The court below erroneously ruled that Ropes could keep CK's pre-petition retainer after CK went into chapter 7 and use it to fund work not authorized under section 327(a) of the Code. That is wrong because the retainer became property of the bankruptcy estate under section 541(a) of the Code, which meant Ropes had a duty under section 542(a) to turn it over to the chapter 7 trustee. Under sections 323(a) and 704 of the Code, only the chapter 7 trustee could administer estate funds, including the retainer. Those sections also gave the trustee the sole right to decide whether the estate would hire lawyers in the chapter 7 case, and who those lawyers should be. This comprehensive federal scheme for administering bankruptcy assets and bankruptcy cases preempted the lower court's state-law theory, which interfered with this federal scheme.

Section 541(a) of the Code defines what constitutes property of the estate. 11 U.S.C. 541(a). Under that section, the commencement of a case "creates an estate" and "all" the debtor's property - subject to narrow exceptions not relevant here - becomes part of the estate. Id. Section 541(a) does not define what constitutes the debtor's property - it only directs that such property flows to the estate. Congress has the power to define property in the Bankruptcy Code but has not chosen to exercise it.[40] That means the Bankruptcy Code, through section 541(a), takes all the debtor's property and transfers it to the bankruptcy estate. 11 U.S.C. 541(a).

It is settled law that the balance in the CK-security-retainer, which Ropes held pre-conversion, became property of the CK chapter 7 estate under section 541(a). First, the court below squarely held that the CK retainer was property of the CK chapter 7 estate. CK, 321 B.R. at 16 n.5 (holding "a security retainer remains property of the debtor (or the estate) until properly applied by the attorney for services actually performed. There is no question but that, in this case, R[opes] & G[ray] held a security retainer"). Second, Ropes admitted its retainer was a "security retainer." (A39, 43-44). Third, the First Circuit has squarely held under [40] Butner v. United States, 440 U.S.48, 54-55 (1979) ("[t]he constitutional authority of Congress to establish 'uniform Laws on the subject of Bankruptcies throughout the United States' would clearly encompass a federal statute" defining a mortgagee's property interest in rents — but Congress chose not to exercise that power).

Massachusetts law that such security retainers are property of the chapter 7 estate. Indian Motocycle, 66 F.3d at 1254-55 (a Massachusetts pre-petition retainer becomes property of the bankruptcy estate upon the filing of a bankruptcy petition because, under state law, the debtor holds an interest in the retainer at the time its bankruptcy case is filed). See also Miller v. United States Trustee (In re Independent Engineering Co., Inc.), 232 B.R. 529, 533 (B.A.P. 1st Cir.) ("Thus, pursuant to the terms of the contract, the Debtor retained an interest in the unapplied retainer upon the filing of the petition, and the retainer became property of the estate."), aff'd, 197 F.3d 13 (1st Cir. 1999). Many other courts have similarly held that security retainers become property of the estate under section 541(a).[41]

Thus, the question before the court below was not whether the retainer was property of the estate - it was, but whether the court could use state law to allow Ropes to keep that estate property so Ropes could perform services during the chapter 7 case even though the chapter 7 trustee had not retained Ropes under section 327. In the court's view Ropes could keep this property, do post-petition work, and then demand payment by claiming its pre-bankruptcy agreement allowed it to impose secured claims post-petiton.

This is clearly wrong. First, section 542(a) of the Code commanded all third parties - including Ropes - to "deliver to the [chapter 7] trustee" all estate property. 11 U.S.C. 542(a). This section required Ropes to turn the retainer funds over to the new chapter 7 trustee. See, e.g., Indian Motocycle, 66 F.3d at 1255 ("the debtor's equitable "interest" in any unearned portion of the retainer, impressed with [a creditor's] perfected lien, would have become property of the estate on the date the chapter 11 petition was filed, see Bankruptcy Code § 541(a)(6), and presumably would remain subject to a turnover order in a section 542 action): Mahendra, 131 F.3d at 756 (section 542 empowers bankruptcy courts to "require debtor's counsel to surrender the unearned portion [of a security retainer] as 'property of the estate'"); In Dionne v. Colvin (In re Moore), 312 B.R. 902, 909-10 (Bankr. N.D. Ala. 2004) (holding section 542(a) requires a debtor's counsel to return estate funds in the attorney's possession).

Second, under the Bankruptcy Code, only the chapter 7 trustee - not Ropes - had the power to control and administer that retainer. Once a chapter 7 case commences, the trustee "is the representative of the estate." 11 U.S.C. 323(a). Finally, under the Bankruptcy Code, the trustee, as estate representative, manages the debtor's estate and collects and administers all estate property. 11 U.S.C. 704(1) and (2).

Consistent with the Code, the Supreme Court has squarely held that once a trustee is appointed in a case that trustee manages the corporate debtor and controls counsel. CFTC v. Weintraub, 471 U.S. 343 (1985). In CFTC, the Supreme Court held "the Bankruptcy Code gives the trustee wide-ranging management authority over the debtor." CFTC, 471 U.S. at 352. And the Court made clear that former corporate management's role upon the appointment of a trustee "is to turn over the corporation's property to the trustee and to provide certain information to the trustee and to the creditors. §§ 521, 343. Congress contemplated that when a trustee is appointed, he assumes control of the business, and the debtor's directors are 'completely ousted.'" Id. at 352-53 (quoting in part H.R.Rep. No. 95-595, pp. 220-221 (1977)). As CFTC held, this transfer of power is so complete it even gives " the trustee[] control of the corporation's attorney-client privilege with respect to prebankruptcy communications." Id. at 353.

Significantly, the Supreme Court relied upon this concept of trustee control in Lamie to buttress its holding that counsel shall not be paid for chapter 7 work unless the chapter 7 trustee hires them under section 327. Lamie, 540 U.S. at 537. Lamie explained that ""[s]ection 327's limitation on debtors' incurring debts for professional services without the chapter 7 trustee's approval is not absurd. In the context of a chapter 7 liquidation it advances the trustee's responsibility for preserving the estate." Id.

This makes it clear - beyond peradventure - that once Mr. John A. Burdick was appointed CK's chapter 7 trustee, only he made decisions for CK Liquidation - a corporate debtor. Under federal law, he controlled the retainer - neither Ropes nor the corporate debtor's management could exercise physical control over it under section 542(a). And only the trustee could decide whether the corporate-debtor needed legal services and who should be nominated under section 327 to succeed Ropes - who at that point was nothing more than CK's "terminated" chapter 11 counsel. See 11 U.S.C. 327(a); Lamie, 540 U.S. at 531-32 (conversion "terminated" Ropes employment); CFTC, 471 U.S. 353 (trustee controls counsel and determines whether they waive the attorney-client privilege).

But Mr. Burdick did not ask to use Ropes post-conversion. Instead, he sought and obtained permission under section 327 to use two other firms (A450, 462, 464, 599). Under Lamie and CFTC, Mr. Burdick's decision not to request permission to re-employ Ropes deprived that firm of authorization to act as debtors' counsel in the chapter 7 case under Lamie. For that reason, Ropes was not acting as chapter 7 counsel when it performed $7,820 in post-conversion services.

For these reasons, sections 323(a), 541(a), 542(a) and 704(1) and (2) preempted Ropes' ability under putatively contrary state law to keep estate property in violation of section 542(a), perform services that Mr. Burdick did not employ it to perform under section 327(a), and to encumber estate property with a lien for such post-conversion services. Thus, even if Ropes had a valid lien in a non-bankruptcy context that lien was employed here in derogation of those provisions, and in derogation of CFTC and Lamie and thus was preempted by federal law. Accord Mahendra, 131 F.3d at 754-55 (a lien on the unused security retainer is "extinguished" upon the commencement of the bankruptcy case, the balance must be turned over, and the attorney may receive fees only under section 330); Equipment Services, 290 F.3d at 746-747 (reaching the same result pre-Lamie); On-Line, __ B.R. __, 2005 WL 600361 (reaching the same result post-Lamie).

Unlike the Mahendra, Equipment Services, and On-Line appellate decisions, the decision entered below erred in concluding that Ropes could keep estate funds and use them post-chapter 7 to perform services even though the trustee did not retain the firm under section 327. As Lamie specifically held, the representation by firms like Ropes is "terminated" upon conversion. Lamie, 542 U.S. at 531-32. Upon conversion, the Code required Ropes to turn over the retainer under sections 541 and 542 so the trustee could use it to pay creditors, and it required Ropes, as terminated counsel, to respect the counsel decisions the Code empowered the trustee to make under sections 323 and 704. This comprehensive federal scheme for administering chapter 7 cases preempted contrary state law and the court below erred in relying upon that inconsistent state law in awarding $7,820 to Ropes for post-conversion work.[42]

[42] The decision below merits reversal for at least three additional separaate and independent reasons:

First, Ropes' right to use a lien to impair estate property evaporated upon the commencement of CK's chapter 11 case. See, e.g, Mahendra, 131 at 756 (such liens are "extinguished). Under the Code, there is only one way Ropes could have a claim post-chapter 11 - by being appointed debtor in possession counsel under section 327(a). Lamie, 540 U.S. at 531-32. But in such situations section 330 controls how much Ropes could be "award[ed]" from estate funds. To our knowledge, no court has ever suggested otherwise and a contrary interpretation would wipe out section 327 and 330 because lawyers could use pre-petition security agreements to evade those sections' binding rules. Thus, Ropes' rights under a pre-petition security agreement vis-a-vis property of CK's estate for legal services terminated when CK went into chapter 11. Mahendra, 131 at 756. Going forward from that point, sections 327, 330, 503 and 507 governed Ropes' right to payment - as Ropes repeatedly acknowledged in its employment application and accompanying affidavit.

Second, no less than three subsections of the Bankruptcy Code's automatic stay provision combine to prohibit Ropes from using a lien to fund legal work in the chapter 7 case. 11 U.S.C. 362(a). First subsection 362(a)(3) prohibited Ropes from "exercis[ing] control over property of the estate" - here the retainer. Second, subsection 362(a)(4) prohibited Ropes from "creat[ing], perfect[ing], or enforc[ing] any [post-petition] lien against property of the estate." Third, subsection 362(a)(5) prohibited Ropes from "creat[ing], perfect[ing], or enforc[ing] against property of the debtor any lien to the extent that such lien secures a claim that arose before the commencement of the case under this title." Because Ropes' lien violates the automatic stay, it is preempted by it. Corporacion de Servicios Medicos Hospitalirios v. Moro (In re Corporacion de Servicios Medicos Hospitalarios de Fajardo), 805 F.2d 440, 444 n.3 (1st Cir. 1986) (holding 11 U.S.C. 541(a), 362(a)(3) and 365 "clearly preempt any contradictory state law").

Third, as a matter of federal law, a chapter 7 case discharges all claims that attorneys have to estate property based upon pre-petition obligations between the attorney and the client. Cf. Rittenhouse v. Eisen, 404 F.3d 395 (6th Cir. 2005) (holding "[a] debt for pre-petition legal services is" discharged in a chapter 7 case under 11 U.S.C. 727(b)); In re Fickling, 361 F.3d 172 (2nd Cir.2004) (same); Bethea v. Adams & Associates, 352 F.3d 1125 (7th Cir.2003) (same);

D. Alternatively, Massachusetts law did not create a lien on estate property that secured Ropes' post-conversion work.

Putting federal law aside, Ropes had no secured claim for its post-conversion work under the Massachusetts Commercial Code, Mass. Gen. Laws ch. 106, §§ 9-308 - 316, for five separate and independent reasons. As the court below noted, the Massachusetts Commercial Code allows a "secured party" to "perfect a security interest in negotiable documents, goods, instruments, money, or tangible chattel paper by taking possession of collateral." CK, 321 B.R. at 18. As the court below also understood, Ropes needed an authenticated security agreement under Mass. Gen. Laws ch. 106 § 9-203(b) in order to have a perfected security interest by mere possession under Mass. Gen. Laws ch. 106 § 9-313(a). Id.

The court found that agreement in "the written retainer agreement between the parties, evidencing the transfer of moneys to the attorney as a retainer." Id. But that agreement did not give Ropes rights post-conversion for five reasons:

First, the retainer gave Ropes no rights in the chapter 7 case because the retainer agreement did not cover chapter 7 work. To the contrary, the retainer agreement expressly restricted its retainer agreement to legal work involving CK's "obligation to its creditors, Micro Control Systems, Inc. and Harold Bowers as well as a possible Chapter 11 filing by [CK] and sale of assets." Id.

and In re Biggar, 110 F.3d 685 (9th Cir.1997) (same). And even when an attorney has a claim for services actually performed before its client went into bankruptcy, that claim is a general unsecured claim not a secured claim like the court below granted to Ropes. Id.

This catalogue of additional errors is representative rather than exhaustive.

Thus, by its plain words, the retainer agreement did not purport to give Ropes a security interest for work performed during a chapter 7 proceeding. Id. Indeed, it did not even give Ropes a security interest for work performed in the chapter 11 proceeding. Instead, the agreement expressly restricted its application to the mere "filing" of the chapter 11 petition. The parties carefully drafted the agreement so it would not apply to any chapter 11 work that came after the petition was "fil[ed]" (A43).[43] Thus, even under state law, the retainer did not give Ropes a secured claim under Mass. Gen. Laws ch. 106 § 9-313(a) for the work Ropes performed in the chapter 7 case.

Ropes' statements in its section 327 chapter 11 employment application support this reading of the retainer agreement because the application never disclosed - in any way - that Ropes was seeking to use the retainer to secure a claim if CK ever went into chapter 7. To the contrary, the employment application represented to the court and to the parties in interest that the retainer was restricted to chapter 11 work (A16-18, 20-22). Indeed, the "Wherefore" clause of the application sought permission to employ Ropes only "during the Chapter 11 case" (A23).

Similarly, the affidavit that Ropes filed in support of its section 327 application did not contend that the retainer had any effect beyond the chapter 11 case (A28). Instead, Ropes' affidavit assured the court and the parties in interest that Ropes held the retainer "in connection with" the chapter 11 case (A39). Thus, the security retainer did not contractually enable Ropes to draw upon it for the purpose of performing chapter 7 work.

[43] That may be because Ropes understood that the agreement could not give Ropes rights in the actual chapter 11 case. As we discuss above, federal law dictates whether counsel may be appointed in chapter 11 cases, and whether and how much they may be paid. 11 U.S.C. 327, 330, 503 and 507. Federal law preempted Ropes' retainer to the extent Ropes sought to use it to obtain more for its services in CK's chapter 11 case than it was allowed under those sections.

Second, Ropes' rights under the security retainer terminated upon the commencement of the initial chapter 11 case because Ropes ceased being CK's counsel unless it was subsequently re-hired under section 327 in the chapter 11 case. Indeed, Ropes' initial chapter 11 application repeatedly conceded that Ropes was not employed in the chapter 11 case unless and until the court approved its application under section 327(a). See, e.g., A17 (initial chapter 11 application concedes that "[t]he Debtor desires to employ R&G . . . in connection with the Debtor's Chapter 11 Case"); A12 (same); A16 (CK "seeks to employ" Ropes in the chapter 11), A23 (asks "the Court" to enter an order "authorizing the Debtor to employ" Ropes); A28 (same statements in Ropes' affidavit). As we discuss above, Ropes had no right to act as chapter 11 counsel unless it was appointed under section 327. If it were appointed, then its payment rights arose from sections 330 and 503(b)(2) of the Code - not the retainer. Thus, Ropes' pre-petition contractual representation actually terminated twice here - first when its client filed chapter 11, necessitating a subsequent section 327 appointment and when it "terminated" by operation of law when the case converted to chapter 7. Each operated under state law to lift any state law lien it had pre-chapter 11.

Third, the security retainer failed to give Ropes a state law secured claim post-conversion because Ropes agreed that "[a]ny remaining portion of the amounts advanced will be refundable at the conclusion of our representation. . . ." (A47). This is fatal to the court's state law analysis. As Lamie, held, Ropes' representation in the chapter 11 concluded - "terminated" in the words of the Supreme Court - when the CK chapter 11 case converted to chapter 7. Lamie, 540 U.S. at 531-32. Thus, the retainer agreement ceased operating as a security agreement under state law when the case converted to chapter 7. At that point, Ropes had a right to seek fees for the work it performed in the chapter 11 under section 330(a), and Ropes did so by filing a section 330 fee application (A479). But under the contractual language of Ropes' security agreement, conversion to chapter 7 "conclu[ded]" Ropes representation and its right to perform chapter 7 work, thereby depriving Ropes of a secured claim for such work under the terms of its agreement and accordingly under Massachusetts law.

Fourth, as the court below acknowledged, Massachusetts law required that the funds be transferred to Ropes. CK, 321 B.R. at 18. But they were not. They were placed in a separate interest-bearing account. See (A46) (Ropes' agreement with CK that these funds be put in a separate interest-bearing account); Indian Motocycle, 66 at 1254 (explaining that attorneys must hold such funds "in trust"). Thus, under state law those funds never transferred to Ropes so no lien attached to them.

Fifth, Ropes did not properly perfect its security interest in the retainer, assuming that it had one. In order to be enforceable against third parties, including a chapter 7 trustee, a security interest in a debtor's property must be perfected. Uniform Commercial Code at § 22-4. Perfection entails additional actions by a creditor to place third parties on notice of its interest, such as by filing a financing statement or taking possession or control of the property. Id.; See Mass. Gen. Laws ch. 106, §§ 9-308 – 9-316.

Citing no case authority, the lower court held that Ropes automatically perfected its security interest in the retainer under Mass. Gen. Laws ch. 106, § 9-313(a) by depositing the funds in its client funds account. CK, 321 B.R. at 18. The lower court implicitly found that the security retainer constituted "money" for purposes of section 9-313(a). Id. Mass. Gen. Laws ch. 106, § 1-201(24) defines "money" as "a medium of exchange authorized or adopted by a domestic or foreign government and includes a monetary unit of account established by an intergovernmental organization or by agreement between two or more nations. . . .”

Citing the companion statute in the North Carolina Uniform Commercial Code, a bankruptcy court recently held that the unapplied balance of a pre-petition security retainer given by a debtor to its chapter 11 counsel was not money that could be perfected through possession under section 9-313(a). In re E-Z Serve Convenience Stores, Inc., 299 B.R. 126, 131 (M.D.N.C. 2003). The court further held that the unapplied balance of the security retainer was not a deposit account, which could be perfected through control under section 9-314. Instead, it was a general intangible, which could be perfected only by filing a financing statement under section 9-310. Id. at 131 – 133; see Mass. Gen. Laws ch. 106, §§ 9-102(29), 9-310, 9-313 and 9-314.[44]

Thus, under Massachusetts UCC law and E-Z Service, Ropes did not have a valid, perfected security interest in its security retainer. The retainer constituted a general intangible. Ropes could have perfected its interest in it only if it had filed a UCC-1 statement per Mass. Gen. Laws ch. 106, § 9-310, which it did not.

[44] Mass. Gen. Laws ch. 106, § 9-102(29) defines “deposit account” as “a demand, time, savings, passbook, or similar account maintained with a bank. The term does not include investment property or accounts evidenced by an instrument . . . .”

Conclusion

For these reasons, the United States Trustee respectfully asks this Court to reverse the order entered below and remand with instructions that the bankruptcy court deny Ropes' request that the CK chapter 7 bankruptcy estate pay Ropes $7,820 for services Ropes performed after the CK case converted to chapter 7.

Statutory Addendum

11 U.S.C. 323. Role and capacity of trustee

(a) The trustee in a case under this title is the representative of the estate.

(b) The trustee in a case under this title has capacity to sue and be sued.

11 U.S.C. 327. Employment of professional persons

(a) Except as otherwise provided in this section, the trustee, with the court's approval, may employ one or more attorneys, accountants, appraisers, auctioneers, or other professional persons, that do not hold or represent an interest adverse to the estate, and that are disinterested persons, to represent or assist the trustee in carrying out the trustee's duties under this title.

(b) If the trustee is authorized to operate the business of the debtor under section 721, 1202, or 1108 of this title, and if the debtor has regularly employed attorneys, accountants, or other professional persons on salary, the trustee may retain or replace such professional persons if necessary in the operation of such business.

(c) In a case under chapter 7, 12, or 11 of this title, a person is not disqualified for employment under this section solely because of such person's employment by or representation of a creditor, unless there is objection by another creditor or the United States trustee, in which case the court shall disapprove such employment if there is an actual conflict of interest.

(d) The court may authorize the trustee to act as attorney or accountant for the estate if such authorization is in the best interest of the estate.

(e) The trustee, with the court's approval, may employ, for a specified special purpose, other than to represent the trustee in conducting the case, an attorney that has represented the debtor, if in the best interest of the estate, and if such attorney does not represent or hold any interest adverse to the debtor or to the estate with respect to the matter on which such attorney is to be employed.

(f) The trustee may not employ a person that has served as an examiner in the case.

11 U.S.C. 330(a). Compensation of officers

(a)(1) After notice to the parties in interest and the United States Trustee and a hearing, and subject to sections 326, 328, and 329, the court may award to a trustee, an examiner, a professional person employed under section 327 or 1103--

(A) reasonable compensation for actual, necessary services rendered by the trustee, examiner, professional person, or attorney and by any paraprofessional person employed by any such person; and

(B) reimbursement for actual, necessary expenses.

(2) The court may, on its own motion or on the motion of the United States Trustee, the United States Trustee for the District or Region, the trustee for the estate, or any other party in interest, award compensation that is less than the amount of compensation that is requested.

(3)(A) In determining the amount of reasonable compensation to be awarded, the court shall consider the nature, the extent, and the value of such services, taking into account all relevant factors, including--

(A) the time spent on such services;

(B) the rates charged for such services;

(C) whether the services were necessary to the administration of, or beneficial at the time at which the service was rendered toward the completion of, a case under this title;

(D) whether the services were performed within a reasonable amount of time commensurate with the complexity, importance, and nature of the problem, issue, or task addressed; and

(E) whether the compensation is reasonable based on the customary compensation charged by comparably skilled practitioners in cases other than cases under this title.

(4)(A) Except as provided in subparagraph (B), the court shall not allow compensation for--

(i) unnecessary duplication of services; or

11 U.S.C. 541(a). Property of the estate

11 U.S.C. 704. Duties of trustee

The trustee shall--

(1) collect and reduce to money the property of the estate for which such trustee serves, and close such estate as expeditiously as is compatible with the best interests of parties in interest;

(3) ensure that the debtor shall perform his intention as specified in section 521(2)(B) of this title;

(4) investigate the financial affairs of the debtor;

(5) if a purpose would be served, examine proofs of claims and object to the allowance of any claim that is improper;

(6) if advisable, oppose the discharge of the debtor;

(7) unless the court orders otherwise, furnish such information concerning the estate and the estate's administration as is requested by a party in interest;

(8) if the business of the debtor is authorized to be operated, file with the court, with the United States trustee, and with any governmental unit charged with responsibility for collection or determination of any tax arising out of such operation, periodic reports and summaries of the operation of such business, including a statement of receipts and disbursements, and such other information as the United States trustee or the court requires; and

(9) make a final report and file a final account of the administration of the estate with the court and with the United States trustee.

ARGUMENT

A. The Closes do not rebut the United States Trustee's four explanations why her deadline for filing chapter 7 dismissal motions does not begin to run under section 704(b)(1) of the Bankruptcy Code until "after" the first meeting of creditors – even when the first meeting requires more than one day to complete.

Section 704(b)(1)(A) and (2) establish a statutory deadline by which a United States Trustee must timely file a motion to dismiss a chapter 7 bankruptcy case. 11 U.S.C. § 704(b)(1)(A) and (2). Under those statutory provisions, that deadline begins to run "after the date of the first meeting of creditors." 11 U.S.C. § 704(b)(1)(A).

The United States Trustee's opening brief explained that her section 704 deadline did not begin to run under the Code in the Closes' case until "after" their multi-day first meeting ended, and explained why the bankruptcy court erred in ruling the deadline began running after day one of the meeting rather than after its end. Open. Br. at 15-17.

There are four reasons why this is so. First, the word "first" as used in the term "first meeting of creditors" in section 704(b)(1)(A) exists to clarify that the deadline begins to run "after" the first of several distinct creditor meetings recognized by the Bankruptcy Code and the Bankruptcy Rules. Open. Br. at 21. Second, this textual reading is consistent with the understanding of the term first meeting of creditors, as it has been historically used in bankruptcy for more than one hundred years, which recognizes that the first meeting can occur over multiple days. Open. Br. at 17-18. Third, the mandatory rule of construction set forth in section 102(7) of the Code fully supports this textual reading because it makes clear the word "date" in section 704(b)(1)(A) "includes" the word "dates." Fourth, this reading comports with sound notions of pubic policy. Open. Br. at 23-27.

In response, the Closes raise four principal arguments. First, although the Closes' merits arguments are not entirely clear to the United States Trustee, it appears they foremost suggest the "first meeting" of creditors can last only one day, so the United States Trustee's deadline in their case began to run from the first of the two days on which their meeting of creditors was held. Close Br. at 17-18, 19-21. Second, the Closes suggest the United States Trustee impermissibly raises new arguments on appeal. Close Br. at 16, 23, 27-28. Third, the Closes disagree with the United States Trustee's contention that her interpretation fosters the fair and efficient administration of bankruptcy cases. Close Br. at 24-27. Finally, the Closes suggest the United States Trustee's appeal is moot because the bankruptcy court entered an order granting them a discharge. Close Br. at 30-32. Each lacks merit.

1. Summary of the Closes' Merits Argument. Reduced to its essence, the Closes appear to argue that each day of a debtor's section 341 first meeting of creditors is a separate meeting. Close Br. at 17-18, 19-21. Their argument is inconsistent with (a) the fact that the term "first meeting" is used merely to distinguish the first meeting that occurs at the beginning of a bankruptcy case from subsequent meetings that can occur in the case, (b) the longstanding universal usage of the term "first" meeting, and (c) Bankruptcy Code section 102(7)'s rule of construction that the singular in a Code provision includes the plural, which takes away any doubt here whether a first meeting can occur on multiple dates.

2. The Closes Suggest Incorrectly that the First Day of a Multi-Day First Meeting of Creditors Starts The United States Trustee's Dismissal Deadline Running. The United States Trustee's opening brief established the Code and the Bankruptcy Rules provide for a first meeting of creditors, as well as a number of subsequent meetings. Open. Br. at 4-5, 16. Textually, the word "first" in section 704(b)(1)(A) thus exists merely to distinguish the first meeting from the later ones. For the reasons explained in the United States Trustee's opening brief, it does not mean, as the

Closes suggest, that the first day of a multi-day meeting constitutes a separate and distinct first meeting that commences the running of the United States Trustee's section 704(b)(1)(A) filing deadline.

In a related argument, the Closes suggest the term "first meeting of creditors" should be read as the "date first set." Close Br. at 20. But that does nothing other than impermissibly rewrite the statute. Adding the word "set" to section 704(b)(1)(A) would alter the section – not interpret it. That is impermissible. Lamie v. United States Trustee, 124 S. Ct. 1023, 1032 (2004) (rejecting an interpretation of a statute that "would have us read an absent word into the statute," producing not "'a construction of [the] statute, but, in effect, an enlargement of it by the court.'") (quoting Iselin v. United States, 270 U.S. 245, 251 (1926)).

Fully supporting the United States Trustee's conclusion on this point is the fact that at least four other deadlines enacted along with section 704(b)(1)(A) in The Bankruptcy Abuse Prevention and Consumer Protection Act of 2005 did use the terms date first scheduled or first set for the meeting of creditors. See 11 U.S.C. §§ 521(a)(2)(B), 521(e)(2)(A)(i), 1308(a), and 1308(b)(1). This underscores Congress knew how to use the term "first set" when it wanted to use it in the 2005 Reform Act, and that its failure to use it in section 704(b)(1)(A) supports the conclusion that term should not be engrafted upon section 704(b)(1)(A).[1]

3. The Closes Fail to Appreciate the Significance of the Century-Long Understanding of the Term "First Meeting of Creditors". The Closes' proffered construction of section 704(b)(1)(A) also fails to recognize that the United States Trustee's construction of the word "first" in the term "first meeting of creditors" is consistent with the longstanding bankruptcy usage of the term "first meeting of creditors." That term is a bankruptcy term of art that means the first mandatory meeting, including any continuances of that meeting.[2] UST Op. Br. at 16-17. Under the Bankruptcy Act of 1898, which was repealed in 1978, the phrase "first meeting of creditors" was used in sections 44, 55, and 57. Although the Bankruptcy Code of 1978 dropped that phrase from the statute, courts and practitioners continued to use the phrase. The Bankruptcy Abuse Prevention and Consumer Protection Act of 2005 reincorporated the phrase "first meeting of creditors" into the Bankruptcy Code in several places. Under accepted canons of statutory construction, that term should be given its historic meaning – the sometimes multi-day meeting that occurs at the beginning of a debtor's bankruptcy case. Dewsnup v. Timm, 502 U.S. 410, 419, 112 S.Ct. 773, 779 (1992) ("When Congress amends the bankruptcy laws, it does not write 'on a clean slate.'"); Kelly v. Robinson, 479 U.S. 36, 44, 107 S.Ct. 353, 358 (1986) (same). Thus, when, as in section 341, "Congress uses terms that have accumulated settled meaning under ... the common law, a court must infer, unless the statute otherwise dictates, that Congress means to incorporate the established meaning of these terms." Neder v. United States, 527 U.S. 1, 21 (1999). See also, Nationwide Mut. Ins. Co. v. Darden, 503 U.S. 318, 322-23 (1992); and Standard Oil Co. of N.J. v. United States, 221 U.S. 1, 59, 31 S.Ct. 502, 55 L.Ed. 619 (1911).

[1] Moreover, the Reform Act of 2005 also sets three additional deadlines based on the date of the mandatory section 341 meeting. See 11 U.S.C. §§ 521(a)(6), 704(b)(1), and 1324(b). Contrary to the Closes' assertion, these phrases have different meanings, Close Br. at 20, and the use of these different terms indicates that these deadlines are based on different dates.

4. The Closes Misunderstand Why 11 U.S.C. § 102(7) Supports the United States Trustee's Textual Argument. The Closes' interpretation also cannot be reconciled with the rule of construction mandated by section 102(7) of the Bankruptcy Code. That rule provides the singular includes the plural. 11 U.S.C. § 102(7).

[2] See also n. 3, infra, and the cases cited in it.

Applying this rule of construction to section 704(b)(1) causes it to be read as providing "the United States trustee . . . shall . . ., not later than 10 days after the date or dates of the first meeting of creditors, file with the court a statement as to whether the debtor's case would be presumed to be an abuse under section 707(b)." Thus, were there any textual ambiguity about the question whether a meeting can continue over multiple dates, this rule of construction would clarify that the "first meeting of creditors" can. Given that, the best reading of section 704(b)(1) is that the 10-Day statement deadline starts running ten days after the last of these dates.[3]

Nor is there anything surprising about any of this. Indeed, the first section of the United States Code similarly provides that singular words in the United States Code include the plural. 1 U.S.C. § 1 ("In determining the meaning of any Act of Congress, unless the context indicates otherwise-words importing the singular include and apply to several persons, parties or things[.]"). Not surprisingly, the Supreme Court has relied upon 1 U.S.C. § 1 to interpret a singular term as including the plural. Barr v. United States, 324 U.S. 83, 91 (1945) (relying, in part, upon 1 U.S.C. § 1 to interpret the term 'buying rate' as including buying rates).

Significantly, section 102(7) is even more compelling than 1 U.S.C. § 1 because it does not include the qualifying words "unless the context indicates otherwise" set forth in section 1 of title 1.

[3] See, e.g., In re Burrell, 289 B.R. 109, 110, 112 (Bankr. C.D. Ill. 2002) (referencing the initial and two continued meeting of creditors, held on July 22, September 5, and October 10, 1996, as "first meeting of creditors"); In re Lake States Commodities, Inc., 173 B.R. 642, 644 (Bankr. N.D. Ill. 1994) (referencing the continued meeting of creditors as "a continued first meeting of creditors"); In re Spenler, 212 B.R. 625, 627 (B.A.P. 9th Cir. 1997) ("The first meeting of creditors began on August 4, 1995, and, after two continuances, was concluded on September 29, 1995"); In re Grand Jury Proceedings, 497 F. Supp. 979, 980 (E.D. Pa. 1980) ("On March 6 and March 29, 1979, William Rosenthal . . . testified at the first meeting of creditors . . . . The first meeting of creditors resumed on March 20, 1979"); In re Young, 1 B.R. 387, 389 (Bankr. M.D. Tenn. 1979) ("although the attorney attended the continued first meeting of creditors . . . . attorney did not realize that his client had grounds for objecting to discharge until after the conclusion of the continued first meeting of creditors"); In re Baker, 299 F. Supp. 404, 406 (W.D. Mo. 1969) ("the first meeting of creditors was held on April 3, 1968 . . . ; that a continued first meeting was held on April 24, 1968 . . . . the first meeting was further continued to May 21, 1968 . . . ; that on that date it was further continued to June 3, 1968 . . . ; and that at the continued first meeting on June 3 . . ., the first meeting was further continued 'generally'").

Compare 1 U.S.C. § 1 with 11 U.S.C. § 102. Put simply, section 102(7) provides less interpretative discretion than even 1 U.S.C. § 1 does.

In an attempt to evade the rule of construction otherwise mandated by section 102 of title 11, the Closes suggest a different result is mandated by the Supreme Court's application of 1 U.S.C. § 1 in First Nat. Bank in St. Louis v. Missouri, 263 U.S. 640, 657, 44 S.Ct. 213, 68 L.Ed. 486 (1924) (applying 1 U.S.C. § 1). Close Br. at 24. This fails to appreciate that the text at issue in St. Louis, unlike 11 U.S.C. § 704(b)(1)(A), could not be read as a plural because it had a singular modifier that prohibited a plural reading. The statutory text at issue in St. Louis - "an office or banking house"), included a singular article – an. Id. As the Supreme Court noted, "the latter provision, employing, as it does, the article 'an' to qualify words in the singular number, would confine the association to one office or banking house." Id.

Section 704(b)(1)(A) is thus completely different from the statute at issue in St. Louis. As the court noted, rules of construction need not be followed when their application countermands "evident intent of the statute." Reading "an office or banking house" as "an offices or banking houses" obviously was not the intent of that statute because the reading was ungrammatical. But reading "after the date of the first meeting" as "after the dates of the first meeting" is not only grammatical but otherwise in accord with the statute's text. Id. See also Universal Church v. Geltzer, 463 F.3d 218, 223 (2nd Cir. 2006) (explaining St. Louis in no way reflexively precludes the application of section 102(7) in bankruptcy cases "because that subsection appears within the specific title under consideration; [so] its application is therefore more straightforward" that the general rule set forth in 1 U.S.C. § 1).

Finally, the Closes suggest application of section 102(7) to the word “first” would produce absurd results. Close Br. at 24. But their example does not support their argument. They suggest applying section 102(7) would also force the use of the plural for the word “meeting” in section 704(b)(1). Id. But such a reading is incorrect because Congress has explicitly indicated otherwise in section 704(b)(1) by modifying the word “meeting” with the singular word “first.” As used in the statute, it would not make grammatical or contextual sense to read “first meeting of creditors” as “first meetings of creditors” because that would mix the singular and the plural, something St. Louis counsels against absent some other basis for such a reading. In stark contrast, however, the word “date” is not modified by anything that indicates it should be read exclusively in the singular. Therefore, it must be read in a manner that includes the plural. 11 U.S.C. § 102(7).

5. The Closes Mistakenly Suggest the United States Trustee’s Interpretation will Foster Abuse. The Closes suggest allowing the historic practice of multi-day first meetings of creditors should not be allowed because chapter 7 trustees could abuse their ability to adjourn the required meeting of creditors under section 341. Close Br. at 21, 25-26. However, as delegates of the United States Trustee, chapter 7 trustees have always had similar discretion concerning the deadline for objecting to a debtor’s claim of exemptions in Bankruptcy Rule 4003(b), and United States Trustees – who are Justice Department officials – have not and would not allow such abuse to happen.

Certainly, the Closes cite no real world examples of such abuse having occurred, and we are not aware of any significant problems in this respect. To the contrary, adjourning first meetings allows trustees to gather additional information and ensure debtors are entitled to the exemptions they claim, to confirm debtors have not hidden assets, that debtors are eligible for bankruptcy relief, and for a host of other reasons. See, e.g., In re Bernard, 40 F.3d 1028, 1031 (9th Cir. 1994) (upholding a chapter 7 trustee's need to continue the meeting of creditors three times over a five and a half month period in order to investigate the debtor's claim of exemptions, and ruling such adjournments are legitimate because even in cases where a debtor attends the commencement of the meeting of creditors, the information provided by the debtor "may prove inadequate, or it may point to other sources."); In re Brown, 221 B.R. 902, 906 (Bankr. M.D. Fla. 1998)("Trustees need sufficient flexibility to freely continue meetings of creditors in order to investigate a debtor"); and In re Cherry, 341 B.R. 581, 587 (Bankr. S.D. Tex. 2006) (same).

B. The Factual and Procedural Objections Raised by the Closes Lack Merit

In addition to addressing the merits, the Closes raise four factual and procedural bases for affirming the lower court's order. None have merit.

1. The Closes Address Factual Disputes this Court need not Resolve in order to Determine the Question of Law Presented to this Court. In their brief, the Closes suggest the United States Trustee's opening brief misstates matters of fact. Close Br. at 3, 7, 9, 10, 12. Although the United States Trustee disagrees with the Closes' factual characterizations, those disputes are irrelevant to this appeal, which involves a question of law this Court can determine without adjudicating the parties' factual disagreements. Should the United States Trustee prevail on her appeal, the orders entered below would be vacated and this case remanded for further proceedings. On remand, the Closes would have a full and fair opportunity to argue the facts as part of an adjudication of the merits of the United States Trustee's dismissal motion.

2. The Closes Suggest Incorrectly that the United States Trustee Impermissibly Raises New Arguments on Appeal. The Closes also suggest the United States Trustee impermissibly raises new "arguments" on appeal, foremost the United States Trustee's citation to 11 U.S.C. § 102(7). Close Br. at 16, 23-24. But this confuses new issues with new authorities.

There is no bar to a party raising new or additional authority on appeal to support an argument raised in the bankruptcy court. C.f. United States v. Nealy, 232 F.3d 825, 830 (11th Cir. 2000) (distinguishing between new authorities and new issues). That is all the United States Trustee has done here.

In her brief and at oral argument below, the United States Trustee specifically argued that "date" in section 704(b)(1) referred to all dates of the meeting, including the concluding date. (ROA: Doc#: 35, p. 4-6; Doc#: 42, Transcript, p. 3-5, 21-28.) This is precisely the issue before this Court. Indeed, the United States Trustee even argued below that the common practice prior to the enactment of the 2005 Reform Act understood the "first meeting of creditors" to mean the first meeting held at the inception of the case. Id. The supportive authorities provided to this Court to establish those arguments are not new issues. Instead, they are "simply a new citation in support of a claim consistently urged throughout this case." Garrett v. Morris, 815 F.2d 509, 512 (8th Cir. 1987), cert. denied sub nom., Jones v. Garrett, 484 U.S. 898 (1987). Therefore, the authorities relied upon by the United States Trustee in her opening brief are properly before this Court.[4]

3. The Closes' Public Policy Concerns are Misplaced. In her opening brief, the United States Trustee explained why the interpretation of section 704(b)(1) pressed by the Closes would disfavor both debtors and the bankruptcy system as a whole. Op. Br. at 23-27. In response, the Closes share their view that debtors will not be harmed by the lower court's interpretation of section 704(b)(1)(A)'s deadline because the United States Trustee can "simply move to continue the first meeting or file a statement of abuse anyway" to obtain additional time to gather necessary information. Close Br. at 25. The Closes do not explain how the United States Trustee can, under their reading of section 704(b)(1)(A), increase her time to obtain sufficient information by moving to continue the mandatory meeting of creditors under section 341. In fact, an adjournment of the section 341 meeting of creditors would only grant additional time to the United States Trustee under the United States Trustee's reading of the statute – that her 10-Day Statement is required on or before the 10th day after the first meeting is concluded. The Closes also do not explain how requiring the United States Trustee to initiate the process of moving to dismiss debtors' cases by filing a statement of abuse before obtaining sufficient information would prevent harm to debtors. Close Br. at 22, 27.

[4] The Closes cite only one case for their assertion that the United States Trustee cannot raise new authorities on appeal—Travelers Cas. and Sur. Co. of America v. Pacific Gas and Elec. Co., 127 S.Ct. 1199 (2007). But Travelers involved a new issue rather than new authorities in support of a legal proposition raised below. In Travelers, the parties whether creditor recovery was precluded by a Ninth Circuit federal common law rule. Before the Supreme Court one party raised a new argument – whether the creditor had a right to recovery under a federal statutory theory of recovery neither pressed nor passed upon below. Here, the United States Trustee's argument has been consistent – she timely filed her motion to dismiss within the deadline set by section 704(b)(1)(A). The authorities she cited below support that conclusion. So do the authorities cited to this Court.

In the United States Trustee's view, the Closes fail to appreciate how damaging their suggested section 704(b) deadline would be for debtors navigating the bankruptcy system. Under their reading, United States Trustees would need to seek dismissal of cases before section 341 meetings are completed. Nor do the Closes dispute that debtors frequently fail to provide required financial information to United States Trustees until well after the meeting of creditors is convened (precisely what happened here.) Often, that information is not only relevant but essential to determining whether a presumption of abuse exists. A perfect example is the six months of payment advices that serve as the basis for debtors' current monthly income (11 U.S.C. §§ 101(10A) and 707(b)(2)(A)(i)), but which debtors provide to United States Trustees but do not have to file with the court (11 U.S.C. § 521(a)(1)(B)(iv)).[5]

Furthermore, under sections 521(i)(1) and 521(i)(3) of the Bankruptcy Code, debtors may be granted up to 90 days from the date of filing their petition to file their schedules, pay advices and other required documents before their case is automatically dismissed. 11 U.S.C. § 521(i)(1), (3). Based on the bankruptcy court's and the Closes' reading of section 704(b)(1)(A), the United States Trustee might have to make her determination as to whether the case is presumptively abusive and file her motion to dismiss before the debtor even files schedules or other vital documents. This cannot be correct and would unduly burden debtors with having to defend against motions to dismiss that could be avoided if section 704(b)(1) were instead interpreted in harmony with the rest of the Code.[6]

We agree with the Closes it is important that creditors receive prompt notice that the presumption of abuse arises in a debtor's case. Close Br. at 21. But the Closes fail to appreciate that the notice given to creditors must also be meaningful. Section 704(b)(1) places a duty on the United States Trustee to provide notice to creditors regarding whether the presumption of abuse arises, because that notice helps creditors decide whether to exercise their statutory right to file their own motions to dismiss the debtor's case. 11 U.S.C. § 707(b)(1). If the United States Trustee files a 10-Day Statement without first being able to gather sufficient information to ensure that the notice has meaning, the 10-Day Statement's utility would be diminished, something that would benefit no one.

[5] Under section 521(a)(1)(B)(iv), debtors are only required to file pay advices for the 60 days pre-petition.

[6] Moreover, Interim Bankruptcy Rule 1017(e) requires the United States Trustee to state the circumstances alleged to constitute abuse with particularity in her motion to dismiss. Interim Fed. R. Bankr. Proc. 1017(e). If the debtor has not filed schedules or other documentation required for the United States Trustee to make a determination regarding the presumption, it would be impossible for the United States Trustee to comply with this Rule.

4. The Closes' Mootness Arguments Lack Merit. Finally, the Closes suggest the United States Trustee's appeal is moot. Close Br. at 30 – 32. That is incorrect for two reasons—(a) the appeal is not moot as a matter of fact; and (b) it is not moot as a matter of law.

Factually, the appeal is not moot because the Closes' bankruptcy case remains open, which means this Court can vacate the orders entered below and remand this case to the bankruptcy court for further proceedings relating to dismissal and discharge. Since the discharge itself is a subject of this appeal, the entry of the discharge cannot possibly moot the appeal of other issues.

Legally, the appeal is not moot for two separate and independent reasons. First, Griggs v. Provident Consumer Disc. Co., 459 U.S. 56, 58 (1982) and its progeny (most significantly In re Padilla, 222 F.3d 1184, 1190 (9th Cir. 2000)) make clear that the lower court erred by entering a discharge order after the United States Trustee had filed a notice of appeal, because the court could not enter an order that adversely affected the United States Trustee's ability to obtain appellate review of the dismissal order. See Open. Br. at 27-28. As a result, the order reinstating the discharge order was and is void. Id.

Second, Fed. R. Bankr. P. 4004(c)(1)(D) did not allow the court below to enter a discharge order in the first place until after the United States Trustee's motion to dismiss was determined. That determination has not yet occurred because the order denying the motion to dismiss was not yet final and non-appealable. In other words, while the order denying the motion for reconsideration was a "final" order for purposes of appeal, the United States Trustee's motion to dismiss remained "pending" until that final order could no longer be appealed. See Williams v. Cain, 217 F.3d 303, 310-11 (5th Cir. 2000); and Bradley v. School Bd. of Richmond, 416 U.S. 696, 711 n. 14 (1974), citing Linkletter v. Walker, 381 U.S. 618, 622 n. 5 (1965). Cf. Griffith v. Kentucky, 479 U.S. 314, 326 (1987).

Finally, the Closes' mootness arguments prove too much. Were they valid, it is difficult to envision how any order in a civil case would not be moot unless the losing party obtained a stay. That is simply not the law, and the Closes cite no authority for that novel proposition. Nor would their proposed rule make sense, as it allows bankruptcy courts to automatically moot a host of legal issues, including all appeals from orders denying section 707(b) motion to dismiss, merely by entering a discharge immediately after entering the order denying the motion. Indeed, under that scenario, the moving party – including creditors and the Department of Justice - would not even have the opportunity to request a stay.

CONCLUSION

For these reasons, the United States Trustee respectfully asks this Court to reverse the orders entered below, and remand the case for further proceedings on the merits of the United States Trustee's motion to dismiss.

Respectfully submitted,

FELICIA S. TURNER

JURISDICTIONAL STATEMENT

The United States Bankruptcy Court for the District of Kansas had jurisdiction over David and Jada Close's chapter 7 bankruptcy case under 28 U.S.C. §§ 157(a) and (b), and 1334(a). Those provisions also gave the bankruptcy court jurisdiction to decide the United States Trustee's motion to dismiss the debtors' bankruptcy case for abuse under 11 U.S.C. § 707(b).[1] The court denied the United States Trustee's motion by order entered October 19, 2006. The United States Trustee timely filed a motion to reconsider on October 27, 2006. FED. R. BANKR. P. 9023 and 9024. The bankruptcy court denied the motion to reconsider by order entered February 7, 2007. The United States Trustee timely appealed both orders under 28 U.S.C. § 158(c)(2) and Fed. R. Bankr. P. 8002(a) on February 20, 2007. FED. R. BANKR. P. 8002(b) and 9006(a).

The bankruptcy court entered another order on February 16, 2007, granting the debtors a discharge of their debts. Although that order was vacated on February 20, 2007, it was reinstated on February 21, 2007. The United States Trustee timely appealed the discharge order and the order reinstating the discharge. This Court has jurisdiction over both appeals under 28 U.S.C. § 158(a)(1).

STATEMENT OF THE ISSUES

1. Did the bankruptcy court err in ruling that the deadline imposed by 11 U.S.C. § 704(b)(1)(A) for the United States Trustee to file a statement as to whether the Closes' case should

2. Did the bankruptcy court err under Fed. R. Bankr. STANDARD OF REVIEW

Where "the issues on appeal pertain to the proper application of bankruptcy statutes and the interpretation of case law, . . . review is de novo." In re Midkiff, 342 F.3d 1194, 1197 (10th Cir. 2003) (citing In re Tuttle, 291 F.3d 1238, 1240 (10th Cir. 2002)). Whether the bankruptcy court properly interpreted the deadlines in 11 U.S.C. § 704(b) and whether the debtors should have received a discharge are issues of law subject to de novo review.

STATEMENT OF THE CASE

Recent amendments to the Bankruptcy Code direct each United States Trustee to review all chapter 7 bankruptcy cases to determine whether a debtor's disposable income exceeds a statutory trigger that renders his or her bankruptcy filing presumptively abusive and subject to dismissal. 11 U.S.C. §§ 704(b) and 707(b)(2). Before the bankruptcy court, Mr. and Ms. Close initially acknowledged their chapter 7 filing was presumptively abusive, although they later sought to withdraw that admission. (ROA, Doc#: 1, pg. 43.; ROA, Doc#: 25, pg. 1.) Because the Closes' case was abusive, the United States Trustee moved to dismiss it under two subsections of section 707, as a presumed abuse under section 707(b)(2) and for abuse based on the totality of the circumstances under section 707(b)(3). (ROA, Doc#: 20.) The Closes opposed the United States Trustee’s motion on the merits. (ROA, Doc#: 29.)

The Closes also argued the United States Trustee’s motion to dismiss was not timely filed under 11 U.S.C. § 704(b)(1)(A). The court below agreed and dismissed the United States Trustee’s count under section 707(b)(2) on that ground.[2] (ROA, Doc#: 40.) After denying the United States Trustee’s motion but before her time for appealing that order ran, the court below entered an order discharging the debtors of their debts, which the court withdrew, then later reentered. The United States Trustee appeals the denial of her motion to dismiss, and the orders granting these debtors a discharge of the debts they owe their creditors.

STATEMENT OF THE FACTS

A. Statutory Framework

1. Under the Bankruptcy Code, United States Trustees must file motions to dismiss certain types of chapter 7 cases within a statutorily specified number of days.

The United States Trustee is required by section 704(b) of the Bankruptcy Code to review all materials and determine if the debtor’s bankruptcy case is a presumed abuse of the provisions of chapter 7 under section 707(b)(2). If the United States Trustee’s review reveals that the debtor’s case is a presumed abuse, section 704(b)(1)(A) requires the United States Trustee to file a 10-Day Statement within 10 days “after the date of the first meeting of creditors.” 11 U.S.C. § 704(b)(1)(A). In turn, if the United States Trustee determines that a motion to dismiss under section 707(b)(2) is appropriate, the United States Trustee must file the motion within 30 days after the date of filing the 10-Day Statement. 11 U.S.C. § 704(b)(2). Accordingly, two very important deadlines regarding the

[2] The United States Trustee withdrew the section 707(b)(3) portion of the motion to dismiss on November 1, 2006, while the motion to dismiss was still pending. (ROA, Doc#: 43; Doc#: 44.)

United States Trustee's motion to dismiss under section 707(b)(2) arise "after the date of the first meeting of creditors."

The "meeting of creditors" that triggers these deadlines is provided for by section 341 of the Bankruptcy Code, but the phrase "first meeting of creditors" does not appear in section 341. The Bankruptcy Act of 1898 that preceded the modern Bankruptcy Code, Bankruptcy Act of July 1, 1898, c. 541, ss 301-99, 30 Stat. 544 (formerly codified at 11 U.S.C. ss 701-99), repealed, Act of Nov. 6, 1978, Pub.L.No.95-598, s 401(a), 92 Stat. 2549 (hereinafter the "Bankruptcy Act") provided for a "first" meeting of creditors early in the progress of each bankruptcy case. Bankruptcy Act § 55(a). It also contained provisions for optional interim meetings after the "first meeting," and for a "final" meeting in some cases. Bankruptcy Act §§ 55(d) and (e).

The Bankruptcy Code continues to provide for one required meeting of creditors "within a reasonable time after" commencement of each case, 11 U.S.C. § 341(a), but lacks any express provisions for interim or final meetings. Section 341(c), however, continues to make reference to the possibility of a final meeting by providing that the court may not preside at any meeting commenced under section 341, "including any final meeting of creditors." 11 U.S.C. § 341(c). Bankruptcy Rules 2003(f) and (g) also provide for "special meetings" and a "final meeting" to be conducted under section 341. FED. R. BANKR. P. 2003(f), (g).

The "first meeting" under the Bankruptcy Act was designed as an occasion for creditors to meet together, establish their claims, and elect a trustee to administer a debtor's estate in bankruptcy, 3 Collier on Bankruptcy (14th ed. 1977) ¶ 55.01; In re Vance, 120 B.R. 181, 184 (Bankr. D. Okla. 1990). In modern bankruptcy practice, claims are usually made by filing proofs with the clerk and are determined through litigation. 11 U.S.C. §§ 501-502; FED. R. BANKR. P. 3001-3008. Although trustees may still be elected, chapter 7 trustees are now generally appointed by the United States Trustee or the court. 11 U.S.C. §§ 701, 702(d), 703(c). Therefore the "first" meeting of creditors has become less urgent and pivotal in bankruptcy administration than it once was under the old Bankruptcy Act. Vance, 120 B.R. at 184.

Nevertheless, the initial meeting of creditors under section 341 of the Bankruptcy Code still often is loosely referred to as the "first meeting of creditors" as a vestige of pre-Code practice under the Bankruptcy Act, and still provides an opportunity for parties in interest (the trustee, creditors, and any others) to meet with each other and to question the debtor regarding his or her financial affairs. It is still required by statute that the meeting be held, 11 U.S.C. § 341(a), and that the debtor "submit to interrogation under oath." 11 U.S.C. § 343.

In addition to the mandatory initial – or first – meeting, the Bankruptcy Court and the Bankruptcy Rules continue to recognize there may be "final" meetings or "special meetings" under section 341. 11 U.S.C. 341(a) (meeting of creditors); 341(b) (meeting of equity security holders) 341(c) (referencing "any" final meeting of creditors). Cf. In re Duplante, 204 B.R. 49 (Bankr. S.D. Cal. 1996) rev'd, 215 B.R. 444 (B.A.P. 9th Cir. 1997) (creditor did not attend the section 341 "final" meeting of creditors).

Adjournment or continuation of an initial meeting of creditors required under section 341 of the Code is governed by Bankruptcy Rule 2003(e). It provides that the meeting may "be adjourned from time to time." FED. R. BANKR. P. 2003(e).

2. The United States Trustee's duties under section 704(b)

The Bankruptcy Abuse Prevention and Consumer Protection Act of 2005, Pub. L. No. 109-8, 119 Stat. 37 ("BAPCPA"), became effective, in relevant part, on October 17, 2005. The Closes filed a voluntary petition under chapter 7 of the Bankruptcy Code on February 28, 2006. (ROA, Docket Report, pg. 9.) Thus, this case is governed by the BAPCPA.

The BAPCPA was the culmination of almost a decade of Congressional work to amend the 1978 Bankruptcy Code. A primary goal behind Congress' complete overhaul of the Bankruptcy Code was to ensure "that those debtors who can afford to repay some portion of their unsecured debts be required to do so... ." 151 CONG. REC. S2470 (March 10, 2005).

As it existed prior to BAPCPA, section 707(b) only authorized dismissal based on a finding that allowing the debtor relief constituted a "substantial abuse" of chapter 7. Further, section 707(b) prior to its amendment by BAPCPA required courts to presume that a debtor was entitled to relief under chapter 7 of the Bankruptcy Code. Section 707(b) now authorizes dismissal where the court finds that the granting of relief would be an "abuse" of chapter 7. As amended by the BAPCPA, section 707(b)(2) repealed the former presumption and replaced it with a new presumption: a case is an "abuse" of chapter 7 if a detailed mathematical formula set out in the statute, commonly referred to as the "means test," yields a minimum amount of monthly disposable income.

The means test uses a series of calculations to determine whether the section 707(b)(2) presumption of abuse arises. See 11 U.S.C. § 707(b)(2)(A). Specifically, the means test calculates a debtor's current monthly income, as defined under 11 U.S.C. § 101(10A) (hereafter "CMI"), based on the debtor's average income for the six calendar months preceding the month of the bankruptcy filing. If the debtor's CMI is above the applicable state median family income, as is the case here, 11 U.S.C. § 707(b)(2)(A) calculates the debtor's monthly disposable income available to repay creditors by reducing the CMI by certain expenses.

If a debtor's monthly disposable income, calculated by reducing the CMI by allowed expenses, is less than $100 per month (or $6,000 over 60 months), the presumption of abuse does not arise. 11 U.S.C. § 707(b)(2)(A).[3] If the debtor's monthly disposable income is equal to or exceeds $167 per month (or $10,000 over 60 months), the presumption of abuse does arise. Id. If the debtor's monthly disposable income is between $100 and $167 per month (between $6,000 and $10,000 over 60 months), the presumption of abuse arises if the disposable income, over 60 months, is sufficient to pay 25 percent of the debtor's nonpriority unsecured debt. Id.

If the presumption of abuse arises under section 707(b)(2) based on the means test, the debtor may attempt to rebut the presumption under 11 U.S.C. § 707(b)(2)(B) by demonstrating special circumstances that justify income or expense adjustments for which there is no reasonable alternative.

Each debtor with primarily consumer debts is required to file, in conjunction with his or her bankruptcy schedules and statement of financial affairs, a Statement of Current Monthly Income and Means Test Calculation, Official Form 22A of the Federal Rules of Bankruptcy Procedure ("Form 22A").[4] 11 U.S.C. § 521 and § 707(b)(2)(C). In chapter 7 cases the main purpose of the Form 22A is to calculate monthly disposable income (ability to pay) following the formula set forth in 11 U.S.C. § 707(b)(2), and determine whether the presumption of abuse arises.

3 Under 11 U.S.C. § 104, the dollar amounts set forth in Title 11 and applicable to the threshold amounts for determining when the presumption of abuse arises under the means test were adjusted based on the consumer price index for cases filed on or after April 1, 2007. This case is not subject to the dollar amount adjustments

4 The Form was known as "B22A" at the time the Closes filed this case. We will use the current form name "22A" throughout.

Congress charged the United States Trustee with analyzing Official Form 22A and the other materials filed by debtors for the purpose of enforcing the provisions of section 707(b)(2). Section 704(b)(1)(A) requires the United States Trustee to review all materials filed by the debtor and then file a statement with the bankruptcy court as to whether the debtor's case should be presumed to be an abuse (the "10-Day Statement"). The 10-Day Statement must be filed by the United States Trustee "not later than 10 days after the date of the first meeting of creditors." 11 U.S.C. § 704(b)(1)(A) (emphasis added). If the presumption arises, as it did here, section 704(b)(2) requires the United States Trustee to file either a motion to dismiss or a statement indicating why the United States Trustee does not believe that a motion to dismiss is appropriate "not later than 30 days after the date of filing" the 10-Day Statement. 11 U.S.C. § 704(b)(2).

B. Case History

1. Mr. and Mrs. Closes' bankruptcy filing

The Closes filed their chapter 7 petition commencing this bankruptcy case on February 28, 2006. (ROA, Doc#: 1.) Mr. and Mrs. Close filed an Official Form 22A with their petition, which reflected that they had monthly disposable income of $192.96, or $11,577.60 over sixty months. (ROA, Doc#: 1, pg. 47.) Because that amount of disposable income creates a presumption of abuse under section 707(b)(2), Mr. and Mrs. Close checked the box at the top of their Official Form 22A that states, "The presumption arises." (ROA, Doc#: 1, pg. 43.)

Along with their bankruptcy petition, the Closes filed pay stubs for only two months prior to filing. (ROA, Doc#: 4, pg. 1-8.) Because section 101(10A) defines CMI as income received in the six months prior to filing, the United States Trustee could not verify the CMI reported on the Closes' means test form. Further, the United States Trustee identified certain expenses that Mr. and Mrs.

Close might have been entitled to deduct from their CMI but may have omitted on their Form 22A, including medical and dental insurance expenses. (ROA, Doc#: 1, pg. 28, 43, 46.)

The United States Trustee sent a letter to Mr. and Mrs. Close's attorney on March 14, 2006 requesting, among other things, pay stubs for the full six-month CMI period and inquiring about any health insurance expenses that may have been omitted as deductions on their Official Form 22A. (ROA, Doc#: 37, second part, pg. 1-2; Doc#: 39, pg. 2.) The letter requested a response no later than March 29, 2006, as required by D. Kan. LBR 4002.2(a). (ROA, Doc#: 37, second part, pg. 2.) The Closes' attorney received the United States Trustee's letter on March 17, 2006, (ROA, Doc#: 36, pg. 4) but did not respond prior to the beginning of the Closes' meeting of creditors.

2. The Meeting of Creditors required under section 341 of the Code took place on March 30 and April 27, 2006.

The meeting of the Closes' creditors under section 341 of the Bankruptcy Code was noticed for March 30, 2006. That was one day after the March 29 date by which the Closes' counsel had been asked to turn over additional documentary information to the United States Trustee for use in evaluating the debtors' bankruptcy case. (ROA, Doc#: 39, pg. 2.) Because the Closes did not provide that information as of March 29, 2006, the United States Trustee asked the chapter 7 trustee to adjourn the March 30 meeting in order to give Mr. and Mrs. Close additional time to produce the requested information and documentation. (ROA, Doc#: 36, pg. 4; Doc#: 39, pg. 2.) When the Closes appeared at the section 341 meeting on March 30, 2006, the chapter 7 trustee informed them that the meeting was being adjourned because they had not yet provided the information requested by the United States Trustee for use at that meeting. (ROA, Doc#: 36, pg. 4.) The chapter 7 trustee examined Debtors under oath on March 30, 2006. (ROA, Doc#: 29, pg. 2.)

By letter dated March 30, 2006, Mr. and Mrs. Close's attorney responded to the United States Trustee's March 14, 2006 letter. (ROA, Doc#: 36, pg. 4; Doc#: 37, third part, pg. 1.) The response did not attach the six months of pay stubs requested by the United States Trustee. (ROA, Doc#: 36, pg. 4.) Although the Closes indicated that they had health insurance, they did not indicate how much they paid for their insurance premiums and did not provide any documentation related to their health insurance that could substantiate an additional deduction. (ROA, Doc#: 35, pg. 2.) The United States Trustee subsequently left two telephone messages with the Closes' counsel to request the missing information and documentation. (ROA, Doc#: 35, pg. 2.) Mr. and Mrs. Close's counsel did not return either phone call. (ROA, Doc#: 35, pg. 2.)

The section 341 meeting of creditors was concluded on April 27, 2006, without appearance by the Closes or their attorney. (ROA, Doc#: 15.)

3. The United States Trustee seeks dismissal of the Closes' bankruptcy case.

Two business days after the section 341 meeting of creditors – on May 1, 2006 – the United States Trustee filed a Statement, under section 704(b)(1), that a presumption of abuse arose in the Close's bankruptcy case. (ROA, Docket Report, pg. 7.) On May 30, 2006, the United States Trustee moved to dismiss their case under two subsections of 707(b) of the Code, subsections 707(b)(2) and (b)(3).(ROA,Doc#:19.)

On June 20, 2006, three weeks after the United States Trustee filed her motion to dismiss, the Closes filed an amended Official Form 22A and indicated on the amended Form 22A that the presumption of abuse did not arise. (ROA, Doc#: 25, pg. 1.) The amended Form 22A reflected reduced income for Mr. Close. (ROA, Doc#: 25, p. . 1; Doc#: 29, pg. 2-4.) The Closes did not attach documentation to support any of the amendments, nor did they provide the United States

Trustee with the six months of pay stubs to verify their current monthly income that the United States Trustee had requested in her March 14 letter. (ROA, Doc#: 29; Doc#: 35, pg. 2; Doc#: 36, pg. 4; Doc#: 42, Transcript, pg. 10, ln. 7-12.) Mr. and Mrs. Close filed a Response to United States Trustee's motion to dismiss on July 5, 2006. In their Response, the Closes asserted, inter alia, that the United States Trustee's motion to dismiss was time-barred by section 704(b)(1)(A) because the 10-Day Statement was filed within ten days of the conclusion of the meeting of creditors instead of the first date of the meeting.

C. Procedural History Leading to this Appeal

By opposition filed July 5, 2006, Mr. and Mrs. Close argued that the United States Trustee's motion to dismiss their case as a presumed abuse of chapter 7 had not been timely filed. They claimed that section 704(b)(1)(A) required the United States Trustee to file the 10-Day Statement within 10 days of the first date of the first meeting of creditors, rather than within 10 days after the meeting of creditors was concluded. (ROA, Doc#: 29, pg. 5-7.) The bankruptcy court heard oral argument on the timeliness issue on September 20, 2006, after which the bankruptcy court took the matter under advisement. (ROA, Docket Sheet, pg. 4.)

On October 19, 2006, the Bankruptcy Court entered an order denying in part the United States Trustee's motion to dismiss; it concluded that the portion of the motion based upon the presumption of abuse under 11 U.S.C. § 707(b)(2) was time-barred. (ROA, Doc#: 40.) The United States Trustee filed a Motion to Reconsider the order on October 27, 2006, thus extending the time for filing this appeal under Fed. R. Bankr. P. 8002(b). (ROA, Doc#: 41.) While the motion to reconsider was pending, the United States Trustee withdrew the remaining portion of her motion to dismiss, which had sought dismissal under section 707(b)(3). (ROA, Doc#: 43; Doc#: 44.) The bankruptcy court denied the United States Trustee's motion to reconsider on February 7, 2007. (ROA, Doc#: 47.) Because the ten-day deadline for filing her appeal fell on a weekend, the United States Trustee filed this appeal on the next business day, February 20, 2007. (ROA, Doc#: 51.)

Just prior to the expiration of the deadline for the United States Trustee to file her appeal, on February 16, 2007, the bankruptcy court entered its Order Discharging Debtor. (ROA, Doc#: 49.) On the next business day, February 20, 2007, the court vacated that order. (ROA, Doc#: 53.) However, the following day the court entered an Order Setting Aside Order Vacating Discharge Order. (ROA, Doc#: 54.) Thus, Mr. and Mrs. Close have now received a discharge. The United States Trustee filed a notice of appeal from (a) the order discharging the debtor and (b) the order setting aside the order vacating the discharge order on February 26, 2007. (ROA, Doc#: 55.) The two appeals were consolidated by this Court on April 9, 2007.

SUMMARY OF THE ARGUMENT

1. The bankruptcy court denied the United States Trustee's motion to dismiss these debtors' chapter 7 bankruptcy case under 11 U.S.C. § 707(b)(2) on the ground that the United States Trustee's motion was filed beyond the deadline set forth in 11 U.S.C. § 704(b)(1)(A). The bankruptcy court erroneously interpreted section 704(b)(1)(A) of the Code to mean a United States Trustee must file a 10-Day Statement within 10 days after the beginning of the initial session of the 11 U.S.C. § 341meeting of creditors in order for it to be timely filed. If this were what the statute actually required, that would be one thing. But this is at odds with the statute's text and is not the way bankruptcy courts and practitioners commonly use the phrase "first meeting of creditors" in the context of bankruptcy cases. Rather, in the bankruptcy context, the phrase "first meeting of creditors" is a vestige remaining from pre-Bankruptcy Code practice under the Bankruptcy Act, which expressly provided for a "first" meeting. The phrase is now used simply to distinguish the initial required meeting of creditors from any subsequent meetings that the trustee may call under section 341 of the Code. 11 U.S.C. § 341(c); FED. R. BANKR. P. 2003(f) and (g). The Code, the Bankruptcy Rules and case law all recognize that the "first meeting" of creditors may, as here, occur on more than one date. See 11 U.S.C. § 341(d); FED. R. BANKR. P. 2003(e); In re Bernard, 40 F.3d 1028, 1031 (9th Cir. 1994); In re Cherry, 341 B.R. 581 (Bankr. S.D. Tex. 2006) (when a creditor's meeting is not concluded, it is "adjourned to a date announced at the meeting and each of those sessions is part of the meeting until it is announced that it is concluded.")

The bankruptcy court's interpretation fails to adhere to the Bankruptcy Code's Rule of Construction set out in 11 U.S.C. § 102(7), which mandates that the word "date" in section 704(b)(1)(A) must be read to include all of the "dates" on which an adjourned section 341 meeting is held. 11 U.S.C. § 102(7). The United States Trustee filed her 10-Day Statement in this case on May 1, 2006, within 10 days "after" the last of these dates. Therefore, she timely filed her 10-Day Statement under section 704(b)(1)(A).

The bankruptcy court's reading further fails to recognize the express requirement in section 704(b)(1)(A) that the 10-Day Statement must be filed "after" the required meeting of creditors is held. An adjourned meeting, like the one adjourned here, may encompass more than one date and section 704(b)(1)(A), read in compliance with section 102(7)'s rules of construction, requires that all dates of the meeting be accounted for. Accordingly, the United States Trustee's reading is the only interpretation that takes into account all of the important statutory language.

The bankruptcy court's reading of section 704(b)(1)(A) also frustrates the United States Trustee's statutory duty to enforce the goals of the BAPCPA amendments and harms debtors.

Allowing the United States Trustee 10 days after the conclusion of the section 341 meeting to review the debtor's material, including material produced at the section 341 meeting, ensures that the United States Trustee can make an informed decision regarding whether the debtor's case is presumptively abusive. The bankruptcy court's ruling needlessly truncates the review process and rewards debtors who fail to provide full disclosure. Moreover, requiring the United States Trustee to file 10-Day Statements and motions to dismiss before all of the information is reviewed will harm debtors by requiring them to defend against dismissal motions, the filing of which could have been prevented by allowing debtors time to provide necessary information.

2. The bankruptcy court's orders granting the Closes a discharge and then reinstating their discharge should also be reversed. The first order was entered before the United States Trustee's deadline to appeal the denial of her motion to dismiss had expired. The second order was entered after she had filed this appeal. Interim Fed. R. Bankr. P. 4004(c)(1) prohibits the bankruptcy court from entering a discharge while a motion to dismiss under section 707(b) is pending. "Pending" includes any motion to dismiss where an order has been entered, but the order has not become final. Williams v. Cain, 217 F.3d 303, 310-11 (5th Cir. 2000). Therefore, the bankruptcy court should not have entered the discharge.

ARGUMENT

A. The Bankruptcy Court's Interpretation of Section 704(b)(1)(A) Fails to Give Meaning to All Words of the Statute.

The bankruptcy court's order denying the United States Trustee's motion to dismiss the Close's case fails to give meaning to all parts of section 704(b)(1)(A) and should be reversed. The bankruptcy court's ruling would impose on the United States Trustee a duty not required by the statute to file the 10-Day Statement before all dates of the first meeting of creditors have occurred.

This misreads the Bankruptcy Code and would permit abusive debtors to evade the means test simply by dragging their feet and refusing to provide information critical to the United States Trustee's analysis of presumed abuse.

In this case, the court below failed to adhere to the language of section 704(b)(1)(A) in three respects. First, the bankruptcy court failed to adopt a contextually accurate interpretation of the phrase "first meeting of creditors" in section 704(b)(1)(A). Second, the bankruptcy court failed to read section 704(b)(1)(A) in conjunction with rules of construction set forth in section 102(7) of the Code, which provides that the word "date" in section 704(b)(1)(A) must include the plural "dates," and therefore includes all dates of the meeting. Third, the court below failed to give meaning to the language of section 704(b)(1)(A), which provides that the United States Trustee's 10-Day Statement shall be filed after the dates of the section 341 meeting. The court's reading is at odds with the plain text of the statute because it would effectively require the United States Trustee to file the 10-Day statement during, and not after, the required meeting of creditors.

1. The bankruptcy court's interpretation of "first meeting of creditors" is contextually inaccurate.

Although the court below held that the word "first" in "first meeting of creditors" refers to the first date of the meeting (ROA, Doc#: 40, pg. 5), such a reading is untenable. Statutory words must be construed in context. Hibbs v. Winn, 542 U.S. 88, 101 (2004). In the bankruptcy context, the term "first meeting of creditors" in section 704(b)(1)(A) echoes practice under the pre-Code Bankruptcy Act, and distinguishes the first meeting held under section 341 of the Code from any special or final meetings that may be called by the trustee under section 341 and Fed. R. Bankr. P. 2003. It does not refer to the first date of that meeting, as the bankruptcy court erroneously held.

The "meeting of creditors" refers to 11 U.S.C. § 341, which states, "[w]ithin a reasonable time after the order for relief . . ., the United States trustee shall convene and preside at a meeting of creditors." 11 U.S.C. § 341(a). The Federal Rules of Bankruptcy Procedure require the "meeting of creditors" under this section to be convened between 20 and 40 days after the case is filed. FED. R. BANKR. P. 2003(a). However, section 341 explicitly contemplates the possibility that the trustee may, but is not required to, call additional meetings of creditors. 11 U.S.C. § 341(c) (prohibiting the bankruptcy court from presiding at or attending "any meeting under this section including any final meeting of creditors.") (Emphasis added.) This is consistent with the Bankruptcy Rules, which allow the United States Trustee to call a "special meeting of creditors" or a "final meeting of creditors." 11 U.S.C. § 341(a), (b) and (c); FED. R. BANKR. P. 2003(f) and (g). Importantly, this is also consistent with widespread practice under the Bankruptcy Act, which expressly provided for a "first" meeting of creditors early in the progress of each bankruptcy case, as well as optional interim meetings and a "final" meeting in some cases. Bankruptcy Act §§ 55(a), (d) and (e).

Since there may be more than one type of "meeting of creditors," Congress likely continued use of the pre-Code term "first meeting" in section 704(b)(1)(A) to specify that the deadline to file a 10-Day Statement runs from "after" the end of the initial meeting of creditors required by section 341(a), rather than the other special or final meetings that may be held under section 341.

This is consistent with the way bankruptcy courts interpret the phrase. They frequently use the pre-Code phrase "first meeting of creditors" when referring to adjourned sessions of the required meeting convened under section 341, even though the word "first" does not appear anywhere in section 341 of the Code. In re Burrell, 289 B.R. 109, 110, 112 (Bankr. C.D. Ill. 2002)(referring to the "first" meeting of creditors as being resumed on a date other than that on which it was commenced); In re Lake States Commodities, Inc., 173 B.R. 642, 644 (Bankr. N.D. Ill. 1994)(same); In re Grand Jury Proceedings, 497 F. Supp. 979, 980 (E.D. Pa. 1980) (same). See also, In re Spenler, 212 B.R. 625, 627 (B.A.P. 9th Cir. 1997)("first" meeting of creditors concluded on date different than commencement); and In re Young, 1 B.R. 387, 389 (Bankr. M.D. Tenn. 1979)(same).

Although it was express under the Bankruptcy Act, the term "first meeting of creditors" did not appear in the Bankruptcy Code until the BAPCPA amendments. One other reference in the current Code to the "first meeting of creditors" is found in § 521(e)(2). There, the new BAPCPA provision requires a debtor to provide the chapter 7 trustee with a copy of the tax return for the most recent tax year "no later than 7 days before the date first set for the first meeting of creditors." If "first meeting of creditors" really means the "first date" of the meeting of creditors, as the bankruptcy court concluded, then the usage of both terms in section 521(e)(2) would be redundant. See Gustafson v. Alloyd Co., 513 U.S. 561, 574 (1995) (Court avoids interpreting statutes in a way that "renders some words altogether redundant.")

In the Closes' case, there were two sessions of the required section 341 meeting. The first took place on March 30 and the second on April 27. But they were part of a single event because the meeting of creditors was suspended on March 30, 2006 and was not concluded until April 27, 2007.

The Bankruptcy Rules underscore that it is one meeting because they also provide that the meeting "may be adjourned from time to time" and so may encompass more than one day. Fed. R. Bankr. Proc. 2003(e). The Ninth Circuit has also recognized that Rule 2003(e) contemplates that the "first meeting" under section 341 "can't always be completed in one session. It thus authorizes the trustee to adjourn the meeting 'to enable the debtor to give additional testimony or to enable creditors to conduct additional examination.'" In re Bernard, 40 F.3d 1028, 1031 (9th Cir. 1994) (rejecting argument that deadline under Rule 4003(b) for trustee or creditor to object to list of property claimed as exempt begins to run from date of "first session" of sec. 341 meeting and holding that time begins to run from date of "conclusion" of sec. 341 meeting); see also In re Cherry, 341 B.R. 581 (Bankr. S.D. Tex. 2006) (when a creditor's meeting is not concluded, it is "adjourned to a date announced at the meeting and each of those sessions is part of the meeting until it is announced that it is concluded.") Therefore, the "first" meeting of creditors referred to in section 704(b)(1)(A) does not refer to an event that has a single date, but rather one event that may occur on multiple dates.

2. The Bankruptcy Code's rules of statutory construction require courts to interpret section 704(b)(1)(A) to include all dates of the section 341 meeting of creditors.

Reading section 341 as authorizing a single initial meeting to transcend several dates draws substantial support from the rules of construction Congress mandated be used when interpreting the Bankruptcy Code. See 11 U.S.C. § 102(7) ("Rules of Construction"). One of those rules is found in section 102(7) of the Bankruptcy Code. It provides that "In this title– . . . the singular includes the plural." 11 U.S.C. § 102(7). Section 102(7) thus requires courts to read section 704(b)(1)(A) as follows:

> the United States trustee . . . shall . . ., not later than 10 days after the dates of the first meeting of creditors, file with the court a statement as to whether the debtor's case would be presumed to be an abuse under section 707(b) . . .

When properly construed in accordance with this section, the plain language of section 704(b)(1)(A) necessarily allows for the first meeting of creditors to occur on more than one date.

The legislative history to section 102(7) supports this reading. This legislative history provides that:

> Paragraph (7) specified that the singular includes the plural. The plural, however, generally does not include the singular. The bill uses only the singular, even when the item in question most often is found in plural quantities, in order to avoid the confusion possible if both rules of construction applied. When an item is specified in the plural, the plural is intended.

House Report No. 95-595, 95th Cong. 1st Sess. (1977) 316; Senate Report No. 95-989, 95th Cong., 2nd Sess. (1978) (italics added). Section 102(7) is also routinely applied by courts interpreting the Bankruptcy Code to read singular terms as including the plural, even though the plural is not specifically enumerated in the Code. For example, in Universal Church v. Geltzer, 463 F.3d 218, 223 (2nd Cir. 2006), the Second Circuit construed the term "transfer" in section 548(a)(2)[5] to include multiple "transfers" of charitable contributions. Id. (holding that section 102(7) is a "significant provision of the Bankruptcy Code"); see also In re Hailes, 77 F.3d 873, 875 (5th Cir. 1996) ("transfer" in section 547(c)(8) means "more than one transfer"); In re Maus, 282 B.R. 836, 840 (Bankr. N.D. Ohio 2002) (same).

Such construction is in harmony with section 341, which provides that "Prior to the conclusion of the meeting of creditors . . ., the trustee shall orally examine the debtor . . . ." 11 U.S.C. § 341(d). (Emphasis added.) In other words, if the trustee is not able to conduct a complete oral examination of the debtor on the date that the required meeting is convened, the required meeting must be adjourned and concluded on a different day. See also FED. R. BANKR. P. 2003(e).

Because the "first" meeting of creditors began on March 30, 2006 but was suspended until, and concluded on, April 27, 2006, the United States Trustee had 10 days from all of the dates of the meeting, and not simply from the first session of the meeting, to comply with section 704. Accordingly, when section 704(b)(2)(A) is read in accordance with section 102(7), the bankruptcy court's holding must be reversed.

3. Section 704(b)(1)(A) requires the United States Trustee to file the 10-Day Statement after the meeting of creditors, not during the meeting.

The bankruptcy court concluded that the United States Trustee's deadline under section 704(b)(1)(A) to file the 10-Day Statement began to run as of the first session of the section 341 meeting of creditors on March 30, 2006, rather than after the last session on April 27, 2006. This conflicts with the statute's requirement that the 10-Day Statement be filed "after" the meeting. If the United States Trustee were required to file her 10-Day Statement within 10 days of the initial session of the required creditors' meeting in this case, it would have been due on April 10, 17 days before the conclusion of the meeting.[6] Nothing in section 704(b)(1)(A) requires that a 10-Day statement must be filed "during" the meeting, or at any time other than "after" the meeting. Accordingly, the bankruptcy court's ruling below imposes an additional burden on the United States Trustee that is not required by, and expressly conflicts with, section 704(b)(1)(A).

The Bankruptcy Code does not define the phrase "after the meeting of creditors," nor has the United States Trustee identified any Supreme Court decision that defines what the term "after" means. Where, as here, a statutory term is undefined, a basic principle of statutory construction provides that courts should give such terms their ordinary meanings. E.g., Smith v. U.S., 508 U.S. 223, 228 (1993) ("when a word is not defined by statute, we normally construe it in accordance with its ordinary or natural meaning.") The dictionary defines "after" to mean "subsequent in time to; at a later time than." American Heritage Dictionary of the English Language (4th ed. 2000). Accordingly, the same meaning should be imparted to the phrase "after the meeting of creditors" in section 704(b)(1)(A) absent clear indication that Congress meant to give such phrase a different meaning. See Biodiversity Legal Found. V. Babbitt, 146 F.3d 1249, 1254 (10th Cir. 1998) (noting that where Congress does not explain the specific meaning of a statutory phrase or term, a court may assume Congress intended the words to be given their ordinary meaning and determine such meaning through the use of dictionaries).

The bankruptcy court's decision is at odds with this ordinary, common sense definition because it effectively required the United States Trustee to file a 10-Day Statement on or before April 10, 2006, which was during the first meeting of creditors rather than after the meeting because the meeting was concluded on April 27. Bankruptcy Rule 2003(e) specifically provides that the trustee may adjourn the meeting from time to time, which plainly means that the meeting might not be completed on the day it begins.[7] Because the deadline runs after all dates of the first meeting under section 102(7), the only reading of section 704(b)(1)(A) that comports with the plain language is that the 10-Day Statement must be filed after the meeting has concluded, and not before.

The legislative history for section 704 strongly supports this conclusion, stating that the United States Trustee must file the 10-Day Statement "within ten days following the meeting of creditors held pursuant to section 341 of the Bankruptcy Code . . . ." House Report No. 109-31, Pt. 1, 109th Cong., 1st Sess. 52 (2005). The reference to the section 341 meeting of creditors being "held" indicates that the meeting of creditors has been concluded. Cf. In re Stewart, 2006 WL

[7] According to the American Heritage Dictionary of the English Language, the word "adjourned" means "to suspend proceedings to another time or place." American Heritage Dictionary of the English Language (4th ed 2000).

4043319, 4 (Bankr. E.D. Va. 2006)(holding that deadline in Virginia statute that ran from the date that the section 341 meeting is "held" meant the conclusion of the meeting, not the first day on which the meeting was commenced), and In re Shelton, 343 B.R. 545 (Bankr. W.D. Va. 2006)(same). See also 6 Collier on Bankruptcy ¶704.17[1], p. 704-36 to 704-37 (rev. 15th ed. 2006)(stating that the "first meeting of creditors" refers to section 341(a) meeting of creditors and that reading the deadline as running from the conclusion of the meeting of creditors makes the most logical sense.)

In fact, two bankruptcy courts have recently held that the bankruptcy court's reasoning below was flawed, and the deadline in section 704(b)(1)(A) begins to run from the conclusion of the meeting of creditors. See In re Williams, Case No. 06-20116, slip op. at p. 3 (Bankr. S.D. Tex. May 14, 2007) (unpublished)[8] (on reconsideration, court held that In re Close was incorrectly decided and "the deadline for filing a presumption of abuse statement runs from the conclusion of the first meeting of creditors.") See also In re Sloan, Case No. 06-11490, slip op. at p. 4 (Bankr. W.D. Okla. Feb. 6, 2007) (unpublished) (disagreeing with the holding of In re Close and holding that Congress did not intend for the United States Trustee to be bound to file the 10-Day Statement within 10 days of the first date set for the section 341 meeting of creditors).[9] But see In re Cline, Case No. 06-25495, slip op. at 1 (Bankr. E.D. Wis. Mar. 26, 2007)(unpublished; currently on appeal) (holding 10-Day Statement must be filed within 10 days after the date first set for the section 341 meeting).

Here, there is no dispute that the meeting of creditors was suspended on March 30, 2006 and was concluded on April 27, 2006. The United States Trustee filed her 10-Day Statement on May 1, 2006, less than ten days after the conclusion of the meeting of creditors. She filed her motion to dismiss on May 30, 2006, within the deadline provided by section 704(b)(2). Therefore, the United States Trustee timely filed her motion to dismiss and the bankruptcy court's order denying the motion to dismiss as untimely should be reversed.

B. The Bankruptcy Court's Interpretation of Section 704(b)(1)(A) Would Require United States Trustees to File Motions Before Section 341 Meetings are Completed – Something that Would Benefit No One.

The required meeting under section 341 is an important investigative tool. It is designed to allow creditors and the trustee to confront the debtor face-to-face and inquire about his or her financial condition, the existence and location of assets, the condition of collateral and other matters bearing on the debtor's right to bankruptcy relief. See Ronald W. Goss, Meetings of Creditors Under Section 341 of the Bankruptcy Code: A Primer, 17 J. Contemp. L. at 1 (1991). The United States Trustee Program brought this appeal because prompt resolution of the recurring legal issue of when the United States Trustee is required to file her 10-Day Statement will benefit debtors, creditors, the Program, and the lower courts. The issue of whether the United States Trustee is time-barred from filing motions to dismiss under section 707(b)(2) if the statement required under section 704(b)(1) is filed after the conclusion of the meeting of creditors is of the utmost importance because the BAPCPA requires United States Trustees to conduct a means test analysis and determine whether the presumption of abuse arises for every chapter 7 debtor.

9 A copy of this opinion is attached hereto for the Court's convenience, in accordance with Fed. R. App. Proc. 32.1.

The BAPCPA requires every United States Trustee to file a motion to dismiss every chapter 7 case in which the means test yields a calculation that specifies debtors can pay at least $10,000 over five years. 11 U.S.C. § 704(b)(2).[10] Prior to filing motions to dismiss, section 704(b)(1)(A) also requires the United States Trustee to file a statement as to whether the debtor's case should be presumed abusive for every chapter 7 debtor who can repay at least this amount. The United States Trustee would violate that statutory charge if she did not determine whether the Closes' monthly disposable income is more than $167 under the means test, or if she were to fail to move to dismiss their case once she concludes it exceeds $167.

Interpreting the ten day deadline as running from the date on which the section 341 meeting of creditors is initially convened will impair the United States Trustee's ability to conduct a thorough review of the materials filed by the debtor, as well as documents and information that support the materials filed by the debtor. If the debtor does not provide the requested information, whether because of willful intent or inability, the United States Trustee's review is restricted to only that information provided by the deadline.

In cases where the chapter 7 trustee discovers information that indicates abuse during the section 341 meeting, unless the meeting is held and concluded on the very same day, the bankruptcy court's interpretation may result in the United States Trustee being time-barred from pursuing a case as an abuse before it can reasonably even be discovered. This cannot be the best or most sensible reading of section 704(b)(1)(A). See Williams, supra p. 22, slip op. at 3 (holding that deadline for United States Trustee to file 10-Day Statement runs from the conclusion of the meeting off creditors because "Congress clearly did not intend" to allow debtors to simply drag their feet in providing

10 Unless the debtor convinces the United States Trustee that the filing of a motion to dismiss is not appropriate, information necessary for the United States Trustee to evaluate bankruptcy cases and thereby avoid the presumption of abuse.)

The significance of the timing of the United States Trustee's statutory responsibility to identify and seek dismissal of cases deemed abusive under the means test takes sharp focus when one reflects that more than 833,000 chapter 7 bankruptcy cases were filed in 2006. Marrama v. Citizens Bank of Massachusetts, 127 S. Ct. 1105, 1111, n. 10 (2007). In each such chapter 7 case, the Bankruptcy Code specifically requires the United States Trustee to review all materials filed in every non-business chapter 7 case to determine whether a presumption of abuse arises under section 707(b)(2)'s means test and to file a statement as to whether the case is a presumed abuse prior to moving to dismiss.

The bankruptcy court's reading of section 704(b)(1)(A) also has the potential to harm debtors by depriving them of time to provide necessary information to the United States Trustee and subjecting them to motions to dismiss that could be avoided if they had enough time to provide this information. Under the BAPCPA, a debtor must file schedules and statements with the bankruptcy court reflecting assets, liabilities, income, expenses, and financial affairs. 11 U.S.C. §521(a)(1). However, these schedules and statements need not be filed with the bankruptcy petition. Instead, a debtor may wait until 15 days after filing for bankruptcy before filing these materials. FED. R. BANKR. P. 1007(c). Many cases are filed without the required schedules and statements, especially by the most vulnerable debtors, including those without counsel. At times, debtors will seek court authority for additional time to file schedules and statements (including Official Form 22A) because of circumstances that prevent filing within the 15 day deadline. Moreover, the bankruptcy court may

Since the granting of additional time for debtors to provide documentation is explicitly authorized by the Bankruptcy Rules, and permitted by section 521, it should not represent a per se abuse of the bankruptcy system to obtain such an extension. If the bankruptcy court's reasoning is allowed to stand, the United States Trustee would be forced to oppose requests for extensions of the filing deadlines and/or move under section 707(a) to dismiss chapter 7 cases where the debtors do not file their schedules and statements soon after filing. This would effectively pit the Congressional mandate of section 704(b)(1)(A) against the permissiveness of section 521(a)(1)(B) and Interim Fed. R. Bankr. P. 1007(c). Further, it would penalize the unfortunate debtor who has legitimate need of additional time to file the required materials.

The bankruptcy court's ruling would also reward debtors who fail to provide full disclosure within 10-days of the convening of the meeting of creditors. See Bernard, 40 F.3d at 1031 (starting the period for objecting to a debtor's claimed exemptions after the initial session of the section 341 meeting instead of conclusion of the meeting "would create perverse incentives for debtors to withhold information"); Williams, supra p. 22, slip op. at 3 (to hold otherwise would allow debtors to "simply drag their feet" and avoid presumption of abuse, which Congress "clearly did not intend".) If the United States Trustee cannot pursue the presumption of abuse because the debtor refuses or is unwilling to provide information, the result of a debtor's failure to disclose under the bankruptcy court's ruling would be that the debtor is entitled to chapter 7 relief. Accordingly, the bankruptcy court's interpretation of section 704(b)(1)(A) should be rejected because it would frustrate the United States Trustee's duties under the Code in preventing abuse of the bankruptcy system and would cause harm to debtors.

C. The Court Should Order the Bankruptcy Court to Vacate the Order Granting Discharge.

On February 16, 2007, the bankruptcy court entered an order granting the Closes a discharge of their debts. (ROA, Doc#: 49.) On February 20, 2007, the bankruptcy court vacated that order. (ROA, Doc#: 53.) That same day, the United Sates Trustee filed her notice of appeal. (ROA, Doc#: 51.) The next day, February 21, 2007, the bankruptcy court entered an order setting aside its prior order vacating the Closes' discharge. (ROA, Doc#: 54.) The February 21 order is void because the bankruptcy court lacked jurisdiction to enter it after the United States Trustee filed her notice of appeal.

Once a notice of appeal is filed from a final judgment, the district court is divested of jurisdiction concerning the issues on appeal. Walker v. City of Orem, 451 F.3d 1139, 1146 (10th Cir. 2006) citing Griggs v. Provident Consumer Disc. Co., 459 U.S. 56, 58 (1982). This rule applies with equal force to final orders issued by a bankruptcy court. In re Visioneering Construction, 661 F.2d 119, 123 n.6 (9th Cir. 1981). An order entered in violation of this rule, without jurisdiction, is void. In re Padilla, 222 F.3d 1184, 1190 (9th Cir. 2000). Applying Orem and Griggs, the bankruptcy court's February 21, 2007, order granting the Closes a discharge was improper because it relates to the same issues involved in the February 20, 2007 appeal taken by the United States Trustee – i.e., whether the Closes should receive a discharge of their debts. For that reason, the discharge must be vacated

Even if the original February 16 discharge order controlled, it too was improper. Under the Bankruptcy Code and Rules, debtors do not receive discharges under section 727 while motions to dismiss under section 707(b) are pending, as provided in Interim Fed. R. Bankr. P. 1017 and 4004. Interim Bankruptcy Rule 4004(c)(1) specifically provides that "the court shall [not] grant the discharge [while] . . .a motion to dismiss the case under § 707(b) is pending . . ." Accordingly, as long as the United States Trustee has a pending motion to dismiss under section 707(b), the bankruptcy court should not enter a discharge order.

Black's Law Dictionary states that "an action or suit is 'pending' from its inception until the rendition of final judgment." Black's Law Dictionary 1134 (6th ed. 1990). Cf. Griffith v. Kentucky, 479 U.S. 314, 326 (1987) (cases on appeal are "pending cases" to which a new rule of decision applied). The Supreme Court has defined "final judgment" to mean "one where 'the availability of appeal' has been exhausted or has lapsed, and the time to petition for certiorari has passed." Bradley v. School Bd. of Richmond, 416 U.S. 696, 711 n. 14 (1974), citing Linkletter v. Walker, 381 U.S. 618, 622 n. 5 (1965). See Williams v. Cain, 217 F.3d 303, 310-11 (5th Cir. 2000) (defining "pending" under 28 U.S.C. § 2244(d)(2) to mean until appellate review was no longer available). Thus, the word "pending" under Interim Rule 4004(c) includes section 707(b) motions upon which a final, non-appealable order has been entered.

CONCLUSION

For these reasons, the United States Trustee respectfully asks this Court to reverse the orders entered below, and remand the case for further proceedings on the merits of the United States Trustee's motion to dismiss.

Respectfully submitted,

ORDER GRANTING MOTION FOR RECONSIDERATION

On this day came on for consideration the Motion for Reconsideration filed by the United States Trustee ("UST"). The Court, having heard the arguments of counsel and having reviewed the requested briefs, finds that the Motion for Reconsideration should be granted.

BACKGROUND

Jared and Lisa Williams (the "Debtors") filed their Chapter 7 bankruptcy petition on February 23, 2006. The First Meeting of Creditors pursuant to 11 U.S.C. §341 was set for March 31, 2006. The First Meeting of Creditors was held on March 31, 2006, as scheduled, but was continued to May 24, 2006. The First Meeting of Creditors was again continued until June 21, 2006, at which time it was concluded. The UST filed its presumption of abuse notice pursuant to 11 U.S.C. §704(b)(1)(A) on June 23, 2006, and filed a Motion to Dismiss on July 21, 2006. Debtors responded arguing that the notice and the motion were untimely. A hearing was held on November 13, 2006.

Following a hearing, the Court denied the UST's Motion to Dismiss by Order entered February 6, 2007. The UST then filed a Motion for Reconsideration and the Court held a hearing after which additional briefing was requested.

DISCUSSION

The Bankruptcy Code requires that the UST "shall review all materials filed by the debtors and, not later than 10 days after the date of the first meeting of creditors, file with the court a statement as to whether the debtor's case would be presumed to be an abuse under section 707(b)." 11 U.S.C. §704(b)(1)(A). A motion to dismiss must then be filed "not later than 30 days after the date of filing a statement under [§704(b)(1)(A)].” 11 U.S.C. §704(b)(1)(B). The issue before the Court is when calculation of the 10-day notice time provided by 11 U.S.C. §704(b)(1)(A) and the subsequent 30-day notice time should begin. The UST argues that the 10-day notice time does not begin to run until the First Meeting of Creditors is concluded. The Debtors argue that the 10-day period begins to run on the first meeting date.

In a case directly on point, the bankruptcy court for the District of Kansas held that the plain meaning of the statute requires the UST to file its statement of abuse not later than 10 days after "the first meeting date and not some later date." In re Close , 353 B.R. 915, 918 (Bankr. D. Kan. 2006). This Court previously relied on Close opinion and held that the Motion to Dismiss filed by the UST should be denied as untimely. Although not articulated in its prior Order, the Court relied on the concept that the UST could ask the Court for additional time to file its presumption of abuse pleading if it did not obtain sufficient information at the time the first meeting of creditors was actually held. The Court still believes that such a procedure is the most sensible method of balancing the UST’s need for accurate information against a debtor’s need for finality.

However, the 10-day period is a statutory period and not a time limitation set forth in the Bankruptcy Rules. Accordingly, the 10-day time period cannot be extended by the Court. See, In re Federated Food Courts, Inc., 222 B.R. 396 (Bankr.N.D.Ga. 1998); In re Ott, 343 B.R. 364 (Bankr. D. Colo. 2006); In re Barnes, 308 B.R. 77, 80-81 (Bankr. D. Colo. 2004). For this reason, the Court will reconsider its prior ruling.

Collier on Bankruptcy concludes that the deadline for a statement of presumed abuse runs from "the conclusion of the meeting of creditors, rather than the first date set for the meeting of creditors, which is specifically referenced in some other Code provisions enacted at the same time." 6 COLLIER ON BANKRUPTCY ¶ 704.17[1](15th Ed. Rev. 2006). To hold otherwise when there is no provision for extension of the deadline would prevent the UST from obtaining the necessary information to evaluate bankruptcy cases. Debtors could simply drag their feet in providing information requested by the UST and avoid the presumption of abuse. In drafting BAPCPA, Congress clearly did not intend to make it easier for debtors to remain in Chapter 7. Therefore, any other interpretation of this section defeats Congress' intent and cannot be imposed on the UST by this Court. The Court finds that the deadline for filing a presumption of abuse statement runs from the conclusion of the first meeting of creditors.

It is therefore ORDERED that the Motion for Reconsideration is hereby GRANTED.

It is further ORDERED that the Order Denying Trustee's Motion to Dismiss is hereby VACATED and the Motion is set for further hearing on the issue of substantial abuse on June 4, 2007, at 9:00 a.m.

SIGNED 05/14/2007.

ORDER DENYING MOTION TO STRIKE AND DIRECTING A RESPONSE TO THE MOTION TO DISMISS

Before the court is the Debtors' Motion to Strike the Motion of the United States Trustee to Dismiss Case Pursuant to 11 U.S.C. § 707(b)(1) Based on the Presumption of Abuse Arising Under 11 U.S.C. § 707(b)(2) (the "Motion to Strike"), and the United States Trustee's response thereto. The court conducted oral arguments on the Motion to Strike on December 19, 2006, at the conclusion of which the court took the matter under advisement. After careful review of the parties' submissions and the applicable law, the court finds that the Motion to Strike should be denied, and the Debtors should file a response to the UST's Motion to Dismiss.

A brief chronology of the case is as follows:

1. On June 30, 2006, the Debtors, Donald Everett Sloan and Rhonda Kaye Sloan, commenced this case by filing a voluntary bankruptcy petition seeking relief under the provisions of chapter 7 of the Bankruptcy Code, as amended by the Bankruptcy Abuse Prevention and Consumer Protection Act of 2005, Pub. L. No. 109-8 119 Stat. 37 ("BAPCPA").

2. On August 15, 2006, pursuant to this court's January 20, 2006, General Order entitled "Certification of Compliance with Required Filings," the Debtor's filed a "Certificate of Compliance" certifying that they had filed all items required by 11 U.S.C. § 521(a)(1).[1]

3. The meeting of creditors pursuant to § 341 was set for August 21, 2006, but was continued by the panel trustee to September 6, 2006.

4. On August 25, 2006, the Debtors filed an Amended Schedule I as well as an Amended Official Form B22A, which is a chapter 7 Statement of Current Monthly Income and Means Test Calculation-Form 22A.

5. On September 6, 2006, the § 341 hearing was conducted, and the panel trustee filed his report of no distribution.

6. On September 18, 2006, the United States Trustee ("UST") filed her Statement of Presumed Abuse under § 704(b)(1)(A) ("Statement of Presumed Abuse"), and then on October 18, 2006, the UST filed a Motion to Dismiss the Debtor's bankruptcy case pursuant to § 707(b)(1) (the "Motion to Dismiss").

7. In response to the UST's Motion to Dismiss, on October 30, 2006, the Debtors' filed the Motion to Strike, arguing that the Statement of Presumed Abuse was filed outside the 10-day time limit of § 704(b)(1)(A), and, consequently, her Motion to Dismiss was also untimely filed and should be stricken.

Section 704(b) was added to the Bankruptcy Code by BAPCPA in 2005, and it charges the United States Trustee with certain duties in individual chapter 7 cases. In this regard, § 704(b)(1)(A) provides, in pertinent part:

> With respect to a debtor who is an individual in a case under this chapter . . . the United States Trustee . . . shall review all materials filed by the debtor and, not later than 10 days after the date of the first meeting of > creditors, file with the court a statement as to whether the debtor's case would be presumed to be an abuse under section 707(b). . . .

[1] Unless otherwise specified, all references to sections herein are to title 11 of the United States Code.

Id. Thus, the statutory language requires the UST to file the § 704(b) statement within "10 days after the date of the first meeting of creditors." Id. If the UST files a motion to dismiss under § 707(b), it must be filed within 30 days after the date of filing the statement under § 704(b)(1)(A). See § 704(b)(2).

In support of their Motion to Strike, the Debtors argue that the plain language of the statute required the UST to file the statement of presumed abuse no later than 10 days following the first date set for the meeting of creditors. The first meeting of creditors was originally scheduled in this case for August 21, 2006, and then continued by the panel trustee to September 6, 2006. Despite the continuance, the Debtors argue that the UST was required to file the statement of presumed abuse by August 31, 2006, and the § 707(b) motion to dismiss by October 2, 2006, 30 days later. Because the Motion to Dismiss was not filed until October 18, 2006, it is untimely and, the Debtors argue, it should be stricken. The Debtors cite the recently-decided case of In re Close, 353 B.R. 915 (Bankr. D. Kan. 2006) to support their position. In Close, the bankruptcy court held:

> Enforcing § 704(b)(1)(A) according to its plain terms ends the inquiry. The statute requires the UST to file a statement of presumed abuse not later than ten days after the date of the first meeting of creditors. The language is not vague or ambiguous and does not need extraneous verbiage to clarify its meaning. The plain ready of the phrase refers to the first meeting date and not some later date.

Id. at 918. Thus, the UST was required to file the § 704(b)(1)(A) statement not later than 10 days following the first date set for the meeting of creditors.

Having carefully reviewed the opinion in Close and its underlying rationale, the court respectfully disagrees with its holding and agrees with the discussion in the leading bankruptcy treatise that the language of § 704(b)(1)(A) is "somewhat unclear." In its discussion of the statutory language, the authors of the treatise conclude:

> The statement [of presumed abuse] must be filed within 10 days after the date of the "first meeting of creditors." The "first meeting of creditors" is a term sometimes used in the past to refer to the section 341(a) meeting of creditors. The language is somewhat unclear, but logically it makes sense to read this deadline as running from the conclusion of the meeting of creditors, rather than the first date set for the meeting of creditors, which is specifically referenced in some other Code provisions enacted at the same time.

6 ALAN N. RESNICK & HENRY J. SOMMER, COLLIER ON BANKRUPTCY ¶ 704.17[1] (15th ed. rev. 2006)(hereinafter "COLLIER").

Although COLLIER alludes to specific references in the BAPCPA amendments, this court notes that § 521 uses the specific phrases, "first date set for the meeting of creditors" or "date first set" no fewer than twice. See § 521 (a)(2)(B) & (e)(2)(A)(i). Thus, clearly Congress specified the application of the earlier date when it intended to do so, and its failure to do so in § 704(b)(1)(A) evidences its intent that the UST not be bound to file the statement of presumed abuse within 10 days of the first date set for the § 341 meeting.

The court further notes that § 341(a) provides for "a meeting of creditors" at which the debtor is required to appear and answer questions propounded by the trustee or a creditor. FED. R. BANKR. P. 2003 implements § 341 by establishing rules governing the meeting of creditors, including the date and place of the meeting. Subsection (e) of Rule 2003 authorizes the adjournment from time to time of the meeting of creditors by the trustee's announcement of such continuance at the meeting. Until it is concluded, this meeting, which may be continued from time to time, constitutes the § 341 meeting of creditors. Thus, the Bankruptcy Code and Rules provide that the meeting of creditors in a bankruptcy case may encompass meetings occurring on multiple dates. Reading § 704(b)(1)(A)'s language requiring the statement of presumed abuse to be filed within "10 days after the date of the first meeting of creditors" in light of § 341 and FED. R. BANKR. P. 2003, this court finds it clear that Congress intended the operative date under § 704(b) to be the conclusion, and not the commencement, of the § 341 meeting. If Congress had intended otherwise, it would have clearly specified. For these reasons, the court declines to follow the Close case, finding that the instant opinion more closely comports with the Bankruptcy Code and Rules which distinguish between "the first meeting of creditors" and the "first date set" or the "date first set."

While the court bases its decision on the language and structure of the Code and Rules, it also recognizes the policy implications of adopting the Debtors' argument as illustrated by the chronology of the instant case. August 21, 2006, was the date first set for the § 341 meeting. On that date, however, the Debtors had not yet filed their Amended Schedule I and Amended Official form B22A, which form the basis for the UST's Statement of Presumed Abuse (and the UST's Motion to Dismiss). Debtors filed their amendments on August 25, 2006, some four days after the 704(b)(1)(A)10-day time period began to run, under the Debtors' proffered argument, leaving the UST only 6 days within which to evaluate the amendments (without having had the benefit of the Debtors' testimony) and file the statement of presumed abuse. The court finds that this time frame is unduly restrictive and affects the UST's duty to conduct a thorough review of the Debtors' filings. Further, although the Debtors in this case filed their amendments prior to the expiration of the 10-day period, the Debtors' proffered argument could require the UST in some cases to complete her duties under § 704(b)(1) without possessing information necessary to her review because the debtors failed to file any bankruptcy schedules or appear for the § 341 meeting. This result is untenable as a matter of policy.

For these reasons, the court concludes that the Debtors' Motion to Strike should be and hereby is DENIED, and the Debtors are DIRECTED to file a response to the UST's Motion to Dismiss not later than February 26, 2007.

IT IS SO ORDERED this 6th day of February, 2007.

The United States submits this brief under Fed. R. App. P. 29,[1] as amicus curiae in support of affirmance of the bankruptcy court's order below.

INTEREST OF THE UNITED STATES

This appeal involves two statutory provisions affecting chapter 13 bankruptcy cases: 11 U.S.C. § 1325(b) and 11 U.S.C. § 707(b)(2)(A)(ii)(I). The latter also affects chapter 7 bankruptcy cases. The United States has a direct interest in the proper construction of these provisions because United States Trustees, who are Justice Department officials appointed by the Attorney General, supervise the administration of chapter 13 and 7 bankruptcy cases in all federal judicial districts within this circuit. See 28 U.S.C. §§ 581-589a. See also H.R. Rep. No. 95-595, at 88 (1977), as reprinted in 1978 U.S.C.C.A.N. 5963, 6049 (United States Trustees "serve as bankruptcy watch-dogs to prevent fraud, dishonesty, and overreaching in the bankruptcy arena.").

This case involves a dispute over the interpretation of "projected disposable income" under 11 U.S.C. § 1325(b) and the application of vehicle ownership expense deductions allowed by 11 U.S.C. § 707(b)(2)(A)(ii)(I). Together, these determine when debtors meet their statutory obligation to dedicate their projected disposable income to paying creditors through their chapter 13 plans. Resolution of this question affects the United States' interest for two reasons.

First, by interpreting section 1325(b), this Court will determine the amount above-median-income chapter 13 debtors must pay their creditors in their chapter 13 plans. The United States has an interest in that question because United States Trustees "supervise the administration of [chapter 13] cases and trustees," monitor chapter 13 plans, and file comments with the court regarding such plans in connection with plan confirmation hearings under section 1324 of the Bankruptcy Code. 28 U.S.C. § 586(a)(3)(C).

Second, because section 1325(b) incorporates two parts of the chapter 7 means test – sections 707(b)(2)(A) and (B) – this appeal will also determine what expenses above-median-income chapter 7 debtors may claim when completing their means test. This is significant because the means test determines whether an above-median-income chapter 7 debtor's case should be dismissed as abusive. See 11 U.S.C. § 707(b)(1) and (2).

United States Trustees play a unique role in chapter 7 above-median-income cases because section 704(b) requires them to review all such cases and, whenever a case is deemed presumptively abusive under the means test, either: (a) seek its dismissal, or (b) file a statement declining to seek dismissal. See 11 U.S.C. § 704(b). See also Schultz v. United States, 529 F.3d 343, 348 (6th Cir. 2008) (describing the United States Trustees' enforcement of the chapter 7 means test).

Given these interests, the United States submits this brief to share its views on the application of sections 1325(b) and 707(b)(2)(A). See 28 U.S.C. § 517 (authorizing the Department of Justice "to attend to the interests of the United States in a suit pending in a court of the United States"). See also 11 U.S.C. § 307 ("The United States trustee may raise and may appear and be heard on any issue in any case or proceeding."); Fed. STATUTORY BACKGROUND

On April 20, 2005, Congress enacted the Bankruptcy Abuse Prevention and Consumer Protection Act of 2005. See Pub. L. No. 109-8, 119 Stat. 23 (2005). The 2005 Act significantly altered how debtors obtain relief under chapters 7 and 13 of the Bankruptcy Code.

In a chapter 13 case, a debtor's unsecured creditors or trustee may insist the debtor devote all of his projected disposable income to pay creditors. See 11 U.S.C. § 1325(b)(1). Although "projected disposable income" is not defined, "disposable income" is defined as a net number: historical income less prescribed expenses. See 11 U.S.C. § 1325(b)(2).

Under the 2005 Act, above-median-income debtors, like Mr. Coffin, determine disposable income by first calculating current monthly income.[2] Next, they deduct permitted expenses, which include "amounts reasonably necessary to be expended" for maintenance or support or necessary business expenses. 11 U.S.C. § 1325(b)(2) and (3). Above-median-income chapter 13 debtors determine "amounts reasonably necessary to be expended . . . in accordance with" sections 707(b)(2)(A)(ii), (iii), and (iv) of the Bankruptcy Code. 11 U.S.C. § 1325(b)(3) (incorporating those provisions). Deducting all allowed expenses from a debtor's current monthly income yields a net number – disposable income.

This appeal poses a question about a debtor's expense-side calculation of disposable income. Section 707(b)(2)(A)(ii) permits debtors to deduct, among other things:

> (a) certain prescribed "actual" expenses; and
> (b) other "applicable" expense amounts.

See 11 U.S.C. § 707(b)(2)(A)(ii)(I). "Applicable" expense amounts are not the debtor's actual expenses. Instead, they are the static amounts listed in the Internal Revenue Service's Local and National Standards. See 11 U.S.C. § 707(b)(2)(A)(ii)(I).

The IRS's Local Standards include expenses for transportation. See IRS Collection

[2] The term "current monthly income," which is used to calculate gross historical income, see 11 U.S.C. § 1325(b)(2), is a defined term. See 11 U.S.C. § 101(10A)(defining "current monthly income" as the debtor's average monthly income for the six-month period preceding the month of the filing of the debtor's petition).

Financial Standards, under heading “Local Standards: Transportation,” available at http://www.irs.gov/individuals/article/0,,id=96543,00.html.[3] Transportation expenses are authorized in two standardized amounts. They are: (1) monthly expenses for costs associated with operating vehicles; and (2) monthly expenses for costs associated with purchasing or leasing vehicles. Id.

All debtors, including Mr. Coffin, receive monthly transportation expenses based on either public transportation costs or the costs associated with operating a vehicle. Id. The standard operating expense includes amounts for vehicle maintenance, fuel, state and local registration, required inspection, parking fees, tolls, and driver’s license fees. Id.

Ownership expenses, when applicable, include allowances based on the average cost of financing a vehicle as determined annually by the Federal Reserve Board. Id. Both operating and ownership expenses are limited to no more than two vehicles. Id.

At issue in this appeal is whether a standardized vehicle ownership deduction is “applicable” under section 707(b)(2)(A)(ii)(I) when Mr. Coffin has no associated vehicle ownership expenses, and if it is not applicable, as the bankruptcy court found, whether Mr. Coffin’s plan fails to commit all of his projected disposable income to making payments under his plan.

SUMMARY OF ARGUMENT

The bankruptcy court found Mr. Coffin has no applicable vehicle ownership expense amount to claim under section 707(b)(2)(A)(ii)(I) of the Bankruptcy Code because he has no associated loan or lease expenses on his vehicles. Thus, the bankruptcy court ruled that Mr.

Coffin's plan failed to commit all of his projected disposable income to making payments under his plan. Because the bankruptcy court's ruling best interprets section 707(b)(2)(A)(ii)(I) of the Bankruptcy Code, properly applies section 1325 of the Bankruptcy Code, fulfills congressional goals related to the 2005 Act, and fosters sound public policy, it should be affirmed.

The bankruptcy court's ruling best interprets section 707(b)(2)(A)(ii)(I) for two reasons:

First, Mr. Coffin cannot claim a standardized vehicle ownership expense amount on his vehicles because section 707(b)(2)(A)(ii)(I) only allows a debtor to claim it when it is "applicable" to the debtor's vehicles. Reading the word "applicable" in section 707(b)(2)(A)(ii)(I) as limiting expense amounts to debtors who, unlike Mr. Coffin, actually have associated expenses is the best construction of this section because it uses the ordinary dictionary meaning of "applicable," and does so in a way that gives meaning to each word in the statute, something Mr. Coffin's construction does not.

Second, the 2005 Act's legislative history supports this interpretation of section 707(b)(2)(A)(ii)(I). It reveals Congress enacted the new law to ensure debtors would repay their debts when they were able. Conversely, Mr. Coffin's interpretation of section 707(b)(2)(A)(ii)(I) would yield inequitable results not contemplated by Congress.

As a separate, independent, and alternative basis for affirmance, this Court may affirm the bankruptcy court's ruling because it properly applies section 1325 of the Bankruptcy Code. Under section 1325(b)(1), a bankruptcy court may not confirm a chapter 13 plan over the chapter 13 trustee's objection unless "the plan provides that all of the debtor's projected disposable income to be received in the applicable commitment period . . . will be applied to make payments to unsecured creditors under the plan." 11 U.S.C. § 1325(b)(1) (emphasis added). Additionally, under section 1325(b)(2), a bankruptcy court may only consider expenses as part of its projected disposable income analysis that are "reasonably necessary to be expended." 11 U.S.C. § 1325(b)(2) (emphasis added). Each of these phrases anticipates future action during the life of a debtor's chapter 13 plan. Therefore, each independently precludes a debtor, like Mr. Coffin, from deducting an expense, such as a vehicle ownership expense, he will not have over the life of his chapter 13 plan.

Finally, because the bankruptcy court's ruling fulfills congressional goals related to the 2005 Act and fosters sound public policy, it should be affirmed. Congress passed the 2005 Act to maximize debtor repayment to creditors and to eliminate opportunities for bankruptcy abuse. Barring above-median-income debtors, like Mr. Coffin, from claiming inapplicable ownership expense amounts fulfills these goals. Moreover, such a result is fair because: (a) it prevents above-median-income debtors from claiming expenses they do not have; (b) does not hurt lower-income debtors because they are not subject to section 707(b)(2)(A)(ii)(I); and (c) allows creditors to receive payments on their debts when debtors have the financial ability to repay.

ARGUMENT

The bankruptcy court's ruling may be affirmed on either of two separate and independent bases. First, the bankruptcy court's ruling best interprets section 707(b)(2)(A)(ii)(I) of the Bankruptcy Code, which does not allow a debtor to claim an ownership expense deduction under his means test when he has no associated loan or lease expenses on his vehicles. Second, and independent of that, the bankruptcy court's ruling properly applies section 1325 of the Bankruptcy Code, which is forward-looking in nature and excludes non-existent future expenses, like Mr. Coffin's phantom $956.00 vehicle ownership expenses, from being deducted under the projected disposable income test. Either of these bases, standing alone, merits affirmance.

I. This Court Should Affirm Because A Vehicle Ownership Expense Amount is "Applicable" Under Section 707(b)(2)(A)(ii)(I) of the Bankruptcy Code Only When Debtors Make Corresponding Loan or Lease Payments on their Vehicles, Which Mr. Coffin Does Not.

A. Vehicle ownership expense amounts are not "applicable" to debtors who make no loan or lease payments.

1. The Bankruptcy Code permits above-median-income debtors, like Mr. Coffin, to claim a vehicle ownership expense amount in a set amount when that expense is "applicable." See 11 U.S.C. § 707(b)(2)(A)(ii)(I). Section 707(b)(2)(A)(ii)(I) provides that a debtor's "monthly expenses shall be the debtor's applicable monthly expense amounts specified under the . . . Local Standards . . . issued by the Internal Revenue Service. . . ." 11 U.S.C. § 707(b)(2)(A)(ii)(I) (emphasis added).

The Bankruptcy Code does not define the term "applicable." Nor has the United States identified any controlling decision providing a definition in the bankruptcy court context. Accordingly, where, as here, a statutory term is undefined, the term should be given its ordinary meaning. Smith v. United States, 508 U.S. 223, 228 (1993) ("When a word is not defined by statute, we normally construe it in accord with its ordinary or natural meaning."); Telematics Int'l., Inc. v. NEMLC Leasing Corp., 967 F.2d 703, 706 (1st Cir. 1992) ("the task of interpretation begins with the text of the statute itself, and statutory language must be accorded its ordinary meaning.").

The dictionary defines "applicable" to mean "capable of being applied: having relevance . . . fit, suitable, or right to be applied: APPROPRIATE" Webster's Third New Int'l Dict., at 105 (1981) (emphasis in original). Such a meaning should therefore be imparted to the term "applicable" used in section 707(b)(2)(A)(ii)(I). See Hartford Underwriters Ins. Co. v. Union Planters Bank, N.A., 530 U.S. 1, 6 (2000) ("when the statute's language is plain, the sole function of the courts-at least where the disposition required by the text is not absurd-is to enforce it according to its terms.") (internal quotations omitted). See also Riva v. Commonwealth of Mass., 61 F.3d 1003, 1008 n.4 (1st Cir. 1995) ("Courts are free to use standard dictionary definitions to assist in determining the ordinary meaning of statutory language.").

The bankruptcy court's interpretation of section 707(b)(2)(A)(ii)(I) is consistent with this ordinary meaning because it does not allow debtors to claim a monthly vehicle ownership expense amount when they have no associated monthly loan or lease expenses.

As articulated by the Ninth Circuit bankruptcy appellate panel in Ransom, "[g]iven the ordinary sense of the term 'applicable,' how is the vehicle ownership expense allowance capable of being applied to [a] debtor if he does not make any lease or loan payments on the vehicle?" Ransom v. MBNA America Bank, N.A. (In re Ransom), 380 B.R. 799, 807-08 (B.A.P. 9th Cir. 2007) (emphasis in original). The answer is, it is not. If a debtor, like Mr. Coffin, has no loan or lease payments on his vehicle, then there is simply no expense capable of being applied. For this reason alone, the lower court's order should be affirmed.

2. If there were ever any doubt regarding what Congress intended the term "applicable" to mean under section 707(b)(2)(A)(ii)(I), it would be answered in the next subsection of the Bankruptcy Code: subsection 707(b)(2)(A)(ii)(II). That subsection states, in relevant part, that a "debtor's monthly expenses may include, if applicable, the continuation of actual expenses paid by the debtor . . . for care and support of an elderly, chronically ill, or disabled household member or member of the debtor's immediate family. . . ." 11 U.S.C. § 707(b)(2)(A)(ii)(II) (emphasis added). Thus, Congress used the term "applicable" under section 707(b)(2)(A)(ii)(II) to only allow expenses to debtors if those expenses literally apply to that particular debtor.

Because it is a basic rule of statutory construction that "'identical words used in different parts of the same act are intended to have the same meaning[,]'" Commissioner of Internal Revenue v. Lundy, 516 U.S. 235, 250 (1996) (citations omitted), the same meaning of the term "applicable" in section 707(b)(2)(A)(ii)(II) should be given to the term "applicable" in section 707(b)(2)(A)(ii)(I).

3. Many appellate decisions agree with the bankruptcy court in this case that when debtors, such as Mr. Coffin, have no loan or lease expenses on their vehicles, they cannot deduct a monthly vehicle loan or lease expense amount on their means test form pursuant to section 707(b)(2)(A)(ii)(I). See Babin v. Wilson (In re Wilson), 383 B.R. 729 (B.A.P. 8th Cir. 2008); Grossman v. Sawdy (In re Sawdy), 384 B.R. 199 (E.D. Wis. 2008), overruled sub nom. Ross-Tousey v. Neary, 549 F.3d 1148 (7th Cir. 2008); Wieland v. Thomas (In re Thomas), 382 B.R. 793 (D. Kan. 2008); Meade v. McVay (In re Meade), 384 B.R. 132 (W.D. Tex. 2008); United States Trustee v. Deadmond (In re Deadmond), Case No. 07-15-H-CCL, 2008 WL 191165 (D. Mont. Jan. 22, 2008); Ransom, 380 B.R. at 799, appeal pending Case No. 08-15066 (9th Cir. Jan. 4, 2008); Fokkena v. Hartwick (In re Hartwick), 373 B.R. 645 (D. Minn. 2007). But see Ross-Tousey, 549 F.3d at 1148; Hildebrand v. Kimbro (In re Kimbro), 389 B.R. 518 (B.A.P. 6th Cir. 2008), appeal pending Case No. 08-5871 (6th Cir. Aug. 24, 2008); Clippard v. Ragle (In re Ragle), 395 B.R. 387 (E.D. Ky. 2008); Brunner v. Armstrong (In re Armstrong), 395 B.R. 127 (E.D. Wash. 2008); Musselman v. eCast Settlement Corp., 394 B.R. 801 (E.D.N.C. 2008).

B. Mr. Coffin's reading of Section 707(b)(2)(A)(ii)(I) renders the word "applicable" superfluous in that section.

Under Mr. Coffin's interpretation of section 707(b)(2)(A)(ii)(I), the term "applicable" modifies the phrase "amounts specified under the . . . Local Standards" not the debtor's "monthly expense." See Appellant's Brief, at 12-13. However, if that were so, Congress could just have easily stated in section 707(b)(2)(A)(ii)(I) that:

> a "debtor's monthly expenses shall be the debtor's ~~applicable~~ monthly expense amounts specified under the . . . Local Standards . . . issued by the Internal Revenue Service. . . ."

See Ransom, 380 B.R. at 808 (concluding that such a construction would "read[] 'applicable' right out of the Bankruptcy Code."). After all, striking out the word "applicable" would still lead debtors to the same line under the IRS Local Standards, and if that is all Congress intended, there was no need to use the word "applicable" at all. Instead, Congress deliberately chose to include the term "applicable" in section 707(b)(2)(A)(ii)(I). Accordingly, because "courts should strive to give operative meaning to every word in a statute," see Cooper Indus., Inc. v. Aviall Servs., Inc., 543 U.S. 157, 167 (2004), United States v. Ven-Fuel, Inc., 758 F.2d 741, 751-52 (1st Cir. 1985), the word "applicable" must be read as adding something to the statute, and Mr. Coffin's interpretation of section 707(b)(2)(A)(ii)(I) fails. See Deadmond, 2008 WL 191165, at *4 ("The word ['applicable'] must mean something, and if some monthly expenses are applicable, then other monthly expenses are not applicable.").

Because Mr. Coffin's reading of section 707(b)(2)(A)(ii)(I) renders the term "applicable" superfluous, the term must have a different meaning than the one he ascribes.[4] See generally

[4] Mr. Coffin suggests that the bankruptcy court's construction of section 707(b)(2)(A)(ii)(I) reads "applicable" as meaning "actual." Appellant's Brief, at 12-13. However, the bankruptcy court's construction gives the words "applicable" and "actual" entirely different meanings. Under the bankruptcy court's construction, vehicle expense amounts under section 707(b)(2)(A)(ii)(I) are not the debtor's "actual," or literal, vehicle ownership expenses. Rather, they are static, fixed amounts, drawn from the IRS Standards, used regardless of the debtor's "actual" expenses. See Hartwick, 373 B.R. at 650 (recognizing that a debtor's "actual" expense does not control the amount of the vehicle ownership deduction under section 707(b)(2)(A)(ii)(I)). Debtors continue...

Cooper Indus., Inc., 543 U.S. at 167; United States v. Ven-Fuel, Inc., 758 F.2d at 751-52. As we explain above, the word "applicable" does have a different meaning. Under its dictionary meaning, the word exists to allow debtors to claim a standard vehicle expense amount that is applicable because they have a loan or lease expense.

C. Mr. Coffin's interpretation of section 707(b)(2)(A)(ii)(I) would yield inequitable results not contemplated by Congress.

According to its legislative history, the 2005 Act seeks to "ensure that debtors repay creditors the maximum they can afford." H.R. Rep. No. 109-31 (I), at 1, 2005 U.S.C.C.A.N. at 89.[5] Mr. Coffin's interpretation of section 707(b)(2)(A)(ii)(I) would frustrate the 2005 Act's goal of proper repayment by allowing above-median-income debtors to claim phantom expenses that do not apply to them. Under Mr. Coffin's reading of section 707(b)(2)(A)(ii)(I), a higher-income debtor with an inoperable car could claim the ownership expense amount simply because the car is an automobile and he owns it. This statutory reading has been rejected because it "defies common sense." Deadmond, 2008 WL 191165, at *4.

receive $471.00 for the first vehicle that has an associated loan or lease payment, and $332.00 for the second. See United States Addendum "A." These are the opposite of "actual" expenses. Accordingly, because the terms "applicable" and "actual" have different meanings under section 707(b)(2)(A)(ii)(I), characterizing them as overlapping, as Mr. Coffin does, is erroneous. See Thomas, 382 B.R. at 793 (finding that "the juxtaposition of 'applicable . . . amounts' and 'actual . . . expenses' in the statute is not inconsistent with the Court's interpretation" that vehicle ownership expense amounts are only applicable if a debtor is making loan or lease payments on a vehicle); Meade, 384 B.R. at 136 (explaining how the terms "applicable" and "actual" have different meanings under 707(b)(2)(A)(ii)(I)).

Moreover, even if the terms "applicable" and "actual" meant the same thing in section 707(b)(2)(A)(ii)(I), the Supreme Court has recognized that there is nothing wrong with two different words within a single section of a statute being synonymous. See Wachovia Bank v, Schmidt, 546 U.S. 303, 314 (2006) ("Congress may well have comprehended the words 'located' and 'established,' as used in [28 U.S.C.] § 1348, not as contrasting, but as synonymous or alternative terms.").

[5] There is no Senate Report or Conference Report to the 2005 Act.

D. The Seventh Circuit's ruling to the contrary in Ross-Tousey, does not articulate a valid basis for rejecting the lower court's text-based reading of section 707(b)(2)(A)(ii)(I).

On December 17, 2008, the United States Court of Appeals for the Seventh Circuit decided Ross-Tousey v. Neary. See Ross-Tousey v. Neary, 549 F.3d 1148 (7th Cir. 2008). Ross-Tousey is the first circuit decision to interpret the word "applicable" in section 707(b)(2)(A)(ii)(I).[6] Ross-Tousey primarily relied on interpretive conclusions reached by a divided Sixth Circuit bankruptcy appellate panel in Kimbro, whose decision was entered after briefing was completed in Ross-Tousey. See Ross-Tousey, 549 F.3d at 1155-60 (citing and quoting extensively from Kimbro, 389 B.R. at 518). Accordingly, the Seventh Circuit did not have the benefit of the government's views regarding the Kimbro decision prior to reaching its own decision in Ross-Tousey.

Had the government had the opportunity to share those views with the Seventh Circuit it would have argued the following:

First, while the majority in Kimbro concluded that the government's construction of section 707(b)(2)(A)(ii)(I) improperly gave the same meaning to the words "applicable" and "actual" in section 707(b)(2)(A)(ii)(I), the government's reading actually gives them different ones. Compare Kimbro, 389 B.R. at 523-24 with United States' Brief, supra. at n.4. Indeed, this juxtaposition of terms was explained by the dissent in Kimbro when it stated that "Congress intended and used the phrases 'applicable monthly expense amounts' . . . and 'actual expenses' . . . simply in recognition of the differing ways in which the IRS uses the National Standards and Local Standards versus the Other Necessary Expense Categories." Kimbro, 389 B.R. at 533

[6] The identical issue is currently on appeal in the Ninth and Sixth circuits. See Ransom, 380 B.R. at 799, appeal pending Case No. 08-15066 (9th Cir. Jan. 4, 2008); Kimbro, 389 B.R. at 518, appeal pending Case No. 08-5871 (6th Cir. Aug. 24, 2008).

(Fulton, J., dissenting).

Second, while the majority in Kimbro concluded that the vehicle ownership amount was necessary to cover operating costs, see Kimbro, 389 B.R. at 531 (referencing "depreciation, insurance, licensing fees and taxes"), that is factually wrong. A wholly different IRS expense standard governs those types of vehicle expenses. See United States' Brief, supra. at 3-4 (discussing vehicle ownership and operating expenses).

Third, while the Kimbro majority ruled that the phrase "monthly expenses of the debtor shall not include any payments for debts" found in section 707(b)(2)(A)(ii)(I) justifies an ownership expense allowance, see Kimbro, 389 B.R. at 523, it does not. Rather, debtors for whom the ownership expense is applicable receive a fixed standard allowance that is the dollar amount under the applicable standard, not the dollar amount associated with a "payment for a debt." See United States' Brief, supra. at n.4.

Fourth, the Kimbro majority relied upon the legislative history of a statute never enacted in order to support its conclusion. See Kimbro, 389 B.R. at 525-27. Such an approach has been expressly rejected by at least three circuit courts of appeal presumably because it opens the door to the potential subversion of statutory language actually voted on by Congress and signed into law by the President. See, e.g., Interstate Natural Gas Co. v. Federal Power Comm., 156 F.2d 949, 952 (5th Cir. 1946) ("the legislative history of a bill that was not adopted cannot be resorted to construe a bill that was."), aff'd. 331 U.S. 682 (1947); United States v. Lincoln Rochester Trust Co., 297 F.2d 891, 893 (2d Cir. 1962) (finding that portion of House report referring to language not included in Technical Amendments Act of 1958, as finally adopted, may not be relied on in interpreting Act), cert. denied, 369 U.S. 887 (1962); Com. of Puerto Rico v. Blumenthal, 642 F.2d 622, 635 n.23 (D.C. Cir. 1980) ("[Appellant's] argument that we should not consider the legislative history of a bill that was never enacted represents a correct statement of the law."). Morever, as we discuss below, the legislative history of the 2005 Act supports the statutory construction of the word "applicable" adopted by the lower court. See United States' Brief, infra. at 17-19.

Fifth, the Kimbro majority erroneously declined to apply the dictionary meaning of the word "applicable." See Kimbro, 389 B.R. at 522-23. Had it applied the definition, it would have invariably ended up asking how the vehicle ownership expense allowance is "capable of being applied" to a debtor if the debtor does not make any lease or loan payments on a vehicle. See, e.g., Ransom, 380 B.R. at 807-808. Accordingly, because the majority in Kimbro failed to take this fundamental step as part of its statutory analysis, its construction of section 707(b)(2)(A)(ii)(I) is suspect.

For each of these reasons, Ross-Tousey, which primarily relied on the majority opinion in Kimbro, should not be followed by this Court.

II. Alternatively, this Court Should Affirm Because Section 1325 of the Bankruptcy Code, Which is Forward-Looking in Nature, Excludes Non-Existent Future Expenses, Like Mr. Coffin's Claimed Vehicle Ownership Expenses, From Being Deducted Under the Projected Disposable Income Test.

In Kibbe v. Sumski, this Court adopted a forward-looking reading of section 1325 of the Bankruptcy Code. See Kibbe v. Sumski (In re Kibbe), 361 B.R. 302, 314-15 (B.A.P. 1st Cir. 2007) (per curium). The Eighth and Tenth circuits have adopted this forward-looking reading of section 1325 as well. See Hamilton v. Lanning (In re Lanning), 545 F.3d 1269, 1278-82 (10th Cir. 2008), petition for cert. filed Feb. 3, 2009; Coop v. Frederickson (In re Frederickson), 545 F.3d 652, 659-60 (8th Cir. 2008), petition for cert. filed Jan. 23, 2009. But see Maney v. Kagenveama (In re Kagenveama), 541 F.3d 868 (9th Cir. 2008).

Because section 1325 is forward-looking, it precludes debtors, like Mr. Coffin, from including phantom vehicle ownership expenses on their means test that they will not have over the life of their chapter 13 plans. Thus, section 1325 constitutes a separate and independent ground for affirmance, even if this panel were to reject the lower court's construction of section 707(b)(2)(A)(ii)(I).

Under section 1325(b)(1), a bankruptcy court may not confirm a chapter 13 plan over the chapter 13 trustee's objection unless "the plan provides that all of the debtor's projected disposable income to be received in the applicable commitment period . . . will be applied to make payments to unsecured creditors under the plan."[7] 11 U.S.C. § 1325(b)(1) (emphasis added). Thus, the use of the terms "projected," "to be received," and "will be applied to make payments" in section 1325(b)(1) makes that section forward-looking.

Although the word "projected" is not defined under the Bankruptcy Code, the dictionary defines "project" as forward-looking. See The Random House Dict. of English Lang., 1546 (2d ed. 1987) (defining to "project" as inter alia, "to set forth or calculate (some future thing); They projected the building costs for the next five years."); Webster's Third New Int'l Dict., 1813 (1993) (defining "projected" as inter alia, "planned for future execution: contrived, composed," as "[projected] outlays for new plant and equipment."). This forward-looking meaning should therefore be imparted to the term "projected" in section 1325(b)(1) absent a clear indication that Congress intended to give that term a different meaning. See Bailey v. United States, 516 U.S. 137, 144-45 (1995) (turning to dictionary definition of a term to define its statutory meaning). Accord Kibbe, 361 B.R. at 302; Lanning, 545 F.3d at 1269; Frederickson, 545 F.3d at 652.

[7] Section 1325(b)(4) defines the term "applicable commitment period," with certain exceptions, as 3 years for below-median-income chapter 13 debtors, and not less than 5 years for above-median-income chapter 13 debtors like Mr. Coffin. See 11 U.S.C. § 1325(b)(4).

There is no such indication.

The statutory requirements that: (a) a chapter 13 plan include all of a debtor's projected disposable income "to be received" during the plan period; and that (b) these amounts "will be applied to make payments" to unsecured creditors, both support this forward-looking reading of section 1325. See 11 U.S.C. § 1325(b)(1)(B). A court must interpret a statute as a symmetrical and coherent regulatory scheme and fit, if possible, all parts into a harmonious whole. See Food & Drug Admin. v. Brown & Williamson Tobacco Corp., 529 U.S. 120, 1301 (2000). Each of these phrases anticipate future action during the life of a debtor's plan. Thus, they reinforce the forward-looking nature of section 1325.

Finally, the phrase "amounts reasonably necessary to be expended" is found in section 1325(b)(2). See 11 U.S.C. § 1325(b)(2). This phrase "requires debtors, and courts, to look into the future to determine, inasmuch as possible, what expenses the debtor will have during the life of the plan." In re Van Bodegom Smith, 383 B.R. 441, 455 (Bankr. E.D. Wis. 2008). To give this phrase meaning, one must consider whether the debtor will actually "expend" any amounts going forward. Id.; In re Renicker, 342 B.R. 304, 309 (Bankr. W.D. Mo. 2006) (concluding that "plain language of section 1325(b)(2) unambiguously indicates that prospective – not historical – expenses are to be used to calculate disposable income"). It is axiomatic that loan payments on property that is unencumbered, like Mr. Coffin's vehicles, will not be made in the future, and hence will never be "expended." Accordingly, this language provides additional textual support for this forward-looking reading of section 1325.

Applying section 1325 this way, as the bankruptcy court did, precludes Mr. Coffin from deducting a vehicle ownership expense he will not have over the life of his chapter 13 plan. In re Coffin, 396 B.R. 804, 809 (Bankr. D. Me. 2008) ("because Coffin is not incurring out-of-pocket ownership expenses, such expenses cannot fairly be ‘projected’ in a plan”). Because he has no loan or lease payments for his two vehicles, and therefore will not make payments on either of those vehicles in the future, Mr. Coffin is not entitled to claim the $956.00 deduction associated with this non-existent future expense on his means test form. Cf. Kibbe, 361 B.R. at 314-15 (adopting forward-looking reading of section 1325 of the Bankruptcy Code). Instead, Mr. Coffin should only be allowed to claim the standardized transportation operating expense deduction provided for those debtors who, like Mr. Coffin, do not have a loan or lease expense.[8] See 11 U.S.C. § 1325(b)(3) (incorporating section 707(b)(2)(A)(ii) of the Bankruptcy Code, which in turn provides for standardized vehicle operating expense under means test). Accordingly, because the bankruptcy court concluded as much, its ruling should be affirmed.

III. Affirming the Lower Court’s Reading of Sections 707(b)(2)(A)(ii)(I) and 1325 as Limiting Vehicle Ownership Expense Amounts to Debtors Who Have Loan or Lease Payments Fulfills Two Goals Congress Expressed in Enacting the 2005 Act: Ensuring That Above-Median Income Debtors Repay Their Debts When They Can, and Eliminating Abuse.

In interpreting sections 707(b)(2)(A)(ii)(I) and 1325, this Court may consider relevant legislative history to determine the statute’s objectives and illuminate its text. See Almendarez-Torres v. United States, 523 U.S. 224, 228 (1998) (“We therefore look to the statute before us and ask what Congress intended. . . . In answering this question, we look to the statute’s language, structure, subject matter, context, and history-factors that typically help courts determine a statute’s objectives and thereby illuminate its text.”); Crandon v. United States, 494

[8] Mr. Coffin suggests that the bankruptcy court failed to account for vehicle registration, insurance, inspection fees, fuel, and maintenance expenses under his means test. See Appellant’s Brief, at 18-19. This is not correct. Those expense items were taken into account by the bankruptcy court in its analysis of Mr. Coffin’s means test, although in prescribed amounts that are less than what Mr. Coffin would prefer. See United States’ Brief, supra, at 4 (discussing application of vehicle operating expense deduction under the means test).

U.S. 152, 158 (1990) ("In determining the meaning of the statute, we look not only to the particular statutory language, but to the design of the statute as a whole and to its object and policy.").

The purpose of the 2005 Act was to "ensure that debtors repay creditors the maximum they can afford." H.R. Rep. No. 109-31 (I), at 1, 2005 U.S.C.C.A.N. at 89. See also Schultz v. United States, 529 F.3d 343, 347 (6th Cir. 2008) ("The centerpiece of the [2005 Act] is the imposition of a 'means test' for chapter 7 filers."). Cf. Thomas, 382 B.R. at 798 ("If a debtor were permitted a car ownership allowance when he actually incurs no such expense, application of the means test would not accurately reflect the debtor's ability to repay creditors, and the purpose of the statute would be frustrated.").

Congress felt this aspect of bankruptcy reform legislation was so important that it included this language in the first paragraph of the first page of the 2005 Act's legislative history. See H.R. Rep. No. 109-31 (I), at 1, 2005 U.S.C.C.A.N. at 89 ("The heart of the bill's consumer bankruptcy reforms consists of the implementation of an income/expense screening mechanism ('needs-based bankruptcy relief' or 'means testing'), which is intended to ensure that debtors repay creditors the maximum they can afford.")

Congress saw fit to reiterate this point when it addressed the legislative history to section 707(b).[9] Id. at 97-100. Given how important this was to Congress, sections 707(b)(2)(A)(ii)(I) and 1325 should be interpreted in accordance with the overarching goal that underpins the 2005 Act.

Further, the 2005 Act also sought to eliminate "loopholes and incentives" in the system

[9] As previously noted, section 1325 incorporates large portions of section 707(b). See 11 U.S.C. § 1325(b)(3) (incorporating sections 707(b)(2)(A)(ii), (iii), and (iv) of the Bankruptcy Code).

"that allow and – sometimes – even encourage opportunistic personal filings and abuse." H.R. Rep. No. 109-31 (I), at 5, 2005 U.S.C.C.A.N. at 92.

Ensuring, as the lower court did here, that above-median-income debtors are eligible to claim standardized deductions for vehicle ownership expenses only when they have such expenses honors congressional intent that debtors repay their debts when they are able. See Ransom, 380 B.R. at 807 ("[W]hat is important is the payments that debtors actually make, not how many cars they own, because the payments that debtors make are what actually affect their ability to make payments to their creditors."); Wilson, 383 B.R. at 733 (noting that for above-median-income chapter 13 debtors, the "purpose" of the 2005 Act was to "require" such debtors "to make more funds available to their unsecured creditors"); Hartwick, 373 B.R. at 652.

IV. The Bankruptcy Court's Construction of Sections 707(b)(2)(A)(ii)(I) and 1325 Implements Sound Bankruptcy Policy.

A. The Bankruptcy Court's interpretation is fair to debtors and creditors alike.

The bankruptcy court's interpretation of sections 707(b)(2)(A)(ii)(I) and 1325 is fair to all debtors because it establishes a threshold – the existence of vehicle loan or lease payments – for claiming an ownership deduction that is consistent for all chapter 13 debtors.

First it prevents discrimination in favor of better off debtors. Just as below-median-income debtors must incur an expense before claiming a deduction, see 11 U.S.C. § 1325(b)(2) (allowing such debtors only "reasonably necessary" expenses), above-median-income debtors must also meet the threshold by claiming "applicable" expenses before shielding income from creditors.

Second, the bankruptcy court's interpretation does not hurt below-median-income debtors – those most likely to file bankruptcy petitions – because such debtors are not subject to section 707(b)(2)'s means test. See 11 U.S.C. § 1325(b)(3).

Third, the bankruptcy court's interpretation is fair to creditors because they will receive payments on their debts when above-median-income debtors have the financial ability to repay. In enacting the 2005 Act Congress was concerned that under the prior system, "some bankruptcy debtors are able to repay a significant portion of their debts" but are not required to do so. H.R. Rep. No. 109-31 (I), at 5, 2005 U.S.C.C.A.N. at 92. The bankruptcy court's reading of section 707(b)(2)(A)(ii)(I) is fair to creditors because it ensures that above-median-income debtors significantly repay their debts in chapter 13 plans when they are able.

B. Mr. Coffin's interpretation, by contrast, is unfair.

Mr. Coffin's interpretation of section 707(b)(2)(A)(ii)(I) is unfair because it would allow above-median-income debtors to deduct phantom expenses, something section 1325(b)(2) prevents below-median-income debtors from claiming. See Wilson, 383 B.R. at 729 (observing that below-median-income chapter 13 debtors, who are not subject to section 707(b)(2)(A)(ii)(I), are not entitled to deduct the ownership costs for unencumbered vehicles in determining projected disposable income).

Prior to the 2005 Act, above-median-income chapter 13 debtors, like Mr. Coffin, could not deduct vehicle payments when they had no ownership costs in the first place. See 11 U.S.C. § 1325(b)(2) (2004) (previously requiring that expenses for all chapter 13 debtors be "reasonably necessary") (subsequently amended by the 2005 Act). To read the 2005 Act as loosening the expense requirements for above-median-income debtors would benefit the very group of debtors that Congress enacted the 2005 Act to scrutinize more closely.

Moreover, Mr. Coffin's argument that requiring expenses to exist before expense amounts are "applicable" somehow discriminates against above-median-income debtors lacks merit for two reasons. Appellant's Brief, at 14-15. First, debtors who, like Mr. Coffin, own an unencumbered vehicle that is over 6 years old or with 75,000 or more miles are entitled to an additional $200.00 expense deduction to cover increased monthly operating expenses associated with their vehicle's age. See IRS Internal Revenue Manual, Part 5, Ch. 8, § 5.8.5.5.2, available at http://www.irs.gov/irm/part5/ch08s05.html (providing for additional $200.00 operating expense under specified conditions). See also Ransom, 380 B.R. at 808 (recognizing $200.00 additional allowance); Hartwick, 373 B.R. at 652 (same); Wilson, 383 B.R. at 732 (same). Second, if a debtor needs a new vehicle during the course of his chapter 13 plan, he can move to modify his plan to reduce payments to creditors to account for the new expense. See 11 U.S.C. § 1329(a); Wilson, 383 B.R. at 734 ("[I]n the event a debtor needs a new car during the course of a case, the debtor can move to modify the plan based on changed circumstances."); In re Coffin, 396 B.R. at 809 n.15 ("should circumstances after confirmation change, so that the debtors needed to replace (or repair) a vehicle, the court could fairly consider plan modification under § 1329(a).").

CONCLUSION

For these reasons, the United States respectfully asks the Court to affirm the lower court's order.

U.S. TRUSTEE'S OBJECTION TO DEBTORS' SECOND AMENDED, JOINT DISCLOSURE STATEMENT

Pursuant to 28 U.S.C. § 586(a)(3)(B), 11 U.S.C. §§ 307, 524, 1125, 1129 and 1141(d), Fed. R. Bankr. P. 3017 and MLBR 3017-1, the United States Trustee objects to the second amended, joint disclosure statement dated October 12, 2000 ("Disclosure Statement") and submitted by Consolidated Health Care, Inc. ("Consolidated") and PTS Rehab, Inc. ("PTS") (collectively "Debtors"), because it fails to provide adequate information regarding the Debtors' second amended, joint plan of reorganization ("Plan"), which, as proposed, is not confirmable:

i. under 11 U.S.C. § 1141(d)(3), insofar as the Debtors seek to discharge their pre-confirmation debts, notwithstanding that they will liquidate their remaining asset(s), they will not engage in business after consummation of the Plan and they, as corporations, would be denied a discharge under 11 U.S.C. § 727(a);

ii. under 11 U.S.C. § 1129(a)(3), insofar as it was not filed for the purpose of reorganizing the Debtors' affairs and disproportionately benefits insiders and others;

iii. under 11 U.S.C. § 1129(a)(7), insofar as the Plan is not in the best interest of creditors;

iv. under 11 U.S.C. § 1129(a)(11), insofar as the Plan is not feasible; and

v. under 11 U.S.C. § 1129(b)(1), insofar as the Plan, in substantively consolidating the Debtors' estates, discriminates unfairly and is not fair and equitable with respect to the consolidated holders of Class 4, general unsecured claims.

In support, the United States Trustee says:

I.
RELEVANT FACTS

1. The Debtors, individually and/or through multiple affiliates, provided "ancillary healthcare and outpatient services" until 1998, by which time they had liquidated substantially all of their assets and had "ceased operat[ing] . . ."[1/] The defunct Debtors did not wind up their affairs and dissolve under applicable State law. Consolidated's stock, which had traded OTC on the NASDAQ exchange, was de-listed in 1998.[2/]

[1/] Disclosure Statement at 12; see Report of Donald Lassman, Receiver of Consolidated Health Care dated April 30, 1998, which was attached to the United States Trustee's May 9, 2000 motions to convert the Debtors' chapter 11 cases to chapter 7.

[2/] See Plan at 6.

2. The Debtors state that their "only unencumbered asset is the value of the fact that the shares in Consolidated are publicly traded . . ." (sic).[3]

3. Renaissance, which holds the majority of the Consolidated's stock and "a partially secured claim of $1.2 million . . . ,"[4] is an insider of the Debtors.[5] Renaissance's liquidating trustee, Thomas W. Pauken, "now serves as President and Chairman of the Board for both of the Debtors . . ."[6] Other than Mr. Pauken, the Debtors have no other management. Renaissance, therefore, is the true Plan proponent.

4. The Debtors filed voluntary chapter 11 petitions on March 15, 2000. The Debtors are not operating and have no employees.[7] Since the Debtors have not filed tax returns for the years 1997 - 1999, they cannot yet confirm whether they owe pre-petition taxes.[8]

[3] Disclosure Statement at 13. Other than its corporate shell, Consolidated's remaining assets currently consist of: a) its 100% ownership of the stock of PTS; and b) accounts receivable, "which have little or no value since all are over two years old . . ." and are subject to the perfected first lien security interest of Capital Factors, Inc. ("CFI"). Id. at 13. PTS's assets consist of: a) a note receivable from NovaCare Outpatient Rehabilitation, Inc. ("Note"), which it has agreed to surrender to CFI per the terms of a stipulation dated June 22, 2000; and b) $150,000 currently deposited in an escrow account ("Escrow Funds"), which is subject not only to claims asserted by the landlord plaintiff ("Landlord") in a breach of contract action pending in Norfolk County Superior Court but also to prior perfected security interests of CFI and Renaissance Capital Partners II, Ltd. ("Renaissance"). Id. at 12 and 13. On a consolidated basis, the Debtors are balance sheet insolvent. See Schedules. The Debtors apparently realized a consolidated loss on operations totaling $4,585,201 in 1997. Disclosure Statement at Exhibit "B."

[4] See Motion for Authority to Incur Debt With Administrative Priority dated May 3, 2000 and filed by Consolidated ("Borrowing Motion") at 2.

[6] Disclosure Statement at 20.

[7] Id. at 12 - 13.

[8] Id. at 13.

5. Under the Plan, the Debtors propose, among other things:

   i. to consolidate substantively their bankruptcy estates, notwithstanding that they can neither quantify inter-company liabilities nor demonstrate that doing so will be fair to each company's creditors;[9]

   ii. to pay holders of general, unsecured claims (which, according to their schedules "F," collectively exceed $1,000,000 and are subsumed as Class 4) a pro rata share of a de minimus $10,000 "Plan Deposit," plus the balance of the Escrow Funds, if any, after liquidation and payment of the Landlord's claim;[10]

   iii. to conduct a "reverse merger" with an operating, non-debtor company, Business Partners Leasing, Inc. ("BPL") or a substitute, which will ultimately issue 90% of its stock ("Stock") to BPL's shareholders, 7% collectively to Founders Equity Group, Inc. ("Founders") and Renaissance[11] and 2.81% to holders of Class 4, general unsecured claims;[12]

[10] Id. at 22. The schedule "F" creditors exclude those holding unsecured deficiency claims. The Plan suggests that there might not be any cash distribution to holders of Class 4 unsecured claims, other than the Plan Deposit, because the post-petition loan proceeds and the Escrow Funds exceeding the Landlord's recovery will be used to complete the reverse merger. "BPL shall be responsible for and pay the Post Confirmation Debtor's costs and expenses associated with the reverse merger transactions if there are insufficient funds to do so from the Loan Amount and the Remaining Escrow Amount . . ." Plan at 17 (emphasis added). The total cash dividend to holders of Class 4 unsecured claims might be as little as 1% ($10,000/$1,000,000).

[11] The Plan will be substantially consummated in a penultimate step, however - PTS will merge into Consolidated, which will issue 70% of its stock to Founders and Renaissance "in exchange for the release of their Administrative Claims for the Loan Amount. The remaining 30% of the Plan shares of the Post Confirmation Debtor will be issued to holders of Allowed Unsecured Claims on a pro rata basis . . ." Plan at 16. The merged entity – the so-called "Post Confirmation Debtor" – will itself conduct no business. Id.

[12] Id. at 15 - 17; Plan at 7. Query: Do the Debtors assert that the distribution of Stock to Class 4 general unsecured creditors will result in payment in full? Assuming that the Plan contemplates a true reorganization, and not a liquidation of the Debtors' assets, does the $14,000 post-petition loan advanced by Renaissance constitute "fresh capital" for purposes of evaluating whether it, in its capacity as a monopoly/majority shareholder, may receive property in violation of the absolute

iv. to change their name to BPL (or to that of the substituted company);[13] and

v. to discharge themselves, BPL, Founders and Renaissance of all of the Debtors' pre-petition debts and to enjoin creditors from pursuing any claims against BPL, Founders and Renaissance on any grounds.[14]

6. The Debtors will not engage in business following consummation of the Plan, because they currently have no business. Similarly, the so-called Post Confirmation Debtors will not conduct any business.

7. No one has agreed, or will presently agree, to "make a market" in the Stock, which, the Debtors' admit, will limit its value to holders of Class 4 unsecured claims.[15]

8. The Disclosure Statement states that "1999 was BPL's first fiscal year of operations . . ."[16] However, the notes to BPL's audited financial statements ("BPL Statements"), covering the calendar years 1998 and 1999, and the Disclosure Statement indicate that it began operating in 1997.[17] The BPL Statements state:

- that BPL's 1999 and 1998 net losses totaled ($53,680) and ($51,696), respectively;

- that BPL's total liabilities increased by $2,721,026 from 1998 to 1999;[18]

- that BPL is a highly leveraged company – its debt to equity ratio at December 31, 1999 was 12.7. Thus, its creditors hold a 92.7% interest in total assets, while equity holders maintain a 7.3% interest in total assets;

- that while total assets increased by $2,657,346 from 1998 to 1999, $1,704,458 of this increase came from finance lease receivables. Two customers represented 52.3% of the total finance lease receivable balance at December 31, 1999. According to the notes to the BPL's financial statements, BPL has assigned $1,747,329, or 86.7%, of these receivables to various financial institutions holding notes payable from BPL; and

- that Founders is a creditor and, possibly, an insider of BPL.[19]

[20] This has apparently been the Debtors' plan for almost three years. "According to Mr. Whitty [the Debtors' former president], Consolidated also hoped to engineer a sale of its publicly traded corporate shell. According to Mr. Whitty, negotiations have thus far been unsuccessful but are ongoing. Sale of the shell likely represents the best possibility for debt repayment to unsecured creditors . . ." Lassman Report at 3 - 4.

II.
ARGUMENT

A. The Court Should Deny Approval Of The Disclosure Statement, Because The Plan Is Not Confirmable

i. The Code prohibits a corporate debtor liquidating its assets from obtaining a discharge. In doing so, it prevents "trafficking" in corporate shells.

10. One of the reasons that section 1141(d) grants a broad discharge from pre-confirmation debts to a corporation that confirms a plan of reorganization is to encourage new investment in the company, consistent with the "fresh capital" exception to the absolute priority rule, which, in turn, promotes the company's continued operation. "If there is a possibility that a substantial portion of the debts that forced the corporation into bankruptcy will be nondischargeable, the likelihood that any new equity value would be contributed to the corporation would be diminished and liquidation would be the more viable alternative." In re A.H. Robins Co., Inc., 59 B.R. 99, 104 (Bankr. E.D. Va. 1986).[21] With new investment, a reorganized company preserves its future earning capacity as a going concern, facilitating its paying a dividend to creditors. Id.

11. Section 1141(d)(3) specifically prohibits a corporation that liquidates its assets from receiving a discharge, however. In re SIS Corp., 120 B.R. 93, 96 (Bankr. N.D. Ohio 1990). Section 1141(d)(3) states:

> (C) the debtor would be denied a discharge under section 727(a) of this title if the case were a case under chapter 7 of this title.

12. In In re Fairchild Aircraft Corp., 128 B.R. 976, 982 the bankruptcy court analyzed the reasons underlying Congress' prohibition against a liquidating corporation's obtaining a discharge.

> Congress designed Section 1141(d)(3) to discourage trading in corporate shells. H.R.Rep. No. 595, 95th Cong. 1st Sess. 384 (1977), U.S. Code Cong. & Admin. News 1978, p. 5787. It achieves that goal by freighting the shell with all the claims, so that any claims or portions of claims not paid by the liquidation will attach to the shell, making the shell much less attractive for use in starting up another enterprise. Thus, while there is no legal impediment to pursuing the corporation, there is precious little economic incentive . . . The protection [against trafficking in corporate shells] is especially significant with respect to publicly traded companies. Without it, entities would be tempted to pick up the shell, issue new stock, and start a new business without the dead weight of old debt, undermining not only the integrity and bona fides of the bankruptcy system but also the underlying salutary function of the securities laws . . .

In re Fairchild Aircraft Corp., 128 B.R. at 982 and n.6 (emphasis added).[22/]

[22/] "[I]n a departure from pre-Code law, partnerships and corporations cannot receive a discharge in a liquidation case. The policy behind this provision is the prevention of trafficking in corporate shells and bankrupt partnerships. A corporation may obtain relief from its debts through dissolution. But it does not need relief if it no longer has any assets . . ." 6 COLLIER ON BANKRUPTCY, ¶ 727.01[3] (15th Ed. Rev. 2000) (emphasis added).

13. The Court cannot confirm the Plan, because it seeks to discharge the Debtors' pre-confirmation debts while violating section 1141(d)(3):

- first, the Plan requires the Debtors to liquidate their remaining asset(s) "of value" – Consolidated's corporate shell – through the sale to BPL, or to a substitute purchaser;

- second, insofar as the Debtors are not operating and have been defunct since 1998, they have no business to continue. The Debtors – merged or otherwise – will also not conduct business after the Plan is consummated[23/] – i.e. when the Debtors "fold" PTS into Consolidated and distribute "Plan Shares" in the melded entity to Renaissance, Founders and holders of Class 4 general unsecured claim, together with the de minimus, pro rata cash dividend; and

- third, the Debtors, as corporations, would be denied a discharge in chapter 7.

14. The Plan essentially traffics in the Debtors' corporate shell(s), which is prohibited by the Code. Accordingly, it cannot be confirmed.[24/]

[23/] Section 1101(2) defines "substantial consummation" as:

> (A) transfer of all or substantially all of the property proposed by the plan to be transferred;
> (B) assumption by the debtor or by the successor to the debtor under the plan of the business or of the management of all or substantially all of the property dealt with by the plan; and

C/f Financial Security Assurance, Inc. v. T-H New Orleans, L.P. (In re T-H New Orleans, L.P.), 116 F.3d 790, 802 (5th Cir. 1997) (affirming that a plan requiring the corporate debtor to continue operating its hotel for two years following confirmation was not a liquidating plan).

[24/] See In re Maxim Industries, Inc., 22 B.R. 611 (Bankr. D. Mass. 1982) (court denied confirmation of chapter 11 plan whose sole purpose was to use the debtor's shell to preserve tax attributes), discussed Infra. Moreover, a Chapter 11 case can be commenced only for reorganization purposes. In re Coastal Cable T.V., Inc., 709 F.2d 762, 764 - 765 (1st Cir. 1983).

ii. Insofar as the Plan disproportionately benefits insiders of the Debtors, it has not been proposed in good faith under 11 U.S.C. § 1129(a)(3).

15. In a case presenting similar facts, the debtor, a shell corporation, had no operations, no employees and no assets, save a potential tax loss. In re Maxim Industries, Inc., 22 B.R. at 611. The debtor proposed a plan of reorganization under which it agreed to acquire 100% of the stock of an operating company for $1,000,000, with the funding for stock purchase to be provided by the "target" itself. The plan provided that unsecured creditors would receive a dividend totaling as much as 10% over five years, based upon a percentage of the merged company's earnings. Notwithstanding that "the minimal payment which this plan provided to the unsecured creditors would be more than they would receive in liquidation since the debtor was a mere shell . . .,"[25] the court denied confirmation of the plan on grounds that it had not been proposed in a good faith attempt to reorganize the debtor's affairs, but rather to take advantage of the debtor's pre-petition net loss carry forwards. The court stated:

> The purpose of a Chapter 11 reorganization proceeding is to enable a business to rehabilitate itself and become a profitable going concern . . . Chapter 11 was not designed to permit the use of shell corporations for the personal benefit of the officers of the corporation. In fact, under the new Bankruptcy Code, a corporation or partnership is not entitled to a discharge in Chapter 7. 11 U.S.C. § 727. This change in policy from the old law was specifically aimed at avoiding trafficking in corporate shells and bankrupt partnerships . . . Bankruptcy is perceived as a haven for wistfulness and the optimist's Valhalla where the atmosphere is conducive to fantasy and miraculous dreams of the phoenix rising from the ruins. Unfortunately, this Court is not held during the full moon, and while the rays of sunshine sometimes bring the warming rays of the sun, they more often also bring the bright light that makes transparent and evaporates the elaboraD:\Web DW\XDOJ Net (-12)\briefs\ConPTS1.wpdD:\Web DW\XDOJ Net (-12)\briefs\ConPTS1.wpdte financial fantasies constructed of nothing more than the gossamer wings and of sophisticated tax legerdemain . . .

16. Here, the primary beneficiaries of the corporate shell locomotion proposed by the Plan are not pre-petition, unsecured creditors, who will receive a de minimus cash dividend and a pro rata, 2.81% distribution of stock having an speculative future worth, but rather an insider of the Debtors – Renaissance – and the stockholders of BPL:

> - Renaissance benefits, because it will merge one of its struggling borrowers/investments – BPL – into two of its moribund investments – the Debtors – securing 2.19% of new corporation's stock, all "in exchange" for its $14,000 post-petition loan.[26] Renaissance also gets a non-debtor discharge for all of the Debtors' pre-confirmation debts and injunctive relief against all parties on any causes of action relating to its involvement with the Debtors.[27]
> - The stockholders of BPL, apparently including Renaissance, benefit, because they receive a total of 90% of the stock in the reconstituted company, which, with the Court's imprimatur, they will launch "OTC," without the Security and Exchange Commission's customary vetting. BPL's stockholders will further benefit, because, as the Debtors admit, they will avoid "market risks" associated with conventional initial public offerings, "eliminate[] the time and expense associated with 'road shows . . . to brokers and underwriters . . ." and "[l]eave a higher portion of the company in [their] hands . . ." [28] Like Renaissance, BPL gets a broad, third-party, non-debtor discharge.

17. Renaissance and BPL also receive a benefit unavailable to Class 4 unsecured creditors by virtue of the sheer size of their positions in BPL's Stock – viz., the ability to make a market for their shares OTC and ready access to those who might want to buy or sell it (themselves). Given BPL's dismal earnings record as a private company and its manifest reluctance to engage public equity markets, it is reasonable to assume that the only people willing to relieve creditors of their Stock will be Renaissance and BPL, who, having control of BPL anyway, might have no incentive

[26] Id. at 9; 17. Renaissance equity investment in the Debtors, which it has characterized as undersecured "loans," entitling it to status as the Class 5 creditor, should be subordinated. See 11 U.S.C. § 510.

[28] Id. at 15 - 16.

– strategic, financial or otherwise – to do so. It follows that the market for the Stock will be exceedingly thin and that Class 4 creditors might never be able to redeem their shares for money or money's worth. Similarly, the Plan does not prevent BPL from diluting the creditors' position by issuing more Stock. Thus, the value of the Stock is highly speculative.

18. At bottom, the Plan benefits an insider – Renaissance – and BPL's stockholders disproportionately vis a vis unsecured creditors by giving them a controlling stake in a public company for which they are at nominal risk, coupled with a broad discharge and injunctive relief for which they have paid nothing. Class 4 creditors, on the other hand, might never realize any benefit from the Plan, other than a de minimus 1% cash distribution, because the bulk of their prescribed consideration – Stock – will be illiquid and, thus, of uncertain value to anyone other than Renaissance or BPL insiders, who might neither wish to buy it nor have any compunction against issuing new shares, which would dilute the value of the Stock. The Debtors/Renaissance have not proposed the Plan in good faith. 11 U.S.C. § 1129(a)(3). Accordingly, the Plan is not confirmable, and the Court should not approve the Disclosure Statement. See In re Maxim Industries, Inc., 22 B.R. at 611.

iii. The Plan is not in the best interest of creditors.

19. The plan releases and permanently enjoins claims against non-debtors, including BPL, Renaissance and Founders, without their having provided any consideration, in violation of 11 U.S.C. § 524(e). See Securities and Exchange Commission v. Drexel Burnham Lambert Group, Inc. (In re Drexel Burnham Lambert Group, Inc.), 960 F.2d 285, 293 (2d Cir. 1992); In re Continental Airlines, 203 F.3d 203, 211 - 213 (3d Cir. 2000). Accordingly, the Plan is not in the best interest of creditors, and the Court should not approve the Disclosure Statement. 11 U.S.C. § 1129(a)(7).

iv. The Plan is not feasible.

20 The Debtors admit that if the Stock in the ultimately merged entity is to have any value, it must, among other things, "raise additional debt and equity capital . . .", list the Stock on a "national securities exchange . . ." and receive a favorable market reception for the Stock.[29] Given BPL's extant debt-to-equity ratio of 12.7 and its cumulative losses for 1998 - 1999 totaling $105,376,[30] these contingencies might never occur within lives in being. Accordingly, the Plan cannot be confirmed, because it is not feasible, and the Court should not approve the Disclosure Statement. 11 U.S.C. § 1129(a)(11).

v. The Plan discriminates unfairly and is not fair and equitable.

21. The Disclosure Statement wholly fails to establish the factors necessary to support the Debtors' being substantively consolidated, including whether there has been "a disregard of corporate formalities and commingling of assets by various entities" and the relative harm to the Debtors' respective creditor groups. In re Bonham, et al., __ F.3d __, 2000 WL 14768752 (9th Cir. 2000) at 37, citing In re Reider, 31 F.3d 1102, 1106 (11th Cir. 1994). The Plan discriminates unfairly and is not fair and equitable as to the general, unsecured creditors of the respective debtors. Accordingly, the Court should not approve the Disclosure Statement. 11 U.S.C. § 1129(b)(1).

[29] Id. at 17.

[30] Ordinarily, a debtor's post-petition performance is relevant to the Court's analysis of whether a plan is feasible. See In re Agawam Creative Marketing Assoc., Inc., 63 B.R. 612, 620 (Bankr. D. Mass. 1986), citing In re Merrimac Valley Oil Co., Inc., 32 B.R. 485, 488 (Bankr. D. Mass. 1983). As discussed above, the Debtors have been defunct for two years. (The Debtors' monthly operating reports indicate that the Debtors have lost $35,727.29 since the petition date). Feasibility of the Plan, therefore, turns on the likelihood that BPL will operate profitably and attract both new investment and credit facilities. Given BPL's mediocre track record over last two years, it is reasonable to believe that none of the conditions precedent to the Stock's having value will ever occur.

22. When a plan is not confirmable on its face, the Court should not approve its supporting disclosure statement and subject the estate to further diminution by continuing the reorganization process. See In re Bjolmes Realty Trust, 134 B.R. 1000 (Bankr. D. Mass. 1991). Accordingly, the Court should deny the Disclosure Statement.

B. Deficiencies Per Section 1125

23. The Disclosure Statement is deficient in that it: i) fails to discuss Renaissance's apparent interest in BPL; ii) fails to discuss the impact of substantive consolidation upon each Debtor's respective creditors; iii) fails to discus why the Plan grants discharges and post-confirmation injunctive relief to non-debtor third parties, including Renaissance, who will pay no consideration for their tangible benefits; iv) fails to discuss how Class 4 creditors receiving Stock might reasonably expect to redeem their shares for money or money's worth; v) fails to discuss whether the Plan will restrict BPL's ability to dilute the value of Stock issued to Class 4 unsecured creditors; vi) fails to discuss why Renaissance has characterized its Class 5 claims for "loans" instead of wholly subordinated equity contributions; vii) fails to discuss why the Debtors never filed 1997 - 1999 tax returns; viii) fails to discuss Renaissance's connections with BPL's stockholders, Don Moorehead, George Moorehead, Tim Stone and Founders; ix) fails to disclose the current financial condition of Renaissance and Founders; x) fails to discuss Thomas Pauken's relationship with Founders, the Mooreheads and Mr. Stone; and xi) fails to discuss whether there are any inter-company liabilities between the Debtors. Without such information, creditors will be unable to make an informed decision regarding the Plan. See In re Ferretti, 128 B.R. 16, 19 (Bankr. D. N.H. 1991); In re Adana Mortg. Bankers, Inc., 14 B.R. 29, 31 (Bankr. N.D. Ga. 1981).

CERTIFICATE OF CONFERENCE

Pursuant to MLBR 3017-1, the undersigned certifies that as a follow up to his July 28, 2000 letter (which delimited interrelated disclosure and plan confirmation objections and is attached to the Disclosure Statement at Exhibit "D"), he met in person with counsel for Consolidated, Mark DeGiacomo, Esq., and his client representative, Mr. Pauken, on September 11, 2000 in a good faith effort to narrow areas of disagreement. At that time, the undersigned agreed to withhold confirmation objections until the Plan confirmation hearing. The parties have twice sought joint extensions of time so as to allow each of them to prepare its best possible work product. Each has also discussed the Plan with counsel for the Securities and Exchange Commission, Nat Fuchs, Esq.

The Debtors filed the Disclosure Statement on October 12, 2000. While the Disclosure Statement is an improvement upon its predecessor as to section 1125(a) issues, the United States Trustee has reluctantly concluded that the Plan cannot be confirmed as a matter of law and that proceeding to confirmation (assuming that the Debtors correct the deficiencies noted in paragraph 23 supra) is futile and will further deplete the Debtors' estate(s). Accordingly, the United States Trustee urges the Court in the foregoing Objection to deny approval of the Disclosure Statement, because, among other things, the Plan cannot be confirmed.

The undersigned unsuccessfully attempted to discuss the Objection – and the United States Trustee's changed position – with Attorney DeGiacomo on October 26, 2000.

United States Trustee for Region 8, and Preston Wilson, Chapter 7 Trustee,

On Appeal from the Bankruptcy Appellate Panel for the Sixth Circuit

STATEMENT OF JURISDICTION

(a) The bankruptcy court had jurisdiction over Larry Paul Conway's Chapter 7 bankruptcy case and the United States Trustee's adversary proceeding seeking to revoke Mr. Conway's discharge, under 28 U.S.C. § 157(b) and § 1334. The bankruptcy court entered its final Order Denying Discharge on February 3, 2004.

(b) The Bankruptcy Appellate Panel of the Sixth Circuit ("BAP") had jurisdiction over Mr. Conway's appeal from the bankruptcy court's Order Denying Discharge under 28 U.S.C. § 158(a) and (b).

(c) This Court has jurisdiction over Mr. Conway's appeal from the BAP's Judgement affirming the bankruptcy court under 28 U.S.C. § 158(d).

STATEMENT OF THE ISSUE

Did the bankruptcy court commit clear error in denying Mr. Conway's Chapter 7 discharge given that he:

- refused to testify at an October 30, 2002 deposition; refused to obey orders requiring him to respond to discovery requests approved by the bankruptcy court; refused to testify at his 11 U.S.C. § 341 Meeting of Creditors; and refused to be examined pursuant to F.R.B.P. 2004, in violation of 11 U.S.C. § 727(a)(6)(C);

- concealed property of the Estate after the date of the filing of the petition in violation of 11 U.S.C. § 727(a)(2)(B); and

- failed to explain a devaluation of assets of at least $690,400 in violation of 11 U.S.C. § 727(a)(5).

STATEMENT OF THE CASE

On February 26, 2002, Mr. Larry Conway filed a voluntarily petition under Chapter 11 of the Bankruptcy Code.[1] BR 1-1. Mr. Conway's original schedules

Upon a motion filed by the United States Trustee[2] (BR 130-1), the bankruptcy court converted the Chapter 11 case to a case under Chapter 7 on November 7, 2002. BR 209-1; Conv. [2] United States Trustees are officials of the Department of Justice appointed by the Attorney General to supervise the administration of bankruptcy cases and trustees. See 28 U.S.C. § 581-589 (specifying the powers of United States Trustees); United States Trustee v Revco D.S., Inc. (In re Revco D.S., Inc.), 898 F.2d 498, 499 (6th Cir. 1990) ("[t]he United States trustee, an officer of the Executive Branch, represents... [the] public interest"); United States Trustee v. United States Trustees are appointed pursuant to 28 U.S.C. § 581. United States Trustees "may appear and be heard in any case or proceeding" in bankruptcy cases (with the sole exception of not being authorized to file a Chapter 11 plan). 11 U.S.C. § 307. Section 586 of title 28 mandates that United States Trustees "take such action" as necessary to ensure performance of duties by bankruptcy debtors. See 28 U.S.C. § 586(a)(3)(D). In cases pending under Chapter 11, United States Trustees are authorized to seek the appointment of a trustee (11 U.S.C. § 1104) or move for case dismissal or conversion of the Chapter 11 case to a case under Chapter 7 (11 U.S.C. § 1112(b)). In cases pending under Chapter 7, United States Trustees can seek case conversion or dismissal (11 U.S.C. §§ 706 and 707). United States Trustees can also object to the granting of a discharge to a Chapter 7 debtor. 11 U.S.C. § 727(c)(1).

1112(b) (authorizing a bankruptcy court to convert a Chapter 11 case to a case under Chapter 7). Mr. Conway appealed the conversion. BR 215-1. The United States District Court for the Western District of Tennessee affirmed the bankruptcy court's decision to convert. Conway v. Vergos, 02-2974-M1 (W.D. Tenn. October 1, 2003).[3] BR 392-1. Mr. Conway did not appeal from that decision.

On October 27, 2003, after completing a review of the relevant facts, the United States Trustee filed his Complaint Objecting to Discharge. BR 401-1; APR 1-1. The United States Trustee cited three bases for the denial of discharge: Mr. Conway's refusal to testify, in violation of 11 U.S.C. § 727(a)(6)(c); Mr. Conway's

He was automatically substituted in Ms. Vergos' place in then-pending proceedings, per Rule 43(c)(2) of the Federal Rules of Appellate Procedure. On January 8, 2004, the bankruptcy court heard the United States Trustee's Motion for Default Judgment (D.J. Tr. 1-1) and ruled that a default would be entered against Mr. Conway (APR 8-1); however, the Court declined to enter a final judgment without an evidentiary hearing. D.J. Tr. 2.

On January 13, 2004, the bankruptcy court issued an Entry of Default (APR 8-1) and notified the parties that the bankruptcy court would conduct a January 29, 2004 evidentiary hearing to consider a final judgment against Mr. Conway. Id. On January 29, 2004 the bankruptcy court conducted an evidentiary hearing. Ev. Tr. 1. The bankruptcy court heard testimony and considered the trial exhibits introduced into evidence by the United States Trustee. Id.

At the conclusion of the January 29, 2004 hearing, the bankruptcy court ruled that it would deny Mr. Conway's discharge. Ev. Tr. 37-41. On February 3, 2004, the bankruptcy court entered its Order Denying Discharge. APR 10-1; BR 411-1. That Order referenced each of the three grounds alleged by the United States

Trustee (11 U.S.C. §§ 727(a)(2)(B), (a)(5), and (a)(6)(C)) as being bases for denial of discharge. Id. On February 11, 2004, Mr. Conway filed his Notice of Appeal, requesting adjudication by the BAP. BR 416-1. By its December 28, 2004 Judgement and Opinion ("BAP Opinion"), the BAP affirmed the bankruptcy court's Order Denying Discharge. BR 499-1.

On February 3, 2005, Mr. Conway filed his Notice of Appeal to this Court. By this Court's April 11, 2005 Order, this Court consolidated four of Mr. Conway's pending appeals: 05-5225; 05-5227; 05-5358; and 05-5359. By this Court's July 26, 2005 Order, the Court directed the United States Trustee to file a brief only with regard to appeal 05-5225.

STATEMENT OF FACTS

Mr. Conway commenced the instant bankruptcy case by filing a voluntary Chapter 11 petition on February 26, 2002. BR 1-1. This was the second personal Chapter 11 bankruptcy case filed by Mr. Conway in four months. BR 1-2 (disclosing Mr. Conway's prior case, 01-37379-JDL, filed November 7, 2001).

Under 11 U.S.C. 541(a), the commencement of Mr. Conway's bankruptcy case created an estate consisting of all non-exempt property held by Mr. Conway. Mr. Conway's Schedule A disclosed that he lives in a $1.76 million house. BR 9-8. Mr. Conway's Schedule B disclosed that he owned a Mercedes-Benz S 320 luxury automobile. BR 9-11. Mr. Conway did not disclose in his original Schedule B that he also owned a Lexus LS 400; Mr. Conway made that disclosure on his amended Schedule B. BR 170-13. Mr. Conway disclosed his possession of $170,000 in furniture; $980,000 in books, pictures, and artifacts; and $100,000 in furs and jewelry. BR 9-10. Without explanation, Mr. Conway lowered the value of those assets six months later, to $19,600; $490,000; and $50,000, respectively. BR 170-11. In aggregate numbers, Mr. Conway originally valued the furniture, books, pictures, artifacts, and jewelry at $1,160,000.00; his amended Schedule B decreased, without explanation, the valuation of those same assets to $559,600.00. That amendment, thus, diminished by $600,400.00 property of the Estate (under 11 U.S.C. § 541) that could have been liquidated to pay allowed claims of the creditors. See 11 U.S.C. § 704(1) (outlining duty of trustee to liquidate property to pay creditors).

On August 1, 2002, the United States Trustee moved to dismiss or, alternatively, convert Mr. Conway's case, under 11 U.S.C. § 1112(b). BR 130-1. In advance of the November 4, 2002 hearing on that motion, the United States Trustee noticed Mr. Conway's deposition and issued interrogatories and requests for production (collectively, the "Discovery Requests") to Mr. Conway. BR 193-1; Conv. Tr. 3-4. Because Mr. Conway did not appear for his deposition or substantively answer the Discovery Requests, the United States Trustee moved to compel Mr. Conway's compliance. BR 193-1. In consequence, the bankruptcy court entered an order (BR 196-1), compelling Mr. Conway to sit for deposition on October 30, 2002, and a second order (BR 204-1), compelling substantive responses to the Discovery Requests. Mr. Conway failed to appear for his October 30, 2002 deposition (Conv. Tr. 8), and Mr. Conway failed to give substantive responses to the Discovery Requests (Conv. Tr. 8-11).

On November 7, 2002, the bankruptcy court entered its order converting Mr. Conway's Chapter 11 case to a case under Chapter 7. BR 209-1. Immediately upon the conversion of Mr. Conway's Chapter 11 case to a case under Chapter 7, the United States Trustee appointed a Chapter 7 trustee, P. Preston Wilson. BR 211-1. Upon the conversion of his Chapter 11 case to one under Chapter 7, 11 U.S.C. 521(4) required Mr. Conway to surrender all property of the Estate to Mr. Wilson. Mr. Conway did not do that, however. Ev. Tr. 1 - 41.

Shortly after conversion, an 11 U.S.C. § 341 Meeting of Creditors was scheduled for December 4, 2002. BR unnumbered entry dated November 13, 2002. Mr. Conway did not appear on December 4, 2002 to testify. BR 228-1; Ev. Tr. 18. Mr. Wilson, therefore, continued Mr. Conway's Meeting of Creditors to January 8, 2003. BR 228-1; see Ev. Tr. 18.

Mr. Conway did not appear on January 8, 2003 to testify at his Meeting of Creditors. BR 243-1; Ev. Tr. 18. Mr. Wilson, accordingly, continued Mr. Conway's Meeting of Creditors to March 5, 2003. BR 243-1; see Ev. Tr. 18. On January 10, 2003, Mr. Wilson moved for entry of an order compelling Mr. Conway to appear and testify at his Meeting of Creditors. BR 245-1.

On February 4, 2004, the bankruptcy court entered its "Order Compelling Debtor to Attend 341 Meeting of Creditors." BR 266-1. The bankruptcy court found that Mr. Conway had posed no objection to Mr. Wilson's motion to compel, either in writing or in open court. Id.

Despite entry of the bankruptcy court's February 4, 2003 Order compelling him to testify at his Meeting of Creditors, Mr. Conway did not comply with that Order and did not appear at the March 5, 2003 setting of his Meeting of Creditors. Ev. Tr. 18, 25; BR 281-1. Mr. Conway, thus, failed three times to appear for his Meeting of Creditors. See Appellant's Brief at 10 ("there has never been a valid mandatory required meeting of creditors" held for Mr. Conway).

Additionally, on November 21, 2002, Mr. Wilson moved for an order directing Mr. Conway to submit to examination pursuant to F.R.B.P. 2004. BR 221-1. Mr. Wilson cited in his November 21, 2002 motion to a November 8, 2002 notification by Mr. Conway's then-lawyer that "the Debtor would not consent to" an inspection of his residence to prepare an inventory of the furnishings and artifacts listed in the schedules. BR 221-2. The bankruptcy court granted Mr. Wilson's request for a F.R.B.P. 2004 examination (a proceeding similar to a deposition, except with broader limits on the scope of inquiry). BR 240-1. Mr. Conway refused to comply, however, with the bankruptcy court's order. Ev. Tr. 18, 25.

In light of Mr. Conway's refusal to testify at his Meeting of Creditors, Mr. Conway's refusal to submit to an F.R.B.P. 2004 examination, and Mr. Conway's defiance of bankruptcy court orders compelling Mr. Conway's compliance, Mr. Wilson moved to dismiss (under 11 U.S.C. § 707) Mr. Conway's Chapter 7 bankruptcy case with prejudice. BR 283-1. The bankruptcy court, however, denied Mr. Wilson's motion to dismiss, finding that Mr. Conway's assets should be liquidated to pay creditors. BR 321-1; see Ev. Tr. 25 (Mr. Wilson affirming characterization of the bankruptcy court's ruling on his motion).

On August 13, 2003, Mr. Wilson filed a Motion for Writ of Entry to Conduct 2004 Examination of Premises, seeking renewed authority to access Mr. Conway's residence. BR 361-1. On August 28, 2003, the bankruptcy court granted Mr. Wilson's renewed request, and directed the United Sates Marshal to provide Mr. Wilson entry to "the Debtor's residence . . . by force if necessary." BR 373-1.

On the morning of August 29, 2003, Mr. Wilson, accompanied by an art appraiser and an estate appraiser, finally gained entry into Mr. Conway's house. Ev. Tr. 28-29. Approximately four or five deputy United States Marshals were present to escort Mr. Wilson. Ev. Tr. 29. While Mr. Wilson video-taped his findings, another videographer, apparently employed by Mr. Conway, followed and recorded everything that Mr. Wilson was doing. Id. at 30. At some point, Mr. Conway or his companions called the Memphis Police Department, apparently claiming that they were being burglarized or invaded, and two squad cars appeared at Mr. Conway's residence. Id at 30-31. The presence of the police officers reduced the tension that had built up. See id. at 31.

Mr. Wilson had an independent expert appraiser value the assets found in Mr. Conway's house. Ev. Tr. 31. Mr. Conway's original Schedule B valued those assets at $1,160,000.00. BR 9-10. Even his amended Schedule B valued those assets at $559,600.00. But the only assets found by Mr. Wilson had an appraised value of just $100,000.00 to $120,000.00. Ev. Tr. at 32. They sold at auction for only $76,647.50. BR 539-1. These are the only personal property assets that the Trustee has been able to locate and liquidate.

On October 27, 2003, the United States Trustee filed his Complaint objecting to the issuance of a discharge to Mr. Conway (BR 404-1; APR 1-1), citing three bases for denial of discharge: Mr. Conway's refusal to testify, in violation of 11 U.S.C. § 727(a)(6)(C); Mr. Conway's concealment of assets, in violation of 11 U.S.C. § 727(a)(2)(B); and Mr. Conway's failure to explain the massive devaluation of assets, in violation of 11 U.S.C. § 727(a)(5). Id.

The bankruptcy court issued the Summons (APR 2-1), and the United States Trustee served Mr. Conway at his residence at 6099 Shady Grove Road in Memphis, Tennessee (APR 3-1), where Mr. Conway resided until approximately July 25, 2005. See BR 560-1. (Notice of Change of Mr. Conway's address, filed by Mr. Wilson on July 25, 2005). Neither Mr. Conway nor any attorney for Mr. Conway filed an answer or even an appearance in the adversary proceeding. Mr. Conway never requested an extension of time to answer or file a motion to dismiss the Complaint. No claim was ever made in the bankruptcy court or BAP that Mr. Conway did not receive service or notice of the Summons and Complaint.

Mr. Conway never answered the United States Trustee's Complaint. APR 5-1. The United States Trustee, accordingly, moved for a judgment by default against Mr. Conway. APR 4-1. The bankruptcy court scheduled its hearing on the motion for default judgment for January 8, 2004, however, Mr. Conway did not appear for that hearing. APR 10-2. The bankruptcy court concluded a basis existed to enter a default judgment against Mr. Conway, but the court decided it would not enter default without first conducting an evidentiary hearing. D.J. Tr. 3-4; APR 8-1.

The bankruptcy court conducted its evidentiary hearing on January 29, 2004. APR 8-1; Ev. Tr. 1-1. The United States Trustee called Mr. Wilson, the Chapter 7 trustee[4], to testify about the history of the case and particularly Mr. Conway's refusal to cooperate with Mr. Wilson. Ev. Tr. 15-37. At the conclusion of the proof, the bankruptcy court made oral findings of fact, consistent with F.R.B.P. 7052 (incorporating F.R.C.P. 52).

At the close of the evidentiary hearing, the bankruptcy court orally ruled with regard to each of the United States Trustee's three claims, in light of the facts admitted into evidence. Ev. Tr. 37-41. The bankruptcy court specifically found that Mr. Conway had engaged in concealment ("There clearly has been concealment and it is a concealment of the truth"). Ev. Tr. 39. The bankruptcy court recited Mr. Conway's duties under 11 U.S.C. § 521. The court specifically found that, with regard to subsection (3), Mr. Conway had not cooperated with the Chapter 7 trustee. Id. at 39. That failure by Mr. Conway impeded the Chapter 7 trustee from inventorying the Estate's assets. Id. at 40. The court also found that Mr. Conway had failed to turn over assets to the Chapter 7 trustee in violation of subsection (4). Id at 40.

[4] Section 704(1) of the Bankruptcy Code mandates that Chapter 7 trustees "collect and reduce to money the property of the [bankruptcy] estate...." Mr Wilson, thus, was statutorily obliged to take control of Mr. Conway's assets so that they could be liquidated for the benefit of creditors.

The bankruptcy court also specifically found that Mr. Conway had failed to explain the significant devaluation of his assets (comparing Mr. Conway's original schedules with his amended schedules). Ev. Tr. 40.

Finally, the bankruptcy court specifically found that Mr. Conway had refused to testify. Ev. Tr. 40, 41. Among other things, the bankruptcy court expressly referred to Mr. Conway's failure to attend and testify at the October 30, 2002 deposition (Ev. Tr. 41); to respond to the Discovery Requests posed by the United States Trustee (Ev. Tr. 41; "the debtor has not responded to material questions"); to attend and testify at his meeting of creditors (Ev. Tr. 40); and to permit an inspection of his assets (Ev. Tr. 41).

The bankruptcy court, accordingly, entered a final judgment on behalf of the United States Trustee on all grounds alleged in his Complaint. See Ev. Tr. 37 - 41 (court setting forth its conclusions of fact and law with regard to each count). The bankruptcy court thereafter entered its February 3, 2004 Order Denying Discharge, in which the bankruptcy court memorialized in writing the specific statutory grounds under which it was denying Mr. Conway's discharge. APR 10-1.

SUMMARY OF THE ARGUMENT

The bankruptcy court properly denied Mr. Conway's discharge[5] because he failed to testify in violation of 11 U.S.C. § 727(a)(6)(C); concealed assets from the Chapter 7 trustee in violation of 11 U.S.C. § 727(a)(2)(B); and failed to explain a deficiency in assets to pay his debts, in violation of 11 U.S.C. § 727(a)(5).

Although Mr. Conway dislikes that the bankruptcy court denied his discharge, other parties in interest are not impaired in enjoying the benefits of Chapter 7. Creditors will be permitted to file claims as a source of payment of the debts owed them by Mr. Conway. 11 U.S.C. § 501. Mr. Wilson will be permitted to continue liquidating assets and pay allowed claims. 11 U.S.C. § 704(1). Upon

[5] The United States Trustee's Complaint sought to deny Mr. Conway a discharge. Denial of a debtor's discharge is completely different from dismissal of a debtor's case. Compare 11 U.S.C. § 524 (effect of discharge) to 11 U.S.C. § 349 (effect of case dismissal). For example, dismissal of the bankruptcy case would have revested ownership of all property back to Mr. Conway (so that the property would no longer be owned by the bankruptcy Estate, per 11 U.S.C. § 541). 11 U.S.C. § 349(b)(3). Mr. Wilson, the Chapter 7 trustee, requested dismissal of the case (BR 283-1), but the bankruptcy court found it provident to deny that request in view of the significant benefits for creditors that could be gained by Mr. Wilson liquidating Mr. Conway's property. BR 321-1; See Ev. Tr 25 (Mr. Wilson affirming characterization of the bankruptcy court's ruling on his motion). Regardless of whether a bankruptcy court grants or denies a debtor's discharge, such decision does not truncate or interfere with a Chapter 7 trustee's liquidation of property of the Estate (so that creditors can be paid). See, e.g., 11 U.S.C. § 704 (compelling the trustee to take possession of and liquidate property of the estate in subsection (1), while simultaneously authorizing the trustee to object to a debtor's discharge in subsection (6)).

denial of discharge, the automatic stay was terminated (11 U.S.C. § 362(c)(2)(C)). All denial of discharge did was enable creditors to exercise their rights outside of bankruptcy court under applicable non-bankruptcy law. See Boatmen's Bank of Tennessee v. Embry (In re Embry), 10 F.3d 401 (6th Cir. 1993) (creditor permitted to garnish bank account without need to obtain relief from stay based on entry of nondischarable judgement). In summary, the bankruptcy court properly denied Mr. Conway's discharge in view of Mr. Conway's extreme misconduct. While Mr. Conway may be disappointed, denial of discharge does not impede the work of the Chapter 7 trustee, and does not truncate rights of Mr. Conway's creditors.

APPLICABLE STANDARD OF APPELLATE REVIEW

The issue on appeal involves mixed questions of fact and law. In reviewing an appeal from the bankruptcy appellate panel, the "review is of the bankruptcy court's decision." Corzin v. Fordu (In re Fordu), 201 F.3d 693, 696 n. 1 (6th Cir. 1999). This Court reviews the bankruptcy court's conclusions of law de novo and its factual determinations for clear error. See id.

ARGUMENT

1. The Bankruptcy Court did not Commit Clear Error by Concluding that Mr. Conway's Failure to Testify Justified a Denial of Discharge under 11 U.S.C. 727(a)(6)(C).

The bankruptcy court properly denied Mr. Conway's discharge because Mr. Conway unjustly and repeatedly refused to appear at his Meeting of Creditors (Ev. Tr. 18, 25, 37-41; BR 228-1; BR 245-1; BR 266-1; BR 281-1); refused to submit to examination pursuant to F.R.B.P. 2004 (BR 283-1; Ev. Tr. 18, 25, 37-41); refused to be deposed (BR 193-1; Conv. Tr. 8; Ev. Tr. 41); and refused to answer court-approved discovery requests issued by the United States Trustee (BR 193-1; BR 204-1; Conv. Tr. 8-11).[6] Section 727(a)(6)(C) mandates denial of discharge if the debtor has refused, in the case:

> (C) on a ground other than the properly invoked privilege against self incrimination, to respond to a material question approved by the court or to testify;

11 U.S.C. § 727 (a)(6)(C).

A. Pre-conversion refusal to testify

Pre-conversion, after Mr. Conway failed to appear for a deposition noticed by the United States Trustee, the bankruptcy court ordered Mr. Conway to appear for an October 30, 2002 deposition. BR 196-2. Mr. Conway did not appear. Conv. Tr.

[6] The United States Trustee's Complaint (APR 1-1; BR 404-1) references Mr. Conway's refusal to testify at his Meeting of Creditors and refusal to submit to an F.R.B.P. 2004 examination by Mr. Wilson. APR 1-1; ¶ 17. The specific § 727 (a)(6)(C) allegations focus exclusively on the pre-conversion refusals by Mr. Conway to be deposed and provide genuine responses to the United States Trustee's Discovery Requests. APR 1-1, ¶¶ 19-25.

8; Ev. Tr. 41. Additionally, the bankruptcy court made an exhaustive, request-by-request ruling on the discovery issued by the United States Trustee. BR 204-1. The court directed Mr. Conway to answer those court-sanctioned questions prior to the November 4, 2002 hearing on conversion (BR 204-3). Mr. Conway did not, however. Conv. Tr. 8-13; Ev. Tr. 41.

B. Refusal to testify at post-conversion Meeting of Creditors

Mr. Conway did not appear for the December 4, 2002, January 8, 2003, or March 5, 2003 settings of his Meeting of Creditors. Ev. Tr. 18, 37-41; BR 228-1; BR 245-1; 266-1; BR 281-1. Mr. Conway defied the bankruptcy court's order compelling him to testify at his Meeting of Creditors. BR 266-1; Appellant's Brief at 31; Ev. Tr. 25.

C. Refusal to be examined by Chapter 7 trustee under F.R.B.P. 2004

Mr. Conway refused to submit to Mr. Wilson's request to examine him at his residence, and Mr. Conway defied the court's order with regard to Mr. Wilson's request. BR 221-1; BR 240-1; Ev. Tr. 25. Mr. Wilson gave detailed testimony concerning Mr. Conway's refusal to permit Mr. Wilson to inventory the Estate's assets. Ev. Tr. 18-37. Mr. Wilson had moved on November 21, 2002 for an order directing Mr. Conway to submit to examination pursuant to F.R.B.P. 2004. BR 221-1. Mr. Wilson cited in his November 21, 2002 motion to a November 8, 2002 notification by Mr. Conway's then-lawyer that "the Debtor would not consent to" an inspection of his residence to prepare an inventory of the furnishing and artifacts listed in the schedules. BR 221-2. The bankruptcy court granted Mr. Wilson's request for an F.R.B.P. 2004 examination (BR 240-1).

Mr. Wilson testified that he first scheduled the F.R.B.P. 2004 examination for February 18, 2003. Id. at 20. He testified that Mr. Conway stated that the examination should be rescheduled for February 28, 2003 (due to asserted inadequate notice), and Mr. Wilson acceded to that demand. Id.

Mr. Wilson testified that, on February 28, 2003, Mr. Conway notified him that a relative had died and that he (Mr. Conway) required a rescheduling of the examination. Id. at 20-21. Mr. Wilson requested that Mr. Conway contact him on March 3, 2003 to select a new date for the examination, but Mr. Conway contacted Mr. Wilson's office after it had closed. Id. at 21. Mr. Wilson testified about his efforts on March 4, 2003 to reschedule with Mr. Conway for an examination on March 10 or 11, 2003, and Mr. Conway's insisting that the inspection occur sometime the week of March 17, 2003. Id. Mr. Wilson had explained to Mr. Conway the need for the examination to occur on March 10, 2003 so that expert appraisers could accompany Mr. Wilson when he took his inventory, but Mr. Conway refused to identify a specific date when the examination could occur. Id. at 22. Consequently, Mr. Wilson informed Mr. Conway that the examination would occur on March 10, 2003. Id.

Mr. Wilson testified that, on March 10, 2003, he received a March 6, 2003 letter from Mr. Conway notifying Mr. Wilson that Mr. Conway refused to allow Mr. Wilson to come to his house. Ev. Tr. at 23. Not until Mr. Wilson filed a second request to conduct an examination under F.R.B.P. 2004 (BR 361-1), this time with the United States Marshal authorized to assist Mr. Wilson "by force if necessary," was Mr. Wilson able to gain entry into Mr. Conway's residence. Ev. Tr. at 28.

D. The court properly withheld Mr. Conway's discharge because he refused to testify.

Mr. Conway's refusal to submit to discovery parallels the conduct described in Golant v. Levy (In re Golant), 239 F.3d 931 (7th Cir. 2001). There, the debtor complied with discovery, but only in part. As a F.R.B.P. 7037 sanction, the bankruptcy court denied the debtor's discharge for failure to comply with discovery. The Seventh Circuit affirmed, noting:

> In spite of Golant's protestations, we fail to see how the bankruptcy court could have come to any other conclusion. Golant was ordered twice to comply with the bankruptcy court's production order. In spite of a warning regarding the severity of possible sanctions, Golant continued to ignore the bankruptcy court's order. Where a debtor in bankruptcy refuses to be completely forthright with information regarding his financial > dealings and resources-information that is of paramount importance to an efficient and fair bankruptcy proceeding- the bankruptcy court is left with little recourse...

Id. at 937.

Here, even if Mr. Conway believed that he would have been justified in not answering particular questions at a deposition, he at least had to appear and state his objections. Likewise, his remedy for objectionable discovery requests would have been a protective order instead of proffering non-meritorious objections.

Collier on Bankruptcy, a leading bankruptcy treatise, notes that a court may deny a debtor's discharge when a debtor refuses to testify. 9 Collier on Bankruptcy, ¶ 4002.02[4][b] (15 ed. rev'd.). Id. (noting such alternative would be used in rare instances). Here, Mr. Conway refused to testify at a deposition in defiance of a bankruptcy court order compelling him to do so; he refused to answer court-approved interrogatories; he refused to appear at all three settings of his meeting of creditors (in defiance of a bankruptcy court order) and he refused to testify at a F.R.B.P. 2004 examination (in defiance of a bankruptcy court order). Given Mr. Conway's extreme misconduct in this case, the bankruptcy court did not abuse its discretion in denying discharge based upon the uncontroverted evidentiary record before it.

In reaching that decision, the bankruptcy court weighed the evidence before it. At the conclusion of proof on January 29, 2004, the bankruptcy court expressly pointed to Mr. Conway's failure to fulfill his duty to testify at a Meeting of Creditors [7] as grounds for denying discharge. Ev. Tr. 40. Also, the court pointed to Mr. Conway's refusal to answer the Discovery Requests posed by the United States Trustee and to attend the October 30, 2002 deposition. See Ev. Tr. 41 ("The debtor has not responded to material questions....The debtor has refused to appear for deposition"). Additionally, the bankruptcy court observed how Mr. Conway had failed to fulfil his duty to cooperate (under 11 U.S.C. § 521) with the Chapter 7 trustee, and how Mr. Conway's failure had impeded Mr. Wilson's fulfilment of his duties. "One of those duties, of course, is to obtain an inventory of the assets of the estate, and Mr. Conway certainly has not cooperated in Mr. Wilson's efforts to do that," and that "the debtor has refused to permit inspection of the assets of the estate." Id. at 40, 41.

The bankruptcy court reflected that it had earlier rejected case dismissal as a sanction for Mr. Conway's non-cooperation "because of the very high values that Mr. Conway placed on his assets" and that it appeared "that there were creditors that needed to be paid and that there were assets from which those obligations could be paid." Ev. Tr. 38. The court, thus, carefully balanced the remedies for Mr. Conway's defiance with the need of his creditors to be paid by liquidation of his assets. The bankruptcy court, therefore, properly chose to deny Mr. Conway's discharge, under 11 U.S.C. § 727 (a)(6)(C), for his refusal to testify.

[7] The bankruptcy court cited 11 U.S.C. 524(d), requiring the debtor to appear at his discharge hearing. The statutory requirement to attend a meeting of creditors actually appears at 11 U.S.C. 343, as implemented by F.R.B.P. 4002(1). Of course, Mr. Conway also violated 11 U.S.C. § 524 (d) because he did not appear for the January 29, 2004 hearing on his discharge. Ev. Tr. 1.

2. The Bankruptcy Court did not Commit Clear Error by Concluding that Mr. Conway's Concealment of Property Justified a Denial of Discharge under 11 U.S.C. § 727 (a)(2)(B).

The bankruptcy court properly found that Mr. Conway concealed property of the bankruptcy Estate, in violation of 11 U.S.C. § 727 (a)(2)(B). Section 727 (a)(2)(B) directs discharge denial if :

> (2) the debtor, with intent to hinder, delay, or defraud a creditor or an officer of the estate charged with custody of property under this title, has transferred, removed, destroyed, mutilated, or concealed, or has permitted to be transferred, removed destroyed, mutilated, or concealed–
> .... (B) property of the estate, after the date of the filing of the petition;

11 U.S.C. § 727 (a)(2)(B).

Section 521 (4) of the Bankruptcy Code provides that a debtor "shall surrender to the trustee all property of the estate." 11 U.S.C. § 521 (4). Despite

Mr. Conway's obligation to surrender property of the Estate, and despite Mr. Wilson's repeated requests simply to inventory Estate property, Mr. Conway refused. Ev. Tr. 15 - 37. Only after the bankruptcy court directed the United States Marshal to assist Mr. Wilson did Mr. Conway even allow the trustee to view the Estate's assets and, even then, Mr. Conway continued to refuse to turn them over. Ev. Tr. 28, 40. The record below, thus, establishes that Mr. Conway improperly sequestered Estate property at his residence from November 7, 2002 (date of conversion) until August 29, 2003 (date Mr. Wilson gained entry into Mr. Conway's residence), a period of 9 months, 16 days. Ev. Tr. 15 - 37. In fact, Mr. Conway did not turn over the property at any time prior to his discharge being revoked. Ev. Tr. 40. That prevented the trustee from liquidating assets for the creditors' benefit and, thus, delayed their receipt of payment in this case.

Mr. Conway's concealment mirrors the concealment described in the Sixth Circuit's decision, U. S. v. Wagner, 382 F.3d 598 (6th Cir. 2004). There, a subdivision developer built and owned "smart" houses (houses with features that automated various household chores). Id. at 603. The developer filed a voluntary petition under Chapter 11, but the bankruptcy court quickly converted his case to one under Chapter 7. Id. at 605.

The debtor defied the Chapter 7 trustee's efforts to sell the "smart" houses. Among other things, the debtor directed one of his employees to change the locks on the houses so that only the debtor would have a key for each home. Id. at 605-06. Shortly thereafter, a realtor hired by the Chapter 7 trustee could not show the home to a prospective buyer. The debtor claimed that he changed the locks because there was a rash of break-ins at the houses and he wanted to control all the outstanding keys to halt any future incidents, but the government presented contrary evidence that Wagner in fact changed the locks to interfere with Trustee French's efforts. Id. at 606.

The debtor was indicted and convicted for, among other things, alleged concealment of assets in violation of 18 U.S.C. § 152(1) by changing the locks on houses that were assets of the Chapter 7 trustee. Id. On appeal, the Sixth Circuit had to resolve the meaning of "conceal" as used in 18 U.S.C. § 152(1). Id. The court opined as follows:

> The narrow construction of "conceal" — "To hide, secrete, or withhold from the knowledge of others. . . . To cover or keep from sight. To hide or withdraw from observation, or prevent discovery of" — springs from its dictionary definition. Black's Law Dictionary 288 (6th ed. 1990); see also Random House Unabridged Dictionary 422 (2d ed. 1993) ("[T]o hide; withdraw or remove from observation; cover or keep from sight."). By depriving the Trustee of access to the house, Wagner concealed (i.e., he hid, secreted, prevented discovery of, and withheld from the knowledge of the Trustee) the value of the property. That the Trustee knew of the house's > existence does not alter our conclusion, because mere awareness of the property does not concomitantly reveal the property's value. Without access to the inside of the home, no prospective buyer could accurately assess the worth of the house and place a bid, which in turn prevented the Trustee from learning the value of the house and accordingly disposing of the estate. It would be no different if Wagner revealed to the Trustee the existence of a cache of diamonds in a locked box, but refused to give the Trustee the key to open the box, preventing a buyer (and consequently the Trustee) from assessing whether the diamonds were of pristine cut, color, and clarity such that they were worth $100,000 or were instead low-grade diamonds worth only $10,000. Like diamonds, the value of the smart house, as embodied in the sale price, cannot be known until a purchaser bids on the house, which provides the only true measure of the house's value. Few rational buyers would purchase a home without seeing the inside first. Thus, limiting access to the inside of the house effectively precluded any potential purchaser from making an informed decision, which in turn prevented the Trustee from learning the true value of the house. Such actions constitute concealment of an asset.

U.S. v. Wagner, at 607-08.

Wagner concerned "concealment's" definition in a criminal context (18 U.S.C. § 152(1)), while the bankruptcy court here had to apply "concealment" in a civil context (11 U.S.C. § 727(a)(2)(B)). That is a distinction without a difference, though. As Collier on Bankruptcy notes,

> Conduct that amounts to concealment from creditors or from an officer of the estate charged with custody of property [under § 727(a)(2)] will in general be the same as to that which constitutes a concealment under 18 U.S.C. § 152. Cases decided under 18 U.S.C. § 152 will afford helpful analogies in determining what amounts to concealment.

6 Collier on Bankruptcy, ¶ 727.02[6][b] (Matthew Bender 15th ed. rev'd).

The factual similarities in the Wagner case and the instant case are notable. Like the Wagner debtor (Wagner at 605-06), Mr. Conway questions the legality or authority of the Chapter 7 trustee. See, e.g., Appellant's Brief at 5. Like the Wagner debtor (Wagner at 605-06), Mr. Conway demonstrated to the Chapter 7 trustee that he had no intention of cooperating. Ev. Tr. 15-37. Like the Wagner debtor (Wagner at 606), Mr. Conway's conduct prevented the Chapter 7 trustee from gaining access to the debtor's property. Ev. Tr. 15-37. Like the Wagner debtor, Mr. Conway prevented the Chapter 7 trustee from determining the true value of the assets. Ev. Tr. 28. Only after Mr. Wilson obtained an order directing the United States Marshal to use "force if necessary" did he gain access to property that should have been turned over to him immediately upon conversion. Ev. Tr. 28.

Further, as in Wagner (Wagner at 610), Mr. Conway's preventing the Chapter 7 trustee from entering the property may have caused no economic loss. As the Wagner court points out, though, "such considerations are irrelevant; there is no materially requirement in § 152(1), and Wagner would have been no less criminally liable under § 152(1) if he had changed the locks knowingly and fraudulently but the realtor" had not made an effort to show the house to a potential buyer. Id. at 610. The Wagner view that, concealment does not require monetary loss transcends criminal law. The Sixth Circuit expressed the identical view, that financial loss is not a predicate to a finding of concealment, in Keeney v. Smith (In re Keeney), 227 F.3d 679, 685 (6th Cir. 2000) (citations omitted). The Keeney court affirmed a bankruptcy debtor's denial of discharge for concealment, in violation of 11 U.S.C. § 727(a)(2).

A bankruptcy court from this circuit noted recently, "once a prima facie case [of concealment] is established, the debtor 'must come forward with an explanation for the concealment that convinces a judge [otherwise]'." Buckeye Retirement Co. v. Heil (In re Heil), 289 B.R. 897, 907 (Bankr. E.D. Tenn 2003) (citations omitted). Mr. Conway never appeared in court to explain his beliefs or conduct, even though 11 U.S.C. § 524 (d) and F.R.B.P. 4002(2) mandated his appearance at the January 8, 2004 and/or January 29, 2004 hearings. Given that, the bankruptcy court had to base its findings upon Mr. Conway's acts. Those acts - refusal to turn over property, refusal to allow inspection, defiance of court orders - were more than sufficient to allow the court to decide that Mr. Conway was concealing property and therefore deny him a discharge under section 727(a)(2).

3. The Bankruptcy Court did not Commit Clear Error by Concluding that Mr. Conway's Failure to Explain Devaluation of Assets Justified a Denial of Discharge under 11 U.S.C. § 727(a)(5).

The bankruptcy court also did not abuse its discretion in determining that Mr. Conway failed to explain the loss or deficiency of assets to meet his liabilities, in violation of 11 U.S.C. § 727(a)(5). That section mandates denial of discharge if:

> (5) the debtor has failed to explain satisfactorily, before determination of denial of discharge under this paragraph, any loss of assets or deficiency of assets to meet the debtor's liabilities;

11 U.S.C. § 727(a)(5).

On March 14, 2002, Mr. Conway represented by Attorney Wanda Abioto, filed his original Schedule B. BR 9-1. On September 9, 2002, Mr. Conway amended his Schedule B, while he was still represented by counsel. BR 170-1. His amendments included the following:

Assets	Schedule B Value	Amended Schedule B Value	Variance
Furniture	$170,000.00	$19,600.00	-$150,400.00
Books, Pictures & Artifacts	$980,000.00	$490,000.00	-$490,000.00
Furs and Jewelry	$100,000.00	$50,000.00	-$50,000.00

Mr. Conway has never explained the material devaluation of assets for which he was effectively the bankruptcy trustee (as Debtor-In-Possession) between March 14, 2002 and September 9, 2002. See Ev. Tr. 33-35 (Mr. Wilson testifying as to varying valuations for which Mr. Conway has never made an explanation). The value of those assets is and always has been a material issue in the instant case. Mr.

Conway has always claimed that the majority of those assets are not encumbered by liens (all of Mr. Conway's real property is or has been encumbered by liens). See Schedule D (BR 9-15) (reflecting only small liens against non-automobile personal property). The value of Mr. Conway's personal property is particularly vital now in light of the foreclosure of every parcel of real property owned by Mr. Conway. See Appellant's Brief, 5-14 (identifying each foreclosure).

By refusing to testify at his Section 341 Meeting of Creditors, or at examinations scheduled pursuant to F.R.B.P. 2004, Mr. Conway has eschewed every opportunity (prior to the trial on his discharge) to explain the devaluation of the assets. The United States Trustee expressly alleged this § 727(a)(5) failing in the Complaint Objecting to Discharge (APR 1-3; BR 404-3), thus, Mr. Conway had yet another opportunity to explain the lack or deficiency in assets to pay his liabilities. Indeed, 11 U.S.C. § 524(d) and F.R.B.P. 4002(2) mandated that Mr. Conway appear at the hearing on the United States Trustee's Complaint objecting to discharge.[8] Mr. Conway chose, however, not to appear for the default hearing or evidentiary hearing with regard to the denial of his discharge. The bankruptcy court, thus, appropriately denied Mr. Conway's discharge for failing to explain the significant lack or deficiency of assets (especially because the devaluation occurred while Mr. Conway functioned as the Debtor-In-Possession).

4. The Bankruptcy Court Predicated Denial of Discharge on Its Factual Findings, Even Though the Bankruptcy Court had No Duty to Make Any Findings.

Mr. Conway asserts that the denial of his discharge was wrong. Appellant's Brief at 13 (discharge was "maliciously, pretextually, and retliatorily denied"). He mentions some of the allegations in the United States Trustee's Complaint Objecting to Discharge. Appellant's Brief at 39. It is not, however, until page 40 of his Brief that Mr. Conway says why he feels denial of his discharge was wrong:

> There has never been any proof or facts of any specific wrong doing on behalf of Mr. Conway to pretextually deny him a discharge. The court and trustee followed none of the law or rules to deny discharge.

Appellant's Brief at 40.

Mr. Conway fundamentally misunderstands the standards at play here, triggered by his voluntary decision not to file an answer, appear at the default judgment hearing, or appear at the evidentiary hearing. At the BAP, Mr. Conway made essentially the same argument that he makes before this Court, that the bankruptcy court failed to make specific findings and conclusions of law on the merits of the Complaint. BAP Opinion at 5. The BAP succinctly dealt with Mr. Conway's argument:

> Rule 52(a) of the Federal Rules of Civil Procedure, made applicable in bankruptcy adversary proceedings by Rule 7052 of the Federal Rules of Bankruptcy Procedure, does require findings and conclusions, but only "in actions tried upon the facts without a jury or with an advisory jury . . . . Findings of fact and conclusions of law are unnecessary on decisions of motions under Rule 12 or 56 or any other motion except as provided in subdivision (c) of this rule." The proceeding against [Mr. Conway] was not tried on the merits, so findings and conclusions on the merits were not necessary; the well-pleaded allegations of the complaint in effect constitute findings of fact. See, e.g., Adriana Int'l Corp. v. Thoeren, 913 F.2d 1406, 1414 (9th Cir. 1990); Brown v. Kenron Aluminum & Glass Corp, 477 F.2d 526, 531 (8th Cir. 1973); Westinghouse Elec. Corp. v. Rio Algom Ltd. (In re Uranium Antitrust Litig.), 473 F.Supp. 382, 390-91 (N.D. Ill. 1979), remanded on other grounds, 617 F.2d 1248 (7th Cir. 1980).

BAP Opinion at 5-6.

Assuming that findings and conclusions were required, the bankruptcy court made express findings on the record in open court.[9] Ev. Tr. 37-41. The bankruptcy court listened to the testimony of the Chapter 7 trustee and took into consideration

[9] To the extent Mr. Conway means to suggest the court could not make its findings orally, he is wrong. Findings in bankruptcy cases are governed by Bankruptcy Rule 7052, which provides that "Rule 52 F.R.Civ.P. applies in adversary proceedings." Fed. R. Bankr. P. 7052. Civil Procedure Rule 52(a) expressly provides that "[i]t will be sufficient if the findings of fact and conclusions of law are stated orally." Fed. R. Civ. P. 52(a). The bankruptcy court did make such oral findings at the conclusion of the evidentiary hearing on January 29, 2004. Ev. Tr. 37 - 41.

the numerous documents introduced into evidence demonstrating the pattern of intimidation and non-cooperation by Mr. Conway. Ev. Tr. 15 - 37. At the conclusion of the January 29, 2004 evidentiary hearing, the bankruptcy court applied specific provisions of the Bankruptcy Code in light of the uncontroverted evidence presented during the hearing. Ev. Tr. 37 - 41. The bankruptcy court methodically interwove law and facts in reaching its conclusion.

The bankruptcy court insisted upon evidentiary protections to ensure that any denial of discharge would be based upon admissible evidence and not merely Mr. Conway's failure to object. The bankruptcy court declined on January 8, 2004 to enter a final judgment against Mr. Conway, even though Mr. Conway had not answered the Complaint; had not otherwise filed a response to the Complaint; and did not appear at the January 8, 2004 hearing (in direct contravention of § 524(d) and F.R.B.P. 4002(2)). D.J. Tr. 3. Instead, the bankruptcy court scheduled an evidentiary hearing for January 29, 2004. D.J. Tr. 4; APR 8-1. The court's findings were based upon an ample evidentiary record that fully supports the court's ruling.

In summarily stating that no "proof or facts of any specific wrong doing" exist (Appellant's Brief at 40), Mr. Conway fails to address the substantive, uncontroverted evidence presented on January 29, 2004. Among other things, the proof showed that Mr. Conway refused to appear and testify at three settings of his

Meeting of Creditors (Ev. Tr. 18, 40); that Mr. Conway failed to attend his October 30, 2002 deposition (Ev. Tr. 41); that Mr. Conway repeatedly refused to allow Mr. Wilson to inventory his assets (Ev. Tr. 20-28); that Mr. Conway defied bankruptcy court orders (Ev. Tr. 25); and that, in light of Mr. Conway's defiance and intimidation, Mr. Wilson had to obtain a Writ of Entry and the assistance of deputy United States Marshals to gain access to Mr. Conway's property (Ev. Tr. 25 - 28).

The bankruptcy court made findings of fact and conclusions of satisfactory under F.R.B.P. 7052, as if a trial on the merits had been necessary. The bankruptcy court carefully interwove Bankruptcy Code statutes, Bankruptcy Rules, and the facts admitted into evidence in making the court's January 29, 2004 ruling. Instead of denying Mr. Conway's discharge in light of his failures to answer and appear at the discharge hearings (in direct violation of 11 U.S.C. § 524(d) and F.R.B.P. 4002(2)), the bankruptcy court mandated that the United States Trustee introduce admissible evidence sufficient to demonstrate that Mr. Conway's discharge should be denied. The bankruptcy court instilled vital safeguards to ensure that denial of discharge would result from a careful exercise of the bankruptcy court's discretion. The critical point, though, is that findings and conclusions on the merits were not necessary; the well-pleaded allegations of the Complaint in effect constituted findings of fact.

5. Even after Denial of Mr. Conway's Discharge, Estate Administration can Continue and Creditors Continue to Enjoy Rights In and Out of the Bankruptcy Court.

Although Mr. Conway dislikes that the bankruptcy court denied his discharge, other parties in interest are not impaired in enjoying the benefits of Chapter 7. Creditors will be permitted to file claims as a source of payment of the debts owed them by Mr. Conway. 11 U.S.C. § 501. Mr. Wilson will be permitted to continue liquidating assets and pay allowed claims. 11 U.S.C. § 704(1). Mr. Wilson is entitled to receive a commission upon payment of claims allowed in this case. 11 U.S.C. § 326. Upon denial of discharge, the automatic stay was terminated (11 U.S.C. § 362(c)(2)(C)); consequently, creditors are now able to exercise their rights under applicable non-bankruptcy law to collect on the debts owed to them by Mr. Conway. See Boatmen's Bank of Tennessee v. Embry (In re Embry), 10 F.3d 401 (6th Cir. 1993) (creditor permitted to garnish bank account without need to obtain relief from stay based on entry of nondischarable judgement. In summary, the bankruptcy court properly denies Mr. Conway's discharge in view of Mr. Conway's extreme misconduct. While Mr. Conway may be disappointed, denial of discharge does not impede the work of the Chapter 7 trustee, and does not truncate rights of Mr. Conway's creditors.

CONCLUSION

For the foregoing reasons, the United States Trustee respectfully requests that the judgement of the BAP be affirmed.

INTRODUCTION AND STATEMENT OF BASIS OF APPELLATE JURISDICTION

The United States Trustee brings this appeal from an order (the "Order") (R-195)[1] entered by the United States Bankruptcy Court for the Northern District of Georgia (the "Bankruptcy Court") on June 12, 2008, denying his Motion for the Appointment of a Chapter 11 Examiner (the "Examiner Motion") (R-132). The United States Trustee is an official of the United States Department of Justice with responsibility for administering and enforcing the Bankruptcy Code, 11 U.S.C. §§ 101 - 1532. Under 11 U.S.C. § 307, the United States Trustee has standing to "raise and . . . be heard on any issue in any case or proceeding" under the Bankruptcy Code. See 28 U.S.C. § 586 (setting forth many duties of United States Trustee); United States Trustee v. Columbia Gas Systems, Inc. (In re Columbia Gas Systems, Inc.), 33 F.3d 294, 295-299 (3d Cir. 1994).

This Court has jurisdiction over this appeal under 28 U.S.C. § 158(a), which provides, in pertinent part, as follows:

[1] Unless otherwise indicated, all references to the record on appeal are to the docket number assigned the document by the Bankruptcy Court.

> (a) The district courts of the United States shall have jurisdiction to hear appeals
> (1) from final judgments, orders, and decrees; [and]
> ...
> (3) with leave of the court, from ... interlocutory orders and decrees;
> ... of bankruptcy judges entered in cases and proceedings referred to the bankruptcy judges under section 157 of this title. ...

28 U.S.C. § 158(a).

STATEMENT OF THE ISSUE

The issue on appeal is whether 11 U.S.C. § 1104(c)(2) required the bankruptcy court to order the appointment of an examiner in this case because it is a case in which the debtor's fixed, liquidated unsecured debts, other than debts for goods, services, or taxes or owing to an insider, exceed $5,000,000.

STANDARD OF REVIEW

In contrast, legal conclusions by the bankruptcy court ... are reviewed ... de novo." *Club Associates v. STATEMENT OF THE CASE

1. Procedural History

The Appellee/Debtor (hereinafter the "Debtor") commenced this bankruptcy case by filing a voluntary petition for relief under chapter 11 of the Bankruptcy Code (R-1) on February 10, 2008 (the "Petition Date") and has remained in control of the assets and business operations of the resulting bankruptcy estate since that date. On February 27, 2008, the United States Trustee appointed an Official Committee of Unsecured Creditors in the case (the "Committee") pursuant to 11 U.S.C. § 1102(a). (R-34). The Committee has retained counsel and a financial advisor and has been actively involved in the case.

The United States Trustee filed the Examiner Motion on April 25, 2008, and it came before the Court for a hearing on June 12, 2008. (R-206). The Bankruptcy Court entered an order denying the Examiner Motion on that same date, and the United States Trustee filed a timely notice of appeal on June 23, 2008. (R-210).

2. Factual Background

A. Debtor's business model and finances.

Debtor is in the business of making loans for real estate acquisition and development from operating capital raised primarily through the sale of bonds to the public (the "Investor Bonds") (R-13).[2] According to Debtor's bankruptcy schedules, there are several thousand holders of the Investor Bonds with claims totaling in excess of $142,000,000. (R-50, Attachment 1).

Debtor is the successor to Presbyterian Investors Fund, Inc. ("PIF"), a Georgia non-profit corporation formed in 1985. Debtor was incorporated as a Georgia for-profit corporation on March 18, 1996, and PIF was merged into it on December 29, 2000. (R-13 at ¶ 5.) Debtor made loans only to churches and non-profit organizations until the last quarter of 2004, when it began making loans to for-profit developers. (Id. at ¶ 4.) According to its CEO, "Debtor makes loans to for-profit sponsors if the project provides senior living, affordable housing programs that are similar to those of our non-profit borrowers." (Id.) However, as of February 11, 2008, the day after the Petition Date, Debtor continued to describe itself on its

> Welcome to Cornerstone Ministries Investments (formerly PIF/Cornerstone Ministries Investments). We provide investment opportunities for people who desire to honor God by investing in the growth of churches and other faith-based organizations.
> We have a 17-year tradition of, and commitment to, helping faithful people benefit financially from sound investments in God's work here on earth.

(R-132, Exhibit "A").

By November of 2007, Debtor was experiencing cash shortfalls, resulting in "approximately $8.5 million in real estate loan draw requests which it was unable to fund and $300,000 in bond redemption commitments from October 2007 that it was holding pending receipt of cash." (R-13 at ¶ 6).

B. Debtor's management and transactions with related entities.

Since August of 2004, Debtor has been managed by a separate corporation, eNable Business Solutions, Inc. f/k/a Cornerstone Capital Advisors, Inc. ("EBS"), which also serves as its investment and financial advisor. (R-7, ¶¶ 5 & 6). Prior to the Petition Date, Debtor compensated EBS pursuant to an Advisory Agreement (the "Advisory Agreement") under which the fees paid to EBS were based on Debtor's gross revenues rather than its net earnings or operating income. In its Form 10-QSB filed with U.S. Securities and Exchange Commission for the nine-month period ending September 30, 2007 (the "Form 10-QSB," R-206, Exhibit UST-1),[3] Debtor disclosed that the management and advisory fees payable to EBS under the Advisory Agreement rose from $1,085,332 for the nine months ending September 30, 2006, to $1,239,174 for the same period in 2007, an increase of $153,842, notwithstanding the deterioration of Debtor's financial position during 2007. (Id. at p. 35 of 49). Debtor also disclosed in the Form 10-QSB that it paid shareholder dividends of $517,931 during the nine-month period ending September 30, 2007, although it sustained net operating losses during that period of $417,183. (Id. at p. 8 of 49.)

The Form 10-QSB additionally reveals that a substantial portion of the loans made by Debtor were to related entities. For example:

- In September 2006, two of Debtor's officers and two EBS officers each acquired an 18.75% ownership interest in Wellstone LLC, the Debtor's largest borrower. (Id. at p. 17 of 49).

[3] R-206 is the transcript of the hearing on the Examiner Motion held on June 12, 2008, and Exhibit UST-1 is a copy of the Form 10-QSB printed from the SEC's Internet website, which was introduced into evidence at that hearing without objection. The hyperlink for this document on the SEC website is: http://www.sec.gov/Archives/edgar/data/1035270/000095000507000408/p20254form10q.htm.

- As of September 30, 2007, the outstanding principal on the loans to Wellstone LLC totaled over $76 million. Three of these loans, with outstanding principal totaling $6,574,991, were added after Wellstone LLC became a related party. (Id.).
- Debtor made nine loans totaling over $11 million to wholly-owned subsidiaries of Cornerstone Group Holdings, Inc. ("CGH"), at a time when two of its directors also served as directors of CGH. (Id. at p. 16 of 49).
- In March 2006, Debtor originated a loan to Castleberry Properties, LLC, which is 50% owned by EBS. As of September 30, 2007, the principal amount outstanding on that loan was $932,301. (Id.)

Debtor further disclosed in the Form 10-QSB that in August of 2006 it borrowed $1,589,000 from Wellstone Investment Fund, LLC ("WIF"), which is also managed by EBS. (Id. at p. 17 of 49).

On May 9, 2008, the Committee filed a motion for authorization to conduct examinations of certain entities and individuals pursuant to Fed. R. Bankr. P. 2004 (R-165), in which it represented as follows:

> [D]ocuments that have been publicly filed by the Debtor with the SEC show that the Debtor is part of an intricate web of inter-related entities > that are borrowers from the Debtor, lenders to the Debtor, are in control of or are controlled by the Debtor, or otherwise have business relationships with the Debtor. Many of these inter-related entities are or have been controlled by the same, relatively small, group of individuals and have been advised by common sets of attorneys and accountants. Additionally, publicly available documents show that the Debtor is a party to, or otherwise involved in, a number of complex financing arrangements with what appear to be unrelated third parties.

3. Scope of Requested Investigation.

The United States Trustee seeks the appointment of an examiner in this case to conduct an investigation into and provide a public, transparent and objective report on: 1) the events and circumstances leading to Debtor's shift in late 2004 from making loans only to churches and other non-profit organizations to making loans to for-profit developers, including related entities and/or entities with which it had other business relationships and/or shared common officers or directors; 2) the extent, if any, to which this shift in Debtor's business plan was motivated or influenced by self-dealing on the part of its officers, directors, or professional advisors; and 3) whether and to what extent purchasers of the Investor Bonds were notified of this shift in Debtor's business plan and whether and to what extent they may have claims against broker-dealers or others arising from their purchase and/or retention of the Investor Bonds.

4. The Bankruptcy Court's Ruling.

In its Order, the Bankruptcy Court articulated the following reasons for denying the Examiner Motion:

> Appointment of an examiner is unnecessary at this time and further, same would result in efforts potentially duplicative of the effort of the Official Committee of Holders Unsecured Claims, which is active and well-represented in this case, as well as burdening this estate with added cost and expense. Furthermore, it appears that each and every concern raised by the Trustee, such as corporate interrelationships, alleged self-dealing, issues associated with Debtor' s transition to a lender to for-profit entities, and examining certain bondholder claims are all being fully investigated by the Unsecured Creditors Committee.

(R-195).

SUMMARY OF THE ARGUMENT

Given that the amount of the Debtor's fixed, liquidated, unsecured debts, other than debts for goods, services, or taxes, or owing to insiders, is over 25 times greater than the threshold amount at which the appointment of an examiner becomes mandatory under 11 U.S.C. § 1104(c)(2), the Bankruptcy Court erred as a matter of law in denying the Examiner Motion.

ARGUMENT

I. THE PLAIN LANGUAGE OF 11 U.S.C. § 1104(c)(2) MANDATES THE APPOINTMENT OF AN EXAMINER.

11 U.S.C. § 1104(c) provides as follows:

> If the court does not order the appointment of a trustee under this section, then at any time before confirmation of a plan, on request of a party in interest or the United States trustee, and after notice and a hearing, the court shall order the appointment of an examiner to conduct such an investigation of the debtor as is appropriate, including an investigation of any allegations of fraud, dishonesty, incompetence, misconduct, mismanagement, or irregularity in the management of the affairs of the debtor of or by current or former management of the debtor, if –
> > (1) such appointment is in the interests of creditors, any equity security holders, and other interests of the estate; or
> > (2) the debtor's fixed, liquidated, unsecured debts, other than debts for goods, services, or taxes, or owing to an insider, exceed $5,000,000.

11 U.S.C. § 1104(c).[4]

[4] Some earlier case law refers to this subsection as 1104(b), because it was originally codified in the 1978 Bankruptcy Code as 11 U.S.C. § 1104(b). Subsections (b) and (c) of § 1104 were redesignated as subsections (c) and (d), respectively, by the Bankruptcy Reform Act of 1994, which added a new subsection (b), authorizing trustee elections in Chapter 11 cases. See Bankruptcy Reform Act of 1994, Pub. L. No. 103-394 (enacted October 22, 1994 and effective in cases filed after that date).

On Schedule F-1 of its bankruptcy schedules filed in the case (R-50, Attachment #1), Debtor lists fixed, liquidated unsecured debts to its bondholders totaling $142,864,129. There are several thousand of these scheduled bondholders, only a handful of whom are among the insiders listed at Item 21(b) of the Debtor's Statement of Financial Affairs. (R-50, pp. 24 & 25 of 48). Section 1104(c)(2) plainly and unambiguously mandates that the court "shall" order the appointment of an examiner upon request by a party in interest or the United States trustee where "the debtor's fixed, liquidated, unsecured debts, other than debts for goods, services, or taxes, or owing to an insider, exceed $5,000,000," provided only that no trustee is appointed and no plan has been confirmed. The record clearly establishes that all of these conditions are met in the present case. Indeed, there has been no contention to the contrary by any party.

"Where the word 'shall' appears in a statutory directive, 'Congress could not have chosen stronger words to express its intent that [the specified action] be mandatory....'" Plaut v. Spendthrift Farm, Inc., 1 F.3d 1487, 1490 (6th Cir. 1993), aff'd, 514 U.S. 211, 115 S.Ct. 1447 (1995), quoting from *United States v. (1998) ("the mandatory 'shall' ... normally creates an obligation impervious to judicial discretion") (citing Anderson v. Yungkau, 329 U.S. 482, 485, 67 S.Ct. 428, 430, 91 L.Ed. 436 (1947)); Barbieri v. RAJ Acquisition Corp. (In re Barbieri), 199 F.3d 616, 619 (2d Cir. 1999) ("The term 'shall,' ... generally is mandatory and leaves no room for the exercise of discretion by the trial court") ; Hall Financial Group, Inc. v. DP Partners Ltd. Partnership (In re DP Partners Ltd. Partnership), 106 F.3d 667, 670-671 (5th Cir.), cert. denied, 522 U.S. 815, 118 S.Ct. 63 (1997) ("Use of the word 'shall' connotes a mandatory intent").

Congress' intention to make the appointment of an examiner mandatory where the conditions of section 1104(c)(2) are met is apparent not only from the use of the mandatory "shall" but also from the fact that "[u]nless § 1104([c])(2) requires the appointment of an examiner in such a case, it becomes indistinguishable from § 1104([c])(1)." Morgenstern v. Revco D.S., Inc. (In re Revco D.S., Inc.), 898 F.2d 498, 501 (6th Cir. 1990). "Indeed, if paragraph (c)(2) were not mandatory, then § 1104(c) would have the following meaning: 'If specified debt is less than $5 million, it is in the court's discretion to appoint an examiner; and if specified debt is more than $5 million, it is in the court's discretion to appoint an examiner.'" In re UAL Corp., 307 B.R. 80, 84, fn. 2 (Bankr. N.D. Ill. 2004).

The great majority of cases that have addressed the issue, including the only Court of Appeals decision on point, hold that section 1104(c)(2) is mandatory and must be enforced according to its plain terms. See Morgenstern v. Revco D.S., Inc., supra, 898 F.2d at 500-01 ("The provision plainly means that the bankruptcy court 'shall' order the appointment of an examiner when the total fixed, liquidated, unsecured debt exceeds $5 million, if the U.S. trustee requests one"); In re UAL Corp., supra, 307 B.R. at 84 (best reading of statute is that examiner appointment is mandatory if requirements of section 1104(c)(2) are satisfied, but court retains discretion to determine nature and scope of examiner's investigation). See also In re Mechem Fin. of Ohio, Inc., 92 B.R. 760, 761 (Bankr. N.D. Ohio 1988); In re The Bible Speaks, 74 B.R. 511, 514 (Bankr. D. Mass.1987); In re 1243 20th Street, Inc., 6 B.R. 683, 685 n.3 (Bankr. D.C. 1980); In re Lenihan, 4 B.R. 209, 211 (Bankr. D.R.I. 1980); In re Loral Space & Communications, Ltd., 2004 WL 2979785, *4 (S.D.N.Y. 2004), rev'g 313 B.R. 577 (Bankr. S.D.N.Y. 2004) ("As stated in Collier on Bankruptcy, 'Section 1104(c)(2) does not leave any room for the court to exercise discretion about whether an examiner should be appointed, as long as the $5,000,000 threshold is met and a motion for appointment of an examiner is made by a party in interest,' 7 Collier 1104.03[2][b] at 1104-38.").

The Bankruptcy Court nevertheless concluded that it had such discretion in this case, based on the following three bankruptcy court decisions: In re Rutenberg, 158 B.R. 230, 232 (Bank M.D.F1a.1993), In re GHR Companies, Inc., 43 B .R. 165 (Bankr. D.Mass. 1984), and In re Shelter Resources Corporation, 35 B.R. 304 (Bankr. N.D.Ohio 1983). However, as noted by the court in In re UAL Corp., supra, 307 B.R. at 85, "none of [these three decisions] deal[s] with the problem of giving meaning to paragraph (c)(2)," and "[s]ince [they] all deny appointment of an examiner on the ground that appointment would not be in the interests of the estate, they impermissibly ignore the impact of paragraph (c)(2)'s debt threshold alternative."

The examiner motion at issue in Rutenberg was, as characterized by the bankruptcy court in that case, "truly unique" in that it was filed by an individual debtor. Id., 158 B.R. at 230. It is, of course, nonsensical on its face for a chapter 11 debtor in possession, particularly an individual debtor in possession, to request the appointment of an examiner to investigate himself. In denying the motion, the Rutenberg court concluded that the only reason for the debtor to have brought it was to delay the administration of the Chapter 11 case by abating further proceedings on a plan of reorganization and disclosure statement he had filed. Id., at 233. The court questioned whether, under these circumstances, the debtor could be considered a "party in interest" within the contemplation of the statute with standing to request an examiner. Id. at 232. However, the court also cited In re GHR Companies, Inc., supra, 43 B.R. 165, for the proposition that "the use of the word 'shall' does not always mean that the action is mandatory just as 'may' at times may carry the meaning of 'must.'" Id., 158 B.R. at 232.

In the GHR Companies case, the court concluded, based on an examination of the legislative history of section 1104(c)(2),[5] that the section "was enacted primarily to satisfy the needs and dictates of a public company operating under the protections and laws of Chapter 11," Id., 43 B.R. at 170, and therefore should not be construed as requiring the appointment of an examiner in the case of a privately held debtor with more than $5 million in non-trade debt. Id. at 174-5. The court determined that the statute was a holdover from the provision of Chapter X of the Bankruptcy Act of 1898, as amended by the 1938 Chandler Act, mandating the appointment of a trustee in cases where the debtor's liabilities exceeded $250,000. Because Chapter X was adapted to the reorganization of large companies with publicly traded debt and/or stock, the court concluded that "[i]mplicit from ... the legislative history and the Supreme Court cases, is a finding that public security holders need extra protection ..." Id. at 175. Significantly, however, the GHR Companies court did not conclude from its review of the legislative history that Congress had intended for the statute to mean something other than what it says. Rather, the court stated simply that it had been unable to find anything in its review of the House and Senate bills leading up to the passage of the Bankruptcy Reform Act of 1978[6] that "satisfactorily explains" the provision, Id. at 174, and that it was still "struggling with the meaning of the legislative history because there is no clear expression of why the mandatory examiner section was enacted." Id. at 175.

[5] The court was actually construing former 11 U.S.C. § 151104(b), the language of which was identical to the language of § 1104(b) as it then existed. As indicated supra, at fn. 4, that language is now codified as § 1104(c).

The inability to find a "satisfactory" explanation for a statute's enactment in its legislative history is not, of course, a sufficient reason for refusing to enforce the statute according to its terms. In reaching its initial determination that consideration of the legislative history was appropriate, the GHR Companies court began with the propositions that "the process of interpretation should commence with consideration of the legislative history" and that "[c]ourts may rely upon legislative history to construe a statute in a manner contrary to its plain language when such is necessary to effectuate Congress' intent and understanding of a statute." Id. at 170-71 (citations and internal quotation marks omitted).

[6] The conflicting bills were H.R. 8200, 95th Cong., 1st Sess. § 101 (1977) (reported by the House Judiciary Committee), and S. 2266, 95th Cong., 2nd Sess. § 101 (1978) (reported by the Senate Judiciary Committee).

This theory of statutory construction is diametrically at odds with a consistent line of United States Supreme Court decisions, commencing with United States v. Ron Pair Enterprises, Inc., supra, 489 U.S. 235, 241, 109 S.Ct. 1026, 1030, 103 L.Ed.2d 290 (1989), holding that statutory interpretation begins with the language of the statute itself and, where the language is plain and unambiguous, ends there as well. As reiterated by the Supreme Court in Lamie v. U.S. Trustee, 540 U.S. 526, 534, 124 S.Ct. 1023, 1030 (2004), "[t]he starting point in discerning congressional intent is the existing statutory text, and not the predecessor statutes. ... It is well established that when the statute's language is plain, the sole function of the courts – at least where the disposition required by the text is not absurd – is to enforce it according to its terms." (Citations and internal quotation marks omitted.)[7] [7] See also Zuni Public Schools Dist. No. 89 v. Department of Educ., ___ U.S. ___, 127 S.Ct. 1534, 1543, 167 L.Ed.2d 449, 75 USLW 4198 (2007) ("Under this Court's precedents, if the intent of Congress is clear and unambiguously expressed by the statutory language at issue, that would be the end of our analysis"); Barnhart v. Sigmon Coal Co., Inc., 534 U.S. 438, 450, 122 S.Ct. 941, 950 (2002) ("[t]he inquiry ceases if the statutory language is unambiguous and the statutory scheme is coherent and consistent") (citations and internal quotation marks omitted); Hartford Underwriters Ins. Co. v. Union Planters Bank, N. A., 530 U.S. 1, 6, 120 S.Ct. 1942, 147 L.Ed.2d 1 (2000); Hughes Aircraft Co. v.

Finally, in the third case cited by the Bankruptcy Court in its Order, In re Shelter Resources Corp., supra, the court simply treated the mandatory language of section 1104(c)(2) as discretionary without offering any explanation or analysis supporting such an interpretation, stating merely it was unwilling to "slavishly and blindly follow the so-called mandatory dictates of Section 1104([c])(2)" under the circumstances that existed in the case. Id., 35 B.R. at 305. Those circumstances, as articulated by the Shelter Resources court, were similar to the circumstances articulated by the Bankruptcy Court in denying the Examiner Motion in the present case, i.e., that a creditors committee was in place with the power to conduct such investigations as might be appropriate and that the appointment of an examiner under such circumstances would give rise to a "possibility of duplicated effort" which would not be "in the spirit of economy of administration in the handling of bankruptcy estates." Id.

Quite obviously, a determination by a court that it would decline to grant relief under a statute if the relief were discretionary is not a valid reason to deny the relief where the statute mandates that it be granted. To construe a statute in a manner contrary to its plain wording without benefit of any principle of statutory construction supporting such an interpretation is simply untenable.

II. THE LEGISLATIVE HISTORY OF THE STATUTE NEITHER REQUIRES NOR SUPPORTS AN INTERPRETATION AT ODDS WITH ITS PLAIN MEANING.

Even assuming for the purpose of argument that consideration of the legislative history of § 1104(c)(2) were appropriate, that history is in no way inconsistent with the plain wording of the statutory text. As previously indicated, the court in the GHR Companies case did not conclude from its analysis of the legislative history that Congress intended for the text of § 1104(c)(2) to mean something other than what it says. Rather, the court stated merely that it could find "no clear expression" in the legislative history of why the mandatory examiner provision was enacted. Id., 43 B.R at 175. Other courts have, however, encountered no such difficulty in determining why the provision was enacted.

In In re UAL Corp,. supra, the court held that "[t]o the extent that the language of § 1104(c)(2) could be seen as ambiguous, the subsection's legislative history forcefully indicates that appointment of an examiner was intended to be mandatory in cases exceeding the debt threshold." Id., 307 B.R. at 85. The UAL court summarized the legislative debate that gave rise to the provision as follows:

> [T]he focus of the debate over § 1104 was whether appointment of a trustee should be mandatory for public companies (as it was under > Chapter X of the former Bankruptcy Act), or whether the debtor should remain in possession in all cases unless a trustee was appointed for cause. The enacted language of § 1104 resolved a disagreement between the Senate and the House of Representatives on this question. The compromise rejected mandatory appointment of a trustee, but, as its sponsors explained, it provided for mandatory appointment of an examiner in large cases as an alternative form of protection against corporate mismanagement.

Id. at 86, citing Leonard L. Gumport, The Bankruptcy Examiner, 20 Cal. Bankr.J. 71, 83-95 (1992). Accordingly, the court concluded, "the weight of precedent, the language of § 1104, and the legislative history all indicate that appointment of an examiner is mandatory" under conditions set forth in § 1104(c)(2). Id. The United States Trustee submits that this analysis is entirely correct.

CONCLUSION

Section 1104(c)(2) required the Bankruptcy Court to order the appointment of an examiner in this case because 1) the United States Trustee requested such relief; 2) no trustee has been appointed in the case; 3) no Chapter 11 plan has been confirmed; and 4) the Debtor's $140,000,000 in fixed liquidated, unsecured debt arising from its sale of Investor Bonds to thousands of purchasers is over 25 times greater than the amount at which the appointment of an examiner becomes mandatory under the plain and unambiguous wording of the statute. Accordingly, the United States Trustee respectfully requests this Court to reverse the Order of the Bankruptcy Court denying the Examiner Motion.

The United States Trustee respectfully submits the following response to the arguments advanced by the Debtor and the Official Committee of Unsecured Creditors (the "Committee") in their opposing briefs filed as Appellees in this appeal.

1. Interpreting the statute in accordance with its plain meaning does not lead to an absurd result in this case.

The Appellees contend that, given the Bankruptcy Court's determination that "each and every concern raised by the Trustee ... [was] being fully investigated by the Unsecured Creditors Committee" (R-195, p.1), adherence to the plain meaning of § 1104(c)(2) in this case would lead to an absurd result, because the "appropriate" scope of an examiner's investigation under such circumstances would be "nothing." (Brief of Committee, p. 1; Brief of Debtor, p. 8). Based on the proposition, as set forth in Lamie v. U.S. Trustee, 540 U.S. 526, 534, 124 S. Ct. 1023, 1030 (2004), that a court is not required to adhere to the plain language of a statute where "the disposition required by the text is ... absurd," the Appellees therefore contend that the Bankruptcy Court was correct in declining to follow the language of § 1104(c)(2) in this case. (Brief of Committee, p. 9; Brief of Debtor, p. 11).

Judicial invalidation of a statute on the basis of absurdity is rare, and the Appellees made no such attack on § 1104(c)(2) in the Bankruptcy Court. The standard for such an attack is exceedingly high. As stated by the Eleventh Circuit

Court of Appeals in U.S. v. Nix, 438 F.3d 1284 (11th Cir. 2006), > [t]here is an absurdity exception to the plain meaning rule, but it is a very narrow exception that comes into play only where the result of adhering to the plain meaning rule is not just unwise but is clearly absurd ... and results in an absurdity that is so gross as to shock the general moral or common sense.

Id. at 1286 (Citations and internal quotation marks omitted). This exception to the plain meaning rule of statutory construction, > is rarely applied, because the result produced by the plain meaning canon must be truly absurd before this principle trumps it. Otherwise, clearly expressed legislative decisions would be subject to the policy predilections of judges.

Merritt v. Dillard Paper Co., 120 F.3d 1181, 1185-86 (11th Cir. 1997). See also Sturges v. Crowninshield, 17 U.S. (4 Wheat.) 122, 202-03 (1819) (absurdity must be "so monstrous, that all mankind would, without hesitation, unite in rejecting" it); C.B.S., Inc. v. PrimeTime 24 Joint Venture, 245 F.3d 1217, 1228 (11th Cir. 2001).

The Bankruptcy Court did not find, nor could it have found, that the Committee's as-yet-to-be-completed investigation of the Debtor would be so thorough and far reaching that it would be impossible for anyone else to add anything to it. Rather, the basis for the Court's decision, as articulated in the Order denying the Examiner Motion (the "Order"), was that an investigation by an examiner would be "potentially duplicative of the effort of the Official Committee of Holders [of] Unsecured Claims, which is active and well-represented in this case, as well as burdening this estate with added cost and expense." Id. (Emphasis supplied).[1] While there is no question that an investigation by an examiner would be "potentially duplicative" of the Committee's investigation, the Bankruptcy Court has the ability to minimize that potential by requiring the Committee and the examiner to coordinate their discovery efforts and setting ground rules to avoid undue duplication of effort.

The Appellees cannot seriously contend that it is presumptively absurd to appoint an examiner in any Chapter 11 case with an active creditors' committee. Examiners and creditors' committees serve entirely different roles. A creditors' committee has the power but not the duty under 11 U.S.C. § 1103(c)(2) to "investigate the acts, conduct, assets, liabilities, and financial condition of the debtor," while an examiner's sole function under 11 U.S.C. § 1104(c) is to conduct "such an investigation of the debtor as is appropriate ..." Unlike the creditors' committee, an examiner has no bias, and his or her duties run to all constituencies, including, for example, shareholders as well as creditors.

[1] Appellees emphasize in this regard that the Committee has already moved for and obtained from the Bankruptcy Court authorization to examine numerous entities and individuals related to the Debtor pursuant to Bankruptcy Rule 2004; however, it is noteworthy that the Committee did not file the motion in question (R-165) until after the United States Trustee filed the Examiner Motion (R-132).

> The benefit of appointing an independent examiner is that he or she will act as an objective nonadversarial party who will review the pertinent transactions and documents, thereby allowing the parties to make an informed determination as to their substantive rights. ... In essence, an examiner's report paints a picture, his or her image of what happened in the case, and ends with that expert's opinion of what that story means, in legal terms. The report puts the story on paper and provides a context for debate.

In re Fibermark, 339 B.R. 321, 325 (Bankr. D. Vt. 2006) (citations omitted). An examiner's report can add value in a Chapter 11 case simply by providing an unbiased, public explanation of what caused the debtor to end up in chapter 11.

It is quite clear from the Order that the Bankruptcy Court did not decline to follow § 1104(c)(2) in this case based on a determination that the statute was absurd or that its application would lead to an absurd result. The word "absurd" does not appear in the Order. Rather, the Court declined to enforce the statute because it believed the cost of appointing an examiner in this case would outweigh its benefits, a consideration that the language of the statute plainly excludes.

2. A bankruptcy court may not ignore the mandate of § 1104(c)(2) either by determining that no investigation is appropriate or by delaying indefinitely a ruling on a request for an examiner.

At page 8 of its brief, the Committee argues that in interpreting the provision of § 1104(c) directing that the court "shall order the appointment of an examiner to conduct such an investigation of the debtor as is appropriate," the phrase "as is appropriate" should be read as qualifying the word "shall," with the result that the mandate to appoint an examiner does not arise if the court determines that no investigation of the debtor whatever is appropriate. This tortured construction of the statutory language violates the "last antecedent" rule of statutory construction, "according to which a limiting clause or phrase ... should ordinarily be read as modifying only the noun or phrase that it immediately follows ..." Barnhart v. Thomas, 540 U.S. 20, 26, 124 S. Ct. 376, 381 (2003). See also Jama v. Immigration and Customs Enforcement, 543 U.S. 335, 343, 125 S. Ct. 694, 701 (2005). The phrase "as is appropriate" as used in this provision of the statute clearly modifies the phrase "such an investigation" rather than the phrase "shall order the appointment." Thus, while the statute gives the court the power to limit the scope of an examiner's investigation, it does not authorize the court to direct the appointment of an examiner with no duties whatever.

The Committee additionally argues at page 8 of its brief that by denying the Examiner Motion "without prejudice to the Trustee['s right] to seek similar relief as appropriate at a later date," (R-195, p.2), the Bankruptcy Court "[f]unctionally ... simply deferred the issue of the appointment of an examiner and the scope of that examination to another day."[2] While the Committee seems to imply that the Bankruptcy Court could avoid the mandate of the statute by the expedient of declining indefinitely to rule on the Examiner Motion,[3] it cites no authority for such a proposition, and the United States Trustee submits that none exists. In any event, it is clear from the unambiguous language of the Order that the Bankruptcy Court denied the Examiner Motion outright rather than deferring a ruling on it to another day.

CONCLUSION

For the foregoing reasons and the reasons set forth in his previous Brief as Appellant, the United States Trustee contends that the arguments of the Appellees are without merit and respectfully reiterates his request that this Court reverse the Order of the Bankruptcy Court denying the Examiner Motion.

[2] To the extent this argument goes to the finality of the Order, it conflicts with the Committee's statement at page 1 of its Brief that it "does not dispute the Court's jurisdiction over this appeal or the Appellant's statement thereof."

[3] Even a finite delay by the bankruptcy court in ordering the appointment of an examiner could result in loss of its ability to grant such relief, because, as noted by the Debtor at page 17 of its brief, such an order is required by § 1104(c)(2) to be entered prior to confirmation of a plan.

BRIEF FOR THE APPELLEE

STATEMENT OF JURISDICTION

The bankruptcy court had jurisdiction under 28 U.S.C. §§ 157(a) and (b) to hear the underlying case, a voluntary petition under Chapter 7 of the Bankruptcy Code, 11 U.S.C. §§ 701, et seq. See also 28 U.S.C. §§ 151, 1334(a). On November 5, 2004, the bankruptcy court denied the United States Trustee's motion to dismiss the bankruptcy case under 11 U.S.C. § 707(b) for substantial abuse. Record on Appeal ("R."), Volume ("Vol.") 3, at 78-88; Record Excerpts ("Rec. Ex."), Tab 2, at 1-11. The bankruptcy court's decision constituted a final and immediately appealable order. See In re Koch, 109 F.3d 1285, 1287 (8th Cir. 1997); In re Christian, 804 F.2d 46, 47-48 (3d Cir. 1986).

On November 15, 2004, the United States Trustee filed a timely notice of appeal from that order to the district court. See R., Vol. 2, at 1; Fed. R. Bankr. P. 8002(a). The district court had jurisdiction to hear the appeal under 28 U.S.C. § 158(a). On March 9, 2005, the district court reversed. See Rec. Ex., Tab 4, at 1-7. The debtors Carlos Vicente Cortez and Suzanne Hallman Cortez subsequently filed a timely notice of appeal to this Court on April 7, 2005. This Court has jurisdiction to hear the appeal under 28 U.S.C. § 158(d).

STATEMENT OF THE ISSUES

1. Whether a bankruptcy court, in ruling on a motion to dismiss a Chapter 7 bankruptcy case for "substantial abuse," should take into account post-petition events, such as a significant increase in a debtor's income level.

2. Whether the district court properly concluded, based on the record presented to that court, that the debtors' bankruptcy case should be dismissed or, at the debtors' option, converted to a Chapter 13 proceeding.

STATEMENT OF THE CASE

On April 8, 2004, Carlos Vicente Cortez and Suzanne Hallman Cortez ("Mr. and Mrs. Cortez" or "debtors") jointly filed for bankruptcy protection under Chapter 7 of the Bankruptcy Code. Four days later, Mr. Cortez was offered a job with an annual salary of $95,000.

The United States Trustee filed a motion to dismiss the case under 11 U.S.C. § 707(b), asserting that it would be a "substantial abuse" of Chapter 7 to grant the debtors a discharge, when Mr. Cortez's new job would allow the debtors to repay a considerable portion of their outstanding debts. The bankruptcy court denied the United States Trustee's motion, concluding that it could not consider the post-petition change in the debtors' financial circumstances.

The district court reversed, concluding that, under 11 U.S.C. § 707(b), the bankruptcy court should consider such post-petition changes in a debtor's income level. The court further found that the bankruptcy court should have granted the United States Trustee's motion to dismiss. The court then remanded the case to the bankruptcy court, directing that the case be dismissed or, at the debtors' option, converted to a Chapter 13 proceeding. The debtors appealed.

STATEMENT OF FACTS

I. Statutory and Regulatory Background

A. Bankruptcy Protection for Individual Debtors

1. An individual who seeks to discharge his past debts may file a petition under Chapter 7 of the Bankruptcy Code. See 11

U.S.C. §§ 701, et seq. The debtor's assets are then transferred to a new legal entity: the "bankruptcy estate." See 11 U.S.C. § 541(a). A trustee is appointed to help with the administration and liquidation of the estate. See 11 U.S.C. §§ 701, 702, 704.

The Chapter 7 trustee sells the debtor's assets and distributes the proceeds to creditors who have filed claims against the estate. See 11 U.S.C. § 704(1). At the end of this process, the bankruptcy court issues an order, discharging most of the debtor's prior financial obligations. See 11 U.S.C. § 727.

2. An individual, under certain circumstances, may instead seek protection under Chapter 13 of the Bankruptcy Code. See 11 U.S.C. § 109(e) (an individual may file a Chapter 13 petition if he has a "regular income" and his debts do not exceed certain established sums).

"Chapter 13 . . . is a kind of 'personal reorganization' counterpart to the better-known Chapter 11[.]" In re Heath, 115 F.3d 521, 522 (7th Cir. 1997). Under Chapter 13, a debtor does not liquidate his existing assets in order to pay creditors. See In re Bartee, 212 F.3d 277, 284 (5th Cir. 2000). Instead, the debtor establishes a plan for paying a portion of his outstanding debts out of his future income. See Grubbs v. Houston First American Savings Association, 730 F.2d 236, 239 (5th Cir. 1984).

A Chapter 13 payment plan may last between three and five years. See 11 U.S.C. § 1322(d). At the end of that time period, the Chapter 13 debtor can generally discharge "all debts provided for by the plan[.]" 11 U.S.C. § 1328(a).

B. Dismissing a Chapter 7 Case For Substantial Abuse

1. Prior to 1984, a bankruptcy court could dismiss a Chapter 7 bankruptcy case only for "cause." See Bankruptcy Reform Act of 1978, Pub. L. No. 95-598, § 707 (codified at 11 U.S.C. § 707); S. Rep. No. 95-989, at 94 (1978); H.R. Rep. No. 95-595, at 380 (1977). A bankruptcy court had "cause" to dismiss a case if, for example, the debtor had unreasonably delayed the proceedings in a manner that prejudiced his creditors. See Pub. L. No. 95-598, § 707(1) (codified at 11 U.S.C. § 707).

Congress did not, however, intend for a bankruptcy court to dismiss a case for "cause" simply because a debtor could repay a portion of his past debts. See S. Rep. No. 95-989, at 94 ("The section does not contemplate . . . that the ability of the debtor to repay his debts in whole or in part constitutes adequate cause for dismissal."); H.R. Rep. No. 95-595, at 380 (same).

2. In the early 1980s, Congress became concerned about a "dramatic[]" rise in the number of consumer bankruptcy cases, and, as a result, amended many provisions of the Bankruptcy Code pertaining to consumer bankruptcies. See Bankruptcy Amendments and Federal Judgeship Act of 1984, Pub. L. No. 98-353 (1984); S. Rep. No. 98-65, at 3 (1983).

As part of these reforms, Congress expanded bankruptcy courts' authority to dismiss Chapter 7 consumer bankruptcy cases. See Pub. L. No. 98-353, § 312 (codified at 11 U.S.C. § 707(b)); S. Rep. No. 98-65, at 53. Congress sought to ensure that bankruptcy courts would have the authority to dismiss bankruptcy cases in which debtors could repay a substantial portion of their debts. See S. Rep. No. 98-65, at 53-54; In re Kornfield, 164 F.3d 778, 781 (2d Cir. 1999) (Congress was "[c]oncerned that debtors who could over time easily pay their creditors might resort to Chapter 7 to erase their legitimate obligations"); In re Stewart, 175 F.3d 796, 812-13 (10th Cir. 1999); In re Lamanna, 153 F.3d 1, 3 n.6 (1st Cir. 1998).

Accordingly, Congress enacted 11 U.S.C. § 707(b), which provides:

> After notice and a hearing, the court, on its own motion or on a motion by the United States trustee, but not at the request or suggestion of any party in interest, may dismiss a case filed by an individual debtor under this chapter whose debts are primarily consumer debts if it finds that the granting of relief would be a substantial abuse of the provisions of this chapter. There shall be a presumption in favor of granting the relief requested by the debtor.

11 U.S.C. § 707(b). The provision also states that, in determining whether to dismiss a case for "substantial abuse," a bankruptcy court "may not take into consideration whether a debtor has made, or continues to make, charitable contributions[.]" Ibid.[1]

Thus, under 11 U.S.C. § 707(b), a bankruptcy court may, upon motion by the United States Trustee,[2] dismiss a consumer bankruptcy proceeding, if the court concludes that granting relief to the debtor would constitute a "substantial abuse" of Chapter 7 of the Bankruptcy Code. 11 U.S.C. § 707(b).

II. The Present Litigation

A. The Bankruptcy Proceedings

1. On April 8, 2004, Carlos Vicente Cortez and Suzanne Hallman Cortez jointly filed a voluntary petition for bankruptcy under Chapter 7. See R., Vol. 3, at 47, 72. In the years preceding the bankruptcy filing, the debtors had an annual income of over $140,000, most of which came from Mr. Cortez's annual salary. See R., Vol. 3, at 40 (in 2002 and 2003, Mr. Cortez earned over $120,000 and Mrs. Cortez earned approximately $20,000). During that period, the debtors accumulated over $85,000 in unsecured debt, the bulk of which was credit card debt. See R., Vol. 3, at 31-32.

[1] Congress, via the Bankruptcy Abuse Prevention and Consumer Protection Act of 2005, recently amended 11 U.S.C. § 707(b) in a number of respects. See Pub. L. No. 109-8, § 102(a)(2). The amendments will apply to bankruptcies that are filed on or after October 17, 2005. See id. § 1501. The revised statute does not, however, address the issue presented by this case: whether a bankruptcy court should consider post-petition events in evaluating a motion to dismiss under 11 U.S.C. § 707(b).

[2] United States Trustees are Justice Department officials appointed by the Attorney General to supervise the administration of bankruptcy cases. See 28 U.S.C. §§ 581-89; In re Columbia Gas Systems, Inc., 33 F.3d 294, 296 (3d Cir. 1994) (noting that United States Trustees oversee the bankruptcy process and ensure that bankruptcy cases are conducted according to law) (citing H.R. Rep. No. 99-764, at 24 (1986)).

When the debtors filed their bankruptcy petition in April 2004, Mr. Cortez was unemployed. See R., Vol. 3, at 35, 79. Mrs. Cortez worked as a registered nurse, earning a net monthly salary of $4,147.52. See R., Vol. 3, at 35. At that time, the debtors' monthly expenses exceeded their monthly income by approximately $1,200. See R., Vol. 3, at 35-36 (the debtors, at the time the bankruptcy petition was filed, earned $4,147.52 per month and spent $5,320.91 per month).

The debtors disclosed on their bankruptcy petition that Mr. Cortez expected to be employed later that month. See R., Vol. 3, at 35 ("[Mr. Cortez] believes he will be employed this month, but he has not started working yet"). And, four days after the debtors filed their Chapter 7 bankruptcy petition, Mr. Cortez was offered a job to serve as the Human Resources Director for a healthcare management company. See R., Vol. 3, at 72, 74-76. Mr. Cortez accepted the position and began work on April 26, 2004 – eighteen days after filing the bankruptcy petition. See R., Vol. 3, at 72.

In his new job, Mr. Cortez received an annual salary of $95,000 (a net monthly income of $5,896). See R., Vol. 3, at 72. In addition, after he had worked at the company for 60 days, Mr. Cortez received a $5,000 bonus. Ibid. He was also eligible to use a company car. Ibid.

After Mr. Cortez obtained this new job, Mrs. Cortez reduced the amount of hours that she worked as a nurse, and thereby reduced her net monthly income from $4,147.52 to $750. R., Vol. 3, at 72. The debtors' total net monthly income was then $6,646. See R., Vol. 3, at 73.

Mr. Cortez's new position substantially changed the debtors' financial position. Even after Mrs. Cortez reduced her working hours, the debtors' net monthly income ($6,646) was greater than their monthly expenses ($5,320.91). See R., Vol. 3, at 36, 73. The debtors' income exceeded their expenses by $1,325 per month. See R., Vol. 3, at 73.

2. On July 9, 2004, the United States Trustee filed a motion under 11 U.S.C. § 707(b) to dismiss the Chapter 7 bankruptcy case. See R., Vol. 3, at 54-55. The United States Trustee asserted that it would be a substantial abuse of Chapter 7 to allow the debtors to discharge their outstanding debts, when they "appear[ed] to have the means to repay a substantial portion of [those] debts through a Chapter 13 plan." R., Vol. 3, at 55.

B. The Bankruptcy Court's Decision

The bankruptcy court denied the motion to dismiss under 11 U.S.C. § 707(b). See R., Vol. 3, at 88; Rec. Ex., Tab 2, at 11.

The bankruptcy court stated that, if a debtor was "able to pay a significant amount to creditors out of the debtor's future income," that fact could be sufficient to justify dismissing the debtor's case for substantial abuse under 11 U.S.C. § 707(b). See R., Vol. 3, at 80-81; Rec. Ex., Tab 2, at 3-4. The court further determined that, after Mr. Cortez obtained a job with a $95,000 annual salary, the debtors "could make meaningful payments to creditors" out of that future income through a Chapter 13 reorganization plan. See R., Vol. 3, at 81; Rec. Ex., Tab 2, at 4.

The court nevertheless, in ruling on the United States Trustee's motion, declined to take into account the debtors' post-petition increase in income. See R., Vol. 3, at 82; Rec. Ex., Tab 2, at 5. The court held that, in determining whether to dismiss a case for "substantial abuse" under 11 U.S.C. § 707(b), "post-petition events" should generally "not be considered[.]" Ibid.[3]

[3] The bankruptcy court crafted one exception to this general rule. The court stated that it would consider post-petition events if those events were "clearly in prospect" at the time the petition was filed. See R., Vol. 3, at 85-86; Rec. Ex., Tab 2, at 8-9. For example, the court explained, if Mr. Cortez had received the offer of employment prior to filing for bankruptcy,

The bankruptcy court's decision depended in large part on its interpretation of the term "relief" in 11 U.S.C. § 707(b). As the court observed, the provision authorizes a bankruptcy court to "dismiss a case . . . if it finds that the granting of relief would be a substantial abuse of the provisions of this chapter." 11 U.S.C. § 707(b); see R., Vol. 3, at 80; Rec. Ex., Tab 2, at 3. The bankruptcy court found that the "relief" contemplated by 11 U.S.C. § 707(b) constituted the benefits that a debtor obtains when he files a bankruptcy petition, such as the automatic stay of all debt obligations. See R., Vol. 3, at 82-83; Rec. Ex., Tab 2, at 5-6; see also 11 U.S.C. § 362 ("a [bankruptcy] petition . . . operates as a stay" that prevents creditors from collecting on outstanding debts).

Based on this interpretation of the term relief, the bankruptcy court concluded that, in ruling on the United States Trustee's motion, the court could take into account "only [] those circumstances actually existing" at the time the debtors filed their bankruptcy petition. See R., Vol. 3, at 88; Rec. Ex., Tab 2, at 11. The court found that, because the debtors at that time "did not have the ability to make significant payments

"it would be proper to consider" his $95,000 annual salary. See R., Vol. 3, at 86; Rec. Ex., Tab 2, at 9. However, because, at the time the petition was filed, Mr. Cortez merely "belie[ved]" that he would soon be employed, his employment was "not clearly in prospect," and thus should not be considered. See R., Vol. 3, at 87-88; Rec. Ex., Tab 2, at 10-11.

to creditors," the "granting of the relief requested by [the debtors] is not a substantial abuse of the Code." Ibid.

C. The District Court's Decision

The district court reversed the bankruptcy court's decision, concluding that, in ruling on a motion to dismiss under 11 U.S.C. § 707(b), a bankruptcy court should consider post-petition events. See Rec. Ex., Tab 4, at 1, 5-6.

The district court agreed with the bankruptcy court that a debtor's "ability to make significant payments to creditors from future income" could justify the dismissal of a case under 11 U.S.C. § 707(b). Rec. Ex., Tab 4, at 5. But, in contrast to the bankruptcy court, the district court found that, in determining whether a debtor could make those future payments, a court should take into account post-petition events that affected the debtor's "future income" level. See id. at 5-6.

The district court determined, based on the record in the case, that the debtors would have sufficient future income to "repay a significant portion of their debt[.]" See Rec. Ex., Tab 4, at 5. Accordingly, the district court held that the bankruptcy court should have granted the United States Trustee's motion to dismiss under 11 U.S.C. § 707(b). See Rec. Ex., Tab 4, at 5-6.

The district court thus reversed the bankruptcy court's decision, and remanded the case to that court. See Rec. Ex., Tab

4, at 6-7. The district court directed the bankruptcy court on remand to give the debtors ten days to voluntarily convert their case to a Chapter 13 proceeding and, if they failed to do so, to dismiss the bankruptcy case. See id. at 7.

The debtors subsequently filed the present appeal.[4]

STANDARD OF REVIEW

This appeal involves questions of law that this Court reviews de novo. See In re Ramba, Inc., 416 F.3d 394, 398 (5th Cir. 2005).

SUMMARY OF ARGUMENT

I. Section 707(b) of the Bankruptcy Code authorizes a bankruptcy court to dismiss a Chapter 7 consumer bankruptcy case if the court "finds that the granting of relief would be a substantial abuse of" Chapter 7. 11 U.S.C. § 707(b). The provision thus requires bankruptcy courts to evaluate whether it would be appropriate to grant a debtor the relief offered by Chapter 7: a discharge of his past debts. As courts of appeals have repeatedly concluded, in order to make that determination, a bankruptcy court must consider whether the debtor will have sufficient future income to repay his past debts. Plainly, that inquiry mandates that a bankruptcy court consider post-petition events that affect a debtor's future income level.

[4] The district court's remand order was a final decision for the purposes of appeal, because it did not require the bankruptcy court to conduct significant further proceedings, but instead directed it to perform purely ministerial functions (to allow the debtors to convert the case to a Chapter 13 proceeding and, if they failed to do so, to dismiss the case). See In re Caddo Parish-Villas South, Ltd., 174 F.3d 624, 627-28 (5th Cir. 1999); see also Koch, 109 F.3d at 1287-88.

Accordingly, as the district court here found, the bankruptcy court, in ruling on the United States Trustee's Section 707(b) motion to dismiss, should have taken into account the significant post-petition change in the debtors' financial circumstances. As the record here reveals, just four days after debtors Carlos Vicente Cortez and Suzanne Hallman Cortez filed their Chapter 7 petition, Mr. Cortez was offered a job with a $95,000 annual salary. As the bankruptcy court found – and the debtors never disputed – this post-petition change in the debtors' income would enable them to repay a considerable portion of their past debts. Such facts are plainly relevant to determining whether it would be appropriate to grant the debtors a Chapter 7 discharge.

The debtors offer no basis for freezing the inquiry under 11 U.S.C. § 707(b) at the date that the bankruptcy petition was filed. The debtors do not even attempt to defend the bankruptcy court's erroneous conclusion that the term "relief" in 11 U.S.C. § 707(b) required the court to focus on pre-petition events. Nor do the debtors provide any alternative rationale for the court's decision. The debtors cannot overcome the overwhelming appellate court precedent supporting the United States Trustee's position by pointing to isolated statements in a few bankruptcy court decisions. And the debtors' attempt to rely on recent amendments to the Bankruptcy Code (which do not apply to this case) is utterly without merit.

II. Both the district court and the bankruptcy court here found that, if they took into account the debtors' post-petition increase in income, the record in this case would be sufficient to justify granting the United States Trustee's motion to dismiss under 11 U.S.C. § 707(b). Accordingly, once the district court corrected the bankruptcy court's legal error, the district court reasonably directed the bankruptcy court to grant the motion, and further instructed that the case be dismissed or, at the debtors' option, converted to a Chapter 13 proceeding. The record before the district court plainly justified the court's disposition of this case. The debtors cannot now undermine the district court's correct determination by pointing to facts that were never presented to that court.

ARGUMENT

I. A Bankruptcy Court Should Consider Post-Petition Events In Evaluating A Motion To Dismiss A Case Under 11 U.S.C. § 707(b) For "Substantial Abuse."

A bankruptcy court, in determining whether to dismiss a Chapter 7 consumer bankruptcy case for "substantial abuse," should plainly take into account post-petition events, including any changes in a debtor's financial circumstances.

A. A Bankruptcy Court Must Consider Post-Petition Events In Determining Whether a Debtor Could Repay a Substantial Portion of His Debts Out of "Future Income."

Section 707(b) of the Bankruptcy Code authorizes a bankruptcy court to dismiss a Chapter 7 case that involves "primarily consumer debts," if the court "finds that the granting of relief would be a substantial abuse of the provisions of this chapter." 11 U.S.C. § 707(b).[5] A debtor obtains "relief" under Chapter 7 when his past debts are discharged. See In re Bruner, 55 F.3d 195, 197 (5th Cir. 1995) ("When a Chapter 7 debtor obtains bankruptcy relief, the general rule is that all debts arising prior to the filing of the bankruptcy petition will be discharged.") (citing 11 U.S.C. § 727(b)); In re Ichinose, 946 F.2d 1169, 1172 (5th Cir. 1991) ("The purpose of Chapter Seven of the Bankruptcy Code is to give individual debtors a 'fresh start,' and the heart of this goal is embodied in § 727's discharge provisions."). Accordingly, the issue under 11 U.S.C. § 707(b) is whether it would constitute a "substantial abuse" of Chapter 7 to discharge an individual's outstanding debts.

Courts of appeals have consistently held that, in determining whether it would be a "substantial abuse" of Chapter 7 to grant a debtor such a discharge, bankruptcy courts must consider whether the debtor could repay a substantial portion of his past debts. See In re Behlke, 358 F.3d 429, 434, 437 (6th Cir. 2004); In re Price, 353 F.3d 1135, 1140 (9th Cir. 2004); In re Stewart, 175 F.3d 796, 809 (10th Cir. 1999); In re Kornfield, 164 F.3d 778, 781, 784 (2d Cir. 1999); In re Lamanna, 153 F.3d 1, 4 (1st Cir. 1998); Fonder v. United States, 974 F.2d 996, 999 (8th Cir. 1992).[6]

Significantly, in determining whether a debtor could repay those prior debts, bankruptcy courts may not freeze the inquiry at the time the debtor filed his bankruptcy petition. Instead, bankruptcy courts must examine whether the debtor could repay his debts out of future income. See Behlke, 358 F.3d at 434 (in ruling on a Section 707(b) motion to dismiss, bankruptcy courts should consider a "debtor's 'ability to repay his debts out of future earnings'") (quoting Krohn, 886 F.2d at 126); Kornfield, 164 F.3d at 781, 784 (bankruptcy courts should take into account the "ability of the debtor to repay debts out of future income"); Lamanna, 153 F.3d at 4 ("courts should regard the debtor's ability to repay out of future disposable income as the primary . . . factor of 'substantial abuse'"); Fonder, 974 F.2d at 999

[6] Indeed, a few courts of appeals have concluded that a debtor's ability to repay his debts is alone sufficient to justify dismissal for substantial abuse. See Price, 353 F.3d at 1140; In re Krohn, 886 F.2d 123, 126 (6th Cir. 1989).

(the "essential inquiry" is whether the debtor can "repay creditors with future income").[7]

In determining whether a debtor will have sufficient "future income" to repay a portion of his past debts, a bankruptcy court must necessarily consider any post-petition circumstances that affect the debtor's "future income" level. Accordingly, as the district court held, the bankruptcy court here erred in refusing to take into account such post-petition events.

B. The Consideration of Post-Petition Events Promotes Equity and Fairness In the Bankruptcy Process.

Section 707(b) was enacted in large part to promote "fairness to creditors . . . by 'stemming the use of Chapter 7 relief by unneedy debtors'" who could in fact repay a substantial portion of their debts. In re Koch, 109 F.3d 1285, 1288 (8th Cir. 1997) (quoting In re Walton, 866 F.2d 981, 983 (8th Cir. 1989)); see Stewart, 175 F.3d at 812-13. Accordingly, in keeping with the equitable purposes behind the provision, bankruptcy courts must take into account post-petition events that allow debtors to repay their debts.

[7] And, as the Tenth Circuit has found, in determining whether a debtor could repay his debts out of future income, bankruptcy courts may look not only to a debtor's actual earnings, but also to his future earning potential. See Stewart, 175 F.3d at 809-10 (affirming the bankruptcy court's dismissal of a Chapter 7 case filed by a debtor physician, in part because of the physician's substantial "earning potential").

The record in this case illustrates the importance of considering such post-petition circumstances. Just four days after debtors Carlos Vicente Cortez and Suzanne Hallman Cortez filed their Chapter 7 bankruptcy petition, Mr. Cortez was offered a job with an annual salary of $95,000. See R., Vol. 3, at 72, 74. As the bankruptcy court here recognized, this "future income" would enable the debtors to "make meaningful payments to creditors[.]" See R., Vol. 3, at 81; Rec. Ex., Tab 2, at 4. This post-petition turn of events is plainly relevant to determining whether it would be appropriate to discharge the debtors' prior financial obligations. The bankruptcy court therefore erred in adopting a legal rule that precluded it from considering such facts.

Indeed, the bankruptcy court's approach would permit a debtor, who receives a windfall just after filing his bankruptcy petition, to nevertheless escape his prior financial obligations. For example, in one recent bankruptcy case, a debtor – just one month after filing his bankruptcy petition – won the lottery, and suddenly had $60 million with which to pay his prior debts. See In re Juan Rodriguez, Case No. 04-24790 (Bankr. E.D.N.Y.), Doc. Nos. 6,7. Under the bankruptcy court's approach, because this windfall occurred "post-petition," the court could not dismiss the lottery winner's bankruptcy case under 11 U.S.C. § 707(b). Such a result has no basis in law or logic.

Significantly, if a court dismisses a case under 11 U.S.C. § 707(b), that decision does not preclude the debtor from later seeking relief under Chapter 7. Thus, if a debtor loses his job, or suffers other additional financial setbacks, the debtor may file a new bankruptcy petition, seeking to discharge his debts. See 11 U.S.C. § 349(a) ("dismissal of a case" does not "prejudice the debtor with regard to the filing of a subsequent petition"); In re Hall, 304 F.3d 743, 746 (7th Cir. 2002).

C. The Debtors' Statutory Analysis Is Without Merit.

The debtors provide this Court with no basis for rejecting the district court's conclusion that a bankruptcy court, in ruling on a motion to dismiss under 11 U.S.C. § 707(b), should take into account post-petition events, including facts that affect a debtor's ability to repay debts out of future income.

1. Notably, the debtors do not ask this Court to adopt the bankruptcy court's erroneous statutory analysis. The bankruptcy court's decision depended in large part on its interpretation of the term "relief" in 11 U.S.C. § 707(b). See R., Vol. 3, at 82; Rec. Ex., Tab 2, at 5. The provision states that a bankruptcy court "may dismiss a case . . . if it finds that the granting of relief would be a substantial abuse of the provisions of this chapter." 11 U.S.C. § 707(b). The bankruptcy court found that the "relief" contemplated by 11 U.S.C. § 707(b) constituted the benefits that a debtor obtains as soon as he files a bankruptcy petition, such as the automatic stay of all debt obligations. See R., Vol. 3, at 82-83; Rec. Ex., Tab 2, at 5-6; see also 11 U.S.C. § 362 ("a [bankruptcy] petition . . . operates as a stay" that prevents creditors from collecting on outstanding debts). Based on this interpretation of "relief," the bankruptcy court concluded that, in ruling on the United States Trustee's motion to dismiss, it had to focus on the facts existing when the debtors filed their petition and obtained such immediate "relief." See R., Vol. 3, at 82; Rec. Ex., Tab 2, at 5.

But, plainly, Section 707(b) is not focused on the benefits that a debtor receives upon filing a bankruptcy petition. Instead, the provision is directed at the ultimate relief offered exclusively by Chapter 7 of the Bankruptcy Code: the discharge of a debtor's past financial obligations. See 11 U.S.C. § 707(b) (the court must decide whether the "granting of relief would be a substantial abuse of the provisions of this chapter") (emphasis added); Bruner, 55 F.3d at 197 ("a Chapter 7 debtor obtains bankruptcy relief" when his debts are discharged). The bankruptcy court's determination that it could not consider post-petition events was therefore based on a fundamental misinterpretation of the statute.

2. The debtors make no attempt to defend the bankruptcy court's erroneous analysis. Nor do the debtors provide any alternative rationale to support the bankruptcy court's decision.

The debtors assert (Open. Br. 12-13, 17) that, because many aspects of a bankruptcy proceeding are determined as of the date the petition was filed, a motion to dismiss for substantial abuse should also be based on the facts existing at that time. The debtors do not even attempt to reconcile this assertion with courts of appeals' repeated statements that, in evaluating a Section 707(b) motion to dismiss, bankruptcy courts must consider a "debtor's 'ability to repay his debts out of future earnings.'" E.g., Behlke, 358 F.3d at 434 (quoting Krohn, 886 F.2d at 126) (emphasis added). As discussed, this inquiry clearly requires a bankruptcy court to consider any post-petition events that affect a debtor's expected future income.

The debtors do not attempt to grapple with this appellate court authority. Instead, the debtors point to a few bankruptcy court decisions, in which the courts stated that, in ruling on a motion to dismiss under 11 U.S.C. § 707(b), they would focus on the facts that existed at the time the bankruptcy petition was filed. See In re Pier, 310 B.R. 347, 354 (Bankr. N.D. Ohio 2004); In re Penny, 297 B.R. 737, 739 (Bankr. C.D. Ill. 2003); In re Mack, 2004 WL 856425 at *1 (Bankr. C.D. Ill. 2004).[8] These isolated statements in bankruptcy court rulings clearly cannot

[8] Contrary to the debtors' contention (Open. Br. at 15-16), there is no suggestion in any of those cases that the United States Trustee urged those bankruptcy courts to adopt a rule precluding the consideration of post-petition events.

overcome the overwhelming line of appellate court authority supporting the United States Trustee's position.[9]

And, in any event, as the district court found, those cases are clearly distinguishable from the Cortez' situation. See Rec. Ex., Tab 4, at 5-6. In each case, the relevant debtor did not qualify for a Chapter 7 discharge at the time he filed his bankruptcy petition, but later (post-petition) suffered an "unforeseen" financial setback that might have made him eligible for such relief. See Pier, 310 B.R. at 353-55; Penny, 297 B.R. at 739-41; Mack, 2004 WL 856425 at *1. As the district court here recognized, those cases merely underscore that it is inappropriate for a debtor to file a Chapter 7 petition, and seek to take advantage of that Chapter's discharge provisions, at a time when he can repay his debts. See Rec. Ex., Tab 4, at 5. In such a situation, a bankruptcy court may conclude (as the courts did in Pier, Penny, and Mack) that it would be a "substantial abuse" of Chapter 7 to grant a discharge to such a debtor. See ibid. ("a later change in circumstances will not necessarily save a bankruptcy whose original filing was a substantial abuse of the provisions of Chapter 7").

The debtors' reliance (Open. Br. 18-20) on the recent amendments to the Bankruptcy Code is completely misplaced.

[9] Two of those decisions (Penny and Mack) were authored by the same bankruptcy court judge. See Mack, 2004 WL 856425 at *1.

Congress, via the Bankruptcy Abuse Prevention and Consumer Protection Act of 2005, which will apply to bankruptcies filed on or after October 17, 2005, expanded bankruptcy courts' authority to dismiss consumer bankruptcies. See H.R. Rep. No. 109-31(I), at 11-15 (2005); see also id. at 2 ("the proposed reforms respond to many of the factors contributing to the increase in consumer bankruptcy filings, such as lack of personal financial accountability"). For example, Congress amended 11 U.S.C. § 707(b) to provide that a bankruptcy court may dismiss a Chapter 7 consumer bankruptcy case when granting a discharge would constitute "an abuse" (rather than a "substantial abuse") of that Chapter. See Pub. L. No. 109-8, § 102(a)(2) (2005).

The revised Code does not answer the question raised by this case: whether a bankruptcy court should consider post-petition events in ruling on a motion to dismiss under 11 U.S.C. § 707(b). But, clearly, the revised Code – which was designed in large part to reduce the number of Chapter 7 consumer bankruptcies – does not suggest that a bankruptcy court lacks the authority to dismiss a case for "abuse" or "substantial abuse," when a debtor, four days after filing for bankruptcy, obtains a $95,000-per-year job that enables him to repay a substantial portion of his debts.

II. The District Court Properly Directed That This Bankruptcy Case Be Dismissed Or, At The Debtors' Option, Converted To A Chapter 13 Proceeding.

The district court here directed the bankruptcy court to give the debtors ten days to voluntarily convert their case to a Chapter 13 proceeding and, if they failed to do so, to dismiss the bankruptcy case. See Rec. Ex., Tab 4, at 6-7. This Court reviews that determination by examining the record presented to the district court. See, e.g., Freeman v. City of Dallas, 186 F.3d 601, 610 (5th Cir. 1999) ("Our review encompasses only the record on which the district court based its ruling."). And, based on that record, the district court's disposition of this case was clearly appropriate.

Both the district court and the bankruptcy court here determined that, if a debtor could "pay a significant amount to creditors out of the debtor's future income," that fact was sufficient to justify the dismissal of a case under 11 U.S.C. § 707(b). See R., Vol. 3, at 80-81; Rec. Ex., Tab 2, at 3-4 (bankruptcy court decision); Rec. Ex., Tab 4, at 5 (district court decision). Both courts also agreed that, after Mr. Cortez obtained a job with a $95,000 annual salary, the debtors "could make meaningful payments to creditors" through a Chapter 13 reorganization plan. See R., Vol. 3, at 81; Rec. Ex., Tab 2, at 4 (bankruptcy court decision); Rec. Ex., Tab 4, at 5 (district court decision). The debtors have never challenged these findings.[10]

Based on this record, the district court reasonably concluded that, once the bankruptcy court took into account the debtors' post-petition increase in income, the bankruptcy court would have to grant the United States Trustee's motion to dismiss under 11 U.S.C. § 707(b). Accordingly, it was unnecessary to remand to the bankruptcy court for further proceedings. The district court could instead direct that the case be dismissed or, at the debtors' option, converted to a Chapter 13 proceeding. See In re Zedda, 103 F.3d 1195, 1205 (5th Cir. 1997) (when a "conclusion follows as a matter of law from the undisputed documents and testimony," a "remand for further finding [is] unnecessary").

The debtors do not challenge the district court's conclusion that, based on the record presented to it, the debtors' case should be dismissed under 11 U.S.C. § 707(b). Instead, the debtors object to the district court's disposition of the case (Open. Br. 21) by pointing to a fact that was never included in the record below. According to the debtors (Open. Br. 4), a few days before the district court issued its decision in this case, Mr. Cortez lost his job. Notably, the debtors did not file a motion for reconsideration under Federal Rule of Civil Procedure 59(e) – or take any other measures – to alert the district court to this change in the debtors' financial circumstances.

[10] The debtors, in a section of their brief entitled "Historical background of Section 707(b)," (Open. Br. 5-9) note that courts of appeals have adopted various tests to determine when a case should be dismissed for "substantial abuse" under 11 U.S.C. § 707(b). But the debtors do not ask this Court to adopt a particular test for determining "substantial abuse." Nor (as discussed below) do the debtors suggest that the district court erred in determining, based on the record before it, that dismissal of the debtors' case was appropriate.

The debtors cannot now claim error in the district court's decision based on facts that were never presented to that court. As noted above, this Court evaluates the district court's decision based solely on the record before that court. See Freeman, 186 F.3d at 610. If the debtors, in light of their more recent financial troubles, wish to seek Chapter 7 bankruptcy protection, they may file a new bankruptcy petition. See 11 U.S.C. § 349(a). But the debtors have presented this Court with no basis for rejecting the district court's decision.

CONCLUSION

For the foregoing reasons, the judgment of the district court, reversing the decision of the bankruptcy court, should be affirmed.

STATEMENT OF THE BASIS OF APPELLATE JURISDICTION

Roger Cotner, (hereinafter, the "appellant") appeals as of right pursuant to 28

U.S.C. 158(a)(1) the bankruptcy court's January 16, 2003 Order Denying Motion For Reconsideration of the Order Granting the United States Trustee's Motion Requesting Review and Disgorgement of Attorney Compensation Under 11 U.S.C. Section 329(b) and Rule 2017. The order denied reconsideration of the bankruptcy court's order of November 4, 2002 which granted the United States Trustee's motion under 11 U.S.C. Section 329(b) and ordered the appellant to refund to the debtors all compensation he received for the filing of this bankruptcy case, except for the filing fee. (Bankruptcy Court Docket Sheet Documents No. 43 and 32.)[1] This was a final order of the bankruptcy court. The bankruptcy court had jurisdiction over this issue under 28 U.S.C. Section 157(b)(1).

STATEMENT OF THE ISSUE PRESENTED

The bankruptcy court did not abuse its discretion by ruling under 11 U.S.C. Section 329(b) that the appellant must refund to the debtors all compensation he received from the debtors as an attorney fee for the filing of this case.

STATEMENT OF THE CASE

The debtors filed their petition for relief under Chapter 7 of the Bankruptcy Code on July 9, 2002. 11 U.S.C. Section 701, et seq. The attorney for the debtors was Roger Cotner, Esq., the appellant. (Debtors' Voluntary Petition, Docket Sheet Document No. 1.)

Along with their petition, the debtors also filed their schedules and statement of affairs, and a mailing matrix (a list of mailing addresses for all parties involved in the case), as required by 11 U.S.C. Section 521 and Federal Rule of Bankruptcy Procedure 1007, and in accordance with the Official Forms that are part of the Federal Rules of Bankruptcy Procedure, and the Local Rules of the Bankruptcy Court for the Western District of Michigan. (Debtors' Voluntary Petition, Docket Sheet Document No. 1.) See, e.g., Official Form 6 (setting forth the schedules that must be filed by debtors). Section 521(1) provides that, "The debtor shall file a list of creditors, and unless the court orders otherwise, a schedule of assets and liabilities, a schedule of current income and current expenditures, and a statement of the debtor's financial affairs." Federal Rule of Bankruptcy Procedure 1007(a)(1) requires the debtor to file a list containing the name and address of each creditor unless the petition is accompanied by a schedule of liabilities, prepared according to the requirements of the Official Forms. The Official Forms require that the schedules give the name and address of each creditor. Fed. Rule of B. Proc. 1007(a)(1) and Official Form 6. Furthermore, Local Bankruptcy Rule 1007-2(b)(1) requires the debtor to file a master mailing matrix containing the names and addresses of all creditors and other entities required to be notified of the bankruptcy proceeding. All these documents were filed under penalty of perjury as required under Federal Rule of Bankruptcy Procedure 1008 and 28 U.S.C. Section 1746.

The debtors' Chapter 7 schedules listed two secured creditors on Schedule D; the name given for one with a lien of $10,000 on a vehicle valued at $6,950 was "Consumers." The address given for Consumers was "c/o Cotner Law Offices, P.O. Box 838, Grand Haven, Michigan 49417-0838." (Docket Sheet Document No. 1, Schedule

D.) The debtors listed about 64[2] creditors and representatives of creditors on Schedule F. (Docket Sheet Document No. 1, Schedule F.) The addresses of at least 15 of these unsecured creditors or their representatives were given as the address of the debtor's attorney, e.g.,"Chemical Bank, c/o Cotner Law Offices, P.O. Box 838, Grand Haven, Michigan 49417-0838." (Docket Sheet Document No. 1, Schedule F.) Other than Chemical Bank, the parties listed with the appellant's address include: Check N Go, aka Unifund; Finger Hut; First of America Bank; First Premier; GECS Flex; HRSI; LJ Ross for Plumb's (Plumb's itself is listed with an address of its own); Township of Eagle and Nationwide Collection for Township of Eagle; Verizon Wireless and Accent SVCCO for Verizon Wireless; West Michigan Emergency Services and CSB-CB Kalamazoo for West Michigan Emergency Services; and WF Financial. (One creditor, City Financial, was simply listed with the address of "Muskegon, Michigan.") (Docket Sheet Document No. 1., Schedule F.) The creditors listed above were also listed with the appellant's address on the mailing matrix. (Docket Sheet Document No. 1, Mailing Matrix.) In addition to the creditors listed above, the following creditors were listed on the mailing matrix with the debtor's attorney's address: AIB Auto Lane; American Investments Bank; and CB

[2] There does appear to be a dispute as to the actual number of addresses that were missing, and the United States Trustee and the appellant do characterize the situation differently. The United States Trustee alleges that a total of at least 64 creditors and their agents are listed and that 19 addresses (16 on the schedules and mailing matrix, and three more found only on the mailing matrix) are incorrectly given as the appellant's. The appellant states that the debtors listed 44 creditors and 16 agents for creditors on their schedules, and that 11 of the 44 creditors and 5 of the 16 agents are listed with his address. (Debtor's Attorney's Response, page 4 , Docket Sheet Document No. 29.)

On September 11, 2002, the United States Trustee[3] filed three motions: 1) the United States Trustee's Motion to Dismiss Pursuant to 11 U.S.C. Section 707(a)(or (b); 2) The United States Trustee's Motion for an order requiring the filing of an answer to the motion to dismiss and requiring the debtors to answer the United States Trustee's interrogatories and request for documents, accompanied by requests to be answered; and 3) the United States Trustee's Motion Requesting Review and Disgorgement of Attorney Compensation Under 11 U.S.C. Section 329(b) and Rule 2017. (Docket Sheet Documents No. 9, 13, 156 and 20.) The motion to dismiss alleged that the debtors' failure to list correct addresses for the creditors listed above constituted a denial of due process to those creditors in violation of 11 U.S.C. Section 521(1), Federal Rule of Bankruptcy Procedure 1007(a)(1), Official Bankruptcy Form 6, and Local Bankruptcy Rule 1007-2(b)(1), all of which require the filing of schedules and a mailing matrix containing the names and addresses of creditor. The United States Trustee therefore asked that this case be dismissed under 11 U.S.C. Section 707(a) for cause, or under 11 U.S.C. Section 707(b) as a substantial abuse of the provisions of Chapter 7. (Docket Sheet Document No. 9.) Alternatively, the motion to dismiss alleged that with reductions in the debtors' expenses

Section 581 et seq. The United States Trustee is charged with the duty and authority to, inter alia, monitor the progress of cases under Title 11 and to supervise the administration of cases under chapters 7 and 11 of Title 11. 28 U.S.C. Section 586(a)(3) and (a)(3)(G). The United States Trustee may raise and may appear and be heard on any issue in any case or proceeding under Title 11, except that the United States Trustee may not file a plan of reorganization in a Chapter 11 case. 11 U.S.C. Section 307.

the debtors would have a monthly net income of $4,414.43 and expenses of $4,114, which would allow the debtors to pay $300 per month to a hypothetical Chapter 13 plan that would pay about 13% of the debtors' unsecured debt within 36 months. (Docket Sheet Document No. 9.) The United States Trustee therefore asked that the petition be dismissed as a substantial abuse of the provisions of Chapter 7 under 11 U.S.C. Section 707(b) and In re Krohn, 886 F.2d 123, 128 (6th Cir. 1989); See also, Wilson v. United States Trustee (In re Wilson), 125 B.R. 742, 746-747 (W.D. Mich. 1990).

The motion requesting review and disgorgement of the fee paid to the appellant also alleged that the filing of the debtors' schedules with the appellant's address for the creditors listed above constituted a denial of due process to those creditors, and requested that the appellant therefore not be compensated for the filing of his case. (Docket Sheet Document No. 13.)

On September 12, 2002 the bankruptcy court issued the order requiring the debtors to file an answer to the motion to dismiss two weeks before the hearing on the motion and answers to the United States Trustee's requests for information within 30 days from the date of service. (Docket Sheet Document No. 21.) The United States Trustee filed the proof of service for that order on September 20, 2002. (Docket Sheet Document No. 27.)

On September 18, 2002 the debtors filed an amendment changing the identification of "Consumers" to Consumer Finance Corp., and giving an address in McLean, Virginia for this creditor. (Docket Sheet Document No. 22.) No other corrections or changes were ever filed to Schedule F or the mailing matrix. (Bankruptcy Court Docket Sheet.)

On October 24, 2002, the appellant filed a motion to withdraw as attorney for the debtors. (Docket Sheet Document No. 28.) That same day the appellant also filed a response to the United States Trustee's motion for review and disgorgement of fees under 11 U.S.C. Section 329(b). (Docket Sheet Document No. 29.) The appellant's response to the motion for review and disgorgement admitted the creditors listed with his address had been denied due process, but denied that they would suffer substantial harm and denied that the debtors' attorney had any responsibility to obtain correct addresses for the creditors, or to correct the bad addresses. (Docket Sheet Document No. 29, page 6, paragraph 13; and page 7.)

No response was ever filed to the United States Trustee's motion to dismiss the case or to the United States Trustee's requests for information. (Bankruptcy Court Docket Sheet.)

The Bankruptcy Court heard the motion to dismiss and the motion for review and disgorgement of attorney compensation on October 28, 2002. The debtors were not represented by counsel, having discharged the appellant as their attorney. The appellant was represented by counsel. After hearing argument, the Bankruptcy Court dismissed the case, but kept jurisdiction to enforce an order under Section 329, and ordered the appellant to refund the $325 attorney fee that he received to the debtors. (Transcript of October 28, 2002, Docket Sheet Document No. 42.)

The orders dismissing the case (Docket Sheet Document No. 33) and ordering the appellant to refund to the debtors the fee he received (Docket Sheet Document No. 32) were entered by the Bankruptcy Court on November 4, 2002. Id.

The appellant filed the motion for reconsideration of the order requiring disgorgement under Section 329(b) on November 14, 2002. (Docket Sheet Document No. 37.)

The Bankruptcy Court convened the appellant's motion to withdraw as counsel to the debtors on November 18, 2002. The appellant did not appear and the motion to withdraw was denied for failure to appear. (Transcript of November 18, 2002, Docket Sheet Document No. 56.) The Bankruptcy Court entered the order denying the motion to withdraw on November 21, 2002. (Docket Sheet Document No. 41.)

The Bankruptcy Court heard the motion for reconsideration on January 13, 2003. (Transcript of January 13, 2003, Docket Sheet Document No. 55.) The Bankruptcy Court entered the order denying the motion for reconsideration on January 16, 2003. (Docket Sheet Document No. 43.)

The appellant filed his notice of appeal on January 27, 2003. (Docket Sheet Document No. 45.)

ARGUMENT

I. Introduction

The bankruptcy court did not abuse its discretion or commit an error in ordering under Section 329(b) that the appellant, who had filed a bankruptcy petition with schedules that he knew were inaccurate, must refund to the debtors the $350 fee he received. The appellant deliberately decided to file schedules and a mailing matrix that contained addresses he knew to be inaccurate. This deliberate decision impeded the administration of this case and adversely affected the debtors. The bankruptcy court properly required the appellant to disgorge his fee as a sanction for this conduct under 11 U.S.C. Section 329(b). Alternatively, the bankruptcy court's sanction should be affirmed as a proper exercise of the bankruptcy court's inherent authority to sanction attorneys for breaches of fiduciary obligations.

II. The Appellant's Conduct Impeded The Administration Of The Case And Adversely Affected The Debtors

It is uncontested that the appellant knew that the debtors' schedules and statement of affairs contained inaccurate addresses for many of the creditors. The appellant's letters of May 8, 2002 and July 22, 2002, attached as exhibits C and D to his response filed with the Bankruptcy Court (Docket Sheet Document No. 29), demonstrate this, and the appellant's brief also admits this. The appellant's brief makes it clear that it was the appellant's decision to insert his address for the creditors who he did not have addresses for. (Appellant's Brief, page 2.) In sanctioning the appellant, the bankruptcy court was not holding the appellant responsible for an error committed by his clients, nor did the bankruptcy court penalize an attorney who justifiably relied upon a representation by his clients which later proved to be false. Nor did the bankruptcy court impose an impossible burden upon the appellant. Finding these addresses was not an impossible or even an especially difficult task; the United States Trustee quickly found ten of the addresses from the Internet, directory assistance or the telephone book. (Transcript of January 13, 2003, pages 5-7, Docket Sheet Document No. 55.) The appellant's counsel admitted that he was able to find four or five addresses by simply looking in the telephone book, and probably could have found more if he had looked into his files. (Transcript of October 28, 2002, page 12, Docket Sheet Document No. 42.) Indeed, at that hearing the appellant's counsel conceded that if the debtors had twenty-five creditors but gave their attorney an address for only one of them, such a petition should not be filed.[4] (Transcript of January 13, 2003, page 5, Docket Sheet Document No. 55.) As a matter of logic, that distinction is untenable. If the appellant is correct, no attorney has any obligation to insure that the addresses, or in fact any of the information on the schedules or statement of affairs that they file on their client's behalf, is correct, and any attorney can file any document even when the attorney knows for a fact that the document is inaccurate.

This is not a bureaucratic insistence on form. The failure to list accurate addresses for creditors results in a denial of substantive rights for those creditors, and may impair the administration of the estate. Federal Rule of Bankruptcy Procedure 2002(g)(2) provides that unless a creditor files a request designating a different address for service, all notices shall be mailed to the address shown on the list of creditors or the schedule of liabilities, whichever is filed later. Therefore, all the notices for creditors listed with the appellant’s address were sent to the appellant, not to the creditor. The filing of a voluntary petition under a chapter of the Bankruptcy Code constitutes the entry of an order for relief for the debtor under that chapter. 11 U.S.C. Section 301. Creditors are entitled to notice of the entry of the order of relief, and the clerk of the bankruptcy court is required to give creditors that notice. Federal Rule of Bankruptcy Procedure 2002(f)(1). The creditors who were listed with the appellant’s address did not receive notice of the bankruptcy filing. Without notice of the filing, the creditors may have continued their collection efforts, entailing a possible violation of the automatic stay under 11 U.S.C. Section 362(a), and useless expense and effort in collection efforts that may be null. The creditors listed with the appellant’s address were also denied notice of the time to file objections to the debtors’ discharge under 11 U.S.C. Section 727(b) or objections to the discharge of their particular debts under 11 U.S.C. Section 523. Federal Rules of Bankruptcy Procedure 4004, 4007 and 2002(f)(4) and (5). Without notice, these creditors did not have an opportunity to attend the meeting of creditors called under 11 U.S.C. Section 341 and to examine the debtors as to their assets and liabilities, as is the creditors’ right under 11 U.S.C. 343. Without notice, these creditors were not aware of the identity of the Chapter 7 Trustee and were unable to share with that trustee any information the creditors might have had about the debtors’ income and assets, subjects of vital interest to a Chapter 7 Trustee. (Although there are no allegations of hidden assets in this case, a decision that the attorney for the debtor can knowingly file schedules with inaccurate addresses for creditors could lead to serious abuses of the bankruptcy process.)

The appellant argued before the bankruptcy court (and has argued to this Court) that his procedure when debtors did not give him addresses for creditors was to insert his own address for those creditors so the mail would be returned to him as a reminder to again ask for the addresses. At the hearing before the Bankruptcy Court the appellant conceded that he could have done more, that the appellant could have attempted to find the addresses for these creditors but that he did not. (Transcript of October 28, 2002, pages 12 to 13, Docket Sheet Document No. 42; Transcript of January 13, 2003, page 3, Docket Sheet Document No. 55.) The appellant argues that it was not his responsibility to insure that the schedules were accurate, and that he need not have done more, because it is the debtor's responsibility under 11 U.S.C. Section 521, not the attorney's, to file accurate schedules.[5] The Bankruptcy Court properly found this procedure to be inadequate, and the Bankruptcy Court correctly held that the appellant could have either found the addresses himself or refused to file the bankruptcy petition. (Transcript of January 13, 2003, Docket Sheet No. 55.)

III. The Bankruptcy Court Properly Required The Appellant To Disgorge His Fee As

[5] By this reasoning, if a client disclosed to an attorney that the debtor owned several valuable assets, and asked the attorney to file a bankruptcy petition that did not list those assets on the schedules, the appellant would apparently reason that the attorney had no obligation to refuse to file such a petition so long as the attorney fee was paid.

A Sanction Under 11 U.S.C. Section 329(b)

Section 329(a) of the Bankruptcy Code requires any attorney representing a debtor in a case under the Bankruptcy Code to file a statement of the compensation paid or agreed to be paid to the attorney for services rendered by the attorney for the debtor in contemplation of or in connection with the bankruptcy case. As to that compensation paid or agreed to be paid, Section 329(b) of the Bankruptcy Code provides as follows:

> (b) If such compensation exceeds the reasonable value of any such services, the court may cancel any such agreement, or order the return of any such payment, to the extent excessive, to-
> (1) the estate, if the property transferred-
> (A) would have been property of the estate; or > (B) was to be paid by or on behalf of the debtor under a plan under chapter 11, 12, or 13 of this title; or
> (2) the entity that made such payment.

The legislative history of Section 329 sheds light on the intent of that section of the Code. The legislative history provides in part, "Payments to a debtor's attorney provide serious potential for evasion of creditor protection provisions of the bankruptcy laws, and serious potential for overreaching by the debtor's attorney, and should be subject to careful scrutiny." H.R. Rep. 595, 95th Cong. , 1st Sess.329 (1977); S.Rep. 989, 95th Cong., 2d Sess. 39 (1978). The Sixth Circuit has written of Section 329 that:

> The provisions of the Bankruptcy Code and the Bankruptcy Rules that regulate attorney fees are designed to protect both creditors and the debtor against overreaching attorneys. In re Walters, 868 F.2d 665, 668 (4th Cir. 1989). To ensure such protection, bankruptcy courts have broad and inherent authority to deny any and all compensation where an attorney fails to satisfy the requirements of the Code and Rules. In re Downs, 103 F.3d 472, 479 (6th Cir. 1996)...Disgorgement may be proper even though the failure to disclose resulted ...from negligence or inadvertence. In re Park-Helena Corp., 63 F.3d 877,882 (9th > Cir. 1995)("Even a negligent or inadvertent failure to disclose fully relevant information [in a Rule 2016 statement] may result in a denial of all requested fees.")

In re Kisseberth, 273 F.3d 721.

Section 329 is meant to protect the debtors from overreaching by the attorney. In re Kisseberth, 273 F.3d 721. Under Section 329(b), the question is whether the fee the debtors paid is excessive when compared with the value of the services they received. The sum involved in this case is not large, but the principle is the same as in the other cases involving larger fees. Debtors contemplating bankruptcy are vulnerable; they seek out an attorney for guidance, not a scrivener who simply types whatever they dictate. If the appellant had taken the extra step of finding the missing addresses himself, he would have protected his clients' interest. If he had declined to do that, but had also refused to file the case until the debtors had brought him all the required addresses, then he would at least have acted diligently to insure that his clients had fulfilled their statutory duties. The appellant did neither. Instead he took his fee and filed incomplete and inaccurate schedules, with a warning that the filing might not discharge the debts owed to the creditors with inaccurate addresses. (The appellant did not warn the debtors that in filing these documents they may have also been committing perjury under Federal Rule of Bankruptcy Procedure 1008 and 28 U.S.C. Section 1746.) This conduct does not meet the standard for compensation set forth in In re Prudhomme, 152 B.R. 91 (Bankr. W.D.La. 1993).

The filing of this bankruptcy petition left the debtors worse off than if they had never filed a bankruptcy petition. The motion to dismiss the debtors' case came on for hearing and no one appeared to defend the debtors' interests. The appellant sent an attorney to defend the appellant, but he did not send anyone to defend the debtors. True, the debtors had dismissed the appellant, but as of that hearing the bankruptcy court had not granted the appellant's motion to withdraw, and the appellant still had not been required to disgorge the fee that he received. On October 18, 2003, not one word was said in defense of the debtors. (Transcript of October 28, 2002, Docket Sheet Document No. 42.) When the bankruptcy court decided to dismiss this case, the debtors were out the $350 attorney fee and the $200 filing fee, their case was dismissed, and they did not receive a discharge of their debts. To paraphrase Arens v. Boughton (In re Prudhomme), 43 F.3d 1000, 1003 n.1 (5th Cir. 1995), affirming, 176 B.R. 781 (W.D. La. 1993), and 152 B.R. 91 (Bankr. W.D.La. 1993), this is ample evidence to show that the appellant did not render any services that benefited the debtors or their estate, that the appellant's services were unsatisfactory, and that the appellant hurt the debtors more than helped them, and accordingly, the court did not clearly err in finding the fee unreasonable. But for the refund required by the Bankruptcy Court, the debtors would have paid $325 plus a $200 filing fee for a case that could not proceed under Chapter 7.

The appellant argues that the debtors did not cooperate and that requiring him to disgorge his fee is a windfall that inappropriately rewards their failure to cooperate. However, it is highly unlikely that the debtors paid $525 just to get $325 back someday. It is true that "A court must exercise its power to levy sanctions 'with restraint and discretion.'" Kisseberth, 273 F.3d at 720, quoting Downs, 103 F. 3d at 478. The bankruptcy court did act with restraint and discretion. The debtors paid $200 to file a bankruptcy case without giving their attorney all the addresses for the creditors, and the debtors paid $325 to obtain the assistance of an attorney who would make sure that the case proceeded successfully and the debtors received a Chapter 7 discharge of their debts. The debtors received the first, and the bankruptcy court did not require the appellant to refund the $200 filing fee to the debtors. The debtors, however, did not receive the assistance of an attorney. An attorney would have either found the addresses for the debtors or would have refused to file the case until the debtors found the addresses for themselves. The appellant did neither and therefore was not entitled to an attorney's compensation for filing the case. The debtors received no benefit from the filing of this bankruptcy case. The debtors received no benefit from the appellant's services. Therefore, any fee charged by the appellant was excessive and the bankruptcy court properly ordered the attorney fee refunded to the debtors under 11 U.S.C. Section 329(b).

IV. The Bankruptcy Court's Sanction Should Be Affirmed As A Proper Exercise Of The Bankruptcy Court's Inherent Authority

Section 329(b) compares the attorney fee paid by the debtors with the value of the services they received from the attorney. However, even if the debtors received full value for the fee they paid, the bankruptcy court has the inherent power to review the conduct of attorneys practicing before that court and to sanction improper conduct by attorneys.

As the Sixth Circuit held in Downs, "Bankruptcy courts, like Article III courts, enjoy inherent power to sanction parties for improper conduct. In re Rainbow Magazine, Inc., 77 F.3d 278, 283-4 (9th Cir. 1996). It follows that the bankruptcy court is vested with the inherent power to sanction attorneys for breaches of fiduciary obligations. See In re Arlan's Dep't Stores, Inc., 615 F.2d 925, 943 (2d Cir. 1979). " Downs, 103 F.3d 472. The power to sanction attorneys for breaches of fiduciary duties flows from the bankruptcy court's more general power to sanction parties for improper conduct.

Neither Downs nor Kisseberth limited the bankruptcy court's inherent authority to sanction attorneys to failures to comply with Section 329(a) and Rule 2016(a). The lack of such limits can be seen in Downs' citation of In re Arlan's Dep't Stores, Inc., 615 F.2d 925, 943 (2d Cir. 1979) as authority. In that opinion the Second Circuit considered the appeal of attorneys who had been denied all compensation in a Chapter XI proceeding (the predecessor of the current Chapter 11 reorganization) for failure to comply with the fee disclosure rules then prevalent under the Bankruptcy Act, which was superceded by the current Bankruptcy Code and Rules in 1978. Although the attorneys had violated specific provisions of the then prevalent Act and Rules, those discrete violations were not the basis of the ruling:

> Our opinion, however, is bottomed not simply upon violations of particular bankruptcy statutes or rules but upon the status of counsel to Arlen's as officers of the court and fiduciaries. There is nothing novel at all about that consideration. In his first pronouncement from the woolsack in 1801, Lord Eldon expressed his deep concern over the abuses in bankruptcy proceedings which then prevailed. He commented: "Instead of solicitors attending to their duty as ministers of the court, for they are so, commissions of bankruptcy are treated as matters of traffic..." 6

Ves.Jr. 1, quoted in In re Drake (D.C.N.J. 1876), Fed.Cas.No. 4,058.

One hundred years ago the Supreme Court referred to the professional obligation of attorneys as follows:

> They are officers of the law, as well as the agents of those by whom they are employed. Their fidelity is guaranteed by the highest considerations of honor and good faith, and to these is superadded the sanction of an oath. The slightest divergence from rectitude involves the breach of all these obligations. None are more honored or more deserving than those of the brotherhood who, uniting ability with integrity, prove faithful to their trusts and worthy of the confidence reposed in them. Courts of justice can best serve both the public and the profession by applying firmly upon all proper occasions the salutary rules which have been established for their government in doing the business of their clients.

In re Arlen's Dep't Stores, Inc., 615 F.2d 943-44.

Downs also cited In re Rainbow Magazine, Inc., 77 F.3d 278, 283-4 (9th Cir. 1996).

In Rainbow Magazine, the Ninth Circuit found an alternative basis for the bankruptcy court's inherent power to sanction vexatious conduct in 11 U.S.C. Section 105(a), which provides that:

> The court may issue any order, process, or judgment that is necessary or appropriate to carry out the provisions of this title. No provision of this title providing for the raising of an issue by a party shall be construed to preclude the court from, sua sponte, taking any action or making any determination necessary or appropriate to enforce or implement court orders or rules, or to prevent an abuse of process.

(Emphasis added.) Taken altogether, it is clear that the authority to sanction attorneys who practice before the bankruptcy court is not grounded solely upon a violation of a specific provision the Bankruptcy Code or Rules, but rather is based upon the attorney's role as an officer of the court.

The bankruptcy court in In re Prudhomme, 152 B.R. 91 (Bankr. W.D.La. 1993), required the disgorgement of a $75,000 prepetition retainer both because the attorney failed to properly disclose the retainer and because the attorney's work failed to meet the court's standard for quality of representation. The bankruptcy court looked at several factors from its local rules in making this determination, including whether the schedules and pleadings were accurate, complete and professional, the efficiency with which the case was conducted, and whether counsel had been diligent within the rules of professional responsibility to assure that his client fulfilled his statutory duties and his duties imposed by court order. 152 B.R. 114. Both the District Court and the Fifth Circuit affirmed. Arens v. Boughton (In re Prudhomme), 43 F.3d 1000 (5th Cir. 1995), affirming, 176 B.R. 781 (W.D. La. 1993), and 152 B.R. 91 (Bankr. W.D.La. 1993). In affirming, the Fifth Circuit held, "Ample evidence showed that the [attorney] did not render any services that benefited any of the debtors or their estates, that the firm's services were unsatisfactory, and that counsel hurt the debtors more than helped them...Accordingly, the court did not clearly err in finding the fee unreasonable." 43 F.3d at 1003, n. 1. See also, In re J.V. Knitting Service, Inc., 22 B.R. 543 (Bankr. S.D. Fla. 1982)(fees denied to debtor's attorney whose efforts were unsuccessful and in fact impeded and obstructed the administration of the case.)

The bankruptcy court's independent and inherent authority to sanction attorneys is recognized in the bankruptcy court's local rules. Federal Rule of Bankruptcy Procedure

9029 authorizes the district court in each district to make local bankruptcy rules, and to delegate that authority, subject to the requirements of Federal Rule of Civil Procedure 83, to the bankruptcy court for that district. The District Court for the Western District of Michigan has authorized the bankruptcy court to make local rules. W.D.Mich. LCivR 83.2(d). The bankruptcy court's Local Bankruptcy Rule 9010-1(c) authorizes the bankruptcy court to sanction improper conduct, as follows:

> A bankruptcy judge may impose discipline, except suspension or disbarment, on any attorney who engages in conduct violating the Rules of Professional Conduct; willfully violates these Rules, the Federal Rules of Bankruptcy Procedure, or orders of the Bankruptcy Court; or engages in other conduct unbecoming of a member of the bar of the Bankruptcy Court. Prior to the imposition of discipline, the attorney shall be afforded an opportunity to show good cause, within such time as the Bankruptcy Court shall prescribe, why the discipline should not be imposed. Upon the attorney's response to show cause, and after hearing, if requested and allowed by the bankruptcy judge, or upon expiration of the time prescribed for a response if no response is made, the Bankruptcy Court shall enter an appropriate order.

It is clear that the procedural requirements of LBR 9010-1(c) were met; the appellant had notice of the United States Trustee's motion and filed a response; a hearing was conducted upon that response and a second hearing was held upon the appellant's motion for reconsideration. It is also clear that the imposition of sanctions upon the appellant under the bankruptcy court's inherent authority was justified.

The appellant deliberately filed a mailing matrix and schedules that gave his address for that of at least sixteen parties. This decision impaired the administration of the estate be denying those parties their rightful notice under Federal Rule of Bankruptcy Procedure 2002(a)(1) and 2002(f)(1), (4), (5) of the filing of the case, the convening of the meeting of creditors, and the times fixed for objecting to the debtors' discharge or the discharge of a particular debt, and denied those parties their rights in this bankruptcy case to attend the meeting of creditors called under 11 U.S.C. Section 341 and to examine the debtors under 11 U.S.C. Section 343. The appellant's insertion of his own address violated 11 U.S.C. Section 521(1), Federal Rule of Bankruptcy Procedure 1007(a)(1), Official Form 6, and Local Bankruptcy Rule 1007-2(b)(1). In advising his clients to file these schedules, the appellant was also advising the debtors to file inaccurate schedules in violation of Federal Rule of Bankruptcy Procedure 1008 and 28 U.S.C. Section 1746.

The appellant's decision to insert his own address constituted conduct unbecoming of a member of the bar of the bankruptcy court, and an abuse of process, which, if not sanctioned, might encourage other attorneys to also insert incorrect addresses. If the appellant's conduct were not sanctioned, other attorneys might come to believe it was acceptable to file documents with inaccuracies and omissions that they were aware of. By the appellant's reasoning, any number of creditors' addresses may be omitted with impunity, and it is only a few short steps further before creditors and assets will be omitted as well. To prevent such abuses, the bankruptcy court properly exercised its inherent authority to sanction the appellant for improper behavior. The bankruptcy court's imposition of sanctions was not an abuse of its discretion.

CONCLUSION

For all the above reasons, the United States Trustee respectfully asks this Court to affirm the bankruptcy court's order requiring the appellant to refund to the debtors the attorney fee he received from the debtors.

Respectfully submitted,
SAUL EISEN
United States Trustee

THE HONORABLE
DONETTA W. AMBROSE

UNITED STATES TRUSTEE'S RESPONSE IN OPPOSITION TO COUNTRYWIDE HOME LOANS, INC.'S EMERGENCY MOTION FOR STAY PENDING APPEAL

Roberta A. DeAngelis, Acting United States Trustee for Region 3, by the undersigned counsel, files this response in opposition to Countrywide Home Loans, Inc.'s Emergency Motion for Stay Pending Appeal Pursuant to Fed. R. Bankr. P. 8005 (the "Motion to Stay"), stating:

I. INTRODUCTION

The United States Trustee is an official of the United States Department of Justice charged with responsibility to "supervise the administration of cases and trustees in cases under chapter 7, 11, 12, 13 or 15 of title 11 . . . ." 28 U.S.C. 586(a)(3). "The United States trustee may raise and may appear and be heard on any issue in any case or proceeding under this title but may not file a plan pursuant to section 1121(c) of this title." 11 U.S.C. 307.

Rule 2004 of the Federal Rules of Bankruptcy Procedure provides a mechanism for discovery that is unique to bankruptcy cases. Although the Federal Rules of Bankruptcy Procedure incorporate by reference many of the discovery mechanisms set forth in the Federal Rules of Civil Procedure (see Fed. R. Bankr. P. 7026 through 7037), Fed. R. Bankr. P. 2004 provides a further tool for discovery, one that is generally used prior to the commencement of an adversary proceeding or the filing of a contested matter. Upon a showing of cause by any party in interest, the bankruptcy court "may order the examination of any entity." Fed. R. Bankr. P. 2004(a). That examination, however, may relate "only to the acts, conduct, or property or to the liabilities and financial condition of the debtor, or to any matter which may affect the administration of the debtor's estate, or the debtor's right to a discharge," Fed. R. Bankr. P. 2004(b).

The United States Trustee sought to conduct Rule 2004 examinations of Countrywide Home Loans, Inc. ("Countrywide"). Doc. No. 6.[1] Countrywide opposed the United States Trustee's Rule 2004 examinations and related subpoenas on the ground that the United States Trustee lacks authority to conduct such examinations. Doc. Nos. 12 and 13. After reviewing briefs, considering the evidence, and hearing arguments, the Bankruptcy Court entered a Memorandum Opinion and an order (the "Order") on April 1, 2008 (Doc. No. 64) holding that the United States Trustee had the power to conduct the Rule 2004 examinations and that she had shown good cause for the examinations. The Bankruptcy Court, however, limited the scope of the examinations and required that they be conducted within one specific bankruptcy case, In re Hill, Case No. 01-22574-JAD.

On April 11, 2008, Countrywide filed a notice of appeal from the Order (Doc. No. 66), a motion seeking leave for an interlocutory appeal (Doc. No. 68), and a motion seeking a stay from the Bankruptcy Court pending resolution of the appeal to this Court (Doc. No. 79) .

On May 2, 2008, the Bankruptcy Court denied Countrywide's motion seeking a stay pending appeal from the Bankruptcy Court (Doc. No. 98). Countrywide's motion for leave to appeal is pending in this Court.

[1] Unless otherwise noted, all docket references are to the bankruptcy court docket for Miscellaneous Proceeding 07-204-TPA. Where specifically noted, we cite the docket for a related case, e.g In re Hill, Case No. 01-22574-JAD.

On May 9, 2008, Countrywide filed the Motion to Stay in this Court, as well as their brief in support of the Motion to Stay (D. Doc. Nos. 2, 3).

The United States Trustee respectfully submits that this Court should deny the Motion to Stay because Countrywide has failed to sustain its burden of demonstrating that: (i) it is likely to succeed on the merits of the appeal; (ii) it will be irreparably injured absent a stay; (3) issuance of the stay will not substantially injure the other parties interested in the proceeding; and (4) the public interest lies in favor of granting the stay.

In the following sections, the United States Trustee describes in further detail the somewhat complicated procedural history of this appeal, the general role of the United States Trustee in the administration of bankruptcy cases, and the nature and scope of Fed. R. Bankr. P. 2004. The United States Trustee then presents her argument that the Court should deny Countrywide's Motion to Stay.

II. PROCEDURAL HISTORY OF THIS APPEAL

A. MISCELLANEOUS PROCEEDING 07-204-TPA

On October 18, 2007, the United States Trustee filed notices of her intent to examine Countrywide Home Loans, Inc. f/k/a Countrywide Funding Corp. ("Countrywide") under Fed. R. Bankr. P. 2004 in ten bankruptcy cases. The Bankruptcy Court entered an Order on November 5, 2007 consolidating these matters and directed the United States Trustee to file a single notice of her intent to examine Countrywide in a single miscellaneous proceeding. Doc. No. 1. Following the commencement of that miscellaneous proceeding, the relevant bankruptcy cases are limited to seven:

In re Hill, Case No. 01-22574-JAD;
In re Benvenuto, Case No. 02-20946-JKF;
In re Stemple, Case No. 03-11792-WWB;
In re Karleski, Case No. 04-31355-JKF;
In re Bock, Case No. 04-32812-BM;

In re Olbeter, Case No. 04-33361-JKF; and
In re Topper, Case No. 05-20772-TPA.

These seven cases are hereafter referred to as "Context Cases". The miscellaneous proceeding is thus a consolidated proceeding in which the Bankruptcy Court addresses Countrywide's objection to the United States Trustee's Rule 2004 examinations in all seven Context Cases.

Pursuant to the Bankruptcy Court's order, on November 7, 2007 the United States Trustee filed her Notice Regarding 2004 Examination and Request for Production of Documents (the "Notice") as well as a subpoena seeking documents (the "Subpoena") in the miscellaneous proceeding. Doc. No. 6. On November 9, 2007, Countrywide filed its objection to the Notice and its motion to quash the related Subpoena. Doc. Nos. 12 and 13.

On November 20, 2007, the Bankruptcy Court entered an order directing the parties to brief issues pertinent to United States Trustee's examinations. The Bankruptcy Court stayed Countrywide's obligation to respond to the examinations pending further order of the Court. Doc. No. 26.

The United States Trustee filed briefs in support of her examinations (Doc. Nos. 31, 61), and Countrywide filed briefs opposing the examinations (Doc. Nos. 30, 34, 62). The United States Trustee and Countrywide also submitted extensive exhibit binders to provide a factual record in support of their respective positions. Doc. Nos. 58, 59.

On February 28, 2008, the Bankruptcy Court conducted a hearing to consider Countrywide's objections to the Rule 2004 examinations. On April 1, 2008, the Bankruptcy Court entered the Memorandum Opinion and the Order being appealed Doc. No. 64. The Order authorizes, in part, the United States Trustee's Rule 2004 examinations and related document production.

The Bankruptcy Court found and concluded that ". . . it is within the power of the UST to seek the production of documents and the examination of witnesses pursuant to Rule 2004. However, this authority is not unfettered." Memorandum Opinion at 26. The Bankruptcy Court therefore proceeded to consider whether the United States Trustee had sustained her burden of showing "good cause" under Rule 2004. Without making any finding that Countrywide did anything wrong in any of these cases, the Bankruptcy Court found that "the UST has made a showing of a common thread of potential wrongdoing in each of the cases that is sufficient to meet the general standard of good cause necessary for her to proceed under Rule 2004." Id. at 39.

Although the Bankruptcy Court found and concluded that the United States Trustee had shown good cause for the Rule 2004 examinations in the various Context Cases, the Bankruptcy Court nonetheless limited the forum within which the United States Trustee could conduct such discovery to the Hill case. The Bankruptcy Court reasoned that Countrywide's actions in the Context Cases could be the subject of discovery in the ongoing Hill litigation, permitted under Federal Rules of Evidence 401, 404 and 406. Id. at 48-49. The Court then held as follows:

> ". . . [F]or the sake of administrative convenience and to avoid any potential res judicata issues, the Court will stay the Notice of Examination and Subpoenas in all context cases except In re Hill, Case No. 01-22574-JAD. In that case, the Court will direct Countrywide to produce documents in Categories 5-12 as to each of the Debtors in the context cases and will direct Countrywide to make a witness or witnesses available to be examined on the topics identified by the UST."

Id. at 50.[2] The Bankruptcy Court's stay of the Rule 2004 examinations within the other Context Cases was expressly "pending further Order of the Court." Order at 2. In essence, the Bankruptcy Court channeled the United States Trustee's examinations into the ongoing Hill litigation, but reserved the issue of examinations in the other Context Cases pending further court order.

[2] The Court also found that the document requests in categories 1-4 of the Subpoenas were moot and that Countrywide had waived any objection to the extent of the discovery being conducted in Hill. Opinion at 32-33, 35.

On April 14, 2008, Countrywide filed its Motion to Stay. The Bankruptcy Court denied the Motion to Stay in an order entered May 2, 2008.

B. IN RE HILL, CASE NO. 01-22574-JAD

On March 19, 2001, Sharon Diane Hill (the "Debtor") had filed her petition for relief under Chapter 13. Hill Doc. No. 1. The Bankruptcy Court entered an order discharging the Debtor on March 16, 2007 (Hill Doc. No. 49) and the Bankruptcy Court entered a final decree closing the case on May 18, 2007 (Hill Doc. No. 55).

On June 25, 2007, the Debtor filed a motion seeking to enforce the discharge against Countrywide (the "Motion to Enforce Discharge") based on alleged post-discharge collection activity by Countrywide. Hill Doc. No. 59.

On December 20, 2007, the Bankruptcy Court conducted a status conference on the Debtor's Motion to Enforce Discharge. At that status conference, the Debtor's counsel raised the issue of certain "recreated letters" provided by Countrywide to Debtor's counsel. The following day, on December 21, 2007, the Court entered an order which addresses, in part, those "recreated letters." The Court states in the Order that Countrywide's counsel

> "provided Debtor's Counsel with three documents that appear on their face to be copies of letters dating from 2003, 2004 and 2007, from [Countrywide] to the Debtor, with copies shown going to the Debtor's Counsel and the Chapter 13 Trustee, informing the Debtor of an increase in her escrow obligation under the mortgage. There is no dispute that, in fact, however, these documents were not copies of actual letters, but were generated by Respondent as 'recreated letters' which it said were designed to provide the Debtor and her Counsel with information regarding the escrow . . . Debtor's Counsel indicated that Counsel only became aware of the situation after suspicions were raised when it was noticed that the address for Debtor's Counsel's office shown on the 2003 document was one Counsel had not moved to until some time after the date shown on the 'recreated' document. Thus, significant factual issues exist . . . ."

Aside from discussing the “recreated letters,” the Court’s December 21, 2007 order established a discovery schedule with respect to the Motion to Enforce Discharge and stated “that the Chapter 13 Trustee and the United States Trustee, both of whom appeared at the status conference and expressed an interest in this matter shall also be permitted to engage in discovery pursuant to this Order.” Hill Doc. No. 103, at 2. Countrywide has not challenged the United States Trustee’s authority to conduct discovery under the December 21, 2007 order.

May 23, 2008 is currently the discovery cut-off date with respect to the Motion to Enforce Discharge. The final pretrial conference is set for June 24, 2008, to be followed soon thereafter by an evidentiary hearing. Hill Doc. Nos. 166, 179.

III. THE UNITED STATES TRUSTEE’S ROLE

Countrywide’s appeal challenges the role of the United States Trustee in bankruptcy cases. That role, however, is both broad and well-established.

In 1970 Congress enacted legislation creating a Commission on the Bankruptcy Laws of the United States and instructing the Commission to study the Bankruptcy Act of 1898 and propose amendments to strengthen the bankruptcy system. Act of July 24, 1970, Pub. L. No. 91-354, 84 Stat. 468. The Commission determined that longstanding and significant problems associated with the Bankruptcy Act of 1898 necessitated the creation of an agency that would supervise bankruptcy cases. See Report of the Commission of the Bankruptcy Laws of the United States, H.R. Doc. No. 137, 93d Cong. 1st Sess. (1973). Congress ultimately created the United States Trustee Program as part of the Bankruptcy Reform Act of 1978.[3] See P.L. 95-598, 92 Stat. 2549 (1978). The

[3] The Reform Act initially created a pilot United States Trustee Program that served eighteen (18) of ninety-four (94) federal districts. See Reform Act § 224. Eight years later, after evaluating the pilot program, Congress expanded the United States Trustee Program nation-wide as part of the Bankruptcy Judges, United States Trustees, and Family Farmer Bankruptcy Act of 1986. See Pub.

Program has been a component of the Department of Justice for the past 30 years.

Congress gave the United States Trustees "important oversight and watchdog responsibilities to ensure honesty and fairness in the administration of bankruptcy cases and to prevent and ferret out fraud." H. Rep. No. 764, 99th Cong., 2d Sess. 18, reprinted in 1986 U.S. Code Cong. & Admin. News 5231. Congress created the Program to correct longstanding and systemic inadequacies in the administration of bankruptcy cases. These problems sprang from the fact that bankruptcy is fundamentally different from typical litigation, which involves only a few parties who actively protect their self-interest. In contrast, a bankruptcy case often involves debtors who lack the sophistication or financial wherewithal to protect their own interests, and creditors whose small stake in proceedings or distance from bankruptcy forums effectively denies them the ability to protect their rights. It has been said that "[t]he conduct of bankruptcy proceedings not only should be right but must seem right." See In re Ira Haupt & Co., 361 F.2d 164, 168 (2d Cir. 1966). The United States Trustees protect the public interest by supervising the bankruptcy system so that it works honestly and efficiently, thereby fostering public confidence.

Each of the nation's 21 United States Trustees is a senior official of the United States Department of Justice, appointed by the Attorney General, to oversee and supervise the conduct of bankruptcy cases. See 28 U.S.C. §§ 581 and 586(a). When Congress expanded the United States Trustee Program from a pilot project in 1978 to a national program, Congress also amended the Bankruptcy Code, adding Section 307. That statute expressly provides that the United States Trustees may raise and be heard on any issue under Title 11. See, e.g., United States Trustee v.

L. No. 99-554, 100 Stat. 3088. The Program does not, however, operate in North Carolina and Alabama because those states are subject to bankruptcy administrators, judicial branch officials who share many of the United States Trustees' powers and responsibilities.

Price Waterhouse, 19 F.3d 138, 141 (3d Cir. 1994); Thompson v. Greenwood, 507 F.3d 416, 420 n.3 (6th Cir. 2007); In re Donovan Corp., 215 F.3d 929, 930 (9th Cir. 2000); In re Glados, Inc., 83 F.3d 1360, 1361 n.1 (11th Cir. 1996); In re Clark, 927 F.2d 793, 796 (4th Cir. 1991); In re Plaza de Diego Shopping Center, 911 F.2d 820, 824 (1st Cir. 1990); In re Revco D.S., Inc., 898 F.2d 498, 500 (6th Cir. 1990). That standing is subject to only one express exception, a United States Trustee may not file a reorganization plan under chapter 11. 11 U.S.C. § 307.

IV. FEDERAL RULE OF BANKRUPTCY PROCEDURE 2004

The filing of a voluntary petition in bankruptcy commences a bankruptcy case and creates an estate to be administered. 11 U.S.C. §§ 301, 541. Once the case is commenced, litigation may arise within the case, either by way of adversary proceedings or contested matters. See In re Southern Indus. Banking Corp., 189 R.R. 697, 702 (E.D. Tenn. 1992) (distinguishing the bankruptcy case from adversary proceedings and contested matters which arise in a bankruptcy case). Discovery in adversary proceedings and contested matters is governed by rules generally analogous to, and to a large extent derived from, the discovery rules set forth in the Federal Rules of Civil Procedure. See Fed. R. Bankr. P. 7026 through 7037 (applicable to adversary proceedings); Fed. R. Bankr. P. 9014 (specifying which adversary proceeding rules may apply in contested matters).

Federal Rule of Bankruptcy Procedure 2004, by contrast, is unique to bankruptcy. It is generally a pre-litigation discovery mechanism. Rule 2004 examinations "are allowed for the purpose of discovering assets and unearthing frauds." In re Sun Medical Management, Inc., 104 B.R. 522, 524 (Bankr. M.D. Ga. 1989); In re Table Talk, Inc., 51 B.R. 143, 145 (Bankr. D. Mass. 1985).

Rule 2004 states:

> On motion of any party in interest, the court may order the examination of any entity.
> (b) Scope of examination
> The examination of an entity under this rule or of the debtor under § 343 of the Code may relate only to the acts, conduct, or property or to the liabilities and financial condition of the debtor, or to any matter which may affect the administration of the debtor's estate, or to the debtor's right to a discharge. In a family farmer's debt adjustment case under chapter 12, an individual's debt adjustment case under chapter 13, or a reorganization case under chapter 11 of the Code, other than for the reorganization of a railroad, the examination may also relate to the operation of any business and the desirability of its continuance, the source of any money or property acquired or to be acquired by the debtor for purposes of consummating a plan and the consideration given or offered therefor, and any other matter relevant to the case or to the formulation of a plan.
> The attendance of an entity for examination and for the production of documents, whether the examination is to be conducted within or without the district in which the case is pending, may be compelled as provided in Rule 9016 for the attendance of a witness at a hearing or trial. As an officer of the court, an attorney may issue and sign a subpoena on behalf of the court for the district in which the examination is to be held if the attorney is admitted to practice in that court or in the court in which the case is pending.

(emphasis added).

The permitted scope of a Rule 2004 examination is very broad. "It can be legitimately compared to a fishing expedition." In re Drexel Burnham Lambert Group, Inc., 123 B.R. 702, 711(Bankr. S.D.N.Y. 1991) (citing In re Vantage Petroleum Corp., 34 B.R. 650, 651 (Bankr. E.D.N.Y. 1983). The examination needs only to relate to the administration of the case or the bankruptcy estate. Given its broad scope, Rule 2004 is a very important mechanism for obtaining information prior to the commencement of litigation in a bankruptcy case. Once litigation is commenced as to a particular matter, discovery is generally conducted under the rules applicable in adversary proceedings and contested matters. Int'l Fibercom, Inc., 283 B.R. 290, 292-93 (Bankr.

D. Ariz. 2002).

Persons subject to a Rule 2004 examination may seek a protective order to appropriately limit or preclude the examination. The bankruptcy court has jurisdiction over that matter pursuant to 28 U.S.C. § 1334 and 28 U.S.C. §§ 157(a) and (b)(2)(A), as it is a core proceeding concerning the administration of the estate. In re Coffee Cupboard, Inc., 128 B.R. 509, 517 (Bankr. E.D.N.Y. 1991); In re Drexel Burnham Lambert Group, Inc., 123 B.R. 702, 703 n.1 (Bankr. S.D.N.Y. 1991).

When considering a motion for protective order, the bankruptcy court need only determine whether there is "good cause" for the examination to proceed. See In re Wilcher, 56 B.R. 428, 434 (Bankr. N.D. Ill. 1985). Good cause may ordinarily be shown if the examination and requested documents are necessary to establish the claim of the party seeking the examination, or if denial of the examination request would cause it undue hardship or injustice. Id., at 434-35. The court, however, may limit the scope of an examination or provide other protections to ensure that examinations are properly conducted.

II. ARGUMENT

A. REQUIREMENTS FOR A STAY PENDING APPEAL

In considering a motion for stay pending appeal under Fed. R. Bankr. P. 8005, this Court must analyze four specific criteria:

> "(1) whether the stay applicant has made a strong showing that he is likely to succeed on the merits; (2) whether the applicant will be irreparably injured absent a stay; (3) whether issuance of the stay will substantially injure the other parties interested in the proceeding; and (4) where the public interest lies."

Republic of the Philippines v. Westinghouse Elec. Corp., 949 F.2d 653, 658 (3d. Cir. 1991) (quoting Hilton v. Braunskill, 481 U.S. 770, 777 (1987); see also In re Hayden, 2008 WL 400696, at 1 (W.D.

Pa. Feb. 11, 2008); In re Bankruptcy Appeal of Allegheny Health, Education and Research Foundation (“AHERF”), 252 B.R. 309, 321 (W.D. Pa. 1999). These four factors structure the inquiry, however “no one aspect will necessarily determine its outcome. Rather, proper judgment entails a ‘delicate balancing of all elements.’” AHERF, 252 B.R. at 321 (quoting In re Roth American, Inc., 90 B.R. 94, 95 (Bankr. M.D. Pa. 1988)). Because Countrywide has failed to meet its burden of demonstrating these conditions, the Court should deny Countrywide’s Motion.

B. COUNTRYWIDE HAS NOT MADE A STRONG SHOWING THAT IT IS LIKELY TO SUCCEED ON THE MERITS

1. Countrywide’s Appeal is Interlocutory

Countrywide should not be able to pursue the instant appeal at all, because the Order is not a final order. The District Court has jurisdiction to hear appeals from final orders entered by the Bankruptcy Court. 28 U.S.C. 158(a)(1); Sterling Supply Corp. v. Mullinax, 154 B.R. 660, 661 (E.D. Pa. 1993). “The finality requirement advances our interest in avoiding ‘piecemeal appeals’ during ongoing proceedings.” In re Flat Grass Antitrust Litigation (MDL No. 1200), 288 F.3d 83, 87 (3d Cir. 2002) (citing Firestone Tire & Rubber Co. v. Risjord, 449 U.S. 368, 374 (1991)). The Order does not resolve all issues potentially arising in the underlying cases, indeed the United States Trustee has only commenced its investigation in Hill and the other Context Cases.

Although Countrywide argues in its motion seeking leave to appeal that the Order is appealable under the Cohen “collateral order” doctrine, the Order cannot fall within that doctrine. The Order “resolved a discovery dispute, intertwined with the merits of an underlying action. It is well-established that unless a party is seeking to prevent the disclosure of information on the basis of trade secrets or some traditionally-recognized privilege such as attorney-client or work product, the collateral order doctrine does not permit appeal from discovery orders.” ADAPT of Philadelphia v. Philadelphia Housing Authority, 417 F.3d 390, 395 (3d Cir. 2005) (citing Powell v. Ridge, 247 F.3d 520, 524 (3d Cir. 2001).

The United States Trustee argues further for dismissal of the appeal in her response to Countrywide's motion seeking leave to appeal. In regard to this Motion to Stay, the United States Trustee simply submits that no stay should be provided where the appeal itself should be summarily dismissed.

2. The United States Trustee has Broad Authority to Raise Issues and Take Action in Bankruptcy Cases

The United States Department of Justice, on behalf of the federal government, has Article III standing to appear in federal court to enforce federal law. See Vermont Agency of Natural Resources v. United States ex rel. Stevens, 529 U.S. 765, 771 (2000) (the United States has standing to redress an "injury to its sovereignty arising from violation of its laws"); United States v. Raines, 362 U.S. 17, 27 (1960) (Congress may authorize the Attorney General to bring suit in federal court to enjoin violations of federal law); In re Debs, 158 U.S. 564, 584 (1895) (the Government's "obligation[]" to prevent violations of federal law is "sufficient to give [it] a standing in court"), disapproved on other grounds by Bloom v. State of Illinois, 391 U.S. 194, 208 (1968); see also Wyandotte Transp. Co. v. United States, 389 U.S. 191, 201 (1967) ("Our decisions have established [] the general rule that the United States may sue to protect its interests.").

The United States Trustee Program is the division of the Department of Justice that enforces federal bankruptcy law. See 28 U.S.C. §§ 581-89; H.R. Rep. No. 95-595, at 110 (1977) (the United States Trustee has an "obligation to execute and enforce the bankruptcy laws"); United Artists Theatre Co. v. Walton, 315 F.3d 217 (3d Cir. 2003) (the United States Trustees are "officers of the Department of Justice who protect the public interest by aiding bankruptcy judges and monitoring certain aspects of bankruptcy proceedings"); In re Glados, Inc., 83 F.3rd 1360,1361 n.1 (11th Cir.1996) ("The UST is an official of the United States Department of Justice charged by statute with the duty to oversee and supervise the administration of bankruptcy cases. 28 U.S.C. §586 (a)").

The Justice Department's representative in this case is the United States Trustee for Region 3, a senior Department official appointed by the Attorney General, 28 U.S.C. § 581(a)(3), and she has authority from the Attorney General to protect the federal government's interest in enforcing the Bankruptcy Code. See 28 U.S.C. § 517. As an Executive Branch official, a United States Trustee need not demonstrate any concrete, particularized injury in order to assert standing.[4] See United Artist Theater Co. v. Walton, 315 F.3d 217, 225 (3d Cir. 2003).

Even absent Section 307, the United States Trustee has standing to act where its actions advance the UST's interest in the administration of bankruptcy proceedings. A-1 Trash Pickup v. United States Trustee (In re A-1 Trash Pickup), 802 F.2d 774, 775-76 (4th Cir. 1986) ("when Congress created the office of United States trustee, it expected the trustees to actively oversee the administration of bankruptcy cases and to intervene whenever particular actions threatened an abuse of the bankruptcy system or its procedures") (case decided prior to enactment of 11 U.S.C. § 307).

While the United States Trustee's authority is not premised on Section 307 alone, that statute certainly provides broad authority for the United States Trustee to raise issues and be heard in bankruptcy cases and proceedings as she takes such actions as she deems necessary in order to protect the public interest in the enforcement of federal bankruptcy law. See United States Trustee v. Price Waterhouse, 19 F.3d 138, 141 (3d Cir. 1994); In re Glados, Inc., 83 F.3d 1360, 1361 n.1

Greenwood*, -- F.3d -- 2007 WL 3286743, at *7 n.3 (6th Cir. November 8, 2007).

3. The United States Trustee May Take Rule 2004 Examinations Like Any Other Party in Interest in a Bankruptcy Case.

Fed. R. Bankr. P. 2004 does not narrowly circumscribe the persons authorized to take examinations under the rule, but rather provides that "any party in interest" may seek to conduct such an examination of any entity, though subject to the limitations regarding the scope of the examination and subject to the Court's authority to limit the examination in appropriate circumstances. The phrase "party in interest" is not defined in title 11 or in the applicable rules, but courts have generally construed the phrase in Rule 2004 liberally to effectuate the purpose of the rule. See In re Summit Corp., 891 F.2d 1, 5 (1st Cir. 1989); Matter of M4 Ents. Inc., 190 B.R. 471, 474 (Bankr. N.D. Ga. 1995) (adopting reasoning of Summit). The phrase is clearly broad enough to include the United States Trustee, particularly in light of the enactment of 11 U.S.C. § 307. Thompson v. Greenwood, 507 F.3d 416, 420 n.3 (6th Cir. 2007) (citing Section 307 for the proposition that the United States Trustee is an interested party by statute). Even prior to the enactment of Section 307 in 1986, the United States Trustee was considered a "party in interest" under the Bankruptcy Code. See, e.g., A-1 Trash Pickup, 802 F.2d at 777 (United States Trustee is "party in interest" under 11 U.S.C. § 1112(b), referencing Bankruptcy Rule X-10009 (since superseded), which stated that ". . . [t]he United States trustee may raise and appear and be heard on any issue relating to his responsibilities in a case under the Code.").

Countrywide could only succeed on the merits if 28 U.S.C. § 586 so narrowly constrains the United States Trustee's scope of activity that the United States Trustee, unlike every other party in interest in a bankruptcy case, cannot investigate the assets, liabilities and financial affairs of debtors under Fed. R. Bankr. P. 2004. Countrywide fails to cite any good authority, because none exists, for the proposition that Section 586 sets such narrowly prescribed limits on the authority of the United States Trustee. Countrywide's reading of Section 586 ignores the express language of Section 586(a)(5), which states that the United States Trustee shall ". . . perform the duties prescribed for the United States trustee under title 11 and this title, and such duties consistent with title 11 and this title as the Attorney General may prescribe." (emphasis added) And while many provisions of Section 586 set forth specific duties of the United States Trustee, that is not inconsistent with the United States Trustee's broader role in supervising the administration of bankruptcy cases. "[W]hen two statutes are capable of coexistence, it is the duty of the courts, absent a clearly expressed congressional intention to the contrary, to regard each as effective.'" J.E.M. Ag. Supply, Inc. v. Pioneer Hi-Bred Int'l, Inc., 534 U.S. 124, 143-44 (2001) (quoting Morton v. Mancari, 417 U.S. 535, 551 (1974)). The legislative history of the statute, as well as Congress' enactment of Section 307, further belie Countrywide's narrow, constrictive reading of Section 586. Memorandum Opinion, at 11-16.

4. The Bankruptcy Court Correctly Found and Concluded that the United States Trustee Had Demonstrated Good Cause to Conduct the Rule 2004 Examinations

While the United States Trustee has the general authority and standing to conduct a Rule 2004 examination, the United States Trustee must nonetheless, like any party in interest, demonstrate "good cause" for such an examination. Memorandum Opinion, at 26-43. The United States Trustee thoroughly addressed these concerns in the proceeding below, seeking to conduct the Rule 2004 examinations based on substantial allegations of potential misconduct in each of the Context Cases. The Bankruptcy Court had "little difficulty concluding that the UST has met her initial burden of sufficient 'good cause' to proceed with the Countrywide Rule 2004 exam . . . ." Memorandum Opinion, at 36. The Bankruptcy Court found that the United States Trustee "has made a showing of a common thread of potential wrongdoing in each of the cases that is sufficient to meet the general standard of good cause for her to proceed under Rule 2004."[5] Countrywide has not appealed that finding, nor has Countrywide raised any issue on appeal regarding the various other concerns it raised in the Bankruptcy Court with respect to the permitted scope of the examination and related document production. See Memorandum Opinion at 41 (disposing of such other issues raised by Countrywide). Notably, instead of arguing on appeal that it deserves protection that can be properly granted by the Bankruptcy Court under Rule 2004, Countrywide

[5] Even if Countrywide were permitted to argue the absence of "good cause" as an issue on appeal, it is unlikely that Countrywide would prevail prevail where "[a] bankruptcy court's decision to order a Rule 2004 examination is reviewed for abuse of discretion." In re Metiom, Inc., 318 B.R. 263, 267 (S.D.N.Y. 2004); see also In re Mattera, 2007 WL 1813763, *2 (Bankr. D.N.J. June 13, 2007) ("The permissive language of Rule 2004 connotes a court's discretion in deciding whether to grant a request for a Rule 2004 examination") citing In re Enron Corp., 281 B.R. 836, 840 (Bankr. S.D.N.Y. 2002) ("the [bankruptcy court] has the discretion to grant a request for a 2004 examination").

simply raises again, with no genuine support in the case law, the specter of an "unauthorized expansion of power by an agency of the Executive branch" that "threatens the constitutional system of checks and balances." Countrywide Brief, at 13.

C. COUNTRYWIDE WILL NOT SUFFER IRREPARABLE INJURY IF A STAY IS NOT GRANTED

Countrywide suggests that because the United States Trustee's Rule 2004 examination "will be costly and intrusive to Countrywide," it will suffer irreparable harm. Motion to Stay, p.7. There is no support for that conclusion in the record below. Even if that naked assertion regarding costs were true, "the prospect of substantial financial loss does not establish irreparable harm." MacElvain v. U.S., 867 F. Supp. 996, 1001 (M.D. Ala.1994); see also OM Group, Inc. v. Mooney, 2006 WL 68791, *9 (M.D. Fla. January 11, 2006) (noting that "financial loss" was "not a sufficient ground to establish irreparable harm warranting injunctive relief."); Fluor Daniel Argentina, Inc. v. ANZ Bank, 13 F.Supp.2d 562, 564 (S.D.N.Y. 1998) ("As a matter of law, monetary loss alone will generally not amount to irreparable harm"). Further, although Countrywide argues that the United States Trustee's "invasion of Countrywide's private business practices . . . cannot be undone once it has started . . . ," any order authorizing discovery – once complied with – has the same effect. Countrywide has failed to show that a particular injury will result from the examinations that the Bankruptcy Court has authorized. The provision of non-privileged information or material pursuant to discovery does not necessarily render a subsequent appeal moot even though the knowledge gained by the discovery cannot be "erased." Adapt of Philadelphia v. Philadelphia Housing Authority, 417 F.3d 390, 393-94 (3d Cir. 2005).

D. A STAY PENDING APPEAL WILL HARM THE PUBLIC INTEREST

The Bankruptcy Court's Order limited the United States Trustee's examination and related document production in the non-Hill context cases, by requiring that the examination be conducted within the Hill case and by staying the examination in the other context cases. This procedural limitation was imposed "for the sake of administrative convenience and to avoid any potential res judicata issues." Memorandum Opinion at 50. The discovery cut-off date in Hill is May 23, 2008, and the Bankruptcy Court has scheduled the final pretrial conference for June 24, 2008. By the time of that pre-trial conference, the litigation initiated by the Debtor's Motion to Enforce Discharge will have been pending almost exactly one year, and naturally that matter should not be stayed pending resolution of the instant appeal. Consequently, a stay pending appeal may preclude the United States Trustee from conducting the examinations within the pending litigation, though such examinations might be pursued later in the Hill case if it remains open.[6]

The United States Trustee has sought to conduct the Rule 2004 examinations for reasons having a potentially significant impact on the integrity of the bankruptcy process. Countrywide, as a nationwide servicer of mortgages, participates in a large number of bankruptcy cases nationwide. The United States Trustee seeks to determine, in the Context Cases, whether Countrywide's conduct has deviated from the standards established by the Bankruptcy Code. The Bankruptcy Court itself found that there is a common thread of potential wrongdoing in each of the [6] At page 12 of Countrywide's Brief, Countrywide argues that any harm caused by delay would be "self-inflicted" by the United States Trustee, referencing an alleged failure by the United States Trustee to timely conduct examinations in two Florida cases, In re Chadwick and In re Del Castillo. There is no factual record supporting this contention, either in this Court or in the Bankruptcy Court. Countrywide, indeed, is responsible for any delay in the Florida cases, having still failed to comply with the United States Trustee's demand for the underlying documents in the two cases even after the District Court dismissed Countrywide's appeals.

Context Cases. If the United States Trustee, through the Rule 2004 examinations, learns of systemic, inappropriate conduct by Countrywide in fact, then it is important that actions be taken to protect the public interest as expeditiously as possible.

CONCLUSION

For all of the foregoing reasons, the United States Trustee submits that this Court should deny the Motion to Stay.

INTRODUCTION

Countrywide's motion for reconsideration of the dismissal of its appeal should be denied. It is well-settled law that where, as here, a party seeks to challenge a district court order reviewing a non-final bankruptcy ruling, immediate review is unavailable because the district court order is itself not final. Countrywide has not and cannot demonstrate that the bankruptcy court and district court rulings in this case are final, and therefore offers no basis for this Court to reconsider its dismissal of Countrywide's appeal.

BACKGROUND

On July 19, 2007, Countrywide filed a proof of claim in the chapter 13 bankruptcy case of Manuel Del Castillo and Maria E. Pena (the "Debtors"). Countrywide represented that it held a claim of $287,902.23 secured by the Debtors' primary residence, and that the Debtors owed Countrywide pre-petition arrears of $16,417.67 and an insufficient funds fee of $682.88. Countrywide's proof of claim further stated that effective July 1, 2007, the Debtors' monthly payment to Countrywide would increase from $1,783.64 to $4,773.54.

On August 10, 2007, the Debtors objected to Countrywide's proof of claim, asserting that Countrywide failed to provide a breakdown of the claimed arrears and fees or to explain the basis for the increased monthly payment. Countrywide did not respond to the Debtors' objection. Accordingly, on August 28, 2007, the bankruptcy court entered an order sustaining the Debtors' objection and reducing Countrywide's claim.

Following the disallowance of Countrywide's claim, the United States Trustee commenced an inquiry into whether Countrywide's conduct in this case deviated from the standards established by the Bankruptcy Code and constituted an abuse of the bankruptcy system.[1] In furtherance of this investigation, the United States Trustee served Countrywide with a notice of examination and subpoena pursuant to Bankruptcy Rule 2004, seeking discovery regarding the factual basis for Countrywide's proof of claim. Countrywide objected, arguing that the United States Trustee lacked statutory authority to investigate the factual basis of the company's claim, and that the requested discovery exceeded the permissible scope of a Rule 2004 examination.

On November 20, 2007, the bankruptcy court entered an order that sustained Countrywide's objections on certain discrete topics, but rejected Countrywide's contention that the discovery as a whole was impermissible, and overruled

[1] United States Trustees are Department of Justice Officials appointed by the Attorney General, who supervise the administration of bankruptcy cases. See 28 U.S.C. § 581-589(a); see also H.R. Rep. No. 95-595, at 88 (1977), as reprinted in 1978 U.S.C.C.A.N. 5963, 6049 (United States Trustees "serve as bankruptcy watch-dogs to prevent fraud, dishonesty, and overreaching in the bankruptcy arena.").

Countrywide's objection to a portion of the notice that sought all documents relating to the company's internal "policy and procedure" for filing bankruptcy claims. Countrywide filed a motion for leave to appeal the discovery order in the United States District Court for the Southern District of Florida. The district court denied the motion, holding that an order granting or denying discovery is, by its nature, not final, and that, under the facts of the Debtors' bankruptcy case, none of the recognized exceptions to the rule against interlocutory appeals applied.

On May 27, 2008, the United States Trustee filed a motion to expand discovery to include copies of internal audits that had been publicly announced by Countrywide during Congressional testimony by the company's Chief Executive for Loan Administration. On June 27, 2008, the bankruptcy court granted the motion over Countrywide's objections, but noted that in responding to discovery requests, Countrywide "may assert objections based upon privilege, subject to the U.S. Trustree's right to contest Countrywide's claim of privilege and this Court's determination regarding the applicability of such privilege," and that Countrywide "may object on the grounds of undue burden based on a particularized showing, and may seek relief from the [bankruptcy] [c]ourt." See Bankruptcy Court Order (Appellant's Record Excerpts ("R.E.") Tab 12) at 2-3.

Countrywide filed a notice of appeal to the district court, again arguing that such orders are appealable as of right, but in the alternative requesting leave to file an interlocutory appeal. On October 30, 2008, the district court denied the second appeal on substantially the same grounds as it had denied the first appeal. District Court Order (R.E. Tab 16) at 5-12. In particular, the court noted that although a discovery order may be considered final if it involves "a person who has custody of materials as to which another person may claim a privilege of non-disclosure," id. at 6 (internal quotation omitted), no such exception applied in this case because the Debtors did not assert any claim of privilege and did not oppose the United States Trustee's discovery requests. Id. at 7.

In addition, the district court held that the "collateral order" doctrine could not be satisfied because, among other things, if Countrywide were sanctioned in this proceeding, it would have ample opportunity to appeal. Id. at 9. Finally, the Court held that the record before it did not provide any basis for granting discretionary leave to appeal, explaining that "Countrywide has simply not demonstrated that the Order differs materially from routine discovery orders from which interlocutory appeals are discouraged as contravening the policy against piecemeal litigation." Id. at 12.

Countrywide subsequently filed a notice of appeal to this Court, and on January 14, 2009, filed its opening brief. On January 21, 2009, this Court dismissed the appeal for lack of jurisdiction, explaining that the district court's order was neither final nor immediately appealable. Countrywide now seeks reconsideration of that dismissal order.

REASONS FOR DENYING THE MOTION

This Court's dismissal of Countrywide's appeal is correct and Countrywide has offered no persuasive basis for reconsidering it. It is well-settled that where, as here, a bankruptcy court ruling is not final, a district court order reviewing the bankruptcy ruling is also not final and is therefore not subject to immediate appeal. District courts have jurisdiction to hear appeals from final judgments and orders of bankruptcy courts, 28 U.S.C. § 158(a)(1), and, "with leave of the court," to hear appeals "from other interlocutory orders and decrees," 28 U.S.C. § 158(a)(3). The courts of appeals have jurisdiction to hear "appeals from all final decisions, judgments, orders, and decrees" entered by the district court or a bankruptcy appellate panel. 28 U.S.C. § 158(d)(1). Accordingly, this Court has held that where a bankruptcy court ruling is not final, the district court order reviewing the bankruptcy ruling is also not final for purposes of 28 U.S.C. § 158(d). See Dzikowski v. Boomer's Sports & Recreation Center, Inc. (In re Boca Arena, Inc.), 184 F.3d 1285, 1286 (11th Cir. 1999). Indeed, every court of appeals to consider this issue has held that a district court order reviewing a non-final bankruptcy ruling is not subject to immediate appeal. See Stubbe v. Banco Central Corp. (In re Empresas Noroeste, Inc.), 806 F.2d 315, 316 (1st Cir. 1986); Flor v. BOT Financial Group (In re Flor), 79 F.3d 281, 283 (2d Cir. 1996); Commerce Bank v. Mountain View Village, Inc., 5 F.3d 34, 36 (3d Cir. 1993); Sumy v. Schlossberg, 777 F.2d 921, 922-23 (4th Cir. 1985); Andrews & Kurth v. Family Snacks, Inc. (In re Pro-Snax Distributors, Inc.), 157 F.3d 414, 420 (5th Cir. 1998); Marlow v. Rollins Cotton Co. (In re Julien Co.), 146 F.3d 420, 422 (6th Cir. 1998); In re Rimsat Ltd., 212 F.3d 1039, 1044 (7th Cir. 2000); Lewis v. United States, Farmers Home Administration, 992 F.2d 767, 768, 772 (8th Cir. 1993); Stanley v. S.S. Retail Stores Corp. (In re S.S. Retail Stores Corp.), 162 F.3d 1230, 1232 (9th Cir. 1998); Simons v. FDIC (In re Simons), 908 F.2d 643, 644 (10th Cir. 1990) (per curiam); see also 1 Collier on Bankruptcy ¶ 5.09[2] (rev. 15th ed. 2001).

Although Countrywide asserts that the challenged discovery order is in fact final, this argument is plainly without merit. As the district court explained, discovery orders are by their nature non-final, and appellate review of discovery orders is strongly discouraged. See In re International Horizons, Inc., 689 F.2d 996, 1000-01 (11th Cir. 1982) (holding that "as a general proposition most orders granting or denying discovery are not final orders . . . and therefore are not immediately appealable" (internal quotation omitted)). Countrywide attempts to distinguish the challenged discovery order as "final" in the sense that it involves a "distinct dispute," but the same characterization could be made of any discovery dispute. Were Countrywide's statement of law correct, even the most minute discovery order would by definition become immediately appealable as of right. As one court has observed, such an outcome "undermines the purpose of the finality rule" by creating "fragmented litigation, which clogs the appellate courts and causes unnecessary delay in the trial courts." Barrick Group, Inc. v. Moss, 849 F.2d 70, 72 (2d Cir. 1982).

The sole exception to the finality rule on which Countrywide now relies is the "collateral order" doctrine, under which an interlocutory order may be reviewed if each of three factors are present:

> (1) [T]he order must be independent and easily separable from the substance of other claims in the action, (2) it must present a need to secure prompt review in order to protect important interests of any party, and (3) it must be examined in the light of practical, rather than narrowly technical, consideration.

In re Tidewater Group, Inc., 734 F.2d 794, 796-97 (11th Cir. 1984).

As the district court properly concluded, Countrywide has failed to demonstrate that each of these elements is present. See District Court Order (R.E. Tab 16) at 6-9. In particular, Countrywide fails to explain why an appeal is necessary to protect the interests of any party. Nothing in the record indicates that any of the documents sought by the United States Trustee are subject to privileges held by third parties. And there is no reason to speculate, as Countrywide does, that the Rule 2004 examination will necessarily terminate all litigation involving Countrywide. Indeed, there have already been two discovery orders against Countrywide in the present case, and the challenged order expressly contemplates that in responding to the United States Trustee's discovery requests, Countrywide may assert additional "objections based upon privilege," "may object on the grounds of undue burden based on a particularized showing, and may seek relief from the [bankruptcy] [c]ourt." See Bankruptcy Court Order (R.E. Tab 12) at 2-3. Moreover, as Countrywide itself notes, the company is currently the subject of several pending investigations and sanctions proceedings arising out of its conduct in bankruptcy cases. See Appellant's Br. at 36-37. In any event, should sanctions or other similar relief prove to be warranted in this case, Countrywide would then have ample opportunity to appeal any adverse orders at the conclusion of the proceeding ordering such relief.

Countrywide asks in the alternative that this Court reverse as an abuse of discretion the district court's denial of Countrywide's motion for leave to file an interlocutory appeal. As already explained, however, a district court order regarding a non-final bankruptcy ruling is not subject to immediate review by the court of appeals because "there is no jurisdictional provision authorizing a court of appeals to hear an appeal from a district court's decision regarding a bankruptcy court's interlocutory order, whether it denies leave to appeal or renders a decision on the merits." In re Kassover, 343 F.3d 91, 94 (2d Cir. 2003); see also In re City of Desert

Hot Springs, 339 F.3d 782, 792 (9th Cir. 2003) (observing that the "exercise of discretion [not to grant leave to appeal under § 158(a)] is not subject to our review"); In re Ford Motor Co., 344 F.3d 648, 653-55 (7th Cir. 2002) (finding, in the analogous context of 28 U.S.C. § 1292(b), that the district court's refusal to grant leave to file an interlocutory appeal is "the end of the matter" and not subject to review by the court of appeals); In re American Colonial Broadcasting Corp., 758 F.2d 794, 801 (1st Cir. 1985) ("The district court's denial of leave to appeal an interlocutory order is itself interlocutory since the effect of the denial is to leave matters in the bankruptcy court in the same unfinished state they were prior to the attempted appeal.").[2]

In any event, the district court was well within its discretion in denying Countrywide's motion to file an interlocutory appeal of the challenged discovery order. Countrywide concedes that in declining to allow the interlocutory appeal, the district court properly applied the standards set forth in 28 U.S.C. § 1292(b), which requires that (1) the challenged order involve a question of law; (2) there be a substantial ground for difference of opinion regarding the court's resolution of that question of law; and (3) an immediate appeal of the order may materially advance the ultimate termination of the litigation. See Appellant's Br. at 43; District Court Order (R.E. Tab 16) at 10 (citing McFarlin v. Conseco Servs., LLC, 381 F.3d 1251, 1259 (11th Cir. 2004)).

[2] Although Countrywide cites In re Charter Co., 778 F.2d 617 (11th Cir. 1985), for the proposition that a district court's denial of leave to file an interlocutory appeal may be reviewed for abuse of discretion, see Appellant's Br. at 43 n.13, it does not appear from that opinion that the Court was asked to consider whether the denial of leave to file an interlocutory appeal may itself be appealed. Under these circumstances, the disposition of an issue is not controlling in future cases. See Bryant v. Avado Brands, Inc., 187 F.3d 1271, 1280 (11th Cir. 1999) (citing Webster v. Fall, 266 U.S. 507, 511 (1925), for the proposition that "[q]uestions which merely lurk in the record, neither brought to the attention of the court nor ruled upon, are not to be considered as having been so decided as to constitute precedents").

Countrywide contends that the dispositive issue raised by its appeal is whether the authorized discovery falls within the scope of Rule 2004. Countrywide continues to assert that its "private" business affairs fall outside the scope of Rule 2004 and argues that the requested discovery is not related to this bankruptcy case. See Appellant's Br. at 43-49. Countrywide fails to demonstrate, however, that there is any material difference of opinion among courts as to whether Rule 2004 is available to investigate the filing of possibly false or inaccurate claims by a creditor in a bankruptcy case, and there is no authority suggesting that Countrywide would be likely to prevail on the merits of an appeal. In this case, evidence of Countrywide's internal audits are directly relevant to the issue of whether the possible errors in the Debtors' bankruptcy case form part of a pervasive or systemic pattern of misconduct. That issue, in turn, may be highly relevant to the question of what remedy, if any, should be imposed in the event that the bankruptcy court determines that Countrywide has engaged in misconduct. Consequently, Countrywide cannot demonstrate that its theory on appeal holds sufficient merit to permit an immediate interlocutory appeal. See District Court Order (R.E. Tab 16) at 10-12 (explaining that the discovery issues raised by Countrywide "present no controlling questions of law and are left to the sound discretion of the court that is fully familiar with the entire proceeding — the bankruptcy judge" (internal quotation omitted)).

CONCLUSION

For the foregoing reasons, appellant's motion for reconsideration should be denied.

UNITED STATES DISTRICT COURT
SOUTHERN DISTRICT OF FLORIDA
MIAMI DIVISION

CASE NO.: 08-CV-23337-ASG

DONALD F. WALTON,
United States Trustee for Region 21,

Appellant.

COUNTRYWIDE HOME LOANS, INC.,

Appellee.

UNITED STATES TRUSTEE'S RESPONSE TO MOTION OF COUNTRYWIDE HOME LOANS, INC FOR RECONSIDERATION OF ORDER REVERSING AND REMANDING BANKRUPTCY COURT ORDER [Dkt. 27]

Appellant, Donald F. Walton, the United States Trustee for Region 21 (the "United States Trustee"), by and through his duly authorized counsel, hereby responds to the motion of Countrywide Home Loans, Inc. ("Countrywide") for reconsideration of the Court's order dated June 9, 2009, which reversed and remanded an order of the United States Bankruptcy Court for the Southern District of Florida dismissing the United States Trustee's adversary complaint against Countrywide. In support of this Response, the United States Trustee states as follows:

Countrywide's motion does not suggest it has been denied the opportunity to vigorously present its legal theories to this Court. Nor does Countrywide identify any newly discovered evidence supportive of its position. It does not suggest that there were are any questions on appeal for which this Court inadvertently failed to issue a ruling. Rather, the sole basis for Countrywide's motion appears to be Countrywide's belief that this Court's order is wrongly decided.

Countrywide had a full and fair opportunity to make its arguments to this Court before that order was entered. Countrywide filed two briefs and three other substantive pleadings, not counting the present motion for reconsideration.[1] Countryside's motion should be denied because it says nothing new.

As the Eleventh Circuit has repeatedly cautioned, a motion for reconsideration may not be used as a vehicle to relitigate issues already decided, or to raise new arguments that could have been (but were not) raised before judgment, as Countrywide does here. Mincey v. Head, 206 F.3d 1106, 1137 (11th Cir. 2000). Therefore, regardless whether this Court evaluates Countrywide's motion under Fed. R. Bankr. P. 8015, which is applicable here, or under Fed. R. Civ. P. 59, on which Countrywide incorrectly relies, there is no basis for the relief Countrywide seeks.

1. Because Countrywide has not alleged that the Court overlooked any pertinent fact or issue on appeal, it has not met the standard for reconsideration relief under Fed. R. Bankr. P. 8015 and Fed. R. App. P. 40.

When a district court exercises appellate jurisdiction over a bankruptcy court decision, motions for reconsideration are governed by Fed. R. Bankr. P. 8015. Although the Eleventh Circuit has yet to address the issue, other circuits have construed Bankruptcy Rule 8015 as incorporating the standards of Fed. R. App. P. 40, from which much of the text of the rule is borrowed. See United States v. Fowler (In re Fowler), 394 F.3d 1208, 1215 (9th Cir. 2005)

[1] Although Countrywide is the appellee in this appeal, having obtained full relief from the bankruptcy court, it nonetheless filed a purported "cross-appeal" that allowed it to file an additional brief in the case (Dkt. 14). In addition, prior to judgment in this appeal, Countrywide also filed a pleading in support of its alleged cross-appeal (Dkt. 11) and two substantive memoranda in reply to notices of supplemental authority filed by the United States Trustee (Dkts. 19, 25)

(looking to Appellate Rule 40 for "guidance" in construing Bankruptcy Rule 8015); BCorp-HRT, LLC v. Lobb (In re Lobb), 66 Fed. Appx. 164, 167 (10th Cir. 2003) (holding that because Bankruptcy Rule 8015 is silent on standards for reconsideration, court would look to standards under parallel appellate rule).

Under Rule 40, reconsideration relief is available in just two narrow circumstances. In order to obtain relief, the movant must state with particularity and establish that the appellate court either misconstrued a fact in the record, or that it overlooked or failed to consider one of the arguments on appeal. Easley v. Reuss, 532 F.3d 592, 593 (7th Cir. 2008) (holding that Rule 40 motion "should alert the panel to factual or legal matters that the panel may have failed to address or may have misunderstood"); United States v. Wiles, 106 F.3d 1516, 1517 (10th Cir. 1997) (same); see also Hitchcock v. Wright, 777 F.2d 628, 629 (11th Cir. 1985) (Johnson, J., dissenting) (noting that the "focus of the petition for rehearing is . . . to enable the court to correct its mistakes"). Rule 40 does not, however, allow parties to relitigate issues that were already decided, nor does it permit a losing party to introduce new arguments in support of its position. Easley, 532 F.3d at 593 (noting that court "cannot have 'overlooked or misapprehended' an issue that was not presented to it").

Countrywide's request for reconsideration does not meet the exacting standards for relief under Rule 40 and, accordingly, Bankruptcy Rule 8015. Countrywide does not allege that there are any relevant facts that this Court ignored, and while it disagrees with this Court's conclusions, it cannot point to any argument on appeal that this Court neglected to address. Instead, Countrywide seeks to relitigate the Court's decision based on the same factual record and arguments that have already been considered. Such relief is not authorized by Rule 40. See

Wiles, 106 F.3d at 1517 (holding that a motion for rehearing "should be more than a restatement of arguments originally presented on appeal and a petition based on such is 'without merit.'") (internal citation omitted).

2. Alternatively, Countrywide has not alleged any basis for relief under Fed. R. Civ. P. 59(e)

Even if Countrywide's motion was properly framed as a request for relief under Fed. R. Civ. P. 59(e), the result is no different. As the Eleventh Circuit has long recognized, the mere fact that a party disagrees with a court's ruling is an insufficient basis for seeking reconsideration under Rule 59(e): "The function of a [Rule 59(e) motion] is not to serve as a vehicle to relitigate old matters or present the case under a new legal theory . . . [or] to give the moving party another 'bite at the apple' by permitting the arguing of issues and procedures that could and should have been raised prior to judgment." Mincey v. Head, 206 F.3d 1106, 1137 (11th Cir. 2000) (internal citation omitted).

In particular, under Eleventh Circuit law, "[t]he only grounds for granting [a motion for reconsideration] are newly-discovered evidence or manifest errors of law or fact." Kellogg v. Schreiber (In re Kellogg), 197 F.3d 1116, 1119 (11th Cir. 1999). Countrywide does not meet this high standard. In this case, Countrywide does not identify any binding precedent that the Court failed to apply, nor is it able to cite a single factually apposite decision from any jurisdiction supportive of its arguments. Rather, Countrywide's motion simply asserts that this Court's ruling was wrongly decided. Without more, however, the fact that Countrywide disagrees with this Court does not warrant reconsideration. See Michael Linet, Inc. v. Village of Wellington, 408 F.3d 757, 763 (11th Cir. 2005) (noting that Rule 59(e) motion cannot be used to "relitigate old matters").

Conversely, to the extent the arguments raised in Countrywide's latest motion are construed as being somehow distinct from the arguments this Court has already considered and rejected, Countrywide's motion is improper because a Rule 59(e) motion cannot be used to introduce new theories. See Wilchombe v. Teeve Toons, Inc., 555 F.3d 949, 957 (11th Cir. 2005) (holding that motion for reconsideration cannot be used to raise arguments that could have been raised prior to judgment); Michael Linet, 408 F.3d at 763 (same). As a result, regardless of how this Court construes Countrywide's motion, Countrywide is not entitled to relief.

3. Countrywide fails to demonstrate that this Court's order was wrongly decided.

Even if the merits of Countrywide's arguments were before this Court, Countrywide has not demonstrated that the Court erred by reversing the bankruptcy court. To the contrary, the Eleventh Circuit just issued a decision that both reinforces this Court's major holdings and forecloses a number of the principal theories relied on by Countrywide. See Ginsberg v. Evergreen Security, Ltd. (In re Evergreen Security, Ltd.), Case No. 08-14064, 2009 WL 1622386 (11th Cir. June 11, 2009). In Evergreen, the Eleventh Circuit affirmed a bankruptcy court order, entered pursuant to section 105(a) of the Bankruptcy Code and the bankruptcy court's inherent authority, that imposed, among other sanctions, an injunction against an attorney in order to deter future misconduct. Evergreen conclusively resolves several of the key issues litigated in this case, including the power of the bankruptcy court to issue sanctions under section 105(a) and its inherent powers, the availability of injunctive sanctions to redress litigation misconduct, and the jurisdiction of bankruptcy judges to impose sanctions. On each of these issues, the Eleventh Circuit's decision is fully in accord with the Court's ruling in the present case.

Countrywide relegates Evergreen to a footnote, and attempts to distinguish that decision by arguing that the Eleventh Circuit only discussed sanctions that are “civil” and “coercive.” Motion at 4 n.4. But the misconduct alleged and the sanctions sought in the present case are indistinguishable from the misconduct and sanctions in Evergreen. Both cases involve litigation misconduct in the form of the filing of baseless, frivolous pleadings, and the remedy sought here by the United States Trustee, like the remedy affirmed in Evergreen, is for appropriate monetary and equitable sanctions sufficient to deter a repetition of such conduct in the future.

Evergreen makes clear that bankruptcy courts within this circuit possess jurisdiction and power to control parties, like Countrywide, either through monetary and injunctive relief. That is all the United States seeks in this case. The United States Trustee’s complaint simply asks the bankruptcy court to exercise its discretion to use its section 105(a) and inherent powers to ensure Countrywide stops filing improper pleadings and stops seeking improper relief. The complaint demands nothing; it simply identifies misconduct and asks the court below to determine whether that court wishes to use its power to remedy it.[2]

Countrywide’s additional arguments, even if they were properly before this Court, are equally unpersuasive. In particular, in what appears to be a new argument, Countrywide argues that the United States Trustee’s powers should be narrowly limited, relying on cases construing the statutory powers of agencies such as the EPA, the FCC, and the FDIC. Countrywide provides no explanation, however, for why the litigation authority of the Department of Justice would necessarily be the same as that of an independent agency such as the EPA, the FDIC, or the FCC.

[2] Evergreen reaffirms that the United States Trustee’s request for monetary and injunctive relief is civil in nature, and is further reason to reverse the bankruptcy court’s decision in this case.

Section 307 underscores why Countrywide's argument is wrong. Section 307 is broadly written – United States Trustees can raise any issue. It is broad because bankruptcy cases present a myriad of issues and United States Trustees exist to ferret out misconduct relating to all of them. Certainly, none of the agencies whose statutes Countrywide mentions possess a general statutory authorization to appear and be heard that is as broad as section 307, and Countrywide fails to provide any relevant authority supporting its claim that section 307 should not be applied according to its plain terms.

If Congress had wanted United States Trustees to act under a narrower statute, one that limited them to bringing only certain prescribed causes of action, Congress might have modeled it upon the statutes Countrywide mentions in its motion. It speaks volumes that Congress did the opposite. It drafted a broad statute. And a broad statute was needed. Bankruptcy cases are unlike other civil litigation. They are comprised of various discrete substantive proceedings, including contested matters brought by motion or application and adversary proceedings commenced by complaint. They involve numerous constituents, including debtors, creditors, professionals, bankruptcy petition preparers, co-conspirators, and others. To combat all the various forms of misconduct that can arise in bankruptcy cases, it was necessary and appropriate for Congress to give United States Trustees broader statutory authority – authority as broad as the misconduct that occurs in bankruptcy cases. Thus, there are good reasons why section 307 is not like the statutes Countrywide mentions, and is not limited to combating only a narrow category of misconduct.

Countrywide's remaining arguments appear to be virtually identical to arguments that it has raised in its numerous previous briefs, and the United States Trustee submits that no further discussion of such arguments is necessary.

Wherefore, the United States Trustee requests that the Court deny the relief requested by Countrywide.

DATED: June 26, 2009.

INTRODUCTION

Countrywide regularly files bankruptcy proofs of claim and other pleadings in Judge Shea-Stonum's courtroom. The record in this case establishes that Countrywide's automated computer system and minimally-trained employees prevented Countrywide from filing accurate pleadings and prevented Countrywide from correcting errors brought to its attention. As Ms. O'Neal did in her case. Six times. Without success.

The law does not allow any entity to file incorrect papers in federal court, something Countrywide did twice in Ms. O'Neal's case and has done, as we explain below, in other cases as well. To the contrary, courts, including this Court, routinely protect themselves from vexatious litigants. Relying upon the plain language of a federal statute, 11 U.S.C. § 105(a), and on Federal Rule of Bankruptcy Procedure 9011, the court below took analogous action. It found that Countrywide's system is not up to the task of filing accurate information. That finding is not clearly erroneous, so this Court should affirm it.

Based on the evidence before it, the court has required Countrywide to share a summary worksheet ("Summary") so the court, debtors, other creditors and the United States no longer need to plow through entire bankruptcy files to verify pleadings that Countrywide files with the court as proper claims - but that too often are not. Accurate self reporting is the lifeblood of bankruptcy. When counsel, acting on client information, submit inaccurate bankruptcy court filings, the system breaks down. As it did here.

Section 105(a) gives bankruptcy courts express power, power drawn directly from the statute's text, to "prevent" that kind of an "abuse." 11 U.S.C. 105(a). Given its findings, the court below used its congressionally-bestowed statutory power to make a measured response.

There was nothing daring about that. Even absent a statute such as section 105, courts routinely take the analogous step of prohibiting vexatious litigants from filing pleadings. They also require pre-filing approval. Judge Shea-Stonum's remedy is far more modest than either of the remedies courts impose on vexatious litigants. The court merely required Countrywide to do two things. Countrywide must satisfy itself that it has engaged in what it deems to be appropriate due diligence before filing documents with the court that it represents to be correct. Then it must share a Summary that memorializes its due diligence review so others can spot check it. That costs Countrywide $9,000 a year. Money well spent to avoid having bankruptcy courts and others force it to correct avoidable errors.

There is absolutely nothing novel about requiring Countrywide to file a Summary. To the contrary, the Official Proof of Claim Form itself recognizes creditors may need to "attach a summary" to document their claims, or a second summary to document their secured status. Fed. R. Bankr. P. Official Form 10, ¶ 7. Because the evidence here led the court to find Countrywide cannot be confident about the accuracy of its proofs of claim, Countrywide must use the summary option - an option contemplated by the Official Form - until it addresses its claims filing problems and fixes them. Ironically, drafting either of the optional summaries authorized by Form 10 should have caused Countrywide to notice that its O'Neal proof of claim was wrong. Presumably, the lower court's mandated Summary will protect Countrywide in a similar fashion.

The court's response is even more measured because it is temporary. At any time, Countrywide can ask the court below to lift, or modify, these modest requirements simply by demonstrating it has mastered its own court filing system. It has the right to make constructive suggestions. It fact, the bankruptcy court practically begged it to do so. That offer presumably still stands. When Countrywide can satisfy the court below that its system has been reformed to fix errors effectively and quickly, it can move the bankruptcy court to lift its order. If the court refuses, Countrywide can appeal.

The court's response is also geographically restrained. Judge Shea-Stonum is protecting only her courtroom from Countrywide's inaccurate filings.

In the United States' view, the bankruptcy court used its powers under section 105(a) and Rule 9011 to create a Summary that will compel Countrywide to do the minimum – ensure the accuracy of its filings. In fact, the United States argued the bankruptcy court appropriately could have done more. Should this Court determine that a broader remedy is appropriate, it should remand the case so the court below can expand its remedy. But the lower court's remedy will ensure that Countrywide does the minimum anyone would expect. It should be affirmed.

COUNTER-STATEMENT OF THE ISSUES

1. Does section 105(a) allow a bankruptcy court to prevent abuse by requiring a creditor like Countrywide to submit a Summary with its proofs of claim in order to improve communication with local counsel and prevent it from continuing to submit inaccurate filings that increase the burden on debtors and the bankruptcy court system?

2. If so, did the bankruptcy court abuse its discretion in finding that the record demonstrated systematic weakness in Countrywide's handling of borrowers in bankruptcy that required remedial relief?

COUNTER-STATEMENT OF THE CASE

The United States filed a complaint against Countrywide alleging it mishandled the bankruptcy case of Marlynn O'Neal. Countrywide conceded at trial that it had filed two pleadings, a proof of claim and objection to Ms. O'Neal's chapter 13 plan, without justification. It based its defense on the contention that Ms. O'Neal's case was an isolated incident that would not recur, assertions the bankruptcy court rejected. After a careful review of the record, the bankruptcy court imposed a modest remedy, namely the requirement that Countrywide provide a Summary with its pending and future proofs of claim to facilitate review by debtors and the court. Countrywide requested that the bankruptcy court stay its order pending appeal, which, after briefing and hearing, the bankruptcy court denied. Before the bankruptcy court even ruled, however, Countrywide filed an "emergency motion" for a stay in the district court and again requested a stay. Countrywide Home Loans, Inc. v. McDermott, No. 5:09MC82, 2009 WL 3259131 at * 4, n.4 (N.D. Ohio Oct. 7, 2009) ("District Court Stay Op."). After an initial denial of the stay, this Court granted the stay pending review of the merits of Countrywide's appeal of the bankruptcy court's remedial relief. Id. at *5.

A. Factual Background

The first section of Countrywide's statement of facts is irrelevant to this case. Ms. O'Neal was apparently the victim of a mortgage foreclosure rescue scam, as outlined in Countrywide's statement of facts. Countrywide Br. at 3-4. The bankruptcy court, however, fundamentally rejected Countrywide's "blame the victim" defense. McDermott v. Countrywide Home Loans, Inc., No. 08-5031, slip op. at 22 (N.D. Ohio May 1, 2009) ("Liability Op.") (stating no evidence in the record exists to support "that Ms. O'Neal was other than a victim of a predator whose business operations are enabled by and depend upon a mortgage servicing industry that is unconcerned with the accuracy of records and information"); Trial Tr. 300:14-301:25 (Apr. 24, 2009).

The bankruptcy court found that Countrywide's system is "reckless" and "designed to allow each actor in the process to act with indifference to the truth, and to rely solely on limited information made available at each step." Liability Op. at 21. The relevant facts relating to Ms. O'Neal's attempts to get her loan closed after Countrywide accepted a short sale of her property as payment in full support this conclusion.

1. Countrywide's failed efforts from October 2005 to February 2007 to code Ms. O'Neal's account as inactive

This is a case about what happened to Marlynn O'Neal after she became unable to make her mortgage payments and was forced to sell her home on Ira Avenue in Akron, Ohio. The bankruptcy court found, and the record supports, the following facts concerning Ms. O'Neal's mortgage and attempts to get her loan closed between September 2005, when Countrywide accepted a short sale of her property in full satisfaction of her mortgage, and April 2007, when she filed for bankruptcy. Liability Op. at 5 (finding of fact #14).[1]

After the sale of Ms. O'Neal's house was completed, Countrywide began the process of updating her account in October 2005 to reflect the sale and the cancellation of her indebtedness. Kevin Kilker, a Loan Administrator, sent an e-mail to his colleagues stating that "[w]e have received funds in the amount of $13,000" in satisfaction of Ms. O'Neal's mortgage. E-mail from K. Kilker (Oct. 28, 2005) (UST Ex. 16). The e-mail requested that the foreclosure process be stopped, Ms. O'Neal's credit report be updated, and that a reconveyance on the short sale be issued. Id.[2] Finally, the e-mail requested that "lockout code 3" be placed on the account, an indication that the property has been foreclosed upon or conveyed to a third party. Trial Tr. 81:3-18 (Apr. 24, 2009). Countrywide did not indicate on the note that it had been paid in full. Liability Op. at 9 (finding of fact #27). Updating the account to reflect the short sale required action by at least five people. E-mail from K. Kilker (Oct. 28, 2005) (UST Ex. 16).

In spite of the internal e-mail notification of the sale and satisfaction of the loan, the bankruptcy court found that "Ms. O'Neal's loan account was not properly coded to indicate within Countrywide's records that the loan was inactive." Liability Op. at 9 (finding of fact #29). Mr. Smith, Countrywide's Executive Vice President, admitted at trial that several Countrywide employees had recognized the error, which was memorialized in Countrywide's computer system. Trial Tr. 75:9-21 (Apr. 24, 2009). The bankruptcy court's findings of fact chronicle Ms. O'Neal's seven-month series of calls to Countrywide to get this mistake corrected.

Because her account was still open, Ms. O'Neal continued to receive billing statements from Countrywide. Trial Tr. 72:1-73:16 (Apr. 24, 2009). Starting in April 2006, six months after the short sale was completed and her loan cancelled, Ms. O'Neal began calling Countrywide to correct her account. From April 2006 until December 2006, Ms. O'Neal telephoned Countrywide at least six times to correct her account information to show payment in full so that Countrywide would stop sending her demands for payment. Liability Op. at 10 (finding of fact #31; see generally Trial Tr. 55-75. The bankruptcy court relied on the e-mails and notations in

Ms. O'Neal's files related to these calls in making its determination of recklessness. See Liability Op. at 10-13 (findings of fact #32-43).

Initially the Countrywide employees recording Ms. O'Neal's calls acknowledged that the loan had been satisfied. April 24, 2006 comment entry into Countrywide's computer system by S. Cooper (UST Ex. 17) (stating "[l]oan notes showed we recvd funds for approved SPO but loan is still opened on the books"). Employees also acknowledged that the situation required corrective action on their part. E-mail from S. Cooper to P. Elizalde & K. Bradley (UST Ex. 18) (requesting assistance to correct account to reflect short sale); e-mail from K. Bradley to K. Kilker (UST Ex. 19) (same); e-mail from K. Kilker to S. Galvan (UST Ex. 20) (same). The e-mail chain requesting guidance on how to fix Ms. O'Neal's account ends four days later when Kristin Bradley, a Final Claims Analyst, noted that she had reviewed Ms. O'Neal's file and that "fees due still pending. will f/u [follow-up]." Comment entry into Countrywide's computer system (UST Ex. 22). That follow-up never happened.

Four months later, Countrywide fundamentally and incorrectly shifted its position to assert that it had never received the funds from the sale of Ms. O'Neal's home and therefore could not close her account. Comment entry into Countrywide's computer system by P. Jones (UST Ex. 23). For reasons not explained in the record, the Countrywide employee to whom Ms. O'Neal spoke could not find verification in the Countrywide computer system that Ms. O'Neal's loan had been satisfied. Ms. Jones noted that '[a]t this time, chl [Countrywide Home Loans] does not show funds received for the payoff." Id.; Liability Op. at 11 (findings of fact #36). Ms. Jones instructed Ms. O'Neal to get documentation from the title company that handled the sale to prove her contention that the loan had been paid. Id.

On September 9, 2006, Ms. O'Neal contacted Countrywide to say she was sending "paperwork" to resolve the issue. Comment entry into Countrywide's computer system by J. Silva (UST Exhibit 24). Six weeks later, and over a year after she sold her property, Ms. O'Neal called Countrywide and was informed that Countrywide's computer still did not show that the pay-off had been received. Comment entry into Countrywide's computer system by C. Ford on November 12, 2006 (UST Ex. 25); Liability Op. at 11 (findings of fact #38). Countrywide also informed her that the situation was affecting her credit. Id. Two days later, Ms. O'Neal called again; Ms. Porshi Jones informed her there had been no word from the title company and thus no change in the account status. Comment entry into Countrywide's computer system by P. Jones (UST Ex. 26).

Ms. O'Neal spoke with Ms. Jones again on December 6, 2006 stating that she was sending proof of the bank wire that had been sent to Countrywide. For the first time since Ms. O'Neal began contacting Countrywide seven months earlier, Ms. Jones, who had first spoken with Ms. O'Neal on August 29, 2006, decided to seek further information by sending a "lotus note to S. Galvan to get a status update." Comment entry into Countrywide's computer system by P. Jones (UST Ex. 27).

Ms. Galvan, a Workout Team Leader, forwarded the query to Kristin Bradley, the Final Claims Analyst who was supposed to follow-up on Ms. O'Neal's first inquiry seven months earlier. Ms. Bradley responded "I updated everything to reflect as a short sale, I'm just waiting for investor reimbursement for supplemental fees. Hopefully it will be fully closed out by the end of the year." E-mail from K. Bradley to S. Galvan, with cc: to P. Jones (Dec. 11, 2006) (UST Ex. 28-1). Ms. Jones called Ms. O'Neal that day to inform her that the short sale was in fact completed in October 2005, but that a pending investor reimbursement was preventing Ms. O’Neal’s account from being closed, and that the issue should be resolved by the end of the year. Comment entry into Countrywide’s computer system by P. Jones (Dec. 11, 2006) (UST Exhibit 29). Ms. Jones also promised to correct Ms. O’Neal’s credit report but was unsuccessful. Id. (“System shows not reported. will no change status.”).

At trial, Countrywide Vice President John Smith testified that the reconveyance that would release the lien and close Ms. O’Neal’s account did not occur in October 2005 because it “was not requested at that time [by Countrywide employees]. That wouldn’t be part of the procedure at this time.” Trial Tr. 41:20-42:24 (Apr. 24, 2009). Ms. O’Neal’s loan was part of a pooling and servicing agreement between Park Place Securities, Countrywide, and Wells Fargo Bank. Trial Tr. 80:21-81:2 (Apr. 24, 2009). In fact, Countrywide’s protocol for processing loans mandated that Ms. O’Neal’s account improperly be kept open until the claims process with the investor – a final division of the proceeds of the sale – was completed. Trial Tr. 80:3-80:20 (Apr. 24, 2009). On February 8, 2007, Ms. O'Neal's loan was reviewed by a Countrywide representative who noted “suppl funds still pending.” Comment entry into Countrywide’s computer system by W. Sharf (UST Ex. 30). No one told Ms. O’Neal this until a year after she sold her home.

Based on the evidence, the bankruptcy court concluded: “Notwithstanding these repeated inquiries, Countrywide did not properly correct its records to show that Countrywide had accepted the $13,000 payment being attributed to Wells Fargo [the investor in Ms. O’Neal’s loan].” Liability Op. at 13 (finding of fact #44).

2. Countrywide's participation in Ms. O'Neal's bankruptcy case

On April 11, 2007, Ms. O'Neal filed a chapter 13 bankruptcy petition. (UST Ex. 7-1) She appropriately did not schedule Countrywide Home Loans as a creditor. Liability Op. at 13-14 (finding of fact #48) (UST Ex. 7-14 to 7-24). Because Countrywide had not yet resolved her account with the investor, 19 months after it accepted a short-sale of her home in full satisfaction of her debt, her account was still listed as active which meant Countrywide treated her as still owing on the satisfied debt. Therefore, when Countrywide was notified that Ms. O'Neal had filed for bankruptcy, her account was sent to a bankruptcy technician for processing. Countrywide Br. at 4; Liability Op. at 13-14 (finding of fact #49). Ms. O'Neal's account was marked with "lock-out code 3." Countrywide Vice President John Smith testified that lockout code 3 was designed to prevent the automatic set-up of a bankruptcy case. Trial Tr. 81:19-82:8 (Apr. 24, 2009). He also admitted that the technician who reviewed Ms. O'Neal's case did not correctly interpret this lockout code and referred Ms. O'Neal's case to outside bankruptcy counsel in error. Trial Tr. 82:9-14 (Apr. 24, 2009). Mr. Smith stated he did not know how the error happened. Trial Tr. 31:7-18 (Apr. 24, 2009). The bankruptcy court found that the technician's failure to refer the case to management for further review "seems consistent with Countrywide's inability to correctly follow its internal operating procedures with respect to Ms. O'Neal's loan account . . . ." Liability Op. at 14, n.3

Countrywide assigned Ms. O'Neal's case to the local law firm when the bankruptcy technician sent an e-mail to counsel. Liability Op. at 13 (findings of fact #49-50); Trial Tr. 32:17-33:12; 34:7-9 (Apr. 24, 2009). That firm was never able to learn from Countrywide that Ms. O'Neal owed nothing, which led it to file an inappropriate claim. Ms. O'Neal's bankruptcy was handled according to protocol. The bankruptcy technician entered the data needed to complete a proof of claim and objection and posted it to a website that local counsel then downloaded. Trial Tr. 77:5-22; 100:25-101:21 (Apr. 24, 2009); Trial Tr. 415:4-6 (May 11, 2009) (counsel gets what technician sees). The bankruptcy court found that supporting documentation is posted to the website through an automated system. Liability Op. at 14 (finding of fact #50); Trial Tr. 33:13-34:3;34:10-12 (Apr. 24, 2009). Following procedures, no one pulled land records to confirm mortgage holder of record. See Liability Op. at 14-15 (finding of fact #49). Trial Tr. 418:8-419:8 (May 11, 2009). The system did not allow local counsel access to the loan history. Liability Op. at 14-15 (finding of fact #51). Trial Tr. 34:17-23 (Apr. 24, 2009).

On May 1, 2007, Countrywide Home Loans, Inc. filed a proof of claim, No. 4-1, on behalf of Wells Fargo Bank, N.A. in which it asserted that Ms. O'Neal was indebted to Countrywide in the amount of $88,859.06 by reason of a note and mortgage on Ms. O’Neal’s former home. Liability Op. at 15 (findings of fact #52-53). The proof of claim attached a copy of the note and mortgage but no evidence of an assignment to Countrywide, or the investor Wells Fargo, from the original mortgage-holder, Ameriquest. Liability Op. at 16 (findings of fact #55-57). The claim treated the note as outstanding, the opposite of the truth. The same day, Countrywide Home Loans Inc. also filed an objection to confirmation of Ms. O'Neal's chapter 13 repayment plan on the grounds that she had not made provision for re-payment of the mortgage that they claimed she still owed. Liability Op. at 16 (finding of fact #58).

Ms. O'Neal’s attorney immediately filed a response with documentation demonstrating that her house had been sold and that Countrywide had accepted a $13,000 short sale in satisfaction of the loan. Liability Op. at 16 (finding of fact #59). Instead of immediately correcting its error, Countrywide waited until the bankruptcy court sustained Ms. O'Neal's objection to its Proof of Claim on June 6, 2007. Liability Op. at 17 (finding of fact #60). Only the day before the scheduled hearing, did Countrywide “voluntarily” withdraw its objection to confirmation, prompting the bankruptcy court to cancel the hearing. In re O’Neal, No. 07-51027 (N.D. Ohio, filed Apr. 11, 2007) [Dkt. #28].

Countrywide’s handling of Ms. O’Neal’s case prompted the United States Trustee to file a complaint asking the court to enjoin Countrywide under its powers under 11 U.S.C. § 105 from engaging in abusive practices related to its preparation, verification, filing, and prosecution of proofs of claims and other filings in bankruptcy cases. The bankruptcy court held trial on April 24, 2009 and found Countrywide liable because the “cumulative impact of each of the errors in this case rises to the level of sanctionable conduct in this case.” Liability Op. at 21. The bankruptcy court held a hearing on sanctions on May 11-12 and on July 31 issued its remedies opinion requiring that Countrywide attach a Summary to each of its proofs of claim to verify the information provided. McDermott v. Countrywide, No. 08-5031, slip op. at 9-10 (N.D. Ohio July 31, 2009) (“Remedy Op.”). This appeal then followed.

During the pendency of this appeal and the litigation related to whether the bankruptcy court’s order should be stayed, Countrywide violated the order three times by submitting proofs of claim in Judge Shea-Stonum’s courtroom without the required Summary attached.

STANDARD OF REVIEW

The bankruptcy court's findings of fact are reviewed for clear error and its conclusions of law are reviewed de novo. Hance v. Norfolk Southern Ry. Co., 571 F. 3d 511, 517 (6th Cir. 2009).

SUMMARY OF THE ARGUMENT

Countrywide concedes that its employees make mistakes. The evidence in this case shows that Countrywide's system commits errors and then compounds them repeatedly. Countrywide routinely relies on others to correct its mistakes, first and foremost the judicial system. Trial Tr. 304:6-9 (Apr. 24, 2009). Some debtors may have the financial wherewithal to fight Countrywide in court or occasionally a bankruptcy lawyer might get fed up enough to bring a frustrating case to the bankruptcy court's attention – as happened in this case – but Countrywide's system hurts many people. Debtors who do not have the resources to defend themselves in court can end up paying what they do not owe; over-burdened bankruptcy courts must sort out problems that never should have reached their courtrooms; chapter 13 trustees cannot close cases because of unwarranted plan objections; resolution of substantive disputes between creditors and debtors are delayed. Countrywide has no right to file wrong claims against any of the approximately 140,000 borrowers it has in bankruptcy.

Countrywide would limit the recourse that bankruptcy judges have to deal with erroneous filings in their courtrooms. Of course, Rule 9011 is designed to deal with such situations. Countrywide is incorrect, however, when it argues that 11 U.S.C. § 105(a) is not an alternate basis upon which a bankruptcy court can act. That position is wrong because it violates the plain language of title 11 of the United States Code.

The legal issue in this case is simple: can a bankruptcy court exercise its powers under 11 U.S.C. §105 to "prevent" an "abuse of process" – namely Countrywide's apparent inability to submit accurate filings to the court. The plain language of the statute says yes.

Once the bankruptcy court determined that the evidence demonstrated Countrywide had given the court inaccurate filings, it was free to fashion appropriate relief. Hecht v. Bowles, 321 U.S. 321, 329 (1943) ("The essence of equity jurisdiction has been the power of the chancellor to do equity and to mould each decree to the necessities of the particular case."). It did so here. The court's modest order is prophylactic, reasonable, and can easily be lifted once Countrywide demonstrates that it has reformed its systems and procedures to enable it to provide accurate information to the bankruptcy court. Individual judges place requirements on litigants as a matter of routine. Requiring modest documentation is analogous to a court placing pre-filing restrictions on a litigant who shown himself incapable of obeying the court's rules.

There is nothing novel about the court's remedy. Other federal courts have ordered remedies in similar bankruptcy cases against other mortgage lenders; one of them was recently upheld on appeal. In re Stewart, No. 08-3225, 2009 WL 2448054, at *12 (E.D. La. Aug. 7, 2009). The bankruptcy court here simply ordered Countrywide to provide information necessary to validate proofs of claim in a particular format to protect itself and the debtors before it. Its relief in this case is modest.

The bankruptcy court also properly imposed its requirement that Countrywide submit a Summary with its proofs of claim under Federal Rule of Bankruptcy 9011, which states that a bankruptcy court may impose an "appropriate sanction" on a party that is responsible for violating the rule that filings in the court be accurate. Fed. R. Bankr. P. 9011(c). Countrywide does not dispute that Rule 9011 covers the situation in this case, only that it did not receive adequate notice that it could be sanctioned on that basis. Countrywide did, however, receive adequate notice, providing another basis upon which this Court can affirm the decision below.

Countrywide's brief presents a jumble of arguments in order to draw attention away from the plain – and dispositive – language of section 105(a). Countrywide asks this Court rule that Rule of Bankruptcy Court Procedure 3001, which prescribes what a creditor must do to submit a prima facie valid proof of claim, strips a bankruptcy court's statutory power to regulate practice before it and to "prevent" "abuse." That is preposterous. 11 U.S.C. § 105(a); see also Hecht, 321 U.S. at 329; United States v. E. I. du Pont de Nemours & Co., 366 U.S. 316, 328 n.9 (1961) ("Congress would not be deemed to have restricted the broad remedial powers of courts of equity without explicit language doing so in terms, or some other strong indication of intent."). The labels that Countrywide puts on the bankruptcy court's order – unauthorized local rule, bill of attainder, criminal sanction – do not change the fact that the order is a routine exercise of the court's power to regulate its docket under section 105(a), Rule 9011, and Supreme Court language.

Finally, Countrywide trots out again its arguments that 1) the United States does not have standing; 2) the United States improperly asked for criminal sanctions; and 3) the bankruptcy court did not have jurisdiction. Every court to consider these arguments in the context of creditor abuse has rejected them – including a district judge in this federal district.

The United States asks this Court to affirm the bankruptcy court's modest attempt to "prevent" Countrywide's abuses until such time as Countrywide can modify its claims filing system to do that itself.

ARGUMENT

I. THE BANKRUPTCY COURT'S SECTION 105(a) SUMMARY REQUIREMENT IS NOT A SANCTION BUT IS A PRE-FILING REQUIREMENT THAT COURTS ROUTINELY IMPOSE TO MANAGE THEIR DOCKETS.

A. The bankruptcy court did not punish Countrywide but protected itself as if Countrywide were a vexatious litigant.

Countrywide's system cannot reliably produce accurate information for court filings, making Countrywide analogous to a vexatious litigant who wastes a court's time and resources. Compare 11 U.S.C. § 105(a) with 28 U.S.C. § 1927.[3] Even if Countrywide does not deliberately make inaccurate representations, the number of its filings nationwide dwarfs the mischief that even the most assiduous vexatious litigant can inflict on the court system. Countrywide admits it filed a meritless proof of claim. Nevertheless, in this case alone, the bankruptcy court had to:

- process Countrywide's proof of claim and plan objection;
- review the proof of claim and Ms. O'Neal's objection;
- adjudicate the dispute over the proof of claim;
- schedule a hearing on Countrywide's objection to Ms. O'Neal's plan; and
- cancel that hearing when Countrywide pulled its objection less than 24 hours before it was scheduled to begin.

The bankruptcy court acted within its statutory discretion when it ordered Countrywide to submit a Summary with its proofs of claim, in essence imposing a modest pre-filing requirement. Bankruptcy courts have "inherent and statutory authority to impose sanctions upon parties for their abuse of the litigation process." Maloof v. Level Propane Gasses, Inc., 316 Fed. Appx. 373, 376 (6th Cir. 2008) (citing Rathbun v. Warren City Schools (In re Ruben), 825 F.2d 977, 982-84 (6th Cir.1987)); Caldwell v. Unified Capital Corp., 77 F.3d 278, 284 (9th Cir 1996) (stating that bankruptcy courts have "inherent power to sanction vexatious conduct"). Logically, if a court has the authority to sanction a party, it must also be able to take the less drastic step of imposing modest relief such as requiring verification of the accuracy of filings.

Nor is there a de minimis standard for incorrect filings. The Supreme Court has observed that "[e]very paper filed with the Clerk of this Court, no matter how repetitious or frivolous, requires some portion of the institution's limited resources. A part of the Court's responsibility is to see that these resources are allocated in a way that promotes the interests of justice." In re McDonald, 489 U.S. 180, 184 (1989) (ordering the Clerk not to grant any more of the petitioner's in forma pauperis requests for relief under an extraordinary writ). Rather, "the Court's responsibility is to see that [judicial] resources are allocated in a way that promotes the interests of justice." Maxberry v. S.E.C., 879 F.2d 222, 224 (6th Cir. 1989).

The act of filing a complaint in and of itself can be considered vexatious, for example when a plaintiff attempts to re-litigate a case in a new forum. Al-Beshrawi v. Chao, No. 06-cv-369, 2007 WL 1203561, at *4 (N.D. Ohio Apr. 23, 2007); see also Feathers v. Chevron U.S.A., Inc., 141 F.3d 264, 269-270 (6th Cir. 1998). Furthermore, repeated abusive filings can result in being permanently barred from filing any bankruptcy petition nationwide. In re Freeman, 224 B.R. 376, 280 (Bankr. S.D. Ohio 1998) (enjoining debtors who filed seven bankruptcy petitions in two and a half years without schedules or filing fees from further access to the bankruptcy courts).

This case is analogous. The bankruptcy court found that Countrywide's system is reckless. Recklessness, a lower standard than bad faith, means "deliberate action in the face of a known risk, the likelihood or impact of which the actor unexcusably [sic] underestimates or ignores." Red Carpet Studios Div. of Source Advantage, Ltd. v. Sater, 465 F.3d 642, 646 (6th Cir. 2006) (quoting United States v. Wallace, 964 F.2d 1214, 1220 (D.C. Cir.1992)). Here, Countrywide filed a baseless proof of claim and objection to Ms. O'Neal's chapter 13 plan. It did not withdraw the proof of claim but made the bankruptcy court adjudicate the issue, although the record was crystal clear that it had no claim. Perhaps hedging its bets, it did not withdraw the objection to the chapter 13 plan until it had lost the proof of claim dispute and then only the evening before the hearing. Rather than regretting the misuse of the court's resources and time, Countrywide's defense was to blame Ms. O'Neal's lawyer for defending her interests in court. Countrywide Br. at 5 (citing Trial Tr. 275:21-277:9). Countrywide's behavior indicates reliance on others, primarily the bankruptcy court to fix the problems because its "reckless" claims-filing system cannot fix errors in a timely way but allows mistakes to compound mistakes until litigation is inevitable.

The bankruptcy court did not abuse its discretion in finding inadequate communication within Countrywide contributed to the problems in the O'Neal case. Countrywide's technicians, customer service representatives, and management do not communicate effectively with each other. Trial Tr. 300:16-17 (Apr. 24, 2009) (statement by Countrywide counsel that "our people should have figured this out. I'm not contending that they shouldn't have."); Trial Tr. 75:16-21 (Apr. 24, 2009) (statement by John Smith, a Countrywide Vice President, that a "number of people recognized" and "a number of entries" indicated that Ms. O'Neal was being improperly billed but the problem was not fixed). Trial testimony also revealed that the technician who assigned the case to local counsel was not expected to review the loan history or the notes in the computer loan file. Trial Tr. 77:23-78:15 (Apr. 24, 2009); Trial Tr. 416:13-418:7 (May 11, 2009) (testimony that technician only verifies payments and charges, not computer notes).

Nor is there any significant person-to-person communication between Countrywide and its local counsel. Countrywide's law firm that handled the O'Neal case did not have a protocol for communicating with Countrywide. For instance, Ted McClatchey, the lawyer for Countrywide, described his source for contact with Countrywide as a memorandum that described "the sort of pecking order of people if you needed to contact somebody about something." Otherwise McClatchey's firm received "general communications by email when there were particular issues that they wanted to address as a company in filing certain types of documents with the Courts and they might need advice from the law firms as to what the particulars were in each state." Trial Tr. 136:12-137:1 (Apr. 24, 2009).

In response to this evidence of recklessness, the bankruptcy court devised a simple way to minimize the problems caused by Countrywide's system, namely requiring Countrywide to submit a Summary that demonstrates the accuracy of the information in its filings. This requirement is far less than the bankruptcy court could have done. In contrast to the vexatious litigation cases cited above, Countrywide's access to the bankruptcy court is not impeded. Countrywide does not have to get permission to file in Judge Shea-Stonum's bankruptcy court – it just has to provide an extra Summary to do so.

B. Other improper filings in the bankruptcy court below demonstrate systemic problems.

Countrywide ignored the bankruptcy court's order during the time when it was in force. District Court Stay Op., 2009 WL 3259131 at * 4, n.7. Not only did it not provide the additional information, it continued to fail to meet the minimum requirements of Official Form 10 submissions. For instance, in the Beal case, Countrywide, in response to the Judge Shea-

Stonum's order, submitted a supplemental proof of claim.[4] In re Beal, No. 07-50413 (N.D. Ohio filed Sept. 8, 2009) [Claims Reg. #27-1]. The "Supplemental Proof of Claim Itemization" has no breakdown but consists of one figure:

Agreed upon arrears in agreed order	$ 11,685.46
TOTAL ARREARAGE	$ 11,685.46

The Amended Order from Relief from Stay in the Beal case demonstrates on its face Countrywide's systematic problems. It states the painfully obvious: "The parties are in agreement that the Debtor should only pay and the Creditor should only receive what is actually owed, no more and no less." The order also leaves room for the possibility that Countrywide's accounting may still not be accurate: If it is discovered that certain payments or advances were not properly credited or accounted for, then the parties agree that the Agreed Order shall be modified to accurately reflect the status of the account. In re Beal, No. 07-50413 (N.D. Ohio filed Sept. 9, 2009) (amended order) (emphasis in the original).

Furthermore, in the Phillips case, Countrywide did not attach a payment history to show the alleged eight month arrearage; nor any back-up documentation for fees entitled "foreclosure title work - $569;" "foreclosure title update - $50;" "filing fee - $370;" "process server - $110;" and "property inspection charges - $30." This contravenes the instructions on Official Form 10 itself which states "[a]ttach copies of supporting documents, such as . . . purchase orders, invoices, itemized statements of running accounts . . . ." Official Form 10 at #8. See also In re Wyatt, No. 09-53277 (N.D. Ohio filed Sept. 29, 2009) ("The subject Proof of Claim [filed Sept. 22] is being withdrawn as it was filed in error."). These examples demonstrate that Countrywide is incapable of remedying the flaws in its system – even in the courtroom of a judge who is scrutinizing its performance.

[4] Countrywide claims that the Beal proof of claim was ordered by Judge Shea-Stonum herself and therefore the Summary requirement did not apply. There is no grounds for that assumption. The judge did not indicate that her Summary requirement, which applied retroactively to all proofs of claim pending before her, was not in force. Nor did the attorney before her seek clarification – another example of Countrywide's inability to keep its local counsel up to date. Finally, Countrywide provides no legal or logical argument why it should assume that Shea-Stonum had sub silentio countermanded her own order when she required the supplemental proof of claim.

Thus the bankruptcy court had ample evidence of systematic problems that would impose a burden on the court and other litigants for the foreseeable future. Accordingly, it acted within its statutory discretion to prevent such problems by requiring Countrywide to complete a Summary to force it to double-check its filings and give others confidence that the information provided is accurate.

II. THE BANKRUPTCY COURT'S STATUTORY POWER UNDER SECTION 105(a) ALLOWS IT TO REQUIRE COUNTRYWIDE TO SUBMIT AN ADDITIONAL SUMMARY WITH ITS PROOFS OF CLAIM.

A. Statutory analysis of 11 U.S.C. § 105(a) proves that the bankruptcy court did not act beyond its power as a matter of law.

Countrywide seeks reversal of an order that the bankruptcy court did not issue. This is not a case about rule-making, sanctions, bad faith, or any of the other myriad theories that Countrywide has presented multiple times to this, and other, courts. The order does not punish Countrywide; it does not impose a monetary penalty. The order does not impinge on Countrywide in any way that would implicate due process rights. See Liability Op. at 22-23 (listing potential court action). The bankruptcy court had statutory power to impose a much more drastic remedy but chose not to. Instead, it took one small step to protect its courtroom from Countrywide's recklessness.

This case presents one legal question: does the text of 11 U.S.C. § 105(a), which enables a court sua sponte to take any action "necessary or appropriate" to "prevent an abuse of process," authorize a bankruptcy court to require a party in interest with a track-record of inaccurate filings to submit an additional form summarizing information otherwise required by the Bankruptcy Code? The answer is yes.

Section 105(a) of title 11 is designed to give bankruptcy courts the necessary tools to "prevent" abuse by participants in the bankruptcy system. In the case of bankruptcy courts, this power is statutory: section 105 enables them to issue orders necessary to prevent an abuse of process, such as submitting misleading filings to the court. Caldwell, 77 F.3d at 284. It allows injunctive relief when a litigant threatens the integrity and functioning of the bankruptcy system. In re DeLorean Motor Co., 991 F.2d 1236, 1242 (6th Cir. 1993); In re Sanchez, 372 B.R. 289, 311-12 (Bankr. S.D. Tex. 2007).[5]

Section 105(a)'s application is governed by its text. First, a bankruptcy court must determine that it should act to prevent an abuse of process. In re Eagle-Picher Indus., Inc., 285 F.3d 522, 529 (6th Cir. 2002). Once it has made that determination, the court must craft an order that is reasonably calculated to prevent that abuse. Jove Eng'g Inc. v. IRS, 92 F.3d 1539,

[5] Countrywide has cited Pertuso v. Ford Motor Credit Co., 233 F.3d 417, 423 (6th Cir. 2000). Petruso simply held that a court cannot use 11 U.S.C. § 105(a) to create a federal common law mass tort money damages remedy where none exists. It says nothing about injunctive relief that prevents abuse. To read it in any other way makes Pertuso inconsistent with DeLorean, which was decided first. See Darrah v. City of Oak Park, 255 F.3d 301, 309 (6th Cir. 2001) ("A panel . . . cannot overrule the decision of another panel. The prior decision remains controlling authority unless . . . this Court sitting en banc overrules the prior decision.").

1554 (11th Cir. 1996) (plain meaning of Section 105 encompasses any order whether injunctive, compensatory, or punitive, if necessary to carry out provisions of the Bankruptcy Code). Unlike traditional injunctive relief, a bankruptcy court's power to act derives from the statute. Congress did not require that courts engage in special analysis or balancing tests to determine if the application of 105 powers would be appropriate. See 132 Cong. Rec. 28, 610 (1986) (statement of Sen. Hatch) (section 105(a) "allows a bankruptcy court to take any action on its own, or to make any necessary determination to prevent an abuse of process and to help expedite a case in a proper and justified manner").

This reading of section 105(a) is fully consistent with the Supreme Court's precedent governing a court's power to regulate practice before it. As the Court has held, "[t]hese powers are 'governed not by rule or statute but by the control necessarily vested in courts to manage their own affairs so as to achieve the orderly and expeditious disposition of cases.'" Chambers v. NASCO, 501 U.S. 32, 43 (1991) (quoting Link v. Wabash R.R. Co, 370 U.S. 626, 630-31 (1940)). For nearly 200 years the Supreme Court has recognized that the branches of government, including the judiciary, "must be left at liberty to exercise the powers which the people have intrusted to them. The interests and dignity of those who created them, require the exertion of the powers indispensable to the attainment of the ends of their creation." Anderson v. Dunn, 6 Wheat 204, 226 (1821). The bankruptcy system exists to balance the interests of creditors and debtors and to use its powers of equity to give debtors a "fresh start." A bankruptcy court cannot attain this "end[] of its creation" if it cannot ensure that the parties before it provide accurate information. Id.

Supreme Court precedent also confirms that a bankruptcy court's section 105(a) powers are broad. The Supreme Court held that "the broad authority granted to bankruptcy judges to take any action that is necessary or appropriate to prevent an abuse of process described in § 105(a) of the Code" included the power to override a debtor's statutory right to convert to chapter 13 if he acted in bad faith, in this case hiding assets, in his chapter 7 case. Marrama v. Citizens Bank of Mass., 549 U.S. 365, 374-75 (2007); see also dissent, 549 U.S. at 382 (acknowledging breadth of 105(a) powers). The Court reasoned that the bankruptcy court should not have to go through the charade of letting a debtor convert to chapter 13 if the underlying bad faith would necessitate that his case be dismissed. Id. Accordingly, it abridged the provisions of the Code itself to avoid unnecessary and protracted litigation that would ultimately harm the creditors of the estate. Id.

The Supreme Court has also approved a court's ability to take other significant action, such as controlling its dockets by dismissing actions sua sponte for failure to prosecute. Link, 370 U.S. at 630-31. If a bankruptcy court can deny conversion or dismiss a case sua sponte, thus extinguishing a litigant's entire case, then it must be able to require a claimant to supply information in a particular format. There can be no doubt that the bankruptcy court had the power to issue the order placing a trivial burden on Countrywide to fill out an additional Summary after it determined that Countrywide's filings would require additional scrutiny.

The scope of section 105(a) gives a bankruptcy court broad latitude to regulate the parties in interest before it. Section 105(a) "puts no facial restriction on the structure of relief that the courts can fashion under it, as long as they are furthering a principle identifiable in the applicable substantive law of bankruptcy. Section 105(a) was enacted to promote such enforcement, through means that are tailored the innumerable scenarios of financial distress in bankruptcy cases." In re Coleman Enter., Inc., 266 B.R. 423, 435 (Bankr. D. Minn. 2001).

Indeed, section 105(a) authorizes drastic action, including a permanent ban against two debtors against filing future petitions in any bankruptcy court in the country because of their egregious abuse of the system. In re Freeman, 224 B.R. at 379 (stating that bankruptcy courts have the authority to dismiss bankruptcy cases, enjoin future filings, and impose sanctions under §§ 105(a) and 109(g)(1)). Given this, section 105(a) can also be the basis for prophylactic action, such as requiring a law firm to certify changes to its billing system that would prevent the reoccurrence of improper withdrawals from a client's retainer account. In re Palumbo Family Ltd. P'ship, 182 B.R. 447, 479 (Bankr. E.D. Va. 1995).

Here, the bankruptcy court used section 105(a) merely to require Countrywide to complete a Summary, temporarily, to document that its claims processing system is in compliance with the Bankruptcy Code and Rules. Its action fell squarely within its section 105(a) powers.

B. The court below entered relief under section 105(a), a statute whose text makes no mention of bad faith, which means Countrywide's references to bad faith and related concepts in its brief are legally irrelevant and form no basis for reversal.

Countrywide argues repeatedly that the lower court's order must be reversed because Countrywide did not act in bad faith, willfully, maliciously, or with fraudulent intent. Countrywide Br. at 8, 25-26, 29-30. That is legally irrelevant. It is irrelevant because the lower court entered relief under section 105(a), which does not require a court to make a bad faith finding before taking action to “prevent” “abuse.” 11 U.S.C. § 105(a).

Countrywide makes the mistake of relying on the fact the bankruptcy court did not find bad faith because it confuses a bankruptcy court's power to sanction under its inherent authority with a court's statutory power to take action under section 105(a). Certainly, a bad faith finding justifies the imposition of an inherent power sanction. Roadway Exp., Inc. v. Piper, 447 U.S. 752, 765-66 (1980) (upholding award of attorney fee for bad faith litigation).

But this is not an inherent power case – as Countrywide recognizes on page 29 of its brief.

As explained above, the bankruptcy court acted under section 105(a). Nothing in the text of section 105(a) requires a bad faith finding as a condition precedent to employing section 105(a) to “prevent” “abuse.” See Liability Op. at 19 (recognizing this distinction). See also In re Ruben, 825 F.2d at 984 (noting that bad faith not required for imposing sanctions under 28 U.S.C. § 1927).

Because Countrywide confuses inherent power and section 105(a), it asks this Court to make an unprecedented ruling that the exercise of section 105(a) preventative powers must be based upon a showing “tantamount to fraud.” Countrywide Br. at 25. It would be an error of law to accept that argument.

The text of section 105(a) does not impose any bad faith requirement. It has no tantamount to fraud requirement. Nor would make sense to rewrite section 105(a) to limit its application to the prevention of bad faith and fraud. Section 105(a) designed to “prevent.” And the dictionary defines “prevent” as “to keep from happening or existing, esp. by precautionary measures.” Webster’s Third New International Dictionary 1798 (1981). Section 105(a) allows bankruptcy courts to ensure bankruptcy cases work. That can be a daunting task. Even the simplest chapter 7 case has many actors, one or more debtors, a chapter 7 trustee, the United States Trustee, multiple creditors, and a bankruptcy judge. When one of those participants files wrong pleadings, the system ceases to work for everyone. For that reason, the text of section 105(a) is written to prevent injurious conduct rather than to focus upon the culpability level of the party who is hurting everyone else with its mistakes.

Countrywide's conduct in this case underscores why Congress wrote section 105(a) as it did. Here, the court below found Countrywide was making mistakes in a reckless fashion. Liability Op. at 21. Even Countrywide admits it made mistakes. Trial Tr. 300:16-17 (Apr. 24, 2009); ("[O]ur people should have figured this out. I'm not contending that they shouldn't have."). The evidence was sufficient for the court to employ the plain language of section 105(a) to impose a non-punitive requirement that Countrywide document the due diligence review it engaged in before filing a claim with the court.

Were there any doubt whether section 105(a) has some sort of a hidden bad faith component, other Code sections would dispel it. That is so because Congress put a bad faith requirement in those Code sections where it wanted it to apply. See 11 U.S.C. § 707(b)(3)(A) (allowing dismissal of a chapter 7 petition if the debtor acts in bad faith). Given that Congress knew how to use the words "bad faith" in the Code, it is dispositive that it did not use them in this section. Desert Palace, Inc. v. Costa, 539 U.S. 90, 98-99 (2003) (stating that Congress's failure to include language requiring a heightened showing to prove discrimination in Title VII precluded imposition of such a standard).

Were there any doubt on these points, Sixth Circuit precedent dispels it. It is the law of this circuit that a bankruptcy court may order sanctions if a litigant has acted recklessly, or even with negligent inadvertence. The Sixth Circuit upheld the power of a bankruptcy court to order disgorgement of fees when an attorney failed to request authorization for payment under 11 U.S.C. § 329 and Federal Rule of Bankruptcy Procedure 2014. In re Kisseberth, 273 F.3d 714, 721 (6th Cir. 2001) (citing In re Park-Helena Corp., 63 F.3d 877, 882 (9th Cir.1995)) ("Disgorgement may be proper even though the failure to disclose resulted . . . from negligence or inadvertence."). Countrywide has admitted that made a mistake when it filed papers in Ms. O'Neal's case. Trial Tr. 294:23-25 (Apr. 24, 2009) (Countrywide's actions in the O'Neal case were "incorrect."). Significantly, Countrywide's counsel suggested that Countrywide's unwarranted referral of Ms. O'Neal's case to its local counsel may have been negligent. Trial Tr. 297:4-7 (Apr. 24, 2009). Countrywide's own admission provides ample basis for the bankruptcy court's Summary requirement.

Thus, the evidence presented at trial, and the facts found by the lower court agree that the flaws in Countrywide's procedures for dealing with borrowers in bankruptcy necessitated the court to take action. See United Mine Workers of Am. v. Bagwell, 512 U.S. 821, 833 (1994) (listing courts alternatives for dealing with "a party's failure to comply with the rules of conduct governing the litigation process," including striking pleadings, assessing costs, excluding evidence, and entering default judgment). Nor must Countrywide comply with this order indefinitely. As soon as its claims-filing process is functioning properly, the order will no longer be appropriate. See Taubman Co. v. Webfeats, 319 F.3d 770,775 (6th Cir. 2003) (denying injunction for Lanham Act violation because there was no on-going violation because the offending website links had been taken down).

C. The bankruptcy court's order is not a criminal sanction.

Countrywide argues the lower court order constitutes criminal contempt, and bankruptcy courts cannot issue criminal contempt. Countrywide Brief at 14-15. But the court below did not hold Countrywide in contempt of a particular order; rather it used its statutory authority under section 105(a) to prevent abuse. That is inherently different from contempt proceedings. Indeed, not even a monetary sanction is treated as a proceeding for "criminal contempt" merely because it involves non-compensatory relief. See In re DeVille, 361 F.3d 539, 552 (9th Cir. 2004) (holding that proceeding for punitive sanctions under Bankruptcy Rule 9011 was not in the nature of criminal contempt, and bankruptcy court was not required to follow procedural protections applicable to criminal contempt proceeding).[6] In contrast, the Summary is among the mildest forms of relief ordered in comparison to other courts that have confronted similar conduct. See e.g., In re DePugh, No. 08-37521, 2009 WL 1657473 at *7 (Bankr. S.D. Tex. June 12, 2009) (forbidding amendments to proofs of claim without prior leave of court).

Countrywide's claim that the bankruptcy court's Summary, and proposed $300 sanction for its improper completion, is a criminal sanction is flawed. First, Countrywide concedes that a fine is civil if it compensates a party for costs associated with improper conduct. Countrywide Br. at 13 (citing Bagwell, 512 U.S. at 829). That is exactly what the bankruptcy court's order does. If Countrywide improperly completes the Summary, then the debtor is compensated a minimum of $300 for attorney costs related to litigation to correct Countrywide's compounded error. Remedy Op. at 10. That is a classic civil sanction.

[6] Section 105(a) expressly authorizes relief that will prevent abuse, the relief entered here. Countrywide has not attacked section 105(a)'s constitutionality, either on a facial or on an as applied basis, and may not do so for the first time on appeal.

Countrywide devotes several pages of its brief discussing the Fifth Circuit's decision in In re Hipp, which addresses criminal prosecutions under title 18. In re Hipp, 895 F.2d 1503 (5th Cir. 1990). In Hipp, the bankruptcy court enjoined a creditor from filing lis pendens notices against property of the estate, an order the creditor ignored. The chapter 11 trustee then brought criminal contempt of court charges against the creditor, which resulted in a sentence of three years imprisonment. Id. at 1505-06. The lengthy decision, which addresses a bankruptcy court's criminal contempt powers, is irrelevant to the question here: can a bankruptcy court require a party in interest to complete a Summary under its section 105 authority to prevent abuse of process? The Fifth Circuit has answered that question affirmatively. Ingalls v. Thompson (In re Bradley), __F.3d__, No. 08-50587, 2009 WL 3757006 (5th Cir. Nov. 11, 2009) (distinguishing Hipp by recognizing that bankruptcy courts have civil contempt power and imposing a monetary sanction on a chapter 7 trustee for diversion of property); Campbell v. Countrywide Home Loans, Inc., 545 F.3d 348, 356 n.1 (5th Cir. 2008) (noting, in dicta, that Section 105(a) could be used to enact remedies in order to prevent Countrywide from abusing the proof of claim process). Countrywide's discussion of Hipp is not relevant to analyzing the legal basis of the bankruptcy court's order in this case.

III. SUPREME COURT PRECEDENT PRECLUDES COUNTRYWIDE'S ARGUMENT THAT THE BANKRUPTCY COURT'S ORDER IS AN UNAUTHORIZED LOCAL RULE.

This case is only about the power of a bankruptcy court regulate its own docket – one of its core functions – by asking a party in interest who appears before it to comply with legal rules and requirements on its own. Countrywide argues that the bankruptcy court does not have that power in this case because the existing Form 10, which creditors must submit with the documentation that demonstrates the legitimacy of their claims, is sacrosanct and therefore prevents bankruptcy judges from regulating their dockets. Countrywide Br. at 9-10. The United States has found no authority for Countrywide's central proposition that a form promulgated by the Judicial Conference of the United States can prevent a bankruptcy court from exercising its lawful powers under title 11 of the United States Code. Countrywide's analysis provides none.

To the contrary, 28 U.S.C. § 2075 provides that bankruptcy rules cannot modify statutory rights. This rule of construction makes clear that statutes trump rules, so section 105(a) is not constrained by Rule 3001.

In addition, Countrywide's argument that the bankruptcy court's Summary is an improperly promulgated rule rests on stretching the meaning of legal terms beyond recognition. But words matter.[7] The dictionary defines a rule as "a prescribed, suggested or self-imposed

[7] For the third time in briefing different stages of this case, Countrywide has equated the bankruptcy court's order with a Bill of Attainder. Countrywide Br. at 10. This is absurd, even for a rhetorical flourish, and would not be worthy of comment if it were not typical of the way Countrywide has litigated this case by twisting the definitions of accepted legal terms to fit its own purposes. The Bill of Attainder clause of the United States Constitution was intended as "a general safeguard against legislative exercise of the judicial function or more simply – trial by legislature." United States v. Brown, 381 U.S. 437, 442 (1965). The legislature prescribes general rules and "the application of those rules to individuals in society would seem to be the duty of other departments." Id. at 446 (citing Fletcher v. Peck, 6 Cranch 87,136 (1810)).

guide for conduct or action; a regulation or principle." Webster's Third New International Dictionary 1986 (1981). Black's Law Dictionary defines a rule as an "established standard, guide, or regulation." Black's Law Dictionary 1331 (6th ed. 1990). "A rule must necessarily be of general application. A regulation must apply impartially." State ex rel. Villines v. Freeman, 370 P.2d 307, 309 (Okla. 1962) (citation omitted).

The Summary in this case is the result of an adjudication. Adjudications differ from rule making in two ways. "First, adjudications resolve disputes among specific individuals in specific cases whereas rule making affects the rights of broad classes of unspecified individuals." Yesler Terrace Community Council v. Cisneros, 37 F.3d 442, 448 (9th Cir. 1994) (discussing APA adjudications). Second, because adjudications involve concrete disputes, they have an immediate effect on specific individuals . . . ." Id. (citations omitted). A rule applies to a particular group uniformly in a specific way. A rule directed at one person is a contradiction in terms. Nor does Countrywide cite a single case that supports its reading – and the United States has found none.

What Countrywide calls a rule is in fact an court order – and an unremarkable on at that. 11 U.S.C. § 105(a). Whether there was sufficient justification in the record to support the order is a question of fact that this Court reviews for abuse of discretion. That the bankruptcy court issued an order – not a rule – is beyond dispute.

Like any remedial order, the bankruptcy court's order fixes a problem – the basic purpose of an injunction, which is "to afford preventive relief, not to redress wrongs which have already been committed." J. C. McFarland Co. v. O'Brien, 6 F.2d 1016, 1018 (N.D. Ohio 1925). The

Accusing a court of promulgating a Bill of Attainder is nonsensical, especially in this case when Countrywide has enjoyed extensive legal process: an interlocutory appeal, liability trial, separate remedy trial, three stay hearings, and now an appeal on the merits.

Sixth Circuit has adopted Pomeroy's definition from the fifth edition of Equity Jurisprudence: "'Whatever be its form, decree or order, the remedy by ordinary injunction is wholly preventive, prohibitory, or protective. * * *'" Clemons v. Board of Ed. of Hillsboro, 228 F.2d 853, 856 (6th Cir. 1956) (citation omitted); see also Kazerooni v. Vanderbilt Univ., No. 3:06-0813, 2007 WL 965743, at *3 (M.D. Tenn. March 28, 2007) (order) (citing Clemons). Furthermore, a court has the power to "mould each decree to the necessities of the particular case." Hecht, 321 U.S. at 329; E. I. du Pont, 366 U.S. at 357 (Frankfurter, J., dissenting) (describing this rule as "a common-place, but one of compelling importance").

The bankruptcy court here identified a problem – Countrywide's inability to provide it with accurate information – and ordered Countrywide to take preventive measures to prevent such abuses in the future. The bankruptcy court's Summary is a modest requirement and thus is commensurate with the proven violation. Cf. Murton v. Measurecomp, LLC, No. 07-cv-3127, 2008 WL 5725628, at *6 (N.D. Ohio Dec. 2, 2008) (nullifying defendant's offer of judgment letters in a class action because of discovery violations). The bankruptcy court's power to take the action it did cannot be seriously challenged.

IV. COUNTRYWIDE REPRODUCES THE SAME ARGUMENTS ON STANDING AND JURISDICTION THAT HAVE FAILED TO SWAY ALL OF THE COURTS THAT HAVE CONSIDERED THEM IN THE CREDITOR ABUSE CONTEXT.

A. The bankruptcy court's power to require Countrywide to take action to prevent improper filings is law of this case.

1. Judge Gwin of this District Court held that the bankruptcy court had jurisdiction to take action against Countrywide in this case.

Countrywide's fundamental argument – that the bankruptcy court below acted without authority to remedy Countrywide's failure to provide accurate information – has been reviewed, and rejected, on appeal. The bankruptcy court's authority to prevent vexatious conduct is the law of the case. On August 20, 2008 the Honorable James S. Gwin issued an order denying Countrywide's motion to withdraw the mandate in this case. Fokkena v. Countrywide Home Loans, Inc. (In re O'Neal), No. 08-0043 at 3-4 (N.D. Ohio filed Aug. 20, 2008). In that order Judge Gwin found that "the Trustee moved for sanctions against Countrywide for allegedly merit-less filings." Order at 3. He continued: "[t]here can be little doubt that bankruptcy courts have the inherent power to sanction vexatious conduct presented before the court." Id. (citing In re Rainbow Magazine, Inc., 77 F.3d 278, 284 (9th Cir. 1996)). Judge Gwin concluded that the Trustee's motion "in the underlying bankruptcy proceeding falls within the jurisdiction of the Bankruptcy Court." Order at 4.

This Court does not need to consider whether the bankruptcy court had power to protect itself against Countrywide's vexatious conduct in submitting inaccurate filings. Judge Gwin determined that it does. Order at 3-4. Nor must this Court consider Countrywide's arguments that the bankruptcy court did not have subject matter jurisdiction to enter remedial action because it was seeking a sanction for criminal contempt. Judge Gwin considered, and rejected, these same arguments. Id. It is therefore the law of this case that the bankruptcy court has the authority to order Countrywide to take action to ensure that other debtors would be spared Ms. O'Neal's ordeal. See Rouse v. DaimlerChrysler Corp., 300 F.3d 711, 715 (6th Cir. 2002) (stating general rule that "findings made at one point in the litigation become the law of the case for subsequent stages of that same litigation"). Judge Gwin's holding should not be "lightly disturbed." Gillig v. Advanced Cardiovascular Sys., Inc., 67 F.3d 586, 590 (6th Cir. 1995). A court has a duty to correct any erroneous decision made earlier in the litigation, meaning that any review of a previous decision of a colleague-court must be done under an abuse of discretion standard. Id. Accordingly, the main task of this Court is to determine whether the court below abused its discretion when it required that Countrywide submit a Summary with its proofs of claim in her courtroom. The evidence will show that it did not.

B. Countrywide's argument that the United States Trustee lacks standing is precluded by Sixth Circuit precedent.

Countrywide argues that the United States Trustee does not have standing or authority to sue because the Code does not contain an explicit authorization for him to do so. Countrywide Br. at 17-18. This argument fails under Sixth Circuit precedent.

Relying on 11 U.S.C. § 307, the Sixth Circuit held that the United States Trustee had standing to challenge a debtor's petition filed in an improper venue. Thompson v. Greenwood, 507 F.3d 416, 420 n.3 (6th Cir. 2007). Neither title 28 nor the Bankruptcy Code explicitly bestows authority on the United States Trustee to challenge venue, yet the Sixth Circuit held section 307 allowed him to do so. Id. (also citing In re Miles, 330 B.R. 848, 849-51 (Bankr. M.D. Ga. 2004) (holding that the Trustee has standing to bring a motion to dismiss or transfer a Title 11 case due to improper venue)). Nor is the Thompson ruling less of a holding because it appears in a footnote. "Appellate opinions need not rehash settled law to enjoy respect by district courts. Brevity in stating a holding is a virtue, and a decision's central conclusion is no less a 'holding' for being succinct." In re Milwaukee Engraving Co., Inc., 219 F.3d 635, 637 (7th Cir. 2000) (stating that an appellate court need not belabor a holding if it has endorsed the reasoning of another circuit court on the legal issue) (Easterbrook, J.). On this issue, the Sixth Circuit has spoken for itself. The Sixth Circuit has held explicitly that the language of section 307, the structure of the Code, and the legislative history demonstrate that the United States Trustee has authority to file suit. The Sixth Circuit has explained that the United States Trustee had standing to appeal to protect the public interest in a fair bankruptcy system because "a good watchdog guards the interests of those for whom it watches." In re Revco D.S., Inc., 898 F.2d 498, 500 (6th Cir. 1990); but see Countrywide Br. at 23 (stating that Congress's "use of the term 'watch-dog' does not imply or suggest the UST has the power to file complaints against creditors for sanctions").

Countrywide's second argument that the United States Trustee is limited to the powers delineated in the Bankruptcy Code and 28 U.S.C. § 586 quickly falls apart – a conclusion reached by every court to consider that argument in the creditor abuse context. For instance, the Southern District of Florida, sitting in a bankruptcy appeal noted that "[c]ourts have repeatedly construed § 307 to hold that the United States Trustee has standing to appear and be heard on any issue in any case, despite the lack of pecuniary interest in the outcome of a bankruptcy proceeding." Walton v. Countrywide Home Loans, Inc., No. 08-23337, 2009 WL 1905035, at *2 (S.D. Fla. June 9, 2009) (citing cases). The bankruptcy court of the Western District of Pennsylvania dismissed Countrywide's theory about the interaction between section 307 and 28 U.S.C. § 586 in no uncertain terms: "Countrywide's argument in this regard must fail. There is nothing whatsoever in the statutory language of Section 307 that supports Countrywide's argument. Countrywide has cited no other, substantial authority [other than a bar journal article] in support of such a construction." In re Countrywide Home Loans, Inc., 384 B.R. 373, 384 (Bankr. W.D. Pa. 2008).

That has not changed in this case: Countrywide does not provide a single case citation from page 17 to the second full paragraph of page 19 to support its argument, save a single citation of Hibbs v. Winn, 542 U.S. 88, 101 (2004), for the unremarkable proposition that a court should not construe one statutory provision to render another superfluous. And even that point is misplaced here. Section 586(a)(5) of title 28 allows United States Trustees to "perform the duties prescribed for the United States Trustee under title 11 . . . ." One of these duties is "raising any issue" under 11 U.S.C. § 307, which is precisely what the United States Trustee did here.

C. Countrywide's argument that the bankruptcy court lacks jurisdiction is without merit.

Countrywide argues that the bankruptcy court lacked jurisdiction because it settled the underlying dispute with Ms. O'Neal, rendering the United States' adversary proceeding insufficiently "related to" a case under Title 11. Countrywide Br. at 12. Countrywide's argument is incorrect. This adversary complaint is a core proceeding arising under Title 11, which gives the bankruptcy court original jurisdiction to "hear and determine" the case, regardless of the status of the underlying bankruptcy estate. 28 U.S.C. § 157(b)(1). A core proceeding "either invokes a substantive right created by federal bankruptcy law or . . . could not exist outside of the bankruptcy." Sanders Confectionery Prods. Inc. v. Heller Fin., Inc., 973 F.2d 474, 483 (6th Cir. 1992); 28 U.S.C. § 157(b)(2) (non-exclusive list of core proceedings).

Actions addressing the integrity of the bankruptcy process, such as this one, go "to the heart of the administration of a bankruptcy case" and are therefore core proceedings. In re Seven Fields Dev. Corp., 505 F.3d 237, 262 (3d Cir. 2007). Specifically, a matter involving the discipline of a party for misconduct in a bankruptcy case is a core bankruptcy proceeding under 28 U.S.C. § 157 because it concerns the administration of the estate. Southmark Corp. v. Coopers & Lybrand (In re Southmark), 163 F.3d 925, 930 (5th Cir. 1999); see Cooter & Gell v. Hartmarx Corp., 496 U.S. 384,395 (1990) ("It is well established that a federal court may consider collateral issues after an action is no longer pending."). It makes no difference to jurisdiction whether the underlying bankruptcy case has settled. A court possesses "ever present" jurisdiction to regulate the conduct of parties appearing before it. Red Carpet Studios, 465 F.3d at 645 (upholding a sanction under 28 U.S.C. § 1927 even though the underlying lawsuit in which the sanction arose had been settled and voluntarily dismissed). This jurisdiction extends to bankruptcy cases. In re Lowenbraun, 453 F.3d 314, 321 (6th Cir. 2006) (approving the holding that "[t]here is no bright-line rule dictating that once an estate has been fully administered a trustee cannot avail himself of the federal court's bankruptcy jurisdiction") (citation omitted); see In re Menk, 241 B.R. 896, 905 (B.A.P. 9th Cir. 1999) (concluding that the status of a bankruptcy case is irrelevant to the exercise of jurisdiction in a core proceeding).

Here, the proceedings relate to Countrywide's inaccurate proof of claim and groundless objection to a plan confirmation, which are integral to bankruptcy administration. Loomis Elec., Inc. v. Lucerne Products, Inc., 225 B.R. 381, 385-86 (N.D. Ohio 1998). Furthermore, Countrywide has already raised and lost this argument before Judge Gwin and other courts. Fokkena, No. 08-0043 at 3-4 (holding that the trustee's motion "falls within the jurisdiction of the Bankruptcy Court."); Walton v. Countrywide Home Loans, Inc. (In re Sanchez), No. 08-23337, 2009 WL 1905035 at *6 (S.D. Fla. June 9, 2009) (holding that United States Trustee's enforcement proceeding against Countrywide for abuse of the proof of claim process and a frivolous motion for relief from the automatic stay were core proceedings because "[h]ad there been no bankruptcy, this proceeding could not have come about.”). This adversary complaint exists because Countrywide filed false papers in the court below, therefore the bankruptcy court had jurisdiction.

Countrywide relies on the Third Circuit's discussion in Pacor v. Higgins to argue that the bankruptcy court does not have “related to” jurisdiction in this case. Countrywide Br. at 12 (citing Pacor v. Higgins, 743 F.2d 984 (3d Cir. 1984)). Indeed, it does not: “related to” jurisdiction has nothing to do with this case. Here the court is acting under core jurisdiction from 11 U.S.C. § 105(a). Thus, Countrywide’s argument based on “related to” jurisdiction is wholly inapplicable to this circumstance. Proceedings “related to” the bankruptcy include 1) causes of action owned by the debtor which become property of the estate pursuant to 11 U.S.C. § 541, and 2) suits between third parties which have an effect on the bankruptcy estate.” Celotex Corp. v. Edwards, 514 U.S. 300, 307 n.5 (1995). Therefore, the question of whether “the outcome of that proceeding could conceivably have any effect on the estate being administered in bankruptcy,” is entirely irrelevant to the bankruptcy court’s jurisdiction over the proceedings. Celotex, 514 U.S. at 308 n.6. The bankruptcy court’s more limited “related to” jurisdiction has no role in this discussion. Bankruptcy courts have original jurisdiction over all core proceedings, and this jurisdiction is fully independent from the administration of the bankruptcy estate.

V. SUFFICIENCY OF THE EVIDENCE

A. Countrywide ignores evidence of its systematic failures contained in the record.

This Court must first determine if the bankruptcy court abused its discretion by determining that Countrywide's behavior in the O'Neal case and its imperviousness to sanctions resulting from three other instances of abusive practices gave the court sufficient grounds to take action to prevent future abuses in its court.[8] Included in the record are the three cases in which Countrywide ignored Judge Shea-Stonum's order while it was in effect, which can be considered as well. Secondly, this Court must determine if the remedy that the bankruptcy court ordered will address that identified problem. If the bankruptcy court did not abuse its discretion in identifying a problem and if its solution is designed to prevent further abuse, then this Court should affirm the decision below.

The bankruptcy court did not abuse its discretion by finding that the record demonstrated systematic abuse of process by Countrywide that required remedy. The United States introduced sufficient evidence at trial to show that Countrywide has unreliable channels of communication with its outside counsel who handle bankruptcy matters, resulting in erroneous and inaccurate filings. The bankruptcy court did not clearly err in concluding that requiring Countrywide to summarize additional relevant information would identify miscommunication and prevent needless litigation.

[8] Countrywide devotes five pages of its brief to crying foul concerning the alleged bases for the bankruptcy court's decision. The United States does not concede that Countrywide's analysis is correct, nor does it waive any future argument on the propriety of a judge citing law review articles or taking judicial notice of her own experience in resolving a case. See Countrywide Br. at 35-40. This Court does not need to reach these issues, however.

Countrywide argues that the bankruptcy court below relied on inadmissible and otherwise improper evidence to craft its order. For instance, Countrywide would have this Court believe that the bankruptcy court's finding concerning Countrywide's referral of work to the outside law firm that handled the O'Neal bankruptcy "lack[s] evidentiary support." Countrywide Br. at 33. In fact, Mr. McClatchey, the local counsel in the O'Neal case, gave approximately 50 transcript pages of testimony in which described Countrywide's automated procedures for assigning bankruptcy cases to his firm in particular, and others in general. For example, Mr. McClatchey testified as follows:

> Q: And how were these instructions communicated to you?
> A: Rather indirectly. I had a paralegal that would log into the Countrywide website each day and any requests for filings on our part would be communicated to the website.
> Q: Do you know the name of the person then at Countrywide Home Loans, Inc. who instructed you to file a proof of claim?
> A: No, I do not.
> Q: But you were instructed to file the proof of claim through this website?
> A: Yes.

Trial Tr. 100:23-25, 101: 1-10 (Apr. 24, 2009). This testimony supports the bankruptcy court's finding of fact that "Countrywide and M& S [local counsel] had an arrangement whereby emails would be sent to M&S identifying new matters." It also demonstrates that critical client-attorney communication was made through an automated system controlled by a "technician" on the Countrywide side and a paralegal on the other. According to Countrywide's testimony, the technician, with no legal training, was responsible for the accuracy of the documents. Trial Tr.

406:14-407:6; 419:11-19 (May 11, 2009). In spite of this responsibility, the technician making the assignments does not review the loan history but only verifies payments and charges without considering any of the computer notes that would alert him or her to specific issues related to the particular loan. Trial Tr. 77:23-78:15 (Apr. 24, 2009); Trial Tr. 416:13-418:7 (May 11, 2009). The supporting documents are automatically uploaded to the website upon initiation of the referral. Trial Tr. 33:13-34:3 (Apr. 24, 2009); Trial Tr. 34:10-12 (Apr. 24, 2009); Trial Tr. 414:17-415:6 (May 11, 2009). The system runs on automatic pilot: Countrywide provides standing authorization to file proofs of claim; access to a website is seen as authorization to act on behalf of Countrywide. Trial Tr. 118:17-21 (Apr. 24, 2009). Based on this evidence, the bankruptcy court did not abuse its discretion in concluding that a system premised on automated exchange of documents between two non-lawyers as the basis of a proof of claim was reckless.

Countrywide would have this Court believe that the bankruptcy court committed clear error when it found that "Countrywide's bankruptcy counsel was not given access to O'Neal's loan history." Countrywide Br. at 33. The actual transcript of testimony by Countrywide Vice-President John Smith reads:

> Q: The attorney does not at that point have access to the loan history documents; is that correct?
> A: They would not.
> Q: And the attorney does not generally review the loan history documents; is that correct?
> A: I don't know that. They wouldn't have access to them.

Trial Tr. 34:17-34:23 (Apr. 24, 2009); cf. Liability Op. at 15 (finding of fact #51) ("The loan history, including the notes captured by Countrywide's AS 400 system, were not [provided to counsel].").

The bankruptcy court also did not abuse its discretion in concluding that Countrywide's system allows "each actor in the process to act with indifference to the truth, and to rely solely on the limited information made available at each step," in spite of Countrywide's protestations to the contrary. Countrywide Br. at 33. In fact, testimony and evidence at trial demonstrated that:

- Local counsel does not have access to the loan history. Trial Tr. 34:17-34:23 (Apr. 24, 2009).
- No one pulls land records to confirm mortgage holder of record. Trial Tr. 418:8-419:8 (May 11, 2009).
- Technician does not read notations in a borrower's loan history before referring to local counsel. Trial Tr. 77:23-78:15 (Apr. 24, 2009)
- Customer service representatives could not access accurate information about Ms. O'Neal's account. Trial Tr. 65:14-66:8 (Apr. 24, 2009) (Portia Jones); Trial Tr. 67:13-68:11 (Apr. 24, 2009) (Casey Ford).
- No one knew how to stop Ms. O'Neal from receiving bills from Countrywide. UST Ex. 20.
- It took customer service representatives seven months to make internal inquiries about the status of Ms. O'Neal's account. UST Ex. 27.

B. Countrywide's miscellaneous arguments at the end of its brief are baseless.

1. Vagueness

Countrywide argues that the bankruptcy court's order is improper because it does not provide adequate guidance. Countrywide Br. at 31 (citing E.E.O.C. v. Wooster Brush Co. Employees Relief Ass'n, 727 F.2d 566, 566[sic] (6th Cir. 1984)). Wooster Brush restates the uncontroversial point that unspecific "obey the law injunctions cannot be sustained." Id. at 576.

An injunction is impermissibly vague when a person of ordinary intelligence would not have adequate notice of what conduct is prohibited. Schenck v. Pro-Choice Network W. N.Y., 519 U.S. 357, 383 (1997). A party's opportunistic interpretation does not make an order vague. For example, the Sixth Circuit rejected a creditor's vagueness challenge to the terms of a post-petition financing order that disfavored the creditor's position. In re Pioneer Inv. Serv. Co., No. 92-6090, 1994 WL 134683 (6th Cir. Apr. 14, 1994). Counsel for the appellant appeared to be "the only one who has experienced difficulty in understanding the order," prompting the court to rule that if an interested party is truly confused, the remedy would be to approach the bankruptcy court for clarification. Id. at *2. In this case, Countrywide's first concerns about vagueness materialized in its appeal brief.

2. Evidentiary Issues

Countrywide cannot attempt to exclude evidence that is harmful to its case under the veneer of prejudice. Its argument that the evidence of other cases in which it has been sanctioned is unduly prejudicial misunderstands the meaning of unfair prejudice and the function of the Rule 403 balancing test. Countrywide Br. at 42. Under Rule 403, evidence that is normally admissible may be excluded when the probative value of the evidence is substantially outweighed by the danger of undue prejudice. A court reviewing a decision to admit evidence "takes a maximal view of the probative effect of the evidence and a minimal view of its unfairly prejudicial effect, and will hold that the district court erred only if the later outweighs the former." United States v. Sassanelli, 118 F.3d 495, 498 (6th Cir. 1997). "Unfair prejudice does not mean the damage to a defendant's case that results from the legitimate probative force of the evidence; rather it refers to evidence which tends to suggest decision on an improper basis."

Morris v. Shelby County Gov't, 172 F.3d 49, at *2 (6th Cir. 1998) (Table). Admitting evidence of other cases in which Countrywide was sanctioned may not put it in the best light, but that prejudicial effect does not outweigh the probative value to show that monetary sanctions do not change its behavior.

Nor did the admission of prior cases to show Countrywide is impervious to monetary sanctions violate Rule 404(b) of the Federal Rules of Evidence. Even if one particular use of evidence is prohibited, it still may be introduced for multiple alternative purposes. United States v. Blankenship, 775 F.2d 735, 739 (6th Cir. 1985). Specifically, 404(b) does not prohibit the introduction of prior acts to show intent or attitude. United States v. Price, 329 F.3d 903, 906 (6th Cir. 2003).

The evidence of these other three cases involving Countrywide properly shows that Countrywide is not deterred by monetary penalties and is not motivated to take responsibility for its actions. In re Mann, No. 03-82973, 2004 WL 574354 (Bankr. M.D.N.C. Mar. 8, 2004) (imposing $7,500 against Countrywide in punitive damages for "deliberate, unwarranted and egregious conduct," namely twice changing the locks on the debtor's property and destroying cherished personal property) (Ex. 34); In re Ennis, slip op., No. 05-11985, (Bankr. W.D. Pa. July 31, 2006) (Ex. 36) (imposing $500 in punitive damages after Countrywide filed a motion for relief from automatic stay on the false grounds that the debtors were delinquent in their chapter 13 payments, when, in fact, they were current). In the final case introduced into the record, Countrywide filed an objection to the debtor's chapter 13 plan that the court described as "grossly erroneous, and to anyone familiar with bankruptcy law, the objection is clearly legal nonsense." In re Allen, No. 06-60121, 2007 WL 115182, at *1 (Bankr. S.D. Tex. Jan. 9, 2007)

(Ex. 37). The record in this case demonstrates that Countrywide cannot make things right – even after it has landed up in court.

VI. THE BANKRUPTCY COURT PROPERLY RELIED ON FEDERAL RULE OF BANKRUPTCY PROCEDURE 9011 TO IMPOSE THE SUMMARY REQUIREMENT.

The bankruptcy court correctly used Federal Rule of Bankruptcy Procedure 9011 as an alternate basis for its Summary requirement in this case. It is beyond dispute a bankruptcy court has the power to take corrective action under Rule 9011 for filing inaccurate claims. It is also undisputed that Countrywide filed an inaccurate proof of claim and baseless objection to confirmation, precisely the conduct that Rule 9011 addresses. Countrywide argues, however, that it was not on notice that Rule 9011 sanctions were an option.

Countrywide had ample notice that sanctions under Rule 9011 were a possibility. It filed a baseless claim – a violation of Federal Rule of Bankruptcy 9011. The instructions to Federal Rule of Bankruptcy Procedure Official Form 10, which Countrywide argues governs this case, refer to Rule 9011. Fed. R. Bankr. P. Official Form 10, Instructions, ¶ 7 ("The person filing this proof of claim must sign and date it. FRBP 9011."). The United States Trustee included Local Rule 2090-2(c) in its complaint, which prohibits "unprofessional practices or conduct." Compl. at ¶ 7. The district court, when denying Countrywide's motion to withdraw the reference, concluded that the bankruptcy court had authority to mandate corrective action in part because of Rule 9011. Fokkena, No. 08-0043 at 3-4. Countrywide had adequate warning that the bankruptcy court might rely on Rule 9011.

Countrywide's argument that the bankruptcy court had to issue a show cause order in order to sanction it fails to recognize that the safe harbor provision does not apply when a court imposes sanctions sua sponte. Instead, a court must provide notice and an opportunity for the party facing sanctions to respond in writing. Riccard v. Prudential Ins. Co., 307 F.3d 1277, 1294, n.14 (11th Cir. 2002). Furthermore, what constitutes adequate notice depends on "the knowledge the party has of the consequences of his own conduct." Id. (citing Link, 370 U.S. at 632). Countrywide knew what was at stake here.

Even if Countrywide could argue that it was not on notice that it could be subject to sanctions under Rule 9011 before the bankruptcy court issued its liability opinion, it certainly could not maintain that position afterwards. The court discussed Rule 9011 extensively in its liability order and ordered a "trial with respect to the issue of sanctions" with ten days notice. Riccard, 307 F.3d at 1294, n.14 (11 day response period satisfied due process). Countrywide is wrong that the bankruptcy court had to issue a show-cause order: "We see no basis for requiring that in all instances notice be in writing and with the formality of pleadings. But to avoid misunderstanding and permit appellate review, the notice given, or evidence of the giving of notice, should be made a part of the record." Donaldson v. Clark, 819 F.2d 1551, 1559-60 (11th Cir. 1987). Countrywide had the opportunity to prepare for the sanctions hearing; it did not ask for an extension of time. Since the bankruptcy court issued its order, Countrywide has had the benefit of reconsideration of its arguments in three separate stay hearings. Countrywide's due process rights have been met. The bankruptcy court properly used Rule 9011 as a secondary basis of its authority to take remedial action in this case.

CONCLUSION

For the reasons given above, the United States Trustee respectfully requests that this Court affirm the Order of the bankruptcy court.

JURISDICTIONAL STATEMENT

The bankruptcy court had jurisdiction under 28 U.S.C. §§ 157(a) and (b), and 1334(a) to issue its order denying the United States Trustee's motion to dismiss the Debtor's chapter 7 bankruptcy case. The bankruptcy court entered its order on June 8, 2010. That order was a final order. Stuart v. Koch (In re Koch), 109 F.3d 1285, 1287 (8th Cir. 1997). The United States Trustee filed a notice of appeal on June 22, 2010, which is timely under 28 U.S.C. §§ 158(a) and (c)(2) and Fed. R. Bankr. P. 8002. This Court has appellate jurisdiction under 28 U.S.C. § 158(a)(1) and (b), statutory provisions under which bankruptcy appellate panels have jurisdiction to hear appeals from final judgments, orders, and decrees of bankruptcy judges.

STATEMENT OF THE ISSUE

The sole issue in this appeal is whether the bankruptcy court erred in concluding that 11 U.S.C. § 707(b)(1) does not apply to a case that has been converted from chapter 13 to chapter 7 of the Bankruptcy Code.

STANDARD OF REVIEW

A bankruptcy court's findings of fact are reviewed for clear error and its conclusions of law are reviewed de novo. In re Litzinger, 322 B.R. 108, 112 (B.A.P. 8th Cir. 2005). In this case, the facts are undisputed, and the bankruptcy court's interpretation of 11 U.S.C. § 707(b)(1) is a conclusion of law subject to de novo review.

STATEMENT OF THE CASE

Maria Cruse sought chapter 13 bankruptcy relief in the United States Bankruptcy Court for the Southern District of Iowa. See 11 U.S.C. § 1301 et seq. Less than two years later, Ms. Cruse converted her case to chapter 7. See 11 U.S.C. § 1307(a). The United States Trustee moved to dismiss Ms. Cruse's chapter 7 case for abuse under 11 U.S.C. § 707(b)(1) on the grounds that a presumption of abuse arose and the totality of Ms. Cruse's financial situation demonstrated abuse. See 11 U.S.C. § 707(b)(1), (2) & (3). The bankruptcy court held that section 707(b)(1) did not apply to cases that had not started in chapter 7 and denied the United States Trustee's motion for that reason. The United States Trustee appealed.

STATEMENT OF FACTS

Ms. Cruse commenced this case by filing a petition for relief under chapter 13 of the Bankruptcy Code on December 18, 2006. [Chapter 13 Voluntary Petition, #1]. At the time, Ms. Cruse did not qualify for chapter 7 relief according to her counsel. [1/12/09 Transcript at 8]. Ms. Cruse's plan was confirmed on June 28, 2007. [Confirmation Order, #34]. The plan provided for full payment of the unsecured creditors' claims. [Modified Plan, #29 at 5].

In early 2008, Ms. Cruse quit working and started receiving short term disability benefits due to complications following surgery. Ms. Cruse did not try to modify her plan or obtain a hardship discharge. See 11 U.S.C. §§ 1329, 1328(b). The chapter 13 trustee moved to dismiss Ms. Cruse's case in August of 2008, alleging that she had failed to make plan payments. [Trustee Motion to Dismiss, #42]. Ms. Cruse then converted her case to chapter 7. [Notice of Conversion, #47].

Shortly before she converted her case, Ms. Cruse had married a surgeon with an annual income of over $300,000, but the amended schedules she filed after conversion did not reflect her husband's income. [Schedules, #60 at 5]. Ms. Cruse also filed a Chapter 7 Statement of Current Monthly Income and Means Test Calculation in which she excluded her husband's entire $22,959.99 gross monthly income as a marital adjustment on Line 17. [#67 at 2]. The resulting calculation indicated that no presumption of abuse arose. [Id. at 5]. In amended schedules I and J filed in early December, Ms. Cruse claimed monthly net family income of $21,211.54. [#71 at 1]. She also claimed $21,408.68 in monthly household expenses, resulting in negative monthly income of $197.14. [Id. at 2].

The United States Trustee moved to dismiss the case under 11 U.S.C. §

707(b)(1) for both presumptive abuse and abuse under the totality of Ms. Cruse's financial circumstances based on her failure to attribute any of her husband's income to the payment of household expenses in her Means Test Calculation and the excessive expenses claimed on Schedule J. [#72].

After raising the issue sua sponte, the bankruptcy court ruled that 11 U.S.C. § 707(b)(1) did not apply to cases converted to chapter 7. [Docket Text Ruling, #82]. The bankruptcy court subsequently denied the United States Trustee's motion to dismiss on that basis. [Docket Text Order, #85].

The bankruptcy court did not write an opinion explaining its decision, but instead entered a minute order that referenced its earlier docket text ruling stating that the court "generally adopts the reasoning set forth in McDow v. Dudley (In re Dudley), 405 B.R. 790 (Bankr. W.D. Va. 2009), In re Ryder, 2008 WL 3845246 (Bankr. N.D. Cal. Aug. 18, 2008) and In re Fox, 370 B.R. 639 (Bankr. D.N.J. 2007)." [Id.].

SUMMARY OF ARGUMENT

This appeal is not about whether Ms. Cruse's bankruptcy case would be an abuse of chapter 7, although the United States Trustee believes that it would. The bankruptcy court has yet to consider that issue. This appeal will decide whether a debtor who initiates a case in one chapter and then converts it to chapter 7 will escape scrutiny for abuse under (a) section 707(b)'s means test, (b) section 707(b)(3)(A)'s bad faith test, and (c) section 707(b)(3)(B)'s totality of the debtor's financial circumstances test.

The bankruptcy court found that section 707(b)(1) does not apply in a case originally commenced under chapter 13 and subsequently converted to chapter 7. [Docket Text #82, #85]. The court did so because it relied on the reasoning of three other bankruptcy courts who read the words in section 707(b)(1) – "may dismiss a case filed by an individual debtor under this chapter whose debts are primarily consumer debts" – as unambiguously limiting dismissal under section 707(b) to cases originating under chapter 7. 11 U.S.C. § 707(b)(1) (emphasis added). [Docket Text Ruling, #82].

Those words are anything but clear. Courts in approximately equal numbers have taken opposite views of the "plain meaning" of the statute.

But one reading is better. The better reading permits a court to dismiss any chapter 7 case filed by an individual debtor with primarily consumer debts for abuse, regardless of how the case got to chapter 7. It is better because at least seven separate indications in the Code, its legislative history and relevant case law lead to the conclusion that section 707(b) applies to all chapter 7 cases. That body of law demonstrates this language does not exclude converted cases from scrutiny under section 707(b), but instead acts to limit the application of section 707(b) to chapter 7 cases involving individual debtors with primarily consumer debts. Those indicators far outweigh the countervailing indications relied on by others, making this interpretation the better one.

First, in the context of the Bankruptcy Code, cases that are converted to chapter 7 from chapter 13 are "deemed" to have been "filed under" chapter 7. Resendez v. Lindquist, 691 F.2d 397, 399 (8th Cir. 1982); see 11 U.S.C. § 348(a). This supports the conclusion that the phrase "filed . . . under this chapter" refers both to cases that originated under chapter 7 and those that were converted to chapter 7.

Second, sections 1112(b)(1), 1208(b), and 1307(b) of the Bankruptcy Code allow a court to "dismiss a case under this chapter." That language is the same as that found in section 707(b), except that section 707(b), unlike those sections, adds the words "filed by an individual debtor" to identify those cases pending in chapter 7 that can be dismissed under that subsection. Sections 1112(b), 1208(b), and 1307(b) serve the same purpose as 707(b), authorizing dismissal when the applicable statutory basis is met. There is no reason to read them more expansively than section 707(b).

Third, courts almost unanimously have interpreted the language "in a case filed under" in 11 U.S.C. § 1328(f) to include cases converted to the specified chapters. There is no reason to interpret the substantially similar phrase in section 707(b)(1) the opposite way.

Fourth, Congress explicitly excepted some chapter 7 cases from dismissal under section 707(b). But it did not explicitly except cases converted to chapter 7. Given that Congress knew how to create explicit exceptions to section 707(b) when it wished, there is no reason to find an implicit exception here.

Fifth, in section 704(b) of the Code, Congress required the United States Trustee to review materials submitted by individual debtors in chapter 7 cases and move to dismiss or convert the case if the debtor's case would be presumed to be an abuse or explain why a motion would not be appropriate. Section 704(b) makes no exception for converted cases.

Sixth, for over twenty years prior to the enactment of the Bankruptcy Abuse Prevention and Consumer Protection Act of 2005,[1] bankruptcy courts – relying on the same language at issue here – dismissed converted cases for substantial abuse under section 707(b) and routinely expressed the belief that converted cases could remain in chapter 7 only if it would not be a substantial abuse of that chapter. The language did not change in 2005, so the result should not either.

Seventh, the bankruptcy court's ruling would defeat the objective of section 707(b) to ensure that debtors with the ability to repay their creditors do so. Instead it would invite abuse by enabling debtors to obtain relief under chapter 7 simply by commencing their case in chapter 13 and then converting to chapter 7.

And it would discourage debtors who have some ability to pay but are unwilling or unable to make full payment under their current plan to engage in necessary belt-tightening or attempt to modify their plans to obtain relief under chapter 13. Many such debtors instead would convert to chapter 7, wasting the time and resources already spent by the court, the parties and the trustee in chapter 13 and unnecessarily burdening the new chapter 7 trustee.

ARGUMENT

I. Although Section 707(b) is not artfully drafted, the Code's language and structure, past practice under section 707(b), and section 707(b)'s purpose all establish that section 707(b) is best read as applying to converted cases.

A. Standing alone, section 707(b)(1) is ambiguous on the question of whether section 707(b) applies to converted cases.

The bankruptcy court held that Ms. Cruse's case could not be dismissed for abuse under section 707(b)(1) because that section did not apply to converted cases. [#82, #85]. The court relied on three recent bankruptcy court decisions that interpreted the statutory language to permit dismissal for abuse of "a case filed by an individual debtor under this chapter whose debts are primarily consumer debts" to limit the reach of section 707(b) to cases that began under chapter 7. 11 U.S.C. § 707(b)(1). Those decisions diverged from a 20-year, pre-BAPCPA practice of reviewing converted cases for substantial abuse under the identical statutory language.[2] And despite those new decisions, other courts have continued to rule that section 707(b) applies to converted cases. See Justice v. Advanced Control Solutions, Inc., No. 07-5231, 2008 WL 4368668 (W.D. Ark. Sept. 22, 2008) (holding that section 707(b) does apply to cases converted to chapter 7); In re Willis, 408 B.R. 803 (Bankr. W.D. Mo. 2009) (Hon. Jerry W. Venters) (same); In re Kellett, 379 B.R. 332 (Bankr. D. Or. 2007) (same); In re Kerr, No. 06-12302, 2007 WL 2119291 (Bankr. W.D. Wash. Jul. 18, 2007) (same); In re Perfetto, 361 B.R. 27 (Bankr. D.R.I. 2007) (same).

The three courts' difficulty in applying section 707(b) to converted cases is understandable. The language of section 707(b)(1) is anything but clear. The sixteen words at the heart of the controversy include

- five nouns and
- three modifying phrases or clauses, but

[2] In BAPCPA, Congress lowered the standard for dismissal under 707(b) from "substantial abuse" to "abuse," but the language at issue here remained unchanged. Pub. L. No. 109-8, 119 Stat. at 27.

- no punctuation.

Adding to the ambiguity, "under this chapter" sits haphazardly in the middle of the independent phrase "filed by a debtor . . . whose debts are primarily consumer debts."

But unlike the 20-year practice under section 707(b), those three courts' rulings go against the language and structure of the Bankruptcy Code and the well-recognized purpose of that provision, as explained below. Taken in context, the better interpretation of the statute is that section 707(b) applies to all cases under chapter 7.

B. The language and structure of the Bankruptcy Code, however, lead to the conclusion that converted cases are subject to dismissal for abuse.

The relevant language in section 707(b) must be construed in the context of the Bankruptcy Code. See McCarthy v. Bronson, 500 U.S. 136, 139 (1991) (rejecting arguments relying on a "natural reading" of statutory language in isolation). Courts look at the design of the statute as a whole and to its object and policy, not just the particular statutory language, to determine its meaning. Crandon v. United States, 494 U.S. 152, 158, (1990). The language and structure of the Code and the history of section 707(b) show that section 707(b) applies to all cases under chapter 7.

1. The fact that the Eighth Circuit and other courts hold that section 348(a) treats converted cases as filed under the converted chapter supports the Government's reading.

While most civil cases are filed only once, bankruptcy cases are different. A single bankruptcy case can proceed under various chapters by conversion from one chapter to another. In that context, a single bankruptcy case can pend under more than one chapter.[3]

The Bankruptcy Code treats converted cases as if they were originally commenced under the chapter to which they are converted. Section 348, which governs the effect of conversion, states that:

> Conversion of a case from a case under one chapter of this title to a case under another chapter of this title constitutes an order for relief under the chapter to which the case is converted, but, except as provided in subsections (b) and (c) of this section, does not effect a change in the date of the filing of the petition, the commencement of the case, or the order for relief.

11 U.S.C. § 348(a) (emphasis added).[4] In other words, upon conversion, a case is

[3] The term "filed under" is not defined in the Code. Merriam-Webster's online dictionary defines "file" among other things as "to place among official records as prescribed by law." See www.merriam-webster.com/dictionary/file (Aug. 9, 2010). Using that definition, Ms. Cruse's case was filed under chapter 13 when she filed her petition and then filed under chapter 7 when she filed her notice of conversion.

[4] Subsections (b) and (c) of section 348 provide:

(b) Unless the court for cause orders otherwise, in section 701(a), 727(a)(10), treated as if it had been commenced under the new chapter at the time the original petition was filed. As the United States Bankruptcy Court for the Western District of Missouri has explained:

> [T]he clear intent of [section 348(a)] is to retain the original filing date as the date of the "filing of the petition," "commencement of the case" or "order for relief" except in the circumstances provided for in subsections (b) and (c), where these terms are instead deemed to refer to the conversion date. Because Section 707(b) is not mentioned in either subsection (b) or (c) of Section 348, it follows that the original filing date is retained upon conversion, but the case is otherwise treated as if the debtor had originally filed under the converted chapter.

In re Willis, 408 B.R. at 808 (quoting In re Kerr, 2007 WL 2119291 at *3 (emphasis added)). Cf. Justice, 2008 WL 4368668 at *3-5; Perfetto, 361 B.R. at 30-31; In re Kellett, 379 B.R. at 335-40; In re Kerr, 2007 WL 2119291 at *2-*4.[5]

And it is the law of this circuit that debtors who convert their cases from 727(b), 728(a), 728(b), 1102(a), 1110(a)(1), 1121(b), 1121(c), 1141(d)(4), 1146(a), 1146(b), 1201(a), 1221, 1228(a), 1301(a), and 1305(a) of this title, "the order for relief under this chapter" in a chapter to which a case has been converted under section 706, 1112, 1208, or 1307 of this title means the conversion of such case to such chapter.

(c) Sections 342 and 365(d) of this title apply in a case that has been converted under section 706, 1112, 1208, or 1307 of this title, as if the conversion order were the order for relief.

[5] Because section 707(b) does not refer to "the order for relief under this chapter," there would be no reason to reference it in section 348(b) in any event.

chapter 13 to chapter 7 "are deemed to have filed a Chapter 7 case at the time the Chapter 13 case was filed." Resendez, 691 F.2d at 399.[6] Accord In re Perfetto, 361 B.R. at 31 (debtors who convert their cases to other chapters "are deemed to have 'filed under' the converted to chapter, as of the date the original petition was filed.") (italicized in original); In re Sours, 350 B.R. 261, 266-68 (Bankr. E.D. Va. 2006); In re Grydzuk, 353 B.R. 564, 568 (Bankr. N.D. Ind. 2006); In re Capers, 347 B.R. 169, 171-72 (Bankr. D.S.C. 2006).

So when Ms. Cruse's case was converted to chapter 7, it was "filed under" chapter 7, which supports the idea that it should be evaluated under section 707(b) for potential abuse.

2. The fact that other Code provisions providing for dismissal use similar language that includes converted cases without expressly saying so supports the Government's reading.

Provisions in various chapters of the Bankruptcy Code governing the dismissal of cases support the conclusion that section 707(b) applies to all cases under chapter 7. See 11 U.S.C. § 1112(b), § 1208(b), and § 1307(b) of the Bankruptcy Code. Each of those sections allows a court to "dismiss a case under this chapter." And that language includes converted cases even though it does not expressly say so. Otherwise, there would no reason to expressly except certain converted cases from the reach of section 1208(b) and section 1307(b).[7]

[6] Although the Resendez case did not address the precise issue before this court, it is instructive as to how the Code treats converted cases.

That language is the same as that found in section 707(b), except that section 707(b), unlike those sections, adds a second qualifier, i.e. the case also must be "filed by an individual debtor . . . whose debts are primarily consumer debts" to be dismissed under that subsection. Sections 1112(b), 1208(b), and 1307(b) serve the same purpose as 707(b), authorizing dismissal when the applicable statutory basis is met. Thus, section 707(b) should be construed in the same way – applying it to converted cases – because it is a basic rule of statutory construction that "'identical words used in different parts of the same act are intended to have the same meaning.'" Commissioner of Internal Revenue v. Lundy, 516 U.S. 235, 250 (1996) (citations omitted). There is no reason to interpret it in an opposite manner, as the bankruptcy court did.

3. The fact that courts have interpreted the words "filed under" in the Code to encompass converted cases supports the Government's reading.

In BAPCPA, Congress used the phrase "filed . . . under" twice when it added 11 U.S.C. § 1328(f), prohibiting debtors from receiving a discharge in a chapter 13 case filed within specified periods of time after filing previous cases in which they had received a discharge. See 11 U.S.C. § 1328(f)(1) & (2).

[7] Section 1208(b) does not apply if the case has been converted under section 706 or 1112. Section 1307(b) does not apply if the case has been converted under section 706, 1112, or 1208. See 11 U.S.C. §§ 1208(b) & 1307(b).

The phrases "in a case filed under chapter 7, 11, 12 of this title" and "in a case filed under chapter 13" in section 1328(f) have been overwhelmingly interpreted to encompass cases converted to those chapters, as well as cases originally commenced under those chapters.[8] In re Dalton, No. 09-12024, 2010 WL 55499 (Bankr. M.D.N.C. Jan. 7, 2010) (debtor who commenced case under chapter 13 and then converted to chapter 7 and received chapter 7 discharge found to have "filed under" chapter 7 for the purpose of section 1328(f)); Grice v. WE Energies (In re Grice), 373 B.R. 886, 888-89 (Bankr. E.D. Wis. 2007) (same); In re Ybarra, 359 B.R. 702 (Bankr. S.D. Ill. 2007) (same); In re Sours, 350 B.R. at

> > (1) in a case filed under chapter 7, 11, or 12 of this title during the 4-year period preceding the date of the order for relief under this chapter, or
> > (2) in a case filed under chapter 13 of this title during the 2-year period preceding the date of such order.

11 U.S.C. § 1328(f) (emphasis added).

268 (same); In re Capers, 347 B.R. at 171-72 (same); In re Knighton, 355 B.R. 922 (Bankr. M.D. Ga. 2006) (same); In re Grydzuk, 353 B.R. 564 (same). But see In re Hamilton, 383 B.R. 469 (Bankr. W.D. Ark. 2008).[9]

There is no discernable reason to give those same words an opposite meaning in section 707(b)(1). Specific language within the Code should be interpreted the same way. Lundy, 516 U.S. at 250 (citations omitted). Therefore, the language in section 707(b) referring to "a case filed . . . under this chapter" should be read as referring to both cases originating in chapter 7 and cases converted to chapter 7 like the substantially similar language in section 1328(f).

Other provisions in the Code buttress the conclusion that both cases commenced under a specific chapter and cases converted to that chapter are "filed under" that chapter. For example, in section 342(f), Congress provided that an entity may file a notice of address with a bankruptcy court to be used to provide notice to the entity in "all cases under chapters 7 and 13," and that the court will use the address provided to give notice in any case "filed under chapter 7 or 13 " with certain caveats. 11 U.S.C. § 342(f)(1) & (2) (emphasis added). Using the bankruptcy court's narrow construction of the term "filed under," section 342(f) would have to be understood as inviting entities to request that the bankruptcy courts send notice to them at a specific address in all chapter 7 and 13 cases, but requiring the bankruptcy courts to honor those requests only in cases originally commenced under chapters 7 and 13. That makes no sense.

[9] A Fourth Circuit decision that narrowly interpreted "filed" in section 1328(f) did not address how that section applied to converted cases. See Branigan v. Bateman (In re Bateman), 515 F.3d 272 (4th Cir. 2008).

4. The fact that section 707(b) expressly excepts certain cases – but not converted cases – from section 707(b)(2) supports the Government's reading.

Although Congress did not expressly choose to except converted cases from the reach of section 707(b), it did choose to include other explicit exceptions to means testing in that section. See 11 U.S.C. § 707(b)(2)(D) (excluding precisely defined subsets of disabled combat veterans and national guardsmen and reservists). Had Congress intended to create a similar exception for converted cases, it could have said so unequivocally in section 707(b)(1) or included the exception in section 707(b)(2)(D). See Sanchez v. Holder, 560 F.3d 1028, 1032 (9th Cir. 2009).

The contrast between section 707(b)(2)(D)'s explicit exception, and section 707(b)(1)'s text could hardly be more profound. Not only does the former expressly define the exception, it carefully delineates its parameters. It does so in detail. It leaves no ambiguity, expressly providing that section 707(b)(2) "shall not apply" to a well-defined class of excepted cases. 11 U.S.C. § 707(b)(2)(D).

And, because the exception is express and detailed, it is clear.

Given that Congress took great care to craft its express exception in section 707(b)(2)(D), there is no cause to presume it intended there to be any implicit exception in section 707(b). Because section 707(b)(2)(D)'s detailed nature underscores just how seriously Congress undertook its drafting of section 707(b), the lack of an express exception in section 707(b)'s text underscores that none exists.

5. The fact that Congress did not expressly or impliedly except converted cases from the scope of the United States Trustee's obligation under section 704(b) to review individual debtors' chapter 7 cases for presumptive abuse and take appropriate action under section 707(b) supports the Government's reading.

The bankruptcy court's conclusion that section 707(b) does not apply in converted cases cannot easily be reconciled with section 704(b). In fact, one decision upon which the bankruptcy court relied conceded that point. See McDow v. Dudley (In re Dudley), 405 B.R. 790, 797 n.18 (Bankr. W.D. Va. 2009), appeal dismissed, 428 B.R. 686 (W.D. Va. 2010). That section expressly requires the United States Trustee to determine whether the presumption of abuse under section 707(b) arises "[w]ith respect to a debtor who is an individual in a case under [chapter 7]," and if it does to file either a motion to dismiss or convert under section 707(b) or a statement explaining why such a motion would not be appropriate. 11 U.S.C. § 704(b)(1) & (2). Because the statute refers to "a case under" chapter 7, it applies to any chapter 7 case no matter how it got there. So under section 704(b), the United States Trustee must review cases converted to chapter 7 by individual debtors for abuse and file a motion to dismiss or convert under section 707(b) if it believes that a presumption of abuse arises.[10] Plainly, the United States Trustee cannot fulfill his mandatory statutory duties under section 704(b) if the bankruptcy court is correct in holding that section 707(b) does not apply to converted cases.

Admittedly, a similar tension exists between the United States Trustee's interpretation of section 707(b) and the clerk's duty under 11 U.S.C. § 342(d) to provide creditors notice within ten days of the filing of the petition if the presumption of abuse has arisen. As some have noted, that might not be possible in a converted case. But the other factors outweigh that potential inconsistency, leading to the conclusion that the better reading of section 707(b) is that it applies in converted cases.

[10] All chapter 13 debtors are individual debtors (see 11 U.S.C. § 109(e)) so any cases they convert to chapter 7 fall within the purview of section 704(b).

C. The fact that courts dismissed converted cases under section 707(b) for more than twenty years before BAPCPA supports the Government's reading.

The language at issue in this case has been in the statute unchanged since section 707(b) was added in 1984. See Pub. L. No. 98-353, 98 Stat. 333 (1984). For over 20 years before BAPCPA was enacted, parties brought motions under section 707(b) to dismiss cases that had been converted to chapter 7 from other chapters – and bankruptcy courts granted those motions – without anyone questioning section 707(b)'s applicability to converted cases. See, e.g., In re Beharry, 264 B.R. 398, 399-400 (Bankr. W.D. Pa. 2001); In re Morris, 153 B.R. 559, 563-64 (Bankr. D. Or. 1993); In re Traub, 140 B.R. 286, 287-88, 291 (Bankr. D.N.M. 1992) (dismissing case converted from chapter 11 to chapter 7 under section 707(b)). And courts assessing the potential for a chapter 13 debtor to abuse the bankruptcy system by converting to chapter 7 often identified section 707(b) as a mechanism to curb such abuse. See, e.g., In re Fulton, 211 B.R. 247, 260 n.14 (Bankr. S.D. Ohio 1997) (indicating that "if the debtor converts . . . under 11 U.S.C. § 1307(a), the debtor must be eligible to file a Chapter 7 which would include an analysis under § 707(b) as to whether a significant amount of disposable income indicates an abuse of the system").[11]

Pre-BAPCPA bankruptcy practice is significant because courts "will not read the Bankruptcy Code to erode past bankruptcy practice absent a clear indication that Congress intended such a departure." Hamilton v. Lanning, 130 S. Ct. 2464, 2473 (2010) (internal quotation omitted). Congress retained the term "filed under" in 2005 when it made significant changes to that section, despite the widespread practice of reviewing converted cases for substantial abuse under section 707(b). If Congress had intended section 707(b) to apply only in cases that originated in chapter 7, it would have said so expressly and unambiguously in BAPCPA.[12]

[11] Accord In re Murry-Hudson, 147 B.R. 960, 964 (Bankr. N.D. Cal. 1992) (declaring that "[w]hile § 1307(a) gives a debtor the unbridled right to convert to Chapter 7, it does not give him the unbridled right to remain there. If he has the ability to complete his Chapter 13 plan, or the Court otherwise finds that the granting of Chapter 7 relief would be a substantial abuse of the provisions of that chapter, his case could be dismissed pursuant to § 707(b)."); In re Hargis, 103 B.R. 912, 917 n.2 (Bankr. E.D. Tenn. 1989) (indicating that "a debtor who chooses to convert his or her chapter 13 case to a case under chapter 7 . . . would still be subject to the provisions of 11 U.S.C. § 707(b)"). The United States Trustee is not aware of any pre-BAPCPA case raising the issue of whether section 707(b) applies in converted cases.

[12] Congress knew how to refer unambiguously to cases originally commenced under a specific chapter and conversely, how to expressly exclude converted cases, but it did neither in section 707(b)(1). See 11 U.S.C. § 1112(a)(2) (referring to cases that "originally [were] commenced . . . under this chapter"); 11 U.S.C. § 706(a) (permitting a debtor to convert a case "if the case

D. Only if every case under chapter 7 is reviewed for abuse will all debtors with the ability to repay their creditors be asked to do so.

Congress enacted the BAPCPA "'to ensure that debtors repay creditors the maximum they can afford.'" Coop v. Frederickson (In re Frederickson), 545 F.3d 652, 657 (8th Cir. 2008) (quoting H.R. Rep. No. 109-31, pt.1, at 2 (2005), reprinted in 2005 U.S.C.C.A.N. 88, 89). See also 151 Cong. Rec. S 2470 (March 10, 2005) ("The means test was intended to 'ensure that those who can afford to repay some portion of their unsecured debts [be] required to do so.'"). Congress was concerned that under the prior system, "some bankruptcy debtors are able to repay a significant portion of their debts" but are not required to do so. H.R. Rep. No. 109-31 (I), at 5, reprinted in 2005 U.S.C.C.A.N. 88, 92. In amending section 707(b), Congress sought to close or reduce "the loopholes and incentives that allow and – sometimes – even encourage opportunistic personal filings and abuse." Id.

The bankruptcy court's approach has the opposite effect. It encourages debtors to convert cases in an effort to escape scrutiny not only under 707(b)(2)'s test for presumption of abuse, but also under section 707(b)(3)(A)'s bad faith test has not been converted under" specified sections), 11 U.S.C. § 1112(a)(3) (permitting conversion "unless the case was converted" involuntarily).

and 707(b)(3)(B)'s test of the totality of the circumstances of the debtor's financial situation, giving those with a clear-cut ability to repay the opportunity to avoid having to repay anything at all. The bankruptcy court's interpretation would invite debtors with disposable income sufficient to repay their creditors in full to escape section 707(b) review simply by filing chapter 13 petitions and shortly thereafter converting their cases to chapter 7.

It would also encourage chapter 13 debtors, who might otherwise amend their chapter 13 plans, to convert to chapter 7 and eliminate their payments to creditors instead of utilizing the remedies available for such debtors under chapter 13. Those conversions would waste the time and effort expended by the court, the parties, and the chapter 13 trustees, and would unnecessarily create work for the new chapter 7 trustees who must review the debtors' filings and prepare for the section 341 meetings.

And while some courts suggest that parties may seek to dismiss converted cases for "bad faith" under section 707(a), that does not necessarily solve the problem for several reasons. First, in this circuit and some others, it has not been clearly established that bad faith constitutes "cause," under section 707(a) that warrants dismissal, posing a significant risk that debtors may strategically file in chapter 13 and convert to chapter 7 with impunity. See In re Huckfeldt, 39 F.3d 829, 832 (8th Cir. 1994). See also In re Padilla, 222 F.3d 1184, 1193 (9th Cir. 2000) (limiting the application of section 707(a). Second, bad faith may be difficult to prove where a dishonest debtor makes a payment or two under a confirmed plan before converting to chapter 7. In addition, parties would still lose several of their means of detecting and remedying abusive cases through dismissal – the means test of section 707(b)(2), a bad faith analysis under section 707(b)(3)(B), and consideration of the totality of the debtor's financial circumstances under section 707(b)(3)(B) – leaving them no recourse against debtors with a meaningful ability to pay who convert to chapter 7 but whose conduct may not rise to the level of bad faith.

In spite of the potential abuses associated with conversion, part of the reasoning behind the decisions on which the bankruptcy court relied was that it would be unfair and pointless to review converted cases for abuse because the means test calculation is based on income and expenses figures that predated the chapter 13 case. But that is only the starting point for section 707(b) review.

Congress included a provision in section 707(b) that permits a debtor to attempt to prove special circumstances, including changes in his income or expenses, to rebut the presumption that his converted case would be abusive. See 11 U.S.C. § 707(b)(2)(B).[13] And the bankruptcy court considers the totality of the debtor's actual financial situation. See Ross-Tousey v. Neary (In re Ross-Tousey), 549 F.3d 1148, 1162 (7th Cir. 2008). And, in a section 707(b)(3)(B) case, the conditions existing at discharge govern. In re Cortez, 457 F.3d 448, 458 (5th Cir. 2006). In addition, if a case is converted from chapter 13 to chapter 7, and the United States Trustee determines that the debtor has no ability to repay, he likely would decline to bring a motion to dismiss the debtor's case.[14] See 11 U.S.C. § 704(b)(2). So only a debtor with disposable income at the time of the conversion has any real risk of having his converted case reconverted or dismissed. That debtor should be denied chapter 7 relief if he still has an ability to make meaningful payments to his creditors, regardless of whether he converted his case from chapter 13.

There is an answer for an honest debtor who fails to make plan payments in chapter 13 because of deteriorating finances, but still has disposable income – he can try to modify his plan.[15] See 11 U.S.C. § 1329. A debtor with a confirmed plan who is unable to afford payments under his plan may be able to modify his plan to reduce or postpone his monthly payments. And if modification is impracticable, the debtor may qualify for a hardship discharge under section 1328(b), obviating the need to convert to chapter 7.

[13] Nothing in section 707(b)(2)(B) limits the special circumstances that a debtor may raise to those existing at the time he filed his original petition.

[14] In fiscal year 2009, the United States Trustees declined to seek dismissal in about 60 percent of the presumed abusive cases after considering the debtors' special circumstances – most frequently job losses. United States Trustee Program Report of Significant Accomplishments Fiscal Year 2009 at 15 (available at www.justice.gov/ust/public_affairs/annualreport/docs/ar2009.pdf).

Here, it appears that Ms. Cruse may still have an actual ability to pay either because she could work or because some of her husband's sizable income could be used for their household expenses, freeing her income to repay her creditors. So even if she cannot afford to make the monthly payments of $665 required by her plan, she may be able to make smaller, but still meaningful payments to her creditors as Congress intended.

If this Court holds that the section 707(b) applies to Ms. Cruse's case, she will have the opportunity to prove that special circumstances exist based on her current financial situation that rebut the presumption of abuse and show that she in fact has no ability to repay her creditors. If she is successful, she can remain in chapter 7. If not, she falls within the group of debtors that Congress has concluded are not in need of liquidation relief. See Lanning, 103 S. Ct. at 2484 n.7 (Scalia, J. dissenting). Ms. Cruse could request to reconvert to chapter 13 and obtain relief under that chapter that takes full account of her current financial situation.

[15] Previously, some chapter 13 debtors with deteriorating finances were unable to get plans confirmed in chapter 13. That risk has been substantially reduced following the Supreme Court's pronouncement in Lanning that courts can consider changes in income and expenses that are known or virtually certain at the time of confirmation in calculating projected disposable income. 130 S. Ct. at 2478.

The United States Trustee simply seeks judicial review of all individual chapter 7 cases for abuse, regardless of what chapter the cases began in, and the ability to take appropriate action under section 707(b) if warranted.

CONCLUSION

For those reasons, the United States Trustee respectfully asks this Court to reverse the order entered by the bankruptcy court, and remand this case for further proceedings.

Respectfully submitted,

Identity of the Amicus Curiae: The United States is appearing as amicus curiae in support of Nancy Curry, the Chapter 13 Bankruptcy Trustee, and her staff attorney, Julie Feder.

Interest of the United States: The United States has a substantial interest in ensuring that absolute immunity is extended to private sector bankruptcy trustees in those limited circumstances where, as here, they perform functions that are integrally related to the judicial process.

Source of Authority to File: This brief is filed pursuant to Federal Rule of Appellate Procedure 29(a), which permits the United States to “file an amicus-curiae brief without the consent of the parties or leave of court.”

2 BACKGROUND

The relevant facts in this case are undisputed. Appellee, Cherry Castillo (“debtor”), filed a Chapter 13 bankruptcy petition in September 1997. The purpose of such a filing is to enable a debtor to pay her debts in full or in part over a period of time pursuant to a plan that must be approved by the bankruptcy court (11 U.S.C. §§ 1322, 1325).

Administering a Chapter 13 case is time-consuming and entails numerous responsibilities, including reviewing the feasibility of a debtor's plan, investigating the financial affairs of debtor, ensuring that debtor performs her duties, examining and ensuring the validity of creditors' claims, accounting for property received, and furnishing interested parties with information regarding the estate and its administration (infra note 2). Prior to the enactment of the Bankruptcy Reform Act of 1978, bankruptcy judges (then known as referees) adjudicated bankruptcy cases and administered them in concert with trustees appointed by the court.

In the Bankruptcy Reform Act of 1978, however, Congress decided to "separate the administrative duties in bankruptcy from the judicial tasks, leaving the bankruptcy judges free to resolve disputes untainted by knowledge of administrative matters unnecessary and perhaps prejudicial to an impartial judicial determination" (H.R. Rep. No. 99-764, at 18 (1986), reprinted in 1986 U.S.C.C.A.N. 5227, 5230). To this end, Congress created the U.S. 3 Trustee Program within the Department of Justice to assume administrative responsibility for bankruptcy cases (28 U.S.C. §§ 58l-589a).

Under the U.S. Trustee Program, the Attorney General appoints a U.S. Trustee in each of the 21 regions across the United States (28 U.S.C. § 581). A U.S. Trustee is a Department of Justice official who supervises the administration of bankruptcy cases. If the number of Chapter 13 bankruptcy cases in a region warrants, the U.S. Trustee for that region "may, subject to the approval of the Attorney General, appoint one or more individuals to serve as standing trustee" (28 U.S.C. § 586(b)), a position that is also referred to as "private trustee" (H.R. Rep. No. 95-595, at 101, 105-06 (1977), reprinted in 1978 U.S.C.C.A.N. 5963, 6062, 6066-68).

Standing trustees must satisfy the eligibility requirements of 11 U.S.C. § 321, and qualify under 11 U.S.C. § 322 and 28 U.S.C. § 586. They do not serve pursuant to a fixed term of appointment, nor do they receive a federal salary or benefits. Rather, to fund their compensation, standing trustees collect a flat percentage of plan payments made by debtors in cases that they administer (28 U.S.C. § 586(e); see also 11 U.S.C. § 326(b)).[FN1]

FN1. The fee that a trustee may collect in each Chapter 13 case is established by the Department of Justice and shall not exceed ten percent of payments received under the plan (28 U.S.C. § 585(e)(1)(B)(i)). The funds collected pursuant to the percentage fee can be used only to pay the trustee's compensation and "actual, necessary expenses" (id. § 586(e)(1)). Excess funds must be turned over to the United States Trustee System Fund (id. § 586(e)(2)).

FN2. The Chapter 13 standing trustee, in additional to performing acts that are integral to the judicial process, functions as a plan administrator, a trustee for the estate, and an advisor to debtor. Specifically, the trustee reviews and administers a debtor's plan, appears and argues in bankruptcy court at any hearing that concerns the confirmation or modification of a plan or the value of property subject to a lien, and makes a final report and files a final account of the administration of the estate with the bankruptcy court and the U.S. Trustee (11 U.S.C. § 302(b)). Additionally, the trustee must: (1) account for all property received; (2) ensure the debtor performs his duties; (3) investigate the financial affairs of the debtor; (4) examine and ensure the validity of creditors' claims; (5) oppose, where warranted, the discharge of the debtor; (6) furnish interested parties with information regarding the estate and its administration; (7) dispose of moneys received pursuant to regulations issued by the Administrative Office of the U.S. Courts; and (8) provide advice and assistance to debtors on matters other than legal questions. See id.

Appellant, Nancy Curry ("trustee"), was appointed as the standing trustee for debtor's Chapter 13 case.[FN3] On October 29, 1997, she presided at a section 341 hearing, which is attended by debtor's creditors and is designed, inter alia, to assist the standing trustee in determining the feasibility of debtor's plan. See 11 U.S.C. § 341; Fed. R. Bankr. P. 2002(a)(1) & 2003 (governing 5 notice and conduct of section 341 meetings). At the section 341 hearing, debtor indicated that she wished to object to the claim of a particular creditor. Because the standing trustee could not determine the feasibility of debtor's proposed plan until the objection was decided by the court, the trustee noted on her worksheet that she would continue the section 341 hearing until January 20, 1998. See Vol. I Consolidated Excerpts of Record ("Con. ER") at 224.

FN3. For simplicity, references to appellant Ms. Curry as "trustee" in this brief include her staff attorney, Ms. Feder.

Due to a clerical error in the standing trustee's office, however, a hearing was set for December 3, 1997 before the bankruptcy judge regarding the confirmation of debtor's plan (11 U.S.C. § 1324), and neither the debtor nor her counsel was notified of the confirmation hearing (Vol. II Con. ER at 359). The function of scheduling and noticing this judicial hearing is judicially delegated to the standing trustee (id. at 359 n.3).[FN4]

FN4. Consistent with Bankruptcy Rule 2002(b), the "Notice of Commencement of Case Under Chapter 13 of the Bankruptcy Code" issued by the bankruptcy court in this case provides in pertinent part (Vol. I Con. ER at 207): "A hearing on confirmation of the debtor's plan will be scheduled by the chapter 13 trustee at the 341(a) meeting of creditors if the trustee objects to the plan, or a party in interest  appears at the 341(a) meeting and requests a confirmation hearing. The trustee will only give written notice of a hearing on confirmation, if one is set, to all objecting and appearing parties."

Because they did not receive notice, neither the debtor nor her attorney appeared at the December 3, 1997 confirmation hearing before the bankruptcy judge. At the hearing, the trustee's staff 6 attorney advised the judge that her records indicated the debtor was delinquent on a plan payment and, on behalf of the trustee and consistent with bankruptcy procedure, she therefore moved for dismissal (Vol. I Con. ER at 184). The bankruptcy court granted the motion and dismissed debtor's case on December 16, 1997 (Vol. II Con. ER at 360).

Notice of the dismissal was received by debtor and her counsel no later than December 22, 1997 (Vol. I Con. ER at 95). Debtor's counsel failed promptly to seek a vacatur of the dismissal order, however, and as a result, debtor's home was foreclosed upon on December 26, 1997 (Vol. II Con. ER at 360).

By motion filed on January 5, 1998, debtor's counsel moved to vacate the dismissal order and set aside the foreclosure sale (Vol. II Con. ER at 397). In February 1998, the bankruptcy court granted the motion to vacate the dismissal order, but it denied the belated request to set aside the foreclosure sale against the innocent third-party purchaser (id. at 360, 398). The court dismissed debtor's Chapter 13 case in November 1998 (id. at 399).

In January 1999, debtor moved the bankruptcy court for permission to pursue a civil damages action in state court against the standing trustee on the ground that the trustee was negligent in scheduling and noticing the confirmation hearing (Vol. II Con. ER at 400). The bankruptcy court granted the motion, rejecting, as 7 relevant here, the trustee's argument that she was entitled to quasi-judicial immunity (id. at 360).

The standing trustee appealed to the Ninth Circuit Bankruptcy Appellate Panel (“B.A.P.”), which reversed to the extent the bankruptcy court granted debtor leave to sue the trustee in state court for actions in scheduling the confirmation hearing. Such conduct, held the B.A.P., is a quasi-judicial function that is entitled to absolute immunity (Vol. II Con. ER at 367). However, the B.A.P. held that immunity does not extend to the noticing aspect of the hearing, and it therefore affirmed the court's grant of leave to sue the trustee in state court based on the trustee's failure to provide debtor with notice (id. at 368, 371).

SUMMARY OF THE ARGUMENT

The common law long has recognized that judges are entitled to absolute immunity from damage suits arising from their exercise of judicial functions. The rationale behind absolute judicial immunity is that (1) the independent and impartial judgment vital to the judicial process could be impaired by exposure to civil damage suits, and (2) disappointed litigants should seek correction of errors that occur in the judicial process through ordinary appellate mechanisms of review. For these same reasons, the common law also extends absolute immunity beyond judges to individuals who perform functions that are closely related to the judicial process. This immunity, which is called quasi-judicial immunity, depends for 8 its application on the function performed rather than the actor who performed it.

In this case, the B.A.P. held that the standing trustee's act of providing notice to a litigant on behalf of the court regarding a judicial hearing is a ministerial act that is not entitled to quasi-judicial immunity. We show that this holding violates Ninth Circuit precedent, which establishes that the function of providing notice to a litigant on behalf of the court is an “integral part [] of the judicial process,” and a mistake in the performance of such a function “does not abrogate [quasi-] judicial immunity, even if it results in ‘grave procedural errors”’ (Mullis v. United States Bankr. Court for the Dist. of Nev., 828 F.2d 1385, 1390 (9th Cir. 1987) (quoting Stump v. Sparkman, 435 U.S. 349, 359 (1978)). Accord Morrison v. Jones, 607 F.2d 1269, 1273 (9th Cir. 1979), cert. denied, 445 U.S. 962 (1980) (holding that the function of providing notice to a party on behalf of the court is a "part of [the] judicial process  clothed with quasi-judicial immunity").

Contrary to the B.A.P.'s conclusion, the decision in Antoine v. Byers & Anderson, Inc., 508 U.S. 429 (1993), does not effectively overrule the above case law. Antoine, which held that a court reporter's statutory duty to produce a transcript of a federal criminal trial is not a quasi-judicial function, is readily distinguishable from this case, which involves providing notice of 9 a judicial hearing - a function that Antoine does not address and that this Court has squarely held is so integrally related to the judicial process as to be deemed a quasi-judicial function.

Moreover, the B.A.P.'s analysis - which isolates the noticing function and analyzes it in a vacuum - contravenes this Court's en banc decision in Ashelman v. Pope, 793 F.2d 1072 (9th Cir. 1986), which held that when determining whether a function has a sufficiently close nexus to the judicial process to merit absolute immunity, a court should focus broadly on the "ultimate act" rather than dissecting the "ultimate act" into constituent parts. In the instant case, the "ultimate act" is properly characterized either as the convening of a judicial hearing that was unattended by the debtor, or the failure of the standing trustee to reschedule that judicial hearing - functions that unquestionably are judicial in nature. And Ninth Circuit precedent establishes that the component act of noticing a judicial hearing is integral to (i.e., not meaningfully separable from) these functions and therefore entitled to quasi-judicial immunity.[FN5]

> FN5. The issue of whether the standing trustee is an "employee of the United States" (28 U.S.C. § 1671) for purposes of the Federal Tort Claims Act is not before this Court, because the trustee has not followed the procedures set forth in the Westfall Act (28 U.S.C. § 2679) for seeking certification by the Attorney General, nor has she attempted to raise the issue in this Court. See Standing Trustee's Opening Brief at 16-17 n.2. It is the Government's position that standing trustees are not federal employees. See, e.g., California State Bd. of Equalization v. Sierra Summit, Inc., 490 U.S. 844, 849-50 (1989); In re Greene, 980 F.2d 590, 597 (9th Cir. 1992), cert. denied, 510 U.S. 1039 (1994).

10 ARGUMENT

CONTRARY TO THE B.A.P.'S CONCLUSION, A BANKRUPTCY TRUSTEE IS ENTITLED TO QUASI-JUDICIAL IMMUNITY FOR ALL ACTIONS THAT ARE INTEGRAL TO THE CONVENING OF A JUDICIAL HEARING, INCLUDING PROVIDING NOTICE TO THE PARTIES OF THE HEARING.

A. The Purpose And Scope Of Quasi-Judicial Immunity, And The Functional Approach Used By The Supreme Court In Applying It.

1. Since the founding of the Republic, the common law has recognized a "sweeping form of immunity" for acts performed by judges that relate to the "judicial process" (Forrester v. White, 484 U.S. 219, 225 (1988); accord Imbler v. Pachtman, 424 U.S. 409, 423 n.20 (1976)). This absolute immunity insulates judges from charges of erroneous or irregular action, even when it is alleged that such action was driven by malicious or corrupt motives (Forrester, 484 U.S. at 227-28). It also insulates them from liability for the exercise of judicial authority that is “flawed by the commission of grave procedural errors” (Stump v. Sparkman, 435 U.S. 349, 359 (1978)).

Clothing judges with absolute immunity for conduct that relates to the judicial process serves two compelling purposes. First, it protects “judicial independence by insulating judges from vexatious actions prosecuted by disgruntled litigants” (Forrester, 484 U.S. at 225). If judges were “threatened with personal liability for acts taken pursuant to their official duties, they may well be induced to act with an excess of caution or otherwise 11 skew their decisions in ways that result in less than full fidelity to the objective and independent criteria that ought to guide their conduct  [thus] detract[ing] from the rule of law instead of contributing to it” (id. at 223).

Second, insulating judges from damage claims for official acts relating to the judicial process discourages collateral attacks on final judgments, thus promoting the use of “appellate procedures as the standard system for correcting judicial error” (Forrester, 484 U.S. at 225). Notably, “[m]ost judicial mistakes or wrongs are open to correction through ordinary mechanisms of review” (id. at 227). Accordingly, disgruntled litigants have the “means through which [they] can protect themselves from the consequences of judicial error  ‘and to those remedies they must, in such cases, resort.”’ (id. at 227, 228 (quoting Bradley v. Fisher, 80 U.S. (13 Wall.) 335, 354 (1872)).[FN6]

> FN6. As the Court explained in Pierson v. Ray, 386 U.S. 547, 554 (196.7):
> It is a judge's duty to decide all cases within his jurisdiction that are brought before him, including controversial cases that arouse the most intense feelings in the litigants. His errors may be corrected on appeal, but he should not have to fear that unsatisfied litigants may hound him with litigation charging malice or corruption.

2. Absolute immunity is not reserved solely for judges. Despite the Supreme Court's view that absolute immunity is a strong medicine that should be used sparingly (Antoine v. Byers & Anderson, Inc., 508 U.S. 429, 432 n.4 (1993)), the Court consistently 12 has declined to “diminish the traditional common-law protections extended to the judicial process” (Forrester, 484 U.S. at 225). To preserve the integrity of the judicial process, and in recognition of the fact that individuals who allege that they have been harmed in that process generally have appellate avenues for redressing the harm, the common law long has extended absolute immunity in appropriate circumstances to non-jurists “who perform functions closely associated with the judicial process” (Cleavinger v. Saxner, 474 U.S. 193, 200 (1985)). Such immunity is called quasi-judicial immunity.

In determining whether to grant quasi-judicial immunity, the Supreme Court looks to “'the nature of the function performed, not the identity of the actor who performed it”' (Buckley v. Fitzsimmons, 509 U.S. 259, 269 (1993) (quoting Forrester, 484 U.S. at 229)). Applying a functional approach to immunity, the Supreme Court has recognized that individuals, when performing the following quasi-judicial functions, are absolutely immune from suits seeking damages for injuries arising from decisions or actions relating to those functions: (1) prosecutors, when initiating a prosecution and presenting the state's case (Imbler, 424 U.S. at 431); (2) prosecutors, when taking acts and making decisions in preparation for the initiation of a prosecution or trial, including the application for, and presentation of evidence in support of, a search warrant (Buckley, 509 U.S. at 273; 13Burns* v. Reed, 500 U.S. 478, 492 (1991); (3) administrative law judges and agency hearing officers, when performing adjudicative functions within a federal agency (Cleavinger, 474 U.S. at 200; Butz v. Economou, 438 U.S. 478, 514 (1978)); (4) agency officials, when performing functions analogous to those of a prosecutor, such as deciding whether to initiate administrative proceedings against an individual or corporation (Butz, 438 U.S. at 515); (5) agency attorneys, in arranging for the presentation of evidence in the course of an administrative adjudication (id. at 517); and (6) individuals, when acting within the scope of their duties, who participate in the judicial process, including grand jurors, petit jurors, advocates, and witnesses (id. at 509, 512; Burns, 500 U.S. at 489-90).[FN7] FN7. In his opinion concurring in the judgment in part and dissenting in part in Burns, 500 U.S. at 499, Justice Scalia observed that absolute immunity historically extended broadly to "all claims relating to the exercise of judicial functions." Specifically, it extended to (id. at 499-500 (quoting T. Cooley, Law of Torts 408-09 (1880)): [M]ilitary and naval officers in exercising their authority to order courts-martial  or in putting their inferiors under arrest preliminary to trial;  to grand and petit jurors in the discharge of their duties as such; to assessors upon whom is imposed the duty of valuing property for the purpose of a levy of taxes; to commissioners appointed to appraise damages when property is taken under the right of eminent domain; to officers empowered to lay out, alter, and discontinue highways; to highway officers in deciding that a person claiming exemption from a road tax is not in fact exempt, or that one arrested is in default for not having worked out the assessment; to members of a township board in deciding upon the allowance of claims; to arbitrators, and to the collector of customs in exercising his authority to sell perishable property, and in fixing upon the time for notice of sale.

14 B. Extending Quasi-Judicial Immunity To The Trustee Is Consistent With Supreme Court Precedent.

It is not always a simple task to determine whether an actor has performed a function that may properly be characterized as judicial in nature and, therefore, entitled to absolute immunity. In making such a determination, a court should be guided by the following factors that are distilled from the Supreme Court precedent discussed supra Part A: (1) whether the challenged function is judicial in nature or has a sufficiently close nexus to the adjudicative process; (2) whether safeguards exist, aside from a damages suit, for correcting the alleged harm and that will serve to reduce the likelihood that the harm will recur; and (3) whether policy concerns support applying absolute immunity to the function. See, e.g., Antoine, 508 U.S. at 432-37; Burns, 500 U.S. at 484-96; Forrester, 484 U.S. at 223-28; Cleavinger, 474 U.S. at 201-02; Imbler, 424 U.S. at 423-30; Wagshal v. Foster, 28 F.3d 1249, 1252 (D.C. Cir. 1994), cert. denied, 514 U.S. 1004 (1995) (applying 3-factor test for determining quasi-judicial immunity). As we now show, these factors support reversing the B.A.P.

1. The first factor militates in favor of granting this standing trustee absolute immunity, because, as this Court repeatedly has held (infra Part C), the challenged function - providing notice on behalf of the court to a party regarding a judicial hearing - is integrally related to the judicial process and, hence, entitled to quasi-judicial immunity. See 15Mullis* v. United States Bankr. Court for the Dist. of Nev., 828 F.2d 1385 (9th Cir. 1987); Morrison v. Jones, 607 F.2d 1269 (9th Cir. 1979), cert. denied, 445 U.S. 962 (1980); cf. Cleavinger, 474 U.S. at 200 (the common law historically has provided absolute immunity for actors "who perform functions closely associated with judicial process").

The B.A.P. held, however, that the rationale in Antoine v. Byers & Anderson. Inc., 508 U.S. 429 (1993), precludes characterizing the trustee's conduct as a quasi-judicial function. In the B.A.P.'s view, Antoine mandates a conclusion that the standing trustee's conduct - which the B.A.P, characterized narrowly as providing notice - was undeserving of absolute immunity because it does not require the exercise of discretionary judgment (Vol. II Con. ER at 368-69). This was error. The B.A.P.'s holding was not mandated by Antoine and is flatly inconsistent with governing precedent from this Court.

Antoine, which held that a court reporter's statutory duty to produce a transcript of a federal criminal trial is not a quasi-judicial function (508 U.S. at 434-35), is readily distinguishable from this case, which involves providing notice of a judicial hearing - a function that was not addressed in Antoine and that this Court explicitly has held is so integrally related to the judicial process as to be deemed a quasi-judicial function (infra Part C).

16 Although the Court in Antoine opined that the touchstone for applying quasi-judicial immunity is the exercise of discretionary judgment (508 U.S. at 436), the B.A.P. erred in identifying the function to which that factor should be applied, and in failing to understand that the act of providing notice here was integrally related to a protected judicial function.

For example, in a post-Antoine case, the Seventh Circuit, in Wilson v. Kelkhoff, 86 F.3d 1438 (7th Cir. 1996), held that members of a prisoner review board were entitled to quasi-judicial immunity despite their failure to perform the following mandatory and nondiscretionary acts of providing a prisoner with (id. at 1444): (1) advance notice of a parole revocation hearing, (2) an opportunity to present witnesses and evidence, (3) an explanation of the purpose and potential result of the hearing, and (4) adequate notice of the reasons for revocation. The Seventh Circuit explained that Antoine does "not support the proposition that judicial acts that are part of the judicial function are excluded from absolute immunity because they could be characterized as nondiscretionary or even ministerial" (id.). Rather, Antoine stands for the proposition that immunity is not appropriate with respect to "ministerial acts unrelated to the function immunity is intended to protect are not covered by absolute immunity" (id.) (emphasis added). The B.A.P.'s decision - which failed to acknowledge that providing notice to a party regarding a judicial hearing is closely 17 related to the judicial process and therefore deserving of immunity - cannot be reconciled with Wilson.[FN8]

FN8. As the Seventh Circuit cogently explained in Wilson, 86 F.3d at 1444-45:

> We reject[] the plaintiff's attempt to avoid the bar of absolute immunity by trying to characterize certain aspects of the judicial function as administrative and therefore not worthy of protection. We [hold] that conduct deserving of protection includes not only actual decisions, but also those mundane, even mechanical, tasks undertaken by judges that are related to the judicial process: "[T]he fact that the activity is routine or requires no adjudicatory skill renders that activity no less a judicial function."

The B.A.P. distinguished Wilson on the ground that prison review board members perform adjudicative functions and therefore are akin to judges who, in the B.A.P.'s view, would be accorded absolute immunity for failure to provide notice (Vol. II Con. ER at 369 n.5). This alleged distinction reveals a fundamental misunderstanding of the immunity doctrine. If, as the B.A.P. correctly stated, a judge would be immune for failing to provide notice of a judicial hearing, an individual performing that function on behalf of the judge - e.g., a court clerk, a judicial clerk, or a standing trustee - would likewise be entitled to immunity (Forrester, 434 U.S. at 229).

Nor can the B.A.P.'s parsing of the judicial function into discrete components be reconciled with this Court's en banc decision in Ashelman v. Pope, 793 F.2d 1072, 1078 (9th Cir. 1986). In Ashelman, this Court held that when determining whether a function is judicial in nature, a court must focus on the "ultimate act" rather than the constituent parts of that act. In other words, a court should not dissect the "ultimate act" into a series of discrete components that, when viewed in isolation, may be characterized as non-discretionary; rather, all acts that are 18 closely related to the judicial process must be protected, else the important purpose underlying absolute immunity will be vitiated (id.). Nothing in Antoine undermines this Court's en banc analysis in Ashelman.

Applying the Ashelman analysis here, the "ultimate act" was the convening of a judicial hearing, which plainly is a judicial function that involves the exercise of discretionary judgment. And Ninth Circuit precedent (infra Part C) establishes that the component act of noticing a judicial hearing is not meaningfully separable from the ultimate act. Absolute immunity is therefore warranted. See Rodriquez v. Weprin, 116 F.3d 62, 66-67 (2d Cir. 1997) (court clerks entitled to quasi-judicial immunity for harms related to scheduling an appeal, even if that discrete task is viewed as administrative, because "court's inherent power to control its docket is part of its [judicial] function"); Wagshal v. Foster, 28 F.3d 1249, 1253 (D.C. Cir. 1994), cert. denied, 514 U.S. 1004 (1995) (mediator entitled to quasi-judicial immunity from charge that he violated mandatory duty of neutrality and confidentiality, and case evaluator also immune from suit for pre-trial tasks that are integrally related to judicial process despite "their somewhat managerial character").

Alternately, the "ultimate act" at issue in this case can correctly be characterized as a failure by the standing trustee to re-schedule the judicial confirmation hearing in light of her con-19 tinuation of the section 341 hearing (supra p. 5). By framing the relevant act as a failure to give notice, the debtor has "pleaded around" the legal principle that is undisputed in this appeal - namely, that the standing trustee is absolutely immune for her scheduling functions that relate to judicial hearings (Vol. II Con. ER at 367). Because the B.A.P.'s analysis improperly converts absolute immunity into a mere rule of creative pleading, reversal is required.

2. The second factor for determining whether this standing trustee should receive quasi-judicial immunity is likewise satisfied, because safeguards exist in the judicial process that obviate the need for relying on private damage actions for injuries arising from the failure to provide timely notice of a judicial hearing. Most failures analogous to the one at issue here can be corrected in later proceedings in the case. In this case itself, the failure of the trustee to send out notice of the judicial hearing could have been remedied when the notice of the dismissal was sent to the debtor and her attorney. The fact that debtor's attorney did not act on that notice in time to prevent the foreclosure on debtor's house is not due to a deficiency in the system and does not furnish a basis for depriving the trustee of the immunity to which she is entitled. Cf. Lonneker Farms, Inc. v. Klobucher, 804 F.2d 1096, 1097 (9th Cir. 1986) (holding that bankruptcy trustee is entitled to quasi-judicial immunity, and admonishing that disgruntled party 20 from bankruptcy proceeding should seek redress through bankruptcy proceeding, not by suing trustee for damages). Moreover, mechanisms exist to monitor the performance of standing trustees and reduce the likelihood that the problem that occurred in this case will recur. See 11 U.S.C. § 324 (court can remove trustee in pending case); 28 C.F.R. § 58.6 (U.S. Trustee can terminate standing trustee's appointment); Vol. I Con. ER at 225 (corrective actions taken by standing trustee in this case).

3. Finally, compelling policy concerns support insulating the trustee with immunity for her conduct. If the notice function is not covered by quasi-judicial immunity, numerous officials -including other Chapter 13 trustees and clerks of court

- can be expected to be subject to disruptive and vexatious suits by litigants and others claiming that they were harmed by the failure of the official to perform some function that is prescribed by procedural rules. We are advised by the Office of the General Counsel of the Administrative Office of the U.S. Courts that in 1999 alone there were 340 suits (some involving multiple defendants) against federal judicial officials, often involving claims that the officials failed to perform duties that, when viewed in isolation, appear ministerial on their face, but in fact were -like the trustee's function here - closely related to the judicial process. If such officials are foreclosed from asserting quasi-judicial immunity, it is to be expected that the frequency of 21 damage actions will significantly increase, and trustees and clerks will often be exposed to burdensome discovery and trial, as well as potential liability. As the Supreme Court has stated, "controversies sufficiently intense to erupt in litigation are not easily capped by a judicial decree. The loser in one forum will frequently seek another, charging the participants in the first with [misconduct]. Absolute immunity is thus necessary to assure that [actors who perform functions that are closely related to the judicial process] can perform their respective functions without, harassment or intimidation" (Butz, 438 U.S. at 512).[FN9]

[FN9] FN9. The office of the standing trustee in this case administers over 600 new Chapter 13 cases each month (Vol. I Con. ER at 225). Because the parties to bankruptcy litigation are not exempt from the passions that routinely inflame litigants, it is plainly foreseeable that, unless quasi-judicial immunity is granted for the type of claim raised by this debtor, trustees will become the frequent target of dissatisfied litigants in vexatious damage suits. Cf. Sindram v. Suda, 986 F.2d 1459, 1461 (D.C. Cir. 1993) (absent quasi-judicial immunity, disappointed litigants, unable to pierce a judge's absolute immunity, might seek retribution against clerks).

In short, the three factors for determining the applicability of quasi-judicial immunity are satisfied- and the standing trustee is therefore entitled to absolute immunity. The B.A.P.'s contrary decision is error.

*22 C. Extending Quasi-Judicial Immunity To The Trustee Is Mandated By Ninth Circuit Precedent.

For purposes of resolving the immunity question in the instant case, this Court need go no further than Morrison v. Jones, 607 F.2d 1269 (9th Cir. 1979), cert. denied, 445 U.S. 962 (1980), which squarely holds that providing notice to a party on behalf of the court is a quasi-judicial function that is clothed with absolute immunity. In Morrison, plaintiff sought custody of her young son to prevent him from being transported to Germany to live with his grandparents. The Superior Court of the County of Riverside held a hearing on May 1, 1975 to resolve plaintiff's custody request, and the court denied that request by order dated May 5, 1975 (507 F.2d at 1273). Neither plaintiff nor her attorney, however, was given notice of the court's order, and on May 9, 1975 unbeknownst to plaintiff - her son was transported to Germany (id.). As relevant here, plaintiff brought a damages action against the clerk of court, charging him with "responsibility for her failure to receive notice of the May 5, 1975, order" (id.). The district court held that the clerk was entitled to absolute immunity (id. at 1271), and this Court affirmed, holding that the clerk's failure "to perform a ministerial duty which was a part of judicial process is  clothed with quasi-judicial immunity" (id. at 1273), That holding disposes of debtor's claim.[FN10]

[FN10] FN10. It matters not that in Morrison the person charged with providing notice was a court clerk, whereas the person charged with providing notice here is a bankruptcy trustee. The functional approach to absolute > immunity looks to the "nature of the function performed, not the identity of the actor who performed it" (Forrester, 484 U.S. at 229). In light of this dispositive Ninth Circuit case law, the B.A.P.'s reliance (Vol. II Con. ER at 369) on decisions from other circuits, such as McCray v. Maryland, 456 F.2d 1 (4th Cir. 1972), was error.

23 Indeed, Morrison is an a fortiori case for applying quasi-judicial immunity here. In Morrison, because plaintiff failed to receive any notice of the adverse judicial order until after her son had been transported to Germany, she had no practical remedy by recourse to judicial review procedures. By contrast, the record here reveals that debtor's counsel was provided with notice of the dismissal order in ample time to prevent the foreclosure proceedings; unfortunately for debtor, however, it seems that her counsel simply failed to take prompt action in support of his client's interest.

This Court's decision in Mullis v. United States Bankr. Court for the Dist. of Nev., 828 F.2d 1385, 1390-91 (9th Cir. 1987), confirms that the standing trustee here is entitled to absolute immunity. In Mullis, the plaintiff sent his wife to the bankruptcy court with a bankruptcy petition that failed to identify the chapter of the Bankruptcy Code under which plaintiff intended to file. He instructed his wife to ask the clerks which chapter he could file under that would allow him subsequently to withdraw or dismiss the petition as a matter of right. Plaintiff alleged that the clerks failed to provide the requested information, but simply 24 took the petition, filed it under the incorrect chapter, and that thereafter he was unable to withdraw or dismiss the petition, or file an amended petition. Plaintiff thereafter brought a damages action, alleging that he suffered constitutional harm "through a variety of acts relating to the treatment of his bankruptcy case" by the bankruptcy judges, the court clerks, and the bankruptcy trustee (828 F.2d at 1387). The district court held that the defendants were entitled to absolute immunity, and this Court affirmed, holding - as relevant here - that the trustee was clothed with quasi-judicial immunity for the following acts (id. at 1390): (1) refusing to enforce statutory requirements of the Bankruptcy Code, 11 U.S.C. §§ 301, 342(b); (2) refusing to acknowledge that the bankruptcy court lost jurisdiction when a notice of appeal was filed; (3) improperly preventing plaintiff from representing himself; and (4) communicating ex parte with the judges. See also Lonneker Farms, Inc. v. Klobucher, 804 F.2d 1096, 1097 (9th Cir. 1986) (bankruptcy trustee who acts within the scope of his bankruptcy duties is entitled to absolute immunity when "performing an integral part of the judicial process").[FN11]

> FN11. This Court opined in dicta in Mullis that the bankruptcy trustee "derives his immunity from the judge who appointed him" (828 F.2d at 1390). As stated supra p. 3, the standing trustee is now appointed by the U.S. Trustee, not the bankruptcy judge. Thus, the trustee's immunity is not simply a derivative immunity; rather, it is a quasi-judicial immunity based on the performance of functions that are (1) within her authority, and (2) closely related to the judicial process.

25 Additionally, in Mullis, as in Morrison, this Court held that the failure to give proper notice to a party on behalf of the court is correctly "characterized as [an] integral part[] of the judicial process," and a mistake in the performance of such a function "does not abrogate [quasi-] judicial immunity, even if it results in 'grave procedural errors"' (828 F.2d at 1390 (quoting Stump, 435 U.S. at 359)). Accord Moore v. Brewster, 96 F.3d 1240, 1244 (9th Cir. 1996) (holding that court clerk is entitled to quasi-judicial immunity for allegedly "deceiv[ing plaintiff] regarding the status of the bond and improperly conduct[ing] hearings to assess costs"); Sharma v. Stevas, 790 F.2d 1486 (9th Cir. 1986) (holding that the "Clerk of the United States Supreme Court has absolute quasi-judicial immunity because his challenged activities were an integral part of the judicial process”).

In sum, this Court's decisions in Morrison and Mullis establish that the standing trustee's conduct in providing parties with notice on behalf of the court regarding a judicial hearing is an integral part of the judicial process that is entitled to quasi-judicial immunity. The B.A.P.'s contrary conclusion contravenes binding precedent and should be reversed.

26 *CONCLUSION

For the foregoing reasons, this Court should reverse the decision of the B.A.P., and remand with instructions that the B.A.P. direct the bankruptcy court to deny the requests to sue Curry and Feder in state court based on their actions relating to the scheduling and noticing of the confirmation hearing.

Statement Concerning Jurisdiction

The District Court has jurisdiction to hear this appeal pursuant to 28 U.S.C. §158(a)(1).

Statement of Issues on Appeal

The United States Trustee asserts the following issues on appeal:

1. Did the bankruptcy court abuse its discretion or err as a matter of law in awarding fees to chapter 7 trustee Cherie Norman under 11 U.S.C. §§ 326, 328, and 330?

2. Did the bankruptcy court abuse its discretion or err as a matter of law in awarding fees to attorney Ronald Triggs under 11 U.S.C. §§ 327, 328, and 330?

3 Did the bankruptcy court abuse its discretion or err as a matter of law in awarding fees to attorney Alan Thaler under 11 U.S.C. §§ 327, 328, and 330?

Standards of Appellate Review

The standard of review of fee awards by the bankruptcy court is an "abuse of discretion" standard. Rubner & Kutner, P.C. v. United States Trustee (In re Lederman Enterprises, Inc.), 997 F.2d 1321, 1323-24 (10th Cir. 1993); Land v. First National Bank of Alamosa (In re Land), 943 F.2d 1265, 1267-68 (10th Cir. 1991). The standard of review of the bankruptcy court's general conclusions of law is a "de novo" standard. Virginia Beach Federal Savings and Loan Ass'n v. Wood, 901 F.2d 849, 851 (10th Cir. 1990). The general standard of review for the factual findings of the bankruptcy court is a "clearly erroneous" standard. Fed. R. Bankr. P. 8013.

Statement of the Case

The United States Trustee does not disagree with Chief Judge Matheson's findings of fact. She explicitly incorporates those factual findings. A synopsis of the most salient factual issues is presented to assist this court.

Dakota Minerals, Inc. filed its voluntary petition pursuant to chapter 11 of Title 11, United States Code, in 1985. The case was converted to a case under chapter 7 on December 12, 1986 by Judge Mai. This conversion was premised in some substantial measure on Judge Mai's assessment that Mr. Fowler, the Debtor's principal, had an unrealistic view of the estate's assets and that little if any equity existed in those assets. (EX1 p.2) The debtor, ("Debtor"), had an array of assets most of which had been acquired by way of a transaction with British American Mortgage Corporation. Those properties were generally referred to as the "BAMCO" properties. These properties included a number of parcels of real property and the assignment of a promissory note known as the Laurel Homes note. In large part, the BAMCO properties, including the Laurel Homes note, were encumbered and subject to mortgages in favor of Guaranty Bank. Ultimately, Guaranty Bank failed and was taken over by the Federal Savings and Loan Insurance Corporation ("FSLIC"), and its successor, the Federal Deposit Insurance Corporation, ("FDIC") . The Debtor also had an interest in the Sunset Ranch Limited Partnership that had an ownership interest in some undeveloped land in California. The estate also included scheduled receivables in excess of $1,000,000 whose collection the Ms. Norman did not pursue. (EX 1 p. 29).

On conversion of the case to chapter 7, Cherie Norman was appointed to serve as the chapter 7 trustee. Ms Norman's primary focus in the case was the pursuit of largely unsuccessful litigation (EX 1 p.3). Only secondarily, did she focus on the largely untimely liquidation of the estate's BAMCO assets, including the Laurel Homes note, and the estate's "non-BAMCO" interest in the Sunset Ranch partnership.

In 1986, the debtor commenced an adversary proceeding against the FDIC to challenge its security interests. Ms. Norman, as the trustee, did not actively pursue this challenge to the FDIC's claim and delayed administering the estate's "hard assets," other than some oil and gas interests, which the Court characterized as having "nominal value." This delay was apparently due to Ms. Norman and her professionals "tilt[ing] at windmills in the hope of striking it rich" (EX 1 p.10). At the 1994 trial of this adversary, the court held that the FDIC had valid security interests in all BAMCO property save for the Riverside, California property, the Las Vegas property and the Puerto Vallarta, Mexico property. The assets held not to be encumbered by the FDIC in this adversary were ultimately liquidated for $112,000. (EX 1, p. 26) This was far less than the “hundreds of thousands of dollars” which Judge Matheson finds were accrued in the litigation. A judgment was entered in favor of the FDIC in the amount of $3,372,487. This judgment incidentally fixed the FDIC’s interest in “cash collateral” which included the proceeds of the “Laurel Homes” note.

The estate continued to pursue Dakota’s prepetition litigation involving the Laurel Homes note. Ms. Norman employed Patrick Hunter to assist in collecting the note. The obligor on the Laurel Homes note, North Coast Associates, filed for bankruptcy in California. Ms. Norman employed Alan Thaler, as local California counsel, to assist with collection activities in California against North Coast. The estate ultimately collected in excess of $2,000,000. The benefit of these collection activities was, however, illusory. Judge Matheson later found that these proceeds, which funded the administrative expenses in the case, were FDIC’s cash collateral which Ms. Norman did not have authority to use other than to pay the FDIC. Had Ms. Norman turned over the proceeds of the Laurel Homes note to the FDIC or, presumably, simply abandoned the asset to the FDIC, the lion’s share of the FDIC claim would have been paid from this asset. (EX 1 p. 11). This matter was responsible for much of the compensation ultimately awarded the Appellees despite the illusory benefits of these activities.

Another matter on which Ms. Norman focused her administrative efforts concerned the BAMCO real properties. These efforts took two tracks. One track focused on pursuing the largely unsuccessful litigation with the FDIC. Some efforts were made on a second track to market the estate's real property located in Oregon City, Oregon. This property partially secured the BAMCO debt. Ms. Norman did not sell this property during her tenure as trustee. Ms. Norman had received apparently bona fide offers to purchase this property for in excess of $5,000,000 about which Judge Matheson stated "none was pursued and certainly none was consummated." (EX 1, p.4) Had a sale been consummated on these terms this sale would have permitted a substantial dividend to be paid all creditors in the case. Subsequent to Ms. Norman's tenure, the Oregon City property was flooded and largely covered with mud slides as a result of which it lost much of its value. No insurance coverage was in place to cover this loss. See,* (EX 1 p. 31). The property was ultimately sold for $2,000,000 by Mr. Royal, the current Chapter 7 trustee. The FDIC agreed to allow the estate to retain $180,000 of these proceeds even though its debt had not been paid in full.

The Oregon City property engendered a great deal of litigation during the estate's holding period. This litigation was of little or no benefit to the estate and resulted in the accrual of significant administrative expenses. Much of this litigation was related to matters which would not of arisen had Ms. Norman timely sold the property (e.g., litigation of personal injury claims against the estate for postpetition injuries incurred while the property was uninsured).

The Dakota estate also owned a proportional ownership interest in Sunset Ranch, a California limited partnership with an ownership interest in undeveloped real estate, as well as an interest in a promissory note payable by the partnership in the amount of $800,000. Here too, Judge Matheson found that Ms. Norman's efforts focused on litigation rather than the sale of the estate's interest in the partnership. Ms. Norman's testimony was that she had received a $900,000 offer from the Sunset Ranch general partner to purchase the estate's interest in the partnership which she did not pursue. The estate ultimately derived no benefit from this asset, which was lost in foreclosure, and incurred substantial liabilities for administrative expenses associated with this litigation which Judge Matheson characterizes as lacking in merit.

Thus, despite Ms. Norman's failure to expeditiously liquidate the estate's hard assets which may have led to $5,900,000 or more in gross proceeds, plus whatever recovery could have been had from the receivables and avoidance actions which were not pursued, her use of cash collateral that she was not entitled to use, and her quixotic pursuit of non-meritorious litigation, the Court awarded Ms. Norman $61,851.25. Trustee's counsel, Messrs. Triggs and Thaler, were awarded final fees and expenses of $51,862.46 and $464,798.48 respectively, much of which had already inappropriately been paid from the FDIC's cash collateral. (See EX1, p. 16, 46.) The United States Trustee asserts that Chief Judge Matheson abused his discretion under these circumstances.

Summary of Argument

Detailed findings of fact were made by Judge Matheson which were well supported by the record. These findings establish that the Appellees' actions in this case were of far more detriment than benefit to the Debtor's estate. Thus, because "benefit to the estate" is a threshold requirement for compensation under 11 U.S.C. § 330(a), Judge Matheson abused his discretion by awarding the Appellees any fees and declining to order the Appellees to disgorge the funds which had previously been paid from the FDIC's cash collateral without its consent or a Court permitting the use of such cash collateral.

ARGUMENT

1. The fees allowed were not "reasonable" based upon the bankruptcy court's findings.

Cherie Norman

The duty to close a bankruptcy estate expeditiously is a bankruptcy trustee's "main duty" and "overriding responsibility." Yadkin Valley Bank & Trust Co. v. McGee (In re Hutchinson), 5 F.3d 750,753 (4th Cir. 1993). Section 704(1), 11 U.S.C. §704(1), imposes an affirmative duty to reduce the bankruptcy estate's property to money as expeditiously as is compatible with the interests of all parties in interest in the case. Id. at 754. Judge Matheson's findings of fact clearly establish that Ms. Norman failed to perform this duty.

Had Ms. Norman expeditiously administered the hard assets of the estate, or as Judge Matheson suggested and abandoned the encumbered assets to the FDIC, she may have not only been able to satisfy the FDIC's claims in full but been able to pay a small dividend to unsecured creditors. (EX 1, p. 11). Instead she speculated that the assets would later sell for as much as $20 million and pursued fruitless litigation. Much of the "blame" for this can be placed upon trustee's counsel who ran up large litigation expenses premised upon defective legal theories and analyses including their failure to recognize that the Laurel Homes note proceeds were the FDIC's cash collateral. However, because Ms. Norman failed to adequately supervise these professionals and to timely administer this case, she was appropriately penalized by Judge Matheson. [1/] See, Matter of Island Amusement, Inc., 74 B.R. 19, 21 (Bankr.P.R. 1987).

Once Ms. Norman received offers to purchase the Oregon City and Sunset Ranch interests she should have taken some action in response to these offers. Some affirmative act to resolve the offer by acceptance, counter-offer, negotiation or abandonment was required. In re Moore, 110 B.R. 924,928 (Bankr.C.D.Cal. 1990). The possible sale of the Sunset Ranch interest was sent out to creditors on notice, but Ms. Norman failed to pursue either a sale or any other alternative after receiving an FDIC objection to the sale. This falls short of taking any effective action on the sale. Offers on the Oregon City property were not even followed up or pursued to this extent.

Judge Matheson's litany of acts of misfeasance and nonfeasance by Ms. Norman at pages 28 through 32 detail a course of conduct riddled with detrimental consequences to parties in interest in this case. Judge Matheson appropriately found that:

A. The Sunset Ranch litigation was a ploy which cost the estate hundreds of thousands of dollars and produced no benefit for the estate;

B. Ms. Norman's litigation asserting that the FDIC's collection actions against the Bank's officers satisfied Dakota's debt was "specious and of no value;"

C. Ms. Norman failed to understand her absolute duty under §704(1) to "reduce to money the property of the estate . . . and to close such estate [expeditiously]" by effectuating a timely sale rather than to speculate on the increase in the value of the Oregon City property were she to act as a "developer;"

D. Ms. Norman failed to carry liability insurance on the Oregon City property exposing the estate to millions of dollars of potential liability and $70,000 of actual expense; [2/]

[2/] Ms. Norman's failure to insure the property against such losses may also state cause for her surcharge. See, In re Reich, 54 B.R. 995 (Bankr.E.D.Mich.1985).

E. Ms. Norman breached her fiduciary obligations to parties in interest, including the FDIC by failing to disclose that she was attempting to sell the Sunset Ranch and Laurel Homes assets for $5 million while trying to negotiate a $1.5 million settlement with the FDIC;

F. Ms Norman inexcusably misused $332,728 of the FDIC's cash collateral;

G. She failed to comply with her reporting obligations to the United States Trustee; and

H. She failed to pursue the collection of the $1,000,000 in scheduled receivables or any avoidance actions that the estate may have had.

Implicitly, Judge Matheson also finds that the failure to timely market the Oregon City property led to the unfortunate loss of value to the estate due to its flooding. Judge Matheson further found that Ms. Norman's "negatives far outweigh [her] positive contributions." Yet, he awarded her $45,000 despite his findings that Ms. Norman's actions cost the estate hundreds of thousands of dollars on matters which yielded little or no benefit to the estate (EX 1, p.29) and exposed the estate to millions of dollars of potential liability.

"Equity tolerates in bankruptcy trustees no interest adverse to the trust. This is not because such interests are always corrupt but because they are always corrupting." Mosser v. Darrow, 341 U.S. 267, 271, 95 L.Ed. 670, 671, 71 S.Ct. 680, 682 (1951). Here Ms. Norman acquired interests adverse to the estate by "tilting at windmills hoping to strike it rich" rather than attending to her duties as a trustee. See generally, (EX 1 pp.29-32). Ms. Norman and her hired professionals pursued a course of action seeking to extract value out of the BAMCO properties through litigation rather than sale. She embarked on a course of developing the Oregon City property rather than properly selling it in the speculative hope that Judge Mai was wrong when he found there to be little or equity in the property. She completely failed to pursue avoidance actions and the collection of receivables. She expended $60,000 in fees to research a claim against the FDIC which Judge Matheson characterizes as bordering on paranoia. (EX 1 p. 30). Awarding Ms. Norman compensation from the estate despite such adverse interests, misfeasance, and nonfeasance is contrary to the Supreme Court's mandate in Mosser. Judge Matheson's own conclusions of law and findings of fact were that the detrimental effect of Ms. Norman's acts far exceeded any benefit therefrom. Under such circumstances the burden is on Ms. Norman to demonstrate that, on balance, she conferred a net benefit on the estate despite her breaches of fiduciary duty. See, Gray v. English, 30 F.3d 1319 (10th Cir. 1994); Appeal of Arthur Winer, Inc. (Matter of Taxman Clothing Co.), 49 F.3d 310 (7th Cir. 1995). Ms. Norman failed to meet this burden. The United States Trustee therefore asserts that the Bankruptcy Court abused its discretion in awarding Ms. Norman any compensation in this case.

Trustee's Counsel

Ronald Triggs

The express language of the pre-October 22, 1994 version of 11 U.S.C. § 330(a), which is applicable to this case, placed all counsel on notice that any right to receive "reasonable compensation" was conditioned upon the benefit provided by and the "value of such services." In re Lederman Enterprises, Inc., 997 F.2d at 1323. The Tenth Circuit Court of Appeals has consistently imposed tests of reasonableness on all fee applications subject to bankruptcy court approval. See, First National Bank of Lea County v. Niccum (In the Matter of Permian Anchor Services, Inc.), 649 F.2d 763 (10th Cir. 1981); See also, In re Jensen-Farley Pictures, Inc., 47 B.R. 557 (Bankr. D. Utah 1985); In re Duran Mercantile Co., 199 F. 961 (D. N.Mex. 1912).

The Court's obligation to review final fee applications at the conclusion of the case allows the Court "to judge the propriety of the fees under § 330 with facts that may come to light after the payments are rendered" and to consider "evidence that was not available to it earlier, which can further shed light on whether the professional knew or should have known that the services provided would be reasonably likely to benefit the estate." In re Unitcast, Inc., 214 B.R. 992, 1002 (Bankr. N.D. Ohio 1997). Further, a court can also evaluate "whether the professional has fulfilled fiduciary duties by having discovered and disclosed all relevant facts to the Court and creditors" which will be probative to the Court's determination of the reasonableness of fees. Id.,* at p. 1001. Hence, a review of the ultimate benefit provided to the estate is required by § 330.

The trustee's attorneys were all fiduciaries of the estate. Matter of Taxman Clothing Co.,* 49 F.3d at 314. As such, each attorney "was required as a fiduciary of the estate to make a careful judgment whether the number of billable hours he would be investing was commensurate with the expected gain." Id.

Under the analysis suggested in the Taxman decision, it is clear that counsel's duty to maximize the estate included the obligation to forebear or discontinue efforts to collect a particular asset where cost of collection would exceed the asset's value. 49 F.3d at 315. Messrs. Triggs and Thaler, like the trustee, lost all perspective of the value of the litigation in which were engaged.

Judge Matheson found that Mr. Triggs provided services beyond the scope of his employment, see, In re New England Fish Co., 33 B.R. 413, 420 (Bankr.Me 1983)(Services outside scope of employment order non-compensable), represented the adverse interests of Mr. Hess while still employed by Ms. Norman, pursued a variety of ineffectual activities and failed to adequately document any of the fees or expenses sought by him. (EX 1, pp. 36-37). Judge Matheson makes even more denunciatory findings which raise questions about whether Mr. Triggs should have been denied all compensation under 11 U.S.C. §328(c) by his holdings that:

A. Any expectation of benefit from the Sunset Ranch related "Procopious" litigation was unrealistic and the estate was required to pay opposing counsels' fees of $40,000;

B. Mr. Triggs not only failed to obtain a favorable result in the FDIC litigation but was obstreperous, petulant and unprofessional;

C. Any expectation, which was encouraged by Mr. Fowler, the Debtor's principal, that a bonanza was to be had from the sale of the estate's assets was unrealistic and contrary to Judge Mai's explicit finding at the conversion hearing; and

D. Mr. Triggs had failed to demonstrate "any significant benefit other than the prosecution of fruitless litigation that he lost."

EX 1, pp. 37-38

Yet, Judge Matheson allowed Mr. Triggs to keep the $51,862.46 that he had already received despite the absence of any benefit from his activities. This is contrary to the Tenth Circuit's explicit holding in Lederman Enterprises, which affirmed Judge Matheson's own decision, that "benefit to the estate" is a threshold requirement for the receipt of any compensation from the bankruptcy estate under 11 U.S.C. § 330. The United States Trustee asserts that Judge Matheson abused his discretion in awarding Mr. Triggs any compensation from the estate.

Alan B. Thaler

Many of the issues concerning Mr. Thaler's fees duplicate those of Mr. Triggs. Judge Matheson makes a number of findings which also demonstrate an abuse of discretion where Judge Matheson explicitly finds no cognizable "benefit to the estate" from Mr. Thaler's actions. Thus, although Judge Matheson finds that "Mr. Thaler achieved some level of success" in the Sunset Ranch and Laurel Homes litigation. (EX 1, p. 39). He also holds that "in the final analysis" it is "doubtful" that "any of the successes were of any value to the estate, other than the collection of the Laurel Homes note." Id. Even this success was counterbalanced by negative factors including:

A. Mr. Thaler billed at a higher rate than originally represented to the Court;

B. He failed to submit an adequate fee application;

C. He engaged in duplicative billing with his then apparent supervising partner;

D. He pursued the fruitless and non-meritorious Sunset Ranch litigation costing "hundreds of thousands of dollars," (EX 1 p. 11), based upon flawed theories while the real estate market in California started deteriorating eliminating any possible recovery from the litigation even had it been successful;

E. The partnership interest had apparently been marketable early on in the case; and

F. He had engaged in duplicative and largely unnecessary services outside the scope of his employment.

EX 1, pp.40-44.

Yet, despite these findings and the fact that the Laurel Homes note was the FDIC's cash collateral, which eviscerated much of the benefit of this litigation, Judge Matheson allowed Mr. Thaler to retain all the fees and costs previously allowed as his final compensation and reimbursement of expenses. The United States Trustee asserts that this was an abuse of discretion where no demonstrable net benefit was conferred on the estate by Mr. Thaler's efforts.

Patrick Hunter

The disallowances of the compensation and reimbursements sought by Mr. Hunter were quite modest (i.e., he sought $68,007.59 and was awarded $67,062.99). Judge Matheson's rationale for these disallowances was the same as for the disallowances for other Appellees at bar. Judge Matheson's analysis of these fees and expenses suffers the same flaws as his awards for the other professionals.

2. Interim orders are not final and must be reviewed in considering final applications.

The Appellees previously advanced various theories to the Bankruptcy Court in support of their position that the bankruptcy court should not disturb their interim fee orders. These theories included: Judge Mai's explicitly "interim" orders were actually "final" orders; the law of the case doctrine; the orders were either res judicata and/or entitled to collateral estoppel and that the statute of limitations precludes any modification of the interim compensation orders .

These theories simply do not apply. Judge Matheson's cogent discussion at (EX 1 pp. 18-20) exposes the flaws in these arguments. At the time Dakota filed its Chapter 11 case, the Tenth Circuit Court of Appeals had ruled regarding the finality of interim fee orders under 11 U.S.C. § 331:

> The statute anticipates repeated application to the court for reimbursement and compensation, subjecting the award to amendment or modification at any time during the pendency of the bankruptcy proceeding. Interim awards of compensation, which are within the court's discretion, [citations omitted], are to be considered by the court in making a final award. [citations omitted]...Interim awards, too, are refundable to the estate in cases of misconduct. [citations omitted]. Interim awards, then, are in no respect final adjudications on the question of compensation. Such awards are therefore interlocutory... [T]he order does not conclusively determine any disputed question, nor is it effectively unreviewable on appeal from final judgment.

Callister v. Ingersoll-Rand Financial Corporation (In re Callister), 673 F.2d 305, 307 (10th Cir. 1982); see also, Continental Illinois Bank & Trust Co. of Chicago v. Wooten (In re Evangeline Refining Co.), 890 F.2d 1312, 1321 (5th Cir. 1989); Stable Mews Associates v. Togut (In re Stable Mews Associates), 778 F.2d 121, 123 (2d Cir. 1985); see also post-October 22, 1994 version of 11 U.S.C. §330(a)(5).

Under the clear and unequivocal authority set forth in Callister, the United States Trustee could not, without the leave of the court to file an interlocutory appeal, appeal Judge Mai's interim awards. The Appellees' arguments to the contrary are simply unsupportable in light of Callister's unqualified mandates.

3. Appellees violated 11 U.S.C. § 363 by taking interim fees.

The express provisions of 11 U.S.C. § 363(c)(2) and (4) required Ms. Norman to either obtain an order allowing her use of cash collateral or the "affirmative express consent" of the FDIC. In re Gemel International, Inc., 190 B.R. 4, 10 (Bankr. D. Mass. 1995). Implied consent is insufficient to satisfy the requirements of Section 363(c)(2). Id. Section §363(c) and Fed.R.Bankr.Pro. 4001(b) and (d) place the burden of obtaining consent to use cash collateral on the trustee or debtor-in-possession. The creditor does not bear the burden of seeking an order of the court to prohibit such use of cash collateral. The unauthorized use of cash collateral by Ms. Norman and the receipt of portions of the funds by professionals was contrary to law and should not be condoned by the Court. See also, Judge Matheson's cogent discussion of applicable law at (EX 1, pp. 9-10).

If the Court allows the professionals to retain fees which were paid for services which did not provide benefit to the estate or, for the most part, to the FDIC, the professionals will be rewarded for two forms of conduct which are not sanctioned by the Bankruptcy Code -- acquiescence in the unauthorized use of cash collateral by Ms. Norman and Mr. Hess and being compensated and reimbursed for services and costs from which the Debtor's estate derived no benefit.

At least one other court has permitted a chapter 7 trustee to seek disgorgement of fees and reimbursement previously paid from a secured lender's cash collateral. Matz v. Hoseman (In re Matz), 197 B.R. 635, 641 (Bankr. N.D. Ill. 1996). In Matz, the Court held that, for cause shown, the professionals could be compelled to disgorge these previously paid funds even though the secured lender, rather than the chapter 11 administrative claimants, might be entitled to receive all of the disgorged funds.

The fact that the FDIC has permitted Mr. Royal to retain $180,000 of its cash collateral for the payment of administrative and prepetition claims is irrelevant. Professionals should not be permitted to take advantage of the happenstance of a lender being willing to compromise its rights for the benefit of other creditors and claimants where, but for the inappropriate administration of this case by Ms. Norman and her counsel, such creditors would have been entitled to a larger dividend many years earlier. It is also inequitable to permit the Appellees to retain inappropriately paid compensation and reimbursement, rather than to compel disgorgement, simply because of the hardship on these parties caused by the long delayed administration of this case particularly where it is these parties who are largely responsible for the delay. Judge Matheson abused his discretion by failing to compel the Appellees to disgorge the funds inappropriately paid from the FDIC's cash collateral under these circumstances.

Conclusion

The District Court should remand this matter to the bankruptcy court for a determination of appropriate disallowances and disgorgements based upon the Bankruptcy Court's well documented findings that the Appellees provided little or no benefit to the estate. These parties were awarded interim fees which far exceed reasonable compensation for the minimal actual, necessary services they provided this estate. Sanctioning the unauthorized use of cash collateral and allowing the payment and retention of fees and expenses which resulted in no benefit to the bankruptcy estate rewards these professionals for their inappropriate administration of this case and the inordinate delays caused thereby. Such allowances establish dangerous precedent, are contrary to relevant case authority, and encourage trustees to speculate with estate assets delay their administration of cases.

Statutes

11 U.S.C. § 326. Limitation on compensation of trustee

(a) In a case under chapter 7 or 11, the court may allow reasonable compensation under section 330 of this title of the trustee for the trustee's services, payable after the trustee renders such services, not to exceed 25 percent on the first $5,000 or less, 10 percent on any amount in excess of $5,000 but not in excess of $50,000, 5 percent on any amount in excess of $50,000 but not in excess of $1,000,000, and reasonable compensation not to exceed 3 percent of such moneys in excess of $1,000,000, upon all moneys disbursed or turned over in the case by the trustee to parties in interest, excluding the debtor, but including holders of secured claims.

(b) In a case under chapter 12 or 13 of this title, the court may not allow compensation for services or reimbursement of expenses of the United States trustee or of a standing trustee appointed under section 586(b) of title 28, but may allow reasonable compensation under section 330 of this title of a trustee appointed under section 1202(a) or 1302(a) of this title for the trustee's services, payable after the trustee renders such services, not to exceed five percent upon all payments under the plan.

(c) If more than one person serves as trustee in the case, the aggregate compensation of such persons for such service may not exceed the maximum compensation prescribed for a single trustee by subsection (a) or (b) of this section, as the case may be.

(d) The court may deny allowance of compensation for services or reimbursement of expenses of the trustee if the trustee failed to make diligent inquiry into facts that would permit denial of allowance under section 328(c) of this title or, with knowledge of such facts, employed a professional person under section 327 of this title.

11 U.S.C. § 327 Employment of professional persons

(a) Except as otherwise provided in this section, the trustee, with the court's approval, may employ one or more attorneys, accountants, appraisers, auctioneers, or other professional persons, that do not hold or represent an interest adverse to the estate, and that are disinterested persons, to represent or assist the trustee in carrying out the trustee's duties under this title.

(b) If the trustee is authorized to operate the business of the debtor under section 721, 1202, or 1108 of this title, and if the debtor has regularly employed attorneys, accountants, or other professional persons on salary, the trustee may retain or replace such professional persons if necessary in the operation of such business.

(c) In a case under chapter 7, 12, or 11 of this title, a person is not disqualified for employment under this section solely because of such person's employment by or representation of a creditor, unless there is objection by another creditor or the United States trustee, in which case the court shall disapprove such employment if there is an actual conflict of interest.

(d) The court may authorize the trustee to act as attorney or accountant for the estate if such authorization is in the best interest of the estate.

(e) The trustee, with the court's approval, may employ, for a specified special purpose, other than to represent the trustee in conducting the case, an attorney that has represented the debtor, if in the best interest of the estate, and if such attorney does not represent or hold any interest adverse to the debtor or to the estate with respect to the matter on which such attorney is to be employed.

(f) The trustee may not employ a person that has served as an examiner in the case.

11 U.S.C. 328. Limitation on compensation of professional persons

(a) The trustee, or a committee appointed under section 1102 of this title, with the court's approval, may employ or authorize the employment of a professional person under section 327 or 1103 of this title, as the case may be, on any reasonable terms and conditions of employment, including on a retainer, on an hourly basis, or on a contingent fee basis. Notwithstanding such terms and conditions, the court may allow compensation different from the compensation provided under such terms and conditions after the conclusion of such employment, if such terms and conditions prove to have been improvident in light of developments not capable of being anticipated at the time of the fixing of such terms and conditions.

(b) If the court has authorized a trustee to serve as an attorney or accountant for the estate under section 327(d) of this title, the court may allow compensation for the trustee's services as such attorney or accountant only to the extent that the trustee performed services as attorney or accountant for the estate and not for performance of any of the trustee's duties that are generally performed by a trustee without the assistance of an attorney or accountant for the estate.

(c) Except as provided in section 327(c), 327(e), or 1107(b) of this title, the court may deny allowance of compensation for services and reimbursement of expenses of a professional person employed under section 327 or 1103 of this title if, at any time during such professional person's employment under section 327 or 1103 of this title, such professional person is not a disinterested person, or represents or holds an interest adverse to the interest of the estate with respect to the matter on which such professional person is employed.

(a) After notice to any parties in interest and to the United States trustee and a hearing, and subject to sections 326, 328, and 329 of this title, the court may award to a trustee, to an examiner, to a professional person employed under section 327 or 1103 of this title, or to the debtor's attorney--

(1) reasonable compensation for actual, necessary services rendered by such trustee, examiner, professional person, or attorney, as the case may be, and by any paraprofessional persons employed by such trustee, professional person, or attorney, as the case may be, based on the nature, the extent, and the value of such services, the time spent on such services, and the cost of comparable services other than in a case under this title; and

(2) reimbursement for actual, necessary expenses.

(b) There shall be paid from the filing fee in a case under chapter 7 of this title $45 to the trustee serving in such case, after such trustee's services are rendered.

(c) Unless the court orders otherwise, in a case under chapter 12 or 13 of this title the compensation paid to the trustee serving in the case shall not be less than $5 per month from any distribution under the plan during the administration of the plan.

(d) In a case in which the United States trustee serves as trustee, the compensation of the trustee under this section shall be paid to the clerk of the bankruptcy court and deposited by the clerk into the United States Trustee System Fund established by section 589a of title 28.

11 U.S.C. § 330. Compensation of officers (post-October 22, 1994)

(a) (1) After notice to the parties in interest and the United States Trustee and a hearing, and subject to sections 326, 328, and 329, the court may award to a trustee, an examiner, a professional person employed under section 327 or 1103 -

(A) reasonable compensation for actual, necessary services rendered by the trustee, examiner, professional person, or attorney and by any paraprofessional person employed by any such person; and

(B) reimbursement for actual, necessary expenses.

(2) The court may, on its own motion or on the motion of the United States Trustee, the United States Trustee for the District or Region, the trustee for the estate, or any other party in interest, award compensation that is less than the amount of compensation that is requested.

(3) (A) In determining the amount of reasonable compensation to be awarded, the court shall consider the nature, the extent, and the value of such services, taking into account all relevant factors, including -

(A) the time spent on such services;
(B) the rates charged for such services;
(C) whether the services were necessary to the administration of, or beneficial at the time at which the service was rendered toward the completion of, a case under this title;
(D) whether the services were performed within a reasonable amount of time commensurate with the complexity, importance, and nature of the problem, issue, or task addressed; and
(E) whether the compensation is reasonable based on the customary compensation charged by comparably skilled practitioners in cases other than cases under this title.

(4) (A) Except as provided in subparagraph (B), the court shall not allow compensation for -

(i) unnecessary duplication of services; or
(ii) services that were not -
    (I) reasonably likely to benefit the debtor's estate; or
    (II) necessary to the administration of the case.

(B) In a chapter 12 or chapter 13 case in which the debtor is an individual, the court may allow reasonable compensation to the debtor's attorney for representing the interests of the debtor in connection with the bankruptcy case based on a consideration of the benefit and necessity of such services to the debtor and the other factors set forth in this section.

(5) The court shall reduce the amount of compensation awarded under this section by the amount of any interim compensation awarded under section 331,and, if the amount of such interim compensation exceeds the amount of compensation awarded under this section, may order the return of the excess to the estate.

(6) Any compensation awarded for the preparation of a fee application shall be based on the level and skill reasonably required to prepare the application.

(b) (1) There shall be paid from the filing fee in a case under chapter 7 of this title $45 to the trustee serving in such case, after such trustee's services are rendered.

(2) The Judicial Conference of the United States -

(A) shall prescribe additional fees of the same kind as prescribed under section 1914(b) of title 28; and

(B) may prescribe notice of appearance fees and fees charged against distributions in cases under this title; to pay $15 to trustees serving in cases after such trustees' services are rendered. Beginning 1 year after the date of the enactment of the Bankruptcy Reform Act of 1994, such $15 shall be paid in addition to the amount paid under paragraph (1).

(c) Unless the court orders otherwise, in a case under chapter 12 or 13 of this title the compensation paid to the trustee serving in the case shall not be less than $5 per month from any distribution under the plan during the administration of the plan.

(d) In a case in which the United States trustee serves as trustee, the compensation of the trustee under this section shall be paid to the clerk of the bankruptcy court and deposited by the clerk into the United States Trustee System Fund established by section 589a of title 28.

11 U.S.C. § 331. Interim compensation

A trustee, an examiner, a debtor's attorney, or any professional person employed under section 327 or 1103 of this title may apply to the court not more than once every 120 days after an order for relief in a case under this title, or more often if the court permits, for such compensation for services rendered before the date of such an application or reimbursement for expenses incurred before such date as is provided under section 330 of this title. After notice and a hearing, the court may allow and disburse to such applicant such compensation or reimbursement.

11 U.S.C. § 363. Use, sale, or lease of property

(c) (1) If the business of the debtor is authorized to be operated under section 721, 1108, 1203, 1204, or 1304 of this title and unless the court orders otherwise, the trustee may enter into transactions, including the sale or lease of property of the estate, in the ordinary course of business, without notice or a hearing, and may use property of the estate in the ordinary course of business without notice or a hearing.

(2) The trustee may not use, sell, or lease cash collateral under paragraph (1) of this subsection unless -

(A) each entity that has an interest in such cash collateral consents; or
(B) the court, after notice and a hearing, authorizes such use, sale, or lease in accordance with the provisions of this section.

(3) Any hearing under paragraph (2)(B) of this subsection may be a preliminary hearing or may be consolidated with a hearing under subsection (e) of this section, but shall be scheduled in accordance with the needs of the debtor. If the hearing under paragraph (2)(B) of this subsection is a preliminary hearing, the court may authorize such use, sale, or lease only if there is a reasonable likelihood that the trustee will prevail at the final hearing under subsection (e) of this section. The court shall act promptly on any request for authorization under paragraph (2)(B) of this subsection.

(4) Except as provided in paragraph (2) of this subsection, the trustee shall segregate and account for any cash collateral in the trustee's possession, custody, or control.

11 U.S.C. § 704. Duties of trustee

The trustee shall -

(1) collect and reduce to money the property of the estate for which such trustee serves, and close such estate as expeditiously as is compatible with the best interests of parties in interest;

(2) be accountable for all property received;

(3) ensure that the debtor shall perform his intention as specified in section 521(2)(B) of this title;

(4) investigate the financial affairs of the debtor;

(5) if a purpose would be served, examine proofs of claims and object to the allowance of any claim that is improper;

(6) if advisable, oppose the discharge of the debtor;

(7) unless the court orders otherwise, furnish such information concerning the estate and the estate's administration as is requested by a party in interest;

(8) if the business of the debtor is authorized to be operated, file with the court, with the United States trustee, and with any governmental unit charged with responsibility for collection or determination of any tax arising out of such operation, periodic reports and summaries of the operation of such business, including a statement of receipts and disbursements, and such other information as the United States trustee or the court requires; and

(9) make a final report and file a final account of the administration of the estate with the court and with the United States trustee.

28 U.S.C. §158(a)

(a) The district courts of the United States shall have jurisdiction to hear appeals [1]

(1) from final judgments, orders, and decrees;
(2) from interlocutory orders and decrees issued under section 1121(d) of title 11 increasing or reducing the time periods referred to in section 1121 of such title; and
(3) with leave of the court, from other interlocutory order and decrees;

and, with leave of the court, from interlocutory orders and decrees, of bankruptcy judges entered in cases and proceedings referred to the bankruptcy judges under section 157 of this title.

An appeal under this subsection shall be taken only to the district court for the judicial district in which the bankruptcy judge is serving.

TABLE OF AUTHORITIES

CASES

OTHER

The United States submits this brief under Fed. R. App. P. 29 as amicus curiae in support of reversal of the bankruptcy court's order below.

INTEREST OF THE UNITED STATES

This appeal involves a dispute over the interpretation of two provisions of the United States Bankruptcy Code, 11 U.S.C. §§ 1325(b) and 707(b)(2)(A). Together, these provisions determine whether debtors have met their statutory obligation to dedicate their projected disposable income to paying unsecured creditors through their chapter 13 plans.

The United States has a direct interest in the proper construction of these provisions because United States Trustees, who are Justice Department officials appointed by the Attorney General, supervise the administration of bankruptcy cases in all federal judicial districts within this circuit. See 28 U.S.C. § 581-589a. See also H.R. Rep. No. 95-595 at 88 (1977), reprinted in 1978 U.S.C.C.A.N. 5963, 6049 (United States Trustees "serve as bankruptcy watch-dogs to prevent fraud, dishonesty, and overreaching in the bankruptcy arena").

The questions presented by this appeal affect the duties of the United States Trustee for at least two reasons. First, under 28 U.S.C. § 586(a)(3)(C), United States Trustees monitor chapter 13 plans and file comments with the court in connection with plan confirmation hearings under section 1324 of the Bankruptcy Code. Second, the United States has an interest in the proper interpretation of section 707(b)(2) because, in addition to its relevance in chapter 13 cases, that provision determines whether chapter 7 cases filed by above-median-income debtors are presumed to be abusive. See 11 U.S.C. § 707(b)(1), (2). Pursuant to section 704(b), United States Trustees are responsible for reviewing chapter 7 cases for abuse and seeking dismissal where appropriate. See Schultz v. United States, 529 F.3d 343, 348 (6th Cir. 2008).

Given these interests, the United States submits this brief as amicus in order to share its views on the application of sections 707(b)(2) and 1325(b). See 28 U.S.C. § 517 (authorizing Department of Justice "to attend to the interests of the United States in a suit pending in a court of the United States"); 11 U.S.C. § 307 (United States Trustee "may raise and may appear and be heard on any issue in any case or proceeding").

STATUTORY BACKGROUND

In a chapter 13 case, a debtor's unsecured creditors or trustee may insist that the debtor devote all of his "projected disposable income" to pay unsecured creditors. See 11 U.S.C. § 1325(b)(1). The Bankruptcy Code partially defines the term "projected disposable income" by reference to section 1325(b)(2), which defines "disposable income" as "current monthly income received by the debtor

. . . less amounts reasonably necessary to be expended" for, among other things, "the maintenance or support of the debtor." 11 U.S.C. § 1325(b)(2).[1]

Section 1325(b) further provides that, in the case of debtors with an above-median income, "amounts reasonably necessary to be expended . . . shall be determined in accordance with subparagraphs (A) and (B) of section 707(b)(2)." 11 U.S.C. § 1325(b)(3). A subcategory of such expenses, secured debts, is governed by subsection 707(b)(2)(A)(iii). See 11 U.S.C. § 707(b)(2)(A)(iii). It allows debtors to deduct "the total of all amounts scheduled as contractually due to secured creditors in each month of the 60 months following the date of the petition" divided by 60. Id. The Bankruptcy Code does not define the phrase "amounts scheduled as contractually due to secured creditors."

SUMMARY OF ARGUMENT

Section 1325(b)(1)(B) of the Bankruptcy Code requires chapter 13 debtors to devote all of their "projected disposable income" to the repayment of their unsecured creditors during the pendency of their plan. This provision reflects a "clear congressional intent . . . that debtors repay creditors the maximum they can afford." Coop v. Frederickson (In re Frederickson), 545 F.3d 652, 657 (8th Cir.

2008), cert. denied, 129 S. Ct. 1630 (2009) (internal citations omitted).

In this case, chapter 13 debtors David and Marguerite Darrohn sought to reduce their projected disposable income by claiming, among other deductions, an expense of $2,894.78 for mortgage payments on two homes that they propose to surrender under the terms of their chapter 13 plan. Dkt. 5 at 6.[2] Neither of the properties in question was the Darrohns' residence as of the time they filed for bankruptcy. The first of the two properties at issue is a home in Illinois that the Darrohns formerly rented to Mr. Darrohn's father, who is now deceased, while the second property is a residence that the Darrohns vacated prior to their bankruptcy. Tr. at 22-24.

The United States submits this brief in order to express its view on the correct treatment of mortgage expenses for surrendered properties under the section 1325(b)(1) "projected disposable income" test.[3] The bankruptcy court's ruling was erroneous because no fewer than three separate sections of the Bankruptcy Code independently prohibit the Darrohns from claiming a deduction for a phantom mortgage expense they will never actually pay. First, the surrendered property payments cannot meet the threshold definition of "amounts reasonably necessary to be expended" under sections 1325(b)(3) and 707(b)(2) of the Bankruptcy Code, because those sections permit debtors to deduct only those expenses that will actually be paid. Second, even if the Darrohns' surrendered property payments were somehow deemed to be "reasonably necessary" under section 1325(b)(3), those payments are excluded from the computation of "disposable income" under section 1325(b)(2) because they are not necessary for the "maintenance or support" of the Darrohns. Third, even if those payments were included in the computation of the Darrohns' "disposable income," they are excluded from the definition of "projected disposable income" under section 1325(b)(1), which is a forward-looking provision that directs courts to take into account changes in the debtors' expenses over the life of their plan, including, in this case, the termination of two major payment obligations.

References to the transcript of the bankruptcy court's confirmation hearing of December 15, 2008, which is attached as an exhibit to the chapter 13 trustee's opening brief, are denoted as "Tr. __."

[3] The chapter 13 trustee has also appealed the bankruptcy court's method for computing the earnings component of the Darrohns' projected disposable income. Br. 6-7. This topic raises the same legal issues as the bankruptcy court's ruling regarding the effect of section 1325(b)(1) on the Darrohns' expense computation, which is discussed below at section D.

For each of these reasons, the Bankruptcy Code precludes the Darrohns from deducting an expense they will never actually pay over the life of their chapter 13 plan. Instead, the Darrohns should be allowed the same standardized housing expense deduction that is available to any other similarly-situated debtors who do not have a mortgage on their primary residence. See 11 U.S.C. § 1325(b)(3) (incorporating section 707(b)(2)(A)(ii) of the Bankruptcy Code). Based on the data reported on the Darrohns' bankruptcy petitions, this would entitle them to a standardized deduction of $1,088 per month, rather than the $2,894.78 that they claimed. See Dkt. 5 at 1. Because the Bankruptcy Court approved the plan, which deducted the higher expense number when calculating the Darrohns' projected disposable income, the bankruptcy court's order confirming the Darrohns' plan should be vacated. This case should be remanded for further consideration of whether the Darrohns have met the requirements for plan confirmation under section 1325 of the Bankruptcy Code.

ARGUMENT

I. This Court Has Jurisdiction.

The order of the bankruptcy court was entered on December 23, 2008. On January 2, 2009, the chapter 13 trustee filed a notice of appeal to district court. The same day, the parties jointly "certified" the order for direct appeal to the court of appeals under 28 U.S.C. § 158(d). On January 9, 2009, the parties jointly petitioned for permission to appeal to the court of appeals, which granted permission to appeal on April 23, 2009.

It is the position of the United States that this Court has jurisdiction, because all parties may jointly certify an order for direct review under section 158(d), without obtaining certification from the bankruptcy court itself. Section 158(d)(2) establishes jurisdiction in the court of appeals over appeals from a bankruptcy court, district court, or bankruptcy appellate panel if the judgment, order, or decree "involves a question of law as to which there is no controlling decision of the court of appeals for the circuit or of the Supreme Court of the United States, or involves a matter of public importance" or "involves a question of law requiring resolution of conflicting decisions," or if "an immediate appeal . . . may materially advance the progress of the case or proceeding in which the appeal is taken." 28 U.S.C. § 158(d)(2)(A). However, there also must be a certification that this condition obtains. The court of appeals has jurisdiction "if the bankruptcy court, the district court, or the bankruptcy appellate panel involved, acting on its own motion or on the request of a party to the judgment, order, or decree described in such first sentence, or all the appellants and appellees (if any) acting jointly, certify" the existence of the condition. Id. (emphasis added).

Although the underlined phrase is not entirely clear in context, and conceivably could indicate that the court may act on "the request of" all parties acting jointly, such a reading not only is hard to square with the statutory syntax, but also renders the phrase unnecessary. If a request of "a party" is sufficient, there would be no need to address the case in which the request is from all parties. The latter would be subsumed within the former. Thus, we believe the underlined phrase means that courts have the authority to certify orders for direct appeals but not the exclusive authority. In our view, the statutory language divides the possible cases into three: (i) a court "acting on its own motion," (ii) a court "acting . . . on the request of a party to the judgment, order, or decree," or (iii) "all the appellants and appellees (if any) acting jointly." Further support for this reading is found in the next paragraph of the statute, which requires the court to certify if (i) on its own motion or the request of a party it determines that the condition is met, or (ii) the court receives a request from "a majority of appellants and a majority of the appellees (if any)." 28 U.S.C. § 158(d)(2)(B). The case of a request by all parties is not addressed. The omission of that case makes little sense if all certifications must be made by a court, but it is fully consistent with a reading of section 158(d)(2)(A) that allows all parties jointly to certify.

II. The Bankruptcy Court Erred By Permitting The Darrohns To Reduce Their Projected Disposable Income Through A Phantom Mortgage Expense That Will Never Be Paid.

A. The Bankruptcy Code imposes three separate tests that must all be satisfied before claiming a deduction to projected disposable income, none of which the Darrohns are able to meet.

Chapter 13 of the Bankruptcy Code is an intricate statutory mechanism designed to "achieve the congressional intent of requiring above-median debtors to pay their unsecured creditors the maximum they can afford in every case." Frederickson, 545 F.3d at 658-69. A key provision of this chapter is section 1325(b)(1), which allows the chapter 13 trustee or any creditor to prevent confirmation of any plan unless the debtor commits to pay his unsecured creditors in full, or else devotes his entire "projected disposable income" to the repayment of unsecured creditors over the life of the plan. "Projected disposable income" is an amount, equal to current monthly income[4] less certain allowable expenses that the Bankruptcy Code permits debtors to deduct from their income, and represents the minimum monthly payment that a debtor must make in order to propose a confirmable plan under chapter 13. See 11 U.S.C. § 1325(b)(1), (2).

No single provision of the Bankruptcy Code defines what expenses may be used to reduce a debtor's "projected disposable income." Rather, "projected disposable income" is defined in part by reference to section 1325(b)(2), which provides a definition of "disposable income." "Disposable income," in turn, is defined in part by section 1325(b)(3), which authorizes debtors to claim a deduction for "reasonably necessary" expenses, defined in terms of the chapter 7 means test set forth in section 707(b)(2).

Together, these provisions form three separate tests, all of which must be satisfied before a particular expense can be deducted when determining the debtor's projected disposable income. Using the chapter 7 means test as a starting point, these tests act as a series of filters that progressively narrow the types of expenses that can be deducted from a debtor's income. As a result, the universe of expenses that may be included in the "disposable income" computation under section 1325(b)(2) is narrower than the universe of "reasonably necessary expenses" defined by section 1325(b)(3). The expenses applicable to the "projected disposable income" test of section 1325(b)(1), in turn, are even more limited than those applicable to section 1325(b)(2).

1. The "reasonably necessary" test [11 U.S.C. §§ 707(b)(2) and 1325(b)(3)]

When determining whether an expense may be used in determining a debtor's projected disposable income, the first step of the analysis is to determine whether that expense is among the deductions listed under section 707(b)(2). The section 707(b)(2) deductions include, among other things, "[t]he debtor's average monthly payments on secured debt," which are defined as "amounts scheduled as contractually due to secured creditors in each month of the 60 months following the date of the petition." 11 U.S.C. § 707(b)(2)(A)(iii). If, and only if, a secured debt payment meets those criteria, it will be treated as an "amount reasonably necessary to be expended" under section 1325(b)(3).

2. The "maintenance or support" test [11 U.S.C. § 1325(b)(2)(A)]

If the expense satisfies the "reasonably necessary" test of section 707(b)(2) and 1325(b)(3), the next step of the analysis is to determine whether the expense is also a permissible deduction to "disposable income" under section 1325(b)(2). Except in the case of charitable contributions and business expenses, that section permits an expense to be deducted from disposable income only if both of two criteria are met: (1) the expense must be "reasonably necessary to be expended" and (2) it must be "for the maintenance or support of the debtor or a dependent of the debtor." 11 U.S.C. § 1325(b)(2)(A)(i). As a result, an expense that is not for "maintenance or support" cannot be included within a calculation of disposable income, even if it otherwise satisfies the definition of a "reasonably necessary" expense under sections 1325(b)(3) and 702(b)(2).

3. The requirement that an expense be "projected" to occur over the duration of a debtor's chapter 13 plan [11 U.S.C. § 1325(b)(1)]

If an expense is allowed as a deduction to the debtor's "disposable income," the final step of the analysis is to determine whether it also may be allowed as a deduction in calculating "projected disposable income" under section 1325(b)(1). Although the term "projected" is not defined in the Bankruptcy Code, the most natural reading of section 1325(b)(1) is that it is intended to be a forward-looking variation of the test for "disposable income" set forth in section 1325(b)(2). Accordingly, the expense must also be one that is "projected" to exist over the course of the debtor's plan, even if it is included within the calculation of a debtor's "disposable income," in order to offset a debtor's income under 1325(b)(1).

In this case, the bankruptcy court's decision did not follow the three-step analysis required by the Bankruptcy Code. Instead, the bankruptcy court limited its discussion to the question of whether the Darrohns' mortgage payments could be included in a section 707(b)(2) means test calculation, determined as of the moment the Darrohns filed for bankruptcy. Tr. 46-47. In so ruling, the bankruptcy court misapplied the section 1325(b)(3) "reasonably necessary" test, and did not consider either of the two remaining tests. Because all three of these tests independently preclude the Darrohns from deducting a phantom mortgage expense, the bankruptcy court's decision was erroneous.

B. Under the "reasonably necessary" test of sections 707(b)(2) and 1325(b)(3), the Darrohns may not claim a deduction for mortgage payments they will never actually make.

For purposes of the chapter 7 means test, section 702(b)(2)(A)(iii) permits debtors to claim a deduction for "the total of all amounts scheduled as contractually due to secured creditors in each month of the 60 months following the date of the petition," plus any additional amounts "necessary for the debtor . . . to maintain possession" of the property in question. 11 U.S.C. § 707(b)(2)(A)(iii)(I), (II). In this case, however, the Darrohns' surrender of their properties means that there is no longer any payment that is "contractually due" to a "secured creditor," and it will not be necessary for the Darrohns to make additional payments to "maintain possession" of properties they will not keep.

Although the bankruptcy court found that the Darrohns could deduct their mortgage expenses as a payment "contractually due to a secured creditor," it did so based on its assumption that sections 707(b)(2) and 1325(b)(3) require an artificial, static analysis of the Darrohns' finances, strictly determined according to events as they existed on the day the Darrohns filed for bankruptcy. Tr. 49. In so ruling, the bankruptcy court followed a decision of the Bankruptcy Appellate Panel for the Sixth Circuit holding that, for purposes of calculating section 707(b)(2) expense deductions, the chapter 7 means test does not permit a court to consider changes to the debtor's actual expenses that occur after the filing of the bankruptcy petition. See Hildebrand v. Thomas (In re Thomas), 395 B.R. 914, 922 (B.A.P. 6th Cir. 2008).[5]

The question decided by Thomas has divided lower courts and is an issue of first impression before this Court.[6] Compare Thomas, 395 B.R. at 922 (holding, in connection with determination of projected disposable income in chapter 13 case, that payments on surrendered property could be deducted from income for section 702(b)(2) purposes); Fokkena v. Hartwick, 373 B.R. 645, 653-55 (D. Minn. 2007)

[5] The bankruptcy court followed only a portion of the holding in Thomas. Although the bankruptcy court agreed with Thomas's construction of sections 707(b)(2) and 1325(b)(3) as backward-looking, it declined to follow the second key holding of Thomas, which recognized that the term "projected" in section 1325(b)(1) requires a forward-looking construction. Thomas, 395 B.R. at 923.

[6] No court of appeals has yet ruled on the question of how to treat mortgage expenses for surrendered property under section 707(b)(2). However, appeals raising this same issue are currently pending before the First and Seventh Circuits. See Morse v. Rudler (In re Rudler), Case No. 08-9007 (1st Cir.) (raising issue of interpretation of section 707(b)(2) in the chapter 7 context); Brothers v. Turner (In re Turner), Case No. 08-2163 (7th Cir.) (chapter 13 case).

(denying motion to dismiss chapter 7 debtor's case and holding that mortgage expenses for surrendered property could be deducted from income under section 707(b)(2) means test); with In re Naut, No. 07-20280REF, 2008 WL 191297 at *9 (Bankr. E.D. Pa. Jan. 22, 2008) (holding that debtor could not "artificially" reduce income for chapter 7 means test purposes by deducting a phantom payment obligation on surrendered property); In re Burden, 380 B.R. 194, 202 (Bankr. W.D. Mo. 2007) (same); In re Harris, 353 B.R. 304, 308-10 (Bankr. E.D. Okla. 2006) (same); In re Skaggs, 349 B.R. 594, 599-600 (Bankr. E.D. Mo. 2006) (same).

This Court should reject the interpretation of section 707(b)(2) adopted by Thomas and the bankruptcy court for at least three reasons. First, the premise that section 707(b)(2) requires the court to determine income based only on a pre-petition "snapshot" of the debtor's finances cannot be reconciled with the forward-looking language of the statute. Section 707(b)(2) does not direct the court to measure a debtor's obligations as of the date of the petition, but over the 60-month period following the petition. See 11 U.S.C. § 707(b)(2)(A)(iii)(I). For this reason, payments that will never be made "following" the petition are irrelevant to the section 707(b)(2) means test. See Naut at *9 (applying dictionary definition of "following" and concluding that loan payments must actually be due in each of the 60 months after the bankruptcy filing before debtor can claim expense on means test).

Second, the interpretation of section 707(b)(2)(A)(iii)(I) followed by Thomas and the bankruptcy court fails to account for Congress's use of the word "secured." As this Court has previously recognized, the surrender of the Darrohns' two properties, which is a requirement of their proposed chapter 13 plan, will extinguish any secured claim arising from those properties and will leave the Darrohns' lenders with, at most, an unsecured claim for any deficiency.[7] See AmeriCredit Financial Services, Inc., v. Long (In re Long), 519 F.3d 288, 291-92 (6th Cir. 2008) (discussing remedies of lender following debtor's surrender of collateral in chapter 13 case). As a result, during the 60-month period to which 707(b)(2)(A)(iii)(I) refers, there will be no "secured creditors" associated with the properties for which the Darrohns claim a deduction, and the subsection is inapplicable by its own terms. In order to conform the bankruptcy court's result with the text of subsection (I), it would therefore be necessary to either delete the word "secured," or to modify the subsection by inserting the phrase "or formerly secured." Nothing in the text or history of section 707(b)(2) justifies such a revision of Congress's plain language.

[7] The record does not indicate whether the surrender contemplated by the Darrohns' plan has occurred, or whether the lenders to whom the properties are surrendered will have recourse against the Darrohns in the event of a deficiency.

Third, even if the language of subsection (I) were ambiguous, the "snapshot" construction of the phrase "scheduled as contractually due" given in Thomas creates a structural inconsistency with other related sections of the Bankruptcy Code, thereby violating the interpretive canon of in pari materii. See Erlenbaugh v. United States, 409 U.S. 239, 243 (1972) (canon of in pari materia "is but a logical extension of the principle that individual sections of a single statute should be construed together"). In particular, the "conjunctive partner" of section 707(b)(2)(A)(iii)(I) is section 707(b)(2)(A)(iii)(II). Burden, 380 B.R. at 202. That subsection, which permits debtors to deduct "additional payments . . . necessary for the debtor . . . to maintain possession of the property," would be meaningless unless it were given a forward-looking construction. Moreover, that subsection unequivocally presumes that the debtor who claims a deduction under section 707(b)(2)(A)(iii) is one who is maintaining, and not surrendering, the property in question. Id. (noting that subsection (II) "reinforces the conclusion that § 707(b)(2)(A)(iii)(I) applies only to payments on debts secured by collateral that a debtor intends to keep").

Because the Bankruptcy Code links the means test in section 707(b)(2) to the projected disposable income test in section 1325(b), the provisions of section 1325(b) are also relevant to the question of whether section 707(b)(2)(A)(iii)(I) requires a "snapshot" or a forward-looking analysis. Like the provisions of subsection 707(b)(2)(A)(iii)(II), the various provisions of section 1325(b)(1) are explicitly forward-looking. See, e.g., 11 U.S.C. § 1325(b)(1)(B) (requiring debtor to commit "projected" disposable income to plan); (b)(2)(A)(i) (referring to domestic support orders that become payable after the date the petition is filed); (b)(2)(A)(ii) (limiting charitable contribution deductions based on debtor's income in year in which contributions are made); see also Frederickson, 545 F.3d at 659 (noting that section 1325(b)(1) "necessarily contemplates a forward-looking number"); Hamilton v. Lanning (In re Lanning), 545 F.3d 1269, 1280 (10th Cir. 2008), petition for cert. filed, 77 U.S.L.W. 3449 (U.S. Feb. 03, 2009) (No. 08-998) (same).

As a result, in order to reconcile the result in Thomas with the remainder of section 707(b)(2), it would be necessary to conclude that Congress commanded courts to use one methodology when calculating deductions for principal and interest payments under the subsection (I) of section 707(b)(2)(A)(iii), but a significantly different methodology when calculating deductions for "additional payments" for the same mortgage under the next subsection and when applying that same information to the calculation of projected disposable income under section 1325(b). It is a basic rule of statutory construction, however, that courts should avoid interpreting separate parts of a single legislative enactment in such a contradictory manner. See United Savings Assoc. of Texas v. Timbers of Inwood Forest Assocs., 484 U.S. 365, 371 (1988) (noting that interpretation of the Bankruptcy Code "is a holistic endeavor," and that a "provision that may seem ambiguous in isolation is often clarified by the remainder of the statutory scheme"). Accordingly, the bankruptcy court erred by including the Darrohns' phantom mortgage payments in its computation of "reasonably necessary" expenses under sections 707(b)(2) and 1325(b)(3).

C. Alternatively, under section 1325(b)(2), the Darrohns' expenses for surrendered property may not be used to reduce disposable income because they are not expenses for "maintenance or support."

Even if the Darrohns' payments on their discontinued mortgage obligations were deductible for means-testing purposes under section 707(b)(2), such payments are not necessarily also deductible from "disposable income" under section 1325(b)(2). That section imposes a double requirement that must be satisfied before such a deduction can be taken: not only must the expense be "reasonably necessary" (as determined by section the 707(b)(2) means test), but it must also fall into one of the categories described under subsections (A) or (B) of section 1325(b)(2). See 11 U.S.C. § 1325(b)(2), (3). Because the Darrohns are not engaged in business and their mortgage payments are not charitable contributions, the only such category applicable to the Darrohns is subsection (A)(i), which authorizes the deduction of an expense "for the maintenance or support of the debtor or a dependent of the debtor." See 11 U.S.C. § 1325(b)(2)(A)(i).

Here, the bankruptcy court's failure to even consider whether the Darrohns' surrendered properties were necessary for their "maintenance or support" warrants reversal for at least two reasons. First, as an examination of the language and structure of section 1325(b)(2) demonstrates, Congress intended the "maintenance or support" test to be an additional requirement to the "reasonably necessary" test, which is applicable to both above-median as well as below-median debtors. Second, the "maintenance or support" test precludes debtors from claiming a deduction for a mortgage payment that they will never actually make, or that relates to a property that is not a primary residence. In this case, the Darrohns do not intend to pay their mortgages, and neither of the homes at issue is the Darrohns' residence. As a result, those mortgage payments cannot be characterized as expenses for "maintenance or support."

1. The "maintenance or support" requirement of section 1325(b)(2) is applicable to both above-median and below-median debtors.

The Bankruptcy Code provides two different mechanisms for measuring "disposable income," depending on whether or not the debtor has a family income above the median for his state. See In re Gonzalez, 388 B.R. 292, 300 (Bankr. S.D. Tex. 2008). If the debtor is below-median, the court computes expenses based only on section 1325(b)(2), and will make a subjective determination of whether particular expenses are "reasonably necessary . . . for maintenance or support." 11 U.S.C. § 1325(b)(2). For above-median debtors, such as the Darrohns, the court must also look to section 1325(b)(3), which directs the court to determine "reasonably necessary" according to the objective criteria set out in section 707(b)(2).

One issue that remains unsettled among lower courts is whether the "maintenance or support" requirement of subsection (b)(2) retains any independent significance for above-median debtors. One group of cases has held that it does, and has required debtors to demonstrate both that their expenses are "reasonably necessary" under subsection (b)(3) and that they are for "maintenance or support" under subsection (b)(2). See Gonzalez, 388 B.R. at 301 (citing cases). Other courts, by contrast, have held that subsection (b)(3) displaces subsection (b)(2) entirely for above-median debtors, and have not required such debtors to demonstrate that their expenses are for "maintenance or support." See In re Smith, 401 B.R. 469, 473 (Bankr. W.D. Wash. 2008).

Both the text and purpose of section 1325(b) support the holding of Gonzalez. Had Congress intended for subsection (b)(3) and the chapter 7 means test to supplant subsection (b)(2)(A) for above-median debtors, or to supplant the "maintenance or support" component of that section, it would have provided so expressly. It did not, but instead used the means test to define only a single, narrow phrase within section 1325(b)(2) – "reasonably necessary to be expended." Congress's decision not to incorporate the full phrase "for maintenance or support" within 1325(b)(3) is significant. As the Supreme Court has noted, "Where Congress includes particular language in one section of a statute but omits it in another section of the same Act, it is generally presumed that Congress acts intentionally and purposely in the disparate inclusion or exclusion." Dean v. United States, 129 S. Ct. 1849, 1853 (2009), quoting Russello v. United States, 464 U.S. 16, 23 (1983). As a result, the structure of section 1325(b)(2) supports the conclusion that above-median debtors, as well as below-median debtors, must demonstrate that their claimed expenses are "for maintenance or support" for purposes of determining section 1325(b)(2) disposable income.

Although the statutory language is dispositive in this instance, as the court in Gonzalez noted, a contrary rule would also lead to inequitable practical results. In many cases, an expense may be deductible under section 707(b)(2) but not section 1325(b)(2) because it is not for "maintenance or support." In such a case, the result in Smith would deny the deduction to a below-median debtor, while allowing the very same deduction to an above-median debtor. Gonzalez, 388 B.R. at 302. Such an outcome could have the paradoxical effect of allowing higher-income debtors to devote less income to their chapter 13 plan than a lower-income debtor, and would be at odds with Congress's intention that debtors repay creditors the maximum they can afford.

2. The Darrohns' mortgage payments for homes in which they do not reside are not expenses for "maintenance or support."

The Bankruptcy Court's failure to consider the "maintenance or support" test in the Darrohns' case was significant because, based on the undisputed facts of this case, the Darrohns cannot satisfy that test with respect to their phantom mortgage payments. This is so for at least two reasons: first, because the Darrohns themselves do not intend to make such payments, and second, because those payments relate to the Darrohns' second and third homes, neither of which they are currently using as a primary residence. See Gonzalez, 388 B.R. at 303 (holding that "Payments on a home that the [debtors] will not use do not provide . . . maintenance or support").

This result would be the same even if the court adopted a static, "snapshot" analysis of the Darrohns' finances, based on facts as they existed on the day the Darrohns sought bankruptcy relief. Then, as now, neither of the two properties at issue was the Darrohns' primary residence. Tr. at 22-24. Non-primary residences, by definition, are not necessary for the maintenance or support of chapter 13 debtors. See In re Short, Case No. 08-11224, 2008 WL 5751873 at *4 (Bankr. N.D. Ohio Sept. 11, 2008) (listing "second homes" among categories of expenses which are not considered expenses for "maintenance or support"); In re Cardillo, 170 B.R. 490, 491-92 (Bankr. D.N.H. 1994) (holding that debtor's mortgage payments on investment property and second home were not for "maintenance or support"). Accordingly, the "maintenance or support" test of section 1325(b)(2) independently precludes the Darrohns from claiming a deduction for their phantom mortgage expenses.

D. The bankruptcy court erred by failing to consider changed circumstances when calculating projected disposable income under section 1325(b)(1).

The computations under sections 1325(b)(2) and (b)(3) result in an amount, "disposable income." However, for purposes of determining whether a chapter 13 plan may be confirmed, courts do not look directly to disposable income, but to a separate term, "projected disposable income." See 11 U.S.C. § 1325(b)(1).

In the decision below, the bankruptcy court split with the Eighth and Tenth Circuits and construed "disposable income" and "projected disposable income" as identical concepts, concluding that "projected disposable income" would be determined as of a historical moment in time – specifically, the moment when the Darrohns filed for bankruptcy, prior to the surrender of their real property. Tr. 47.

The bankruptcy court's ruling reflects a flawed reading of section 1325(b)(1). In particular, the bankruptcy court erred by refusing to give any meaning to the word "projected." Statutory words must be construed in context. Hibbs v. Winn, 542 U.S. 88, 101 (2004). In the context of section 1325(b)(1), the term "projected" refers to a forecast or estimate of an expected future financial reality.[8] Here, the interpretation of "projected" as requiring a future-oriented analysis of section 1325(b)(1) is also reinforced by the language of subsection (B) of that section, which refers to income that is "to be received" during the plan period, as well as amounts that "will be applied to make payments" to unsecured [8] See The Random House Dict. of the English Lang. 1546 (2d ed. 1987) (defining to "project" as, inter alia, "to set forth or calculate (some future thing"); Webster's Third New Int'l Dict. 1813 (1993) (defining "projected" as, inter alia, "planned for future execution: contrived, proposed").

creditors. See 11 U.S.C. § 1325(b)(1)(B).

Any interpretation of section 1325(b)(1), however, must take into account all of the language in the provision. If the interpretation cannot account for two phrases in the statute, which create serious interpretive issues in specific fact situations, the interpretation must be incorrect. It is well established that courts "must, if possible, construe a statute to give every word some operative effect." Cooper Indus., Inc. v. Aviall Servs., Inc., 543 U.S. 157, 167 (2004) (citing United States v. Nordic Village, Inc., 503 U.S. 30, 35-36 (1992)). Here, the bankruptcy court's interpretation of section 1325(b)(1) would require the Court to ignore this statutory maxim.

For this reason, as both the Eighth and Tenth Circuits have held, a better interpretation of section 1325(b)(1) is that it imposes a forward-looking test, which permits courts to consider a debtor's real financial circumstances instead of constraining itself to an artificial analysis of events as they existed at a past moment in time. See Lanning, 545 F.3d at 1280 (concluding that, based on an analysis of the statutory language, "the forward-looking approach [for interpreting section 1325(b)(1)] strikes us as the better one"); Frederickson, 545 F.3d at 659 (holding that analysis of projected disposable income "can take into consideration changes that have occurred in the debtor's financial circumstances").

In this case, the bankruptcy court rejected the analysis of Frederickson and Lanning, and stated that it would instead follow a contrary decision by the Ninth Circuit, Maney v. Kagenveama (In re Kagenveama), 541 F.3d 868 (9th Cir. 2008). Tr. at 52-53. Even if this Court were to adopt that decision, however, Kagenveama is not dispositive of whether the Darrohns were authorized to claim a deduction for their mortgage expenses. The issue in Kagenveama was limited to the methodology for calculating a debtor's income, not expenses, under the chapter 13 projected disposable income test. Kagenveama, 541 F.3d at 871. Kagenveama therefore had no occasion to consider the prospective effects of sections 1325(b)(2)(A), 1325(b)(3), or 707(b)(2)(A)(iii), all of which are applicable only to expense calculations.[9]

In any event, to the extent that it is relevant here, this Court should decline to adopt the holding of Kagenveama. Apart from the fact that the Kagenveama construction frustrates the intent of Congress by reading the forward-looking phrases "projected" and "to be received" out of the Bankruptcy Code, the mechanical, backward-looking approach taken by Kagenveama has led to troubling consequences in the Ninth Circuit. In particular, it is not uncommon for debtors to receive a one-time increase in their income during the months before their bankruptcy, such as through a severance payment or by selling off their property. Under the Kagenveama holding, a court must use this artificially-inflated income as the basis for calculating a chapter 13 debtor's projected disposable income, even if it bears no relation to the debtor's actual income during the bankruptcy. This mechanical approach imposes an impossible burden on many chapter 13 debtors, and has led to inequitable results in the Ninth Circuit post-Kagenveama. See, e.g., In re Featherstone, No. 08-00016, 2008 WL 5217936 (D. Mont. Dec. 11, 2008) (denying confirmation of the debtors' plan where the debtors sought to exclude income received from a one-time sale of livestock from their "projected disposable income" calculation); In re Stansell, 395 B.R. 457 (Bankr. D. Idaho 2008) (requiring income received from the debtor's deceased spouse to be included in the debtor's calculation of "current monthly income").

[9] For the same reason, Kagenveama is inapplicable to the arguments discussed in sections II and III of this brief, which involve statutory provisions related to the calculation of expenses, and which were consequently not addressed by the Kagenveama decision.

In this case, the projected disposable income analysis performed by the bankruptcy court was flawed because it was based on a phantom expense that will not continue over the course of the Darrohns' bankruptcy. By treating the Darrohns' mortgage obligations on surrendered property as if they would continue indefinitely, when in actuality the Darrohns will never again make such payments, the bankruptcy court reduced the amount that the Darrohns will be required to pay to their unsecured creditors. The bankruptcy court's ruling failed to give section 1325(b)(1) the forward-looking construction mandated by Congress, and as a result, its order confirming the Darrohns' plan should be reversed.

CONCLUSION

For these reasons, the United States respectfully asks this Court to reverse the order of the bankruptcy court confirming the Darrohns' plan, and to remand this case to the bankruptcy court for further consideration of whether the Darrohns have satisfied the requirements for plan confirmation under 11 U.S.C. § 1325(b)(1).

Statement of Jurisdiction

The Bankruptcy Court had jurisdiction over the debtors Deaconess Hospital LLC et al's chapter 11 bankruptcy case under 28 U.S.C. §§ 157(a) and (b), and 1334(a). It had jurisdiction to decide Deaconess' motion to pay Nour Management Company fees for management services and Nour Management Company's motion for fees for management services. The Bankruptcy Court denied both motions in its order entered on July 22, 2004. On July 30, 2004, the Deaconess debtors timely appealed the order denying its motion to pay Nour Management Company fees for future management services and Nour's motion for fees. On August 6, 2004, Nour Management Company filed a cross-appeal of the order denying its motion for fees for management services under 28 U.S.C. § 158(a). Due to delay in the transmittal, the appeals were not docketed in this Court until March 30, 2009. This Court has jurisdiction over this appeal under 28 U.S.C. § 158(a)(1).

Statement of Issues Presented

I. Whether Nour is foreclosed from arguing the Bankruptcy Court erred by concluding the agreement between Nour and the Deaconess debtors was outside of the ordinary course of business within the meaning of 11 U.S.C. § 363(b)(1).

II. Assuming Nour is not foreclosed, whether the Bankruptcy Court abused its discretion in denying Nour's management fees under 11 U.S.C. § 363(b).

A. Whether the Bankruptcy Court erred in analyzing the transaction between Nour and the Deaconess debtors under 11 U.S.C. § 363(b) as one outside of the ordinary course of business when the evidence presented at the hearing supports that conclusion.

B. Whether the Bankruptcy Court abused its discretion in finding Nour did not demonstrate extraordinary circumstances warranting nunc pro tunc approval of its fees under 11 U.S.C. § 363(b).

C. Whether the Bankruptcy Court properly determined a sound business reason did not warrant retroactive payment of management fees to an insider outside of the ordinary course of business under 11 U.S.C. § 363(b).

III. Whether the Bankruptcy Court's decision should be affirmed in any event because even if the management fees were in the ordinary course of business, Bankruptcy Court approval was still required under 11 U.S.C. §363(c)(2).

Standard of Review

On appeal, this Court reviews the bankruptcy court's findings of fact under a clearly erroneous standard and conclusions of law de novo. Mixed questions of law and fact are separated and reviewed under the applicable standard. City of Baltimore v. State of West Virginia (In re Eagle-Pitcher Industries, Inc.), 285 F.3d 522, 527 (6th Cir. 2002); Fed. R. Bankr. P. 8013. Review of a transaction under 11 U.S.C.§ 363(b) is under an abuse of discretion standard. See In re Stephens Industries, Inc., 789 F. 2d 386, 388 (6th Cir. 1986). Statement of the Case

In this appeal, Nour Management Company ("Nour") challenges the Bankruptcy Court order denying its motion for retroactive approval of its management fees. Deaconess Hospital, LLC, Pearlview Square, Inc., and Indoga, Inc. (hereinafter "Deaconess" or "the Debtors") have not prosecuted their appeal of the order denying both its and Nour's motions.

Deaconess filed voluntary chapter 11 bankruptcy petitions under the Bankruptcy Code on November 23, 2003 (the "petition date"). (Bankruptcy Court Docket No. 1).[1] These related cases were jointly consolidated and administered together. (Bankruptcy Court Docket No. 13). George G. Saad, M.D. was the sole owner and person in control of Deaconess. Dr. Saad also owned and managed Nour.

On May 25, 2004, Nour filed a motion requesting bankruptcy court approval of management fees totaling $84,000 incurred postpetition on behalf of Deaconess from November 21, 2003 through May 7, 2004. (Bankr. Doc. No. 458). Deaconess also filed a motion to pay Nour for postpetition management services provided after May 7, 2004 in the amount of $5,000 a week. (Bankr. Doc. No. 463). Creditors, GE HFS Holdings, Inc, and Bank One, N.A. objected to the motions of Nour and Deaconess. (Bankr. Doc. No. 498, 508, 520, 521). After an evidentiary hearing, the Bankruptcy Court entered its Order dated July 22, 2004 and Memorandum of Opinion denying both motions. (Bankr. Doc. Nos. 589, 590).

On July 30, 2004, Deaconess filed a notice of appeal of the order denying both its motion to pay Nour for services rendered after May 7, 2004 and Nour's motion for management fees through May 7, 2004. (Bankr. Doc. No. 610). On August 6, 2004, Nour filed a notice of cross-appeal of the order denying its motion for management fees. (Bankr. Doc. No. 624).

Pursuant to Fed. R. Bankr. P. 8001, the United States Trustee and GE HFS Holdings, Inc. elected to have the appeals heard by the District Court. The Bankruptcy Appellate Panel entered an order on August 31, 2004 transferring the appeals to the District Court. (Bankr. Doc. No. 683). Due to delays incurred in the transfers, the appeal was docketed with the District Court on March 30, 2009. (Dist. Ct. Doc. No. 1). The United States Trustee filed a motion to dismiss the appeals on May 28, 2009 for lack of prosecution to which Nour objected. (Dist. Ct. Doc. Nos. 4, 8). The District Court denied the United States Trustee's motion to dismiss and established a briefing schedule. (Dist. Ct. Doc. entry dated October 7, 2009). After several extensions were granted, Nour filed its objection to the Bankruptcy Court decision of July 22, 2004 on November 27, 2009. (Dist. Ct. Doc. No. 11). As of this date, Deaconess has not filed any pleading in further prosecution of its appeal.

During the pendency of these appeals, on April 18, 2005, the Bankruptcy Court ordered the appointment of a chapter 11 trustee to administer Deaconess' chapter 11 proceeding. (Bankr. Doc. Nos. 898, 909). David O. Simon was appointed as the chapter 11 trustee. (Bankr. Doc. No. 919). On September 6, 2005, Mr. Simon moved to convert these chapter 11 proceedings to a chapter 7 liquidation proceeding which the Bankruptcy Court granted on October 3, 2005. (Bankr. Doc. No. 996). Mr. Simon has remained the chapter 7 trustee responsible for liquidating Deaconess' remaining assets for the benefit of creditors.

Statement of the Facts

1. Statutory Framework

When an entity files for chapter 11 bankruptcy protection, the debtor is deemed a debtor-in-possession, and unless ordered otherwise, the debtor has the authority to continue conducting its regular business operations as it did before the bankruptcy filing ("prepetition"). 11 U.S.C. §§ 363(c), 1107. However, any transactions outside of the ordinary course of the debtor's business must be approved, after notice and a hearing, by the bankruptcy court. 11 U.S.C. § 363(b).

In addition, a debtor may not use its cash collateral to pay for goods and services without the consent of the parties that have a security interest in the cash collateral unless the court approves of the use of cash collateral, after notice and a hearing. 11 U.S.C. § 363(c)(2). Cash collateral includes cash, negotiable instruments, documents of title, securities, deposit accounts, proceeds, accounts and rents in which the debtor and another party have an interest. 11 U.S.C.

§363(a). Any transaction outside of the ordinary course of business, regardless of whether or not it requires the use of cash collateral, must be approved by the Bankruptcy Court. 11 U.S.C. § 363(b).

The Bankruptcy Code specifically details the means by which a debtor may hire and pay professionals assisting with a bankruptcy proceeding and also clearly addresses the payment of wages, salaries, and commissions earned and owed to such employees. 11 U.S.C. §§ 327, 330, 331, 503, 507. However, the retention of managers and payment of management fees is not specifically addressed by the Bankruptcy Code. Only § 503(c)(3) provides guidance by stating that obligations shall not be allowed or paid as an administrative expense that are "incurred outside of the ordinary course of business and not justified by the facts and circumstances of the case, including transfers made to, or obligations incurred for the benefit of, officers, managers, or consultants hired after the date of the filing of the petition."

2. Factual Background

The Deaconess debtors filed their bankruptcy petitions on November 23, 2003 and at that time Deaconess owned and operated Deaconess Hospital in Old Brooklyn, Ohio. Dr. Saad was the sole owner and person in control of the Deaconess debtors on the petition date. (Bankr. Doc. Nos. 1, Petition; 11, Affidavit of Saad). Until the appointment of Mr. Simon as the chapter 11 trustee, Dr. Saad remained Deaconess' chief executive officer and the sole person responsible for Deaconess' bankruptcy efforts. (Bankr. Doc. Nos. 203, 207, 879, 880, 881, 882, 883, 884, Operating Reports signed by Dr. Saad).

Nour was an entity also solely owned by Dr. Saad that provided management services to Deaconess prior to its bankruptcy filing.

After the bankruptcy filing, Bankruptcy Court orders and stipulations were entered authorizing Deaconess to use funds that were the cash collateral of its secured creditors and borrow money in order to continue its business operations. The cash collateral and financing orders and related stipulations, all signed by counsel for Dr. Saad, specifically prohibited any payments to insiders. (Bankr. Doc. Nos. 31, para. 11, 32, para. 12, 52, 100, 227, 301, 310, 373, 419, 491). While the detailed budgets setting forth permissible expenditures of funds included a line item for Nour's management fees, a provision explicitly provided that "[m]anagement [f]ees shall not be paid, except upon further Court Order" and reserved parties' right to object to Nour's fees. (Bankr. Doc. No. 227, p. 3, para. 9 and p. 6).

Deaconess ceased operating the hospital and shut down immediately after it filed for bankruptcy. Efforts were then made to liquidate its assets which were sold in April, 2004. (Bankr. Doc. Nos. 396, 397, Memorandum of Opinion and Order authorizing sale).

On May 25, 2004, Nour filed its Motion by Nour Management Company for Fees for Management Services ("Fee Motion") in which Nour requested $84,000 for postpetition management services rendered to Deaconess from November 21, 2003 (two days before the bankruptcy filing) through May 7, 2004. (Bankr. Doc. No. 458). The Fee Motion did not cite any statutory provision authorizing such fees but rather, in support, stated the fees were allowed because the budget, approved by the Bankruptcy Court, provided for management services at a rate of $3,500 a week. (Bankr. Doc. No. 458 p. 3). After detailing the services provided, Nour requested management fees pursuant to the approved budget. (Bankr. Doc. No. 458 p. 4).

Deaconess also filed its Debtors' Motion to Pay Nour Management Company Fees for Management Services ("Deaconess Motion") on May 28, 2004 in which it requested authority pursuant to 11 U.S.C. § 363(b) to pay Nour for postpetition management services rendered after May 7, 2004 at a rate of $5,000 a week. (Bankr. Doc. No. 463).

The United States Trustee objected to Nour's Fee Motion as did the Official Committee of Unsecured Creditors, GE HFS Holdings, Inc., and Bank One, N.A. (Bankr. Doc. Nos. 498, 508, 520, para. 5, and 521). The United States Trustee argued the fees should be denied because 1) Nour was not and could not be retained as a professional under Bankruptcy Code §§ 327-331; 2) Deaconess did not assume any executory contract with Nour under 11 U.S.C. § 365 so that payment under this provision was not permissible; and 3) Nour's requested fees were incurred during a time when Deaconess was adequately staffed by employees and Deaconess did not benefit from, and should not be responsible for, Nour's requested fee. (Bankr. Doc. No. 498).

In reply to the objecting parties, Nour responded, in part, that the postpetition services were provided pursuant to a "extant prepetition agreement." (Bankr. Doc. No. 522 p. 1). Citing to cases supporting the doctrine that a debtor in possession may continue operations in the ordinary course of business, Nour argued Deaconess had the "right to manage and to pay for the management of its business without creditor interference . . . ." (Bankr. Doc. No. 522 p. 2).

The Bankruptcy Court conducted an evidentiary hearing on the Fee Motion and the Deaconess Motion on June 24, 2004 at which Nour was represented by its counsel Stewart Roll. (Bankr. Doc. No. 580, Hearing Transcript p. 3)[3]. At the outset of the hearing, Deaconess, through counsel, conceded that the requested payments to Nour were outside of the ordinary course of business. (Transcript p. 22). While Nour's counsel questioned Dr. Saad at the hearing regarding the identity of and amount of time Nour staff provided services and Dr. Saad's understanding as to whether Nour would be paid, Nour's attorney did not otherwise make any statements or assert any arguments on behalf of Nour. (Transcript pp. 53-57, 130-132). Rather, in response to counsel's questions, Dr. Saad testified that on behalf of Nour he worked eight-ten (8-10) hours a day for Deaconess along with one other full-time employee from Nour. He stated that Nour performed duties that would have been performed by a chief financial officer and that he believed in retaining Nour, he fulfilled his fiduciary duties owed to Deaconess. (Transcript p. 53-57). He further indicated he thought Nour would be paid for the management services it provided to Deaconess. (Transcript p. 130-132).

Dr. Saad was the sole witness to testify at the hearing. At the conclusion of the hearing, the Bankruptcy Court requested the parties to file posthearing briefs on the two dispositive issues addressing 1) the effect of the cash collateral orders and stipulations on the pending requests and 2) the applicable standard under 11 U.S.C. § 363(b). Upon inquiry by Deaconess' counsel, the Bankruptcy Court clarified that the "Debtor is limited at this point to 363(b). That's what was briefed. That was the basis. That's what the parties questioned the witness based on, so that was the Debtor's choice." (Transcript p. 132-143).

At the trial, Nour did not oppose Deaconess' admission that the management fees were outside of the ordinary course of business. Nour did not request authority to brief this issue when the Bankruptcy Court articulated the narrow issue presented as to whether the fees should be approved outside of the ordinary course of business under 11 U.S.C. § 363(b). (Transcript pp. 22, 140-142).

After post-hearing briefs were filed by Nour, Deaconess, the United States Trustee and other objecting parties, the Bankruptcy Court denied Nour's Fee Motion and the Deaconess Motion. The Bankruptcy Court found there was no basis to grant nun pro tunc approval of Nour's fees and determined a sound business reason did not exist for Deaconess to continue utilizing the services of Nour. (Bankr. Doc. No. 589 p. 9-10).

In making its determination, the Bankruptcy Court noted that contracts in which Nour agreed to provide management services to Deaconess were not submitted into evidence, that no party sought to assume any such agreement or retain Nour after the bankruptcy filing, and that there was no "credible evidence to show the terms of such [management] agreements." (Bankr. Doc. No. 589 p. 2-3). The Court found Dr. Saad did not thoroughly investigate other potential management firms and Nour did not demonstrate its rates were reasonable. Stating the cash collateral and financing orders specifically precluded payments to insiders, the Bankruptcy Court discounted Dr. Saad's testimony that he was unaware of such provisions. The Court also determined during the time period in which Nour sought fees, Deaconess had shut down, was not operating, and retained employees to perform necessary administrative tasks. (Bankr. Doc. No. 589, p. 4-5).

In reaching its legal conclusion that the fees were not entitled to retroactive or nunc pro tunc payment as an administrative expense under 11 U.S.C. § 363(b), the Bankruptcy Court recognized the parties agreed the matter at hand was outside of the ordinary course of business.

(Bankr. Doc. No. 589, p. 7). Thus, the issue was whether a sound business reason existed to enter into the agreement with Nour under 11 U.S.C. § 363(b). (Bankr. Doc. No. 589, p. 6-7). The Bankruptcy Court found nunc pro tunc approval of Nour's Fee Motion was not warranted, after considering all the evidence. The Bankruptcy Court emphasized Nour knew it was not being paid for its services and was aware parties questioned the appropriateness of payment of its fees, yet Nour continued to render services. (Bankr. Doc. No. 589, p. 9). The Bankruptcy Court also noted Dr. Saad operated Deaconess and therefore was also aware of these facts. However, Deaconess never sought authorization from the Bankruptcy Court to retain Nour to provide management services to Deaconess. As such, the Bankruptcy Court determined Nour did not establish its fees should be allowed nunc pro tunc. (Bankr. Doc. No. 589 p. 9). The Bankruptcy Court also held that even if nunc pro tunc approval was warranted, Nour did not demonstrate Deaconess "used appropriate business judgment in continuing a relationship with Nour." (Bankr. Doc. No. 589 p. 9). Noting the insider relationship required greater scrutiny of the transaction, the Bankruptcy Court determined Dr. Saad did not sufficiently investigate alternatives to retaining Nour and his testimony did not establish Nour's services benefitted the estate or differed from the fiduciary duties imposed upon a debtor. Id. at 10.

The Bankruptcy Court also denied Deaconess' Motion to retain Nour to provide future services. It emphasized Deaconess and Nour lacked good faith because the limited administrative tasks to be undertaken fell within the fiduciary duties of Deaconess and there was insufficient evidence to show that Nour was the best party to render such services or that its rate was reasonable. (Bankr. Doc. No. 589, p. 11).

Deaconess has not prosecuted its appeal. In prosecution of its cross-appeal, Nour filed its objection to the Bankruptcy Court order on November 27, 2009. On cross-appeal, Nour raises the sole issue that the Bankruptcy Court erred, as a matter of law, because it did not consider the issue of whether the payment of management fees was an ordinary course transaction that did not require Court approval.

Summary of Argument

The Bankruptcy Court order denying Nour's motion for payment of its management fees should be affirmed. First, Nour is foreclosed from arguing the Bankruptcy Court erred in finding that payment of its fees was outside of the ordinary course of business. The record reflects the Bankruptcy Court properly dismissed consideration of whether or not the transaction was in the ordinary course of business because the parties were seeking fees under the statutory provision governing payment outside of the ordinary course of business and presented evidence in accordance with such provision. Moreover, Nour never addressed or raised the issue at trial.

Second, even if Nour is not foreclosed from arguing on appeal that the Bankruptcy Court improperly treated the transaction as outside of the ordinary course of business, the order should be affirmed because the record shows the management agreement was outside of the ordinary course of business and the Court did not err in denying payment after notice and a hearing. A review of the record supports the Bankruptcy Court's conclusion that the provision of purported management services by Nour to Deaconess was outside of the ordinary course of business under the horizontal industry test and vertical creditor expectation test, thereby requiring Court approval. In re Roth American, Inc., 975 F. 2d 949, 953 (3d Cir. 1992).

The Bankruptcy Court also properly concluded extraordinary circumstances did not warrant nunc pro tunc approval of the fees and that the fees incurred by Nour did not meet the standards for approval under 11 U.S.C. § 363(b). This section provides for the allowance of expenses incurred outside of the ordinary course of business, after notice and a hearing, if a sound business purpose exists. In this case, as evidenced by the record, neither Nour or Deaconess demonstrated a sound business reason justifying the retention and payment of Nour or that nunc pro tunc approval of the fees was warranted. In re Stephens Industries, Inc., 789 F. 2d 386 (6th Cir. 1986).

Third, even if the agreement for fees was within the ordinary course of business, court approval of the payment of Nour's fees was still required because secured creditors had a security interest in the funds that were available to pay Nour and they did not consent to such payments. 11 U.S.C. § 363(c)(2). As such, the Bankruptcy Court did not abuse its discretion in refusing to approve the requested fees.

Argument

I. Nour is Foreclosed from Arguing that The Bankruptcy Court Erred by Concluding that the Agreement between Nour and the Debtor was Outside the Ordinary Course of Business.

Nour alleges a single error in this appeal. Nour contends the Bankruptcy Court erred in making its threshold finding that the transaction between the debtor and Nour was one that was outside of the ordinary course of business thereby requiring court approval under 11 U.S.C. §363(b). In fact, the Bankruptcy Court made no such finding. The Bankruptcy Court limited its analysis to whether a sound business reason existed under 11 U.S.C. § 363(b) for approving Nour's fees nunc pro tunc because the parties' briefs, evidence and representations by counsel all indicated that “[t]he parties [agreed] that the transaction at issue is outside of the ordinary course.” (Bankr. Doc. No. 589 p. 7). Since Nour failed to raise the issue of whether the management agreement was a transaction in the ordinary course of business before the Bankruptcy Court, Nour is foreclosed from raising this issue on appeal.

Nour neglects to mention in its brief that the Court analyzed the transaction as one outside of the ordinary course of business because the parties agreed that they were seeking payment outside of the ordinary course of business. Section 363(b) of title 11 provides for the use of property of the estate outside of the ordinary course of business, after a notice and hearing. Section 363(c), by contrast, permits the debtor to enter into transactions in the ordinary course of business without prior notice and hearing.

In their motions filed with the Bankruptcy Court, Neither Nour nor Deaconess requested payment under 11 U.S.C. § 363(c). Nour and Deaconess did not specifically mention that provision in either of their other briefs. In its reply brief, Nour vaguely argues its fees did not need approval referencing cases supporting the proposition that its fees were in the ordinary course of business. (Bankr. Doc. No. 522 p. 2-3). However, at the hearing, counsel representing the Deaconess debtors, confirmed to the Bankruptcy Court that the management agreement between Deaconess and Nour was outside the ordinary course of business and therefore he was seeking payment pursuant to 11 U.S.C. § 363(b). (Transcript p. 22). Counsel for Nour did not take issue with that statement or otherwise indicate to the Bankruptcy Court that Nour was seeking payment under a different statutory provision. Id. At the conclusion of the testimony, the Bankruptcy Court reiterated its understanding that the movants were proceeding solely under section 363(b) and asked the parties to brief the applicability of that provision to the facts of the case. In response, Deaconess' counsel confirmed they were proceeding under 363(b). Again, Nour's counsel remain silent. Counsel representing Nour did not indicate any disagreement with the Bankruptcy Court's understanding of the legal basis of the motions. (Transcript pp. 140-142). Since Nour and the Debtors failed to raise section 363(c) as a basis for payment in the Bankruptcy Court, Nour has forfeited the issue of whether the transaction was in the ordinary course of business on appeal. See U.S. v. Ushery, 968 F. 2d 575, 582 fn. 2 (6th Cir. 1992); Fair Housing of Marin v. Combs, 285 F. 3d 899, 907-908 (9th Cir. 2002); Rainey v. International Harverster Credit Credit Corp., 59 B.R. 987, 989-990 (N.D. Ill. 1986); See also U.S. v. VanAllen, 524 F. 3d 814, 819 (7th Cir. 2008) (criminal defendant failed to preserve issue when did not move for acquittal at end of trial or in post trial brief).

II. This Court Should Affirm the Decision of the Bankruptcy Court Because the Record Evidence Establishes that the Management Agreement was Outside of the Ordinary Course of Business and the Bankruptcy Court Did Not Abuse Its Discretion in Denying Approval of the Payment, after Notice and a Hearing.

Even if Nour had properly moved for payment under § 363(c), asserting that the transaction was within the ordinary course of business, the record supports the Bankruptcy Court's conclusion that the transaction between Nour and Deaconess was outside of the ordinary course of business. Therefore, the order denying payment should be affirmed.[4]

[4] A lower court decision may be affirmed on any ground that is supported by the record. Murphy v. National City Bank, 560 F. 3d 530, 535 (6th Cir. 2009) (dismissal of case affirmed on alternate grounds). On review, an appellate court may affirm a decision on alternate grounds or for other reasons as long as such grounds are supported in the record. See Friends of Tims Ford v. Tennessee Valley Authority, 585 F. 3d 955, 964 fn. 2 (6th Cir. 2009) (reviewing District Court dismissal for lack of standing, appellate court also considered whether statute of limitations barred claim).

A. The Evidence Showed that the Transaction was Outside of the Ordinary Course of Business.

The evidence adduced at trial established the management agreement between Deaconess and Nour was not in the ordinary course of business. The term "ordinary course of business" is not defined by the Bankruptcy Code. Rather, courts apply a two part test to determine whether a transaction is in the ordinary course of business. In re Roth American, Inc., 975 F. 3d 949, 952 (3d Cir. 1992). The two-prong test consists of 1) the horizontal or industry analysis and 2) the vertical or creditor expectation test.

The horizontal test focuses on whether the transaction is typical of companies in the same industry.[5] "The test is whether the post-petition transaction is of a type that other similar businesses would engage in as ordinary business. A transaction occurs in the debtor-in-possession's ordinary course of business when there is a showing that the transaction is the sort occurring in the day-to-day operation of the debtor's business." In re Lodge America, Inc., 259 B.R. 728, 732 (D. Kan. 2001) (debtor's postpetition repayment of loan obtained without authority not in ordinary course of business). Ordinary course generally includes those expenses incurred in daily business operations that are minor in nature. See In re Miller Mining, Inc., 219 B.R. 219, 222-223 (Bankr. N.D. Ohio 1998). The second vertical test looks to whether the "'transaction subjects a creditor to economic risk of a nature different from those he accepted when he decided to extend credit.'" In re Git-N-Go, Inc., 322 B.R. 164, 172 (Bankr. N.D. Okla. 2004) citing In re Roth American, Inc., 975 F. 2d 949, 953 (3d Cir. 1992) (debtor convenient store agreement with Brinks to provide security services was within ordinary course of business).

[5] Nour does not address the horizontal test in its brief but rather, relying on Martino v. First National Bank of Harvey, 186 B.R. 414, 424 (Bankr. N.D. Ill. 1995) argues that it does not apply to the type of transaction at issue. The Martino Court did recognize the widely accepted application of the horizontal test but rejected it in the context of considering whether a postpetition loan arising from overdraft protection extended by a bank was in the ordinary course of business under 11 U.S.C. §364(a). See also In re Hustling Land & Development, Inc., 255 B.R. 772, 778-779 (Bankr. D. Utah 2000). As the cases cited to in this brief show, the horizontal test is applicable to the transaction at hand.

The purpose of allowing ordinary course payments without court approval under Bankruptcy Code Section 363(c) is so that a business in bankruptcy may continue operating its daily business and enter into routine minor business transactions without the need to secure court approval or provide notice to creditors. See In re Miller Mining, 219 B.R. at 222. See also In re Roth American, Inc., 975 F. 2d at 952 (indicating purpose of ordinary course rule in 363 is to provide balance between routine daily business transactions that do not warrant greater scrutiny and those relating to bankruptcy case that affect bankruptcy estate assets). Employees involved in daily business operations that are not involved with and do not affect the administration of the bankruptcy may be hired and paid in the ordinary course of business. See In re CNH, Inc., 304 B.R. 177 (Bankr. N.D. Penn. 2004) (nursing home that hired and paid consultant to formulate and implement nursing policies and employed consultant on dietary, housekeeping and laundry issues acted in ordinary course). As shown in the record, Nour did not establish it met the horizontal industry standard test. At trial, neither Nour nor Deaconess set forth any evidence demonstrating that the industry standard in the hospital business is to retain an outside management firm.[6] (See [6] Testimony was elicited from Dr. Saad regarding typical rates charged by a management firm but not whether it routine for a hospital of comparable size to retain an outside management firm.

Transcript generally and pp. 53-57 and 130-132). The record also shows that immediately after the petition date, Deaconess closed down its normal business operations and was no longer conducting its regular operations. (Transcript p. 36-37.) Thus, even if Nour could establish at trial that it was the industry standard for a comparable hospital to retain and pay an outside management firm, Deaconess was not operating in a manner consistent with the industry standard. Rather it had shut down the hospital and was attempting to liquidate its assets. Accordingly, Nour did not show it met this element of the ordinary course of business test.

Nour also failed to meet the vertical creditor expectation test because Nour had no reasonable basis to believe it would be paid for its services. First, Nour and all of the parties agreed there would be no payments to insiders, including Nour's management fees, without Bankruptcy Court approval. (Bankr. Doc. Nos. 31, para. 11, 32, para. 12, 52, 100, 227, 301, 310, 373, 419, 491). At the hearing on the motions, Deaconess agreed the transaction was outside of the ordinary course of business. Nour never challenged Deaconess' admission or raised this issue at the trial. (See Transcript p. 22). Rather, Deaconess stated it would present evidence relating to the nature of services rendered by Nour, the benefit to the estate and reasonableness of rates, and elicited testimony from its sole witness, Dr. Saad. At trial, Nour followed the lead of Deaconess. (See Transcript at p. 12 and generally). Dr. Saad testified at the hearing that Nour had not been paid for its services by Deaconess since September, 2001 yet Nour continued to render management services to Deaconess.

(Transcript at p. 30, 39).

(Transcript p. 35-36). The unpaid prepetition management fees of Nour were treated as a capital contribution according to Dr. Saad. (Transcript p. 135).

Although Dr. Saad stated Nour would like to be paid for its postpetition services and that he was unaware that Nour would not be paid, Court orders signed by Nour's counsel prohibited such payments without approval. At a minimum, the record shows Nour was aware that there may be a challenge to the payment of its fees. Notwithstanding Nour rendered services from November 21, 2003 (two days before the petition date) through May 7, 2004 without payment. (Transcript pp. 89- 94, 131-133). Based upon these facts, Nour did not establish it met the vertical creditor expectation test and the Bankruptcy Court did not err in determining the transaction between Nour and Deaconess was outside of the ordinary course of business.

B. Nour Failed to Show Extraordinary Circumstances that Would Excuse Its Failure to Seek Prior Approval and Warrant Retroactive Approval of the Management Fees.

The moving parties did not set forth any factual or legal basis for retroactive approval of Nour's fees. Retroactive or nunc pro tunc approval of a transaction may be approved upon a showing of extraordinary circumstances. See In Re Platinum Power Co., 105 B.R. 381 (Bankr. N.D. Ohio 1989) (noting court must weigh whether factors in case sufficiently justify failure to seek prior approval of retention.) See also In re Marion Carefree Limited Partnership, 171 B.R. 584 (Bankr. N.D. Ohio 1994) (denying nunc pro tunc retention of manger); In re E-Tron Corp., 141 B.R. 49, 56-57 (D. N.J. 1992) (finding extraordinary circumstances standard applies to request for nunc pro tunc approval of loan outside ordinary course of business under §364.) Dr. Saad did not testify as to any extraordinary circumstances supporting such relief. Nor did Nour set forth in its pleadings any legal basis or factual support for retroactive approval of its fees. (See Transcript, generally and Bankr. Doc. No. 524, 535). As such, the Bankruptcy Court properly denied nunc pro tunc approval of Nour's fees.

C. The Bankruptcy Court Properly Determined that No Sound Business Reason Supported the Retroactive Payment of Nour's Management Fees Outside of the Ordinary Course of Business under 11 U.S.C. § 363(b).

A transaction outside of the ordinary course of business under 11 U.S.C.§ 363(b) may be approved after notice and a hearing if a sound business purpose exists. In re Stephens Industries, Inc., 789 F. 2d 386 (6th Cir. 1986) (sound business purpose existed warranting sale of substantially all of debtor's assets upon showing of articulated business reason). While this section has been most frequently relied upon to support a sale of assets outside of the ordinary course of business, it is applicable to any use, sale or lease of bankruptcy estate property outside of the ordinary course of business. See 11 U.S.C. § 363(b)(1). Bankruptcy courts have properly relied on this section to allow a debtor to retain consultants who do not otherwise fall within the definition of a bankruptcy professional under 11 U.S.C. § 327 as well as other transactions which are not within the debtor's routine daily business operations. See In re ITG Vegas, Inc., 2007 WL 1087212 (Bankr. S.D. Fla. 20007) (court authorized retention of political consultant providing lobbying services under 363(b)). See also In re Montgomery Ward, 242 B.R. at 147 (sound business purpose existed for approval of employee incentive program).

Courts consider a number of factors in determining if a sound business purpose exists warranting approval of a transaction outside of the ordinary course of business including if 1) a sound business purpose exists; 2) there was sufficient and reasonable notice; 3) the price of the transaction; and 4) whether the parties acted in good faith. See In re Country Manor of Kenton, Inc., 172 B.R. 217, 220-221 (Bankr. N.D. Ohio 1994). The test essentially is a business judgment test and the Bankruptcy Court has broad discretion to determine whether the particular facts of the case favor authorization of the transaction. In re Montgomery Ward, 242 B.R. at 153-155.

Nour, in its appeal, has not challenged the Bankruptcy Court's determination that Nour did not prove a sound business purpose existed supporting payment of its fees or that retroactive approval of its fees was not warranted. The Bankruptcy Court properly made this determination. In this case, neither Nour nor Deaconess demonstrated that a sound business purpose supported its retention. The parties also failed to show that retroactive approval of its fees was warranted. At trial, Dr. Saad acknowledged he was the sole owner of Nour as well as the sole owner and chief executive officer of Deaconess. He admitted he had fiduciary duties to the Deaconess debtors. (Transcript at 24-26). While he testified that, after the bankruptcy filing, he discussed with Deaconess' counsel alternatives to hiring Nour, Dr. Saad indicated he did not investigate or consider other management firms on or after the petition date. Rather, he stated that he thought Nour's fees would be less than an "outside firm." (Transcript at 38-40, 99, 125).

According to Dr. Saad, Nour provided services at the request of Deaconess. (Transcript at 41). Dr. Saad stated that Deaconess continued to employ a number of people after it closed its operations. He also stated that other than himself the employees of Nour did not have health care experience and that one other person from Nour, Jennie Gilchrist, provided full-time services to Deaconess. (Transcript at 47-49, 54). On cross examination, Dr. Saad testified that Nour's services were distinct from his duties as chief executive officer. However, upon detailed questioning as to what duties were performed by Nour as opposed to the services performed by Deaconess employees or Dr. Saad as chief executive officer, Dr. Saad did not clearly distinguish the services rendered by Nour. (Transcript p. 60-73, 78-89, 113-115).

Nour's insider status, along with the lack of evidence showing Deaconess considered other management firms, and the failure of Nour or Deaconess to establish the services rendered by Nour were distinct from those provided by Deaconess' personnel and different from the fiduciary duties of Dr. Saad as chief executive officer show that a sound business purpose did not support the retention of Nour.

III. Even if the Payments Sought Were in the Ordinary Course of Business, Court-Approval Was Still Required Because the Secured Creditors did not Consent to the Payments.

Even if Nour were able to show both that it is not precluded from arguing the payments under the management agreement were in the ordinary course of business and that the evidence supported a finding that the payments were in the ordinary course of business, the order of the Bankruptcy Court should still be affirmed. That is because, although § 363(c)(1) authorizes a debtor-in-possession[7] to enter into transactions and use property of the estate in the ordinary course of business without a notice or a hearing, § 363(c)(2) places certain restraints on the use of cash collateral under 363(c)(1). Specifically, subsection 363(c)(2) states that: "[t]he [debtor-in-possession] may not use, sell, or lease cash collateral under paragraph [363(c)(1)] unless–(A) each entity that has an interest in such cash collateral consents; or (B) the court, after notice and a hearing, authorizes such use, sale, or lease in accordance with the provisions of this section." 11 U.S.C.§ 363(c)(2). That means that under section 363(c)(2), unless the debtor obtains the consent of the secured parties to use cash collateral to make payments, the debtor must obtain court approval to make such payments even in the ordinary course of business.

[7] A debtor-in-possession has all of the rights of a trustee under 11 U.S.C. § 1107(a).

In this case, Deaconess did not produce any evidence that the secured creditors, Bank One, N.A. and GE HFS Holdings, Inc. consented to the use of the cash collateral to pay Nour for its managements services. To the contrary, both of those parties consistently objected to such payments. (Bankr. Doc. Nos. 31, 32, 52, 100, 227, 301, 310, 373, 419, 493, 508, 520, 532). They objected in the cash collateral orders and stipulations, and they specifically objected in response to the motions of Nour and Deaconess for payment. In the absence of such consent, the approval of the Bankruptcy Court was required to make payments to Nour under the management agreement. As shown above, the Bankruptcy Court did not err in declining to approve the payments. Moreover, Nour has not challenged the findings of the Bankruptcy Court that nunc pro tunc relief was not warranted and that the Deaconess debtors failed to prove that they used appropriate business judgment in continuing the relationship with Nour. Therefore, regardless of whether the postpetition business relationship between the Deaconess and Nour was in the ordinary course of business, the Bankruptcy Court did not abuse its discretion in refusing to approve the requested payments to Nour. Accordingly, this Court should affirm the decision of the Bankruptcy Court.

Conclusion

Based upon the foregoing, the United States Trustee respectfully requests this Court to affirm the Bankruptcy Court order denying the Motion of Nour's Management Company for Fees for Management Services.

JURISDICTIONAL STATEMENT

The United States Bankruptcy Court for the District of Montana has jurisdiction over the underlying case, initiated by Wendell A. Deadmond, Jr. and Renae A. Deadmond on June 29, 2006, by their filing of a voluntary petition under chapter 7 of the Bankruptcy Code,[1] 11 U.S.C. §§ 101, et seq. See also 28 U.S.C. §§ 157(b), 1334(a).

On February 27, 2007, the bankruptcy court denied the United States Trustee's motion to dismiss the bankruptcy case under 11 U.S.C. § 707(b)(1) for abuse. This appeal is taken from a final order that court entered on February 27, 2007, denying the United States Trustee's motion. The United States Trustee filed a timely notice of appeal from that order under 28 U.S.C. § 158(c)(2) and Fed. R. Bankr. P. 8002(a) on March 8, 2007.[2] This Court has jurisdiction over this appeal under 28 U.S.C. § 158(a)(1).

STATEMENT OF THE ISSUES

The United States Trustee sought dismissal of these Debtors’ chapter 7 case alleging that it was an abuse of chapter 7 based upon the monthly disposable income calculation under the means test in 11 U.S.C. § 707(b)(2).

The issue presented to this Court for determination is whether the court below erred by ruling as a matter of law that the Debtors could claim an "automobile ownership expense” for debt financing that took the Debtors outside § 707(b)(2)’s statutory means test even though these Debtors had no “automobile ownership expense” because they owned their cars debt-free.

Should this Court determine the court below erred, this Court should reverse and remand for adjudication of the motion to dismiss on its merits.

STANDARD OF REVIEW

The bankruptcy court's findings on questions of law are reviewed de novo. In re Emery, 317 F.3d 1064, 1069 (9th Cir. 2003) (citing In re Allen, 300 F.3d 1055, 1058 (9th Cir. 2002)).

Whether the bankruptcy court properly allowed Debtors to deduct an ownership expense under the means test when they had no loan or lease payments is a question of law and is therefore subject to de novo review.

STATEMENT OF THE CASE

On June 29, 2006, Wendell A. Deadmond, Jr. and Renae A. Deadmond (the "Debtors") filed a petition for relief under chapter 7 of the Bankruptcy Code. On September 22, 2006, the United States Trustee filed a motion to dismiss the case under 11 U.S.C. § 707(b), asserting that it would be an abuse of chapter 7 to grant the Debtors a discharge.

The United States Trustee's motion was based in part on the statutory presumption, codified under 11 U.S.C. § 707(b)(2), that granting the Debtors a chapter 7 discharge is an abuse of chapter 7 of the Bankruptcy Code when the Debtors have sufficient disposable income to repay their unsecured creditors at least $166.67 per month. In particular, the United States Trustee argued that under the objective formula used to determine whether a chapter 7 debtor has an ability to pay and the bankruptcy case therefore is presumptively abusive, the Debtors could not qualify for an expense allowance for vehicles referred to as vehicle "ownership costs" under the Local Standards issued by the Internal Revenue Service. This expense standard, the United States Trustee asserted, does not apply to the Debtors who are not making monthly loan or lease payments because they own their vehicles free and clear.

On February 27, 2007, after an evidentiary hearing, the bankruptcy court denied the United States Trustee's motion to dismiss the case, concluding, consistent with the court's prior decision in an earlier chapter 13 case, In re Naslund, ___ B.R. ___, 2006 WL 4038608 (Bankr. D. Mont. November 16, 2006), that 11 U.S.C. § 707(b)(2)(A)(ii) authorized all debtors who own a vehicle, including the Debtors, to reduce their current monthly income by the IRS Local Transportation Expense Standard that the IRS allows for vehicle financing costs. As a consequence of allowing this deduction, the bankruptcy court held that the presumption of abuse did not arise. The United States Trustee timely filed this appeal.

STATEMENT OF THE FACTS

I. Statutory Framework

On October 17, 2005, most provisions of the Bankruptcy Abuse Prevention and Consumer Protection Act of 2005 (the "BAPCPA"), S. 256, Pub. L. No. 109-8, 119 Stat. 23, took effect, implementing significant changes to the Bankruptcy Code. As part of this effort, Congress amended § 707(b) of the Bankruptcy Code, which governs dismissal of chapter 7 bankruptcy cases. Analysis of the means test, as contained within section 707(b)(2), is underpinned by Congress' general goal behind the complete overhaul of §707(b), ensuring "that those who can afford to repay some portion of their unsecured debts be required to do so...". 151 CONG. REC. S2470 (March 10, 2005).

As it existed prior to BAPCPA, § 707(b) only authorized dismissal based on a finding that allowing the debtor relief constituted a "substantial abuse" of chapter 7. Further, § 707(b) prior to its amendment by BAPCPA required courts to presume that a debtor was entitled to relief under chapter 7 of the Bankruptcy Code. Section 707(b) now authorizes dismissal where the court finds that the granting of relief would be an "abuse" of chapter 7. As amended by the BAPCPA, § 707(b)(2) repealed the former presumption and replaced it with a new presumption: a case is an "abuse" of chapter 7 if a detailed mathematical formula set out in the statute, commonly referred to as the "means test," yields a minimum amount of monthly disposable income.

The means test uses a series of calculations to determine whether the § 707(b)(2) presumption of abuse arises. See 11 U.S.C. § 707(b)(2)(A). Specifically, the means test calculates a debtor's current monthly income, as defined under 11 U.S.C. § 101(10A) (hereafter "CMI"), based on the debtor's average income for the six calendar months preceding the month of the bankruptcy filing. If the debtor's CMI is above the applicable state median family income, as is the case here, 11 U.S.C. § 707(b)(2)(A) calculates the debtor's monthly disposable income available to repay creditors by reducing the CMI by certain categories of expenses identified in 11 U.S.C. § 707(b)(2)(A)(ii), (iii), and (iv). If a debtor's monthly disposable income, calculated by reducing the CMI by allowed expenses under 11 U.S.C. § 707(b)(2)(A)(ii) - (iv), is less than $100 per month (or $6,000 over 60 months), the presumption of abuse does not arise. 11 U.S.C. § 707(b)(2)(A)(I).[3] If the debtor's monthly disposable income is equal to or exceeds $167 per month (or $10,000 over 60 months), the presumption of abuse does arise. Id. If the debtor's monthly disposable income is between $100 and $167 per month (between $6,000 and $10,000 over 60 months), the presumption of abuse arises if the disposable income, over 60 months, is sufficient to pay 25 percent of the debtor's nonpriority unsecured debt. Id.

If the presumption of abuse arises under § 707(b)(2) based on the means test, the debtor may attempt to rebut the presumption under 11 U.S.C. § 707(b)(2)(B) by demonstrating special circumstances that justify income or expense adjustments for which there is no reasonable alternative.

Each debtor with primarily consumer debts is required to file, in conjunction with his or her bankruptcy schedules and statement of financial affairs, a Statement of Current Monthly Income and Means Test Calculation, Official Form 22A of the Federal Rules of Bankruptcy

[3] Pursuant to 11 U.S.C. §104, the dollar amounts set forth in Title 11 and applicable to the threshold amounts for determining when the presumption of abuse arises under the means test will be adjusted based on the consumer price index for cases filed on or after April 1, 2007. This case is not subject to the dollar amount adjustments.

Procedure ("Form 22A"). 11 U.S.C. § 521 and §707(b)(2)(C). In Chapter 7 cases the main purpose of the Form 22A is to calculate monthly disposable income (ability to pay) following the formula set forth in 11 U.S.C. § 707(b)(2), and determine whether the presumption of abuse arises.

II. Factual Background

The Debtors filed a Form 22A with the petition commencing their case on June 29, 2006. (R-B) Because their "Annualized Current Monthly Income", on line 13 exceeded the applicable state median income for their household size, the Debtors completed the form to calculate monthly disposable income. The result of the Debtors' calculation was monthly disposable income of $114.23 and 60-month disposable income of $6,853.80. (R-B, lines 50 and 51) Because this latter amount is less than one quarter of their total non-priority unsecured debt, the Debtors checked the box at the top of the first page of the Form 22A indicating that the presumption of abuse did not arise.

The Debtors own a 1995 Dodge Ram and a 1983 GMC Suburban (R-A, Schedule B). The Debtors have no debts secured by the vehicles (R-A, Schedule D), and that they make no installment payments associated with them (R-A, Schedule J). On line 22 of the Form B22A the Debtors included a deduction of $420 for "transportation; vehicle operation" expense.(R-B) This expense amount, for two or more vehicles, is taken from the IRS Transportation Standards, Operating Costs and Public Transportation Costs, published by the IRS. On lines 23 and 24 of the Form B22A, the Debtors took deductions of $471 and $332, respectively, for "transportation ownership/lease expense." (R-B). This expense amount is taken from the IRS Transportation Standards, Ownership Costs, published by the IRS.

The United States Trustee recalculated the Debtors' monthly disposable income by: (a) eliminating the $471 and $332 deductions on lines 23 and 24; (b) allowing the Debtors an additional transportation vehicle operating expense totaling $400 on account of the age of the two vehicles;[4] (c) adding a deduction of $57.22 for "payment on priority claims"[5]; and (c) deducting $40.94 for "Chapter 13 administrative expenses" at line 45. (R-C) Under the United States Trustee's calculations, the Debtors' monthly disposable income was $419.07, which when multiplied by 60 months, substantially exceeds $10,000 and the presumption of abuse therefore arose.

Subsequent to the filing of the United States Trustee's motion to dismiss, the Debtors filed several amended 22A forms. The final one, and the one utilized by the bankruptcy court in determining whether the presumption of abuse arose, was filed by the Debtors on December 15, 2006 (R-D). That Form 22A differed from the means test prepared by the United States Trustee in the following respects: (a) it reduced line 20B from $8.47 to $0[6]; (b) it added the amount of $310.32 at line 21 for a claimed adjustment to the IRS standard deduction for housing and

[4] The United States Trustee allows an additional $200 operating expense under the means test for each debtor who owns a vehicle that is six year old or older or with more than 75,000 miles, in conformity with the Internal Revenue Manual which allows such an additional vehicle operating expense. See Internal Revenue Manual, Part 5, (entitled Collecting Process), Chapter 8 § 5.8.5.5.2, Treatment of Non-Business Transportation Expenses, which may be found at the IRS website at http://www.irs.gov/irm/part5/ch08s05.html.

[5] The Debtors scheduled $3,433 of priority claims on Schedule E but did not take the appropriate deduction ($3,433 divided by 60) on their Form B22A, line 44.

[6] A debtor is allowed to deduct the greater of the allowable IRS mortgage/rent expense and the debtor's actual average mortgage/rent expense payable in the 60 months following the filing of the case. If the actual average expense is greater than the IRS allowance, line 20B is $0 and the full amount is deducted at line 42 of the Form B22A. Debtor Wendell A. Deadmond, Jr. testified that the Debtors' mortgage payment had increased to $833.32 as a result of a change in the escrow amount for taxes and insurance. (R-F) utilities; (c) it continued to claim transportation ownership expenses of $471 and $332 on lines 22 and 23, respectively; (d) it reduced the line 32 telecommunications expense from $161 to $106; (e) it added a deduction of $37 at line 39 for "Additional food and clothing expense"; and (f) increased line 42 to $833.32 to reflect the increase in the mortgage payment. As a result the Debtors claimed that their monthly disposable income was a negative $270.63.[7] (R-D, line 50)

The bankruptcy court found that the Debtors had failed to provide any justification for the claimed $310.32 adjustment to the deduction for housing and utilities.(R-E, page 9) But the court determined that without this deduction and the claimed deduction of $37 for additional food and clothing expense, the Debtors' monthly disposable income would be $76.69, making their 60-month disposable income $4,601.40, below the threshold for the presumption of abuse under § 707(b)(2). (R-E, page 10)

If $403 - the difference between the $803 of vehicle ownership expense claimed by the Debtors and the $400 asserted by the United States Trustee to be allowable based on the age of Debtors' vehicles - is added to $76.69, the Debtors' monthly disposable income rises to $437.[8] Because this greater than $167, the presumption of abuse would arise under §707(b)(2).

SUMMARY OF THE ARGUMENT

The court below erred in denying the United States Trustee's motion to dismiss this bankruptcy case under 11 U.S.C. § 707(b)(2). Under § 707(b)(2), a debtor's case is presumed

[7] The Debtors also claimed monthly expenses totaling $533 on line 56 which allows a debtor to list expenses the debtor contends should be additional deductions from CMI under 11 U.S.C. § 707(b)(2)(A)(ii)(I). The bankruptcy court did not address the issue of whether the Debtors are entitled to take these deductions in calculating monthly disposable income.

[8] This amount reflects a deduction from $479.69 ($76.69 + $403) of hypothetical chapter 13 administrative expenses which are deductible at line 45 of the B22A. In chapter 13 cases filed in Montana the applicable trustee's fee was 8.9 percent of the amount of payments made under a chapter 13 plan in cases filed before April 1, 2007.

abusive as a matter of law and must be dismissed absent special circumstances if the debtor fails § 707(b)(2)'s statutory "means test." Here the Debtors would have failed the means test but for the bankruptcy court's legal ruling, based on its earlier decision in In re Naslund, that the Debtors could claim an "automobile ownership expense" for vehicle debt financing even though the Debtors had no vehicle financing expense because they owned their vehicles debt-free.

The bankruptcy court erred as a matter of law by misinterpreting the automobile debt financing allowance. In its application of the means test, the bankruptcy court interpreted §707(b)(2) to allow the Debtors to subtract expenses that they do not incur on a monthly basis. Even though the Debtors do not make monthly payments to purchase or lease a car, the bankruptcy court ruled that in addition to a monthly car operating expenses allowance of $420, the Debtors were also entitled to subtract a monthly expense of $471 for car one and $332 for car two (totaling $803) in calculating Debtors' monthly disposable income. These additional expenses correspondingly reduced the Debtors' monthly disposable income under the means test by $403.[9] Allowing the Debtors to subtract ownership costs even though they have no applicable vehicle financing expenses stands the means test on its head, eliminating disposable income otherwise reported on Official Form 22A and available to repay creditors.

After disallowing a car financing expense the Debtors do not actually incur, the Debtors' monthly disposable income under the means test is $437 which is well above the $166.67 threshold amount, and the presumption of abuse arises. This case must therefore be remanded to the bankruptcy court for further evidentiary proceedings in accordance with § 707(b)(2), including allowing debtors an opportunity to try and rebut the presumption by demonstrating that special circumstances exist that justify an income or expense adjustment and regarding which they have no alternative.[10]

ARGUMENT

The court below allowed the Debtors to reduce their current monthly income by the IRS Standard for vehicle financing costs for two vehicles, a total of $803 (or $403 if the Court would have allowed an additional $200 per vehicle operating expense), even though they have no monthly loan or lease payment obligation associated with their vehicles. That ruling merits reversal because it misreads 11 U.S.C. § 707(b)(2)(A)(ii)(I), and deviates from longstanding Internal Revenue Service practice.

Section 707(b)(2) of Title 11 does not allow debtors like the Deadmonds, who have no monthly loan or lease payments, to claim an IRS local standard vehicle acquisition expense.

A. 11 U.S.C. § 707(b)(2) limits the IRS local standards, including the local standard referred to as vehicle ownership expense, to debtors for whom the expense is "applicable."

Section 707(b)(2)(A)(ii)(I) of the Bankruptcy Code provides that a debtor's monthly expenses "shall be the debtor's applicable monthly expense amounts specified under the . . . Local Standards . . . issued by the Internal Revenue Service." 11 U.S.C. § 707(b)(2)(A)(ii)(I) (emphasis added). The statute thus specifically provides that before the specific IRS expense amounts may be included in the debtor's allowed monthly expenses, the expense itself must first be applicable to the debtor. The court below, in its Naslund decision, which was followed without discussion in this case, erred in concluding that the term "applicable" in §707(b)(2)(A)(ii) merely "references the National and Local Standards that apply to a particular debtor as determined by the debtor's family size and place of residence." ___ B.R. ___, 2006 WL 4038608, *10.

[10] If this Court reverses the order entered below and remands for further proceedings, the debtor could ask the lower court on remand to determine whether special circumstances exist that justify an expense adjustment that rebuts the presumption of abuse. See, e.g. In re Tranmer, 355 B.R. 234, 251-52 (Bankr. D.Mont. 2006)(special circumstances denied); In re Pederson, ___ B.R. ___, 2006 WL 3000104, at *3-4 (Bankr. N.D. Iowa 2006)(special circumstance allowed).

The Bankruptcy Code does not define the word "applicable." Nor has the United States Trustee identified any Supreme Court or 9th Circuit Court of Appeals decision that provides a definition. But the Seventh Circuit has made clear that "'Applicable' is a protean word that takes color from context; it lacks a single enduring meaning." Sierra Club v. Environmental Protection Agency, 375 F.3d 537, 541 (7th Cir. 2004). The dictionary defines "applicable" similarly: applying or capable of being applied; relevant; suitable; appropriate. Random House Unabridged Dictionary (2006).

The United States Trustee's construction of "applicable" in section 707(b)(2)(A)(ii)(I) comports with its use in the context of BAPCPA and with its dictionary definition. By using the word "applicable" in section 707(b)(2)(A)(ii)(I), Congress limited eligibility for expenses under the Local Standards to debtors for whom the expenses actually apply. In re Devilliers, ___ B.R. ___, 2007 WL 92504, *6 (Bankr. E.D. La. January 9, 2007). Only after "a determination is made as to the type of expenses allowed and applicable to the debtor" may the debtor claim the amount set forth under the IRS Local Transportation Standards. Id.; see also In re Wiggs, ___ B.R. ___, 2006 WL 2246432, *2-3 (Bankr. N.D. Ill. 2006) (in applying Section 707(b)(2)(A)(ii)(I) in context of Section 1325, court finds that the statute is "clear and unambiguous," and that the "term 'applicable' modifies the amounts specified to limit the expenses to only those that apply," such that debtors were not allowed to include the standard ownership expense for transportation ownership when they did not have a payment on the vehicle). Accord, In re Demonica, 345 B.R. 895, 904 (Bankr. N.D. Ill. 2006).[11]

Given that these debtors had no ownership or lease payments on their cars, the IRS Ownership Cost Standard was not applicable to them. By excluding that inapplicable expense, the court below improperly determined that the presumption of abuse did not arise. The order entered below should be reversed and this case remanded for further proceedings in light of the presumption of abuse under §707(b)(2).

B. The Internal Revenue Service's application of its own local standard for vehicle acquisition costs, and interpretive case law, support the United States Trustee's reading of 11 U.S.C. § 707(b)(2)(A)(ii)(I).

Construing the word "applicable" in the IRS Standards like the United States Trustee does draws substantial support from the Internal Revenue Service's longstanding application of the IRS Standards. When Congress developed the means test, it "could have started from scratch, and created a system that was rigid but easy to administer, such as how many view workers' compensation or social security schemes." In re Slusher, ___ B.R. ___, 2007 WL 118009, *12 (Bankr. D. Nev. January 17, 2007). Instead, Congress "incorporated into the Bankruptcy Code an existing, administrative system that the IRS had long had in place." Id. This incorporation "strongly suggests that courts should look to how the IRS determined those standards; that is, as to how the IRS would have applied them in similar circumstances." Id. at *14. Thus, "if guidance is sought on the meaning of the IRS standards Congress incorporated into the Bankruptcy Code, practical reason would suggest that court should consider the full manner by which the IRS uses these standards." Id.

[11] Demonica is relied on by the bankruptcy court in In re Fowler, 349 B.R. 414 (Bankr. D. Del. 2006), a case that is cited by the court below in its In re Naslund decision. The Fowler court misconstrues In re Demonica. In fact, In re Demonica, like the In re Wiggs decision, held that a loan or lease payment was required in order to qualify for the IRS Transportation Ownership Expense Standard. The Demonica court allowed the debtor to take an expense adjustment because the debtor in that case established that he actually made payments on the vehicle at issue, even though he did not have a contractual liability on the vehicle loan. In re Demonica, 345 B.R. at 905.

The legislative history of the Bankruptcy Abuse Prevention and Consumer Protection Act of 2005 supports the conclusion that Congress intended for the IRS Standard to govern here. The House Report accompanying the 2005 Act provided that "[i]n addition to other specified expenses, the debtor's monthly expenses – exclusive of any payments for debts (unless otherwise permitted) – must be the applicable monthly amounts set forth in the Internal Revenue Service Financial Analysis Handbook as Necessary Expenses under the National and Local Standards categories...." H.R. Rep. No. 109-31(I), at 99-100 (2005).

Considering IRS practice in interpreting "applicable" expenses in section 707(b)(2)(A)(ii)(I) does not negate the section's later allowance of "actual" monthly expenses in the IRS categories of Other Necessary Expenses. Rather, "a natural reading" of Section 707(b)(2)(A)(ii)(I) indicates that the words "actual" and "applicable" limit the relevant expense deductions in different ways. In re Slusher, ___ B. R. ___, 2006 WL 118009 at *13. "Had Congress intended to indiscriminately allow all expense amounts specified in the National and Local Standards, it would have written section 707(b)(2)(A)(ii)(I) to read, 'The debtor's monthly expenses shall be the monthly amounts specified under the National Standards and Local Standards . . .' rather than 'The debtor's monthly expenses shall be the debtor's applicable monthly expenses amounts specified under the National and Local Standards.'" In re Slusher, 2007 WL 118009, *13 (Bankr. D. Nev. January 17, 2007) (emphasis in original). Given the IRS' historic application of its National Standards and Local Standards up to the time of BAPCPA's enactment, "it would be quite odd if Congress intended to preclude courts from examining the context in which the authoring agency, the IRS, used and employed those standards." Id. Nothing compels such an odd reading, and the court below erred by interpreting the term contrary to the IRS.

The IRS' construction fully supports the United States Trustee's construction of the term "applicable". On page two of its Collection Financial Standards under the heading "Transportation" the IRS provides as follows:

> The transportation standards consist of nationwide figures for monthly loan or lease payments referred to as ownership costs, and additional amounts for monthly operating costs . . . . The ownership costs provide maximum allowances for the lease or purchase of up to two automobiles if allowed as a necessary expense . . . . If a taxpayer has a car payment, the allowable ownership cost added to the allowable operating cost equals the allowable transportation expense. If a taxpayer has no car payment, or no car, the operating costs portion of the transportation standard is used to come up with the allowable transportation expense.

See IRS Collection Standards (emphasis added), available at ww.irs.gov/individuals /article/0,,id=96543,00.html; see also Internal Revenue Manual, Financial Analysis Handbook, Pt. 5, ch. 15, § 5.15.1.7(4.B), available at www.irs.gov/irm/part5/ch15s01.html.

Thus, according to the IRS, if the debtor does not have a loan or lease payment obligation, then the Local Standard referred to as vehicle ownership costs is not "applicable." If the debtor's vehicle is subject to a monthly loan or lease payment obligation, however, then in addition to the vehicle "operating cost" expense, the "ownership cost" is also "applicable," and shall be the dollar amount specified by the IRS. This application of the means test is supported by the significant weight of bankruptcy court authority.[12]

In addition to the IRS Collection Financial Standards themselves, the IRS also publishes guidelines, including the Internal Revenue Manual. Those support a reading of Section 707(b)(2)(A)(ii)(I) that requires debtors to have an actual loan or lease payment obligation on a vehicle before the Local Standard referred to as ownership expense "applies." Recent revisions to the Collection Financial Standards also make clear that the "ownership cost" is calculated by the IRS based on the "five-year average of new and used car financing data compiled by the Federal Reserve Board of Governors." See IRS Collection Financial Standards, supra (emphasis added). As such, the "ownership cost" is intended to account for the reasonable expense of financing a vehicle over five years and is inapplicable if a debtor has no such acquisition financing expense. See In re Devilliers, 2007 WL 92504, *10 (Bankr. E.D. La. Jan. 9, 2007) (The ownership allowance "is not the equivalent of an allowance for depreciation or an invitation for a debtor to 'save' for the ultimate replacement of an existing vehicle. Instead, the deduction is designed to assist with the acquisition of a vehicle on credit.").

Accordingly, guidance in applying its expense standards published by the IRS makes clear that the vehicle "ownership cost" portion of the Local Transportation Standards is intended to apply only in situations where the debtor has a monthly vehicle acquisition financing expense, i.e., has a monthly vehicle lease or loan payment. Cf. McGuire, 342 B.R. at 613 ("Thus, if a debtor is not incurring expenses for the purchase or lease of a vehicle, the debtor cannot claim a vehicle ownership expense under the IRS standards.") CONCLUSION

For these reasons, the United States Trustee respectfully asks this Court to reverse the February 27, 2007 Order entered by the bankruptcy court denying the United States Trustee's motion to dismiss, and remand this case to the bankruptcy court for further proceedings.

ARGUMENT

This appeal presents a question of law involving the Bankruptcy Abuse Prevention and Consumer Protection Act of 2005's amendments to the Bankruptcy Code. In the context of calculating disposable income under section 707(b)(2)’s means test, this Court must determine whether the Bankruptcy Code allows debtors, as a matter of law, to deduct an expense for financing the purchase or lease of a vehicle even though they have no such expense.

In our opening brief, we established that section 707(b)(2)(A)(ii)(I)’s allowance of “applicable” expenses makes the determination of allowable expenses under the IRS Local Standards a two step process. Opening Br. at 12-13. The first step is eligibility. Does the debtor qualify for the expense allowance in the category at issue? If so, then the second step is to quantify the expense amount. A debtor eligible for the vehicle acquisition expense, i.e., one who has a vehicle loan or lease payment on the date of bankruptcy filing, is allowed to deduct standard amounts that are specified in the IRS Standards based on the number of vehicles the debtor owns or leases and which are subject to a loan or lease payment.

I. The United States Trustee’s Interpretation of 11 U.S.C. § 707(b)(2)(A)(ii)(I) Gives Meaning to the Word “Applicable”, but Does Not Render the Terms “Applicable” and “Actual” Incompatible.

The Deadmonds argue that the plain language of section 707(b)(2)(A)(ii)(I) allows all debtors who simply own a vehicle to claim both the transportation operating expense and the transportation ownership expense categories under the IRS Local Standards. Appellees’ Br. at 4-5. To reach this conclusion, the Deadmonds posit that there is “no basis in the statutory language...for treating ownership costs differently from all other expense categories covered by the National and Local Standards.” Appellees’ Br. at 5. This analysis is flawed because it fails to give proper meaning to the word “applicable” in the context of section 707(b)(2)(A)(ii)(I).

A better reading of the statute, and the one adopted by the only United States District Court to decide the issue to date, allows debtors to deduct vehicle ownership expenses under the IRS Local Standards only if the debtor had a loan or lease on the date of filing. In re Ross-Tousey, Case No. 07-C-65, 2007 WL 1466647 at *3 (E.D. Wis. May 21, 2007). “Applicable” simply means that when a debtor has an automobile loan or lease payment, the deduction is not based on that actual monthly payment amount but on the allowance amount specified in the IRS Standards. Id. Section 707(b)(2)(A)(ii)(I) thus allows “applicable” monthly expense amounts specified under the IRS Local and National Standards, and “actual” monthly expense amounts for categories of “Other Necessary Expenses” issued by the IRS. Id. at *4.

The Deadmonds allege that the United States Trustee treats section 707(b)(2)(A)(ii)(I) as “a cap on the actual expenses of the Debtors” rather than an expense allowance. Appellees’ Br. at 6. The Deadmonds misstate the United States Trustee’s position. As outlined above and in our Opening Brief, in the context of section 707(b)(2)(A)(ii)(I) there is an initial eligibility predicate. If the debtor has a vehicle loan or lease payment, then the expense applies and the statute mandates that debtor is allowed the expense amount provided in the Local Standard regardless whether debtor’s monthly loan or lease payment is less than the Local Standard. This allowance is subject to the expense amount not being double deducted when considering debtor’s secured debt payments on the means test Official Form 22A, Line 42. See, e.g., In re Hardacre, 338 B.R. 718, 727 (Bankr. N.D. Tex. 2006).

Here, because the Deadmonds had no automobile loan or lease payment on the date of filing the vehicle ownership expense was not applicable to them, and the vehicle ownership expense claimed by the Deadmonds must be excluded. The bankruptcy court's determination to the contrary should be reversed.

II. Denying Vehicle Ownership Expenses to Debtors Who Own Their Vehicles Free and Clear is Neither Arbitrary Nor Unfair, and Does Not Unfairly Discriminate Against Debtors.

In their Response Brief, the Deadmonds assert that allowing a vehicle ownership expense on the means test to every debtor who owns a car regardless of whether the debtor incurs such a cost "furthers the reasonable public policy objectives of Congress by acknowledging that older cars are more likely to need major repairs or replacement, by avoiding arbitrary distinctions between debtors, and by eliminating unfair bias against the poorest debtors." Appellees' Br. at 8. However, there is nothing in section 707(b)(2)(A)(ii)(I) or the legislative history thereto to support the assertion that Congress intended to allow ownership costs to be a substitute or supplement for operating costs for vehicles owned free and clear of liens or leases. See In re Devilliers, 358 B.R. 849, 864 (Bankr. E.D. La. 2007) (The ownership allowance "is not the equivalent of an allowance for depreciation or an invitation for a debtor to 'save' for the ultimate replacement of an existing vehicle. Instead, the deduction is designed to assist with the acquisition of a vehicle on credit."). Rather, and as we stated in our opening brief, on remand the Deadmonds will have the opportunity to show special circumstances under section 707(b)(2)(B) which justifies an adjustment relating to their motor vehicle expenses that rebuts the presumption of abuse under section 707(b)(2). See Opening Br. at 11.

The Deadmonds also suggest that limiting the vehicle ownership expense allowance to debtors with loan or lease payments will unfairly prejudice some debtors. Appellees' Br. at 8-9. The Deadmonds outline a scenario where a debtor has only one payment remaining on their vehicle on the date of filing yet still can claim an ownership deduction. Id. However, the debtor in this hypothetical stands a strong likelihood of having her case dismissed as an abuse under section 707(b)(3) based on the totality of the circumstances of this debtor's financial situation. The fact that this hypothetical debtor only has one car payment post-petition is a circumstance that would most likely suggest an ability to pay her unsecured debt at a level that demonstrates abuse. Where the presumption of abuse does not arise under section 707(b)(2), "the court must then consider a debtor's actual income and expenses in determining abuse based on ability to pay under section 707(b)(1) and (3)." In re Mestemaker, 359 B.R. 849, 854 (Bankr. N.D. Ohio 2007); accord In re Haar, 360 B.R. 759, 761, 765 (Bankr. N.D. Ohio 2007) (section 707(b)(3) is "completely independent from § 707(b)(2)," providing "an independent basis to dismiss a case for abuse"). In short, while debtors make decisions regarding their financial circumstances, such as the timing of a vehicle acquisition on credit, the Bankruptcy Code scrutinizes the appropriateness of these financial decisions for all debtors both through the "means test" under Section 707(b)(2) and the "totality of the circumstances" under Section 707(b)(3).

Finally, the Deadmonds argue that the means test discriminates against the "poorest of debtors" and those debtors who will need to acquire a vehicle during the term of a Chapter 13 plan. Appellees' Br. at 9-10. Importantly, the means test does not apply to the vast majority of debtors[1] whose income is below the median income for the household size of the debtor in the state in which the debtor resides at the time of filing. 11 U.S.C. Section 707(b)(7). Thus, "the poorest of debtors" are never subject to the means test. Moreover, debtors in chapter 13 are not "locked in" to a level payment for the life of the plan, and may modify the plan under appropriate circumstances to account for additional expenses such as may be associated with the acquisition of a motor vehicle. See 11 U.S.C. Section 1329(a); In re Slusher, 359 B.R. 290 , 304 (Bankr.D.Nev. 2007)(section 1329(a) allows "party to seek modification of the chapter 13 plan after confirmation but 'before the completion of [plan] payments'"); In re Nalls, 2007 WL 988039, *3 (Bankr. N.D.Ala., April 2, 2007)(confirmed plan may be modified where changed circumstances exist).

[1] The United States Trustee Program has compiled data on the implementation of means testing, and from October 2005 through June 2007, only 7.9% of chapter 7 debtors had income above the applicable state median. Clifford J. White, Making Bankruptcy Reform Work: A Progress Report in Year 2, ABI Journal, June 2007, at 16.

CONCLUSION

For the reasons stated herein and in the United States Trustee's opening brief the United States Trustee respectfully asks this Court to reverse the February 27, 2007 decision of the bankruptcy court denying the United States Trustee's motion to dismiss, and remand this case to the bankruptcy court for further proceedings.

UNITED STATES TRUSTEE'S RESPONSE IN OPPOSITION TO COUNTRYWIDE HOME LOANS, INC.'S MEMORANDUM CONCERNING APPELLATE JURISDICTION AS OF RIGHT, OR, IN THE ALTERNATIVE, MOTION FOR AND INCORPORATED MEMORANDUM IN SUPPORT OF LEAVE TO APPEAL

Donald F. Walton, United States Trustee for Region 21 (the "UST"), pursuant to 28 U.S.C. § 158(a) and Fed. R. Bankr. P. 8001 and 8003, hereby submits this response to the Memorandum Concerning Appellate Jurisdiction as of Right, or, in the Alternative, Motion for and Incorporated Memorandum in Support of Leave to Appeal of Countrywide Home Loans, Inc. ("Countrywide") [D.E. #242].[1]

Preliminary Statement

1. For the second time in eight months, Countrywide seeks appellate review of a bankruptcy court order upholding the right of the UST to seek discovery from Countrywide under Fed. R. Bankr. P. 2004. On February 8, 2008, this Court denied Countrywide's request to appeal an earlier version of the same discovery order now at issue, having found that the order was interlocutory and that Countrywide could not demonstrate any reason for the Court to depart from the policy against piecemeal appeals of routine discovery orders. See Countrywide Home Loans, Inc. v. Walton, Case No. 08-mc-20020-CMA [D.E. # 6].

[1] Although filed in the bankruptcy court, Countrywide's Memorandum is addressed to the United States District Court. Accordingly, the UST's Response follows the same convention. Except as otherwise noted, however, all references to docket entries refer to Bankruptcy Court Case No. 07-136091-BKC-AJC.

2. This Court should also deny Countrywide's subsequent attempt to appeal the bankruptcy court's expanded discovery order, and should dismiss its improperly filed notice of appeal, for at least two reasons. First, this Court's prior legal conclusions and findings of fact regarding the non-final nature of the bankruptcy court's discovery orders are now the law of the case and cannot be re-litigated by Countrywide. The Court's conclusions of law in its prior order are equally applicable to the present appeal, and Countrywide offers no persuasive argument distinguishing any of the facts on which this Court relied in that order. Second, even if the law of the case doctrine did not apply, the Court's February 8, 2008 order was correct on the merits. Like its previous version, the amended Rule 2004 order presently at issue is a routine discovery order not normally subject to interlocutory review, and Countrywide cannot demonstrate any unusual circumstances that would justify immediate appellate review of a discovery order in this case.

Statement of Facts

a. The First Discovery Order

3. On July 6, 2007, Countrywide filed a proof of claim in the chapter 13 bankruptcy case of Manuel Del Castillo and Maria E. Pena (the "Debtors"). By its claim, Countrywide represented that it held a claim of $287,902.23 secured by the Debtors' primary residence, and that the Debtors owed Countrywide pre-petition arrears of $16,417.67 and an insufficient funds fee of $682.88. Countrywide's proof of claim further stated that effective July 1, 2007, the Debtors' monthly payment to Countrywide would increase from $1,783.64 to $4,773.54.

4. On August 10, 2007, the Debtors objected to Countrywide's proof of claim. [D.E. #48]. In relevant part, the Debtors' objection alleged that Countrywide failed to provide a breakdown of the claimed arrears and fees or to explain the basis for the increased monthly payment. Countrywide did not respond to the Debtors' objection. Accordingly, on August 28, 2007, the bankruptcy court entered an order sustaining the Debtors' objection and reducing Countrywide's claim. [D.E. #59].

5. On October 24, 2007, the UST filed and served a notice for a Rule 2004 examination of Countrywide, seeking discovery regarding the factual basis for Countrywide's proof of claim (the "First Rule 2004 Notice"). [D.E. #91]. Pursuant to the First Rule 2004 Notice, the UST sought, among other materials, "all documents . . . regarding drafting, verifying and filing proofs of claim." Id. at Exhibit A.

6. On November 2, 2007, Countrywide filed an objection to the First Rule 2004 Notice. [D.E. #101]. Among other arguments, Countrywide asserted that the UST lacked statutory authority to investigate the factual basis of Countrywide's claim. In addition, Countrywide argued that the requested discovery exceeded the permissible scope of a Rule 2004 examination.

7. On November 28, 2007, the bankruptcy court entered an order that largely denied Countrywide's objections to the First Rule 2004 Notice (the "First Discovery Order"). [D.E. #132]. Although the bankruptcy court sustained Countrywide's objections on certain discrete topics, the bankruptcy court rejected Countrywide's contention that the discovery as a whole was impermissible, and overruled Countrywide's objection to the portion of the First 2004 Notice that sought all documents relating to Countrywide's internal "policy and procedure" for filing bankruptcy claims. See First 2004 Notice at Exhibit A, ¶4.

b. Countrywide's First Motion for Leave to Appeal

8. On December 10, 2007, Countrywide filed a motion for leave to appeal which, like the present motion, was captioned as a "Memorandum of Law in Support of Notice of Appeal of Final Order, or, in the Alternative, Motion for Leave to Appeal" (the "First Motion for Leave to Appeal"). [D.E. #141]. In its First Motion for Leave to Appeal, Countrywide took the position that the First Discovery Order was immediately appealable as of right, but that in the alternative the court should grant it leave to appeal.

9. In support of these contentions, Countrywide raised four principal arguments:

- First, Countrywide argued that the First Discovery Order was a final order for purposes of appeal because the UST's request for discovery is a "separate, distinct dispute" within the Debtors' bankruptcy case. Id. at 5.

- Second, Countrywide argued that it should be permitted to appeal under the "Forgay-Conrad" exception to the finality rule, because it would suffer irreparable harm if review was not granted, or alternatively, because the discovery order was a "collateral order" that was "independent and easily separable" from the remainder of the bankruptcy case. Id. at 5-6.

- Third, Countrywide argued that it should be granted discretionary leave to appeal because the issue of "whether there is any authority for the UST to examine a creditor's general corporate policies and procedures" is a controlling question of law about which there was "substantial ground for difference of opinion." Id. at 6-7.

- Fourth, Countrywide argued that this Court should exercise its discretion to permit an appeal because "an appellate ruling reversing the [First Discovery Order] will terminate the contested matter in its entirety." Id. at 9.

c. The Court's February 8, 2008, Order Denying Leave to Appeal

10. On February 8, 2008, this Court issued an order denying Countrywide's First Motion for Leave to Appeal (the "February 8 Order"). [Dist Ct. Case No. 08:mc-20020-CMA, D.E. #6]. Notably, the February 8 Order set forth several findings of fact and conclusions of law that specifically rejected the principal legal theories relied on by Countrywide both in the First Motion for Leave to Appeal as well as in the present motion . In particular, despite Countrywide's assertion that the First Discovery Order was a "separate, distinct" ruling that was final for purposes of appeal, the Court held that an order granting or denying discovery is, by its nature, not final. Id. at 5-6.

11. The Court next held that under the facts of the Debtors' bankruptcy case, none of the recognized exceptions to the rule against interlocutory appeals were applicable. In particular, although the Court noted that a discovery order may be considered final if its involves "a person who has custody of materials as to which another person may claim a privilege of non-disclosure," Id. at 6, the Court found that no such exception applied in this case because the Debtors did not assert any claim of privilege and did not oppose the UST's discovery requests. Id. at 7. The Court held further held that Countrywide's reliance on the "Forgay-Conrad" doctrine was misplaced, since that exception applied only in cases involving orders to deliver property to the complainant, and that no such relief had been sought by the UST. Id. at 8. In addition, the Court held that the "collateral order" doctrine could not be satisfied because there remained a possibility that Countrywide could refuse to deliver the documents in question, which would give rise to the possibility of further proceedings before the bankruptcy court. Id. at 9. Finally, the Court held that Countrywide had not shown that immediate review was needed to protect the interests of any party, since "[i]t has not been shown that the Order cannot be reviewed after the final judgment or that a party's interests cannot be protected in the absence of immediate review." Id.

12. Next, the Court held that the record before it did not provide any basis for granting discretionary leave to appeal. Specifically, despite Countrywide's claim that the First Discovery Order presented a "controlling question of law" because it involved a challenge to the UST's authority, the Court noted that the relevant consideration was whether the order adjudicated Countrywide's proof of claim, which it did not. Id. at 11. Furthermore, the Court held that because the law regarding the non-final nature of discovery orders is "well established," Countrywide could not demonstrate a "substantial ground for differences of opinion regarding the questions presented." Id. Accordingly, the Court concluded, "Countrywide has simply not demonstrated that the Order differs materially from routine discovery orders from which interlocutory appeals are discouraged as contravening the policy against piecemeal litigation." Id. at 12.

d. The Motion to Expand Discovery and the Second Discovery Order

13. On May 27, 2008, the UST filed a Motion to Expand Discovery Pursuant to the Second Amended Notice of Examination Under Fed. R. Bankr. P. 2004 and Service of Subpoena (the "Motion to Expand Discovery"). [D.E. #215]. The Motion to Expand Discovery was filed in response to Congressional testimony by Steve Bailey, Chief Executive for Loan Administration for Countrywide Financial Corporation. See Policing Lenders and Protecting Homeowners: Is Misconduct in Bankruptcy Fueling the Foreclosure Crisis?: Hearing Before the Subcomm. on Admin. Oversight and the Courts of the S. Comm. On the Judiciary, 110th Cong. (May 6, 2008), http://judiciary.senate.gov/testimony.cfm?id-3327&wit_id=7156) (testimony attached as an exhibit to the Motion to Expand Discovery). This testimony revealed for the first time that Countrywide had conducted certain internal audits regarding errors in its mortgage servicing operations. Id. at 4. Because the content of these audits is directly relevant to the UST's investigation and evaluation of Countrywide's conduct in the Debtors' chapter 13 case, the UST filed its Motion to Expand Discovery in order to specifically request copies of the internal audits publicly announced by Countrywide in its Congressional testimony. Out of an abundance of caution, the UST sought a specific order regarding production of Countrywide's internal audits, notwithstanding that the bankruptcy court had already ordered production of those materials pursuant to the UST's request for "documents . . . regarding drafting, verifying and filing proofs of claim."

14. On June 27, 2008, the bankruptcy court issued an order granting the Motion to Expand Discovery and overruling Countrywide's objections (the "Second Discovery Order").

[D.E. #238]. It is from the Second Discovery Order that Countrywide now seeks leave to appeal.

Argument

a. This Court's prior ruling regarding the non-appealability of the bankruptcy court's discovery orders is the law of the case and cannot be relitigated by Countrywide

15. In seeking leave to file the current appeal, Countrywide raises virtually the same series of legal and factual arguments that this Court rejected in its February 8, 2008 Order. The legal conclusions and findings of fact set forth in that order are now the law of the case, and Countrywide is precluded from challenging this Court's holdings on a subsequent appeal. As stated by the Eleventh Circuit, "the law of the case doctrine, self-imposed by courts, operates to create efficiency, finality, and obedience within the judicial system, so that an appellate decision binds all subsequent proceedings in the same case." United States v. Amedeo, 487 F.3d 823, 829 (11th Cir. 2007) (internal quotation omitted); see also United States v. Jordan, 429 F.3d 1032, 1035 (11th Cir. 2005) (noting that "the law of the case doctrine bars relitigation of issues that were decided, either explicitly or by necessary implication, in an earlier appeal of the same case"). In particular, the law of the case doctrine precludes a party from relitigating the issue of whether a particular order is final and appealable, as Countrywide attempts to do here. See Guardian ad Litem v. Logistics Partners Inc., No. 20873, 259 Fed. Appx. 644, 2007 WL 4375450 (5th Cir. Dec. 12, 2007) (holding that law of the case doctrine prohibited court from re-examining ruling that order was interlocutory and unappealable).

16. In this case, Countrywide seeks to appeal the Second Discovery Order, which expanded and modified the interlocutory and unappealable First Discovery Order. The First and Second Discovery Orders address the same subject matter and relate to the same underlying litigation, and the rationale of this Court's February 8, 2008, Order is equally applicable to both orders. Significantly, Countrywide has not alleged any change in the facts that this Court previously found relevant to its determination of the finality of the order. The Debtors remain unopposed to the UST's discovery efforts and have not claimed privilege, the UST has not sought to recover property of Countrywide; Countrywide has not fully complied with the UST's discovery requests; and there has been no intervening change in the law relevant to interlocutory appeals.

17. For its part, Countrywide is able to identify only a single factor that differentiates its current appeal from its attempted appeal of the First Discovery Order. According to Countrywide, while its first appeal primarily related to the UST's standing, its current appeal challenges the scope of the UST's proposed discovery. See Motion at 15. Countrywide fails to explain, however, why an alleged difference in its legal theory on appeal should affect the interlocutory nature of the underlying order itself. In any event, Countrywide's effort to distinguish the two orders on this basis is unpersuasive. Even assuming that the UST was precluded from seeking discovery "beyond the issues raised in the Del Castillo/Pena bankruptcy," as Countrywide suggests, id., the First Discovery Order also explicitly authorized such discovery over the objection of Countrywide. See First Discovery Order at Exhibit A ¶4 (authorizing discovery of general procedures employed by Countrywide). Accordingly, this Court's February 8, 2008 Order precludes the relief sought in the present Motion.

b. Even if the law of the case doctrine were not applicable, the February 8, 2008, Order was correctly decided

18. In the alternative, the Court should deny Countrywide's motion for leave to appeal the Second Discovery Order on the merits because that order is non-final, none of the exceptions permitting immediate appeals of interlocutory orders are applicable, and Countrywide has not established cause for discretionary leave to appeal.

19. As this Court correctly noted in its February 8, 2008, Order, discovery orders are by their nature non-final and appellate review of discovery orders is strongly discouraged. See In re International Horizons, Inc., 689 F.2d 996, 1000-1001 (11th Cir. 1982) (holding that "as a general proposition most orders granting or denying discovery are not final orders . . . and therefore are not immediately appealable") (internal quotation omitted). Although Countrywide suggests that the UST's discovery request is a final order solely upon the grounds that the UST's request for discovery is a "distinct dispute," the same characterization could be made of any discovery dispute in a complex litigation. Were Countrywide's statement of law correct, even the most minute discovery order would by definition become immediately appealable as of right. As one court has observed, such an outcome "undermines the purpose of the finality rule" by creating "fragmented litigation, which clogs the appellate courts and causes unnecessary delay in the trial courts." Barrick Group, Inc. v. Moss, 849 F.2d 70, 72 (2d Cir. 1982).

20. The sole exception to the finality rule on which Countrywide now appears to rely is the "collateral order" doctrine, under which an interlocutory order may be reviewed if each of three factors are present:

> (1) [T]he order must be independent and easily separable from the substance of the other claims in the action, (2) it must present a need to secure prompt review in order to protect important interests of any party, and (3) it must be examined in the light of practical, rather than narrowly technical, consideration.

In re Hillsborough Holdings Corp., 164 B.R. 673, 674 (M.D. Fla. 1994) (internal citations omitted).

21. As this Court concluded in the February 8, 2008, Order in response to a virtually identical argument by Countrywide, Countrywide has failed to demonstrate that each of these elements is present. In particular, Countrywide fails to explain why an appeal is necessary to protect the interests of any party. Nothing in the record indicates that any of the documents sought by the UST are subject to privileges held by third parties. Moreover, there is no reason to speculate, as Countrywide does, that the Rule 2004 examination will necessarily terminate all litigation involving Countrywide. As Countrywide itself notes, Countrywide is currently the subject of several pending investigations and sanctions proceedings arising out of Countrywide's conduct in bankruptcy cases. See Motion at 13. Moreover, should sanctions or other similar relief prove to be warranted in this case, Countrywide would then have ample opportunity to appeal any adverse orders at the conclusion of the proceeding ordering such relief.

22. Finally, Countrywide has not demonstrated there are grounds for granting it discretionary leave to appeal. As Countrywide concedes, such leave to appeal is generally granted only if an issue on appeal is dispositive and there exists a substantial ground for difference of opinion regarding that issue. See McFarlin v. Conseco Servs., LLC, 381 F.3d 1251, 1259 (11th Cir. 2004).

23. Countrywide contends that the dispositive issue raised by its appeal is whether the authorized discovery falls within the scope of Rule 2004. Countrywide continues to assert that its "private" business affairs fall outside the scope of Rule 2004 and argues that the requested discovery is not related to this bankruptcy case. See Motion at 17-18. Countrywide, however, fails to demonstrate that there is any material difference of opinion among courts as to whether Rule 2004 is available to investigate the filing of false or inaccurate claims by a creditor in a bankruptcy case, and there is no authority suggesting that Countrywide would be likely to prevail on the merits of an appeal.

24. It is well-established that Rule 2004 permits examination of nearly any matter that is related to the administration of a bankruptcy case. In re Drexel Burnham Lambert Group, Inc., 123 B.R. 702, 711 (Bankr. S.D.N.Y. 1991) (noting that Rule 2004 "can be legitimately compared to a fishing expedition"). This broad authorization for discovery contemplates examinations of creditors as well as debtors. See Friedman v. Drucker (In re Sofro), 117 B.R. 745, 752 (Bankr. S.D. Fla. 1990) (sanctioning creditor for failure to comply with Rule 2004 order). Moreover, courts have agreed that the UST may properly invoke Rule 2004 to investigate abuses by creditors of the bankruptcy system. See In re Parsley, 384 B.R. 138, 147 (Bankr. S.D. Tex. 2008) (holding that "the UST was well within its authority to investigate the activities of Countrywide, Barrett Burke, and McCalla Raymer to determine if their activities undermined the integrity of the bankruptcy system").

25. In this case, evidence of Countrywide's internal audits are directly relevant to the issue of whether the possible errors in the Debtors' bankruptcy case form part of a pervasive or systemic pattern of misconduct. That issue, in turn, may be highly relevant to the question of what remedy, if any, should be imposed in the event that the bankruptcy court determines that Countrywide has engaged in misconduct. Consequently, Countrywide cannot demonstrate that its theory on appeal holds sufficient merit to permit an immediate interlocutory appeal.

c. Because the Second Discovery Order is interlocutory and non-appealable, the Court should dismiss Countrywide's appeal for lack of jurisdiction

26. Despite this Court's previous holding that the bankruptcy court's Discovery Orders are interlocutory, Countrywide wrongly treats the order as final and has filed a notice of appeal in addition to seeking relief through its Motion. This Court, however, lacks jurisdiction to entertain an appeal of an interlocutory order where leave to appeal has not been granted. See 28 U.S.C. § 158(a); Blum v. Bankatlantic Fin. Corp., 925 F.2d 1357, 1360 (11th Cir. 1991) (noting that appellate court "usually does not have jurisdiction over interlocutory appeals that have not been certified" by trial court). Accordingly, the Court should dismiss this appeal.

Conclusion

27. For all of the foregoing reasons, the Motion for Leave to Appeal should be denied and Countrywide's appeal should be dismissed.

FOR THE FIFTH CIRCUIT

No. 02-30574

R. MICHAEL BOLEN, United States Trustee, Region 5

Plaintiff-Appellee,

v.

CARL A. DENGEL,

Defendant-Appellant.

ON APPEAL FROM THE UNITED STATES DISTRICT COURT

FOR THE EASTERN DISTRICT OF LOUISIANA

BRIEF FOR THE APPELLEE

STATEMENT OF JURISDICTION

The district court had jurisdiction over this suit addressing compensation of standing trustees under federal bankruptcy law pursuant to 28 U.S.C. § 1334. The district court entered partial judgment in favor of the United States Trustee on March 5, 2002. That judgment, issued under Federal Rule of Civil Procedure 54(b), granted the relief sought in the U.S. Trustee's declaratory action. Dengel's counterclaims and third-party claims remained. Dengel's post-judgment motions were denied on May 16, 2002, and he filed a timely notice of appeal on May 31, 2002. See Fed. R. App. P. 4(a). This Court has jurisdiction pursuant to 28 U.S.C. § 1291.

STATEMENT OF THE ISSUES

Appellant Carl Dengel served as a Chapter 12 standing trustee. Under the governing statute, 28 U.S.C. § 586, the Attorney General, acting through the United States Trustee, must fix standing trustees' compensation within certain limits enumerated in the statute. Section 586 requires annual compensation and reimbursement for expenses to be set at no more than ten percent of payments made under each debtor's plan, with no more than five percent going to compensation of the standing trustee. The U.S. Trustee's handbooks provide that, within the ten percent maximum fee, actual expenses must be reimbursed first and unpaid compensation may not be carried over from year to year.

The issues in this case are:

1. Whether the Attorney General and the U.S. Trustee acted within their authority in determining that standing trustees must be reimbursed for expenses first and then compensated from remaining funds available under the governing statute.

2. Whether the calculations of appellant's compensation were permissible and whether the U.S. Trustee may recover improperly withheld funds.

STATEMENT OF THE CASE

The U.S. Trustee, Region 5 brought this case as a non-core proceeding in bankruptcy court, seeking a declaratory judgment that certain funds retained by Dengel during his tenure as a Chapter 12 standing trustee were improperly withheld under the governing statute and handbook provisions. Dengel filed counterclaims and third party claims, and the reference to the bankruptcy court was withdrawn by the district court.

The district court retained jurisdiction, but referred the U.S. Trustee's declaratory judgment action back to the bankruptcy court. After that court conducted a trial and issued a report and recommendation pursuant to 28 U.S.C. § 157(c), the district court ruled on Dengel's objections to the report and rendered judgment in favor of the U.S. Trustee on his declaratory judgment action. That judgment was entered under Rule 54(b) of the Federal Rules of Civil Procedure, and Dengel appealed.

Dengel's counterclaims and third-party claims remained pending at the time of his notice of appeal in this case. Since that time, the third-party action against the bank holding the disputed funds has been rendered final against Dengel and appealed to this Court. That case is docketed as Fifth Circuit No. 02-30929. The district court has retained jurisdiction over Dengel's tort and constitutional counterclaims for final disposition.

STATEMENT OF FACTS

1. Statutory and Regulatory Scheme.

Prior to 1986, Chapter 12 of the Bankruptcy Code permitted the appointment of Chapter 12 standing trustees by the bankruptcy courts to facilitate the resolution of farmers' bankruptcies. In 1986, Congress effected a major overhaul of the bankruptcy system, a key component of which was the transfer of responsibility for appointing and supervising trustees from the bankruptcy courts to the Attorney General. With the passage of the Bankruptcy Judges, United States Trustees and Family Farmer Bankruptcy Act of 1986 (P.L. 99-554), the power to appoint standing trustees in bankruptcy cases was entrusted to the regional United States Trustees, subject to the approval of the Attorney General. 28 U.S.C. § 586(b).[1] The statute provides that such standing trustees must be supervised in the performance of their duties by the United States Trustee for the relevant region.

[1] The United States Trustees are employees of the federal government, appointed for a term of five years by the Attorney General to oversee the administration of bankrupt estates in each of the several regions identified in the statute. The U.S. Trustees, in turn, may appoint standing trustees subject to the approval of the Attorney General where a high number of cases under Chapters 12 and 13 of the Bankruptcy Code warrant such a move. The standing trustees are not federal employees. Rather, they are private persons acting pursuant to the terms of compensation and performance contained in the statute, applicable handbook provisions, and individual compensation orders issued by the U.S. Trustee.

Under § 586, the Attorney General has broad authority to oversee bankruptcy trustees. In addition to appointing and supervising the U.S. Trustee for each region, the statute provides that the Attorney General "shall prescribe by rule qualifications . . . to serve as standing trustee in cases under chapter 12 . . . ." 28 U.S.C. § 586(d).

Included in the Attorney General's responsibilities under the statute is the requirement that, after consulting with the appointing U.S. Trustee, he fix compensation for Chapter 12 standing trustees. 28 U.S.C. § 586(e). The statute provides that the Attorney General shall fix a fee not to exceed ten percent of payments made by the debtor under any individual bankruptcy plan, to cover both the standing trustee's expenses and compensation. 28 U.S.C. § 586(e)(1).[2] A standing trustee's

[2] The full text of § 586(e)(1)is as follows:

The Attorney General, after consultation with a United States trustee that has appointed an individual . . . to serve as standing trustee in cases under chapter 12 or 13 of title 11, shall fix–

(A) a maximum annual compensation for such individual consisting of–
  (i) an amount not to exceed the highest annual rate of basic pay in effect for level V of the Executive Schedule; and
  (ii) the cash value of employment benefits comparable to the employment benefits provided by the United States to individuals who are employed by the United States at the same rate of basic pay to perform similar services during the same period of time; and

(B) a percentage fee not to exceed– compensation, as distinguished from reimbursement for expenses, may not exceed five percent of payments under any bankruptcy plan. 28 U.S.C. § 586(e)(2)(A). Section 586(e)(1)(A) also subjects compensation of standing trustees to an aggregate annual limit, under which compensation may not exceed the highest annual rate of pay in effect for level V of the Executive Service and the cash value of employment benefits provided by the United States to its employees to perform similar services. 28 U.S.C. § 586(e)(1)(A).

Within these statutory limits, the Attorney General and U.S. Trustee fix maximum compensation for each standing trustee by order. Under the statute, a standing trustee must pay to the United States Trustee, for deposit in the United States Trustee System Fund, any amount collected as compensation which exceeds five percent of payments under the bankruptcy plan, or which exceeds actual expenses or the actual compensation as adjusted by other provisions under the statute and reflected in the trustee's maximum compensation order. 28 U.S.C. § 586(e)(2)(A) and (B).[3]

The statute does not prescribe the manner in which the orders fixing compensation of standing trustees are to be calculated by the Attorney General and the U.S. Trustees or the order in which expenses and compensation are to be paid. The Executive Office for U.S. Trustees [EOUST] has provided handbooks to the regions and individual trustees in order to facilitate uniformity and efficiency of administration of bankrupt estates under the statute. As relevant to this case, EOUST promulgated two handbooks for Chapter 12 standing trustees in 1989 and 1992, respectively. Those handbooks fill in the statutory gap as to how compensation orders for standing trustees are to be fixed.

In developing the methods for calculating compensation, EOUST determined that standing trustees' compensation should be linked to the efficiency of their performance. The handbooks therefore provide that, within the parameters set by the statute, standing trustees may not receive compensation until their documented expenses have been reimbursed. See 1992 EOUST Handbook at 22. Thus, trustees have the incentive to keep expenses low, within five percent of total payments, in order to ensure that they will be able to collect their maximum allowable compensation under the statute and their compensation orders. Should expenses exceed the maximum fee of ten percent in any given year, they may be carried forward to subsequent years. Id. However, unpaid compensation may not be carried forward, again as an incentive to keep expenses low wherever possible. Id. at 25. A compensation order may be set at zero where allowable expenses will meet or exceed the ten percent maximum fee or other limits under Section 586.

2. Facts and Prior Proceedings.

a. Carl A. Dengel acted as a Chapter 12 standing trustee in Louisiana between the years of 1987 and 1995. Between 1987 and 1989, he acted as trustee under an appointment by the Bankruptcy Court for the Eastern District of Louisiana. During that time, Dengel claims he accrued an operating deficit of expenses carried forward from year to year.

As of 1990, with the advent of the United States Trustee system, Dengel served as a standing trustee appointed by the U.S. Trustee for Region 5. Proposed Findings of Fact and Conclusions of Law, Record Excerpt [RE] 6 at 2. Dengel's appointment was subject to EOUST's handbook provisions and his individual compensation orders. Dengel objected to the expenses first, funds available requirement in the EOUST handbooks, and expressed his dissatisfaction with the U.S. Trustee's compensation policy from the beginning of his service under his new appointment. Id. at 3. Although he criticized the methods of compensation under the U.S. Trustee system, Dengel nevertheless consented to the terms of the compensation orders for each year of his service. He also refused to adhere to the expenses-first policy, by carrying forward unpaid compensation from year to year and paying himself compensation before all the year's expenses had been reimbursed. Id.

b. Dengel brought an action in 1994 against the U.S. Trustee, seeking a resolution as to the proper ownership of the disputed compensation funds. In re Ozzie Travis Givens, Debtor, and Carl A. Dengel, Trustee v. Victoria E. Young, United States Trustee, E.D. La. (Bankr.) No. 94-1245. Dengel interpled the sum of $5,786.80, representing a ten percent fee from his pending Chapter 12 cases, and also set up an account with Bank One, into which he deposited the contested compensation as it accrued.[4] The bankruptcy court dismissed Dengel's suit, and Dengel never appealed. See RE 6 at 5. The bankruptcy court found that, under 11 U.S.C. § 326(b), it lacked jurisdiction to determine compensation of a standing trustee. See 11 U.S.C. § 326(b)("the court may not allow compensation for services or reimbursement of expenses . . . of a standing trustee appointed under section 586(b) of Title 28").

[4] That account is the subject of Dengel's third-party action against Bank One, now in this Court on Dengel's appeal as Fifth Circuit Case No. 02-30929.

The U.S. Trustee filed this case in bankruptcy court in 1998, seeking a declaration that the disputed compensation should not have been retained by Dengel and was, in fact, the property of the U.S. Trustee System Fund. Bankr. Dkt. # 1. Dengel filed counterclaims and third party claims, alleging tortious and unconstitutional conduct by members of the Region 5 U.S. Trustee's office. Bankr. Dkt. # 8. Dengel also brought a third-party claim against the bank in which the disputed funds were lodged. Bankr. Dkt. # 7.

Subsequent to Dengel's initiation of his counter- and third-party claims, the referral to the bankruptcy court was withdrawn. D.Ct. Dkt. # 4. On the U.S. Trustee's motion, however, the original declaratory action was remanded to the bankruptcy court for trial and issuance of a report and recommendations. D.Ct. Dkt. # 7.

After a two-day trial, the bankruptcy court issued its report, recommending that the district court find that the U.S. Trustee handbook provisions were an appropriate exercise of authority given the ambiguity as to the method of calculating compensation under the statute and that, therefore, the disputed funds were the property of the U.S. Trustee. RE 6.

Upon review of the report, the district court determined that the handbook was not entitled to deference under Chevron U.S.A. Inc. v. Natural Resources Defense Council, 467 U.S. 837 (1984), as the bankruptcy court had held, but rather under United States v. Mead Corp., 533 U.S. 218 (2001). RE 5 at 3. The district court adopted the bankruptcy court's report in all other respects, and accepted the recommendation in favor of rendering judgment for the U.S. Trustee. Id. at 6. Finding no cause for delay, the district court entered judgment in favor of the U.S. Trustee under Fed. R. Civ. P. 54(b). RE 4. After his motions to reconsider were denied, Dengel timely appealed this ruling on May 31, 2002. At that time, the tort and constitutional counterclaims, as well as the Bank One third-party claim, were pending. In the intervening months, Dengel's case against the Bank was dismissed. Dengel appealed that action, which is docketed as No. 02-30929 in this Court.[5] The remaining issues are still pending in the district court.

[5] It is likely that the outcome of this case will moot Dengel's second appeal.

STANDARD OF REVIEW

The gravamen of this case is whether the U.S. Trustee's policies are permissible under the enabling statute. The district court's statutory interpretation is reviewed de novo. United States v. Rasco, 123 F.3d 222, 226 (5th Cir. 1997). To the degree that any factual determinations of the district court are in issue, they are reviewed for clear error. In re Miller, 290 F.3d 263, 266 n.2 (5th Cir. 2002).

SUMMARY OF ARGUMENT

1. Through its 1986 legislation, Congress made the Attorney General and the regional United States Trustees responsible for appointing Chapter 12 standing trustees and for fixing their compensation, up to a maximum level stated in 28 U.S.C. § 586. Other than setting a ceiling on standing trustees' compensation, the statute commits the actual calculation of appropriate compensation to the Attorney General and the U.S. Trustees. Although it provides for recoupment of expenses and for compensation, the statute is silent as to the order in which expenses and compensation should be paid.

In the context of this express grant of authority and the absence of any specific direction by Congress, the Executive Office for U.S. Trustees determined that requiring expenses to be paid before compensation would create an incentive for standing trustees to keep costs low, in accordance with the legislative purposes of § 586. This policy was enunciated in two successive Chapter 12 handbooks, issued to all standing trustees including appellant in this case.

Although it is not the product of formal notice and comment rulemaking, the U.S. Trustee's policy and the handbooks in which it is recorded are entitled to judicial deference. The EOUST's expenses-first policy fills a statutory gap as to the precise calculation and manner of payment of standing trustees' compensation. The policy furthers the legislature's goal of reducing costs and complexity for family farmers facing bankruptcy, and it is an appropriate exercise of the authority expressly granted to the Attorney General and the United States Trustee by the statute.

While recent Supreme Court cases indicate that Chevron deference applies to certain policy statements such as those embodied in the EOUST handbooks, the district court was correct in finding that the expenses-first policy should also be upheld under the lesser deference standard exemplified by United States v. Mead Corp., 533 U.S. 218 (2001), and Skidmore v. Swift & Co., 323 U.S. 134 (1944). The EOUST handbook policy is, at a minimum, entitled to respect to the extent that the interpretation of the statute it represents has the "power to persuade." Skidmore, 323 U.S. at 140. Given that the EOUST's expense-first policy is a reasonable interpretation of the statute and creates an incentive to keep costs low for bankrupt farmers, the policy passes muster both under Chevron and under the lesser deference articulated in Mead and Skidmore and applied by the district court. Therefore, the Court need not determine the appropriate deference to apply to the handbooks in order to affirm the judgment of the district court.

Dengel's statutory interpretation arguments, in which he contends that § 586 prohibits the EOUST's expenses-first policy, are unavailing. The doctrine of expressio unius est exclusio alterius does not apply to the portion of the statute in question. Congress did not illustrate one thing to the implied exclusion of others, but instead merely set a ceiling on standing trustees' compensation. The fact that Congress supplied a maximum limit to compensation does not create a right to receive that maximum every year. Nor should the Court accept Dengel's argument that we can infer from Congress' silence that the Attorney General is precluded from determining the order in which expenses and compensation should be paid. That silence on the order of payment cannot strip the Attorney General of the authority, conferred by the same statutory provision in issue, to fix appropriate compensation within the maximum.

2. The money improperly retained by Dengel as compensation, part of which has been kept in the Bank One account and the court registry, should be returned to the United States Trustee.

Section 586 provides that any amount over the percentage maximum or the actual compensation and expenses as adjusted under the statute must be returned to the United States Trustee System Fund. 28 U.S.C. § 586(e)(2).

The U.S. Trustee properly calculated the compensation to which Dengel was entitled for the years in question, which was less than five percent of payments under the estates he oversaw for certain years. Those calculations reflected expenses as submitted by Dengel and the adjustments to compensation required by the statute. Nonetheless, Dengel persisted in retaining a full five percent of payments in deliberate contravention of the U.S. Trustee's expenses-first policy and his own compensation orders. Under § 586, that money is now owing to the U.S. Trustee, and the district court's judgment declaring the U.S. Trustee's entitlement to the funds should be affirmed.

ARGUMENT

I. The U.S. Trustee Handbook's Provision Requiring Standing Trustees to be Reimbursed for Expenses First and Compensated After is Entitled to Judicial Deference as an Appropriate Interpretation of and Exercise of Authority Under the Statute.

A. The statute is silent as to the order in which compensation and expenses are to be paid to standing trustees.

The governing statute, 28 U.S.C. § 586(e), states that the Attorney General "shall fix" a fee for standing trustees not to exceed ten percent of payments under a family farmer's bankruptcy plan. The statute also dictates that the fee is to include both expenses and compensation, and that the compensation portion may not exceed five percent of payments under any bankruptcy plan.

The statute thus sets the outside parameters within which the Attorney General and U.S. Trustee may fix a standing trustee's fee and compensation, but it is silent as to how compensation should be calculated within those parameters. As the bankruptcy and district courts both found, nothing in 28 U.S.C. § 586 either demands or forbids the U.S. Trustee's policy requiring expenses to be paid first. See RE 5 at 3 and 5 (Order and Reasons in support of judgment issued March 5, 2002). See also In re: BDT Farms, Inc., 21 F.3d 1019, 1023 (10th Cir. 1994) (finding § 586 ambiguous as to the meaning of "payments"); Pelofsky v. Wallace, 102 F.3d 350, 354-55 (8th Cir. 1996) (same).

Indeed, the expenses-first policy is an implementation of § 586 under an express statutory grant of authority to the Attorney General to set a fee for standing trustees. That determining the appropriate fee is within the exclusive authority of the Attorney General and his agents is underscored by the prohibition on the courts' awarding compensation to standing trustees. See 11 U.S.C. § 326(b) ("In a case under chapter 12 or 13 of this title, the court may not allow compensation for services or reimbursement of expenses of . . . a standing trustee appointed under section 586(b) of title 28"); see also In re Schollett, 980

F.2d 639, 644-45 (10th Cir. 1992) (finding that the setting of standing trustees' compensation is the exclusive province of the Attorney General and not subject to alteration by the courts).

B. The U.S. Trustee's policy requiring expenses to be paid first is appropriate and entitled to deference.

1. The purpose of the U.S. Trustee's policy requiring expenses to be paid first is to create an incentive for standing trustees to keep expenses low. Under the U.S. Trustee's calculations, expenses may be carried forward year to year in order to ensure that trustees will be reimbursed for those extraordinary years where expenses are unavoidably higher than the statutory maximums allow. Permitting expenses to be carried forward, however, could create a disincentive to keep expenses low in any given year if the standing trustee is assured of both compensation for that year and eventual recoupment of his expenses in later years. Without the expenses-first policy, trustees could get the maximum compensation of five percent, regardless of how careless they may have been in running up expenses. The expenses-first, funds available policy thus serves the overall efficiency of the trustee system by creating an incentive to keep administrative expenses low.

Such an objective is clearly congruent with the goals of the enabling statute. A key purpose of bringing the trustee system under the direction of the Attorney General was to streamline the administration of bankrupt estates and to ensure the lowest possible costs to debtors and creditors alike. For example, the House Judiciary Committee described the policy underlying § 586 as follows: "The Attorney General will be able to utilize the private sector to provide personalized efficient service and to keep subordinate employees of the standing trustee off the public payroll. The fee system is designed to encourage the standing trustees to keep costs low at the risk of reduced compensation . . . . ." H.R. Rep. No. 95-595, at 107 (1978) [emphasis added], reprinted in 1978 U.S.C.C.A.N. 5963, 6068 and Collier on Bankruptcy App. Pt. 4-1196.[6] The U.S. Trustee's expenses-first policy thus dovetails with the legislative purpose behind § 586.

2. The expenses-first policy embodied in the U.S. Trustee's handbooks is entitled to judicial deference. Recent Supreme Court cases indicate that the EOUST handbooks should be entitled to deference under Chevron U.S.A., Inc. v. Natural Resources Defense Council, 467 U.S. 837 (1984) and progeny. However, as the district court found, the expenses-first policy should be upheld even where accorded the lesser deference described by United States v. Mead Corp., 533 U.S. 218 (2001) and Skidmore v. Swift & Co., 323 U.S. 134 (1944). Thus, while the EOUST

[6] The 1978 Act, which established the U.S. Trustee system on an experimental basis, was the predecessor to the 1986 Act which formally and permanently established that system. Legislative history going to the purposes behind the 1978 Act is thus relevant to the 1986 Act as well.

handbooks' expenses-first provision shares the characteristics of other administrative policies that have been accorded Chevron deference in the absence of notice and comment rulemaking, the Court need not finally determine the precise level of deference to be applied to the handbooks in this case. The judgment of the district court, which rested on the less deferential standard, may be affirmed on the ground that any policy which should be upheld under Mead and Skidmore would, a fortiori, be upheld under Chevron.

a. Under Chevron and progeny, an agency's interpretation or implementation of a statute receives deference if the statute is silent or ambiguous on the point in issue and the agency's interpretation is based on a permissible construction of the statute. Henrikson v. Guzik, 249 F.3d 395, 397-98 (5th Cir. 2001). Chevron deference applies where Congress has delegated policymaking authority under a statute, including where that delegation is implicit. Texas v. U.S. Dept. of Health & Human Svcs., 61 F.3d 438, 440 (5th Cir. 1995). Such deference is appropriate because "[t]he power of an administrative agency to administer a congressionally created . . . program necessarily requires the formulation of policy and the making of rules to fill any gap left, implicitly or explicitly, by Congress." Id., quoting Chevron, 467 U.S. at 843-44.

In this case, § 586 contains an express delegation of authority to the Attorney General to set fees for standing trustees. The Attorney General and the U.S. Trustee, in implementing the statutory scheme, must therefore fill the gaps as to how those fees are to be calculated and paid, within the outside limits set by the statute. As discussed above, § 586(e) is ambiguous as to the order in which expenses and compensation should be paid: "For purposes of the Chevron analysis, . . . [a statute is ambiguous if] the agency must use its discretion to determine how best to implement the policy . . . .". United States v. Haggar Apparel Co., 526 U.S. 380, 393 (1999).

While the handbooks in issue in this case do not represent a formal, notice and comment rulemaking of the kind recognized in Chevron, the Supreme Court has recently clarified that formal notice and comment procedures are not required in order to secure deference. See Walton v. Barnhart, __ U.S. __, 122 S.Ct. 1265, 1271-72 (2002), citing Mead, 233 U.S. at 121, 230-31 ("the want of 'notice and comment' does not decide the case").

As the Supreme Court held in Walton, deference to an agency's interpretation is appropriate where it reasonably fills a statutory gap and represents the consistent view of the administrative body charged with implementing the statutory scheme. Id. Employing a similar approach, the Ninth Circuit recently applied Chevron deference to uphold "Policy Statements" issued by the Department of Housing and Urban Development. See Schuetz v. Banc One Mortg. Corp., 292 F.3d 1004, 1012 (9th Cir. 2002). The Ninth Circuit held that, even in absence of notice and comment rulemaking, the Policy Statements were entitled to Chevron deference where the Department of Housing and Urban Development has been charged with administering the statute and has expertise in the relevant area. See id.; see also, Heimmermann v. First Union Mortg. Corp., __ F.3d __, 2002 WL 31067330 (11th Cir. 2002) (upholding HUD Statements of Policy).

In this case, the EOUST handbook's expenses-first policy fills a statutory gap regarding the manner in which compensation is to be fixed and paid, and furthers the purposes of the enabling statute by keeping costs to family farmers facing bankruptcy as low as possible. The Attorney General and the U.S. Trustee have been charged with administering the complex bankruptcy trustee system, and the expenses-first policy is an integral part of the interrelated system of incentives and checks that provides for both adequate compensation of trustees and efficient administration of bankrupt estates. The compensation of standing trustees is thus within the particular expertise of the Attorney General and the EOUST, as were the Policy Statements upheld in Schuetz. Moreover, the expenses-first policy was enunciated at the inception of the U.S. Trustee system through the 1989 handbook, and was reaffirmed in the 1992 handbook. The policy has thus been in place since the origination of the U.S. Trustee system, and represents the consistent and long-standing policy of the agency. See Walton, 122 S.Ct. at 1271-72.[7] The handbooks are therefore appropriately subject to Chevron deference.

b. However, the Court need not finally decide whether Chevron applies to the expenses-first policy because the statutory implementation in the EOUST handbooks has "the power to persuade" under United States v. Mead Corp., 533 U.S. 218 (2001) and Skidmore v. Swift & Co., 323 U.S. 134 (1944). See, e.g., Edelman v. Lynchburg College, __ U.S. __, 122 S.Ct. 1145, 1150 (2002) (finding no need to reach the question of what level of deference is appropriate where the Court agrees with the agency's policy). Even without the benefit of Walton, which was decided after the court issued its ruling, the district court determined that the EOUST policy was entitled to deference and should be upheld under the lesser deference standard. Order and Reasons, RE 5 at 5-6.

[7] The Supreme Court found Chevron deference appropriate where "the interstitial nature of the legal question, the related expertise of the Agency, the importance of the question to administration of the statute, the complexity of that administration, and the careful consideration the Agency has given the question over a long period of time all indicate that Chevron provides the appropriate legal lens through which to view the legality of the Agency interpretation here at issue". Walton, 122 S.Ct. at 1272, citing Mead, 533 U.S. at 231-234.

This Court has held that, in absence of full Chevron deference, additional weight should be given to an agency's implementation of its own statutory scheme. Thus, a guide and handbook issued by Department of Labor were accorded deference even though such publications do not fill a statutory gap under express Congressional authority and they were not issued through notice and comment rulemaking. Sykes v. Columbus & Greenville Railway, 117 F.3d 287, 294-95 (5th Cir. 1997). This Court gave the guide and handbook in Sykes "a measure of weight" because "considerable weight should be accorded to an executive department's construction of a statutory scheme it is entrusted to administer." Id. at 495 (quoting Chevron, 467 U.S. at 844). In this case, the EOUST handbooks implement the statutory scheme entrusted to the Attorney General: the supervision and appropriate compensation of standing trustees.

Where, as here, a governmental actor is required by statute to perform a certain task but the law does not specify the means by which it is to be accomplished, the governmental actor is presumed to have the authority to determine the best means by which to complete the task. See, e.g., Sid Peterson Mem. Hosp. v. Thompson, 274 F.3d 301, 312-13 (5th Cir. 2001) (administrative agency may issue prophylactic rules and policies as part of its authority to implement the enabling statute); see also United States v. Mead Corp., 533 U.S. 218, 229 (2001) ("Congress . . .

may not have expressly delegated authority or responsibility to implement a particular provision or fill a particular gap. Yet it can still be apparent from the agency's generally conferred authority and other statutory circumstances that Congress would expect the agency to be able to speak with the force of law when it addresses ambiguity in the statute or fills a space in the enacted law").

The reasons discussed above for according the handbooks Chevron deference apply with equal force to the persuasiveness of the policy under Mead and Skidmore. The express and exclusive grant of authority to the Attorney General to set fees for standing trustees, the complexity of the statutory scheme administered by the Attorney General and the U.S. Trustees, the fact that the expenses-first policy fills a statutory gap in a manner consistent with the goals of the statute, and the long-standing and consistent nature of the policy all counsel in favor of upholding the handbooks' expenses-first provision. Mead, 533 U.S. 228 ("The fair measure of deference to an agency administering its own statute has been understood to vary with the circumstances, and courts have looked to the degree of the agency's care, its consistency, formality, and relative expertness, and to the persuasiveness of the agency's position . . ."). Because the expenses-first policy plainly survives review under either Chevron or Skidmore and Mead, the Court may affirm the district court's judgment in favor of the U.S. Trustee without making a final determination as to the appropriate standard of deference.

C. Dengel's statutory arguments ignore the authority conferred upon the Attorney General by the statute and misapply certain canons of statutory interpretation.

Dengel argues that the statute's silence on the order in which expenses and compensation are to be paid should be interpreted as a prohibition of the U.S. Trustee's expenses-first policy. Br. of Appellant at 15 and 22. But such an argument ignores both the explicit grant of power to the Attorney General and U.S. Trustee under the statute and well-established interpretive rules in the administrative law context.

The statute's limits on a standing trustee's compensation do not occur in a vacuum, and cannot be read to imply that no other limits could be permissible. See Holloway v. United States, 526 U.S. 1, 7 (1999) (quoting Brown v. Gardner, 513 U.S. 115, 118 (1994), and King v. St. Vincent's Hospital, 502 U.S. 215, 221 (1991)) ("[T]he meaning of statutory language, plain or not, depends on context"). The statute explicitly states that its terms set only the maximum allowable compensation and fee. The statute thus does not create an entitlement to any particular amount of compensation, but rather merely establishes the ceiling which a trustee's compensation may not exceed. Moreover, the percentage limits to which Dengel cites occur in the provision granting the Attorney General the authority, among his other supervisory responsibilities, to set standing trustees' fees. Setting a trustee's fee, within the outer limits prescribed by the statute, is thus wholly within the Attorney General's discretion.

Dengel argues that the statute's mandatory language, i.e. "the Attorney General . . . shall fix" a fee not to exceed the maximum annual compensation and percentage limits, 28 U.S.C. § 586(e)(emphasis added), means that the Attorney General has no discretion whatsoever in calculating such a fee. However, the fact that the Attorney General must set a fee, does not mean that he is unable to determine the best methods for calculation and payment of that fee. The statute simply does not address how the Attorney General is to determine a standing trustee's fee within the maximum compensation and percentage limits set by § 586(e), and the Attorney General is therefore free to develop whatever methods best serve the trustee system. Cf. In re: BDT Farms, Inc., 21 F.3d 1019, 1023 (10th Cir. 1994) (finding § 586(e) ambiguous as to how to calculate percentage fees and deferring to the EOUST's reasonable construction of the statute); Pelofsky v. Wallace, 102 F.3d 350, 354-55 (8th Cir. 1996) (finding same provision ambiguous).

Dengel's argument that the statute's silence on the order in which expenses and compensation are to be paid forecloses the U.S. Trustee's expenses-first policy ignores long-standing rules of statutory construction in the administrative context. See United States v. Wells, 519 U.S. 482, 496 (1997) (quoting NLRB v. Plasterers' Local Union No. 79, 404 U.S. 116, 129-130 (1971), and Girouard v. United States, 328 U.S. 61, 69 (1946)) ("[W]e have 'frequently cautioned that "[i]t is at best treacherous to find in congressional silence alone the adoption of a controlling rule of law"'").

Dengel cites to the interpretative canon expressio unius est exclusio alterius as support for his argument that the statute's identification of maximum limits on standing trustee compensation must mean that the Attorney General is unable to impose any other requirements on such compensation. But Congress did not illustrate one thing to the implied exclusion of others in § 586. Instead, that section merely sets a ceiling on standing trustees' compensation. The Attorney General, through the EOUST, is not exercising a new power not conferred on him by the statute, as was found to be the case in In re Brookover, 259 BR 884, 893 (Bankr. N.D. Ohio 2001) (Br. of Appellant at 22). Instead, the manner and order in which compensation and expenses are to be paid is precisely within the broad grant of statutory authority.

The Supreme Court, in Christensen v. Harris County, 529 U.S. 576 (2000), rejected an expressio unius argument similar to Dengel's. In Christensen, petitioners argued that a statutory provision requiring employers to permit employees to take compensatory time off implicitly prohibited employers from mandating that employees use their accrued compensatory time. The Supreme Court held that the statute spoke only to the situation in which employees requested compensatory time, and that the statute's silence regarding an employer requiring compensatory time to be taken could not be construed as a prohibition. Id. at 585.

In this case, the 1986 Act includes a specific requirement that the Attorney General set a fee for standing trustees within the parameters stated in the statute. As in Christensen, the statute's requirement that the Attorney General set a fee cannot be read as an implied prohibition on other actions taken by the Attorney General under his authority to supervise and remunerate standing trustees, so long as he complies with the specific limits in § 586.

II. The U.S. Trustee Correctly Calculated Dengel's Compensation and the U.S. Trustee System Fund is Entitled to Compensation Improperly Retained by the Standing Trustee.

The compensation orders set for the years 1990 to 1995 correctly calculated the compensation due to Dengel, as he acknowledged by accepting the terms of those orders through his direct assent and continued performance as a trustee. Though Dengel objected to the expenses-first policy, he elected to continue serving as a standing trustee with full knowledge that the policy would apply to him. The compensation orders reflect that policy, and Dengel does not contend that the U.S. Trustee erred in the application of its own policy, but rather that the policy should not have applied at all.

Dengel objects to the fact that in 1991 and 1992, his compensation was set at zero. Br. of Appellant at 26-28. As Dengel admits, his arguments on this point largely restate his attack on the EOUST's expenses-first, funds available policy, and they must fail for the reasons discussed above. In addition, the zero compensation orders were correctly calculated and are permissible, and even required, under the statute.

The compensation orders issued for each standing trustee each year reflect the statutory maximum limits in § 586 and the approved, budgeted expenses as submitted by the standing trustee. Where the projected expenses meet or exceed the level established by the maximum percentage fee and compensation under the statute, the compensation order will be set at zero. Zero compensation orders may thus be necessary in some circumstances in order to comply with the statutory caps on standing trustees' fees. In the two years in which Dengel received and accepted zero compensation orders, his submitted expenses left no room for compensation under the statutory maximum.

Contrary to Dengel's argument, the fact that the U.S. Trustee must approve expenses in order for them to be paid from the trust expense fund does not mean that the U.S. Trustee may not also seek to keep those expenses low. A proposed expense budget is approved based on information submitted by the standing trustee; the standing trustee thus retains the incentive under the expense-first policy to structure his budget in such a way that necessary expenses remain low enough to permit compensation.[8]

The standing trustee controls how his budget is presented, and knows his projected revenues for the year prior to submitting his budget. He is thus able to determine – based on his own estimates – whether, and to what extent, funds may be available for "compensation" after the payment of his projected expenses. Standing trustees are, or should be, fully aware of the trade-off between expenses and compensation under the statutory maximum, and should be bound by their decisions to accept compensation orders based on their own budgets. Allowing compensation to be paid first regardless of the level of expenses, as Dengel

[8] For example, a standing trustee's proposed expenses may include costs for overhead items such as office computers. The U.S. Trustee may approve those costs because money for computers, within a reasonable range, is a common requirement of modern offices. However, the kind of computers, how frequently they are replaced, and the percentage of their use allocated to approved standing trustee activities are within the power of the standing trustee. The approval procedure would thus involve the U.S. Trustee approving computer costs as generally reasonable expenses. But the higher the expenses proposed by the standing trustee, the greater the risk that there would be insufficient funds left to pay him the maximum allowable compensation.

advocates, would provide no incentive to keep expenses low and refrain from carrying them forward year to year, to the cost of the farmer's estate.

28 U.S.C. § 586 states that money retained as compensation in excess of five percent of payments or the actual expenses and compensation as calculated under the statute must be returned to the U.S. Trustee System Fund. 28 U.S.C. § 586(e)(2). Thus, the money currently located in the Bank One "TF-12" account and court repository, which represents a portion of the amount withheld by Dengel in excess of his allowable compensation under the expenses-first policy, was properly found to be due and owing to the U.S. Trustee. Dengel argues that even if the money is not legally his, he is nonetheless entitled to it as a matter of property law. However, the disputed funds represent the over-withheld monies from family farmers' estates, and therefore must be returned to the U.S. Trustee directly under the statute.

CONCLUSION

For the foregoing reasons, this Court should affirm the decision of the district court.

RULES

I. JURISDICTION

This court has jurisdiction over this appeal pursuant to 28 U.S.C. §158(a)(1) and 28 U.S.C. §1334. This matter is an appeal from an order of the United States Bankruptcy Court for the Eastern District of Texas, Lufkin Division, Hon. Bill Parker presiding, which dismissed the Appellant's Chapter 7 bankruptcy case by order of March 28, 2007.

II. PARTIES AND PROCEDURAL HISTORY

The Appellant, Sam Dillon, filed a pro se Chapter 7 bankruptcy petition, case no. 07-90017, in the United States Bankruptcy Court for the Eastern District of Texas, Lufkin Division, on January 16, 2007. The Appellee is the United States Trustee for Region 6, which is comprised of the Northern and Eastern Judicial Districts of Texas. Pursuant to 28 U.S.C. §586(a)(3), the United States Trustee is empowered to "...supervise the administration of cases and trustees in cases under chapter 7, 11, 12, 13 of title 11." Pursuant to 11 U.S.C. § 307, the United States Trustee has standing to "...raise and appear and be heard on any issue in any case or proceeding" under the United States Bankruptcy Code, 11 U.S.C. §§ 101-1532 (the "Bankruptcy Code").

On February 2, 2007, the United States Trustee moved to dismiss Dillon's chapter 7 bankruptcy case. Dillon filed a response to the Motion to Dismiss on February 15, 2007. Following an hearing conducted on March 27, 2007, the bankruptcy court granted the motion to dismiss by an order dated March 28, 2007. On April 9, 2007, Dillon filed his notice of appeal, and on May 4, 2007, the clerk of the bankruptcy court certified the transmission of the record on appeal to this Court.

III. STANDARD OF REVIEW

A district court sitting in review of a bankruptcy court employs the same standards of review as a federal court of appeal: the bankruptcy court's findings of fact are reviewed for clear error, and its conclusions of law are reviewed de novo. See 28 U.S.C. § 158(c); Fed.R. Bankr. P. 8013; Robertson v. Dennis (In re Dennis), 330 F.3d 696, 701 (5th Cir.2003); Century Indem. Co. v. Nat'l Gypsum Co. Settlement Trust (In re National Gypsum Co.), 208 F.3d 498, 504 (5th Cir.), cert. denied, 531 U.S. 871, 121 S.Ct. 172, 148 L.Ed.2d 117 (2000); In re T-H New Orleans Ltd. Partnership, 116 F.3d 790 (5th Cir.1997); and In re Consolidated Bancshares, Inc., 785 F.2d 1249 (5th Cir. 1986).

IV. STATEMENT OF THE ISSUE

The sole issue before this Court is whether the bankruptcy court erred in dismissing Dillon’s chapter 7 bankruptcy case due to his failure to comply with section 109(h) of the Bankruptcy Code.

V. STATEMENT OF THE CASE

Dillon filed a petition for chapter 7 bankruptcy relief on January 16, 2007. Under the Bankruptcy Abuse Prevention and Consumer Protection Act of 2005, individual debtors are required either to obtain credit counseling prior to the filing of their bankruptcy petition, or must file a request to be excused from credit counseling requirements along with their bankruptcy petition. See 11 U.S.C. 109(h); Fed. R. Bankr. P. 1007(b)(3) [Interim]. Dillon did neither of these things. As a result, on February 7, 2007, the United States Trustee moved to dismiss Dillon’s bankruptcy case. [Dkt. 7]. Thereafter, on February 26, 2007, Dillon filed an untimely request to be excused from the credit counseling requirements of the Bankruptcy Code, alleging that he is both "incapacitated" and "disabled."[1]

On March 28, 2007, the bankruptcy court granted the United States Trustee's motion and dismissed Dillon's bankruptcy case. [Dkt. 16] At the hearing on the motion to dismiss, for which Dillon presented no testimony or evidence, the bankruptcy court observed that Dillon had been an "articulate representative" of his interests in proceedings before the bankruptcy court, and further noted that notwithstanding Dillon's claims of physical disability, he was able to personally appear in court and was "clearly capable of engaging in a telephone conversation with a credit counselor." As a result, the court found that Dillon's physical condition was not an "incapacity or disabilty" sufficient to relieve him from the Bankruptcy Code's credit counseling requirements. [Tr. of March 27, 2007, hearing at 9-10].

VI. ARGUMENT AND AUTHORITIES.

Section 109(h) of the Bankruptcy Code reflects a Congressional intention that bankruptcy relief should be available only to persons who have made a good-faith effort to seek credit counseling prior to making the decision to file for bankruptcy. In relevant part, section 109(h) provides that:

> [A]n individual may not be a debtor under this title unless such individual has, during the 180-day period preceding the date of filing of the petition by such individual, received from an approved nonprofit budget and credit counseling agency described in section 111(a) an individual or group briefing (including a briefing conducted by telephone or

[1] Dillon's opening brief suggests that the United States Trustee's motion to dismiss "wrongfully" claimed that Dillon had not requested an exemption from credit counseling requirements. In fact, while Dillon eventually filed such a request, the docket of the bankruptcy case reflects that Dillon did not file this request until February 26, 2007– 19 days after the United States Trustee filed his motion to dismiss. In any event, as discussed above, Dillon was required to have filed his request for exemption along with his initial bankruptcy petition, which he failed to do.

> on the Internet) that outlined the opportunities for available credit counseling and assisted such individual in performing a related budget analysis.

11 U.S.C. § 109(h)(1).[2]

In seeking to be excused from the requirements of section 109(h)(1), Dillon relies on a limited exception under by section109(h)(4), which provides:

> The requirements of paragraph (1) shall not apply with respect to a debtor whom the court determines, after notice and hearing, is unable to complete those requirements because of incapacity, disability, or active military duty in a military combat zone. For the purposes of this paragraph, incapacity means that the debtor is impaired by reason of mental illness or mental deficiency so that he is incapable of realizing and making rational decisions with respect to his financial responsibilities; and "disability" means that the debtor is so physically impaired as to be unable, after reasonable effort, to participate in an in person, telephone, or Internet briefing required under paragraph (1).

11 U.S.C. §109(h)(4) (emphasis added).

Section 109(h)(4) does not exempt all debtors who claim a disability from the credit counseling requirements of section 109(h). Rather, by its plain terms, section 109(h)(4) is a narrow exception that applies in cases of disabilities that render the debtor unable, after reasonable effort, to participate in a credit counseling briefing. See In re Hall, 347 B.R. 532, 545 (Bankr. N.D.W.V. 2006) (noting that section 109(h)(4) was intended to address the “absurd situation” that would result if debtors suffering from Alzheimer’s disease or similar conditions were required to undergo credit counseling).

Furthermore, the debtor bears the burden of demonstrating that the section 109(h)(4) exception is applicable. See In re Tulper, 345 B.R. 322, 326 (Bankr. D. Colo. 2006). In particular, the debtor must demonstrate three elements: “(1) the debtor is severely physically impaired; (2) the debtor has made a reasonable effort, despite the impairment, to participate in the prepetition credit counseling; and (3) the debtor is unable, because of the impairment, to participate meaningfully in an in person, telephone, or Internet briefing prepetition." Id.

The bankruptcy court's finding that Dillon failed to satisfy the section 109(h)(4) test was not clearly erroneous. Although Dillon offered no evidence as to the nature or extent of his illness, the bankruptcy court determined, based on its own in-person observation, that Dillon was intelligent and articulate and, at the very minimum, fully capable of participating in a telephonic credit counseling session. [Tr. of March 27, 2007, hearing at 9-10]. The bankruptcy court's findings on this point are entitled to a considerable degree of deference. See Reich v. Lancaster, 55 F.3d 1034 (5th Cir. 1995) (noting that on appeal, trial judge's "unique perspective to evaluate witnesses and to consider the entire context of the evidence must be respected") (internal citations omitted). In addition, the record is devoid of any indication that Dillon has ever made a good faith effort to seek credit counseling notwithstanding his disability.

Based on the foregoing, Dillon was not eligible to be a debtor in a bankruptcy case under section 109(h) of the Bankruptcy Code. As a result, the bankruptcy court properly dismissed Dillon's chapter 7 case. See In re Henderson, 364 B.R. 906, 908 (Bankr. N.D. Tex. 2007) (holding that court may dismiss case where credit counseling requirements of section 109(h) are not satisfied); accord In re Sosa, 336 B.R. 113 (Bankr. W.D. Tex. 2005); In re Jones, 352 B.R. 813 (Bankr .S.D. Tex. 2006).

VII. CONCLUSION

For the foregoing reasons, the bankruptcy court's order dismissing Dillon's bankruptcy case should be affirmed.

STATEMENT OF JURISDICTION

The United States Bankruptcy Court for the Eastern District of Pennsylvania had jurisdiction over the underlying bankruptcy case and this matter as a core proceeding under 28 U.S.C. § 1334 and 28 U.S.C. §157(b)(1), (b)(2)(A) & (B).

This Court has jurisdiction to adjudicate appeals from "final judgments, orders and decrees" of the bankruptcy court pursuant to 28 U.S.C. § 158(a)(1). The bankruptcy court's January 20, 2009 order dismissing the Dixons' bankruptcy case and February 26, 2009 order denying the Dixons' Motion for Reconsideration are final orders over which this Court has jurisdiction. See In re BH & P, Inc. 949 F.2d 1300, 1306-07 (3d Cir. 1991); *F/S Airlease II, Inc. v. STATEMENT OF APPELLEE'S RESPONSES TO ISSUES PRESENTED BY APPELLANTS

I. The Dixons did not challenge the order dismissing their case in their Notice of Appeal.

II. The Bankruptcy Court did not abuse its discretion in denying the Dixons' Motion for Reconsideration because it properly found cause justifying dismissal of the bankruptcy petition.

STATEMENT OF THE CASE

Kenneth A. Dixon and Valerie D. Dixon filed a chapter 13 petition for relief on January 21, 2008.[1] This was Mr. Dixon's fourth bankruptcy case and the Dixons' second joint filing.[2] The Dixons initially filed inaccurate and incomplete schedules.[3] They failed to list all of their bank accounts, failed to accurately state the value of their accounts, failed to list two of the four automobiles they owned, and failed to correctly disclose Mr. Dixon's sole ownership interest in certain real property located at 820 South 56th Street, Philadelphia, Pennsylvania (the "Real Property").[4] Their original and amended schedules indicated that the Real Property was owned jointly by Kenneth Dixon and his mother when in fact it was titled solely in Kenneth Dixon's name.[5] Mr. Dixon affirmed this representation in testimony before the bankruptcy court in connection with thirteen separate motions filed by the Dixons seeking to avoid certain judgment liens.[6] The bankruptcy court relied on this testimony in rendering its decision on those motions.[7] The Dixons also gave conflicting testimony regarding the value of the Real Property, and gave conflicting testimony with respect to the filing of tax returns.[8] Finally, the Dixons failed to produce all documents and information requested of them despite orders by the bankruptcy court. Even after multiple amendments to their schedules and a 2004 examination conducted by the United States Trustee, the Dixons' schedules were still not accurate and various questions regarding their financial affairs remained unanswered.[9]

On October 29, 2008 the United States Trustee filed a motion to dismiss the Dixons' bankruptcy case pursuant to 11 U.S.C. § 1307(c) alleging that the Dixons' repeated failure to file accurate schedules and provide complete and accurate information regarding their financial affairs demonstrated cause justifying dismissal of the case.[10]

After conducting a hearing, the bankruptcy court entered an Order (and Memorandum Opinion) dismissing the Dixons' bankruptcy case on January 20, 2009 (the "Dismissal Order").[11] The Dixons filed a Motion for Reconsideration and/or Motion to Vacate the Dismissal Order on January 30, 2009 ("Motion for Reconsideration").[12] The United States Trustee and Rachel Dorsey, a creditor, opposed the Motion for Reconsideration.[13] After a hearing, the bankruptcy court entered an Order denying the Dixons' Motion for Reconsideration on February 26, 2009 ("Order Denying Reconsideration").

On March 7, 2009, the Dixons filed a notice of appeal stating in pertinent part:

> Kenneth A. & Valerie D. Dixon, Debtors, appeals [sic] under 28 U.S.C. §158(a) or (b) from the judgment, order, or decree of Judge Diane W. Sigmund, U.S.

> Bankruptcy Judge, denying Debtors' Motion for Reconsideration and/or Motion to Vacate Dismissal Order, entered in this Bankruptcy case on the 26th day of February, 2009.

Not. of Appeal, March 7, 2009, Docket No. 203. The Dixons attached the Order Denying Reconsideration to the notice of appeal. The notice of appeal did not reference the Dismissal Order. The Dixons' March 31, 2009 statement of issues on appeal framed the issues on appeal as follows:

> a. Whether the Bankruptcy Court applied the wrong legal standard, application of fair market value [In re Miller, 299 F.3d 183, 186 (3d Cir. 2002] rather than speculate value to determine the Motions to Avoid, as a factor for dismissing the case.
> b. Whether the Bankruptcy Court applied the wrong legal standard, in that it should have applied the Atypical Debtors Conduct standard of Marrama vs. Citizens Bank of Mass., 549 U.S. 365 (2007) to determine whether to dismiss this case; and > c. Whether the Bankruptcy Court, in the absence of fraudulent conduct, should have applied less drastic sanctions short of dismissal of this case.

Statement of Issues on Appeal, March 17, 2009, Docket No. 208.

ARGUMENT

I. The Dixons did not challenge the order dismissing their case in their notice of appeal so they have forfeited arguments on the merits of that issue.

Federal Rule of Appellate Procedure 3(c) requires that a notice of appeal "designate the judgment, order or part thereof appealed from." The Dixons' appeal "the judgment, order, or decree of Judge Diane W. Sigmund, U.S. Bankruptcy Judge, denying Dixons' Motion for Reconsideration and/or Motion to Vacate Dismissal Order, entered in this Bankruptcy case on the 26th day of February, 2009." Not. of Appeal, March 7, 2009, Docket No. 203.

Thus, the Dixons only challenged the Order Denying Reconsideration, not the Dismissal Order, and on appeal, they can challenge only the former, not the latter. See Aybar v. Crispin-Reyes, 118 F.3d 10 (1st Cir. 1997); Irving Trust Co. Of New York v. Nelson (In re Schulte-United, Inc.), 59

F.2d 553, 559 (8th Cir.1932) (holding that a motion to vacate an order, and an appeal from the denial of that motion, is not the equivalent of an appeal from the order itself, therefore, the reviewing court can only review the propriety of denying the motion to vacate).

The Dixons' opening brief fails to argue any basis supporting a finding of error in the bankruptcy court's denial of reconsideration of the Dismissal Order. They cite no manifest errors of law or fact that would support reconsideration of the Dismissal Order. See Harsco Corp. v. Zlotnicki, 779 F.2d 906, 908 (3d Cir. 1985) ("purpose of a motion for reconsideration is to correct manifest errors of law or fact or to present newly discovered evidence").

The Dixons substantively argue the merits of dismissal and seek to set aside the Dismissal Order. However, appellate review in this instance must be limited to the Order Denying Reconsideration, which should be affirmed given the absence of any basis supporting a finding that the bankruptcy court abused its discretion in denying reconsideration. See, e.g., Max's Seafood Cafe v. Quinteros, 176 F.3d 669, 673 (3d Cir. 1999) (decision to grant or deny motion for reconsideration reviewed under and abuse of discretion standard); Marta Group v. County Appliance Co., Inc., 79 B.R. 200 (E.D. Pa. 1987) (standard of review of a bankruptcy judge's denial of a motion for reconsideration is whether the bankruptcy judge abused his discretion).

II. The Bankruptcy Court did not abuse its discretion in denying the Dixons' Motion for Reconsideration because it properly found cause justifying dismissal of the bankruptcy petition.

To the extent the Dixons' notice of appeal can be read to appeal the Dismissal Order, they appear to argue that the bankruptcy court applied the wrong legal standard in finding that "cause" existed under 11 U.S.C. § 1307 justifying dismissal of their case. Therefore, the bankruptcy court erred in denying reconsideration of the Dismissal Order. The Dixons further conflate these arguments with unsubstantiated contentions that the bankruptcy court's factual findings were erroneous.

The motion of the United States Trustee and the holding of the bankruptcy court were grounded upon 11 U.S.C. § 1307(c), which provides in pertinent part that "on request of a party in interest or the United States trustee and after notice and a hearing, the court may . . . dismiss a case under this chapter, whichever is in the best interests of creditors and the estate, for cause . . .." Section 1307 enumerates several non-exclusive factors establishing cause under section 1307.[14] The determination of cause under section 1307, as well as the resulting sanction, is subject to the [14] The factors enumerated in section 1307 include: (1) unreasonable delay by the debtor that is prejudicial to creditors; (2) nonpayment of any fees and charges required under chapter 123 of title 28; (3) failure to file a plan timely under section 1321 of this title; (4) failure to commence making timely payments under section 1326 of this title; (5) denial of confirmation of a plan under section 1325 of this title and denial of a request made for additional time for filing another plan or a modification of a plan; (6) material default by the debtor with respect to a term of a confirmed plan; (7) revocation of the order of confirmation under section 1330 of this title, and denial of confirmation of a modified plan under section 1329 of this title; (8) termination of a confirmed plan by reason of the occurrence of a condition specified in the plan other than completion of payments under the plan; (9) only on request of the United States trustee, failure of the debtor to file, within fifteen days, or such additional time as the court may allow, after the filing of the petition commencing such case, the information required by paragraph (1) of section 521; (10) only on request of the United States trustee, failure to timely file the information required by paragraph (2) of section 521; or (11) failure of the debtor to pay any domestic support obligation that first becomes payable after the date of the filing of the petition. 11 U.S.C. § 1307(c). Because section 1307 uses the word "including," these factors are illustrative rather than limiting. 11 U.S.C. 102(3) (Rule of construction for the word "including" in the Bankruptcy Code).

considerable discretion of the bankruptcy court. See, e.g., In re Orawsky, 387 B.R. 128, 137 and n. 15 (Bankr. E.D. Pa. 2008), citing In re Kane, No. 94-16181, 1998 WL 259945, at *3 (Bankr. E.D. Pa. May 18, 1998) ("the decision of whether to dismiss a case under § 1307(c) is within the discretion of the Court"); In re Cottle, 189 B.R. 591 (Bankr. E.D. Pa. 1995); In re Samuel, 77 B.R. 520 (Bankr. E.D. Pa. 1987); 8 Collier on Bankruptcy, ¶ 1307.04[4] (15th ed. rev.) ("As under the other subsections of section 1307(c) [i.e., sections other than § 1307(c)(4)], the court's power to dismiss or convert is discretionary"). The bankruptcy court weighs all relevant factors and determines whether individually, or collectively, they establish cause.

The bankruptcy court made numerous findings supporting its decision that the "totality of circumstances" justified dismissal of the Dixons' bankruptcy case for cause under section 1307.[15] Among other things, the bankruptcy court expressly found that:

> 1. "[T]he Debtors have played fast and loose with the Court;"[16]
> 2. "[T]he Debtors have at best adopted a cavalier attitude toward the filing of their schedules, leaving to the Court and creditors the unacceptable burden of fettering out the true facts;"[17]
> 3. "The original Schedules were replete with material inaccuracies, failing to disclose vehicles owned and bank accounts held and misstating the ownership of the 56th Street Property;"[18]
> 4. "[E]ven with the filing of amended schedules and Kenneth's submission to a Rule 2004 examination, the Debtors have still not provided accurate and complete

[15] Mem. Op., Jan. 20, 2009 at 7, Docket No. 185. The Dixons also argue in their brief that the bankruptcy court applied improper valuation standards in determining the value of the Real Property. The merits of this argument are irrelevant because the Dismissal Order was based on an assessment of the totality of circumstances, not any one factor. The bankruptcy court recognized in its order denying reconsideration (while disagreeing with the Dixons' valuation position) that this issue would not have altered its decision. See Order Denying Mot. Reconsid., February 26, 2009, at n. 3, Docket No. 200.

information;”[19]

5. “The values of the real estate assets list have been impeached by contradicting evidence of values affixed by Debtors for insuring same assets. Kenneth’s testimony failed to put these disparities to rest;”[20]

6. “Bank documents requested have not been produced allegedly because the Debtors did not wish to incur cost, suggesting that they still do not comprehend their responsibilities in this case which has been pending for one year without confirmation of a Chapter 13 plan;”[21] and

7. “Parties in interest have still been unable to verify the assets held and their value.”[22]

Independently, each of these findings would be sufficient to establish cause for dismissal. Collectively, they make clear that the bankruptcy court did not abuse its discretion in dismissing the Dixons’ case for cause. The Dixons fail to cite anything in the record establishing that the bankruptcy court’s findings were clearly erroneous. Both the Dismissal Order and the accompanying Memorandum Opinion expressly indicate that the bankruptcy court dismissed the case for cause based on the “totality of the circumstances.” Id. at 7.

The Dixons suggest that the bankruptcy court erred in the application of its factual findings, by employing the improper legal standard in concluding that “[b]ased upon the totality of the circumstances as described above this Chapter 13 case shall be dismissed.” Mem. Op., Jan. 20, 2009 at 7, Docket No. 185. In challenging the bankruptcy court’s ruling, the Dixons focus exclusively on the issue of bad faith, claiming without support in the record, that the bankruptcy court’s findings were erroneous and dismissal was improper under Marrama v. Citizens Bank, 549 U.S. 365, 127 S. Ct. 1105 (2007).

First, bad faith is but one reason to dismiss a chapter 13 case. 11 U.S.C. §§ 102(3) and 1307. The record in this case establishes that there were multiple bases for dismissal. For example, the bankruptcy court expressly noted that section 1307(c)(1) was implicated, explaining that "so long as there is doubt about the accuracy of the Dixons' disclosures, plan confirmation, which has been continued five times, shall elude and creditors shall be unreasonably delayed." Mem. Op., Jan. 20, 2009 at 6, Docket No. 185. This Court can affirm unless the bankruptcy court was clearly erroneous in finding each of them.

Second, Marrama does not stand for the proposition asserted by the Dixons that, as a pre-requisite to dismissal, the bankruptcy court was obligated to factually conclude that they engaged in conduct intended to defraud creditors. See App. Brief at 13. However, this conclusion is expressly contradictory to the language of section 1307(c), which is not limited to bad faith.

In Marrama, a chapter 7 debtor sought to convert his case to chapter 13 after the trustee and creditors discovered that he had materially misstated the value and ownership of certain real property in his schedules. Marrama, 549 U.S. at 368-69. The Marrama decision questioned whether the bankruptcy court could restrict the debtor's absolute right to convert under the bankruptcy code, to prevent an abuse of process. Id. at 374-75.

At best, the Court in Marrama noted in dicta (in a footnote) that it had "no occasion here to articulate with precision what conduct qualifies as 'bad faith' sufficient to permit a bankruptcy court judge to dismiss a Chapter 13 case . . .. It suffices to emphasize that a debtor's conduct must, in fact, be atypical. . . ." Id. at 375, n.11. Thus, the Dixons seem to further argue that unless their conduct was "atypical" the bankruptcy court erred in dismissing their case. See App. Brief at 13.

The record clearly demonstrates that the conduct of the Dixons is anything but typical of chapter 13 debtors. A failure to disclose vehicles and bank accounts on schedules is not typical. A cavalier attitude by the Dixons toward the filing of their schedules, leaving to the Court and creditors the unacceptable burden of fettering out the true facts is not typical. The fact that the Dixons' original schedules were replete with material inaccuracies is not typical. The filing of amended schedules and Mr. Dixon's submission to a Rule 2004 examination, while still failing to provide accurate and complete information is not typical. See Mem. Op., Jan. 20, 2009 at 6, Docket No. 185. The inconsistencies with respect to the ownership and valuation of the Real Property are not typical. Bank documents requested but not being produced, allegedly because the Dixons did not wish to incur cost, is not typical. The case being pending for one year without confirmation of a Chapter 13 plan is not typical. The inability of parties in interest to verify the assets held and their value is not typical. The atypical conduct of the Dixons clearly supported the findings of the bankruptcy court.[23]

Although, the record reflects that the Dixons' conduct in this case was atypical, the conclusion is unnecessary, because the bankruptcy court never expressly ruled that its decision to dismiss was based solely on bad faith. While it recognized bad faith as one reason to dismiss, the court ruled that dismissal was warranted based on a number of several circumstances. See Mem. Op., Jan. 20, 2009 at 2, 5 and 7, Docket No. 185.

23 The Dixons also cite In re Tamecki, 229 F.3d 205, 207 (3d Cir. 2000), for the proposition that "dismissal based on lack of good faith . . . should be confined carefully and is generally utilized only in those egregious cases that entail concealed or misrepresented assets and/or sources of income, lavish lifestyles, and intention to avoid a large single debt upon conduct akin to fraud, misconduct or gross negligence." The Dixons claim that their conduct does not rise to such level. However, the Dixons omit that the burden to demonstrate "good faith" is theirs. Id. at 207. S*ee also In re Zick*, 931 F.2d 1124, 1126-27 (6th Cir. 1991); In re Marks, 174 B.R. 37, 40 (E.D. Pa. 1994). The Dixons do not demonstrate their good faith or the bankruptcy court's failure to consider same. This failure on the Dixons' part to prove their good faith leaves this Court unable to find error with the bankruptcy court's ruling. See In re Tamecki, 229 F.3d 205 at 208.

For these reasons, the United States Trustee respectfully asks this Court to affirm the order of the bankruptcy court entered below.

LINDA EKSTROM STANLEY, UNITED STATES TRUSTEE
for Region 17, Appellant,

v.

McCORMICK, BARSTOW, SHEPPARD, WAYTE & CARRUTH, Appellee.

ON APPEAL FROM
THE UNITED STATES DISTRICT COURT FOR THE EASTERN DISTRICT OF CALIFORNIA

BRIEF FOR THE APPELLANT, UNITED STATES TRUSTEE

STATEMENT OF SUBJECT MATTER & APPELLATE JURISDICTION

The bankruptcy court had jurisdiction over the underlying chapter 7 case pursuant to 28 U.S.C. § 157 and 28 U.S.C. § 1334. Supervision of a case trustee and review of final distribution to claimants, including professionals, in a bankruptcy case constitute core proceedings under 28 U.S.C. §157(b)(2). Thus, the bankruptcy court's jurisdiction was properly based on 28 U.S.C. § 157(b)(1). On May 29, 1998, the bankruptcy court entered its order denying the disgorgement of fees previously paid to debtor's counsel. (Appellant United States Trustee's Excerpts of Record ("ER") 1-17.)

Pursuant to Fed. R. Bankr. P. 8002(a), the United States Trustee timely noticed her appeal from the bankruptcy court's order to the United States District Court for the Eastern District of California on June 8, 1998. (ER 18-20.) The district court, in reviewing the appeal, properly exercised its jurisdiction under 28 U.S.C. § 158(a). On August 13, 1998, the district court dismissed the United States Trustee's appeal for lack of standing. (ER 21-31.) The district court's order was a final, appealable ruling under 28 U.S.C. § 158(d) that conclusively determined that the United States Trustee had no standing to participate on appeal.

Pursuant to Fed. R. Bankr. P. 8015, the United States Trustee timely moved for rehearing of this decision on August 21, 1998. (ER 64, District Court Docket ("D.Ct.Dkt.")[1/] Nos. 23, 24, 25.) On September 22, 1998, the district court denied the motion for rehearing. (ER 32-37.) The United States Trustee filed her notice of appeal on November 19, 1998, which notice was timely pursuant to Fed. R. App.

[1/] All references to the record before the district court ("D.Ct.Dkt.") shall be to the docket number of the pleading and the page number if appropriate.

P. 4(a)(1). (ER 38-41.) This Court's jurisdiction is therefore based on 28 U.S.C. §§ 158(d) and 1291.

STATEMENT OF THE ISSUE

The issue presented by this appeal is as follows: Whether section 307 of the Bankruptcy Code authorizes a United States Trustee to appeal an order issued by the bankruptcy court.

STATEMENT OF THE CASE

A. Nature of the Case, Course of Proceedings and Disposition Below.

This appeal involves a district court's decision to deny the United States Trustee standing to participate on appeal. Before the bankruptcy court, the United States Trustee supervised actions taken by the private case trustee, including his proposed final report of distribution. Upon further review of the proposed report, the case trustee sought disgorgement of payments previously received by appellee McCormick, Barstow, Sheppard, Wayte & Carruth, counsel for the former debtor in possession (hereinafter, "McCormick, Barstow" or the "law firm"). Disgorgement was requested so that the case trustee could distribute the limited monies available to one class of administrative claimants on a pro rata basis as the Bankruptcy Code requires.

Because the motion raised substantive issues of statutory interpretation affecting the administration of bankruptcy cases, the United States Trustee filed supportive pleadings and argued the matter before the bankruptcy court. The bankruptcy court denied the motion. The United States Trustee appealed in order to correct the underlying substantive decision.

On appeal, McCormick, Barstow moved to dismiss the United States Trustee as a party to the appeal for lack of standing. The district court granted that motion and dismissed the United States Trustee as a party to the case. The United States Trustee appeals the district court's decision.

B. Statutory Background.

1. Bankruptcy Reform Act of 1978.

Through the Bankruptcy Reform Act of 1978, Congress revamped the federal bankruptcy system and established the general framework that currently exists. Congress overhauled the prior system to address three endemic problems: (1) the inherent conflict created when judges assumed judicial and administrative responsibilities; (2) the lack of creditor participation in the system; and (3) the perception of bias or actual cronyism that the existing framework fostered. H.R. Rep. No. 595, 95th Cong., 1st Sess. 96 (1977), reprinted in 1978 U.S.C.C.A.N. 6057.

To reform these fundamental problems, Congress established the United States Trustees in the Executive Branch as > the principal administrative officers of the bankruptcy system. Bankruptcy judges, relieved of administrative responsibilities, will take a more passive role, consistent with their judicial responsibilities, which will serve to eliminate the institutional bias that exists in the bankruptcy system today.

H.R. Rep. No. 595, 95th Cong., 1st Sess. 101 (1977), reprinted in 1978 U.S.C.C.A.N. 6063. Because "active supervision [in bankruptcy cases] is essential," Congress observed that the United States Trustees also would "fill the vacuum of lack of creditor participation, where necessary to assure fair and efficient administration." H.R. Rep. No. 595, 95th Cong., 1st Sess. 88, 100 (1977), reprinted in 1978 U.S.C.C.A.N. 6050, 6061.

2. United States Trustees: "Watch-dogs" of the Bankruptcy System.

Congress created the United States Trustees as the new "watch-dogs" in the bankruptcy arena. The success of this system led Congress in 1986 to expand the United States Trustees from their original 18 pilot districts to a nationwide program housed permanently within the Department of Justice. Bankruptcy Judges, United States Trustees, and Family Farmer Bankruptcy Act of 1986, Pub. L. 99-554, 100 Stat. 3088 (1986).

The duties of the United States Trustee are set forth in 28 U.S.C. 586(a). Principally, a United States Trustee is required to "establish, maintain, and supervise a panel of private trustees that are eligible and available to serve as trustees in cases under chapter 7 of title 11" and to "supervise the administration of" all chapter 7, 11, 12, or 13 bankruptcy cases within a specified geographic region. 28 U.S.C. 586(a)(1) & (3)(A)-(H).

When it established the United States Trustees throughout the nation, Congress simultaneously enacted statutory language to empower these officials to fulfill their obligations. Through that language, which is codified in section 307 of the Bankruptcy Code, > [t]he U.S. Trustee is given standing to raise, appear, and be heard on any issue in any case or proceeding under title 11, U.S. Code – except that the U.S. Trustee may not file a plan in a chapter 11 case. In this manner, the U.S. Trustee is given the same right to be heard as a party in interest, but retains the discretion to decide when a matter of concern to the proper administration of the bankruptcy laws should be raised.

H.R. Rep. No. 764, 99th Cong., 2d Sess. 27 (1986), reprinted in 1986 U.S.C.C.A.N. 5227, 5240.

C. Statement of Facts.

1. Proceedings Below In the Bankruptcy Court.

The underlying bankruptcy case began when the debtor, Donovon Corporation (the "debtor"), an electrical and general contractor, sought relief under the reorganization provisions of chapter 11 of the Bankruptcy Code on February 19, 1991. (ER 42; Bankruptcy Court Docket ("Bankr.Ct.Dkt.")[2/] No. 1.) On April 6, 1993, the debtor asked the court for permission to convert the case voluntarily to a liquidation under chapter 7. (ER 52; Bankr.Ct.Dkt. No. 70.) 11 U.S.C. § 1112(a). The court granted this request. (ER 52; Bankr.Ct.Dkt. No. 71.) On April 7, 1993, Patrick Kavanagh ("Mr. Kavanagh") was appointed Chapter 7 trustee. (ER 52; Bankr.Ct.Dkt. No. 72.)[3/]

[2/] "Bankr.Ct.Dkt." denotes references to the Clerk's Record in the bankruptcy court. Such references shall be to the docket number of the pleading and the page number if appropriate.

[3/] Before the case was converted, the then debtor in possession asked for and received permission to retain McCormick, Barstow as its counsel. (ER 2-3, 43; Bankr.Ct.Dkt. No. 5.) See 11 U.S.C. §§ 327, 1107(a). Both before and after conversion, the law firm filed applications to obtain fees under section 330 of the Bankruptcy Code for services that they had rendered to the estate. (ER 3-5.)

The United States Trustee and one creditor objected to the final fee application in part because payment of this claim was premature. (ER 5-6.) These parties contended that any award should be delayed until chapter 7 administrative expenses were determined so that payment could be made pro rata in accordance

After his appointment, Mr. Kavanagh administered the remaining assets of the estate. (See, e.g., ER 56; Bankr.Ct.Dkt. No. 110.) 11 U.S.C. § 704. He obtained sufficient funds to pay all chapter 7 administrative expenses in full but he did not obtain enough monies to pay all chapter 11 administrative expenses completely. (ER 7.) Pursuant to section 704(9) and the Memorandum of Understanding between the Executive Office for United States Trustees and the Administrative Office of the United States Courts Regarding Case Closing and Post Confirmation Chapter 11 Monitoring, Mr. Kavanagh submitted a proposed final report of distribution to the United States Trustee for her review. (ER 12; D.Ct.Dkt. No. 12, Appellant's Memorandum of Points and Authorities in Support of Objection to Motion to Dismiss Appeal, pp. 2-3.) The United States Trustee called to Mr. Kavanagh's attention that his proposed distribution of assets for the chapter 11 administrative claimants was not pro rata as required by section 726 of the Bankruptcy Code. (Id.) Upon further review and consultation with the United States Trustee, Mr. Kavanagh determined that he needed to seek disgorgement with the Code. At the hearing on this application, McCormick, Barstow represented that it was "seeking allowance of these fees, not payment," and the court granted the application subject to review later in the case when other expenses had been determined. (Id. See also D.Ct.Dkt. No. 13, Appellant's Request for Judicial Notice in Support of Objection to Motion to Dismiss, Ex. 2, pp. 9-10.) The final order stated that approval was "with confirmation of approval of all prior fees and expenses." (ER 6.)

from McCormick, Barstow so that all administrative claimants for the chapter 11 case could receive equal payments.

He filed a motion for disgorgement on January 9, 1998, and a hearing was scheduled. (ER 58; Bankr.Ct.Dkt. Nos. 124, 129.) On February 19, 1998, the United States Trustee filed pleadings supporting the motion. (ER 58-59; Bankr.Ct.Dkt. Nos. 127, 128, 133, 135.) The law firm also filed opposition pleadings, which addressed the merits of the United States Trustee's arguments. (ER 59; Bankr.Ct.Dkt. Nos. 131, 132.) McCormick, Barstow did not contend at any time before the bankruptcy court that the United States Trustee did not have standing to participate in this matter.

After a hearing, the bankruptcy court denied the trustee's motion by order entered on May 28, 1998. (ER 1-17.) The United States Trustee noticed her appeal on June 8, 1998. (ER 18-20.) The trustee joined in the appeal by notice filed on June 12, 1998. (ER 60; Bankr.Ct.Dkt. No. 144.)

2. Proceedings Before the District Court.

On appeal, McCormick, Barstow asked the district court to dismiss the United States Trustee's appeal for lack of standing.[4/] (ER 63; D.Ct.Dkt. Nos. 5, 6, [4/] Simultaneously, the law firm moved to dismiss the case trustee's appeal and moved to strike parts of the record designated by the United States Trustee. (ER

7.) McCormick, Barstow, ignoring the watchdog role of the United States Trustee, argued that she did not have a pecuniary interest in the case and that she had not demonstrated a sufficient public interest in the matter. The United States Trustee opposed the motion, relying on the plain language of section 307 and the existing case law, which unanimously holds that United States Trustees have standing to participate in a bankruptcy appeal. (ER 63; D.Ct.Dkt. Nos. 11, 12, 13.) After argument, the district court granted the motion, explaining its reasoning in one paragraph:

> The U.S. Trustee lacks standing to prosecute this appeal, either under 11 U.S.C. § 307 or Securities and Exchange Comm'n v. United States Realty & Improvement Co., 310 U.S. 434 (1940), because the "public interest" it seeks to protect is insufficient. The Chapter 7 Trustee's Motion could only affect seven creditors, all of whom had full notice of the hearing on the Motion, and have expressed no interest in the proceedings.

(ER 23.)

Pursuant to Fed. R. Bankr. P. 8015, the United States Trustee timely moved for rehearing of the court's decision. (ER 64; D.Ct.Dkt. Nos. 23, 24, 25.) McCormick, Barstow opposed the motion. (ER 65; D.Ct.Dkt. No. 30.) Before the 63; D.Ct.Dkt. Nos. 8, 9, 10.) Those motions were denied and are not part of the merits of this appeal. (ER 21-31.) However, McCormick, Barstow did initially appeal these decisions to this Court (ER 64; D.Ct.Dkt. No. 26), which appeal was docketed as Case No. 98-16621. At the law firm's request, this Court dismissed the appeal by order entered November 2, 1998.

United States Trustee could file a reply, the district court cancelled oral argument and denied the motion for rehearing, finding that the United States Trustee had raised no new issues and her arguments "are properly made on appeal." (ER 34-35.) This appeal followed. (ER 38-41.)

SUMMARY OF ARGUMENT

In the appeal below, the district court ignored the plain language of the Bankruptcy Code and all published decisions on point in holding that the United States Trustee did not have standing to appeal a question of statutory interpretation. This conclusion contravenes the plain language of the Bankruptcy Code and the rationale for the very existence of the United States Trustees. The district court should be reversed and the case remanded so that the United States Trustee can participate on appeal before the district court as United States Trustees have in countless instances in similar cases.

STANDARD OF REVIEW

This case presents a pure question of law, which this Court reviews de novo. Committee of Dental Amalgam Mfrs. v. Stratton, 92 F.3d 807, 810 (9th Cir.), cert. denied, 117 S. Ct. 754 (1997); Sousa v. Miguel (In re United States Trustee), 32 F.3d 1370, 1372 (9th Cir. 1994) (citation omitted).

ARGUMENT

1. Section 307 Expressly Authorizes the United States Trustee to Participate In Any Bankruptcy Case.

The district court erred in concluding that section 307 does not permit the United States Trustee to participate in this appeal from a bankruptcy court order.[5] (ER 23.) Section 307 reads in full:

> The United States trustee may raise and may appear and be heard on any issue in any case or proceeding under this title but may not file a plan pursuant to section 1121(c) of this title.

All courts of appeals that have addressed the issue agree that a United States Trustee has standing to appeal bankruptcy court decisions. United States Trustee v. Columbia Gas Sys. Inc. (In re Columbia Gas Sys. Inc.), 33 F.3d 294, 295-299 (3d Cir. 1994) (holding U.S. Trustee has broad standing, including ability to challenge investment guidelines for chapter 11 debtor); United States Trustee v. Price Waterhouse, 19 F.3d 138, 141 (3d Cir. 1994) (finding United States Trustee has standing to appeal appointment of professionals in chapter 11 case); In re Clark, 927 F.2d 793, 795-96 (4th Cir. 1991) (finding standing to appeal denial of motion to dismiss); In re Plaza de Diego Shopping Ctr., Inc., 911 F.2d 820, 824

[5] The issue of the United States Trustee's standing was raised in appellee's Motion to Dismiss Appeal and supporting papers (ER 63; D.Ct.Dkt. Nos. 5, 6, 7) and was ruled upon by the district court at ER 21-37.

(1st Cir. 1990) (standing to appeal appointment of trustee); Morganstern v. Revco D.S., Inc. (In re Revco D.S., Inc.), 898 F.2d 498, 499 (6th Cir. 1990) (standing to appeal decision refusing to appoint examiner).[6] See also St. Angelo v. Victoria Farms, Inc., 38 F.3d 1525, 1535 (9th Cir. 1994), modified, 46 F.3d 969 (1995) (holding United States Trustee had standing to bring appeal involving constitutional and statutory issues).

The district court's conclusion that the United States Trustee could not participate on appeal ignored the express language of section 307. Below, the district court reviewed this case pursuant to 28 U.S.C. § 158(a), which permits district courts to hear appeals from cases initiated under title 11. The plain language of section 307 vests the United States Trustee with the ability to appear and be heard in any title 11 case. When a statute's language is plain, "'the sole function of the courts is to enforce it according to its terms.'" United States v. Ron Pair Enters., Inc., 489 U.S. 235, 241, 109 S. Ct. 1026, 1030 (1989) (citation omitted). Because this appeal involves a title 11 case, the United States Trustee may appear and be heard. Cf. Bernard v. Coyne (In re Bernard), 31 F.3d 842, 844 (9th Cir.

[6] See United States Trustee v. Fishback (In re Glados, Inc.), 83 F.3d 1360, 1361 n.1 (11th Cir. 1996) (noting United States Trustee has standing under section 307 to raise issues concerning calculation of compensation and statutory construction under section 726).

1994) (noting United States Trustee "may also intervene and appear at any level of the proceedings from the bankruptcy court on, 11 U.S.C. § 307, as either a party or amicus.") (dictum).

The rationale for section 307 is straightforward. The United States Trustee, whose job it is to protect the public interest, has standing to appeal when the public interest may be at stake. Clark, 927 F.2d at 795; Plaza de Diego, 911 F.2d at 824; Revco, 898 F.2d at 499. The substantive question before the district court -- the proper distribution of monies in a chapter 7 case as required by section 726 of the Bankruptcy Code -- involves the public interest. Indeed, the United States Trustee successfully appealed this very issue (the interpretation of section 726) to the Eleventh Circuit in Glados. In that case, the Eleventh Circuit acknowledged the United States Trustee's standing to maintain that appeal. 83 F.3d at 1361 n.1.

Even if this Court were to decide that the relevant statute is not clear, the legislative history amply reinforces the deduction that section 307 authorizes a United States Trustee to participate in appeals of bankruptcy cases. The House Report states:

> The U.S. Trustee is given standing to raise, appear, and be heard on any issue in any case or proceeding under title 11, U.S. Code – except that the U.S. Trustee may not file a plan in a chapter 11 case. In this manner, the U.S. Trustee is given the same right to be heard as a party in interest, but retains the discretion to decide when a matter of con> cern to the proper administration of the bankruptcy laws should be raised.

H.R. Rep. No. 764, 99th Cong., 2d Sess. 27 (1986), reprinted in 1986 U.S.C.C.A.N. 5227, 5240.

The structure of the Code itself bolsters this conclusion. Other sections of the Bankruptcy Code permit other agencies to raise and appear and be heard on any issue in a bankruptcy case. 11 U.S.C. §§ 1109(a) (Securities & Exchange Commission), 1164 (Interstate Commerce Commission and Surface Transportation Board). However, these sections explicitly withdraw those agencies' rights to appeal from "any judgment, order, or decree entered in the case." Id. In contrast, section 307 contains no such limiting language. The courts of appeals that have addressed this question have concluded that when these sections are read "with reference to one another, we find . . . that Congress did not intend to limit the U.S. trustee's appellate standing." Revco, 898 F.2d at 500. Accord Clark, 927 F.2d at 796; Plaza de Diego, 911 F.2d at 824.

Finally, the district court's decision not only contravenes the language of section 307; it violates the basic tenet of statutory construction that, if a statute specifies one exception to its general application, other exceptions must be excluded. See, e.g., United States v. Goldbaum, 879 F.2d 811, 813 (10th Cir. 1989).

Cf. Andrus v. Glover Constr. Co., 446 U.S. 608, 616-17 (1980) (Where exceptions to a statutory prohibition are expressly provided for, additional exceptions shall not be implied in the absence of contrary legislative intent). The relevant statute — section 307 — contains only one restriction on the United States Trustee's participation in bankruptcy cases. That exception prohibits a United States Trustee from filing a plan in a chapter 11 case, an action not at issue here. 11 U.S.C. § 307. In finding that the United States Trustee had to demonstrate a "sufficient" public interest in order to appeal, the district court engrafted an additional restriction onto the language of section 307 and thus violated this fundamental rule of statutory construction. The district court's decision should be reversed.

2. The District Court Erred As A Matter of Law in Dismissing the United States Trustee From the Appeal of a Bankruptcy Court Order for Lack of a Sufficient Public Interest.

In two sentences, the district court summarily dismissed the United States Trustee from the appeal, reasoning that she had not demonstrated a "sufficient" public interest to participate. (ER 23.) The district court never identified the origin of this "sufficient" public interest criterion or any factors that a court should consider in determining sufficiency.

Under traditional standing analysis, courts look to whether a party is "aggrieved." This determination encompasses pecuniary and other interests, including the public interest. Securities & Exchange Comm'n v. United States Realty & Improvement Co., 310 U.S. 434, 459-60 (1940).

The United States Trustee, created to serve as the watchdog of the bankruptcy system, has standing to appeal when the public interest may be at stake. Plaza de Diego, 911 F.2d at 824; Revco, 898 F.2d at 499. "Congress specified that the U.S. trustees were to be independent of direct court supervision, as 'executives of the bankruptcy network'; it likened the U.S. trustee's relation to that of a prosecutor." Revco, 898 F.2d at 500 (citation omitted). A "good watchdog guards the interests of those for whom it watches; the roles [of watchdog and advocate] are not incompatible." Id.

The lower court, in dismissing the United States Trustee, relied on the "fact" that the ruling potentially affected only seven creditors, none of whom had expressed any interest in the proceedings. (ER 23.) The lack of creditor participation in this situation is precisely why Congress created the United States Trustees. When it revised the system to accommodate its perceived need for active bankruptcy case supervision, Congress acknowledged:

> Creditor control in bankruptcy cases is a myth. Creditors take little interest in pursuing a bankrupt debtor. They are unwilling to throw good money after bad. As a result, creditor participation in bankruptcy cases is very low. . . . [I]f there are assets available in a case, the vacuum created by the lack of creditor interest in the case is not in > fact filled by the bankruptcy judge, and the result is not innocuous. In practice, creditor control has become attorney control, and the bankruptcy system operates more for the benefit of attorneys than for the benefit of creditors.

H.R. Rep. No. 595, 95th Cong., 1st Sess. 92 (1977), reprinted in 1978 U.S.C.C.A.N. 6053.

Accordingly, Congress made the United States Trustees responsible for "protecting the public interest and ensuring that bankruptcy cases are conducted according to the law." H.R. Rep. No. 595, 95th Cong., 1st Sess. 109 (1977), reprinted in 1978 U.S.C.C.A.N. 6070. Because a disinterested administrator was critical to the success of the revised system, Congress promulgated section 307 when it expanded the United States Trustees nationwide, thus ensuring the United States Trustees' effective participation. Congress' decision should not be readily diluted.

Finally, the holding that the public interest is not at stake in this case is wrong. Nothing could be more central to the administration of a chapter 7 case than the question of distribution of estate assets to creditors. The United States Trustee appealed what she believes to be an erroneous interpretation of the Bankruptcy Code. Questions of statutory interpretation, including the underlying question here, raise implications far beyond one bankruptcy case. Inexplicably, the district court ignored the plain language of section 307 and all apposite case law in dismissing the United States Trustee from this appeal. The district court's decision should be reversed.

3. The District Court's Reasoning Is Inconsistent and Not Supportable.

The court's analysis is not only inexplicable, it is internally inconsistent. First, no one disputes that the United States Trustee participated below on the merits of the order that was appealed. Nor did the bankruptcy court determine that the United States Trustee lacked standing to participate before it. Under the district court's analysis, the United States Trustee's standing apparently evaporated once a final decision was rendered. Such a conclusion does not comport with the language of section 307 or traditional standing analysis.

Second, the district court found that the United States Trustee was a party for purposes of filing a timely appeal. (ER 23-24.) When the law firm moved to dismiss the United States Trustee's appeal, it also asked the court to dismiss Mr. Kavanagh's appeal as untimely.[7] (ER 63; D.Ct.Dkt. No. 5, 6, 7.) It reasoned as follows: Notices of appeal must be filed within 10 days after the challenged order is entered on the docket. Fed. R. Bankr. P. 8002(a). In this case, the original notice of appeal was due on June 8, 1998, the date on which the United States Trustee noticed her appeal. Mr. Kavanagh as case trustee noticed his appeal five days later. Because the United States Trustee had no standing to appeal, the law firm argued, Mr. Kavanagh's appeal was not timely filed. (ER 63; D.Ct.Dkt. No. 6, Memorandum of Points and Authorities In Support of Motion to Dismiss, at 9.)

The district court rejected this argument, correctly finding that the case trustee's notice was timely under Rule 8002(a). (ER 23-24.) That rule reads in pertinent part: "If a timely notice of appeal is filed by a party, any other party may file a notice of appeal within 10 days of the date on which the first notice of appeal was filed, ..." (Emphasis added). Because the United States Trustee's notice was timely, the district court concluded that Mr. Kavanagh's notice, filed within 10 days of the first notice, was also timely filed. (ER 24.) Nonetheless, it is difficult to understand how the United States Trustee can be construed to be a "party" who timely filed under Rule 8002 if she never had standing to appeal. See, e.g., Voisenat v. Decker (In re Serrato), 117 F.3d 427, 429 (9th Cir. 1997) (Construing "party" in Fed. R. App. P. 4(a) to mean "'a participant in the particular controversy which led to the appeal.'") (citation omitted).

CONCLUSION

For the foregoing reasons, the district court's holding that the United States Trustee does not have standing to participate in a bankruptcy appeal should be reversed and the case should be remanded for further proceedings in which the United States Trustee can participate.

STATEMENT OF APPELLATE JURISDICTION

This Court has jurisdiction over this appeal under section 158(a)(1) of title 28, which confers jurisdiction on the district courts of the United States to hear appeals "from final judgments, orders, and decrees" of bankruptcy judges. A final order in bankruptcy ends a particular controversy within the case as a whole. Charter Co. v. Prudential Ins. Co. of Am. (In re Charter Co.), 778 F.2d 617, 621 (11th Cir. 1985). An order converting a bankruptcy case from chapter 11 to chapter 7 is a final order. Rosson v. Fitzgerald (In re Rosson), 545 F.3d 764, 770 (9th Cir. 2008); In re Jacobsen, No. 09-40023, – F.3d – , 2010 WL 2388425, at *4 (5th Cir. Jun. 16, 2010).

The bankruptcy court's final order converting the chapter 11 case of Douglas Asphalt to a chapter 7 case was entered on April 12, 2010. Its notice of appeal was timely filed on April 21, 2010, giving rise to this appeal. 28 U.S.C. § 158(c)(2); Fed. R. Bankr. P. 8002(a).

STATEMENT OF THE ISSUE

The issue is whether the bankruptcy court abused its discretion in converting debtor Douglas Asphalt's chapter 11 case to chapter 7 on the basis that (1) the United States Trustee had established "cause" to convert the case under section 1112(b)(4)(A) of title 11 and (2) the creditors and the estate were best served by converting the case to chapter 7.

STANDARD OF REVIEW

Findings of fact are reviewed for clear error. Fed. R. Bankr. P. 8013; In re Electric Machinery Enters., Inc., 479 F.3d 791, 795 (11th Cir. 2007). Legal determinations are subject to de novo review. Id. Whether there is cause to dismiss or convert a case to chapter 7 is a finding of fact subject to review under the "clearly erroneous" standard. In re Phoenix Piccadilly, Ltd., 849 F.2d 1393, 1394 (11th Cir. 1988). "A finding is clearly erroneous when 'although there is evidence to support it, the reviewing court on the entire evidence is left with a definite and firm conviction that a mistake has been committed.'" Robinson v. Tyson Foods, Inc., 595 F.3d 1269, 1275 (11th Cir. 2010) (quoting United States v. Oregon State Medical Society, 343 U.S. 326, 339 (1952)).

The bankruptcy court's determination whether dismissal or conversion best serves creditors and the estate is subject to "abuse of discretion" review. In re Loop Corp., 379 F.3d 511, 517 (8th Cir. 2004); see also In re Bal Harbour Club, Inc., 316 F.3d 1192, 1194-95 (11th Cir. 2003) (dismissal); In re Mobile Freezers Inc., 146 B.R. 1000, 1001 (S.D. Ala. 1992) (denial of trustee's motion to convert reviewed for abuse of discretion). "A bankruptcy judge abuses his discretion if he fails to apply the correct legal standard or his factual findings are clearly erroneous." In re Celotex Corp., 227 F.3d 1336, 1338 (11th Cir. 2000) (citations omitted).

STATEMENT OF THE CASE

A. Statutory Framework

Commencement of a bankruptcy case creates an estate comprised of the debtor's assets. See 11 U.S.C. § 541(a)(1) (the filing of a bankruptcy petition "creates an estate . . . comprised [with some exceptions] of all legal or equitable interests of the debtor in property as of the commencement of the case"). The automatic stay halts litigation against the debtor and prevents creditors from obtaining or exercising control over property of the estate. 11 U.S.C. § 362(a).

After the commencement of a case, a chapter 11 debtor retains control of the bankruptcy estate and any business operations as a "debtor in possession." 11 U.S.C. §§ 1101(1) and 1108. Duties imposed on a debtor in possession include accounting for estate property; disclosing assets, liabilities and financial affairs; timely filing tax returns; preparing and filing periodic financial reports; and proposing plans of reorganization. 11 U.S.C. §§ 1107(a); 521; 1106(a)(5) and (6); and 704(a)(2), (7) and (8). In contrast, a chapter 7 bankruptcy case involves the orderly liquidation of a debtor corporation's assets by a neutral chapter 7 trustee. 11 U.S.C. § 704(a).

At issue in this appeal is the bankruptcy court's decision to grant the United States Trustee's motion to convert the debtor's chapter 11 case to chapter 7. The United States Trustee may request dismissal or conversion of a chapter 11 case. See 28 U.S.C. § 586(a)(8) (authorizing U.S. Trustees to file motions pursuant to § 1112(b)). Motions to dismiss or convert are governed by section 1112(b) of the Bankruptcy Code, which provides:

> Except as provided in paragraph (2) of this subsection, subsection (c) of this section, and section 1104(a)(3), on request of a party in interest, and after notice and a hearing, absent unusual circumstances specifically identified by the court that establish that the requested conversion or dismissal is not in the best interests of creditors and the estate, the court shall convert a case under this chapter to a case under chapter 7 or dismiss a case under this chapter, whichever is in the best interests of creditors and the estate, if the movant establishes cause.

11 U.S.C. § 1112(b)(1). Thus, the bankruptcy court "shall" dismiss the subject chapter 11 case, convert the case to chapter 7, or appoint a chapter 11 trustee if the movant establishes cause and relief would benefit the creditors and the estate. See 11 U.S.C. §§ 1112(b)(1) and 1104(a)(3). Determination of cause rests with the discretion of the bankruptcy court. In re Albany Partners, Ltd., 749 F.2d 670, 674 (11th Cir. 1984) (summarizing legislative history). The form of relief to be granted depends on which remedy best serves the creditors and the estate. See 11 U.S.C. §§ 1112(b)(1) and 1104(a)(3).

If a party in interest establishes cause, the debtor in certain circumstances may try to show that unusual circumstances dictate against conversion or dismissal. Section 1112(b)(2) outlines what constitutes "unusual circumstances." That section provides:

> (2) The relief provided in paragraph (1) shall not be granted absent unusual circumstances specifically identified by the court that establish that such relief is not in the best interests of creditors and the estate, if the debtor or another party in interest objects and establishes that–

> (A) there is a reasonable likelihood that a plan will be confirmed within the timeframes established in sections 1121(e) and 1129(e) of this title, or if such sections do not apply, within a reasonable period of time; and
> (B) the grounds for granting such relief include an act or omission of the debtor other than under paragraph (4)(A)–
>> (I) for which there exists a reasonable justification for the act or omission; and
>> (ii) that will be cured within a reasonable period of time fixed by the court.

11 U.S.C. § 1112(b)(2) (emphasis added).

Paragraph (4)(A) establishes that either diminution of the estate or absence of a reasonable chance of rehabilitation constitute reasons to dismiss or convert a chapter 11 case. 11 U.S.C. § 1112(b)(4)(A). Therefore, a debtor may not attempt to prove unusual circumstances that could prevent conversion or dismissal if a party in interest has demonstrated the conditions of subsection 1112(b)(4)(A) as grounds for cause.

If the grounds for conversion or dismissal do not involve diminution of the estate's value and the lack of likelihood of rehabilitation, then a debtor must make three showings in order to remain in chapter 11. First, the debtor must show that it can propose a reorganization plan within a reasonable amount of time. 11 U.S.C. § 1112(b)(2)(A). Second, the debtor must show that there is a reasonable explanation for the existence of cause to convert. Third, the debtor must show that the reason for the existence of cause can be cured. 11 U.S.C.§ 1112(b)(2)(B)(ii).

B. Statement of the Facts

Douglas Asphalt, the debtor in this case, was formerly one of the larger road construction and paving companies operating in southern and central Georgia. It was the prime contractor on a number of state and federal highway construction projects. Mot. Hr'g Tr., 61, Apr. 1, 2010. Mr. Joel Spivey is its president and 51% owner. Id., 37; Statement of Financial Affairs, Bankr. Dkt. #63. Mr. Spivey founded the company in 1971. Hr'g Tr., 101. The company had 550 employees and gross revenues of approximately $140 million at its peak in 2006. Id., 61, 64, 104, 127.

Douglas Asphalt's difficulties began when an industrial testing company, Applied Technical Services, reported that the lime content in the asphalt that Douglas Asphalt was using did not meet state specifications. Hr'g Tr., 79. This action started the chain of events that led to Douglas Asphalt's ultimate collapse. The companies that issued the performance bonds on those road projects took control of the jobs. See id., 95. They completed the work at their own expense, generating millions of dollars of claims against Douglas Asphalt. Schedule F, Bankr. Dkt. #60; Hr'g Tr., 69, 113. The bond companies then proceeded to get judgments against Douglas Asphalt for the outstanding amounts owed. See Hr'g Tr., 64, 70, 112, 121-23. At the same time, Douglas Asphalt could not get new work to cover these debts, eventually forcing it to shut down.

In September 2007, Douglas Asphalt dismissed its remaining employees, closed its doors, and shut down its business. Hrg. Tr., 43, 61. In the years that followed, it was primarily occupied with disposing of its construction equipment and pursuing lawsuits against third parties over past construction jobs. Id., 43-44. Foremost was a lawsuit against Applied Technical Services, the testing company that prompted Douglas Asphalt's demise, which resulted in a $150 million judgment in Douglas Asphalt's favor. Id., 47.

On December 2, 2009, Douglas Asphalt's largest creditors (the bond companies) filed an involuntary chapter 7 bankruptcy petition against it. Bankr. Dkt. #1. Their claims totaled approximately $162 million. Id. Douglas Asphalt responded by filing a motion for relief under chapter 11, which was granted on December 28, 2009. Bankr. Dkt. #12, #13. In its bankruptcy schedules, the debtor reported debts totaling approximately $220 million. Summary of Schedules, Bankr. Dkt. #59.

On October 1, 2009, after presentation of the evidence in the lawsuit against Applied Technical Services, but before the jury returned a verdict, Douglas Asphalt and its co-plaintiffs entered a settlement agreement with Applied Technical Services and two of its insurance companies. Ex. B, Bankr. Dkt. #53. ATS and its professional liability insurer each agreed to pay $1 million in satisfaction of the debtor's claims against them. Id. If the jury returned a verdict for the plaintiffs in excess of $2 million, Applied Technical Services agreed to assign to plaintiffs its claims against its general liability insurer and the Georgia Department of Transportation. Id. Subsequently, due to pending disputes as to who was entitled to the funds, the two million dollars from Applied Technical Services and its professional liability insurer was paid into the bankruptcy court registry. Hr'g Tr., 50, 85.

On January 14, 2010, the bond companies filed a motion to appoint a chapter 11 trustee. They asserted various grounds, including that a disinterested trustee was required in order to investigate transactions between Douglas Asphalt and its principals that may constitute fraudulent transfers. Bankr. Dkt. #53.

On February 5, 2010, the U.S. Trustee's office conducted the meeting of creditors. At the meeting, the United States Trustee confirmed that:

a. The debtor owned two parcels of real property, but there was no equity in either of them. Schedule A, Bankr. Dkt. #59; Hr'g Tr., 39;

b. There was virtually no equity in the equipment held by Douglas Asphalt. Hr'g Tr., 41, 117-118;

c. Douglas Asphalt had no employees, no construction contracts, and no significant cash flow; see generally, Hr'g Tr., 51-61.

d. Douglas Asphalt reported total debt of approximately $220 million. This consisted of general unsecured debts of approximately $197 million, secured debts of approximately $21.7 million, and priority unsecured debts consisting primarily of delinquent tax claims totaling over $1 million. Summary of Schedules, Bankr. Dkt. #59;

e. At the meeting of creditors, Mr. Spivey, Douglas Asphalt's president, stated he considered his chapter 11 case to be a liquidation case. His primary aims were to dispose of his remaining equipment and to pursue various pending lawsuits and reduce any judgments to cash. 2004 Exam Tr., 31-32, Mar. 12, 2010, Bankr. Dkt. #254; Mot. Hr'g Tr., 52, 65.

On February 17, 2010, the United States Trustee filed a response to the bond companies' motion to appoint a chapter 11 trustee. Bankr. Dkt. #124. Given the lack of any ongoing business operations, the United States Trustee asserted that it would be more appropriate to convert the case so that a chapter 7 trustee could perform an orderly liquidation. Resp., ¶10. On February 18, 2010, the United States Trustee's office filed a motion to convert the case to chapter 7 pursuant to 11 U.S.C. § 1112(b). Bankr. Dkt. #130. The United States Trustee asserted that cause existed to convert the case pursuant to § 1112(b)(4)(A) because the debtor had no significant assets or revenue with which to satisfy its post-petition obligations going forward. Conversion Mot., ¶13, Feb. 18, 2010, Bankr. Dkt. #130. Furthermore, there was no reasonable prospect for rehabilitation of the debtor's business. Id., ¶18.

At the hearing on the motion to convert on April 1, 2010, Mr. Spivey testified to give a more detailed picture of Douglas Asphalt's status. Hr'g Tr., 115. He confirmed that Douglas Asphalt had dismissed its employees and shut down its operations in September 2007. Hr'g Tr., 44. He also testified that since then Douglas Asphalt had been engaged primarily in disposing of its remaining construction equipment. It was subject to the secured claims of equipment vendors and Douglas Asphalt appeared to have no equity in it. Id., 117-118. By these sales efforts, Douglas Asphalt had reduced its equipment debt from $20 million to $5 million. Id., 45; 2004 Exam Tr., 22. Nevertheless, Douglas Asphalt was required to make adequate protection payments to its remaining equipment vendors totaling approximately $47,500.00 per month. Hr'g Tr., 109-110, 125-26 (testimony of former Douglas Asphalt comptroller Angelique Box).

The company's on-going business operations consisted of two business arrangements with the Douglas Asphalt Paving Company, an entity founded by Mr. Spivey's ex-wife and son approximately seven months before Douglas Asphalt ceased operations. Hr'g Tr., 89-90, 127. Douglas Asphalt Paving Company rented office space in a building owned by Douglas Asphalt. Id., 119-120. The rent was equal to the mortgage payment, resulting in no surplus cash flow. Id. In addition, Douglas Asphalt sub-leased its remaining equipment to Douglas Paving on an ad hoc basis. Id., 45-46; 2004 Exam Tr., 54. The equipment rent Douglas Paving paid was roughly equivalent to (or less than) what the debtor was required to pay the equipment vendors under the relevant contracts.[1] Id., 46.

Douglas Asphalt's other main activity was pursuing legal claims against various third parties. Mr. Spivey confirmed that the primary asset of the bankruptcy estate was the $150 million judgment against Applied Technical Services and the claims that Applied Technical Services assigned to the debtor by means of the October 1, 2009 settlement agreement. Hr'g Tr. at 47, 50. The prospects for collecting funds from these assignments are vague, as Mr. Spivey testified:

Q: Have you talked to them [special counsel pursuing the ATS litigation] about the prospects for collecting additional monies under the 150 million dollar judgment?

A: Yes, sir.

[1] The monthly operating reports that the debtor filed with the bankruptcy court did not disclose any income from subleasing equipment to Douglas Paving. Appellee's Designation, Dist. Ct. Dkt. #3, Attachments 17 & 18 (operating reports).

Q: Have they given you any type of indication as to how much they think they can get in further collection efforts under the 150 million dollar judgment?

A: Well we are going to pursue the entire amount.

Q: . . . Have they attempted to put a dollar figure on how much they think they can collect towards the balance of the 150 million that is still owed?

A: We will try to pursue collecting it all. I have not heard anything myself. They have not told me we are going to take anything less. Id., 51.

Douglas Asphalt also had claims that were unrelated to the Applied Technical Services litigation, including claims against Martin Marietta and the Georgia Department of Transportation totaling approximately $36 million. Hr'g Tr., 47-49, 52; Schedule B, Bankr. Dkt. #59. The debtor reported that all of its personal property (including legal claims) was worth approximately $190 million– an amount which is some $30,000,000 less than the $220,000,000 Douglas Asphalt owes all its creditors. See Hr'g Tr., 49; Schedule B, Bankr. Dkt. #59.

Mr. Spivey also testified about his prospects for generating work and revenue for Douglas Asphalt. The company's 550 employees had all been let go, but Mr. Spivey believed he would be able to recruit some of his former workers back. Hr'g Tr., 104. He admitted he had no construction contracts, but testified that his colleagues in the industry had promised to consider him for work. Id., 102-04. Mr. Spivey explained that he could not obtain a performance bond, was not pre-qualified to submit bids to the Georgia Department of Transportation on publicly funded road construction projects, and had obtained no financing with which to commence construction operations. Id., 52-53, 58-59. Nevertheless, Mr.

Spivey was confident that by sub-contracting with other companies, he could work around these problems. Hr'g Tr., 102-04.

As an example, Mr. Spivey testified that Fender Chevrolet would hire Douglas Asphalt to perform a small demolition contract, although no formal agreement had been signed as of the hearing date. Id., 55-57. According to Mr. Spivey, the anticipated contract would require Douglas Asphalt to hire three employees, would be completed in four to five weeks, and would net approximately $20,000.00 after expenses. Id., 55-57, 60, 63, 100-01. Mr. Spivey expected that he would be able to arrange more jobs of a comparable size. Id., 108-09.

At the hearing, the attorneys representing several bond companies that were owed approximately $162 million in the aggregate supported the motion to convert to chapter 7. Hr'g Tr., 4, 23, 135; Bankr. Dkt. #1. Douglas Asphalt's total indebtedness to them exceeds the amount of its primary asset – the $150 million judgment against Applied Technical Services. And the $150 million is far less than the 220 million in claims submitted against it.

After brief closing arguments, the bankruptcy court granted the United States Trustee's motion to convert the case to chapter 7 from the bench. Id., 153. The court found that a rehabilitation of Douglas Asphalt was not possible. Id., 151-153. It found that the company had no employees, one pending contract, and that its equipment was "sitting idle." Id., 152. To the extent that bankruptcy protection was being used for a pass-through equipment lease to Douglas Paving, the arrangement was "not authorized or justified under the Code." Id. The court found that the unclear nature of the relationship between Douglas Asphalt and Douglas Paving meant that "[i]t is time for a dispassionate view of a chapter 7 trustee." Id. Accordingly, the court found conversion was in the "best interest of the creditors in this case and the estate as a whole." Id.

Orders granting the United States Trustee's motion to convert the case to chapter 7 and denying the bond companies' motion to appoint a chapter 11 trustee were subsequently entered on April 12, 2010. Bankr. Dkt. #220, #221. A chapter 7 trustee was appointed to administer the case on the same date. Bankr. Dkt. #223.

Douglas Asphalt timely filed a notice of appeal on April 21, 2010. Bankr. Dkt. #246. It also filed an emergency motion for a stay pending appeal, Bankr. Dkt. #247, which was denied on May 3, 2010. Bankr. Dkt. #257.

SUMMARY OF THE ARGUMENT

The bankruptcy court did not abuse its discretion when it converted Douglas Asphalt's case from chapter 11 to chapter 7. A bankruptcy court "shall" convert a case when requested by a party in interest if that party (1) shows "cause;"(2) conversion is in the best interests of the creditors and the estate; and (3) the debtor cannot show "unusual circumstances." 11 U.S.C. § 1112(b). In this case, all three conditions are met and the statutory exception allowing a debtor to successfully oppose a motion to convert despite establishment of cause does not apply.

1. Cause is not defined in chapter 11. Section 1112(b) has a non-exclusive list of causes for conversion, however. The first named cause applies in this case: “continuing loss or diminution of the estate” combined with “no reasonable likelihood of rehabilitation [of the company].” 11 U.S.C. § 1112(b)(4)(A). The bankruptcy court did not abuse its discretion in finding cause to convert for two reasons.

First, continuing the chapter 11 case will result in continuing losses to the estate. Douglas Asphalt’s current business operation - leasing office space to Douglas Paving - covers only its mortgage costs. It has no income to pay the $47,500 monthly cost of adequate protection payments to the equipment vendors. Every month that the company retains the equipment, its debts increase.

Second, the evidence demonstrated that Douglas Asphalt has no realistic chance of reentering the paving business on any significant scale. It closed its doors in 2007. It has no employees, no significant contracts, and no cash flow. It cannot obtain a bond that would enable it to be a prime contractor on a project. At the time of the hearing, its sole business prospect was a demolition contract that would net it $20,000 - a tiny amount compared to its $220 million dollars in debt. Even Mr. Spivey, Douglas Asphalt’s president, admitted that the best case scenario would have the company earning $200,000 per year in the near term.

2. The bankruptcy court did not abuse its discretion when it found that conversion to chapter 7 would be in the best interests of Douglas Asphalt’s creditors for four reasons. First, it took 40 years for Douglas Asphalt to grow from a one-man company to a multi-million dollar entity. The creditors will be better off being repaid from the liquidation of the company and settlement of legal claims than waiting decades for Douglas Asphalt to be in a position to repay the millions of dollars it owes.

Douglas Asphalt's primary asset is a $150 million dollar judgment against Applied Technical Services, whose test results led to Douglas Asphalt going out of business. However, Douglas Asphalt settled with the testing company and its professional liability insurer in exchange for $2 million in cash, now held in the bankruptcy court, and an assignment of the testing company's claims against its general liability insurer and the Georgia Department of Transportation. Even if Douglas Asphalt could collect another $148 million from these third parties, and there is no evidence to support such a conclusion, it would still owe the bond companies $12 million. Moreover, even if the company collected full judgments on all its other lawsuits, it still would be millions of dollars in debt. There is no evidence that were Douglas Asphalt to go back into business, it could generate sufficient income to make any meaningful contribution to that deficit. Instead, trying to revive the business would drain resources away from the recovery effort in the courts.

Second, liquidation under the supervision of a chapter 7 trustee will ensure an orderly and equitable division of any funds that become available.

Third, the chapter 7 trustee will be able to investigate and recover any preferential payments or transfers in the business dealings between Douglas Asphalt and the Douglas Asphalt Paving Company, which is run by Mr. Spivey's ex-wife and son.

Fourth, the major creditors themselves favor conversion to chapter 7. They are in the best position to calculate what is in their best interests.

3. Douglas Asphalt is not eligible to attempt to show that there are unusual circumstances that should prevent a bankruptcy court from ordering conversion. Section 1112(b)(1) allows a debtor to ask a court not to convert or dismiss a case if the debtor proves unusual circumstances. But section 1112(b)(2)(B) states that a debtor may only attempt to make this showing if the estate is not facing continuing loss or diminution and there is a reasonable chance of rehabilitation. 11 U.S.C. § 1112(b)(2)(B) (incorporating 11 U.S.C. § 1112(b)(4)(A)) In this case, the United States Trustee demonstrated cause for conversion because Douglas Asphalt was continuing to lose money and had no reasonable likelihood of rehabilitation.

Moreover, even if section 1112(b)(2)(B) applied in this case, Douglas Asphalt has not met the statutory requirements. In order to successfully oppose a motion to convert after a party in interest has shown cause for conversion, a debtor must show that its chapter 11 plan will be confirmed within a reasonable period of time. 11 U.S.C. § 1112(b)(2)(B)(i). Douglas Asphalt has not even submitted a plan. The bankruptcy court did not abuse its discretion when it found that rehabilitation would not be possible, thus precluding even the possibility of a confirmable plan. In addition, the debtor must show that it can cure the act or omission that provides grounds for conversion. 11 U.S.C. § 1112(b)(2)(B)(ii). Douglas Asphalt has not attempted to make this showing.

The bankruptcy court did not commit clear error when it ordered that Douglas Asphalt's bankruptcy case be converted from chapter 11 to chapter 7. The United States Trustee requests that this Court affirm the bankruptcy court's order.

ARGUMENT

I. THE BANKRUPTCY COURT DID NOT COMMIT CLEAR ERROR IN FINDING THAT CAUSE HAD BEEN ESTABLISHED TO CONVERT DOUGLAS ASPHALT COMPANY'S CASE TO CHAPTER 7.

The bankruptcy court did not commit clear error when it found that cause existed to convert Douglas Asphalt's chapter 11 case to chapter 7. Section 1112 allows for conversion if there is a "substantial or continuing loss to or diminution of the estate and the absence of a reasonable likelihood of rehabilitation[.]" 11 U.S.C. § 1112(b)(4)(A). The purpose of this subsection is to "'preserve estate assets by preventing the debtor in possession from gambling on the enterprise at the creditors' expense when there is no hope of rehabilitation.'" In re Loop Corp., 379 F.3d 511, 516 (8th Cir. 2004) (quotation omitted). The bankruptcy court did not abuse its discretion when it found that the Douglas Asphalt estate would continue to lose value and that Mr. Spivey had no realistic chance to revive his business.

A. Douglas Asphalt faces continuing losses and diminution of the estate.

The bankruptcy court did not abuse its discretion when it found that diminution of the Douglas Asphalt estate would continue were the case to remain under chapter 11. A chapter 11 debtor that is not generating revenue has, at a minimum, administrative costs that drain value from the estate. Negative cash flow alone "is sufficient to establish a continuing loss to or diminution of the estate." Loop Corp., 379 F.3d at 515-16. Inactivity also establishes diminution of value. In re Vallambrosa Holdings, LLC, 419 B.R. 81, 88-89 (Bankr. S.D. Ga. 2009) (continuing loss to or diminution of the estate is established when there is no equity in the debtor's property, the debtor has ceased business operations, and the debtor has no money on hand to pay administrative expenses). Since 2007, Douglas Asphalt has had both on-going administrative costs and has not engaged in any business activity.

The evidence also demonstrated that Douglas Asphalt would generate continuing losses in chapter 11. Douglas Asphalt shut down its operations in September 2007. Hr'g Tr., 43. Its regular income consists of lease payments for office space that offset its mortgage payments. Id., 72. There is no significant equity in any of the company's property. Id., 39, 41, 117-18. It has no substantive contracts, no employees, no cash flow, no financing or ability to obtain financing. Furthermore, it does not have a performance bond or ability to obtain one, and therefore cannot submit bids on publicly-funded road construction projects which previously constituted the majority of its work. Id., 52-54, 58-59, 61, 102-04.

The equipment currently held by Douglas Asphalt is a drain on the company's resources. Douglas Asphalt has insufficient income to meet its obligations going forward, including the adequate protection payments to equipment vendors totaling $47,500.00 per month. Id., 125-26. That ongoing obligation alone is sufficient to lead to the accumulation of further indebtedness at the expense of the estate's existing creditors to warrant conversion. In re Loop Corp., 379 F.3d at 515-16. See also 11 U.S.C. § 507(b); cf. In re Carpet Center Leasing Company, Inc., 991 F.2d 682, 686 (11th Cir. 1993) (holding that creditor could claim administrative expense for the chapter 11 debtor's use of equipment collateral). Based on this evidence, the bankruptcy court did not clearly err in finding that a continuing loss to or diminution of the estate had been established.

B. Douglas Asphalt has no reasonable likelihood of rehabilitation.

The bankruptcy court did not abuse its discretion when it found that Mr. Spivey has no realistic chance of restoring Douglas Asphalt to its previous size and profitability. "Courts have consistently understood 'rehabilitation' to refer to the debtor's ability to restore the viability of its business." Loop Corp., 379 F.3d at 516; Vallambrosa, 419 B.R. at 89 (stating "[r]ehabilitation 'contemplates the successful maintenance or re-establishment of the debtor's business operations . . . .'"). The test for rehabilitation is objective: the debtor must be able to propose a plan that "can be executed as a practical matter under the facts." In re Clarkson, 767 F.2d 417, 420 (8th Cir. 1985); In re LG Motors, Inc., 422 B.R. 110, 116

(Bankr. N.D. Ill. 2009) (stating that test is whether the debtor's business prospects justify continuing the reorganization effort).

Mr. Spivey testified that there is a reasonable likelihood that his business could be rehabilitated based on evidence that Fender Chevrolet had agreed to hire Douglas Asphalt to perform a small demolition job. Hr'g Tr., 55-57. Although no contract had been signed as of the hearing date, Mr. Spivey testified that the job would require three employees to complete over four to five weeks and would generate approximately $20,000 in net revenue. Id., 55-75, 60, 63, 100-01. In contrast, Douglas Asphalt employed over 550 people and generated approximately $140 million in annual gross revenue when it was a healthy business. Id., 61, 64, 104, 127. The bankruptcy court did not abuse its discretion when it found that a single potential contract for a net $20,000 does not demonstrate a reasonable likelihood that Douglas Asphalt could be restored to a business capable of repaying $220 million to its creditors.

Mr. Spivey expresses a desire to repay Douglas Asphalt's creditors and wants to rebuild this company. But a sincere desire to reorganize "means little without the Debtor's actual ability to reorganize." Colonial Daytona Ltd. P'ship v. Am. Sav. of Fla., F.S., 152 B.R. 996, 1003 (M.D. Fla.1993) (citing Tenn. Pub. Co. v. Am. Nat'l Bank, 299 U.S. 18, 22 (1936)). The bankruptcy court was correct when it determined that Mr. Spivey cannot repay his creditors and rebuild his company under chapter 11. In re Tiana Motel Inc., 749 F.2d 146, 151 (2d Cir. 1984) ("boundless confidence" not enough to allow debtor to maintain a chapter 11 case). Douglas Asphalt's ongoing operations will generate losses and the further accumulation of debt to the detriment of its creditors. The bankruptcy court was correct, furthermore, that rebuilding from the ground up is not rehabilitation. Hr'g Tr., 153 (bankruptcy court ruling); see Loop Corp., 379 F.3d at 516. The bankruptcy court did not clearly err when it found that rehabilitation of Douglas Asphalt would be impossible.

Nor does the existence of the judgment against Applied Technical Services alter this conclusion. The judgment currently consists of $2 million in the bankruptcy court and additional claims against third parties which may or may not be liable to Douglas Asphalt. Even if Douglas Asphalt were to collect the full $150 million, which is very unlikely, it would still owe the bondholders $12 million. Douglas Asphalt cannot obtain performance bonds. Hr'g Tr., 54. It is not pre-qualified to do work for the Georgia Department of Transportation. Id., 52-52. It simply does not have access to jobs that can generate enough revenue to make meaningful repayments to its creditors and which would warrant keeping this case in chapter 11.

II. THE BANKRUPTCY COURT DID NOT ABUSE ITS DISCRETION IN DETERMINING THAT CONVERSION OF THE DEBTOR'S CASE TO CHAPTER 7 BEST SERVED THE INTERESTS OF CREDITORS AND THE ESTATE.

As the bankruptcy court found, Douglas Asphalt's creditors will be better served by liquidation. Liquidation provides the Douglas Asphalt creditors with four advantages. First, liquidation will be much quicker than waiting for Mr.

Spivey to grow the company from an empty shell into the multi-million dollar enterprise it once was. Hr'g Tr., 64 (statement by Mr. Spivey that he cannot rebuild "overnight"). The primary assets of the Douglas Asphalt estate are the $150 million Applied Technical Services judgment and several other legal claims. As of the hearing date, special counsel had already been hired to pursue collection on that judgment and to initiate actions in pursuit of the estate's other claims. See Hr'g Tr. 131, 146, 149-50. In contrast, Mr. Spivey estimated that Douglas Asphalt could generate a net income of $200,000 per year in the foreseeable future. Id., 93. Accordingly, the special counsel will be able to reduce Douglas Asphalt's claims to cash for the benefit of creditors before the company could become an enterprise again capable of generating the multi-million dollar income needed to make a significant repayment to its creditors.

Second, liquidation in chapter 7 ensures that all similarly situated creditors will be treated fairly and equally. See Reliant Energy Servs., Inc. v. Enron Canada Corp., 349 F.3d 816, 825 (5th Cir. 2003) (stating that one purpose of the automatic stay is to promote equity of distribution among creditors). An orderly liquidation of the estate's assets in chapter 7 would benefit all creditors by preventing the race to state court that would otherwise result if the case were dismissed and creditors were left to their remedies at state law.

Third, conversion ensures the oversight of a chapter 7 trustee. The creditors allege that Mr. Spivey, other Spivey family members, and Douglas Asphalt Paving Company, the corporation owned by the debtor's ex-wife, may have received preferential or fraudulent transfers from Douglas Asphalt. Hr'g Tr., 25-26, 29-30, 81, 139. They contend that these could be avoided and recovered for the benefit of creditors. See 11 U.S.C. §§ 547, 548 and 551. Because Mr. Spivey has an inherent conflict of interest in investigating and pursuing these allegations against himself and his family members, a neutral trustee will benefit creditors. See Hr'g Tr., 83-84. See In re Intercat, Inc., 247 B.R. 911, 922-23 (Bankr. S.D. Ga. 2000) (Davis, J.) (stating a trustee is necessary when a debtor's principal owner/manager is the target of potential investigations and/or actions to recover transfers for the benefit of creditors). Naming a chapter 7 trustee would be more beneficial than appointment of a chapter 11 trustee because there is no business to operate. See In re Fiesta Homes of Georgia, Inc., 125 B.R. 321, 326 (Bankr. S.D. Ga. 1990) (Davis, J.) (noting that if there is no business to operate, conversion to chapter 7 is the obvious choice).

Fourth, the creditors who are owed the majority of the unsecured debt at issue in the case supported the United States Trustee's motion to convert. See e.g., Hr'g Tr. at 23. See In re Loop Corp., 290 B.R. 108, 115 (D. Minn. 2003), aff'd 379 F.3d 511 (8th Cir. 2004) (noting that it is appropriate to consider whether creditors favor conversion or dismissal when determining the best interests of creditors). If the creditors themselves favor conversion, the bankruptcy court could not have abused its discretion in determining that conversion to chapter 7 best served the interests of creditors and the estate.

III. DOUGLAS ASPHALT CANNOT DEMONSTRATE THAT THERE ARE UNUSUAL CIRCUMSTANCES INDICATING THAT CONVERSION WOULD BE DETRIMENTAL TO CREDITORS AND THE ESTATE.

The United States Trustee met his burden to show cause that Douglas Asphalt's chapter 11 case should be converted to chapter 7. In re Woodbrook Assocs., 19 F.3d 312, 317 (7th Cir. 1994). Under sections 1112(b)(1) and (2), if the movant establishes cause, then the burden shifts to the debtor to prove the existence of "unusual circumstances" such that conversion would be detrimental to creditors and the estate. Id.; In re Roan Valley, LLC, No. 09-13229, 2009 WL 6498118, at *2 (Bankr. N.D. Ga. Nov. 25, 2009) (delineating burdens of proof); In re Prods. Int'l Co., 395 B.R. 101, 109 (Bankr. D. Ariz. 2008) (relying on 7 Collier on Bankruptcy, ¶ 1112.04[3], p. 1112-26, 1112-27 (15th ed. rev.)).

In this case, Douglas Asphalt is not eligible to attempt to make a section 1112(b)(1) and (2) showing of unusual circumstances. These Code provisions require that a debtor show that "the grounds for granting such relief [denial of conversion due to unusual circumstances] include an act or omission of the debtor other than under paragraph (4)(A). 11 U.S.C. § 1112(b)(2)(B) (emphasis added). Subsection 1112(b)(4)(A) states that cause for conversion includes "substantial or continuing loss to or diminution of the estate and the absence of a reasonable likelihood of rehabilitation." The plain language of section 1112(b) precludes overriding the establishment of cause to convert if that cause is diminution of the estate and unlikelihood of rehabilitation – the precise grounds for conversion in this case

Here the bankruptcy court based its decision to convert on section 1112(b)(4)(A). Therefore, section 1112(b)(2)(B) prevents Douglas Asphalt from raising an unusual circumstances defense to block conversion.

Even if Douglas Asphalt were eligible to make such an argument, it would fail. Douglas Asphalt's brief omits the language in the statute that explains what a debtor must do to prevent conversion even after a party in interest has established cause and lack of unusual circumstances. See Douglas Asphalt Br. at 8. First, a debtor must show that "there is a reasonable likelihood that a plan will be confirmed within the time frames established in sections 1121(e) and 1129(e) of this title, or if such sections do not apply, within a reasonable period of time[.]" 11 U.S.C. § 1112(b)(2)(A). Second, that debtor must also show that its acts or omissions that caused grounds for conversion are justifiable. 11 U.S.C. § 1112(b)(2)(B)(i). Third, it must show it can cure the grounds that would justify conversion. 11 U.S.C. § 1112(b)(2)(B)(ii).

Douglas Asphalt has shown none of these. It has not submitted a plan or maintained that it could submit a plan that would be confirmed within a reasonable time. It also did not argue that the motion to convert was based on a reasonably justified act or omission that it could cure in a reasonable time. Accordingly, even if section 1112(b)(2) were applicable in this case, Douglas Asphalt has not even tried to establish the two elements necessary to invoke it.

Given Douglas Asphalt's dire financial straits and lack of significant operations, it cannot propose a feasible plan to successfully retire $220 million in debt over any reasonable period of time. Moreover, the debtor lacks the support of its major creditors, the bond companies, whose votes would be necessary to confirm a consensual plan. For these reasons, confirmation of a plan is not likely to occur, and every dollar Douglas Asphalt spends fighting to confirm a plan is a dollar wasted. Creditors have every right to cut their losses and insist upon an orderly liquidation, which is what they have done in this case by supporting the United States Trustee's motion to convert.

CONCLUSION

For the foregoing reasons, the United States Trustee requests that this Court affirm the bankruptcy court's order converting Douglas Asphalt Company's case from chapter 11 to chapter 7.

STATEMENT OF APPELLATE JURISDICTION

The United States Bankruptcy Court for the District of Minnesota had jurisdiction over Geoff and Kristin Draisey's bankruptcy case under 28 U.S.C. §§ 157 and 1334. The bankruptcy court denied the United States Trustee's section 707(b)(3) motion to dismiss by order entered April 8, 2008. The United States Trustee timely appealed that order on April 15, 2008, under 28 U.S.C. § 158(c)(2) and Fed. R. Bankr. P. 8002(a).

This Court has jurisdiction over this appeal under 28 U.S.C. § 158(a). The bankruptcy court's order denying the United States Trustee's section 707(b) motion is a final, appealable order. See Stuart v. Koch (In re Koch), 109 F.3d 1285, 1287 (8th Cir. 1997) (order denying section 707(b) motion to dismiss is final).

STATEMENT OF THE ISSUE AND STANDARD OF REVIEW

Under section 704(b) of the Bankruptcy Code, United States Trustees file (a) a statement whether an individual debtor's chapter 7 case is presumptively abusive under section 707(b), and (b) any motion to dismiss the debtor's case based on presumed abuse under 11 U.S.C. § 707(b)(2), within specified time limits.

The question presented is: Did the bankruptcy court err in denying the United States Trustee's motion to dismiss the Draiseys' bankruptcy case for abuse under section 707(b)(3) because the United States Trustee did not file the statement or motion within the time limits specified in section 704(b)?

This Court reviews findings of fact for clear error and conclusions of law de novo. In re M & S Grading, Inc., 457 F.3d 898, 899 (8th Cir. 2006). Issues of statutory construction are reviewed de novo. Stuart v. Carter (In re Larsen), 59 F.3d 783, 785 (8th Cir. 1995). This appeal is subject to de novo review because it involves a statutory construction question.

STATEMENT OF THE CASE

This appeal involves the interpretation of provisions added to the Bankruptcy Code by the Bankruptcy Abuse Prevention and Consumer Protection Act of 2005, Pub. L. No. 109-8, 119 Stat. 23 (2005). The 2005 Act included provisions mandating the dismissal of bankruptcy cases filed by consumer debtors seeking chapter 7 relief if the court determines granting relief would be an abuse of chapter 7. 11 U.S.C. § 707(b). The 2005 Act added provisions requiring the United States Trustee to file a statement whether a bankruptcy case would be presumed to be an abuse under section 707(b), and to file any motion to dismiss the debtor's case based on presumed abuse, within specified time limits. 11 U.S.C. § 704(b).

The Draiseys filed a voluntary chapter 7 petition. The United States Trustee filed a motion to dismiss the Draiseys' chapter 7 case for abuse under 11 U.S.C. § 707(b)(1) and (3), based on the totality of the Draiseys' financial circumstances. The United States Trustee did not seek dismissal under 11 U.S.C. § 707(b)(2) because no presumption of abuse arose in the case. In response, the Draiseys asserted that the section 707(b)(3) motion was untimely because the United States Trustee did not file a statement whether the Draiseys' case would be presumed to be an abuse and did not file the motion within the time limits specified in section 704(b). The bankruptcy court agreed with the Draiseys and entered an order denying the motion without addressing its merits. The court concluded that the motion was time-barred because timely compliance with section 704(b) was a prerequisite for the United States Trustee to bring any motion under section 707(b), not just motions seeking relief under section 707(b)(2). This appeal followed.

STATEMENT OF THE FACTS

I. Statutory Framework

A. Overview of Section 707(b)

The 2005 Act made significant changes to section 707(b) of the Bankruptcy Code, which provides a mechanism for policing the bankruptcy system for abuse, to ensure "that those who can afford to repay some portion of their unsecured debts be required to do so ..." 151 Cong. Rec. S2470 (March 10, 2005). First, Congress lowered the legal standard for dismissal under section 707(b) from "substantial abuse" to "abuse." Second, Congress eliminated the prior statutory presumption that debtors were entitled to relief and replaced it with a statutory presumption of abuse mandating dismissal under section 707(b)(2) or, with the debtor's consent, conversion to a chapter 13 debt repayment case. The section 707(b)(2) presumption arises when debtors can pay more than $182.50 per month to their creditors as calculated under a "means test" formula set out in section 707(b)(2)(A).

B. The United States Trustee's Duties Under Section 704(b)

Under the 2005 Act, the United States Trustees review and analyze the means test form and other materials filed by all consumer chapter 7 debtors. Section 704(b)(1)(A) requires United States Trustees to file not later than 10 days after the date of the first meeting of creditors a statement whether the debtor's case would be presumed to be an abuse under section 707(b) ("10-Day Statement"). 11 U.S.C. § 704(b)(1)(A). The bankruptcy court must provide a copy of the 10-Day Statement to all creditors of the debtor within 5 days after receiving the statement. 11 U.S.C. § 704(b)(1)(B).

Section 704(b)(2) specifies that "if the United States Trustee determines that the debtor's case should be presumed to be an abuse under section 707(b)" and the debtor's current monthly income is above the applicable state median family income, the United States Trustee must file either a motion to dismiss or convert under section 707(b) or a statement setting forth the reasons the United States Trustee does not consider such a motion to be appropriate, within 30 days after the date of filing the 10-Day Statement. 11 U.S.C. § 704(b)(2).

C. Dismissal for Abuse Under Section 707(b)(3)(B) Based on Totality of the Circumstances

Section 707(b)(3)(B) allows courts to dismiss debtors' cases when the totality of the circumstances of their financial situation demonstrates abuse. 11 U.S.C. § 707(b)(3). United States Trustees are authorized to seek dismissal under section 707(b)(3)(B). See 11 U.S.C. § 707(b)(1).

D. Interim Bankruptcy Rule 1017(e)

Prior to the effective date of the 2005 Act, Rule 1017(e)(1), Fed. R. Bankr. P., governed the time limit for the United States Trustee to file a motion to dismiss a consumer chapter 7 debtor's case for substantial abuse under former section 707(b). Under Rule 1017(e)(1), the United States Trustee was required to file a motion to dismiss for substantial abuse within 60 days after the first date set for the meeting of creditors, unless the court extended the time for filing the motion for cause on request filed by the United States Trustee before the time expired. Fed. R. Bankr. P. 1017(e)(1).

Interim Bankruptcy Rule 1017(e)(1), applicable to cases filed on or after October 17, 2005, provides that a motion to dismiss for abuse is subject to the same 60-day filing deadline specified in former Rule 1017(e), "except as otherwise provided in section 704(b)(2)." Interim Bankruptcy

A. The Draiseys' Bankruptcy Filing

On April 10, 2007, the Draiseys filed a voluntary chapter 7 petition. Appellant's App., pp.5-49. The Draiseys had $137,234 in unsecured debt.[2] Id., p.30. The record in this case evidences that the Draiseys enjoyed higher income both before and immediately after the filing of their bankruptcy case than they did at the moment of filing, which necessitated further inquiry by the United States Trustee regarding the Draiseys' financial circumstances. Id., pp.2, 33, 67. The Draiseys' statement of financial affairs listed annual gross wages of $75,533 in 2006 and $92,000 in 2005. Id., p.33. Their schedules of current income (Schedule I) and current expenses (Schedule J), however, indicated that Ms. Draisey was unemployed at the moment of filing and that the Draiseys had gross monthly income of $3,366.67 ($40,400.04 annually) and monthly expenses of $5,158.47. Id., pp.27-28. The Draiseys' means test form showed current monthly income of $5,365.88 ($64,390.56

[1] Following the enactment of the 2005 Act, the Advisory Committee on Bankruptcy Rules prepared and recommended for local court adoption Interim Bankruptcy Rules designed to implement changes made by the 2005 Act. The Interim Rules apply until the Federal Rules of Bankruptcy Procedure are amended to implement the 2005 Act amendments. The Interim Rules are effective only in cases commenced on or after October 17, 2005, and only in the judicial districts that have adopted them by local rule or court order. 9 Collier on Bankruptcy, p.1017-2 (Alan N. Resnick & Henry J. Sommer eds., 15th ed. rev. 2006). On September 27, 2005, the bankruptcy judges in the District of Minnesota adopted the Interim Bankruptcy Rules for application in that district. Appellant's App., p.106. On April 23, 2008, the United States Supreme Court adopted amendments to the Federal Rules of Bankruptcy Procedure implementing changes made by the 2005 Act, effective December 1, 2008. The text of amended Rule 1017, as adopted by the Supreme Court, is identical to that of Interim Bankruptcy Rule 1017. Rule 1017, Fed. R. Bankr. P., as amended effective December 1, 2008.

annually), which was below the applicable state median family income of $70,908, and therefore indicated that the presumption of abuse did not arise. Id., pp.44-45.

The Draiseys' mandatory 11 U.S.C. § 341(a) meeting of creditors was held on May 11, 2007. Id., p.51. On May 21, 2007, the United States Trustee filed with the bankruptcy court a 10-Day Statement indicating that he was unable to determine whether the presumption of abuse arose under 11 U.S.C. § 707(b)(2) in the Draiseys' bankruptcy case.[3] Id., pp.2-3. On June 19, 2007, after the United States Trustee received additional documents from the Draiseys and completed his means test review, the United States Trustee filed a supplemental statement under section 704(b)(1) indicating that the presumption of abuse did not arise.[4] Id., p.3.

As a result of his investigation of the Draiseys' financial affairs, the United States Trustee learned that Ms. Draisey was unemployed from December 2006 through March 2007. Id., pp.57, 80. In April 2007, shortly before the Draiseys' bankruptcy filing, however, the Draiseys' financial circumstances changed significantly when Ms. Draisey found new employment at an annual gross salary of more than $45,000. Id., pp.57, 63, 103. Based on the Draiseys' current wage statements, which included Ms. Draisey's wages from her new job, the United States Trustee calculated that the

[3] The 10-Day Statement provided: "The United States Trustee has determined that the debtor has not filed nor transmitted all of the required means testing documents and that without these documents, the United States Trustee cannot make a determination as to whether debtor's case is presumed abusive under section 707(b)." Appellant's App., pp.2-3.

[4] The supplemental section 704(b)(1) statement provided: "The United States Trustee previously filed a statement under section 704(b)(1)(A) of the Bankruptcy Code indicating an inability to determine whether this case would be presumed to be an abuse. The United States Trustee has reviewed all materials filed and submitted by the Debtor, including certain additional documents received after the filing of the United States Trustee's initial statement under section 704(b)(1)(A). Based on this review, the United States Trustee has determined that the Debtor's case is not presumed to be an abuse under section 707(b)(2)." Appellant's App., p.3.

Draiseys' monthly gross income had increased to $7,560.38 ($90,724.56 annually). Id., pp.57, 67, 70. The United States Trustee determined that, as a result of the Draiseys' increased income, they had sufficient disposable income to repay a portion of their unsecured debts. Id., pp.57-58, 73.

B. The United States Trustee's Motion to Dismiss Under Section 707(b)(3)(B)

On July 9, 2007, the United States Trustee filed a motion to dismiss the Draiseys' chapter 7 case for abuse under 11 U.S.C. § 707(b)(1) and (3) based on the totality of the circumstances of the Draiseys' financial situation. Id., pp.54-83. The United States Trustee sought dismissal because Ms. Draisey's new job changed the Draiseys' financial circumstances and increased their ability to repay their debts. Id., pp.57-58, 80, 103-104. See, e.g., In re Cortez, 457 F.3d 448, 458 (5th Cir. 2006) (pre-2005 Act case holding courts can consider postpetition improvements in earnings in ruling on a motion to dismiss under section 707(b)); In re Pak, 343 B.R. 239, 246-247 (Bankr. N.D. Cal. 2006) (court should take into account any post-filing changes in income in determining abuse under section 707(b)(3)(B)).

On August 31, 2007, the Draiseys responded to the motion, raising both substantive and procedural objections. Most importantly, for purposes of this appeal, the Draiseys asserted that the motion was untimely because the United States Trustee did not file the 10-Day Statement and the motion within the time limits specified in section 704(b). Appellant's App., pp.89-90.

On September 6, 2007, the United States Trustee filed a supplement to his motion, asserting that section 704(b) does not apply to this case because the United States Trustee did not determine that the Draiseys' case should be presumed to be an abuse under section 707(b)(2) and the Draiseys' current monthly income did not exceed the applicable state median. Id., pp.99-100. The United States Trustee also explained that Interim Bankruptcy Rule 1017(e)(1), not section 704(b), governs the timeliness of a motion to dismiss for abuse based on section 707(b)(3)(B), because the latter is restricted only to section 707(b)(2) presumed abuse claims. Id., p.100.

On September 11, 2007, the bankruptcy court conducted a hearing on the motion, at which the Court heard argument on the threshold issue whether the motion was time-barred under section 704(b). Id., pp.113-118; TR., pp.1-22. At the conclusion of the hearing, the court took the matter under advisement. Id., pp.116-118; TR., pp.16-22.

C. The Bankruptcy Court's Order Denying the Motion

On April 8, 2008, the bankruptcy court entered an order denying the United States Trustee's motion to dismiss for abuse under sections 707(b)(1) and 707(b)(3)(B), concluding that the motion was time-barred because the United States Trustee did not file a statement whether the Draiseys' case would be presumed to be an abuse and did not file the motion within the time limits specified in section 704(b).[5] Id., pp.106, 108, 109. The bankruptcy court read section 704(b) as requiring United States Trustees to file 10-Day Statements in every individual chapter 7 case and file all motions to dismiss for abuse under section 707(b) within 30 days after the filing of the 10-Day Statements, regardless whether the presumption of abuse arises in the case or whether the debtor's annualized current monthly income exceeds the applicable state median. Id., pp.106, 108.

[5] In its April 8, 2008 order, the bankruptcy court found that the United States Trustee never filed a 10-Day Statement addressing the existence of the presumption of abuse in the Draiseys' case. Appellant's App., pp.103, 104. Although the United States Trustee does not believe he was required to file a 10-Day Statement in this case, he in fact filed two statements. Id., pp.2-3. In any event, the United States Trustee has not raised this issue on appeal because his attorney, in light of the bankruptcy court's decision in In re Robertson, 370 B.R. 804 (Bankr. D. Minn. 2007), advised the court at the September 11, 2007, hearing that the United States Trustee did not file a definitive 10-Day Statement as to whether the presumption arose in the Draiseys' case. Appellant's App., p.115; TR., p.11. The United States Trustee disagrees with Robertson's holding, but does not press that issue in this appeal.

SUMMARY OF ARGUMENT

The bankruptcy court denied the United States Trustee's section 707(b)(3) motion to dismiss on a procedural ground, one that turned on two legal conclusions the court made. Both were necessary to the court's holding.

First, the bankruptcy court ruled section 704(b)(1)'s requirement that United States Trustees file 10-Day Statements applies in every chapter 7 case, not just cases in which a presumption of abuse arises under section 707(b)(2). Second, because the court ruled section 704(b)(1)'s 10-Day Statement deadline was triggered in every case, it ruled that the United States Trustee needed to file his section 707(b)(3) motion by the deadline created by section 704(b)(2) rather than the longer deadline established by Interim Fed. R. Bankr. P. 1017(e). In reaching that conclusion, the court rejected the United States Trustee's alternative legal argument that, even if section 704(b)(1) applies in all cases, section 704(b)(2)'s deadline nonetheless applies only to motions asserting claims under section 707(b)(2), not section 707(b)(3) claims.

The bankruptcy court's order merits reversal if either of these subsidiary legal rulings is incorrect. Both are.

The bankruptcy court ruled incorrectly that Section 704(b)(1)'s 10-day deadline for filing a statement of presumed abuse applies in every case. Section 704(b)(1) is best read as requiring United States Trustees to file 10-Day Statements only when a presumption of abuse arises. Accordingly, the bankruptcy court erred in concluding that a 10-Day Statement was a prerequisite to the United States Trustee's motion to dismiss asserting a claim under section 707(b)(3)(B). In this case, the United States Trustee was not required to file a 10-Day Statement because the section 707(b)(2) presumption of abuse did not arise. There was thus no need for the United States Trustee to comply with section 704(b)(2)'s deadline because that deadline applies only when the section 704(b)(1) deadline is triggered.

Even if United States Trustees must file the statement mentioned in section 704(b)(1) when no presumption of abuse arises, the bankruptcy court's ruling would nonetheless merit reversal because the section 704(b)(2) deadline that section 704(b)(1) triggers applies only to motions asserting a claim under section 707(b)(2) for presumed abuse. This reading is supported by section 704(b)(2)'s text, which focuses only on a presumption of abuse, not the totality of the circumstances of the debtor's financial situation,[6] which is relevant in section 707(b)(3)(B) cases like the Draiseys'. Indeed, the bankruptcy court's reading cannot be the correct one because it would render superfluous all the words in section 704(b)(2) that follow the word "if."

I. THE UNITED STATES TRUSTEE'S SECTION 707(b)(3)(B) MOTION WAS NOT UNTIMELY UNDER SECTION 704(b)(2) BECAUSE SECTION 704(b)(1) APPLIES ONLY WHEN A PRESUMPTION OF ABUSE ARISES UNDER SECTION 707(b)(2), WHICH WAS NOT THE CASE HERE.

Section 704(b)(1)(A) requires each United States Trustee to file "a statement as to whether the debtor's case would be presumed to be an abuse under section 707(b)." The bankruptcy court, in denying the section 707(b)(3)(B)-based motion, concluded that this language requires United States Trustees to file 10-Day Statements in all individual chapter 7 cases, regardless whether the presumption of abuse arises. Appellant's App., p.108. Given section 704(b)'s language, which focuses solely upon presumed abuse under section 707(b)(2), section 704(b)(1) is better read as requiring United States Trustees to file 10-Day Statements only where the presumption of abuse

[6] Section 704(b)(2) is also not relevant in bad faith cases under section 707(b)(3)(A).

First, the text supports this reading. Section 704(b)(1) does not expressly require a statement that the presumption does not arise. It exists only to trigger section 704(b)(2)'s filing deadline for motions to dismiss based on presumed abuse, and only requires an affirmative statement as to "whether" the presumption of abuse arises. Had Congress intended to require a 10-Day Statement to be filed whether or not the United States Trustee determined that the presumption of abuse arose, it could easily have done so.

Second, this reading best implements the primary purpose of the statute, which is to provide preliminary notice to creditors that the United States Trustee has determined a presumption of abuse arises. See In re Cadwallder, 2007 WL 1864154 at *8 (Bankr. S.D. Tex. 2007). This is evidenced by section 704(b)(1)(B)'s text, which requires the clerk's office to provide a copy of the 10-Day Statement to creditors, but not to the debtor. Id. (explaining that the notice requirement suggests the 10-Day Statement is intended primarily for the information and benefit of creditors and the court, not for the debtor); cf. 6 Collier on Bankruptcy, ¶ 704.17[1], p. 704-37 (Alan N. Resnick & Henry J. Sommer eds., 15th ed. rev. 2006) (section 704(b)(1)(B) is "intended to give creditors an opportunity to file their own motions under 707(b)(2), if they are eligible to do so").

Third, requiring clerks' offices to provide copies of 10-Day Statements in cases filed by below-median-income debtors such as the Draiseys makes little sense because courts cannot dismiss cases filed by below-median debtors based on the presumption of abuse and creditors lack standing to seek dismissal under section 707(b) against any below-median-income debtor. 11 U.S.C. § 707(b)(6) and (7).

The issue takes sharp focus when one reflects that approximately 90% of the 451,011 consumer chapter 7 cases filed during fiscal year 2007 were filed by below-median-income debtors.[7] Requiring bankruptcy court clerks to provide copies of 10-Day Statements to creditors in every below-median income consumer chapter 7 case would necessitate the mailing of millions of additional documents to creditors, resulting in vast expenditures of time, money, and other court resources for no apparent purpose.

By way of example, the Draiseys' bankruptcy schedules list twenty-three creditors. Under the bankruptcy court's interpretation of section 704(b)(1), based on approximately 406,000 chapter 7 cases filed by below-median-income debtors during fiscal year 2007, and assuming, conservatively, an average of ten creditors per case, clerks' offices nationwide would have been required to provide at least 4,060,000 copies of 10-Day Statements to creditors in cases where the creditors lacked any standing to seek dismissal under section 707(b).

Thus, the statute's text and purpose support the conclusion that Congress did not intend to require United States Trustees to file 10-Day Statements in every chapter 7 case, and certainly not in cases filed by debtors whose historical income was below median. Nor does the text or policy lead to the conclusion that Congress intended to force bankruptcy court clerks' offices to mail millions of documents to creditors annually advising creditors that the section 707(b)(2) presumption of abuse did not arise, given that creditors lack standing to pursue relief under section 707(b)(2) or (b)(3) against below-median-income debtors.

Because the United States Trustee was not required to file a 10-Day Statement in this case,

[7] During fiscal year 2007, according to data collected by the Administrative Office of the U.S. Courts, 451,011 consumer chapter 7 cases were filed nationwide, excluding the judicial districts in Alabama and North Carolina. See 28 U.S.C. § 581(a) (excluding the federal judicial districts in Alabama and North Carolina from the United States Trustee Program). Of these 451,011 cases, approximately 10% or 45,000 were filed by debtors with above-median income.

the bankruptcy court erred by denying the United States Trustee's motion to dismiss for failure to file a 10-Day Statement.

II. ALTERNATIVELY, EVEN IF UNITED STATES TRUSTEES MUST FILE A 10-DAY STATEMENT WHEN THE PRESUMPTION OF ABUSE DOES NOT ARISE, THE 30-DAY DEADLINE IN SECTION 704(b)(2) APPLIES ONLY TO MOTIONS BASED ON SECTION 707(b)(2)'S PRESUMPTION OF ABUSE, NOT TO SECTION 707(b)(3) MOTIONS, WHICH ARE SUBJECT TO THE DEADLINE IN INTERIM BANKRUPTCY RULE 1017(e).

The bankruptcy court concluded that section 704(b)(2)'s directive that the United States Trustee "file a motion to dismiss or convert under section 707(b)" was not expressly limited to section 707(b)(2) motions based on a presumption of abuse and accordingly, also applied to motions based on section 707(b)(3). Appellant's App., p.106. It did so because the section uses the term "707(b)" rather than "707(b)(2)." This construction, however, fails to give meaning to all the statute's words, which make clear Congress's intent to limit section 704(b)(2)'s applicability to motions to dismiss based on presumed abuse under section 707(b)(2).

Congress enacted section 704(b) as part of the 2005 Act to implement the new provisions of section 707(b)(2) requiring bankruptcy courts to dismiss debtors' chapter 7 cases based on presumed abuse. Its purpose is to inform the court and parties in interest whether United States Trustees have determined the presumption of abuse arises under section 707(b)(2). All the words in section 704(b) make clear that the 30-day deadline in section 704(b)(2) applies only to motions based on section 707(b)(2) .

First, section 704(b)(1)(A) requires United States Trustees to file 10-Day Statements "as to whether the debtor's case would be presumed to be an abuse under section 707(b)." 11 U.S.C. § 704(b)(1)(A). This relates to section 707(b)(2)'s means test. Second, section 704(b)(1)(B) requires the court to provide a copy of any 10-Day Statement to all creditors within 5 days after receiving the statement. 11 U.S.C. § 704(b)(1)(B). Third, section 704(b)(2) then provides that the United States Trustees shall file, not less than 30 days after the date of filing the 10-Day Statement, either a motion to dismiss under section 707(b) or a statement setting forth the reasons why a motion is inappropriate, "if the United States Trustee determines that the debtor's case should be presumed to be an abuse under section 707(b) and [the debtor's current monthly income exceeds the applicable state median family income]."[8] 11 U.S.C. § 704(b)(2) (emphasis added). Again, that provision applies only to section 707(b)(2) motions predicated on the presumption of abuse.

The court's conclusion that timely compliance with section 704(b)(2) was a prerequisite for the United States Trustee to bring a section 707(b)(3)-based motion renders the second half of that provision superfluous.[9] The second half of section 704(b)(2) provides that the 30-day filing deadline (after filing the 10-Day Statement) applies only if the United States Trustee determines that the presumption of abuse arises and if the debtor's annualized current monthly income exceeds the median.[10]

[8] At least one court has held that section 704(b) is "a mandate for U.S. Trustee action imposed for the benefit of the Court and other parties in interest, not a deadline" and that "even if the U.S. Trustee had not met the § 704(b) deadlines, the motion would not be time barred merely for that reason." In re Cadwallder, 2007 WL 1864154 at *9 (Bankr. S.D. Tex. 2007).

[9] Section 704(b)(2) reads:

> The United States trustee ... shall, not later than 30 days after the date of filing a statement under paragraph (1), either file a motion to dismiss or convert under section 707(b) or file a statement setting forth the reasons the United States trustee ... does not consider such a motion to be appropriate, if the United States trustee ... determines that the debtor's case should be presumed to be an abuse under section 707(b) and the product of the debtor's current monthly income, multiplied by 12 [exceeds the applicable state median family income].

[10] In this case, the Draiseys' annualized current monthly income was below the median. Appellant's App., p.45.

That portion of section 704(b)(2)'s text makes clear the provision does not set a deadline for section 707(b)(3)(B)-based motions. If Congress intended for all section 707(b) motions to be filed within 30 days after filing a 10-Day Statement (and not just motions based on the section 707(b)(2) presumption), then everything after the word "if" in section 704(b)(2) would be meaningless.

Given this, the bankruptcy court's reading of section 704(b)(2) conflicts with the rule of statutory construction that courts should not interpret one provision of a statute in a manner that renders other sections of the same statute inconsistent, meaningless, or superfluous. Cody v. Hillard, 304 F.3d 767, 776 (8th Cir. 2002); see also Darling v. Bowen, 878 F.2d 1069, 1076 (8th Cir. 1989), cert. denied sub nom. Stangler v. Darling, 494 U.S. 1066 (1990) (in interpreting a statute, courts must seek to adopt a construction which gives effect to all of its provisions). Where, as here, a statute admits a reasonable construction which gives effect to all of its provisions, the court should decline to adopt a strained reading which renders one part a mere redundancy.[11] Beef Nebraska, Inc. v. United States, 807 F.2d 712, 717 (8th Cir. 1986), citing Jarecki v. G.D. Searle & Co., 367 U.S. 303, 307-308 (1961).

Last, the bankruptcy court's reading of section 704(b) also conflicts with the decisions of all other courts that have considered this issue. In the two-and-one-half years since the effective date of the 2005 Act, no other court has read the statute this way. Every other court has held that section [11] The court also misread section 704(b)(1) to require the United States Trustee to file a 10-Day Statement in all consumer chapter 7 cases because the 10-Day Statement functions primarily to trigger the 30-day deadline for filing motions based on presumed abuse. Appellant's App., p.108. The Draiseys had initially disclosed on their means test form that the presumption did not arise and that the Draiseys' current monthly income was below the median. Id., pp.44-45, 51. Section 704(b) contains no language requiring the United States Trustee to file a 10-Day Statement as a prerequisite for filing a section 707(b)(3) motion, which is not based on presumed abuse. See In re Byrne, 376 B.R. 700, 704 (Bankr. W.D. Ark. 2006) ("the ten day statement under § 704(b)(1) is superfluous to a filing under § 707(b)(3) if a determination has otherwise been made that a presumption of abuse does not arise").

704(b)(2) does not apply to section 707(b)(3)-based motions; and even the bankruptcy judges in Minnesota now are split on this issue. See In re Close, 384 B.R. 856, 871 (D. Kan. 2008), aff'g 353 B.R. 915 (Bankr. D. Kan. 2006); In re Ansar, 383 B.R. 344, 348 (Bankr. D. Minn. 2008) ("[n]othing in § 704(b) prevents the [United States Trustee] from filing a motion to dismiss under § 707(b)(3) where the burden of proof will rest on the [United States Trustee]"); In re Sandifer, 2008 WL 618799 at *1 n.1 (Bankr. N.D. Cal. 2008); In re Perrotta, 378 B.R. 434, 438 (Bankr. D. N.H. 2007); In re Byrne, 376 B.R. 700, 703-704 (Bankr. W.D. Ark. 2007); In re Littman, 370 B.R. 820, 827 n.20 (Bankr. D. Idaho 2007); In re dePellegrini, 365 B.R. 830, 831 (Bankr. S.D. Ohio 2007); In re Singletary, 354 B.R. 455, 465 (Bankr. S.D. Tex. 2006); see also Interim Bankruptcy Rule 1017(e)(1) (providing for deadline of 60 days after the first date set for meeting of creditors for filing motions to dismiss for abuse under section 707(b) "except as otherwise provided in § 704(b)(2)").[12] [12] It is not surprising that the other courts, including another bankruptcy judge in Minnesota, also have held unanimously that Interim Rule 1017(e)(1), not section 704(b)(2), governs the filing deadline for motions based on section 707(b)(3). See In re Ansar, 383 B.R. 344, 348 (Bankr. D. Minn. 2008); In re Perrotta, 378 B.R. 434, 438 (Bankr. D. N.H. 2007); In re Byrne, 376 B.R. 700, 703-704 (Bankr. W.D. Ark. 2007); In re dePellegrini, 365 B.R. 830, 831 (Bankr. S.D. Ohio 2007).

CONCLUSION

For these reasons, the United States Trustee respectfully asks this Court to reverse the bankruptcy court's order denying the United States Trustee's motion to dismiss for abuse under section 707(b)(3), and to remand the case to the bankruptcy court for further proceedings on the merits of the motion.

ADDENDUM

INDEX TO ADDENDUM TO BRIEF OF APPELLANT, UNITED STATES TRUSTEE

11 U.S.C. § 704(b)

(b)(1) With respect to a debtor who is an individual in a case under this chapter--

> (A) the United States trustee (or the bankruptcy administrator, if any) shall review all materials filed by the debtor and, not later than 10 days after the date of the first meeting of creditors, file with the court a statement as to whether the debtor's case would be presumed to be an abuse under section 707(b); and
> (B) not later than 5 days after receiving a statement under subparagraph (A), the court shall provide a copy of the statement to all creditors.

(2) The United States trustee (or bankruptcy administrator, if any) shall, not later than 30 days after the date of filing a statement under paragraph (1), either file a motion to dismiss or convert under section 707(b) or file a statement setting forth the reasons the United States trustee (or the bankruptcy administrator, if any) does not consider such a motion to be appropriate, if the United States trustee (or the bankruptcy administrator, if any) determines that the debtor's case should be presumed to be an abuse under section 707(b) and the product of the debtor's current monthly income, multiplied by 12 is not less than--

> (B) in the case of a debtor in a household of 2 or more individuals, the highest median family income of the applicable State for a family of the same number or fewer individuals.

11 U.S.C. § 707(b)(1), (2), (3), (6), and (7)

(b)(1) After notice and a hearing, the court, on its own motion or on a motion by the United States trustee, trustee (or bankruptcy administrator, if any), or any party in interest, may dismiss a case filed by an individual debtor under this chapter whose debts are primarily consumer debts, or, with the debtor's consent, convert such a case to a case under chapter 11 or 13 of this title, if it finds that the granting of relief would be an abuse of the provisions of this chapter. In making a determination whether to dismiss a case under this section, the court may not take into consideration whether a debtor has made, or continues to make, charitable contributions (that meet the definition of “charitable contribution” under section 548(d)(3)) to any qualified religious or charitable entity or organization (as that term is defined in section 548(d)(4)).

(2)(A)(i) In considering under paragraph (1) whether the granting of relief would be an abuse of the provisions of this chapter, the court shall presume abuse exists if the debtor's current monthly income reduced by the amounts determined under clauses (ii), (iii), and (iv), and multiplied by 60 is not less than the lesser of--

> (I) 25 percent of the debtor's nonpriority unsecured claims in the case, or $6,575, whichever is greater; or
> (II) $10,950.
> (ii)(I) The debtor's monthly expenses shall be the debtor's applicable monthly expense amounts specified under the National Standards and Local Standards, and the debtor's actual monthly expenses for the categories specified as Other Necessary Expenses issued by the Internal Revenue Service for the area in which the debtor resides, as in effect on the date of the order for relief, for the debtor, the dependents of the debtor, and the spouse of the debtor in a joint case, if the spouse is not otherwise a dependent. Such expenses shall include reasonably necessary health insurance, disability insurance, and health savings account expenses for the debtor, the spouse of the debtor, or the dependents of the debtor. Notwithstanding any other provision of this clause, the monthly expenses of the debtor shall not include any payments for debts. In addition, the debtor's monthly expenses shall include the debtor's reasonably necessary expenses incurred to maintain the safety of the debtor and the family of the debtor from family violence as identified under section 309 of the Family Violence Prevention and Services Act, or other applicable Federal law. The expenses included in the debtor's monthly expenses described in the preceding sentence shall be kept confidential by the court. In addition, if it is demonstrated that it is reasonable and necessary, the debtor's monthly expenses may also include an additional allowance for food and clothing of up to 5 percent of the food and clothing categories as specified by the National Standards issued by the Internal Revenue Service.

(II) In addition, the debtor's monthly expenses may include, if applicable, the continuation of actual expenses paid by the debtor that are reasonable and necessary for care and support of an elderly, chronically ill, or disabled household member or member of the debtor's immediate family (including parents, grandparents, siblings, children, and grandchildren of the debtor, the dependents of the debtor, and the spouse of the debtor in a joint case who is not a dependent) and who is unable to pay for such reasonable and necessary expenses.

(III) In addition, for a debtor eligible for chapter 13, the debtor's monthly expenses may include the actual administrative expenses of administering a chapter 13 plan for the district in which the debtor resides, up to an amount of 10 percent of the projected plan payments, as determined under schedules issued by the Executive Office for United States Trustees.

(IV) In addition, the debtor's monthly expenses may include the actual expenses for each dependent child less than 18 years of age, not to exceed $1,650 per year per child, to attend a private or public elementary or secondary school if the debtor provides documentation of such expenses and a detailed explanation of why such expenses are reasonable and necessary, and why such expenses are not already accounted for in the National Standards, Local Standards, or Other Necessary Expenses referred to in subclause (I).

(V) In addition, the debtor's monthly expenses may include an allowance for housing and utilities, in excess of the allowance specified by the Local Standards for housing and utilities issued by the Internal Revenue Service, based on the actual expenses for home energy costs if the debtor provides documentation of such actual expenses and demonstrates that such actual expenses are reasonable and necessary.

(iii) The debtor's average monthly payments on account of secured debts shall be calculated as the sum of--

(I) the total of all amounts scheduled as contractually due to secured creditors in each month of the 60 months following the date of the petition; and

(II) any additional payments to secured creditors necessary for the debtor, in filing a plan under chapter 13 of this title, to maintain possession of the debtor's primary residence, motor vehicle, or other property necessary for the support of the debtor and the debtor's dependents, that serves as collateral for secured debts;

divided by 60.

(iv) The debtor's expenses for payment of all priority claims (including priority child support and alimony claims) shall be calculated as the total amount of debts entitled to priority, divided by 60.

(B)(i) In any proceeding brought under this subsection, the presumption of abuse may only be rebutted by demonstrating special circumstances, such as a serious medical condition or a call or order to active duty in the Armed Forces, to the extent such special circumstances that justify additional expenses or adjustments of current monthly income for which there is no reasonable alternative.

(ii) In order to establish special circumstances, the debtor shall be required to itemize each additional expense or adjustment of income and to provide--

(I) documentation for such expense or adjustment to income; and

(II) a detailed explanation of the special circumstances that make such expenses or adjustment to income necessary and reasonable.

(iii) The debtor shall attest under oath to the accuracy of any information provided to demonstrate that additional expenses or adjustments to income are required.

(iv) The presumption of abuse may only be rebutted if the additional expenses or adjustments to income referred to in clause (i) cause the product of the debtor's current monthly income reduced by the amounts determined under clauses (ii), (iii), and (iv) of subparagraph (A) when multiplied by 60 to be less than the lesser of--

(I) 25 percent of the debtor's nonpriority unsecured claims, or $6,000, whichever is greater; or

(II) $10,000.

(C) As part of the schedule of current income and expenditures required under section 521, the debtor shall include a statement of the debtor's current monthly income, and the calculations that determine whether a presumption arises under subparagraph (A)(i), that show how each such amount is calculated.

(D) Subparagraphs (A) through (C) shall not apply, and the court may not dismiss or convert a case based on any form of means testing, if the debtor is a disabled veteran (as defined in section 3741(1) of title 38), and the indebtedness occurred primarily during a period during which he or she was--

(i) on active duty (as defined in section 101(d)(1) of title 10); or

(ii) performing a homeland defense activity (as defined in section 901(1) of title 32).

(3) In considering under paragraph (1) whether the granting of relief would be an abuse of the provisions of this chapter in a case in which the presumption in subparagraph (A)(i) of such paragraph does not arise or is rebutted, the court shall consider--

(A) whether the debtor filed the petition in bad faith; or

(B) the totality of the circumstances (including whether the debtor seeks to reject a personal services contract and the financial need for such rejection as sought by the debtor) of the debtor's financial situation demonstrates abuse.

(6) Only the judge or United States trustee (or bankruptcy administrator, if any) may file a motion under section 707(b), if the current monthly income of the debtor, or in a joint case, the debtor and the debtor's spouse, as of the date of the order for relief, when multiplied by 12, is equal to or less than--

(A) in the case of a debtor in a household of 1 person, the median family income of the applicable State for 1 earner;

(B) in the case of a debtor in a household of 2, 3, or 4 individuals, the highest median family income of the applicable State for a family of the same number or fewer individuals; or

(C) in the case of a debtor in a household exceeding 4 individuals, the highest median family income of the applicable State for a family of 4 or fewer individuals, plus $575 per month for each individual in excess of 4.

(7)(A) No judge, United States trustee (or bankruptcy administrator, if any), trustee, or other party in interest may file a motion under paragraph (2) if the current monthly income of the debtor, including a veteran (as that term is defined in section 101 of title 38), and the debtor's spouse combined, as of the date of the order for relief when multiplied by 12, is equal to or less than--

(i) in the case of a debtor in a household of 1 person, the median family income of the applicable State for 1 earner;

(ii) in the case of a debtor in a household of 2, 3, or 4 individuals, the highest median family income of the applicable State for a family of the same number or fewer individuals; or

(iii) in the case of a debtor in a household exceeding 4 individuals, the highest median family income of the applicable State for a family of 4 or fewer individuals, plus $575 per month for each individual in excess of 4.

(B) In a case that is not a joint case, current monthly income of the debtor's spouse shall not be considered for purposes of subparagraph (A) if--

(i)(I) the debtor and the debtor's spouse are separated under applicable nonbankruptcy law; or

(II) the debtor and the debtor's spouse are living separate and apart, other than for the purpose of evading subparagraph (A); and

(ii) the debtor files a statement under penalty of perjury--

(I) specifying that the debtor meets the requirement of subclause (I) or (II) of clause (i); and

(II) disclosing the aggregate, or best estimate of the aggregate, amount of any cash or money payments received from the debtor's spouse attributed to the debtor's current monthly income.

Interim Bankruptcy Rule 1017(e)

(e) Dismissal of an Individual Debtor's Chapter 7 Case or Conversion to a Case Under Chapter 11 or 13 for Abuse

The court may dismiss or, with the debtor’s consent, convert an individual debtor's case for abuse under § 707(b) only on motion and after a hearing on notice to the debtor, the trustee, the United States trustee, and any other entities as the court directs.

(1) Except as otherwise provided in § 704(b)(2), a motion to dismiss a case for abuse under § 707(b) or (c) may be filed only within 60 days after the first date set for the meeting of creditors under § 341(a), unless, on request filed before the time has expired, the court for cause extends the time for filing the motion to dismiss. The party filing the motion shall set forth in the motion all matters to be considered at the hearing. A motion to dismiss under § 707(b)(1) and 93) shall state with particularity the circumstances alleged to constitute abuse.

(2) If the hearing is set on the court's own motion, notice of the hearing shall be served on the debtor no later than 60 days after the first date set for the meeting of creditors under § 341(a). The notice shall set forth all matters to be considered by the court at the hearing.

INTRODUCTION

Section 704(b) requires United States Trustees to file a "statement as to whether" an individual chapter 7 debtor's case "would be presumed to be an abuse under section 707(b)." 11 U.S.C. § 704(b)(1)(A). It also establishes a statutory deadline by which United States Trustees must file motions to dismiss chapter 7 cases for presumed abuse. 11 U.S.C. § 704(b)(2). The United States Trustee did not file a motion to dismiss for presumed abuse, but instead moved to dismiss the Draiseys' bankruptcy case based on the totality of the circumstances of their financial situation under section 707(b)(3)(B).

The United States Trustee's opening brief explained that he was not required to file the statement described in section 704(b)(1)(A) ("10-Day Statement") because he did not seek dismissal for presumed abuse. Appellant's Br., pp. 10-11. Alternatively, the United States Trustee explained that even if he were required to file a 10-Day Statement, section 704(b)(2)'s deadline only applies to motions to dismiss for presumed abuse, and not to motions under section 707(b)(3). Appellant's Br., pp. 13-16.

In response, the Draiseys raise two principal arguments. First, they argue that section 704(b)(1)'s text expressly requires United States Trustees to file 10-Day Statements in all chapter 7 cases. Appellees' Br., p. 2. Second, the Draiseys argue that section 704(b)(2)'s 30-day deadline applies to all section 707(b) motions, whether or not based on presumed abuse, because that provision refers to motions under section 707(b) generally rather than to section 707(b)(2). Appellees' Br., pp. 2-3. The Draiseys' arguments, however, misconstrue section 704(b) and fail to address the statute's entire text and purpose, both of which support the United States Trustee's position. Accordingly, each lacks merit.

ARGUMENT

I. THE DRAISEYS' ASSERTION THAT SECTION 704(b)(1) REQUIRES THE FILING OF 10-DAY STATEMENTS IN ALL CHAPTER 7 CASES IS WITHOUT MERIT AND CONTRARY TO THE TEXT AND PURPOSE OF THE STATUTE.

The Draiseys assert the requirement that United States Trustees must file a statement as to "whether" the debtor's case would be presumed to be an abuse extends to filing a statement that the presumption either arises or does not arise in every chapter 7 case. Appellees' Br., p. 2. The statute, however, does not say this. Section 704(b)(1) exists only to trigger section 704(b)(2)'s 30-day filing deadline for motions to dismiss based on presumed abuse, which are brought under section 707(b)(2). If the presumption does not arise, then there is no reason for filing a 10-Day Statement. Section 704(b)(1)(A) does not expressly require a statement that the presumption does not arise. Had Congress intended to require such a statement, it could easily have done so. It did not, so the section 704(b)(1) deadline has no relevance for "abuse" motions brought under section 707(b)(3)(A) or (B).

Not surprisingly, the United States Trustee cannot identify any bankruptcy court decision that has adopted the Draiseys' reading of section 704(b)(1); and, contrary to that reading, a number of courts have determined that section 704(b)'s deadlines are inapplicable when United States Trustees seek relief under section 707(b)(3). See In re Close, 384 B.R. 856, 871 (D. Kan. 2008), aff'g 353 B.R. 915 (Bankr. D. Kan. 2006) (where no presumption of abuse arises, 30-day deadline imposed by section 704(b)(2) does not apply, and section 704(b)(1)(A) statement is not prerequisite for filing); In re Perrotta, __ B.R. __, 2008 WL 2485568, at *4 (Bankr. D. N.H. June 17, 2008) (where United States Trustee is seeking dismissal under section 707(b)(1) or (b)(3) without invoking presumption of abuse, the statement and time limitations under section 704(b) do not apply); In re

Ansar, 383 B.R. 344, 348 (Bankr. D. Minn. 2008) (nothing in § 704(b) prevents United States Trustee from filing motion to dismiss under section 707(b)(3) where burden of proof will rest on United States Trustee); In re Byrne, 376 B.R. 700, 701 (Bankr. W.D. Ark. 2007) (section 704(b)(1) is not applicable to motion to dismiss under section 707(b)(3)).

Less than three weeks ago, a bankruptcy court denied a debtor's motion to dismiss the United States Trustee's section 707(b)(3) claim for abuse, expressly rejecting the Minnesota bankruptcy court's ruling under review in this appeal[1] and finding that court's rationale to be contrary both to the plain meaning of the statute and to Congress's intent in adding the means test to section 707(b). In re Perrotta, __ B.R. __, 2008 WL 2485568, at *2 (Bankr. D. N.H. June 17, 2008) ("Perrotta II").[2] In Perrotta II, the debtor, like the Draiseys, argued that section 704(b)(1)(A) requires United States Trustees to file 10-Day Statements in all cases, regardless whether the presumption arises. Id. The Perrotta court recognized that the presumption of abuse can arise only under the provisions of section 707(b)(2) and is based on objective criteria which are made part of the record in the debtor's initial court filings. Id. at *4. For this reason, the court concluded that the only interpretation of section 704(b) consistent with the policy changes enacted by Congress under the 2005 Act is that section 704(b)(1)'s 10-Day Statement requirement and the associated 30-day deadline under section

[2] In a prior decision, the Perrotta court denied the United States Trustee's motion to dismiss the debtor's case based on presumed abuse under section 707(b)(2) because the United States Trustee did not file a definitive 10-Day Statement under section 704(b)(1)(A). In re Perrotta, 378 B.R. 434, 438 (Bankr. D. N.H. 2007) ("Perrotta I"). In Perrotta I, the court nonetheless permitted the scheduling of a hearing on the United States Trustee's alternative motion to dismiss under section 707(b)(3), having acknowledged that the 30-day deadline under section 704(b)(2) does not apply in cases where the presumption of abuse does not arise. Id. at 438-439.

704(b)(2) apply only where the presumption of abuse arises under section 707(b)(2). Id. The Perrotta court further observed that the debtor's interpretation would frustrate Congressional intent in codifying the totality of circumstances test in section 707(b)(3), which permits bankruptcy courts to consider postpetition events in determining abuse. Id.; see, e.g., In re Pak, 343 B.R. 239, 246-247 (Bankr. N.D. Cal. 2006) (court should take into account any post-filing change in circumstances, such as increased or decreased income, in determining abuse under section 707(b)(3)(B)). The Perrotta court thus concluded that where the United States Trustee is seeking dismissal under section 707(b)(3) without invoking a presumption of abuse, the statement and time limitations under section 704(b) do not apply. Perrotta II, 2008 WL 2485568, at *4. This court's decision is well-reasoned, and the United States Trustee believes it sets out the correct framework for analyzing this issue.

The Draiseys also mistakenly suggest that requiring 10-Day Statements in all cases is consistent with Congressional intent to require United States Trustees to give creditors early notice if they intend to bring any motion under section 707(b), regardless whether the presumption of abuse arises. Appellees' Br., p. 3. The Draiseys misstate Congress's intent. Congress enacted section 704(b) under the 2005 Act specifically to implement the Act's new means testing provisions. Congress required each United States Trustee to file a 10-Day Statement "as to whether the debtor's case should be presumed to be an abuse" under section 704(b)(1)(A), and required the court to provide a copy of the statement to all creditors under section 704(b)(1)(B), to give preliminary notice to creditors that the United States Trustee has determined a presumption of abuse arises, not that it does not arise. See In re Cadwallder, 2007 WL 1864154 at *8 (Bankr. S.D. Tex. 2007); cf. 6 Collier on Bankruptcy, ¶ 704.17[1], p. 704-37 (Alan N. Resnick & Henry J. Sommer eds., 15th ed.

rev. 2006) (section 704(b)(1)(B) is "intended to give creditors an opportunity to file their own motions under 707(b)(2), if they are eligible to do so"). Congress could not have intended to truncate the time period in which United States Trustees may file section 707(b)(3) motions because this purpose would conflict directly with Congress's intent in codifying the totality of circumstances test in section 707(b)(3)(B) to permit bankruptcy courts to consider postpetition events in determining abuse. See Perrotta II, 2008 WL 2485568, at *4.

For these reasons, the Draiseys' reading of section 704(b)(1) is incorrect; and this Court should adopt the majority view, most recently articulated in Perrotta II, which is fully consistent with both the statute's text and purpose.

II. THE DRAISEYS' CONTENTION THAT SECTION 704(b)(2)'S 30-DAY DEADLINE APPLIES TO ALL SECTION 707(b) MOTIONS IS INCORRECT AND MISINTERPRETS THE STATUTE.

The Draiseys also contend that the 30-day deadline in section 704(b)(2) is not expressly limited to section 707(b)(2) motions because section 704(b)(2) uses the term "707(b)" rather than "707(b)(2)." Appellees' Br., pp. 2-3.

The United States Trustee's opening brief explained that section 704(b)(2)'s 30-day deadline, which section 704(b)(1) triggers, applies only to motions asserting a claim under section 707(b)(2) for presumed abuse. This is so because all of the words in section 704(b)(2) that follow the word "if" focus solely upon a presumption of abuse. A "presumption of abuse" motion is brought under section 707(b)(2). Thus, the "if" clause makes clear that 704(b)(2)'s directive that the United States Trustee must "file a motion to dismiss or convert under section 707(b)" or a statement explaining why the United States Trustee is not filing such a motion affects only the United States Trustee's ability to file section 707(b)(2) "presumption of abuse" motions, not section 707(b)(3) "abuse" motions. Appellant's Br., pp. 13-15.

Section 704(b)(2) directs United States Trustees to file "either" a motion to dismiss or a statement setting forth the reasons why a motion would not be appropriate. This "either" clause is modified by the "if" clause, requiring the motion or statement to be filed only "if" the United States Trustee determines that the case "should be presumed to be an abuse under section 707(b)" and determines the debtor's annualized income exceeds the applicable median family income for the debtor's household size. Thus, the "either" clause is triggered only when the "if" clause applies. The "either" clause does not apply here because the United States Trustee determined that the presumption of abuse did not arise. This means the United States Trustee had no duty to file either a motion or a statement. Given that, the United States Trustee's section 707(b)(3) motion was properly filed.

The Draiseys contend, to the contrary, that the "if" clause modifies only the second half of the "either" clause, which refers to the filing of a statement explaining why a motion is not being filed. Appellees' Br., p. 3. This argument is not supported by the plain language of the statute.

Indeed, Perrotta II rejected this very argument. In re Perrotta, __ B.R. __, 2008 WL 2485568, at *3 (Bankr. D. N.H. June 17, 2008). The Perrotta court concluded that "the only reasonable grammatical construction of section 704(b)(2) is the one argued by the [United States Trustee]." Id. The court found that the "if" clause in section 704(b)(2) modifies "the binary choice Congress imposed on the [United States Trustee]" to file either a motion or a statement, requiring one or the other only when a presumption of abuse arises and has been timely disclosed by a statement under section 704(b)(1)(A). Id. The Perrotta court further found that although section 704(b)(2) refers to "section 707(b)" and not section 707(b)(2), "this distinction makes no difference because a presumption of abuse can only arise under the provisions of [section] 707(b)(2)." Id. The court in Perrotta II rejected the reading of section 704(b) promoted by the Draiseys, and concluded that Interim Rule 1017(e), not section 704(b)(2), governs the filing deadline for motions brought by the United States Trustee under section 707(b)(3). Id. at *5.

All other courts agree with Perotta II on this point. See In re Close, 384 B.R. 856, 871 (D. Kan. 2008), aff'g 353 B.R. 915 (Bankr. D. Kan. 2006); In re Ansar, 383 B.R. 344, 348 (Bankr. D. Minn. 2008); In re Byrne, 376 B.R. 700, 704 (Bankr. W.D. Ark. 2007); In re dePellegrini, 365 B.R. 830, 831 (Bankr. S.D. Ohio 2007); In re Singletary, 354 B.R. 455, 465 (Bankr. S.D. Tex. 2006); see also Interim Bankruptcy Rule 1017(e)(1) (providing for deadline of 60 days after the first date set for meeting of creditors for filing motions to dismiss for abuse under section 707(b) "except as otherwise provided in § 704(b)(2)").

The Draiseys' reading of section 704(b), in contrast, has no support in the statute's text or legislative history, and would reduce the statute to a formulaic exercise.

CONCLUSION

For these reasons, the United States Trustee respectfully asks this Court to reverse the bankruptcy court's order denying the United States Trustee's motion to dismiss for abuse under section 707(b)(3)(B), and to remand the case to the bankruptcy court for further proceedings on the merits of the motion.

INTRODUCTION

The government files this supplemental brief in response to the Court's request for additional briefing on the United States Trustee's standing to press this appeal.

ARGUMENT

A. THIS COURT POSSESSES JURISDICTION TO VACATE THE BANKRUPTCY COURT'S ORDER BECAUSE THE BANKRUPTCY COURT DID NOT HAVE CONSTITUTIONAL STANDING TO ENTER IT DUE TO THE ABSENCE OF A CASE OR CONTROVERSY.

The government's opening and reply briefs explained that the bankruptcy court lacked jurisdiction to enter its October 17, 2005, order due to the absence of a case or controversy. Those briefs also explained this Court possesses jurisdiction to vacate that order.[1]

This Court can exercise that jurisdiction in either of two ways. First, this Court can grant the government's appeal, which the United States Trustee possesses standing to prosecute. Alternatively, this Court can exercise its supervisory power over the bankruptcy court to vacate the order independent of the government's request for such relief

B. THE UNITED STATES TRUSTEE POSSESSES STANDING TO SEEK VACATION OF THE BANKRUPTCY COURT'S ORDER.

1. The United States Department of Justice on behalf of the federal government has Article III standing to appear in federal court to enforce federal law. See Vermont Agency of Natural Resources v. United States ex rel. Stevens, 529 U.S. 765, 771 (2000) (the United States has standing to redress an "injury to its sovereignty arising from violation of its laws"); United States v. Raines, 362 U.S. 17, 27 (1960) (Congress may authorize the Attorney General to bring suit in federal court to enjoin violations of federal law); In re Debs, 158 U.S. 564, 584 (1895) (the Government's "obligation[]" to prevent violations of federal law is "sufficient to give [it] a standing in court"), disapproved on other grounds by Bloom v. State of Illinois, 391 U.S. 194, 208 (1968); see also Wyandotte Transp. Co. v. United States, 389 U.S. 191, 201 (1967) ("Our decisions have established [] the general rule that the United States may sue to protect its interests.").

[1] See, e.g., United States v. Corrick, 298 U.S. 435, 440 (1936) (court had "jurisdiction on appeal, not of the merits, but merely for the purpose of correcting the error of the lower court in entertaining the suit" (footnotes omitted) (quoted in Arizonans for Official English and Robert D. Park v. Arizona, 520 U.S. 43, 73 (1997) (vacating with remand for dismissal for lack of case or controversy)). See also Steel Co. v. Citizens For A Better Environment, 523 U.S. 83, 110 (1998) (vacating with remand for dismissal for lack of case or controversy).

The United States Trustee Program is the division of the Department of Justice that enforces federal bankruptcy law. See 28 U.S.C. §§ 581-89; H.R. Rep. No. 95-595, at 110 (1977) (the United States Trustee has an "obligation to execute and enforce the bankruptcy laws"). The Justice Department's representative in this case is the United States Trustee for Region 21, a senior Department official appointed by the Attorney General. 28 U.S.C. § 581(a)(21). See In re Glados, Inc., 83 F.3rd 1360,1361 n.1 (11th Circuit 1996) ("The UST is an official of the United States Department of Justice charged by statute with the duty to oversee and supervise the administration of bankruptcy cases. 28 U.S.C. §586 (a)").

Like any federal official, the United States Trustee's standing to sue to protect the public interest is not derived solely from a statute like 11 U.S.C. § 307. To the contrary, as the Fourth Circuit acknowledged in a case decided before section 307 became law, United States Trustees possess standing when - as here - they act to protect the public interest. A-1 Trash Pickup v. United States Trustee (In re A-1 Trash Pickup), 802 F.2d 774, 776 (4th Cir. 1986) (even absent section 307, "a United States trustee can move for conversion or dismissal under § 1112(b), at least where the motion advances the trustee's interest in administration of the bankruptcy proceedings.”).

The United States Trustee possesses standing to pursue this appeal to protect the federal government’s interest in enforcing the Bankruptcy Code. See 28 U.S.C. §§ 517, 586(c). As Wyandotte, Vermont Agency, Raines, Debs, and A-1 demonstrate, the federal government can sue to protect the pubic interest and to remedy violations of law, so its standing does not require the type of particularized injury in fact that private parties need. In this case, the United States Trustee possesses standing because the order entered below purports to interpret provisions of the Bankruptcy Code pertaining to debt relief agencies. As discussed, Congress determined that these provisions, which require debt relief agencies to abide by detailed disclosure and advertising requirements, see 11 U.S.C. §§ 527, 528, as well as specified standards of professional conduct, see id. § 526(a), would “strengthen[] professionalism standards for attorneys and others who assist consumer debtors with their bankruptcy cases.” See H.R. Rep. No. 109-31(I) at 17 (2005).

The bankruptcy court’s order impairs the United States’ capacity to protect and enforce these provisions of the Bankruptcy Code. The bankruptcy court, without the benefit of a complaint or a suit by any party, sua sponte issued an order declaring that attorneys in this district are “not covered by the provisions of the Code regulating debt relief agencies, . . . and are excused from compliance with any of those requirements or provisions[.]” See In re Attorneys at Law and Debt Relief Agencies, 332 B.R. 66, 71 (Bankr. S.D. Ga. 2005).

That has particular significance here because Congress explicitly empowered senior Justice Department officials, the United States Trustees, to seek relief against debt relief agencies. 11 U.S.C. § 526(c)(5). The order below interferes with the Justice Department's power to act under section 526(c)(5) because it purports to absolve lawyers from complying with Congress' debt relief provisions even though lawyers constitute the overwhelming majority of debt relief agencies within this district.

By preemptively and prospectively exempting a class of persons from the requirements of federal law, the bankruptcy court's order injures the federal government's well-established interest in enforcing federal law, see Debs, 158 U.S. at 586, and the United States Trustee's specific interest in enforcing federal bankruptcy law, see Clark, 927 F.2d 793,796 (4th Cir. 1991) ("if a trustee alleges that the bankruptcy court's ruling . . . has interfered with his ability to enforce the law . . . , then he has standing to appeal that ruling"); see also ASARCO, Inc. v. Kadish, 490 U.S. 605, 617-18 (1989) (concluding that a state court order itself caused an Article III injury-in-fact). Bankruptcy attorneys practicing in the Southern District of Georgia are likely to rely on the order, and thus fail to abide by the Code's disclosure and advertising provisions, and perhaps even its standards of professional conduct – all of which are designed to ensure that consumer debtors are well informed of their legal rights and obligations and to protect the public interest in the proper functioning of the Bankruptcy System. See H.R. Rep. No. 109-31(I) at 17 (these provisions will "strengthen[] professionalism standards for attorneys and others who assist consumer debtors"); id. at 2 (the purpose of the Bankruptcy Abuse Prevention and Consumer Protection Act is to "improve bankruptcy law and practice . . . and ensure that the system is fair for both debtors and creditors"). The United States Trustee has standing to appeal this order, which undermines the agency's ability to fulfill its statutory "obligation to execute and enforce" these provisions of the Bankruptcy Code. H.R. Rep. No. 95-595, at 110.

Moreover, the Justice Department, acting through the United States Trustee, could sue here even if the government needed injury in fact because the bankruptcy court's order injures the United States, and four other classes of individuals as well:

- The order hinders the United States' ability to sue debt relief agencies under 11 U.S.C. § 526(c)(5), which specifically authorizes United States Trustees to seek injunctions and other "appropriate civil penalt[ies]" against debt relief agencies when they intentionally violate section 526 or violate it through a "clear and consistent pattern or practice[]. . . ." The bankruptcy court's order injures the federal government because it interferes with a Justice Department official's express statutory power to sue debt relief agencies under section 526(c)(5). That impairs the federal government's ability to perform its federal statutory enforcement responsibilities within this judicial district. Vacating the order will (a) foster the United States' enforcement of federal law, (b) free the Justice Department and her attorneys from the potential nuisance of defending motions for civil contempt when it does, and (c) ensure bankruptcy courts within this district address the merits of the Justice Department's enforcement actions rather than dismiss them as contrary to the order entered below.

- The order interferes with the State of Georgia's statutory right to sue debt relief agencies under 11 U.S.C. §§ 526(c)(3)(A), (B), and (C). It also harms Georgia citizens because Georgia can recover damages on their behalf under these sections.[2]

[2] Under those statutory provisions, Georgia may sue debt relief agencies, and may sue "on behalf of its residents to recover the[ir] actual damages." 11 U.S.C. § 526(c)(3)(A) - (C).

- The order impairs debtors' statutory rights under section 526(c)(1) - (3) to sue lawyers who violate sections 526, 527, and 528, and denies them the substantive protections Congress gave them in sections 526, 527 and 528.

- The order denies creditors the right Congress gave them to have debtors' attorneys counsel their clients in conformity with sections 526, 527, and 528, and thereby minimize the risk that inaccurate or incomplete advice will reduce creditors' recoveries in bankruptcy cases.

- The order also risks engendering confusion nationally. The order is published in the West's Bankruptcy Reporter. It purports to have prospective effect in all bankruptcy cases filed in this judicial district. Perhaps due to its unprecedented nature, the order has received national attention, and debtors' attorneys across the country have asked other courts to follow it. Although all other courts have steadfastly refused to do so, the order will continue to engender confusion until this Court vacates or reverses it.

The United States' responsibility to protect these important public interests gives the United States Trustee standing in this case.

2. Moreover, section 307 of title 11 confers standing on the United States Trustee to sue here. In section 307, Congress expressly authorized United States Trustees to "appear and be heard" in federal court whenever they determine that "a matter of concern to the proper administration of the bankruptcy laws should be raised." H.R. Rep. No. 99-764, at 27 (1986). See 11 U.S.C. § 307 ("[t]he United States trustee may raise and may appear and be heard on any issue in any case or proceeding under this title"); H.R. Rep. No. 99-764, at 27 (1986) (the United States Trustee has "standing" to raise any "matter of concern to the proper administration of the bankruptcy laws").

The bankruptcy court's decision to commence and decide Case No. 05-00400 (Bankr. S.D. Ga.) without notification or the opportunity to respond, does not deprive the United States Trustee of standing under section 307. Section 307 bestows standing upon United States Trustees in any case or proceeding involving an issue under title 11. The case pending before this Court is such a case or proceeding. The United States Trustee has standing and proper party status in it under section 307 because attorney compliance with sections 526 through 528 of the Code "involves an issue . . . under . . . title" 11. Cf. In re Donovan Corp., 215 F.3d 929, 930 (9th Cir. 2000) ("The United States trustee may also intervene and appear at any level of the proceedings from the bankruptcy court on, 11 U.S.C. § 307, as either a party or an amicus" (internal quotations and citations omitted)). That is particularly true because the order below interferes with the government's enforcement rights under a federal statute - 11 U.S.C. § 526(c)(5).[3]

This conclusion draws substantial support from decisions issued by various United States Courts of Appeal broadly construing section 307. As the 11th Circuit observed, the United States Trustee "is expressly given standing under 11 U.S.C. § 307 to raise and be heard on any issue under Title 11...". In re Glados, Inc., at 1361 n.1; see, In re Pillowtex, 304 F.3d 246, 250, 255 n.7 (3d Cir. 2002) (quoting In re Columbia Gas Systems, Inc., 33 F.3d 294, 296 (3d Cir. 1994)) ("'[i]t is difficult to conceive of a statute that more clearly signifies Congress's intent to confer standing.'"); In re Donovan Corp., 215 F.3d at 930 (upholding the standing of the United States Trustee); United States Trustee v. Price Waterhouse, 19 F.3d 138, 141 (3d Cir. 1994) (same); In re Clark, 927 F.2d at 796 (same); In re Plaza de Diego Shopping Center, 911 F.2d 820, 824 (1st Cir. 1990) (same); In re Revco D.S., Inc., 898 F.2d 498, 500 (6th Cir. 1990) (same).

In contrast to the showing a private plaintiff must make to establish standing, the United States Trustee need not demonstrate any concrete, particularized injury in order to appeal a bankruptcy court's decision.[4] See, e.g., United Artist Theatre Co. v. Walton, 315 F.3d 217, 225 (3d Cir. 2003) ("A lack of pecuniary interest in the outcome of a bankruptcy proceeding does not deny the U.S. Trustee standing."). Instead, as is true of the federal government generally,[5] the United States Trustee may appeal a court decision in order to protect the public interest in the enforcement of federal bankruptcy law. See Clark, 927 F.2d at 796 (the United States Trustee has standing "to enforce the law in the public interest"); Plaza de Diego, 911 F.2d at 824 (the United States Trustee's standing flows "from [its] statutory responsibility to represent and protect the public"); Revco, 898 F.2d at 500 (same; concluding that "Congress did not intend to limit the U.S. trustee's appellate standing").

These circuit decisions upholding United States Trustees' standing to protect the public interest are further reflected in the law of the Eleventh Circuit, which recognizes that the United States has a legitimate interest in enforcing federal law. See, e.g., EEOC v. Pemco Aeroplex,

[4] Private parties may appeal a bankruptcy court's order only if it has caused them a direct pecuniary injury. See In re Westwood Community Two Association, Inc., 293 F.3d 1332, 1335 (11th Cir. 2002) (private parties have standing to "appeal only when they are directly and adversely affected pecuniarily") (internal quotation marks omitted).

[5] See Vermont Agency of Natural Resources, 529 U.S. at 771, and other decisions cited above.

Inc., 383 F.3d 1280, 1290-91 (11th Cir. 2004) (observing that "the United States has an interest in enforcing federal law that is independent of any claims of private citizens," and that this "public interest function . . . distinguishes governmental agencies from private litigants") (quoting United States v. East Baton Rouge Parish Sch. Bd., 594 F.2d 56, 58 (5th Cir. 1979)).

3. Appellee Leiden & Leiden asserts (Appellee's Opening Br. at 3-7) that the United States Trustee lacks standing because the bankruptcy court here issued a "general order" providing procedural guidelines for attorneys practicing in the Southern District of Georgia. This is wrong for three reasons. First, as the United States Trustee's Reply Brief discusses (at 1-8), the court did not promulgate any such general order, but instead clearly sought to issue a substantive interpretation of federal law. See In re Attorneys at Law, 332 B.R. at 67 ("[t]he issue before the Court is whether amendments to the Bankruptcy Code . . . regulating Debt Relief Agencies apply to attorneys"). Second, as the United States Trustee also explained in her principal briefs (Opening Br. 6-8; Reply Br. at 5-6 & n.4), the bankruptcy court lacked the authority - under its general order power or otherwise - to issue such a substantive interpretation of federal law outside the context of an Article III case or controversy, but that is nonetheless what the court sought to do. Third, even if true, section 307's only criteria - the existence of a case or a proceeding, and an issue involving title 11 - would continue to be met by this appeal to this Court.

Leiden & Leiden likewise errs in asserting (Br. 3-4) that the bankruptcy court's failure to issue this order in the context of a bankruptcy case deprives the United States Trustee of statutory standing to appeal. The law firm argues section 307 of the Code authorizes the United States Trustee to "oversee and supervise the administration of bankruptcy cases" and the United States Trustee is without power to object here because the bankruptcy court issued its order interpreting the statute sua sponte and outside the context of a typical bankruptcy case.

This is wrong for four reasons. First, as the government discusses above, the Justice Department, acting through the United States Trustee has standing to protect federal law. Second, the Justice Department has injury in fact here because the order interferes with its enforcement powers under 11 U.S.C. § 526(c)(5). Third, there is a case involving title 11 here - the case before this Court bearing case number 4:05-cv-00206-WTM. That case clearly involves “an issue” under title 11 - attorneys’ duty to comply with three title 11 provisions, 11 U.S.C. §§ 526, 527 and 528 and the Justice Department’s power to enforce section 526(c)(5). Thus, the United States Trustee has standing to press this case or proceeding before this Court. 11 U.S.C. § 307.

Fourth, the order entered below merits vacation given Leiden and Leiden’s argument that the bankruptcy court issued a decision interpreting substantive federal provisions and ordered prospective relief without a bankruptcy case or proceeding. Under 28 U.S.C. 1334 and 157, bankruptcy courts exercise jurisdiction only over bankruptcy cases and proceedings. If there was no bankruptcy case or proceeding, then the court lacked statutory jurisdiction to enter its October 17 order under the foregoing provisions. If there was a bankruptcy case or proceeding, then the United States Trustee clearly has standing under 11 U.S.C. §307. Either way the order must be vacated.

The absence of statutory jurisdiction under 28 U.S.C. 1334 and 157 would also have prevented the bankruptcy court from acting under 11 U.S.C. § 105(a). The court could not have relied upon section 105(a) because that section cannot be used to alter or deviate from sections 526, 527 and 528 of the Code.[6] See, e.g., Norwest Bank Worthington v. Ahlers, 485 U.S. 197, 206 (1988) ("whatever equitable powers remain in the bankruptcy courts must and can only be exercised within the confines of the Bankruptcy Code"); In re Cox, 338 F.3d 1238, 1243 (11th Cir.2003) ("the bankruptcy court's equitable powers [] do not allow it to override the specific statutory language..."); In re Sanford, 979 F.2d 151, 1514 and n.7 (11th Cir. 1992) (applying Worthington to section 105).

Leiden & Leiden also fails to recognize that the United States Trustee Program is a component of the Department of Justice that Congress has directed "to execute and enforce the bankruptcy laws," H.R. Rep. No. 95-595, at 110. The United States Trustee therefore has standing to appeal any order that impairs the Department's ability to perform this law enforcement function, either as the designee of the Attorney General, see 28 U.S.C. § 517 ("any officer of the Department of Justice [] may be sent by the Attorney General . . . to attend to any [] interest of the United States"), or as the agency charged by Congress with ensuring compliance with the Bankruptcy Code, see 11 U.S.C. §§ 307, 526. See also Donovan, 215 F.3d at 930 (United States Trustees may protect or enforce federal law by participating in a dispute for the first time as an appellant prosecuting an appeal).

[6] Attorneys are not excluded from the reach of federal bankruptcy laws simply by virtue of the fact that they are also subject to regulations governing qualifications for the practice of law. Sections 526-528 are not licensing provisions; instead they impose a separate and distinct set of obligations upon attorneys who choose to practice in the area of bankruptcy law. If an attorney practices bankruptcy and violates section 526, 527 or 528, he can be sanctioned under these provisions. Hence these provisions do not serve as licensing provisions, as section 526(d)(2) makes clear. Although a court may choose to disbar an attorney for violations under sections526-528, these provisions neither compel nor prohibit disbarment. Sanctions for violating sections 526, 527 and 528 are wholly distinct from licensing.

C. THIS COURT POSSESSES JURISDICTION TO VACATE THE BANKRUPTCY COURT ORDER EVEN IF THE UNITED STATES TRUSTEE LACKED STANDING TO PRESS THIS APPEAL.

As the government explains above, courts possess jurisdiction to vacate orders that lower courts enter without jurisdiction. In the government's respectful view, the United States Trustee could conceivably lack standing to appeal here only if this Court were to rule that the bankruptcy court's order is, on its face, so plainly without legal force or effect that no bankruptcy attorney could plausibly rely on it to avoid compliance with the Code provisions governing debt relief agencies. Accordingly, the government respectfully suggests this Court could not conclude the United States Trustee lacks standing without also concluding that the bankruptcy court's order is invalid and without any legal or practical significance. In that event, the government would ask this Court to exercise its supervisory power by vacating the order below as being entered without constitutional jurisdiction due to the absence of a case or controversy. See 28 U.S.C. § 151 (the bankruptcy court is "a unit of the district court"); In re Parklane/Atlanta Joint Venture, 927 F.2d 532, 538 (11th Cir. 1991) (noting the district court's "supervisory function over the bankruptcy courts"); Grant v. George Schumann Tire & Battery Co., 908 F.2d 874, 884 (11th Cir. 1990) (district courts are responsible for overseeing the bankruptcy courts). For that reason, the order entered below merits vacation by this Court even if this Court were to conclude the government lacked standing.

CONCLUSION

For these reasons, and for the reasons stated in the government's opening and reply briefs, the United States Trustee respectfully asks this Court to vacate or, in the alternative, reverse the order from which this appeal is taken.

Respectfully submitted,

JURISDICTIONAL STATEMENT

The bankruptcy court had jurisdiction under 28 U.S.C. §§ 157 (a) and (b), and 1334(a) to issue its final order granting the Debtors' motion for summary judgment on the United States Trustee's motion to dismiss the Debtors' chapter 7 bankruptcy case. The bankruptcy court issued its opinion and entered an order granting the Debtors' motion for summary judgment on June 17, 2009. The United States Trustee filed a notice of appeal on June 26, 2009, which is timely under 28 U.S.C. §§ 158(a) and (c)(2). This Court has appellate jurisdiction under 28 U.S.C. § 158(a)(1), a statutory provision under which district courts have jurisdiction to hear appeals from final judgments, orders, and decrees of bankruptcy judges.

STANDARD OF REVIEW

A bankruptcy court's findings of fact are reviewed for clear error and its conclusions of law are reviewed de novo. In re White, 487 F.3d 199, 204 (4th Cir. 2007). In this case, the facts are undisputed, and the bankruptcy court's interpretations of 11 U.S.C. §§ 707(b)(1) and 707(b)(2) are conclusions of law subject to de novo review.

STATEMENT OF THE ISSUE

The sole issue in this appeal is whether the bankruptcy court erred in concluding that 11 U.S.C. § 707(b)(1) does not apply to a case that has been converted from chapter 13 to chapter 7 of the Bankruptcy Code.

STATEMENT OF THE CASE

On August 18, 2008, the Debtors sought chapter 13 bankruptcy relief in the United States Bankruptcy Court for the Western District of Virginia. See 11 U.S.C. § 1301 et seq. On October 8, 2008, the Debtors filed a motion to convert their case to a liquidation case under chapter 7 of the Bankruptcy Code. See 11 U.S.C. § 1307(a). After conversion of this case to chapter 7, the United States Trustee filed a motion to dismiss the Debtors' case for abuse under 11 U.S.C. § 707(b)(1). See 11 U.S.C. § 707(b)(1). On January 9, 2009, the Debtors filed a motion for summary judgment in connection with the United States Trustee's motion to dismiss. On June 17, 2009, the bankruptcy court entered an order granting the Debtors' motion for summary judgment and denying the United States Trustee's motion to dismiss. This appeal followed.

STATEMENT OF FACTS

I. Statutory Framework.

The Bankruptcy Code establishes two primary forms of bankruptcy relief for individual debtors – chapter 7 and chapter 13. Under chapter 7, "an individual debtor receives an immediate unconditional discharge of personal liability for certain debts in exchange for relinquishing his or her nonexempt assets to a bankruptcy trustee for liquidation and distribution to creditors." H.R. Rep. 109-31 (I) at 10 (2005), reprinted in 2005 U.S.C.C.A.N. 88, 98; see 11 U.S.C. §§ 701-727. Under chapter 13, "a debtor commits to repay some portion of his or her financial obligations" over a specified period "in exchange for retaining nonexempt assets and receiving a broader discharge of debt than is available under chapter 7." H.R. Rep. 109-31(I), at 10; see 11 U.S.C. §§ 1321-1330.

The difference between chapter 7 and 13 is dramatic. In chapter 7 cases, creditors may look solely to debtors' pre-bankruptcy, non-exempt assets for payment. See 11 U.S.C. § 541 (limiting property of the estate to debtors' pre-petition assets). Debtors' post-bankruptcy income is not subject to creditor claims. Id. Subject to narrow exceptions, debtors receive a complete discharge of all their pre-petition debts in a chapter 7 case. See 11 U.S.C. § 727(b). Historically, in roughly 96% of chapter 7 cases, unsecured creditors received no payment. See, e.g., Brief of the United States in Lamie v. United States Trustee, 2003 WL 21839367 at *38 (2003).

Chapter 13 is different because debtors must use post-petition income to fund a chapter 13 payment plan. See 11 U.S.C. § 1306(a)(2) (property of the bankruptcy estate also includes post-petition income); 11 U.S.C. § 1325(b) (projected disposable income applied to make payments to unsecured creditors). In chapter 13, debtors receive a discharge only after they have fully completed their chapter 13 repayment plans. See 11 U.S.C. §§ 1328(a) and (c); see also 11 U.S.C. § 1328(b) (listing exceptions to this rule).

Notwithstanding these differences, chapter 13 and 7 cases are interconnected in significant ways as well. To begin with, the Bankruptcy Code provides that a debtor may convert his case from chapter 13 to chapter 7, and vice versa, at any time. See 11 U.S.C. § 1307(a) (providing that chapter 13 debtor may convert case to chapter 7 at any time); 11 U.S.C. § 706(a) (providing that chapter 7 debtor may convert case to chapter 13 at any time). Thus, while a bankruptcy case may begin in one chapter it may not necessarily remain there. Further, as explained in more detail below, certain provisions of the Bankruptcy Code related to a debtor's ability to repay are utilized in both chapter 7 and 13. See 11 U.S.C. § 1325(b)(3) (incorporating section 707(b)(2) of the Bankruptcy Code); 11 U.S.C. §§ 707(b)(2) and 1325(b)(2) (incorporating the phrase "current monthly income" which is defined under section 101(10A) of the Bankruptcy Code).

A. The Historical Development of Substantial Abuse.

Since 1984, Congress has enacted a series of tests that have allowed courts to dismiss chapter 7 cases, and thereby prevent the unjust discharge of pre-petition debts. In 1984, Congress amended chapter 7 to permit the dismissal of a chapter 7 bankruptcy petition under section 707(b) if a court found "substantial abuse."[1] Bankruptcy Amendments and Federal Judgeship Act of 1984, Pub. L. No. 98-353, § 312, 98 Stat. 333, 335. Congress enacted this amendment to respond "to concerns that some debtors who could easily pay their creditors might resort to chapter 7 to avoid their obligations." H.R. Rep. 109-31(I), at 12 (internal quotation omitted). As explained by one bankruptcy court:

> Congress originally enacted the statute to limit access to chapter 7 to debtors who are honest and who need the remedy to preserve a decent standard of living for themselves and their dependents. By this enactment, persons who have primarily consumer debts and who have the financial resources in excess of their basic needs would be forced to seek relief under a reorganization chapter or to otherwise attempt to repay their creditors.

In re Goddard, 323 B.R. 231, 233-34 (Bankr. S.D. Ohio 2005) (internal citations omitted).

After twenty-years' experience, Congress found that these amendments were insufficient to control abuse of chapter 7. Congress identified, among other problems, the "inherent[] vague[ness]" of the "substantial abuse" standard, which led to disagreement in the courts about whether a debtor's ability to repay a significant portion of his or her debts out of future income constitutes substantial abuse,[2] meriting dismissal. H.R. Rep. 109-31(I), at 12. Another problem was that the Bankruptcy Code established "a presumption in favor of granting the relief requested by the debtor," which influenced courts' decisions whether to find substantial abuse. 11 U.S.C. § 707(b) (2000); H.R. Rep. 109-31(I), at 12.

---

[1] Two years later, Congress again amended this provision to authorize United States Trustee to seek dismissal of chapter 7 petitions for "substantial abuse." Bankruptcy Judges, United States Trustees, and Family Farmer Bankruptcy Act of 1986, Pub. L. No. 99-554, § 21, 100 Stat. 3088, 3101.

Responding to these perceived shortcomings of the Bankruptcy Code, Congress held hearings over five years to identify what reforms it could adopt "to ensure that debtors repay creditors the maximum they can afford." H.R. Rep. 109-31(I), at 2, 12. The Bankruptcy Abuse Prevention and Consumer Protection Act of 2005 (the "2005 Act"), Pub. L. No. 109-8, 119 Stat. 23, implemented the reforms Congress identified.

B. The 2005 Act

On October 17, 2005, most provisions of the 2005 Act took effect, thereby implementing significant changes to the Bankruptcy Code. In enacting the 2005 Act, Congress:

[2] In evaluating whether substantial abuse existed, courts jointly considered both the debtor's conduct and the debtor's ability to pay his debts outside bankruptcy or through a chapter 13 repayment plan. See, e.g., In re Stewart, 175 F.3d 796 (10th Cir. 1999); In re Lamanna, 153 F.3d 1 (1st Cir. 1998); In re Krohn, 886 F.2d 123 (6th Cir. 1989); In re Kelly, 841 F.2d 908, 915 (9th Cir. 1988). Most courts recognized that a debtor's ability to pay a portion of his debt was the predominant factor when determining whether to dismiss a chapter 7 case. Id.

> concluded that the complete overhaul of § 707(b) was necessary, with clear, non discretionary requirements imposed on the bankruptcy court to reject the notion that debtors were entitled to a discharge as a matter of right without regard to their ability to pay and to assure that in practice those with the ability to pay would not be entitled to chapter 7 relief.

146 Cong. Rec. S11700 (December 7, 2000) (citing, Sen. Rep. No. 253, 105th Cong., 2nd Sess., and Sen. Rep. No. 540, 105th Cong., 2nd Sess); see also 151 Cong. Rec. S1856 (Mar. 1, 2005). Congress enacted the section 707(b) amendments to curb bankruptcy abuse by, inter alia, dismissing chapter 7 cases filed by debtors seeking to have their debts discharged despite having the ability to repay their creditors. See 151 Cong. Rec. S1856 (Mar. 1, 2005) (statement of Sen. Charles Grassley).[3] To effectuate this goal, Congress took four important steps.

First, Congress repealed the statutory presumption in favor of granting relief to the debtor. Compare 11 U.S.C. § 707(b) (1986) with 11 U.S.C. § 707(b) (2005).

Second, Congress lowered the standard for dismissal under all subsections of new section 707(b) from “substantial abuse” to mere “abuse.” See 11 U.S.C.

[3] In his statement, Senator Grassley explained the purpose behind the section 707(b) amendments as follows: “[i]t is this simple: if repayment is possible, then [a debtor] will be channeled into chapter 13 of the Bankruptcy Code which requires people to repay a portion of their debt. . . .” Id.

§ 707(b)(1) (cases are now dismissed for "abuse"); 11 U.S.C. § 707(b)(2) (subjecting cases to dismissal for abuse); 11 U.S.C. § 707(b)(3) (same).

Third, Congress enacted new section 707(b)(3). This section allows courts to dismiss cases based upon either a debtor's bad faith, 11 U.S.C. § 707(b)(3)(A), or the totality of a debtor's financial circumstances, 11 U.S.C. § 707(b)(3)(B). Thus, even if a presumption of abuse does not arise or is rebutted under section 707(b)(2), a chapter 7 petition should still be dismissed for abuse under section 707(b)(3) when "bad faith" is demonstrated or "the totality of the circumstances . . . of the debtor's financial situation demonstrates abuse." 11 U.S.C. § 707(b)(3)(A) and (B).

Fourth, Congress authorized dismissal when a mathematical formula, known as the "means test," yields monthly disposable income that exceeds a statutory threshold. See 11 U.S.C. § 707(b)(2). The 2005 Act provides specific criteria which, if satisfied, require a court to presume the existence of abuse and to dismiss (or if the debtor consents convert) a case "based on a chapter 7 debtor's ability to repay." H.R. Rep. 109-31(I), at 15. To determine if abuse exists, a court first compares the debtor's annualized "current monthly income" [4] to the "median family income" of a similarly-sized family in the debtor's state. If the debtor's current monthly income is below the median, then the presumption of abuse does not arise. See 11 U.S.C. § 707(b)(7); H.R. Rep. 109-31(I), at 15.

[4] "Current monthly income," a defined term, is used to calculate gross historical income for purposes of the means test. See 11 U.S.C. § 101(10A) (defining "current monthly income" as the debtor's average monthly income for the six-month period preceding the month of the filing of the debtor's petition).

If a debtor's current monthly income is above the median, and his or her monthly disposable income meets or exceeds the statutory threshold amount, the presumption is triggered and the debtor's case must be dismissed as abusive (or converted to chapter 13, if the debtor consents) absent an express showing of special circumstances by the debtor. See 11 U.S.C. § 707(b)(1) and (2).

The "means test" is implemented in chapter 7 through section 707(b)(2)(C). Section 707(b)(2)(C) provides that "[a]s part of the schedule of current income and expenditures required under § 521, the debtor shall include a statement of the debtor's current monthly income, and the calculations that determine whether a presumption arises under" section 707(b)(2)(A)'s means test. 11 U.S.C. § 707(b)(2)(C). This provision is consistent with Bankruptcy Rule 1007(b)(4), which requires that all individual debtors "in" chapter 7 cases file Official Bankruptcy Form 22A.[5] See Fed. R. Bankr. P. 1007(b)(4).

[5] Bankruptcy Rule 1007(b)(4) provides, in relevant part: "Unless § 707(b)(2)(D) applies, an individual debtor in a chapter 7 case with primarily consumer debts shall file a statement of current monthly income prepared as prescribed by the appropriate Official Form, and, if the debtor has current monthly income greater than the applicable median family income for the applicable state and household size, the calculations in accordance with § 707(b), prepared as prescribed by the appropriate Official Form." Fed. R. Bankr. P. 1007(b)(4).

Additionally, while chapter 13 does not utilize the "means test" to determine whether a presumption of abuse arises, it does incorporate the "means test" to determine whether a chapter 13 debtor is devoting all of his "projected disposable income" towards the repayment of his unsecured creditors.[6] See 11 U.S.C. § 1325(b)(2) (incorporating the phrase "current monthly income" which is defined under section 101(10A) of the Bankruptcy Code); 1325(b)(3) (incorporating sections 707(b)(2)(A) and (B) of the Bankruptcy Code). This use of the "means test" in chapter 13 is consistent with Bankruptcy Rule 1007(b)(6), which requires that all debtors "in" chapter 13 cases file Official Bankruptcy Form 22C.[7] See Fed. R. Bankr. P. 1007(b)(6).

[6] Pursuant to section 1325(b)(1) of the Bankruptcy Code, a chapter 13 debtor's standing trustee or unsecured creditors may object to confirmation of the debtor's proposed repayment plan, and the court may not approve such a plan, if the plan fails to provide for repayment in full to the debtor's unsecured creditors, or fails to devote all of the debtor's "projected disposable income" to the debtor's unsecured creditors. While the phrase "projected disposable income" is not defined under the Bankruptcy Code, a debtor's "disposable income" is determined utilizing sections 101(10A) and 707(b)(2) of the Bankruptcy Code. See 11 U.S.C. § 1325(b)(2) (incorporating the phrase "current monthly income" which is defined under section 101(10A) of the Bankruptcy Code); 11 U.S.C. § 1325(b)(3) (incorporating section 707(b)(2) of the Bankruptcy Code).

[7] Bankruptcy Rule 1007(b)(6) provides, in relevant part: "A debtor in a chapter 13 case shall file a statement of current monthly income, prepared as prescribed by the appropriate Official Form, and, if the current monthly income exceeds the median family income for the applicable state and household size, a calculation of disposable income made in accordance with § 1325(b)(3), prepared as prescribed by the appropriate Official Form." Fed. R. Bankr. P. 1007(b)(6).

Form 22A is similar to Official Bankruptcy Form 22C in that they both calculate a debtor's income and expenses. However, the forms contain important differences that reflect the differences between chapters 7 and 13 and the disposable income calculations under each chapter. For example, because Form 22C calculates disposable income under section 1325(b), it excludes certain support payments from a chapter 13 debtor's disposable income. See 11 U.S.C. § 1325(b)(2)(A)(i). In addition, since sections 541(b)(7) and 1322(f) exclude retirement contributions and loan repayments from a debtor's disposable income, Form 22C contains a line item allowing debtors to exclude qualified retirement deductions. Similarly, since section 707(b)(2)(D)[8] exempts certain disabled veterans, reservists, and national guardsmen from means testing, Form 22A contains a declaration for qualifying debtors. Finally, Form 22C does not contain information necessary to determine whether the presumption of abuse arises, as required by section 707(b)(2)(C). Nor does Form 22C contain the box located at the top of Form 22A indicating whether the presumption of abuse arises.[9] [8] Section 707(b)(2)(D) provides, in relevant part, that sections 707(b)(2)(A) – (C) "shall not apply, and the court may not dismiss or convert a case based on any form of means testing, if the debtor is a disabled veteran ... and the indebtedness occurred primarily during a period during which he or she was – (i) on active duty... or (ii) performing a homeland defense activity. . . ." 11 U.S.C. § 707(b)(2)(D).

[9] Clerk's offices use this box as the basis to give notice to creditors that the presumption of abuse has arisen as required by section 342(d). See 11 U.S.C. § 342(d) (providing, in relevant part, that "[i]n a case under chapter 7 . . . in which

II. Factual and Procedural Background.

On August 18, 2008, the Debtors commenced this case by filing a petition for relief under chapter 13 of the Bankruptcy Code. See Appellant's Designation of Record ("Appellant Rec.") No. 1. That same day, the Debtors filed their proposed chapter 13 repayment plan. See Appellant Rec. No. 2. The Debtors' plan proposed, inter alia, to surrender real property located at 469 Woods Edge Drive in Rocky Mount, Virginia. Id. At the time this case was filed, the Woods Edge property was valued by the Debtors in the amount of $330,400.00 with secured claims against it in the amount of $511,399.94. See Appellant Rec. No. 1. At the time this case was filed, the Debtors' general unsecured debt totaled $233,234.63, not including any deficiency that might arise in connection with the undersecured Woods Edge property. Id. Notwithstanding that the Debtors intended to surrender the Woods Edge property, their Form 22C included $3,691.26 in secured debt expense deductions for that property. Id.

On September 25, 2008, eCast Settlement Corporation, one of the Debtors' unsecured creditors, objected to the Debtors' proposed repayment plan. See Appellee's Designation of Record ("Appellee Rec.") No. 1. Among other things, eCast argued that because the Debtors sought to deduct secured debt expenses for the debtor is an individual and in which the presumption of abuse arises under section 707(b), the clerk shall give written notice to all creditors not later than 10 days after the date of the filing of the petition that the presumption of abuse has arisen.").

the Woods Edge property on their Form 22C, the Debtors improperly calculated their disposable income and hence failed to devote all of their "projected disposable income" to their unsecured creditors. Id.; 11 U.S.C. § 1325(b).

Thirteen days later, and before the bankruptcy court conducted a hearing on eCast's objection to the Debtors' proposed repayment plan, the Debtors filed a motion to convert their case to a liquidation under chapter 13 of the Bankruptcy Code. See Appellant Rec. No. 4, 21; 11 U.S.C. § 1307(a). Debtors conceded they were converting their case because eCast objected to their proposed repayment plan. See Appellant Rec. No. 4. On October 9, 2008, the bankruptcy court converted the Debtors' case to one under chapter 7. See Appellant Rec. No. 5.

After the conversion of the Debtors' case to chapter 7, the United States Trustee filed a motion to dismiss the Debtors' case for abuse. See Appellant Rec. No. 11. The United States Trustee's motion argued that because the Debtors sought to deduct secured debt expenses for the Woods Edge property on their Form 22C, their disposable income calculation was inflated. Id. The United States Trustee's motion went on to argue that if the Debtors limited their mortgage expense to the $1,530.00 payment associated with their new home, as opposed to the substantially higher payment associated with their surrendered home, the Debtors would have disposable income in excess of $2,000 per month, thereby indicating a presumption of abuse. Id. Finally, the United States Trustee's motion alleged that even if the court did not find a presumption of abuse in the Debtors' case, the Debtors' case should nevertheless be deemed abusive under the totality of the circumstances. Id.

On January 9, 2009, the Debtors filed a motion for summary judgment in connection with the United States Trustee's motion. See Appellant Rec. No. 12. The summary judgment motion sought relief on two grounds: (a) that the Debtors are entitled to deduct secured debt expenses for the Woods Edge property on their Form 22C; and (b) that the Bankruptcy Code does not authorize dismissal of a case for abuse where the debtors initially file under chapter 13. Id. On February 25, 2009, the United States Trustee filed a response to the Debtors' summary judgment motion that addressed both arguments. See Appellant Rec. No. 15. On June 17, 2009, the bankruptcy court issued its decision granting the Debtors' motion. See Appellant Rec. No. 19.[10] Because the decision only addressed whether the Bankruptcy Code authorizes dismissal of a case for abuse where the debtors initially file under chapter 13, it failed to reach any conclusions with respect to the secured debt expense issue or whether the Debtors' case should be deemed abusive under the totality of the circumstances. Id. To preserve his right to appeal, the United States Trustee timely filed a notice of appeal on June 26, 2009. See Appellant Rec. No. 20.

[10] The bankruptcy court's decision is published at In re Dudley, 405 B.R. 790 (Bankr. W. D. Va. 2009).

SUMMARY OF ARGUMENT

The bankruptcy court found that section 707(b) does not apply in a case originally commenced under chapter 13, and subsequently converted to chapter 7. In re Dudley, 405 B.R. 790 (Bankr. W. D. Va. 2009). The court did so because it read these words in section 707(b)(2) - “may dismiss a case filed by an individual debtor under this chapter” - as implicitly limiting dismissal under section 707(b) to cases originally filed in chapter 7.

The lower court’s reading is unsustainable for five reasons:

First, Congress explicitly excepted some chapter 7 cases from dismissal under section 707. But it did not explicitly except chapter 7 cases. Given that Congress knew how to create explicit exceptions to section 707(b) when it wished, there is no reason to find an implicit exception here. And Congress also created other explicit exceptions to dismissal in other parts of the Code, which makes the absence of such an explicit exception in section 707(b) even more telling.

Second, the court below misread the word “filed” as modifying the clause “under this chapter,” leading it to conclude only cases originally filed under chapter 7 could be dismissed under section 707(b). But filed does not modify that clause. Instead, it modifies the four words that immediately follow it: “by an individual debtor.” All filed does in section 707(b) is limit dismissal under that subsection to cases filed by individuals, rather than cases filed by corporations, partnerships, and the like.

Were there any doubt about that, sections 1112(b)(1), 1208(b), and 1307(b), dispel it. Each allows a court to "dismiss a case under this chapter," which is every case pending under each of those chapters. This language is the same as that found in section 707(b), except that section 707(b), unlike those sections, adds the words "filed by an individual debtor" to identify those cases pending in chapter 7 that can be dismissed under that subsection. Sections 1112(b), 1208(b), and 1307(b) serve the same purpose as 707(b), authorizing dismissal when the applicable statutory basis is met. There is no reason to read them more expansively than section 707(b).

Third, the lower court's reading would, without any obvious rationale, create two chapter 7's for similarly situated debtors. Debtors who originally file in chapter 7 would be subject to dismissal under section 707(b)'s "means test," bad faith test, and totality of financial circumstances test. 11 U.S.C. §§ 707(b)(2) and (b)(3)(A) - (B). But identical debtors who park their cases briefly in chapters 11, 12 or 13 would not. There is no evidence that Congress enacted such an illogical scheme, and we cannot identify any reason why it would have wished to do so.

Fourth, these debtors' converted chapter 7 case should not escape section 707(b) review - even if the court below correctly read "filed" as modifying the term "under this chapter" in section 707(b). That is so because this term incorporates converted cases, as a number of bankruptcy courts have held in a variety of contexts. Thus, even under the lower court's reading of section 707(b)(1), the order entered below merits reversal.

Fifth, the bankruptcy court's reading would make chapter 13 more expensive for creditors and chapter 13 trustees. Under that reading, chapter 13 debtors could convert if creditors challenged their proposed chapter 13 plans. And they would be encouraged to do so because they would be secure in the knowledge that their ability to repay their debts, which sections 707(b)(2) and (b)(3)(B) police, would never be applied to them. Indeed, this case is a paradigm of that: the debtors converted to chapter 7 only after a creditor spent its time and money objecting to the debtors' deficient chapter 13 plan. That conduct should not be rewarded by allowing these debtors, unlike non-converting chapter 7 debtors, to escape section 707(b) review.

ARGUMENT

I. Given that section 707(b) (2)(D) explicitly lists the cases that are excluded from dismissal under section 707(b)(2), the court below erred when it interpreted section 707(b)(1) as creating an additional, implicit, exception.

A. In ascertaining the meaning of section 707(b), courts "must look to the particular statutory language at issue, as well as the language and the design of the statute as a whole." McCarthy v. Bronson, 500 U.S. 136, 139 (1991) (rejecting arguments relying on a "natural reading" of statutory language in isolation); Crandon v. United States, 494 U.S. 152, 158, (1990) (in determining the meaning of the statute, courts look not only to the particular statutory language, but to the design of the statute as a whole and to its object and policy).

Section 707(b)'s text is significant here because it contains no express prohibition against the application of section 707(b) to debtors whose cases were filed in chapter 13. 11 U.S.C. § 707(b).

But, in stark contrast, section 707(b)(2)(D), contains explicit exceptions to means testing under the Bankruptcy Code,[11] is silent with respect to debtors who originally filed their cases under chapters 11 or 13 but subsequently converted to chapter 7. 11 U.S.C. § 707(b)(2)(D). Had Congress intended to create the exception the bankruptcy court below advocates, it would have included it in section 707(b)(2)(D). See Sanchez v. Holder , 560 F.3d 1028, 1032 (9th Cir. 2009).

[11] Section 707(b)(2)(D) expressly exempts certain disabled combat veterans who primarily incurred indebtedness while on active duty or performing a homeland defense activity, as well as national guardsmen and reservists called to active duty or performing a homeland defense activity for a specified period of time, from the requirements of means testing. See 11 U.S.C. § 707(b)(2)(D).

The contrast between section 707(b)(2(D)'s explicit exception, and section 707(b)(1)'s text could hardly be more profound. Not only does the former explicitly define the exception, it carefully delineates its parameters. It does so in detail. It leaves no ambiguity, expressly providing that section 707(b)(2) "shall not apply" to a well defined class of excepted cases. 11 U.S.C. § 707(b)(2)(D). And, because the exception is express and detailed, it is clear.

Given that Congress took great care to craft its express exception in section 707(b)(2)(D), there is no cause to presume it intended there to be any implicit exceptions in section 707(b). Because section 707(b)(2(D)'s detailed nature underscores just how seriously Congress undertook its drafting of section 707(b), the lack of an express exception in section 707(b)'s text, underscores that none exists.

Section 707(b)(2)(C) supports this reading. It imposes an unequivocal obligation on debtors to file a statement of current monthly income and the calculations that determine whether a presumption arises under subparagraph (A)(i), which must demonstrate how each amount is calculated. 11 U.S.C. § 707(b)(2)(C). Section 707(b)(2)(C) modifies debtors' obligations under section 521, but it contains no express language excepting cases filed under another chapter from the means test requirement. Id. If Congress had intended to create such an exception, it would have included it in section 707(b)(2)(C). See Sanchez v. Holder, 560 F.3d at 1032 ("Congress has demonstrated that it knows how to create an exception . . . when it wants to").

B. Other sections of the Code support the conclusion that the word "filed" in section 707(b) modifies only "by an individual debtor," and does not, for no discernable reason, allow converted cases to escape section 707(b) scrutiny.

For example, the phrase "under this chapter" also appears in sections 706(a) and 1112(a) of the Bankruptcy Code. See 11 U.S.C. § 706(a) (providing that a debtor may convert "a case under this chapter" to a case under chapter 11, 12, or 13) (emphasis added); 11 U.S.C. § 1112(a) (providing that a "debtor may convert a case under this chapter to a case under chapter 7.").

But, unlike section 707(b) both of these sections expressly prohibit their use in converted cases. 11 U.S.C. § 706(a) (providing for conversion from chapter 7 to chapters 11, 12, or 13 if the case has not been previously converted from chapters 11, 12, or 13); 11 U.S.C. § 1112(a) (providing for conversion from chapter 11 to chapter 7 if the case has previously not been converted to chapter 11 on the debtor's request). Had Congress intended to create the exception the bankruptcy court below advocates, it would have included similar prohibitions in section 707(b)(1) of the Bankruptcy Code. See Sanchez, 560 F.3d at 1032.

II. Not only did Congress create no explicit exception for converted cases in section 707(b), but three other Code sections, 11 U.S.C. §§ 1112(b), 1208(b) and 1307(b), further clarify that "filed" in section 707(b) modifies only the four words that immediately follow it, "by an individual debtor," and therefore do not enable debtors in converted cases to escape review under sections 707(b)(2), (b)(3(A) and (b)(3)(B).

The court below misread the word "filed" as modifying the clause "under this chapter," leading it to conclude only cases originally filed under chapter 7 could be dismissed under section 707(b). Dudley, 405 B.R. at 793-95. But filed does not modify that clause. Instead, it modifies the four words that immediately follow it: "by an individual debtor." All filed does in section 707(b) is limit dismissal under that subsection to cases filed by individuals, rather than cases filed by corporations, partnerships, and the like.

Were there any doubt about that, sections 1112(b)(1), 1208(b), and 1307(b), dispel it. 11 U.S.C. §§ 1112(b), 1208(b), and 1307(b). Each section allows a court to "dismiss a case under this chapter," i.e., every case pending under those chapters. This language is the same as that found in section 707(b), except that section 707(b), unlike those sections, adds the words "filed by an individual debtor" to identify those cases pending in chapter 7 that can be dismissed under that subsection. Sections 707(b), 1112(b), 1208(b), and 1307(b) serve the same purpose as 707(b), authorizing dismissal when the applicable statutory basis is met. Thus, they should be applied in the same way.

III. These debtors' case does not escape section 707(b) review, even if the court below correctly read "filed" as modifying the term "under this chapter" in section 707(b), because cases agree this term incorporates converted cases.

Debtors who convert their cases between chapters "are deemed to have 'filed under' the converted to chapter, as of the date the original petition was filed." In re Perfetto, 361 B.R. 27, 30-31 (Bankr. D. R.I. 2007) (italicized in original); see also In re Sours, 350 B.R. 261, 266-68 (Bankr. E.D. Va. 2006); In re Grydzuk, 353 B.R. 564, 567 (Bankr. N.D. Ind. 2006); In re Capers, 347 B.R. 169, 170 (Bankr. D. S.C. 2006).

For example, section 1328(f) of the Bankruptcy Code, which utilizes the phrase "in a case filed under chapter 7, 11, 12 of this title" has been unanimously interpreted to encompass both converted and non-converted cases. See In re Willis, 408 B.R. 803, 808 (Bankr. W.D. Mo. 2009) ("Courts considering effect of a conversion on a debtor's eligibility for discharge under § 1328 have unanimously (by this Court's research) concluded that the phrase "filed under chapter 7. . . ." applies to cases converted to Chapter 7); 11 U.S.C. § 1328(f) (emphasis added).

Indeed, the Fourth Circuit has noted with approval that "[b]ankruptcy courts in this circuit have rejected the idea that the word 'filed' in §§ 1328(f)(1) and (f)(2) is used to differentiate cases filed under one chapter of the Bankruptcy Code, but converted to a different chapter under which the discharge is ultimately granted." Branigan v. Bateman (In re Bateman), 515 F.3d 272, 277 n.7 (4th Cir. 2008).

Similarly, section 348(a) explicitly prescribes such a result when it states that:

> Conversion of a case from a case under one chapter of this title to a case under another chapter of this title constitutes an order for relief under the chapter to which the case is converted, but except as provided in subsections (b) and (c) of this section, does not effect a change in the date of the filing of the petition, the commencement of the case, or the order for relief.

11 U.S.C. § 348(a) (emphasis added). Cf. Willis, 408 B.R. at 805-10; Justice v. Advanced Control Solutions, Case No. 07-5231, 2008 WL 4368668 at *3-5 (W. D. Ark., Sept. 22, 2008); Perfetto, 361 B.R. at 30-31; In re Kellett, 379 B.R. 332, 335-40 (Bankr. D. Or. 2007); In re Kerr, 2007 WL 2119291 at *2-*4 (Bankr. D. Wash., July 18, 2007).

Thus, even if the court below construed the words "filed . . . . under this chapter" correctly, section 707(b) would nonetheless apply in this case.

Supporting this notion is the fact that Fed. R. Bankr. P. 1007(b)(4), which bankruptcy courts use to implement section 707(b)(2), provides, with certain prescribed exceptions not implicated here, that "an individual debtor in a chapter 7 case with primarily consumer debts shall file a statement of current monthly income prepared as prescribed by the appropriate Official Form . . . ." Fed. R. Bankr. P. 1007(b)(4) (emphasis added). Had the Rules Committee concluded that Congress intended to treat cases originally filed in chapter 13 differently than cases originally filed under chapter 7, Rule 1007(b)(4) would contain an express exception for cases initially brought in other chapters, but subsequently converted to a proceeding under chapter 7. No such exception exists. Id.

IV. The bankruptcy court's interpretation of section 707(b) would lead to inequitable results.

A. The bankruptcy court's interpretation of section 707(b) would allow debtors with disposable income sufficient to repay 100% of their creditors to escape section 707(b) review simply by doing what the Debtors did here: file a chapter 13 petition, then convert their case to chapter 7.

This would create two chapter 7's for similarly situated debtors. Those who file chapter 7 initially would be subject to the three distinct abuse provisions of section 707(b) (i.e., the "means test," bad faith dismissal, and dismissal based on the totality of the debtor's financial circumstances). But, debtors who initiate their cases in chapter 13 would be subject to dismissal only for bad faith under section 707(a).

There is no evidence that Congress enacted such an illogical scheme, and as explained above, the Bankruptcy Code's text does not support it. Nor, can we imagine why anyone would create such an arbitrary and unfair system.

In enacting the 2005 Act, Congress was concerned that under the prior system, "some bankruptcy debtors are able to repay a significant portion of their debts" but are not required to do so. H.R. Rep. No. 109-31 (I), at 5, 2005 U.S.C.C.A.N. at 92. In amending section 707(b), Congress sought to close or reduce "the loopholes and incentives that allow and – sometimes – even encourage opportunistic personal filings and abuse." Id. The bankruptcy court's approach would have the opposite effect. It would give those with a clear-cut ability to repay every opportunity to avoid having to repay anything at all.

The bankruptcy court suggested this unfair result could be mitigated by allowing parties to seek to dismiss converted cases for "bad faith" theory under section 707(a). Dudley, 405 B.R. at 800. But that denies parties 67% of their remedies under section 707 - means test dismissal under section 707(b)(2), and totality of the debtor's financial circumstances dismissal under section 707(b)(3)(B).

And it is unfair to debtors who start their cases in chapter 7. Their cases can be dismissed under section 707(a), and can also have their cases dismissed for bad faith under section 707(b)(3)(A). But they face the added prospect of dismissal under section 707(b)(2) and (b)(3)(B).

Such disparate treatment among similarly situated parties, ones who seek the same relief - a chapter 7 discharge, is unfair to those debtors who, unlike the Debtors here, commenced their cases in chapter 7. And it is unfair to creditors, who could seek repayment from the debtor who originally files in chapter 7 but not the similarly situated debtor who converts.

B. Nor is it any answer to suggest, as the court below did, that this problem can be rectified by dismissing bad faith conversions under section 707(a).

First, that would still allow debtors whose conduct does not rise to bad faith to avoid scrutiny under section 707(b) even though all good faith debtors who originally file in chapter 7 would be subject to that section. There is no logical reason to treat those similarly situated debtors differently.

Second, there are sound reasons to allow dismissal of conversions under section 707(b) rather than section 707(a). Where a debtor has disposable income that would give rise to a finding of "bad faith" in a case converted from chapter 13, Section 707(b)(2)'s mathematical means test makes it a quicker and less costly way to obtain dismissal. Conversely, proving bad faith under section 707(a), could require courts to hold full trials, obligate the parties to conduct discovery and engage in trial, and force courts to make extensive findings of fact and conclusions of law. Given that Congress created the means test in 2005 to streamline dismissal, and bring some objectivity to the process, there is no reason to presume Congress crafted a statutory scheme that defeats that.

Third, requiring parties to seek dismissal of converted cases with disposable income under a "bad faith" theory via section 707(a) “undercuts the intention of Congress that such issues be handled under 707(b).” 6 Collier on Bankruptcy, ¶ 707.03[2] (15th ed. Rev. 2006). This is particularly true when one considers that section 707(b)(3)(A) currently provides for “bad faith” dismissal of a debtor’s case. See 11 U.S.C. § 707(b)(3)(A).

C. Finally, the bankruptcy court’s reading of the statute would make chapter 13 more costly and less efficient. This is so because other parties, including standing chapter 13 trustees and creditors, are intimately involved in the chapter 13 reorganization process. For example, in this case, the Debtors’ standing chapter 13 trustee conducted the Debtors’ meeting of creditors. See Appellant’s Rec. No. 3. Likewise, eCast, was required to file a detailed objection to the Debtors’ proposed repayment plan. See Appellee’s Rec. No. 1. Such activities involve time, effort, and money. To provide debtors with an incentive to file under chapter 13 merely to later convert to chapter 7 is inherently unfair to these parties, who serve as honest participants in the chapter 13 process.

CONCLUSION

For these reasons, the United States Trustee respectfully asks this Court to reverse the order entered below, and remand this case for further proceedings.

ARGUMENT

In their brief, the Debtors make five principal arguments. First, the Debtors assert that section 707(b)(1) must be enforced according to its terms because the language of the statute is plain. See Appellee's Br. at 5-7. Second, the Debtors argue that because the United States Trustee's construction of section 707(b)(1) relies upon the "last antecedent" doctrine, his interpretation fails. Id. at 8-14. Third, the Debtors contend that the United States Trustee's construction of section 707(b)(1) somehow equates the conversion of a case with the filing of a petition under the Bankruptcy Code. Id. at 15-27. Fourth, the Debtors assert that Congress intended section 707(b)(1) to only apply to cases originally filed under chapter 7 of the Bankruptcy Code. Id. at 27-31. Fifth, the Debtors suggest that this Court's adoption of the United States Trustee's construction of section 707(b)(1) would lead to absurd and inequitable results. Id. at 31-35. Each of these arguments are addressed below.[1]

---

[1] The Debtors also suggest that the United States Trustee has waived several of his arguments before this Court. See Appellee's Br. at n.5. That is simply inaccurate. The United States Trustee has properly preserved the issue on appeal, and the matters addressed were raised before the bankruptcy court below. In the case below, the United States Trustee argued for his interpretation of section 707(b)(1) based on the language of the statute itself, the policies behind the 2005 Act, and the practical results that would arise from excluding cases converted to chapter 7 from another chapter from the abuse analysis. See R. at 63-64; 115-118. The United States Trustee's brief expands upon these arguments, but the arguments were raised below.

I. The plain language of section 707(b)(1).

The Debtors assert that section 707(b)(1) must be enforced according to its terms because the language of the statute is plain. See Appellee's Br. at 5-7. The United States Trustee agrees. The language at the core of this appeal is contained in section 707(b)(1) of the Bankruptcy Code. It provides that the court "may dismiss a case filed by an individual debtor under this chapter whose debts are primarily consumer debts. . . ." 11 U.S.C. § 707(b)(1). Thus, section 707(b) relates to a "case" – a term broad enough to encompass both cases converted to chapter 13 and those originally filed in chapter 7.

As the United States Trustee demonstrates, section 707(b)(1)'s language regarding the types of cases subject to dismissal is practically identical to the language contained in other, similar provisions of the Bankruptcy Code. See Appellant's Br. at 21-22, referencing sections 1112(b), 1208(b), and 1307(b) of the Bankruptcy Code).[2] The Debtors do not dispute that these other, similar provisions apply to cases converted from other chapters. See Appellee's Br. at 4-35. Indeed, the Debtors fail to address these corresponding provisions at all. Id. Accordingly,

[2] The only difference between these provisions and section 707(b)(1) is the phrase "filed by an individual debtor." However, as explained by the United States Trustee in his principal brief, this additional phrase is found in section 707(b)(1) because Congress sought to limit dismissal for abuse under section 707(b)(1) to cases filed by consumer debtors who are not corporations, partnerships, or limited liability companies, and not because Congress sought to limit dismissal to cases originally filed under chapter 7. See Appellant's Br. at 15-16.

because it is a basic rule of statutory construction that "'identical words used in different parts of the same act are intended to have the same meaning[,]'" Commissioner of Internal Revenue v. Lundy, 516 U.S. 235, 250 (1996) (citations omitted), section 707(b)(1) should be applied in the same manner as sections 1112(b), 1208(b), and 1307(b). When that occurs, it is self-evident that section 707(b)(1) – just like sections 1112(b), 1208(b), and 1307(b) – fails to contain any exception for previously converted cases, and the lower court's reading fails.[3]

II. Reliance upon the "last antecedent" doctrine.

The Debtors distort the United States Trustee's construction of section 707(b)(1) by implying that it rests entirely on the application of the "last antecedent doctrine" and then applying that doctrine in an absurd fashion. See Appellee's Br. at 8-10. The Debtors develop this theory by taking issue with the district court's analysis in Justice v. Advanced Control Solutions, Case No. 07-5231, 2008 WL 4368668 (W. D. Ark. Sept. 22, 2008). Justice is the only appellate decision to have considered the issue before this Court, and Justice concluded opposite of the bankruptcy court below. Id. Accordingly, it is not surprising that

[3] The fact that sections 707(b)(2)(C) and (D) neglect to provide for the express exception announced by the bankruptcy court below also supports this conclusion. Presumably, had Congress intended to create such an exception it would have included it in these sections of the Bankruptcy Code, yet the exception is nowhere to be found. See Sanchez v. Holder, 560 F.3d 1028, 1032 (9th Cir. 2009) ("Congress has demonstrated that it knows how to create an exception . . . when it wants to").

the Debtors take issue with Justice.[4]

Justice is not the flawed decision that the Debtors make it out to be. While the Debtors suggest that the Justice court inappropriately applied the "last antecedent doctrine" in its analysis, and therefore urge its rejection by this Court, basic grammar belies the Debtors position. The phrase "whose debts are primarily consumer debts" does not, as the Debtors suggest, modify the word "chapter." Rather, the word "whose" modifies the phrase "debts are primarily consumer debts." This is so because the word "whose" is a relative pronoun that refers to the term "individual debtor" in section 707(b)(1), and the phrase "debts are primarily consumer debts" in section 707(b)(1) operates as an adjective clause that describes the "individual debtor." The Justice court's application of the "last antecedent doctrine" is therefore well-reasoned and supported by basic grammatical construction.

III. The United States Trustee's construction of section 707(b)(1) does not equate the conversion of a case with the filing of a petition under the Bankruptcy Code.

The Debtors contend that the United States Trustee's construction of section

[4] Ironically, the United States Trustee's principal brief does not even cite Justice for the proposition articulated by the Debtors (i.e., that the "last antecedent doctrine" is determinative of the issue in this case). Rather, the United States Trustee cites Justice, along with several other bankruptcy court decisions, for the proposition that section 348(a) of the Bankruptcy Code explicitly prescribes the result sought by the United States Trustee. See Appellant's Br. at 23.

707(b)(1) somehow equates the conversion of a case with the filing of a petition under the Bankruptcy Code. See Appellee's Br. at 15-27. The Debtors are wrong. The filing of a petition in bankruptcy consists of submitting a seven page pre-printed form to the bankruptcy court. See Official Bankruptcy Form B1. This act has the legal significance of commencing a bankruptcy "case."[5] See 11 U.S.C. § 301. It only occurs once.

While the United States Trustee does take the position that debtors who convert their cases between chapters are deemed to have filed under the chapter to which they have converted as of the date the original petition was filed, see Appellant's Br. at 22, he has never taken the position that the conversion of a case equates to actual filing of a second petition in a case. Indeed, to do so would mean to ignore the plain language of section 348(a) of the Bankruptcy Code, which expressly references only one petition. See 11 U.S.C. § 348(a) ("conversion . . . does not effect a change in the date of the filing of the petition"). To the contrary, the United States Trustee position tracks section 348(a), which states that the conversion of a case under one chapter of the Bankruptcy Code to another chapter of the Bankruptcy Code "constitutes an order for relief under the chapter to which

[5] The term "case" is broadly defined in bankruptcy. It "embraces all controversies determinable by the court of bankruptcy and all matters of administration arising during the pendency of the case. . . ." 2 Collier on Bankruptcy ¶ 301.03 (15th ed. Rev. 2009) (quoting former Bankruptcy Rule 101 Advisory Comm. Note); In re Caldor Corp, 303 F.3d 161, 168 (2d Cir. 2002).

the case is converted. . . ." Id. (emphasis added). Accordingly, the "legal fiction" the Debtors so readily accuse the United States Trustee of engaging in is dictated by statute. Id.

IV. Congress did not intend section 707(b)(1) to only apply to cases originally filed under chapter 7 of the Bankruptcy Code.

The Debtors contend that Congress intended section 707(b)(1) to only apply to cases originally filed under chapter 7 of the Bankruptcy Code. See Appellee's Br. at 27-31. In support of this theory, the Debtors argue that: (a) had Congress meant to include converted cases within the ambit of section 707(b)(1) it would have deleted the word "filed" in section 707(b) as part of the amendments to section 707(b) under the 2005 Act; and (b) a floor statement by the Hon. James Sensenbrenner somehow acknowledges that section 707(b)(1) does not apply to converted cases. Id. The Debtors are wrong on both accounts.

First, as explained in the United States Trustee's principal brief, the inclusion of the word "filed" in section 707(b)(1) is not fatal to the United States Trustee's position. Those courts that have interpreted the word "filed" with respect to other provisions of the Bankruptcy Code have been unanimous in interpreting the term as encompassing both converted and non-converted cases. See In re Willis, 408 B.R. 803, 808 (Bankr. W.D. Mo. 2009). Moreover, the Fourth Circuit has noted with approval that "[b]ankruptcy courts in this circuit have rejected the idea that the word 'filed' in §§ 1328(f)(1) and (f)(2) is used to differentiate cases filed under one chapter of the Bankruptcy Code, but converted to a different chapter under which the discharge is ultimately granted." Branigan v. Bateman (In re Bateman), 515 F.3d 272, 277 n.7 (4th Cir. 2008). Thus, powerful evidence exists to suggest that Congress did not intend section 707(b)(1) to only apply to cases originally filed under chapter 7 of the Bankruptcy Code.

Second, the floor statement cited by the Debtors fails to mention section 707(b)(1)'s applicability at all. Rather, it merely acknowledges that under section 1307(a) of the Bankruptcy Code – which was not amended under the 2005 Act – a debtor has the right to convert her case to one under chapter 7 of the Bankruptcy Code. Accordingly, the floor statement is not the smoking gun the Debtors make it out to be.[6]

V. The United States Trustee's construction of section 707(b)(1) will not lead to absurd and inequitable results.

In a last ditch effort to salvage their position, the Debtors engage in the hypothetical, arguing that the United States Trustee's construction of section 707(b)(1) will somehow lead to absurd and inequitable results. See Appellee's Br.

[6] Even if that were not so, and the floor statement did mention section 707(b)(1)'s applicability, it should not be relied upon by this Court. If the intent of Congress is clear and unambiguously expressed by the statutory language at issue – which, as discussed above and in the United States Trustee's principal brief is the case when it comes to section 707(b)(1) – that should be the end of the Court's analysis. See Zuni Public School Dist. No. 89 v. Department of Educ. 550 U.S. 81, 94 (2007).

at 31-35. Essentially, the Debtors argue that in cases where a debtor initially seeks chapter 13 relief but later chooses to convert to chapter 7 due to an inability to fund a plan, the United States Trustee's position would place the debtor in the position of having her case dismissed because section 707(b)(2)'s means test calculation is based on prior, not current, income levels. Id. The Debtors argument lacks merit for two reasons. First, in the event that a case is converted from chapter 13 to chapter 7, and it is determined that the debtor has no true ability to repay, the United States Trustee would likely decline to bring a motion to dismiss the debtor's case. See 11 U.S.C. § 704(b)(2). Second, the argument ignores the fact that, in this case, the Debtors have an actual ability to pay based on the roughly $2,000 aggregate reduction in their monthly housing expense.[7] See Appellant's Br. at 12-13. Accordingly, it is the position adopted by the bankruptcy court below, not the position adopted by the United States Trustee, that will lead to absurd and inequitable results.

CONCLUSION

For these reasons, the United States Trustee respectfully asks this Court to reverse the order below, and remand this case for further proceedings.

[7] As the Debtors acknowledge in their brief, the bankruptcy court never reached the question of whether this expense should be allowed. See Appellee's Br. at 33.

STATEMENT OF JURISDICTION

The bankruptcy court had jurisdiction under 28 U.S.C. § 157(a) and (b) over David and Anne Dudley's bankruptcy case. 11 U.S.C. § 101 et seq. See also 28 U.S.C. §§ 151, 1334(a). On December 15, 2008, the United States Trustee commenced a contested matter in that case. See Fed. R. Bankr. P. 9014. He alleged that the Dudleys' case was abusive on two alternative grounds and should be dismissed. Joint Appendix "J. A." 32-38 (moving to dismiss the case under 11 U.S.C. § 707(b)(2) or (b)(3)). The United States Bankruptcy Court for the Western District of Virginia entered an order on June 17, 2009, granting the Dudleys summary judgment as to the United States Trustee's claims. J. A. 51.

The United States Trustee appealed that order to the United States District Court for the Western District of Virginia on June 26, 2009. J. A. 68. That order was timely under 28 U.S.C. § 158(c)(2) and Fed. R. Bankr. P. 8002. The district court dismissed the appeal on April 28, 2010, holding it to be interlocutory and declining to grant the United States Trustee leave to take an interlocutory appeal pursuant to 28 U.S.C. § 158(a)(3). J. A. 75, 81. On June 25, 2010, the United States Trustee filed a timely notice of appeal from the district court's dismissal of the appeal to this Court pursuant to Fed. R. App. P. 4(a)(1)(B). J. A. 82.

This Court has jurisdiction to review the district court's ruling as to the finality of the bankruptcy court's order under 28 U.S.C. § 158(d)(1). See, e.g., BancTexas Dallas, N.A. v. Chateaugay Corp. (In re Chateaugay Corp.), 876 F.2d 8, 9 (2d Cir. 1989) (holding that court of appeals had jurisdiction to review district court's determination that bankruptcy court's decision was interlocutory); In re Brown, 916 F.2d 120 (3d Cir. 1990) (reviewing district court order dismissing appeal as interlocutory); Smith v. Seaside Lanes (In re Moody), 825 F.2d 81, 89 n.11 (5th Cir. 1987) (same); In re Sun Valley Foods Co., 801 F.2d 186, 189-90 (6th Cir. 1986) (same).

STATEMENT OF THE ISSUE PRESENTED FOR REVIEW

Section 158(a)(1) of title 28 gives district courts jurisdiction over appeals "from final judgments, orders, and decrees" of bankruptcy courts. 11 U.S.C. § 158(a)(1). The sole issue in this appeal is whether the bankruptcy court's order granting the Dudleys summary judgment and terminating forever the United States Trustee's action to dismiss their case for abuse under 11 U.S.C. §§ 707(b)(2) & (b)(3) was a final order appealable as of right under section 158(a)(1).

STATEMENT OF THE CASE

The United States Attorney General appoints United States Trustees to supervise the administration of bankruptcy cases and trustees. See 28 U.S.C. §§ 581-589a. United States Trustees "serve as bankruptcy watch-dogs to prevent fraud, dishonesty, and overreaching in the bankruptcy arena." H.R. Rep. No. 95-595, at 88 (1977), reprinted in 1978 U.S.C.C.A.N. 5963, 6049.

One of the United States Trustees' statutory duties is to review chapter 7 bankruptcy cases to determine whether the case is presumptively abusive based on specific statutory criteria. See 11 U.S.C. § 704(b)(1)(A). When, as here, the United States Trustee concludes that the debtor's case should be presumed to be an abuse under section 707(b)(2), the United States may file a civil action to dismiss the case. 11 U.S.C. § 707(b)(1) & (b)(2). But the United States Trustee must do that before the Bankruptcy Code's statutory deadline for such actions expires. 11 U.S.C. § 704(b)(2).

The United States Trustee did that in this case. After the debtors, David V. Dudley and Anne M. Dudley, converted their bankruptcy case to chapter 7 from chapter 13, the United States Trustee timely moved to dismiss the case as presumptively abusive under 11 U.S.C. § 707(b)(2), and as abusive under 11 U.S.C. § 707(b)(3). J. A. 32.

The bankruptcy court granted the Dudleys' motion for summary judgment on the United States Trustee's suit and the United States Trustee appealed the bankruptcy court's decision to the United States District Court for the Western District of Virginia. J. A. 51, 68. On its own motion, the district court dismissed the appeal as interlocutory. J. A. 75, 81. The United States Trustee then brought this appeal seeking review of the district court's determination that the bankruptcy court's summary judgment order was not final. J. A. 82.

STATEMENT OF FACTS

I. Statutory Background

A. 11 U.S.C. § 707(b)

This appeal involves an action brought by the United States Trustee under 11 U.S.C. §§ 707(b)(2) & (b)(3). These causes of action were created in the Bankruptcy Abuse Prevention and Consumer Protection Act of 2005 ("2005 Act") Pub. L. No. 109-8, 119 Stat. 23 (2005). Congress passed the 2005 Act "to improve bankruptcy law and practice by restoring personal responsibility and integrity in the bankruptcy system and ensure that the system is fair for both debtors and creditors." H.R. Rep. No. 109-31(I), at 2 (2005), reprinted in 2005 U.S.C.C.A.N. 88, 89.

The 2005 Act authorizes bankruptcy courts to grant motions seeking to dismiss chapter 7 cases. It may do so when "it finds that the granting of relief would be an abuse of the provisions of this chapter" under section 707(b)(2) or (b)(3).[1] 11 U.S.C. § 707(b)(1). Section 707(b)(2) specifies when a chapter 7 case is presumed to be abusive, while section 707(b)(3) sets forth two additional grounds for finding actual abuse. Prior to the 2005 Act, section 707(b) did not include the causes of action now set forth in sections (b)(2) and (b)(3), but authorized the dismissal of cases only for "substantial abuse." 11 U.S.C. § 707(b)(2004).

B. Deadlines for alleging abuse

Under the 2005 Act, United States Trustees have only 10 days from the first meeting of creditors[2] to "review all materials filed by the debtor" and file a statement with the court as to whether the debtor's case is presumed abusive under section 707(b)(2). 11 U.S.C. § 704(b)(1). When a United States Trustee determines a chapter 7 bankruptcy case is presumptively abusive under the statute, the United States Trustee must either seek its dismissal under section 707(b)(1) and (b)(2), or file a detailed statement explaining why dismissal is not appropriate.[3] See 11 U.S.C. § 704(b)(2). The United States Trustee has only 30 days to do that. Id.

A United States Trustee may alternatively seek to dismiss an individual debtor's case under section 707(b)(3). In a section 707(b)(3) action, the United States Trustee must bring suit within 60 days after the first meeting of creditors. Fed. R. Bankr. P. 1017(e)(1).

C. 28 U.S.C. § 158

Congress gave the United States district courts jurisdiction to hear appeals "from final judgments, orders, and decrees . . . of bankruptcy judges." 28 U.S.C. § 158(a). The district courts may also hear appeals from certain interlocutory orders and decrees of the bankruptcy courts as of right and from all others with leave of court. Id.

II. This Proceeding

The Dudleys filed a voluntary petition for bankruptcy relief under chapter 13 on August 18, 2008. J. A. 20. In chapter 13 cases, debtors use their income to repay creditors over a number of years through a chapter 13 plan. 11 U.S.C.

[3] A debtor may also consent to the conversion of his case to one under chapter 11 or 13 of the Bankruptcy Code. See 11 U.S.C. § 707(b)(1).

§§ 1301-1330. The chapter 13 trustee[4] objected to the confirmation of the Dudleys' chapter 13 plan because he believed that they were seeking to underpay their creditors by claiming unreasonably high expenses and improper deductions. J. A. 23-24. The trustee moved to dismiss or convert the Dudleys' case. J. A. 23. Faced with that motion, the Dudleys converted their case to a chapter 7 liquidation case.[5] J. A. 26-29.

The United States Trustee then sued to dismiss the Dudleys' chapter 7 case for abuse under section 707(b)(2) and (b)(3). J. A. 32-38. The United States Trustee contended that if the Dudleys had properly excluded mortgage payments they were claiming on a house they intended to give up to the mortgage holder, then a presumption of abuse mandating dismissal of their chapter 7 case would have arisen under section 707(b)(2). J. A. 35-36.

Alternatively, the United States Trustee argued under section 707(b)(3)(B) that the totality of the circumstances of the Dudleys' financial situation demonstrated abuse because the Dudleys had the ability to repay their creditors. J. A. 37-38. The Dudleys responded that section 707(b) – which provides that the court "may dismiss a case filed by an individual debtor under this chapter whose debts are primarily consumer debts" – did not apply to a case like theirs that had been converted to chapter 7 from chapter 13. 11 U.S.C. § 707(b)(1). J. A. 44-48. They sought summary judgment dismissal of the United States Trustee's action against them on that ground.

Although the bankruptcy court observed that the majority of courts that have addressed the issue have held that section 707(b) applies to cases converted to chapter 7, it held that the plain language of the provision limited its application to cases originally filed under chapter 7. J. A. 54, 66. Accordingly, the court granted summary judgment to the Dudleys, and denied the United States Trustee's motion to dismiss their case. J. A. 67.

The United States Trustee filed a timely notice of appeal to the district court. J. A. 68. The district court on its own motion dismissed the appeal for lack of jurisdiction under 28 U.S.C. § 158(a)(1) with no briefing on the jurisdictional issue, and without reaching the merits of the bankruptcy court's summary judgment. J. A. 77, 80, 81. The court held that it lacked jurisdiction over the appeal because the bankruptcy court's order denying the United States Trustee's motion to dismiss was not final under 28 U.S.C. § 158(a)(1). J. A. 77, 80. The court expressly relied on what it believed to be the weight of circuit authority regarding the finality of such orders, but only one of the authorities it cited involved a section 707(b) motion, and none involved claims of abuse under section 707(b)(2) or (b)(3). J. A. 78. The district court's opinion failed to address or even mention the two circuit court decisions holding that orders denying section 707(b) motions under the 2005 Act were final.

The court acknowledged that a liberal interpretation of finality often applied to bankruptcy appeals, under which bankruptcy court orders that "conclusively determine[] a separable dispute" without disposing of the entire case can be considered final. J. A. 78. But it held that the order appealed from here was not final even under this relaxed standard because it is "susceptible to being overtaken or superseded by other proceedings in the Bankruptcy Court" such as a proceeding "in which the Bankruptcy Court might refuse to grant the debtor a discharge despite having declined to dismiss this case under § 707(b)." J. A. 79. The district court did not explain why this might be so and did not identify any other proceedings that might "overtake" the order declining to dismiss the case for abuse.

Both United States courts of appeals to consider whether the denial of section 707(b)(2) or (b)(3) motions under the 2005 Act are final have held they are. Morse v. Rudler (In re Rudler), 576 F.3d 37, 43 (1st Cir. 2009); Ross-Tousey v. Neary (In re Ross-Tousey), 549 F.3d 1148, 1152 (7th Cir. 2008). The district court's contrary ruling is wrong and should be reversed.

The First and Seventh circuits' rulings make sense because, as almost every circuit has held, more orders entered in bankruptcy cases are final than in other types of cases. This is so because the language of the United States Code's bankruptcy-specific jurisdictional statute makes more types of orders final than section 1291 of title 28 does. Compare 28 U.S.C. § 158(a)(1) with 28 U.S.C. § 1291. And it is written more broadly because bankruptcy involves many separate and unrelated disputes between different parties, and no purpose would be served by delaying review of decisions resolving those separate disputes until the end of the entire case.

An action commenced by a United States Trustee to obtain the dismissal of a bankruptcy case under sections 707(b)(2) and (3) is a separate dispute between the United States Trustee and the debtor. It alleges a statutory cause of action against the debtor on which the United States Trustee bears the burden of proof. The bankruptcy court's order granting the Dudleys summary judgment and denying the United States Trustee's motion was a final judgment as to the United States Trustee's claim of abuse in this case because it finally and forever resolved that two-party dispute. Because of the applicable statutory and rule-based deadlines, neither the United States Trustee nor anyone else can seek dismissal of the Dudleys' case on those grounds again. Therefore, the bankruptcy court's summary judgment order was final.

Pragmatic considerations independently support immediate review of orders overruling actions to dismiss chapter 7 cases. This is so for two reasons:

First, immediate appellate review of orders denying section 707(b) motions will ensure that abusive cases are dismissed expeditiously so that limited institutional resources are not needlessly expended on abusive cases. If the order denying section 707(b) relief is not final, the parties may have to wait until the end of the chapter 7 case to obtain appellate review of the order denying dismissal. All the time and resources invested in the chapter 7 case by the parties, the trustee, and the bankruptcy court will have been wasted.

Second, if an order denying dismissal for abuse is not itself, a final, appealable order, then it can be reviewed only in connection with a subsequent final order. But there is not one, readily-identifiable, final order under which the section 707(b) order can be reviewed. The result is total confusion as to which final order the United States Trustee must appeal to obtain appellate review of the section 707(b) order.

This confusion will engender unnecessary litigation. If a United States Trustee could not directly appeal a section 707(b) order, he would have to appeal from every subsequent order in the case that could potentially be the appropriate final order. If he does not, he may inadvertently forfeit his right to appellate review of the section 707(b) order. Permitting immediate review of the section 707(b) order would avoid this quandary and prevent an unnecessary proliferation of bankruptcy appeals.

ARGUMENT

I. Standard of Review

This court reviews the legal conclusions of the district court de novo. In re Kirkland, 600 F.3d 310, 314 (4th Cir. 2010). Whether subject matter jurisdiction exists is a question of law that is reviewed de novo. Id.

II. The Order Granting Summary Judgment to the Dudleys And Denying the United States Trustee's Action Seeking Dismissal Was Final Under 11 U.S.C. § 158(a)(1).

A. The circuit courts unanimously have held that orders denying motions to dismiss under section 707(b)(2) or (b)(3) of the 2005 Act, like this one, are final.

Both United States courts of appeals to consider the issue – the First Circuit and the Seventh Circuit – agree that bankruptcy court orders overruling United States Trustee actions to dismiss chapter 7 cases under the current version of section 707(b) are final and immediately appealable. In re Rudler, 576 F.3d at 43-44; In re Ross-Tousey, 549 F.3d 1152-53. Such orders are final under section 158(a)(1) because the 2005 Act created statutory deadlines for United States Trustees to identify and move to dismiss presumptively abusive cases, meaning such motions could only be made and considered once in a chapter 7 case. 11 U.S.C. § 704(b). See also Fed. R. Bank. P. 1017(e)(1). When, as here, those deadlines have passed, this two-party dispute can never be revisited in the case, and the order terminating it – here a summary judgment order– is immediately appealable.

Even under the predecessor version of section 707, which had no statutory deadline for bringing such actions, two out of three circuits held that bankruptcy court orders denying former section 707(b) motions to dismiss were final. Stuart v. Koch (In re Koch), 109 F.3d 1285, 1288 (8th Cir. 1997); In re Christian, 804 F.2d 46, 47-48 (3d Cir. 1986). And the Fifth Circuit treated as final a bankruptcy court order denying the United States Trustee's section 707(b) motion to dismiss under the predecessor statute, without expressly addressing the issue. See In re Cortez, 457 F.3d 448, 453-54 (5th Cir. 2006) (affirming district court's reversal of bankruptcy court's order denying United States Trustee's motion to dismiss under section 707(b)).

The bankruptcy court did not cite any cases considering the finality of orders denying motions to dismiss under section 707(b) of the 2005 Act. The case the bankruptcy court relied on, Barben v. Donovan (In re Donovan), 532 F.3d 1134, 1137 (11th Cir. 2008) involved an order denying a motion to dismiss under the predecessor statute. That decision did not address the finality of orders denying dismissal under section 707(b)(2) and (b)(3). Nor did it discuss the circuit court decisions holding that orders denying motions to dismiss under section 707(b) are final.[6]

The Eleventh Circuit's inapposite decision relied chiefly on decisions holding that orders denying motions to dismiss for cause in chapter 11 cases under 11 U.S.C. § 1112(b) are interlocutory.[7] See In re Donovan, 532 F.3d at 1137 (citing In re Jartran, 886 F.2d 859, 864 (7th Cir. 1989); In re 405 N. Bedford Dr. Corp., 778 F.2d 1374, 1379 (9th Cir. 1985)). But those decisions are not relevant to the issue here because significant differences between section 1112(b) motions and section 707(b) motions make orders resolving the former less final than the latter. Under section 1112(b), a party may move to dismiss or convert a chapter 11 reorganization case for "cause." 11 U.S.C. § 1112(b)(1). The statute provides a non-exclusive laundry list of circumstances or events that constitute "cause" for dismissal. 11 U.S.C. § 1112(b)(4). And parties also bring section 1112(b) motions to dismiss based on the alleged bad faith of the debtor. In re 15375 Memorial Corp. v. Bepco, L.P., 589 F.3d 605, 618-19 & n.7 (3d Cir. 2009).

[6] The two circuit court cases holding that orders denying motions to dismiss under the predecessor of the current section 707(b) were decided prior to the Eleventh Circuit's decision in In re Donovan. See In re Koch, 109 F.3d 1285; In re Christian, 804 F.2d 46. The opinion does not mention In re Koch. It cites, but does not rebut, the Third Circuit's holding in In re Christian.

[7] In addition, while the Eleventh Circuit found that the order did not conclusively resolve a claim, it apparently considered only the creditor's monetary claim against the estate and not her separate and distinct claim of abuse against the debtor. See In re Donovan, 532 F.3d 1137 & n.2.

"Cause" for dismissal under section 1112(b) may arise throughout a chapter 11 case, unlike grounds for a motion to dismiss for abuse under section 707(b).[8] Because there are no statutory or rule-based deadlines for filing motions under section 1112(b), nothing prevents a party in a chapter 11 case from filing multiple motions to dismiss. See 11 U.S.C. § 1112(b) (permitting dismissal of chapter 11 case for "cause" but establishing no deadlines for seeking such dismissal; the Bankruptcy Rules also set no relevant deadline). Thus, the bankruptcy court may have to revisit the issue of whether a chapter 11 case should be dismissed for cause throughout the case. And it is not uncommon for multiple motions to dismiss to be filed before the case is actually dismissed or converted. See, e.g., In re Huff, 54 B.R. 746, 754 (Bankr. D.N.D. 1985) (granting third motion to dismiss under section 1112(b)); Faden v. Faden, No. 90-2863, 1990 WL 191861, at *1 (D.N.J. Nov. 5, 1990) (affirming order granting fifth motion to convert under section 1112(b)).

[8] For example, a chapter 11 case may be dismissed within months of filing for failure to attend the section 341(a) meeting of creditors, or years after filing for inability to effectuate substantial consummation of a confirmed plan. Compare 11 U.S.C. § 1112(b)(4)(G) with 11 U.S.C. § 1112(b)(4)(M).

By contrast, the grounds for dismissal under section 707(b) are limited and as a practical matter, only one motion to dismiss for abuse may be decided in a chapter 7 case because of the statutory and rule-based deadlines. An order denying a motion to dismiss for cause in a chapter 11 case consequently lacks the finality of the order denying the motion to dismiss here.[9]

The Seventh Circuit implicitly recognized this difference when it held that orders denying motions to dismiss under the current section 707(b) are final despite previously having held that an order denying a motion to dismiss under section 1112(b) was not. Compare In re Ross-Tousey, 549 F.3d at 1152-53 with In

[9] In addition, immediate review of a chapter 11 motion to dismiss could interfere with the reorganization process, a concern that does not exist in a chapter 7 liquidation case. See In re 405 N. Bedford Dr. Corp., 778 F.2d at 1379 ("[C]lassifying the denial of a motion to dismiss for bad faith filing as a final order would have an undesirable impact on the reorganization process.").

re Jartran, 886 F.2d at 863-64.[10] Because of the inherent differences between the motions, decisions finding motions to dismiss under section 1112(b) to be interlocutory do not provide persuasive authority as to the finality of the order on appeal. They certainly cannot trump unanimous circuit authority that is directly on point.[11]

[10] Even the Eleventh Circuit does not treat all denials of motions to dismiss as interlocutory. The Eleventh Circuit, sitting en banc after its decision in In re Donovan, reached the merits of an appeal from an order denying a motion to dismiss a chapter 7 case under a different provision. Trusted Net Media Holdings, LLC v. Morrison Agency (In re Trusted Net Media Holdings, LLC), 550 F.3d 1035 (11th Cir. 2008). It could not have done so had it concluded that the underlying order was interlocutory. Walden v. Walker (In re Walker), 515 F.3d 1204, 1210 (11th Cir. 2008) (court of appeals has jurisdiction over only final judgments and orders arising from bankruptcy proceeding, whereas district court may review interlocutory judgments and orders as well). The United States, acting as amicus raised the issue of whether denials of motions to dismiss are always interlocutory and cited the In re Donovan opinion, but the court declined to address the finality issue in its opinion. See En Banc Brief for the United States as Amicus Curiae Supporting Appellee at 8-11, filed Sept. 17, 2008 in In re Trusted Net Media Holdings, LLC, No. 07-13429 (11th Cir.).

[11] For the same reason, this Court's non-precedential decision holding that an order denying a debtor's motion to voluntarily dismiss his own bankruptcy case without prejudice to renewal was not final is inapposite to the issue on appeal. See Culver v. Molinario, No. 94-1974, 1995 WL 570437 (4th Cir. Sept. 28, 1995) (unpublished). A debtor may move to voluntarily dismiss his bankruptcy case more than once. Indeed, in Culver the bankruptcy court invited the debtor to renew his motion after certain events had occurred. 1995 WL 570437, at *1. Because the bankruptcy court could grant a subsequent motion by the debtor seeking dismissal, the order appealed in Culver did not finally resolve a discrete dispute, unlike the order on appeal here. When the Seventh Circuit decided In re Ross-Tousey, it considered the effect of its binding, precedential decision in a case

B. The bankruptcy court's order was final because it finally resolved the United States Trustee's discrete claim of abuse.

Congress gave the United States district courts jurisdiction to hear appeals from "final judgments, orders, and decrees" of the bankruptcy courts. 28 U.S.C. § 158(a)(1). Nearly all of the circuits agree that more determinations are final in bankruptcy cases than in other types of cases. In re Computer Learning Ctrs., Inc., 407 F.3d 656, 660 (4th Cir. 2005); In re Rudler, 576 F.3d at 43; In re Penn Traffic Co., 466 F.3d 75, 77-78 (2d Cir. 2006); In re Prof'l Ins. Management, 285 F.3d 268, 279 (3d Cir. 2002); In re Bartee, 212 F.3d 277, 282 (5th Cir. 2000); Winget v. JPMorgan Chase Bank, 537 F.3d 565, 578 (6th Cir. 2008), cert. denied, 129 S. Ct. 2159; In re Ross-Tousey, 549 F.3d at 1152; Ritchie Special Credit Inv., Ltd. v. U.S. Trustee, 620 F.3d 847, 852 (8th Cir. 2010); In re Rosson, 545 F.3d 764, 769 (9th Cir. 2008); In re Baldwin, 593 F.3d 1155, 1159 (10th Cir. 2010); In similar to Culver. The Seventh Circuit previously had held that an order denying a debtor's motion to voluntarily dismiss his bankruptcy case was not final. In re Vlasek, 325 F.3d 955 (7th Cir. 2003). Nevertheless, in Ross-Tousey that court held that an order denying a section 707(b) motion to dismiss was final, finding that In re Vlasek was not controlling on that issue. In re Ross-Tousey, 549 F.3d at 1153 n.2. The debtor's ability to renew his motion in Culver meant the order deciding the motion did not conclusively resolve the matter. The opposite is true here. The order denying the United States Trustee's section 707(b) motion cannot be "renew[ed]" because the statutory and rule-based deadlines have passed. Thus, even were it precedential, this Court's decision in Culver is not relevant to the issue on appeal.

re Donovan, 532 F.3d at 1136.

One reason for that is section 158(a)'s text, which allows district courts to hear appeals not merely from "final decisions," as 28 U.S.C. § 1291 does, but from:

- final judgments,
- final orders, and
- final decrees

of bankruptcy judges. 11 U.S.C. § 158(a).

Section 158(a) is written more broadly than section 1291 because bankruptcy cases typically involve numerous two party controversies bearing only a slight relationship to each other, and postponing review of orders resolving the separate controversies until the end of the entire bankruptcy case could waste time and resources. See A.H. Robins Co. v. Piccinin, 788 F.2d 994, 1009 (4th Cir. 1986) (explaining multiparty nature of bankruptcy cases); In re Northwood Properties, LLC, 509 F.3d 15, 21(1st Cir. 2007) (same). A classic, civil action is one two-party dispute. But, bankruptcy cases often have many two party-disputes. So there are more final orders in bankruptcy, something the text of section 158(a) acknowledges.

As a result, this Court, like other circuit courts, has repeatedly held that bankruptcy orders do not have to resolve the entire bankruptcy case to be final. A.H. Robins, 788 F.2d at 1009; Turshen v. Chapman, 823 F.2d 836, 839 (4th Cir. 1987); Sumy v. Schlossberg, 777 F.2d 921, 923 (4th Cir. 1985). In this circuit, it is well-established that "orders in bankruptcy cases may be immediately appealed if they finally dispose of discrete disputes within the larger case." In re Computer Learning Ctrs., 407 F.3d at 660 (quoting In re Saco Local Dev. Corp., 711 F.2d 441, 444 (1st Cir. 1983)). That is the law elsewhere, too. In re Rudler, 576 F.3d at 43 ("To be final, a bankruptcy order need not resolve all of the issues in the proceeding, but it must finally dispose of all the issues pertaining to a discrete dispute within the larger proceeding.") (internal quotation omitted); In re Ross-Tousey, 549 F.3d at 1152 ("[A]n adjudication by the bankruptcy court is definitive because it cannot be affected by the resolution of any other issue in the proceeding, and therefore no purpose would be served by postponing the appeal to the proceeding's conclusion.") (internal quotation omitted).

And as this Court has recognized, most Rule 7001 adversary proceedings and Rule 9014 contested matters in bankruptcy constitute discrete disputes within the larger case. Sumy, 777 F.2d at 923. Thus, an order that conclusively resolves an adversary proceeding or contested matter will usually be appealable. See, e.g., Turshen, 823 F.2d at 839-40 (holding that order denying petition seeking removal of chapter 7 trustee was final for purposes of collateral estoppel); Sumy, 777 F.2d at 923 (grant or denial of a claimed exemption is final, appealable order). But an order that is subject to reevaluation or modification by the bankruptcy court is interlocutory and cannot be appealed until the issue has been conclusively resolved. See, e.g., In re Computer Learning Ctrs., 407 F.3d at 660 (holding that order granting interim fees was interlocutory).

The bankruptcy court's decision granting the Dudleys summary judgment and denying the United States Trustee's motion to dismiss their case falls squarely within section 158(a)(1) and this Court's bankruptcy finality jurisprudence. Such a motion alleges a cause of action under section 707(b), initiating a "contested matter"[12] within the larger bankruptcy case. And the bankruptcy court fully resolved all issues concerning the United States Trustee's claim of abuse when it denied the motion, holding that section 707(b) did not even apply to the Dudleys' case. See In re Rudler, 576 F.3d at 44 & n.10; In re Ross-Tousey, 549 F.3d at 1153.

And the question of whether the Dudleys' case should be dismissed as an abuse of chapter 7 could never be relitigated because the United States Trustee's statutory and rule-based deadlines for filing a motion to dismiss under section 707(b)(2) and (b)(3) had long passed when the court entered its order denying the motion to dismiss. See 11 U.S.C. § 704(b)(2) (establishing a 30-day deadline for the United States Trustee to file a motion to dismiss); Fed. R. Bankr. P. 1017(e)(1) (establishing that a motion to dismiss for abuse under Section 707(b)(3) must be brought within 60 days after the first date set for the meeting of creditors).[13] So there was no possibility that the order denying the United States Trustee's motion to dismiss could be impacted by future decisions in the underlying case. The bankruptcy court's order thus finally disposed of all the issues pertaining to a "discrete dispute[] within the larger case," and is a final, appealable order. In re Computer Learning Ctrs., 407 F.3d at 660.

It appears that the district court may not have understood the fundamental differences between a section 707(b) motion to dismiss in a bankruptcy case and more typical motions to dismiss, such as a 12(b)(6) motion. See Fed. R. Civ. P.

[13] The first meeting of creditors was held on November 4, 2008. See J. A. 4 (Doc. # 20). Although, the chapter trustee and other interested parties also may bring motions to dismiss abusive cases under section 707(b), those parties must adhere to deadlines set forth in Fed. R. Bankr. P. 1017(e) for bringing such motions. As a practical matter, however, the United States Trustee brings the vast majority of motions to dismiss chapter 7 cases for abuse.

12(b)(6). Despite its name, a motion to dismiss under section 707(b) is the polar opposite of a motion to dismiss in a civil action.

When the United States Trustee files a section 707(b) motion, he does not seek dismissal of a claim against the United States; he initiates an action against the debtor. The motion acts as the functional equivalent of a complaint. It alleges a statutory claim of abuse against the debtor and asks for relief, instituting a contested matter under Fed. R. Bankr. P. 9014. And like any plaintiff or moving party, the United States Trustee must establish the legal basis for his claim and must prove by admissible evidence each of the elements that support his cause of action to obtain the requested relief. See In re Meade, 420 B.R. 291, 303 (Bankr. W.D. Va. 2009); In re Lamug, 403 B.R. 47, 53 (Bankr. N.D. Cal. 2009); In re Witek, 383 B.R. 323, 326 (Bankr. N.D. Ohio 2007).

C. Prompt review of denials of section 707(b) motions will conserve the limited resources of the court, the trustee, and the parties and prevent unnecessary appeals.

Pragmatic concerns also warrant immediate appeal of orders denying motions to dismiss for abuse. See A.H. Robins Co., 788 F.2d at 1009 (considerations of fairness and judicial efficiency may also justify immediate appealability under the pragmatic view of finality); In re Walker, 515 F.3d at 1210 (same). As the First, Third and Eighth circuits all have recognized, delaying appellate consideration of whether a debtor's case is abusive "may frustrate both principles of judicial economy and Congress's goal of ensuring that debtors allocate as much of their resources as possible toward repaying their debts." In re Rudler, 576 F.3d at 43.

That is because if a motion to dismiss for abuse is not immediately appealable, bankruptcy proceedings "must be completed before it can be determined whether they were proper in the first place," thereby causing a waste of the parties' and the court's resources. In re Christian, 804 F.2d at 48. Indeed, "[r]equiring trustees to complete Chapter 7 proceedings before appealing denial of their § 707(b) motions wastes debtor resources that should be used to pay creditors, and forces trustees and bankruptcy courts to expend their scarce institutional resources on abusive Chapter 7 petitioners." In re Koch, 109 F.3d at 1288.

Immediate review also can prevent the chapter 7 trustee from wasting time and effort in:

- examining the creditors' proofs of claims and objecting to improper claims,
- investigating the debtor's finances,
- collecting and liquidating the debtor's non-exempt assets, and

- distributing those assets to creditors of the estate in a case that should have been dismissed. See 11 U.S.C. § 704 (prescribing a chapter 7 trustee's duties). And it may obviate the need for the bankruptcy court to expend its limited time and resources overseeing and resolving disputes in a potentially abusive case.

Moreover, if an erroneous section 707(b) order is promptly reversed and the case dismissed before the estate has been administered, creditors may proceed against the debtor outside of bankruptcy while the debtor still retains assets subject to attachment. However, if reversal is delayed, creditors must wait for the trustee's liquidation of the estate to take its course, collecting little, if anything at all, in the typical chapter 7 case.

In addition, holding that such orders are not final will result in the unnecessary proliferation of appeals. Because no single final order obviously resolves an entire chapter 7 case, it is not clear which subsequent order in the bankruptcy case must be appealed to obtain review of the denial of the section 707(b) motion.[14] As a result, United States Trustees will be compelled to appeal

[14] In In re Donovan, the Eleventh Circuit stated that it could "see no reason why [the proponent of the motion to dismiss] could not have obtained meaningful appellate review upon a final judgment." 532 F.3d at 1137 n.1. That court, however, neglected to identify what would constitute a final judgment in a chapter 7 bankruptcy case.

all subsequent orders that might be the appealable final order and litigate the jurisdictional issue merely to preserve their right to appellate review.[15]

In any chapter 7 case, no less than three separate classes of orders could be considered the "final" order into which the abuse order, if interlocutory, would merge for purposes of appeal:

- an order either granting or denying the debtor's discharge (see 11 U.S.C. § 727(a); Fed. R. Bankr. P. 4004),
- an order approving the trustee's final report and final account or the trustee's no distribution report, and discharging the trustee (see 11 U.S.C. § 704(a)(9)), and
- an order closing the case (see 11 U.S.C. § 350(a); Fed. R. Bankr. P. 5009).

None is an obvious choice because none bears any relationship to the United States Trustee's claim of abuse, although any of them could be characterized as resolving the bankruptcy case as a whole.

---

[15] Appellate review of such orders is essential both to preserve the integrity of the bankruptcy system and to obtain judicial clarification on widely-applicable issues of statutory interpretation.

CONCLUSION

For these reasons, the United States Trustee requests that the judgment of the district court be reversed and this case be remanded to the district court with instructions for that court to review the merits of the bankruptcy court's order denying the United States Trustee's motion to dismiss the Dudleys' case for abuse.

REQUEST FOR ORAL ARGUMENT

Because of the complexity of the jurisdictional issue on appeal and the importance of that issue to the United States Trustee's ability to effectively perform his statutory duties, the United States Trustee requests oral argument.

and, with leave of the court, from interlocutory orders and decrees, of bankruptcy judges entered in cases and proceedings referred to the bankruptcy judges under section 157 of this title. An appeal under this subsection shall be taken only to the district court for the judicial district in which the bankruptcy judge is serving.

(b)(1) The judicial council of a circuit shall establish a bankruptcy appellate panel service composed of bankruptcy judges of the districts in the circuit who are appointed by the judicial council in accordance with paragraph (3), to hear and determine, with the consent of all the parties, appeals under subsection (a) unless the judicial council finds that—

(A) there are insufficient judicial resources available in the circuit; or

(B) establishment of such service would result in undue delay or increased cost to parties in cases under title 11.

Not later than 90 days after making the finding, the judicial council shall submit to the Judicial Conference of the United States a report containing the factual basis of such finding.

(2)(A) A judicial council may reconsider, at any time, the finding described in paragraph (1).

(B) On the request of a majority of the district judges in a circuit for which a bankruptcy appellate panel service is established under paragraph (1), made after the expiration of the 1-year period beginning on the date such service is established, the judicial council of the circuit shall determine whether a circumstance specified in subparagraph (A) or (B) of such paragraph exists.

(C) On its own motion, after the expiration of the 3-year period beginning on the date a bankruptcy appellate panel service is established under paragraph (1), the judicial council of the circuit may determine whether a circumstance specified in subparagraph (A) or (B) of such paragraph exists.

(D) If the judicial council finds that either of such circumstances exists, the judicial council may provide for the completion of the appeals then pending before such service and the orderly termination of such service.

(3) Bankruptcy judges appointed under paragraph (1) shall be appointed and may be reappointed under such paragraph.

(4) If authorized by the Judicial Conference of the United States, the judicial councils of 2 or more circuits may establish a joint bankruptcy appellate panel comprised of bankruptcy judges from the districts within the circuits for which such panel is established, to hear and determine, upon the consent of all the parties, appeals under subsection (a) of this section.

(5) An appeal to be heard under this subsection shall be heard by a panel of 3 members of the bankruptcy appellate panel service, except that a member of such service may not hear an appeal originating in the district for which such member is appointed or designated under section 152 of this title.

(6) Appeals may not be heard under this subsection by a panel of the bankruptcy appellate panel service unless the district judges for the district in which the appeals occur, by majority vote, have authorized such service to hear and determine appeals originating in such district.

(c)(1) Subject to subsections (b) and (d)(2), each appeal under subsection (a) shall be heard by a 3-judge panel of the bankruptcy appellate panel service established under subsection (b)(1) unless—

(A) the appellant elects at the time of filing the appeal; or

(B) any other party elects, not later than 30 days after service of notice of the appeal; to have such appeal heard by the district court.

(2) An appeal under subsections (a) and (b) of this section shall be taken in the same manner as appeals in civil proceedings generally are taken to the courts of appeals from the district courts and in the time provided by Rule 8002 of the Bankruptcy Rules.

(d)(1) The courts of appeals shall have jurisdiction of appeals from all final decisions, judgments, orders, and decrees entered under subsections (a) and (b) of this section.

(2)(A) The appropriate court of appeals shall have jurisdiction of appeals described in the first sentence of subsection (a) if the bankruptcy court, the district court, or the bankruptcy appellate panel involved, acting on its own motion or on the request of a party to the judgment, order, or decree described in such first sentence, or all the appellants and appellees (if any) acting jointly, certify that—

(i) the judgment, order, or decree involves a question of law as to which there is no controlling decision of the court of appeals for the circuit or of the Supreme Court of the United States, or involves a matter of public importance;

(ii) the judgment, order, or decree involves a question of law requiring resolution of conflicting decisions; or

(iii) an immediate appeal from the judgment, order, or decree may materially advance the progress of the case or proceeding in which the appeal is taken; and if the court of appeals authorizes the direct appeal of the judgment, order, or decree.

[1] So in original. Probably should be followed by a dash.

(B) If the bankruptcy court, the district court, or the bankruptcy appellate panel—

(i) on its own motion or on the request of a party, determines that a circumstance specified in clause (i), (ii), or (iii) of subparagraph (A) exists; or

(ii) receives a request made by a majority of the appellants and a majority of appellees (if any) to make the certification described in subparagraph (A);

then the bankruptcy court, the district court, or the bankruptcy appellate panel shall make the certification described in subparagraph (A).

(C) The parties may supplement the certification with a short statement of the basis for the certification.

(D) An appeal under this paragraph does not stay any proceeding of the bankruptcy court, the district court, or the bankruptcy appellate panel from which the appeal is taken, unless the respective bankruptcy court, district court, or bankruptcy appellate panel, or the court of appeals in which the appeal in[2] pending, issues a stay of such proceeding pending the appeal.

(E) Any request under subparagraph (B) for certification shall be made not later than 60 days after the entry of the judgment, order, or decree.

Historical and Revision Notes

LEGISLATIVE STATEMENTS

Section 706(a) of the House amendment adopts a provision contained in the Senate amendment indicating that a waiver of the right to convert a case under section 706(a) is unenforceable. The explicit reference in title 11 forbidding the waiver of certain rights is not intended to imply that other rights, such as the right to file a voluntary bankruptcy case under section 301, may be waived.

Section 706 of the House amendment adopts a similar provision contained in H.R. 8200 as passed by the House. Competing proposals contained in section 706(c) and section 706(d) of the Senate amendment are rejected.

SENATE REPORT NO. 95–989

Subsection (a) of this section gives the debtor the one-time absolute right of conversion of a liquidation case to a reorganization or individual repayment plan case. If the case has already once been converted from chapter 11 or 13 to chapter 7, then the debtor does not have that right. The policy of the provision is that the debtor should always be given the opportunity to repay his debts, and a waiver of the right to convert a case is unenforceable.

Subsection (b) permits the court, on request of a party in interest and after notice and a hearing, to convert the case to chapter 11 at any time. The decision whether to convert is left in the sound discretion of the court, based on what will most inure to the benefit of all parties in interest.

Subsection (c) is part of the prohibition against involuntary chapter 13 cases, and prohibits the court from converting a case to chapter 13 without the debtor's consent.

Subsection (d) reinforces section 109 by prohibiting conversion to a chapter unless the debtor is eligible to be a debtor under that chapter.

§ 707. Dismissal of a case or conversion to a case under chapter 11 or 13

(a) The court may dismiss a case under this chapter only after notice and a hearing and only for cause, including—

(1) unreasonable delay by the debtor that is prejudicial to creditors;

(2) nonpayment of any fees or charges required under chapter 123 of title 28; and

(3) failure of the debtor in a voluntary case to file, within fifteen days or such additional time as the court may allow after the filing of the petition commencing such case, the information required by paragraph (1) of section 521, but only on a motion by the United States trustee.

(b)(1) After notice and a hearing, the court, on its own motion or on a motion by the United States trustee, trustee (or bankruptcy administrator, if any), or any party in interest, may dismiss a case filed by an individual debtor under this chapter whose debts are primarily consumer debts, or, with the debtor's consent, convert such a case to a case under chapter 11 or 13 of this title, if it finds that the granting of relief would be an abuse of the provisions of this chapter. In making a determination whether to dismiss a case under this section, the court may not take into consideration whether a debtor has made, or continues to make, charitable contributions (that meet the definition of "charitable contribution" under section 548(d)(3)) to any qualified religious or charitable entity or organization (as that term is defined in section 548(d)(4)).

(2)(A)(i) In considering under paragraph (1) whether the granting of relief would be an abuse of the provisions of this chapter, the court shall presume abuse exists if the debtor's current monthly income reduced by the amounts determined under clauses (ii), (iii), and (iv), and multiplied by 60 is not less than the lesser of—

(I) 25 percent of the debtor's nonpriority unsecured claims in the case, or $6,000, whichever is greater; or

(II) $10,000.

(ii)(I) The debtor's monthly expenses shall be the debtor's applicable monthly expense amounts specified under the National Standards and Local Standards, and the debtor's actual monthly expenses for the categories specified as Other Necessary Expenses issued by the Internal Revenue Service for the area in which the debtor resides, as in effect on the date of the order for relief, for the debtor, the dependents of the debtor, and the spouse of the debtor in a joint case, if the spouse is not otherwise a dependent.

Such expenses shall include reasonably necessary health insurance, disability insurance, and health savings account expenses for the debtor, the spouse of the debtor, or the dependents of the debtor. Notwithstanding any other provision of this clause, the monthly expenses of the debtor shall not include any payments for debts. In addition, the debtor's monthly expenses shall include the debtor's reasonably necessary expenses incurred to maintain the safety of the debtor and the family of the debtor from family violence as identified under section 309 of the Family Violence Prevention and Services Act,[1] or other applicable Federal law. The expenses included in the debtor's monthly expenses described in the preceding sentence shall be kept confidential by the court. In addition, if it is demonstrated that it is reasonable and necessary, the debtor's monthly expenses may also include an additional allowance for food and clothing of up to 5 percent of the food and clothing categories as specified by the National Standards issued by the Internal Revenue Service.

(II) In addition, the debtor's monthly expenses may include, if applicable, the continuation of actual expenses paid by the debtor that are reasonable and necessary for care and support of an elderly, chronically ill, or disabled household member or member of the debtor's immediate family (including parents, grandparents, siblings, children, and grandchildren of the debtor, the dependents of the debtor, and the spouse of the debtor in a joint case who is not a dependent) and who is unable to pay for such reasonable and necessary expenses.

(III) In addition, for a debtor eligible for chapter 13, the debtor's monthly expenses may include the actual administrative expenses of administering a chapter 13 plan for the district in which the debtor resides, up to an amount of 10 percent of the projected plan payments, as determined under schedules issued by the Executive Office for United States Trustees.

(IV) In addition, the debtor's monthly expenses may include the actual expenses for each dependent child less than 18 years of age, not to exceed $1,500 per year per child, to attend a private or public elementary or secondary school if the debtor provides documentation of such expenses and a detailed explanation of why such expenses are reasonable and necessary, and why such expenses are not already accounted for in the National Standards, Local Standards, or Other Necessary Expenses referred to in subclause (I).

(V) In addition, the debtor's monthly expenses may include an allowance for housing and utilities, in excess of the allowance specified by the Local Standards for housing and utilities issued by the Internal Revenue Service, based on the actual expenses for home energy costs if the debtor provides documentation of such actual expenses and demonstrates that such actual expenses are reasonable and necessary.

(iii) The debtor's average monthly payments on account of secured debts shall be calculated as the sum of—

(I) the total of all amounts scheduled as contractually due to secured creditors in each month of the 60 months following the date of the petition; and

(II) any additional payments to secured creditors necessary for the debtor, in filing a plan under chapter 13 of this title, to maintain possession of the debtor's primary residence, motor vehicle, or other property necessary for the support of the debtor and the debtor's dependents, that serves as collateral for secured debts;

divided by 60.

(iv) The debtor's expenses for payment of all priority claims (including priority child support and alimony claims) shall be calculated as the total amount of debts entitled to priority, divided by 60.

(B)(i) In any proceeding brought under this subsection, the presumption of abuse may only be rebutted by demonstrating special circumstances, such as a serious medical condition or a call or order to active duty in the Armed Forces, to the extent such special circumstances that justify additional expenses or adjustments of current monthly income for which there is no reasonable alternative.

(ii) In order to establish special circumstances, the debtor shall be required to itemize each additional expense or adjustment of income and to provide—

(I) documentation for such expense or adjustment to income; and

(II) a detailed explanation of the special circumstances that make such expenses or adjustment to income necessary and reasonable.

(iii) The debtor shall attest under oath to the accuracy of any information provided to demonstrate that additional expenses or adjustments to income are required.

(iv) The presumption of abuse may only be rebutted if the additional expenses or adjustments to income referred to in clause (i) cause the product of the debtor's current monthly income reduced by the amounts determined under clauses (ii), (iii), and (iv) of subparagraph (A) when multiplied by 60 to be less than the lesser of—

(I) 25 percent of the debtor's nonpriority unsecured claims, or $6,000, whichever is greater; or

(II) $10,000.

(C) As part of the schedule of current income and expenditures required under section 521, the debtor shall include a statement of the debtor's current monthly income, and the calculations that determine whether a presumption arises under subparagraph (A)(i), that show how each such amount is calculated.

(D) Subparagraphs (A) through (C) shall not apply, and the court may not dismiss or convert a case based on any form of means testing, if the debtor is a disabled veteran (as defined in section 3741(1) of title 38), and the indebtedness occurred primarily during a period during which he or she was—

(i) on active duty (as defined in section 101(d)(1) of title 10); or

(ii) performing a homeland defense activity (as defined in section 901(1) of title 32).

(3) In considering under paragraph (1) whether the granting of relief would be an abuse of the provisions of this chapter in a case in which the presumption in subparagraph (A)(i) of such paragraph does not arise or is rebutted, the court shall consider—

(A) whether the debtor filed the petition in bad faith; or

(B) the totality of the circumstances (including whether the debtor seeks to reject a personal services contract and the financial need for such rejection as sought by the debtor) of the debtor's financial situation demonstrates abuse.

(4)(A) The court, on its own initiative or on the motion of a party in interest, in accordance with the procedures described in rule 9011 of the Federal Rules of Bankruptcy Procedure, may order the attorney for the debtor to reimburse the trustee for all reasonable costs in prosecuting a motion filed under section 707(b), including reasonable attorneys' fees, if—

(i) a trustee files a motion for dismissal or conversion under this subsection; and

(ii) the court—

(I) grants such motion; and

(II) finds that the action of the attorney for the debtor in filing a case under this chapter violated rule 9011 of the Federal Rules of Bankruptcy Procedure.

(B) If the court finds that the attorney for the debtor violated rule 9011 of the Federal Rules of Bankruptcy Procedure, the court, on its own initiative or on the motion of a party in interest, in accordance with such procedures, may order—

(i) the assessment of an appropriate civil penalty against the attorney for the debtor; and

(ii) the payment of such civil penalty to the trustee, the United States trustee (or the bankruptcy administrator, if any).

(C) The signature of an attorney on a petition, pleading, or written motion shall constitute a certification that the attorney has—

(i) performed a reasonable investigation into the circumstances that gave rise to the petition, pleading, or written motion; and

(ii) determined that the petition, pleading, or written motion—

(I) is well grounded in fact; and

(II) is warranted by existing law or a good faith argument for the extension, modification, or reversal of existing law and does not constitute an abuse under paragraph (1).

(D) The signature of an attorney on the petition shall constitute a certification that the attorney has no knowledge after an inquiry that the information in the schedules filed with such petition is incorrect.

(5)(A) Except as provided in subparagraph (B) and subject to paragraph (6), the court, on its own initiative or on the motion of a party in interest, in accordance with the procedures described in rule 9011 of the Federal Rules of Bankruptcy Procedure, may award a debtor all reasonable costs (including reasonable attorneys' fees) in contesting a motion filed by a party in interest (other than a trustee or United States trustee (or bankruptcy administrator, if any)) under this subsection if—

(i) the court does not grant the motion; and

(ii) the court finds that—

(I) the position of the party that filed the motion violated rule 9011 of the Federal Rules of Bankruptcy Procedure; or

(II) the attorney (if any) who filed the motion did not comply with the requirements of clauses (i) and (ii) of paragraph (4)(C), and the motion was made solely for the purpose of coercing a debtor into waiving a right guaranteed to the debtor under this title.

(B) A small business that has a claim of an aggregate amount less than $1,000 shall not be subject to subparagraph (A)(ii)(I).

(C) For purposes of this paragraph—

(i) the term "small business" means an unincorporated business, partnership, corporation, association, or organization that—

(I) has fewer than 25 full-time employees as determined on the date on which the motion is filed; and

(II) is engaged in commercial or business activity; and

(ii) the number of employees of a wholly owned subsidiary of a corporation includes the employees of—

(I) a parent corporation; and

(II) any other subsidiary corporation of the parent corporation.

(6) Only the judge or United States trustee (or bankruptcy administrator, if any) may file a motion under section 707(b), if the current monthly income of the debtor, or in a joint case, the debtor and the debtor's spouse, as of the date of the order for relief, when multiplied by 12, is equal to or less than—

(A) in the case of a debtor in a household of 1 person, the median family income of the applicable State for 1 earner;

(B) in the case of a debtor in a household of 2, 3, or 4 individuals, the highest median family income of the applicable State for a family of the same number or fewer individuals; or

(C) in the case of a debtor in a household exceeding 4 individuals, the highest median family income of the applicable State for a family of 4 or fewer individuals, plus $525 per month for each individual in excess of 4.

(7)(A) No judge, United States trustee (or bankruptcy administrator, if any), trustee, or other party in interest may file a motion under paragraph (2) if the current monthly income of the debtor, including a veteran (as that term is defined in section 101 of title 38), and the debtor's spouse combined, as of the date of the order for relief when multiplied by 12, is equal to or less than—

(i) in the case of a debtor in a household of 1 person, the median family income of the applicable State for 1 earner;

(ii) in the case of a debtor in a household of 2, 3, or 4 individuals, the highest median family income of the applicable State for a family of the same number or fewer individuals; or

(iii) in the case of a debtor in a household exceeding 4 individuals, the highest median family income of the applicable State for a family of 4 or fewer individuals, plus $525 per month for each individual in excess of 4.

(B) In a case that is not a joint case, current monthly income of the debtor's spouse shall not be considered for purposes of subparagraph (A) if—

(i)(I) the debtor and the debtor's spouse are separated under applicable nonbankruptcy law; or

(II) the debtor and the debtor's spouse are living separate and apart, other than for the purpose of evading subparagraph (A); and

(ii) the debtor files a statement under penalty of perjury—

(I) specifying that the debtor meets the requirement of subclause (I) or (II) of clause (i); and

(II) disclosing the aggregate, or best estimate of the aggregate, amount of any cash or money payments received from the debtor's spouse attributed to the debtor's current monthly income.

(c)(1) In this subsection—

(A) the term "crime of violence" has the meaning given such term in section 16 of title 18; and

(B) the term "drug trafficking crime" has the meaning given such term in section 924(c)(2) of title 18.

(2) Except as provided in paragraph (3), after notice and a hearing, the court, on a motion by the victim of a crime of violence or a drug trafficking crime, may when it is in the best interest of the victim dismiss a voluntary case filed under this chapter by a debtor who is an individual if such individual was convicted of such crime.

(3) The court may not dismiss a case under paragraph (2) if the debtor establishes by a preponderance of the evidence that the filing of a case under this chapter is necessary to satisfy a claim for a domestic support obligation.

HISTORICAL AND REVISION NOTES

LEGISLATIVE STATEMENTS

Section 707 of the House amendment indicates that the court may dismiss a case only after notice and a hearing.

SENATE REPORT NO. 95–989

This section authorizes the court to dismiss a liquidation case only for cause, such as unreasonable delay by the debtor that is prejudicial to creditors or nonpayment of any fees and charges required under chapter 123 [§1911 et seq.] of title 28. These causes are not exhaustive, but merely illustrative. The section does not contemplate, however, that the ability of the debtor to repay his debts in whole or in part constitutes adequate cause for dismissal. To permit dismissal on that ground would be to enact a non-uniform mandatory chapter 13, in lieu of the remedy of bankruptcy.

Section 309 of the Family Violence Prevention and Services Act, referred to in subsec. (b)(2)(A)(ii)(I), was redesignated section 320 of the Act by Pub. L. 108–36, title IV, §415(5), June 25, 2003, 117 Stat. 830, and is classified to section 10421 of Title 42, The Public Health and Welfare.

The Federal Rules of Bankruptcy Procedure, referred to in subsec. (b)(4)(A), (B), (5)(A), are set out in the Appendix to this title.

AMENDMENTS

2005—Pub. L. 109–8, §102(a)(1), substituted "Dismissal of a case or conversion to a case under chapter 11 or 13" for "Dismissal" in section catchline.

(1), substituted "trustee (or bankruptcy administrator, if any), or" for "but not at the request or suggestion of" and "an abuse" for "a substantial abuse", inserted ", or, with the debtor's consent, convert such a case to a case under chapter 11 or 13 of this title," after "consumer debts", struck out "There shall be a presumption in favor of granting the relief requested by the debtor." before "In making", and added pars. (2) to (7).

Subsec. (c). Pub. L. 109–8, §102(f), added subsec. (c).

1998—Subsec. (b). Pub. L. 105–183 inserted at end "In making a determination whether to dismiss a case under this section, the court may not take into consideration whether a debtor has made, or continues to make, charitable contributions (that meet the definition of 'charitable contribution' under section 548(d)(3)) to any qualified religious or charitable entity or organization (as that term is defined in section 548(d)(4))."

1986—Subsec. (a)(3). Pub. L. 99–554, §219(a), added par. (3).

Subsec. (b). Pub. L. 99–554, §219(b), substituted "motion or on a motion by the United States trustee, but" for "motion and".

1984—Pub. L. 98–353 designated existing provisions as subsec. (a) and in pars. (1) and (2) substituted "or" for "and", and added subsec. (b).

ARGUMENT

I. The Dudleys Do Not Address The Vast Majority Of The Statutory And Policy Reasons In The United States Trustee's Opening Brief That Establish This Order Is Final.

The United States Trustee's opening brief detailed at least four statutory and rule-based reasons why orders denying relief under section 707(b) are final.

- The statutory bases for such motions are limited. See 11 U.S.C. § 707(b);
- Section 704(b) provides short deadlines for identifying and moving to dismiss presumptively abusive cases. 11 U.S.C. § 704(b);
- Rule 1017(e) provides a sixty day deadline for filing motions under section 707(b)(3). Fed. R. Bankr. P. 1017(e); and
- The text of section 158(a) of title 28, which applies specifically to bankruptcy appeals and allows appeals from "final judgments, orders, and decrees," is more broadly worded than section 1291, which permits appeals from "final judgments" of the district courts. Compare 28 U.S.C. § 158(a) with 28 U.S.C. § 1291.

United States Trustee's opening brief at 13, 16, 18-22.

The brief included at least six additional policy based reasons such orders are final:

- Immediate review would conserve the limited resources of the bankruptcy court by preventing unnecessary litigation in abusive cases;
- Immediate review would benefit debtors by permitting the dismissal of abusive cases before the liquidation of estate assets;
- Immediate review would permit creditors to seek recourse outside of bankruptcy sooner in abusive cases and with great probability of success;
- Immediate review would save the trustee the effort of administering the estate unnecessarily in abusive cases;
- Immediate review would prevent the filing of multiple appeals to ensure appellate review by eliminating confusion as to the appealable order; and
- Finality is interpreted flexibly and pragmatically in the bankruptcy context. A.H. Robbins Co. v. Piccinin, 788 F.2d 994, 1009 (4th Cir. 1986).

United States Trustee's opening brief at 18-20, 23-26.

Finally, the United States Trustee's brief distinguished section 707(b) orders from denials of motions to dismiss under section 1112(b) on at least four bases.

- Section 1112(b) includes a non-exclusive list of circumstances constituting cause for dismissal. 11 U.S.C. § 1112(b);
- There are no statutory or rule-based deadlines for such motions;
- Immediate review of section 1112(b) orders might disrupt the reorganization process; and
- Section 707(b) determines a claim against the debtor – the abuse claim.

United States Trustee's opening brief at 14-17.

The Dudleys' brief does not respond to the vast majority of the United States Trustee's arguments.[1] The Dudleys' brief concedes that the concept of finality is flexible in the bankruptcy context, but ignores the implications here. Appellees' brief at 5. And while the Dudleys vigorously assert that the order is interlocutory, they do not explain when an order denying section 707(b) relief must be appealed. Many of the arguments for which the Dudleys had no response have convinced the [1] Although the Dudleys assert that a few of the policy considerations are not relevant in this case, they do not argue that would be true in most cases. Appellees' brief at 7-9. That is because Bankruptcy Rule 4004(c)(1)(D) precludes the entry of a discharge before the abuse issue has been completely resolved on appeal. Fed. R. Bankr. P. 4004(c)(1)(D).

other circuits that orders denying section 707(b) orders were final and merited immediate review. See, e.g., Morse v. Rudler (In re Rudler), 576 F.3d 37, 43-44 (1st Cir. 2009); Ross-Tousey v. Neary (In re Ross-Tousey), 549 F.3d 1148, 1152-53 (7th Cir. 2008).

II. The Dudleys' Arguments Lack Merit.

A. The Dudleys' analysis ignores unanimous circuit precedent on the finality of orders denying relief under section 707(b)(1), (2) & (3) in favor of decisions involving the finality of other types of orders.

The Dudleys' analysis is flawed because it requires this Court to disregard the unanimous circuit precedent on the precise issue before the Court and rely instead on decisions involving other types of orders. The sole issue on appeal is whether bankruptcy court orders overruling actions by the United States Trustee to dismiss chapter 7 cases under section 707(b)(1), (2) & (3) are final and immediately appealable. The First and Seventh Circuits have addressed this precise issue and concluded that they are. Rudler, 576 F.3d at 43-44; Ross-Tousey, 549 F.3d at 1152-53. In addition, the Eighth Circuit and the Third Circuit held that orders denying relief under section 707(b) were final even under the predecessor version of section 707(b), which had no statutory deadlines.[2] Stuart v.

[2] Prior to the 2005 Act, section 707(b) had no subparts. In the 2005 Act, Congress redesignated section 707(b) as section 707(b)(1) and added subparts (b)(2) - (b)(7). Compare 11 U.S.C. § 707(b)(2006) with 11 U.S.C. § 707(b)(2004).

Koch (In re Koch), 109 F.3d 1285, 1288 (8th Cir. 1997); In re Christian, 804 F.2d 46, 47-48 (3d Cir. 1986). And the Fifth Circuit has treated such orders as final. In re Cortez, 457 F.3d 448, 453-54 (5th Cir. 2006) (affirming district court's reversal of bankruptcy court's order denying United States Trustee's motion to dismiss under section 707(b)).

The Dudleys ask this Court to reject this directly relevant circuit precedent. But with one exception, they cite only decisions concerning the finality of orders denying motions to dismiss under separate and unrelated provisions of the Bankruptcy Code. Appellees' brief at 5-7. Based on those cases, the Dudleys argue categorically that all orders denying motions to dismiss are interlocutory. But none of those cases are persuasive authority regarding the issue in this appeal.

The first, Culver v. Molinario, involved an order denying the debtor's motion to dismiss his own bankruptcy case, but inviting the debtor to renew his motion at a later time. No. 94-1974, 1995 WL 570437, at *1 (4th Cir. Sept. 28, 1995) (unpublished). That order was not final because it did not conclusively resolve a discrete dispute; the debtor could ask the court to consider the issue again. See United States Trustee's opening brief at 17-18 n.11.

The 2005 Act also added statutory deadlines for identifying and bringing motions to dismiss under section 707(b)(2). 11 U.S.C. § 704(b).

The second, Barben v. Donovan (In re Donovan), involved a motion to dismiss under the predecessor version of section 707(b). 532 F.3d 1134, 1136 (11th Cir. 2008). The Donovan decision has not been followed by any other circuit court and was criticized in Rudler. 576 F.3d at 43. Further, it is not clear what status Donovan holds even within the Eleventh Circuit. That court, sitting en banc, subsequently decided a case over which it appeared to lack jurisdiction under Donovan's narrow interpretation of finality, even though the United States expressly raised the jurisdictional issue and cited the Donovan decision.[3] See En Banc Brief for the United States as Amicus Curiae Supporting Appellee at 9, Trusted Net Media Holdings, LLC v. Morrison Agency, Inc. (In re Trusted Net Media Holdings, LLC), 550 F.3d 1035 (11th Cir. 2008). At a minimum, the en banc decision shows that when, as here, there is an important question of law to be decided, overly restrictive finality jurisprudence should not bar its resolution.

Finally, the Dudleys cite the concurring opinion in a Third Circuit decision in which the panel held that an order denying a motion to dismiss under 11 U.S.C. § 1112(b) was final. In re Am. Capital Equip., LLC, 296 F. App'x 270, 273 n.1 (3d Cir. 2008). The concurrence opined that orders denying motions to dismiss under section 1112(b) were interlocutory. Id. at 275. But section 1112(b) orders lack the finality of the section 707(b) order here because section 1112(b) motions can be, and often are, brought multiple times during the chapter 11 case. See United States Trustee's opening brief at 14-16.

The Dudleys' brief ignores the significant distinctions identified in the United States Trustee's opening brief between the orders they cited and the order on appeal here. And it fails to address the fact that the Seventh Circuit held that orders denying relief under section 707(b) are final, even though it had held previously that orders denying a motion for voluntary dismissal and a motion to dismiss under section 1112(b) were interlocutory. Compare Ross-Tousey, 549 F.3d at 1152-53 with In re Vlasek, 325 F.3d 955, 960-61 (7th Cir. 2003) and Fruehauf Corp. v. Jartran, Inc. (In re Jartran, Inc.), 866 F.2d 859, 864 (7th Cir. 1989). Taken together, these decisions establish that section 707(b) orders are fundamentally different in character and therefore, final.[4]

The Seventh Circuit expressly acknowledged that "normally a denial of a motion to dismiss is not an appealable final order." Ross-Tousey, 549 F.3d at 1152. But that court and the others identified reasons why section 707(b) orders are final nonetheless. An order denying a section 707(b) motion finally determines the United States Trustee's claim of abuse of chapter 7 against the debtor. That issue will not be revisited in the bankruptcy case absent a reversal of the order on appeal. See United States Trustee's opening brief at 21-22. Both the post-2005 Act decisions – Rudler and Ross-Tousey – rely on this practical reality. See Rudler, 576 F.3d at 44; Ross-Tousey, 549 F.3d at 1153. And that sets apart orders denying relief under section 707(b) and makes them more final than orders denying motions to dismiss under other Code sections.

[4] The Dudleys' reliance on Promenade Nat'l Bank v. Phillips (In re Phillips), 844 F.2d 230 (5th Cir. 1988) is similarly misplaced. To the contrary, the Fifth Circuit's decisions in Cortez and Phillips lend further support to the idea that section 707(b) orders are more final than other orders denying motions to dismiss. Compare Cortez, 457 F.3d at 453-54 (impliedly finding that an order dismissing a 707(b) motion was final) to Phillips, 844 F.2d 230, 231, 235-36 (holding that order denying motion to dismiss under 11 U.S.C. § 109(g) is interlocutory).

Orders denying section 707(b) relief warrant immediate review as a practical matter because Congress plainly envisioned that the issue of whether the case was abusive under section 707(b) would be fully resolved early in the case. The statutory and rule-based deadlines for bringing section 707(b) motions, as well as Bankruptcy Rule 4004(c)(1)(D)'s prohibition against the entry of a discharge while a section 707(b) motion is pending demonstrate that intent. 11 U.S.C. § 704(b); Fed. R. Bankr. P. 1017(e), 4004(c)(1)(D).

In Ransom v. FIA Card Services, the Supreme Court just explained that the purpose of section 707 is to ensure debtors pay the most they can. Ransom v. FIA

Card Servs., N.A., No. 09-907, __ U.S. __, 2011 WL 66438, at *3 (Jan. 11, 2011). The bankruptcy court's denial here of the United States motion to dismiss due to the happenstance that the Dudleys initially filed their case under chapter 13, strays from that purpose.[5] This case should be remanded so the district court can decide whether the Dudleys' case is abusive.

B. The differences between this case and Rudler, Ross-Tousey, Koch and Christian have nothing to do with finality, but highlight the reasons why this case should be decided in favor of finality.

The Dudleys argue that this Court should not follow Rudler, Ross-Tousey, Koch, and Christian because the reasoning of those cases does not apply here due to the unusual procedural posture of this case. Appellees' brief at 7-11. The Dudleys cite several events that have occurred in this case, but presumably had not occurred in the others when the section 707(b) order was reviewed, including the United States Trustee's objection to the debtors' discharge, the entry of the discharge, and the appeal from the discharge order. Id. But all of the cited events occurred well after the entry of the section 707(b) order in this case. So they could not have had any effect on the finality of that order.[6]

[5] The bankruptcy court's conclusion that section 707(b) only applies in cases that are originally commenced under chapter 7 formed the basis for the denial. In re Dudley, 405 B.R. 790, 801 (Bankr. W.D. Va. 2009). The Dudleys began their case under chapter 13 and then converted it to chapter 7.

Just like the similar orders entered in Rudler, Ross-Tousey, Koch and Christian, the section 707(b) order here was final when it was entered. Subsequent events that occurred much later in the case cannot, and did not, change that.

The unnecessary litigation in this case flowing from the dismissal of the United States Trustee's appeal demonstrates exactly why orders denying relief under section 707(b) are final and immediately reviewable. In Rudler, Ross-Tousey, Koch, and Christian, the bankruptcy courts' orders denying relief under section 707(b) were immediately reviewed on appeal, meaning that the abuse issue could be reviewed and resolved before the debtors' debts were discharged.

That was not the case here. The bankruptcy judge entered the Dudleys' discharge over the United States Trustee's objection that Bankruptcy Rule 4004(c)(1)(D) precluded the entry of discharge while his motion for relief under section 707(b) was still pending on appeal. Fed. R. Bankr. P. 4004(c)(1)(D) (precluding entry of discharge while section 707(b) motion is "pending").

Although the United States Trustee sought immediate appeal of the order

[6] Nor did they enter into the district court's finality analysis because they occurred after the district court dismissed the appeal.

denying relief under Section 707(b), his appeal was dismissed. McDow v. Dudley, 428 B.R. 686 (W.D. Va. 2010). The bankruptcy court then entered the Dudleys' discharges even though the section 707(b) order had not been reviewed. See Joint Appendix at 17 (Docket Entry No. 127).

Those actions precipitated the United States Trustee's second appeal to the district court, styled McDow v. Dudley, No. 7:10-cv-00416-sgw (W.D. Va.). The United States Trustee contends the discharge order should be reversed because the bankruptcy court erred by granting the Dudleys' discharge while the United States Trustee's appeal of the 707(b) order was "pending" before this Court. See Fed. R. Bankr. P. 4004(c)(1)(D). Bankruptcy Rule 4004(c)(1)(D) is clear – a discharge should not be entered while a section 707(b) dispute is pending. The reason for this is obvious. If the case merits dismissal as an abuse, then a discharge would violate the Code and Congressional intent, and it would deny creditors any ability to recover outside of bankruptcy.

The bankruptcy court's decision to enter the discharge order is further undermined by the Griggs doctrine, and the Ninth Circuit's application of that doctrine in Padilla. Griggs v. Provident Consumer Discount Co., 459 U.S. 56 (1982); Neary v. Padilla (In re Padilla), 222 F.3d 1184 (9th Cir. 2000). Griggs teaches that lower courts are to be respectful when issues are on appeal. See Griggs, 459 U.S. at 58 ("The filing of a notice of appeal . . . confers jurisdiction on the court of appeals and divests the district court of its control over those aspects of the case involved in the appeal."). And Padilla held that the entry of discharge and the closure of a bankruptcy case, which is far more conclusive than a discharge order, did not preclude appellate review of a section 707 appeal. Padilla, 222 F.3d at 1189-90.

But for the entry of discharge in violation of Rule 4004(c)(1)(D) and the second appeal it precipitated, this case is exactly like Christian, Koch, Rudler and Ross-Tousey. And this Court should follow the holdings of the Third, Eighth, First and Seventh Circuits in those cases.

C. This appeal is not moot.

If the United States Trustee wins this appeal, the debtors' case could be dismissed. Therefore, this appeal is not moot. The Dudleys assert that this appeal is moot because the section 707(b) order can be more efficiently reviewed in connection with the United States Trustee's appeal of the bankruptcy court's discharge order. Appellees' brief at 12. But neither the Dudleys' premise nor their conclusion is true.

The burden of demonstrating mootness rests on the party asserting mootness and it is a heavy one. Los Angeles County v. Davis, 440 U.S. 625, 631 (1979).

The pendency of a parallel action does not make an appeal moot. Connectu LLC v. Zuckerberg, 522 F.3d 82, 89 (1st Cir. 2008) ("[A]n action is not automatically rendered moot by the mere existence of a similar pending action.").

A case is moot "when the issues presented are no longer 'live' or the parties lack a legally cognizable interest in the outcome." Powell v. McCormack, 395 U.S. 486, 496 (1969); see also DeFunis v. Odegaard, 416 U.S. 312, 316 (1974) (stating that federal courts are "without power to decide questions that cannot affect the rights of litigants in the case before them."). Likewise, changes in circumstances that prevent the court from granting any meaningful relief can moot an appeal. See United States v. Munsingwear, Inc., 340 U.S. 36 (1950). That is not the case here. The United States Trustee retains an interest in his appeal of the section 707(b) order because he believes that order was erroneous and reversal of that order could lead to the dismissal of the Dudleys' case for abuse.

Dismissal of the Dudleys' case would have a number of legal effects. First, their case would be dismissed. Second, the Dudleys would be found to be abusive debtors. That might lead the bankruptcy court in this case to enter a refiling bar under 11 U.S.C. § 349(a) (entitled "Effect of Dismissal"). See In re Mitchell, 357 B.R. 142, 157-58 (C.D. Cal. 2006) (granting refiling bar under section 349(a) in case dismissed under section 707(b)); In re Siegenberg, No. 06-16263, 2007 WL 6371956, at *7-8 (C.D. Cal. July 30, 2007) (same). See also In re Jolly, 143 B.R. 383, 387 (E.D. Va. 1992), aff'd, 45 F.3d 426 (4th Cir. 1994) (debtor may be prejudiced from filing subsequent bankruptcy petitions for cause under section 349(a)). The other subsections of section 349 list additional effects of dismissal. 11 U.S.C. § 349.

And significantly, a "dismiss[al]" in this case under section 707(b) will reduce the automatic stay protection the Dudleys can receive if they refile a chapter 7 case within a year, as many debtors do. 11 U.S.C. § 362(c)(3)(A) - (C) (limiting the automatic stay when the debtor has had a case dismissed under section 707(b) within the past year).[7]

Given all this, the United States Trustee's appeal is not moot. See Church of Scientology of California v. United States, 506 U.S. 9, 12-13 (1992) (holding that the availability of a remedy prevented case from being moot). There is a live dispute between the parties about the propriety of dismissal and this Court's decision in this appeal will help resolve it.

[7] The United States Trustee believes that the discharge order should be reversed on appeal by the district court. But regardless of how the appeal of the discharge order ultimately is resolved, the United States Trustee retains a significant interest in the resolution of this appeal because dismissal has implications for this case - and beyond.

III. Deciding This Recurring Finality Issue Now Will Benefit Everyone Who Participates In Bankruptcy Cases Within This Circuit.

The finality issue before this Court is settled law in the First, Third, Seventh, Eighth, and Eleventh circuits, and perhaps within the Fifth. Lower courts and litigants in those circuits no longer have to address finality each time a United States Trustee appeals an adverse section 707(b) order. Likewise, the lower courts and the parties within this circuit will no longer have to address finality after this Court decides the issue here. The finality issue has been fully briefed and is ripe for decision in this appeal. Given that relief can be granted on remand – the Dudleys' case can be dismissed – there are good reasons for deciding this question of law now.

This appeal has practical ramifications for bankruptcy courts, the United States Trustee, and debtors far beyond this case. Its resolution will provide clarity as to when the United States Trustees must file notice of appeals of orders denying relief under section 707(b). Without such clarity, in each case within this Circuit where a bankruptcy judge denies section 707(b) relief, the United States Trustee will have to file appeals from 1) the 707(b) order; 2) the discharge order; and 3) other potentially final orders, such as the case closing order. That is because confusion now exists within this Circuit about when the 707(b) order can be appealed.

Without a clear answer as to finality, some debtors likely will move to dismiss appeals of orders denying relief under section 707(b) as interlocutory based on the district court's holding. Others may assume such orders are final based on Rudler, Ross-Tousey, Christian and Koch and move to dismiss appeals of subsequent orders as untimely as to the 707(b) order. Fed. R. Bankr. P. 8002(a). Unless the United States Trustee appeals from the proper order, he may unintentionally forfeit his right to appellate review. See Dick v. Lim (In re Dick), No. 98-2089, 1999 WL 617966, at *1-2 (6th Cir. Aug. 12, 1999) (deadline for filing appeal is jurisdictional). By deciding this appeal, this Court can help prevent the lower courts, the Government, and debtors from having to expend limited resources on unnecessary appeals.

Deciding this issue will also help resolve more quickly the interpretive issues that surround section 707(b)(1) - (3). The 2005 Act amendments to section 707(b) have spawned a number of hotly-disputed, interpretative questions. Just last week, the Supreme Court decided one – the meaning of the word "applicable" in section 707(b)(2)(A)(ii)(I). Ransom, 2011 WL 66438. But other important interpretive questions remain, including the issue concerning the applicability of section 707(b) to converted cases that the district court in this case declined to adjudicate. Were this Court to address the finality question before this Court now and find the order on appeal to be final, it would expedite the resolution of these questions of law in this case and others.

CONCLUSION

For the foregoing reasons, the United States Trustee requests that the district court's dismissal of his appeal be reversed and the appeal be reinstated in the district court.

STATEMENT OF ISSUES PRESENTED

1. As a matter of law, did the bankruptcy court properly deny the debtor's motion to extend time to file an appeal finding no excusable neglect?

2. Did the bankruptcy court abuse its discretion by denying the debtor's motion to extend time to file a notice of appeal?

STATEMENT OF APPELLATE JURISDICTION

The United States Bankruptcy Court for the District of Rhode Island had jurisdiction under 28 U.S.C. §§ 157(b) and 1334(a) over the bankruptcy case initiated on October 16, 2005, by Charles Clifton Earle, IV. This appeal is taken from a final order of the bankruptcy court entered on February 13, 2008, denying Mr. Earle's motion to reconsider the court's January 10, 2008, order denying Mr. Earle's motion to extend time to file an appeal. This Panel has jurisdiction over this appeal of the January 10, 2008, and February 13, 2008, orders under 28 U.S.C. § 158(a) and (b)(1).

This Panel lacks jurisdiction to review all other orders entered below, including but not limited to the September 7, 2007, order granting the United States Trustee's motion for a default judgment, the September 21, 2007, order denying Mr. Earle's chapter 7 discharge, and the November 5, 2007, orders denying reconsideration of the September 7, 2007, and September 21, 2007 orders.

STANDARD OF REVIEW

Reviewing courts apply a clearly erroneous standard to a bankruptcy court's findings of fact and a de novo standard to conclusions of law. See TI Fed. Credit Union v. DelBonis, 72 F.3d 921, 928 (1st Cir. 1995); Western Auto Supply Co. v. Savage Arms, Inc. (In re Savage Indus., Inc.), 43 F.3d 714, 719-20 n.8 (1st Cir. 1994). Under Fed. R. Bankr. P. 8013, a bankruptcy court's findings of fact "shall not be set aside unless clearly erroneous, and due regard shall be given to the opportunity of the bankruptcy court to judge the credibility of the witnesses."

A bankruptcy court's denial of a motion to extend time to file a notice of appeal is reviewed for abuse of discretion. See Balzotti v. RAD Invs., LLC (In re Shepherds Hill Dev. Co., LLC), 316 B.R. 406, 413 (B.A.P. 1st Cir. 2004). The question of whether "excusable neglect" has been shown for purposes of Federal Rule of Bankruptcy Procedure 8002(c)(2) is a question of law, which is subject to de novo review. Id. Orders denying reconsideration are reviewed for manifest abuse of discretion. See In re Augustin, 383 B.R. 359, 361 (D. Mass. 2008); Aguiar v. Interbay Funding, LLC (In re Aguiar), 311 B.R. 129, 132 (B.A.P. 1st Cir. 2004) (citations omitted).

STATEMENT OF THE CASE

Mr. Earle filed for protection under the Bankruptcy Code on October 16, 2005. On April 27, 2006, the United States Trustee filed a complaint to deny Mr. Earle's discharge under 11 U.S.C. §§ 727(a)(3), (a)(4) and (a)(5). Subsequently, Mr. Earle repeatedly failed to comply with discovery orders, so the United States Trustee moved for a default judgment. The bankruptcy court granted the motion for default judgment on September 7, 2007, and entered a final order denying Mr. Earle's discharge on September 21, 2007.

Rather than appeal the final order denying his discharge, Mr. Earle filed an untimely motion to reconsider, which the bankruptcy court denied on November 5, 2007. Thirty days later, Mr. Earle filed a motion to extend time to file an appeal of the reconsideration order. The bankruptcy court denied the motion because Mr. Earle failed to show the "excusable neglect" required for a late-filed motion under Fed. R. Bankr. P. 8002(c)(2). Mr. Earle filed a timely motion for reconsideration, which the bankruptcy court also denied. Mr. Earle then filed a notice of appeal of the order denying his motion to extend the time to file an appeal and the order denying his motion to reconsider that order.

STATEMENT OF FACTS

I. Factual Background

At the time he filed his bankruptcy petition Mr. Earle was a thirty eight year old college educated computer programmer. App. 88. He was the sole owner of World Mail Direct, Inc., a company that offered web hosting services for people who wanted to send bulk e-mail and for which he kept no corporate records. App. 107-109. Mr. Earle also operated a website, "024store.com" that sold a topical pain reliever. App. 107. In the years before his filing Mr. Earle also engaged in day trading in the stock market, built and sold computers, and facilitated web based commercial enterprises, all ventures for which he also kept no records. App. 96, 89, 88. Although Mr. Earle has earned income since at least 1996, he has never filed a federal or state tax return. App. 116.

Mr. Earle filed a skeletal petition under chapter 13 of the Bankruptcy Code on October 16, 2005.[1] Bankr. Case No. 05-15532, Docket No. 1. Thereafter, on October 28, 2005, Mr.

Earle converted his case to one under chapter 7 of the Code. On April 27, 2006, the United States Trustee initiated an adversary proceeding by filing a complaint to deny Mr. Earle's discharge under 11 U.S.C. §§ 727(a)(3) (concealing, destroying, or falsifying records), (a)(4) (knowingly making a false oath or account), and (a)(5) (failing to satisfactorily explain the loss of assets to meet liabilities). Adv. Pro. No. 06-01060, Docket No. 1. The bankruptcy court entered a scheduling order on July 12, 2006, setting the close of discovery for November 13, 2006. Adv. Pro. No. 06-01060, Docket No. 15. On November 20, 2006, Mr. Earle's counsel moved to withdraw from representation. Adv. Pro. No. 06-01060, Docket No. 22. On January 3, 2007, the bankruptcy court allowed Mr. Earle's counsel to withdraw. Adv. Pro. No. 06-01060, Docket No. 26. Discovery was further extended to January 12, 2007. Adv. Pro. No. 06-01060, Docket No. 19.

During the next eight months, Mr. Earle failed to comply with multiple orders to obtain counsel and comply with discovery. App. 20 (minutes of 1/24/07 hearing), 23 (minutes of 5/16/07 hearing); Adv. Pro. No. 06-01060, Docket Nos. 32, 35, 36, 50, 51, 53. On April 9, 2007, and again on July 5, 2007, the United States Trustee filed motions for default judgment against Mr. Earle, seeking denial of his discharge under 11 U.S.C. § 727(a)(6)(A) for failing to respond to discovery. Adv. Pro. No. 06-01060, Docket Nos. 34, 43. On August 15, 2007, Mr. Earle delivered two hundred pounds of documents to the United States Trustee. Appellant's brief at 24. At a hearing before the bankruptcy court on August 16, 2007, the United States Trustee argued that the documents proffered by Mr. Earle were disorganized and an insufficient response to the ordered discovery. App. 25 (minutes of 8/16/07 hearing). Mr. Earle agreed to take the documents back and organize them properly, and to supply amended responses and production by August 30, 2007. Id.

II. Procedural History

A. The Default Order

Mr. Earle did not supply further documents or answers to interrogatories, however, so on September 7, 2007, the bankruptcy court granted the United States Trustee's motion for default judgment (the "Default Order").[2] Adv. Pro. No. 06-01060, Docket No. 60. On September 17, 2007, Mr. Earle filed a timely motion to reconsider the Default Order.[3] Adv. Pro. No. 06-01060, Docket No. 64. The bankruptcy court entered an order on November 5, 2007, denying Mr. Earle's motion to reconsider the Default Order, finding that Mr. Earle had merely repeated arguments he had previously made, had not met his burden under Fed. R. Civ. P. 59(e), and had not acted in good faith. Adv. Pro. No. 06-01060, Docket No. 75.

B. The Discharge Denial Order

On September 21, 2007, the bankruptcy court entered an order denying Mr. Earle's discharge (the "Discharge Denial Order"). Adv. Pro. No. 06-01060, Docket No. 65. On the same date, the bankruptcy court entered a separate order granting judgment for the United States Trustee. Adv. Pro. No. 06-01060, Docket No. 66. Rather than appeal the Discharge Denial Order, on October 1, 2007, Mr. Earle filed a motion requesting an extension of the time to appeal pending the outcome of his September 17, 2007, motion to reconsider the Default

[2] The bankruptcy court entered the Default Order only. The bankruptcy court did not enter a separate order, as is required for final judgments under Fed. R. Civ. P. 58 (made applicable to bankruptcy proceedings by Fed. R. Bankr. P. 9021).

[3] Because the motion to reconsider was filed within ten days of the Default Order, the bankruptcy court treated it as a motion to alter or amend the judgment under Fed. R. Civ. P. 59(e). Adv. Pro. No. 06-01060, Docket No. 75.

Order. Adv. Pro. No. 06-01060, Docket No. 69. On October 15, 2007, the bankruptcy court denied Mr. Earle's motion for extension of time to appeal the Discharge Denial Order as moot, citing Fed. R. Bankr. P. 8002(b) and stating that the time for filing a notice of appeal would not begin to run "until the Court rules on the Defendant's pending Motion for Reconsideration" of the Default Order. Adv. Pro. No. 06-01060, Docket No. 73.

On October 11, 2007, twenty days after the entry of the Discharge Denial Order, Mr. Earle filed a motion to reconsider that order. Adv. Pro. No. 06-01060, Docket No. 72. On November 5, 2007, in the same order that denied reconsideration of the Default Order, the bankruptcy court denied the motion to reconsider the Discharge Denial Order.[4] Adv. Pro. No. 06-01060, Docket No. 77.

C. The Motion to Extend Time to Appeal

On December 5, 2007, thirty days after the entry of the order denying reconsideration of the Default Order and the Discharge Denial Order, Mr. Earle filed a motion to extend the time to file an appeal of that order citing excusable neglect under Fed. R. Bankr. P. 8002(c)(2). Adv. Pro. No. 06-01060, Docket No. 84. In his motion, Mr. Earle asserted that he "cannot attest one way or the other" as to when notice of the order denying reconsideration of the Discharge Denial Order was delivered to his home address because he was allegedly out of town for several days prior to November 19, 2007, the date he claimed he became aware of the order. Id. He also acknowledged that he did not closely monitor the docket for his case to see whether the bankruptcy court had ruled on his motion, allegedly based on a discussion with clerk's office personnel regarding internal dates for monitoring case status. Id. On January 10, 2008, after notice and a hearing, the bankruptcy court entered an order denying Mr. Earle's motion to extend time to file an appeal (the "Extension Denial Order"), finding that Mr. Earle had not met his burden to show excusable neglect under Pioneer Investment Services Co. v. Brunswick Associates, L.P., 507 U.S. 380 (1993). Adv. Pro. No. 06-01060, Docket No. 88.

On January 22, 2008, Mr. Earle filed a timely motion to reconsider the Extension Denial Order.[5] Adv. Pro. No. 06-01060, Docket No. 90. The United States Trustee filed an objection which pointed out that Mr. Earle's motion to reconsider recited many of the same facts and circumstances cited in his motion to extend time to appeal, made unsupported allegations, and relied on an inapplicable, unreported opinion from the District of Idaho. Adv. Pro. No. 06-01060, Docket No. 91. On February 13, 2008, the bankruptcy court denied the motion to reconsider the Extension Denial Order for the reasons stated in the United States Trustee's objection. Adv. Pro. No. 06-01060, Docket No. 92. Mr. Earle filed a timely notice of appeal from that order on February 25, 2008.[6] Adv. Pro. No. 06-01060, Docket No. 94.

[5] A notice of appeal or a motion to alter or amend the Extension Denial Order was due within ten days of the entry of the order. As the tenth day fell on Sunday, January 20, 2008, and the following day, January 21, 2008, was a federal holiday, the notice of appeal filed on January 22, 2008, was timely.

[6] Pursuant to Fed. R. Bankr. P. 8002(a), a notice of appeal from the Extension Denial Order was due on January 22, 2008. See Fed. R. Bankr. P. 8002(a). The filing of the motion to reconsider the Extension Denial Order on January 22, 2008, tolled the time for filing a notice of appeal until ten days after the entry of an order on the motion to reconsider. See Fed. R. Civ. P. 59(e) (made applicable to bankruptcy proceedings by Fed. R. Bankr. P. 9006(b)(2)). After the bankruptcy court denied reconsideration of the Extension Denial Order on February 13, 2008, Mr. Earle then had ten days to appeal both the Extension Denial Order and the order denying reconsideration. See id.. As a result, the notice of appeal filed on February 25, 2008, was timely.

SUMMARY OF ARGUMENT

Although Mr. Earle attempts to appeal all prior orders of the bankruptcy court, this Panel only has jurisdiction over the appeal of the Extension Denial Order and the order denying reconsideration of that order. All other issues raised by Mr. Earle are, at best, issues that could be raised on remand if the Panel reverses the Extension Denial Order.

As for the issue actually before this Panel, the bankruptcy court properly denied Mr. Earle's request to extend the time to file an appeal because Mr. Earle did not establish excusable neglect for his failure to file either a timely notice of appeal or a timely request to extend the appeal period. Nor did the bankruptcy court abuse its discretion in denying Mr. Earle's request to extend the period for appeal because, on the record before it, the court's decision was well supported.

ARGUMENT

I. The Extension Denial Order and the Order Denying its Reconsideration are the Only Orders Subject to This Appeal

Mr. Earle's brief reargues orders for which no timely notice of appeal was ever filed.[7] The timely filing of a notice of appeal is "mandatory and jurisdictional." Yamaha Motor Corp. v. Perry Hollow Mgmt. Co., Inc. (In re Perry Hollow Mgmt. Co., Inc.), 297 F.3d 34, 38 (1st Cir. 2002). If notice of appeal of a final order is not timely filed, a bankruptcy appellate

---

[7] Mr. Earle's Form 17 (Notice of Appeal) seeks review only of the "Order Denying Defendant's Motion to Reconsider" entered on February 13, 2008. In addition to Form 17, Mr. Earle filed a longer document also titled "Notice of Appeal," in which he sought review of the "order entered on 2/13/2008 denying defendant's motion to reconsider the 1/10/2008 order denying defendant's motion to extend time to file appeal" and "all prior orders . . . including but not limited to" the November 5, 2007, order, the Default Order, and the Discharge Denial Order.

panel does not have jurisdiction to review the order. Colomba v. Solomon (In re Colomba), 257 B.R. 368, 369 (B.A.P. 1st Cir. 2001).

As the underlying Extension Denial Order was a final appealable order, the order denying reconsideration is also final and appealable. See Vicenty v. Sandoval (In re Sandoval), 327 B.R. 493, 505 (B.A.P. 1st Cir. 2005) (citations omitted); Bradshaw v. I.R.S., (In re Bradshaw), 283 B.R. 814, 817 (B.A.P. 1st Cir. 2002); see also Fiffy v. Nickless (In re Fiffy), 293 B.R. 550, 554 (B.A.P. 1st Cir. 2003). The appeal period for all previous final orders entered by the bankruptcy court has expired, however, so this Panel's jurisdiction is limited to a review of the Extension Denial Order and the order reconsidering that order.[8] All other issues raised in Mr. Earle's brief are, at best, issues that could be raised on remand if the Panel reverses the Extension Denial Order.

II. Mr. Earle Did Not Establish That His Neglect Was Excusable

The central question presented by this appeal is whether the bankruptcy court correctly decided that Mr. Earle did not make an adequate showing of excusable neglect in his attempt to obtain an additional twenty days beyond the ten allowed to appeal the court's earlier decisions to deny reconsideration of the Default Order and the Discharge Denial Order.

The bankruptcy court entered the order denying the Default Order and Discharge Denial Order on November 5, 2007, yet Mr. Earle did not file an appeal of that order within the [8] The Discharge Denial Order was a final appealable order. See Aoki v. Atto Corp. (In re Aoki), 323 B.R. 803, 811 (B.A.P. 1st Cir. 2005). Mr. Earle did not file his motion to reconsider the Discharge Denial Order until twenty days after it was entered, after the denial of his discharge had become final and the appeal period had expired. Because a motion for reconsideration must be filed within ten days of the underlying order and that deadline may not be enlarged, post-judgment relief under Fed. R. Civ. P. 59(e) as to that order was not available to Mr. Earle, so the motion to reconsider the Discharge Denial Order did not toll the time for appeal. See Dugan. v. Wyvern Aviation Consulting (In re FlightTime Corp.), 302 B.R. 114, 118 (B.A.P. 1st Cir. 2003); Fed. R. Civ. P. 59(e); Fed. R. Bankr. P. 9023, 9006(b)(2).

ten days allowed by Fed. R. Bankr. P. 8002(a), nor did he request an extension of time for appeal within that ten-day period pursuant to Fed. R. Bankr. P. 8002(c)(2). Instead, Mr. Earle filed his motion to extend the deadline for appeal on December 5, 2007, exactly twenty days after the ten-day period to file a notice of appeal had expired. Thus, under Fed. R. Bankr. P. 8002(c)(2), Mr. Earle was required to make a showing of excusable neglect.

The United States Supreme Court in Pioneer Investment Services Co. v. Brunswick Associates, L.P., 507 U.S. 380 (1993) established a test for determining whether excusable neglect has been established for purposes of Fed. R. Bankr. P. 9006(b)(1). The factors to be considered include: (i) the length of the delay and its potential impact on judicial proceedings; (ii) the danger of prejudice; (iii) the movant's good faith; and (iv) the reason for the late filing, including a consideration of whether the circumstances were beyond the control of the late filer. See Pioneer, 507 U.S. at 395. The Supreme Court expressly stated in Pioneer that "inadvertence, ignorance of the rules, or mistakes construing the rules do not usually constitute 'excusable' neglect." Id. at 392.

Courts generally apply the Pioneer standard to analyze "excusable neglect" in other rules in which that term appears, including Fed. R. Bankr. P. 8002(c)(2). See Balzotti v. RAD Invs., LLC (In re Shepherds Hill Dev. Co., LLC), 316 B.R. 406, 415 (B.A.P. 1st Cir. 2004). The First Circuit has noted that the excusable neglect inquiry involves "a significant equitable component and must give due regard to the totality of relevant circumstances surrounding the movant's lapse." Bennett v. City of Holyoke, 362 F.3d 1, 5 (1st Cir. 2004). Nevertheless, the First Circuit stands with the majority of courts in holding that "[t]he four Pioneer factors do not carry equal weight; the excuse given for the late filing must have the greatest import. While prejudice, length of delay, and good faith might have more relevance in a closer case, the reason-for-delay factor will always be critical to the inquiry." Graphic Communications Int'l Union v. Quebecor Printing Providence, Inc., 270 F.3d 1, 5-6 (1st Cir. 2001) (internal citations and quotations omitted). As a result, "[w]hen a party's or counsel's misunderstanding of clear law . . . is the reason for the delay in filing the notice of appeal," the First Circuit continues "to uphold findings of 'no excusable neglect' where the [lower] court cited the absence of unique or extraordinary circumstances." Id. at 6 (citing Mirpuri v. ACT Mfg., Inc., 212 F.3d 624, 631 (1st Cir. 2000)).

When the factors set forth in Pioneer are applied here, Mr. Earle's neglect was not excusable. Even if the other three factors are presumed to favor Mr. Earle, his reasons for late filing constitute precisely the kind of inadvertence, ignorance, and mistake that "do not usually constitute 'excusable' neglect." Pioneer, 507 U.S. at 392. Mr. Earle has not cited any circumstance that is "unique" or "extraordinary" in explaining his neglect of the docket in his case; he simply chose not to monitor the docket or arrange to have his mail checked while he was out of town. Although he has suggested that the clerk's office might not have provided timely notice of entry of the order denying his motion to reconsider, Mr. Earle has acknowledged that he has no idea when the notice was actually delivered to his home address.

Mr. Earle's alleged reliance on the clerk's office and the mail system strains credulity. As a pro se litigant who has nevertheless managed to file a multitude of motions on the last day allowed pursuant to Fed. R. Bankr. P. 9006, Mr. Earle is not so unsophisticated as to believe that his rights turn on the timely delivery of the United States Mail. He is, moreover, a computer programmer and consultant, so any suggestion that he was unaware dockets could be monitored electronically is simply not credible. Even assuming that Mr. Earle's arguments are credible, the fact that he acknowledged receiving the Discharge Denial Order on November 19, 2007, yet waited to file his motion to extend time until December 5, 2007, militates against him.

In any event, Mr. Earle's "lack of notice" argument is unavailing even if true, as the First Circuit has held that "mere lack of notice does not constitute excusable neglect." Citibank N.A. v. Roanca Realty, Inc. (In re Roanca Realty, Inc.), 747 F.2d 816, 817 (1st Cir. 1984); see also In re Mayhew, 223 B.R. 849, 856 (D.R.I. 1998) ("Quite simply, the 'I didn't receive notice' defense doesn't work in federal court."); Balzotti v. RAD Invs., LLC (In re Shepherds Hill Dev. Co., LLC), 316 B.R. at 415 ("whether the appellant had notice of the order does not affect . . . the date on which the notice of appeal should have been filed"). In addition, Mr. Earle's failure to monitor the docket cannot be excused, as it is "an abecedarian rule of civil practice [that] parties to an ongoing case have an independent obligation to monitor all developments in the case and cannot rely on the clerk's office to do their homework for them." Witty v. Dukakis, 3 F.3d 517, 520 (1st Cir. 1993).

Courts in other jurisdictions also regularly hold that the alleged failure to receive notice of entry of an order is not excusable neglect given each party's duty to monitor the docket for their case. See, e.g., Kuhn v. Sulzer Orthopedics, Inc., 498 F.3d 365, 371-72 (6th Cir. 2007) (failure to monitor docket not excusable neglect); Delaney v. Alexander (In re Delaney), 29 F.3d 516, 518 (9th Cir. 1994) (no excusable neglect where clerk allegedly did not provide notice of entry of order); Silivanch v. Celebrity Cruises, Inc., 333 F.3d 355, 365-68 (2d Cir. 2003) (no excusable neglect where appellant relied on opposing counsel's erroneous calculation of the appeal period); In re Spiegel, Inc., 385 B.R. 35, 40 (S.D.N.Y. 2008) (failure to monitor docket precludes finding of excusable neglect where party allegedly did not receive order until after appeal period); Warrick v. Birdsell (In re Warrick), 278 B.R. 182, 187 (B.A.P. 9th Cir. 2002) (no excusable neglect where clerk allegedly failed to provide notice, as pro se litigant had duty to monitor the docket); In re Davenport, 342 B.R. 482, 500 (Bankr. S.D. Tex. 2006) (no excusable neglect where appellant had difficulty receiving notice but could have monitored the docket electronically); Investors & Lenders, Ltd. v. Field (In re Investors & Lenders, Ltd.), 169 B.R. 546, 551 (Bankr. D.N.J. 1994) (where party failed to monitor docket, no excusable neglect even though opposing party mailed order just before appeal period was to expire); Rozich v. Cruey (In re Cruey), 158 B.R. 66, 69-71 (Bankr. W.D. Va. 1993), aff'd 37 F.3d 1493 (4th Cir. 1994) (table) (denial of receipt of order does not rebut presumption created by clerk's office's certificate of mailing, so no excusable neglect shown). Mr. Earle has cited no case to the contrary in his brief.

In sum, Mr. Earle's conduct in failing to make arrangements to have his mail reviewed or to otherwise monitor the docket was certainly neglect, but it was not excusable neglect. The bankruptcy court's finding that Mr. Earle's neglect was not excusable is amply supported by the case law, the facts on the record, and the bankruptcy court's own determination of Mr. Earle's credibility based on its observations made throughout the bankruptcy case and adversary proceeding. See Balzotti v. RAD Invs., LLC (In re Shepherds Hill Dev. Co., LLC), 316 B.R. at 416 (good faith is called into question where failure to file timely appeal is "part of an ongoing pattern of obstruction and delay").

In light of the foregoing, the bankruptcy court did not err in denying Mr. Earle's motion to extend time to file an appeal. In addition, as the motion for reconsideration did not raise any issue of fact or law that would justify reconsideration, the bankruptcy court did not err in denying the motion to reconsider the Extension Denial Order. As a result, the bankruptcy court's orders should be affirmed.

CONCLUSION

Mr. Earle has failed to meet his burden on appeal. Accordingly, the bankruptcy court's order denying Mr. Earle's motion to extend time to appeal, and the order denying reconsideration of that order, should be affirmed.

Respectfully submitted,

INTRODUCTION

The United States Trustee for Region 8 respectfully submits this brief in support of reversal of the July 12, 2007, order of the Honorable Marian F. Harrison, which granted the motion of Samuel K. Crocker, Chapter 7 Trustee, for summary judgment and allowed the payment of interest on Mr. Crocker's trustee compensation and on the attorneys fees awarded to Mr. Crocker's law firm, with the interest to accrue from the date of the commencement of the bankruptcy case. Based on an analysis of the applicable provisions of the United States Code, the legislative history, the case law, and pertinent policy considerations, the decision of Judge Harrison was in error as a matter of law and should be reversed.

STATEMENT OF JURISDICTION

The Bankruptcy Court had jurisdiction over this proceeding under 28 U.S.C. § 1334(a) and § 157(b). The District Court has jurisdiction over the appeal of the final order of the Bankruptcy Court under 28 U.S.C. §§ 1334(a) and 158(a).

STATEMENT OF THE ISSUES

The issues presented for review are:

a) Did the Bankruptcy Court err in its determination that administrative expenses, including the chapter 7 trustee compensation, accrue interest pursuant to 11 U.S.C. § 726(a)(1) and (5)?
b) Did the Bankruptcy Court err in ignoring the limitation on trustee compensation in 11 U.S.C. § 326?
c) Did the Bankruptcy Court err in awarding the trustee and his law firm interest from the date of the commencement of the debtor's bankruptcy case?

STATEMENT OF THE CASE

This appeal arises from an order of the Bankruptcy Court which granted the Chapter 7 Trustee's request in his Supplemental Final Report and Proposed Distribution ("Supplemental Final Report") for interest to be paid on his trustee compensation and on his law firm's attorneys' fees. The addition of the interest to the amount already paid to the chapter 7 trustee as trustee compensation causes the amount to exceed the cap on trustee compensation set forth in 11 U.S.C. § 326(a). The order of the Bankruptcy Court also established the commencement date of the bankruptcy case as the beginning date for the accrual of the interest.

Patrick Joseph Edgin ("Debtor") filed a voluntary petition for relief under chapter 7 of the Bankruptcy Code on August 31, 2001. On September 4, 2001, Samuel K. Crocker ("Trustee") was appointed as the Chapter 7 trustee to administer the Debtor's bankruptcy estate. The case was converted to a case under chapter 13 on June 20, 2003 and then re-converted to a chapter 7 case by order entered October 16, 2003. Mr. Crocker was re-appointed chapter 7 trustee in the case on October 22, 2003. On March 30, 2006, the Trustee's Final Report and Proposed Distribution ("Final Report") was filed with the court. The Trustee's Supplemental Final Report was filed on October 30, 2006. The United States Trustee objected on November 6, 2006 to the Supplemental Final Report. Cross Motions for Summary Judgment were filed by the trustee and the United States Trustee on April 23, 2007. Argument was held on May 1, 2007. After taking the matter under advisement, an order was docketed July 12, 2007 denying the United States Trustee's Motion for Summary Judgment and Granting the Motion for Summary Judgment of the Chapter 7 Trustee. A timely notice of appeal was filed by the United States Trustee on July 18, 2007.

STATEMENT OF UNDISPUTED MATERIAL FACTS[1]

Patrick Joseph Edgin ("Debtor') filed his chapter 7 bankruptcy case on August 31, 2001 ("petition date").(JPS, ¶ 1). Samuel K. Crocker was appointed chapter 7 trustee on September 4, 2001.(JPS, ¶ 3). The meeting of creditors was held October 10, 2001. (JPS, ¶ 4). At this meeting, the Trustee learned of an interest in real estate which was owned by the Debtor, but not scheduled in the sworn statements and schedules filed by the Debtor.(JPS, ¶ 4).

On August 2, 2002, the Trustee filed a motion for approval of the compromise and settlement of pre-petition state court litigation for $4,791.50. (JPS, ¶¶ 6, 7). No objections were filed and an order was entered September 30, 2002, granting the motion. (JPS, ¶ 6). The settlement funds were deposited into the Trustee's estate account on November 1, 2002.(JPS, ¶ 7). A Report of Assets was filed on June 18, 2003.(JPS, ¶ 8).

[1] The motions for summary judgment were presented to the bankruptcy court on Stipulations of Fact contained within the Joint Pretrial Statement filed on March 1, 2007, Docket Entry Number 85. References to the Joint Pretrial Statement will be abbreviated as JPS.

On June 20, 2003, the Debtor converted his case from a case under chapter 7 to a case under chapter 13.(JPS, ¶ 9). The case was later re-converted to chapter 13 upon the chapter 13 trustee's motion.(JPS, ¶ 10). Samuel K. Crocker was re-appointed chapter 7 trustee on October 22, 2003. (JPS, ¶ 11). Debtor received a chapter 7 discharge on August 27, 2004.(JPS, ¶ 12). On March 9, 2005, the Trustee filed a complaint against Lisa Edgin Hanna and the Debtor seeking partition and sale of the property about which Mr. Edgin had testified during the initial meeting of creditors on October 10, 2001.(JPS, ¶ 14). By order entered June 27, 2005, the Trustee's motion for approval of compromise and settlement of the partition suit was granted.(JPS, ¶ 14). On August 29, 2005, the Trustee received $68,625.00 in settlement proceeds.(JPS, ¶ 15).

The Trustee is a member of the law firm, Crocker & Niarhos.(JPS, ¶ 24). By order entered February 2, 2006, Crocker & Niarhos was paid attorneys fees and reimbursement of expenses.(JPS, ¶ 21).

On March 30, 2006, the Trustee submitted his Final Report and it was approved by the court on May 30, 2006 over the Debtor's objection.(JPS, ¶ 16). The total funds received by the estate for distribution was $74,090.77.(JPS, ¶ 19). Originally, the estate funds were insufficient to pay all creditors in full; however, when the Internal Revenue Service returned the funds it received in the distribution, the estate was able to pay all creditors' claims in full as well as surplus funds to the Debtor.(JPS, ¶ 20). The trustee submitted a Supplemental Final Report on October 30, 2006, and proposed to pay the balance of all unsecured claims, interest on the compensation previously awarded to himself and his law firm, and surplus funds to the Debtor.(JPS, ¶ 17; Supplemental Final Report, docket # 80). The United States Trustee objected to the Supplemental Final Report on November 6, 2006, because of the Trustee's request for interest on his trustee compensation and upon his attorneys fees and expenses.(JPS, ¶ 18).

The Trustee was paid trustee compensation in the amount of $6,954.54 on June 5, 2006.(JPS, D¶ 17)[2]. The Trustee thereafter reimbursed the estate in the amount of $9.89, resulting in total trustee compensation of $6,944.65 paid to the Trustee.(JPS, D¶ 17). The maximum amount of trustee compensation allowable under § 326 in this case after the refund from the Internal Revenue Service is $6,749.07.(JPS, D¶ 18). The Trustee has been overpaid $195.58 in trustee compensation.(JPS, D¶ 18).[3]

Administrative claims allowed and paid in this case and the requested interest are as follows:

Samuel K. Crocker, Trustee	$6,954.54 trustee compensation paid June 5, 2006; interest requested $1,231.06
Crocker & Niarhos	$13,606.25 attorney fees and expenses paid February 2, 2006; Interest requested $2,481.23
Teri Hasenour Gordon	$1,400 attorneys fees paid June 6, 2006
Bankruptcy Court	$150 fees and costs paid March 6, 2005
International Sureties	$7.23 in bond premiums paid throughout the case

(JPS, ¶ 21). The interest requests are calculated at the rate of 3.44 percent per day from the petition date though December 18, 2006.(JPS, D¶¶ 19, 20). Surplus funds to the Debtor in the projected amount of $4,118.35 have not been paid.(JPS, ¶ 23).

STANDARD OF REVIEW

A bankruptcy court's findings of facts are upheld by the appellate court unless they are clearly erroneous; the bankruptcy court's conclusions of law are reviewed de novo. Michel v. Federated Dept. Stores, Inc., 44 F.3d 1310, 1315 (6th Cir. 1995). The issues on this appeal arise from the bankruptcy court's conclusions of law and therefore a de novo review is appropriate.

RELEVANT STATUTORY FRAMEWORK

A. Overview of Chapter 7 Case Administration

Chapter 7 of the Bankruptcy Code, 11 U.S.C. § 701[4] et seq., is a liquidation provision. Shortly after the chapter 7 bankruptcy petition is filed, the United States Trustee appoints a chapter 7 bankruptcy trustee

[3] The overpayment was a result of a math error and will be resolved by the United States Trustee and Mr. Crocker without dispute upon resolution of the appeal.

to administer the debtor's estate. See § 704 (duties of a trustee); 28 U.S.C. § 586(d). The trustee is a representative of the estate and is charged with specific statutory duties necessary to collect and reduce to money property of the estate. §§ 323(a); 704(1)-(9). A trustee is authorized to seek court permission to employ professionals to assist in the performance of those duties, including attorneys, accountants, and auctioneers. § 327.

B. Allowance of Compensation of Trustees and Professionals Under 11 U.S.C. § 503(b)(2) and Payment under § 503(a)

Neither chapter 7 bankruptcy trustees nor professionals employed by the estate are government employees, and their compensation comes from the private bankruptcy estate. In order to receive payment, a trustee or a professional must be properly employed under either §§ 701 and 702(d) (trustee appointment) or § 327 (professional employment), and her compensation must be awarded under § 330(a). Lamie v. United States Trustee, 124 S. Ct. 1023, 1027 (2004); see also Fed. R. Bankr. P. 2016(a) (application for compensation for services).

Section 503(b) authorizes the allowance of "administrative expenses" that arise after a bankruptcy petition is filed. § 503(b). Section 503(b)(2) specifically authorizes the allowance of compensation that has been awarded to a trustee or a professional under § 330(a).[5] § 503(b)(2). Under § 503(a), an entity with an administrative expense may file a "request for payment" of such an administrative expense claim.

C. Priorities Under 11 U.S.C. § 507(a)

In most chapter 7 bankruptcy cases there are not enough funds generated from the liquidation of estate assets to pay all claims in full. In recognition of this, Congress has established a "priority" of payment system mandating that specifies claims receive full payment as a prerequisite to claims in lower categories receiving any payment. See § 507(a) (establishing priorities). Under that scheme, trustee and professional fees receive first priority. Id. Under§ 507(a)(1), certain filing fees, and administrative expense claims approved under § 503(b)(2), receive "priority" over all other types of claims. § 507(a)(1). In turn, § 503(b)(2) authorizes the payment of “compensation and reimbursement awarded [to trustees and professionals] under section 330(a).” § 503(b)(2). See Texas v. Lowe (In re H.L.S. Energy Co., Inc.), 151 F.3d 434, 437 (5th Cir. 1998) (conceptual justification for administrative expense priority is that creditors must pay for those expenses necessary to produce distribution to which they are entitled).

The remainder of § 507(a)(1) lists eight categories of claims that are entitled to lesser priority such as pre-petition employee wages and salaries, alimony and claims related to contributions to an employee benefit plan. See § 507(a)(2)-(9). Other than administrative expense claims and court fees under § 507(a)(1), all other priority claims are pre-petition obligations of the debtor. See § 507(a)(1)-(9). Priority is the same whether the case is under chapter 7, 11, 12, or 13. See § 103. Administrative expenses, including trustee and professional compensation, retain top priority for payment whether they are paid shortly after they are incurred or paid at the same time as final distribution to creditors under § 726(a).

D. Distribution to Creditors Under 11 U.S.C. § 726(a)

At the conclusion of a chapter 7 liquidation case, the chapter 7 trustee submits to the United States Trustee and files with the court a final report and account of the administration of the estate. See § 704(9). Once the court resolves any objections to the final report, the trustee distributes funds generated from the liquidation of estate property to creditors in accordance with § 726 of the Bankruptcy Code.

Section 726(a) provides for the distribution of estate property in chapter 7 cases. The first four categories consist of various unsecured claims. See § 726(a)(1)-(4). The fifth category applies to the payment of post-petition interest “on any claim paid under” the first four categories. § 726(a)(5). Finally, any surplus property is distributed to the debtor. § 726(a)(6).

Of relevance in this appeal is § 726(a)(1), which provides that estate property is first distributed in payment of § 507 priority claims for which a proof of claim has been filed under § 501. § 726(a)(1). Prior to the Bankruptcy Reform Act of 1994 (“the Act”), 108 Stat. 4106, § 726(a)(1) provided for the distribution of property of the estate to priority claimants, specifically, “in payment of claims of the kind specified in and in the order specified in” § 507. Effective for cases filed after October 22, 1994, § 726(a)(1) Congress added the language "proof of which [claim] is timely filed under section 501 of [Title 11] or tardily filed before the date on which the trustee commences distribution under [§ 726]." § 726(a)(1). Only "creditors" and indenture trustees may file proofs of claims under § 501. § 501(a). "Creditor" is an "entity that has a claim against the debtor that arose at the time of or before the order for relief concerning the debtor."[6] § 101(10)(A). A "proof of claim" is defined by the Bankruptcy Rules as "a written statement setting forth a creditor's claim." Fed. R. Bankr. P. 3001(a). A proof of claim must substantially conform to Official Form 10 and generally must be executed by the creditor.[7] Fed. R. Bankr. P. 3001(a), (b); Fed. R. Bankr. P. Official Form 10. Under the Bankruptcy Code and Rules, the procedures with respect to proof of claims apply only to creditors.[8] A pre-petition claim of a creditor, "proof of which is filed under section 501," is "deemed allowed" absent an objection. § 502. Compare with 11 U.S.C. § 503(b)(2) (trustee and professional administrative fees may be allowed and paid only after notice and a hearing).

SUMMARY OF ARGUMENT

As the United States Court of Appeals for the Fifth Circuit has squarely held, the plain meaning of § 726(a)(1) prohibits the payment of interest on administrative expenses, including trustee compensation. Tarbox v. United States Trustee (In re Reed), 405 F.3d 338 (5th Cir. 2005).[9] Payment of interest to trustees

[6] 11 U.S.C. § 101(10)(B) and (C) also give creditor status to holders of certain specialized claims that are not at issue in this appeal.

[7] The exception to this rule, which is not relevant in this appeal, is under certain circumstances where a creditor fails to file a proof of claim, the debtor, codebtor, or trustee may file the proof of claim on behalf of the creditor. See Fed. R. Bankr. P. 3004, 3005.

[8] See, e.g., § 501 (creditor may file proof of claim); Fed. R. Bankr. P. 3001 (proof of claim sets forth creditor's claim) (proof of claim executed by creditor); Fed. R. Bankr. P. 3002 (creditor must file proof of claim for it to be allowed); Fed. R. Bankr. P. 3003(c) (creditor in chapter 11 may file proof of claim); Fed. R. Bankr. P. 3004 (debtor or trustee may file proof of claim where creditor fails to do so); Fed. R. Bankr. P. 3005 (where creditor fails to file a proof of claim); Fed. R. Bankr. P. 3006 (creditor may withdraw claim); Fed. R. Bankr. P. Official Form 10 (Proof of Claim). Further, the "Proof of Claim" form specifically states that it "should not be used to make a claim for an administrative expense" and that a "'request' for payment of an administrative expense may be filed pursuant to [section] 503." Fed. R. Bankr. P. Official Form 10.

[9] Mr. Crocker, the trustee requesting interest on his trustee compensation and on the fees paid to his law firm in this case, acted as amicus counsel in Reed. The same arguments he made to the and other administrative claimants is at odds with many other bankruptcy statutes as well as the stated intention of Congress.

ARGUMENTS AND AUTHORITIES

1. Administrative expenses are excluded from payment of interest under § 726(a)(5).

The statutory subsections crucial to the determination of the issue~~s~~ before the court are found in § 726(a) which provides, in pertinent part:

> (a) Except as provided in section 510 of this title, property of the estate shall be distributed –
> (1) first, in payment of claims of the kind specified in, and in the order specified in, section 507 of this title, proof of which is timely filed under section 501 of this title or tardily filed before the date on which the trustee commences distribution under this section;
> . . . .
> (5) fifth, in payment of interest at the legal rate from the date of the filing of the petition, on any claim paid under paragraph (1), (2), (3), or (4) of this subsection....

[Emphasis added.]

The Fifth Circuit Court of Appeals decision in (In re Reed), 405 F.3d 338, is directly on point and should be followed in this district. The Court analyzed §§ 101(10), 101(17), 501, 503(b)(2), 507, 726(a)(1) and (5) and determined that the plain language of the relevant statutes precluded the payment of interest on trustee compensation and other administrative expenses. 405 F.3d at 342–3. The Court focused on the reference in § 726(a)(1) to "payment of claims of a kind specified ... in section 507 [of title 11], proof of which is timely filed under section 501" and determined that because administrative claimants do not file claims under § 501 they do not hold "claims paid under paragraph (1) of [§ 726(a)]" as required by § 726(a)(5).

The Bankruptcy Court in this case relied upon In re Hembree, 297 B.R. 515 (Bankr. M.D. Tenn. 2002) for its ruling. Notwithstanding the claim of the Hembree bankruptcy court to have relied upon the "straightforward reading of the language of the relevant statutes," the court ignored the specific language of § 726(a)(1) referencing claims filed under § 501. Moreover, the Bankruptcy Court in In re Hembree, relied upon In re Smith, 267 B.R. 770 (Bankr. W.D. Tex. 2001) in finding that § 726(a)(5) allows payment of interest on chapter 7 trustee compensation. However, In re Smith has since been abrogated by the Fifth Circuit's opinion in Reed.

The legislative history of § 726(a) clearly states that only pre-petition claims are included in § 726(a)(1). The 1978 Bankruptcy Code was first enacted § 726(a). As reported in Senate Report 95-989 and in the 1978 U.S. Code Congressional and Administrative News 5787, 5883:

> [P]aragraph (5) [of § 726(a)] provides that post-petition interest on pre-petition claims is also to be paid to the creditor in a subordinated position. Like pre-petition penalties, such interest will be paid from the estate only if and to the extent that a surplus of assets would otherwise remain for return to the debtor at the close of the case.

[emphasis added]. The drafters' intent to include only pre-petition claims in § 726(a)(1) has never wavered. See 1984 U.S.Code Cong. & Adm. News, p. 576; 1994 U.S. Code Cong. & Adm. News, p.3340. This legislative history is consistent with the plain meaning of § 726(a)(1) that only pre-petition claims were ever intended by Congress to be included in the claims to receive interest.

Hembree was a case of first impression in the Sixth Circuit; prior to that decision, neither trustees nor administrative claimants in the Middle District of Tennessee were awarded interest under § 726(a)(5). However, prior to the 1994 amendment to § 726(a)(1), which added "payment of claims of a kind specified ... in section 507 [of title 11], proof of which is timely filed under section 501 or tardily filed before the date on which the trustee commences distribution" to § 726(a)(1), some courts had held that the general reference to § 507 in § 726(a)(1) allowed the payment of interest to administrative claimants. See e.g., Boldt v. Crake (In re Riverside-Linden Inv. Co.), 945 F.2d 320 (9th Cir. 1991): United States Trustee v. Fishback (In re Glados, Inc.), 83 F.3d 1360 (11th Cir. 1996). In re Reed is the only Circuit Court of Appeals to have addressed the issue since the 1994 amendment. It is well reasoned and should be followed in this district and circuit.

The 1994 amendment to § 726(a)(1) which requires a proof of claim filed under § 501 is consistent with the prior legislative history of § 726(a)(1) and clarifies that interest is to be paid only upon pre-petition priority and unsecured claims.[10] As evidenced by the well reasoned decision of In re Reed, that amendment erased any previous ambiguity in § 726(a)(1). 405 F.3d at 342-3.

Plain meaning interpretation of statutes is mandated except in the "rare cases [in which] the literal application of a statute will produce a result demonstrably at odds with the intent of its drafters." United States v. Ron Pair Enter., Inc., 489 U.S. 235, 242, 109 S.Ct. 1026, 1031, 103 L.Ed.2d 290 (1989) (quoting Griffin v. Oceanic Contractors, Inc., 458 U.S. 564, 571, 102 S.Ct. 3245, 2350, 73 L.Ed. 2d 973 (1982)); Palmer v. Internal Revenue Service (In re Palmer), 219 F.3d 580, 586-7 (6th Cir. 2000). The plain meaning of §§ 726(a)(1); 726(a)(5); 507; 501; and 101(10)(A) is that interest is to be paid only on pre-petition claims - not trustee compensation or other administrative expenses. In re Reed, 405 F.3d at 342. Further, the plain language of § 726(a)(1) must be applied unless it produces an absurd result.[11] See, e.g., Lamie v. United States Trustee, 124 S. Ct. 1023, 1030, 540 U.S. 526 (2004). There is nothing absurd about restricting the payment of interest to allowed pre-petition claims.

The analysis in In re Reed is supported by a Second Circuit decision holding the phrase "proof of which is filed under section 501" appearing in § 502(a) excludes post-petition administrative expense claims. Nostas Assocs. v. Costich (In re Klein Sleep Products, Inc.), 78 F.3d 18 (2d Cir. 1996). In Klein Sleep, the Second Circuit held that a damage claim for future rent arising from a trustee's rejection of an assumed lease was an administrative expense. Klein Sleep, 78 F.3d at 28. The court then ruled that § 502(b)(6)'s cap on future rent was inapplicable to administrative expense claims because § 502(a) applies only to claims "proof of which is filed under section 501[,]" and administrative expense claims are not such claims. Id. Because [10] Although the legislative history to the 1994 amendment to § 726(a)(1) explains that it was to conform to the amendments to 1129(a)(3) [which overruled In re New Valley Corp., 168 B.R. 73 (Bankr. D.N.J. 1994)] and 502(b) [which overruled In re Hausladen, 146 B.R. 557 (Bankr. D. Minn. 1992)], in fact it also eliminated any doubt of Congress's intent to limit the payment of interest to pre-petition creditors. See 1994 U.S. Code Cong. & Adm. News, p.3340.

[11] The standard to establish absurdity is extraordinarily high. Sturges v. Crowninshield, 17 U.S. (4 Wheat.) 122, 202-03 (1819) ("so monstrous, that all mankind would, without hesitation, unite in rejecting" it); Robbins v. Chronister, 435 F.3d 1238, 1241 (10th Cir. 2006) ("so gross as to shock the general moral or common sense") (internal quotations and citation omitted); Sigmon Coal Co. v. Apfel, 226 F.3d 291, 308 (4th Cir. 2000) (same), aff'd 534 U.S. 438 (2002).

§ 726(a)(1) uses the same phrase, it should be interpreted the same way. See, e.g., Ratzlaf v. United States, 510 U.S. 135, 143 (1994) (term appearing in several statutes should be read the same way).

The bankruptcy court below also relied upon Specker Motor Sales Co. v. Eisen, 393 F.3d 659 (6th Cir. 2004) in support of her award of interest to the Trustee and his lawfirm:

> Because interim compensation must be disgorged when necessary to achieve pro rata distribution of a chapter 7 bankruptcy estate where there are insufficient funds to pay administrative claims in full, it follows that interest should be paid where a surplus of funds is available.

Specker Motor, however, holds that the Bankruptcy Code requires the equitable treatment of all claimants with an equal level of priority.

> "Equality of distribution among creditors is a central policy of the Bankruptcy Code. According to that policy, creditors of equal priority should receive pro rata shares of the debtor's property." Begier v. Internal Revenue Service, 496 U.S. 53, 58, 110 S.Ct. 2258, 110 L.Ed.2d 46 (1990). Equality of distribution would be vitiated if one equally situated administrative claimant - Bays - received more than his pro rata share. . . . . But his position is no different from that of anyone who provides services or credit to a bankrupt firm. Indeed, as an administrative claimant, his position is better than most.

Specker Motor 393 F.3d at 664. Clearly, § 726(a)(1) does not disrupt the priority scheme of § 507. Specker Motor in no way supports the allowance of interest on administrative expenses.

The trustee argues for interest on his administrative claims because he and his law firm have waited until the end of the case to be paid and that surplus funds cases exist because of the successful administration of the estate. As shown by the facts in In re Hembree, 297 B.R. 515 (Bankr. M.D. Tenn. 2002), relied upon the Court and trustee, surplus funds may be created by third parties. The Hembree bankruptcy case was initially filed September 27, 1995. The bankruptcy estate included a cause of action pending in the state court at the time the bankruptcy petition was filed. The law suit was ultimately litigated and won post petition by special counsel, Merkel & Cocke, resulting in a payment of $300,000 to the trustee on behalf of the estate. Merkel & Cocke were awarded and paid fees on September 21, 2001. Although the Trustee argued he was entitled to interest on his trustee compensation of $16,000 from the date of the commencement of the case (even though it began as a chapter 13 case), the state court attorneys who had been involved pre-petition and for six years post-petition and who were responsible for the surplus in the case were not included in the Trustee's request for payment of interest apparently because they were paid prior to the close of the case. That seems hardly fair or consistent with any reading of § 726(a).

In this case, the Trustee learned at the October 10, 2001 meeting of creditors of the estate's interest in real estate which the debtor had failed to list on his sworn schedule of assets. No action was taken on this information prior to the conversion of the bankruptcy case to a chapter 13 on June 20, 2003. On August 27, 2004, eighteen months after the case re-converted to a chapter 7, the Trustee finally filed a complaint to partition and sell the property interest revealed at the October 10, 2001 meeting. Meanwhile the Debtor received his chapter 7 discharge on August 27, 2004. The Trustee argued a denial of the discharge would have no benefit to creditors since they received 100 percent of their claims; however, the IRS did not return its distribution (which made the case a surplus case) until after March 2006 - 18 months after the discharge of the debtor was entered by the court..

For all of the reasons set forth above, it is clear from the plain meaning and legislative history of § 726(a)(1) and (5) that interest is not paid on administrative expenses.

2. The award of interest to a trustee cannot cause the trustee compensation to exceed the maximum limitation on trustee compensation in § 326.

The trustee's request for interest would cause his compensation in this case to exceed the statutory cap in § 326 by the amount of the interest - $ 1,231.06. Excluding administrative expenses from § 726(a)(5) maintains the integrity of the cap on trustee compensation contained in § 326. In re Motley, 150 B.R. 16, 19 (Bankr. E.D. Va. 1992). ["The unambiguous language of § 326(a) places a maximum limitation on compensation for trustees and does not allow for any exceptions. In re Orient River Investments, Ltd., 133 B.R. 729, 731 (Bankr. E.D. Pa. 1991)"]. As stated by the Supreme Court's mandate in United States v. Ron Pair Enter., Inc., 489 U.S. at 242, plain meaning interpretation of statutes is dictated except in the "rare cases [in which] the literal application of a statute will produce a result demonstrably at odds with the intent of its drafters. [citations omitted]."

Section 326 is a specific statute which should not be overridden by the more general provisions of § 726(a)(5). When construing a general enactment and, within the same statute, a more particular enactment, the more specific should be given effect. In re Gallenstein v. U.S., 975 F.2d. 286, 290 (6th Cir. 1992). Citing United States v. Chase, 135 U.S. 255, 260, 10 S.Ct. 756, 757, 34 L.Ed. 117 (1890) and Estate of Flanigan v. Commissioner, 743 F.2d 1526, 1532-33 (11th Cir.1984). Absent a clearly stated intent to affect the cap on trustee compensation under § 326, no such Congressional intent should be found by the Court to be contained within § 726(a)(5).

Moreover, § 326(a) already compensates the trustee for payment of interest to the creditors.

> Section 326(a) calculates a trustee's fee based on the distribution to creditors. Assets remaining in the estate after payment of all claims allow for the payment of interest on those claims under § 726(a)(5). If the trustee pays § 726(a)(5) interest on claims, ... the trustee earns a fee on the interest paid on the creditors' claims by virtue of the fee formula of § 326(a). Then allowing [trustee] Ames' claim for interest on the fees provided by 326(a) would amount to two bites of the apple and would result in a disincentive for trustees to distribute assets in a timely manner. Under [trustee] Ames['] reading of the Code and cases, a trustee could delay final distribution, as was done in this six-year-old case, allow the interest earned on assets converted to cash to accumulate in escrow, earn a fee on the distribution of those assets (which now include earned interest) in satisfaction of claims, and as a part of his compensation, petition for interest on his fee under § 726(a)(5). ... [T]he Code fairly provides for the trustee to benefit from a commission earned from the payment of interest on claims of creditors. [footnote omitted.]

Motley, 150 B.R. at 20. The vast majority of the trustees would not intentionally delay the closing of a case in order to generate additional income for themselves. However, the appearance of impropriety and the ability of trustees to take advantage of such an interpretation of the provision supports the argument that § 326(a) should not be overruled by § 726(a)(5).

No statutory or policy consideration supports the addition of interest to the trustee compensation such that it would exceed the limitation set forth in § 326. The appearance of impropriety of the Trustee benefitting from administrative delay; the risk that the award of interest to administrative claimants would significantly decrease the award of interest to unsecured creditors; and the "two bites of the apple" explained by Motley all support the denial of interest to the extent it would cause the trustee compensation to exceed the § 326 cap.

3. An award of interest on administrative expenses which accrues from the petition date is illogical.

The Fifth Circuit Court of Appeals in In re Reed should be followed in this circuit so that interest is not allowed to the trustee or his law firm. Moreover, the bankruptcy court's award of the chapter 7 trustee interest on his fees and the fees of his law firm from the date of the filing of the petition in this case renders an illogical result. The bankruptcy court's decision awards interest on the full amount of trustee compensation and law firm fees even before any services were provided and before any right to compensation existed. However, interest cannot accrue on fees for services which have not yet been performed and approved by the court. In re Riverside-Linden Inv. Co., 945 F.2d at 323-24; Glados, 83 F.3d. at 1365-6[12]. The Court in In re Glados pointed out the problems:

> For instance, if the attorney for the trustee is not employed until two years into the administration of the case it would, in effect, permit the attorney to earn interest on those fees when he did not perform any work. Equally, the trustee would be encouraged to delay the administration of the estate to allow the accrual of interest in a surplus [funds] case.

In re Glados, 83 F.3d at 1365, citing In re Brown, 190 B.R. 689, 691. See also, In re Keller, 198 B.R. 630, 632 (Bankr. M.D. Fla. 1996)("The trustee has no cognizable right to payment upon his appointment, other than his entitlement to a statutory allowance of $60."). To pay interest from the commencement of the case would be tantamount to finding that the Trustee had a right to $6,954.54 trustee compensation upon the filing of the Debtor's bankruptcy case. In the Glados case, the trustee would have received interest on his full compensation for one year and four months before the case converted from chapter 11to chapter 7. 83 F.3d. at 1361.

While the United States Trustee does not argue in this case that the delay in this case was intentionally caused by the Trustee, it is clear that the Trustee was in control of the time line for administration of the estate. The cooperation of the Debtor may ease the Trustee's job, but the Bankruptcy Code provides the Trustee with sufficient tools to efficiently and timely administer an estate.

In summary, administrative claimants should not receive interest under § 726(a)(5). An award of interest from the beginning of the case prior to rendition of any services is illogical and should be reversed.

---

[12] As noted earlier, Glados and Riverside-Linden were decided before the 1994 amendment to § 726(a)(1) which added the reference to proof of claims filed under section 501.

Based on an analysis of the applicable provisions of the United States Code, the legislative history, the case law, and pertinent policy considerations, the decision of Judge Harrison should be reversed.

STATEMENT OF JURISDICTION

This appeal arises from a final order issued by the United States Bankruptcy Court for the Middle District of Georgia (Robert F. Hershner, Jr.) on February 3, 2009, dismissing chapter 7 debtor Anne F. Edwards' case pursuant to 11 U.S.C. § 707(a). This Court has jurisdiction over this appeal pursuant to 28 U.S.C. section 158(a).

STATEMENT OF ISSUE PRESENTED

Did the Bankruptcy Court err in dismissing Ms. Edwards' case for cause under 11 U.S.C. § 707(a)?

STANDARD OF APPELLATE REVIEW

Appellate courts review factual findings of the bankruptcy court for clear error, and they apply a de novo standard of review for conclusions of law. In re Chase & Sanborn Corp., 904 F.2d 588, 593 (11th Cir. 1990). See also Fed. R. Bankr. P. 8013 (standard of appellate review).

STATEMENT OF FACTS

On October 27, 2008, Ms. Edwards filed a petition for relief under chapter 7 of title 11 of the United States Code. [Bankr. Court Docket. No. 1 (Petition)]. Ms. Edwards filed her case pro se. [Bankr. Court Docket. No. 1 (Petition)]. The first meeting of creditors, pursuant to 11 U.S.C. § 341 ("341 Meeting"), was scheduled for December 3, 2008. [Bankr. Court Docket No. 4]. The 341Meeting was attended by Ms. Edwards, a representative of Ms. Edwards' largest creditor and a trial attorney for the United States Trustee.[1] [Bankr. Court Docket No. 22 (UST Motion to Dismiss, para. 2)]. Shortly after the 341 Meeting was commenced, however, Ms. Edwards requested that the meeting be continued, citing the need to obtain an attorney. Id. Pursuant to Ms. Edwards' request, the 341 Meeting was continued to December 22, 2008. [Bankr. Court Docket No. 17].

On December 19, 2008, Ms. Edwards filed a motion to continue the 341 Meeting scheduled for December 22, 2008. [Bankr. Court Docket No. 19]. She did not request a hearing on the motion, and the bankruptcy court did not enter an order granting a continuance. Id. Ms. Edwards did not appear for the 341 Meeting, which was called on December 22, 2008. [Bankr. Court Docket No. 22 (UST Motion to Dismiss, para. 2)]. Based on Ms. Edwards' failure to appear, the chapter 7 trustee continued the 341 meeting to January 14, 2009. [Bankr. Court Docket No. 20].

On January 7, 2009, Ms. Edwards filed a motion to continue the 341 meeting scheduled for January 14, 2009. [Bankr. Court Docket No. 21]. Like her previous motion for a continuance, this motion did not request a hearing, and the bankruptcy court did not enter an order on the motion. Id. The chapter 7 trustee called the 341 Meeting on January 14, 2009, and Ms. Edwards did not appear. [Bankr. Court Docket No. 22 (UST Motion to Dismiss, para. 2)]. A representative of Ms. Edwards' largest creditor and a trial attorney for the United States Trustee were present at the 341 Meetings which were called on December 22, 2008 and January 14, 2009. Id.

On January 16, 2009, the United States Trustee filed a motion to dismiss Ms. Edwards' case pursuant to section 707(a) of the Bankruptcy Code. [Bankr. Court Docket No. 22]. In support of the motion to dismiss, the United States Trustee cited Ms. Edwards' repeated failure to appear at the continued 341 Meetings, as well as the fact that she did not provide the chapter 7 trustee with a copy of her most recent tax return, as required by 11 U.S.C. § 521(e)(2)(A). [Bankr. Court Docket No. 22 (UST Motion to Dismiss, paras. 2,6)]. The motion to dismiss also noted that Ms. Edwards had filed a previous bankruptcy case in the Middle District of Georgia on May 5, 2008, which was dismissed as a result of her failure to file documents in a timely manner. Id. at para. 4. A hearing on the motion to dismiss was scheduled for February 19, 2009. [Bankr. Court Docket No. 23].

Ms. Edwards did not file an objection to the motion to dismiss. Rather, on February 12, 2009, she filed a document titled “Motion to Discharge,” which indicated that she did not intend to appear at the hearing scheduled for the motion to dismiss and requested that the court enter a discharge in her case. [Bankr. Court Docket No. 24]. The bankruptcy court scheduled a hearing to address Ms. Edwards’ request with the United States Trustee’s motion to dismiss on February 19, 2009. [Bankr. Court Docket Entry 2/17/09]. Ms. Edwards did not appear at the hearing on February 19, 2009, and the bankruptcy court entered an order granting the motion to dismiss based on the docket entries, written submissions and the proffer of the trial attorney for the United States Trustee, who was present at all of the scheduled 341 Meetings. [Bankr. Court Docket No. 25].

ARGUMENT

I. THE BANKRUPTCY RECORD SUPPORTS THE DECISION TO DISMISS MS. EDWARDS’ PETITION BASED ON HER FAILURE TO APPEAR AT THE 341 MEETING AND PRODUCE HER MOST RECENT TAX RETURN

The issue on appeal is whether the Bankruptcy Court erred by entering an order dismissing Ms. Edwards’ case for cause under 11 U.S.C. § 707(a). Pursuant to 11 U.S.C. § 707(a)(1), the court may dismiss a chapter 7 case for cause, including “unreasonable delay by the debtor that is prejudicial to creditors.” This provision “prevents [a] debtor from filing a petition to take advantage of the protection of the bankruptcy court and subsequently failing to appear or file necessary schedules, or otherwise failing to take any necessary steps for the proper administration of the estate." 6 Collier on Bankruptcy ¶ 707.03[1][a], p. 707-15 (rev. 15th ed. 2008).

Section 341(a) of the Bankruptcy Code requires that a meeting of creditors be convened within a reasonable time after a voluntary petition for relief is filed. 11 U.S.C. § 341(a); Peres v. Sherman, 530 F.3d 372, 377 (5th Cir. 2008). The meeting of creditors provides an opportunity for creditors and the bankruptcy trustee to examine the debtor. United States v. Manfredi, No. Civ. S. 06-416 FCD, 2008 WL 686859, *1 (E.D. Ca. March 11, 2008). According to section 343 of the Bankruptcy Code, "[t]he debtor shall appear and submit to examination under oath at the meeting of creditors under section 341(a) of this title" (emphasis added). The purpose of the 341 Meeting and the importance of the debtor's attendance are best explained as follows:

> the primary purpose of the § 341 meeting is the examination of the debtor. The § 341 meeting permits the creditors to rigorously question the debtor on issues relating to dischargeability, estate administration, and the debtor's financial affairs. The meeting also allows the trustee to query about possible recoveries under the avoiding powers. Thus, the debtor's presence at the § 341 meeting is not merely ceremonial, but instead plays a pivotal role in providing the creditors and the trustee with valuable information regarding the debtor's financial situation.

With regard to the production of tax returns, section 521(e)(2)(A)(i) imposes the following obligation:

> the debtor shall provide not later than 7 days before the first date set for the first meeting of creditors, to the trustee a copy of the Federal income tax return required under applicable law . . . for the most recent tax year ending immediately before the commencement of the case and for which a Federal income tax return was filed.

Additionally, section 521(a)(3) of the Bankruptcy Code requires the debtor to "cooperate with the trustee as necessary to enable the trustee to perform the trustee's duties under this title." Bankruptcy courts routinely dismiss cases in which debtors fail to appear at 341 Meetings or neglect to file or produce documentation, such as tax returns. See In re Casey, 274 Fed. Appx. 205, 206-07 (3d Cir. 2008) (affirming district and bankruptcy court decisions dismissing case for failure to produce tax returns as required by 11 U.S.C. § 521(e)(2)(A)(I)); Simmons v. Cosby, 256 B.R. 578, 579 (D. Md. 2001) (stating that debtor's failure to appear for rescheduled 341 Meeting serves as independent ground for dismissal of case); In re Duarte, 277 B.R. 791, 791-92 (Bankr. S.D. Fla. 2002) (declining to reopen debtor's case which was dismissed for failure to appear at 341 meeting); In re Hall, 266 B.R. 659, 660 (Bankr. W.D. Ky. 2001) (dismissing case based on debtor's failure to attend 341 meeting and noting that "rescheduling the 341 meeting inconveniences creditors and creates administrative problems for the court"); cf.

Montgomery v. Ryan (In re Montgomery), 37 F.3d 413, 414-16 (8th Cir. 1994) (holding that, under 11 U.S.C. § 109(g)(1), debtor was not eligible to be a debtor because dismissal of previous case for failure to attend 341 Meeting constituted a "willful failure . . . to abide by the orders of the court . . ."); In re Russell, 392 B.R. 315, 358-359 (Bankr. E.D. Tenn. 2008) (explaining that production of documents and attendance at 341 Meeting are crucial to working of bankruptcy system).

In the instant matter, the bankruptcy court dismissed Ms. Edwards' case based on her failure to appear at the continued 341 Meetings and her neglect in providing the chapter 7 trustee with a copy of her most recent tax return. Ms. Edwards' conduct throughout the pendency of this case has reflected a desire to stall its progress, rather than comply with the minimum requirements to obtain a discharge. As set forth above, Ms. Edwards appeared for her first 341 Meeting but, shortly after it was commenced, requested that it be continued. The chapter 7 trustee accommodated Ms. Edwards and continued the 341 Meeting. Despite the fact that Ms. Edwards had requested the continuance, she did not even appear on the rescheduled date. Once again, the chapter 7 trustee continued the 341 Meeting and, again, Ms. Edwards failed to appear. The chapter 7 trustee afforded Ms. Edwards every opportunity to pursue the goal of bankruptcy relief, but Ms. Edwards simply refused to satisfy even the most basic requirements imposed on her. See Plagakis v.

Gleberg (In re Plagakis), No. 03-CV-0728(S.J.), 2004 WL 203090, *5 (E.D.N.Y. Jan. 27, 2004) (“in failing to appear at a meeting of creditors under 11 U.S.C. § 341(a), or to provide the Trustee with any of the documents required by [the local rule], Debtor failed to comply with the most minimal responsibilities of a person legitimately seeking bankruptcy protection”). Rather, as the bankruptcy record reflects, Ms. Edwards’ only participation in this case was limited to the filing of repeated letters with the court, requesting numerous continuances and adjournments.

Ms. Edwards’ refusal to appear at the continued 341 Meetings and her failure to provide a copy of her most recent tax return prohibited the chapter 7 trustee from fulfilling his statutory obligations in administering the estate. Specifically, the chapter 7 trustee did not have the opportunity to question Ms. Edwards regarding her assets and liabilities, the circumstances of her bankruptcy filing, and her income and disbursements. The administration of her estate was halted by Ms. Edwards’ repeated attempts to delay, and her creditors suffered a direct harm as a result.

Ms. Edwards’ conduct also directly impacted those parties that appeared at her 341 Meeting to question her in accordance with 11 U.S.C. § 343. As indicated above, representatives from Ms. Edwards’ largest creditor and the United States Trustee appeared on each of the dates scheduled for the 341 Meetings. Ms.

Edwards’ failure to appear for the continued meetings prohibited the creditor that was present from obtaining answers relating to its claim, and it frustrated the United States Trustee’s efforts to satisfy the statutory obligations imposed by 11 U.S.C. § 704(b)(1).

Ms. Edwards’ repeated refusal to appear for her 341 Meetings, her failure to produce a copy of her most recent tax return and her general attempts to delay the progress of her case created an unreasonable delay which was prejudicial to her creditors. The circumstances of this case are a classic example of those that 11 U.S.C. § 707(a) was drafted to address. For these reasons, the bankruptcy court’s decision to dismiss Ms. Edwards’ case, pursuant to 11 U.S.C. § 707(a), was supported by the relevant facts and the bankruptcy record.

II. MS. EDWARDS DOES NOT DISPUTE THE BASES UPON WHICH THE BANKRUPTCY COURT DISMISSED HER CASE

Neither the bankruptcy court record nor Ms. Edwards' brief before this Court states anything to indicate that Ms. Edwards disputes the bases upon which her case was dismissed. As set forth above, Ms. Edwards did not file an objection to the United States Trustee's motion to dismiss her bankruptcy case. Instead, she filed a document titled "Motion to Discharge," which requested that the court enter a discharge in her case. Similarly, Ms. Edwards' brief, filed in connection with this appeal, does not dispute the fact that she did not provide the chapter 7 trustee with a copy of her most recent tax return and she failed to appear for the continued 341 Meetings. Consequently, Ms. Edwards has not provided this Court with a basis upon which to reverse the bankruptcy court's decision to dismiss her case.

CONCLUSION

For the foregoing reasons, the order entered by the bankruptcy court dismissing Ms. Edwards' case pursuant to 11 U.S.C. § 707(a) should be affirmed.

Respectfully submitted this 17th day of July, 2009.

BRIEF FOR THE APPELLEE

STATEMENT OF JURISDICTION

Debtor-appellant Scott Lee Egebjerg filed a voluntary petition under chapter 7 of the Bankruptcy Code, 11 U.S.C. § 701 et seq., in the United States Bankruptcy Court for the Central District of California, which had jurisdiction over the petition pursuant to 28 U.S.C. §§ 151, 157, and 1334(a). On August 24, 2007, the bankruptcy court dismissed the Debtor's petition as an abuse of chapter 7 under 11

U.S.C. § 707(b)(3). The Debtor filed a timely notice of appeal on September 3, 2007. At the request of the Debtor, the bankruptcy court entered an order certifying its decision for direct appeal to this Court pursuant to 28 U.S.C. § 158(d)(2). The Debtor then filed in this Court a petition for permission to appeal. See Bankruptcy Abuse Prevention and Consumer Protection Act of 2005 ("BAPCPA" or "2005 Act"), Pub. L. No. 109-8, § 1233(b), 119 Stat. 23 (2005) (providing that a prospective appellant under 28 U.S.C. § 158(d)(2)(A) must petition the court of appeals for permission to appeal pursuant to Fed. R. App. P. 5). This Court granted the Debtor's petition for permission to appeal on December 19, 2007, and has jurisdiction over the appeal under 28 U.S.C. § 158(d)(2).

STATEMENT OF THE ISSUES PRESENTED FOR REVIEW

(1) Whether the bankruptcy court's dismissal of the Debtor's chapter 7 petition may be affirmed on the ground that evidence of the Debtor's income and debts demonstrates that his disposable income gives rise to a presumption of abuse under 11 U.S.C. § 707(b)(2).

(2) Whether the bankruptcy court properly exercised its discretion in dismissing the Debtor's chapter 7 petition pursuant to 11 U.S.C. § 707(b)(3)(B), which allows courts to dismiss chapter 7 petitions when the totality of the circumstances of a debtor's financial situation demonstrates abuse.

STATEMENT OF THE CASE

On December 31, 2006, the Debtor filed a voluntary bankruptcy petition under chapter 7 of the Bankruptcy Code, 11 U.S.C. § 701 et seq. On June 26, 2007, the U.S. Trustee[1] filed a motion to dismiss the Debtor's petition on two independent grounds: (1) the Debtor's monthly disposable income, when properly calculated, was sufficient to create a presumption of abuse under 11 U.S.C. § 707(b)(2); and (2) the totality of the Debtor's financial circumstances demonstrated abuse under 11 U.S.C. § 707(b)(3) because the Debtor had sufficient means to repay a meaningful portion of his debts. Granting the motion to dismiss, the bankruptcy court rejected the U.S. Trustee's first argument regarding section 707(b)(2), but found abuse under section 707(b)(3).

The Debtor filed a notice of appeal and requested that the bankruptcy court enter an order certifying its decision for direct appeal to this Court pursuant to 28 U.S.C. § 158(d)(2). The bankruptcy court entered the certification order and this Court subsequently granted the Debtor permission to bring the direct appeal.

The United States Trustee Program thus acts in the public interest to promote the efficiency, and to protect and preserve the integrity, of the bankruptcy system. To this end, Congress has provided that "[t]he United States trustee may raise and may appear and be heard on any issue in any case or proceeding." 11 U.S.C. § 307. See In re Donovan Corp., 215 F.3d 929, 930 (9th Cir. 2000).

STATEMENT OF THE FACTS

I. Statutory Background

The Bankruptcy Code establishes two basic forms of bankruptcy for individual debtors. Under chapter 7, "an individual debtor receives an immediate unconditional discharge of personal liability for certain debts in exchange for relinquishing his or her nonexempt assets to a bankruptcy trustee for liquidation and distribution to creditors." H.R. Rep. 109-31(I), at 10; see 11 U.S.C. §§ 701–727. By contrast, under chapter 13, "a debtor commits to repay some portion of his or her financial obligations" over a specified period "in exchange for retaining nonexempt assets and receiving a broader discharge of debt than is available under chapter 7." H.R. Rep. 109-31(I), at 10; see 11 U.S.C. §§ 1321–1330. Under the Bankruptcy Reform Act of 1978, Pub. L. No. 95-598, 92 Stat. 2549, a debtor could freely choose whether to file for bankruptcy under chapter 7 or chapter 13. See H.R. Rep. 109-31(I), at 11.

In 1984, Congress amended chapter 7 to permit dismissal of a bankruptcy petition filed under that chapter if a court found "substantial abuse." Bankruptcy Amendments and Federal Judgeship Act of 1984, Pub. L. No. 98-353, § 312, 98 Stat. 333, 335, codified as amended at 11 U.S.C. § 707(b)(1) (1988). Congress enacted this amendment to respond "to concerns that some debtors who could easily pay their creditors might resort to chapter 7 to avoid their obligations." H.R. Rep. 109-31(I), at 12 (internal quotation omitted). Two years later, Congress again amended this provision to authorize the U.S. Trustee to seek dismissal of chapter 7 petitions for "substantial abuse." Bankruptcy Judges, United States Trustees, and Family Farmer Bankruptcy Act of 1986, Pub. L. No. 99-554, § 21, 100 Stat. 3088, 3101; codified at 11 U.S.C. § 707(b)(1) (1988).

After twenty-years' experience, Congress found that these amendments were insufficient to control abuse of the chapter 7 bankruptcy process. Congress identified, among other problems, the "inherent[] vague[ness]" of the "substantial abuse" standard, which led to disagreement in the courts about whether a debtor's ability to repay a significant portion of his or her debts out of future income constitutes substantial abuse, meriting dismissal. H.R. Rep. 109-31(I), at 12. Another problem was that the Bankruptcy Code established "a presumption in favor of granting the relief requested by the debtor," which influenced courts' decisions whether to find substantial abuse. 11 U.S.C. § 707(b) (2000 suppl. 4); see H.R. Rep. 109-31(I), at 12.

Responding to these perceived shortcomings of the Bankruptcy Code, Congress held hearings over five years to determine what measures it could adopt "to ensure that debtors repay creditors the maximum they can afford." H.R. Rep.

109-31(I), at 2; see id. at 12. As a result of those hearings, Congress determined that it should adopt “needs-based reforms,” which would limit the availability of chapter 7 relief to those who Congress believed could not afford to repay a portion of their debts out of future income. Id. at 12.

The Bankruptcy Abuse Prevention and Consumer Protection Act of 2005 (“BAPCPA” or “2005 Act”) implemented these need-based reforms. To address the vagueness of the “substantial abuse” standard, the Act authorizes the bankruptcy court to dismiss a petition filed under chapter 7 or, with the debtor’s consent, to convert such a petition to a case under chapters 11 or 13 “if it finds that the granting of relief would be an abuse of the provisions of this chapter.” 11 U.S.C. § 707(b)(1). The 2005 Act then provides specific criteria which, if satisfied, require a court to presume the existence of abuse, requiring “dismissal [or conversion to chapter 13] based on a chapter 7 debtor’s ability to repay.” H.R. Rep. 109-31(I), at 15.

First, a court is to compare the debtor’s annualized “current monthly income” to the “median family income” of a similarly sized family in the debtor’s state. If the debtor’s current monthly income is below the median, then the presumption of abuse does not arise. 11 U.S.C. § 707(b)(7); see H.R. Rep. 109-31(I), at 15. Where the debtor’s current monthly income exceeds the median family income, a means test is used to calculate the debtor's monthly disposable income. If the debtor's monthly disposable income is less than $100 per month (or $6,000 over 60 months), the presumption of abuse does not arise. If the debtor's monthly disposable income is equal to or exceeds $166.67 per month (or $10,000 over 60 months), the presumption of abuse arises. If the above median income debtor's monthly disposable income is between $100 and $166.67 per month, the presumption of abuse arises if that amount, over 60 months, is sufficient to pay at least 25% of the debtor's nonpriority unsecured debt. 11 U.S.C. § 707(b)(2)(A)(i).

The amount of the debtor's monthly disposable income is determined by following a formula, set forth in 11 U.S.C. § 707(b)(2), which subtracts certain necessary expenses from the debtor's current monthly income, such as the cost of food, clothing, housing, utilities and health care. See id. § 707(b)(2)(A)(ii). In addition, the debtor may deduct "monthly payments on account of secured debts," averaged over the 60 months following the date of the petition. Id. § 707(b)(2)(A)(iii).

The presumption of abuse under section 707(b)(2) can be rebutted if the debtor establishes "special circumstances, such as a serious medical condition or a call or order to active duty in the Armed Forces" and demonstrates that necessary expenses associated with those special circumstances reduce the debtor's current monthly income below the specified benchmarks. Id. § 707(b)(2)(B).

Even if the presumption of abuse does not arise or is rebutted under section 707(b)(2), a chapter 7 petition may be dismissed for abuse under section 707(b)(3), which requires the bankruptcy court to consider whether "the totality of the circumstances . . . of the debtor's financial situation demonstrates abuse."[2] Id. § 707(b)(3)(B).

Congress enacted enforcement provisions to ensure that these reforms would be implemented. Under the 2005 Act, the U.S. Trustee (or the bankruptcy administrator) reviews a chapter 7 debtor's petition and files with the court a statement explaining whether the presumption of abuse arises under section 707(b). Id. § 704(b)(1). If the U.S. Trustee determines that the presumption of abuse arises, he then files either a motion to dismiss or convert the chapter 7 petition, or a statement explaining why he believes such a motion is not appropriate. Id. § 704(b)(2).

[2] Section 707(b)(3) also requires the court to consider "whether the debtor filed the petition in bad faith." 11 U.S.C. § 707(b)(3)(A).

II. Factual and Procedural Background

On December 31, 2006, the Debtor filed a voluntary chapter 7 bankruptcy petition with the United States Bankruptcy Court for the Central District of California. Appellant's Excerpts of the Record ("E.R.") 1. In conjunction with the petition, he filed a Statement of Current Monthly Income and Means Test Calculation with the court that listed his monthly disposable income under section 707(b)(2) as $-244.99. Id. at 45-50.

The U.S. Trustee subsequently filed a motion to dismiss the Debtor's petition as an abuse of chapter 7 on two independent grounds. Id. at 132-47. First, the U.S. Trustee argued that the Debtor's monthly disposable income, when properly calculated, was sufficient to create a presumption of abuse under 11 U.S.C. § 707(b)(2). Id. at 137-44. The U.S. Trustee explained that although the Debtor listed his monthly disposable income as $-244.99, his calculations improperly included a deduction of $733.90 for payments the Debtor was making to repay a loan the Debtor had taken on his 401(k) savings account. Id. at 135. This deduction was improper, the U.S. Trustee explained, because section 707(b)(2) only allows a deduction for loan payments on account of "secured debts," calculated with reference to amounts due to "secured" creditors. 11 U.S.C. § 707(b)(2)(A)(iii). The overwhelming majority of courts to consider the issue have held that retirement loans are not "debt" under the Bankruptcy Code because the retirement plans have no right of recourse against the debtor. E.R. 138-42. Once the 401(k) loan payments are removed from the Debtor's list of deductible expenses, his monthly disposable income is $489.91 and a presumption of abuse arises under section 707(b)(2). Id. at 137-38.

The U.S. Trustee also explained that even if the presumption of abuse did not arise in this case under section 707(b)(2), the totality of the Debtor's financial circumstances demonstrates abuse under 11 U.S.C. § 707(b)(3) because the Debtor has sufficient means to repay a meaningful portion of his debts. Id. at 144-46. Adjusting the Debtor's Means Test to reflect only necessary expenses demonstrates that the Debtor has over $489.00 in excess monthly income that would allow him to repay 85% of his unsecured debt over 60 months of a chapter 13 plan. Id. at 146. Moreover, even if the Debtor were to repay his 401(k) loan in full, his loan repayment schedule relieves him of payment beginning in October 2008. Accordingly, he would still have over $489.00 in excess monthly income for 47 of the 60 months of a chapter 13 plan, allowing him to repay approximately 67% of his unsecured debts during that period. Id. at 144-46.

The bankruptcy court granted the U.S. Trustee's motion to dismiss the Debtor's petition as an abuse of chapter 7. Id. at 328. The court concluded that the Debtor could properly list his 401(k) loan as secured debt and thus had no disposable income for the purposes of section 707(b)(2), but agreed with the U.S. Trustee that chapter 7 relief would be an abuse under section 707(b)(3)'s totality of the circumstances inquiry. Id. at 325-26. The court noted that other than the 401(k) loan, the Debtor's only secured debts were on a car and a timeshare, and that the Debtor is single, has no alimony or child support obligations, and has been employed by the same company for 27 years. Id. at 326. The court also explained that because the Debtor's 401(k) repayment was scheduled to end in September 2008, the Debtor could propose a chapter 13 plan with minimum payments until that time, at which point he would be able to pay significantly more toward his unsecured debts. Accordingly, the court held, the totality of the Debtor's financial circumstances demonstrated that chapter 7 relief would be an abuse under section 707(b)(3). Id. at 326.

The Debtor filed a notice of appeal and requested that the bankruptcy court enter an order certifying its decision for direct appeal to this Court pursuant to 28 U.S.C. § 158(d)(2). The bankruptcy court entered the certification order and this Court subsequently granted the Debtor permission to bring the direct appeal.

SUMMARY OF ARGUMENT

The bankruptcy court's dismissal of the Debtor's chapter 7 petition should be affirmed on either of two independent grounds. First, it may be affirmed the ground that his disposable income, when properly calculated, gives rise to a presumption of abuse under section 707(b)(2). Although the Debtor listed his monthly disposable income as below zero, his calculations improperly included a large deduction for payments he was making to his employer in order to repay a loan he took from his 401(k) savings account. As an overwhelming majority of courts have held, such a deduction is improper because a debtor's obligation to repay a loan from his retirement account is neither a "secured debt" nor a "necessary expense" within the meaning of the Bankruptcy Code. Furthermore, the Debtor cannot claim his 401(k) loan as a "special circumstance" sufficient to rebut the presumption of abuse because he failed to comply with the procedural requirements set forth in section 707(b)(2)(B), and because retirement plan loans do not fall within the category of special circumstances contemplated by that section.

The bankruptcy court's dismissal of the Debtor's chapter 7 petition may also be affirmed on the ground that the bankruptcy court did not abuse its discretion in finding abuse under section 707(b)(3)'s "totality of the circumstances" inquiry.

The bankruptcy court properly concluded that because the totality of the Debtor's financial situation demonstrates that he has the ability repay a meaningful portion of his debt, granting relief in this case would be an abuse of chapter 7. The Debtor's various challenges to this determination reflect a misunderstanding of the relevant statutory provisions and are contrary to the vast majority of case law addressing the scope of the "totality of the circumstances" inquiry under section 707(b)(3).

STANDARD OF REVIEW

This Court reviews the bankruptcy court's legal conclusions de novo, including its construction of the Bankruptcy Code. In re Fowler, 394 F.3d 1208, 1212 (9th Cir. 2005). In determining whether providing chapter 7 relief to a debtor would constitute abuse under 11 U.S.C. § 707(b)(3), bankruptcy courts apply a "totality of the circumstances" test to the debtor's financial situation. See 11 U.S.C. § 707(b)(3)(B). The "totality of the circumstances" test is a "fact-intensive determination" which is reviewed on appeal for abuse of discretion. Hebbring v. U.S. Trustee, 463 F.3d 902, 907-08 (9th Cir. 2006).

ARGUMENT

I. Dismissal of the Debtor's Petition May Be Affirmed on the Ground that the Debtor's Disposable Income Gives Rise to a Presumption of Abuse under Section 707(b)(2)

Although the bankruptcy court correctly determined that the Debtor's financial situation demonstrated abuse under 11 U.S.C. § 707(b)(3) and dismissed his petition on that ground, the U.S. Trustee also argued before the bankruptcy court that the Debtor had sufficient disposable income to give rise to a presumption of abuse under 11 U.S.C. § 707(b)(2). Because the amount of disposable income under section 707(b)(2) is a threshold determination that occurs prior to any assessment of the Debtor's financial situation under section 707(b)(3), the U.S. Trustee urges this Court to rely on section 707(b)(2) in affirming dismissal of the Debtor's petition. See Massachusetts Mut. Life Ins. Co. v. Ludwig, 426 U.S. 479, 480-81 (1976) (per curiam) (reciting "the inveterate and certain rule . . . that the appellee may, without taking a cross-appeal, urge in support of a decree any matter appearing in the record, although his argument may involve an attack upon the reasoning of the lower court or an insistence upon matter overlooked or ignored by it" (internal quotation omitted)).

Dismissal of the Debtor's petition under section 707(b)(2) is proper in this case because his monthly disposable income, when properly calculated, is sufficient to create a presumption of abuse under section 707(b)(2). Although the Debtor listed his monthly disposable income as $-244.99, his calculations improperly included a deduction of $733.90 for payments he was making to his employer in order to repay a loan he had taken on his 401(k) savings account. An "overwhelming majority" of courts have held that such deductions are improper under section 707(b)(2), McVay v. Otero, 371 B.R. 190, 195 (W.D. Tex. 2007), for the reasons explained below.

A. An Obligation to Repay a 401(k) Loan is Not a "Debt" within the Plain Meaning of the Bankruptcy Code

Section 707(b)(2) only allows a deduction for loan payments made on account of "secured debts." 11 U.S.C. § 707(b)(2)(A)(iii). As defined by the Bankruptcy Code, the term "debt" means "liability on a claim." Id. § 101(12). In turn, the Bankruptcy Code defines the term "claim" broadly, to mean

> (A) right to payment, whether or not such right is reduced to judgment, liquidated, unliquidated, fixed, contingent, matured, unmatured, disputed, undisputed, legal, equitable, secured, or unsecured; or
> (B) right to an equitable remedy for breach of performance if such breach gives rise to a right to payment, whether or not such right to an equitable remedy is reduced to judgment, fixed, contingent, matured, unmatured, disputed, undisputed, secured, or unsecured.

Id. § 101(5). The definitions of "claim" and "debt" are "coextensive." Pennsylvania Dept. of Public Welfare v. Davenport, 495 U.S. 552, 558 (1990); Johnson v. Home State Bank, 501 U.S. 78, 84-85 n.5 (1991); S. Rep. No. 989, 95th Cong. 2d Sess. 23 (1978) reprinted in 1978 U.S. Code Cong. & Admin. News, pp. 5787, 5809 ("The terms 'debt' and 'claim' are coextensive: a creditor has a 'claim' against the debtor; the debtor owes a 'debt' to the creditor").

Courts have consistently ruled that a debtor's obligation to repay a loan from his or her retirement account is not a "debt" under the Bankruptcy Code. See In re Esquivel, 239 B.R. 146, 152 (Bankr. E.D. Mich. 1999) ("There is a clear consensus that an individual's pre-petition borrowing from his retirement account does not give rise to a secured or unsecured 'claim,' or a 'debt' under the Bankruptcy Code."); see also Eisen v. Thompson, 370 B.R. 762, 769 (N.D. Ohio 2007) (explaining that the "majority view . . . developed over the past 25 years" is that retirement plan loans are not secured debts under the Bankruptcy Code); McVay v. Otero, 371 B.R. 190, 195 (W.D. Tex. 2007) (observing that the "overwhelming majority of courts that have addressed this issue" have held that retirement plan loans are not secured debts under the Bankruptcy Code). Indeed, in holding otherwise, the bankruptcy court in this case relied on a decision that has since been reversed. E.R. 325 (citing In re Thompson, 350 B.R. 770 (Bankr. N.D. Ohio 2006), rev'd, 370 B.R. 769 (N.D. Ohio 2007)).

This clear consensus is based, in part, on the fact that employer retirement plans generally lack the power to commence collection actions against the debtor, and hence have no enforceable "right to payment" against the debtor, as required by 11 U.S.C. § 101(5). The earliest and most frequently cited case on this point is In re Villarie, 648 F.2d 810 (2d Cir. 1981), a Second Circuit case in which the debtor borrowed money from his account with the state retirement system and listed the retirement system as a "secured creditor." After the debtor filed for bankruptcy, the retirement system sought declaratory relief that the loan was not a "debt" within the meaning of the Bankruptcy Code. The Second Circuit analogized the transaction to "an annuitant's withdrawal from the savings account of his annuity fund" or "an insured's advance from the reserve fund of his insurance policy," and held that it did not create a debtor-creditor relationship that gave rise to a claim under the Bankruptcy Code because the retirement system had no right to sue the debtor if he failed to repay the loan. Id. at 812.

The Sixth Circuit adopted this same reasoning in Mullen v. United States, 696 F.2d 470 (6th Cir. 1983). In Mullen, the debtor had received a "readjustment allowance" from his employer, the U.S. Air Force, pursuant to 10 U.S.C. § 687, when he was released following a force reduction. The statute provided, inter alia, that if the debtor returned to the military, he would not receive any retirement pay until he repaid 75% of the readjustment allowance. The debtor later returned to the military and retired after completing the necessary term of service, but without repaying the readjustment balance. Shortly after he left military service, the debtor filed a chapter 7 bankruptcy petition, and then filed a motion to hold the U.S. Air Force in contempt for violating the automatic stay[3] against collection efforts by continuing to withhold his retirement benefits. The Sixth Circuit rejected the debtor's argument, relying on both Villarie and the legislative history of 11 U.S.C. § 101, which notes that > [the] definition of "debt" and the definition of "claim" on which it is based, proposed 11 U.S.C. § 101(4), will not include a transaction such as a policy loan on an insurance policy. Under that kind of transaction, the debtor is not liable to the insurance company for repayment; the amount owed is merely available to the company for setoff against any benefits that become payable under the policy. As such, the loan will not be a claim (it is not a right to payment) that the company can assert against the estate; nor will the debtor's obligation be a debt (a liability on a claim) that will be discharged under proposed 11 U.S.C. § 523 or 524.

Mullen, 696 F.2d at 472 (quoting H.R. No. 595, 95th Cong., 2d Sess. 310, reprinted in 1978 U.S. Code Cong. & Ad. News 5787, 6267).

[3] The "automatic stay," codified in 11 U.S.C. § 362, automatically and broadly enjoins any creditor collection actions upon a debtor's bankruptcy filing.

Like the Air Force in Mullen, a debtor's retirement plan administrator has no right to recover any unpaid portion of the 401(k) loan from any source other than the debtor's vested retirement account balance, which is akin to the "prepaid retirement benefit" at issue in that case. As one district court explained,

> Retirement plan loans are qualitatively different than secured debts such as home mortgages and car loans. The retirement plan administrator does not loan the plan participant the administrator's money. It simply deducts the requested loan amount from the participant's own account, and credits the loan payments and interest back to the participant's account. If the participant defaults on the loan, the plan administrator deducts the amount owed from the vested account balance, and repays the loan with this deduction. The participant must treat this deduction as a distribution which is taxable as income to the participant in the default year. The participant may also be subject to an early withdrawal penalty. But, the plan administrator has no right to payment under the Bankruptcy Code.

Thompson, 370 B.R. at 768 n.10.

Numerous district courts and bankruptcy courts have adopted this reasoning and concluded that retirement loan repayments are not debts within the meaning of the Bankruptcy Code. See, e.g., In re Cohen, 246 B.R. 658, 667 (Bankr. D. Colo. 2000) (explaining that a retirement loan is in essence a debt to oneself); In re Fulton, 211 B.R. 247, 264 (Bankr. S.D. Ohio 1997); Esquivel, 239 B.R. at 149-52; In re Scott, 142 B.R. 126, 127-31 (Bankr. E.D. Va. 1992); In re Jones, 138 B.R. 536, 537-38 (Bankr. S.D. Ohio 1991).

Because a debtor's obligation to repay his retirement loan does not constitute a "claim" or a "debt" under the Bankruptcy Code, the vast majority of courts to consider the issue post-BAPCPA have held that debtors may not include payments on such loans as a deduction on their means test under section 707(b)(2).[4] See, e.g., In re Smith, — B.R. —, 2008 WL 2485424, at *1 (Bankr. C.D. Ill. June 20, 2008); In re Watkins, 2008 WL 2475749, at *6 (Bankr. D. Ariz. June 18, 2008); In [4] Although most courts have not found it necessary to reach this issue, a 401(k) loan is also not "secured" within the meaning of the Bankruptcy Code. See Thompson, 370 B.R. at 770. 11 U.S.C. § 506(a) applies to all chapter 7 bankruptcy cases, see 11 U.S.C. § 103(a), and provides a general framework for assessing whether and to what extent a creditor's claim is secured for bankruptcy purposes, see, e.g., In re Miller, 907 F.2d 80, 82 (8th Cir. 1990). Section 506(a)(1) provides, in relevant part, that "[a]n allowed claim of a creditor secured by a lien on property in which the estate has an interest , or that is subject to setoff under section 553 of this title, is a secured claim to the extent that the value of such creditor's interest in such property." 11 U.S.C. § 506(a)(1). In other words, a secured claim under the Bankruptcy Code refers to a claim secured by a lien on property in which the debtor's bankruptcy estate owns an interest. See In re Foremost Mfg. Co., 137 F.3d 919, 924 (6th Cir. 1998). A debtor's interest in his 401(k) retirement plan is not property of the debtors' bankruptcy estate because section 541 defines what property is included and excluded from a debtor's bankruptcy estate under section 541(c)(2), and "any interest in a plan or trust that contains a transfer restriction enforceable under any relevant nonbankruptcy law" is excluded from property of the estate. Patterson v. Shumate, 504 U.S. 753, 758-60 (1992). Moreover, section 541(b)(7) broadly excludes from "property of the estate" "any amount (A) withheld by an employer from the wages of employees for payment as contributions (i) to – (I) an employee benefit plan that is subject to . . . [ERISA] . . ." or "(B) received by an employer from employees for payment as contributions (i) to . . . an employee benefit plan that is subject to [ERISA] . . . ." 11 U.S.C. § 541(b)(7). Under this section, any of the Debtor's contributions to his 401(k) account are not property of the debtors' bankruptcy estate. See Fulton, 211 B.R. at 263-64.

re Mowris, 384 B.R. 235, 237-38 (Bankr. W.D. Mo. 2008); Otero, 371 B.R. at 195-97; Thompson, 370 B.R. at 768-72; In re Masur, 2007 WL 3231725, at *4-5 (Bankr. D. S.D. Oct. 30, 2007); In re Mordis, 2007 WL 2962903, at *4 (Bankr. E.D. Mo. Oct. 9, 2007); In re Turner, 376 B.R. 370, 376 (Bankr. D. N.H. 2007). These decisions rely both on the plain language of the Bankruptcy Code and on two basic canons of statutory construction.

The first canon requires courts to "presume that Congress is aware and understands past judicial interpretation and practice when it amends the Code." Mordis, 2007 WL 2962903, at *3 (citing Dewsnup v. Timm, 502 U.S. 773, 779 (1992)). Because the overwhelming majority of pre-BAPCPA opinions held that retirement plan loans were not "debt" under the Code, courts "must assume that Congress was aware of this judicial interpretation when it enacted BAPCPA and intended to preserve it." Id. at *4; see also Thompson, 370 B.R. at 771 ("Because overwhelming case law preceding the 2005 Act held that 401(k) loans were not 'debts' under the Code, and because Congress has not expressly said otherwise, the Court must presume that 'debt' retains its pre-2005 Act meaning."); Mowris, 384 B.R. at 238; Otero, 371 B.R. at 202-03.[5]

[5] Indeed, Congress explicitly preserved that interpretation when it added section 362(b)(19), which provides that the automatic stay does not apply to automatic deductions from a debtor's wages to repay a retirement plan loan, but expressly states

The second relevant canon requires courts to presume that "when Congress includes particular language in one section of statute but omits it in another section of the same Act, . . . Congress acted intentionally in that exclusion." Mordis, 2007 WL 2962903, at *4 (citing KP Permanent Make-Up, Inc. v. Lasting Impression I, Inc., 543 U.S. 111, 118 (2004)). In enacting the 2005 Act, Congress expressly gave chapter 13 debtors the ability to deduct 401(k) loan payments from their disposable income calculation, see 11 U.S.C. § 1322(f), but did not include any similar exemption for chapter 7 debtors. As one court observed, "[i]n light of the amendments sprinkled throughout the Code [addressing 401(k) loans] — especially section 1322(f) — the lack of a 401k provision in section 707 is a glaring indication that Congress did not intend 401k loan repayments to be deducted in Chapter 7." Turner, 376 B.R. at 376; see also Masur, 2007 WL 3231725, at *5 ("Obviously, Congress knew well how to craft direct language requiring courts to treat 401(k) loans as secured debts for purposes of the means test, [but declined to do so.]"). Congress's decision to treat 401(k) loan payments differently under chapter 13 than chapter 7 is consistent with two of the 2005 Act's that "nothing in this paragraph may be construed to provide that any loan made under . . . a contract or account under section 403(b), of the Internal Revenue Code of 1986 constitutes a claim or debt under this title." 11 U.S.C. § 362(b)(19); see also Mowris, 384 B.R. at 238.

primary goals: protecting an individual's retirement savings while also "redirect[ing] chapter 7 petitioners into chapter 13 proceedings in order to 'ensure that those who can afford to repay some portion of their unsecured debts [be] required to do so.'" Otero, 371 B.R. at 201 (quoting 151 Cong. Rec. S2470 (daily ed. Mar. 10, 2005)); see also Thompson, 370 B.R. at 771 ("Such an approach serves both the Congressional intent to protect retirement contributions and to ensure that debtors repay creditors an amount they can afford, a primary goal of the 2005 Act.").

B. The Debtor's 401(k) Loan Repayment is Not a "Necessary Expense" under Section 707(b)(2)(A)(ii)

Because the Debtor also argued below that his 401(k) loan repayment qualifies as a deductible necessary expense under section 707(b)(2)(A)(ii), a brief explanation of the scope of "other necessary expenses" under chapter 7 is warranted. For the purposes the means test, debtors may deduct their "actual monthly expenses for the categories specified as Other Necessary Expenses issued by the Internal Revenue Service." 11 U.S.C. § 707(b)(2)(A)(ii)(I). Section 5.15.1.10 of the IRS's Internal Revenue Manual identifies fifteen categories of "Other Expenses" allowed if they meet the "necessary expense test" because they provide for the taxpayer's health and welfare or for the production of income.[6] None of these categories include 401(k) loan repayments. The Debtor asserted, however, that his 401(k) loan repayments qualify as necessary expenses because he "has no authority to stop the automatic deductions." E.R. 266.

Although the Internal Revenue Manual identifies "involuntary deductions" as a category of necessary expenses, an expense qualifies as an "involuntary deduction" only if it "a requirement of the job; i.e., union dues, uniforms, work shoes." For example, an employee's failure to pay union dues or wear a required uniform or shoes may result in the employee losing his job. See, e.g., St. John's Mercy Health Systems v. N.L.R.B., 436 F.3d 843, 844 (8th Cir. 2006). The Debtor's agreement to repay his retirement loan via automatic payroll deduction is simply not a job requirement. See In re Barraza, 346 B.R. 724, 730-31 (Bankr. N.D. Tex. 2006)(holding debtor's 401(k) loan repayment did not qualify as an "other necessary expense"); In re Lenton, 358 B.R. 651, 658 (Bankr. E.D. Pa. 2006) ("The fact that Debtor took a loan . . . under loan terms that mandate repayment by payroll deduction does not change the nature of the funds when Debtor repays them."). Because the Debtor voluntarily contributed funds to his 401(k) account, and voluntarily borrowed those funds from the plan, his repayment of amounts borrowed "represent repayment of voluntary retirement contributions" and cannot be deducted as a necessary expense under section 707(b)(2)(A)(ii). Lenton, 358 B.R. at 658; see also In re Watkins, 2008 WL 2475749, at *7 (Bankr. D. Ariz. June 18, 2008); In re Mowris, 384 B.R. 235, 239 (Bankr. W.D. Mo. 2008); In re Mordis, 2007 WL 2962903, at *2 (Bankr. E.D. Mo. Oct. 9, 2007).

C. The Debtor's 401(k) Loan Repayment is Not a "Special Circumstance" under Section 707(b)(2)(B)

In the alternative, the bankruptcy court stated that even if the Debtor's 401(k) loan was not a secured claim, it could be properly included as a "special circumstance" sufficient to rebut the presumption of abuse under section 707(b)(2)(B). Specifically, that section provides:

> In any proceeding brought under this subsection, the presumption of abuse may only be rebutted by demonstrating special circumstances, such as a serious medical condition or a call or order to active duty in the Armed Forces, to the extent such special circumstances . . . justify additional expenses or adjustments of current monthly income for which there is no reasonable alternative.

11 U.S.C. § 707(b)(2)(B). As an initial matter, the bankruptcy court's finding of special circumstances in this case is procedurally erroneous. Section 707(b)(2)(B) imposes strict requirements on a debtor seeking to establish special circumstances:

> (ii) In order to establish special circumstances, the debtor shall be required to itemize each additional expense or adjustment of income and to provide –
> (I) documentation for such expense or adjustment to income; and
> (II) a detailed explanation of the special circumstances that make such expenses or adjustment to income necessary and reasonable.
> (iii) The debtor shall attest under oath to the accuracy of any information provided to demonstrate that additional expenses or adjustments to income are required.

Id. §§ 707(b)(2)(B)(ii)-(iii). In addition, where the claim of special circumstances is contested, a court must consider evidence before determining whether a debtor has sufficiently rebutted the presumption of abuse. Fed. R. Bankr. P. 9014 (requiring testimony on disputed issues of material fact). None of these procedural requirements were satisfied in this case. The Debtor failed to provide the requisite documentation or testify under oath, and the bankruptcy court never held an evidentiary hearing on the matter. As such, the bankruptcy court could not properly conclude that the Debtor demonstrated special circumstances sufficient to rebut the presumption of abuse under section 707(b)(2).

In any event, even if the Debtor had satisfied the applicable procedural requirements, his 401(k) loan does not qualify as a special circumstances under section 707(b)(2)(B). Congress did not provide an exhaustive list of "special circumstances" but, rather, specifically stated that the statutory presumption of abuse may only be rebutted by "special circumstances such as a serious medical condition or a call or order to active duty in the Armed Forces." 11 U.S.C. § 707(b)(2)(B) (emphasis added).[7] Under the canon of ejusdem generis, "where general words follow specific words in a statutory enumeration, the general words are construed to embrace only objects similar in nature to those objects enumerated by the preceding specific words." Woods v. Simpson, 46 F.3d 21, 23 (6th Cir. 1995) (internal quotation omitted). Accordingly, only circumstances that are similar in nature to a "serious medical condition" or "a call or order to active duty in the Armed Forces" are sufficient to rebut the statutory presumption of abuse. See In re Hanks, 362 B.R. 494, 501-02 (Bankr. D. Utah 2007) (applying the doctrine of ejusdem generis to hold that a post-bankruptcy reduction in income following a job change did not qualify as a special circumstance within the meaning of section 707(b)(2)(B)).

Applying the doctrine of ejusdem generis, numerous bankruptcy courts have held that section 707(b)(2)(B) limits “the sphere of permissible special circumstances” to situations bearing “similar traits and characteristics” to the examples listed in § 707(b)(2). In re Castle, 362 B.R. 846, 851 (Bankr. N.D. Ohio 2006). A “serious medical condition” and “a call to active duty” share “a commonality [as] they both constitute situations which not only put a strain on a debtor’s household budget, but they arise from circumstances normally beyond the debtor’s control.” Id.; see also, e.g., In re Smith, — B.R. —, 2008 WL 2485424, at *2 (Bankr. C.D. Ill. June 20, 2008) (“The similarity in nature of the two examples is that they are life circumstances that directly and unavoidably affect one’s earning capacity or give rise to necessary, additional expenses.”); In re Naut, 2008 WL 191297, at *10 (Bankr. E.D. Pa. Jan. 22, 2008); In re Mowris, 384 B.R. 235, 240 (Bankr. W.D. Mo. 2008).

[7] The use of the phrase "such as" is significant. Typically, when Congress wants to provide a non-exhaustive list that contains unrelated bases for taking an action, it uses the word "includes" or "including" which section 102(3) of the Bankruptcy Code expressly defines as "not limiting." 11 U.S.C. § 102(3). See, e.g., 11 U.S.C. § 1112(b)(4) (chapter 11 conversion or dismissal); 11 U.S.C. § 1208(c) (chapter 12 conversion or dismissal); 11 U.S.C. § 1307(c) (chapter 13 conversion or dismissal); 11 U.S.C. § 1104(a)(1) (appointment of a chapter 11 trustee for cause).

The fact that the Debtor’s employer automatically deducts 401(k) loan repayments from his paycheck is not the kind of extraordinary, non-routine expense that Congress identified as “special circumstances.” As one court explained, “[r]etirement plan loans are neither extraordinary nor rare; many individuals take loans for many different reasons, and they are all required to repay the loans. Without more, a situation as common as the withdrawal of one’s retirement funds cannot be a ‘special circumstance’ within the accepted definition of this term." Eisen v. Thompson, 370 B.R. 762, 773 (N.D. Ohio 2007); see also Smith, 2008 WL 2485424, at *2 ("[T]he fact that [the debtor] borrowed from [his] retirement funds and now wishes to pay the loans back is not a life altering circumstance of the kind referenced in the statute. It is simply the consequence of a prior financial decision."); Naut, 2008 WL 191297, at *10; Mowris, 384 B.R. at 235; In re Johns, 342 B.R. 626, 629 (Bankr. E.D. Okla. 2006).

Moreover, in addition to demonstrating "special circumstances," section 707(b)(2)(B)(i) requires that such circumstances be those "for which there is no reasonable alternative." See, e.g., In re Lightsey, 374 B.R. 377, 381-82 (Bankr. S.D. Ga. 2007) (section 707(b)(2)(B) does "not permit every conceivable unfortunate or 'unfair' circumstance to rebut the presumption of abuse, but includes only those circumstances that cause higher household expenses or adjustments of income 'for which there is no reasonable alternative,' i.e., they are unforeseeable or beyond the control of the debtor"); In re Renicker, 342 B.R. 304, 310 (Bankr. W.D. Mo. 2006); In re Tranmer, 355 B.R. 234, 237 (Bankr. D. Mont. 2006). The Debtor here has other reasonable alternatives, such as directing the administrator of his 401(k) plan to repay the loan out of the balance of the funds in his retirement account. See Smith, 2008 WL 2485424, at *2 ("[A] retirement plan borrower has the right not to repay the loan. Nonpayment comes with liability for income taxes and penalties, but nonpayment is a valid, lawful alternative."). Another option is converting his case to chapter 13 and confirming a repayment plan under that chapter. Under chapter 13, 401(k) loan repayments are excluded form a debtor's disposable income calculations. 11 U.S.C. § 1322(f). Accordingly, the Debtor cannot claim his 401(k) loan as a "special circumstance" under section 707(b)(2).

II. The Bankruptcy Court Did Not Abuse Its Discretion in Dismissing the Debtor's Petition Based on the "Totality of the Circumstances" under Section 707(b)(3)

In determining whether providing chapter 7 relief to a debtor would constitute abuse under 11 U.S.C. § 707(b)(3), bankruptcy courts must consider the "totality of the circumstances" of the debtor's "financial situation." See 11 U.S.C. § 707(b)(3)(B). Under section 707(b)(3)(B), a court must evaluate the totality of the debtor's financial situation, including the debtor's assets, liabilities, reasonable expenses, and current and future income, to determine whether the debtor has the ability to repay a meaningful portion of his debts. If the debtor can, the debtor's case merits dismissal under section 707(b)(3)(B). An inquiry into the totality of a debtor's financial circumstances is a "fact-intensive determination" which is reviewed on appeal for abuse of discretion. Hebbring v. U.S. Trustee, 463 F.3d 902, 907-08 (9th Cir. 2006).

In this case, the bankruptcy court reasonably concluded that under the totality of the circumstances of the Debtor's financial situation, chapter 7 relief would constitute abuse. The court explained that aside from the 401(k) loan, the Debtor's only secured payments were on a car and a timeshare, the latter of which was "an unnecessary luxury" that the Debtor intended to abandon. E.R. 326. The court observed that the Debtor's obligations were "primarily consumer in nature," and that the Debtor was single and had no alimony or child support obligations. Id. The court also noted that the Debtor had been working for the same employer for 27 years, and that he did not demonstrate any extenuating circumstances that suggested the U.S. Trustee's estimation of his future disposable income was overstated. Id.

The court went on to explain that if the Debtor converted his petition to chapter 13, he could propose a payment plan that would allow him to repay his 401(k) loan in whole while also repaying a substantial portion of his unsecured debt. The court suggested that the Debtor propose a plan with minimal payments (such as $10 a month) until he finished repaying his 401(k) loan, at which point he could pay a larger amount for the remainder of the plan. Id.

As demonstrated by its opinion, the bankruptcy court was well within in its discretion in finding abuse under section 707(b)(3) in this case, and the Debtor's arguments to the contrary are easily dismissed.

A. The Debtor's Ability to Propose a Viable Chapter 13 Plan Does Not Turn on Whether He Has Disposable Income Under Section 707(b)(2)

The Debtor's first assertion that because his means test indicated that he had no disposable income at the time he filed his petition, the bankruptcy court erred in concluding that he could propose a viable payment plan under chapter 13. See Appellant's Br. 12. To the contrary, however, courts frequently confirm chapter 13 plans proposed by debtors with no disposable income under section 707(b)(2). See, e.g., Kagenveama v. Tandy, 527 F.3d 990, 993 (9th Cir. 2008). And, courts frequently confirm chapter 13 plans that propose no payments to unsecured creditors because the debtor has negative monthly projected disposable income. See, e.g., In re Alexander, 344 B.R. 742 (Bankr. E.D. N.C. 2006); see also In re Shelton, 370 B.R. 861, 864-68 (Bankr. N.D. Ga. 2007) (discussing the circumstances under which courts will confirm "a [chapter 13] plan that pays no dividend (a so-called '0% plan') to general unsecured creditors"). In short, the Debtor is plainly wrong that he cannot propose a confirmable chapter 13 plan.

Moreover, dismissal under the "totality of the circumstances" test does not actually require that the debtor be able to propose a viable payment plan under chapter 13. Although a debtor's ability to fund a chapter 13 plan was evidence of abuse under the old, pre-2005 chapter 7 framework, see, e.g., In re Price, 353 F.3d 1135, 1140 (9th Cir. 2004), there is no textual support for reading section 707(b)(3)(B) as hinging a finding of abuse on whether the debtor can fund a chapter 13 plan. To the contrary, the default remedy for abuse under section 707(b)(3)(B) is dismissal, not conversion. See 11 U.S.C. § 707(b)(1). If abuse under section 707(b)(3)(B) were determined solely by evaluating whether the debtor could fund a hypothetical chapter 13 plan, the "totality of the circumstances" analysis required by section 707(b)(3)(B) would, in many cases, be superfluous to the means test analysis required by section 707(b)(2): both would determine abuse based solely on the debtor's income and expenses. Cf. Fed. R. Bankr. P. Official Form 22A (the chapter 7 means test form) to Fed. R. Bankr. P. Official Form 22C (the chapter 13 means test form). To the contrary, an analysis of "the totality of the circumstances . . . of the debtor's financial situation" must look not only at income and expenses, but also assets and liabilities. See John A.E. Pottow, The Totality of the Circumstances of the Debtor's Financial Situation in a Post-Means Test World, 71 Mo. L. Rev. 1053, 1066 (2006); see also, e.g., In re Zaporski, 366 B.R. 758, 773 (Bankr. E.D. Mich. 2007)

B. The Bankruptcy Court Properly Considered the Debtor's Ability to Repay His Unsecured Debts Once He Completed Repayment of His 401(k) Loan

Although the Debtor asserts that the bankruptcy court erred in "consider[ing] future income in determining there was chapter 7 abuse rather than [the Debtor's] income and expenses on the date the petition was filed," Appellant's Br. 10, he apparently concedes that future income is relevant to dismissal under section 707(b)(3) where chapter 13 is a "valid alternative," id. at 12-13 (citing with approval In re Lenton, 358 B.R. 651 (Bankr. E.D. Pa. 2006)). As explained above, the Debtor could propose a chapter 13 payment plan with as little as $0 payments to unsecured creditors until he finishes paying his 401(k) loan, and larger payments for the remainder of the commitment period. As such, the Debtor's arguments regarding the relevance of future income appear to be moot.

In any event, there is simply no basis for limiting the section 707(b)(3)(B) inquiry to a "snapshot" view of the debtor's income and expenses at the time of filing rather than the actual "totality" of the debtor's financial circumstances, which by its plain meaning includes any available information about the debtor's future financial resources. Indeed, the courts of appeals repeatedly instructed bankruptcy courts to consider a debtor's "reasonably reliable future financial resources"when evaluating the totality of their circumstances under the pre-2005 chapter 7 framework. In re Reynolds, 425 F.3d 526, 532 (8th Cir. 2005); see also, e.g., In re Price, 353 F.3d 1135, 1139 (9th Cir. 2004) (explaining that "the totality of the [debtor's] circumstances" includes the "likelihood of sufficient future income" that the debtor can use to pay unsecured claims); In re Behlke, 358 F.3d 429, 434 (6th Cir. 2004); In re Kornfield, 164 F.3d 778, 781-84 (2d Cir. 1999); In re Lamanna, 153 F.3d 1, 4 (1st Cir. 1998). Where, as here, Congress uses a term with "settled meaning" in the courts, "Congress presumably knows and adopts . . . the meaning its use will convey to the judicial mind unless otherwise instructed." Beck v. Prupis, 529 U.S. 494, 500-01 (2000).

The Debtor's sole basis for challenging the bankruptcy court's consideration of his future income under section 707(b)(3) is a handful of bankruptcy court decisions addressing whether a debtor may include on his means test a debt secured on collateral that he intends to surrender. Appellant's Br. 13-15. Given that the Debtor was in fact allowed to deduct his 401(k) loan payments on his means test under section 707(b)(2), these cases have no relevance to the Debtor's challenge. The question presented by the Debtor is whether the totality of the Debtor's financial circumstances for the purposes of section 707(b)(3) includes the fact that he will soon be relieved of his 401(k) loan payments. The cases cited by the Debtor have no bearing on this question because they turn solely on the meaning of the phrase "scheduled as contractually due" in section 707(b)(2)(A)(iii). See In re Nockerts, 357 B.R. 497, 500 (Bankr. E.D. Wis. 2006);

In re Walker, 2006 WL 1314125, at *4 (Bankr. N.D. Ga. May 1, 2006); see also In re Haar, 373 B.R. 493, 500-02 (Bankr. N.D. Ohio 2007) (explaining that the "'snapshot' approach" of the means test is "entirely different" than "§ 707(b)(3)'s approach, [which] is grounded in equity"). Likewise, this Court's recent decision in Kagenveama v. Tandy, 527 F.3d 990 (9th Cir. 2008), turned on the proper construction of the phrase "projected disposable income" in chapter 13, see 11 U.S.C. § 1325(b)(1).[8]

In stark contrast, the operative phrase in section 707(b)(3) is "the totality of the circumstances . . . of the debtor's financial situation." 11 U.S.C. § 707(b)(3)(B). As explained above, the "totality of the circumstances" inquiry has always included consideration of future income in the bankruptcy context, and the Debtor has not and cannot provide any reason that this ordinary understanding of the "totality" of a debtor's financial circumstances should not apply in the context of section 707(b)(3). See Haar, 373 B.R. at 502 (concluding that "evidence of a debtor's future income and expenses has always been a proper subject of §707(b) analysis" and that there is "no reason why this practice should not be afforded viability post-BAPCPA . . . under § 707(b)(3)"); In re Pennington, 348 B.R. 647, 651 (Bankr. D. Del. 2006) ("There is no indication in the language of [section 707(b)(3)] or the legislative history that Congress meant to limit temporally the Court's consideration of the Debtors' financial condition when determining whether to dismiss a case for abuse").

[8] Because the Debtor in this case focuses so heavily on his ability to propose a viable chapter 13 plan, it is worth noting that although Kagenveama limits the parties' discretion to challenge a proposed chapter 13 plan based on future income, the decision in no way precludes a debtor from voluntarily proposing a chapter 13 plan with escalating payments due to an anticipated increase in financial resources during the plan period. For this reason, the bankruptcy court's suggestion that the Debtor convert his petition to chapter 13 is unaffected by Kagenveama. Moreover, as emphasized earlier, the propriety of dismissal under section 707(b)(3) does not turn on the debtor's ability to fund a chapter 13 plan. See supra pp. 30-31 (explaining that the default remedy for abuse under chapter 7 is dismissal, not conversion).

C. The Bankruptcy Court Properly Based Its Decision on the Debtor's Ability to Repay His Debts

Asserting that "something other than an ability to pay" is required for dismissal under section 707(b)(3)'s totality of the circumstances inquiry, the Debtor next argues that the bankruptcy court erred in relying on his ability to repay his debts as a basis for finding abuse. Appellant's Br. 17 (quoting Nockerts, 357 B.R. at 505). The Debtor's basic claim is that because an above-median income debtor has already had his financial situation "scrutinized through the means test" under section 707(b)(2), dismissal for ability to pay under section 707(b)(3) is improper. Id. at 16-18. This argument is contrary to the plain language of the provision and to the "overwhelming" recognition of courts and commentators that "section 707(b)(3) 'totality of the circumstances' analysis requires a bankruptcy court to undertake an analysis of a debtor's actual debt-paying ability independent of the means test analysis under section 707(b)(2)." In re Hoffner, 2007 WL 4868310, at *3 (Bankr. D. N.D. Nov. 21, 2007).[9]

As numerous courts have observed, section 707(b)(3) "explicitly mandates that the totality of the circumstances of the Debtor's financial situation be considered in determining whether there is an abuse when the presumption of abuse under paragraph (b)(2) does not arise or is rebutted." In re Paret, 347 B.R. 12, 15 (Bankr. D. Del. 2006). The broad terms "totality of circumstances" and "financial situation" "clearly encompass a debtor's ability to pay." In re Lenton, 358 B.R. 651, 663 (Bankr. E.D. Pa. 2006); see also In re Sullivan, 370 B.R. 314, 321 (Bankr. D. Mont. 2007) ("[T]he plain language of § 707(b)(3) . . . is clear and compels a conclusion that a court must consider a debtor's actual debt-paying

[9] The Debtor's brief relies primarily on one of the few decisions going the other way on this issue, In re Nockerts, 357 B.R. 497, 505-07 (Bankr. E.D. Wis. 2006). The Nockerts court, however, based its decision on a line of pre-BAPCPA decisions expressly rejected by this Court in Zolg v. Kelly, 841 F.2d 908, 914 (9th Cir. 1988). Specifically, Nockerts relies heavily on pre-BAPCPA case law holding that under the old section 707(b), the totality of the circumstances test did not permit bankruptcy courts to dismiss a chapter 7 petition based solely on the debtor's ability to repay his debts. See Nockerts, 357 B.R. at 506 (discussing with approval Green v. Staples, 934 F.2d 568 (4th Cir. 1991) and In re Ontiveros, 198 B.R. 284 (C.D. Ill. 1991)). Given that this Court was squarely on the other side of the split over this issue, see Kelly, 841 F.2d at 914 (holding that the totality of the circumstances test did permit dismissal based solely on ability to pay), the analysis in Nockerts is not viable in this Circuit.

ability in ruling on a motion to dismiss based on abuse where the presumption does not arise or is rebutted" (quoting In re Sorrell, 359 B.R. 167 (Bankr. S.D. Ohio 2007)); In re Pak, 343 B.R. 239 (Bankr. N.D. Cal. 2006) ("It would be counterintuitive to construe 'totality of the circumstances' [in section 707(b)(3)] to exclude a consideration of the debtor's ability to pay.").[10]

The Debtor concedes that the totality of a debtor's "financial situation" includes his ability to repay his debts, but claims that such ability cannot be the sole basis for dismissal under section 707(b)(3).[11] Appellant's Br. 18. This contention simply has no basis in the statutory text. "[N]othing in the structure of the 'totality of circumstances' test of § 707(b)(3) suggests that a debtor's ability to repay an obligation must, as a prerequisite for dismissal, be coupled with other factors." In re Haar, 373 B.R. 493, 499-500 (Bankr. N.D. Ohio 2007). If

[10] Although the Debtor attempts to distinguish Pak on the ground that it involved a below-median income debtor, see Appellant's Br. 16, many bankruptcy courts have reached the same conclusion in cases involving above-median debtors. See, e.g., In re Haar, 373 B.R. 493, 498-500 (Bankr. N.D. Ohio 2007); In re Henebury, 361 B.R. 595, 605-07 (Bankr. S.D. Fla. 2007); Hoffner, 2007 WL 4868310, at *3-4; In re Mestemaker, 359 B.R. 849, 853-56 (Bankr. N.D. Ohio 2007); In re Zaporski, 366 B.R. 758, 769-71 (Bankr. E.D. Mich. 2007); Lenton, 358 B.R. at 662-64, 666 n. 27.

[11] As an aside, the notion of ability to pay as a single factor supporting dismissal is somewhat misleading. As one court observed, "When conducting any 'ability to pay' analysis, a court is often considering multiple factors," Haar, 373 B.R. at 500, such as the debtor's assets, liabilities, and expected future income, and whether any of his debts are secured by unnecessary luxury goods.

Congress had intended to impose such a requirement, "it would have done so expressly or by explicit references to § 707(b)(2)(A)." Lenton, 358 B.R. at 663; see also Haar, 373 B.R. at 500 ("[T]he Court will not read into § 707(b)(3) a requirement that does not exist.").

The Debtor attempts to avoid this plain language approach to section 707(b)(3) by arguing that it results "in the means test being nothing but surplusage." Appellant's Br. 18. This argument misunderstands the different functions served by section 707(b)(2) and section 707(b)(3). The means test in section 707(b)(2) compares a debtor's historic income over a limited six month period against a set of standardized expense allowances and some actual expenses. It does not purport to analyze all aspects of a debtor's financial situation, but instead serves a filter for identifying cases in which a presumption of abuse is appropriate. The means test is "simply a mechanism for generating a presumption" and "does not result in any final determination" of abuse. Hoffner, 2007 WL 4868310, at *4; see also Mestemaker, 359 B.R. at 854; Haar, 373 B.R. at 499.

If a presumption of abuse arises under section 707(b)(2), the debtor may rebut a finding of abuse by demonstrating "special circumstances" under section 707(b)(2)(B). If a presumption of abuse does not arise under section 707(b)(2), section 707(b)(3) requires the bankruptcy court to determine whether the debtor's actual ability to pay, based on the totality of his financial resources and liabilities, indicates an abuse of chapter 7. In other words, section 707(b)(2)(B) provides for circumstances where the debtor has fewer financial resources than suggested by the means test, and section 707(b)(3) provides for circumstances where the debtor has greater financial resources than suggested by the means test. See Mestemaker, 359 B.R. at 854 ("Congress has recognized th[e] reality [that the means test is fallible] and has thus provided for rebuttal of the presumption of abuse in cases of actual higher expenses and/or lower income."); Eugene R. Wedoff, Judicial Discretion to Find Abuse Under Section 707(b)(3), 71 Mo. L. Rev. 1035, 1042 (2006) ("The means test . . . does not replace judicial assessment of disposable income. Rather, it sets out a rule for determining disposable income that is only presumptively applicable. When the results of that rule are challenged, either by a debtor under section 707(b)(2) or a creditor under section 707(b)(3), the court is required to make a determination of actual disposable income under judicially defined standards.").

In contrast to the"snapshot" view of income and expenses provided by the means test, section 707(b)(3) requires bankruptcy courts to consider not only the debtor's income and expenses at the time of filing, but also the debtor's assets and liabilities, and any anticipated changes in the debtor's financial situation not reflected on the means test. See In re McUne, 358 B.R. 397, 399 (Bankr. D. Or. 2006) (contrasting the "bright line" approach of section 707(b)(2) with the "generalized review" of section 707(b)(3)); Haar, 373 B.R. at 499 (same). This holistic assessment of the debtor's finances is not only compelled by the plain text and structure of section 707(b), but is consistent with one of Congress's primary goals in reforming the bankruptcy system: ensuring that debtors who actually have the ability to repay a significant portion of their debt do so. See H.R. Rep. No. 109-31(I), at 2-5 (2005) (discussing the importance of debtors repaying creditors "the maximum they can afford"); see also Mestemaker, 359 B.R. at 855.

As a final related matter, the Debtor asserts that the dismissal of his petition under section 707(b)(3) runs afoul of section 707(b)(2)(A)(i), which generates a presumption of abuse when an above-median debtor's disposable income is "25 percent of the debtor's nonpriority unsecured claims in the case, or $6,575 whichever is greater." 11 U.S.C. § 707(b)(2)(A)(i). As discussed throughout this brief, however, the threshold set forth in section 707(b)(2) merely establishes a presumption regarding abuse that is independent from the analysis required by section 707(b)(3). Moreover, the bankruptcy court's calculations actually put the Debtor above the section 707(b)(2) threshold: the court concluded that even being "very generous to the Debtor," the numbers indicated that he would have $8,085 available in disposable income during the applicable chapter 13 commitment period, which is above $6,575 and amounts to 25.9% of the Debtor's unsecured debt. E.R. 136 (listing the Debtor's total unsecured debt as $31,130). In emphasizing the bankruptcy court's observation that the Debtor could repay at 20% of his unsecured debt, see Appellant's Br.10-20, the Debtor fails to recognize that the bankruptcy court arrived at that percentage after deducting administrative fees and attorney fees from his disposable income. E.R. 322. The threshold set forth in section 707(b)(2) applies to disposable income prior to any deduction for administrative fees or attorney fees. As such, the Debtor's comparison between the bankruptcy court's calculation and the threshold in section 707(b)(2) is misplaced.

CONCLUSION

For the foregoing reasons, the order of the bankruptcy court should be affirmed.

THE UNITED STATES TRUSTEE'S BRIEF IN OPPOSITION TO HSBC MORTGAGE CORPORATION (USA)'S MOTION FOR LEAVE TO APPEAL

INTRODUCTION

HSBC's request to appeal a discovery order should be denied for three reasons. First, the order is a routine, non-final discovery order that does not bring an end to litigation on the merits. Second, Sixth Circuit law prohibits immediate review of discovery orders under the collateral-order doctrine because they are not sufficiently urgent or effectively unreviewable on appeal from a final judgment. Third, Sixth Circuit law also prohibits discretionary interlocutory review of discovery orders because they are reviewed for abuse of discretion, and discretionary rulings are not appropriate for interlocutory review. In short, this Court should follow its recent decision in In re Gray, No. 2:11-10640, slip op. (E.D. Mich. Mar. 15, 2011) (Cook, J.) (Exhibit A), and hold that HSBC may not appeal a Rule 2004 order immediately under any theory of appellate jurisdiction.

FACTUAL AND PROCEDURAL BACKGROUND

The United States Trustee, an officer of the United States Department of Justice, sought discovery from HSBC after HSBC filed a proof of claim asserting a pre-petition escrow shortage on a loan that was not subject to escrow. See United States Trustee's Motion for Order Authorizing

Examination of HSBC Mortgage Corporation USA and Requiring Production of Documents Pursuant to Bankruptcy Rule 2004 (the "Rule 2004 Motion"). (Bankr. Dkt. 68.)

The United States Trustee is an official designated by Congress to be the "watchdog" who guards against fraud and abuse of the bankruptcy system. See H.R. Rep. No. 95-595 at 87 (1977), reprinted in 1978 U.S.C.C.A.N. 5963, 6049 ("The proposed United States Trustees will . . . serve as bankruptcy watch-dogs to prevent fraud, dishonesty, and overreaching in the bankruptcy arena."). United States Trustees "are responsible for 'protecting the public interest and ensuring that bankruptcy cases are conducted according to law.'" Adams v. Zarnel (In re Zarnel), 619 F.3d 156, 162 (2d Cir. 2010) (quoting Morgenstern v. Revco D.S., Inc. (In re Revco D.S., Inc.), 898 F.2d 498, 499 (6th Cir. 1990)). In light of the widespread concern that mortgage servicers have failed to verify the accuracy of documents submitted to courts, United States Trustees throughout the country are carefully reviewing the proofs of claims and other filings by mortgage servicers.

In this case, HSBC filed a proof of claim asserting a pre-petition escrow shortage of $15,903.39. See Claims Register for Case No. 10-50910, Claim 12-1. The debtor objected because there is not "an escrow account associated with this mortgage, and [the debtor] is not aware one ever existing." (Bankr. Dkt. 37 at 5). Despite the escrow shortage amounting to more than half of HSBC's total arrearage claim of $28,973.51, HSBC did not oppose the debtor's objection. The bankruptcy court sustained the objection and reduced HSBC's arrearage to $13,070.12. (Bankr. Dkt. 62).

Subsequently, the United States Trustee sought information from HSBC by way of a document production and an examination under Federal Rule of Bankruptcy Procedure 2004 ("Rule 2004"). That rule allows, upon motion of any party in interest, for "any entity" to be examined regarding "any matter which may affect the administration of the debtor's estate." Fed. R. Bankr.

P. 2004(a), (b). Such an examination is very similar to a deposition. The scope of discovery permitted under Rule 2004, however, is broader than that permitted under the Federal Rules of Civil Procedure. In re Wilcher, 56 B.R. 428, 433 (Bankr. N.D. Ill. 1985). Indeed, a Rule 2004 examination is "commonly recognized as permitting discovery in the nature of a 'fishing expedition.'" In re Washington Mutual, Inc., 408 B.R. 45, 50 (Bankr. D. Del. 2009) (citation omitted); see Teleglobe USA, Inc. v. BCE, Inc. (In re Teleglobe Commc'ns Corp), 493 F.3d 345, 354 (3d Cir. 2007) (describing Rule 2004 as allowing parties in interest to "conduct discovery" regarding potential causes of action).

The Rule 2004 Motion explained that the inaccurate proof of claim raised questions concerning "HSBC's bankruptcy procedures in this case." (Bankr. Dkt. 68 at 6). The Rule 2004 Motion also explained that "[t]he attempt to collect [the] escrow shortage by including it in the Proof of Claim may be an abuse of the bankruptcy process." Id. at 3. With respect to these concerns, the United States Trustee sought information from HSBC regarding:

- The total arrearage on the debtor's account;
- The validity of the escrow shortage charged to the debtor's account;
- The debtor's objection to HSBC's Proof of Claim in this case;
- HSBC's policies and procedures applicable to the debtor's account, for referring a proof of claim; and
- The documents or other information relied on in referring the Proof of Claim.

Id.

HSBC opposed the discovery, (Bankr. Dkt. 70), but the bankruptcy court issued an order granting the Rule 2004 Motion after a hearing (the "Rule 2004 Order"). (Bankr. Dkt. 90). HSBC now seeks leave to appeal this interlocutory discovery order. (Bankr. Dkt. 99.[1])

STATUTORY FRAMEWORK

Federal district courts have jurisdiction to hear appeals from final judgments, orders, and decrees entered by bankruptcy judges, and, under the collateral-order doctrine, appeals from a narrow class of bankruptcy orders that would otherwise be considered interlocutory. 28 U.S.C. § 158(a)(1). Interlocutory orders, i.e., orders that are not final, issued by bankruptcy judges may be appealed only where the district court grants leave to appeal, a decision wholly within the district court's discretion. See 28 U.S.C. § 158(a)(3).

A party seeking leave to appeal an interlocutory bankruptcy order may file a motion for leave under Federal Rule of Bankruptcy Procedure 8003 ("Rule 8003"). The motion is filed in the bankruptcy court, but decided by the district court. Fed. R. Bankr. P. 8003(b). This Court analyzes a motion for leave under Rule 8003(b) using the standards applicable to requests for interlocutory appeals under 28 U.S.C. § 1292(b), which provides in pertinent part:

> When a district judge, in making in a civil action an order not otherwise appealable under this section, shall be of the opinion that such order involves a controlling question of law as to which there is substantial ground for difference of opinion and > that an immediate appeal from the order may materially advance the ultimate termination of the litigation, he shall so state in writing in such order.

28 U.S.C. § 1292(b); In re ASC Inc., 386 B.R. at 195 (applying section 1292(b) standards in analyzing whether to allow an interlocutory bankruptcy appeal).

[1] HSBC also filed a motion to stay the Rule 2004 Order. On March 8, 2011, the bankruptcy court denied this motion. (Bankr. Dkt. 110.)

ARGUMENT

A. The bankruptcy court's order granting discovery under Rule 2004 is not a final, appealable order.

"A final decision generally is one which ends the litigation on the merits and leaves nothing for the court to do but execute the judgment." United States ex rel. Pogue v. Diabetes Treatment Centers of Am., Inc., 444 F.3d 462, 471 (6th Cir. 2006); Am. Specialty Cars Holdings, LLC v. Official Comm. of Unsecured Creditors of ASC Inc. (In re ASC Inc.), 386 B.R. 187, 193-94 (E.D. Mich. 2008). The final judgment rule is important because it "prevents 'piecemeal appeals,' the allowance of which can undermine the independence of the district judge, obstruct the resolution of just claims by means of harassment and cost, or generally prevent efficient judicial administration." Id.

Under the "flexible and pragmatic approach to finality," an order is final in bankruptcy when it "disposes of a discrete dispute within the larger case" and "end[s] litigation on the merits." Winget v. JP Morgan Chase Bank, N.A., 537 F.3d 565, 578 (6th Cir. 2008) (citing Morton v. Morton (In re Morton), 298 B.R. 301, 303 (B.A.P. 6th Cir. 2003)); accord Zedan v. Habash, 529 F.3d 398, 402 (7th Cir. 2008) ("[T]he test we have utilized to determine finality . . . is whether an order resolves a discrete dispute that, but for the continuing bankruptcy, would have been a stand-alone suit."). This approach accounts for how a single bankruptcy case may contain distinct sub-proceedings, "many of which may constitute individual lawsuits had a bankruptcy petition never been filed." Jove Eng'g, Inc. v. IRS, 92 F.3d 1539, 1547-48 (11th Cir. 1996) (citation omitted) (holding that an order granting relief based on a violation of the automatic stay is a final, appealable order because it resolves the debtor's claim for relief against a creditor for the violation).

An order granting discovery under Rule 2004 is not a final order because it does not render a decision that brings litigation on the merits to a close. In re Gray, No. 2:11-10640, slip op. at 12 (E.D. Mich. Mar. 15, 2011) (Cook, J.) (Exhibit A). Instead, a Rule 2004 examination is a "far-ranging" investigatory tool that is commonly used to reveal evidence prior to initiating litigation within the bankruptcy case, whereupon the discovery provisions of the Federal Rules of Civil Procedure — as incorporated through Fed. R. Bankr. P. 9014(c) (contested matters) and 7026-37 (adversary complaints) — apply. 9 Collier on Bankruptcy § 2004.01[1]. See Teleglobe, 493 F.3d at 354 (describing Rule 2004 as allowing parties in interest to "conduct discovery" regarding potential causes of action); see also In re Symington, 209 B.R. 678, 684 (Bankr. D. Md. 1997) (explaining Rule 2004 examinations).

Rule 2004 examinations allow parties in interest to discover assets, examine transactions, and determine whether wrongdoing has occurred. In re Enron Corp., 281 B.R. 836, 840 (Bankr. S.D.N.Y. 2002). This tool is used by creditors, debtors, and the United States Trustee alike, and is integral to routine matters of case administration, including:

- Obtaining relief from bankruptcy petition preparers. 11 U.S.C. § 110.
- Determining whether professional fees are reasonable. 11 U.S.C. §§ 329, 330.
- Obtaining relief from violations of the automatic stay. 11 U.S.C.§ 362.
- Objecting to proofs of claim and administrative expenses. 11 U.S.C.§ 502.
- Determining whether a debt is exempt from discharge. 11 U.S.C. § 523.
- Recovering property of the estate held by third parties. 11 U.S.C. § 542.
- Recovering preferential payments to creditors. 11 U.S.C. § 547.
- Recovering fraudulent transfers or obligations. 11 U.S.C. § 548.
- Dismissing or converting a chapter 7 case. 11 U.S.C. § 707.
- Objecting to the debtor's discharge. 11 U.S.C. § 727.

- Investigating matters relevant to a reorganization plan. 11 U.S.C. § 1103(c)(2).
- Requesting the appointment of a chapter 11 trustee. 11 U.S.C. § 1104.
- Dismissing or converting a chapter 11 case. 11 U.S.C. § 1112(b).
- Requesting sanctions for litigation misconduct. Fed. R. Bankr. P. 9011.

Rule 2004 provides an efficient and inexpensive mechanism for potential litigants to evaluate whether an action should be brought. But an order permitting or denying a Rule 2004 examination is not a final order because it does not allow or foreclose any litigant's right to bring or maintain such bankruptcy causes of actions.

Furthermore, the Sixth Circuit's concerns about "piecemeal appeals" are even more heightened in the bankruptcy context. Diabetes Treatment Centers of Am., 444 F.3d at 471. Time is of the essence under the Bankruptcy Code and Rules, which establish short, fixed deadlines for many causes of action, including:

- If the United States Trustee seeks to have an individual chapter 7 case dismissed for abuse, the motion must be brought no later than 40 days after the meeting of the creditors. 11 U.S.C. § 704(b).
- Any action by a case trustee to recover property of the estate under sections 547 or 548 must be brought no later than two years after the case was filed, one year after the trustee was first appointed, or before the case is closed. 11 U.S.C. § 546.
- A complaint objecting to a chapter 7 debtor's discharge must be brought no later than 60 days after the meeting of the creditors. Fed. R. Bankr. P. 4004(a).

Allowing immediate appeals of Rule 2004 orders would have severe consequences for the administration of bankruptcy cases. Litigants could then bring appeals to the district court one discovery order at a time, which would (1) obstruct the ability for opposing parties to meet such statutory deadlines and (2) dramatically increase the cost and time required to administer the estate. See Hyundai Translead, Inc. v. Jackson Truck & Trailer Repair, Inc. (In re Trailer Source, Inc.), 555 F.3d 231, 236 (6th Cir. 2009) (emphasizing the importance of the "efficient and orderly administration of estates”).

Despite this, HSBC argues that the Rule 2004 Order is sufficiently final because (1) it resolves “the only present dispute” between HSBC and the United States Trustee and (2) “there is nothing left” for the bankruptcy court to do with respect to the Rule 2004 order, so there will be no later opportunity for an appeal. Bankr. Dkt. 99 at 11. Both arguments are without merit.

The first argument fails because, as this Court recently held in a directly analogous case, a Rule 2004 discovery order does not “finally dispose of [a] discrete dispute.” Gray, slip op. at 12 (citing In re Dental Profile, Inc., No. 09-C-6160, 2010 WL 431590, at *2 (N.D. Ill. Feb. 1, 2010) (Exhibit B) (“[T]he order granting leave to conduct a Rule 2004 examination in no way ‘resolves a discrete dispute’ but is only a discovery order for information that will allow both sides to present evidence in the dispute.”). Similarly, this Court has also observed that a bankruptcy order providing “for discovery . . . suggest[s] that no final judgment or decree has been entered.” In re Smelser, 327 B.R. 815, 817 (E.D. Mich. 2005) (dismissing interlocutory appeal). HSBC’s status as a third party to the bankruptcy case does not change the default rule that discovery orders are not final, appealable orders. See Cunningham v. Hamilton Cnty., 527 U.S. 198, 204 n.4 (1999) (“[W]e have repeatedly held that a witness subject to a discovery order, but not held in contempt, generally may not appeal the order.”).

The second argument fails because HSBC may appeal after a final order is entered later in the case. “[T]he law is well settled that an appeal from a final judgment draws into question all prior non-final rulings and orders.” McLaurin v. Fischer, 768 F.2d 98, 101 (6th Cir. 1985).
At that point — after a contested matter, adversary proceeding, contempt citation, or the closing of the case — HSBC will be able to obtain effective review of the discovery order. See Mohawk Indus., Inc. v. Carpenter, 130 S. Ct. 599, 606-07 (2009) (explaining how “post-judgment appeals generally suffice to protect the rights of litigants" with respect to discovery orders).

This Court has held that a Rule 2004 order is not a final, appealable order because "issues might arise that require further action from the Bankruptcy Court." Gray, slip op. at 12. Other courts around the country that agree. See In re Vance, 165 F.3d 34 (Table), 1998 WL 783728, *1 (7th Cir. Nov. 2, 1998)(Exhibit C) (citing In re Towers Fin. Corp., 164 B.R. 719, 720 (S.D.N.Y. 1994)); Aetna Cas. & Sur. Co. v. Glinka, 154 B.R. 862, 868 (D. Vt. 1993); In re Blinder, Robinson & Co., 127 B.R. 267, 272 (D. Colo. 1991));[2] see also Kaiser Group Int'l, Inc. v. Mittal Steel Ostrava, a.s. (In re Kaiser Group Int'l, Inc.), 400 B.R. 140, 145 (D. Del. 2009) (holding order denying a Rule 2004 examination was not final and not appealable as of right or under the criteria for allowing interlocutory appeals); In re Midwest Video Games, Inc., No. 98-C-3836, 1998 WL 395152, at *1 (N.D. Ill. July 9, 1998) (Exhibit D) (same with respect to an order granting a Rule 2004 examination); Gache v. Balaber-Strauss, 198 B.R. 662, 664-65 (S.D.N.Y. 1996) (same).

And in other appeals like this one, courts have rejected attempts by mortgage lenders to obtain interlocutory review of orders granting the United States Trustee discovery under Rule 2004. See Countrywide Home Loans, Inc. v. Office of the United States Trustee, No. 08-617, 2008 WL 2388285, *4-*6 (W.D. Pa. June 11, 2008)(Exhibit E) (dismissing appeal from Rule 2004 exam order as non-final, rejecting mortgage lender's arguments for appeal under collateral-order doctrine and 28 U.S.C. §§ 158(a)(1) and (3), and observing, "I find no reason to depart from the general rule disallowing appeals as of right of discovery orders, even under the more liberal bankruptcy perspective on finality."); In re Del Castillo, Case No. 08-20020-mc-Altonaga (S.D. Fla. Feb. 8, 2008) (Exhibit F) (finding that an order overruling mortgage lender's objections to a similar Rule 2004 Notice of Examination and Subpoena Duces Tecum served by the United States Trustee was neither final nor appealable).

[2] In Blinder, the court held that a Rule 2004 order was not a final, appealable order, but stated in dictum that "[t]his is not to say that all appeals from Rule 2004 orders are non-final." Blinder, 127 B.R. at 272. The Blinder court did so because it observed that, in 1991, there was little authority analyzing the non-finality of Rule 2004 orders. That is no longer the case in 2011, when courts routinely hold that Rule 2004 orders are not final. Courts subsequently considering this language in Blinder have expressly labeled it as dictum. See Towers Fin. Corp., 164 B.R. at 720 ("Since appellants have been unable to find a case in which an order denying a Rule 2004 examination was considered a final order, they rely on dictum in Blinder to argue that bankruptcy court discovery orders are not always interlocutory.") (citation omitted).

The two cases that HSBC relies upon provide no basis for treating the Rule 2004 Order here any differently. Bankr. Dkt. 99 at 11-12. Buckner v. Okla. Tax. Comm'n (In re Buckner), No. 00-073, 2001 WL 992063, at *2 (B.A.P. 10th Cir. Aug. 30, 2001) (Exhibit G), concerned a Rule 2004 examination that was (1) ordered after the chapter 13 reorganization plan had been confirmed and (2) in a separate proceeding after the case had come to an end. The unusual state of facts in Buckner makes any comparison to this case inapposite. In re Palmquist, No. 94-1475, 1995 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 9464 (W.D. Wash. June 15, 1995), does not even discuss the issue of finality. Instead, it merely states that a Rule 2004 examination is a final judgment and cites Blinder. Id. at *2.

Therefore, this Court should hold that it does not have jurisdiction over HSBC's appeal under 28 U.S.C. § 158(a)(1) because the Rule 2004 Order is not a final, appealable order.

B. The bankruptcy court's order granting discovery under Rule 2004 is not appealable under the collateral-order doctrine.

This Court should not hold that jurisdiction exists under the collateral-order doctrine. Generally, the collateral-order doctrine allows for interlocutory appellate review of a narrow class of non-final orders that "finally determine claims of right separable from, and collateral to, rights asserted in the action, too important to be denied review and too independent of the cause itself to require the appellate consideration be deferred until the whole case is adjudicated." Cohen v. Beneficial Indus. Loan Corp., 337 U.S. 541, 546 (1949).

Under the collateral-order doctrine, a party may take an appeal from a non-final order if it "(1) conclusively determines a disputed issue; (2) resolves an issue separate from the merits of the action that is too important to be denied review; and (3) will be effectively unreviewable on appeal from a final judgment." Mohawk Indus., 130 S. Ct. at 605 (emphasis added). Here, the Rule 2004 Order fails this test. See Gray, slip op. at 14.

1. Routine discovery disputes do not "conclusively determine a disputed issue" are not "too important to be denied review."

The Rule 2004 Order fails the first requirement because a " Rule 2004 order does not finally or conclusively determine a claim of right." Gray, slip op. at 14. After all, HSBC does not explain how the order determines or infringes upon a right. (Bankr. Dkt. 99 at 13.)

The Rule 2004 Order also fails the second requirement because the movant must show "sufficiently urgent questions to merit an exception to the traditional final-judgment rule." Swanson v. DeSantis, 606 F.3d 829, 833 (6th Cir. 2010). Compare id. (holding that the issue of whether a habeas corpus petition should be dismissed for the petitioner's failure to comply with the "total exhaustion" requirement was not significant enough to merit interlocutory review) with Lowe v. Hamilton Cnty. Dep't of Job & Family Serv., 610 F.3d 321, 323 (6th Cir. 2010) (holding that the denial of a claim of sovereign immunity is significant enough to merit interlocutory review because it provides an immunity from trial).

Again, HSBC does not even contend that the order raises "sufficiently urgent" questions in any way — such as by requiring the production of privileged documents — that would elevate this matter above the level of a routine discovery dispute. (Bankr. Dkt. 99 at 13.) Nor could it, as a protective order is in place. (Bankr. Dkt. 109.) Thus, this discovery dispute does not provide justification "sufficiently strong to overcome the usual benefits of deferring appeal until litigation concludes." See Diabetes Treatment Centers of Am., Inc., 444 F.3d at 473 (noting that while some circuits apply the collateral-order doctrine to interlocutory discovery appeals involving privilege, the Sixth Circuit has not allowed such interlocutory appeals and "has traditionally viewed mandamus as the sole method by which we might review a discovery order involving a claim of privilege.").

2. HSBC may obtain effective review of the Rule 2004 Order after final judgment.

As to the third requirement, there is no risk that the discovery order here would be effectively unreviewable until after a final judgment is entered. After all, HSBC may pursue an immediate appeal using the traditional method for obtaining immediate appellate review of discovery orders, which remains unchanged for over 100 years and is equally applicable to a Rule 2004 examination order — a party "seeking to appeal a discovery order must first disobey the order and suffer a contempt citation," and then appeal from the contempt order. Id. at 471 (citing Alexander v. United States, 201 U.S. 117 (1906)).[3]

HSBC does not appeal from a contempt order here. And nothing prevents HSBC from pursuing an effective post-judgment appeal. Although it argues that producing any documents before it can have its appeal heard may render the appeal moot, (Bankr. Dkt. 99 at 14), it fails to demonstrate why an appellate court could not provide relief after a final order has been entered.

In cases where a discovery order is reversed after the discovery has already been provided, courts may order the return of documents, enjoin any future use of the discovery, and remand for a new trial with the documents excluded from evidence. Mohawk Indus., 130 S. Ct. at 606-07 (holding that even the improper disclosure of privileged material may be remedied in this manner); see, e.g.,

[3] Exceptions to this rule are narrow. For instance, the Supreme Court permitted the President to appeal a district court's refusal to quash a subpoena duces tecum without his first being held in contempt because it would have been unseemly for the court to require the head of a coordinate branch of government to subject himself to contempt as a prerequisite for appeal. See United States v. Nixon, 418 U.S. 683, 691 (1974). Under Sixth Circuit law, the only alternative to contempt review is a petition for a writ of mandamus. Diabetes Treatment Centers of Am., 444 F.3d at 472-73. HSBC has not sought mandamus here.

Church of Scientology of Cal. v. United States, 506 U.S. 9, 15 n.9 (1992) (holding, in an appeal from a discovery order where discovery already had been produced, "this case is not moot because if the summons were improperly issued or enforced a court could order that the [produced] copies of the tapes be either returned or destroyed").

For those reasons, the law of the Sixth Circuit prohibits the review of discovery orders under the collateral order doctrine. "Discovery orders are not reviewable on an interlocutory basis . . . under the collateral order doctrine." In re Professionals Direct Ins. Co., 578 F.3d 432, 438 (6th Cir. 2009); Diabetes Treatment Centers of Am., Inc., 444 F.3d at 472 ("This court has repeatedly held, however, that discovery orders are generally not appealable under the collateral order doctrine.") (reviewing the case law).

Rather, apparently conceding that Mohawk precludes appeal under the collateral-order doctrine, HSBC asks this Court to relax the standard "[b]ecause this case involves a bankruptcy court ruling." (Bankr. Dkt. 99 at 14 n.5.) That is no basis for such an exception. The Supreme Court and Sixth Circuit authority is uniform in emphasizing that the collateral-order doctrine should be interpreted narrowly. See Mohawk Indus., 130 S. Ct. at 605 ("[W]e have stressed that it must never be allowed to swallow the general rule."); Will v. Hallock, 546 U.S. 345, 350 (2006) ("[W]e have not mentioned applying the collateral order doctrine without emphasizing its modest scope."); Swanson, 606 F.3d at 833 (stating that "courts have vigilantly preserved the narrow confines of the collateral order doctrine").

Accordingly, this Court has previously held that orders granting or denying Rule 2004 exams are not appealable under the collateral-order doctrine. Gray, slip op. at 14. Other courts across the country agree. See, e.g., Countrywide Home Loans, Inc., 2008 WL 2388285, *4-*6 (Exhibit E) (rejecting mortgage lender's arguments for appeal under collateral-order doctrine). Therefore, this Court should hold that the collateral-order doctrine is inapplicable here.

C. The criteria for a discretionary interlocutory appeal are not met.

This Court uses the criteria found in 28 U.S.C. § 1292(b) to determine whether to grant a discretionary interlocutory bankruptcy appeal under 28 U.S.C. § 158(a)(3). See In re ASC Inc., 386 B.R. at 195 (applying section 1292(b) standards in analyzing whether to allow an interlocutory bankruptcy appeal). Section 1292(b) requires that (1) the order involve a controlling question of law, (2) as to which there is substantial ground for difference of opinion, and that (3) an immediate appeal from the order may materially advance the ultimate termination of the litigation. 28 U.S.C. § 1292(b). Review "is granted sparingly and only in exceptional cases." W. Tenn. Chapter of Assoc. Builders & Contractors, Inc. v. City of Memphis, 293 F.3d 345, 350 (6th Cir. 2002). Here, none of those requirements exist.

1. There are no "controlling issues of law" in this case; HSBC instead complains that the factual record did not provide sufficient cause to order the discovery.

In analyzing the first factor of the test for interlocutory appeals, this Court must determine whether there is a "controlling question of law." A controlling question of law is "a 'pure' question of law rather than merely an issue that might be free from a factual contest." Ahrenholz v. Bd. of Trustees of Univ. of Ill., 219 F.3d 674, 677 (7th Cir. 2000). It is "something the court of appeals could decide quickly and cleanly without having to study the record . . . [not an issue that] requires hunting through the record . . . ." Id. A "controlling question of law" is an "an abstract issue of law, . . . suitable for determination by an appellate court without a trial record." Id.; In re Brentwood Golf Club, L.L.C., 329 B.R. 239, 243 (E.D. Mich. 2005) (denying discretionary interlocutory review under 28 U.S.C. § 158(a)(3) and citing Ahrenholz, 219 F.3d at 676-77).

An "allegation of abuse of discretion on an evidentiary ruling does not create a legal issue under section 1292(b)." City of Memphis, 293 F.3d at 351; see 8 Fed. Prac. & Proc. Civ. § 2006 (3d ed.) ("Ordinarily it is difficult to believe that a discovery order will present a controlling question of law or that an immediate appeal will materially advance the termination of the litigation."). Because discovery rulings are discretionary, they are not appropriate for interlocutory review under section 1292(b). Mortg. Elec. Registration Sys., Inc. v. Jones, No. 09-10321, 2009 WL 646623, *2 (E.D. Mich. March 11, 2009) (citing City of Memphis) (Exhibit H); see, e.g., Proctor v. U.S. Dep't of Educ., 196 Fed. App'x 345, 347 (6th Cir. 2006) (stating that a trial court "enjoys broad discretion in handling discovery disputes").

Although HSBC argues that this appeal presents controlling issues of law, its contentions of legal error challenge the bankruptcy court's application of discretion to a factual dispute. Nothing in the Rule 2004 Order purports — as HSBC claims — to order discovery outside of the scope of Rule 2004 or to allow a Rule 2004 examination without showing good cause. (Bankr. Dkt. 99 at 15-16.) Rather, as HSBC's argument on the second factor reveals, these issues are fact-driven inquiries. The first argument it raises is whether the discovery order regarding HSBC's policies and procedures has a bearing on the administration of the bankruptcy case. Id. The second is whether there was an insufficient showing of good cause. Id. But these are factual disputes that require an examination of the record to resolve. Even HSBC admits that the question it is attempting to present on appeal is "whether the bankruptcy court abused its discretion" by ordering discovery. (Bankr. Dkt. 99 at 9.)

As this Court has held in an analogous case, the Rule 2004 Order "is not the type of pure legal issue that counsels for interlocutory review." Gray, slip op. at 16. And because there is no controlling question of law at issue, there can be no substantial ground for a difference of opinion about it. C*f. Ahrenholz,* 219 F.3d at 676 (stopping analysis after finding no "controlling question of law" and stating "[u]nless all these criteria [for interlocutory appeal under 28 U.S.C.

§ 1292(b)] are satisfied, the district court may not and should not certify its order . . . for an immediate appeal").

2. Immediate appeal will not advance the ultimate termination of the litigation.

HSBC's final argument also fails. It contends that immediate appeal will advance the ultimate termination of the litigation because this discovery dispute is "the only dispute pending between the UST and HSBC." (Bankr. Dkt. 99 at 18.) But HSBC overlooks that the proceedings below may still continue. Although Rule 2004 is a discovery tool with similarities to discovery under Fed. R. Civ. P. 26, it is a discovery tool that allows for pre-litigation discovery. A Rule 2004 examination is undertaken before the filing of an adversary proceeding or a motion, and is normally conducted in the absence of a pending adversary proceeding or contested matter. See supra Part A.

As this Court held in Gray, "in light of the role of Rule 2004 examinations in pre-litigation discovery, the current appeal, if permitted, would prolong rather than hasten the termination of the litigation." Gray, slip op. at 16. See, e.g., White v. Nix, 43 F.3d 374, 378 (8th Cir. 1994) (stating that the resolution of a "discovery dispute does little to advance the ultimate termination of the litigation and results only in delay"). A Rule 2004 examination advances the ultimate termination of the litigation no more than any other discovery order in non-bankruptcy civil litigation. That is to say, it does not. It remains entirely possible that an adversary complaint or contested matter may arise between the United States Trustee and HSBC. An immediate appeal would not terminate such litigation — it would protract it. Gray, slip op. at 16.

CONCLUSION

For all of these reasons, this Court should deny HSBC's motion for leave to appeal. The majority of courts, including a recent decision by this Court in an analogous courts, have denied similar motions for interlocutory appeal. So, too, should this Court.

Respectfully submitted,

In re:

DERRICK GRAY,

Debtor.

Case No. 11-10640
Honorable Julian Abele Cook, Jr.

ORDER

On June 29, 2010, the debtor, Derrick Gray, filed a voluntary bankruptcy petition under Chapter 13 of the bankruptcy code. Wells Fargo Bank, N.A. ("Wells Fargo") - a secured creditor by virtue of holding and servicing a mortgage loan secured by Gray's real property - filed a proof of claim in which it itemized fees that it claimed Gray owed. This itemization included certain fees - denominated "Inspection Fees" and "Other Advance - Property Preservation" - the necessity and reasonableness of which the United States Trustee ("Trustee") questioned. The Trustee filed a motion in which he requested an order from the Bankruptcy Court for Wells Fargo to produce certain documents and appear for an examination pursuant to Bankruptcy Rule 2004. Wells Fargo opposed the motion. After a hearing, the Bankruptcy Judge granted the Trustee's request. Currently before the Court is Wells Fargo's motion for leave to appeal the Bankruptcy Court's order.

I.

Before the Trustee filed the Rule 2004 motion in the Bankruptcy Court, he sent a letter to Wells Fargo in which he requested clarification of the nature of $105 in fees denominated

"Other Advance - Property Preservation." Wells Fargo responded to this request by listing the dates on which property preservation services were performed and providing "all of the invoices, work orders, and inspection reports for each of the seven property inspections that made up the $105 charge." (Appellant's Mot. for Leave at 3). It appears that inspections performed before foreclosure were charged as "Inspection Fees," but inspections performed after foreclosure were charged as "Property Preservation" fees.

The Trustee questioned whether so many inspections were necessary and whether the associated fees were reasonable, and thus filed his Rule 2004 motion for document production and an examination. The Trustee sought to examine Wells Fargo on the following topics: (1) the total arrearage on Gray's account; (2) the reasonableness of the inspection fees imposed against Gray's account; (3) Wells Fargo's policies and procedures applicable to Gray's account in (a) ordering an inspection and (b) referring a proof of claim; and (4) documents and other information relied on in referring the proof of claim. In addition, the Trustee sought a subpoena duces tecum compelling Wells Fargo to produce the following documents: (1) all communication sent to Gray between May 1, 2009, and June 29, 2010; (2) all documents constituting Wells Fargo's records of Gray's account; (3) all aspects of any agreements between Wells Fargo and a default servicer associated with the Gray case; (4) Wells Fargo's policies and procedures applicable to the Gray case concerning (a) the ordering of and accounting for inspections and property preservation fees; (b) filing proofs of claims on its accounts; and (5) all documents that Wells Fargo relied upon in referring the Gray account for a proof of claim.

At a hearing on the Rule 2004 motion, the Trustee acknowledged that the motivation behind his letter to Wells Fargo - to wit, his concern that Wells Fargo was "double dipping" by charging twice, once under each denominated category of fees, for home inspections - was alleviated by Wells Fargo's responsive letter. (1/19/11 Hr'g Tr. at 4:14-21, attached as Ex. B to Appellant's Mot. for Leave). However, the Trustee stated that he continued to be concerned about the reasonableness of those fees as well as the necessity of performing so many home inspections. (Trustee's Resp. at 2). Wells Fargo objected to the examination, arguing that the "double dipping" theory lacked legal or factual basis and therefore the Trustee had not demonstrated the "good cause" required to support a request for Rule 2004 examination. Moreover, Wells Fargo maintained that the documents and topics encompassed by the request exceeded the permissible scope of a Rule 2004 examination.

In response, the Trustee argued that - even leaving aside the "double dipping" issue - there was still good cause for the examination because: (1) Wells Fargo's labeling of inspections differently depending on whether they were done before or after foreclosure lacked transparency and made it difficult for parties to determine if fees were reasonable; (2) a pre-foreclosure inspection was performed in early December and a post-foreclosure inspection was performed in late December, which appears, on its face, to be unreasonable; and (3) the existence of separate tracking systems pre- and post-foreclosure may - as here - result in unnecessary inspections and raise the specter of Well Fargo attempting to collect unreasonable fees through the bankruptcy process. (1/19/11 Hr'g Tr. at 4:14-5:23).

During the hearing, the Bankruptcy Judge inquired whether the fact that Wells Fargo filed a proof of claim might not be sufficient, by itself, to constitute good cause for a Rule 2004 examination. Separately, the Bankruptcy Judge referred to academic studies that demonstrated that approximately half of mortgage claims contain errors, and suggested that that fact, by itself, might be sufficient to constitute not only good cause - but an obligation - for the Trustee to investigate the reasonableness of the fees reflected in the claim.

On February 10, 2011, the Bankruptcy Court entered an order in which it granted the Trustee's request for a Rule 2004 examination and the issuance of a subpoena duces tecum. Wells Fargo presents three questions on appeal; to wit, whether the Bankruptcy Court (1) erred as a matter of law by permitting the Trustee to proceed with a Rule 2004 examination that exceeds the permissible scope of a Rule 2004 exam; (2) erred as a matter of law by not requiring the Trustee to demonstrate good cause for the requested examination; and (3) abused its discretion in finding that the Trustee had met his burden of demonstrating good cause.

Wells Fargo timely filed a notice of appeal of, and motion for leave to appeal, the Rule 2004 order, and has separately filed the following motions related to its appeal: (1) emergency motion to stay the Rule 2004 order pending this appeal; (2) motion to expedite the motion to stay; and (3) motion for leave to file a reply brief in further support of its motion to appeal. In a prior order, the Court granted the last-listed motion.

Wells Fargo argues that its appeal to this Court is proper on three separate bases: (1) the Rule 2004 order is a final decision as to which Wells Fargo has an appeal of right and over which the District Court properly has jurisdiction, 28 U.S.C. § 158(a)(1); (2) the challenged order is appealable as of right under the collateral order doctrine of Cohen v. Beneficial Industrial Loan Corp., 337 U.S. 541 (1949); and (3) even if the challenged order is interlocutory, the Court should grant leave to appeal under 28 U.S.C. § 158(a)(3). The Court will consider each argument seriatim.

II.

A federal district court has jurisdiction to hear appeals - and an aggrieved litigant may appeal as of right - from "final judgments, orders, and decrees" of a bankruptcy court. 158 U.S.C. § (a)(1). In the Sixth Circuit, "finality 'is considered in a more pragmatic and less technical way in bankruptcy cases than in other situations.'" Winget v. JP Morgan Chase Bank, N.A., 537 F.3d 565, 578 (6th Cir. 2008) (quoting Lindsey v. O'Brien, Tanksi, Tanzer & Young Health Care Providers of Conn. (In re Dow Corning), 86 F.3d 482, 541-42 (6th Cir. 1996)); see also Millers Cove Energy Co. v. Moore (In re Millers Cove Energy Co.), 128 F.3d 449, 451 (6th Cir. 1997) (citation and internal quotation marks omitted) ("[T]he concept of finality applied to appeals in bankruptcy is broader and more flexible than the concept applied in ordinary civil litigation."). This is so because "[b]ankruptcy cases frequently involve protracted proceedings with many parties participating. . . . [Therefore] courts have permitted appellate review of orders that in other contexts might be considered interlocutory." Dow Corning, 86 F.3d at 488 (quoting A.H. Robins Co. v. Piccinin, 788 F.2d 994, 1009 (4th Cir. 1986)).

The test for finality in the bankruptcy context has often been stated as requiring a showing that the challenged order "finally dispose[s] of discrete disputes within the larger case." E.g., id. (quoting In re Saco Local Dev. Corp., 711 F.3d 441, 444 (1st Cir. 1983)); Intercontinental Enters., Inc. v. Keller (In re Blinder, Robinson & Co. Inc.), 127 B.R. 267, 271 (D. Colo. 1991) (quoting Adelman v. Fourth Nat'l Bank & Trust Co., N.A. (In re Durability, Inc.), 893 F.2d 264, 265 (10th Cir. 1990)) ("The concept of finality . . . . applies 'not in the overall case, but rather the particular adversary proceeding or discrete controversy pursued within the broader framework cast by the petition.'"). This test has also been said to require a showing that the order "ends the litigation on the merits and leaves nothing for the court to do but execute the judgment." E.g., In re Barrett, 337 B.R. 896 (6th Cir. B.A.P. 2006), aff'd, 487 F.3d 353 (6th Cir. 2007); In re Smelser, 327 B.R. 815, 817 (E.D. Mich. 2005).

Analyzing nearly identical language in 28 U.S.C. § 158(d) regarding the jurisdiction of the courts of appeal, the Seventh Circuit has drawn a distinction between "discrete disputes" and "discrete issues," with only the former being subject to immediate appeal. In re Comdisco, Inc., 538 F.3d 647, 651-52 (7th Cir. 2008). A discrete dispute is one that is essentially separable from the larger case, and "disposition of a claim that would be final as a stand-alone suit outside of bankruptcy is also final under § 158(d) in bankruptcy." Id. at 651 (quoting In re Morse Elec. Co., 805 F.2d 262, 265 (7th Cir. 1986)). On the other hand, "a decision or order that resolves only an issue that arises during the administration of a bankruptcy estate is too small a litigation unit to justify treatment as a final judgment." Id.; see also Zedan v. Habash, 529 F.3d 398, 402 (7th Cir. 2008) ("[T]he test we have utilized to determine finality under § 158(d) is whether an order resolves a discrete dispute that, but for the continuing bankruptcy, would have been a stand-alone suit by or against the trustee.").

Wells Fargo and the Trustee have each provided the Court with a list of cases that purportedly support their respective positions with respect to the finality of a Rule 2004 order. After examination of these - and many more - opinions, the Court concludes that those opinions that determine that a Rule 2004 order is not a final judgment are significantly more persuasive.

Most of the cases cited by Wells Fargo are distinctly unpersuasive. Several engage in no analysis of the jurisdictional issue whatsoever, and there is no evidence that the courts even considered the possibility that jurisdiction might not be proper. See First Nat'l Bank v. Scaccia, no. 88-3369, 1988 WL 123332 (E.D. La. Nov. 10, 1988) (accepting review of Rule 2004 order without any jurisdictional analysis); Keene Corp. v. Johns-Manville Corp. (In re Johns-Manville Corp.), 42 B.R. 362 (S.D.N.Y. 1984) (same). Others simply accept that a Rule 2004 order is a final order without any consideration of the relevant tests. See In re Palmquist, No. C94-1475C, 1995 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 9464 (W.D. Wash. June 15, 1995) (citing Blinder, Robinson for the proposition that an "order permitting the taking of the Rule 2004 examination is a final judgment," and engaging in no further jurisdictional analysis, despite the fact that this is not an accurate description of Blinder, Robinson's holding); Euro.-Am. Bank & Trust Co. v. GATX Aircraft Corp. (In re Hawley Coal Mining Corp.), 47 B.R. 392, 393 (S.D.W. Va. 1984) (referring, without analysis, to a Rule 2004 order as a final order); see also Blinder, Robinson, 127 B.R. at 272 (noting that Hawley Coal, Scaccia, and Johns-Manville all failed to engage the jurisdictional question).

Of the cases cited by Wells Fargo, only Buckner v. Oklahoma Tax Commission (In re Buckner), No. 00-073, 2001 WL 992063, at *2 (10th Cir. B.A.P. Aug. 30, 2001),[1] engaged in any jurisdictional analysis. There, the bankruptcy panel held that, where a Rule 2004 motion was filed nearly two years after confirmation of the bankruptcy plan, "the postconfirmation Rule 2004 examination [was] a separate proceeding and there [was] no indication that further action by the bankruptcy court [would] be forthcoming." The panel concluded that the Rule 2004 order was "final for the purposes of appeal under § 158(d)."

On the other hand, the cases cited by the Trustee recognize and - in varying depths - analyze the jurisdictional question. Vance v. Lester (In re Vance), No. 98-1470, 1998 WL

783728, at *1 (7th Cir. Nov. 2, 1998) ("Although neither the district court nor the parties address the issue, we first consider whether we have jurisdiction to review the bankruptcy court's order granting a Rule 2004 examination. A majority of courts that have considered the issue have held that orders granting or denying Rule 2004 examinations are, like discovery orders, interlocutory."); In re Kaiser Grp. Int'l, Inc., 400 B.R. 140, 144 (D. Del. 2009) ("The Debtors also contend that orders denying discovery pursuant to Bankruptcy Rule 2004 are inherently final. However, the majority of courts have reached a contrary conclusion."); In re Midwest Video Games, Inc., No. 98 C 3836, 1998 WL 395152, at *1 (N.D. Ill. July 9, 1998) ("The court declines to accept the appellants' invitation to find that the bankruptcy judge's [Rule 2004] discovery order is final because the bankruptcy judge has indicated that he does not intend to revisit his ruling, as the order is clearly interlocutory, even under the more relaxed standards of finality applicable to bankruptcy cases."); Gache v. Balaber-Strauss, 198 B.R. 662 (S.D.N.Y. 1996) (order granting Rule 2004 examination was not final because, among other reasons, a motion to compel debtor's presence at the exam was still pending before the bankruptcy court); Towers Fin., 164 B.R. 719 (denial of Rule 2004 order was not final, and even if Blinder, Robinson created exception to general rule that bankruptcy discovery orders are not appealable, it would not be applicable there because the possibility existed that the bankruptcy court would take further action); Aetna Cas. & Sur. Co. v. Glinka, 154 B.R. 862, 865 (D. Vt. 1993)("[T]his Court concludes that the [Rule 2004] Examination Order . . . was an interlocutory order. It served as an initial authorization to pursue broad discovery under Bankruptcy Rule 2004.”).[2]

Wells Fargo and the Trustee each claim that Blinder, Robinson supports their respective position. There, the court considered the finality of two bankruptcy court orders, one granting the trustee’s motion for Rule 2004 examinations of various persons and entities that had done business with the debtor, and one granting a motion to close certain of those examinations to other parties on the basis of attorney-client privilege. The court noted that, at that time, there were few cases involving appeals of Rule 2004 orders, and even among those few, the results were inconsistent. 127 B.R. at 272. The court determined that the finality of Rule 2004 orders should be determined not by hard-and-fast rule, but rather on a case-by-case basis. Id. at 272-73. “Where the dispute has been narrowed and there is no indication that further action by the bankruptcy court will be forthcoming, an order concerning Rule 2004 examinations should properly be considered final.” Id. at 273. Applying this test, the court determined that the order granting the Rule 2004 motion was not final because the bankruptcy court had subsequently ruled on a motion related to the scope of the Rule 2004 exam. Id. (“[T]he [Rule 2004] order simply gave the Trustee initial authorization to commence Rule 2004 examinations . . . . It did not finally resolve on the merits [appellant's] dispute regarding the permissible scope to the Rule 2004 examinations."). Conversely, the court determined that the order closing certain of the examinations to other parties was a final order. Id. at 277 ("[T]his appeal involves the discrete issue of the Trustee's entitlement to closed Rule 2004 examinations, and the bankruptcy court's order appears to have fully resolved the parties' dispute.").

---

[2] Wells Fargo asserts that cases such as Vance and Midwest Video are distinguishable because they involved orders for Rule 2004 exams of debtors, who will have later opportunity to appeal because they will remain in the litigation. However, Well Fargo’s argument is significantly undermined by the fact that many other cases - cases that Wells Fargo does not acknowledge - involve Rule 2004 exams of creditors or other third parties. Wells Fargo also suggests that the Court should discount Vance and Midwest Video because the courts had merely “summarily concluded” that Rule 2004 orders to be non-final. In light of the discussion above regarding Wells Fargo’s case citations, this argument is not well taken. Moreover, this argument is misleading in at least two respects: (1) Wells Fargo ignores the fact that Midwest Video did engage in a substantive analysis and critique of Blinder, Robinson in light of the rationale for the finality requirement; and (2) Wells Fargo fails to acknowledge the many other cases that came to the same result after engaging in extensive analysis.

As a general matter, discovery orders are interlocutory and not immediately appealable. E.g., United States ex rel. Pogue v. Diabetes Treatment Ctrs. of Am., Inc., 444 F.3d 462, 471 (6th Cir. 2006) ("Discovery orders generally are not final decisions and cannot be reviewed unless the trial court enters a final judgment disposing of all claims."); Kaiser Grp. Int'l, 400 B.R. at 143 ("Generally, pretrial discovery decisions are not considered to be final decisions subject to immediate appeal, even under ["bankruptcy's"] flexible approach to finality."); Hoffenberg v. Cohen (In re Towers Fin. Corp.), 164 B.R. 719, 720 (S.D.N.Y. 1994) ("Bankruptcy court orders granting or denying discovery do not finally dispose of an entire claim on which relief may be granted, and therefore are generally treated as interlocutory and not appealable as of right."). Moreover, the "majority of courts that have considered the issue have held that orders granting or denying Rule 2004 examinations are, like discovery orders, interlocutory." Vance, 1998 WL 783728, at *1 (listing cases).

Instead of immediate appellate review, "[g]enerally, a party challenging a discovery order has two options: to comply with the order and challenge it at the conclusion of the case; or to refuse to comply with the order and contest its validity if subsequently found in contempt for such refusal." Countrywide Home Loans, Inc. v. Office of the U.S. Trustee, No. 08-617, 2008 WL 2388285 (W.D. Pa. June 11, 2008); see also Aetna Cas. & Sur. Co. v. Glinka, 154 B.R.

862, 867 (D. Vt. 1993) ("To obtain appellate review of an order compelling production or testimony in the rare case when an appeal after final judgment would not cure an erroneous ruling, a witness must refuse to obey the subpoena and suffer an order imposing a contempt penalty."). The Sixth Circuit has recognized the continuing vitality of this rule. Pogue, 444 F.2 at 471 ("The rule laid out in [Alexander v. United States, 201 U.S. 117, 121-22 (1906)] - that an individual seeking to appeal a discovery order must first disobey the order and suffer a contempt citation - remains the general rule today."). Wells Fargo argues that "[s]urely, the [Trustee] does not seriously suggest that a national mortgage service must incur the stigma and negative publicity of a contempt finding by a Bankruptcy Court just to obtain appellate review of a Rule 2004 order." (Reply at 3). However, Wells Fargo fails to explain why a national mortgage service should receive different treatment than any other entity or individual.

In support of its claim that the Rule 2004 order is a final judgment, Wells Fargo argues that the Rule 2004 examination is the only present dispute between Wells Fargo and the Trustee, and the Bankruptcy Court definitively resolved that dispute by ordering the examination. Thus, according to Wells Fargo, there is nothing left for the Bankruptcy Court but to execute the order. However, several courts have rejected exactly this argument, reasoning that the Rule 2004 examination is a potential beginning - not a definitive end - of a dispute. E.g. Countrywide Home Loans, 2008 WL 2388285, at *4 (finding that a Rule 2004 order is not final because, among other reasons, "additional questions may arise as the U.S. Trustee conducts the examinations such as the permissible scope of the examinations and the consequences of any refusal by [the party to be examined] to comply with the examination."). Rule 2004 examinations "allow the court to gain a clear picture of the condition and whereabouts of the bankrupt's estate." Johns-Manville, 42 B.R. at 364. Necessarily, the permissible scope encompasses "[t]he examination of witnesses having knowledge of the debtor's acts, conduct, liabilities, assets, etc. . . . and the inquiry may 'cut a broad swath through the debtor's affairs, those associated with him, and those who might have had business dealings with him.'" Id. (emphasis added) (citation omitted) (quoting In re Mantolesky, 14 B.R. 973, 976 (Bankr. D. Mass. 1981)). Courts have frequently stated that Rule 2004 authorizes parties to engage in "fishing expedition[s]." E.g. Blinder, Robinson, 127 B.R. at 274. The Court cannot predict what, if any, issues may arise as a result of the examinations, nor can it predict whether Wells Fargo will comply with the Rule 2004 order. The fact that issues might arise that require further action from the Bankruptcy Court is sufficient to establish that the Rule 2004 order did not finally dispose of the discrete dispute between Wells Fargo and the Trustee. See, e.g., In re Dental Profile, Inc., No. 09 C 6160, 2010 WL 431590, at *2 (N.D. Ill. Feb. 1, 2010) ("[T]he order granting leave to conduct a Rule 2004 examination in no way 'resolves a discrete dispute' but is only a discovery order for information that will allow both sides to present evidence in the dispute."); Glinka, (because district court could not predict whether party ordered to submit to Rule 2004 examination would comply with order, and, if not, whether bankruptcy court would issue contempt order, "require[d] a finding that the [challenged] order was indeed interlocutory"). The Court thus determines that the Rule 2004 is not a final order.

III.

Wells Fargo next argues that it has an appeal as of right pursuant to the collateral order doctrine articulated by the Supreme Court in Cohen v. Beneficial Industrial Loan Corp., 337 U.S. 541, 546 (1949) (immediate appellate review available for that "small class [of decisions] which finally determine claims of right separable from, and collateral to, rights asserted in the action, too important to be denied review and too independent of the cause itself to require that appellate consideration be deferred until the whole case is adjudicated."). Under this doctrine, an interloctutory order may nevertheless be immediately appealable if it "(1) conclusively determines the disputed question; (2) resolves an important question completely separate from the merits of the action; and (3) is effectively unreviewable on appeal from final judgment." Dow Corning, 86 F.3d at 488 (citing Cohen). As with the rule of finality discussed above, these factors are also applied flexibly in the bankruptcy context. Id. ("These three factors are equally fluid and are applied flexibly in determining whether an order involving a bankruptcy proceeding is reviewable."). However,"if there is doubt whether an order is collateral, the matter should be resolved in favor of finding a nonappealable controversy." In re M.T.G., Inc., 298 B.R. 310, 314 n.8 (E.D. Mich. 2003).

The Sixth Circuit has "repeatedly held . . . that discovery orders are generally not appealable under the collateral order doctrine." Pogue, 444 F.3d at 472. Instead, "to obtain review from this court, a complaining party must disobey the discovery order and incur an appealable contempt citation if that party is able to do so." Id.; see also, e.g., Bowen v. Zach, Nos. 96-4156, 96-4226, 1996 WL 668558, at *1 (citations omitted) ("The typical discovery order does not fall within the 'small class' of orders contemplated by Cohen. Discovery orders need not evade review, and they do not necessarily present the final word on the issue. A party may obtain review of a discovery order by violating the order and incurring sanctions or a finding of contempt. That order is then appealable.").

Wells Fargo's argument founders on the first prong of the Cohen test because, as discussed above, the Rule 2004 order does not finally or conclusively determine a claim of right. Nor is the Rule 2004 order "effectively unreviewable." Again, as discussed above, if Wells Fargo were to refuse to comply with the order, and the Bankruptcy Court adjudged it in contempt, it could seek review of the contempt order. The conclusion that review of a Rule 2004 order cannot be had pursuant to the collateral order doctrine is in accord with other courts that have considered this precise question. See, e.g., In re Del Castillo, No. 08-20020 (S.D. Fla. Feb. 8, 2008) (collateral order doctrine inapplicable to Rule 2004 order because it was unclear whether the bankruptcy court would take further action - for example, by issuing a contempt order - and the appellant had not demonstrated that it could not seek later review); Glinka, 154 B.R. 868 n.8 ("Application of the collateral order doctrine requires a finding that the order [denying motion to quash and directing production of documents for Rule 2004 examination] is effectively unreviewable. The issues raised in this appeal are reviewable in an appeal from a contempt sanction, should one be entered in this case."). The Court thus concludes that the collateral order doctrine is inapplicable here.

IV.

Finally, Wells Fargo argues that the Court should exercise its discretion to grant leave to appeal under 28 U.S.C. § 158(a)(3) ("The district courts of the United States shall have jurisdiction to hear appeals . . . with leave of the court, from other interlocutory orders and decrees [of bankruptcy courts.]"). Section 158 does not establish any standards to guide the district courts' discretion, but, "[i]n the absence of such guidance within the Bankruptcy Rules, appellate courts reviewing the decisions of bankruptcy courts have applied the standards found in 28 U.S.C. § 1292(b)." In re Wicheff, 215 B.R. 839, 844 (6th Cir. B.A.P. 1998). "Under § 1292(b), an appellant seeking review of an interlocutory order must show: (1) the question involved is one of law; (2) the question is controlling; (3) there is substantial ground for difference of opinion respecting the correctness of the [bankruptcy] court's decision; and (4) an immediate appeal would materially advance the ultimate termination of the litigation." Id. (citation omitted). Moreover, because interlocutory appeals "contravene the judicial policy opposing piecemeal litigation and the disadvantages of delay and disruption associated with it," In re Am. Freight Sys., Inc., 194 B.R. 659, 661 (D. Kan. 1996), "[r]eview under § 1292(b) should be sparingly granted and then only in exceptional cases," Wicheff, 215 B.R. at 844; see also In re A.P. Liquidating Co., 350 B.R. 752, 755 (E.D. Mich. 2006) (citation and internal quotation marks omitted) ("The discretion of the district court should be used sparingly, since interlocutory bankruptcy appeals should be the exception, rather than the rule.").

Wells Fargo submits that its appeal presents three controlling questions of law; to wit, (1) whether a bankruptcy court can order a Rule 2004 examination concerning a creditor's general policies and procedures that are not tethered to a debtor's estate; (2) whether a bankruptcy court can order a Rule 2004 examination without requiring that the requesting party demonstrate good cause for the examination, and (3) whether the Bankruptcy Court abused its discretion by ordering a Rule 2004 examination when the Trustee had not affirmatively demonstrated good cause for the examination. The Trustee disputes Wells Fargo's characterization of the Bankruptcy Court's actions, arguing that the challenged order does not purport to order discovery without requiring a showing of good cause.

The Court concludes that these questions do not present, as required, "pure" or "abstract" issues of law "suitable for determination by an appellate court without a trial record."

Ahrenholz v. Bd. of Trs. Of Univ. of Ill., 219 F.3d 674, 677 (7th Cir. 2000); see also In re Am. Specialty Cars, Inc., 386 B.R. 187, 196 (E.D. Mich. 2008) (citations and internal quotation marks omitted) ("A legal question of the type envisioned in § 1292(b) . . . generally does not include matters within the discretion of the trial court. Interlocutory appeals are intended for situations in which the court of appeals can rule on a pure, controlling question of law without having to delve beyond the surface of the record in order to determine the facts."); In re Brentwood Country Club, LLC, 329 B.R. 239, 242-43 (E.D. Mich. 2005) ("With reference to 28 U.S.C. § 1292(b) the term 'question of law' refers to a 'pure' question of law and not just an issue that is free from factual disputes."). To answer the questions that Wells Fargo has posed, the Court would have to first determine whether the Bankruptcy Court did the things alleged before it would proceed to determining whether it erred or abused its discretion in doing so. See Brentwood, 329 B.R. at 243 (refusing to review an interlocutory order where the appellant "ask[ed] this [c]ourt to review the oral arguments, the parties' pleadings and the record to determine if the bankruptcy court exceeded its authority"). This is not the type of pure legal issue that counsels for interlocutory review.

Nor does the Court believe that granting Wells Fargo leave to appeal would materially advance the ultimate termination of the litigation. On the contrary, and in light of the role of Rule 2004 examinations in pre-litigation discovery, the current appeal, if permitted, would prolong rather than hasten the termination of the litigation. See Del Castillo, No. 08-20020, at *11 (finding no controlling question of law that would advance litigation because the challenged Rule 2004 order did not finally adjudicate the validity of the creditor-appellant's claim, but rather simply allowed the trustee to conduct discovery regarding the creditor's factual support for the claim); In re Hecker, No. 10-1904, 2010 WL 1875553 (D. Minn. May 10, 2010) ("The [c]ourt declines to exercise its discretion to decide this case with a limited record and the possibility of ongoing proceedings, such as contempt proceedings, which could resolve or narrow the issues raised on appeal."). The Court thus declines to exercise its discretion to grant Wells Fargo leave to appeal the Rule 2004 order.

V.

For the reasons that have been set forth above, the Court (1) denies Wells Fargo's motion for leave to appeal; and (2) denies Wells Fargo's motions to stay pending appeal and to expedite consideration of same as moot.

A district court did not have jurisdiction to hear a Chapter 11 debtor's interlocutory appeal regarding the bankruptcy court's order for discovery regarding the debtor's financial institutions. The order was not likely to affect the outcome or the further course of the litigation and was likely only to delay the ultimate resolution of the case. 28 U.S.C.A. § 1292(b).

MEMORANDUM OPINION AND ORDER

MARVIN E. ASPEN, District Judge.

1 Appellants Dr. Husam Aldairi, Husgus, LLC, and Aya Dental, Ltd. filed a notice of appeal from the bankruptcy court's September 13, 2009, order granting creditor Nereida Mendez's motion for permission to conduct a Bankruptcy Rule 2004 examination of Dr. Aldairi and his various businesses. Presently before us is Mendez's motion to dismiss the appeal for lack of subject matter jurisdiction. For the reasons stated below, we grant the motion.[FN1]

I. BACKGROUND

This appeal arises out of the Chapter 11 bankruptcy proceeding involving Dental Profile, Inc., et al. ("Debtors"), entities owned and controlled by Appellant Dr. Husam Aldairi. Debtors filed their bankruptcy petition under Chapter 11 on July 2, 2008. Creditor Nereida Mendez holds a significant claim against Debtors, the basis of which is a judgment for Mendez in a federal lawsuit. Mendez secured her $81,436.01 claim through a garnishment of Debtors' accounts. After receiving notice of this garnishment, Debtors filed for bankruptcy. As of the date of this opinion, Debtors remain in possession under Chapter 11. One reason Debtors remain in possession is that the U.S. Trustee objected to the reorganization plan, finding it not to be in good faith. (Sur-resp., Ex. 2.) The U.S. Trustee made this objection, in part, because the plan appeared to be a "vehicle for the personal profit of the debtor's owners" and did not seek to recover insider preference loans made to Aldairi by Debtors. (Surresp., Ex. 2 ¶¶ 15-16.)

On September 13, 2009, Bankruptcy Judge Jacqueline P. Cox granted a motion by Mendez to conduct a Federal Rule of Bankruptcy Procedure 2004 examination of the finances of Debtors, Aldairi and other entities. The order stated in relevant part: "It is hereby ordered that motion for permission to conduct a 2004 examination of Debtor's financial institutions and to issue subpoenas and obtain records concerning the property and financial affairs of Debtors; Dr. Husam Aldairi; Husgus, LLC; Aya Dental, Ltd.; and any other related business of Dr. Aldairi." (Reply, Ex. 1, 9/13/09 Order.) Mendez requested this order because Dr. Aldairi, Husgus, LLC; and Aya Dental, Ltd. (collectively, "Appellants") have continually refused to turn over requested financial information, despite Judge Cox's denial of their motion to stay enforcement of the September 13 order, and the instigation of contempt hearings against them. Now, Appellants have filed a notice of appeal of the September 13 order in this court. Upon this notice of appeal, Mendez filed a motion to dismiss for lack of jurisdiction under Federal Rule of Civil Procedure 12(b)(1).

[FN1] FN1. In addition, we deny Appellants' Motion to Strike Creditor Nereida Mendez's Response to Dr. Aldairi's Sur-Reply, Dkt. No. 52, as moot.

EXHIBIT B

II. STANDARD OF REVIEW

A motion to dismiss under Federal Rule of Civil Procedure 12(b) (1) requires dismissal of claims over which the federal court lacks subject matter jurisdiction. Jurisdiction is the "power to decide," and must be conferred upon a federal court in order for it to hear a case or controversy. In re Chicago, Rock Island & Pacific R.R. Co., 794 F.2d 1182, 1188 (7th Cir.1986). In reviewing a 12(b)(1) motion to dismiss for lack of subject matter jurisdiction, the court may look beyond the complaint to pertinent evidence submitted by the parties. See United Transp. Union v. Gateway W. Ry. Co., 78 F.3d 1208, 1210 (7th Cir.1996). A plaintiff faced with a properly supported 12(b)(1) motion to dismiss bears the burden of proving that the jurisdictional requirements have been met. See Kontos v. U.S. Dep't of Labor, 826 F.2d 573, 576 (7th Cir.1987).

III. ANALYSIS

2 Our jurisdiction over bankruptcy appeals is governed by statute. Relevant to this case, "[t]he district courts of the United States shall have jurisdiction to hear appeals (1) from final judgments, orders, and decrees ... and (3) with leave of the court, from other interlocutory orders and decrees ....“ 28 U.S.C. § 158(a). From this jurisdictional grant, there appear to be three possible avenues of jurisdiction. First, Appellants argue that the bankruptcy court's order granting a Rule 2004 examination was a "final order" within the meaning of § 158(a)(1) and thus is appealable. Second, Appellants argue that if the order is not final, it falls within a narrow exception to the finality requirement known as the "collateral order" doctrine set out in Cohen v. Beneficial Industrial Loan Corporation, 337 U.S. 541, 61 S.Ct. 1221 (1941). Third, even if this appeal is not a "collateral order" under Cohen, we may grant leave [FN2] and accept jurisdiction over interlocutory bankruptcy appeals at our discretion, guided by the principles set forth by the Seventh Circuit.

> FN2. Mendez seems to assume that the absence of formal leave is dispositive of this case, either because "the court" in § 158(a) (3) refers to the bankruptcy court, (Reply ¶¶ 47-48), or because this court has not formally granted leave to appeal. However, the Seventh Circuit has held that "with the leave of the court" in § 158(a)(3) refers "obviously [to the] district court." In re Jartran, Inc., 886 F.2d 859, 866 (7th Cir.1989). Furthermore, Federal Rule of Bankruptcy Procedure 8003 specifically allows a district court to consider a motion to appeal, taken improperly, without leave, as a motion for a leave to appeal and instructs that a district court denying such a motion "shall consider the notice of appeal as a motion for leave to appeal." Fed. R. Bankr.P. 8003©; see Matter of Forty-Eight Insulations, Inc., 115 F.3d 1294, 1299 (7th Cir.1997). Therefore, when analyzing our jurisdiction under Section 158(a)(1), we will consider the Appellants' motion to appeal as a motion for leave to appeal.

A. September 13 Order Not Final

Finality in the bankruptcy context is "considerably more flexible than in an ordinary civil appeal." Zedan v. Habash, 529 F.3d 398, 402 (7th Cir.2008) (quoting In re Gould, 977 F.2d 1038, 1040-41 & n. 2 (7th Cir.1992)). Analyzing the almost identical language of Section 158(d)(1), the Seventh Circuit determined that the test of finality "is whether an order resolves a discrete dispute that, but for the continuing bankruptcy, would have been a stand-alone suit by or against the trustee." Zedan, 529 F.3d at 402; see also In re Rimsat, Ltd., 212 F.3d 1039, 1044 (7th Cir.2000) ("Where an order terminates a discrete dispute that, but for the bankruptcy, would be a stand-alone suit ..., the order will be considered final and appealable."). In the present case, the order granting leave to conduct a Rule 2004 examination in no way "resolves a discrete dispute" but is only a discovery order for information that will allow both sides to present evidence in the dispute.

Discovery orders, including those pursuant to Bankruptcy Rule 2004, have been considered interlocutory orders by the Seventh Circuit and other courts that have addressed this issue. In Matter of Vance, the Seventh Circuit held that an "order granting the trustee's motion for a Rule 2004 examination [wa]s not a final order." 165 F.3d 34 (Table), 1998 WL 783728, at *2 (7th Cir. Nov.2, 1998). Many other cases in this circuit have also either expressly determined or simply assumed that discovery orders are interlocutory orders and proceeded to address whether they should be heard as interlocutory appeals. See, e.g., Allendale Mut. Ins. Co. v. Bull Data Sys., Inc., 32 F.3d 1175, 1177 (7th Cir.1994); Reise v. Bd. of Regents of Uni. of Wis. Sys., 957 F.2d 293, 294-95(7th Cir.1992); Harrisonville Tel. Co. v. Ill. Commerce Comm'n, 472 F.Supp.2d 1071, 1080-81 (S.D.Ill.2006).

3 Appellants attempt to distinguish Matter of Vance because the Rule 2004 examination in this case seeks information from not only the Debtors, but also Aldeiri and his various businesses. According to Appellants, by requiring Aldeiri to submit to this examination, the September 13 order "conclusively determine[s] substantive rights and issues in a discrete unit in the larger case." (Resp. at 4.) We disagree. The order does not "conclusively determine" anything, but merely seeks to compel information necessary to determine a critical issue in the underlying bankruptcy case-whether the Appellants are truly separate financial entities from the Debtor. The argument that "Appellants personal information is not in any way relevant to the Debtors acts, conduct, property, liability, financial conditions, or right to a discharge," (Resp.4), misses the point. We do not know yet whether this information is relevant because it has not yet been made available for review.

This case seems to fall clearly with in the Seventh Circuit's distinction between a "discrete dispute" and a "discreet issue" in In re Comdisco, Inc., when it denied an appeal under Section 158(a)(1) because the "ruling ... fail[ed] to qualify as a separable dispute." 538 F.3d 647, 651 (7th Cir.2008). Therefore, the discovery order in this case is not a final order for the purposes of Section 158(a)(1).

B. September 13 Order Not a "Collateral Order"

In Cohen v. Beneficial Industrial Loan Corporation, the Supreme Court established that an appellate court may hear an appeal of an order "which finally determine[s] claims of right separate from, and collateral to, rights asserted in the action, too important to be denied review and too independent of the cause itself to require that appellate jurisdiction be deferred until the whole case is adjudicated." 337 U.S. at 598-99, 69 S.Ct. at 1226; see Fidelity Nat'l Title Ins. Co. of N.Y. v. Intercounty Nat'l Title Ins. Co., 310 F.3d 537, 539 (7th Cir.2002) ("Because an order compelling a lawyer to work without prospect of compensation is unrelated to the merits of the dispute, cannot be rectified at the end of the case, and has a potential to cause significant hardship, ... the order is immediately appealable as a collateral order."). For many of the same reasons stated in the previous analysis, Appellants fail to meet this standard in the present case. Despite Appellants repeated assertions that the financial information "is not in any way relevant" to the bankruptcy case and "entirely separate" from the progress of the case, (Resp.5, 7), we accept the finding of the bankruptcy judge to the contrary. Judge Cox, who is intimately acquainted with all of the facts in the case, determined that "Dr. Aldairi is an integral part of the affairs of these debtors," (Reply ¶ 27 (citing Tr. at 5, R. at 31)), and we see no reason to question that conclusion.

Furthermore, an "essential element of the collateral order doctrine" is that an "immediate appeal is required to ward off irreparable harm." Matter of Devlieg, Inc., 56 F.3d 32, 34 (7th Cir.1995). Appellants argue that permitting the Bankruptcy Rule 2004 examinations will substantially and irreversibly affect their rights because it will allow federal discovery of information that may be relevant to a pending state case in Cook County attempting to pierce the corporate veil of the Debtors. However, we agree with Judge Cox that no irreparable harm will result from allowing federal discovery, especially in light of the fact that in the federal bankruptcy action Mendez is pursuing adversary complaints of fraudulent transfers, insider preferences, and piercing the corporate veil. Accordingly, we find that the September 13 order is not a "collateral order," and thus we do not have jurisdiction under Cohen to hear the appeal.

C. September 13 Order Not an Appealable Interlocutory Order

4 Finally, we address whether the present appeal satisfies the requirements of an appealable interlocutory order. When evaluating discretionary interlocutory bankruptcy appeals, the standard set forth in 28 U.S.C. § 1292(b) for interlocutory appeals from the district court to the court of appeals is instructive. See In re Automotive Prof'ls, Inc., 379 B.R. 746, 751 (N.D.Ill.2007); Trustee of Jartan, Inc. v. Winston & Strawn, 208 B.R. 898, 900

(N.D.Ill.1997). Section 1292(2) permits an interlocutory appeal when it "(1) involves a controlling question of law; (2) over which there is substantial ground for difference of opinion; and (3) an immediate appeal from the order may materially advance the ultimate termination of the litigation." 28 U.S.C. § 1292(b); see In re Capen Wholesale, Inc., 184 B.R. 547, 549 (N.D.Ill.1995).

The September 13 Order fails all three prongs of this test. It is not a controlling issue of law because its resolution is not "quite likely to affect the outcome or the further course of litigation, even if it not certain to do so." Trustees of Jartan, 208 B.R. at 900-01 (citing Sokaogon Gaming Enters. Corp. v. Tushie-Montgomery Assoc., 86 F.3d 656, 659 (7th Cir.1996)). In fact, we cannot determine how the order and the consequent Bankruptcy Rule 2004 examination will affect the outcome of the litigation until the information sought by the order is produced.

With regard to the second element, the "substantial ground for difference of opinion" has been interpreted to require a "substantial likelihood ... that the interlocutory order will be reversed on appeal." Trustees of Jartan, Inc., 208 B.R. at 901. Because "almost all interlocutory appeals from discovery orders ... end in affirmance (the district court possesses discretion, and review is deferential)," there is not a substantial likelihood of this order being overturned and not a substantial ground for difference of opinion. Reise, 957 F.2d at 295.

Finally, allowing an immediate appeal in this case would not "materially advance the ultimate termination" of the case, but would probably only delay the ultimate resolution. The financial information sought by the order addresses the history of transactions between Appellants and Debtor and offers insight into the independence of the parties. These facts seem to be the issue currently hindering the resolution of the case and the trustee's approval of reorganization. Allowing an appeal from this discovery order would only result in more delays and costs. Because Appellants' appeal does not meet any of the requirements of Section 1292(b), we decline to grant Appellants leave to appeal the September 13 Order, and as such, grant Mendez's motion to dismiss for lack of jurisdiction.

III. Conclusion

For the foregoing reasons, we grant Mendez's motion to dismiss this appeal for lack of subject matter jurisdiction.[FN3]

[FN3] Mendez, in passing, requests that we grant her fees and costs, but she does not offer any legal argument or legal precedent to justify such a request. We deny this request.

It is so ordered.

Decided Nov. 2, 1998.

Appeal from the United States District Court for the Northern District of Illinois, Western Division. No. 97 C 50334. Philip G. Reinhard, Judge.

Before Hon. KENNETH F. RIPPLE, Hon. DANIEL A. MANION, Hon. MICHAEL S. KANNE, Circuit Judges.

ORDER

1 Clarence Vance voluntarily filed for bankruptcy pursuant to Chapter 7 of the Bankruptcy Code. The bankruptcy court entered postdischarge orders disallowing Vance's claimed exemption of his interest in a personal trust and granting the trustee's motion that Vance be required to submit to a Rule 2004 examination. The district court affirmed both orders, finding that the bankruptcy court retained postdischarge authority to issue the orders and that the trustee timely had objected to Vance's claimed exemption. We affirm.

In his petition for relief pursuant to § 301 of the Bankruptcy Code, Vance listed as exempt personal property his interest in the "Clarence Vance Trust." Thomas Lester (the "trustee") filed an objection to Vance's personal trust exemption on June 18, 1997. The creditors met as required by Rule 2003 of the Bankruptcy Rules on June 12, 1997. As there were no objections to Vance's discharge, the bankruptcy court entered a discharge order dated July 10, 1997, releasing Vance from all dischargeable debts and enjoining creditors from "instituting or continuing any action to collect the debtor's discharged debts and personal liabilities." At the time of the discharge, the trustee's objection to Vance's claimed exemption was still pending. Subsequently, the court entered an August 6, 1997, order disallowing Vance's claimed exemption for his personal trust. In a second post-discharge order dated September 2, 1997, the bankruptcy court granted the trustee's motion for an examination of Vance pursuant to Rule 2004 of the Bankruptcy Rules. The trustee sought in that motion to obtain tax returns, the trust agreement and other documents relating to Vance's personal trust.

Vance appeals the district court's determination, arguing first that the discharge order enjoined the trustee from reaching the purportedly exempt property. He further argues that the trustee waived his objection to Vance's claimed exemption by failing to object to discharge. The trustee counters that discharge does not abrogate a trustee's statutory responsibility to administer the bankruptcy estate, and that he properly objected to Vance's claimed exemption.

We review the bankruptcy court's findings of fact for clear error. In re Paeplow, 972 F.2d 730, 733 (7th Cir.1992). The bankruptcy court's conclusions of law are reviewed de novo. Id. This appeal exclusively involves questions of law.

Although neither the district court nor the parties address the issue, we first consider whether we have jurisdiction to review the bankruptcy court's order granting a Rule 2004 examination. A majority of courts that have considered the issue have held that orders granting or denying Rule 2004 examinations are, like discovery orders, interlocutory. See In re Towers Fin. Corp., 164 B.R. 719, 720 (S.D.N.Y.1994); Aetna Cas. & Sur. Co., 154 B.R. 862, 868 (D.Vt.1993); In re Blinder Robinson Co., 127 B.R. 267, 272 (D.Colo.1991). This court does not have jurisdiction to consider appeals from interlocutory orders in bankruptcy proceedings, see 28 U.S.C. § 158(d); indeed, we have jurisdiction only in cases where both the bankruptcy court and the district court have entered final orders. In re Devlieg, Inc., 56 F.3d 32, 33 (7th Cir.1995); In re Behrens, 900 F.2d 97, 99 (7th Cir.1990). Because the order granting the trustee's motion for a Rule 2004 examination is not a final order, we do not have jurisdiction to consider Vance's challenge to that order. Therefore, the part of Vance's appeal that asks us to review the bankruptcy court's order granting a Rule 2004 examination must be dismissed for lack of jurisdiction. However, because the order disallowing Vance's claimed exemption is final, we address the merits of Vance's claims as to that order only.

2 The trustee of a bankruptcy estate is charged with collecting and liquidating the property of the estate to satisfy creditors' claims. 11 U.S.C. § 704(1). In addition, the trustee is responsible for investigating the financial affairs of the debtor, and opposing discharge "if advisable." Id. § 704(4), (6). Nothing in § 704, or the discharge provision, see id. § 727, or any other relevant section of the Bankruptcy Code suggests that these duties are terminated or altered by discharge of the debtor.

The district court held that the trustee timely objected to Vance's claimed exemption. Objections to claimed exemptions must be filed within 30 days after the meeting of creditors held pursuant to Rule 2003. Bankr.R. 4003. Because the meeting of creditors was held June 12, 1997, the trustee met the prescribed deadline by filing his objection six days later, on June 18. Because the trustee filed his objection to the claimed exemption before the discharge order was entered, the discharge order could not have enjoined the trustee from raising that objection. In any event, the discharge order would not bar the trustee's actions because, by its express terms, the discharge order only prohibits "creditors" from initiating or continuing actions to "collect debts as personal liabilities of the debtor." Nonexempt property belongs to the estate, not the debtor, and it is the trustee's statutory duty to ensure that exempt property remains in the bankruptcy estate.

Vance's waiver argument is likewise without merit. As the district court recognized, discharge and exemption are governed by two distinct rules that prescribe correspondingly different periods for objections. Compare Bankr.R. 4003(b) (objection to exemption must be filed within 30 days after the meeting of the creditors) with Bankr.R. 4004(a) (complaint objecting to discharge must be filed within 60 days of the scheduled meeting of the creditors). Exemption and discharge also have different consequences. A Chapter 7 discharge releases the debtor from "all liabilities arising prior to the filing of the bankruptcy petition." In re Birkenstock, 87 F.3d 947, 950 (7th Cir.1996). By contrast, exemptions immunize property which would otherwise belong to the estate from "seizure or attachment for satisfaction of debts incurred prior to the bankruptcy proceeding." In re Scarpino, 113 F.3d 338, 340 (2d Cir.1997). Accordingly, Vance's contention that the trustee was required to object to discharge to preserve his right to object to the claimed exemptions must fail.

Vance's second contention on appeal is that the bankruptcy court did not have authority to enter the orders after he was discharged from bankruptcy. This argument merits little discussion because discharge of the debtor does not terminate a bankruptcy court's jurisdiction. See, e.g., 11 U.S.C. § 727(d) (bankruptcy court may revoke discharge if the debtor has committed a fraud or failed to report the acquisition of property after the petition was filed). Therefore, the bankruptcy court had authority to enter both orders after Vance's discharge.

3 For the foregoing reasons, Vance's appeal from the bankruptcy court order granting a Rule 2004 examination is DISMISSED, and the order disallowing Vance's claimed exemption is AFFIRMED.

MEMORANDUM AND ORDER

MANNING, District Court J.

1 Appellants Bernice Ackerman, Melvin Ackerman, John O'Brien, and Lisa O'Brien seek to stay a bankruptcy court order setting dates for examinations pursuant to Bankruptcy Rule 2004 pending resolution of the merits of their appeal. For the following reasons, this appeal is dismissed for lack of jurisdiction, the appellants' stay motion is denied as moot, and counsel for the appellants and the Creditors' Committee are directed to show cause why they should not be sanctioned for failure to comply with the briefing schedule set by the court.

Background

The appellants seek to stay discovery pursuant to Bankruptcy Rule 2004 that is scheduled to commence later this week. According to the appellants, the Official Committee of Unsecured Creditors filed an adversary complaint against them which alleges that, through their transactions and dealings with Midwest Video Games, they "engaged in 'fraudulent' transfers, obtained 'preferences' and treated the Debtor as their 'alter ego." ' (Motion at 1). The appellants claim that the bankruptcy court erred in allowing discovery under Bankruptcy Rule 2004 in light of the pending adversary proceeding against them. Specifically, they argue that, because an adversary proceeding against them is pending, discovery must occur under Bankruptcy Rule 7026, et seq., rather than Bankruptcy Rule 2004.

Jurisdiction

The court's consideration of the appellants' stay motion begins and ends with its consideration of its jurisdiction to consider this appeal in the first instance. Bankruptcy appeals as of right are limited to "final judgments, orders, and decrees ... of bankruptcy judges." 28 U.S.C. § 158(a). Here, the appealed-from order relates to discovery. The appellants nevertheless contend that this order is final, citing In re Blinder, Robinson & Co., Inc., 127 B.R. 267 (D.Colo.1991). In Blinder, the court held that an order compelling discovery under Rule 2004 was interlocutory, but stated that:

> [t]his is not to say that all appeals from Rule 2004 orders are non-final. This question should be resolved on a case-by-case basis. Where the dispute has been narrowed and there is no indication that further action by the bankruptcy court will be forthcoming, an order concerning Rule 2004 examinations should properly be considered final.

Id. at 272-73.

EXHIBIT D

Notably, the Blinder court explained why the discovery order appealed in that case was interlocutory. It did not, however, explain why a discovery order would become appealable simply because the bankruptcy judge definitively resolved that motion. The court declines to accept the appellants' invitation to find that the bankruptcy judge's discovery order is final because the bankruptcy judge has indicated that he does not intend to revisit his ruling, as the order is clearly interlocutory, even under the more relaxed standards of finality applicable to bankruptcy cases. See, e.g., In re Jartran, Inc., 886 F.2d 859, 861-64 (7th Cir.1989) (discussing parameters of finality in bankruptcy cases); Sante Fe Industries, Inc. v. Yorke, No. 90 C 5359, 1991 WL 18483 *1 (N.D.Ill. Feb.11, 1991), citing Union Carbide Corp. v. U.S. Cutting Service, Inc., 782 F.2d 710, 712 (7th Cir.1986) ("The general and very salutary rule is that discovery orders are not appealable until the end of the case"); In re S.N.A. Nut Co., No. 96 C 181, 1996 WL 411290 *4 (N.D.Ill. Jul.19, 1991) (collecting cases regarding the non-appealability of discovery orders in bankruptcy cases); In re Towers Financial Corp., 164 B.R. 719, (S.D.N.Y.1994) (criticizes Blinder rule and collects cases regarding the non-appealability of discovery orders in bankruptcy cases).

2 The court also notes that the holding of Blinder requires a case-by-case determination as to the finality of a Rule 2004 order. It thus is susceptible to a variety of interpretations and, therefore, is at odds with the Seventh Circuit's recent admonition that jurisdictional rules in bankruptcy cases should be "simple and precise so that judges and lawyers are spared having to litigate over not the merits of a legal dispute but where and when those merits shall be litigated." In re Lopez, 116 F.3d 1191, 1194 (7th Cir.), cert. denied, 522 U.S. 1014, 118 S.Ct. 599, 139 L.Ed.2d 488 (1997). In addition, the appellants have failed to present a convincing reason why allowing an appeal as of right from a discovery order would not completely eviscerate the finality requirement, even when viewing finality from the more liberal bankruptcy perspective. For these reasons, the court finds that the bankruptcy court's Rule 2004 order is not final.

Thus, jurisdiction over this appeal is proper only if the court grants leave for the appeal to proceed. In re Jartran, Inc., 886 F.2d at 866; In re Lifschultz Fast Freight Corp., 127 B.R. 418 (N.D.Ill.1991). Consideration of this question is governed by the familiar § 1292(b) factors, which authorize an appeal if: (1) the interlocutory order involves a controlling question of law; (2) as to which there is a substantial ground for difference of opinion; (3) and an immediate appeal will materially advance the ultimate termination of the litigation. 28 U.S.C. § 1292(b); In re Lifschultz Fast Freight Corp., 127 B.R. at 418; Sante Fe Industries, Inc., 1991 WL 18483 at *1.

The court finds that resolution of the parties' dispute concerning the scope of discovery fails to present a controlling question of law, as resolution of this "discovery matter is not likely to be dispositive of any of the material issues in this case." Sante Fe Industries, Inc., 1991 WL 18483 at *1; In re S.N.A. Nut Co., 1996 WL 411290 at *4 (bankruptcy court order regarding discovery was not controlling); In re Lifschultz Fast Freight Corp., 127 B.R. at 419 (same). In addition, the appellants' disagreement with orders entered by the bankruptcy court with respect to discovery directed at them does not demonstrate that there is a substantial ground for difference of opinion. See Sante Fe Industries, Inc., 1991 WL 18483 at *1. Finally, resolution of this discovery matter will multiply, as opposed to streamline, the proceedings.

Accordingly, the court exercises its discretion and declines to grant leave to file an interlocutory appeal. This appeal is, therefore, dismissed for lack of jurisdiction, and the appellants' stay motion is denied as moot. The court notes that, by declining jurisdiction, the court does not express an opinion as to the propriety of the bankruptcy court's order. See Sante Fe Industries, Inc., 1991 WL 18483 at *2.

EXHIBIT D

Counsel's Failure to Comply With the Briefing Schedule Set by the Court

3 On July 1, 1998, when the appellants presented their stay motion, the court ordered the Creditors' Committee to file their response by July 6, 1998 at 12:00 p.m. and ordered the appellants to file their reply by July 7, 1998 at 12:00 p.m. The court, however, received its courtesy copy of the response on the morning of July 7, 1998, and received its copy of the reply at approximately 2:30 p.m. on July 7, 1998. Neither side explained the reason for the delay or sought leave to file their pleading instanter. Adherence to filing deadlines set by the court is not discretionary. Accordingly, counsel for the appellants and the Creditors' Committee are directed to show cause why they should not be sanctioned for failure to comply with the briefing schedule set by the court.

Conclusion

This appeal is dismissed for lack of jurisdiction, and the appellants' stay motion [2-1 and 2-2] is denied as moot. Counsel for the appellants and the Creditors' Committee are each directed to file a brief memorandum by no later than July 15, 1998, addressing why they should not be sanctioned for failure to comply with the briefing schedule set by the court.

Appellant,

v.

OFFICE OF THE UNITED STATES TRUSTEE,
Appellee.

Civil Action No. 08-617.

June 11, 2008.

SYNOPSIS

AMBROSE, Chief Judge.

1 Appellant Countrywide Home Loans, Inc. ("Appellant" or "Countrywide") appeals an April 1, 2008 Order of the United States Bankruptcy Court for the Western District of Pennsylvania denying Countrywide's Motion to Quash and overruling in part Countrywide's Objections to a Notice of Examination Under Fed. R. Bankr.P.2004 and Subpoena (Duces Tecum) (the "2004 Notice") served by Appellee, the Executive Office of the United States Trustee ("Appellee" or "US Trustee"). (Docket No. 1). In the alternative, Countrywide seeks leave to appeal the Order pursuant to Bankruptcy Rules 8001 and 8003. Id. The U.S. Trustee opposes Countrywide's Motion for Leave to Appeal. (Docket No. 1, Ex. 7). Also pending is Countrywide's Emergency Motion for Stay Pending Appeal Pursuant to Fed. R. Bankr.8005 (Docket No. 2), and Countrywide's Emergency Motion for Temporary Stay Pending Determination of Its Motion for Stay Pending Appeal (Docket No. 12). After careful consideration of the submissions of the parties, and for the reasons discussed below, Countrywide's Motion for Leave to Appeal (Docket No. 1) is denied and Countrywide's Motions for Stay Pending Appeal and for Temporary Stay Pending Determination of Its Motion for Stay Pending Appeal (Docket Nos. 2 and 12) are denied as moot.

OPINION AND ORDER OF COURT

I. BACKGROUND

The U.S. Trustee is an official of the United States Department of Justice charged with responsibility to "supervise the administration of cases and trustees in cases under chapter 7, 11, 12, 13 or 15 of title 11 ...." 28 U.S.C. § 586(a)(3). Section 307 of the Bankruptcy Code provides that the U.S. Trustee "may raise and may appear and be heard on any issue in any case or proceeding under this title but may not file a plan pursuant to section 1121(c) of this title." 11 U.S.C. § 307. On October 18, 2007, the U.S. Trustee for this region filed notice of her intent to examine Countrywide under Federal Rule of Bankruptcy Procedure 2004 ("Rule 2004") and Subpoenas (Duces Tecum) in ten bankruptcy cases described by the bankruptcy court as "context cases." [FN1] On November 5, 2007, the Bankruptcy Court; entered a Consolidation Order for Examination Notices consolidating these ten Notices of Examination and Subpoenas into a single miscellaneous proceeding (Bankruptcy Docket Misc. No. 07-204 TPA) for the purpose of efficiently resolving issues regarding the Notices and Subpoenas and the U.S. Trustee's investigation of Countrywide. [FN2]

EXHIBIT E

FN1. Fed. R. Bankr.P.2004 is a pre-litigation discovery mechanism unique to bankruptcy. Rule 2004 provides in pertinent part:

> (a) Examination on Motion
> On a motion of any party in interest, the court may order the examination of any entity.
> (c) Scope of Examination
> The examination of any entity under this rule or of the debtor under § 303 of the Code may relate only to the acts, conduct, or property or to the liabilities and financial condition of the debtor, or to any matter which may affect the administration of the debtor's estate, or to the debtor's right to a discharge. In ... an individual's debt adjustment case under chapter 13, ... the examination may also relate to the operation of any business and the desirability of its continuance, the source of any money or property acquired or to be acquired by the debtor for purposes of consummating a plan and the consideration given or offered therefor, and any other matter relevant to the case or to the formulation of a plan.
> The attendance of an entity for examination and for the production of documents, whether the examination is to be conducted within or without the district in which the case is pending, may be compelled as provided in Rule 9016 for the attendance of a witness at a hearing or trial. As an officer of the court, an attorney may issue and sign a subpoena on behalf of the court for the district in which the examination is to be held if the attorney is admitted to practice in that court or in the court in which the case is pending.

FN2. Following the commencement of the miscellaneous proceeding, the relevant context cases are limited to seven: In re Hill, Case No. 01-22574-JAD; In re Benvenuto, Case No. 02-20946-JKF; In re Stemple, Case No. 03-11792-WWB; In re Karleski, Cas No. 04-31355-JKF; In re Bock, Case No. 04-32812-BM; In re Olbeter, Case No. 04-33361-JKF; and In re Topper, Case No. 05-20772-TPA.

Pursuant to the Consolidation Order, the U.S. Trustee filed on November 7, 2007 a single Notice of Examination Under Rule 2004 and Service of Subpoena (Duces Tecum) in the miscellaneous proceeding. On November 9, 2007, Countrywide filed its objection to the Rule 2004 Notice and its motion to quash the related Subpoena. After the parties briefed any issues pertinent to the Rule 2004 examinations, the bankruptcy court conducted a hearing on February 28, 2008 to consider Countrywide's objections to the examinations. On April 1, 2008, the bankruptcy court entered the Memorandum Opinion and Order that are the subject of this appeal, partially denying Countrywide's objections and motion to quash. The April 1, 2008 Order authorized, in part, the U.S. Trustee's Rule 2004 examinations and related document production.

2 In the April 1, 2008 Memorandum Opinion, the bankruptcy court concluded, over Countrywide's objection, that the U.S. Trustee had the authority to seek the production of documents and the examination of witnesses pursuant to Rule 2004. The court, however, limited the scope of the examinations and required that the U.S. Trustee conduct the examinations within the context of one specific bankruptcy case, In re Hill, Case No. 01-22574-JAD. Specifically the Court stated:

> [F]or the sake of administrative convenience and to avoid any potential res judicata issues, the Court will stay the Notice of Examination and Subpoenas in all context cases except In re Hill, Case No. 01-22574-JAD. In that case, the Court will direct Countrywide to produce documents in Categories 5-12 as to each of the debtors in the context cases and will direct Countrywide to make a witness or witnesses available to be examined on the topics identified by the [US Trustee].

(April 1,2008 Mem. Op. at 50).[FN3]

[FN3] FN3. The In re Hill case was the only case in which another matter (a Motion to Enforce Discharge against Countrywide) was then pending. Although the bankruptcy court stayed each of the context cases except In re Hill, it ruled that Countrywide's actions in all of the context cases nevertheless could be the subject of discovery in the In re Hill case pursuant to Federal Rules of Evidence 401, 404, and 406.

On or about April 11, 2008, Countrywide filed the instant Motion for Leave to Appeal pursuant to Federal Rules of Bankruptcy 8001 and 8003, subject to its Notice of Appeal filed contemporaneously therewith, seeking leave to appeal from the bankruptcy court's April 1, 2008 Order. Specifically, Countrywide urges me to consider the following questions on appeal:

> a. Whether the Bankruptcy Court has subject matter jurisdiction to authorize an examination pursuant to Rule 2004 of the Federal Rules of Bankruptcy Procedure when there is no connection between the proposed examination and any effect upon a debtor's estate;
> b. Whether the Bankruptcy Court erred in holding that the U.S. Trustee is a "party in interest" for the purposes of Rule 2004 of the Federal Rules of Bankruptcy Procedure;
> c. Whether the Bankruptcy Court erred in holding that the U.S. Trustee has the power to take an examination pursuant to Rule 2004 of the Federal Rules of Bankruptcy Procedure in the absence of a contested matter; and
> d. Whether the Bankruptcy Court erred in finding that 11 U.S.C. § 307 does not require that there be a contested matter for the U.S. Trustee to appear and be heard.

See Mot. for Leave at 5. The U.S. Trustee opposes Countrywide's Motion for Leave on the grounds that the appeal is interlocutory and does not merit consideration at this time.

On April 14, 2008, Countrywide filed a Motion to Stay Pending Appeal in the bankruptcy court seeking to stay the court's April 1, 2008 Order pending the outcome of this appeal. On May 2, 2008, the bankruptcy court denied the Motion to Stay. (Docket No. 11). On May 9, 2008, Countrywide filed the instant Emergency Motion for Stay Pending Appeal Pursuant to Fed. R. Bankr.P. 8005 (Docket No. 2), seeking a similar stay. On May 13, 2008, the U.S. Trustee filed its response in opposition to the Emergency Motion to Stay (Docket No. 5), to which Countrywide replied, with leave of court (Docket No. 10). On June 9, 2008, Countrywide filed an Emergency Motion for Temporary Stay Pending Determination of Its Motion for Stay Pending Appeal, after the U.S. Trustee demanded that Countrywide comply with the Bankruptcy Court's April 1, 2008 Order. The issues in all three motions are now ripe for my review.

II. LEGAL ANALYSIS

3 Federal district courts have appellate jurisdiction over the final judgments, orders, and decrees of bankruptcy courts. 28 U.S.C. § 158(a)(1). District courts also have discretionary jurisdiction to hear appeals of interlocutory orders. Id. § 158(a)(3). Countrywide's position is that the bankruptcy court's April 1, 2008 Order overruling Countrywide's objections to the Rule 2004 Notice and its motion to quash the related Subpoena is a final order subject to immediate appellate review. Alternatively, Countrywide seeks leave to appeal the Order pursuant to 28 U.S.C. § 158(a)(3), governing interlocutory orders. The U.S. Trustee argues that the April 1, 2008 Order is a non-final, interlocutory discovery order not subject to immediate appellate review.

A. Final Order

Countrywide first argues that leave to appeal is not necessary because the bankruptcy court's April 1, 2008 Order is final and, therefore, appealable as of right under 28 U.S.C. § 158(a)(1). I disagree.

28 U.S.C. § 158(a)(1) provides that this court has jurisdiction to hear appeals "from final judgments, orders, and decrees" of the bankruptcy court. The concept of "finality" is viewed flexibly in the bankruptcy context. See, e.g., In re Truong, 513 F.3d 91, 93-94 (3d Cir.2008); In re Edison Bros. Stores, Inc., No. Civ. A. 96-177-SLR, 1996 WL 363806, at *2 (D. Del. June 27, 1996); In re Columbia Gas Sys., 146 BR. 106, 110 (D.Del.1992), aff'd 50 F.3d 233 (3d Cir.1995). As one court within this Circuit has explained,

> It is well settled in the Third Circuit ... that 'considerations unique to bankruptcy appeals have led us consistently in those cases to construe finality in a more pragmatic, functional sense than with the typical appeal," which generally requires an order to 'dispose of all issues as to all parties to the case' before such an order can be considered final.

Baron & Budd, P.C. v. Unsecured Asbestos Claimants Comm., 321 B.R. 147, 155 (D.N.J.2005) (citing In re Prof'l Ins. Mgmt., 285 F.3d 268, 279 (3d Cir.2002)).

Here, however, the appealed-from order relates to discovery. Even under the more relaxed standards of finality applicable to bankruptcy cases, discovery orders generally are held to be interlocutory and non-appealable. See In re Jeannette Corp., 832 F.2d 43, 46 (3d Cir.1987) ("In civil litigation, discovery orders are, with rare exception, non-appealable.... A similar approach applies in bankruptcy cases.") (citing In re Int'l Horizons, Inc., 689 F.2d 996, 1000-01 (11th Cir.1982)); see also, e.g., In re Midwest Video Games, Inc., No. 98 C 3836, 1998 WL 395152, at * *1-2 (N.D.III. July 9, 1998) (citing cases). Generally, a party challenging a discovery order has two options: to comply with the order and challenge it at the conclusion of the case; or to refuse to comply with the order and contest its validity if subsequently found in contempt for such refusal. See Int'l Horizons, Inc., 689 F.2d at 1000-01; In re Jeannette Corp., 832 F.2d at 46; Aetna Cas. & Sur. Co. v. Glinka, 154 B.R. 862, 867-68 (D.Vt.1993).

EXHIBIT E

4 After careful review of the submissions of both parties, I find no reason to depart from the general rule disallowing appeals as of right of discovery orders, even under the more liberal bankruptcy perspective on finality. Countrywide may comply with the April 1, 2008 Order and challenge it at the conclusion of the underlying case, or Countywide may refuse to comply and appeal the Order if and when the bankruptcy court issues a contempt order in the face of such refusal. For all of these reasons, I find that the April 1, 2008 Order was not a final order for purposes of 28 U.S.C. § 158(a) (1). See, e.g., Aetna Cas. & Sur. Co., 154 B.R. at 868 (order defining scope of Rule 2004 subpoenas duces tecum and denying motion to quash subpoenas and for protective order was interlocutory); In re Midwest Video Games, Inc., 1998 WL 395152, at 1-2 (bankruptcy court's Rule 2004 examination order was not final).[FN4]

Countrywide's argument that the April 1, 2008 Order was final because it resolved the only existing issue in the miscellaneous proceeding that the bankruptcy court created to address the U.S. Trustee's Rule 2004 Notice is not persuasive. As set forth in the background section above, the bankruptcy court opened the miscellaneous number for the purpose of efficiently resolving issues regarding the U.S. Trustee's investigation of Countrywide after the U.S. Trustee filed Rule 2004 Notices and Subpoenas in ten separate bankruptcies. Pursuant to the Consolidation Order, the U.S. Trustee filed on November 7, 2007 a single Notice of Examination Under Rule 2004 and Service of Subpoena (Duces Tecum) in the miscellaneous proceeding. Thus, even if the miscellaneous proceeding technically had concluded, the underlying bankruptcy to which the April 1, 2008 Order and the U.S. Trustee's investigation primarily relate, the In re Hill bankruptcy, has not. In addition, the bankruptcy court expressly stayed the Rule 2004 examinations in the remaining six underlying context cases, “pending further Order of the Court,” a further indication that all existing issues have not been resolved. Finally, as touched on above, additional questions may arise as the U.S. Trustee conducts the examinations such as the permissible scope of the examinations and the consequences of any refusal by Countrywide to comply with the examination.

B. Collateral Order

Countrywide next argues that, even if the April 1, 2008 Order is not final, it is nevertheless appealable under the collateral order doctrine established in Cohen v. Beneficial Indus. Loan Corp., 337 U.S. 541 (1949). Again, I disagree.

The Court of Appeals for the Third Circuit has applied Cohen to provide:

> “a narrow exception to the general rule permitting appellate review only of final orders. An appeal of a nonfinal order will lie if (1) the order from which the appellant appeals conclusively determines the disputed question; (2) the order resolves an important issue that is completely separate from the merits of the dispute; and (3) the order is effectively unreviewable on appeal from a final judgment..... To this end, as a doctrinal matter, orders that meet the three prongs described above are deemed to be ‘final decisions' within the meaning of the statute.”

5 Baron & Budd, P.C., 321 B.R. at 155-56 (quoting

FN4. The United States District Court for the Southern District of Florida reached the same conclusion in finding that an order overruling Countrywide's objections to a similar Rule 2004 Notice of Examination and Subpoena Duces Tecum served by the Office of the United States Trustee on Countrywide in a different bankruptcy case was not final. See In re Del Castillo, Case No. 08-20020-mc-Altonaga (S.D.Fla. Feb. 8, 2008).

Petroleos Mexicanos Refinacion v. M/T King A (EX-TIBLISI), 377 F.3d 329, 334 (3d Cir.2004)). In the context of discovery orders, however, the Court of Appeals has found the collateral order doctrine applicable only in two very limited circumstances: where the information sought is either privileged or a trade secret. See Bacher v. Allstate Ins. Co., 211 F.3d 52, 53, 57 (3d Cir.2000). As the U.S. Trustee notes in her response, the April 1, 2008 Order Countrywide seeks to appeal does not authorize the U.S. Trustee to seek any information or material that is privileged or a trade secret. Thus, the collateral order doctrine does not apply.

C. Interlocutory Order

Even if the Order at issue is not appealable as of right, I have discretionary jurisdiction over certain interlocutory appeals under 28 U.S.C. § 158(a)(3). Because that statute does not provide any standards to apply, courts generally have looked to the language of 28 U.S.C. § 1292(b), which governs the scope of appellate jurisdiction over interlocutory appeals from district courts. See Sterling Supply Corp. v. Mullinax, 154 B.R. 660, 662 (E.D.Pa.1993). Under section 1292(b), an appellate court has jurisdiction "over non-final orders (1) that involve a controlling question of law (2) about which there is a substantial basis for a difference of opinion, (3) the resolution of which will materially advance the ultimate termination of the litigation." Sterling Supply Corp., 154 B.R. at 662. Interlocutory appeals "contravene the judicial policy opposing piecemeal litigation and the disadvantages of delay and disruption associated with it." In re Am. Freight Sys., Inc., 194 B.R. 659, 661 (D.Kan.1996). Thus, interlocutory bankruptcy appeals generally are reserved for cases presenting exceptional circumstances. See id. (citing cases); see also Dal-Tile Int'l, Inc. v. Color Tile, Inc., 203 B.R. 554, 557 (D.Del.1996); In re Neshaminy Office Bldg. Assocs., 81 B.R. 301, 303 (E.D.Pa.1987). Countrywide, as the party seeking an interlocutory appeal, bears the burden of demonstrating exceptional circumstances. See In re Am. Freight Sys., Inc., 194 B.R. at 661-62.

Here, Countrywide has not made a showing that meets the section 1292(b) standard. As one court aptly has explained:

> Questions that arise during the course of a bankruptcy proceeding concerning the appropriate scope of discovery and that do not involve controlling questions of law are left to the sound discretion of the court that is fully familiar with the entire proceeding-the bankruptcy judge.

In re Towers Fin. Corp., 164 B.R. 719, 721 (S.D.N.Y.1994). Here, Countrywide has not demonstrated that the bankruptcy court's April 1, 2008 Order denying its objections to the Rule 2004 examination and motion to quash subpoena differs significantly from routine discovery orders from which interlocutory appeals are discouraged.[FN5] Accordingly, I do not find any reason to exercise my discretion to entertain Countrywide's interlocutory appeal.

[FN5] Even if the issue of the U.S. Trustee's authority to conduct a Rule 2004 examination of Countrywide under the facts of this case was a controlling issue of law, which it is not, Countrywide has not shown that it is a question about which there is a substantial basis for a difference of opinion. Indeed, Countrywide has not pointed to any case law in direct support of its position. To the contrary, courts that have discussed the U.S. Trustee's powers under 11 U.S.C. § 307 have held that the statute provides the U.S. Trustee with very broad standing and that the U.S. Trustee is the equivalent of a party in interest in bankruptcy. See, e.g., Thompson v. Greenwood, 507 F.3d 416, 420 n. 3 (6th Cir.2007); In re Miles, 330 B.R. 848, 849-50 (M.D.Ga.2005).

III. CONCLUSION

6 In sum, for the reasons set forth above, I find that the April 1, 2008 Order of the Bankruptcy Court partially denying Countrywide's objection to the Rule 2004 Notice and denying its motion to quash the related Subpoena was not a final order within the meaning of 28 U.S.C. § 158(a). Further, in the exercise of my discretion, I decline to grant Countrywide leave to file an interlocutory appeal. Accordingly, Countrywide's Motion for Leave to Appeal is denied, and Countrywide's Motion for Stay Pending Appeal and Motion for Temporary Stay Pending Resolution of Its Motion for Stay Pending Appeal are denied as moot. Countrywide's appeal is dismissed for lack of jurisdiction.

ORDER OF COURT

AND NOW, this 11th day of June, 2008, after careful consideration, it is ordered that Countrywide Home Loans, Inc.'s Motion for Leave to Appeal (Docket No. 1) is DENIED. Countrywide's Emergency Motion for Stay Pending Appeal Pursuant to Fed. R. Bankr.P. 8005 (Docket No. 2) and Emergency Motion for Temporary Stay Pending Determination of Its Motion for Stay Pending Appeal (Docket No. 12) are DENIED as moot. Countrywide's appeal is dismissed for lack of jurisdiction.

ORDER

Countrywide Home Loans, Inc. ("Countrywide") appeals an Order Overruling in Part the Objections of Countrywide to the Second Amended Notice of Examination Under Federal Rule of Bankruptcy Procedure 2004 and Subpoena Duces Tecum served by Appellee, Office of the United States Trustee (the "Trustee"), entered by the United States Bankruptcy Court for the Southern District of Florida (the "bankruptcy court"). (See R. 132).[1] In the alternative, Countrywide seeks leave to appeal the Order pursuant to Bankruptcy Rules 8001 and 8003.

I. BACKGROUND

On May 14, 2007, Debtors, Manuel Del Castillo and Maria E. Pena, filed a joint voluntary petition for relief under Chapter 13 of Title 11 of the United States Code in the bankruptcy court. Countrywide is a secured creditor by virtue of a promissory note and a mortgage recorded against the Debtors' residence as security for the promissory note. (See Appellants' Mem. of Law in Support of Notice of Appeal [D.E. 1-2], p. 1). Countrywide asserted a secured claim of $287,902.23, pre-petition arrearages totaling $16,417.67, and an insufficient funds fee of $682.88. (See Appellee's Objection to Countrywide's Mot. for Leave to Appeal [D.E. 1-2], p. 2). Countrywide further claimed that Debtors' "'Regular Monthly Installments of $1,783.64 . . .' would increase to $4,773.54 'Effective 7/1/2007' and that it might be entitled to future costs of collection, including attorney's fees." (Id. (citing R. 14)).

Debtors filed their first amended Chapter 13 plan (the "Plan") on July 19, 2007. (See id.). Under the Plan, Debtors proposed to repay creditors' claims over a period of 60 months. Debtors proposed to pay Countrywide's first and second lien claims outside the Plan. (See id.). The bankruptcy court scheduled a confirmation hearing on the Plan for January 29, 2008.

Debtors also filed an Objection to Countrywide's claim on August 10, 2007, arguing that Countrywide had failed to provide a breakdown of the claimed arrearages and insufficient funds fee. (See id. (citing R. 48)). Debtors requested "'a breakdown of the increase of the new monthly payment of $4,773.54'" and an award of attorney's fees from Countrywide, noting that Debtors' counsel "'has been forced to file his Objection to Claim in response to creditor's filing of an incorrect and/or improper Proof of Claim . . . .'" (Id.). Debtors also objected to Countrywide's claim for future attorney's fees. (See id. at 3).

Countrywide did not respond to Debtors' Objection, and the bankruptcy court entered an Order sustaining Debtors' Objection on August 28, 2007 (the "Objection Order"). (See id. (citing R.59)). The Objection Order reduced Countrywide's secured claim to $266,295.50, "struck 'the portion of the claim labeled pre-petition escrow advance in the amount of $11,923.85 and the insufficient funds fee in the amount of $682.88 . . .' and reserved jurisdiction to award attorneys' fees." (Id.). The Objection Order also disallowed any future attorney's fees claimed by Countrywide. (See id.).

Thereafter, on November 6, 2007, Countrywide, in agreement with Debtors, filed a Motion to Reconsider Debtors' Objection to Claim, stating it had provided Debtors with backup documentation to support the proof of claim, reduced the amount of the regular payment to $2,448.41, and paid attorney's fees to Debtors' attorney as necessitated by the circumstances. (See id. at 4; see also Appellant's Mem., p. 2). The bankruptcy court subsequently entered an Agreed Order Granting the Motion to Reconsider.

Earlier, on October 23, 2007, the Trustee filed a Second Amended Notice of Taking Rule 2004 Examination Duces Tecum of Corporate Representative of Countrywide with Subpoena Duces Tecum (the "Notice"). Through the Notice, the Trustee sought to conduct discovery regarding the factual basis for Countrywide's proof of claim. (See Appellee's Objection [D.E. 1-2], p. 3). On November 2, 2007, Countrywide filed an Objection to the Notice. Countrywide argued that the Trustee lacked authority under 11 U.S.C. § 307 and 28 U.S.C. § 586 to investigate the factual basis for Countrywide's proof of claim. Countrywide also asserted that the requested discovery exceeded the scope of Federal Rule of Bankruptcy Procedure 2004[2] and that some of the document requests impinged on the attorney-client and work product privileges. According to Countrywide, the document requests in general constituted an "impermissible fishing expedition ." (See id.).

Following a hearing on Countrywide's Objection to the Trustee's Notice, the bankruptcy court issued the Order under review, partially sustaining and partially denying Countrywide's Objection. In its Order, the bankruptcy court found that 28 U.S.C. § 586 does not limit the Trustee's ability "to raise, appear and be heard on any issue in any case or proceeding under title 11." (R. 132). The bankruptcy court further held that the Trustee is authorized to issue a subpoena and conduct an examination of Countrywide pursuant to Rule 2004, in accordance with the authority granted the Trustee under 11 U.S.C. § 307 and 28 U.S.C. § 586. Additionally, the court determined there is a pending issue in the case upon which the Trustee may appear and be heard. (See id. (citing 11 U.S.C. § 307)).[3]

[2] Federal Rule of Bankruptcy Procedure 2004 provides in pertinent part

> (a) Examination on motion
>
> On a motion of any party in interest, the court may order the examination of any entity.
> (b) Scope of examination
> The examination of any entity under this rule or of the debtor under § 343 of the Code may relate only to the acts, conduct, or property or to the liabilities and financial condition of the debtor, or to any matter which may affect the administration of the debtor's estate . . . .

See also In re Recoton Corp., 307 B.R. 751, 755 (S.D.N.Y. 2004) (citing Fed. R. Bankr. P. 2004(b)). "The purpose of a Rule 2004 examination is to assist a party in interest in determining the nature and extent of the bankruptcy estate, revealing assets, examining transactions and assessing whether wrongdoing has occurred." Id. (citation omitted).

[3] The Order conditioned Countrywide producing the documents upon the Trustee providing Countrywide with a certificate of compliance under the Right to Financial Privacy Act of 1978, 12 U.S.C. §§ 3401 et seq. (See id.). The Trustee has provided the requisite certificate. (See Appellee's Objection [D.E. 1-2], p. 5).

Countrywide has identified the following issues it wishes to pursue:

1. Whether the bankruptcy court erred in finding that the Trustee possesses the authority to issue a subpoena and conduct and examination of Countrywide pursuant to Rule 2004.

2. Whether the bankruptcy court erred in finding that the Trustee possesses the authority to issue a subpoena and conduct an examination of Countrywide pursuant to 11 U.S.C. § 307 and 28 U.S.C. § 586.

3. Whether the bankruptcy court erred in finding there is a pending issue in this case upon which the Trustee may be heard pursuant to 11 U.S.C. § 307.

4. Whether the bankruptcy judge should have disqualified himself from hearing Countrywide's Objection pursuant to 28 U.S.C. § 455 (a) on the grounds that his impartiality might reasonably be questioned.

II. ANALYSIS

District courts have appellate jurisdiction over the final judgments, orders, and decrees of bankruptcy courts. 28 U.S.C. § 158(a)(1). A district court also has discretionary jurisdiction to hear appeals of interlocutory orders, upon leave. 28 U.S.C. § 158(a)(3). Countrywide contends the Order Overruling in Part the Objections of Countrywide Home Loans, Inc. to the Second Amended Notice of Examination Under Federal Rule of Bankruptcy Procedure 2004 and Subpoena Duces Tecum served by Appellee is a final bankruptcy order subject to immediate appellate review. In the alternative, Countrywide seeks leave to appeal the Order as an interlocutory appealable order under section 158(a)(3). The Trustee maintains the Order is a non-final, interlocutory discovery order not subject to immediate appellate review.

1. Whether a final, appealable order was entered

Countrywide argues that in bankruptcy proceedings, a final order is one which resolves a particular controversy. Countrywide contends that its Objection to the Trustee's Notice is a separate, distinct dispute within the Del Castillo Chapter 13 proceeding. The initial issue the undersigned addresses is whether in resolving the matter in favor of the Trustee, the Order is final and appealable.

A final order "'is an order that concludes the litigation on the merits of the case and 'leaves nothing for the court to do but execute the judgment.'" In re Hillsborough Holdings Corp., 164 B.R. 673, 674 (M.D. Fla. 1994) (citing In re Sunstate Dairy, 1992 WL 161138 (M.D. Fla. 1992) (quoting Catlin v. United States, 324 U.S. 229, 233 (1945)). By contrast, an interlocutory order is "[a]n order that is final with regard to a particular issue, but does not end the litigation on the merits, is not a final order under Catlin and is not immediately appealable." In re Lykes Bros. S.S.Co., Inc., 200 B.R. 933, 937 (M.D. Fla. 1996) (internal citations and quotations omitted).[4]

"'As a general proposition most orders granting or denying discovery are not final orders . . . and therefore are not immediately appealable.'" Matter of International Horizons, Inc., 689 F.2d 996, 1000-1001 (11th Cir. 1982) (quoting Rouse Construction International, Inc. v. Rouse Construction Corporation, 680 F.2d 743, 745 (11th Cir. 1982)). A party challenging a discovery order generally has two choices: (1) to comply with the order and challenge it at the conclusion of the case or (2) to refuse to comply with the order and contest its validity if subsequently cited for contempt for refusing to obey. Id. An exception to this rule exists where an order "'is directed to a person who has custody of materials as to which another person may claim a privilege of non-disclosure.'" Id. at 1001 (quoting Branch v. Phillips Petroleum Co., 638 F.2d 873, 878 n.3 (5th Cir. 1981)). Under those circumstances, "'the person who holds the privilege may seek immediate review of the disclosure order.'" Id.

[4] The Supreme Court in Catlin, 324 U.S. at 233, held a "'final decision' generally is one which ends the litigation on the merits and leaves nothing for the court to do but execute the judgment." (citation omitted).

In International Horizons, 689 F.2d 996, a creditors' committee sought access to documents and work papers in the possession of the debtors' accounting firm. The accounting firm refused to disclose the work papers, asserting the accountant-client privilege. The bankruptcy court rejected the accounting firm's claim of privilege and ordered the firm to produce the documents. On appeal, the court found that because the bankruptcy court had not yet entered a civil contempt order against the accounting firm for refusing to produce the documents, the discovery order was not final and appealable. Id. at 1001. According to the International Horizons court, the accounting firm, as the holder of the allegedly privileged material, could appeal only if and when it was adjudged in civil contempt. The International Horizons court determined, however, that because the debtor did not have custody of the allegedly privileged materials, the debtor could immediately appeal the order directing disclosure of the documents because the debtor claimed a privilege of non-disclosure relating to materials that another party had been directed to produce. Id. at 1001-02.

Here, Countrywide holds the documents at issue and Debtors have not objected to the Order, much less asserted a privilege relating to the documents in Countrywide's possession. Countrywide does not claim that its compliance with the Order will jeopardize any asserted privilege. Indeed, the bankruptcy court sustained Countrywide's objection to the Notice regarding production of documents involving attorney-client communications. (See R. 125; Nov. 20, 2007 Hearing Trans., p. 67). Countrywide may comply with the Notice and the Order and challenge the Order at the conclusion of Debtors' case, or it may refuse to comply and appeal the Order in the context of a subsequent civil contempt order. Consequently, Countrywide has failed to demonstrate that the Order is a final order or otherwise subject to immediate appellate review.

2. Whether the non-final Order is nevertheless subject to immediate appellate review

Three recognized exceptions to the final judgment rule allow interlocutory orders to be immediately reviewed: (1) the Forgay-Conrad rule (also known as the doctrine of practical finality), (2) the Cohen (or collateral order) doctrine, and (3) where the question presented is fundamental to further conduct of the case. See In re F.D.R. Hickory House, Inc., 60 F.3d 724, 726-27 (11th Cir. 1995); see also In re Lykes, 200 B.R. at 938. Countrywide argues that the Order fits within either the Forgay-Conrad rule or the Cohen doctrine.[5] Application of these exceptions is examined in turn.

Under the Forgay-Conrad rule, an interlocutory order may be reviewed by an appellate court when the order > decides the right to the property in contest, and directs it to be delivered up by the defendant to the complainant, or directs it to be sold, or directs the defendant to pay a certain sum of money to the complainant, and the complainant is entitled to have such decree carried immediately into execution.

In re Hickory House, Inc., 60 F.3d at 726-27 (quoting Forgay v. Conrad, 47 U.S. (6 How.) 201, 204 (1848); Atlantic Federal Sav. & Loan Ass'n v. Blythe Eastman Paine Webber, Inc., 890 F.2d 371, 376 (11th Cir. 1989)). Because the Order does not compel Countrywide to deliver property to the Trustee, the Forgay-Conrad exception is inapplicable. See In re Lykes, 200 B.R. at 938 (noting that an order denying a motion for appointment to the creditors' committee "does not require immediate delivery of physical property, so [the Forgay-Conrad] exception is not applicable.").

Similarly, Countrywide fails to establish that the Order is subject to immediate appellate review under the Cohen doctrine. Under this doctrine, three factors must be present:

[5] The record under review does not demonstrate a need for immediate review of the Order for the "further conduct of the case."

> (1) [T]he order must be independent and easily separable from the substance of the other claims in the action, (2) it must present a need to secure prompt review in order to protect important interests of any party, and (3) it must be examined in the light of practical, rather than narrowly technical, consideration.

In re Hillsborough Holdings, Corp., 164 B.R. at 675 (quoting In re Tidewater Group, Inc., 734 F.2d 794, 795-96 (11th Cir. 1984)).

In support of its claim that the Order is subject to immediate appellate review under the Cohen doctrine, Countrywide maintains this contested matter is independent and easily separable from the remainder of the Del Castillo case and has no bearing on Debtors. The Trustee, however, asserts it is unclear whether Countrywide will comply with the subpoenas. Further, assuming Countrywide fails to comply, "it is unclear whether the United States Trustee will move to compel." (Appellee's Objection [D.E. 1-2], p. 11). Additionally, it is equally unclear whether the bankruptcy court will hold Countrywide in civil contempt if Countrywide fails to comply with the Order. Given these uncertainties, the Trustee argues, the Cohen doctrine is not satisfied.

Countrywide has not shown that there is a need to secure prompt review in order to protect important interests of any party. It has not shown that the Order cannot be reviewed after the final judgment or that a party's interests cannot be protected in the absence of immediate review. See In re Hillsborough Holdings, Corp., 164 B.R. at 675. Having failed to satisfy any of the recognized exceptions to the final judgment rule, Countrywide has not demonstrated that immediate appellate review is warranted.

3. Whether the request for leave to appeal should be granted

In the alternative, and as previously stated, Countrywide seeks leave to appeal the Order.

Courts generally apply the standards listed in 28 U.S.C. § 1292(b) when determining whether to grant a request for leave to appeal from an interlocutory order under 28 U.S.C. § 158(a). See In re Ashoka Enterprises, Inc., 156 B.R. 343, 346 (S.D. Fla. 1993) (noting the bankruptcy statute does not provide district courts with criteria to apply when determining whether to grant leave to appeal under section 158(a), and courts therefore apply the standards in section 1292(b)); see also In re Celotex Corp., 187 B.R. 746, 749 (M.D. Fla. 1995) (recognizing that when determining whether to exercise its discretionary authority to review interlocutory orders under section 158(a), a district court will look to the standards in section 1292(b)) (citing In re Charter Co., 778 F.2d 617, 620 (11th Cir. 1985)).

Under section 1292(b), the court may allow a party to take an interlocutory appeal of an order where (1) the order involves a controlling question of law; (2) there is a substantial ground for difference of opinion regarding the court's resolution of that question of law; and (3) an immediate appeal of the order may materially advance the ultimate termination of the litigation. Section 1292(b) appeals "were intended, and should be reserved, for situations in which the court of appeals can rule on a pure, controlling question of law without having to delve beyond the surface of the record in order to determine the facts." McFarlin v. Conseco Servs., LLC, 381 F.3d 1251, 1259 (11th Cir. 2004).

> The legal question must be stated at a high enough level of abstraction to lift the question out of the details of the evidence or facts of a particular case and give it general relevance to other cases in the same area of law. And the answer to that question must substantially reduce the amount of litigation left in the case.

Id.

In support of its request for leave to appeal, Countrywide contends its appeal relates to "pure legal questions, e.g., whether there is any authority for the [Trustee] to examine a creditor's general corporate policies and procedures when no issue exists between the creditor and the debtor or under any other circumstances," and "whether the Bankruptcy Judge, in light of the testimony he gave before a Congressional sub-committee on October 2, 2007, should have disqualified himself on the grounds that his impartiality might reasonably be questioned." (Appellant's Mem. [D.E. 1-2], pp. 6-7). According to the Trustee, issues concerning the scope of discovery under Rule 2004 are inherently interlocutory, present no controlling issues of law and "'are left to the sound discretion of the court that is fully familiar with the entire proceeding – the bankruptcy judge . . . .'" (Appellee's Objection [D.E. 1-2], p. 12 (citing In re Towers Fin. Corp., 164 B.R. 719, 720 (S.D.N.Y. 1994)). The undersigned agrees with the Trustee's characterization.

The Order does not finally adjudicate the validity of Countrywide's proof of claim. Rather, the Order allows the Trustee to conduct discovery relating to Countrywide's factual support for the proof of claim. No controlling question of law is presented that would serve to advance the ultimate termination of the proceeding. See In re American Freight System, Inc., 194 B.R. 659, 662 (D. Kan. 1996) (noting bankruptcy court's discovery order, by itself, had no bearing on the merits of the proceedings, finding order was interlocutory in nature, and denying leave to appeal); see also State of Fla. ex rel. Butterworth v. Industrial Chemicals, Inc., 145 F.R.D. 585, 589 (N.D. Fla. 1991) ([G]enerally "discovery orders do not present controlling questions of law, capable of significantly advancing litigation so as to justify interlocutory appeal.") (internal citations omitted).

Further, Countrywide has not shown the existence of a substantial ground for differences of opinion regarding the question presented. As noted, it is well recognized that bankruptcy court discovery orders are interlocutory and not final appealable orders. See In re International Horizons, Inc., 689 F.2d at 1000-1001. When there is binding authority on the question presented, there is no substantial difference of opinion. See In re Pacific Forest Products Corp., 335 B.R. 910, 922 (S.D. Fla. 2005) ("[W]here there is controlling authority in the jurisdiction where the order was rendered, there cannot be a substantial difference of opinion.") (citation omitted)). Countrywide has simply not demonstrated that the Order differs materially from routine discovery orders from which interlocutory appeals are discouraged as contravening the policy against piecemeal litigation.

Lastly, Countrywide did not file a written motion seeking the bankruptcy judge's recusal and thus this claim, when reviewed, will be examined under the plain error standard. See U.S. v. Marrero, 219 Fed. Appx 892, 896 (11th Cir. 2007). Under plain error review, appellant must show error that is plain and that affected substantial rights. See U.S. v. Monroe, 353 F.3d 1346, 1349 (11th Cir. 2003) (citations omitted). That showing has not been made.

Accordingly, it is ORDERED AND ADJUDGED that Countrywide's notice of appeal or, in the alternative, request for leave to appeal, is DENIED. The Clerk of Court is instructed to CLOSE the case.

DONE AND ORDERED in Chambers, at Miami, Florida, this 8th day of February, 2008.

OKLAHOMA TAX COMMISSION and William Mark Bonney, Trustee, Appellees.
No. EO-00-073.

Aug. 30, 2001.

Pro se Chapter 13 debtors filed motion to quash and motion in limine regarding Rule 2004 examination of debtors' bankruptcy schedules and tax returns. The United States Bankruptcy Court for the Eastern District of Oklahoma denied the motions. Debtors appealed. The Bankruptcy Appellate Panel, Pusateri, J., held that: (1) bankruptcy court's orders denying the motions were final and appealable, and (2) failure to provide transcripts of bankruptcy court hearings precluded appellate review.

Appeal from the United States Bankruptcy Court for the Eastern District of Oklahoma.

Before PUSATERI, BOULDEN, and KRIEGER, Bankruptcy JJ.

ORDER AND JUDGMENT [FN*]

PUSATERI, Bankruptcy Judge.

1 After examining the briefs and appellate record, the Court has determined unanimously that oral argument would not materially assist in the determination of this appeal. See Fed.R.Bankr.P. 8012; 10th Cir. BAP L.R. 8012-1(a). The case is therefore ordered submitted without oral argument.

Lawrence and Barbara Buckner ("Debtors") appeal from a bankruptcy court order allowing the Trustee to conduct a Rule 2004 examination of Debtors. We affirm.

I. Jurisdiction and Standard of Review.

A bankruptcy appellate panel, with the consent of the parties, has jurisdiction to hear appeals from final judgments, orders, and decrees of bankruptcy judges within this circuit. 28 U.S.C. § 158(a), (b)(1), (c)(1). As none of the parties have opted to have this appeal heard by the District Court for the Eastern District of Oklahoma, they are deemed to have consented to jurisdiction. 10th Cir. BAP L.R. 8001-1(d).

[1] The Bankruptcy Appellate Panel may affirm, modify or reverse a bankruptcy court's judgment, order or decree, or remand with instructions for further proceedings. Findings of fact shall not be set aside unless clearly erroneous. Fed.R.Bankr.P. 8013; see First Bank v. Reid (In re Reid), 757 F.2d 230, 233-34 (10th Cir.1985). Conclusions of law are reviewed de novo. Pierce v. Underwood, 487 U.S. 552, 558, 108 S.Ct. 2541, 101 L.Ed.2d 490 (1988). Decisions under Fed.R.Bankr.P. 2004 are reviewed for an abuse of discretion. In re Charters Int'l Co., Inc., Civ. A. No. 89-2231-O, 1990 WL 81764 (D.Kan. May 21, 1990).

II. Background.

Debtors are pro se debtors in a Chapter 13 case. Their sixty-month plan was confirmed in November 1998. Debtors and the IRS settled a claim dispute for approximately $48,000.

On August 24, 2000, the Trustee, William Bonney ("the Trustee"), filed a motion to conduct 2004 exam of Debtors. The motion requested testimony on all documents relating to the preparation of the Debtors' schedules and used in the preparation of Debtors' 1998 and 1999 tax returns. On August 28 the bankruptcy court entered ex parte orders granting the motion and setting the examination of Debtors for September 13, 2000.

On September 11, 2000, Debtors filed a motion to quash on the grounds that they were not provided adequate notice of the Trustee's motion and that the 2004 exam exceeded the scope of the Trustee's duties. The matter was set for evidentiary hearing on September 20, 2000. The Trustee filed a notice of intent to present evidence at the hearing. Debtors filed a notice of waiver of oral argument and requested the court vacate the hearing. The court advised the parties that the evidentiary hearing would be conducted as scheduled and directed the Debtors and all parties to appear and participate. Debtors responded by filing an objection to the Trustee calling witnesses at the hearing.

Based on the record made at the hearing, the bankruptcy court denied the motion to quash and directed Debtors to appear for a continued 2004 exam on October 3, 2000. Debtors did not include a copy of the transcript from this hearing in the record on appeal.

2 Debtors appeared at the 2004 exam with lockboxes, but they refused to answer any questions and read a statement that said, "Mr. Mather [Trustee's counsel], will you go on the record here that if I provide you with this information that I have here in this box, that it will not be used against me outside of this bankruptcy proceeding?" The Trustee declined, and the examination was continued.

On October 5, 2000, Debtors filed a Motion in Limine requesting the bankruptcy court limit the scope of the 2004 exam to inquiry into the financial affairs of the Debtors and prohibit questions regarding assistance in preparing their bankruptcy petition and schedules as well as tax returns. They also filed a "Notice of Supplementation of Rule 2004 Hearing held October 3, 2000," to which they attached an Exhibit of the written statement in their lockboxes, which said, in effect, that any assistance in preparing their bankruptcy pleadings and schedules came from God. The Trustee responded to the motion in limine, arguing that it was inappropriate outside of jury trial matters.

At the hearing held November 1, 2000, the bankruptcy court denied the motion in limine based on the record made at the hearing. The court ordered Debtors to proceed with the 2004 exam immediately afterwards in the court's library. Debtors did not include a transcript from this hearing in the record on appeal.

Teresa Trissell, a trial attorney for the Justice Department appeared at the Rule 2004 examination as well as the attorney for the Trustee. Debtors testified that they used several websites to assist in preparation of their bankruptcy documents. They also attended a "freedom rally," where they purchased materials on tax and estate planning issues. Debtors testified that they had help from Dr. Tom Smith, a "legal research doctor," in preparing pleadings. Ms. Trissell also questioned Debtors about payments they had made to any of these individuals.

Debtors filed a Notice of Appeal on November 3, 2000, appealing the bankruptcy court decision regarding the Debtors' objection to the proof of claim of the IRS; Debtors' Motion in Limine; Debtors' motion to abate the proceedings; and the Motion of the IRS for summary judgment, all issued on November 1, 2000 [FN1]. The only order included in the record on appeal is the order denying the motion in limine and directing continuation of the 2004 exam.

III. Discussion.

[2][3][4] As a threshold matter, the Court addresses whether it has jurisdiction to hear this appeal. As a general rule, discovery orders are not appealable until the end of the case. See Union Carbide Corp. v. U.S. Cutting Service, Inc., 782 F.2d 710, 712 (7th Cir.1986). It is well-settled in this circuit that an order is not final unless it ends the litigation on the merits, leaving nothing for the court to do but execute the judgment. See In re Magic Circle Energy Corp., 889 F.2d 950, 953 (10th Cir.1989). In this case, the Debtors' Chapter 13 plan was confirmed in 1998. Because the postconfirmation Rule 2004 examination is a separate proceeding and there is no indication that further action by the bankruptcy court will be forthcoming, we conclude the matter is final for purposes of appeal under § 158(d).

3 [5][6][7] The Court notes that this case is rife with procedural problems, most likely attributable to Debtors' pro se status. However, pro se litigants must follow the same rules of procedure as other litigants. Nielsen v. Price, 17 F.3d 1276, 1277 (10th Cir.1994). Debtors specifically appealed from the order regarding their objection to the proof of claim of the IRS, their motion to abate the proceedings, and the motion, but not order, of the IRS for summary judgment. Not one of these orders, however, is included in the record on appeal. The Court may decline to review an issue when a party does not fulfill its responsibility to provide a document necessary for the consideration and determination of the issue. See Gowan v. United States Dept. of Air Force, 148 F.3d 1182, 1192 (10th Cir.1998); see also Rios v. Bigler, 67 F.3d 1543, 1553 (10th Cir.1995) ("It is not this court's burden to hunt down the pertinent materials. Rather, it is Plaintiff's responsibility as the appellant to provide us with a proper record on appeal."). This Court cannot review the bankruptcy court's determination on these matters without reviewing the pleadings and orders. See, e.g., United States v. Vasquez, 985 F.2d 491, 494 (10th Cir.1993) ("When the record on appeal fails to include copies of the documents necessary to decide an issue on appeal, the Court of Appeals is unable to rule on that issue.").

[8] The Court further notes that Debtors did not specifically appeal from the preliminary order allowing the Rule 2004 exam or the order denying motion to quash. The time limits established for filing a notice of appeal are " 'mandatory and jurisdictional.' " Browder v. Director, Dept. of Corrections, 434 U.S. 257, 264, 98 S.Ct. 556, 54 L.Ed.2d 521 (1978) (quoting United States v. Robinson, 361 U.S. 220, 229, 80 S.Ct. 282, 4 L.Ed.2d 259 (1960)). Rule 8002 requires that a notice of appeal be filed within ten days of the entry of the judgment appealed. Fed.R.Bankr.P. 8002(a).

In this case, the order granting motion for 2004 exam was entered August 28, 2000. The Debtors did not file a motion to quash until September 11, 2000, more than ten days later. The motion to quash states that the 2004 exam exceeds the scope of the Trustee's duties. The order denying the motion to quash was entered September 22, 2000. The Debtors did not file a notice of appeal or motion to reconsider, but rather, a motion in limine on October 5, 2000, also more than ten days later. The order denying the motion in limine was entered November 3, 2000, and the notice of appeal was filed the same day. Debtors did not appeal the initial order granting the motion for 2004 exam or the order denying the motion to quash. Accordingly, the only order timely appealed appears to be the order denying the Debtors' motion in limine and directing continuation of the 2004 examination.

[9] A motion in limine is designed to aid the trial process by enabling the court to rule in advance of trial on the relevance of certain forecasted evidence as to issues that are definitely set for trial, without lengthy argument at, or interruption of, the trial. In this case, there were no issues definitely set for trial; Debtors were apparently attempting to pre-empt any future use of information gathered at the Rule 2004 examination.

4 [10] Although incorrectly captioned, the motion in limine appears to be and will be construed by the Court as another attempt to limit scope of the 2004 exam. As a preliminary matter, we note again that our review is limited. A bankruptcy court's order regarding a Rule 2004 examination must be affirmed unless it constitutes an abuse of discretion. Reversal is appropriate only if the court " 'based its ruling on an erroneous view of the law or on a clearly erroneous assessment of the evidence.' " Hughes v. City of Fort Collins, 926 F.2d 986, 988 (10th Cir.1991) (quoting Cooter & Gell v. Hartmarx Corp., 496 U.S. 384, 405, 110 S.Ct. 2447, 110 L.Ed.2d 359 (1990)). In this circuit, abuse of discretion is defined as " 'an arbitrary, capricious, whimsical, or manifestly unreasonable judgment.' " F.D.I.C. v. Oldenburg, 34 F.3d 1529, 1555 (10th Cir.1994) (quoting United States v. Hernandez-Herrera, 952 F.2d 342, 343 (10th Cir.1991) (further quotation omitted)). It is with this standard in mind that we review Debtors' arguments.

[11][12][13] The Debtors argue that the Trustee exceeded the scope of his duties in conducting a "fishing expedition" during the Rule 2004 examination. They request that this Court reverse the bankruptcy court order allowing the examination to proceed and strike the information and transcript from the record. As a general rule, examinations under Rule 2004 are allowed for the purpose of discovering assets, examining transactions, and determining whether wrongdoing has occurred. In re Duratech Indus., Inc., 241 B.R. 283, 289 (E.D.N.Y.1999). Necessarily, the scope of Rule 2004 is extremely broad, and the rule itself is " 'peculiar to bankruptcy law and procedure because it affords few of the procedural safeguards that an examination under Rule 26 of the Federal Rules of Procedure' offers." In re Strecker, 251 B.R. 878, 882 (Bankr.D.Colo.2000) (quoting In re GHR Energy Corp., 33 B.R. 451, 454 (Bankr.D.Mass.1983)). In fact, Rule 2004 exams have been characterized as "fishing expeditions," although they are not without bounds. In re Buick, 174 B.R. 299, 305 (Bankr.D.Colo.1994). Rule 2004 examinations cannot be used for the purpose of abuse or harassment, and the examination cannot go beyond the bounds of what is, or may be, relevant to the inquiry. In re Symington, 209 B.R. 678, 684-85 (Bankr.D.Md.1997). Examinations under rule 2004 should not be used to annoy, embarrass or oppress the debtor. In re Coffee Cupboard, Inc., 128 B.R. 509, 514 (Bankr.E.D.N.Y.1991).

[14][15] Again, the Court notes a procedural error. Debtors' failure to provide the Court with a transcript of the bankruptcy court's findings from the hearing on the motion in limine or the hearing on the motion to quash frustrates any attempt to apply the abuse of discretion standard of review. As a general rule, failure to provide a trial transcript warrants affirmance of the trial court decision on appeal where the issue on appeal requires the appellate court to review the record in the trial court. In re Rambo, 209 B.R. 527, 530 (10th Cir.BAP1997). Debtors' failure to supply the court with a transcript of the hearings makes it impossible for the Court to determine whether the bankruptcy court's order allowing the 2004 examination and declining to limit the scope of the examination was an abuse of discretion.

5 [16] Although we premise our affirmance of the bankruptcy court's order denying the motion in limine and ordering the Rule 2004 examination to proceed without limiting the scope on Debtors' failure to provide an adequate record for review, we have, to the extent possible, considered Debtors' arguments, and we find them to be without merit. Certainly, inquiry by a Trustee regarding preparation of a debtor's bankruptcy schedules and tax returns is within the broad scope permitted a Rule 2004 examination. Accordingly, we hold that the bankruptcy court did not abuse its discretion in allowing the examination to proceed as requested.

IV. Conclusion.

The decision of the trial court is AFFIRMED.

FN* This order and judgment has no precedential value and may not be cited, except for the purposes of establishing the doctrines of law of the case, res judicata, or collateral estoppel. 10th Cir. BAP L.R. 8010-2.

FN1. On September 18, 2000, Debtors filed an objection to the claim of the IRS and the Oklahoma Tax Commission. The IRS apparently prevailed on summary judgment, but it does not appear that Debtors appeal from any such order.

MORTGAGE ELECTRONIC REGISTRATION SYSTEMS, INC., as nominee for lender, Appellant,
v.
Kimbertly A. JONES and Sheryl C. Jones, Appellees.
No. 09-10321.

March 11, 2009.
Kimbertly A. Jones, Las Vegas, NV, pro se.

William D. Johnson, Acclaim Legal Services, Southfield, MI, for Appellees.

ORDER

JULIAN ABELE COOK, JR., District Judge.

1 On May 20, 2008, the Appellees, Kimbertly A. Jones and Sheryl C. Jones, filed for protection under Chapter 7 of the United States Bankruptcy Code. On July 11, 2008, the Appellant, Mortgage Electronic Registration Systems, Inc. filed an adversary proceeding against the Appellees in the United States Bankruptcy Court for the Eastern District of Michigan.

Nearly two months later (September 26th), the Appellant submitted several discovery requests to the Appellees in the form of interrogatories, requests to produce, as well as requests for admission. On November 7th, the Appellant filed a motion for the entry of a summary judgment in the Bankruptcy Court, contending that (1) the Appellees had failed to answer its requests for admissions, and (2) by virtue of Fed.R.Civ.P. 36(b), "all matters contained therein [were] deemed admitted." Moreover, the Appellant points out that "a matter admitted under this rule is conclusively established unless the court, on motion, permits the admission to be withdrawn or amended." The Appellees, after filing a response in opposition to the pending motion on November 11th, submitted their answers to the Appellant's various discovery requests on December 5th. Following a hearing on December 18th, Bankruptcy Judge Walter Shapero rejected the Appellant's dispositive request for the entry of a summary judgment. It was his belief that a summary judgment was not warranted inasmuch as the Appellees had now filed their answers to the Appellant's discovery requests, albeit untimely.

On January 27, 2009, the Appellant filed a motion for leave to file an interlocutory appeal in this federal district court. In support of its request, the Appellant contends that (1) the question to be determined is one of law, (2) the Appellees' failure to respond to its discovery requests establishes their liability, and (3) a decision on this issue in its favor would greatly expedite this litigation. In their opposition papers of February 18, 2009, the Appellees argue that the Appellant's motion is unwarranted because it has failed to establish that Bankruptcy Judge Shapero abused his discretion when rendering his decision.

Over fifteen years ago, the Sixth Circuit Court of Appeals cautioned that interlocutory appeals should be granted only in "exceptional cases," Vitols v. Citizens Banking Co., 984 F.2d 168, 170 (6th Cir.1993) (internal citations omitted), because of the disruption and delay that is inherent in the immediate appeal of an order. United States v. Bilsky, 664 F.2d 613, 615 (6th Cir.1981).

When determining whether an interlocutory appeal from a bankruptcy court order is appropriate, district courts are encouraged to examine (1) 28 U.S.C. § 1292(b) [FN1] and (2) the standards that have been adopted by the Sixth Circuit Court of Appeals when deciding whether or not to hear interlocutory appeals from federal district courts. In the Matter of PHM Credit Corp., 99 B.R. 762, 767 (E.D.Mich.1989). When evaluating the propriety of an interlocutory appeal, the Sixth Circuit Court of Appeals seeks to determine if (1) the challenged order involves a controlling legal question; (2) there is substantial ground for a difference of opinion relating to the issue under review; and (3) an immediate appeal would materially advance the termination of the litigation. W. Tenn. Chapter of Assoc. Builders & Contractors, Inc. v. City of Memphis, 293 F.3d 345, 350 (6th Cir.2002).

FN1. 28 U.S.C. § 1292(b) provides, in part:

> When a district judge, in making in a civil action an order not otherwise appealable under this section, shall be of the opinion that such order involves a controlling question of law as to which there is substantial ground for difference of opinion and that an immediate appeal from the order may materially advance the ultimate termination of the litigation, he shall so state in writing in such order. The Court of Appeals which would have jurisdiction of an appeal of such action may thereupon, in its discretion, permit an appeal to be taken from such order ....

2 A question of law is controlling "if it could materially affect the outcome of the case." Id. (citing In re Baker & Getty Fin. Servs., Inc. v. Nat'l Union Fire Ins. Co., 954 F.2d 1169, 1172 n. 8 (6th Cir.1992). Moreover, the type of legal questions that are addressed in 28 U.S.C. § 1292(b) do not include issues which fall within the discretion of the trial court. Id. (citing White v. Nix, 43 F.3d 374, 377 (8th Cir.1994)).

Here, the Court does not believe that the Appellant's request for an interlocutory appeal is warranted for two reasons. First, the denial of a summary judgment by a Bankruptcy Judge is not immediately appealable. See McMullen v. Meijer, Inc., 355 F.3d 485, 489 (6th Cir.2004). Secondly, there is no purely legal and controlling question of law at issue. The denial of the Appellant's motion for summary judgment by Bankruptcy Judge Shapero was based on his conclusion that the Appellees' answers to interrogatories, though untimely, should be considered in conjunction with the entire case. While recognizing that the Appellees' discovery responses were late, he did not "think the ... appropriate response [would be] the granting of a judgment." As such, Judge Shapero's denial of the Appellant's motion for a summary judgment, as well as his order which authorized the Appellees' late discovery filings, are reviewable on an abuse of discretion standard. See Romstadt v. Allstate Ins. Co., 59 F.3d 608, 615 (6th Cir.1995) (denial of summary judgment reviewed for abuse of discretion); Proctor v. USDE, 196 Fed. Appx. 345, 347 (6th Cir.2006) ("court enjoys broad discretion in handling discovery disputes"). As noted above, issues that fall within the discretion of the court are not appropriate for interlocutory review. W. Tenn. Chapter of Assoc. Builders & Contractors, Inc., 293 F.3d at 350. Finally, the Court, when assessing the issues as a whole, does not believe that Judge Shapero abused his discretion under the circumstances that appear on this record.

Accordingly and for the reasons that have been stated above, the Court must, and does, deny the Appellant's motion for leave to file an interlocutory appeal.

IT IS SO ORDERED.

STATEMENT OF JURISDICTION

The United States Bankruptcy Court for the Southern District of New York had jurisdiction over the Chapter 7 case of Lena M. Elmendorf, and the Chapter 13 cases of Diana M. Finlay and Shayna H. Zarnel under 28 U.S.C. 157(b). These appeals are taken from a Memorandum Opinion that court entered on July 18, 2006 directing the striking of the three bankruptcy cases over the objection of the United States Trustee, whose motion had sought dismissal of the cases, as well as from the subsequent orders entered on July 28, 2006 striking the cases. The United States Trustee filed timely notices of appeal in each case from the Memorandum Opinion on July 27, 2006 and from the orders on July 28, 2006 under 28 U.S.C. 158(c)(2) and Fed. R. Bankr. P. 8002(a).[1] This Court has jurisdiction over these appeals under 28 U.S.C. 158(a)(1).

STATEMENT OF THE ISSUE

Under section 301 of the Bankruptcy Code, the filing of a petition commences a bankruptcy case. In a variety of contexts, federal courts routinely dismiss cases that lack merit, including cases brought in the absence of subject matter jurisdiction. Given that law, did the court below err when it ruled that Ms. Elmendorf, Ms. Finlay and Ms. Zarnel's petitions had not commenced cases, and terminated the bankruptcy proceedings by striking the cases on its own initiative, while denying the motions to dismiss the cases?

[1] Congress has authorized the United States Attorney General to appoint 21 United States trustees, each to serve in a specific geographic region of the United States. See generally 28 U.S.C. 581 et seq. (establishing United States Trustee Program). The United States trustees are senior officials of the Department of Justice. Id. United States Trustees "supervise the administration of cases and trustees" in all bankruptcy cases within his or her region through the exercise of a range of oversight responsibilities. 28 U.S.C. 586(a)(3).

STATEMENT OF THE CASE

This appeal presents an important recurring issue that has arisen under the new Bankruptcy Code as amended by the Bankruptcy Abuse Prevention and Consumer Protection Act of 2005 (BAPCPA). That new law requires individuals to obtain credit counseling from an approved agency before seeking bankruptcy relief. See 11 U.S.C. 109(h). On November 29, 2005, Ms. Elmendorf filed her petition under Chapter 7 of the Bankruptcy Code without satisfying the Code's pre-filing credit counseling requirement, or seeking the temporary exemption afforded by the statute under certain circumstances. See 11 U.S.C. § 109(h)(3). On March 13, 2006, Ms Zarnel filed her petition under Chapter 13 of the Bankruptcy Code and sought a temporary exemption, which the bankruptcy court denied. On April 3, 2006, Ms. Finlay filed her petition under Chapter 13 of the Bankruptcy Code and sought a temporary exemption, which the bankruptcy court also denied. The United States Trustee filed motions to dismiss all three cases, which were unopposed by any party. Neither the bankruptcy court nor any party has contested the assertion that failure to satisfy the credit counseling requirement renders Ms. Elmendorf, Ms. Zarnel and Ms. Finlay ineligible to be debtors. The sole issue is whether the cases should have been stricken, as determined in a July 18, 2006 Memorandum Opinion and ordered by the bankruptcy court on July 28, 2006, or dismissed, as sought by the United States Trustee. The United States Trustee sought dismissal, and opposed striking of the cases because the nature of the relief granted could have a substantial impact upon Ms. Elemendorf, Ms. Zarnel and Ms. Finlay's creditors. The United States Trustee timely filed these appeals.

STATEMENT OF FACTS

1. Statutory Framework

Chapter 3 of the Bankruptcy Code, 11 U.S.C. 301, et seq., governs the commencement and administration of bankruptcy cases. Under section 301, “a voluntary case under a chapter of [the Bankruptcy Code] is commenced by the filing with the bankruptcy court of a petition under such chapter by an entity that may be a debtor under such chapter.” 11 U.S.C. 301. The commencement of a case under section 301 is significant for many reasons. For example, under 28 U.S.C. 1930(a), “parties commencing a case under title 11" are required to pay the clerk of the bankruptcy court a fee for a case commenced under chapter 7 of the Bankruptcy Code. 28 U.S.C. 1930(a). When a debtor commences a chapter 7 case under section 301, the court issues a notice of the debtor’s bankruptcy filing to the debtor’s creditors, assigning the debtor a case number and advising the debtor’s creditors that “the filing of the bankruptcy case automatically stays certain collection and other actions against the debtor.” (ER. at 5; Notice of Chapter 7 Bankruptcy Case, Meeting of Creditors, & Deadlines; ZR. at 4; Notice of Chapter 13 Bankruptcy Case, Meeting of Creditors and Fixing of Dates; FR. at 4; Notice of Chapter 13 Bankruptcy Case, Meeting of Creditors and Fixing of Dates).[2] In addition, in the Chapter 7 case under 11 U.S.C. § 701, the United States Trustee must appoint a disinterested person to “serve as interim trustee in the case.” 11 U.S.C. 701(a)(1). Under 11 U.S.C. § 1302(a) the United States Trustee must appoint either the standing trustee appointed under 28 U.S.C. § 586(b) to serve in cases under Chapter 13, or a disinterested person to serve as trustee in the case.[3]

Section 109 establishes rules that govern eligibility to be a debtor under the Bankruptcy Code. This section includes general rules that affect the eligibility of individuals to proceed as debtors under each chapter of the Bankruptcy Code. For example, under section 109(g), no individual may be a debtor under the Bankruptcy Code if that individual had a case pending at any time during the preceding 180 days if the prior case "was dismissed by the court for willful failure of the debtor to abide by orders of the court." 11 U.S.C. 109(g). Section 109 also places restrictions on the types of individuals who may proceed as debtors under specific chapters of the Bankruptcy Code. See 11 U.S.C. 109. For example, only individuals with regular income who have unsecured debts of less than $307,675 and secured debts of less than $922,975 may be debtors under chapter 13 of the Bankruptcy Code. See 11 U.S.C. 109(e).

The BAPCPA amended Section 109 in 2005 to require, as an additional element of eligibility to be a debtor under any chapter of the Bankruptcy Code, that all individuals receive credit counseling during the 180-day period prior to filing a petition in bankruptcy. See 11 U.S.C. 109(h)(1). [4]

Section 707, of Chapter 7, entitled Dismissal of a case or conversion to a case under chapter 11 or 13, establishes that "a court may dismiss a case under [Chapter 7] . . . for cause..."

[3] The United States Trustee may also serve as trustee in the case.

[4] Under this new provision, debtors may seek an extension of the pre-filing requirement of up to forty-five days after filing if they can establish, among other things, that exigent circumstances required that they file for bankruptcy protection before obtaining the required credit counseling. See 11 U.S.C. 109(h)(3). In addition, upon notice and a hearing, a debtor may seek waiver of the credit counseling requirement altogether if the debtor can establish that he or she is incapacitated, disabled or on active military duty in a military combat zone. See 11 U.S.C. 109(h)(4). Those sections are not at issue in this appeal.

11 U.S.C. 707(a). It includes a nonexhaustive list of reasons that may constitute cause to dismiss a Chapter 7 bankruptcy case. See 11 U.S.C. 707(a). Section 1307, of Chapter 13, entitled Conversion or dismissal, establishes that a debtor may convert a case to Chapter 7 at any time, that the court shall dismiss a case upon request of a debtor whose case has not previously been converted from another chapter, and that "...the court may convert a case under [Chapter 13] to a case under Chapter 7 of [Title 11], or may dismiss a case under [Chapter 13], whichever is in the best interest of creditors and the estate, for cause..." 11 U.S.C. § 1307. It also includes a nonexhaustive list of reasons that may constitute cause to convert or dismiss a Chapter 13 case.

2. Factual Background

a. Lena M. Elmendorf

Ms. Elmendorf filed a petition for relief under Chapter 7 of the Bankruptcy Code on November 29, 2006. (ER. at 1; Voluntary Petition). The Court received a filing fee and assigned Case No. 05-55048. (ER. at 1; Receipt of Voluntary Petition; ER. at 5, Notice of Chapter 7 Bankruptcy Case, Meeting of Creditors and Deadlines). Ms. Elmendorf was assisted in the preparation and filing of her bankruptcy petition by her bankruptcy counsel.(ER. at 1; Voluntary Petition) The Bankruptcy Code requires a debtor to file a certificate from the approved credit counseling agency as proof that the debtor has fulfilled the credit counseling requirement of 11 U.S.C. 109(h). See 11 U.S.C. 521(b)(1). Interim Rules 1007(b)(3) and (c) require that the certificate of credit counseling be filed with the bankruptcy petition in a voluntary case.[5] See Int. R. Fed. Bankr. P.1007(b)(3) and (c). The United States Trustee filed a motion to dismiss Ms. Elmendorf's case on the basis that she was ineligible to be a debtor. (ER. at 7-8; Motion to Dismiss Chapter 7 Case for Cause Pursuant to 11 U.S.C. §§ 109(h), 521(b) and 707(a) and Memorandum of Law). The United States Trustee also filed a supplemental memorandum of law opposing the striking of the case, and further supporting dismissal. (ER. at 11; Memorandum of Law in Further Support of Motion of the United States Trustee to Dismiss Chapter 7 Case)("the Supplemental Memorandum of Law"). No party appeared, or in any way opposed the motion to dismiss the case, and no party sought the striking of the case. (See generally, Lena M. Elmendorf docket; Transcript of May 16, 2006 hearing).

b. Shayna H. Zarnel

Ms. Zarnel filed a pro se petition for relief under Chapter 13 of the Bankruptcy Code on March 13, 2006. (ZR. at 1; Voluntary Petition). This case was her first bankruptcy filing, but her husband, Alfred R. Zarnel, had filed five bankruptcy petitions since January, 2004 ," ...in continuance of Mr. Zarnel's pattern of instituting a bankruptcy filing, without making any meaningful attempt to reorganize or comply with the provisions of the bankruptcy code, and upon any subsequent dismissal, re-filing within two months to stay scheduled foreclosure sales." (ZR. at 28; Memorandum Opinion at pp. 6-7). The Court received a partial filing fee, and assigned Case No. 06-35189. (ZR. at 1, Voluntary Petition; ZR. at 4; Notice of Chapter 13 Case, Meeting of Creditors, and Fixing of Dates). The bankruptcy court granted Ms. Zarnel's application to pay the filing fee in installments. (ZR. 3 and 9; Application to Pay Filing Fee in Installments and Order Allowing Payment of Filing Fee in Installments). Ms. Zarnel filed a motion to extend time for credit counseling. (ZR. at 2; Motion to Extend Time for Credit Counseling). She also filed a certificate reflecting receipt of credit counseling on March 21, 2006, after the bankruptcy case filing date. (ZR. at 13; Certificate of Credit Counseling). The United States Trustee filed a motion to dismiss Ms. Zarnel's Chapter 13 case on the basis that she was ineligible to be a debtor. (ZR. at 16-17; Motion to Dismiss Chapter 13 Case for Cause Pursuant to 11 U.S.C. §§ 109(h), 521(b) and 1307(c) and Memorandum of Law). No party appeared, or in any way opposed the motion to dismiss the case, and no party sought the striking of the case. (See generally, Shayna H. Zarnel docket; Transcript of May 30, 2006 hearing). By order dated May 23, 2006, the bankruptcy court denied Ms. Zarnel's request for an extension of time to meet the credit counseling requirement, on the basis that she failed to demonstrate the exigent circumstances required by 11 U.S.C. § 109(h)(3)(A)(i). (ZR. at 18). At the hearing on the United States Trustee's motion to dismiss the case held on May 30, 2006, the bankruptcy court indicated that it would consider arguments and the Supplemental Memorandum of Law filed in connection with the Lena M. Elmendorf case, and make a joint ruling on the United States Trustee's motion in that case, Ms. Zarnel's case and that of Diana M. Finlay. (See Transcript of May 30, 2006 hearing).

c. Diana M. Finlay

Ms. Finlay filed a pro se petition for relief under Chapter 13 of the Bankruptcy Code on April 3, 2006. (FR. at 1; Voluntary Petition). This is Ms. Finlay's third bankruptcy filing in the past year. (FR. at 15; Memorandum Opinion, p. 5.) The Court received a filing fee, and assigned Case No. 06-35274. (FR. at 1, Voluntary Petition; FR. at 4; Notice of Chapter 13 Case, Meeting of Creditors, and Fixing of Dates). Ms. Finlay filed a motion to extend time for credit counseling. (FR. at 2; Motion to Extend Time for Credit Counseling). By order dated April 5, 2006, the bankruptcy court denied Ms. Finlay's request for an extension of time to meet the credit counseling requirement, on the basis that she failed to demonstrate that she had requested credit counseling services from an approved credit counseling agency and that she was unable to obtain those services during the five day period following the request, as required by 11 U.S.C. § 109(h)(3)(A)(ii). (FR. at 6; Order Denying Motion to Extend Time for Credit Counseling.). Ms. Finlay's secured lender, Ameriquest Mortgage Company, obtained an order on May 9, 2006 pursuant to 11 U.S.C. § 362(j), confirming that no stay came into effect upon the filing of the bankruptcy case in accordance with 11 U.S.C. § 362(c)(4) due to the two prior filings. (FR. at 13; Order Confirming That No Stay is in Effect; FR. at 15; Memorandum Opinion at p. 6).

The United States Trustee filed a motion to dismiss Ms. Finlay's Chapter 13 case on the basis that she was ineligible to be a debtor. (FR. at 11-12; Motion to Dismiss Chapter 13 Case for Cause Pursuant to 11 U.S.C. §§ 109(h), 521(b) and 1307(c) and Memorandum of Law). No party appeared, or in any way opposed the motion to dismiss the case, and no party sought the striking of the case. (See generally, Diana M. Finlay docket; Transcript of May 30, 2006 hearing). At the hearing on the United States Trustee's motion to dismiss the case held on May 30, 2006, the bankruptcy court indicated that it would consider arguments and the Supplemental Memorandum of Law filed in connection with the Lena M. Elmendorf case, and make a joint ruling on the United States Trustee's motion in that case, Ms. Finlay's case and that of Shayna H. Zarnel. (See Transcript of May 30, 2006 hearing).

3. The Bankruptcy Court's Ruling

On July 18, 2006 the bankruptcy court issued its Memorandum Opinion on Various Motions to Dismiss Chapter 13 Cases for Cause Pursuant to 11 U.S.C. §§ 109(h)(1), 521(a) and (b) and 707(a)/1307(c)[6] (ER. at 12; ZR. at 28; FR. at 15; Memorandum Opinion). The bankruptcy court held that a bankruptcy case is not commenced under 11 U.S.C. § 301 unless an entity is eligible to be a debtor, and since Ms. Elmendorf, Ms. Zarnel and Ms. Finlay did not comply with the credit counseling requirements of 11 U.S.C. § 109(h), and were thus ineligible to be debtors, no cases were commenced.[7] (Memorandum Opinion at p. 15). Relying upon its equitable power under 11 U.S.C. § 105(a), and its inherent docket management powers, the bankruptcy court denied the United States Trustee's motions to dismiss the cases, and directed that the cases be "stricken." In so holding, the bankruptcy court noted that neither 11 U.S.C. § 707(a) nor 11 U.S.C. § 1307(c) specifically list debtor ineligibility as a specific cause for dismissal, and rejected the reasoning of the "...many courts [that] have held that ineligibility to be a debtor is the definitive 'cause' for dismissal, pursuant to 11 U.S.C. §§ 707(a) and 1307(c)." (Memorandum Opinion at p. 25.) On July 28, 2006, the bankruptcy court entered orders striking the three cases. The United States Trustee timely filed notices of appeal from both the Memorandum Opinion and the orders to this Court.[8]

There is no factual issue that the requirements of section 109(h) were not met and that Ms. Elmendorf, Ms. Zarnel and Ms. Finlay's bankruptcy cases cannot proceed. (Memorandum Opinion, pp. 15-16, 28-29). The question raised, however, is the proper disposition of the case once an individual is determined to be ineligible to be a debtor under the Bankruptcy Code.

SUMMARY OF THE ARGUMENT

Federal courts dismiss improperly filed cases - they do not strike them. Courts dismiss cases for many reasons, including lack of jurisdiction, and failure to state a claim upon which relief may be granted. The same has always been true in bankruptcy. Under section 301 of the Bankruptcy Code, the filing of a petition commences a bankruptcy case. The Bankruptcy Code, consistent with other federal law, makes no provision for striking petitions or cases as a method of disposing of bankruptcy cases.

Despite this, the court below denied the United States Trustee's motions to dismiss Ms. Elmendorf, Ms. Zarnel and Ms. Finlay's bankruptcy cases, even though there is no question that the cases were filed improperly. Instead, the court, on its own initiative, entered orders striking them even though no federal statute professes to authorize the closure of federal cases by striking. That was error.

That error circumvents important statutory directives, and harms both debtors and creditors. It also engenders confusion because the Bankruptcy Code explains in detail what happens to dismissed cases and how dismissal affects the rights of the various parties to a bankruptcy case, but it says nothing about the effect of striking. See 11 U.S.C. 349. For these reasons, this case should be remanded with instructions that the court below dismiss Ms. Elmendorf, Ms. Zarnel and Ms. Finlay's improperly filed bankruptcy cases.

STANDARD OF REVIEW

Federal Rule of Bankruptcy Procedure 8013 provides that findings of fact, whether based upon oral or documentary evidence, shall not be set aside unless clearly erroneous. Conclusions of law are subject to de novo review. See In re U.S. Lines, Inc., 318 F.3d 432, 435 (2d Cir. 2003); Mulligan v. Sobiech, 131 B.R. 917 (S.D.N.Y. 1991). This appeal presents only a legal question*. De novo* review of legal questions requires this Court to review questions of law independent of the bankruptcy court's determination of the law. In re Schaffrath, 214 B.R. 153, 154 (6th Cir. BAP 1997) (citations omitted). See also In re Lion Capital Group, 63 B.R. 199, 203 (S.D.N.Y. 1985).

ARGUMENT

1. Dismissal Is the Only Proper Disposition of Ms. Elmendorf, Ms. Zarnel and Ms. Finlay's Improperly Filed Bankruptcy Cases.

Federal district courts routinely dismiss improperly pleaded cases under Fed. R. Civ. P. 12(b) - they do not strike them.[9] See, e.g., Electronics Communications Corp. v. Toshiba

[9] Bankruptcy courts are units of the district courts. 28 U.S.C. 151

America Consumer Products, Inc., 129 F.3d 230 (2d Cir. 1997)(Second Circuit affirmed district court's dismissal of case for failure to state a claim upon which relief could be granted); Harrod v. Uunet Tech., Inc., 22 Fed.Appx. 570, 571 (6th Cir. 2001) (Sixth Circuit affirmed district court's dismissal of case for failure to state a claim upon which relief could be granted pursuant to Fed.R.Civ.P. 12(b)(6)); Universal Express, Inc. v. U.S. S.E.C., 2006 WL 1004381, slip op. (11th Cir. 2006) (a "motion to dismiss may be granted for defect in jurisdictional, venue, or process, see Fed.R.Civ.P. 12(b)(1)-(5), or for failure to state a claim, see id. R. 12(b)(6)"); *Cont'l Cas. Co. v. American Nat. Ins. Co.,*417 F.3d 727, 733 (7th Cir. 2005); ("[t]he district court ultimately dismissed this case because the forum selection clauses in the [contract] required arbitration in other districts... [w]e have held dismissal under these circumstances to be appropriate"); Miller v. Yokohama Tire Corp., 358 F.3d 616, 618 (9th Cir. 2004) (Ninth Circuit affirmed district court's dismissal of case under Rule 12(b)(6)); ProEnglish v. Bush, 70 Fed.Appx. 84 (4th Cir. 2003) (Fourth Circuit affirmed district court's dismissal of case for lack of ripeness).

Indeed, the United States Code makes clear that even cases filed without jurisdiction are dismissed. See 28 U.S.C. 1919 (governing the imposition of costs in district court cases "dismissed" for "want of jurisdiction"). See also, Luckett v. Bure, 290 F.3d 493 (2d Cir. 2002)(affirming Fed. R. Civ. P. 12(b)(1) dismissal of claims for lack of subject matter jurisdiction); Makarova v. United States, 201 F.3d 110 (2d Cir. 2000)(same). Close v. State of New York, 125 F.3d 31 (2d Cir. 1997)(same); Wake v. United States, 89 F.3d 53 (2d Cir. 1996)(same).

Bankruptcy is no different. The filing of a petition commences a case. 11 U.S.C. 301. Every chapter of the Bankruptcy Code includes a separate section expressly providing for the "dismissal" of debtors' cases for "cause" when it is improper for the case to proceed. See 11 U.S.C. 707(a) (providing for "dismiss[al]" of a chapter 7 case for "cause"); see also 11 U.S.C. 1112(b) (providing for dismissal or conversion of a chapter 11 case for "cause"); see also 11 U.S.C. 1208 (providing for dismissal or conversion of a chapter 12 case for "cause"); see also 11 U.S.C. 1307(c) (providing for dismissal or conversion of a chapter 13 case for "cause").[10]

In fact, prior to changes made by the BAPCPA, bankruptcy courts routinely dismissed cases where individuals were determined to be ineligible to be debtors by operation of 11 U.S.C. 109. The government has reviewed over 800 decisions entered prior to the enactment of the BAPCPA where eligibility under section 109 was at issue, and it is not aware of a single case or petition that was stricken as a method of disposing of the underlying case. Bankruptcy courts have consistently dismissed cases when individuals or entities were ineligible to be debtors. See, e.g., In re Hubbard, 333 B.R. 377, 388 (Bankr. S.D. Tex. 2005)(noting that "[t]his Court and others have generally 'dismissed' cases that were filed by ineligible debtors").

Historically, bankruptcy courts, like district courts, have dismissed cases for a variety of reasons, including jurisdictional defects and improper venue. See Fed. R. Bankr. P. 1014 (providing that cases filed in an improper district shall either be dismissed or transferred); see [10] Each section contains a non-exclusive list of grounds for dismissal. The terms "includes" and " including" in those sections are not limiting. 11 U.S.C. § 102(3). See In re C-TC 9th Avenue Partnership, 113 F.3d 1304, 1311 (2d Cir. 1997); In re Griffieth, 209 B.R. 823, 827 (Bankr. also 28 U.S.C. §1930(d)(providing that “[w]henever any case or proceeding is dismissed in any bankruptcy court for want of jurisdiction, such court may order the payment of just costs”) (emphasis added).

Given this settled law, it is not surprising that the vast majority of courts have dismissed cases upon concluding the person seeking bankruptcy protection was ineligible to be a debtor under 11 U.S.C. 109(h). See, e.g., Dixon v. LaBarge, Jr. (In re Dixon), 338 B.R. 383, 389 (8th Cir. B.A.P. 2006). In addition, most courts that have considered the issue have dismissed rather than struck cases in which individuals have been ineligible to be debtors because they did not obtain credit counseling. See In re Seaman, 340 B.R. 698 (Bankr. E.D.N.Y. 2006); In re Ross, 338 B.R. 134 (Bankr. N.D. Ga. 2006); In re Mills, 341 B.R. 106 (Bankr. D. Colo. 2006); In re Bell, 2006 WL 1132907, slip op. (Bankr. D. The bankruptcy court identified no provision of the Bankruptcy Code or other federal law that specifically allows courts to terminate federal bankruptcy cases by striking the pleading that commenced the case while leaving the underlying case in limbo. Nor can they, because no such provision exists.[11] The lower court decision cited only one statute, 11 U.S.C. 105(a).[12] However, both its plain language and Second Circuit precedent make clear that this provision cannot be used, as the court would use it here, to deviate from the use of dismissal to terminate improperly filed cases.

By its terms, section 105 nowhere authorizes courts to dispose of cases by striking. To the contrary, it only authorizes courts to take actions that are consistent with the Code. As the [11] In addition, the only reference to the "striking" of any document in the Federal Rules of Bankruptcy Procedure is found in Fed. R. Bankr. P. 7012(b) and 9011. Rule 7012(b), incorporates by reference Fed. R. Civ. P. 12(e) and (f). Rule 12(e) allows a court to strike a pleading where there is a prior existing order to amend the pleading and the order has not been obeyed. Rule 12(f) allows for motions to strike in the context of adversary proceedings. According to this rule, such motions may be made by a party before responding to a pleading or by a court on its own initiative, and the court may "order stricken from any pleading any insufficient defense or any redundant, immaterial, impertinent, or scandalous matter." Fed. R. Civ. P. 12(f). Motions to strike, however, are not favored. Salcer v. Envicon Equities Corp., 744 F.2d 935, 939 (2d Cir. 1984), cert. granted and judgment remanded on other grounds, 478 U.S. 1015 (1986); FDIC v. Abel, et al., 1995 WL 716729 at * 12 (S.D.N.Y. 1995); Brokke v. Stauffer Chem. Co., 703 F. Supp. 215, 223 (D. Conn. 1988). A motion to "strike" under Rule 12(f) also only pertains to the striking of material contained in a pleading. In re Kershaw, 59 B.R. 618, 620 (Bankr. D. Tenn. 1986). Moreover, such motions are not intended to raise substantial, disputed questions of law. Mohegan Tribe v. Conn., 528 F. Supp. 1359, 1362 (D. Conn. 1982) ("The presence of a substantial or seriously disputed question of law will preclude a district court from granting a motion to strike."). Rule 9011 requires that papers filed in bankruptcy courts be signed by at least one attorney of record or by the party herself if she is unrepresented. Rule 9011(a) provides that "an unsigned paper shall be stricken unless omission of the signature is corrected promptly after being called to the attention of the attorney or party." Fed. R. Bankr. P. 9011(a).

[12] Section 105 provides:

> The court may issue any order, process, or judgment that is necessary or appropriate to carry out the provisions of this title. No provision of this title providing for the raising of an issue by a party in interest shall be construed to preclude the court from, sua sponte, taking any action or making any determination necessary or appropriate to enforce or implement court orders or rules, or to prevent an abuse of process.

11 U.S.C. 105(a) (emphasis added).

Second Circuit and many other courts have held, section 105 cannot be employed to deviate from federal law. See Federal Deposit Insurance Corporation v. Colonial Realty Corporation, 966 F.2d 57, 59 (2d Cir. 1992)(noting that by its very terms, section 105 limits the bankruptcy court's equitable powers, which "must and can only be exercised within the confines of the Bankruptcy Code*."*)(citations omitted); In re Aquatic Development Group, Inc., 352 F.3d 671, 680 (2d Cir. 2003)*(Straub, J., concurring)(observing that "...this Court has repeatedly cautioned that § 105(a) does not authorize the bankruptcy courts to create substantive rights that are otherwise unavailable under applicable law, or constitute a roving commission to do equity...")(citations omitted).; In re Barbieri*, 199 F.3d 616, 620-621 (2d Cir. 1999); See also Pertuso v. Ford Motor Credit Co., 233 F.3d 417, 423 (6th Cir. 2000) (establishing that a bankruptcy court may not use section 105(a) to legislate additional remedies that are otherwise unavailable under applicable law.); Matter of Kelvin Publishing, Inc., 72 F.3d 129 (6th Cir. 1995)); see also United States v. Sutton, 786 F.2d 1305, 1308 (5th Cir.1986) (citing Southern Ry. Co. v. Johnson Bronze Co., 758 F.2d 137, 141 (3d Cir.1985) (same).

As discussed above, improperly filed federal cases are dismissed, not stricken, and each chapter of the Bankruptcy Code contains a provision for dismissing - not striking - improperly filed cases. As Second Circuit authority underscores, section 105 cannot be used to deviate from that law.

2. Section 109 is Not a Jurisdictional Statute and Even if it Were, Cases Filed in Violation of Section 109 Would Need to be Dismissed Rather than Stricken.

Although the court below expressly held that it had jurisdiction, some bankruptcy courts have erroneously stricken cases because they believe (1) section 109(h) is a jurisdictional statute and (2) courts must strike petitions filed without jurisdiction under section 109. Both of these conclusions are wrong.

Supreme Court precedent makes clear that eligibility statutes like section 109 are not jurisdictional. Instead, jurisdictional provisions are those that actually define the jurisdiction of federal courts, most typically those set forth in title 28 of the United States code. Most recently in Arbaugh v. Y & H Corp.,--- U.S. ----, 126 S.Ct. 1235, 163 L.Ed.2d 1097 (Feb. 22, 2006), the Supreme Court ruled that eligibility provisions in federal statutes do not confer or contract subject-matter jurisdiction. In Arbaugh, the Supreme Court was asked to determine whether an employee-numerosity requirement in Title VII for establishing a defendant/restaurant's "employer" status was jurisdictional, or whether it was merely an element of a bartender/waitress's claim for relief under Title VII. Id. The Court held that the definition of an "employer" in the statute was an element of the plaintiff's claim for relief, the satisfaction of which the defendant employer conceded when it failed to raise the issue prior to the trial on the merits. Id. at 1245. The Supreme Court declined to find that the defendant's status as an "employer" was a jurisdictional requirement that could be questioned at any stage of litigation. Id. In making its determination, the Supreme Court noted that courts have an obligation to determine whether subject-matter jurisdiction exists, even in the absence of a challenge from any party. Id. It concluded that nothing in Title VII's text indicated that Congress intended courts, on their own motion, to assure that the employee-numerosity requirement is met. Id. at 1244.

In rendering its decision, the Supreme Court commented that courts have been imprecise regarding jurisdictional issues noting that "[s]ubject matter jurisdiction in federal-question cases is sometimes erroneously conflated with a plaintiff's need and ability to prove the defendant bound by the federal law asserted as the predicate for relief-a merits-related determination." Id. at 1242 (quoting 2 J. Moore et al., MOORE'S FEDERAL PRACTICE § 12.30[1], p. 12-36.1 (3d ed. 2005). In addition, in order to avoid the "'unfair[ness]" and 'waste of judicial resources. . . entailed in tying the employee-numerosity requirement to subject-matter jurisdiction," the Supreme Court advised courts to "to refrain from constricting § 1331 or Title VII's jurisdictional provision, 42 U.S.C. § 2000e-5(f)(3), and to leave the ball in Congress' court." Arbaugh, 126 S.Ct. at 1245. It noted that Congress is free to instruct that certain elements of a claim for relief "shall count as jurisdictional, ... [b]ut when Congress does not rank a statutory limitation on coverage as jurisdictional, courts should treat the restriction as nonjurisdictional in character." Id.

Nothing under Title 11 indicates that Congress intended courts, on their own motion, to assure that the debtor eligibility provisions are satisfied. In addition, 28 U.S.C. 1334 and 157 are the jurisdictional statutes that confer bankruptcy jurisdiction. See, e.g., Rudd v. Laughlin, 866 F.2d 1040, 1041 (8th Cir. 1989); Promenade Nat'l Bank v. Phillips (In re Phillips), 844 F.2d 230, 235-36 n.2 (5th Cir. 1988); In re Republic Trust & Savings Co., 59 B.R. 606, 609 (N.D. Okla. 1986). Section 109 does not speak in jurisdictional terms, and does not refer in any way to the jurisdiction of the bankruptcy courts. Arbaugh, 126 S.Ct. at 1245. Therefore, Ms. Elmendorf, Ms. Zarnel and Ms. Finlay commenced cases under the Bankruptcy Code despite the fact that they were ineligible to be debtors, and the bankruptcy court possessed the jurisdiction to dispose of the cases under the Bankruptcy Code.

3. Other Federal Statues Make Clear that Ms. Elmendorf, Ms. Zarnel and Ms. Finlay Filed Bankruptcy Cases, and Everything That Happened in Their Cases Underscores That Fact.

Other federal statutes and the administration of Ms. Elmendorf, Ms. Zarnel and Ms. Finlay's cases make clear they had bankruptcy cases that needed to be dismissed. Among other things, (i) a "case" number was been assigned to their cases,[13] (ii) trustees were appointed to supervise their cases,[14] (iii) the bankruptcy court accepted filing fees under 28 U.S.C. 1930(a),[15] and (iv) the debtors' creditors were advised that in most instances the "filing of the bankruptcy case" operates as a stay of certain actions they may take to collect any debts owed by the debtor.[16] Each of these actions underscores the obvious fact that Ms. Elmendorf, Ms. Zarnel and Ms. Finlay's' decision to file bankruptcy petitions commenced bankruptcy cases.

[15] Under 28 U.S.C. 1930(a), "parties commencing a case under title 11" are required to pay the clerk of the bankruptcy court a fee for a case commenced under chapter 7 or 13 of the Bankruptcy Code. 28 U.S.C. 1930(a). The Bankruptcy Court collected a filing fee of $274 from Ms. Elmendorf when she commenced her case. (ER. at 1); collected a partial filing fee of $40.00 from Ms. Zarnel when she commenced her case; (ZR. at 1); and granted Ms. Zarnel's application to pay the remainder of the filing fee in installments; (ZR. at 9); and collected a filing fee of $189.00 from Ms. Finlay when she commenced her case; (FR. at 1)

4. Striking Petitions Creates Substantial Uncertainty under the Bankruptcy Code That Is Harmful to Debtors and Creditors Alike, and Creates Confusion Regarding the Rights of Interested Parties.

The Bankruptcy Code dedicates an entire section of the Code, 11 U.S.C. 349, to explaining the effect of a dismissed case on the rights of the various parties to a bankruptcy proceeding. See 11 U.S.C. 349. Section 349 provides, among other things, that: (i) dismissal of a bankruptcy case reinstates any proceeding or custodianship superseded under section 521; (ii) dismissal vacates any order under sections 522(i)(1), 542, 550, or 553, and (iii) dismissal revests the property of the estate in the entity in which such property was vested immediately before commencement of the case. 11 U.S.C. 349. Therefore, terminating a case through striking rather than dismissal will engender substantial confusion and potential prejudice because there are no corresponding instructions in the Code or elsewhere regarding the impact of striking a petition.[17]

5. Striking Petitions Circumvents Statutory Restrictions Upon Debtors Who Have Previously Had a Bankruptcy Case Dismissed.

[16] See ER. at 5; Notice of Chapter 7 Bankruptcy Case, Meeting of Creditors and Deadlines; ZR. at 4; Notice of Chapter 13 Case, Meeting of Creditors, and Fixing of Dates; FR. at 4; Notice of Chapter 13 Case, Meeting of Creditors, and Fixing of Dates) (advising Ms. Elmendorf, Ms. Zarnel and Ms. Finlay's creditors that "In most instances the filing of the bankruptcy case automatically stays certain collection and other actions against the debtor...").

[17] In addition, striking a case, rather than dismissing creates substantial uncertainty about the rights and obligations of debtors and creditors in stricken cases. See, e.g., In re Ross, 338 B.R. 134, 139 (Bankr. N.D. Ga. 2006)(explaining that striking cases could have an unintended result of harming debtors who have had their homes foreclosed due to the absence of the stay in a voided case).

Congress amended the automatic stay provisions of section 362 of the Bankruptcy Code in 2005 in order to limit a debtor's right to operate under the automatic stay when the debtor has previously had a case "dismissed" by a bankruptcy court. 11 U.S.C. 362(c)(3) (imposing these new restrictions in cases succeeding previously "dismissed" cases). Congress did so because it concluded it was unfair to allow debtors to file multiple bankruptcy cases and automatically reap the substantial benefits of the automatic stay of creditor actions in each case. See H.R. Rep. No. 109-31, pt. 1, at 2 (2005), U.S. Code Cong. & Admin. News 2005, pp. 88, 89 (setting forth Congress' conclusions on this point).

Section 362(c)(3) provides that where a debtor has had a prior case "dismissed" within the preceding one-year period, the automatic stay in the next case shall terminate automatically on the thirtieth day after the filing of that case unless a debtor is able to establish by motion that the later case is in good faith as to the creditors to be stayed. See 11 U.S.C. 362(c)(3).

By striking rather than dismissing Ms. Elmendorf, Ms. Zarnel and Ms. Finlay's cases, the orders entered below risk circumventing section 362(c)(3)'s new limitation by disposing of a case without "dismissing" it. Some courts have concluded that striking a case rather than dismissing it - the term employed in section 362(c)(3) - frees debtors from section 362(c)(3)'s restrictions upon the use of the automatic stay in a subsequent case. In the government's view, it is not appropriate to vitiate Congress' mandate in section 362(c)(3) by refusing to dismiss cases filed in violation of section 109. For the Bankruptcy System to function optimally, creditors and debtors alike must have faith that time-honored procedures - like dismissing improperly filed cases - will be neutrally applied in all cases. Conversely, faith in the Bankruptcy System will diminish were parties in interest to conclude that neutral bankruptcy rules were being ignored simply to evade policy dictates mandated by Congress that a particular court might deem unwise.

That is not to say Ms. Elmendorf, Ms. Zarnel and Ms. Finlay cannot take full advantage of the automatic stay in a subsequent bankruptcy case. To the contrary, section 362 allows debtors to obtain the full benefit of the stay in a subsequent case if they prove their first case was filed in "good faith." See 362(c)(3) (allowing a debtor to obtain the full benefit of the stay if the debtor establishes the first case was filed in "good faith"). See also In re Seaman, 340 B.R. 698, 706 (Bankr. E.D.N.Y. 2006) (discussing this point). As some courts have stated, "a dismissal under Section 109(h) . . . does not appear to establish any lack of good faith." Id. See also In re Carr, 344 B.R. 776 (Bankr. N.D.W.Va. 2006) (concluding a debtor's second filed bankruptcy case was in good faith so as to warrant extension of the automatic stay beyond 30 days as provided in section 362(c)(3)). Under those courts' rationale, Ms. Elmendorf, Ms. Zarnel and Ms. Finlay might well be able to take full advantage of the automatic stay notwithstanding the dismissal of their prior cases if they can demonstrate good faith to the court. If they are unable to demonstrate such good faith, then the absence of a stay in the subsequent case is appropriate. At a minimum, the necessity under section 362(c)(3) of filing a motion to extend the stay in a second case is the procedure Congress mandated. This carefully conceived balance should not be vitiated by striking rather than dismissing bankruptcy cases.

CONCLUSION

For these reasons, the United States Trustee respectfully asks this Court to reverse the order entered below and remand this case with instructions to the bankruptcy court to enter orders dismissing Ms. Elmendorf, Ms. Zarnel and Ms. Finlay's bankruptcy cases.

(2)(A) Paragraph (1) shall not apply with respect to a debtor who resides in a district for which the United States trustee (or the bankruptcy administrator, if any) determines that the approved nonprofit budget and credit counseling agencies for such district are not reasonably able to provide adequate services to the additional individuals who would otherwise seek credit counseling from such agencies by reason of the requirements of paragraph (1).

11 U.S.C. § 1307(c) - Dismissal or Conversion.

(c) Except as provided in subsection (e) of this section, on request of a party in interest or the United States trustee and after notice and a hearing, the court may convert a case under this chapter to a case under chapter 7 of this title, or may dismiss a case under this chapter, whichever is in the best interests of creditors and the estate, for cause, including--

(1) unreasonable delay by the debtor that is prejudicial to creditors;

(2) nonpayment of any fees and charges required under chapter 123 of title 28;

(3) failure to file a plan timely under section 1321 of this title;

(11) failure of the debtor to pay any domestic support obligation that first becomes payable after the date of the filing of the petition.

28 U.S.C. 157 – Procedures

(a) Each district court may provide that any or all cases under title 11 and any or all proceedings arising under title 11 or arising in or related to a case under title 11 shall be referred to the bankruptcy judges for the district.

(b)(1) Bankruptcy judges may hear and determine all cases under title 11 and all core proceedings arising under title 11, or arising in a case under title 11, referred under subsection (a) of this section, and may enter appropriate orders and judgments, subject to review under section 158 of this title.

(2) Core proceedings include, but are not limited to--

(A) matters concerning the administration of the estate;

(B) allowance or disallowance of claims against the estate or exemptions from property of the estate, and estimation of claims or interests for the purposes of confirming a plan under chapter 11, 12, or 13 of title 11 but not the liquidation or estimation of contingent or unliquidated personal injury tort or wrongful death claims against the estate for purposes of distribution in a case under title 11;

(C) counterclaims by the estate against persons filing claims against the estate;

(D) orders in respect to obtaining credit;

(E) orders to turn over property of the estate;

(F) proceedings to determine, avoid, or recover preferences;

(G) motions to terminate, annul, or modify the automatic stay;

(H) proceedings to determine, avoid, or recover fraudulent conveyances;

(I) determinations as to the dischargeability of particular debts;

(J) objections to discharges;

(K) determinations of the validity, extent, or priority of liens;

(L) confirmations of plans;

(M) orders approving the use or lease of property, including the use of cash collateral;

(N) orders approving the sale of property other than property resulting from claims brought by the estate against persons who have not filed claims against the estate;

(O) other proceedings affecting the liquidation of the assets of the estate or the adjustment of the debtor-creditor or the equity security holder relationship, except personal injury tort or wrongful death claims; and

(P) recognition of foreign proceedings and other matters under chapter 15 of title 11.

(3) The bankruptcy judge shall determine, on the judge's own motion or on timely motion of a party, whether a proceeding is a core proceeding under this subsection or is a proceeding that is otherwise related to a case under title 11. A determination that a proceeding is not a core proceeding shall not be made solely on the basis that its resolution may be affected by State law.

(4) Non-core proceedings under section 157(b)(2)(B) of title 28, United States Code, shall not be subject to the mandatory abstention provisions of section 1334(c)(2).

(5) The district court shall order that personal injury tort and wrongful death claims shall be tried in the district court in which the bankruptcy case is pending, or in the district court in the district in which the claim arose, as determined by the district court in which the bankruptcy case is pending.

(c)(1) A bankruptcy judge may hear a proceeding that is not a core proceeding but that is otherwise related to a case under title 11. In such proceeding, the bankruptcy judge shall submit proposed findings of fact and conclusions of law to the district court, and any final order or judgment shall be entered by the district judge after considering the bankruptcy judge's proposed findings and conclusions and after reviewing de novo those matters to which any party has timely and specifically objected.

(2) Notwithstanding the provisions of paragraph (1) of this subsection, the district court, with the consent of all the parties to the proceeding, may refer a proceeding related to a case under title 11 to a bankruptcy judge to hear and determine and to enter appropriate orders and judgments, subject to review under section 158 of this title.

(d) The district court may withdraw, in whole or in part, any case or proceeding referred under this section, on its own motion or on timely motion of any party, for cause shown. The district court shall, on timely motion of a party, so withdraw a proceeding if the court determines that resolution of the proceeding requires consideration of both title 11 and other laws of the United States regulating organizations or activities affecting interstate commerce.

(e) If the right to a jury trial applies in a proceeding that may be heard under this section by a bankruptcy judge, the bankruptcy judge may conduct the jury trial if specially designated to exercise such jurisdiction by the district court and with the express consent of all the parties.

28 U.S.C. 1334 – Bankruptcy cases and proceedings

(a) Except as provided in subsection (b) of this section, the district courts shall have original and exclusive jurisdiction of all cases under title 11.

(b) Except as provided in subsection (e)(2), and notwithstanding any Act of Congress that confers exclusive jurisdiction on a court or courts other than the district courts, the district courts shall have original but not exclusive jurisdiction of all civil proceedings arising under title 11, or arising in or related to cases under title 11.

(c)(1) Except with respect to a case under chapter 15 of title 11, nothing in this section prevents a district court in the interest of justice, or in the interest of comity with State courts or respect for State law, from abstaining from hearing a particular proceeding arising under title 11 or arising in or related to a case under title 11.

(2) Upon timely motion of a party in a proceeding based upon a State law claim or State law cause of action, related to a case under title 11 but not arising under title 11 or arising in a case under title 11, with respect to which an action could not have been commenced in a court of the United States absent jurisdiction under this section, the district court shall abstain from hearing such proceeding if an action is commenced, and can be timely adjudicated, in a State forum of appropriate jurisdiction.

(d) Any decision to abstain or not to abstain made under subsection (c) (other than a decision not to abstain in a proceeding described in subsection (c)(2)) is not reviewable by appeal or otherwise by the court of appeals under section 158(d), 1291, or 1292 of this title or by the Supreme Court of the United States under section 1254 of this title. Subsection (c) and this subsection shall not be construed to limit the applicability of the stay provided for by section 362 of title 11, United States Code, as such section applies to an action affecting the property of the estate in bankruptcy.

(e) The district court in which a case under title 11 is commenced or is pending shall have exclusive jurisdiction--

(1) of all the property, wherever located, of the debtor as of the commencement of such case, and of property of the estate; and

(2) over all claims or causes of action that involve construction of section 327 of title 11, United States Code, or rules relating to disclosure requirements under section 327.

STATEMENT OF BASIS OF APPELLATE JURISDICTION

This Court has jurisdiction over these appeals under 28 U.S.C. § 158(a).

STATEMENT OF ISSUES

The issues before this Court on appeal are:

1. Whether the Bankruptcy Court abused its discretion in ordering the appointment of a chapter 11 trustee.

2. Whether the Bankruptcy Court erred in denying Appellants' motion for the appointment of a "Responsible Officer."

3. Whether section 43a of title 30 of the Virgin Islands Code precluded the appointment of a federal bankruptcy trustee in this federal bankruptcy case.

APPLICABLE STANDARD OF REVIEW

A district court applies a clearly erroneous standard to a bankruptcy court's findings of fact and conducts a de novo review of conclusions of law. See Fed. R. Bankr. P. 8013. See, e.g., In re Winthrop Nurseries, Inc., 50 F.3d 72, 73 (1st Cir. 1995); Resyn Corp. v. United States, 851 F.2d 660, 664 (3d Cir.1988); In re Jersey City Medical Center, 817 F.2d 1055, 1059 (3d Cir.1987). A district court reviews a bankruptcy court's decision to appoint a chapter 11 trustee for abuse of discretion "under either section of [11 U.S.C.] § 1104(a) . . . . (In re G-I Holdings, Inc.)*, 385 F.3d 313, 318 (3d Cir. 2004).

STATEMENT OF THE CASE

Appellants Emerging Communications, Inc. ("Emerging"), and Innovative Communication Company, LLC ("ICC, LLC") (collectively, the "Corporate Debtors"), commenced these cases by filing voluntary petitions for relief under chapter 11 of the Bankruptcy Code in the Bankruptcy Division of this Court (the "Bankruptcy Court") on July 31, 2006.[1] The Corporate Debtors' principal, Jeffrey J. Prosser ("Prosser"), likewise filed a voluntary petition in the Bankruptcy Court on that date for relief under chapter 11 of the Bankruptcy Code and has joined with the Corporate Debtors in filing these appeals.

On February 10, 2006, prior to the commencement of these cases, creditors Greenlight Capital Qualified, L.P., Greenlight Capital, L.P., and Greenlight Capital Offshore, Ltd. (collectively, the "Greenlight Entities"), filed involuntary petitions for relief under chapter 11 of the Bankruptcy Code against the Appellants in the United States Bankruptcy Court for the District of Delaware (the "Delaware Court"). On February 13, 2006, the Appellants filed motions in the Delaware Court to transfer venue of these involuntary cases to the Bankruptcy Court, and on December 14, 2006, the two courts entered orders granting those motions. (R-203).[2]

As acknowledged at page 12 of their brief, the Corporate Debtors are holding companies with no business operations or employees. Prosser owns 100% of the stock of Appellant ICC, LLC, which in turn owns or controls 100% of the stock of Appellant Emerging, 52% through

[1] Each petition is identified as Docket No. R-1 in the record of its respective case.

[2] Virtually all the documents comprising the record on appeal were filed in both bankruptcy cases and assigned separate docket numbers in the two cases. For example, the order determining that venue is proper in this Court was filed as Docket No. 203 in the Emerging case (No. 06-30007) and as Docket No. 193 in the ICC, LLC case (No. 06-30008). Unless otherwise noted, references to such documents in this brief are to the docket number assigned to the document in the Emerging case (No. 06-30007), without any reference to that case number.

direct ownership and the remaining 48% through its ownership of the remaining shareholder, Innovative Communications Subsidiary Company, LLC. Through non-debtor subsidiaries, the Corporate Debtors own or control various operating entities including Vitelco, the Virgin Islands telephone company. Id. Vitelco is a public utility operating under a franchise granted by the U.S. Virgin Islands government and is regulated by the Virgin Islands Public Services Commission (the "PSC").

In a Memorandum Opinion entered with the orders that are the subject of these appeals, the Bankruptcy Court found as an undisputed fact that the Greenlight Entities and the Rural Telephone Finance Corporation (the "RTFC") together hold at least 90 percent of the outstanding debt against the Corporate Debtors. (R-448, p. 8).[3] The claim of the Greenlight Entities derives from two judgments entered in the Delaware Chancery Court, one for $28.5 million against Emerging and the other for $56 million against ICC, LLC, Prosser, and a dissolved U.S. Virgin Islands corporation referred to by the parties as "Old ICC."[4] Id., pp.3-5. The RTFC's claim arises from loans to New ICC in excess of $500 million that are secured by, inter alia, guarantees and stock pledges from the Corporate Debtors and Prosser. The Greenlight Entities and the RTFC assert judgment liens against the Appellants for these claims. Id., p.4.

Between the filing of the involuntary petitions in Delaware and the filing of the voluntary petitions that commenced the present cases, the Appellants, New ICC, the Greenlight Entities and the RTFC entered into a settlement agreement (the "Settlement") providing, inter alia, that Appellants would have until July 31, 2006, to make a discounted payment to the Greenlight

Entities in the amount of $402 million in full satisfaction of their respective claims. Mem. Op., p. 6. Since the execution of that agreement, the Appellants have been attempting to secure financing to fund the Settlement. Appellants filed their voluntary chapter 11 petitions on July 31, 2006, when they were unable to secure such financing, and therefore unable to make the discounted payment contemplated by the Settlement, by that date. At that time, Appellants advised the Bankruptcy Court that they intended to use the sixty-day window afforded by 11 U.S.C. § 108[5] to continue their efforts to secure financing to fund the Settlement. Id., p. 7.

Although they had not yet secured binding financing commitments, the Corporate Debtors filed a joint motion to assume the Settlement on September 25, 2006. (R-24). On September 28, 2006, the Bankruptcy Court entered a scheduling order setting a hearing on that motion for November 27, 2006, and directing the Corporate Debtors to file an amended assumption motion on or before November 3, 2006, with a binding commitment that had no financing contingencies or unsatisfied due diligence conditions. (R-26). The Corporate Debtors filed an amended assumption motion on November 3, 2006 (R-82), but without the required binding commitment. On November 8, 2006, after a hearing, the Bankruptcy Court denied the Corporate Debtors' request to assume the Settlement agreement due to "impossibility of

> (b) Except as provided in subsection (a) of this section, if applicable nonbankruptcy law, an order entered in a nonbankruptcy proceeding, or an agreement fixes a period within which the debtor or an individual protected under section 1201 or 1301 of this title may file any pleading, demand, notice, or proof of claim or loss, cure a default, or perform any other similar act, and such period has not expired before the date of the filing of the petition, the trustee may only file, cure, or perform, as the case may be, before the later of-- performance." (R-99).

On November 22, 2006, the Corporate Debtors filed a joint motion to extend the period in which they had the exclusive right to file a chapter 11 plan and disclosure statement. (R-133). In that motion, the Corporate Debtors revealed that they had terminated the letter of intent upon which their amended motion to assume the Settlement was predicated so they could pursue a transaction with the government of the Virgin Islands to sell assets of the subsidiary operating companies on which the value of the stock held by Appellants is predicated. On December 4, 2006, during a hearing on their motion to extend the exclusivity period, the Bankruptcy Court, "noting the distrust existing between the major constituencies in this matter and the … continuing inability [of the Appellants] to obtain any commitment for the sale of assets, suggested that the appointment of a trustee might be appropriate in these cases."[6] The Corporate Debtors responded by filing a "Joint Motion For Entry of an Order Appointing a Responsible Officer for the Corporate Debtors" (the "Responsible Officer Motion") on December 7, 2006. (R-186).[7] The United States Trustee, the Greenlight Entities and the RTFC filed objections to the Responsible Officer Motion (R-275, R-229, R-258), and on December 19, 2006, the United States Trustee filed a motion seeking the appointment of a chapter 11 trustee (the "Trustee Motion") (R-209), in which the Greenlight Entities and the RTFC later joined. (R-212, R-256). After full evidentiary hearings, briefing, and argument, the Court entered orders denying the Responsible Officer Motion (R-449) and granting the Trustee Motion (R-450) on February 13,

SUMMARY OF ARGUMENT

Bankruptcy courts possess broad discretion when determining whether to appoint chapter 11 trustees. The court below did not abuse that discretion in this case. First, there was broad consensus that a trustee was needed. The entities holding over 90% of the debt in the case wanted a trustee, as did the United States Trustee, the federal watchdog official charged with supervising the administration of bankruptcy cases.[10] Second, the animosity and lack of cooperation between the bankrupt entities and their creditors supported the appointment of a trustee under well-established Third Circuit precedent. Third, the existence of conflicts of interests between Prosser and the bankruptcy estates supported the appointment of a trustee. Fourth, the bankrupt entities' improper calculation of the claims against the Corporate Debtors justified a trustee. Last, were there any question on this point, Appellants' motion asking that a neutral "Responsible Officer" be appointed by the Bankruptcy Court constitutes an admission of

[8] The Court also entered an order on that date denying a motion by the Greenlight Entities to convert Prosser's individual chapter 11 case, In re Jeffrey J. Prosser, Case No. 06-30009 (JFK), to chapter 7. Instead, the Court ordered the appointment of an examiner in that case.

[9] On February 21 and February 22, 2007, the PSC, as "Intervenor," also filed notices of appeal from these orders. The PSC's notice of appeal in the Emerging case appears as R-472 in the record of that case, and that appeal is docketed in this Court as D.C.APP. Civ. No. 2007-38. The PSC's notice of appeal in the ICC, LLC case appears as R-451 in the record of that case, and that appeal is docketed in this Court as D.C.APP. Civ. No. 2007-39. The PSC has not prosecuted either appeal.

[10] United States Trustees are officials of the Department of Justice appointed by the Attorney General to supervise the administration of bankruptcy cases. See 28 U.S.C. §§ 581-89; In re Columbia Gas Systems, Inc., 33 F.3d 294, 296 (3d Cir. 1994) (noting that United States Trustees oversee bankruptcy process, protect public interest, and ensure bankruptcy cases are conducted according to law) (citing H.R. Rep. No. 95-595 at 109 (1977)).

their inability to negotiate a resolution of the disputes impeding resolution of these cases without the type of impartial oversight that a trustee brings to a bankruptcy case. Although Appellants contend that the Bankruptcy Court erred in declining to appoint a Responsible Officer rather than a trustee, the Bankruptcy Code does not provide for the appointment of any such undefined entity to administer a chapter 11 case, and the court appropriately followed federal law by appointing a statutory trustee instead.

Finally, appellants make the remarkable suggestion that section 43a of title 30 of the Virgin Islands Code conflicts with and supersedes the federal statute, 11 U.S.C. § 1104(a), that authorizes the bankruptcy court to appoint a trustee in a federal bankruptcy case. The Virgin Islands statute in question provides that "[n]o person or corporation ... shall sell, acquire or transfer control, either directly, or indirectly of any public utility organized and doing business in this Territory, without first securing authorization from the [Public Services] Commission." 30 V.I.C. § 43a(a). First, neither of the Corporate Debtors is a regulated utility. Rather, each is a non-regulated holding company. Second, any change of control with respect to the Corporate Debtors that took place as a result of the Bankruptcy Court's decision to appoint a trustee resulted not from a "transfer" by a "person or corporation" but from an order of the Bankruptcy Court in a case under its jurisdiction. Third, if there were any conflict between Virgin Islands law and section 1104(a) of the Bankruptcy Code, section 1104(a) would control under the Supremacy Clause.

ARGUMENT

I. THE BANKRUPTCY COURT DID NOT ABUSE ITS DISCRETION IN ORDERING THE APPOINTMENT OF A TRUSTEE.

The standards governing the appointment of a trustee in a chapter 11 case are set forth in section 1104(a) of the Bankruptcy Code, as follow:

> (a) At any time after the commencement of [a chapter 11] case but before confirmation of a plan, on request of a party in interest or the United States trustee, and after notice and a hearing, the court shall order the appointment of a trustee:
>> (1) for cause, including fraud, dishonesty, incompetence, or gross mismanagement of the affairs of the debtor by current management, either before or after the commencement of the case, or similar cause, but not including the number of holders of securities of the debtor or the amount of assets or liabilities of the debtor;
>> (2) if such appointment is in the interests of creditors, any equity security holders, and other interests of the estate, without regard to the number of holders of securities of the debtor or the amount of assets or liabilities of the debtor; or
>> (3) if grounds exist to convert or dismiss the case under section 1112, but the court determines that the appointment of a trustee or an examiner is in the best interests of creditors and the estate.

11 U.S.C. § 1104 (emphasis supplied). If a bankruptcy court orders the appointment of a chapter 11 trustee pursuant to section 1104(a), then 11 U.S.C. § 1104(d) requires the United States Trustee to appoint, after consultation with parties in interest and subject to the court's approval, a "disinterested person" to serve in that capacity.

The Third Circuit has held that " '[t]he party moving for appointment of a trustee ... must prove the need for a trustee under either subsection [1104(a)(1) or 1104(a)(2)] by clear and convincing evidence,' " Official Committee of Asbestos Claimants v. G-I Holdings, Inc. (In re G-I Holdings, Inc.), 385 F.3d supra, at 317-18, quoting In re Marvel Entertainment Group, Inc., 140 F.3d 463, 473 (3d Cir. 1998),[11] but that "determining whether the moving party has satisfied its burden under either subsection is committed to the court's discretion." Id., 385 F.3rd at 318.

"The Court has particularly wide discretion under subsection (a)(2), [which] sets forth a flexible standard for appointment of a trustee even when no cause exists." In re Bellevue Place Associates, 171 B.R. 615, 623 (Bankr. N.D.Ill. 1994). Accord In re Ionosphere Clubs, Inc., 113 B.R. 164, 168 (Bankr. S.D.N.Y. 1990) ("Code § 1104(a)(2) creates a flexible standard and allows the appointment of a trustee even when no 'cause' exists"), citing In re Sharon Steel Corp., 871 F.2d 1217, 1226 (3d Cir. 1989); In re V. Salvino Oil & Heating Co., 99 B.R. 518, 527, n. 11 (Bankr. E.D.N.Y. 1989) ("factors constituting a basis for appointing a trustee under section 1104(a)(2) are amorphous, diverse and necessarily involve a great deal of judicial discretion"). Further, "[i]n considering what is in the interests of creditors in connection with [a section 1104(a)(2) motion], 'a bankruptcy judge has broad discretion to take judicial notice of the entire file ... and the outcome of previous proceedings brought before the court.'" In re U.S. Mineral Products Co., 105 Fed.App'x. 428, 431 (2004 WL 1758499, p.2) (3d Cir. 2004), quoting from Barry Russell, Bankruptcy Evidence Manual § 201.6 (2004).

[11] There is no statutory basis for requiring clear and convincing evidence to establish the need for the appointment of a trustee in a chapter 11 case. See 2 Queenan, CHAPTER 11 THEORY AND PRACTICE § 14.04. Requests for the appointment of trustees in chapter 11 cases are brought by motion as contested matters under Rule 9014, as are all matters not specified in Rule 7001. See Fed. R. Bankr. P. 9014(a). There is no good reason to subject a request for a trustee under Rule 9014 to a heightened standard of proof. To the contrary, the Supreme Court has stated that civil matters typically need not be decided under such heightened standards. Grogan v. Garner, 498 U.S. 279, 286, 111 S.Ct. 654, 659, 112 L.Ed.2d 755 (1991) ("... we presume that ... [the preponderance] ... standard is applicable in civil actions between private litigants unless 'particularly important individual interests or rights are at stake.'"). The question of whether to appoint a trustee in a chapter 11 case is not such an important matter as to require a heightened standard of proof, particularly since Congress allows chapter 11 trustees to be appointed without cause under subsection 1104(a)(2). However, the applicability of the clear and convincing evidence standard is not determinative of the outcome of this appeal, inasmuch as the Bankruptcy Court applied that standard. See, e.g., Mem. Op., pp.14, 16, & 17.

Among the factors courts consider in determining whether to appoint a chapter 11 trustee under section 1104(a)(2) are: (1) the trustworthiness of the debtor; (2) the debtor's past and present performance and prospects for the debtor's reorganization; (3) confidence, or lack thereof, of the business community and creditors in present management; and (4) the benefits derived by appointment of a trustee, balanced against the costs of appointment. See In re Ionosphere Clubs, Inc., supra, 113 B.R. at 168; In re Colorado-Ute Elec. Ass'n, Inc., 120 B.R. 164, 176 (Bankr. D.Colo. 1990).

"Section 1104(a) represents a potentially important protection that courts should not lightly disregard or encumber with overly protective attitudes towards debtors-in-possession." In re V. Salvino Oil & Heating Co., supra, 99 B.R. at 525. Accord In re Nartron Corp., 330 B.R. 573, 591-2 (Bankr.W.D.Mich. 2005) (while "[t]here is a strong presumption in Chapter 11 cases that the debtor-in-possession should be permitted to remain in control of the corporation absent a showing of need for the appointment of a trustee ... [n]evertheless, in the appropriate case, the appointment of a trustee is a power which is critical for the court to exercise in order to preserve the integrity of the bankruptcy process and to insure that the interests of creditors are served."). Indeed, "the Court is required to appoint a trustee [under subsection (a)(2)] when doing so addresses 'the interests of the creditors, equity security holders and other interests of the estate.'" In re Bellevue Place Associates, supra, 171 B.R. at 623, citing Committee of Dalkon Shield Claimants v. A.H. Robins Co., Inc., 828 F.2d 239, 240 (4th Cir. 1987) (emphasis supplied).

A. The Evidence of Record Established Ample Support for a Determination that the Appointment of a Trustee Was in the Interests of the Bankruptcy Estate and Its Creditors.

" '[A]n abuse of discretion exists where the district court's decision rests upon a clearly erroneous finding of fact, an errant conclusion of law, or an improper application of law to fact.'

In re SGL Carbon Corp., 200 F.3d [154], at 159 [(3d Cir. 1999)] (quoting ACLU v. Black Horse Pike Reg'l Bd. of Ed., 84 F.3d 1471, 1476 (3d Cir. 1996))." In re Integrated Telecom Express, Inc., 384 F.3d 108, 118 (3d Cir. 2004). The Bankruptcy Court clearly did not predicate its decision to appoint a trustee in this case upon on any erroneous finding of fact, errant conclusion of law, or improper application of law to fact. The Bankruptcy Court articulated the following reasons for its decision to direct the appointment of a trustee, all of which were supported by the evidence of record and any one of which was sufficient by itself to support that decision.

1. Animosity and lack of cooperation and trust between Appellants and their major creditors.

The Bankruptcy Court observed that there had been a notable lack of progress in resolving disputes over the amount and status of the claims in the cases and in negotiating a sale or refinancing of the assets of the non-debtor operating entities in order to generate funds to pay those claims, stating:

> The parties quite candidly argue that the case is all about control of the negotiation process. The creditors have no confidence in Prosser, and Prosser has no trust in them. Thus, the only way to get all parties to cooperate is to put a neutral person in charge of the process. Cooperation is vital to the reorganization of the Debtors. If the parties cannot agree to the amount and status of the claims, the cases may be in litigation for many more years, while Debtors make no payments on the judgments or on accruing interest or even on the $402 million that was agreed to under the Terms and Conditions. Further, no buyer has stepped forward with an offer to show what the fair value of the enterprise is, no one has tried to value the components of the enterprise to determine just how much of the allegedly secured claims are really supported by value and, in general, the process is mired.
> Thus, until someone other than Prosser or the creditors assumes the responsibility for finalizing a deal, it appears that one will never be reached.

Mem. Op., p.11. In addition, the Court observed:

> Debtors have appeared before the court numerous time[s], ... each time reporting that a binding commitment was forthcoming. To date, despite all of Debtors' > assurances, no binding commitment has been obtained and none is any longer promised. The record, therefore, clearly and convincingly refutes Debtors' assertions of “progress” and shows, instead, efforts that have led to nothing more than a holding pattern. ...

> [U]nfortunately, the parties are now embarked on a course of litigation in these cases which, coupled with the acrimony between them, clearly and convincingly demonstrates to the court that a neutral party is needed to investigate and determine whether or not to pursue (or defend, as the case may be) actions on behalf of the estates.

Id., p.16.

These concerns were well supported by the record. As previously indicated, Appellants filed these cases because they were unable to obtain the financing necessary to make the discounted payment in the amount of $402 million needed to satisfy the claims of the Greenlight Entities and the RTFC under the terms of the pre-petition Settlement. At page 13 of their brief, Appellants assert that their “primary goal in these chapter 11 cases has been to obtain [such] financing ...” They have yet, however, to demonstrate that this goal is within their reach. They were unable obtain such financing either before the expiration of the deadline established by the Settlement or within the additional 60-day window they contend 11 U.S.C. § 108 provided them, and they were likewise unable to obtain a commitment for such financing to support their amended motion to assume the Settlement filed on November 4, 2006, long after that 60-day window had closed. On December 3, 2006, after the Bankruptcy Court denied their motion to assume the Settlement based on “impossibility of performance,” the Corporate Debtors filed a motion for sanctions against the RTFC, alleging, inter alia, that the RTFC had “engaged in a lengthy and deliberate pattern of underhanded stratagems designed to prevent the Debtors from reorganizing in these proceedings” and had engaged in “a transparent effort ... to sabotage the Debtors’ stated goal of selling their Virgin Islands business operations to the Government of the Virgin Islands, in order to effect a reorganization." (R-165).[12] Thereafter, on January 8, 2007, Appellants filed a joint Plan of Reorganization (R-294) that they conceded, at a hearing held on January 19, 2007, was not confirmable. (R-394, p. 103).

Courts have repeatedly held that mistrust, lack of cooperation and acrimony between a chapter 11 debtor and its creditor constituency may support the appointment of a chapter 11 trustee when such circumstances create an obstacle to progress in the case. See In re Marvel Entertainment Group, Inc., supra, 140 F.3d at 472-5 (court may exercise its discretion to direct appointment of trustee when parties are "sharply divided on many issues, and are presently incapable of resolving them") (internal quotation marks omitted); In re U.S. Mineral Products Co., supra, 105 Fed. App'x. at 430, 2004 WL 1758499, p.2 (upholding sua sponte order directing appointment of trustee "based on the length of time the proceedings had been pending, the size of the case, the contentious and acrimonious nature of the relationships among the parties, the lack of trust, the lack of progress, and the need for a neutral party to 'maximize value and construct a plan ... acceptable to creditors' "); Petit v. New England Mortg. Services Inc., 182 B.R. 64, 70 (D.Me. 1995) ("deep-seeded conflict and animosity between a debtor and its creditors provides a basis for the appointment of a trustee"); In re The Bible Speaks, 74 B.R. 511, 512 (Bankr. D.Mass. 1987) (citing, as lead reason for appointment of trustee, "[f]riction ... between the Debtor and the Creditors' Committee which threatens to engulf this estate in costly and legalistic bickering over the entire range of the reorganization process").

As acknowledged at page 12 of their brief on appeal, the Corporate Debtors are holding companies with no business operations or employees. The only personal property assets listed in their bankruptcy schedules filed in the case consist of stock in other companies. R-37 (Case No. 06-30007); R-38 (Case No. 06-30008). The parties agree that the only way to achieve a successful disposition of these cases is to assess the value of that stock, obtain cash for it through a sale or refinancing of the non-debtor subsidiaries, determine the amount and priority of the claims in the cases, and distribute the funds to creditors.[13] The Bankruptcy Court was fully authorized to determine from the extensive record before it whether and to what extent Appellants were making progress towards these goals and whether and to what extent the mistrust, lack of cooperation and acrimony between the parties constituted an obstacle to such progress. While Appellants complain that the Court was placing unrealistic expectations on them "to close a complex telecommunications sale transaction in an extremely short time period," Appellants' Brief, p. 21, there is nothing in the Memorandum Opinion that supports this assertion. Rather, it is apparent that all the Court was looking for was progress towards a sale or refinancing of the assets and a resolution of the claims disputes. See, e.g., Mem. Op., p.16.

[12] The Bankruptcy Court denied this motion without prejudice on December 4, 2006, because it was not filed in accordance with a Case Management Order entered in the case, and the Appellants filed another such motion on December 18, 2006 (R-207). The Bankruptcy Court entered an order withdrawing that motion with prejudice on February 6, 2007.

2. Conflicts of interest.

The Court also ordered a trustee due to the danger that Prosser's personal economic interest in realizing income from the Corporate Debtors and the non-debtor subsidiaries would conflict with the interests of creditors in effectuating a prompt sale:

> [A]lthough ... Prosser's investment banker ... testified that he has not seen Prosser refuse to negotiate with entities that express no interest in retaining him in some capacity, the court heard no evidence from anyone as to what Prosser would do for income in the event that the companies are all sold out from under him. He has substantial personal debts and contributes to the payment of his wife's debts.

[13] At page 13 of their brief on appeal, Appellants assert that their "primary goal in these chapter 11 cases has been to obtain financing (whether through a sale of stock or assets, or a refinancing) that will permit [them] to enforce the Settlement Agreement."

> His wife is not employed but many of the assets valued at several million dollars (and subject to debts of millions of dollars) are titled in her name. Because of this circumstance, the court is not convinced that Prosser can distance himself from the negotiations sufficiently to consider the obligations he owes his creditors before his own interests.
> This is not to say that a neutral negotiator should not also consider Prosser's interests. Those interests should be considered and be part of the chapter 11 plan negotiation process. However, they should not have a more predominant role than any other factor. A trustee with fiduciary status is needed to insure that there is fundamental fairness to all concerned.

Mem. Op., p.13. The Bankruptcy Court additionally observed:

> The audited consolidated financial statements show "net advances" to Prosser of approximately $13 million in 2005 and 2004 and of over $14 million in 2003, at a time when Prosser was personally indebted to New ICC in an amount in excess of $156 million. Prosser testified that ICC LLC, not he, was the recipient of all of the net advances except annual advances of approximately $1 to $2 million … Even if true, Prosser is the sole owner of ICC LLC and directly benefits from advances to it by utilizing it as a "check the box" corporation which he reports on his personal tax returns. Moreover, Prosser admits that neither he nor ICC LLC can repay the advances.

Id., pp.25-6 (footnotes omitted).

The Court clearly did not abuse its discretion by concluding that these undisputed facts weighed in favor of the appointment of a trustee. The existence of such potential conflicts of interest may constitute sufficient cause for the appointment of a chapter 11 trustee, regardless of whether there is evidence that the debtor has taken action contrary to the interests of the estate. See In re Cajun Elec. Power Coop., Inc., 74 F.3d 599, 600 (5th Cir. 1996), cert. denied, 519 U.S. 808 (117 S.Ct. 51, 136 L.Ed.2d 15) (1996). Accord In re Marvel Entertainment Group, Inc., supra, 140 F.3d at 473.

3. By filing the Responsible Officer Motion, Appellants acknowledged that it was in the best interests of the bankruptcy estate and its creditors for Prosser to cede control of the negotiations for a sale and/or refinancing.

The Court was certainly authorized to conclude, as it did at page 8 of the Memorandum Opinion, that in filing the Responsible Officer Motion the Corporate Debtors had acknowledged the need for an independent fiduciary to replace Prosser at the negotiating table and otherwise assume control over the administration of the case. As a result of this motion, the Court was not faced with a choice between appointing a chapter 11 trustee or allowing the Corporate Debtors to remain in possession but with a choice between replacing Prosser with a "Responsible Officer," with powers and duties to be defined by agreement of the parties, or replacing him with a chapter 11 trustee with powers and duties defined by the Bankruptcy Code.

As it turned out, of course, the parties were unable to agree on what the powers and duties of the proposed "Responsible Officer" would be. At page 44 of their brief on appeal, however, Appellants assert that Prosser "was prepared to cede ultimate control of the sale or financing process to the Responsible Officer …," and in the Responsible Officer Motion filed on December 7, 2006, they proposed that the powers of the Responsible Officer would be as follows:

> The Responsible Officer will be an officer of the Court. The Responsible Officer will have the sole power and authority to agree, on behalf of the Debtors or any of the Debtors' affiliates, to sell or otherwise dispose of the shares of common stock in the Virgin Islands Telephone Company ("Vitelco"). The Responsible Officer will be entitled to be present at, and involved in, all negotiations conducted by the Debtors or their agents in connection with the sale of the Debtors' direct or indirect assets in Vitelco.

(R-186, pp.5-6, ¶14.

Remarkably, while maintaining that they intended for the Responsible Officer to assume complete control of the negotiations for the sale or refinancing of the assets of the non-debtor subsidiaries, Appellants state at pages 42-43 of their brief that they did not intend for the Responsible Officer to act as an independent fiduciary for creditors. In the face of Appellants' unwillingness to allow these negotiations to be conducted by someone with a legal obligation to act for the benefit of creditors, the Bankruptcy Court clearly did not abuse its discretion in concluding that it was in the interests of the bankruptcy estate and its creditors to appoint a trustee.

B. The Bankruptcy Court Did Not Err in Considering Appellants' Failure to Account for the Accrual of Interest on the Debts of the RTFC and the Greenlight Entities as a Factor Weighing in Favor of a Trustee.

Appellants contend at page 24 of their brief on appeal that the Bankruptcy Court erred in considering their failure to account for the accrual of interest on the claims held by the RTFC and the Greenlight Entities as a factor militating in favor of the appointment of a trustee. In this regard, the Court stated:

> There are other issues that must be addressed by someone outside the Prosser organization. One issue involves the financial statements of the Prosser parties. Witnesses experienced in accounting principles testified that financial statements must continue to reflect accumulated interest until there is a final determination that the obligation underlying the interest is no longer due. This is so even though the company may dispute the obligation to pay interest. In this case, Prosser disputes the obligation to pay interest due to the negotiated $402 million discounted payment. However, whether the discount is still applicable is itself in dispute. Nonetheless, the consolidated financial statements for the Prosser entities are no longer reflecting accumulating and unpaid interest on the final judgments that likewise remain unpaid. … Not reporting the dispute or reflecting the possibility that [interest] will be added to the debt of the Debtors (either as principals or as guarantors) is clearly a material matter that requires someone with no tie to Prosser to investigate. The independence of a trustee is needed for this purpose.

Mem. Op., pp.11-12 (footnotes omitted).

Appellants contend that the Court erred in considering this issue because the claims in question had been accelerated, with the result that the RTFC and the Greenlight Entities were seeking "unmatured interest," which is not allowed under 11 U.S.C. § 502(b)(2). However, assuming for purposes of argument that this contention is correct, it does not follow that the RTFC and the Greenlight Entities do not have valid claims in these cases for matured interest. Appellants cannot reasonably contend that the filing of these cases had the effect of eliminating the continued accrual of interest on over $500 million in secured debt.[14] The Bankruptcy Court did not err in treating the issue of whether and to what extent the Appellants should account for the accrual of interest on these claims as a "material matter that requires someone with no tie to Prosser to investigate."

C. In Reaching its Decision to Appoint a Trustee, the Bankruptcy Court Quite Clearly Weighed the Benefits Against the Cost of Doing So.

Appellants contend at page 38 of their brief that "[t]he Bankruptcy Court abused its discretion in failing to consider the harm that the appointment of a trustee would have on the Debtors and their various constituencies." First, it is not clear what "constituencies" are at risk in these bankruptcy cases other than Appellants' creditors and Prosser. The Corporate Debtors' continued business operations are not in jeopardy since they are holding companies that have no business operations.[15] Their material assets consist of stock in other companies, and a trustee does not jeopardize Appellants' financial stake in those companies. Moreover, the RTFC and the Greenlight Entities, which joined in the Trustee Motion, hold over 90% of the debt in the cases. It is presumably in the economic interest of these creditors to pursue a course that maximizes the value of the non-debtor operating entities on which the value of their asserted

[14] Whether and to what extent there is sufficient value to pay such interest is, of course, a different question.

[15] Appellants' brief, p. 12.

liens on the Corporate Debtors' stock depends, and they have evidently concluded that the appointment of a trustee will have a more salutary effect on that value than would the Corporate Debtors' continued administration of the cases as debtors in possession. For the reasons set forth supra in this brief, the Bankruptcy Court was authorized to conclude that the appointment of a trustee would assist in realizing the "sale of stock or assets or a refinancing" that Appellants concede is central to the success of these cases.[16] Appellants' contention at page 38 of their brief that as a result of the Bankruptcy Court's decision to appoint a trustee "the PSC will likely take action against New ICC and the [non-debtor operating entities] for violating 30 V.I.C. § 43a" is addressed in Section III of this Brief, infra.

II. THE BANKRUPTCY COURT DID NOT ERR IN DENYING APPELLANTS' MOTION FOR THE APPOINTMENT OF A "RESPONSIBLE PERSON."

Although some courts have allowed it, the appointment of a "Responsible Officer," as opposed to a trustee, to assume the administration of a chapter 11 case from a debtor in possession is not a remedy contemplated by the Bankruptcy Code. See In re SunCruz Casinos, LLC, 298 B.R. 821, 832 (Bankr. S.D.Fla. 2003) ("The Code does not contemplate appointment of a 'Responsible Person' to perform the duties of a trustee."). As noted by the Bankruptcy Court at page 9 of the Memorandum Opinion, in cases in which this device has been employed, either the debtor had no existing management, as in Matter of FSC Corporation, 38 B.R. 346 (Bankr. W.D.Pa. 1983), or no party lodged an objection to it, as in Matter of Gaslight Club, Inc., 782 F.2d 767 (7th Cir. 1986). Accord In re Communication Options, Inc., 299 B.R. 481, 482 (Bankr. S.D.Ohio 2003). Appellants have cited no authority supporting the appointment of a "Responsible Officer" to take over the administration of a chapter 11 case from a debtor in possession where, as here, the United States Trustee and creditors opposed the request and instead sought the appointment of a chapter 11 trustee under 11 U.S.C. § 1104, and existing authority is in fact to the contrary. See, e.g., In re Stratesec, Inc., 324 B.R. 158, 160-161 (Bankr. D.D.C. 2004) (declining to appoint receiver for debtor corporation as responsible officer absent proof that all creditors supported motion). See also In re Adelphia Communications Corp., 336 B.R. 610, 668 (Bankr. S.D.N.Y. 2006) (characterizing request for appointment of non-trustee fiduciary to act on behalf of estate as "back-door means of circumventing the statutory requirements, and case law, applicable to the appointment of trustees under section 1104") ; In re Freedlander, Inc., 86 B.R. 66, 68 (Bankr. E.D. Va. 1988) ("A review of case authority allowing the substitution of management as an alternative to proceeding with a hearing on the appointment of a trustee reflects that such an alternative is only available when there is a consensus to such a course of action.").

III. SECTION 43A OF TITLE 30 OF THE VIRGIN ISLANDS CODE DID NOT PROHIBIT THE APPOINTMENT OF A CHAPTER 11 TRUSTEE, AND EVEN IF IT HAD, FEDERAL BANKRUPTCY LAW WOULD SUPERCEDE IT UNDER THE SUPREMACY AND BANKRUPTCY CLAUSES.

Appellants contend that the appointment of a chapter 11 trustee was void under the following provision of Section 43a of Title 30 of the Virgin Islands Code:

> (a) No person or corporation, whether or not organized under the laws of the Territory, shall sell, acquire or transfer control, either directly, or indirectly of any public utility organized and doing business in this Territory, without first securing authorization from the [Public Services] Commission. Any such acquisition or control without prior authorization shall be void and of no effect.

30 V.I.C. § 43a(a).

This contention lacks merit for three reasons. First, Appellants cite no authority – and we can find none – for the proposition that a change in control of a parent company operates as a change in control of its subsidiaries, particularly where, as here, the parent company does not exercise any day-to-day operational control over the subsidiaries.[17] As noted by this Court last year in Virgin Islands Telephone Corp. v. Rural Telephone Finance Co-op. Greenlight Capital Qualified, L.P.P., 2006 WL 319002, p.4 (D.V.I., February 10, 2006), "there are at least two layers between [Appellants] and Vitelco," and "it is well settled that 'absent unusual circumstances, the property of the debtor's subsidiary is not considered property of the debtor by virtue of the debtor's sole ownership of the subsidiary.'"

Second, even assuming for purposes of argument that the appointment of a trustee to administer these chapter 11 cases did effect a change in control of Vitelco or any other non-debtor entity connected with the cases, such change of control clearly did not result from a "transfer" by a "person[18] or corporation" within the meaning of 30 V.I.C. § 43a. Rather, it resulted from an order entered by the Bankruptcy Court pursuant to 11 U.S.C. § 1104 in a case under its jurisdiction. In taking the position that the court-ordered appointment of a federal bankruptcy trustee under federal law in a federal bankruptcy case involving a regulated utility constitutes a transfer of control of the utility for regulatory purposes, the PSC appears to be unique among regulatory agencies in the United States, which uniformly regard the entry of such

[17] Mem. Op., p.21 (R-448).

[18] As defined by 1 V.I.C. § 41, the term person includes "corporations, companies, associations, joint stock companies, firms, partnerships, and societies, as well as individuals ..." It does not, however, include bankruptcy courts.

As defined by 11 U.S.C. § 101(41), "[t]he term 'person' includes individual, partnership, and corporation, but [subject to certain exceptions] does not include governmental unit ..." This definition likewise does not encompass bankruptcy courts.

an order as a pro forma event with no regulatory consequences.[19] Appellants have cited no judicial authority that remotely supports the PSC's interpretation of 30 V.I.C. § 43a in this regard.

Finally, an interpretation of 30 V.I.C. § 43a purporting to limit or restrict the ability of a bankruptcy court to direct the appointment of a trustee in a chapter 11 case would obviously conflict with section 1104 of the United States Bankruptcy Code and accordingly would impermissibly interfere with Congress' power to enact bankruptcy legislation under the Bankruptcy Clause. U.S. Const. art. I, sec. 8, cl. 4. It also would violate the Supremacy Clause of the United States Constitution, under which the laws of the United States constitute "the supreme Law of the Land ... any Thing in the Constitution or Laws of any State to the Contrary notwithstanding." U.S. Const. art. VI, cl. 2.[17]

As the Supreme Court reiterated in Crosby v. Nat'l Foreign Trade Counsel, 530 U.S. 363, 372-73, 120 S.Ct. 2288 (2000), inconsistent state laws must yield to congressional enactments when one of two tests is met, regardless of whether Congress has inserted a clause in legislation explicitly preempting state law. First, where Congress intends federal law to occupy a given field, it preempts state law in that area. Id., 530 U.S. at 372-73. Second, even if Congress has not entirely displaced state regulation over the matter in question, federal law still preempts state law to the extent that state law actually conflicts with federal law. Id. This

[19] The United States Trustee bases this assertion on the authorities cited by the RTFC in its brief filed on January 11, 2007, in support of the Trustee Motion and in response to the PSC's opposition to the Trustee Motion (R-330).

[17] The principles of preemption arising from the Supremacy Clause "are made applicable to the laws of the Virgin Islands through the Revised Organic Act, which authorizes the Virgin Islands legislature to enact territorial laws that are 'not inconsistent with ... the laws of the United States made applicable to the Virgin Islands.' 48 U.S.C. § 1574(a)." St. Thomas--St. John Hotel & Tourism Ass'n, Inc. v. Government of U.S. Virgin Islands, 218 F.3d 232, 237-8 (3d Cir. 2000).

occurs when it is impossible to comply with both state and federal law, or when the state law stands as an obstacle to the accomplishment of the full purposes and objectives of Congress. Id. Accord Edgar v. MITE Corp., 457 U.S. 624, 631, 102 S.Ct. 2629, 2635 (1982).

Congress has quite clearly satisfied these tests in the bankruptcy arena, where it has enacted a comprehensive and pervasive statutory scheme that "occupies a full title of the United States Code" and "provides a comprehensive system of rights, obligations and procedures, as well as a complex administrative machinery that includes a special system of federal courts and United States Trustees." Sherwood Partners, Inc. v. Lycos, Inc., 394 F.3d 1198, 1201 (9th Cir. 2005). Bankruptcy is particularly federal because the Bankruptcy Clause of the Constitution, U.S. Const. art. I, § 8, cl. 4, grants Congress the power "[t]o establish . . . uniform Laws on the subject of Bankruptcies throughout the United States." Congress has exercised that power by enacting the Bankruptcy Code. See, e.g., Sherwood, supra, 394 F.3d at 1201 ("There can be no doubt that federal bankruptcy law is 'pervasive' and involves a federal interest 'so dominant' as to 'preclude enforcement of state laws on the same subject' – much like many other areas of congressional power listed in Article I, Section 8, of the Constitution, such as patents, copyrights, currency, national defense and immigration"); Eastern Equip. and Servs. Corp. v. Factory Point Nat'l Bank, Bennington, 236 F.3d 117, 120 (2d Cir. 2001) (same).

Nowhere in section 1104 or elsewhere in the Bankruptcy Code is there a "regulatory exception" that conditions or limits the authority of bankruptcy judges to direct the appointment of a trustee in a case involving a regulated entity. As observed by the Supreme Court in Federal Communications Comm'n v. Nextwave Personal Communications, Inc., 537 U.S. 293, 302, 123 S.Ct. 832 (2003), "where Congress has intended to provide regulatory exceptions to provisions of the Bankruptcy Code, it has done so clearly and expressly ..." An example of such a clear and express exception is section 362(b)(4) of the Bankruptcy Code, which specifies that the automatic stay otherwise applicable under 11 U.S.C. § 362(a)(1), (2), (3) & (6) to, inter alia, the commencement or continuation of judicial or administrative actions or proceedings against the debtor is inapplicable to > the commencement or continuation of an action or proceeding by a governmental unit ... to enforce such governmental unit's or organization's police and regulatory power, including the enforcement of a judgment other than a money judgment, obtained in an action or proceeding by the governmental unit to enforce such governmental unit's or organization's police or regulatory power ...

11 U.S.C. § 362(b)(4). See Village of Rosemont v. Jaffee, ___ F.3d ___, 2007 WL 967046, p. 11 (7th Cir. 2007) (holding that this section "forbids the bankruptcy court from interfering with the government's police and regulatory powers"). There is, however, nothing in section 362(b)(4) or in any other provision of the Bankruptcy Code that restricts the bankruptcy court's ability to direct the appointment of a trustee in a chapter 11 case involving a regulated utility, nor is there any provision limiting or restricting the powers and duties of a trustee appointed pursuant to section 1104 in such a case. While 11 U.S.C. § 362 exempts from the purview of the automatic stay actions or proceedings by regulatory agencies to enforce their police and regulatory powers, such police and regulatory powers do not and cannot operate to restrict the powers and duties of bankruptcy courts either to oversee the administration of bankruptcy cases or to impose remedies in such cases that the Bankruptcy Code specifically authorizes or requires.

There is no suggestion in these cases that the Bankruptcy Court has ever sought to enjoin or otherwise interfere with any regulatory action or proceeding by or before the PSC. Compare In re Yellow Cab Cooperative Association, 132 F3d. 591 (10th Cir. 1997) (holding that bankruptcy court exceeded its authority in enjoining Public Utility Commission from restricting transfer of debtor's license to operate taxicabs, where Commission had based its decision on legitimate regulatory considerations). Cf. Village of Rosemont v. Jaffee, supra (upholding bankruptcy court's refusal to enjoin proceedings before Illinois Gaming Board to revoke debtor's riverboat gambling license). To the contrary, in its order granting the Trustee Motion the Bankruptcy Court specified that "the United States Trustee, upon entry of an order appointing a Chapter 11 trustee, shall advise said Chapter 11 Trustee of his/her obligation to confer with the PSC in all matters subject to the PSC's regulatory authority. See 30 V.I.C. 43(a)." R-450. In the event the PSC takes some future action to revoke Vitelco's franchise, terminate its license or otherwise restrict its ability to operate, the parties will be free to seek a ruling from the Bankruptcy Court at that time on the issue of whether and to what extent such action constitutes a lawful exercise of the PSC's "police and regulatory power" within the contemplation of section 362(b)(4). Clearly, however, the present appeals present no such issue.

CONCLUSION

For the foregoing reasons, the United States Trustee respectfully requests the Court to enter an order affirming the Bankruptcy Court's orders granting the Trustee Motion and denying the Responsible Officer Motion.

STATEMENT OF BASIS OF APPELLATE JURISDICTION

This Court has jurisdiction over these appeals under 28 U.S.C. § 158(a).

STATEMENT OF ISSUES

The issues before this Court on appeal are:

1. Whether the Bankruptcy Court abused its discretion in ordering the appointment of a chapter 11 trustee.
2. Whether the Bankruptcy Court erred in denying Appellants' motion for the appointment of a "Responsible Officer."
3. Whether section 43a of title 30 of the Virgin Islands Code precluded the appointment of a federal bankruptcy trustee in this federal bankruptcy case.

APPLICABLE STANDARD OF REVIEW

A district court applies a clearly erroneous standard to a bankruptcy court's findings of fact and conducts a de novo review of conclusions of law. See Fed. R. Bankr. P. 8013. See, e.g., In re Winthrop Nurseries, Inc., 50 F.3d 72, 73 (1st Cir. 1995); Resyn Corp. v. United States, 851 F.2d 660, 664 (3d Cir.1988); In re Jersey City Medical Center, 817 F.2d 1055, 1059 (3d Cir.1987). A district court reviews a bankruptcy court's decision to appoint a chapter 11 trustee for abuse of discretion "under either section of [11 U.S.C.] § 1104(a) . . . . " In re G-I Holdings, Inc., 295 B.R. 502, 508 (D. N.J. 2003), affirmed, *Official Committee of Asbestos Claimants v. G-I Holdings, Inc. STATEMENT OF THE CASE

Appellants Emerging Communications, Inc. ("Emerging"), and Innovative Communication Company, LLC ("ICC, LLC") (collectively, the "Corporate Debtors"), commenced these cases by filing voluntary petitions for relief under chapter 11 of the Bankruptcy Code in the Bankruptcy Division of this Court (the "Bankruptcy Court") on July 31, 2006.[1] The Corporate Debtors' principal, Jeffrey J. Prosser ("Prosser"), likewise filed a voluntary petition in the Bankruptcy Court on that date for relief under chapter 11 of the Bankruptcy Code and has joined with the Corporate Debtors in filing these appeals.

On February 10, 2006, prior to the commencement of these cases, creditors Greenlight Capital Qualified, L.P., Greenlight Capital, L.P., and Greenlight Capital Offshore, Ltd. (collectively, the "Greenlight Entities"), filed involuntary petitions for relief under chapter 11 of the Bankruptcy Code against the Appellants in the United States Bankruptcy Court for the District of Delaware (the "Delaware Court"). On February 13, 2006, the Appellants filed motions in the Delaware Court to transfer venue of these involuntary cases to the Bankruptcy Court, and on December 14, 2006, the two courts entered orders granting those motions. (R-203).[2]

As acknowledged at page 12 of their brief, the Corporate Debtors are holding companies with no business operations or employees. Prosser owns 100% of the stock of Appellant ICC,

[1] Each petition is identified as Docket No. R-1 in the record of its respective case.

[2] Virtually all the documents comprising the record on appeal were filed in both bankruptcy cases and assigned separate docket numbers in the two cases. For example, the order determining that venue is proper in this Court was filed as Docket No. 203 in the Emerging case (No. 06-30007) and as Docket No. 193 in the ICC, LLC case (No. 06-30008). Unless otherwise noted, references to such documents in this brief are to the docket number assigned to the document in the Emerging case (No. 06-30007), without any reference to that case number.

LLC, which in turn owns or controls 100% of the stock of Appellant Emerging, 52% through direct ownership and the remaining 48% through its ownership of the remaining shareholder, Innovative Communications Subsidiary Company, LLC. Through non-debtor subsidiaries, the Corporate Debtors own or control various operating entities including Vitelco, the Virgin Islands telephone company. Id. Vitelco is a public utility operating under a franchise granted by the U.S. Virgin Islands government and is regulated by the Virgin Islands Public Services Commission (the "PSC").

In a Memorandum Opinion entered with the orders that are the subject of these appeals, the Bankruptcy Court found as an undisputed fact that the Greenlight Entities and the Rural Telephone Finance Corporation (the "RTFC") together hold at least 90 percent of the outstanding debt against the Corporate Debtors. (R-448, p. 8).[3] The claim of the Greenlight Entities derives from two judgments entered in the Delaware Chancery Court, one for $28.5 million against Emerging and the other for $56 million against ICC, LLC, Prosser, and a dissolved U.S. Virgin Islands corporation referred to by the parties as "Old ICC."[4] Id., pp.3-5. The RTFC's claim arises from loans to New ICC in excess of $500 million that are secured by, inter alia, guarantees and stock pledges from the Corporate Debtors and Prosser. The Greenlight Entities and the RTFC assert judgment liens against the Appellants for these claims. Id., p.4.

Between the filing of the involuntary petitions in Delaware and the filing of the voluntary petitions that commenced the present cases, the Appellants, New ICC, the Greenlight Entities and the RTFC entered into a settlement agreement (the "Settlement") providing, inter alia, that [4] Old ICC was the predecessor in interest to Innovative Communications Corporation (referred to by the parties as "New ICC"), a nondebtor subsidiary of Emerging that owns a number of cable and telecommunications companies, including Vitelco.

Appellants would have until July 31, 2006, to make a discounted payment to the Greenlight Entities in the amount of $402 million in full satisfaction of their respective claims. Mem. Op., p. 6. Since the execution of that agreement, the Appellants have been attempting to secure financing to fund the Settlement. Appellants filed their voluntary chapter 11 petitions on July 31, 2006, when they were unable to secure such financing, and therefore unable to make the discounted payment contemplated by the Settlement, by that date. At that time, Appellants advised the Bankruptcy Court that they intended to use the sixty-day window afforded by 11 U.S.C. § 108[5] to continue their efforts to secure financing to fund the Settlement. Id., p. 7.

Although they had not yet secured binding financing commitments, the Corporate Debtors filed a joint motion to assume the Settlement on September 25, 2006. (R-24). On September 28, 2006, the Bankruptcy Court entered a scheduling order setting a hearing on that motion for November 27, 2006, and directing the Corporate Debtors to file an amended assumption motion on or before November 3, 2006, with a binding commitment that had no financing contingencies or unsatisfied due diligence conditions. (R-26). The Corporate Debtors filed an amended assumption motion on November 3, 2006 (R-82), but without the required binding commitment. On November 8, 2006, after a hearing, the Bankruptcy Court denied the Corporate Debtors' request to assume the Settlement agreement due to "impossibility of performance." (R-99).

On November 22, 2006, the Corporate Debtors filed a joint motion to extend the period in which they had the exclusive right to file a chapter 11 plan and disclosure statement. (R-133). In that motion, the Corporate Debtors revealed that they had terminated the letter of intent upon which their amended motion to assume the Settlement was predicated so they could pursue a transaction with the government of the Virgin Islands to sell assets of the subsidiary operating companies on which the value of the stock held by Appellants is predicated. On December 4, 2006, during a hearing on their motion to extend the exclusivity period, the Bankruptcy Court, "noting the distrust existing between the major constituencies in this matter and the … continuing inability [of the Appellants] to obtain any commitment for the sale of assets, suggested that the appointment of a trustee might be appropriate in these cases."[6] The Corporate Debtors responded by filing a "Joint Motion For Entry of an Order Appointing a Responsible Officer for the Corporate Debtors" (the "Responsible Officer Motion") on December 7, 2006. (R-186).[7] The United States Trustee, the Greenlight Entities and the RTFC filed objections to the Responsible Officer Motion (R-275, R-229, R-258), and on December 19, 2006, the United States Trustee filed a motion seeking the appointment of a chapter 11 trustee (the "Trustee Motion") (R-209), in which the Greenlight Entities and the RTFC later joined. (R-212, R-256). After full evidentiary hearings, briefing, and argument, the Court entered orders denying the

At a subsequent hearing held on January 19, 2007, Appellants' counsel stipulated that the Plan "as currently drafted" was not, in any event, confirmable. Responsible Officer Motion (R-449) and granting the Trustee Motion (R-450) on February 13, 2007,[8] accompanied by the Memorandum Opinion. Appellants filed their respective notices of appeal on February 20, 2007.[9]

SUMMARY OF ARGUMENT

Bankruptcy courts possess broad discretion when determining whether to appoint chapter 11 trustees. The court below did not abuse that discretion in this case. First, there was broad consensus that a trustee was needed. The entities holding over 90% of the debt in the case wanted a trustee, as did the United States Trustee, the federal watchdog official charged with supervising the administration of bankruptcy cases.[10] Second, the animosity and lack of cooperation between the bankrupt entities and their creditors supported the appointment of a trustee under well-established Third Circuit precedent. Third, the existence of conflicts of interests between Prosser and the bankruptcy estates supported the appointment of a trustee. Fourth, the bankrupt entities' improper calculation of the claims against the Corporate Debtors justified a trustee. Last, were there any question on this point, Appellants' motion asking that a

[8] The Court also entered an order on that date denying a motion by the Greenlight Entities to convert Prosser's individual chapter 11 case, In re Jeffrey J. Prosser, Case No. 06-30009 (JFK), to chapter 7. Instead, the Court ordered the appointment of an examiner in that case.

[9] On February 21 and February 22, 2007, the PSC, as "Intervenor," also filed notices of appeal from these orders. The PSC's notice of appeal in the Emerging case appears as R-472 in the record of that case, and that appeal is docketed in this Court as D.C.APP. Civ. No. 2007-38. The PSC's notice of appeal in the ICC, LLC case appears as R-451 in the record of that case, and that appeal is docketed in this Court as D.C.APP. Civ. No. 2007-39. The PSC has not prosecuted either appeal.

[10] United States Trustees are officials of the Department of Justice appointed by the Attorney General to supervise the administration of bankruptcy cases. See 28 U.S.C. §§ 581-89; In re Columbia Gas Systems, Inc., 33 F.3d 294, 296 (3d Cir. 1994) (noting that United States Trustees oversee bankruptcy process, protect public interest, and ensure bankruptcy cases are conducted according to law) (citing H.R. Rep. No. 95-595 at 109 (1977)).

neutral “Responsible Officer” be appointed by the Bankruptcy Court constitutes an admission of their inability to negotiate a resolution of the disputes impeding resolution of these cases without the type of impartial oversight that a trustee brings to a bankruptcy case. Although Appellants contend that the Bankruptcy Court erred in declining to appoint a Responsible Officer rather than a trustee, the Bankruptcy Code does not provide for the appointment of any such undefined entity to administer a chapter 11 case, and the court appropriately followed federal law by appointing a statutory trustee instead.

Finally, appellants make the remarkable suggestion that section 43a of title 30 of the Virgin Islands Code conflicts with and supersedes the federal statute, 11 U.S.C. § 1104(a), that authorizes the bankruptcy court to appoint a trustee in a federal bankruptcy case. The Virgin Islands statute in question provides that “[n]o person or corporation ... shall sell, acquire or transfer control, either directly, or indirectly of any public utility organized and doing business in this Territory, without first securing authorization from the [Public Services] Commission.” 30 V.I.C. § 43a(a). First, neither of the Corporate Debtors is a regulated utility. Rather, each is a non-regulated holding company. Second, any change of control with respect to the Corporate Debtors that took place as a result of the Bankruptcy Court’s decision to appoint a trustee resulted not from a “transfer” by a “person or corporation” but from an order of the Bankruptcy Court in a case under its jurisdiction. Third, if there were any conflict between Virgin Islands law and section 1104(a) of the Bankruptcy Code, section 1104(a) would control under the Supremacy Clause.

ARGUMENT

I. THE BANKRUPTCY COURT DID NOT ABUSE ITS DISCRETION IN ORDERING THE APPOINTMENT OF A TRUSTEE.

The standards governing the appointment of a trustee in a chapter 11 case are set forth in section 1104(a) of the Bankruptcy Code, as follow:

> (a) At any time after the commencement of [a chapter 11] case but before confirmation of a plan, on request of a party in interest or the United States trustee, and after notice and a hearing, the court shall order the appointment of a trustee:
>> (1) for cause, including fraud, dishonesty, incompetence, or gross mismanagement of the affairs of the debtor by current management, either before or after the commencement of the case, or similar cause, but not including the number of holders of securities of the debtor or the amount of assets or liabilities of the debtor;
>> (2) if such appointment is in the interests of creditors, any equity security holders, and other interests of the estate, without regard to the number of holders of securities of the debtor or the amount of assets or liabilities of the debtor; or
>> (3) if grounds exist to convert or dismiss the case under section 1112, but the court determines that the appointment of a trustee or an examiner is in the best interests of creditors and the estate.

11 U.S.C. § 1104 (emphasis supplied). If a bankruptcy court orders the appointment of a chapter 11 trustee pursuant to section 1104(a), then 11 U.S.C. § 1104(d) requires the United States Trustee to appoint, after consultation with parties in interest and subject to the court's approval, a "disinterested person" to serve in that capacity.

The Third Circuit has held that " '[t]he party moving for appointment of a trustee ... must prove the need for a trustee under either subsection [1104(a)(1) or 1104(a)(2)] by clear and convincing evidence,' " Official Committee of Asbestos Claimants v. G-I Holdings, Inc. (In re G-I Holdings, Inc.), 385 F.3d supra, at 317-18, quoting In re Marvel Entertainment Group, Inc., 140 F.3d 463, 473 (3d Cir. 1998),[11] but that "determining whether the moving party has satisfied its burden under either subsection is committed to the court's discretion." Id., 385 F.3rd at 318.

"The Court has particularly wide discretion under subsection (a)(2), [which] sets forth a flexible standard for appointment of a trustee even when no cause exists." In re Bellevue Place Associates, 171 B.R. 615, 623 (Bankr. N.D.Ill. 1994). Accord In re Ionosphere Clubs, Inc., 113 B.R. 164, 168 (Bankr. S.D.N.Y. 1990) ("Code § 1104(a)(2) creates a flexible standard and allows the appointment of a trustee even when no 'cause' exists"), citing In re Sharon Steel Corp., 871 F.2d 1217, 1226 (3d Cir. 1989); In re V. Salvino Oil & Heating Co., 99 B.R. 518, 527, n. 11 (Bankr. E.D.N.Y. 1989) ("factors constituting a basis for appointing a trustee under section 1104(a)(2) are amorphous, diverse and necessarily involve a great deal of judicial discretion"). Further, "[i]n considering what is in the interests of creditors in connection with [a section 1104(a)(2) motion], 'a bankruptcy judge has broad discretion to take judicial notice of the entire file ... and the outcome of previous proceedings brought before the court.'" In re U.S. Mineral Products Co., 105 Fed.App'x. 428, 431 (2004 WL 1758499, p.2) (3d Cir. 2004), quoting from Barry Russell, Bankruptcy Evidence Manual § 201.6 (2004).

[11] There is no statutory basis for requiring clear and convincing evidence to establish the need for the appointment of a trustee in a chapter 11 case. See 2 Queenan, CHAPTER 11 THEORY AND PRACTICE § 14.04. Requests for the appointment of trustees in chapter 11 cases are brought by motion as contested matters under Rule 9014, as are all matters not specified in Rule 7001. See Fed. R. Bankr. P. 9014(a). There is no good reason to subject a request for a trustee under Rule 9014 to a heightened standard of proof. To the contrary, the Supreme Court has stated that civil matters typically need not be decided under such heightened standards. Grogan v. Garner, 498 U.S. 279, 286, 111 S.Ct. 654, 659, 112 L.Ed.2d 755 (1991) ("... we presume that ... [the preponderance] ... standard is applicable in civil actions between private litigants unless 'particularly important individual interests or rights are at stake.'"). The question of whether to appoint a trustee in a chapter 11 case is not such an important matter as to require a heightened standard of proof, particularly since Congress allows chapter 11 trustees to be appointed without cause under subsection 1104(a)(2). However, the applicability of the clear and convincing evidence standard is not determinative of the outcome of this appeal, inasmuch as the Bankruptcy Court applied that standard. See, e.g., Mem. Op., pp.14, 16, & 17.

Among the factors courts consider in determining whether to appoint a chapter 11 trustee under section 1104(a)(2) are: (1) the trustworthiness of the debtor; (2) the debtor's past and present performance and prospects for the debtor's reorganization; (3) confidence, or lack thereof, of the business community and creditors in present management; and (4) the benefits derived by appointment of a trustee, balanced against the costs of appointment. See In re Ionosphere Clubs, Inc., supra, 113 B.R. at 168; In re Colorado-Ute Elec. Ass'n, Inc., 120 B.R. 164, 176 (Bankr. D.Colo. 1990).

"Section 1104(a) represents a potentially important protection that courts should not lightly disregard or encumber with overly protective attitudes towards debtors-in-possession." In re V. Salvino Oil & Heating Co., supra, 99 B.R. at 525. Accord In re Nartron Corp., 330 B.R. 573, 591-2 (Bankr.W.D.Mich. 2005) (while "[t]here is a strong presumption in Chapter 11 cases that the debtor-in-possession should be permitted to remain in control of the corporation absent a showing of need for the appointment of a trustee ... [n]evertheless, in the appropriate case, the appointment of a trustee is a power which is critical for the court to exercise in order to preserve the integrity of the bankruptcy process and to insure that the interests of creditors are served."). Indeed, "the Court is required to appoint a trustee [under subsection (a)(2)] when doing so addresses 'the interests of the creditors, equity security holders and other interests of the estate.'" In re Bellevue Place Associates, supra, 171 B.R. at 623, citing Committee of Dalkon Shield Claimants v. A.H. Robins Co., Inc., 828 F.2d 239, 240 (4th Cir. 1987) (emphasis supplied).

A. The Evidence of Record Established Ample Support for a Determination that the Appointment of a Trustee Was in the Interests of the Bankruptcy Estate and Its Creditors.

" '[A]n abuse of discretion exists where the district court's decision rests upon a clearly erroneous finding of fact, an errant conclusion of law, or an improper application of law to fact.'

In re SGL Carbon Corp., 200 F.3d [154], at 159 [(3d Cir. 1999)] (quoting ACLU v. Black Horse Pike Reg'l Bd. of Ed., 84 F.3d 1471, 1476 (3d Cir. 1996))." In re Integrated Telecom Express, Inc., 384 F.3d 108, 118 (3d Cir. 2004). The Bankruptcy Court clearly did not predicate its decision to appoint a trustee in this case upon on any erroneous finding of fact, errant conclusion of law, or improper application of law to fact. The Bankruptcy Court articulated the following reasons for its decision to direct the appointment of a trustee, all of which were supported by the evidence of record and any one of which was sufficient by itself to support that decision.

1. Animosity and lack of cooperation and trust between Appellants and their major creditors.

The Bankruptcy Court observed that there had been a notable lack of progress in resolving disputes over the amount and status of the claims in the cases and in negotiating a sale or refinancing of the assets of the non-debtor operating entities in order to generate funds to pay those claims, stating:

> The parties quite candidly argue that the case is all about control of the negotiation process. The creditors have no confidence in Prosser, and Prosser has no trust in them. Thus, the only way to get all parties to cooperate is to put a neutral person in charge of the process. Cooperation is vital to the reorganization of the Debtors. If the parties cannot agree to the amount and status of the claims, the cases may be in litigation for many more years, while Debtors make no payments on the judgments or on accruing interest or even on the $402 million that was agreed to under the Terms and Conditions. Further, no buyer has stepped forward with an offer to show what the fair value of the enterprise is, no one has tried to value the components of the enterprise to determine just how much of the allegedly secured claims are really supported by value and, in general, the process is mired.
> Thus, until someone other than Prosser or the creditors assumes the responsibility for finalizing a deal, it appears that one will never be reached.

Mem. Op., p.11. In addition, the Court observed:

> Debtors have appeared before the court numerous time[s], ... each time reporting that a binding commitment was forthcoming. To date, despite all of Debtors' assurances, no binding commitment has been obtained and none is any longer > promised. The record, therefore, clearly and convincingly refutes Debtors' assertions of "progress" and shows, instead, efforts that have led to nothing more than a holding pattern. ...

> [U]nfortunately, the parties are now embarked on a course of litigation in these cases which, coupled with the acrimony between them, clearly and convincingly demonstrates to the court that a neutral party is needed to investigate and determine whether or not to pursue (or defend, as the case may be) actions on behalf of the estates.

Id., p.16.

These concerns were well supported by the record. As previously indicated, Appellants filed these cases because they were unable to obtain the financing necessary to make the discounted payment in the amount of $402 million needed to satisfy the claims of the Greenlight Entities and the RTFC under the terms of the pre-petition Settlement. At page 13 of their brief, Appellants assert that their "primary goal in these chapter 11 cases has been to obtain [such] financing ..." They have yet, however, to demonstrate that this goal is within their reach. They were unable obtain such financing either before the expiration of the deadline established by the Settlement or within the additional 60-day window they contend 11 U.S.C. § 108 provided them, and they were likewise unable to obtain a commitment for such financing to support their amended motion to assume the Settlement filed on November 4, 2006, long after that 60-day window had closed. On December 3, 2006, after the Bankruptcy Court denied their motion to assume the Settlement based on "impossibility of performance," the Corporate Debtors filed a motion for sanctions against the RTFC, alleging, inter alia, that the RTFC had "engaged in a lengthy and deliberate pattern of underhanded stratagems designed to prevent the Debtors from reorganizing in these proceedings" and had engaged in "a transparent effort ... to sabotage the Debtors' stated goal of selling their Virgin Islands business operations to the Government of the Virgin Islands, in order to effect a reorganization." (R-165).[12] Thereafter, on January 8, 2007, Appellants filed a joint Plan of Reorganization (R-294) that they conceded, at a hearing held on January 19, 2007, was not confirmable. (R-394, p. 103).

Courts have repeatedly held that mistrust, lack of cooperation and acrimony between a chapter 11 debtor and its creditor constituency may support the appointment of a chapter 11 trustee when such circumstances create an obstacle to progress in the case. See In re Marvel Entertainment Group, Inc., supra, 140 F.3d at 472-5 (court may exercise its discretion to direct appointment of trustee when parties are "sharply divided on many issues, and are presently incapable of resolving them") (internal quotation marks omitted); In re U.S. Mineral Products Co., supra, 105 Fed. App'x. at 430, 2004 WL 1758499, p.2 (upholding sua sponte order directing appointment of trustee "based on the length of time the proceedings had been pending, the size of the case, the contentious and acrimonious nature of the relationships among the parties, the lack of trust, the lack of progress, and the need for a neutral party to 'maximize value and construct a plan ... acceptable to creditors' "); Petit v. New England Mortg. Services Inc., 182 B.R. 64, 70 (D.Me. 1995) ("deep-seeded conflict and animosity between a debtor and its creditors provides a basis for the appointment of a trustee"); In re The Bible Speaks, 74 B.R. 511, 512 (Bankr. D.Mass. 1987) (citing, as lead reason for appointment of trustee, "[f]riction ... between the Debtor and the Creditors' Committee which threatens to engulf this estate in costly and legalistic bickering over the entire range of the reorganization process").

[12] The Bankruptcy Court denied this motion without prejudice on December 4, 2006, because it was not filed in accordance with a Case Management Order entered in the case, and the Appellants filed another such motion on December 18, 2006 (R-207). The Bankruptcy Court entered an order withdrawing that motion with prejudice on February 6, 2007.

As acknowledged at page 12 of their brief on appeal, the Corporate Debtors are holding companies with no business operations or employees. The only personal property assets listed in their bankruptcy schedules filed in the case consist of stock in other companies. R-37 (Case No. 06-30007); R-38 (Case No. 06-30008). The parties agree that the only way to achieve a successful disposition of these cases is to assess the value of that stock, obtain cash for it through a sale or refinancing of the non-debtor subsidiaries, determine the amount and priority of the claims in the cases, and distribute the funds to creditors.[13] The Bankruptcy Court was fully authorized to determine from the extensive record before it whether and to what extent Appellants were making progress towards these goals and whether and to what extent the mistrust, lack of cooperation and acrimony between the parties constituted an obstacle to such progress. While Appellants complain that the Court was placing unrealistic expectations on them "to close a complex telecommunications sale transaction in an extremely short time period," Appellants' Brief, p. 21, there is nothing in the Memorandum Opinion that supports this assertion. Rather, it is apparent that all the Court was looking for was progress towards a sale or refinancing of the assets and a resolution of the claims disputes. See, e.g., Mem. Op., p.16.

2. Conflicts of interest.

The Court also ordered a trustee due to the danger that Prosser's personal economic interest in realizing income from the Corporate Debtors and the non-debtor subsidiaries would conflict with the interests of creditors in effectuating a prompt sale:

> [A]lthough ... Prosser's investment banker ... testified that he has not seen Prosser refuse to negotiate with entities that express no interest in retaining him in some capacity, the court heard no evidence from anyone as to what Prosser would do for income in the event that the companies are all sold out from under him. He > has substantial personal debts and contributes to the payment of his wife's debts. His wife is not employed but many of the assets valued at several million dollars (and subject to debts of millions of dollars) are titled in her name. Because of this circumstance, the court is not convinced that Prosser can distance himself from the negotiations sufficiently to consider the obligations he owes his creditors before his own interests.

> This is not to say that a neutral negotiator should not also consider Prosser's interests. Those interests should be considered and be part of the chapter 11 plan negotiation process. However, they should not have a more predominant role than any other factor. A trustee with fiduciary status is needed to insure that there is fundamental fairness to all concerned.

Mem. Op., p.13. The Bankruptcy Court additionally observed:

> The audited consolidated financial statements show "net advances" to Prosser of approximately $13 million in 2005 and 2004 and of over $14 million in 2003, at a time when Prosser was personally indebted to New ICC in an amount in excess of $156 million. Prosser testified that ICC LLC, not he, was the recipient of all of the net advances except annual advances of approximately $1 to $2 million … Even if true, Prosser is the sole owner of ICC LLC and directly benefits from advances to it by utilizing it as a "check the box" corporation which he reports on his personal tax returns. Moreover, Prosser admits that neither he nor ICC LLC can repay the advances.

Id., pp.25-6 (footnotes omitted).

The Court clearly did not abuse its discretion by concluding that these undisputed facts weighed in favor of the appointment of a trustee. The existence of such potential conflicts of interest may constitute sufficient cause for the appointment of a chapter 11 trustee, regardless of whether there is evidence that the debtor has taken action contrary to the interests of the estate. See In re Cajun Elec. Power Coop., Inc., 74 F.3d 599, 600 (5th Cir. 1996), cert. denied, 519 U.S. 808 (117 S.Ct. 51, 136 L.Ed.2d 15) (1996). Accord In re Marvel Entertainment Group, Inc., supra, 140 F.3d at 473.

3. By filing the Responsible Officer Motion, Appellants acknowledged that it was in the best interests of the bankruptcy estate and its creditors for Prosser to cede control of the negotiations for a sale and/or refinancing.

The Court was certainly authorized to conclude, as it did at page 8 of the Memorandum Opinion, that in filing the Responsible Officer Motion the Corporate Debtors had acknowledged the need for an independent fiduciary to replace Prosser at the negotiating table and otherwise assume control over the administration of the case. As a result of this motion, the Court was not faced with a choice between appointing a chapter 11 trustee or allowing the Corporate Debtors to remain in possession but with a choice between replacing Prosser with a "Responsible Officer," with powers and duties to be defined by agreement of the parties, or replacing him with a chapter 11 trustee with powers and duties defined by the Bankruptcy Code.

As it turned out, of course, the parties were unable to agree on what the powers and duties of the proposed "Responsible Officer" would be. At page 44 of their brief on appeal, however, Appellants assert that Prosser "was prepared to cede ultimate control of the sale or financing process to the Responsible Officer …," and in the Responsible Officer Motion filed on December 7, 2006, they proposed that the powers of the Responsible Officer would be as follows:

> The Responsible Officer will be an officer of the Court. The Responsible Officer will have the sole power and authority to agree, on behalf of the Debtors or any of the Debtors' affiliates, to sell or otherwise dispose of the shares of common stock in the Virgin Islands Telephone Company ("Vitelco"). The Responsible Officer will be entitled to be present at, and involved in, all negotiations conducted by the Debtors or their agents in connection with the sale of the Debtors' direct or indirect assets in Vitelco.

(R-186, pp.5-6, ¶14.

Remarkably, while maintaining that they intended for the Responsible Officer to assume complete control of the negotiations for the sale or refinancing of the assets of the non-debtor subsidiaries, Appellants state at pages 42-43 of their brief that they did not intend for the Responsible Officer to act as an independent fiduciary for creditors. In the face of Appellants' unwillingness to allow these negotiations to be conducted by someone with a legal obligation to act for the benefit of creditors, the Bankruptcy Court clearly did not abuse its discretion in concluding that it was in the interests of the bankruptcy estate and its creditors to appoint a trustee.

B. The Bankruptcy Court Did Not Err in Considering Appellants' Failure to Account for the Accrual of Interest on the Debts of the RTFC and the Greenlight Entities as a Factor Weighing in Favor of a Trustee.

Appellants contend at page 24 of their brief on appeal that the Bankruptcy Court erred in considering their failure to account for the accrual of interest on the claims held by the RTFC and the Greenlight Entities as a factor militating in favor of the appointment of a trustee. In this regard, the Court stated:

> There are other issues that must be addressed by someone outside the Prosser organization. One issue involves the financial statements of the Prosser parties. Witnesses experienced in accounting principles testified that financial statements must continue to reflect accumulated interest until there is a final determination that the obligation underlying the interest is no longer due. This is so even though the company may dispute the obligation to pay interest. In this case, Prosser disputes the obligation to pay interest due to the negotiated $402 million discounted payment. However, whether the discount is still applicable is itself in dispute. Nonetheless, the consolidated financial statements for the Prosser entities are no longer reflecting accumulating and unpaid interest on the final judgments that likewise remain unpaid. … Not reporting the dispute or reflecting the possibility that [interest] will be added to the debt of the Debtors (either as principals or as guarantors) is clearly a material matter that requires someone with no tie to Prosser to investigate. The independence of a trustee is needed for this purpose.

Mem. Op., pp.11-12 (footnotes omitted).

Appellants contend that the Court erred in considering this issue because the claims in question had been accelerated, with the result that the RTFC and the Greenlight Entities were seeking “unmatured interest,” which is not allowed under 11 U.S.C. § 502(b)(2). However, assuming for purposes of argument that this contention is correct, it does not follow that the RTFC and the Greenlight Entities do not have valid claims in these cases for matured interest. Appellants cannot reasonably contend that the filing of these cases had the effect of eliminating the continued accrual of interest on over $500 million in secured debt.[14] The Bankruptcy Court did not err in treating the issue of whether and to what extent the Appellants should account for the accrual of interest on these claims as a “material matter that requires someone with no tie to Prosser to investigate.”

C. In Reaching its Decision to Appoint a Trustee, the Bankruptcy Court Quite Clearly Weighed the Benefits Against the Cost of Doing So.

Appellants contend at page 38 of their brief that “[t]he Bankruptcy Court abused its discretion in failing to consider the harm that the appointment of a trustee would have on the Debtors and their various constituencies.” First, it is not clear what “constituencies” are at risk in these bankruptcy cases other than Appellants’ creditors and Prosser. The Corporate Debtors’ continued business operations are not in jeopardy since they are holding companies that have no business operations.[15] Their material assets consist of stock in other companies, and a trustee does not jeopardize Appellants’ financial stake in those companies. Moreover, the RTFC and the Greenlight Entities, which joined in the Trustee Motion, hold over 90% of the debt in the cases. It is presumably in the economic interest of these creditors to pursue a course that maximizes the value of the non-debtor operating entities on which the value of their asserted liens on the Corporate Debtors’ stock depends, and they have evidently concluded that the appointment of a trustee will have a more salutary effect on that value than would the Corporate Debtors' continued administration of the cases as debtors in possession. For the reasons set forth supra in this brief, the Bankruptcy Court was authorized to conclude that the appointment of a trustee would assist in realizing the "sale of stock or assets or a refinancing" that Appellants concede is central to the success of these cases.[16] Appellants' contention at page 38 of their brief that as a result of the Bankruptcy Court's decision to appoint a trustee "the PSC will likely take action against New ICC and the [non-debtor operating entities] for violating 30 V.I.C. § 43a" is addressed in Section III of this Brief, infra.

[14] Whether and to what extent there is sufficient value to pay such interest is, of course, a different question.

[15] Appellants’ brief, p. 12.

II. THE BANKRUPTCY COURT DID NOT ERR IN DENYING APPELLANTS' MOTION FOR THE APPOINTMENT OF A "RESPONSIBLE PERSON."

Although some courts have allowed it, the appointment of a "Responsible Officer," as opposed to a trustee, to assume the administration of a chapter 11 case from a debtor in possession is not a remedy contemplated by the Bankruptcy Code. See In re SunCruz Casinos, LLC, 298 B.R. 821, 832 (Bankr. S.D.Fla. 2003) ("The Code does not contemplate appointment of a 'Responsible Person' to perform the duties of a trustee."). As noted by the Bankruptcy Court at page 9 of the Memorandum Opinion, in cases in which this device has been employed, either the debtor had no existing management, as in Matter of FSC Corporation, 38 B.R. 346 (Bankr. W.D.Pa. 1983), or no party lodged an objection to it, as in Matter of Gaslight Club, Inc., 782 F.2d 767 (7th Cir. 1986). Accord In re Communication Options, Inc., 299 B.R. 481, 482 (Bankr. S.D.Ohio 2003). Appellants have cited no authority supporting the appointment of a "Responsible Officer" to take over the administration of a chapter 11 case from a debtor in possession where, as here, the United States Trustee and creditors opposed the request and instead sought the appointment of a chapter 11 trustee under 11 U.S.C. § 1104, and existing authority is in fact to the contrary. See, e.g., In re Stratesec, Inc., 324 B.R. 158, 160-161 (Bankr. D.D.C. 2004) (declining to appoint receiver for debtor corporation as responsible officer absent proof that all creditors supported motion). See also In re Adelphia Communications Corp., 336 B.R. 610, 668 (Bankr. S.D.N.Y. 2006) (characterizing request for appointment of non-trustee fiduciary to act on behalf of estate as "back-door means of circumventing the statutory requirements, and case law, applicable to the appointment of trustees under section 1104") ; In re Freedlander, Inc., 86 B.R. 66, 68 (Bankr. E.D. Va. 1988) ("A review of case authority allowing the substitution of management as an alternative to proceeding with a hearing on the appointment of a trustee reflects that such an alternative is only available when there is a consensus to such a course of action.").

[16] See Appellants' brief, p. 13.

III. SECTION 43A OF TITLE 30 OF THE VIRGIN ISLANDS CODE DID NOT PROHIBIT THE APPOINTMENT OF A CHAPTER 11 TRUSTEE, AND EVEN IF IT HAD, FEDERAL BANKRUPTCY LAW WOULD SUPERCEDE IT UNDER THE SUPREMACY AND BANKRUPTCY CLAUSES.

Appellants contend that the appointment of a chapter 11 trustee was void under the following provision of Section 43a of Title 30 of the Virgin Islands Code:

> (a) No person or corporation, whether or not organized under the laws of the Territory, shall sell, acquire or transfer control, either directly, or indirectly of any public utility organized and doing business in this Territory, without first securing authorization from the [Public Services] Commission. Any such acquisition or control without prior authorization shall be void and of no effect.

30 V.I.C. § 43a(a).

This contention lacks merit for three reasons. First, Appellants cite no authority – and we can find none – for the proposition that a change in control of a parent company operates as a change in control of its subsidiaries, particularly where, as here, the parent company does not exercise any day-to-day operational control over the subsidiaries.[17] As noted by this Court last year in Virgin Islands Telephone Corp. v. Rural Telephone Finance Co-op. Greenlight Capital Qualified, L.P.P., 2006 WL 319002, p.4 (D.V.I., February 10, 2006), "there are at least two layers between [Appellants] and Vitelco," and "it is well settled that 'absent unusual circumstances, the property of the debtor's subsidiary is not considered property of the debtor by virtue of the debtor's sole ownership of the subsidiary.'"

Second, even assuming for purposes of argument that the appointment of a trustee to administer these chapter 11 cases did effect a change in control of Vitelco or any other non-debtor entity connected with the cases, such change of control clearly did not result from a "transfer" by a "person[18] or corporation" within the meaning of 30 V.I.C. § 43a. Rather, it resulted from an order entered by the Bankruptcy Court pursuant to 11 U.S.C. § 1104 in a case under its jurisdiction. In taking the position that the court-ordered appointment of a federal bankruptcy trustee under federal law in a federal bankruptcy case involving a regulated utility constitutes a transfer of control of the utility for regulatory purposes, the PSC appears to be unique among regulatory agencies in the United States, which uniformly regard the entry of such an order as a pro forma event with no regulatory consequences.[19] Appellants have cited no

[17] Mem. Op., p.21 (R-448).

[18] As defined by 1 V.I.C. § 41, the term person includes "corporations, companies, associations, joint stock companies, firms, partnerships, and societies, as well as individuals ..." It does not, however, include bankruptcy courts.

As defined by 11 U.S.C. § 101(41), "[t]he term 'person' includes individual, partnership, and corporation, but [subject to certain exceptions] does not include governmental unit ..." This definition likewise does not encompass bankruptcy courts.

[19] The United States Trustee bases this assertion on the authorities cited by the RTFC in its brief filed on January 11, 2007, in support of the Trustee Motion and in response to the PSC's opposition to the Trustee Motion (R-330).

judicial authority that remotely supports the PSC's interpretation of 30 V.I.C. § 43a in this regard.

Finally, an interpretation of 30 V.I.C. § 43a purporting to limit or restrict the ability of a bankruptcy court to direct the appointment of a trustee in a chapter 11 case would obviously conflict with section 1104 of the United States Bankruptcy Code and accordingly would impermissibly interfere with Congress' power to enact bankruptcy legislation under the Bankruptcy Clause. U.S. Const. art. I, sec. 8, cl. 4. It also would violate the Supremacy Clause of the United States Constitution, under which the laws of the United States constitute "the supreme Law of the Land ... any Thing in the Constitution or Laws of any State to the Contrary notwithstanding." U.S. Const. art. VI, cl. 2.[17]

As the Supreme Court reiterated in Crosby v. Nat'l Foreign Trade Counsel, 530 U.S. 363, 372-73, 120 S.Ct. 2288 (2000), inconsistent state laws must yield to congressional enactments when one of two tests is met, regardless of whether Congress has inserted a clause in legislation explicitly preempting state law. First, where Congress intends federal law to occupy a given field, it preempts state law in that area. Id., 530 U.S. at 372-73. Second, even if Congress has not entirely displaced state regulation over the matter in question, federal law still preempts state law to the extent that state law actually conflicts with federal law. Id. This occurs when it is impossible to comply with both state and federal law, or when the state law stands as an obstacle to the accomplishment of the full purposes and objectives of Congress. Id. Accord Edgar v. MITE Corp., 457 U.S. 624, 631, 102 S.Ct. 2629, 2635 (1982).

[17] The principles of preemption arising from the Supremacy Clause "are made applicable to the laws of the Virgin Islands through the Revised Organic Act, which authorizes the Virgin Islands legislature to enact territorial laws that are 'not inconsistent with ... the laws of the United States made applicable to the Virgin Islands.' 48 U.S.C. § 1574(a)." St. Thomas--St. John Hotel & Tourism Ass'n, Inc. v. Government of U.S. Virgin Islands, 218 F.3d 232, 237-8 (3d Cir. 2000).

Congress has quite clearly satisfied these tests in the bankruptcy arena, where it has enacted a comprehensive and pervasive statutory scheme that "occupies a full title of the United States Code" and "provides a comprehensive system of rights, obligations and procedures, as well as a complex administrative machinery that includes a special system of federal courts and United States Trustees." Sherwood Partners, Inc. v. Lycos, Inc., 394 F.3d 1198, 1201 (9th Cir. 2005). Bankruptcy is particularly federal because the Bankruptcy Clause of the Constitution, U.S. Const. art. I, § 8, cl. 4, grants Congress the power "[t]o establish . . . uniform Laws on the subject of Bankruptcies throughout the United States." Congress has exercised that power by enacting the Bankruptcy Code. See, e.g., Sherwood, supra, 394 F.3d at 1201 ("There can be no doubt that federal bankruptcy law is 'pervasive' and involves a federal interest 'so dominant' as to 'preclude enforcement of state laws on the same subject' – much like many other areas of congressional power listed in Article I, Section 8, of the Constitution, such as patents, copyrights, currency, national defense and immigration"); Eastern Equip. and Servs. Corp. v. Factory Point Nat'l Bank, Bennington, 236 F.3d 117, 120 (2d Cir. 2001) (same).

Nowhere in section 1104 or elsewhere in the Bankruptcy Code is there a "regulatory exception" that conditions or limits the authority of bankruptcy judges to direct the appointment of a trustee in a case involving a regulated entity. As observed by the Supreme Court in Federal Communications Comm'n v. Nextwave Personal Communications, Inc., 537 U.S. 293, 302, 123 S.Ct. 832 (2003), "where Congress has intended to provide regulatory exceptions to provisions of the Bankruptcy Code, it has done so clearly and expressly ..." An example of such a clear and express exception is section 362(b)(4) of the Bankruptcy Code, which specifies that the automatic stay otherwise applicable under 11 U.S.C. § 362(a)(1), (2), (3) & (6) to, inter alia, the commencement or continuation of judicial or administrative actions or proceedings against the debtor is inapplicable to > the commencement or continuation of an action or proceeding by a governmental unit ... to enforce such governmental unit's or organization's police and regulatory power, including the enforcement of a judgment other than a money judgment, obtained in an action or proceeding by the governmental unit to enforce such governmental unit's or organization's police or regulatory power ...

11 U.S.C. § 362(b)(4). See Village of Rosemont v. Jaffee, ___ F.3d ___, 2007 WL 967046, p. 11 (7th Cir. 2007) (holding that this section "forbids the bankruptcy court from interfering with the government's police and regulatory powers"). There is, however, nothing in section 362(b)(4) or in any other provision of the Bankruptcy Code that restricts the bankruptcy court's ability to direct the appointment of a trustee in a chapter 11 case involving a regulated utility, nor is there any provision limiting or restricting the powers and duties of a trustee appointed pursuant to section 1104 in such a case. While 11 U.S.C. § 362 exempts from the purview of the automatic stay actions or proceedings by regulatory agencies to enforce their police and regulatory powers, such police and regulatory powers do not and cannot operate to restrict the powers and duties of bankruptcy courts either to oversee the administration of bankruptcy cases or to impose remedies in such cases that the Bankruptcy Code specifically authorizes or requires.

There is no suggestion in these cases that the Bankruptcy Court has ever sought to enjoin or otherwise interfere with any regulatory action or proceeding by or before the PSC. Compare In re Yellow Cab Cooperative Association, 132 F3d. 591 (10th Cir. 1997) (holding that bankruptcy court exceeded its authority in enjoining Public Utility Commission from restricting transfer of debtor's license to operate taxicabs, where Commission had based its decision on legitimate regulatory considerations). Cf. Village of Rosemont v. Jaffee, supra (upholding bankruptcy court's refusal to enjoin proceedings before Illinois Gaming Board to revoke debtor's riverboat gambling license). To the contrary, in its order granting the Trustee Motion the Bankruptcy Court specified that "the United States Trustee, upon entry of an order appointing a Chapter 11 trustee, shall advise said Chapter 11 Trustee of his/her obligation to confer with the PSC in all matters subject to the PSC's regulatory authority. See 30 V.I.C. 43(a)." R-450. In the event the PSC takes some future action to revoke Vitelco's franchise, terminate its license or otherwise restrict its ability to operate, the parties will be free to seek a ruling from the Bankruptcy Court at that time on the issue of whether and to what extent such action constitutes a lawful exercise of the PSC's "police and regulatory power" within the contemplation of section 362(b)(4). Clearly, however, the present appeals present no such issue.

CONCLUSION

For the foregoing reasons, the United States Trustee respectfully requests the Court to enter an order affirming the Bankruptcy Court's orders granting the Trustee Motion and denying the Responsible Officer Motion.

IN THE UNITED STATES COURT OF APPEALS FOR THE ELEVENTH CIRCUIT

IN RE:

EMPIRE STATE BUSINESS, L.L.C.

Appellant

v.

Appeal No. 08-13941-G

DONALD F. WALTON,
UNITED STATES TRUSTEE,
REGION 21

Appellee

RESPONSE OF APPELLEE, THE UNITED STATES TRUSTEE, TO THIS COURT'S MEMORANDUM DATED SEPTEMBER 23, 2008, REQUESTING BRIEFING ON THE QUESTION WHETHER THIS COURT HAS JURISDICTION OVER THS APPEAL

1. On September 23, 2008, this Court asked the parties to address whether this Court has jurisdiction over this appeal. In this case, a non-attorney, Michael Fernando, filed the notice of appeal on behalf of the corporate appellant, Empire State Business, LLC. Historically, this Court has allowed non-attorneys to file notices of appeal on behalf of corporate appellants so long as the corporate-appellants promptly retained counsel thereafter. Most circuits follow this approach. Under that approach, this appeal should be dismissed if counsel of record does not promptly enter an appearance on behalf of Empire State.

2. A corporation may participate in legal proceedings only through counsel. Palazzo v. Gulf Oil Corp., 764 F.2d 1381 (11th Cir. 1985) (corporation is required to be represented by counsel and officer could not raise claims of corporation in his pro se capacity); Stirzaker v. Howard, 197 Fed. Appx. 852 (11th Cir. 2006) (corporate entity must be represented by counsel on appeal). This rule applies even when the person seeking to represent the corporation is its president and major stockholder. Palazzo, 764 F.2d at 1385.

3. At least twice, this Court has allowed non-parties to file notices of appeals on behalf of corporate appellants, but required the appellants to promptly retain counsel in order for their appeals to proceed. In re K.M.A., Inc., 652 F.2d 398 (5th Cir. 1981) (concluding "[i]t is not clear, however, whether the filing of the corporation's notice of appeal by someone who is not an attorney is sufficient to deprive this Court of its jurisdiction to consider the appeal," and allowing such an appeal to proceed if "within 30 days of the entry of this order an attorney admitted to practice before this Court files an appearance to represent the corporate appellant.").[1] See also F.T.C. v. Gem Merchandising Corp., 1995 WL 623168 (11th Cir. 1995) (allowing such an appeal to proceed if an attorney entered an appearance within thirty days).

4. This Court's practice is consistent with that employed by most other circuits. Harrison v. Wahatoyas, L.L.C., 253 F.3d 552 (10th Cir. 2001) (corporate appellants' notice of appeal was not invalid simply because it was signed and filed by a corporate officer rather than by counsel, but corporation must retain attorney in time to perform all other necessary, substantive legal work for appeal); Instituto de Educacion Universal Corp. v. U.S. Dept. of Educ., 209 F.3d 18 (1st Cir. 2000) (corporate officer may sign and file notice of appeal on behalf of corporation so long as the corporation promptly retains counsel to prosecute the appeal); Bigelow v. Brady, 179 F.3d 1164, 1165-66 (9th Cir. 1999) (stating "[w]e fail to see any compelling reason to refuse to recognize a corporation's notice of appeal, signed and filed by a corporate officer, so long as a lawyer promptly thereafter enters a formal appearance on behalf of the corporation and undertakes the representation"). But see U.S. v. Green, 966 F.2d 1445 (4th Cir. 1992) (holding notice of appeal filed on behalf of corporation by non-attorney was invalid, dismissing appeal and stating "[i]t is well established that a corporation is an artificial entity that cannot appear pro se, and must be represented by counsel").

5. Under this Court's practice, Empire State's appeal would not be dismissed simply because it was filed by a non-attorney, but the appeal would be dismissed unless Empire promptly retains counsel and that counsel enters an appearance in this case. To trigger that practice in this case, this Court could enter an order providing Empire's appeal will be dismissed unless counsel enters an appearance on Empire's behalf within 30 days.

Respectfully submitted this 2nd day of October 2008.

STATEMENT OF ISSUES

1. WHETHER the Bankruptcy Court's decision was proper and within its sound discretion under applicable case law.

2. WHETHER the Bankruptcy Court applied the proper legal standards when it reviewed the Appellant's fee application.

3. WHETHER the Bankruptcy Court's findings of fact in regard to the appellant's fee request were clearly erroneous.

PRELIMINARY STATEMENT

Sachs Kamhi & Kushner, P.C. (hereinafter the “Appellant” or the “ the Sachs firm”) has appealed from an order of Judge Dorothy Eisenberg of the United States Bankruptcy Court for the Eastern District of New York dated May 14, 1997 (see the Appellant’s Designation of the Record on Appeal[1] filed by the Sachs firm, as Exhibit “1”) which awarded the Appellant final fees in the amount of $165,000. The basis of the Sachs firms appeal is that the Court abused its discretion when it: (i) failed to apply the proper legal standard adopted by the Second Circuit with respect to compensation awards for professionals retained in a bankruptcy proceeding; (ii) failed to follow the proper procedures in conducting a hearing on Appellant’s Final Application for fees; and (iii) rendered a decision based on a findings of fact which the Appellant contends were clearly erroneous.

The Appellant asks this Court to: (i) determine that the Bankruptcy Court abused its discretion thereby warranting a reversal of its decision; and (ii) hold a hearing to determine the amount of the award for the Appellant’s final fee application. As demonstrated below, the Bankruptcy Court’s rulings were not an abuse of discretion, the Bankruptcy Court applied the proper standards and followed the proper procedures in determining the amount to award the Appellant for its final fee application. Moreover, the Court’s factual conclusion was not erroneous. Given the facts and circumstances which are more fully developed in this brief, it is submitted that the Bankruptcy Court’s ruling was well within the boundaries of the law and its sound discretion, and as such, it should be upheld in all respects.

STATEMENT OF FACTS

The debtor, EMS Development Corporation (hereinafter "EMS"), filed a voluntary Chapter 11 petition pursuant to Title 11 of the United States Code (hereinafter "Bankruptcy Code") with the United States Bankruptcy Court for the Eastern District of New York on November 2, 1995. The case was assigned to Judge Dorothy Eisenberg, with a case number 895-86448-478. Pursuant to an Order of the Court dated November 20, 1995, the Sachs firm retention as counsel for the debtor was approved. On January 28, 1997, an official committee of creditors (hereinafter the "Committee") was appointed by the Office of the United States Trustee (hereinafter the "UST"). Pursuant to an Order of the Court dated February 10, 1997, the retention of the law firm of Larry I. Glick, P.C., as counsel for the Committee, was approved.

On or about January 9, 1997, the Sachs firm filed an application for interim allowance of compensation pursuant to Sections 330 and 331 of the Bankruptcy Code for services rendered on behalf of the debtor for the period between November 2, 1995 and December 23, 1996. A hearing on the Sachs firm's fee application was scheduled for January 24, 1997. The UST, Ward Leonard Electric Company, Inc.[2/] (hereinafter "Ward"), and Farmingdale Corporation[3/] (hereinafter "Farmingdale"), filed objections to the Sachs firm's fee request. In its objection, the Ward contacted the debtor prior to this Chapter 11 filing, and expressed interest in acquiring or investing in EMS.

[3/] Farmingdale Corporate Center is the former landlord of the debtor and holds an unsecured pre-petition claim of approximately $945,000 and unsecured post-petition claim of approximately $16,000. Upon information and belief, Farmingdale Corporate Center is the largest unsecured creditor of this Chapter 11 estate and is the chairman of the unsecured creditors' committee.

UST raised the issue of undue delay in the reorganization process because the debtor refused to provide essential financial information to Ward for the completion of Ward's competing plan of reorganization. In addition, the UST asserted that the Sachs firm failed to meet its burden of proof since it did not show that its efforts in assisting the debtor had benefitted the estate and that a decision to award compensation to Sachs should be deferred until such time as the prospects for the debtor's reorganization became more likely.

On January 24, 1997, the Court held a hearing on the Sachs firm's fee application, and all parties who filed objections appeared and stated their respective objections on the record. At the hearing, the Court did not rule on the merits of the Sachs firm's fee application since the Court determined that it was premature to entertain fee requests at the time. Nevertheless, the Court awarded the Sachs firm $50,000 as interim compensation and an Order approving the interim award was signed by the Court on January 29, 1997. The determination regarding "benefit" and "reasonableness"of the services rendered by the Sachs firm was reserved for the final fee hearing.

On or about April 14, 1997, Appellant filed a final fee application seeking final compensation in the amount of $247,000 for fees and $13,582.87 for reimbursement of out-of-pocket expenses. The UST, the Committee, Farmingdale, and Rodale Electronics, Inc.,[4] filed objections to the Sachs firm's fee request. On April 25, 1997, all professionals' fee applications[5] were heard by the Court. The UST's objections to the Sachs firm's application questioned the benefit of Appellant's services to the estate as well as the manner in which such services were performed. The UST argued that Sachs' services were often not time efficient, burdened the debtor's estate as a result of the level of professional who acted on a specific task, were overall inefficient, and of questionable benefit. See "A-4". In fact, the UST's objections to the Sachs firm's final application were similar to the objections raised to the Sachs' interim fee request in January, 1997. See the Appellee's Designation of Item, Exhibit "A"[6].

In addition to the objections filed by the UST, Rodale also filed an objection which stated:

> . . . the time and expenses incurred by the Appellant pursuing improper goals which includes creating improper impediments to the receipt by Ward and Rodale of due diligence information necessary for their competing plans of reorganization, did not benefit the debtor's estate or its creditors and increased Applicant's professional fees and expense substantially beyond that which is reasonable in a case of this size and complexity. Moreover, Applicant's tactics increased the amount of fees and expenses Ward and Rodale now seek in their application . . .

"A-6".

Furthermore, Farmingdale, a creditor of the debtor's estate, objected to Sachs' final fee request stating that:

> . . . a substantial portion of counsel's time sought to be compensated in the Fee Application has been spent attempting to frustrate third parties, including Ward Leonard and Rodale, from purchasing the Debtor and improperly placing the interest of the Debtor's

"A-5".

Moreover, the Committee objected to Sachs' final fee request of $247,000 because the Committee stated that it was misled by the Sachs firm's representation which estimated its administrative claim for professional fees at $150,000. Based upon that representation, the Committee negotiated the terms of the competing plans filed by Ward and Rodale, and ultimately supported the Ultra Electronics Holdings, P.L.C.[7] (hereinafter "Ultra") plan of reorganization. Had the Committee known the Sachs firm's fee request was $247,000, it would not have supported the Ultra plan. See "A-7".

At the April 25, 1997 hearing, the Court heard argument from all parties regarding their respective fee applications and all opposition. In the Court's analysis of the Sachs firm's fees, it reviewed the services rendered, determined whether the manner in which they were performed was cost efficient, and then awarded what it believed was equitable under the circumstances. The Court, after reviewing the fee applications and the objections, determined that the fee request was excessive and should be reduced accordingly.

“A- 2", p. 127, lines 12-19

The Court applied the Lodestar standard and examined all events took place in this Chapter 11 matter.

> . . . I find that there was a waste of legal time spent by debtor’s counsel in regard to production of documents, confidentiality issues, economic espionage issues, and there was additional delaying tactics and an effort, probably on behalf of debtor’s principals, to impede the efforts of Ward in their quest for equal access to the information so that they could prepare a proper opposing plan . . . Prior to Ultra coming into the scene, which was only within the last few months, many of the actions by the debtor and debtor’s counsel were to delay and obstruct . . .

“A-2", p. 128, lines 5-14

The Court further found that there was an issue of conflict of interest when the Sachs firm acted on behalf of the debtor’s principals and not the debtor by thwarting Ward’s efforts to complete its competing plan. The debtor’s principals were fearful that they would lose control over the debtor if Ward’s plan was confirmed.

> . . . In this regard, when counsel to the debtor listens to and even considers and acts with what a principal wants, which may not necessarily benefit the estate and may even create an impression of conflict of interest, raises some doubt as to some of the legal time spent. Counsel to a DIP should seek the best plan and the best return for the — for the debtor and its creditors, not necessarily the best benefit to debtor’s principals . . .

In addition, the Court examined the time that the Sachs firm spent on: (1) objecting to the landlord's claim and claims of other creditors; (2) obtaining proceeds of a letter of credit from Fleet Bank; (3) reviewing and objecting to the disclosure statement of Rodale; and (4) negotiating the amended plan. The Court found that there was "an extreme excess of legal fees for those four major items, even if you look at the time records." See "A-2", p. 129, lines 15-17

Based upon the arguments made and objections filed regarding the Sachs firm's fee application, the Court awarded the Sachs firm $165,000 as final compensation and reserved decision on the reimbursement of the out-of-pocket expenses.

PROCEDURAL HISTORY OF THE CASE

On November 2, 1995, the debtor filed a voluntary petition under Chapter 11 of the Bankruptcy Code with the Bankruptcy Court. At the time of filing, EMS operated a business manufacturing mine-counter measures for ships of the United States Navy and navies of several foreign countries.

On September 30, 1996, the debtor filed a plan of reorganization and disclosure statement which proposed a ten (10%) percent distribution to the general unsecured creditors.

On October 28, 1996, Ward sent a letter to the debtor's counsel and made an offer to acquire EMS through a Chapter 11 plan of reorganization. However, the debtor expressed no interest in Ward's proposal.

On November 18, 1996, Ward filed a competing plan and disclosure statement which proposed an estimated fifteen (15%) percent distribution to the unsecured creditors. In addition, Ward filed objections to the debtor's proposed plan and disclosure statement.

On November 24, 1996, the debtor filed objections to the Ward plan and disclosure statement.

On November 26, 1996, a hearing to consider the adequacy of the respective disclosure statements was held. At the hearing, the Court directed both the debtor and Ward to amend their respective disclosure statements on or before December 27, 1996.

Shortly thereafter, Ward made a request to the Court for additional time to file a joint proposed plan of reorganization and disclosure statement with Rodale. The time to file the amended plan and disclosure statement was extended to January 16, 1997.

On December 20, 1997, the debtor filed its first amended plan and disclosure statement. On January 16, 1997, Ward and Rodale (hereinafter "W/R") filed their joint plan and disclosure statement with the Court. Objections to the debtor's first amended plan and disclosure statement were filed by Ward on January 13, 1997 and Rodale on January 14, 1997. Objections to the W/D joint plan and disclosure statement were filed by the debtor and the EMS employees on January 24, 1997, and January 22, 1997, respectively. In the debtor's objections to the W/R joint plan and disclosure statement, the debtor asserted, among other things, that the W/D joint plan contained inadequate assumptions of EMS's financial status.

On January 24, 1997, the Court held a hearing to consider the adequacy of both the debtor's amended disclosure statement and the W/R disclosure statement, and once again directed the parties to amend their respective disclosure statement.

On February 3, 1997, W/R filed an amended plan and disclosure statement which provided an immediate twenty (20%) percent distribution to the general unsecured creditors. At the same time, the debtor withdrew its proposed plan and requested an extension of time to file a new plan, which was granted by the Court.

On February 11, 1997, the debtor and Ultra proposed a joint plan of reorganization wherein it was stated that $1,500,000 would be made available to all of the creditors of the estate. A hearing to consider the adequacy of the Ultra disclosure statement and W/R amended disclosure statement was held on February 19, 1997, and the Court directed the parties to make further amendments to their respective disclosure statement.

Shortly after the hearing, Ward withdrew its proposed plan and disclosure statement and Rodale continued filing its own proposed plan and disclosure statement which provided for a thirty (30%) percent distribution to the unsecured creditors.

On March 17, 1997, a hearing to consider the adequacy of the Ultra disclosure statement and the Rodale disclosure statement was held. The Committee supported the Ultra plan and disclosure statement. As a result, the Ultra disclosure statement was approved and the Rodale disclosure statement was not approved. On April 25, 1997, the Bankruptcy Court confirmed the Ultra plan of reorganization.

ARGUMENT

I. The Court did not abuse its discretion when it reviewed and modified the Sachs firm's fee request

The Bankruptcy Court did not abuse its discretion when it reduced the fee request of the Sachs firm by $82,000 because the Court applied legal standards and proper procedures when it made factual findings to support its ruling. "The standard for judicial review on appeal of a fee award from a bankruptcy court is that the decision of the bankruptcy judge has abused his discretion-i.e., failed to apply proper procedures or legal standards, or made factual findings that were clearly erroneous." In the Matter of Cena's Fine Furniture, Inc., 109 B.R. 575, 580 (E.D.N.Y. 1990), citing In re Ferkauf, Inc., 56 B.R. 774, 775 (S.D.N.Y. 1985); See also In re

Shades of Beauty, Inc., 95 B.R. 17, 18 (E.D.N.Y. 1988).

In the case at bar, the UST submits to this Court that the Bankruptcy Court applied the proper procedures, and the proper legal standards for fee review before it made factual findings of facts that supported its decision. The facts and circumstances of the Court's findings will be fully developed in this brief. Therefore, the Bankruptcy Court's findings of the Sachs firm's fee award should be affirmed since the Court did not abuse its discretion when it modified the Sachs firm's fee request.

A. The Bankruptcy Court applied the proper legal standards when it reviewed the Sachs firm's fee request

1. The Bankruptcy Court applied the Lodestar method when it reviewed the Sachs firm's fee request

Contrary to the Appellant's argument, the Bankruptcy Court applied the lodestar method of fee review before it awarded compensation to the Sachs firm. The Bankruptcy Court recognized that this district adheres to the lodestar method of fee evaluation. "The lodestar amount represents the number of hours reasonably worked on a case multiplied by the reasonable hourly rate." In re Cena's Fine Furniture, Inc., 109 B.R. 575, 581 (E.D.N.Y. 1990), citing Wells v. Bowen, 855 F.2d 37, 43 (2nd Cir. 1988). In fact, in the case at bar, the Court started its review of the Sachs firm's fee application by applying the lodestar method. See "A-2", p. 127, line 20- p. 128, line 1. The Court went further with its analysis on the Appellant's fee application because it recognized that the lodestar method, which is a strict mathematical analysis of number of hours reasonably worked multiplied by the reasonable hourly rate, did not end the fee request analysis. See Lindy Brothers Builders, Inc., v. American Radiator and Standard Sanitary Corp., 487 F. 2d. 161, 167 (3d Cir. 1973).

Therefore, contrary to the Appellant's argument, the Bankruptcy Court applied the lodestar method to determine the Sachs firm's fee request.

2. The Bankruptcy Court applied other factors of fee review in conjunction with the lodestar method before it awarded the Sachs firm's fee request

It has been held by the Second Circuit Court of Appeals that a District Court has the discretion to adjust the "lodestar" amount based on the results obtained. See United States Football League v. National Football League, 887 F.2d 408 (2d Cir. 1989). Other factors for a court to consider in awarding fees are: (1) time and labor required to perform services; (2) novelty and difficulty of the case; (3)skill required to perform legal services; (4) preclusion of other employment by an attorney during the pending case; (5) customary fee charged; (6) amount involved; (7) results obtained; (8) ability of counsel and awards in similar cases. See Johnson v. Georgia Highway Express, Inc., 488 F. 2d 714 (5th Cir. 1974). Accordingly, the additional factors that were considered by the Court in Johnson remain relevant for the purpose of adjusting the lodestar. See Blanchard v. Bergros, 489 U.S. 87 (1989).

The United States Circuit Courts of Appeals have upheld decisions of lower courts which have adjusted fees for a variety of factors after the basic lodestar analysis is completed. While the court in United States Football League allowed fee adjustments in this Circuit, other Circuits are more specific in the further analysis used after a lodestar analysis is completed. For example, the First Circuit has held that the lodestar can be adjusted based on the quality of the representation in a case. See Boston and Maine Corp. v. Moore, 776 F. 2d 2, 7 (1st Cir. 1985). Other factors such as delay in payment, quality of representation considering the rates charged and overall performance by counsel are often considered. See Furtado v.Bishop, 635 F.2d 915, 920 (1st Cir. 1980).

In the case at bar, after the Bankruptcy Court applied the lodestar method of fee evaluation, it took a step further in its analysis and adopted the additional factors for fee review consideration articulated in Johnson v. Georgia Highway Express, Inc. The Court's finding on April 25, 1997, reveals that it carefully examined the Sachs firm's time records, the history of the case, and the narrative describing services that were performed by the Sachs firm. The Court record further reveals that the Court also considered factors such as the time and labor provided by the Appellant, the complexity of the issues dealing with sensitive national security information, the skill of the Sachs firm, and the total fee requested verses the result achieved. Therefore, it is evident that not only did the Bankruptcy Court apply the lodestar method of fee review, it also utilized the Johnson factors in its analysis before awarding the Sachs firm on compensation.

It is the position of the UST that the evidence of the present case is clear that the Bankruptcy Court applied the proper legal standards of fee review before it rendered a decision on the Sachs firm's fee award. See "A-2", p. 127, lines 12-19. In fact, the Sachs firm acknowledges in its Appellant's Brief to this Court that the Bankruptcy Court recognized the proper legal standards when it reviewed the Appellant's fee application at the April 25, 1997, hearing. See Appellant's Brief, p. 16.

B. The Bankruptcy Court followed the proper procedures when it reviewed the Sachs firm's fee application

1. The Bankruptcy Court followed the requirements pursuant to Section 330 of the Bankruptcy Code when it reviewed the Appellant's fee application

The Bankruptcy Court followed the proper procedure when it applied the requirements of Section 330[8] of the Bankruptcy Code before it determined the Sachs firm's fee award. "Under 11 U.S.C. Section 330(a), the Court must establish, initially, whether the billed service is compensa-ble; secondly, whether it was actual and necessary; and finally, whether the amount charged is reasonable based on the nature, extent, and value of the services." In re S.T.N. Enterprises, Inc., 70 B.R. 823, 832 (Bankr. D. Vt. 1987).

In the case at bar, the Bankruptcy Court followed all legal procedures required by Section 330 of the Bankruptcy Code when it reviewed the Sachs firm's fee application. The notice of the fee applications hearing, held on April 25, 1997, was given to all creditors of this estate. All applicants and several parties in interest appeared at the hearing. The Court gave opportunities to all parties who appeared at the hearing to present oral representations and other forms of evidence to the Court. The Court examined the Sachs firm's fee application and time records. The Court also conducted an analysis to see whether the Sachs firm's services rendered in this case were: (1) compensable; (2) actual and necessary; (3) reasonable based on the nature, extent and value of the services; and (4) beneficial to the creditors and the debtor's estate. In fact, the UST submits to this Court that the argument raised by the Appellant is focused on the Court's findings of fact, instead of the Court's failure to follow the requirements pursuant to Section 330 of the Bankruptcy Code in fee review.

Moreover, the burden of proof to show entitlement to requested fees is always on the applicant. In re Oberreich, 109 B.R. 936, 938 (Bankr. E.D. Wis. 1990). In order for a Court to award fees and expenses, the applicant must demonstrate that services rendered made a substantial contribution to the Chapter 11 reorganization. See In re Jack Winter, Inc., 119 B.R. 629, 632 (E.D. Wis. 1990). Courts are hesitant to award requests for compensation which make little sense in light of the size of the estate and necessity of services rendered. It is widely held that the court must perform a cost/benefit analysis when reviewing fee requests. See In re Wildman, 72

B.R. 700, 707 (Bankr. N.D. Ill. 1987). In particular, courts discourage professionals from running up a tab without considering the maximum probable recovery for creditors. Unsecured Creditors' Committee v. Puget Sound Plywood, Inc., 924 F. 2d 955, 958 (9th Cir. 1991).

In the case at bar, despite the requirement of the applicant's burden of proof to show the Court that it is entitled to the fee requested, the Sachs firm failed to meet its burden of proof either in its papers or during the lengthy hearing that was held on its final fee application. In light of the Sachs firm's failure to establish evidence in support of its fee request, the Court could only rely on the time records presented by the Sachs firm for its determination regarding the fee award. After reviewing the Sachs firm's interim and final fee applications, the objections to the applications, and all of the arguments and representations made in Court, the Bankruptcy Court followed the proper procedures for fee review and concluded that the Sachs firm should be awarded only $165,000 in compensation. Since the Appellant agrees that the Court used the proper legal procedures in awarding its fees, this is not an issue that this Court must decide. Accordingly, the Bankruptcy Court's decision on the award of the Sachs firm's fee request should be affirmed, as it applied the appropriate legal procedures.

2. The Bankruptcy Court offered opportunities to the Sachs firm at the April 25, 1997 hearing, to present evidence in support of its fee request, but the Sachs firm failed to do so which resulted the reduction of $82,000 from its final fee request

The Appellant contends that there was a lack of opportunity to conduct an evidentiary hearing before the Bankruptcy Court prior to it rendered a decision on the Sachs firm's fee request. The Transcript of the April 25, 1997, hearing reveals that the Court gave the Sachs firm at least three (3) opportunities to present its case and put evidence before the Court in support of its fee application, especially dealing with the issue of "benefit to this estate". See "A-2", p. 55, lines 12-14; p. 61, lines 4-6; p.64, lines 22-23. However, the Sachs firm failed to present evidence that addressed the Court's concern. From the review of the Transcript of the April 25, 1997 hearing, it is clear that the burden of proof of whether the services rendered by the Appellant in this case were beneficial to this estate, was not met by the Sachs firm, despite ample opportunities given. Furthermore, the Sachs firm failed to request the Court for an evidentiary hearing or reconsideration on the reduction of $82,000 from its fee request. Therefore, the Bankruptcy Court did not abuse its discretion when it rendered a decision on the Sachs firm's fee request based upon the evidence, or the lack thereof, presented by the Sachs firm at the April 25, 1997, hearing.

Based upon the Transcript of the hearing held before the Bankruptcy Court on April 25, 1997, the objections filed by the various parties on the Sachs firm's fee application, the record of the entire Chapter 11 proceeding, and the evidence presented by the Sachs firm in support of its fee request, the Bankruptcy Court made a clear findings of facts when it awarded $165,000 to the Sachs firm. It is the position of the UST that the Court's decision is consistent with applicable standards established by case law and the conduct and actions of the Sachs firm in this case. Therefore, the Bankruptcy Court did not abuse its discretion.

C. The Bankruptcy Court's findings of fact in support of the its decision to modify the Appellant's fee request, were not erroneous

1. The Bankruptcy Court clearly expressed the findings of fact in support of its decision on the Appellant's fee award

Contrary to the allegations of the Sachs firm, the Court indeed made findings of fact that were not erroneous and did base its opinion on these findings. Although the Bankruptcy Court did not delineate its findings of fact as such, it is abundantly clear from a review of the opinion in this case that the requirements of Federal Rules of Bankruptcy Procedures 7052[9] (hereinafter "F.R.B.P.") are fully met. F.R.B.P. 7052 only requires that findings of facts be clearly stated, as they are in the case at bar. In addition, "F.R.C.P. Rule 52(a) does not require elaborately detailed findings; the findings need only be sufficient to discern the basis of the Court's decision." In re Farwell, 77 B.R. 198, 199 (N.D. Ill. 1987). Furthermore, it is unnecessary for the Court to make findings as to how many hours and what hourly rates were appropriate before awarding fee request. However, the Court must review the applicant's fee request and make a determination regarding its excessiveness in light of the requirements of the case, of which the Court had first-hand knowledge. In re Farwell, 77 B.R. at 200.

In the case at bar, the Bankruptcy Court fulfilled the requirements of F.R.B.P. 7052 and

[9] F.R.B.P. 7052 provides:

> (a) Effect. In all actions tried upon the facts without a jury or with an advisory jury, the court shall find the facts specially and state separately its conclusions of law thereon, and judgment shall be entered pursuant to Rule 58; and in granting or refusing interlocutory injunctions the court shall similarly set forth the findings of fact and conclusions of law which constitute the grounds of its action. Requests for findings are not necessary for purposes of review. Findings of fact, whether based on oral or documentary evidence, shall not be set aside unless clearly erroneous, and due regard shall be given to the opportunity of the trial court to judge of the credibility of the witnesses. The findings of a master, to the extent that the court adopts them, shall be considered as the findings of the court. It will be sufficient if the findings of fact and conclusions of law are stated orally and recorded in open court following the close of the evidence or appear in an opinion or memorandum of decision filed by the court. Findings of fact and conclusions of law are necessary on decisions of motions under Rule 12 or 56 or any other motion except as provided in subdivision (c) of this rule.

Federal Rules of Bankruptcy Procedure 7052 (1997).

F.R.C.P. 52(a) by (1) reviewing the Appellant's interim and final fee applications; (2) considering all the factors under the applicable standards of fee review; (3) analyzing all matters transpired in this Chapter 11 case; (4) determining the excessiveness of services rendered by the Sachs firm since they were unnecessary and unreasonable; and (5) expressing findings of fact sufficient to clearly understand the basis for the Court's opinion. Therefore, in light of the foregoing, the Bankruptcy Court clearly expressed its findings of fact in support of its decision on the Appellant's fee award.

a. The Bankruptcy Court determined that some of the services rendered by the Sachs firm were unnecessary

The Court found that a number of the services rendered by the Appellant was unnecessary and thus should not be compensated. A Bankruptcy Court should look at the applicant's contemporaneous time records because they disclose whether a service was actually performed, and the explanations accompanying each listed service justify their necessity. See In re S.T.N. Enterprises, Inc., 70 B.R. at 832. In the case at bar, the Court was fully familiar with the facts of this Chapter 11 case. In fact, the docket entries of this Chapter 11 matter indicates that there were forty-one (41) hearings held before the Bankruptcy Court on this case prior to the April 25, 1997, confirmation and fee applications hearings. The UST raised concerns regarding the necessity of an over-qualified attorney who billed $350 for tasks that could have been achieved by a less senior personnel. See "A-4", p.6-7. Moreover, Farmingdale objected to the Sachs firm spending "tremendous amount of time to deter, chill and stymie prospective purchasers' effort to obtain necessary financial and operational information so as to formulate a competing plan." "A-5", p. 2. Furthermore, Rodale also raised objections because "the Sachs firm wasted many unnecessary hours to: (1) oppose Ward and Rodale's plans; (2) create improper impediments to the receipt by Ward and Rodale of due diligence information necessary for their competing plans of reorganization; and (3) research and respond to 'confidentiality' and 'economic espionage' issues because such work was a thinly veiled attempt to frustrate Ward and Rodale in their due diligence efforts." "A-6", p. 1-2.

The Bankruptcy Court questioned the necessity of some of the duplicated services performed by the Sachs firm and stated:

> ". . . And that was after all the disputes because I had made it clear many, many times what was appropriate and what was not. And I found myself repeating myself because the same issue kept coming before the court more than once. And although I have said it originally, it wasn't followed and there were continuous disputes about it. I'm not going to — I'm not going to pay for that. I'm not going to allow money for all that duplicate disputes. . ."

"A-2" p.62, lines 4-11.

Therefore, based upon its review and recollection of what took place in this case, in conjunction with all arguments heard at the hearing, the Court determined that some of the time spent by the Appellant in this case was unnecessary and held that > ". . . there was a waste of legal time spent by debtor's counsel in regard to production of documents, confidentiality issues, economic espionage issues, and there was additional delaying tactics and an effort, probably on behalf of debtor's principals, to impede the efforts of Ward in their quest for equal access to the information so that they could prepare opposing plan."

"A-2", p. 128, lines 5-11. Therefore, the Bankruptcy Court reduced the Sachs firm's fee request because it determined that a portion of the services rendered by the Sachs firm were unnecessary.

b. The Bankruptcy Court determined that based on the nature, extent, and value of the services, the amount charged by the Sachs firm was unreasonable

The Court found that the amount charged by the Appellant was unreasonable based on the nature, extent, and value of the services rendered in this case. In order for a Bankruptcy Court to review the reasonableness of a fee application, it must look to "the explanation of each task in relation to the case, and the time expended and amount charged for performing the task, allow us to assess the reasonableness of the attorney's fees in light of the nature, extent, and value of the work." In re S.T.N. Enterprises, Inc., 70 B.R. at 832. In the present case, the Sachs firm argued that the fees in this case were reasonable because of the successful confirmation of the Ultra plan of reorganization. However, the Sachs firm failed to address the concern raised by the various parties and the Court as to why it expended an unreasonable amount of time on tasks which did not warrant the same. For example, at the time of the interim fee request the UST objected to the request for compensation for numerous intra-office conferences and services rendered by two or more members of the firm who billed $250-$350 per hour. See "UST-A", p. 4. The UST also objected to the unreasonableness of the Appellant's final fee request due to the excessiveness of the Sachs firm's mixed hourly rate in this Chapter 11 matter. See "A-4", p. 6.

When the Court reviewed the issue of reasonableness of the Appellant's fee request, it found that > . . . the debtor's counsel indicates that they incurred $43,000 in time, and $5,000 in disbursements because of, (1) objecting to the landlord's claim and claims of others, obtaining proceeds of a letter of credit from Fleet Bank, reviewing and objecting to the disclosure statement of Rodale, and negotiating the amended plan. It seems to me that this an extreme excess of legal fees for those four major items, even if you look at the time records.

“A-2", p. 129, lines 10-17. Therefore, in light of the foregoing, the Bankruptcy Court found that based on the nature, extent, and value of the services, the amount requested by the Sachs firm was unreasonable.

c. The Bankruptcy Court found a conflict of interest when a substantial amount of time the Appellant spent in impeding the efforts of Ward and Rodale to obtain necessary information, was orchestrated on behalf of the debtor’s principals, officers and shareholders

The Court found a conflict of interest when the Appellant performed services on behalf of the principals of the debtor corporation which was adverse to the interest of the creditors of this estate, and thus the Sachs firm should not be compensated for the same. “Counsel for corporate Chapter 11 debtor in possession owes a fiduciary duty to the corporate entity estate--the client--and represents its interest, not those of the entity’s principals.” In re Wilde Horse Enterprises, Inc., 136 B.R. 830, 840 (Bankr. C.D. Cal. 1991); See also In re Grabill Corp, 113 B.R. 966, 970 (Bankr. N.D. Ill. 1990), citing In re Overmeyer Telecasting Co., 23 B.R. 823, 931 (Bankr. N.D. Ohio 1982), aff’d, 750 F.2d 31 (6th Cir. 1984).

An attorney for the debtor-in-possession owes its complete loyalty to the debtor corporation, and not its principals. In the present case, during the process of filing competing plans, the debtor withheld vital information from Ward and Rodale which deterred them from successfully proposing a plan of reorganization. Rodale objected to the Sachs firm’s fee request and raised the issue of conflict of interest since the unnecessary delay caused in providing essential information of EMS to both Ward and Rodale was orchestrated by the Appellant at the behest of the debtor’s officers and shareholders. See “A-6", p. 2. In addition, Farmingdale objected to the Sachs firm’s fee application and asserted that “a substantial portion of counsel’s time sought to be compensated in the fee application has been spent attempting to frustrate third parties, including Ward Leonard and Rodale, from purchasing the debtor and improperly placing the interest of the debtor's present owners over its creditors." "A-5" p.3. The Sachs firm conceded at the April 25, 1997 hearing that ". . . I didn't have a choice. The debtor said — the debtor said to counsel, 'counsel, these services have to be performed because, if they're not performed, the existing contracts which we have may be terminated for violations.' And we pointed out that to the court." "A-2", p.59, lines 7-12. It is clear that the delay tactics that were used by the debtor and its counsel were solely for the benefit of the principals, officers and shareholders of EMS. It is also evident that the efforts of the Sachs firm had significantly attributed to this unnecessary delay. The Sachs firm, acting on behalf of the principals of the debtor, chose an adversarial and litigious posture during this case. It now expects to be fully rewarded for that choice.

The First Circuit has affirmed a lower court decision regarding denial of fee request by counsel for the debtor in a matter that counsel represented the interests of the principals of the debtor in a manner which was adverse to the creditors of the estate. "A debtor-in-possession's attorney cannot be compensated for representing the interest of the debtor or the debtor's directors, officers and/or shareholders in a manner which is adverse to, or does not benefit, the estate or the creditors." In re DN Associates, 144 B.R. 195, 199 (Bankr. D.Me. 1992), aff'd, 3 F. 3d 512 (1st Cir. 1993), See also, In re Office Products of Am., Inc., 136 B.R. 983, 989 (Bankr. W.D.Tex. 1992). In the case at bar, the Bankruptcy Court determined that there was a conflict of interest.

> . . . And although there was some small basis for some disagreement with the — with the Ward plan; rather than negotiate with them, which might have resulted in a negotiated plan that > would have been — which would have avoided a lot of the acrimony and additional disputed matters, I believe that debtor's principals saw this as a means of another party taking control of their own business. . . In this regard, when counsel to the debtor listens to and even considers and acts with what a principal wants, which may not necessarily benefit the estate and may even create an impression of conflict of interest, raises some doubt as to some of the legal time spent. Counsel to a DIP should seek the best plan and the best return for the — for the debtor and its creditors, not necessarily the best benefit to debtor's principals.

"A-2", p. 128, line 14-p. 129, line 4. In light of the authorities cited above, the Court could have applied the reasoning stated in In re DN Associates and denied the Appellant's fee request. However, the Court awarded the Sachs firm $165,000 for compensation. Therefore, the Court's findings of fact were not erroneous since it held that there was a conflict of interest and a portion of the fee request for services rendered on behalf of the debtor's principals, directors, officers and shareholders which was adverse to the creditors of this estate, must not be compensated by the estate.

In summary, the Bankruptcy Court did not abuse its discretion when it modified the Appellant's fee request. As it has been established above, the Court applied the proper legal standards when it used the lodestar method in conjunction with the additional factors articulated in Johnson v. Georgia Highway Express, Inc.. Furthermore, the Court followed the proper procedures in reviewing fee applications pursuant to Section 330 of the Bankruptcy Code. It conducted a lengthy hearing on April 25, 1997, and offered at least three (3) opportunities to the Sachs firm to present its case. Nevertheless, the Sachs firm failed to offer burden of proof in support of its fee request. At the hearing, the Court found (1) a portion of the services rendered by the Sachs firm was unnecessary, (2) the amount charged by the Sachs firm was unreasonable based on the nature, extent, and value of the services rendered in the case, and (3) there was a conflict of interest when the Sachs firm acted on behalf of the principals which was adverse to the interest of the creditors of the estate. Therefore, the UST respectfully submits to this Court that in light of the foregoing, the Bankruptcy Court did not abuse its discretion when it rendered a decision to award the Sachs firm $165,000 which was $82,000 less than the amount requested.

CONCLUSION

For the reasons set forth above, the United States Trustee for the Eastern District of New York respectfully submits that the final order of the Honorable Dorothy Eisenberg, United States Bankruptcy Judge, dated May 14, 1997, (i) awards appropriate compensation under 11 U.S.C. Section 330 to the Sachs firm, (ii) is based on proper legal theories and standards which are correct and appropriate, (iii) does not deny the Sachs firm due process of law, and (iv) contains clear findings of fact and conclusions of law sufficient to discern the basis of the Court's decision to the extent the same are necessary at all. Accordingly, it is respectfully submitted that the decision of the United States Bankruptcy Court should be upheld in all respects.

NAME, ADDRESS, AND COURT OF BANKRUPTCY JUDGE

The name and address of the Bankruptcy Court that issued the underlying Order is:

Honorable Robert Clive Jones
U.S. Bankruptcy Court for District of Nevada
[*3] 300 Las Vegas Boulevard South
Las Vegas, Nevada 89101

STATEMENT OF JURISDICTION

The subject matter jurisdiction of the bankruptcy court is based on 28 U.S.C. § 157(b)(1), and the jurisdiction of the district court is based on 28 U.S.C. § 158(a)(1). The appeal is taken from a final order of the United States District Court for the District of Nevada, entered on May 19, 1995, affirming the bankruptcy court's final order denying the United States Trustee's motion to have quarterly fees paid as a priority chapter 7 claim. The issue on appeal in the district court arose under 28 U.S.C. § 1930(a)(6), and under sections 726 and 507(a) of title 11 of the United States Code, 11 U.S.C. § 101 et seq. (the "Bankruptcy Code").

This Court has jurisdiction over this appeal under 28 U.S.C. §§ 158(d) and 1291. The notice of appeal to the district court was timely filed on May 12, 1994, and the notice of appeal to this Court was timely filed on July 14, 1995. This appeal is timely pursuant to Rule 4(a) and 6(b) of the Federal Rules of Appellate Procedure.

STATEMENT OF THE ISSUE

Whether, in a bankruptcy case that has been converted from chapter 11 to chapter 7 of the Bankruptcy Code, quarterly fees owed to the United States Trustee should be treated in the same manner as and paid pro rata with chapter 7 administrative expenses.

STATEMENT OF THE STANDARD OF REVIEW

The applicable standard of review on appeal is clearly erroneous as to findings of fact and de novo as to conclusions of law. In re Siriani, 967 F.2d 302 (9th Cir. 1992). Because the instant case presents a question of law, the proper standard of review is de novo.

STATEMENT OF THE CASE AND STATEMENT OF THE FACTS

This appeal is taken from the final order of the United States District Court for the District of Nevada (Hagen, J.), entered on May 19, 1995, affirming the bankruptcy court's order denying the United States Trustee's motion for an order directing that quarterly fees be paid pro rata with chapter 7 administrative expenses. Appellant's Excerpts of Record ("E.R.") at 25, 43. On December 12, 1990, Patrick and Lilia Endy (the "debtors") filed a voluntary petition under chapter 11 of the Bankruptcy Code, seeking reorganization of their debts. E.R. at 31. While the case was pending under chapter 11, the debtors incurred $700 in unpaid quarterly fees pursuant to 28 U.S.C. § 1930(a)(6). E.R. at 4, 10.

The case was converted to the liquidation provisions of chapter 7 of the Bankruptcy Code on November 12, 1991, and Mr. Larry L. Bertsch was appointed the chapter 7 trustee. E.R. at 33-34. On January 13, 1992, the United States Trustee filed a proof of claim for $700 in unpaid quarterly fees. E.R. at 10. The case was closed as having no assets on October 7, 1992, but was subsequently reopened on motion of the chapter 7 trustee when assets were discovered. E.R. at 37. The trustee filed a Final Report on July 7, 1993, proposing to pay court fees and quarterly fees owed to the United States Trustee pro rata with chapter 7 administrative expenses. E.R. at 1-4, 37. After a hearing on September 14, 1993, the trustee submitted to the bankruptcy court an Order Settling Trustee's Final Report and Order For Payment of Dividends. E.R. at 11.

[*4] By memorandum to the United States Trustee dated December 14, 1993, the clerk of the bankruptcy court declined to approve the Order without further direction of the court. E.R. at 15. The memorandum stated that the clerk would hold the orders of distribution pending issuance of a ruling regarding the priority status of quarterly fees owed to the United States Trustee. Id. The memorandum did not appear to question the payment priority of court fees.

On February 16, 1994, the United States Trustee filed a Motion for an Order Directing Payment of United States Trustee Quarterly Fees as a Priority Chapter 7 Claim Pursuant to Section 507(a)(1). E.R. at 16, 18, 37. On April 28, 1994, the bankruptcy court denied the United States Trustee's motion. Specifically, the bankruptcy court denied the United States Trustee's motion to have fees paid as a priority expense with chapter 7 administrative expenses, holding instead that in a case converted from chapter 11 to chapter 7, the quarterly fees should be subordinated to chapter 7 administrative expenses. E.R. at 22, 38.

The United States Trustee filed a notice of appeal to the district court on May 12, 1994, and also filed a Notice of Objection to the Ninth Circuit Bankruptcy Appellate Panel. E.R. at 23, 38, 39. The trustee made no distribution of the funds pending appeal to the district court.

By order entered May 19, 1995, the district court affirmed the decision of the bankruptcy court on alternative grounds. E.R. at 25-26, 43. The district court found that while quarterly fees should not be subordinated to chapter 7 administrative expenses, they should not be given priority over administrative expenses incurred in chapter 11. E.R. at 26. Accordingly, the court held that quarterly fees should be paid pro rata with all administrative expenses, whether incurred in chapter 7 or chapter 11. Id. Although neither the district court nor the bankruptcy court explicitly addressed the payment priority of court fees, the rulings presumably apply to those fees as well.

The United States Trustee and the chapter 7 trustee entered a stipulation that the funds would not be distributed pending the United States Trustee's appeal to this Court. E.R. at 43. The United States Trustee filed a notice of appeal of the district court's decision on July 14, 1995. E.R. at 27, 43.

SUMMARY OF ARGUMENT

Section 507 of the Bankruptcy Code establishes the priority of distribution for various types of claims. Section 507(a)(1) affords first priority of payment to "administrative expenses allowed under section 503(b) of [title 11], and any fees and charges assessed against the estate under chapter 123 of title 28." 11 U.S.C. § 507(a)(1). The various fees that can be assessed under chapter 123 of title 28 include quarterly fees payable to the United States Trustee under section 1930, as well as other types of court fees. See generally 28 U.S.C. §§ 1911-31.

In a distribution under chapter 7, all section 507(a)(1) claims are ordinarily paid first. 11 U.S.C. § 726(a)(1). If there are insufficient funds to pay all 507(a)(1) claims in full, then they are to be paid on a pro rata basis, with one exception: if the case has converted to chapter 7 from another chapter of the Bankruptcy Code, section 726(b) specifies that the administrative expenses incurred in chapter 7 are to be paid ahead of the administrative expenses incurred in any other chapter. 11 U.S.C. § 726(b). Consequently, in the instant situation, where the case has been converted from chapter 11 to chapter 7, the United States Trustee's claim for unpaid quarterly fees, which receives first priority under section 507(a)(1), is entitled to share pro rata with chapter 7 administrative expenses.

[*5] The lower courts incorrectly interpreted the statutes whereby Congress protected the United States Trustee's right to quarterly fees. The bankruptcy court erred in treating quarterly fees as if they were chapter 11 administrative expenses, and subordinating them to the chapter 7 administrative expenses. On appeal, the district court properly recognized the priority given to quarterly fees to participate pro rata with chapter 7 administrative expenses, but it erred in diluting that priority by expanding the class of ratable expenses to include, in addition to chapter 7 administrative expenses, all chapter 11 administrative expenses.

In summary, neither the bankruptcy court's nor the district court's decision is supported by the statutes, and both undermine congressional intent to make the United States Trustee program self-sustaining through payment of title 28 fees. Section 726(b) does not imply that chapter 7 administrative expenses are paid ahead of fees incurred under chapter 123 of title 28 (i.e., quarterly fees and court fees). The plain meaning of the relevant statutes and case law mandates payment of United States Trustee fees pro rata with chapter 7 administrative expenses.

ARGUMENT

I. TITLE 28 REQUIRES PAYMENT OF COURT FEES AND UNITED STATES TRUSTEE QUARTERLY FEES

By way of background, the Bankruptcy Judges, United States Trustees, and Family Farmer Bankruptcy Act of 1986, Pub. L. No. 99-554, 100 Stat. 3088, (the "1986 Act") established a nationwide system of United States Trustees to supervise the administration of bankruptcy cases. Congress established a self- funding structure based upon its conclusion that users of the bankruptcy system ought to pay for it. H.R. Rep. No. 764, 99th Cong., 2d Sess. 22 reprinted in 1986 U.S.C.C.A.N. 5227, 5234. See also United States Trustee v. Prines (In re Prines), 867 F.2d 478, 480 (8th Cir. 1989); United States Trustee v. Hirsch (In re Ehrman), 184 B.R. 362, 365

(D. Ariz. 1995). The United States Trustee Program is designed to be supported by a percentage of the filing fee paid to the bankruptcy court by all debtors under chapters 7, 11, 12, and 13 of the Bankruptcy Code, and by a quarterly fee payable in all chapter 11 cases to the United States Trustee. See 28 U.S.C. § 1930(a). This system of self-funding is implemented through chapter 123 of title 28, which governs the judiciary and judicial procedure.

The amount owed for quarterly fees is based on the level of disbursements in the chapter 11 case. See 28 U.S.C. § 1930(a)(6). [FN1] The amount of the fees and the obligation to pay them arise by operation of law, and no judicial act is required to fix the amount due or to require its payment. II. SECTIONS 507(a)(1) AND 726(b) OF THE BANKRUPTCY CODE REQUIRE THAT QUARTERLY FEES BE PAID PRO RATA WITH CHAPTER 7 ADMINISTRATIVE EXPENSES IN A CASE THAT HAS CONVERTED FROM CHAPTER 11

[*6] Section 726 of the Bankruptcy Code governs the distribution of property of the estate in all chapter 7 cases. Specifically, section 726(a) provides in pertinent part:

> (a) ... property of the estate shall be distributed --
> (1) first, in payment of claims of the kind specified in, and in the order specified in, section 507 of this title....11 U.S.C. § 726(a).

Section 507 of the Bankruptcy Code, referenced in section 726(a), establishes the priority of distribution for various types of claims. Section 507(a) provides:

> (a) The following expenses and claims have priority in the following order:
> (1) First, administrative expenses allowed under section 503(b) of this title, and any fees and charges assessed against the estate under chapter 123 of title 28.

11 U.S.C. § 507(a). [FN3]

As is discussed supra, part I, quarterly fees are owed to the United States Trustee under 28 U.S.C. § 1930(a)(6), which is found in chapter 123 of title 28. Therefore, quarterly fees are "fees" within the meaning of section 507(a)(1), and, along with court fees, have equal priority with administrative expenses incurred under the Bankruptcy Code.

Section 726(b) of the Bankruptcy Code governs the payment of claims when there are insufficient funds to pay all claims in full. Section 726(b) provides:

> Payment on claims of a kind specified in paragraph (1) ... of section 507(a) of this title ... shall be made pro rata among claims of the kind specified in each such particular paragraph, except that in a case that has been converted to this chapter ... a claim allowed under section 503(b) of this title incurred under [chapter 7] after such conversion has priority over a claim allowed under section 503(b) of this title incurred under any other chapter of this title...

11 U.S.C. § 726(b) (emphasis added).

Section 726(b) initially provides that claims within a class, such as administrative expenses incurred under the Bankruptcy Code and title 28 fees, are to be paid pro rata. If the case has been converted to chapter 7 from another chapter, however, section 726(b) provides that the administrative expenses incurred in chapter 7 are to be paid ahead of administrative expenses incurred in the other chapters.

Because quarterly fees are not administrative expenses, but are fees incurred under title 28, section 726(b) does not alter their first priority status as expressly granted by section 507(a)(1). Accordingly, when read together, sections 726(b) and 507(a)(1) make clear that quarterly fees should be paid pro rata with chapter 7 administrative expenses. The only circuit court to have decided this issue has so held. Huisinga v. Carter (In re Juhl Enters., Inc.), 921 F.2d 800 (8th Cir. 1990). In Juhl, the Eighth Circuit stated:

> [s]ection 726(a) places the Trustee's fee and the § 503(b) administrative expenses on the same footing. But § 726(b) removes the Chapter 11 § 503(b) expenses from that lofty status. It does not mention the Trustee's quarterly fees. The only possible result of this omission is that the Trustee's quarterly fee payments have the same priority as the Chapter 7 administrative expenses.

[*7] Juhl, 921 F.2d at 803 (emphasis added).

In a recent decision by the District Court for the District of Arizona, the court emphasized that the language of section 507(a) makes clear that charges and fees incurred under title 28 are distinct from administrative expenses incurred under the Bankruptcy Code. In re Ehrman, 184 B.R. at 364, 366 (reversing bankruptcy court's ruling that quarterly fees do not get paid pro rata with chapter 7 administrative expenses). Rejecting the minority view that quarterly fees are subordinated to chapter 7 administrative expenses and are paid pro rata with chapter 11 administrative expenses, the Ehrman court held that section 726 operates to subordinate only administrative claims incurred in chapters other than chapter 7. Id. at 365-66. Therefore, section 726 leaves unaffected quarterly fees incurred under title 28. In re Ehrman, 184 B.R. at 365-66. See also In re Lochmiller Indus., Inc., 178 B.R. 241, 250 (Bankr. S.D. Cal. 1995) ("[t]he only dictate in the Code which applies to the fees of the U.S. Trustee is section 507(a)(1) which affords them first priority").

All the courts to have addressed this issue except one have agreed that quarterly fees should be paid pro rata with chapter 7 administrative expenses after a case has converted from chapter 11 to chapter 7. See Ross v. Kanaga (In re Darmstadt Corp.), 164 B.R. 465, 470-71 (D. Del. 1994); In re Metro Transp. and Health Referral, Inc., 165 B.R. 832, 834 (Bankr. N.D. Ohio 1994); In re Bancroft Laundry Ctr., Inc., 164 B.R. 586, 588 (Bankr. N.D. Ohio 1994); In re Seacoast Carpet & Tile of Naples, Inc., 151 B.R. 962, 963 (Bankr. M.D. Fla. 1993); In re K & M Printing & Lithographing, Inc., 135 B.R. 404, 407 (Bankr. D. Or. 1992); In re AM-PM Photo Camera Fashions, Inc., 116 B.R. 222, 222 (Bankr. D. Idaho 1990). But see Reitmeyer v. Wetmore (In re Wetmore), 117 B.R. 201, 201-02 (Bankr. W.D. Pa. 1990) (holding that quarterly fees and filing fees are administrative expenses under section 507(a)(1), and are therefore subordinated to chapter 7 administrative expenses).

Here, the district court properly acknowledged the majority line of cases which correctly holds that section 726 does not subordinate quarterly fees to chapter 7 administrative expenses. [FN4] The court further stated, however, that the majority view grants quarterly fees "an unwarranted priority over § 503(b) administrative expenses incurred prior to conversion." United States Trustee v. Endy (In re Endy), 181 B.R. 526, 529 (D. Nev. 1995). The district court consequently adopted the novel approach that quarterly fees should share pro rata with all section 503(b) administrative expenses, whether incurred in chapter 7 or chapter 11. Id. at 529. [FN5]

In concluding that quarterly fees should not be given an "unwarranted priority," the district court failed to afford quarterly fees the "priority" to which they are indisputably entitled. Section 507(a)(1) states unequivocally that charges assessed under chapter 123 of title 28 (i.e., quarterly fees and court fees) are to be treated in the same manner as administrative expenses allowed under section 503. Section 726(b) provides only that administrative expenses incurred in chapter 7 are to be paid ahead of administrative expenses incurred in other chapters of the Bankruptcy Code. It does not otherwise affect or purport to affect the first payment priority of quarterly fees and other chapter 123, title 28 charges.

[*8] The first priority status of quarterly fees remains intact regardless of whether a conversion has occurred. The statutes require that quarterly fees be paid pro rata with allowed administrative expenses (i.e., those that have not been subordinated by another provision of the Bankruptcy Code). In light of the clear statutory language, the district court's assertion that quarterly fees not be given an "unwarranted priority" lacks foundation. See In re Lochmiller, 178 B.R. at 250 (because section 507(a)(1) affords quarterly fees first priority, "[t]he question ... is not whether the fees of the U.S. Trustee should be elevated, but rather whether they should be subordinated").

In addition, a closer examination of the court's decision suggests that it is more far-reaching than it first appears. Although the court did not directly address the payment priority of court fees, its analysis would apply to all fees and expenses assessed under chapter 123 of title 28. This means that all court fees, whether incurred in chapter 11 or chapter 7, would be denied pro rata treatment with chapter 7 administrative expenses in a converted case.

The district court decision simply does not comport with congressional intent as set forth in the statutes. In examining statutory language, "[a] fundamental canon of statutory construction is that ... words will be interpreted as taking their ordinary ... common meaning." Perrin v. United States, 444 U.S. 37, 42 (1979). In examining the plain meaning of the statutes, the relevant provisions must be read as a whole. Carpenters Health and Welfare Trust Funds For California v. Robertson (In re Rufener Constr., Inc.), 53 F.3d 1064, 1067 (9th Cir. 1995). Here, section 726(b) states merely that chapter 7 administrative claims have priority over administrative expenses incurred under another chapter of the Bankruptcy Code. The district court's alternative scheme of distribution interferes with the plain meaning of the statutes when read as a whole. As the district court in Ehrman observed, the court's ruling in Endy reads into section 726 an additional step for determining the priority of payment. In re Ehrman, 184 B.R. at 366 (concluding that the result of the Endy decision is to "alter the plain meaning of § 507(a)"). Accordingly, in examining the applicable statutes, it is apparent that the district court's ruling constitutes a far-reach from the plain statutory language, and should be reversed.

III. THE DISTRICT COURT'S DECISION RESULTS IN QUARTERLY FEES NOT BEING PAID PRO RATA WITH CLAIMS WITHIN THE SAME CLASS, AND IN EFFECT SUBORDINATES QUARTERLY FEES TO CHAPTER 7 ADMINISTRATIVE EXPENSES

As discussed, section 726(b) provides the statutory basis for requiring claims within a class to be paid pro rata if there are insufficient funds to pay all claims in full. This principle is fundamental to the usual scheme of distribution contemplated in a chapter 7 case. See, e.g., Begier v. Internal Revenue Service, 496 U.S. 53, 58 (1990) ("creditors of equal priority should receive pro rata shares of the debtor's property"); In re Swann, 149 B.R. 137, 145 (Bankr. D.S.D. 1993) ("[a] fundamental policy of the Bankruptcy Code is equality of distribution"); Boyd v. Dock's Corner Assoc. (In re Great Northern Forest Prods., Inc.), 135 B.R. 46, 66 (Bankr. W.D. Mich.

1991) ("all claimants whose claims are entitled to the same class of distribution shall be reimbursed pro-rata").

[*9] In its simplest terms, pro rata means that each claimant within a class must have an equal percentage of his or her claim paid. The error of the district court's decision is manifested by the fact that it disrupts the system of pro rata distribution and results in quarterly fees being paid a smaller percentage of their claim than chapter 7 administrative claimants.

Under the district court's analysis, discussed supra note 5, the United States Trustee would be paid $2,000 of its $5,000 claim for quarterly fees, amounting to 40% of its claim, while chapter 7 administrative claimants would receive $4,000 of their $5,000 claims -- or 80% of their claims. See In re Endy, 181 B.R. at 529 n.3. Insofar as quarterly fees are paid a smaller percentage of their claim than are chapter 7 administrative claims, they are placed in a less favorable position for the distribution of funds, and for all practical purposes are subordinated. Although the district court correctly agreed that quarterly fees should not be subordinated to chapter 7 administrative expenses, the practical effect of the court's analysis accomplishes just that -- it subordinates the United States Trustee's claim to the chapter 7 administrative expenses.

While the district court's analysis results in a greater distribution for quarterly fees than does the "minority view," which would pay all chapter 7 expenses prior to paying any quarterly fees and chapter 11 expenses, the court's scheme nonetheless presents an impermissible statutory interpretation. See In re Lochmiller, 178 B.R. at 250 (concluding that there exists no statutory authority to support the subordination of quarterly fees after a case has converted from chapter 11 to chapter 7). The district court diluted the priority afforded to quarterly fees by expanding the class of administrative expenses that get paid pro rata. The net effect of the court's analysis scheme of distribution envisioned by the Bankruptcy Code in a case converted from chapter 11 to chapter 7, this Court should reverse the ruling below.

IV. THE DISTRICT COURT'S HOLDING IS CONTRARY TO THE SELF-FUNDING NATURE OF THE UNITED STATES TRUSTEE PROGRAM

In establishing a self-funded United States Trustee Program, Congress also enacted various statutory means to achieve that goal. For example, the 1986 Act amended section 1112(b) of the Bankruptcy Code to provide that "nonpayment of any fees or charges required under chapter 123 of title 28" would be an additional ground for converting or dismissing a chapter 11 case. Congress clearly envisioned that nonpayment of these fees in chapter 11 could result in the case being converted to chapter 7. Consequently, it would be reasonable to assume that had it intended to remove the first priority afforded them by section 507(a), it could have done so through section 726(b). Notably, Congress made no decision to alter the current meaning of these provisions in the Bankruptcy Reform Act of 1994. In re Ehrman, 184 B.R. at 366.

[*10] Congress also granted special treatment to quarterly fees in chapter 11 plans. The 1986 Act amended section 1129(a) of the Bankruptcy Code to include, as a prerequisite for confirmation, that "[a]ll fees payable under section 1930 of title 28, as determined by the court at the hearing on confirmation of the plan, have been paid or the plan provides for the payment of all such fees on the effective date of the plan." 11 U.S.C. § 1129(a)(12). Therefore, Congress recognized the payment priority of quarterly fees even in chapter 11 cases.

Here, the debtors benefitted from the protections afforded by chapter 11 for almost one year. Over this time period, the debtor incurred $700 in quarterly fees, which they did not pay. Now that the case has converted to chapter 7, the United States Trustee is entitled to exercise her first priority right in funds of the estate to ensure the financial stability of the United States Trustee Program. There is no doubt that Congress intended this result, and accordingly, the statutory provisions give effect to this purpose. As the Eighth Circuit has stated, "[t]he primary objective of statutory construction is to determine legislative intent." In re Prines, 867 F.2d at 484. Congress' intent is clearly enunciated by the plain meaning of the statutes relevant in this case. "[W]here, as here, the statute's language is plain, 'the sole function of the courts is to enforce it according to its terms.' " United States v. Ron Pair Enters., Inc., 489 U.S. 235, 241 (1989) (citation omitted).

CONCLUSION

For the foregoing reasons, the United States Trustee respectfully requests this Court to reverse the district court order entered May 19, 1995, affirming the bankruptcy court's order denying the United States Trustee's motion to have quarterly fees be paid pro rata with chapter 7 administrative expenses.

FOOTNOTES

FN1. When cases are commenced under chapter 11, the United States Trustee Program is entitled to receive a fee each quarter until a plan is confirmed or the case is converted or dismissed, whichever occurs first. 28 U.S.C. § 1930(a)(6).

FN2. Cf. Perroton v. Gray (In re Perroton), 958 F.2d 889, 893-94, 896 (9th Cir. 1992) (holding that because a bankruptcy court is not a "court of the United States," it lacks authority under 28 U.S.C. § 1915(a) to waive payment of statutorily required filing fees).

FN3. "Administrative expenses" are distinct from "fees and charges" incurred under chapter 123 of title 28. The use of the word "and" in the statute creates two independent categories of first priority claims: one for title 11 "administrative expenses" and the other for title 28 "fees and charges." Huisinga v. Carter (In re Juhl Enters., Inc.), 921 F.2d 800, 803 (8th Cir. 1990). This distinction is supported by the language of section 503(b), which lists allowable title 11 administrative expenses, and makes no mention of court fees or quarterly fees. Id.

FN4. In this respect, the district court disagreed with the bankruptcy court's conclusion. In re Endy, 166 B.R. 438, 439 (Bankr. D. Nev. 1994).

FN5. Footnote 3 of the district court opinion provides a numerical illustration of its scheme of distribution, and compares it with both the majority and minority views. See In re Endy, 181 B.R. at 529 n.3. Under the district court's method, if $6,000 were available for distribution, and if chapter 7 and chapter 11 administrative claims each totalled $5,000, and quarterly fees totalled $5,000, then the pro rata share for quarterly fees would be 1/3 of $6,000, or $2,000. Of the remaining $4,000 available for distribution, the chapter 7 administrative claims would be entitled to $4,000, leaving nothing for chapter 11 administrative claims. Although the district court's interpretation results in a greater distribution for quarterly fees than does the minority view, it results in a smaller distribution than the majority view.

STATEMENT OF JURISDICTION

The United States Bankruptcy Court for the Eastern District of New York had jurisdiction over the English Sheppard Realty Corp. (“ESR”) chapter 11 bankruptcy case under 28 U.S.C. 157(a) and (b) and 1334(a). MA 1 - 22; 919 – 939; 1036 – 1041; AUS Ex. 22.[1] On June 19, 2006 (“June 19, 2006 Order”), the bankruptcy court denied the fee application of Phillip D. Miller, Esq. (“Miller”) and directed him to disgorge $298,000 that he had taken from an estate escrow account. AUS Ex. 22.

[1] Miller did not comply with Second Cir. R. App. P. 6(b)(i) by re-designating the record and re-stating the issues on appeal from the district court. On September 26, 2008, Miller filed with the Court a three volume, 1,552 page “joint” appendix under Second Cir. R. App. P. 30, consisting of selected portions of the record below, as well as extraneous documents which were neither entered on the bankruptcy court docket nor considered by the lower courts. Miller’s appendix omitted his March 25, 2003 fee application (Docket #77) and the transcript of the May 16, 2006 bankruptcy court hearing (Docket #116), which set forth the findings of fact and conclusions of law memorialized in the June 19, 2006 Order. The United States Trustee did not contribute to Miller’s appendix under Second Cir. R. App. P. 30(b)(1). On October 6 and 27, 2008, Miller supplemented his joint appendix with special appendices under Second Cir. R. App. P. 32(d). The bankruptcy court did not consider any of these documents in connection with the June 19, 2006 Order, and none of them constitutes a “rule of law, including any constitutional provision, treaty, statute, ordinance . . . .” under Second Cir. R. App. P. 32(d). Inasmuch as “the entire record is available to the [C]ourt . . .” under Fed. R. App. P. 30(b)(1), the United States Trustee refers to the record by citing to Miller’s appendix as “MA __” and to the United States Trustee’s district court appendix, which consists of 24 tabbed exhibits, as “AUS Ex. __.”

On June 29, 2006, Miller timely appealed the June 19, 2006 Order to the United States District Court for the Eastern District of New York. MA 22; 1035; 1026 - 1029. The district court had jurisdiction under 28 U.S.C. 158(a)(1). MA 1097 – 1106.

On September 25, 2007, the district court affirmed the June 19, 2006 Order in all respects. MA 1097 – 1106. Miller timely appealed the district court's order to this Court on November 26, 2007. MA 1539 - 1541. This Court has jurisdiction over this appeal under 28 U.S.C. 158(d)(1).

STANDARD OF REVIEW

On appeal of an intermediate order affirming a bankruptcy court decision, this Court reviews "the bankruptcy court decision independently, accepting its factual findings, unless clearly erroneous but reviewing its conclusions of law de novo . . . ." Casse v. Key Bank, N.A. (In re Casse), 198 F.3d 327, 332 (2d Cir. 1999). It reviews orders denying and disgorging attorneys' fees for abuse of discretion. In the Matter of Arlan's Dept. Stores, Inc., 615 F.2d 925 (2d Cir. 1979). "An abuse of discretion arises where (1) the bankruptcy judge fails to apply the proper legal standard or follows improper procedures in determining the fee award, or (2) bases an award on findings of fact that are clearly erroneous . . . ." In re JLM, Inc., 290 B.R. 19, 23 (B.A.P. 2d Cir. 1997). (citations omitted).

STATEMENT OF THE ISSUE PRESENTED FOR REVIEW

In order to receive compensation from the bankruptcy estate, an attorney working as counsel for a chapter 11 debtor must meet two tests. First, he must be employed under 11 U.S.C. 327(a). Second, the bankruptcy court must award him fees under 11 U.S.C. 330(a). The bankruptcy court never entered an order under section 327(a) approving Miller's employment as ESR's counsel. It also never entered a fee order. The court directed Miller to hold sale proceeds of estate property in an escrow account. Miller instead converted the funds, which he had commingled with other clients' funds in a common trust account, and used them to pay himself and for other purposes. Did the bankruptcy court abuse its in discretion directing Miller to disgorge the fees he paid himself and denying his fee request?

STATEMENT OF THE CASE

Miller filed a chapter 11 bankruptcy case on behalf of ESR in January, 1999 so that it might reorganize its business. MA 30 – 31. The bankruptcy court never approved Miller's employment as ESR's general bankruptcy counsel under 11 U.S.C. 327(a). MA 2 – 3; 40 – 45; 56. AUS Ex. 6 at 3 – 4. It also never awarded him fees under 11 U.S.C. 330(a)(1)(A). MA 1277; AUS Ex. 9; 13; 19; 21.

On January 26, 2000, the bankruptcy court authorized ESR to sell its sole asset, an apartment building, and it directed Miller to deposit the net sale proceeds, which totaled $281,811.63, into an escrow account pending further court order. MA 108 – 115. Miller deposited the net sale proceeds into a commingled IOLA account. He then violated the escrow order by converting the funds to engage in unauthorized transactions, including paying himself fees.

The United States Trustee moved the bankruptcy court for an order requiring Miller to disgorge all fees. AUS Ex. 6; 7; 11; 12; 14; 18; 20. The bankruptcy court entered the June 19, 2006 Order, which direct Miller to disgorge $298,000. It also denied his request for a fee award. MA 22; 919 – 939; 1036 – 1041; AUS Ex. 22.

On June 29, 2006, Miller appealed the bankruptcy court's June 19, 2006 Order. MA22; 1035. Finding no abuse of discretion, the district court affirmed on September 25, 2007. MA 28 – 29; 1097 – 1106. This appeal followed. MA 29; 1539.

STATEMENT OF THE FACTS

A. Statutory Framework

Upon commencement of a chapter 11 case, all of the debtor's property becomes property of the bankruptcy estate. 11 U.S.C. 541(a). Under the Bankruptcy Code, all third parties - including the debtor's pre-petition counsel - must turn over all property of the estate to the debtor. 11 U.S.C. 542(a).

The Bankruptcy Code provides a comprehensive and exclusive scheme governing the retention, compensation and payment of bankruptcy professionals, such as attorneys, in chapter 11 and 7 cases. It grants bankruptcy courts significant discretion in approving professional employment and compensation in order to protect estate assets and to promote the integrity of the bankruptcy system.

Section 327(a) authorizes a chapter 11 debtor to hire attorneys to assist it in fulfilling its responsibilities "with the court's approval . . . ." 11 U.S.C. 327(a). In order to be employed under 11 U.S.C. 327(a), a proposed attorney must demonstrate that he is disinterested and that he neither has nor represents an interest adverse to estate.

Section 330(a) authorizes a bankruptcy court to pay a debtor's attorney "reasonable" compensation for his "actual and necessary services." 11 U.S.C. 330(a)(1)(A). The court may authorize reimbursement of the attorney's "actual" expenses if they are "necessary." 11 U.S.C. 330(a)(1)(B).

A debtor’s attorney bears the burden of demonstrating his entitlement to fees and expenses under 11 U.S.C. 330(a). If an attorney fails to meet his burden of proof under 11 U.S.C. 330(a), the bankruptcy court, with or without an objection from a party in interest, may award compensation “less than the amount of compensation that is requested . . . .” 11 U.S.C. 330(a)(2). Section 330(a)(4) prohibits the bankruptcy court from awarding compensation for “unnecessary duplication of services . . . or . . . services that were not . . . reasonably likely to benefit the debtor’s estate . . . or . . . necessary to the administration of the estate . . . .” 11 U.S.C. 330(a)(4). Section 331 authorizes bankruptcy professionals to seek interim compensation on the same basis as under section 330(a).

In order to receive compensation under 11 U.S.C. 330(a), a debtor’s attorney must meet two tests. First he must be employed under 11 U.S.C. 327(a). Second, regardless of the source of compensation, the bankruptcy court must grant a fee award. Estate professionals are entitled to first priority payment under 11 U.S.C. 503(a) and 507(a)(1) ahead of general unsecured creditors.

United States Trustees are officials of the Department of Justice appointed by the Attorney General to supervise the administration of bankruptcy cases and trustees. See 28 U.S.C. 581-589 (specifying the powers and duties of United States Trustees).[2] Congress has expressly authorized United States Trustees to comment upon and object to fee applications filed by bankruptcy professionals. 28 U.S.C. 586(a)(3)(A); 11 U.S.C. 307 and 330(a)(2). The United States Trustees have issued guidelines regarding bankruptcy professional fee applications in chapter 11 and 7 cases. 28 C.F.R. Pt. 58, App. A (1996).

B. Factual Background.

Miller filed a voluntary chapter 11 petition on behalf of ESR on January 11, 1999, commencing a case under the debt reorganization provisions of chapter 11 of the Bankruptcy Code, 11 U.S.C. 1101, et seq.[3] MA 30 - 31. Dr. Josephine English signed the petition in her capacity as president and 100% owner of ESR. MA 31 – 32. In its schedules and statement of financial affairs, ESR stated that it owned as its sole asset a 27 unit apartment building located at 1325 Union Street, Brooklyn, NY ("1235 Union Street").

Miller submitted a draft ex parte order and his proposed employment application as debtor's counsel under E.D.N.Y. L. Bankr. R. 2014-1(c) to the bankruptcy court clerk on March 22, 1999.[4] The rule required professionals seeking ex parte employment to send a "proposed order and supporting documentation . . . to the United States Trustee for review prior to filing with the Clerk . . . ." Add. at 4.

The clerk forwarded Miller's order and application to the United States Trustee for review on or about March 25, 1999. MA 40 – 45; 56; AUS Ex. 6 at 3 - 4. The United States Trustee did not endorse Miller's proposed ex parte order. Id. Miller did not thereafter file the proposed application with the clerk or request a hearing on his employment application. MA 2 – 3. The bankruptcy court never entered an order on the docket approving his employment. Id.

On January 26, 2000, the bankruptcy court entered an order ("Escrow Order") authorizing ESR to sell 1325 Union Street for $670,000. MA 108 – 115. The Escrow Order required the Debtor to pay the first lien mortgagee $394,617.21 at closing, "plus $85.32 for each day after January 18, 2000, subject to confirmation . . . ." MA 112. It explicitly directed Miller to escrow the sale proceeds, net of the payment to the mortgagee, ("Net Sale Proceeds"), pending further court order. The Escrow Order stated that "[t]he remaining portion of the sale proceeds shall be paid to the Debtor by payment to Debtor's counsel to be held in escrow pending confirmation of Debtor's Chapter 11 Plan of Reorganization . . . and distribution pursuant to Court Order . . . ." Id. (emphasis added). Miller deposited Net Sale Proceeds totaling $281,811.63 into his commingled IOLA account at Chase Bank. He did not establish a segregated escrow account for ESR's benefit. MA 649; 1435.

The bankruptcy court entered an order under 11 U.S.C. 327(a) dated May 1, 2001 appointing Windels Marx Lane & Mittendorf, ("Windels") as ESR's counsel. MA 29 – 31. On July 20, 2001, ESR, through Windels, filed a motion ("Turnover Motion") to compel Miller to account for and to turn over the Net Sale Proceeds. MA173–182. The Turnover Motion also sought to compel Miller to file a fee application for his work during ESR's chapter 11 case. Id. The bankruptcy court granted the Turnover Motion on October 9, 2001. MA 184 - 186.

On December 7, 2001, Miller provided an accounting to Windels, which he supplemented on January 31, 2002 ("Miller Accounting"). MA 1117; AUS Ex. 13, A-13. That same day, Miller gave Windels a check drawn on his commingled IOLA account for $35,447.42. MA 1117. This amount was $246,364.21 less than the Net Sale Proceeds that he received from the buyer of 1325 Union Street.[5] Id. Miller filed his fee application ("Fee Application") on March 25, 2003. MA 14.

On October 24, 2001, the United States Trustee filed a motion ("Disgorgement Motion") to compel Miller to disgorge all fees for ESR legal work that he had received from the Debtor, Dr. English and any entity related to the Debtor. AUS Ex. 6. The United States Trustee supplemented the Disgorgement Motion on December 9, 2003.[6] AUS Ex. 6; 7; 12.

In his responsive pleadings, Miller admitted that the bankruptcy court had not authorized his employment under 11 U.S.C. 327(a) or awarded him fees under 11 U.S.C. 330(a). He further admitted that he had almost entirely dissipated the Net Sale Proceeds by engaging in unauthorized transactions on behalf of ESR,

[5] Miller attached the Miller Accounting to a February 13, 2004 memorandum supporting his March 25, 2003 fee application. AUS Ex. 13; 23 at 2. On November 15, 2001, the court authorized ESR to retain the accounting firm of Gruber & Palumberi, P.C. ("Gruber") in order to "determine the disposition of the Debtor's assets . . . [and] what, if any, sale proceeds are available or have been dissipated by Miller . . . ." MA 8; 336 – 337; 354. Gruber prepared a review dated May 2, 2002 ("Gruber Review") of the Miller Accounting. ERS attached the Gruber Review to its May 5, 2004 response to Miller's objection to the Disgorgement Motion. MA 18; AUS 31 – 33.

[6] ESR joined the Disgorgement motion and objected to Miller's Fee Application on December 9, 2003 (collectively "ESR Objection"). It supplemented the ESR Objection on February 17, 2004 and May 5, 2004 (attaching the Gruber Review). AUS Ex. 8; 11; 14; 18.

settling litigation on behalf of non-debtors and paying himself fees. AUS Ex. 9; 13; 19; 21. See Amended Brief at 13; MA 1117.

Judge Duberstein conducted a hearing on the Disgorgement Motion, the ESR Objection and Miller's Fee Application on March 11, 2004. MA 18; 919 – 939. The court confirmed that it had not entered an order authorizing Miller's employment under section 327(a). MA 922. It denied Miller's Fee Application and ordered him to disgorge. MA 929. Judge Duberstein did not enter an order finalizing the amount to be disgorged before he died, however. The ESR case was reassigned to Judge Eisenberg on December 29, 2005. MA 20.

Judge Eisenberg conducted a second hearing on the Disgorgement Motion, the ESR Objection and Miller's Fee Application on May 16, 2006. AUS Ex. 22. The Miller Accounting and the Gruber Review, which the court reviewed at the hearing, showed that Miller had written checks to himself and others from his commingled IOLA account totaling $298,124.36. AUS Ex. 13, A-13; 18. They demonstrated that, of this amount, Miller had written checks to himself totaling $53,500 for "attorneys' fees." Id. They also showed that Miller had written checks to himself for an additional $85,174.78 without explanation, either in the form of book entries or notations on the checks themselves. Id.

In response to the court's questions, Miller failed to explain entries in the Miller Accounting showing that ESR had used $220,000 of the Net Sale Proceeds to purchase stock in a non-debtor company. He also failed to explain why he had made certain disbursements both to himself and to Dr. English. AUS Ex. 22 at 57; 61 - 62; 69 – 70.

Miller conceded that the bankruptcy court had issued no orders authorizing him to disburse the Net Sales Proceeds for any purpose, including paying himself fees. Id. at 10; 17 – 19; 24 – 26; 33 – 36; 49 -51; 61; 63; 68. He offered no evidence demonstrating that his services were necessary and benefited the ESR estate. Id.

In granting the Disgorgement Motion and denying the Miller Fee Application, the court found that Miller "misinterpreted, at the very least, the Court order to put the money into a separate account in the name of the debtor, and not doing so is a violation of a number of things, including probably something that the Bar Association might want to look at . . . .)." AUS Ex. 22 at 56. The court determined that while Miller might have been representing Dr. English, he had not been retained to represent ESR (Id. at 74), that Miller's expenditures from the commingled IOLA account "did not inure to the benefit of this debtor's estate . . ." (Id. at 70) and that the Miller Accounting was "flawed by indicating payments from his general account to various parties not necessarily on behalf of this debtor's estate . . . ." Id. at 74 – 75. It found that Miller had violated the Escrow Order by failing to establish an escrow account and to separate the Net Sale Proceeds from other clients' funds. Id. at 56 – 57; 74.

The court concluded that "[i]t is clear that a lot of things were done outside of the Bankruptcy Court and without authorization by the Bankruptcy Court, and Mr. Miller may have some claim against Ms. English . . . but certainly not in this case . . . and the money that was to be held on behalf of this debtor should come back to this estate . . . ." Id. at 76.

The June 19, 2006 Order, which memorialized the court's rulings at the May 16, 2006 hearing, required Miller to "disgorge . . . the sum of $298,000.00 representing funds from the sale of the Debtor's real property not previously turned over by Phillip D. Miller, Esq. . . . ." ("June 19, 2006 Order"). AUS 23. This amount apparently represented funds that Miller had disbursed in violation of the Escrow Order, including fees for ESR work that he had paid to himself without prior court authorization under 11 U.S.C. 330(a). Id.

Miller appealed the June 19, 2006 Order on June 29, 2006. MA 1035; 1026 - 1029. He did not request a stay pending appeal. MA 22 – 23. Finding no reversible error, the district court affirmed the order on September 25, 2007. MA 1097 – 1106.

Miller appealed the district court's affirmance on November 26, 2007. MA 29; 1539.

SUMMARY OF ARGUMENT

The bankruptcy court did not abuse its discretion in denying Miller's Fee Application and requiring him to disgorge funds that he had 1) converted from the estate and 2) used to pay himself, because the bankruptcy court had never entered an order employing Miller as ESR's attorney under 11 U.S.C. 327(a). Even assuming for sake of argument that the bankruptcy court had authorized Miller's employment, disgorgement was nevertheless appropriate on the alternate ground that Miller converted estate funds and did not obtain a fee award under 11 U.S.C. 330(a). Affirmance is also appropriate, because Miller failed to meet its burden of proving that his services to ESR were "necessary" and that his fees were "reasonable" under 11 U.S.C. 330(a).

None of Miller's four principal arguments supporting reversal has merit. Miller's argument that 11 U.S.C. 363(b)(1) authorized his converting the Net Sale Proceeds fails, because that section does not pertain to professional compensation in bankruptcy cases. Sections 330(a) and 331 specifically and exclusively govern fee awards under Title 11. Section 363(b)(1) does not override them.

Miller's argument that New York state law provides him with a lien securing his fees fails for three separate and independent reasons. First, Miller adduced no evidence that he had complied with New York law. Second, he had no right to impose a lien on bankruptcy estate property for legal work he performed during the bankruptcy case. It is hornbook law that only a fee order creates a right to payment. A lien secures an existing right. See 11 U.S.C. 506. Miller had no right to payment for post-bankruptcy work, because such an award must be made under section 330(a). Inasmuch as Miller had no existing right to payment – a fee award under 11 U.S.C. 330(a) - he can assert no lien. Third, the automatic stay provided by 11 U.S.C. 362(a) independently prevented Miller from asserting a lien on any estate property, including the Net Sale Proceeds.

Miller's argument that the June 19, 2006 Order violated his Fifth Amendment rights fails, because his claim for fees creates no cognizable right in estate property that could be taken from him. Miller waived his right to an evidentiary hearing. Miller's suggestion that the bankruptcy court approved his employment application at a March 25, 1999 hearing is not corroborated by the record.

Miller's argument that the bankruptcy court ratified his conversion of the Net Sales Proceeds in 2002 - when it approved the sale of estate property and confirmed ESR's plan of reorganization - fails, because he did not completely disclose his actions until 2008.

Although this Court should affirm the June 19, 2006 Order, it should remand for one limited purpose. The June 19, 2006 Order required that Miller disgorge an amount that exceeded the amount of Net Sales Proceeds that he diverted from ESR's escrow funds. The Court should remand the matter to the bankruptcy court for the limited purpose of determining how much Miller received as fees in the ESR case and requiring that he disgorge that amount. While additional theories might justify Miller's disgorging an amount greater than the Net Sale Proceeds, none of those theories was raised in the Disgorgement Motion or relied upon by the bankruptcy court in the June 19, 2006 Order and none is presented in this appeal.

ARGUMENT

I. The Bankruptcy Court Did Not Abuse Its Discretion by Denying Miller's Fee Application and Directing Him to Disgorge Fees That He Paid Himself Without Prior Court Authorization

A. Miller has no right to fees, because he was never retained under 11 U.S.C. 327(a)

In order to receive compensation from the bankruptcy estate, an attorney working as counsel for a chapter 11 debtor must meet two tests.

First, he must be employed as counsel for the debtor in possession under 11 U.S.C. 327(a). Lamie v. U.S. Trustee, 540 U.S. 526, 538 (2004) ("Adhering to conventional doctrines of statutory interpretation, we hold that § 330(a)(1) does not authorize compensation awards to debtors' attorneys from estate funds, unless they are employed as authorized by § 327 . . . ."); In re Crafts Retail Holding Corp., 378 B.R. 44, 49 (Bankr. E.D.N.Y. 2007) (denying fee application of attorneys hired by financial advisors, because the court had not previously approved law firm's retention by debtor). Section 327(a) of the Bankruptcy Code authorizes a debtor in possession, subject to court approval, to retain one or more professional persons to assist it in fulfilling its fiduciary duties, provided that the person: 1) does not represent an interest adverse to the estate; and 2) is disinterested. In re Leslie Fay Cos., Inc.,175 B.R. 525, 531 (Bankr. S.D.N.Y. 1994); Rome v. Braunstein, 19 F.3d 54, 58 (1st Cir. 1994).[7]

Second, the bankruptcy court must award him fees under 11 U.S.C. 330(a). Lamie, 540 U.S. at 538-39. Section 330(a) grants a bankruptcy court broad discretion to pay debtor's counsel what the court determines to be a "reasonable" fee for "actual" services that are "necessary." 11 U.S.C. 330(a). In re Cenargo Intern., PLC, 294 B.R. 571, 596 (Bankr. S.D.N.Y. 2003); In re Busy Beaver Building Centers, Inc., 19 F.3d 833, 840 (3rd Cir. 1994).

Miller recollects that the bankruptcy court conducted a hearing on his employment application on March 25, 1999 and that it orally overruled objections by the United States Trustee to his retention. Amended Brief at 39; 47. No docket entries, pleadings or court orders corroborate Miller's argument. It also contradicts

[7] A debtor-in-possession assumes the rights and powers of a trustee per 11 U.S.C. 323(a) and 1107(a) and, therefore, is a fiduciary of the estate and its constituents, including creditors. Commodity Futures Trading Com'n v. Weintraub, 473 U.S. 343, 354 (1985); Smart World Technologies, LLC Juno Online Services, Inc. (In re Smart World Technologies, LLC, 423 F.3d 166, 174 – 175 (2d Cir. 2005).

his admissions below that the court never approved his employment. AUS Ex. 9 at 1 – 2; AUS Ex. 22 at 33; 49.

The record clearly demonstrates that Miller applied for, but did not obtain, a bankruptcy court order approving his employment as ESR's attorney under 11 U.S.C. 327(a). MA 40 – 45; 56; AUS Ex. 6 at 3 - 4. It was Miller's responsibility to ensure that he had been retained before rendering services to the estate. In re Crafts Retail Holding Corp., 378 B.R. at 49. He could have requested a hearing on his application, but for unexplained reasons, he did not do so. The local rules did not relieve Miller of his responsibility to obtain employment under 11 U.S.C. 327(a). E.D.N.Y. L. Bankr. R. 2014-1(c). Add. at 6. They also did not shift his responsibility to the United States Trustee, as he suggests. Amended Brief at 39 – 40.

Because he failed to obtain employment under 11 U.S.C. 327(a), Miller has no right to receive compensation from the estate under 11 U.S.C. 330(a). Lamie v. U.S. Trustee, 540 U.S. at 538. The requirement that an attorney obtain a court order authorizing his employment as a prerequisite to his requesting and receiving compensation is a "per se rule" in the Second Circuit. In re 245 Associates, LLC, 188 B.R. at 749. See United Merchants & Mfrs., Inc. v. Henry Schroder Bank and Trust Co. (In re United Merchants & Mfrs., Inc.), 597 F.2d 348 (2d Cir. 1979) (denying fee application submitted by counsel to indenture trustee, because the bankruptcy court had not previously entered an order authorizing the firm's employment); In re Keren Ltd. P'ship, 189 F.3d 86, 88 (2d Cir. 1999) (denying real estate broker's request for commission, because it had not been employed).[8]

The bankruptcy court did not abuse its discretion in entering the June 19, 2006 Order, because Miller had never been employed as ESR's counsel under 11 U.S.C. 327(a). Accordingly, the Court should affirm the orders below.

B. Even if Miller had been retained, he has no right to pay himself fees from the Net Sale Proceeds, because he never obtained a fee award

Even if the bankruptcy court had approved Miller's employment application, he has no right to fees in the ESR case, because he did not receive a fee award under 11 U.S.C. 330(a) and he improperly took estate funds and paid himself from them. This is an alternate ground on which to sustain the orders below. Maritime Asbestos Legal Clinic, Inc. v. United States Lines, Inc. (In re United States Lines, Inc.), 216 F.3d 228, 233 (2d Cir. 2000) (holding that this Court may affirm on any grounds in the record, regardless of whether the lower courts relied upon them).

[8] The Third, Seventh and Tenth circuits have likewise held that the only way attorneys may receive payment from bankruptcy estate funds is under subsection 503(b)(2), which requires as a condition precedent to payment that the attorney have an award under section 330 and an order of employment under section 327. In re Milwaukee Engraving Co., 219 F.3d 635, 636 (7th Cir. 2000); Matter of Singson, 41 F.3d 316, 320 (7th Cir. 1994); F/S Airlease II, Inc. v. Simon, 844 F.2d 99, 108-109 (3d Cir. 1988), cert. denied, 488 U.S. 852 (1988); In re Albrecht, 233 F.3d 1258, 1260 (10th Cir. 2000).

An attorney for a chapter 11 debtor has a right to payment for work done in the case only if he obtains a fee award under 11 U.S.C. 330(a). Lamie, 540 U.S. at 538-39. Miller did not do so.

Instead, as he admits, Miller used a two-step process to get fees. First, he took estate funds – the Net Sale Proceeds – without motion, without notice, and without hearing, and transferred them out of the estate. Amended Brief at 13 - 14. Second, he used the funds to engage in unauthorized transactions and to pay himself fees.[9]

Miller's course of action was inappropriate for three reasons. First, his removal of property from the estate is the exact opposite of what the Bankruptcy Code requires. Entities with possession of estate property are required to turn that property over to the estate fiduciary for administration. 11 U.S.C. 542(a). Instead, Miller engaged in transactions with the Net Sales Proceeds that removed them from the estate. Second, Miller violated the specific constraints of the Escrow

[9] In an affidavit supporting his July 15, 2008 motion to disqualify Windels, Miller stated that he used $220,000 of the Net Sale Proceeds to "purchase 100% of the stock of a non-bankruptcy corporation owned by Dr. Josephine English, ABSR Realty Corp. . . . ." He claimed that he used the money to purchase two lots for ESR from Dr. English. MA 1117. In his Amended Brief, Miller stated that he effectuated these transactions "while acting in his capacity through a power of attorney for the benefit of [Dr]. English . . . ." Amended Brief at 13. Miller admitted in his November 26, 2001 objection to the Disgorgement Motion that he paid himself fees, but he argued that he did not need bankruptcy court approval to pay himself, because the "payments were not derived from the bankruptcy estate funds of ESR . . . ." AUS Ex. 9 at 3 – 4.

Order requiring him to hold the funds in escrow pending a further order of the court. Finally, Miller acted contrary to the principle that fee awards under 11 U.S.C. 330(a) are not self-executing. An attorney must obtain court permission before receiving compensation from any source, including the estate, creditors or insiders. In re Chapel Gate Apts., Inc., 64 B.R 569, 572 (Bankr. N.D. Tex. 1986).

This Court, like the First, Fifth, Sixth and Ninth circuits, has uniformly held that debtors' attorneys must disgorge fees when that they have paid themselves without first obtaining a section 330 fee order or have otherwise breached their duties under the Bankruptcy Code. Futronics Corp. v. Arutt, Nachamie & Benjamin (In re Futronics Corp.), 655 F.2d 463, 470 (2d Cir. 1981), cert. denied, 455 U.S. 941 (1982) (ordering disgorgement of fees paid by debtor to special counsel and shared with general bankruptcy counsel without prior court authorization); In the Matter of Arlan's Dep't Stores, Inc., 615 F.2d at 940 (affirming order requiring attorneys to disgorge fees that they had deducted from an escrow account holding asset sale proceeds, because they had not obtained a fee award). Accord Miller v. Second Circuit bankruptcy courts have ordered disgorgement for the same reasons. See Matter of Kero-Sun, Inc., 58 B.R. 770, 780 – 781 (Bankr. D. Conn. 1986) (ordering debtor's counsel to return to the estate, with interest, fees paid by secured creditor post-petition without notice and prior court approval under 11 U.S.C. 329(a) and 330(a)); In re Laferriere, 286 B.R. 520, 531 (Bankr. D. Vt. 2002) (granting the United States Trustee's disgorgement motion, where debtor's counsel failed to disclose pre-petition and post-petition payments); Cohn v. United States Trustee (In re Ostas), 158 B.R. 312 (N.D.N.Y. 1993) (upholding on appeal bankruptcy court order directing return of fees for failure to disclose pre-petition payment arrangements).

Rather than obtaining a fee order under 11 U.S.C. 330(a), Miller violated his duties under the Bankruptcy Code by paying himself without a fee award. This Court can affirm the June 19, 2006 Order on this basis.

C. Miller failed to demonstrate that his fees were reasonable and necessary under section 330(a)

Alternatively, this Court can sustain the orders below, because Miller failed to meet his burden under section 330(a) of proving that his fees were reasonable and that his services were necessary. See In re United States Lines, Inc., 216 F.3d at 233. This result is fully supported by the record.

In determining "reasonable" compensation under 11 U.S.C. 330(a), a bankruptcy court must consider a non-exclusive list of five "relevant factors" pertaining to the "nature, the extent and the value" of the services rendered, "including — (A) the time spent on such services; (B) the rates charged for such services; (C) whether the services were necessary to the administration of, or beneficial at the time at which the services were rendered toward the completion of, a case under this title; (D) whether the services were performed within a reasonable amount of time . . . ; and (E) whether the compensation is reasonable based on the customary compensation charged by comparably skilled practitioners in cases other than cases under this title . . . ." 11 U.S.C. 330(a)(3). In re Northwest Airlines Corp., 382 B.R. 632, 644 – 645 (Bankr. S.D.N.Y. 2008).

Section 330(a)(1) requires that a bankruptcy court determine whether a professional's services are "necessary" prior to quantifying "reasonable" fees. In re Keene Corp., 205 B.R. 690, 696 (Bankr. S.D.N.Y. 1997) (holding that "necessary" services include only those that benefit the estate). Section 330(a)(2) expressly authorizes bankruptcy courts, in the exercise of their discretion, to "award compensation that is less than the amount requested . . . ." Id. Section 330(a)(4) prohibits the bankruptcy court from awarding compensation for "unnecessary duplication of services . . . or . . . services that were not . . . reasonably likely to benefit the debtor's estate . . . or . . . necessary to the administration of the estate . . . ." Id.

Miller introduced no evidence at the March 11, 2004 and May 16, 2006 hearings demonstrating that his services were necessary and that his fees, as retroactively requested, were reasonable. MA 18; 919 – 939; AUS Ex. 22. Miller failed to meet his burden under 11 U.S.C. 330(a). Based upon the record, the bankruptcy court could have awarded Miller less than he requested or nothing at all. 11 U.S.C. 330(a)(2) and (4).

This Court can affirm on this basis. See, e.g., Caplin & Drysdale Chartered v. United States Trustee (In re Babcock & Wilcox Co.), 526 F.3d 824, 827 (5th Cir. 2008) (affirming denial of requested fees, because debtor's attorney failed to meet its burden of proof).

D. Miller's principal arguments justifying his conversion of the Net Sale Proceeds to pay himself unilaterally were unlawful and do not support reversal Miller advances four principal arguments in support of his request for reversal. None of them has merit.

Section 541 provides that the commencement of a bankruptcy case creates an estate, to be comprised of "all legal and equitable interests" of the debtor, "wherever located and by whomever held." 11 U.S.C. 541(a). "The scope of this section is broad, and it is intended to maximize the amount of property available for distribution to creditors according to priorities established by the Code . . . Any property of the debtor upon which a judgment creditor might obtain a lien under state law flows to the bankruptcy estate . . . ." Musso v. Ostashko, 468 F.3d 99, 104 - 105 (2d Cir. 2006). Upon the filing of a Chapter 11 petition, title to all estate property is transferred to the debtor, and all third parties are required to turn over all estate property to the debtor. 11 U.S.C. 541(a) and 542(a). The Net Sale Proceeds constituted estate property. In re Ames Dept. Stores, Inc., 287 B.R. 112, 119 (Bankr. S.D.N.Y. 2002).

First, Miller suggests that his converting the Net Sale Proceeds in order to pay himself was allowed by 11 U.S.C. 363(b)(1) as an exercise of ESR's "ordinary course of business." Amended Brief at 36 – 38. Whatever application section 363(b)(1) may have in other contexts involving the operation of a debtor's business, it does not pertain to professional compensation. See, e.g., Medical Malpractice Ins. Assoc. v. Hirsch (In re Lavgine), 114 F.3d 384 – 385 (2d Cir. 1997) (analyzing debtor's cancellation of insurance policy as an "ordinary course" transaction under 11 U.S.C. 363(b)(1)).

By its plain language, 11 U.S.C. 330(a) constitutes the sole cognizable basis for awarding fees in bankruptcy cases.[10] In re Crafts Retail Holding Corp., 378 B.R. at 50. Section 363(b)(1) cannot be used to override the specific professional compensation provisions of 11 U.S.C. 330(a). "It is well settled that the bankruptcy court lacks the power to grant, and the policy of the Bankruptcy Act is against compensation [and reimbursement of expenses] not expressly provided for by the Act . . . ." In re United Merchants & Mfrs., Inc., 597 F.2d at 349. Inasmuch as 11 U.S.C. 363(b)(1) does not purport to affect, let alone to grant, fee awards, Miller cannot use it as a basis for rationalizing his converting estate property to pay himself without court permission.

[10] Interim fee awards under 11 U.S.C. 331 are evaluated on the same basis as final fee awards under 11 U.S.C. 330. See In re Teraforce Technology Corp., 347 B.R. 838, 846 – 847 (Bankr. N.D. Tex. 2006).

Second, Miller asserts that he had an attorney's lien on the assets of the estate and did not require a court order to make distributions to himself.[11] Amended Brief at 41 - 46. This argument is wholly without merit.

Assuming arguendo that the Escrow Order prohibiting disbursement had never been signed, that the Debtor had never filed a bankruptcy petition and that state law would have governed rather than title 11, even under New York law, Miller did not have a charging lien under Judiciary Law § 475. The plain language of that statute provides that in order to assert a charging lien, the attorney must make an application to the court to determine and to enforce the lien. Id. Miller made no such application to any court – state or federal – and no such determination was ever rendered.

Even if Miller made such a state law application, it would have been summarily denied. In New York, a lawyer "may not impose a lien for his fee on [11] Under New York law, an attorney is given a charging lien for fees and costs out of a judgment or settlement obtained in a suit in which the attorney performed legal services. Section 475 of the New York Judiciary Law provides for this lien stating, "from the commencement of an action of special proceeding . . . , or the service of an answer containing a counterclaim, the attorney who appears for a party has a lien upon his client's cause of action, claim or counterclaim, which attaches to a verdict, report, decision, judgment or final order in his client's favor and the proceeds thereof in whatever hands they may come; and the lien can not be affected by any settlement between parties before or after judgment or final order. The Court upon petition of the client or attorney must determine and enforce the lien." N.Y. Judiciary Law § 475. The lien relates back to the initiation of the action. In re E.C. Ernst, Inc., 4 B.R. 317, 320 (Bankr. S.D.N.Y. 1980).

escrow funds he holds for a client and another." Nassau County Bar Association Opinion No. 85-7 (1985) citing Marsano v. State Bank, 279 N.Y.S.2d 817 (3rd Dep't 1967). The attorney does not receive the funds in his capacity as an attorney; they are received in his role as an escrow agent. "Absent specific authorization to draw upon the funds for the payment of legal services claimed to be due him, [the attorney] is not entitled to a retaining lien on the fund." United States v. J.H.W. Gitlitz Deli & Bar, Inc., et al., 499 F.Supp 1010, 1015 (S.D.N.Y. 1980). Miller neither requested nor received any specific authorization.

Conversion of a client's funds held in escrow is not excused by the fact that an attorney had provided legal services for which he has not been compensated. In the Matter of Robert I. Hodes, 469 N.Y.S.2d 371, 373 (1st Dep't 1983), appeal denied, 475 N.Y.S.2d 281 (1984). Therefore, Miller's after-the-fact rationale as to why he was entitled to convert estate assets without court order must fail, because no charging lien was ever created under New York law.[12]

More significantly, Miller had no Federal law lien that would be enforceable under the Bankruptcy Code, because he had no existing right to payment. It is hornbook law that only a fee order creates a right to payment. 11 U.S.C. 330(a);

[12] See United States Trustee v. Ropes & Gray (In re CK Liquidation Corp.), 343 B.R. 376, 385 (D. Mass. 2006) (interpreting Lamie and holding "[w]here the Supreme Court has interpreted § 330(a)(1) as preventing payment from the debtor's estate to counsel not appointed under § 327, authorization of such payment on the basis of state law is forbidden by the Supremacy Clause . . . .")

Lamie, 540 U.S. at 538-39. A lien secures an existing right. See 11 U.S.C. 506; 4 Lawrence P. King, et al. Collier on Bankruptcy, ¶506.02 (15th Ed. 2008).

Miller had no right to payment for post-bankruptcy work, because such an award must be made under section 330(a). Inasmuch as Miller had no existing right to payment – a fee award under 11 U.S.C. 330(a) - he can assert no lien.

Lastly, Miller's attempt to put a lien on estate property violated the automatic stay provided by 11 U.S.C. 362(a) . See Musso v. Ostashko, 468 F.3d 99, 104 – 105. Under Section 362(a)(3), Miller was stayed from taking "any act to obtain possession of property of the estate or of property from the estate or to exercise control over property of the estate." Under section 362(a)(4), Miller was precluded from taking any act to create, perfect or enforce any lien against the property of the estate." Under section 362(a)(5), Miller was stayed from performing "any act to create, perfect or enforce against property of the debtor any lien to the extent that such lien secures a claim that arose before the commencement of the case. . . . " 11 U.S.C. § 326(a)(5).

Inasmuch as Miller's alleged lien would encumber property of the estate, the Net Sale Proceeds, it would violate the automatic stay. 11 U.S.C. 362(a). Therefore, it would be void. Id.

Third, Miller claims that the bankruptcy court ratified his actions in 2002, when it approved certain asset sales and confirmed ESR's plan of reorganization.

Amended Brief at 40. The problem with this argument is that Miller did not disclose until 2008 that it was he who, exercising a "power of attorney," assumed control of ESR's operations after the sale of 1325 Union Street closed and used the Net Sale Proceeds to purchase the property from a non-debtor and to pay himself fees. He did these things without prior court authorization. MA 1117; Amended Brief at 13. The bankruptcy court could not have known of Miller's actions at the time it approved the sale of these assets and confirmed ESR's plan in 2002. Accordingly, it could not have ratified them, nor could it have ratified any fee order under 11 U.S.C. 330(a).

Fourth, Miller claims that the bankruptcy court violated his Fifth Amendment rights by depriving him of property without due process of law in two ways – first by not adjudicating the Disgorgement Motion, the Miller Fee Application and the ESR Objection in the context of an adversary proceeding; and, second, by not providing him with the transcript of the alleged March 25, 1999 hearing on his employment application. Amended Brief at 46 – 56. These arguments fail.

As a threshold matter, Miller had no cognizable state law interest in estate property. In re CK Liquidation Corp., 343 B.R. at 385. He merely had the right to request payment from it upon the terms set forth in section 330(a). 11 U.S.C. 330(a). And even if a 330 award is granted, priority and right to payment are governed by sections 503 and 507 of the Code. These, not self help, govern fees in bankruptcy cases. As a result, in denying Miller's Fee Application and ordering him to disgorge, the bankruptcy court did not "take" anything from him.

Moreover, matters arising under sections 329 and 330(a) are brought by motion. Motions are contested matters under Fed. R. Bankr. P. 9014 to which all of the procedural protections provided by the Federal Rules of Civil Procedure apply, including discovery under Fed. R. Civ. P. 26. Fed. R. Bankr. P. 9014. A bankruptcy court's review of an attorney's fees under 11 U.S.C. 329(b) and Fed. R. Bankr. P. 2017 does not give rise to an adversary proceeding under Fed. R. Bankr. P. 7001 and, separately, implicates no right to jury trial under the Seventh Amendment. In re Rheuban, 128 B.R. 551, 558 – 229 (Bankr. C.D. Ca. 1991).

Miller implicitly argues that the denial of his due process rights arises from the lack of an evidentiary hearing. Amended Brief at 46 – 56. However, Miller had at almost five years to prepare for the hearings on the Disgorgement Motion, his Fee Application and the ESR Objection, and the docket reflects that he undertook no discovery during that time. He called no witnesses at the May 16, 2006 hearing and offered no documents into evidence, relying upon the admissions in his pleadings. AUS 22. To the extent that Miller had a right to an evidentiary hearing on May 16, 2006, he waived it.

In Arlan's Dep't Stores, Inc., this Court rejected a similar argument by a fee applicant, who claimed that the bankruptcy court, in conducting a non-evidentiary hearing on his fee application, denied him due process. The Court affirmed that the applicant had waived his right to an evidentiary hearing, because it adduced no evidence at the fee hearing, despite being given the opportunity to do so, and that it could not deny admissions in its pleadings on the controlling fact – viz., that it accepted post-petition payments without prior court authorization. In the Matter of Arlan's Dep't Stores, Inc., 615 F.2d at 942 – 943.

Miller's due process argument with respect to the March 25, 1999 hearing transcript fails. Nothing in the record indicates that his section 327(a) employment application was heard on March 25, 1999. MA 3. The bankruptcy court recalled that it was not and that no application was ever approved. MA 922. Miller's current recollection also contradicts both his written responses and oral argument at the May 16, 2006 hearing, where he conceded that the bankruptcy court never entered an order approving his retention as ESR's counsel. AUS Ex. 9 at 1 – 2; AUS Ex. 22 at 33; 49. Under these circumstances, Miller's due process rights were never implicated.

Insofar as Miller's four principal arguments fail, the Court should affirm the June 19, 2006 Order.

E. The Court should affirm the June 19, 2006 Order and direct a limited remand to quantify the amount of fees that Miller should disgorge

In its Disgorgement Motion, the United States Trustee requested disgorgement of fees that Miller had received in connection with the ESR case. AUS Ex. 6; 7; 12. In the June 19, 2008 Order, the bankruptcy court directed Miller to disgorge $298,000. MA 22; 919 – 939; 1036 – 1041; AUS Ex. 22. There is no evidence in the record demonstrating that Miller paid himself $298,000 as fees for the ESR case, however. The total amount of Net Sales Proceeds that Miller did not turn over was $246,364.21; there is likewise no evidence in the record demonstrating that Miller paid himself this amount as fees for the ESR case. While there may be additional theories supporting Miller's disgorgement of an amount equal to or greater than the Net Sale Proceeds (e.g. as a sanction for violating the Escrow Order or as a voidable, post-petition transfer under 11 U.S.C. 549), none of them were raised by the Disgorgement Motion or relied upon by the bankruptcy court in the June 19, 2006 Order.

Accordingly, the United States Trustee requests that the Court: i) affirm the June 19, 2006 Order; and ii) remand this matter to the bankruptcy court, with instructions that it quantify Miller's fees and order Miller to disgorge that amount, and to entertain such additional disgorgement actions as any party may wish to lodge.

CONCLUSION

For these reasons, the United States Trustee respectfully asks this Court to affirm the June 19, 2006 Order and that it remand the case to the bankruptcy court to calculate the amount of fees to be disgorged by Miller under the June 19, 2006 Order.

INTRODUCTION

Mr. Phillip D. Miller paid himself attorney's fees out of the proceeds from the sale of an apartment building, in violation of an order directing him to hold the sale proceeds in escrow. After discovering what Mr. Miller had done, the bankruptcy court ordered him to disgorge the entire $298,000 in sale proceeds. On appeal, the Second Circuit held that Mr. Miller had to return the amount he took for his attorney's fees, but not the amount of the sale proceeds that went to others. It vacated and remanded the portion of the judgment specifying the amount to be disgorged. On remand, the bankruptcy court found that Mr. Miller had paid himself $146,000 out of the sale proceeds and ordered disgorgement in that amount. This appeal followed.

STATEMENT OF APPELLATE JURISDICTION

This Court has appellate jurisdiction under 28 U.S.C. § 158(a)(1). The bankruptcy court's final order requiring Mr. Miller to disgorge $146,000 in attorney's fees was entered on April 13, 2010. Mr. Miller timely filed a notice of appeal from that order under 28 U.S.C. § 158(c)(2) and Fed. R. Bankr. P. 8002(a) on April 27, 2010.

The bankruptcy court's final order denying Mr. Miller's motion to alter or amend the April 13, 2010, disgorgement order under Fed. R. Bankr. P. 7052 and 9023 was entered on June 15, 2010. Mr. Miller timely filed a notice of appeal from that order under 28 U.S.C. § 158(c)(2) and Fed. R. Bankr. P. 8002(a) on June 29, 2010.

STATEMENT OF THE ISSUES

1. Did the bankruptcy court abuse its discretion when it found that Mr. Miller must disgorge $146,000?

2. Did the bankruptcy court abuse its discretion when it denied Mr. Miller's motion to alter or amend the order directing Mr. Miller to disgorge $146,000?

SUMMARY OF THE ARGUMENT

This case is on remand from the Second Circuit on one narrow ground, which is to determine how much Mr. Miller took for his own attorney's fees out of the $281,000 that the bankruptcy court in the English Sheppard Realty Corporation ("ESR") bankruptcy case had ordered Mr. Miller to hold in escrow. On remand, the bankruptcy court determined that Mr. Miller took $146,000 in fees and ordered him to return that amount. Mr. Miller did not dispute that $146,000 is the amount that he took from the sale proceeds for himself, so the bankruptcy court faithfully followed the Second Circuit's remand order and its ruling should be affirmed.

Mr. Miller acted improperly. He took the money from Dr. English, who was ESR's principal and sole shareholder. He did that in two steps. First, he sold $3 million of Dr. English's property to ABSR, a holding company that Mr. Miller created. In exchange for this property, Mr. Miller gave Dr. English $10 and an agreement to assume approximately $61,000 in property tax liability. Second, Mr. Miller then had ESR purchase ABSR for $246,341.21. Mr. Miller paid ABSR out of the money he held in escrow for ESR. Mr. Miller then transferred $146,000 to himself. Mr. Miller never disclosed these activities to the bankruptcy court or the United States Trustee.

After Mr. Miller's scheme was discovered, Dr. English fired Mr. Miller as both her personal counsel and as ESR's counsel. The bankruptcy court then ordered Mr. Miller to return all of the money he had been ordered to hold in escrow. The Second Circuit, however, held that although Mr. Miller must return the fees that he paid to himself, the bankruptcy court had erroneously ordered him to return funds that went to others. On remand, the bankruptcy court found that Mr. Miller had paid himself only $146,000 and ordered him to return that amount. This reduced the amount of money that Mr. Miller must give back by over $150,000.

On appeal, Mr. Miller does not contest the bankruptcy court's determination that he took $146,000 for his fees. Nor could he. The record primarily consists of Mr. Miller's admissions, including his testimony, his cashed checks, and the accounting statements that he created.

Instead, Mr. Miller primarily seeks to relitigate whether he should be required to restore any fees at all. He cannot, however, because of the mandate rule, which precludes relitigating issues decided by an appellate court when a case is on remand. The Second Circuit held that Mr. Miller paid himself fees in violation of the escrow order and now must return that money. It remanded the case for the sole purpose of determining the amount of fees that Mr. Miller paid himself. Mr. Miller's arguments exceed the limited scope of Second Circuit's remand order.

Because Mr. Miller cannot establish that the bankruptcy court clearly erred when it found that he paid himself $146,000 in fees from the sale proceeds, the order requiring him to return that amount should be affirmed.

STANDARD OF REVIEW

This Court reviews a bankruptcy court's factual determinations for clear error. Lubow Mach. Co. v. Bayshore Wire Prod. Corp. (In re Bayshore Wire Prod. Corp.), 209 F.3d 100, 103

(2d Cir. 2000). The clearly erroneous standard requires an appellate court to uphold any finding of fact that is plausible "in light of the record viewed in its entirety." Cooter & Gell v. Hartmax Corp., 496 U.S. 384, 400 (1990).

This Court reviews a bankruptcy court's decision to modify a judgment under Fed. R. Bankr. P. 7052 and 9023 for abuse of discretion. Sequa Corp. v. GBJ Corp., 156 F.3d 136, 143 (2d Cir. 1998); see Fed. R. Bankr. P. 9014 (applying Fed. R. Bankr. P. 7052, which incorporates Fed. R. Civ. P. 52, to contested matters in a bankruptcy case); Fed. R. Bankr. P. 9023 (incorporating Fed. R. Civ. P. 59). A bankruptcy court abuses its discretion when it bases its decision on "an error of law or a clearly erroneous finding of fact, or a decision that, 'though not necessarily the product of legal error or a clearly erroneous factual finding[,] cannot be located within the range of permissible decisions.'" STATEMENT OF THE CASE

I. Statement of the Facts

This appeal concerns a single finding of fact made pursuant to the Second Circuit's vacatur and remand order in this case. See Miller v. Simpson, 325 F. App'x 25 (2d Cir. 2009). That order remanded the case for the limited purpose of determining the amount of money Mr. Miller paid to himself out of the sale proceeds in violation of the bankruptcy court's escrow order.

Although very few facts are necessary for this Court to review the decision below, Mr. Miller's principal brief makes numerous statements referring to facts and circumstances that occurred throughout the ten years this case has been pending. To assist the Court with the voluminous record in this appeal, the United States Trustee has provided an extended statement of the facts that explains the history and key events of the case.

A. Dr. Josephine English and her wholly-owned corporation, English Sheppard Realty Corporation, retain Mr. Miller as counsel.

Dr. Josephine English, age 90, is a physician. She opened her first medical practice in Brooklyn, New York, in 1955 and has been dedicated to her community for over fifty years. In the 1980's, Dr. English led Brooklyn's Fort Greene community revitalization efforts by personally financing numerous real estate development projects, including a clinic for low-income patients and a theatre. [Errol Louis, Josephine English, one of first black, female OB/GYNs, not stopping at 89, New York Daily News (June 24, 2010), available at http://tinyurl.com/2e985lp, ER, Vol. 4, Ex. 27, at 585-86]. Dr. English developed financial difficulties in the 1990's and has struggled to save her properties from tax foreclosure ever since. [Austin Evans Fenner, Rally to Rescue Med Clinic Planned, New York Daily News (Oct. 3, 1995), available at http://tinyurl.com/2b6hzqv, ER, Vol. 4, Ex. 26, at 584].

The English Sheppard Realty Corporation ("ESR"), a single-asset real estate holding company, is one of those properties. ESR filed a voluntary petition for relief under chapter 11 of the Bankruptcy Code on January 11, 1999. [ER, Vol. 3, Ex. 19, at 455-56]. ESR's sole asset was an apartment building located at 1325 Union Street, Brooklyn, New York. Dr. English signed the petition in her capacity as ESR's president and Mr. Miller filed the petition as ESR's attorney. [ER, Vol. 3, Ex. 19, at 455-56].

In addition to representing ESR, Mr. Miller was also Dr. English's personal attorney. Mr. Miller represented Dr. English with respect to (1) the other properties that she owned and (2) her personal affairs, including tax and medical malpractice actions. [ER, Vol. 4, Ex. 22, at 451-52; ER, Vol. 2, Ex. 10, at 182-90].

Throughout much of Mr. Miller's representation for Dr. English, he acted as an attorney-in-fact for both Dr. English and ESR. [ER, Vol. 2, Ex. 10, at 129-30]. That meant he conducted Dr. English's business without her participation and engaged in many legal transactions without her signature. He bought and sold real estate using Dr. English's name. [ER, Vol. 2, Ex. 10, at 129-30]. He received deposits on Dr. English's behalf, including proceeds from sales of her properties. [ER, Vol. 2, Ex. 10, at 184-87; ER, Vol. 3, Ex. 14, at 237]. He signed corporate documents in Dr. English's name and used an irrevocable power of attorney to operate her real estate businesses. [ER, Vol. 3, Ex. 16, at 372-436]. He commingled all of the funds for Dr. English and her various companies, including ESR, in his Interest on Lawyer Account ("IOLA"). [ER, Vol. 2, Ex. 10, at 191].

Although Mr. Miller testified that he took these actions under a power of attorney, he never produced any documentation in the ESR case to support this statement. [ER, Vol. 2, Ex. 10, at 129-30]. Similarly, Mr. Miller was unable to produce a copy of the retainer agreement pertaining to his representation for ESR. [ER, Vol. 2, Ex. 10, at 118]. Mr. Miller did, however, testify that Dr. English paid him a total of $32,500 for services related to ESR's bankruptcy. [ER, Vol. 2, Ex. 10, at 155].

Furthermore, Mr. Miller was never retained under 11 U.S.C. § 327 to act as ESR's bankruptcy counsel, although he did make the unsubstantiated claim that the bankruptcy court verbally approved his employment at a hearing for which no transcript is available. [ER, Vol. 2, Ex. 10, at 177; ER, Vol. 4, Ex. 23, at 535-38 (No retention order appears on ECF Docket)].

Notwithstanding, Mr. Miller appeared in the case on behalf of ESR for almost two and a half years without the bankruptcy court's approval.

B. Mr. Miller violates the bankruptcy court's order directing him to hold the proceeds from the sale of 1325 Union Street in escrow.

On January 26, 2000, the bankruptcy court entered an order approving ESR's sale of the 1325 Union Street apartment building. [ER, Vol. 3, Ex. 17, at 437]. In the sale order, the court directed Mr. Miller to hold the sale proceeds "in escrow pending confirmation of Debtor's Chapter 11 Plan of Reorganization ("Plan"), and distribution pursuant to Court Order." [ER, Vol. 3, Ex. 17, at 437]. Mr. Miller received a total of $287,743.59: $42,500 from the bid deposit, and two payments of $26,381.25 and $218,862.34. [ER, Vol. 2, Ex. 10, at 157-58; ER, Vol. 3, Ex. 15, at 244, Lines 6, 17-18]. After paying closing costs, Mr. Miller held net equity proceeds from the sale in the amount of $281,805.63. [ER, Vol. 3, Ex. 15, at 245, Line 22].

Rather than holding the sale proceeds in escrow until they could be distributed pursuant to a court order, Mr. Miller deposited the money into his IOLA and recorded the funds as an unrestricted deposit in ESR's accounting ledger. [ER, Vol. 2, Ex. 10, at 157; ER, Vol. 3, Ex. 15, at 244].

C. Mr. Miller incorporates ABSR Realty Holding Corporation to receive property from Dr. English.

Approximately six months after ESR filed for bankruptcy, and six months before the sale of 1325 Union Street closed, Mr. Miller incorporated a new holding company for Dr. English, ABSR Realty Holding Corporation. [ER, Vol. 3, Ex. 16, at 376]. Dr. English was listed as the sole shareholder, president, and director of ABSR, but signed none of the papers. [ER, Vol. 3, Ex. 16, at 380]. Mr. Miller exercised unfettered control over ABSR, without any documented participation by Dr. English. Upon incorporation, Mr. Miller designated himself attorney-in-fact for ABSR and assigned himself the authority to perform all of the duties and functions necessary for managing the corporation. [ER, Vol. 3, Ex. 16, at 380].

Although Dr. English owned ABSR, her signature never appears on any of ABSR's corporate records. [ER, Vol. 3, Ex. 16, at 373-475]. This includes documents (1) purporting to assign Mr. Miller a power of attorney and control of the corporation, [ER, Vol. 3, Ex. 16, at 380]; and (2) transferring two lots of property from Dr. English to ABSR for $10.00 each, to be sold to a third party, with ABSR to retain the proceeds. [ER, Vol. 3, Ex. 16, at 430-35].

Mr. Miller also waived ABSR's annual shareholder meeting. [ER, Vol. 3, Ex. 16, at 409-10]. And Mr. Miller conducted the first meeting of ABSR's board of directors as the sole attendee. [ER, Vol. 3, Ex. 16, at 412]. At this meeting, Mr. Miller gave himself authority to conduct all of ABSR's financial transactions out of his IOLA, where ABSR's funds were commingled with both Dr. English's and ESR's funds. [ER, Vol. 3, Ex. 16, at 413]. While ABSR was under Mr. Miller's control, Dr. English only appears in ABSR's records as the occasional recipient of payments between $5,000 and $10,000. [ER, Vol. 3, Ex. 15, at 238-43].

D. Mr. Miller has ESR purchase ABSR from Dr. English

Two months after he received the sale proceeds, Mr. Miller — acting alone — had ESR use the proceeds to purchase ABSR in a simultaneous three-party transaction.

Mr. Miller transferred from Dr. English to ABSR (1) all of the outstanding shares of ABSR, (2) an irrevocable power of attorney for Mr. Miller to act as attorney-in-fact with respect to ABSR, and (3) two vacant lots of property located in Brooklyn. [ER, Vol. 3, Ex. 16, at 424-26]. In exchange for this, Dr. English received $10 and the assumption of any claims against Dr.

English arising from the properties. [ER, Vol. 3, Ex. 16, at 424-27]. The value of that assumption was $60,910.09, based on tax liens on the properties in the amount of $26,341.21 and $34,568.88. [ER, Vol. 3, Ex. 15, at 240, Line 45; ER, Vol. 3, Ex. 15, at 243, Line 83].

Mr. Miller paid $61,000 for Dr. English's properties, but at the same time he had ESR take ownership of the properties by buying all of ABSR's shares in exchange for $220,000. [ER, Vol. 3, Ex. 16, at 427]. In addition, ABSR agreed that it would not "assign, transfer, sell, or otherwise encumber the [Brooklyn lots] without the express written approval and/or consent from ESR." [ER, Vol. 3, Ex. 16, at 427].

E. Mr. Miller violates the escrow order by taking $246,341.21 out of the proceeds held in escrow to pay for the deal, but never transfers the properties to ABSR or ESR.

Mr. Miller then had ESR transfer $246,341.21 out of the estate in violation of the escrow order in two payments, one in the amount of $220,000 and a second in the amount of $26,341.21. [ER, Vol. 3, Ex. 15, at 245, Lines 23-24]. Mr. Miller — yet again, acting alone — deducted $246,341.21 from the $281,805.63 of sale proceeds recorded under ESR's accounting ledger. [ER, Vol. 3, Ex. 15, at 245, Lines 23-24].

Mr. Miller never transferred the title to the two lots of Brooklyn property from Dr. English to ABSR, which is the company that ESR had purchased. This meant ESR paid almost $250,000 for a shell company. According to New York City's property records, Dr. English retained title to the two lots until July 31, 2002, which was after Mr. Miller had been removed as ESR's counsel. [ER, Vol. 4, Ex. 22, at 481]; see ACRIS Detailed Document Information for Brooklyn, Block 2120, Lots 43 and 48, available at http://a836-acris.nyc.gov/Scripts/DocSearch.dll/BBL. After Mr. Miller's removal, ESR's new counsel was able to obtain title and then sell the two lots for $3 million, which provided a significant return to its creditors. [ER, Vol. 4, Ex. 25, at 581-83].

Those transactions violated the escrow order. First, Mr. Miller distributed the sale proceeds without obtaining a post-confirmation court order. In addition, Mr. Miller did not notify the bankruptcy court about the distribution, or receive court authorization to make a distribution inconsistent with the terms of the escrow order. [ER, Vol. 3, Ex. 17, at 437; ER, Vol. 4, Ex. 22, at 518]. Despite using approximately 87% of ESR's cash to purchase two vacant lots of property, Mr. Miller never disclosed his activities to the bankruptcy court, the United States Trustee, or ESR's creditors. [ER, Vol. 3, Ex. 17, at 437; ER, Vol. 4, Ex. 22, at 518].

Second, Mr. Miller's signature is the only signature that appears on the documentation for this deal. Mr. Miller executed both transactions as the attorney-in-fact for the respective parties, signing on behalf of Dr. English, ABSR, and ESR in each instance. [ER, Vol. 3, Ex. 15, at 426, 429]. Nothing in the record indicates that Dr. English was aware of Mr. Miller's activities on her behalf.

Third, no money or property ever changed hands. Mr. Miller conducted all of the financial transactions for Dr. English, ABSR, and ESR out of his IOLA. [ER, Vol. 2, Ex. 10, at 191]. Although Mr. Miller described the payment from ESR to ABSR as a transfer, no money ever left Mr. Miller's commingled IOLA. Rather, Mr. Miller moved a total of $246,341.21 from ESR's accounting ledger to ABSR's accounting ledger. [ER, Vol. 3, Ex. 15, at 245, Lines 23-24]. Every distribution that Mr. Miller made when conducting the business of Dr. English and her holding companies had been drawn (1) solely by him and (2) solely from his general purpose, commingled IOLA. [ER, Vol. 3, Ex. 15, at 250-324].

Finally, there is nothing in the record to differentiate the finances of Dr. English, ESR, and ABSR. Since ABSR was formed, Mr. Miller used it interchangeably with Dr. English's other assets. For example, Mr. Miller used ABSR's money to pay himself attorney's fees for representing Dr. English in a medical malpractice lawsuit. [ER, Vol. 3, Ex. 15, at 239, Line 15]. ESR's accounting ledger only reveals transactions pertaining to the sale of 1325 Union Street and the purchase of ABSR. [ER, Vol. 3, Ex. 15, at 244-45]. And after the sale of ABSR to ESR was completed, Mr. Miller continued to conduct transactions on behalf of Dr. English and ESR under ABSR's accounting ledger. [ER, Vol. 3, Ex. 15, at 238-43].

F. Mr. Miller pays himself $146,000 in attorney's fees in violation of the escrow order and without notice to or authorization from the bankruptcy court.

Over the course of 2000-2001, Mr. Miller used the sale proceeds in his IOLA to pay himself $146,000 for a variety of purported legal matters. [ER, Vol. 3, Ex. 15, at 241-43; ER, Vol. 2, Ex. 10, at 168-78]. Mr. Miller made the following 13 payments:

Date	Amount	Reason for Payment
April 13, 2000	$5,000	p miller atty fee tax research/estate plan
May 12, 2000	$5,000	p miller esq retainer greene v english med mal case

June 23, 2001	$5,000	p miller atty fee litton v english
June 25, 2001	$20,000	p miller atty fee lot foreclosure cases

[ER, Vol. 3, Ex. 15, at 241-43; ER, Vol. 2, Ex. 10, at 168-78].

Mr. Miller also made other payments from the sale proceeds, such as (1) remittances to Dr. English, see, e.g., [ER, Vol. 3, Ex. 15, at 242, Line 66 ($10,000 remittance to Dr. English)]; (2) payments to third-parties for expenses related to ESR, see, e.g., [ER, Vol. 3, Ex. 15, at 242, Line 79 ($5,000 payment to settle a lawsuit against ESR)]; and (3) payments relating to other property holding companies owned by Dr. English, see, e.g., [ER, Vol. 3, Ex. 15, at 242, Line 74 ($20,000 payment for "stuyvesant ave realty corp ch 11")].

By executing these transactions, Mr. Miller violated the escrow order. Nor did he obtain other authorization from the bankruptcy court to make any distributions. And he did not disclose his activities to the court and other interested parties. [ER, Vol. 2, Ex. 10, at 214-16].

G. Dr. English fires Mr. Miller after discovering what had been done.

Mr. Miller continued to represent ESR until the bankruptcy court told Dr. English it was concerned about the quality of Mr. Miller's representation. [ER, Vol. 4, Ex. 22, at 483]. The court explained that Mr. Miller was not familiar with bankruptcy law and had made numerous mistakes when handling the case, and advised her to seek new counsel. [ER, Vol. 4, Ex. 22, at 483]. Dr. English sought counsel from Windels, Marx, Lane, & Mittendorf, who then investigated and discovered the full scope of Mr. Miller's activities. [ER, Vol. 4, Ex. 22, at 485].

Dr. English substituted Windels Marx as counsel for ESR. [ER, Vol. 4, Ex. 23, at 538]. Windels Marx then took action against Mr. Miller in the bankruptcy court. Mr. Miller subsequently turned over his accounting records and $35,447.42 to Windels Marx, which was the balance of ESR's accounting ledger, but no more. [ER, Vol. 3, Ex. 15, at 245, Line 25]. Windels Marx also obtained title to the two lots, and sold them for $3,000,000. [ER, Vol. 4, Ex. 25, at 581-83].

H. Mr. Miller's license to practice law is suspended based on his professional misconduct in this case.

After Dr. English dismissed Mr. Miller as counsel, she filed a professional misconduct complaint with the Grievance Committee for the Second Judicial Department, which suspended him for six months. [ER, Vol. 4, Ex. 22, at 483-84, 487]; see In re Miller, 907 N.Y.S.2d 218, 221-22 (App. Div. 2010). The state court found that Mr. Miller had (1) breached his fiduciary duties to maintain and preserve funds that his client and the bankruptcy court had entrusted to him, (2) engaged in conduct prejudicial to the administration of justice, and (3) had misappropriated client funds. Id.

II. Statement of the Proceedings Below

A. The bankruptcy court orders Mr. Miller to disgorge $298,000.

Based on the above, the United States Trustee and ESR jointly moved to compel Mr. Miller to disgorge the improperly disbursed funds. [ER, Vol. 4, Ex. 23, at 539-40]. After a hearing on March 11, 2004, the bankruptcy court granted the motion. [ER, Vol. 4, Ex. 23, at 550]. But before the court could finalize the amount to be disgorged, the presiding bankruptcy judge, Chief Judge Duberstein, passed away. The case was reassigned to Judge Eisenberg, who conducted the second hearing on the disgorgement motion on May 16, 2006. [ER, Vol. 4, Ex. 23, at 555].

At the May 2006 hearing, the bankruptcy court made several findings: (1) Mr. Miller had never been lawfully retained under 11 U.S.C. § 327 to represent ESR, [ER, Vol. 4, Ex. 22, at 483]; (2) Mr. Miller's expenditures from the commingled IOLA "did not inure to the benefit of this debtor's estate," [ER, Vol. 4, Ex. 22, at 514]; (3) Mr. Miller's accounting was "flawed by indicating payments from his general account to various parties not necessarily on behalf of this debtor's estate," [ER, Vol. 4, Ex. 22, at 518-19]; and (4) Mr. Miller had violated the escrow order and that the bankruptcy court had not ratified his transactions in violation of the escrow order by later approving ESR's sale of the two Brooklyn lots. [ER, Vol. 4, Ex. 22, at 500-01, 518]. Therefore, the court denied Mr. Miller's fee application and ordered him to return all $298,000 of the sale proceeds. [ER, Vol. 4, Ex. 24, at 574-80].

B. The Second Circuit holds that Mr. Miller must return the money he took for his attorney's fees, but remanded on the amount to be returned.

Mr. Miller appealed the disgorgement order to this Court, which affirmed the order of the bankruptcy court on September 25, 2007. In re English Sheppard Realty Corp., No. 06-4742 (E.D.N.Y. Sept. 19, 2007). Mr. Miller then appealed to the United States Court of Appeals for the Second Circuit, which affirmed the "portion of the order requiring Miller to disgorge attorney fees he paid to himself from the Net Sale Proceeds," but vacated and remanded on the issue of the amount to be returned. Miller v. Simpson, 325 F. App'x 25, 26 (2d Cir. 2009).

The Second Circuit held, "we have no doubts that disgorgement of fees was appropriate for at least two reasons." Id. at 27. First, Mr. Miller "violated that portion of the Escrow Order requiring him to retain the proceeds in an escrow account 'pending confirmation of Debtor's Chapter 11 Plan of Reorganization ("Plan") and distribution pursuant to Court Order.'" Id. Second, Mr. Miller "did not obtain a fee award as required by 11 U.S.C. § 330(a)" to pay himself from the funds of the estate without prior bankruptcy court authorization. Id.

But the Second Circuit also held that the bankruptcy court clearly erred when it determined the amount Mr. Miller must return. The bankruptcy court did not account for the $35,447.42 that Mr. Miller previously returned. Id. Furthermore, "it is also clear that the payments related to the Lots transactions were not [Mr. Miller's] fees" and accordingly those payments "did not fall within the amounts for which the Trustee sought disgorgement." Id. at 28.

Finally, the Second Circuit rejected the other arguments that Mr. Miller raised in the appeal. Because of Mr. Miller's "serious breaches of his fiduciary obligations to the court," the bankruptcy court did not err when it denied his fee application. Id. And there was no merit to his state law or Fifth Amendment due process claims. Id.

The bankruptcy court was given the following instruction on remand: "to conduct an evidentiary hearing to quantify said fees and direct Miller to disgorge that amount." Id. at 27.

C. On remand, the bankruptcy court finds that Mr. Miller paid himself $146,000 in violation of the escrow order.

On remand, the bankruptcy court held an evidentiary hearing to determine the amount Mr. Miller paid to himself. [ER, Vol. 2, Ex. 10, at 90]. The bankruptcy court heard testimony from Mr. Miller and reviewed (1) the accounting records Mr. Miller had previously prepared, which included copies of the checks written against his IOLA; (2) ABSR's corporate records, which were also prepared by Mr. Miller; and (3) correspondence between Mr. Miller and Dr. English. [ER, Vol. 2, Ex. 10, at 225-28].

At the hearing, the United States Trustee examined Mr. Miller about the 13 transactions that were listed as payments to Mr. Miller for either attorney's fees or retainers. [ER, Vol. 2, Ex. 10, at 167-77]. Mr. Miller admitted that those payments were for legal fees. [ER, Vol. 2, Ex. 10, at 167-77, 209].

In opposition, Mr. Miller renewed his argument that the transactions were legitimate and had been ratified by the bankruptcy court. [ER, Vol. 2, Ex. 10, at 145-47]. He maintained that he did not he did not violate the escrow order and thus was not subject to disgorgement. [ER, Vol. 2, Ex. 10, at 148, 151-54].

The bankruptcy court rejected Mr. Miller's arguments because they were "not germane" to determining how much Mr. Miller paid himself in attorney's fees. [ER, Vol. 2, Ex. 10, at 146-48]. The court found that, out of the $246,341.21 Mr. Miller had transferred in violation of the escrow order, he had made 13 payments to himself for attorney's fees, for a total of $146,000. In re English Sheppard Realty Corp., No. 99-10393, 2010 WL 1492272, at *4 (Bankr. E.D.N.Y. Apr. 13, 2010).

The bankruptcy court concluded that Mr. Miller "used the Debtor's funds to pay his legal fees despite never being approved by the Court as bankruptcy counsel, and never being authorized to use the estate's funds to pay himself, and despite the clear terms of the Sale Order." Id., at *5. It also found that Mr. Miller's actions demonstrated a "continuous pattern of misconduct as to how he was compensated in this case" and showed "a flagrant disregard for the Court and the Bankruptcy Code. Such actions cannot be countenanced by the Court." Id.

On April 27, 2010, Mr. Miller timely filed a notice of appeal from the April 13, 2010, disgorgement order to this Court. [ER, Vol. 1, Ex. 1, at 1]. Mr. Miller also filed a motion to alter or amend that order that raised new challenges to the underlying merits of the disgorgement order and contested the factual basis for the bankruptcy court's determination that Mr. Miller had paid himself $146,000. [ER, Vol. 1, Ex. 7, at 66].

At the hearing on the motion to alter or amend judgment, the bankruptcy court held that Mr. Miller's legal arguments were improperly brought. [ER, Vol. 1, Ex. 4, at 26]. First, the court explained that a motion to alter or amend could not be used to relitigate issues that had already been decided or could have been raised before. [ER, Vol. 1, Ex. 4, at 26]. Second, even if the court wanted to consider the merits, the remand from the Second Circuit was for the purpose of determining the amount Mr. Miller paid himself and thus the bankruptcy court could not revisit other issues. [ER, Vol. 1, Ex. 4, at 26]. Third, Mr. Miller's new legal argument was "irrelevant" because Mr. Miller took the money in violation of the court's escrow order and that the Bankruptcy Code did not permit him to "do with [the money] as he and Dr. English saw fit." [ER, Vol. 1, Ex. 4, at 26].

The bankruptcy court also rejected Mr. Miller's factual argument, finding that "the $146,000 dollar number came from Mr. Miller's own documents and records" and there was no evidence of any substantive errors. [ER, Vol. 1, Ex. 4, at 26]. Although some minor revisions were necessary, they did not provide a basis for granting Mr. Miller relief from judgment. [ER, Vol. 1, Ex. 4, at 26].

Accordingly, the bankruptcy court entered its final order denying Mr. Miller's motion to alter or amend the disgorgement order on June 15, 2010. [ER, Vol. 1, Ex. 3, at 5]. Mr. Miller timely filed a notice of appeal from that denial to this Court on June 29, 2010.

On December 15, 2010, the United States Trustee filed motions to consolidate the two appeals. The Court has not yet ruled on the motions.

ARGUMENT

I. The bankruptcy court did not clearly err when it reduced the amount of attorney's fees Mr. Miller must disgorge to $146,000.

A. The bankruptcy court correctly calculated the amount of attorney's fees Mr. Miller paid himself in violation of the escrow order.

A trial court does not clearly err by relying upon uncontested evidence and admissions. "[S]tatements in papers submitted to the court may constitute judicial admissions." Schwan-Stabilo Cosmetics GmbH & Co. v. Pacificlink Intern. Corp., 401 F.3d 28, 35 (2d Cir. 2005). The court may treat such admissions as binding fact. Purgess v. Sharrock, 33 F.3d 134, 144 (2d Cir. 1994). When a party makes a clear and unambiguous admission of fact, it may obviate the need for any further proof with respect to the existence of the admitted fact. United States v. McKeon, 738 F.2d 26, 30 (2d Cir. 1984).

Earlier in this case, the Second Circuit ordered the bankruptcy court "to conduct an evidentiary hearing to quantify said fees and direct Miller to disgorge that amount." Miller v. Simpson, 325 F. App'x at 27. On remand, the bankruptcy court found that Mr. Miller had transferred $246,341.21 in violation of the escrow order and had paid himself $146,000 out of those proceeds. English Sheppard, 2010 WL 1492272, at *4.

That determination was based on accounting records and check records that Mr. Miller prepared and submitted in response to the bankruptcy court's 2001 accounting and turnover order. [ER, Vol. 4, Ex. 23, at 539; ER, Vol. 3, Ex. 15, at 238-43; ER, Vol. 2, Ex. 10, at 107]. Mr. Miller has testified to the accuracy of each payment evidenced within those records. [ER, Vol. 2, Ex. 10, at 168-78]. And he does not contest the amount the bankruptcy court found. Therefore, bankruptcy court is entitled to rely upon Mr. Miller's clear and unambiguous admissions of fact. McKeon, 738 F.2d at 30.

B. The bankruptcy court correctly rejected Mr. Miller's request for equitable relief.

Instead, Mr. Miller argues he should not be held accountable for equitable reasons because (1) his actions were taken in the best interests of Dr. English and ESR, and (2) ESR eventually benefitted from the transactions. Appellant's Br. at 7. Indeed, the Second Circuit stated that the bankruptcy court should "pay due attention to the fact that . . . the Lots were ultimately sold for $3 million, and that ESR . . . described the Lots transactions as being to ESR's benefit." Miller, 325 F. App'x at 27-28. The bankruptcy court duly considered this, and was correct to deny Mr. Miller's request for equitable relief based on his "continuous pattern of misconduct" and actions "in clear violation" of the escrow order, which showed a "flagrant disregard for the Court and the Bankruptcy Code." English Sheppard, 2010 WL 1492272, at 5.

The evidence in the record provides no support for Mr. Miller's purported belief that he acted with good faith to "preserve a valuable asset" and to keep ESR operating in "the business of real estate." Appellant's Br. at 7. First, Mr. Miller cannot take credit for the $3 million that the properties eventually raised for ESR because he never transferred the properties ESR purchased from Dr. English through its acquisition of ABSR. Mr. Miller had ESR pay almost $250,000 for ABSR, but he never completed the deal by transferring the properties to ABSR or ESR. Although over a year had elapsed from when Mr. Miller took the money from ESR until Dr. English fired him, the record does not show that Mr. Miller made any effort to transfer the property to ABSR or ESR. Mr. Miller took ESR's money, but gave it an empty promise in return.

Meanwhile, Mr. Miller had no such problem giving himself money. While Mr. Miller began writing himself checks from that money right away, ESR's accounting ledger went dormant until Mr. Miller was fired a year later and he was required to transfer the balance of ESR's funds to ESR's new counsel, Windels Marx. Compare [ER, Vol. 3, Ex. 15, at 241, Line 49] with [ER, Vol. 3, Ex. 15, at 245, Lines 24-25]. It was only after Dr. English fired Mr. Miller and retained new counsel that ESR was able to obtain control over the properties it had purchased and sell them for its benefit. [ER, Vol. 4, Ex. 22, at 481]; see ACRIS Detailed Document Information for Brooklyn, Block 2120, Lots 43 and 48, available at http://a836-acris.nyc.gov/ Scripts/DocSearch.dll/BBL.

Thus, there is no reason to believe that Mr. Miller intended the transaction to benefit ESR, or to attribute any later benefit to his conduct. Mr. Miller was unwilling or unable to provide ESR with the property it purchased or to keep the company a going concern in the real estate business. Had Mr. Miller not been caught, it seems unlikely that those circumstances would have ever changed.

Second, it is unclear how Mr. Miller's actions were intended to improve Dr. English's financial status. [ER, Vol. 4, Ex. 22, at 455]. Mr. Miller sold $3 million worth of Dr. English's properties and in return gave her $10 in cash and the assumption of $60,000 in property tax liability. [ER, Vol. 3, Ex. 15, at 240, Line 45, and 243, Line 83; Ex. 16, at 424-26]. He then turned around and sold that same property to ESR, through its acquisition of ABSR, for $246,341.21, and paid himself $146,000.

There is no evidence in the record to prove how Dr. English personally gained by selling those two properties at 2% of their value so they could be sold in bankruptcy. That exposed her equity in the properties to ESR's creditors, which makes no sense when she could have sold the lots herself, paid off her tax liability and other debts, and used the proceeds for other purposes, such as recapitalizing ESR outside of bankruptcy. And considering that Dr. English fired Mr. Miller and filed a professional misconduct complaint against him after she discovered what happened, it is reasonable to state that Mr. Miller did not design this transaction in Dr. English's best financial interests after all. See In re Miller, 907 N.Y.S.2d at 221-22 (suspending Mr. Miller).

What is clear is that Mr. Miller substantially benefitted from the transaction at the expense of Dr. English and ESR. Dr. English risked losing approximately $2.93 million. ESR and its bankruptcy estate — at least before it obtained honest counsel willing to enforce its rights — risked losing $246,341.21. Mr. Miller, to the opposite, gave himself an excuse to take money out of the protection of ESR's bankruptcy estate. Within 14 days of transferring the money, he begin paying himself $146,000 in legal fees that might otherwise have gone unpaid. [ER, Vol. 3, Ex. 15, at 241, Line 49]. It is beyond the pale for Mr. Miller to suggest that the equities of the case should "ameliorate the unexpected rigidity" of the law, Appellant's Br. at 7, when the only reason any benefit ultimately inured to ESR was because (1) Mr. Miller caused Dr. English to lose nearly $3 million in assets and (2) Mr. Miller's self-dealing was unexpectedly revealed.

Therefore, in light of the record viewed in its entirety, the bankruptcy court's decision requiring Mr. Miller to disgorge the $146,000 he took for his own fees was not clearly erroneous. Cooter & Gell, 496 U.S. at 400.

II. Mr. Miller's legal arguments should not be considered because they exceed the scope of the Second Circuit's remand order.

On appeal, Mr. Miller continues his scattershot approach to attacking the validity of the disgorgement order, raising nine different reasons why he should not be required to return the money he took. This Court need not consider his arguments because they are not allowed under the mandate rule.

On remand, a court is bound by the mandate rule. Jam. Shipping Co. v. Orient Shipping Rotterdam, B.V. (In re Millenium Seacarriers, Inc.), 458 F.3d 92, 97 (2d Cir. 2006). Within the Second Circuit, "[t]he mandate rule ordinarily forecloses relitigation of all issues previously waived by the [appellant] or decided by the appellate court." United States v. Quintieri, 306 F.3d 1217, 1225 (2d Cir. 2002); see Amado v. Microsoft Corp., 517 F.3d 1353, 1361 (Fed. Cir. 2008) ("The mandate rule provides that issues actually decided on appeal — those within the scope of the judgment appealed from, minus those explicitly reserved or remanded by the court — are foreclosed from further consideration.").

This rule prevents relitigation "not only of matters expressly decided by the appellate court, but [it] also precludes relitigation of issues impliedly resolved by the appellate court's mandate." Yick Man Mui v. United States, 614 F.3d 50, 53 (2d Cir. 2010). "In other words, the trial court is barred from reconsidering or modifying any of its prior decisions that have been ruled on by a court of appeals." United States v. Minicone, 994 F.2d 86, 89 (2d Cir. 1993).

The trial court's "authority on remand is limited to those issues left open by the mandate." Burrell v. United States, 467 F.3d 160, 165 (2d Cir. 2006); see Quintieri, 306 F.3d at 1225 (stating that the mandate rule does not foreclose relitigation when the appellate court specifically remands for de novo proceedings). To determine whether an issue may be considered on remand, a trial court "should look to both the specific dictates of the remand order as well as the broader spirit of the mandate." Yick Man Mui, 614 F.3d at 53; see, e.g., In re Ingersoll, 562 F.3d 856, 863 (7th Cir. 2009) (making the "unremarkable observation that where the remanding court identifies a discrete or particular issue, the lower court is generally limited to that question.").

Here, the mandate rule precludes Mr. Miller's renewed challenge to the merits of the disgorgement order. Mr. Miller had a full and fair opportunity to litigate the merits of his position in 2006 in the bankruptcy court. He lost, and the Second Circuit affirmed "the portion of the order requiring Miller to disgorge attorney fees he paid to himself from the Net Sale Proceeds," observing that "we have no doubts that disgorgement of fees was appropriate." Miller, 325 F. App'x at 27. And the Second Circuit's instructions for the bankruptcy court on remand were specific: "to conduct an evidentiary hearing to quantify said fees and direct Miller to disgorge that amount." Id.

Nothing in the "specific dictates" or "broader spirit" of that order suggests that any issue is open except the amount of money that Mr. Miller must return. Yick Man Mui, 614 F.3d at 53. Accordingly, there is no authority to reconsider the merits of the disgorgement order. Burrell, 467 F.3d at 165.

III. The bankruptcy court did not abuse its discretion when it denied Mr. Miller's motion to alter or amend the disgorgement order.

Nor did the bankruptcy court abuse its discretion when it denied Mr. Miller's motion to alter or amend the judgment. There are three grounds that justify reconsideration: "an intervening change of controlling law, the availability of new evidence, or the need to correct a clear error or prevent manifest injustice." Virgin Atl. Airways, Ltd. v. Nat'l Mediation Bd., 956 F.2d 1245, 1255 (2d Cir. 1992). Here, no new evidence became available and there had been no change in the controlling authority. Mr. Miller cannot relitigate issues that have been decided by the Second Circuit. Yick Man Mui, 614 F.3d at 53; see supra Part II, at 21-23. And as explained above, requiring Mr. Miller to return the money he took in violation of the escrow order was an equitable decision. See supra Part I.B., at 18-21.

QUESTION PRESENTED

Whether the confirmation and subsequent completion of respondent's plan under Chapter 13 of the Bankruptcy Code had the effect of discharging his student loan debt, notwithstanding his failure to initiate an adversary proceeding to determine dischargeability and the lack of any determination by the bankruptcy court that "excepting [the] debt from discharge * * * would impose an undue hardship on the debtor and the debtor's dependents." 11 U.S.C. 523(a)(8).

BRIEF FOR THE UNITED STATES AS AMICUS CURIAE SUPPORTING PETITIONER

INTEREST OF THE UNITED STATES

The United States is both a direct lender and a guarantor of student loans. The government's current loan portfolio is worth approximately $618 billion. The Court's resolution of this case also may have implications for various other debts that are owed to the federal government and are non-dischargeable in bankruptcy, including taxes or customs duties; non-tax fines, penalties, and forfeitures; and restitution orders. The United States therefore has a significant interest in this case.

STATEMENT

1. a. Chapter 13 of the Bankruptcy Code permits "individual debtors [to] obtain adjustment of their indebtedness through a flexible repayment plan approved by a bankruptcy court." Nobelman v. American Sav. Bank, 508 U.S. 324, 327 (1993). To proceed under Chapter 13, a debtor must have "regular income" and his indebtedness must be below certain statutory limits. 11 U.S.C. 109(e).

A debtor initiates a Chapter 13 proceeding by filing a petition with the appropriate bankruptcy court, 11 U.S.C. 301(a), and he must file a proposed plan within 15 days after filing the petition, 11 U.S.C. 1321; Fed. R. Bankr. P. 3015(b). The bankruptcy court holds a confirmation hearing, 11 U.S.C. 1324, and must confirm the plan if it satisfies certain criteria, 11 U.S.C. 1325. The debtor must then make all payments required under the plan, 11 U.S.C. 1326, a process that takes between three and five years. 11 U.S.C. 1322(d), 1325(b)(4). If the debtor completes the plan, the bankruptcy court enters a discharge order under 11 U.S.C. 1328(a), which "operates as an injunction against" efforts to "collect, recover or offset any * * * debt" that was "discharged under [that] section." 11 U.S.C. 524(a)(1) and (2).
