to offer such expansive, "general" advice. The Bush decision, and cases discussed therein, have found such conduct violative of unauthorized practice laws in Idaho and other States. The bankruptcy court was correct in applying that reasoning here.

Although the bankruptcy court did not explicitly find that the Workbook constituted unauthorized practice of law, it did note that "[a]ttempts through a questionnaire to 'simplify' the questions posed and information required in the official bankruptcy forms usually leads to the exercise of judgment by the [preparer] in how best to accomplish that result, which in turn inevitably crosses the line by giving potential debtors guidance and advice on how to fill out the forms." Bankr. Op. 37. Even though this case turns not on Idaho law governing unauthorized practice, but on the specific factual conduct identified by the bankruptcy court as unfair and deceptive under Section 110, it seems clear from Bush and related cases that bankruptcy preparers cannot insulate efforts to give customers legal advice simply by calling that advice "general" instead of "specific."

Scott's effort to compare her situation to a bookstore or an alleged "monopoly on every discussion of the law" is inapt. Appellant's Br. 38 & n.87. Nothing in this case, or in Section 110's application to bankruptcy preparers, has any necessary effect on people who are not bankruptcy preparers. Congress in enacting Section 110, and the lower courts in applying that provision, endeavor to protect potentially vulnerable debtors from potentially misleading preparers. It is obvious from the statutory text that Section 110(i) applies only to bankruptcy preparers and not to bookstore sales or ordinary interpersonal conversations. Cf. 11 U.S.C. 110(a)(1) (defining "bankruptcy petition preparer"). Courts that have addressed the unauthorized practice issue have limited their discussion to the context of a preparer-consumer relationship, see, e.g., In re Bush, 275 B.R. 69, and this Court need not prejudge the scope of unauthorized legal practice in other contexts. In fact, this appeal can be decided based on federal bankruptcy law alone, without reaching the issue of unauthorized practice at all.

II. Section 110(i) Is A Valid Exercise Of Congressional Power, And The Bankruptcy Court's Decision Did Not Violate Scott's Constitutional Rights

A. The Bankruptcy Clause

Scott's claim that Section 110 exceeds congressional power under the Bankruptcy Clause was not raised before the bankruptcy court. Thus, according to ordinary appellate practice, that argument was waived.[5] Scott's untimely interpretation of Article I does not affect the subject matter jurisdiction of this Court or of the courts below pursuant to 28 U.S.C. §§ 157 and 158. But cf. Appellant's Br. 28-29. Furthermore, Scott presents no "extraordinary circumstance" that would render normal waiver rules otherwise inappropriate.

If this Court were to reach the argument, Section 110(i) should be upheld pursuant to Congress's power "To establish * * * uniform laws on the subject of Bankruptcies" and as a "necessary and proper" measure for executing that power. U.S. Const. Art. I, § 8, cl. 4, 18; see also id. § 8, cl. 9 ("Tribunals inferior to the supreme Court"). As explained supra, Congress enacted Section 110 to curb prevalent and serious abuses by bankruptcy preparers concerning the filing of bankruptcy petitions.

Every aspect of Section 110 is integrally related to conventional goals and operations of bankruptcy law. Section 110 regulates permissible methods for filing and preparing bankruptcy petitions, and it does so by regulating preparers who seek to be paid for their commercial involvement in bankruptcy activities. The statute's purpose is to protect debtors from abuse that might otherwise siphon pre-petition assets out of the bankruptcy estate, and to protect the bankruptcy system from incorrect bankruptcy forms that might be prepared using fraudulent or deceptive means. Section 110 thus lies within Congress's power to control how bankruptcy litigation is pursued and operates, and is strikingly similar to other federal provisions that are ancillary to bankruptcy proceedings. See, e.g., 28 U.S.C. § 1930 (prescribing fees for filing bankruptcy petitions), 18 U.S.C. § 157 (condemning fraud in the filing of bankruptcy documents, or in statements about a proceeding falsely asserted to be pending). As the Supreme Court stated in United States v. Fox:

City of Coeur D'Alene, 262 F.3d 856, 862 n.14 (9th Cir. 2001) (constitutional challenge); In re Cybernetic Serv., 252 F.3d 1039, 1045 n.3 (9th Cir. 2001) (bankruptcy); In re Kieslich, 258 F.3d 968, 971 & n.4 (9th Cir. 2001) (bankruptcy); In re Slack, 187 F.3d 1070, 1075 (9th Cir. 1999) (bankruptcy); In re SPM Mfg. Corp., 984 F.2d 1305, 1316 (1st Cir. 1993) (bankruptcy).

> There is no doubt of the competency of Congress to provide * * * for the enforcement of all legislation necessary or proper to the execution of powers with which it is intrusted. * * * [Congress's Bankruptcy Clause power] may embrace within its legislation whatever may be deemed important to a complete and effective bankrupt system. * * * Any act committed with a view of evading the legislation of Congress passed in the execution of any of its powers, or of fraudulently securing the benefit of such legislation, may properly be [regulated].

95 U.S. 670, 672 (1877) (emphasis added).

1. Scott cites no Supreme Court or appellate authority that has invalidated under the Bankruptcy Clause any congressional action similar to Section 110. Instead, Scott relies heavily on Northern Pipeline Co. v. Marathon Pipe Line Co., 458 U.S. 50 (1982). That case, however, analyzed judicial power under Article III, not congressional authority under Article I.

Neither Justice Brennan's plurality opinion nor that of the concurring Justices addressed Scott's asserted limits on the Bankruptcy Clause. See Northern Pipeline, 458 U.S. at 87 (Brennan, J., plurality); id. at 91 (Rehnquist, J., concurring).

Scott also relies on In re C.F. Foods, Inc., 2001 WL 1632272 (E.D. Pa. Dec. 20, 2001), cited in Appellant's Br. 23 & n.49, which rejected a Bankruptcy Clause claim partly because of Louisville Joint Stock Land Bank v. Radford, 295 U.S. 555 (1935). Nothing in C.F. Foods or Louisville Joint Stock Land Bank supports Scott's position here. Scott similarly errs in invoking Seminole Tribe of Florida v. Florida, 517 U.S. 44 (1996). Appellant's Br. 24-25. That case involved the scope of a State's Eleventh Amendment immunity, not Congress's Article I authority with respect to non-State entities. Contrary to Scott's suggestion (id. at 25), State and non-State creditors are not similarly situated with respect to the rule in Seminole Tribe, and that decision contains nothing to support Scott's constitutional argument regarding the Bankruptcy Clause.

Finally, Scott cites two bankruptcy court decisions. In re Bernier, 176 B.R. 976 (Bankr. D. Conn. 1995), rejected a constitutional challenge under the Bankruptcy Clause, and explained that bankruptcy laws are valid even when they affect rights and interests outside the confines of the debtor-creditor relationship. Id. at 985 (citing Wright v. Union Cent. Life Ins.

Co., 304 U.S. 502, 514 (1938)). Bernier also observed that "[t]he Supreme Court has characterized the Bankruptcy Clause as expansive," id. at 984, and limits on its scope are generally defined "in terms of other constitutional requirements, rather than * * * inherent limitations to the bankruptcy power," id. at 987. The result in Bernier undermines, rather than supports, Scott's constitutional analysis.

Scott's second bankruptcy court decision, In re Persky, 134 B.R. 81 (Bankr. E.D.N.Y. 1991), held unconstitutional a code provision that is vitally dissimilar to 11 U.S.C. § 110. Persky concerned 11 U.S.C. § 363(h), which allows a trustee to sell the interest of the estate and any co-owner of "property in which the debtor had * * * an undivided interest." The court's analysis of that provision does not contain any clear implications for code provisions like Section 110.

Moreover, Persky's holding on regarding 11 U.S.C. § 363(h) "is rarely cited and never * * * followed." Sapir v. Sartorius, 230 B.R. 650, 654 (S.D.N.Y. 1999). "[N]umerous cases decided in [the Second Circuit] and elsewhere since [Persky] have continued to apply Section 363(h)." Ibid. (citing In re Kahan, 28 F.3d 79 (9th Cir. 1994); In re Garner, 952 F.2d 232 (8th Cir. 1991); In re Rivera, 214 B.R. 50 (D.P.R. 1997); In re Grabowski, 137 B.R. 1 (S.D.N.Y. 1992)). Accordingly, even if Persky's analysis regarding 11 U.S.C. § 363(h) somehow applied to this case, that analysis is dubious and apparently has not been followed by any other court.

2. As discussed supra, Scott lacks support for her claim that Congress may only promulgate bankruptcy legislation if it is “related to the restructuring of the debtor-creditor relationship” and “bears upon the estate of a debtor.” Appellant’s Br. 19-20. Even if there were such a rule, however, Section 110 would pass muster because it protects debtors and the bankruptcy system from abuse, and it allows debtors to file accurate forms without exorbitant fees.

First, bankruptcy preparers who provide “unfair or deceptive” advice to their customers about the Bankruptcy Code can corrupt the integrity of bankruptcy proceedings from the very beginning. Faced with such preparer misconduct, some customers might file for bankruptcy when they ought not, or might fail to or wrongly apply particular code provisions. Second, bankruptcy preparers who commit “unfair or deceptive” acts to solicit business can divert pre-petition assets away from the estate. Just as with rules concerning pre-petition attorney’s fees (11 U.S.C. § 329(a)), one of Section 110’s legitimate functions is to prevent unscrupulous “assistants” from misdirecting debtors’ assets that should go to the bankruptcy estate. See In re Guttierez, 248 B.R. 287, 292 & n.13 (Bankr. W.D. Tex. 2000) (describing legislative history); cf. 11 U.S.C. § 541 (defining property of the bankruptcy estate). Congress's authority under Article I amply supports Section 110 as a means of addressing serious problems linked to "unfair or deceptive" bankruptcy preparers.

The foregoing conclusion is amplified by reference to the Necessary and Proper Clause. U.S. Const. Art. I, § 8, cl. 18. Congress may act to "carry into Execution" (ibid.) any enumerated power if the relevant statute is "conducive" and "plainly adapted" to that end. Jinks v. Richland County, 123 S. Ct. 1667, 1670 (2003) (quoting M'Culloch v. State of Maryland, 17 U.S. 316 (1819)). Section 110 satisfies those constitutional standards because it seeks to stem confusion and deception among debtors, and seeks to protect debtors' pre-petition assets for distribution as part of the estate.[6] [6] If this Court were to find Congress's authority inadequate under the Bankruptcy Clause and the Necessary and Proper Clause were inadequate to prohibit "unfair or deceptive" conduct by bankruptcy preparers, Section 110 should nonetheless be upheld under Article I's Commerce Clause. U.S. Const. Art. I, § 8, cl. 3. Although the Supreme Court suggested in Railway Labor Executives v. Gibbons, 455 U.S. 457 (1982), that Congress may not use its commerce power to circumvent the requirement that bankruptcy laws provide "uniform" rules, that is irrelevant here because uniformity is not at issue. Also, if Scott were right that regulating bankruptcy preparers lies "outside" the sphere of bankruptcy, it would similarly lie outside any "uniformity" requirement, and would thus be subject to legislation under Congress's enumerated non-bankruptcy powers.

B. The First Amendment

1. Scott's First Amendment argument misstates Section 110's scope and function. Section 110 neither "restrict[s] the information Scott can communicate to the public" at large, nor does it "depriv[e] her customers [of] the right to receive general information about the law." Appellant's Br. 33. On the contrary, Section 110 chiefly restricts the conduct of paid bankruptcy preparers, namely their "unfair or deceptive acts." The statute's terms do not target speech at all, much less speech of particular content or viewpoint.

Section 110's undisputed purpose is to protect debtors from abuse by paid bankruptcy preparers, regardless of whether such abuse occurs through speech or otherwise. See 11 U.S.C. § 110(a)(1) (limiting the statute's scope to persons who prepare bankruptcy documents "for compensation"); cf. Appellant's Br. 2. Even Scott admits the importance of regulating "scam artists" and incompetent bankruptcy preparers who mislead debtor-customers and charge them excessive fees. Ibid. And the category of acts prohibited by Section 110 is closely tailored to the precise harms Congress sought to remedy.

The fact that "unfair or deceptive acts" may involve words does not immunize such improper acts from regulation under Section 110, and any effect of Section 110 on communication is purely incidental to its goal of regulating illegal conduct. See

United States v. O’Brien, 391 U.S. 376, 376 (1968) (“[W]hen ‘speech’ and ‘nonspeech’ elements are combined in the same course of conduct, a sufficiently important governmental interest in regulating the nonspeech element can justify incidental limitations on First Amendment freedoms.”); cf. San Francisco Arts & Athletics, Inc. v. United States Olympic Comm., 483 U.S. 522, 536 (1987) (upholding “restrictions on expressive speech [that] are * * * incidental to the primary congressional purpose” concerning unprotected conduct).

It is also important that Section 110 does not impose any broad-based restriction on general public communications. As the statutory text makes clear, Section 110 limits only the “unfair or deceptive” conduct of paid bankruptcy preparers toward near-bankrupt clients who may be especially vulnerable to misdirection. 11 U.S.C. § 110(a)(1). As described supra, Congress sought to protect debtors by enacting numerous restrictions on the business practices of bankruptcy preparers. See 11 U.S.C. § 110(b)-(h). In such a highly regulated commercial context, preparers who seek profits by participating in the bankruptcy process are not protected from regulations that prohibit “deceptive or unfair” conduct. On the contrary, “[w]here the federal government extensively regulates a field of economic activity, communication of regulated parties often bears directly on the particular economic objectives sought by the government, and regulation of such communications has been upheld." SEC v. Wall St. Publ'g Inst., Inc., 851 F.2d 365, 372-73 (D.C. Cir. 1988) (citations omitted); see id. at 373 (noting limited judicial oversight where regulations "impinge upon communications occurring within the umbrella of an overall regulatory scheme").[7]

The unfair and deceptive conduct at issue here was wholly ancillary to Scott's being paid to prepare the Dosers' petition. Such commercial conduct is the precondition for applying Section 110, and the statute does not regulate any communication outside that limited context. Cf. Honolulu Weekly, Inc. v. Harris, 298 F.3d 1037, 1043 (9th Cir. 2002) ("[T]he First Amendment does not guarantee the right to communicate * * * at all times and places or in any manner that may be desired.'"). The Supreme Court has held that similar regulations of commercial conduct do not violate the First Amendment "merely because the conduct was in part initiated, evidenced, or carried out by means of language, either spoken, written, or printed." Ohralik v. Ohio St. Bar

[7] Cf. Gentile v. State Bar of Nevada, 501 U.S. 1030, 1071-73 (1991) (plurality) (noting that speech rights are "extremely circumscribed" for attorneys who assist participants in judicial proceedings); Lowe v. SEC, 472 U.S. 181, 228-29 (1985) (Rehnquist, J., concurring) (observing that "[t]he power * * * to regulate the professions is not lost whenever the practice of a profession entails speech"; "the most obvious example of a 'speaking profession' * * * is the legal profession," even though it "is almost entirely devoted to the sort of communicative acts that, viewed in isolation, fall within the First Amendment's protection").

Ass'n, 436 U.S. 447, 456 (1978) (internal quotation marks omitted). Indeed, "[n]umerous examples * * * of communications * * * are regulated without offending the First Amendment, such as the exchange of information about securities, corporate proxy statements, the exchange of price and production information among competitors, and employers' threats of retaliation for the labor activities of employees." Ibid. (citations omitted). "Each of these examples illustrates that the State does not lose its power to regulate commercial activity deemed harmful to the public wherever speech is a component of that activity." Ibid.[8]

Like other consumer protection statutes, Section 110(i) governs only the "unfair and deceptive acts" of a commercial actor whose acts occur in the course of, or are integrally related to, business activities. See 15 U.S.C. § 45(a)(1) (authorizing the Federal Trade Commission to prohibit "unfair or deceptive acts"); 49 U.S.C. § 41712 (barring unfair or deceptive practices by air transporters). Because Section 110 does not target speech, but rather forbids illicit commercial "acts," 11 U.S.C. § 110(i), the First Amendment allows Congress through Section 110 to mitigate debtor abuse and confusion, and to safeguard the bankruptcy system's integrity. Cf. Nutritional Health Alliance v. Shalala, 144 F.3d 220, 227-28 (2d Cir. 1998) (upholding Food and Drug Administration's restraints on claims of health benefits); Harry & Bryant Co. v. FTC, 726 F.2d 993, 1002 (4th Cir. 1984) (upholding Federal Trade Commission regulations of "unfair and misleading" practices because such practices "are not 'speech' entitled to First Amendment protection"); Katherine Gibbs School, Inc. v. FTC, 612 F.2d 658, 666 (2d Cir. 1979) (holding that the First Amendment allows "reasonable latitude" for governmental efforts to prevent "unfair or deceptive acts").

2. At a minimum, because the communications regulated by Section 110 stem directly from Scott's commercial petition preparation, this Court should analyze any First Amendment interest under the rubric of "commercial speech." See In re Kaitangian, 218 B.R. 102, 107-108 (Bankr. S.D. Cal. 1998). As the Supreme Court explained in Ohralik, commercial speech warrants "a limited measure of protection, commensurate with its subordinate position in the scale of First Amendment values." 436 U.S. at 456; cf. id. at 459 ("A lawyer's procurement of remunerative employment is a subject only marginally affected with First Amendment concerns. It falls within the State's proper sphere of economic and professional regulation."). Although this Court has not created "bright-line rules" to distinguish commercial from non-commercial speech, Scott cannot contest that the Overview and Workbook are distributed only as tools to assist customers in having their bankruptcy petitions prepared. United Reporting Publ'g Corp. v. California Highway Patrol, 146 F.3d 1133, 1137 (9th Cir. 1998), rev'd on other grounds, 528 U.S. 32 (1999). Such documents are purely functional aids to commercial conduct, and courts have applied commercial speech standards in analogous contexts. See Dun & Bradstreet, Inc. v. Greenmoss Builders, Inc., 472 U.S. 749, 762 (1985) (plurality) (applying commercial speech standards where communication "was speech solely in the interest of the speaker and its specific business audience"); Trans Union Corp. v. FTC, 245 F.3d 809, 818 (D.C. Cir. 2001) (same); cf. Friedman v. Rogers, 440 U.S. 1, 10 n.9 (1979) ("By definition, commercial speech is linked inextricably to commercial activity.").

Under commercial speech principles, Section 110 does not violate Scott's First Amendment rights because the statute affects only misleading or deceptive communications. As the Supreme Court explained in Edenfield v. Fane, 507 U.S. 761, 768 (1993), it is "clear that the State may ban commercial expression that is fraudulent or deceptive without further justification." See Virginia Pharmacy Bd. v. Virginia Citizens Consumer Council, 425 U.S. 748, 771 (1976) (finding "no obstacle" to restricting "deceptive or misleading" commercial speech); FTC v. Brown & Williamson Tobacco Corp., 778 F.2d 35, 43 (D.C. Cir. 1985) (noting that deceptive commercial speech "may be prohibited entirely") (internal quotation marks omitted); Harry & Bryant Co., 726 F.2d at 1001 (same).[9]

Similarly, although Scott invokes the First Amendment rights of her customers, she mistakenly cites cases concerning accurate representation by lawyers. See Appellant's Br. 33-34 & nn.72-74, 76. Contrary to Scott's suggestion (Br. 33-34), nothing in Section 110 restricts debtors' ability to retain an attorney, "access courts," or even represent themselves. On the facts of this case, Scott's customers have no identifiable interest in receiving misleading or deceptive materials, and, if they had full information, such customers certainly would not want the misinformation that the bankruptcy court condemned. Cf. Hill v. Colorado, 530 U.S. 703, 716 (2000) (recognizing governmental discretion to "protect listeners from unwanted communication"). Again, Section 110's only barrier is against "unfair or deceptive" acts by paid bankruptcy preparers, 11 U.S.C. § 110(a)(1), (i). In Section 110's exclusively commercial context, that prohibition fully comports with the First Amendment.[10]

3. Scott's vagueness and overbreadth arguments depart from established case law in this Circuit and elsewhere. First, the Supreme Court has held that First Amendment overbreadth doctrine does not apply to commercial speech. "Commercial speech is not as likely to be deterred as noncommercial speech, and therefore does not require the added protection afforded by the overbreadth approach." Ohralik, 436 U.S. at 463 n.20. Moreover, as the district court noted, "laws that regulate economic activity not involving constitutionally protected conduct are subject to a quite lenient test for constitutional sufficiency." Dist. Op. 6 (quoting In re Kelly, 841 F.2d 908, 915 (9th Cir. 1988)); accord In re Stewart, 175 F.3d 796, 811 (10th Cir. 1999). Scott does not apply that "lenient" test, which Section 110 clearly satisfies.

Scott does not argue that Section 110 is vague or overbroad "as applied" to the misconduct found by the bankruptcy court. To mislead customers about the potential involvement of a Supervising Attorney satisfies any common-sense understanding of an "unfair or deceptive act." 11 U.S.C. § 110(i). So too does Scott's distribution of inaccurate documents that might mislead customers about their ability to file a bankruptcy petition, the proper manner of doing so, and the perceived need to employ a bankruptcy petition preparer.

The Supreme Court has held that, before invoking the “strong medicine” of overbreadth doctrine, a claimant bears the burden of showing, “from the text of [the law] and from actual fact,” that “a law’s application to protected speech be substantial, not only in an absolute sense, but also relative to the scope of the law’s plainly legitimate applications.” Virginia v. Hicks, 123 S. Ct. 2191, 2197-98 (2003). “Rarely, if ever, will an overbreadth challenge succeed against a law * * * that is not specifically addressed to speech or to conduct necessarily associated with speech.” Id. at 2199.

This Court has further explained that, in analyzing overbreadth claims, the “first task is to determine whether the enactment reaches a substantial amount of constitutionally protected conduct. If it does not, then the overbreadth challenge must fail. The court should then examine the facial vagueness challenge and, assuming the enactment implicates no constitutionally protected conduct, should uphold the challenge only if the enactment is impermissibly vague in all of its applications.” Hotel & Motel Ass’n of Oakland v. City of Oakland, 344 F.3d 959, 971 (9th Cir. 2003) (quoting Village of Hoffman Estates v. Flipside, Hoffman Estates, Inc., 455 U.S. 489, 494-95 (1982)). Under this Court's jurisprudence, it is dispositive that Section 110 does not impose criminal sanctions, involves only economic regulation, and does not infringe constitutional rights. See, e.g., Ohralik, 436 U.S. at 463 n.20 (holding overbreadth doctrine inapplicable to commercial speech); Craft v. National Park Serv., 34 F.3d 918, 922 (9th Cir. 1994); Go Leasing, Inc. v. NTSB, 800 F.2d 1514, 1525 (9th Cir. 1986); see also Nutritional Health Alliance, 144 F.3d at 226 (dismissing overbreadth challenge on ripeness grounds absent evidence that the provision "actually bars any truthful, non-misleading speech").

The cases Scott cites (Br. 30-31 & nn.61-65) concern, inter alia, loitering, criminal contempt, and vagrancy, none of which is anything like Section 110. Contrary to contexts where the Supreme Court has found statutory terms utterly standardless, the phrase "unfair and deceptive acts" is a cornerstone of Federal Trade Commission enforcement under 15 U.S.C. § 45(a)(1). The term was enacted into federal law in 1938, 52 Stat. 111, and has been incorporated within numerous federal regulations in various fields of commerce. See, e.g., 16 C.F.R. § 1.8 (general authority); 7 C.F.R. § 1150.161 (agricultural promotion); 12 C.F.R. § 227.11 (banking); 16 C.F.R. § 14.12 (marketing research); see also 49 U.S.C. § 41712 (proscribing "unfair or deceptive practice" by air transporters). We know of no court that has found the term “unfair or deceptive” facially invalid with respect to other federal laws. Against that backdrop, Scott cannot explain why that same term is facially unconstitutional with respect to Section 110.[11]

CONCLUSION

For the foregoing reasons, the district court’s judgment should be affirmed.

I. STATEMENT OF JURISDICTION

The United States Bankruptcy Court for the District of Nevada entered an interlocutory order denying appellant debtors' Application to Employ Attorney, filed by Martin Brian Shat and Anjanette Shat, ("Debtors") on March 5, 2009. [AA, T. 16][1] Debtors filed a timely notice of appeal under 28 U.S.C. § 158(c)(2) and FED. R. BANKR. P. 8002(a) on March 13, 2009. The Bankruptcy Appellate Panel of the Ninth Circuit has jurisdiction over this appeal pursuant to 28 U.S.C. §§ 158(a)(3), (b) and (c). This court granted leave to appeal this interlocutory order on June 25, 2009.

II. ISSUE PRESENTED ON APPEAL

Did the bankruptcy court abuse its discretion by 1) denying the Debtors' application to employ attorney Christopher Gellner and 2), refusing, in the alternative, to grant the application nunc pro tunc to the date of the filing of the Petition?

III. STANDARD OF APPELLATE REVIEW

IV. STATEMENT OF THE CASE

This appeal arises from the bankruptcy court's denial of an application under 11 U.S.C. § 327(a) to employ attorney Christopher G. Gellner as Debtors' counsel in their chapter 11 bankruptcy case. The Acting United States Trustee opposed the application because it, and the verified statement filed in support, failed to disclose the fact that Mr. Gellner concurrently represented another chapter 11 debtor, Steve Herbert Hofsaess, who held an interest adverse to the Debtors' estate.[2] Mr. Gellner had represented both the Debtors and his other client, Hofsaess, in a post-petition transaction conveying to Hofsaess, without consideration, legal title to real property held by the Debtors. Mr. Gellner did not disclose this information in his mandatory verified statement. FED. R. BANKR.P. 2014(a).

The Acting United States Trustee also opposed granting Mr. Gellner's retention nunc pro tunc on the ground Mr. Gellner submitted his application more than two months after the Debtors filed for bankruptcy. Mr. Gellner argued the court below should waive this omission because 1) the December holidays, and 2) the displacement caused by office renovations prevented him from filing a timely application.

At the conclusion of the hearing on the United States Trustee's opposition, the court, exercising its discretion, ruled from the bench that Mr. Gellner was not qualified to serve as the Debtors' attorney because 1) his involvement in the real estate transaction constituted, at a minimum, a potential conflict of interest, and 2) Mr. Gellner had demonstrated that he was not qualified to handle a chapter 11 case. The bankruptcy court entered its order denying Debtors' application to retain Mr. Gellner on March 5, 2009. [AA, T. 16] This appeal followed.

A. Statement of the Facts and Prior Proceedings

In 2006, the Debtors, Martin and AnJanette Shat, and their friend Steven Herbert Hofsaess each owned several rental properties. [AA, T. 12, p. 74, para. 1 and p. 76, paras. 7-8]. At that time the Debtors held legal title to real property located at 6175 Smarty Jones Avenue. They gave their friend Mr. Hofsaess an equitable interest in the property but retained legal title. [AA, T. 12, p. 76, para. 8].

Approximately three years later, the friends all declared bankruptcy. Both parties opted to retain the Appellant, Mr. Gellner, to handle their bankruptcies. Mr. Gellner filed a chapter 11 bankruptcy petition for the Debtors on November 5, 2008, and for Mr. Hofsaess on November 19, 2008, both in the District of Nevada.[3] [AA, T. 11, p. 72, para. 5] The Debtors' petition identified Mr. Gellner as counsel, although they did not file an application to employ Mr. Gellner at that time. [AA, T. 1, p. 3] Nor had Mr. Gellner submitted the requisite verified statement establishing he was a disinterested person and therefore potentially qualified to serve .

The Debtors' bankruptcy schedules listed real property valued at $1,917,000, subject to $3,042,192 in secured claims. [AA, T. 1, p. 13] The real property consisted of six homes, including one at 6175 Smarty Jones Avenue in Las Vegas, Nevada. The scheduled value of that home is $340,000, subject to secured claims totaling $576,000. [AA, T. 1, pp. 15, 20, and 21]

Shortly after the Debtors and Mr. Hofsaess filed their bankruptcy petitions, Mr. Shat executed a quitclaim deed purporting to convey legal title of the Smarty Jones property to Mr. Hofsaess. [AA, T. 12, pp. 75-76, paras. 5-

[3] 11 U.S.C. § 101 et seq. Unless otherwise indicated, the term "Code" as used in this brief refers to the United States Bankruptcy Code.

6]. The bankruptcy court did not receive prior notice of it and did not approve this transfer of property. Mr. Gellner handled the transaction, representing both parties. His paralegal notarized the deed. [AA, T. 13; see also AA, T. 22, pp. 126:22 – 127:17] Neither party received advice from independent counsel, although the Debtors and Mr. Hofsaess held adverse interests to the property. [AA, T. 22, pp. 128:14 - 129:8]

At approximately the same time Mr. Gellner was arranging the transfer of the Smarty Jones property, the bankruptcy court entered an order setting a status conference for December 16, 2008. [AA, T. 2] The order required Debtors to file a brief of not more than five pages by December 11, 2009, explaining their efforts to develop a plan of reorganization. [AA, T. 2, p. 43:15-22]

Mr. Gellner failed to appear at the December 16, 2008, status conference. [AA, T. 20, p. 111:2 - 112:22] The bankruptcy court rescheduled it for January 27, 2009, but stated in the order that if Mr. Gellner failed to appear, Mr. Gellner would face a $500 fine. [AA, T. 3, p. 45:21-22]

About two months after filing for bankruptcy, in mid-January 2009, the Debtors filed their application requesting the bankruptcy court approve Mr. Gellner as their lawyer pursuant to 11 U.S.C. § 327(a) and FED. R. BANKR. P.

2014. [AA, T. 5] Mr. Gellner declared under penalty of perjury that he and his firm were disinterested persons as defined in the Code and that they had no previous relationship with the Debtors. [AA, T. 5, pp. 50, para. 6, and AA, T. 6, p. 52, para. 2, and p. 53, para. 5]

The Acting United States Trustee filed an opposition to the Debtors' application to engage Mr. Gellner as their bankruptcy counsel on three grounds: neither the application, nor the Mr. Gellner's supporting declaration, disclosed 1) Mr. Gellner's representation of both the Debtors and Hofsaess; 2) his clients' competing interests in the Smarty Jones property; or 3) the potentially disqualifying conflict of interest arising from his involvement in both cases. [AA, T. 9, pp. 60 - 61, paras. 7 - 11] The Acting United States Trustee also opposed nunc pro tunc employment because neither the application, nor Mr. Gellner's supporting declaration, established exceptional circumstances sufficient to warrant employment on a such basis. [AA, T. 9, p. 61, paras. 12 - 14]

In their reply, the Debtors admitted Mr. Gellner represented both them and Mr. Hofsaess. [AA, T. 10, p. 66:11 - 14, and p. 68:18 - 23; see also AA, T. 11, p. 72, para. 5] The reply also stated that Mr. Shat had agreed to sell Mr. Hofsaess the property at 6175 Smarty Jones Avenue in December 2006, but the Debtors conceded they had not legally transferred the property to Hofsaess until December 4, 2008, after both parties had declared bankruptcy. [AA, T. 10, pp. 66:15-67:6; AA, T. 12, pp. 75 - 76, paras. 5-6.; see also AA, T. 12, p. 76, paras. 7 - 8 and AA, T. 11, p. 72, para. 5] The reply also admitted that Debtors' application to retain Mr. Gellner as their attorney had been submitted to the court two months late. [AA, T. 11, p. 71,, para. 2] Mr. Gellner attributed the delay to the fact he had been busy filing numerous chapter 7, 11, and 13 cases. [AA, T. 10, p. 68:14 - 23; see also AA, T. 11, pp. 71 - 72, paras. 4 -5] He further blamed the timing: during the last two weeks of December 2008 and the first week of January 2009, the work flow of his firm slowed because of the holidays and employee vacations. [AA, T. 11, p. 72, para. 6] Mr. Gellner also claimed the delay was excusable because he had received notice in mid-December 2008 that he would have to vacate his offices within 30 days for renovations. [AA, T. 22, pp. 131:15 – 131:21]

On January 27, 2009, Mr. Gellner and counsel for the Acting United States Trustee appeared at the continued status hearing. [AA, T. 21, pp. 114 - 120] The bankruptcy court asked Mr. Gellner why he had not yet filed the status brief required by the court's November 10, 2009 order. [AA, T. 21, p. 116:11] Mr. Gellner replied that he had not read the order. [AA, T. 21, p.

117:2- 3] The bankruptcy then continued the status hearing to the date set for the hearing on the Debtors' application to employ Mr. Gellner and expressed concern that Mr. Gellner might not be competent to serve as counsel in individual chapter 11 bankruptcy case. [AA, T. 21, p. 118: 14- 25]

After the bankruptcy court heard argument, it denied the applications to employ Mr. Gellner as counsel in both the Shat and Hofsaess cases for two independent reasons. [AA, T. 22, pp. 142:2 - 145:3] In a decision from the bench, the bankruptcy court first decided that Mr. Gellner had at least a potential conflict of interest, if not an actual one, due to his representation of both the Debtors and Mr. Hofsaess. The court was troubled that the parties had not had independent legal advice: "it [the conflict] may not be actual but certainly potential" because there was not independent examination of the transaction. [AA, T. 22, p. 142:7-11]. Therefore, Mr. Gellner was not disinterested and could not serve.

Secondly, the bankruptcy court denied the applications because of doubts concerning Mr. Gellner's competence to handle a chapter 11 case. The court found it "astounding" that Mr. Gellner did not understand that debtors-in-possession were fiduciaries of their creditors and not simply individuals. [See AA, T. 22, pp. 136:5 -137:4; AA, T. 22, p. 140:9 - 18; AA, T.

22, p. 142:12 - 16] Furthermore, the court based its decision on Mr. Gellner's failure to prosecute the case in its early stages, in particular his failure to comply with the court's briefing schedule, and Mr. Gellner's attempt to blame his staff for the oversight. [AA, T. 22, p. 143:13 - 21] The bankruptcy court declared it "unacceptable" that Mr. Gellner tried to disavow participation in executing the unauthorized post-petition quitclaim deed. [AA, T. 22, p. 143:19 - 21] Finally, the bankruptcy court denied the nunc pro tunc employment request. [AA, T. 22, p. 144:2-13] The court concluded that denial of Mr. Gellner's retention applications was appropriate due to "serious concerns at least with respect to individual chapter 11s whether or not Mr. Gellner's office either can handle this on a case-management basis or even, potentially, on a legal basis." [AA, T.22, pp. 144:24-145:3] In the course of the hearing, the judge identified other causes of concern. [See AA, T. 22, p. 136:6 - 7 and AA, T. 22, p. 142:7 - 11 (discussion of Mr. Gellner's conflict); AA, T. 22, p. 138:22 – 139:3 and AA, T. 22, p. 143:3 - 5 (discussion of Mr. Gellner's lack of disinterestedness); AA, T. 22, p. 142:17 - 24 (discussion of failure to disclose facts giving rise to Mr. Gellner's conflict and lack of disinterestedness)].

The bankruptcy court entered its order on March 5, 2009, denying Mr. Gellner's employment application. [AA, T. 16] Debtors filed a timely notice of appeal on March 13, 2009. [AA, T. 17]

V. SUMMARY OF THE ARGUMENT

The order entered below constituted a sound exercise of the bankruptcy court's discretion. The court found there were two separate and independent grounds not to approve the Debtor's application to employ Mr. Gellner. First, Mr. Gellner had, at a minimum, a potential conflict of interest because he had represented the Debtors and another one of his bankruptcy clients in a post-petition transfer of property that arguably violated the Bankruptcy Code. See 11 U.S.C. § 549 (allowing a trustee to avoid post-petition transfers).[4] Second, the bankruptcy judge concluded that Mr. Gellner was not competent to act as counsel in this case on multiple grounds. Mr. Gellner demonstrated an ignorance of chapter 11 law in general and the responsibilities of a chapter 11 debtor as a fiduciary in particular. Mr. Gellner neglected for months to file the Debtor's application for employment and his verified statement and, when he did so, he stated under oath that he had no conflict, although he had been involved in a post-petition property transfer between the Debtors and another client. He missed two deadlines to file a status brief and blamed his shortcomings on his staff, rather than taking responsibility for them himself.

The Code gives bankruptcy courts broad discretion to assess a professional's suitability to participate in a bankruptcy case. The court may consider the totality of the circumstances, including the specific facts of each case and the overall objectives of the bankruptcy system, in deciding whether an applicant is suitable. In this case, the bankruptcy court had ample facts upon which to base its decision that Mr. Gellner was an unsuitable attorney for the Debtors' case: he represented both parties to a post-petition transfer of legal title to the Smarty Jones property from one of his clients (Martin Shat) to another (Steve Hofsaess). At a minimum, Mr. Gellner's participation in that transaction gave rise to a potential conflict of interest, sufficient grounds for the court to deny retention as counsel. In addition, the court did not abuse its discretion in deciding that Mr. Gellner's inattentive prosecution of the Debtors' disqualified him from service.

Finally, the bankruptcy court did not abuse its discretion in denying nunc pro tunc employment given it findings that Gellner had not timely filed his applications and failed satisfactorily to explain why his proposed retention should be afforded nunc pro tunc status under applicable law, if it could have been granted at all.

VI. ARGUMENT

A. The Controlling Statutory Framework

1. 11 U.S.C. § 327

This appeal is governed by section 327 of the Bankruptcy Code, which provides "the trustee, with the court's approval, may employ one or more attorneys . . . that do not hold or represent an interest adverse to the estate, and that are disinterested persons, to represent or assist the trustee in carrying out the trustee's duties under this title.[5] At a minimum a professional desiring to serve in a bankruptcy case must meet three criteria. First, the professional must "not hold or represent an interest adverse to the estate." A generally accepted definition of "adverse interest" is the (1) possession or assertion of an economic interest that would tend to lessen the value of the bankruptcy estate; or (2) possession or assertion of an economic interest that would create either an actual or potential dispute in which the estate is a rival claimant; or (3) possession of a predisposition under circumstances that create a bias against the estate. In re AFI Holding, Inc., 530 F.3d 832, 845 (9th Cir. 2008) (citation omitted).

[5] As used in section 327(a), "trustee" also includes a debtor in possession in a chapter 11 bankruptcy case. 11 U.S.C. § 1107(a).

Second, the applicant to serve in a bankruptcy case must be "disinterested." The Code defines "disinterested person" as one who "is not a creditor, an equity security holder, or an insider" and who "does not have an interest materially adverse to the interest of the estate . . . [because of] any direct or indirect relationship to, connection with, or interest in the debtor . . . or for any other reason." 11 U.S.C. §§ 101(14)(A) & (E). The requirement that a professional be disinterested is mandatory. Debtors cannot waive conflicts of interest. See In re S.S. Retail Stores Corp., 211 B.R. 699, 703 (B.A.P. 9th Cir. 1997).

Third, the statute provides that a trustee, with the "approval" of the bankruptcy court "may" appoint counsel who are disinterested and have no adverse interest, creating a third criterion, namely that the bankruptcy judge approve the person seeking appointment. The permissive language in the statute makes clear that courts can deny appointment on additional grounds; such decisions are reviewed on appeal on an abusive of discretion standard. Thus, the Code's language is broad enough that a bankruptcy court may exclude a professional with any connection that "would even faintly color the independence and impartial attitude required by the Code." In re Crivello, 134 F.3d 831, 835 (7th Cir. 1998). These statutory requirements ensure that all professionals appointed under section 327(a) "tender undivided loyalty and provide untainted advice and assistance in furtherance of their fiduciary responsibilities." Id. at 836 (7th Cir. 1998) (quotation omitted). In sum, determination that a professional is disinterested is the only first step. Creditors, parties in interest, and the United States Trustee may still object, and the court may deny the application if it is in the best interest of the estate.

2. Federal Rule of Bankruptcy Procedure 2014

Section 327(a) establishes the standards for determining that a professional may serve in a bankruptcy case. Federal Rule of Bankruptcy Procedure 2014 outlines the procedures for seeking the necessary court approval. It requires that the proposed lawyer provide in a verified statement of "all the person's connections with the debtor, creditors, any other party in interest, their respective attorneys and accountants, the United States trustee, or any person employed in the office of the United States trustee." FED. R. BANKR. P. 2014. Accurate disclosure is mandatory. In re Mehdipour, 202 B.R. 474, 480 (B.A.P. 9th Cir. 1996). Failure to disclose is sufficient grounds to revoke an employment order and deny compensation. Crivello, 134 F.3d at 836; Rome v. Braustein, 19 F.3d 54, 59-60 (1st Cir. 1994); cf. In re Futuronics Corp., 655 F.2d 463, 470 (2d Cir. 1981) (duty to disclose arises from fiduciary obligations as well as the Bankruptcy Rules).

The disclosure requirement is broad. The applicant-counsel "must disclose all connections and not merely those that rise to the level of conflicts." In re Keller Fin. Serv. of Fla., 248 B.R. 859, 897-98 (Bankr. M. D. Fla. 2000) (citation omitted). The applicant cannot "usurp" the court's role to decide which connections are relevant to determining whether a professional is disinterested and which are not. Id.; Park-Helena, 63 F.3d at 882 (stating that an applicant cannot "pick and choose which connections are irrelevant or trivial"). The Ninth Circuit applies the disclosure requirements of Rule 2014 "strictly," even if the results "are sometimes harsh." Park-Helena, 63 F.3d at 881. Both the Code and the Rules are designed to ensure that bankruptcy cases are administered and adjudicated with the highest level of integrity.

B. The Bankruptcy Court Did Not Abuse Its Discretion in Declining to Appoint Mr. Gellner to Represent the Debtors.

1. The bankruptcy court has broad discretion when deciding whether to approve appointments of proposed counsel.

A bankruptcy court has broad discretion to deny appointment of a professional. Under the Code, a trustee "may" appoint a professional, but only with "approval" of the bankruptcy judge. 11 U.S.C. § 327(a). And it is hornbook law that it is within a bankruptcy judge's broad discretion to approve, or disapprove the appointment of professionals chosen by the trustee or debtor. In re Martin, 817 F.2d 175, 182 (1st Cir. 1987) (describing wide discretion of bankruptcy courts to determine terms of engagement for professionals); In re Harold & Williams Dev. Co., 977 F.2d 906, 909 (4th Cir. 1992). In order to protect the debtors or the estate, the bankruptcy court may disapprove an application for any reason that serves the best interests of the estate and creditors. In re Vebeliunas, 231 B.R. 181, 194-95 (Bankr. S.D.N.Y. 1999).

In this case, the bankruptcy judge denied Mr. Gellner's application on two separate grounds. First, Mr. Gellner's involvement in the Smarty Jones real estate transaction created at least a potential conflict of interest. Second, Mr. Gellner was not competent to represent the Debtors. The record supports both of these conclusions, as explained in detail below. The bankruptcy court did not abuse its discretion.

C. Mr. Gellner Had, at a Minimum, a Potential Conflict of Interest and Thus Could Not Represent the Debtors.

An actual conflict of interest mandates disqualification of a professional to serve in a bankruptcy case. 11 U.S.C. §§ 327(a) & (c). However, a potential conflict also provides sufficient grounds for a court to decline to appoint an attorney. AFI Holding, 530 F.3d at 851 (potential for materially adverse effect or appearance of impropriety sufficient grounds to deny appointment). In re Pillowtext, Inc., 304 F.3d 246, 251 (3d Cir. 2002) (stating a court "may within its discretion-pursuant to § 327(a) and consistent with § 327(c)-disqualify an attorney who has a potential conflict of interest") (citing In re Marvel Entertainment Gp., Inc., 140 F.3d 463, (3d Cir. 1998)). In fact, doubt as to whether a particular set of facts gives rise to a disqualifying conflict of interest should normally be resolved in favor of disqualification. In re Angelika Films 57th Inc., 227 B.R. 29, 39 (Bankr. S.D.N.Y. 1998).

Therefore, Mr. Gellner's attempt to argue that his representation of multiple debtors in the Smarty Jones real estate transaction is proper because it does not constitute an "actual" conflict is irrelevant to the resolution of this case. [AA, T.22 pp. 126:4-6; 135:22-24; 138:10-11; 139:8-11]. Even if Mr. Gellner were correct that the transfer was a fair transaction, the bankruptcy court still had the discretion to disqualify him on the grounds of a potential conflict of interest. Marvel, 140 F.3d at 476. The court was troubled that Mr.

Gellner arranged a post-petition sale of property and then wanted to represent both parties in bankruptcy, although they had potentially competing claims to the one piece of property. [AA, T. 22, p. 139:1-7]. No one had independently analyzed the transaction. Nothing in the record confirmed its legitimacy. In a proper exercise of discretion, the bankruptcy judge refused to appoint Mr. Gellner because "there is a conflict here. It may not be actual, but it certainly is potential because there has been no independent examination of this." [AA, T.22, p. 142:7-11].

There was substantial support in the record to conclude Mr. Gellner had an adverse interest. First, Mr. Gellner failed to disclose the Smarty Jones property transaction to the creditors of both estates, something the bankruptcy judge could not understand. [AA, T.22, p. 142:17-24 (stating "why there was no consideration given to disclosing this to creditors is beyond me")]. Second, Mr. Gellner admitted in open court that he was aware of the potential conflict between the Debtors' and Mr. Hofsaess's estates when the Debtors filed their bankruptcy petition. [AA, T. 22, pp. 128:25-129:8]. Third, as a result, Mr. Gellner should have disclosed the potential conflict when he filed his application and declaration. Rome, 19 F.3d at 59 (requiring that counsel inform the court immediately after acquiring constructive knowledge of a potential conflict). Counsel are required to make all the necessary disclosures. Park-Helena, 63 F.3d at 881-82.

As the circuit cases indicate, counsel too often fail to provide accurate rule 2014(a) verified statements. This was the case here. Mr. Gellner failed to disclose that 1) he represented both the Debtors and Mr. Hofsaess; 2) that the two parties had engaged in a post-petition transfer of real estate; and 3) that his law firm had executed that transaction; and 4) because of the transfer, the two debtors were adverse to each other.[6] Standing alone, this would justify denial of employment. Indeed, courts routinely order disgorgement of fees in such cases. Crivello, 134 F.3d at 836. At a minimum, this failure to disclose, when coupled with the potential conflict of interest gave the court below ample discretion to deny employment.

D. Mr. Gellner Could Not Represent the Debtors Because He Was Not Disinterested.

The Bankruptcy Code requires that a professional engaged in a bankruptcy proceeding be a disinterested person, namely someone who "does not have an interest materially adverse to the interest of the estate . . . [because of] any direct or indirect relationship to, connection with, or interest in the debtor . . . or for any other reason." 11 U.S.C. §§ 101(14)(A) & (E). A finding that a person is not disinterested precludes approval of employment. In re Middletown Arms Ltd. P'ship, 934 F.2d 723, 725 (6th Cir. 1991) (holding that the court could not use its equitable powers to approve employment of a person who is not disinterested); see also AFI, 530 F.3d at 847.

[6] Mr. Gellner claims he informed the Acting United States Trustee about the Smarty Jones transaction during the IDI meetings for the Debtors and Mr. Hofsaess. Appellant Br. at 7. This does not cure the 2014(a) violation. The Ninth Circuit has long held that such informal communication fails to satisfy the statutory requirement of attorney disclosure. In re Haldeman Pipe & Supply Co., 417 F.2d 1302, 1304-05 (9th Cir. 1969).

The bankruptcy judge has discretion, however, to disqualify someone if the professional has a meaningful incentive to act contrary to the interest of the estate. In re Interwest Bus. Equip., Inc., 23 F.3d 311, 316 (10th Cir. 1994); In re Granite Part. L.P., 219 B.R. 22, 36 (Bankr. S.D.N.Y. 1998); In re Leslie Fay Cos., 175 B.R. 525, 534 (Bankr. S.D.N.Y 1994); Rome, 19 F.3d at 59. In particular courts are skeptical when, as here, a lawyer proposes to represent two parties. Such an arrangement casts doubt on the ability of the professional to fulfill his or her role as an independent fiduciary. Interwest, 23 F.3d at 316. For instance, the Interwest Court affirmed a bankruptcy court's denial of a law firm's application for employment as counsel for the debtors because that firm represented multiple debtors in related chapter 11 cases. Id. at 318-19; In re BH & P, Inc., 949 F.2d 1300, 1317-18 (3d Cir. 1991)

(disqualifying attorney because estates had claims against one another); In re Lee, 94 B.R. 172, 180 (Bankr. C.D. Cal. 1998) (same).

In this case, the Debtors and Mr. Gellner's other client, Mr. Hofsaess, engaged in a transfer of real estate after each party had declared bankruptcy. The parties claimed that the quitclaim deed simply memorialized an agreement that they had made several years before. [AA, T. 10, p. 66:15 - 67:6; see also AA, T. 12, p. 76, paras. 7 - 11]. The property, however, cannot belong to both estates. The trustee and/or the bankruptcy court will have to determine who properly owns the Smarty Jones property. Logically, Mr. Gellner will have to act against the interests of one estate as the ownership is adjudicated; at the end of the process, one of his clients will have the property and the other will be deprived of it. Accordingly, this dual representation cannot meet the standards of disinterest mandated by section 327(a).

E. The Bankruptcy Court Did Not Abuse its Discretion When it Disqualified Mr. Gellner Because He Lacked Competence to Represent the Debtors.

The bankruptcy judge denied Mr. Gellner's application on a second, independent ground. He found that Mr. Gellner was not competent to represent the debtors.

Under the Code, if proposed counsel is disinterested and does not hold an adverse interest, the court then considers the totality of the circumstances before deciding whether to approve an appointment. AFI, 530 F.3d at 847 (B.A.P. opinion adopted by Ninth Circuit). The discretion of the bankruptcy court to approve professional employment plays a particularly important role in chapter 11 cases. Chapter 11 debtors in possession differ substantially from non-debtors because a bankrupt's fiduciary duties run to the creditors' benefit, not the debtor's. CFTC v. Weintraub, 471 U.S. 343, 355 (1985); In re McConville, 110 F.3d 47, 50 (9th Cir. 1997). The bankruptcy judge must also provide for the "efficient expeditious, and economical resolution of the bankruptcy proceeding." In re Harold, 977 F.2d at 910. For that reason, bankruptcy courts, not debtors, exercise ultimate discretion and gate-keeping authority over who may be employed as bankruptcy counsel under 11 U.S.C. § 327(a).

In this case, even if Mr. Gellner were correct that he is disinterested, and he is not, the bankruptcy court still established ample grounds on which to deny Mr. Gellner's application for employment. Specifically, at the hearing, Mr. Gellner demonstrated an "astounding" lack of knowledge about the fiduciary duties of a chapter 11 debtor. [AA, T.22, p. 142:16]. The following colloquy exemplifies the court's concern:

MR. GELLNER: And the only thing they [the Debtors and Mr. Hofsaess] didn't do, your Honor, is they didn't sign a deed, and the reason why they didn't do that is because they were friends, and it was no big deal to them.

THE COURT: Right. But as you've already established, you don't understand that it's not just them anymore. It's them and their creditors, and that's a fundamental distinction that if you don't acknowledge and recognize it's difficult for me –

MR. GELLNER: No.

THE COURT: – to approve –

MR. GELLNER: I understand that.

THE COURT: – your employment as a Chapter – well, you didn't when I asked you earlier.

[AA, T. 22, p. 140:5-19] The bankruptcy judge was convinced that Mr. Gellner did not have sufficient understanding of chapter 11 to represent the Debtors competently. Accordingly, he did not abuse his discretion by denying Mr. Gellner's application.

Nor was Mr. Gellner's weak understanding of chapter 11 law the only cause of the bankruptcy judge's concern. The court found him lacking in basic case management skills. He had failed on two occasions to file a status brief that the court had requested. Instead of taking responsibility for that oversight, he blamed it on his staff. The bankruptcy court termed "unacceptable" his additional claim that the quitclaim deed was drafted when he was not in the office. Nor did the judge believe that Mr. Gellner's inability to file a timely application for employment boded well for his ability to manage the case. [AA, T. 22, pp. 143:9-145:3].

Finally, the Debtors' desire to retain Mr. Gellner cannot compensate for his conflict of interest and other short-comings. Mr. Gellner is incorrect that a debtor has an unfettered right to retain his or her attorney of choice. [Appellants' Br. at 10-11]. To the contrary, the Code's procedural and substantive protections limit the usual freedom to select one's preferred counsel. See AFI, 530 F.3d at 839 (stating that courts evaluate the totality of the circumstances before disqualifying counsel; see also Harold, 977 F.2d 910. Mr. Gellner's position cannot be squared with common sense or with section 327's text which gives the bankruptcy court power to approve a professional that the trustee "may" nominate. Nor can the use of "may" and "approval" be attributed to a slip of the pen. Lamie v. United States Trustee, 540 U.S. 526, 541 (2004) (court cannot re-write statute). Furthermore, the use of "shall" in section 327(c) demonstrates that Congress knew how to distinguish between the two words in the section, so the use of "may" in sections 327(a), (b), (d), (e) and (f) should be given its dictionary meaning. There is simply no right for a debtor to retain the counsel of his choice. The court weighs the totality of the circumstances. If the court disqualifies its decision is reviewed for abuse of discretion. AFI, 530 F.3d at 852.

The claim that a debtor can choose any professional overlooks the Code's goal of ensuring that debtors retain impartial counsel who can be trusted to deal responsibly with the estate's assets and with the many fiduciary duties that arise in the course of a case. In re Crivello, 134 F.3d at 836. This is particularly important in chapter 11 cases; debtors in possession have a fiduciary obligation to their creditors. Weintraub, 471 U.S. at 355. A bankruptcy court's willingness to allow a chapter 11 debtors to remain in control of the estate is premised upon confidence that they will carry out their fiduciary responsibilities. Id. Under Mr. Gellner's interpretation, Chrysler could have chosen a sole practitioner to handle its multi-million dollar bankruptcy case if the lawyer was disinterested and had no adverse intent. That cannot be, and is not, correct. The bankruptcy court properly exercised its discretion to overrule the Debtors' wishes and disqualify Mr. Gellner in order to protect the interest of the bankruptcy estate. Affirmance of that order is warranted.

F. There is No Basis for Approving Mr. Gellner's Retention Nunc Pro Tunc to the Petition Date.

Assuming, arguendo, that the bankruptcy court could have approved Mr. Gellner's retention application, such approval could not have been given on a nunc pro tunc basis. In re Atkins, 69 F.3d 970, 974 (9th Cir. 1995) (describing the grounds for granting a nunc pro tunc application). Such authorization can only be given in "extraordinary circumstances." In re Gutterman, 239 B.R. 828, 830 (Bankr. N.D. Cal. 1999) (citation omitted). In order to qualify, an applicant must satisfactorily explain the failure to receive prior judicial approval before beginning representation. The applicant must also demonstrate that he or she has benefitted the estate in some significant manner. In re THC Fin. Corp., 837 F.2d 389, 392 (9th Cir. 1988) (citations omitted); In re Atkins, 69 F.3d 970, 974 (9th Cir. 1995).

In this case, Mr. Gellner did not adequately explain why his application was several months late. His explanation that he was busy does not constitute an "extraordinary circumstance," nor does the fact that his work flow slowed over the winter holidays. That is true of most, if not all, businesses. The fact that he had to move his office temporarily in January 2009 does not explain why he did not file his application for employment with the court in November 2008 – when it was due. Mr. Gellner cannot meet the first element of the test for retroactive appointment. The bankruptcy court properly denied his request for nunc pro tunc employment.

VII. CONCLUSION

For these reasons, the Acting United States Trustee respectfully asks this court to affirm the order entered below.

I. INTRODUCTION

The United States Trustee, pursuant to Rules 27(b) and 29(a) of the Federal Rules of Appellate Procedure, hereby responds to the Clerk of Court's September 18, 2008 letter advising the parties that the Court may dismiss this pro se appeal for lack of jurisdiction or take other summary action sua sponte under Chapter 10.6 of the Court's Internal Operating Procedures.

Acting as amicus, the United States Trustee[1/] supports the summary disposition of this appeal for two reasons. First, the order Mr. Shemonsky appeals is interlocutory and this Court lacks jurisdiction under 28 U.S.C. §158(d) and 28 U.S.C. §1291 to review it. Secondly, were this Court to consider the merits, it should affirm because Mr. Shemonsky presents no valid legal argument entitling him to relief on that point, and there is no substantial question for this Court's review.

[1/] The United States Trustee is an official of the United States Department of Justice, charged by statute with the duty to oversee and supervise the administration of bankruptcy cases. See 28 U.S.C. §§ 581-589. The United States Trustee's Program within the Department of Justice was created by Congress to aid in the administration of bankruptcy cases. See, e.g., Morgenstern v. Revco D.S., Inc. (In re Revco D.S., Inc.), 898 F.2d 498, 500 (6th Cir. 1990). Each U.S. Trustee supervises the administration of bankruptcy cases as appropriate and maintains a panel of private trustees who are available to serve as trustees in bankruptcy cases. See 28 U.S.C. § 586. The U.S. Trustee has standing to raise any issue under the bankruptcy title and may appear and be heard on any bankruptcy issue, although a Trustee may not file a reorganization plan. See 11 U.S.C. § 307; Haden v. Pelofsky, 212 F.3d 466, 468 n.5 (8th Cir. 2000); U.S. Trustee v. Fishback, 83 F.3d 1360, 1361 n.1 (11th Cir. 1996); U.S. Trustee v. Columbia Gas Systems Inc. (In re Columbia Gas Systems Inc.), 33 F.3d 294, 295-299 (3d Cir. 1994); Morgenstern v. Revco D.S., Inc. (In re Revco D.S., Inc.), 898 F.2d at 499-500.

II. PROCEDURAL BACKGROUND

This appeal arises from an involuntary petition filed under 11 U.S.C. § 303 on March 7, 2008, in the United States Bankruptcy Court for the Middle District of Pennsylvania, by three petitioning creditors, Michael R. Shemonsky ("Mr. Shemonsky"), Nicholas Shemonsky, and Sharon A. Gimbi, against alleged debtor Atlantic Financial Federal. Atlantic Federal was a federally chartered savings and loan that went out of business in or around 1990. Case No. 08-50640, Dkt. No. 1. Exhibit No. 1 at p. 55.

On April 1, 2008, Mr. Shemonsky, a frequent pro se litigant before the federal courts,[2/] filed a "Motion to Quash" in Atlantic's case, requesting that the bankruptcy court quash six federal statutes as leading to "fascism and a failed state." [3/] Case No. 08-50640, Dkt. No. 13. On May 8, 2008, after hearing oral argument from Mr. Shemonsky, the bankruptcy court denied the motion for lack of a justiciable case or controversy. Case No. 08-1094, Dkt. No. 3, Exh. 6.

The United States Trustee was not a party to the proceedings, did not appear or participate at the May 8, 2008 hearing, and took no position with respect to the motion to quash. Case No. 08-50640, Dkt. No. 25.

On May 12, 2008, Mr. Shemonsky appealed the denial of his motion to the United States District Court for the Middle District of Pennsylvania. Case No. 08-50640, Dkt. No. 20. In a May 19, 2008 pleading entitled "Joint Brief of the Appellant and Appellee," Mr. Shemonsky argued (in two sentences without explanation or support) that "[t]he Removal Act of 1790 (sic) had to be quashed due to abuse by the District Court."[4/] Case No. 08-1094, Dkt. No. 10, p. 4. Mr. Shemonsky sought "remand" of the case to the United States Bankruptcy Court in Wilkes-Barre, Pennsylvania "for trial on the illegal removal." Id. Although not without doubt, it appears Mr. Shemonsky objected to the removal of a state bankruptcy complaint filed in 1992 to the federal district court for the Eastern District of Pennsylvania, and sought remand of either the current bankruptcy case, or the prior case, to the state court. Compare Case No. 08-1094, Dkt. No. 10 at p. 3 with Case No. 08-1094, Dkt. No. 10 at p. 4.

[4/] Mr. Shemonsky provided no citation for the "Removal Act of 1790" and no such statute appears to exist.

On August 7, 2008, the district court entered an order suggesting it was inclined to dismiss Mr. Shemonsky's appeal and directing the United States Trustee to file a brief. Case No. 08-1094, Dkt. No. 12. On September 2, 2008, the United States Trustee filed a brief as amicus supporting affirmance. It argued the appeal should be dismissed as interlocutory and devoid of legal merit. Case No. 08-1094, Dkt. No. 17.

On August 20, 2008, the district court entered the order now appealed from, dismissing Mr. Shemonsky's appeal as interlocutory, devoid of legal merit, and lacking a justiciable case or controversy. Case No. 08-1094, Dkt. No. 20. Id. Mr. Shemonsky's timely appeal to this Court followed. Case No. 08-1094, Dkt. No. 21.

III. SUMMARY OF ARGUMENT

This Court lacks jurisdiction over this appeal because the bankruptcy court order denying the motion to quash was an interlocutory order. In addition, Mr. Shemonsky lacks appellate standing because he made no showing of pecuniary injury. Moreover, Mr. Shemonsky's motion to quash is clearly devoid of legal merit. Therefore, this Court should dismiss the appeal for lack of jurisdiction or summarily affirm the district court’s dismissal of the appeal on the ground that it presents no substantial question for review.

III. ARGUMENT

A. The Bankruptcy Court’s Order Denying Remand Was Interlocutory and Unappealable.

Under 28 U.S.C. § 1291 and 28 U.S.C. § 158 (d)(1), the United States Courts of Appeals have jurisdiction over appeals from “final decisions, judgments, orders, and decrees” entered by district courts sitting as appellate courts in bankruptcy cases.[5/] In order to be final and reviewable by this Court, both the bankruptcy court and the appellate court orders must be final.

District courts have jurisdiction to hear appeals from final judgments and orders of bankruptcy courts, 28 U.S.C. §158(a)(1), and, "with leave of the court," to hear appeals "from other interlocutory orders and decrees." 28 U.S.C. §158(a)(3). The courts of appeals have jurisdiction to hear "appeals from all final decisions, judgments, orders, and decrees" entered by the district court or a bankruptcy appellate panel. 28 U.S.C. §158(d). This Court, like all the courts of appeals, holds that where the bankruptcy court ruling is not final, the district court order reviewing the interlocutory bankruptcy ruling is also not final for purposes of 28 U.S.C. §158(d), unless certain circumstances not present here obtain. (In re Pro-Snax Distributors, Inc.), 157 F.3d 414, 420 (5th Cir. 1998); Marlow v. Rollins Cotton Co. (In re Julien Co.), 146 F.3d 420, 422 (6th Cir. 1998); In re Rimsat Ltd., 212 F.3d 1029, 1044 (7th Cir. 2000); Lewis v. United States, Farmers Home Administration, 992 F.2d 767, 768, 772 (8th Cir. 1993); Stanley v. S.S. Retail Stores Corp. (In re S.S. Retail Stores Corp.), 162 F.3d 1230, 1232 (9th Cir. 1998); Simons v. FDIC (In re Simons), 908 F.2d 643, 644 (10th Cir. 1990) (per curiam); Dzikowski v. Boomer's Sports & Recreation Ctr., Inc. Because the bankruptcy court order is interlocutory, this appeal should be dismissed. This circuit applies a broad concept of “finality” with respect to bankruptcy appeals under § 1291. See In re Marvel Entm't Group, Inc., 140 F.3d 463, 470 (3d Cir. 1998). In determining whether an order is final for purposes of its appellate jurisdiction, this Court considers four factors: (1) the impact of the Order on the assets of the bankrupt estate; (2) the necessity for further fact-finding on remand; (3) the preclusive effect of the district court's decision on the merits of further litigation; and (4) the interest of judicial economy.” In re Owens Corning, 419 F.3d 195, 203 (3d Cir. 2005) (citing Buncher Co. v. Official Comm. of Unsecured Creditors of GenFarm Ltd. P'ship IV, 229 F.3d 245, 250 (3d Cir. 2000)). Here, the bankruptcy court order has no impact on the assets of the bankruptcy estate. And although no further fact-finding would be necessary on remand because the order presents only a question of law, the bankruptcy court’s decision has no preclusive effect on further litigation. Moreover, the interests of judicial economy are best served by not asserting jurisdiction here, given that the resolution of this appeal will not obviate the need for further proceedings in the bankruptcy court. Nor does Mr. Shemonsky contend that the bankruptcy court order is final. Rather, he refers to this order as “interlocutory” in both his notice of appeal and in his response to the Clerk of Court's September 18, 2008 letter. Case No. 08-3803, Dkt. Nos. 1 and 4.

[5/] In addition, courts of appeals have jurisdiction over certain interlocutory district court orders under 28 U.S.C. § 1292 when such orders arise in a bankruptcy case. See Connecticut Nat’l Bank v. Germain, 503 U.S. 249, 252-54 (1992). These include interlocutory orders of the district courts “granting, continuing, modifying, refusing or dissolving injunctions, or refusing to dissolve or modify injunctions” (§ 1292(a)(1)), “appointing receivers, or refusing orders to wind up receiverships or to take steps to accomplish the purposes thereof” (§ 1292(a)(2)), “determining the rights and liabilities of the parties to admiralty cases” (§ 1292(a)(3)), and orders in which the district court expressly states that immediate appeal is needed to “materially advance the ultimate termination of the litigation” (§ 1292(b)).

That the bankruptcy court order is interlocutory and unreviewable on appeal is buttressed by the district court's reasonable interpretation of Mr. Shemonsky's request for relief. Broadly construing his concise but cryptic pleadings, the district court discerned that Mr. Shemonsky wished to "challeng[e] the statute that authorized removal of a state court bankruptcy complaint filed in 1992 in the United States District Court for the Eastern District of Pennsylvania." Case No. 08-01094, Dkt. No. 20. An order denying remand from federal court to state court is interlocutory. Cf., e.g. Murphy v. Fed'l Ins. Co., 206 Fed. Appx. 143, 144 (3rd Cir. 2006) (referencing the court's dismissal of a prior appeal in the same case – not in the bankruptcy context – on grounds that an order denying remand of a case to state court is "plainly" interlocutory). Thus, to the extent that Mr. Shemonsky seeks a remand to state court, this Court lacks jurisdiction over the appeal because the appeal of an order denying remand is interlocutory.

Because this Court lacks jurisdiction to hear Mr. Shemonsky's appeal, it should be dismissed.

B. Alternatively, the Court Should Summarily Affirm Because the Appeal is Clearly Without Merit and Presents No Substantial Question for Review

Both the bankruptcy court and the district court recognized that Mr. Shemonsky raised no legitimate basis for declaring six federal statutes invalid. Summary action affirming the decision of the district court to dismiss the appeal will avoid the needless expenditure of this Court's and appellee's resources and avoid unnecessary briefing and argument.

According to the reasoning of the bankruptcy court, with which the district court agreed, Mr. Shemonsky failed to present a justiciable case or controversy. Case No. 08-50640, Dkt. No. 40, pp. 4-6; Case No. 08-01094, Dkt. No. 20 at p. 3. To meet the Article III "case or controversy" requirement in a bankruptcy case, a person must be "aggrieved" by an order of the bankruptcy court. Gen'l Motors Acceptance Corp. v. Dykes (In re Dykes), 10 F.3d 184, 187 (3d Cir. 1993). A person is "aggrieved" in the bankruptcy context if his interests are "directly and adversely affected pecuniarily" by an order of the bankruptcy court. In re Dykes, 10 F.3d at 187 (citing In re Fondiller, 707 F.2d 441, 443 (9th Cir. 1983)). "[P]erson[s] aggrieved" must show the order of the bankruptcy court "diminishes their property, increases their burdens, or impairs their rights." In re PWS Holding Corp., 228 F.3d at 249 (citing In re Dykes, 10 F.3d at 187). Mr. Shemonsky made no showing of pecuniary injury here, and thus lacks standing to appeal.

Even assuming Mr. Shemonsky had standing to appeal, he presented no discernible legal theory entitling any court to quash the six federal statutes and remand the current bankruptcy case to state court. In the words of the district court, "[i]t is impossible to discern any legal basis for Shemonsky's motion to quash and his exhibits shed no light on the question." Case No. 08-01094, Dkt. No. 20, p. 3. Because Mr. Shemonsky's arguments in favor of remand are devoid of legal merit, no substantial question is presented for the Court's review, and the decision of the district court dismissing his appeal should be summarily affirmed.

IV. CONCLUSION

For the foregoing reasons, the United States Trustee, as amicus, respectfully asks this Court to dismiss Mr. Shemonsky's appeal for lack of jurisdiction to review it, or in the alternative, summarily affirm the decision of the district court dismissing the district court appeal.

Respectfully submitted,

STATEMENT OF APPLICABLE STANDARD OF APPELLATE REVIEW

The District Court conducts a de novo review of the Bankruptcy Court's legal findings. See, e.g., Rode v. Dellarciprete, 892 F.2d 1177, 1182 (3d Cir. 1990). A Bankruptcy Court's factual findings may be reversed only if they are clearly erroneous. See, e.g., Stendardo v. Federal Nat'l Mortgage Ass'n (In re Stendardo), 991 F.2d 1089, 1094 (3d Cir. 1993). In reviewing for clear error, "due regard shall be given to the opportunity of the bankruptcy court to judge the credibility of the witnesses." Fed. R. Bankr. P. 8013. The Bankruptcy Court's findings of fact are accepted unless they are either "completely devoid of minimum evidentiary support displaying some hue of credibility or bear[ ] no rational relationship to the supportive evidentiary data." Fellheimer, Eichen & Braverman P.C. v. Charter Technologies, Inc., 57 F.3d 1215, 1223 (3d Cir. 1995).

"Whether conversion of a case from Chapter 11 to Chapter 7 is proper involves a question of fact." Halvajian v. Bank of New York (In re Halvajian), 216 B.R. 502, 511 (D.N.J. 1998), aff'd, 168 F.3d 478 (3d Cir. 1998) (table). The determination of whether "cause" exists to convert a case is left to the bankruptcy court's discretion. Id. In reviewing a matters left by Congress to the Bankruptcy Court's discretion, "the district court may only determine whether the bankruptcy court did or did not abuse its discretion." Id. at 508.

STATEMENT OF FACTS

On April 20, 2000, William F. Sherlock ("Debtor") filed a voluntary petition under Chapter 11 of title 11, United States Code ("Bankruptcy Code"). See Docket No 1. As the Debtor did not file schedules and other supporting documentation with the petition as required by Federal Rule of Bankruptcy Procedure 1007(c), the Bankruptcy Court scheduled a deficiency hearing for Monday, May 15, 2000. See Docket No. 2. On Friday, May 12, 2000, the Debtor filed schedules of assets and liabilities and a statement of financial affairs. See Docket No. 8.

The Debtor's Schedule A reflects joint ownership with his wife, Patricia B. Sherlock, of real property located in Maple Shade, Mt. Laurel, Medford, and Stone Harbor, New Jersey. Id. The Debtor's Schedule B reflects the Debtor's 100% stock ownership of two corporations, Bi-Tech, Inc. and Bi-Tech Industries, Inc. Id.

Furthermore, Schedule I indicates that the Debtor's monthly income is only $15,500, while Schedule J indicates that his monthly household expenditures exceed $29,000, including monthly mortgage payments of $13,800. Id. The Schedules were accompanied by a Declaration Concerning Debtor's Schedules in which the Debtor attested to the accuracy of the information under penalty of perjury. Id. The Statement of Financial Affairs, also signed under penalty of perjury, indicates that the Debtor earned $239,100 in 1999. Id. The Schedules and Statement of Financial Affairs, which were part of the record below, constitute an admission by the Debtor that his monthly expenses exceed his monthly income by $13,500, and when annualized his monthly expenses exceed his 1999 income by $108,900.

On June 15, 2000, the Debtor appeared at a meeting of creditors held pursuant to 11 U.S.C. § 341(a), at which he was examined under oath by counsel for the United States Trustee.[1/] See Docket No. 16; Transcript of August 25, 2000, Hearing Regarding Status Conference, Stay Relief, and Conversion ("Transcript") at 6, 38. The creditors' meeting was continued first to July 13, 2000, and again to July 20, 2000, on which date the Debtor was further examined under oath by another United States Trustee attorney. See Transcript at 6. On July 20, 2000, the Debtor also appeared at an initial debtor interview at which time a bankruptcy analyst employed by the Office of the United States Trustee advised the Debtor of his statutory duty to file monthly operating reports pursuant to 11 U.S.C. § 704(8) (made applicable to Chapter 11 debtors in possession by 11 U.S.C.

The Bankruptcy Court scheduled a status conference pursuant to 11 U.S.C. § 105(d) for June 26, 2000. See Docket No. 11. At the status conference the Bankruptcy Court instructed the Debtor to pay real estate taxes for the second quarter of 2000. See Transcript at 7-8. The status conference was carried first to August 16, 2000, and then to August 25, 2000. See Docket Nos. 23, 32.

The August 25, 2000, continued status conference was attended by the Debtor and his counsel, counsel to secured

[3] By letter dated July 25, 2000, Debtor's counsel requested a copy of the Operating Guidelines for Chapter 11 Cases, to which the reporting forms recommended by the United States Trustee for Region 3 are attached. Region 3 encompasses New Jersey, Delaware, and Pennsylvania. Each Region has prepared its own Operating Guidelines and reporting forms. As Debtor's counsel and the Bankruptcy Court both know from years of experience with Chapter 11 cases, the Operating Guidelines are generally mailed to the debtor and its counsel as soon as the Office of the United States Trustee opens a file on the case; in the instant case, the United States Trustee's copy of the Operating Guidelines is stamped "May 4, 2000." Nevertheless, on August 1, 2000, another copy of the Operating Guidelines was mailed to Debtor's counsel.

creditor Hudson United Bank ("HUB"),[4] counsel to secured creditor Bridgeton Meat Co., and (via telephone) counsel to the United States Trustee. See Transcript at 4-5. At the status conference, Debtor's counsel admitted that, despite the Bankruptcy Court's direction at the June 26, 2000, status conference to pay post-petition real estate taxes, the Debtor had not done so. See Transcript at 15. Debtor's counsel also admitted that the Debtor had not made post-petition mortgage payments. Id. Debtor's counsel further stated that the Medford property, which serves as part of the collateral for HUB's lien, "is not productive to the debtor [or] to the Bi-Tech organization." Id. at 10. In addition, the United States Trustee's counsel informed the Bankruptcy Court that the Debtor had not filed any monthly reports. Id. at 6.

[4] HUB's lien is secured by assets of the Debtor's business as well as the Debtor's real estate. See Transcript at 30-31. HUB's foreclosure proceeding was apparently the catalyst for the Debtor's filing, and HUB fears that the Debtor or his affiliates may file future petitions to stave off foreclosure. Id. at 8, 67-68. Indeed, a related entity, Bi-Tech Manufacturing, Inc., filed a Chapter 7 petition, Case No. 00-10090 (JHW), on January 5, 2000, the day before the first scheduled Sheriff's Sale. See Docket No. 5. The Sheriff's Sale was adjourned without date, likely to be rescheduled no sooner than 1½ months after the lifting of the automatic stay imposed by the Chapter 7 filing. Id. On March 1, 2000, the Honorable Judith H. Wizmur entered an order lifting the automatic stay in the Bi-Tech Manufacturing, Inc. case. Id. Little more than 1½ months later, the Debtor filed his petition. See Docket No. 1. The Bankruptcy Court below was well aware of the Debtor's history with HUB, stating that the Debtor "is fighting them every step of the way," and that HUB's counsel was "probably right" about future filings by Debtor affiliates intended to frustrate HUB's ability to foreclose on its collateral. See Transcript at 11, 68.

The Bankruptcy Court determined that the Debtor's "gross failure . . . to do anything in Chapter 11" constituted cause to convert the case to Chapter 7. Id. Specifically, the Bankruptcy Court referred to the Debtor's failures to comply with its earlier direction to pay real estate taxes, make any progress in refinancing the HUB lien, make post-petition payments to secured creditors, file monthly reports, and file a plan of reorganization. Id. at 15-16.

After the Bankruptcy Court's ruling, Debtor's counsel asked the Court to reconsider its decision to convert the case, and the Bankruptcy Court inquired as to whether Debtor's counsel wished to present evidence regarding the Debtor's efforts in Chapter 11. Id. at 17. Debtor's counsel responded "Yes, Your Honor, I'd be prepared to do that." Id. (emphasis added). The Bankruptcy Court asked further if Debtor's counsel wished to elicit testimony from the Debtor himself, to which Debtor's counsel replied "I'd be prepared to do that." Id. (emphasis added). The Bankruptcy Court then offered Debtor's counsel a "recess" of undetermined length to allow him to converse with his client regarding this testimony, to which Debtor's counsel responded "I don't think I need to, Your Honor." Id. (emphasis added).

The Debtor proceeded to testify under oath to a number of violations of his fiduciary duty as a debtor in possession. For example, the Debtor testified that he had expended approximately $7,000 in estate funds without Bankruptcy Court approval to pay loan application fees, but was unable to obtain any refinancing commitment due in part to the fact that he did not have enough money to pay approximately $10,000 in appraisal fees. Id. at 20-23. The Debtor also testified that he had entered into listing agreements with real estate brokers to sell estate assets without first obtaining Bankruptcy Court authorization as required by 11 U.S.C. § 327(a) and Federal Rule of Bankruptcy Procedure 2014(a). Id. at 24-26.

The Debtor also testified that his discussions with potential lenders hinged upon his obtaining "working capital." Id. at 28. Since the Debtor is not a business entity, he was presumably referring to working capital for his corporation, Bi-Tech Inc., which is not presently in bankruptcy. Id. at 28. In fact, the Debtor testified that he had "put all [his] best efforts, at least 12 hours a day, five and a half days a week," into Bi-Tech – not into his anticipated liquidation of estate assets, which Debtor's counsel alleged were being "marketed aggressively" and "diligently." Id. at 27; 10,17, 51. He further testified that to pay the monthly carrying charges on any loan he might obtain he would require the lender to either agree to "a moratorium" on repayment for six months or provide "additional monies to cover the first six months." Id.

Thus, the Debtor essentially testified that he would only enter into an agreement to refinance the estate's obligations if money was provided to fund a non-debtor corporation, because the Debtor did not "have the dollars" to fund this entity himself. Id. at 29. Indeed, the Debtor responded "Oh, absolutely, absolutely" to the following characterization made by the Bankruptcy Court: "[I]f I understand what you're saying, your projected source of cash flow to pay back a new lender for [refinancing the loan to HUB] would be if you could get working capital in your business, Bi-Tech, you think that in six months time Bi-Tech would be able to generate enough excess cash so you could use that money to service the new loan." Id. at 48.

The Debtor also acknowledged that he "made a mistake" in agreeing to give HUB a lien on not just his personal real property but also Bi-Tech's receivables, machinery, and equipment. Id. at 29-31. The Debtor testified that he sought to have Bi-Tech's assets removed as collateral. Id. at 30-32. The Debtor then hoped to place a new lien on Bi-Tech's assets, use the money to fund Bi-Tech, and perhaps someday be in a position to pay creditors in his individual Chapter 11 case. Id.

The Debtor also testified that while the post-petition mortgage and real estate tax payments for the Mt. Laurel property were current, they were being paid directly by the tenant – so the Debtor had nothing whatsoever to do with the fact that those payments were current. Id. at 34-35. The Debtor also testified that his entire effort at "marketing" the Mt. Laurel property, which he valued at approximately $600,000, was to ask the tenant if it wanted to buy the property. Id. at 34-37. As of the hearing date the Debtor had received no answer, but had not otherwise undertaken any efforts to liquidate the property. Id. at 37-38. The Debtor also disclosed that he had received unsolicited inquiries into purchasing his shore house in Stone Harbor for between $1.3 million and $1.5 million, but he never followed up on them. Id. at 27. The Debtor further testified that he had been unsuccessfully attempting to sell the Medford property for 1½ years, during which time Bi-Tech has not paid rent to the Debtor for its use of the property. Id. at 27-28.

In addition, the Debtor admitted that he had not filed the statutorily-mandated monthly financial reports for April, May, June, and July 2000 – but he blamed this failure on the fact that the Office of the United States Trustee had not provided him with reporting forms. Id. at 38-39. Despite his statutory and fiduciary duty to report on his financial condition, however, the Debtor admitted that he had made no effort to obtain these forms, nor did he attempt to provide the necessary information in any other form. Id. at 39-40. In fact, the Debtor testified that he had not requested the forms, which have been specifically created to assist Chapter 11 debtors in fulfilling their statutory and fiduciary reporting obligations, because he was too busy doing "everything I can to take care of my obligations." Id. at 39 (emphasis added).

The Debtor further testified that another reason he was over four months delinquent in filing his monthly reports was that he had only recently located an accountant that did not have a conflict of interest. Id. at 40. As of the hearing date, however, that accountant had still not been employed pursuant to Bankruptcy Court order as required by 11 U.S.C. § 327(a). Id. at 6-7. For some reason, rather than obtain a disinterested accountant before filing his petition or shortly thereafter, the Debtor waited for over four months because he "wanted someone to tell us was there a conflict" in hiring his prior accountants, to whom he owed $22,000 according to Schedule F filed in support of his petition. Id. at 40; Docket No. 8.

In addition, the Debtor testified that he had not remitted the quarterly fee required by 28 U.S.C. § 1930(a)(6) to be paid to the United States Trustee in every Chapter 11 case by the end of the month following a quarter. Id. As the Debtor filed his petition during April 2000 the first quarterly fee he owed was for the second quarter of 2000, which was due on or before July 31, 2000. See 28 U.S.C. § 1930(a)(6). Nevertheless, the Debtor never paid any fee for the second quarter of 2000 - not even the $250 statutory minimum. See Transcript at 40.

In his summation, Debtor’s counsel acknowledged that the Debtor “has been less than a conventional debtor in regards to immediately hiring an accountant and filing reports,” and he admitted that he had been unaware that the Debtor had actually entered into a listing agreement for the Medford property. Id. at 50. Debtor’s counsel also referred to a lack of “working capital available to this company” – despite the fact that the Debtor, and not Bi-Tech, is the Chapter 11 debtor in possession. Id. at 51 (emphasis added). Debtor’s counsel also acknowledged that the Debtor’s intention was to liquidate assets and file a “liquidating plan” rather than a plan of reorganization. Id. at 51-52. In addition, Debtor’s counsel admitted that the Debtor had not personally made any post-petition real estate tax or mortgage payments. Id. at 51. According to Debtor’s counsel, the reason the Debtor had not made any payments was that “[t]here just hasn’t been a cash flow[.]” Id. at 52.

As for the Debtor’s admitted abject failure to comply with his statutory and fiduciary duties, Debtor’s counsel suggested that the Debtor had suddenly “gotten religion” and might finally comply with these duties if ordered to do so by the Bankruptcy Court by a date certain. Id. at 51-52. Indeed, Debtor’s counsel had earlier suggested that some modicum of “urgency” might at long last have been infused into the Debtor by his belated recognition that the failure to comply with his statutory and fiduciary obligations could result in the conversion of his case to Chapter 7. Id. at 13-14.

The Bankruptcy Court stated that after hearing the Debtor’s testimony he was “more convinced than ever that this case should be converted to Chapter 7.” Id. at 54. The Court noted that the Debtor’s failure to file monthly reports made it impossible to verify Debtor’s counsel’s assertion that no estate funds had been diverted. Id. In addition, the Court also referred to the lack of cash flow and limited number of checks written by the Debtor over four months, and concluded that “these monthly reports are not sophisticated things that require a certified public accountant. Anyone who keeps his or own checkbook should be able to fill out the monthly reports for an individual in Chapter 11.” Id. The Bankruptcy Court further based his decision to convert on the Debtor’s failure to pay statutorily-mandated quarterly fees, his intention to file a liquidating plan, and his failure to obtain court authorization for any of the appraisers, auctioneers, or real estate brokers he had hired and paid regarding the sale of his properties. Id. at 54-55.

The Bankruptcy Court rejected the Debtor’s attempt to blame the Office of the United States Trustee for his own failure to file monthly reports, stating that the Debtor’s failure to obtain the reporting forms “just indicates how little attention he has paid to his obligations as a debtor in possession.” Id. at 56.

The Court then went on to find that "there is serious concern that any value in [the Debtor's] properties are [sic] being eroded by the failure to pay taxes and the failure to pay interest on all of these secured loans." Id.

As for the Debtor's desire to obtain working capital for his business, the Bankruptcy Court questioned why the Debtor did not sell his shore home in Stone Harbor, which is valued at over $1 million. Id. at 56-57. Indeed, the Court noted that "it's hard to see how one can justify keeping a million dollar home and a million dollar plus second home, not paying the taxes or mortgages on that and yet keep creditors at bay." Id. at 58. Finally, the Court stated that appointing a Chapter 7 trustee "would probably be in [the Debtor's] best interests" in light of the Debtor's difficulty in marketing his properties or refinancing over the 1½ years preceding the filing of the Debtor's petition. Id. at 57.

The Bankruptcy Court then granted HUB relief from the automatic stay, as the conversion of the case made the Medford property no longer necessary for an effective reorganization.[5]

[5] The United States Trustee takes no position on the propriety of the Bankruptcy Court's decision to grant relief from the automatic stay. If it is determined that the Bankruptcy Court did not err in lifting the stay, however, that would lend further support for the conversion of this case to Chapter 7, as any liquidating plan the Debtor might have filed would presumably have relied heavily on the Debtor's anticipated refinancing of the Medford property.

ARGUMENT

I. THE BANKRUPTCY COURT'S SUA SPONTE CONVERSION WAS NOT ERRONEOUS AS A MATTER OF LAW

A. The Bankruptcy Court Had the Power Under 11 U.S.C. § 105(a) to Convert This Case to Chapter 7 Sua Sponte

Conversion of a Chapter 11 case to one under Chapter 7 is governed by 11 U.S.C. § 1112(b) ("Section 1112(b)"). Section 1112(b) provides that a Bankruptcy Court may convert a case "on the request of a party in interest or the United States trustee[.]" Prior to the Bankruptcy Judges, United States Trustees, and Family Farmer Bankruptcy Act of 1986, Pub. L. No. 99-554 (1986) ("1986 Amendment"), some courts held that Bankruptcy Courts lacked the power to convert a case sua sponte, given that they are not listed in Section 1112(b) as an entity that may seek conversion or dismissal. See, e.g., In re Moog, 774 F.2d 1073, 1076-77 (11th Cir. 1985); Gusam Restaurant Corp. v. Speciner (In re Gusam Restaurant Corp.), 737 F.2d 274, 276-77 (2d Cir. 1984); Warner v. Universal Guardian Corp. (In re Warner), 30 B.R. 528, 529 (Bankr. 9th Cir. 1983). But see In re East Town Properties, 31 B.R. 507, 507 (Bankr. E.D. Wisc. 1983); In re Nikron, Inc., 27 B.R. 773, 777-78 (Bankr. E.D. Mich. 1983); In re Missouri, 22 B.R. 600, 602 (Bankr. E.D. Ark. 1982); In re Coram Graphic Arts, 11 B.R. 641, 644 (Bankr. E.D.N.Y. 1981); Continental Ill. Nat'l Bank & Trust Co. of Chicago v. Century City, Inc. (In re Century City, Inc.), 8 B.R. 25, 29-30

(Bankr. D.N.J. 1980); In re Stahl, Asano, Shigetomi & Assocs., 7 B.R. 181, 186 (Bankr. D. Haw. 1980).

As modified by the 1986 Amendment, however, 11 U.S.C. § 105(a) now reads as follows (emphasis added):

> The court may issue any order, process, or judgment that is necessary or appropriate to carry out the provisions of this title. No provision of this title providing for the raising of an issue by a party in interest shall be construed to preclude the court from, sua sponte, taking any action or making any determination necessary or appropriate to enforce or implement court orders or rules, or to prevent an abuse of process.

Since the 1986 Amendment, there is no longer any doubt that Bankruptcy Courts have the power to convert or dismiss a case sua sponte notwithstanding the fact that no party in interest has moved for such relief.[6] See, e.g., In re Finney, 992 F.2d 43, 45 (4th Cir. 1993); Hayes v. Production Credit Ass'n of Midlands, 955 F.2d 49 (unpublished), 1992 WL 26785 *3 (10th Cir.); Argus Group 1700, Inc. v. Steinman (In re Argus Group 1700, Inc.), 206 B.R. 757, 763 (E.D. Pa. 1997); In re 183 Lorraine Street Assocs., 198 B.R. 16, 32 (E.D.N.Y. 1996); Pleasant Pointe Apartments, Ltd. v. Kentucky Housing Corp., 139 B.R. 828, 831 (W.D. Ky. 1992);

[6] As under Section 1112(b) statutory cause to dismiss and statutory cause to convert are the same, cases that have held that the Bankruptcy Court may dismiss a case sua sponte are relevant to the Bankruptcy Court's ability to convert a case sua sponte.

Finstrom v. Huisinga, 101 B.R. 997, 999 (D. Minn. 1989); In re A-1 Specialty Gasolines, Inc., 238 B.R. 876, 878 (Bankr. S.D. Fla. 1999); In re Tornheim, 181 B.R. 161, 164 n.4 (Bankr. S.D.N.Y. 1995), appeal dismissed, 1996 WL 79333 (S.D.N.Y. 1996); In re Tax Shop, Inc., 173 B.R. 605, 607 n.1 (Bankr. E.D. Mich. 1994); In re Great American Pyramid Joint Venture, 144 B.R. 780, 789 (Bankr. W.D. Tenn. 1992); In re 266 Washington Assocs., 141 B.R. 275, 288-89 (Bankr. E.D.N.Y. 1992), aff'd sub nom., In re Washington Assocs., 147 B.R. 827 (E.D.N.Y. 1992).

The only case cited by the Debtor that supports his bald assertion that Bankruptcy Courts lack the power to bring sua sponte motions to convert or dismiss is distinguishable. The decision of the Bankruptcy Appellate Panel of the Ninth Circuit (not the Court of Appeals for the Ninth Circuit, as the Debtor suggests) in Warner v. Universal Guardian Corp. (In re Warner), 30 B.R. 528 (Bankr. 9th Cir. 1983), was based primarily on the outdated pre-1986 Amendment theory that the Bankruptcy Court had no power to dismiss a case on its own motion. Id. at 529. The Bankruptcy Court in Warner had based its decision to dismiss on its belief that individual debtors cannot file Chapter 11 petitions, a position that is clearly incorrect. In addition, the debtor in Warner had not been afforded an opportunity to be heard as to why the case should not be dismissed. Thus, the Warner decision is completely inapposite to the instant case because (i) the "individual as Chapter 11 debtor" issue had no basis on the Bankruptcy Court's decision to convert, (ii) after the 1986 Amendment there is no doubt that the Bankruptcy Court can convert sua sponte, and (iii) the instant Debtor was provided an opportunity to be heard. Indeed, Debtor's counsel was even provided an opportunity to have some time to prepare the Debtor before the Debtor gave testimony. Nevertheless, Debtor's counsel asserted that additional time was unnecessary as he was prepared to proceed with the hearing, knowing full well that the testimony would be instrumental in the Bankruptcy Court's decision regarding the conversion of the case to Chapter 7.

As the Bankruptcy Court was clearly authorized by statute to convert a case sua sponte, its decision should be affirmed.

II. THE NOTICE AND HEARING RECEIVED BY THE DEBTOR WERE ADEQUATE FOR PURPOSES OF SECTION 1112(b)

A. Debtor's Failure to Raise the Issue of Adequacy of Notice Before the Bankruptcy Court Constitutes a Waiver of the Issue

If the issue of alleged defective notice is not raised at the hearing before the Bankruptcy Court it is deemed waived. See, e.g., First Nat'l Bank of Peoria v. Muller (In re Muller), 851 F.2d 916, 919 (7th Cir. 1988), cert. denied sub nom., Rogers v. First Nat'l Bank of Peoria, 490 U.S. 1007 (1989) ("If, as Rogers argues to this court, the notice of trial was not adequate to alert him that it was a trial, then he should have revealed that concern when he appeared, but before he actually participated.”); 9281 Shore Road Owners Corp. v. Seminole Realty Co. (In re 9281 Shore Road Owners Corp.), 187 B.R. 837, (E.D.N.Y. 1995); 9 Lawrence P. King, Collier on Bankruptcy ¶ 2002.02[6][3] at 2002-18 (15th ed. rev’d 2000).

In the instant case, Debtor’s counsel never expressed any concern to the Bankruptcy Court about the alleged inadequate notice. While Debtor’s counsel implied several times that the Debtor did not appreciate the importance of complying with his statutory and fiduciary duties, he never objected to the hearing proceeding in light of the allegedly inadequate notice. Debtor’s counsel could have raised the notice issue when the Bankruptcy Court asked if he wanted to present evidence. Instead of objecting to the lack of notice, Debtor’s counsel clearly asserted that he was ready to proceed with evidence regarding what the Debtor had done in Chapter 11 that might persuade the Bankruptcy Court to allow the case to remain in Chapter 11. Similarly, when the Bankruptcy Court offered additional time during which to prepare for the Debtor’s testimony, Debtor’s counsel stated that that would not be necessary. In addition, after the hearing the Debtor did not file a motion to reconsider based on facts he was unable to raise due to the alleged lack of notice.

In light of Debtor's counsel's failure to object at the Bankruptcy Court level to the adequacy of notice of the Bankruptcy Court's sua sponte motion to convert the case, the issue should not be considered on appeal.

B. The Notice Afforded the Debtor Was Adequate Under the Circumstances[7]

Even if this Court considers the notice issue, the Bankruptcy Court's decision should be affirmed. While Section 1112(b) provides that a Chapter 11 case may only be converted "after notice and a hearing," that phrase simply "means after such notice as is appropriate in the particular circumstances, and such opportunity for a hearing as is appropriate in the particular circumstances." See 11 U.S.C. § 102(1)(A) (emphasis added). Similarly, Federal Rule of Bankruptcy Procedure 9014 provides for nothing more than "reasonable notice and opportunity for hearing." As a result, the determination of whether the [7] To the extent that the Debtor suggests that the Bankruptcy Court's decision should be reversed because creditors did not receive notice that conversion would be considered at the status conference, that argument must be rejected because the Debtor does not have standing to argue on behalf of the creditors. See, e.g., Argus Group 1700, Inc. v. Steinman (In re Argus Group 1700, Inc.), 206 B.R. at 764. No creditors have come forward to file a motion for reconsideration, a motion to convert the case back to Chapter 11, or an appeal. Indeed, as the Debtor intended to liquidate his assets anyway, if he is correct about the amount of equity in his assets unsecured creditors stand to make out just as well in Chapter 7 as they would have in Chapter 11, if not better. In any event, the only creditors that have actively participated in this case were in attendance at the August 25, 2000 hearing and they have not objected to the conversion.

Debtor received adequate notice and a hearing is fact-sensitive, and the Bankruptcy Court's decision is merely reviewed for abuse of discretion.

Federal Rule of Bankruptcy Procedure 2002(a)(4) generally requires that a motion to convert a Chapter 11 case be made on at least 20 days' notice by mail to all parties in interest. This Rule is subject to Federal Rule of Bankruptcy Procedure 9006(c)(1), however, which allows the Bankruptcy Court to reduce the required notice period "for cause shown." There is no limit on how much the notice period may be reduced. Presumably, it may be reduced to zero days if the Bankruptcy Court, at its discretion, finds that cause exists to convert a case immediately without first providing notice.

The leading bankruptcy commentator has apparently adopted this position regarding notice and sua sponte conversion, as it states that ["t]he 20 day period may be shortened for cause shown. And, in appropriate circumstances, the court may act sua sponte, without notice or a hearing, and dismiss or convert the case. . . ." See 9 Lawrence P. King, Collier on Bankruptcy ¶ 2002.02[6][d] at 2002-16 (15th ed. rev'd 2000) (emphasis added). This authority cites In re Jephunneh Lawrence & Assocs. Chartered, 63 B.R. 318 (Bankr. D.D.C. 1986), in which the Bankruptcy Court held as follows:

> Notwithstanding the general requirement for notice, where (as here) it is apparent on the > face of the record that under no set of circumstances can the relief requested be granted, this Court, like any other, has inherent authority to dismiss a case, sua sponte and without notice, as being irremediably defective.

Id. at 321 (emphasis added).

The instant Debtor's "inadequate notice" argument was rejected in Argus Group 1700, Inc. v. Steinman (In re Argus Group 1700, Inc.), 206 B.R. 757 (E.D. Pa. 1997).[8] In that case, the debtors argued that they were not provided with adequate notice of and opportunity to respond to the Bankruptcy Court's sua sponte motion to dismiss. Id. at 763. The Bankruptcy Court offered the debtors a choice of being heard or returning on another date, but the debtors "assured the bankruptcy court that they were prepared to present evidence" at the hearing, and the debtor's principal then provided testimony. Id. at 764. The District Court reviewed these facts and stated that "it is clear that the bankruptcy court provided the debtors with adequate notice and an opportunity to respond, and that the debtors actively participated in the proceedings, fully aware that the bankruptcy court might dismiss their cases sua sponte." Id.

[8] In light of the Argus Group 1700, Inc. decision, the Debtor's argument that "courts in the Third Circuit" require 20 days notice for all Section 1112(b) motions must be rejected. The sole case cited by the Debtor for that proposition, In re Mead, 28 B.R. 1000 (E.D. Pa. 1983), is inapposite as it predates that 1986 Amendment, which made it clear that Bankruptcy Courts may enter sua sponte orders to convert cases.

The Debtor is presumed to have understood since he filed his petition on April 20, 2000 that as a Chapter 11 debtor in possession he was assuming certain statutory and fiduciary duties. He is further presumed to have understood that failure to comply with these duties constitutes grounds for conversion, and that pursuant to 11 U.S.C. § 105(a) the bankruptcy Court has the power to enter sua sponte orders when necessary. In addition, the Debtor received adequate notice of the status conference, and 11 U.S.C. § 105(d) provides that at a status conference the Bankruptcy Court may "issue an order . . . prescribing such limitations and conditions as the court deems appropriate to ensure that the case is handled expeditiously and economically."

While 11 U.S.C. § 105(d) provides a list of possible orders that may be entered at a status conference, this list is not exclusive. See 11 U.S.C. § 102(3) (word "including" preceding a list is not limiting). A Bankruptcy Court may always enter "any order . . . that is necessary or appropriate to carry out the provisions of" the Bankruptcy Code. See 11 U.S.C. § 105(a). The Debtor is presumed to understand that if he testifies at a status conference (or any other proceeding) that he has not complied with his statutory or fiduciary duties, such testimony may be deemed by the Bankruptcy Court at its discretion to be cause for conversion under Section 1112(b) and thus could result in a sua sponte conversion pursuant to 11 U.S.C. § 105(a).

The case cited by the Debtor for the proposition that Section 1112(b) motions must be written rather than oral, In re Bistrian, 184 B.R. 678 (E.D. Pa. 1995), is distinguishable. In Bistrian, the Bankruptcy Court had refused to consider the oral voluntary dismissal motion of an abusive serial Chapter 13 filer who announced that she intended to immediately file another Chapter 13 petition if her case was dismissed. Id. at 680. The Bankruptcy Court refused to consider the motion because the very creditors who the debtor intended to frustrate by filing yet another petition had not received notice of the debtor's motion. Id. Instead, the Bankruptcy Court found that the case had been filed in bad faith and it granted a secured creditors' written motion to convert to Chapter 7, thereby thwarting the debtor's plan to continue frustrating the secured creditor's attempts to sell the debtor's house at sheriff's sale. Id. at 681.

Although the District Court in Bistrian held that the Bankruptcy Court had not abused its discretion in refusing to consider the oral motion, it expressly stated that "[w]e do not hold that a bankruptcy court may never consider an oral motion for voluntary dismissal."[9] Id. at 683 (emphasis added). The [9] Oral motions are contemplated by Federal Rule of Bankruptcy Procedure 9013, which requires any request for an order to be "by written motion, unless made during a hearing" (emphasis added).

District Court cited Taragan v. Eli Lilly & Co., 838 F.2d 1337, 1341 (D.C. Cir. 1988), which in turn had held that the notice requirement "is satisfied when the oral motion has some connection to . . . the matter set for hearing." Id.

The teaching of the Bistrian court, therefore, is that oral motions that have a connection to the reason for a particular hearing may be considered, and that "the examination of the connection between an oral motion and a hearing, and of the need for written notice, are 'matter[s] in which the discretion and experience of the trial judge are paramount.'" In re Bistrian, 184 B.R. at 684 n.11 (quoting Taragan v. Eli Lilly & Co., 838 F.2d at 1341)) (emphasis added).

In the instant case the Bankruptcy Court applied his years of experience in the Chapter 11 field to determine that an oral motion to convert was sufficiently connected to the purposes behind a status conference – one of which, as 11 U.S.C. § 105(d)(2)(B) makes clear, is to facilitate the passage of a case through the shoals of Chapter 11. Indeed, Congress expressly added 11 U.S.C. § 105(d) to help Bankruptcy Courts "manage their dockets in a more efficient and expeditious manner." See H.R. Rep. No. 103-834, 103rd Cong., 2nd Sess. 4 (1994). Thus, Bankruptcy Courts must necessarily have the power to entertain oral motions without notice at a 11 U.S.C. § 105(d) status conference so as to weed out cases that cannot make it successfully through Chapter 11; otherwise Congress' goal of helping Bankruptcy Courts manage their cluttered dockets would not be obtained. Cf. Finstrom v. Huisinga, 101 B.R. 997, 999 (D. Minn. 1989) (Bankruptcy Court may dismiss sua sponte in exercising its inherent power to manage its own proceedings); In re Jones, 1990 WL 300922 * 1 (Bankr. N.D. Ind.) ("[I]t is appropriate to bring this [dismissal] before the court, on its own motion and without notice or hearing, in order to enforce or implement this court's prior orders, to prevent abuse of process, and to perpetuate the proper use of the bankruptcy laws" (emphasis added)).

In the instant case, the Bankruptcy Court held that the value of estate assets was being compromised as long as the Debtor remained in possession. The Debtor admitted to having no cash flow, and the Schedules and Statement of Financial Affairs filed in support of his petition indicate an inability to met his monthly expenses based on income alone. The Debtor was accumulating post-petition debt to secured creditors and local taxing authorities, and every dollar of estate funds that goes to pay such administrative expenses is a dollar that creditors will never see. Likewise, the Debtor had employed real estate brokers and expended estate funds without Bankruptcy Court authorization, thereby adding to the administrative cost. The full extent of the damage to the estate cannot be ascertained, because the Debtor never filed reports of his financial position. In view of the Bankruptcy Court's valid concern for the decreasing value of estate assets, and thus the decreasing possibility of recovery for creditors, the decision to "pull the plug" immediately rather than after another three week "notice period" had passed was not clearly erroneous.

C. Any Deficiency of Notice was not Prejudicial to the Debtor

Federal Rule of Civil Procedure 61, made applicable to bankruptcy cases by Federal Rule of Bankruptcy Procedure 9005, requires that a judgment that constitutes harmless error must not be disturbed. An error is "harmless" if it does not affect the substantial rights of the parties. See Fed. R. Civ. P. 61.

In Hing Quan Lum v. United States Trustee (In re Hing Quan Lum), Civil No. 94-5312, slip op. at 7 (3d Cir. Jan. 19, 1995)(unpublished decision attached hereto as Exhibit A) the Bankruptcy Court had based its decision to convert on judicial notice of the Debtor's failure to file monthly reports, not on the grounds actually noticed as part of the United States Trustee's motion. Nevertheless, the Third Circuit held that the Bankruptcy Court's actions constituted harmless error, rather than an abuse of due process, because the Debtor had admitted before the Bankruptcy Court that he had not filed monthly reports. Id., slip op. at 7.

In the instant case, the Debtor intended to liquidate his assets and pay creditors, so conversion does not affect any party’s substantial rights; the only change is that now a Chapter 7 trustee, rather than the Debtor, will liquidate the Debtor’s assets and pay his creditors. Although the Debtor’s brief was filed on October 11, 2000, the Debtor has not suggested what evidence he would have been able to scare up if he had been given until September 18, 2000. Indeed, it is difficult to imagine what evidence the Debtor could have presented, since he admitted on August 25, 2000 that he had breached his statutory and fiduciary duties. As a result, cause existed as of that day to convert the case, and cause would have continued to exist no matter how much time the Debtor was given.

Brooks v. Hussman Corp., 878 F.2d 115 (3d Cir. 1989), a case cited by the Debtor, is completely inapposite because it dealt with the notice required for a summary judgment motion, where the issue of whether facts are in dispute is paramount. In the instant case, of course, no amount of time could have enabled the Debtor to prove that monthly reports actually had been filed and quarterly fees and taxes had been paid, because by his own admission these obligations had not been met. There was no factual issue in dispute.

The Debtor’s only argument in favor of prejudice is essentially that if he had been told that his breaches of statutory and fiduciary duty were a problem, he would have "cured" the problem. As the Third Circuit made clear in Lum, however, the Debtor cannot "cure" such failures simply by showing up on the day of a hearing with reports and checks in hand.

For example, in In re William Steiner, Inc., 139 B.R. 536 (Bankr. D. Md. 1992), the debtor facially "cured" the deficiencies raised in the United States Trustee's motion to dismiss or convert. Id. at 357-58. The United States Trustee raised additional grounds for dismissal at the hearing, however, and the Bankruptcy Court afforded the Debtor an opportunity to respond. Id. at 357. The Bankruptcy Court then dismissed the case, finding that the debtor was not prejudiced by the United States Trustee's raising of new issues at the hearing because "[a]ll facts upon which the U.S. Trustee relied were known to the debtor" and the debtor was afforded an opportunity to respond. Id. at 358. An additional reason for the court's decision was that, while the debtor had ostensibly "cured" the filing deficiency on its surface, the debtor's "unreasonable delay complying with administrative requirements" constituted cause for dismissal under Section 1112(b). Id.

The instant Debtor's "cure" argument is apparently predicated on the assumption that he need not comply with any of his obligations until someone files a motion to convert giving him a 20-day notice period. The law is to the contrary, however. As one Bankruptcy Court within the Eastern District of Pennsylvania stated when faced with a debtor that refused to report unless forced to do so by threat of dismissal:

> The troubling aspect of this case is that debtor's counsel seems to believe that Bankruptcy Court is a legal playground where the debtor can indulge in an elaborate game of catch-me-if-you-can with her creditors. Such is not the case.

In re Bystrek, 17 B.R. 894, 895 (Bankr. E.D. Pa. 1982).

D. The Hearing Afforded the Debtor Was Adequate Under the Circumstances

The Debtor cannot say that he was denied a hearing, as he actually provided testimony regarding his activities as a debtor in possession which, after four months in Chapter 11, he certainly should have been able to do. Indeed, the Debtor testified to some length about what he had done in Chapter 11. Indeed, he received more of a hearing than is necessary, as an evidentiary hearing is not necessary when the record provides ample evidence of cause for purposes of Section 1112(b). See In re Lease-a-Fleet, Inc., 1995 WL 743666 *6 (E.D. Pa.), aff'd, 101 F.3d 690 (3d Cir. 1996) (table). The problem is not that the Debtor was not afforded an opportunity to present his case; the problem is that everything he said pointed to conversion.

This is not a situation where a lack of notice and a hearing has led to an unjust result. The Debtor simply failed to comprehend both the possible dire consequences to a debtor in possession of its breach of fiduciary duty and the swiftness with which these consequences may be visited upon a faithless fiduciary. The Debtor's predicament is reminiscent of that of the debtor in Turney v. F.D.I.C., 18 F.3d 865, 865 (10th Cir. 1994): "Although present and represented by counsel at all proceedings, Debtor insists he did not interpret the eventualities which arose from the particular hearings in the manner they played out." Just as in the instant case, in which the Bankruptcy Court's factual findings came directly from the Debtor's mouth, the debtor in Turney "[did] not challenge the factual findings underpinning the bankruptcy court's legal conclusions; but, instead, he ask[ed the court] to fabricate a new law of due process to relieve him of the process he indeed received." Id. at 868.

It is clear that the instant Debtor was not deprived of a hearing – he just does not like the result of the hearing. As the Tenth Circuit stated in Turney:

> That Debtor is disgruntled over the manner of his participation . . . does not negate the fact of his presence at those proceedings. . . . At best, Debtor's contentions reflect nothing more than a failure to comprehend what was set before him. No concept of due process can be invoked to protect him from that failure.

Turney v. F.D.I.C., 18 F.3d at 869.

III. THE BANKRUPTCY COURT'S DECISION THAT CAUSE EXISTED TO CONVERT THE CASE TO CHAPTER 7 WAS NOT CLEARLY ERRONEOUS

A. The Debtor's Admitted Failure to File Monthly Reports Constituted Cause to Convert

Section 1112(b) provides that the Bankruptcy Court may either convert or dismiss a case, "whichever is in the best interest of creditors and the estate, for cause[.]" While Section 1112(b) provides a list of things that can constitute "cause," this list is not exclusive. See, e.g., First Jersey Nat'l Bank v. Brown (In re Brown), 951 F.2d 564, 562 (3d Cir. 1991). Congress left to the Bankruptcy Court's discretion the determination of whether "cause" to convert exists in a particular case. Halvajian v. Bank of New York (In re Halvajian), 216 B.R. 502, 511 (D.N.J. 1998), aff'd, 168 F.3d 478 (3d Cir. 1998) (table). Congress did, however, expressly include, among other things, "continuing loss to or diminution of the estate and absence of a reasonable likelihood of rehabilitation," "inability to effectuate a plan," "unreasonable delay by the debtor that is prejudicial to creditors," and "nonpayment of any fees or charges required under chapter 123 of title 28." See 11 U.S.C. § 1112(b)(1), (2), (3), and (10).

Filing monthly reports is one of the primary fiduciary duties of a debtor in possession. See, e.g., In re Tornheim, 181 B.R. at 164; In re Berryhill, 127 B.R. 427, 433 (Bankr. N.D. Ind. 1991); In re McClure, 69 B.R. 282, 289 (Bankr. N.D. Ind. 1987).

As one court has stated:

> Timely and accurate financial disclosure is the life blood of the Chapter 11 process. Monthly operating reports are much more than busy work imposed upon a Chapter 11 debtor. . . . They are the means by which creditors can monitor a debtor's post-petition operations.

In re Tornheim, 181 B.R. at 164.

In light of the vital importance of timely monthly reports, there is no "cure period" such as the Debtor urges upon this Court. If a Bankruptcy Court finds that a debtor in possession is not fulfilling its statutory duty to report, the Court may convert or dismiss the case for lack of prosecution. See, e.g., In re McClure, 69 B.R. 282, 289 (Bankr. N.D. Ind. 1987); In re Missouri, 22 B.R. 600, 604 (Bankr. E.D. Ark. 1982). Indeed, in one case in which a debtor in possession faced with a motion to convert sought to "cure" its admitted failure to file four month's worth of reports, the Bankruptcy Court held as follows:

> This case does not present a simple failure by the debtor to "dot the i's and cross the t's," as the debtor argues, nor does curing the defects cleanse the debtor of its initial wrongdoings. The debtor simply failed to exercise its fiduciary duty as a debtor-in-possession. If this is not a case that establishes cause for conversion or dismissal for utter failure to comply with the Bankruptcy Rules and Code, then it is hard to imagine such a case.

In re Cloisters of Brevard, Inc., 117 B.R. 722, 723 (Bankr. M.D. Fla. 1990) (citation omitted) (emphasis added).

The Third Circuit addressed the relationship between timely, accurate monthly reports and conversion in Hing Quan Lum v. United States Trustee (In re Hing Quan Lum), Civil No. 94-5312 (3d Cir. January 19, 1995)(unpublished decision attached hereto as Exhibit A). In Lum, an individual Chapter 11 debtor filed six delinquent monthly reports and paid two delinquent quarterly fees in response to the United States Trustee's motion to convert. Id., slip op. at 3. The debtor then objected to the motion, arguing that he had "cured" his reporting and fee deficiencies. Id., slip op. at 4. The case was nevertheless converted due to the debtor's failure to file a plan of reorganization and other violations disclosed in the recently-filed monthly reports. Id. The debtor appealed, arguing that he was denied due process in that he had been "blindsided" by the use of the contents of the monthly reports, whereas the United States Trustee's motion only put him on notice that the case could be converted for failure to file the reports. Id., slip op. at 4-5. The District Court affirmed. Id., slip op. at 5.

The Third Circuit held that the bankruptcy court had properly taken judicial notice of facts evident from the docket and case history, including the debtor's tardiness in filing monthly reports and paying quarterly fees. Id., slip op. at 5-6. The Third Circuit noted that not only were these facts ascertainable by reference to court records, but the debtor had admitted to them at the hearings before the bankruptcy court. Id., slip op. at 7.

As for the importance of monthly reports, the Third Circuit stated that "[m]onthly reports are a key feature of a Chapter 11 bankruptcy; they allow creditors to monitor the conduct of the debtor to prevent waste and help creditors formulate reorganization plans." Id., slip op. at 8. Noting that the debtor's failure to file timely reports "deprived the creditors of their right to review his financial conditions and take actions necessary to protect their interests in the estate," the Third Circuit opined that "[t]he failure of the Debtor to file his monthly reports alone arguably provides a basis for conversion under § 1112(b)(3) [unreasonable delay that is prejudicial to creditors]." Id., slip op. at 8-9. Thus, the Third Circuit affirmed the District Court. Id., slip op. at 12.

The Lum decision is consistent with the large of courts that have held that the failure to file timely and accurate monthly reports constitutes cause to dismiss or convert a Chapter 11 case. See, e.g., In re Tornheim, 181 B.R. 161, 164 (Bankr. S.D.N.Y. 1995), appeal dismissed 1996 WL 79333 (S.D.N.Y. 1996); In re Wilkins Inv. Group, Inc., 171 B.R. 194, 196-97 (Bankr. M.D. Pa. 1994); In re Vallejo, 77 B.R. 365, 367 (Bankr. D.P.R. 1987); In re Security & Energy Sys., Inc., 62 B.R. 676, 678 (Bankr. W.D.N.Y. 1986); In re Modern Office Supply, Inc., 28 B.R. 943, 945 (Bankr. W.D. Okla. 1983). As a result, the Bankruptcy Court's decision to convert a case for failure to file timely reports is not so far afield, either factually or legally, as to constitute an abuse of discretion.

The Debtor's attempt to foist responsibility for its failure upon the United States Trustee amounts to an equitable estoppel argument. The Debtor suggests that if only he had received the form report sooner he would have complied with his statutory reporting obligation. This argument must fail, however, as equitable estoppel normally may not be invoked against governmental entities. See, e.g., Heckler v. Community Health Servs. of Crawford Co., Inc., 467 U.S. 51, 60 (1984); Schweiker v. Hansen, 450 U.S. 785 (1981); Federal Crop Ins. Corp. v. Merrill, 332 U.S. 380, 385 (1947); Utah Power & Light Co. v. United States, 243 U.S. 389, 409 (1917). Thus, the Debtor cannot be heard to blame his failings on the actions of any federal government employee.

In light of the foregoing, the Bankruptcy Court's finding of cause to convert should be affirmed on the basis of the Debtor's failure to file monthly reports alone, regardless of any other violations of statutory or fiduciary duty.

B. The Debtor's Admitted Failure to Pay Post-Petition Real Estate Taxes Constituted Cause to Convert

The Debtor's failure to pay post-petition real estate taxes has increased the amount of administrative expenses that would have to be paid on the effective date of any plan. See 11 U.S.C. § 1129(a)(9)(A). By increasing the administrative expenses, the Debtor has created a concomitant decrease in the value of the estate to general creditors. See In re 865 Centennial Ave. Assocs. L.P., 200 B.R. 800, 811 (Bankr. D.N.J. 1996). As one court stated when faced with a debtor accumulating post-petition taxes, "the Court finds no reason to allow this debt to increase and further harm the creditors while the Debtor continues its exercise in tire-kicking." In re Moore Construction, Inc., 206 B.R. 436, 438 (Bankr. N.D. Tex. 1997).

The Debtor's nonpayment of real estate taxes constitutes cause to convert this case pursuant to Section 1112(b)(1). See, e.g., Berryhill v. United States (In re Berryhill), 189 B.R. 463, 466 n.4 (N.D. Ind. 1995); In re Citi-Toledo Partners, 170 B.R. 602, 606 (Bankr. N.D. Ohio 1994); In re 865 Centennial Ave. Assocs. L.P., 200 B.R. at 811. As a result, the Bankruptcy Court's discretionary decision was not clearly erroneous and should be affirmed.

C. The Debtor's Admitted Failure to Pay Quarterly Fees Constituted Cause to Convert

Congress created the 28 U.S.C. § 1930(a)(6) quarterly fee requirement to fund the United States Trustee Program from fees paid by the users of Chapter 11 rather than from the public fisc. See, e.g., United States Trustee v. Prines (In re Prines), 867

F.2d 478, 480 (8th Cir. 1989). These fees are mandatory for as long as a case remains in Chapter 11. Congress obviously intended that these fees be paid, as it made plan confirmation contingent upon payment of all quarterly fees and it made non-payment of fees cause to convert. See 11 U.S.C. § 1129(a)(12); 11 U.S.C. § 1112(b)(10).

The Third Circuit and other courts within this Circuit have noted that nonpayment of quarterly fees in and of itself is cause to convert. See, e.g., Hing Quan Lum v. United States Trustee (In re Hing Quan Lum), Civil No. 94-5312, slip op. at 9; In re Nugelt, Inc., 142 B.R. 661, 668-70 (Bankr. D. Del. 1992); In re Rose, 86 B.R. 439, 442 (Bankr. E.D. Pa 1988). As a result, the instant Bankruptcy Court's decision to convert the case is supported by the Debtor's failure to pay quarterly fees. Thus, the bankruptcy Court's decision was not clearly erroneous, and should be affirmed.

D. The Totality of The Circumstances, Including the Record Before the Bankruptcy Court and the Entirety of the Debtor's Testimony, Constituted Cause to Convert

Even if no one factor by itself constitutes cause to convert the instant case, the Debtor admitted to numerous violations of his statutory and fiduciary duties, including: failure to file monthly reports; failure to pay post-petition real estate taxes; failure to pay other post-petition obligations; failure to pay quarterly fees; failure to obtain court authorization before entering into listing agreements and employing professionals; and failure to obtain court approval before expending estate funds on several loan applications. In addition, the Debtor clearly did not appreciate the importance of filing monthly reports on time rather than waiting until forced to do so. The Debtor also testified that the majority of his time was spent on his business, not his bankruptcy estate, and that he had unsuccessfully been trying to sell or refinance the estate's assets for over 1½ years. Finally, the Debtor has not filed a plan, and any plan he would file would be a liquidating plan by his counsel's own admission.

As one court has stated:

> It is clear from the history of this case that the Debtor has failed to take seriously the requirements of the Bankruptcy Code and this Bankruptcy Court and the guidelines of the Office of the United States Trustee. As a result, he has prejudiced his creditors. . . . The Debtor wants the benefits of the extraordinary rights and remedies provided by the Bankruptcy Code to protect him from his legitimate obligations to creditors, yet he has continually failed to comply with the requirements of the bankruptcy system he wants to take advantage of.

In re Cannon, 143 B.R. 805, 806 (Bankr. W.D.N.Y. 1992). The Debtor's actions have similarly prejudiced the rights of creditors and the bankruptcy system as a whole.

In light of the foregoing, the Bankruptcy Court's decision that the Debtor could not comply with court orders and his statutory and fiduciary duties was sound. Thus, the totality of the circumstances indicate that the Bankruptcy Court’s finding of cause to convert was reasonable, and should be affirmed.

CONCLUSION

For all of the foregoing reasons, the United States Trustee respectfully requests that the decision of the Bankruptcy Court to convert the case to Chapter 7 be affirmed.

Respectfully submitted,

STATEMENT OF JURISDICTION

II.

STATEMENT OF ISSUES

Whether the bankruptcy court abused its discretion when it ordered sanctions against Appellants Jasmine, Inc. and Paul S. Ablon for filing a frivolous motion to “vacate and/or terminate” the appointment of Alfred Siegel as Chapter 11 trustee in these bankruptcy cases.

III.

STANDARD OF REVIEW

An order imposing sanctions pursuant to either Federal Rule of Civil Procedure 11 (“Rule 11") or Federal Rule of Bankruptcy Procedure 9011 (“Rule 9011") is reviewed for an abuse of discretion. Terran v. Kaplan, 109 F.3d 1428, 1434 (9th Cir. 1997); In re Grantham Brothers, 922 F.2d 1438, 1441 (9th Cir. 1990).

To the extent that Jasmine and Ablon suggest any other standard of review, and rely on cases not involving Rule 11 sanctions, their suggestion is without merit. "[A]n appellate court should apply an abuse of discretion standard in reviewing all aspects of a district court's Rule 11 determination." Cooter & Gell v. Hartmarx Corporation, 496 U.S. 384, 405, 110 L.Ed.2d 359, 110 S.Ct. 2447, 2461 (1990).

IV.

STATEMENT OF THE CASE

This is an appeal from a Bankruptcy Appellate Panel decision affirming the bankruptcy court's order awarding Rule 11 sanctions against Appellant Jasmine Films, Inc. ("Jasmine") and its counsel, Paul S. Ablon ("Ablon"), because they filed a motion based on innuendo and unfounded and unsupported assumptions. Indeed, the bankruptcy court "found the motion so shockingly off base that it seemed to [it] [Jasmine] was trying to extract some sort of a benefit from these estates without any basis for receiving one." Appellants'

Amended Excerpts of Record ("AER") 2:277, lines 1-4.

The motion at issue was Jasmine's motion to "terminate and/or vacate" the appointment of Alfred Siegel ("Siegel") as Chapter 11 trustee in the four bankruptcy estates of D and P Productions, Inc., Amble Music, Inc., Sherwood Productions, Inc. ("Sherwood"), and Preamble Music, Inc.[1/] Sherwood is the parent corporation and the other three are wholly owned subsidiaries.

All of the companies are related to the bankruptcy of Bruce McNall, the former owner of the Los Angeles Kings hockey team. The motion was based on Jasmine's assertion that Siegel had an impermissible conflict of interest because his name was suggested to the United States Trustee as a possible candidate for trustee by people associated with the McNall bankruptcy.[2] The motion further complains that although Jasmine's principal, Barry Goldin, expressed his opposition to Siegel's appointment, the United States Trustee did not list him as one of the parties consulted.

[1/] While these cases began as Chapter 11 reorganizations, they were subsequently converted to Chapter 7, with Mr. Siegel remaining as a Chapter 7 trustee.

Jasmine and Ablon came forward with no evidence that Siegel had engaged in any misconduct. Neither did they supply the court with any evidence that he has been or would be influenced, much less unduly influenced by McNall or McNall's trustee. Based on the bare fact that Siegel's name had been suggested by McNall and McNall's trustee, Jasmine and Ablon asserted that Siegel was "beholden to them," "vetted" by them, that he would not pursue claims against them, that the procedure appointing him was "highly irregular," that "no trustee chosen by Bruce McNall or any successor to Bruce McNall . . .

[2] The motion asserts that Mr. Siegel was nominated by R. Todd Neilson, the trustee for the estate of Bruce McNall, Mr. Neilson's counsel, Leonard Gumport, and Mr. McNall's counsel, Richard Wynne. This assertion is not true. The evidence is undisputed the Mr. Siegel was suggested by Gumport alone. AER 2:168 and 217.

can be truly expected to protect, or ever appear to be protecting, the Sherwood estate.” The court determined that all these allegations were completely without merit or factual support and are based on at best a thorough misunderstanding of the appointment process.

The bankruptcy court found that the motion was filed for an improper purpose. This improper purpose is reflected by the fact that Jasmine admittedly attempted to conceal its representation by an attorney who was a partner of the trustee Jasmine sought to have appointed.

Having found the motion to be without a basis in fact or law and that it had been brought for an improper purpose, the court properly ordered sanctions payable to the responding parties.

On March 28, 1998, 1½ years after the hearing on the motion for sanctions, Jasmine brought a second motion to remove Mr. Siegel as trustee, which was also denied by the bankruptcy court and which is currently on appeal to the district court. Jasmine and Ablon assert that the disputed facts alleged in the second motion for sanctions have some bearing on the order that is the subject of this appeal.

V.

STATEMENT OF FACTS[3]

These bankruptcy cases were initiated by the filing of bankruptcy petitions on June 13, 1996. They were filed by the principal of the Debtors, Bruce McNall.[4] Shortly after these cases were filed, McNall stipulated to the appointment of a Chapter 11 trustee for the corporate debtors. The order approving the stipulation was entered on July 12, 1996. AER 2:47, 60, 71, and 82. The United States Trustee consulted with parties in inter-

[3] In the interests of avoiding repetition, The United States Trustee restricts her statement of facts to the facts of which she has direct knowledge. The facts setting forth in more detail the dealings between and among the various other parties to this appeal are contained in the statement of facts submitted by Weinstein, Eisen & Levine and Gumport, Reitman & Montgomery.

[4] Two years earlier, McNall's creditors had filed an involuntary proceeding against him. Within a short period of time, McNall consented to an order for relief and Chapter 11 trustee R. Todd Neilson was ordered appointed in his case.

est, McNall's counsel and Neilson's counsel, as contemplated by 11 U.S.C. §1104(d) and Federal Rule of Bankruptcy Procedure ("FRBP") 2007.1. The United States Trustee also consulted with Barry Goldin, who at the time of the consultation asserted he was an interested party because he expected to receive an interest in the parent of Sherwood. AER 2:238, lines 24-26. Because Goldin, on behalf of Jasmine, did not assert a current interest in any of the Debtors, either as principal or creditor, the United States Trustee did not list his name on her Application for Approval of the Appointment of Mr. Siegel.[5/] AER 3:238, line 24 - 239, line 1. The fact that his name was not listed, however, has no bearing on whether or not his views were considered. The uncontroverted evidence is that the United States Trustee considered Goldin's views but nonetheless decided to appoint Mr. Siegel. AER 2:239, lines 1-2. Jasmine’s assertion, at its opening brief page 12, that the United States Trustee attorney “paid little, if any, heed to Jasmine’s concerns” is unsupported in the record.

[5/] FRBP 2007.1 provides that the application to the court for approval of the United States Trustee's appointment of a trustee state the "name of the person appointed, [and] the names of the parties in interest with whom the United States Trustee consulted regarding the appointment . . .."

On July 30, 1996, after receiving Siegel’s statement of disinterestedness, the United States Trustee applied to the court for approval of her appointment of Alfred Siegel as trustee in these cases. AER 2:238, lines 13-19. The court entered the order approving the appointment on August 6, 1996. AER 2:48, 61, 72 and 83. Just nine days later, on August 15, 1996, Jasmine and Ablon filed their motion seeking to vacate or terminate Siegel’s appointment, supported by the Barry Goldin’s declaration. AER 2:91. The motion did not state what procedural rule or code section it was based on. Id.

The motion was opposed by Mr. Siegel, Mr. Neilson and the United States Trustee. AER 2:163-204, 205-226, and 228-240. Mr. Siegel also filed evidentiary objections to Goldin’s declaration. [AER 2:223-226 and Appellee’s Supplemental Excerpts of Record (“SER”), Exh. 1],[6] which were sustained with the court noting that the Goldin declaration contained “rank hearsay, pure speculation, [and] argument. . ..” In ruling on the motion, the court noted that it was “among the most outrageous I’ve entertained in 11 years on the bench.” AER 2:284, lines 13-22. No appeal has been taken the order sustaining Siegel’s objection to Goldin’s declaration. The United States Trustee requested sanctions in her opposition to the motion.[7] AER 2:228-235. On September 10, 1996, the court denied the motion and set a further hearing on the United States Trustee’s request for sanctions. AER 2:280, lines 11-17 and 283, line 22 - 284, line 12.

[6] The evidentiary objection has been included in the Supplemental Excerpts because the second page on the objection is missing in Appellants’ Amended Excerpts of Record.

[7] Jasmine’s assertion at page 11 of its brief that the court sua sponte scheduled a hearing on sanctions is not accurate.

The hearing on the sanctions was held on September 24, 1996. AER 3:455. Sanctions were ordered against both Jasmine and its counsel, Paul Ablon, in the amount of $10,550 by order entered October 28, 1996. AER 3:504. The Bankruptcy Appellate Panel affirmed the sanctions order [AER 10], and this appeal followed.

On March 2, 1998, one and a half years after the sanctions order was entered, Jasmine brought a second motion to remove Mr. Siegel as trustee. AER 12:706. This motion alleged that Mr. Siegel was no longer disinterested and therefore ineligible to serve as trustee, because he had negotiated for a loan from the McNall estate to fund the running of the insolvent Sherwood estates. SER Exh. 7, Page 9. The motion was denied and is on appeal to the district court. Jasmine and Ablon assert that the disputed facts alleged in this motion, which facts did not even occur until after the hearing on sanctions, should be taken into account when considering whether the court abused its discretion by ordering sanctions based on its finding that there was no factual basis for the motion at issue here.

VI.

THE COURT DID NOT ABUSE ITS DISCRETION IN AWARDING RULE 9011 SANCTIONS AGAINST APPELLANTS

Pursuant to former FRBP 9011, as it read at the time of appellants' August 1996 motion,[9/] the signing and filing of a pleading constitutes a certification that the pleading is "well grounded in fact and is warranted by existing law or a good faith argument for the extension, modification, or reversal of existing law; and that is not interposed for any improper purpose, such as to harass or to cause unnecessary delay or

---

[8/] A complete exposition of the facts regarding the second removal motion is set forth in the motion of Gumport, Reitman & Montgomery to dismiss this appeal. As discussed below, the United States Trustee believes that Jasmine's subsequent motion of March 2, 1998, has no legal bearing on the propriety of the sanctions imposed in response to Jasmine's unfounded motion of August 15, 1996, which is the only order currently on appeal here.

[9/] In December 1997, after the events that are the subject of this appeal, Rule 9011 was amended to more closely track Rule 11, which had been amended in 1993.

needless increase in the cost of litigation or administration of the case." FRBP 9011.

In determining whether Rule 9011 has been violated, "courts must consider both frivolousness and improper purpose on a sliding scale, where the more compelling the showing as to one element, the less decisive need be the showing as to the other." In re Marsch, 36 F.3d 825, 830 (9th Cir. 1994).

Here, Jasmine and Ablon filed a motion on August 15, 1996, that was devoid of factual or legal basis and did so for the purpose of trying to assert improper influence over these bankruptcy cases. Facts that occurred after the motion was filed, even if sufficient to warrant the removal of the trustee, cannot change the fact that Jasmine and Ablon filed the 1996 motion for an improper purpose, with no facts to support it.

A. THE MOTION HAD NO FACTUAL BASIS

Contrary to Jasmine and Ablon's assertions, the motion they filed was completely devoid of admissible factual support. Rather, their motion was based on supposition, innuendo and speculation. Suggesting that the bankruptcy court had improperly taken part in the selection of the trustee, the motion erroneously asserted in footnote 1 that the “procedure leading to the appointment of Siegel was highly irregular” because the “Order not only directed the appointment of a trustee by also appointed Siegel as trustee.” AER 2:94, footnote 1.

The motion also alleged that the selection of Mr. Siegel had been “vetted” by the felonious Mr. McNall, that Siegel was “beholden” to Wynne and Gumport, that because of that he would ignore his fiduciary duties and “not be likely to assert the claims of Sherwood against either Bruce McNall or the McNall Bankruptcy Estate.” AER 2:98. There was no factual basis for these allegations. Nonetheless, Jasmine and Ablon assert that based on these unsupported “facts,” Siegel had an impermissible conflict that Jasmine’s concerns should have been reported to the court.

Jasmine and Ablon have acknowledged the falsity of the allegation that the procedure leading to the appointment was irregular. AER 3:354-355. The very exhibits attached to Jasmine and Ablon's motion demonstrate the falsity of the allegation.[10] Jasmine and Ablon suggest that they bear no responsibility for the accusation in footnote 1 because it appears to have been added to the motion by outside counsel, Leslie Cohen (AER 3:355, lines 8-20; 420). Yet that claim does not relieve Jasmine and Ablon of their responsibility to investigate the accuracy of their motion, especially where, as here, a simple reading of their exhibits would have shown the unfounded allegations of footnote 1 to be false.

[10] The order on Sherwood's stipulation for the appointment of a trustee was entered on July 12, 1996, and merely ordered the United States Trustee to appoint a chapter 11 trustee, but did not name a specific trustee. AER 2:115-118. The application for an order approving the appointment of Mr. Siegel was filed in August 6, 1996. AER 2:110. Both of these documents were attached to the motion to vacate and clearly demonstrate the falsity of the assertion in footnote 1 that "the Order not only directed the appointment of a trustee by also appointed Siegel at Trustee." AER 2:94, footnote 1.

The other allegations contained in the 1996 motion are similarly without merit. Although the motion purports to be supported by Goldin's declaration, a review of that declaration reveals no facts to support the allegations that Siegel was vetted by McNall, that Siegel was beholden to McNall or that he would not assert Sherwood's claims against McNall. As noted by the court, the declaration is "completely unsupported, hearsay and speculation." AER 2:276, lines 19-23. Indeed, the court sustained the evidentiary objections filed by counsel for Mr. Siegel, leaving the motion without even the unsupported allegations asserted in the Goldin declaration. That evidentiary ruling has never been appealed from. There is not one concrete piece of evidence to support these allegations of impropriety on behalf of any of the participants.[11/] Even a cursory

[11/] Appellants' repeated invocation of Bruce McNall's criminal conduct is disingenuous. No one disputes that Mr. McNall is a convicted felon. However, despite Jasmine and Ablon's suggestions, McNall's criminal conduct cannot be imputed either to Mr. Wynne, McNall's counsel, or to Mr. Neilson, the trustee of his reading of the motion and declaration should have alerted Jasmine and Ablon to the lack of factual basis.

Notwithstanding the lack of evidence, this motion was filed alleging gross improprieties on the part of the court, the trustee, the United States Trustee, McNall, Wynne, Neilson and Gumport. Making such allegations without any factual basis or any investigation into their truth is at the very least reckless. Jasmine and Ablon were properly held accountable for their actions. Our judicial system does not allow participants to make wild, untrue and baseless allegations of improper conduct without suffering the consequences. Rule 11 was enacted for just this purpose in response to concerns that abusive litigation practices abounded in the federal courts. Cooter & Gell v. Hartmarx Corporation, 496 U.S. 384, 393, 110 L.Ed.2d 359, 110 S.Ct. 2447, 2454. "It is now clear that the central purpose of Rule 11 is to deter baseless filing in district court . . . .” Id.[12]

B. THE MOTION HAD NO LEGAL BASIS

The motion was styled as a motion to terminate or vacate the appointment of the trustee, but no supporting bankruptcy code section or procedural rule was cited.

Termination of a trustee appointment is governed by 11 U.S.C. §1105, which provides in relevant part that at the request of a party in interest the court “may terminate the trustee’s appointment and restore the debtor in possession and management of the property of the estate and of the operation of the debtor’s business.” If the trustee were terminated under this provision, the control of these estates would devolve to Mr. McNall. Clearly this is not the result intended by Jasmine and Ablon.

[12] Federal Rule of Civil Procedure 11 was amended in 1993. The pre-amendment Rule is essentially the same as the version of Rule 9011 in effect at the time of the hearing. Cases construing the pre-1993 Rule 11 are relevant to construing Rule 9011. In re Soll, 181 B.R. 433, 446 footnote 37 (Bankr. D. Ariz. 1995).

Similarly, 11 U.S.C. §324 provides that a trustee can only be removed for cause. Jasmine and Ablon concede that Siegel had not engaged in any misconduct and that no cause existed for his removal. AER 3:353. Rather, Jasmine and Ablon assert that the United States Trustee omitted "material facts in the Application for the Order Approving Appointment of Trustee." AER 3:353. As noted, however, the claimed omission is not material and does not give rise to a legal basis for the motion.[13]

Jasmine and Ablon argue that FRBP 2007.1 required the United States Trustee to include Jasmine in the list of parties consulted and an exposition of Jasmine's opposition to Siegel. This argument ignores the plain language of Rule 2007.1, which requires only the names of the parties in interest consulted, not the substance

[13] The fact that the court did not remove the trustee once it was aware of the "evidence" that Jasmine presented to the United States Trustee affirms the assertion that the information was not material to whether the court would have approved the appointment of Mr. Siegel as trustee.

of the consultation. Even if Jasmine had been listed,[14] its position regarding the trustee nominees would not have been set forth because the rule does not contemplate that sort of disclosure and it is the United States Trustee's practice to list only the names of "parties in interest consulted."[15]

In any event, even if such information is contemplated by Rule 2007.1, and such information was omitted, the omission is material only if it is true. As we have seen, allegations of Siegel's conflict were made of whole cloth and entirely without merit. Jasmine

[14] It is not disputed that at the time of the discussions with Jasmine, the United States Trustee had not been informed that Jasmine claimed to be a creditor, but only that it hoped to obtain an equity interest in Sherwood. AER 2:238, paragraph 7. This expectancy does not make Jasmine a party in interest, even under the expansive definition urged by Jasmine and Ablon, and for that reason Jasmine was not listed among the parties consulted.

[15] See, e.g., 11 U.S.C. §1109(b): "A party in interest, including the debtor, the trustee, a creditor's committee, an equity security holders' committee, a creditor, an equity security holder, or any indenture trustee, may raise and may appear and be heard on any issue in a case under this chapter."

and Ablon can only have a colorable legal basis for their motion if it has a factual basis. Jasmine and Ablon apparently concede the motion as filed had no factual basis because they now insist that conduct that occurred <ins>after</ins> the 1996 motion was filed must be considered in determining whether their conduct is sanctionable.

Jasmine and Ablon assert that the award of sanctions was an abuse of discretion because they were entitled to bring their “legitimate” concerns about Mr. Siegel’s “conflicts” to the attention of the court. This argument fails because it is premised on the faulty assumptions that the concerns were legitimate and that there were in fact conflicts. This is the very assumption that the court determined was without any basis when it denied Jasmine’s motion and awarded opposing parties sanctions of $10,550. Failure of the factual basis necessarily results in failure of the legal basis as well.

C. THE MOTION WAS FILED FOR AN IMPROPER PURPOSE

Jasmine’s dealings with the United States Trustee are sufficient to demonstrate that the motion was filed for an improper purpose. Jasmine and Ablon purport to have been “astounded” that anyone nominated by McNall or Neilson would be appointed trustee. That position is wholly without merit and exhibits a fundamental misunderstanding of the trustee-appointment process. The parties in interest consulted regarding the appointment of a trustee are usually creditors and the debtors and often have their own concerns. If potential trustees were eliminated because the party suggesting them had a potential conflict, the consultation requirement would be a nullity and an absurdity. It is totally disingenuous for Jasmine and Ablon to express outrage at Siegel’s appointment.

While there is no evidence that any party engaged in improper manipulation regarding Siegel’s appointment, it is undisputed that Jasmine and Ablon manipulated the process by concealing the fact that Jasmine was represented by Leslie Cohen in order to attempt to convince the United States Trustee to appoint her partner, Larry Diamant, as trustee in these cases. AER 3:374. This evidence alone is sufficient for the court to find an improper purpose, warranting the sanctions imposed.

D. BOTH JASMINE AND ABLON FAILED TO UNDERTAKE A REASONABLE INQUIRY INTO THE FACTUAL OR LEGAL BASIS FOR THEIR MOTION

Neither Jasmine or Ablon undertook a reasonable inquiry into the truth of their allegations. Jasmine and Ablon defend their actions by arguing that they obtained as much information as they could, given the fact that the motion was filed so quickly. Even if the need to act quickly could justify the filing of a legally and factually unsupported motion, there was no such need here. There was no time sensitivity to the motion. There is no rule requiring that their motion be brought within any specified time frame.

Nonetheless, Jasmine and Ablon argue they needed to bring the motion quickly “before [Siegel] could take any action as the Sherwood Companies’ Trustee that would implicate the conflicts of interest that concerned Appellants.” Appellant’s Opening Brief, Page 36. Jasmine and Ablon do not and cannot explain what this action might be. In fact, this argument is disingenuous. The alleged conflict is that Siegel would fail to take actions against McNall and the McNall bankruptcy because he was “beholden” to McNall and Neilson. How could the threat of non-action create a time constraint for the motion? The argument is logically nonsensical at best.

Because of this manufactured time constraint, Jasmine and Ablon now assert that they necessarily had to move based on limited information. The information they decided was sufficient was that McNall engaged in fraud, Sherwood had claims against McNall and Siegel was “nominated and ‘vetted’ by McNall’s representatives.” Appellant’s Opening Brief, Page 14. They assert that was reasonable because of “extensive” information Goldin had obtained regarding McNall and his related entities during the course of other litigation. But all this information is irrelevant to the motion they brought accusing the judge, the United States Trustee, Neilson, Gumport, and Wynne of improper conduct. It is these false allegations that warranted sanctions, not anything the motion had to say about McNall himself. They do not even pretend to have made a reasonable inquiry regarding the allegations they made in the motion. It is clear from Jasmine and Ablon’s brief that the motion was based solely on the bare fact that Wynne and Gumport were listed as the parties consulted prior to the trustee appointment.[16/]

As noted above, the false allegation contained in footnote 1 was contradicted by Jasmine and Ablon’s own exhibits. It is patently unreasonable for them to have failed to read their own exhibits and thereby ascertain that the allegation was false.

[16/] The fact that Jasmine and Ablon’s assumption that Siegel was suggested by the parties consulted was incorrect, and that Gumport alone suggested Mr. Siegel as trustee, means that McNall’s representative did not even suggest Mr. Siegel, much less “vet” him.

The purpose of Rule 11 is to “bring home to the individual signer his personal, nondelegable responsibility . . . to validate the truth and legal reasonableness of the papers filed.” Pavelic & LeFlore, 493 U.S. 120, 126, 107 L.Ed.2d 438, 460, 110 S.Ct. 456 (1989). Similarly, “a represented party who signs his or her name bears a personal, nondelegable responsibility to certify the truth and reasonableness of the document.” Business Guides, Inc. v. Chromatic Communications Enterprises, Inc., 498 U.S. 533,547, 112 L.Ed.2d 1140. 111 S.Ct 922, 931 (1990).

Jasmine and Ablon cannot escape this responsibility by asserting they were unfamiliar with bankruptcy proceedings and that it was reasonable for them therefore to delegate their personal responsibility to file truthful pleadings on a third party (Lesley Cohen) who did not sign the pleadings and who they do not even claim had done her own legal or factual investigation.

Indeed, a review of Ms. Cohen's notations on the draft motion reveals that she questioned whether there was more evidence to support the motion. AER 3:416-427.

Finally, Jasmine and Ablon assert that their own subjective intent was not to file a baseless motion for an improper purpose. This, however, is not the test. Rather, as Jasmine and Ablon themselves argue, the court imposes an objective standard with regard to both the question of frivolity and improper purpose. In re Soll, 181 B.R. 433, 447 (Bankr. Ariz. 1995). "Sanctions [should] be assessed if the paper . . . filed . . . [was] frivolous, legally unreasonable or without factual foundation, even though the paper was not filed in subjective bad faith." Id., quoting Zaldivar v. City of Los Angeles, 780 F.2d 823 (9th Cir., 1986).

E. JASMINE AND ABLON'S DUE PROCESS ARGUMENT IS WITHOUT MERIT

Jasmine and Ablon also suggest that the court denied them due process and a forum to challenge Siegel's appointment. They assert that they had a due process right to bring their concerns to the court’s attention. And they are right. If that is all they had done, there would be no foul and no sanctions order. But that is not all they did. Their 1996 motion contained numerous untrue, unsupported allegations of misconduct that neither Jasmine or Ablon made any attempt to verify. That is why sanctions were ordered, and properly so.

It is not true that the court denied Jasmine and Ablon’s right to be heard. The court did nothing of the kind. The motion was heard and denied. It is clear from the transcript that the court considered the merits of the motion, determined the motion was unfounded and unsupported and denied the motion on the merits. The award of sanctions was not for filing the motion per se, but rather for filing a frivolous motion for an improper purpose. Jasmine and Ablon have cited no authority, nor can they, for the proposition that they have a due process right to file frivolous motions for an improper purpose.

F. THE QUESTION OF JASMINE’S STANDING IS NOT

RELEVANT

Jasmine and Ablon assert that the bankruptcy court was incorrect when it determined that Jasmine had no standing to object to the trustee appointment in the Preamble Music, Inc., D and P Productions, Inc., and Amble Music, Inc. cases. The court acknowledged that Jasmine had standing in the Sherwood case, and considered Jasmine's 1996 motion on the merits. The standing question, however, is irrelevant because it has no bearing on whether the court abused its discretion by ordering sanctions against Jasmine and Ablon. Irrespective of the standing issue, the dispositive issue on the sanctions order is the fact that Jasmine and Ablon filed a motion that was not properly researched and was full of misstatements of fact. In any event, it is clear from the record that the court did not decide the matter on the standing issue but rather considered the merits of the motion and found it to be baseless. AER 2:279; AER 3:465-470.

G. THE AMOUNTS OF THE SANCTIONS AWARDS ARE APPROPRIATE

For the first time in this appeal, Jasmine and Ablon challenge the amount of the sanctions award or even whether monetary sanctions were appropriate. It is well settled that arguments raised for the first time on appeal are not properly before the appellate court. United States v. Carlson, 900 F.2d 1346, 1349 (9th Cir. 1990). Given that Jasmine and Ablon made unsupported allegations impugning the integrity of the court and the United States Trustee, the amount of sanctions awarded does not seem inappropriate to deter future improper conduct.[17/]

VII.

[17/] The amount of sanctions was not arbitrarily arrived at but was based on the amount that would serve as a deterrence and limited to the costs incurred by aggrieved parties. The total amount of the sanctions ordered was $10,630 payable jointly and severally by Jasmine and Ablon to the four appellees, pro rated over the four bankruptcy estates: $3,000 to the United States Trustee, $2,000 to Wynn Spiegel Itkin, $1,080 to Gumport, Reitman & Montgomery, and $4,550 to Weinstein & Eisen. The amount due to each appellee was based on their costs in defending the unfounded motion and is supported by declarations regarding those costs.

FACTS ALLEGED TO HAVE OCCURRED AFTER JASMINE AND ABLON FILED THEIR MOTION CANNOT PROVIDE FACTUAL SUPPORT FOR THE MOTION

Apparently recognizing that the 1996 motion that is the subject of this appeal was without factual support when it was filed, Jasmine and Ablon have made several attempts to convince the Bankruptcy Appellate Panel and this court that facts that occurred after they filed their motion can somehow remedy the lack of factual support for the motion. This argument fails because the question of whether a motion is frivolous is determined by the facts that existed as of the time the motion was signed. Even if the court could somehow bootstrap subsequent events to provide the factual basis for the motion, the facts alleged here provide no such support.

A. CONDUCT ALLEGED TO HAVE OCCURRED AFTER THE HEARING GRANTING SANCTIONS CANNOT BE CONSIDERED BY THIS COURT IN DETERMINING WHETHER THE BANKRUPTCY COURT ABUSED HER DISCRETION BY

AWARDING SANCTIONS

Pursuant to Federal Rule of Appellate Procedure 10 and Ninth Circuit Rule 10-2, record on appeal shall consist of the “original papers and exhibits filed in the district court, the transcript of proceedings, if any, and a certified copy of the docket entries prepared by the clerk of the district court. . . .” Numerous cases have held, in accordance with that rule, that the record on appeal cannot be augmented by evidence that was not before the court at the time it ruled on the order appealed from. United States v. Walker, 601 F.2d 1051, 1954-55 (9th Cir. 1979) (Rule 10(e) cannot be used to augment record on appeal to include material not before the district court); Kirshner v. Uniden Corp. of America, 842 F.2d 1074, 1077-78 (9th Cir. 1988) (evidence neither filed with the district court, considered by the district court, nor even before the court when it ruled was stricken from the record on appeal).

In judging whether a motion was frivolous when made, no other rule would make any sense. As Jasmine and Ablon concede in their opening brief, at footnote 14 on page 27, in assessing whether a person signing a pleading has met the obligations imposed by Rule 11, the court applies the "snapshot" rule, measuring the complained of conduct "as of the time of the signing." Federal Deposit Insurance Corporation, 34 F.3d 1291, 1296 (5th Cir. 1994). Jasmine and Ablon do not attempt to present any legal argument to justify their assertion that this court should determine the propriety of the bankruptcy court's ruling on facts that were not before it and that had not occurred at the time the sanctions order was made.[18/] Jasmine and Ablon do not explain how facts that had not even occurred at the time the court ruled can supply support for the motion they filed almost two months earlier.

[18/] The assertion made by Jasmine and Ablon that Mr. Siegel's counsel contacted Mr. Neilson's counsel "well before the filing of the motion to vacate" [Appellant's Opening Brief, Page 16] is not true. The motion to vacate was filed on August 15, 1996, which is clearly not after October 4, 1996, the date the contact was made.

Jasmine and Ablon cite In re Fegert, Inc., 887 F.2d 955 (9th Cir. 1989) for the proposition that "intermediate appellate courts may consider any issue supported by the record," including the file in the underlying case. Id. at 957-58. However, Fegert does not stand for the proposition that intermediate appellate courts are free to consider facts that did not exist at the time the lower court ruled. In Fegert, the issue was whether in an appeal of a decision in an adversary proceeding, the appellate court could decide an issue not decided by the bankruptcy court. The Ninth Circuit noted that the issue was before the bankruptcy court, even if not decided by it, and the factual basis to decide the issue was before the bankruptcy court, at least in the record of the underlying bankruptcy case. The case dealt only with facts and issues that existed at the time the bankruptcy court ruled. It does not provide support for Jasmine and Ablon's remarkable contention that Post hoc facts can be considered by this Court in determining whether the bankruptcy court abused its discretion in imposing sanctions for the unfounded 1996 motion.

B. EVEN IF THIS COURT CONSIDERS THE EVIDENCE PRESENTED IN THE SECOND MOTION TO REMOVE THE TRUSTEE, THE BANKRUPTCY COURT'S DECISION SHOULD BE AFFIRMED

Jasmine and Ablon try to convince this court to ratify their sanctionable conduct by proving that, although ungrounded at the time they filed their first motion, their suspicions proved to be true. But their suspicions did not, in fact, prove to be true. They assert that their suspicions were borne out by the "fact" that Mr. Siegel had "secretly" negotiated a loan from the bankruptcy estate of one of the principals of the debtor against whom the trustee had filed a $97 million proof of claim. That this negotiation provided proof that Mr. Siegel now had a conflict of interest is alleged to be inferred from the "fact" of the trustee's "failure to investigate the claims held by the Sherwood Estates against the McNall Estates (proposed lender). . ..” Appellant’s Opening Brief, Page 28.

Again, these allegations are unsupported by the facts. First, the Sherwood estate never borrowed any money from the McNall estate; second, the contemplated loan was not secret because it would not have gone forward without the express approval of the court; third, as Appellant acknowledged to the court, there is no legal authority to support its contention that negotiations for the loan constituted a conflict of interest requiring Siegel to be removed as trustee; fourth, Appellants’ supposed proof that Mr. Siegel had a conflict of interest consisted of arguments already made to the court and a course of action already approved by the court. As a result, the court denied Jasmine’s 1998 motion to remove Siegel as trustee.

Most important is, of course, that none of these facts existed at the time Jasmine and Ablon filed its 1996 motion to terminate or vacate Siegel’s appointment as trustee.

VIII.

CONCLUSION

The court’s decision to order sanctions in this case was not a close call. Rather, as the court noted, she found “these motions among the most outrageous [she had] entertained in 11 years on the bench.” AER 2:284, lines 20-22. For this reason and the reasons cited above, the 1996 award of sanctions should be affirmed.

Attorney for Amicus Curiae the United States

COMES NOW, Roberta A. DeAngelis, the United States Trustee for Region 3 and a United States Department of Justice official, 28 U.S.C. § 581(a)(3), and respectfully submits this amicus curiae brief in support of defendant.[1] For the reasons set forth below, the United States has an interest in the outcome of this case and respectfully suggests that dismissal is the appropriate resolution of this matter.

INTEREST OF THE UNITED STATES AS AMICUS CURIAE

This case presents the question whether a chapter 7 debtor, whose bankruptcy case was dismissed in the bankruptcy court, may obtain substantive review of that dismissal in this Court by filing a "Motion for Temporary Restraining Order or in the Alternative a Preliminary Injunction / Order to Compel Response to Notice of Appeal from a Judgment of U.S. Bankruptcy Court" instead of a direct appeal under 28 U.S.C. § 158(a). The United States has a direct interest in the resolution of that question because United States Trustees — who are Department of Justice officials appointed by the Attorney General — supervise the administration of bankruptcy cases. See 28 U.S.C. §§ 581-589a; H.R. Rep. No. 595, 95th Cong., 1st Sess. 88 (1977). Congress has provided that "any officer of the Department of Justice[] may be sent by the Attorney General to any State or district in the United States to attend to the interests of the

[1] Although the Federal Rules of Civil Procedure do not contain a Rule that addresses appearances of amicus curiae, the procedures in Rule 29 of the Federal Rules of Appellate Procedure provide helpful guidance. See Fed. R. App. P. 29. Under Fed. R. App. P. 29(a), the "United States or its officer or agency . . . may file an amicus-curiae brief without the consent of the parties or leave of court." If this Court should require a motion for leave for the United States to appear as amicus curiae, the United States respectfully requests that this brief be construed as a motion for leave to file and that such leave be granted — as this brief addresses the two requirements set forth in Fed. R. App. P. 29(b) for motions for leave, including "(1) the movant's interest; and (2) the reason why an amicus brief is desirable and why the matters asserted are relevant to the disposition of the case." BACKGROUND

Mr. Simmons' Chapter 7 Bankruptcy

This case's procedural history began in the bankruptcy court. In February 2010, the plaintiff, Robert E. Simmons, filed a voluntary chapter 7 bankruptcy petition in the United States Bankruptcy Court for the Eastern District of Pennsylvania. See In re Robert E. Simmons, No. 10-10989-sr (Bankr. E.D. Pa. Feb. 9, 2010) (hereafter cited as "Simmons Bankruptcy") Dkt. 1 (attached hereto as Exhibit A). The case was assigned to Chief Bankruptcy Judge Stephen Raslavich.

Rule 1007 of the Federal Rules of Bankruptcy Procedure requires a bankruptcy debtor to file certain schedules, statements and documents. See Fed. R. Bankr. P. 1007(b). One such required document is a statement of compliance with 11 U.S.C. § 109(h), which requires [2] Indeed, this Court may determine that an appearance by the United States as amicus curiae is desirable because the defendant, the Chief United States Bankruptcy Judge for the Eastern District of Pennsylvania, would be under no obligation to appear in this action. That is, if plaintiff Simmons' petition to this Court is construed as a mandamus petition, the Third Circuit has long held that "the judge below, although named as a respondent, shall be deemed a nominal party only and the prevailing parties in the challenged decision shall be deemed to be respondents and permitted to answer the petition." Rapp v. Van Dusen, 350 F.2d 806, 812-13 (3d Cir. 1965). This holding is consistent with the current version of Fed. R. App. P. 21, governing writs of mandamus. See, e.g., Fed. R. App. P. 21(b)(4) ("The trial-court judge may request permission to address the petition but may not do so unless invited or ordered to do so by the court of appeals.").

individual debtors to undergo pre-petition credit counseling. This district's Local Bankruptcy Rule 1007-2 also requires debtors to file a "matrix" listing creditors. The bankruptcy court ordered Mr. Simmons to file various missing documents — including various bankruptcy schedules and a statement of compliance with credit counseling. See Simmons Bankruptcy Dkt. 5 (attached hereto as Exhibit B). The court warned Mr. Simmons that if he did not file all missing documents, "this case may be dismissed without additional notice or hearing." Id. And, indeed, after Mr. Simmons did not file the missing documents, the bankruptcy court dismissed his case on February 18, 2010. See Simmons Bankruptcy Dkt. 9 (attached hereto as Exhibit C). The bankruptcy case was closed.

More than 14 days after the bankruptcy court entered its order of dismissal, Mr. Simmons filed a document styled as a "Notice of Appeal." Simmons Bankruptcy Dkt. 12 (attached hereto as Exhibit D).[3] In that document, Mr. Simmons emphasized that he was a pro se inmate in a state penal institution, without access to "bankruptcy information," and without the means to obtain credit counseling. Id. He pleaded with the bankruptcy court to "Reverse it's decision and allow my Bankruptcy Petition to Proceed and to not hold me to the same standards of one being represented by counsel, and not as a Prisoner." Id. at p. 2.

[3] This timing is significant because, under 28 U.S.C. § 158(c)(2), an appellate court has jurisdiction to consider an appeal from a bankruptcy court only if the appeal is taken "in the time provided by Rule 8002 of the Bankruptcy Rules." 28 U.S.C. § 158(c)(2). Under Rule 8002(a), a notice of appeal must be filed within 14 days of the date of entry of the order appealed. When a time period for perfecting a timely notice of appeal is set forth in a statute — such as 28 U.S.C. § 158(c)(2)'s requirement of adherence to the time periods in Bankruptcy Rule 8002 — the time period is jurisdictional. See Bowles v. Russell, 551 U.S. 205, 213 (2007). Accordingly, Mr. Simmons' untimely notice of appeal could not have been effective to perfect an appeal from the first dismissal of his bankruptcy case. Compare Exhibit C (dismissal entered 02/18/2010), with Exhibit D ("notice of appeal" filed 03/17/2010).

The bankruptcy court construed Mr. Simmons' untimely "Notice of Appeal" as a motion for reconsideration and granted it. The court's order instructed Mr. Simmons to file a Matrix List of Creditors as required by Local Bankruptcy Rule 1007-2, and included instructions for how to format and file the matrix. Simmons Bankruptcy Dkt. 13 (attached hereto as Exhibit E). Further, the court warned Mr. Simmons to file the matrix no later than April 15, 2010. Id. When Mr. Simmons failed to file any additional documents, the bankruptcy court dismissed the case again on April 27, 2010. Simmons Bankruptcy Dkt. 15 (attached hereto as Exhibit F). Mr. Simmons did not file a notice of appeal from the second order of dismissal.

Mr. Simmons' Petition to This Court

Instead of filing a notice of appeal from the second dismissal of his bankruptcy case, Mr. Simmons initiated a new proceeding in this Court by filing a "Motion for Temporary Restraining Order or in the Alternative a Preliminary Injunction / Order to Compel Response to Notice of Appeal from a Judgment of U.S. Bankruptcy Court." Dkt. 1 (filed 05/28/2010). The petition named Chief Bankruptcy Judge Stephen Raslavich as defendant. Attached to the petition is the "Notice of Appeal" that Mr. Simmons filed in the bankruptcy court on March 17, 2010. See Dkt. 1 ("Plaintiff's Exhibit Marked A"). Mr. Simmons requests that the bankruptcy court be ordered to take action on the "Notice of Appeal." See Dkt. 1, ¶¶ 1, 4, 6, 7, 9.

As of the date of this filing, no other parties have appeared in this case, and no other documents have been filed on the docket.

ARGUMENT

As amicus curiae, the United States respectfully suggests that this case should be dismissed with prejudice for at least two reasons. First, this case is moot because Mr. Simmons has already been granted all the relief that he requests. Second, to the extent that — as the United States contends — Mr. Simmons' petition is construed as a mandamus petition, relief is unavailable because he could have, but did not, pursue a timely appeal.

A. This case is moot because the bankruptcy court already acted upon Mr. Simmons' "Notice of Appeal" and granted him the relief that he presently requests.

Based on the documents available on the bankruptcy court's docket, Mr. Simmons' substantive request is moot because the bankruptcy court already granted him the relief he seeks in his petition to this Court. The relief that Mr. Simmons seeks is found in paragraph one of his petition:

> Simmons submits this Motion for T.R.O./Preliminary Injunction/order to Compel Response that seeks to Compel the Hon. Stephen Raslavich, Chief Judge sitting in the U.S. Bankruptcy Court for the Eastern District of Penn., to Process and respond to Simmons' 'Notice of Appeal', filed with that court [o]n March 11th, 2010.

Dkt. 1 at p. 2, ¶ 1. But the bankruptcy court already did "process and respond to Simmons' 'Notice of Appeal.' " Id. The bankruptcy court construed the notice as a motion for reconsideration, reopened Mr. Simmons' bankruptcy case, and granted him more time to file the required documents — even enclosing instructions for how to fill out and submit the creditor matrix form required by local rule. Simmons Bankruptcy Dkt. 13 (attached hereto as Exhibit E). Although Mr. Simmons asks this Court to order the bankruptcy court to act upon his "notice of appeal," no further relief can be had when the only requested relief — that the bankruptcy court "process and respond to Simmons' 'Notice of Appeal' " — was granted already. Accordingly, Mr. Simmons' petition is moot and should be dismissed. See, e.g., In re Huertas, 322 F. App'x 174, 175, 2009 WL 1028044, *1 (3d Cir. April 17, 2009) (holding that a writ of mandamus seeking to compel the district court to rule upon certain motions was moot because the district court had ruled upon said motions); In re Shemonsky, 239 F. App'x 770, 771, 2007 WL 2510705, *1 (3d Cir. Sept. 6, 2007) (dismissing as moot appeals from the denial of motions to proceed in forma pauperis because the circuit court granted IFP status and therefore the appellant "has now been granted the relief he sought").

B. Alternatively, Mr. Simmons' pleading is properly construed as a mandamus petition, and mandamus relief cannot lie where appellate relief is available or could have been pursued.

Mr. Simmons' filing in this Court seeks an order compelling the bankruptcy court to take action on a particular pleading. The United States suggests that Mr. Simmons' petition is properly construed as a mandamus petition. See, e.g., In re Simon, 342 F. App'x 816, 817, 2009 WL 2526162, *1 (3d Cir. Aug. 13, 2009) (construing a pro se prisoner's letter complaining of "delay in the judicial system" as a petition for a writ of mandamus under 28 U.S.C. § 1651). The relief requested by Mr. Simmons — a request for a directive that a lower court rule on a motion or pleading — traditionally falls within the realm of mandamus. See generally In re Huertas, 322 F. App'x 174, 174, 2009 WL 1028044, *1 (3d Cir. April 17, 2009) (petition for a writ of mandamus seeking to compel the United States District Court for the District of New Jersey to decide several motions); In re Porter, 193 F. App'x 166, 167, 2006 WL 2560746, *1 (3d Cir. Sept. 6, 2006) (a mandamus petition seeking to compel the United States District Court for the Western District of Pennsylvania to direct the assigned magistrate judge to rule on a motion). Accordingly, by all appearances, Mr. Simmons' "Motion for Temporary Restraining Order or in the Alternative a Preliminary Injunction / Order to Compel Response to Notice of Appeal from a Judgment of U.S. Bankruptcy Court" is properly construed as a mandamus petition.

To the extent that Mr. Simmons' pleading is construed as a mandamus petition, it should be denied because mandamus relief is not available where appellate relief could have been pursued. As discussed above, the bankruptcy court acted upon Mr. Simmons' "Notice of Appeal" filing and reopened the bankruptcy case — giving Mr. Simmons another chance to file the required forms to enable the court to process his case. When Mr. Simmons persisted in not filing the required forms — despite the bankruptcy court's inclusion of an instruction sheet on how to correctly file — the bankruptcy court dismissed his case again. Simmons Bankruptcy Dkt. 15 (attached hereto as Exhibit F).

If, by his current petition, Mr. Simmons seeks more than just a ruling on his self-styled "Notice of Appeal," but instead reversal of the bankruptcy court's order of dismissal, reinstatement of his bankruptcy case, permission to forego filing the required forms, or some other remedy, relief is unavailable to him. Mr. Simmons could have perfected a timely appeal from the second order of dismissal, but he did not. Mandamus relief does not lie where appellate relief is available. In re Chambers Development Co., Inc., 148 F.3d 214, 223 (3d Cir. 1998) ("Given its drastic nature, a writ of mandamus should not be issued where relief may be obtained through an ordinary appeal."). Nor can mandamus be a substitute for a properly perfected appeal or a cure for a missed appeal deadline. In re Riviere, 249 F. App'x 272, 274, 2007 WL 2859986, 1 (3d Cir. 2007) ("Any claim that the District Court misconstrued his motions should have been raised in an otherwise proper and timely appeal to this Court and not in a mandamus petition."). An order of dismissal is a final, appealable order under 28 U.S.C. § 158(a)(1). See, e.g., Cadle Co. v. Zofko, 380 B.R. 375, 377 (W.D. Pa. 2007) (concluding that a bankruptcy court's order dismissing a complaint in a chapter 7 bankruptcy case was final and appealable under 28 U.S.C. § 158(a)(1)). Because Mr. Simmons could have sought to appeal the second order of dismissal in his bankruptcy case, but did not, he cannot utilize mandamus as an end-run, and his petition can be denied on this ground.

CONCLUSION

For all of the foregoing reasons, the United States, as amicus curiae, respectfully suggests that dismissal is the appropriate resolution of this case.

NOTICE OF APPEAL

RE: #: 10-10989-sr

Appeal being taken from order of this Court to; Dismiss For Failure to File Information.

RELEVANT HISTORY

This Appeal is sought as a result of this Courts error in determining that I failed to 'File Information'.

However, I sent all the forms that were relevant to my case. I also sent a Cover Letter, making it Crystal Clear that I am and will continue to be a 'Prisoner', incarcerated in a State Prison here in Waymart, PA. Where I do not have access to Bankruptcy information, nore am I able to determine that I have not filed all the pertinent documentation.

To my knowledge, I had filed and sent the Court the, 'Waiver From The Credit Counseling Requirement'. Where on the form I clearly stated that I do not, will not, be able to comply with this requirement. Again, I AM AN INMATE, CURRENTLY INCARCERATED IN A STATE PENAL INSTITUTION, WHERE I DO NOT NOW OR WILL I IN THE NEAR FUTURE HAVE ACCESS TO OR BE ALLOWED TO ACCESS THOSE SERVICES-PERIOD!!

I sent a list of my Creditors with my filings, as well as a statement of my monthly income from my inmate employment here at the prison. (I have no other source of income).

I did not send Schedules G,H,I,J, because there are no Excutory Contracts and Unexpired Leases(G). No Codebtors(H). No Current Income of Individual Debtors(I). And No Current Expenditures of Individual Deptor(J). The information required on these forms do not pertain to me and they would be Blank Forms that I would send to you.

This Petition was filed with the hope that this Court would be Cognizance of the fact of my status (Pro Se, Prisoner) and act accordingly.

NOTICE OF APPEAL (con'ted)

Where I do not have any legal training or expertise, and if this Courts rules are so rigid/stringent where this prevents all but bankruptcy attorneys from it's utilization, how are ordinary citizens to access it? Do my status as a Prisoner bar my access to this Court?

THEREFORE I respectfully ask that this Honorable Court Reverse it's decision and allow my Bankruptcy Petition to Proceed and to not hold me to the same standards of one being represented by counsel, and not as a Prisoner.

Respectifully Submitted,

Creditors Matrix Format Requirements

In order to ensure that the cases you file can be properly read by the optical scanner, we ask that you observe the following guidelines:

Matrix must be typed in one of the following standard fonts, in a 10- or 12-point size:

- Courier
- Courier New
- CG Times
- Letter Gothic

Use upper and lower case letters (capital and small letters). Do not use all capital letters.

Nine-digit ZIP codes should be typed with a hyphen separating the two groups of digits.

Things to Avoid:

- attorney for debtor(s)
- account number
- attention line
- page numbers

Extra marks: letterhead, dates, coffee stains, handwritten marks, lines, symbols, etc.

Non-standard paper: onion skin, half-sized paper, colored paper.

Poor quality type, unreadable fonts or print styles: photocopy, carbon, exotic fonts, proportionally-spaced fonts, script fonts, non-office quality printer (dot-matrix print with less than 360 dpi).

Misarranged list: paper incorrectly inserted into the printer causing list to be skewed.

Text attributes: bold, italics, underline.

Note:

A creditor matrix may be filed on a high density floppy disk. The diskette must be clearly labeled with the case number and title (if filed after petition). The creditors' names and addresses must be saved in ASCII format for our automated system to recognize the characters and convert to the court's database. The diskette will then become part of the official case file, similar to a paper matrix, and will not be returned.

Important Note:

If you are using WordPerfect versions 6 through 8, save the document as file type "ASCII DOS Text".
If you are using Microsoft Word, save the document as type "MS-DOS Text".
If you are using WordPad, save the document as type "Text Document - MS-DOS Format".
If you are using notepad, save the document as type "Text Documents".

JURISDICTION

The bankruptcy court had jurisdiction over Timothy and Karrie Smith's ("Debtors") bankruptcy case under 28 U.S.C. §§ 151, 157(a) and (b), and 1334(a). On November 14, 2008, the bankruptcy court entered an order denying the objections of the chapter 13 trustee, creditor America Express Bank, and the United States Trustee to confirmation of the Debtor's chapter 13 plan. All three objecting parties filed timely notices of appeal under 28 U.S.C. § 158(c)(2) and Fed.R.Bankr.P. 8002(a).

This Court has appellate jurisdiction under 28 U.S.C. § 158(b)(1). A bankruptcy court's order confirming a chapter 13 plan is a final, appealable order. In re Crown Vantage, Inc. 421 F.3d 963, 971 (2005); see also In re Robert L. Helms Construction & Development Co., Inc., 139 F.3d 702, 704 (9th Cir.1998). An order overruling objections to confirmation of a chapter 13 debtor's plan is treated as an order of confirmation for purposes of appeal. In re Wolff, 22 B.R. 510 (9th Cir. BAP (Cal.) 1982).

STATEMENT OF ISSUE ON APPEAL

Did the bankruptcy court err in holding that the calculation of disposable income that above-median chapter 13 debtors must pay to creditors in their plan may include deductions for secured debt payments that the debtors will never make, because they are surrendering the collateral to the secured creditors?

STANDARD OF REVIEW

A bankruptcy court's findings of fact are reviewed for clear error and but its conclusions of law are reviewed de novo. In re Shook, 278 B.R. 815, 820 (9th Cir. BAP (Nev.) 2002). Chapter 13 plan confirmation issues requiring only statutory interpretation are reviewed de novo. In re Hull, 251 B.R. 726, 730 (9th Cir. BAP (Wash.) 2000).

STATEMENT OF THE CASE

This case involves the interpretation of provisions added to the Bankruptcy Code by the Bankruptcy Abuse Prevention and Consumer Protection Act of 2005, Pub.L.No. 109-8, 119 Stat. 23 (2005) ("2005 Act"), and specifically § 1325(b) and § 707(b)(2). In chapter 13, a plan providing for payment of less than 100% to unsecured creditors must be confirmed if it commits all the debtor's "projected disposable income" to unsecured creditors for a commitment period of five years. This case involves the expense component of the "disposable income" calculation, and specifically whether the debtor is entitled to deduct payments on a secured debt the debtor will never pay, because the debtor is surrendering the property securing the claim.

Allowable expenses under § 1325(b)(3) are determined in accordance with §

707(b)(2), which contains a list of expenses also used in calculating disposable income for purposes of the chapter 7 means test. The chapter 7 means test creates a presumption of abuse for a debtor with above-median income, if the debtor has "disposable income" exceeding a statutory threshold. If the presumption arises, the court must dismiss the case or, with the debtor's consent, convert the case to chapter 11 or 13. If the presumption of abuse does not arise or is rebutted, the court may still find abuse and dismiss or convert the case based on the totality of the debtors' financial situation or bad faith.

Timothy and Karrie Smith ("Debtors") filed a voluntary chapter 7 petition. (See Appellants' Appendix, Tab A, pp. 1-43.) Because the Debtors had income above the State median and excess income that would enable them to fund a chapter 13 plan, the United States Trustee filed a motion to dismiss for abuse under § 707(b)(3). (See Appendix, Tab B, pp. 44-50, and Tab A, pp. 24-26.) The bankruptcy court agreed with the United States Trustee and found that, given the totality of the debtors' financial situation, it would be an abuse to grant them a chapter 7 discharge. (See Appendix, Tab F, pp. 71-72.)

Rather than allowing their case to be dismissed, the Debtors voluntarily converted to chapter 13. (See Appendix, Tab E, p. 70.) In chapter 13, they proposed a plan to pay unsecured creditors $889 per month for six months, representing a 4 percent dividend. (See Appendix, Tab G, pp. 73-76.) The Debtors justified their plan based on their calculation of negative ($1,749) in disposable income on Form 22C, "Chapter 13 Statement of Current Monthly Income and Calculation of Commitment Period and Disposable Income". (See Appendix, Tab I, pp. 81-87.) They obtained the negative result by deducting nearly $7,000 in monthly payments on account of surrendered property (See Appendix, Tab I, p. 85.)

The chapter 13 trustee, American Express Bank, and the United States Trustee all objected, asserting that the Debtors' disposable income calculation was incorrect, because they had improperly deducted secured debt payments that they would not in fact make because they were surrendering the collateral. (Appendix, Tab K, pp. 89-123; Tab L, pp. 124-134; Tab 0, pp. 182-194.) In a memorandum opinion, the bankruptcy court overruled the objections, holding that amounts due on account of surrendered property were properly deductible, even though the amounts would in fact never be paid. (Appendix, Tab Q, pp. 198-210; Tab R, p. 211.)

STATEMENT OF FACTS

I. Statutory Framework

The 2005 Act significantly altered how debtors obtain relief under chapters 7 and 13 of the Bankruptcy Code. In a chapter 13 case, a debtor's unsecured creditors or trustee may insist that the debtor devote all of his or her projected disposable income to pay creditors. See 11 U.S.C. § 1325(b)(1). Although "projected disposable income" is not defined, "disposable income" is defined as the net of historical income less prescribed expenses. See 11 U.S.C. § 1325(b)(2).

The first component in the disposable income calculation is "current monthly income," which is defined in § 101(10A) as the debtor's average monthly income over the six months prior to filing. From current monthly income the debtors deduct expenses in "amounts reasonably necessary to be expended" for maintenance or support or necessary business expenses. 11 U.S.C. § 1325(b)(2) and (3). Above-median-income chapter 13 debtors determine "amounts reasonably necessary to be expended . . . in accordance with" § 707(b)(2)(A) and (B) of the Bankruptcy Code. 11 U.S.C. § 1325(b)(3) (incorporating those provisions).[1]

Expenses allowed in the calculation of disposable income under § 707(b)(2) and § 1325(b)(3) include payments on secured debt. Specifically, § 707(b)(2)(A)(iii) permits the deduction of "the total of all amounts scheduled as contractually due to secured creditors in each month of the 60 months following the date of the petition" divided by 60. Id. Deducting all allowed expenses from a debtor's income yields a net number -- disposable income.

[1] Prescribed expenses are contained in § 707(b)(2)(A)(I), (ii), and (iii). Section 707(b)(2)(B) may permit additional expenses for debtors who establish special circumstances.

Disposable income is not the ending point, however, in determining how much a chapter 13 debtor must pay creditors over the life of a chapter 13 plan. Instead, § 1325(b)(1) requires "all of the debtor's projected disposable income" be paid to creditors when, as happened in this case, the chapter 13 trustee objects to a proposed plan. "Projected disposable income" is determined by multiplying disposable income by the "applicable commitment period," which for above-median debtors is 60 months. Maney v. Kagenveama (In re Kagenveama), 541 F.3d 868 (9th Cir. 2008).[2]

Disposable income is determined the same way in chapter 7 as it is in chapter 13. In chapter 7, the disposable income analysis is the centerpiece of the 2005 Act's means test. In the case of a debtor whose income exceeds the applicable median income,[3] abuse is presumed where the debtor's disposable income exceeds certain statutory levels.[4] 11 U.S.C. § 707(b)(2). Where the presumption of abuse arises, § 707(b)(1) mandates dismissal or, with the debtor's consent, conversion to chapter 11 or 13. Debtors may rebut the presumption of abuse by demonstrating "special circumstances" that justify adjustments to income and expenses for which there is no reasonable alternative. 11 U.S.C. § 707(b)(2)(B).

[2] The Eighth and Tenth circuits have expressly rejected the Ninth Circuit's approach to projected disposable income by concluding that the historically-based "disposable income" is a starting point for determination of "projected disposable income," but that the final calculation may take into consideration the debtor's actual income and expenses. See Hamilton v. Lanning (In re Lanning), 545 F.3d 1269, 1278-82 (10th Cir. 2008); Coop v. Frederickson (In re Frederickson), 545 F.3d 652, 659-60 (8th Cir. 2008).

If abuse is not presumed or the presumption is rebutted, § 707(b)(3) provides that for dismissal or conversion where bad faith or the totality of the debtor's financial situation demonstrates abuse. 11 U.S.C. § 707(b)(3).

II. Factual Background

On November 14, 2007, the Debtors filed a voluntary chapter 7 petition (See Appendix, Tab A, pp. 1-43.), together with a Form 22A, "Statement of Current Monthly Income and Means Test Calculation" (See Appendix, Tab B, pp. 44-50.).

---

[3] The applicable median income is the median income for the applicable State for a family the same size as the debtor's household. 11 U.S.C. § 707(b)(6).

[4] Under § 707(b)(2)(A)(i), a case is presumed abusive if projected monthly disposable income (i.e. monthly disposable income multiplied by 60), is at least $10,950 (i.e. $182.50 per month). If disposable income is less than $6,575 ($109.58 per month), the presumption does not arise. If projected disposable income is between $6,575 and $10,950, the presumption arises if the result is at least 25% of unsecured claims.

The United States Trustee moved to dismiss the case under § 707(b)(3). (See Appendix, Tab F, pp. 1-2.) By order dated June 13, 2008, the bankruptcy court granted the motion based on the totality of the Debtors' financial circumstances and, with the Debtors' consent, converted the case to chapter 13. (See Appendix, Tab F, pp. 1-2).

The Debtors' post-conversion Schedule I, "Current Income of Individual Debtor(s)" shows actual, projected gross income of $10,417, less payroll deductions of $2,810, for a net of $7,607. (See Appendix, Tab H, p. 77.) The Debtors' post-conversion Schedule J, "Current Expenditures of Individual Debtors," shows living expenses of $6,718, leaving a monthly excess of $889. (See Appendix, Tab H, p.78-79.) The Debtors' plan provides for monthly payments of $889 for a period of six months, with a total of $4,300 allocated to nonpriority unsecured creditors. (See Appendix, Tab G, pp. 73-76.) This is approximately four percent of the $101,256 in unsecured debts listed on Schedule F. (See Appendix, Tab 20, 21.)

The Debtors' "Chapter 13 Statement of Current Monthly Income and Calculation of Commitment Period and Disposable Income" ("Form 22C")[5] shows

[5] The current monthly income and expenses are identical to the numbers contained on the means test form (Form 22A) filed in the chapter 7 case, except that Form 22C includes a chapter 13 administrative expense of $89. (Appendix, current monthly income of $12,906 and annualized CMI of $154,872, which is above the applicable state median income.[6] (See Appendix, Tab I, p. 82.) From CMI the Debtors deducted expenses of $14,655, including $7,185 in monthly payments on two residences and a vehicle they had surrendered.[7] (See Appendix, Tab I, pp. 85-86.) The resulting disposable income is a negative ($1,749). (See Appendix, Tab I, p. 86.) If the mortgage and vehicle payments were not deducted, the Debtors would be entitled to a statutorily prescribed housing allowance of $1,245. In that event, their deductions would be $8,715, and monthly disposable income would be $4,191. This is sufficient to pay the $101,256 in scheduled unsecured debt in full over a period of 24 months. Alternatively, they could fund a 60-month 100% plan for approximately $1,700 per month.

The sole issue on appeal is whether the court properly applied §§ 1325(b)(2)

Tab B, p. 44-50.)

[6] The Debtors report a household size of 5. The median income in Washington for a household of this size is $82,040.

[7] The Schedules included the following items, which the Debtors surrendered post-petition: (1) a residence in Washington, valued at $499,000, with encumbrances of $450,232 and monthly payments of $3,364; (2) a former residence in Utah, valued at $450,000, subject to encumbrances of $413,514, and payments of $3,221; and (3) a 2007 Dodge Nitro, valued at $30,000 with $36,762 owed and payments of $600. The monthly payments on the surrendered items totals $7,185.

and (3) and 707(b)(2)(A)(iii) in permitting the deduction of payments on debt secured by surrendered property.

SUMMARY OF ARGUMENT

The bankruptcy court improperly allowed the Debtors to deduct secured debt payments they would never make because they had surrendered the collateral securing the debts. First, § 1325(b)(2) is forward looking, allowing expense deductions only for "amounts reasonably necessary to be expended," which expenditures will never occur on surrendered property. Second, by focusing on the single term "contractually due" in § 707(b)(2)(A)(iii) without giving due consideration to the phrases "scheduled as" and the phrase "following the date of the petition," the court missed the meaning and intent of the provision, which is to allow only those debts that the Debtors will actually pay. Third, read as a whole and in light of the other deductions allowed under the means test, § 707(b)(2)(A) requires a forward looking assessment of expenses, supporting the interpretation that § 707(b)(2)(A)(iii) limits the deduction to payments the Debtors will actually make. Finally, the bankruptcy court's ruling defies Congress' stated purpose in enacting the 2005 Act that debtors pay the maximum amount they can afford.

ARGUMENT

I. Under § 1325(b)(2) and (3), which the Ninth Circuit did not interpret in Kagenveama, the Debtors failed to commit all of their projected disposable income to pay their unsecured creditors.

Section 1325(b)(2) permits the deduction from CMI of “amounts reasonably necessary to be expended” for maintenance and support of the debtor or debtor’s dependents. See 11 U.S.C. § 1325(b)(2). For debtors with above-median income, “amounts reasonably necessary to be expended” are to be determined “in accordance with” § 707(b)(2)(A) and (B). Notwithstanding the reference to § 707(b)(2), the phrase “reasonably necessary to be expended” must be given meaning.

Section 1325(b)(2) permits only those expenses that are “to be expended” and is therefore future oriented. See In re Van Bodegom Smith, 383 B.R. 441, 455 (Bankr. E.D. Wis. 2008). The phrase “requires debtors, and courts, to look into the future to determine, inasmuch as possible, what expenses the debtor will have during the life of the plan.” Id. Accordingly, to give this phrase meaning, one must consider whether the debtor will actually “expend” any amounts going forward. Id.; see also In re Renicker, 342 B.R. 304, 309 (Bankr. W.D. Mo. 2006) (concluding that “plain language of section 1325(b)(2) unambiguously indicates that prospective – not historical – expenses are to be used to calculate disposable income”).

It is axiomatic that payments on property that a debtor is surrendering will not be made in the future, and hence will never be "expended." Indeed, the Debtors did not include any payments for a mortgage, mortgage arrearage or property taxes on their post-conversion Schedule J, "Current Expenditures of Individual Debtors." See In re Turner, 384 B.R. 537, 539 (Bankr. S.D. Ind. 2008).

Accordingly, because § 1325(b)(3) only provides for the inclusion of "amounts reasonably necessary to be expended" as part of a disposable income calculation, the bankruptcy court erred in allowing the Debtors to deduct expenses for their two surrendered homes and vehicle in calculating disposable income, when these items have been surrendered and no future payments will be made on them.

II. Under § 707(b)(2)(A)(iii), which the Ninth Circuit did not interpret in Kagenveama, the Debtors cannot deduct secured debt obligations on collateral they are surrendering.

Section 707(b)(2)(A)(iii) provides as follows:

> The debtor's average monthly payments on account of secured debts shall be calculated as the sum of –
>
> (I) the total of all amounts scheduled as contractually due to secured creditors in each month of the 60 months following the date of the petition; and
> (II) any additional payments to secured creditors necessary for the debtor, in filing a plan under chapter 13 of this title, to maintain possession of the debtor's primary residence, motor vehicle, or other property necessary for the support of the > debtor and the debtor’s dependents, that serves as collateral for > secured debts;

> divided by 60.

Section 707(b)(2)(A)(iii), like any statutory provision, must be read as a whole. See Koons Buick Pontiac GMC, Inc. v. Nieh, 543 U.S. 50, 60 (2004) (calling for a “holistic” approach to reading statutes). The phrases “scheduled as” and “following the date of the petition” call for a projection of what the debtor’s payments on account of secured debt will be following bankruptcy. Further, in light of the means test’s more general approach to identifying allowable expenses, the phrase “average monthly payments on account of secured debt” must be understood to include only payments on account of secured debt that the debtor actually will make.

The bankruptcy court rejected this approach, noting that numerous courts have allowed debtors to deduct payments on secured debt, even though the debtor intends to surrender the collateral and therefore will never make the payments. See, e.g., In re Maya, 374 B.R. 750, 753 (Bankr.S.D.Cal. 2007); In re Kelvie, 372 B.R. 56, 62 (Bankr.D.Idaho 2007); In re Wilkins, 370 B.R. 815, 819 (Bankr.C.D. Cal. 2007); In re Rodriguez, 2008 WL 372742 (Bankr.N.D.Cal. Feb. 11, 2008); In re Chang, 2007 WL 3034679 at *3 (Bankr.N.D.Cal. Oct. 16, 2007). However, allowing debtors to deduct obligations on surrendered property fails to give independent meaning to the phrases “scheduled as” and “following the date of the petition.”

If Congress meant for debtors to deduct all “contractually due” payments without regard to whether they would actually be made, it would have left out the phrase “scheduled as” and defined “payments on account of secured debts” as payments that are “contractually due . . . following the date of the petition” instead of “scheduled as contractually due . . . following the date of the petition.” The phrase “scheduled as contractually due” calls for a forward looking assessment of whether the payments will actually be made. Giving the phrase a future orientation gives separate effect to the term “scheduled as” in the phrase “scheduled as contractually due,” and thus honors the rule that “whenever possible, every word and phrase in a statute should be given effect.” Negonsott v. Samuels, 507 U.S. 99, 106, 113 S.Ct. 1119, 122 L.Ed.2d 457 (1993), cited in Kagenveama, 541 F.3d 868, 872 (9th Cir. 2008).[8] By contrast, the bankruptcy court’s reading gives no independent meaning to the phrase “scheduled as.” As one court explained,

[8] The Eighth and Tenth circuits have expressly rejected the Ninth Circuit’s approach to projected disposable income by concluding that the historically-based “disposable income” is a starting point for determination of “projected disposable income,” but that the final calculation may take into consideration the debtor’s actual income and expenses. See Hamilton v. Lanning (In re Lanning), 545 F.3d 1269, 1278-82 (10th Cir. 2008); Coop v. Frederickson (In re Frederickson), 545 F.3d 652, 659-60 (8th Cir. 2008).

considering the phrase “scheduled as contractually due” in a chapter 13 case, the word “scheduled” is best understood to “contemplate[ ] a forward looking approach. That is, one schedules something which one expects to take place in the future and not an event which one plans to avoid.” In re Love, 350 B.R. 611, 613-14 (Bankr. M.D. Ala. 2006).

The phrase “scheduled as contractually due” should also be read to mean something more specific than “contractually due” because the phrase “scheduled as” is a term of art in the Bankruptcy Code. The Code refers to a claim or debt being “scheduled as” due if the debt is properly listed on a debtor’s bankruptcy schedules. See In re Skaggs 349 B.R. 594, 599 (Bankr. E.D. Mo. 2006). The only provision of the Code other than Section 707(b)(2)(A)(iii) that uses the phrase “scheduled as” is 11 U.S.C. § 1111(a). Section 1111(a) provides that a “proof of claim or interest is deemed filed under section 501 of this title for any claim or interest that appears in the schedules filed under . . . section 521(1) or 1106(a)(2) of this title, except a claim or interest that is scheduled as disputed, contingent, or unliquidated.” (Emphasis added). The second part of the provision excepts claims that are “scheduled as disputed, contingent, or unliquidated.” In context, “scheduled as” thus means “appears on the schedule” or “appended to” the schedule. Because of the “‘normal rule of statutory construction,’ Sorenson v.

Secretary of Treasury, 475 U.S. 851, 860, 106 S.Ct. 1600, 1606, 89 L.Ed.2d 855 (1986), that 'identical words used in different parts of the same act are intended to have the same meaning,' Atlantic Cleaners & Dyers, Inc. v. United States, 286 U.S. 427, 433, 52 S.Ct. 607, 609, 76 L.Ed. 1204 (1932)," Commissioner v. Keystone Consol. Industries, Inc., 508 U.S. 152, 159 (1993), "scheduled as contractually due" in Section 707(b)(2)(A) should be read to include contractual obligations on secured debts that are properly listed on a bankruptcy schedule because the debtor intends to honor them.

Allowing a deduction for mortgage payments that will never be made on the basis that the payments remain "contractually due" also fails to take account of the phrase "following the date of the petition" in § 707(b)(2)(iii)(I). See In re Naut, 2008 WL 191297 at *9 (Bankr. E.D. Pa. Jan. 22, 2008) (unpublished disposition); In re Harris, 353 B.R. 304, 308-10 (Bankr. E.D. Okla. 2006); In re Skaggs, 349 B.R. 594, 599-600 (Bankr. E.D. Mo. 2006). The word "following," used as a preposition, means "subsequent to" or "after in time." Webster's Third New International Dictionary, 833 (1993). By requiring courts to look at payments due "subsequent to" or "after" the date of the petition, the statute makes clear that it contemplates a projection of future expenses rather than a snapshot of current expenses. Accordingly, the means test allows the debtor to deduct from his current monthly income only those payments on account of secured debt that he actually will make after he files the petition. As the court explained in Naut, "[i]ncluding a loan payment as a deduction from income must be based on the loan payment actually being due in each of the 60 months after the bankruptcy petition is filed. Only this interpretation properly gives effect to every clause and word in the statute." In re Naut, 2008 WL 191297 at *9. See also In re Ray, 362 B.R. 680, 683 n.5 (Bankr. D. S.C. 2007).

III. Expense allowances under § 707(b)(2) are future-oriented, precluding deductions for debt payments the debtor will not make.

Giving a future orientation to the term "payments on account of secured debts" aligns § 707(b)(2)(A)(iii) with the treatment of other expenses under § 707(b)(2)(A) and (B), which by their terms are forward looking. It is a general rule of statutory construction that "'a word [in a statute] is known by the company it keeps,' a rule that 'is often wisely applied where a word is capable of many meanings in order to avoid the giving of unintended breadth to the Acts of Congress.' Jarecki v. G.D. Searle & Co., 367 U.S. 303, 307, 81 S.Ct. 1579, 6 L.Ed.2d 859 (1961); see also Dole v. Steelworkers, 494 U.S. 26, 36, 110 S.Ct. 929, 108 L.Ed.2d 23 (1990) ('[W]ords grouped in a list should be given related meaning' (internal quotation marks and citations omitted))." Dolan v. United States Postal Serv., 546 U.S. 481, 486-487 (2006).

First, the expense allowances in § 707(b)(2)(A)(ii) are forward looking. Unlike current monthly income, expenses allowances are not based on historical averages. Rather, allowances are either defined by IRS standards or determined by the debtor's actual expenses, subject to either statutory maximums or a "reasonably necessary" standard. The "reasonably necessary" standard necessitates a projection of the debtor's future needs.[9]

Additionally, a comparison of § 707(b)(2)(A)(iii)(I) in context with its "conjunctive partner," § 707(b)(2)(A)(iii)(II), "reinforces the conclusion that § 707(b)(2)(A)(iii)(I) applies only to payments on debts secured by collateral that a debtor intends to keep." In re Burden, 380 B.R. 194, 202 (Bankr.W.D.Mo. 2007). While § 707(b)(2)(A)(iii)(I) allows secured debt payments scheduled as contractually due, the following § 707(b)(2)(A)(iii)(II) allows deductions for cure

[9] With minor exceptions, none of the expenses in § 707(b)(2)(A)(ii) are backward-looking. Included are standardized living expenses in amounts prescribed by the Internal Revenue Service's National Standards and Local Standards (e.g. housing, utilities, food, clothing, and transportation). All other expense allowances under clause (ii) must be actual and are subject to a "reasonably necessary" standard (e.g. mandatory payroll deductions, insurance, child care, educational expenses). Some reasonably necessary expenses are allowed but only if they are a continuation of actual, historical expenses paid by the debtor (e.g. care and support of elderly, chronically ill, or disabled household or family member). Certain other actual expenses are allowed up to a maximum amount (e.g. private school for minor dependent child "not to exceed $1,650 per year)." Thus, the "actual" and "reasonably necessary" standards each entail a projection of the debtor's future needs.

payments on encumbered property, but only as to items that are reasonably necessary for the support of the debtor and debtor's dependents. Limiting the § 707(b)(2)(A)(iii)(I) deduction for current obligations to payments for property the debtor seeks to retain is consistent with the explicitly forward looking nature of § 707(b)(2)(A)(iii)(II), which contemplates the debtor's intention to retain the property. In re Burden, 380 B.R. at 201-02.

The bankruptcy court disagreed with the United States Trustee on this point, concluding that the Ninth Circuit's use of a "backward-looking approach" defining projected disposable income in light of the text of a different statutory provision (§ 1325(b)(1)) in Kagenveama precludes a "forward-looking approach" to expenses of § 707(b)(2)(A)(iii)(I). The bankruptcy court reasoned that using projected expenses from historical income would be "similar to having a business employ two different accounting systems." Mem. Dec. p. 7, lines 3 - 6.

Kagenveama does not compel or support this conclusion. The income and expense components of disposable income are defined separately and, like Kagenveama, calls upon this Court to review the text of the statute before it. As we explain above, the text and context of § 707(b)(2)(A)(iii)(I) are forward looking and should be applied that way.

In contrast, in interpreting the language of a different provision, §

1325(b)(1), the Ninth Circuit concluded that current monthly income provides the income data for the disposable income calculation, and that “projected disposable income” is the product of current monthly income multiplied by the applicable commitment period. Concluding that the plain language of the statute mandated a historical approach to current monthly income, the Court rejected the lines of cases interpreting the term “projected” to introduce flexibility to the components of “projected disposable income.” *S*ee, e.g., In re Hardacre, 338 B.R. 718, 722 (Bankr.N.D.Tex. 2006) (allowing the court to consider evidence of anticipated income as opposed to historical current monthly income); and In re Jass, 340 B.R. 411, 415 (Bankr.D.Utah 2006) (treating the § 707(b)(2) calculation as a presumptive starting point, subject to rebuttal with evidence of more accurate income and expenses going forward). The issues in Kagenveama were driven by the income component of projected disposable income. The Court did not address any specific expense allowance, observing only generally as to expenses that “[t]he revised ‘disposable income’ test uses a formula to determine what expenses are reasonably necessary[,]” thereby eliminating judicial flexibility. Kagenveama, 541 F.3d at 874. The Court did not characterize expenses as either backward or forward looking, nor did it insist on a formula that complied with standard accounting methods. Thus, nothing in Kagenveama requires that §

707(b)(2)(A)(ii)(I) be read differently from its natural forward looking text.

IV. The 2005 Act's purpose that debtors repay the maximum amount they can afford is frustrated by allowing above-median income debtors to deduct non-existent secured debt payments.

Allowing a deduction only for secured debt payments that actually will be made is not only compelled by the statutory text, but also best serves Congress' purpose in enacting the means test and incorporating it into the chapter 13 definition of disposable income. The 2005 Act established the means test – the "heart of the [2005 Act's] consumer bankruptcy reforms," H.R. Rep. No. 109-31 (I) at 1 (2005), reprinted in 2005 U.S.C.C.A.N. 88, 89 – to identify which debtors have the means to pay something to their creditors, and which do not. Congress intended the means test to ensure that those who can afford to repay some portion of their unsecured debts be required to do so at the maximum level they can afford. See Id.

Just last week, in Blausey v. United States Trustee (In re Blausey), 2009 WL 153241 (9th Cir. Jan. 23, 2009), the 9th Circuit reiterated the 2005 Act's overarching purpose of ensuring that "'debtors pay creditors the maximum they can afford.'" In re Blausey, 2009 WL 153241, at * 8, quoting H.R. Rep. No. 109-31 (I) at 1 (2005), reprinted in 2005 U.S.C.C.A.N. 88, 89. In Blausey, the 9th Circuit concluded that disability insurance benefits received by the debtors were included in current monthly income, because excluding the $4,000 received each month by the debtors “would result in a figure that does not accurately reflect the [debtors'] ability to repay their debts.” Id.

This Congressional purpose is served by allowing the debtor to deduct from income only those payments that the debtor actually will make. The bankruptcy court’s reading of § 1325(b)(2) and § 707(b)(2)(A)(iii) allows the deduction of payments that the debtor has no intention of making. The result is total expenses that are not grounded in reality, which manifestly defeats Congress’ stated purpose of maximum effort by all chapter 13 debtors.

Further, these imaginary deductions are available only to higher-income debtors,[10] with the inequitable result that those with greater means to repay their debt must actually pay less or none at all. The inequity is stark in this case, where the Debtors, with income substantially above the median,[11] were are allowed to deduct over $7,000 in non-existent payments on property that is admittedly not necessary for their support. If the Debtors are allowed to deduct the payments on surrendered property, the projected dividend to unsecured creditors is 4% – only a modest increase over zero repayment in chapter 7 which the court found would be an abuse. On the other hand, if the payments are disallowed, Debtors' projected disposable income would be sufficient to pay in full the $101,256 in scheduled unsecured creditors, plus U.S. Bank's deficiency claim on the surrendered Dodge Nitro.

[10] Only above median debtors use the means testing provisions to determine “amounts reasonably necessary to be expended.” 11 U.S.C. § 1325(b)(3). For debtors with income below the median, expense deductions are determined consistent with pre-2005 Act law, i.e., using expense deductions from Schedule J.

[11] The Debtors’ current monthly income is 89 percent above the applicable state median income (see fn. 6, supra at 9), and their projected Schedule I income exceeds the median by 52 percent.

The bankruptcy court acknowledged that its interpretation of § 1325 "may create what appears to be an unjust result in this case[,]" and further that "[s]uch result also may appear to be at odds with Congressional intent in enacting the [2005 Act], i.e. that debtors should pay the maximum amount they can afford." (Appendix, Tab Q, p. 209, lines 3 - 9.) At the same time, the court suggests that the disposable income test may, conversely, result in unfairness to the debtor, where the debtor's expenses may increase postpetition, requiring an unaffordable chapter 13 payment that would "jeopardiz[e] the ability of a debtor to reorganize and would be at odds with the bankruptcy goal of providing the debtor a fresh start." The court dismissed both scenarios, concluding that "'it is a rare occasion when a legislature's effort to establish specific guidelines is so refined that its application is guaranteed to be uniformly fair. . . . Nonetheless, the courts are bound to enforce what the legislature has enacted.'" Opinion at 12, citing In re McGillis, 370 B.R. 720 at 726 (Bankr.W.D.Mich. 2007)

The United States Trustee asserts that disposable income as defined by § 1325(b)(2) is neither unrefined nor unfair to debtors. The statute contains safeguards for debtors, so that they are not forced into unaffordable plans based on their disposable income. First, many of the expense allowances in § 707(b)(2)(A)(ii) are based on the debtor's actual expenses, within reasonable and necessary limits. Second, as to the standardized categories, some are subject to increase if the debtor can show actual expenses in excess of the IRS allotments (e.g. health care, telecommunication services, home energy, and food and clothing). Third, because § 1325(b)(3) references both § 707(b)(2)(A) and (B), adjustments of expenses are contemplated where the debtor establishes special circumstances "for which there is no reasonable alternative." See, e.g. In re Crego, 387 B.R. 225 (Bankr.E.D.Wisc. 2008) (§ 1325(b)(3) allows above-median-income chapter 13 debtors with two households to use § 707(b)(2)(B) to adjust expenses, just as it is used by chapter 7 debtors to rebut the presumption of abuse). Finally, debtors whose expenses increase postpetition are able to amend their plans, contrary to the bankruptcy court's statement that such debtors "will be required to pay more into a Chapter 13 plan than he or she can afford." (Appendix, Tab Q, p. 209, lines 11-12.)

This is not to negate the potential for harsh results for debtors flowing from the Ninth Circuit's mechanical approach to projected disposable income. See In re Stansell, 395 B.R. 457 (Bankr. D. Idaho 2008) (requiring non-recurring income received from debtor's deceased spouse to be included in projected disposable income calculation notwithstanding that deceased spouse's income would not be available during term of plan); In re Featherstone, No. 08-00016, 2008 WL 5217936 (D. Mont. Dec. 11, 2008) (affirming bankruptcy court's order denying confirmation of debtors' plan where debtors sought to exclude income received from one-time sale of livestock from projected disposable income calculation).

In sum, the United States Trustee's approach is consistent with Congress' stated intent to make certain that debtors "repay creditors the maximum they can afford." H.R. Rep. No. 109-31 (I) at 1 (2005), reprinted in 2005 U.S.C.C.A.N. 88, 89; In re Blausey, 2009 WL 153241, at * 8. The bankruptcy court's ruling defies Congressional intent by permitting debtors to deduct from their disposable income secured debt expenses for collateral they have surrendered or intend to surrender and on which they will never make payments.

CONCLUSION

For these reasons, the United States Trustee respectfully asks this Court to reverse the bankruptcy court's order overruling the United States Trustee's objection to confirmation.

INTRODUCTION

The United States Trustee, together with the chapter 13 trustee and American Express Bank, objected to the proposed chapter 13 plan of Timothy and Karrie Smith ("Debtors") on the grounds that it does not commit all of their projected disposable income to unsecured creditors for a commitment period of five years. The bankruptcy court overruled the objections, and the parties appealed on the grounds that the bankruptcy court erred in its calculation of the Debtors' disposable income, by allowing them to deduct $7,185 in secured debt payments that they will never make, on collateral they are surrendering.

The United States Trustee's opening brief explained that a proper interpretation of 11 U.S.C. § 1325(b)(2) and (3), and § 707(b)(2)(A)(iii), preclude the deduction of such payments in the calculation of disposable income. First, § § 1325(b)(2) and (3) compel the result by limiting deductions to amounts that will be expended in the future. Second, § 707(b)(2)(A)(iii) by its terms limits the deduction to secured debt payments that are identified in the debtor's schedules as contractually due following the date of the petition, thereby precluding payments that the debtor will not make because the collateral is being surrendered. Third, allowing the deduction produces an anomaly in the context of the statute as a whole, because all other allowances are limited to expenses that are actual and/or applicable to the debtor. Fourth, allowing the deductions produces a result which defeats the driving purpose of the legislation, which is to require debtors who have disposable income to pay the maximum they can afford.

The Debtors respond with three principal arguments. First, they assert that the United States Trustee's interpretation of the statutes violates the Ninth Circuit's ruling in In re Kagenveama, which they argue requires that income and expenses alike be viewed from a historical perspective. Second, they claim that this result is required to further Congress's purpose in enacting a rigid, formulaic disposable income test. Third, they allege that the United States Trustee's approach would defeat the mechanical means test by reinstating a flexible standard to the determination of disposable income.

The Debtors misconstrue the statute and mischaracterize the United States Trustee's argument. First, the Kagenveama court interpreted the language of a different provision, § 1325(b)(1), and Debtors' own interpretation requires that important terms be read out of § § 1325(b)(2) and 707(b)(2)(A)(iii). Second, Debtors' reading of the statute produces an anomaly within the statute by treating secured debt payments differently from all others. The Debtors' interpretation does not survive a holistic analysis, which limits deductions to those expenses that are applicable to or actually incurred by the debtor.

Finally, the United States Trustee does not dispute that the means test is mechanical, but rather asserts that installments on surrendered property are never an appropriate expense item. The United States Trustee's interpretation is compelled by the language of the statute and is the only interpretation that implements Congress's primary purpose of requiring that debtors who have the ability to pay creditors to do so to the maximum they can afford. The Debtors' interpretation of the statute is erroneous because it both ignores important terms and defeats the ultimate purpose of the means test, which is to require debtors to apply all of their disposable income to pay unsecured creditors.

ARGUMENT

I. The Debtors misapply the holding in In re Kagenveama, which addressed the income but not the expense component of "disposable income."

In defining "projected disposable income," the Ninth Circuit in In re Kagenveama addressed the income component of disposable income and the meaning of "projected disposable income" in the case of debtors with above-median income. Maney v. Kagenveama (In re Kagenveama), 541 F.3d 868 (9th Cir. 2008). The Court determined that "current monthly income" ("CMI") is derived historically, as the average of the debtor's six months' pre-filing income, a result compelled by the definition of the term in § 101(10A). "Disposable income" is CMI less expenses, which in turn are ascertained by a formula which "determine[s] what expenses are reasonably necessary," citing § 1325(b)(2) and (3). 541 F.3d at 874.

The Debtors misinterpret Kagenveama by suggesting that its interpretation of §1325(b)(1) requires or supports the use of historical expenses in determining disposable income. The debtor's expenses under § 1325(b)(2) were not at issue in Kagenveama. See In re Gonzalez, 388 B.R. 292, 304 (Bankr.S.D.Tex. 2008). To suggest that because the CMI figure is historical means that expenses must also be historical defies the plain language of § 1325(b)(2), which permits only those payments that are "to be expended," and § 707(b)(2)(A)(iii), which by its terms permits only secured debt payments that are "scheduled" as due over the sixty months "following the date of the petition." To include purely historical expenses in the calculation misses the point, which is that the statute be interpreted according to its terms and every phrase and clause be given meaning.

In support of their position that Kagenveama applies to expenses, the Debtors cite to the Court's observation that the new calculation presents a "deliberate departure from the old 'disposable income' calculation, which was bound up with the facts and circumstances of the debtor's financial affairs." In re Kagenveama 541 F.3d at 874. Repeatedly mischaracterizing the United States

Trustee's position, the Debtors assert that "[t]he Appellants now want the Court to ignore the Ninth Circuit decision in Kagenveama, and engage in an analysis of the factors and circumstances of the debtor's financial affairs, and restore judicial discretion to correct perceived errors in the drafting of the Bankruptcy code." Response Brief, p. 7, lines 15-19.

The Debtors confuse the exercise of discretion in ascertaining actual (as opposed to statutory) and projected income, a question of fact, with the purely legal interpretation of a statute. The United States Trustee does not ask for a case-by-case determination of debtors' actual income or expense amounts, except where the statute limits expense allowances to those which are actual, reasonable, and/or necessary.[1] Rather, the United States Trustee simply wants the Court to properly interpret the statute by prohibiting debtors as a matter of law from deducting nonexistent payments on surrendered collateral.

II. The statutory text, context, and purpose of § § 1325(b)(2) and (3) and 707(b)(2)(A)(iii), which govern expense allowances for above-median-income debtors, preclude the deduction of secured debt payments that debtors will not make because they have surrendered the collateral.

Where statutory text is plain, the court's sole function is to enforce it according to its terms, unless to do so would render an absurd result, Lamie v. U.S.

Trustee, 540 U.S. 526, 534 (1999); 157 L.Ed.2d 1024 (2004), or if a literal application "will produce a result demonstrably at odds with the intention of its drafters." U.S. v. Ron Pair Enters., Inc., 489 U.S. 235, 242; 109 S.Ct. 1026 (1982). The United States Trustee asserts that the plain language of § § 1325(b)(2) and (3), as well as § 707(b)(2)(A)(iii), applied independently, do not allow the deduction of debt payments that will not actually be made in the future. However, some courts have found the provisions capable of more than one interpretation, in which case context helps determine whether statutory language is plain or ambiguous, and if ambiguous, context helps clarify its meaning. See In re Ransom, 380 B.R. 799, 807 (B.A.P 9th Cir. 2007), appeal docketed, No. 08-15066 (9th Cir. Apr. 8, 2008) ("To determine whether statutory language is plain or ambiguous, we refer to 'the language itself, the specific context in which that language is used, and the broader context of the statute as a whole.'").

A. Debtors ignore the phrase "to be expended" in 1325(b)(2) and (3), with the result that their chapter 13 plan fails to commit all projected disposable income to unsecured creditors.

Section 1325(b)(2) defines "disposable income" as "current monthly income received by the debtor . . . less amounts reasonably necessary to be expended" for the maintenance and support of the debtor and debtor's dependents. 11 U.S.C. § 1325(b)(2) (emphasis added). Section 1325(b)(3) provides that for debtors with above-median income, “amounts reasonably necessary to be expended” be determined in accordance with § 707(b)(2)(A) and (B). 11 U.S.C. § 1325(b)(3) (emphasis added).

The phrase “to be expended” plainly denotes actual, future expenditures. However, as to debtors with above- median income, the Debtors assert that § 1325(b)(3) supplants the whole of § 1325(b)(2), with the result that § 707(b)(2)(A) allowances are deemed “to be expended” in the future, whether or not in fact the debtor will pay the expense. With that premise, amounts that in fact will not be expended on secured debts because the collateral has been surrendered are nevertheless deductible in determining disposable income.

Under the Debtors’ interpretation, the use of “to be expended” in § 1325(b)(3) essentially cancels out the same phrase in § 1325(b)(2), thus reading the phrase out of the statute entirely, violating the rule of construction on which Kagenveama was based, i.e. that “[c]ourts must give meaning to every clause and word of a statute.” See Kagenveama, 541 F.3d at 873. The proper interpretation is that “[t]he [‘to be expended’] phrase is carried over to § 1325(b)(3),” indicating that “amounts to be deducted as secured debt payments are amounts that will be paid in the future as provided in the debtor’s plan.” In re Hoss, 392 B.R. 463, 472 (Bankr.D.Kan. 2008). See also In re McPherson, 350 B.R. 38, 45 (Bankr.W.D.Va.

2006) ("An amount, the payment of which is never contemplated, cannot be an amount that is to be paid in the future.")

Some courts hold that both conditions of § 1325(b)(2) are carried over to § 1325(b)(3), such that all expense allowances of above-median-income debtors in chapter 13 must be both "reasonably necessary" for specified purposes and "to be expended" in the future. See In re Gonzalez, 388 B.R. 292 (deduction for surrendered home not allowed as not being reasonably necessary for the debtors' future maintenance and support). See also In re McGillis, 370 B.R. 720, 730 (Bankr.W.D. Mich.2007) ("phantom payments" for surrendered timeshare and avoided second mortgage disallowed for same reason). This is the position of the Chapter 13 Trustee (see Chapter 13 Trustee's Opening Brief at pp. 7 -10), and the United States Trustee supports that analysis.

Section 707(b)(2) expense allowances are by their terms limited to amounts that are actual, necessary, and/or reasonably necessary, rendering it unnecessary to apply the Gonzalez court's two-part test. However, to the extent that § 707(b)(2)(A)(iii) may be interpreted to allow secured debt payments that are not in fact to be made in the future, a conclusion the United States Trustee vigorously disputes as discussed below, the "to be expended" requirement of § 1325(b)(2) and (3) supplies a factual, temporal limitation that can neither be ignored nor simply deemed to exist, as urged by the Debtors.

B. The Debtors misinterpret § 707(b)(2)(A)(iii) by failing to limit the deduction of secured debt installments to those that are “scheduled as contractually due . . . following the date of the petition.”

Section 1325(b)(3) requires that “amounts reasonably necessary to be expended” by above-median debtors be determined in accordance with § 707(b)(2)(A) and (B). Section 707(b)(2)(A)(iii) permits the deduction of the debtor’s average monthly payments on account of secured debt, calculated as the total of all amounts “scheduled as contractually due” to secured creditors in each of the 60 months “following the date of the petition.”

The United States Trustee asserts that “scheduled as” has independent significance in the context of a bankruptcy petition, where it references a debt that is included in the debtor’s schedules. See In re Skaggs, 349 B.R. 594, 599-600 (Bankr. E.D.Mo. 2006); In re Naut, 2008 WL 191297, *8 (Bankr.E.D.Pa. Jan. 22, 2008); In re Allen, 2008 WL 451053, *6 (Bankr.D.Kan. Feb. 15, 2008). Disregarding the words “scheduled as,” the Debtors assert that “scheduled as contractually due . . . following the date of the petition” simply means that the debts are contractually due following the petition date and not as of the effective date of the plan.

The Debtors mischaracterize the United States Trustee’s position as using "the actual future expenses of the debtors" reflected in Schedule J "in determining the applicable commitment period," thus "ignoring the specific language of § 707(b)(2)(A)(iii)(I)." See Appellees' Brief, p. 12, lines 4 - 8. The United States Trustee advocates referencing Schedule J only to confirm whether debtors actually have the expenses they are claiming on Official Form 22C, such as payments on secured debts, and whether the amounts on Schedule J are consistent with "actual" expenses claimed on Form 22C. Once disposable income is determined by deducting the appropriate expenses from CMI, the court can calculate "projected disposable income" by multiplying the result by the 60-month commitment period applicable to above-median-income debtors. In re Kagenveama, 541 F.3d at 872-875.

Debtors also argue that if Congress had intended to allow secured debt payments only if they are continuing, it would have used the term "continuation of actual expenses paid" as it did with expenses for the care and support of an elderly, chronically ill, or disabled household or family member. See 11 U.S.C. § 707(b)(2)(A)(ii)(II). However, the purpose served by the term "continuation" in the context of the family care expense is not to ensure that it continues into the future. The expense is allowed only "if applicable" and is limited to "actual" expenses. See Id. The "applicable" and "actual" modifiers denote expenses that will be made in the future, while "continuation of actual expenses paid," means that the expense continues from past practice. Debtors analogy is inapposite and should be rejected.

III. Allowing a deduction for secured debt payments that will not actually be made produces a result that is incompatible with the rest of the statute, which allows only those expenses that are "applicable" to the debtor or "actual".

To avoid giving unintended breadth to the secured debt payment allowance of § 707(b)(2)(A)(iii), it is instructive to compare it with the other expenses allowed in § 707(b)(2)(A). See Ransom, 380 B.R. at 807 ("To determine whether statutory language is plain or ambiguous, we refer to 'the language itself, the specific context in which that language is used, and the broader context of the statute as a whole,'"), quoting Robinson v. Shell Oil Co., 519 U.S. 337, 341, 117 S.Ct. 843, 136 L.Ed.2d 808 (1997). The comparison will assist in determining whether § 707(b)(2)(A)(iii), as applied to nonexistent payments on surrendered collateral, is ambiguous or plain. If the comparison shows that allowance of the nonexistent payment is an anomaly, the court should interpret the item narrowly so as to create consistency with the rest of the law. See Ransom, 330 B.R. at 807 (where a statutory provision seems ambiguous, a holistic approach will clarify its meaning "because only one of the permissible meanings [of that provision] produces a substantive effect that is compatible with the rest of the law").

As explained in the United States Trustee's opening brief, all expenses allowed under § 707(b)(2)(A)(ii) are future-oriented, because they are allowed only if applicable to the debtor or actual in amount.[2] The Debtors acknowledge that most of the expense allowances must by their terms be reasonable and actual. However, they take issue when it comes to the IRS National and Local Standards, noting that "the IRS guidelines are taken from historical data of living expenses [and] do not attempt to project the future." See Appellees' Brief, p. 9, lines 11 - 14.

By adopting the IRS allowances for universal necessities of food, clothing, housing, and transportation, Congress limited the bankruptcy court's discretion to inquire into the actual amounts expended by debtors in these categories. The amounts are based on historical data reflecting the average cost to sustain a household nationally and in the debtor's locality. They bear no relation to and do not support the deduction of illusory amounts, representing acquisition costs for items the debtor elected to incur but has since abandoned.

[2] The IRS National and Local Standards allow the debtor's "applicable" monthly expenses covering basic necessities: food, clothing, household supplies, personal care, and miscellaneous; housing and utilities; transportation. All other expenses, including IRS "Other Necessary Expenses" and additional expenses separately cataloged in § 707(b)(2)(A)(ii), must be "actual" and "reasonably necessary."

In further support of their argument that debtors should be allowed secured debt payments that they do not actually make, the Debtors cite In re Farrar-Johnson, 353 B.R. 224, 230-231, (Bankr.N.D.Ill.2006), in which the court permitted the IRS Local Standard housing expense even though the debtors lived on a military base and did not actually pay for their own housing. The court held that the expense was “applicable” to the debtors, even though it was not “actual”, a requirement of all other expense allowances, noting that the resulting disposable income was “divorced from the debtor’s actual circumstances,” producing a plan that was “‘based on a sort of parallel universe.’” 353 B.R. 224, 230-231 (citation omitted).

The Ninth Circuit BAP rejected Farrar-Johnson in Ransom, 380 B.R. 799, holding that the debtor could not deduct the IRS National Standard vehicle ownership expense, because the debtor owned his vehicle free and clear and therefore the expense did not apply. In reaching its result, the Ransom Court stressed the importance of consistency with the overall statute and furtherance of the statute’s purpose of maximizing payments to creditors, noting that “‘[w]hen the debtor has no monthly ownership expenses, it makes no sense to deduct an ownership expense to shield it from creditors.’” 380 B.R. at 807 (quoting In re Ross-Tousey, 368 B.R. 762, 766 (E.D.Wis. 2007); rev’d, 549 F.3d 1148 (7th Cir.

IV. The 2005 Act's purpose that debtors repay the maximum amount they can afford is subverted by allowing above-median income debtors to deduct non-existent secured debt payments.

Where a statute is capable of more than one interpretation, it must be construed in a manner that is consistent with its purpose. U.S. v. Ron Pair Enters., Inc., 489 U.S. 235, 242; 109 S.Ct. 1026 (1982) (a literal application is required unless it "will produce a result demonstrably at odds with the intention of its drafters.").

Many courts have concluded that § 1325(b) is plain on its face, yet the "opinions are uniform neither in result nor in reasoning." In re Gonzalez, 388 B.R. 292, 297 (Bankr.S.D.Tex. 2008); see also In re Hoss, 392 B.R. at 474 ("There can be no doubt that the drafters created a statutory jumble by incorporating § 707(b)(2) into § 1325(b)(3), . . . and that the unjumbling lends itself to numerous interpretations, all of which are defensible.") Whether this Court perceives the provisions to be clear or ambiguous either by their terms or within their broader context, to allow a deduction for payments the debtor will not make on secured debt that is ultimately discharged, on collateral the debtor has or intends to abandon, is demonstrably at odds with Congress's purpose in enacting the disposable income test. In either case, given two possible interpretations of the statutory language, the court must select the one that harmonizes the applicable provisions and implements the statute's overarching purpose of ensuring that "'debtors pay creditors the maximum they can afford,'" In re Blausey, 2009 WL 153241, at * 8, quoting H.R. Rep. No. 109-31 (I) at 1 (2005), reprinted in 2005 U.S.C.C.A.N. 88, 89. See also Hoss, 392 B.R. at 474.

[3] Ransom is on appeal to the Ninth Circuit, and other courts addressing the issue have followed Farrar-Johnson, holding that "applicable" turns on the debtor's locality and household size rather than whether the debtor has the expense. See, e.g. In re Ross-Tousey, 549 F.3d 1148, 1158. Nevertheless the United States Trustee asserts that Ransom is the proper analysis of the statute. Moreover the alternative interpretation, that debtors are given an allowance for basic necessities whether or not they bear that expense, does not support an allowance for acquisition costs they do not have because they have surrendered the goods.

The Debtors attempt to justify the deduction of non-existent mortgage and vehicle expenses by asserting that to do so satisfies congressional intent by promoting the mechanical test, citing Kagenveama and the Ninth Circuit's focus on the rigid test. The Debtors' argument elevates the mechanical test to a status that defeats the very goal it is meant to serve. Although Kagenveama recognized that use of CMI and application of the mechanical multiplier may result in a disposable income figure that does not accurately predict the future, the Court's reasoning and conclusion were driven by defined statutory terms. Although recognizing that the rigid income component of the calculation may produce inaccurate results in some cases, the fact remains that accuracy in determining disposable income is the goal that drives the analysis whenever possible. See Blausey, 2009 WL 153241 at *8 ($4,000 in disability insurance benefits received by the debtors were included in CMI, as excluding the payments "would result in a figure that does not accurately reflect the [debtors'] ability to repay their debts.")

Clearly inaccurate disposable income is an unfortunate, unintended consequence that occurs in cases where the debtor's actual projected income is inconsistent with CMI. The majority of courts have avoided this result in chapter 13 by disallowing payments on surrendered collateral. See, e.g., In re Hoss, 392 B.R. at 467-469 (cataloging chapter 7 and 13 cases, and noting that the majority disallows such payments in chapter 13). They reach the result by various routes, some by interpreting "projected disposable income," to require an inquiry into the debtor's actual and projected income, see, e.g. In re Thomas, 395 B.R. 914, 923 (B.A.P. 6th Cir. 2008),[4] and others by reasoning that the plan creates a new contract, eliminating the obligation under the original contract for purposes of §

[4] The Debtor cites Thomas for its allowance of the deduction for surrendered collateral in calculating disposable income under both chapter 7 and 13. However, as noted in the text above, Thomas ultimately eliminates the expense when projecting the debtor's disposable income. Additionally, the Thomas court does not conduct a holistic analysis of § 707(b)(2)(ii), thus erroneously concluding that expense allowances are generally backward looking.

707(b)(2)(A)(iii), see, e.g. In re McPherson, 350 B.R. at 46.

Although Kagenveama's interpretation of "projected disposable income" precludes the flexible approach represented by Thomas, the Debtors' theory of expense allowances impermissibly exaggerates the potential inaccuracy of disposable income by inserting nonexistent expenses into the analysis. Simply because courts have recognized that the result of a rigid test may be inaccurate in some cases does not justify an expansive, erroneous reading of the statute.

The Debtors promote their interpretation by asserting that "a mechanical test that cannot be varied by the courts will be uniformly applied to all the debtors and creditors. It is this uniformity that will maximize payment to creditors." (emphasis added.) See Response Brief p. 19, lines 22-25. Yet the mechanical test, no matter how uniformly it is applied, will not in and of itself maximize payment to creditors. The test has no inherent significance and exists only to further the goals of identifying chapter 7 debtors who have disposable income and urge them into chapter 13, and to ensure that chapter 13 debtors pay the maximum they can afford.

CONCLUSION

For these reasons, the United States Trustee respectfully asks this Court to reverse the bankruptcy court's order overruling the United States Trustee's objection to confirmation.

TITLE 11. BANKRUPTCY
CHAPTER 7. LIQUIDATION
SUBCHAPTER I. OFFICERS AND ADMINISTRATION

11 USCS § 707

§ 707. Dismissal of a case or conversion to a case under chapter 11 or 13

(a) The court may dismiss a case under this chapter [11 USCS §§ 701 et seq.] only after notice and a hearing and only for cause, including--

(1) unreasonable delay by the debtor that is prejudicial to creditors;

(2) nonpayment of any fees [or] and charges required under chapter 123 of title 28; and

(3) failure of the debtor in a voluntary case to file, within fifteen days or such additional time as the court may allow after the filing of the petition commencing such case, the information required by paragraph (1) of section 521 [11 USCS § 521], but only on a motion by the United States trustee.

(b)

(1) After notice and a hearing, the court, on its own motion or on a motion by the United States trustee, trustee (or bankruptcy administrator, if any), or any party in interest, may dismiss a case filed by an individual debtor under this chapter whose debts are primarily consumer debts, or, with the debtor's consent, convert such a case to a case under chapter 11 or 13 of this title [11 USCS §§ 1101 et seq. or 1301 et seq.], if it finds that the granting of relief would be an abuse of the provisions of this chapter [11 USCS §§ 701 et seq.]. In making a determination whether to dismiss a case under this section, the court may not take into consideration whether a debtor has made, or continues to make, charitable contributions (that meet the definition of "charitable contribution" under section 548(d)(3) [11 USCS § 548(d)(3)]) to any qualified religious or charitable entity or organization (as that term is defined in section 548(d)(4) [11 USCS § 548(d)(4)]).

(2)

(A) (i) In considering under paragraph (1) whether the granting of relief would be an abuse of the provisions of this chapter [11 USCS §§ 701 et seq.], the court shall presume abuse exists if the debtor's current monthly income reduced by the amounts determined under clauses (ii), (iii), and (iv), and multiplied by 60 is not less than the lesser of--

(I) 25 percent of the debtor's nonpriority unsecured claims in the case, or $ 6,575, whichever is greater; or

(II) $ 10,950.

(ii) (I) The debtor's monthly expenses shall be the debtor's applicable monthly expense amounts specified under the National Standards and Local Standards, and the debtor's actual monthly expenses for the categories specified as Other Necessary Expenses issued by the Internal Revenue Service for the area in which the debtor resides, as in effect on the date of the order for relief, for the debtor, the dependents of the debtor, and the spouse of the debtor in a joint case, if the spouse is not otherwise a dependent. Such expenses shall include reasonably necessary health insurance, disability insurance, and health savings account expenses for the debtor, the spouse of the debtor, or the dependents of the debtor. Notwithstanding any other provision of this clause, the monthly expenses of the debtor shall not include any payments for debts. In addition, the debtor's monthly expenses shall include the debtor's reasonably necessary expenses incurred to maintain the safety of the debtor and the family of the debtor from family violence as identified under section 309 [320] of the Family Violence Prevention and Services Act [42 USCS § 10421], or other applicable Federal law. The expenses included in the debtor's monthly expenses described in the preceding sentence shall be kept confidential by the court. In addition, if it is demonstrated that it is reasonable and necessary, the debtor's monthly expenses may also include an additional allowance for food and clothing of up to 5 percent of the food and clothing categories as specified by the National Standards issued by the Internal Revenue Service.

(II) In addition, the debtor's monthly expenses may include, if applicable, the continuation of actual expenses paid by the debtor that are reasonable and necessary for care and support of an elderly, chronically ill, or disabled household member or member of the debtor's immediate family (including parents, grandparents, siblings, children, and grandchildren of the debtor, the dependents of the debtor, and the spouse of the debtor in a joint case who is not a dependent) and who is unable to pay for such reasonable and necessary expenses.

(III) In addition, for a debtor eligible for chapter 13 [11 USCS §§ 1301 et seq.], the debtor's monthly expenses may include the actual administrative expenses of administering a chapter 13 [11 USCS §§ 1301 et seq.] plan for the district in which the debtor resides, up to an amount of 10 percent of the projected plan payments, as determined under schedules issued by the Executive Office for United States Trustees.

(IV) In addition, the debtor's monthly expenses may include the actual expenses for each dependent child less than 18 years of age, not to exceed $ 1,650 per year per child, to attend a private or public elementary or secondary school if the debtor provides documentation of such expenses and a detailed explanation of why such expenses are reasonable and necessary, and why such expenses are not already accounted for in the National Standards, Local Standards, or Other Necessary Expenses referred to in subclause (I).

(V) In addition, the debtor's monthly expenses may include an allowance for housing and utilities, in excess of the allowance specified by the Local Standards for housing and utilities issued by the Internal Revenue Service, based on the actual expenses for home energy costs if the debtor provides documentation of such actual expenses and demonstrates that such actual expenses are reasonable and necessary.

(iii) The debtor's average monthly payments on account of secured debts shall be calculated as the sum of--

(I) the total of all amounts scheduled as contractually due to secured creditors in each month of the 60 months following the date of the petition; and

(II) any additional payments to secured creditors necessary for the debtor, in filing a plan under chapter 13 of this title [11 USCS §§ 1301 et seq.], to maintain possession of the debtor's primary residence, motor vehicle, or other property necessary for the support of the debtor and the debtor's dependents, that serves as collateral for secured debts;

divided by 60.

(iv) The debtor's expenses for payment of all priority claims (including priority child support and alimony claims) shall be calculated as the total amount of debts entitled to priority, divided by 60.

(B) (i) In any proceeding brought under this subsection, the presumption of abuse may only be rebutted by demonstrating special circumstances, such as a serious medical condition or a call or order to active duty in the Armed Forces, to the extent such special circumstances that justify additional expenses or adjustments of current monthly income for which there is no reasonable alternative.

(ii) In order to establish special circumstances, the debtor shall be required to itemize each additional expense or adjustment of income and to provide--

(I) documentation for such expense or adjustment to income; and

(II) a detailed explanation of the special circumstances that make such expenses or adjustment to income necessary and reasonable.

(iii) The debtor shall attest under oath to the accuracy of any information provided to demonstrate that additional expenses or adjustments to income are required.

(iv) The presumption of abuse may only be rebutted if the additional expenses or adjustments to income referred to in clause (i) cause the product of the debtor's current monthly income reduced by the amounts determined under clauses (ii), (iii), and (iv) of subparagraph (A) when multiplied by 60 to be less than the lesser of--

(I) 25 percent of the debtor's nonpriority unsecured claims, or $ 6,000, whichever is greater; or

(II) $ 10,000.

(C) As part of the schedule of current income and expenditures required under section 521 [11 USCS § 521], the debtor shall include a statement of the debtor's current monthly income, and the calculations that determine whether a presumption arises under subparagraph (A)(i), that show how each such amount is calculated.

(D) Subparagraphs (A) through (C) shall not apply, and the court may not dismiss or convert a case based on any form of means testing, if--

(i) the debtor is a disabled veteran (as defined in section 3741(1) of title 38 [38 USCS § 3741(1)]), and the indebtedness occurred primarily during a period during which he or she was--

(I) on active duty (as defined in section 101(d)(1) of title 10 [10 USCS § 101(d)(1)]); or

(II) performing a homeland defense activity (as defined in section 901(1) of title 32 [32 USCS § 901(1)]); or

(ii) with respect to the debtor, while the debtor is--

(I) on, and during the 540-day period beginning immediately after the debtor is released from, a period of active duty (as defined in section 101(d)(1) of title 10 [10 USCS § 101(d)(1)]) of not less than 90 days; or

(II) performing, and during the 540-day period beginning immediately after the debtor is no longer performing, a homeland defense activity (as defined in section 901(1) of title 32 [32 USCS § 901(1)]) performed for a period of not less than 90 days;

if after September 11, 2001, the debtor while a member of a reserve component of the Armed Forces or a member of the National Guard, was called to such active duty or performed such homeland defense activity.

(3) In considering under paragraph (1) whether the granting of relief would be an abuse of the provisions of this chapter [11 USCS §§ 701 et seq.] in a case in which the presumption in subparagraph (A)(i) of such paragraph does not arise or is rebutted, the court shall consider--

(A) whether the debtor filed the petition in bad faith; or

(B) the totality of the circumstances (including whether the debtor seeks to reject a personal services contract and the financial need for such rejection as sought by the debtor) of the debtor's financial situation demonstrates abuse.

(4) (A) The court, on its own initiative or on the motion of a party in interest, in accordance with the procedures described in rule 9011 of the Federal Rules of Bankruptcy Procedure, may order the attorney for the debtor to reimburse the trustee for all reasonable costs in prosecuting a motion filed under section 707(b) [11 USCS § 707(b)], including reasonable attorneys' fees, if--

(i) a trustee files a motion for dismissal or conversion under this subsection; and

(ii) the court--

(I) grants such motion; and

(II) finds that the action of the attorney for the debtor in filing a case under this chapter [11 USCS §§ 701 et seq.] violated rule 9011 of the Federal Rules of Bankruptcy Procedure.

(B) If the court finds that the attorney for the debtor violated rule 9011 of the Federal Rules of Bankruptcy Procedure, the court, on its own initiative or on the motion of a party in interest, in accordance with such procedures, may order--

(i) the assessment of an appropriate civil penalty against the attorney for the debtor; and

(ii) the payment of such civil penalty to the trustee, the United States trustee (or the bankruptcy administrator, if any).

(C) The signature of an attorney on a petition, pleading, or written motion shall constitute a certification that the attorney has--

(i) performed a reasonable investigation into the circumstances that gave rise to the petition, pleading, or written motion; and

(ii) determined that the petition, pleading, or written motion--

(I) is well grounded in fact; and

(II) is warranted by existing law or a good faith argument for the extension, modification, or reversal of existing law and does not constitute an abuse under paragraph (1).

(D) The signature of an attorney on the petition shall constitute a certification that the attorney has no knowledge after an inquiry that the information in the schedules filed with such petition is incorrect.

(5) (A) Except as provided in subparagraph (B) and subject to paragraph (6), the court, on its own initiative or on the motion of a party in interest, in accordance with the procedures described in rule 9011 of the Federal Rules of Bankruptcy Procedure, may award a debtor all reasonable costs (including reasonable attorneys' fees) in contesting a motion filed by a party in interest (other than a trustee or United States trustee (or bankruptcy administrator, if any)) under this subsection if--

(i) the court does not grant the motion; and

(ii) the court finds that--

(I) the position of the party that filed the motion violated rule 9011 of the Federal Rules of Bankruptcy Procedure; or

(II) the attorney (if any) who filed the motion did not comply with the requirements of clauses (i) and (ii) of paragraph (4)(C), and the motion was made solely for the purpose of coercing a debtor into waiving a right guaranteed to the debtor under this title.

(B) A small business that has a claim of an aggregate amount less than $ 1,100 shall not be subject to subparagraph (A)(ii)(I).

(C) For purposes of this paragraph--

(i) the term "small business" means an unincorporated business, partnership, corporation, association, or organization that--

(I) has fewer than 25 full-time employees as determined on the date on which the motion is filed; and

(II) is engaged in commercial or business activity; and

(ii) the number of employees of a wholly owned subsidiary of a corporation includes the employees of--

(I) a parent corporation; and

(II) any other subsidiary corporation of the parent corporation.

(6) Only the judge or United States trustee (or bankruptcy administrator, if any) may file a motion under section 707(b) [11 USCS § 707(b)], if the current monthly income of the debtor, or in a joint case, the debtor and the debtor's spouse, as of the date of the order for relief, when multiplied by 12, is equal to or less than--

(A) in the case of a debtor in a household of 1 person, the median family income of the applicable State for 1 earner;

(B) in the case of a debtor in a household of 2, 3, or 4 individuals, the highest median family income of the applicable State for a family of the same number or fewer individuals; or

(C) in the case of a debtor in a household exceeding 4 individuals, the highest median family income of the applicable State for a family of 4 or fewer individuals, plus $ 575 per month for each individual in excess of 4.

(7) (A) No judge, United States trustee (or bankruptcy administrator, if any), trustee, or other party in interest may file a motion under paragraph (2) if the current monthly income of the debtor, including a veteran (as that term is defined in section 101 of title 38 [38 USCS § 101]), and the debtor's spouse combined, as of the date of the order for relief when multiplied by 12, is equal to or less than--

(i) in the case of a debtor in a household of 1 person, the median family income of the applicable State for 1 earner;

(ii) in the case of a debtor in a household of 2, 3, or 4 individuals, the highest median family income of the applicable State for a family of the same number or fewer individuals; or

(iii) in the case of a debtor in a household exceeding 4 individuals, the highest median family income of the applicable State for a family of 4 or fewer individuals, plus $ 575 per month for each individual in excess of 4.

(B) In a case that is not a joint case, current monthly income of the debtor's spouse shall not be considered for purposes of subparagraph (A) if--

(i) (I) the debtor and the debtor's spouse are separated under applicable nonbankruptcy law; or

(II) the debtor and the debtor's spouse are living separate and apart, other than for the purpose of evading subparagraph (A); and

(ii) the debtor files a statement under penalty of perjury--

(I) specifying that the debtor meets the requirement of subclause (I) or (II) of clause (i); and

(II) disclosing the aggregate, or best estimate of the aggregate, amount of any cash or money payments received from the debtor's spouse attributed to the debtor's current monthly income.

(c)

(1) In this subsection--

(A) the term "crime of violence" has the meaning given such term in section 16 of title 18 [18 USCS § 16]; and

(B) the term "drug trafficking crime" has the meaning given such term in section 924(c)(2) of title 18 [18 USCS § 924(c)(2)].

(2) Except as provided in paragraph (3), after notice and a hearing, the court, on a motion by the victim of a crime of violence or a drug trafficking crime, may when it is in the best interest of the victim dismiss a voluntary case filed under this chapter [11 USCS §§ 701 et seq.] by a debtor who is an individual if such individual was convicted of such crime.

(3) The court may not dismiss a case under paragraph (2) if the debtor establishes by a preponderance of the evidence that the filing of a case under this chapter [11 USCS §§ 701 et seq.] is necessary to satisfy a claim for a domestic support obligation.

TITLE 11. BANKRUPTCY
CHAPTER 13. ADJUSTMENT OF DEBTS OF AN INDIVIDUAL WITH REGULAR INCOME
SUBCHAPTER II. THE PLAN

11 USCS § 1325

§ 1325. Confirmation of plan

(a) Except as provided in subsection (b), the court shall confirm a plan if--

(1) the plan complies with the provisions of this chapter [11 USCS §§ 1301 et seq.] and with the other applicable provisions of this title [11 USCS §§ 101 et seq.];

(2) any fee, charge, or amount required under chapter 123 of title 28 [28 USCS §§ 1911 et seq.], or by the plan, to be paid before confirmation, has been paid;

(3) the plan has been proposed in good faith and not by any means forbidden by law;

(4) the value, as of the effective date of the plan, of property to be distributed under the plan on account of each allowed unsecured claim is not less than the amount that would be paid on such claim if the estate of the debtor were liquidated under chapter 7 of this title [11 USCS §§ 701 et seq.] on such date;

(5) with respect to each allowed secured claim provided for by the plan--

(A) the holder of such claim has accepted the plan;

(B) (i) the plan provides that--

(I) the holder of such claim retain the lien securing such claim until the earlier of--

(aa) the payment of the underlying debt determined under nonbankruptcy law; or

(bb) discharge under section 1328 [11 USCS § 1328]; and

(II) if the case under this chapter is dismissed or converted without completion of the plan, such lien shall also be retained by such holder to the extent recognized by applicable nonbankruptcy law;

(ii) the value, as of the effective date of the plan, of property to be distributed under the plan on account of such claim is not less than the allowed amount of such claim; and

(iii) if--

(I) property to be distributed pursuant to this subsection is in the form of periodic payments, such payments shall be in equal monthly amounts; and

(II) the holder of the claim is secured by personal property, the amount of such payments shall not be less than an amount sufficient to provide to the holder of such claim adequate protection during the period of the plan; or

(C) the debtor surrenders the property securing such claim to such holder;

(6) the debtor will be able to make all payments under the plan and to comply with the plan;

(7) the action of the debtor in filing the petition was in good faith;

(8) the debtor has paid all amounts that are required to be paid under a domestic support obligation and that first become payable after the date of the filing of the petition if the debtor is required by a judicial or administrative order, or by statute, to pay such domestic support obligation; and

(9) the debtor has filed all applicable Federal, State, and local tax returns as required by section 1308 [11 USCS § 1308].

For purposes of paragraph (5), section 506 [11 USCS § 506] shall not apply to a claim described in that paragraph if the creditor has a purchase money security interest securing the debt that is the subject of the claim, the debt was incurred within the 910-day preceding the date of the filing of the petition, and the collateral for that debt consists of a motor vehicle (as defined in section 30102 of title 49 [49 USCS § 30102]) acquired for the personal use of the debtor, or if collateral for that debt consists of any other thing of value, if the debt was incurred during the 1-year period preceding that filing.

(1) If the trustee or the holder of an allowed unsecured claim objects to the confirmation of the plan, then the court may not approve the plan unless, as of the effective date of the plan--

(A) the value of the property to be distributed under the plan on account of such claim is not less than the amount of such claim; or

(B) the plan provides that all of the debtor's projected disposable income to be received in the applicable commitment period beginning on the date that the first payment is due under the plan will be applied to make payments to unsecured creditors under the plan.

(2) For purposes of this subsection, the term "disposable income" means current monthly income received by the debtor (other than child support payments, foster care payments, or disability payments for a dependent child made in accordance with applicable nonbankruptcy law to the extent reasonably necessary to be expended for such child) less amounts reasonably necessary to be expended--

(A) (i) for the maintenance or support of the debtor or a dependent of the debtor, or for a domestic support obligation, that first becomes payable after the date the petition is filed; and

(ii) for charitable contributions (that meet the definition of "charitable contribution" under section 548(d)(3) [11 USCS § 548(d)(3)] to a qualified religious or charitable entity or organization (as defined in section 548(d)(4) [11 USCS § 548(d)(4)]) in an amount not to exceed 15 percent of gross income of the debtor for the year in which the contributions are made; and

(B) if the debtor is engaged in business, for the payment of expenditures necessary for the continuation, preservation, and operation of such business.

(3) Amounts reasonably necessary to be expended under paragraph (2), other than subparagraph (A)(ii) of paragraph (2), shall be determined in accordance with subparagraphs (A) and (B) of section 707(b)(2) [11 USCS § 707(b)(2)], if the debtor has current monthly income, when multiplied by 12, greater than--

(A) in the case of a debtor in a household of 1 person, the median family income of the applicable State for 1 earner;

(B) in the case of a debtor in a household of 2, 3, or 4 individuals, the highest median family income of the applicable State for a family of the same number or fewer individuals; or

(C) in the case of a debtor in a household exceeding 4 individuals, the highest median family income of the applicable State for a family of 4 or fewer individuals, plus $ 575 per month for each individual in excess of 4.

(4) For purposes of this subsection, the "applicable commitment period"--

(A) subject to subparagraph (B), shall be--

(i) 3 years; or

(ii) not less than 5 years, if the current monthly income of the debtor and the debtor's spouse combined, when multiplied by 12, is not less than--

(I) in the case of a debtor in a household of 1 person, the median family income of the applicable State for 1 earner;

(II) in the case of a debtor in a household of 2, 3, or 4 individuals, the highest median family income of the applicable State for a family of the same number or fewer individuals; or

(III) in the case of a debtor in a household exceeding 4 individuals, the highest median family income of the applicable State for a family of 4 or fewer individuals, plus $ 575 per month for each individual in excess of 4; and

(B) may be less than 3 or 5 years, whichever is applicable under subparagraph (A), but only if the plan provides for payment in full of all allowed unsecured claims over a shorter period.

(c) After confirmation of a plan, the court may order any entity from whom the debtor receives income to pay all or any part of such income to the trustee.

ON APPEAL FROM THE UNITED STATES DISTRICT COURT FOR THE SOUTHERN DISTRICT OF GEORGIA

BRIEF OF APPELLEE UNITED STATES TRUSTEE

STATEMENT OF JURISDICTION

This case is an appeal from a final Order of the United States District Court for the Southern District of Georgia, which affirmed a decision of the United States Bankruptcy Court for the Southern District of Georgia. The United States Court of Appeals for the Eleventh Circuit has jurisdiction over this appeal pursuant to 28 U.S.C. § 158(d).

STATEMENT OF THE ISSUES

(1) Did the district court err in affirming the bankruptcy court's dismissal of the Smiths' case for bad faith pursuant to 11 U.S.C. § 707(a)?

(2) Did the district court err in affirming the bankruptcy court's dismissal of the Smiths' case for substantial abuse pursuant to 11 U.S.C. § 707(b)?

STATEMENT OF THE CASE

A. Course of Proceedings below

The United States Trustee adopts the statement of the Course of Proceedings set forth in the Brief of Appellants 2.

B. Statement of facts

On June 12, 1996, Dennis and Vicki Smith ("the Smiths") filed a petition for relief under the liquidation provisions of chapter 7 of the Bankruptcy Code. R-1-1(1)-1.[1] The Smiths reported combined monthly income from trade or business of $4,197.00 ($50,364.00 annually), less payroll deductions of $1,332.92, plus other income of $200, for a total gross monthly income of $3,064.08. R-1-1(1)-23. The Smiths also reported monthly expenses of $4,064.57. R-1-1(1)-25. The Smiths scheduled secured debt of $207,806.00, priority tax debt of $19,300, and general unsecured debt of $79,156.96. R-1-1(1)-4. The majority of their debt was consumer debt. R-1-21.

A trial on the motion of the United States Trustee to dismiss the case was held on January 6, 1997. R-1-1.

At trial, Dennis Smith testified that he and his wife are currently self-employed real estate agents. R-1-13. Dennis Smith was formerly employed as a Vice President for manufacturing for Greenfield Industries, earning approximately $75,000 annually. R-1-14, 15. He was terminated from employment in October of 1992, receiving six months' salary as part of his severance package. R-1-14. At that time, Vicki Smith was employed full-time as a real estate agent and Dennis Smith was employed part-time as a real estate agent in addition to his full-time employment. After his termination, Dennis Smith worked in real estate full time with his spouse. R-1-14, 15. Dennis Smith further testified that their annual household income in 1992 was approximately $133,000. R-1-15.

Since his departure from Greenfield industries in 1992, the Smiths' annual income declined. In 1994, the Smiths reported total income of $81,842. R-1-1(6)-1. The Smiths reported total income of $70,543 in 1995. R-1-1(7)-1. In 1995, the Smiths reported gross business income of $136,229 and total business expenses of $68,172. R-1-1(7)-6. In their schedules, the Smiths claimed monthly gross business income in 1996 of $9,600, which on an annualized basis totaled $115,200, and monthly business expenses of $5,403 ($64,836 annually). R-1-1(1)-27.

At trial, however, it was determined that gross business income for 1996 actually totaled $154,292.91, an average of $ 12,857.74 a month.[2]

[2] Dennis Smith at one point testified that their 1996 gross income was $139,000, R-1-70, but the higher number was calculated from bank statements and Smith's own testimony for the period October to December 1996. Deposits from commissions totaled $42,355.11 for the period January 1 to June 12, 1996. R-1-1(8)-1; R-1-1(9)-1; R-1-50, 51. From June 28 to September 30, 1996, deposits totaled $71,013.30. R-1-1(10)-2, 4, 6, 8; R-1-35, 36. Finally, Dennis Smith testified that gross income for October 1996 totaled $15,514, November $12,070, and December $13,340.50. R-1-76. The bankruptcy court apparently made a computational error in the Smiths' favor, stating a lower figure of $152,635, or $12,719.50 monthly, an error of $138.24 monthly. R-1-1(17)-3. Throughout this Brief, the correct computations are used. The Smiths have waived any argument on this minor error because they have not raised it below or before this Court. See United States v. Oakley, 744 F.2d 1553, 1556 (11th Cir. 1984) (holding that arguments raised for first time in reply brief not properly before court). Furthermore, the computational error should be ignored on review because it

Dennis Smith also testified that business expenses were greater than scheduled, and averaged just less than $8,000 from October through December 1996. R-1-79. Dennis Smith admitted, however, that they were relatively unfamiliar with sound business accounting practices and failed to segregate business and personal expenses until the eve of filing. R-1-35, 40, 59. Based upon the contradictory evidence offered by the Smiths, the bankruptcy court concluded that the monthly business expenses of the Smiths averaged $6,000. R-1-1(17)-3, 4. In addition, the bankruptcy court found that a reasonable payroll deduction for taxes should total $2,000, versus the $1332.92 originally scheduled. R-1-1(17)-4. Based upon these adjustments, the bankruptcy court found that the Smiths' net after-tax income was $5057.74 ($12,857.74 + $200 - $6000 - $2000). Id.

The scheduled expenses of the Smiths also received scrutiny. Dennis Smith testified at trial that he leased a 1996 Lexus ES-300 luxury sedan three months prior to the filing of their bankruptcy petition for $571 a month. R-1-28, 29. The Smiths also owned a 1990 Buick LeSabre automobile subject to a monthly auto loan payment of $143. R-1-27. The Lexus lease was entered into by “rolling over” an existing $478 a month lease with one year remaining for a 1993 Lexus. R-1-28, 29, 63 to 65. Dennis Smith admitted that when entering into the new lease he and his wife were experiencing financial difficulties. R-1-28, 30. He also admitted that an adequate automobile could be obtained for $300 a month or less. R-1-30.

The Smiths scheduled $1695 as a monthly mortgage payment. R-1-1(1)-25. Dennis Smith testified that their residence in Columbia County, Georgia was valued between $212,000 and $215,000, and was subject to mortgages totaling $178,000. R-1-1(1)-1; R-1-23, 24. He agreed that the cost of an average house in the locality was approximately $100,000, less than half the value of their residence. R-1-26. Dennis Smith testified that he made no effort to sell the residence, would have suffered no loss in a sale, and could have reduced their housing expenses. R-1-25 to 27. Based upon the evidence, the bankruptcy court found that a reasonable housing expense would be $1,000. R-1-1(17)-10.

As mitigating factors, Dennis Smith testified that he sold his Bass Boat, eliminating a $230 monthly payment and netting approximately $700. R-1-18, 19. He testified that they did not carry health insurance, but he admitted that they had not carried health insurance since his termination from Greenfield Industries in October 1992. R-1-17. Dennis Smith let his life insurance expire, but this only resulted in a monthly savings of $80. Id. He also testified that they "substantially" cut back on credit card purchases, but they did not end credit card use entirely. R-1-61. Dennis Smith, however, never made any effort to analyze their credit card debt service. R-1-87. Finally, Dennis Smith testified that they took no vacations, delayed some home repairs, did not purchase any new clothing for themselves, and reduced their long distance telephone expenses. R-1-17, 18, 60.

The bankruptcy court also made findings of fact regarding the ability of the Smiths to pay their creditors in a hypothetical chapter 13 case by revising their monthly budget set forth in their bankruptcy petition. The bankruptcy court removed a scheduled $600 monthly payment to the Internal Revenue Service and the Georgia Department of Taxation because their claims would be addressed in a chapter 13 plan. R-1-1(17)-10. The bankruptcy court also found that their monthly expenses were $2,669.67 ($4,064.67 scheduled - $100 reduction in auto payment - $695 reduction in mortgage/rent payment - $600 payment to taxing authorities). R-1-1(17)-11. After subtracting the monthly expenses from monthly income of $5,057.74, disposable income of $2,388.07 remains. Id. The bankruptcy court then assumed payment of this amount for 36 months yielding $85,970.52, less a 6% fee to the chapter 13 standing trustee of $3,438.82, for a total of $82,531.70 available for unsecured creditors. Id. After paying the scheduled priority tax claims of $19,300, the remaining unsecured creditors would receive $63,231.70, a 79.9% dividend on their claims totaling $79,165.96.[3] Id.

Finally, the bankruptcy court found that Dennis Smith's termination from Greenfield Industries in 1992, R-1-14, was not the calamity that caused the bankruptcy filing. R-1-1(17)-9, 10. This was contradicted by the [3] In addition to the computational error in the Smiths' favor noted in footnote 2, supra, the bankruptcy court made two other de minimis computational errors in calculating a hypothetical chapter 13 plan. Instead of reducing the mortgage payment to $1000 by subtracting $695 from expenses, the court subtracted $1000, an error of $305. R-1-1(17)-11. In addition, the court loses an additional $0.08 in monthly after tax income. R-1-1(17)-4. Based upon these errors, the bankruptcy court calculated the dividend to creditors to be 84.8% instead of 79.9%. As in footnote 2, the errors are harmless and the Smiths have waived any argument on this issue.

significant income earned by the Smiths from their real estate employment. R-1-1(17)-9. Instead, the bankruptcy court found that the filing was cause by the Smiths inability to reduce their expenses and live within their means. R-1-1(17)-9,10.

C. Standard of Review

This Court must accept the findings of fact of the bankruptcy court unless they are clearly erroneous. E.g., McMillan v. Joseph Decosimo and Company (In re Das A. Borden & Co.), 131 F.3d 1459, 1462 (11th Cir. 1997). A finding is clearly erroneous only when “the reviewing court on the entire evidence is left with the definite and firm conviction that a mistake has been committed.” United States v. United States Gypsum Co., 333 U.S. 364, 395 (1948). If the bankruptcy court's findings as trial court are plausible in light of the record viewed in its entirety, a reviewing court may not reverse even if convinced that it would have weighed the evidence differently as a trier of fact. Anderson v. City of Bessemer City, N.C., 470 U.S. 564, 574 (1985). This standard of review is applied with “particular rigor” if a bankruptcy court’s findings of fact are affirmed by the district court as in the present case. Jet Florida, Inc. v. American Airlines, Inc. (In re Jet Florida Sys., Inc.), 861 F.2d 1555, 1558 (11th Cir. 1988).

Conclusions of law are reviewed de novo. E.g., Das A. Borden, 131 F.3d at 1462. The decision of the district court may be affirmed on any basis supported by the record. Blum v. Bacon, 457 U.S. 132, 137 n.5 (1982).

SUMMARY OF ARGUMENT

The district court did not err in affirming the bankruptcy court's decision to dismiss the Smiths' chapter 7 bankruptcy case. The bankruptcy court's decision was based upon two independent statutory grounds: section 707(a) of the Bankruptcy Code, title 11 U.S.C., and section 707(b).

The bankruptcy court concluded correctly that a debtor's bad faith can constitute "cause" supporting dismissal under section 707(a). Bankruptcy relief is intended only for the "honest but unfortunate debtor," and the concept of good faith pervades the Bankruptcy Code. To hold otherwise, simply because good faith is not explicitly required in the Bankruptcy Code, creates an absurd result, and would allow dishonest and unneedy individuals to obtain a discharge in bankruptcy.

The bankruptcy court's finding that the Smiths filed their petition in bad faith is amply supported by the record. The Smiths, in spite of their financial difficulties, failed to take meaningful measures to reduce their expenses and pay their just debts. Instead, the Smiths remained in a residence subject to mortgages far in excess of what is reasonable in their locality. In addition, the Smiths leased a luxury automobile within three months of filing bankruptcy, even though they had more than one year remaining on an existing auto lease, and owned another automobile.

The evidence in this case amply supports the bankruptcy court's conclusion that the Smiths' filing for chapter 7 relief was a "substantial abuse." The Smiths could repay their unsecured creditors almost 80% of their claims, and they filed for chapter 7 relief in bad faith.   Although the issue of "substantial abuse" is a matter of first impression before this Court, the majority of other circuit courts that have considered this issue have concluded that an ability to pay debts may alone constitute substantial abuse. The majority also hold that a debtor's bad faith can constitute substantial abuse.

ARGUMENT

I. THE DISTRICT COURT CORRECTLY AFFIRMED THE BANKRUPTCY COURT'S DISMISSAL OF THE SMITHS' CASE FOR BAD FAITH PURSUANT TO 11 U.S.C. § 707(a)

A. A finding of bad faith can support dismissal under 11 U.S.C. § 707(a)

Section 707(a) of the Bankruptcy Code, title 11 U.S.C., provides that a court:

> may dismiss a case under this chapter only after notice and a hearing and only for cause, including
>
> (1) unreasonable delay by the debtor that is prejudicial to creditors;
>
> (2) nonpayment of any fees or charges required under chapter 123 of title 28; and
> (3) failure of the debtor in a voluntary case to file . . . the information required by paragraph (1) of section 521, but only on a motion by the United States Trustee.

The plain text states that a case may be dismissed upon any ground constituting "cause," and sets out some nonexclusive examples of what could constitute "cause." See 11 U.S.C. § 102(3) (term "including" not limiting).

Although this Court has not decided whether bad faith is a ground for dismissal under section 707(a), it has held that bad faith is a ground for dismissing a chapter 11 case. Albany Partners, Ltd. v. Westbrook (In re Albany Partners, Ltd.), 749 F.2d 670 (11th Cir. 1984). The court in Albany interpreted section 1112 of the Bankruptcy Code which permits a court to dismiss or convert a chapter 11 case for "cause," and this section, like section 707(a), contains nonexclusive examples of "cause." Id. at 674. Because of the equitable nature of determining whether to dismiss or convert a chapter 11 case for "cause," the Court in Albany concluded that a debtor's lack of good faith may constitute cause for dismissal. Id. The reasoning in Albany applies equally to a chapter 7 debtor who must appear before the same bankruptcy court.[4] Bankruptcy courts are courts of equity, and bankruptcy relief is only intended for "the honest but unfortunate debtor." Grogan v. Garner, 498 U.S. 279, 287 (1991) (quoting Local Loan v. Hunt, 292 U.S. 234, 244 (1934)).

One of the leading cases holding that a court can dismiss a chapter 7 case under section 707(a) for bad faith is Industrial Insurance Services, Inc. v.

[4] It is also similar to a court's inherent power to sanction the bad faith litigant. Cf. Chambers v. NASCO, Inc., 501 U.S. 32, 43-46 (1991).

Zick (In re Zick), 931 F.2d 1124 (6th Cir. 1990). In Zick, the Sixth Circuit held that good faith is a jurisdictional requirement for chapter 7 relief:

> good faith . . . is inherent in the purposes of bankruptcy relief. . . . Bankruptcy protection was not intended to assist those who, despite their own misconduct, are attempting to preserve a comfortable standard of living at the expense of their creditors. Good faith and candor are necessary prerequisites to obtaining a fresh start. The bankruptcy laws are grounded on the fresh start concept. There is no right, however, to a head start.

Id. at 1129-30 (quoting with approval In re Jones, 114 B.R. 917, 926 (Bankr. N.D. Ohio 1990)). Among other reasons supporting dismissal, the court in Zick concluded that "a failure to make significant lifestyle adjustments or efforts to repay" may be sufficient to support dismissal for bad faith. Zick, 931 F.2d at 1128. In other words, one factor in a bad faith analysis is whether the debtor has engaged in any "belt-tightening" before deciding to file for chapter 7 relief. In re Griffieth, 209 B.R. 823, 827 (Bankr. N.D.N.Y. 1996); In re Hammonds, 139 B.R. 535, 542 (Bankr. D. Colo. 1992). Reported lower court cases in the Eleventh Circuit also uniformly recognize that a chapter 7 case may be dismissed for bad faith. In re Sammons, 210 B.R. 197 (Bankr. N.D. Fla. 1997); In re Tanguay, 206 B.R. 575 (Bankr. M.D.

Fla. 1997); Turner v. United States, 195 B.R. 476 (Bankr. N.D. Ala. 1996); In re Davidoff, 185 B.R. 631 (Bankr. S.D. Fla. 1995); In re Ripley & Hill P.A., 176 B.R. 596 (Bankr. M.D. Fla. 1994); In re Creazzo, 172 B.R. 657 (Bankr. M.D. Fla. 1994).

The Eighth Circuit in Huckfeldt v. Huckfeldt (In re Huckfeldt), 39 F.3d 829, 832 (8th Cir. 1994), also recognizes that a bankruptcy court may deny chapter 7 relief to a person who is not an "honest but unfortunate debtor." Although the court in Huckfeldt was loath to use the term "bad faith," preferring merely to state that dismissal was "for cause," id., the result is consistent with the holding in Zick. In Huckfeldt, the debtor was using the bankruptcy to intentionally unload debt which he could shortly begin to repay in order to force his ex-spouse into bankruptcy.[5] Id. at 830. Although the court in Huckfeldt intimated that a mere ability to repay is not cause for [5] The bankruptcy court found that the debtor and his ex-spouse had incurred joint debt in part to pay for the debtor's college and medical school education. Huckfeldt, 39 F.3d at 830. The debtor filed his petition six months before he would complete his residency in surgery, and took steps to deliberately reduce his annual income. Id.

dismissal under section 707(a), the court recognized that it could be bad faith to attempt to discharge debt for an improper purpose. Id. at 832. In this regard, the holding in Huckfeldt is similar to the holding in Zick because Zick held that it is an improper purpose to discharge debt to “preserve a comfortable standard of living.” Zick, 931 F.2d at 1129.

Scattered lower courts have held that a debtor’s bad faith will not support dismissal. In re Etcheverry, 221 B.R. 524 (Bankr. D. Colo. 1998) (appeal pending); In re Landes, 195 B.R. 855 (Bankr. E.D. Pa. 1996); In re Latimer, 82 B.R. 354 (Bankr. E.D. Pa. 1988). These cases rely upon crabbed interpretations of the Bankruptcy Code. For example, the court in Etcheverry held that such a provision cannot be found in the plain terms of the Code. 221 B.R. at 525-26. This court ignores the fact that bankruptcy courts are courts of equity, and can only grant relief to those deserving of it, i.e., the “honest but unfortunate debtor.” The Etcheverry court’s purported reliance on the plain text of the Code, if followed to its logical extreme, would allow the “dishonest and fortunate” debtor to obtain a discharge of his unsecured debt. Such a conclusion is plainly an absurd result not intended by Congress. See generally Public Citizen v. U.S. Dep’t of Justice, 491 U.S. 440, 454-55 (1989) (plain language of statute not followed when it would compel an odd or absurd result).

In the face of this absurd construction, one commentator has attempted to argue that a chapter 7 debtor, unlike a chapter 11 debtor, need not exhibit good faith in seeking relief:

> When a debtor reorganizes, it is allowed to retain its assets . . . . In return for these benefits, Congress requires the debtor to [act] in good faith, for the mutually beneficial purpose of reorganization. On the other hand, when a debtor liquidates, it surrenders all of its nonexempt assets for distribution. . . . Since liquidation requires no ongoing relationship between the debtor and its creditors, the remedy of discharge should be made available to any debtor who wishes to pay the price . . . . This is true regardless of whether the debtor's motive in seeking such a remedy was grounded in good faith.

Katie T. Kimlinger & William P. Wassweiler, The Good Faith Fable of 11 U.S.C. § 707(a): How Bankruptcy Courts Have Invented a Good Faith Filing Requirement for Chapter 7 Debtors, 13 Bankr. Dev. J. 61, 65 (1996). Their argument is wanting. It ignores the real nature of a chapter 7 proceeding (for individuals), which is to obtain a discharge of indebtedness and not to liquidate assets. Over 90 percent of chapter 7 cases, like the instant case, involve no distribution to creditors. See Jean Braucher, Increasing Uniformity in Consumer Bankruptcy: Means Testing as a Distraction and the National Bankruptcy Review Commission as a Starting Point, 6 Am. Bankr. L. Rev. 1, 24 (1998)(discussing estimates of percentage of no-asset cases). Given the real benefit provided to debtors -- a discharge of all indebtedness with limited exceptions -- and the countervailing total loss to creditors in the great majority of cases, the opportunity for bad faith by parties wishing to live comfortably at the expense of their creditors is great. For these reasons, the courts must not permit debtors lacking good faith to avail themselves of a discharge.

B. Dismissal of the Smiths' case under 11 U.S.C. § 707(a) for bad faith was proper

By filing bankruptcy, the Smiths attempted to use a chapter 7 discharge to maintain a lifestyle beyond their means by shedding their credit card debt. They acted in bad faith by failing to engage in a meaningful reduction of their lifestyle in an attempt to meet their financial obligations.

The Smiths were attempting to maintain a residence valued between $213,000 and $215,000, more than twice the value of the average house in their locality, by paying $1695 monthly on mortgages totaling $178,000. R-1-23, 24. Despite the fact that the Smiths were real estate agents (thereby eliminating or reducing real estate commissions), R-1-14, 15, and could have avoided any loss on the sale, R-1-25 to 27, the Smiths ignored this obvious avenue for reducing their expenses. The mortgage payment, their largest monthly expense, was excessive. The willingness of the Smiths to maintain these payments at the expense of their other creditors bears all of the marks of bad faith.

The conclusion that the Smiths acted in bad faith by blithely attempting to use a chapter 7 discharge to live beyond their means was driven home by their lease of a 1996 Lexus ES-300 luxury automobile on the eve of filing bankruptcy. R-1-28, 29. Dennis Smith admitted that they were in severe financial difficulties when he entered into the auto lease which called for monthly payments of $571, and further admitted that an adequate automobile could have been obtained for only $300 a month. R-1-28, 30. The lease was affected by a “roll over” of an existing Lexus lease that was approximately $100 cheaper and had one year remaining. R-1-63 to 65. Any rationale for leasing the Lexus was further weakened by the fact that the Smiths already possessed adequate transportation in a 1990 Buick LeSabre, and could have used the 1993 Lexus for another year. R-1-27, 29.

The evidence presented by Dennis Smith of their piecemeal and half-hearted attempts to reduce expenses fails to demonstrate that the bankruptcy court erred in dismissing the case. The only substantial reduction in the Smiths' expenses occurred when Dennis Smith sold his Bass boat, eliminating a $230 monthly payment and netting approximately $700. R-1-18, 19. Other reductions were minor or unquantifiable. Although the Smiths did not carry health insurance, they had not carried health insurance since Dennis Smith's termination from Greenfield Industries in October 1992. R-1-17. Dennis Smith let his life insurance expire, but this only resulted in a monthly savings of $80. Id. He also testified that they "substantially" cut back on credit card purchases, but they did not end credit card use entirely. R-1-61. The fact that at times the minimum credit card payments were made instead of paying secured creditors or taxing authorities does not evidence good faith but merely highlights the unwillingness of the Smiths to address their obligations by curtailing their comfortable lifestyle.

Finally, Dennis Smith testified that they took no vacations, delayed some home repairs, did not purchase any new clothing for themselves, and reduced their long distance telephone expenses. R-1-17, 18, 60. These minor reductions do not evidence the belt-tightening called for, but merely highlight their unwillingness to address their excessive mortgage and automobile lease expenses.

In conclusion, the district court's decision to affirm the bankruptcy court's dismissal for bad faith is amply supported by the record. The district and bankruptcy court's correctly interpreted section 707(a), and the Smiths have failed to show that the bankruptcy court's findings were clearly erroneous.[6] [6] The Smiths also argue that the motion of the United States Trustee to dismiss under section 707(a) was procedurally improper because entry of a discharge is not delayed even if a motion under section 707(a) is pending. Brief of Appellants 11-14. This argument is frivolous. No order of discharge was ever entered because a motion covered by Fed. R. Bankr. P. 1017(e) (the United States Trustee's 707(b) motion) was pending. Fed R. Bankr. P. 4004(c)(1)(d).

II. THE DISTRICT COURT CORRECTLY AFFIRMED THE BANKRUPTCY COURT'S DISMISSAL OF THE SMITHS' CASE FOR SUBSTANTIAL ABUSE PURSUANT TO 11 U.S.C. § 707(b)

A. An ability to repay is sufficient to support dismissal for substantial abuse

Section 707(b) of the Bankruptcy Code provides that a court > on its own motion or on a motion by the United States trustee, but not at the request or suggestion of any party in interest, may dismiss a case filed by an individual debtor under this chapter whose debts are primarily consumer debts if it finds that the granting of relief would be a substantial abuse of the provisions of this chapter. There shall be a presumption in favor of granting the relief requested by the debtor.

This provision was added to the Bankruptcy Code by Title III of the Bankruptcy Amendments and Federal Judgeship Act of 1984, Pub. L. No. 98-353, 98 Stat. 355 (1984). The term "substantial abuse" is not defined in the Bankruptcy Code. Committee reports for this act also were not issued, which would have been an authoritative expression of legislative intent. Garcia v. United States, 469 U.S. 70, 76 (1984). Statements by individual legislators discussing this section are divided, Zolg v. Kelly (In re Kelly), 841

F.2d 908, 914 n.6 (9th Cir. 1988), and are of negligible utility in determining Congressional intent. Garcia, 469 U.S. at 76.

However, the Senate Judiciary Committee issued a report in 1983 on S. 445, a predecessor of the 1984 Act. Kelly, 914 F.2d at 914. It states that dismissal for substantial abuse is intended to > uphold[] creditors' interests in obtaining repayment where such repayment would not be a burden . . . . if a debtor can meet his debts without difficulty as they come due, use of Chapter 7 would represent a substantial abuse.

S. Rep. No. 65, 98th Cong., 1st Sess. 53, 54 (1983). One court also noted that the primary impetus for the 1984 enactment of 707(b) was the credit industry's concern over the increasing use of chapter 7 relief by consumer debtors who were able to repay their debts since enactment of the Bankruptcy Code in 1978. First USA v. Lamanna (In re Lamanna), --- F.3d ---, 1998 WL 514106 at *2 (1st Cir. Aug. 25, 1998).

This Court has not yet decided a case involving "substantial abuse" under section 707(b)[7]. While other Circuits espouse slightly differing circumstances. In re Weber, 208 B.R. 575 (Bankr. M.D. Fla. 1997) (based on ability to pay and totality of circumstances); In re Woodhall, 104 B.R. 544 (Bankr. M.D. Ga. 1989); In re Tefertiller, 104 B.R. 513 (Bankr. N.D. Ga. 1989); In re Busbin, 95 B.R. 240 (Bankr. N.D. Ga. 1989); In re Strange, 85 B.R. 662 (Bankr. S.D. Ga. 1988). Some cases appear based solely upon ability to pay without consideration of other factors. In re Seager, 211 B.R. 81 (Bankr. M.D. Fla. 1997) (follows 8th and 9th Circuits); In re Matias, 203 B.R. 490 (Bankr. S.D. Fla. 1996) (same); In re Dickerson, 193 B.R. 67 (Bankr. M.D. Fla. 1996); In re Dickerson, 166 B.R. 480 (Bankr. N.D. Ga. 1993); In re Rushing, 93 B.R. 750 (Bankr. N.D. Fla. 1988) (based upon ability to pay and debtor's intent to maintain lifestyle). Some cases appear to adopt the totality of circumstances test enunciated by the Fourth Circuit. In re Gentri, 185 B.R. 368 (Bankr. M.D. Fla. 1995); In re Tindall, 184 B.R. 842 (Bankr. M.D. Fla. 1994); In re Blair, 180 B.R. 656 (Bankr. N.D. Ala. 1995) (ability to pay most important factor; court should consider other factors); In re Rogers, 168 B.R. 806 (Bankr. M.D. Ga. 1993); In re Lee, 162 B.R. 31 (Bankr. N.D. Ga. 1993). Finally, the court in In re Attanasio, 218 B.R. 180 (Bankr. N.D. Ala. 1998), in a lengthy analysis declined to follow definitions of substantial abuse, they uniformly uphold a court's discretion to consider a range of factors, or the "totality of circumstances" in deciding whether to dismiss a case for substantial abuse. The primary factor, however, in deciding an issue of substantial abuse is the debtor's ability to repay.

[7] No clear consensus on "substantial abuse" exists among lower courts in the Eleventh Circuit. Some cases appear to adopt a general totality of

The First and Sixth Circuits have adopted the predominant definition of substantial abuse that is based upon the "totality of circumstances":

> Substantial abuse can be predicated upon either lack of honesty or want of need.
>
> It is not possible, of course, to list all the factors that may be relevant to ascertaining a debtor's honesty. Counted among them, however, would surely be the debtor's good faith and candor in filing schedules and other documents, whether he has engaged in "eve of bankruptcy purchases," and whether he was forced into Chapter 7 by unforeseen or catastrophic events.
>
> Among the factors to be considered in deciding whether a debtor is needy is his ability to repay his debts out of future earnings. That factor alone may be sufficient to warrant dismissal.

In re Krohn, 886 F.2d 123, 126 (6th Cir. 1989); Lamanna, 1998 WL 514106 at *3 (quoting in part above language with approval). Under this definition, although a bankruptcy court should examine the equities of an individual any existing analysis of substantial abuse.

case, it may dismiss a case if the debtor is able to repay his debts out of future earnings. See also Lamanna, 1998 WL 514106 at *1 ("we don't require a court to look beyond the debtor's ability to repay if that factor warrants the result").

The Eighth and Ninth Circuits have adopted a similar approach to substantial abuse. These Circuits focus on whether a debtor is financially needy and hold that the primary factor evidencing substantial abuse is a debtor's ability to repay the debts for which a discharge is sought . In re Walton, 866 F.2d 984-85 (8th Cir. 1989) (quoting with approval Kelly, 841 F.2d at 914-915 (citations omitted)). While the Eighth and Ninth Circuit decisions have been labeled a "per se" test, e.g., In re Motaharnia, 215 B.R. 63, 70 n.10 (Bankr. C.D. Cal. 1997), a closer examination of these decisions reveals that they do not preclude use of the "totality of circumstances" set forth in the First and Sixth Circuits. The Eighth Circuit in Walton noted that "[c]ertainly the court may take the petitioner's good faith and unique hardships into consideration under section 707(b)." 866 F.2d at 983 (citation omitted). And the Ninth Circuit in Kelly stated that "[t]his is not to say that inability to pay will shield a debtor from section 707(b) dismissal where bad faith is otherwise shown." 841 F.2d at 915. See also In re Morse, 164 B.R.

651 (Bankr. E.D. Wash. 1994) (discussing ability to consider mitigating factors); In re Martin, 107 B.R. 247 (Bankr. D. Alaska 1989) (ability to pay outweighed by mitigating factors of debtors' residence in remote Alaskan village and uncertain and difficult future).

The Fourth Circuit is the only Circuit holding that ability to repay alone is not a sufficient basis to dismiss. Green v. Staples (In re Green), 934 F.2d 568, 572 (4th Cir. 1991). Green stated that a court should evaluate the following factors in addition to ability to repay:

> (1) Whether the bankruptcy petition was filed because of sudden illness, calamity, disability, or unemployment;
>
> (2) Whether the debtor incurred cash advances and made consumer purchases far in excess of his ability to repay;
>
> (3) Whether the debtor's proposed family budget is excessive or unreasonable;
>
> (4) Whether the debtor's schedules and statement of current income and expenses reasonably and accurately reflect the true financial condition; and
> (5) Whether the petition was filed in good faith.

Id. (citations omitted). These factors do not necessarily involve balancing all of the factors, however. In the case of In re Kestell, 99 F.3d 146, 150 (4th Cir. 1996), the Fourth Circuit affirmed a dismissal for substantial abuse solely upon a finding of bad faith.

The United States Trustee urges the Court to affirm the decision of the district court below. The bankruptcy court in a proper exercise of discretion decided that the bankruptcy filing of the Smiths was a substantial abuse of the provisions of chapter 7. The bankruptcy court did not dismiss the Smiths' case solely because of the Smiths' ability to repay their creditors, but only after considering any mitigating factors, and taking into account the bad faith of the Smiths. Such an analysis is consistent with the legislative intent of the statute and the application of substantial abuse adopted by the First, Fourth, Sixth, Eighth, and Ninth Circuits.

B. The record supports dismissal of the Smiths' case for substantial abuse

The bankruptcy court's decision that granting the Smiths a chapter 7 discharge would be a substantial abuse is supported by the evidence and consistent with predominant interpretations of substantial abuse. Contrary to the Smiths' assertion, the bankruptcy court did not engage in a "onedimensional" focus in evaluating whether the filing was a substantial abuse. The bankruptcy court reviewed whether the Smiths had an ability to pay their debts, considered any mitigating factors advanced by the Smiths, and considered any aggravating factors such as bad faith.

As discussed in section I.B supra, the Smiths' desire to maintain their lifestyle and continue to live beyond their means at the expense of their unsecured creditors constituted bad faith. The bankruptcy court did not err in dismissal because bad faith alone can support dismissal for substantial abuse.

Similarly, the bankruptcy court did not err in finding that the Smiths could pay a substantial portion of their debt in a hypothetical chapter 13 case. The court found that their gross business income for 1996 was $154,292.91, or on average $12,857.74 a month, based upon the Smiths' own bank statements and Dennis Smith's testimony regarding their income in the last three months of 1996. See footnote 2, supra. The bankruptcy court found that their business expenses averaged $6,000 monthly. R-1-1(17)-3, 4. The debtors only scheduled business expenses of $5,403. R-1-1(1)-27. Although Dennis Smith testified that his business expenses averaged $8,000, this was based upon the last three months of the year. R-1-79. In addition, Dennis Smith's latter-day estimates carried little weight in light of his admissions that they were relatively unfamiliar with sound business accounting practices and failed to segregate business and personal expenses until the eve of filing. R-1-35, 40, 59. After weighing the contradictory evidence presented by the Smiths, the bankruptcy court did not err in concluding that their average monthly business expenses were $6,000.

The bankruptcy court was not clearly erroneous in analyzing the ability of the Smiths to repay in the context of a hypothetical chapter 13 case. Courts often analyze the debtor using chapter 13 concepts. E.g., Stuart v. Koch (In re Koch), 109 F.3d 1285, 1288 (8th Cir. 1997); Walton, 866 F.2d at 984-85. Such an analysis utilizes the concept of "disposable income," 11 U.S.C. § 1325(b)(1)(B), which is defined in part as income reasonably necessary to be expended for the maintenance and support of the debtor, including certain charitable contributions. 11 U.S.C. § 1325(b)(2)(A). Contrary to the assertion of the Smiths, Brief of Appellants 43-51, courts determining a debtor's disposable income can and do review mortgage payments for reasonableness. See In re Kitson, 65 B.R. 615, 621 (Bankr. E.D.N.C. 1986) (chapter 13 - mortgage unreasonable); In re Jones, 55 B.R. 462, 467 (Bankr. D. Minn. 1985) (chapter 13 - "house payment" unreasonable).

The Smiths do not challenge the bankruptcy court's conclusion that the lease payment for the Lexus was not reasonable. In fact, the bankruptcy court reduced the amount budgeted for this by only $100, when Dennis Smith admitted that adequate transportation could be obtained for $300, a reduction of $271. R-1-30.

The bankruptcy court's finding that $1,000 is a reasonable monthly payment for mortgage or rent is also supported by the evidence and not clearly erroneous. Dennis Smith admitted that the value of an average house in his locality was $100,000. R-1-26. The mortgage on the average house would likely not exceed $588, assuming an $80,000 mortgage at 10% for 30 years[8], and the Smiths undoubtedly could have obtained more than adequate rental accommodations for $1000.[9] [8] Although the bankruptcy court did not explain the basis for the $1000 figure, it would service a 30 year mortgage of approximately $136,000 at 8%; $114,000 at 10%; and $97,000 at 12%.

[9] The reasonableness of the bankruptcy court's determination is highlighted by other data on housing in Columbia County, Georgia. The Bureau of the Census states that the 1990 median value of owner-occupied noncondominium housing units in Columbia County is $83,700. U.S.

The reasonableness of the bankruptcy court's conclusion is highlighted by the emotional but misguided argument made by the Smiths that "housing is a priority, and not just adequate housing but housing commensurate with an individual's station in life."[10] Brief of Appellants 48. The United States Department of Commerce, Bureau of the Census, USA Counties 1996 (corrected edition), available in http://govinfo.library.orst.edu. With a value of between $213,000 and $215,000, the Smiths' residence is valued approximately 250% over the county median. The Internal Revenue Service also provides an allowance for housing and utilities when analyzing the ability of a taxpayer to repay a tax obligation. U.S. Department of the Treasury, Internal Revenue Service, Internal Revenue Manual §§ 5323.12, 5323.41. The allowance in Columbia County, Georgia is $1001. Internal Revenue Manual § 4323.433(a) and Exhibit 5300-50 (updated October 2, 1995).

[10] The Smiths also argue, without any citation to the Bankruptcy Code or case law, that any review of a debtor's mortgage expenses in the context of 11 U.S.C. § 707 is improper. Brief of Appellant 43-51. This argument is based upon the Fourth Amendment to the U.S. Constitution and "general housing policy" of the United States. The "general housing policy" referred to consists of scattered Congressional and Presidential statements and

Trustee cannot comment on the Smiths' subjective assertions about their "station in life." However, having made the affirmative decision to file bankruptcy, the Smiths have placed the financial affairs underpinning their "station in life" at issue. Nobody is forcing the Smiths to leave their home. The bankruptcy court merely concluded, based upon the application of neutral Bankruptcy Code standards, that the Smiths had an ability to repay their debt after making adjustments for their excessive expenses. In the context of the bankruptcy court's adjustment for housing, the Smiths cannot honestly say that an expenditure of $1,000 monthly for housing will force them into a slum or homeless shelter.[11]

Legislative History focusing primarily on providing incentives to home-loan lenders, and to low and moderate-income home buyers. The Fourth Amendment is not applicable because the Smiths cannot allege that their residence has been seized by the federal government or their reasonable expectation of privacy as been invaded. United States v. Bachner, 706 F.2d 1121, 1125 (11th Cir.), cert. denied, 464 U.S. 896 (1983) .

[11] The Smiths, however, do appear to have an irrational fear of becoming associated with the landless classes: "Nowhere in the policy of the Bankruptcy Code or the housing laws of the United States has Congress

Finally, the Smiths have failed to establish any countervailing considerations that would militate against dismissal. Although the Smiths attempt to argue that Dennis Smith's termination from Greenfield Industries in 1992, R-1-14, was an "unforeseen financial calamity" causing the bankruptcy filing, Brief of Appellants 24, the bankruptcy court correctly found that it did not lead to the filing. R-1-1(17)-9, 10. The Smiths continued to earn significant income from their real estate employment, as evidenced by their reported total income of $81,842 in 1994, R-1-1(6)-1, $70,542 in 1995, R-1-1(7)-1, and gross income of $152,635 in 1996. See footnote 2, supra. The Smiths also had sufficient income and time after Dennis Smith's termination to engage in meaningful "belt-tightening." This declared that people will be forced to move out of their homes, become renters or even homeless, for the purposes of paying credit card debt." Brief of Appellants 50 (emphasis added). Although this fear may have had some merit in the early days of our republic, see Chilton Williamson, American Suffrage: From Property to Democracy 1760-1860 at 131-132 (1960)(stating that Georgia eliminated property ownership suffrage requirement in 1798), it has no place in our modern society.

failure to properly address their expenses, not any "unforeseen calamity," was the direct cause of their bankruptcy filing. See section I.A., supra.

In conclusion, the bankruptcy court's decision to dismiss the Smiths' case for substantial abuse is amply supported by the record. The Smiths have an ability to repay their creditors a significant dividend if they choose to file a chapter 13 proceeding, and have acted in bad faith in seeking chapter 7 bankruptcy relief. No other factors militate against these findings.[12]

CONCLUSION

For the foregoing reasons, this honorable Court should AFFIRM the judgment of the District Court.

Dated: September 17, 1998

[12] The decision of the bankruptcy court is also proper under the Green test. Although factor 2 (excessive cash advances and purchases) is not present, all other factors in addition to an ability to pay support dismissal: factor 1 (the Smiths' filing is not caused by any calamity), factor 3 (the budget of the Smiths is excessive), factor 4 (the Smiths' scheduled income and expenses were not accurate), and factor 5 (the Smiths filed in bad faith).

INTEREST OF THE UNITED STATES

The United States submits this brief under Federal Rule of Appellate Procedure 29 as amicus curiae in support of reversal of the bankruptcy court's order below.

This appeal will determine whether chapter 13 debtors may shield almost $30,000 from their creditors over the five-year life of their chapter 13 repayment plans by claiming "phantom" vehicle expenses, expenses that are "phantom" because the debtors will never incur them.[1] Section 1325(b), which incorporates section 707(b)(2)(A), allows debtors to deduct $489 to cover car loan payments. In the United States' view, the text of sections 1325 and 707 each independently bars debtors from reducing creditor recoveries by claiming this expense when they have no loan or lease payment.

The United States has a direct interest in the construction of these two provisions and in ensuring debtors make fair payments to creditors. This is so because Justice Department officials, known as United States

[1] In re Turner, 574 F.3d 349, 356 (7th Cir. 2009) (holding 11 U.S.C. § 1325(b) precludes debtors from claiming "phantom" expenses they will not actually pay over the life of their chapter 13 repayment plans).

Trustees, supervise the administration of bankruptcy cases in all federal judicial districts within this circuit. See 28 U.S.C. §§ 581-589a. See also H.R. Rep. No. 95-595 at 88 (1977), reprinted in 1978 U.S.C.C.A.N. 5963, 6049 (explaining that United States Trustees "serve as bankruptcy watch-dogs to prevent fraud, dishonesty, and overreaching in the bankruptcy arena").

The Bankruptcy Code authorizes United States Trustees to review repayment plans that debtors propose under section 1325 and to submit comments about them to the bankruptcy courts. 28 U.S.C. § 586(a)(3)(C). United States Trustees also have a congressional charge to review chapter 7 cases and to file suit under section 707(b), the other section at issue in this appeal, when a chapter 7 debtor's case merits dismissal or conversion to chapter 13. See 11 U.S.C. §§ 707(b)(1), (2); 11 U.S.C. § 704(b); In re Stewart, 175 F.3d 796, 805 (10th Cir. 1999) (involving action taken by a United States Trustee under the pre-2005 version of section 707)).

Accordingly, the United States has devoted significant resources to addressing whether either section 707(b) or section 1325 prevents debtors from shielding hundreds of dollars each month from their creditors by claiming a vehicle loan or lease deduction they do not actually have. The issue is significant. Allowing chapter 13 debtors to claim such a deduction can result in a nearly $30,000 windfall shielded from creditors over a five-year repayment plan. It can also affect whether a chapter 7 debtor is eligible for chapter 7 relief.

Given these interests, the United States submits this amicus brief to share its views on the application of sections 707(b)(2) and 1325(b) in support of reversal.[2] This brief (a) explains why the United States has concluded that the better reading of the text of sections 1325 and 707(b) each independently prevent debtors from claiming phantom car expenses, and (b) suggests that this Court's recent interpretation of section 1325(b)(1)(B) in Hamilton v. Lanning mandates reversal in this case.

SUMMARY OF THE ARGUMENT

1. This case turns on the meaning of two words in the Bankruptcy Code: "applicable" in section 707(b)(2)(A)(ii)(I) and "projected" in section 1325(b)(1)(B). If this Court agrees with the United States' construction of either word, then it should reverse the bankruptcy's order confirming Mr. Soos' chapter 13 plan, which incorporates its earlier order allowing Mr.

---

[2] See 28 U.S.C. § 517 (authorizing Department of Justice "to attend to the interests of the United States in a suit pending in a court of the United States"); 11 U.S.C. § 307 (United States Trustee "may raise and may appear and be heard on any issue in any case or proceeding").

Soos an allowance for car payments although there is no doubt his vehicle is paid in full.

2. Mr. Soos, like all chapter 13 debtors, was required to propose a repayment plan. 11 U.S.C. § 1321. Above-median-income debtors, like Mr. Soos, must develop this plan by calculating their monthly disposable income under sections 1325(b)(2) and (3).

Section 1325 required Mr. Soos to begin calculating his chapter 13 expenses by applying the rules set forth in section 707(b)(2)(A)(ii)(I). Section 707(b)(2) allows debtors to claim some "applicable" expenses and some actual expenses. The only "applicable" expenses debtors may claim are those set forth in the Internal Revenue Service's Local and National Standards. One of the expenses set out in the Standards is a fixed $489 monthly deduction to cover a car loan or lease.[3]

But section 707(b)(2)(A)(ii)(I) does not give debtors the unfettered right to claim every expense listed in the IRS Standards. It allows debtors to claim only expenses that are "applicable."

[3] The ownership expense allowance under the IRS Standards is one amount for each vehicle that is based on the average cost of financing a vehicle as determined annually by the Federal Reserve Board. In re Meade 384 B.R. 132, 136 (W.D. Tex. 2008). It was $489 when Mr. Soos filed his bankruptcy petition in 2009.

Thus, the first question presented in this appeal is whether a $489 monthly car payment is an "applicable" expense for debtors who owe no money on their vehicles.

The answer is no. Section 707(b)(2)(A)(ii)(I) does not define "applicable," so it should be given its dictionary meaning. The dictionary defines "applicable," as capable of being applied, or as relevant. A nullity, in this case a phantom car payment, is not capable of being applied to anything or anyone. Because it is undisputed that Mr. Soos has no monthly expenses for vehicle ownership, section 707(b)(2)(A)(ii)(I) does not allow him artificially to reduce his payments to creditors by almost $30,000 over the life of his plan by claiming an expense he does not have.

The 2005 Act's legislative history confirms this. In it, Congress explained that the new law was enacted to establish a system under which debtors would repay creditors the maximum they can afford. Allowing Mr. Soos to claim $30,000 in fictional expenses over the life of his plan contravenes Congress' stated purpose in passing the 2005 Act.

Without question, courts are divided on this question. The Ninth Circuit agrees with the United States' reading of "applicable." The Fifth and Seventh Circuits do not. Nor did a divided Eighth Circuit panel.

Those courts that concluded they were constrained to allow a phantom expense did so because they read the word "applicable" in section 707(b)(2)(A)(ii)(I) as requiring courts to allow any expense set forth in the IRS Standards, even ones debtors do not have. They acknowledged that an IRS document, the IRS Manual, expressly precludes people from claiming that phantom $489 car loan expense when dealing with the IRS, but they concluded this IRS practice was not relevant in interpreting section 707 because section 707 references the IRS Standards, not that IRS Manual.

That reading was never right. It is not the IRS's practice in its Manual that prohibits chapter 13 debtors from claiming fictional expenses. It is the text of section 707 that does so by expressly limiting expenses to those that are "applicable," something a phantom expense is not.

And, were that reading ever right, it certainly is not correct now. That is so because by January 1, 2008, the IRS had amended the Standards themselves to expressly prohibit phantom payments. Thus, the very document that section 707(b)(2)(A)(ii)(I) mentions, "the National Standards and Local Standards," now expressly prohibits phantom payments. Given this, it is unclear whether the Fifth, and Seventh Circuits, or the divided Eighth Circuit panel, which allowed phantom payments, would do so if asked to construe section 707(b)(2)(A)(ii)(I) today.

Finally, reading “applicable” to require a corresponding loan or lease payment fosters sound public policy. Barring above-median-income debtors like Mr. Soos from claiming inapplicable ownership expense amounts is fair because it prevents them from sheltering money from creditors for an expense they do not have.

3. Mr. Soos could not claim nearly $30,000 in phantom car payments even if this Court were to agree with the bankruptcy court’s construction of “applicable” in section 707(b)(2)(A)(ii)(I).

That is so because the word “projected” in section 1325(b)(1)(B) independently bars Mr. Soos from claiming that nearly $30,000 fictional expense. Under section 1325(b)(1)(B), a bankruptcy judge must “project” a chapter 13 debtor’s monthly disposable income after the debtor performs his section 707(b)(2) calculations. And, this Court has held in Hamilton v. Lanning that the word “projected” in section 1325(b)(1)(B) means bankruptcy courts should adjust debtors’ monthly payment amounts up or down as warranted to reflect deviations between the means test calculation and reality.[4] [4] The bankruptcy appellate panel identified the relevance of Lanning in footnote 19 of its memorandum opinion regarding certification. Skehen v. Soos (In re Soos), No. 09-035, mem. op. at 7, n.19 (B.A.P. 10th Cir. Oct. 21, 2009).

Although the facts of Lanning required a court to adjust the debtor's income, rather than her expenses, that difference is not significant. In In re Turner, for example, the Seventh Circuit recently applied the Lanning reading of "projected" in section 1325(b)(1)(B) to adjust an expense. The Seventh Circuit ruled the word "projected" prevented that debtor from claiming phantom mortgage payments because he was abandoning the property to the lender and would not be making those payments over the life of the plan. Under this Lanning-Turner approach, section 1325(b)(1)(B)'s projected requirement independently bars Mr. Soos from claiming upwards of $30,000 in similar phantom deductions over the life of his plan.

ARGUMENT

I. The Bankruptcy Court Erred in Ruling that Mr. Soos Could Claim a Deduction for a Phantom Vehicle Ownership Payment under Section 707(b)(2)(A)(ii)(I) of the Bankruptcy Code.

This is a statutory construction case, which calls upon this Court to determine whether the word "applicable" in section 707(b)(2)(A)(ii)(I) allows a chapter 13 debtor to claim a set monthly expense deduction to cover a car loan or lease payment if the debtor has none. The United States concedes debtors, such as Mr. Soos, may claim a set $489 each month to cover loan or lease payments under section 707(b)(2)(A)(ii)(I) when it is "applicable" to them. But the text of that statute is best read as not making the expense "applicable" to debtors who have no corresponding ownership expense. 11 U.S.C. § 707(b)(2)(A)(ii)(I).

The question whether debtors in Mr. Soos's situation may claim the IRS Local Standards expense amount for a car or lease payment, and thus shelter $489 a month from their creditors for each month of their five-year repayment plan, has divided the lower and circuit courts. See In re Ransom, 577 F.3d 1026, 1029 (9th Cir. 2009) (collecting cases). However, the Ninth Circuit recently reviewed the arguments on both sides of the issue and concluded that "[a]n 'ownership cost' is not an 'expense' - either actual or applicable - if it does not exist, period." Id. at 1030. Ransom relies on the words of the statute, congressional intent, and common sense to hold that a debtor such as Mr. Soos should not be allowed to keep $29,340 from his creditors for an expense it is certain he does not have. The United States respectfully asks this Court to consider the rationale of Part III of the Ransom decision as a basis for reversing the decision below.

A. Both the dictionary meaning of "applicable" and normal English usage demonstrate that a debtor may only claim a vehicle ownership expense under section 707(b)(2)(A)(ii)(I) when he is making a corresponding loan or lease payment.

1. "Applicable" is not defined in the Bankruptcy Code, so the word should be given its ordinary meaning. Smith v. United States, 508 U.S. 223, 228 (1993) (explaining "[w]hen a word is not defined by statute, we normally construe it in accord with its ordinary and natural meaning."); United States ex rel. Holmes v. Consumer Ins. Group, 318 F.3d 1199, 1208-09 (10th Cir. 2003) (same). Courts frequently turn to dictionaries to ascertain a word's ordinary meaning. See e.g. United States v. Gonzales, 456 F.3d 1178, 1182 (10th Cir. 2006) (applying a dictionary definition to determine the common meaning of a statutory term).

The dictionary defines "applicable" to mean "capable of being applied: having relevance . . . fit, suitable, or right to be applied: APPROPRIATE . . .

syn see RELEVANT" Webster's Third New International Dictionary at 105 (1981) (emphasis in the original).

The Ninth Circuit recently explained in Ransom that the dictionary meaning of "applicable" does not allow debtors to claim a vehicle ownership expense when they have no associated loan or lease payment. The Ransom panel asked rhetorically how a vehicle ownership expense allowance could be "capable of being applied to the debtor if he does not make any lease or loan payments on the vehicle?" Ransom, 577 F.3d at 1031. The United States agrees with the Ransom's answer – it cannot.

The dictionary meaning illustrates why debtors should be allowed to subtract ownership expenses specified under the IRS Standards only when they will be making payments on a car loan or lease over the course of their chapter 13 plans. Under Webster's definition, for an expense to be relevant, or capable of being applied, there must be a correlation between the expense and a loan or lease. Absent an ongoing loan or lease obligation, there is no nexus so that it is inappropriate for a debtor to claim the amount specified in the IRS Standards as an expense. But, for debtors who have a car loan, an ownership expense is "capable of being applied" and "appropriate" because they will have to remit a payment every month to their lenders – a payment for which the Bankruptcy Code allows them an expense allowance.

2. Reading section 707(b)(2)(A)(ii)(I) to allow phantom expenses not only ignores the dictionary meaning of "applicable;" it distorts the word's contextual meaning as well.

The United States reads "applicable" as telling debtors to claim only those expenses set out in the IRS Standards that they will pay during the life of their plans. In other words, the United States reads "applicable" as asking debtors to look at all the expense categories set out in the Standards and to select only the subset that is relevant, namely that affects their financial situation in a quantifiable way.

This is exactly how the word applicable in most commonly used. For example, a Louisiana public school health form asks parents to check all ailments applicable to their child.[5] By doing this, it asks parents to look at all the ailments, and pick those on a lengthy list that apply.

Apply, which is a synonymous adjective, serves the identical winnowing function. For example, question two of the 2010 Census form

[5] See, e.g. Louisiana school health information form that asks parents to indicate which of a list of ailments applies to their child. http://www.louisianaschools.net/lde/scs/2582.html has a box check-list naming categories of people, such as newborn babies, live-in nannies, or relatives living there on a temporary basis. The question asks citizens to "mark all the boxes that may apply" to indicate fully who in fact lives in the house.[6] The common application for college admission similarly asks highschool seniors to mark all the reasons that apply to explain interrupted secondary school attendance, such as transferring schools or taking time-off.[7]

The purpose on all three forms is to narrow down possible conditions or status to choose only those that pertain to the person completing the form in a definable way. It would make no sense for a mother to check the box next to an ailment that her child does not have simply because she has a child. Nor does it make sense for Mr. Soos to claim an ownership expense for a loan payment everyone agrees he does not have simply because he has a car.

Mr. Soos suggests "applicable" should be read in a far more unnatural way in section 707(b)(2)(A)(ii)(I). Mr. Soos believes "applicable" exists in section 707(b)(2)(A)(ii)(I) not to instruct debtors to claim relevant expenses, but solely to make sure debtors do not foolishly choose the wrong box. See Addendum at 3 (giving debtors the option to choose one or two cars). The Standards allow debtors to pick one car or two. Mr. Soos believes debtors inexplicably would pick the wrong number unless told to pick the "applicable" one. This reading is doubtful, as people normally do not have trouble discerning between one and two.

The Ninth Circuit's reading therefore is more natural than Mr. Soos's because it gives "applicable" a real purpose in section 707 - pick the box that corresponds to the number of cars (one car or two) for which a debtor will be making an ownership payment. Mr. Soos sees it merely as an unusual and unnecessary admonition to do the obvious, one car if you have just one. Like the word's dictionary meaning, the common usage of applicable supports reading the term as barring phantom car expenses.

B. The legislative history demonstrates that Congress did not intend for debtors to benefit from phantom vehicle payments.

Giving "applicable" its proper meaning, and thereby prohibiting phantom payments, fulfills two of Congress's goals in enacting the 2005 Act: 1) ensuring that above-median-income debtors repay their debts when they can and 2) eliminating abuse. Therefore, "[i]ronic it would be indeed to diminish payments to unsecured creditors in this context on the basis of a fictitious expense not incurred by a debtor." Ransom, 577 F.3d at 1030.

In interpreting "applicable" in section 707(b)(2)(A)(ii)(I), this Court may look to its legislative history. In re Geneva Steel Co., 281 F.3d 1173, 1178 (10th Cir. 2002). "Ambiguous text can also be decoded by knowing the purpose behind the statute." Id. The heart of the 2005 Act is the means test, which seeks to "ensure that debtors repay creditors the maximum they can afford." H.R. Rep. No. 109-31(I), at 1 (2005), reprinted in 2005 U.S.C.C.A.N. 88, 89. See also Schultz v. United States, 529 F.3d 343, 347 (6th Cir. 2008) ("The centerpiece of the [2005 Act] is the imposition of a 'means test' for chapter 7 filers.").

Congress emphasized the importance of ensuring debtors repay what they can afford in the legislative history: in the very first paragraph of the House Report and in the discussion of the means test itself. H.R. Rep. No. 109-31(I), at 1 (2005), reprinted in 2005 U.S.C.C.A.N. 88, 89, 97-100. Congress aimed to eliminate "loopholes and incentives" in the system "that allowed and - sometimes - even encourage opportunistic personal filings and abuse." Id. at 5, reprinted in 2005 U.S.C.C.A.N. at 92.

It is hard to envision a more classic loophole than an interpretation of section 707(b)(2)(A)(ii)(I) that allows above-median-income debtors to claim a vehicle ownership expense for cars that are fully paid for. See Hamilton v. Lanning (In re Lanning), 545 F.3d 1269, 1280-81 (10th Cir. 2008), cert. granted in part, 130 S. Ct. 487 (2009) (noting that the intent of Congress was for debtors to pay their creditors what they could afford – "no more, no less").[8]

As the Ninth Circuit explained in In re Ransom, "[t]o interpret the statute otherwise [to allow deductions for phantom payments] is counterintuitive to one of the main objectives of BAPCPA: to ensure that debtors repay as much of their debt as reasonably possible." In re Ransom, 577 F.3d at 1031; see also In re Washburn, 579 F.3d 934, 943 (8th Cir. 2009) (stating in dissent that "allowing a debtor to avoid paying more than $28,000 to his unsecured creditors flies in the face of all Congress intended to accomplish with BAPCPA"). Interpreting section 707(b)(2)(A)(ii)(I) to allow phantom payments cannot be squared with the legislative history of the 2005 Act.

[8] Lanning is before the Supreme Court (Docket No. 08-998) and was argued on March 22, 2010. The United States submitted a brief amicus curiae in support of affirmance. Hamilton v. Lanning, No. 08-998, 2010 WL 383620 (Feb. 3, 2010).

C. The reading of the 2005 Act that prevents phantom expenses has been mislabeled the IRM approach, when it actually does nothing other than construe the word "applicable" in the text of section 707(b)(2)(A)(ii)(I).

The United States' reading of the 2005 Act, which prevents parties from reducing payments by claiming phantom expenses, has been mischaracterized as an "IRM Approach," referring to the Internal Revenue Service Manual. This is so "because the courts following it use the methodology of the IRM as an interpretive guide for applying the means test." In re Tate, 571 F.3d 423, 426 (5th Cir. 2009).

The IRS Manual is not the basis for the interpretation of the 2005 Act that prohibits phantom deductions. See Ransom, 577 F.3d at 1030 ("we decide this issue not on the IRS's manual but instead on the 'statutory language, plainly read.'") (citation omitted). To the contrary, the language of the 2005 Act itself – the dictionary meaning of the word applicable – is the foundation for denying the debtor phantom car payments. Id.

Moreover, the title some courts have used to describe Mr. Soos's interpretation allowing phantom deductions – the plain language approach – is equally inappropriate. See e.g. Ross-Tousey v. Neary (In re Ross-Tousey), 549 F.3d 1148, 1157-58 (7th Cir. 2008) (using this terminology). The plain language of the 2005 Act does not demonstrate that debtors without car payments are entitled to ownership costs. Even the first federal appellate decision to call that approach a "plain language" one, Ross-Tousey, conceded that "courts which have differed from our present ruling should not be viewed as rejecting the 'plain language' of the statute." Ross-Tousey, 549 F.3d at 1157, n.6. Similarly, the Fifth Circuit acknowledged in Tate that "[b]oth approaches start from the text of the statute . . . ." Tate, 571 F.3d at 426; accord Washburn, 579 F.3d at 943 (referring to the split of authority "as to the proper reading of the dense and confusingly written Bankruptcy Code with respect to the deduction at issue here") (Magnuson, J., dissenting).

There is, however, a better reading of the 2005 Act: one based upon the dictionary meaning of "applicable" and adopted by the Ninth Circuit. This interpretation allows debtors to claim expenses that are capable of being applied to them, i.e. those they have, but not the sort of phantom expenses Mr. Soos wants to claim here. Webster's Third New International Dictionary at 105 (1981).

D. The January 2008 amendments to the IRS Local Standards, which added a prohibition against phantom expenses, cast doubt upon the continuing vitality of decisions such as Ross-Tousey, Tate, and Washburn.

Those courts finding that phantom car payments are allowable have justified their interpretation in part based on the fact that the Local Standards themselves did not prohibit debtors from claiming a deduction for payments they do not have. See e.g., Washburn, 579 F.3d at 938; Tate, 571 F.3d at 427*; Ross-Tousey*, 549 F.3d at 1156.

The National and Local Standards mentioned in section 707(b)(2)(A)(ii)(I) are found in the IRS's Financial Analysis Handbook which, in turn, is contained in the IRS's Internal Revenue Manual. Ross-Tousey, 549 F.3d at 1156.[9] Section 5.15.1.9 of the IRS Manual states "[i]f a taxpayer has a car, but no car payment, only the operating costs portion of the transportation standard is used to figure the allowable transportation expense."[10]

This appeal does not implicate the other car-associated expense, known as the operating expense.[11] The operating expense covers costs

[11] The addendum to this brief provides a copy of the text of both expenses, which is set forth in the IRS National and Local Standards. See 11 U.S.C. § 707(b)(2)(A)(ii)(I) (allowing debtors to claim expenses set forth in the Standards when "applicable.").

associated with running a car, things like repairs, insurance and gas. Addendum at 3. Any debtor who has an operating car may claim it. Mr. Soos claimed this operating expense in his case, and everyone agrees he had the right to do so.

All courts acknowledge that debtors may claim only expenses allowed in the Standards, and acknowledge that the Manual contains a general prohibition (which a revenue agent can ignore on a case by case basis) against claiming a loan payment when the taxpayer has no loan or lease. But some courts refused to treat debtors in the same way that the IRS treats taxpayers because the IRS's common sense prohibition against claiming phantom expenses was set out in the Manual. Section 707(b)(2)(2)(A)(ii)(I) does not reference the Manual. Instead, it only references the Standards. See, e.g., Ross-Tousey, 549 F.3d at 1159 (stating that section 707(b)(2)(A)(ii)(I) "does not incorporate the IRM or the Financial Analysis Handbook, or even refer to them"); Tate, 571 F.3d at 427 (stating that the legislative history of section 707(b)(2)(A)(ii)(I) "confirms that the provision's silence with regard to the IRM and IRS methodology was deliberate"). Because the guidance was not expressly referenced in the standards, these courts held it did not apply.

Ironically, these courts might come to a different conclusion were they to consider how to interpret the word "applicable" in section 707(b)(2)(A)(ii)(I) today.

This is so because new IRS Local Transportation Standards went into effect in January 2008. Those add to the Standards themselves the IRS Manual prohibition against phantom expenses. Addendum at 3.

The revised introductory text for the Local Transportation Standards, which is expressly referenced in section 707(b)(2)(A)(ii)(I), now reads: "If a taxpayer has a car, but no car payment, only the operating costs portion of the transportation standard is used to figure the allowable transportation expense. The taxpayer is allowed the amount actually spent, or the standard, whichever is less."[12] Addendum at 3.

Thus, the Standards do prohibit phantom expense for cases filed after January 1, 2008. Mr. Soos' case was filed on February 18, 2009.

Finally, this change raises an obvious question: would the Washburn, Ross-Tousey, and Tate panels reach the opposite outcome now, given that the Standards directly prohibit claiming an ownership deduction for a vehicle that is paid for? And it raises a second - why authorize an expense the Standards themselves now oppose? We can identify no good reason for doing so.

E. Barring above-median-income debtors from claiming phantom vehicle ownership expenses implements sound bankruptcy policy.

Reading section 707(b)(2)(A)(ii)(I) as restricting vehicle ownership expenses to debtors who make loan or lease payments is fair to above-median-income debtors and to creditors. In re Ransom, 577 F.3d at 1031 ("When the debtor has no monthly ownership expenses, it makes no sense to deduct an ownership expense to shield it from creditors."); In re Deadmond, No. CV 07-15-H-CCL, 2008 WL 191165, at *4 (D. Mont. Jan. 22, 2008). This is so because it establishes a threshold – the existence of vehicle loan or lease payments – for claiming a standardized ownership expense amount that is consistent for all chapter 13 debtors.

It also is fair to below-median- income debtors. Section 1325(b)(2) allows only above-median debtors to claim set-amount applicable expenses. See 11 U.S.C. 1325(b)(2) (allowing such debtors only "reasonably necessary" expenses). Thus, under Mr. Soos's reading of section 707(b)(2)(A)(ii)(I), a higher-income debtor with an inoperable car could claim the ownership expense amount simply because the car is an automobile and he owns it. A lower-income debtor could not go to the junk yard and buy a wreck to get the same $489 per month advantage because an inoperable car does not produce any "reasonably necessary" expenses. Reading "applicable" as requiring above-median-income debtors to have an associated expense means they will not be able to claim phantom expenses that less wealthy debtors cannot.

Nor will above-median-income debtors like Mr. Soos be disadvantaged by this reading of the statute. Section 1329(a) provides a safety valve to ensure that such debtors without loan or lease payments will not be harmed by being denied a deduction for phantom vehicle payments. These chapter 13 debtors can modify their confirmed repayment plan if they require a new car during the course of repaying their creditors.

Finally, the facts of Mr. Soos's case underscore why it is unfair to allow above median income debtors to claim phantom expenses. Prior to bankruptcy Mr. Soos took out an unsecured loan and used that money to pay off his secured loan on his car. In re Soos, No. 13-09-10557, 2009 WL 2913226, at *1 (Bankr. D. N.M. May 6, 2009). He then sought to discharge the bulk of that unsecured debt through a chapter 13 repayment plan. In the plan, he sought to use his phantom expense to reduce recoveries by creating a fictionalized $29,340 five-year vehicle ownership expense. As the bankruptcy court explained, the ownership allowance for the phantom car payments will not only give Mr. Soos "excess monthly net income in his budget, [but] at the end of the plan term he will discharge a substantial balance of the unsecured debt that enabled him to obtain his car free and clear of any security interest." Id. at *2. Allowing Mr. Soos to pay pennies on the dollar for a new model Honda Coupe demonstrates why his reading of section 707(b)(2)(A)(ii)(I) contravenes the letter and the spirit of the 2005 Act.

II. Alternatively, Under the Rationale of this Court's Decision in In re Lanning, the Bankruptcy Court Erred in Allowing an Expense Allowance for a Non-existent Car Payment.

A. Under this Circuit's precedent, a debtor's chapter 13 repayment plan must reflect the reality of the debtor's financial situation, foreclosing anomalies such as giving debtors a $489 monthly credit for phantom car payments.

Calculating section 707(b)(2)(A)'s expense deductions is only the first step in determining a chapter 13 debtor's disposable income available for a feasible repayment plan. However, in every chapter 13 case, the bankruptcy court must next "project" the debtor's monthly net income over the life of the plan to make sure that the amount the debtor proposes to repay uses all the disposable income that the debtor is "projected" to receive over the plan's five-year life span. 11 U.S.C. § 1325(b)(1)(B); 11 U.S.C. § 1324.

In a recent decision, In re Lanning, this Court interpreted section 1325(b)(1)(B) as requiring adjustment of a debtor's monthly repayment amount, which had been calculated - like that of Mr. Soos - under section 707(b)(2), to reflect the debtor's actual income rather than the inaccurate figure yielded by the section 707(b)(2) calculation. Lanning, 545 F.3d at 1281-82.

In Lanning, this Court ruled the use of "projected" in section 1325(b)(1)(B) requires a court to look at a debtor's actual income when determining how much the debtor can pay over the life of a chapter 13 repayment plan. Lanning, 545 F.3d at 1282.

The Seventh Circuit read "projected" similarly, and it applied that reading to reject a chapter 13 debtor's attempt to claim phantom expenses. In re Turner, 574 F.3d at 356 (citing Lanning and prohibiting a debtor from using "a phantom deduction to reduce the recovery by his unsecured creditors without benefitting any other creditor"). Like this Court in Lanning, the Seventh Circuit ruled that the word "projected" in section 1325(b)(1)(B) does not require "throwing out undisputed information bearing on how much a debtor can afford to pay . . . ." Turner, 574 F.3d at 355. Accord In re Wentzel, 415 B.R. 510, 517 (Bankr. D. Kan. 2009) (analogizing Lanning to deny deduction for phantom car payments). See also Washburn, 579 F.3d at 943 (advocating reversal in dissent because the plan "did not provide that all projected disposable income would go to unsecured creditors").

Under the Lanning-Turner approach, this Court may hold that Mr. Soos cannot deduct $489 for a phantom car payment because that is almost $30,000 less than the amount he can actually pay creditors over the life of his plan. As the bankruptcy court itself recognized, "[by] allowing the Debtor [Mr. Soos] to take the vehicle ownership expense deduction and to contribute only $207.00 per month for the life of the plan[,] the Debtor will receive a windfall. . . ." Soos, 2009 WL 2913226, at *2. The Lanning-Turner approach provides a complete and sufficient independent basis for preventing such an inequitable result in this case – regardless of how this Court might construe the word "applicable" in section 707(b)(2)(A)(ii)(I).

CONCLUSION

For these reasons, the United States respectfully asks this Court to reverse the order entered below.

National Standards: Food, Clothing and Other Items

Disclaimer: IRS Collection Financial Standards are intended for use in calculating repayment of delinquent taxes. These National Standards are effective on October 1, 2007 for purposes of federal tax administration only. Expense information for use in bankruptcy calculations can be found on the website for the U.S. Trustee Program. For bankruptcy purposes, the effective date for the standards will be January 1, 2008, to allow for the orderly administration of the bankruptcy laws.

National Standards have been established for five necessary expenses: food, housekeeping supplies, apparel and services, personal care products and services, and miscellaneous.

The standards are derived from the Bureau of Labor Statistics (BLS) Consumer Expenditure Survey (CES).

Taxpayers are allowed the total National Standards amount monthly for their family size, without questioning the amounts they actually spend. If the amount claimed is more than the total allowed by the National Standards, the taxpayer must provide documentation to substantiate those expenses are necessary living expenses. Generally, the total number of persons allowed for National Standards should be the same as those allowed as exemptions on the taxpayer's most recent year income tax return.
