b. A full-compliance discharge under Chapter 13 "is broader than the discharge received in any other chapter" of the Bankruptcy Code. 8 Collier on Bankruptcy ¶ 1328.01, at 1328-5 (Alan N. Resnick & Henry J. Sommer, eds., 15th ed. rev. Sept. 2005) (Collier). Certain debts, however, remain non-dischargeable even in a Chapter 13 proceeding. In particular, Chapter 13 incorporates 11 U.S.C. 523(a)(8), which provides that a discharge order "does not discharge an individual debtor from" most student loan debt "unless excepting such debt from discharge * * * would impose an undue hardship on the debtor and the debtor's dependents." See 11 U.S.C. 1328(a)(2).[1]

c. The Federal Rules of Bankruptcy Procedure (Bankruptcy Rules) establish certain procedures for "determin[ing] the dischargeability of a debt." Fed. R. Bankr. P. 7001(6). "Because student loan debts are not automatically dischargeable," those Rules "require the debtor to file an 'adversary proceeding' against" the relevant creditor in order to obtain a discharge. Tennessee Student Assistance Corp. v. Hood, 541 U.S. 440, 451 (2004) (Hood).

Although an adversary proceeding "is considered part of the original bankruptcy case," Hood, 541 U.S. at 452, it "has all the trappings of civil litigation," Educational Credit Mgmt. Corp. v. Mersmann (In re Mersmann), 505 F.3d 1033, 1043 (10th Cir. 2007) (en banc). The debtor initiates an adversary proceeding by filing a complaint, Fed. R. Bankr. P. 7003, which must satisfy the requirements of Federal Rule of Civil Procedure 8, see Fed. R. Bankr. P. 7008, and must be served on the creditor along with a summons issued by the clerk. Fed. R. Bankr. P. 7004. In addition to the methods of service permitted by the Federal Rules of Civil Procedure, the Bankruptcy Rules also authorize service by mail. Fed. R. Bankr. P. 7004(b). If the creditor is a corporation, service must be made on "a managing or general agent, or * * * any other agent authorized by appointment or by law to receive service of process." Fed. R. Bankr. P. 7004(b)(3). If the federal government is a creditor, as often is the case with student loan debts, service must be made on the Attorney General, the local United States Attorney, and the appropriate federal agency. Fed. R. Bankr. P. 7004(b)(4) and (5).

[1] At the time of the discharge order in this case, Section 523(a) also provided for discharge of any student loan debt that first became due more than seven years before the filing of the bankruptcy petition. 11 U.S.C. 523(a)(8)(A) (1994). That provision is not at issue here because respondent filed his bankruptcy petition less than five years after receiving his first student loan. Pet. App. 60-61.

The procedures for providing notice of a Chapter 13 plan are considerably less rigorous. The clerk must give all parties in interest at least 25 days' written notice of the deadline for filing objections and the date of the confirmation hearing. Fed. R. Bankr. P. 2002(b). That notice need not include a copy of the plan itself; "a summary of the plan" is sufficient. Fed. R. Bankr. P. 3015(d). In addition, unlike an adversary complaint, notice under Bankruptcy Rule 2002(b) need not be directed to an agent authorized to receive service of process. Instead, notice may be "mailed to the address shown on the list of creditors or schedule of liabilities" filed by the debtor along with the bankruptcy petition. Fed. R. Bankr. P. 2002(g)(2).

2. During 1988 and 1989, respondent obtained four federally guaranteed student loans that totaled $13,250 and accrued interest at varying rates. Pet. App. 52, 60-61. On December 7, 1992, respondent filed a Chapter 13 petition and a proposed plan. Id. at 61. The only specific indebtedness identified in respondent's bankruptcy petition was his student loan debt. J.A. 15-20. The plan proposed to repay only the principal on that debt, and it stated that "[a]ny amounts or claims for student loans unpaid by this Plan shall be discharged." J.A. 26. The plan did not assert that failing to discharge the interest on respondent's student loan debt would impose an "undue hardship" on respondent and his dependents, nor did it suggest that plan confirmation would constitute an "undue hardship" finding by the bankruptcy court.

Respondent did not initiate an adversary proceeding in order to determine the dischargeability of the interest on his student loan debt. Instead, the clerk of the bankruptcy court mailed a one-page notice form and a copy of respondent's proposed plan to petitioner at the post office box. Pet. App. 14 n.4, 71; J.A. 34 (copy of notice). Immediately below the caption, the plan stated: "WARNING IF YOU ARE A CREDITOR YOUR RIGHTS MAY BE IMPAIRED BY THIS PLAN." J.A. 23. The plan also listed the deadline for filing a proof of claim, J.A. 26–27, and stated that "[o]bjections, by any creditor, must be filed seven (7) days prior to the hearing on Confirmation of [the] Plan." J.A. 26.

The clerk's notice was stamped "REC'D" by petitioner's litigation department on December 18, 1992. J.A. 34. On January 8, 1993, petitioner filed a proof of claim for $17,832.15, which represented both the principal and accrued interest on respondent's student loans. J.A. 35 & n.; Pet. App. 62 n.2. Petitioner did not object to confirmation of the plan, and respondent did not object to petitioner's proof of claim. Id. at 62, 72.

On May 6, 1993, the bankruptcy court entered an order stating that respondent's "Chapter 13 plan is approved and the Debtors are ordered to comply therewith." J.A. 43. The court made no finding that failing to discharge the interest on respondent's student loan debt would impose undue hardship on respondent and his dependents. Petitioner was not provided with a copy of the bankruptcy court's confirmation order. Pet. App. 62.

A month after the bankruptcy court entered its confirmation order, the Chapter 13 Trustee mailed petitioner a pre-printed form labeled "TRUSTEE'S NO-TICE TO CREDITOR." J.A. 44. That form had a box checked stating that "[t]he amount of the claim filed differs from the amount listed for payment in the plan" and that "[y]our claim will be paid as listed in the plan." Ibid. The form also stated that "[i]f an interested party wishes to dispute the above stated treatment of the claim, it is the responsibility of the party to address the dispute" by notifying the trustee. Ibid. Petitioner did not respond to that notice. Pet. App. 63.

Respondent completed all payments provided for in the plan, including the $13,250 designated for payment to petitioner. Pet. App. 63. On May 30, 1997, a second bankruptcy judge entered a one-page order stating that respondent was "discharged from all debts provided for by the plan or disallowed under 11 [U.S.C.] § 502, except" for six specified categories of debt. J.A. 46 (emphasis added). The third category listed included "any debt * * * for a student loan." J.A. 46. Respondent neither sought reconsideration of the discharge order nor filed a notice of appeal. Pet. App. 52.

3. Pursuant to a reinsurance agreement, respondent's loans were assigned to the United States Department of Education, which commenced collection efforts. Pet. App. 63. In 2003, respondent reopened his bankruptcy case, and he later filed a motion asking the bankruptcy court, inter alia, to order various entities, including petitioner, to cease all collection efforts. C.A. E.R. 39-43. Petitioner opposed that motion and filed a cross-motion for relief from the bankruptcy court's confirmation order, arguing that the order had been entered in violation of the Bankruptcy Code and Rules and that respondent's student loan debt had not been discharged. Pet. App. 6; C.A. E.R. 72-87. Petitioner also requested a recall of respondent's loans from the Department of Education, which was completed on June 3, 2004. Pet. App. 63.

On August 12, 2004, a third bankruptcy judge granted respondent's motion in relevant part, denied petitioner's cross-motion, and ordered all claimants to "cease and desist all collection activity against" respondent. Pet. App. 79.

Petitioner appealed to the district court, which reversed. Pet. App. 60-70. The district court concluded that the bankruptcy court's confirmation order was "void," and it remanded "for an adversary hearing to determine whether [respondent] qualifies under the 11 U.S.C. § 523(a)(8) exception for the discharge of his student loan." Id. at 60.

4. The court of appeals reversed and remanded. Pet. App. 1-27.

a. In an initial per curiam opinion, the court of appeals remanded the case to the bankruptcy court for the limited purpose of addressing whether its discharge order—which, as noted above, specifically excluded student loan debt from discharge—"was entered as a result of a clerical error and, if so, whether to correct it so as to conform to [respondent's] Chapter 13 plan." Pet. App. 59. The court of appeals observed that such a limitation on discharge was "inconsistent with" the confirmed plan's terms, and it hypothesized that the clerk of the bankruptcy court may have generated the discharge order without tailoring it to "the facts of [respondent's] case." Id. at 57-58 (internal quotation marks and citation omitted).

b. On remand, the bankruptcy judge who had ruled on the 2003 motions issued a new order. The bankruptcy court found that the language excepting respondent's student loan debt from discharge "was inserted because of a clerical mistake, because it was the clear intent of the Court, as reflected in the Chapter 13 Plan, as approved by the Court, that all student loan-related obligations were to be discharged if the debtor successfully performed and completed the Plan." J.A. 48. The bankruptcy court ordered the relevant paragraph stricken from the discharge order, and further ordered that respondent "be * * * discharged from all obligations of any nature whatsoever arising from or relating to the Student Loans listed in" respondent's bankruptcy petition. Ibid.

c. Following the remand, the court of appeals reversed the district court's decision and remanded the case to the bankruptcy court with directions to reinstate its order enjoining any attempt to collect the unpaid portion of respondent's student loan debt. Pet. App. 26-27. The court framed the issue as "[w]hether a debtor may obtain discharge of a student loan by including it in a Chapter 13 plan, if the creditor fails to object after notice of the proposed plan." Id. at 5. It concluded that such a discharge was consistent both with the Bankruptcy Code and Rules, id. at 8-18, and with the Due Process Clause, id. at 18-25.

The court of appeals determined that its previous decision in Great Lakes Higher Education Corp. v. Pardee (In re Pardee), 193 F.3d 1083 (9th Cir. 1999) was "on all fours with our case" and "foreclose[d]" petitioner's statutory argument. Pet. App. 8. The court observed that petitioner could have "insist[ed] on the special procedures available to student loan creditors by objecting to the plan on the ground that there ha[d] been no undue hardship finding," but that petitioner had raised no such objection. Id. at 10; see id. at 14-15. The court also stated that "[a] bankruptcy discharge order is a final judgment" and that "[e]rrors committed during the course of litigation must be corrected by way of a timely appeal." Id. at 11.

The court of appeals also rejected petitioner's argument "that the discharge order is void because [petitioner] was denied due process." Pet. App. 18. The court stated that a party who "is adequately notified of a pending lawsuit * * * is deemed to know the consequences of responding or failing to respond." Id. at 20. Because petitioner "receive[d] actual notice of [respondent's] bankruptcy case," the court of appeals concluded that it had suffered no violation of its rights under the Due Process Clause. Id. at 21.[2]

SUMMARY OF ARGUMENT

Respondent's student loan debt has not been discharged because petitioner did not waive or forfeit its right to contest discharge and the bankruptcy court has not made the undue hardship finding that is an essential prerequisite to discharge of such debt.

A. The court of appeals held that petitioner had waived its objection to discharge of a portion of respondent's student loan debt by failing either to object to the discharge in the bankruptcy court proceedings or to appeal the confirmation or discharge order. Under the Bankruptcy Code, however, the debtor must affirmatively secure an undue hardship finding in order to obtain a discharge of student loan debt. The Bankruptcy Rules establish a procedure for obtaining such a finding, and the debtor is responsible for initiating that procedure. The court of appeals' waiver analysis has the practical effect of shifting to the creditor the burden that the Code and Rules place upon the debtor. By contrast, another provision of the same statutory section provides that certain non-dischargeable debts—but not student loan debts—are covered by a discharge order unless a creditor requests a hearing. The court of appeals' approach effectively subjects student loan debt to the same procedural regime, notwithstanding Congress's evident intent that the two categories of debt be treated differently.

[2] The court of appeals noted that some bankruptcy judges had announced that they would not confirm plans that purported to discharge student loan debts and that one bankruptcy judge had suggested that including such provisions in a proposed plan might subject a debtor's counsel to sanctions. Pet. App. 25-26. The court disapproved both practices, stating that "student loan debts can be discharged by way of a Chapter 13 plan" and that bankruptcy judges "have no business standing in the way" if a creditor fails to object. Id. at 26.

Petitioner was not required to appeal from the confirmation or discharge order to preserve its right to seek repayment of respondent's remaining student loan debt after the plan was completed. The Bankruptcy Code states that a discharge order "does not discharge an individual debtor from" most student loan debt "unless excepting such debt from discharge * * * would impose an undue hardship on the debtor and the debtor's dependents." 11 U.S.C. 523(a) and (8). This provision is framed as a self-executing limitation on the effect of a discharge order rather than as a directive to bankruptcy courts about what plans to confirm. By contrast, numerous other provisions of the Bankruptcy Code are framed as directives to the bankruptcy court. To the extent that Section 523(a) is ambiguous in this regard, construing that provision as a limitation on the legal effect of a discharge order serves Congress's purposes by preventing debtors from circumventing statutory bans on the discharge of other categories of debt, such as domestic support obligations.

B. Discharge of student loan debt without an undue hardship finding is inconsistent with the background and purposes of Section 523(a)(8). For more than 30 years, Congress has acted repeatedly to restrict the discharge of student loan debt in bankruptcy, both to prevent abuses of the student loan system by debtors and to safeguard the financial integrity of the government entities and nonprofit institutions that participate in it.

C. Treating an undue hardship finding as a precondition to discharge is fair to both debtors and creditors. Because student loan debt is presumptively non-dischargeable, it makes sense to place the onus on debtors to request an undue hardship determination rather than on creditors to scrutinize every one of the vast number of Chapter 13 plans that they receive. There is no reason to believe that involved proceedings will be necessary every time a debtor seeks an undue hardship determination. Requiring a debtor to obtain such a determination in order to discharge a student loan debt also avoids creating ethical quandaries for debtors' attorneys.

D. Because respondent did not initiate an adversary proceeding and the bankruptcy court made no undue hardship finding in this case, respondent's student loan debt has not been discharged, and petitioner did not violate the discharge injunction by seeking to collect that debt. The Court therefore need not address the question whether or under what circumstances the waiver rule announced by the Ninth Circuit might violate the Due Process Clause.

ARGUMENT

THE BANKRUPTCY COURT'S DISCHARGE ORDER DID NOT DISCHARGE RESPONDENT'S STUDENT LOAN DEBT BECAUSE THE COURT DID NOT FIND, PURSUANT TO THE PROCEDURES SPECIFIED IN THE BANKRUPTCY RULES, THAT FAILURE TO DO SO WOULD CREATE UNDUE HARDSHIP FOR THE DEBTOR AND HIS DEPENDENTS

A. Petitioner Was Not Required To Demand An Adversary Proceeding Or To Appeal From The Confirmation Or Discharge Order To Preserve Its Right To Collect The Remainder Of Respondent's Student Loan Debt After Respondent's Chapter 13 Plan Was Completed

Respondent's Chapter 13 plan proposed to pay $13,250 to petitioner in satisfaction of respondent's student loan debt and to discharge the remainder of that debt. J.A. 26. Respondent did not contend, however, that a failure to discharge the remaining debt would subject him to undue hardship; he did not initiate the adversary proceeding that the Bankruptcy Rules specify as the required mechanism for resolving issues of dischargeability; and the bankruptcy court made no undue hardship finding. In holding that the bankruptcy court's discharge order nevertheless precluded petitioner from attempting to collect the remaining debt, the court of appeals found that petitioner had forfeited its right to insist that the statutory prerequisite to discharge be satisfied by failing (a) to object to the plan during the bankruptcy court proceedings and (b) to appeal from the confirmation and discharge orders. Pet. App. 10-11, 14-16. That analysis is erroneous.

1. Petitioner did not waive its right to an undue hardship determination by failing to object to respondent's plan or to demand an adversary proceeding

The court of appeals stated that, when a creditor receives notice of a proposed Chapter 13 plan that provides for the discharge of student loan debt, the creditor can "insist on the special procedures available to student loan creditors by objecting to the plan on the ground that there has been no undue hardship finding." Pet. App. 10. The court further indicated that a creditor who fails to "insist" on an adversary proceeding in these circumstances thereby "waive[s] or forfeit[s]" any objection to discharge of the debt. Ibid. That analysis is inconsistent with the Bankruptcy Code, the Bankruptcy Rules, and this Court's decision in Tennessee Student Assistance Corp. v. Hood, 541 U.S. 440 (2004).

a. Section 523(c) provides that "the debtor shall be discharged" from debts that fall within three of the 19 categories of non-dischargeable debt specified in Section 523(a) "unless" the creditor requests a hearing to determine whether a particular debt falls within a relevant category. 11 U.S.C. 523(c).[3] Student loan debt, however, is not among the categories of debt to which Subsection (c) applies. The logical inference is that a creditor need not request a hearing in order to prevent student loan debt from being discharged in the absence of an undue hardship finding. Accord S. Rep. No. 989, 95th Cong., 2d Sess. 79 (1978) (Senate Report) (stating that, under Section 523(a)(8), "[t]he lender or institution is not required to file a complaint to determine the nondischargeability of any student loan"). The court of appeals' approach, which treats a student loan creditor's failure to "insist" on an adversary proceeding as a waiver of the creditor's objection to discharge, effectively subjects student loan debt to the same procedural regime that applies to the debts specified in Section 523(c), notwithstanding Congress's evident intent to distinguish between the two categories.

[3] The three categories are debts for things obtained by fraud or false pretenses (11 U.S.C. 523(a)(2)), debts "for fraud or defalcation while acting in a fiduciary capacity, embezzlement, or larceny" (11 U.S.C. 523(a)(4)), and debts "for willful and malicious injury by the debtor to another entity or to the property of another entity" (11 U.S.C. 523(a)(6)). See 11 U.S.C. 523(c).

b. The Bankruptcy Rules specify the procedures for resolving questions of dischargeability, including questions as to the presence or absence of "undue hardship" in student loan cases. Those Rules place the burden on the debtor to initiate an adversary proceeding through the filing of a complaint and service of the complaint and a summons. Fed. R. Bank. P. 7003, 7004. The practical effect of the court of appeals' approach is to reverse that burden by requiring the creditor either to demand an adversary proceeding or to forfeit his objection to discharge. Unlike notice of the plan itself, moreover, the summons and complaint must be specifically directed to an agent of the creditor who is "authorized by appointment or by law to receive service of process." Fed. R. Bankr. P. 7004(b)(3); see pp. 3-4, supra. Like the requirement that the debtor initiate the adversary process, that heightened notice requirement is effectively negated if providing notice of the plan to some other agent transfers to the student loan creditor the burden of objecting to the discharge.

The court of appeals found that, so long as petitioner had constitutionally adequate notice of respondent's Chapter 13 plan, its failure to demand an adversary proceeding could appropriately be treated as a waiver of any challenge to the dischargeability of respondent's student loan debt. Pet. App. 21. But the fact that an interested party has actual knowledge of pending legal proceedings does not mean, in and of itself, that the party's failure to assert its rights can be treated as a waiver. Rather, the determination whether a waiver has occurred may depend on whether the party has received the type of notice required by applicable law. See City of New York v. New York, New Haven & Hartford Railroad, 344 U.S. 293, 297 (1953) (holding, under the former Bankruptcy Act, that "even creditors who have knowledge of a reorganization have a right to assume that the statutory 'reasonable notice' will be given them before their claims are forever barred"); Martin v. Wilks, 490 U.S. 755, 765 (1989) (Under the Federal Rules of Civil Procedure, "[j]oinder as a party, rather than knowledge of a lawsuit and an opportunity to intervene, is the method by which potential parties are subjected to the jurisdiction of the court and bound by a judgment or decree."); Ruehle v. Educational Credit Mgmt. Corp. (In re Ruehle), 412 F.3d 679, 685 (6th Cir. 2005) (positing a hypothetical situation in which a plaintiff purported to commence a civil action by filing a motion and mailing it to the defendant). That principle applies with particular force here, where the Bankruptcy Rules squarely place the burden of initiating an adversary proceeding upon the debtor, and the effect of the court of appeals' waiver analysis is to shift that burden to the creditor.

c. This Court's decision in Hood confirms that it is the debtor's obligation to obtain an undue hardship finding rather than the creditor's obligation to insist on one. The Court in Hood held that "a proceeding initiated by a debtor to determine the dischargeability of a student loan debt [owed to a State] is not a suit against the State for purposes of the Eleventh Amendment." 541 U.S. at 443. In reaching that conclusion, the Court observed that, because a student loan debtor must "affirmatively secure[] a hardship determination" in order to obtain a discharge, "the major difference between the discharge of a student loan debt and the discharge of most other debts" is that student loan creditors who decline to participate in the bankruptcy proceedings "might still receive some benefit: The debtor's personal liability on the loan may survive the discharge." Id. at 450. The Court also noted, with apparent approval, the debtor's concession that "even if [the creditor] ignores the summons and chooses not to participate in the proceeding the Bankruptcy Court cannot discharge her debt without making an undue hardship determination." Id. at 453-454.

The Court in Hood thus recognized that an actual undue hardship finding by the bankruptcy court is an essential prerequisite to discharge of a student loan debt, even when the debtor properly initiates an adversary proceeding and the creditor does not object to discharge. It follows a fortiori that a debtor who does not initiate an adversary proceeding cannot obtain a discharge of his student loan debt without an undue hardship finding simply because the creditor does not "insist" on a proceeding that it is the debtor's duty to invoke.[4] [4] The court of appeals cited Hood's observation "that an adversary proceeding initiated by complaint and summons is not a statutory or constitutional prerequisite to adjudication of the discharge of a student loan." Pet. App. 17-18 (internal quotation marks and citation omitted); accord Hood, 541 U.S. at 453 ("The text of § 523(a)(8) does not require a summons, and absent [Federal Rule of Bankruptcy Procedure]

2. Petitioner was not required to appeal the confirmation or discharge order to preserve its right to collect respondent's remaining debt because, under the terms of the applicable Bankruptcy Code provisions, a discharge order does not discharge student loan debt in the absence of an undue hardship determination

The court of appeals also suggested (Pet. App. 10-11) that petitioner's failure to appeal either the confirmation or discharge order independently precluded it from seeking to collect respondent's remaining debt after the completion of respondent's plan. An appeal was unnecessary, however, because the discharge order ultimately entered in this case did not have the effect of discharging respondent's student loan debt.

a. The Bankruptcy Code provides that a discharge order "does not discharge" a covered student loan debt "unless excepting such debt from discharge * * * would impose an undue hardship on the debtor and the 7001(6) a debtor could proceed by motion."). But while the details of the procedural scheme are set forth in the Rules rather than the Code, the Court in Hood made clear that the statute imposes the basic requirement that the debtor must "affirmatively secure[] a hardship determination." Id. at 450. The court of appeals' approach, under which the debtor's submission of a plan that provides for discharge of student loan debt shifts to the creditor the burden of objecting, is thus inconsistent with the Code as well as with the Rules. In addition, the heightened notice requirements described above still would apply even if the Bankruptcy Rules did permit a debtor to seek to discharge a student loan debt by filing a motion rather than commencing an adversary proceeding. See Fed. R. Bankr. P. 9014(b) (providing that a "motion shall be served in the manner provided for service of a summons and complaint by Rule 7004").

debtor's dependents." 11 U.S.C. 523(a) and (a)(8).[5] This provision is not framed as a directive to the bankruptcy court. Instead, it is a "self-executing" limitation on the effect of a discharge order. Hood, 541 U.S. at 450; accord Senate Report 79 (describing Section 523(a)(8) as "self-executing"). Accordingly, the most natural reading of Section 523(a)(8) is that, "[u]nless the debtor affirmatively secures a hardship determination, the discharge order will not include a student loan debt." Hood, 541 U.S. at 450; see id. at 444 (describing Section 523(a)(8) as providing that covered student loans "are not included in a general discharge order unless the bankruptcy court" makes an "undue hardship" finding).

Unlike Section 523(a), other provisions of the Bankruptcy Code are framed as directives to the bankruptcy court. Another provision in the same statutory Section provides that "the court shall" award costs and fees to the debtor in certain circumstances and "shall not award" costs and fees in other circumstances. 11 U.S.C. 523(d). Other provisions of the Bankruptcy Code, including provisions in Chapter 13, also provide that bankruptcy courts "shall not"[6] or "may not"[7] do certain things. Another provision states that an action "does not" have a certain effect "[u]nless the [bankruptcy] court, for cause, orders otherwise." 11 U.S.C. 349. In contrast, Section 523(a)(8) states that a discharge order "does not" have a certain effect "unless" a particular condition is satisfied.

[5] Section 523(a)(8) is not by its terms directly applicable to Chapter 13 cases in which the debtor successfully completes performance under a confirmed plan. Instead, Section 523(a)(8) is incorporated via Section 1328, which provides that "the court shall grant the debtor a discharge of all debts provided for by the plan or disallowed under section 502 of this title, except any debt * * * of the kind specified in" eight enumerated paragraphs of Section 523(a). 11 U.S.C. 1328(a) and (a)(2). "The effect of this [provision] is to exclude from the full-compliance discharge [under Chapter 13] those debts for educational loans that are nondischargeable under section 523(a)(8)." 8 Collier ¶ 1328.02[3][h], at 1328-20; accord Br. in Opp. 6 n.3 (describing Section 1328(a)(2) as "making § 523(a)(8) applicable in Chapter 13 cases").

That difference is significant. As the court of appeals explained, a final judgment is ordinarily binding, and an injunction must be obeyed, even if the issuing court has exceeded its authority or has committed legal error in the course of adjudicating the suit. Pet. App. 10-11. "[A] final judgment cannot be ignored or set aside just because it was the result of an error," but rather "must be corrected by way of a timely appeal." Id. at 11; see Travelers Indem. Co. v. Bailey, 129 S. Ct. 2195, 2205 (2009). Under the statutory provisions governing discharge of student loan debt, however, petitioner was not required to appeal either the confirmation or the discharge order in order to preserve its right to collect respondent's debt after the Chapter 13 plan had been completed. Such an appeal was unnecessary because, in the absence of an undue hardship finding, a bankruptcy discharge "does not discharge an individual debtor from any debt" (11 U.S.C. 523(a)) for student loans covered by Section 523(a)(8).

The court of appeals emphasized that a "discharge injunction" comes "into force by operation of law upon entry of the discharge" and "preclud[es] the creditor, on pain of contempt, from taking any actions to enforce the discharged debt." Pet. App. 13. As the court of appeals' own description recognizes, however, the discharge injunction under the Bankruptcy Code is limited by its terms to "actions to enforce the discharged debt." Ibid. (emphasis added); see 11 U.S.C. 524(a)(1) (referring to "any debt discharged under section * * * 1328 of this title"), 524(a)(2) (discharge "operates as an injunction against" any act "to collect, recover or offset any such debt"). Because the effect of Section 523(a)(8) was to prevent the discharge from encompassing respondent's student loan debt in the absence of an undue hardship finding, the discharge injunction likewise did not cover that debt.

b. To the extent that the statutory language is otherwise ambiguous, this reading of Section 523(a) effectuates the intent of Congress by preventing debtors from evading statutory prohibitions on the discharge of other categories of debt. For example, Section 523(a)(1)(B)-(C) provides that a discharge order "does not discharge" specified types of tax debt; Section 523(a)(5) provides that it "does not discharge * * * any debt * * * for a domestic support obligation"; and Section 523(a)(9) provides that it "does not discharge" debts "caused by" the debtor's unlawful operation of a motor vehicle while impaired by drugs or alcohol. See 11 U.S.C. 1328(a)(2) (making those provisions applicable to Chapter 13 proceedings such as this one). As with student loan debt, those debts are not among the categories for which Section 523(c)(1) requires the creditor to object to discharge.

By rendering certain debts completely non-dischargeable, those provisions reflect Congress's determination that the compelling societal interests in the satisfaction of such obligations should take precedence over the debtor's interest in obtaining a fresh start in bankruptcy. The Ninth Circuit's analysis, however, invites debtors to attempt to escape liability for debts within those categories as well as for student loan debt (which can lawfully be discharged if the debtor initiates an adversary proceeding and the bankruptcy court makes an undue hardship finding). As here, the debtor could include language in a proposed bankruptcy plan stating that confirmation of the plan would extinguish the relevant debts. Then, if the creditor did not object and the plan was confirmed and subsequently completed, the debtor could argue that the debts had been discharged and that the discharge (though illegal) was not subject to later reexamination. In a prior decision, the Ninth Circuit acknowledged that possibility but stated only that it "d[id] not address any of the public policy concerns that might impact the dischargeability of such obligations as alimony or child support." Great Lakes Higher Educ. Corp. v. Pardee (In re Pardee), 193 F.3d 1083, 1087 n.6 (1999). In contrast, no such difficulties arise if Section 523(a) is understood to limit the legal effect of a discharge order rather than to provide direction to bankruptcy courts about what plans to confirm.

c. On the facts of this case, it is particularly clear that petitioner's failure to take an appeal did not effect a forfeiture of its right to collect the unpaid portion of respondent's student loan debt after the completion of the plan. The discharge order entered in May 1997 expressly excluded "any debt * * * for a student loan" from the categories of debts being discharged. J.A. 46. A different bankruptcy judge subsequently concluded that this exclusion was a "clerical mistake," J.A. 48, and the court of appeals accepted that characterization. It is at least equally plausible, however, that the bankruptcy court in issuing the discharge order recognized (perhaps belatedly) that, in the absence of an undue hardship finding, any unpaid student loan debt could not be discharged. In any event, petitioner's failure to appeal a discharge order that specifically excluded the debt at issue here cannot reasonably be viewed as a waiver of its right to pursue continued collection efforts.

d. The court of appeals relied (Pet. App. 35) on 11 U.S.C. 1327(a), which states that "[t]he provisions of a confirmed plan bind the debtor and each creditor, whether or not the claim of such creditor is provided for by the plan, and whether or not such creditor has objected to, has accepted, or has rejected the plan." The issue before the Court, however, does not involve whether the plan was binding on petitioner and respondent, since respondent does not contend that petitioner violated the plan's terms while it was in effect. Instead, the question here involves the legal effect of the discharge order that the bankruptcy court entered upon respondent's completion of the plan. With respect to that question, Section 523(a)(8), not Section 1327(a), is the controlling provision.

In any event, any possible tension between Section 523(a)(8) and Section 1327(a) is properly resolved by the "commonplace of statutory construction that the specific governs the general." Morales v. TWA, 504 U.S. 374, 384 (1992). Section 523(a)(8) is the more specific provision because it directly addresses the circumstances under which a bankruptcy court's discharge order discharges a particular type of presumptively non-dischargeable debt. In contrast, Section 1327(a) prescribes the general effects of plan confirmation as between the debtor and creditor, and it does not address any limits on the legal effect of a bankruptcy court's discharge order.[8]

B. Permitting Discharge Of Student Loan Debt Without An Undue Hardship Finding Is Inconsistent With The Background And Purposes Of Section 523(a)(8)

Until 1977, student loans were dischargeable in bankruptcy on the same terms as other debts. See 11 U.S.C. 35 (1976) (listing non-dischargeable debts). Since then, Congress has acted repeatedly to restrict the discharge of student loan debt in bankruptcy. The history and purposes of those enactments confirm that a discharge order does not discharge a student loan debt unless the bankruptcy court finds that failure to do so will result in undue hardship to the debtor and his dependents.

1. In 1976, Congress enacted legislation "making it more difficult for debtors to discharge student loans guaranteed by States." Hood, 541 U.S. at 449. That statute provided that such debt "may be released by a discharge in bankruptcy * * * only if" (1) the loan had been outstanding for more than five years as of the discharge date, or (2) "the court in which the proceeding [was] pending determine[d] that payment from future income or other wealth w[ould] impose an undue hardship on the debtor or his dependents." Education

[8] Neither the court of appeals nor respondent has relied upon Section 1327(b) or (c), which together provide that confirmation of a Chapter 13 plan generally "vests all of the property of the estate in the debtor" and does so "free and clear of any claim or interest of any creditor provided for by the plan." 11 U.S.C. 1327(b)-(c). Like Section 1327(a), these provisions do not specifically address debts that are excepted from discharge by Section 523(a).

Amendments of 1976, Pub. L. No. 94-482, § 439A(a), 90 Stat. 2141.

In 1978, Congress replaced the Bankruptcy Act with the Bankruptcy Code, which contained a provision whose wording closely paralleled current Section 523(a)(8). That provision stated that "[a] discharge under" three specified sections of the Bankruptcy Code "d[id] not discharge an individual debtor from any debt * * * to a governmental unit, or a nonprofit institution of higher education, for an educational loan, unless" one of two conditions was met. Bankruptcy Reform Act of 1978, Pub. L. No. 95-598, § 101, 92 Stat. 2590-2591. The first basis for discharge under the original Bankruptcy Code was that the "loan first became due before five years * * * before the date of the filing of the petition." 11 U.S.C. 523(a)(8)(A) (1982). The second basis was worded identically to current Section 523(a)(8): "unless * * * excepting such debt from discharge * * * will impose an undue hardship on the debtor and the debtor's dependents." Ibid.

Since 1978, Congress has consistently expanded the scope of non-dischargeability of student loan debt. In 1990, Congress extended Section 523(a)(8)'s restrictions to discharge orders entered under Section 1328(a), which governs discharges (like the one at issue here) entered following completion of a Chapter 13 plan. Student Loan Default Prevention Initiative Act of 1990, Pub. L. No. 101-508, § 3007(b), 104 Stat. 1388-28. That same year, Congress also increased the required waiting period in the absence of undue hardship from five years to seven years. Federal Debt Collection Procedures Act of 1990, Pub. L. No. 101-647, § 3621(1)-(2), 104 Stat. 4964-4965. In 1998, Congress eliminated the provision authorizing time-based discharge of student loan debt, thus creating the current regime under which all discharges of such debt require an undue hardship finding. Higher Education Amendments of 1998, Pub. L. No. 105-244, § 971(a), 112 Stat. 1837.[9]

2. The consistent direction of these changes and the reasons underlying them refute any suggestion that debtors can obtain a discharge of student loan debt without an undue hardship determination. "[S]tudent loans are enabling loans [that] allow[] individuals to improve their own human capital and increase their income potential." Educational Credit Mgmt. Corp. v. Mersmann (In re Mersmann), 505 F.3d 1033, 1042 (10th Cir. 2007) (en banc) (internal quotation marks and citation omitted). Because the principal benefit of student loans—that is, an education—cannot be seized in the event of a default, policymakers feared that, without federal guarantees, "most lenders would * * * refuse to fund a student's pursuit of higher education." Ibid. (quoting Seth J. Gerson, Separate Classifications of Student Loans in Chapter 13, 73 Wash. U. L.Q. 269, 280 (1995)). As a result, the United States "insures or guarantees lenders and guarantors that the government will repay student loans in the event of a borrower's default." Ibid.

The current restrictions on dischargeability of student loan debt in bankruptcy thus serve two fundamental purposes. First, they "prevent[] abuses of the educational loan system by restricting the ability to discharge a student loan shortly after a student's graduation." 4 Collier ¶ 523.14[1], at 523-101 (June 2007). Second, they "safeguard[] the financial integrity of governmental entities and nonprofit institutions that participate in educational loan programs." Ibid.

[9] Because the bankruptcy court's discharge order was entered in 1997, see J.A. 47, the 1998 amendments are not directly applicable to this case. There is no dispute, however, that respondent was ineligible for a time-based discharge under the pre-1998 version of the statute.

Permitting debtors to discharge student loan debt without obtaining the undue hardship determination mandated by Section 523(a)(8) is inconsistent with both purposes. So long as the immediate creditor fails to object, the Ninth Circuit's approach would permit a debtor to obtain a binding discharge of student loan debt immediately upon his graduation and without any determination of undue hardship. Indeed, respondent appears to be precisely the sort of debtor for whom Congress did not intend to authorize a discharge of student loan debt. Respondent sought bankruptcy protection less than five years after he obtained his first student loan. Pet. App. 60-61. At the time he filed for bankruptcy, moreover, respondent was employed, J.A. 21, did not assert that he had any dependents, and identified no specific debts beyond his student loans, J.A. 7.

C. Treating An Undue Hardship Finding As A Precondition To Discharge Is Fair To Both Debtors And Creditors

1. Requiring a Chapter 13 debtor to "affirmatively secure[] a hardship determination" (Hood, 541 U.S. at 450) in order to discharge a student loan debt makes sense because, as a practical matter, student loan creditors cannot conduct a timely and thorough review of every Chapter 13 plan that they receive. See Ruehle, 412 F.3d at 681 (noting that student loan creditors "receive tidal waves of mail"). We are advised that Chapter 13 plans often are mailed only to payment service subcontractors, and that those subcontractors cannot practicably forward those plans promptly enough to permit timely scrutiny by knowledgeable staff members before the date of the confirmation hearing. See Fed. R.

Bankr. P. 2002(b) (providing that notice must be given "not less than 25 days" before the deadline for filing objections). And even when those staff members do timely receive Chapter 13 plans for review, thorough scrutiny of the plan may be impracticable because "there is no fixed form that [the] plan must take, and debtors are allowed to tailor their plans to meet their own needs and circumstances." 8 Collier ¶ 1322.01, at 1322-6 to 1322-6.1 (Sept. 2006). In contrast, the procedures for commencing an adversary proceeding are designed to ensure that the appropriate individuals receive prompt and effective notice of the debtor's intent to seek discharge of a presumptively non-dischargeable student loan debt. See, e.g., Fed. R. Bankr. P. 7004(b)(3) (requiring service on "an officer, a managing or general agent, or * * * any other agent authorized by appointment or by law to receive service of process"); Fed. R. Bankr. P. 7008 (incorporating Federal Rule of Civil Procedure 8, and thus requiring that an adversary complaint contain "a short and plain statement of the claim" (Fed. R. Civ. P. 8(a)(2) and "a demand for the relief sought" (Fed. R. Civ. P. 8(a)(3)).

Requiring the debtor to seek an undue hardship determination will not necessitate lengthy or complicated proceedings. A creditor may choose not to contest undue hardship once the issue properly is raised if it concludes that such a finding is warranted or that the costs of contesting the existence of undue hardship would exceed the benefits. Cf. 34 C.F.R. 682.402(i)(1)(iii) (Department of Education regulation permitting, but not requiring, a guaranty agency to refrain from opposing an undue hardship determination if it concludes that "the expected costs of opposing the discharge petition would exceed one-third of the total amount owed on the loan"). The Federal Rules of Bankruptcy Procedure do not forbid stipulations, and they expressly authorize requests for admission, Fed. R. Bankr. P. 7036, default judgments, Fed. R. Bankr. P. 7055, and summary judgment, Fed. R. Bankr. P. 7056. Although the bankruptcy court must make an explicit undue hardship finding to discharge student loan debt even if the creditor does not object (see p. 16, supra), that finding can be made expeditiously.

2. The conclusion that debtors may not discharge a student loan debt simply by including language in a proposed Chapter 13 plan also avoids creating ethical difficulties for debtors' attorneys. As this Court stated in Hood, the Bankruptcy Rules "require[] the debtor to file an 'adversary proceeding' against [a creditor] in order to discharge his student loan debt," and the Bankruptcy Code provides that a "Bankruptcy Court cannot discharge [such a] debt without making an undue hardship determination." 541 U.S. at 451, 453-454.

The Ninth Circuit's approach encourages debtors' attorneys to seek to evade both of those requirements by including "plainly illegal provision[s]" in bankruptcy plans. Ruehle, 412 F.3d at 681. Doing so, however, would implicate Federal Rule of Bankruptcy Procedure 9011(b)(2), which states that, by presenting a document to a bankruptcy court, an attorney certifies that "the claims, defenses, and other legal contentions therein are warranted by existing law or by a nonfrivolous argument for the extension, modification, or reversal of existing law." In addition, the approach approved by the court of appeals depends for its success on the prospect that the bankruptcy court will not become aware of the illegal provisions in time to perform its independent duty to confirm only those plans that "compl[y] with the provisions of" the Bankruptcy Code. 11 U.S.C. 1325(a)(1); see Johnson v. Home State Bank, 501 U.S. 78, 87 (1991) (stating that "[a] bankruptcy court is authorized to confirm a [Chapter 13] plan only if the court finds" that it complies with the requirements set forth in Section 1325(a)) (emphasis added). The Bankruptcy Code should not be construed to encourage "practice by ambush." Whelton v. Educational Credit Mgmt. Corp., 432 F.3d 150, 153 (2d Cir. 2005) (citation omitted).

3. The principle that "student loan debt remains due until there is a determination that the loan is dischargeable," 4 Collier ¶ 523.14[2], at 523-102, is fair to the debtor's other creditors and to the debtor himself. Because a debtor does not receive a discharge under Chapter 13 until after performance under the plan is complete, 11 U.S.C. 1328(a), a subsequent determination that the discharge order did not effectively discharge the debtor's student loan debt will not affect payments made under the plan to other creditors. The Bankruptcy Code, moreover, imposes no time limit within which an undue hardship determination must be made. Accordingly, a debtor who legitimately qualifies for a discharge of student loan debt but has failed to secure the necessary hardship determination need only do what he should have done in the first place: return to the bankruptcy court and commence an adversary proceeding. See Pet. App. 60 (district court remanding to the bankruptcy court for an undue-hardship determination). In contrast, a debtor who cannot demonstrate undue hardship is prevented from obtaining a windfall to which he is not entitled.

D. Because Respondent Did Not Initiate The Appropriate Procedure For Securing An Undue Hardship Finding And The Bankruptcy Court Made No Such Finding In This Case, Respondent's Student Loan Debt Has Not Been Discharged And The Court Need Not Address The Constitutional Question Presented In The Petition

This Court need not address petitioner's additional contention (Br. 51-58) that the notice it received of respondent's Chapter 13 plan failed to satisfy constitutional due process requirements. Consistent with the Constitution, Congress could have included student loan debt among the debts listed in Section 523(c)(1), for which a creditor must either raise or forfeit its objection to dischargeability. See p. 13 & n.3, supra. Had Congress done so, it also could have provided that mailing a student loan creditor notice of a proposed plan at an appropriate address is sufficient to trigger the creditor's duty to contest discharge. See Jones v. Flowers, 547 U.S. 220, 225-226 (2006) (stating that "due process does not require actual notice" and noting "this Court's ample precedent condoning notice by mail"). Thus, the procedural regime that effectively results from the court of appeals' ruling here would raise no substantial constitutional concerns if Congress had enacted it into law, thereby giving student loan creditors fair warning of the steps needed to preserve their rights to payment.

As explained above, however, the Bankruptcy Code does not require creditors to object to the debtor's plan to preserve the non-dischargeability of student loan debt, but rather places upon student loan debtors an affirmative duty to secure an undue hardship finding as a prerequisite to discharge. In addition, the Bankruptcy Rules require a particular type of notice (service of an adversary complaint upon specified agents of the creditor) in order to commence proceedings to adjudicate the dischargeability of a student loan debt, and they provide that a creditor's obligation to respond within the context of such a proceeding does not arise until a complaint "is duly served." Fed. R. Bankr. P. 7012(a). The Code and Rules thus assure student loan creditors that their right to full payment will not be placed at issue unless and until the creditor is informed, in compliance with the Rules' heightened notice requirement, that the debtor has sought an undue hardship finding. The gravamen of petitioner's constitutional challenge is that respondent's failure to initiate an adversary proceeding as required by the Code and Rules deprived petitioner of the process it was due. See Pet. Br. 54-55.

The Code and Rule provisions on which petitioner relies make clear, however, that petitioner did not waive its right to pursue continued collection efforts by failing to insist on an adversary proceeding. See pp. 13-16, supra. And under Section 523(a)(8), the proceedings in the bankruptcy court did not effect a discharge of respondent's unpaid student loan debt. See pp. 17-23, supra. It is therefore unnecessary for the Court to decide whether petitioner would have suffered a deprivation of constitutional magnitude if its right to seek further repayment had been abrogated without the notice and procedures that the Code and Rules require for a discharge of student loan debt.

This Court's usual practice is to avoid deciding constitutional questions whenever possible, see, e.g., Northwest Austin Mun. Util. Dist. No. One v. Holder, 129 S. Ct. 2504, 2508, 2513 (2009), and there is no reason to depart from that practice here. To the contrary, withholding decision on any constitutional issue would be particularly appropriate because of the atypical facts of this case. It is undisputed that petitioner's litigation department received actual notice of respondent's Chapter 13 plan, the deadline for filing objections, and the date of the confirmation hearing. Pet. App. 21; see J.A. 34. In many other cases, however, it will not be possible to show that the creditor received actual notice. See pp. 26-27, supra.

CONCLUSION

The judgment of the court of appeals should be reversed.

Respectfully submitted.

Civil Action No. 98-AP-1345

BRIEF FOR APPELLANT, UNITED STATES TRUSTEE

The United States Trustee respectfully submits this opening brief in support of her appeal from the bankruptcy court's June 16, 1998 order and judgment denying her motion to dismiss under 11 U.S.C. § 707(a).[1]

STATEMENT OF JURISDICTION

The bankruptcy court had jurisdiction over this matter pursuant to 28 U.S.C. §§ 157(b) and 1334. On June 19, 1998, the United States Trustee filed a timely notice of appeal (App. 8) from the bankruptcy court's June 16th judgment, in accordance with Rule 8002 of the Federal Rules of Bankruptcy Procedure ("Fed. R. Bankr. P."). This Court possesses jurisdiction over the appeal by virtue of 28 U.S.C. § 158(a).

STATEMENT OF THE ISSUE

Whether the bankruptcy court erred, as a matter of law, in holding that "bad faith" can never constitute "cause" for dismissal of a bankruptcy petition under 11 U.S.C. § 707(a).

STATEMENT OF THE STANDARD OF REVIEW

On appeal, findings of fact may not be set aside unless clearly erroneous, but a bankruptcy court's conclusions of law and statutory interpretations are subject to de novo review. Hall v. Vance, 887 F.2d 1041, 1043 (10th Cir. 1989); Branding Iron Motel, Inc. v. Sandlian Equity Co., Inc. (In re Branding Iron Motel, Inc.), 798 F.2d 396, 399-400 (10th Cir. 1986); accord Fed. R. Bankr. P. 8013. The disposition of a motion to dismiss under 11 U.S.C. § 707(a) is reviewed for abuse of discretion. E.g., Industrial Insurance Services, Inc. v. Zick (In re Zick), 931 F.2d 1124, 1126 (6th Cir. 1990), citing In re Atlas Supply Corp., 857 F.2d 1061, 1063 (5th Cir.1988).

STATEMENT OF THE CASE

I. Nature Of The Case

Dr. Etcheverry filed a chapter 7 liquidation petition on December 19, 1997, seeking to discharge his debts. See Appellate Exhibit 3, at App. 10, et seq. At that time, his bankruptcy schedules listed assets and debts of $51,479 and $670,702, respectively (App. 21, Summary of Schedules). The single largest unsecured debt for which there is a scheduled amount involves a claim of approximately $113,048 (App. 26, Schedule F), arising from a Florida state court judgment entered on September 5, 1996 in a tort case against the debtor involving an automobile accident. McBeath v.

Etcheverry, No. 94-5520-CA-25 (11th Jud. Cir., Dade County). The chapter 7 bankruptcy trustee assigned to administer the estate notified the United States Trustee's Office that dismissal might be warranted because the debtor had apparently understated assets, overstated expenses, and filed bankruptcy primarily to evade his Florida judgment creditor. The United States Trustee filed a motion to dismiss the petition for bad faith under 11 U.S.C. § 707(a), but the bankruptcy court held, as a matter of law, that bad faith can never constitute "cause" for dismissal under section 707(a).

II. Statement Of The Facts

Debtor is the sole shareholder of a closely-held professional corporation — "Aurelio Etcheverry, D.O., P.C." — by which he and his (non-debtor) wife have been employed as physician and office manager, respectively. Dr. and Mrs. Etcheverry reside at 290 Chinle Court, Grand Junction, a sizable house of approximately 3,000 square feet, with a three-car garage and pool, built in 1994. App. 29-30. Their home is located in a fashionable neighborhood and has an appraised value of at least a quarter-million dollars according to local land records, although the debtor admits that his residence is mortgaged for over $367,000.[2/] Accord App. 25 (Schedule D).

According to the Statement of Financial Affairs in his December 1997 bankruptcy schedules, the debtor's "W-2 wages" in 1997 and 1996, respectively, were $105,000 and $73,500. App. 15. Although the schedules required debtor to disclose his gross income "during the two years immediately preceding this calendar year," id., Dr. Etcheverry neglected to state his 1995 income. When pressed

See 341 Meeting at 7-8, App. 76-77. However, debtor subsequently acknowledged in a May 1998 affidavit that:

> [m]y income has not changed substantially in the last several years, although it is now reported differently for tax purposes since my medical practice changed in 1995 from a sole-proprietorship to a professional corporation.

See Debtor's May 28, 1998 affidavit in Adversary Proceeding No. 98-1204-PAC (Bankr. D. Colo.), at 1, ¶ 4, reproduced at App. 47.

On September 5, 1996 — about a year before filing for bankruptcy — a final judgment for $199,900 was entered against the debtor by a Florida state court in the McBeath personal injury action.[4/] That judgment states, in pertinent part, as follows:

> PURSUANT to Demand for Judgment . . . it is hereby:
> ORDERED AND ADJUDGED that Plaintiff, Denise DePasquale McBeath . . . recover from Defendant, Aurelio Etcheverry, the sum of One Hundred Ninety-Nine Thousand Nine Hundred Dollars ($199,900.00), that shall bear interest at the rate of ten percent (10%) per year, for which sum let execution issue.

App. 50. After his insurance carrier paid $100,000 of the Florida judgment, the debtor offered to contribute only $25,000 toward the balance of the judgment, which offer was rejected by the judgment creditor. See, e.g., Tr. at App. 67-71; accord Sept. 16, 1996 letter at App. 51-52. On or about December 5, 1997, a writ of garnishment was issued by the Mesa County District Court against the debtor's bank account, which allegedly held a $3,435.36 paycheck from his medical professional corporation. Two weeks later, on December 19, 1997, the debtor filed for bankruptcy. See Tr. at App. 72-73; accord 341 Meeting at App. 75, & Schedules at App. 17, ¶ 4b.

By February 1998, the United States Trustee's Office became concerned that dismissal of the petition might be warranted because, among other things, the debtor's income seemed to be understated in the schedules while certain expenses appeared overstated, the debtor had made no significant adjustments to a lavish pre-petition lifestyle, and the filing appeared principally designed to thwart the efforts of debtor's judgment creditor to collect on her personal injury award. In March 1998, after further review, the United States Trustee filed a § 707(a) motion to dismiss "for cause" because of bad faith associated with the filing of debtor's petition. See App. 89, reproducing 11 U.S.C. § 707.

For example, while Dr. Etcheverry purportedly transferred all his title to the family home to his wife — by quit claim deed, for no consideration, on September 28, 1994 (App. 32) — his bankruptcy schedules list home mortgage payments, totaling about $3,447 per month, among Dr. Etcheverry's personal debts.[5/] His schedules also reflect indebtedness for monthly homeowner's insurance premiums, the cost of two house-cleaners, as well as lawn and pool maintenance payments, all in connection with a house he claims is not his property.[6]

On the other side of the ledger, the debtor's bankruptcy schedules did not list any vehicles among his assets. Yet, the debtor and his wife enjoy the use of two late-model luxury motor vehicles — a 1996 Saab and 1996 Toyota Land Cruiser — which the professional corporation began leasing in March and June 1996. Tr. at App. 64-66. Although the debtor admitted at the § 341 meeting that he has possession of both vehicles every day and that they are parked in his garage every night, neither vehicle was listed among his assets, either as property owned outright or as property held for another.[7] Nonetheless, while nominally rented by his private corporation, the debtor lists debts of $36,805.74 and $33,543.95 as his personal "Guarantee[s] of Professional Corporation automobile lease[s]." App. 26 (Schedule F).

Moreover, the debtor incredulously valued his joint "general household furnishings" at a mere $1,500 — notwithstanding that he and his wife reside in a fashionable neighborhood of luxury homes valued at or over a quarter-million dollars. Indeed, Schedule F of the debtor's bankruptcy petition reflects a debt of $3,930.87 alone for his satellite dish, which appears to be included within the schedules' definition of the term "[h]ousehold goods and furnishings."[8]

Based upon such questionable entries in the debtor's bankruptcy schedules and an apparent lack of good faith in filing, the United States Trustee lodged a motion to dismiss under 11 U.S.C. § 707(a), as next briefly addressed.[9]

III. Course Of Proceedings And Decision Below

In her March 27, 1998 motion to dismiss, the United States Trustee "assert[ed] that this case should be dismissed under 11 U.S.C. § 707(a) in that the petition is not brought in good faith." Motion to Dismiss at 1, ¶ 4. Based upon the schedules and other evidence recounted above, the United States Trustee alleged that the "[d]ebtor maintains a lavish lifestyle a[nd] exhibits the income with which he can pay his current debt," and that a review of the schedules suggests that the "debtor's income is understated . . . [and his] expenses are overstated" — as the court below itself apparently recognized

App. 27, Schedule F at 2 (listing a Sept. 1994 home loan of $3,930.87 for debtor's satellite dish).

[9] This case was not appropriate for a § 707(b) motion to dismiss for "substantial abuse," because subsection (b) only applies in cases involving "primarily consumer debts," as defined in 11 U.S.C. § 101(8). Here, by contrast, most debts appeared to be non-consumer debts, such as the $113,000 balance due on the Florida judgment, pending malpractice litigation in an unknown amount, related legal fees, business credit lines, about $70,000 in guarantees for vehicles leased to debtor's corporation, and $102,044 for repayment of an income-guarantee agreement with a community hospital. E.g., App. 18, 26-27.

at the hearing.[10] Furthermore, the debtor's bankruptcy petition (which was filed just two weeks after his Florida accident victim garnished a paycheck) appears to have been designed to preclude recovery by one creditor, while maintaining the debtor's lifestyle unaltered in most other respects. Id. at 2, ¶ 10; accord Tr. at App. 61-65.

Following a June 8 hearing, the bankruptcy court denied the United States Trustee's motion to dismiss on June 16, 1998 as a matter of law and without even reaching the facts. Guiding the court's decision was the (erroneous) legal view that there is no good-faith requirement in 11 U.S.C. § 707(a), notwithstanding substantial case law to the contrary. Indeed, in so ruling, Bankruptcy Judge Brumbaugh expressly acknowledged that "Judge Brooks of this Court has held that there is such a requirement" in two prior cases in this District, i.e.: In re Hammonds, 139 B.R. 535 (Bankr. Colo. 1992), and In re Tanenbaum, 210 B.R. 182 (Bankr. Colo. 1997). See Memorandum Opinion and Order ("slip op.") at 1 (June 16, 1998), reproduced at App. 1 & 6. The court explained its legal conclusion that there is no "good faith" requirement in § 707(a) in the following terms:

> There is absolutely no provision in the Bankruptcy Code that would prevent or deter a debtor from filing a Chapter 7 case if he had the ability to repay some debt and could still maintain a comfortable lifestyle. . . . [It] is not for the courts to insert that "means test" into the Code. In fact, at this very moment, Congress is debating whether or not it should write such a provision in the Code.

[10] Id. at 1-2, ¶¶ 4-8; accord Tr. at App. 59-60 ("THE COURT: . . . You're listing expenses, but you're not listing those PC payments on your income Schedule. Your income -- you're drawing seven grand a month, less withholding. DR. ETCHEVERRY: Right. THE COURT: But the PC is paying for a lot of this other stuff that is really income to you. DR. ETCHEVERRY: That's correct. THE COURT: But you don't list that as income. DR. ETCHEVERRY: Well -- THE COURT: So your income is not $4,964.50 a month, it's $4,964.50 a month, plus whatever payments the PC is making on your behalf. DR. ETCHEVERRY: That is true.") (emphasis added).

> . . . If Congress had wanted a "substantial abuse" provision in § 707(a)[,] they could have inserted it as they did in § 707(b), but they did not do so. . . . [T]his Court holds that there is not a "good faith" requirement contained in 11 U.S.C. § 707(a). Rather, this Court adopts . . . the reasoning of . . . In re Latimer, 82 B.R. 354 (Bankr. E.D. Penn.1988), and In re Landes, 195 B.R. 855 (Bankr. E.D. Penn. 1996).

Id. at 3, App. 3 & 6-7 (emphasis added).

The court further suggested that, in lieu of a § 707(a) motion to dismiss, any relief must be limited to more "specific" Code remedies, "such as disallowance of claimed exemptions, determination of non-dischargeability, or denial or revocation of a discharge" pursuant, e.g., to 11 U.S.C. §§ 522, 523, 727. Slip op. at 2, App. 2, citing In re Khan, 172 B.R. 613 (Bankr. D. Minn. 1994). Because the bankruptcy court seriously erred as a matter of law, the United States Trustee filed this appeal to resolve the intra-district conflict created by the decision below.

SUMMARY OF THE ARGUMENT

Section 707(a) of the Bankruptcy Code authorizes dismissal of a chapter 7 petition "for cause." As used in the statute, "cause" for dismissal includes (but is not limited to) a debtor's unreasonable delay, nonpayment of fees, and/or failure to file required schedules of assets-and- liabilities and the like. Thus, far from having an unlimited right to liquidate their debts, debtors can be denied relief under chapter 7 if a petition reflects an improper use of the Code.

The narrow question presented by this case is whether a dismissal "for cause" under § 707(a) can ever be based upon a debtor's "bad faith." The court below broadly answered this question in the negative, holding that — as a pure matter of law and without even considering the facts of this case — there is no clean-hands requirement in chapter 7, and a debtor's bad faith can never warrant dismissal under § 707(a). In so ruling, the court below not only departed from two prior bankruptcy decisions within this District reaching precisely the opposite result, but it also erred as a matter of law. This Court should thus reverse and remand with instructions that the bankruptcy court specifically address the facts of record and dismiss debtor's petition if it was, indeed, tainted by bad faith, as more fully demonstrated below.

ARGUMENT

I. Bad Faith Is A Ground For Dismissal "For Cause" Under 11 U.S.C. § 707(a) And The Court Below Erred, As A Matter Of Law, In Holding Otherwise

Section 707(a) of the Bankruptcy Code of 1978, as amended, 11 U.S.C. § 101, et seq., provides that a bankruptcy court > may dismiss a case under this chapter only after notice and a hearing and only for cause, including —

> (1) unreasonable delay by the debtor that is prejudicial to creditors;
> (2) nonpayment of any fees or charges required under chapter 123 of title 28; and
> (3) failure of the debtor in a voluntary case to file . . . the information required by paragraph (1) of section 521, but only on a motion by the United States Trustee.

11 U.S.C. § 707(a) (emphasis added); accord 11 U.S.C. § 521(1) ("The debtor shall . . . file a list of creditors, . . . a schedule of assets and liabilities, a schedule of current income and current expenditures, and a statement of the debtor's financial affairs"). As its plain text states, section 707(a) permits a case to be dismissed upon any ground constituting "cause," and the statute sets out a few non-exclusive examples — such as unreasonable delay, nonpayment of fees, or failure to provide required schedules and other information. The legislative history of section 707(a), too, makes it clear that the list of grounds supporting a "for cause" dismissal is merely "illustrative," not "exhaustive." E.g., H.R. Rep. No. 95-595, 95th Cong., 1st Sess. 380 (1977) & S. Rep. No. 95-989, 95th Cong., 2d Sess. 94 (1978), reprinted in 1978 USCCAN 5787, 5880, 6336.

Many courts, including the United States Supreme Court, have held that good faith is, and has long been, a prerequisite to bankruptcy relief. Bankruptcy courts are courts of equity, and bankruptcy relief is intended for "the honest but unfortunate debtor." Brown v. Felsen, 442 U.S. 127, 128 (1979). Consistent with this reasoning, numerous courts have recognized that bad faith can, indeed, be "cause" for dismissal of a bankruptcy petition. For instance, as the Sixth Circuit squarely held with respect to § 707(a) dismissals:

> We agree . . . that "[a]lthough the jurisdictional requirement of good faith is not explicitly stated in the statute, it is inherent in the purposes of bankruptcy relief. . . . Bankruptcy protection was not intended to assist those who, despite their own misconduct, are attempting to preserve a comfortable standard of living at the expense of their creditors. . . . The bankruptcy laws are grounded on the fresh start concept. There is no right, however, to a head start."

Industrial Insurance Services, Inc. v. Zick (In re Zick), 931 F.2d 1124, 1129 (6th Cir. 1990).[11]

Or, as the Fifth Circuit has also observed in an analogous context, the Bankruptcy Code is "endowed with requirements of good faith in the construction of many of its provisions," and "[e]very bankruptcy statute since 1898 has incorporated literally, or by judicial interpretation, a standard of good faith for the commencement, prosecution, and confirmation of bankruptcy proceedings." In re

Little Creek Development Co., 779 F.2d 1068, 1071-72 (5th Cir.1986). There, the court held that good faith is an inherent condition-precedent to the Code's "automatic stay" provisions, and that bad faith may be "cause" for lifting the stay under 11 U.S.C. § 362(d), which provides for relief from the automatic stay — like § 707(a) — "for cause." Id.; see also In re Davidoff, 185 B.R. 631, 634 (Bankr. S.D. Fla. 1995) ("Absence of good faith is generally held to be sufficient cause for dismissal under § 707(a)").

Likewise, in this District, two prior bankruptcy court decisions have expressly held that bad faith can be "cause" for dismissal under § 707(a). First, In re Hammonds, 139 B.R. 535 (Bankr. D. Colo. 1992), followed settled case law for the proposition that "[t]he instances of 'cause' set forth in Section 707(a) are merely illustrative and are not an exhaustive listing." Id. at 541. Then, citing a host of supporting decisions, the court concluded as follows:

> A debtor's good faith is an implicit jurisdictional prerequisite to the filing of a case under the Bankruptcy Code. . . . Absence of good faith is generally held to be sufficient cause for dismissal.
> The Bankruptcy Code is intended to serve those persons who, despite their best efforts, find themselves hopelessly adrift in a sea of debt. If, instead, a debtor seeks to discharge debts by shielding his wealth, "such an individual is not seeking a 'fresh start,' but is requesting the Court to permit him to continue living 'like a king.'"

Id. at 541, quoting In re Brown, 88 B.R. 280, 285 (Bankr. D. Haw. 1988), and citing, inter alia, In re Campbell, 124 B.R. 462, 464 (Bankr. W.D. Penn. 1991); In re Doss, 133 B.R. 108, 109 (Bankr. N.D. Ohio 1991); In re Rognstad, 121 B.R. 45, 49 (Bankr. D. Haw. 1990); In re Ravick Corp., 106 B.R. 834, 842 (Bankr. D.N.J. 1989); In re Bingham, 68 B.R. 933, 935 (Bankr. M.D. Penn. 1987).

And, just last year, Bankruptcy Judge Brooks reaffirmed Hammonds, holding that "[t]he absence of good faith of a debtor is also sufficient cause for dismissal under Section 707(a)." In re Tanenbaum, 210 B.R. 182, 185 (Bankr. D.Colo. 1997). As in Hammonds, the court also reiterated that "[o]nce the question of good/bad faith has been put at issue, the debtor bears the burden of proving that the petition was brought in good faith." Tanenbaum, 210 B.R. at 185; accord Hammonds, 139 B.R. at 541.

To be sure, § 707(a)'s "for cause" standard has been applied in varying circumstances and under varying rubrics. Thus, while the Sixth Circuit in Zick squarely held that "lack of good faith is a valid basis for decision in a 'for cause' dismissal," 931 F.2d at 1127, the Eighth Circuit has ruled that it prefers dismissals based upon misconduct or improper use of the Code to be called "for cause," rather than "bad faith," reasoning as follows:

> [F]raming the issue in terms of bad faith may tend to misdirect the inquiry away from the fundamental principles and purposes of Chapter 7. Thus, we think the § 707(a) analysis is better conducted under the statutory standard, "for cause."

Huckfeldt v. Huckfeldt (In re Huckfeldt), 39 F.3d 829, 832 (8th Cir. 1994). But the terminology is interchangeable for purposes of § 707(a). In Huckfeldt, a debtor's bad motives for filing a chapter 7 petition — evasion of debts imposed by a divorce decree, and an attempt to "unload" the debts incurred in a 12-year marriage to his spouse — were deemed to be "cause" for dismissal. Id. at 830, 832-33. Such motives also patently evidence bad faith. Thus, whatever the label, the dispositive point is that § 707(a) protects against improper use of the bankruptcy system.

Here, by contrast, the court below expressly held that, as a matter of law, "bad faith" can never be "cause" for dismissal under § 707(a). In so ruling, it relied solely upon two decisions by Chief Bankruptcy Judge Scholl of Philadelphia: In re Latimer, 82 B.R. 354 (Bankr. E.D. Penn.1988), and In re Landes, 195 B.R. 855 (Bankr. E.D. Penn. 1996). Even Latimer, however, recognized that a debtor's "good faith" may be an issue in deciding a § 707(a) motion to dismiss, although it viewed that concept narrowly, holding that > any concept of "good faith," even where it is applicable, should embrace only the narrow concepts of fraudulent misrepresentations or serious non-disclosures of material facts. . . . Our foregoing analysis may raise a question as to what is within the scope of "cause," per § 707(a), in addition to the specific instances recited therein. We believe that included therein is a large category of conduct which expressly violates Code provisions. . . . Also, there may be instances where debtors unjustifiably fail to comply with specific orders of this court.

Id. 82 B.R. at 364 (emphasis added). Moreover, as the Latimer court later acknowledged in Landes, the "local district court has, at least in dictum, honored" a good faith filing requirement under § 707(a) — contra to the crimped Latimer approach that Judge Brumbaugh adopted here. 195 B.R. at 860, citing In re Marks, 174 B.R. 37, 40 & n.3 (E.D. Penn. 1994) (a "petition filed in bad faith may be dismissed for cause under § 707(a)" and "the good faith requirement is broader than that suggested in In re Latimer") (emphasis added).

Even those courts that have most narrowly construed § 707(a) still generally recognize that "cause" for dismissal may include a debtor's "bad faith" in filing. For example, while finding no express statutory requirement of good faith under chapter 7, the court in In re Khan, 172 B.R. 613 (Bankr. D. Minn. 1994), was nonetheless compelled to > concede that, on motion . . . , a court may inquire into a debtor's motivation for filing as a test of whether to allow the debtor to go forward in bankruptcy . . . [and] a creditor may raise a debtor's bad faith as "cause" for dismissal under § 707(a).

Id., 172 B.R. at 622 (emphasis added). And although Khan disfavored dismissal under § 707(a) in cases where the Code offered lighter sanctions — such as disallowance of discharge under 11 U.S.C. §§ 523, 727 — it nonetheless deemed dismissal to be an appropriate remedy where a debtor exhibited manifest bad faith in filing for bankruptcy.[12/]

To like effect is Padilla v. United States Trustee (In re Padilla), 214 B.R. 496 (Bankr. 9th Cir. 1997), appeal pending, 9th Cir. No. 98-55099. In that case, "the record indicate[d] the Debtor performed a credit card 'bust-out,'" which is essentially "a practice where consumer debt is incurred in anticipation of filing a petition for relief." Id. 214 B.R. at 499 & n.5. Although the Bankruptcy Appellate Panel set aside the bankruptcy court's dismissal — finding that, in the particular facts at bar, the debtor's conduct did not exhibit such bad faith as to constitute "cause" under § 707(a) — the Panel nonetheless acknowledged that the "[l]ack of good faith in filing has developed as a cause for dismissal." Id. at 498 (emphasis added); accord id. at 500 (§ 707(a) "allows the UST to seek dismissal for lack of good faith"). Here, by contrast, the bankruptcy court totally eviscerated any "good faith" requirement from § 707(a) of the Code.

[12/] E.g., Khan, 172 B.R. at 625-26 (noting that bad faith may be evidenced "by a vindictive motivation to use bankruptcy solely as a 'scorched-earth' tactic against a pressing creditor" or where a "debtor is seeking to use the Bankruptcy Court's jurisdiction to hide from an adjudication of contempt in a nonbankruptcy court, without justification in the form of true financial distress").

As Zick observed, "[d]ismissal based on lack of good faith must be undertaken on an ad hoc basis . . . [and] should be . . . utilized only in those egregious cases that entail concealed or misrepresented assets and/or sources of income, and excessive and continued expenditures, lavish lifestyle, and intention to avoid a large single debt based on conduct akin to fraud, misconduct, or gross negligence." Id., 931 F.2d at 1129. Other courts have similarly outlined factors that may warrant a § 707(a) dismissal for bad faith. For example, in In re Cappucetti, 172 B.R. 37, 39 (Bankr. E.D. Ark. 1994), it was deemed particularly relevant whether, inter alia, > the debtor made no life-style adjustments or continued living an expensive or lavish life-style[;] the debtor filed the case in response to a judgment . . . or collection action; there is an intent to avoid a large, single debt[;] . . . the debtor is paying debts of insiders[;] the debtor transferred assets[;] . . . the debtor employed a deliberate and persistent pattern of evading a single major creditor[; or] the debtor failed to make candid and full disclosure.

Id. at 39-40 (dismissing case where "the Chapter 7 petition was filed in response to collection activities by the IRS" and "the debt to the IRS alone constitutes ninety percent of the total debt"). Likewise, in In re Maide, 103 B.R. 696 (Bankr. W.D. Penn. 1989), the court dismissed a case for bad faith where, among other things, the debtor had transferred a $108,000 marital home some 18 months pre-petition — holding that "the fact that the transfer . . . was made for no consideration to a co-obligor nondebtor spouse and . . . left the debtor with insignificant assets . . . indicates a lack of good faith and militates for dismissal of this case for cause pursuant to § 707(a)" — even though the transfer evidently occurred outside the "voidable preference" period specified by 11 U.S.C. § 547(b). Id., 103 B.R. at 698. In these cases, as here, the totality of facts showed bad faith by the debtor and, thus, constituted sufficient "cause" for dismissal under § 707(a).[13]

The dispositive point is simply this: While the outcome of each § 707(a) case is necessarily fact specific, the court below improperly ignored the facts here in favor of propounding a broad new legal rule that a debtor's bad faith can never be cause for dismissal under that statute. This is contrary to the vast majority of case law and should be set aside with instructions that the bankruptcy court specifically examine the ample evidence of bad faith in the record and determine whether it constitutes "cause" for dismissal under 11 U.S.C. § 707(a), as the United States Trustee strongly contends.

CONCLUSION

For the foregoing reasons, the court below erred, as a matter of law, in holding that bad faith can never constitute "cause" for dismissal under 11 U.S.C. § 707(a). This Court should thus reverse and remand the case for consideration of whether the particular facts here warrant dismissal of the debtor's bankruptcy petition.

[13] To like effect, a leading bankruptcy treatise suggests that while a debtor's ability to repay, standing alone, may constitute grounds for dismissal under § 707(b), "cause" for dismissal under § 707(a) requires something more. See, e.g., 6 Collier on Bankruptcy, ¶ 707.03[1] (15th Ed. Rev. 1998) ("both the House and Senate Reports state that: 'The section does not contemplate, however, that the ability of the debtor to repay his debts in whole or in part constitutes adequate cause for dismissal'"); accord Cappucetti, 172 B.R. at 39 ("under section 707(a), an ability to repay debts is not alone cause for dismissal," unlike section 707(b) cases, in which the issue of "whether the debtor has an ability to pay his debts is the primary factor warranting dismissal"); cf. First Trust Co. v. Frisch (In re Frisch), 76 B.R. 801, 804 (Bankr. D. Colo. 1987) (Votolato, J., sitting by designation) (declining to apply § 707(b)'s "substantial abuse" test to a § 707(a) motion to dismiss, while finding that "debtor has met his burden of establishing good faith").

REPLY BRIEF FOR APPELLANT, UNITED STATES TRUSTEE

PRELIMINARY STATEMENT

In our opening brief, we explained why the bankruptcy court erred, as a matter of law, in categorically ruling that “bad faith” can never be “cause” for dismissal under 11 U.S.C. § 707(a). Its decision not only ignores the plain language of the Bankruptcy Code, but also creates an intra-district conflict and apparently goes farther than any other case to have construed § 707(a). The United States Trustee therefore seeks reversal and remand, so that the bankruptcy court can be instructed to exercise its duty to weigh all the evidence of bad faith adduced at trial — as briefly summarized in our opening brief — and determine whether it warrants dismissal of the debtor’s bankruptcy petition “for cause,” as we firmly maintain.

In response, the debtor has not (and cannot) cite any case law directly disputing our sole legal thesis, i.e., that bad faith may, indeed, be cause for dismissal under § 707(a). Instead, the debtor skirts the issue by raising a smokescreen of tangential arguments. More precisely, debtor appears to argue that: (1) far from any outright fraud or other indicia of bad faith, debtor merely has an "ability to repay" his debts which, alone, does not warrant dismissal; (2) it would be unfair "double jeopardy" to dismiss debtor's petition under § 707(a) when his judgment-creditor has, thus far, failed to bar discharge under more specific Code provisions; and (3) because two bills are pending in Congress that would block chapter 7 liquidations by affluent individuals such as debtor, he suggests that nothing in the current Code can stop such potential misuse of the system, unless and until new legislation is actually signed into law. As next shown, the debtor's arguments lack merit and provide no basis upon which to affirm the decision below.

ARGUMENT

I. Debtor's "Ability To Pay" Argument Is Merely An Attempt To Divert The Court From The Real Issue

At the outset at least, debtor correctly notes that "the factual nature of this case is irrelevant since . . . [t]he lower court never considered the United States Trustee's factual contentions." See Debtor's Br. 2.[1/] Rather, the sole issue on appeal is whether it was legal "error to conclude that 'cause' . . . [under] § 707(a) does not include 'bad faith.'" Id. at 1.

[1/] As used below, Debtor's Br. and UST Br. refer, respectively, to (1) the September 22, 1998 "Answer Brief For Appellee, Aurelio Etcheverry Jr.," and (2) our August 28, 1998 "Brief For Appellant, United States Trustee."

Yet, debtor then launches into an extensive factual critique from which he argues that, far from any bad faith, "[t]he veiled or unspoken 'cause' for dismissal . . . is [simply] that he has the present and future income to repay his debts." Id. at 6. With such a "straw man" thus erected, debtor attempts to shift this Court's focus away from the real issue.

Whether a chapter 7 case can be dismissed under § 707(a), based solely on a debtor's repayment ability, is not the issue here.[2/] The facts adduced at trial reflect far more than an ability-to-repay. They also established a prima facie case of bad faith by demonstrating, e.g., that debtor's income appeared "understated in the schedules while certain expenses appeared overstated, the debtor had made no significant adjustments to a lavish pre-petition lifestyle, and the filing appeared principally designed to thwart the efforts of debtor's judgment creditor to collect on her personal injury award." (UST Br. 5.) In fact, at the hearing, the trial court found on the record that debtor's income had, indeed, been under-reported in his bankruptcy schedules. (UST Br. 7, n.10.)

Without belaboring the facts, the dispositive point is that the bankruptcy court erred by wholly failing to even consider whether any of the facts of record constituted cause for dismissal, based upon its erroneous legal opinion that "bad faith," even if proven at trial, can never justify dismissal under § 707(a).

[2/] While that issue may be debatable, the United States Trustee acknowledged in her opening brief that there appears to be some authority for it. See UST Br. at 15 n.13, citing, e.g., In re Cappucetti, 172 B.R. 37, 39 (Bankr. E.D. Ark. 1994) ("under section 707(a), an ability to repay debts is not alone cause for dismissal," unlike section 707(b) cases where the issue of "whether the debtor has an ability to pay his debts is the primary factor warranting dismissal"), and 6 Collier on Bankruptcy, ¶ 707.03[1] (15th Ed. Rev. 1998) (quoting legislative history of § 707(a)).

In so ruling, the bankruptcy court not only departed from the view of "cause" adopted by most other courts (including two prior bankruptcy cases in this district),[3] but it also apparently went farther than any other case known to have construed § 707(a). Indeed, as our opening brief points out, even the two cases upon which the lower court relied — In re Latimer, 82 B.R. 354 (Bankr. E.D. Penn.1988), and In re Landes, 195 B.R. 855 (Bankr. E.D. Penn. 1996) — recognized that bad faith may sometimes be an issue under § 707(a).[4] And, if that were not enough to extinguish all legal support for the decision below, there is an even more compelling argument against affirmance here. As Latimer and Landes concede, the United States District Court in Pennsylvania rejected their crimped view of § 707(a), stating that

> [a] petition filed in bad faith may be dismissed for cause under § 707(a) . . . [and] the good faith requirement is broader than that suggested in In re Latimer.

In re Marks, 174 B.R. 37, 40 & n.3 (E.D. Penn. 1994) (italics added), cited in In re Landes, 195 B.R. at 860.

[3] In re Hammonds, 139 B.R. 535, 541 (Bankr. D. Colo. 1992) ("Absence of good faith is generally held to be sufficient cause for dismissal"); In re Tanenbaum, 210 B.R. 182, 185 (Bankr. D.Colo. 1997) ("absence of good faith of a debtor is also sufficient cause for dismissal under Section 707(a)" and "[o]nce the question of good/bad faith has been put at issue, the debtor bears the burden of proving that the petition was brought in good faith"), cited in UST Br. 11-12.

[4] Accord In re Khan, 172 B.R. 613, 622 (Bankr. D. Minn. 1994) ("conced[ing] that . . . a court may inquire into a debtor's motivation for filing, . . . [and] a creditor may raise a debtor's bad faith as 'cause' for dismissal under § 707(a)"); Padilla v. United States Trustee (In re Padilla), 214 B.R. 496, 498, 500 (Bankr. 9th Cir. 1997), appeal pending, 9th Cir. No. 98-55099 ("[l]ack of good faith in filing has developed as a cause for dismissal," and § 707(a) "allows the UST to seek dismissal for lack of good faith"). (UST Br. 13-14.)

Consequently, in holding that bad faith may never be cause for dismissal under § 707(a), the court below plainly erred, as a matter of law, as is evident from a review of cases such as Industrial Insurance Services, Inc. v. Zick (In re Zick), 931 F.2d 1124, 1129 (6th Cir. 1990), and its progeny, which we fully discussed in our opening brief. (UST Br. 10-12.)

II. Nothing In The Bankruptcy Code Precludes § 707(a) From Being Used In Conjuction With Other Remedies

Next, arguing that "the bankruptcy code must be construed liberally in favor of the debtor and strictly against the creditor" (Debtor's Br. 2), Dr. Etcheverry argues that dismissal of his petition under § 707(a) would amount to "a sort of quasi-criminal double-jeopardy . . . without good cause" where, as here, debtor has managed to evade the attempts of a judgment-creditor to bar his discharge under sections 523 and 727 of the Code.[5/] Further, debtor complains that dismissal under § 707(a) may deny him all bankruptcy relief if, as he contends, "he does not fit a Chapter 13 and a Chapter 11 is too expensive to warrant consideration." (Debtor's Br. 8.)

Again, these arguments miss the narrow point of the pending appeal. The issue here is simply the scope of "cause" as a basis for dismissal under § 707(a) — not debtor's eligibility for relief under the chapter 11 reorganization, or chapter 13 wage-earner, provisions of the Bankruptcy Code. Moreover, the fact that the Code may be liberally construed in debtors' favor > is correct as far as it goes, but it does not go far enough. In particular, it overlooks the fact that bankruptcy courts have traditionally drawn upon their powers of equity to prevent abuse of the bankruptcy process and to ensure that a "case be commenced in 'good faith' to reflect the intended policies of the Code." [Citation omitted.] . . . Congress has made it clear . . . that misuse of the bankruptcy process should not be countenanced.

[5/] See Debtor's Br. 10-11, citing First Trust Co. v. Frisch (In re Frisch), 76 B.R. 801, 804 (Bankr. D. Colo. 1987) (Votolato, J., sitting by designation). See also 11 U.S.C. §§ 523, 727. As pertinent here, § 523 allows an individual creditor to challenge the dischargeability of any particular debt "for money, property, services, or . . . credit, to the extent obtained by false pretenses, a false representation, or actual fraud" (§523(a)(2)), or "for willful and malicious injury by the debtor" (§ 523(a)(6)). Similarly, § 727 allows actions to deny a debtor a discharge in its entirety if, inter alia, the debtor has concealed financial documents, made false claims, or evidenced an intent to defraud a particular creditor or evade certain debts.

Kestell v. Kestell (In re Kestell), 99 F.3d 146, 147-48 (4th Cir. 1996). Indeed, as the Supreme Court has long made clear, "[t]here is no constitutional right to bankruptcy protection" in the first instance. Fonder v. United States, 974 F.2d 996, 999 n.4 (8th Cir. 1992), citing United States v. Kras, 409 U.S. 434, 446-47 (1973). Thus, any rule of construction that liberally construes the Code in debtors' favor cannot trump their duty to enter bankruptcy court (like any other court of equity) with "clean hands," lest they forfeit any claim to relief under the Bankruptcy Code.

Nor, contrary to debtor's argument, does anything in the Code preclude objections to an improper bankruptcy petition under any and all applicable Code provisions — such as § 707 dismissals, § 727 challenges to discharge, and/or § 523 exceptions to the dischargeability of particular debts. If anything, Congress has steadily increased, not reduced, the number of avenues by which to challenge improper petitions. Thus, in 1984, Congress added subsection (b) to § 707, which allows dismissal for "substantial abuse" in cases of "primarily consumer debts." As the Sixth Circuit explained the 1984 amendments in In re Krohn, 886 F.2d 123 (6th Cir. 1989):

> These amendments were passed in response to an increasing number of Chapter 7 bankruptcies filed each year by non-needy debtors. . . . Under prior practice, aside from potential § 523(a) exceptions, > § 707(a) dismissals, and § 727(a) objections to discharge, debtors enjoyed an unfettered right to a "fresh start" under Chapter 7, in exchange for liquidating their nonexempt assets for the benefit of their creditors. . . . Section 707(b) introduces an additional restraint upon a debtor's ability to obtain Chapter 7 relief.

Id. at 126 (emphasis added).[6] Or, as the Fourth Circuit has likewise observed: "In some Code provisions, enumerated circumstances of abuse are addressed. In others, general phrases such as 'for cause' provide broad coverage for unenumerated instances of misuse." In re Kestell, 99 F.3d at 148. Stated simply, the mere existence of more specific remedies does not bar general challenges to bankruptcy petitions "for cause" or "substantial abuse" under sections 707(a) or (b).[7]

Debtor's reliance upon In re Frisch, supra, for a contrary view is wholly inapposite. (Debtors' Br. 11.) There, a visiting bankruptcy judge in this District found that a creditor > intentionally subjected the debtor to a sort of quasi-criminal double jeopardy, without good cause, . . . [because the creditor improperly tried to] mix and match sections . . . , that is, § 707(b) issues using evidence most relevant to § 523 to find § 707(a) "cause."

76 B.R. at 804. By law, only the U.S. Trustee, or the court sua sponte, may seek dismissal under § 707(b). Frisch basically involved a case where the court chastised a creditor for trying to evade this statutory limitation — expressly finding that "the debtor has met his burden of establishing good faith," and that the creditor's "motion is not well grounded in either fact or law." Id.

[6] Accord In re Snow, 185 B.R. 397, 399-400 & n.3 (Bankr. D. Mass. 1995) ("§ 707(b) . . . was one of a collection of new provisions imposing constraints on consumer bankruptcies . . . [along with] §§ 342(b), 523(a)(2)(C), 523(a)(9), 521(1), 1325(b), [and] 1329(a)"); Waites v. Braley, 110 B.R. 211, 217 (E.D. Va. 1990) ("Sections 523 and 727 . . . allow dismissal for fraud and misrepresentation, and a narrow construction of Section 707(b) would render it superfluous ").

[7] See, e.g., Coughlin v. Cataldo (In re Cataldo), _ B.R. _, 1998 WL 637501 (Bankr. 9th Cir. 1998) (noting that although a creditor "was unsuccessful in her Section 523 action, . . . it is unclear whether . . . a complaint under Section 727 or . . . dismissal of the case under Section 707(a) . . . would be better suited to giving . . . relief"). As noted in our opening brief, § 707(b) was inapplicable here for lack of "primarily consumer debts." (UST Br. 6 n.9.)

That is not the case before this Court. Here, the United States Trustee determined that debtor's resort to chapter 7 evidenced bad faith, filed a timely motion to dismiss for cause under § 707(a), and adduced supporting evidence at trial. Yet, without even reviewing the evidence of bad faith, the lower court simply denied the U.S. Trustee's motion based upon the unprecedented and improper view that bad faith can never be cause for dismissal.

By adopting this patently incorrect legal interpretation of § 707(a), the court below erred — and that error warrants reversal wholly irrespective of what, if any, alternative remedies may be available to Dr. Etcheverry's creditors under Code provisions like sections 727 and 523. Indeed, whatever relief may be available to private creditors, the U.S. Trustee is independently obliged to challenge cases, such as this, that threaten the integrity of the bankruptcy system.[8/]

[8/] Congress established the office of the United States Trustee in the Bankruptcy Reform Act of 1978 to "protect[] the public interest and ensur[e] that bankruptcy cases are conducted according to the law." H. Rep. No. 95-595, 95th Cong., 2d Sess. at 109 (Sept. 8, 1977), reprinted in 1978 U.S. Code Cong. & Admin. News 5787, 5963, 6070. Congress declared that the U.S. Trustee "may be compared with . . . a prosecutor," and stated in no uncertain terms that United States Trustees "serve as bankruptcy watch-dogs to prevent fraud, dishonesty, and overreaching in the bankruptcy arena." Id. at 6071 and 6049; accord In Re Clark, 927 F.2d 793, 795-96 (4th Cir. 1991) ("The trustee serves the role of 'protecting the public interest and ensuring that bankruptcy cases are conducted according to law'"); In Re Revco D.S. Inc., 898 F.2d 498, 499-500 (6th Cir. 1990); In Re Columbia Gas Sys. Inc., 33 F.3d 294, 296-97 (3d Cir. 1994).

III. Nor, Finally, Does The Pendency Of New Legislation Have Any Bearing Upon The Motion Sub Judice Here

As debtor notes, in the final days before adjournment, Congress is considering new legislation to further restrict chapter 7 filings. From this, debtor argues that "the fact that Congress is presently attempting to enact legislation, i.e. House Bill 3150 . . . and Senate Bill 1030 [sic], . . . both of which might add significant new changes to the Bankruptcy Code instituting a 'means test', is a clear indication that such a provision is not now in the Bankruptcy Code." (Debtor's Br. 12.) However, as discussed below, these bills have absolutely no bearing upon the present appeal.

The two bills in question are H.R. 3150, the Bankruptcy Reform Act of 1998, and S.1301, the Consumer Bankruptcy Reform Act of 1998. They were passed by the House and Senate on June 10 and September 23, 1998, respectively, but have not yet been harmonized by a committee of conference. As pertinent here, each bill contemplates a different formulation to ensure that only the neediest individuals may proceed with chapter 7 liquidation and obtain a discharge. If such a debtor could repay his creditors, he would be ineligible to proceed under chapter 7 and would either have his case dismissed or converted to chapter 13 for formulation of a repayment plan.[9]

Most notably, neither bill would amend § 707(a). Rather, they would toughen subsection (b) of § 707 to ensure dismissal of chapter 7 cases by debtors who possess a quantifiable ability to repay, or whose use of chapter 7 could otherwise be shown to constitute misuse of the Code. As debtor concedes, however, "§ 707(b) . . . focused clearly on consumer debtors, a definition which does not apply in this case." Debtor's Br. 12 (emphasis added).

Consequently, the proposed amendments to § 707(b) patently have no bearing upon the pending appeal, which deals only with § 707(a) and which has repeatedly been held to be broad enough, as written, to allow dismissals for bad faith or other "cause."[10/]

CONCLUSION

For the foregoing reasons, as well as those set forth in our opening brief, this Court should: (1) find that the bankruptcy court erred, as a matter of law, in holding that bad faith can never constitute "cause" for dismissal under 11 U.S.C. § 707(a); and (2) reverse and remand the case for consideration of whether the facts adduced at trial established a prima facie case of bad faith or other cause for dismissal..

MEMORANDUM BRIEF FOR THE APPELLANT

Introduction. This memorandum brief is submitted pursuant to this Court's order of March 13, 2000 directing the parties to address the following jurisdictional issue: "Whether the district court order affirming the bankruptcy court's order denying the motion to dismiss is a final order appealable to this Court." As we show below, the district court's order -- which holds that Congress in 11 U.S.C. § 707(a) divested bankruptcy courts of their historic authority to dismiss a petition that is filed in bad faith -- is appealable pursuant to the Cohen collateral order doctrine (Cohen v. Beneficial Indus. Loan Corp., 337 U.S. 541 (1949)).[1]

BACKGROUND

Bankruptcy Court And District Court Proceedings. Debtor, Dr. Etcheverry, filed a voluntary Chapter 7 liquidation petition in December 1997 seeking a discharge of his debts. His bankruptcy schedules listed assets of $51,479 and debts of $670,702. The single largest unsecured debt reported by debtor was a claim against him of about $113,000 arising from a Florida state court judgment in tort arising from an automobile accident.

The Chapter 7 bankruptcy trustee assigned to administer the case notified the U.S. Trustee's Office that dismissal of debtor's petition may be warranted because debtor appeared to have understated assets, overstated expenses, and filed a bankruptcy petition primarily to evade his Florida judgment creditor. The U.S. Trustee is a Department of Justice official who is responsible for overseeing the administration of bankruptcy cases.[2]

[1] For this Court's convenience, we have appended to this memorandum brief a copy of the decision of the district court (Attachment A) and the bankruptcy court (Attachment B).

[2] The U.S. Trustee Program was established by the Bankruptcy Reform Act of 1978 (11 U.S.C. §§ 101 et seq.). Its primary function is to serve as the "watchdog over the bankruptcy process" (H.R. Rep. No. 95-595, at 88, reprinted in 1978 U.S.C.C.A.N. 5787, 5963, 6049).

After further review, the U.S. Trustee moved to dismiss debtor's petition pursuant to the "for cause" provision of 11 U.S.C. § 707(a).[3] The U.S. Trustee argued that debtor's petition was not brought in good faith, as evidenced by the following: (1) debtor's schedules erroneously understated his income and overstated his expenses; (2) debtor's petition was filed just two weeks after his Florida judgment creditor garnished a paycheck, thus suggesting that the petition was designed to thwart recovery by that creditor; and (3) debtor maintained a lavish lifestyle and exhibited the income with which he could pay his current debts.

The bankruptcy court denied the motion to dismiss as a matter of law and without reaching or resolving any factual disputes. Notwithstanding extensive case law to the contrary, the court held that section 707(a) does not contain a "good faith requirement" (221 B.R. at

[3] 11 U.S.C. § 707(a) provides:

> (a) The court may dismiss a case under this chapter only after notice and a hearing and only for cause, including--
> > (1) unreasonable delay by the debtor that is prejudicial to creditors;
> >
> > (2) nonpayment of any fees or charges required under chapter 123 of title 28; and
> > (3) failure of the debtor in a voluntary case to file, within fifteen days or such additional time as the court may allow after the filing of the petition commencing such case, the information required by paragraph (1) of section 521, but only on a motion by the United States trustee.

526), and courts therefore lack authority to dismiss petitions that have "bad faith characteristics" (221 B.R. at 525).

From this order, the U.S. Trustee appealed to the district court pursuant to 28 U.S.C. § 158(a), which authorizes district courts to review orders of bankruptcy judges. The district court affirmed, holding that Congress did not include a good faith requirement for Chapter 7 liquidation filings and, accordingly, "bad faith is not a ground for dismissal 'for cause' under 11 U.S.C. § 707(a)" (slip op. at 3).

The U.S. Trustee appeals that order pursuant to 28 U.S.C. § 158(d). As we now show, the district court's order falls within that class of interlocutory orders that may be immediately appealed, because they "finally determine claims of right separable from, and collateral to, rights asserted in the action, too important to be denied review and too independent of the cause itself to require that appellate jurisdiction be deferred" (Cohen, 337 U.S. at 546).

ARGUMENT

THIS COURT HAS JURISDICTION PURSUANT TO THE COHEN COLLATERAL ORDER DOCTRINE

The district court's order affirming the bankruptcy court's denial of the U.S. Trustee's motion to dismiss under section 707(a) is immediately appealable under the collateral order doctrine articulated in Cohen v. Beneficial Indus. Loan Corp., 337 U.S. 541 (1945). See In re Magic Circle Energy Corp., 889 F.2d 950, 954 (10th Cir. 1989) (recognizing that Cohen collateral order doctrine applies in bankruptcy context). Pursuant to that doctrine, a district court's interlocutory order is immediately reviewable if three conditions are met: (1) it conclusively determines the disputed question; (2) it resolves an important issue completely separate from the merits of the action; and (3) it is effectively unreviewable on appeal from final judgment. The order in the instant case satisfies these requirements.

1. With respect to the first requirement, the district court's order conclusively determines whether the debtor will be permitted to proceed with a Chapter 7 liquidation proceeding notwithstanding that his petition was evidently filed in bad faith.[4] The district court held not only that it will not dismiss the case (slip op. at 7-8), but that it lacks authority under 11 U.S.C. § 707(a) to dismiss despite debtor's putative bad faith, because section 707(a) does "not incorporate a good faith requirement" (slip op. at 5). Because the district court's resolution of this issue of law is not "open, unfinished or inconclusive" (Cohen, 337 U.S. at 546), it satisfies the first Cohen doctrine requirement.

[4] Neither the district court nor the bankruptcy court made findings of fact; rather, both held as a matter of law that section 707(a) does not, under any circumstances, authorize dismissals of Chapter 7 liquidation petitions that are filed in bad faith.

2. As to the second requirement, the district court's order decides an issue that is (i) important, and (ii) separate from the merits of the case. Plainly, the district court's decision that bankruptcy courts lack authority under section 707(a) to dismiss Chapter 7 liquidation petitions that are filed in bad faith is important. The court's decision not only determines the conditions and limitations that Chapter 7 imposes on debtors who file bankruptcy petitions, it also affects -- indeed, significantly cabins -- the equitable authority that bankruptcy courts historically have exercised. See In re Zick, 931 F.2d 1124, 1129 (6th Cir. 1991) ("'[g]ood faith and candor are necessary prerequisites to obtaining a fresh start [under the Bankruptcy Code]"); In re Little Creek Dev. Co., 779 F.2d 1068, 1071-72 (5th Cir. 1986) ("[e]very bankruptcy statute since 1898 has incorporated literally, or by judicial interpretation, a standard of good faith for the commencement, prosecution, and confirmation of bankruptcy proceedings"). Additionally, by precluding the use of section 707(a) as a basis for dismissal of Chapter 7 petitions that are filed in bad faith, the court's decision impairs the ability of U.S. Trustees to perform their statutory mission of policing the bankruptcy system for fraud and abuse.[5]

[5] The district court's decision conflicts with at least two bankruptcy court decisions in this Circuit that have sustained the authority of the U.S. Trustee under section 707(a) to seek dismissal of petitions that are filed in bad faith. See In re Tanenbaum, 210 B.R. 182, 185 (Bankr. Colo. 1997); In re Hammonds, 139 B.R. 535, 541 (Bankr. Colo. 1992).

This important issue is also wholly separate from the merits of the Chapter 7 liquidation proceeding. The district court denied the U.S. Trustee's dismissal motion based on a conclusion of law -- that the court lacks authority under any circumstances to dismiss for bad faith under section 707(a) -- and that conclusion will have no bearing whatsoever on the liquidation proceedings on remand, which will focus on consolidation and distribution of debtor's assets. Moreover, from the U.S. Trustee's perspective, whether debtor's petition in the instant case should be dismissed under section 707(a) is the only issue in the case; once that issue has been decided, the U.S. Trustee effectively ceases to be a litigant in this phase of the case. In short, consistent with the second Cohen requirement, the district court's order resolves an important issue that does not contribute "toward final disposition of the merits of the case" (337 U.S. at 546).

3. Third, absent immediate review, the district court's order will be effectively unreviewable. A principal purpose of section 707(a) is to authorize dismissal at the outset of the Chapter 7 liquidation proceeding and thereby spare creditors the burden, expense, and delays inherent in seeking recovery in a protracted bankruptcy proceeding where the petition was filed for purposes of delay. Indeed, section 707(a)(1) specifically lists unreasonable delay prejudicing creditors as a reason for dismissal.[6]

Denying a motion to dismiss under section 707(a) can thus properly be analogized to the denial of a motion to dismiss based on qualified immunity, which would be immediately appealable. See Johnson v. Jones, 515 U.S. 304, 309-11 (1995); Mitchell v. Forsyth, 472 U.S. 511, 525-27 (1985). In both circumstances, the right that is being denied -- the right to avoid the burden and delays caused by the litigation itself -- cannot be restored after final judgment; rather, once the right is denied and the burden and delay are imposed, the right is lost forever. See Forsyth, 472 U.S. at 525-27.

Not only would creditors' statutory rights be irreparably harmed absent immediate review, but subsequent events may render the district court's order unreviewable. For example, the issue presented in this appeal arguably would become moot if the debtor obtains a discharge, voluntarily withdraws his bankruptcy petition, or converts it to another chapter of the Bankruptcy Code. Cf., e.g., In re Cook, 730 F.2d 1324 (9th Cir. 1984) (appellants' request to reverse bankruptcy court's decree of forfeiture issued during Chapter 11 proceeding is moot in light of bankruptcy court's subsequent Chapter 7 discharge order); In re Cantwell, 639 F.2d 1050 (3d Cir. 1981) (where discharge that appellants sought to stay has been granted, appellants' challenge to denial of stay is moot); Chief Bankruptcy Judge Tamara Mitchell, Dismissal of Cases Via 11 U.S.C. § 707: Bad Faith and Substantial Abuse, 102 Com. L.J. 355, 377-78 (1997) (citing cases where motion to dismiss under section 707(a) has been rendered moot by discharge order). That events may render the district court's order unreviewable is a compelling factor that militates in favor of immediate review, especially where, as here, the question presented is a pure issue of law that is wholly collateral to the issues that will be considered on remand. Cf. In re Rex Montis Silver Co., 87 F.3d 435, 438 (10th Cir. 1996) ("if matters on remand are 'unlikely either to generate a new appeal or to affect the issue that the disappointed party wants to raise on appeal from the order of remand,' the district court's order is considered final").

[6] Significantly, section 707(a) -- which is set out in full supra note 3 -- does not purport to establish an exhaustive list of reasons that may justify dismissal. Rather, it provides that a court may dismiss a case "for cause" and gives several illustrative examples, "including (1) unreasonable delay by the debtor that is prejudicial to creditors" (11 U.S.C. § 707(a)(1)) (emphasis added). If Congress intended to authorize dismissals for unintentional, but unreasonable, delays caused by debtors that are prejudicial to creditors, surely Congress also intended to authorize dismissals for petitions that are filed in bad faith that likewise cause unreasonable delays and are prejudicial to creditors. See In re Little Creek Dev. Co., 779 F.2d at 1072 ("[r]equirement of good faith prevents abuse of the bankruptcy process by debtors whose overriding motive is to delay creditors without benefitting them in any way or to achieve reprehensible purposes").

Finally, Circuit precedent does not foreclose the U.S. Trustee from pursuing an appeal in this case pursuant to the Cohen collateral order doctrine. The two cases that, at first glance, appear to be similar to this case are, upon closer examination, easily distinguishable. In In re Cascade Energy & Metals Corp., 956 F.2d 935 (10th Cir. 1992), this Court held that a district court's order reversing a bankruptcy court's order dismissing for lack of subject matter jurisdiction did not satisfy the finality requirement of 28 U.S.C. § 158(d). And in In re Magic Circle Energy Corp., 889 F.2d 950 (10th Cir. 1989), this Court held that a district court's denial of a writ of prohibition to prohibit the bankruptcy court from exercising jurisdiction did not satisfy the finality requirement of 28 U.S.C. § 158(d). However, unlike this case, the record in those cases did not support a claim that important rights would be "irretrievably lost in the absence of an immediate appeal" (In re Magic Circle Energy Corp., 889 F.2d at 954).

Here, in contrast, the denial of the section 707(a) motion not only diminishes the equitable authority of bankruptcy courts and the statutory authority of the U.S. Trustee, it deprives creditors of the very right that section 707(a) was designed to create -- a right to avoid the burden, expense, and delay associated with participation in a bad faith bankruptcy proceeding. Absent immediate review, "it will be too late effectively to review the present order and the rights conferred by the statute * * * will have been lost" (Cohen, 337 U.S. at 546).[7]

CONCLUSION

For the foregoing reasons, this Court has jurisdiction to review the district court's order affirming the bankruptcy court's denial of the U.S. Trustee's motion to dismiss for bad faith pursuant to 11 U.S.C. § 707(a).

[7] It bears emphasizing that Congress established the office of the U.S. Trustee to "'protect[] the public interest and ensure[] that bankruptcy cases are conducted according to law'" (In re Clark, 927 F.2d 793, 795 (4th Cir. 1991); see In re Columbia Gas Sys. Inc., 33 F.3d 294, 296-99 (3d Cir. 1994); In re Revco D.S. Inc., 898 F.2d 498, 500 (6th Cir. 1990)). In moving for dismissal pursuant to section 707(a), the U.S. Trustee acts as a "gate-keeper" who, at the outset of bankruptcy proceedings, identifies debtors whose petitions should be dismissed for bad faith because -- in derogation of congressional intent -- they seek to bilk their creditors, abuse the Bankruptcy Code, and flout the integrity of the judicial process. See In re Huckfeldt, 39 F.3d 829 (8th Cir. 1994) (holding that petitioner's bad faith was cause for dismissal under section 707(a)); In re Zick, 931 F.2d 1124 (6th Cir. 1991) (same).

STATEMENT REGARDING PRIOR AND RELATED APPEALS

Pursuant to Tenth Circuit Rule 27.2(B)(3), counsel state that this case has not previously been appealed. Similar issues are raised in In re Padilla, No. 98-55099 (9th Cir.) (argued Oct. 6, 1999). Counsel are not aware of other cases on appeal raising similar issues.

STATEMENT OF JURISDICTION

This appeal involves a core proceeding (as defined in 28 U.S.C. § 157(b)(2)) arising under title 11 of the United States Code, over which the United States Bankruptcy Court for the District of Delaware had jurisdiction pursuant to 28 U.S.C. § 157(b)(1). The United States District Court for the District of Delaware had jurisdiction over Appellant Robert K. Alber's appeal from the bankruptcy court's October 4, 2005 order pursuant to 28 U.S.C. § 158(a)(1), as it was an appeal from a final order of the bankruptcy court. Mr. Alber timely filed a notice of appeal of the district court's February 27, 2007 final order dismissing his appeal to the district court. Accordingly, this Court has jurisdiction over Mr. Alber's appeal pursuant to 28 U.S.C. § 158(d).

STATEMENT OF ISSUE PRESENTED

Did the district court abuse its discretion in dismissing Mr. Alber's appeal for failure to prosecute after he disobeyed three orders establishing deadlines for him to file his opening appeal brief?

STATEMENT OF THE CASE

Appellant Robert K. Alber appeals from the district court's dismissal with prejudice of his appeal from a final bankruptcy court order which, among other things, (i) approved the settlement of the United States Trustee's motion for sanctions against the law firm of Traub Bonacquist & Fox ("TBF") and (ii) to the extent Mr. Alber sought relief beyond that provided in the settlement between the United States Trustee and TBF, denied Mr. Alber's motion for an order disqualifying TBF, TBF's partners, and plan administrator Barry Gold and directing them to disgorge all compensation received in the chapter 11 bankruptcy case of eToys, Inc. (collectively with its debtor affiliates, the "Debtor").[1/]

Mr. Alber disobeyed the district court's scheduling orders dated September 22, 2006, October 23, 2006 and January 5, 2007, directing him to file his opening brief. Dist. D.I. 28, 39 and 44, respectively.[2/] After Mr. Alber failed to comply with the October 23, 2006 scheduling order, TBF, MNAT, and Mr. Gold moved to dismiss Mr. Alber's appeal for failure to prosecute it. Motion to Dismiss, Dist. D.I. 42. Mr. Alber did not oppose the motion to dismiss. On February 27, 2007, after Mr. Alber failed to timely comply with a third order establishing a deadline for him to file his opening brief, the district court entered a memorandum order granting the pending motion to dismiss, with prejudice. Dismissal Order, Dist. D.I. 55. Despite his lack of opposition to the motion to dismiss, Mr. Alber moved for reconsideration of the dismissal order on March 15, 2007. Alber Motion for Reconsideration, Dist. D.I. 57. While his motion for reconsideration was pending, Mr. Alber timely filed a notice of appeal to this Court on April 30, 2007. Notice of Appeal, Dist. D.I. 59. The district court entered a memorandum order denying reconsideration on June 12, 2007. Order Denying Reconsideration, Dist. D.I. 63.

[1/] The bankruptcy court order which was the subject of Mr. Alber's district court appeal also ordered partial disgorgement of compensation by debtors' counsel, Appellee Morris Nichols Arsht & Tunnell ("MNAT") in connection with Mr. Alber's January 25, 2005 motion alleging conflicts of interest by MNAT, and approved a settlement between the post-effective date committee of unsecured creditors and Goldman Sachs & Co. The United States Trustee did not assert a position in the bankruptcy court or the district court appeal regarding those two matters and does not address them herein.

STATEMENT OF THE FACTS

The Debtor filed its voluntary petition for relief under 11 U.S.C. § 1101 et seq. on March 7, 2001. Voluntary Petition, Bankr. D.I. 1.[3/] The official committee of unsecured creditors selected TBF as its counsel, and the bankruptcy court approved TBF's employment pursuant to 11 U.S.C. § 1103 on April 25, 2001. Order Approving Employment of TBF, Bankr. D.I. 246. Mr. Alber, an eToys shareholder, actively participated in the chapter 11 case and filed over two dozen pleadings therein. See, e.g., Letter of Objection, Bankr. D.I. 1118; Motion for Discovery, Bankr. D.I. 1119; Objection to Plan Confirmation, Bankr. D.I. 1373. The bankruptcy court confirmed the Debtor's liquidating plan of reorganization on November 1, 2002, and the plan became effective on November 2, 2002. Order Confirming Plan, Bankr. D.I. 1385; Notice of Effective Date, Bankr. D.I. 1406. By order dated February 27, 2003, the bankruptcy court approved final compensation of estate professionals, including TBF. Omnibus Final Compensation Order, Bankr. D.I. 1772.

On December 20, 2004, Mr. Alber filed an emergency motion seeking disqualification of TBF as counsel for the post-effective date committee of unsecured creditors ("PEDC"), removal of Mr. Gold as sole officer and director of the reorganized Debtor and plan administrator under the liquidating plan, and disgorgement of all compensation paid to TBF and Mr. Gold since the commencement of the bankruptcy case. Motion for Disgorgement and Removal, Bankr. D.I. 2145. Mr. Alber's motion alleged conflicts of interest arising from the joint ownership of a consulting firm, Asset Disposition Advisors ("ADA") by Mr. Gold and TBF partner Paul Traub. ADA was not involved in the eToys bankruptcy case; however, shortly after TBF's employment as counsel for the creditors' committee, the Debtor employed Mr. Gold individually as a wind-down coordinator and ultimately as its President. Although TBF disclosed its relationship with Mr. Gold and ADA in numerous other bankruptcy cases in Delaware and elsewhere, TBF did not amend its statement pursuant to FED.R.BANKR.P. 2014(a) in the eToys case to disclose its relationship with Mr. Gold. Mr. Alber alleged that TBF, its partners and Mr. Gold had conflicts of interest which disabled them from serving in the eToys case. Id.

On February 15, 2005, after conducting her own investigation, the United States Trustee moved for an order directing TBF to disgorge up to the full amount of fees paid to TBF as counsel to the eToys creditors' committee from the time the Debtor hired Mr. Gold until the effective date of the confirmed Chapter 11 plan, as a sanction for TBF's violation of its FED.R.BANKR.P. 2014(a) disclosure obligations. The United States Trustee's motion did not suggest a sanctions amount. The United States Trustee did not seek sanctions against Mr. Gold, whom eToys had hired as an employee under corporate governance principles rather than as a professional person under 11 U.S.C. § 327(a). United States Trustee's Motion for Disgorgement ,Bankr. D.I. 2195.

After the United States Trustee filed her motion against TBF, the United States Trustee and TBF agreed to settle the motion, subject to bankruptcy court approval, for disgorgement by TBF of $750,000 of compensation previously awarded. The United States Trustee moved for bankruptcy court approval of the proposed settlement on February 24, 2005. Motion to Approve Settlement, Bankr. D.I. 2201. Under the proposed settlement, the $750,000 would be returned to the Debtor's estate, which was being liquidated for the benefit of creditors. Id., Ex. A.

The bankruptcy court conducted a day-long hearing on March 1, 2005, where Mr. Alber participated and cross-examined witnesses in connection with his and the United States Trustee's motions. After the hearing and review of post-hearing submissions, the bankruptcy court issued a written opinion and entered a final order on October 4, 2005, inter alia, approving the settlement between the United States Trustee and TBF and denying Mr. Alber's motion to the extent it sought relief against Mr. Gold or relief against TBF and its partners beyond that provided in the settlement between the United States Trustee and TBF.[4/] Bankruptcy Court Opinion, Bankr. D.I. 2319; Bankruptcy Court Order, Bankr. D.I. 2320.

Mr. Alber timely filed a notice of appeal from the bankruptcy court's order on October 14, 2005. Notice of Appeal to District Court, Bankr. D.I. 2327. Mr. Alber also timely filed a designation of the record on appeal pursuant to FED.R.BANKR.P. 8006. First Record Designation, Dist. D.I. 2. Mr. Alber's original designation included numerous items that were not a part of the record in the bankruptcy court. TBF, MNAT and Mr. Gold each moved to strike Mr. Alber's record designation in December 2005. Motions to Strike Record Designation, Dist. D.I. 8, 11, and 12, respectively. The district court appeal did not proceed while the motion to strike Mr. Alber's designation of the record was pending. On August 30, 2006, the district court granted the motions to strike Mr. Alber's designation, finding that the items listed in the designation were not sufficiently identified to determine whether they were part of the record before the bankruptcy court. Order Striking Designation at 2, Dist. D.I. 22.

[4/] The bankruptcy court also granted in part Mr. Alber's separate motion to disqualify, and for disgorgement of fees by MNAT, and approved a settlement between the post-effective date committee and Goldman Sachs & Co. Bankruptcy Court Opinion at 55-56, Bankr. D.I. 2319; Bankruptcy Court Order, D.I. 2320.

The district court entered a scheduling order on September 20, 2006, directing Mr. Alber to file his opening brief by September 27, 2006. Scheduling Order, Dist. D.I. 25. Mr. Alber immediately requested a one-week extension. First Extension Request, Dist. D.I. 27. By agreement of all parties, the district court entered a September 22, 2006 amended consolidated scheduling order which, inter alia, directed Mr. Alber to file his opening brief by October 4, 2006. Amended Consolidated Scheduling Order, Dist. D.I. 28.

Mr. Alber did not file his opening brief by the district court's October 4, 2006 deadline. On October 9, 2006, MNAT moved for a status conference to address Mr. Alber's failure to timely file an opening brief, and requested a stay of the deadlines by which the appellees were required to file their briefs. Motion for Status Conference, Dist. D.I. 29. The district court scheduled a telephonic status conference with the parties for October 16, 2006. On the morning of October 16, 2006, twelve days after his opening brief was due, Mr. Alber responded to MNAT's motion for a status conference by filing a 22 page response with over 20 exhibits, requesting a second extension of time to file his opening brief. Request for Second Extension, Dist. D.I. 35. Mr. Alber's response justified his request for more time on the grounds he had been busy with the eToys case and with other litigation involving an individual named Johann Hamerski. Id. at 6-17. Mr. Alber asserted that he was unable to complete his opening brief due to the stress that had produced. Id. at 2-3; 17. Mr. Alber attached an October 6, 2006 letter from a nurse practitioner stating that Mr. Alber was "experiencing extreme stress and anxiety" and asking if "these legal matters could be put on hold for a time, allowing Mr. Alber time for a respite." Id., Ex. A.

During the October 16, 2006 status conference, the district court expressed concern that Mr. Alber was able to generate a 22-page document with numerous attachments explaining why he needed an extension of time to file his opening brief, but claimed to be unable to generate an opening brief articulating his position on appeal. Transcript of October 16, 2006 Status Conference at 5, 9, Dist. D.I. 37. Nonetheless, the district court entered an order granting Mr. Alber an additional 30 days to file his opening brief. The district court instructed Mr. Alber that the court would entertain a motion for a further extension if he could not prepare his brief within the 30 days because of his mental or emotional state, but would require Mr.

Alber to submit to examination by an independent mental health practitioner to determine whether he was "genuinely unable to proceed." Id. at 10-12. The district court entered a second amended consolidated scheduling order on October 23, 2006, directing Mr. Alber to file his opening brief by November 15, 2006. Second Amended Consolidated Scheduling Order, Dist. D.I. 39.

Mr. Alber did not comply with the second amended consolidated scheduling order. He did not file his opening brief by November 15, 2006, nor did he move for an extension of time to file his brief as directed by the district court at the October 16, 2006 status conference. Mr. Alber instead sent a November 16, 2006 e-mail message to some of the appellees indicating his intent to move for an extension until November 27, 2006 to file his opening brief. Mr. Alber also indicated that his health was "greatly improved after the time off" and he was "in a mental state able to continue without break for the foreseeable future." Mr. Alber's e-mail suggested that his failure to comply with the November 15, 2006 deadline was not due solely to health concerns but was also due to the burden of other litigation, and potential criminal issues.

> [I]t's been a struggle since I've been served with 24 documents from the previously named 'associates' of some of you in the Arizona case, and, coincidentally, just a few days prior to my November 15th deadline they took steps to have me arrested. Those actions culminated with the local police visiting me, and my having to defend myself from yet more perjurious > allegations, which necessitates my drafting a filing (albeit a short filing which will only take me a day or two at most) to deal with these new criminal allegations against me.

Motion to Dismiss, Ex. C, Dist. D.I. 42.

On November 17, 2006, TBF, MNAT, and Mr. Gold moved to dismiss Mr. Alber's appeal for failure to prosecute. Motion to Dismiss, Dist. D.I. 42. Mr. Alber did not oppose the motion, and still did not file his opening brief.

A magistrate judge of the district court entered an order on January 5, 2007 granting Mr. Alber a final opportunity to file his opening brief. Third Scheduling Order, Dist. D.I. 44. The order noted that Mr. Alber had not complied with the second amended consolidated scheduling order's November 15, 2006 filing deadline and that a motion to dismiss the appeal had been filed on November 17, 2006. The January 5, 2007 order stated that if Mr. Alber did not file his opening brief on or before January 18, 2007, the appeal would be dismissed for lack of prosecution. Id.. Mr. Alber did not comply with this deadline.

Mr. Alber's opening brief was not filed until January 23, 2007, five days after the deadline set forth in the January 5, 2007 "last chance" order. Alber District Court Brief, Dist. D.I. 49. He mailed copies of this brief to the parties on January 19, 2007 and sent copies by e-mail late in the day on January 22, 2007. TBF, MNAT and Mr. Gold immediately contacted the district court by letter and requested that it act on the pending motion to dismiss the appeal or, alternatively, schedule a telephonic conference to establish remaining briefing deadlines. Request for Action on Motion to Dismiss, Dist. D.I. 48 . On February 5, 2007, TBF, MNAT and Mr. Gold filed their Emergency Motion to (A) Clarify the Absence of Briefing Deadlines; (B) Defer Appeal Briefing Pending Decision of Appellees' Motion to Dismiss, or in the Alternative, (C) Establish Briefing Schedule to Govern These Procedurally Consolidated Appeals. Motion to Clarify, Dist. D.I. 51. Mr. Alber did not oppose the motion.

On February 27, 2007, the district court entered a memorandum order granting the pending motion by TBF, MNAT and Gold to dismiss Mr. Alber's appeal, with prejudice. Dismissal Order, Dist. D.I. 55. The district court reviewed each of the six factors set forth in Poulis v. State Farm Fire & Cas. Co., 747 F.2d 863 (3d Cir. 1984) and found that (i) Mr. Alber was personally responsible for failure to pursue his appeal in a timely manner; (ii) his repeated failure to comply with court orders imposed additional burdens on the appellees and the district court and prevented timely resolution of the appeal; (iii) Mr. Alber had demonstrated a history of dilatory behavior; (iv) Mr. Alber's conduct was not consistent with an interest in or respect for the appellate process; (v) alternative sanctions short of dismissal would not be effective; and (vi) in challenging the bankruptcy court's decisions on matters in which the bankruptcy court had broad discretion, Mr. Alber had only minimal probability of success. Dismissal Order at 4-6, Dist. D.I. 55. The district court therefore determined that "the factors identified in Poulis weigh in favor of dismissal with prejudice." Id. at 6.

Non-party Steven Haas moved for reconsideration on March 12, 2007. Haas Motion for Reconsideration, Dist. D.I. 56. Mr. Alber moved for reconsideration on March 15, 2007. Alber Motion for Reconsideration, Dist. D.I. 57. The district court denied both motions on June 12, 2007, noting that the motions did not demonstrate grounds to warrant reconsideration. Order Denying Reconsideration, Dist. D.I. 63. Mr. Alber timely filed a notice of appeal of the district court's February 27, 2007 dismissal order on April 30, 2007, while the motions for reconsideration were pending. Notice of Appeal, Dist. D.I. 59.

STATEMENT OF RELATED CASES AND PROCEEDINGS

The bankruptcy court order from which Mr. Alber appealed to the district court was also appealed by Steven Haas, in his capacity as President of administrative claimant Collateral Logistics, Inc. ("CLI"). By order dated August 30, 2006, the district court dismissed Mr. Haas's appeal for lack of standing (because the bankruptcy court's order affected CLI's interests, not those of Mr. Haas) and for CLI's failure to retain counsel.

Mr. Haas timely appealed the district court’s dismissal order to this Court on October 2, 2006, under Case No. 06-4308. On March 23, 2007, this Court dismissed the appeal as to CLI for failure to prosecute because CLI had not retained counsel. On May 16, 2007, this Court entered an order summarily affirming the district court’s order of dismissal as to Mr. Haas, agreeing with the district court’s analysis and decision that Mr. Haas lacked standing to appeal.

STANDARD OF REVIEW

This Court reviews dismissal orders, whether imposed as a sanction for violation of court orders or for failure to prosecute, under an abuse of discretion standard, recognizing that such relief should be entered sparingly. See Mindek v. Rigatti, 964 F.2d 1369, 1373 (3d Cir. 1992) (dismissal for failure to comply with orders; “[T]he scope of our review is restricted to determining whether the district court abused its discretion. How we imagine we might have exercised our own discretion had we been in the district court judge's robe is entirely irrelevant.”)(emphasis in original); Poulis v. State Farm Fire & Cas. Co.,747 F.2d 863, 868 (3d Cir. 1984)(dismissal for failure to comply with court-ordered deadlines); Adams v. Trustees of the New Jersey Brewery Employees’ Pension Trust Fund, 29 F.3d 863, 870 (3d Cir. 1994) (failure to prosecute; question is not whether the reviewing court would as an original matter have dismissed; it is whether district court abused its discretion in so doing.); Jewelcor v. Asia Commercial Co., Ltd. (In re Jewelcor, Inc.), 11 F.3d 394, 397 (3d Cir. 1993) (standard for reviewing dismissal of appeal for failure to prosecute is abuse of discretion, but district court must have considered less severe sanctions).

SUMMARY OF ARGUMENT

The district court's dismissal of Mr. Alber's appeal for lack of prosecution did not constitute an abuse of discretion. The district court appropriately considered each of the Poulis factors, as this Court requires. Based on that review, it determined dismissal was the only effective means of addressing Mr. Alber's continued failure to meet mandatory filing deadlines.

This was not an abuse of discretion. Mr. Alber violated no less than three district court-imposed deadlines to file an opening brief. The district court generously gave him additional chances to file his brief. Only when Mr. Alber repeatedly failed to do so did the court dismiss for failure to prosecute. That was not an abuse of discretion.

ARGUMENT

THE DISTRICT COURT DID NOT ABUSE ITS DISCRETION BY DISMISSING MR. ALBER'S APPEAL GIVEN MR. ALBER'S FAILURE TO PROSECUTE IT.

The district court dismissed Mr. Alber's appeal for failure to prosecute because he failed to comply with three separate orders requiring him to file his opening appeal brief by the dates specified in those orders. It is universally understood that courts may dismiss cases for defiance of rules and of court orders. See Chambers v. NASCO, Inc., 501 U.S. 32, 49 (1991) ("The authority of a court to dismiss sua sponte for lack of prosecution has generally been considered an 'inherent power,' governed not by rule or statute but by the control necessarily vested in courts to manage their own affairs so as to achieve the orderly and expeditious disposition of cases" (citations omitted)); Carnegie-Mellon University v. Cohill, 484 U.S. 343, 360 (1988) ("Courts have historically possessed an inherent power to dismiss suits for discretionary reasons such as failure to prosecute" (citing Link v. Wabash R. Co., 370 U.S. 626, 629-31 (1962)); Degen v. United States, 517 U.S. 820, 827 (1996) ("A federal court has at its disposal an array of means to enforce its orders, including dismissal in an appropriate case."); Young v. Gordon, 330 F.3d 76, 81 (1st Cir. 2003) ("When noncompliance occurs, the ordering court should consider the totality of events and then choose from the broad universe of available sanctions in an effort to fit the punishment to the severity and circumstances of the violation.")

The law in the Third Circuit is no different. A district court may dismiss a case for failure to abide by court orders or failure to prosecute. See, e.g., Mindek, supra, 964 F.2d at 1373; Poulis, supra, 747 F.2d at 868; New Jersey Brewery Employees' Pension Trust Fund, supra, 29 F.3d at 870; Jewelcor, supra, 11 F.3d at 397 However, before determining that dismissal is an appropriate sanction for disobedience of its orders, the district court is required to balance the six factors enumerated in Poulis, supra: "(1) the extent of the party's personal responsibility; (2) the prejudice to the adversary caused by the failure to meet scheduling orders and respond to discovery; (3) a history of dilatoriness; (4) whether the conduct of the party or the attorney was willful or in bad faith; (5) the effectiveness of sanctions other than dismissal, which entails analysis of alternative sanctions; and (6) the meritoriousness of the claim or defense." 747 F.2d at 868 (emphasis in original).

Although the district court must consider each of the Poulis factors, it is not necessary that all of those factors weigh against the noncompliant party to find that dismissal is warranted. Hicks v. Feeney, 850 F.2d 152, 156 (3d Cir. 1988), cert. denied, 488 U.S. 1005, 109 S.Ct. 786 (1989). The standard of review from such a dismissal is deferential, and the scope is narrow. This Court has held that its role is limited to determining whether the district court properly balanced the Poulis factors and whether the record supports its findings. Livera v. First Nat. State Bank of New Jersey, 879 F.2d 1186, 1194 (3d Cir. 1989), citing Hicks, supra. Importantly, it is not relevant that this Court might have ruled differently upon its own consideration of the Poulis factors. As this Court has stated, "the decision to dismiss constitutes an exercise of the district court judge's discretion and must be given great deference by this Court-a court which has had no direct contact with the litigants and whose orders, calendar, docket and authority have not been violated or disrupted." Mindek, supra, 964 F.2d at 1373.

The district court properly balanced the Poulis factors, and the record amply supports the court's findings in that regard.

A. The District Court Did Not Abuse its Discretion in Finding Mr. Alber Was Personally Responsible.

With respect to personal responsibility for failure to comply with rules or court orders, this Court has expressed a preference for "visiting sanctions directly on the delinquent lawyer rather than on a client who is not actually at fault." Adams v. Trustees of the New Jersey Brewery Employees' Pension Trust Fund, supra, 29 F.3d at 873. In this case, Mr. Alber bears full responsibility for his failure to timely file his opening brief. He is not the sympathetic "innocent client" of a delinquent attorney; he has instead acted pro se from the inception of the eToys, Inc. bankruptcy case and, as the district court noted in its memorandum order dismissing the appeal, "has been an effective advocate in the bankruptcy proceedings." Dismissal Order at 4, Dist. D.I. 55.

Mr. Alber's pro se status means only that he has no attorney to whom he can point as the cause of the delay; he bears the responsibility himself. Adams v. Trustees of the New Jersey Brewery Employees' Pension Trust Fund, supra, 29 F.3d at 873. Moreover, Mr. Alber is not entitled to any special dispensation as a pro se litigant. Court rules and orders apply with equal force to pro se parties as to other litigants. See Nielsen v. Price, 17 F.3d 1276, 1277 (10th Cir. 1994).

Mr. Alber's alleged health issues do not excuse his failure to comply with the district court's orders. During the October 16, 2006 telephonic status conference, the district court instructed Mr. Alber that it would entertain a motion for a further extension of the briefing deadline if he could not prepare his brief within 30 days because of his health, with the caveat that he would be required to submit to an independent examination. Transcript of October 16, 2006 Status Conference at 11, 13, Dist. D.I. 37. Mr. Alber had ample opportunity to move for a further extension of the briefing deadlines, but did not avail himself of such opportunity and did not submit himself for independent examination. He also had ample opportunity to alert the district court to his allegedly continuing health issues by, inter alia, answering the motion to dismiss filed by TBF, MNAt and Mr. Gold on November 17, 2006.

The district court did not abuse its discretion in determining that Mr. Alber was personally responsible for his failure to timely file an opening brief.

B. The District Court Did Not Abuse its Discretion in Finding The Appellees Have Been Prejudiced.

The district court noted in its memorandum order dismissing Mr. Alber's appeal, that Mr. Alber's repeated failure to comply with the court's orders, and the motion practice caused by such failure, have imposed additional burdens on the appellees and on the court itself. The district court further noted that given the nature of Mr. Alber's complaints against the appellees, timely resolution of the appeal was thwarted by Mr. Alber's conduct. Dismissal Order at 4, Dist. D.I. 55. This was not an abuse of discretion.

Prejudice includes the burden a party must bear when forced to file motions in response to an adversary's delay tactics. See Ware v. Rodale Press, Inc., 322 F.3d 218, 223-24 (3d Cir. 2003). Mr. Alber's repeated failure to timely file his opening brief was in and of itself prejudicial to the appellees, who were forced to file motions in response to Mr. Alber's delay tactics.

Here, several of the appellees had to file no fewer than three motions responding to Mr. Alber's failure to file a timely brief. The district court held a status conference which counsel for TBF, MNAT, Mr. Gold and the United States Trustee attended. None of this would have been necessary had Mr. Alber timely prosecuted his appeal.

C. The District Court Did Not Abuse its Discretion in Finding Mr. Alber Has Demonstrated a History of Dilatoriness.

The district court found that Mr. Alber had demonstrated a history of dilatory behavior in the case, starting with his improper designation of the record on appeal and ending with the untimely filing of his opening brief. Dismissal Order at 4-5, Dist. D.I. 55. The court did not abuse its discretion in making this finding. See Adams v. Trustees of the New Jersey Brewery Employees' Pension Trust Fund, 29 F.3d 863, 874 (3d Cir. 1994) (Excessive or repeated delay or delinquency constitutes a history of dilatoriness, such as consistent tardiness in complying with court orders.); Jewelcor, supra, 11 F.3d at 874 (same, citing Poulis, supra, 747 F.2d at 868).

Mr. Alber initially delayed the proceedings in the district court appeal by submitting a patently inadequate and inappropriate designation of the record on appeal pursuant to FED.R.BANKR.P. 8006. First Record Designation, Dist. D.I. 2. Mr. Alber's original designation included many items that were not a part of the record in the bankruptcy court. TBF, MNAT and Mr. Gold each moved to strike Mr. Alber's record designation in December 2005. Dist. D.I. 8, 11, 12. The district court appeal did not progress while the motion to strike Mr. Alber's designation was pending. On August 30, 2006, the district court granted the motions to strike Mr. Alber's designation, finding that the items listed in the designation were not sufficiently identified to determine whether they were part of the record before the bankruptcy court. Order Striking Designation at 2, Dist. D.I. 22. Mr. Alber's improper and inadequate record designation delayed the progress of the district court appeal for approximately eight months.

Mr. Alber also demonstrated a history of dilatory behavior by his serial defiance of scheduling orders. Even after the district directed Mr. Alber to move for an additional extension of time if his health so required (and advised him that he would need to undergo an independent mental health examination to support such a motion), Mr. Alber repeatedly elected to allow briefing deadlines to expire without moving for extensions. When Mr. Alber's health permitted him to prepare his opening brief, he elected to delay preparing such a brief while he pursued other legal proceedings. Motion to Dismiss, Ex. C, Dist. D.I. 42. The district court's finding that Mr. Alber demonstrated a history of dilatoriness is well-supported by the record and, at a minimum, does not constitute an abuse of discretion.

D. The District Court Did Not Abuse its Discretion in Ruling Mr. Alber's Conduct Was Willful.

The district court determined that Mr. Alber's conduct in the appeal had not been consistent with an interest in, or respect for, the appellate process. Dismissal Order at 5, Dist. D.I. 55. Willfulness can involve intentional or self-serving behavior. New Jersey Brewery Employees' Pension Trust Fund, supra, 29 F.3d at 875. In some instances a history of dilatoriness also suffices to demonstrate willfulness and/or bad faith. See Ware v. Rodale Press, Inc., supra, 322 F.3d at 224 (3d Cir. 2003).

Here, Mr. Alber demonstrated willful disrespect for the appellate process and the district court itself by repeatedly disobeying scheduling orders. Mr. Alber also acted willfully when he elected to delay preparing his opening brief while he pursued his other legal proceedings in Arizona. In doing so, he chose to serve his interests in the Arizona litigation at the expense of complying with deadlines in the eToys appeal.

E. The District Court Did Not Abuse Its Discretion in Finding Sanctions Other Than Dismissal Would Not Be Effective.

The district court found that no sanction short of dismissal would be effective "given the threat of sanctions communicated at the October 16, 2006 status conference and through the January 5, 2007 order." Dismissal Order at 5, Dist. D.I. 55.

Mr. Alber asserts that the district court did not threaten him with sanctions on October 16, 2006, but instead granted his request for an extension of time to file his opening brief and told him more time would be granted if necessary. See Appeal Brief at 9. Mr. Alber is correct that the district court did not threaten him with "sanctions." The district court advised Mr. Alber at the October 16, 2006 status conference that the price of any further delay (beyond November 15, 2006) in filing his opening brief would be submission to an independent mental health examination, for which he might be required to bear some or all of the cost. Transcript of October 16, 2006 Status Conference at 10-12, Dist. D.I. 37. In considering the effectiveness of sanctions other than dismissal, the district court may have viewed this "price of delay" as a sanction. If this was error, it was harmless.

Mr. Alber appears to have been undaunted by the prospect of submitting to an independent mental health examination, because he apparently had no intention of so submitting. Instead of moving for an extension of time beyond November 15, 2006 and paying the "price" described by the district court, Mr. Alber simply took additional time without authorization by disobeying the second amended scheduling order, unconcerned about how the appellees and the court would respond.

Mr. Alber also suggests that the magistrate judge who entered the "last chance" order of January 5, 2007 acted without "standing." See Mr. Alber's Appeal Brief at 9. Mr. Alber appears to suggest, albeit implicitly, that he could ignore that order with impunity because the magistrate judge had no means to enforce the threat of severe sanctions. The implied corollary of this suggestion is that the risk of sanctions less severe but more certain to be imposed by a district judge would somehow have induced Mr. Alber to comply with the district court's orders. However, by the time the "last chance" order was entered, Mr. Alber had already disobeyed two scheduling orders entered by district court judges, and a motion to dismiss his appeal had been pending for seven weeks. Mr. Alber's failure to move for a further extension of the November 15, 2006 briefing deadline, to oppose the motion to dismiss his appeal, to file his opening brief promptly after the motion to dismiss was filed, or even to challenge the magistrate judge's scheduling order, already demonstrated that Mr. Alber was unconcerned about dismissal, let alone lesser sanctions, that might be imposed.

Finally, the order dismissing Mr. Alber's appeal was not entered by the magistrate judge; it was entered by a judge of the district court. The issue of the magistrate judge's authority to act is not before this Court. Moreover, even if the magistrate judge lacked authority to enter a dismissal order, nothing precluded her from entering case management orders such as the January 5, 2007 scheduling order. In fact, the magistrate judge's January 5, 2007 order actually extended the time for Mr. Alber to file his delinquent brief. If that order was a nullity, then Mr. Alber filed his brief 69 days late rather than five days after the "last chance" deadline.

Mr. Alber's conduct demonstrated that he was unconcerned about sanctions. Accordingly, no sanction short of dismissal of the appeal would have been effective, and the district court did not abuse its discretion in so finding.

E. The District Court Did Not Abuse Its Discretion in Finding Mr. Alber's Appeal Lacks Merit.

In considering the final Poulis factor, whether the case or appeal is meritorious, the district court reviewed the bankruptcy court's opinion and the order from which Mr. Alber appealed. Although the district court considered Mr. Alber's likelihood of success on appeal when conducting its Poulis analysis, the court did not necessarily analyze the merits to the same degree it would have had the court been considering a fully briefed appeal on the merits rather than a motion to dismiss for failure to prosecute. This was an appropriate exercise of the district court's discretion, supported by the record.

How this Court might have exercised its own discretion in considering the merits of Mr. Alber's appeal and its likelihood of success is not the relevant test; the scope of this Court's review is restricted to determining whether the district court abused its discretion in determining that Mr. Alber's likelihood of success on appeal was minimal. See Mindek v. Rigatti, supra, 964 F.2d at 1373. If this Court affirms the district court's dismissal order, it need not address the underlying merits of Mr.

Alber's appeal. If this Court reverses the dismissal order, it should remand the case to the district court for a decision on the merits. The United States Trustee briefly discusses the merits herein only for the purpose of demonstrating that the district court properly considered the final Poulis factor.

The district court correctly observed that Mr. Alber was challenging the bankruptcy court's exercise of discretion in matters over which bankruptcy courts possess broad discretion. Dismissal Order at 5-6, Dist. D.I. 55. The court further observed that in matters where the bankruptcy court has broad discretion, the likelihood of a successful challenge to the exercise of that discretion is minimal. Id. It is well-settled that bankruptcy courts have broad discretion to fashion an appropriate remedy when confronted with an estate professional's violation of the Bankruptcy Code's disinterestedness requirements or a breach of the professional's disclosure obligations under FED.R.BANKR.P. 2014(a). See United States Trustee v. Price Waterhouse, 19 F.3d 138 (3d Cir. 1994) (construing section 328(c) of the Bankruptcy Code to give the bankruptcy court discretion over the disallowance of fees when an estate professional is not a disinterested person at any time during his employment). A court's power to order disgorgement of a professional's fees and expenses is not to be applied woodenly. It should instead be "exercised with restraint and discretion;" in exercising that discretion, the court "should apply principles of equity, as other courts have done." Matter of Olsen Indus., Inc., 222 B.R. 49, 62 (Bankr. Del. 1997), citing In re Downs, 103 F.3d 472, 478 (6th Cir. 1996). The nature of the sanction "should be determined with a view to its deterrent value, not necessarily limited to the harm caused litigants." Pearson v. First NH Mortgage Corp., 200 F.3d 30, 42 n.7 (1st Cir. 1999).

It is similarly well-settled that stipulations in bankruptcy are favored as a means of minimizing litigation, expediting the administration of the estate, and providing for the efficient resolution of bankruptcy cases. In re Martin, 91 F.3d 389, 393 (3d Cir. 1996); In re Coram Healthcare Corp., 315 B.R. 321, 329 (Bankr. D. Del. 2004). A bankruptcy court should approve a stipulation if its is fair and equitable and is in the best interest of the estate. In re Cajun Electric Power Cooperative, Inc., 119 F.3d 349, 355 (5th Cir. 1997). To make this determination, the bankruptcy court "must assess and balance the value of the claim that is being compromised against the value to the estate of the acceptance of the compromise proposal." Id. at 356; Martin, supra, 91 F.3d at 393. Under Martin, the bankruptcy court is required to consider four discrete criteria: (1) the probability of success in litigation; (2) the likely difficulties in collection; (3) the complexity of the litigation involved and the expense, inconvenience and attendant delay; and (4) the paramount interest of the creditors. Martin, supra, 91 F.3d at 393.

In this case, with respect to the settlement of the United States Trustee's motion for sanctions against TBF, the bankruptcy court specifically addressed all four of the Martin factors. Most important was the bankruptcy court's finding regarding probability of success in litigation, as the court found that while there was a strong probability that the United States Trustee would succeed in part on its sanctions motion (because of TBF's admitted FED.R.BANKR.P. 2014(a) disclosure violation), there was a risk of not succeeding on the issue of actual conflict of interest if that issue were litigated. The bankruptcy court also found that the paramount interest of creditors was served by the settlement, as TBF's $750,000 disgorgement was a substantial penalty, and that the settlement furthered the deterrent goal of a sanctions motion. Bankruptcy Court Opinion at 41-42, Bank. D.I. 2319.

The bankruptcy court also specifically addressed its decision not to impose sanctions on Mr. Gold (whose status as an employee of the Debtor was not an issue), as it held that executive employees of a debtor are not professionals who must be employed under section 327(a) of the Bankruptcy Code. Bankruptcy Court Opinion at 50, Bank. D.I. 2319.

The bankruptcy court's order underlying Mr. Alber's district court appeal, as well as the accompanying opinion, reflect thorough consideration of the evidence presented, painstaking legal analysis, and careful application of the law to the facts.

In sum, they demonstrate the bankruptcy court's sound exercise of judicial discretion. Accordingly, the district court did not abuse its discretion in determining that Mr. Alber's likelihood of a successful challenge to the exercise of the bankruptcy court's discretion was minimal.

CONCLUSION

For these reasons, the United States Trustee respectfully asks this Court to affirm the district court order dismissing Mr. Alber's appeal.

STATEMENT OF JURISDICTION

The United States Bankruptcy Court for the Southern District of Texas had jurisdiction under 28 U.S.C. § 157 to rule on the Order to Open Miscellaneous Docket for Consideration of Disciplinary Action and for Consideration of § 526(c)(5) and Other Orders. This Court has jurisdiction under 28 U.S.C. § 158(a)(1) to decide Mr. Fahey's timely appeal from the Bankruptcy Court's Injunction Under Bankruptcy Code § 526 and Referral to Chief District Judge for Disciplinary Action and to State Bar of Texas.

STATEMENT OF ISSUE PRESENTED

The issue before this Court on appeal is whether the court below erred in enjoining Edward Fahey from providing "Bankruptcy Assistance" to "Assisted Persons" (as those terms are defined in the Bankruptcy Code) until he demonstrated the ability and intent to represent clients competently and to comply with the Bankruptcy Code and all applicable rules.

STATEMENT OF THE CASE

This is a case about attorney discipline. After repeated admonitions and warnings about the substandard quality of Mr. Fahey's representation of his clients, United States Bankruptcy Judge Wesley Steen issued an order setting a hearing on whether the Court should impose appropriate civil penalties against Mr. Fahey for what appeared to be a pattern of conduct showing "incompetence or bad faith filing and prosecution of cases." (Dkt. No. 1 at 8).[1] At the hearing, the United States Trustee[2] and the chapter 13 trustee, William Heitkamp, offered unrebutted evidence that showed that the cases Mr. Fahey filed were dismissed at a far greater rate than other practitioners and that Mr. Fahey consistently filed bankruptcy petitions with inaccuracies and without his signature. (Dkt. Nos. 2 and 3). Mr. Fahey stipulated to all this evidence and offered none of his own.

After considering all the evidence and argument presented, the court concluded that Mr. Fahey demonstrated a clear and consistent pattern of (1) failing to file information required by Bankruptcy Code § 521[3] when he filed cases, (2) inadequate representation of clients, (3) lack of expertise in bankruptcy law, (4) unreasonable delegation of authority and responsibility to a contract paralegal that resulted in harm to debtors, (5) filing pleadings with false statements, and (6) failure to comply with the Bankruptcy Code and applicable rules. (Dkt. No. 16 at 1). For the "protection of the public," the Court enjoined Mr. Fahey from representing "assisted persons," as that term is defined in section 101(3) of the Bankruptcy Code, based on his authority under sections 105 and 526 of the Bankruptcy Code, the Court's inherent powers, and Federal Rule of Bankruptcy Procedure 9011. bankruptcy system . . . charged with preventing fraud and abuse and with 'fill[ing] the vacuum' caused by possible creditor inactivity."). Congress explicitly provided that United States Trustees possess standing to raise and be heard on any issue in any bankruptcy case. 11 U.S.C. § 307.

[3] Section 521(a)-(c) of the Bankruptcy Code requires debtors to file various documents including a schedule of assets and liabilities, a schedule of current income and current expenditures, and a statement of the debtor's financial affairs. These documents must be filed within 15 days of the commencement of the case unless the court grants an extension of time. Fed. R. Bankr. P. 1007(c). Failure to file the documents required under section 521(a)(1) within 45 days may result in automatic dismissal of the case. 11 U.S.C. § 521(i).

STATEMENT OF THE FACTS

I. Statutory Framework - Overview of 11 U.S.C. § 526

In 2005, Congress passed the Bankruptcy Abuse Prevention and Consumer Protection Act of 2005 (BAPCPA or 2005 Act), Pub. L. No. 109-8, 119 Stat. 23. The 2005 Act was "a comprehensive package of reform measures" designed "to improve bankruptcy law and practice by restoring personal responsibility and integrity in the bankruptcy system and ensure that the system is fair for both debtors and creditors." H.R. Rep. No. 31, 109th Cong., 1st Sess. Pt. 1, at 2 (2005) (House Report). Described by the House Committee as "the most comprehensive set of [bankruptcy] reforms in more than 25 years," id. at 3, the 2005 Act both modified the substantive standards for bankruptcy relief and adopted new measures intended to curb a variety of abusive practices that Congress concluded had come to pervade the bankruptcy system.

After extensive hearings, Congress determined that misleading and abusive practices by bankruptcy professionals, including attorneys, had become a substantial cause of unnecessary bankruptcy petitions and had sometimes jeopardized debtors' ability to obtain a discharge of their debts. For example, Congress heard evidence that a civil enforcement initiative undertaken by the United States Trustee Program had "consistently identified  misconduct by attorneys and other professionals" as among the sources of abuse in the bankruptcy system. House Report at 5 (citation omitted). Congress responded to that evidence by "strengthening professionalism standards for attorneys and others who assist consumer debtors with their bankruptcy cases." Id. at 17.

The 2005 Act added or enhanced a variety of regulations on bankruptcy professionals' conduct. Those regulations are intended to protect the clients and prospective clients of bankruptcy professionals, the creditors of clients who do enter bankruptcy, and the bankruptcy system. The regulations require additional disclosures to clients about their rights and the professional's responsibilities; they protect clients against being overcharged, or charged for services never provided; and they discourage misuse of the bankruptcy system. See, e.g., 11 U.S.C. § 110(b)-(h), 11 U.S.C. §§ 526-528, 11 U.S.C. § 707(b)(4)(C)-(D).

Many of the regulations apply to debt relief agencies. Under the Bankruptcy Code's definition, "any person" becomes a debt relief agency by providing "any bankruptcy assistance" for a fee to a consumer debtor, known as an "assisted person." 11 U.S.C. § 101(12A). An "assisted person" is "any person whose debts consist primarily of consumer debts and the value of whose nonexempt property is less than" an inflation-adjusted sum, currently $164,250. 11 U.S.C. § 101(3); see 11 U.S.C. § 104(a); 72 Fed. Reg. 7082 (2007). "Bankruptcy assistance" includes, inter alia, "advice, counsel, document preparation, or filing, or attendance at a creditors' meeting or appearing in a case or proceeding on behalf of another or providing legal representation with respect to a case or proceeding under this title." 11 U.S.C. § 101(4A).

Section 526 of title 11 sets out four basic rules of professional conduct for debt relief agencies, each of which protects clients against specific unethical practices. Section 526(a)(1) requires debt relief agencies to perform all promised services. Section 526(a)(2) prohibits debt relief agencies from advising assisted persons to make statements that are untrue or misleading in seeking bankruptcy relief. Section 526(a)(3) precludes debt relief agencies from misrepresenting the services they will provide or the benefits and risks attendant to filing for bankruptcy. Section 526(a)(4) restricts debt relief agencies from advising an assisted person or prospective assisted person to incur more debt in contemplation of such person filing a bankruptcy case. The United States Supreme Court has granted certiorari to determine whether attorneys are debt relief agencies and whether section 526(a)(4) is constitutional. Milavetz, Gallop & Milavetz, P.A. v. United States, 129 S. Ct. 2766 (2009).

The principal remedy for violations of section 526 is a civil action by the debtor to recover his “actual damages,” including any fees already paid. 11 U.S.C. § 526(c)(2). For violations of section 526, the statute also authorizes state attorneys general to sue for debtors' actual damages or for injunctive relief to prevent violations. 11 U.S.C. § 526(c)(3). For intentional or recurring violations of that provision, the bankruptcy court may also impose an injunction or “an appropriate civil penalty,” either on its own motion or at the request of the United States Trustee or the debtor. 11 U.S.C. § 526(c)(5).

II. Factual Background

A. The Court Entered an Order Setting a Hearing and Detailing the Court’s Concern with Mr. Fahey’s Conduct and Setting Forth Possible Penalties.

On June 29, 2009, United States Bankruptcy Judge Wesley Steen issued an Order to Open Miscellaneous Docket for Consideration of Disciplinary Action and for Consideration of § 526(c)(5) and Other Orders and requested participation by the United States Trustee and the chapter 13 trustee. In the order, the court stated that it had noticed that clients represented by Mr. Edward Fahey “almost uniformly fail to obtain confirmation of their chapter 13 plans.” (Dkt. No. 1 at 1). To confirm this observation, the Court reviewed the publicly available docket sheets to compare all chapter 13 cases filed by Mr. Fahey from January 1, 2006 to March 31, 2009 to chapter 13 cases filed by two other Laredo attorneys who file “almost all” the remaining chapter 13 cases in Laredo. (Id.). The Court noted that the results were “striking.” (Id.). Of Mr. Fahey’s 62 cases filed during that period, 92 percent had been dismissed, compared to 28 percent of the 226 cases that the other two attorneys filed. In addition, the Court stated that 47 percent of the cases were dismissed for failure to file documents required by section 521 of the Bankruptcy

Code and 61 percent were dismissed within 90 days after the petition commencing the case was filed. For the other attorneys, the percentages for those categories were two percent and six percent respectively. (Id.).

The Court noted that this order was not the first notice that Mr. Fahey had of the Court's concerns with his practice. It stated that in August 2008, the Court had warned Mr. Fahey that if "this conduct persists the Court will refer the matter to the Chief District Judge with the recommendation that Mr. Fahey be removed from the list of attorneys allowed to practice in this Court. In addition, the Court may take action under 11 U.S.C. § 526 to enjoin Mr. Fahey and his paralegal from violating provisions of that section." (Dkt. No. 1 at 5).

Following that admonition, from September 1, 2008 through March 31, 2008, the Court noted that all 11 of the chapter 13 cases that Mr. Fahey had filed had been dismissed. In contrast, the other two Laredo attorneys had only two percent of their 47 cases filed during that time dismissed. (Dkt. No. 1 at 5-6).

The Court then noted the costs to debtors and the system when bankruptcy cases are not filed correctly. (Dkt. No. 1 at 6-7). The Court noted that Mr. Fahey's clients file second and third cases approximately 15 times more frequently than other attorneys. (Id.). In addition to increasing the work required by the Clerk's office and the chapter 13 trustee's office, when cases are dismissed and have to be refiled, debtors must pay another $274 filing fee. (Id.). Moreover, debtors may lose the valuable benefit of the automatic stay in a second or third case. 11 U.S.C. § 362(c)(3)-(4). (Id. at 7)

B. The Court Considered and Denied Mr. Fahey's Pre-Hearing Motions.

Prior to the hearing, Mr. Fahey filed three motions: (1) A Motion for Recusal, which he amended in Respondent's First Amended Motion for Recusal, (Dkt. Nos. 4, 5) (2) Respondent's Motion to Dismiss for Want of Subject Matter Jurisdiction, (Dkt. No. 6) and (3) Respondent's Motion to Dismiss for Insufficiency of Process and Insufficiency of Service of Process. (Dkt. No. 7).

At the hearing on July 15, 2009, prior to considering any evidence, the court heard the three motions and denied them all. (Dkt. No. 9 at 19-28). The bankruptcy court spent significant time explaining its ruling on subject matter jurisdiction. The court recognized that section 526 of the Bankruptcy Code did not itself provide jurisdiction but that the Court had jurisdiction to act under section 526 through 28 U.S.C. §§ 1334(b) and 157 and the standing order of the Court referring bankruptcy cases to the bankruptcy judges and matters related to them. (Id. at 19). Specifically, the court noted that 28 U.S.C. § 1334 provides that district courts have jurisdiction under all proceedings arising under title 11, the United States District Court for the Southern District of Texas has referred all proceedings arising under title 11 to the bankruptcy courts pursuant to 28 U.S.C. § 157, and that this action under section 526 of the Bankruptcy Code was a proceeding arising under title 11. (Id. at 19-20). The Court also noted that the miscellaneous proceeding was also filed under the Code of Judicial Conduct, the ethical responsibilities to report misconduct that apply to Judge Steen as an attorney in the State of Texas, under Fed. R. Bankr. P. 9011, and under Section 105 of the Bankruptcy Code. (Id. at 22).

In discussing the recusal motion, the Court noted that the motion contained innuendo, incomplete statements, and misleading statements. (Dkt. No. 9 at 23). The Court iterated that it had no animosity for Mr. Fahey. (Id. at 25) Instead, it stated that it has had to issue a number of orders against Mr. Fahey because he has not changed his behavior after several warnings. (Id.)

> The essence of your motion is that you think I have some deep seated and real animosity against you. I do not. What you are confusing is that I expect you on behalf of your client to file pleadings and to file complete pleadings and to file correct pleadings and to file them on time. . . .

> When I issued these orders, and I . . . began to issue them a long time ago, I expected that things would change, and they didn't.
>
> What I did in the order that opened this miscellaneous docket number was to track your case filings from September 1, '08 through the end of April to see if the conduct and the performance had been any different. They were not.
>
> I find conduct that's largely the same as it was before August of 2008 and that's why I want to give you an opportunity today to show me that I'm wrong.

(Id. at 25-27).

C. The Evidence Revealed That Mr. Fahey's Cases Were Dismissed at Far Greater Rates than His Counterparts and That Many of His Bankruptcy Petitions Contained Inaccuracies.

As part of the order setting the hearing, the Bankruptcy Court invited the chapter 13 trustee and the U.S. Trustee to participate. Both the chapter 13 trustee and the U.S. Trustee filed exhibit lists with the Court before the hearing, and Mr. Fahey stipulated to the admission of all the evidence. (Dkt. Nos. 2, 3, and 6 at 29, 33.)

The evidence submitted by the U.S. Trustee and the chapter 13 trustee showed:

- 86 percent of chapter 13 cases filed by Mr. Fahey from July 1, 2006 through July 1, 2009 had been dismissed compared to 35.6 percent of all other chapter 13 cases filed in Laredo during that time. (Dkt. No. 2, Exhs. 2-3)
- 70 percent of chapter 13 cases filed by Mr. Fahey from July 1, 2006 through July 1, 2009 were dismissed before confirmation compared to 26.4 percent of all other chapter 13 cases filed in Laredo during that time. Id.[4]

[4] These statistics require a little math. The chapter 13 trustee provided two charts - Exhibit 2 showing the results of Mr. Fahey's chapter 13 cases and Exhibit 3 showing the results of all Laredo chapter 13 cases, including Mr. Fahey's cases. By subtracting Mr. Fahey's numbers from the Laredo cases, one can calculate the percentages for all non Fahey cases.

- Of the 12 consumer chapter 7 cases filed by Mr. Fahey from January 1, 2006 through July 1, 2009, nine (75%) were dismissed for failure to cure a deficiency or pay the filing fee. (Dkt. No. 3, Exh. 4)
- In 23 bankruptcy petitions, either Pedro Lopez, Mr. Fahey's paralegal, signed the petitions above Mr. Fahey's name with the notation, "with permission," or the petition contained no signature in the box where the attorney is required to sign. (Dkt. No. 3, Exh. 4, Dkt. No. 2, Exh. 5, Dkt. No. 9 at 31, 35)
- In seven petitions, debtors did not disclose previous filings. (Dkt. No. 14 at 3)
- In 12 cases, the petition stated that the full filing fee was attached, but it was not paid upon filing. (Id.)
- 16 petitions stated that the debtor had taken a credit counselling course but no certificate was filed before the case was dismissed. (Id.)

Mr. Fahey did not dispute the evidence; he only argued that it did not show he was at fault. (Dkt. No. 9 at 74) He explained his high dismissal rate as a factor of dealing "on the border with people who are largely uneducated" and "most of them don't even speak English." (Id.).

When the Court asked him how to explain his high dismissal rate compared to that of other Laredo attorneys, he blamed "the very small sample size" even though the bankruptcy court had compared all of his 66 cases with all 226 cases filed by two other attorneys. (Id. at 76).

D. The Court Made Detailed Findings About Mr. Fahey's Failures and Inadequacies to Support the Need for an Injunction.

The court's findings were detailed. The court found that Mr. Fahey demonstrated a clear and consistent pattern of (1) failing to file information required by Bankruptcy Code § 521 when he filed cases, (2) inadequate representation of clients, (3) lack of expertise in bankruptcy law,

(4) unreasonable delegation of authority and responsibility to a contract paralegal that resulted in harm to debtors, (5) filing pleadings with false statements, and (6) failure to comply with the Bankruptcy Code and applicable rules. (Dkt. No. 16 at 1).

Among the many facts upon which the court based its findings, the Court found that Mr. Fahey's chapter 13 cases were dismissed at far higher rates than his colleagues. (Dkt. No. 16 at 2-3). The Court found that only about 23 percent of his individual chapter 7 cases resulted in discharges for his clients. (Id. at 4).

From testimony elicited from Mr. Fahey's paralegal, Pedro Lopez, the Court concluded that most of the work and decisions related to Mr. Fahey's clients were delegated to Mr. Lopez without substantial supervision. (Dkt. No. 16 at 4). The court found that 16 of the 18 petitions introduced into evidence by the chapter 13 trustee were "problematic or outright false" because they (1) stated filing fees had been paid when they had not, (2) failed to disclose previous bankruptcy cases, or (3) certified that the debtor had received credit counseling but the required certificate was never filed. (Id. at 3). The court found that Mr. Fahey repeatedly violated the court's ECF Procedures. (Id. at 5-6). Finally, the court listed the repeated admonitions to counsel about problems in his practice. (Id. at 8-11).

Based on these findings, the Court concluded that "[c]ounsel has displayed, and continued to display, incompetence and disregard for the statutes and rules that govern bankruptcy practice." (Dkt. No. 16 at 12). The Court thus found that the "protection of the public" required that Mr. Fahey be enjoined from further bankruptcy practice until he can comply with the "statute, rules, and ethics requirements" for attorneys. Id. The Court then enjoined Mr. Fahey from representing "Assisted Persons" based on his authority under sections

105 and 526 of the Bankruptcy Code, the Court's inherent powers, and Fed. R. Bankr. P. 9011. (Id.)

STANDARD OF REVIEW

On appeal "conclusions of law are reviewed de novo, findings of fact are reviewed for clear error, and mixed questions of fact and law are reviewed de novo." In re National Gypsum Co., 208 F. 3d. 498, 503 (5th Cir. 2000). Mr. Fahey's issues four through seven raise only legal issues and should be reviewed de novo. Motions for recusal are reviewed for abuse of discretion. Andrade v. Chojnacki, 338 F.3d 448 (5th Cir. 2003). A judge abuses his discretion in denying recusal where "a reasonable man, cognizant of the relevant circumstances surrounding a judge's failure to recuse would harbor legitimate doubts about that judge's impartiality." United States v. Bremers¸ 195 F.3d 221, 226 (5th Cir. 1999). Mr. Fahey's issue six states that the evidence was insufficient to support the penalty. That issue raises a question of fact and should be reviewed for clear error.

The bankruptcy court did not err in enjoining Mr. Fahey from providing "Bankruptcy Assistance" to "Assisted Persons" under its inherent powers, under sections 105 and 526 of the Bankruptcy Code, and under Fed. R. Bankr. P. 9011.

Mr. Fahey's complaints fall into four categories. First, he argues that the Court did not have the authority to issue its ruling because it lacked jurisdiction. That argument fails, however, because the Court had jurisdiction under 28 U.S.C. § 157(a) and (b). Further courts have the inherent authority to fashion appropriate sanctions for conduct that abuses the judicial process. Chambers v. NASCO, Inc., 501 U.S. 32, 43 (1991). Bankruptcy courts also have authority to issue appropriate sanctions for abuse of the judicial process under 11 U.S.C. § 105. Marrama v.

Citizens Bank of Mass., 549 U.S. 365 (2007). Federal Rule of Bankruptcy Procedure 9011 allows bankruptcy courts to sanction attorneys on the court's own initiative. Finally, Congress specifically provided that "[n]otwithstanding any other provision of Federal law and in addition to any other remedy provided under Federal or State law," the Court could on its own motion impose "an appropriate civil penalty" if it found that a person "engaged in a clear and consistent practice" of violating 11 U.S.C. 526. Thus, not only did the bankruptcy court have jurisdiction to consider the matter, it had explicit authority upon which it based its ruling.

Second, Mr. Fahey argues that the facts do not support the ruling. However, Mr. Fahey has waived this argument by failing to raise it in the bankruptcy court and by failing to include it in his statement of the issues on appeal. Mr. Fahey did not object to any of the evidence submitted by the U.S. Trustee or the chapter 13 trustee nor did he object to the evidence put forth by the Court in setting the hearing. The facts showed that 86 percent of chapter 13 cases filed by Mr. Fahey from July 1, 2006 through July 1, 2009 had been dismissed compared to 35.6 percent of all other chapter 13 cases filed in Laredo during that time. (Dkt. No. 2, Exhibits 2-3). Moreover, 70 percent of those cases filed by Mr. Fahey from July 1, 2006 through July 1, 2009 were dismissed before confirmation compared to 26.4 percent of all other chapter 13 cases filed in Laredo during that time. (Id.). The facts also showed that the petitions Mr. Fahey filed were often inaccurate and either signed by his paralegal or no one at all. Based on these facts and much more, the court did not clearly err in determining that Mr. Fahey had shown a clear and consistent pattern of not providing proper services to his clients.

Mr. Fahey then complains that he was not personally served with a summons and a complaint. However, section 526 of the Bankruptcy Code provides that courts may act on their own motion. In bankruptcy parlance, that makes this matter a "contested matter" instead of an "adversary proceeding." While an adversary proceeding requires a complaint and service of a summons pursuant to Fed. R. Bankr. P. 7003 and 7004, a contested matter is governed by Fed. R. Bankr. P. 9014 and does not require service of a complaint or summons. Likewise, proceedings under the courts' inherent powers, 11 U.S.C. § 105, or Federal Rule of Bankruptcy Procedure 9011 do not require a complaint or a summons. Here, the Bankruptcy Court's detailed order setting forth the time of the hearing and the matters that would be considered provided Mr. Fahey with sufficient notice.

Finally, Mr. Fahey argues that Judge Steen should have recused himself. However, recusal is not required where the court's opinions are formed from court related matters. Here all of Judge Steen's concerns arose from actions taken by Mr. Fahey as a bankruptcy lawyer representing clients in his court. Thus recusal was not required.

ARGUMENT

I. The Bankruptcy Court Had Jurisdiction and Authority to Enter the Order.

Mr. Fahey argues that the Bankruptcy Court lacked subject matter jurisdiction to hear the proceeding involving him. That contention lacks merit. The Bankruptcy Court had jurisdiction under 28 U.S.C. §§ 1334(b) and 157(a) and (b) because it arose under title 11. The Bankruptcy Court also had the authority to initiate the proceeding and to enjoin Mr. Fahey for his pattern of violating 11 U.S.C. § 526. The U.S. Supreme Court's precedents have "recognized the 'well-acknowledged' inherent power of a court to levy sanctions in response to abusive litigation practices." Roadway Express, Inc. v. Piper, 447 U.S. 752, 765 (1980) (citing Link v. Wabash R.R., 370 U.S. 626, 632 (1962)). "It has long been understood that '[c]ertain implied powers must necessarily result to our Courts of justice from the nature of their institution,' powers 'which cannot be dispensed with in a Court, because they are necessary to the exercise of all others.'" Chambers v. NASCO, Inc., 501 U.S. 32, 43 (1991) (quoting United States v. Hudson, 11 U.S. (7 Cranch) 32, 34 (1812)).

"A primary aspect" of a court's inherent powers is "the ability to fashion an appropriate sanction for conduct which abuses the judicial process." Chambers, 501 U.S. at 44-45. A court thus confronted with a party's bad faith misconduct in the course of proceedings has the discretion to respond with a variety of sanctions. Id. at 45. And just as courts can sanction parties for their bad faith conduct, so too can courts sanction parties' counsel for the same types of misconduct. Roadway Express, 447 U.S. at 766 ("The power of a court over members of its bar is at least as great as its authority over litigants."). Here, the bankruptcy court imposed a sanction—suspending Mr. Fahey from accepting new cases before that court until he demonstrates his ability and intent to represent clients competently and to comply with the Bankruptcy Code and applicable rules.

A bankruptcy court also has the power to regulate the practice of bankruptcy law before it under 11 U.S.C. § 105 ("Power of Court"). In particular, subsection (a) allows a bankruptcy court to take "any action or mak[e] any determination necessary or appropriate to enforce or implement court orders or rules, or to prevent an abuse of process." Id. These powers can be exercised when "necessary or appropriate" to carry out the provisions of Title 11, a broad grant of authority. United States v. Sutton, 786 F.2d 1305, 1308 (5th Cir. 1986); In re Sadkin, 36 F.3d 473, 479 (5th Cir. 1994) (stating that section 105(a) "provides equitable powers for the bankruptcy court to use at its discretion"). This power is only circumscribed to the extent that it cannot be used in contradiction to another provision in the Bankruptcy Code. Marrama v. Citizens Bank of Massachusetts, 549 U.S. 365, 375 (2007).

The key word in this subsection of 105 is "prevent," which is a forward-looking concept. Congress gave bankruptcy courts the authority to take prophylactic measures to prevent a party from engaging in future abuse. Bessette v. Avco Fin. Serv., Inc., 230 F.3d 439, 444-45 (1st Cir. 2000); see In re Sanchez, 372 B.R. 289, 311-12 (Bankr. S.D. Tex. 2007). The legislative history of section 105(a) provides support for this broad interpretation. The House Report concerning the 1978 Bankruptcy Code, which superseded the Bankruptcy Act, states that section 105(a) was enacted to remove any doubt concerning the power of the new bankruptcy courts. Section 105(a) was enacted "for the sake of continuity from current law and ease of reference, and to cover any powers traditionally exercised by a bankruptcy court that are not encompassed by the All Writs [Act]." H.R. Rep. No. 95-595, at 316-17 (1978), reprinted in 1978 U.S.C.C.A.N. 5963, 6273-74. Such broad power to protect the integrity of the bankruptcy system includes barring an attorney from practicing before a court until he or she can demonstrate a proper level of competence.

In addition, section 526(c)(5) provides that bankruptcy courts can take precisely the actions the bankruptcy court took here.

> Notwithstanding any other provision of Federal law and in addition to any other remedy provided under Federal or State law, if the court on its own motion . . . finds that a person intentionally violated this section, or engaged in a clear and consistent pattern or practice of violating this section, the court may
> . . .
> (B) impose an appropriate civil penalty against such person.

Congress contemplated here that courts could bring their own motion when they saw a clear and consistent pattern or practice of violating section 526(c).[5] Mr. Fahey argues that a court may not raise this issue unless an action is already pending by a debtor or state attorney general under section 526. The "[n]otwithstanding" clause and the "in addition to" clause, however, provide that the actions and remedies set forth in this provision are independent of, and not limited by, other rules or statutes. Section 526(c)(5) stands on its own as a source of authority for courts to control problem attorneys. See In re Norman, No. 06-70859-A, 2006 WL 3053309 (Bankr. E.D. Va. October 24, 2006) (rejecting argument that only state official can bring enforcement action because section 526(c)(5) states that the court and U.S. trustee may do so as well); In re Reyes¸ No. 07-20689-CIV, 2007 WL 6082567 (S.D. Fla. Dec. 19, 2007) (recognizing that bankruptcy courts have jurisdiction under section 526(c)(5) to "initiate enforcement actions and punish violations of the debt relief provisions.").

[5] Contrary to Mr. Fahey's assertion, the term "court" includes the bankruptcy court. In the same Act that created section 526, Congress amended a similar provision that provides penalties for people who negligently or fraudulently prepare bankruptcy petitions. See 11 U.S.C. § 110. Congress struck the requirement that the bankruptcy court certify the matter to the district court

Mr. Fahey suggests that the provisions of 11 U.S.C § 526 do not apply to him because lawyers are not "debt relief agencies." However, the Fifth Circuit has held that attorneys are debt relief agencies. Hersh v. United States, 553 F.3d 743 (5th Cir. 2008).[6]

Finally, Federal Rule of Bankruptcy Procedure 9011(c) provides authority for bankruptcy courts to enter appropriate sanctions upon attorneys. Possible sanctions under Rule of Bankruptcy Procedure 9011 include suspending an attorney from practicing before the bankruptcy courts in the district. In re Brooks-Hamilton, 400 B.R. 238, 249 (B.A.P. 9th Cir. 2009), citing Weissman v. Quail Lodge, Inc., 179 F.3d 1194, 1997 (9th Cir. 1999).

Based on all these sources of authority, the bankruptcy court thus had both jurisdiction and authority to enjoin Mr. Fahey from practicing before the bankruptcy court until he so that the district court could assess statutory penalties and provided that "the court" shall assess the penalty, thereby authorizing the bankruptcy court to handle the matter itself. See BAPCPA, Pub. L. No. 109-8, 119 Stat. 23, 61 (2005).

demonstrated the ability and intent to represent clients competently and to comply with the Bankruptcy Code and all applicable rules.

II. The Court Had Sufficient Evidence to Support Its Actions.

A. Mr. Fahey has waived this issue on appeal.

Mr. Fahey contends that the evidence presented in the miscellaneous proceeding was insufficient to support the court's decision to enjoin him from practice. Mr. Fahey has forfeited that issue on appeal because he did not raise it in the bankruptcy court. "It is a bedrock principle of appellate review that claims raised for the first time on appeal will not be considered." Steward Glass & Mirror, Inc. v. U.S. Auto Glass Discount Ctrs., Inc., 200 F.3d 307, 316-17 (5th Cir. 2000); see also Hormel v. Helmering, 312 U.S. 552, 556 (1941) ("Ordinarily an appellate court does not give consideration to issues not raised below.")

In addition, the Fifth Circuit has held that an issue is not preserved for appeal under Federal Rule of Bankruptcy Procedure 8006 unless the appellant includes the issue in its statement of issues on appeal, even if the issue had been argued in the bankruptcy court and ruled on by that court. Zimmerman v. Jenkins (In re GGM, P.C.), 165 F.3d 1026, 1031-32 (5th Cir. 1999). Pursuant to Rule 8006, Mr. Fahey filed his statement of the issues to be presented. He stated, "Appellant's principal issue on appeal is whether the initiation and prosecution of the proceeding were beyond the bankruptcy court's power to act." (Dkt. No. 23). Mr. Fahey's argument regarding the sufficiency of the evidence is unrelated to the "bankruptcy court's power to act." Therefore, he has waived that issue on appeal.

B. The Evidence in the Record Supported the Court's Ruling.

Mr. Fahey objects that there was insufficient evidence to support the finding that he should be enjoined from representing consumer debtors until such time as he demonstrated the ability and intent to represent clients competently and to comply with the Bankruptcy Code and all applicable rules. (Appellant's Brief at 22). To the contrary, the evidence was overwhelming.

The evidence showed:

- 86 percent of chapter 13 cases filed by Mr. Fahey from July 1, 2006 through July 1, 2009 had been dismissed compared to 35.6 percent of all other chapter 13 cases filed in Laredo during that time. (Dkt. No. 2, Exhs. 2-3)
- 70 percent of chapter 13 cases filed by Mr. Fahey from July 1, 2006 through July 1, 2009 were dismissed before confirmation compared to 26.4 percent of all other chapter 13 cases filed in Laredo during that time. Id.
- Of the 12 consumer chapter 7 cases filed by Mr. Fahey from January 1, 2006 through July 1, 2009, nine (75%) were dismissed for failure to cure a deficiency or pay the filing fee. (Dkt. No. 3, Exh. 4)
- In 23 bankruptcy petitions, either Pedro Lopez, Mr. Fahey's paralegal, signed the petitions above Mr. Fahey's name with the notation, "with permission," or the petition contained no signature in the box where the attorney is required to sign. (Dkt. No. 3, Exh. 3, Dkt. No. 2, Exh. 5, Dkt. No. 9 at 31, 35)
- In seven petitions, debtors did not disclose previous filings. (Dkt. No. 14 at 3)
- In 12 cases, the petition stated that the full filing fee was attached, but it was not paid upon filing. (Id.)
- 16 petitions stated that the debtor had taken a credit counselling course but no certificate was filed before the case was dismissed. (Id.)

The evidence showed that Mr. Fahey neglected his cases. The significant disparity between the number of his cases that were dismissed and the number of other practitioners' cases that were dismissed could lead a court to only one conclusion – that Mr. Fahey engaged in a clear and consistent pattern or practice of providing poor representation to his clients. Here, the court need only find that the bankruptcy court did not clearly err in reaching this conclusion.

III. The Court Was Not Required to File a Complaint or Serve a Summons To Consider Sanctions Against Mr. Fahey for His Conduct in Cases Before the Court.

Mr. Fahey complains that he was not personally served with a summons and a complaint. However, Section 526 provides that courts may act on their own motion. While an adversary proceeding in a bankruptcy case requires a complaint and service of a summons pursuant to Fed. R. Bankr. P. 7003 and 7004, motions in bankruptcy cases are governed by Federal Rules of Bankruptcy Procedure 9013 and 9014 and do not require service of a complaint or summons. Instead, motions need only be "served in the matter provided for service of a summons and complaint by Rule 7004" and must provide reasonable notice and an opportunity for a hearing. Fed. R. Bankr. P. 9014(a), (b). Here, the Bankruptcy Court's detailed order setting forth the time of the hearing, the matters that would be considered, and the potential sanctions provided Mr. Fahey with sufficient notice.

Likewise, Federal Rule of Bankruptcy Procedure 9011 does not require an adversary proceeding. Instead, by its terms it only requires "notice and a reasonable opportunity to respond." Fed. R. Bankr. P. 9011(c). As explained above, the Court's order setting the hearing and the hearing, itself, provided sufficient notice and opportunity to respond. In any event, Mr. Fahey never argued that he did not have notice or a reasonable time to respond. Moreover, section 105 allows courts to act sua sponte to prevent an abuse of process. 11 U.S.C. 105(a). Thus, the Court did not err in issuing the injunction without the filing of a complaint or service of a summons.

IV. The Bankruptcy Court Did Not Abuse Its Discretion in Denying Applicant’s Motion for Recusal.

A party may request the recusal of a judge in two situations. First, recusal is required if a judge has a “personal bias or prejudice concerning a party, or personal knowledge of disputed evidentiary facts concerning the proceeding,” 28 U.S.C. § 455(b)(1). Second, recusal is required when a judge’s “impartiality might reasonably be questioned.” 28 U.S.C. § 455(a). Whenever a judge's partiality might reasonably be questioned, “recusal is required under § 455(a), irrespective whether the circumstance is covered by § 455(b).” Andrade v. Chojnacki, 338 F.3d 448, 454 (5th Cir. 2003) citing Liljeberg v. Health Servs. Acquisition Corp., 486 U.S. 847, 860 n.8 (1988).

The origin of a judge's alleged bias is critical. See Andrade, 338 F.3d at 454. The U.S. Supreme Court applied a common-law doctrine commonly called the “extrajudicial source” doctrine to the interpretation of section 455. Liteky v. United States, 510 U.S. 540, 554 (1994). This rule distinguishes events occurring, or opinions expressed, in the course of judicial proceedings from those that take place outside of the litigation context and holds that the former “rarely require recusal.” Andrade, 338 F.3d at 455. “[O]pinions formed by the judge on the basis of facts introduced or events occurring in the course of the current proceedings, or of prior proceedings, do not constitute a basis for a bias or partiality motion unless they display a deep-seated favoritism or antagonism that would make fair judgment impossible.” Liteky, 510 U.S. at 554.

Recusal was unnecessary in this case because Judge Steen’s views about Mr. Fahey were based only on conduct by Mr. Fahey in cases before him, not extrajudicial evidence. The evidence shows that Judge Steen questions about the quality of Mr. Fahey’s representation of his clients always arose in cases that were filed in his court. Nothing in the record suggests that Judge Steen's action in this case were based on anything extrajudicial. Previous contempt citations do not render a judge unfit to try a party for new misconduct. In re Marshall, 549 A.2d 311, 314 (D.C. 1988) (citing cases). Even the complaint that Mr. Fahey filed against Judge Steen does not require his recusal. See In re Mann, 229 F.3d 657, 658 (7th Cir. 2000) (judge is not required to automatically disqualify herself simply because a disgruntled litigant has filed a misconduct complaint against her). Such a rule would permit a litigant to manipulate the system to obtain a judge he perceives as more sympathetic by alleging judicial misconduct against the judge assigned to his case. Id. Therefore Judge Steen did not abuse his discretion in denying the motion for recusal.

CONCLUSION

For these reasons, the United States Trustee respectfully asks this Court to affirm the order enjoining Edward Fahey from providing Bankruptcy Assistance to Assisted Persons (as those terms are defined in the Bankruptcy Code) until he demonstrates the ability and intent to represent clients competently and to comply with the Bankruptcy Code and all applicable rules.

OBJECTION TO FAHEY'S MOTION TO STRIKE APPELLATE BRIEF OF U.S. TRUSTEE

COMES NOW, CHARLES F. MCVAY, THE UNITED STATES TRUSTEE for Region 7 ("UST"), through the undersigned counsel, and files this objection to Fahey's Motion to Strike Appellate Brief of U.S. Trustee. In support of this objection, the UST would show as follows:

1. Mr. Fahey has a history of alleged inadequate representation of his clients before the United States Bankruptcy Court for the Southern District of Texas. See Dkt. No. 16 at 8-12.[1] Following alleged misconduct in two active bankruptcy cases — In re Hernandez, No. 09-50070, and In re Armendariz, No. 09-50069 — the bankruptcy court opened a miscellaneous docket to consider disciplinary action against Mr. Fahey. Id. at 1. The Court asked for the participation of the United States Trustee in its show-cause order. Dkt. No. 1.

I. THE UNITED STATES TRUSTEE HAD STANDING TO PARTICIPATE BELOW AND IN THIS APPEAL.

[1] All references to the record in this brief are to the entry number on the bankruptcy court's docket and are denoted as "Dkt. No. _."

2. Mr. Fahey argues that the United States Trustee did not have standing to appear below and does not have standing to be heard on this appeal because a proceeding concerning misconduct before the bankruptcy court and non-compliance with the Bankruptcy Code and Rules is not a proceeding that arises under title 11. He argues that no petition seeking bankruptcy relief was filed in the miscellaneous docket to which his disciplinary action was assigned, meaning it cannot be considered a bankruptcy case.

3. Mr. Fahey's brief appears to confuse two concepts: jurisdiction and standing. If the bankruptcy court has jurisdiction to open a miscellaneous docket, and it does under 28 U.S.C. 1331 and 28 U.S.C. 157, then the United States Trustee has standing to participate in the docketed proceeding. 11 U.S.C. 307.

4. The issue of whether the bankruptcy court had jurisdiction has already been briefed by both Fahey and the U.S. Trustee. Briefly, the acts giving rise to the disciplinary hearing occurred within bankruptcy cases, so this matter is a core proceeding under the jurisdiction of the bankruptcy court. In re Southmark Corp., 163 F.3d 925, 930 (5th Cir. 1999) (recognizing that a core proceeding exists when (1) a substantive provision of title 11 is asserted or (2) if the proceeding could only arise within the context of the bankruptcy system). To the extent that Mr. Fahey is trying to re-visit the jurisdiction issue under the guise of an attack on the U.S. Trustee's standing, his motion is improper and should be denied.

5. To the extent that Mr. Fahey is attacking the U.S. Trustee's standing itself, his argument is without merit. Section 307 of title 11 states that "[t]he United States trustee may raise and may appear and be heard on any issue in any case or proceeding under this title." As Congress has stated, the United States Trustees are the watchdogs of the bankruptcy system, with a role like "that of a prosecutor" responsible for enforcing the bankruptcy laws and "ensuring that bankruptcy cases are conducted according to law." H.R. Rep. No. 95-595 at 109, reprinted in 1978 U.S.C.C.A.N. 5963, 6070-72.

6. All the circuit courts that have interpreted section 307 have held that the statute confers standing upon the United States Trustee like that of a party in interest. Thompson v. Greenwood, 507 F.3d 416, 420 n.3 (6th Cir. 2007) ("The United States Trustee is an 'interested party by statute.'"). Accordingly, the United States Trustee has standing to protect the public interest in a fair bankruptcy system because "a good watchdog guards the interests of those for whom it watches." In re Revco D.S., Inc., 898 F.2d 498, 500 (6th Cir. 1990). Furthermore, under section 307, the United States Trustee may appear at any stage of the proceedings, as either a party or amicus. Stanley v. McCormick, Barstow, Sheppard, Wayte & Carruth (In re Donovan Corp.), 215 F.3d 929, 929-30 (9th Cir. 2000); see also United States Trustee v. Price Waterhouse, 19 F.3d 138, 141 (3d Cir. 1994) (Alito, J.) (holding that because the United States Trustee may appear and be heard on any issue, the United States Trustee had standing to appeal). Accordingly, the United States Trustee has a statutory right to participate in any case or proceeding arising under title 11, including this appeal.

7. In particular, the United States Trustee has an important role to play in disciplinary matters. For instance, the United States Trustee can move for the disgorgement of attorney fees if a debtor's attorney has not provided necessary and beneficial services to the debtor. 11 U.S.C. § 330. The United States Trustee can also move for an order to show cause why sanctions should not be imposed on an attorney or debtor. See Wayland v. McVay (In re Tbyrd Enters. LLC), No. 08-41104, 2009 WL

3199593 (5th Cir. Oct. 7, 2009) (affirming imposition of sanctions initially sought by the United States Trustee in In re Tbyrd Enters., L.L.C., Case No. 06-30078 (Bankr. S.D. Tex.), Docket Nos. 22, 39, and 83). Making sure that debtors receive adequate representation during bankruptcy is a core function of the United States Trustee.

II. ATTORNEYS AT LAW & DEBT RELIEF AGENCIES IS NOT ON POINT AND DOES NOT SUPPORT MR. FAHEY'S ARGUMENT.

8. In contrast to the body of case law cited above, Mr. Fahey relies on one federal case from the District Court of Southern District of Georgia for the proposition that a collateral proceeding does not concern title 11 unless a bankruptcy petition has been filed under that docket number. In re Attorneys at Law and Debt Relief Agencies, 353 B.R. 318 (S.D. Ga. 2006). In that case, on the day most of the Bankruptcy Abuse Prevention and Consumer Protection Act of 2005 became effective, the bankruptcy court opened a miscellaneous docket to issue a standing order interpreting the phrase "debt relief agency" in 11 U.S.C. § 101(12A) to exclude bankruptcy attorneys. Id. at 320. The United States Trustee objected to the court's reading of the 2005 Act. Id. The district court held that the United States Trustee did not have standing because he was challenging a general order. Id. at 323. It then dismissed the case because it could not consider the construction of the new statutory provision until a case or controversy arose from its enforcement. Id.

9. Mr. Fahey's cited authority is not relevant to this appeal. Attorneys at Law differs markedly from this case. It involved a pre-emptive interpretation of the 2005 bankruptcy reforms unrelated to any specific bankruptcy case – in essence a sua sponte advisory opinion. Attorneys at Law was issued without notice to anyone, without a hearing, without evidence or argument by counsel, and did not address anyone's conduct in any bankruptcy cases. In contrast, Mr. Fahey received notice of this disciplinary proceeding, the court held an evidentiary hearing and entertained argument at the hearing and through briefs, and the court addressed specific conduct related to alleged misconduct in various bankruptcy proceedings. The two cases are not comparable.

III. CONCLUSION

10. For the reasons stated above, the brief of the United States Trustee should not be struck.

WHEREFORE, the U.S. Trustee requests that this Court enter an order denying the Motion to Strike and for all other relief as is just and proper.

STATEMENT OF BASIS OF APPELLATE JURISDICTION

This is an appeal from a final order of the United States District Court for the Northern District of Georgia entered under 28 U.S.C. § 158(a)(1), affirming an order of the United States Bankruptcy Court for the Northern District of Georgia denying motions by the Appellant to reset a hearing on two motions to dismiss his chapter 7 bankruptcy case. This Court has jurisdiction over the appeal under 28 U.S.C. §§ 158(d)(1) and 1291.

STATEMENT OF ISSUES

1. Did the bankruptcy court abuse its discretion in denying the Appellant's motions to reset the hearing on the motions to dismiss his bankruptcy case?

2. Assuming the issue has been preserved for review by this Court, did the bankruptcy court abuse its discretion in dismissing the case?

STATEMENT OF THE CASE

This appeal arises from the dismissal of the Appellant's chapter 7 bankruptcy case pending in the United States Bankruptcy Court for the Northern District of Georgia. The Appellant, Harold J. Farris ("Farris" the "Debtor," or the "Appellant"), commenced the case by filing a pro se petition for relief under chapter 13 of the Bankruptcy Code on August 2, 2004. (BC# 1).[1] On May 18, 2007, the bankruptcy court entered an order converting the case to a chapter 7 case. (BC# 184). In doing so the court noted that Farris had filed a motion to dismiss the chapter 13 case but had withdrawn that motion after being advised by the court that, because a creditor in the case had filed a motion for relief from the automatic stay, a voluntary dismissal would result in his being ineligible under 11 U.S.C. § 109(g) to file another bankruptcy case for 180 days.[2] Id.

On August 29, 2008, the chapter 7 trustee filed a motion to dismiss the case based on allegations that Farris had failed and refused during the period of more than a year that the case had been pending in chapter 7 to submit to examination under oath at a section 341(a) meeting of creditors. (BC# 265). Along with that motion to

[1] The United States Trustee has been advised that the record before this Court consists of the entire record in the district court, including those portions of the bankruptcy court record that were transmitted to the district court by the bankruptcy court. Documents filed of record in the bankruptcy court are identified by the designation, "BC#," followed by the docket number assigned to the document by the clerk of the bankruptcy court.

> Notwithstanding any other provision of this section, no individual or family farmer may be a debtor under this title who has been a debtor in a case pending under this title at any time in the preceding 180 days if — dismiss, the chapter 7 trustee filed a notice scheduling a hearing on the motion for October 7, 2008, at 2:45 p.m. (BC# 266), and a certificate of service stating that he had served this notice on "all parties in interest as shown on the mailing matrix maintained by the Clerk of this Court." (BC# 267).
> ...
> (2) the debtor requested and obtained the voluntary dismissal of the case following the filing of a request for relief from the automatic stay provided by section 362 of this title.

On September 2, 2008, the United States Trustee filed a motion to dismiss the case on the same grounds alleged by the chapter 7 trustee.[3] (BC# 268). The United States Trustee likewise filed a notice scheduling a hearing on his motion for October 7, 2008 at 2:45 p.m., along with a certificate of service certifying that he had served Farris with a copy of the notice by mail at 1577 South Gordon Street, Atlanta, GA 30310. (BC# 269). As shown by the respective case dockets, that address (the "South Gordon Street Address") was Farris's address of record throughout the pendency of the case in the bankruptcy court, and it has continued to be his address of record on appeal, both in the district court and in this Court.

On September 11, 2008, the bankruptcy court entered its own notice scheduling a hearing on the two motions to dismiss for October 7, 2008, at 2:45 p.m. (BC# 270), and on September 13, 2008, the clerk of the bankruptcy court filed a certificate of service certifying that Farris had been served with a copy of that hearing notice by mail at the South Gordon Street Address. (BC# 271).

[3] In the alternative, the United States Trustee requested an extension of the deadlines for filing a motion to dismiss for abuse under 11 U.S.C. § 707(b), see Fed. R. Bankr. P. 1017(e) , or a complaint objecting to Farris's discharge under 11 U.S.C. § 727, see Fed. R. Bankr. P. 4004(b).

A hearing was held on the motions to dismiss on October 7, 2008, as scheduled and noticed. (BC# 285). The chapter 7 trustee and counsel for the United States Trustee appeared at that hearing, but Farris did not. (BC# 273, 285). On October 8, 2008, one day after that hearing and prior to the entry of the order granting the motions, Farris filed a "Motion to Reset Hearing," in which he asserted that the copy of the hearing notice mailed to him by the bankruptcy court had not reached him until the evening of October 7, 2008, making it impossible for him to attend the hearing. (BC# 272). Farris attached to this motion a copy of an envelope stamped with the notation, "Return to Sender, Not Deliverable as Addressed, Unable to Forward," which he asserted was the envelope in which his service copy of the court's hearing notice had been enclosed. This envelope was not, however, addressed to Farris. Rather, it was addressed "First Family Financial, 4362 Peachtree Road, Atlanta, GA." (BC# 272). Farris did not allege that the additional notices mailed to him by the chapter 7 trustee and the United States Trustee were in any way defective nor, for that matter, has he ever asserted that he did not receive those notices in a timely manner.

The bankruptcy court entered an order dismissing the case on October 14, 2008. (BC# 273). On October 21, 2008, Farris filed a "Motion for Reconsideration and Renewed Motion to Reset Hearing Date" (BC# 275), in which he reiterated his request that the hearing on the motions to dismiss be reset. The bankruptcy court entered its order denying that request on October 28, 2008, finding that Farris had "failed to allege any facts to rebut the presumption that he received proper and timely notice of the October 7, 2008 hearing." (BC# 277). On November 7, 2008, Farris filed a timely notice of appeal from that order. (The "Notice of Appeal," BC# 279). The only ruling to which the Notice of Appeal makes reference is the "Order Denying Debtor's Motion to Reset Hearing" entered on October 28, 2008 (BC# 277).

The district court entered an order affirming the decision of the bankruptcy court on January 14, 2009 (DC# 6),[4] and on January 16, 2009, the Appellant filed a timely notice of appeal to this Court from that order. (DC# 9).

Farris did not file an opening brief in this Court. Instead, on April 20, 2009, he filed a "Petition for Rehearing En Banc" (the "En Banc Petition"), in which he alleged various acts of bias and misconduct by the judges and trustees both in the present bankruptcy case and in a 1995 bankruptcy case in which he was the debtor. In the En Banc Petition, Farris appears to challenge the dismissal of the present bankruptcy case on grounds of judicial bias and inadequate legal representation. In addition, he appears to argue that the bankruptcy court erred in the present case by [4] Documents in the record on appeal that were originally filed in the district court are identified by the designation, "DC#," followed by the docket number assigned to the document by the clerk of the district court.

refusing to conduct hearings on his allegations of fraud pertaining to his prior bankruptcy case.

On April 28, 2009, this Court dismissed the present appeal based on Farris's failure to file a timely opening brief. On April 29, 2009, Farris filed a "Motion and Brief To Set Aside Dismissal" in this Court in which he requested that his En Banc Petition be treated as an opening brief. On May 4, 2009, this Court granted that request and reinstated the appeal.

STATEMENT OF FACTS

There are no facts of record in this case tending to refute the three certificates of service showing that Farris received timely notice of the October 7, 2008, hearing on the motions to dismiss filed by the chapter 7 trustee and the United States Trustee. Further, Farris acknowledges at pages 4 through 5 of his En Banc Petition that, although he attended each of the four meeting of creditors that were scheduled during the period of more than a year that the case was pending as a chapter 7 case, he failed to be sworn and examined at any of those meetings.

APPLICABLE STANDARD OF REVIEW

In an appeal arising from an order entered by the bankruptcy court in a bankruptcy case, both the district court and the court of appeals apply a clearly erroneous standard to the bankruptcy court's findings of fact and conduct a de novo review of conclusions of law. See Fed. R. Bankr. P. 8013; In re Omine, 485 F.3d 1305, 1311 (11th Cir. 2007); In re Paschen, 296 F.3d 1203, 1205 (11th Cir. 2002).

SUMMARY OF ARGUMENT

The sole issue presented for review by this appeal is whether the bankruptcy court correctly determined that Farris received proper notice of the hearing on the motions to dismiss.[5] The bankruptcy court's finding that Farris had failed to rebut the presumption that he received proper and timely notice of the hearing (BC #277) is supported by the record and was not "clearly erroneous." Moreover, even assuming the bankruptcy court's order dismissing the case is before this Court for review in this appeal, that ruling likewise is supported by the record and did not constitute an abuse of the court's discretion.

[5] Although Farris raises numerous issues in his En Banc Petition, the only order of the bankruptcy court to which his notices of appeal to the district court (BC #279) and to this Court (DC #90) make reference is the bankruptcy court's October 28, 2008 order denying his requests to reset the hearing on the motions to dismiss. Farris did not appeal the underlying order of the bankruptcy court dismissing his case. Consequently, his various allegations of judicial bias and misconduct are not properly before this Court.

ARGUMENT

A. The Bankruptcy Court Did Not Abuse Its Discretion in Denying Farris's Motions to Reset the Hearing on the Motions to Dismiss.

The record shows that the chapter 7 trustee, the United States Trustee, and the bankruptcy court each mailed a notice to Farris advising that a hearing on one or both of the motions to dismiss his case was scheduled for October 7, 2008, at 2:45 p.m. According to the certificates of service, these notices were mailed on August 29, 2008 (BC# 267), September 2, 2008 (BC# 269), and September 13, 2008 (BC# 271), respectively.

Service by mail was authorized by Fed. R. Bankr. P. 9014, which was applicable to the motions to dismiss pursuant to Fed. R. Bankr. P. 1017(f)(1), which provides as follows: "Rule 9014 governs a proceeding to dismiss or suspend a case, or to convert a case to another chapter, except under §§ 706(a), 1112(a), 1208(a) or (b), or 1307(a) or (b)." The statutory basis for the motions to dismiss in this case was 11 U.S.C. § 707(a), which authorizes bankruptcy courts to dismiss chapter 7 cases after notice and hearing "for cause," including "unreasonable delay by the debtor that is prejudicial to creditors ..." See p. 11, infra.

Fed. R. Bankr. P. 9014 applies to "contested matters," and subsection (b) of that Rule provides that motions commencing such matters "shall be served in the manner provided for service of a summons and complaint by Rule 7004." Under Fed. R.

Bankr. P. 7004 (b)(9), service may be made upon the debtor after a voluntary petition is filed and until the case is dismissed or closed "by mailing a copy of the summons and complaint to the debtor at the address shown in the petition or to such other address as the debtor may designate in a filed writing." Fed. R. Bankr. P. 9014(b) further provides that "[a]ny paper served after the motion shall be served in the manner provided by Rule 5(b) F.R.Civ.P." One manner in which a paper may be served pursuant to Fed. R. Civ. P. 5(b)(2) is by "(C) mailing it to the person's last known address – in which event service is complete upon mailing." (Emphasis supplied). Likewise, Fed. R. Bankr. P. 9006(e) provides that "[s]ervice of process and service of any paper other than process or of notice by mail is complete on mailing."

"Proper mailing creates a presumption of receipt." Rendina v. Northrop, 399 B.R. 376, 380 (Bankr. D. Vt. 2008) (citing Hagner v. United States, 285 U.S. 427, 430, 52 S. Ct. 417, 76 L. Ed. 861 (1932)). Accord Konst v. Florida East Coast Ry. Co., 71 F.3d 850, 851 (11th Cir. 1996) ("The common law has long recognized a rebuttable presumption that an item properly mailed was received by the addressee.") An allegation of non-receipt is not, by itself, sufficient to rebut this presumption. Id. See also In re Botello, 86 F. App'x. 330, 331 (9th Cir. 2004) (citing Osborn v. Ricketts (In re Ricketts), 80 B.R. 495, 497 (B.A.P. 9th Cir. 1987)). Instead,

> [t]he presumption may be overcome only by evidence that the mailing was not accomplished. ... To determine if a mailing was accomplished, > courts consider such facts as whether the notice was correctly addressed, was properly mailed, and included proper postage, whether a proper certificate of service was filed, and whether the notice was returned to the clerk's office.

Rendina v. Northrop, 399 B.R. at 380 (citations omitted).

As noted by the bankruptcy court in its Order Denying Debtor's Motion to Reset Hearing (BC# 277), Farris offered no explanation of the relevance of the envelope attached to his original Motion to Reset Hearing (BC# 272), which was not addressed to him but rather to "First Family Financial, 4362 Peachtree Road, Atlanta, GA." While the clerk's certificate of service shows that a copy of the bankruptcy court's hearing notice was mailed to First Family Financial at that address, it also shows that a copy was mailed to Farris at the South Gordon Street Address, which was his address of record throughout the bankruptcy case and has continued to be his address on appeal, both in the district court and it this Court. Farris has cited to nothing in the record that refutes any of the three certificates of service reciting that three separate notices were mailed to him at his address of record advising him of the time and date of the hearing on the motions to dismiss, nor has he otherwise provided this Court with any basis upon which to conclude that he did not receive proper notice of the hearing. The bankruptcy court's determination that Farris was provided with proper notice of the hearing was supported by the record and was not "clearly erroneous."

B. There Is No Basis for the Court to Reverse the Bankruptcy Court's Order Dismissing the Case.

Even if he had preserved the issue for review on appeal, Farris has likewise provided this Court with no basis to conclude that the bankruptcy court abused its discretion in dismissing his bankruptcy case.

11 U.S.C. § 707(a) provides, in pertinent part, that the court may dismiss a chapter 7 case "only after notice and a hearing and only for cause, including — (1) unreasonable delay by the debtor that is prejudicial to creditors ..."[6] This section "does not articulate an exclusive list of factors a court is to consider in making a determination of whether cause exists for dismissing a bankruptcy case, or to limit the court's discretion." In re Hess, 347 B.R. 489, 496 (Bankr. D. Vt. 2006) (citing In re Zick, 931 F.2d 1124, 1126 (6th Cir. 1991), In re Atlas Supply Corp., 857 F.2d 1061, 1063 (5th Cir. 1988), and In re Horan, 304 B.R. 42, 48 (Bankr. D. Conn. 2004)).

[6] The entire text of § 707(a) is as follows:

> (a) The court may dismiss a case under this chapter only after notice and a hearing and only for cause, including —
> (1) unreasonable delay by the debtor that is prejudicial to creditors;
>
> (2) nonpayment of any fees or charges required under chapter 123 of title 28; and
> (3) failure of the debtor in a voluntary case to file, within fifteen days or such additional time as the court may allow after the filing of the petition commencing such case, the information required by paragraph (1) of section 521, but only on a motion by the United States trustee.

It is well settled that the decision to grant or deny a motion to dismiss a chapter 7 case lies within the discretion of the bankruptcy court. See In re Sherman, 441 F.3d 794, 813 (9th Cir. 2006); In re Zick, 931 F.2d at 1126; In re Atlas Supply Corp., 857 F.2d at 1063; Maixner v. Surratt-States (In re Maixner), 288 B.R. 815, 817 (B.A.P. 8th Cir. 2003); In re Marra, 179 B.R. 782, 785 (M.D. Pa. 1995); In re Hess, 347 B.R. at 496; In re Foster, 316 B.R. 718, 72 (Bankr. W.D. Mo. 2004). "An abuse of discretion arises when the district court's decision rests upon a clearly erroneous finding of fact, an errant conclusion of law, or an improper application of law to fact." United States v. Baker, 432 F.3d 1189, 1202 (11th Cir. 2005).

Farris has offered this Court no basis upon which to conclude that the bankruptcy court predicated its decision to dismiss his chapter 7 case upon a clearly erroneous finding of fact, an errant conclusion of law, or an improper application of law to fact. This case was pending in the bankruptcy court for over four years before it was dismissed, almost three years as a chapter 13 case and another 17 months as a chapter 7 case. At page 7 of his En Banc Petition, Farris asks this Court to "remand this case to the U.S. Bankruptcy Court and assign it to another Judge as a Chapter 13 case." However, Farris himself moved to dismiss the case while it was pending under chapter 13 and withdrew that motion only upon being informed by the bankruptcy court that, because a motion for relief from the automatic stay had been filed, a voluntary dismissal would result in his being ineligible under 11 U.S.C. § 109(g) to file another bankruptcy case for 180 days. (BC# 184).

Farris acknowledges at pages 4 through 5 of his En Banc Petition that he failed to be sworn and examined at any of the four meetings of creditors scheduled in the case during the period of more than a year that it was pending as a chapter 7 case. Farris had a statutory duty under 11 U.S.C. § 521(a)(3) to cooperate with the chapter 7 trustee[7] and a statutory duty under 11 U.S.C. § 343 to submit to examination under oath at the section 341(a) meeting of creditors.[8] These obligations are part and parcel of a debtor's duty to "fully disclose all information relevant to the administration of the bankruptcy case." Eastern Diversified Distributors, Inc. v. Matus (In re Matus), 303 B.R. 660 (Bankr. N.D. Ga. 2004). The fulfillment of this duty is "crucial to the Farris's repeated failure over the course of a year to submit to examination under oath at the section 341 meeting of creditors provided the bankruptcy court with ample basis to determine that cause existed for the dismissal of the case. See In re Steinmetz Group Ltd., 85 B.R. 633 (Bankr. S.D. Fla. 1988) ("Debtor's attendance and availability for examination under oath at the meeting of creditors is mandatory") (citations omitted); In re Martin-Trigona, 35 B.R. 596, 601-02 (Bankr. CONCLUSION

For these reasons, the United States Trustee respectfully requests the Court to enter an order affirming the district court's order affirming the order of the bankruptcy court.

INTRODUCTION

In light of "glaring abuses of the bankruptcy system by the executives ... who lined their own pockets but left thousands of employees and retirees out in the cold,"[2] Congress enacted § 503(c)(1) of the Bankruptcy Code as part of the Bankruptcy Abuse Prevention and Consumer Protection Act of 2005. That provision placed significant restrictions upon the use of "Key Employee Retention Plans" ("KERPs"), a then-commonly used vehicle by which bankrupt corporations paid large bonuses to key executives under the guise of retaining necessary employees during reorganization. By enacting § 503(c)(1), Congress prohibited retention bonus payments by bankrupt corporations to their own corporate officers and other "insiders" absent the existence of statutorily enumerated circumstances.

In the latter half of 2007, Fieldstone Mortgage Company ("Fieldstone"), a sub-prime mortgage lender with over $121 Million in debts, laid off approximately 1,000 employees, filed bankruptcy, and promptly sought to institute a KERP paying seven of its highest ranking and highest paid officers retention bonuses exceeding $400,000 in exchange for 44 days' work. Because the KERP involved payments to corporate officers, the United States Trustee objected to its implementation on the grounds that the requisite showing under § 503(c)(1) was not made.

Rather than requiring compliance with § 503(c)(1), the bankruptcy court re-defined the term "officer" to exclude high level vice presidents, senior vice presidents and other generally recognized corporate officers who had been duly appointed by Fieldstone's board of directors as officers in accordance with Maryland law. The bankruptcy court's novel definition of the term "officer" ignores well-accepted principles of statutory construction, severely undercuts the Congressionally created protections of § 503(c)(1) and opens the flood-gates to excessive litigation and inconsistent determinations regarding the Bankruptcy Code's definitions in contravention of the Fourth Circuit's "clear preference for bright-line rules in this area of the law."[3]

BASIS OF APPELLATE JURISDICTION

This Court has jurisdiction over this appeal under 28 U.S.C. § 158(a)(1) which provides: "[t]he district courts of the United States shall have jurisdiction to hear appeals ... from final judgments, orders and decrees."[4]

STATEMENT OF ISSUES PRESENTED AND STANDARD OF REVIEW

The issue presented for appeal in this case is whether the bankruptcy court erred in authorizing Fieldstone to implement the KERP and thereby pay seven of its duly appointed corporate officers retention bonuses in excess of $400,000 without demonstrating compliance with § 503(c)(1) of the Bankruptcy Code. As described below, the issue turns on a discrete legal question: Is a corporate officer who has been duly appointed by the corporation's board of directors an "insider" as that term is defined in § 101(31) of the Bankruptcy Code? Because the issue is a question of law, the standard of review is de novo. Wolff v. United States, 372 B.R. 244, 248-49 (D. Md. 2007).

[4] The order being appealed is a final order because it fully and entirely disposed of the dispute over whether Fieldstone can implement and make payments under the KERP. In the bankruptcy context, the concept of finality "has traditionally been applied 'in a more pragmatic and less technical way ... than in other situations.'" In re Computer Learning Ctrs., Inc., 407 F.3d 656, 660 (4th Cir. 2005) (quoting *A.H. STATEMENT OF THE CASE

A. Procedural History.

Fieldstone initiated this bankruptcy case on November 23, 2007, by filing a voluntary petition under Chapter 11 of the United States Bankruptcy Code. (See Petition, dkt. no. 1, at 1.) On January 10, 2008, Fieldstone filed a motion titled "Motion for Order Authorizing Debtor to Implement Employee Incentive Plan Pursuant to Sections 105, 363 and 503 of the Bankruptcy Code" (The "KERP Motion"). (See KERP Mot., dkt. no. 121.) The KERP Motion initially requested authorization to pay twenty-three of Fieldstone's remaining employees bonuses totaling $1,114,985.[5] (Id. at Ex. A) On February 6, 2008, the United States Trustee filed an opposition to the KERP Motion asserting that at least some of the employees subject to Fieldstone's request were "insiders" as that term is defined by the Bankruptcy Code and that with respect to those employees (i) the requested payments were subject to the requirements of § 503(c)(1) of the Bankruptcy Code, and (ii) Fieldstone failed to demonstrate compliance with that provision. (See Opp. to KERP Mot., dkt. no. 186 at ¶¶ 7, 16-20.)

Subsequent to Fieldstone's filing of the KERP Motion, but before the bankruptcy court's hearing on the KERP Motion, Fieldstone voluntarily withdrew its request with respect to two of its employees. (See Order Authorizing Retention Payments dated Feb. 8, dkt. no. 196.) Thereafter, Fieldstone and the United States Trustee agreed that fourteen employees Fieldstone represented were not officers were not "insiders" and, thus, payments to those fourteen employees was not subject to the limitations of § 503(c)(1). Id. Fieldstone and the United States Trustee submitted a proposed consent order authorizing payment to the fourteen non-insider employees. Id. The bankruptcy court granted that consent order and it was entered on February 8, 2008. Id.

On February 20, 2008, the bankruptcy court held a hearing on the KERP Motion as it applied to the remaining seven employees. (See Tr. of Feb. 20, 2008 hearing, dkt. no. 373, hereinafter "Tr.", at 1.) On February 28, 2008, the bankruptcy court granted the KERP Motion.[6] (See Order Authorizing Debtor to Implement Employee Incentive Plan, dkt. no. 259.)

B. Statement of Facts.

Fieldstone is a corporation chartered in the State of Maryland. (See KERP Mot., dkt. no. 121 at ¶ 2.) Until the petition date, Fieldstone was a nationwide mortgage banking company originating and selling conforming and non-conforming (i.e., sub-prime) mortgage loans secured by residential real property. (See KERP Mot., dkt. no. 121, at ¶¶ 3-5.)

[6] In an effort to protect the assets of the bankruptcy estate from irretrievable dissipation, and to avoid the cost to the estate of potential litigation to recover those assets at a later date, the United States Trustee filed a motion for stay pending appeal. (See dkt. no. 261.) That motion was denied. (See dkt. no. 326.) Fieldstone has designated the stay motion, its opposition to the stay motion and the transcript of the hearing on the stay motion as part of the record of this appeal. Because all of these events occurred after the ruling on the KERP Motion, none of those materials were before the bankruptcy court when it made its decision. Thus, any attempt by Fieldstone to rely upon or cite to those materials is improper. Alexander v. Jensen, (In re Alexander), 239 B.R. 911, 913 (8th Cir. BAP 1999) (ordinarily, and absent extraordinary circumstances, an appellate court should only rely upon facts in existence at the time of the decision being appealed).

Fieldstone operated in all 50 states and the District of Columbia. As of July 2007, Fieldstone employed approximately 1,200 employees. (Tr. at 55, 116-17.)

Fieldstone's appearance of success, however, was an illusion. Like many sub-prime lenders, Fieldstone's excessive over-leveraging and failure to prepare for fluctuations in economic conditions landed it in what Fieldstone rather generously refers to as a "liquidity crisis." (See KERP Mot., dkt. no. 121 at ¶¶ 5-6.) Fieldstone's management initiated cost-cutting measures, including terminating more than 1,000 employees in late summer and fall of 2007. (See KERP Motion, dkt. no. 121, at ¶ 7; Tr. at 55, 65, 117.) Nevertheless, Fieldstone was unable to "resolve its liquidity crisis" and, on November 23, 2007, filed a voluntary petition under Chapter 11 of the Bankruptcy Code "to preserve and maximize the value of its assets for the benefit of creditors." (See KERP Motion, dkt. no. 121, at ¶ 8.) The corporate resolution authorizing Fieldstone to file for bankruptcy was executed by "Thomas S. Brennan, Secretary." (See Petition, dkt. no. 1, at 5.) At the time it filed for bankruptcy, Fieldstone owed creditors $121,342,790.00. (See Summary of Schedules, dkt. no. 105, at 1.)

In addition to its Petition, Fieldstone filed a Statement of Financial Affairs (the "SOFA") using official form 7. Page 10 of the SOFA provides, "I, declare under penalty of perjury that I have read the answers contained in the foregoing statement of financial affairs and any attachments thereto and that they are true and correct to the best of my knowledge information and belief." (See SOFA, dkt. no. 106, at 10.) The SOFA is signed, just below this statement, by "Michael J. Sonnenfeld, President and CEO." Id.

Question 21(b) on the SOFA asks Fieldstone to "list all officers and directors of the corporation." Among those listed in response to this question are the following employees:

Thomas Brennan	Vice President and Acting General Counsel[7]
Nancy Maradie	Vice President and Assistant Secretary Treasurer
Jennifer Bliden	Vice President
John Camp	Senior Vice President and Chief Information Officer
Jacqui Smith	Vice President
Bill Wolfe	Vice President
Teresa McDermott	Senior Vice President and Controller
Michael Sonnenfeld	President, CEO and Director
Walter Buczynski	Executive Vice President and Director.

(See SOFA, dkt. no. 106, at 9.) Each of these officers was covered by the KERP Motion.

Question 23 on the SOFA asks Fieldstone to "list all withdrawals or distributions credited or given to an insider ... during the one year immediately preceding the commencement of this case." Id. at 10 (emphasis omitted). As described, infra, the term "insider" is a defined term in the Bankruptcy Code. It is defined to include corporate officers. See 11 U.S.C. § 101(31). In response to Question 23, Fieldstone listed payments to, among others, the same officers identified above and covered by the KERP Motion:

Thomas Brennan	Vice President, Legal Counsel
Nancy Maradie	Vice President and Assistant Treasurer
Jennifer Bliden	Vice President, Systems
John Camp	Senior Vice President, CIO, Systems &Facilities
Jacqueline Smith	Vice President, Licensing
William Wolfe	Vice President, Facilities
Teresa McDermott	Senior Vice President, Controller
Michael Sonnenfeld	President and CEO
Walter Buczynski	Executive Vice President, Secondary Marketing.

(See SOFA, dkt. no. 106, at Ex. 23.)

[7] It is undisputed that, in addition to these two positions, Mr. Brennan was also Fieldstone's Corporate Secretary. (See Tr. at 111, 116, 125.)

On January 10, 2008, Fieldstone filed the KERP Motion requesting court authorization to pay bonuses totaling $1,114,985.00 to twenty-three employees, including the those listed above. The stated purpose of these bonuses was "a retention program" designed to "retain and incentivize employees needed to maintain" Fieldstone's operations. (See KERP Mot., dkt. no. 121, at ¶ 9.) Under the plan requested in the KERP Motion, most of the employees covered by the motion would receive their bonuses in three equal installments - one on January 15, 2008, one on January 31, 2008, and the last one on February 28, 2008. Id. at ¶ 12 and Ex. A. In order to receive the bonuses, the employees covered by the KERP Motion "must have completed the services requested of it by [Fieldstone] and be in [Fieldstone's] employ as of the strike date ...." Id. at ¶ 12. In other words, the bonuses were designed to retain employees from January 15 through February 28, and any covered employee who remained employed for that forty-four days received the entire bonus.[8] The bonuses sought for the employees listed above who Fieldstone designated in its bankruptcy filings as corporate officers for this forty-four days' work were as follows:

Michael Sonnenfeld	$99,999
Walter Buczynski	$99,999
John Camp	$99,999
Teresa McDermott	$92,000
Thomas Brennan	$90,000
William Wolfe	$49,750
Jacqueline Smith	$45,000
Jennifer Bliden	$43,313
Nancy Maradie	$41,350.

---

[8] Employees remaining only until January 15 would receive 1/3 of the bonus. Employees remaining until January 31 would receive 2/3 of the bonus. Id.

Id. at Ex. A.[9]

In response to an objection to the KERP Motion by the United States Trustee, Fieldstone voluntarily withdrew its request with respect to Sonnenfeld and Buczynski. Thereafter, Fieldstone and the United States Trustee agreed that fourteen employees Fieldstone represented were not officers were therefore not "insiders" and, thus, payment to those fourteen employees were not subject to the requirements of § 503(c)(1). (See Order Auth. Ret. Payments, dated Feb. 8, 2008, dkt. no. 196.) Fieldstone and the United States Trustee submitted a proposed consent order authorizing payment to the fourteen non-insider employees. Id. The bankruptcy court granted that consent order and it was entered on February 8, 2008. Id.

On February 20, 2008, the bankruptcy court held a hearing on the KERP Motion as it applied to the remaining seven employees. The sole testimony at the hearing was provided by Sonnenfeld. With respect to the seven employees at issue, Sonnenfeld's testimony was clear and unambiguous:

[9] In addition to the bonuses being sought in the KERP Motion, these nine employees received the following compensation during the year preceding the bankruptcy (i.e., the same time period during which Fieldstone terminated approximately 1,000 other employees):

Michael Sonnenfeld	$709,784
Walter Buczynski	$445,415
John Camp	$288,120
Teresa McDermott	$269,644
Thomas Brennan	$233,183
William Wolfe	$126,653
Jacqueline Smith	$109,554
Jennifer Bliden	$109,170
Nancy Maradie	$95,945.

(See SOFA, dkt. no. 106, at Ex. 23.)

Q: All of the seven are officers of the company appointed by the Board, is that correct?

A: Yes.

Despite the undisputed fact that each of these seven employees was appointed an officer by the board of directors, the bankruptcy court determined that they were not "officers" as that term is used in the Bankruptcy Code because they did not exercise sufficient control over the company or act like "traditional" officers, although the court did not express what such "traditional officers" actually do. (See Tr. at 140-43.)[10] The court expressed its reasoning as follows:

> [E]ven though the definition that [the United States Trustee] is pointing to identifies officers among a list of individuals who are characterized by the Bankruptcy Code definitions as insiders, the Court is not precluded by the terminology that is used from taking evidence from behind the titles that people hold in any given situation. And so I find, first of all, that these vice presidents, despite the title that they enjoy, are holders of honorary titles that have no relationship whatsoever to officers, traditional officers of a corporation or a company.
>
> And so I understand what [The United States Trustee] was arguing about control, the question of whether they have control is not the issue. But the question is whether they are officers in the traditional sense, in the sense that they are making decisions,

---

[10] Nowhere in the bankruptcy court's opinion or in Fieldstone's argument is the fact that these officers were appointed by Fieldstone's board of directors mentioned at all. Nevertheless, it does not appear that the bankruptcy court made a factual finding that the officers were not appointed by the board of directors. Given that the entirety of the evidence on the subject was the testimony by Fieldstone's president and CEO that all seven officers were, in fact, appointed by the board of directors and the admissions by Fieldstone in the SOFA that each was an officer, such a finding would be clearly erroneous. Fed. R. Bankr. P. 8013.

> they're acting on behalf of the corporation, they are in charge, they are insiders. And I find that none of these seven qualify as either officers or insiders.

(Tr. at 140-41.)

ARGUMENT

A. Statutory Framework.

Section 503(c)(1) of the Bankruptcy Code was enacted as part of the Bankruptcy Abuse Prevention and Consumer Protection Act of 2005. In re Nellson Nutraceutical, Inc., 369 B.R. 787, 800 (Bankr. D. Del. 2007). It was enacted in response to "glaring abuses of the bankruptcy system by the executives of giant companies like Enron Corp, and WorldCom Inc. and Polaroid Corporation, who lined their own pockets but left thousands of employees and retirees out in the cold." (Floor Statement, quoted in Dana Corp., 358 B.R. at 575.) The abuses at which the provision is aimed regularly manifest themselves in the guise of KERPs. See Lawrence P. King, Collier on Bankruptcy, § 503.17 (section 503(c)'s "purpose was to limit the scope of 'key employee retention plans'"). As one court has explained:

> All too often [KERPs] have been used to lavishly reward -- at the expense of the creditor body -- the very executives whose bad decisions or lack of foresight were responsible for the debtor's financial plight. But even where external circumstances rather than the executives are to blame, there is something inherently unseemly in the effort to insulate executives from the financial risks all other stakeholders face in the bankruptcy process.

In re U.S. Airways, Inc., 329 B.R. 793, 797 (Bankr. E.D. Va. 2005).

Section 503(c)(1) precludes payments under a KERP to "insiders" unless the payment is:

> (1) essential to the retention of the employee because the employee has a "bona fide job offer from another business at the same or greater rate of compensation";
> (2) the services provided by the employee are essential to the survival of the business; and
> (3) the amount of the payment is within the parameters set by the statute.

11 U.S.C. § 503(c)(1). Because, subject to only one exception, there was no evidence presented that any employee had a bona fide job offer from any other business, it is indisputable that if the seven officers are "insiders," the requirements of § 503(c)(1) were not satisfied in this case.[11]

The Bankruptcy Code defines the term "insider" by way of a non-exhaustive list. Pursuant to the Code, "insiders" of a corporation include, inter alia, any:

> (a) director of the debtor;
>
> (b) officer of the debtor;
>
> (c) person in control of the debtor; or
>
> (d) a relative of a director, officer or person in control of the debtor.

11 U.S.C. § 101(31). The list in § 101(31) is not exhaustive. Butler v. David Shaw, Inc., 72 F.3d 437, 443 (4th Cir. 1996).

[11] The one exception involved Thomas Brennan, Fieldstone's secretary and general counsel. Fieldstone's representative testified that Brennan received a job offer. (See Tr. 97.) No evidence was presented, however, as to the bona fides of that offer, the business that made the offer, or the amount of the offer. Id.

Persons expressly identified in § 101(31), e.g., officers and directors, are referred to as "statutory insiders" and such persons always constitute "insiders." In re Tarricone, Inc., 286 B.R. 256, 262 (Bankr. S.D.N.Y. 2002). Moreover, the statute is written disjunctively. Thus, directors and officers are "insiders" regardless of whether they are "in control of the debtor." In re Public Access Technology.com, Inc., 307 B.R. 500, 505 (E.D. Va. 2004) ("[i]t is unnecessary for a court to determine whether an individual is ... both an officer and a person in control, as the statutory definition is clearly stated in the disjunctive"); see also Magers v. Bonds (In re Bonds Distributing Co.), Case Nos. 97-52130C-7W; 98-6044, 2000 WL 33673768 at *3 (Bankr. M.D., March 31, 2000) (rejecting the argument that a corporate director who did not "act" like a director falls outside the plain meaning definition of an "insider").

B. Fieldstone's Officers are Subject to §§ 503(c)(1) and 101(31)(B)(ii) of the Bankruptcy Code Because they are Officers Under Maryland Law.

1. Section 503(c)(1) of the Bankruptcy Code imposes limitations upon the payments that can be made to "insiders." 11 U.S.C. § 503(c)(1). Under the Bankruptcy Code, corporate officers are insiders. 11 U.S.C. § 101(31)(B)(ii). Fieldstone's officers are insiders under § 101(31)(B)(ii) and subject to section 503(c)(1)'s restrictions because they are officers under Maryland law.

Maryland law applies to Fieldstone because it is a Maryland corporation. See Miller v. U.S. FoodService, Inc., 405 F. Supp.2d 607, 615-16 (D. Md. 2005) (Maryland law controls the corporate governance of Maryland corporations); Storetrax.com v. Gurland, 397 Md. 37, 51-52, 915 A.2d 991, 999-1000 (Md. 2007) (same). Under Maryland law, Fieldstone's officers are just that - officers. Where a board of directors of a Maryland corporation appoints an officer, he or she is an officer under Maryland law. Md. Code Ann., Corps. & Ass'ns § 2-413(a) ("Unless the bylaws provide otherwise, the board of directors shall elect the officers") (emphasis added). Fieldstone's officers are board appointed so they are officers subject to §§ 101(31) and 503(c)(1) the Bankruptcy Code. (See Tr. at 116.)

There is nothing remarkable about this concept. "In corporate law, the term [officer] refers esp. to a person elected or appointed by the board of directors to manage the daily operations of a corporation, such as a CEO, president, secretary or treasurer." Bryan A. Garner, Black's Law Dictionary at 1117 (Eighth Ed. 2004). Accord 2 William Meade Fletcher, Fletcher Cyclopedia of the Law of Private Corporations, § 266 at 12 (Rev'd ed. 2006) ("[o]ne distinction between officers and agents of a corporation is the manner of their creation[; a]n office is created by the charter of the corporation, and the officers are appointed by the directors or the shareholders"). Here, the evidence is undisputed that each of the seven employees was duly appointed as a corporate officer by Fieldstone's board of directors. (See Tr. at 116.)

2. Both types of Fieldstone officers who seek payment under section 503(c)(1), vice presidents and the corporate secretary, are universally recognized as corporate officers. See, e.g., Fletcher § 269 at 30 ("[g]enerally, the officers of a corporation are enumerated in its bylaws and include a president, vice president, secretary, treasurer and sometimes others"); Harry G. Henn, Handbook of the Law of Corporations and Other Business Enterprises, at 433 (2d. ed. 1970) ("[t]he usual officers are president, one or more vice-presidents, treasurer, secretary, and in the case of a banking corporation, cashier"); 18B Am.Jur.2d, Corporations, § 1169 at 211 (2004) ("[v]arious positions within a corporation may be considered to be held by 'officers' and not mere employees -- such as president, vice president or certain managers"); see also West of England Ship Owners Mut. Ins. Assoc (Luxemborg) v. McAllister Bros, Inc., 829 F. Supp. 122, 123 (E.D. Pa. 1993) ("[t]here is no serious dispute that an assistant vice president is an officer for purposes of service of process"). Thus, the bankruptcy court erred in concluding Fieldstone's vice presidents and corporate secretary were not officers. (See Tr. at 140: court below relied upon the erroneous belief that vice presidents are not corporate officers.)

Similarly, under numerous federal statutes the term "officer" is defined to include corporate vice presidents. See, e.g., 12 U.S.C. § 24, (national banking associations may elect and define the duties of "vice presidents ... and other officers"). In creating the Agricultural Hall of Fame, the Aviation Hall of Fame, the Foundation of the Federal Bar Association, the National Council on Radiation Protection and Measurements, and the National Tropical Botanical Garden, all corporate bodies created under federal law, Congress specifically provided that those corporations' officers shall be:

> [A] president, one or more vice presidents ... a secretary, a treasurer, one or more assistant secretaries and assistant treasurers, and other officers as provided in the bylaws.

36 U.S.C. §§ 20104, 23104, 70504, 150904, 153504 (emphasis added). In creating the National Education Association of the United States, another corporation created under federal law, Congress provided that the officers shall be:

> [A] president, one or more vice presidents, a secretary, a treasurer, and the members of a board of directors, an executive committee, and any other boards, councils, and committees, and other officers, as provided in the bylaws.

36 U.S.C. § 151104 (emphasis added). And, in establishing the Navy Sea Cadets Corp, yet another federally created corporation, Congress provided that the officers shall be:

> [A] president, one or more vice presidents as provided in the constitution and bylaws, a secretary, a treasurer, and other officers as provided in the constitution and bylaws.

36 U.S.C. § 154104 (emphasis added).

3. Finally, there can be no doubt on the status of Fieldstone's officers because Fieldstone affirmatively identified each of them on Fieldstone's SOFA, under penalty of perjury, as both a corporate officer and an "insider." (See SOFA, dkt. 106, at question 21 and Ex. 23.) One of them, Fieldstone's corporate secretary, even executed Fieldstone's corporate authorization to file bankruptcy in that capacity. (See Tr. at 111, 116; Petition, dkt. no. 1 at 5; see also Md. Code Ann. Corps. & Ass'ns § 2-412: "[e]ach Maryland corporation shall have the following officers: (1) A president; (2) A secretary; and (3) A treasurer").[12] Another is Fieldstone's Senior Vice President and Controller and a third is its Senior Vice President and Chief Information Officer. (Tr. at 83; SOFA, dkt. 106 at Ex. 23; Order Auth.

[12] Notably, no evidence was presented that anyone other than Mr. Brennan was Fieldstone's secretary. (See Tr. at 125.)

Ret. Payments dated Feb. 8, 2008, dkt. no. 196, at Ex. A.)

C. The Court Improperly Excluded Fieldstone's Corporate Vice Presidents and Corporate Secretary From Section 503(c)(1)'s Restrictions By Defining Officers Under § 101(31) as Only Those Fieldstone Officers the Court Believed were Exercising Control Over the Debtor.

1. The bankruptcy court interpreted the term "officer" as limited to officers who are in control of the debtor. (See Tr. at 141: "the question is whether they are officers in the traditional sense .... [i]n the sense that they are making decisions, they are acting on behalf of the corporation .... [t]hey are in charge").

But § 101(31) disjunctively identifies four groups of persons who can be insiders: "(a) director of the debtor; (b) officer of the debtor; (c) person in control of the debtor; or (d) a relative of a director, officer or person in control of the debtor. 11 U.S.C. § 101(31). (emphasis added.)

What the bankruptcy court did, was require that persons who fit Category (b) - "officer of the debtor," also fit Category (c) - "person in control of the debtor," in order to be an insider under section 101(31). Id.

But the statute is not written that way. First, the list is disjunctive because the elements are set off by an "or." Id. When Congress uses the term "or," courts must apply the term "or" even if the court does not like the result. See United States v. Jones, 902 F.2d 1152, 1153 (4th Cir. 1990). (rejecting the substitution of the word "or" in 21 U.S.C. § 844(a) with an "and" because that constituted an "act of impermissible legislation."). Second, if the statute were truly conjunctive, the only insiders would be persons who fit categories (a), (b), (c) and (d), those who are: directors and officers and persons in control and persons who are related to an officer or a director or a person in control. Reading the statute this way makes no sense. Few if any persons would ever be subject to such a statute.

Not surprisingly then, courts that have addressed the disjunctive nature of § 101(31) have determined that corporate officers are "insiders" regardless of whether they are also "in control of the debtor." See, e.g., Public Access, 307 B.R. at 505. As that court held:

> It is unnecessary for a court to determine whether an individual is ... both an officer and a person in control, as the statutory definition is clearly stated in the disjunctive. A person's status as ... an officer is alone sufficient to establish that he is an insider ... to hold otherwise would not only do violence to the plain meaning of the statute, but would also unnecessarily complicate a straightforward factual inquiry in contradiction of the Fourth Circuit's "clear preference for bright-line rules" in bankruptcy law.

Id; see also Miller Ave. Prof. & Promotional Serv., Inc. v. Brady (In re Enterprise Acquisition Partners), 319 B.R. 626, 631 (9th Cir. BAP 2004) ("[t]he per se insider is considered to be close enough to the debtor to demand preferential treatment as a matter of law, regardless of whether the insider has any actual control over the actions of the debtor").

Given this, it is no surprise that many courts have applied § 101(31) to officers without finding it necessary to also consider whether they were any of the other things listed in that subsection. See, e.g., In re N&D Properties, Inc., 799 F.2d 726, 731-32 (11th Cir. 1986); In re Mid-South Auto, Inc., 290 B.R. 658, 662 (Bankr. E.D. Ark. 2003); In re Uly-Pak, Inc., 128 B.R. 763, 768 (Bankr. S.D. Ill. 1991). The term "person in control of the debtor" in § 101(31) is written not to exclude officers but to include people who, although not officers or directors, actually have "control of the debtor." 11 U.S.C. § 101(31)(B)(iii).

2. The bankruptcy court's definition of "officer" under § 101(31) would render the term "officer" surplusage because that interpretation requires every officer to also be a "person in control of the debtor." Courts should not interpret a statute in a manner that renders any part of the statute superfluous. United States v. Childress, 104 F.3d 47 (4th Cir. 1996); Virginia v. Browner, 80 F.3d 869, 876 (4th Cir. 1996) ("[a] court should not ... construe a statute in a manner the reduces some of its terms to mere surplusage").

Moreover, by incorporating a control requirement into the definition of "officer," the bankruptcy court also replaces the term "or" with the term "and," requiring that for an officer to be an insider he or she must be both an officer and a person in control of the debtor. Such judicial amendment of legislation is prohibited. When Congress uses the term "or," the courts must apply the term "or" even if the court does not like the result. This was addressed by the Fourth Circuit in United States v. Jones, 902 F.2d 1152 (4th Cir. 1990).

In Jones, the District Court had to interpret the sentencing provisions of 21 U.S.C. § 844(a) which provided:

> [A] person convicted under this subsection for the possession of a mixture or substance which contains cocaine base shall be fined under Title 18, or imprisoned not less than 5 years and not more than 20 years or both.

(Emphasis added). The District Court concluded that the use of the word "or" was a drafting error and that the statute was meant to read "and," thus requiring it to impose both a fine and a prison sentence. Id. at 1153. In reversing the District Court, the Fourth Circuit characterized the substitution of the Congressionally enacted word "or" with the judicially imposed term "and" to be an "act of impermissible legislation." Id. at 1154. Such "impermissible legislation" is precisely what the bankruptcy court engaged in here.

3. In determining that the board-appointed officers at issue were not"officers" under § 101(31) and therefore not subject to § 503(c)(1), the bankruptcy court relied on the fact that these officers did not exhibit some undefined characteristics of corporate officers. This reasoning is wrong for two separate and alternative reasons:

First, it is legally irrelevant. Any failure on these duly appointed officers to act like officers does not change the fact that they are officers under Maryland law (and consequently, under § 101(31)). Nor does it change the fact that § 503(c)(1) applies to them as insiders because officers are insiders under section 101(31)(B)(ii).

Second, the conclusion contradicts the record and demonstrates the bankruptcy court's confusion between officers and directors. Fieldstone's testimony, relied upon by the bankruptcy court, actually focused upon whether these officers performed director - not officer - duties:

> Q: Did any of the seven that are here .... Did any of the seven participate or have roles in decision-making at any of the board meetings or either FMC or FIC at any time?
> A: We would have from time-to-time two senior vice presidents would give reports to the FIC board and then -- but they were not part of the decision process ....

Q: Okay. But you wouldn’t give any of the seven a vote in the board decisions of the company?

(Tr. at 66-67.)

Q: Okay. And as the board were going to make decisions about ... strategic decisions about a type of business or a type of -- and I -- assume when I say products, there -- a product is a different type of mortgage. There’s ARMs and there’s five year ... and all sort of products. Would Ms. Bliden have any role in determining what the company products would be?

A: No.

Q: Would Mr. Wolfe, the VP of facilities?

A: No.

Q: Would any of the seven have any role in -- at any pont in time, pre-merger, post-merger, pre-petition, ever have any role in deciding what kind of business -- or what kind of products Fieldstone would offer to them?

A: No.

Q: Would they ever have a chance to set their own salaries?

A: No.

Q: Would they ever have a chance to set [the President and CEO’s] salary?

A: No.

Q: Would they ever have a chance to decide whether to or not to file bankruptcy?

A: No.

(Tr. at 68-69.)

A: Well, the Board had sole responsibility for approving the annual plan and the budget.

Q: Okay. So, vice presidents didn't have any control over the plan and budget, correct?

A: No.

Q: None of the seven --

A: Yes, that's correct.

Q: None of the seven had control over the annual plan or budget?

A: Within the Accounting Department, they would work on it, but they certainly had no ability to approve it.

(Tr. 73-74.) It is clear that the bankruptcy court, in reaching its decision that the definition of an officer includes corporate control was incorporating director duties into the definition of "officer." For example, the court asked Fieldstone's representative, this pointed question:

THE COURT: In other words, they weren't officers in the traditional sense as we think of officers as sitting around a table making decisions?

[13] See also Tr. at 125-26, where the Court momentarily expressed concern that Thomas Brennan might be a "real Officer" because the Court thought the testimony had been that he "sat in on board meetings."

management of Fieldstone's operations is precisely what these board-appointed officers indisputably engaged in on Fieldstone's behalf.

Nor does the fact that the board placed limitations on the scope of these officers' powers render them non-officers. A corporate officer's power is always subject to limitation by the board of directors. As one commentator explains:

> Typically, the powers and duties of each officer are assigned to him by either the bylaws or the board of directors. Section 2-401(a) [of the Maryland Corporations Code] provides that "[t]he business and affairs of a corporation shall be managed under the direction of a Board of Directors." The individuals doing the "managing" of the corporation's "business and affairs" are typically the officers.
> The board [of directors] frequently delegates specific duties to particular officers.

James J. Hanks, Maryland Corporations Law, § 6.19; see also Md. Code Ann., Corps & Assn's § 2-414 (limiting the powers and authority of an officer to that provided in the bylaws or determined by board resolution).

D. The Bankruptcy Court Misapplied The Only Case It Relied Upon; Analogous Case Law Supports the Conclusion that Fieldstone's Corporate Officers are Officers under § 101(31) and are Subject to the Payment Restrictions Congress Imposed in § 503(c)(1).

1. In finding that these officers were not "insiders," the Court relied heavily upon In re NMI Sys., Inc., 179 B.R. 357 (Bankr. D.D.C. 1995). NMI, however, does not support the proposition that an officer, duly appointed by the board of directors, falls outside the definition of an "insider" if he or she does not exercise control over the debtor. Indeed, such a case was not before the NMI Court. What NMI holds is that a person who is not elected an officer and also does not have control over the debtor is not an "insider." Essential to the outcome in NMI was that the employee at issue was not elected or appointed as an officer by the board of directors and, thus, was not a "statutory insider."

NMI was a preference case[14] involving pre-petition payments to an employee named Pillard. Pillard was originally hired with the title of "Vice President -- Eastern Region," and he reported directly to the CEO of the company. Id. at 359-60. Despite his title, however, Pillard was never elected as an officer by the board of directors and the remaining evidence as to whether Pillard was an officer at the time of hiring was unclear. Id. at 360-64. Moreover, prior to the time of the allegedly preferential transfers, Pillard's duties and salaries were reduced and he began reporting to another officer of the company, subordinate to the

[14] "Preference" is a term of art in the Bankruptcy Code. Pursuant to § 547 of the Bankruptcy Code, certain pre-petition transfers of property, defined as "preferential" transfers, may be undone post-petition. 11 U.S.C. 547(b). One of the elements of a "preferential" transfer is that it must occur within a statutorily-prescribed period of time prior to the filing of bankruptcy. 11 U.S.C. § 547(b)(4). If the recipient of the transfer is an "insider," then the statutory period is longer. Id. Thus, issues surrounding the definition of "insider" commonly arise in the context of "preference actions."

CEO.

In determining whether Pillard was an officer at the time of the transfer, the NMI Court focused in the first instance upon the fact that Pillard was not elected as an officer by the board of directors:

> [Pillard] does not appear at this juncture to have been an elected officer, one of the few blessed by a vote of the board of directors to be an officer. He thus did not enjoy that prestigious affinity that exists among elected officers that in appropriate circumstances may per se threaten preferential treatment vis a vis other creditors.
> Here the plaintiffs put forth no evidence of the bylaws or charter of NMI and offered no board resolution electing Pillard an officer ... In selecting Pillard to carry the title of vice president the corporation did not follow corporate formalities that would be expected to be and were apparently usually observed in selecting officers.

Id. at 371.

Given that Pillard was not a duly elected officer and, thus, not a de jure officer, the NMI Court appropriately looked to whether Pillard carried any other indicia of de facto officer status, such as control of the company. Finding he had none, the court held that the vice president title alone was insufficient to confer officer status.

Here, the evidence is undisputed that each of the seven employees was duly appointed by the board of directors as an officer. They were, "of the few blessed by a vote of the board of directors to be an officer ... enjoy[ing] that prestigious affinity that exists among elected officers." Id. Moreover, each of the employees was identified as an officer on Debtor's own bankruptcy filings. (SOFA at Ex. 21, 23.)

Nothing in NMI supports the proposition that a person can be an de jure officer without being an "insider." Indeed, despite substantial research, the United States Trustee has been unable to find even one case in which a debtor's duly appointed or elected corporate officer was found not to be an "insider" as defined by § 101(31). The reason, of course, is that such a holding disregards the plain language of the statutory definition of "insider." See In re Public Access Tech.com, 307 B.R. at 505 ("[a] person's status as a director or an officer is alone sufficient to establish that he is an insider .... to hold otherwise would ... do violence to the plain meaning of the statute").[15]

2. Although there are very few cases addressing the newly enacted § 503(c)(1), at least one case considering the statute concluded that vice presidents are "insiders" subject to its limitations. In In re Nellson Nutraceutical, 369 B.R. 787 (Bankr. D. Del. 2007), the bankruptcy court considered the applicability of § 503(c)(1) to a KERP which covered 131 of the debtor company's employees. These 131 employees were grouped into six different categories as follows:

[15] Public Access involved the same situation as MNI. There, although the employee at issue had the title of Executive Vice President, there were no "affidavits, articles of incorporation, corporate minutes, resolutions, or any other documents or evidence that shows this title makes Smith an officer of the corporation." 307 B.R. at 506. Here, however, the undisputed evidence is that Fieldstone's board of directors appointed each of the employees at issue to be corporate officer. (Tr. at 116.) This corporate formality, which both Fieldstone and the bankruptcy court continuously ignore, is the critical difference between this case and NMI and Public Access. Although the Public Access Court refrained from "proclaiming a rigid rule to determine who qualifies as a corporate officer," the statement was made in the context of determining whether a person who was not a de jure officer elected by the board of directors was, nevertheless, a de facto officer. Public Access, 307 B.R. at 506 n.4. The Public Access court's statement should not be read to countenance a finding that a true de jure officer may still not constitute an "officer" as defined by § 101(31).

Level I	Management level officers, including the CEO, CFO and various vice presidents
Level II	Operational directors including Director of Purchasing, Director of Manufacturing and Director of Finance
Level III	Managers, including R&D Managers, Materials Managers and Maintenance Managers
Sales Directors	Director level employees in charge of sales to customers
Sales Managers	Manager level employees in charge of sales to customers
Line Mangers/Office Staff	Employees responsible for managing the day-to-day tasks of the Debtor.

Id. at 792.[16] The Court had no trouble determining that § 503(c)(1) applies to all of the Level I employees as those employees (i.e., debtor's "various vice presidents") constituted officers and therefore "insiders" under § 101(31). Id. at 801.

3. The argument advanced by Fieldstone and the bankruptcy court has also been rejected other contexts. See, e.g., Magers v. Bonds (In re Bonds Distributing Company), Case Nos. 97-52130C-7W; 98-6044, 2000 WL 33673768 at *3 (Bankr. M.D.N.C., March 31, 2000) (applying 11 U.S.C. § 547). In Magers, Donald Bonds had been the president, owner and sole director of Bonds Distributing Company until 1995 when he sold the Debtor to Steven Young ("Young"). Part of the purchase price consisted of a promissory note from the Debtor to Bonds and Bonds took back a security interest in all the Debtor's assets as collateral. Bonds remained a director of the Debtor but had no real involvement in its affairs. Instead, "Young became president of the Debtor, assumed control of the Debtor and managed

[16] The Nutraceutical Court was careful to make clear that the title "director" as used here did not refer to members of the board of directors. Id. at 792 n.4.

the business operation of the Debtor." Id. at *1.

In 1997, the Debtor defaulted on the promissory note and Bonds foreclosed. Bonds purchased all of the Debtor's assets at the foreclosure sale. Id. Approximately two months after the foreclosure sale, an involuntary petition under Chapter 7 of the Bankruptcy Code was filed against the Debtor.

The Chapter 7 Trustee initiated a preference action against Bonds asserting that payments made to Bonds under the promissory note in the year prior to the Debtor's bankruptcy were avoidable because, as a director, Bonds was an insider of the Debtor. Like Fieldstone, Bonds argued that although he was a director in name, "since Bonds did not 'act' like a director, the plain language of § 101(31)(B) should not apply in this case." Id. at *3. Finding no legal support for such an argument, the Bonds Court held:

> The definition of "insider" contained in § 101(31) of the Bankruptcy Code clearly and unambiguously includes a director of a corporate debtor. Giving this statutory provision its plain meaning does not produce a result demonstrably at odds with the intentions of Congress in adopting this provision. Pursuant to the foregoing tenets of statutory interpretation, Bonds, as a director, must be regarded as an insider.

Id. Similarly, Fieldstone's officers -- its vice presidents, senior vice presidents, secretary, controller, CIO, etc. -- as duly appointed officers must also be regarded as "insiders", regardless of whether they exercised some undefined level of control or otherwise "acted" like officers. Each of the employees at issue in this case is an officer and as such, is an insider subject to the restrictions of § 503(c)(1).

What Fieldstone and the bankruptcy court have done in this case is incorrectly apply the test for determining whether an unappointed person is a de facto officer to persons who were appointed as de jure officers by Fieldstone's board of directors. Because these seven officers were actually appointed as officers by the Board of Directors, the de facto test has no applicability and its application constitutes error.

E. By Engrafting a New Control Restriction Upon the Definition of Officer in § 101(31), the Bankruptcy Court has Taken the Remarkable Step of Redefining the Scope of No Less than Fifteen Bankruptcy Code Provisions - Sections 101(14)(A), 101(51D), 303(b)(2), 502(a)(4), 503(c)(1), 522(d)(E)(i), 523(a)(2), 547(b)(4), 548(a), 550(c)(2), 702(a)(3), 727(a)(7), 741(1), 1104(c)(2), 1124(1)(D), and 1129(a).

The definition of "insider" affects more than just the § 503(c)(1). The scope of numerous additional provisions of the Bankruptcy Code is affected by the determination of whether someone is an insider. See, e.g., 11 U.S.C. §§ 101(14)(A), 101(51D), 303(b)(2), 502(a)(4), 522(d)(E)(i), 523(a)(2), 547(b)(4), 548(a), 550(c)(2), 702(a)(3), 727(a)(7), 741(1), 1104(c)(2), 1124(1)(D), 1129(a). The statutory definition of §101(31)(B) cannot mean one thing for purposes of §503(c)(1) and another thing for these other provisions. If the bankruptcy court's interpretation is followed, every time the insider status of a president, a vice president, or any other corporate officer is in question, a court will have to engage in a detailed factual inquiry to determine what level of control the officer exercised or whether he or she acted like an Bankruptcy Code "officer."

Moreover, what level of control or what activities make an officer a novel § 101(31)-control "officer" is not clear from the bankruptcy court's ruling. Here, vice presidents and senior vice presidents with control over significant portions of Fieldstone's operations were held not to be Bankruptcy Code "officers" because the scope of their duties were limited to discrete portions of the business. Taken to its logical conclusion, this holding could mean that only a person who has control over the entire company constitutes a Bankruptcy Code "officer, " or that a company with both a manufacturing arm and a distributing arm might have no Bankruptcy Code "officers" if one officer is solely responsible for the manufacturing arm and the other is solely responsible for the distributing arm. Indeed, in any large company, the scopes of control of all but the most senior officers are necessarily limited to discrete portions of the business.

The Fourth Circuit Court of Appeals has indicated a "clear preference for bright-line rules" in bankruptcy law and particularly with respect to the determination of who constitutes an "insider." Butler v. David Shaw, Inc., 72 F.3d 437, 442 (4th Cir. 1996); see also Public Access, 307 B.R. at 505. To require a complex fact-based inquiry to determine whether formally appointed and elected officers exercise sufficient control to be Bankruptcy Code "officers" contravenes that policy with little or no benefit to the aims of the Bankruptcy Code. To the contrary, the centralized form of corporate control required by the bankruptcy court's novel ruling in this case defeats the congressional aims of § 503(c)(1), particularly in the large corporations expressly targeted by the statute, since by their very size such large corporations must operate by delegating limited amounts of control to a significant number of officers. Although a fact-intensive inquiry may occasionally be unavoidable to determine if a person with a particular and unique relationship with the debtor is an insider, see, e.g., Flint Hill L.P. v. Prudential Ins. Co. (In re Flint Hill L.P.), 213 B.R. 292, 298-300 (D. Md. 1997) (former business partner of debtor's principal who agreed to pay certain of debtor's debts), such an inquiry is both unnecessary and inappropriate when the person in question is a currently-serving corporate officer duly appointed by the debtor's board of directors.

F. The Seven Officers Meet Even the Bankruptcy Court's Revised Definition of the Term Officer.

Even if an officer appointed by the board of directors pursuant to a corporate resolution is still not a Bankruptcy Code "officer" absent some level of corporate control, the record here is clear that these officers meet that criterion. For example, Thomas Brennan was Fieldstone's Corporate Secretary. (See Tr. at 117, 123.) Maryland law, which governs this corporation, requires every corporation to maintain a secretary as an officer. Md. Code Ann. Corps & Assn's § 2-412(a). If Fieldstone's secretary -- an officer mandated by Maryland law -- does not constitute a corporate officer then the determination of officer status is rendered completely arbitrary. Indeed, Brennan wielded sufficient control and authority to execute the corporate resolution allowing Fieldstone to file for bankruptcy.

Theresa McDermott is a Senior Vice President and Fieldstone's Controller. (See SOFA, dkt. no. 106, at Ex. 23; Tr. at 92-93.)[17] She handles all of Fieldstone's critical financial reporting, including tax returns and 401(k) administration. (See Tr. at 92-95.) John Camp is a "Senior Vice President" and "Chief Information Officer." (See SOFA, dkt. no.

106, at Ex. 23; Order Auth. Ret. Payments dated Feb. 8, 2008, dkt. no. 196 at Ex. A.; Tr. at 83.) Camp is responsible for both Fieldstone's IT department and its facilities group. (See Tr. at 83.) William Wolff is the Vice President for facilities. (See SOFA, dkt. no. 106, at Ex. 23; Order Auth. Ret. Payments dated Feb. 8, 2008, dkt. no. 196 at Ex. A.) He was responsible, at one time, for the operations of 90 locations with authority to negotiate lease terms with landlords for those 90 locations. (See Tr. at 79, 81.)

Even if their official appointment by the board of directors had not been sufficient to endow officer status, clearly these seven were and acted like "traditional" officers in any sense of the word. These are precisely the type of highly-compensated insiders at which § 503(c)(1) was directed and the KERP contains precisely the type of self-dealing retention bonuses that § 503(c)(1) was designed to prevent. By re-defining the term "officer" into an animal unrecognizable under any accepted definition, the bankruptcy court holding significantly weakens the Congressionally imposed protections of § 503(c)(1).

CONCLUSION

For these reasons, the United States Trustee respectfully asks this Court to vacate the February 28, 2008, order entered below and remand for further proceedings.

Respectfully submitted,

JURISDICTIONAL STATEMENT

The bankruptcy court had jurisdiction under 28 U.S.C. §§ 157(a) and 1334(a) to issue its final order resolving the election dispute. R. 6. The bankruptcy court issued its final order resolving the disputed chapter 11 trustee election on October 20, 2009. R. 6-10. This order was final given that it resolved the trustee election by determining that Matthew Orwig would remain the chapter 11 trustee because the election request had not meet the requirements of 11 U.S.C. § 702. R. 10. See Path Science Laboratories v. Greene Co. Hosp. (In re Greene Co. Hosp.), 835 F.2d 589, 595 (5th Cir. 1988) ("[i]n order to be final in character, an order by a bankruptcy court must resolve a discrete unit in the larger case" and must "conclusively determine substantive rights"). Orders appointing a permanent trustee are final. Cajun Elec. Power Co-op., Inc. v. Central Louisiana Elec. Co., Inc. (In re Cajun Elec. Power Co-op., Inc.), 69 F.3d 746, 748 (5th Cir. 1995).

William Maxwell, William Maxwell, PLLC, Learned Associates of North America, LLC, Michael Cordova, Seven Hills Management, LLC, Svetlana Pelullo Revocable Deed of Trust, LandL Holdings, LLC ("Appellants") filed their notice of appeal on December 7, 2009, which is timely under 28 U.S.C. §§ 158(a) and (c)(2). R. 1-2. This Court has appellate jurisdiction under 28 U.S.C. § 158(a)(1), a statutory provision under which district courts have jurisdiction to hear appeals from final judgments, orders, and decrees of bankruptcy judges.

A district court functions as an appellate court when reviewing a bankruptcy court's decision and applies the standard of review generally applied in the federal courts of appeals. Webb v. Reserve Life Ins. Co. (In re Webb), 954 F.2d 1102, 1103-04 (5th Cir. 1992).

On appeal "conclusions of law are reviewed de novo, findings of fact are reviewed for clear error, and mixed questions of law and fact are reviewed de novo." Century Indem. Co. v. Nat'l Gypsum Co. Settlement Trust (In re Nat'l Gypsum Co.), 208 F. 3d 498, 504 (5th Cir. 2000). A bankruptcy court's resolution of a disputed trustee election is reviewed for abuse of discretion. Berg v. Esposito (In re Oxborrow), 913 F.2d 751, 754 (9th Cir. 1990).

STATEMENT OF THE ISSUES PRESENTED

Whether the bankruptcy court abused its discretion when it determined that the chapter 11 trustee election dispute should be resolved in favor of Matthew D. Orwig remaining as chapter 11 trustee.

STATEMENT CONCERNING ORAL ARGUMENT

The United States Trustee respectfully submits that the facts and legal arguments are adequately presented in the briefs and record, and the decisional process would not be significantly aided by oral argument.

STATEMENT OF THE CASE

In this chapter 11 bankruptcy case, the debtor, FirstPlus Financial Group, Inc. ("FirstPlus"), filed for bankruptcy after the FBI executed a search warrant on its headquarters and two of its former officers, John Maxwell and William Handley, received grand jury target letters. r. 1559-64; 1655-56; 1663-64. This appeal involves a disputed trustee election that was requested by the appellants, a group suspected of colluding with FirstPlus' former management and led by John Maxwell's brother. R. 119-32. The appellants sought to supplant the appointment of a former United States Attorney, Matthew D. Orwig, whom the United States

Trustee[1] had appointed chapter 11 trustee. R. 1679.

Upon Mr. Orwig's appointment, a group of six creditors styling themselves the "Ad Hoc Creditors Committee" requested a trustee election. R. 172-80. The United States Trustee conducted the election on September 18, 2009 and filed his Report of Election Controversy on September 23, 2009. R. 39. After conducting a hearing at which testimony was presented, the bankruptcy court determined the election was not valid because the creditors who requested the election were not eligible to vote.

A trustee election is not valid if the creditors requesting the election are not eligible to vote. 11 U.S.C. § 702(b). The bankruptcy court's ruling should be affirmed because the creditors requesting the election were disqualified from voting under section 702(a) of the Bankruptcy Code. Because the election was not valid, Mr. Orwig is the permanent chapter 11 trustee. 11 U.S.C. § 702(d).

STATUTORY FRAMEWORK

I. Appointment of a Chapter 11 Trustee by the United States Trustee

At the commencement of a voluntary chapter 11 bankruptcy, the chapter 11 debtor serves as debtor-in-possession. 11 U.S.C. § 1101(1). In certain instances, however, the bankruptcy court may direct the appointment of a chapter 11 trustee. 11 U.S.C. § 1104(a). A trustee appointment may be appropriate when current management has committed fraud in managing the

No. 95-595, at 88 (1977), as reprinted in 1978 U.S.C.C.A.N. 5963, 5966, 6071. The United States Trustee Program therefore acts in the public interest to promote and preserve the efficiency and integrity of the bankruptcy system. Congress has provided that "[t]he United States trustee may raise and may appear and be heard on any issue in any case or proceeding ." 11 U.S.C. § 307. See Thompson v. Greenwood, 507 F.3d 416, 420 n.3 (6th Cir. 2007) (stating "[t]he United States Trustee is an interested party by statute").

debtor's financial affairs or has acted incompetently or otherwise mismanaged the bankruptcy estate. 11 U.S.C. § 1104(a)(1).

If the bankruptcy court finds cause for the appointment of a chapter 11 trustee, the court issues an order directing the United States Trustee to appoint a disinterested person as trustee. 11 U.S.C. § 1104(d). Once a chapter 11 trustee is appointed, the trustee controls property belonging to the bankruptcy estate. See 11 U.S.C. §§ 1101(1), 1106.

II. Procedure for Electing a Chapter 11 Trustee

Creditors who want a different trustee may request a chapter 11 trustee election. 11 U.S.C. § 1104(b)(1). Chapter 11 trustee elections are governed by the same Bankruptcy Code provisions and Rules as those regarding chapter 7 trustee elections. See 11 U.S.C. § 1104(b), which incorporates by reference 11 U.S.C. § 702(a), (b), and (c); see also Fed. R. Bankr. P. 2007.1(b)(2), which incorporates by reference Fed. R. Bankr. P. 2003(b)(3) and 2006. The United States Trustee presides over the election. Fed. R. Bankr. P. 2007.1(b)(2).

A creditor may vote in an election if, at or before the meeting, the creditor has "filed a proof of claim or a writing setting forth facts evidencing a right to vote pursuant to § 702(a) of the Code unless objection is made to the claim or the proof of claim is insufficient on its face." Fed. R. Bankr. P. 2003(b)(3). In addition, a creditor may vote in an election only if that creditor:

> (1) holds an allowable, undisputed, fixed, liquidated, unsecured claim of a kind entitled to distribution under section 726(a)(2), 726(a)(3), 726(a)(4), 752(a), 766(h), or 766(i) of this title;
> (2) does not have an interest materially adverse, other than an equity interest that is not substantial in relation to such creditor's interest as a creditor, to the interest of creditors entitled to such distribution; and

11 U.S.C. § 702(a).

After the election, the United States Trustee files either 1) a report certifying the election or 2) a report of disputed election. 11 U.S.C. § 1104(b)(2)(A); Fed. R. Bankr. P. 2003(d)(2). If the election is disputed, the bankruptcy court resolves the dispute. 11 U.S.C. § 1104(b)(2)(C). The appointed chapter 11 trustee continues to serve as interim trustee until the dispute is resolved. Fed. R. Bankr. P. 2007.1(b)(1).

FACTUAL BACKGROUND

Criminal investigations at FirstPlus

FirstPlus is a publicly traded holding company with a number of wholly owned first-, second-, and third-tier subsidiaries. R. 12; 1317. On May 8, 2008, the FBI executed a search warrant on FirstPlus's headquarters in Irving, Texas and seized its books, records, and computer terminals. R. 1559-64. In the months following the May 2008 seizure, FirstPlus terminated chief executive officer John Maxwell and chief financial officer William Handley. R. 1639. Later Maxwell and Handley each received grand jury target letters in connection with their FirstPlus activities. R. 1655-56; 1663-64.

Matthew Orwig appointed chapter 11 trustee

On June 23, 2009, FirstPlus filed for chapter 11 bankruptcy in the United States Bankruptcy Court for the Northern District of Texas. R. 1313-15. Shortly thereafter, the United States Trustee moved for the appointment of a chapter 11 trustee because of allegations that FirstPlus's prior management had colluded with certain creditors to defraud its shareholders during the period June 2007 through May 2008 through the purchase of subsidiaries. R. 119-29.

FirstPlus agreed to the requested relief, and on July 24, 2009, the bankruptcy court directed the United States Trustee to appoint a chapter 11 trustee. R. 164. The United States Trustee appointed Matthew Orwig ("Orwig"), a former United States Attorney for the Eastern District of Texas. R. 165-66, 171, 665.

Prior to appointing Orwig, the United States Trustee solicited nominations from other interested parties, including William Maxwell, as representative for the appellants who later requested a trustee election. R. 165; 199. Maxwell did not suggest a name.[2] R. 199. George Tarpley, counsel for the debtor-in-possession, nominated Orwig, whom the United States Trustee interviewed prior to appointment. R. 176.

Chapter 11 trustee election requested by insider-led "ad hoc" group

Six creditors who objected to Orwig's selection formed an unofficial, or ad hoc, creditors' committee ("Ad Hoc Creditors' Committee"). R. 172. The creditors were represented by William Maxwell, brother of John Maxwell, the former FirstPlus CEO. R. 172; 1477; 1559-64. The Ad Hoc Creditors' Committee was comprised of the appellants in this case: William Maxwell, P.L.L.C. ("William Maxwell, P.L.L.C."), Seven Hills Management, LLC ("Seven Hills"), LandL Holdings, LLC ("LandL), the Svetlana Pelullo Revocable Deed of Trust dated December 6, 1996 ("Svetlana Pelullo Revocable Deed of Trust"), Michael Cordova ("Cordova"), and Learned Associates of North America, LLC ("Learned Associates"). R. 241; 892. On August 11, 2009, the Ad Hoc Committee objected to Orwig's appointment and requested a trustee election. R. 172-80. In response to this request, the United States Trustee scheduled a special meeting of creditors for the purposes of conducting a trustee election. R. 894. Notice of this September 18, 2009 meeting was served on all creditors on August 25, 2009. R. 894-948.

September 18, 2009 chapter 11 trustee election and proposed trustee

[2] Although the appellants complain about the procedure, the United States Trustee's process for selection of a chapter 11 trustee is not on appeal. Appellants' Brief at 10.

The United States Trustee conducted the chapter 11 election on September 18, 2009. R. 219; 2257. At the start of the meeting, William Maxwell presented a nomination form with the signatures of representatives from the six creditors who formed the “Ad Hoc Creditors’ Committee,” plus two others, ETCG and Woodson Smith Group. R. 241. Another creditor, REFI, appeared at the election through its representative Kevin Smith, a principal of ETCG and Woodson Smith Group. R. 241; 2274-76. ETCG, Woodson Smith Group, REFI and Kevin Smith are not appellants in this appeal.

These creditors nominated Gregory S. Milligan (“Proposed Trustee”), who had served as a chapter 11 trustee in another case, and so had previously qualified under the Bankruptcy Code and met all applicable requirements. R. 221-22; 242-52; 2270. The Proposed Trustee attended the election, represented that he maintained his office in Austin, Texas, and stated that he was disinterested in accordance with Federal Rule of Bankruptcy Procedure 2007.1(b)(3)(B). R.221-22; 2269-70.

Facts concerning the ineligibility of creditors who requested the election

Although the appellants requested a trustee election, the facts reveal that each member of the “Ad Hoc Creditors’ Committee” was either an “insider” (in the case of William Maxwell) or had a disputed claim that the creditor put in dispute by filing an adversary proceeding concerning the validity of its claim (all other appellants). Moreover, the three other creditors who voted with the appellants, ETCG, Woodson Smith Group, and REFI, each filed proofs-of-claim that either failed to state the amount of the claim or failed to allege a claim against FirstPlus.[3] A brief summary is below.

[3] These facts are pertinent to the creditors’ eligibility to vote for a chapter 11 trustee. Under 11 U.S.C. § 702(a)(1), only holders of “undisputed” claims may vote. Under 11 U.S.C. § 702(a)(3),

William Maxwell, P.L.L.C. William Maxwell, P.L.L.C. is a law firm whose sole shareholder is William Maxwell, brother of former FirstPlus CEO and current criminal target John Maxwell. R. 1325; 1477; 1639; 1655. William Maxwell, P.L.L.C. had contracted with FirstPlus on June 7, 2007 to provide legal services, which included giving him "[a]ll legal authority for any matter involving the Corporation." R. 1477; 1545-55; 1552-54. This contract promised William Maxwell $100,000 per month for his services plus compensation for all expenses, including fees incurred from the hiring of other professionals. R. 608, 1548. William Maxwell received $677,640 from FirstPlus in 2007. R. 1477.

William Maxwell, while requesting the election, did not vote because of his role as an insider by virtue of his familial relationship with John Maxwell.[4] R. 2262. Mr. Maxwell's insider status did not, however, deter him from acting on behalf of other creditors and instigating the election. R. 172; 2262.

Learned Associates of North America, LLC Learned Associates filed proof of claim 35-1 averring that FirstPlus owed it $275,000 on a promissory note.[5] R. 996. Learned Associates placed its own claim in dispute, however, by filing an adversary proceeding against FirstPlus seeking a determination of FirstPlus's liability. R. 997. Learned Associates' adversary only non-"insiders" may vote. In addition, under Fed. R. Bankr. P. 2003(b)(3), a creditor may vote "unless objection is made to the claim or the proof of claim is insufficient on its face."

[4] The Bankruptcy Code specifically defines the term "insiders." 11 U.S.C. § 101(31)(B). In instances where a debtor is a corporation, insiders include "relatives of a general partner, director, officer, or person in control of the debtor." 11 U.S.C. § 101(31)(B)(vi).

[5] On September 18, 2009, the day of the election, Learned Associates filed amended proof of claim 35-2 which did not differ substantively from original claim 35-1. R. 227; 2209.

complaint alleged that it owned 750,000 shares of restricted stock in FirstPlus.[6] R. 989. In addition, according to Learned Associates, it filed a state court lawsuit against FirstPlus to collect on this debt and that the matter was still pending as of the bankruptcy filing. R. 999.

On September 17, 2009 Orwig objected to Learned Associates' claim 35-1 because 1) it was not clear that FirstPlus was actually liable on the debt given that Learned Associates had named all FirstPlus's affiliates on the complaint filed in state court; 2) Learned Associates admitted the claim was disputed by virtue of filing an adversary proceeding with the bankruptcy court to determine the validity of its claim; 3) the documents submitted with this claim did not support liability; and 4) the state court matter was still pending. R. 988-92.

Furthermore, on the day before the election, on September 17, 2009, Orwig filed a Schedule F[7] which listed Learned Associates' claim as disputed, contingent, unliquidated, and subject to setoff. R. 1303.

Michael Cordova Cordova's proof of claim 36-1 claimed he was owed $75,000 on a debt arising from the January 2008 sale of an entity called the Premier Group to FirstPlus

[6] This fact is pertinent under 11 U.S.C. § 702(a)(2), which provides that a creditor may not vote in a trustee election if that creditor has "an interest materially adverse" to other creditors.

[7] Debtors have an affirmative duty to file schedules listing their assets and liabilities as well as a statement of financial affairs. 11 U.S.C. § 521(a). Because FirstPlus did not file schedules or statement of financial affairs, Orwig filed a Schedule F on its behalf, and the bankruptcy court relied on this schedule in deciding the issue that is on appeal. R. 6-10. Subsequent to the events surrounding this appeal, Orwig obtained court authority to prepare and file schedules and statement of financial affairs on FirstPlus's behalf since it defaulted on this requirement. See Fed. R. Bankr. P. 1007(k). The latter schedules and statement of financial affairs filed by Orwig are not part of the record on appeal because they were filed after the court issued its order resolving the election dispute. The Schedule F that Orwig filed on September 17, 2009 and upon which the bankruptcy court relied is in the record on appeal at R. 1797-98.

Enterprises, a non-debtor subsidiary.[8] R. 1106; 1108. Like Learned Associates, Michael Cordova placed his own claim in dispute by filing an adversary proceeding against FirstPlus seeking a determination of FirstPlus's liability. R. 1107. The complaint alleges that in January 2008, non-debtor subsidiary FirstPlus Enterprises, Inc. had executed two promissory notes in favor of Cordova in exchange for the purchase of a subsidiary company and that FirstPlus had guaranteed the debt. R. 1108. The complaint also states that Cordova filed a state court lawsuit against FirstPlus to collect on the debt but that the matter was still pending as of the date of the bankruptcy filing. R. 1109; 1116.

Orwig objected to claim 36-1 because 1) it was not clear that FirstPlus was actually liable on the debt given that Cordova named all of FirstPlus's affiliates on the complaint filed in state court; 2) Cordova admitted the claim was disputed by virtue of filing an adversary proceeding with the bankruptcy court to determine the validity of its claim; 3) the documents submitted with this claim did not support liability; and 4) FirstPlus responded to the state court lawsuit by denying the allegations and raising various affirmative defenses. R. 1098-1102.

In addition, Orwig listed Cordova's claim as disputed, contingent, unliquidated, and subject to set off on Schedule F. R. 1302.

Seven Hills Management, LLC Following the same pattern as other members of the "Ad Hoc Creditors' Committee," Seven Hills' claim was placed in dispute by Seven Hills itself. Its allegations are similar to Michael Cordova's. Seven Hills[9] filed proof of claim 37-1 for [8] On September 18, 2009, the date of the election, Cordova filed amended claim 36-2 which did not differ substantively from the original proof of claim. R. 227; 2210.

[9] On June 15, 2007, William Maxwell P.L.L.C. retained Seven Hills as a consultant for FirstPlus. R. 1538. Per their agreement, Seven Hills would receive $100,000 per month plus reimbursement for all expenses. R. 1539-40. Seven Hills has not filed a proof of claim for unpaid consultant fees.

$275,000 based on an alleged default on promissory notes for the sale of Premier Group to FirstPlus Enterprises, a non-debtor subsidiary.[10] R. 2210. Seven Hills placed its claim in dispute by filing an adversary proceeding against FirstPlus seeking a determination of FirstPlus's liability. R. 1049. The complaint alleges that in January 2008, non-debtor subsidiary FirstPlus Enterprises, Inc. executed two promissory notes in favor of Seven Hills in exchange for the purchase of a subsidiary company and that FirstPlus had guaranteed the debt. R. 1050. Seven Hills Management also received, as part of this transaction, 750,000 shares of restricted stock in FirstPlus.[11] R. 2267. The complaint also states that Seven Hills had filed a complaint for breach of contract, fraud, and fraudulent conveyance in Pennsylvania state court on December 16, 2008 and that the matter was still pending as of the date of the bankruptcy filing. R. 1051.

As with the others, Orwig objected to claim 37-1 because 1) Seven Hills admitted the claim was disputed by virtue of it having filed adversary proceeding number 09-03295 against FirstPlus in bankruptcy court; 2) the documents attached to the complaint evidence only $242,375 in claims and not $275,000; 3) it was not clear that FirstPlus was actually liable on the debt given that Seven Hills had named all of FirstPlus' affiliates on the complaint filed in state court; and 4) FirstPlus responded to the state court lawsuit by denying the allegations and raising various affirmative defenses. R. 1039-1097.

On Schedule F, Orwig listed $233,625 owed to Seven Hills as contingent, unliquidated, disputed, and subject to set off. R. 1303.

Svetlana Pelullo Revocable Deed of Trust The identical pattern continued with the

[10] On September 18, 2009, Seven Hills filed amended claim 37-2, which appears identical to claim 37-1. R. 228; 2210.

[11] This fact is pertinent under 11 U.S.C. § 702(a)(2), which provides that a creditor may not vote in a trustee election if that creditor has "an interest materially adverse" to other creditors.

Svetlana Pelullo Revocable Deed of Trust's claim. The Deed of Trust filed proof of claim 108-1 for a $300,000 secured claim based on an alleged default on promissory notes.[12] R. 2230. Placing its own claim in dispute, the Deed of Trust filed adversary proceeding 09-3288 against FirstPlus seeking a determination of its debt. R. 1194. The complaint alleges that the Svetlana Pelullo Revocable Deed of Trust loaned $260,000 to FirstPlus and its subsidiaries through three separate promissory notes signed March 12-27, 2008. R. 1199. The complaint further alleges that the Svetlana Pelullo Revocable Deed of Trust filed a state court lawsuit against FirstPlus to collect on its debt and that this matter was pending at the time of the bankruptcy. R. 1195.

Orwig objected to claim 108-1 because 1) the Svetlana Pelullo Revocable Deed of Trust admitted the claim was disputed by virtue of it having filed adversary proceeding number 09-03295; 2) it was not clear that FirstPlus was actually liable on the debt given that the Deed of Trust named all of FirstPlus's affiliates on the complaint filed in state court; and 3) FirstPlus responded to the state court lawsuit by denying the allegations and raising various affirmative defenses. R. 1186-1190.

On Schedule F, Orwig listed the Deed of Trust's claim as $264,550 that was contingent, unliquidated, disputed, and subject to set off. R. 1303.

LandL Holdings, LLC Like other members of the "Ad Hoc Creditors' Committee," LandL Holdings put its own claims in dispute by filing adversary proceedings. R. 1151; 1166. In addition, LandL claimed to be a secured creditor.[13] R. 1151; 1166. LandL filed three separate original proofs of claim: claim 34-1 for a $128,475 secured claim on a final judgment arising from non-payment of rent; claim 38-1 for a $224,908 secured claim on a final judgment arising from non-payment of rent; and claim 59-1 for a $365,270 secured claim on a final judgment. R.1150; 1165; 1180; 2209; 2210; 2216. On September 18, 2009, the day of the election, LandL filed three amended proofs of claims; each claim amount remained the same except the debts were listed as unsecured instead of secured. R. 229-230; 2209; 2210; 2216.

[12] On September 18, 2009, the day of the election, the Svetlana Pelullo Revocable Deed of Trust filed amended claim 108-2 showing an unsecured claim for $300,000 on a promissory note. R. 223; 2230.

LandL filed two separate adversary complaints against FirstPlus for a determination of liability on its claims. R. 1151; R. 1166. In both complaints, LandL alleged, inter alia, that LandL filed a lawsuit in Texas state court against FirstPlus for breach of contract, and the lawsuit remained open with regards to FirstPlus as of the date the bankruptcy was filed. R. 1152; R. 1166-67. In addition, LandL alleged that it recovered judgment against FirstPlus in Pennsylvania state court for $224,908.02, but in support of this allegation LandL attached a Complaint in Confession of Judgment against a non-debtor subsidiary, FirstPlus Facility Services Company, LLC. R. 1169; 1181.

Orwig objected to LandL's three original proofs of claim on September 17, 2009 because 1) all three claims arise from the same facts and circumstances surrounding the alleged failure of a non-debtor subsidiary to pay rent; 2) the claims on their face are subject to litigation currently pending in Pennsylvania state court and before the bankruptcy court; 3) the claim amounts are not established because LandL filed three claims for the same liability in three amounts; and 4) the claims are duplicative. R. 1142-46.

Orwig listed LandL Holdings as a disputed, contingent, and unliquidated creditor on Schedule F. R. 1302.

ETCG As noted above, ETCG is one of three creditors who was not part of the "Ad Hoc Creditors' Committee" (and is not an appellant) but voted with the ad hoc group at the trustee election. ETCG filed a proof of claim that was not against FirstPlus. R. 230-1; 241. On September 17, 2009, the day before the election, ETCG filed proof of claim 106-1, asserting an unsecured debt of $85,422.16 in connection with a sublease agreement with Rutgers Investment Group, a non-debtor subsidiary of FirstPlus. R. 1953-65; 305. Nothing in ETCG's proof of claim indicated that debtor FirstPlus was liable on the claimed debt. ETCG's debt is not listed on Schedule F. R. 1300-03.

Woodson Smith Group Woodson Smith Group is another non-member of the "Ad Hoc Creditors' Committee" (and non-appellant) who voted with that group at the trustee election. R. 231; 241. Woodson Smith filed two proofs of claim on September 17, 2009, neither of which documented the value of the alleged claim or a connection to FirstPlus. R. 1924; 1932; 2229. Claim 103-1 avers a $375,000 unsecured debt for "good will and work in progress," but no documentation of the claimed amount or its connection (if any) to FirstPlus were attached. R. 1924, 2228. Claim 104-1, which claims a fully secured claim of $250,000 for furnishings/computer hardware/décor/art, is accompanied by an inventory list that contains no values of any kind. R. 1932-35; 2228-29. Neither of Woodson Smith's debts is listed on Schedule F. R. 1300-03.

REFI REFI filed two proofs of claim on September 17, 2009. The first, claim 102-1, avers a $375,000 unsecured debt for "good will and work in progress." R. 1917; 2228. No writings documenting the claimed amount were attached. The second, claim 105-1, avers a $250,000 secured debt for furnishings/computer hardware/décor/art. R. 1937-47; 2229. The attached inventory lists equipment but does not indicate value amounts. R. 1944-46. REFI's debts were not listed on Schedule F. R. 1300-03.

Orwig's oral objections at the election

Orwig's representatives objected both to the election request and the requesting creditors' claims at the election. R. 2285, 2303-04. Specially, Orwig's attorney Peter Franklin stated that the trustee objected to the Ad Hoc Committee's members' claims on the basis that they already "were disputed on numerous grounds...they are insiders either by relationship or control and other bases." R. 2303. With regard to the claims "that we were not served prior to today," Mr. Franklin stated that "as to the claims that we were not served prior to today we feel and will probably file objections to many of them." R. 2304.

United States Trustee unable to certify election

The United States Trustee could not certify the election because of issues regarding 1) the eligibility of creditors to either request or vote in this election; 2) the calculation of the universe of claims permitted to vote under § 702(a)(1); and 3) the notation on the record that the election was disputed. 11 U.S.C. § 702(a) and (b). R. 214. The United States Trustee filed his Report of Election Controversy on September 23, 2009. R. 214-60.

October 9, 2009 election resolution hearing

Members of the "Ad Hoc Creditors' Committee" moved for a resolution of the election dispute under 11 U.S.C. § 1104(b)(2)(C). R. 264-273. The bankruptcy court heard the creditors' motions to resolve the election controversy on October 9, 2009. R. 911.

At the hearing, insider William Maxwell represented both himself and the "Ad Hoc Creditors Committee." R. 704-05. Maxwell called his brother, former FirstPlus CEO and criminal target John Maxwell, to the stand, who testified that the Ad Hoc Committee members' claims were valid. R. 752; 772. No documents supporting these claims, beyond those which had already been filed with the bankruptcy court, were entered into evidence.

As for the claims of ETCG, the Woodson Smith Group, and REFI, William Maxwell introduced testimony from two witnesses, Kevin Smith and Reginald Anderson, who testified that their dealings were with Jack Roubinek, the chief executive officer of non-debtor subsidiary Rutgers Investment Group, Inc. R. 727; 729-30; 742-45. Both witnesses testified that they had few documents supporting their claims because their papers had been seized from FirstPlus's offices by the FBI in May 2008. R. 732; 746. Kevin Smith testified that his claims for equipment and inventory were secured. R. 740.

The bankruptcy court holds that the trustee election was invalid

On October 20, 2009, the bankruptcy court entered its Order on Motions for Resolution of Election Dispute holding that the election was invalid and that Matthew Orwig would remain as chapter 11 trustee. R. 6-10. The bankruptcy court's Order held that the first step to resolve the election dispute was to determine the universe of voting creditors under 11 U.S.C. § 702(b). R. 7. The second step is to determine whether eligible creditors holding at least 20% of that amount requested the election. 11 U.S.C. § 702(b). R. 7.

Relying on the approach advocated in In re Michelex Ltd., 195 B.R. 993, 1008 (Bankr. W.D. Mich. 1996), the court used the Debtor's schedules, as modified by eligible proofs of claim on file at the time of the election, to calculate the universe of claims eligible to vote. R. 7-8. The court thus determined that the total universe of claims eligible to vote was $8,810,672.53. R. 8. In calculating this figure, the court excluded claims 1) listed on Schedule F as contingent, unliquidated, or disputed and 2) claims listed on the register which were either duplicative of those listed on F, priority claims, insider claims, and claims objected to by the trustee. The court therefore determined that the amount of claims necessary to request an election was $1,762,134.50 ($8,810,673.53 x 0.20). R. 8.

The court then reviewed the claims of all creditors requesting the election and determined that none was eligible to vote under 11 U.S.C. § 702(a). R. 8-10. Going through each of the requesting creditors claims:

> Learned Associates's claim had been objected to and was listed on Schedule F as disputed, contingent, and unliquidated; Learned Associates also holds $750,000 shares of restricted stock in FirstPlus. R. 8.
> Cordova's claim had been objected to and was listed on Schedule F as disputed, contingent, and unliquidated. R. 9.
>
> Seven Hills's claim had been objected to and was listed on Schedule F as disputed, contingent, and unliquidated; Seven Hills also holds $750,000 shares of restricted stock in FirstPlus. R. 9
> Svetlana Pelullo Irrevocable Deed of Trust's claim had been objected to and was listed on Schedule F as disputed, contingent, and unliquidated. R. 9.
>
> LandL had three claims against which objections were pending, and the claims have been listed on Schedule F as disputed, contingent, and unliquidated. R. 9.
> Woodson Smith Group, REFI, and ETCG's claims had been objected to by the trustee for lack of documentation and, in the case of ETCG, for lack of evidence or documentation that FirstPlus was responsible for a lease with one of its subsidiaries. R. 10.

The court thus concluded that the election contest should be resolved in Orwig's favor. R. 10. In the alternative, the court found that even if the election had been properly requested, the "only eligible votes cast were for Orwig and the election would have been certified in his favor."

R. 10.[14] The court did not reach the issue of whether the election was sought in bad faith because it had other grounds for finding that the election was not valid.

Ad hoc creditors committee requests amendment of findings of fact

Within ten days of the court's order, the six members of the Ad Hoc Creditors Committee (both individually and collectively) filed their Request for or Alternatively Motion for Amended Findings of Fact and Conclusions of Law to Docket No. 238 and Subject There to Notice of Appeal. R. 518-21. On November 19, 2009, the bankruptcy court denied the creditors' motion to alter or amend the findings of fact, holding that "[a]fter a review of the Motion, the Court finds that the Motion fails to show an error of law, mistake of fact, or newly discovered evidence." R. 63-64.

SUMMARY OF THE ARGUMENT

To have a valid trustee election, the creditors who vote must meet certain eligibility requirements set forth in 11 U.S.C. § 702(a). See 11 U.S.C. § 702(a) and (b). In this case, the bankruptcy court's order should be affirmed because none of the creditors requesting the election was eligible to do so.

Creditors whose claims are disputed may not vote. 11 U.S.C. § 702(a)(1). The claims of the "Ad Hoc Creditors' Committee" (Learned Associates, Michael Cordova, Seven Hills Management, the Svetlana Pelullo Irrevocable Deed of Trust, and LandL Holdings) all put their own claims in dispute by filing adversary proceedings about the validity of their claims. In addition, written objections were filed against the claims of each of these parties. Moreover, the chapter 11 trustee's representative orally objected to all the requesting creditors' claims at the

In addition, creditors whose claims are secured or are materially adverse to those of other creditors may not vote. 11 U.S.C. § 702(a)(1) and (2). Learned Associates and Seven Hills Management are shareholders of FirstPlus.

As for the three entities who were not part of the "Ad Hoc Creditors' Committee" (ETCG, Woodson Smith Group, and REFI), creditors whose claims are insufficient on their face may not vote. Fed. R. Bankr. P. 2003(b)(3). ETCG, Woodson Smith Group, and REFI held claims either against separate non-debtor entities or for inventories for which no dollar amounts had been listed. In addition, creditors whose claims are not fixed or liquidated may not vote. 11 U.S.C. § 702(a)(1). Woodson Smith Group and REFI held claims which were unfixed or unliquidated because they were for business damages claims which had not been adjudicated by a court.

Objections by an interim chapter 11 trustee are more than sufficient to create a disputed claim for purposes of a trustee election. Chapter 11 trustees have an affirmative duty to investigate claims filed against the estate and, if necessary, to object to these claims.

ARGUMENT

I. The bankruptcy court did not abuse its discretion when it held that the chapter 11 trustee election was invalid because the creditors requesting the election were not eligible to vote under 11 U.S.C. § 702(a).

A. Introduction.

The Bankruptcy Code and Rules impose specific eligibility requirements on creditors to both request and vote in a trustee election. See 11 U.S.C. § 702.[15] Creditors may vote only if they 1) hold allowable, undisputed, fixed, liquidated, and unsecured claims; 2) do not have interests materially adverse (other than an unsubstantial equity interest) in relation to the interest of creditors entitled to such a distribution; and 3) are not insiders. 11 U.S.C. § 702(a). Only creditors who are eligible to vote may request an election. 11 U.S.C. § 702(b). Thus an analysis of whether a creditor is eligible to request an election turns on whether that same creditor is eligible to vote under 11 U.S.C. § 702(a).

[15] Chapter 11trustee elections, which are governed by section 1104(b) of the Bankruptcy Code and Federal Rule of Bankruptcy Procedure 2007.1(b), incorporate section 702 of the Bankruptcy

These eligibility requirements are specific because trustee elections present opportunities for abuse by creditors seeking to choose their opponent. In re Williams, 277 B.R. 114, 119-20 (Bankr. C.D. Cal. 2002). In Williams, the court observed that "[t]he law does not sanction having [the creditor] choose her opponent on appeal any more than it allows her to select debtor's attorney." 277 B.R. at 119. Thus the eligibility requirements of section 702(a) are safeguards against creditors who seek an unfair advantage.

B. Every creditor who requested the trustee election has a disputed claim and is therefore ineligible under 11 U.S.C. § 702(a).

The bankruptcy court did not abuse its discretion in concluding that the election contest should be resolved in favor of Mr. Orwig remaining as chapter 11 trustee. As set forth in the facts above, every single creditor who requested the election held a disputed claim— and that rendered them all ineligible to vote.

1. Creditors who placed their own claims in dispute were ineligible to vote.

Code and Federal Rule of Bankruptcy Procedure 2003(b), which set out chapter 7 trustee elections procedures. 11 U.S.C.§§ 702, 1104; Fed. R. Bankr. P. 2003(b) and 2007.1(b). The issues presented in this appeal therefore turn primarily on section 702 and Federal Rule of Bankruptcy Procedure 2003(b). Because of the relative rarity of chapter 11 trustee elections, most of the case law regarding trustee elections arise from chapter 7 cases. The applicable Bankruptcy Code and Rule sections are included in Appendix 1 .

To begin with, five out of the six members of the "Ad Hoc Creditors' Committee" filed adversary complaints that put their own claims in dispute.[16] R. 997 (Learned Associates); R. 1107 (Michael Cordova); R. 1049 (Seven Hills Management); R. 1194 (Svetlana Pelullo Revocable Deed of Trust); R. 1151; 1166 (LandL Holdings). In each case, the creditor filed a complaint seeking a determination of the validity of its claim. Thus, within the plain language of 11 U.S.C. § 702(a)(1), which requires a creditor to have an "undisputed" claim before it may vote in a trustee election, none of the parties who made their own claims the subject of disputed adversary proceedings was eligible to vote.

Moreover, Orwig, as trustee, stepped into FirstPlus's shoes in the adversaries filed by the members of the "Ad Hoc Creditors' Committee." These creditors, by seeking a trustee election, should not be permitted to gain an unfair advantage by choosing their opponent. See In re Williams, 277 B.R. 114, 119-20 (Bankr. C.D. Cal. 2002).

For these reasons, this Court should find that the bankruptcy court did not abuse its discretion in holding the members of the "Ad Hoc Creditors' Committee" had disputed claims that rendered them ineligible to vote in the trustee election.

2. All of the creditors who requested the election were ineligible to vote because their claims had been objected to.

In addition to the creditors who are ineligible for placing their own claims in dispute, all of the creditors who attempted to vote at the trustee election were ineligible because objections were lodged as to all of their claims. A claim is considered disputed after a party objects. A creditor may neither request nor vote in an election under section 702(a) if an objection has been made to its proof of claim. Fed. R. Bankr. P. 2003(b)(3). See also In re DB Drilling, Inc., 73

B.R. 953, 955 (Bankr. N.D. Tex. 1987) (citing In re Flexible Conveyor Co., 156 F. Supp. 164 (N.D. Ohio 1975)).

If a party has objected to a claim for voting purposes and the election is disputed, the bankruptcy court need not make a final adjudication on the validity of that claim; instead, the bankruptcy court need only find that the objection is not frivolous. In re Williams, 277 B.R. 114, 120 (Bankr. C.D. Cal. 2002). An objection need only "state the legal or factual basis for the objection." In re QMECT, Inc., 2007 WL 219942, *4, No. 04-41044 (Bankr. N.D. Cal. Jan. 25, 2007) (objection valid even though it was filed on the day of the election and no notice was served on claimants until after the meeting).

In addition, given the need to conduct and resolve trustee elections as expeditiously as possible, objections to a proof of claim for purposes of a trustee election may be less formal and need not be in writing to be valid. QMECT, 2007 WL 219942 at *4 ("[t]he drafters of the rule obviously concluded that the need to conduct a trustee election promptly, if at all, made it necessary to dispense with more customary procedural protections"). Because claims are often not filed or presented until the meeting of creditors, a written objection may not be necessary for the claim to be deemed disputed, provided an oral objection is made to the claim at the meeting prior to voting. See, e.g., In re Sforza, 174 B.R. 656, 658 (Bankr. D. Mass. 1994) (holding that debtor's attorney's statement at meeting of creditors that creditors' claim was subject to counterclaim in state court litigation rendered claim disputed for voting purposes); In re Valentine, 296 B.R. 384, 387 (Bankr. E.D. Va. 2001) (oral objection sufficient basis for determination that creditor's claim disputed given that the objection was not frivolous, claim listed as disputed on the schedules, and the debtor later filed a written objection to the claim).

Members of the "Ad Hoc Creditors' Committee" Learned Associates, Michael Cordova, Seven Hills Management, Svetlana Pelullo Revocable Deed of Trust, and LandL Holdings were not eligible to request the election because — in addition to their self-imposed adversary proceedings calling their claims into dispute — Orwig objected to their claims in writing prior to the election.[17] R. 988 (Learned Associates); 1039 (Seven Hills); 1098 (Cordova); 1142 (LandL); 1186 (Trust). In each instance, the objections stated legal or factual bases for why the claim should be disallowed. R. 988 (Learned Associates); 1039 (Seven Hills); 1098 (Cordova); 1142 (LandL); 1186 (Trust). Furthermore, Orwig orally objected to these claims at the trustee election hearing on the grounds that they were either insiders or otherwise exercised control over the debtor. R. 2203-04; 2285; 2303.

As for the three other creditors who requested a trustee election, Orwig orally objected to the claims of ETCG, Woodson Smith Group, and REFI at the election proceeding. R. 2285; 2304. Notably, these creditors had filed their proofs of claim only the day before the election, which did not give Orwig much time to review the claims and upload an objection. R. 2229 (ETCG claim 106); 2228 (Woodson Smith Group claim 103); 2228-29 (Woodson Smith Group claim 104); 2228 (REFI claim 102); 2229 (REFI claim 105).

Given the undisputed factual record of Orwig's objections, the bankruptcy court did not abuse its discretion in concluding that all of the creditors requesting the election were ineligible to vote in the election because their claims were objected to. R. 8-10.

3. Non-frivolous objections by the interim chapter 11 trustee disqualify a creditor from voting.

The Appellants argue that Orwig has no standing to object to claims and any such

[17] The bankruptcy court also looked to Orwig's Schedule F in its analysis as to whether the claims were disputed. R. 7-10. Schedule F is arguably duplicative to the analysis because, as established above, Orwig objected to all claims either in writing prior to the election, orally at the election, or both.

objections are made in bad faith. Appellants' Brief at 15. However, an interim trustee "is the optimal party to object to a creditor's claim for voting purposes since he is the representative of the estate." In re Poage, 92 B.R. 659, 663 (Bankr. N.D. Tex. 1988).[18] Chapter 11 trustees have an affirmative duty to "examine proofs of claims and object to the allowance of any claim that is improper." 11 U.S.C. §§ 1106(a)(1) and 704(a)(5). Chapter 11 trustees are also charged with investigating the acts and conduct of the debtor on any matter relevant to the bankruptcy case. 11 U.S.C. § 1106(a)(3). A chapter 11 trustee therefore not only has a duty to object to improper proofs of claim, but, given this investigative duty, may be the only party with the necessary information to object.

The majority of courts hold that an interim trustee has standing to object to a creditor's right to vote in an election.[19] In re Poage, 92 B.R. 659, 663 (Bankr. N.D. Tex. 1988); In re Amherst Technologies, LLC, 335 B.R. 502, 511 (Bankr. D.N.H. 2006); In re Lindell Drop Forge Co., 111 B.R. 137, 141 (Bankr. W.D. Mich. 1990); In re Metro Shippers, Inc., 63 B.R. 593, 598 (Bankr. E.D. Pa. 1986). Judge Felsenthal reasoned in In re Poage that interim trustees have standing to object to a creditor's right to participate in a trustee election given that 1) neither section 702(a) of the Bankruptcy Code nor Bankruptcy Rule 2003(b)(3) expressly prohibit interim trustees from objecting and 2) the interim trustee is the party best positioned to lodge such objections given his unique role as representative of the estate. Poage, 92 B.R. at 663.

[18] Poage was decided prior to the 1991 amendments to Federal Rule of Bankruptcy Procedure 2003(b)(3) but these amendments did not affect the legal principal cited herein.

[19] Only one court has held that an interim trustee does not have standing to challenge a creditor's right to vote in an election, but that decision has not been adopted by others. In re G.I.C. Gov't Sec., Inc., 56 B.R. 105, 108 (Bankr. M.D. Fla. 1985). In G.I.C., the bankruptcy court provided no reason for its finding that the interim trustee had no standing to challenge the election. Id. Courts which have examined G.I.C. have concluded this case was decided incorrectly. See In re New York Produce American & Korean Auction Corp., 1990 WL 129197 at *3, No. 89-8550 (S.D.N.Y. August 31, 1990); In re NNLC Corp., 96 B.R. 7, 9 (Bankr. D. Conn. 1989); In re Poage, 92 B.R. 659, 663 (Bankr. N.D. Tex. 1988); In re Metro Shippers, Inc., 63 B.R. 593, 598 (Bankr. E.D. Pa. 1986).

While, in theory, the potential exists for an unscrupulous interim trustee to seek to advance his own interests in an election by objecting to a creditor's right to vote, any concern about such a circumstance "can be easily addressed by the courts." In re Sandhurt Sec., Inc., 96 B.R. 451, 457 (Bankr. S.D.N.Y. 1989). In this case, the bankruptcy court did not cite any cause for concern about Mr. Orwig's motives. R. 6-10. Neither should this Court find any cause for concern about Mr. Orwig's standing or bona fides in objecting.

4. Orwig's objections were valid.

Finally, the appellants argue that Orwig's written objections are not valid because they had amended their proofs of claim the day of the election. This Court should reject this argument because the amended claims filed by Learned Associates, Michael Cordova, and Seven Hills Management did not differ substantively from the original proofs of claim. R. 227 (Learned); R. 227 (Cordova); R. 228 (Seven Hills). Moreover, the amended proofs of claim for the Svetlana Pelullo Revocable Deed of Trust and LandL Holdings differed only in that the original claims filed by each indicated that these creditors held secured claims; the amended claims asserted that these creditors were wholly unsecured. R. 223 (Svetlana Pelullo); R. 229-230 (LandL).[20] Orwig should not be penalized for the manner and form of his objection to these late-amended claims. If creditors may obtain standing to request an election by filing a proof of claim immediately before the election, then parties should not be penalized for not having enough time to investigate the validity of that claim. QMECT, 2007 WL 219942, at *4, No. 04-41044 Bankr. N.D. Cal. Jan. 25, 2007).

Furthermore, Orwig's written objections to the original proofs of claim were still applicable to the amended proofs of claims. The filing of an objection to a proof of claim initiates a contested matter, thereby putting all parties on notice that litigation is required to resolve the objection. Internal Revenue Service v. Taylor (In re Taylor), 132 F.3d 256, 261 (5th Cir. 1998); see also Fed. R. Bankr. P. 9014. The Fifth Circuit has held that creditors should not be permitted to amend their claims to circumvent bar dates. Highlands Ins. Co., Inc. v. Alliance Operating Corp. (In re Alliance Operating Corp.), 60 F.3d 1174, 1175 (5th Cir. 1995). The same reasoning applies to claim amendments filed to circumvent written objections for purposes of voting in an election, particularly in those instances where the creditors have amended their claims the same date as the election.

For all of these reasons, the bankruptcy court did not abuse its discretion in concluding that the trustee election dispute should be resolved in favor of Mr. Orwig because all of the creditors who requested the election were ineligible because their claims had been objected to.

C. The bankruptcy court did not abuse its discretion in holding Learned Associates and Seven Hills Management were disqualified from voting because they held stock in FirstPlus.

A creditor is disqualified from voting if the creditor holds a claim which is materially adverse to other creditors entitled to such distribution. 11 U.S.C. § 702(a)(2). A creditor holding an equity interest that is insubstantial in relation to that creditor's interest as a creditor is not disqualified from voting. 11 U.S.C. § 702(a)(2).

While "materially adverse" is not defined in the Bankruptcy Code, the legislative history reveals this requirement encompasses a conflict of interest rule. In re NNLC Corp., 96 B.R. 7, 10 (Bankr. D. Conn. 1989*)* *(*citing H.R. Rep. No. 595, 95th Cong., 1st Sess. 378 (1977)). An equity holder's interests conflict with an unsecured creditor's because equity cannot receive a distribution until all other creditors, including unsecured creditors, have been satisfied.

The bankruptcy court did not abuse its discretion in concluding that Learned Associates and Seven Hills Management were disqualified from voting because each creditor — by its own admission — holds 750,000 shares of restricted stock in FirstPlus. R. 998 (Learned); R. 2267 (Seven Hills). While the Appellants argue that these creditors' equity interest is insubstantial compared with their claims, no evidence was presented at the election dispute hearing documenting that this equity interest was insubstantial compared with their unsecured claims. Accordingly, there is no basis in the record to find that the bankruptcy court abused its discretion. In addition, even if Learned Associates and Seven Hills could establish that their equity interests are insubstantial, their votes in the trustee election were still barred because their claims were objected to and disputed, as explained above.

D. The bankruptcy court did not abuse its discretion by concluding that creditors ETCG, Woodson Smith Group and REFI were barred from requesting or voting in a trustee election in view of the trustee's objection that their claims lacked documentation.

The bankruptcy court did not abuse its discretion in observing that creditors ETCG, Woodson Smith and REFI's claims had been objected to for lack of documentation. R. 10. Indeed, even if the existence of Orwig's non-frivolous objection alone were not enough to find these creditors ineligible, the bankruptcy court easily could have found the objection was well taken under the facts and law. A creditor is disqualified from voting if the proof of claim is insufficient on its face. Fed. R. Bankr. P. 2003(b)(3); see also Cal. State Bd. of Equalization v. Off'l Unsecured Creditors' Comm. (In re Fidelity Holding Co., Ltd.), 837 F.2d 696, 698 (5th Cir. 1988) (proof of claim which is insufficient on its face not given prima facie validity). For example, a proof of claim may be insufficient on its face if it does not substantially comply with the Official Bankruptcy Forms. See Fed. R. Bankr. P. 3001(a); In re DB Drilling, Inc., 73 B.R. 953, 955 (Bankr. N.D. Tex. 1987). Instruction 7 for Official Form 10 provides that a creditor filing a proof of claim form must provide "redacted copies documenting the existence of the debt and of any lien securing the debt." A claim which does have an attached writing cannot vote or request a trustee election. See Fed. R. Bankr. P. 2003(b)(3); In re Lindell Drop Forge Co., 111 B.R. 137, 142 (Bankr. W.D. Mich. 1990) (union disqualified from voting because proof of claim did not indicate how estimated amounts owed were calculated).

Moreover, creditors holding unfixed and unliquidated claims may not vote in a trustee election. A debt is liquid if "the amount due and the date on which it was due are fixed or certain, or when they are ascertainable by reference to (1) an agreement or (2) a simple mathematical formula." In re Poage, 92 B.R. 659, 665 (Bankr. N.D. Tex. 1988); see also In re Klein, 110 B.R. 862, 874 (Bankr. N.D. Ill. 1990), rev'd in part on other grounds, 119 B.R. 971 (N.D. Ill. 1990) (claimants with nebulous or undefined claims should not be permitted to participate).

Woodson Smith Group's claim 103 and REFI's claim 102 both averred unsecured claims of $375,000 each for "goodwill and work in progress." R. 1924; 1917. However, these claims have not been fixed or liquidated. Neither indicate how Woodson Smith or REFI calculated damages for loss of goodwill and work in progress. Instead, the $375,000 amount appears to be an arbitrary value assigned to a possible cause of action against FirstPlus. A claim based on fraud or tort cannot be fixed and liquidated until the amount has been fixed by judicial award. Denham v. Shellman Grain Elevator, Inc. (In re Denham), 444 F.2d 1376, 1380 (5th Cir. 1971). Therefore Woodson Smith and REFI were ineligible to request the election, and therefore, even if the bankruptcy court had not found them ineligible because their claims were objected to, these creditors were ineligible to vote because their claims were not fixed or liquidated.

In addition, ETCG and Woodson Smith asserted claims that were insufficient on their face. Claim 106 filed by ETCG was insufficient on its face because its attachments did not document the existence of a debt; instead, they showed ETCG had a sublease agreement with a separate legal entity, a non-debtor subsidiary. R. 1953-65. While the documents attached to ETCG's proof of claim 106 referred to a debt between ETCG and Rutgers Investment Group, Inc., nothing in the documents indicates that FirstPlus is liable on this debt. R. 1952-65. Likewise, Woodson Smith Group's claim 103 and REFI's claim 102 should have been disallowed because neither claim has papers attached documenting the debt. R. 1917; 1924.

For these reasons, the bankruptcy court did not abuse its discretion in concluding that ETCG, Woodson Smith, and REFI were ineligible to vote in the trustee election.

CONCLUSION

The election was not valid because none of the creditors requesting the election was eligible to vote. 11 U.S.C. § 702(b); see also Appendix 2 (Summary of Creditors Requesting the Election and Bases for Ineligibility). Because the election was not valid, Orwig became the permanent trustee by virtue of his having been appointed by the United States Trustee. 11 U.S.C. § 702(d). See Berg v. Esposito (In re Oxborrow), 913 F.2d 751, 754 (9th Cir. 1990); In re Ft. Worth Campbell & Assoc., Inc., 182 B.R. 748, 750 (Bankr. N.D. Tex. 1995). Therefore Orwig did not need any election votes to become trustee.

For all of the foregoing these reasons, the United States Trustee respectfully asks this Court to affirm the order entered by the bankruptcy court below.

BRIEF OF APPELLEE UNITED STATES TRUSTEE

STATEMENT OF JURISDICTION

The district court had jurisdiction over this case under 28 U.S.C. 1334(a). On July 16, 1998, appellant J.C. Bradford & Co. timely filed a notice of appeal, A926,[1] from the district court's June 26, 1998 final order, A925, denying Bradford's request that the bankruptcy estate be ordered to pay Bradford's legal fees. This Court has jurisdiction over this appeal under 28 U.S.C. 158(d).

STATEMENT OF THE ISSUE

Whether sections 503(b)(3)(F) and 503(b)(4) of the Bankruptcy Code authorize a member of a creditors committee to tax the bankruptcy estate for the fees its personal lawyer charges it for performing committee-related work when that lawyer has not been appointed by the committee or approved by the court, either to represent the committee or to perform services for it, pursuant to section 1103(a) of the Code?

STATEMENT OF THE CASE AND STATEMENT OF THE FACTS

A. Nature of the Case.

Bradford challenges the denial of its request, filed pursuant to section 503(b)(4) of the Bankruptcy Code, that the bankruptcy estate in this chapter 11 case pay Bradford for fees Bradford owes its personal counsel. The district court held Bradford's claim was barred as a matter of law. This appeal followed.

B. Factual Background and Proceedings Below.

First Merchants Acceptance Corporation (FMAC) purchases loans that automobile dealers make to customers who acquire pre-owned automobiles. A85; A309. Bradford is one of FMAC's general unsecured creditors. A273. Bradford's claims arise from notes it holds that FMAC issued in 1995 and 1996. A286. On June 30, 1997, LaSalle National Bank, the trustee for the notes, notified the noteholders that the 1996 notes were in default. A311-314. At least as early as July 8, 1997, Bradford, through its counsel, Lawrence R. Ahern, III, initiated efforts to minimize any losses Bradford might realize from FMAC's default.[2/] A315-317.

On July 11, 1997, FMAC filed a voluntary petition in the United States Bankruptcy Court for the District of Delaware under the debt reorganization provisions of chapter 11 of the Bankruptcy Code. A2; A69-82. On July 14, 1997, the FMAC case was assigned to the Honorable Joseph J. Farnan Jr., Chief Judge for the United States District Court for the District of Delaware. A4.

Mr. Ahern is now a member of Gullett, Sanford, Robinson & Martin, PLLC. Appellant's brief at 30. For ease of reference, we refer to Mr. Ahern when discussing Bradford's counsel, as most of the fees at issue in this appeal were incurred by Bradford for work he performed. A426.

Trustee to appoint a committee of creditors holding unsecured claims in all chapter 11 cases.[3/] 11 U.S.C. 1102(a)(1). On July 29, 1997, the United States Trustee created a seven-member creditors committee in the FMAC case. A271. Bradford was one of the members. Id. On August 7, 1997, the United States Trustee modified the committee by adding an eighth member. A273.

Section 1103(a) of the Bankruptcy Code authorizes a creditors committee to select committee counsel at a scheduled meeting at which a majority of the members are present. 11 U.S.C. 1103(a). Such counsel may "represent or perform services" for the committee if the bankruptcy court subsequently approves its retention. Id.; see also Fed. R. Bankr. P. 2014(a) (specifying the method by which court approval is sought).

In the FMAC case, the creditors committee met on July 28, 1997 to interview prospective counsel. A274. "After giving full consideration to the matter," the committee authorized the selection and employment of two firms:

a. Pepper, Hamilton & Scheetz LLP;[4] and,

b. Faegre & Benson LLP.

Id. The committee selected those firms because they had "considerable experience in the bankruptcy and commercial law areas and [were] particularly well qualified to represent the Committee." Id.

Pursuant to section 1103(a) and Federal Rule of Bankruptcy Procedure 2014(a), the committee filed an application on August 8, 1997 seeking the court's permission to retain Pepper. A274-283. The application described the firm's expertise and asked that Pepper be authorized to provide legal advice to the committee with respect to the committee's duties and powers; assist the committee in its investigation of the debtor; consider whether the debtor should be sold; advise and participate in matters concerning the formulation of a plan; assist the committee in communicating with the general creditor body regarding the committee's recommendation of any proposed plan of reorganization; review and analyze all pleadings filed with the court in the case; and perform additional services, including litigating on behalf of the committee. A275.

The application pledged to use those Pepper attorneys who had the lowest billing rates in order “to minimize the expenses to the estates.” A276. The application disclosed the proposed hourly rates of the “attorneys, legal assistants and other professionals who may work on the case.” Id.

The committee notified “the parties” to the FMAC case about its application by formally serving it upon them. A280-283.

As required by Federal Rule of Bankruptcy Procedure 2014(a), the application was accompanied by the sworn affidavit of David B. Stratton, a partner at Pepper. A277-279. In it, Mr. Stratton disclosed the firm’s representation of two creditors in other matters, disclosed that those creditors had waived any conflict arising from Pepper’s representation of the committee, and represented that Pepper “has not and will not represent any of these creditors in this case.” A278. The affidavit also disclosed the firm’s proposed billing rates. A278-279. Finally, Mr. Stratton represented to the court that Pepper was “a ‘disinterested person’ within the meaning of Section 101(14) of the Bankruptcy Code and does not hold or represent an interest adverse to the interests of the estates.” Id. The affidavit was served upon the parties to the case. A280-283.

On August 19, 1997, the committee filed a second application, seeking permission to retain Faegre & Benson LLP as co-counsel. A357-368. It contained the same type of disclosures and findings set forth in the Pepper application, A357-

360, and was accompanied by the sworn affidavit of Michael R. Stewart, a Faegre & Benson partner. A361-364. Mr. Stewart's affidavit disclosed the same type of information that Mr. Stratton's had. Id. It also specifically promised to "utilize [those] professionals having the lowest billing rates to minimize the expense to the Debtor's bankruptcy estate" and represented it would coordinate with Pepper "to avoid unnecessary duplication." A363. The committee's application and Faegre's affidavit were served on the parties to the FMAC case.[5] A365-368.

The committee did not select Mr. Ahern to act as committee counsel. It did not seek court approval for Mr. Ahern to represent it or to perform services for it. No notice was served upon the parties to the case - by the committee, by Bradford, or by Mr. Ahern - that Mr. Ahern would be doing any committee-related work.[6]

Mr. Ahern did not file an affidavit with the court in 1997 specifying the work he intended to perform; disclosing which parties to the case he represented; disclosing his proposed billing rate; or representing that he would minimize his charges or that he would coordinate with Pepper and Faegre.[7] Mr. Ahern did not swear under oath that he was disinterested under section 101(14) of the Code or that he did not hold or represent an interest adverse to the interests of the estate.

By order entered August 19, 1997, the court approved the committee's application to employ Pepper. A284. It did so based upon its finding that Pepper represented no interest adverse to the debtor or the estate, that the employment of Pepper was necessary and appropriate, and that Pepper was a disinterested person under 11 U.S.C. 101(14). Id. By order entered September 30, 1997, the court approved the committee's application to retain Faegre, after making similar findings. A398. No order was entered authorizing Mr. Ahern's retention.

Mr. Ahern participated in the FMAC case in his capacity as personal counsel to creditor Bradford and he represented Bradford's personal interests as a creditor. See, e.g., A285-322 (substantive pleading filed on Bradford's behalf opposing a settlement proposed by the debtor with third parties); A870-871 (Bradford's statement that counsel had participated in this case as Bradford's personal counsel); A897 (Mr. Ahern's representation to the court below that "[w]e acknowledge that J.C. Bradford cannot seek reimbursement of all [my] professional compensation in connection with this case" because some involved personal creditor matters).

On April 30, 1998, Bradford filed an application with the court asking that the FMAC bankruptcy estate reimburse it $36,014.25 for work Mr. Ahern had provided to Bradford relating to creditors committee matters from July 1997 through February 1998. A420-435. Virtually all the charges were for making telephone calls, participating in intra-office meetings, reviewing materials, and charging the time it took to travel to meetings in Wilmington and Philadelphia. A426-435. Bradford contended that sections 503(b)(3)(F) and 503(b)(4) mandated that the bankruptcy estate pay for those services. A863-873.

The debtor-in-possession opposed Bradford's application based upon its conclusion that sections 503(b)(3)(F) and 503(b)(4) do not authorize a court to impose fees when a member of a creditors committee obtains advice from non-committee counsel. A782-791.

The Office of the United States Trustee filed a comment with the court setting forth its conclusion that Bradford's application lacked merit and should be denied. A874-876. The United States Trustee contended that only Pepper and Faegre, as "committee counsel [sh]ould receive the compensation" from the bankruptcy estate for work done on behalf of the committee. A875.

On June 22, 1998, a hearing was held on Bradford's application. A878-911. In an order and an unpublished opinion, both dated June 26, 1998, the court denied Bradford's application. A916-925. The court found that section 503(b) was ambiguous on the question whether an individual member of a committee could obtain reimbursement from a bankruptcy estate for services that its private counsel provided it in performing committee-related duties. A920-921. The court further found that the section's legislative history and sound notions of public policy support the conclusion that section 503(b) does not authorize a court to require a bankruptcy estate to reimburse a committee member for such personal legal expenses. A921-924. This appeal followed.

STATEMENT OF RELATED CASES AND PROCEEDINGS

The United States Trustee is unaware of any related cases or proceedings.

STATEMENT OF THE STANDARD OR SCOPE OF REVIEW

This appeal involves questions of law, over which this Court exercises plenary review. Adams v. Commissioner, 170 F.3d 173, 175 (3d Cir. 1999).

SUMMARY OF ARGUMENT

Bradford's contention that bankruptcy estates must pay committee members' personal attorneys fees lacks legal merit, would unnecessarily increase the cost of administering chapter 11 cases, and would impair the ability of creditors committees to effectively represent their constituents. Sections 1103(a) and 503(b) of the Code are best read as requiring a bankruptcy estate to pay only those creditors committee fees incurred by law firms that are committee-appointed and court-approved. An estate is not liable when, as here, an individual committee member independently seeks advice relating to committee matters from personal counsel. Setting section 1103(a) aside, the better reading of section 503(b) - standing alone - leads to the same conclusion, and that interpretation coincides with the plain language of its legislative history and sound notions of public policy.

ARGUMENT

I. Bradford's Construction Of Section 503(b) Should Be Rejected Because It Clashes With The Bankruptcy Code As A Whole.

Each participant in a bankruptcy case normally pays its own attorneys fees. Bradford's views notwithstanding, it has been generally accepted that section 1103(a) of the Bankruptcy Code is the only method by which a lawyer can obtain authorization to do committee-related work, and section 330(a) of the Code is the sole mechanism by which an estate can be taxed for that work.[8/]

[8/] The text of those sections is appended to this brief. We know of only one other case in which attorneys fees were sought for committee-related work under any other provision of the Code. In re County of Orange, 179 B.R. 195 (Bankr. C.D. Cal. 1995) (reimbursement unsuccessfully sought under section 503(b)).

Bradford believes this changed in 1994 when Congress enacted section 503(b)(3)(F).[9] Bradford interprets its plain language, when coupled with that of section 503(b)(4)'s, as requiring bankruptcy estates to fund an individual committee member's use of its personal lawyer to perform committee-related work without any prior disclosure or court approval.[10] Appellant's brief at 11-29.

Bradford's construction of section 503(b) should be rejected because it clashes with section 1103(a) and the Code as a whole. "It [is] fundamental that a section of a statute should not be read in isolation from the context of the whole Act." Richards v. United States, 369 U.S. 1, 10 (1962) (interpreting the Federal Tort Claims Act).

[9] Section 503(b)(3) provides for the allowance of:

> "The actual, necessary expenses, other than compensation and reimbursement specified in paragraph (4) of this subsection, incurred by-
>
> * * *
> (F) a member of a committee appointed under section 1102 of this title, if such expenses are incurred in the performance of the duties of such committee[.]"

[10] Section 503(b)(4) provides for the allowance of:

> "reasonable compensation for professional services rendered by an attorney or an accountant of an entity whose expense is allowable under paragraph (3). . . ."

S. Ct. 909, 917 n.5 (1998) (interpreting 42 U.S.C. 1395ww(h)). When "expounding a statute, [a court] must not be guided by a single sentence or member of a sentence, but look to the provisions of the whole law, and to its object and policy." Id. (quoting United States Nat. Bank of Ore. v. Independent Ins. Agents of America, Inc., 508 U.S. 439, 455 (1993) and United States v. Heirs of Boisdore, 8 How. 113, 122, 12 L.Ed. 1009 (1849)).

Bradford's construction of section 503(b) fails this test because it would allow committees to bypass section 1103(a)'s carefully crafted notice and approval requirements simply by having their members' personal lawyers perform committee-related work. When the Code is read as a whole, there is no reason to conclude that section 503(b)(3)(F) has created a mechanism which empowers committees and their members to evade all of section 1103(a)'s substantial protections.

Section 1103(a) ensures that all parties in interest may object to a committee's request to hire a lawyer at estate expense, and the court will have the final say in determining whether the lawyer may perform such work. See In re Arkansas Company, Inc., 798 F.2d 645, 649 (3d Cir. 1986) (analyzing the Code's legislative history and finding it "significant that Congress chose to place the requirement of [prior] court approval for the employment of an attorney [retained] by the creditors committee directly in [section 1103(a) of] the Bankruptcy Code"); S. Rep. No. 95-589, 95th Cong. 2d Sess. 114 (1978) (describing the purpose behind section 1103(a) and cautioning that "[n]ormally, one attorney should suffice" to represent a committee); H. Rep. No. 95-595, 95th Cong. 1st Sess. 402 (1977) (noting that the "normal standard" will be for committees to hire one attorney).

Under section 1103(a), only the full committee may "authorize" counsel's employment and it must do so at a scheduled committee meeting attended by a majority of its members. 11 U.S.C. 1103(a). If a committee determines to select counsel, Federal Rule of Bankruptcy Procedure 2014(a) requires the committee to file an application seeking court approval. Rule 2014(a) requires counsel to file an affidavit in support of the application. All parties in interest have the right to object to the committee's proposed retention. See Fed. R. Bankr. P. 9010(a) (authorizing parties in interest to participate in bankruptcy cases). The bankruptcy court must then determine whether to approve counsel's retention. 11 U.S.C. 1103(a). Unless the court approves, the estate may not be taxed. Arkansas, 798 F.2d at 648 (construing section 1103(a)).

Section 1103(a)'s procedural protections are crucial to the fair and efficient administration of bankruptcy cases. Arkansas, 798 F.2d at 648-50. In Arkansas, this Court held that a bankruptcy court could authorize the retroactive retention of an attorney by a creditors committee under section 1103(a) only in "exceptional circumstances." Id. at 646-50. In reaching that conclusion, this Court rejected a suggestion that retroactive approval should be granted if approval would have been granted had it been timely requested. Id. at 648. Arkansas held that "[s]uch a lenient rule would subvert Congress' purpose in imposing a prior approval requirement" in section 1103(a). Id. Prior approval is crucial under section 1103(a) because it ensures "that the court may know the type of individual who is engaged in the proceeding, their integrity, their experience . . . as well as their competency." Id. (quoting In re Hydrocarbon Chemicals, Inc., 411 F.2d 203, 205 (3d Cir.) (en banc), cert. denied, 396 U.S. 823 (1969)).

In this case, neither Bradford nor its counsel sought prior court approval, and they made none of the detailed disclosures or representations that the committee and Pepper and Faegre did. Instead, Bradford had Mr. Ahern perform work solely under Bradford's direction and supervision - and then sought payment once the work had been completed. A420-435. Not even the debtor knew Bradford was going to seek to tax its estate for Mr. Ahern's work.[11] A784.

[11] Bradford contends Mr. Ahern performed some services with the knowledge of and, in some instances, at the request of, counsel for the committee. Appellant's brief at 7. The only support it cites is Mr. Ahern's statement below that he made a "number of [phone] calls" on the committee's behalf. A909-910.

Because Bradford did not comply with section 1103(a), the nature and scope

In Bradford's view, the 1994 amendment to section 503(b) creates a parallel world in which all of section 1103(a)'s protections can be sidestepped simply by having individual committee members hire counsel. In this world, no advance showing has to be made to the court; the bankruptcy estate need not be notified that it may be called upon to foot the bill (A784); the United States Trustee need not be informed; other creditors need no notice; and no one is given the opportunity to object to the members' chosen counsel.

But context does count. And context makes clear that this construction is wrong because it is "demonstrably at odds[12/]" with Congress' scheme for selecting creditors committee attorneys, and would render meaningless all of section 1103(a)'s carefully crafted requirements. Indeed, under Bradford's construction, a committee could even have one member use counsel that section 1103(b) of the Code would prohibit the committee from employing. See 11 U.S.C. 1103(b) of Mr. Ahern's work was not apparent until Bradford filed its April 1998 application seeking to tax the estate for his services. Although Mr. Ahern performed $36,000 of work from July 1997 through February 1998 (A420-435), he did not seek permission to appear in the case, pro hac vice, until May 19, 1998 (A777-781). The United States Trustee was not aware that Mr. Ahern was performing committee work, and there is no evidence in the record that the debtor or the court were either. See A784 (debtor's statement). This illustrates the unwelcome surprises that will arise if counsel are authorized to perform committee-related work without first complying with section 1103(a).

[12/] United States v. Ron Pair Enterprises, Inc., 489 U.S. 235, 242 (1989).

Bradford's proffered construction also is at odds with the Code because it presupposes that after-the-fact review adequately protects the parties in interest to a case. In Arkansas, however, this Court specifically "reject[ed] the notion that a complete and thorough post-application review may substitute for prior approval." Arkansas, 798 F.2d at 649. As this Court noted, such a construction "would render meaningless the structure of the Bankruptcy Code and Rules . . . requiring . . . prior approval of employment." Id. (referring to 11 U.S.C. 1103(a) and 330(a)).

It is axiomatic that the "preferred" construction of a complex statutory scheme, like the Bankruptcy Code, is the one that "lends greater meaning to all the provisions." Asgrow Seed Co. v. Winterboer, 513 U.S. 179, 189 (1995) (interpreting 7 U.S.C. 2541 and 2543). Construed within the broader context of the Bankruptcy Code, there is no reason to presume that Congress enacted section 503(b)(3)(F) in 1994 to radically alter existing counsel retention law, or to allow committees and their members to end-run section 1103(a)'s carefully designed structure for approving counsel. When considered in its entirety, Richards, 369 U.S. at 10, Shalala, __ U.S. __, 118 S.Ct. at 917 n.5, neither the Code's purpose nor its text supports Bradford's construction.

II Even If Construed In A Vacuum, The Better Reading Of Section 503(b) Does Not Allow Committee Members To Tax Bankruptcy Estates For The Fees Their Private Counsel Charge Them For Committee Work.

1. The language of section 503(b).

Bradford construes section 503(b) in a vacuum, making no reference to section 1103(a) or the congressional purpose behind it. Appellant's brief at x, 11-29; A420-435; A863-873; A894-A900; A909-911. Bradford contends its plain language unambiguously authorizes any committee member to charge the bankruptcy estate for all "fees [that are] related to [its] participation in a Committee appointed under 11 U.S.C. 1102." Appellant's brief at 21.

The better reading of section 503(b) does not support Bradford's conclusion. First, section 503(b)(3)(F) specifically limits a committee member's right to recover expenses to those "incurred in the performance of the duties of [a] committee." 11 U.S.C. 503(b)(3)(F). These words are significant. They allow a member to recover expenses only when performing duties "of" the committee - not merely duties that "pertain" or "relate" to the committee. That suggests section 503(b)(3)(F) only covers those expenses that involve formal committee work (work "of" the committee), not a member's informal or personal response to its formal committee appointment. Accordingly, a member's voluntary consultation with private counsel is not an allowable expense under section 503(b)(3)(F) because it is not "incurred in the performance of the duties of [the] committee," as that term is used in section 503(b)(3)(F). In turn, the absence of such an allowable expense under section 503(b)(3)(F) prevents recovery of fees under section 503(b)(4).[13]

This construction draws support from the language and purpose of sections 503(b)(3)(A)-(E). The first three sections, 503(b)(3)(A)-(C), allow creditors to recover expenses when they perform specific and well-defined tasks - filing an involuntary petition under section 303; recovering property for the benefit of the estate that was transferred or concealed by the debtor; or helping prosecute a criminal case involving the business or property of the debtor. 11 U.S.C. 503(b)(3)(A)-(C). The fourth provision, section 503(b)(3)(D), allows specified entities to recover expenses when they make a "substantial contribution" to a case. See Lebron v. Mechem Financial, Inc., 27 F.3d 937, 942-46 (3d Cir. 1994) (construing section 503(b)(3)(D)). Finally, section 503(b)(3)(E) allows a custodian who held property of the debtor, pre-petition, to recover associated expenses.

In each of these situations, fees are authorized because the parties who conferred those tangible benefits on the collective interests of the bankruptcy estate could not recover their attorneys fees but for section 503(b)(4). They stand in sharp contrast to a committee member because the member already has access to counsel whose fees will be paid by the bankruptcy estate. When a committee member does work of a committee there will be, in appropriate circumstances, committee counsel to help perform those tasks, and sections 1103(a) and 330(a) create a statutory mechanism to recover those fees from the estate. 11 U.S.C. 1103(a) and 330(a). Given this significant difference, it is reasonable to construe sections 503(b)(3) and (4) as creating a mechanism whereby those entities specified in sections (A) through (E) may recoup legal expenses, but committee members may not.

Finally, as the court below found, section 503(b) does not clearly provide that a member of a committee is an "entity" for purposes of section 503(b)(4), which is a condition prerequisite to any recovery of fees under that provision. See A920-922 (opinion below); County of Orange, 179 B.R. at 201(finding that the plain language of section 503(b) does not lead to the conclusion that a member of a committee is an entity).

Section 101(15) of the Code defines entity to include a person, and section 101(41) defines a person to include a corporation. 11 U.S.C. 101(15) and 101(41).

Bradford is a corporation and thus could be considered an entity for purposes of section 503(b)(4). However, Bradford does not seek recovery in its capacity as a corporation in this case. It seeks recovery in its status as a committee member. "Section 101(15) does not specifically include 'a member of a committee' as that phrase is specifically utilized in Section 503(b)(3)(F), [so a] court [should] not graft that language into the provision in the context of a Section 503(b)(4) application." A921 (opinion below); see also County of Orange, 179 B.R. at 201 (finding that this "statutory language is unclear").

Supporting this interpretation is the fact that section 503(b) does not provide that a member of a committee should be construed to be an entity, as that term is specifically used in section 503(b)(4). Accordingly, it is not clear that Bradford is an entity for purposes of section 503(b) when seeking counsel fees in its capacity as a committee member.[14/] For these reasons, the better reading of section 503(b)

[14/] Bradford also claims it is an entity because it is a creditor. Appellant's brief at 14-15. We agree that Bradford would have been an entity for purposes of section 503(b)(3)(D) had it sought recovery under that section as a creditor who made a "substantial contribution" to the case. See Lebron, 27 F.3d at 943-44 (applying that standard); see also A897, 899 (Bradford's admission that it did not seek recovery under that section because it might not have been able to meet its "onerous" standard). The fact that Bradford would have been an entity had it sought recovery under 503(b)(3)(D) does not change the fact it was not an entity when it sought recovery under section 503(b)(3)(F). Bradford's "administrative expense" argument fails for the same reason. See Appellant's brief at 15.

does not allow Bradford to recover the fees charged by its personal counsel.

2. The legislative history of section 503(b)(3)(F).

Section 503(b)(3)(F)'s legislative history plainly states that Congress did not intend for its adoption to authorize committee members to recover attorneys fees. See 140 Congr. Rec. H10764-71 (daily ed. Oct. 4, 1994) (statement of Chairman Brooks); see also County of Orange,179 B.R. at 201-02 (discussing section 503(b)(3)(F)'s legislative history); A921-922 (opinion below).

Section 503(b)(3)(F) was introduced in the House as section 110 of H.R. 5116, which became law on October 22, 1994 as the Bankruptcy Reform Act of 1994, Pub. L. No. 103-394 (Oct. 22, 1994). See 140 Congr. Rec. HR10752, H10754 (daily ed. Oct. 4, 1994) (text of section 110). There is no house, senate, or conference report for H.R. 5116. Instead, a section by section analysis of H.R. 5116 was appended to the floor remarks of House Judiciary Committee Chairman Brooks. See 140 Congr. Rec. H10764-71 (daily ed. Oct. 4, 1994) (statement of Chairman Brooks).

The House's analysis of section 110 plainly states that section 503(b)(3)(F)'s enactment does not authorize the reimbursement of attorneys fees:

> This section of the bill amends section 503(b) of the Bankruptcy Code to specifically permit members of chapter 11 committees to receive court-approved reimbursement of their actual and necessary out-of-pocket > expenses. The new provision would not allow the payment of compensation for services rendered by or to the committee members.

140 Congr. Rec. H10765 (daily edition Oct. 4, 1994) (statement of Chairman Brooks).

The Senate considered and passed H.R. 5116 on October 6, 1994. See 140 Cong. Rec. S14461 (daily ed. Oct. 6, 1994) (Senate's consideration and adoption of H.R. 5116). It did not disagree with the House's construction of section 110.

3. Public policy.

The conclusion that section 503(b) does not allow individual members to recover attorneys fees is buttressed by sound notions of public policy. First, it ensures that the bankruptcy estate will not be charged for counsel fees unless fair warning is given by the filing of an application to employ counsel pursuant to section 1103(a) of the Code. Second, it guarantees that parties to a chapter 11 case will have the opportunity to object to all applications to retain counsel. Third, it guarantees that the court will have the opportunity to "know the type of individual who is engaged in the proceeding, their integrity, their experience . . . as well as their competency." Arkansas, 798 F.2d at 648.

This construction also enables bankruptcy courts to control the costs of administering bankruptcy estates. Chapter 11 cases are costly to administer. In some cases, the amount of expenses will determine whether a debtor successfully reorganizes. The costs of administering bankruptcy cases will increase measurably if every member of a committee is found to have a right to charge the estate for the advice it obtains from personal counsel. As the court below noted, allowing such a multiplicity of charges could be "life threatening" in a significant number of cases.[15] A923.

This construction also will enable United States Trustees to help ensure that committee-retained counsel are used in a cost-effective fashion. Congress has empowered United States Trustees to scrutinize the functioning of creditors committees. 28 U.S.C. 586(a)(3)(E). To fulfill that responsibility, United States Trustees review applications to appoint committee counsel, and they oppose unfounded requests. See 11 U.S.C. 307 (United States Trustees may raise and be heard on any issue in any bankruptcy case); Columbia Gas, 33 F.3d at 295-97

[15] A detailed pre-appointment review process is necessary to prevent attorneys from performing inappropriate work. Contrary to its representation here (appellant's brief at 4 n.3), for example, Bradford is charging the FMAC estate for work that Mr. Ahern performed for Bradford in its capacity as creditor. See, e.g., the July 16, 1997 charge for hiring the local counsel that filed Bradford's August 14, 1997 pleading in its personal capacity (compare A426 (consultations with Mr. Graves of Bradford and with the firm that became local counsel) with A303 (brief local counsel filed)); and the July 27, 1997 charge for "study[ing]" FMAC's July 25, 1997 motion that Bradford opposed in its personal capacity (compare A430 with A238-A266 and A285-322). These examples are not exhaustive.

United States Trustees could not adequately review committee applications to retain counsel if individual members could hire personal counsel without prior notice or approval. The United States Trustee would face the impossible task of evaluating such committee requests without knowing how many professionals individual members might retain or the work the members might have them perform.

Our construction of section 503(b) also facilitates the efficient functioning of creditors committees. Under existing law, committees are run by majority rule. The committee selects counsel and counsel advises the committee. Members would have far less incentive to use official counsel if they could use their own for free. Bradford's interpretation would enable members who unsuccessfully seek the retention of personal counsel as committee counsel to ignore committee counsel, use their own, and force the estate to foot the bill. Disgruntled members also could use their personal lawyers to challenge the advice that committee counsel provides the committee. "One can only imagine the atmosphere at a committee meeting where the attendees included the committee members, their lawyers, their accountants and at least one lawyer and one accountant officially retained by the committee." A923 (decision below). We concur fully with the district court's conclusion that Bradford's construction of section 503(b) could "jeopardize the very functioning of an official committee." Id.

Finally, Bradford's construction conflicts with the accepted notion in our law that "each party in a civil litigation bears its own professional fees." In re County of Orange, 179 B.R. at 202 (citing Alyeska Pipeline Serv. Co. v. Wilderness Society, 421 U.S. 240, 247 (1975)). While Congress may change that rule by statute, "[e]xceptions to the American rule are narrowly construed." Id. Cf. Restatement of Restitution (A.L.I.) section 2 (1937) ("A person who officiously confers a benefit upon another is not entitled to restitution therefor.").

In this case, the Code's purpose and structure indicate that Congress has not authorized individual committee members to tax the bankruptcy estate for their personal attorneys fees. Congress would have spoken more clearly had it intended for its 1994 enactment of section 503(b)(3)(F) to radically transform the functioning of creditors committees and overrule the presumption that a party in a bankruptcy case must pay its own way.

CONCLUSION

For these reasons, the United States Trustee respectfully asks this Court to affirm the decision of the court below denying Bradford's fee application.

STATUTORY ADDENDUM

Section 1103. Powers and duties of committees

(a) At a scheduled meeting of a committee appointed under section 1102 of this title, at which a majority of the members of such committee are present, and with the court's approval, such committee may select and authorize the employment by such committee of one or more attorneys, accountants, or other agents, to represent or perform services for such committee.

Section 330. Compensation of officers

(a) (1) After notice to the parties in interest and the United States trustee and a hearing, and subject to sections 326, 328, and 329, the court may award to a trustee, an examiner, a professional person employed under section 327 or 1103 -

(A) reasonable compensation for actual, necessary services rendered by the trustee, examiner, professional person, or attorney and by any paraprofessional person employed by any such person; and

(B) reimbursement for actual, necessary expenses.

(2) The court may, on its own motion or on the motion of the United States Trustee, the United States Trustee for the District or Region, the trustee for the estate, or any other party in interest, award compensation that is less than the amount of compensation that is requested.

C. (A) In determining the amount of reasonable compensation to be awarded, the court shall consider the nature, the extent, and the value of such services, taking into account all relevant factors, including -

(A) the time spent on such services;

(B) the rates charged for such services;

(C) whether the services were necessary to the administration of, or beneficial at the time at which the service was rendered toward the completion of, a case under this title;

(D) whether the services were performed within a reasonable amount of time commensurate with the complexity, importance, and nature of the problem, issue, or task addressed; and

(E) whether the compensation is reasonable based on the customary compensation charged by comparably skilled practitioners in cases other than cases under this title.

(4) (A) Except as provided in subparagraph (B), the court shall not allow compensation for -

(i) unnecessary duplication of services; or

(ii) services that were not -

(I) reasonably likely to benefit the debtor's estate; or
(II) necessary to the administration of the case.

(B) In a chapter 12 or chapter 13 case in which the debtor is an individual the court may allow reasonable compensation to the debtor's attorney for representing the interests of the debtor in connection with the bankruptcy case based on a consideration of the benefit and necessity of such services to the debtor and the other factors set forth in this section.

(5) The court shall reduce the amount of compensation awarded under this section by the amount of any interim compensation awarded under section 331, and, if the amount of such interim compensation exceeds the amount of compensation awarded under this section, may order the return of the excess to the estate.

(6) Any compensation awarded for the preparation of a fee application shall be based on the level and skill reasonably required to prepare the application.

STATEMENT OF APPELLATE JURISDICTION

This Court has appellate jurisdiction under 28 U.S.C. § 158(a)(1), which confers jurisdiction on the district courts of the United States to hear appeals "from final judgments, orders, and decrees" of bankruptcy judges. The bankruptcy court's final order requiring the debtors' counsel to reduce his attorney's fees by $500 was entered on January 20, 2010. The appellant's notice of appeal was timely filed under 28 U.S.C. § 158(c)(2) and Fed. R. Bankr. P. 8002(a) on January 21, 2010.

STATEMENT OF THE ISSUES

The only issued presented in this appeal is whether the bankruptcy court, after notice and hearing, abused its discretion by ordering a $500 reduction in attorney's fees when the appellant chose to accept the proposed $500 reduction in lieu of an additional evidentiary hearing into the reasonableness of his compensation.

STANDARD OF REVIEW

This Court reviews a bankruptcy court's findings of fact for clear error and conclusions of law de novo. Caplin & Drysdale Chartered v. Babcock & Wilcox Co. (In re Babcock & Wilcox Co.), 526 F.3d 824, 826 (5th Cir. 2008). A bankruptcy court's award or denial of compensation is reviewed for abuse of discretion. Id. "A bankruptcy court abuses its discretion when it (1) applies an improper legal standard or follows improper procedures in calculating the fee award or (2) rests its decision on findings of fact that are clearly erroneous." Id. "Findings of fact may not be set aside unless they are clearly erroneous. In examining for clear error, we review the record as a whole and not just the evidence supporting the finding." Stanley v. U.S. Bank Nat'l Ass'n (In re TransTexas Gas Corp.), 597 F.3d 298, 304 (5th Cir. 2010).

STATEMENT OF THE CASE

Joseph and Tanger Frank retained Anthony Marshall, the appellant, as their bankruptcy counsel. On June 27, 2009, Mr. Marshall filed a voluntary petition on behalf of the debtors under chapter 13 of the Bankruptcy Code. (Docket entry # 1). The initial filing fee was not paid. (Transcript at 8).

On July 28, 2009, Mr. Marshall filed a chapter 13 repayment plan on behalf of the Franks. (Dkt. # 8). The repayment plan contained a request for the payment of $2,250.00 in attorney's fees over the life of the plan. Id. at 3. On September 8, 2009, the chapter 13 trustee filed a notice of deficiency regarding the repayment plan, because (a) Mr. Frank's proof of income was not up to date, (b) Mrs. Frank's income had been incorrectly calculated, and (c) the summary and analysis at the end of the plan showed 72 percent of the proceeds were to be distributed to unsecured creditors when the plan only provided for a 29 percent distribution. (Tr. at 7-8). Because of the delinquencies in providing Mr. Frank's proof of income, the debtors' 11 U.S.C. § 341 meeting of the creditors had to be continued twice, for a total of 56 days: from September 14, 2009 to October 19, 2009, and from October 19, 2009 to November 9, 2009. (Tr. at 8; dkts. #18, 20).

Because Mr. Marshall had failed to correct the deficiencies in the repayment plan that he filed with the court on the Franks' behalf, the hearing to confirm the plan also had to be continued twice: from October 7, 2009 to November 4, 2009, and from November 4, 2009 to December 2, 2009. (Tr. at 7). Mr. Marshall's motion to continue the confirmation hearing to December 2, 2009 had referenced an incorrect case number and Mr. Marshall never submitted a proposed order granting the motion to continue for the court to sign. (Tr. at 8; dkt. #39 at 2).

On December 2, 2009, Mr. Marshall failed to appear at the confirmation hearing. (Tr. at 7). At the hearing, the chapter 13 trustee attempted to prosecute his objection to the proposed repayment plan, advising the court that the Franks were three payments behind on the proposed plan and that the plan should not be confirmed because it was not feasible and failed to meet the requirements of the Bankruptcy Code. (Tr. at 7, 14-15). The Franks, who appeared in person, stated they could present proof that payments had been made, but did not have the information with them. (Dkt. # 39 at 2). The Franks, on their own initiative, requested to come before the judge and speak about their dissatisfaction with Mr. Marshall's representation. (Tr. at 21). In response, the bankruptcy court continued the hearing to January 20, 2010 — almost three and a half months after the original hearing date — and directed the Franks to bring their proof to the continued hearing. (Dkt. # 39 at 2). The bankruptcy court suggested to the debtors that they could attempt to obtain new counsel, and referred the problems with Mr. Marshall to the United States Trustee for investigation. (Tr. at 4, 16).

On December 15, 2009, the United States Trustee filed a motion to examine the reasonableness of Mr. Marshall's proposed fees under 11 U.S.C. § 329 and Fed. R. Bankr. P. 2017(b) and requested the disgorgement of any unreasonable fees.[1] (Dkt. # 39). The United

[1] The United States Trustee is an official of the United States Department of Justice appointed by the Attorney General to supervise the administration of bankruptcy cases in this district. 28 U.S.C. § 581(a)(5). Under 11 U.S.C. § 307 "[t]he United States trustee may raise and may appear and be heard on any issue in any case or proceeding under this title but may not file a plan pursuant to section 1121(c) of this title." Courts have repeatedly held that the United States Trustee has standing under section 307 to appear and be heard on any issue in any bankruptcy case, despite the lack of pecuniary interest in the outcome. See, e.g., United Artists Theater Co. v. Walton, 315 F.3d 217, 225 (3d Cir.2003); Scott v. U.S. Trustee, 133 F.3d 917 (4th Cir. 1997); In re Revco D.S., Inc., 898 F.2d 498, 500 (6th Cir. 1990); In re Donovan Corp., 215 F.3d 929, 930 (9th Cir. 2000) ("The United States trustee may . . . intervene and appear at any States Trustee averred that the Franks expressed frustration with Mr. Marshall's prosecution of their bankruptcy case and the nature and quality of legal services rendered by Mr. Marshall, citing his failure to return phone calls, keep them informed about the progress of the case, and work with them to ensure the successful completion of their case. Id. at 2-3.

Mr. Marshall filed a motion in opposition on December 15, 2010, alleging his failure to appear at the December 2, 2009 hearing was because he thought the case was ready for confirmation and his appearance was unnecessary under a local rule that does not require appearance by counsel if the case is ready for confirmation. (Dkt. # 42). Furthermore, Mr. Marshall denied having any problems representing the Franks, informed the bankruptcy court that he had apologized to the Franks for missing the December 2, 2009 hearing, and submitted an affidavit by the Franks that broadly described his performance as acceptable and stated that they desired to retain him as their counsel. Id.

On January 20, 2010, the bankruptcy court held a hearing on the United States Trustee's motion. (Tr. at 1). The United States Trustee, Mr. Marshall, and the chapter 13 trustee participated in the hearing. (Tr. at 2). Mr. Marshall requested a continuance to better prepare a response to the United States Trustee's motion. (Tr. at 5). The bankruptcy court ordered that the hearing would start going forward, but took Mr. Marshall's request for a subsequent hearing under consideration. (Tr. at 6).

After hearing from all parties, the bankruptcy court turned to the question of remedies. (Tr. at 19). The United States Trustee suggested reducing the amount of Mr. Marshall's proposed fee request by $500, from $2,250 to $1,750. Id. Mr. Marshall's fees had been reduced level of the proceedings from the bankruptcy court on . . . as either a party or an amicus.") (internal quotations omitted). The United States Trustee is explicitly authorized to bring a motion to challenge compensation under section 330 of title 11. 11 U.S.C. § 330(a)(2).

by the same amount for similar conduct in a different case before the court on December 16, 2009. Id. The court stated that it was "inclined to impose that remedy," but offered Mr. Marshall the opportunity to "be heard additionally on that." Id. The court noted that "this is really at least a second recognizable incident of where you've not performed according to the standard expected . . . a $500 reduction is [sic] rather mild penalty, but I'll hear from you on that." Id. Mr. Marshall maintained his opposition to any examination or the proposed fee reduction due to the Franks' affidavit in support of his continued representation. (Tr. at 20).

The court then questioned Mr. Frank about Mr. Marshall's services. Mr. Frank acknowledged that he did complain to the court about Mr. Marshall's failure to communicate, stating "it was some miscommunication, misinterpretations . . . he was communicating with us, but it was a lot of misinterpretation and we couldn't get in contact with him, but he was - - he would call back." (Tr. at 23). Mr. Frank informed the court that Mr. Marshall had apologized and explained what had happened in regard to the December 2, 2009 hearing. Id.

At the conclusion of the January hearing, the bankruptcy court decided to stand by the $500 reduction. (Tr. at 24). It concluded "that's a very, very small price for you to pay for your handling of this case." Id.

But the bankruptcy court then told Mr. Marshall that if Mr. Marshall did not wish to accept the $500 fee reduction, the court would "set this down for a subsequent hearing and we'll take testimony." Id. The court also informed Mr. Marshall that the evidence might result in a fee reduction of "more than the $500. I'll give you your choice though." Id.

Mr. Marshall chose to accept the $500, stating "based upon your – just what you said, I have no choice but to take the $500." Id.

The bankruptcy court subsequently entered its final order reducing Mr. Marshall's fees by the amount agreed to in the hearing. (Dkt. # 50). Mr. Marshall now requests that this Court reverse the order of the bankruptcy court and remand the proceedings for an additional evidentiary hearing. (Appellant's Brief at 11).

SUMMARY OF THE ARGUMENT

Mr. Marshall made seven errors in his representation of the Franks: (1) Mr. Marshall failed to pay the filing fee when he filed the case on behalf of the Franks. (Tr. at 8). (2) Mr. Marshall failed to submit Mr. Frank's proof of income in a timely manner. (Tr. at 7-8). (3) Mr. Marshall failed to correctly calculate Mrs. Frank's income in the proposed chapter 13 repayment plan. Id. (4) Mr. Marshall failed to correctly calculate the amount of the proceeds distributed to unsecured creditors by the proposed chapter 13 repayment plan. Id. (5) Mr. Marshall failed to include the correct case number on a motion for a continuance. (Tr. at 8). (6) Mr. Marshall failed to submit a proposed order on a motion for a continuance, as requested by the bankruptcy court. Id. (7) Mr. Marshall failed to appear at the confirmation hearing on the proposed chapter 13 repayment plan. (Tr. at 7). These failures resulted in an almost three and a half month delay in the administration of the Franks' bankruptcy case. Based on these facts, the bankruptcy court did not abuse its discretion when it reduced Mr. Marshall's fee request by $500.

Attorneys have no absolute right to receive compensation from a chapter 13 bankruptcy estate. Section 330 of title 11 requires that the bankruptcy court approve all requests for compensation to ensure that the compensation is reasonable and for actual, necessary services rendered to the estate, and allows the bankruptcy court to reduce the amount of compensation requested. Section 329 of title 11 provides that the bankruptcy court may order a reduction in compensation to the extent that such compensation exceeds the reasonable value of the services. Federal Rule of Bankruptcy Procedure 2017(b) provides that a court must provide notice and a hearing before determining whether a fee arrangement would provide excessive compensation. "Notice and a hearing" means such notice or opportunity for a hearing as is appropriate in the particular circumstances or without an actual hearing if notice is given and not requested timely by a party in interest. 11 U.S.C. § 102(1).

The bankruptcy court received briefing and heard argument on the United States Trustee's motion to examine the reasonableness of Mr. Marshall's fee request and to reduce any excessive compensation. At the conclusion of this hearing, the bankruptcy court offered Mr. Marshall a choice, based upon the information in the record on the reasonable value of Mr. Marshall's professional services: the court would either reduce his fees by $500 or hold a subsequent evidentiary hearing to resolve the ultimate amount of the fee reduction. Mr. Marshall chose to accept the $500 reduction. He is precluded from asking this Court to order a different outcome.

Mr. Marshall received proper notice of the United States Trustee's motion challenging his compensation in the case, submitted briefing in opposition to the motion, provided an affidavit in support of his fees, and participated in oral argument at the hearing on the motion. When the bankruptcy court informed Mr. Marshall that it was inclined to reduce his fees, the court offered Mr. Marshall the opportunity to request an evidentiary hearing in lieu of the proposed $500 reduction. Mr. Marshall did not accept the court's offer to request an evidentiary hearing. Accordingly, the bankruptcy court rendered judgement based upon the facts in the record and followed the requirements the Bankruptcy Code and Rules when it entered its final order reducing Mr. Marshall's fee request.

The sole issue Mr. Marshall has raised on appeal is whether he is entitled to an evidentiary hearing prior to the reduction of his fee request. (App. Br. at 4). But Mr. Marshall was provided with notice of, and responded to, the United States Trustee's motion to reduce his fees. Mr. Marshall declined the bankruptcy court's offer to hold a subsequent evidentiary hearing on the reasonable value of his services. Mr. Marshall, having declined the opportunity for an evidentiary hearing in exchange for the $500 reduction — an amount that was apparently believed to be less than what would result from the evidentiary hearing — cannot now challenge the order based upon an issue he did not raise and had waived before the bankruptcy court.

For these reasons, this Court should affirm the order entered below.

ARGUMENT

I. Statutory framework

Under section 330 of the Bankruptcy Code, a bankruptcy court may award reasonable compensation for actual, necessary services rendered by a chapter 13 debtor's attorney. 11 U.S.C. § 330(a)(4)(B). As a means of efficiency, the bankruptcy court for the Eastern District of Louisiana allows for a standard or no-look fee in the amount of $2,250.00 for Chapter 13 cases in which the debtors are below the means test. Gen. Order No. 2007-2. This means the court will approve a request for attorney's fees up to $2,250 under section 330(a)(4)(B) unless a party in interest opposes the request. See In re Cahill, 428 F.3d 536, 541 (5th Cir. 2005) (affirming the use of precalculated fees).

Section 329 of the Bankruptcy Code provides that if the compensation for a debtor's attorney exceeds the reasonable value of the services rendered by the attorney, the court may cancel the fee agreement or order the return of the payment to the bankruptcy estate or the entity that made the payment, to the extent the fee received is found to be excessive. 11 U.S.C. § 329(b). Pursuant to Rule 2017(b), "on motion by the debtor, the United States trustee, or on the court's own initiative, the court after notice and a hearing may determine whether any payment of money . . . or agreement therefor, by the debtor to an attorney after entry of an order for relief in a case under the Code is excessive." Fed. R. Bankr. P. 2017(b).

The term "after notice and a hearing" is defined in section 102(1) of the Bankruptcy Code as "such notice as is appropriate in the particular circumstances, and such opportunity for hearing as appropriate in the particular circumstances, but authorizes an act without an actual hearing if such notice is given properly and if such a hearing is not requested timely by a party in interest." 11 U.S.C. § 102(1). Thus, the definition provides for flexibility as appropriate in particular circumstances, including action without a hearing at all. Id.

Under section 102(1)(A), notice and a hearing must be "appropriate in the particular circumstances." According to the Fifth Circuit, "[t]hese terms permit flexibility regarding the occasions in which a full hearing is required, while insuring that all persons who should have notice receive it . . . Parties in interest must receive notice and an opportunity to be heard before their interests may be adversely affected." Int'l Transactions, Ltd. v. Embotelladora Agral Regiomontana, SA de CV, 347 F.3d 589, 594 (5th Cir. 2003) (internal citation omitted).

II. Mr. Marshall has waived any potential right to a subsequent evidentiary hearing regarding the fee reduction.

The "sole issue" that Mr. Marshall has presented for review is whether he is entitled to have an evidentiary hearing prior to having his attorney's fees reduced. (App. Br. at 4). But Mr. Marshall did not raise this argument before the bankruptcy court. It is well established that a party who has failed to raise an argument before the trial court has waived the issue on appeal. Miller v. Tex. Tech Univ. Health Sci. Ctr., 421 F.3d 342, 348-49 (5th Cir. 2005).

But even if Mr. Marshall's request for a continuance could be considered as raising the argument before the bankruptcy court, he deliberately waived his interest in the evidentiary hearing by accepting the proposed reduction and is now bound by that decision. In Ergo Science, Inc. v. Martin, the Fifth Circuit described a situation where a litigant had agreed to relinquish an interest in exchange for a judgment limiting the litigant's liability on a claim. 75 F.3d 595, 598-99 (5th Cir. 1996). When the litigant attempted to reverse its position and claim the interest, the district court considered such statements as binding and the Fifth Circuit affirmed, holding that a court "is entitled to rely on statements made by counsel in open court." Id. at 600. Mr. Marshall relinquished the opportunity for an evidentiary hearing in exchange for a judgment limiting his fee reduction to $500. (Tr. at 24). Mr. Marshall is now bound by his waiver. Ergo Sci., Inc., 75 F.3d at 600.

III. A bankruptcy court is not required to hold an additional evidentiary hearing when the matter has adequately been heard.

Alternatively, the bankruptcy court did not err when it reduced Mr. Marshall's fee request by $500. Within the Fifth Circuit there is no question that a full hearing is not required in every circumstance. Int'l Transactions, 347 F.3d at 594. As long as the parties in interest have adequate notice and an opportunity to be heard, the bankruptcy court has the discretion to fashion the proceedings as appropriate for the circumstances. Tex. Extrusion Corp. v. Lockheed Corp. (In re Tex. Extrusion Corp.), 844 F.2d 1142, 1161 (5th Cir. 1988). Furthermore, the law of the Fifth Circuit has been unambiguous that "[w]here a matter has already been adequately argued before the bankruptcy judge, and the judge determines that no further hearings are necessary, then the debtor's due process rights are not violated when the judge decides the issue without further hearings." Sullivan Cent. Plaza I, Ltd. v. BancBoston Real Estate Capital Corp. (In re Sullivan Cent. Plaza I, Ltd.), 935 F.2d 723, 727 (5th Cir. 1991).

The record demonstrates that the matter was adequately heard and the bankruptcy court conducted the proceedings in accord with due process and the notice and hearing requirements of Rule 2017(b). In the present case, Mr. Marshall had notice that the United States Trustee was seeking to examine and disgorge a portion of his attorney's fees as unreasonable, and was prepared for the hearing on the motion. (Tr. at 5). Mr. Marshall submitted briefing in opposition and submitted an affidavit to support the reasonableness of his compensation. (Dkt. # 42). Mr. Marshall participated in the hearing, where he argued his position before the court. (Tr., passim). The bankruptcy court questioned Mr. Marshall's client about the adequacy of his legal services. (Tr. at 23).

Based upon the evidence presented by the parties, the bankruptcy court found that at least a $500 reduction was warranted. (Tr. at 19). No further hearing was necessary. Sullivan, 935 F.2d at 727. But the bankruptcy court allowed Mr. Marshall to present further arguments in his favor, (tr. at 19), and offered Mr. Marshall the opportunity to more thoroughly present his case in a subsequent evidentiary hearing. (Tr. at 24). Mr. Marshall declined the bankruptcy court's offer. Id. Thus, Mr. Marshall had adequate notice and an opportunity to be heard. 11 U.S.C. § 102(1)(B)(I); see Int'l Transactions, 347 F.3d at 594; cf. United Student Aid Funds, Inc. v. Espinosa, No. 08-1134, slip op., __ S. Ct. __, 2010 WL 1027825 at *9 (U.S. Mar. 23, 2010) ("Neither the Code nor the Rules prevent the parties from stipulating to the underlying facts . . . and neither prevents the creditor from waiving service of a summons and complaint).

Mr. Marshall fails to explain how the due process afforded by the bankruptcy court was an abuse of discretion, either by applying an improper legal standard or by resting its decision on findings of fact that are clearly erroneous. Caplin & Drysdale, 526 F.3d at 826.

Mr. Marshall provides no authority for his averment that "arguments made by counsel are not a substitute for a hearing," why the affidavit that Mr. Marshall submitted to the court could not be considered, or how the statement of Mr. Frank did not provide any benefit to the court. (App. Br. at 9). And although Mr. Marshall could have submitted additional evidence, Mr. Marshall does not explain how a subsequent hearing would be necessary to protect his due process rights after having waived them for the benefit of settling the issue. Because Mr. Marshall cannot support these arguments, they are waived. Rush Truck Center of Tex. v. Bouchie (In re Bouchie), 324 F.3d 780, 786 (5th Cir. 2003) (holding that failure to cite authority for a position results in waiver).

Nor is there any question whether the bankruptcy court abused its discretion by reducing Mr. Marshall's fee request from $2,250 to $1,750. Mr. Marshall made seven errors in his representation of the Franks: (1) Mr. Marshall failed to pay the filing fee when he filed the case on behalf of the Franks. (Tr. at 8). (2) Mr. Marshall failed to submit Mr. Frank's proof of income in a timely manner. (Tr. at 7-8). (3) Mr. Marshall failed to correctly calculate Mrs. Frank's income in the proposed chapter 13 repayment plan. Id. (4) Mr. Marshall failed to correctly calculate the amount of the proceeds distributed to unsecured creditors by the proposed chapter 13 repayment plan. Id. (5) Mr. Marshall failed to include the correct case number on a motion for a continuance. (Tr. at 8). (6) Mr. Marshall failed to submit a proposed order on a motion for a continuance, as requested by the bankruptcy court. Id. (7) Mr. Marshall failed to appear at the confirmation hearing on the proposed chapter 13 repayment plan. (Tr. at 7). These failures resulted in an almost three and a half month delay in the administration of the Franks' bankruptcy case. Id. Based upon this record, the bankruptcy court's decision to reduce Mr. Marshall's fee request was not clearly erroneous. Stanley, 597 F.3d at 304. Accordingly, Mr. Marshall fails to raise any point of reversible error.

CONCLUSION

For these reasons, the United States Trustee respectfully asks this Court to affirm the order entered below.

I. STATEMENT OF APPELLATE JURISDICTION

This is an appeal of a final judgment and corresponding written opinion from the United States Bankruptcy Court for the Eastern District of Oklahoma denying James Clinton Garland's discharge under 11 U.S.C. § 727(a)(2), (4) and (5).[1] No party elected to have this appeal heard by the District Court. The Bankruptcy Appellate Panel has jurisdiction over this appeal under 28 U.S.C. § 158. See also FED. R. BANKR. P. 8002; 10th Cir. BAP L.R. 8001-1(a) & (d).

Appellant, James Clinton Garland, contends the Rooker-Feldman doctrine deprives the Bankruptcy Court of jurisdiction. The contention is not well founded. See Lance v. Dennis, 546 U.S. 459, 126 S.Ct. 1198, 163 L.Ed.2d 1059 (2006). A detailed discussion of the Rooker-Feldman argument is contained in the argument portion of this brief.

II. STATEMENT OF ISSUES PRESENTED AND STANDARD OF APPELLATE REVIEW

A. Issues On Appeal

1 Do pre-petition state court foreclosure judgments deprive the United States Bankruptcy Court of jurisdiction over the objection to Garland's bankruptcy discharge?

2. Do pre-petition foreclosure judgments in which the Internal Revenue Service was a defendant preclude the United States Trustee from litigating an objection to Garland's discharge?

[1] The Bankruptcy Abuse Prevention and Consumer Protection Act of 2005 ("BAPCPA"), generally went into effect on October 17, 2005. Because the underlying bankruptcy case was filed on August 25, 2005, the changes effectuated by BAPCPA do not apply to this case, however, 11 U.S.C. § 727(a)(2), (4) & (5) were not changed by BAPCPA. Unless otherwise noted, citations to the Bankruptcy Code codified at Title 11 of the United States Code are to the Code before it was modified by BAPCPA.

3. Are the Bankruptcy Court's findings of fact which are based on stipulated facts, two days of testimony and over 200 admitted exhibits, clearly erroneous?

B. Standard of Review

The Bankruptcy Appellate Panel reviews the Bankruptcy Court's conclusions of law de novo. See Mathai v. Warren (In re Warren), 512 F.3d 1241, 1248 (10th Cir. 2008). The Tenth Circuit Court of Appeals has noted the Bankruptcy Code should be construed liberally in favor of a debtor and strictly against a creditor objecting to a discharge. See In re Warren, 512 F.3d at 1248. Nevertheless, the bankruptcy discharge is intended for the "honest but unfortunate debtor." See Grogan v. Garner, 498 U.S. 279, 286-887, 111 S.Ct. 654, 112 L.Ed.2d 755 (1991). The Panel reviews the Bankruptcy Court's findings of fact for clear error.[2] See id.

A finding of fact is clearly erroneous if it is without factual support in the record or if, after reviewing all of the evidence, the reviewing court is left with the definite and firm conviction that a mistake has been made. See Connolly v. Harris Trust Company of Calif. (In re Miniscribe Corp.), 309 F.3d 1234, 1240 (10th Cir. 2002). "The bankruptcy court's findings should not be disturbed absent the 'most cogent reasons in the record.'" In re Miniscribe Corp., 309 F.3d at 1240. The facts are to be reviewed in the light most favorable to the trial judge's factual findings. See Gillman v. Ford (In re Ford), 492 F.3d 1148, 1154 (10th Cir. 2007). What inferences, deductions and conclusions should be drawn from the evidence are left to the sound discretion of the trial judge. See id.

[2] FED. R. BANKR. P. 7052 requires a bankruptcy court to make findings of fact and conclusions of law. This requirement is satisfied as long as the court's findings clearly show an appellate court the basis for the Bankruptcy Court's decision. See Bell v. AT & T, 946 F.2d 1507, 1510 (10th Cir. 1991). The United States Trustee bore the burden of proving his objection to discharge by a preponderance of the evidence. See In re Warren, 512 F.3d 1241.

III. STATEMENT OF THE CASE

A. Nature And Disposition Of The Case Below

James Clinton Garland, appeals the judgment and opinion denying his discharge under 11 U.S.C. § 727 (a)(2), (4) and (5) for: (1) Concealing his interest in various corporate entities, accounts and his equitable or beneficial interest in his ninety acre residence; (2) Making false oaths regarding the concealed interests; and (3) Failing to explain satisfactorily the loss or deficiency of his assets to meet his liabilities.

On August 25, 2005, Garland, an attorney, filed his voluntary chapter 7 petition. (Appx., Vol. 1, 25) Garland filed an adversary proceeding against the United States of America, Department of the Treasury, Internal Revenue Service (collectively referred to as the "IRS"). It seeks a determination under 11 U.S.C. § 523(a)(1) that his personal federal income tax liabilities, including penalties and interest, for the years 1992, 1993, 1995, 1998, 1999, and 2000, are dischargeable. (Appx. Vol. 1, 1-3) The complaint also requests the Bankruptcy Court permanently enjoin the IRS from attempting to collect the taxes. The IRS filed an answer to the complaint. (Appx. Vol. 1, 4-7)

The United States Trustee timely filed a complaint seeking to deny Garland's discharge under 11 U.S.C. § 727(a)(2), (4) and (5). (Appx. Vol. 1, 8-16; 24) It alleges Garland concealed his interest in, and made false oaths about, corporate entities and his residence and failed to satisfactorily explain any loss of assets or deficiency of assets to meet his liabilities. Garland filed an answer to the complaint. (Appx. Vol. 1, 17-19)

The two adversary proceedings were consolidated. (Appx. Vol. 1, 21, 24) Garland filed a motion for summary judgment. (Appx. Vol. 7167) He argued, among other things, the Rooker-Feldman Doctrine, res judicata and collateral estoppel barred the IRS and the United States Trustee from asserting he had any interest in his residence or A-Don Corporation ("A-Don"). Garland's argument relied on pre-petition foreclosure judgments in favor of A-Don naming the IRS as a defendant. The second foreclosure judgment was entered pursuant to a settlement where A-Don actually paid the IRS. (Appx. Vol. 1, 28-29; Vol. XIV, 4767) The motion for summary judgment was denied.

A pretrial order was entered. (Appx. Vol. 1, 22-34) It included numerous factual stipulations and superceded all previous pleadings. At the commencement of trial, Garland's counsel advised the court he "intend[ed] to raise that objection again . . . ." (Appx. Vol 1, 192: 4-11) During the trial, Garland's counsel objected to admission of evidence regarding Garland's interests in his residence based on the issues raised in the motion for summary judgment. The court noted it rejected the arguments when it denied Garland's motion for summary judgment and allowed the evidence in. (Appx. Vol. 2, 337)

After a two day trial and admission of over 200 exhibits, the Bankruptcy Court issued a thirty-four page opinion detailing its factual findings and legal conclusions. (Appx. Vol. 1, 35-68) On March 31, 2008, the Bankruptcy Court entered the judgment denying Garland's discharge under 11 U.S.C. § 727(a)(2), (4) and (5). Because Garland's discharge was denied, the court did not rule on his claim that his federal taxes were dischargeable. On April 9, 2008, Garland filed a notice of appeal of the judgment and the corresponding opinion.

B. Statement Of Facts

The court's opinion describes Garland as one of the most interesting and complex persons to come before the Bankruptcy Judge during his fourteen years of service as a Bankruptcy Judge.

(Appx. Vol. 1, 42) Garland is an experienced attorney who handled class action litigation. (Appx. Vol. 1, 218:24-25; 219:1-5) Garland testified he also "handled a lot of tax evasion cases. . . ", "dealt extensively in money laundering cases" and keeps detailed income records. (Appx. Vol. 1, 219:6-18; 220:3-9; Vol. V, 1524:13-21) Although not disclosed in his schedule I, Garland is married and his wife has a seed business in Bogata, Columbia. (Appx. Vol. 1, 232:17-25; 233:1-12)

The court found Garland is not an "honest but unfortunate debtor." (Appx. Vol. 1, 62) Garland deliberately concealed assets and omitted information about them in his bankruptcy papers in order to appear destitute to his creditors. (Appx. Vol. 1, 64, 67)

Garland scheduled disputed federal tax obligations of $1,157,488 in schedule E. (Appx. Vol. V, 1286-1287) He listed debts totaling $560,046 in schedule F. (App. Vol. V, 1288-1291) Garland indicated in his schedule A that he had no legal or equitable interests in real estate when, in fact, he had an equitable or beneficial interest in his residence located on 90 acres of land. (Appx. Vol. 1, 5-8, 22, 57) Statement of financial affairs question 14 required him to "[l]ist all property owned by another person that the debtor holds or controls." He disclosed a 1992 and 1993 vehicle but failed to disclose his residence, held in his son's name, where Garland had lived continuously since 1981. (Appx. Vol. 1, 22; Vol. 1, 5-8; Vol. V. 1302)

Garland stated in schedule B that all of his personal property was only worth $3,000. (Appx. Vol. V, 1280-1282) He also stated he only had one bank account. (Appx. Vol. V, 1280) In fact, he was an authorized signer on various corporate bank accounts. (Appx. Vol. 1, 57-58; Vol. 2, 592-593; Vol. XIII, 4450- Vol. XIV, 4667) He used substantial funds from the accounts for his personal use, including making mortgage payments for the residence. (Appx. Vol. 1, 154-

156, 159, Vol. 2, 301-306:1-16; 589:8-13; 590:8-9, 14-20; 592:6-16; Vol. 3, 604; Vol. XVIII 6164-6299) He did not disclose his control of these accounts in statement of financial affairs question 14. (Appx. Vol. 1, 58)

Garland stated in schedule B that the only interest he had in any incorporated and unincorporated businesses was a worthless interest in James Clinton Garland, P.C. (Appx. Vol. 1, 199-200; Vol. V, 1281) Statement of financial affairs question 18 required information about all businesses in which Garland was an officer, director, partner, or managing executive of a corporation, sole proprietor, or self-employed within six years before filing bankruptcy. Garland marked "none" in response to this question. (Appx. Vol. V, 1304) He failed to disclose numerous entities through which he funneled money to himself. (Appx. Vol. V, 26, 51-52; Appx. Vol. Vol. XIII, 4450- Vol. XIV, 4667)

Garland stated in schedule I that he received monthly income of $1,150 from social security and $2,000 as "Counsel to Commercial Litigation Group." (Appx. Vol. V, 1294) He indicated in his statement of financial affairs questions 1 and 2 that his annual gross income from these sources for 2005, 2004 and 2003 were, respectively, $25,200, $35,776 and $20,331. His income from funds funneled through the various entities was actually substantially higher. (Appx. Vol. 1, 52; Vol. V, 1298-1299; Vol. XIX, 6329, 6334, 6340)

A summary of the court's findings is set forth below and is followed by a narrative summary of the evidence supporting the findings.

i. Summary Of The Court's Section 727(a)(2) Findings

Garland concealed his interests as a corporate officer or partner of Savol Enterprises, Inc. ("Savol"), A-Don, the Jagar Family Limited Partnership ("Jagar"), and Commercial Litigation

Group. (Appx. Vol. 1, 58) He also concealed his signature authority in undisclosed checking accounts and his equitable or beneficial interest in his residence. (Appx. Vol. 1, 56-57)[3]

Garland had an equitable or beneficial interest in his residence. (Appx. Vol. 1, 57) Garland alone exercised dominion and control over his residence. (Id.) He retained the benefits of ownership which, in part, included the right to live there rent free. (Id.) He employed many schemes to keep the residence in the family. (Appx. Vol. 1, 61-62) The various transfers of Garland's residence were not arm's length transactions and always involved family, friends or close business associates. (Appx. Vol. 1, 61) Garland has always resided there and remained in control. (Appx. Vol. 1, 62) "[T]he timing of these transfers was meant to keep Garland one step ahead of the IRS's collection action against him and planned with the intention of keeping the property out of reach of the IRS." (Appx. Vol. 1, 50)

Garland continuously concealed his interests in the business entities, accounts and residence during the year before he filed bankruptcy. (Appx. Vol.1, 59, 62; Vol. 2, 592-93) He continued his "scheme to defraud" by concealing his interests in the entities, accounts and residence when he filed his bankruptcy and failed to disclose them. (Appx. Vol. 1, 61) Garland did this because he wanted the trustee to believe his case was a simple no-asset case. (Appx. Vol. 1, 61) He intended to hinder, delay and defraud his creditors. (Appx. Vol. 1, 61-62)

ii. Summary Of The Court's Section 727(a)(4)(A) Findings

The United States Trustee established "by more than a preponderance of the evidence that Garland's omission of assets and ownership interests from his bankruptcy schedules and statement of financial affairs was a false oath made knowingly and fraudulently, and related to material facts." (Appx. Vol. 1, 66)

The court had an "ample opportunity to observe Garland over the course of the two day trial and assess his demeanor and credibility while he explained the reasons for the omissions from his schedules . . . ." (Appx. Vol. 1, 64) The court was "convinced the omissions were not the result of any confusion, ignorance, mistake, or carelessness." (Id.) "[T]he omissions were a result of a deliberate decision to withhold the information from [the] Court, the Bankruptcy Trustee, and Garland's creditors." (Id.)

Garland made material false oaths in his bankruptcy by failing to disclose his role as an officer in various business entities, his signature authority and control of various undisclosed bank accounts and his interest in his residence. (Appx. Vol. 1, 64-65) He admitted he signed his schedules and statement of financial affairs under penalty of perjury. (Appx. Vol. 1, 64)

Garland's omissions were material because they related to his business dealings, the discovery of assets, and the existence or disposition of his property. (Appx. Vol. 1, 65) The chapter 7 trustee would have investigated further if he had accurate information about Garland's financial affairs. (Appx. Vol. 1, 65)

iii. Summary Of The Court's Section 727(a)(5) Findings

The United States Trustee proved a loss or shrinkage of assets occurred. (Appx. Vol. 1, 6) Garland "had access to significant assets, specifically, the undisclosed checking accounts, the Residence, funds or loans from Patrick Walters and Dr. Bundren . . . " and he "diverted funds to his own personal use . . . " (Appx. Vol. 1, 66) He had significant income in the years in which the original taxes were assessed and he had sufficient income to pay the taxes. (Appx. Vol. 1, 67) Garland failed to satisfactorily explain the loss or deficiency of assets. (Id.)

Garland failed to explain why he reported total annual income ranging from $15,000 to $30,000 each year from 2002 through 2005 in his tax returns while the evidence showed he received payments from checking accounts ranging from about $27,000 to $71,000 during the same years. (Appx. Vol. 1, 67) Garland failed to reconcile the discrepancy between his tax returns and the checking account payments to himself, even though he testified accountants tediously went through the checking account records and counted all of the payments to him as income. (Appx. Vol. 1, 67)

Garland had access "to significant assets but chose to conceal those assets in order to appear destitute to his creditors . . . ." (Appx. Vol. 1, 67) Garland failed to object to or explain the IRS' summary of his personal expenses, evidencing "his personal expenses that were paid out of the concealed checking accounts, often with checks signed by Garland, [were] for the purpose of obscuring the true nature of his financial affairs." (Id.) The court was left to speculate how Garland lost his considerable income and assets. (Id.)

iv. Summary Of Supporting Evidence

The evidence in this case was extensive. An abbreviated summary of the evidence supporting the Bankruptcy Court's findings follows. A brief description of the bankruptcy case and key players is followed by a narrative summary. Many of the facts were stipulated to in the pretrial order. (Appx. Vol. 1, 23-29)

a. The Bankruptcy Schedules and Statement of Financial Affairs

Garland completed a client information worksheet for his bankruptcy attorney. (Appx.

Vol. 1, 221:22-25; 222:1-2; Vol. V, 1315)[4] He understood his bankruptcy attorney would use the information from the worksheet to complete his bankruptcy papers. (Appx. Vol. 1, 223:1-12) The information provided by Garland in the worksheets is generally consistent with the information in his petition, schedules and statement of financial affairs. (Appx. Vol. V, 1315-1336)

The worksheet stated "List all property OWNED by another person that the debtor (you or you and your spouse) holds or controls." [Emphasis contained in the original document.] Garland wrote "none" and "ask Ron."(Appx. Vol. 1, 226:11-25; 227:1-20; Vol. V, 1329) Ron Wright was Garland's bankruptcy attorney. (Appx. Vol. V, 1268) When asked to explain, Garland testified he asked his attorney about two vehicles he drove but which were owned by Commercial Litigation Group. (Appx. Vol. 1, 227:1-20)

When questioned why he didn't list his residence, for which title was held by his son, Garland testified he didn't think he "held" or "possessed" the residence. (Appx. Vol. 1, 29; 228:10-25; 229:1-10) He testified he disclosed two vehicles he "holds." (Appx. Vol. 1, 229:1-9) When asked how did he "hold" the vehicles, he testified he "used them." (Appx. Vol. 1, 229:9-10). He then testified as follows:

Q. Did you hold the residence in Tahlequah where you lived?

A. I sleep there.

Q. You sleep there. You do more than sleep there, don't you?

A. Well, I maintain the property.

Q. You live there. That's your residence. In fact, it's a stipulated fact you've been there since the 1980's. Isn't that correct?

A. Since 1995, I have resided there.

Q. That's your home, isn't it?

A. It's not my home. It is where I reside.

Q. All the furniture in that residence is your furniture, is it not?

A. It is not.

Q. You use that furniture?

A. I use it .

. . . Q You've never moved out of there, have you, since 1995?

A. No.

Q. And in fact you oversaw the construction of a pool and a garage there, didn't you?

A. I did. . .

Q. You use that property don't you?

A. Of course I do.

Q. And that was the definition you just used in your own testimony to explain what holding means?

A. Well, that is --

Q. Let me finish the question. You understood at that time that you held that property and it needed to be disclosed didn't you?

A. No, I did not."

Garland verified the information in his schedules and statement of financial affairs by signing them under penalty of perjury. (Appx. Vol. 1, 25) No amendments were filed. (Appx. Vol. 1, 25) At his first meeting of creditors Garland testified under oath that he read his petition, schedules and statement of financial affairs before he signed them, he was personally familiar with the information in them, to the best of his knowledge the information in them was true and correct and that he disclosed all of his assets and liabilities. (Appx. Vol. 1, 25; 231:18-25; 232:1-10) Based on his representations, the chapter 7 trustee determined there would be no distribution to creditors and filed a no asset report. (Appx. Vol. 1, 25; 195:3-25; 196-204:1-11) Had there been accurate disclosures, the trustee would have investigated further. (Appx. Vol. 1, 195:3-25; 196-204:1-11)

Garland scheduled disputed federal tax debt of $1,157,488 and general unsecured debt of $560,046. (Appx. Vol. V, 1286-1291) He represented in his schedules that he has no interests in any real estate and only $3,000 worth of personal property. (Appx. Vol. V, 1279-1282) In fact, he enjoyed uninterrupted occupancy of his residence without paying rent. (Appx. Vol. 1, 26, 27, 29; Appx. Vol. V, 1295) Garland's response to statement of financial affairs question 14 failed to disclose he held or controlled his residence. (Appx. Vol. V, 1302)

Garland indicated in schedule B that he had only one bank account with a balance of $500.00. (Appx. Vol. V, 1280) In fact, he had signature authority on numerous bank accounts held in the names of Commercial Litigation Group, Jagar Family Limited Partnership, Savol Enterprises, Inc., Savol Enterprises, Inc., Special Escrow Account, Karen Hassler Trust and a social security account. (Appx. Vol. 1, 26; Vol. VI, 2396, 2398; Vol. XVII, 5901, 5908, 5910, 5919, 5921, 5945, 5946, 5957, 5958, 5965)

Garland indicated in schedule I that his only income was $1,150 from Social Security and $2,000 of "other" income from "Counsel to Commercial Litigation Group." (Appx. Vol. V, 1294) Statement of financial affairs question 1 indicates he made $16,000 in 2005, $21,976 in 2004 and $20,331 in 2003, all from Commercial Litigation Group. (Appx. Vol. V, 1294) Statement of financial affairs question 2 indicates the only other income he received in 2005 and 2004 was from social security. (Appx. Vol. V, 1299) In fact, Garland received substantial sums of money during these periods of time from the various undisclosed accounts for which he had signature authority. (Appx. Vol. 1, 254-258; 294 -300; Vol. 3, 602-606; Vol. XIII, 4450-4520; Vol. XIV 4521-4667; Vol. XVIII, 6067, 6295-6299)

In response to statement of financial affairs question 18, which requests information about businesses in which he was an officer, partner, etc., Garland marked "none." (Appx. Vol. V, 1304). In fact, he failed to disclose that at relevant times he was an officer or director of Southwest Industrial & Investment Enterprises, Inc., Savol Enterprises, Inc. (Appx. Vol. VI, 1938 -1942) Further, James Garland, P.C. had been a partner of Commercial Litigation Group during relevant times and, even after he claimed to have resigned, Garland had check writing authority for Commercial Litigation Group. (Appx. Vol. VI, 1940) The facts set forth below also indicate Garland controlled A-Don.

b. Patrick Walters

Patrick Walters and Garland have known each other since 1978. (Appx. Vol. 1, 267; Vol. V, 1496:22-25; 1497:1-25; 1498:17-25; 1499:1-7) Their relationship was very "integrated." (Appx. Vol. 2, 487:4-11) Garland believed Walters was his best friend. (Appx. Vol. 1, 273:2-6) Walters, a CPA, prepared Garland's tax returns since the 1970's, until around 2000 or 2001.

(Appx. Vol. 2, 492; 502) Walters prepared federal partnership returns for Jagar. (Appx. Vol. 19, 6465-6467, 6496, 6500, 6517, 6537) Walters referred clients to Garland. (Appx. Vol. 1, 273:6-9) Since 1998, Garland has received hundreds of thousands of dollars in "loans" from Walters. (Appx. Vol. 1, 267:11-14) These loans were made to Garland in his individual capacity. (Appx. Vol. 1, 267:15-18) According to Garland, some loans were never memorialized by a writing and specific terms were not agreed upon. (Appx. Vol. 1, 267:18-25; 268-270)

For example, in 1998, Walters loaned Garland about $200,000 from the Anthony Spencer Trust while Garland represented Anthony Spencer on an appeal from a conviction for tax evasion. (Appx. Vol. 1, 219:16-18; 269:4-11; 270:1-15, 24-25; 272; Vol. VII, 1999-2001) The same day Garland received the funds, he cut a check for $35,000.00 from the loan proceeds back to Walters. (Appx. Vol. 1, 273:19-25) Garland testified it did not seem unusual to him to receive a $200,000 loan without first agreeing to the terms of the loan and memorializing them in writing. (Appx. Vol. 1, 270:20-23) In fact, Garland used the loan, in part, to pay for his living expenses. (Appx. Vol. 1, 271:1-15) In February 2001, Walters, in his capacity as trustee of the Spencer Trust, "loaned" Garland another $35,000. (Appx. Vol. VII, 2156)

c. Dr. Clark Bundren

Dr. Clark Bundren and Garland have a longstanding relationship. Garland has represented Bundren in numerous matters since 1986. (Appx. Vol. 1, 77:22-25; 274:4-6)[5] In the year 2000, Garland represented Bundren before the Tax Court. (Appx. Vol. 1, 80:8-19; 274:7-9) In 2007 Garland represented Bundren on appeal. (Appx. Vol. 1, 77:21-24; 79:1-7; 80:7-8; [5] Bundren was unavailable to testify at trial. His deposition transcript was received into evidence by agreement.

274:10-13) Bundren, a physician, delivered two of Garland's children. (Appx. Vol. 1, 80:25; 274:20-22) Bundren and Garland have gone fishing together. (Appx. Vol. 1, 126:20-25; 274:23-25) Garland's family has been to Bundren's home. (Appx. Vol. 1, 81:12-13; 275:1-5)

Bundren and Walters have a longstanding relationship. (Appx. Vol. 2, 488:3-14) Bundren first contacted Walters for accounting services in 1982 and has worked closely with Walters to the present time. (Appx. Vol. 1, 82:1-3, 5-6; 276:17-24; Vol. 2, 488; 3-14)

d. The Transfers of the Residence

Garland stipulated in the pretrial order that he has continuously lived at his residence in Tahlequah, Oklahoma since at least 1981. (Appx. Vol 1, 5) He stipulated the residence consists of a house and ninety acres. (Appx. Vol. 1, 5) The house has over 5,000 square feet, a swimming pool, tennis courts, and a seven car garage. (Appx. Vol. 1, 233:13-15; Vol. 2, 466:12-25)

In November 1993, the IRS assessed Garland $54,903 in unpaid taxes for the 1992 tax year based on taxable income $154,419. (Appx. Vol. 2, 238:19-21; XVII, 5851-5852) In November 1994, the IRS assessed Garland $193,827 in unpaid taxes for the 1993 tax year based on taxable income of $601,762. (Appx. Vol. 2, 238:19-21; XVII, 5854-5855) He was later assessed unpaid federal income taxes for the years of 1995, 1998, 1999 and 2000. (Appx. Vol. 1, 23, 24; Vol. 17, 5851-5870)

1. Tax Problems And The Transfer To Jagar

In 1993, Garland formed the Jagar Family Limited Partnership ("Jagar"). (Appx. Vol. 1, 26, 244; Vol. VII, 2025-2041). He named himself and family members as limited partners. (Appx. Vol. 1, 26, 244; Vol. VII, 2025-2041) None of the family members made any capital contributions to Jagar. (Appx. Vol. 1, 105:2-8) Garland never caused Jagar to make any reports to its purported limited partners. (Appx. Vol. 1, 262:22-25, 263:1-4) Southwest Industrial Enterprises, Inc., also known as Southwest Industrial and Investment Enterprises, Inc ("Southwest"), was the general partner. (Appx. Vol. 1, 26) Since Garland was Southwest's president, he served as Jagar's general partner. (Appx. Vol. 1, 26) Garland signed a sworn statement in 1991 stating Southwest was his wholly owned company. (Appx. Vol. VII, 2021; Vol. 1, 235:20-23) Garland titled vehicles under Southwest's name over the course of several years when his federal income taxes were delinquent. (Appx. Vol. 1, 236, 237:1-13; Vol. VII, 2022; 2024)

In January 1994, Garland, as sole owner of the residence, signed a deed transferring it to Jagar. (Appx. Vol. 1, 26; Vol. XIV, 4671-4673) The deed was recorded on December 29, 1994. (Appx. Vol. XIV, 4673) The only consideration Garland received was a limited partnership interest in Jagar. (Appx. Vol. 1, 26) The residence was Jagar's only asset. (Appx. Vol. 1, 26) Garland continued to reside in the residence but did not pay rent to Jagar. (Appx. Vol. 1, 26)

In March 1995, the IRS recorded a Notice of Federal Tax Lien against Garland for the unpaid 1992 and 1993 taxes totaling $255,515. (Appx. Vol. 1, 26-27) Garland appointed Walters, his CPA, as attorney in fact to represent him before the IRS. (Appx. Vol. XIV, 4676)

In 1997, Garland executed a partnership agreement for a law firm known as Commercial Litigation Group. (Appx. Vol. VII, 2125-2130) In 1998 the firm consisted of James Clinton Garland, P.C., appellant's professional corporation, James C. Garland, III, P.C. and William Joseph Garland. (Appx. Vol. VII, 2131) Garland testified his class action litigation practice dried up after the IRS filed a pre-judgment garnishment against an anticipated attorney's fees award. (Appx. Vol. 1, 266:8-12; Vol. 2, 326:7-25; 327:1-11)

In October 1999, the IRS filed a Notice of Federal Tax Lien against Jagar as Garland's nominee. (Appx. Vol. 1, 27). In November 1999, Garland filed a request for a collection due process hearing contending the nominee tax lien was an abuse of discretion. (Appx. Vol. 1, 27) In September 2000, the IRS issued a Notice of Determination that the nominee tax lien was proper. (Appx. Vol. 1, 27). In October 2000, Garland filed a collection due process case in the United States Tax Court alleging the IRS erred by upholding the nominee tax lien. (Appx. Vol. 1, 27)

2. Garland Incorporates A-Don, It Acquires A Mortgage And Forecloses

In December 2000, Garland and his son, William Garland, incorporated A-Don. (Appx. Vol. 1, 267:1-7; Appx. Vol. 3, 607:12-15; Vol. VII, 2375) Garland testified he knew A-Don was being incorporated in order to purchase the mortgage secured against the residence and then foreclose. (Appx. Vol. 1, 266:1-25) The mortgage was senior to the IRS's tax liens. (Appx. Vol. 1, 27; Vol. XIV, 4681-4690) In January 2001, Walters was elected A-Don's president and William became its secretary, A-Don's only officers. (Appx. Vol. 1, 27; Appx. VIII, 2376) Garland was A-Don's agent for service of process. (Appx. Vol. VIII, 2374)

Garland testified Walters asked him to create A-Don. (Appx. Vol. 1, 265:2-12) Walters admitted at trial he was "involved in the design of this scheme for foreclosure" but also asserted Garland was involved and agreed to it. (Appx. Vol. 2, 496:16-17; 497:1-8, 23-25; 498:1) Walters testified he, Garland and holders of a mortgage "came up with a plan to form A-Don, put the mortgage in there, put the house and everything in there, clean up the problems with it and sell it, him pay it off, someone else buy it." (Appx. Vol. 2, 490:5-8)

One of the "problems" to clean up was the IRS' tax liens. (Appx. Vol. 2, 490:21-25; 491:5-21) This could be done by foreclosing on a mortgage senior to the IRS's tax liens. Walters was the trustee of Radiology Profit Sharing Plan, which held such a mortgage. (Appx. Vol. 1, 27; Vol. 2, 534:2-4; Vol. XIV, 4668-4670; 4678-4679; 4681) Its mortgage was originally made in 1988 with Walters, in his capacity as the Plan's trustee, as the mortgagor and Garland as the mortgagee. (Appx. Vol. XIV, 4668-4670) No mortgage payments were ever made under this mortgage. (Appx. Vol. 2, 534:8-10)

In March 2001, A-Don purchased the mortgage, secured against Garland's residence, from Profit Sharing Plan and Trust of Radiology, Inc. for $125,000. (Appx. Vol. 1, 27, 104:4-10; Vol. XIV 4681) The residence was worth over $365,000. (Appx. Vol. 1, 103:20-25:104:1-2; Vol. XIV, 4704) In fact, A-Don didn't pay Radiology Profit Sharing Plan until after the foreclosure was completed. (Appx. Vol. 2, 11-16)

In June 2001, A-Don filed an action to foreclose the mortgage. (Appx. Vol. 1, 27; Vol. XIV, 4682) Walters signed the verification for the foreclosure petition. (Appx. Vol. 2, 492:11-21; Vol. XIV, 4687) The legal description in the petition left out 20 acres. (Appx. Vol. 1, 28) The IRS denied the foreclosure petition's allegations except to admit it had an interest in the residence by virtue of its tax liens against Garland and Jagar and asked that their priority be determined. (Appx. Vol. 1, 27; Vol. XIX, 6567-6572) The journal entry of judgment entered on October 3, 2001, decreed the tax liens were inferior to the mortgage and indebtedness of A-Don. (Appx. Vol. 1, 27-28)

$2,000 and Bundren for $8,000.00. (Appx. Vol. 1, 292:9-25; 293:1-17; Vol. VII, 2175) In a letter dated July 27, 2001, Bank of America advised Garland the amount required to pay off its mortgage secured against the residence was $21,020 plus daily interest of $4.19. (Appx. Vol. XIV, 4691) A-Don executed a promissory note dated July 30, 2001, in the amount of $21,029 in favor of Southwest. (Appx. Vol. VII, 2379) Garland controlled Southwest, as evidenced by a June 16, 2000, letter signed by Garland as Southwest's president. (Appx. Vol. VII, 2019) A-Don then paid off Bank of America's mortgage. (Vol., 1, 27; Vol. XIV, 4694)

In October 2001, the foreclosure judgment decreeing the IRS' tax liens were inferior to A-Don's mortgage was entered. (Appx. Vol. 1, 28; Vol. XIV, 4695, 4698) The judgment was signed off by an Assistant United States Attorney. (Appx. Vol. XIV, 4700) In November 2001, the notice of sheriff's sale was served. (Appx. Vol. XIV, 4701). In December 2001, the residence was appraised as being worth $385,000. (Appx. Vol. XIV, 4704) On December 26, 2001, A-Don obtained title to the residence, less the omitted 20 acres, by credit bidding $270,000. (Appx. Vol. 1, 28; Appx. Vol. XIV, 4726) In light of the foreclosure judgment, Garland's Tax Court proceeding challenging the tax liens was dismissed on January 29, 2002, as being moot. (Appx. Vol. XIV, 4725)

Walters testified he had a falling out with Garland and sold A-Don to Bundren for a mere $100. (Appx. Vol. 1, 28; Vol. 2, 498:5-11; 501:13-23; 502:8-25; 503:1-12) On December 4, 2001, Walters executed an assignment of A-Don's stock to American Reproductive Technologies, Inc., Bundren's corporation, dated December 4, 2001. (Appx. Vol. 2, 499:21-25; 500:1-14; Vol. VIII, 2380) Walters sold Southwest to Bundren for $100. (Appx. Vol. 2, 500:15-25; 501:1-9) Walters executed an assignment of Southwest's stock, dated March 2002, directly to Bundren. (Appx. Vol. 1, 98:21-25; 99:1-12; 100:3-18; 101:1-5; 104:4-19; 277:1-9; Vol. 2, 499:18-25; 500:15-25; 501:1-9; Vol. VIII, 2381) Nevertheless, Garland responded to a subpoena on behalf of Southwest as late as September 18, 2006. (Appx. Vol. VII, 2020)

In January 2002, Garland executed a resignation from Commercial Litigation Group. (Appx. Vol. VII, 2137) He continued to have signature authority on Commercial Litigation Group's accounts and write checks for his personal use. (Appx. Vol. 1, 294 - 300) The checks he signed included rent payments to A-Don from 2002 through 2005 and mortgage payments for the residence, even after he filed bankruptcy. (Vol. 3, 655:23-25; 656:1-25; Appx. Vol. VII, 2158-2173)

3. A-Don Leases The Residence To Commercial Litigation Group

On September 30, 2002, A-Don leased the residence to Commercial Litigation Group for a period of three years. (Appx. Vol. 1, 28; Vol. XIV, 4730) The lease states it is a "Commercial Cattle Ranch Lease" and the property shall not be used for any other purpose without prior written consent. (Appx. Vol. XIV, 4730, 4731) It makes no reference to Garland living at the residence. The residence has never been used as a cattle ranch. (Appx. Vol. 1, 278:16-18) Garland never paid rent to Commercial Litigation Group. (Appx. Vol. 1, 278:19-22) Garland did, however, sign numerous checks from Commercial Litigation Group to A-Don for rent from October 2002 through January 2005. (Appx. Vol. VII, 2158-2173)

A-Don also provided Commercial Litigation Group an assignable option to purchase the residence at the price of $175,000. (Appx. Vol. 1, 28; Appx. Vol. XIV, 4745) Commercial Litigation Group paid $10 for the assignable option. (Appx. Vol. 1, 28)

4. A-Don Forecloses The 20 Acres Left Out Of The First Foreclosure

On September 10, 2002, A-Don filed a second foreclosure petition to foreclose on the previously omitted 20 acres. (Appx. Vol. 1, 28; Vol. XIX, 6573-6581) Bundren signed the verification of the second foreclosure petition. (Appx. Vol. XIX, 6578) The second foreclosure action was removed by the IRS to the United States District Court. (Appx. Vol. 1, 28) The IRS asserted A-Don was an instrumentality of Garland and the foreclosure was a sham. (Appx. Vol. 1, 28; Vol. XIX, 6583-6586) At a settlement conference, the IRS settled with A-Don. (Appx. Vol. 1, 28; Vol. XXI, 7145-7146) The settlement required the parties to obtain an appraisal of the 20 acres and A-Don to pay the IRS for its tax liens against the 20 acres. (Appx. Vol. XXI, 7145). A-Don paid the IRS $8,000 pursuant to the settlement, the case was remanded back to state court and a journal entry of judgment was entered. (Appx. Vol. 1, 28-29; Vol. XIV, 4767) The judgment notes the settlement between the IRS and A-Don and makes no findings as to whether A-Don was Garland's instrumentality or whether the foreclosure was a sham. (Appx. Vol. XIV, 4767) A-Don acquired title to the 20 acres by credit bidding at the Sheriff's sale. (Appx. Vol. 1, 28-29) The Sheriff's deed was executed in July 2004. (Appx. Vol. XIV, 4779)

5. Douglas Buys The Residence From A-Don As A Straw Man

In the Fall of 2004 Garland's son, Douglas Garland, was approached by his brothers who suggested he exercise the option to purchase the residence from A-Don. (Appx. Vol. 2, 555:3-25; 556:1-12) He learned about his father's tax problems. (Appx. Vol. 1, 279:15-23) Douglas could not afford to exercise the option. (Appx. Vol. 2, 556:13-19) Douglas was not practicing law and was employed as an engineer. (Appx. Vol. 2, 426:14-25; 427:1-18; 538:13-14) He needed someone else to pay the down payment, closing costs, mortgage payments and pay off some of his loans so he could qualify for a mortgage to exercise the option. (Appx. Vol. 1, 280:7-13; Vol 2, 556:13-25; 557:1-21; Vol. 3, 625:12-16) For example, at Douglas's request, Garland wrote a check from Commercial Litigation Group for $2,500 to pay off one of Douglas' credit cards. (Appx. Vol. 2, 556:3-25)

In order for Douglas to qualify for the mortgage, a letter from Commercial Litigation Group was created stating he had access to funds in one of its accounts. (Appx. Vol. 1, 298:11-25; 299:1-5; Vol. 2, 549:10-11; 551:7-20; 569:24-25; 570:1-7) Douglas' name was signed on a signature card for one of Commercial Litigation Group's accounts. Douglas testified he was not aware he had signature authority on any Commercial Litigation Group accounts and his signature on the signature card was a forgery. (Appx. Vol. 2, 549:13-25; 550 - 552:23) In contrast, Garland initially testified Douglas gave his brother permission to sign Douglas' name on the signature card. (Appx. Vol. 1, 298:22-25; 1-24)

Douglas and A-Don entered into a real estate purchase contract dated December 16, 2004 for the residence. (Appx. Vol. XIV, 4781-4783) The stated purchase price was $225,000. (Appx. Vol. XIV, 4781) $11,250 was deposited with the mortgage company as a down payment, leaving the rest to be financed. (Appx. Vol. XIV, 4781) In fact, the true purchase price was only $175,000 and the $50,000 difference would be refunded. (Appx. Vol. 2, 558:14-25; 418:1-22) The $50,000 would be used to repay Commercial Litigation Group for the down payment, costs of sale and help make future mortgage payments. (Appx. Vol. 1, 29; Vol. 2, 558:14-25; 418:1-22)

In January 2005, Douglas obtained the mortgage, exercised the option and purchased the residence. (Appx. Vol. 1, 29) Garland's occupancy, which began in 1981, continued uninterrupted. (Appx. Vol. 1, 26) It is Garland's primary residence. (Appx. Vol. 2, 541:16-17) Garland does not pay rent. (Appx. Vol. 1, 29) Garland takes care of the residence as he wishes. (Appx. Vol. 2, 541:13-15)

Douglas does not live at the residence. (Appx. Vol. 2, 540:13-19) Douglas does not maintain a room at the residence. (Appx. Vol. 2, 539:24-25; 540:1-6) Douglas keeps no personal property at the residence. (Appx. Vol. 2, 542:3-5) The furniture is not his. (Appx. Vol. 2, 542:6-10) When Douglas visits, he knocks on the door before entering the house and he isn't even sure if he has a key to the door. (Appx. Vol. 2:19-24) If Douglas were visiting and his father asked him to leave, he "probably would." (Appx. Vol. 2, 569:6-23) Douglas has never paid any of the utility bills. (Appx. Vol. 2, 540:25; 541:1-6)

Commercial Litigation Group and other entities for which Garland has signature authority provided funds for mortgage payments. (Appx. Vol. 1, 29; Appx. Vol. 2, 560:2-25; 561- 567:1-8) Garland signed many of these checks. (Appx. Vol. 2, 560:2-25; 561- 567:1-8) Douglas testified if Commercial Litigation Group or someone else didn't pay the monthly mortgage payments, it would be painful for him and he would reconsider his ownership of the residence. (Appx. Vol. 559:11-22)

e. The Undisclosed Income

Garland had six years of unpaid federal income taxes when he filed bankruptcy in 2005. He sought a determination that these six of these nine years of federal income taxes were dischargeable. Shortly before filing bankruptcy, he tardily filed four years of federal income tax returns in August 2005, as required by the United States Bankruptcy Court for the Eastern District of Oklahoma. These returns indicate Garland's total income for the calendar years of 2003 and 2004, was respectively $20,785 and $21,976. (Appx. Vol. XIX, 6329, 6334, 6340; IRS Supplemental Appendix) Garland's statement of financial affairs questions 1 and 2 disclose total income from Commercial Litigation Group and Social Security of $20,331 for the year of 2003 and $35,776 for the year of 2004. (Appx. Vol. VI, 1298)

The IRS discovered six undisclosed bank accounts where Garland had signature authority. (Appx. Vol. 2:592:6-25; 593:1-10; Vol XVIII, 6067) They were held in the names of Savol, Commercial Litigation Group, Jagar, Karen Hassler Trust Commercial Litigation Group Trustee and James and William Garland social security account. (Appx. Vol. 1: 254-258, Vol. 3, 602-604; Vol. XVIII, 6067, 6295-6299) During the years of 2003 and 2004 Garland used funds from these accounts for his personal use, totaling, respectively, at least $60,386 and $61,151. (Appx. Vol. 2, 592-Vol. 3, 605; Vol. XVIII, 6234-6255, 6295-6297) He used these accounts to pay personal expenses such as his daughter's dance studio fees and mortgage payments for his residence. (Appx. Vol. 1, 254-258; Vol. 2, 592-600) Garland never explained why the income reported in his statement of financial affairs and tax returns was substantially less than the amounts of money he received from these accounts.

IV. SUMMARY OF THE ARGUMENT

Garland's arguments that the Rooker-Feldman doctrine, res judicata and collateral estoppel preclude the United States Trustee from asserting Garland concealed his interests in his residence and A-Don fails. First, the state foreclosure judgments only involve the foreclosure of Garland's residence. His discharge was denied for making false oaths about, and concealing, various other matters such as his interests in corporations and their accounts and failing to explain the loss and deficiency of his assets. Second, the Rooker-Feldman doctrine does not deprive the United States Bankruptcy Court of jurisdiction to adjudicate the denial of Garland's discharge, a matter of exclusive federal jurisdiction. Third, res judicata and collateral estoppel do not preclude adjudication of the facts underlying the judgment denying Garland's discharge. The foreclosure judgments in no way adjudicated whether Garland had any equitable or other interests in the residence at the time he filed bankruptcy nor do they address the other grounds upon which his discharge was denied.

Garland is not an "honest but unfortunate debtor" and his discharge was properly denied. See Grogan, 498 U.S. at 286-887. The numerous stipulated facts, voluminous exhibits and ample testimony in this case, contradict Garland's claim that the evidence does not support the Bankruptcy Court's findings. His argument focuses on his residence and A-Don. Garland fails to dispute other factual grounds for which his discharge was denied and instead argues that his other false statements were immaterial and he lacked fraudulent intent. The evidence, however, clearly established Garland's fraudulent intent and the materiality of his false statements.

V. ARGUMENT

A. Garland's Rooker-Feldman Doctrine And Preclusion Arguments Attack Only Some Of The Numerous Grounds Upon Which His Discharge Was Denied

Garland's Rooker-Feldman and preclusion arguments ignore the fact that his discharge was denied on grounds independent from facts adjudicated by the foreclosure judgments. The foreclosure judgments resulted in A-Don's foreclosure on the residence and a determination that its lien was senior to the IRS' tax liens. The United States Trustee did not dispute these facts. The foreclosure judgments did not adjudicate Garland's role in A-Don or whether he orchestrated the foreclosures. In fact, in the one foreclosure action where the IRS alleged a sham foreclosure, A-Don settled the allegation by paying the IRS.

Garland's discharge was denied on several grounds independent from the issues determined by the foreclosure judgments. For example, the foreclosure judgments are unrelated to Garland's failure to disclose required information about various corporations and partnerships in his statement of financial affairs and the undisclosed funds he funneled to himself through the undisclosed accounts. He also failed to disclose that he held or controlled the residence at the time filed bankruptcy. His son Douglas, didn't acquire the residence from A-Don until after the foreclosure judgments were entered. These independent grounds are not affected by the foreclosure judgments.

B. The Foreclosure Judgments Did Not Deprive The Bankruptcy Court Of Jurisdiction Over The Objection To Discharge

Garland's reliance on the Rooker-Feldman Doctrine is misplaced. The doctrine prevents lower federal courts from exercising jurisdiction over cases brought by 'state-court losers' challenging 'state court judgments' rendered before the federal proceedings commenced. See Exxon Mobil Corp. v. Saudi Basic Industries Corp., 544 U.S. 280, 284, 125 S.Ct. 1517, 161 L.Ed.2d 454 (2005); Dist. of Columbia Ct. of App. v. Feldman, 460 U.S. 462, 482, 103 S.Ct. 1303, 75 L.Ed.2d 206 (1983); Rooker v. Fid. Trust Co., 263 U.S. 413, 414-16, 44 S.Ct. 149, 68 L.Ed. 362 (1923). The doctrine is based on the Supreme Court's exclusive jurisdiction over appeals from state-court judgments. See 28 U.S.C. § 1257; Lance, 546 U.S. at 463.

The Rooker-Feldman doctrine is jurisdictional and should not be confused with preclusion rules. See Lance, 546 U.S. at 466; Exxon Mobil Corp., 544 U.S. at 293; compare Hill v. Putvin (In re Putvin), 332 B.R. 619, 623 - 624 (10th Cir. BAP 2005). The Rooker-Feldman doctrine cannot deprive the Bankruptcy Court of jurisdiction over the United States Trustee's objection to Garland's discharge. See Exxon Mobil Corp., 544 U.S. at 292 - 293. This is true because the United States District Court has original and exclusive jurisdiction over the question of whether Garland's discharged should be denied.[6] 28 U.S.C. § 1334.

i. The United States Trustee Did Not Challenge Any Claims Actually Decided Or Inextricably Intertwined With The Foreclosure Judgements

The Supreme Court has "tended to emphasize the narrowness of the Rooker-Feldman rule." See Lance, 546 U.S. at 464, citing Exxon Mobil, 544 U.S. at 292. The doctrine may only be applied: "(1) to those federal claims actually decided by a state court, and (2) to those federal claims inextricably intertwined with a state court judgment." Merrill Lynch Business Fin. Serv. v. Nudell, 363 F.3d 1072, 1075 (10th Cir. 2004). Whether a claim is inextricably intertwined turns on "whether the injury alleged by the federal plaintiff resulted from the state court judgment itself or is distinct from the judgment." Id. at 1076. The United States Trustee's claims under 11 U.S.C. § 727 were not actually decided by the state court nor inextricably intertwined with the foreclosure judgments.

The state court did not actually decide whether the foreclosure was a sham. The foreclosure judgments did not decide what interests Garland had in A-Don. They did not decide what interests Garland had in the residence after his son purchased it in 2005 using funds from Commercial Litigation Group. They did not decide what interests Garland had in the residence when Garland signed checks for the mortgage payments.

The allegations that Garland orchestrated the foreclosures and had an interest in A-Don are not “inextricably intertwined” with the foreclosure judgments. See Merrill Lynch Business Fin. Serv., 363 F.3d at 1075. Garland’s false oath and concealment of his interests in his residence and A-Don in his bankruptcy case are not injuries arising from the foreclosure judgments. The United States Trustee’s objection to discharge did not seek to review or overturn the foreclosure judgments. To the contrary, the United States Trustee alleged the judgments essentially eliminated the IRS’ tax liens on the residence which A-Don acquired by credit-bidding at the sheriff’s sale.

ii. The United States Trustee Was Not A Party To The Foreclosure Actions

Lastly, the United States Trustee was not a party to the state foreclosure actions. “The Rooker-Feldman doctrine does not bar actions by nonparties to the earlier state-court judgment even if, for purposes of preclusion law, they could be considered in privity with a party to the judgment.” Lance, 126 S.Ct. at 1201-02; see Exxon Mobil, 544 U.S. at 291. The United States Trustee had no right to appeal from the foreclosure judgments. See Johnson v. DeGrandy, 512 U.S. 997, 1005-1006, 114 S.Ct. 2647, 129 L.Ed.2d 775 (1994); Karcher v. May, 484 U.S. 72, 77, 108 S.Ct. 388, 98 L.Ed.2d 327 (1987)(“[T]he general rule [is] that one who is not a party or has not been treated as a party to a judgment has no right to appeal therefrom.”). The Rooker-Feldman doctrine did not deprive the Bankruptcy Court of jurisdiction to rule on these causes of action. Garland’s res judicata and collateral estoppel arguments are similarly flawed.

C. Res Judicata Does Not Bar The United States Trustee From Litigating Garland's Concealment Of His Interests In His Residence Or A-Don

Res judicata, e.g. claim preclusion, prevents a party from relitigating the same cause of action against the parties to a prior decision. See United States v. Mendoza, 464 U.S. 154, 162-163, 104 S.Ct. 568, 574, 78 L.Ed.2d 379 (1984). The United States Trustee's objection to Garland's discharge was not litigated in the foreclosure actions. The United States Trustee was not a party to the foreclosure actions. Consequently, Garland's claim preclusion argument fails.

The Supreme Court rejected similar claim preclusion arguments in litigation determining the dischargeability of debts under 11 U.S.C. § 523. See Archer v. Warner, 538 U.S. 314, 319-320, 123 S.Ct. 1462, 155 L.Ed.2d 454 (2003), citing Brown v. Felsen, 442 U.S. 127, 99 S.Ct. 2205, 60 L.Ed.2d 767 (1979). In Archer, a debtor contended a pre-petition settlement agreement precluded a creditor from litigating the dischargeability of the debt under 11 U.S.C. § 523. Archer, 538 U.S. at 314. Rejecting the argument, the Supreme Court noted that Congress intended the determination of whether a debt arises from fraud for purposes of 11 U.S.C. § 523 is "to take place in Bankruptcy Court, and not force it to occur earlier in state court at a time when non dischargeability concerns 'are not directly in issue and neither party has a full incentive to litigate them.'" Archer, 538 U.S. at 321, quoting Brown, 442 U.S. at 134.

Likewise, in Brown the Court found a stipulation and consent judgment in state court did not preclude the Bankruptcy Court from looking beyond the state court record in order to determine the dischargeability of the underlying debt. See Brown, 442 U.S. 127. The defendant's failure to establish the parties intended to resolve the issues of fraud for purposes of a later nondischargeability claim defeated any claim preclusion argument. See Archer, 428 U.S.

at 322. As in Archer and Brown, Garland cannot established that the parties to the foreclosure actions even remotely intended to resolve any later objection to discharge. There was no agreement or adjudication regarding Garland's ability to seek a bankruptcy discharge.

It is true that in the second foreclosure action, involving only 20 acres, the IRS alleged A-Don was an instrumentality of Garland and the foreclosure was a sham. That issue was not adjudicated. Instead, it was settled by A-Don paying the IRS $8,000. The Bankruptcy Court properly rejected Garland's claim preclusion argument.

D. The Foreclosure Judgments Do Not Collaterally Estop The United States Trustee

As already noted, the United States Trustee did not challenge the foreclosure judgments' findings. Even if the findings in the judgment denying Garland's discharge were somehow contrary to the foreclosure judgments' findings, collateral estoppel, or issue preclusion, would not apply in this case. While collateral estoppel may be applied to objections to discharge, its applicability against the Government is limited and its required elements are absent in this case. See Grogan, 498 U.S. at 284, n.12.

i. The United States Trustee Is Not Collaterally Estopped By A Foreclosure Judgment Naming The IRS As A Defendant

There are significant limitations to issue preclusion against the government. "Collateral estoppel, like the related doctrine of res judicata, serves to 'relieve parties of the cost and vexation of multiple lawsuits, conserve judicial resources, and, by preventing inconsistent decisions, encourage reliance on adjudication.'" Hercules Carriers, Inc. v. State of Florida, 768 F.2d 1558, 1578 (11th Cir. 1985), quoting, Mendoza, 104 S.Ct. at 571. Indiscriminate application of collateral estoppel against the government would defeat "the economy interests in whose name estoppel is advanced by requiring the government to abandon virtually any exercise of discretion in seeking to review judgments unfavorable to it . . . ." Mendoza, 104 S.Ct. at 574.

The Supreme Court explained it has:

> long recognized that the government is not in the same position as a private litigant, given the geographical breadth of the government litigation and the nature of the issues litigated by the government.

Hercules Carriers, Inc., 768 F.2d at 1578, citing Mendoza, 104 S.Ct. at 573. Because of the significant differences between the government and private litigants, collateral estoppel should not be applied against the United States Trustee. See Mendoza, 104 S.Ct. 568.

As stated by the Eleventh Circuit Court of Appeals:

> if Mendoza stands for anything, it must stand for the proposition that a government's agencies in pursuing their stated goals must not be put in the untenable position of collaterally estopping one another when they pursue the same issue for wholly different purposes.

Id. This reasoning is particularly applicable in this case.

The United States Trustee prosecuted his objection to Garland's discharge pursuant to his statutory duties to protect the integrity of the Bankruptcy System. See 11 U.S.C. §§ 307, 727; 28 U.S.C. § 586. In contrast, the Internal Revenue Service's interest in the foreclosure action was to collect taxes by virtue of its junior liens. These different interests militate against collateral estoppel. See Hercules Carriers, Inc., 768 F.2d at 1578 - 1581. Any other result would hinder tax collection efforts since the IRS would be forced to carefully scrutinize every foreclosure involving a tax lien for the effects it might have on any possible future bankruptcy. It would likewise interfere with the United States Trustee's ability to protect the integrity of the bankruptcy system. Even if collateral estoppel could be applied against the United States Trustee, necessary elements are missing.

ii. The Foreclosure Judgments Do Not Decide Whether Garland Had Any Interests In A-Don Or Orchestrated The Foreclosures

Because the foreclosure judgments were entered by Oklahoma courts, Oklahoma's collateral estoppel law applies. See Marrese v. American Academy of Orthopeadic Surgeons, 470 U.S. 373, 380, 105 S.Ct. 1327, 84 L.Ed.2d 274 (1985).[7] Under Oklahoma law, collateral estoppel prevents the relitigation of an issue of ultimate fact if it has already been determined by a valid judgment in previous litigation between the same parties or their privies and they had a full and fair opportunity to litigate the issue. See Merrill v. Merrill (In re Merrill), 252 B.R. 497, 504, 505 (10th Cir. BAP 2000). Whether Garland orchestrated the foreclosures and what interests he had in A-Don and the residence were never litigated in the foreclosure actions.

The foreclosure judgments state they are in rem judgments against the real estate and declare that any "right, title, or interest which the defendants, and each of them, may have or claimed to have in and to said real estate and premises is subsequent, junior and inferior to the mortgage and lien of the plaintiff [A-Don]." (Appx. Vol. XIV, 4695; 4698; 4766; 4768) It provides for a sheriff's sale and further orders that the IRS's tax liens are inferior to A-Don's

[7] The Full Faith and Credit Act, 28 U.S.C. § 1738, "requires the federal court to 'give the same preclusive effect to a state-court judgment as another court of that State would give.'" Exxon Mobil Corp., 544 U.S. at 293, quoting Parsons Steel, Inc. v. First Alabama Bank, 474 U.S. 518, 523 (1986).

mortgage and that the IRS retains its right of redemption. (Appx. Vol. XIV, 4695; 4698; 4769) The first foreclosure judgment states that upon entry of an order confirming the sheriff's sale, a deed shall be executed providing "all right, title, interest, estate, and equity of the defendants . . . [to the property]" to the purchaser and that the defendants are "forever barred, foreclosed, and enjoined from asserting or claiming any right, title or interest, estate [to the property]." (Appx. Vol. XIV, 4699) The second foreclosure judgment has similar language. (Appx. Vol. XIV, 4770)

These discrete facts do not help Garland's case. The foreclosure judgments do not adjudicate Garland's interests in or control of A-Don, his equitable or beneficial interests in the residence after the foreclosures were complete, or the numerous other factual grounds upon which his discharge was denied

E. The Court's Findings Of Fact Are Supported By Two Days Of Testimony, Over 200 Admitted Exhibits And Numerous Stipulated Facts

Garland's appeal argues the Bankruptcy Court's factual findings are clearly erroneous. On appeal, the facts are to be viewed in the light most favorable to the trial judge's factual findings. See In re Ford, 492 F.3d at 1154. The inferences, deductions and conclusions drawn from the evidence are left to the sound discretion of the trial judge.[8] The court's finding that Garland lacked credibility should not be disturbed on appeal. See In re Ford, 492 F.3d at 1154*;* Anderson v. Bessemer City, 470 U.S. 564, 575, 105 S.Ct. 1504, 84 L.Ed.2d 518 (1985); FED. R. BANKR. P. 8013.

[8] The burden of proof is a preponderance of the evidence. See In re Warren, 512 F.3d at 1248.

i. The Court's 727(a)(2) Findings Are Supported By The Evidence

Garland fails to cite any evidence indicating the court's findings under 11 U.S.C. § 727(a)(2) are erroneous. Section 727(a)(2)(A) provides for denial of discharge where a debtor, with intent to hinder, delay or defraud a creditor or trustee has transferred or concealed property of the debtors within one year before filing a bankruptcy petition. Garland argues that he lacked fraudulent intent and he did not transfer or conceal anything during the year before he filed bankruptcy.

Because it is unlikely a debtor or co-conspirators will ever admit to fraudulent conveyances or concealment, other circumstantial evidence, frequently referred to as badges of fraud, are typically relied upon to prove the fraud. See, e.g., Newton v. Essres, 139 B.R. 958, 962 (D. Colo. 1992)(affirming denial of discharge where badges of fraud evidenced continuing concealment). Intent may be established trough circumstantial evidence and inferences from the debtor's pattern of conduct. See In re Warren, 512 F.3d at 1249; Eastern Diversified Distr., Inc. v. Matus (In re Matus), 303 B.R. 660, 672 (Bankr. N.D.Ga. 2004).

Failure to disclose a transfer occurring more than a year before the bankruptcy is filed may still satisfy section 727(a)(2) timing requirement under the doctrine of continuing concealment. See Rosen v. Bezner, 996 F.2d 1527, 1532 (3d Cir. 1993); Thibideaux v. Olivier (In re Olivier), 819 F.2d 550 (5th Cir. 1987). Continuing concealment claims typically involve (1) the transfer of property by a debtor who still retains a beneficial interest or equitable interest in the property; and (2) the debtor treating the property the same as before the transfer. See Bank of Chester County v. Cohen (In re Cohen), 142 B.R. 720, 726 (Bankr. E.D.Pa.1992). Continued concealment of the interest coupled with an "improper subjective intent" during the year before filing bankruptcy warrants application of the continuing concealment doctrine. See Rosen, 996 F.2d at 1533.

The evidence shows Garland concealed his interests in the residence, corporations and accounts well into the year before he filed bankruptcy. Concealment of the fact that he funneled money to himself through the various accounts while claiming he had no ownership interests also evidences continuing concealment. See Doubet, L.L.C. v. Palermo (In re Palermo), 370 B.R. 599, 604 (Bankr. S.D.N.Y. 2007). Garland failed to disclose his interests in the corporations and partnerships, their accounts and his beneficial or equitable interest in the residence at the time he filed bankruptcy.

His fraudulent intent is evidenced by numerous badges of fraud such as inadequate consideration for transfers of the residence, close relationships to the transferees and Garland's retention of possession. See The Cadle Co. v. Stewart (In re Stewart), 263 B.R. 608, 611 (B.A.P. 10th Cir. 2001). "There is little question that if an individual transfers title of an item but continues to exercise dominion over it, that fraud may be inferred." Gullickson v. Brown (In re Brown), 108 F.3d 1290, 1293 (10th Cir. 1997).

It is undisputed Garland retained possession of his residence through the transfer to Jagar, A-Don's foreclosure, Commercial Litigation Group's lease and Douglas' ultimate purchase. The evidence clearly showed Garland's control of Jagar and that Garland transferred the residence to Jagar for inadequate consideration at a time when he owed substantial federal taxes. It demonstrated his agreement to form A-Don for the purpose of foreclosing on the residence and eliminating the IRS' tax liens recorded against the residence. It showed he never paid rent to Jagar, A-Don, Commercial Litigation Group or Douglas.

The evidence demonstrated Garland's long term and close connections to Walters and Bundren who assert they owned A-Don. It showed A-Don leased the residence to Commercial Litigation Group as a commercial cattle operation. It showed that A-Don gave Commercial Litigation Group an assignable option to buy the residence for substantially less than the appraised value. Commercial Litigation Group paid a mere $10 for the valuable option. It showed that even after Garland asserted he resigned as a partner of Commercial Litigation Group, he continued to write substantial checks for his personal use, including payments to enable Douglas to exercise the option. It shows Garland wrote checks to pay the mortgage payments enabling Douglas to purchased the residence. It established Douglas can not afford to make the mortgage payments and that Garland remains in possession and control of the residence. This control and possession occurred during the year before Garland filed bankruptcy. The evidence also demonstrated that Garland funneled money to himself from various undisclosed accounts during the year before he filed bankruptcy.

ii. The Court's 727(a)(4) Findings Are Supported By The Evidence

A debtor's discharge will be denied where he knowingly and fraudulently made a false oath or account in his case. 11 U.S.C. § 727(a)(4). Garland's statements in his schedules or statement of financial affairs, including an omission, may constitute a false oath. See Job v. Calder (In re Calder), 907 F.2d 953, 955 (10th Cir. 1990). Garland argues he made no false statements regarding his interests in the residence and A-Don and that any omissions in his statement of financial affairs regarding his holding or controlling the residence or the corporate entities lacked fraudulent intent and were immaterial. The evidence supporting the court's findings of Garland's interest in his residence, the corporate entities is sufficiently summarized above. His intent and materiality arguments also fail.

Garland knowingly and fraudulently made the false statements and omissions regarding his residence, the corporations and partnerships and their accounts. The court noted its ample opportunity to observe Garland during the trial and found him to be unbelievable. (Appx. Vol. 1, 65) The court disbelieved Garland's explanations of why he left information out of his schedules and statement of financial affairs. Further, "[w]here assets of some substantial value are omitted from the schedules" as Garland did here, "the conclusion that they were omitted purposefully with the fraudulent intent to conceal the assets in question may be warranted." See Crews v. Topping (In re Topping), 84 B.R. 840, 842 (Bankr. M.D. Fla. 1988). Garland not only omitted information from his schedules and statement of financial affairs, he also failed to disclose the accounts in his responses to discovery in this case. (Appx. Vol. 2, 589:14-15; 590-591; 592:1-16, 21-25; 593:1-3) They were only discovered when banks responded to subpoenas served by the IRS as part of its discovery. His concealment of these accounts in his responses to discovery further evidences his fraudulent intent.

A pattern of errors or omissions, such as exists in this case, gives rise to an inference of an intent to deceive. See Beaubouef v. Beaubouef (In re Beaubouef), 966 F.2d 174, 178 (5th Cir. 1992). "[R]eckless indifference to the truth has consistently been treated as the functional equivalent of fraud for purposes of denial of discharge under § 727 (a)(4)(A)." Cadle Co. v. King (In re King), 272 B.R. 281, 302 (Bankr. N.D.Okla. 2002), quoting Boroff v. Tully (In re Tully), 818 F.2d 106, 112 (1st Cir. 1987); Congress Talcott Corp. v. Sicari (In re Sicari), 187 B.R. 861, 882 (Bankr. S.D.N.Y. 1994)("The cumulative effect of a number of false oaths by the debtor with respect to a variety of matters establishes a pattern of reckless and cavalier disregard for the truth.”). Additionally, Garland’s failure to disclose information about corporate entities in which he retained dominion or control evidences fraudulent intent. See In re Calder, 907 F.2d at 956.

It should be remembered that Garland filled out the questionnaire his attorney used to complete his bankruptcy papers. Garland testified he reviewed them before signing. Garland is an experienced attorney who represented people accused of tax evasion and money laundering. Certainly, he knew the importance of accuracy when verifying his bankruptcy papers under penalty of perjury. This fact further evidences Garland’s fraudulent intent. See In re Calder, 907 F.2d at 956.

“The false oath must relate to a material matter, that is, a matter that bears a relationship to the debtor’s business transactions or estate, or concerns the discovery of assets or the existence or disposition of property.” See In re Calder, 907 F.2d at 955. Garland’s false statements about his interests in the residence, his holding and controlling the residence and omission about the corporations and partnerships related to his business transactions, estate and disposition of property. Had they properly been disclosed, the trustee would have investigated further. Garland funneled large sums of money to himself through the undisclosed accounts while indicating in his schedule I that he had nominal income. Garland knowingly and fraudulently made material false statements under oath. His discharge was properly denied.

iii. The Court’s 727(a)(5) Findings Are Supported By The Evidence

Section 727(a)(5) provides for denial of Garland’s discharge where he fails to explain satisfactorily, before determination of denial of discharge any loss of assets or deficiency of assets to meet his liabilities. This subsection is designed "to prevent abuse of the bankruptcy process by the debtor obfuscating the true nature of [his] affairs, and then refusing to provide a credible explanation." In re Palermo, 370 B.R. at 613. A party objecting to a debtor's discharge under section 727(a)(5) has the burden of proving facts establishing that a loss or shrinkage of assets actually occurred. However, once the objecting party meets its initial burden of proof, the burden shifts to the debtor to explain the loss or deficiency of assets in a satisfactory manner. See In re Stewart, 263 B.R. at 618.

Garland argues that his records from the early 1990's are too old for him to be required to produce them and that he lost the residence because he class action practice failed. Garland's Opening Brief also incorrectly asserts that the only property referenced by the court under 11 U.S.C. § 727(a)(5) is the Residence. This is incorrect.

The court also found, among other things, "[t]he evidence also established that Garland had access to significant assets, specifically, the undisclosed checking accounts . . . funds or loans from Patrick Walters and Dr. Bundren . . . [and] Garland diverted funds to his own personal use . . . ." (Appx. Vol. 1, 66-67) The court also noted Garland failed to explain discrepancies between income reported on his 2002 through 2005 tax returns when compared to the evidence that he personally used funds from various checking accounts during those years. (Appx. Vol. 1, 33)

The court was left to "speculate about how Garland lost his considerable income and assets, and conclude that he actually had access to significant assets but chose to conceal those assets in order to appear destitute to his creditors." (Appx. Vol. 1, 33) His brief fails to address these issues, and, therefore denial of his discharge under 11 U.S.C. § 727(a)(5) should be affirmed.

Lastly, the evidence clearly established Garland had access to funds to pay the down payment for his son and make mortgage payments. He never explained how he could retain possession and control of his residence yet lack any assets to pay creditors. Because of this and his failure to challenge the court's other findings under 11 U.S.C. § 727(a)(5), the judgment denying his discharge must be affirmed.

VI. CONCLUSION

For the foregoing reasons, the judgment of the United States Bankruptcy Court denying James Clinton Garland's discharge should be affirmed.

v.

ROBERTA A. DeANGELIS, Acting United States Trustee for Region 3.[1]

APPELLEE'S BRIEF

STATEMENT OF ISSUE PRESENTED

28 U.S.C. § 1930(a)(6) requires the payment of quarterly fees "in each case" under chapter 11. Did the bankruptcy court correctly apply the plain meaning of the statute by ordering the payment of section 1930(a)(6) fees in each of the reorganized debtors' chapter 11 bankruptcy cases, given that the debtors made business decisions to keep these cases open?

STATEMENT OF THE CASE

Congress enacted 28 U.S.C. § 1930(a)(6) as a funding mechanism for the United States Trustee Program. Under Section 1930(a)(6), fees must be paid in "each" open chapter 11 "case" in an amount scaled upon "disbursements" made in the case. The minimum fee payable per case in any given quarter is $250 (for disbursements ranging from zero to $15,000), and the maximum 1930(a)(6) fee payable is $10,000 (for disbursements of $5 million or more).

Genesis Health Ventures, Inc., Multicare AMC, Inc., and their respective debtor-affiliates filed 352 separate chapter 11 bankruptcy cases beginning in June 2000. A chapter 11 debtor's primary goal is confirming a plan of reorganization that resolves competing claims to its assets. The Debtors' plan of reorganization was confirmed by the bankruptcy court in September 2001.

The Debtors did not ask the Bankruptcy Court to substantively consolidate their cases into a single case. Nevertheless, the Debtors forwarded a single, consolidated statement of their disbursements to the Office of the United States Trustee for the fourth quarter of 2001 and paid one fee based upon the statement. The Debtors refused to report their disbursements on a case-by-case basis and pay approximately $800,000 in 1930(a)(6) fee obligations for the fourth quarter of 2001. The United States Trustee moved to compel the reporting of disbursements on a case-by-case basis and payment of 1930(a)(6) fees in each of the open cases. The bankruptcy court granted the United States Trustee's motions and held that "each" open "case" had to pay 1930(a)(6) fees. The district court affirmed the bankruptcy court's ruling. These appeals ensued.

STATEMENT OF THE FACTS

The Debtors comprised 352 legally distinct corporations, partnerships and limited liability companies which operated a variety of businesses that provided healthcare and support services to the elderly. [United States Trustee Brief -- Genesis/Multicare I at 3, App. A-609]. The various Debtors owned, leased, or managed approximately 317 eldercare facilities spread across five geographic markets. [Id.] The Debtors also operated approximately 61 long-term care pharmacies, 23 medical supply/home medical equipment distribution centers, and 32 community-based pharmacies. [Id.] In addition, the Debtors provided rehabilitation therapy services through six certified rehabilitation agencies. [Id.].

With the exception of Healthcare Resources Corp., a Genesis Debtor that filed its voluntary petition on July 31, 2000, each of the Debtors filed a separate voluntary petition under chapter 11 of the Bankruptcy Code on June 22, 2000. [Disclosure Statement at 64, App. A-109]. The Debtors' 352 cases were jointly administered in two groups (the "Genesis Debtors" and "Multicare Debtors").[2/]

[2/] During the relevant time period, the Multicare Debtors were, directly or indirectly, subsidiary companies of Genesis Health Ventures, Inc. [Disclosure Statement at 51, App. A-98]. The Multicare Debtors were party to a number of agreements with Genesis; through those agreements, Genesis provided operational oversight, managed Multicare's inpatient facilities, and performed other services for its subsidiaries. [Disclosure Statement at 51, App. A-98]. The Genesis Debtors primarily provided pharmacy and medical supply services through their

[Disclosure Statement at 64, App. A-149]. The joint administration orders, entered on June 22, 2000, permitted administration of the Genesis Debtors under docket number 00-2692 and the Multicare Debtors under docket number 00-2494.[3]

The centerpiece of the reorganization process under chapter 11 is the confirmation of a plan of reorganization which resolves competing claims to the property of the Debtors' estates. The Debtors proposed a joint plan of reorganization during the summer of 2001 [Plan, App. A-175].

The plan did not provide for substantive consolidation of the Debtors' 352 cases into a single case. The only reference to any kind of "consolidation" in the plan is found at section 5.1 of the plan, titled "Deemed Consolidation for Plan

> Subject to the occurrence of the Effective Date, the Genesis Debtors shall be deemed consolidated for the following purposes under the Plan of Reorganization: (i) no distributions shall be made under the Plan of Reorganization on account of the Genesis Intercompany Claims; (ii) all guaranties by any of the Genesis Debtors of the obligations of any other Genesis Debtor arising prior to the Effective Date shall be deemed eliminated so that any Claim against any Genesis Debtor and any guaranty thereof executed by any other Genesis Debtor and any joint and several liability of any of the Genesis Debtors shall be deemed to be one obligation of the deemed consolidated Genesis Debtors; and (iii) each and every Claim filed or to be filed in the Reorganization Case of any of the Genesis Debtors shall be deemed filed against the deemed consolidated Genesis Debtors and shall be deemed one Claim against and obligation of the deemed consolidated Genesis Debtors.
> Such deemed consolidation, however, shall not (other than for purposes related to funding distributions under the Plan of Reorganization and as set forth above in this Section) affect: (i) the legal and organizational structure of the Reorganized Debtors; (ii) intercompany Claims by and among the Genesis Debtors or Reorganized Debtors; (iii) pre- and post-Commencement Date guaranties, liens, and security interests that are required to be maintained (A) in connection with executory contracts or unexpired leases that were entered into during the Genesis Reorganization Cases or that have been or will be assumed, (B) pursuant to the Plan of Reorganization, or (C) in connection with any financing entered into, or New Senior Notes issued, by the Reorganized Debtors on the Effective Date; and (iv) distributions out of any insurance policies or the proceeds of such policies.
> Notwithstanding anything contained in the Plan to the contrary, the deemed consolidation of the Genesis Debtors shall not have any intercompany claims from the distributive scheme and enabling the treatment of secured bank debt claims, general unsecured claims, and senior subordinated note claims against the Genesis Debtors and the Multicare Debtors, respectively, as if they were being made against a single bankruptcy estate. As the Debtors expressly stated in section 5.1, the "deemed consolidations" (i) did not affect the legal and organizational structure of the Debtors; (ii) preserved intercompany claims; (iii) maintained the separateness of certain guaranties, liens, and security interests; and (iv) did not affect distributions from insurance policies or the proceeds of such policies. In addition, neither the plan nor the order confirming the plan closed any of the 352 cases. Rather, the plan contained a provision which reserved jurisdiction in the bankruptcy court to close their 352 cases at a later date. [Plan § 11(o), App. A-214].[5] > effect on the Claims being reinstated and unimpaired in class G1 of the Plan, and the legal, equitable, and contractual rights to which the holders of any such claims is entitled shall be left unaltered by the Plan. [Plan § 5.1(a), App. A-200-01].

Subsection 5.1(b) of the plan provided for an identical "deemed consolidation" of the Multicare Debtors. [Plan § 5.1(b), App. A-201].

[5] Plan § 11(o) provided that the bankruptcy court retained jurisdiction to close "the Reorganization Cases." The term "Reorganization Cases" is defined in the plan as the "Genesis Reorganization Cases" and "Multicare Reorganization Cases." [Plan § 1.65, App. A-189]. The terms "Genesis Reorganization Cases" and "Multicare Reorganization Cases," in turn, are defined as the 352 entities that

During the course of their chapter 11 cases, the Debtors did not substantively consolidate their hundreds of cases into a single case. The Debtors' chief financial officer testified at the plan confirmation hearing that the Debtors considered this course of action and rejected it. [8/29/01 Tr. 217:10 - 218:8 (Hager); App. A-419-20]. The Debtors decided that the business disruption that would follow from the transfer of numerous health care licenses outweighed any benefits that would follow from substantive consolidation. [Id.].

Two creditors objected to confirmation of the Debtors' plan on grounds that the acquisition of Multicare by Genesis resulted in a de facto substantive consolidation. In response to this particular objection, the Debtors denied that the plan provided for substantive consolidation; the Debtors stated that "it is important to note that no substantive consolidation is, in fact, taking place under the Plan." [Debtors' Omnibus Response to Objections to Plan at 10 (emphasis added)].[6] The bankruptcy court agreed with the Debtors on this point and overruled the objection, stating that "there is no diversion of value from Genesis to Multicare, or filed for bankruptcy protection. [Plan § 1.34, App. A-185; Plan § 1.47, App. A-187].

[6] The United States Trustee will file motions to supplement the record and appendix to include this item and the item referenced in Footnote 7.

substantive consolidation of the two entities." [Confirmation Op. at 46, App. A-485].

The bankruptcy court confirmed the plan by order dated September 20, 2001 [Confirmation Order, App. A-493]. After their plan was confirmed, the Debtors submitted a single, consolidated report of their disbursements for the fourth quarter of 2001 to the Office of the United States Trustee and paid a single 1930(a)(6) fee for that period. [Mot. to Compel ¶ 5, App. A-644]. Given that the Debtors' hundreds of cases remained open, the United States Trustee moved to compel reporting of disbursements on a case-by-case basis and the payment of 1930(a)(6) fees in each of the open cases. [Mot. to Compel, App. A-643]. The Debtors objected to the motions, contending that the "deemed consolidations" described in section 5.1 of the plan substantively consolidated their cases into one case for 1930(a)(6) purposes. [5/14/02 Op. at 5, App. A-9].

After a hearing was held on the motions to compel and the bankruptcy court heard oral argument from counsel, the bankruptcy court granted the United States Trustee's motions by orders dated June 4, 2002 (the Genesis Debtors) [App. A-1] and July 9, 2002 (the Multicare Debtors) [App. A-3] and rejected the Debtors' objections. The bankruptcy court observed that, > where substantive consolidation is effected in a reorganization process, and the individual debtor does > not survive as a separate legal entity, then consolidated reporting and calculation of section 1930(a)(6) fees going forward would be based on a single consolidated case. However, that basic proposition does not extend to the "deemed consolidation" effected here, which did not change the legal and organizational structure of the individual debtors. [5/14/02 Op. at 6, App. A-10].

The bankruptcy court noted that "each separate pre-confirmation debtor emerged from the reorganization process as a separate post-confirmation legal entity with the same legal and corporate attributes it had prior to the plan confirmation." [5/14/02 Op. at 6, App. A-10]. Applying the plain language of section 1930(a)(6), the court concluded "each individual Genesis and Multicare debtor continued to constitute a 'case' within the meaning of the statute, requiring 1930(a)(6) fees to be paid by each separate debtor." [5/14/02 Op. at 6-7, App. A-10-11].

The bankruptcy court responded to the Debtors' argument that the "deemed consolidation" substantively consolidated the Debtors' cases into a single case. First, the bankruptcy court observed that the Debtors had never asked the bankruptcy court to enter such relief. [5/14/02 Op. at 6, App. A-10]. Second, the bankruptcy court rejected the idea that the mere invocation of the words "substantive consolidation" relieved the Debtors of their separate obligations to pay 1930(a)(6) fees. Rather, the bankruptcy court focused on the properties of the relief that was approved and concluded that > [t]he crux of the issue, however, is not whether the debtors' reorganization plan constituted a substantive consolidation or a deemed consolidation. Rather, the issue is whether each of the legal entities which entered the Chapter 11 process as an individual "case" survived the process . . . . To the extent that a debtor remains a corporation, the separate "case" filed by the debtor remains a case, notwithstanding the pooling of assets and liabilities, and notwithstanding other effects of consolidation, be it substantive or deemed. [5/14/02 Op. at 6, App. A-10 (emphasis added)].

The Debtors appealed from the bankruptcy court's orders granting the United States Trustee's motions to compel. The district court affirmed the orders. The district court adopted the bankruptcy court's analysis, stating that "the issue is not whether the plan effectuated a substantive consolidation or a deemed consolidation, but whether under the plain language of Section 1930 a 'case' survived the Chapter 11 process such that a fee is due for that case." [3/31/03 Mem. Op. at 6, App. A-19]. The district court also noted that "the separate debtors who filed cases remained separate entities post-confirmation, [and] their separate cases remained separate cases and fees were appropriately assessed for each separate case under Section 1930."[7] [Id.]. The instant appeals followed.

STATEMENT OF RELATED CASES AND PROCEEDINGS

Appeals are pending before this Court, Civil No. 03-1225, regarding the Debtors' appeal of a Memorandum and Order dated November 15, 2002, in which the district court affirmed the orders of the bankruptcy court dated November 8, 2001 and November 28, 2001 sustaining the United States Trustee's objection to confirmation as it related to non-payment of 1930(a)(6) fees. The issue in those appeals is whether each Debtor is separately obligated to pay 1930(a)(6) fees based upon the payment of its respective "disbursements," including its operating expenses.

STATEMENT OF APPLICABLE STANDARD OF APPELLATE REVIEW

The lower courts' conclusion that 1930(a)(6) fees must be paid in each case constitutes a question of law that this Court reviews de novo. See In re Trans World Airlines, Inc., 322 F.3d 283, 287 (3d Cir. 2003); First Jersey Nat'l Bank v.

[7] Subsequent to the filing of these appeals, the Debtors moved to close 349 of the cases nunc pro tunc to the plan's Effective Date (October 2, 2001). [8/1/02 Final Decree Order]. The bankruptcy court denied the Debtors' request to close the cases nunc pro tunc to the Effective Date but permitted the cases to be closed as of June 30, 2002. [Id.]. The United States Trustee seeks no 1930(a)(6) fees in those closed cases for the period beginning July 1, 2002.

STATUTORY BACKGROUND AND LEGISLATIVE HISTORY

The United States Trustee Program is not taxpayer-funded, but relies instead on the collection of various fees, including the 1930(a)(6) fee. The Program is a component of the Department of Justice charged with the responsibility of monitoring and performing certain other functions in bankruptcy cases, including the supervision of cases filed under chapter 11 of title 11, United States Code ("Bankruptcy Code"). See 28 U.S.C. § 586(a) (describing various duties of the United States Trustee).[8]

[8] The United States Trustee Program was created as a pilot program as part of the Bankruptcy Reform Act of 1978, Pub. L. No. 95-598, 92 Stat. 2549 (1978). Congress later extended the Program to a permanent nationwide program as part of the Bankruptcy Judges, United States Trustees, and Family Farmer Bankruptcy Act of 1986, Pub. L. No. 99-554, 100 Stat. 3088 (1986) (the "1986 Act"). United States Trustees are officials of the Department of Justice appointed by the Attorney General to supervise the administration of bankruptcy cases and trustees. See 28 U.S.C. §§ 581-589; United States Trustee v. Columbia Gas Sys., Inc. (In re Columbia Gas Sys., Inc.) (United States Trustees oversee the bankruptcy process,

To fund the United States Trustee Program, Congress created the United States Trustee System Fund . See 28 U.S.C. § 589a(a). A percentage of every fee paid by all debtors filing petitions under the Bankruptcy Code is deposited into the Fund. See 28 U.S.C. § 589a(b). If the amounts collected exceed the amount needed for a particular year, the money remains in the Fund for use in subsequent years as appropriated by Congress. See 28 U.S.C. § 589a(c). Conversely, if the costs of operating the Program in a particular year exceed the amounts available in the Fund, additional amounts may be appropriated from the Treasury to make up the difference. See 28 U.S.C. § 589a(e). The Attorney General is required to report to Congress every year on the amounts deposited in the Fund and expenditures made from it. See 28 U.S.C. § 589a(d). Congress has thus constructed a mechanism whereby it can either increase or reduce the fees paid, so that the amount collected for deposit in the Fund will never be unacceptably small or unreasonably large.

A significant portion of the Fund is made up of statutory fees paid every quarter in every Chapter 11 case pursuant to Section 1930(a)(6), which was enacted as part of the 1986 Act. Section 1930(a)(6) provides as follows:

> In addition to the filing fee paid to the clerk, a quarterly fee shall be paid to the United States trustee, for deposit in the Treasury, in each case under chapter 11 of title 11 for each quarter (including any fraction thereof) until the case is converted or dismissed, whichever occurs first. The fee shall be $250 for each quarter in which disbursements total less than $15,000; $500 for each quarter in which disbursements total $15,000 or more but less than $75,000; $750 for each quarter in which disbursements total $75,000 or more but less than $150,000; $1,250 for each quarter in which disbursements total $150,000 or more but less than $225,000; $1,500 for each quarter in which disbursements total $300,000 or more but less than $1,000,000; $5,000 for each quarter in which disbursements total $1,000,000 or more but less than $2,000,000; $7,500 for each quarter in which disbursements total $2,000,000 or more but less than $3,000,000; $8,000 for each quarter in which disbursements total $3,000,000 or more but less than $5,000,000; $10,000 for each quarter in which disbursements total $5,000,000 or more. The fee shall be payable on the last day of the calendar month following the calendar quarter for which the fee is owed.

Congress developed the 1930(a)(6) fee so that the Program would be "self-funded by the users of the bankruptcy system – at no cost to the taxpayer." See H.R. REP. NO. 99-764, at 25 (1986), reprinted in 1986 U.S.C.C.A.N. 5227, 5238; see also H.R. REP. NO. 99-764, at 22 (1986), reprinted in 1986 U.S.C.C.A.N. 5227, 5235 ("The U.S. Trustee Program should not have to be self-funding. It provides a great service to our country's bankruptcy system. However, in this time of budget deficit concerns, self-funding becomes a necessity.").

Until January 1996, 1930(a)(6) fees were due from the time a chapter 11 case was commenced until one of three events -- plan confirmation, dismissal, or conversion -- occurred. Congress amended the statute in January, 1996[9] to delete plan confirmation as an event that terminates the fee payment obligation. As a result of the January, 1996 amendment to Section 1930(a)(6), chapter 11 debtors are required to pay 1930(a)(6) fees on post-confirmation disbursements until a "case" is converted, dismissed or closed.[10] [9] Section 1930(a)(6) was amended on January 26, 1996, pursuant to section 211 of the Balanced Budget Downpayment Act, I, Pub. L. No. 104-99, 110 Stat. 26, 37-38 (1996). In a clarifying amendment enacted in September 1996, Congress emphasized that post-confirmation quarterly fees were payable in every chapter 11 case, "notwithstanding any other provision of law." See Omnibus Consolidated Appropriations Act for Fiscal Year 1997, Pub. L. No. 104-208, § 109(d) (1996).

[10] While case closure is not expressly listed as an event that terminates the obligation to pay fees under Section 1930(a)(6), courts have generally agreed that the section should be read to add case closure as an event that terminates the obligation; once a case is closed, it is no longer a case "under chapter 11," and there is no possibility of conversion or dismissal after closure. See United States Trustee v. Gryphon at the Stone Mansion, Inc., 166 F.3d 552, 554 n.1 (3d Cir. 1999).

In these cases, 352 debtors filed 352 separate bankruptcy petitions, initiating 352 separate bankruptcy cases under chapter 11 of the Bankruptcy Code. These Debtors, advised by experienced counsel, made a business decision to reorganize without substantively consolidating these 352 cases into one. The courts below held correctly that the plain language of Section 1930(a)(6) required "each" of these open "case[s]" to pay its 1930(a)(6) fee.

The courts below did not commit clear error in concluding these Debtors did not substantively consolidate these 352 cases into one case. The Debtors' written response to creditor objections to its proposed reorganization plan admitted that "no substantive consolidation is, in fact, taking place under the Plan," and Genesis' chief financial officer testified that the Debtors had considered and rejected substantive consolidation. The Debtors' representations to the court and their testimony are fully consistent with the plan, which left the legal and organizational structures of the Debtors intact, preserved certain intercompany obligations, and expressly reserved jurisdiction in the bankruptcy court to close the hundreds of cases that the Debtors were leaving open.

The Debtors suggest incorrectly that the "deemed consolidation," which occurred under section 5.1 of the plan, permitted "each" of 352 live "case[s]" to stop paying 1930(a)(6) fees. All the "deemed consolidation" provision did was streamline the resolution of intercompany and other claims, and simplify the effect of cross-guarantees. The bankruptcy and district courts correctly determined this did not substantively consolidate the hundreds of cases into a single bankruptcy "case." The bankruptcy court later entered an order closing 349 of the Debtors' 352 cases as of June 30, 2002. Each Debtor individually owed fees prior to that time, and the lower courts committed no error in requiring that the fees be paid.

The lower court decisions are consistent with the United States Trustee Manual, which does nothing more than recite Section 1930(a)(6)'s plain language requirement that a fee be paid in each case. The decisions below are also fair. The Debtors were represented by sophisticated bankruptcy counsel. The Debtors considered the possibility of substantively consolidating their cases into a single case and decided against doing that. They must accept the legal consequences that flow from this decision, including the payment of 1930(a)(6) fees.

ARGUMENT

I. SECTION 1930(a)(6)'s PLAIN LANGUAGE IMPOSES FEES IN EACH OF THE DEBTORS' CASES

This case calls upon this Court to interpret Section 1930(a)(6)'s requirement that "a quarterly fee . . . be paid to the United States trustee . . . in each case under chapter 11 of title 11 . . . ." 28 U.S.C. § 1930(a)(6). The starting point in any question of statutory construction is the plain language of the statute. Government of Virgin Islands v. Knight, 989 F.2d 619, 633 (3d Cir. 1993) ("It is axiomatic that statutory interpretation begins with the language of the statute itself"). A statutory language analysis must precede any resort to legislative history or case law as "[t]here is, of course, no more persuasive evidence of the purpose of a statute than the words by which the legislature undertook to give expression to its wishes." United States v. American Trucking Ass'ns, 310 U.S. 534, 543 (1930). Where a statute's language is plain, the court's function is to enforce the statute according to its terms. See United States v. Ron Pair Enters., Inc., 489 U.S. 235, 241 (1989) (citation omitted).

The obligation under Section 1930(a)(6) to pay fees in each case does not hinge on "consolidation," whether "deemed," "substantive," or otherwise. Rather, the fundamental determinant for liability under Section 1930(a)(6) is the existence of a "case." In each, "a quarterly fee shall be paid." These Debtors commenced 352 separate cases under chapter 11 beginning in June 2000. By the express terms of their plan, confirmation did not affect the existence of each of the 352 debtors and did not close any of the 352 cases. The Debtors' own witness and the

Debtors' own pleadings stated that the Debtors did not intend to substantively consolidate these cases into one.[11]

Under the Bankruptcy Code, the filing of a bankruptcy petition by a "debtor" eligible for protection under chapter 11 initiates a voluntary "case." See 11 U.S.C. §§ 109, 301.[12] In these cases, there were 352 "debtors" seeking [11] The "deemed consolidations" effected by the plan did not substantively consolidate the Debtors' cases into a single case. A number of courts have held that bankruptcy courts have inherent discretion to order substantive consolidation. See, e.g., In re Bonham, 229 F.3d 750, 765 (9th Cir. 2000) ("No uniform guideline for determining when to order substantive consolidation has emerged"); Eastgroup Props. V. Southern Motel Assoc., 935 F.2d 245, 250 n.14 (11th Cir. 1991) (referring to "fact-specific nature of cases on substantive consolidation"). The bankruptcy court never sought to use such power and both the bankruptcy court and the district court held the Debtors' plan did not effect a substantive consolidation of the Debtors' cases into a single case. [5/14/02 Op. at 7, App. A-11; 3/31/03 Mem. Op. at 5 (as amended) App. A-18, 22]. The Second Circuit has held that "in ordering substantive consolidation, courts must . . . consider whether the interconnections between the entities to be consolidated are such that "no accurate identification and allocation of assets is possible." See Union Savs. Bank v. Augie/Restivo Baking Co. (In re Augie/Restivo Baking Co.), 860 F.2d 515, 519 (2d Cir. 1988). If separate corporate identities are maintained, and separate assets are "traceable" and "identifiable," then substantive consolidation is not warranted. Id. Here, the Debtors' chief financial officer testified that the Debtors were obligated to maintain their separate corporate identities for health care licensing purposes. [8/29/01 Tr. 217:10 - 218:8 (Hager); App. A-419-20]. Further, the Debtors' chief financial officer testified that the Debtors could trace operating expenses to specific legal entities. [8/29/01 Tr. 215:17 - 216:4 (Hager); App. A-417-18]. In sum, the testimony of the Debtors' witness establishes that their cases were not substantively consolidated.

[12] A "debtor" is a "person or municipality concerning which a case under this title [the Bankruptcy Code] has been commenced." 11 U.S.C. § 101(13) protection under chapter 11 and thus there were 352 "cases." Because each of the 352 chapter 11 cases commenced by the Debtors remained an open "case" under Section 1930(a)(6), fees had to be paid in each.

II. THE "DEEMED CONSOLIDATION" PROVISIONS OF THE DEBTORS' CONFIRMED PLAN OF REORGANIZATION DID NOT COLLAPSE HUNDREDS OF CASES INTO A SINGLE "CASE"

The bankruptcy court correctly found as a factual matter that the "deemed consolidation" provisions of the plan did not merge the Debtors' 352 "cases" into a single "case" for purposes of determining 1930(a)(6) fees. Section 5.1 of the plan, entitled "Deemed Consolidation of Debtors for Plan Purposes Only," solely enabled certain claims against individual Debtors to be satisfied from common "pots." The Debtors carefully limited and qualified Section 5.1, explaining that the "deemed consolidations" did not affect: (1) the "legal and organizational structure of the Reorganized Debtors;" (2) intercompany claims; (3) guaranties, liens, and security interests that are required to be maintained by contract, the plan, or an exit financing instrument; and (4) distributions from insurance policies or the proceeds of such policies. [Plan § 5.1, App. A-200-01].

(bracketed text added). A "person" includes "individual, partnership, and corporation." 11 U.S.C. § 101(41).

The Debtors drafted the plan. [Disclosure Stmt. at 3, App. A-50]. Their own plan made clear they were not collapsing their 352 cases into a single case. Moreover, in resisting an objection to confirmation of the plan, the Debtors urged the bankruptcy court not to interpret the plan as effecting substantive consolidation. [Debtors' Omnibus Response to Objections to Plan at 10]. Finally, the Debtors' own chief financial officer testified regarding the Debtors' decision not to consolidate their cases into one because of the business disruption that "licensor change" would entail. [8/29/01 Tr. 217:10 - 218:8 (Hager); App. A-419-20]. Given this record, the bankruptcy court did not commit clear error in finding that no substantive consolidation into one case occurred here.[13]

Both the bankruptcy court and district court arrived at the only reasonable conclusion in light of this record, namely that the "deemed consolidations" effected by the plan did not result in a single "case." The bankruptcy court observed correctly that "each separate pre-confirmation debtor emerged from the reorganization process as a separate post-confirmation legal entity with the same legal and corporate attributes it had prior to the plan confirmation." [5/14/02 Op. at 6, App. A-10]. Accordingly, under the plain language of Section 1930(a)(6), "each individual Genesis and Multicare debtor continued to constitute a 'case' within the meaning of the statute, requiring 1930(a)(6) fees to be paid by each separate debtor." [5/14/02 Op. at 6-7, App. A-10-11]. The district court correctly agreed with the bankruptcy court, noting that "the separate debtors who filed cases remained separate entities post-confirmation, [and] their separate cases remained separate cases and fees were appropriately assessed for each separate case under Section 1930." [3/31/03 Mem. Op. at 6, App. A-19].

[13] Indeed, the Debtors' representation to the court and their testimony estop them from asserting that the "deemed consolidations" resulted in one substantively consolidated case. See, e.g., Ryan Operations, G.P. v. Santiam-Midwest Lumber Co., 81 F.3d 355, 360 (3d Cir. 1996); see also Delgrosso v. Spang & Co., 903 F.2d 234, 241 (3d Cir. 1990); Scarano v. Central R.R. Co., 203 F.2d 510, 513 (3d Cir. 1953); In re Kindred Healthcare, Inc., No. 99-3199 (MFW), 2003 WL 22327933 (Bankr. D. Del. Oct. 9, 2003).

III. THE UNITED STATES TRUSTEE MANUAL SUPPORTS THE UNITED STATES TRUSTEE'S POSITION BECAUSE IT SIMPLY REFLECTS SECTION 1930(a)(6)'S PLAIN LANGUAGE

The Debtors' reliance on Section 3-8.3.3 of the United States Trustee Manual (the "Manual") is misplaced, because contrary to Debtors' assertions, the Manual does not purport to modify Section 1930(a)(6) or define when multiple cases become one case.

Section 3-8.3.3 of the Manual states that "[s]ubstantively consolidated cases become one case and are subject to only one fee from the time the substantive consolidation order is docketed." [Manual § 3-8.3.3, App. A-702]. This short sentence does nothing more than note that if the court consolidates the cases into one case – which the bankruptcy court expressly declined to do in these cases – then only one fee is paid going forward from such order. However, it does not purport to define what constitutes consolidating multiple cases into one case, or state when the court should consolidate multiple cases into one case. Nor does this short sentence suggest, in any way, that a limited "deemed" consolidation for certain distributive purposes should be treated as equivalent to consolidating the cases into one case. It does not address the issue at all. Thus, the Manual provides no basis for the Debtors' mistaken attempt to use it to prove that substantive consolidation of their cases into a single case occurred here.

For similar reasons, the Debtors' citation to Skidmore v. Swift, 323 U.S. 134, 140 (1944), is unavailing. Under Skidmore, informal agency interpretations of statutes they are charged to administer which appear in agency manuals and similar documents are "'entitled to respect'" but only to the extent that they have the 'power to persuade.'" See Christensen v. Harris Cty., 529 U.S. 576, 587 (2000). The persuasive power of such interpretations hinges on their consistency with the plain language and purpose of the statute. See Madison v. Resources for Human Development, 233 F.3d 175, 187 (3d Cir. 2000) (citing Cleary v. Waldman, 167 F.3d 801, 808 (3d Cir. 1999)).

"Skidmore deference," however, cannot add content to the Manual. The gap in the Debtors' argument is that they have failed to point to any relevant "agency interpretation" of Section 1930(a)(6) in the cited provision of the Manual, let alone one that should lead this Court to overturn the decisions of the courts below that follow the plain language of the statute and the undisputed facts of these cases. The Manual does not interpret Section 1930(a)(6), or engage in any substantive analysis of Section 1930(a)(6). It merely makes the unexceptional point that, if the bankruptcy court enters an order substantively consolidating the cases into one case, there is then only one "case" for 1930(a)(6) purposes.[14] As such, it is entirely consistent with the statute and supports the United States Trustee's position. Therefore, there was no reason for the courts below to "consider" the Manual,[15] and the Manual does not support a finding that the courts below erred.

[14] The part of the United States Trustee's brief that the Debtors cite in support of their argument is equally unavailing. The United States Trustee refers to "substantively consolidated cases" in the brief. [United States Trustee Brief -- Genesis/Multicare I at 30, App. A-636].

[15] The Debtors' Brief, which argues that "the bankruptcy court's failure to consider [the Manual] was erroneous" [Debtors' Brief at 18] misleadingly creates the impression that the Debtors had cited the Manual to the bankruptcy court. In fact, the Debtors did not argue the application of the Manual to the bankruptcy court at all. Rather, the Debtors raised this argument for the first time at the district court level.

IV. APPLYING SECTION 1930(a)(6)'s PLAIN LANGUAGE TO IMPOSE FEES IN EACH CASE IS FAIR BECAUSE THESE SOPHISTICATED DEBTORS, REPRESENTED BY EXPERIENCED COUNSEL, MADE BUSINESS DECISIONS NOT TO CONSOLIDATE THEIR CASES INTO A SINGLE CASE, AND THEY MUST ACCEPT THE LEGAL CONSEQUENCES THAT FLOW FROM THOSE DECISIONS

As this Court has acknowledged, plain and unambiguous statutory language must be applied as written "except in the extraordinary case where a literal reading of the language produces an absurd result." See Idahoan Fresh v. Advantage Produce, Inc., 157 F.3d 197, 202 (3d Cir. 1998). Section 1930(a)(6) mandates the payment of fees in each chapter 11 case, and the Debtors' plan expressly provided for the continued existence of 352 separate cases after confirmation. In light of the plain language of Section 1930(a)(6), the courts below correctly ruled that each of the Debtors' cases continues to owe a separate fee.

There is certainly nothing "absurd" about requiring a separate fee to be paid in each Debtor's case. Indeed, the Debtors' own decisions in structuring the cases and drafting the plan have led to this result. Throughout the course of their reorganization proceedings, the Debtors have been counseled by a sophisticated and experienced firm whose clients include the debtors in the historic chapter 11 cases of Enron and WorldCom. With the benefit of that counsel, the Debtors made the business decision not to seek substantive consolidation of their cases into a single case. The Debtors expressly made this choice so as to avoid the business interruption costs attendant to having to re-apply for various health care licences, which they determined they would have incurred had they been substantively consolidated into a single case. [8/29/01 Tr. 217:10 - 218:8 (Hager); App. A-219 -20].

The Debtors having made the business decision to keep all 352 cases in existence after confirmation, there is nothing unfair, much less "absurd," about requiring the Debtors to live with all of the legal ramifications of that decision. Indeed, the result in this case is mandated by the plain language of a federal statute Congress intended to apply in every chapter 11 case "notwithstanding any other provision of law." Omnibus Consolidated Appropriations Act for Fiscal Year 1997, Pub. L. No. 104-208, § 109(d) (1996). Given clear Congressional intent that post-confirmation Section 1930(a)(6) fees must be paid in every case, there is no equitable basis for allowing the Debtors to avoid the inevitable result of their business decisions to maintain 352 separate cases. See, e.g., United States Trustee v. Columbia Gas Sys., Inc. (In re Columbia Gas Sys., Inc.), 33 F.3d 294, 300 (3d Cir. 1994) (court cannot circumvent unambiguous statutory requirements even if it agrees with the policy underlying debtor's arguments); United States Trustee v. Price Waterhouse, 16 F.3d 138, 141 (3d Cir. 1994) (court cannot use equitable principles to disregard unambiguous statutory language).

Section 1930(a)(6) makes no judgment about why any particular chapter 11 case exists – it simply imposes fees upon each chapter 11 case while it exists, for the entire duration of its existence. These sophisticated Debtors made a business decision not to seek substantive consolidation of their cases into a single case. Whether this decision proved unwise in retrospect is of no moment; the result of this decision was to keep open multiple cases, each of which is statutorily required to pay a Section 1930(a)(6) fee for as long as it remains in chapter 11. Accordingly, the well-reasoned decisions of the bankruptcy and district courts to require payment of Section 1930(a)(6) fees in each of the Debtors' open cases should be affirmed.

CONCLUSION

WHEREFORE the United States Trustee requests that this Court affirm the district court's Memorandum and Order dated March 31, 2003.

LEGISLATIVE HISTORY MATERIAL

I. BASIS OF APPELLATE JURISDICTION

"An appellate court has an independent duty to inquire into its jurisdiction over a dispute, even where neither party contests it and the parties are prepared and concede it." Lopez v. Behles (In re American Ready Mix, Inc.), 14 F.3d 1497, 1499 (10th Cir. 1994). "Standing represents a jurisdictional requirement which remains open to review at all stages of the litigation." National Org. For Women, Inc. v. Scheidler, 510 U.S. 249, 255, 114 S.Ct. 798, 127 L.Ed.2d 99 (1994). Dr. Giddens, as the appellant, bears the burden of establishing his standing to appeal. See In re American Ready Mix, Inc., 14 F.3d at 1499 (10th Cir. 1994). Only "persons aggrieved" by a bankruptcy court's order have standing to appeal. See, e.g., id. at 1500; Weston v. Mann (In re Weston), 18 F.3d 860, 863 (10th Cir. 1994). Dr. Giddens lacks standing because he is not a person aggrieved. Consequently, there is no appellate jurisdiction. The United States Trustee may appear and be heard in this appeal. 11 U.S.C. § 307.

A. Dr. Giddens Lacks Standing

Dr. Giddens is a physician. At the time Rebecca and Michael Kreutzer first sought Chapter 7 bankruptcy relief they held a malpractice claim against Dr. Giddens that they should have disclosed as an asset of their estate in their bankruptcy filing. Had they done so, the Chapter 7 trustee could have pursued that claim on behalf of the Kreutzers' creditors. Because the Kreutzers failed to disclose it, the creditors were wrongfully denied a potential recovery that could have helped satisfy their debts. The bankruptcy court's order under 11 U.S.C. 350 reopening the Kreutzers' Chapter 7 bankruptcy case rectifies that injustice because it allows the Chapter 7 trustee to sue Dr. Giddens on behalf of the creditors if the trustee determines the Kruetzers' claim against Dr. Giddens may have merit.

Dr. Giddens lacks standing to appeal the order reopening the Kruetzers' bankruptcy case. This is so because his "rights or interests are [not] directly and adversely affected pecuniarily" by the order reopening his case, as that order does not "diminish[] [his] property, increase[] [his] burdens, or impair[] [his] rights." In re American Ready Mix, 14 F.3d at 1500. Dr. Giddens cannot meet this burden.

The facts in the case of Nintendo Company, Ltd. v. Patten (In re Alpex Computer Corp.), 71 F.3d 353 (10th Cir. 1995), are similar to the instant case. In that case, a defendant was named in a patent infringement suit brought by a former bankruptcy debtor. The defendant filed a motion to reopen the bankruptcy case in order to enforce the defendant's interpretation of the bankruptcy plan of reorganization which it contended would compel the plaintiff to discontinue the patent litigation and accept a settlement offer. The Tenth Circuit Court of Appeals reversed the district court's conclusion that the defendant had standing to appeal the order on the motion to reopen. It found that under the circumstances standing to appeal "was confined to debtors, creditors, or trustees, each with a particular and direct stake in reopening. . . " Id. at 356. The court noted that "an entity that owes a debt to the debtor [which] may affect the plan in terms of infusing or depleting assets . . . may challenge its status in an adversary proceeding . . ." Id. Nintendo's rights and liabilities derived from the patent litigation but it had no similar stake in the bankruptcy proceeding. Id.

Other courts have found that a potential defendant in a bankruptcy trustee's contemplated action, such as Dr. Giddens, is not a person aggrieved and, therefore, lacks standing to appeal. Abbott v. Daff (In re Abbott), 183 B.R. 198, 200 (B.A.P. 9th Cir. 1995)(potential defendant in bankruptcy trustee's contemplated action lacked standing to appeal an order reopening the underlying bankruptcy case) citing Fondiller v. Robertson (In re Fondiller), 707 F.2d 441, 442 (9th Cir. 1983)(person with “only demonstrable interest in the order [authorizing employment of special counsel for bankruptcy estate was as] a potential party defendant in an adversary proceeding” is not a person aggrieved); see Travelers Insurance Co. v. H.K. Porter Co., Inc., 45 F.3d 737 (3d Cir. 1995); In re El San Juan Hotel, 809 F.2d 151, 155 (1st Cir. 1987).

The Bankruptcy Appellate Panel for the Ninth Circuit Court of Appeals explained:

> While there might be an interest in defending against liability, the appellant is not prevented from doing so by the bankruptcy court’s order. Nor does the court’s order prevent the appellant from asserting any claims or defenses. . . . A motion to reopen is simply a mechanical device which can be brought ex parte and without notice. [citation omitted] It has no independent legal significance and determines nothing with respect to the merits of the case.

In re Abbott, 183 B.R. at 200.

Similarly, the Bankruptcy Appellate Panel for the Tenth Circuit recognized the limited effect that reopening a bankruptcy case has when it observed “‘the effect of [11 U.S.C. § 350(b)] is merely to resurrect the court file from the stacks of the closed cases, or even from the archives to enable it to receive a new request for relief.’” GMX Resources v. Kleban (In re Petroleum Production Management, Inc.), 282 B.R. 9, 15 (B.A.P. 10th Cir. 2002), quoting Leach v. Buckingham (In re Leach), 194 B.R. 812, 815 (E.D. Mich. 1996), quoting In re David, 106 B.R. 126, 128 (Bankr. E.D. Mich. 1989).

The order reopening the bankruptcy case has no independent legal effect. It does not compel the Chapter 7 Trustee to pursue any action against Dr. Giddens nor does it adjudicate the merits of the claim. In the event that the Chapter 7 Trustee pursues the Malpractice Claim against Dr. Giddens, he will be free to defend the claim and to appeal any adverse orders or judgments. Until such time, he is not an aggrieved person and he lacks standing to appeal the order reopening the case.

B. The United States Trustee Has Standing To Be Heard In This Appeal

United States Trustees are officials of the Department of Justice appointed by the Attorney General to supervise the administration of bankruptcy cases and trustees. See 28 U.S.C. §§ 581-589 (specifying the powers and duties of United States Trustees). See also United States Trustee v. Columbia Gas Sys., Inc. (In re Columbia Gas Sys., Inc.), 33 F.3d 294, 296 (3d Cir. 1994) (United States Trustees oversee the bankruptcy process, protect the public interest, and ensure that bankruptcy cases are conducted according to law), citing H.R. Rep. No. 95-595, 109 (1977); United States Trustee v. Revco D.S., Inc. (In re Revco D.S., Inc.), 898 F.2d 498, 499 (6th Cir. 1990) ("[t]he United States trustee, an officer of the Executive Branch, represents . . . [the] public interest"); Curry v. Castillo (In re Castillo), 297 F.3d 940, 950 (9th Cir. 2002) ("The United States Trustee is the 'watchdog' of the bankruptcy system . . . charged with preventing fraud and abuse and with 'fill[ing] the vacuum' caused by possible creditor inactivity."). The United States Trustee "may raise and may appear and be heard on any issue [but may not file a Chapter 11 plan] in any case or proceeding" under the Bankruptcy Code. 11 U.S.C.§ 307. Thus, the United States Trustee had standing to appear and be heard in this appeal.[1]

Inc.*, 33 F.3d at 295-299 (holding United States Trustee has broad standing, including ability to challenge investment guidelines for Chapter 11 debtor); United States Trustee v. Price Waterhouse, 19 F.3d 138, 141 (3d Cir. 1994) (finding United States Trustee has standing to appeal appointment of professionals in Chapter 11 case); *United States Trustee v. II. ISSUE ON APPEAL

Whether the United States Bankruptcy Court abused its discretion under 11 U.S.C. § 350 in granting the motion to reopen the bankruptcy case in order for a bankruptcy trustee to determine whether to administer a previously undisclosed Malpractice Claim against Dr. Giddens for the benefit of creditors of the bankruptcy estate over Dr. Gidden's objection asserting judicial estoppel?

III. STATEMENT OF THE CASE

The underlying Chapter 7 bankruptcy petition was filed by Michael Shawn Kreutzer and Rebecca Dawn Kreutzer ("Debtors"), in the United States Bankruptcy Court for the Northern District of Oklahoma on April 30, 2003. (Order Granting Debtor's Motion To Re-Open Bankruptcy Case And Order Directing The Appointment Of A Trustee, "Order," ROP Part 9, p. 20 of 30)[2] The bankruptcy court's docket indicates that Steven W. Soule ("Chapter 7 Trustee") was appointed as the Chapter 7 trustee.[3] (ROP Part 2, p. 1 of 35) The Debtors did not disclose their Malpractice Claim against Dr. Giddens, which accrued prior to the filing of the bankruptcy, as an asset in their bankruptcy schedules. (Order, ROP Part 9, p. 20 of 30) On August 11, 2003, standing to appeal denial of motion to dismiss); In re Plaza de Diego Shopping Ctr., Inc., 911 F.2d 820, 824 (1st Cir. 1990) (standing to appeal appointment of trustee); In re Revco D.S., Inc., 898 F.2d at 499 (standing to appeal decision refusing to appoint examiner).

[2] The commencement of the bankruptcy case created a bankruptcy estate, generally comprised of all of the Debtors' legal or equitable interests in property. 11 U.S.C. § 541(a). Property of the estate includes claims for personal injury. See Howe v. Richardson, 193 F.3d 60 (1st Cir. 1999).

[3] In contrast to the United States Trustee, a bankruptcy trustee appointed under Chapter 7 of the Bankruptcy Code is a private individual appointed by the United States Trustee and charged with the duty of marshaling assets of the bankruptcy estate, liquidating non-exempt assets, making distributions to parties who have filed proofs of claim, etc. 11 U.S.C. §§ 701, 702(d), 704, 726.

the Kreutzers received a Chapter 7 bankruptcy discharge of their pre-bankruptcy debts and the case was closed on August 29, 2003. (Id. at p. 21 of 30)

"On June 27, 2003, the Debtors filed an action against Dr. Giddens in Tulsa County District Court, which was voluntarily dismissed on October 6, 2003, and refiled on February 12, 2004 (the "Malpractice Action.")." (Id.) Dr. Giddens filed a motion to dismiss the Malpractice Action asserting that the Debtors lacked standing, the Malpractice Claim was an unadministered asset of the Debtors' bankruptcy estate and that the Debtors should be judicially estopped from asserting the claim because they failed to list it in their bankruptcy schedules. (Id.)

The Debtors filed a motion under 11 U.S.C. § 350 to reopen their bankruptcy case "in order to amend their schedules to list the claim as an asset, to claim an exemption in the Malpractice Claim, and to allow the Chapter 7 trustee to administer the Malpractice Claim and distribute any non-exempt proceeds therefrom to creditors of the estate." (Id.) Dr. Giddens contended that the motion "should be denied under the doctrine of judicial estoppel as a penalty for the [Debtors'] failure to disclose the Malpractice Claim prior to the closing of their bankruptcy case." (Id.) The United States Trustee supported the motion to reopen asserting that the creditors of the bankruptcy estate are the real beneficiaries of the motion to reopen, not the Debtors, that the creditors should not "incur a penalty for a debtor's failure to list an asset that could be liquidated by the trustee for their benefit" and that although a penalty might be appropriate, the Debtors, not their creditors, "should bear the penalty, which may be a denial of their exemption in the asset or some other detriment specific" to the Debtors. (Id.) The Chapter

7 Trustee was given notice of the motion and did not oppose it or request application of judicial estoppel against the Debtors. (Id. at p. 26 of 30)[4]

Citing 11 U.S.C. § 350, the bankruptcy court found:

> [The Debtors] have clearly established statutory cause for reopening - an asset of the estate remains to be administered by the trustee for the benefit of creditors and the [Debtors] seek to claim an exemption in a portion of the unadministered asset.

(Id. at p. 22 of 30)

The bankruptcy court quoted Mullendore v. United States (In re Mullendore), 741 F.2d 306, 308 (10th Cir. 1984), for the proposition that it "is the duty of the court to reopen an estate whenever prima facie proof is made that [the estate] has not been fully administered." (Id.) The court noted that "all parties agree that the Malpractice Claim is currently an asset of the [Debtors'] bankruptcy estate because it was not administered or abandoned by the Chapter 7 trustee." (Id.)[5] The bankruptcy court then found that Dr. Giddens was not a creditor of the Debtors' bankruptcy estate. (Id. at p. 23 of 30) The court determined that the doctrine of judicial estoppel did not preclude reopening the case and found –

> (1) [T]here will be no 'prejudice of the party who has acquiesced in the position formerly taken' by the [Debtors] if they are allowed to reopen the case, and (2) the [Debtors] would not necessarily 'derive any unfair advantage' if the case is reopened, nor would reopening the case 'impose an unfair detriment on the opposing party'. . . ."

[4] 11 U.S.C. § 350(a) provides that a Chapter 7 Trustee is discharged before before a case is closed.

[5] The court quoted Parker v. Wendy's Int'l, Inc., 365 F.3d 1268, 1272 (11th Cir. 2004)("At the close of a bankruptcy case, property of the estate that is not abandoned under § 554 and that is not administered in the bankruptcy proceedings remains property of the estate.")

The Order states:

> Dr. Giddens failed to show why it would be unfair to allow the Chapter 7 trustee to decide whether to pursue the Malpractice Claim against Dr. Giddens for the benefit of the [Debtors'] prepetition creditors, whose only claims against the [Debtors] have been discharged and whose only hope for any repayment derives from the potential proceeds of the Malpractice Claim.

(Id. at p. 27 of 30)

The bankruptcy court explained:

> Dr. Giddens was not a 'party who acquiesced in the position formerly taken" but rather it was the "Chapter 7 trustee [who] processed the case as a 'no asset case' and was deprived of the opportunity to administer the Malpractice Claim and distribute proceeds (if any) to creditors prior to closure of the case. While the trustee (and creditors) have been prejudiced by the omission, the [Debtors] seek to remedy that prejudice by reopening the bankruptcy case and disclosing the Malpractice Claim, subjecting the claim to administration by the trustee.

(Id.)

The court noted that "Dr. Giddens' counsel admitted at the hearing that Dr. Giddens would suffer no 'unfair detriment' if the [Debtors] were not estopped from reopening their case." (Id. at p. 28 of 30) The bankruptcy court found:

> Dr. Giddens would obtain an undeserved benefit (i.e., a potentially meritorious case against him would be dismissed on jurisdictional grounds) if he were to succeed in baring the [Debtors] from reopening their bankruptcy estate. Denying the Motion to Reopen would unjustifiably thwart the only party currently possessing standing to prosecute the Malpractice Action, the trustee, who is blameless, from administering the Malpractice Claim for the benefit of the estate.

(Id. at pp. 28-30 of 30)

The bankruptcy court observed that the Chapter 7 Trustee received notice of the motion and did not object. (Id. at p. 27 of 30) The court found it significant that the United States Trustee supported the motion and "urge[d] the court to give the Chapter 7 trustee the opportunity to administer the claim . . . and defer to a later date a determination as to whether any penalty should be imposed upon the [Debtors]. . . ." (Id. at p. 27 of 30)

The motion to reopen was granted on November 21, 2005, and directed the United States Trustee to appoint a Chapter 7 trustee. (Docket entry no. 21, ROP Part 1, p. 4 of 35; Order, ROP, Part 9, p. 29 of 30) On November 23, 2005, the notice of Steven W. Soule's appointment as Chapter 7 Trustee in the reopened case was filed. (Docket entry no. 22, ROP Part 1, p. 4 of 35). This appeal followed.

IV. ARGUMENT AND AUTHORITIES

Dr. Giddens asserts that judicial estoppel and the policy favoring full disclosure by debtors outweighs the principle that "it is the duty of the court to reopen an estate whenever prima facie proof is made that [the estate] has not been fully administered." In re Mullendore, 741 F.2d at 308 (interpreting predecessor to 11 U.S.C. § 350). Nevertheless, judicial estoppel based on the Debtors' failure to disclose assets should not be applied when it would prevent a Chapter 7 Trustee from administering the asset.

Even if judicial estoppel is applied in this case, Dr. Giddens fails to challenge the bankruptcy court's factual findings. Those findings demonstrate that the factors required for judicial estoppel are absent in this case. Likewise, the argument that allowing the case to be reopened encourages debtors to omit assets in their original schedules is flawed. Keeping the case closed would unfairly prejudice the Kreutzers' creditors - who will benefit from any recovery, perpetuate inaccurate information in this bankruptcy case, frustrate the purposes of the Bankruptcy Code and provide a windfall to Dr. Giddens.

A. Judicial Estoppel Is Inappropriate In This Case

The Tenth Circuit Court of Appeals recognized the doctrine of judicial estoppel in the case of Johnson v. Linden City, 405 F.3d 1065 (10th Cir. 2005), a case in which an arrestee who signed a plea agreement and admitted guilt was later judicially estopped from suing a police officer and city for unlawful arrest. The court noted that the doctrine is a "discretionary remedy" that courts may use to "'prevent improper use of judicial machinery.'" Id. at 1068 quoting New Hampshire v. Maine, 532 U.S. 742, 750, 121 S.Ct. 1808, 149 L.Ed.2d 968 (2001). It is employed when a party's inconsistent positions in court, if adopted by the courts, would "undermine the integrity of the judicial system." Johnson, 405 F.3d at 1070.

Judicial estoppel "'is probably not reducible to any general formulation of principle.'" Johnson, 405 F.3d 1068, quoting New Hampshire, 532 U.S. at 750. Nevertheless, the Tenth Circuit Court of Appeals has enumerated three factors. First, the "party's later position must be 'clearly inconsistent' with its earlier position." Johnson, 405 F.3d at 1069. Second, the party to be judicially estopped have persuaded the earlier court to accept the earlier factual position so that "judicial acceptance of an inconsistent position in a later proceeding would create the perception that either the first or second court was mislead." Id., quoting New Hampshire, 532 U.S. at 750. Third, "whether the party seeking to assert an inconsistent position would derive an unfair advantage or impose an unfair detriment on the opposing party if not estopped." Johnson, 405 F.3d at 1069, quoting New Hampshire, 532 U.S. at 751. These factors are not present in the instant case and estopping the reopening of this case would undermine the integrity of the judicial system.

It appears that the Tenth Circuit Court of Appeals has not addressed whether judicial estoppel should be applied in cases where debtors fail to disclose an asset in their original schedules and later bring a motion to reopen the bankruptcy in order to file amended schedules and allow the Chapter 7 trustee to administer the asset. The Eleventh Circuit Court of Appeals and the Ninth Circuit Bankruptcy Appellate Panel have concluded that judicial estoppel should not be applied if the result would be to bar a trustee from administering previously undisclosed claims. See Parker, 365 F.3d 1268; Lopez v. Specialty Restaurants Corp. (In re Lopez), 283 B.R. 22, 24 (B.A.P. 9th Cir. 2002).

At least one other circuit appears, at first glance, to disagree.[6] See, e.g., Superior Crewboats, Inc. v. Primary P& I Underwriters (In re Superior Crewboats, Inc.), 374 F.3d 330 (5th Cir. 2004)(claim was disclosed to the trustee at the first meeting of creditors and the trustee filed an abandonment of the asset); Browning v. Mims (In re Coastal Plains, Inc.), 179 F.3d 197 (5th Cir. 1999).[7] A close examination reveals that the third prong of the Fifth Circuit's test for [6] Dr. Giddens also cites West v. Family Express Corp. (In re Bilstat, Inc.), 314 B.R. 603 (Bankr. S.D. Tex 2004), for an example of a bankruptcy trustee being judicially estopped based on the debtor's non-disclosure. However, that case did not involve a bankruptcy trustee. The trustee was a trustee appointed by the court pursuant to a distribution trust agreement under a Chapter 11 plan and he was not a Chapter 11 or a Chapter 7 trustee. See id. at 607. The court also applied the inadvertence test in contrast to the Tenth Circuit's test. See id. at 608. Likewise, Dr. Giddens' reliance on Autos, Inc. v. Gowin, 330 B.R. 788 (D. Kan. 2005), is misplaced because that case involved judicial estoppel against the debtor and not a Chapter 7 trustee. That court found that although the "elements of judicial estoppel may be present" dismissing the undisclosed claims "would provide a windfall" to the defendant and would deprive creditors of the bankruptcy estate of an asset. Id. at 796. Instead, the court ordered the debtor to "distribute any and all damages recovered in the adversary action among the creditors" and denied her any personal recovery. Id.

[7] Two other Circuits have employed judicial estoppel to preclude a Chapter 11 debtor from pursuing causes of action that were not adequately disclosed; however, in those cases the debtors sought to prosecute the actions for their own interests, and the cases did not involve a judicial estoppel is significantly different than the Tenth Circuit's. The Fifth Circuit's third factor is whether the non-disclosure was inadvertent. See In re Superior Crewboats, Inc., 374 F.3d at 333, 335; In re Coastal Plains, Inc., 179 F.3d at 206. This is in sharp contrast to the Tenth Circuit's inquiry as to whether the party asserting an inconsistent position would obtain an unfair advantage or would impose an unfair detriment on the opposing party.

Because the factors enumerated by the Tenth Circuit Court of Appeals for judicial estoppel must be employed, case law from other circuits applying judicial estoppel against Chapter 7 trustees under different standards is not persuasive. As discussed below, under the Tenth Circuit's factors, judicial estoppel is inappropriate in this case.

B. The Motion To Reopen Was Made In The Original Case And Not In Later Litigation

Judicial estoppel prevents inconsistent positions from being taken in a "later proceeding." Johnson, 405 F.3d at 1069, quoting New Hampshire, 532 U.S. at 750. The order reopening the Debtors' bankruptcy case was not entered in a later case. It is entered in the same bankruptcy case in which the inconsistent facts were set forth in the Debtors' schedules. Because this case does not involve a later proceeding but involves the same case, judicial estoppel is inappropriate.

Section 350 of the Bankruptcy Code, 11 U.S.C. § 350, is the proper rule of law to be applied when an undisclosed asset is subsequently revealed in a closed bankruptcy case. Section 350 specifically provides that a case may be reopened to administer an asset. Judicially estopping the reopening of the case would run contrary to the plain language of this section. This is true, because assets listed in the debtor's schedules are abandoned or otherwise fully administered before a case is closed. 11 U.S.C. § 554. Assets that are not listed in the schedules are neither abandoned nor otherwise administered and remain property of the bankruptcy estate even after the case is closed. 11 U.S.C. § 554(c), (d); Parker, 365 F.3d at 1272. In short, section 350 was written to enable cases to be reopened so that undisclosed assets could be administered.

Chapter 7 trustee. See Krystal Cadillac-Oldsmobile GMC Trust, Inc. v. General Motors Corp., 337 F.3d 314 (3d Cir. 2003), cert. denied, 541 U.S. 1043, 124 S.Ct. 2172, 158 L.Ed.2d 732 (2004); Payless Wholesale Distributors, Inc., v. Alberto Culver (P.R.), Inc., 989 F.2d 570 (1st Cir. 1993).

C. The Bankruptcy Court Did Not Adopt The Debtors' Position

In order for judicial estoppel to arise, the previous court must have adopted the prior factually inconsistent position. See Johnson, 405 F.3d at 1069. The bankruptcy court never adopted the facts asserted in the Debtors' schedule of assets, because entry of the discharge order is a ministerial act. See In re Hicks, 184 B.R. 954, 959 (Bankr. C.D. Cal. 1995). Applicable law requires that after the passage of certain deadlines the order discharging debts must be entered. No hearing is required before granting the discharge.

Section 727(a) provides that the bankruptcy court "shall grant the debtor a discharge, unless . . ." the debtor is not an individual, the debtor received a discharge within six years before the current bankruptcy case was filed[8], the court approves a written waiver of discharge or a party prevails on an adversary proceeding objecting to the discharge. Bankruptcy Rule 4004 provides:

> . . . on expiration of the time fixed for filing a complaint objecting to discharge and the time fixed for filing a motion to dismiss the case . . . the court shall forthwith grant the > discharge unless: (A) the debtor is not an individual, (B) a complaint objecting to the discharge has been filed, (C) the debtor has filed a waiver . . . (D) a motion to dismiss the case under § 707 is pending, (E) a motion to extend time for filing a complaint objecting to discharge is pending, (F) a motion to extend the time for filing a motion to dismiss the case . . . is pending, or (G) the debtor has not paid in full the filing fee . . . .

FED. R. BANKR. P. 4004.

Nowhere does the Rule provide that the bankruptcy court is required to determine whether the schedules are accurate before a debtor's discharge is entered. Clearly, unless one of the enumerated criterion is met, the bankruptcy court must enter an order discharging debts.

In the instant case, the time for these actions passed, no such actions were taken or existed, and the discharge was entered. No hearing was conducted – nor was a hearing required – as to whether the Debtors listed all of their assets. (Docket, ROP, Part 2, pp. 1-6 of 35) In short, the bankruptcy court did not rely on the Debtors' schedules or adopt their contents in granting the Debtors' discharge or in taking any other action before the case was closed. The second factor for judicial estoppel is not satisfied.

D. Dr. Giddens Will Not Suffer An Unfair Detriment Nor Will There Be An Unfair Advantage By Reopening The Case

Dr. Giddens does not cite to any part of the record on appeal to demonstrate that the bankruptcy court's factual conclusions are clearly erroneous. Rather, he simply argues, without support from the record, that the Debtors did not inadvertently fail to disclose the claim. He also asserts on appeal that the Debtors obtained an unfair advantage by obtaining a bankruptcy discharge. Because Dr. Giddens fails to demonstrate that the bankruptcy court's factual findings are clearly erroneous, they must be accepted on appeal. FED. R. BANKR. P. 8013.

As noted in the statement of facts above, the bankruptcy court found that there would be no prejudice to Dr. Giddens and that there would be no unfair advantage if the case is reopened. Further, the court noted that "Dr. Giddens' counsel admitted at the hearing that Dr. Giddens would suffer no 'unfair detriment' if the [Debtors] were not estopped from reopening their case." (Order, ROP, part 9, p. 28 of 30) In contrast, if judicial estoppel were applied "Dr. Giddens would obtain an undeserved benefit . . . ." (Id. pp. 28-30 of 30) The third factor for judicial estoppel is not met.

Judicial estoppel is inappropriate in this case.

E. The Chapter 7 Trustee Is Not The Party Taking An Inconsistent Position

It is undisputed that the Chapter 7 Trustee is the only one with standing to pursue the Malpractice Claim against Dr. Giddens.[9] Judicially estopping this case from being reopened would prevent the Chapter 7 Trustee from pursuing the claim against Dr. Giddens. Judicial estoppel should only be applied against the party that took an inconsistent position. See Johnson, 405 F.3d at 1069. The bankruptcy court found that the Chapter 7 Trustee was "blameless." (Order, ROP, Part 9, pp. 28-30 of 30) The Chapter 7 Trustee should not, therefore, be judicially estopped. See Parker, 365 F.3d 1268; In re Lopez, 283 B.R. at 24.

At page 5 of the Appellant's Brief, Dr. Giddens admits that the Chapter 7 Trustee and the creditors of the bankruptcy estate did not have notice of the Malpractice Claim against him. Even without notice, the Malpractice Claim became property of the estate. 11 U.S.C. § 541. And without notice, the Malpractice Claim could not be abandoned. See Parker, 365 F.3d at 1272.

[9] The Chapter 7 trustee may bring an action in the bankruptcy court to enforce and collect a debt on behalf of the estate. 11 U.S.C. § 323; 28 U.S.C. § 157(b).

To require otherwise would shield a potential tort defendant from prosecution by a bankruptcy trustee.

The argument that the Chapter 7 Trustee is subject to any defenses that Dr. Giddens would have against the Debtors, including judicially estopped, is incorrect. Although Paul v. Monts, 906 F.2d 1468 (10th Cir. 1990), is cited by Dr. Giddens as general support of this proposition, it does not discuss or support judicial estoppel against a Chapter 7 trustee for undisclosed claims. Paul discusses equitable estoppel not judicial estoppel. Id. at 1474. Paul involved a case where a Chapter 11 case was converted to Chapter 7 and the Chapter 7 trustee prosecuted an action against a party which failed to perform an alleged contract to purchase the debtor's stock. The Tenth Circuit found that the elements of equitable estoppel were not satisfied for purposes of summary judgment. Id.

The Eleventh Circuit Court of Appeals explained why a debtor's failure to disclose a claim cannot be asserted as a defense in litigation brought by a Chapter 7 trustee. It stated:

> Although general bankruptcy law establishes that the trustee does not have any more rights than the debtor has [citation omitted] any post-petition conduct by [the debtor], including failure to disclose an asset, does not relate to the merits of the [ ] claim. This is because when the instant bankruptcy petition was filed, [the debtor's] claim against Wendy's became property of the bankruptcy estate under section 541 and [the Chapter 7 trustee] became the real party in interest."

Parker, 365 F.3d at 1272, fn. 3.

In short, once the underlying bankruptcy was filed the Malpractice Claim became property of the bankruptcy estate and the Chapter 7 Trustee was the real party in interest. The Debtors' failure disclose the Malpractice Claim in their bankruptcy schedules, to amend their schedules during the pendency of the bankruptcy to make the proper disclosure or otherwise advise the Chapter 7 Trustee of the Malpractice Claim are acts committed when the Debtors were not the real parties in interest. The Chapter 7 Trustee cannot, therefore, be charged with their failure to disclose.

F. Allowing This Case To Be Reopened Does Not Provide An Incentive For Debtors To Conceal Assets And Will Further The Purposes Of The Bankruptcy Code

Dr. Giddens' asserts that allowing debtors to reopen their case provides a disincentive for debtors to file accurate original schedules. This argument fails to recognize that by so doing debtors risk losing rights to claim an exemption, having their discharge revoked, and being exposed to criminal liability for concealing assets and making false oaths. See 11 U.S.C. § 727(d) (objection may be revoked within one year of discharge if obtained by debtor's fraud or if debtor acquires property of the estate and knowingly and fraudulently fails to report such to the trustee); 18 U.S.C. § 152 (crime of concealment of assets and making a false oath in a bankruptcy case); In re Lopez, 283 B.R. at 30.

The argument ignores the basic premise in Chapter 7 bankruptcy that assets should be liquidated for the benefit of creditors. It also ignores the fact that Congress has already spoken by enacting section 350 which explicitly provides for reopening a case in order to administer assets.

Dr. Giddens argues that the risks to a debtor in reopening a case to schedule an undisclosed asset are minimal. The statistical probability of a debtor being criminally prosecuted is well beyond the scope of the record on appeal and Dr. Giddens' conclusions should be disregarded. The fact remains that criminal prosecution remains a possibility.

Dr. Giddens also argues that the Debtors could receive proceeds from any litigation against him if the proceeds exceed the amount required to pay creditors and the costs of administration of the bankruptcy estate. He has cited to nothing in the record to indicate that this is anything but a hypothetical concern. Certainly, a court could fashion a judgment that would preclude any excess proceeds from going to the Debtors such as was done in Autos, Inc., 330 B.R. at 796 (Chapter 13 Debtor who failed to disclose cause of action would be required to "distribute any and all damages recovered in the adversary action among the creditors" and be denied any personal recovery). However, this issue simply is not ripe for determination and should not preclude the reopening of this case. An appropriate remedy can be fashioned if and when the Chapter 7 Trustee litigates the claim.

The contention that the case should not be reopened in order to promote full disclosure in original schedules ignores the very reason why full disclosure is required - so that assets may be reviewed and administered by a Chapter 7 trustee. Dr. Giddens essentially argues that assets must be disclosed when a case is filed or they will be lost to the Chapter 7 trustee even if he later discovers them. Such a rule might serve the interests of a party who is liable to the bankruptcy estate, but would do little to promote the policies of the Bankruptcy Code or benefit creditors. Just as importantly, preventing the case from being reopened would assure that the schedules are never corrected.

V. CONCLUSION

For all of the foregoing reasons, the decision of the bankruptcy court to reopen the Debtors' bankruptcy case should be affirmed.

UNITED STATES TRUSTEE'S RESPONSE TO APPELLANT'S OBJECTION TO MAGISTRATE'S REPORT AND RECOMMENDATION

Felicia S. Turner, the United States Trustee, responds to Appellant Jimmy Giddens, M.D.'s Objection To Magistrate's Report And Recommendation ("Report"), as set forth below.[1]

I. STANDARD OF REVIEW

This is an appeal from the United States Bankruptcy Court's order reopening the underlying bankruptcy case and directing the United States Trustee to appoint a Chapter 7 trustee to administer a previously undisclosed asset.[2] (Order, Record On Appeal "ROP" Part 9, p. 29 of 30) An appeal from the Bankruptcy Court is heard by the Bankruptcy Appellate Panel unless one of the parties elects to have the United States District Court hear it. 28 U.S.C. § 158(c). Dr. Giddens elected for the United States District Court to hear this appeal.

An order reopening a bankruptcy case under 11 U.S.C. § 350 is reviewed for abuse of discretion. See Nintendo Company, Ltd. v. Patten (In re Alpex Computer Corp.), 71 F.3d 353, 356 (10th Cir. 1995). The Bankruptcy Court's findings of fact can only be set aside if they are clearly erroneous. FED. R. BANKR. P. 8013. The Bankruptcy Court's conclusions of law are subject to de novo review. See Phillips v. White (In re White), 25 F.3d 931, 933 (10th Cir. 1994). On ". . . appeal the district court may affirm, modify or reverse a bankruptcy judge's judgment, order, or decree or remand with instructions for further proceedings." FED. R. BANKR. P. 8013.

The District Court referred this appeal to United States Magistrate Judge Frank M.

[1] The United States Trustee's Brief In Response To Appellant's Opening Brief is incorporated herein by this reference. Mary E. May, the former United States Trustee for Region 20 has passed away. Felicia S. Turner has recently been appointed to the position.

[2] The United States Trustee Program is a component of the United States Department of Justice. A Chapter 7 trustee is a private party who is not an employee of the United States.

McCarthy who filed a Report and Recommendation. The Report recommends dismissal of the appeal because Dr. Giddens lacks standing since he is not a creditor or trustee and is not a person aggrieved by the order. It alternatively recommends that the District Court affirm the Bankruptcy Court's decision reopening the case and directing the appointment of a Chapter 7 trustee. As the Report notes, the bankruptcy creditors' only hope of repayment is from any proceeds from the malpractice action and Dr. Giddens' counsel admitted that he would not suffer any unfair detriment if the case were reopened.

Dr. Giddens filed an objection to the report pursuant to FED. R. CIV. P. 72(b). Dr. Giddens specifically objected to the following: (1) The finding that he lacks standing to appeal; (2) The manner in which the Report analyzes judicial estoppel; (3) The Report's lack of discussion of the Debtors' standing to bring the motion to reopen; and (4) The Report's handling of Dr. Giddens' public policy arguments. The United States Trustee did not object to the Report.

II. SUMMARY OF THE ARGUMENT

Tenth Circuit case law required this bankruptcy case to be reopened in order to administer a previously undisclosed asset - a lawsuit against Dr. Giddens. Dr. Giddens lacks standing on appeal because reopening the case was a ministerial act which had no direct impact on him. The factors identified by the Tenth Circuit for judicial estoppel militate against its use here. The Debtors clearly had standing to bring the motion to reopen. Lastly, a policy preventing cases from being reopened to administer assets not only contradicts 11 U.S.C. § 350, but it would also assure that the injustice suffered by the creditors in this bankruptcy case is never remedied.

III. THE BANKRUPTCY COURT WAS REQUIRED TO REOPEN THE CASE SO THAT AN ASSET COULD BE ADMINISTERED

11 U.S.C. § 350 provides that a bankruptcy case may be reopened to ". . . administer assets, to accord relief to the debtor, or for other cause." Section 350 recognizes that cases will be closed where assets have not been disclosed and administered. It was the ". . . duty of the court to reopen . . . " the bankruptcy case because an unadministered asset clearly existed. See Mullendore v. United States (In re Mullendore), 741 F.2d 306 (10th Cir. 1984).

Only a Chapter 7 trustee may administer an asset in a Chapter 7 bankruptcy case. 11 U.S.C. §§ 542(a), 704. The Chapter 7 Trustee was discharged when the case was closed. (Final Decree, ROP, Part 4, p. 4 of 10) Consequently, there was no Chapter 7 trustee at the time of the hearing on the motion to reopen. The only way to administer the asset was to reopen the bankruptcy case and appoint a Chapter 7 trustee. Under In re Mullendore, 741 F.2d 306, the Bankruptcy Court was required to reopen the case and appoint a Chapter 7 trustee.

IV. DR. GIDDENS LACKS STANDING

In the Tenth Circuit an appellant must be a "person aggrieved" to have standing on appeal. See American Ready Mix, Inc. v. Behles (In re American Ready Mix), 14 F.3d 1497, 1499 (10th Cir. 1994). Dr. Giddens is not a person aggrieved because his rights or interests are not directly and adversely affected pecuniarily by the order reopening the bankruptcy case and directing the appointment of a Chapter 7 trustee. See id. Standing in bankruptcy cases is generally ". . . confined to debtors, creditors, or trustees, each with a particular and direct stake in reopening. . . " Nintendo Company, Ltd. v. Patten (In re Alpex Computer Corp.), 71 F.3d 353

(10th Cir. 1995). Dr. Giddens is not a creditor, debtor or trustee. His only connection with the case is that once the bankruptcy case is reopened and a Chapter 7 trustee is appointed, the trustee may or may not decide to prosecute a malpractice suit against him in order to pay creditors. "[T]he effect of [reopening] is merely to resurrect the court file from the stacks of the closed cases, or even from the archives to enable [the court] to receive a new request for relief." GMX Resources v. Kleban (In re Petroleum Production Management, Inc.), 282 B.R. 9, 15 (B.A.P. 10th Cir. 2002). The Magistrate Judge correctly found that Dr. Giddens lacks standing.

V. JUDICIAL ESTOPPEL IS INAPPROPRIATE AGAINST THE CHAPTER 7 TRUSTEE

The Report correctly rejected Dr. Giddens' judicial estoppel argument. Judicial estoppel is a "discretionary remedy" that courts may use to " . . . prevent improper use of judicial machinery . . . " that would ". . . undermine the integrity of the judicial system." Johnson v. Linden City, 405 F.3d 1065, 1068, 1070 (10thCir. 2005), quoting New Hampshire v. Maine, 532 U.S. 742, 750, 121 S.Ct. 1808, 149 L.Ed.2d 968 (2001). The Eleventh Circuit Court of Appeals and the Bankruptcy Appellate Panel for the Ninth Circuit Court of Appeals have declared that judicial estoppel based on a debtor's misconduct should not be applied against a bankruptcy trustee. See Reynolds v. Wendy's Int'l, Inc. (In re Parker), 365 F.3d 1268 (11th Cir. 2004); Lopez v. Specialty Restaurants Corp. (In re Lopez), 283 B.R. 22, 24 (B.A.P. 9th Cir. 2002). In March of this year the Seventh Circuit Court of Appeals added its voice to this issue. See Biesek v. Soo Line R.R., 440 F.3d 410 (7th Cir. 2006). The Biesek Court's dicta observed:

> [The Debtor's] nondisclsoure in bankruptcy harmed his creditors by hiding assets from them. Using the same nondislcosure to wipe out his [ ] claim would complete the job by denying creditors even the right to seek some share of the recovery. Yet the creditors have not contradicted themselves in court . . . . Judicial estoppel is an equitable doctrine, and using it to land another blow on the victims of bankruptcy fraud is not an equitable application.

Biesek, 440 F.3d at 413. The factors required for judicial estoppel are not present in this case. The Report correctly finds that judicial estoppel is inappropriate.

VI. DR. GIDDENS' OBJECTION FAILS TO APPLY TENTH CIRCUIT JUDICIAL ESTOPPEL LAW

Dr. Giddens' reliance on Fifth Circuit judicial estoppel case law is misplaced. As explained in the Report and the United States Trustee's Brief In Response To Appellant's Opening Brief, those cases do not apply Tenth Circuit judicial estoppel law and are otherwise distinguishable or unpersuasive. For example, the third factor identified by the Fifth Circuit focuses on whether the non-disclosure of an asset was inadvertent. See Superior Crewboats, Inc. v. Primary P& I Underwriters (In re Superior Crewboats, Inc.), 374 F.3d 330, 335 (5thCir. 2004). In contrast, the Tenth Circuit's third factor is whether the party asserting an inconsistent position would obtain an unfair advantage or would impose an unfair detriment on the opposing party. See Johnson, 405 F.3d at 1069, quoting New Hampshire, 532 U.S. at 751.[3] Given this difference, Fifth Circuit case law is not persuasive.

Dr. Giddens, nevertheless, argues that the Report and the Bankruptcy Court focused on the wrong information when they noted the fact that Dr. Giddens' counsel admitted that he would suffer no unfair detriment if the case were reopened. Dr. Giddens contends that his lack of harm is unimportant and that the focus should be on the harm to the judicial process itself. (Appellant's Objection To Magistrate's Report And Recommendation p. 10 - 11, ". . . judicial estoppel does not look at whether the Debtors obtained unfair advantage 'over Dr. Giddens' . . . .") Dr. Giddens ignores the fact that the harm to this judicial process - an undisclosed asset never administered for the benefit of creditors - can only be remedied if the bankruptcy is reopened. Dr. Giddens seeks to profit from the harm rather than remedy it.

[3] The first and second prong are, (1) the "party's later position must be 'clearly inconsistent' with its earlier position" and (2) the party to be judicially estopped must have persuaded the earlier court to accept the earlier factual position so that ". . . judicial acceptance of an inconsistent position in a later proceeding would create the perception that either the first or second court was mislead." Johnson, 405 F.3d at 1069.

Judicial estoppel would also run contrary to the Bankruptcy Code. 11 U.S.C. § 350 provides that a case may be reopened to administer undisclosed assets. Assets disclosed prior to a case being closed are deemed abandoned when the case is closed and are, therefore, administered. 11 U.S.C. § 554. Assets that are not listed in the schedules are neither abandoned nor otherwise administered and remain property of the bankruptcy estate even after the case is closed. 11 U.S.C. § 554(c), (d); see Reynolds v. Wendy's Int'l, Inc. (In re Parker), 365 F.3d 1268, 1272 (11th Cir. 2004). As a result the only time unadministered assets exist in a closed case is when the assets were undisclosed. In short, section 350 was written to enable cases to be reopened so that undisclosed assets could be administered.

VII. THE BANKRUPTCY COURT NEVER ADOPTED AN INCONSISTENT POSITION

Dr. Giddens contends that the report errs because it doesn't analyze whether the bankruptcy court accepted an inconsistent position when it granted the Debtors' discharge. "The requirement that a previous court has accepted the prior inconsistent factual position 'ensures that judicial estoppel is applied in the narrowest of circumstances.'" Johnson, 405 F.3d at 1069, quoting Lowery v. Stovall, 92 F.3d 219, 224 (4th Cir. 1996). The bankruptcy court never adopted the facts asserted in the Debtors' schedule of assets and statement of financial affairs, because entry of the discharge order is a ministerial act. See In re Hicks, 184 B.R. 954, 959 (Bankr. C.D. Cal. 1995).

Applicable law requires entry of the discharge order after the passage of certain deadlines. No hearing is required. 11 U.S.C. § 727(a) provides that the bankruptcy court ". . . shall grant the debtor a discharge, unless . . ." the debtor is not an individual, the debtor received a discharge within six years before the current bankruptcy case was filed[4], the court approves a written waiver of discharge or a party prevails on an adversary proceeding objecting to the discharge. See also FED. R. BANKR. P. 4004(c)(1). Further, there is no provision in the Bankruptcy Code or Federal Rules of Bankruptcy Procedure for a "no-asset" versus an "asset" discharge. The discharge is granted regardless of the existence or absence of assets. The Bankruptcy Court simply did not rely on the Debtors' representations regarding their interests in the malpractice action.

Dr. Giddens' objection also asserts that the Magistrate Judge committed error by stating that Dr. Giddens failed to establish he was a party who acquiesced to the Debtors' non-disclosure. This is not error. The Tenth Circuit noted that judicial estoppel may be applied based on a party's inconsistent position ". . . especially if it be to the prejudice of the party who has acquiesced in the position formerly taken by him . . . . " Johnson, 405 F.3d at 1069, quoting Davis v. Wakelee, 156 U.S. 680, 689, 15 S.Ct. 555, 39 L.Ed. 578 (1895). The Report properly considered this factor.

VIII. THE DEBTORS HAVE STANDING

Dr. Giddens argues that the Debtors lack standing because the Bankruptcy Code ". . . makes no provision for allowing a debtor to appear in these proceedings in an attempt to control property of the [bankruptcy] estate." (Appellant's Objection To Magistrate's Report And Recommendation p. 6) The argument misstates the issue. Reopening the case did not give the Debtors any control over the malpractice action since only a Chapter 7 trustee has that power. Reopening the case and directing the United States Trustee enabled a Chapter 7 trustee to prosecute or otherwise administer the action.

Dr. Gidden's argument is also contradicted by 11 U.S.C. § 350 which provides that a case may be reopened not only to administer assets but to accord relief to the Debtors. The Debtors sought to reopen the case to list the malpractice claim, have a Chapter 7 trustee appointed and to claim an exemption in the proceeds of the malpractice claim.[5] (Motion To Re-open Bankruptcy Case, ROP, Part 4, p. 6 of 10) They clearly sought relief. Additionally, FED. R. BANKR. P. 5010 provides that a ". . . case may be reopened on motion of the debtor . . . . " Debtors had standing to bring the motion.

IX. PUBLIC POLICY SUPPORTS THE REPORT

The creditors are victims of the Debtors' failure to disclose the asset, not Dr. Giddens. They received nothing as a result of the Debtors' non-disclosure. They should not be deprived of the opportunity to have the asset administered. The schedules indicate that the creditors are medical providers and consumer credit providers. (Schedule F, ROP Part 2, pp. 17 - 19 of 35) Although it is presently unclear how much the Chapter 7 trustee could recover from the malpractice action, the recovery could pay these creditors in full. To the extent the recovery exceeds the amount needed to pay the creditors and administrative bankruptcy costs, any judgment in the action could be fashioned to preclude the Debtors from any personal recovery. See Autos, Inc. v. Gowin, 330 B.R. 788 (D. Kan. 2005)(ordering proceeds under a judgment in a previously undisclosed action be distributed to creditors and denying any personal recovery by the debtor).

[5] Once the case is reopened the Debtors can claim an exemption of up to $50,000 in a claim for bodily injury. 11 U.S.C. § 522; OKLA STAT. tit. 31, § 1 et. seq. The Chapter 7 trustee can then object to the exemption based on the earlier non-disclosure.

Dr. Giddens' proposed policy also contradicts the Bankruptcy Code which expresses the public policy which Congress chose - bankruptcy cases should be reopened to administer assets. Congress also enacted civil and criminal penalties to deter misconduct by debtors in bankruptcy. See 11 U.S.C. § 727; 18 U.S.C. 152. The policy choice has been made.

X. CONCLUSION

11 U.S.C. § 350 and Mullendore v. United States (In re Mullendore), 741 F.2d 306 (10th Cir. 1984), require the case be reopened in order to administer the asset. The Tenth Circuit's factors for judicial estoppel are not present in this case. Adopting Dr. Giddens' argument would only perpetuate false information in this bankruptcy case and assure that the injustice suffered by the creditors is never remedied. The Bankruptcy Court's order should be affirmed.

STATEMENT OF APPELLATE JURISDICTION

The United States Bankruptcy Court for the District of New Hampshire ("bankruptcy court") had jurisdiction under 28 U.S.C. §§ 157(b) and 1334(a) over the bankruptcy case of Rosemary Ann Gilroy ("Ms. Gilroy"). On August 16, 2007, the bankruptcy court granted the United States Trustee's motion for an order dismissing her chapter 11 case for cause under 11 U.S.C. § 1112(b). Ms. Gilroy filed a timely notice of appeal from that order to the United States Bankruptcy Appellate Panel for the First Circuit ("appellate panel") on August 20, 2007.[1] The bankruptcy court's order was a final, appealable order. The appellate panel had jurisdiction to hear the appeal under 28 U.S.C. §§ 158(a) and 158(b)(1). On August 1, 2008, the appellate panel affirmed the bankruptcy court's order granting the United States Trustee's motion to dismiss. On August 26, 2008, Ms. Gilroy filed a timely notice of appeal to this Court. This Court has jurisdiction to hear the appeal under 28 U.S.C. § 158(d).

[1] Ms. Gilroy filed a notice of appeal on August 10, 2007, six days before the bankruptcy court entered its order dismissing her case. See Appellee's Appendix (hereinafter "(UST App. ___)") at 244. On August 20, 2007, she filed a "Debtor's Emergency Motion To Request Debtor Be Allowed To File New Notice of Appeal with Corrected Date and Related Documents," (UST App. 251-255), which the appellate panel construed as an amended notice of appeal. (UST App. 310; BAP Docket entry No. 2 dated 10/4/07).

STATEMENT OF ISSUE PRESENTED

The issue to be decided in this appeal is whether the bankruptcy court abused its discretion by dismissing Ms. Gilroy's chapter 11 bankruptcy case under 11 U.S.C. § 1112(b)(1) and 11 U.S.C. § 1112(b)(4)(C) given that Ms. Gilroy admittedly failed to maintain insurance on real property constituting the primary asset of the estate.

STATEMENT OF THE CASE

Ms. Gilroy is a pro se debtor whose primary asset is a single building in Amherst, New Hampshire ("Property"). The Property consists of five condominium units, including Ms. Gilroy's residence. Ms. Gilroy initially sought relief under chapter 13 of the Bankruptcy Code, but the case was subsequently converted to a chapter 11 reorganization case because Ms. Gilroy had too much debt under 11 U.S.C. § 109(e) to be a chapter 13 debtor.

After conversion, the United States Trustee moved to dismiss Ms. Gilroy's case under 11 U.S.C. § 1112(b)(4)(C) for her failure to maintain insurance on the Property, because the failure to insure the Property put estate assets at risk. On August 16, 2007, the bankruptcy court granted the United States Trustee's motion to dismiss.

Ms. Gilroy filed a timely notice of appeal to the appellate panel. On appeal, Ms. Gilroy did not contest that she allowed insurance on the Property to lapse following the filing of the case and failed to reinstate the policy. Instead, Ms. Gilroy offered explanations for her failure to maintain insurance and raised issues unrelated to the status of insurance coverage on the date of dismissal.

Finding no error, the appellate panel affirmed the bankruptcy court's order on August 1, 2008. This appeal followed.

STATEMENT OF FACTS

I. Statutory Framework – Overview of 11 U.S.C. § 1112(b)

The Bankruptcy Abuse Prevention and Consumer Protection Act of 2005, S. 256, Pub. L. No. 109-8, 119 Stat. 23, amended 11 U.S.C. § 1112(b) to provide that, absent unusual circumstances establishing that it is not in the best interest of the creditors and the estate, a bankruptcy court shall dismiss or convert a chapter 11 bankruptcy case if it finds cause. Section 1112(b)(4) provides a non-exhaustive list of factors constituting cause for dismissal or conversion. See House Report No. 595, 95th Cong. 1st Sess. 405-406 (1977); Senate Report No. 989, 95th Cong. 2d Sess. 117-118 (1978). Such factors include a chapter 11 debtor's "failure to maintain appropriate insurance that poses a risk to the estate or to the public." 11 U.S.C. § 1112(b)(4)(C).

II. Factual Background

Ms. Gilroy filed a voluntary pro se chapter 13 petition on July 11, 2006. (UST App. 2). Ms. Gilroy's principal asset is the Property in Amherst, New Hampshire.The Property consists of her residence and four contiguous condominium units, which she valued at $2,345,000.[2] (UST App. 43, 46). Ms. Gilroy listed secured claims against the Property of $1,240,816.[3] (UST App. 51-52). Because Ms. Gilroy's debts exceeded the amount allowed in a chapter 13 case, the chapter 13 trustee filed a motion to dismiss or convert her case to one under chapter 7 or chapter 11. (UST App. 25-26). On November 17, 2006, Ms. Gilroy filed a motion to convert her case to one under chapter 11. (UST App. 27). That motion was granted on November 20, 2006. (UST App. 6; Bankruptcy Court Docket No. 46).

Following the conversion of the case to chapter 11, Ms. Gilroy refiled schedules itemizing her assets and liabilities, a statement of current monthly

[2] Ms. Gilroy valued her residence (Unit #1) at $650,000 and the other four units as follows: Unit #2 - $435,000; Unit #3 - $380,000; Unit #4 - $435,000; and Unit #5 - $445,000. (UST App. 43, 46).

[3] Among other debts, Ms. Gilroy reported that Ameriquest Mortgage Company ("Ameriquest") holds mortgages totaling $944,000 on Units # 1, #2, and #4, and that as of the date of filing, she owed arrearages of $40,450 on the Ameriquest mortgages. (UST App. 51).

income and a statement of financial affairs. (UST App. 28-83). Ms. Gilroy's required schedules and statements disclosed the following:

- Ms. Gilroy receives $754 per month in Social Security benefits. (UST App. 60);
- Ms. Gilroy has no other income except for funds borrowed from relatives for living expenses. (UST App. 159);
- Ms. Gilroy has not yet completed her conversion of the Property from commercial to residential condominiums, nor has she obtained occupancy permits. (UST App. 162-163, 259-260, 271); and
- Ms. Gilroy estimated the value of her equity in the Property as $1.2 million. (UST App. 98, 263).

Ms. Gilroy receives no income from the Property. (UST App. 60, 86). Because she has no source of income apart from her Social Security payments and funds borrowed from relatives for living expenses, Ms. Gilroy's chapter 11 plan provided for the repayment of creditors through the refinancing and/or sale of the Property. (UST App. 144-149). Ms. Gilroy made numerous efforts to sell or refinance the Property but failed to sell any of the condominium units. (UST App. 259-263; see also UST App. 5-12; Bankruptcy Court Docket Nos. 36, 71, 82, 104).

Although the Property is the only significant asset in the chapter 11 estate, Ms. Gilroy allowed the insurance to lapse following the filing of the case, and failed to reinstate the policy. (UST App. 86, 130-131, 202-220, 223, 232, 236-241, 289-293, 301-304).

III. Procedural History

On January 10, 2007, the United States Trustee moved to dismiss Ms. Gilroy's case under 11 U.S.C. § 1112(b)(1) and § 1112(b)(4)(A), (C), (F), and (K). (UST App. 84-88). The United States Trustee asserted that Ms. Gilroy's liability insurance for the Property was in danger of being cancelled for nonpayment of the premium, and further asserted that she lacked the ability to reorganize under chapter 11. Id. The United States Trustee argued that Ms. Gilroy knew she had to maintain insurance on the assets of the estate and failed to pay premiums due for property insurance, thereby risking cancellation of the policy for non-payment. (UST App. 86-87).

The bankruptcy court issued seven continuances of the United States Trustee's Motion to Dismiss over a four month period. (UST App. 16, 113, 121-127, 133, 189-220, 231, 236-242, 281-282, 289-294, 298) Despite the extensions, all of which the bankruptcy court provided at Ms. Gilroy's request, Ms. Gilroy failed to obtain insurance. (UST App. 130-131, 202-220, 223, 232, 236-241, 247, 289-293, 301-304).

On March 26, 2007, the bankruptcy court conducted a hearing on the United States Trustee's motion to dismiss, continuing the hearing to May 1, 2007. (UST App. 113, 281-282). Insurance on the Property lapsed on April 18, 2007. (UST App. 129-132). On April 25, 2007, Ms. Gilroy filed an emergency motion asking the bankruptcy court to delay the hearing to a later date. (UST App. 121-127). The United States Trustee objected to Ms. Gilroy's motion. (UST App. 129-132). On April 30, 2007, the bankruptcy court granted Ms. Gilroy's motion and rescheduled the hearing for June 12, 2007. (UST App. 133). On June 12, 2007, the bankruptcy court granted another motion to continue filed by Ms. Gilroy and continued the hearing to June 19, 2007. (UST App. 16; Bankruptcy Court Docket No. 143). Ms. Gilroy failed to appear at the June 19, 2007 hearing. (UST App. 285-286). On that same date, Ms. Gilroy again asked for a continuance. (UST App. 189-199). On June 21, 2007, the bankruptcy court granted her request and continued the hearing to June 26, 2007. (UST App. 200).

At the continued hearing on June 26, 2007, Ms. Gilroy conceded that she could not afford the premiums required to insure the Property, produced no proof of insurance, and asked for another continuance. (UST App. 289-293). Ms. Gilroy offered evidence that forced-placed insurance had been obtained by Ameriquest up to the value of its investment in three of the five condominium units (Units #1, #2 and #4). (UST App. 290). However, Ms. Gilroy did not provide evidence that the entire Property and her $1.2 million equity in it had been insured.

The bankruptcy court ordered Ms. Gilroy to obtain insurance by July 13, 2007, informing her that her case would be dismissed upon receipt of an affidavit by the United States Trustee that the Property was not insured by that date. (UST App. 201, 292-293).

On July 13, 2007, the United States Trustee filed an affidavit certifying that Ms. Gilroy failed to produce proof of insurance on the Property. (UST App. 223). On the same date, Ms. Gilroy filed an emergency motion for an extension of two weeks to provide insurance. (UST App. 202-220).[4] On July 24, 2007, the bankruptcy court held a hearing on Ms. Gilroy's motion dated July 13, 2007, and ordered Ms. Gilroy to provide the United States Trustee with proof of insurance by July 31, 2007, failing which the bankruptcy court would dismiss her case. (UST App. 231, 292-294, 298).

On July 31, 2007, the United States Trustee filed another affidavit certifying to the bankruptcy court that Ms. Gilroy failed to produce proof of insurance on the Property. (UST App. 232). On August 1, 2007, after the deadline to obtain insurance had already passed, Ms. Gilroy filed an emergency motion requesting additional time to obtain insurance. (UST App. 236-241). On [4] In her motion, Ms. Gilroy stated that on June 29, 2007, Appletree Insurance Company provided her with a copy of an insurance binder for the Property effective June 13, 2007, but that it cancelled the coverage because she failed to pay the required premium. (UST App. 202-207). Ms. Gilroy attached documentation showing cancellation of coverage effective July 12, 2007. (UST App. 216).

August 2, 2007, the bankruptcy court, stating that it would not accept any further motions for extensions of time, ordered Ms. Gilroy to file a certificate of insurance with the bankruptcy court by August 3, 2007, at 12:00 p.m., or her case would be dismissed. (UST App. 242). Ms. Gilroy failed to file a certificate of insurance for the Property, and on August 16, 2007, the bankruptcy court granted the United States Trustee's motion to dismiss. (UST App. 247).

Ms. Gilroy filed a notice of appeal on August 10, 2007, six days before the bankruptcy court entered its order dismissing her case. (UST App. 244). On August 20, 2007, Ms. Gilroy filed a "Debtor's Emergency Motion To Request Debtor Be Allowed To File New Notice of Appeal with Corrected Date and Related Documents," (UST App. 251-255), which the appellate panel construed as an amended notice of appeal. (UST App. 310; BAP Docket entry No. 2 dated 10/4/07.) Finding no error, the appellate panel affirmed the bankruptcy court's order on August 1, 2008. (Addendum (hereinafter "Add.__") 1; UST App. 414-426).

Ms. Gilroy filed a timely notice of appeal from the appellate panel's order on August 26, 2008. (UST App. 427). She also filed a motion to proceed in forma pauperis with this Court on November 12, 2008. That motion is currently pending.

SUMMARY OF ARGUMENT

The bankruptcy court did not abuse its discretion in dismissing Ms. Gilroy's case under 11 U.S.C. § 1112(b)(1) and 11 U.S.C. § 1112(b)(4)(C). Section 1112(b)(4)(C) allows courts to dismiss cases where debtors fail to maintain insurance, thereby "posing a risk to the estate." 11 U.S.C. § 1112(b)(4)(C). Despite being given seven extensions to obtain insurance, all at her own request, over a four month period, Ms. Gilroy failed to obtain insurance for the principal asset of the bankruptcy estate. It is undisputed on appeal that Ms. Gilroy allowed the insurance on the Property to lapse following the filing of the case and failed to reinstate the policy. Given this unrebutted evidence, the bankruptcy court did not abuse its discretion in dismissing this case in the face of Ms. Gilroy's protracted failure to insure the Property.

STANDARD OF REVIEW

This appeal raises a question of fact as to whether cause existed under 11 U.S.C. § 1112(b) to dismiss. A "bankruptcy court's findings of fact, 'whether based on oral or documentary evidence,' are not to be set aside unless 'clearly erroneous.'" Western Auto Supply Co. v. Savage Arms, Inc. (In re Savage Indus., Inc.), 43 F.3d 714, n.8 (1st Cir. 1994) (quoting Fed. R. Bankr. P. 8013); see also In re Gonic Realty Trust, 909 F.3d 624, 626 (1st Cir. 1990). The bankruptcy court's factual finding that there was cause to dismiss Ms. Gilroy's case under 11 U.S.C. § 1112(b) given the lack of insurance on the Property is therefore reviewed under the clearly erroneous standard.

ARGUMENT

I. The Bankruptcy Court Did Not Abuse Its Discretion Under 11 U.S.C. § 1112(b)(4)(C) in Dismissing Ms. Gilroy's Case Given That Ms. Gilroy Failed, over Many Months, to Obtain Insurance on the Primary Asset of the Bankruptcy Estate.

The bankruptcy court's finding that Ms. Gilroy failed to maintain appropriate insurance is supported by the record, and constituted cause for dismissal under 11 U.S.C. § 1112(b)(1) and 11 U.S.C. § 1112(b)(4)(C).

Section 1112(b)(4)(C) provides that cause to dismiss includes circumstances where a debtor fails to maintain appropriate insurance that poses a risk to the estate or to the public. 11 U.S.C. § 1112(b)(4)(C).[5]

Insurance is important because it protects for the equity of the estate and provides liability protection against risk to personal injury claims and damage to adjacent structures. Cf. Reading v. Brown, 391 U.S. 471, 485 (1968) (holding that a negligence claim for tort damages arising from a fire at a bankrupt's property was allowable as an actual and necessary expense of the bankruptcy estate and entitled to administrative priority).

[5] "[T]he court shall convert a case under this chapter to a case under chapter 7 or dismiss a case under this chapter . . . if the movant establishes failure to maintain appropriate insurance that poses a risk to the estate or to the public." 11 U.S.C. § 1112(b)(4)(C).

Ms. Gilroy did not obtain insurance, even though the bankruptcy court provided her with seven extensions over a four month period to do so. The need to insure property in this case was particularly acute because the primary, if not only, asset of the bankruptcy estate consisted of Ms. Gilroy's reported $1.2 million equity in the Property. Ms. Gilroy conceded that she had not obtained insurance, and that she could not afford to pay the premiums required to insure the Property. (UST App. 236-241, 289-292, 301-304).

Ms. Gilroy's failure to maintain appropriate insurance also posed an unacceptable risk to the estate and to the public in breach of her fiduciary duties as a chapter 11 debtor in possession. In re Daniels, 362 B.R. 428, 435-436 (Bankr. S.D. Iowa 2007); In re Emergystat of Sulligent, Inc., No. 07-51394, 2008 WL 597613 (Bankr. E.D. Tenn. Feb. 29, 2008). Had the Property suffered damage from fire, flood, vandalism or any other form of insurable loss, it would have effectively diminished or obliterated any dividend to the creditors of the estate. Cf. Reading, 391 U.S. at 485.

Although Ms. Gilroy resided in Unit #1 and had no other tenants, her efforts to sell the condominium units included inviting potential buyers or investors to the Property for inspections and walk-throughs. (UST App. 259-261, 264, 270-271). By failing to maintain appropriate insurance, Ms. Gilroy exposed the estate to the risk of personal injury claims brought by any party injured on the premises, which remained under renovation and lacked occupancy permits throughout the bankruptcy proceeding. (UST App. 162-163, 259-260, 271). The lack of insurance also jeopardized the estate by exposing it to the risk of third party claims should a fire, flood, or similar event on the Property damage adjacent structures. Under the Reading doctrine, such third party claims would be considered administrative expenses and given administrative priority. Cf. Reading, 391 U.S. at 485.

Where Ms. Gilroy failed to insure the Property despite being granted seven extensions over a four month period, could not make the mortgage payments, was unable to sell or refinance the Property in the 13 months since she filed for bankruptcy protection, and the lack of insurance on the Property posed a liability risk to the estate, the bankruptcy court did not abuse its discretion in dismissing her case.

II. The Arguments Raised by Ms. Gilroy on Appeal Lack Merit or Have No Basis in Fact.

Ms. Gilroy's arguments on appeal[6] concerning insurance coverage can be broken down into three component parts: (1) that Ameriquest had fully insured the Property; (2) that Ms. Gilroy did not receive appropriate notice of the court order requiring insurance; and (3) that Ms. Gilroy had obtained an insurance binder from Appletree Insurance.

[6] Ms. Gilroy's list of 28 separate issues presented on appeal (see Appellant's Brief at 1-6) appear to concern the status of her homestead rights, allegations of improper conduct by secured lenders, and her mistaken belief that, upon foreclosure, her mortgagees would retain the full value of the Property over and above the amount of their secured interests. The appellate panel rejected Ms. Gilroy's arguments on these same issues in affirming the bankruptcy court's order dismissing her case. This brief addresses Ms. Gilroy's arguments concerning her inability to obtain insurance on the Property, and whether this constituted a factual basis for the bankruptcy court to dismiss her case under 11 U.S.C. § 1112(b)(4)(C).

Each of these contentions lacks merit or has no basis in fact.

A. Ameriquest's Forced-Placed Insurance Did Not Protect the Estate.

Ms. Gilroy contends that the bankruptcy court erred in dismissing her case because the Property had "already been insured" by Ameriquest under a forced-placed insurance plan. Appellant's Brief at 17.

Ms. Gilroy's contention misunderstands the nature of forced-placed insurance. This is because forced-placed insurance is solely for the protection of a lender, and is put into place by a lender only when a borrower fails or refuses to produce evidence of property insurance. See Baker v. ZC Sterling Ins. Agency, Inc., No. 07-8747, 2009 WL 249757, *1 (E.D. La. Feb. 3, 2009) ("The type of policy at issue in this case is a "forced-placed" policy, which is requested by a lender/mortgagee to protect its interest in the property."); Riley v. Southwest Bus. Corp., No. 06-4884, 2008 WL 4286631, *3 (E.D. La. Sept. 17, 2008) ("As with all forced placed policies, Midwest initiated coverage in order to protect its own security interest in the property, not to provide any sort of benefit for the mortgagor. Indeed, the very purpose of a forced placed policy is to cover the uninsured portion of the mortgagee's interest."); Wahl v. Am. Sec. Ins. Co., No. 08-00555, 2008 WL 2444802, *1 (N.D. Cal. June 16, 2008) ("Forced placed insurance policies are those ordered by lenders to insure mortgaged residential properties when borrowers fail to obtain or maintain coverage as required by the terms of their loans."); see also Christopher L. Peterson, Federalism and Predatory Lending: Unmasking the Deregulatory Agenda, 78 Temp. L. Rev. 1, 22-23 (2005) (discussing forced-placed insurance).[7]

Thus, Ameriquest's forced-placed insurance would have only provided coverage for Ameriquest's interest in three of the five condominium units that constituted the entire Property, an interest which totaled $944,000. (UST App. 51, 290). But, according to Ms. Gilroy's schedules, the Property was worth $2,345,000. (UST App. 43, 46). And the forced-placed insurance would not have protected the estate from Reading-type claims for third party property damage or personal injury. Cf. Reading, 391 U.S. at 485; Larry M. Arnold et al., The Ebb and Flow of the Forced-Placed Claim, 109 Ins. Advocate 16 (1998) (discussing the legal parameters underlying claims developing from forced-placed property insurance). As the attorney for Ameriquest certified to the bankruptcy court during the June 26, 2007 hearing, "at best the mortgagee's interest [was insured], but nothing more." (UST App. 290).

[7] Ms. Gilroy's misunderstanding appears to be based on her "disbelief" that Ameriquest would obtain forced-placed insurance only on those units for which it held mortgages and only up to the amount of its mortgage interests. (See Appellant's Brief at 17). However, that is the very nature of forced-placed insurance – it is put in place only to protect the interest of the lender when a borrower fails or refuses to provide evidence of property insurance. Ms. Gilroy does not explain to this court why Ameriquest would pay additional costs to obtain more insurance than necessary to protect its interest in the property.

Ms. Gilroy's contention that Ameriquest had fully insured the Property is insufficient to meet her burden of demonstrating that the bankruptcy court erred in dismissing her case for failure to obtain insurance.

B. Ms. Gilroy had Ample Notice of the Impending Dismissal.

Ms. Gilroy contends that the bankruptcy court erred in dismissing her case because she did not have notice of the impending dismissal. See Appellant's Brief at 2, 16. She takes the position that she did not have notice of the August 2, 2007 order[8] granting her a three-day extension of the July 31, 2007 deadline until after August 3, 2007, the date on which the three-day extension expired.

Ms. Gilroy's lack of notice argument is not persuasive. Ms. Gilroy filed an emergency motion on August 1, 2007 requesting an extension of the July 31, 2007 deadline to obtain insurance. This means that her deadline to obtain insurance had already passed at the time she filed her emergency motion. When the bankruptcy court issued its three-day extension on August 2, 2007, it could have just as well dismissed her case for failure to obtain insurance by the deadline.

[8] The Deputy Clerk of the bankruptcy court certified service of the order by first class mail, postage prepaid, on August 2, 2007. (UST App. 243).

Moreover, at the time the bankruptcy court issued its three-day extension, Ms. Gilroy had already spent eight months as a chapter 11 debtor-in-possession and had received seven extensions over a four month period – all at her own request – to obtain insurance, and was repeatedly informed that her case would be dismissed if she did not obtain insurance. As noted by the appellate panel, Ms. Gilroy's lack of notice argument is "wholly disingenuous given that the bankruptcy court first threatened to dismiss the Debtor's case on March 26, 2007, and then continually gave her more opportunities to obtain appropriate insurance." (Add. 12-13; UST App. 425-426).

Even if it is the case that Ms. Gilroy did not have notice of her impending dismissal until August 3, 2007, there was no harm in the delay as the bankruptcy court did not actually dismiss Ms. Gilroy's case until August 16, 2007, six days after Ms. Gilroy filed her notice of appeal on August 10, 2007.

The record makes clear that the bankruptcy court provided Ms. Gilroy with ample notice of the impending dismissal of her case if she did not obtain insurance, and it acted properly in dismissing Ms. Gilroy's case for failing to obtain insurance.

C. Ms. Gilroy's Insurance Binder Lapsed More Than One Month before the Bankruptcy Court's Order of Dismissal Entered.

Ms. Gilroy suggests that the appellate panel erred in affirming the bankruptcy court's dismissal of her case because, unbeknownst to her, Appletree Insurance Company issued an insurance binder for the premises effective from June 13, 2007, to July 12, 2007.

Ms. Gilroy's argument concerning the insurance binder lacks merit. As Ms. Gilroy acknowledged on the record, the insurer cancelled her coverage because she neither paid, nor could afford to pay, the initial installment required for the issuance of a policy. (UST App. 202-220). Ms. Gilroy also admitted on the record that she did not notify the bankruptcy court of the coverage until after the insurer had cancelled coverage for nonpayment. Id. Moreover, the bankruptcy court granted Ms. Gilroy two further extensions of time to obtain insurance after such coverage lapsed. (UST App. 231, 242).

In light of these undisputed facts, the bankruptcy court did not abuse its discretion in dismissing because, at the time of dismissal, there was no insurance. As the appellate panel noted, "the fact that the properties were insured for one month is irrelevant, as the properties remained uninsured thereafter. Therefore, there was cause to dismiss or convert the petition." (Add. 11; UST App. 424).

CONCLUSION

For these reasons, the United States Trustee respectfully asks this Court to affirm the August 1, 2008 judgment of the appellate panel affirming the August 16, 2007 order of the bankruptcy court dismissing Ms. Gilroy's bankruptcy case.

Respectfully submitted,

PHOEBE MORSE

STATEMENT REGARDING ORAL ARGUMENT

This appeal concerns the bankruptcy court's award of interest to professionals and creditors under 11 U.S.C. § 726(a). The legal issues and the factual circumstances are somewhat complex. The United States Trustee respectfully requests that the Court schedule oral argument for this appeal.

STATEMENT OF JURISDICTION

This appeal arises from the bankruptcy case of Glados, Inc. (the "Debtor"). The appeal is taken from a final judgment of the United States District Court for the Middle District of Florida entered May 5, 1995, affirming a final order of the United States Bankruptcy Court for the Middle District of Florida entered September 30, 1993.

In the bankruptcy court, the United States Trustee's Objection to Trustee's Proposed Distribution and Request for Hearing initiated a core proceeding under 28 U.S.C. § 157(b)(2). Consequently, the bankruptcy court's jurisdiction was properly based on 28 U.S.C. § 157(b)(1).

The United States Trustee filed a timely notice of appeal on October 8, 1993. B-201, B-203.[1] Consequently, the district court properly exercised its jurisdiction under 28 U.S.C. § 158(a).

On July 3, 1995, the United States Trustee timely filed his notice of appeal from the district court's order. R1-13. This Court's jurisdiction is therefore based on 28 U.S.C. §§ 158(d) and 1291.

STATEMENT OF THE ISSUES

The United States Trustee raises the following issues on appeal:

1. Pursuant to 11 U.S.C. § 726(a)(5), may a trustee receive interest on his compensation in the case dating from the trustee's initial appointment?

2. May professionals other than the trustee receive interest under 11 U.S.C. § 726(a)(5) on their compensation dating from the professionals' submission of their fee applications?

STATEMENT OF THE CASE

On September 30, 1983, the Debtor filed its petition for relief under the reorganization provisions of chapter 11 of the Bankruptcy Code, 11 U.S.C. §§ 101 et seq. B-1. On February 8, 1985, the case was converted to a liquidation proceeding under chapter 7, and the bankruptcy court appointed Lawrence Kleinfeld to serve as the trustee in the case (the "Trustee"). B-62, 63.

Prior to conversion of the case, the Debtor's business had been destroyed by fire. Consequently, the Debtor commenced an action against Reliance Insurance Company to recover on an insurance policy in the United States District Court for the Middle District of Florida. B-177-2. The Trustee took over that litigation on behalf of the Debtor's estate, and sought to employ legal counsel. On September 5, 1985, the bankruptcy court approved the Trustee's employment of the Trustee's law firm, Kleinfeld & Fishback ("K&F"), to serve as counsel for the Trustee. B-92.

In June, 1986, the litigation resulted in a judgment in favor of the Trustee and the Debtor's estate. The Trustee then defended the estate on appeals taken by Reliance Insurance Company to the United States Court of Appeals for the Eleventh Circuit and the United States Supreme Court. Both appellate courts affirmed the judgment. B-201-2.

As part of the insurance litigation, two orders were entered with respect to attorneys' fees. On June 6, 1986, the district court awarded attorneys' fees to the Debtor's estate in the sum of $79,200. Id. On September 18, 1991, Reliance paid to the Debtor's estate this judgment amount, plus $50,202.12 in interest, for a total sum of $129,402.12. Id.

The second attorneys' fee order in the insurance litigation arose following the appeals. The Trustee and Reliance Insurance Company compromised the appellate attorneys' fee issue, and the bankruptcy court approved that compromise on January 23, 1992, in the amount of $80,000, which was paid into the estate. B-169; B-201-2.

On July 8, 1992, the Trustee submitted his Preliminary Report of Estate to the United States Trustee for review, along with the fee applications of the Trustee and K&F.[2] B-174. On July 21, 1992, the United States Trustee certified the Preliminary Report of Estate to the bankruptcy court. B-176. On September 9, 1992, the bankruptcy court issued a Notice of Preliminary Report of Estate Funds and Notice of Surplus Funds, informing creditors of the availability of surplus funds to pay additional claims if filed. B-183. On September 29, 1992, Stichter, Riedel, Blain & Prosser, P.A. ("Stichter, Riedel") filed its application for compensation as counsel for the Debtor in the chapter 11 proceeding. B-184.

In accordance with local practice, the bankruptcy court on February 25, 1993 communicated to the Trustee the allowed amounts of all administrative expenses, including the compensation awards for the Trustee and K&F as determined by the Court under 11 U.S.C. § 330. B-201-4. The bankruptcy court awarded $8,927.25 as Trustee's fees, plus $56.15 as expenses for the Trustee. B-201-5. The Trustee's compensation award is limited under 11 U.S.C. § 326(a), and the court's award was the maximum permitted under that provision.

[2] The United States Trustee is an official of the United States Department of Justice, charged by statute with the duty to oversee and supervise the administration of bankruptcy cases. 28 U.S.C. § 586(a). The United States Trustee is expressly given standing under 11 U.S.C. § 307 to raise and be heard on any issue under title 11, except that the United States Trustee may not file a reorganization plan under chapter 11.

The bankruptcy court awarded $227,612.12 in fees and $1,515.02 in expenses to K&F, for its services as the Trustee's counsel. B-201-4. The K&F compensation award consisted of three distinct portions:

(i) the attorneys' fee judgment of $79,200 for K&F's services provided in the district court insurance litigation, plus the five years of judgment interest on that award in the amount of $50,202.12;

(ii) the previously approved $80,000 compromise sum for K&F's appellate services; and

(iii) the sum of $18,210 for the balance of services provided by K&F on behalf of the Trustee.

Id. For Stichter, Riedel's services as the Debtor's counsel in the chapter 11 proceeding, the Court awarded compensation of $4,991.32. Id.

After payment of all claims and administrative expense awards, it was apparent that the estate had surplus funds. The Trustee prepared a proposed distribution order which included the court's fee awards and allocated the surplus for the payment of interest under 11 U.S.C. § 726(a)(5). The United States Trustee then filed his objection to the proposed distribution of the surplus. B-194.

On August 23, 1993, the bankruptcy court conducted its hearing on the United States Trustee's objection to the proposed distribution. On September 30, 1993, the bankruptcy court entered its order holding that the Trustee was entitled to interest on his entire compensation award dating back to his appointment as trustee; the other professionals, in turn, were entitled to interest on their compensation awards dating back to the date that each fee application was submitted. B-201-7,8. From the surplus funds, the court allocated interest of $73,400.68 to K&F, interest of $4,008.42 to the Trustee, and interest of $302.72 to Stichter, Riedel. B-201-11. These distributions left no funds available to pay interest on general unsecured creditors' claims.

On May 5, 1995, the district court entered its judgment affirming the bankruptcy court's order. All the issues on appeal are issues of law subject to a de novo standard of review. Equitable Life Assurance Soc'y v. Sublett (In re Sublett), 895 F.2d 1381, 1383-84 (11th Cir. 1990).

SUMMARY OF THE ARGUMENT

Section 726(a)(5) of title 11 provides for the payment of interest to administrative expense claimants and creditors in cases where there is a surplus of funds available after payment of the underlying administrative expenses and claims. Although the statute specifically provides for the "payment of interest at the legal rate from the date of the filing of the petition...," the courts below and all of the published case law acknowledge that interest on administrative expenses cannot properly be calculated from the date of the filing of the petition. Such a result would be absurd because interest would then be paid on administrative expenses even before any services were provided, and before any right to compensation arose in the case. The published case law supports the conclusion that interest should be paid from the date of the award of compensation.

Contrary to all published decisions, the bankruptcy court in this case awarded interest dating from the Trustee's appointment and from the other professionals' submission of fee applications. The district court affirmed the lower court's order, reasoning that the Trustee and the other professionals possessed "claims" against the estate prior to the awards of compensation. The district court therefore treated the court's award of compensation as tantamount to a liquidation of claims that had existed from the time of the Trustee's appointment and the professionals' submission of fee applications. R1-10-9. The district court also found a policy justification for its decision, in the fact that the United States Bankruptcy Court for the Middle District of Florida generally does not award compensation to trustees and counsel until the closing of a chapter 7 case, thereby purportedly leaving such professionals uncompensated for the delay in payment of their administrative expense claims.

However, section 726(a)(5) provides for the award of interest on administrative expense claims only to the extent that they are compensable claims for administrative expenses under 11 U.S.C. §§ 503(b) and 507(a). In order to be compensable under those provisions, compensation must first be awarded under 11 U.S.C. § 330. Thus, the language of section 726(a) should be construed as providing for the payment of interest to professionals only as to compensation awards under section 330, which interest should be calculated from the date of the actual fee award. This result is appropriate, insofar as section 726(a)(5) provides a form of statutory or judgment interest.

ARGUMENT

I. SECTION 726(a)(5) PROVIDES FOR THE PAYMENT OF INTEREST ON PROFESSIONALS' ADMINISTRATIVE EXPENSE CLAIMS DATING ONLY FROM THE AWARDS OF COMPENSATION TO SUCH PROFESSIONALS UNDER SECTION 330.

In surplus cases, trustees and other professionals are entitled to interest on their fees from the time of the court's fee awards, not from the time that the trustee was appointed or the professionals filed their fee applications. In re Riverside-Linden Inv. Co., 945 F.2d 320, 323-24 (9th Cir. 1991), aff'g In re Riverside-Linden Inv. Co., 99 B.R. 439 (Bankr. 9th Cir. 1989); In re Chiapetta, 159 B.R. 152, 159 (Bankr. E.D. Pa. 1993); In re Motley, 150 B.R. 16, 19 (Bankr. E.D. Va. 1992); In re Commercial Consortium of California, 135 B.R. 120, 127 (Bankr. C.D. Cal. 1991). This conclusion is based on section 726(a)(5)'s reference to claims paid under section 726(a)(1), which in turn refers to claims as specified in 11 U.S.C. §§ 507 and 503(b). Pursuant to section 503(b)(2), professionals possess administrative expense claims under section 507 only after their compensation is awarded under 11 U.S.C. § 330. See Riverside-Linden, 945 F.2d at 324.

A. SECTION 726(a)(1) PROVIDES FOR THE PAYMENT OF PROFESSIONALS' ADMINISTRATIVE EXPENSE CLAIMS.

Section 726 sets forth the distribution scheme that governs the trustee's disbursement of funds at the close of a chapter 7 case. Subsection (a) sets forth the general priorities of the various types of claims against the estate, in paragraphs (1) through (4). Paragraph 5 provides for the payment of interest on such claims. After all these claims have been paid, together with any interest owing on the claims, then any remaining funds are distributed to the debtor pursuant to paragraph (6).

In order to determine the treatment of professionals' compensation under section 726, it is necessary to trace one's way back through several sections of the Bankruptcy Code. Section 726(a)(1) provides as follows:

> (1) first, in payment of claims of the kind specified in, and in the order specified in, section 507 of this title.

Section 726(a)(1) thus does not expressly refer to professionals' compensation. Section 507, however, provides as follows:

> (a) The following expenses and claims have priority in the following order:
> (1) First, administrative expenses allowed under section 503(b) of this title, and any fees or charges assessed against the estate under chapter 123 of title 28. . . .

If we then turn to section 503(b)(2), that statute provides:

> (b) After notice and a hearing, there shall be allowed administrative expenses, other than claims allowed under section 502(f) of this title, including--
> . . .
> (2) compensation and reimbursement awarded under section 330(a) of this title; . . .

Thus, professionals' claims for compensation or reimbursement of expenses are claims "of the kind specified in ... section 507," to the extent that the claims are for "compensation and reimbursement awarded under section 330(a) of [title 11]."

B. SECTION 726(a)(5) PROVIDES FOR THE PAYMENT OF INTEREST ON CLAIMS PAID UNDER SECTION 726(a)(1) - (4).

The payment of interest at the close of a chapter 7 case is provided under section 726(a)(5):

> (5) fifth, in payment of interest at the legal rate from the date of the filing of the petition, on any claim paid under paragraph (1), (2), (3), or (4) of this subsection . . . .

Because this provision expressly provides for the payment of interest on claims for administrative expenses paid under paragraph (1), interest can be paid on professionals' claims for compensation and expense reimbursement after they are allowed under section 330.

In affirming the bankruptcy court's decision, the district court analyzed the plain language of section 726(a)(5) and ended its reasoning with the language "any claim paid". In so doing, the district court ignored the phrase in section 503(b)(2) that reads "compensation and reimbursement awarded under section 330. . . ." (emphasis added). The court also ignored the fact that the Code provides elsewhere for retroactive treatment of certain post-petition claims, without including administrative claims for compensation. See 11 U.S.C. § 502(g)-(i). Finally, the lower courts gave insufficient consideration to apposite case law.

C. THE PUBLISHED CASE LAW HOLDS THAT INTEREST ON PROFESSIONALS' FEES AND EXPENSES IS PAYABLE UNDER SECTION 726(a)(5) ONLY AS TO ALLOWED AMOUNTS UNDER SECTION 330, DATING FROM THE TIME OF THE FEE AWARDS.

The Ninth Circuit's decision in In re Riverside-Linden Investment Co., 945 F.2d 320, is the seminal case on the issue of when interest begins to accrue on professionals' fees under section 726(a)(5). As in the instant case, the Ninth Circuit addressed the payment of interest to trustee's counsel where surplus funds remained after the payment of all administrative expenses and creditors' claims. The Court also confronted the question whether the trustee's counsel may receive interest from the date that the counsel invoiced the estate.

First, the Ninth Circuit noted that section 726(a)(5) cannot be literally read as providing for interest to professionals dating from the commencement of the case:

> For claims existing prior to the filing of the bankruptcy petition, a date-of-filing accrual date is appropriate and mandated under the plain language of the statute. For a claim to Section 330(a) attorney's fees arising subsequent to filing, however, a literal application of the statute makes little sense; "[i]nterest cannot accrue on fees for services that have not yet been performed," Riverside-Linden II, 111 B.R. at 303. See, e.g., Bob Jones Univ. v. United States, 461 U.S. 574, 586, 103 S. Ct. 2017, 2025-2026, 76 L.Ed. 2d 157 (1983) ("[i]t is a well-established canon of statutory construction that a court should go beyond the literal language of a statute if reliance on that language would defeat the plain purpose of the statute"); . . . .

Riverside-Linden, 945 F.2d at 323-24; see also In re Colortex Industries, Inc., 19 F.3d 1371, 1377 (11th Cir. 1994) (noting the ambiguity in section 725(a)(5) that results from the availability of interest on post-petition claims) (dicta); In re Motley, 150 B.R. 16, 18 (Bankr. E.D. Va. 1992).

The Ninth Circuit then specifically considered the kind of administrative expense "claim" to which section 726(a)(5) applies:

> The provision which defines attorney's fees as a compensable administrative expense, Section 503(b) refers to "compensation and reimbursement awarded under section 330." 11 U.S.C. § 503(b)(2) (emphasis added). It is not until the fees have been awarded by the bankruptcy court pursuant to Section 330, therefore, that they become an administrative expense entitling them to treatment as a claim under Section 726(a)(5)."

945 F.2d at 324.

The Ninth Circuit's approach is consistent with all the published decisions under section 726(a)(5). See In re Chiapetta, 159 B.R. 152, 159 (Bankr. E.D. Pa. 1993) (trustee's counsel received a contingency fee after successfully pursuing a lawsuit, but counsel was not entitled to interest under section 726(a)(5) until after the award of fees at the close of the case); In re Motley, 150 B.R. 16, 19 (Bankr. E.D. Va. 1992) (trustee not entitled to pre-award interest under section 726(a)(5); In re Commercial Consortium of California, 135 B.R. 120, 127 (Bankr. C.D. Cal. 1991) (trustee's counsel may not receive pre-award interest under section 726(a)(5), but court awarded current, rather than historical, rates as compensation for the delay caused by the pendency of the estate's lawsuit). In addition, this position is consistent with the case law concluding that professionals employed on behalf of a bankruptcy estate have no right to the payment of compensation, or interest on such compensation, until the final fee awards are made under 11 U.S.C. § 330. See, e.g., In re Child World, Inc., 185 B.R. 14, 1995 WL 476171, at *3-5 (Bankr. S.D.N.Y. Aug. 9, 1995); In re Caribou Partnership III, 152 B.R. 733, 741 (Bankr. N.D. Ind. 1993); In re Energy Coop., Inc., 95 B.R. 961, 966 (Bankr. N.D. Ill. 1988).

If the above case law is rejected, then it is difficult to justify another date as the proper starting point for accruing interest. This is particularly clear as to the trustee's interest award in the lower courts. Both courts acknowledged that interest cannot be awarded under section 726(a)(5) dating back to filing of the bankruptcy petition, because that would produce the absurd result of professionals receiving interest on their claims for compensation even before they provided any services to justify compensation. However, the award of interest to the trustee from the date of his appointment produces the same illogical result that the lower courts wished to avoid.

II. THE DISTRICT COURT ERRED IN RELIANCE ON THE UNAVAILABILITY OF INTERIM COMPENSATION TO THE PROFESSIONALS, BECAUSE THE BANKRUPTCY COURT MAY NONETHELESS AWARD COMPENSATION FOR SIGNIFICANT PRE-AWARD DELAYS UNDER 11 U.S.C. § 330, AND SUCH COMPENSATION WAS AWARDED IN THIS CASE.

The district court attempted to distinguish the prior case law under 11 U.S.C. § 726(a)(5), by reference to the availability of interim compensation in those jurisdictions, and contrasting the unavailability of such compensation in the bankruptcy court in this case. R1-10-10. However, it is the statutory analysis of section 726(a)(5) and its related provisions that is of primary significance in the Riverside-Linden line of cases. That analysis should also govern the outcome here. Although the Riverside-Linden court did note that the professional in that case had not filed an interim fee application, those cases which cite Riverside-Linden or its progeny and emphasize the availability of interim compensation are generally chapter 11 cases. See, e.g., In re Byrd, 151

B.R. 925 (D.S.D. 1993); Matter of Caribou Partnership III, 152 B.R. 733, 741 (Bankr. N.D. Ind. 1993).

The significance of interim compensation is understandably less in chapter 7 cases, where there is generally no operating business from which ongoing expenses can be paid. Chapter 7 cases frequently do not have sufficient funds available to pay interim compensation until near the end of a case, when all the assets of an insolvent debtor have been collected and liquidated, and any litigation is concluded. Interim fee applications would be superfluous in such circumstances. Furthermore, the thrust of chapter 7 is the expeditious administration of the estate for the benefit of creditors, and many courts are reluctant to award interim fees because such awards may dilute a trustee's incentive to administer the estate expeditiously. See In re Hutchinson, 5 F.3d 750, 753-54 (4th Cir. 1993) (trustee's main duty is to administer the estate expeditiously); In re Domino Investments, Ltd., 82 B.R. 608, 609 (Bankr. S.D. Fla. 1988) (denying interim compensation so as to encourage timely administration of the estate); cf. In re Commercial Consortium of California, 135 B.R. 120, 123-25 (Bankr. C.D. Cal. 1991).

Given the limited applicability of section 726(a)(5) to the rare chapter 7 case in which there is a surplus, it should be clear that professionals cannot generally expect interest from the dates on which they submit fee applications. The lower courts' rulings are likely only to encourage the frequent submission of interim fee applications in chapter 7 cases.

However, the unavailability of interim compensation does not preclude trustees and other professionals from being compensated in appropriate circumstances in a manner that recognizes their delay in payment. Pursuant to 11 U.S.C. § 330(a)(1), the bankruptcy court may award "reasonable compensation for actual, necessary services rendered by such trustee, examiner, professional person, or attorney, as the case may be, . . . based on the nature, the extent, and the value of such services, the time spent on such services, and the cost of comparable services other than in a case under this title; . . . ."[3] In awarding such compensation, the bankruptcy court exercises considerable discretion, and the court in appropriate circumstances may consider significant delay in payment. See Grant v. George Schumann Tire & Battery Co., 908 F.2d 874, 877, 880 (11th Cir. 1990); see also Norman v. Housing Authority of City of Montgomery, 836 F.2d 1292, 1304 (11th Cir. 1988).

The bankruptcy court's decision in Commercial Consortium of California, 135 B.R. 120, 125-26 (Bankr. C.D. Cal. 1991), demonstrates one way in which a bankruptcy court has considered delay in payment. The court used the current hourly rates of trustee's counsel, rather than the hourly rates applicable at the time services were provided, in determining compensation under section 330. Id. at 122. The court noted that "Any earlier filing of a fee application would have been pointless and wasteful, for the trustee could not have paid any allowed fees before recovery on the claim." Id. at 126-127. Significantly, the same court concluded that it must deny interest to the professional under section 726(a)(5). Id. at 127.

[3] Although this provision has been amended by the Bankruptcy Reform Act (Pub. L. No. 103-394 (1994)) since the bankruptcy court's award of compensation under section 330, the statutory changes do not affect the analysis in this case.

The bankruptcy court in the instant case actually recognized delay in payment in awarding compensation under section 330. The bankruptcy court awarded $227,612.12 in fees and $1,515.02 in expenses to K&F, for their services as the Trustee's counsel. This sum included the amount of the attorneys' fee judgment of $79,200 for K&F's services provided in the district court insurance litigation, plus the five years of judgment interest on that award in the amount of $50,202.12.[4] In other words, K&F was awarded $50,202.12 as part of its compensation award under section 330. That award has not been challenged on appeal.

[4] This award also was calculated to include a "contingency risk factor" that multiplied the attorneys' customary hourly rate. B-177-4.

III. THE AWARD OF INTEREST TO THE TRUSTEE IS CONTRARY TO THE LIMITATION OF TRUSTEE COMPENSATION BY 11 U.S.C. § 326(a).

The award of interest to the trustee dating from the time of the Trustee's appointment contravenes the intent and purpose of 11 U.S.C. § 326(a). Section 326(a) provides that a court "may allow reasonable compensation under section 330 of [title 11] of the trustee for the trustee's services . . . ," but limits such compensation to an amount determined by application of a detailed formula set forth in section 326(a). For purposes of the present case, it is significant that section 326 expressly limits the court's award of compensation under section 330. These limitations are strictly applied by the courts. See In re Orient River Inv., Ltd., 133 B.R. 729, 731 (Bankr. E.D. Pa. 1991).

The interrelationship of sections 326(a) and 726(a)(5) was specifically addressed in In re Motley, 150 B.R. 16 (Bankr. E.D. Vir. 1992). The court denied interest to the trustee, adopting the Riverside-Linden analysis, and concluded that the inconsistency between section 326(a) and section 726(a)(5) served as an additional ground for denying interest to the trustee under the latter provision. In the instant case, the bankruptcy court awarded to the trustee under section 330 the maximum compensation permitted by section 326. The lower courts' decisions under section 726(a)(5) effectively allow a trustee to avoid the limitations of section 326 by seeking an award of interest under section 726(a)(5) for services dating all the way back to the date of the trustee's appointment, rather than from the date of the award.

CONCLUSION

For all of the foregoing reasons, the United States Trustee requests that the Court reverse the decision of the district court, and requests such additional or alternative relief as the Court considers just and equitable.

TABLE OF CITATIONS

ARGUMENT

I. THE APPELLEES' ASSERTION THAT INTEREST SHOULD BE AWARDED DATING FROM THE COMMENCEMENT OF THE CASE FINDS NO SUPPORT IN EITHER THE PUBLISHED CASE LAW OR THE LOWER COURTS' DECISIONS.

The Appellees assert that interest should be awarded to the trustee and trustee's counsel from the date that the petition was filed in the case. However, all of the published case law rejects that contention. Instead, those courts award interest from the date of the professionals' fee awards. See In re Riverside-Linden Inv. Co., 945 F.2d 320, 323-24 (9th Cir. 1991), aff'g In re Riverside-Linden Inv. Co., 99 B.R. 439 (Bankr. 9th Cir. 1989); In re Chiapetta, 159 B.R. 152, 159 (Bankr. E.D. Pa. 1993); In re Motley, 150 B.R. 16, 19 (Bankr. E.D. Va. 1992); In re Commercial Consortium of California, 135 B.R. 120, 127 (Bankr. C.D. Cal. 1991). Those courts' analysis follows from the statutory language of section 726(a)(5) and the related provisions, sections 507 and 503(b). The analysis is also consistent with the case law concluding that professionals employed on behalf of a bankruptcy estate have no right to the payment of compensation or interest until a court awards the fees. See, e.g., In re Child World, Inc., 185 B.R. 14, 15, 18 (Bankr. S.D.N.Y. Aug. 9, 1995); In re Caribou Partnership III, 152 B.R. 733, 741 (Bankr. N.D. Ind. 1993); In re Energy Coop., Inc., 95 B.R. 961, 966 (Bankr. N.D. Ill. 1988).

But it is not just the published cases and their statutory analysis that are contrary to the Appellee's position; both of the lower courts rejected the Appellees' argument as well.[1] The lower courts recognized that an award of interest from the petition date produces an absurd result: the professional would receive interest on his entire fee award from a date occurring before the provision of any services whatsoever. Indeed, the petition date in the instant case preceded the conversion of the case to chapter 7.

II. LIMITING INTEREST UNDER SECTION 726(a)(5) TO POST-AWARD COMPENSATION IS FULLY CONSISTENT WITH BANKRUPTCY PRACTICE.

In determining when interest should be awarded, the lower courts rejected the Riverside analysis, at least in part due to the frequent failure of the United States Bankruptcy Court for the Middle District of Florida to entertain interim fee applications under 11 U.S.C. § 331. Instead, the bankruptcy court in the Middle District waits until the conclusion of the case to award compensation. Interim fee applications would frequently serve little purpose in chapter 7 cases, where assets are not available for distribution until later in the case.

[1] Regardless of their argument, the Appellees do not appear to be seeking compensation dating from the commencement of the case. At the conclusion of their Appellees' Brief, they request that the district court's judgment "be affirmed in all respects." The Appellees have not filed any cross-appeals.

The Appellees describe the lower courts' decisions as presenting a "well-reasoned compromise," given the realities of practice in the Middle District of Florida, where interim fee applications would have been "futile." Appellees' Brief at 17, 21-22. However, a "compromise" with the applicable statutory provisions is not justified. While the courts must reject the Appellees' contention that the statute provides for interest from the date the petition was filed, the courts should nonetheless apply the rest of the statutory language, including the provisions of sections 503(b) and 507, to conclude that interest to professionals accrues from the date of any fee award.

Under the lower courts' decisions, section 726(a)(5) provides for an automatic award of statutory interest to the trustee and other professionals. The courts awarded interest from the dates of the trustee's appointment and the other professionals' various fee applications, in order to compensate for the delay in determining the fee awards. There is no discretion afforded to the bankruptcy court under section 726(a)(5). By contrast, in the appropriate circumstances, the bankruptcy court may properly exercise its discretion under section 330 to award compensation in an amount that reflects genuine, extensive delay that is not the fault of the professionals involved. In this very case, the court awarded compensation for much of the delay by incorporating the district court's award of interest into the bankruptcy court's section 330 award, and the United States Trustee does not dispute the latter award.

The Appellees' characterization of the section 330 compensation award is confused. According to the Appellees, the United States Trustee "insinuates that the Bankruptcy Court unwittingly doubled Trustee's counsel's 'compensation for delay in payment', when it awarded interest to Trustee's counsel under Section 726(a)(5)." Appellees' Brief at 28. Apparently, the Appellees view the bankruptcy court's award of the interest from the district court litigation as a conscious, well-founded determination of compensation under section 330. The United States Trustee neither agrees nor disagrees; the bankruptcy court did not expressly explain its duplication of interest. But that leaves open the real point being raised: Compensation for significant delay can be awarded outside section 726(a)(5), in the appropriate circumstances and within the discretion of the bankruptcy court under section 330, as we explained in our opening brief. Appellant's Brief at 16-17. To the extent that the bankruptcy court or the district court relied on their putative inability to award compensation for delay as part of the fee award process, that position is not supported by the facts of this case.[2]

CONCLUSION

For all of the foregoing reasons, the United States Trustee requests that the Court reverse the decision of the district court, and requests such additional or alternative relief as the Court considers just and equitable.

STATEMENT OF APPELLATE JURISDICTION

This court has jurisdiction over this appeal pursuant to 28 U.S.C. § 158(a). The bankruptcy court's final order appointing a chapter 11 trustee was entered on October 16, 2009. The appellant's notice of appeal was timely filed on October 17, 2009, giving rise to this appeal.

STATEMENT OF THE ISSUES

Did the bankruptcy court err by appointing a chapter 11 trustee under 11 U.S.C. § 1104(a)(1) when it found that the debtor's conviction and forthcoming incarceration for two crimes of fraud and deception rendered him incapable of acting as a fiduciary for his bankruptcy estate?

Finnman* (In re Johnson), 960 F.2d 396, 399 (4th Cir. 1992); Travelers Ins. Co. v. Bryson Prop., XVIII (In re Bryson Prop., XVIII), 961 F.2d 496, 499 (4th Cir. 1992). STATEMENT OF THE CASE

On October 28, 2008, Roy C. Gomez was indicted by a grand jury empaneled in the United States District Court for the Western District of Virginia, Abingdon Division. Transcript of hearing held on October 14, 2009, Exhibit 2.[1] In each of its thirty-four counts, the indictment alleges that Gomez either acquired or attempted to acquire a controlled substance by misrepresentation, fraud, deception and subterfuge. Id.

On April 28, 2009, an information was filed adding two additional charges to those previously brought against Gomez. Count one of the information alleges that Gomez willfully failed to file reports of foreign bank accounts as required by law. Tr. (October 14, 2009), Exhibit 3. First, it alleges that Gomez failed to report that he had foreign financial accounts having a value greater than $10,000.00 over a three year period between 2005 and 2008. Id. Second, it alleges that Gomez wired funds in excess of $10,000.00 from the United States to his bank accounts in Singapore. Id. Finally, it alleges Gomez willfully violated the foregoing requirements while violating another law of the United States and as a part of a pattern of illegal activity. Id. Count two of the information alleges that Gomez willfully and knowingly filed a false tax return failing to reflect the financial transactions alleged in count one of the information. Id.

On April 28, 2009, a plea agreement between Gomez and the United States government was filed with this court. In that agreement, Gomez pled guilty to the charges in the indictment of obtaining controlled substances by fraud and both counts of the information. Tr. (October 14, 2009), Exhibit 4. Gomez stated that he was "...pleading guilty as described above because I am in fact guilty and because I believe it is my best interest to do so and not because of any threats or promises." Id. at 2. As part of the plea agreement, Gomez agreed to be sentenced to a period of confinement within the federal sentencing guidelines, the payment of $600,000 in lieu of forfeiture, the surrender of his medical license, and to never seek reinstatement of his medical license. Id.

On August 26, 2009, Gomez filed a voluntary, individual chapter 11 bankruptcy petition in the United States Bankruptcy Court for the Western District of Virginia. In re Gomez, No. 09-72179 (Bankr. W.D. Va. filed Aug. 26, 2009). On September 4, 2009, Gomez was sentenced to eight months of incarceration and two years of supervised release, Tr. (October 14, 2009) at 29, and on October 22, 2009, the debtor was confined to the Bureau of Prisons to begin serving his prison term.

After a review of the facts and circumstances surrounding this bankruptcy case, the United States Trustee filed a motion to appoint a chapter 11 trustee or to convert the case to chapter 7.[2] At the conclusion of the October 14, 2009, hearing on the motion to appoint or convert, the bankruptcy court found that cause existed to appoint a chapter 11 trustee pursuant to

"The United States Trustee is the 'watchdog' of the bankruptcy system * * * charged with preventing fraud and abuse and with 'fill[ing] the vacuum' caused by possible creditor inactivity." Curry v. Castillo (In re Castillo), 297 F.3d 940, 950 (9th Cir. 2002). Section 307 of the Bankruptcy Code authorizes the United States Trustee to appear and be heard on the propriety of retaining WEWR in this case. See 11 U.S.C. 307; Stanley v. McCormick (In re Donovan Corp.), 215 F.3d 929 (9th Cir. 2000) ("The United States trustee may * * * intervene and appear at any level of the proceedings from the bankruptcy court on, * * * as either a party or an amicus.") (internal quotation marks omitted).

11 U.S.C. § 1104(a)(1) because Gomez's conviction and incarceration for crimes of fraud and dishonesty called "into question Doctor Gomez's fitness to serve as a fiduciary in this case." Tr. (October 14, 2009) at 16.

Gomez subsequently filed a timely notice of appeal and a motion for a stay pending appeal. At the October 27, 2009, hearing on Gomez's motion for a stay, the bankruptcy court clarified that cause existed to appoint a chapter 11 trustee not just because Gomez had been convicted of a crime, but because the applicable charges involved fraud or deception as necessary elements of the crime, and the context and nature of Gomez's participation in the criminal activities warranted the finding. Tr. (October 27, 2009) at 21-23. Therefore, the bankruptcy court denied Gomez's motion for a stay pending appeal.

SUMMARY OF ARGUMENT

Section 1104(a)(1) of title 11 states that the court "shall order the appointment of a trustee . . . for cause, including fraud, dishonesty, incompetence, or gross mismanagement in the affairs of the debtor by current management, either before or after the commencement of the case." Roy Gomez was convicted of two crimes of fraud or dishonesty. After consideration of the crimes and the context in which they occurred, the bankruptcy court found that Gomez's history of fraud and dishonesty made him unfit to act as a fiduciary of his bankruptcy estate. For this reason, the bankruptcy court found cause to exist and held that a trustee must be appointed. Accordingly, the bankruptcy court did not abuse its discretion and its order appointing the chapter 11 trustee should be affirmed.

ARGUMENT

I. Statutory Framework

A bankruptcy court may appoint a chapter 11 trustee "for cause, including fraud, dishonesty, incompetence, or gross mismanagement in the affairs of the debtor by current management, either before or after the commencement of the case." 11 U.S.C. § 1104(a)(1). A court may also appoint a trustee "if such appointment is in the interests of the creditors." 11 U.S.C. § 1104(a)(2).

II. The bankruptcy court did not abuse its discretion when it found that Roy Gomez's prior history of fraud and dishonesty established cause for the appointment of a chapter 11 trustee.

A. A bankruptcy court is allowed to consider pre-petition conduct when determining if cause exists under section 1104(a)(1).

The plain language of § 1104(a)(1) and the law of the Fourth Circuit both direct the bankruptcy court to consider pre-petition conduct when determining if there is cause to appoint a trustee. Section 1104(a)(1) plainly contemplates the consideration of pre-petition misconduct, as it provides that the misconduct giving rise to cause may exist "either before or after the commencement of the case." 11 U.S.C. § 1104(a)(1). And the Fourth Circuit has affirmed the opinions of previous bankruptcy courts that have considered pre-petition misconduct of the debtor-in-possession. For example, in Fraidan v. Weitzman (In re Fraidan), 43 F.3d 1466, 1994 WL 687306 (4th Cir. 1994), the Fourth Circuit upheld the bankruptcy court's decision to appoint a chapter 11 trustee based upon a pre-petition conviction for theft and related dishonesty. In Fraidan, the Fourth Circuit disregarded an argument parallel to the one that Gomez raises today: that the bankruptcy court had abused its discretion because there was no evidence of improper conduct in the bankruptcy case itself. Instead, the Fourth Circuit held that the dishonest conduct occurring prior to the bankruptcy sufficiently justified finding cause and the appointment of the trustee. Id. at *2. Accordingly, Gomez's contention that his felony convictions should not give rise to cause because they are "completely unrelated" to his bankruptcy case is entirely inconsistent with the plain meaning of the statute and the law of the Fourth Circuit. Id.

Furthermore, Gomez's re-characterization of his engagement in a three-year long scheme of fraudulent and dishonest criminal activity as "slight or immaterial" dishonesty is an unavailing attempt to establish credibility before the court. App. Br. at 5. The bankruptcy court was correct to consider Gomez's criminal convictions for fraud and dishonesty when determining if Gomez could be trusted to administer his property for the benefit of the estate and its creditors.

B. The bankruptcy court's determination that Roy Gomez could not meet his fiduciary duties as a debtor-in-possession is supported by the record.

The bankruptcy court did not commit error when it found that Gomez's crimes of fraud and dishonesty precluded his ability to serve as a fiduciary of the estate and required the appointment of a chapter 11 trustee.

A party seeking the appointment of a chapter 11 trustee pursuant to § 1104(a)(1) must show cause by a preponderance of the evidence. Tradex Corp. v. Morse, 339 B.R. 823, 829-30 (D. Mass. 2006). According to the Fourth Circuit, when making a finding of cause under § 1104(a)(1), a bankruptcy court should respect the "policy of flexibility [that] pervades the bankruptcy code with the ultimate aim of protecting creditors" and "due consideration must be given to the various interests involved in the bankruptcy proceeding." Comm. of Dalkon Shield Claimants v. A.H. Robins Co., Inc., 828 F.2d 239, 242 (4th Cir. 1987). But upon a finding that cause exists, "there is no discretion; an independent trustee must be appointed." In re V. Savino Oil & Heating Co., Inc., 99 B.R. 518, 525 (Bankr. E.D.N.Y. 1989).

When a debtor files for bankruptcy under chapter 11, all of its assets are transferred to a new legal entity — the estate. 11 U.S.C. § 541(a); O'Dowd v. Trueger (In re O'Dowd), 233 F.3d 197, 202 (3d Cir. 2000). At that time, the debtor becomes the "debtor-in-possession" and is responsible for administering the estate. 11 U.S.C. § 1107(a). The debtor-in-possession serves as a fiduciary to the estate and its creditors. In re United Healthcare Sys., Inc., 200 F.3d 170, 177 n. 9 (3d Cir. 1999). The fiduciary obligations of the debtor-in-possession include "open, honest and straightforward disclosure to the Court and creditors . . . and the duty to protect and conserve property in its possession for the benefit of creditors." In re Marvel Entm't Group, Inc., 140 F.3d 463, 474 (3d Cir. 1998) (internal citations omitted). As one bankruptcy court explained, the debtor-in-possession owes a duty of loyalty, which includes the avoidance of "self-dealing, conflicts of interest and the appearance of impropriety." In re Bowman, 181 B.R. 836, 843 (Bankr. D. Md. 1995).

The bankruptcy court found that Gomez's upcoming incarceration and the nature of the felonies upon which he was convicted established cause to appoint a chapter 11 trustee. Tr. (October 14, 2009) at 16. When reviewing the criminal records offered by the United States Trustee in support of its motion to appoint a chapter 11 trustee, the bankruptcy court carefully analyzed the elements of the crimes to which Gomez pled guilty. The bankruptcy court did not, as Gomez suggests, simply conclude that the felony convictions themselves constituted cause. As the record reflects, the bankruptcy court found that only two of the three crimes to which Gomez had pled guilty evidenced fraud, dishonesty or deception. Id. at 54. And as for the crimes that Gomez did commit, the bankruptcy court found that they "were not simply technical violations that he unfortunately was ensnared by and was not really personally guilty of much blame." Id. at 23. The bankruptcy court stated that the convictions "call into question Doctor Gomez's fitness to serve as a fiduciary in this case . . . I think that cause has been shown." Id. at 16. Because the bankruptcy court engaged in this careful review of the facts and its findings are supported by the record, the court did not abuse its discretion.

Gomez's remaining argument, that the bankruptcy court must find that the appointment is in the best interest of the creditors in order to find cause, appears to confuse 11 U.S.C. §§ 1104(a)(1) and (2). Section 1104(a)(1) lists "fraud, dishonesty, incompetence, or gross mismanagement of the affairs of the debtor by current management" as examples of cause, i.e., improper conduct, requiring the appointment of a trustee. 11 U.S.C. § 1104(a)(1). In contrast, the interests of the creditors are considered in a distinct inquiry under § 1104(a)(2). Because the bankruptcy court appointed the trustee pursuant to § 1104(a)(1), it was not required to find that the appointment of the trustee was in the interest of the creditors under § 1104(a)(2).

CONCLUSION

For these reasons, the United States Trustee respectfully asks this court to affirm the order entered below.

I. STATEMENT OF APPELLATE JURISDICTION

Whether the bankruptcy court erred in imposing monetary sanctions against Ng, either pursuant to Fed. R. Bankr. P. 9011 or, alternatively, its inherent power.

III. STANDARDS OF REVIEW

The standard of appellate review for the bankruptcy court's order imposing sanctions under either Rule 9011 or its inherent power is abuse of discretion. In re DeVille, 361 F.3d 539, 547 (9th Cir. 2004). IV. STATEMENT OF THE CASE

This is an appeal from the district court's affirmance of the bankruptcy court's order imposing monetary sanctions pursuant to both Fed. R. Bankr. P. 9011 and the bankruptcy court's inherent power.[2] The bankruptcy court's order imposed a monetary sanction on the purported former trustee of the Trust, Lighter, and Ng, who was hired as counsel by Lighter to represent the Trust. Lighter has not appealed the district court's decision and only the sanctions as imposed on Ng are before this court. The bankruptcy court imposed sanctions because it found that Ng filed the case in bad faith, for an improper purpose and without an identifiable bankruptcy purpose.

Co-appellees, Irwin and Susan Gootnick, also defend the imposition of sanctions on Ng, pursuant to their motion, by the district court based on its finding that Ng's appeal was frivolous. The district court imposed sanctions in the amount of the Gootnick's attorneys fees related to the appeal, a matter addressed in co-appellees' brief and concerning which the United

V. STATEMENT OF FACTS

This appeal is related to a civil lawsuit originally filed in California state court ("California Case") on May 18, 2005, by Irwin and Susan Gootnick, as individuals, and by Susan as trustee of the Gootnick Family Trust ("Trust"). Gootnick EOR at 1, ¶3. Appellant's Opening Brief, Appendix ("Appellant's Apx."), Tab 3, Exhibit 2. That lawsuit alleged that Eric Aaron Lighter, along with two companies controlled by him, defrauded the Gootnicks and improperly assumed control over the Trust and other Gootnick property. Appellant's Apx., Tab 3, Exhibit 2. The complaint sought a determination that the Gootnicks owned the disputed properties and that Susan Gootnick was the legitimate trustee. Appellant's Apx., Tab 3, Exhibit 2.

Lighter sought removal of that matter to the United States District Court for the Northern District of California, which was granted on July 7, 2005. Gootnick EOR, at 1, ¶3. Lighter then caused to be filed a motion to change venue for the lawsuit to the United States District Court for the District of Hawaii. Gootnick EOR, at 1, ¶3; UST EOR, Vol. 2, Tab 8, Dkt. 7 and 8. That motion was denied on November 9, 2005. Gootnick EOR, at 1 ¶3; Tab 8, Dkt. 43. The district court ordered Lighter to respond to the Gootnicks' complaint in the California Case by December 9, 2005. Gootnick EOR, at 1 - 2, ¶3; UST EOR, Vol 2, Tab 8, Dkt. 45.

On December 9, 2005, the date that Lighter was ordered to answer the complaint in the California Case, a chapter 11 bankruptcy petition (case no. 05-50023) was filed in the United States Bankruptcy Court for the District of Hawaii on behalf of the Trust under the name Quality Income Systems, Inc. ("QIS"), fka the Gootnick Family Trust. Gootnick EOR at 2, ¶3; UST EOR, Vol. 2, Tab 7. Ng filed the petition as attorney for the Debtor on behalf of Lighter, as the trustee of the Trust. Id. On December 21, 2005, Lighter caused to be filed a notice of automatic stay in the California Case, which identified Ng as counsel in the Hawaii bankruptcy and requested deferral of further proceedings and rulings. UST EOR, Vol. 2, Tab 8, Dkt. 53. On January 3, 2006, an adversary proceeding was filed by Ng in the bankruptcy case on behalf of QIS against Irwin and Susan Gootnick, challenging the Gootnicks' ownership and control of the Trust. UST EOR, Vol. 2, Tab 7, Dkt. 12.

The United States Trustee filed a motion to dismiss the QIS bankruptcy case under 11 U.S.C. § 1112(b) on the grounds that there was no entity to reorganize and that the petition was filed in bad faith. UST EOR, Vol. 2, Tab 7, Dkt. 23. Following a hearing on February 21, 2006, the bankruptcy court dismissed the QIS petition under section 1112(b) because (a) it was a two-party dispute; (b) it was filed without a legitimate bankruptcy purpose; and, (c) the filing of the case shortly after the denial of the venue motion in California district court evidenced bad faith. Gootnick EOR at 17 - 18, 24 - 26. The related adversary proceeding was also dismissed for lack of jurisdiction, as the main case was no longer pending. Gootnick EOR at 18, ll. 21 - 25. The bankruptcy court entered a written order incorporating its oral ruling on February 22, 2006. UST EOR, Vol. 2, Tab 7, Dkt. 43.

On February 15, 2006, six days prior to the hearing on the motion to dismiss in QIS, Ng filed a second bankruptcy petition in the United States Bankruptcy Court for the District of Hawaii on behalf of the Trust, this time under the name of the Gootnick Family Trust, aka Quality Income Systems, Inc. Gootnick EOR at 2, ¶6; UST EOR, Vol. 2, Tab 4. As in the QIS case, Ng filed the petition on behalf of Lighter, as the trustee for the Trust. UST EOR, Vol. 2, Tab 4. On February 21, 2006, Ng filed a notice of bankruptcy in the California Case in order to stay it. UST EOR, Vol. 2, Tab 8, Dkt. 64.

On March 13, 2006, less than one month after commencing this second bankruptcy case in Hawaii, Ng filed a motion to transfer that case to the Northern District of California. UST EOR, Vol. 2, Tab 4, at Dkt. 17. On March 29, 2006, in the California Case, Lighter's attorney filed a letter brief requesting the imposition of the automatic stay in that case based on the bankruptcy filing of the Gootnick Family Trust bankruptcy. Gootnick EOR at 2, ¶7; UST EOR, Vol. 2, Tab 8, at Dkt. 72. Ng executed an affidavit in support of that motion. UST EOR, Vol. 2, Tab 8, at Dkt. 86. On April 14, 2006, the district court in the California Case denied the motion for a stay. UST EOR, Vol. 2, Tab 8, at Dkt. 88. On April 17, 2006, three days after the district court in the California Case denied the motion to impose the stay, Ng filed an ex parte motion in the Gootnick Family Trust case in Hawaii to "Honor" the stay , asking the bankruptcy court to enforce the automatic stay in the California Case. UST EOR, Vol. 2, Tab 6, Dkt. 29. The United States Trustee opposed this motion on the grounds that the district court in the California Case had already denied the same request. UST

EOR, Vol. 2, Tab 6, Dkt. 41. The stay motion was denied by the Hawaii bankruptcy court orally at a hearing held on May 17, 2006, UST EOR, Vol. 2, Tab 6, Dkt. 57, and a formal order was entered denying the stay on June 1, 2006. UST EOR, Vol. 2, Tab 6, Dkt. 71.

On May 15, 2006, the United States Trustee filed a motion for sanctions against both Ng and Lighter, pursuant to 11 U.S.C. § 105(a) and Rule 9011 of the Federal Rules of Bankruptcy Procedure. UST EOR, Vol. 2, Tab 6, Dkt. 48. At a June 14, 2006 hearing, the bankruptcy court granted the United States Trustee’s motion for sanctions, finding that the sole purpose of the filing of the second bankruptcy case on behalf of the Trust was to obstruct improperly the litigation in the California Case and to invoke the automatic stay where none really existed. UST EOR, Vol. 2, Tab 2 at 4. The bankruptcy court further found that second bankruptcy case served no valid bankruptcy purpose, as the debtor was not eligible for a discharge and creditors would not benefit, as the only real creditors were taxing authorities, which had the ability to pursue collection of taxes on their own outside bankruptcy. UST EOR, Vol. 1, Tab 2 at 4-5. The court imposed the sanctions against Lighter and Ng jointly and severally. UST EOR, Vol. 1, Tab 2 at 18. The bankruptcy court entered a written order imposing the sanctions on June 26, 2006. UST EOR, Vol. 2, Tab 1.

On appeal, the district court ruled that Lighter and Ng failed to demonstrate that the bankruptcy court's finding of bad faith was clearly erroneous, or that the imposition of sanctions was an abuse of discretion. Gootnick EOR at 57 - 58. The district court held that the bankruptcy court did not clearly err in finding bad faith and in finding that the bankruptcy case was filed for the sole purpose of obstructing the litigation in the California Case. Gootnick EOR at 57 - 58. These findings, it concluded, were supported by "the timing of the filing of the underlying case, the bad faith QIS bankruptcy filing, the filing of an adversary proceeding raising the same issues being litigated in the California civil case, and the lack of a legitimate bankruptcy purpose." UST EOR, Vol. 1, Tab 2 at 14. The district court agreed with the bankruptcy court that the alleged tax issues did not justify the bankruptcy. Id.

VI.SUMMARY OF ARGUMENT

The bankruptcy court's order finding that Lighter and Ng deserved sanctions for filing in "bad faith" and for the "sole purpose of obstructing the litigation in the District Court in San Francisco and attempting to invoke an automatic stay where none really exists," merits affirmance because the court's findings are not clearly erroneous. As the record below amply demonstrates, the filing was part of a thoughtfully planned sequence of abusive legal maneuvers designed by Lighter and Ng to disrupt the California Case.

Given its express findings of bad faith and improper purpose, the bankruptcy court was well within its discretion under Ninth Circuit precedent to sanction Ng pursuant to both its inherent power and Fed. R. Bankr. P. 9011 for his abuse of the bankruptcy system. In his brief to this Court, Ng has marshaled no factual or legal arguments that demonstrate that the lower courts' level of clear error. Consequently, the bankruptcy court's findings were to imposed a sanction of $3,800 was not an abuse of discretion.

VII. ARGUMENT

The Bankruptcy Court's Findings That Lighter and Ng Filed The Second Case In Bad Faith And For The Improper Purpose Of Obstructing The California Case Are Not Clearly Erroneous.

The filing of a bankruptcy case to impede, delay, forum shop, or to obtain a tactical advantage regarding litigation in a non-bankruptcy forum is evidence of bad faith - whether that non-bankruptcy forum is a state court or a federal district court. See Chambers v. NASCO, Inc., 501 U.S. 32 (1991) (sustaining the imposition of sanctions for abusive litigation tactics); In re Silberkraus, 253 B.R. 890, 905 (Bankr. C.D. Cal.

2000), aff'd 336 F.3d 864 (9th Cir. 2003). See also Hernandez v. City of El Monte, 138 F.3d 393, 398 (9th Cir. 1998) (bad faith abuse of process includes judge-shopping).

Courts can properly find bad faith in the filing of a petition by considering such factors as the timing of the petition, a delay of non-bankruptcy litigation and the lack of anything to reorganize, which suggests the debtor's intent in filing was to use the Bankruptcy Code as a means to escape to a forum perceived to be more friendly. See In re St. Paul Self-Storage Ltd. Partnership, 185 B.R. 580, 584 (BAP 9th Cir. 1995) (finding bad faith justifying dismissal). See also Trident Assoc. Ltd. Partnership v. Metropolitan Life Insurance Co. (In re Trident Assoc. Ltd.), 52 F.3d 127, 131 (6th Cir. 1995) (filing of bankruptcy as a litigation tactic constitutes bad faith); Phoenix Piccadilly, Ltd. v. Life Ins. Co. (In re Phoenix Piccadilly, Ltd.), 849 F.2d 1393, 1394 (11th Cir. 1988) (same).

Based upon the record before it, the bankruptcy court did not err in finding that this bankruptcy case was filed in bad faith and for an improper purpose. UST EOR, Vol. 1, Tab 2 at 4. The bankruptcy court concluded that Lighter and Ng filed this case for the improper purpose of disrupting non-bankruptcy litigation. The court found, as trier of fact, that the case was part of an improper scheme to impede the prosecution of the California Case. UST EOR, Vol. 1, Tab 2 at 4 - 5. The record provides substantial evidence to support the bankruptcy court's findings.

First, the record below reveals that the bankruptcy filing was one of a series of at least six pleadings in which Lighter and Ng attempted, in the substance and timing of those pleadings, to disrupt the California Case. Those pleadings included: 1) Lighter's motion to transfer venue of the California Case to the District of Hawaii;[3] 2) the filing of the first bankruptcy petition on behalf of the Trust in the name of Quality Income Systems, Inc., on the date Lighter's answer to the complaint in the California case was due;[4] 3) the filing of the second case on behalf of the Trust, under the name In re Gootnick Family Trust aka Quality Income Systems, Inc., five days before the hearing on the motion to dismiss the first case;[5] 4) the motion to transfer the second case to the Northern District of California;[6] 5) the motion in the California Case for the imposition of the automatic stay due to the filing of the second bankruptcy case;[7] and, 6) moving three days after the denial of the requested stay in the California Case to have the Hawaii bankruptcy court impose the stay on the California Case. The evidence of such tactics demonstrate that the bankruptcy court did not err in finding that Lighter, with Ng's assistance, attempted in the substance and timing of those pleadings, to disrupt the California Case. UST EOR, Vol. 1, Tab 2 at 4 - 5.

Second, the bankruptcy court did not commit error in finding that Ng filed the second bankruptcy case in an effort to remove a two-party dispute to bankruptcy court to delay non-bankruptcy litigation. UST EOR, Vol. 1, Tab 2, at 4. See In re St. Paul Self-Storage Ltd. Partnership, 185 B.R. at 584 (considering the two party nature of dispute as weighing in favor of a finding of bad faith). The court found that this case essentially involved a two-party dispute between Lighter, Ng, and their related entities on one side and the Gootnicks and their related entities on the other. UST EOR, Vol. 1, Tab 2, at 14 - 15. This factor is often considered by courts to weigh in favor of finding bad faith. See In re C-TC 9th Ave. Partnership, 113 F.3d 1304, 1311-12 (2d Cir. 1997); In re Laguna Assoc. Ltd.

Partnership, 30 F.3d 734, 738 (6th Cir. 1994); Matter of Little Creek Dev. Co., 779 F .2d 1068, 1073 (5th Cir. 1986).

Third, the record below makes clear that the bankruptcy court did not commit clear error by finding that it could not "see any legitimate bankruptcy purpose for [Ng's] commencement of this case[.]" UST EOR, Vol. 1, Tab 2 at 4 - 5. The Debtor was not an individual eligible to receive a Chapter 7 discharge. See 11 U.S.C. § 727(a). The filing would not enable an equitable distribution of assets to creditors since the threshold issue of who owns and controls the assets was still to be determined. Therefore, the bankruptcy did not serve either of the two primary purposes of bankruptcy. See Sherwood Partners, Inc. v. Lycos, Inc., 394 F.3d 1198, 1203 (9th Cir. 2005) (chapter 7 embodies two ideals: (1) giving the individual debtor a fresh start, by giving him a discharge of most of his debts; and (2) equitably distributing a debtor's assets among competing creditors).

Each of these three independent findings would have justified the relatively modest sanction of $3,800 imposed on Ng. Collectively, they underscore why it was well within the bankruptcy court's discretion under Chambers v. NASCO, Inc., 501 U.S. 32 (1991) and Fed. R. Bankr. P. 9011. Ng's argument that the filing of the petition stemmed from unresolved tax issues, Appellant's Brief at 26 - 27, falsely suggests that the alleged tax claims were separate from the dispute with the Gootnicks and therefore legitimized the bankruptcy filing by avoiding the "two-party dispute" label. Both the bankruptcy and district courts found this unpersuasive. The bankruptcy court rejected this argument, stating "[t]axing authorities have plenty of weapons in their arsenal to enforce their claims outside of bankruptcy, so they wouldn't be benefitted by the bankruptcy either." UST EOR, Vol. 1, Tab 2 at 4. The district court agreed. Gootnick EOR at 57 - 58. Thus, even assuming the existence of tax claims, the case still essentially involved the dispute between Lighter and Ng on one side and the Gootnicks on the other. Such disputes should be resolved through the normal litigation process in their original forums, and it is bad faith to file bankruptcy instead of continuing with the normal litigation process in the non-bankruptcy forums. In re Silberkraus, 253 B.R. at 906 (Bankr. C.D. Cal. 2000), aff’d, 336 F.3d 864 (9th Cir. 2003).

The bankruptcy court reviewed the second Gootnick Family Trust bankruptcy filing in the context of the California Lawsuit UST EOR, Tab 2 at 4 - 5, 14 - 15) and the previous bankruptcy case of Quality Income Systems, Inc. (UST EOR, Vol. 1, Tab 2 at 4-5). With the record outlined above, the bankruptcy court did not clearly err in finding that the filing of the petition in this case was in bad faith. . . . .

B.The Court Did Not Abuse Its Discretion In Exercising Its Inherent Power To Sanction Parties For Bad Faith Conduct And Engaging In An Abuse Of Process.

The bankruptcy court imposed sanctions based upon its finding that the sanctioned parties acted in "bad faith." UST EOR, Vol. 1, Tab 2 at 5. Given that finding, Supreme Court and authority in this Court's precedents make clear the bankruptcy court possessed inherent authority to impose monetary sanctions in this case. Chambers v. NASCO, Inc., 501 U.S. 32 (1991). In Chambers, the U.S. Supreme Court affirmed a federal court's imposition of monetary sanctions in the form of compensatory attorney fees based on the court's "inherent authority" to sanction certain kinds of misconduct. The Supreme Court specifically held that federal courts are not limited to the sanctions permitted or required by express statutes and rules, but may impose sanctions pursuant their inherent authority.

As Chambers held, courts are not limited to the sanctions permitted or required by express statutes and rules. To the contrary, they possess "inherent" authority to redress misconduct:

"Courts of justice are universally acknowledged to be vested, by their very creation, with power > to impose silence, respect, and decorum, in their presence, and submission to their lawful mandates." Anderson v. Dunn, 6 Wheat. 204, 227, 5 L.Ed. 242 (1821); see also Ex parte Robinson, 19 Wall. 505, 510, 22 L.Ed. 205 (1874). These powers are "governed not by rule or statute but by the control necessarily vested in courts to manage their own affairs so as to achieve the orderly and expeditious disposition of cases." Link v. Wabash R. Co., 370 U.S. 626, 630-631, 82 S.Ct. 1386, 1388-1389, 8 L.Ed.2d 734 (1962).

501 U.S. at 43.

This Court similarly has held that a federal court's inherent power to sanction extends to the bankruptcy court. In In DeVille v. Cardinale (In re DeVille), 361 F.3d at 550 - 51, this Court held that where rules and statutes are inadequate to sanction the misconduct of an attorney who, in bad faith, files bankruptcy-related notices to delay a state court trial, the bankruptcy court may safely rely on its inherent power. See also In re Rainbow Magazine, Inc., 77 F.3d 278, 282 (9th Cir. 1996)(bankruptcy courts have inherent power to sanction vexatious conduct) (individual in control of chapter 7 debtor sanctioned for bad faith filing of petition).

Ng was sanctioned for his bad faith conduct based solely upon the lower court's finding there was no legitimate purpose for the filing of the bankruptcy case, UST EOR, Vol. 1, Tab 2 at 4 - 5, which represented nothing other than an improper tactic designed solely to subvert the ongoing California district court litigation. UST EOR, Vol. 1, Tab 2 at 4. As outlined above, the Gootnick Family Trust bankruptcy filing was one of a series of pleadings in which Ng attempted to disrupt the California Case. Because Ng filed the Gootnick Family Trust bankruptcy petition in bad faith and for an improper purpose, the bankruptcy court was well within its inherent powers and its discretion to award sanctions and the district court properly affirmed.

C. The Bankruptcy Court Did Not Abuse Its Discretion By Imposing Sanctions, In the Alternative, Under Fed. R. Bankr. P. 9011.

Rule 9011 of the Federal Rules of Bankruptcy Procedure provides for sanctions against parties who sign, file, submit, or later advocate a bankruptcy petition. Fed. R. Bankr. P. 9011(c).

While invocation of a federal court's inherent power to sanction requires a finding of bad faith, the imposition of Rule 9011 sanctions, on the other hand, requires only a showing of objectively unreasonable conduct. Rule 9011(c) therefore allows a bankruptcy court to sanction attorneys, parties, and individuals that file bad-faith documents before the court. In re Rainbow Magazine, Inc., 77 F.3d 278, 282 (9th Cir. 1996) (bankruptcy courts have discretion under Rule 9011 to sanction a party who files an incomplete document).

In addition to the bankruptcy court's invocation of its inherent powers, the bankruptcy court possessed ample discretionary authority under Rule 9011(c) to sanction Ng. The bankruptcy court found that Lighter and Ng caused the filing in bad faith and for the improper purpose of obstructing the California Lawsuit. UST EOR, Vol. 1, Tab 2 at 4 - 5. Ng has made no effort in his brief to this Court to refute the sequence of pleadings, outlined above, in which he, as counsel for the Trust, repeatedly attempted to delay the California Case. The court found that as with the QIS case, the Gootnick Family Trust case was filed to obstruct pending litigation and attempt to invoke the automatic stay where none existed. Id. Under the circumstances of this case, the bankruptcy court was well within its discretion in awarding sanctions and the district court properly affirmed.

Ng argues that the bankruptcy court applied the wrong standard in finding bad faith. Appellant's Brief at 13 - 16. Specifically, he cites In re Marsch, 36 F.3d 825, 829 (9th Cir. 1994), for the proposition that a determination of bad faith must be based on express findings of both improper purpose and frivolousness. Appellant's Brief at 14. Ng argues that both the bankruptcy and district courts failed to make any finding on frivolousness. Id. His argument in this regard is unavailing for three reasons.

First, Ng's initial premise is incorrect. Marsch does not make a finding of bad faith contingent on an analysis of improper purpose and frivolousness. Rather, it specifies the analysis necessary for the imposition of sanctions pursuant to Rule 9011. See Marsch, 36 F.3d at 830.

Second, contrary to Ng's contention, the bankruptcy court's finding that there was no legitimate purpose for the filing of the bankruptcy case in this matter easily satisfies the frivolousness prong of the Rule 9011 analysis.

Third, contrary to what Ng suggests, Marsch, does not merely require findings on both these criteria, but rather requires a relative assessment of each on a sliding scale, such that "the more compelling the showing as to one element, the less decisive need be the showing as to the other." Appellant's Brief at 14 (quoting Marsch, 36 F.3d at 830). Consequently, Marsch does not provide any benefit to Ng in this matter. For the reasons set for the above, the record below makes a strong showing with respect to the improper purpose behind the filing of the bankruptcy petition and Ng’s argument that the filing was justified for tax reasons is flimsy at best.

Finally, even if Ng could successfully argue that the record does not support the imposition of sanctions pursuant to Rule 9011, the bankruptcy court’s monetary sanctions would nonetheless be sustainable in the alternative under its inherent power, which requires only a showing of bad faith, which is palpably evident in this record. Chambers v. NASCO, Inc., 501 U.S. at 43.

VIII. CONCLUSION

For these reasons, the United States Trustee respectfully asks that the Court affirm the district court’s order affirming the bankruptcy court’s order imposing sanctions of $3,800 on Ng.

STATEMENT CONCERNING ORAL ARGUMENT

The United States Trustee does not believe oral argument would materially assist this Court in determining this appeal, but stands ready to participate should this Court schedule it for argument.[1]

JURISDICTIONAL STATEMENT

This appeal is taken from a final order that the bankruptcy court entered on October 18, 2010, granting the United States Trustee's motion to dismiss Appellant's chapter 7 bankruptcy case. The Appellant filed a timely notice of appeal under 28 U.S.C. § 158(c)(2) and Fed. R. Bankr. P. 8002(a) on November 2, 2010. This Court has jurisdiction over this appeal under 28 U.S.C. § 158(a)(1).

STATEMENT OF THE ISSUE

The issue on appeal is whether a decedent's probate estate may file a petition for protection under the Bankruptcy Code.

STANDARD OF REVIEW

This appeal presents a question of law. This Court reviews questions of law de novo. See, LPP Mortgage, LTD. v. Brinley (In re Brinley), 547 F.3d 643, 647 (6th Cir. 2008).

STATEMENT OF THE CASE

This is an appeal from a bankruptcy court order which dismissed the Chapter 11 bankruptcy petition filed by the Estate of Julius Gray ("the Estate"), on the grounds that a probate estate is ineligible to be a debtor under the Bankruptcy Code. The parties dispute whether a decedent's probate estate may, as a matter of law, file a petition for protection under the Code. The U.S. Trustee argues on appeal that the lower court's holding should be affirmed in these proceedings.

STATEMENT OF FACTS

Julius Gray purchased real property located at 20946 Richmond Drive, Northville, Michigan 48167 ("the Real Property") in June of 2007. Mr. Gray's wife, Jeanine Gray, was not included on the title documents for the Real Property, nor was Mrs. Gray liable for either of the two mortgages on the property - a $1,000,000.00 first mortgage held by Fifth Third Mortgage-MI LLC ("the Bank"), and a $100,000.00 home equity line of credit held by Chase Bank. Mr. Gray - the only individual liable on the two mortgages - died on April 3, 2009. [The Estate's Brief, Doc. No. 16, ¶ 1 and 2].

Despite a sizeable amount of passive income, Mrs. Gray fell behind on the mortgages secured by the Real Property after her husband's death.[2] Negotiations between Mrs. Gray and the Bank continued off and on for the next year and a half, with no resolution between the parties reached. [The Estate's Brief, Doc. No. 16, ¶ 7].

In the meantime, Mr. Gray's estate ("the Estate") was fully probated in a Michigan state court and the Estate was found to be insolvent; its only asset was the Real Property, which by now was worth less than the debts owed on the two mortgages. [The Estate's Brief, Doc. No. 16, ¶ 4].

With no resolution achieved between Mrs. Gray and the Bank, and with arrearage amounts owed on the Real Property, a foreclosure sale was set for the Real Property at 10:00 a.m. on September 7, 2010 - roughly a year and a half after Mr. Gray's death. [The Estate's Brief, Doc. No. 16, ¶ 7]. Just before that sale, however, the Estate filed a Chapter 11 petition in the Eastern District of Michigan Bankruptcy Court. [See E.D. Mich. Bankr. Case No. 10-67918-MBM, Doc. No. 1]. For reasons more fully explained below, on September 10, 2010 the United States Trustee filed a motion to dismiss the Estate's bankruptcy petition [Doc. No. 8], arguing that the Estate was ineligible to be a "debtor" as defined in the Bankruptcy Code.[3] The [2] [The Estate's Brief, Doc. No. 16, ¶ 3] describes passive monthly income for Mrs. Gray in the amount of $13,600.00 - including, $4,100.00 per month in social security benefits, and $4,500.00 per month from a trust set up with insurance proceeds related to Mr. Gray's death.

[3] Pursuant to 11 U.S.C. § 307, "[t]he United States trustee may raise and appear and be heard on any issue in any case or proceeding under this title but may not file

Bankruptcy Court held a hearing on the United States Trustee's motion on October 12, 2010. An order granting the U.S. Trustee's motion was entered on October 18, 2010 [Doc. No. 24], and on November 1, 2010 the Estate filed a timely appeal. [Doc. No. 29].

The Estate has a second appeal pending in this case. On September 27, 2010, Fifth Third Bank filed its Motion to Dismiss Chapter 11 Case and to Declare the Automatic Stay Void Nunc Pro Tunc [Doc. No. 20]. The Estate filed its Response on October 18, 2010 [Doc. No. 25] and a hearing was held on November 6, 2010. On November 18, 2010, the Bankruptcy Court entered its Order Declaring Automatic Stay Void Nunc Pro Tunc [Doc. No. 35]. The Estate filed a timely appeal of this order on December 2, 2010. [Doc. No. 41]. The United States Trustee is not a party to this appeal and takes no position on the issue involved.

SUMMARY OF ARGUMENT

The relevant facts of the record below are not in dispute between the parties to this appeal. Rather, the central question to this appeal is one of law: whether a probate estate can file a petition for relief under the Bankruptcy Code. The plain language of the Bankruptcy Code does not allow them to be debtors, or to file bankruptcy petitions. And the case law considering this question has uniformly held a plan [in a Chapter 11 case]." See also In re Revco D. S., Inc., 898 F. 2d 489 (6th Cir. 1990).

they cannot. Because the Bankruptcy Code does not allow estates to be debtors, the bankruptcy court's order dismissing this case should be affirmed.

ARGUMENT

A Probate Estate May not File for Protection Under the Bankruptcy Code.

The Bankruptcy Court dismissed the Estate's petition for relief, holding that a probate estate could not file for bankruptcy protection under the Code. [Doc No. 24] As no error exists in that holding as a matter of law, this Court should affirm.

Under the Bankruptcy Code, only a "person" is entitled to be a debtor under Chapter 11. 11 U.S.C. § 109(d). "Person" is a defined term within the Code, and has the following meaning:

> The term "person" includes individual, partnership, and corporation, but does not include [certain governmental units]. . . .

11 U.S.C. § 101(41). As noted by the Eleventh Circuit, "the Code does not exclude decedents' estates from the definition of 'person'; Congress' use of the word 'includes' in the definition of 'person' means that the definition is not limiting." In re Goerg, 844 F.2d 1562, 1566 (11th Cir. 1988)(emphasis in original). However, the Code separately defines the term "entity" to include estates. See 11 U.S.C. § 101(15) ("the term 'entity' includes person, estate, trust, or government unit, and the United States trustee"). In light of this definition, Goerg held as follows:

> If Congress had intended "person" to include "estate," there would have been no reason to list "estate" separately in the definition of "entity."

Goerg, 844 F.2d at 1566.

Congress' exclusion of probate estates from the definition of "person" was no mere oversight. Rather, Congress expressly recognized that "[t]he definition [of person] does not include an estate or a trust, which are included only in the definition of 'entity[.]'" H.R. Rep. No. 595, 95th Cong., 1st Sess. 313 (1977), reprinted in 1978 U.S.Code Cong. & Admin.News 5963, 6270; S.Rep. No. 989, 95th Cong., 2d Sess. 25 (1978), reprinted in 1978 U.S.Code Cong. & Admin.News 5787, 5811. Therefore, Congressional omission of probate estates from the definition of a "person" under the Code was intentional.

Federal courts have cited several "reasons why the probate estate of a decedent should be ineligible to initiate a request for relief under the Bankruptcy Code." In re Estate of Roberts, 2005 WL 3108224, *1 (Bankr. D. Md. Aug. 15, 2005). The Estate of Roberts court elaborated as follows:

> While an authorized representative of a probate estate may be an individual, he or she is not a debtor seeking a fresh start. Because the represented principal here is a probate estate, there is no fresh start available[.]

Id. at *1. Federal courts also rely upon the fact that "probate systems developed by the individual states are a comprehensive and specialized machinery to administer such estates." In re Walters, 113 B.R. 602, 604 (Bankr. D.S.D. 1990).

For these reasons, as the Estate concedes in its brief [Doc. No. 16], each and every federal court to consider the issue has held that a probate estate is not eligible to file a petition for relief under the Bankruptcy Code. See In re Goerg, 844 F.2d at 1566 (". . . the Code's definition of 'person,' and therefore its definition of 'debtor,' excludes insolvent decedents' estates. Other courts that have addressed this question have uniformly embraced this view")[4]; see also Estate of Roberts, 2005 WL 3108224, *2; Walters, 113 B.R. at 604; In re Hancock, 2009 WL 2461167 (Bankr. N.D. Okl. Aug. 10, 2009); In re Seegers, 2009 WL 2883019 (Bankr. D.D.C. July 30, 2009); In re Estate of Patterson, 64 B.R. 807 (Bankr. W.D. Tex. Sept. 9, 1986); In re Jarrett, 19 B.R. 413 (Bankr. M.D.N.C. 1982); In re Estate of Brown, 16 B.R. 128 (Bankr. D.D.C. 1981); Matter of 299 Jack-Hemp Assocs., 20 B.R. 412 (Bankr. S.D.N.Y. 1982); In re Bunch, 249 B.R. 667 (Bankr. D. Md. 2000); In re Perkins, 381 B.R. 530 (Bankr. S.D Ill. 2007).

Arguing that the Court should nonetheless reverse the Bankruptcy Court's holding below, the Estate cites several cases which are not controlling of the issues in this appeal. As the Estate argues, "bankruptcy laws have always allowed for representatives of business trusts, guardians for incompetent individuals and representatives acting pursuant to a power of attorney to file petitions." [Appellant's Br., Doc. No. 16, p.6, citing In re Kenneth Allen Knight Trust, 303 F.3d 671 (6th Cir. 2002); In re Zawisa, 73 B.R. 929 (E.D. Pa. Bankr. 1987); In re Gridley, 131 B.R. 447 (D.S.D. Bankr. 1991)]. While true, the Code specifically includes these entities as [4] In re Goerg did draw a distinction between bankruptcy cases filed by a probate estate and ancillary proceedings filed by an estate in another jurisdiction. In Goerg, a probate estate filed for bankruptcy protection in West Germany - where probate estates were specifically allowed to file for bankruptcy protection. Citing the comity provisions of 11 U.S.C. § 304, the Eleventh Circuit allowed the probate estate to file ancillary proceedings in American bankruptcy courts to deal with some of that estate's real property in the United States. This case, however, is not an ancillary proceeding to another bankruptcy estate - but rather is a bankruptcy petition in chief.

"persons" entitled to file a bankruptcy petition - or, in some instances (such as incompetence or through a power of attorney) considers the individual filings to be the legal equivalent of the debtors themselves.

The Estate is also correct that in some instances a Bankruptcy Court may allow the continuation of a bankruptcy estate after the death of the debtor. [See Appellant's Br., Doc. No. 16, pp.6-7]. This authority is derived from the Federal Rules of Bankruptcy Procedure:

> Death or incompetency of the debtor shall not abate a liquidation case under chapter 7 of the Code. In such event the estate shall be administered and the case concluded in the same manner, so far as possible, as though the death or incompetency had not occurred. If a reorganization, family farmer's debt adjustment, or individual's debt adjustment case is pending under chapter 11, chapter 12, or chapter 13, the case may be dismissed; or if further administration is possible and in the best interest of the parties, the case may proceed and be concluded in the same manner, so far as possible, as though the death or incompetency had not occurred.

Fed. R. Bankr. P. 1016 (emphasis added). Thus, "Bankruptcy Rule 1016 expressly authorizes [that] a Chapter 11 reorganization may receive further administration as though the death. . . had not occurred if it is possible and in the best interest of the parties." In re Walters, 114 B.R. at 605. Walters further explains the policy rationale behind allowing such bankruptcy petitions to continue:

> Reorganization cases should be encouraged, and honest debtors who put forth their best efforts in paying creditors should be given the benefit of the doubt under Bankruptcy Rule 1016[.]

Id. at 606. These policy concerns are not raised in the instant matter, where Mr. Gray died before the Chapter 11 petition had been filed.

The Estate also appears to argue that the lower court's dismissal of the appeal was somehow due to the so-called "probate exception" to federal jurisdiction. [See Appellant's Br., Doc. No. 16, pp. 7-8, citing Marshall v. Marshall, 547 U.S. 293 (2006)]. As the Eleventh Circuit discussed in Goerg, however, this argument is unavailing:

> Before we begin our analysis, we note that Congress has the power to create bankruptcy jurisdiction over the administration of decedents' estates. Care should be taken not to confuse the question of the breadth of Congress' bankruptcy power with the so-called "probate exception" to statutory diversity jurisdiction. That exception relates only to 28 U.S.C. § 1332, and has no bearing on federal question jurisdiction, the jurisdiction involved in bankruptcy cases.

Goerg, 844 F.2d at 1565 (internal citations omitted)(emphasis in original). The Estate's arguments to the contrary lack merit. The probate exception "reserves to state probate courts the probate or annulment of a will and the administration of an estate; it also precludes federal courts from disposing of property that is in the custody of a state probate court." Marshall, 547 U.S. at 296. The Bankruptcy Court's dismissal of the Estate's Chapter 11 case was based not on the probate exception but on the fact that the Estate is not a "person"as the that word is defined in the Bankruptcy Code, and thus is ineligible to be a debtor under Chapter 11 of the Bankruptcy Code.

Finally, the Estate's reliance upon In re Fay Assocs. L.P., 225 B.R. 1 (Bankr. D.D.C. 1998) and In re Bunch, 249 B.R. 667 (Bankr. D. Md. 2000) is misplaced. Fay Associates involved, as admitted by the Estate, a single asset Chapter 11 debtor. Asserting bad faith, a creditor moved for the conversion or dismissal of the case.

Bunch dealt with a Chapter 13 debtor whose inherited realty was property of the Chapter 13 estate. A mortgagee on the property improperly attempted to foreclose on the property without seeking relief from the automatic stay. Neither Fay Associates nor Bunch deal with a probate estate filing for bankruptcy protection under the Code and neither case deals directly with the definition of a "person" eligible to file a bankruptcy petition. However, Bunch supports the lower court's ruling in this case because the Bunch court was careful to caution that "(t)he debtor's eligibility to file a Chapter 13 bankruptcy petition as an individual is to be distinguished from the prohibited filing of a Chapter 13 petition by a decedent's estate." (Citations omitted.) Bunch, 249 B.R. at 671.

Although the Estate"advocates that [t]his Court evolve the precedent which prohibits an estate from filing bankruptcy because it is not a 'person'," [Appellant's Br., Doc. No. 16, p.10], the law does not allow that. Nor do the facts of this case warrant such a break from precedent. Mrs. Gray will not be liable for either the first mortgage or the home equity line of credit on the Real Property because she has no liability for those debts. Further, though not directly relevant to these proceedings, Mrs. Gray has adequate funds - $13,600.00 monthly in passive income - with which to secure housing. [The Estate's Brief, Doc. No. 16, ¶ 2]. For these reasons, the U.S. Trustee requests that the Court affirm the lower court's dismissal of the Estate's Chapter 11 petition.

CONCLUSION

For these reasons, the United States Trustee respectfully asks this Court to affirm the lower court's order dismissing the Appellant's Chapter 11 bankruptcy case.

No. 87-8161.

United States Court of Appeals,
Eleventh Circuit.

May 18, 1988.

Foreign bankruptcy trustee of estate of deceased German citizen petitioned for ancillary administration, and state court appointed administrator of decedent moved to dismiss. The Bankruptcy Court, 64 B.R. 321, granted motion to dismiss, and appeal was taken. The United States District Court for the Northern District of Georgia, No. C86-2096A, William C. O'Kelley, J., affirmed, and foreign trustee appealed. The Court of Appeals, Tjoflat, Circuit Judge, held that provision of Bankruptcy Code governing cases ancillary to foreign bankruptcy proceedings is applicable where entity that is subject of foreign proceedings qualifies for insolvency administration under foreign law, even though the entity does not fall within Bankruptcy Code's definition of "debtor."

Appeal from the United States District Court for the Northern District of Georgia.

Before RONEY, Chief Judge, TJOFLAT, Circuit Judge, and CLEMON,* District Judge.

* Honorable U.W. Clemon, U.S. District Judge for the Northern District of Alabama, sitting by designation.

TJOFLAT, Circuit Judge:

[1] This appeal presents a question of first impression for this court: whether section 304 of the Bankruptcy Code, 11 U.S.C. §§ 101–1330, opens United States bankruptcy courts to proceedings ancillary to foreign insolvency proceedings where the entity that is the subject of the foreign proceeding qualifies for insolvency administration under foreign law, but does not fall within the Bankruptcy Code's definition of "debtor." Both the bankruptcy court and the district court in this case answered the question in the negative, holding that a West German bankruptcy trustee was precluded from commencing a section 304 ancillary case because the debtor in the foreign case—an insolvent decedent's estate—did not qualify as a "debtor" under the Bankruptcy Code. We conclude that the courts below misconstrued the eligibility requirements for section 304 relief, and we accordingly reverse.

I.

Heinz Guenter Kaussen, a resident and citizen of the Federal Republic of Germany (West Germany), died in April 1985 owning substantial property in both Europe and North America. Although most of his holdings were located in West Germany, he also owned property in Canada, Ireland, California, and Georgia. At the time of his death, his liabilities exceeded the value of his assets by some $55 million. His business enterprises had been headquartered in Cologne, West Germany, and the vast majority of the estate's creditors are located in West Germany.

Shortly after Kaussen's death, probate proceedings were commenced in the local court of Cologne. That court appointed an administrator who, after determining that the estate was insolvent, petitioned the court to commence bankruptcy proceedings.[1] On January 24, 1986, the court entered an Order of Adjudication, finding that the estate was insolvent. The court appointed Klaus Hubert Goerg, appellant here, to serve as the bankruptcy trustee and authorized him to take possession of the decedent's property both in Germany and abroad. The adjudication of bankruptcy and the appointment of Goerg as trustee were affirmed by the Cologne Regional Court and the Cologne Higher Court of Appeals. The Higher Court of Appeals specifically held that "[i]n addition to the domestic property, the Debtor's bankrupt estate shall further include the Debtor's property located abroad. The latter, too, shall be placed in custody and used by the Trustee."[2]

Meanwhile, upon Kaussen's death, the Probate Court of Fulton County, Georgia had appointed Edgardo L. Parungao, appellee here, to serve as administrator of the Kaussen estate assets located in Georgia.[3] In June 1986, Goerg filed a petition pursuant to 11 U.S.C. § 304 (1982) in the United States Bankruptcy Court for the Northern District of Georgia, seeking to enjoin Parungao from prosecuting the Fulton County probate proceeding.[4] Under section 304, a United States bankruptcy court may, upon petition by the official representative of a foreign bankrupt in a foreign insolvency proceeding, enter an order staying the commencement or continuation of any action in the United States against property involved in the foreign proceeding. Id. § 304(b)(1)(A). The bankruptcy court may also stay the enforcement of any lien or judgment obtained against such property, id. § 304(b)(1)(B), and may order that such property be turned over for administration by the foreign court in which the principal bankruptcy case is pending. Id. § 304(b)(2). Finally, the bankruptcy court may order other relief deemed "appropriate." Id. § 304(b)(3). In his section 304 petition, Goerg requested the bankruptcy court to order that the Georgia property be turned over to him for distribution in the West German bankruptcy proceeding.

[4] The bankruptcy court reported that "[u]nder a settlement approved by Superior Court of Fulton County, Georgia and the Probate Court of Fulton County, Georgia, distributions from the estate are to be paid 20% to each of Kaussen's four children and Mrs. Ingelborg Skowronek, mother of the children and Kaussen's lifetime companion."

Based on its interpretation of the language of section 304 and the pertinent definitional sections, the bankruptcy court held that its jurisdiction to entertain section 304 petitions was limited to cases in which the subject of the foreign insolvency proceeding qualified as a "debtor" as that term is defined in the Bankruptcy Code. The bankruptcy court then concluded that an insolvent decedent's estate—the debtor in the foreign insolvency proceeding in this case—did not qualify as a "debtor" under the Code. Accordingly, the bankruptcy court dismissed Goerg's section 304 petition for lack of subject matter jurisdiction.[5] In re Goerg, 64 B.R. 321 (Bankr.N.D.Ga. 1986). The district court affirmed, and Goerg now appeals.

[5] Although it felt compelled by the statutory language to dismiss the petition, the bankruptcy court expressed dismay at the outcome:

> Here we have German nationals [i.e., Mrs. Skowronek and Kaussen's four children, see supra note 4] who have lost their appeals to assert their interests in Kaussen's estate in the Courts of the Federal Republic of Germany, turning to the probate laws of the State of Georgia. In Georgia, they will receive what they could not from their own home courts.... As the facts now appear before the Court, this is mainly a contest between the German bankruptcy trustee and Kaussen's heirs. The heirs have lost in their own home courts and are now pursuing their claims in a more favorable forum, to wit: the Probate Court of Fulton County, Georgia. It does seem to be a great affront to the principles of comity to allow this to occur.

individual that such foreign proceeding concerns.

11 U.S.C. § 304 (1982).

In holding that it lacked jurisdiction to entertain Goerg's section 304 petition, the bankruptcy court engaged in the following analysis. First, it looked to the Code's definition of "foreign proceeding":

> "[F]oreign proceeding" means proceeding, whether judicial or administrative and whether or not under bankruptcy law, in a foreign country in which the debtor's domicile, residence, principal place of business, or principal assets were located at the commencement of such proceeding, for the purpose of liquidating an estate, adjusting debts by composition, extension, or discharge, or effecting a reorganization.

Id. § 101(22) (Supp. IV 1986). Because the definition of "foreign proceeding" makes reference to "the debtor's domicile, residence, principal place of business, or principal assets," the bankruptcy court concluded that its jurisdiction to entertain section 304 petitions was limited to cases in which the subject of the foreign proceeding qualified as a "debtor" under the Code.[6] The Code defines a "debtor" as a "person or municipality concerning which a case under this title has been commenced." Id. § 101(12) (1982). "Person," under the Code, "includes individual, partnership, and corporation, but does not include governmental unit." Id. § 101(35) (Supp. IV 1986). The bankruptcy court held that an insolvent decedent's estate is not a "person," and therefore not a "debtor," and that the court was consequently without jurisdiction to entertain Goerg's petition.

In evaluating the correctness of the bankruptcy court's ruling, our first task is to determine whether, as a general matter, the Code's definition of "debtor" excludes insolvent decedents' estates. If we conclude that it does, our task will then be to decide whether that exclusion applies in the context of a section 304 ancillary proceeding.

[2–4] Before we begin our analysis, we note that Congress has the power to create bankruptcy jurisdiction over the administration of decedents' estates. U.S. Const. art. I, § 8, cl. 4.[7] Care should be taken not to confuse the question of the breadth of Congress' bankruptcy power with the so-called "probate exception" to statutory diversity jurisdiction. That exception relates only to 28 U.S.C. § 1332 (1982),[8] and has no bearing on federal question jurisdiction, the jurisdiction invoked in bankruptcy cases. Cf. Covell v. Heyman, 111 U.S. 176, 179–80, 4 S.Ct. 355, 357, 28 L.Ed. 390 (1884) (property in custody of state court may be disturbed by federal court "exercis[ing] jurisdiction for the purpose of enforcing the supremacy of the Constitution and laws of the United States"). Owing to the supremacy clause, federal bankruptcy law preempts state law; as one of Congress' enumerated powers, the power to enact bankruptcy laws is limited only by the substantive guarantees contained in the Constitution. Cf. Louisville Joint Stock Land Bank v. Radford, 295 U.S. 555, 589, 601–02, 55 S.Ct. 854, 863, 869, 79 L.Ed. 1593 (1935). Whether Congress has actually exercised its bankruptcy power in a particular area is, of course, a matter of statutory construction.

Having said that, we turn to the question whether the Code's definition of "debtor" excludes decedents' estates. As the bankruptcy court correctly observed, the term "debtor" as defined by the Code means "person or municipality," and the term

[6] As support for its holding, the bankruptcy court cited Angulo v. Kedzep Ltd., 29 B.R. 417 (S.D.Tex.1983). In the course of discussing whether the foreign representative in that case had met the threshold prerequisites for application of section 304, the Angulo court stated that the foreign debtor "could be a debtor under Chapter 11." Id. at 418.

[7] Clause 4 provides that Congress shall have power "[t]o establish ... uniform Laws on the subject of Bankruptcies throughout the United States."

[8] The "probate exception" was developed at a time when the diversity statute granted jurisdiction over "suits of a civil nature in law or equity." Probate matters were deemed not to fit this description because such actions would have been heard in the ecclesiastical courts. See C. Wright, Law of Federal Courts § 25, at 143–46 (4th ed. 1983).

"person" "includes individual, partnership and corporation, but does not include governmental unit." Notably, the Code does not exclude decedents' estates from the definition of "person"; Congress' use of the word "includes" in the definition of "person" means that the definition is not limiting. See 11 U.S.C. § 102(3) (1982) (rules of construction).

Nevertheless, we find two indicia that Congress intended to exclude insolvent decedents' estates from the definition of "person." First, Congress defined "entity" to include "person, estate, trust, governmental unit, and United States trustee." Id. § 101(14) (Supp. IV 1986). If Congress had intended "person" to include "estate," there would have been no reason to list "estate" separately in the definition of "entity." Second, the legislative history expressly states that "[t]he definition [of person] does not include an estate or a trust." H.R.Rep. No. 595, 95th Cong., 2d Sess. 313, reprinted in 1978 U.S.Code Cong. & Admin.News 5963, 6270; S.Rep. No. 989, 95th Cong., 2d Sess. 25, reprinted in 1978 U.S.Code Cong. & Admin.News 5787, 5811.

[5] Based on these indicia, we conclude that the Code's definition of "person," and therefore its definition of "debtor," excludes insolvent decedents' estates. Other courts that have addressed this question have uniformly embraced this view. See In re Estate of Whiteside, 64 B.R. 99, 102 (Bankr.E.D.Cal.1986); In re Estate of Patterson, 64 B.R. 807, 808 (Bankr.W.D.Tex. 1986); In re Jarrett, 19 B.R. 413, 414 (Bankr.M.D.N.C.1982); In re 299 Jack-Hemp Assocs., 20 B.R. 412, 413 (Bankr.S.D. N.Y.1982); In re Estate of Brown, 16 B.R. 128, 128 (Bankr.D.D.C.1981).[9] These courts generally have opined that Congress elected not to extend bankruptcy jurisdiction to insolvent decedents' estates because the individual states have developed, through their probate systems, a comprehensive and specialized machinery for the administration of such estates. See Jarrett, 19 B.R. at 414; 299 Jack-Hemp Assocs., 20 B.R. at 413. Some of the courts have also noted that the policy of the Bankruptcy Code is to give individuals a "fresh start" through discharge of their debts, and that this policy is not furthered by bankruptcy administration of decedents' estates. See Jarrett, 19 B.R. at 414; cf. In re Estate of Hiller, 240 F.Supp. 504, 504 (N.D.Cal.1965) (interpreting 1898 Bankruptcy Act); Adams v. Terrell, 4 F. 796, 801 (W.D.Tex.1880) (in the case of an insolvent decedent's estate, "death has already discharged [the decedent] of all personal liability").

As we indicated above, however, our conclusion that the Code's definition of "debtor" excludes decedents' estates does not end our inquiry: we must now determine whether that exclusion applies in the context of a proceeding ancillary to a foreign proceeding pursuant to section 304. As the bankruptcy court emphasized, the Code's definition of "foreign proceeding" does make reference to "the debtor."[10] However, that same definition states that " 'foreign proceeding' means proceeding ... whether or not under bankruptcy law ... for the purpose of liquidating an estate, adjusting debts by composition, extension, or discharge, or effecting a reorganization." 11 U.S.C. § 101(22) (Supp. IV 1986) (emphasis added). Thus, we are presented with an anomaly: although the inclusion of the term "debtor" in the definition of "foreign proceeding" suggests that the subject of the foreign proceeding must qualify as a "debtor" under United States bankruptcy law, the Code expressly provides that the foreign proceeding need not even be a bankruptcy proceeding, either under foreign or United States law. Moreover, "foreign proceeding" includes a proceeding "for the purpose of liquidating an estate" [11]—yet, as we have seen, a decedent's estate does not qualify as a "debtor" under United States bankruptcy law.

[9] Courts addressing the issue under the predecessor of the current Bankruptcy Code, the 1898 Bankruptcy Act, reached the same conclusion. See In re Estate of Hiller, 240 F.Supp. 504, 504 (N.D.Cal.1965); In re Morgan, 26 F.2d 90, 91 (D.Mass.1928); In re Fackelman, 248 F. 565, 568 (S.D.Cal.1918); see also Adams v. Terrell, 4 F. 796, 801 (W.D.Tex.1880) (interpreting predecessor of 1898 Act). During the process leading to the enactment of the present Bankruptcy Code, the Commission on the Bankruptcy Laws recommended that the traditional exclusion of decedents' estates be continued. See H.R. Doc. No. 137, 93d Cong., 1st Sess., pt. I, at 185 (1973).

[10] We note that the text of section 304 itself also contains the term "debtor."

The anomaly created by the inclusion of the term "debtor" in the otherwise expansive definition of "foreign proceeding" could be resolved in either one of two ways. First, we could adopt the position taken by the bankruptcy court: that the Code's narrow definition of "debtor" controls, notwithstanding the otherwise expansive definition of "foreign proceeding." Alternatively, we could adopt the view that the term "debtor" as used in the section 304 context incorporates the definition of "debtor" used by the forum in which the foreign proceeding is pending. Under this alternative view, the bankruptcy court has jurisdiction to entertain the section 304 petition provided that the debtor qualifies for relief under applicable foreign law, and provided further that the foreign proceeding to which the debtor is subject is "for the purpose of liquidating an estate, adjusting debts by composition, extension, or discharge, or effecting a reorganization."

At first blush, the former view seems the more attractive of the two; the term "debtor" is expressly defined by the Code, and general principles of statutory construction require us to assume that Congress intended that the definition apply each time the term appears. However, it is also a well established canon of statutory construction that "[a] statute susceptible of more than one meaning must be read in the manner which effectuates rather than frustrates the major purpose of the legislative draftsmen." Schultz v. Louisiana Trailer Sales, Inc., 428 F.2d 61, 65 (5th Cir.1970). Because we find that the question of debtor eligibility for section 304 ancillary assistance is susceptible of two interpretations, we turn to an examination of the purposes behind section 304.

Section 304, which was enacted as part of the Bankruptcy Reform Act of 1978 and which had no predecessor in prior law,[12] "was intended to deal with the complex and increasingly important problems involving the legal effect the United States courts will give to foreign bankruptcy proceedings." Cunard Steamship Co. Ltd. v. Salen Reefer Servs. AB, 773 F.2d 452, 454 (2d Cir.1985); see generally Unger, United States Recognition of Foreign Bankruptcies, 19 Int'l Law. 1153 (1985). The filing of a section 304 petition does not commence a full bankruptcy case; a section 304 case is an ancillary case in which a United States bankruptcy court is authorized to apply its processes to give effect to orders entered in a foreign insolvency proceeding. Consistent with "[p]rinciples of international comity and respect for the judgments and laws of other nations," Congress intended that the bankruptcy courts have "maximum flexibility" in fashioning appropriate orders. H.R.Rep. No. 595, 95th Cong., 2d Sess. 325, reprinted in 1978 U.S. Code Cong. & Admin.News 5963, 6281. The ultimate purpose of the section 304 mechanism is to "prevent dismemberment by local creditors" of assets located in this country that are involved in a foreign insolvency proceeding. Id. at 324; S.Rep. No. 989, 95th Cong., 2d Sess. 35, reprinted in 1978 U.S.Code & Admin.News 5787, 5821.

[11] The term "estate" is not defined in the definitional section of the Bankruptcy Code. The Code does use the term of art "property of the estate" to describe "all legal or equitable interests of the debtor in property as of the commencement of the case." 11 U.S.C. § 541(a)(1) (1982). However, the Code also uses the term "estate" in a sense that includes decedent's estates. See id. § 101(14) (Supp. IV 1986) (definition of "entity"). The use of the term "estate" in the definition of "foreign proceeding" is ambiguous, and could be interpreted as including insolvent decedents' estates, not just "estates" in the sense of the bankruptcy term of art "property of the estate." See 2 Collier on Bankruptcy ¶ 304.01, at 304–12 (15th ed. 1987) ("That a foreign administration of a decedent's estate is ... a 'foreign proceeding' is suggested by the expansive language of [section 101(22)] which includes within its scope proceedings under laws other than bankruptcy laws brought for the purpose of liquidating an estate.").

[12] See H.R. Doc. No. 137, 93d Cong., 1st Sess., pt. II, 69–71 (1973); Bankruptcy Act Revision: Hearings on H.R. 31 and H.R. 32 Before the Subcomm. on Civil and Constitutional Rights of the House Comm. on the Judiciary, 94th Cong., 2d Sess. 1443 (1976) (statement of Professor Kurt H. Nadelmann). Under section 2a(22) of the 1898 Bankruptcy Act, bankruptcy courts were authorized to "[e]xercise, withhold, or suspend the exercise of jurisdiction ... where a bankrupt has been adjudged bankrupt by a court of competent jurisdiction without the United States." Although the 1898 Act did not provide a mechanism whereby a foreign bankruptcy trustee could initiate a proceeding in a United States bankruptcy court, some United States courts did defer to foreign insolvency administrations as a matter of comity. See, e.g., Cornfeld v. Investors Overseas Servs., Ltd., 471 F.Supp. 1255, 1259 (S.D.N.Y.), aff'd, 614 F.2d 1286 (2d Cir.1979).

It is thus clear that Congress enacted section 304 to help further the efficiency of foreign insolvency proceedings involving worldwide assets. In aid of such proceedings, federal bankruptcy courts may, within the constraints imposed by section 304, apply their processes and expertise to marshal property of the foreign debtor's estate located in this country. Because the focus is on making United States processes available in aid of foreign proceedings, not actual bankruptcy administration, it would make little sense to require that the subject of the foreign proceeding qualify as a "debtor" under United States bankruptcy law. See Boshkoff, United States Judicial Assistance in Cross-Border Insolvencies, 36 Int'l & Comp. L.Q. 729, 740–41 (1987); Klocker, Foreign Debtors and Creditors Under United States and West German Bankruptcy Laws: An Analysis and Comparison, 20 Texas Int'l L.J. 55, 90 (1985). Indeed, in light of the comity concerns that induced Congress to enact section 304, it would make eminent sense for Congress to define expansively the class of foreign insolvency proceedings for which ancillary assistance is available.

It bears emphasizing that a section 304 debtor does not receive the benefits of full bankruptcy administration under United States law. The legislative history expressly states that the filing of a section 304 petition "does not commence a full bankruptcy case." H.R.Rep. No. 595, 95th Cong., 2d Sess. 324, reprinted in 1978 U.S.Code Cong. & Admin.News 5963, 6281; S.Rep. No. 989, 95th Cong., 2d Sess. 35, reprinted in 1978 U.S.Code Cong. & Admin.News 5787, 5821. Thus, for example, the debtor is not entitled to the automatic stay under 11 U.S.C. § 362 (1982), nor is the debtor entitled to a discharge of its debts upon completion of the section 304 proceeding. Indeed, the section 304 debtor may ultimately receive no relief at all; it is within the discretion of the bankruptcy court, guided by the factors enumerated in section 304(c), to determine what relief, if any, is appropriate. That the section 304 debtor is denied the two main benefits accorded the debtor in a full bankruptcy proceeding—automatic stay and discharge—strongly suggests that Congress did not intend that "debtor" eligibility under the Code be a prerequisite to section 304 ancillary assistance.[13]

In light of these considerations, we conclude that the debtor in a section 304 proceeding need not qualify as a "debtor" under the Code's definition of that term. Rather, the debtor need only be properly subject, under applicable foreign law, to a proceeding commenced "for the purpose of liquidating an estate, adjusting debts by composition, extension, or discharge, or effecting a reorganization." Because that condition is met in this case, we reverse and remand with instructions that the bankruptcy court entertain Goerg's section 304 petition.[14]

REVERSED and REMANDED.

[13] This analysis suggests that a full bankruptcy proceeding involving a foreign debtor may be commenced only if the foreign debtor qualifies as a "debtor" under the Code. Cf. 11 U.S.C. § 303(b)(4) (1982).

[14] The record is not clear as to whether the bankruptcy court has passed on all issues relevant to its jurisdiction to entertain Goerg's section 304 petition. In addition to establishing debtor eligibility, the section 304 petition must establish (1) a foreign proceeding against the debtor, (2) a foreign representative entitled to file the petition, and (3) presence within the district of property involved in the foreign proceeding. See In re Stuppel, 17 B.R. 413 (S.D.Fla. 1981). In re: ESTATE OF Marilyn E. ROBERTS, Debtor.

No. 05-26653 ESD.
Aug. 15, 2005.

Marilyn E. Roberts, Baltimore, MD, pro se.

MEMORANDUM AND ORDER DISMISSING, SUA SPONTE, CASE FILED BY A DECEDENT'S ESTATE

DERBY, J.

1 On July 25, 2005, a Chapter 13 petition was filed on behalf of the Estate of Marilyn E. Roberts, by Marilyn Dorsey as the "Executor of the Estate of Marilyn E. Roberts." The petition was signed by Marilyn Dorsey in her capacity as executor of the Estate of Marilyn E. Roberts. The petition was not filed by Ms. Dorsey personally, but rather in her representative capacity on behalf of the probate estate of Marilyn E. Roberts.

The court will, sua sponte, dismiss this case. A decedent's estate, even when represented by a individual fiduciary, is not a person that may be a debtor under the Bankruptcy Code. Only a person may be a debtor. 11 U.S.C. § 109(a). A person includes individuals, partnerships and corporations. Id. at § 101(41). The definition of a person does not include a decedent's estate. See Id. at §§ 101(41), 101(9). Estate is included in the definition of entity. Id. at § 101(15). If Congress had intended to include estates in the definition of person, and thereby to allow estates to file a bankruptcy petition, estates would not have been specifically included only within the separate definition of entity. In re Walters, 113 B.R. 602, 604 (Bankr.D.S.D.1990), citing In re Estate of Whiteside by Whiteside, 64 B.R. 99, 100-01 (Bankr.E.D.Cal.1986). Other courts addressing the question of whether an insolvent decedent's estate is a person and therefore eligible for relief under the Bankruptcy Code have uniformly found that the definition of debtor excludes insolvent decedents' estates. See, e.g., In re Goerg, 844 F.2d 1562, 1566 (11th Cir.1988), cert. denied, 488 U.S. 1034, 109 S.Ct. 850, 102 L.Ed.2d 981 (1989)(dicta), and the cases cited therein. See also In re Bunch, 249 B.R. 667, 671 (Bkrtcy.D.Md.2000)(distinguishing between eligibility of individual heir to file a bankruptcy petition from prohibited filing by decedent's estate).

Congress expressly recognized that "[t]he definition [of person] does not include an estate or a trust, which are included only in the definition of 'entity'...." H.R.Rep. No. 595, 95th Cong., 1st Sess. 313 (1977), reprinted in 1978 U.S.Code Cong. & Admin.News 5963, 6270; S.Rep. No. 989, 95th Cong., 2d Sess. 25 (1978), reprinted in 1978 U.S.Code Cong. & Admin.News 5787, 5811). See In re Goerg, 844 F.2d at 1566; In re Walters, 113 B.R. at 604. The definition of person states that it "includes individual, partnership, and corporation." 11 U.S.C. § 101(41). The term "includes" is not limiting. Id. at § 102(3). Nevertheless, courts have long concluded Congress left no doubt that an estate was not included in the definition of person. In the Matter of 299 Jack-Hemp Associates, 20 B.R. 412, 413 (Bankr.S.D.N.Y.1982); In re Brown's Estate, 16 B.R. 128 (Bankr.D.D.C.1981).

There are other reasons why the probate estate of a decedent should be ineligible to initiate a request for relief under the Bankruptcy Code. While an authorized representative of a probate estate may be an individual, he or she is not a debtor seeking a fresh start. Because the represented principal here is a probate estate, there is no fresh start available. Further, this case was filed under Chapter 13. Only an individual may be discharged in Chapter 13, because only an individual may be a debtor under Chapter 13. 11 U.S.C. §§ 109(e), 1328. "Whereas the policy of the Bankruptcy Code is to provide debtors with a 'fresh start', this policy is not met by the Bankruptcy Court's administration of the estate of a deceased individual." Matter of Jarrett, 19 B.R. 413, 414 (Bankr.M.D.N.C.1982).

2 The bankruptcy court should not assume control of the administration of a probate estate. Probate administration is specialized and greatly detailed within state law. See, e.g., Md. Estates & Trusts Code Ann. (2001 Repl.Vol. and 2004 Supp.). No overriding bankruptcy policy or concern is furthered when a bankruptcy court enters this complicated arena. "The main reason cited by these [bankruptcy] courts in denying an insolvent probate estate access to bankruptcy is that Congress, through the Bankruptcy Code, elected not to extend bankruptcy to insolvent decedents' estates since probate systems developed by the individual states are a comprehensive and specialized machinery to administer such estates." In re Walters, 113 B.R. at 604. Cf., In the Matter of 299 Jack-Hemp Associates, 20 B.R. at 413; Matter of Jarrett, 19 B.R. at 414; In re Brown's Estate, 16 B.R. at 128. The bankruptcy court has no power or jurisdiction pursuant to the Bankruptcy Code to administer probate estates, and a probate estate must find recourse in the appropriate state court. In re Brown's Estate, supra.

The public purposes of probate administration and of bankruptcy administration are quite different. The laws of probate are designed to carry out the wishes of a testator expressed in a will or trust or in intestate statutes with respect to the distribution of property to survivors. Bankruptcy laws reallocate insufficient assets among present creditors. Where there are insufficient assets for creditors, the priority of distribution is different. Compare, e.g., Md. Estates & Trusts Code Ann. § 8-105 (2001 Repl.Vol.) and 11 U.S.C. §§ 507, 727.

The court does not find that if an individual debtor had filed for bankruptcy before his or her death, the bankruptcy could not be completed and the debtor discharged. In that scenario the debtor's intention is ultimately carried out, because the bankruptcy petition would have been filed by the debtor before his death. "It is possible that the estate of an individual who files for bankruptcy and subsequently dies could be administered in a Chapter 7 or 11 case, depending on the circumstances. A decedent's estate, however, may not file bankruptcy or convert to a different chapter under the Bankruptcy Code." In re Burner, 109 B.R. 216, 222 n. 3 (Bankr.W.D.Tex.1989). Federal Rule of Bankruptcy Procedure 1016 specifically provides:

> Death or incompetency of the debtor shall not abate a liquidation case under chapter 7 of the Code. In such event the estate shall be administered and the case concluded in the same manner, so far as possible, as thought the death or incompetency had not occurred. If a reorganization, family farmer's debt adjustment, or individual's debt adjustment case is pending under Chapter 11, 12, or 13, the case may be dismissed; or if further administration is possible and in the best interests of the parties, the case may proceed and be concluded in the same manner, so far as possible, as though the death or incompetency had not occurred.

3 In the instant case the decedent, when alive, did not file for bankruptcy. Consequently, the court does not have authority pursuant to Federal Rule of Bankruptcy Rule 1016 to administer the decedent's estate.

In conclusion, this probate estate is not a person or an individual. Therefore, the purported debtor is not eligible for relief. The administration of probate estates is specialized and greatly detailed within the laws of individual states, and this court will not disrupt those laws.

For the foregoing reasons, it is, by the United States Bankruptcy Court for the District of Maryland, ORDERED, that the bankruptcy case of the Estate of Marilyn E. Roberts, Case No. 05-26653 ESD is dismissed, sua sponte.

THE UNITED STATES TRUSTEE'S BRIEF IN OPPOSITION TO WELLS FARGO BANK, N.A.'S MOTION FOR LEAVE TO APPEAL

FACTUAL AND PROCEDURAL BACKGROUND

Wells Fargo attempts to appeal a discovery order in this case. The United States Trustee, an officer of the United States Department of Justice, sought discovery from Wells Fargo when he noticed that Wells Fargo appeared to be charging irregular fees for monthly "inspections" of the chapter 13 bankruptcy debtor's home. See United States Trustee's Motion for Order Authorizing Examination of Wells Fargo and Requiring Production of Documents Pursuant to Bankruptcy Rule 2004 (the "2004 Motion"). (Bankr. Dkt. 73).

The United States Trustee is an official designated by Congress to be the "watchdog" who guards against fraud and abuse of the bankruptcy system. See H.R. Rep. No. 95-595, 95th Cong., 1st Sess. 1, 88 (1977), reprinted in 1978 U.S.C.C.A.N. 5963, 6049 ("The proposed United States Trustees will . . . serve as bankruptcy watch-dogs to prevent fraud, dishonesty, and overreaching in the bankruptcy arena."); see also In re South Beach Secs., Inc., 606 F.3d 366, 371 (7th Cir. 2010) (Posner, J.) (the United States Trustee is "the congressionally ordained watchdog – he has a statutory interest in making sure that bankruptcy law isn't abused"). In light of the widespread concern that mortgage servicers have failed to pay sufficient attention to their paperwork, United States Trustees throughout the country are carefully reviewing the proofs of claims and other filings by mortgage servicers.

In this case, Wells Fargo filed a proof of claim for the mortgage on the residence of the debtor. See Claims Register for Case No. 10-60999, Claim 4-1 (the "Proof of Claim"). The Proof of Claim included charges for multiple, monthly home inspections. See Dist. Ct. Dkt. 5-3 (Letter Dated November 8, 2010, Wells Fargo's response to U.S. Trustee's letter of October 25, 2010). It was unclear from the Proof of Claim why so many home inspections were necessary and whether the claimed fees were reasonable. Accordingly, the United States Trustee sought information from Wells Fargo by way of a document production and an examination under Bankruptcy Rule 2004.

Pursuant to Rule 2004, upon motion of any party in interest, an entity may be examined under Rule 2004 regarding "any matter which may affect the administration of the debtor's estate." Fed. R. Bankr. P. 2004(a), (b). Such an examination is very similar to a deposition. However, the scope of discovery permitted under Rule 2004 is broader than that permitted under the Rules of Civil Procedure. In re Wilcher, 56 B.R. 428, 433 (Bankr. N.D. Ill. 1985). Indeed, a Rule 2004 examination is "commonly recognized as permitting discovery in the nature of a 'fishing expedition.'" In re Washington Mutual, Inc., 408 B.R. 45, 50 (Bankr. D. Del. 2009) (citation omitted).

Here, the United States Trustee sought information from Wells Fargo concerning:

- The total arrearage on the Debtor's account;
- The reasonableness of fees imposed against the Debtor's account;
- Wells Fargo's policies and procedures applicable to the Debtor's account in ordering an inspection;

- Wells Fargo's policies and procedures applicable to the Debtor's account, for referring a proof of claim; and
- The documents or other information relied on in referring the Proof of Claim.

(Bankr. Dkt. 73 at 4).

Wells Fargo opposed the discovery, (Bankr. Dkt. 78), but the bankruptcy court granted the United States Trustee's Rule 2004 motion after a hearing (Bankr. Dkt. 95). Wells Fargo now seeks leave to appeal this interlocutory discovery order. (Bankr. Dkt. 102). Since its notice of appeal has been pending, Wells Fargo has produced some documents in response to the United States Trustee's document requests.

STATUTORY FRAMEWORK

Federal district courts have jurisdiction to hear appeals from final judgments, orders, and decrees entered by bankruptcy judges, and in certain circumstances, appeals from interlocutory bankruptcy orders. 28 U.S.C. § 158(a)(1), (3). An order is final if it "ends the litigation on the merits and leaves nothing for the court to do but execute the judgment." American Specialty Cars Holdings, LLC v. The Official Comm. of Unsecured Creditors of ASC Inc. (In re ASC Inc.), 386 B.R. 187, 193-94 (E.D. Mich. 2008) (citations omitted). Interlocutory orders (i.e., orders that are not final) issued by bankruptcy judges may be appealed only where the district court grants leave to appeal, a decision wholly within the district court's discretion. See 28 U.S.C. § 158(a)(3).

A party seeking leave to appeal an interlocutory bankruptcy order must file a motion for leave under Fed. R. Bankr. P. 8003. The motion is filed in the bankruptcy court, but decided by the district court. Fed. R. Bankr. P. 8003(b). This Court analyzes a motion for leave under Bankruptcy Rule

8003(b) using the standards applicable to requests for interlocutory appeals under 28 U.S.C. § 1292(b), which provides in pertinent part:

> When a district judge, in making in a civil action an order not otherwise appealable under this section, shall be of the opinion that such order involves a controlling question of law as to which there is substantial ground for difference of opinion and that an immediate appeal from the order may materially advance the ultimate termination of the litigation, he shall so state in writing in such order.

28 U.S.C. § 1292(b); In re ASC Inc., 386 B.R. at 195 (applying § 1292(b) standards in analyzing whether to allow an interlocutory bankruptcy appeal).

ARGUMENT

Despite Wells Fargo's arguments to the contrary, the bankruptcy court's order granting a Rule 2004 exam is a garden-variety, non-final discovery order that is not immediately appealable under 28 U.S.C. § 158(a)(1). Wells Fargo's appeal also does not fit within the collateral-order doctrine. Nor should discretionary leave to appeal be granted under 28 U.S.C. § 158(a)(3) because the interlocutory discovery order does not involve a controlling question of law, and immediate appeal will not materially advance the termination of the litigation. In short, Wells Fargo may not appeal immediately under any theory of appellate jurisdiction.

A. The bankruptcy court's order granting discovery under Bankruptcy Rule 2004 is not final.

As discussed above, an order granting or denying discovery under Bankruptcy Rule 2004 is a discovery order. In the Sixth Circuit, discovery orders are interlocutory and not immediately appealable. United States ex rel. Pogue v. Diabetes Treatment Centers of America, Inc., 444 F.3d 462, 471 (6th Cir. 2006). To obtain appellate review, a party "seeking to appeal a discovery order must first disobey the order and suffer a contempt citation," then appeal from the contempt order.

Id. (citing Alexander v. United States, 201 U.S. 117 (1906)). Wells Fargo has not appealed from a contempt order.

Instead, Wells Fargo claims that a more "pragmatic approach to finality" should allow for immediate appeal of discovery orders in bankruptcy cases. Dkt. 102 at 6-7. That approach should not allow for immediate appeal of a routine discovery order, however. Indeed, this Court has observed that a bankruptcy order that "provides for discovery . . . suggest[s] that no final judgment or decree has been entered." In re Smelser, 327 B.R. 815, 817 (E.D. Mich. 2005) (dismissing interlocutory appeal).

Moreover, courts around the country that have considered this issue have held that orders granting or denying Rule 2004 examinations in bankruptcy cases are, like discovery orders in civil cases, interlocutory and not immediately appealable. See In re Vance, 165 F.3d 34 (Table), 1998 WL 783728, *1 (7th Cir. Nov. 2, 1998) (Exhibit A) (citing In re Towers Fin. Corp., 164 B.R. 719, 720 (S.D.N.Y. 1994)); Aetna Cas. & Sur. Co. v. Glinka, 154 B.R. 862, 868 (D. Vt. 1993); In re Blinder Robinson Co., 127 B.R. 267, 272 (D. Colo. 1991)); see also Kaiser Group Int'l, Inc. v. Mittal Steel Ostrava, a.s. (In re Kaiser Group Int'l, Inc.), 400 B.R. 140, 145 (D. Del. 2009) (holding order denying a Rule 2004 exam was not final and not appealable as of right or under the criteria for allowing interlocutory appeals); In re Midwest Video Games, Inc., No. 98 C 3836, 1998 WL 395152, at *1 (N.D. Ill. July 9, 1998) (Exhibit B) (same with respect to an order granting a Rule 2004 exam); Gache v. Balaber-Strauss, 198 B.R. 662, 664-65 (S.D.N.Y. 1996) (same).

In particular, in other appeals that are like this one, courts have rejected attempts by mortgage lenders to obtain interlocutory review of orders granting the United States Trustee discovery under Rule 2004. See Countrywide Home Loans, Inc. v. Office of the United States Trustee, No. 08-617, 2008 WL 2388285, *4-*6 (W.D. Pa. June 11, 2008) (Exhibit C) (dismissing appeal from Rule 2004 exam order as non-final, rejecting mortgage lender's arguments for appeal under collateral-order doctrine and 28 U.S.C. §§ 158(a)(1) & (3), and observing, "I find no reason to depart from the general rule disallowing appeals as of right of discovery orders, even under the more liberal bankruptcy perspective on finality."); In re Del Castillo, Case No. 08-20020-mc-Altonaga (S.D. Fla. Feb. 8, 2008) (finding that an order overruling mortgage lender's objections to a similar Rule 2004 Notice of Examination and Subpoena Duces Tecum served by the Office of the United States Trustee was neither final nor appealable) (Exhibit D).

Finally, Wells Fargo's suggestion that it "will not likely have any meaningful opportunity for appellate review" unless this Court grants leave to appeal is not true. (Dkt. 102 at 8, 12-13). Even if Wells Fargo will have provided discovery before its appeal can be heard — and indeed, it has produced some documents — an appellate court could provide relief (assuming Wells Fargo could establish appellate jurisdiction over this interlocutory matter). In cases where a discovery order is reversed after the discovery has already been provided, courts have ordered the return of documents and/or enjoined any future use of the discovery, as the Supreme Court has recognized. See, e.g., Church of Scientology of California v. United States, 506 U.S. 9, 15 & n.9 (1992) (holding, in an appeal from a discovery order where discovery already had been produced, "this case is not moot because if the summons were improperly issued or enforced a court could order that the [produced] copies of the tapes be either returned or destroyed").

For these reasons, this Court should conclude that it does not have jurisdiction over Wells Fargo's appeal under 28 U.S.C. § 158(a)(1) because the order from which Wells Fargo attempts to appeal is not final.

B. The discovery order is not appealable under the collateral-order doctrine.

Nor should this Court find jurisdiction under the collateral-order doctrine. Generally, the collateral-order doctrine allows for interlocutory appellate review of a narrow class of non-final orders that "finally determine claims of right separable from, and collateral to, rights asserted in the action, too important to be denied review and too independent of the cause itself to require the appellate consideration be deferred until the whole case is adjudicated." Cohen v. Beneficial Indus. Loan Corp., 337 U.S. 541, 546 (1949). The Sixth Circuit has stated unequivocally that "[d]iscovery orders are not reviewable on an interlocutory basis . . . under the collateral order doctrine." In re Professionals Direct Ins. Co., 578 F.3d 432, 438 (6th Cir. 2009) (citing John B. v. Goetz, 531 F.3d 448, 458 (6th Cir. 2008)); Diabetes Treatment Centers of America, Inc., 444 F.3d at 472 ("This court has repeatedly held, however, that discovery orders are generally not appealable under the collateral order doctrine.") (collecting cases). This "is so because a party 'can obtain effective review of the district court order by failing to comply with the order and perfecting an appeal should the district court impose sanctions' or a contempt citation." John B., 531 F.3d at 458 (quoting Dow Chem. Co. v. Taylor, 519 F.2d 352, 355 (6th Cir.1975)).

Courts around the country have refused to find orders granting or denying Rule 2004 exams appealable under the collateral-order doctrine. See, e.g., Countrywide Home Loans, Inc., 2008 WL 2388285, *4-*6 (Exhibit C) (rejecting mortgage lender's arguments for appeal under collateral-order doctrine). And while Wells Fargo again expresses concern about mootness if it has to provide documents before it can have its appeal heard, Wells Fargo does not contend that anything in the documents is privileged or a trade secret that would elevate this matter above the level of a routine discovery dispute.[1] Cf. Diabetes Treatment Centers of America, Inc., 444 F.3d at 473 (noting that while some circuits apply the collateral-order doctrine to interlocutory discovery appeals involving privilege, the Sixth Circuit has not allowed such interlocutory appeals and "has traditionally viewed mandamus as the sole method by which we might review a discovery order involving a claim of privilege."). Moreover, Wells Fargo has now produced documents. Accordingly, this Court should not find jurisdiction over Wells Fargo's interlocutory appeal under the collateral-order doctrine.

C. The criteria for a discretionary interlocutory appeal are not met.

As noted above, this Court uses the criteria found in 28 U.S.C. § 1292(b) to determine whether to grant a discretionary interlocutory bankruptcy appeal under 28 U.S.C. § 158(a)(3). See In re ASC Inc., 386 B.R. at 195 (applying § 1292(b) standards in analyzing whether to allow an interlocutory bankruptcy appeal). Those criteria are: [1] the order involves a controlling question of law, [2] as to which there is substantial ground for difference of opinion, and that [3] an immediate appeal from the order may materially advance the ultimate termination of the litigation. 28 U.S.C. § 1292(b). The criteria are not met here.

1. There is no "controlling issue of law" in this case; Wells Fargo instead complains that the factual record did not provide sufficient cause to order the discovery.

In analyzing the first prong of the test for interlocutory appeals, this Court must determine whether there is a "controlling question of law." A controlling question of law is "a 'pure' question of law rather than merely an issue that might be free from a factual contest." Ahrenholz v. Board of Trustees of Univ. of Illinois, 219 F.3d 674, 677 (7th Cir. 2000). In other words, it "something the court of appeals could decide quickly and cleanly without having to study the record . . . [not an issue that] requires hunting through the record . . . ." Id. A "controlling question of law" is an "an abstract issue of law, . . . suitable for determination by an appellate court without a trial record." Id.; In re Brentwood Golf Club, L.L.C., 329 B.R. 239, 243 (E.D. Mich. 2005) (denying discretionary interlocutory review under 28 U.S.C. § 158(a)(3) and citing Ahrenholz, 219 F.3d at 676-77).

Discovery rulings are discretionary, and issues that fall within the discretion of the court are not appropriate for interlocutory review. Mortgage Electronic Registration Systems, Inc. v. Jones, No. 09-10321, 2009 WL 646623, *2 (E.D. Mich. March 11, 2009) (Exhibit E) (citing W. Tenn. Chapter of Assoc. Builders & Contractors, Inc. v. City of Memphis, 293 F.3d 345, 350 (6th Cir. 2002)); see generally Proctor v. USDE, 196 Fed. Appx. 345, 347 (6th Cir. 2006) ("court enjoys broad discretion in handling discovery disputes").

Although Wells Fargo argues that this case presents a controlling issue of law, in reality, Wells Fargo is disputing the bankruptcy court's application of discretion to a factual dispute. Nothing in the Rule 2004 Order purports — as Wells Fargo claims — to order discovery without the requisite showing of "good cause." Instead, Wells Fargo simply believes that there was an insufficient showing of good cause, a factual dispute that requires examination of the record. It is beyond exaggeration to say that the bankruptcy court "order[ed] a Rule 2004 examination without requiring that the requesting party demonstrate good cause for the examination." Dkt. 102 at 14. It is more accurate to say that this appeal presents the question "whether the bankruptcy court abused its discretion" by ordering discovery. Id. But for that very reason, it does not present a controlling question of law. See 8 FED. PRAC. & PROC. CIV. § 2006 (3d ed.) ("Ordinarily it is difficult to believe that a discovery order will present a controlling question of law or that an immediate appeal will materially advance the termination of the litigation.”).

Accordingly, because there is no “controlling question of law,” there can be no substantial ground for difference of opinion as to the legal issues raised by Wells Fargo’s appeal. Cf. Ahrenholz, 219 F.3d at 676 (stopping analysis after finding no “controlling question of law” and stating “[u]nless all these criteria [for interlocutory appeal under 28 U.S.C. § 1292(b)] are satisfied, the district court may not and should not certify its order . . . for an immediate appeal”).

2. Immediate appeal will not advance the ultimate termination of the litigation.

Wells Fargo’s final argument also fails. It contends that immediate appeal will advance the ultimate termination of the litigation because this discovery dispute is “the only dispute pending between the UST and Wells Fargo.” Dkt. 102 at 18. But Wells Fargo overlooks that the proceedings below may continue because of the nature of Rule 2004. Although Rule 2004 is a discovery tool with similarities to discovery under Fed. R. Civ. P. 26, it is a discovery tool that allows for pre-litigation discovery. A Rule 2004 examination is undertaken before the filing of an adversary proceeding or a motion, and may even be conducted in the absence of a pending adversary proceeding or contested matter, although it obviously requires the pendency of a bankruptcy case. See generally In re Symington, 209 B.R. 678, 684 (Bankr. D. Md. 1997) (explaining Rule 2004 exams). Thus, it is entirely possible that an adversary complaint or contested matter may arise between the United States Trustee and Wells Fargo. An immediate appeal would not terminate the litigation — it would protract it.

CONCLUSION

For all of these reasons, this Court should deny Wells Fargo’s motion for leave to appeal. The majority of courts to consider motions like Wells Fargo’s deny interlocutory appeal. So, too, should this Court. See In re Vance, 1998 WL 783728, *1 (Exhibit A); In re Towers Fin. Corp., 164 B.R. at 720; *Aetna Cas. & Sur. ORDER

1 Clarence Vance voluntarily filed for bankruptcy pursuant to Chapter 7 of the Bankruptcy Code. The bankruptcy court entered postdischarge orders disallowing Vance's claimed exemption of his interest in a personal trust and granting the trustee's motion that Vance be required to submit to a Rule 2004 examination. The district court affirmed both orders, finding that the bankruptcy court retained postdischarge authority to issue the orders and that the trustee timely had objected to Vance's claimed exemption. We affirm.

In his petition for relief pursuant to § 301 of the Bankruptcy Code, Vance listed as exempt personal property his interest in the “Clarence Vance Trust.” Thomas Lester (the “trustee”) filed an objection to Vance's personal trust exemption on June 18, 1997. The creditors met as required by Rule 2003 of the Bankruptcy Rules on June 12, 1997. As there were no objections to Vance's discharge, the bankruptcy court entered a discharge order dated July 10, 1997, releasing Vance from all dischargeable debts and enjoining creditors from “instituting or continuing any action to collect the debtor's discharged debts and personal liabilities.” At the time of the discharge, the trustee's objection to Vance's claimed exemption was still pending. Subsequently, the court entered an August 6, 1997, order disallowing Vance's claimed exemption for his personal trust. In a second post-discharge order dated September 2, 1997, the bankruptcy court granted the trustee's motion for an examination of Vance pursuant to Rule 2004 of the Bankruptcy Rules. The trustee sought in that motion to obtain tax returns, the trust agreement and other documents relating to Vance's personal trust.

Vance appeals the district court's determination, arguing first that the discharge order enjoined the trustee from reaching the purportedly exempt property. He further argues that the trustee waived his objection to Vance's claimed exemption by failing to object to discharge. The trustee counters that discharge does not abrogate a trustee's statutory responsibility to administer the bankruptcy estate, and that he properly objected to Vance's claimed exemption.

We review the bankruptcy court's findings of fact for clear error. In re Paeplow, 972 F.2d 730, 733 (7th Cir.1992). The bankruptcy court's conclusions of law are reviewed de novo. Id. This appeal exclusively involves questions of law.

Although neither the district court nor the parties address the issue, we first consider whether we have jurisdiction to review the bankruptcy court's order granting a Rule 2004 examination. A majority of courts that have considered the issue have held that orders granting or denying Rule 2004 examinations are, like discovery orders, interlocutory. See In re Towers Fin. Corp., 164 B.R. 719, 720 (S.D.N.Y.1994); Aetna Cas. & Sur. Co., 154 B.R. 862, 868 (D.Vt.1993); In re Blinder Robinson Co., 127 B.R. 267, 272 (D.Colo.1991). This court does not have jurisdiction to consider appeals from interlocutory orders in bankruptcy proceedings, see 28 U.S.C. § 158(d); indeed, we have jurisdiction only in cases where both the bankruptcy court and the district court have entered final orders. In re Devlieg, Inc., 56 F.3d 32, 33 (7th Cir.1995); In re Behrens, 900 F.2d 97, 99 (7th Cir.1990). Because the order granting the trustee's motion for a Rule 2004 examination is not a final order, we do not have jurisdiction to consider Vance's challenge to that order. Therefore, the part of Vance's appeal that asks us to review the bankruptcy court's order granting a Rule 2004 examination must be dismissed for lack of jurisdiction. However, because the order disallowing Vance's claimed exemption is final, we address the merits of Vance's claims as to that order only.

2 The trustee of a bankruptcy estate is charged with collecting and liquidating the property of the estate to satisfy creditors' claims. 11 U.S.C. § 704(1). In addition, the trustee is responsible for investigating the financial affairs of the debtor, and opposing discharge "if advisable." Id. § 704(4), (6). Nothing in § 704, or the discharge provision, see id. § 727, or any other relevant section of the Bankruptcy Code suggests that these duties are terminated or altered by discharge of the debtor.

The district court held that the trustee timely objected to Vance's claimed exemption. Objections to claimed exemptions must be filed within 30 days after the meeting of creditors held pursuant to Rule 2003. Bankr.R. 4003. Because the meeting of creditors was held June 12, 1997, the trustee met the prescribed deadline by filing his objection six days later, on June 18. Because the trustee filed his objection to the claimed exemption before the discharge order was entered, the discharge order could not have enjoined the trustee from raising that objection. In any event, the discharge order would not bar the trustee's actions because, by its express terms, the discharge order only prohibits "creditors" from initiating or continuing actions to "collect debts as personal liabilities of the debtor." Nonexempt property belongs to the estate, not the debtor, and it is the trustee's statutory duty to ensure that exempt property remains in the bankruptcy estate.

Vance's waiver argument is likewise without merit. As the district court recognized, discharge and exemption are governed by two distinct rules that prescribe correspondingly different periods for objections. Compare Bankr.R. 4003(b) (objection to exemption must be filed within 30 days after the meeting of the creditors) with Bankr.R. 4004(a) (complaint objecting to discharge must be filed within 60 days of the scheduled meeting of the creditors). Exemption and discharge also have different consequences. A Chapter 7 discharge releases the debtor from "all liabilities arising prior to the filing of the bankruptcy petition." In re Birkenstock, 87 F.3d 947, 950 (7th Cir.1996). By contrast, exemptions immunize property which would otherwise belong to the estate from "seizure or attachment for satisfaction of debts incurred prior to the bankruptcy proceeding." In re Scarpino, 113 F.3d 338, 340 (2d Cir.1997). Accordingly, Vance's contention that the trustee was required to object to discharge to preserve his right to object to the claimed exemptions must fail.

Vance's second contention on appeal is that the bankruptcy court did not have authority to enter the orders after he was discharged from bankruptcy. This argument merits little discussion because discharge of the debtor does not terminate a bankruptcy court's jurisdiction. See, e.g., 11 U.S.C. § 727(d) (bankruptcy court may revoke discharge if the debtor has committed a fraud or failed to report the acquisition of property after the petition was filed). Therefore, the bankruptcy court had authority to enter both orders after Vance's discharge.

3 For the foregoing reasons, Vance's appeal from the bankruptcy court order granting a Rule 2004 examination is DISMISSED, and the order disallowing Vance's claimed exemption is AFFIRMED.

MEMORANDUM AND ORDER

MANNING, District Court J.

1 Appellants Bernice Ackerman, Melvin Ackerman, John O'Brien, and Lisa O'Brien seek to stay a bankruptcy court order setting dates for examinations pursuant to Bankruptcy Rule 2004 pending resolution of the merits of their appeal. For the following reasons, this appeal is dismissed for lack of jurisdiction, the appellants' stay motion is denied as moot, and counsel for the appellants and the Creditors' Committee are directed to show cause why they should not be sanctioned for failure to comply with the briefing schedule set by the court.

Background

The appellants seek to stay discovery pursuant to Bankruptcy Rule 2004 that is scheduled to commence later this week. According to the appellants, the Official Committee of Unsecured Creditors filed an adversary complaint against them which alleges that, through their transactions and dealings with Midwest Video Games, they “engaged in ‘fraudulent’ transfers, obtained ‘preferences' and treated the Debtor as their ‘alter ego.” ’ (Motion at 1). The appellants claim that the bankruptcy court erred in allowing discovery under Bankruptcy Rule 2004 in light of the pending adversary proceeding against them. Specifically, they argue that, because an adversary proceeding against them is pending, discovery must occur under Bankruptcy Rule 7026, et seq., rather than Bankruptcy Rule 2004.

Jurisdiction

The court's consideration of the appellants' stay motion begins and ends with its consideration of its jurisdiction to consider this appeal in the first instance. Bankruptcy appeals as of right are limited to “final judgments, orders, and decrees ... of bankruptcy judges.” 28 U.S.C. § 158(a). Here, the appealed-from order relates to discovery. The appellants nevertheless contend that this order is final, citing In re Blinder, Robinson & Co., Inc., 127 B.R. 267 (D.Colo.1991). In Blinder, the court held that an order compelling discovery under Rule 2004 was interlocutory, but stated that:

> [t]his is not to say that all appeals from Rule 2004 orders are non-final. This question should be resolved on a case-by-case basis. Where the dispute has been narrowed and there is no indication that further action by the bankruptcy court will be forthcoming, an order concerning Rule 2004 examinations should properly be considered final.

Id. at 272-73.

EXHIBIT B

Notably, the Blinder court explained why the discovery order appealed in that case was interlocutory. It did not, however, explain why a discovery order would become appealable simply because the bankruptcy judge definitively resolved that motion. The court declines to accept the appellants' invitation to find that the bankruptcy judge's discovery order is final because the bankruptcy judge has indicated that he does not intend to revisit his ruling, as the order is clearly interlocutory, even under the more relaxed standards of finality applicable to bankruptcy cases. See, e.g., In re Jartran, Inc., 886 F.2d 859, 861-64 (7th Cir.1989) (discussing parameters of finality in bankruptcy cases); Sante Fe Industries, Inc. v. Yorke, No. 90 C 5359, 1991 WL 18483 *1 (N.D.Ill. Feb.11, 1991), citing Union Carbide Corp. v. U.S. Cutting Service, Inc., 782 F.2d 710, 712 (7th Cir.1986) ("The general and very salutary rule is that discovery orders are not appealable until the end of the case"); In re S.N.A. Nut Co., No. 96 C 181, 1996 WL 411290 *4 (N.D.Ill. Jul.19, 1991) (collecting cases regarding the non-appealability of discovery orders in bankruptcy cases); In re Towers Financial Corp., 164 B.R. 719, (S.D.N.Y.1994) (criticizes Blinder rule and collects cases regarding the non-appealability of discovery orders in bankruptcy cases).

2 The court also notes that the holding of Blinder requires a case-by-case determination as to the finality of a Rule 2004 order. It thus is susceptible to a variety of interpretations and, therefore, is at odds with the Seventh Circuit's recent admonition that jurisdictional rules in bankruptcy cases should be "simple and precise so that judges and lawyers are spared having to litigate over not the merits of a legal dispute but where and when those merits shall be litigated." In re Lopez, 116 F.3d 1191, 1194 (7th Cir.), cert. denied, 522 U.S. 1014, 118 S.Ct. 599, 139 L.Ed.2d 488 (1997). In addition, the appellants have failed to present a convincing reason why allowing an appeal as of right from a discovery order would not completely eviscerate the finality requirement, even when viewing finality from the more liberal bankruptcy perspective. For these reasons, the court finds that the bankruptcy court's Rule 2004 order is not final.

Thus, jurisdiction over this appeal is proper only if the court grants leave for the appeal to proceed. In re Jartran, Inc., 886 F.2d at 866; In re Lifschultz Fast Freight Corp., 127 B.R. 418 (N.D.Ill.1991). Consideration of this question is governed by the familiar § 1292(b) factors, which authorize an appeal if: (1) the interlocutory order involves a controlling question of law; (2) as to which there is a substantial ground for difference of opinion; (3) and an immediate appeal will materially advance the ultimate termination of the litigation. 28 U.S.C. § 1292(b); In re Lifschultz Fast Freight Corp., 127 B.R. at 418; Sante Fe Industries, Inc., 1991 WL 18483 at *1.

The court finds that resolution of the parties' dispute concerning the scope of discovery fails to present a controlling question of law, as resolution of this "discovery matter is not likely to be dispositive of any of the material issues in this case." Sante Fe Industries, Inc., 1991 WL 18483 at *1; In re S.N.A. Nut Co., 1996 WL 411290 at *4 (bankruptcy court order regarding discovery was not controlling); In re Lifschultz Fast Freight Corp., 127 B.R. at 419 (same). In addition, the appellants' disagreement with orders entered by the bankruptcy court with respect to discovery directed at them does not demonstrate that there is a substantial ground for difference of opinion. See Sante Fe Industries, Inc., 1991 WL 18483 at *1. Finally, resolution of this discovery matter will multiply, as opposed to streamline, the proceedings.

Accordingly, the court exercises its discretion and declines to grant leave to file an interlocutory appeal. This appeal is, therefore, dismissed for lack of jurisdiction, and the appellants' stay motion is denied as moot. The court notes that, by declining jurisdiction, the court does not express an opinion as to the propriety of the bankruptcy court's order. See Sante Fe Industries, Inc., 1991 WL 18483 at *2.

EXHIBIT B

Counsel's Failure to Comply With the Briefing Schedule Set by the Court

3 On July 1, 1998, when the appellants presented their stay motion, the court ordered the Creditors' Committee to file their response by July 6, 1998 at 12:00 p.m. and ordered the appellants to file their reply by July 7, 1998 at 12:00 p.m. The court, however, received its courtesy copy of the response on the morning of July 7, 1998, and received its copy of the reply at approximately 2:30 p.m. on July 7, 1998. Neither side explained the reason for the delay or sought leave to file their pleading instanter. Adherence to filing deadlines set by the court is not discretionary. Accordingly, counsel for the appellants and the Creditors' Committee are directed to show cause why they should not be sanctioned for failure to comply with the briefing schedule set by the court.

Conclusion

This appeal is dismissed for lack of jurisdiction, and the appellants' stay motion [2-1 and 2-2] is denied as moot. Counsel for the appellants and the Creditors' Committee are each directed to file a brief memorandum by no later than July 15, 1998, addressing why they should not be sanctioned for failure to comply with the briefing schedule set by the court.

Appellant,

v.

OFFICE OF THE UNITED STATES TRUSTEE,
Appellee.

Civil Action No. 08-617.

June 11, 2008.

SYNOPSIS

AMBROSE, Chief Judge.

1 Appellant Countrywide Home Loans, Inc. ("Appellant" or "Countrywide") appeals an April 1, 2008 Order of the United States Bankruptcy Court for the Western District of Pennsylvania denying Countrywide's Motion to Quash and overruling in part Countrywide's Objections to a Notice of Examination Under Fed. R. Bankr.P.2004 and Subpoena (Duces Tecum) (the "2004 Notice") served by Appellee, the Executive Office of the United States Trustee ("Appellee" or "US Trustee"). (Docket No. 1). In the alternative, Countrywide seeks leave to appeal the Order pursuant to Bankruptcy Rules 8001 and 8003. Id. The U.S. Trustee opposes Countrywide's Motion for Leave to Appeal. (Docket No. 1, Ex. 7). Also pending is Countrywide's Emergency Motion for Stay Pending Appeal Pursuant to Fed. R. Bankr.8005 (Docket No. 2), and Countrywide's Emergency Motion for Temporary Stay Pending Determination of Its Motion for Stay Pending Appeal (Docket No. 12). After careful consideration of the submissions of the parties, and for the reasons discussed below, Countrywide's Motion for Leave to Appeal (Docket No. 1) is denied and Countrywide's Motions for Stay Pending Appeal and for Temporary Stay Pending Determination of Its Motion for Stay Pending Appeal (Docket Nos. 2 and 12) are denied as moot.

OPINION AND ORDER OF COURT

I. BACKGROUND

The U.S. Trustee is an official of the United States Department of Justice charged with responsibility to "supervise the administration of cases and trustees in cases under chapter 7, 11, 12, 13 or 15 of title 11 ....“ 28 U.S.C. § 586(a)(3). Section 307 of the Bankruptcy Code provides that the U.S. Trustee "may raise and may appear and be heard on any issue in any case or proceeding under this title but may not file a plan pursuant to section 1121(c) of this title." 11 U.S.C. § 307. On October 18, 2007, the U.S. Trustee for this region filed notice of her intent to examine Countrywide under Federal Rule of Bankruptcy Procedure 2004 ("Rule 2004") and Subpoenas (Duces Tecum) in ten bankruptcy cases described by the bankruptcy court as "context cases." [FN1] On November 5, 2007, the Bankruptcy Court; entered a Consolidation Order for Examination Notices consolidating these ten Notices of Examination and Subpoenas into a single miscellaneous proceeding (Bankruptcy Docket Misc. No. 07-204 TPA) for the purpose of efficiently resolving issues regarding the Notices and Subpoenas and the U.S. Trustee's investigation of Countrywide. [FN2]

FN1. Fed. R. Bankr.P.2004 is a pre-litigation discovery mechanism unique to bankruptcy. Rule 2004 provides in pertinent part:

> (a) Examination on Motion
>
> On a motion of any party in interest, the court may order the examination of any entity.
>
> (c) Scope of Examination
>
> The examination of any entity under this rule or of the debtor under § 303 of the Code may relate only to the acts, conduct, or property or to the liabilities and financial condition of the debtor, or to any matter which may affect the administration of the debtor's estate, or to the debtor's right to a discharge. In ... an individual's debt adjustment case under chapter 13, ... the examination may also relate to the operation of any business and the desirability of its continuance, the source of any money or property acquired or to be acquired by the debtor for purposes of consummating a plan and the consideration given or offered therefor, and any other matter relevant to the case or to the formulation of a plan.
>
> The attendance of an entity for examination and for the production of documents, whether the examination is to be conducted within or without the district in which the case is pending, may be compelled as provided in Rule 9016 for the attendance of a witness at a hearing or trial. As an officer of the court, an attorney may issue and sign a subpoena on behalf of the court for the district in which the examination is to be held if the attorney is admitted to practice in that court or in the court in which the case is pending.

FN2. Following the commencement of the miscellaneous proceeding, the relevant context cases are limited to seven: In re Hill, Case No. 01-22574-JAD; In re Benvenuto, Case No. 02-20946-JKF; In re Stemple, Case No. 03-11792-WWB; In re Karleski, Cas No. 04-31355-JKF; In re Bock, Case No. 04-32812-BM; In re Olbeter, Case No. 04-33361-JKF; and In re Topper, Case No. 05-20772-TPA.

Pursuant to the Consolidation Order, the U.S. Trustee filed on November 7, 2007 a single Notice of Examination Under Rule 2004 and Service of Subpoena (Duces Tecum) in the miscellaneous proceeding. On November 9, 2007, Countrywide filed its objection to the Rule 2004 Notice and its motion to quash the related Subpoena. After the parties briefed any issues pertinent to the Rule 2004 examinations, the bankruptcy court conducted a hearing on February 28, 2008 to consider Countrywide's objections to the examinations. On April 1, 2008, the bankruptcy court entered the Memorandum Opinion and Order that are the subject of this appeal, partially denying Countrywide's objections and motion to quash. The April 1, 2008 Order authorized, in part, the U.S. Trustee's Rule 2004 examinations and related document production.

2 In the April 1, 2008 Memorandum Opinion, the bankruptcy court concluded, over Countrywide's objection, that the U.S. Trustee had the authority to seek the production of documents and the examination of witnesses pursuant to Rule 2004. The court, however, limited the scope of the examinations and required that the U.S. Trustee conduct the examinations within the context of one specific bankruptcy case, In re Hill, Case No. 01-22574-JAD. Specifically the Court stated:

> [F]or the sake of administrative convenience and to avoid any potential res judicata issues, the Court will stay the Notice of Examination and Subpoenas in all context cases except In re Hill, Case No. 01-22574-JAD. In that case, the Court will direct Countrywide to produce documents in Categories 5-12 as to each of the debtors in the context cases and will direct Countrywide to make a witness or witnesses available to be examined on the topics identified by the [US Trustee].

(April 1,2008 Mem. Op. at 50).[FN3]

On or about April 11, 2008, Countrywide filed the instant Motion for Leave to Appeal pursuant to Federal Rules of Bankruptcy 8001 and 8003, subject to its Notice of Appeal filed contemporaneously therewith, seeking leave to appeal from the bankruptcy court's April 1, 2008 Order. Specifically, Countrywide urges me to consider the following questions on appeal:

a. Whether the Bankruptcy Court has subject matter jurisdiction to authorize an examination pursuant to Rule 2004 of the Federal Rules of Bankruptcy Procedure when there is no connection between the proposed examination and any effect upon a debtor's estate;

b. Whether the Bankruptcy Court erred in holding that the U.S. Trustee is a “party in interest” for the purposes of Rule 2004 of the Federal Rules of Bankruptcy Procedure;

c. Whether the Bankruptcy Court erred in holding that the U.S. Trustee has the power to take an examination pursuant to Rule 2004 of the Federal Rules of Bankruptcy Procedure in the absence of a contested matter; and

d. Whether the Bankruptcy Court erred in finding that 11 U.S.C. § 307 does not require that there be a contested matter for the U.S. Trustee to appear and be heard.

See Mot. for Leave at 5. The U.S. Trustee opposes Countrywide's Motion for Leave on the grounds that the appeal is interlocutory and does not merit consideration at this time.

On April 14, 2008, Countrywide filed a Motion to Stay Pending Appeal in the bankruptcy court seeking to stay the court's April 1, 2008 Order pending the outcome of this appeal. On May 2, 2008, the bankruptcy court denied the Motion to Stay. (Docket No. 11). On May 9,

FN3. The In re Hill case was the only case in which another matter (a Motion to Enforce Discharge against Countrywide) was then pending. Although the bankruptcy court stayed each of the context cases except In re Hill, it ruled that Countrywide's actions in all of the context cases nevertheless could be the subject of discovery in the In re Hill case pursuant to Federal Rules of Evidence 401, 404, and 406.

2008, Countrywide filed the instant Emergency Motion for Stay Pending Appeal Pursuant to Fed. R. Bankr.P. 8005 (Docket No. 2), seeking a similar stay. On May 13, 2008, the U.S. Trustee filed its response in opposition to the Emergency Motion to Stay (Docket No. 5), to which Countrywide replied, with leave of court (Docket No. 10). On June 9, 2008, Countrywide filed an Emergency Motion for Temporary Stay Pending Determination of Its Motion for Stay Pending Appeal, after the U.S. Trustee demanded that Countrywide comply with the Bankruptcy Court's April 1, 2008 Order. The issues in all three motions are now ripe for my review.

II. LEGAL ANALYSIS

3 Federal district courts have appellate jurisdiction over the final judgments, orders, and decrees of bankruptcy courts. 28 U.S.C. § 158(a)(1). District courts also have discretionary jurisdiction to hear appeals of interlocutory orders. Id. § 158(a)(3). Countrywide's position is that the bankruptcy court's April 1, 2008 Order overruling Countrywide's objections to the Rule 2004 Notice and its motion to quash the related Subpoena is a final order subject to immediate appellate review. Alternatively, Countrywide seeks leave to appeal the Order pursuant to 28 U.S.C. § 158(a)(3), governing interlocutory orders. The U.S. Trustee argues that the April 1, 2008 Order is a non-final, interlocutory discovery order not subject to immediate appellate review.

A. Final Order

Countrywide first argues that leave to appeal is not necessary because the bankruptcy court's April 1, 2008 Order is final and, therefore, appealable as of right under 28 U.S.C. § 158(a)(1). I disagree.

28 U.S.C. § 158(a)(1) provides that this court has jurisdiction to hear appeals "from final judgments, orders, and decrees" of the bankruptcy court. The concept of "finality" is viewed flexibly in the bankruptcy context. See, e.g., In re Truong, 513 F.3d 91, 93-94 (3d Cir.2008); In re Edison Bros. Stores, Inc., No. Civ. A. 96-177-SLR, 1996 WL 363806, at *2 (D. Del. June 27, 1996); In re Columbia Gas Sys., 146 BR. 106, 110 (D.Del.1992), aff'd 50 F.3d 233 (3d Cir.1995). As one court within this Circuit has explained,

> It is well settled in the Third Circuit ... that 'considerations unique to bankruptcy appeals have led us consistently in those cases to construe finality in a more pragmatic, functional sense than with the typical appeal," which generally requires an order to 'dispose of all issues as to all parties to the case' before such an order can be considered final.

Baron & Budd, P.C. v. Unsecured Asbestos Claimants Comm., 321 B.R. 147, 155 (D.N.J.2005) (citing In re Prof'l Ins. Mgmt., 285 F.3d 268, 279 (3d Cir.2002)).

Here, however, the appealed-from order relates to discovery. Even under the more relaxed standards of finality applicable to bankruptcy cases, discovery orders generally are held to be interlocutory and non-appealable. See In re Jeannette Corp., 832 F.2d 43, 46 (3d Cir.1987) ("In civil litigation, discovery orders are, with rare exception, non-appealable.... A similar approach applies in bankruptcy cases.") (citing In re Int'l Horizons, Inc., 689 F.2d 996, 1000-01 (11th Cir.1982)); see also, e.g., In re Midwest Video Games, Inc., No. 98 C 3836, 1998 WL 395152, at * *1-2 (N.D.III. July 9, 1998) (citing cases). Generally, a party challenging a discovery order has two options: to comply with the order and challenge it at the conclusion of the case; or to refuse to comply with the order and contest its validity if subsequently found in contempt for such refusal. See Int'l Horizons, Inc., 689 F.2d at 1000-01; In re Jeannette Corp., 832 F.2d at 46; Aetna Cas. & Sur. Co. v. Glinka, 154 B.R. 862, 867-68 (D.Vt.1993).

4 After careful review of the submissions of both parties, I find no reason to depart from the general rule disallowing appeals as of right of discovery orders, even under the more liberal bankruptcy perspective on finality. Countrywide may comply with the April 1, 2008 Order and challenge it at the conclusion of the underlying case, or Countywide may refuse to comply and appeal the Order if and when the bankruptcy court issues a contempt order in the face of such refusal. For all of these reasons, I find that the April 1, 2008 Order was not a final order for purposes of 28 U.S.C. § 158(a) (1). See, e.g., Aetna Cas. & Sur. Co., 154 B.R. at 868 (order defining scope of Rule 2004 subpoenas duces tecum and denying motion to quash subpoenas and for protective order was interlocutory); In re Midwest Video Games, Inc., 1998 WL 395152, at 1-2 (bankruptcy court's Rule 2004 examination order was not final).[FN4]

Countrywide's argument that the April 1, 2008 Order was final because it resolved the only existing issue in the miscellaneous proceeding that the bankruptcy court created to address the U.S. Trustee's Rule 2004 Notice is not persuasive. As set forth in the background section above, the bankruptcy court opened the miscellaneous number for the purpose of efficiently resolving issues regarding the U.S. Trustee's investigation of Countrywide after the U.S. Trustee filed Rule 2004 Notices and Subpoenas in ten separate bankruptcies. Pursuant to the Consolidation Order, the U.S. Trustee filed on November 7, 2007 a single Notice of Examination Under Rule 2004 and Service of Subpoena (Duces Tecum) in the miscellaneous proceeding. Thus, even if the miscellaneous proceeding technically had concluded, the underlying bankruptcy to which the April 1, 2008 Order and the U.S. Trustee's investigation primarily relate, the In re Hill bankruptcy, has not. In addition, the bankruptcy court expressly stayed the Rule 2004 examinations in the remaining six underlying context cases, “pending further Order of the Court,” a further indication that all existing issues have not been resolved. Finally, as touched on above, additional questions may arise as the U.S. Trustee conducts the examinations such as the permissible scope of the examinations and the consequences of any refusal by Countrywide to comply with the examination.

B. Collateral Order

Countrywide next argues that, even if the April 1, 2008 Order is not final, it is nevertheless appealable under the collateral order doctrine established in Cohen v. Beneficial Indus. Loan Corp., 337 U.S. 541 (1949). Again, I disagree.

The Court of Appeals for the Third Circuit has applied Cohen to provide:

> “a narrow exception to the general rule permitting appellate review only of final orders. An appeal of a nonfinal order will lie if (1) the order from which the appellant appeals conclusively determines the disputed question; (2) the order resolves an important issue that is completely separate from the merits of the dispute; and (3) the order is effectively unreviewable on appeal from a final judgment..... To this end, as a doctrinal matter, orders that meet the three prongs described above are deemed to be ‘final decisions' within the meaning of the statute.”

5 Baron & Budd, P.C., 321 B.R. at 155-56 (quoting

FN4. The United States District Court for the Southern District of Florida reached the same conclusion in finding that an order overruling Countrywide's objections to a similar Rule 2004 Notice of Examination and Subpoena Duces Tecum served by the Office of the United States Trustee on Countrywide in a different bankruptcy case was not final. See In re Del Castillo, Case No. 08-20020-mc-Altonaga (S.D.Fla. Feb. 8, 2008).

Petroleos Mexicanos Refinacion v. M/T King A (EX-TIBLISI), 377 F.3d 329, 334 (3d Cir.2004)). In the context of discovery orders, however, the Court of Appeals has found the collateral order doctrine applicable only in two very limited circumstances: where the information sought is either privileged or a trade secret. See Bacher v. Allstate Ins. Co., 211 F.3d 52, 53, 57 (3d Cir.2000). As the U.S. Trustee notes in her response, the April 1, 2008 Order Countrywide seeks to appeal does not authorize the U.S. Trustee to seek any information or material that is privileged or a trade secret. Thus, the collateral order doctrine does not apply.

C. Interlocutory Order

Even if the Order at issue is not appealable as of right, I have discretionary jurisdiction over certain interlocutory appeals under 28 U.S.C. § 158(a)(3). Because that statute does not provide any standards to apply, courts generally have looked to the language of 28 U.S.C. § 1292(b), which governs the scope of appellate jurisdiction over interlocutory appeals from district courts. See Sterling Supply Corp. v. Mullinax, 154 B.R. 660, 662 (E.D.Pa.1993). Under section 1292(b), an appellate court has jurisdiction “over non-final orders (1) that involve a controlling question of law (2) about which there is a substantial basis for a difference of opinion, (3) the resolution of which will materially advance the ultimate termination of the litigation.” Sterling Supply Corp., 154 B.R. at 662. Interlocutory appeals “contravene the judicial policy opposing piecemeal litigation and the disadvantages of delay and disruption associated with it.” In re Am. Freight Sys., Inc., 194 B.R. 659, 661 (D.Kan.1996). Thus, interlocutory bankruptcy appeals generally are reserved for cases presenting exceptional circumstances. See id. (citing cases); see also Dal-Tile Int'l, Inc. v. Color Tile, Inc., 203 B.R. 554, 557 (D.Del.1996); In re Neshaminy Office Bldg. Assocs., 81 B.R. 301, 303 (E.D.Pa.1987). Countrywide, as the party seeking an interlocutory appeal, bears the burden of demonstrating exceptional circumstances. See In re Am. Freight Sys., Inc., 194 B.R. at 661-62.

Here, Countrywide has not made a showing that meets the section 1292(b) standard. As one court aptly has explained:

> Questions that arise during the course of a bankruptcy proceeding concerning the appropriate scope of discovery and that do not involve controlling questions of law are left to the sound discretion of the court that is fully familiar with the entire proceeding-the bankruptcy judge.

In re Towers Fin. Corp., 164 B.R. 719, 721 (S.D.N.Y.1994). Here, Countrywide has not demonstrated that the bankruptcy court's April 1, 2008 Order denying its objections to the Rule 2004 examination and motion to quash subpoena differs significantly from routine discovery orders from which interlocutory appeals are discouraged.[FN5] Accordingly, I do not find any reason to exercise my discretion to entertain Countrywide's interlocutory appeal.

[FN5] Even if the issue of the U.S. Trustee's authority to conduct a Rule 2004 examination of Countrywide under the facts of this case was a controlling issue of law, which it is not, Countrywide has not shown that it is a question about which there is a substantial basis for a difference of opinion. Indeed, Countrywide has not pointed to any case law in direct support of its position. To the contrary, courts that have discussed the U.S. Trustee's powers under 11 U.S.C. § 307 have held that the statute provides the U.S. Trustee with very broad standing and that the U.S. Trustee is the equivalent of a party in interest in bankruptcy. See, e.g., Thompson v. Greenwood, 507 F.3d 416, 420 n. 3 (6th Cir.2007); In re Miles, 330 B.R. 848, 849-50 (M.D.Ga.2005).

III. CONCLUSION

6 In sum, for the reasons set forth above, I find that the April 1, 2008 Order of the Bankruptcy Court partially denying Countrywide's objection to the Rule 2004 Notice and denying its motion to quash the related Subpoena was not a final order within the meaning of 28 U.S.C. § 158(a). Further, in the exercise of my discretion, I decline to grant Countrywide leave to file an interlocutory appeal. Accordingly, Countrywide's Motion for Leave to Appeal is denied, and Countrywide's Motion for Stay Pending Appeal and Motion for Temporary Stay Pending Resolution of Its Motion for Stay Pending Appeal are denied as moot. Countrywide's appeal is dismissed for lack of jurisdiction.

ORDER OF COURT

AND NOW, this 11th day of June, 2008, after careful consideration, it is ordered that Countrywide Home Loans, Inc.'s Motion for Leave to Appeal (Docket No. 1) is DENIED. Countrywide's Emergency Motion for Stay Pending Appeal Pursuant to Fed. R. Bankr.P. 8005 (Docket No. 2) and Emergency Motion for Temporary Stay Pending Determination of Its Motion for Stay Pending Appeal (Docket No. 12) are DENIED as moot. Countrywide's appeal is dismissed for lack of jurisdiction.

ORDER

Countrywide Home Loans, Inc. ("Countrywide") appeals an Order Overruling in Part the Objections of Countrywide to the Second Amended Notice of Examination Under Federal Rule of Bankruptcy Procedure 2004 and Subpoena Duces Tecum served by Appellee, Office of the United States Trustee (the "Trustee"), entered by the United States Bankruptcy Court for the Southern District of Florida (the "bankruptcy court"). (See R. 132).[1] In the alternative, Countrywide seeks leave to appeal the Order pursuant to Bankruptcy Rules 8001 and 8003.

EXHIBIT D

I. BACKGROUND

On May 14, 2007, Debtors, Manuel Del Castillo and Maria E. Pena, filed a joint voluntary petition for relief under Chapter 13 of Title 11 of the United States Code in the bankruptcy court. Countrywide is a secured creditor by virtue of a promissory note and a mortgage recorded against the Debtors' residence as security for the promissory note. (See Appellants' Mem. of Law in Support of Notice of Appeal [D.E. 1-2], p. 1). Countrywide asserted a secured claim of $287,902.23, pre-petition arrearages totaling $16,417.67, and an insufficient funds fee of $682.88. (See Appellee's Objection to Countrywide's Mot. for Leave to Appeal [D.E. 1-2], p. 2). Countrywide further claimed that Debtors' "'Regular Monthly Installments of $1,783.64 . . .' would increase to $4,773.54 'Effective 7/1/2007' and that it might be entitled to future costs of collection, including attorney's fees." (Id. (citing R. 14)).

Debtors filed their first amended Chapter 13 plan (the "Plan") on July 19, 2007. (See id.). Under the Plan, Debtors proposed to repay creditors' claims over a period of 60 months. Debtors proposed to pay Countrywide's first and second lien claims outside the Plan. (See id.). The bankruptcy court scheduled a confirmation hearing on the Plan for January 29, 2008.

Debtors also filed an Objection to Countrywide's claim on August 10, 2007, arguing that Countrywide had failed to provide a breakdown of the claimed arrearages and insufficient funds fee. (See id. (citing R. 48)). Debtors requested "'a breakdown of the increase of the new monthly payment of $4,773.54'" and an award of attorney's fees from Countrywide, noting that Debtors' counsel "'has been forced to file his Objection to Claim in response to creditor's filing of an incorrect and/or improper Proof of Claim . . . .'" (Id.). Debtors also objected to Countrywide's claim for future attorney's fees. (See id. at 3).

Countrywide did not respond to Debtors' Objection, and the bankruptcy court entered an Order sustaining Debtors' Objection on August 28, 2007 (the "Objection Order"). (See id. (citing R.59)). The Objection Order reduced Countrywide's secured claim to $266,295.50, "struck 'the portion of the claim labeled pre-petition escrow advance in the amount of $11,923.85 and the insufficient funds fee in the amount of $682.88 . . .' and reserved jurisdiction to award attorneys' fees." (Id.). The Objection Order also disallowed any future attorney's fees claimed by Countrywide. (See id.).

Thereafter, on November 6, 2007, Countrywide, in agreement with Debtors, filed a Motion to Reconsider Debtors' Objection to Claim, stating it had provided Debtors with backup documentation to support the proof of claim, reduced the amount of the regular payment to $2,448.41, and paid attorney's fees to Debtors' attorney as necessitated by the circumstances. (See id. at 4; see also Appellant's Mem., p. 2). The bankruptcy court subsequently entered an Agreed Order Granting the Motion to Reconsider.

Earlier, on October 23, 2007, the Trustee filed a Second Amended Notice of Taking Rule 2004 Examination Duces Tecum of Corporate Representative of Countrywide with Subpoena Duces Tecum (the "Notice"). Through the Notice, the Trustee sought to conduct discovery regarding the factual basis for Countrywide's proof of claim. (See Appellee's Objection [D.E. 1-2], p. 3). On November 2, 2007, Countrywide filed an Objection to the Notice. Countrywide argued that the Trustee lacked authority under 11 U.S.C. § 307 and 28 U.S.C. § 586 to investigate the factual basis for Countrywide's proof of claim. Countrywide also asserted that the requested discovery exceeded the scope of Federal Rule of Bankruptcy Procedure 2004[2] and that some of the document requests impinged on the attorney-client and work product privileges. According to Countrywide, the document requests in general constituted an "impermissible fishing expedition ." (See id.).

Following a hearing on Countrywide's Objection to the Trustee's Notice, the bankruptcy court issued the Order under review, partially sustaining and partially denying Countrywide's Objection. In its Order, the bankruptcy court found that 28 U.S.C. § 586 does not limit the Trustee's ability "to raise, appear and be heard on any issue in any case or proceeding under title 11." (R. 132). The bankruptcy court further held that the Trustee is authorized to issue a subpoena and conduct an examination of Countrywide pursuant to Rule 2004, in accordance with the authority granted the Trustee under 11 U.S.C. § 307 and 28 U.S.C. § 586. Additionally, the court determined there is a pending issue in the case upon which the Trustee may appear and be heard. (See id. (citing 11 U.S.C. § 307)).[3]

See also In re Recoton Corp., 307 B.R. 751, 755 (S.D.N.Y. 2004) (citing Fed. R. Bankr. P. 2004(b)). "The purpose of a Rule 2004 examination is to assist a party in interest in determining the nature and extent of the bankruptcy estate, revealing assets, examining transactions and assessing whether wrongdoing has occurred." Id. (citation omitted).

[3] The Order conditioned Countrywide producing the documents upon the Trustee providing Countrywide with a certificate of compliance under the Right to Financial Privacy Act of 1978, 12 U.S.C. §§ 3401 et seq. (See id.). The Trustee has provided the requisite certificate. (See Appellee's Objection [D.E. 1-2], p. 5).

EXHIBIT D

Countrywide has identified the following issues it wishes to pursue:

1. Whether the bankruptcy court erred in finding that the Trustee possesses the authority to issue a subpoena and conduct and examination of Countrywide pursuant to Rule 2004.

2. Whether the bankruptcy court erred in finding that the Trustee possesses the authority to issue a subpoena and conduct an examination of Countrywide pursuant to 11 U.S.C. § 307 and 28 U.S.C. § 586.

3. Whether the bankruptcy court erred in finding there is a pending issue in this case upon which the Trustee may be heard pursuant to 11 U.S.C. § 307.

4. Whether the bankruptcy judge should have disqualified himself from hearing Countrywide's Objection pursuant to 28 U.S.C. § 455 (a) on the grounds that his impartiality might reasonably be questioned.

II. ANALYSIS

District courts have appellate jurisdiction over the final judgments, orders, and decrees of bankruptcy courts. 28 U.S.C. § 158(a)(1). A district court also has discretionary jurisdiction to hear appeals of interlocutory orders, upon leave. 28 U.S.C. § 158(a)(3). Countrywide contends the Order Overruling in Part the Objections of Countrywide Home Loans, Inc. to the Second Amended Notice of Examination Under Federal Rule of Bankruptcy Procedure 2004 and Subpoena Duces Tecum served by Appellee is a final bankruptcy order subject to immediate appellate review. In the alternative, Countrywide seeks leave to appeal the Order as an interlocutory appealable order under section 158(a)(3). The Trustee maintains the Order is a non-final, interlocutory discovery order not subject to immediate appellate review.

1. Whether a final, appealable order was entered

Countrywide argues that in bankruptcy proceedings, a final order is one which resolves a particular controversy. Countrywide contends that its Objection to the Trustee's Notice is a separate, distinct dispute within the Del Castillo Chapter 13 proceeding. The initial issue the undersigned addresses is whether in resolving the matter in favor of the Trustee, the Order is final and appealable.

A final order "'is an order that concludes the litigation on the merits of the case and 'leaves nothing for the court to do but execute the judgment.'" In re Hillsborough Holdings Corp., 164 B.R. 673, 674 (M.D. Fla. 1994) (citing In re Sunstate Dairy, 1992 WL 161138 (M.D. Fla. 1992) (quoting Catlin v. United States, 324 U.S. 229, 233 (1945)). By contrast, an interlocutory order is "[a]n order that is final with regard to a particular issue, but does not end the litigation on the merits, is not a final order under Catlin and is not immediately appealable." In re Lykes Bros. S.S.Co., Inc., 200 B.R. 933, 937 (M.D. Fla. 1996) (internal citations and quotations omitted).[4]

"'As a general proposition most orders granting or denying discovery are not final orders . . . and therefore are not immediately appealable.'" Matter of International Horizons, Inc., 689 F.2d 996, 1000-1001 (11th Cir. 1982) (quoting Rouse Construction International, Inc. v. Rouse Construction Corporation, 680 F.2d 743, 745 (11th Cir. 1982)). A party challenging a discovery order generally has two choices: (1) to comply with the order and challenge it at the conclusion of the case or (2) to refuse to comply with the order and contest its validity if subsequently cited for contempt for refusing to obey. Id. An exception to this rule exists where an order "'is directed to a person who has custody of materials as to which another person may claim a privilege of non-disclosure.'" Id. at 1001 (quoting Branch v. Phillips Petroleum Co., 638 F.2d 873, 878 n.3 (5th Cir. 1981)). Under those circumstances, "'the person who holds the privilege may seek immediate review of the disclosure order.'" Id.

In International Horizons, 689 F.2d 996, a creditors' committee sought access to documents and work papers in the possession of the debtors' accounting firm. The accounting firm refused to disclose the work papers, asserting the accountant-client privilege. The bankruptcy court rejected the accounting firm's claim of privilege and ordered the firm to produce the documents. On appeal, the court found that because the bankruptcy court had not yet entered a civil contempt order against the accounting firm for refusing to produce the documents, the discovery order was not final and appealable. Id. at 1001. According to the International Horizons court, the accounting firm, as the holder of the allegedly privileged material, could appeal only if and when it was adjudged in civil contempt. The International Horizons court determined, however, that because the debtor did not have custody of the allegedly privileged materials, the debtor could immediately appeal the order directing disclosure of the documents because the debtor claimed a privilege of non-disclosure relating to materials that another party had been directed to produce. Id. at 1001-02.

Here, Countrywide holds the documents at issue and Debtors have not objected to the Order, much less asserted a privilege relating to the documents in Countrywide's possession. Countrywide does not claim that its compliance with the Order will jeopardize any asserted privilege. Indeed, the bankruptcy court sustained Countrywide's objection to the Notice regarding production of documents involving attorney-client communications. (See R. 125; Nov. 20, 2007 Hearing Trans., p. 67). Countrywide may comply with the Notice and the Order and challenge the Order at the conclusion of Debtors' case, or it may refuse to comply and appeal the Order in the context of a subsequent civil contempt order. Consequently, Countrywide has failed to demonstrate that the Order is a final order or otherwise subject to immediate appellate review.

2. Whether the non-final Order is nevertheless subject to immediate appellate review

Three recognized exceptions to the final judgment rule allow interlocutory orders to be immediately reviewed: (1) the Forgay-Conrad rule (also known as the doctrine of practical finality), (2) the Cohen (or collateral order) doctrine, and (3) where the question presented is fundamental to further conduct of the case. See In re F.D.R. Hickory House, Inc., 60 F.3d 724, 726-27 (11th Cir. 1995); see also In re Lykes, 200 B.R. at 938. Countrywide argues that the Order fits within either the Forgay-Conrad rule or the Cohen doctrine.[5] Application of these exceptions is examined in turn.

Under the Forgay-Conrad rule, an interlocutory order may be reviewed by an appellate court when the order > decides the right to the property in contest, and directs it to be delivered up by the defendant to the complainant, or directs it to be sold, or directs the defendant to pay a certain sum of money to the complainant, and the complainant is entitled to have such decree carried immediately into execution.

In re Hickory House, Inc., 60 F.3d at 726-27 (quoting Forgay v. Conrad, 47 U.S. (6 How.) 201, 204 (1848); Atlantic Federal Sav. & Loan Ass'n v. Blythe Eastman Paine Webber, Inc., 890 F.2d 371, 376 (11th Cir. 1989)). Because the Order does not compel Countrywide to deliver property to the Trustee, the Forgay-Conrad exception is inapplicable. See In re Lykes, 200 B.R. at 938 (noting that an order denying a motion for appointment to the creditors' committee "does not require immediate delivery of physical property, so [the Forgay-Conrad] exception is not applicable.").

Similarly, Countrywide fails to establish that the Order is subject to immediate appellate

[5] The record under review does not demonstrate a need for immediate review of the Order for the "further conduct of the case."

EXHIBIT D

review under the Cohen doctrine. Under this doctrine, three factors must be present:

> (1) [T]he order must be independent and easily separable from the substance of the other claims in the action, (2) it must present a need to secure prompt review in order to protect important interests of any party, and (3) it must be examined in the light of practical, rather than narrowly technical, consideration.

In re Hillsborough Holdings, Corp., 164 B.R. at 675 (quoting In re Tidewater Group, Inc., 734 F.2d 794, 795-96 (11th Cir. 1984)).

In support of its claim that the Order is subject to immediate appellate review under the Cohen doctrine, Countrywide maintains this contested matter is independent and easily separable from the remainder of the Del Castillo case and has no bearing on Debtors. The Trustee, however, asserts it is unclear whether Countrywide will comply with the subpoenas. Further, assuming Countrywide fails to comply, "it is unclear whether the United States Trustee will move to compel." (Appellee's Objection [D.E. 1-2], p. 11). Additionally, it is equally unclear whether the bankruptcy court will hold Countrywide in civil contempt if Countrywide fails to comply with the Order. Given these uncertainties, the Trustee argues, the Cohen doctrine is not satisfied.

Countrywide has not shown that there is a need to secure prompt review in order to protect important interests of any party. It has not shown that the Order cannot be reviewed after the final judgment or that a party's interests cannot be protected in the absence of immediate review. See In re Hillsborough Holdings, Corp., 164 B.R. at 675. Having failed to satisfy any of the recognized exceptions to the final judgment rule, Countrywide has not demonstrated that immediate appellate review is warranted.

3. Whether the request for leave to appeal should be granted

In the alternative, and as previously stated, Countrywide seeks leave to appeal the Order.

Courts generally apply the standards listed in 28 U.S.C. § 1292(b) when determining whether to grant a request for leave to appeal from an interlocutory order under 28 U.S.C. § 158(a). See In re Ashoka Enterprises, Inc., 156 B.R. 343, 346 (S.D. Fla. 1993) (noting the bankruptcy statute does not provide district courts with criteria to apply when determining whether to grant leave to appeal under section 158(a), and courts therefore apply the standards in section 1292(b)); see also In re Celotex Corp., 187 B.R. 746, 749 (M.D. Fla. 1995) (recognizing that when determining whether to exercise its discretionary authority to review interlocutory orders under section 158(a), a district court will look to the standards in section 1292(b)) (citing In re Charter Co., 778 F.2d 617, 620 (11th Cir. 1985)).

Under section 1292(b), the court may allow a party to take an interlocutory appeal of an order where (1) the order involves a controlling question of law; (2) there is a substantial ground for difference of opinion regarding the court's resolution of that question of law; and (3) an immediate appeal of the order may materially advance the ultimate termination of the litigation. Section 1292(b) appeals "were intended, and should be reserved, for situations in which the court of appeals can rule on a pure, controlling question of law without having to delve beyond the surface of the record in order to determine the facts." McFarlin v. Conseco Servs., LLC, 381 F.3d 1251, 1259 (11th Cir. 2004).

> The legal question must be stated at a high enough level of abstraction to lift the question out of the details of the evidence or facts of a particular case and give it general relevance to other cases in the same area of law. And the answer to that question must substantially reduce the amount of litigation left in the case.

Id.

In support of its request for leave to appeal, Countrywide contends its appeal relates to "pure legal questions, e.g., whether there is any authority for the [Trustee] to examine a creditor's general corporate policies and procedures when no issue exists between the creditor and the debtor or under any other circumstances," and "whether the Bankruptcy Judge, in light of the testimony he gave before a Congressional sub-committee on October 2, 2007, should have disqualified himself on the grounds that his impartiality might reasonably be questioned." (Appellant's Mem. [D.E. 1-2], pp. 6-7). According to the Trustee, issues concerning the scope of discovery under Rule 2004 are inherently interlocutory, present no controlling issues of law and "'are left to the sound discretion of the court that is fully familiar with the entire proceeding – the bankruptcy judge . . . .'" (Appellee's Objection [D.E. 1-2], p. 12 (citing In re Towers Fin. Corp., 164 B.R. 719, 720 (S.D.N.Y. 1994)). The undersigned agrees with the Trustee's characterization.

The Order does not finally adjudicate the validity of Countrywide's proof of claim. Rather, the Order allows the Trustee to conduct discovery relating to Countrywide's factual support for the proof of claim. No controlling question of law is presented that would serve to advance the ultimate termination of the proceeding. See In re American Freight System, Inc., 194 B.R. 659, 662 (D. Kan. 1996) (noting bankruptcy court's discovery order, by itself, had no bearing on the merits of the proceedings, finding order was interlocutory in nature, and denying leave to appeal); see also State of Fla. ex rel. Butterworth v. Industrial Chemicals, Inc., 145 F.R.D. 585, 589 (N.D. Fla. 1991) ([G]enerally "discovery orders do not present controlling questions of law, capable of significantly advancing litigation so as to justify interlocutory appeal.") (internal citations omitted).

Further, Countrywide has not shown the existence of a substantial ground for differences of opinion regarding the question presented. As noted, it is well recognized that bankruptcy court discovery orders are interlocutory and not final appealable orders. See In re International Horizons, Inc., 689 F.2d at 1000-1001. When there is binding authority on the question presented, there is no substantial difference of opinion. See In re Pacific Forest Products Corp., 335 B.R. 910, 922 (S.D. Fla. 2005) ("[W]here there is controlling authority in the jurisdiction where the order was rendered, there cannot be a substantial difference of opinion.") (citation omitted)). Countrywide has simply not demonstrated that the Order differs materially from routine discovery orders from which interlocutory appeals are discouraged as contravening the policy against piecemeal litigation.

Lastly, Countrywide did not file a written motion seeking the bankruptcy judge's recusal and thus this claim, when reviewed, will be examined under the plain error standard. See U.S. v. Marrero, 219 Fed. Appx 892, 896 (11th Cir. 2007). Under plain error review, appellant must show error that is plain and that affected substantial rights. See U.S. v. Monroe, 353 F.3d 1346, 1349 (11th Cir. 2003) (citations omitted). That showing has not been made.

Accordingly, it is ORDERED AND ADJUDGED that Countrywide's notice of appeal or, in the alternative, request for leave to appeal, is DENIED. The Clerk of Court is instructed to CLOSE the case.

Kimbertly A. Jones, Las Vegas, NV, pro se.

William D. Johnson, Acclaim Legal Services, Southfield, MI, for Appellees.

ORDER

JULIAN ABELE COOK, JR., District Judge.

1 On May 20, 2008, the Appellees, Kimbertly A. Jones and Sheryl C. Jones, filed for protection under Chapter 7 of the United States Bankruptcy Code. On July 11, 2008, the Appellant, Mortgage Electronic Registration Systems, Inc. filed an adversary proceeding against the Appellees in the United States Bankruptcy Court for the Eastern District of Michigan.

Nearly two months later (September 26th), the Appellant submitted several discovery requests to the Appellees in the form of interrogatories, requests to produce, as well as requests for admission. On November 7th, the Appellant filed a motion for the entry of a summary judgment in the Bankruptcy Court, contending that (1) the Appellees had failed to answer its requests for admissions, and (2) by virtue of Fed.R.Civ.P. 36(b), "all matters contained therein [were] deemed admitted." Moreover, the Appellant points out that "a matter admitted under this rule is conclusively established unless the court, on motion, permits the admission to be withdrawn or amended." The Appellees, after filing a response in opposition to the pending motion on November 11th, submitted their answers to the Appellant's various discovery requests on December 5th. Following a hearing on December 18th, Bankruptcy Judge Walter Shapero rejected the Appellant's dispositive request for the entry of a summary judgment. It was his belief that a summary judgment was not warranted inasmuch as the Appellees had now filed their answers to the Appellant's discovery requests, albeit untimely.

On January 27, 2009, the Appellant filed a motion for leave to file an interlocutory appeal in this federal district court. In support of its request, the Appellant contends that (1) the question to be determined is one of law, (2) the Appellees' failure to respond to its discovery requests establishes their liability, and (3) a decision on this issue in its favor would greatly expedite this litigation. In their opposition papers of February 18, 2009, the Appellees argue that the Appellant's motion is unwarranted because it has failed to establish that Bankruptcy Judge Shapero abused his discretion when rendering his decision.

Over fifteen years ago, the Sixth Circuit Court of Appeals cautioned that interlocutory appeals should be granted only in "exceptional cases," Vitols v. Citizens Banking Co., 984 F.2d 168, 170 (6th Cir.1993) (internal citations omitted), because of the disruption and delay that is inherent in the immediate appeal of an order. United States v. Bilsky, 664 F.2d 613, 615 (6th Cir.1981).

When determining whether an interlocutory appeal from a bankruptcy court order is appropriate, district courts are encouraged to examine (1) 28 U.S.C. § 1292(b) [FN1] and (2) the standards that have been adopted by the Sixth Circuit Court of Appeals when deciding whether or not to hear interlocutory appeals from federal district courts. In the Matter of PHM Credit Corp., 99 B.R. 762, 767 (E.D.Mich.1989). When evaluating the propriety of an interlocutory appeal, the Sixth Circuit Court of Appeals seeks to determine if (1) the challenged order involves a controlling legal question; (2) there is substantial ground for a difference of opinion relating to the issue under review; and (3) an immediate appeal would materially advance the termination of the litigation. W. Tenn. Chapter of Assoc. Builders & Contractors, Inc. v. City of Memphis, 293 F.3d 345, 350 (6th Cir.2002).

FN1. 28 U.S.C. § 1292(b) provides, in part:

> When a district judge, in making in a civil action an order not otherwise appealable under this section, shall be of the opinion that such order involves a controlling question of law as to which there is substantial ground for difference of opinion and that an immediate appeal from the order may materially advance the ultimate termination of the litigation, he shall so state in writing in such order. The Court of Appeals which would have jurisdiction of an appeal of such action may thereupon, in its discretion, permit an appeal to be taken from such order ....

2 A question of law is controlling "if it could materially affect the outcome of the case." Id. (citing In re Baker & Getty Fin. Servs., Inc. v. Nat'l Union Fire Ins. Co., 954 F.2d 1169, 1172 n. 8 (6th Cir.1992). Moreover, the type of legal questions that are addressed in 28 U.S.C. § 1292(b) do not include issues which fall within the discretion of the trial court. Id. (citing White v. Nix, 43 F.3d 374, 377 (8th Cir.1994)).

Here, the Court does not believe that the Appellant's request for an interlocutory appeal is warranted for two reasons. First, the denial of a summary judgment by a Bankruptcy Judge is not immediately appealable. See McMullen v. Meijer, Inc., 355 F.3d 485, 489 (6th Cir.2004). Secondly, there is no purely legal and controlling question of law at issue. The denial of the Appellant's motion for summary judgment by Bankruptcy Judge Shapero was based on his conclusion that the Appellees' answers to interrogatories, though untimely, should be considered in conjunction with the entire case. While recognizing that the Appellees' discovery responses were late, he did not "think the ... appropriate response [would be] the granting of a judgment." As such, Judge Shapero's denial of the Appellant's motion for a summary judgment, as well as his order which authorized the Appellees' late discovery filings, are reviewable on an abuse of discretion standard. See Romstadt v. Allstate Ins. Co., 59 F.3d 608, 615 (6th Cir.1995) (denial of summary judgment reviewed for abuse of discretion); Proctor v. USDE, 196 Fed. Appx. 345, 347 (6th Cir.2006) ("court enjoys broad discretion in handling discovery disputes"). As noted above, issues that fall within the discretion of the court are not appropriate for interlocutory review. W. Tenn. Chapter of Assoc. Builders & Contractors, Inc., 293 F.3d at 350. Finally, the Court, when assessing the issues as a whole, does not believe that Judge Shapero abused his discretion under the circumstances that appear on this record.

Accordingly and for the reasons that have been stated above, the Court must, and does, deny the Appellant's motion for leave to file an interlocutory appeal.

IT IS SO ORDERED.

ROBERT L. HACKETT, Appellant,

v.

UNITED STATES TRUSTEE, et al., Appellees.

ON APPEAL FROM
THE UNITED STATES DISTRICT COURT
FOR THE EASTERN DISTRICT OF LOUISIANA

BRIEF FOR THE APPELLEE, UNITED STATES TRUSTEE

STATEMENT OF SUBJECT MATTER & APPELLATE JURISDICTION

The bankruptcy court had jurisdiction over the underlying chapter 13 and chapter 11 cases pursuant to 28 U.S.C. § 157. By Order entered on October 15, 1998, the bankruptcy court dismissed the debtor’s second bankruptcy case because it was filed in violation of 11 U.S.C. § 109(g) (R. 00145-146).[1] The determination of a debtor's eligibility to initiate a bankruptcy case constitutes a core proceeding under 28 U.S.C. §157(b)(2) and, thus, the bankruptcy court's jurisdiction was properly based on 28 U.S.C. § 157(b)(1).

On October 26, 1998, Mr. Hackett timely noticed his appeal from the bankruptcy court's final order to the United States District Court for the Eastern District of Louisiana (R. 00140). In reviewing the appeal, the district court properly exercised its jurisdiction over that order under 28 U.S.C. § 158(a).

The district court's Judgment, which was entered on the docket on May 11, 1999 (R. 00003), was a final, appealable ruling under 28 U.S.C. § 158(d). Mr. Hackett filed his notice of appeal on June 9, 1999 (R. 00001), which notice was timely under Fed. R. App. P. 4(a)(1). This Court's jurisdiction is therefore based on 28 U.S.C. §§ 158(d) and 1291.

STATEMENT OF THE ISSUE PRESENTED FOR REVIEW

The issue presented by this appeal is as follows:

Did the bankruptcy court properly dismiss the debtor's second bankruptcy case under 11 U.S.C. § 109(g) given that the debtor had sought and obtained dismissal of a prior bankruptcy case after a creditor in the earlier case moved for relief from the automatic stay so that it could foreclose upon collateral securing a debt upon which the debtor had defaulted?

[1] "R." denotes the page citation in Vol. 1 of the Official Record on Appeal, filed with this Court on July 2, 1999.

Appellant raised this issue in his opposition pleadings to the United States Trustee's motion to dismiss the second bankruptcy case and at the hearing on the motion (R. 00150 (Bankruptcy Court Docket (hereinafter "Bankr. Ct. Dkt.") Nos. 35 & 38); R00366-71). The issue was ruled upon and rejected by the bankruptcy court (R. 00145-56, 00371-72) and the district court (R. 00007-10).

STATEMENT OF THE STANDARD OF REVIEW

Pursuant to 5th Cir. R. 28.2.6, the standard of review of this appeal is as follows: " This Court, acting as a second review court, reviews the bankruptcy court's findings of fact under the clearly erroneous standard, and the bankruptcy court's conclusions of law de novo." Financial Sec. Assurance, Inc. v. T-H New Orleans Ltd. Partnership (Matter of T-H New Orleans Ltd. Partnership), 116 F.3d 790, 796 (5th Cir. 1997) (citation omitted). A finding of fact should be overturned only if "the reviewing court on the entire evidence is left with the definite and firm conviction that a mistake has been committed." Anderson v. City of Bessemer, 470 U.S. 564, 573-74 (1985).

In this appeal, Mr. Hackett contends the bankruptcy court committed legal error in applying section 109(g)(2). This Court's construction of section 109(g) is a matter that is reviewed de novo.

STATEMENT OF THE CASE

A. Nature of the Case.

This appeal arises from the dismissal of the second bankruptcy case initiated by appellant Robert L. Hackett, an attorney licensed to practice in Louisiana, who sought bankruptcy relief after his law firm dissolved. The bankruptcy court found that Mr. Hackett was ineligible under section 109(g)(2) of the Bankruptcy Code to seek relief because the second bankruptcy case was filed within 180 days after Mr. Hackett had requested and obtained dismissal of a prior bankruptcy case when a creditor in that case sought relief from the automatic stay. Accordingly, the court dismissed Mr. Hackett's second bankruptcy case under 11 U.S.C. § 109(g)(2). On appeal from the bankruptcy court, the district court affirmed in all respects. This appeal followed.

B. Statutory Background.

Central to this appeal is the application of section 109(g) of the Bankruptcy Code, which provides:

> Notwithstanding any other provision of this section, no individual or family farmer may be a debtor under this title who has been a debtor in a case pending under this title at any time in the preceding 180 > days if --

> * * * *
> (2) the debtor requested and obtained the voluntary dismissal of the case following the filing of a request for relief from the automatic stay provided by section 362 of this title.[2/]

Section 109(g)(2) was enacted pursuant to the Bankruptcy Amendments and Federal Judgeship Act of 1984, Pub. L. No. 98-353, 98 Stat. 333 (1984).[3/] In the 1984 legislation, Congress addressed a number of issues raised by the consumer credit industry, including the contention that too many debtors were abusing the bankruptcy process. On the Senate floor, Senator Hatch cited Section 109(g) as an example of a provision designed to correct debtor abuses of serial requests for bankruptcy relief. 130 Cong. Rec. S8,891 (daily ed. June 29, 1984) (statement of Sen. Hatch), reprinted in 1984 U.S.C.C.A.N. 576, 597-98.

C. Statement of Facts.

On October 21, 1997, Mr. Hackett filed for bankruptcy relief under chapter 13 of the Bankruptcy Code.[4/] (R00339 (Bankr. Ct. Dkt. No. 1).) Mr. Hackett's (R00073.) Mr. Oestreicher also advised the district court that "[t]he progression of this litigation has been severely retarded by Hackett's Chapter 11 filings" (R00073) and that "Hackett's creditor's [sic] have been forced to participate in two (2) bankruptcy cases that were dismissed prior to the administration of Hackett's assets or payment of any of Hackett's debts" (R00077).

[7] Schwegmann had filed its first motion to lift the stay on January 21, 1998 (R. 00340 (Bankr. Ct. Dkt. No. 13)). The bank withdrew that motion when Mr. Hackett brought all post-petition payments current (R. 00210, R. 00343 (Bankr. Ct. Dkt. No. 32)).

his Chapter 13 bankruptcy proceeding." (R. 00237.) On June 3, the bankruptcy court granted the debtor's motion and dismissed the case. (R. 00346 (Bankr. Ct. Dkt. No. 64); see also R. 00238.)

Two days later, on June 5, 1998, Mr. Hackett filed a petition for relief under the reorganization provisions of chapter 11 of the Bankruptcy Code. (R. 00147 (Bankr. Ct. Dkt. No. 1).) The United States Trustee[8] conducted the initial meeting of creditors required by 11 U.S.C. § 341 and subsequently moved to dismiss the second case pursuant to 11 U.S.C. § 109(g)(2) on the basis that Mr. Hackett had dismissed a prior case after a creditor sought relief from the automatic stay within 180 days of his second bankruptcy filing.[9] After a hearing (R. 00362-72), the bankruptcy court granted the United States Trustee's motion and dismissed the case by order entered on October 15, 1998 (R. 00145-46, 00152 (Bankr. Ct. Dkt. No. 47)). The court found that Mr. Hackett had filed the second bankruptcy

Rep. No. 595, 95th Cong., 2d Sess. 109 (1977)).

[9] Creditor United States Fidelity & Guaranty Co. ("USF&G"), which had posted the bond for Mr. Hackett's appeals from the state court litigation involving creditor Oestreicher, filed a memorandum supporting the United States Trustee's motion to dismiss. (R. 00353-58.)

petition within 180 days months after he moved to dismiss a bankruptcy case following a creditor's request to lift the automatic stay. The bankruptcy court concluded that the second bankruptcy case should be dismissed with prejudice pursuant to section 109(g)(2) of the Bankruptcy Code. (R00145-146, R00152 (Bankr. Ct. Dkt. No. 47).)

Mr. Hackett timely noticed his appeal pursuant to Fed. R. Bankr. P. 8002(a) on October 26, 1998. (R00140, R00152 (Bankr. Ct. Dkt. No. 53).) On appeal, the district court affirmed in all respects in an order entered on May 11, 1999 (R. 00003, 00005-15).[10/] The district court rejected Mr. Hackett's contentions that he filed the second bankruptcy petition in good faith and that no motion to lift the stay was pending when he voluntarily moved to dismiss his chapter 11 case. This appeal followed.

SUMMARY OF ARGUMENT

Throughout the Bankruptcy Code, Congress attempts to strike a balance between debtors' interests in a fresh financial start and creditors' interests in receiving payment on debts owed. In striking this balance, Congress has determined that certain debtor behavior will not be countenanced. Specifically, in section 109(g)(2), Congress has prohibited debtors from refiling for bankruptcy relief for six months after they have dismissed a previous case voluntarily and prevented creditors from obtaining a hearing on motions for relief from stay.

[10/] In addition to the United States Trustee, creditors USF&G and Oestreicher filed briefs on appeal (R. 00016-61, 00081-96, 00097-120). Oestreicher also moved to dismiss Mr. Hackett's appeal on the ground that the debtor had not timely filed his brief with the appellate court (R. 00071-80); the district court denied this motion (R. 00005).

In this appeal, the bankruptcy court appropriately dismissed Mr. Hackett's second bankruptcy case. Mr. Hackett had first sought bankruptcy relief in October 1997 under chapter 13. Six months later, one of his creditors moved for relief from the automatic stay. On the day that the hearing had been scheduled on this motion, Mr. Hackett asked the court to dismiss his chapter 13 case. Two days after he received this dismissal, he filed a second bankruptcy petition.

This case presents the precise circumstances that Congress sought to stop through section 109(g)(2). Mr. Hackett was ineligible to file his second bankruptcy petition; and the bankruptcy court's dismissal of that case should be affirmed.

ARGUMENT

1. The Bankruptcy Court Correctly Dismissed Mr. Hackett's Chapter 11 Case Under Section 109(g)(2).

The bankruptcy court properly dismissed Mr. Hackett's chapter 11 case, which was filed within two days after he voluntarily dismissed a chapter 13 filing to prevent a creditor's motion for relief from stay from being heard. Section 109(g), which establishes a debtor's eligibility for bankruptcy relief, provides:

> Notwithstanding any other provision of this section, no individual or family farmer may be a debtor under this title who has been a debtor in a case pending under this title at any time in the preceding 180 days if --
> (2) the debtor requested and obtained the voluntary dismissal of the case following the filing of a request for relief from the automatic stay provided by section 362 of this title.

11 U.S.C. § 109(g)(2). Where the statutory language is plain, that language must be applied as written. United States v. Ron Pair Enters., Inc., 489 U.S. 235, 241 (1989); see also Toibb v. Radloff, 501 U.S. 157, 160 (1991)(finding section 109's language "plain" on the question whether an individual may seek relief under chapter 11) . The language of section 109(g)(2) plainly precludes an individual from seeking bankruptcy relief when that individual "at any time in the preceding 180 days . . . requested and obtained the voluntary dismissal of the case following the filing of a request for relief from the automatic stay provided by section 362 of this title."

In the instant appeal, the facts clearly demonstrate that Mr. Hackett falls within section 109(g)(2)'s prohibition. On October 21, 1997, he sought relief under the provisions of chapter 13 (R00339 (Bankr. Ct. Dkt. No. 1)). While that case was pending, on April 27, 1998, a creditor-bank filed its second motion to lift the automatic stay to proceed against secured collateral (R. 00344 (Bankr. Ct. Dkt. No. 47)). On June 2, 1998 (R. 00344 (Bankr. Ct. Dkt. No. 48)), the very day that a hearing was scheduled on the motion, Mr. Hackett filed his Ex Parte Motion, asking to dismiss the case (R. 00237).[11/] On June 3, the bankruptcy court granted the debtor's motion and dismissed the case. ((R. 00346 (Bankr. Ct. Dkt. No. 64); see also R. 00238.) Two days after the court granted his voluntary motion to dismiss, Mr. Hackett filed a petition for relief under chapter 11 of the Bankruptcy Code. (R. 00147 (Bankr. Ct. Dkt. No. 1).)

In similar circumstances, this Court has declared, "The impropriety of [the debtor's] act is obvious." Moran v. Frisard (Matter of Ulmer), 19 F.3d 234, 236 (5th Cir. 1994). Clearly, under section 109(g)(2), Mr. Hackett was not eligible to seek bankruptcy relief when he filed his second petition. Only three days earlier and after a creditor's filing of a motion to lift the stay, Mr. Hackett had sought and obtained a voluntary dismissal of the prior bankruptcy case. Thus, the bankruptcy court correctly dismissed his second bankruptcy filing.

[11/] The hearing was scheduled for 2:15 p.m. on June 2 (R. 00344 (Bankr. Ct. Dkt. No. 48)). According to the date-stamped copy in the record on appeal, Mr. Hackett filed his motion to dismiss at 9:23 a.m on June 2 (R. 00237). The record does not reflect whether Mr. Hackett gave creditor's counsel notice of his ex parte motion to dismiss before the 2:15 p.m. hearing. However, it seems that the creditor's counsel, Mr. Mathis, did appear before the bankruptcy court at the scheduled hearing time for the motion (R. 00371 (court's statement suggesting Mr. Mathis did appear)).

This result comports with the rationale underlying section 109(g)(2). That subsection was drafted "to prevent debtors from frustrating creditors' efforts to recover funds owed them." Ulmer, 19 F.3d at 235 (footnote omitted). "Without the section, a debtor could move in and out of bankruptcy, forcing a creditor to pursue time and again the right to collect a debt." Id. (footnote omitted). Congress has outlined the requirements for a debtor's eligibility and those requirements should be upheld, as in this case. See also United States v. Kras, 409 U.S. 434, 446 (1973) ("no constitutional right to obtain a discharge of one's debts in bankruptcy").

In his brief before this Court, Mr. Hackett contends that the bankruptcy court erred in applying section 109(g) because the stay requested by the creditor had been "deemed lifted" as of the date on which he filed his voluntary motion for dismissal. (Hackett Corrected Br. at 9.) Mr. Hackett apparently bases this contention on section 362(e), which states that the automatic stay is terminated within 30 days after the filing of a request for relief unless the court "orders such stay continued in effect. . . ." 11 U.S.C. § 362(e).

In Ulmer, the appellant-attorney made a similar argument. Because the bankruptcy court had not decided the motion to lift stay "within the time frame . . . the Bankruptcy Code required," the appellant argued that the "motion for relief for stay was no longer before the court. . . ." Ulmer, 19 F.3d at 236.

The Ulmer Court rejected that analysis, finding no implicit withdrawal of the motion to lift stay and concluding that the bankruptcy court had not decided the motion when the request for voluntary dismissal was filed:

> Perhaps [the creditor] could have successfully urged the court to address his motion more quickly. His failure to do so and the court's failure, if any, to act promptly provide no basis, however, to conclude that [the creditor] no longer wished to recover the money Ulmer owed him or that the court would not allow [the creditor] to recover the money.

19 F.3d at 236.

Moreover, as the district court noted below, Mr. Hackett's emphasis on the necessity of a "pending" request for relief from stay has no basis in the statute (R. 00012-14). Nowhere does section 109(g)(2) contain a "pending" requirement for motions for relief from stay; it simply says that it applies in circumstances where the debtor requested and obtained voluntary dismissal "following" the filing of a motion to lift stay. To adopt Mr. Hackett's argument would engraft an additional requirement not contained in the statute and would dishonor the plain language.

Therefore, Mr. Hackett's argument, like the related argument in Ulmer, should be rejected. Creditor Schwegmann requested relief from the automatic stay on April 27, 1998 (R. 00344 (Bankr. Ct. Dkt. No. 47)). A hearing on the motion was scheduled for June 2, 1998, at 2:15 p.m. (R. 00344 (Bankr. Ct. Dkt. No. 48)). The morning of June 2, Mr. Hackett filed his Ex Parte Motion, seeking to dismiss the case (R. 00237). In this case, as in Ulmer, when the debtor asked to dismiss his bankruptcy case, the motion for relief from stay had not been decided. Nor had it been withdrawn. Because the voluntary motion for dismissal of the first bankruptcy case was filed after a creditor had moved for relief from stay, the bankruptcy court correctly applied section 109(g)(2) to dismiss Mr. Hackett's second bankruptcy filing.

Finally, before the district court, Mr. Hackett contended that he dismissed his chapter 13 case in good faith reliance on advice from counsel (R. 00370).[12/] As the district court observed below, a minority of courts apply a good-faith exception to section 109(g)(2) even though the plain language of the statute creates no such exemption (R. 00008). This Court has noted that section 109(g)(2) "seems to establish a clear rule, . . ." Ulmer, 19 F.3d at 236. The majority and better-reasoned approach is to apply the plain language and dismiss a subsequent case

[12/] In his corrected brief to this Court, Hackett, who by his own admission has practiced law for more than 25 years, states only that he "followed the advice of counsel to voluntarily dismiss the Chapter 13 and refile." Hackett Corrected Br. at 9. Pursuant to Fed. R. App. P. 28, this Court could conclude that Mr. Hackett has failed to press this issue and thus has waived it on appeal. See Financial Sec. Assurance, Inc. v. T-H New Orleans Ltd. Partnership (Matter of T-H New Orleans Ltd. Partnership), 116 F.3d at 796 (citations omitted)("[C]ontentions not briefed are waived and will not be considered on appeal").

However, even if Congress had created such a safe harbor, Mr. Hackett could not demonstrate that he is entitled to invoke such a defense. As the district court correctly noted, "[r]eliance on the advice of counsel is simply not the type of situation courts use to justify an exception" under section 109(g)(2) (R. 00009-10)(citations omitted).

Rather than establishing a good-faith defense, the facts here demonstrate that Mr. Hackett is precisely the type of debtor Congress sought to restrain through section 109(g)(2). On the morning that a hearing was scheduled on a pending motion to lift the stay, Mr. Hackett asked the court to dismiss his chapter 13 case. Two days after the court granted his request, Mr. Hackett filed another bankruptcy petition. The bankruptcy court properly dismissed his second bankruptcy case and should be affirmed.

CONCLUSION

For the foregoing reasons, the United States Trustee respectfully asks this Court to affirm the decisions of the bankruptcy and district courts dismissing Mr. Hackett's bankruptcy case.

Statement of Jurisdiction

The United States Bankruptcy Court for the District of Idaho had subject matter jurisdiction over the debtors' chapter 7 bankruptcy case and the proceedings for the determination of compensation and sanctions against appellant, Tom Hale, under 28 U.S.C. §§ 157(b) and 1334. The United States District Court for the District of Idaho had jurisdiction over the appeal taken by appellant under 28 U.S.C. § 158(a).

The bankruptcy court's Memorandum of Decision entered March 22, 2004, and subsequent orders entered April 6, 2004, were final, appealable orders of that court under 28 U.S.C. § 158(a)(1). The district court's Memorandum Order entered March 15, 2006, was a final, appealable order under 28 U.S.C. § 158(d). On April 24, 2006, appellant timely filed a notice of appeal to this Court pursuant to Fed. R. App. P. 4(a)(1)(B). This Court has jurisdiction over this appeal under 28 U.S.C. § 158(d)(1).

Statement of the Issues on Appeal

Issue 1: Attorney Fees

Did the bankruptcy court abuse its discretion by ordering attorney Tom Hale to disgorge all of his attorney's fees to the debtor-clients under 11 U.S.C. § 329(b), where the court found that Mr. Hale provided an inadequate description and explanation of his legal services and failed to honor his legal and ethical obligations as attorney for the debtors?

Issue 2: Sanctions

Did Mr. Hale's failure to sign the debtors' bankruptcy petition and other misconduct warrant the imposition of sanctions under Bankruptcy Rule 9011(c)?

Issue 3: Right to a Jury Trial

Does the Seventh Amendment to the United States Constitution mandate that proceedings under 11 U.S.C. § 329 to determine whether bankruptcy attorney fees were reasonable must be determined by a jury, even though that provision does not require a jury trial, just as no other provision of the Bankruptcy Code requires that any of the dozens of other administrative matters routinely arising in bankruptcy cases be determined by juries?

Statement Regarding Oral Argument

Mr. Hale advances no novel legal theory, and the facts and legal arguments are adequately presented in the briefs and record. As a result, the decisional process would not be significantly aided by oral argument.

Statement of the Case

This is an appeal from the district court's affirmance of the bankruptcy court's order imposing monetary and non-monetary sanctions, denying attorney's fees and requiring disgorgement of those fees, and denying motions for recusal and a jury trial.

The bankruptcy court‘s order primarily addressed two related matters: (1) the court’s order requiring Tom Hale, Eric and Selina Jones’ initial bankruptcy attorney, to provide an accounting of all legal services rendered to the debtors so that the court could determine the reasonableness of compensation received by Mr. Hale in connection with the Joneses’ chapter 7 bankruptcy case under to 11 U.S.C. § 329(b); and (2) the United States Trustee’s motion for sanctions against Mr. Hale under Rule 9011 based upon his failure to sign the bankruptcy petition in the chapter 7 case and other misconduct. Mr. Hale did not appear at the evidentiary hearing on these matters.

The United States Trustee appeared through her counsel, presented testimony, and introduced documentary evidence. The bankruptcy court issued a written memorandum of decision and order upon completion of the hearing, finding Mr. Hale had provided inadequate services and engaged in improper conduct. Based on those finding, the court entered relief under section 329 and Rule 9011. Mr. Hale appealed to the district court, which affirmed in all respects. This appeal followed.

Statement of Facts

Debtors, Eric and Selina Jones ("Debtors") filed a voluntary bankruptcy petition under chapter 7 of the Bankruptcy Code , 11 U.S.C. 101, et seq., on September 25, 2001.[8] Tom Hale, an Idaho attorney, prepared and filed the bankruptcy petition, schedules, and statements on behalf of the Debtors.[9] Mr. Hale did not sign the petition that he prepared, but he signed and filed a compensation disclosure statement pursuant to Rule 2016(b), Fed. R. Bankr. P, evidencing his receipt of an attorney's fee of $250.[10]

On September 28, 2001, the bankruptcy court, sua sponte, entered an order directing Mr. Hale to provide additional information concerning the legal services he provided to the Debtors so the bankruptcy court could determine whether Mr. Hale's compensation was reasonable and appropriate under 11 U.S.C. § 329(b)[11]

Court, in turn, issued a supplemental order in which it found the disclosures still to be incomplete and ordered Mr. Hale to supplement the disclosures further within ten days.[16] Mr. Hale failed to provide any further itemization of legal services and expenses in compliance with the court's orders.

During this same time period, Mr. Hale contacted the Debtors and requested that they dismiss their bankruptcy case.[17] Mr. Hale prepared a motion to dismiss for the Debtors' signature, but the motion contained no provision for Mr. Hale to sign the document on behalf of the Debtors.[18] Mr. Hale did not explain to the Debtors why dismissal of their case was necessary.[19]

The Debtors became concerned that Mr. Hale's efforts to dismiss their bankruptcy case possibly could prejudice their interests, and as a result, they contacted a different attorney, J. Bart Green, III.[20] On October 25, 2001, the

Debtors appeared with Mr. Green at their meeting of creditors held pursuant to 11 U.S.C. § 341(a).[21] At the meeting, Mr. Green announced his appearance to the chapter 7 trustee and stated that the Debtors had just contacted him the previous day. Mr. Green further stated that it would be necessary to amend the Debtors' bankruptcy schedules that Mr. Hale had prepared and filed because they did not disclose significant assets.[22] The unscheduled property included two apartment complexes and a home in Pocatello, Idaho.[23]

Mr. Hale did not attend the meeting of creditors to help answer questions about the petition and schedules he had drafted for Mr. and Ms. Jones. The debtors also testified that Mr. Hale failed to advise the Debtors, prior to this meeting of creditors, about the complexities of the bankruptcy process so they could make an informed decision whether Mr. Hale should appear at the meeting of creditors and whether the debtors should appear without representation of counsel.[24]

On January 22, 2002, in response to the bankruptcy court's and the United States Trustee's proceedings to investigate Mr. Hale's representation of the Debtors, Mr. Hale filed a "Motion to Recuse, Vacate, and Amended Jury Trial Demand."[25] On February 22, 2002, Mr. Hale filed an additional or supplemental pleading entitled "Motion and Affidavit to Recuse, Vacate Hearing, and Jury Trial Demand."[26] In these documents, Mr. Hale suggested that the bankruptcy court, and other judges on the court, labored under impermissible bias; but he failed to support those statements with any credible evidence.[27] On April 4, 2002, the bankruptcy court entered a memorandum of decision denying both motions.[28]

On March 5, 2003, the bankruptcy court set an evidentiary hearing on October 7, 2003, to review Mr. Hale's attorney's fees under 11 U.S.C. § 329(b) and consider the United States Trustee's request for Rule 9011 sanctions.[29]

[29] Bankruptcy Docket Nos. 43 and 52

Following the completion of discovery, on August 20, 2003, the United States Trustee filed an amended motion for sanctions.[30] The amended motion sought sanctions against Mr. Hale for his breach of legal and ethical duties owed to the Debtors, including Mr. Hale's failure: (1) to sign the bankruptcy petition that he prepared, as required under Rule 9011(a), Fed. R. Bankr. P.; (2) to provide the Debtors with legal representation covering the normal, ordinary, and fundamental aspects of the bankruptcy case; (3) to obtain the informed consent of the Debtors to limit his representation of them; and (4) to prepare accurate and complete documents for filing in the case.

Based on 11 U.S.C. §§ 105(a) and 329(b), Fed. R. Bankr. P. 9011, and Idaho Rules of Professional Conduct 1.2(c) and 1.4(b), the United States Trustee requested both monetary and non-monetary sanctions, including: (1) disgorgement of all attorney's fees paid to Mr. Hale for legal services provided to the Debtors; and (2) an order limiting Mr. Hale's right to represent debtors in connection with bankruptcy cases filed in the District of Idaho and, in effect, require that he sign any bankruptcy petition that he prepares, attend the section 341(a) meeting of creditors, and otherwise provide reasonable and necessary services to represent a debtor in a bankruptcy case.[31]

The United States Trustee specifically provided notice to Mr. Hale that the amended motion would be heard on October 7, 2003, the same date previously set by the court.[32] On September 15, 2003, the United States Trustee filed a pre-hearing memorandum, which identified the evidence she intended to introduce and applicable law supporting the granting of sanctions and denial of attorney fees.[33] Further, on September 24, 2003, the United States Trustee filed a notice of her intent to present witnesses at the October 7, 2003 hearing.[34]

On October 5, 2003, Mr. Hale filed an omnibus "Motion to Dismiss, Response to Amended Motions, Request for Sanctions, Offer of Proof, and Renewed Request for a Jury Trial."[35] Mr. Hale advised the court in this pleading and in a separate document filed on the same date that he did not intend to appear at the October 7, 2003 hearing due to a medical ailment "that makes it almost impossible to travel," although he further stated that he intended to be in Salt Lake City, Utah, on the day of the hearing.[36] Mr. Hale specifically stated that he intended “to rest on the pleadings” and that “[m]y presence is not mandated or necessary to the adjudication of the issues, in my opinion.”[37] Although Mr. Hale had sought on at least one prior occasion to delay the proceedings due to alleged illness,[38] he did not request a continuance of the October 7, 2003 hearing.

Mr. Hale did not appear at the October 7, 2003 hearing. The United States Trustee called witnesses, who provided sworn testimony, and presented exhibits for admission into evidence. Based on the uncontroverted evidence, the bankruptcy court issued its memorandum of decision and order.[39]

Specifically, the bankruptcy court found that:

> The documents Hale prepared were inaccurate and poorly crafted.
>
> There was inadequate consultation and discussion with the Debtors.
> No real value was conferred on the Debtors for Hale’s efforts, and the Debtors had to hire new counsel to replicate virtually everything.[40]

The evidence before the Court establishes that the Debtors did not provide informed consent to Hale's limited representation. Indeed, had they understood that Hale would perform no more services, and was attempting to disclaim further contractual duties or ethical obligations, they would have refused to proceed. That they ultimately refused to proceed was not because Hale explained adequately to them his proposal for limiting his legal duties. They balked because they were "scared" when Hale attempted to persuade them to dismiss their bankruptcy case, something again marked by inadequate explanation or discussion, and gave them a draft motion to sign that made untrue assertions attributable to the Debtors.[41]

The Court will not countenance Hale's exclusion of critical and necessary services, or endorse the pretense of adequately advised and informed consent in Hale's bankruptcy cases. The Court can little afford to devote judicial resources to engage in factual inquiry in each and every case brought before it by Hale to determine the quality and quantity of information given to his debtors or evaluate the adequacy of allegedly "informed" consent to Hale's limited services. Such policing unreasonably burdens the Court, the UST and panel trustees and redirects critical resources away from the thousands of Idaho citizens who are forced to file for bankruptcy relief each year and the creditors and parties in interest in their cases. Such a dedication of resources due simply to the fact that Hale is unwilling to acknowledge and adhere to his professional responsibilities is wholly unwarranted.[42]

Based on these findings, the bankruptcy court disallowed all compensation and directed Mr. Hale to disgorge and refund to the Debtors the entire attorney's fee of $250 paid by the Debtors. That decision was based on Mr. Hale's failure to provide the Debtors with competent legal representation, prepare adequate and complete documents for filing, obtain the informed consent of his clients to the purported limitations on representation, and provide adequate itemization of his legal services.[43]

Further, the bankruptcy court awarded the United States Trustee a sanction of $2,000 under Rule 9011(c) based on Mr. Hale's violation of Rule 9011(a) by failing to sign the Debtors' petition and other misconduct.[44] The bankruptcy court also imposed non-monetary sanctions against Mr. Hale under Rule 9011(c) in the form of an order restricting and limiting Mr. Hale's legal practice before the court to require that he sign any bankruptcy petition that he prepares, attend the § 341 meeting of creditors, and otherwise provide reasonable and necessary services to a debtor he represents in a bankruptcy case.[45]

In the same order, the bankruptcy court also denied Mr. Hale's renewed request for a jury trial, incorporating its prior order denying similar requests.[46]

Mr. Hale filed a motion to reconsider and vacate the bankruptcy court's memorandum decision and order, which the bankruptcy court denied.[47] Mr. Hale appealed to the district court, which affirmed the bankruptcy court's order.[48] Mr. Hale subsequently appealed the district court's order to this Court.[49]

Summary of Argument

Mr. Hale engaged in serious misconduct in this case. He gave bad advice to his clients, significantly misstated their financial condition in the legal papers he prepared and filed in their bankruptcy case, and failed to adequately represent them in their case. Mr. Hale then attempted to frustrate the bankruptcy court's investigation of his conduct by twice submitting what the court correctly found were inadequate descriptions of the services he had provided to them. After the court and the United States Trustee began proceedings to formally review his conduct in this case, Mr. Hale sought to derail that proceeding by advising his clients to dismiss their bankruptcy case, even though that was not in their best interests. Then Mr. Hale failed to appear at the evidentiary hearing the bankruptcy court conducted to adjudicate the propriety of his conduct in this case.

Given the nature and scope of Mr. Hale's poor performance and misconduct, as adjudicated at that hearing, the bankruptcy court acted well within its broad discretion under section 329(b) of the Bankruptcy Code by denying his fees and requiring disgorgement. As authorized by section 329(b), the court ordered those fees returned to the Joneses, the clients Mr. Hale so egregiously mis-served.

The bankruptcy court also properly exercised its discretion under Rule 9011 by imposing a modest $2,000 sanction against Mr. Hale for his failure to sign the Debtors' bankruptcy petition and for his other misconduct. This was particularly appropriate given Mr. Hale's history of similar violations and the need to protect future clients of Mr. Hale by deterring him from engaging in similar misconduct in future cases.

Finally, the bankruptcy court correctly denied Mr. Hale's request for a jury trial in connection with proceedings to determine bankruptcy attorney fees under 11 U.S.C. § 329(b). Neither the Bankruptcy Code nor the Seventh Amendment granted Mr. Hale the right to a jury trial in that proceeding. Mr. Hale's request for a jury trial under section 329(b) failed under the United States Supreme Court's three-part test in Granfinanciera. The review of bankruptcy attorney compensation is an integral part of the bankruptcy regulatory process and thus a "public right" that Congress assigned to bankruptcy courts to aid in the proper administration of bankruptcy cases. To require a jury trial to determine the reasonableness of bankruptcy attorney fees under section 329(a) and in any of the numerous other routine administrative matters that frequently come before the bankruptcy courts would place an undue burden on the bankruptcy system.

Argument

I. The Bankruptcy Court Did Not Abuse Its Discretion by Disallowing and Requiring Disgorgement of All Attorney's Fees under 11 U.S.C. 329(b) that Hale Received from the Debtors in Connection with this Bankruptcy Case.

Section 329(b) of the Bankruptcy Code provides that the court may order the return of any payment of compensation received by an attorney representing a debtor in a bankruptcy case, if such compensation exceeds the reasonable value of the legal services performed, to the extent excessive.[50] Rule 2017(a), Fed. R.

Bankr. P., further provides that on motion by any party in interest or on the court's own initiative, after notice and a hearing, the court may determine whether any payment of money or any transfer of property made by a debtor in contemplation of the filing of a bankruptcy petition to an attorney, for services rendered or to be rendered, is excessive.[51]

The initial burden under section 329(b) is upon the attorney to justify the compensation charged in connection with a bankruptcy case.[52] The court has broad discretion under section 329(b) to disallow and require disgorgement of attorney compensation found to be excessive.[53] Here, the bankruptcy court afforded Mr. Hale adequate notice of the court's intent to review the attorney's fee disclosed on the compensation disclosure statement that he filed under section 329(a) and its implementing rule - Fed. R. Bankr. P. 2016(b), and properly requested further itemization of Mr. Hale's legal services. Mr. Hale filed two itemizations to support the attorney's fees he charged in connection with this case.[54] The court found the initial itemization to be incomplete because it failed to include a detailed and specific description of each service rendered in the case.[55] Thereafter, Mr. Hale filed a supplemental itemization,[56] which the court also found to be incomplete because it failed to identify the person who provided the service.[57] Thereafter, Mr. Hale failed to comply with the Court's order to provide further information. The majority of the services itemized by Mr. Hale could not be compensated because they were secretarial or clerical in nature, and their cost was included in the attorney's hourly rate.[58]

In addition to failing to provide proper itemization of his legal services, Mr. Hale failed to provide the Debtors with competent legal representation. He failed to prepare adequate and complete documents for filing, to attend the Debtors' section 341(a) meeting of creditors; to obtain the informed consent of the Debtors to the purported limitations on representation; and he attempted to dismiss the Debtors' bankruptcy case so he could avoid further court review. As a result, the Debtors were required to hire substitute counsel, at an additional cost of $1,000, to correct the many errors and omissions in their bankruptcy schedules and statements.[59] Based on the record below, the court properly concluded that Mr. Hale's legal services were of little or no value to the Debtors. The bankruptcy court correctly determined that Mr. Hale's attorney's fees were not reasonable and properly exercised its discretion to disallow and require disgorgement of such compensation under section 329(b).

II. Mr. Hale's Failure to Sign the Debtors' Bankruptcy Petition and Other Misconduct Warrant the Imposition of Sanctions under Bankruptcy Rule 9011(c).

Mr. Hale challenges both the authority of the bankruptcy court to impose sanctions against him and the procedures followed by the court in imposing such sanctions.[60] The bankruptcy court based its sanctions against Mr. Hale on Rule 9011(c), Fed. R. Bankr. P.[61] The court had broad discretion to impose sanctions

[59] Tab 20, Hearing Transcript, at page 59, lines 12-22, and page 52, lines 4-15, Appellee's Supplemental Excerpts of Record

[60] Mr. Hale raises some of these issues for the first time in this appeal, for example, whether the court followed the proper procedure in issuing sanctions. See Appellant's Opening Brief, at 6-9. Generally, this Court will not consider an issue raised for the first time on appeal. Bolker v. C.I.R., 760 F.2d 1039, 1042 (9th Cir. 1985).

[61] The bankruptcy court also recognized that the court has the inherent power to regulate the practice of law in cases before it and to sanction attorneys for bad faith conduct, but the court did not appear to invoke this power in the case below. Tab 21, at 17, 24, 30, Appellee's Supplemental Excerpts of Record; see Chambers v. NASCO, Inc., 501 U.S. 32, 43, 50, 111 S.Ct. 2123, 2132, 2135, 115 L.Ed. 2d 27

under Rule 9011(c),[62] These sanctions included a monetary sanction of $2,000 based on Mr. Hale's failure to sign the bankruptcy petition that he prepared and filed on behalf of the Debtors in this case and other misconduct.[63]

Rule 9011(a) requires that every petition, pleading, written motion, and other paper shall be signed by at least one attorney of record in the attorney's individual name.[64] This is consistent with the official bankruptcy petition form filed in bankruptcy cases. Official Form 1 to the Federal Rules of Bankruptcy Procedure, at page 3, contains a section entitled Signature of Attorney. In that section, the debtor's attorney must sign his name, and provide the attorney's address and other identifying information.

Mr. Hale left that section blank even though he prepared and filed the petition on the Debtors' behalf and also filed a compensation disclosure statement under Rule 2016(b). Even standing alone, this was a serious misconduct because Bankruptcy Rule 9011(a) requires that "[e]very petition ... shall be signed by at

Rule 9011(a)'s attorney signature requirement is buttressed by Bankruptcy Rule 9011(b), which independently provides that by presenting the petition to the court, whether by signing, filing, submitting, or later advocating the petition, the attorney is certifying that the petition is not being presented for any improper purpose, any legal contentions contained therein are warranted by applicable law, and any factual contentions have evidentiary support.[66]

Given Mr. Hale's failure to sign the petition he prepared and submitted for filing, the bankruptcy court acted appropriately by imposing a modest $2,000 sanction under Rule 9011. As the bankruptcy court properly recognized, Mr. Hale could not refuse to sign the documents he prepared as counsel.[67] That is particularly true here, where the record amply reveals that the bankruptcy petitions and schedules prepared by Mr. Hale contained numerous errors and omissions and that in fact he attempted to dismiss the bankruptcy case in an effort to avoid sanctions and disgorgement of his compensation, without regard to any injury that could have resulted to the Debtors from a dismissal of their case.

Rule 9011(c)(2) provides that a sanction imposed for violation of Rule 9011shall be limited to what is sufficient to deter repetition of such conduct or comparable conduct by others similarly situated. The sanction may include "directives of a nonmonetary nature, an order to pay a penalty into court, or, if imposed on motion and warranted for effective deterrence, an order directing payment to the movant of some or all of the reasonable attorneys' fees and other expenses incurred as a direct result of the violation."[68]

The bankruptcy court properly exercised its discretion in imposing monetary sanctions against Mr. Hale under Rule 9011(c) in the view of his past history of similar violations,[69] the need to deter him and others from repeating such misconduct, and the attorney's time and expenses incurred by the United States Trustee in prosecuting her motion for sanctions.[70]

The bankruptcy court also properly exercised its discretion in imposing non-monetary sanctions against Mr. Hale Rule under 9011(c), based upon the court's finding that monetary sanctions would not be sufficient to rectify the problems Mr. Hale's misconduct presented, especially given the history of litigation in the bankruptcy court arising from similar conduct by Mr. Hale in multiple prior cases.[71]

The record in this case reflects that Mr. Hale also failed to obtain the informed consent of the Debtors, which is required under the Idaho Rules of Professional Conduct before an attorney may properly limit his representation of clients.[72] Given that, the court acted within its discretion when it imposed non-monetary sanctions against Mr. Hale under Rule 9011(c) in the form of an order restricting and limiting Mr. Hale's legal practice before the court to require that he sign any bankruptcy petition that he prepares, attend the section 341(a) meeting of creditors, and otherwise provide reasonable and necessary services to represent a debtor in a bankruptcy case. The record here establishes it was not an abuse of discretion to conclude such non-monetary sanctions were necessary and appropriate to deter repetition of similar misconduct by Mr. Hale and others.

Contrary to Mr. Hale's assertions, the United States Trustee and the bankruptcy court followed the proper procedures under Rule 9011(c)(1) in requesting and imposing sanctions against Mr. Hale. At the outset of the case, the United States Trustee served notice on Mr. Hale of her intent to request sanctions if Mr. Hale did not sign an amended bankruptcy petition on behalf of the Debtors within 21 days from the date of the notice, in compliance with Rule 9011(c)(1). Following the completion of discovery, on August 20, 2003, the United States Trustee served her amended motion for sanctions on Mr. Hale, together with a notice setting a hearing on the amended motion on October 7, 2003, the same date previously set by the bankruptcy court for hearing on the court's proceedings to review Mr. Hale's compensation under section 329(a) and the United States Trustee prior request for sanctions.[73] The United States Trustee served her pre-hearing memorandum on Mr. Hale approximately three weeks before the hearing and her notice of intent to call witnesses approximately two weeks prior to the hearing.

On October 5, 2003, two days before the hearing, Mr. Hale advised the bankruptcy court that he did not intend to appear at the hearing due to a medical ailment that prevented him from traveling from his home in Pocatello, Idaho, to the court in Boise, Idaho, although he was apparently able to travel to Salt Lake City, Utah, on the date of the hearing.[74] Moreover, Mr. Hale expressly stated that he intended "to rest on the pleadings" and that "[m]y presence is not mandated or necessary to the adjudication of the issues, in my opinion."[75] Mr. Hale's statements to the court clearly manifested his considered decision to rest on the pleadings of record and not appear at the October 7, 2003 hearing. Mr. Hale made no request to continue or vacate the hearing. Based on the record below, the court correctly concluded that it was proper to proceed with the presentation of evidence by the United States Trustee and the Debtors at the time of the scheduled hearing, notwithstanding Mr. Hale's absence.[76]

Thus, notice of the amended motion was adequate and in compliance with Rule 9011(c)(1).

The bankruptcy court and the United States Trustee thus followed the proper procedures under Rule 9011(c)(1) and did not infringe on Mr. Hale's due process rights in any respect.

III. The Seventh Amendment Does Not Grant Mr. Hale the Right to a Jury Trial in a Proceeding to Determine Bankruptcy Attorney Fees under 11 U.S.C. § 329.

Finally, Mr. Hale suggests the Seventh Amendment requires that attorneys fees be determined by juries, not bankruptcy courts.[77] That suggestion is simply wrong.

A party's right to a trial by jury in a federal court derives from either of two sources: the Seventh Amendment to the United States Constitution or a federal statute.[78] As the Bankruptcy Code provides for no statutory right to a jury trial,[79] the only possible source upon which the right to a jury trial may be based is the Seventh Amendment to the United States Constitution.

Mr. Hale has no constitutional right to have his attorneys fees determined by a jury. The United States Supreme Court in the case of Granfinanciera, S.A. v. Nordberg[80] clarified many of the issues regarding the right to a jury trial in bankruptcy cases. In Granfinanciera, the Supreme Court established a three-part test for determining whether a Seventh Amendment right to a jury trial exists. The Supreme Court indicated that first, the trial court must compare the statutory cause of action with 18th-century English actions brought under common law at the time the Amendment was adopted. For the right to a jury trial to exist, the statutory action must be analogous to an 18th-century English common law cause of action that was tried at law.[81] Second, the trial court must review the remedy sought to determine whether it is legal or equitable in nature. Only if the remedy is legal does the right to a jury trial exist. The Supreme Court noted that greater weight should be given to the second part of the test.[82]

The Supreme Court went on to state that even if, on balance, the two factors above indicate that a party is entitled to a jury trial, Congress nonetheless may, by statute, assign the resolution of the claim to a non-Article III tribunal that does not use a jury as a fact finder if the cause of action involves a "public right." Under the "public rights doctrine," the applicable test to determine whether an action implicates a public right is whether "Congress, acting for a valid legislative purpose pursuant to its constitutional powers under Article I, [has] create[d] a seemingly 'private' right that is so closely integrated into a public regulatory scheme as to be a matter appropriate for agency resolution with limited involvement by the Article III judiciary."[83]

Mr. Hale's request for a jury trial in the bankruptcy court proceedings below failed under at least two of the three parts of the Granfinanciera test. First, a motion to review attorney's fees pursuant to 11 U.S.C. § 329(b) does not resemble any cause of action that would be heard in an 18th-century English court of law. The Supreme Court, in Wood v. Henderson,[84] addressed this issue in connection with section 60d of the Bankruptcy Act of 1898, a statutory predecessor to section 329. The Supreme Court held that the district court had jurisdiction over attorneys who resided in a different judicial district to determine the reasonableness of the compensation they charged the debtor in connection with a bankruptcy case. In reaching its decision, the Supreme Court determined that the district court's review of attorneys' fees did not resemble any cause of action which would be heard in an English court of law during the 18th century; the review was therefore not subject to a trial by jury.[85]

[85] Wood v. Henderson, 210 U.S. at 253

Second, the review of compensation of debtors' attorneys under section 329(b) is so integral to the bankruptcy regulatory process as to be a "public right." Congress, in enacting section 329(b), assigned the determination of such compensation to the bankruptcy courts to aid in the proper administration of cases under the Bankruptcy Code. Court review and regulation of attorneys' fees charged or received by debtors' counsel has been a feature of the bankruptcy system under both the Bankruptcy Act of 1898 and the current Bankruptcy Code. This review is part of the delicate balancing of creditor and debtor interests that Congress undertook when enacting the Bankruptcy Code and represents an integral part of the overall statutory scheme to ensure that debtors receive competent representation at a reasonable cost to debtors, creditors, and the estate.

In short, Congress, under its legislative authority granted by the Constitution, created a "public right" when it enacted section 329, and no right to a jury trial attaches to a determination, by the bankruptcy court, under that provision.[86] To require a jury trial to determine the reasonableness of bankruptcy attorney fees under section 329(a) and in any of the numerous other routine administrative matters that frequently come before the bankruptcy courts would place an undue burden on the bankruptcy system and threaten the continued efficient and economical operation of the bankruptcy courts.

This position is consistent with other circuit court rulings that have held in different contexts that attorney fees are determined by courts not juries. For example, the Fifth Circuit has held that a defendant in an action by the Resolution Trust Corporation to enforce a promissory note and guaranty agreement had no right to a jury determination of attorneys' fees awarded to the Resolution Trust Corporation.[87]

> In any event, the right to a trial by jury in federal courts is a matter of federal law. Simler v. Conner, 372 U.S. 221, 222, 83 S.Ct. 609, 610, 9 L.Ed.2d 691 (1963). Since there is no common law right to recover attorneys fees, the Seventh Amendment does not guarantee a trial by jury to determine the amount of reasonable attorneys fees. Empire State Ins. Co. v. Chafetz, 302 F.2d 828, 830 (5th Cir.1962). Although a jury as trier of fact may determine the amount of reasonable attorneys fees, see, e.g., Toren v. Braniff, Inc., 893 F.2d 763, 767 (5th Cir.1990); Farmland Indus. Inc. v. Andrews Transport Co., 888 F.2d 1066, 1067 (5th Cir.1989), Williams did not have an absolute right to have the issue decided by a jury.[88]

Similarly, the Second Circuit has held that there is no right to a jury trial to determine attorneys' fees in a stockholder's derivative suit to rescind a merger.[89]

[88] Resolution Trust Corp. v. Marshall, 939 F.2d at 279

[89] McGuire v. Russell Miller, Inc., 1 F.3d 1306, 1316 (2nd Cir. 1993)

The court stated as follows:

> To compute a reasonable amount of attorneys' fees in a particular case requires more than simply a report of the number of hours spent and the hourly rate. The calculation depends on an assessment of whether those statistics are reasonable, based on, among other things, the time and labor reasonably required by the case, the skill demanded by the novelty or complexity of the issues, the burdensomeness of the fees, the incentive effects on future cases, and the fairness to the parties. Such collateral issues do not present the kind of common-law questions for which the Seventh Amendment preserves a jury trial right.[90]

Finally, many federal statutes authorize the award of attorney fees under certain circumstances. For example, 7 U.S.C. § 2565; 15 U.S.C. § 4304(a)(1); 16 U.S.C. § 470w-4; 17 U.S.C. § 505; and 28 U.S.C. § 3905(a) all allow for the award of attorney fees. If Mr. Hale's contention were correct, the amount of the fees to be awarded under those statutes might also have to be determined by juries. The United States Trustee is unaware of any reported case where a federal court has ever reached such a novel conclusion.

Accordingly, Mr. Hale had no right to a trial by jury to determine what relief should be imposed under section 329, as Congress statutorily delegated the duty to make that determination to the bankruptcy court. As a result, the bankruptcy court's ruling did not infringe upon Mr. Hale's Seventh Amendment rights.

Federal Statutes and Rules

Federal Rules

State Rules

§ 105. Power of court

(a) The court may issue any order, process, or judgment that is necessary or appropriate to carry out the provisions of this title. No provision of this title providing for the raising of an issue by a party in interest shall be construed to preclude the court from, sua sponte, taking any action or making any determination necessary or appropriate to enforce or implement court orders or rules, or to prevent an abuse of process.

(b) Notwithstanding subsection (a) of this section, a court may not appoint a receiver in a case under this title.

(c) The ability of any district judge or other officer or employee of a district court to exercise any of the authority or responsibilities conferred upon the court under this title shall be determined by reference to the provisions relating to such judge, officer, or employee set forth in title 28. This subsection shall not be interpreted to exclude bankruptcy judges and other officers or employees appointed pursuant to chapter 6 of title 28 from its operation.

(d) The court, on its own motion or on the request of a party in interest–

(1) shall hold such status conferences as are necessary to further the expeditious and economical resolution of the case; and

(2) unless inconsistent with another provision of this title or with applicable Federal Rules of Bankruptcy Procedure, issue an order at any such conference prescribing such limitations and conditions as the court deems appropriate to ensure that the case is handled expeditiously and economically, including an order that--

(A) sets the date by which the trustee must assume or reject an executory contract or unexpired lease; or

(B) in a case under chapter 11 of this title–

(I) sets a date by which the debtor, or trustee if one has been appointed, shall file a disclosure statement and plan;

(ii) sets a date by which the debtor, or trustee if one has been appointed, shall solicit acceptances of a plan;

(iii) sets the date by which a party in interest other than a debtor may file a plan;

(iv) sets a date by which a proponent of a plan, other than the debtor, shall solicit acceptances of such plan;

(v) fixes the scope and format of the notice to be provided regarding the hearing on approval of the disclosure statement; or

(vi) provides that the hearing on approval of the disclosure statement may be combined with the hearing on confirmation of the plan.

329. Debtor's transactions with attorneys

(a) Any attorney representing a debtor in a case under this title, or in connection with such a case, whether or not such attorney applies for compensation under this title, shall file with the court a statement of the compensation paid or agreed to be paid, if such payment or agreement was made after one year before the date of the filing of the petition, for services rendered or to be rendered in contemplation of or in connection with the case by such attorney, and the source of such compensation.

(b) If such compensation exceeds the reasonable value of any such services, the court may cancel any such agreement, or order the return of any such payment, to the extent excessive, to–

(1) the estate, if the property transferred--

(A) would have been property of the estate; or

(B) was to be paid by or on behalf of the debtor under a plan under chapter 11, 12, or 13 of this title; or

(2) the entity that made such payment.

§ 341. Meetings of creditors and equity security holders

(a) Within a reasonable time after the order for relief in a case under this title, the United States trustee shall convene and preside at a meeting of creditors.

(b) The United States trustee may convene a meeting of any equity security holders.

(c) The court may not preside at, and may not attend, any meeting under this section including any final meeting of creditors. Notwithstanding any local court rule, provision of a State constitution, any otherwise applicable nonbankruptcy law, or any other requirement that representation at the meeting of creditors under subsection (a) be by an attorney, a creditor holding a consumer debt or any representative of the creditor (which may include an entity or an employee of an entity and may be a representative for more than 1 creditor) shall be permitted to appear at and participate in the meeting of creditors in a case under chapter 7 or 13, either alone or in conjunction with an attorney for the creditor. Nothing in this subsection shall be construed to require any creditor to be represented by an attorney at any meeting of creditors.

(d) Prior to the conclusion of the meeting of creditors or equity security holders, the trustee shall orally examine the debtor to ensure that the debtor in a case under chapter 7 of this title is aware of--

(1) the potential consequences of seeking a discharge in bankruptcy, including the effects on credit history;

(2) the debtor's ability to file a petition under a different chapter of this title;

(3) the effect of receiving a discharge of debts under this title; and

(4) the effect of reaffirming a debt, including the debtor's knowledge of the provisions of section 524(d) of this title.

(e) Notwithstanding subsections (a) and (b), the court, on the request of a party in interest and after notice and a hearing, for cause may order that the United States trustee not convene a meeting of creditors or equity security holders if the debtor has filed a plan as to which the debtor solicited acceptances prior to the commencement of the case.

§ 157. Procedures

(a) Each district court may provide that any or all cases under title 11 and any or all proceedings arising under title 11 or arising in or related to a case under title 11 shall be referred to the bankruptcy judges for the district.

(b)(1) Bankruptcy judges may hear and determine all cases under title 11 and all core proceedings arising under title 11, or arising in a case under title 11, referred under subsection (a) of this section, and may enter appropriate orders and judgments, subject to review under section 158 of this title.

(2) Core proceedings include, but are not limited to–

(A) matters concerning the administration of the estate;
(B) allowance or disallowance of claims against the estate or exemptions from property of the estate, and estimation of claims or interests for the purposes of confirming a plan under chapter 11, 12, or 13 of title 11 but not the liquidation or estimation of contingent or unliquidated personal injury tort or wrongful death claims against the estate for purposes of distribution in a case under title 11;
(C) counterclaims by the estate against persons filing claims against the estate;
(D) orders in respect to obtaining credit;
(E) orders to turn over property of the estate;
(F) proceedings to determine, avoid, or recover preferences;
(G) motions to terminate, annul, or modify the automatic stay;
(H) proceedings to determine, avoid, or recover fraudulent conveyances;
(I) determinations as to the dischargeability of particular debts;
(J) objections to discharges;
(K) determinations of the validity, extent, or priority of liens;
(L) confirmations of plans;
(M) orders approving the use or lease of property, including the use of cash collateral;
(N) orders approving the sale of property other than property resulting from claims brought by the estate against persons who have not filed claims against the estate;
(O) other proceedings affecting the liquidation of the assets of the estate or the adjustment of the debtor-creditor or the equity security holder relationship, except personal injury tort or wrongful death claims; and

(P) recognition of foreign proceedings and other matters under chapter 15 of title 11.

(3) The bankruptcy judge shall determine, on the judge's own motion or on timely motion of a party, whether a proceeding is a core proceeding under this subsection or is a proceeding that is otherwise related to a case under title 11. A determination that a proceeding is not a core proceeding shall not be made solely on the basis that its resolution may be affected by State law.

(4) Non-core proceedings under section 157(b)(2)(B) of title 28, United States Code, shall not be subject to the mandatory abstention provisions of section 1334(c)(2)

(5) The district court shall order that personal injury tort and wrongful death claims shall be tried in the district court in which the bankruptcy case is pending, or in the district court in the district in which the claim arose, as determined by the district court in which the bankruptcy case is pending.

§ 158. Appeals

(a) The district courts of the United States shall have jurisdiction to hear appeals [FN1]

(1) from final judgments, orders, and decrees;

(2) from interlocutory orders and decrees issued under section 1121(d) of title 11 increasing or reducing the time periods referred to in section 1121 of such title; and

(3) with leave of the court, from other interlocutory orders and decrees; and, with leave of the court, from interlocutory orders and decrees, of bankruptcy judges entered in cases and proceedings referred to the bankruptcy judges under section 157 of this title. An appeal under this subsection shall be taken only to the district court for the judicial district in which the bankruptcy judge is serving.

(d)(1) The courts of appeals shall have jurisdiction of appeals from all final decisions, judgments, orders, and decrees entered under subsections (a) and (b) of this section.

(2)(A) The appropriate court of appeals shall have jurisdiction of appeals described in the first sentence of subsection (a) if the bankruptcy court, the district court, or the bankruptcy appellate panel involved, acting on its own motion or on the request of a party to the judgment, order, or decree described in such first sentence, or all the appellants and appellees (if any) acting jointly, certify that--

(I) the judgment, order, or decree involves a question of law as to which there is no controlling decision of the court of appeals for the circuit or of the Supreme Court of the United States, or involves a matter of public importance;

(ii) the judgment, order, or decree involves a question of law requiring resolution of conflicting decisions; or

(iii) an immediate appeal from the judgment, order, or decree may materially advance the progress of the case or proceeding in which the appeal is taken; and if the court of appeals authorizes the direct appeal of the judgment, order, or decree.

(B) If the bankruptcy court, the district court, or the bankruptcy appellate panel--

(I) on its own motion or on the request of a party, determines that a circumstance specified in clause (I), (ii), or (iii) of subparagraph (A) exists; or

(ii) receives a request made by a majority of the appellants and a majority of appellees (if any) to make the certification described in subparagraph (A);
then the bankruptcy court, the district court, or the bankruptcy appellate panel shall make the certification described in subparagraph (A).

(C) The parties may supplement the certification with a short statement of the basis for the certification.

(D) An appeal under this paragraph does not stay any proceeding of the bankruptcy court, the district court, or the bankruptcy appellate panel from which the appeal is taken, unless the respective bankruptcy court, district court, or bankruptcy appellate panel, or the court of appeals in which the appeal in pending, issues a stay of such proceeding pending the appeal.

(E) Any request under subparagraph (B) for certification shall be made not later than 60 days after the entry of the judgment, order, or decree.

§ 1334. Bankruptcy cases and proceedings

(a) Except as provided in subsection (b) of this section, the district courts shall have original and exclusive jurisdiction of all cases under title 11.

(b) Except as provided in subsection (e)(2), and notwithstanding any Act of Congress that confers exclusive jurisdiction on a court or courts other than the district courts, the district courts shall have original but not exclusive jurisdiction of all civil proceedings arising under title 11, or arising in or related to cases under title 11.

(c)(1) Except with respect to a case under chapter 15 of title 11, nothing in this section prevents a district court in the interest of justice, or in the interest of comity with State courts or respect for State law, from abstaining from hearing a particular proceeding arising under title 11 or arising in or related to a case under title 11.

(2) Upon timely motion of a party in a proceeding based upon a State law claim or State law cause of action, related to a case under title 11 but not arising under title 11 or arising in a case under title 11, with respect to which an action could not have been commenced in a court of the United States absent jurisdiction under this section, the district court shall abstain from hearing such proceeding if an action is commenced, and can be timely adjudicated, in a State forum of appropriate jurisdiction.

(d) Any decision to abstain or not to abstain made under subsection (c) (other than a decision not to abstain in a proceeding described in subsection (c)(2)) is not reviewable by appeal or otherwise by the court of appeals under section 158(d), 1291, or 1292 of this title or by the Supreme Court of the United States under section 1254 of this title. Subsection (c) and this subsection shall not be construed to limit the applicability of the stay provided for by section 362 of title 11, United States Code, as such section applies to an action affecting the property of the estate in bankruptcy.

(e) The district court in which a case under title 11 is commenced or is pending shall have exclusive jurisdiction--

(1) of all the property, wherever located, of the debtor as of the commencement of such case, and of property of the estate; and

(2) over all claims or causes of action that involve construction of section 327 of title 11, United States Code, or rules relating to disclosure requirements under section 327.

Rule 2016. Compensation for Services Rendered and Reimbursement of Expenses

(b) Disclosure of compensation paid or promised to attorney for debtor

Every attorney for a debtor, whether or not the attorney applies for compensation, shall file and transmit to the United States trustee within 15 days after the order for relief, or at another time as the court may direct, the statement required by § 329 of the Code including whether the attorney has shared or agreed to share the compensation with any other entity. The statement shall include the particulars of any such sharing or agreement to share by the attorney, but the details of any agreement for the sharing of the compensation with a member or regular associate of the attorney's law firm shall not be required. A supplemental statement shall be filed and transmitted to the United States trustee within 15 days after any payment or agreement not previously disclosed.

Rule 2017. Examination of Debtor's Transactions with Debtor's Attorney

(a) Payment or transfer to attorney before order for relief

On motion by any party in interest or on the court's own initiative, the court after notice and a hearing may determine whether any payment of money or any transfer of property by the debtor, made directly or indirectly and in contemplation of the filing of a petition under the Code by or against the debtor or before entry of the order for relief in an involuntary case, to an attorney for services rendered or to be rendered is excessive.

...

Rule 9011. Signing of Papers; Representations to the Court; Sanctions; Verification and Copies of Papers

(a) Signing of papers

Every petition, pleading, written motion, and other paper, except a list, schedule, or statement, or amendments thereto, shall be signed by at least one attorney of record in the attorney's individual name. A party who is not represented by an attorney shall sign all papers. Each paper shall state the signer's address and telephone number, if any. An unsigned paper shall be stricken unless omission of the signature is corrected promptly after being called to the attention of the attorney or party.

(b) Representations to the court

By presenting to the court (whether by signing, filing, submitting, or later advocating) a petition, pleading, written motion, or other paper, an attorney or unrepresented party is certifying that to the best of the person's knowledge, information, and belief, formed after an inquiry reasonable under the circumstances,--

(1) it is not being presented for any improper purpose, such as to harass or to cause unnecessary delay or needless increase in the cost of litigation;
(2) the claims, defenses, and other legal contentions therein are warranted by existing law or by a nonfrivolous argument for the extension, modification, or reversal of existing law or the establishment of new law;
(3) the allegations and other factual contentions have evidentiary support or, if specifically so identified, are likely to have evidentiary support after a reasonable opportunity for further investigation or discovery; and
(4) the denials of factual contentions are warranted on the evidence or, if specifically so identified, are reasonably based on a lack of information or belief.

(c) Sanctions

If, after notice and a reasonable opportunity to respond, the court determines that subdivision (b) has been violated, the court may, subject to the conditions stated below, impose an appropriate sanction upon the attorneys, law firms, or parties that have violated subdivision (b) or are responsible for the violation.

(1) How initiated

(A) By motion

A motion for sanctions under this rule shall be made separately from other motions or requests and shall describe the specific conduct alleged to violate subdivision (b). It shall be served as provided in Rule 7004. The motion for sanctions may not be filed with or presented to the court unless, within 21 days after service of the motion (or such other period as the court may prescribe), the challenged paper, claim, defense, contention, allegation, or denial is not withdrawn or appropriately corrected, except that this limitation shall not apply if the conduct alleged is the filing of a petition in violation of subdivision (b). If warranted, the court may award to the party prevailing on the motion the reasonable expenses and attorney's fees incurred in presenting or opposing the motion. Absent exceptional circumstances, a law firm shall be held jointly responsible for violations committed by its partners, associates, and employees.

(B) On court's initiative

On its own initiative, the court may enter an order describing the specific conduct that appears to violate subdivision (b) and directing an attorney, law firm, or party to show cause why it has not violated subdivision (b) with respect thereto.

(2) Nature of sanction; limitations

A sanction imposed for violation of this rule shall be limited to what is sufficient to deter repetition of such conduct or comparable conduct by others similarly situated. Subject to the limitations in subparagraphs (A) and (B), the sanction may consist of, or include, directives of a nonmonetary nature, an order to pay a penalty into court, or, if imposed on motion and warranted for effective deterrence, an order directing payment to the movant of some or all of the reasonable attorneys' fees and other expenses incurred as a direct result of the violation.
(A) Monetary sanctions may not be awarded against a represented party for a violation of subdivision (b)(2).
(B) Monetary sanctions may not be awarded on the court's initiative unless the court issues its order to show cause before a voluntary dismissal or settlement of the claims made by or against the party which is, or whose attorneys are, to be sanctioned.

(3) Order

When imposing sanctions, the court shall describe the conduct determined to constitute a violation of this rule and explain the basis for the sanction imposed.

(d) Inapplicability to discovery

Subdivisions (a) through (c) of this rule do not apply to disclosures and discovery requests, responses, objections, and motions that are subject to the provisions of Rules 7026 through 7037.

(e) Verification

Except as otherwise specifically provided by these rules, papers filed in a case under the Code need not be verified. Whenever verification is required by these rules, an unsworn declaration as provided in 28 U.S.C. § 1746 satisfies the requirement of verification.

(f) Copies of signed or verified papers

When these rules require copies of a signed or verified paper, it shall suffice if the original is signed or verified and the copies are conformed to the original.

RULE 1.2: SCOPE OF REPRESENTATION

...

(c) A lawyer may limit the scope of the representation if the limitation is reasonable under the circumstances and the client gives informed consent.

RULE 1.4: COMMUNICATION

(a) A lawyer shall:

(1) promptly inform the client of any decision or circumstance with respect to which the clients informed consent, as defined in Rule 1.0(e), is required by these Rules;

(2) reasonably consult with the client about the means by which the clients objectives are to be accomplished;

(3) keep the client reasonably informed about the status of the matter;

(4) promptly comply with reasonable requests for information; including a request for an accounting as required by Rule 1.5(f); and

(5) consult with the client about any relevant limitation on the lawyers conduct when the lawyer knows that the client expects assistance not permitted by the Rules of Professional Conduct or other law.

(b) A lawyer shall explain a matter to the extent reasonably necessary to permit the client to make informed decisions regarding the representation

STATEMENT OF JURISDICTION

The bankruptcy court had jurisdiction under 28 U.S.C. §§ 157(a) and (b) to hear the underlying case, a voluntary petition under chapter 7 of the Bankruptcy Code, 11 U.S.C. § 701, et seq. Under 28 U.S.C. §§ 157(b)(2)(A) and (E), the bankruptcy court had jurisdiction to hear and determine both William Caldwell Hancock's 11 U.S.C. § 330 application for attorney's fees and the chapter 7 trustee's 11 U.S.C. § 542 turnover complaint. In a decision entered March 7, 2007, the bankruptcy court awarded no fees to Mr. Hancock for his representation of the debtor in this bankruptcy case.[1] Adversary Record ("AR") 49. The court also granted the trustee's motion for summary judgment that funds be turned over. AR 50. On March 16, 2007, Mr. Hancock filed a timely motion to reconsider the March 7 decision and order. Bankruptcy Record ("BR") 82. On April 18, 2007, the bankruptcy court denied the reconsideration motion. AR 57. On April 30, 2007, Mr. Hancock filed a timely notice of appeal of the March 7 decision and order.[2] BR 86; see Hancock Opening Brief ("HOB") at 4. This Court has jurisdiction over this appeal under 28 U.S.C. § 158(a).

STATEMENT OF THE ISSUES

1. Did the bankruptcy court abuse its broad discretion to deny an attorney's application for fees given the court found the attorney had "obscured" the source of his fees?
2. Assuming the bankruptcy court did not abuse its broad discretion in denying fees, did the bankruptcy court err in ordering turnover of funds in the attorney's possession that were estate property?
3. If the bankruptcy court abused its discretion in denying fees, does the attorney gain automatic priority

[1] The bankruptcy court made express findings of fact and conclusions of law in its memorandum opinion, but did not enter an order denying Mr. Hancock's fees. Therefore, by separate motion, the United States Trustee requests that this Court stay this appeal and order a limited remand, so the bankruptcy court can take the ministerial act of entering an order in the underlying bankruptcy case denying Mr. Hancock's fee application for the reasons stated in its memorandum opinion.

[2] Although Mr. Hancock's notice of appeal also cites the April 18 order denying the motion to reconsider, his opening brief makes no reference to or argument regarding this order. See BR 86, Hancock Opening Brief ("HOB"). Mr. Hancock has therefore waived appeal of the order. See, e.g., McCalvin v. Yukins, 444 F.3d 713, 723 (6th Cir. 2006) ("It is well established that issues not raised by an appellant in its opening brief . . . are deemed waived.").

for payment from estate funds because of a state-law attorney's lien?

STATEMENT OF THE CASE

This appeal challenges (1) a bankruptcy court decision denying an attorney's application under 11 U.S.C. § 330 for fees for representing a debtor-company in its bankruptcy case, and (2) a bankruptcy court order requiring that the attorney turn over bankruptcy estate funds to the trustee in the case.

After the company's bankruptcy case converted from chapter 11 to chapter 7, the attorney filed an application under 11 U.S.C. § 330 for fees for his chapter 11 bankruptcy services. The chapter 7 trustee, arguing that the attorney had not properly disclosed the source of the retainer as required by 11 U.S.C. § 329(a). The trustee also moved for summary judgment on her turnover complaint under 11 U.S.C. § 542(a), arguing that the attorney must turn over the funds because it was property of the bankruptcy estate. After considering Mr. Hancock's statements and arguments, the bankruptcy court denied his fee application. The bankruptcy court also granted the trustee summary judgment on her turnover complaint. This appeal followed.

STATEMENT OF FACTS

I. Statutory Framework

A bankruptcy case is commenced by the filing of a petition. 11 U.S.C. § 301(a). By filing a petition, a company becomes a "debtor." See 11 U.S.C. § 101(13). When a petition is filed, practically all of the debtor's property as of that date becomes property of the bankruptcy estate. 11 U.S.C. § 541(a).

A petition filed under the reorganization provisions of chapter 11 of the Bankruptcy Code may be converted to a liquidation case under chapter 7 on request of the United States Trustee. See 11 U.S.C. §§ 1112(b),[3] 701, et seq. A private trustee serves in each chapter 7 case. See 11 U.S.C. §§ 701-704.

The chapter 7 trustee's duties include taking possession of all estate property and liquidating it for distribution among the creditors who have filed claims against the estate. See 11 U.S.C. § 704(1). All third parties in possession or control of property of the estate must turn over such property to the trustee. 11 U.S.C. § 542(a). Trustees can request turnover of estate property. Under Bankruptcy Rule 7001(1), they can file complaints to compel turnover if third parties violate their obligation under § 542(a) to turn over estate funds voluntarily. See Fed. R. Bankr. P. 7001(1).

[3] This is the version of section 1112(b) that applied to cases filed prior to October 17, 2005, including this case. Section 1112(b) was amended for bankruptcy cases filed beginning October 17, 2005, by the Bankruptcy Abuse Prevention and Consumer Protection Act of 2005.

The Bankruptcy Code also regulates the retention, compensation and payment of attorneys in bankruptcy matters. To request fees from bankruptcy estate funds, attorneys for debtors in chapter 11 cases must have been appointed by the bankruptcy court under 11 U.S.C. § 327(a) as debtor's counsel. 11 U.S.C. §§ 327(a), 1107(a); Lamie v. United States Trustee, 540 U.S. 526, 529 (2004) (affirming the lower court's ruling that attorneys may not be compensated from the estate "unless the attorney has been appointed under § 327 of the Code"). To be approved by the court under § 327, attorneys must be disinterested and have no adverse interest. 11 U.S.C. §§ 327(a), (c), 101(14).

If an attorney's employment is approved under § 327, a bankruptcy court "may" award fees under 11 U.S.C. § 330. See In re Airspect Air, Inc., 385 F.3d 915, 922 (6th Cir. 2004) (holding a bankruptcy judge "has the discretion to determine the amount of a professional's payment separately from authorizing the professional's employment" under section 327).

Section 330(a)(1) provides that a court's fee award is subject to 11 U.S.C. § 329. Under § 329(a), an attorney representing a debtor in a bankruptcy case has a statutory obligation to file a statement with the bankruptcy court disclosing all compensation paid and its source during the year preceding the commencement of a bankruptcy case. 11 U.S.C. § 329(a). Bankruptcy Rule 2016(b) implements § 329(a). Fed. R. Bankr. P. 2016(b). The rule requires "[e]very attorney for a debtor, whether or not the attorney applies for compensation," to file the "statement required by § 329 of the Code." Id.

Under § 329(b), the court may order the return to the estate of an attorney's compensation if the compensation is not reasonable. See 11 U.S.C. § 329(b).[4]

The United States Trustee is a senior Department of Justice official charged by Congress with responsibility for supervising the administration of bankruptcy cases. See 28 U.S.C. §§ 581, 586(a)(3). The United States Trustee may raise, appear, and be heard on any issue in a bankruptcy case. 11 U.S.C. § 307. See generally Morganstern v. Revco D.S. Inc. (In re Revco D.S., Inc.), 898 F.2d 498, 499-500 (6th Cir. 1990) (affirming the appellate standing of United States Trustees and explaining that United States Trustees oversee the bankruptcy process, protect the public interest, and ensure that bankruptcy cases are conducted according to law). Under 28 U.S.C. § 586(a)(3), the United States Trustee is required to review applications for compensation under 11 U.S.C. § 330 and file objections if appropriate.

II. Factual Background and Proceedings Below

A. The chapter 11 filing

On February 10, 2004, Innovative Entertainment Concepts, Inc. ("Innovative") filed a voluntary petition under chapter 11 of the Bankruptcy Code. BR 1. By motion filed April 27, 2004, Innovative sought court permission under 11 U.S.C. § 327(a) to employ Mr. Hancock as its bankruptcy counsel. BR 13.

Under 11 U.S.C. § 329(a) and Bankruptcy Rule 2016(b), Mr. Hancock was required to disclose all funds he received, and their source, for representing Innovative. On February 10, 2004, Mr. Hancock disclosed that he took a $10,000 pre-petition retainer from Innovative for services he might provide in the bankruptcy case. BR 1, Disclosure of Compensation. Mr. Hancock certified that there were no fees due him when the petition was filed. Id.

In his § 329(a) and Rule 2016(b) disclosure, Mr. Hancock certified that he was making "a complete statement of any agreement or arrangement for payment to me for representation of the debtor(s) in this bankruptcy proceeding." Id.

[4] Under Bankruptcy Rule 2017(a), any party in interest may bring a motion asking the bankruptcy court to determine whether monies paid to an attorney in contemplation of the filing of a bankruptcy petition are excessive. Fed. R. Bankr. P. 2017(a).

As part of Innovative's request for court approval under 11 U.S.C. § 327 to employ Mr. Hancock as its attorney, Mr. Hancock certified that he had no interest adverse to the bankruptcy estate, was disinterested, and had "no connection of any kind with the debtor, creditors, or any other party in interest." BR 13. He also certified that he would not be paid from property of the estate until his fees had been approved by the court. Id.

Relying on Mr. Hancock's representations, the bankruptcy court approved his employment under 11 U.S.C. § 327(a) on June 10, 2004. BR 16.

B. Innovative's conversion to chapter 7

On August 13, 2004, the bankruptcy court converted Innovative's case to a chapter 7 liquidation on the unopposed motion of the United States Trustee. BR 24. In the chapter 7 case, Ms. Susan Limor was appointed the trustee. BR 25.

Because Mr. Hancock was holding estate funds in the retainer, and because he had never received authority under § 330 to take any estate funds for his chapter 11 work, the chapter 7 trustee filed a complaint under 11 U.S.C. § 542 in the bankruptcy court for turnover of the estate funds in the retainer. BR 36, AR 1. The trustee contended that the retainer was property of the estate and Mr. Hancock was not entitled to retain the retainer funds. Id.

Mr. Hancock did not file an answer to the complaint, and did not file any § 330 fee application. Therefore, on March 10, 2006, the chapter 7 trustee filed a motion for default judgment. AR 12. That same day, Mr. Hancock filed an answer to the complaint. AR 13. In a pretrial statement also filed March 10, Mr. Hancock contended for the first time that the retainer funds were borrowed by the debtor "specifically earmarked" for attorney fees. AR 14. He provided no documentation of any such agreement.

C. Mr. Hancock's § 330 fee application

On May 20, 2006, more than twenty months after Innovative's case converted to chapter 7, Mr. Hancock filed a "final" fee application under 11 U.S.C. § 330 for services he had provided in the chapter 11 case. BR 43. He asked for $16,590, including the $10,000 retainer. Id.

Despite his February 2004 certification under 11 U.S.C. § 329(a) and Bankruptcy Rule 2016(b) that Innovative was the source of the estate funds he held in the retainer, Mr. Hancock contended in the application, for the first time, that the $10,000 retainer was not Innovative's property. Id. Instead, he claimed that the mother of Innovative's president had given Mr. Hancock the funds in trust. Id. Mr. Hancock provided no documentation of any such arrangement. Mr. Hancock's notice on his § 330 fee application set a hearing date of June 20, 2006. Id.

On May 26, 2006, the chapter 7 trustee filed an objection to Mr. Hancock's § 330 application for fees. The trustee argued fees should be denied because Mr. Hancock's two certifications of the sources of his fees were in fundamental conflict. BR 44. The trustee also argued that, despite Mr. Hancock's certification in April 2004 that he had no conflicts of interest, Mr. Hancock had a conflict prohibited by § 327(a), if the source of Mr. Hancock's retainer was the mother of Innovative's president, as Mr. Hancock now claimed. That was so, the trustee argued, because the mother is a significant creditor of Innovative. Id. On May 26, the trustee also filed a motion for summary judgment on her § 542(a) turnover complaint. AR 21.

Mr. Hancock did not respond to the trustee's objection to his fee application. Mr. Hancock also failed to appear at the hearing on his application for fees. BR 46. On June 22, 2006, the bankruptcy court denied Mr. Hancock's fee application, based on "the trustee's objection, statements in court, and for good cause shown." Id. On June 22, the court also granted the trustee's motion for summary judgment on turnover. AR 25.

On July 3, 2006, Mr. Hancock asked the bankruptcy court to set aside the denial of his fee application, claiming he calendared the wrong date for the hearing. BR 49. Mr. Hancock alleged again that the mother of Innovative's president was the source of the retainer. Id. He also claimed that the retainer was not property of the estate. Id. The chapter 7 trustee and the United States Trustee opposed Mr. Hancock's motion. BR 51, 53. Mr. Hancock also moved to set aside the order granting summary judgment to the trustee on turnover. AR 26. The trustee opposed this motion. AR 29-30.

On September 8, 2006, the bankruptcy court set aside its denial of Mr. Hancock's fee application. BR 63. The court also set aside its summary judgment order. AR 35.

On November 14, 2006, Mr. Hancock filed a new disclosure statement under § 329(a) and Bankruptcy Rule 2016(b). BR 74. In it, Mr. Hancock alleged he had received misinformation from his client regarding the ownership of the retainer. Id. Mr. Hancock also admitted he knew before filing the petition that Innovative "had no funds to pay" a chapter 11 retainer. Id. Nevertheless, Mr. Hancock also concluded that his original February 2004 disclosure statement was accurate that Innovative paid the retainer. Id. Mr. Hancock conceded that the retainer is property of the estate. Id. These statements conflicted with Mr. Hancock's contentions earlier in 2006 that the retainer was paid by the mother of Innovative's president, that the retainer was held in trust, and that it was not Innovative's property. Compare id. with BR 43.

On December 8, 2006, Mr. Hancock filed a "verified" motion for summary judgment requesting dismissal of the trustee's § 542(a) turnover complaint. AR 46. While conceding that the retainer was estate property, Mr. Hancock argued turnover was precluded under state law. Id. He contended he had a state-law attorney's lien that rendered him a secured creditor and defeated the trustee's right to turnover. Id. In its financial schedules filed with the bankruptcy court, Innovative had not disclosed any secured creditors or claims, and did not disclose the existence of any person with an attorney's lien or any other statutory lien. BR 10, Schedule D.

On January 9, 2007, the bankruptcy court heard the merits of Mr. Hancock's § 330 fee application and the summary judgment motion on the trustee's § 542(a) turnover complaint. See AR 49, AR docket entry dated Jan. 9, 2007.

III. The Bankruptcy Court's Decision

Based on the record created by the parties and following the two hearings on Mr. Hancock's fee application, the bankruptcy court denied all of Mr. Hancock's requested fees under §§ 329 and 330 in a memorandum opinion entered March 7, 2007. AR 49.

The bankruptcy court ruled Mr. Hancock had no right to fees under § 330 because had violated his duty of disclosure under § 329(a) and Bankruptcy Rule 2016(b). Relying upon In re Downs, 103 F.3d 472 (6th Cir. 1996) and In re Kisseberth, 273 F.3d 714 (6th Cir. 2001), the bankruptcy court found that Mr. Hancock's conduct was not "a simple technical breach" of his disclosure obligations under § 329 and Rule 2016. AR 49 at 9.

Instead, the court found that Mr. Hancock's "shifting" explanations for the source of his retainer "seemed opportunistically to respond to challenges" raised by the trustee and United States Trustee. Id. at 9. Referring to Mr. Hancock's most recent explanation in November 2006, the bankruptcy court found that Mr. Hancock "knew that the debtor did not have funds to pay his retainer, and that the funds would have to come from elsewhere." Id. at 10. Nevertheless, it found that Mr. Hancock "obscured" the source of the retainer until he was pursued by the chapter 7 trustee. Id. Finally, the court found that some of Mr. Hancock's disclosures called his disinterestedness into question. Id.

The bankruptcy court concluded that Mr. Hancock "did not respect the duties imposed on attorneys by the Bankruptcy Code and Rules." Id. at 10. See 11 U.S.C. § 329(a); Fed. R. Bankr. P. 2016(b). Specifically, the bankruptcy court found the "[t]rustee and the United States Trustee have had to claw the facts out of Hancock." The result, the court found, was "a long and expensive litigation to get what Hancock was obligated to give in the first instance without compulsion: complete and accurate disclosure of the nature and source of the retainer." Id. at 9-10.

On March 7, 2007, the bankruptcy court also granted summary judgment for the trustee, ordering that Mr. Hancock turn over the $10,000 retainer to the trustee. See AR 50.

IV. The Hearing on Reconsideration

On March 16, 2007, Mr. Hancock filed a timely motion for reconsideration of the bankruptcy court's denial of his fees and the turnover order. BR 82. The trustee and the United States Trustee opposed the motion. AR 53,54.

At the April 10, 2007 hearing on Mr. Hancock's motion, the bankruptcy court denied reconsideration. It observed that there is "significant discretion" in bankruptcy courts to disallow fees under §§ 329 and 330. BR 91 at 2. Mr. Hancock had, the court observed, "exercised his full and fair opportunity to present his view of what happened." Id. at 3. The bankruptcy court also reiterated that the retainer is property of the estate and should be turned over to the trustee. Id. at 4.

STANDARD OF REVIEW

This Court reviews the bankruptcy court's determination of the proper amount of attorney's fees for an abuse of discretion. In re Kisseberth, 273 F.3d 714, 720 (6th Cir. 2001). It will find an abuse of discretion only upon a "definite and firm conviction that the trial court committed a clear error of judgment." Id. (internal quotation omitted). This Court reviews the bankruptcy court's factual findings for clear error. In re Brinley, 403 F.3d 415, 418 (6th Cir. 2005).

This Court reviews bankruptcy court orders granting summary judgment under a de novo standard. In re Cook, 457 F.3d 561, 565 (6th Cir. 2006).

SUMMARY OF ARGUMENT

The bankruptcy court properly exercised its broad discretion to deny fees under §§ 329 and 330. Because Mr. Hancock failed to meet his burden under § 329, the district court did not err in denying his § 330 fee application. The bankruptcy court was justified in denying fees given its findings that Mr. Hancock committed more than a "mere technical breach" of his § 329 disclosure duties and sought to deceive the chapter 7 trustee, the United States Trustee, and the court concerning the source of his fees.

As the bankruptcy court found, Mr. Hancock shifted his original account of the facts once his right to keep his fees was challenged. After Mr. Hancock's new account was challenged, he shifted the facts a second time. As the bankruptcy court recognized, Sixth Circuit precedent makes clear that bankruptcy courts have discretion to deny all fees under 11 U.S.C. § 329 when an attorney willfully disregards the disclosure duties of the Bankruptcy Code. In re Downs, 103 F.3d 472, 479 (6th Cir. 1996) . Denying Mr. Hancock's fees was within this standard. Even if this Court interprets the bankruptcy court as finding Mr. Hancock's violations were inadvertent or negligent, Sixth Circuit precedent permits bankruptcy courts discretion to deny all fees. Kisseberth, 273 F.3d at 721.

If the bankruptcy court did not abuse its discretion in denying Mr. Hancock's fees, Mr. Hancock has no ground to keep the retainer funds. He concedes that this money is property of the estate. See 11 U.S.C. § 541(a). Under federal law he had to turn over this property to the trustee. 11 U.S.C. § 542(a). The chapter 7 trustee had every right to compel turnover when Mr. Hancock refused to turn over the estate funds.

If this Court concludes that the bankruptcy court abused its discretion in denying Mr. Hancock's fees, it should leave consideration of Mr. Hancock's state-law lien argument for the bankruptcy court on remand, because it was not passed upon below. But should this Court reach this lien argument, it should reject it on the merits.

ARGUMENT

I. The bankruptcy court did not abuse its broad discretion to deny an attorney's § 330 application for fees under that section and § 329 when it found the attorney had "obscured" the source of his fees.

A. Given Mr. Hancock's pattern of shifting explanations for his retainer, the bankruptcy court acted within Sixth Circuit standards in denying all fees.

The bankruptcy court did not abuse its broad discretion under §§ 329 and 330 to completely deny fees given Mr. Hancock's pattern of shifting explanations for the source of his retainer. A court's ability to award fees under § 330 is subject to § 329. See 11 U.S.C. § 330(a)(1). Mr. Hancock failed to meet his § 329 burden. See In re Robinson, 189 Fed. Appx. 371 at *2 (6th Cir. 2006) ("The burden of proof on all issues under 11 U.S.C. § 329 is on the attorney.") (unpublished decision). Therefore, given this failure by Mr. Hancock, the court did not abuse its discretion in denying his § 330 fee application.

Section 329 of the Bankruptcy Code and Bankruptcy Rule 2016(b) set clear mandatory disclosure duties for bankruptcy attorneys and bankruptcy courts have broad powers to strictly enforce these duties. "An attorney in a bankruptcy case has an affirmative duty to disclose fully and completely all fee arrangements and payments." Kisseberth,73 F.3d 714 at 720. Section 329 and Bankruptcy Rule 2016(b), which require this complete disclosure, "are designed to protect both creditors and the debtor against overreaching attorneys." Id. at 721. To ensure such protection, bankruptcy courts have "broad" authority to deny "any and all compensation where an attorney fails to satisfy the requirement of the Code and Rules." Id; see Downs, 103 F.3d at 478 ("In cases involving an attorney's failure to disclose his fee arrangement under § 329 or Rule 2016 . . . the courts have consistently denied all fees.").[5]

In this case, the bankruptcy court's conclusion that Mr. Hancock violated these disclosure duties clearly reflects the record before the court. See AR 49 at 9-10. Mr. Hancock certified in February 2004 that Innovative was the source of his retainer and that he had made a complete statement of his fee arrangement. Id. at 2. See BR 1, Disclosure. Mr. Hancock's May 2006 fee application was, however, inconsistent with his certification. The application newly asserted, without accompanying evidence, that Innovative was not the source of the retainer. BR 43. Instead, Mr. Hancock claimed the retainer was actually someone else's property and was subject to a trust agreement. Id. In light of Mr. Hancock's statement that the mother of Innovative's president was the source of the retainer, the chapter 7 trustee objected to Mr. Hancock's application, stating that Mr. Hancock's employment in the case may have violated the disinterestedness requirement of § 327.

[5] The Sixth Circuit's case law on this subject is consistent with other circuit court law. See, e.g., In re Park-Helena Corp., 63 F.3d 877, 882 (9th Cir. 1995) ("Even a negligent or inadvertent failure to disclose fully relevant information may result in a denial of all requested fees.").

As a second hearing on his fee application approached, Mr. Hancock's explanations continued to shift. See BR 74. Abandoning his May 2006 account, he amended his disclosure statement in November 2006 to revert to his original certification that his retainer came from Innovative. Id. Conceding that the retainer was property of the estate, see id. and AR 46, Mr. Hancock nevertheless argued that the trustee had no right to take the retainer because he had a state-law attorney's lien in it. AR 46. But none of Innovative's filings with the court had disclosed any lien held by Mr. Hancock or any secured claim whatsoever.

Based on this record, the bankruptcy court did not clearly err in finding that (1) Mr. Hancock's violation of his disclosure duties was not a "mere technical breach," (2) Mr. Hancock did not respect his disclosure duties and basic disclosure facts had to be "claw[ed] out" of him, (3) Mr. Hancock had "obscured" the source of his retainer after knowing early on that Innovative lacked funds for a retainer, and (4) Mr. Hancock's explanations shifted opportunistically to respond to challenges raised by the chapter 7 trustee and United States Trustee.

Given these findings, the bankruptcy court did not abuse its discretion in denying all fees to Mr. Hancock. To the contrary, doing so complied fully with Sixth Circuit precedent. In Downs, the court held that a bankruptcy court abused its discretion in allowing an attorney to retain any fees, when the attorney "acted affirmatively" to conceal his fee arrangement and only disclosed the source of his retainer at the last possible opportunity. 103 F.3d at 479. Downs reasoned that this conduct was "willful disregard" of the "fiduciary duties" imposed by 11 U.S.C. § 329. Id. at 480. In Mr. Hancock's case, as in Downs, the finding of an intent to deceive supports denial of all fees.

Even if this Court interprets the bankruptcy court as finding that Mr. Hancock committed only inadvertent errors or simple negligence in his § 329 disclosure duties, Kisseberth establishes that the bankruptcy court still did not err in denying all fees. In Kisseberth, the Sixth Circuit held that a bankruptcy court did not abuse its discretion in denying an attorney's fees for incomplete disclosures, even though the attorney may not have intended to deceive the court or the debtors. 273 F.3d at 721. In Mr. Hancock's case, the bankruptcy court found that the disclosure violations were beyond a "mere technical breach," indicating that the violations were at the very least inadvertent or negligent. This finding provides ample support for its exercise of discretion in denying all fees.

B. Mr. Hancock's arguments mischaracterize controlling law and the facts of this case.

Mr. Hancock's argues that the bankruptcy court abused its discretion because it awarded him no fees. See HOB 17. But this is exactly what the Sixth Circuit empowered courts to do in Downs and Kisseberth. Even Mr. Hancock's opening brief concedes that his disclosures could be described as "confusing," "internally contradictory," and "disconcerting." HOB 17, 19. The Sixth Circuit in Kisseberth affirmed the denial of most of an attorney's fees without any finding of bad intent. Under Kisseberth, Mr. Hancock's concessions alone justify denial of fees. Mr. Hancock's suggestion that it was error to deny any of his fees is completely bereft of legal support. See Downs, 103 F.3d at 478; Kisseberth, 273 F.3d at 721.

Mr. Hancock also mischaracterizes his conduct as occurring only well after all chapter 11 services were provided. HOB 19. First, that is legally irrelevant. Second, in fact, the shifting disclosures that troubled the bankruptcy court date back to the day Mr. Hancock filed Innovative's chapter 11 petition. See BR 13. When Mr. Hancock filed a belated fee application, his account of the facts behind his retainer conflicted with those certified in his original disclosure. See BR 43.

Mr. Hancock relies heavily on an unpublished opinion that does not serve his case.[6] See In re McCrary & Dunlap Construction Co., 79 Fed. Appx. 770 (6th Cir. 2003) (unpublished decision). In McCrary, the Sixth Circuit issued a non-precedential opinion that noted a bankruptcy court has discretion to reduce a fee award rather than deny it entirely when the bankruptcy concludes a law firm's failures to provide complete disclosure were merely technical violations rather than actions showing willful disregard for the Code. Id. at 781. Thus, McCrary upheld bankruptcy court discretion. In Mr. Hancock's case, the bankruptcy court similarly exercised discretion to deny all fees. This exercise of discretion should be upheld. The bankruptcy court expressly rejected the conclusion that Mr. Hancock's violations were not a "simple technical beach." AR 49 at 9. The bankruptcy court found, at a minimum, there was a negligent failure to disclose. Under Kisseberth, that was sufficient to deny all fees. McCrary could not and did not overrule this precedential decision. In fact, McCrary expressly recognized that Kisseberth established that a bankruptcy court does not abuse its discretion if it denies all fees for merely negligent violations of § 329 and Rule 2016(b). McCrary, 79 Fed. Appx. at 779. Thus, the bankruptcy court had ample discretion to deny fees given its findings.

Finally, Mr. Hancock claims wrongly that the bankruptcy court "demands perfection where perfection is unattainable." HOB 16. But the bankruptcy simply asked that he accurately disclose the source of his compensation. Mr. Hancock has specialized in bankruptcy law for more than 25 years. See BR 13 at 2. As the Sixth Circuit recognized in Kisseberth, the statutory disclosure requirements represent an objective means to prevent overreaching by attorneys. Mr. Hancock must be capable of garnering the fundamental facts necessary for proper representation under the Bankruptcy Code.

II. The bankruptcy court did not err in ordering turnover of funds that were property of the estate.

Assuming the bankruptcy court did not abuse its broad discretion in denying Mr. Hancock's § 330 fee application, Mr. Hancock has no right to the funds in the retainer. Under § 542(a), he must turn them over to the trustee.

The Sixth Circuit recently held that 11 U.S.C. § 330 "establishes the exclusive means of allowing a claim for professional fees in a bankruptcy proceeding." In re 5900 Assocs., Inc., 468 F.3d 326, 328 (6th Cir. 2006). In this case, the bankruptcy court denied Mr. Hancock's § 330 fee request under Downs and Kisseberth. Under federal law, there is no way he can be paid unless that denial were an abuse of discretion. As we explain above, it was not.

Moreover, it is undisputed that the $10,000 retainer Mr. Hancock took from the debtor before the debtor filed bankruptcy is property of the estate. See AR 46.[7] Because Mr. Hancock lost his § 330 application for fees, Mr. Hancock had no right under federal law to use estate property to pay his fees. Instead, 11 U.S.C. § 542 required Mr. Hancock to turn the retainer over to the trustee. For that reason, requiring turnover of the estate property was completely proper as a matter of law. Therefore, the bankruptcy court did not err in granting summary judgment to the trustee on her § 542 complaint.

III. Mr. Hancock lacked a valid attorney' s lien, and in any event could not use state law to supersede the Bankruptcy Code's priority scheme.

If this Court were to rule that the bankruptcy court abused its discretion in denying Mr. Hancock's fees, Mr. Hancock suggests this Court should bestow upon him a "priority right of payment." HOB 17. He suggests this is proper because he holds a supposed state-law attorney's lien over the $10,000 retainer.[8] Mr. Hancock is mistaken for two reasons. First, this issue was not passed on by the bankruptcy court and is a matter for the bankruptcy court on remand. Second, should this Court reach the argument, it lacks merit.

[7] In light of Mr. Hancock's recognition that the retainer was Innovative's property and is property of the estate, it is unclear why he argues that mandatory joinder is necessary to account for others' claims to the retainer. See Fed. R. Bankr. P. 7019 (providing that Fed. R. Civ. P. 19 applies in adversary proceedings). Beyond Mr. Hancock and the trustee, there is no evidence in the record of any competing claimants to the funds in the retainer. Any such parties were certainly free to assert their rights to the bankruptcy court. If this case is remanded, these parties could also come forward to assert their rights.

[8] Mr. Hancock does not argue that a state-law lien grants him an independent right to priority payment outside 11 U.S.C. § 330. Nor could he, because governing law precludes any argument that he can be paid from estate property outside of a § 330 fee award. See In re 5900 Assocs., Inc., 468 F.3d 326, 330 (6th Cir. 2006) ("11 U.S.C. § 330 is the sole mechanism by which fees may be enforced."). Moreover, Mr. Hancock's application for employment states that he would not be paid from property of the estate until any request for such fees has been approved by the court. See BR 13.

A. Mr. Hancock has no rights under state law.

Looking to Tennessee state law, Mr. Hancock lacked a common-law retaining lien.[9] When Innovative's petition was filed, Mr. Hancock was due nothing for the services he rendered. See BR 1, Disclosure. His alleged lien did not even exist, because Innovative had paid for all services he had rendered to that date. See id. There was no balance due to him, and there was no dispute with Innovative over fees. See McDonald v. Charleston, C. & C. R. Co., 24 S.W. 252, 255 (Tenn. 1893) (possessory retaining lien applies "for a general balance due [the attorney] arising out of his professional employment"); Starks v. Browning, 20 S.W.3d 645, 650 (Tenn. Ct. App. 1999) (possessory retaining lien applies "until the attorney and client have settled their fee dispute or until the client has otherwise posted appropriate security for the outstanding fee").

On this point, Tennessee law follows the perhaps universal rule that a lien cannot exist without a present obligation. A lien is an "incident of" a debt or obligation secured, and therefore "cannot exist in the absence of the debt or obligation the payment of which it secures." 53 C.J.S. Liens § 4 (updated Feb. 2007). The lien asserted by Mr. Hancock could apply only to secure attorney fees and charges which are due for services rendered. See 7A C.J.S. Attorney & Client § 445 (updated Feb. 2007); Tri City Equipment Co. v. Modern Real Estate Investments, Ltd., 460 N.W. 2d 464, 466 (Iowa 1990) ("Under the general rule and the Iowa cases, a retaining lien is available only to secure the attorney's fees and charges which are due for services already rendered.").

Nor does Mr. Hancock have a Tennessee statutory attorney's lien. Such a lien only exists "from the date of the filing of the suit." See Tenn. Code. Ann. § 23-2-102 ("Attorneys and solicitors of record who begin a suit shall have a lien upon the plaintiff's or complainant's right of action from the date of the filing of the suit."). Filing a bankruptcy petition, however, expressly stays "any act to create, perfect, or enforce any lien" against property of the estate or property of the debtor. 11 U.S.C. §§ 362(a)(4), (5).

[9] It is also noteworthy that none of Innovative's court filings disclosed any attorney lien or any type of secured claim against it.

Mr. Hancock cites only one case, a bankruptcy court decision outside this district, for his claim that his Tennessee state-law right to priority payment is "well-settled." See In re Appalachian Star Ventures, 341 B.R. 222 (Bankr. E.D. Tenn. 2006); HOB 17. In Appalachian Star, however, there was no question regarding the validity of the lien under state law. Instead, the case addressed whether a valid state-law lien would prevent the operation of 11 U.S.C. § 726(b). Appalachian Star, 341 B.R. at 226. Mr. Hancock's appeal does not involve section 726(b).[10]

B. Any right Mr. Hancock might claim under state law is preempted by federal law and would violate the Supremacy Clause.

Even assuming that Mr. Hancock somehow had a valid state-law lien, federal law directly addresses the priority of payments from bankruptcy estate funds and therefore would supersede any right to payment under state law. As the Sixth Circuit has squarely held, "[f]ees in a bankruptcy proceeding are governed by federal, not state, law." 5900 Assocs., 468 F.3d at 329.

Mr. Hancock's interpretation would violate the Supremacy Clause of the United States Constitution. See Hill v. Camacho, 2007 WL 2120891 *1 (D. Or. July 24, 2007) ("To apply state-lien law to permit payment of postpetition fees from estate funds seriously undermines the Bankruptcy Code and the Lamie decision."); In re CK Liquidation Corp., 343 B.R. 376 (D. Mass. 2006) (holding that authorizing payment under state law to a debtor's attorney from property of the estate "is forbidden by the Supremacy Clause").

If Mr. Hancock is entitled to a § 330 fee award from estate property, he need only look to the Bankruptcy Code to ascertain his priority right of payment. First, § 726(a)(1) provides that property of the estate is distributed in the order specified in § 507. See 11 U.S.C. § 726(a)(1). Second, § 507(a)(2) provides that administrative expenses under § 503(b) are second in the priority scheme. 11 U.S.C. § 507(a)(2); see Specker Motor Sales Co. v. Eisen, 393 F.3d 659, 662 (6th Cir. 2004) (recognizing that section 507(a) "establishes a hierarchy of creditors, describing the order in which they may lay claim to the assets of the bankrupt estate"). Third, § 503(b) provides that administrative expenses include fee awards under § 330(a). 11 U.S.C. § 503(b)(2).

[10] To the extent that Appalachian Star holds that state-law liens supersede the payment scheme of the Bankruptcy Code, the United States Trustee believes the case is wrongly decided.

Mr. Hancock's interpretation would conflict with the Bankruptcy Code's comprehensive priority scheme. Under his argument, a claim for attorney's fees with an attorney's lien would automatically jump to the top of the priority scheme, without regard for the system established by §§ 726, 507, 503, and 330 of the Bankruptcy Code.

There is one simple fact here – Mr. Hancock had no right to fees because the bankruptcy court denied his § 330 application. Unless this Court were to overturn that exercise of discretion, Innovative's creditors, not Mr. Hancock, are the lawful recipients of the bankruptcy estate's limited assets. Although modest in amount, the funds at issue here will help ensure at least some payment to the estate's creditors.

CONCLUSION

For these reasons, United States Trustee respectfully asks this Court to affirm the bankruptcy court's decision to deny Mr. Hancock's fees and its order granting summary judgment to the trustee on turnover.

Respectfully submitted,

STATEMENT REGARDING ORAL ARGUMENT

Appellee, United States Trustee, requests oral argument to assist the Court to decide this appeal.

STATEMENT OF JURISDICTION

The Bankruptcy Court had jurisdiction to rule on the fee application submitted by the Appellant, William Hancock, pursuant to 28 U.S.C. § 1334(a) and § 157(a) and (b). The Bankruptcy Court's order denying all fees to Mr. Hancock, entered December 12, 2008, was a final, appealable order of that court, which Mr. Hancock timely appealed to the District Court on December 18, 2008. The District Court had jurisdiction over the appeal of the Bankruptcy Court's judgment pursuant to 28 U.S.C. § 158(a)(1).

The District's Court's order summarily affirming the Bankruptcy Court's order, entered September 23, 2009, was a final, appealable order. Mr. Hancock timely filed his notice of appeal to this Court from that order on September 30, 2009. This Court has jurisdiction under 28 U.S.C. § 158(d) to review the District Court's order.

STATEMENT OF THE ISSUES ON APPEAL

1. Whether the Bankruptcy Court abused its discretion by denying compensation to Mr. Hancock because he failed to disclose his connections to three interested parties in violation of 11 U.S.C. § 327 and Fed. R. Bankr. P. 2014.

2. Whether the Bankruptcy Court abused its discretion by denying compensation to Mr. Hancock for services that he not only failed to prove were reasonable or necessary, but many of which the court found were needlessly disruptive and drove up the costs of the bankruptcy case.

3. Whether the Bankruptcy Judge erred by failing to recuse himself from the determination of the fee application when Mr. Hancock did not request recusal.

STATEMENT OF THE CASE[1]

This is an appeal from an order of the United States District Court for the Middle District of Tennessee ("District Court") summarily affirming an order entered by the United States Bankruptcy Court for the Middle District of Tennessee ("Bankruptcy Court") denying Mr. Hancock's application for attorney's fees. Mr. Hancock represented the debtor in possession in a Chapter 11 bankruptcy case for five months before the case was converted to a case under Chapter 7. He subsequently sought approval of compensation for his services under 11 U.S.C. § 330(a). The United States Trustee and the Chapter7 Trustee objected to the requested compensation because Mr. Hancock failed to disclose all of his connections to interested parties as required by 11 U.S.C. § 327 and Fed. Rule Bankr. P. 2014, and because the services Mr. Hancock provided were not reasonable and necessary, as required for compensation under 11 U.S.C. § 330.

The Bankruptcy Court held a five-day trial on Mr. Hancock's fee application. The Bankruptcy Court found that Mr. Hancock failed to disclose his connections to three interested parties and denied his fees for that reason. In addition, the Bankruptcy Court found that Mr. Hancock's failed to prove his services were reasonable or necessary due to his abusive and disruptive tactics and his inadequate and unreliable billing records.

On appeal, the District Court summarily affirmed the Bankruptcy Court's order after Mr. Hancock repeatedly failed to timely file a brief that conformed to the rules after being granted several extensions of time to do so. Mr. Hancock timely appealed the decision of the District Court to this Court.

STATEMENT OF THE FACTS

I. Statutory Framework.

A debtor in possession[2] must obtain court approval to employ an attorney in a bankruptcy case under Chapter 11. 11 U.S.C. § 327(a). Only attorneys "that do not hold or represent an interest adverse to the estate, and that are disinterested persons" qualify for such employment. Id. A "disinterested person" is one that does not have an interest materially adverse to the interest of the estate or of any class of creditors or equity security holders. 11 U.S.C. § 101(14)(C).[3]

To obtain an order approving the employment of an attorney, the debtor in possession must file an application accompanied by a verified statement of the attorney to be employed disclosing all of the attorney's connections to the debtor, creditors and other interested parties. Fed. R. Bankr. P. 2014. The United States Trustee reviews applications filed under section 327 and may object to the [2] A debtor in a Chapter 11 bankruptcy case is a "debtor in possession," except when a trustee is appointed in the case. See 11 U.S.C. § 1101(1). A debtor in possession has most of the rights, powers, and duties of a trustee serving in a Chapter 11 case. See 11 U.S.C. § 1107(a).

[3] Additionally, a person is not disinterested if she is a creditor, an equity security holder, or an insider, and a person is not disinterested if she is or was, a director, officer or employee of the debtor within 2 years before the filing of the bankruptcy petition. 11 U.S.C. § 101(14)(A) & (B).

employment.[4] See 28 U.S.C. § 586(a)(3)(I); 11 U.S.C. § 307(a). If at any time during a case, an attorney employed under section 327 is not disinterested or holds or represents an interest adverse to the estate, the court can deny the attorney compensation. 11 U.S.C. § 328(c).

A bankruptcy court may award an attorney employed under section 327 "reasonable compensation for actual, necessary services." 11 U.S.C. § 330(a)(1)(A). In determining "reasonable" compensation, a bankruptcy court must consider the "nature, the extent and the value" of the services rendered, taking into account all relevant factors. 11 U.S.C. § 330(a)(3). The bankruptcy court may award less compensation than requested. 11 U.S.C. § 330(a)(2). But, the court may not award any compensation for services that were not reasonably like to benefit the bankruptcy estate or were not necessary to the administration of the case. 11 U.S.C. § 330(a)(4)(A)(ii).

II. Procedural Background.

On December 3, 2007, Barnhill's Buffet, Inc. (the "Debtor") filed a voluntary petition under Chapter 11 of the Bankruptcy Code. BR 1. All of the Debtor's stock was held by an entity known as Dynamic Acquisitions Group, LLC ("Dynamic Acquisitions" or "DAG"). BR 134 at 10. The Debtor operated 29 buffet style restaurants in six states. Hancock Testimony, DR 32 at 12. At that time, the Debtor reported total liabilities of $27,576,984.00 and assets valued at $3,661,333.00. BR 137 at 1. Wells Fargo Bank was its primary secured creditor. BR 137 at 1 and 8. W. Craig Barber was the Debtor's President and Robert M. Langford was the Debtor's Chief Executive Officer and a Director of the Debtor. BR 134 at 9 and 10.

The bankruptcy case was filed to obtain the best return to creditors through a controlled liquidation of the Debtor's assets, including the operating restaurants. Hancock Testimony, DR 32 at 11-12. On January 28, 2008, the Bankruptcy Court approved the sale of 16 of the Debtor's restaurants. BR 205. On February 29, 2008, the Bankruptcy Court approved the sale of four more restaurants. BR 317.[5]

On March 11, 2008, the parties negotiated a global settlement that determined how the property of the bankruptcy estate, including the proceeds from the sale of the restaurants, would be distributed. Kelly (Counsel for Wells Fargo) Testimony, DR 32 at 418-423. BR 401 at 3. On April 8, 2008, the Bankruptcy Court approved the settlement, which required the case to be converted to Chapter 7. BR 401 at 3. On [5] The Debtor rejected its leasehold interests in the remaining restaurants prior to conversion because it could not locate a purchaser on terms that would have been beneficial to the bankruptcy estate. BR 219.

April 28th, the Debtor filed a notice of conversion to Chapter 7. BR 447. Appellee, Michael Gigandet, was appointed Chapter 7 trustee on April 30th. BR 448. The Bankruptcy Court entered an order granting Mr. Hancock's motion to withdraw as Debtor's counsel on May 2, 2008, five months after the bankruptcy case was filed. BR 451.

Wells Fargo agreed to set aside an aggregate of $125,000.00 from the distribution it anticipated receiving from the sale of its collateral to pay Mr. Hancock if his fees were approved by the Bankruptcy Court (the "carveout"). BR 401 at 9. On June 3, 2008, Mr. Hancock filed his first fee application requesting interim compensation in the amount of $355,975.00 and $1,071.55 for expenses for the less than three-month period from December 3, 2007 through February 29, 2008. BR 487. The United States Trustee and the Chapter 7 trustee objected to the requested fees, based on Mr. Hancock's: (1) failure to file a final fee application, (2) inclusion of multiple days of facially excessive billing in his fee application, (3) failure to use proper billing format, (4) failure to establish that his fees were necessary, and (5) abusive behavior that unnecessarily increased his own and other parties' attorney's fees. BR 502 at 9. The Bankruptcy Court ordered Mr. Hancock to file a final fee application by July 3rd. BR 524. After the Bankruptcy Court granted his request for additional time, on July 7th, Mr. Hancock filed his final fee application seeking compensation in the amount of $356,554.50 and $1,071.55 for expenses. BR 541.

Mr. Hancock amended his final fee application on July 17th and requested compensation in the amount of $371,896.00 and $1,071.55 for expenses. BR 586. The United States Trustee objected to the amended final application on the following grounds: (1) Mr. Hancock failed to comply with the disclosure requirements of section 327(a) and Fed. R. Bankr. P. 2014(a) by failing to disclose his connections to interested parties, and he actively misrepresented his connections to those parties, (2) Mr. Hancock engaged in abusive communication and litigation tactics that unnecessarily increased the legal fees in this case, (3) Mr. Hancock's fee application was excessive given his lack of records, the disruption he caused in the case, and his request for fees for time spent after he was terminated as Debtor's counsel, and (4) Mr. Hancock interfered with the administration of the bankruptcy case by the Chapter 7 trustee. BR 636 and BR 717. The Chapter 7 trustee also objected to the fee application. BR 637. Although the Bankruptcy Court held two pretrial conferences, Mr. Hancock never asked Judge Paine to recuse himself from adjudicating the objections. BR 524 and BR 658.

The trial on Mr. Hancock's fee application began on October 23, 2008. Testimony was taken from eleven witnesses over five days and 166 exhibits were offered into evidence. DR 32 and BR 755. After considering the evidence, the Bankruptcy Court issued a detailed 26 page Memorandum Opinion ("Opinion") denying all fees to Mr. Hancock on two independent grounds: his failure to disclose his connections to interested parties and his failure to prove that his services were reasonable and necessary.[6] Opinion, BR 736 at 25-26. As to the first ground, the Bankruptcy Court found that Mr. Hancock had connections to three companies owned wholly or in part by Mr. Barber and Mr. Langford. Id. at 9. The Court noted that Mr. Hancock had been sanctioned for his failure to fully disclose in a prior case, nevertheless, he chose to deny the connections instead of opting for complete transparency. Id. at 13 and 26. As to the second ground, the Bankruptcy Court found Mr. Hancock repeatedly had engaged in disruptive and unprofessional tactics that wasted everyone's time. Id. at 22. In addition, the Bankruptcy Court cited many reasons to doubt the accuracy of Mr. Hancock's reconstructed billing records, such as proven overbilling, lack of contemporaneous time records, and conflicting testimony by a paralegal[7] who assisted in preparation of Mr. Hancock's fee application. Id. at 19 and 21. The Bankruptcy Court found that Mr. Hancock failed to prove his services were reasonable and necessary as required to award compensation under section 330(a). Id. at 18.

Following entry of the Bankruptcy Court's judgment, Mr. Hancock filed a notice of appeal and elected to have his appeal considered by the District Court. BR 740 and 741. Mr. Hancock was granted two extensions to file his opening brief in his appeal, yet he still failed to comply with the May 5, 2009 deadline. DR 6, 7, 8, and 9. Three months later, Mr. Hancock still had not filed his brief, so the District Court ordered Mr. Hancock to show cause why his appeal should not be dismissed for failure to prosecute. DR 10. Mr. Hancock did not respond to the order. Instead, on August 14th, he filed a 128 page opening brief, completely disregarding the District Court's 50 page limit. DR 11.

On August 31, 2009, the District Court ordered Mr. Hancock to file by September 21st, a revised brief that complied with the page limit and a third motion for an extension of time explaining why he did not file his brief in May. DR 13. After the deadline passed, he filed a 67 page brief printed in what appears to be a nine point font, with six point font footnotes, accompanied by a third motion for extension of time, explaining that he filed his brief nearly four months late because: (1) he was waiting for the Supreme Court to issue an opinion on judicial recusal, (2) the District Court did not have the courage to overrule the Bankruptcy Court, and (3) presenting the matter to the District Court would be a waste of effort because this Court reviews the findings of the Bankruptcy Court de novo. DR 14 and 15.

On September 23, 2009, the District Court summarily affirmed the Memorandum and Order entered by the Bankruptcy Court. DR 16. The Court noted Mr. Hancock's conduct warranted the dismissal of his appeal with prejudice, but it would summarily affirm instead so that Mr. Hancock could obtain a decision on the merits of his appeal. Id. at 2.

III. Mr. Hancock's Undisclosed Connections.

The Debtor's President, Craig Barber, and the Debtor's CEO, Robert Langford, together partially or entirely owned three other companies: Dynamic Management LLC ("Dynamic Management"), Dynamic Acquisitions Group LLC ("Dynamic Acquisitions") and Dynamic Hospitality LLC ("Dynamic Hospitality") that had connections to the Debtor and Mr. Hancock (the "Dynamic Companies"). Based on the trial evidence, the Bankruptcy Court found the following connections between the Dynamic companies and the Debtor:

Dynamic Acquisitions	The parent company of the Debtor; Craig Barber and Bob Langford have some ownership interest in DAG.

	DAG was formed in 2005 for the purpose of acquiring Barnhill's Buffet, Inc. In 2005. Listed as a Co-debtor on Debtor's Bankruptcy Schedule H.
Dynamic Management	A Tennessee limited liability company wholly owned by Craig Barber (50%) and Bob Langford (50%). Listed as a Co-Debtor on Debtor's Schedule H
Dynamic Hospitality	A Tennessee limited liability company wholly owned by Craig Barber (50%) and Bob Langford (50%). Dynamic Hospitality was listed an insider receiving payments from the Debtor within one year of filing.

Opinion, BR 736 at 9; BR 134 at 9, 19; BR 136 at Statement of Financial Affairs 3. c.; BR 137 at 140; Langford Testimony, DR 32 at 352, 354-355, and 349-350.

A. Mr. Hancock's Declaration.

On December 19, 2007, Mr. Hancock filed a declaration, which he signed under penalty of perjury, with the Debtor's application for approval of his employment, purporting to disclose all of his connections with interested parties pursuant to Rule 2014(a) (the "Declaration"). BR 68 at 7. Paragraph three of Mr. Hancock's verified Declaration states:

> 3. To the best of my knowledge, no principal or affiliate of Mr. Hancock has any connection with the debtor, its creditors, or any other party in interest or their respective attorneys including the U.S. Trustee or any employee of the U.S. Trustee's Office in this District except that > I have served as prepetition counsel to the debtor in bankruptcy and non-bankruptcy matters. In addition I formerly represented Robert M. Langford with regard to numerous personal matters during the period 2002 through 2005. That representation ended in 2005. None of the matters involved during that time period relate in any way to the matters to arise in this case under the proposed debtor representation.

Mr. Hancock disclosed his former connection to Mr. Langford in his Declaration, but he did not disclose any connections to the three Dynamic Companies.

B. Mr. Hancock's Undisclosed Connection to Dynamic Management.

A few months before Mr. Hancock filed the Debtor's bankruptcy petition, he represented Dynamic Management in a Florida state court action against the Debtor and Dynamic Management.[8] On May 30, 2007, Mr. Hancock asked the plaintiff's counsel for additional time to retain local counsel to assist him in the representation of the defendants. App at 158. Two months later, on July 23, 2007, local Florida counsel filed Mr. Hancock's sworn affidavit in the Florida case wherein Mr. Hancock stated:

> 3. I represent Barnhill's Buffet, Inc., a Tennessee corporation (hereinafter "Barnhill's).

[8] W.D. Sales and Brokerage, LLC filed suit against the Debtor and Dynamic Management in the Circuit Court in and for Escambia County, Florida on April 13, 2007 in a case styled W.D. Sales and Brokerage, LLC v. Barnhill's Buffet of Tennessee, Inc. d/b/a Barnhil's Buffet, Inc. And Dynamic Management Company, LLC. App at 149.

> 4. I also represent Dynamic Management Company, LLC, a Tennessee limited liability company (hereinafter "Dynamic") which has no business relationship whatsoever with Barnhill's.

App at 160, 154, 165, and 173. Mr. Hancock continued to be involved in the Florida litigation even after the Debtor had filed for bankruptcy and the Florida case had been stayed as to the Debtor. App at 211, 277, 283, 285, 286, 288. Dynamic Management was listed on Schedule H of the Debtor's bankruptcy schedules as a co-debtor on debts owed to SCS General Contractors and W.D. Sales/Emerald Coast Brokerage, Inc. BR 137 at 140.

Mr. Hancock was an experienced bankruptcy attorney with over 30 years in bankruptcy practice. Hancock Testimony, DR 32, at 8-11. His fees had been denied in another bankruptcy case for failing to fully disclose the terms of his representation of the debtor just months before this case was filed. Id. at 58; BR 720 at 8. See Limor v. Hancock (In re Innovative Entertainment Concepts, Inc.), No. 04-01633, 2007 WL 5582055 (Bankr. M.D. Tenn. Aug. 10, 2007), aff'd, No. 07-0639, 2007 WL 4481436 (M.D. Tenn. Dec. 18, 2007) App at 204 and 224.

On December 19, 2007, Mr. Hancock filed his Declaration. BR 68. The Declaration did not disclose his connection to Dynamic Management. Id. On January 4, 2007, at the first meeting of creditors, Mr. Barber testified that Mr.Hancock had represented Dynamic Management before the Debtor's bankruptcy case was filed. Hancock Testimony, DR 32 at 65-67. Mr. Hancock did not acknowledge his prior representation of Dynamic Management, nor did he amend his Declaration to disclose his representation of Dynamic Management to the Bankruptcy Court. Id. at 160.

On August 6, 2008, the United States Trustee objected to Mr. Hancock's amended final fee application, citing Mr. Hancock's failure to disclose his connection to Dynamic Management. BR 636 at 12. The next day, August 7, 2008, Mr. Hancock transmitted a message to the U.S. Trustee which stated,

> I do not represent and have not represented Dynamic Management in any matter having anything to do with BBI [Barnhill's Buffet, Inc.], or in any other matter. . . . Bottom line: my disclosure is dead accurate comprehensive and complete.

App at 311.

On August 18, 2008, The United States Trustee again cited Mr. Hancock's failure to disclose his connection to Dynamic Management in his objection to Mr. Hancock's motion for the allowance of an interim distribution. BR 656 at 3. Still, Mr. Hancock did not amend his Declaration.

On September 5, 2008, Mr. Hancock e-mailed a proposed motion seeking sanctions against the United States Trustee and the Chapter 7 trustee because they questioned his failure to disclose his connections.[9] App at 317.

On September 25, 2008, the United States Trustee obtained an unsigned copy of Mr. Hancock's affidavit that had been filed in the Escambia County lawsuit. Poole (Analyst for the U.S. Trustee) Testimony, DR 32 at 804; App at 172. On October 8, 2008, Mr. Hancock refused to produce a signed copy of the affidavit to the United States Trustee, stating, "If you want it in you provide it. I don't have time to do your work for you." App at 331.[10]

The United States Trustee again raised Mr. Hancock's failure to disclose in its pretrial memorandum. BR 717. Mr. Hancock still did not amend his Declaration.

[9] The Bankruptcy Court noted Mr. Hancock's explanation that:

> a rule 9011 motion was an "effective tool" and that he intended to file it if he did not get the results he was seeking to achieve. [Mr. Hancock] called such a tactic a "shot across the bow." He also testified that he believed motions such as this as well as reminders of criminal statutes were methods of "getting a case going."

Opinion, BR at 13.

[10] The U.S. Trustee later obtained a signed copy of the affidavit from Joseph V. Ferrelli, the individual who notarized the affidavit. App at 164.

C. Mr. Hancock's Undisclosed Connection to Dynamic Acquisitions Group.

In the Spring of 2007, Mr. Hancock represented Dynamic Acquisitions and the Debtor in connection with an escrow account dispute between the Debtor, Dynamic Aquisition and BBSA, LLC ("BBSA").[11] App at 236. On March 23, 2007, Mr. Barber e-mailed a representative of BBSA that Mr. Hancock was "[c]ounsel for Dynamic Acquisitions Group, LLC ("Dynamic") and Barnhill's Buffet, Inc. ("Barnhill's) relative to the Indemnification Fund and remaining payments from the Merger Fund . . . ." App at 148. One month later, on April 25, 2007, Mr. Hancock sent a letter to Martin W. Moore, Chief Manager of BBSA, on the his law firm's letterhead confirming his representation of Dynamic Acquisitions and the Debtor in that matter. App at 151.

Mr. Hancock did not disclose his connection with Dynamic Acquisitions in his verified Declaration.

[11] BBSA was appointed as the agent for the former shareholders when Dynamic Acquisition acquired the Barnhill's Buffet restaurants in 2005. When that transaction closed, an Indemnification Fund was established to create a reserve against potential liabilities. The fund was a holdback from the purchase price owed to the former shareholders. Barber Testimony, DR 32 at 695. App at 236; BR 134 at 4.

On August 6, 2008, the United States Trustee and the Chapter 7 Trustee objected to Mr. Hancock's amended final fee application, citing Mr. Hancock's failure to disclose his connection to Dynamic Acquisitions. BR 636 at 12. Mr. Hancock did not amend his Declaration.

On August 18, 2008, the United States Trustee again cited Mr. Hancock's failure to disclose in his objection to Mr. Hancock's motion for the allowance of an interim distribution. BR 656 at 3. Still, Mr. Hancock did not amend his Declaration.

On October 20, 2008, the United States Trustee raised Mr. Hancock's failure to disclose in his pretrial memorandum. BR 717. Mr. Hancock still did not amend his Declaration.

D. Mr. Hancock's Undisclosed Connection to Dynamic Hospitality.

Mr. Hancock did not disclose any connection with Dynamic Hospitality in his Declaration. BR 68 at 7. Just before Mr. Hancock filed the Debtor's bankruptcy case, Mr. Barber conferred with Mr. Hancock about how to protect Dynamic Hospitality's interests in connection with the Debtor's bankruptcy case.[12] In the [12] On November 4, 2007, Mr. Barber transmitted a message to Mr. Hancock which contained the following statement, "We also need to make sure that the reimbursements to Dynamic Hospitality for accounting and IT employees (as contract labor) and for reimbursement of welfare benefits paid by Dynamic for Barnhill's employees gets covered if needed. Stacey is keeping us close on the sales and payroll taxes. Is there anything else we are missing to protect us individually or the services provided by Dynamic?" [Emphasis added]

Debtor's Statement of Financial Affairs, Dynamic Hospitality is listed as an insider having received $1,256,138.54 from the Debtor during the year before the bankruptcy case was filed. BR 134 at 2; BR 136 at Statement of Financial Affairs 3. c. Dynamic Hospitality, along with its owners, Mr. Barber and Mr. Langford, received at least $182,997.84 from the Debtor during the five months the Debtor was in Chapter 11. App at 303.

During his September 4, 2008 deposition, Mr. Langford testified that Mr. Hancock previously represented Dynamic Hospitality. Langford Testimony, DR 32 at 374. At his deposition, Mr. Langford produced a statement prepared from business records reflecting payments made by Dynamic Hospitality to Mr. Hancock. App at 315. The statement was admitted into evidence without objection as Trial Exhibit 128. Trial Transcript, DR 32 at 309.

Mr. Hancock did not amend his Declaration to disclose his connection to Dynamic Hospitality. Hancock Testimony, DR 32 at 274.

In its pretrial memorandum, the United States Trustee cited Mr. Hancock's failure to disclose his connection to Dynamic Hospitality as a basis for denying his fee application. BR 717 at 9. Still, Mr. Hancock did not amend his Declaration. Hancock Testimony, DR 32 at 274.

App at 234.

The Bankruptcy Court found that Mr. Hancock's failure to disclose his connections to Dynamic Management, Dynamic Acquisitions and Dynamic Hospitality could not be dismissed as technical or insignificant mistakes. Opinion, BR 736 at 12 n. 8. Both Mr. Barber and Mr. Langford collected their $275,000.00 annual salaries as long as the case remained pending in Chapter 11. Id. One of their wholly owned companies, Dynamic Hospitality, had a prepetition contractual relationship with the Debtor that continued as long as the case was pending under Chapter 11. Id. And, Mr. Barber testified that the Debtor did not perform a preference analysis while the case was pending under Chapter 11.[13] Id. A preference analysis would have involved reviewing the sums paid to Mr. Barber, Mr. Langford, the related companies, and Mr. Hancock before the bankruptcy case was filed.

IV. Mr. Hancock's Billing Practices and Time Records Maintenance.

Mr. Hancock was paid $50,000.00 by the Debtor before the bankruptcy case was filed for prepetition services. BR 68 at 8. When the Chapter 7 trustee asked Mr.

[13] A preference analysis involves reviewing payments made by the Debtor before bankruptcy petition was filed to determine whether the entity receiving the payment should be required to return the funds to the bankruptcy estate because the entity received more than similarly situated creditors. See 11 U.S.C. § 547.

Hancock to produce time records to support the work performed against the prepetion payment, Mr. Hancock failed to do so and responded by e-mail that:

> I am unable to find any such papers. Given the practice we followed over the years I suspect there might not be any. That would be ordinary course for us. Bob [Langford, the CEO] doesn't like to see lawyers bills and I don't like the time and expense of preparing them so its quid pro quo.

App at 328; Hancock Testimony, DR 32 at 168-169.

The Bankruptcy Court found this practice unacceptable for a Debtor's attorney seeking payment in a Chapter 11 case. Opinion, BR 736 at 22.

Pursuant to the Bankruptcy Court's pretrial order, Mr. Hancock was required to produce all of his contemporaneous time records in support of his fee application. BR 658. The Bankruptcy Court found Mr. Hancock produced seven handwritten chargeable time slips reflecting hours; his telephone records, a log showing his e-mail traffic from December 3, 2007, to December 14, 2007, and a Docket Sheet for the case. Opinion, BR 736 at 21. The Bankruptcy Court found that the Barnhill's Buffet case time entries were dictated in May 2008, well after the events described in his fee application had taken place. Opinion, BR 736 at 21; Hancock Testimony, DR 32 at 179-180. Although Mr. Hancock testified that his paralegal discarded the notes he made during the case, (Hancock Testimony, DR 32 at 57) his paralegal testified that she did not discard any notes because she was not given any. Horel Testimony, DR

32 at 490-491. She also testified that she did not recall seeing any handwritten time records produced by Mr. Hancock. Id. at 496-497.

On June 3, 2008, two months after the Bankruptcy Court terminated his employment as Debtor's counsel, Mr. Hancock filed his first fee application requesting "interim" compensation for the work he did in this bankruptcy case during the first 89 days (including weekends) after the petition was filed and while it was still a Chapter 11 case. BR 487. Of those 89 days, Mr. Hancock sought compensation for more than 10 hours of work on 54 days, more than 15 hours of work on 32 days, more than 20 hours of work on 17 days, and more than 24 hours of work on two days. BR 502 at 10; App at 293 . Mr. Hancock filed the interim fee application even though his paralegal warned him that the fees billed on certain days exceeded 24 hours. Horel Testimony, DR 32 at 499. App at 290.

After the United States Trustee objected, Mr. Hancock amended his fee application and reduced the amount of compensation sought by $55,226.00. BR 502. App at 330. The amended fee application still included 51 days on which Mr. Hancock billed in excess of 10 hours and 25 days on which Mr. Hancock billed in excess of 15 hours. App at 297; Poole Testimony, DR 32 at 794-799.

The Bankruptcy Court found that Mr. Hancock's reaction to the objections was simply that of being "caught" and absent the objections, Mr. Hancock would have overbilled the bankruptcy estate by at least $55,226.00.[14] Opinion, BR 736 at 21. The Bankruptcy Court further noted that even if Mr. Hancock expended long hours on this case, his conduct was the leading cause of the time spent. Id. at 20.

V. Mr. Hancock's Conduct in the Case.

The Bankruptcy Court found that Mr. Hancock engaged in numerous instances of abusive conduct that unnecessarily increased the professional fees and costs in this bankruptcy case. Id. at 17-19. For example, it found that Mr. Hancock, without basis, threatened attorneys with criminal sanctions. Id. at 17. See Hancock Testimony, DR 32 at 88, 235, 257, 649 and 895; BR 176 at 4; BR 249 at 4; BR 586 Exhibit A at 26. He accused Wells Fargo counsel of fraud. Opinion, BR 736 at 17. See App at 259. When the United States Trustee and the Chapter 7 trustee objected to Mr. Hancock's fee application, he prepared and sent to each of them a proposed Rule 11 Motion charging them with misconduct. Opinion, BR 736 at 17. See App at 317. Mr. Hancock filed a motion seeking to appoint an examiner to review Wells Fargo Bank's financial activities, following Wells Fargo's efforts to exert control over its cash collateral. Opinion, BR 736 at 17. See BR 333. Mr. Hancock filed, but never prosecuted, a motion to set aside the global settlement of the case and initially failed to convert the case to Chapter 7 as required, even though he and the Debtor had previously agreed to the settlement. Opinion, BR 736 at 18. See BR 401; BR 423. He counseled the Debtor to open an unauthorized "secret" bank account which contained $500,000.00, and refused to provide information to Wells Fargo Bank about where the funds in the account had come from and how they were spent. Opinion, BR 736 at 23-24. See Barber Testimony, DR 32 at 601-601; Kelly Testimony, DR 32 at 198-201; App at 258. This secret operating account was not reflected on the Debtor's monthly operating report. Poole Testimony, DR 32 at 788.

The Bankruptcy Court found that Mr. Hancock failed to timely respond to phone calls and emails from opposing counsel (App at 266), failed to show up for hearings (BR 353), abruptly left the courtroom immediately before a hearing (Kelly Testimony, DR 32 at 397-398), and asked for an expedited hearing on a motion and then left town for a week's vacation without providing representation for his client in his absence. Opinion, BR 736 at 3, 24-25; App at 245; BR 330. In addition, the evidence showed Mr. Hancock attempted to intimidate a witness under subpoena to testify at the fee hearing (App at 329; Kelly Testimony DR 32 at 448-449; BR 673; and BR 697), and after his employment as Debtor's counsel was terminated by the Bankruptcy Court, offered to trade on knowledge obtained while Debtor's counsel to the detriment of the Debtor. App at 310.

The Bankruptcy Court was unable to find that Mr. Hancock's "services as Debtor's counsel were reasonable and necessary pursuant to 11 U.S.C. § 330," (Opinion, BR 736 at 18); finding instead that "[t]he overall course of this case has been contentious, disorganized and wasteful of the time and efforts of both this court and other counsel." Id. at 19. And Mr. Hancock's "intractable conduct . . . generated fees and problems in [the] case rather than progress, professionalism, and transparency that is expected of a chapter 11 Debtor's attorney." Id. at 24. The Bankruptcy Court concluded that "[w]hatever benefit Mr. Hancock provided in this case was completely eradicated and overcome by his unprofessional conduct and tactics." Id. at 25-26.

Given the extensive proof of Mr. Hancock's "unprofessional, dilatory actions and his fractious behavior" the Bankruptcy Court could not find that Mr. Hancock's services as Debtor's counsel were reasonable and necessary. Id. at 18.

SUMMARY OF ARGUMENT

The Bankruptcy Court found that Mr. Hancock, an experienced bankruptcy attorney who knew better, failed to disclose his connections to three interested parties and when "caught," tried to cover them up instead of amending his Declaration. That conduct alone warrants a total denial of fees under the law of this Circuit. If this Court affirms on that basis, it need not reach the Bankruptcy Court's second ground for denying Mr. Hancock's fee application.

A bankruptcy court is required by the Bankruptcy Code to ensure that the attorney for a Chapter 11 debtor is completely disinterested and does not represent a party with an adverse interest throughout the bankruptcy case. The only way the court can do that is if the attorney for the debtor is fully forthcoming in disclosing all connections with interested parties. For that reason, the attorney's duty to disclose under section 327(a) and Rule 2014 is broadly construed, strictly applied, and continues throughout the case. Because it is the court's prerogative to decide which connections require disqualification, an attorney must disclose all connections, not just those he decides are significant. A court may sanction an attorney's failure to disclose, even if the undisclosed connection would ultimately not be disqualifying.

Mr. Hancock knew that he had to fully disclose all his connections to interested parties and that he risked not getting paid if he did not; Mr. Hancock had forfeited his fees in a previous case where he failed to make complete disclosures. Nevertheless, Mr. Hancock failed to disclose his connections to three interested parties in his sworn Declaration and subsequently failed to amend his Declaration to make the required disclosures, despite numerous opportunities to do so. Instead, Mr. Hancock denied the connections and became combative.

On no less than four occasions, this Court has ruled that bankruptcy courts may deny all fees when, as here, an attorney failed to make required disclosures. In Re Big Rivers Elec. Corp., 355 F.3d 415 (6th Cir. 2004); Vergos v. Mendes & Gonzales PLLC (In re McCrary & Dunlap Const. Co.), No. 01-5355,79 Fed. Appx. 770, 2003 WL 22442934, at *9 (6th Cir. Oct. 27, 2003) (unpublished); In re Kisseberth, 273 F.3d 720-21; Mapother & Mapother PSC v. Cooper (In re Downs), 103 F.3d 472, 477 (6th Cir. 1996). Given that Mr. Hancock not only failed to disclose three potential conflicts, but sought to deny their existence, despite having had all fees denied previously for failing to make adequate disclosures, the court below did not abuse its discretion in following those cases.

Mr. Hancock incorrectly alleges that he is not required to disclose past connections. To the contrary, the plain language of the rule requires the disclosure of all connections; it is not expressly limited to present connections. Courts construe the disclosure requirement broadly to include both present and past connections. Mr. Hancock's contention that he had no obligation to update his Declaration is equally unpersuasive. A Chapter 11 debtor's attorney has a duty to disclose his connections throughout the case to enable the Bankruptcy Court to fulfill its responsibility to ensure that the attorney remains disinterested and does not represent a party with an adverse interest.

Mr. Hancock attempts to shift his duty to disclose to the United States Trustee. He incorrectly contends the United States Trustee should have investigated and disclosed Mr. Hancock's connection to Dynamic Management to the Bankruptcy Court by objecting to Mr. Hancock's employment; therefore, the doctrines of res judicata, laches, estoppel and waiver prevented the United States Trustee from objecting to Mr. Hancock's fee application on the basis of his failure to disclose. Neither the United States Trustee nor the Bankruptcy Court, however, had an obligation to search through the record to root out undisclosed conflicts of interest that Mr. Hancock failed to properly disclose through his Declaration. That duty fell solely on Mr. Hancock. In any event, those doctrines do not apply in this case.

As a second, independent ground for denying all fees, the Bankruptcy Court concluded that Mr. Hancock was not entitled to fees under section 330 because based on the trial evidence, it was unable to find that the services were actual, reasonable and necessary as required by the statute.

This should have been a straight forward liquidation case. Yet in less than three months, Mr. Hancock billed more than $350,000. The Bankruptcy Court found that much of the time he billed was wasteful, unnecessary to the administration of the estate and due primarily to his own unprofessional conduct and disruptive litigation tactics. That finding was based on abundant evidence and was not clearly erroneous. In addition, the Bankruptcy Court found Mr. Hancock's evidence supporting the requested fees to be unreliable because of his inadequate billing practices, non-contemporaneous time records, disputed testimony and proven overbilling. An applicant requesting attorney's fees must prove to a high degree of certainty that his services were actual, reasonable and necessary. Mr. Hancock failed to provide such proof. Therefore, the Bankruptcy Court did not abuse its discretion by denying his fees.

Mr. Hancock contends that this case must be remanded because the Bankruptcy Court did not perform a lodestar analysis.[15] Mr. Hancock advocates a simple calculation consisting of hours spent multiplied by an hourly rate, but ignores the fact the court may only compensate time actually, reasonably, and necessarily expended on the case under section 330. The Bankruptcy Court could not find that Mr. Hancock's time was reasonably and necessarily spent; therefore, the Bankruptcy Court's lodestar calculation resulted in an award of no fees in this case.

[15] Denial of fees based on a failure to disclose does not require a lodestar analysis.

Mr. Hancock also argues the denial of his fee application violated his constitutional rights. Specifically, he contends his First Amendment right to free speech has been violated because the Bankruptcy Court sanctioned him for offensive speech, and he has not been afforded due process in this case because the Bankruptcy Court failed to recuse itself. Neither of those arguments have any merit. The first argument fails because Mr. Hancock was not sanctioned for anything he said; his fees were denied first and foremost, for his failure to make required disclosures and secondarily, because he did not adequately prove that he provided actual, reasonable and necessary services in this case. Mr. Hancock waived the due process argument because he never requested the Bankruptcy Judge to recuse himself. Moreover, Mr. Hancock has offered no evidence of judicial bias. He relies solely on the Bankruptcy Court's decision as evidence of the court's bias, but that opinion merely sets forth the court's findings and conclusions based on the evidence. Any negative light it sheds on Mr. Hancock is due entirely to his conduct in this case and not to judicial bias.

STANDARD OF REVIEW

This Court reviews the bankruptcy court's determination of the proper amount of attorney's fees for an abuse of discretion. Henderson v. Kisseberth (In re Kisseberth), 273 F.3d 714, 720 (6th Cir. 2001). It will find an abuse of discretion only upon a "definite and firm conviction that the trial court committed a clear error of judgment." Id. (internal quotation omitted). This Court reviews the bankruptcy court's factual findings for clear error and conclusions of law de novo. Brinley v. LPP Mortgage, Ltd. (In re Brinley), 403 F.3d 415, 418 (6th Cir. 2005), cert. denied, 546 U.S. 1149 (2006).

ARGUMENT

I. The Bankruptcy Court Did Not Err in Denying All Fees to Mr. Hancock for His Continuing Failure to Disclose His Connections to Three Interested Parties as Required by 11 U.S.C. § 327(a) and Rule 2014.

A. The Bankruptcy Code and Bankruptcy Rules Require Complete Disclosure of All Connections Throughout the Case Regardless of Whether Those Connections Seem Significant to the Attorney Making the Disclosure.

The Bankruptcy Code and Rules impose a mandatory obligation on an attorney seeking employment by a Chapter 11 bankruptcy estate to fully disclose his relationships to the debtor and other interested parties and any potential conflicts involved in the representation. See 11 U.S.C. § 327(a); Fed. R. Bankr. P. 2014. Proper disclosure is necessary to enable a bankruptcy court to make an informed decision as to whether the attorney meets the statutory requirements for employment under section 327(a), i.e., that such person does not "hold or represent an adverse interest to the estate" and is a "disinterested person." See 11 U.S.C. § 327(a); Neben & Starrett, Inc. v. Chartwell Fin. Corp. (In re Park-Helena Corp.), 63 F.3d 877, 881

(9th Cir. 1995), cert. denied, 516 U.S. 1049 (1996); In re Granite Partners, 219 B.R. 22, 35 (Bankr. S.D. N.Y. 1998).

To enable bankruptcy courts to determine properly whether attorneys or other professional persons comply with these requirements, Rule 2014(a), Fed. R. Bank. P., sets forth the following requirements for applications for employment under section 327:

> . . . The application shall state the specific facts showing the necessity for the employment, the name of the person to be employed, the reasons for the selection, the professional services to be rendered, any proposed arrangement for compensation, and, to the best of the applicant's knowledge, all of the person's connections with the debtor, creditors, any other party in interest, their respective attorneys and accountants, the United States trustee, or any person employed in the office of the United States trustee. The application shall be accompanied by a verified statement of the person to be employed setting forth the person's connections with the debtor, creditors, any other party in interest, their respective attorneys and accountants, the United States trustee, or any person employed in the office of the United States trustee. [Emphasis added.]

Rule 2014(a) requires all attorneys employed under section 327 to disclose all known connections with the debtor, creditors, and other parties in interest both in the application for employment and in an accompanying verified statement. Kravit, Gass & Weber, S.C. v. Michel (In re Crivello), 134 F.3d 831, 836 (7th Cir. 1998). The duty to disclose "arises not solely by reason of the bankruptcy rules, but also is founded upon 'the fiduciary obligation owed by counsel for the debtor to the bankruptcy court.'" Futuronics Corp. v. Arutt, Nachamie & Benjamin (In re Futuronics Corp.), 655 F.2d 463, 470 (2d Cir. 1981), cert. denied, 455 U.S. 941 (1982) (quoting In re Arlan's Dep't Stores, Inc., 615 F.2d 925, 937 (2d Cir. 1979)).

Under Rule 2014(a), "[t]he scope of disclosure is much broader than the question of disqualification . . . The applicant and the professional must disclose all connections and not merely those that rise to the level of conflicts." In re Keller Fin. Servs. of Fla., Inc, 248 B.R. 859, 897 (Bankr. M.D. Fla. 2000) (quoting In re Granite Partners, 219 B.R. at 35); accord In re Citation Corp., 493 F.3d 1313, 1321 (11th Cir. 2007); In re Gulf Coast Orthopedic Ctr., 265 B.R. 318, 323 (Bankr. M.D. Fla. 2001). "The duty of professionals is to disclose all connections with the debtor, debtor-in-possession, insiders, creditors, and parties in interest . . . They cannot pick and choose which connections are irrelevant or trivial . . . No matter how old the connection, no matter how trivial it appears, the professional seeking employment must disclose it." In re Park-Helena Corp., 63 F.3d at 882 (citation omitted). Accord In re Citation Corp., 493 F.3d at 1321 (attorney must disclose all previous contacts with party in interest so court, not attorney, can determine which rise to level of actual or potential conflict); Keller Fin. Servs., 248 B.R. at 897 ("The professional must disclose all facts that bear on his disinterestedness, and cannot usurp the court's function by unilaterally choosing which connections impact on his disinterestedness and which do not.”).

Because a professional person’s failure to comply with the requirements of section 327(a) at any time during such person’s employment may result in a denial of compensation, see 11 U.S.C. § 328(c), the courts have held that the duty to disclose is a continuing duty that survives the initial filing of the application for employment and requires professionals to reveal connections that arise or are discovered after their retention. See In re Citation Corp., 493 F.3d at 1321; In re Keller Fin. Servs., 248 B.R. at 898; accord I.G. Petroleum, L.L.C. v. Fenasci (In re West Delta Oil Co.), 432 F.3d 347, 355 (5th Cir. 2005); Rome v. Braunstein, 19 F.3d 54, 57-58 (1st Cir. 1994) (“[T]he need for professional self-scrutiny and avoidance of conflicts of interest does not end upon appointment.”).

The courts of appeals have recognized the importance of the Bankruptcy Code’s disclosure requirements and the power of the bankruptcy courts to sanction attorneys for failing to comply with these requirements. See, e.g., In re West Delta Oil Co., 432 F.3d at 355; In re Crivello, 134 F.3d at 836; In re Park-Helena Corp., 63 F.3d at 881-82 (9th Cir. 1995); Rome, 19 F.3d at 59-60. The disclosure rules are applied literally, even if the results are sometimes harsh.” Id. at 881. Negligent or inadvertent omissions “do not vitiate the failure to disclose.” Id. The failure to comply with the disclosure rules is a sanctionable violation, even if proper disclosure would have shown that the attorney had not actually violated any Bankruptcy Code provision or Bankruptcy Rule. Id. at 880.

B. The Bankruptcy Court's Findings That Mr. Hancock Had Connections to Three Interested Parties and That He Failed to Disclose Those Connections Were Not Clearly Erroneous.

The Bankruptcy Court found that Mr. Hancock had connections to three companies, which were owned wholly or in part by Mr. Barber, the Debtor's President, and Mr. Langford, the Debtor's CEO: Dynamic Management (the Debtor's co-debtor), Dynamic Acquisitions Group (the Debtor's co-debtor, and the Debtor's 100 percent shareholder), and Dynamic Hospitality (the Debtor's pre and post-petition creditor). Opinion, BR 736 at 9-15. That finding was amply supported by the trial evidence and was not clearly erroneous. The Bankruptcy Court further found, and the evidence showed Mr. Hancock did not disclose his connections to any of the three entities when he submitted his Declaration and he never amended his Declaration to disclose those connections. Id. at 8, 14. Therefore, Mr. Hancock failed to comply with the disclosure requirements of section 327 and Rule 2014(a).

Mr. Hancock contends that he was not required to disclose those connections for three reasons, all of which lack merit. First, he contends that he is only obligated to disclose present connections. Appellant's Brief at 36-39. Rule 2014, however, includes no such limitation but requires the disclosure of all connections. Courts interpreting the rule have confirmed that an attorney must disclose former connections. See, e.g., In re Park-Helena Corp., 63 F.3d at 882. Further, Mr. Hancock concedes former connections might raise issues as to whether an attorney is disinterested. Appellant's Brief at 39-40. That is exactly why Rule 2014 requires disclosure of former connections. Finally, Mr. Hancock's past actions are not consistent with his current position. Mr. Hancock's Declaration disclosed his former representation of Mr. Langford, which predated his connections to the three Dynamic companies. BR 68 at 7.

Second, Mr. Hancock contends that he had no duty to supplement his initial disclosure with connections of which he subsequently became aware. In the first place, Mr. Hancock's connections with the three interested parties already existed when he filed his Declaration and he should have disclosed them then. Further, courts have held that the duty to disclose is a continuing duty that survives the initial filing of the application for employment. See In re Keller Fin. Servs., 248 B.R. at 898; accord In re West Delta Oil, 432 F.3d at 355; Rome, 19 F.3d at 57-58. Section 328(c) provides for the denial of fees if at any time the attorney is not disinterested or represents a party with an adverse interest.

Third, Mr. Hancock asserts that his connections to the three companies were too insignificant to disclose because he did not actually represent those entities. The Bankruptcy Court did not credit Mr. Hancock's testimony disputing the representations, describing it as "attempts to explain away whatever the proof showed otherwise." Opinion, BR 736 at 14. The court correctly found that Mr. Hancock should have disclosed those connections whether or not he represented the Dynamic companies. Id.

Mr. Hancock had no right to pick and choose which connections were worthy of disclosure. See In re Park-Helena, 63 F.3d at 882. Rule 2014(a) is not limited to the disclosure of persons and entities an attorney currently represents or has represented; it requires disclosure of all "connections." The court, not the disclosing attorney, determines if the connections are disqualifying. See id.; In re Keller Fin. Servs., 248 B.R. at 897-98; In re Gulf Coast Orthopedic Ctr., 265 B.R. at 323. By failing to disclose his connections with the Dynamic Companies, Mr. Hancock deprived the Bankruptcy Court of its ability to make a proper and timely determination of his eligibility for employment as counsel for the Debtor. Opinion, BR 736 at 14. That failure is sufficient basis for the denial of all compensation.

C. The Bankruptcy Court Did Not Abuse Its Discretion In Denying All Compensation to Mr. Hancock on the Basis of His Failure to Disclose.

A bankruptcy court's decision regarding the proper amount of attorney's fees to award will not be set aside unless the court abused its discretion. In re Kisseberth, 273 F.3d at 720. This Court has ruled in numerous cases that bankruptcy courts may deny all fees when, as here, an attorney failed to make required disclosures. In Re Big Rivers Elec. Corp., 355 F.3d 415; In re McCrary & Dunlap Const. Co., 2003 WL 22442934, at *9; In re Kisseberth, 273 F.3d at 720-21; In re Downs, 103 F.3d at 477.[16]

As the Bankruptcy Court noted, Mr. Hancock was well aware of the need for transparency and full disclosure because he had recently had his fees denied in another bankruptcy case. Opinion, BR 736 at 12-14. The Bankruptcy Court found that Mr. Hancock not only failed to disclose his connections when he filed his sworn Declaration, he refused to amend the Declaration to correct his errors when they were brought to his attention. Id. at 13-14. Instead, he denied the connections, affirmed [16] Those cases involved Fed. R. Bankr. P. 2016, which requires a debtor's attorney to disclose to the court their fees arrangements and any fees received in connection with the case. Together, Rules 2014 and 2016 enable the bankruptcy courts to identify potential conflicts of interest. The disclosure requirements of Rule 2014 are applied as strictly as those of Rule 2016 and failure to disclose under either may result in denial of all fees. In re Park-Helena Corp., 63 F.3d at 882.

the accuracy of his initial disclosure and threatened the United States Trustee and the Chapter 7 Trustee with sanctions for suggesting that such connections existed.[17] Opinion, BR 736 at 12-14.

The Bankruptcy Court, comparing Mr. Hancock's actions in this case to his actions in the Innovative case, found:

> The Trustee and U.S. Trustee have had to claw the facts out of Hancock. And there were good reasons to do so. Hancock's serial disclosures were not consistent with each other. Some of the disclosures raised issue[s] with respect to Hancock's disinterestedness. The timing of the shifting explanations seemed opportunistically to respond to challenges from the Trustee and the U.S. Trustee. The result is long and expensive litigation to get what Hancock was obligated to give in the first instance without compulsion: complete and accurate disclosure . . .

Id. at 13 n.11 (quoting In re Innovative Entertainment Concepts, 2007 WL 5582055, at *7). Given that Mr. Hancock not only failed to disclose three potential conflicts, [17] The evidence shows Mr. Hancock denied any connection to the Dynamic Companies in an e-mail message to the United States Trustee dated August 7, 2008 and in a proposed motion for sanctions directed at the United States Trustee and the Chapter 7 trustee. App at 311, 317, and 327. And he never amended his sworn Declaration to disclose his connections to those companies even after being confronted with his own affidavit declaring his representation of Dynamic Management or e-mails declaring his representation of Dynamic Acquisitions.

but sought to deny their existence, the court below did not abuse its discretion in following those cases in this one.[18]

Mr. Hancock argues the denial of all fees was an abuse of discretion in response to what he incorrectly asserts was a negligent failure to disclose. First, Mr. Hancock's failure to disclose was not negligent. Even if he could credibly claim he was not aware he had to disclose his connections to the three entities when he filed his Declaration; his continuing refusal to amend his Declaration and his affirmation of its accuracy after being faced with evidence to the contrary cannot be attributed to negligence. Second, even a negligent failure to disclose may result in the forfeiture of fees. In re Kisseberth, 273 F.3d at 721 (affirming disgorgement for negligent failure to disclose). Accord In re Park-Helena Corp., 63 F.3d at 882 (bankruptcy court did not abuse its discretion in denying all requested fees as sanction for attorney's failure to disclose); see also West Delta Oil Co., 2005 WL 3220291, at 6 (quoting Crivello, 134 F.3d at 836) ("failure to disclose is sufficient grounds to revoke an employment order and deny compensation"); Rome, 19 F.3d at 59-60

[18] Mr. Hancock's contention that total denial of fees is not within the zone of appropriate sanctions for his failure to disclose (See Appellant's Brief at 57-58) simply recasts his abuse of discretion argument. As explained above, this Court has found total denial of fees to be an appropriate sanction for failure to fully disclose and this case is a paradigm for why that is so.

(counsel's failure to make full and spontaneous disclosure of financial transactions between debtor and insiders provided sufficient ground for denial of compensation).

Mr. Hancock also contends that his failure to disclose should not result in the denial of his fees because it was merely a technical failure to disclose with no real ramifications. Appellant's Brief at 58. To the contrary, the Bankruptcy Court found full disclosure was important in this case because, as long as the case remained in Chapter 11, Mr. Langford and Mr. Barber continued to collect their $275,000 annual salaries from the Debtor, and Dynamic Hospitality continued to receive payments from the Debtor on a prepetition contract. Opinion, BR 736 at 14. Further, the Debtor never performed a preference analysis as to the payments made to Dynamic Hospitality, Mr. Barber, and Mr. Langford, which totaled $1,256,138.54. Id. And, most significantly, Mr. Hancock's failure to disclose information interfered with the Bankruptcy Court's ability to make an informed decision about whether Mr. Hancock's employment as the Debtor's counsel complied with the Bankruptcy Code. Id.

D. Mr. Hancock's Contentions That Res Judicata, Laches, Estoppel and Waiver Barred The Trustees' Objection To His Fee Application Based on His Failure to Disclose Are Wrong Because Those Doctrines Do Not Apply.

Mr. Hancock contends that the Bankruptcy Court's adjudication of the sufficiency of his pre-retention disclosure under Rule 2014(a) is barred by res judicata, laches, estoppel, and waiver because arguments concerning his failures to disclose were not raised in connection with the bankruptcy court's order approving Mr. Hancock's employment. Appellant's Brief at 46-53. However, Mr. Hancock's argument gets it exactly backward. If the United States Trustee expressed an interest in a specific undisclosed connection, it is all the more reason for Mr. Hancock to have disclosed that connection to the court. The relevant disclosures must appear in the employment application and accompanying affidavit filed pursuant to Rule 2014. Quarles & Brady LLP v. Maxfield (In re Jennings), No. 05-15212, 199 Fed. Appx. 845, 2006 WL 2826947, at *2 (11th Cir. Oct. 4, 2006) (unpublished). In re BH & P, Inc., 949 F.2d 1300, 1317 (3d Cir. 1991) ("It is not ... the obligation of the bankruptcy court to search the record for possible conflicts of interest. That obligation belongs to the party who seeks employment by the estate. . . ."); In re Marine Outlet, Inc., 135 B.R. 154, 156 (Bankr. M.D. Fla. 1991) ("There is no duty placed on the United States Trustee or on creditors to search the record for the existence, vel non, of a conflict of interest of a professional sought to be employed"). See also Kravit, 134 F.3d at 839 ("Bankruptcy courts have neither the resources nor the time to root out the existence of undisclosed conflicts of interest.").

In any event, laches and estoppel do not apply against the Government. Hatchett v. United States, 330 F.3d 875, 887 (6th Cir. 2003) (laches does not apply against United States); Michigan Exp., Inc. v. United States, 374 F.3d 424, 427 (6th Cir. 2004) (government cannot be estopped in the absence of affirmative misconduct). And no intentional relinquishment of known rights by the United States Trustee as required for a waiver has been asserted or established. See Am. Locomotive Co. v. Chem. Research Corp., 171 F.2d 115, 121 (6th Cir. 1949), cert. denied, 336 U.S. 909 (1949).

Res judicata does not bar the United States Trustee and the Chapter 7 trustee from objecting to Hancock's fee application on the basis of his failure to disclose because the application of res judicata requires: (1) a final decision on the merits by a court of competent jurisdiction; (2) a subsequent action between the same parties; (3) an issue in the subsequent action that was litigated or should have been litigated in the prior action; and (4) an identity of the causes of action. Bragg v. Flint Bd. of Educ., 570 F.3d 775, 776 (6th Cir. 2009). The first and third elements are lacking in this case. The order approving Mr. Hancock's employment was not a final order. Cottrell v. Schilling (In re Cottrell), 876 F.2d 540, 542 (6th Cir. 1989). Accord Spears v. U.S. Trustee, 26 F.3d 1023, 1024 (10th Cir. 1994). And Mr. Hancock's failure to disclose his connections to parties in interest was not litigated in the context of the court's retention order and should not have been litigated in that context because no one was aware of the lack of disclosure.

II. Alternatively, The Bankruptcy Court Did Not Abuse its Discretion in Denying All Fees to Mr. Hancock Because It Could Not Find That the Requested Fees Were For Actual, Reasonable and Necessary Services.

As a second, independent ground, the Bankruptcy Court denied Mr. Hancock's fee application because he did not prove that the services for which he requested compensation were actual, reasonable and necessary. The Bankruptcy Court did not abuse its discretion in denying all fees pursuant to section 330.

Section 330 and the Bankruptcy Court have an overriding concern for minimizing administrative expenses to preserve as much of the estate as possible for creditors. Therefore, the compensation statute focuses on the benefits an attorney's services have offered the estate. In re Citation Corp., 493 F.3d at 1321. Although a bankruptcy court may award an attorney who qualifies for employment and is properly retained under section 327(a) "reasonable compensation for actual, necessary services" under 11 U.S.C. § 330(a)(1)(A), the court is prohibited from compensating an attorney for any services that were not reasonably likely to benefit the estate or were unnecessary for the administration of the case. 11 U.S.C. § 330(a)(4)(A)(ii). To obtain compensation, an attorney must file a fee application, detailing his time spent on the case and the amounts sought. Fed. R. Bankr. P. 2016(a). The application must be supported by detailed contemporaneous time records. In re Williams, 384 B.R. 191, 195 (Bankr. N.D. Ohio 2007). The attorney seeking fees must prove that his services were actual, reasonable, and necessary to a high degree of certainty. Imwalle v. Reliance Med. Prod., Inc., 515 F.3d 531, 553 (6th Cir. 2008) (key requirement for award of attorneys fees is documentation offered in support must be of sufficient detail and probative value to enable court to determine with high degree of certainty that such hours were actually and reasonably expended). See, e.g., In re Wildman, 72 B.R. 700, 708 (Bankr. N.D. Ill.1987) ("The burden of proof on all fee matters is on the applicant."). If he fails to do so, the bankruptcy court may "award compensation that is less than the amount of compensation that is requested . . . ." 11 U.S.C. § 330(a)(2).

Mr. Hancock failed to meet his burden for two reasons. First, the Bankruptcy Court found that Mr. Hancock's pervasive unprofessional, abusive, and dilatory conduct disrupted the case and created unnecessary billings that "completely eradicated" any benefit that Mr. Hancock might have provided. Opinion, BR 736 at 17-18, 26. That finding was amply supported by the evidence and not clearly erroneous.

The Bankruptcy Court found, and the evidence showed that Mr. Hancock tried to disrupt a global settlement agreement among the parties, first by requesting that the Debtor be a party to the settlement and signing off on the settlement himself and later filing, but not prosecuting a motion to set it aside a material provision of the settlement.[19] Id. at 18; App at 275; BR 401 at 5; BR 423. He advised the Debtor to open a secret, unauthorized operating account and when it was discovered, refused to provide information about where the half a million dollars in the account had come from and where it had been spent. Opinion, BR 736 at 23-24; Barber Testimony, DR 32 at 601-602; Kelly Testimony, DR 32 at 198-201; App at 258. He threatened attorneys with criminal sanctions with no basis (Hancock Testimony, DR 32 at 88, 235, 257, 649 and 895; BR 176 at 4; BR 249 at 4; and BR 423 at 5), accused Wells Fargo's counsel of fraud (App at 259), and prepared and sent Rule 11 motions to the United States Trustee and the Chapter 7 Trustee charging them with misconduct after they objected to his fee application on the basis of his failure to disclose his connections to interested parties. Opinion, BR 736 at 17; App at 317. When he became angry at Wells Fargo over their attempts to control their cash collateral, he filed a motion seeking to have an examiner appointed to examine Wells Fargo, without any legal basis for that action. Opinion, BR 736 at 17-18; BR 330; Kelly Testimony, DR 32 at 417-418; Mendes (Counsel to the Committee of Unsecured Creditors) Testimony, DR 32 at 664-665. In addition, Mr. Hancock failed to respond to other attorney's requests for information (App at 243; Kelly Testimony, DR 32 at 413-415), failed to return emails or phone calls when critical deadlines were looming (App at 266), failed to show up for hearings (Kelly Testimony, DR 32 at 416), stormed out of the courtroom immediately prior to the start of a hearing (Mendes Testimony, DR 32 at 656), left town without making arrangements for his client's representation (Kelly Testimony, DR 32 at 414-415, and filed objections and motions without pursuing them (BR 330 and BR 423). Opinion, BR 736 at 24-25.

The Bankruptcy Court found that Mr. Hancock's intractable conduct generated fees and problems rather than progress, and evidenced a lack of professionalism and the transparency that is expected of a Chapter 11 Debtor's attorney. Id. at 24. After reviewing Mr. Hancock's actions in this case, the Bankruptcy Court stated, "[t]he court cannot find, based on the extensive proof of Mr. Hancock's unprofessional, dilatory actions and his fractious behavior that his services as Debtor's counsel were reasonable and necessary pursuant to 11 U.S.C. § 330." Id. at 18.

Second, the Bankruptcy Court found that Mr. Hancock's billing practices and his billing records were inadequate to allow the Bankruptcy Court to make the findings necessary to compensate him from the bankruptcy estate. Id. at 22. That finding was amply supported by the evidence and not clearly erroneous.

The various indicia of the unreliability of Mr. Hancock's application included admitted overbilling, lack of contemporaneous time records, testimony from Mr. Hancock's paralegal that conflicted with Mr. Hancock's testimony, and Mr. Hancock's failure to prepare billing statements to justify the $50,000 he charged the Debtor before the case was filed. Id. at 19-22. Mr. Hancock's interim fee application requested $355,975 for less than three month's work. Id. at 19; BR 487. His fee application sought fees for 54 days where he purportedly worked over ten hours. Opinion, BR 736 at 20. Of those 54 days, he sought compensation for more than 15 hours of work on 32 of them, more than 20 hours of work on 17 of them and more than 24 hours of work on 2 of them. Id.; App at 293.

After the United States Trustee objected, Mr. Hancock amended his fee application and reduced the amount sought by $55,226.00. Opinion, BR 736 at 20; App at 330. Even then he sought compensation for more than 15 hours of work on 25 days and more than 10 hours of work on 51 days. Opinion, BR 736 at 20; App at 297. The Bankruptcy Court found that absent the objections, Mr. Hancock would have overbilled the bankruptcy estate by at least $55,226.00. Opinion, BR 736 at 21.

Moreover, the Bankruptcy Court found that Mr. Hancock produced seven handwritten chargeable time slips reflecting hours; his telephone records, a log showing his e-mail traffic from December 3, 2007, to December 14, 2007, and the Docket Sheet for the case in response to the Bankruptcy Court's pretrial order to produce all contemporaneous billing records. Opinion, BR 736 at 21 and BR 658. Mr. Hancock acknowledged that his time entries were dictated in May 2008, well after the events reflected in the fee application.[20] Opinion, BR 736 at 21; Hancock Testimony, DR 32 at 179-180. Although Mr. Hancock testified that he dictated the time entries from contemporaneous notes he had made during the case that his paralegal later discarded (Hancock Testimony, DR 32 at 57), his paralegal testified that she did not discard any notes because she was not given any. Horel Testimony, DR 32 at 490-491. The Bankruptcy Court found that Mr. Hancock's recreated time logs were not contemporaneous and were inadequate to meet his burden to show he was entitled to the requested fees. Opinion, BR 736 at 22.

Mr. Hancock also failed to keep proper records to justify the $50,000.00 prepetition amount he was paid by the Debtor shortly before the bankruptcy case was filed. When the Chapter 7 trustee asked Mr. Hancock to produce time records to support the work performed against the $50,000.00 he received from the Debtor before the case was filed, Mr. Hancock responded by e-mail that:

[20] Even though the time entries were not contemporaneous with the work, Mr. Hancock was able to submit "2882 separate line entries . . . broken in tiny pieces" detailing how his time was spent from December 3, 2007 to April 30, 2008. Hancock Testimony, DR 32 at 36.

> I am unable to find any such papers. Given the practice we followed over the years I suspect there might not be any. That would be ordinary course for us. Bob [Langford, the Debtor's CEO] doesn't like to see lawyers bills and I don't like the time and expense of preparing them so its quid pro quo.

App at 328; Hancock Testimony, DR 32 at 168-169. Mr. Hancock's admitted billing practice with respect to the Debtor, which the Bankruptcy Court found "simply unacceptable," casts further doubt on the reliability of his fee application. Opinion, BR 736 at 22.

Mr. Hancock's litigation tactics and unprofessional conduct, which needlessly protracted the case and generated substantial unnecessary fees together with the unreliability of the proof of the time billed was fatal to his ability to meet his burden to prove to a high degree of certainty that the requested fees were for actual, reasonable and necessary services.[21] The Bankruptcy Court did not abuse its discretion in denying his fees for that reason.

[21] Mr. Hancock's contention that the Bankruptcy Court found no deficiencies in the accuracy of his time descriptions (Appellant's Brief at 23) is belied by the myriad deficiencies identified by that court.

A bankruptcy case is not intended to be a feast for lawyers. While a total denial of fees seems harsh; it is equally harsh for the creditors to watch the estate being eaten up by unnecessary billings. Mr. Hancock is essentially asking the creditors to pay twice for his wasteful and unnecessary litigation tactics because they have already paid their own attorneys to respond to his tactics.

Mr. Hancock contends that the bankruptcy court abused its discretion by not providing a lodestar analysis of the fee application. Appellant's Brief at 25. Mr. Hancock focuses on a hourly rate multiplied by the number of hours billed. However, in a lodestar calculation only those hours that are reasonably expended are multiplied by the hourly rate. The Bankruptcy Court expressly considered the lodestar calculation as set forth in this Court's decision in Boddy v. U.S. Bankruptcy Court, 950 F.2d 334 (6th Cir. 1991). Opinion, BR 736 at 16. However, because it was unable to find that Mr. Hancock's services were reasonable or necessary, the lodestar calculation did not support an award of any compensation in this case under section 330(a)(1)(A). See Opinion, BR 736 at 18-19. See also 11 U.S.C. § 330(a)(4)(A)(ii) (prohibiting court from compensating attorney for services unnecessary to the administration of the case).

Mr. Hancock also contends that the Bankruptcy Court's opinion was unconstitutionally based on the content of three private e-mails and several pleadings

Mr. Hancock wrote and presented as evidence in the trial. Appellant's Brief at 8, 30-31. He asserts that the Bankruptcy Court's denial of fees was a sanctioning of free speech and is reversible error. That argument fails for three reasons. First, the Bankruptcy Court declined to compensate Mr. Hancock first and foremost, because of his failure to make required disclosures, which had nothing to do with Mr. Hancock's abusive conduct. Second, Mr. Hancock both understates the egregiousness of his conduct and misstates the basis of the court's decision. The court found that Mr. Hancock used a multitude of abusive tactics that unnecessarily disrupted the case, and generated excessive fees, making it impossible for the court to find that Mr. Hancock's services were reasonable and necessary as required for compensation under section 330. The referenced documents were just a few of the numerous examples cited by the court. To the extent that the court relied on the referenced documents at all, the court did not penalize Mr. Hancock for what he said or how he said it, the court simply held that because of the overwhelmingly disruptive effect of Mr. Hancock's conduct in the case, it could not find that the services he provided were reasonable and necessary as required for compensation under section 330. Opinion, BR 736 at 18. Third, as an attorney, Mr. Hancock had no First Amendment free speech right while representing his client in the courtroom. Mezibov v. Allen, 411 F.3d 712, 720-21 (6th Cir. 2005), cert. denied, 547 U.S. 1111 (2006). Even outside the courtroom, an attorney's First Amendment rights for speech likely to have a prejudicial effect on the outcome of a case are inherently circumscribed by the ethical implications and obligations of being an officer of the court. See Gentile v. State Bar of Nevada, 501 U.S. 1030, 1071-72 (1991). The Bankruptcy Court found that not only were Mr. Hancock's actions prejudicial to the efficient administration of the case, but they seemed to be intended to be so. Opinion, BR 736 at 18. Therefore, those actions contravened Mr. Hancock's duty to the court and were not protected as free speech.

III. Mr. Hancock's Due Process Rights Were Not Violated Because He Had Ample Opportunity To Present His Claims And There Was No Request, Nor Reason, For the Bankruptcy Judge to Recuse Himself.

A notice and a hearing is required prior to the award of compensation to professionals under section 330. 11 U.S.C. § 330(a). The hearing requirement means there shall be "such opportunity for a hearing as is appropriate in the particular circumstances." 11 U.S.C. § 102(1). Mr. Hancock received an appropriate hearing related to the consideration of his fee application by the Bankruptcy Court. The issues before the Bankruptcy Court were whether Mr. Hancock was entitled to fees from the bankruptcy estate, and if so, in what amount. The objections and trial memoranda filed by the United States Trustee and the Chapter 7 trustee clearly articulated their objections to Mr. Hancock's fee application.

Mr. Hancock was provided adequate time to prepare for trial. The August 20, 2008, pretrial order set the matter for hearing on September 29, 2008. At Mr. Hancock's request, the trial date was continued to October 23, 2008. He did not request a further continuance of the trial date. Mr. Hancock was afforded a full opportunity to present his evidence to the Bankruptcy Court, which took testimony from eleven witness over five days of trial. The Bankruptcy Court ultimately denied Mr. Hancock's fees based on the extensive evidence offered at trial.[22] No further process was due.

Mr. Hancock contends that he was denied due process because the bankruptcy judge did not recuse himself. That argument was forfeited because it Mr. Hancock never asked the Bankruptcy Judge to recuse himself. See United States v. DiPina, 230 F.3d 477, 486 (1st Cir. 2000) (defendant waived issue of bias on appeal by not moving [22] Mr. Hancock argues that the Bankruptcy Court improperly relied on Judge Lundin's findings in the Innovative Entertainment case, which Mr. Hancock alleges is extra-record, inadmissible propensity evidence. That argument is wrong for several reasons. First, given the overwhelming evidence offered in this case of Mr. Hancock's conduct, the Bankruptcy Court had no need to and did not rely on any evidence of Mr. Hancock's "propensity" to disregard his disclosure obligations. The Bankruptcy Court cited the Innovative Entertainment opinion as evidence that Mr. Hancock was aware of his disclosure obligation, a fact that Mr. Hancock testified to at trial. The court was entitled to take extra-judicial notice of the opinion, especially after it was referenced in the trial memoranda and in Mr. Hancock's testimony. See Granader v. Pub. Bank, 417 F.2d 75, 82-83 (6th Cir. 1969).

for judge's recusal or otherwise raising issue below). Further, the United States Supreme Court has found judicial recusal to be constitutionally warranted only under extraordinary circumstances, involving extremely limited factual scenarios where the judge has had either a direct, financial interest in the outcome of the case or a connection outside of the case with one of the parties that created an unconstitutional probability of bias. Caperton v. A.T. Massey Coal Co., 129 S. Ct. 2252 (2009). This is not such a case. Mr. Hancock has asserted no outside connection between the bankruptcy judge and any party in this case, much less one that would warrant recusal. The Bankruptcy Court's proceedings did not create an unconstitutional probability of bias; the Bankruptcy Court's assessment of Mr. Hancock's conduct was determined after weighing the evidence presented at trial in its role as fact finder. See Morgan v. Goldman (In re Morgan), 573 F.3d 615, 624 (8th Cir. 2009).[23] The opinion's portrayal of Mr. Hancock was attributable not to any bias on the part of the court, but to his own conduct.

[23] Morgan applied the Caperton standards relied on by Mr. Hancock.

CONCLUSION

For these reasons, the United States Trustee respectfully asks this Court to affirm the orders entered below.

STATEMENT OF JURISDICTION

This appeal arises from an interlocutory order issued by the United States Bankruptcy Court for the Southern District of Georgia (Susan D. Barrett, J.) on September 11, 2009, denying Appellant Bobby Hardwick's motion to dismiss an adversary proceeding initiated by Appellee United States Trustee alleging that Appellant violated 11 U.S.C. § 110 in connection with the preparation of Suzette M. Wilson's ("Debtor") bankruptcy petition and schedules. This Court lacks jurisdiction over this appeal pursuant to 28 U.S.C. § 158(a) because the order appealed from is not final, leave for an interlocutory appeal was not obtained, and leave should not be granted.

STATEMENT OF ISSUES PRESENTED

Does this Court have appellate jurisdiction to hear this appeal under 28 U.S.C. § 158(a)?

In the alternative, did the bankruptcy court err in denying Appellant's claims that 11 U.S.C. § 110 is unconstitutional; and did the bankruptcy court err in holding that Appellant is a bankruptcy petition preparer as defined by said statute?

STANDARD OF APPELLATE REVIEW

Where appellate jurisdiction exists, courts "independently review the bankruptcy court's decision, applying the 'clearly erroneous' standard to findings of fact and de novo review to conclusions of law'. . . . [Where the issue] poses a mixed question of law and fact, [the court applies] the clearly erroneous standard, unless the bankruptcy court's analysis was 'infected by legal error...'" STATEMENT OF THE CASE

Appellant appeals from the interlocutory order denying his motion to dismiss, contending that the bankruptcy court erred in denying his claims that 11 U.S.C. § 110 is unconstitutional and erred in holding that he is a bankruptcy petition preparer and therefore subject to the provisions of said statute. Although Appellant filed a motion for leave to appeal in the bankruptcy court, that court did not rule upon the motion before transmitting the appellate record to this Court. Appellant did not file a motion for leave to appeal in this Court, but his notice of appeal may be construed as such a motion.

STATEMENT OF FACTS

Prior to filing for bankruptcy relief, debtor Suzette Wilson (hereinafter "Debtor") sought the assistance of Bobby Hardwick and/or his company Carol & Kisha Enterprises in preparing her bankruptcy petition. Appellant Hardwick acknowledges he is not an attorney and that he assisted Debtor in the preparation and filing of her bankruptcy petition and schedules. He also admits that Debtor provided him with $375.00 at the time of his assistance. However, he contends that the money does not constitute "compensation" as that term is used in 11 U.S.C. § 110(a), but merely a "donation." Appellant Hardwick signed Debtor's petition under penalty of perjury stating:

> I declare under penalty of perjury that: (1) I am a bankruptcy petition preparer as defined in 11 U.S.C. §110; (2) I prepared this document for compensation and have provided the debtor with a copy of this document and the notices and information required under 11 U.S.C. §§110(b), 110(h), and 342(b); and (3) if rules or guidelines have been promulgated pursuant to 11 U.S.C. §110(h) setting a maximum fee for services chargeable by bankruptcy petition preparers, I have given the debtor notice of the maximum amount before preparing any document for filing for a debtor or accepting any fee from the debtor, as required in that section. Official Form 19 is attached.

The United States Trustee filed an adversary complaint against Mr. Hardwick, asserting violations of 11 U.S.C. § 110. In Count I, the United States Trustee asserts Hardwick violated 11 U.S.C. §110(b)(2)(B) by failing to file the required notice informing Debtor about the legal limitations of a bankruptcy petition preparer. In Count II, the United States Trustee alleges Hardwick violated 11 U.S.C. § 110(c) by failing to provide his full social security number on the petition. In Count III, the United States Trustee asserts Hardwick violated 11 U.S.C. § 110(e) by giving legal advice to the Debtor. Count IV alleges a violation of 11 U.S.C. § 110(f) for using the word "legal" in advertisements. Count V seeks the turnover of fees Debtor paid Hardwick pursuant to 11 U.S.C. § 110(h), alleging the fees exceed the value of services rendered. Count VI seeks an injunction prohibiting Hardwick from acting as a bankruptcy petition preparer in the Southern District of Georgia.

In response to the United States Trustee's complaint, Hardwick filed a pro se counterclaim and motion to dismiss moving to dismiss the complaint "based on the fact that [11] U. S. C. [§]110. . .is unconstitutional in that it violate[s] [Hardwick's] First and 14th amendment right to freedom of expression and due process of and equal protection of the law." (Motion to Dismiss, Bankruptcy Dckt. No. 5). In his motion to dismiss and at the hearing thereon, Hardwick argued that § 110 is unconstitutional because it is vague, overly broad and fails to state a legitimate government interest. He also argued that even if the statute is constitutional, the statute is not applicable to him because he is not a bankruptcy petition preparer as defined by § 110 since he received a "donation," not compensation for his services.

The bankruptcy court denied Hardwick's motion to dismiss, holding that 11 U.S.C. § 110 is constitutional and that Hardwick is a bankruptcy petition preparer subject to said statute (hereinafter "Order Denying Motion to Dismiss").

SUMMARY OF ARGUMENT

This appeal should be dismissed for lack of jurisdiction. An order denying a motion to dismiss is not final and appealable under 28 U.S.C. § 158(a), nor is this a case appropriate for interlocutory review under 28 U.S.C. § 158(a)(3).

In the alternative, if the Court should find that it has appellate jurisdiction, the bankruptcy court's order should be affirmed.

ARGUMENT AND CITATION OF AUTHORITY

I. This case should be dismissed for lack of jurisdiction.

A threshold issue in any case is whether the Court has jurisdiction; the Court is obligated to consider jurisdiction even if it means raising the issue sua sponte. See In re Donovan, 532 F.3d 1134, 1136 (11th Cir. 2008).

In bankruptcy cases, district courts generally have jurisdiction to hear appeals from final judgments, orders, and decrees of bankruptcy courts, as well as, in certain circumstances, some interlocutory orders. 28 U.S.C. § 158(a). If the order under appeal is interlocutory, the appellant must obtain leave to appeal. 28 U.S.C. § 158(a)(3). In this case, there is no appellate jurisdiction because the order under appeal — a denial of a motion to dismiss — is not final, and leave to appeal was not obtained. Nor should leave to appeal be granted.

To be "final" under 28 U.S.C. § 158, an order must end the litigation on the merits, leaving nothing to be done but execute the judgment. Jove Eng'g v. IRS, 92 F.3d 1539, 1547-48 (11th Cir. 1996). Even in the bankruptcy context, where finality is given a more flexible interpretation, see id., "the particular adversary proceeding or controversy . . . must have been finally resolved" for an order to be considered "final." Commodore Holdings, Inc. v. Exxon Mobil Corp., 331 F.3d 1257, 1259 (11th Cir. 2003); accord In re Donovan, 532 F.3d at 1136 (finding denial of motion to dismiss non-final).

Appellant Hardwick seeks review of an order that denied his motion to dismiss an adversary proceeding. See Bankruptcy Dckt. Nos. 14 (order) and 18 (notice of appeal); see also Fed. R. Bankr. P. 7001 (defining adversary proceedings). An order denying a motion to dismiss bears none of the hallmarks of a final order. Rather than resolving the case or controversy, an order denying a motion to dismiss means that the case will continue. And indeed, in the bankruptcy court below, the adversary proceeding is continuing. In short, a denial of a motion to dismiss — which does not conclusively resolve any adversary proceeding or claim — is not final, and hence it is not appealable as of right under 28 U.S.C. § 158(a)(1). See In re Donovan, 532 F.3d at 1137 (holding that denial of a motion to dismiss a Chapter 7 bankruptcy case is not final and appealable under 28 U.S.C. § 158); see also In re Ted A. Petras Furs, Inc., No. 95-5056, 100 F.3d 943, 1996 WL 49255, *2 (2d Cir. Feb. 7, 1996) (holding that a denial of a motion to dismiss a bankruptcy adversary proceeding is not final).

Because an order denying a motion to dismiss an adversary proceeding is not final, it may be reviewed in an interlocutory appeal only with leave of court. See 28 U.S.C. § 158(a)(3). Under Rule 8003 of the Federal Rules of Bankruptcy Procedure, this Court may grant leave to appeal even if no motion for leave to appeal has been filed.[2] See Fed. R. Bankr. P. 8003(c).[3] In considering whether to grant leave, courts use the same standards as govern the district courts' certification of interlocutory appeals to the circuit courts under 28 U.S.C. § 1292(b). See Ablitt & Caruolo, P.C. v. Michaud, 2006 WL 1788329, *1 (D.N.H. 2006) (denying leave to appeal from an order denying a motion to dismiss an adversary proceeding) (citing In re Bank of New Eng. Corp., 218 B.R. 643, 652 (1st Cir. B.A.P. 1998)). Accordingly, this Court should determine whether the bankruptcy court's order "involves a controlling question of law as to which there is substantial ground for difference of opinion and that an immediate appeal from the order may materially advance the ultimate termination of the litigation." 28 U.S.C. § 1292(b).

Regardless of whether the issues of law here might be controlling, allowing this immediate appeal will not materially advance the ultimate termination of the litigation. The adversary proceeding is still going forward in the bankruptcy court, and Appellant Hardwick may prevail, obviating the need for his appeal. See In re

[3] Federal Rule of Bankruptcy Procedure 8003(c) provides in pertinent part:

> (c) Appeal Improperly Taken Regarded as a Motion for Leave to Appeal. If a required motion for leave to appeal is not filed, but a notice of appeal is timely filed, the district court or bankruptcy appellate panel may grant leave to appeal or direct that a motion for leave to appeal be filed. The district court or the bankruptcy appellate panel may also deny leave to appeal but in so doing shall consider the notice of appeal as a motion for leave to appeal. Unless an order directing that a motion for leave to appeal be filed provides otherwise, the motion shall be filed within 10 days of entry of the order.

Ted A. Petras Furs, Inc., 1996 WL 49255, *2 (finding no jurisdiction over interlocutory appeal). Moreover, if Mr. Hardwick should not prevail in the adversary proceeding, the issues he raises in this interlocutory appeal will be reviewable in an appeal from the final order. In short, there is no practical reason to hear the appeal now. Rather than expediting the termination of the litigation, allowing the appeal will prolong the case and create more work for the parties and the courts. And for the reasons discussed in the remaining sections of this brief, there is not "substantial ground for difference of opinion" about the questions of law presented by Appellant Hardwick.

Accordingly, the Court should dismiss this appeal for lack of jurisdiction under 28 U.S.C. § 158(a).

II. In the alternative, Appellant's arguments that 11 U.S.C. § 110 is unconstitutional are flawed.

If this Court should find that it has appellate jurisdiction, it should affirm the bankruptcy court's order.

Appellant's brief describes 11 U.S.C. § 110 as "vague," "overly broad," and inconsistent with "freedom of speech" and "equal protection." The brief does not contain sections that isolate and expand upon these claims; rather, the constitutional buzz words are placed in various parts of the brief with little or no legal development.[4] As such, Appellee United States Trustee will address Appellant's constitutional arguments here as an initial matter.

"When considering challenges to the constitutionality of a statute, the Court begins with the presumption that acts of Congress are constitutional." Martini v. We The People Forms & Serv. Ctr. USA, Inc. (In re Barcelo), 313 B.R. 135, 140 (Bankr. E.D. N.Y. 2004) quoting Usery v. Turner Elkhorn Mining Co., 428 U.S. 1, 15 (1976). "[L]aws regulating economic activity not involving constitutionally protected conduct are subject to a quite lenient test for constitutional sufficiency." Zolq v. Kelly (In re Kelly), 841 F.2d 908, 915 (9th Cir. 1988); Village of Hoffman Estates v. Flipside, Hoffman Estates, Inc., 455 U.S. 489, 494 (1982).

Vagueness

In different parts of his brief, Appellant refers to 11 U.S.C. § 110 as "vague" and therefore constitutionally invalid. For example, Appellant's brief at page 12 asserts that because 11 U.S.C. § 110(h) contains no maximum or minimum fee for bankruptcy petition preparers, it is vague and therefore constitutionally invalid. Appellant's brief at page 15 seems to assert that the entire statute is vague because it "does not lay out any requirements for a Bankruptcy Petition Preparer." Appellant's contention of vagueness is demonstrably incorrect.

[4] Pro se pleadings are to be reviewed liberally and held to a less stringent standard than those drafted by attorneys. Hughes v. Lott, 350 F.3d 1157, 1160 (11th Cir. 2003). However, courts will not act as de facto counsel for pro se parties or rewrite deficient pleadings. GJR Investments, Inc. v. County of Escambia, Fla., 132 F.3d 1359, 1369 (11th Cir. 1998). A party does not sufficiently raise an issue on appeal when he mentions the issue in his brief without providing specific arguments in support of the issue. Greenbriar, Ltd. v. City of Alabaster, 881 F.2d 1570, 1573, n.6 (11th Cir. 1989); see also Lovett v. Ray, 327 F.3d 1181, 1183 (11th Cir. 2003) (holding an argument raised for first time in pro se litigant's reply brief was not properly before appellate court).

A statute is not unconstitutionally vague if it gives a "person of ordinary intelligence a reasonable opportunity to know what is prohibited, so that he may act accordingly." See generally McConnell v. Federal Election Com'n, 540 U.S. 93, 170 n.64 (2003); see Scott v. United States (In re Doser), 412 F. 3d 1056, 1062 (9th Cir. Idaho 2005) (a statute is vague if "'men of common intelligence must necessarily guess at its meaning and differ as to its application'"), quoting United States v. Hugs, 384 F. 3d 762, 768 (9th Cir. 2004). "Fair notice is provided when prohibitions are clearly defined, but such definition does not limit courts to a mechanical application which would lack relevance to the subject of the regulation." Gould et. al. v. Clippard, 340 B.R. 861, 884 (M.D. Tenn. 2006).

Within this analytical framework, it is worthwhile to examine the individual subsections of 11 U.S.C. § 110. For purposes of this appeal, the relevant subsections are §§ 110(a) - (h).

Section 110(a) is not vague. It clearly defines a bankruptcy petition preparer as "a person, other than an attorney or an employee of an attorney, who prepares for compensation a document for filing in a bankruptcy case.” 11 U.S.C. §110(a).

Sections 110(b)(1) and (2) are also not vague. These subsections provide that notice must be given to the debtor that the bankruptcy petition preparer is not an attorney and that he may not give legal advice. These subsections unambiguously identify the party required to sign the notice and direct that the notice must be filed with court. 11 U.S.C. § 110(b)(1). Section 110(b)(2) provides specific language to include in the notice to the Debtor. There is no ambiguity as to what conduct is prohibited by these subsections.

Section 110(c) is not vague. It clearly requires the social security number of the bankruptcy petition preparer to be provided in the petition and if the bankruptcy petition preparer is a corporation then the social security number of the officer is required. 11 U.S.C. § 110(c).

Section 110(d) is not vague. It requires that “[a] bankruptcy petition preparer shall, not later than the time at which a document for filing is presented for the debtor’s signature, furnish to the debtor a copy of the document.” 11 U.S.C. § 110(d).

Section 110(e) is not vague. It provides that a bankruptcy petition preparer is prohibited from executing any document on behalf of a debtor. It also prohibits a petition preparer from giving legal advice to a debtor, including but not limited to whether to file bankruptcy, whether to file it in a particular chapter, whether debts will be discharged, whether the debtor will be able to retain a home or car, the tax consequences of a bankruptcy case, the advisability of reaffirmation agreements, and how to characterize the nature of the debtor's interests in property. 11 U.S.C. §110(e).

Section 110(f) unambiguously prohibits the use of the word "legal" in advertisements. Section 110(g), in a similar clear-cut fashion, prohibits a petition preparer from collecting any payment for filing fees.

Section 110(h) provides that the court "shall disallow and order the immediate turnover to the bankruptcy trustee of any fee . . . found to be in excess of the value of any services . . . ."[5]

Courts that have previously considered the challenges raised by Appellant Hardwick have found 11 U.S.C. § 110 clear and not unconstitutionally vague. As stated by the Ninth Circuit Court of Appeals, ". . . it is clear to whom the provisions of the statute apply and anyone performing the services of a Bankruptcy

[5] Appellant contends that it is vague and arbitrary to allow the United States Trustee (and presumably a bankruptcy court) to determine what constitutes an "excessive" fee when the statute provides no parameters. This specific argument is addressed below in section VI.

Petition Preparer are on notice of what conduct is forbidden by statute." In re Doser, 412 F. 3d 1056, 1062 (9th Cir. 2005).

It is difficult to think of provisions that are less vague that the ones set forth in 11 U.S.C. § 110. Appellee United States Trustee is not aware of any cases holding any portion of 11 U.S.C. § 110 to be unconstitutionally vague. As stated in Gould:

> [N]umerous courts have carefully examined and parsed the text of the subsections [of 11 U.S.C. §110] and found that both the prohibited conduct and the resultant sanctions are clearly defined, identifiable under ordinary facts and circumstances, and amenable to application without a subjective analysis. In re Rose, 314 B.R. 663, 688-690 (Bankr. E.D. Tenn. 2004) (§110 not vague because ordinary person can deduce meaning); In re Barcelso, 313 B.R. 135, 144-45 (Bankr. E.D.N.Y. 2004) (general terms do not render statute unconstitutionally vague when it would be impossible for Congress to codify a list); In re Doser, 292 B.R. 652, 658 (D. Idaho 2003) (statute provides definitions which constitutionally place person of ordinary intelligence on notice of prohibited conduct); In re Moore, 290 B.R. 287, 297-98 (Bankr. E.D.N.C. 2003) (§110(h) clearly . . . limits [bankruptcy petition preparers] to typing documents as directed by customers); In re Bush, 275 B.R. 69, 84-85 (Bankr. D. Idaho 2002) (same); In re Guttierez, 248 B.R. 287, 299 (Bankr. W.D. Tex. 2000) (same).

Gould, 340 B.R. at 885.

In support of his assertion of vagueness, Appellant Hardwick urges the Court to follow Coates v. City of Cincinnati, 402 U.S. 611, 614 (1971), where the Supreme Court held a city ordinance was unconstitutionally vague because it did not specify the type of "annoying" conduct that merited criminal prosecution. Coates, 402 U.S. at 614. The Supreme Court held the term "annoying" was overbroad and could encompass too many types of legally permissible conduct. As demonstrated above and unlike the ordinance in Coates, the individual subsections of 11 U.S.C. § 110 define the prohibited conduct with great specificity. Thus, Mr. Hardwick's assertions regarding vagueness should fail.

Overbreadth

In various parts of his brief, Appellant describes 11 U.S.C. § 110 as "broad" or "much to broad," but provides little or no development of this assertion. Courts addressing this specific issue have found § 110 to be constitutional and not overly broad. See In re Rose, 314 B.R. 663, 688-690 (Bankr. E.D. Tenn. 2004); In re Doser, 292 B.R. at 658. The Court in Doser explained:

> In the case of a statute where 'despite some possibly impermissible application, the remainder of the statute covers a whole range of easily identifiable and constitutionally proscribable conduct[,]' the Court will not strike the statute for being overbroad. Secretary of State of Maryland v. J.H. Munson Co., 467 U.S. 947, 964-65, 104 S.Ct. 2839, 2851, 81 L. Ed. 2d 786 (1984) (quotations omitted). Such is the case here. Section 110 is limited to proscribing unfair and deceptive conduct by [bankruptcy petition preparers]. The Court may easily construe §110 to avoid constitutional problems. New York v. Ferber, 458 U.S. 747, 769-70, 102 S. Ct. 3348, 3361-62, 73 L.Ed.2d 1113 (1982). Section 110 is limited to a narrow range of conduct, and the Court concludes that §110 is not overbroad.

Other Assertions of Constitutional Invalidity

Appellant employs other constitutional buzz words like “equal protection” and “freedom of expression,” but as noted by the bankruptcy court, Appellant has no fundamental right to be a bankruptcy petition preparer without reasonable government regulation.[6] See Dent v. West Virginia, 129 U.S. 114, 121-22 (1889) (reasonable regulation is allowed to protect citizens from “ignorance and incapacity, as well as deception and fraud” and “there is no arbitrary deprivation of such right [to pursue a lawful occupation] where its exercise is not permitted because of a failure to comply with conditions imposed by the government for the protection of society”); In re Kaitangian, 218 B.R. 102, 107 (Bankr. S.D. Cal. 1998) (equal protection argument failed as there is no fundamental right to be a bankruptcy petition preparer). As stated by the bankruptcy court, section 110 “promotes the government’s legitimate interest in preventing fraud and deception upon unsophisticated debtors.”[7]

III. Appellant's argument that Georgia law supercedes 11 U.S.C. § 110(f) was never raised in the bankruptcy court and is otherwise without merit.

Appellant's first enumerated argument is that 11 U.S.C. § 110(f)'s prohibition against the use of the word "legal" in advertisements by a bankruptcy petition preparer conflicts with Georgia law. This argument fails for two reasons. First, Appellant Hardwick never raised this issue in the underlying case. There is no mention of this argument in his bankruptcy-level pleadings, nor did he raise this argument orally at the hearing on his motion to dismiss.[8] At the hearing, he argued that 11 U.S.C. § 110(f) was unconstitutional because it violated his right to free speech,[9] but he never specifically argued that this Code section conflicted with Georgia law. His new argument on appeal involves the interplay between state law and federal law which implicates preemption and conflict of law issues. These issues were never addressed by the bankruptcy court because Appellant never raised them. Millennium Partners, L.P. v. Colmar Storage LLC, 494 F.3d 1293,

[8] See Report and Recommendation to the United States District Court to Deny In Forma Pauperis to Movant, signed by Bankruptcy Judge Susan Barrett on October 9, 2009 (Bankruptcy Court Docket No. 38), at page 7, stating "Furthermore, Mr. Hardwick has failed to state a non-frivolous claim, as his appeal attempts to raise new issues or theories for the district court to consider on appeal which were not previously raised in the bankruptcy court. See Ford v. United States, 989 F.2d 450, 453 (11th Cir. 1993)."

[9] See Order Denying Motion to Dismiss, pages 19-20, refuting Appellant's argument. Appellant Hardwick also argued that he cannot notify people that he cannot give legal advice if he cannot use the word legal in advertisements, but he never mentioned any potential conflict with Georgia law. His argument that he cannot give proper notice without using the word "legal" in advertisements is specious.

1304 (11th Cir. 2007) (arguments raised for the first time on appeal are not properly before the court); In re J.H. Inv. Servs., Inc., 418 B.R. 413, 424 (M.D. Fla. 2009) (party appealing from bankruptcy court order to district court cannot raise issue for the first time on appeal).

Second, even if this issue had been raised in the underlying court, Appellant's contention is without merit. There is no conflict between 11 U.S.C. § 110(f) and O.C.G.A. § 15-19-51. The Bankruptcy Code section provides as follows:

> A bankruptcy petition preparer shall not use the word "legal" or any similar term in any advertisements, or advertise under any category that includes the word "legal" or any similar term.

11 U.S.C. § 110(f).

The Georgia law O.C.G.A. § 15-19-51, despite Appellant's contention, does not conflict with bankruptcy law. No provision of O.C.G.A. § 15-19-51 authorizes non-lawyers to use the word "legal" in advertisements.[10]

---

[10] The Georgia law provides:

(a) It shall be unlawful for any person other than a duly licensed attorney at law:

> (1) To practice or appear as an attorney at law for any person other than himself in any court of this state or before any judicial body;
> (2) To make it a business to practice as an attorney at law for any person other than himself in any of such courts;

Appellant's brief at pages 3-4 implies that the Georgia statute requires non-attorneys to use the word "legal" in advertisements in order to notify the public that they cannot provide legal advice. To the contrary, the Georgia statute prohibits non-attorneys from holding themselves out as lawyers or as people who can provide legal advice. O.C.G.A. § 15-19-51. The Bankruptcy Code prohibition against using the word "legal" in an advertisement does not conflict with, but rather parallels, the Georgia statute. Section 110(f) seeks to avoid public confusion and prohibits advertisements that might mislead the public into thinking legal services are provided by non-attorney bankruptcy petition preparers. In re Calzadilla, 151 B.R. 622, 626 (Bankr. S.D. Fla. 1993); In re Kaitangian, 218 B.R. 102 (Bankr. S.D. Cal. 1998). There is no conflict. Both statutes prohibit non-attorneys from holding themselves out as lawyers or as capable of providing legal counsel.

Taking a slightly different angle, Appellant contends that he cannot possibly notify the public that he cannot give legal advice (allegedly a requirement of Georgia law) if he is precluded from using the word "legal" in advertisements. This argument is specious. The bankruptcy law does not prevent Appellant Hardwick from using the word "legal" in any document whatsoever, but only in advertisements. Appellant Hardwick is free to notify his potential customers in other ways that he is not an attorney and that he cannot provide legal advice. Indeed, he is required to do so by separate notice pursuant to 11 U.S.C. § 110(b).

IV. Appellant's argument that his written contract with Debtor adequately notified Debtor that he is not an attorney and cannot give legal advice was never raised in the bankruptcy court and is not an issue for appeal.

Appellant Hardwick's second argument is that the contract executed between himself and the Debtor (which he calls the "Non-Attorney Contract or Disclaimer Contract") provided adequate notice to the Debtor that Appellant Hardwick was not an attorney and may not practice law or give legal advice.

Appellant admits that he did not provide a separate notice document as required by § 110(b)(2), but he argues his contract with Debtor provided the same essential information.

Appellant's contention may be correct or incorrect, but the issue has yet to be adjudicated by the bankruptcy court. That court never addressed whether Appellant's contract with Debtor fulfilled the notice requirements of 11 U.S.C. § 110(b)(2) because Appellant never raised this issue.

Even if he had raised this issue, it could not have been decided as part of a motion to dismiss because it is a factual issue relating to the specific language of the contract and what a reasonable Debtor would have understood. The bankruptcy court may find that Appellant violated the notice requirements of § 110(b) or the court may find that Appellant's contract fulfilled the requirements. But the court has yet to decide whether Appellant violated any section of 11 U.S.C. § 110 at all, and until it does, this issue is not properly on appeal.

V. Appellant's argument that the prohibition against petition preparers collecting and paying the bankruptcy filing fee infringes upon his freedom of expression is without merit.

Appellant Hardwick's third argument relates to the statutory requirement that "[a] bankruptcy petition preparer shall not collect or receive any payment from the debtor or on behalf of the debtor for the court fees in connection with filing the petition." 11 U.S.C. § 110(g). Appellant admits that he collected the filing fee from the Debtor and delivered it to the bankruptcy court, but he contends it was an "act of friendship between two consenting adults (a favor), which constituted an act of Freedom of expression which is protected by the US Constitution."[11] Appellant's brief goes on to say that "those documents is the property of the Debtor, and therefore, the Government does not have a right to dictate to her, or to a person such as the Appellant, as to who we should or should not delegate our personal property to."[12]

It is important to note that the main purpose of 11 U.S.C. § 110 is consumer protection. The legislative history states:

> Bankruptcy petition preparers not employed or supervised by any attorney have proliferated across the country. While it is permissible for a petition preparer to provide services solely limited to typing, far too many of them also attempt to provide legal advice and legal services to debtors. These preparers often lack the necessary legal training and ethics regulation to provide such services in an adequate and appropriate manner. These services may take unfair advantage of persons who are ignorant of their rights both inside and outside the bankruptcy system.

114, 121-22 (1889) (reasonable regulation is allowed to protect citizens from "ignorance and incapacity, as well as deception and fraud"). As correctly stated by the bankruptcy court, 11 U.S.C. § 110 "promotes the government's legitimate interest in preventing fraud and deception upon unsophisticated debtors."[13]

The requirement that precludes the collection of any filing fee is designed to (1) protect debtors who need to make the final decision whether to file bankruptcy (as opposed to petition preparer filing the bankruptcy petition with the clerk) and (2) protect those who might not know the correct amount of the filing fee and thus are susceptible to unscrupulous petition preparers. There is an obvious nexus between the statute and a legitimate government interest.

The cases cited by Appellant are readily distinguishable.[14] Appellant cites Griswold v. Connecticut, 381 U.S. 479 (1965), for the proposition that the right to privacy includes the right to decide what happens to one's personal belongings. Griswold held that a Connecticut law forbidding the use of contraceptives unconstitutionally intrudes upon the right to marital privacy. It has no bearing on the requirement that petition preparers refrain from collecting a filing fee.

Appellant also cites Barrows v. Jackson, 346 U.S. 249 (1953) as support for [13] Order Denying Motion to Dismiss at page 29.

[14] Appellee United States Trustee could not locate the case cited by Appellant as "Lawrence-v-Teac 539 US (2003)".

his constitutional challenge. In Barrows, the Supreme Court held that when a state court upheld the validity of a restrictive covenant against the sale of real property to non-Caucasians it violated the Fourteenth Amendment's right to equal protection under the laws. Appellant fails to consider that 11 U.S.C. § 110 applies to all persons, regardless of skin color, age, religious creed or background. There is a legitimate government interest in protecting consumers from unethical practices and the rule in section 110(g) against collecting a filing fee applies uniformly to all petition preparers. There is no violation of equal protection. In re Kaitangian, 218 B.R. 102, 107 (Bankr. S.D. Cal. 1998) (equal protection argument failed as there is no fundamental right to be a bankruptcy petition preparer); see also Jeter v. Office of the United States Trustee (In re Adams), 214 B.R. 212, 218 (B.A.P. 9th Cir. 1997) (holding § 110 does not violate equal protection).

VI. The United States Trustee's decision to assert a claim against Appellant for charging an excessive fee does not violate his right to equal protection, nor is 11 U.S.C. § 110(h) overly broad or vague.

Appellant Hardwick's next argument relates to the claim made by Appellee United States Trustee that Appellant violated 11 U.S.C. § 110(h) by charging an excessive fee. Appellant contends that it was an arbitrary decision by the United States Trustee based on a federal statute that provides no "maximum or minimum allowable fee chargeable by a petition preparer for Bankruptcy."[15] Appellant argues that the claim against him is unconstitutional because it is based on a statute that is broad, vague and violates his right to equal protection.[16]

As noted by the bankruptcy court, while the statute does not define what constitutes an "excessive" fee, such a situation does not render the statute unconstitutionally vague or inconsistent with equal protection.[17] It is common for a bankruptcy court to make determinations regarding the reasonableness of fees. See 11 U.S.C. § 330 (awarding "reasonable" compensation for bankruptcy

[15] Appellant's Brief at pages 11-12.

[16] The United States Trustee's decision to bring an adversary proceeding against Mr. Hardwick is unreviewable as a matter of prosecutorial discretion. The United States Trustee plays a unique role in this case: fulfilling his statutory role in monitoring and, if necessary, litigating against potentially abusive practices. The United States Trustee is an official of the United States Department of Justice charged by statute to oversee and supervise the administration of bankruptcy cases. 28 U.S.C. § 586(a). The United States Trustee acts as a "watchdog" whose role "may be compared with . . . a prosecutor." H.R. Rep. No. 95-595, 1st Sess. 4, 110 (1977), as reprinted in 1978 U.S.C.C.A.N. 5963, 5966, 6071. The legislative history regarding the creation of the United States Trustee Program describes the proposed United States Trustee as the "enforcer[] of the bankruptcy laws," and notes that the United States Trustee would be responsible for bringing "proceedings in the bankruptcy courts in particular cases in which a particular action taken or proposed to be taken deviate[d] from the standards established by the . . . bankruptcy code." H.R. Rep. No. 95-595, 1st Sess. 109 (1977), as reprinted in 1978 U.S.C.C.A.N. 5963, 6070. Accordingly, prosecutorial discretion applies to the United States Trustee's decisions to enforce the bankruptcy laws. See, e.g., In re Bays, Bankruptcy No. 01-05127, Adversary No. A03-05127, 2008 WL 153472, 15 (Bankr. E.D. Wash. Jan. 11, 2008) (finding a decision not to prosecute was within the prosecutorial discretion of United States Trustees Office); see also Wayte v. United States, 470 U.S. 598, 607 (1985) (explaining prosecutorial discretion standards and noting that "the decision to prosecute is particularly ill-suited to judicial review.").

[17] Order Denying Motion to Dismiss at page 16.

professionals). Bankruptcy courts are accustomed to assessing the reasonableness of fees and awarding compensation. Allowing a bankruptcy court to determine what is "excessive" for the services of a bankruptcy petition preparer is not unconstitutionally vague or arbitrary. See In re Rose, 314 B.R. 663, 689 (Bankr. E.D. Tenn. 2004).

Appellant cites City of Chicago v. Morales, 527 U.S. 41 (1999), which held that a loitering statute was unconstitutionally vague because it failed to provide fair notice of the prohibited conduct. Unlike the ordinance in Morales and as demonstrated in section II above, 11 U.S.C. § 110 defines the conduct proscribed for petition preparers with great specificity.

Appellant cites three more cases in this section of his brief, namely Grayned v. City of Rockford, 408 U.S. 104 (1972) (holding city ordinance prohibiting picketing within 100 feet of school, except peaceful picketing of school involved in labor dispute, violated right to equal protection); Gregory v. City of Chicago, 394 U.S. 111 (1969) (holding citizens marching from city hall to mayor's residence could not be convicted for disorderly conduct when they had not been disorderly and had not been charged with refusing to obey police officer); and City of Cleveland v. Anderson, 13 Ohio App. 83, 234 N.E.2d 304 (Ohio App. 1968) (holding ordinance forbidding persons from being part of noisy, boisterous or disorderly assemblage to be so vague and uncertain that it violated due process).

It is difficult to see how any of these cases apply to the inquiry at hand. Unlike the ordinances at issue in these cases, 11 U.S.C. § 110 is not a criminal statute. Nor does it define the prohibited conduct in a vague or uncertain manner.

VII. Appellant's argument that the requirement that bankruptcy petition preparers provide their social security numbers on the bankruptcy petition violates his right to privacy is without merit.

Appellant contends that the requirement in 11 U.S.C. § 110(c) that bankruptcy petition preparers provide their social security number on the petition violates his "right to protect his person, from Fraud and Theft of his personal identity, and privacy rights."[18] It appears that this argument has been rejected by every court addressing the issue. See Cassano v. Carb, 436 F.3d 74, 75 (2d Cir. 2006) (finding no constitutional right to privacy covering the collection of social security numbers); McElrath v. Califano, 615 F.2d 434, 441 (7th Cir. 1980) (stating "the contention that disclosure of one's social security number violates the right to privacy has been consistently rejected"). A social security number is not "inherently sensitive or intimate information and its disclosure does not lead directly to injury, embarrassment or stigma." Ferm v. United States Trustee (In re Crawford), 194 F.3d 954, 960 (9th Cir. 1999).

As the bankruptcy court noted, even assuming there is a constitutionally protected right to privacy in one's social security number, the government's legitimate interest outweighs any such right. The court stated:

> The proper "inquiry is whether there is a legitimate state interest in disclosure that outweighs the threat to [one's] privacy interest. James v. City of Douglas, Ga., 941 F.2d 1539, 1544 (11th Cir. 1991). As the legislative history shows, Congress explicitly required the disclosure of bankruptcy petition preparers' social security numbers in an effort to prevent fraud on unsophisticated debtors and stop the proliferation of unscrupulous bankruptcy petition preparers. See 140 Cong. Rec. 10770 (October 4, 1994); Rausch II, 213 B.R. at 367 ("Congress enacted 11 U.S.C. § 110(c) as a consumer protection measure to police fraud and abuse by bankruptcy petition preparers.").

Order Denying Motion to Dismiss, page 23; see also In re Rose, 314 B.R. 663, 680 (Bankr. E.D. Tenn 2004) (stating "courts require strict compliance with § 110 in order to 'create a paper trail to identify non-attorneys who prepare documents to be filed by bankruptcy debtors.'") (internal cits. omitted); Jeter v. Office of the United States Trustee (In re Adams), 214 B.R. 212, 216 (B.A.P. 9th Cir. 1997) (there is a legitimate government interest in requiring bankruptcy petition preparers to provide their social security number); In re Turner, 193 B.R. 548, 553 (Bankr. N.D. Cal. 1996) (holding statutory requirement that bankruptcy petition preparer disclose his social security number on documents for filing did not violate constitutional right to privacy).

As stated in Ferm, section 110 “was enacted to remedy what was perceived to be widespread fraud and unauthorized practice of law in the BPP industry. . . . There is no doubt, moreover, that the gathering of [bankruptcy petition preparer social security numbers] directly serves this interest by facilitating the governmental monitoring and policing of individual BPPs.” Ferm, 194 F.3d at 960. Accordingly, Appellant Hardwick’s arguments are without merit.

VIII. Appellant’s argument that he is not a bankruptcy petition preparer because he did not receive compensation but merely a “donation” of $375.00 is disingenuous and flawed.

A bankruptcy petition preparer is defined as “a person, other than an attorney for the debtor or an employee of such attorney under the direct supervision of such attorney, who prepares for compensation a document for filing.” 11 U.S.C. § 110(a) (emphasis supplied). Appellant contends that he did not receive compensation but merely a “donation” from the Debtor. Thus, the argument goes, since he did not receive compensation, he is not a bankruptcy petition preparer and thus 11 U.S.C. § 110 is inapplicable.

Appellant’s argument is without merit for two reasons. First, Appellant Hardwick signed the petition under a section stating that (1) he is a bankruptcy petition preparer and (2) he prepared the document for compensation. He signed the following statement under penalty of perjury:

> I declare under penalty of perjury that: (1) I am a bankruptcy petition preparer as defined in 11 U.S.C. §110; (2) I prepared this document for compensation and have provided the debtor with a copy of this document and the notices and information required under 11 U.S.C. §§110(b), 110(h), and 342(b); and (3) if rules or guidelines have been promulgated pursuant to 11 U.S.C. §110(h) setting a maximum fee for services chargeable by bankruptcy petition preparers, I have given the debtor notice of the maximum amount before preparing any document for filing for a debtor or accepting any fee from the debtor, as required in that section. Official Form 19 is attached.

See Petition in bankruptcy case No. 08-10280, Bankruptcy Court Docket No. 1, p. 3); see also Order Denying Motion to Dismiss, page 3 (finding Appellant signed his name under this language).

Second, Appellant's contention that the $375.00 was a "donation" is disingenuous. He admits that he accepted $375.00 from the Debtor, but contends it was a donation because "the services needed by the Debtor was free, the Debtor did not want to wait for her free turn."[19] This ruse is an obvious attempt to avoid the requirements of 11 U.S.C. § 110. Curiously, on the next page, Appellant states that he has "prepared no more than three or less Bankruptcy for any Debtors within the last ten years."[20] Query how long Debtor would have waited for her free turn but for the $375.00 payment to Appellant.

Moreover, even if Appellant and the Debtor intended the payment to be a donation, it was compensation within the meaning of 11 U.S.C. §110(a). See In re Paskel, 201 B.R. 511, 516 (Bankr. E.D. Ark. 1996) (stating fact that "debtor or [the defendant] may have intended the funds as a donation to another entity does not obviate the fact that [the defendant] prepared the documents in exchange for compensation," as the statute does not require the petition preparer personally benefit from the funds). Accordingly, Mr. Hardwick's argument cannot succeed.

CONCLUSION

For these reasons, the Appellee United States Trustee respectfully asks this Court to dismiss this appeal, and, in the alternative, if this Court concludes that it has jurisdiction, to affirm the order entered below.

I. INTRODUCTION

Determining allowable expenses under the new means test is a two step process. The first step is eligibility - i.e, does the debtor qualify for an expense allowance in the category at issue? If so, then the second step is to quantify the expense amount the eligible debtor is allowed.

In his opening brief, the United States Trustee established that the bankruptcy court erred because the Debtor was not eligible for two of the expense categories under the means test – the vehicle acquisition expense under the IRS Local Standards and secured debt expense under section 707(b)(2)(A)(iii). The best interpretation of the means test is that this Debtor is not eligible for the IRS vehicle acquisition expense because she does not have a monthly payment to acquire a vehicle. Likewise, the Debtor may not claim expenses for post-petition payments to secured creditors, over and above the IRS Housing Standard, because long before she filed bankruptcy she stopped making payments to the mortgage holder.

The Debtor argues that the plain language mandates that she be allowed vehicle acquisition expenses and secured debt expenses she does not, and will not, incur. The Debtor ignores the eligibility requirement and simply assumes that all debtors are eligible. Allowing all debtors to deduct expenses regardless of whether the specific debtor actually incurs the expense type would make a mockery of the means test and may result in debtors receiving an immediate discharge of their debts regardless of their ability to repay.[1]

The United States Trustee's construction of section 707(b)(2) comports with the purposes that motivated Congress to enact the means test as a key component of the BAPCPA amendments. The means test is designed to ensure some repayment to creditors when possible. And, should a debtor's repayment ability change, the Bankruptcy Code affords debtors relief that accommodates their changed circumstances. If this Court correctly concludes that the Debtor is not eligible for either of these two expense categories, this case should be remanded for a recalculation under the means test without deductions for those expenses.

[1] See e.g., In re Nockerts, 2006 WL 3689465 (Bankr.E.D.Wis. Dec. 14, 2006)(on similar facts, finding that the results of the means test foreclosed further judicial inquiry into a debtor's ability to repay his debt under section 707(b)(3)(B) based on the totality of the circumstances of the debtor's financial situation).

II. FOR THE EXPENSE TO BE "APPLICABLE," A DEBTOR MUST BE ELIGIBLE TO CLAIM THE VEHICLE OWNERSHIP EXPENSE UNDER THE IRS LOCAL STANDARDS.

By using the word "applicable" in section 707(b)(2)(A)(ii)(I), Congress limited eligibility for expenses under the Local Standards to debtors for whom the expenses actually apply. Only after "a determination is made as to the type of expenses allowed and applicable to the debtor" may the debtor claim the amount set forth under the IRS Local Transportation Standards. In re Devilliers, 2007 WL 92504 at *6 (Bankr.E.D.La. Jan. 9, 2007).

Debtor asserts that the plain language of section 707(b)(2)(A)(ii)(I) allows all debtors who simply own a vehicle to claim the ownership expense category, which represents vehicle acquisition financing costs, under the IRS Local Standards. To reach this conclusion, the Debtor argues that the word "applicable" refers only to the debtor's location and number of owned vehicles.[2]

In interpreting the word "applicable" in section 707(b)(2)(A)(I), a bankruptcy court recently considered and correctly rejected each of the debtor's arguments. See In re Slusher,

[2] Debtor also argues that Official Form B22A supports her position that section 707(b)(2)(A)(I) "mandates" application this IRS Standard as an allowance based upon mere car ownership. However, Line 23 of the Form only directs debtors to identify the number of vehicles "for which you claim an ownership/lease expense." (Emphasis added).

2007 WL 118009 (Bankr.D.Nev. Jan. 17, 2007). As explained by the Slusher court, when Congress developed the means test, it "could have started from scratch, and created a system that was rigid but easy to administer, such as how many view workers' compensation or social security schemes." Id. at *12. Instead, Congress "incorporated into the Bankruptcy Code an existing, administrative system that the IRS had long had in place." Id. This incorporation "strongly suggests that courts should look to how the IRS determined those standards; that is, as to how the IRS would have applied them in similar circumstances." Id. at * 14. Thus, "if guidance is sought on the meaning of the IRS standards Congress incorporated into the Bankruptcy Code, practical reason would suggest that court should consider the full manner by which the IRS uses these standards." Id.

The Slusher court also considered and rejected the notion entertained by some courts, e.g. In re Fowler, 349 B.R. 414 (Bankr.D.Del. 2006), and used by the court below, that considering IRS practice in interpreting "applicable" expenses in section 707(b)(2)(A)(ii)(I) would negate the section's later allowance of "actual" monthly expenses in the IRS categories of Other Necessary Expenses. As the Slusher court explained, "a natural reading" of section 707(b)(2)(A)(ii)(I) indicates that the words "actual" and "applicable" limit the relevant expense deductions in different ways. In re Slusher, 2006 WL 118009 at *13.

> [O]ne is a limitless deduction within the specified categories of Other Necessary Expenses, and the other is a deduction limited to the amount and type specified by the IRS. Had Congress intended to indiscriminately allow all expense amounts specified in the National and Local Standards, it would have written section 707(b)(2)(A)(ii)(I) to read, "The debtor's monthly expenses shall be the monthly amounts specified under the National Standards and Local Standards . . ." rather than "The debtor's monthly expenses shall be the debtor's applicable monthly expenses amounts specified under the National and Local Standards." This distinction may not appear from the dictionary definitions of both terms, but it > did, and does, belong to the IRS' historical and practical use of those standards at the time Congress adopted BAPCPA. In referring to such specialized standards, it would be quite odd if Congress intended to preclude courts from examining the context in which the authoring agency, the IRS, used and employed those standards. (Emphasis original).

Id.

The Debtor is not eligible for the IRS Local Standard for vehicle ownership expense under the IRS Local Standards because she is not making any loan payments on the vehicle. Because the Debtor is not eligible, the expense is not applicable to her. Accordingly, the court below erred by allowing the Debtor this expense under the means test.

III. DEBTOR'S RELIANCE ON BANKRUPTCY REFORM LEGISLATION PROPOSED IN 1998, BUT NEVER ENACTED, IS MISPLACED.

The Debtor relies heavily on bankruptcy reform legislation proposed, but not enacted, in 1998 (H.R. 3150). Specifically, the Debtor attaches special importance to the fact that section 707(b)(2)(A)(I) of BAPCPA defines allowable expenses under the means test differently than the proposed 1998 legislation, which included a specific reference to the IRS's financial analysis handbook.

As the 2005 legislative history clarifies, the IRS's Financial Analysis Handbook "has been expressly adopted by Congress in § 707(b)(2)(A)(ii)." In re Lenton, – B.R. –, 2006 WL 3850011 *5 at note 15 (Bankr.E.D.Pa. Dec. 15, 2006). In addition, the statutes are not so markedly different as to evidence any special Congressional intent to eliminate use of the IRS's application of its own expense standards. It is equally likely that the change in phrasing from "expense allowances under the applicable Local Standards as determined under the Internal Revenue Service financial analysis" in 1998 "to the debtor's applicable monthly expense amounts specified under the Local Standards" in 2005, merely restates the same methodology in a more summary fashion.

IV. ELIGIBILITY PREMISED UPON A LOAN OR LEASE PAYMENT WILL NOT LEAD TO UNFAIR DISTINCTIONS BETWEEN DEBTORS OR UNFAIRLY BIAS POOR DEBTORS.

The Debtor suggests that limiting vehicle ownership expense allowance to debtors with loan or lease payments will unfairly prejudice some debtors. To illustrate her argument, Debtor raises the following hypothetical:

> Debtor A and Debtor B own vehicles of the same make, model and year. However, Debtor A paid off her car loan the month before filing while Debtor B has one payment remaining after filing. Pursuant to the US Trustee's position, Debtor B is entitled to the car ownership allowance, but Debtor A is not.

Appellee's Brief at 14. However, the case of each debtor in this hypothetical might be dismissed as an abuse under §707(b)(1).

Absent a showing of special circumstances, Debtor A's case might be dismissed based upon the repayment ability calculated under §707(b)(2). Debtor B's case might be dismissed under §707(b)(3) because the totality of the circumstances of Debtor B's financial situation, including the fact Debtor B only has one car payment post-petition, could demonstrate abuse. Where the presumption of abuse does not arise under section §707(b)(2) "the court must then consider a debtor's actual income and expenses in determining abuse based on ability to pay under §707(b)(1) and (3)." In re Mestemaker, – B.R. –, 2007 WL 79306 at *5 (Bankr.N.D.Ohio Jan. 10, 2007).[3]

Debtor asserts that limiting the ownership allowance to debtors who make car payments may have "a disparate impact on" some debtors. As one court has noted, this "disparate impact argument ignores the fact that the means test merely creates a [rebuttable] presumption of abuse.

[3] But see In re Nockerts, supra note 1.

. .” In re Barraza, 346 B.R. 724, 729 (Bankr. N.D.Tex. 2006). Equally important, the age of the car and whether it was purchased new or used, are irrelevant in determining eligibility. The distinguishing eligibility factor is whether the debtor has a monthly payment obligation with respect to the car, which can include used cars and older cars.

The Debtor acknowledges that under application of the IRS Financial Analysis handbook, the IRS allows an additional $200 operating expense for up to two vehicles that qualify based on age and/or mileage. The Debtor contends that the additional $200 allowance “merely represent[s] amounts necessary to keep the car running, not amounts necessary to replace the vehicle” and notes that the debtor’s car may break down within five years of filing. Appellee’s Brief at 13-14. The purpose of the ownership expense allowance, however, “is not the equivalent of an allowance for depreciation or an invitation for a debtor to ‘save’ for the ultimate replacement of an existing vehicle. Instead, the deduction is designed to assist with the acquisition of a vehicle on credit.” In re Devilliers, 2007 WL 92504 at *10.

V. SECURED DEBT

The U.S. Trustee asserts that whether a debt is “scheduled as contractually due” is determined by the debtor’s schedules and statements, and that such payments on secured debts must be due “in each month of the 60 months following the date of the petition.” The Debtor counters that the plain language of § 707(b)(2)(A)(iii) required her to deduct the amount of her monthly mortgage even though she: (1) had not made a payment for 18 months prior to filing bankruptcy; (2) had filed the Form stating that she would be surrendering her residence; (3) disclosed in her bankruptcy papers that she had no intention of making any monthly mortgage payments post-petition; and (4) vacated the premises on November 7, 2006. Appellee’s Brief at

19. This argument ignores the function of the means test in chapter 7.

The legislative history for §707(b)(2)(A)(iii) does not specify whether it is the existence of a contractual obligation on the petition date or a present intention to make payments, that is determinative of eligibility for this expense category. Congress did, however, articulate as a general goal behind its complete overhaul of §707(b), ensuring "that those who can afford to repay some portion of their unsecured debts be required to do so.." 151 CONG. REC. S2470 (March 10, 2005). A conference report to the bankruptcy reform package introduced in 2000 provided the best articulation of the goals of the means test: "To apply the means test, the debtor must complete revised schedules of income and expense similar to those now required, but revised to show net income determined in a particular way and a calculation of how much the debtor can afford to pay under the new means test. The means test should for the most part be self-enforcing." H.R. 2415 at 11702 (Dec. 7, 2000).

Thus, by completing Form B22A, the objective is for the debtor to roughly estimate the amount of monthly disposable income available and whether it is above the threshold amount deemed to be a meaningful repayment to unsecured creditors - at least $100 per month. This estimate is designed to steer debtors who have monthly disposable income above the threshold amount to file their petition under chapter 13 instead of under chapter 7. In re Barraza, 346 B.R. at 729. For Form B22A to have any utility, the debtor should be required to estimate the residual income available each month after the deduction of the projected monthly expenses at the time the case is filed. There would be no utility in permitting debtors to calculate their repayment ability by including past expense amounts that are not projected for future payment.

In her response, the Debtor focuses on the distinction between subsections (I) and (II) of §707(b)(2)(A)(iii), and references the "negative pregnant" rule of statutory construction. However, limiting the allowance of additional amounts necessary to cure a default to amounts to maintain property necessary for the support of the debtor and debtor's dependents is not at all remarkable. It would be more noteworthy if Congress had allowed debtors to deduct, in addition to future current amounts under subsection (I), cure amounts under subsection (II) on property not necessary for the health and welfare of the debtor, such as payments to creditors who are secured by vacation homes, boats and other recreational type vehicles.

Excluding from the means test monthly payments the Debtor does not have any intention of paying would "'ensure that debtors repay creditors the maximum they can afford,' a primary goal of BAPCPA." In re Lenton, 2006 WL 3850011 at *5 , quoting H.R. Rep. 109-31, pt. 1 at 1, as reprinted in 2005 U.S.C.C.A.N. 88, 89 (2005). If the Debtor's case is dismissed and she later elects to redeem the residence, or if monthly payments on the redemption financing eliminate her ability to pay her debts, the debtor may file another case under chapter 7. See 11 U.S.C. §349; 11 U.S.C. §109(g). Alternatively, if the Debtor elects to convert her case to chapter 13 and redeem the property, she could include redemption financing payments in her chapter 13 plan. Conversely, granting a discharge to a debtor in chapter 7 based upon a repayment estimate that includes payments that the debtor will not make, defeats the goal of Congress in amending §707(b).

JURISDICTIONAL STATEMENT

The bankruptcy court had jurisdiction under 28 U.S.C. §§ 157 (a) and (b), and 1334(a) to issue its final order granting the Debtor's motion for summary judgment on the United States Trustee's motion to dismiss the Debtor's chapter 7 bankruptcy case. The bankruptcy court issued its opinion and entered an order granting the Debtor's motion for summary judgment on July 20, 2009. The United States Trustee filed a notice of appeal on August 20, 2009, which is timely under 28 U.S.C. §§ 158(a) and (c)(2) and under the Order Granting Motion to Extend Time to Appeal Under Rule 8002(3). This Court has appellate jurisdiction under 28 U.S.C. § 158(a)(1), a statutory provision under which district courts have jurisdiction to hear appeals from final judgments, orders, and decrees of bankruptcy judges.

STANDARD OF REVIEW

A bankruptcy court's findings of fact are reviewed for clear error and its conclusions of law are reviewed de novo. In re White, 487 F.3d 199, 204 (4th Cir. 2007). In this case, the facts are undisputed, and the bankruptcy court's interpretations of 11 U.S.C. §§ 707(b)(1) and (b)(2) are conclusions of law subject to de novo review.

STATEMENT OF THE ISSUE PRESENTED FOR REVIEW

Under 11 U.S.C. § 707(b)(2), a bankruptcy petition is presumptively abusive if, for the 60 months following the petition, the debtor's monthly income minus allowable expenses, as calculated by a statutory formula, would be equal to or greater than a specified threshold dollar amount. Section 707(b)(2)(A)(iii) defines the "debtor's average monthly payments on account of secured debts," which is one of the allowable expenses under the statutory formula, as "the sum of the total of all amounts scheduled as contractually due to secured creditors in each month of the 60 months following the date of the petition . . . divided by 60." 11 U.S.C. § 707(b)(2)(A)(iii). The debtor in this case included monthly payments on two mortgages in the calculation of his "average monthly payments on account of secured debts," even though his petition for bankruptcy was accompanied by a statement that he intended to surrender the home securing those mortgages.

The question presented is whether mortgage payments can be deducted as "amounts scheduled as contractually due to secured creditors in each month of the 60 months following the date of the petition" when the debtor has made clear that he will not make those payments because the debt is secured by a mortgage on a home that he intends to surrender.

STATEMENT OF THE CASE

The United States Attorney General appoints United States Trustees to supervise the administration of bankruptcy cases and trustees. See 28 U.S.C. §§ 581-589a. United States Trustees "serve as bankruptcy watchdogs to prevent fraud, dishonesty, and overreaching in the bankruptcy arena." H.R. Rep. No. 595, 95th Cong., 1st Sess. 88 (1977). Among the Unites States Trustees' duties is the duty to review petitions for bankruptcy filed under chapter 7 to determine whether a statutory presumption that the filing is an abuse of chapter 7 applies. See 11 U.S.C. § 704(b)(1)(A).

After debtor Garland Terry Harvey filed his petition for bankruptcy, United States Trustee W. Clarkson McDow, Jr. moved to dismiss the filing as an abuse of chapter 7 on the ground that the Debtor should not have deducted his monthly mortgage payments when he calculated his monthly income, because he intended to surrender the house securing those mortgages. The Debtor filed a motion for summary judgment in response to the United States Trustee's motion to dismiss. The bankruptcy court granted the Debtor's motion for summary judgement and denied the United States Trustee's motion to dismiss, concluding that the Debtor properly deducted the mortgage payments under 11 U.S.C. § 707(b)(2)(A)(iii), which defines the "debtor's average monthly payments on account of secured debts" as "the sum of the total of all amounts scheduled as contractually due to secured creditors in each month of the 60 months following the date of the petition . . . divided by 60." The United States Trustee timely appealed the bankruptcy court's order to this Court.

STATEMENT OF THE FACTS

I. Statutory Background

A. History of the Means Test

1. Before 1984, a bankruptcy court could dismiss a chapter 7 bankruptcy case only for "cause." See Bankruptcy Reform Act of 1978, Pub. L. No. 95-598, § 707 (codified at 11 U.S.C. § 707); S. Rep. No. 95-989, at 94 (1978); H.R. Rep. No. 95-595, at 380 (1977). A bankruptcy court had "cause" to dismiss a case if, for example, the debtor had unreasonably delayed the proceedings in a manner that prejudiced his creditors. See Pub. L. No. 95-598, § 707(1) (codified at 11 U.S.C. § 707). Congress made clear, however, that "the ability of the debtor to repay his debts in whole or in part" did not "constitute[] adequate cause for dismissal." S. Rep. No. 95-989, at 94; H.R. Rep. No. 95-595, at 380 (same).

2. In the early 1980s, Congress became concerned about a "dramatic[]" rise in the number of consumer bankruptcy cases, and, as a result, it amended provisions of the Bankruptcy Code pertaining to consumer bankruptcies. See Bankruptcy Amendments and Federal Judgeship Act of 1984, Pub. L. No. 98-353 (1984); S. Rep. No. 98-65, at 3 (1983). As part of these reforms, Congress enacted 11 U.S.C. § 707(b), which gave a bankruptcy court, "on its own motion or on a motion by the United States Trustee," authority to "dismiss a case filed by an individual debtor under this chapter whose debts are primarily consumer debts if it finds that the granting of relief would be a substantial abuse of the provisions of this chapter." 11 U.S.C. § 707(b) (2004); Pub. L. No. 98-353, § 312; S. Rep. No. 98-65, at 53. By enacting section 707(b), Congress sought to ensure that bankruptcy courts would have the authority to dismiss bankruptcy cases in which debtors could repay a substantial portion of their debts. See S. Rep. No. 98-65, at 53-54; In re Kornfield, 164 F.3d 778, 781 (2d Cir. 1999) (Congress was "[c]oncerned that debtors who could over time easily pay their creditors might resort to chapter 7 to erase their legitimate obligations"); In re Stewart, 175 F.3d 796, 812-13 (10th Cir. 1999); In re Lamanna, 153 F.3d 1, 3 n.6 (1st Cir. 1998).

3. In 2005, again concerned about the rise in bankruptcy filings, Congress enacted the Bankruptcy Abuse Prevention and Consumer Protection Act of 2005 (the "2005 Act"), Pub.L. No. 109-8, 119 Stat. 23 (2005). The 2005 Act removed the requirement that the party seeking dismissal show "substantial abuse," so that section 707(b) now requires a showing of "abuse" rather than "substantial abuse," 11 U.S.C. § 707(b)(1), and eliminated a presumption in favor of discharge. The 2005 Act also added a means test to identify chapter 7 cases that are presumptively abusive. Under the means test, there is a presumption that the case is an abuse of chapter 7 if the formula set out in section 707(b)(2)(A) reflects monthly disposable income equal to or greater than a specified threshold amount. See 11 U.S.C. § 707(b)(2)(A). In enacting these changes, Congress called "the implementation of an income/expense screening mechanism ('needs-based bankruptcy relief' or 'means testing')" the "heart of the [2005 Act's] consumer bankruptcy reforms," and it explained that the means test "is intended to ensure that debtors repay creditors the maximum they can afford." See H.R. Rep. No. 109-31 (I) at 1 (2005), reprinted in 2005 U.S.C.C.A.N. 88, 89.

B. The Means Test

The first step of the means test is determining whether the debtor's monthly income exceeds the state median family income for his family size. A debtor's current monthly income, as defined in 11 U.S.C. § 101(10A)(A), is based on the debtor's average monthly income from all sources for the six full calendar months immediately preceding the bankruptcy filing. If the debtor's monthly income is equal to or below the state median family income for the same household size, a safe harbor exists and a presumption of abuse will not arise. See 11 U.S.C. § 707(b)(7). If the debtor's current monthly income exceeds the state median income for the same household size, however, the debtor is an "above-median income debtor." Above-median income debtors are subject to the means test.

Under the means test, net monthly disposable income is calculated by deducting statutorily prescribed monthly expenses from current monthly income. If the resulting net monthly disposable income is above the amount specified in the statute, the bankruptcy case is presumptively abusive. The means test requires courts "presume abuse exists if the debtor's current monthly income reduced by the amounts determined under" the statute exceeds a threshold dollar amount specified in the statute and periodically adjusted by the Judicial Conference of the United States. 11 U.S.C. § 707(b)(2)(A)(i). At the time relevant to this case, that threshold was $182.50.[1]

The means test calls for the deduction of statutorily prescribed monthly expenses rather than actual expenses. Deductible expenses include living expenses as set forth in national and local standards prescribed by the Internal Revenue Service, see, e.g., 11 U.S.C. § 707(b)(2)(A)(ii)(I); certain actual expenses subject to the requirement that they be "reasonably necessary," see, e.g., id. (allowing deduction for "reasonably necessary" health insurance and disability insurance expenses); and other actual expenses capped by a maximum allowable deduction, see id. at 707(b)(2)(A)(ii)(IV)(allowing deduction for actual expenses for a minor child "not to exceed" $1,650 a month).

In addition to the deduction of these monthly expenses, the means test also allows the deduction of projected monthly payments on account of secured debts and priority claims. See 11 U.S.C. § 707(b)(2)(A)(iii)-(iv). Section 707(b)(2)(A)(iii) defines the debtor's "average monthly payments on account of secured debts," the statutory term at issue in this case, as the sum of "the total of all amounts scheduled as contractually due to secured creditors in each month of the 60 months following the date of the petition" divided by 60. 11 U.S.C. § 707(b)(2)(A)(iii). The Code does not define the term "amounts scheduled as contractually due to secured creditors."

All individual chapter 7 debtors must file Schedule J, Current Expenditures of Individual Debtor, and Federal Rules of Bankruptcy Procedure Official Form 22A, Statement of Current

[1] The $182.50 threshold is the result of dividing $10,950 by 60 under the formula set out in 11 U.S.C. 707(b)(2)(A)(i). Under Section 104 of the Bankruptcy Code, this dollar amount is increased by the Judicial Conference of the United States every three years to reflect changes in the Consumer Price Index. See 11 U.S.C. § 104(a). The last change occurred on April 1, 2007. Id.

Monthly Income and Means Test Calculation ("Form 22A"), with their schedules and Statement of Financial Affairs. See 11 U.S.C. §§ 521(a)(1)(B)(ii) and § 707(b)(2)(C). Debtors also must file a statement of intention as to whether they will retain or surrender property secured by debt within 30 days of the earlier of the filing date and the date of the meeting of creditors. See 11 U.S.C. § 521(a)(2)(A); see also Interim Fed. R. Bankr. P. 1017(b)(2) (requiring individual debtors in chapter 7 cases to file a statement of intent on the appropriate Official Form). The statement must specify whether the debtor intends to claim the property as exempt, redeem the property, or reaffirm debts secured by the property. Id. Section 521(a)(2)(B) requires debtors to perform their expressed intention within 30 days after filing the statement of intention.

The United States Trustee reviews these forms and all other materials to determine whether a presumption of abuse arises. See 11 U.S.C. § 704(b)(1)(A). The United States Trustee has 10 days from the meeting of creditors to "review all materials" filed by the debtor (including the statement of intent to surrender) and file a statement regarding whether the debtor's case is presumed abusive under Section 707(b). Id. When a chapter 7 case is presumed abusive under the statute, the United States Trustee must either file a motion to dismiss or convert, or file a statement declining to seek such relief. See 11 U.S.C. § 704(b)(2). The United States Trustee has an additional 30 days after filing the statement regarding abuse to file a motion to dismiss or convert for presumed abuse. Id. Because the meeting of creditors must be held "no fewer then 20" and up to 60 days after the order for relief (depending on the location of the meeting), see Federal Rule of Bankruptcy Procedure Rule 2003, which in a voluntary petition under chapter 7 is the date of the petition, see 11 U.S.C. 301(b), the United States Trustee should know whether a debtor intends to surrender real or personal property subject to a security interest before the United States Trustee's deadline to file a motion to dismiss for presumed abuse under Section 707(b)(2). See 11 U.S.C. §§ 521(a)(2), 704(b)(2). A debtor may attempt to rebut the presumption of abuse by showing "special circumstances" that justify an income adjustment or additional expenses. 11 U.S.C. § 707(2)(B)(i).

II. This Proceeding

The Debtor filed for chapter 7 bankruptcy relief in September 2008. See Appellant's Designation of Record ("Appellant Rec.") No. 1 (Chapter 7 Voluntary Petition and Accompanying Documents) at 1. His Form 22A (Chapter 7 Statement of Current Monthly Income and Means-Test Calculation) (the "Means Test") listed his gross monthly income as $5,342, id. at 46, but did not report the income of his non-filing spouse because he and his wife were legally separated. Id. His Schedule I reported his gross monthly income as $3,534, and the gross monthly income of his non-filing spouse as $2,840. Id. at 27. He owed a combined monthly payment of a little more than $1,500 on the two deeds of trust secured by his house. Id. at 30. The Debtor filed a statement of intention with his petition stating that he intended to surrender the house securing the deeds of trust. Appellant Rec. No. 1 at 39. His original schedules listed unsecured non-priority debts of roughly $22,000 for student loans incurred by his estranged wife, a deficiency on a 2005 Dodge Caravan, amounts owed on his estranged wife's credit cards, and miscellaneous other debts. Id. at 23-24. An amendment to his schedules listed approximately $239,000 in additional unsecured debts, including deficiencies on the mortgages, deficiencies on a repossessed car and motorcycle, and a balance owed on a student loan. Appellant Rec. No. 2 at 7 (Notice of Amendment to Debtor's Schedules of Creditors and/or Matrix).

Though the Debtor indicated his intent to surrender his house when he calculated his monthly disposable income on his Means Test, he deducted the $1,500 in monthly mortgage payments for the house from his income. Id at 51. This deduction, together with the deductions allowed under the means test for reasonable living expenses (as described above), resulted in monthly disposable income of negative $539. Id.

If the Debtor did not deduct the monthly mortgage payments on his Means Test, he would have a minimum of $800 per month in disposable income. That amount, would generate $48,000 over 60 months under the Means Test and would significantly exceed the $10,950 threshold for the presumption of abuse to arise.[2] The presumption of abuse arose by eliminating the secured debt payments on the Debtor's surrendered house from the Means Test, and instead claim only the statutory housing allowance. Accordingly, the United States Trustee moved to dismiss the Debtor's case under Section 707(b)(2). The United States Trustee argued that the Debtor should not have included the mortgage payments on his Means Test because he was surrendering his home and did not intend to make those payments in the future.

The bankruptcy court denied the motion to dismiss. Appellant Rec. No. 7; In re Harvey, 407 B.R. 867 (Bankr. W. D. Va. 2009). The bankruptcy court concluded that "the means test includes a deduction from current monthly income for all scheduled contractual payments to secured creditors regardless of a debtor's intent with respect to . . . actual payment of the secured debt," Harvey, 407 B.R. at 872 (citing Morse v. Rudler (In re Rudler), 388 B.R. 433, 438 (B.A.P. 1st Cir 2008)).[3]

SUMMARY OF ARGUMENT

Section 707(b) of the Bankruptcy Code authorizes a bankruptcy court to dismiss a chapter 7 consumer bankruptcy case if the court "finds that the granting of relief would be an abuse of" chapter 7. 11 U.S.C. § 707(b). The provision thus requires bankruptcy courts to evaluate whether it would be appropriate to grant a debtor the relief offered by chapter 7 – a discharge of his past debts. In order to make that determination, a bankruptcy court must consider whether the debtor will have sufficient future income to repay his past debts. And to facilitate that inquiry, Congress has established a means test to identify cases that are presumptively abusive because the debtor has sufficient means to repay some of his debts.

The means test allows a debtor to deduct from his current monthly income his "average monthly payments on account of secured debt," and as relevant here it defines those payments as

[2] The lower court's decision summarized the contentions of the United States Trustee, and assumed the accuracy of those contentions for purposes of deciding the Appellee's motion for summary judgment. Appellant Rec. No. 7 at 8-9 (Memorandum Decision and Order Granting Debtor's Motion for Summary Judgment).

[3] The bankruptcy appellate panel's decision in Rudler was affirmed subsequent to the bankruptcy court's decision in this case. See Morse v. Rudler (In re Rudler), 576 F.3d 37 (1st Cir. 2009).

"the sum of the total of all amounts scheduled as contractually due to secured creditors in each month of the 60 months following the date of the petition . . . divided by 60." 11 U.S.C. § 707(b)(2)(A)(iii). The question in this case is whether the Debtor correctly deducted $1,500 in monthly mortgage payments from his income instead of taking the statutorily prescribed housing allowance, even though his petition made clear that he would never make the mortgage payments because the mortgage was secured by property that he intended to surrender. The question is significant, because if the Debtor properly took those deductions, then all of his debts will likely be discharged, but if the monthly mortgage payments were not properly deducted from his monthly disposable income, then his monthly disposable income would be at least $800 and his petition would be presumptively abusive. Assuming he could not rebut the presumption of abuse and opted to proceed under chapter 13, this disposable income would give him roughly $48,000 to repay his creditors over the course of a 60 month plan.

The lower court concluded that the Debtor was entitled to deduct his mortgage payments because the payments were and would remain "contractually due" even when the Debtor surrendered his property. But the bankruptcy court erred by focusing in isolation on the phrase "contractually due." Read as a whole, the statute allows the deduction only of payments that the Debtor actually intends to make.

By using the phrases "scheduled as contractually due" (rather than simply "contractually due") and "60 months following the date of the petition," the statute calls for a forward-looking assessment of which payments on secured debts will actually be made and are thus properly listed (or "scheduled") as "payments on account of a secured debt." Reading the means test this way makes it consistent with the mean's tests treatment of the Debtor's other expenses, which are also forward looking.

Contrary to the reasoning of the bankruptcy court, a forward looking assessment of payments on account of secured debt cannot include payments that the Debtor will never make. In many cases, when a debtor surrenders the collateral securing a debt, nothing remains "contractually due." Even in those situations where a debtor is liable for a deficiency, once title to the property securing the debt transfers, the remaining liability is not "contractually due to [a] secured creditor," as required by the statute. Accordingly, the Debtor will not be liable for any payments that fit within the statutory terms.

Finally, allowing debtors to deduct only those payments that they actually will make best serves Congress's purpose in enacting the means test. The 2005 Act established a means test to ensure that those who can afford to repay some portion of their unsecured debts be required to do so. That purpose is best served by limiting the Debtor to deductions that reflect his true financial circumstances rather than allowing him to shelter disposable income behind phantom payments on secured debt.

This Court should reverse the decision of the bankruptcy court and rule that the means test does not allow the Debtor to claim mortgage payments that he will never make. In that event, the Debtor's creditors will likely recover $48,000 of the debt that the Debtor owes them, while he will still be entitled to the standard IRS housing allowance provided by Section 707. Conversely, if this Court accepts the views of the bankruptcy court, debtors who surrender property will be allowed to claim payments on that property that they will never make, and many debts will be discharged in bankruptcy based upon that fiction. That inequitable result is contrary to the better reading of section 707(b)(2)(A), and it conflicts with Congress' stated purpose for enacting the 2005 Act.

ARGUMENT

I. SECTION 707(B)(2) DOES NOT ALLOW A DEBTOR TO DEDUCT MORTGAGE PAYMENTS THAT HE WILL NOT MAKE

Section 707(b) of the Bankruptcy Code authorizes a bankruptcy court to dismiss a chapter 7 case that involves "primarily consumer debts" (or with a debtor's consent, convert the case to chapter 13) if the court "finds that the granting of relief would be an abuse of the provisions of this chapter." 11 U.S.C. § 707(b). In the 2005 Act, Congress amended Section 707(b) to provide a means test to identify presumptively abusive filings. See 11 U.S.C. §

707(b)(2)(A). Congress called “the implementation of an income/expense screening mechanism (‘needs-based bankruptcy relief’ or ‘means testing’)” the “heart of the [2005 Act’s] consumer bankruptcy reforms,” and it explained that the means test “is intended to ensure that debtors repay creditors the maximum they can afford.” See H.R. Rep. No. 109-31 (I) at 1 (2005), reprinted in 2005 U.S.C.C.A.N. 88, 89.

The means test requires the court to assess a debtor’s current monthly income, reduced by projected allowable expenses for the period following the bankruptcy filing specified in 11 U.S.C. § 707(b)(2)(A)(ii)-(iv), and determine whether that income is above the threshold set out in the statute for presumptive abuse. Among these expenses are a debtor’s “average monthly payments on account of secured debts.” 11 U.S.C. 707(b)(2)(A)(iii). Section 707(b)(2)(A) defines “average monthly payments on account of secured debts” as the sum of “the total of all amounts scheduled as contractually due to secured creditors in each month of the 60 months following the date of the petition,” divided by 60. 11 U.S.C. § 707(b)(2)(A)(iii). Contrary to the conclusion of the bankruptcy court below, this definition of “average monthly payments on account of secured debt” does not include mortgage payments that a debtor will not make.

A. Read as a Whole, Section 707(b)(2)(A) Makes Clear That the Means Test Is Forward Looking Section 707(b)(2)(A)(iii), like any statutory provision, must be read as a whole. See Koons Buick Pontiac GMC, Inc. v. Nieh, 543 U.S. 50, 60 (2004) (calling for a “holistic” approach to reading statutes). The phrases “scheduled as” and “following the date of the petition” call for a projection of what the Debtor’s payments on account of secured debt will be following bankruptcy. And in light of the means test’s more general approach to identifying allowable expenses, the phrase “average monthly payments on account of secured debt” must be understood to include only payments on account of secured debt that the Debtor actually will make.

1. While the bankruptcy court concluded that the phrase “scheduled as contractually due” required it to disregard the Debtor’s stated intentions with regard to his mortgage payments,

In re Harvey, 407 B.R. at 872, even read in isolation the phrase "scheduled as contractually due" is not best understood this way. Reading the phrase "scheduled as contractually due" to include all current contractual obligations fails to give independent meaning to the words "scheduled as."

If Congress meant for debtors to deduct all "contractually due" payments without regard to whether they would actually be made, it could have left out the phrase "scheduled as" and defined "payments on account of secured debts" as payments that are "contractually due . . . following the date of the petition" instead of "scheduled as contractually due . . . following the date of the petition." Reading the phrase "scheduled as contractually due" to call for a forward-looking assessment of whether the payments will actually be made gives separate effect to the term "scheduled as" in the phrase "scheduled as contractually due," and thus honors the rule that "courts should strive to give operative meaning to every word in a statute." Cooper Indus., Inc. v. Aviall Servs., Inc., 543 U.S. 157, 167 (2004). By contrast, the bankruptcy court's reading gives no independent meaning to the phrase "scheduled as." As one court explained, considering the phrase "scheduled as contractually due" from section 707(b)(2)(A)(iii) in a chapter 13 case, the word "scheduled" is best understood to "contemplate[] a forward looking approach. That is, one schedules something which one expects to take place in the future and not an event which one plans to avoid." In re Love, 350 B.R. 611, 613-14 (Bankr. M.D. Ala. 2006).

The phrase "scheduled as contractually due" should also be read to mean something more specific than "contractually due" because the phrase "scheduled as" is a term of art in the Bankruptcy Code – the Code refers to a claim or debt being "scheduled as" due if the debt is properly listed on a debtor's bankruptcy schedules. See In re Skaggs, 349 B.R. 594, 599 (Bankr. E.D. Mo. 2006). The only provision of the Code other than section 707(b)(2)(A)(iii) that uses the phrase "scheduled as" is 11 U.S.C. § 1111(a). Section 1111(a) provides that a "proof of claim or interest is deemed filed under section 501 of this title for any claim or interest that appears in the schedules filed under . . . section 521(1) or 1106(a)(2) of this title, except a claim or interest that is scheduled as disputed, contingent, or unliquidated." 11 U.S.C. § 1111(a) (emphasis added). The second part of the provision excepts claims that are "scheduled as disputed, contingent, or unliquidated." Id. (Emphasis added). In context, "scheduled as" thus means "appears on the schedule" or "appended to" the schedule. Because of the "'normal rule of statutory construction,' that 'identical words used in different parts of the same act are intended to have the same meaning,'" Commissioner v. Keystone Consol. Industries, Inc., 508 U.S. 152, 159 (1993) (internal citations omitted), "scheduled as contractually due" in section 707(b)(2)(A) should be read to include contractual obligations on secured debts that are properly listed on a bankruptcy schedule because the debtor intends to honor them.

The bankruptcy court rejected this argument on the basis of the First Circuit's bankruptcy appellate panel decision in Rudler, which was subsequently affirmed by the First Circuit Court of Appeals. In adopting the First Circuit bankruptcy appellate panel's interpretation, it rejected the interpretation of the only other bankruptcy court in the Fourth Circuit to address this issue, In re Ray, 362 B.R. 680 (Bankr. D.S.C. 2007), as well as the interpretation adopted by a number of other courts.

The lower court's decision in Harvey, the First Circuit's decision in Rudler, and similar decisions of other courts have ignored the importance of the phrase "scheduled as." According to the First Circuit, "[t]he word 'scheduled' ... does not connote the confirmation of payments to be made . . . but implies the contrary recognition that such payments, although 'scheduled' may in fact not be made. . . ." Rudler, 576 F. 3d at 46. In doing so, the First Circuit recognized that its interpretation renders the term "scheduled as" as "surplusage" and simply accepted this anomaly. Id. ("The Trustee points out fairly, that under [the First Circuit's] interpretation, the term 'scheduled as' appears to play in no role in defining the payments covered by section 707(b)(2)(A)(iii)(I)"). The lower court, in this case, attempts in a footnote to address this gap in the First Circuit's reasoning by positing that the phrase "scheduled as" merely means "'appears on a debtor's bankruptcy schedules.'" Harvey, 407 B.R. at 872 n.5. However, both the First Circuit's interpretation and the lower court's attempt to address the phrase "scheduled as" results in an interpretation that is demonstrably inconsistent with the statutory language of section 707(b)(2)(A)(iii) and Congress' clear intent in drafting the 2005 Act's reforms.

2. Allowing a deduction for mortgage payments that will never be made on the basis that the payments remain "contractually due" also fails to take account of the phrase "following the date of the petition" in the statute. See In re Naut, No. 07-20280, 2008 WL 191297 at *9 (Bankr. E.D. Pa. Jan. 22, 2008) (unpublished disposition); In re Harris, 353 B.R. 304, 308-10 (Bankr. E.D. Okla. 2006); Skaggs, 349 B.R. at 599-600. The word "following," used as a preposition, means "subsequent to" or "after in time." Webster's Third New International Dictionary, 833 (1993). By requiring courts to look at payments due "subsequent to" or "after" the date of the petition, the statute makes clear that it contemplates a projection of future expenses rather than a snapshot of current expenses. Accordingly, the means test allows the Debtor to deduct from his current monthly income only those payments on account of secured debt that he actually will make after he files the petition. As the court explained in Naut, "[i]ncluding a loan payment as a deduction from income must be based on the loan payment actually being due in each of the 60 months after the bankruptcy petition is filed. Only this interpretation properly gives effect to every clause and word in the statute." Naut, 2008 WL 191297 at *9. See also Ray, 362 B.R. at 683 n.5.

3. The term "payments on account of secured debts" should also be read to call for a forward-looking assessment of what payments the debtor actually will make because that reading treats the deduction for payments on secured debts most consistently with the treatment of other expenses under the means test. It is a general rule of statutory construction that "'a word [in a statute] is known by the company it keeps,' a rule that 'is often wisely applied where a word is capable of many meanings in order to avoid the giving of unintended breadth to the Acts of Congress.'" Dolan v. United States Postal Serv., 546 U.S. 481, 486-487 (2006) (internal citations omitted).

The other deductions allowed by the means test are forward looking. Section 707(b)(2)(A)(ii) does not use actual expenses to define the expenses that the Debtor may deduct from current monthly income. Rather, it requires the Debtor to calculate and deduct only those expenses allowed under the statute. The statute sets allowable expenses using several different methods. For example, living expenses are based on Internal Revenue Service standards. See 11 U.S.C. § 707(b)(2)(A)ii)(I). The statute sets other expenses, such as health and disability insurance, as actual expenses subject to a "reasonably necessary" standard. Id. Finally, the statute sets expenses for a dependant child at actual expenses "not to exceed" a dollar amount specified in the statute and periodically adjusted. 11 U.S.C. § 707(b)(2)(A)(ii)(IV). By requiring the Debtor to project his expenses as defined under these rules and deduct only those expenses, rather than allowing him to deduct actual expenses, the statute calls for a forward-looking assessment of his disposable income in the months following bankruptcy. In light of these forward-looking definitions of allowable expenses, the definition of "payments on account of secured debt" is best read to be forward looking as well.

By focusing on the single term "contractually due" without giving due consideration to the phrases "scheduled as" and the phrase "following the date of the petition," the bankruptcy court "miss[ed] the actual meaning and the intent of § 707(b)(2)." Skaggs, 349 B.R. at 600. Read as a whole and in light of the other deductions allowed under the means test, section 707(b)(2)(A)(iii) requires a forward-looking assessment of the secured payments that the Debtor actually will make.

B. Looking Forward, Payments That the Debtor Will Not Make Cannot Be Considered "Payments on Account of a Secured Debt"

Contrary to the bankruptcy court's conclusion, the surrender and transfer of title of collateral securing a debt changes the nature of the debt, so that any remaining obligation on the debt is not an obligation "on account of a secured debt" and any payment would not be made to a "secured creditor," as required by the statute. Accordingly, the forward looking nature of the means test is critically important; it means that payments that are due on a secured debt but that the Debtor will never make cannot be deducted from monthly income under the means test.

While a debtor's obligation on account of a secured debt after he surrenders collateral varies under state law, surrender and transfer of title either eliminates the obligation or turns the debt into an unsecured debt. Some states are non-recourse states, in which a borrower may surrender property and will not be liable for any deficiency. See Baxter Dunaway, State Laws and Practices Regarding Confirmation of Sale and Deficiency Judgments, Appendix 19A, Law of Distressed Real Estate (2008). And, even in recourse states, once a debtor surrenders collateral and title transfers to the lender, the debt becomes an unsecured debt rather than a secured one, which means that any payment on a contractual obligation that follows would not be a "payment on account of [a] secured debt[]," and would not be made to a "secured creditor." See In re Wright, 492 F.3d 829 (7th Cir. 2007) (concluding that where debtors owed more on their purchase-money automobile loan than the car was worth, any shortfall had to be treated as an unsecured debt under the Bankruptcy Code, because the creditor was entitled only to an unsecured deficiency judgment after surrender of the car).

While the bankruptcy court in this case asserted that "[a] payment on a secured debt is still 'contractually due' regardless of the debtor's intent to surrender the encumbered property," Harvey, 407 B.R. at 872 (citing Rudler, 388 B.R. at 438), the court failed to recognize that any obligation that remains "contractually due" would not be due to a "secured creditor" as specified in the statute. Once the surrender (or foreclosure) takes place and title is transferred to the lender, any obligations become unsecured, and that fact is relevant to the Debtor's monthly expenses, and thus relevant to whether granting the Debtor a chapter 7 discharge would be an abuse. As one court has explained, when "a debtor surrenders collateral, the debtor is no longer required to make the scheduled installment payments. If there is a deficiency after application of the collateral proceeds to the indebtedness, an unsecured claim remains, but a secured debt no longer exists and no payment is due except for an unsecured deficiency balance." In re Harris, 353 B.R. at 309. "'Indeed, debtors return collateral to secured parties for the express purpose of lowering their monthly living expenses.'" Id. (quoting Love, 350 B.R. at 614-15).

A court assessing a motion to dismiss a filing as presumptively abusive will know whether the debtor intends to make payments on the debt or forfeit the collateral. A debtor must file a statement of intention as to whether he intends to retain or surrender property secured by debt within 30 days of the earlier of the chapter 7 petition date and the date of the meeting of creditors. See 11 U.S.C. § 521(a)(2)(A); Fed. R. Bankr. P. 1017(b)(2) (requiring individual debtors in chapter 7 cases to file a statement of intent on the appropriate form). This means that the latest possible date for a debtor to file the statement is 30 days after he files his chapter 7 petition. United States Trustees have 10 days from the meeting of creditors to "review all materials" filed by a debtor (including the statement of intent), and file a statement as to whether the debtor's case would be presumed abusive under section 707(b), and 30 days to file a motion to dismiss for presumed abuse. 11 U.S.C. § 704(b)(1) and (2). Because the meeting of creditors must be held "no fewer then 20 and no more than 40 days after the order for relief," see Fed. R. Bankr. P. 2003, which in a voluntary petition under chapter 7 is the date the petition is filed, see 11 U.S.C. 301(b), the United States Trustee and the court should know by the deadline for filing the statement on presumptive abuse whether the debtor intends to surrender property secured by debt.[4]

C. Disallowing Deductions for Payments That Will Never Be Made Best Serves the Purpose of the Means Test

[4] Under similar circumstances in the chapter 13 context, the Seventh Circuit has stated that it "cannot see the merit in throwing out undisputed information, bearing on how much the debtor can afford to pay, that comes to light between the submission and approval of a plan of reorganization." In re Tuner, 574 F.3d 349, 362 (7th Cir. 2009). Surely, if such information can be considered by courts in the chapter 13 context, it should be considered by them in the chapter 7 context as well, especially when one considers that such information is readily available to them via the statement of intent.

1. Allowing a deduction only for mortgage payments that actually will be made is not only compelled by the statutory text, but also best serves Congress's purpose in enacting the means test. The 2005 Act established the means test – the "heart of the [2005 Act's] consumer bankruptcy reforms," H.R. Rep. No. 109-31 (I) at 1 (2005), reprinted in 2005 U.S.C.C.A.N. 88, 89 – to identify which debtors have the means to pay something to their creditors, and which do not. Congress intended the means test to ensure that those who can afford to repay some portion of their unsecured debts be required to do so. See H.R. Rep. No. 109-31 (I) at 1 (2005), reprinted in 2005 U.S.C.C.A.N. 88, 89 (stating intent to make certain that debtors "repay creditors the maximum they can afford."). That purpose is better served by allowing the Debtor to include only those payments that the Debtor actually will make. Reading the means test to allow the deduction of payments that the Debtor has no intention of making would make the means test a less accurate picture of the Debtor's "average monthly payments on account of secured debts." By contrast, reading the statute to allow only those payments that actually will be made gives a more accurate picture of what the Debtor's resources will be in the period following the petition, which is the key fact for determining whether the petition is presumptively abusive. In this case, the difference is stark. If the ruling below stands, the Debtor's debts will be discharged even though he has $800 in disposable income and could repay his creditors roughly $48,000 over the course of a 60 month chapter 13 plan.

The lower court's decision concluded that its interpretation of the statute served Congress's intent to "'reduce judicial discretion in the process.'" Harvey, 407 B.R. at 873 (quoting, In re Randle, 358 B.R. 360, 363 (Bankr. N.D. Ill. 2006)). The history of the 2005 Act makes clear, however, that Congress's primary intent in reducing judicial discretion and creating the means test was to decrease the number of abusive filings by ensuring that debtors "repay creditors the maximum they can afford," and its effort to make the means test a mechanical one was subsidiary to the effort to eliminate abuse. And in any event, the means test is more accurate, and no less mechanical, if it requires a court to take the Debtor's intent to surrender property securing a debt into account when projecting the debtors payments on account of secured debt in the 60 months following the filing of the bankruptcy petition.

2. An analogy to the factors for dismissing a chapter 7 petition prior to the 2005 Act also suggests that the means test should not be read to allow the deduction of payments on account of secured debt that will not be made. Prior to the 2005 Act, section 707(b) provided a presumption in favor of discharging the debts of a chapter 7 debtor, and a party seeking dismissal under section 707(b) was required to show that permitting the case to proceed under chapter 7 would be a "substantial abuse" of the provisions of chapter 7. The 2005 Act changed this statutory framework by removing both the presumption in favor of discharge and the term "substantial." A chapter 7 case may now be dismissed or converted upon a showing that the grant of relief under chapter 7 would be only an abuse (not a substantial abuse) of the provisions of chapter 7. 11 U.S.C. §§ 707(b)(1), 707(b)(2)(A).

Because Congress eliminated the presumption in favor of discharge and the requirement that the abuse of chapter 7 be "substantial," the standard for whether a bankruptcy petition should be dismissed under section 707(b) must now be understood to be less demanding than it was before the 2005 Act. If "substantial abuse" required, inter alia, the ability to repay a substantial portion of one's debts, see In re Green, 934 F.2d 568 (4th Cir. 1991), then simple abuse must require the ability to repay something less than a substantial amount of one's debts. But reading the means test to allow the deduction of payments on account of secured debt even though those payments will never be made would effectively allow the debtor to shelter a substantial portion of his income, which would make the standard for dismissal of a chapter 7 petition harder to meet, rather than easier. As one court has explained, the debtor "would be artificially reducing his current monthly income to defeat the purpose of the means test and to avoid paying his debts to his creditors, when he could in fact afford to pay." Naut, 2008 WL 191297, at *8.

INTRODUCTION

In our principal brief, the United States Trustee established that section 707(b)(2)(A)(iii) of the Bankruptcy Code does not allow debtors, like the Debtor in this case, to deduct "phantom"[1] mortgage payments they will not make. See Appellant's Principal Br. at 10-19. There are three reasons why this is so. First, read as a whole, section 707(b)(2)(A) makes clear that bankruptcy's means test is forward looking. Id. at 11-15. Second, since bankruptcy's means test is forward looking, one must conclude that payments that a debtor will not make cannot be considered "payments on account of a secured debt." Id. at 15-17. Third, disallowing deductions for payments that will never be made best serves the purposes of the means test. Id. at 17-19.

In response, the Debtor argues that he should be permitted to deduct monthly mortgage payments on his means test because those payments remained due at the time that he prepared his bankruptcy filing, even though he made clear that he would not make them. See Appellee Br. at 4-25. The Debtor's reading of section 707(b)(2)(A)(iii) fails to take into account the entirety of the bankruptcy statute as it applies to the Debtor, and fails to take into account the phrase "following the date of the petition" found in section 707(b)(2)(A)(iii). Further, the Debtor fails to respond to the United States Trustee's argument that the government's reading of section 707(b)(2)(A)(iii) treats payments on secured debts most consistently with other expense deductions under the means test. Finally, because the Debtor's assertions that section 707(b)(2)(A)(iii) is not grounded in reality are erroneous, and because reality dictates that the Debtor's non-existent mortgage payment should be disallowed under the means test, reversal is appropriate.

ARGUMENT

I. Notwithstanding the Debtor's Assertions to the Contrary, Section 707(b)(2)(A)(iii) Does Not Provide for the Inclusion of Non-Existent Mortgage Payments Under the Means Test

A. The Debtor's reading of section 707(b)(2)(A)(iii) fails to take into account the entirety of the bankruptcy statute.

In his brief, the Debtor suggests that the phrase "scheduled as contractually due" includes payments that will be contractually due after his bankruptcy filing, regardless of whether they will be made, in order to "give meaning to every word used in the statute."[2] See Appellee Br. at 8. However, the United States Trustee's forward-looking construction of section 707(b)(2)(A)(iii) gives the phrase "scheduled as contractually due" meaning. And, unlike the Debtor's construction, does so within the context of the entirety of the Bankruptcy Code.

Under the United States Trustee's construction of section 707(b)(2)(A)(iii), the phrase "scheduled as" requires that a court include only those contractual obligations on secured debts that are properly listed on a bankruptcy schedule because the debtor intends to honor them. See Appellant's Principal Br. at 13. The United States Trustee bases this construction on the use of this phrase "scheduled

[2] The debtor's argument that every word in the statute must be given meaning is ironic because he espouses an interpretation of section 707(b)(2)(A)(iii) that the First Circuit has found renders the words "scheduled as" as mere "surplusage." See Morse v. Rudler (In re Rudler), 576 F.3d 37, 46 (1st Cir. 2009).

as” in section 1111(a) of the Bankruptcy Code. See 11 U.S.C. § 1111(a). Because section 1111(a) is the only other provision of the Bankruptcy Code other than section 707(b)(2)(A)(iii) that uses the phrase “scheduled as,” the same meaning imparted to the phrase “scheduled as” in section 1111(a) should be given to the phrase “scheduled as” in section 707(b)(2)(A)(iii). See Commissioner v. Keystone Consol. Industries, Inc., 508 U.S. 152, 159 (1993) (“‘identical words used in different parts of the same act are intended to have the same meaning’”).

Section 1111(a) provides that a “proof of claim or interest is deemed filed under section 501 of this title for any claim or interest that appears in the schedules filed under . . . section 521(1) or 1106(a)(2) of this title, except a claim or interest that is scheduled as disputed, contingent, or unliquidated.” 11 U.S.C. § 1111(a) (emphasis added). The second part of the provision excepts claims that are “scheduled as disputed, contingent, or unliquidated.” Id. (emphasis added).

Thus, under the Bankruptcy Code, the term “scheduled as” in section 1111(a) means “appears on the schedule” or “appended to” the schedule. Cf. In re Harvey, 407 B.R. 867, 873 (Bankr. W. Va. 2009) (“This Court believes that ‘scheduled as’ is better interpreted to mean ‘appears on a debtor’s bankruptcy schedules.’”).

One of the documents “appended” in this case was the Debtor’s Statement of Intent. See Fed. R. Bankr. P. Official Form B8. In it, the Debtor makes clear he will not be making payments on his home because he is surrendering the home. See Appellant Rec. No. 1 at 39. Therefore, section 707(b)(2)(A)(iii), which limits expenses to those scheduled as going to be owed, does not allow the Debtor to claim phantom expenses he will not make.

This common sense reading works best in the real world of bankruptcy. In order for the bankruptcy system to function effectively, debtors must honestly and accurately report their financial affairs on their schedules and statements filed with the court, and fulfill their duty to amend those schedules and statements to keep the information in them current. See In re An-Tze Cheng, 308 B.R. 448, 458 (B.A.P. 9th Cir. 2004), aff'd, 160 Fed. Appx. 644 (9th Cir. 2005); In re Searles, 317 B.R. 368, 378 (B.A.P. 9th Cir. 2004), aff'd, 212 Fed. Appx. 589 (9th Cir. 2006). The United States Trustee's construction of section 707(b)(2)(A)(iii) is true to this principle. The Debtor's construction is not.

This is so because section 521(a)(2)(B) of the Bankruptcy Code expressly requires that debtors who indicate an intent to surrender collateral on their Statement of Intent, see Fed. R. Bankr. P. Official Form B8, actually surrender that collateral shortly after filing their case. See 11 U.S.C. § 521(a)(2)(B) ("within 30 days after the first date set for the meeting of creditors under section 341(a), or within such additional time as the court, for cause, within such 30-day period fixes, the debtor shall perform his intention with respect to such property, as specified by subparagraph (A) of this paragraph.") (emphasis added).[3] Thus, when debtors, like the Debtor in this case, file a Statement of Intent indicating an intent to surrender property, that known reality must be taken into account. See J.E.M. Ag. Supply, Inc. v. Pioneer Hi-Bred Int'l, Inc., 534 U.S. 124, 143-44 (2001) ("'when two statutes are capable of coexistence, it is the duty of the courts, absent a clearly expressed congressional intention to the contrary, to regard each as effective.'").

[3] Because section 521(a)(2)(B) uses the word "shall," its requirements are mandatory. See Plaut v. Spendthrift Fram, Inc., 1 F.3d 1487, 1490 (6th Cir. 1993) ("[w]here the word 'shall' appears in a statutory directive, 'Congress could not have chosen stronger words to express its intent that [the specified action] be mandatory. . . .'"), aff'd. 514 U.S. 211 (1995); Lexicon Inc. v. Milberg Weiss Bershad Hynes & Lerach, 523 U.S. 26, 35 (1998) ("the mandatory 'shall' . . . normally creates an obligation impervious to judicial discretion").

The United States Trustee's construction of section 707(b)(2)(A)(iii) accomplishes this task because it only includes those contractual obligations on secured debts listed on a debtor's bankruptcy schedules that the debtor intends to honor. Conversely, the Debtor's construction overlooks what he is statutorily obligated to do under section 521(a)(2)(B) (i.e., surrender his home), and therefore "violate[s] the basic principle of construction that statutes should be read, if possible, as harmonious texts." See Leaf Tobacco Exporters Ass'n. v. Block, 749 F.2d 1106, 1115 (4th Cir. 1984).

Allowing deductions without regard to a debtor's stated intent to surrender associated property would credit a set of facts that is known to be false, giving the debtor the undue benefit of a non-existent expense. See In re Turner, 574 F.3d at 356 ("A fixed debt that will disappear . . . is not intended to enrich the debtor at the expense of his unsecured creditors."). Because the bankruptcy court's ruling erred in failing to give effect to the Debtor's statement of intention, and as a consequence the import of section 521(a)(2)(B), it misapplied the language of 707(b)(2)(A)(iii) and its decision should be reversed.

B. The Debtor's reading of section 707(b)(2)(A)(iii) fails to take into account the phrase "following the date of the petition" found in section 707(b)(2)(A)(iii).

As the United States Trustee argued in his opening brief, allowing a deduction for mortgage payments that will never be made, on the theory that the payments are contractually due even if the debtor will never make them, also ignores the phrase "following the date of the petition." See Appellant's Principal Br. at 14. Cf. Turner, 574 F.3d at 349 (rejecting in chapter 13 context any right to claim a "phantom" expense for surrendered property). As we have explained, the word "following," used as a preposition, means "subsequent to" or "after in time." Webster's Third New Int'l Dictionary, 833 (1993). By requiring courts to look at payments contractually due "subsequent to" or "after" the date of the petition (i.e., the date a bankruptcy case is filed), the statute's plain meaning contemplates a projection of future expenses rather than a snapshot of current expenses. "A statute 'must be interpreted, if possible, to give each word some operative effect.'" In re Ennis, 558 F.3d 343, 346 (4th Cir. 2009) (quoting Walters v. Metro. Educ. Enters., 519 U.S. 202, 209 (1997)). Thus, to give effect to each provision in the statute, section 707(b)(2)(A)(iii) should be read to allow a debtor to deduct only payments that he actually will make "subsequent to" or "after" the date his bankruptcy case is filed.

Although the Debtor repeatedly argues that the means test is a "snapshot" of a debtor's financial condition at the time he files bankruptcy, even he cannot deny that the phrase "following the date of the petition" requires the Court to look forward. Rather than interpreting the phrase to look forward to his anticipated financial condition, however, the Debtor argues that the phrase requires the Court to perform a calculation of his payments on the collateral to be surrendered for 60 months after the petition date. See Appellee Br. at 14. No statute says that, and such a construction ignores the plain meaning of the word "following" in section 707(b)(2)(A)(iii). Indeed, the Debtor's construction of the phrase "following the date of the petition" appears to have been rejected by the Seventh Circuit in Turner. See In re Turner, 574 F.3d at 355 ("Turner infers from this that the amount of the debtor's payments on account of secured debts, such as a debt secured by a mortgage, must be calculated as of the date of the petition. But that is not what the provision says. It merely specifies that the date of the petition is the date on which the payment period begins.").

C. Because the Debtor failed to respond to the United States Trustee's argument that the government's reading of section 707(b)(2)(A)(iii) treats "payments on account of secured debts" most consistently with other expense deductions under the means test, he tacitly concedes the argument.

As the United States Trustee argued in his opening brief, the phrase "payments on account of secured debts" found in section 707(b)(2)(A)(iii) should also be read to call for a forward-looking assessment of what payments the debtor actually will make. See Appellant's Principal Br. at 14-15. This is the case because, as noted by the United States Trustee in his principal brief, reading this phrase as forward-looking is most consistent with the treatment of other expenses under the means test. Id. Because the Debtor fails to respond to this argument in his brief, he tacitly agrees with this point and therefore concedes the argument. See Appellee's Br. at 1-25.

II. Notwithstanding the Debtor's Assertions to the Contrary, Section 707(b)(2)(A)(iii) is Grounded in Reality, and Reality Dictates That the Debtor's Non-Existent Mortgage Payment Be Disallowed Under the Means Test

According to the Debtor, section 707(b)(2) "is generally not grounded in the reality of any debtor's case[,]" and the United States Trustee's position introduces an impermissible element of "subjectivity" into the statute. See Appellee Br. at 8-9. The decisions relied upon by the Debtor have made a similar point. But the clear terms of section 707(b)(2) belie the Debtor's interpretation. In devising a mechanism to ascertain a debtor's post-petition financial condition, Congress included a variety of approaches: historical (examining the history of a debtor's "real" earnings), 11 U.S.C. §101(10A) & 707(b)(2)(A)(i); objective "allowances, 11 U.S.C. § 707(b)(2)(A)(ii)(I); and projected actual (i.e., "real") expenses, 11 U.S.C. §707(b)(2)(A)(ii)(II)-(IV). Thus, much of the means test is real, and there is no reason to presume Congress intended that standard expense deductions should be interpreted in a way that defies reality. Cf. Turner, 574 F.3d at 349 (rejecting in chapter 13 context any right to claim a "phantom" expense for surrendered property); In re Ransom, 577 F.3d 1026, 1030 (9th Cir. 2009) (rejecting, under section 707(b)(2)(A)(ii)(I), any right to claim a "fictitious" vehicle ownership expense). And, while it is true that all predictions must involve guesswork, in this case that guesswork has been eliminated because the Debtor himself has indicated an intent to surrender the property associated with the secured debt in question. See 11 U.S.C. § 521(a)(2)(B) (the debtor shall perform his intention with respect to such property, as specified by subparagraph (A) of this paragraph.") (emphasis added). Accordingly, "all that is at issue is a fixed debt that we know will disappear," Turner, 574 F.3d at 356 (emphasis added), and reality therefore dictates that the Debtor's non-existent mortgage payment be disallowed under the means test.

CONCLUSION

For all these reasons, and those asserted in the United States Trustee's principal brief, the judgment of the bankruptcy court below should be reversed.

SUMMARY OF THE CASE AND DECLINATION OF ORAL ARGUMENT

The issue before this Court is whether the district court erred in sustaining the bankruptcy court's decision to convert these four related chapter 11 cases to chapter 7 pursuant to 11 U.S.C. §1112(b). The decisions of both courts were properly made and should not be reversed on appeal.

The debtors were companies that engaged in health care administration related businesses. The debtors sought bankruptcy protection because they experienced a capital shortfall which was at least in part attributable to the Appellants. Once under the protection of the bankruptcy court, the debtors liquidated their operating assets and proposed a chapter 11 plan which provided for the distribution of $3.25 million in sale proceeds to creditors. The creditors did not accept that proposal and unsuccessful negotiations over the plan's terms continued for months, during which time substantial administrative expenses dissipated the Debtors' assets.

The United States Trustee moved under 11 U.S.C. §1112(b) to convert these cases to chapter 7 so that an independent chapter 7 trustee could liquidate the Debtors' assets for the benefit of creditors because (1) there were ongoing losses to and a diminution of the estate coupled with an absence of any reasonable likelihood of rehabilitation; (2) the Debtor was unable to effectuate a plan; and (3) there was an unreasonable delay which was prejudicial to creditors. The court initially found cause to convert the cases but gave the Debtors a grace period to make progress in the chapter 11 case. Instead of progress, however, conditions worsened. An outside group - the Appellants here - seized control of the Debtors, and the Creditors' Committee independently moved to convert the cases to chapter 7. At that point, the bankruptcy court exercised its discretion under §1112(b) and converted the cases, in part, because all parties conceded the debtors had not met the court's previously established requirements for staying in chapter 11. This appeal followed.

The United States Trustee submits that no oral argument is necessary because the uncontested facts overwhelmingly support the bankruptcy court's discretionary decision to convert the cases to chapter 7.

Statutory Provisions and Rules

A. STATEMENT OF JURISDICTION

The bankruptcy court had jurisdiction over the United States Trustee's motion to convert the chapter 11 cases to chapter 7 cases under 28 U.S.C. §157(a) and (b). The district court had jurisdiction to hear the appeal from the bankruptcy court's order converting the cases under 28 U.S.C. §158. The district court entered judgment on February 5, 2003. A timely notice of appeal was filed on March 7, 2003. An order converting a case from chapter 11 to chapter 7 pursuant to 11 U.S.C. § 1112(b) is final for purposes of appellate jurisdiction, and this Court, therefore, has jurisdiction under 28 U.S.C. §158(d).

B. STATEMENT OF THE ISSUE

The issue on appeal is whether the bankruptcy court appropriately exercised discretion when it determined, after three hearings and a review of the record in the case, that cause existed to convert these chapter 11 bankruptcy cases to chapter 7 cases pursuant to 11 U.S.C. §1112(b), when cause included that the Debtors had liquidated their assets and had not been in business for over four months, administrative expenses were diminishing the Debtors' only tangible asset, $3.25 million in cash, the parties could not negotiate a consensual chapter 11 reorganization plan, the Debtors' proposed plan was not confirmable on its face and any attempt to preserve potential net operating loss for future use was speculative at best and futile at worst.

Loop made six separate arguments on appeal to the district court in support of their view that the bankruptcy court erred in converting this case.[1] That court

1. Whether the bankruptcy court applied the proper legal standard under §1112(b)(1) in determining that cause existed to convert the cases to chapter 7,
2. Whether the United States Trustee was held to his proper burden of proof,
3. Whether the United States Trustee introduced sufficient evidence to support the conversion of the cases to chapter 7,
4. Whether the bankruptcy court erred in failing to make adequate findings of fact to support its conversion order,
5. Whether the bankruptcy court failed to give proper weight to

C. STATEMENT OF THE CASE

The Appellant challenges the bankruptcy court's order converting this case to chapter 7 which was entered after both the Appellee United States Trustee and the Official Committee of Unsecured Creditors (Creditors' Committee) filed motions seeking conversion and after the bankruptcy court held no less than three hearings on those motions. At the time of conversion, Appellant Loop Corp. ("Loop")[2] was owner of roughly half of the stock of the Debtor parent corporation, and was facing litigation by the Debtor in the chapter 11 proceedings. Shortly before conversion, Loop and related entities seized control of the debtor, which caused the creditors' committee to seek emergency conversion to chapter 7. In the Creditors' Committee's view, the fox had seized the henhouse. On appeal, Loop argues the bankruptcy court erred in converting the cases because it used an improper legal standard, had insufficient evidence to support its conversion decision, used an inappropriate burden of proof, and converted prematurely. The district court rejected each of these contentions in affirming conversion. Loop now argues that the district court made the same errors as the bankruptcy court.

D. STATEMENT OF FACTS

These cases were commenced on August 7, 2001, when the Debtors filed voluntary petitions under the debt reorganization provisions of chapter 11 of the Bankruptcy Code, 11 U.S.C. 1101, et seq. Voluntary Petition, Doc. #1. The lead debtor, Health Risk Management, Inc. ("HRMI"),[3] was a publicly traded company which wholly owned the three related debtor subsidiaries, HRM Claim Management, Inc., Institute For HealthCare Quality, Inc. and Health Benefit Reinsurance, Inc., as well as other non-debtor corporations. Joint Disclosure Statement dated December 5, 2001 ("December 5 Disclosure Statement"), Doc. #214 at 4, 6. The four Debtors operated under the same corporate structure and did not operate their businesses as distinct entities. See id. at 4. The bankruptcy court ordered the joint administration of the four bankruptcy estates on August 10, 2001, and further ordered that all pleadings be filed in the HRMI case. Doc. #19.

In mid May, 2001, Mr. Greenblatt, on behalf of Loop, entered a written agreement with the Debtor to provide the Debtor with $9 million in financing. Id. at 4. Subsequently, Loop, through the actions of Mr. Andrew Jahelka, (who was Mr. Greenblatt's designee on the Debtor's Board), withheld a $3 million financing check from the Debtor, refusing to deposit it into the Debtor's Minnesota bank account. Id. at 5. See also December 5 Disclosure Statement at 7. When Mr. Jahelka took those actions, he was both the president of the payor on the check and the director of the payee Debtor.[5] See Affidavit of Gary T. McIlroy, M.D., August 16, 2001, at 5. During the same time period, Ernst & Young, the Debtors' independent auditors, resigned after informing the Debtors that the medical services payables for the Debtor's HMO subsidiary were materially understated. December 5 Disclosure Statement at 7.

In May, 2001, Mr. Greenblatt and Loop, through Mr. Jahelka, advised the Debtor that Loop would not fund a $3.1 million loan commitment it had

On June 7, 2001, the Debtor was informed that it would be delisted from the NASDAQ. Id. Further, on August 1, 2001, the Debtor's HMO subsidiaries were placed under an "Order of Rehabilitation" by the Pennsylvania Department of Insurance. Id. at 7. On August 7, 2001, the Debtors' lack of adequate cash flow forced them to file for bankruptcy protection under chapter 11 of the Bankruptcy Code. Id. at 8, Doc. # 1.

2. Post-Bankruptcy Petition Facts

During the bankruptcy case and pursuant to court order, the Debtors sold substantially all their assets. December 5 Disclosure Statement at 1. On November 7, 2001, the bankruptcy court approved the sale of the 4YourCare business for $5,650,000 and the sale of the QualityFirst business for $1,800,000. Doc. # 191, 192. The sales were closed on November 9, 2001, and liens were satisfied, leaving the Debtor with net sale proceeds of approximately $3,250,000 in cash. December 5 Disclosure Statement at 9.

At the time it sought bankruptcy protection, the Debtor was engaged in litigation with Loop (Leon Greenblatt) in Cook County, Illinois for Loop's failure to honor its funding commitments. See Bankruptcy Schedules, Doc. #79; Statement of Financial Affairs, Item #4. At that time, Mr. Greenblatt and his affiliated companies, Loop Corporation, Banco Panamericano, Chiplease, Inc., and Scattered, et al. owned forty percent of the debtor's stock. See Bankruptcy Schedules, Doc. #79; Statement of Financial Affairs, Item #21.

On December 5, 2001, the Debtor filed its Joint Disclosure Statement and Plan and the bankruptcy court set a hearing on adequacy of the disclosure statement for January 23, 2002[6] Docs. # 214, 215 & 220. In order for a chapter 11 case to be successful, a debtor must file and obtain court approval of a disclosure statement and thereafter must submit it along with an accompanying plan to creditors so that the creditors can vote to either accept or reject the plan. 11 U.S.C. §1121 through §1126.

On January 10, 2002, the United States Trustee filed a motion to convert the cases from chapter 11 to chapter 7 under 11 U.S.C. §1112(b). Doc. #238. The United States Trustee argued that cause existed for conversion under §1112(b) because the Debtor had a continuing loss to and diminution of its estate, an inability to effectuate a plan, and its unreasonable delay in confirming a plan was [6] The hearing on adequacy of the disclosure statement was continued from January 23, 2001, to February 6, 2001, so that it would be heard simultaneous to the U.S. Trustee's motion to convert. In order for the disclosure statement to contain adequate information, it was necessary for the all issues surrounding the related plan to be addressed. Those plan issues were the focus of the bankruptcy court's analysis at the February 6, March 7 and March 13 hearings. Since they were never resolved, the disclosure statement was never approved.

prejudicial to creditors. See United States Trustee's Motion to Convert or Dismiss, Doc. # 239 at 2 (citing, inter alia, 11 U.S.C. §1112(b)(1) & (3)).

Loop responded in opposition to the motion to convert on January 30, 2002. Doc. #260. The Debtors also objected to the United States Trustee's motion, Doc. # 259, as did the Unsecured Creditors' Committee ("Creditors' Committee). Doc. #261.

On January 30, 2002, the Creditors' Committee sought authority from the bankruptcy court to sue Loop, Ernst & Young, and certain officers and directors of the Debtor - including Mr. Jahelka. See Motion by Unsecured Creditors' Committee for Authority to Investigate, File and Prosecute Lawsuits, Doc. #262 at 3-4 ("Creditors' Committee Motion"). The Creditors' Committee sought to sue Loop based on Loop's breach of its pre petition agreement to "fund the debtors up to $8 million, and failure to provide any funds after payment of the first $3 million." See Creditors' Committee Motion, Doc. #262. The Creditors' Committee contended the Loop, in concert with Mr. Jahelka, wrongfully failed to remit $3 million in Mr. Jahelka's possession to the Debtors under Loop's loan commitment. Id. The bankruptcy court denied the Creditors' Committee Motion on February 13, 2002. Doc. #279. As a result, the cause of action was left for the

Debtors to pursue.[7]

By February 2002, numerous applications for allowance of fees and expenses had been filed by professionals employed in the case. Those professionals include the Debtors' attorneys, accountant, management consultants, and investment banker, as well as the Creditors' Committee's local and lead counsel. The total fees and expenses sought in all fee applications filed before February 6, 2002, total $1,385,392.25. See Docs. # 71, 100, 103, 111, 160, 180, 206, 207, 209, 213, 224, 225, 236, 266, and 267. All allowed professional fees were payable out of the bankruptcy estate's assets. See 11 U.S.C. §§328, 330.

a. The February 6, 2002, Hearing on Conversion of the Cases to Chapter 7

On February 6, 2002, the bankruptcy court conducted its first hearing on the United States Trustee's motion to convert the cases to chapter 7. Transcript, February 6, 2002.

Loop took the position at the hearing that "[t]he United States Trustee has simply stepped before the Court and asked to shift the burden. The burden is on the movant. The movant has produced no evidence." Transcript, February 6, 2002, at 28, l. 3-16. The United States Trustee responded that the factual basis for the motion was established by everything in the record of the case, including

> " (1)the orders approving the sales of the assets; (2) the record of the debtor's plan and disclosure statement which makes the representation that the sales have been consummated and there is no business left; (3) the declaration of Mr. LeBlanc (debtors' then CEO) regarding the existence of $121 million in claims; (4) the schedules; (5) and the claims register."

Transcript, February 6, 2002, p. 29, ll. 18-24. In further opposition to the United States Trustee's motion, Loop argued that "[t]he debtors and Loop Corporation and the committee want to show the court exactly what they can do and how they can do it." Transcript, February 6, 2002 at 31, l. 7-9.

Counsel for the Debtors reiterated Loop's argument that the U.S. Trustee's conversion motion provided "no factual support in favor of its motion even though it has the burden of proof." Transcript, February 6, 2002 at 12, ll. 15-16. In direct response, and based on unrebutted evidence in the record, the Bankruptcy Court found:

> "Let's start with this. Is there any – it seems to me one of the grounds for conversion or dismissal is a diminution of the estate and the lack of some likelihood of rehabilitation and those both exist here, don't they? The estate is diminishing. Certainly there is no assets coming in and there is expenses accruing and the debtor is not going to be – debtors are not being rehabilitated so grounds have been shown for conversion or dismissal right there, aren't they?

At the conclusion of the February 6, 2002, hearing, the bankruptcy court continued the motion to convert to March 13, 2002, but before doing so, made the following findings of fact:

> A. There will be "an enormous expense that is . . . going to (be) sustained both to confirm a plan and to consummate this plan." Transcript, February 6, 2002 at 33, ll. 21-23.
>
> B. A "lot of money has been spent all coming out of the creditors' pockets obviously to pay the debtor's lawyers and the committee's lawyers, of which there are two, to even agree on a plan, and I don't know where that's going . . . ." Id. at 24, ll. 1-4.
>
> C. "I'm very concerned about the confirmability of it (the plan) or even if we got there." Id. at 34, ll. 9-10.
>
> D. "I don't know how you can take the creditors of four different legal entities and put them in one class." Id. at 23, ll. 12-14.
>
> E. "So I'm very concerned if you go through this all this process the plan wouldn't even be confirmable leaving out the other issues that have been raised indirectly by people who are objecting to the disclosure statement so that the confirmation process itself would not be cheap." Id. at 34, ll. 18-22.
>
> F. "Frankly as I looked at the plan it seemed to me for a case of this size at least unduly complicated and thus expensive. Id. at 35, ll. 6-8.
>
> G. "I just don't understand the whole concept of a disbursing agent and steering committee at least in a case this size, and why the debtor isn't just paying the money out which is something that could have been done and saved a lot of money. Maybe I'm missing something but I'm not missing the expense that is going to be involved in consummating this plan. Now the benefits maybe I am missing. If the cases were converted substantive consolidation and all those benefits would be available. I guess there are certainly simpler mechanisms for suing people (and) for distributing money. There is a known accountability which I find ambiguous and unclear under the debtor's plan." Id. at 35-36, ll. 25-11.

H. "There are costs too in a Chapter 7 case but I'm unconvinced at all that either the costs or delay would be any more substantial in a Chapter 7 case than they would be in a Chapter 11 case." Id. at 36, ll. 15-17.

I. "I start . . . with . . .that grounds have been shown and cause has been shown here. The estate is diminishing". Id. at 35, ll. 18-21.

J. "The United States Trustee has shown cause and that cause has been shown. If you are looking for a record I think it is in the debtor's own statements, its own disclosure statement, its own affidavits and statements, so cause has been shown." Id. at 27, ll. 8-12.

K. "I am willing to give the parties a chance to see if they can come up with something that can convince me." Id. at 37, ll. 23-25.

L. "So the bottom line is my inclination is to convert the case unless something really substantive, affirmative, that looks likely, has some likely possibility of confirming it that everybody is behind and so by the 13th of March we all come back and we are still all fighting, we are all at each other's throats and we are going to sue each other and dispute who is going to be suing whom over what and having authority then this case is going into Chapter 7, but if in the meantime you can come up with some sort of consensual plan that looks like it is going to create a significant return to creditors over what they would get in a Chapter 7 case, you know, then we'll take a look at it then" Id. at 38, ll. 14-25.

Despite the fact that the bankruptcy court found that "cause has been shown," id. at 27, ll. 8-12, it exercised its discretion not to convert at that time in order to provide the parties additional time to negotiate a confirmable plan. For that reason, the bankruptcy court continued the hearing on the United States

Trustee's motion to convert the cases to March 13, 2002. Id. at 38 ll. 14-25.

b. The March 7, 2002, Hearing on Conversion of the Cases to Chapter 7

On or about March 4, 2002, the Creditors' Committee changed its position in opposition to conversion and filed its own emergency motion to have the Debtors' cases converted to chapter 7. Committee's Motion for Expedited Hearing and Immediate Conversion, Doc. # 290. That motion was heard on March 7, 2002.

The Creditors' Committee sought conversion because all members of the Debtor's board of directors had resigned with the exception of Andrew Jahelka, Mr. Jahelka had appointed Leon Greenblatt as the Debtor's chief restructuring officer,[8] Mr. Greenblatt held a major ownership interest in Loop, which the Debtors intended to sue, Loop and Mr. Greenblatt's other companies had made their own claims against the Debtors in excess of $32 million, and Mr. Greenblatt was also a likely target of litigation by the Debtors. Id. at 4, ¶¶ 12-16. The Creditors' Committee further sought conversion because "[s]ince the February 6, 2002 hearing, there have been little to no discussions concerning a consensual plan among the Debtors, the Committee or Loop." Id. at 3, ¶ 11. Finally, the motion also sought to have the $3.25 million in the Debtor's bank accounts frozen so it could be kept from Mr. Greenblat's control and preserved for the estate's creditors. Doc. #290 at 5.

At its emergency motion, the Creditors' Committee also argued that "an insider . . . who was a target of litigation or surrounding the plan and as supposed plan participant had brashly taken over the Debtor." Transcript, March 7, 2002 at 4, *ll.*19-22. The Creditors' Committee further argued in favor of conversion, stating:

> "Rather than risk additional expenses, waste additional time trying to clarify what was going on or even Mr. Greenblatt's right to change management at that stage of the Chapter 11, the committee determined that it was best to put a qualified neutral in control of the assets, the claims, the cash, and other assets as quickly as possible."

Transcript, March 7, 2002 at 5, ll. 2-8.e

In response to the Creditors' Committee's motion to convert the cases to chapter 7, Loop attacked the composition of the Creditors' Committee, alleging that the members were not representative of all creditors. Debtors' Response To Committee's Motion for Immediate Conversion of Cases, Doc. #292 at 4. That response, although purportedly made by the Debtors, in fact was made at a time when the Debtors were under the control of the Loop's principals. See Unsworn

Declaration of Leland LeBlanc in Opposition to Committee's Motion for Immediate Conversion, Doc.#292, ¶¶ 3,5, (wherein Mr. LeBlanc stated that Andrew Jahelka remained the sole director of the Debtor and that Leon Greenblatt was appointed the Debtor's Chief Restructuring Officer).

After hearing oral argument, the bankruptcy court continued the Creditors' Committee's motion to convert to March 13, 2002, to be heard simultaneously with the United States Trustee's continued motion.

c. The March 13, 2002, Hearing on Conversion of the Cases to Chapter 7

At the third and final hearing on conversion of the cases to chapter 7, the Creditors' Committee again advised the bankruptcy court that an impasse had been reached in the negotiation of the terms of a consensual reorganization plan. See Transcript, March 13, 2002 at 9, ll. 1-3; at 12 ll. 22-25; at 9, ll. 2-3. That fact was also conceded by Loop. Transcript, March 13, 2002 at 21, ll. 4-7. Further, the Creditors' Committee advised the court that losses to and a diminution of the estate were continuing. "The debtors are currently spending approximately $60,000.00 a month . . . So if you have another two months or three months of this case you are going to have another $120,000 to $180,000 out the door plus whatever attorneys' fees ultimately get approved by the court." Transcript. March 13, 2002 at 11. ll. 12-18. This was particularly significant because at the time, the debtors had no operations or other source of revenue. Doc. # 190, 191. The Creditors' Committee also noted that the resignations of the Debtor's other directors left Loop's president, Andrew Jahelka, as the Debtor's sole board member and that Loop and Mr. Greenblatt- two of the Debtors' litigation targets - now controlled the Debtors. Transcript, March 13, 2002 at 11, ll. 21-24; at 12, ll. 1-16. These management changes were acknowledged by Loop. See Transcript, March 13, 2002 at 26, ll. 15-17.

Moments before the March 13 hearing, the Debtor filed a new, lengthy Plan of Reorganization which was signed by Leon Greenblatt as Chief Restructuring Officer for each of the four Debtor entities. March 13, 2002, Plan of Reorganization, Doc. # 294. The plan was not consensual, as the court had required at the February 6 hearing. Transcript, March 13, 2002 at 8, ll 8-25.

At the hearing, the Debtors, now under Loop's control, asked to call a witness in support of the plan it had just filed. Transcript, March 13, 2002 at 13-14, ll. 13-3. Both the United States Trustee and the Creditors' Committee objected to the calling of witnesses and the bankruptcy court sustained those objections, noting that "[t]he plan is what it is . . . [I] don't see any point in calling a witness to explain the plan[,] so there will be no witnesses." Id. at 22. The bankruptcy court reasoned that if the Debtors had evidence to offer, they should have submitted affidavits, that the Debtors had never indicated any desire to call any witnesses at trial to explain a new plan, and that Loop never filed any objection to the Creditors' Committee's motion. Id.

At the conclusion of the hearing, the bankruptcy court reiterated that it had previously "made certain findings and determinations [at the February 6 hearing] . . . that cause has been shown to convert these cases." Transcript, March 13, 2002 at 32, ll. 19-21. It then reconfirmed its finding that "[t]he estates are continuing to incur losses and its being diminished and there is no opportunity or chance (sic) for rehabilitation." Id. The bankruptcy court also noted that the Creditors' Committee "is the representative body here to make the determination about what is best for unsecured creditors" and relied upon the fact that the Committee "was unable to sign on to the Loop's plan which . . . the debtor has nominally proposed now and [the Committee] has decided no." Id. at 33, ll. 14-18.

Based upon the information in the record and the undisputed facts established at the three hearings, the bankruptcy court ordered the conversion of all four cases to chapter 7. Doc. # 296. On February 5, 2003, the district court affirmed that decision. Doc. #454; Loop v. United States Trustee, 290 B.R. 108 (D. Minn. 2003).

E. STANDARD OF REVIEW

This Court sits as a second court of review on a bankruptcy matter and applies the same standards of review of the district court. In re Usery, 123 F.3d 1089, 1093 (8th Cir. 1997), Cedar Shore Resort, Inc. , 235 F.3d at 379 (8th Cir. 2000), citing In re Clark, 223 F.3d 859, 862 (8th Cir. 2000). "[W]e review the bankruptcy court's factual findings for clear error and its conclusions of law de novo." In re Vote, 276 F.3d 1024, 1026 (8th Cir. 2002); see also Cedar Shore Resort, Inc., 235 F.3d at 379 (8th Cir. 2000); In re O'Brien, 178 F.3d 962, 966 (8th Cir. 1999); Fed. R. Bankr. P. 8013 (bankruptcy court's factual findings reviewed for clear error). This Court has noted that "[w]hile our review is a searching and independent one, we also realize that we are the second court charged with reviewing the bankruptcy court's factual findings for clear error," and that accordingly, "'[t]o be clearly erroneous, a decision must strike us as more than just maybe or probably wrong; it must . . . strike us as wrong with the force of a five-week old, unrefrigerated dead fish.'" In re Papio Keno Club, Inc., 262 F.3d 725, 729 (8th Cir. 2001) (quoting Parts and Elec. Motors, Inc. v. Sterling Elec., Inc., 866 F.2d 228, 233 (7th Cir. 1988), cert. denied, 493 U.S. 847 (1989)). Thus while this Court is "always mindful of our duty to independently review the record, we think this description is a particularly accurate reflection of when we will reverse a bankruptcy court's factual finding that has been upheld by the [lower court] -- we do not treat the [lower court] as a mere way station on the road to this court." In re Papio Keno Club, 262 F.3d at 729.

A bankruptcy court's decision to convert or dismiss under § 1112(b) is a matter of discretion, and will be reversed if the court abused its broad discretion. See In re Cedar Shore Resort, Inc., 235 F.3d at 379. "An abuse of discretion occurs if the bankruptcy court fails to apply the proper legal standard or fails to follow proper procedures in making its determination, or if the court bases an award upon findings of fact that are clearly erroneous." In re Midland Marina, Inc., 259 683, 686 (B.A.P. 8th Cir. 2001).

F. SUMMARY OF ARGUMENT

Substantial cause existed under §1112(b) of the Bankruptcy Code to convert these cases to chapter 7 and the bankruptcy court did not abuse its broad discretion in doing so. The unrebutted record before the bankruptcy court established a continuing loss to and diminution of the Debtors' estate and an absence of reasonable likelihood of rehabilitation. See 11 U.S.C. §1112(b)(1). The Debtors had no business operations to generate revenue, they had sold virtually all their assets, but they were experiencing a steady stream of unrelenting operational expenses. In addition, there was no reasonable likelihood of rehabilitation because the parties had already been involved in fruitless negotiations for months and could not agree on a confirmable plan of reorganization. 11 U.S.C. 1112(b)(1); see also 11 U.S.C. 1126 and 1129 (parties must accept a plan in order for it to be confirmed). The bankruptcy court also did not abuse its discretion in concluding that Loop's last minute "new" plan, which was tossed into the record only moments before the third and final hearing on conversion, was not confirmable and therefore it was in the best interests of creditors to convert the cases to chapter 7.

None of Loop's many arguments opposing conversion have merit. First, the bankruptcy court's conversion decision was unexceptional, like many others this and other courts have upheld. Even if Loop were correct that the bankruptcy court somehow implicitly adopted a per se rule, which it most certainly did not, that does not help Loop's case because the specific criteria for conversion under §1112(b) had already been satisfied and the bankruptcy court needed to go no further in finding cause for its order to convert. Loop also is mistaken when it suggests the bankruptcy court erroneously shifted the burden of proof in this case. The United States Trustee bore and met its burden of satisfying §1112(b), something that was easily done in this case because the Debtor's own filings established that the Debtor was hemorrhaging money and the parties' inability to agree on a plan after months of negotiations meant rehabilitation was, to say the least, very unlikely. Loop also unfairly assails the bankruptcy court for not making adequate factual findings, but such findings were made not at one hearing, but at two. Those findings are supported by the record and are more than adequate to sustain conversion. Finally, Loop speculates that the possible ability to draw upon Net Operating Losses of the Debtors ("NOLs") required the court to deny the conversion motion. Capturing those NOLs was predicated on the happening of a number of very unlikely events. Neither the Creditors' Committee, who could have gained from them, the United States Trustee, who administers bankruptcy cases for the public good, nor the court, believed the NOLs to be a good bet, and each independently concluded their possible capture did not justify leaving the Debtors in chapter 11 and under the control of Mr. Greenblatt. Although Loop touts the NOLs here, no one, including Loop, treated them as anything other than a very minor issue before the bankruptcy court, and they paled in light of the other problems in the case.

G. ARGUMENT.

1. The bankruptcy court exercised proper discretion when it found cause under §1112(b) to convert the cases from chapter 7 to chapter 11.

The bankruptcy court converted the cases to chapter 7 because the United States Trustee, as movant, met the requirements of 11 U.S.C. § 1112(b) and established cause, and the district court correctly affirmed that decision.

Section 1112(b) states, in relevant part, that

> (b) the court may convert a case under this chapter to a case under chapter 7 of this title or may dismiss a case under this chapter, whichever is in the best interests of creditors and the estate, for cause, including--
>
> (1) continuing loss to or diminution of the estate and absence of a reasonable likelihood of rehabilitation;
> (2) inability to effectuate a plan;
> (3) unreasonable delay by the debtor that is prejudicial to creditors. . . .

11 U.S.C. § 1112(b).[9]

"A bankruptcy court has broad discretion under 11 U.S.C. §1112(b) to either dismiss a case or convert a case from a Chapter 11 reorganization to a Chapter 7 liquidation." In re Lumber Exch. Bldg. Ltd. P'ship, 968 F.2d 647, 648 (8th Cir. 1992). Dismissal or conversion is appropriate if "cause" exists and it is in the "best interests of creditors and the estate." Id.; see also In re Windsor on the River Assocs., Ltd., 7 F.3d 127, 133 (8th Cir. 1993).

Section 1112(b) sets forth specifically enumerated examples of "cause" for conversion which include the "continuing loss to or diminution of the estate and absence of a reasonable likelihood of rehabilitation" as well as the inability to effectuate a confirmable plan of reorganization. 11 U.S.C. § 1112(b)(1) & (3). "It should, however, be noted that the statutory list is not exhaustive and that a court may consider other factors and equitable considerations in order to reach an appropriate result in the individual case." H.R. Rep. No. 595, 95th Cong., 1st Sess. 405-06 (1977). See also First Nat'l Bank of Sioux City v. Kerr (In re Kerr), 908 F.2d 400, 404 (8th Cir. 1990).

This Court has sustained bankruptcy courts' discretionary conversion or dismissal of chapter 11 cases under §1112(b) numerous times in the past. See Lumber Exchange Building Ltd. P'ship, 968 F.2d 647 (debtor was unable to propose a confirmable plan without improperly classifying creditors); In re Fossum, 764 F.2d 520 (8th Cir. 1985) (debtor was unable to effectuate any plan which would be confirmable); In re Kerr, 908 F.2d 400 (debtors' proposed plan was unworkable and unfair to creditors, and debtors acted in bad faith and failed to submit a feasible plan); In re Cedar Shore Resort, Inc., 235 F. 3d at 381(finding bad faith and noting cause includes "dismissal based on the lack of any realistic possibility of confirming a plan of reorganization").

This case falls squarely within this Court's §1112(b) jurisprudence. There was more than adequate cause to find that 11 U.S.C. §1112(b) was met because the Debtors had a continuing loss to and diminution of the estate and there was an absence of reasonable likelihood of rehabilitation. 11 U.S.C. §1112(b).

"The first aspect of §1112(b)(1) requires a showing of a 'continuing loss to or diminution of the estate.' . . .This element can be satisfied by demonstrating that the debtor incurred continuing losses or maintained a negative cash flow position after the entry of the order for relief." Fort Knox Mini Warehouse, Inc., 2002 WL 1842452 at 2. The second aspect of §1112(b)(1) requires an absence of reasonable likelihood of rehabilitation. Id. at 3. In the present case, the bankruptcy court clearly articulated "cause" as the ongoing losses to the estate and the absence of a reasonable likelihood of rehabilitation when, at the February 6, 2002, hearing it identified the lack of any income from business operations coupled with continued incurrence of professional fees and expenses in negotiating a plan which was of questionable confirmability and to which the parties could not agree. Transcript, Feb. 6, 2002, at 24, ll. 1-4.

There is little dispute that by February 6, 2002, there was a continuing loss to and diminution of the estate. Transcript, February 6, 2002 at 29, ll. 18-24. The facts and records in the case, including all verified pleadings filed by the Debtors and other parties, are largely uncontested and are essentially admissions against the Debtors' interests, establishing the continuing losses to the estate. Specifically, by February 6, the total fees and expenses sought in fee applications totaled $1,385,392.25. See Doc. Nos. 71, 100, 103, 111, 160, 180, 206, 207, 209, 213, 224, 225, 236, 266, and 267. The money to pay the Creditors' Committee's lawyers and the debtors' lawyers as they attempted to agree on the plan was coming out of the estate. Transcript, February 6, 2002, at 34 ll. 1-7. Administrative expenses were accruing. Transcript, February 6, 2002, at 36, ll. 23 -24.

Moreover, not only had expenses been accruing up through February 6, 2002, but the expenses would continue to accrue the longer the Debtors remained in chapter 11. The unrebutted evidence in this case established that the Debtors had sold their assets, were not operating a business, and were reducing the Debtors' cash balance by $60,000 each month. Transcript, March 13, 2002 at 11, ll. 12-14. The evidence also established that any attempt to confirm and consummate a plan would create enormous additional expense, with no guarantee, or even likelihood, of confirmation. See Transcript, February 6, 2002 at 33 ll. 21-23; at 34 ll. 18-25; at 35 ll. 8-24; at 36 ll. 1-11; Transcript, March 13, 2002, at11 ll. 5-14; at 27 ll. 5-14. Finally, the Debtors' plan as of February 6, 2002 was "unduly complicated and thus expensive." Transcript, February 6, 2002, p. 35, ll. 7-8.

Not only were there continuing losses to and diminution of the estate, but the losses and diminution would continue indefinitely, indicating there was no reasonable expectation of rehabilitation. Whether the Debtors' business prospects were sufficient to support a finding of a reasonable likelihood of rehabilitation depends on "whether the causes of the [debtors'] continuing losses can be corrected" and "whether the debtor[s] or some other party in interest is capable of performing the necessary remediation." See 7 Colliers on Bankruptcy (15th ed. revised) ¶ 112.04[5][a][ii]. As the bankruptcy court found in this case, "rehabilitation" is not synonymous with "reorganization." Transcript, February 6, 2002 at 35, ll. 7-8. The standard for "reasonable likelihood of rehabilitation" is "not the technical one of whether the debtor can confirm a plan, but, rather, whether the debtor's business prospects justify continuance of the reorganization effort." Colliers on Bankruptcy (15th ed. revised) ¶ 112.04[5][a][ii]. In this case, the Debtors had been operating under the protection of chapter 11 since August 7, 2001, but by February 6, 2002, the Debtors' business prospects no longer "justif[ied] continuance of the reorganization effort." See id. It was no longer appropriate for the Debtors to "continue in control of their businesses under the umbrella of the reorganization court beyond the point at which reorganization no longer remains a realistic undertaking," where there was no evidence that "liquidation would proceed more expeditiously and less expensively under the control of the debtor[s]." See In re Wright Air Lines, Inc., 51 B.R. 96, 100 (Bankr. N.D. Ohio 1985). In fact, under the Debtors' preferred scenario, remaining in the chapter 11 liquidation mode would have cost at least $125,000 over just a few months. See Transcript, March 13, 2002 at 25, ll. 9-10.

The Debtors' prospects for rehabilitation were contingent upon the ability to formulate a plan within a reasonable amount of time. See 7 Colliers at ¶ 112.04[5][a][ii]; see also In re Smith, 77 B.R. 496, 501-502 (Bankr. E.D. Pa. 1987) (likelihood of rehabilitation is largely a function of how long debtor has been trying to formulate a plan without success"). In the present case, the bankruptcy court concluded the Creditors' Committee's opposition to the plan appeared to render the plan unconfirmable and that the parties' failure to agree to a plan over a long series of negotiations meant that cause existed to convert. Transcript, February 6, 2002 at 12-13, ll. 20-22; at 34, ll. 18-22.

Notwithstanding all of that, the bankruptcy court, in an abundance of caution, exercised its discretion and gave the parties five weeks (from February 6 to March 13) to negotiate a feasible, consensual and confirmable plan. Transcript, February 6, 2002 at ll. 14-25. When they failed to do so, the court converted the cases. The conversion properly applied all requirements of §1112(b) and was more than fair to the Debtors and Loop.

Woven throughout Loop's brief is its assertion that the bankruptcy court did not consider the best interests of the creditors and the estate. See, e.g., Appellant's Brief at 11, 19. Loop is correct in arguing that the bankruptcy court must analyze the best interests of creditors as part of its conversion analysis under §1112(b), but the record in this case establishes that the bankruptcy court did so.

It is settled law that once a bankruptcy court makes the threshold finding that cause exists, it then looks to the "best interests of the creditors and the estate" to determine whether conversion or dismissal is more appropriate. 11 U.S.C. § 1112(b); see Lumber Exch. Bldg. Ltd. P'ship, 968 F.2d at 650; In re Woodbrook Assoc., 19 F.3d at 316. In this case, the record not only shows that the best interests of creditors test was addressed, but that it was the controlling issue driving the bankruptcy court's decision, to wit, the reason the bankruptcy court did not convert the case on February 6, 2003 was "the request by the committee to explore [the] plan." Transcript, March 13, 2002 at 32 ll. 24-25; at 33 l. 1. The bankruptcy court first found cause to convert on February 6, 2002. When it subsequently required the Debtors and Loop to propose a consensual, confirmable plan which did not contain unnecessary complexities such as the "steering committee" and "treatment of creditors in all four cases in one class of claims," the bankruptcy court was telling the Debtors, Loop and the Creditors' Committee that they had to show how the best interests of creditors would be served if the cases were allowed to remain in chapter 11. Transcript, February 6, 2002, at 35-36, ll. 25-11. In fact, Loop specifically told the court that it wanted to make such a showing. See Transcript, February 6, 2002 at 31, l. 7. When the Debtors and Loop failed to make such a showing, the bankruptcy court predictably, summarily, and properly converted the cases to Chapter 7 because to do so was in the best interests of creditors.

Significantly, the bankruptcy court's conversion decision was supported by the creditors' representative in the bankruptcy case, the Creditors' Committee. Under §1102 the United States Trustee is authorized to create creditors' committees. 11 U.S.C. §1102. Committees have broad powers to represent their constituents. Among other things, they may consult with the debtor about the case; investigate the debtor; participate in the formulation of a plan; and request the appointment of a trustee or an examiner. 11 U.S.C. §1103(c). Here, the Creditors' Committee intensely negotiated a plan with the Debtors over a lengthy period of time. When that proved unsuccessful, the Creditors' Committee exercised another statutory power, they moved under 11 U.S.C. §1103 and §1112(b) to convert this case. Thus, this is not a case where this Court need to speculate whether conversion was in the creditors' best interests. The bankruptcy court concluded it was when the Creditors' Committee affirmatively sought conversion by formal motion.

2. The Burden of Proof Was Not Improperly Shifted to Debtor and Loop

Loop alleges the bankruptcy court was confused "over which party bore the burden of proof," and cites a number of isolated statements made by the United States Trustee as support for the court's "confusion." Appellant's Brief at 20-21. By arguing that there was an "automatic" shifting of the burden of proof, Loop improperly attempts to create a legal issue where only a fact issue exists. The record clearly shows that no such "automatic" and improper shifting took place. The record is entirely unrebutted in this case. It establishes the Debtor had sold its assets and ceased business on November 9, 2001, it had unsuccessfully attempted to negotiate the terms of a consensual plan at least from December 5, 2001, through February 6, 2002, it had incurred over a million dollars in professional fees, and all it had to show for months of negotiations was a plan that the bankruptcy court recognized as unconfirmable due to problems with, inter alia, the classification of claims. The U.S.Trustee relied upon these facts in urging conversion. Thus, by the February 6 hearing, there was an undeniable ongoing loss to and a diminution of the estate and an absence of a reasonable likelihood of rehabilitation, which the court specifically recognized as the "cause" shown by the United States Trustee. Transcript, February 6, 2002 at 36, ll. 19-20; p. 37, ll. 8-9.

At that point, the bankruptcy court could have simply converted and its decision would have been fully sustainable based on the record before it. Instead, the bankruptcy court exercised its discretion to give the debtors one last chance to effectuate a plan and remain in chapter 11. It was not burden shifting, rather it was a temporary reprieve. Notwithstanding cause, the court would have let the Debtors stay in bankruptcy if they had agreed to a consensual, confirmable plan and, in the absence of such a showing, the court would convert the case to chapter 7. Id. at 38, ll. 14-25, 37-38.

Loop asks this Court to punish the bankruptcy court for showing mercy. That would be unfair and would prevent bankruptcy courts from seeking to craft innovative solutions to difficult problems in contentious cases. The only effect of the bankruptcy court's February 6, 2002, order was to allow the Debtors and Loop an opportunity to continue in chapter 11 despite the fact that the United States Trustee's burden had been met. Indeed, Loop acknowledged the nature of the burden on it when it stated that "[t]he debtors and Loop Corporation and the committee want to show the Court exactly what they can do and how they can do it." Transcript, February 6, 2002 at 31, ll. 7-9. Given that, it is not surprising that five weeks later, on March 13, 2002, Loop acknowledged that it failed to meet that burden when it conceded to the court that there had been no negotiations regarding plan treatment. Transcript, March 13, 2002, at 21, ll. 4-7. The Creditors' Committee also acknowledged that Loop and the Debtor did not make the required showing. Transcript, March 13, 2002 at 9, ll. 1-3. Thus, rather than attempting to rebut the United States Trustee's prima facie case below, Loop essentially conceded the key facts establishing cause. Cf. In re Woodbrook, 19 F.3d 312, (7th Cir. 1994) (noting under §1112(b) that although the moving party holds the "burden of persuasion," that "does not eviscerate (the non-moving party's) obligation to produce evidence in opposition to a well-supported motion."). Once the United States Trustee met his burden, Loop had to overcome that proof, something that did not happen here. See, e.g., Loop Corp. v. United States Trustee, 290 B.R. 108, 113 (D. Minn. 2003) ("Once cause has been shown, the judge may shift the burden of proof to the debtor to demonstrate that Chapter 11 would be better than Chapter 7."); Matter of Silent Partner, Inc., 1992 WL 31255 at *3 (E.D. La. 1992), aff'd, 983 F.2d 232 (5th Cir.1993) (once the moving party meets its burden, the burden shifts).

See also, Minnesota Alpha Foundation, 122 B.R. 89 (Bankr. D. Minn. 1990), wherein the bankruptcy court specifically addressed liquidating chapter 11 cases and shifted the burden of proof, stating: "Where . . . a debtor is defending a motion under §1112(b) by arguing that it should remain in possession, the debtor must recognize that administration by Chapter 7 trustee is the preferred vehicle for liquidation under the Bankruptcy Code." Id. at 94, fn. 10. That court then went on to provide a detailed list of considerations for determining whether to allow a debtor to liquidate under chapter 11. Id.

3. The United States Trustee Did Introduce Sufficient Evidence to Meet its Burden of Proof and the Bankruptcy Court could rely on Information in the Record.

Loop takes issue with the bankruptcy court's reliance on the record in the case and claims that the United States Trustee did not present any evidence in support of the motion. Appellant's Brief at 5, 21-22. Throughout the course of three hearings, the bankruptcy court had full knowledge of what had and had not transpired in the cases thus far when it considered the arguments of the Debtors, Loop, the United States Trustee, and the Creditors' Committee. As the United States Trustee argued, evidence of cause for conversion lay in the Debtors' "own statements, [their] own disclosure statement, [and their] own affidavits and statements." Transcript, February 6, 2002 at 37 ll. 9-11.

A motion to convert or dismiss a bankruptcy case under § 1112(b) is a "contested matter" pursuant to Fed. R. Bankr. P. 9014. Within a bankruptcy case, disputes are categorized and litigated as either "adversary proceedings," or "contested matters."[10] An adversary proceeding is commenced by the filing of a complaint and is essentially a separate lawsuit within the context of a bankruptcy case, with all the attributes of a civil action. See generally Fed. R. Bankr. P. Part VII. A contested matter, on the other hand, is commenced by the filing of a motion, and is governed by far less stringent criteria than adversary proceedings. See Fed. R. Bankr. P. 9014.

Nothing requires that a movant in a contested matter before a bankruptcy court present evidence independent of the court file or independent of the evidence presented by the opposing party in order to meet its burden of proof. See, e.g., In re SGL Carbon Corp., 200 F.3d 154, 158 (3d Cir. 1999) (hearing on 1112(b) motion involved no witness testimony, evidence was entirely documentary or deposition testimony); Sullivan Central Plaza I Ltd. v. BancBoston Real Estate Capital Corp., (In re Sullivan Central Plaza I, Ltd.), 935 F.2d 723, 726 (5th Cir. 1991) (parties submitted letter briefs to court in lieu of evidentiary presentation).

As the district court in this case noted, "Appellants (Loop) cite no authority

[10] Specific enumerated matters must be brought as adversary proceedings as required by Fed. R. Bankr. P. 7001, and by default, any other actual disputes before a bankruptcy court are considered contested matters. See Fed. R. Bankr. P. 7001, 9014; Advisory Committee Note to Fed. R. Bankr. P. 9014. Although some bankruptcy rules govern both adversary proceedings and contested matters, see Fed. R. Bankr. P. 9014, the two are procedurally distinct.

for the proposition that the [United States Trustee] may not rely on evidence of the debtor's circumstances already in the record to meet its burden of proof." Loop Corp. v. United States Trustee, 290 B.R. 108, 114 (D. Minn. 2003). Loop repeats that failure in its brief to this Court.

The court record is often and appropriately used as the record in bankruptcy cases because of the unique and document-intensive nature of bankruptcy. See, e.g., In re Sunflower Racing, Inc., 226 B.R. 665 (D. Kan.1998) ("A bankruptcy judge who has presided over a case since its inception can resolve . . . issues without an additional evidentiary hearing. A full evidentiary hearing on a conversion or dismissal motion simply is unnecessary when an adequate factual record already is before the bankruptcy court.") (citing In re Tiana Queen Motel, Inc. 749 F.2d 146 (2d Cir. 1984), cert. denied, 471 United States 1138 (1985)); See also In re Mazzocone, 183 B.R. at 413; Coones v. Mutual Life Ins. Co. of N.Y., 168 B.R. 247, 258 (D. Wyo. 1994), aff'd, 56 F.3d 77 (10th Cir. 1995); Han v. Linstrom, 2002 WL 31049846 (dismissal for cause under section 1112(b) does not necessarily require a full evidentiary hearing if all relevant issues have otherwise been addressed in the course of the case) .

Many chapter 11 cases fail and typically by the time a motion to convert or dismiss is filed and heard, the court is intimately familiar with the facts and issues leading up to the motion. *See e.g., Tiana Queen Motel, Inc.,*749 F.2d 146. Although a full evidentiary hearing on a motion is not prohibited by the Bankruptcy Code, a court's decision to not require the movants to introduce evidence already existing in the court file comes nowhere close to being an abuse of discretion. Adopting Loop's arguments would result in a profound waste of judicial resources by requiring the bankruptcy courts to formally receive evidence which simply duplicates the verified pleadings which had previously been filed in the case and which created the law of the case.

4. No Per Se Rule Was Established.

Loop asserts that the bankruptcy court adopted an incorrect legal standard in finding cause to convert under §1112(b), Appellant's Brief at 10, ll. 15-17, in an attempt focus this Court's attention on legal issues, with an easier burden of proof, rather than on the facts on which the bankruptcy court based its conversion order. Specifically, Loop argues that the bankruptcy court improperly "adopted a legal standard that requires conversion unless a debtor in a Chapter 11 case is continuing to operate as [sic] economically viable operating business. Such a legal standard is tantamount to a per se rule against liquidating Chapter 11 bankruptcy cases." Appellant's Brief at 10. Loop further argues that such a per se rule would require conversion to chapter 7 in every liquidating chapter 11 cases because there will always be an ongoing loss to the estate at the point in time where everything has been liquidated so no new money is coming into the estate yet administrative expenses continue to accrue, thereby causing such losses. Appellant's Brief at 17-18.

First, even if true, that would be harmless error. See New Concept Housing v. Poindexter, 951 F.2d 932, 937 (8th Cir. 1991). The record in this case establishes cause under 11 U.S.C. §1112(b) and that is all that is necessary for this Court to affirm.

Second, Loop's claim of a per se rule is simply wrong. Indeed, if the bankruptcy court intended to create and apply such a rule, it would have ordered conversion of the cases at the first hearing on February 6, 2002, and would not have unnecessarily used its time and resources to hold two more hearings on the exact same matter. By giving Loop and the Debtors a window of opportunity from February 6, 2002, to March 13, 2002, the bankruptcy court revealed its willingness to entertain a plan which appeared confirmable and on which parties generally agreed. When the parties returned on March 13 in substantial disagreement about how the case should be handled and who should be in control of the Debtors, the bankruptcy court's decision to convert was easy because there was clearly an absence of any reasonable likelihood of rehabilitation and no ability of the Debtor to effectuate a plan due to, inter alia, the Creditors' Committee's challenge of the change in control of the Debtors. Up to that point in time, however, the bankruptcy court's willingness to be persuaded by the facts clearly establishes the absence of a per se rule.

Also, contrary to Loop's assertion, neither the bankruptcy court nor the United States Trustee asserted that a party in a chapter 11 case can not propose a liquidating plan. The record is bereft of such an argument. To the contrary, a liquidating plan is clearly contemplated by the Bankruptcy Code. See 11 U.S.C. 1123(b)(4) (a chapter 11 plan may provide for the sale of all property of the estate and the distribution of proceeds to creditors). Section 1123(b) is however subject to the requirements of §1123(a), which requires the providing of an adequate means for a plan's implementation. See §1123(a)(5). The bankruptcy court simply ruled that in this case, the attempt by Loop and the Debtors to propose a liquidating plan had depleted the estate long enough. "(I)n determining cause for dismissal the court may consider other factors as they arise and use its powers to reach appropriate results in individual cases". See In re Gonic Realty Trust, 909 F.2d 624, 626 (1st Cir. 1990); In re Koerner, 800 F.2d 1358, 1367 (5th Cir. 1986), see also Laguna Assocs. Ltd. P'ship v. Aetna Cas. & Sur. Co. (In re Laguna Assoc.

Ltd. P'ship), 30 F.3d 734, 737 (6th Cir. 1994) (§ 1112(b) determination of cause made on case-by-case basis). The bankruptcy court found on February 6, 2002, that the proposed plan was not feasible by its terms and required substantial modification before it could go forward and be confirmed and implemented. Transcript, February 6, 2002 at 34, ll. 9-10. With plan confirmability as a threshold issue, the bankruptcy court simply did not need to address minor issues such as the plan's distribution mechanisms or NOLs.

The district court also recognized the fallacy of Loop's "per se rule" argument when it stated that the court "properly applied the standard used in this Circuit and Loops' attempt to insert their preferred version of the law must be rejected." Loop v. United States Trustee, 290 B.R. at 113. The district court went on to state that "[e]ven if the court's application of these legal standards to the facts of the case implied a per se rule of cause, the court has broad discretion in determining cause and is not limited to grounds specified in §1112(b), such that the conversion may be supported on multiple bases." Id., at 8; see also, In re Usery, 123 F.3d at 1093; Cedar Shore Resort, 235 F.3d at 379.

5. There was Not an Absence of Detailed Findings of Fact

Loop argues that the bankruptcy court committed reversible error when it failed to make detailed fact findings regarding cause to convert to Chapter 7 at the hearing on March 13, 2002. Appellant's Brief, at 26. However, Loop ignores the bankruptcy court's detailed findings of fact on the record on February 6, 2003, and the incorporation of and reference to those findings by the court at the March 13, 2002, hearing. See Transcript, March 13, 2002 at 32, ll. 19-21.

Loop further asserts that the only evidence before the bankruptcy court when it ordered conversion to chapter 7 consisted of the affidavit of Leland LeBlanc and the Debtors' Liquidation Analysis, Appellant's Brief at 28. This is wrong. As is set forth above, numerous verified motions had been filed in the case which were either granted by the court or at least alleged undisputed facts. Such motions include over $1 million in fee applications and the Creditors' Committee's motion to convert which alleged improper takeover of control of the Debtor by Loop's principals.

The affidavit of Mr. LeBlanc on which Loop relies (Doc. #292) also indicated that Mr. LeBlanc and Michael McKim were debtors only remaining employees, Leon Greenblatt was appointed Chief Restructuring Officer on February 28, and the Debtor continued to incur expenses for taxes and personnel of about $40,000 per month, stop loss health insurance premiums of $5,350 per month, and space, computer and communications expenses of $15,000 per month. Id. In other words, there were ongoing losses to and a diminution of the estate and an absence of any business operations. Accordingly, specific findings of fact with the level of detail now demanded by Loop were simply not necessary.

"A trial court's factual findings are adequate if they afford a reviewing court "a clear understanding of the basis of the trial court's decision." Wegner v. Grunewaldt, 821 F.2d at 1322 (citing Lynch Corp. v. MII Liquidating Co., 717 F.2d 1184, 1187 (8th Cir.1983)); see also Stanley v. Henderson, 597 F.2d 651, 654 (8th Cir.1979). The bankruptcy court was not required to give "exhaustive reasons" for its §1112(b) decisions. See, e.g., In re Gonic Realty Trust, 909 F.2d at 627, In re Silent Partner, Inc., 1992 WL 31255, (citing In re Koerner, 800 F.2d 1358, 1368 (5th Cir. 1986)); accord, Wegner v. Grunewaldt, 821 F.2d at 1322 ("In documenting his findings, a trial judge is not required to assert the negative of each rejected argument as well as the affirmative of those he finds to be correct. The court only must formulate findings on the ultimate facts necessary to reach a decision, and a reviewing court can conclude that a necessary finding exists because it is implicit in and reinforced by other factual findings of the trial court.") (citing, Fields Eng'g & Equip., Inc. v. Cargill, Inc., 651 F.2d 589, 594 (8th Cir.1981); see also Allied Van Lines, Inc. v. Small Business Admin., 667 F.2d 751, 753 (8th Cir. 1982)).

The bankruptcy court made its findings of fact and conclusions of law as required in a contested matter. See Fed. R. Bankr. P. 7052, 9014. Moreover, this Court has held that even if a bankruptcy court does "not enunciate [its] factual findings as such," that this Court will review the "explicit determinations [upon which the court based its decision] only for clear error." Clarkson v. Cooke Sales and Serv. Co. (In re Clarkson), 767 F.2d 417, 419 (8th Cir. 1985).

6. The bankruptcy cases were not prematurely converted and creditors were not deprived of an opportunity to review a plan which included the administration of NOL's

Loop argues that the cases were prematurely converted and creditors were therefore deprived of an opportunity to review the March 13, 2002, plan which addressed the Debtors' NOLs. Appellant's Brief at 30-31. However, the bankruptcy court found cause to convert the cases on February 6, 2003, well before the March 13, 2003, plan was filed. "A chapter 11 case may be converted or dismissed at any time." See, e.g., In re Woodbrook Assocs., 19 F.3d 312, 317 (7th Cir. 1994). It is impossible for the bankruptcy court to have abused its discretion by failing to consider a Plan that was not in existence at the time it ruled.

Furthermore, creditors need not incur the added time and expense of a confirmation hearing on a plan they believe cannot be effectuated. See Hall v. Vance, 887 F.2d 1041, 1044 (10th Cir.1989). Loop makes much of the Debtors'

March 13 eve of conversion plan. However, that plan was nothing more than a ploy, trotted out at the last second in a futile effort to delay the inevitable. First, the plan was insufficient because it was clearly non-consensual. See Transcript, March 13, 2002, at 8 ll. 21-25; at 9 ll. 1-3; at 10 ll. 24-25; at 12, ll. 23-25. Second, the filing of the plan was incomplete, as there was no accompanying disclosure statement. Transcript, March 13, 2002 at 15 ll. 3-4. 11 U.S.C. §1125. Finally, as the Debtors themselves admit, the plan on its face contained issues precluding immediate confirmation. Transcript, March 13, 2002, at 4 ll. 22-25; at 5, ll. 1-5; at 16 ll. 14-21.

The March 13 Plan was based on the novel premise that potential NOLs would justify remaining under the protection of Chapter 11.[11] Loop now contends that the bankruptcy court failed to give sufficient weight to the value of the Debtors' NOLs, "if properly utilized through a confirmed plan." Appellant's Brief at 30.

However, as argued in the United States Trustee's Reply to Responses in Opposition of U.S. Trustee's Motion to Convert, Doc. #269, unnumbered p. 6, in order to utilize NOLs, the Debtors had to overcome discharge issues. More importantly, virtually every corporate debtor in a case under chapter 11 has prior year tax losses and if the existence of NOLs can be the exclusive basis for denying a motion to convert, there would never be a case where conversion under §1112(b) would be possible. Id.

Further, on January 30, 2002, when it responded to the United States Trustee's motion to convert, Loop had no idea if the NOLs had value. As stated by Loop, "[w]hile the parties are not yet clear on the extent to which the NOL can be used, nor the value that could be realized therefrom, it would not be in the best interests of the creditors or the equity holders to lose that potential value until it has been fully and completely explored." Response of Loop Corp to Motion to Dismiss or Convert, Doc. # 260 at p. 3, ¶8. Loop apparently continued that "exploration" through March 13, 2002, when, at the last minute before the final hearing on conversion, it threw into the record the March 13, 2002, plan.

By March 13, it was clear that the Creditors' Committee would not support any plan so long as Leon Greenblatt or his companies remained in control of the Debtors. And Mr. Greenblatt was not budging either. The bankruptcy court had clearly articulated the parameters under which it would allow the chapter 11 cases to proceed and those parameters were clearly not met by the unilateral filing of a new plan by the Debtors while under the newly acquired control of Mr. Greenblatt.

Consequently, it was unnecessary for the bankruptcy court to delve into the details of the March 13 Plan since more important threshold issues, such as the consensus of Creditors' Committee had not been met.

Finally, Loop also ignores the fact that in order to reap the benefits of the NOLs under the March 13, 2002 plan, new and complex transactions, and the occurrence of a number of contingent events were required. Transcript, March 13, 2002 at 15 ll. 14-17. In essence, Loop asked the bankruptcy court for yet another chance to remain in chapter 11 while ignoring the additional expense required to litigate confirmation issues and promising a pot of gold for the estate at the end of the process. See Transcript, March 13, 2002 at 17 ll. 20-25; at 18 ll. 1-4; at 18 ll. 21-25; at 19 ll. 1-3; at 24 ll. 8-13 (creditors must decide whether "they want less money now or they want to take an opportunity to try to get more money later"). Loop is now asking this Court to accept that the bankruptcy court, the district court, the United States Trustee and the Creditors' Committee all wrongly disregarded what Loop alleged to be a $10 to $20 million asset that was available to creditors and simply threw that asset away by converting the bankruptcy cases. Transcript, March 13, 2002, p. 16 ll. 1-7.

The bankruptcy court properly determined that the potential existence and value of the NOLs was not enough to outweigh the fact that the Debtor was in the midst of questionable management changes which were opposed by the Creditors' Committee, the Debtor was depleting its liquidated assets while trying to negotiate a plan, and there was no substantial reason not to disburse the money to creditors rather than allow the Debtors and Loop to spend time and money trying to force an agreement to an esoteric plan. Loop's NOL argument is nothing more than a pie-in-the-sky, eleventh hour attempt to avoid conversion of the case.

Clearly, the bankruptcy court recognized the NOL issue as too little, too late and it was not clearly erroneous when it gave Loop's NOL argument minimal weight in determining that the cases should be converted to chapter 7.

H. CONCLUSION

For these reasons, the United States Trustee asks this Court to affirm the decision of the district court sustaining the bankruptcy court's decision converting these cases to chapter 7.

STATEMENT OF THE ISSUE PRESENTED FOR REVIEW

Bankruptcy courts have discretion under section 707(b) of the Bankruptcy Code, 11 U.S.C. § 707(b), to dismiss chapter 7 cases for substantial abuse. It is a substantial abuse to grant chapter 7 relief to debtors who can repay a substantial portion of their debts. In re Price, 353 F.3d 1135 (9th Cir. 2004); In re Kelly, 841 F.2d 908, 914-15 (9th Cir. 1988). Did the court below abuse its discretion in dismissing 33 year old Lisa Hebbring's chapter 7 case when she could repay 75% of her debts simply by deferring voluntary retirement contributions and savings bond investments for three years?

STATEMENT OF THE CASE

On June 5, 2003, Ms. Lisa R. Hebbring sought relief under the debt liquidation provisions of chapter 7 of the Bankruptcy Code. See 11 U.S.C. § 701, et seq. (chapter 7 liquidation provisions) (Appellant's Excerpt of Record Exhibit A, page 1, hereinafter "E.R. _ , p. _.). On September 3, 2003 the United States Trustee[1] filed a motion to dismiss Ms. Hebbring's

B, pp. 32-52.). The United States Trustee contended Ms. Hebbring could repay

"The United States Trustee is the 'watchdog' of the bankruptcy system * * * charged with preventing fraud and abuse and with 'fill[ing] the vacuum' caused by possible creditor inactivity." In re Castillo, 297 F.3d 940, 950 (9th Cir. 2002); In re Donovan Corp., 215 F.3d 929, 930 (9th Cir. 2000) ("The United States trustee may * * * intervene and appear at any level of the proceedings from the bankruptcy court on, * * * as either a party or an amicus.") (internal quotation marks omitted). Section 707(b) expressly authorizes United States Trustees to seek dismissal of chapter 7 cases for substantial abuse.

[2] Section 707(b) provides:

> (b) After notice and a hearing, the court, on its own motion or on a motion by the United States Trustee, but not at the request or suggestion of any party in interest, may dismiss a case filed by an individual debtor under this chapter whose debts are primarily consumer debts if it finds that the granting of relief would be a substantial abuse of the provisions of this chapter. There shall be a presumption in favor of granting the relief requested by the debtor. In making a determination whether to dismiss a case under this section, the court may not take into consideration whether a debtor has made, or continues to make, charitable contributions (that meet the definition of "charitable contribution" under section 548(d)(3) to any qualified religious or charitable entity or organization (as that term is defined in section 548(d)(4)).

approximately 75% of her unsecured debts in three years through a chapter 13 repayment plan if she deferred her discretionary personal saving for three years. See 11 U.S.C. § 1301, et seq., (provisions governing repayment of debts under chapter 13 of the Bankruptcy Code).

By order entered October 10, 2003 the United States Bankruptcy Court for the District of Nevada dismissed Ms. Hebbring's chapter 7 case under 11 U.S.C. 707(b). The court concluded that Ms. Hebbring should not be saving for her future at the expense of her creditors (E.R. D, p. 81), that she could pay a meaningful sum to her creditors (E.R. D, p. 82), and that it would be unfair for her to put her future security ahead of her current creditors. (E.R. D, pp. 82-83.) Ms. Hebbring timely appealed that order. By order entered July 8, 2004 the United States District Court for the District of Nevada affirmed the bankruptcy court's dismissal. (E.R. H, p. 93, ll. 9-13.) This appeal followed. (E.R. I.)

STATEMENT OF FACTS

On June 5, 2003, Ms. Hebbring filed a petition under the debt liquidation provisions of chapter 7 of the Bankruptcy Code. See 11 U.S.C. § 701, et seq. (chapter 7 liquidation provisions) (Appellant's Excerpt of Record Exhibit A, page 1, hereinafter "E.R. _ , p. _.) Ms. Hebbring was 33 years old. (E.R. C, p.55.)

Ms. Hebbring works as an SBC customer service representative. She listed her gross monthly salary as $4,116.67. (E.R. A, p. 16.)

Ms. Hebbring signed her bankruptcy petition and schedules under penalty of perjury. (E.R. A, pp. 2, 19.) Her schedules revealed she owned a house and a car. Her house was worth $160,000 and was subject to secured mortgage debt of $154,102.54. (E.R. A, p. 5.) Ms. Hebbring proposed to keep her house by reaffirming her secured mortgage debt. (E.R. A, p. 27.) See 11 U.S.C. 524(c) (governing reaffirmation agreements). She also owned a 2001 Volkswagen Beetle automobile, which was subject to $18,839.33 in secured debt (E.R. A, p.10). Ms. Hebbring's schedules reflected that she was making monthly car payments of $425.00, and that she would retain the car by continuing to make those secured debt payments. (E.R. A, p.27.)

In addition to her secured debt, Ms. Hebbring identified two unsecured creditors, Capital One Visa, whom she owed $7,485.00, and Target Visa, whom she owed $3,639.15. This unsecured debt aggregated $11,124.15. (E.R. A, p. 13.) Ms. Hebbring listed no other debts.

On September 3, 2003 the United States Trustee filed a motion to dismiss Ms. Hebbring's case under 11 U.S.C. § 707(b). The United States Trustee contended it would constitute a substantial abuse for Ms. Hebbring to discharge her unsecured debts in chapter 7 when her discretionary savings enabled her to make substantial payments to her unsecured creditors (E.R. B, pp. 32-52.). The United States Trustee contended Ms. Hebbring could repay approximately 75% of her unsecured debts in three years through a chapter 13 repayment plan if she deferred her discretionary personal saving for three years. Sec 11 U.S.C. § 1301, et seq., (provisions governing repayment of debts under chapter 13 of the Bankruptcy Code).

In support of his motion, the United States Trustee relied upon the Declaration of Alice Gowans and the exhibits attached to Ms. Gowans' declaration. Ms. Gowans is a paralegal specialist in the United States Trustee's Reno office. Her declaration revealed that Ms. Hebbring had given the United States Trustee various documents, including payroll statements, tax returns and W-2 statements. Based on the information Ms. Hebbring provided, Ms. Gowans calculated that the debtor was making voluntary monthly payroll deductions of $81.25 for savings bonds and $232.05 for voluntary 401(k) contributions. (E.R. B, pp. 39-44.) If Ms. Hebbring forestalled this voluntary saving for three years, she could repay approximately 75% of her unsecured debt through a chapter 13 repayment plan.

On September 30, 2003 Ms. Hebbring filed an opposition to the United States Trustee's motion to dismiss.[3] (E.R. C, pp. 53-74.) Her opposition did not dispute that Ms. Hebbring was voluntarily setting aside monthly personal savings through her savings bond and 401(k) related withholdings but argued it was not a substantial abuse to save for future personal use instead of repaying her debts. (E.R. C, pp. 53-74). Ms. Hebbring did not submit any declaration or affidavit in support of her opposition. Ms. Hebbring's opposition did not identify any purported material fact that she contended was in dispute. Ms. Hebbring's opposition did not suggest that an evidentiary hearing was necessary to resolve any material disputed fact. Nor did her opposition request such an evidentiary hearing or identify witnesses or other evidence that she would present if such a hearing were conducted.

The bankruptcy court heard the United States Trustee's motion on October 7, 2003. Ms. Hebbring was represented by counsel. Ms.

[3] Ms. Hebbring disclosed in the opposition that she had recently received a raise from $22.3125 per hour to $23.4250 per hour, increasing her yearly income to $48,842.40.

Hebbring's counsel did not seek to call witnesses or introduce evidence. He did not ask to cross examine Ms. Gowans. Nor did he dispute the validity or the accuracy of the statements Ms. Hebbring made in her petition and schedules under penalty of perjury, or in the other information she subsequently provided to the United States Trustee. The debtor neither took the stand nor asked that the hearing be continued to a later date. (E.R. D, pp. 75-84.)

Instead, Ms. Hebbring sought to convince the court through argument that it was "reasonable" for her to set aside 7% of her income as discretionary savings even though those funds otherwise could be used to repay 75% of her debts to her general unsecured creditors within three years. (E.R. D, p. 80, ll. 9-10, 13-16.)

Based upon the United States Trustee's motion, the Gowans Declaration, the summary exhibit and related documents attached to the Gowans Declaration, the opposition, and the argument of counsel, the bankruptcy court dismissed the debtor's case under section 707(b). The court found the debtor had an ability to repay a substantial portion of her debts and that it was a substantial abuse for this 33-year-old to set aside voluntary savings at the expense of her creditors. (E.R. D, pp. 81-83.) The court found the debtor's relative youth to be a significant factor, noting "[a]nd she's not older. She's not an older person. She's a young person. She's thirty-three years old . . . I have consistently held that putting away money in 401's is inconsistent with what you're trying to do; you're [sic] trying to pay their creditors. And at the same time you're saving, taking away from the creditors . . . I would find that she has disposable income that she's otherwise trying to save through different plans." (E.R. D, p. 81, ll. 10-18; p. 82, ll. 2-4.)

The bankruptcy court also found that because the debtor had a small amount of unsecured debt, the disposable income available for the savings bond investments and voluntary retirement contributions was sufficient for the debtor to make a meaningful repayment of her unsecured debt. The court found it significant that Ms. Hebbring "doesn't owe a lot . . . she owes about eleven thousand dollars . . . You know it wouldn't be meaningful if she owed fifty thousand dollars. But she doesn't owe that much . . . She only owes a small amount of money." (E.R. D, p. 80, ll. 23-24; p. 81, ll. 1-8.)

The court therefore concluded that it would be an abuse of the chapter 7 provisions for the 33-year-old debtor to discharge her unsecured debt and pay nothing to creditors, while making voluntary investments in savings bonds and her retirement account. "...I think it would be an abuse of chapter 7 for her to be able to discharge all these debts and not pay something to these creditors, . . . " (E.R. D, p. 82, ll. 9-11.)

On October 17, 2003 the debtor timely appealed the dismissal order (E.R. F, pp. 85-87.). By order entered July 8, 2004, the United States District Court for the District of Nevada affirmed the bankruptcy court's dismissal order. (E.R. H, pp. 91-95.) The district court, applying an abuse of discretion standard, determined the bankruptcy court did not err in concluding the debtor could make substantial payments to her creditors by foregoing voluntary savings payments for three years. (E.R. H, p. 93, ll. 7-10.) The district court held that the bankruptcy court was not required to hold an evidentiary hearing because there were no material facts in dispute and that the bankruptcy court based its findings and judgment solely on the undisputed information that the debtor had provided. (E.R. H, p. 93, ll. 12-22.) Further, the court determined the United States Trustee met his burden of proof by demonstrating that the debtor had the ability to pay her debts based upon the uncontested record before the bankruptcy court, (E.R. H, pg. 94, ll. 5-9.), concluding "[t]he bankruptcy court's order is supported by the undisputed evidence." (E.R. H, pg. 94, ln. 9-10.) Finally the district court concluded it was not an abuse of discretion for the bankruptcy court to conclude on the figures provided by the debtor that she could fund a chapter 13 plan. (E.R. H, pg. 94, ln. 19-23.)

On July 30, 2004, Ms. Hebbring timely filed a notice of appeal to this Court from the district court's order affirming dismissal. (E.R. I.)

STANDARD OF REVIEW

This Court reviews bankruptcy court orders dismissing chapter 7 cases under 11 U.S.C. § 707(b) for abuse of discretion. In re Price, 353 F.3d 1135, 1138 (9th Cir. 2004). Under that standard, findings of fact are reviewed for clear error and questions of law are reviewed de novo. Id. A trial court's exercise of its discretion is not disturbed unless there is "a definite and firm conviction that the court below committed a clear error of judgment." In re Castillo, 297 F.3d 940, 945 (9th Cir. 2002).

SUMMARY OF ARGUMENT

The bankruptcy court did not abuse its discretion in dismissing Ms. Hebbring's chapter 7 case under section 707(b). Bankruptcy courts possess discretion to dismiss chapter 7 cases for substantial abuse when a debtor has an ability to repay a substantial portion of his or her debts. See, e.g., In re

Price, 353 F.3d 1135, 1140 (9th Cir. 2004); In re Kelly, 841 F.2d 908, 914-15 (9th Cir. 1988). The undisputed record in this case established that Ms. Hebbring, a fully-employed 33-year-old, could repay 75% of her debts merely by foregoing voluntary personal savings for three years. The bankruptcy court did not abuse the broad discretion it possesses under Price and Kelly in dismissing this case based on those undisputed facts.

The bankruptcy court acted appropriately in dismissing Ms. Hebbring's case without conducting an evidentiary hearing. Ms. Hebbring never requested such a hearing, and none was required under the bankruptcy rules. Bankruptcy Rule 1017(f)(1) provides that Bankruptcy Rule 9014 governs proceedings to dismiss bankruptcy cases. Fed. R. Bankr. P. 1017(f)(1). Rule 9014(d) requires evidentiary hearings only when there are "disputed material factual issues." Fed. R. Bankr. P. 9014(d). Here there were none. Dismissal was premised on statements Ms. Hebbring made in her petition and schedules under penalty of perjury, and upon documents she provided the United States Trustee, documents whose accuracy she did not contest.

ARGUMENT

A. The Bankruptcy Court Did Not Abuse Its Discretion In Dismissing Ms. Hebbring's Chapter 7 Bankruptcy Case.

Section 707(b) of the Bankruptcy Code gives a court broad discretion to dismiss bankruptcy cases when two factors are present. First there must be a debtor "whose debts are primarily consumer debts."[4] Ms. Hebbring does not dispute her debts are primarily consumer. Second, a court must find that the "granting of relief would be a substantial abuse of the provisions of the chapter." 11 U.S.C. § 707(b).

The primary factor to consider in determining whether the granting of relief constitutes substantial abuse, is the debtor's ability to pay their unsecured debts. A debtor's ability to repay is determined by considering whether, after deducting reasonably necessary expenses from their income, there is sufficient disposable income to make a significant repayment of their unsecured debt . See In re Price, 353 F.3d 1135, 1140 (9th Cir. 2004)

[4] "Consumer debt", as defined by 11 U.S.C. § 101(8), is "debt incurred by an individual primarily for a personal, family or household purpose." "Debt," in turn is defined as "liability on a claim." 11 U.S.C. § 101(12). "Claim" is defined as "right to payment, whether or not such right is reduced to judgment, liquidated, unliquidated, fixed, contingent, matured, unmatured, disputed, undisputed, legal, equitable, secured or unsecured;". 11 U.S.C. § 101(5)(A).

(a "debtor's ability to pay his debts standing alone, justif[ies] a section 707(b) dismissal'."); In re Kelly, 841 F.2d 908, 914-15 (9th Cir. 1988) (an ability to repay debts, standing alone, justifies dismissal for substantial abuse.). See also, In re Gomes, 220 B.R. 84 (9th Cir. BAP 1998) (disposable income sufficient to repay 43% of unsecured debt is basis for a finding of substantial abuse). An ability to repay is measured by evaluating how much disposable income a debtor has available to could repay creditors in a three-year chapter 13 plan. 11 U.S.C. § 1325(b)(1)(B). See, e.g., In re Behlke, 358 F.3d 429, 436 (6th Cir. 2004). Disposable income is that which is not reasonably necessary to be expended for the maintenance or support of the debtor or a dependent of the debtor. 11 U.S.C. § 1325(b)(2)(A).

In this case, the bankruptcy court properly exercised its discretion and determined that Ms. Hebbring could repay a substantial portion of her debts merely by dedicating her current savings bond investment and voluntary retirement contribution to the payment of unsecured creditors for three years. (E.R. D, p. 82, ll. 2-16.) The bankruptcy court's ruling clearly came within the ambit of the ability to pay test set forth in Kelly and recently reaffirmed in Price.

Further, as explained in Price, the question of what constitutes substantial abuse falls within the bankruptcy court's discretion. Price, 353 F.3d at 1139. Here, after considering any mitigating factors the debtor had opportunity to present, the bankruptcy court determined Ms. Hebbring's ability to repay constituted substantial abuse. As the district court correctly concluded, Ms. "Hebbring has the ability to fund a Chapter 13 plan and the Bankruptcy Court did not abuse its discretion in dismissing Hebbring's petition." (E.R. H, p. 94, ll. 2-4.)

B. Voluntary Payroll Deduction for Savings Are Not Reasonably Necessary Expenses and Should Therefore be Included in Disposable Income.

Whether a debtor's voluntary contribution to a retirement plan is a reasonably necessary expense and therefore included as disposable income in the ability to pay test is an issue of first impression for this Court. However, the recent Sixth Circuit case, In re Behlke 358 F.3d 429 (6th Cir. 2004), is persuasive. In Behlke, the court examined whether voluntary 401(k) contributions should be included as disposable income or as reasonably necessary expenses in determining a debtor's ability to pay. The court held that while it was unwilling to find per se that such contributions are not reasonably necessary expenses for a debtor or their dependents, the court did find that these were not reasonably necessary expenses with respect to the debtors in Behlke. While saving for one's retirement "may represent prudent financial planning," such sums are not necessary or reasonable for the support of the debtor in bankruptcy." Behlke at 435, citing In re Harshbarger, 66 F.3d 775, 777 (6th Cir. 1995).

Other courts have also considered whether voluntary contributions to pension plans, repayment of pension loans, and income derived from pension plans may be included to determine a debtor's ability to pay. Most bankruptcy courts have rejected a deduction for voluntary contributions to 401(k) plans as being unnecessary and unreasonable for a debtor who is seeking bankruptcy relief. See, e.g., In re May, 261 B.R. 770 (Bankr. M.D. Fla. 2001); In re Regan, 269 B.R. 693 (Bankr. W.D. Mo. 2001); In re Fulton, 211 B.R. 247 (Bankr. S.D. Ohio 1997). In fact, a majority of bankruptcy courts have held that as a matter of law, voluntary retirement contributions must be included in disposable income. In re Mendoza, 274 B.R. 522, 524 (Bankr. D. Ariz. 2002); In re Heffernan, 242 B.R. 812, 818 (Bankr. D. Conn. 1999) (debtor's voluntary payment into a pension, savings, or investment-type plan is not an expenditure reasonably necessary for maintenance and support); In re Carlton, 211 B.R. 468 (Bankr.

W.D.N.Y. 1997) (substantial abuse indicated where the debtor was voluntarily making $332.05 per month contributions to a 401(k) plan, which could be discontinued so that the money could be paid to creditors instead).

The bankruptcy court in this case did not reach the issue whether voluntary retirement contribution are per se not a reasonably necessary expense in the context of a Section 707(b) motion to dismiss. Rather, it ruled that Ms. Hebbring's youth - she is 33, and her pre-petition retirement savings balance, which is exempt from her creditors claims, established that three years of post-petition voluntary retirement contributions were not reasonably necessary for this debtor at this time. Ms. Hebbring relies almost exclusively upon a single contrary case, In re Mills, 246 B.R. 395 (Bankr. S.D. Cal. 2000), to contest this court's exercise of judgment in this case. However, this decision is neither binding nor persuasive authority and is easily distinguished from the facts of this case.

In Mills, the court examined a Section 707(b) dismissal motion filed against a 56-year-old debtor with disposable income of at least $371. The United States Trustee asserted in that case that a 10% monthly voluntary 401(k) contribution of $302 and a monthly repayment of a 401(k) loan of $146 were not reasonably necessary expenses. The Mills court declined to follow the bankruptcy courts that have held that there is a per se rule against voluntary 401(k) withholdings. Instead, the Mills court ruled that it should be examined on a case by case basis. In Mills, the bankruptcy court ruled that the retirement contribution was a reasonably necessary expense for the support of a 56-year-old debtor with only $9,000 in retirement savings. Moreover, the court found that the debtor was not accumulating his retirement to the detriment of creditors. Id. at 402. Regarding the 401(k) loan repayment in Mills, however, because the debtor voluntarily borrowed $7,600 from his plan and gave half of that amount away, the loan repayment amount was deemed not reasonably necessary for his support or maintenance and was included as disposable income in the ability to pay analysis.

The Mills decision is the minority view and at least three other bankruptcy courts in the Ninth Circuit have issued decisions in which they declined to follow Mills. These later bankruptcy court decisions followed the majority view and held that voluntary contributions to a retirement plan, while desirable from the debtor's standpoint, is not an expenditure which is reasonably necessary for his maintenance and support. See In re Merrill, 255 B.R. 320 (Bankr. D. Ore. 2000) ("The Debtor is not allowed to acquire financial security for the future at the expense of his unsecured creditors"); See also In re Mendoza, 274 B.R. 522, 524 (Bankr. D. Ariz. 2002) (Contribution to retirement plan must be included as Chapter 13 disposable income. Mandatory retirement contributions are not reasonably necessary for debtor's support); In re Estes, 254 B.R. 261 (Bankr. D. Idaho, 2000) (Voluntary repayment of retirement loan must be included as disposable income under Section 1325(b)(1)(B) and such sums are not reasonably necessary for debtor's support).

This Court need not address this per se issue, because even Mills recognizes that courts possess discretion to determine that savings are not reasonable in a particular case. That is what the court below found and that finding was not clearly erroneous.

In addition, there are significant differences between the facts of Mills and those of this case. Ms. Hebbring is 33 years old, a full 23 years further from retirement than was the debtor in Mills. Ms. Hebbring already has close to $7,000 in her exempt retirement account, which is the same approximate balance amount as was held by the debtor in Mills who was much closer to retirement. Ms. Hebbring owns and is current on her home and car loans. She has only two creditors, both of whom can receive a significant distribution if the voluntary savings and retirement contributions are deferred for three years to fund a chapter 13 plan. Ms. Hebbring can repay 75% of her debts in a three-year chapter 13 plan, and 100% in a five-year plan. See 11 U.S.C. § 1322(d) (chapter 13 plans are for three years unless the court determines it is appropriate for payments to be made over five years). Because Ms. Hebbring's estate had no assets to liquidate, this is far better than what the debtor's unsecured creditors would have received if the debtor had been allowed to discharge all her unsecured debt in a chapter 7 case without having to devote any of her future income to at least partially satisfy her obligations to them.

Further, Ms. Hebbring remains free to seek chapter 13 relief notwithstanding the order entered below, and she could satisfy her debts through a chapter 13 repayment plan. See 11 U.S.C. §§ 1321 through 1330 (chapter 13 plans). If Ms. Hebbring does so, she will merely forego retirement payments for a period of three to five years. See 11 U.S.C. § 1322(d) (prescribing time limits for chapter 13 plans). After that, she will emerge from bankruptcy at a young age - mid to late 30s - with between 25 and 30 additional years of employment to continue amassing retirement funds. Although she does not want to pay her creditors, preferring instead to accumulate her retirement, the bankruptcy court engaged in no abuse of discretion by following the weight of authority in exercising jurisdiction under section 707(b) and dismissing the case.

C. The Court's Ruling is Supported by the Record and the Court did not Err in Dismissing this Case Without Conducting an Evidentiary Hearing.

The bankruptcy court had an ample factual basis upon which to make its ruling. First, the bankruptcy court had the debtor's petition, schedules and statement of financial affairs - each signed under penalty of perjury. These established her income and expenditures, including her income deductions for voluntary savings bond investments and retirement contributions. Their veracity was at issue in the case and Ms. Hebbring did not object to the bankruptcy court's consideration of them. Moreover, the bankruptcy court had the Gowans Declaration including the supporting information attached to the Gowans Declaration.

The debtor also cites in her brief to the decision of In re Harris, 279 B.R. 254 (9th Cir. BAP 2002). This bankruptcy appellate panel decision is not binding on this Court, and even if it were, it does not compel a different result. In Harris the United States Trustee relied on the debtor's schedules and the Internal Revenue Service's Financial Collection Standards ("the IRS standards") to dispute a material fact - the reasonableness of certain of the Harris debtors' expenses. The Harris court held that the subjective judgment of the bankruptcy judge regarding reasonableness of the debtors' budgeted expenditure amounts, may not be used and that the court must base unreasonable expense amount findings on some objective criteria. Further, the Harris court questioned the evidentiary value of the IRS standards because it found that a proper foundation had not been laid for the evidentiary admission of those standards.

Unlike Harris, there were no disputed issue of material of fact in Ms. Hebbring's case, and the reasonableness of any specific expense amount was not at issue. Unlike Harris, the United States Trustee did not question whether the amount of any of the debtor's expenses were reasonable so there was no material dispute on that point. Rather, the United States Trustee properly contended that it was not reasonably necessary for this 33-year-old; fully-employed debtor to invest in savings bonds and contribute to her retirement account, when if redirected to a chapter 13 plan, these funds would repay 75% of her $11,000+ in unsecured debt.

To the extent Ms. Hebbring suggests that section 707(b) motions require an evidentiary hearing, she misstates the law. Section 707(b) and Bankruptcy Rule 1017(e) provide that dismissals must be brought by "motion." 11 U.S.C. § 707(b); Fed. R. Bankr. P. 1017(e). Bankruptcy Rule 1017(f)(1) specifies that dismissal motions be filed as motions under Rule 9014.[5] Fed. R. Bankr. P. 1017(f)(1). Bankruptcy Rule 9013 governs motions. Fed. R. Bankr. P. 9013. It, and Rule 9014, provide that motions trigger contested matters. Rule 9014(d) requires testimony of witnesses in contested matters only to decide disputed matters.[6] It is only for those disputed matters that evidentiary testimony must be taken in the same way that it is taken in adversary proceedings, which are governed by Fed. R. Bankr. P. 7001, et seq.[7] [5] Different procedures govern matters brought under 11 U.S.C. 706(a), 1112(a), 1208(a) and (b), and 1307(a) and (b), but this proceeding was brought under section 707(b) to which Rule 1017(f)(1) applies.

[6] Rule 9014(d) was added to the bankruptcy rules in 2002. No circuit court has had cause to interpret Rule 9014(d). The 2002 Advisory Notes of the Bankruptcy Rules Committee explain that subsection (d) "clarif[ies] that if [a] motion cannot be decided without resolving a disputed material issue of fact, an evidentiary hearing must be held at which testimony of witnesses is taken in the same manner as testimony is taken in an adversary proceeding or at a trial in a district court civil case." Reprinted in 2004 Collier Pamphlet Edition, Bankruptcy Rules (Lexis Nexis 2004), p. 684). The note is consistent with the plain language of the rule - both require hearings on in cases where there are disputed material facts.

[7] An adversary proceeding is commenced by the filing of a complaint and is essentially a separate lawsuit within the context of a bankruptcy case, with Rule 9014(d) is significant for two reasons. First, it requires only that disputed matters be the subject of witness testimony. Second, it provides no mandated procedures for relying upon documents. In order to meet its burden of proof, nothing requires a movant in a contested matter before a bankruptcy court to present evidence independent of the court file or independent of the material presented by the opposing party. See, e.g., In re SGL Carbon Corp., 200 F.3d 154, 158 (3d Cir. 1999) (hearing on 1112(b) contested matter motion involved no witness testimony, evidence was entirely documentary or deposition testimony); Sullivan Central Plaza I Ltd. v. BancBoston Real Estate Capital Corp., (In re Sullivan Central Plaza I, Ltd.), 935 F.2d 723, 726 (5th Cir. 1991) (parties submitted letter briefs to court in lieu of evidentiary presentation).

Here, there were no disputed material facts. To the contrary, all the facts came from the Debtor's sworn petition, schedules and statement, or from documents produced to the U.S. Trustee by the Debtor.

In addition, the debtor never sought an evidentiary hearing. Instead, all the attributes of a civil action. See generally Fed. R. Bankr. P. Part VII. A contested matter, on the other hand, is commenced by the filing of a motion, and is governed by far less stringent criteria than adversary proceedings. See Fed. R. Bankr. P. 9014.

she argued that the undisputed facts did not justify dismissal for substantial abuse because it was reasonable for her to save for retirement. (E.R. D, p.80.)

Given the undisputed record, the bankruptcy court did not need to conduct an evidentiary hearing. Nor did it err in issuing oral findings. Under Rule 9014(c), contested matters instituted by motion are governed by some of the rules that apply to adversary proceedings instituted by complaint, including Bankruptcy Rule 7052. See Fed. R. Bankr. P. 9014(c) ("Unless the court directs otherwise, the following rules shall apply . . . 7052 . . . "). Rule 7052, dealing with findings, provides that "Rule 52 F.R.Civ.P. applies." Fed. R. Bankr. P. 7052. In turn, Civil Procedure Rule 52(a) provides that "[i]t will be sufficient if the findings of fact and conclusions of law are stated orally and recorded in open court." Fed. R. Civ. P. 52(a). Here, the bankruptcy court entered appropriate findings in conformity with the Bankruptcy Rules. Nothing in the procedures it employed constituted reversible error.

D. The U.S. Trustee Carried His Burden of Proof.

The debtor suggests incorrectly that the United States Trustee failed to meet its burden of proof. (Appellant's Brief, p. 5.) Here, the United States Trustee, relying upon documents provided by the debtor and upon statements the debtor made under penalty of perjury established the debtor had the ability to make substantial payments. That satisfied Price and Kelly, and the bankruptcy court did not err in finding substantial abuse and an ability to repay. As the district court noted in affirming the bankruptcy court's dismissal, "[t]he Bankruptcy Court used [Ms.] Hebbring's schedule that showed she had the ability to pay her debts using funds from her current contributions to the 401(k) plan and savings bonds. The U.S. Trustee relied on uncontested evidence provided by Hebbring herself. The bankruptcy court's order is supported by the undisputed evidence." (E.R. H, p. 94, ll. 5-10.) There is no error in any of that.[8]

E. The Debtor Can Fund a Chapter 13 Plan.

Finally, the debtor's argument that she cannot fund a chapter 13 plan is not supported by any admissible evidence before the bankruptcy court. (Appellant's Brief pp. 5-7.) The debtor did not file any amended Schedules

---

[8] The debtor notes correctly that section 707(b) contains a presumption in favor of the debtor. 11 U.S.C. 707(b). The United States Trustee overcame that presumption and satisfied Price and Kelly by establishing that the debtor had the ability to repay a substantial portion of her debts See In re Mastromarino, 197 B.R. 171, 177 (Bankr. D. Maine 1996) (noting if U.S. Trustee introduces evidence of ability to pay the presumption vanishes.)

I or J prior to the hearing or testify to any supposed increased expenses. Furthermore, the argument fails on its merits. The $81.25 savings bond deduction is made after taxes. The marginal tax rate on yearly income over $29,050 is 25% such that the pre-tax 401(k) deduction of $232.05 is about $175 after being taxed. Therefore the debtor would have $256 to fund a plan. Over 36 months the Debtor could pay $9,225, less trustee fees of 10%, or $8302, on $11,124.15 of unsecured debt. A 75% payout plan.

As the District Court determined:

> It was not an abuse of discretion for the bankruptcy court to conclude that Hebbring would have approximately $256 per month to fund a plan which over 36 months would represent a 70-75 percent payout plan.

(E.R. H, p. 94, ll. 20-23.)

In addition the debtor pre- and post-petition lives and pays her expenses without the use of the retirement funds. By the debtor's own schedules (E.R. A, pp. 16-19) the funds are not necessary for her day to day living expenses. If she can subsist without those monies today, it is misleading to now contend that those monies should be used to pay everyday expenses and not her creditors.

CONCLUSION

For these reasons, the United States Trustee respectfully asks this Court to affirm the orders entered below.

BRIEF OF APPELLANT, THE UNITED STATES TRUSTEE

I. BASIS OF APPELLATE JURISDICTION

This Court has jurisdiction over this appeal under 28 U.S.C. § 158(a) ("The district courts of the United States shall have jurisdiction to hear appeals from (1) final judgments, orders, decrees . . . of bankruptcy judges"). The memorandum decision (the "Memorandum Decision") dated April 4, 2000 and the order (the "Retention Order") dated April 10, 2000 are final orders of the bankruptcy court. See In re Palm Coast, Matanza Shores Ltd. Partnership, 101 F.3d 253, 256 (2d Cir. 1996) (retention "'[o]rders in bankruptcy cases may be immediately appealed if they finally dispose of discrete disputes within the larger case'") (quoting In re Johns-Manville Corp., 920 F.2d 121, 126 (2d Cir. 1990)).

II. STATEMENT OF THE ISSUES PRESENTED AND STANDARDS OF APPELLATE REVIEW

The issues on appeal are:

(i) Whether the Bankruptcy Court erred in finding that the Debtor should indemnify Newmark Retail Financial Advisors LLC from and against any losses, claims, damages, expenses and liabilities related to, arising out of, or in connection with the Debtor's engagement of Newmark as its business and restructuring advisor except for "any losses, claims, damages or liabilities (or expenses related thereto) that are finally judicially determined by a court of competent jurisdiction to have primarily resulted from the breach of trust, bad faith, self dealing, breach of fiduciary duties (other than ordinary negligence), gross negligence or willful or reckless misconduct of" Newmark; and

(ii) Whether the Bankruptcy Court erred in finding that the Debtor met its burden that the terms of Newmark's employment are reasonable and "in the best interests of the Debtor, its estate and creditors."

The issues raised by this appeal involve questions of law which are subject to de novo review and questions of fact which are subject to a clearly erroneous standard by the District Court. In re Ionosphere Clubs, Inc., 922 F.2d 984, 988-89 (2d Cir.), cert. denied, 502 U.S. 808 (1991).

III. STATEMENT OF THE CASE

On March 9, 2000, joan and david helpern incorporated (the "Debtor") filed a voluntary petition (the "Petition") under chapter 11 of the Bankruptcy Code. The Petition reveals that the Debtor's assets total $34.8 million and its liabilities total $33.1 million, and that the Debtor operates 84 retail boutiques, shops-in-shops located in major department stores, and outlets in the United States and abroad.

On March 10, 2000 (the "March 10th Hearing"), the Debtor presented various "first day" orders to the Bankruptcy Court, including an application for an order authorizing the Debtor to retain Newmark Retail Financial Advisors LLC ("Newmark") as business and restructuring advisor under § 327(a) of the Bankruptcy Code (the "Retention Application"). (D-1, Dkt. 4).[1/]

As set forth in the Retention Application, Newmark is to provide the following services:

a. reviewing, evaluating and advising the Debtor in connection with its business plans and financial projections and assets and liabilities;

b. negotiating with potential lenders for the provision of debtor-in-possession ("DIP") financing;

c. negotiating and structuring arrangements for the disposition, transfer or sale of inventory to third parties;

[1/] "D-____" is used herein to identify a document by number as it is listed in the Designation of the Contents of the Record on Appeal and Statement of Issues (the "Designation Record") filed by the United States Trustee for the Southern District of New York (the "United States Trustee"). "Dkt.____" is used herein to identify a document by number as it is listed on the Bankruptcy Court's docket sheet for this case.

d. making presentations and attending meetings with the Debtor and other parties in interest (and providing testimony if necessary and requested by the Debtor);

e. advising, making recommendations and/or assisting in effectuating store closings and property sales or dispositions (and evaluating the assets and liabilities in connection therewith); and

f. providing services (including consulting and brokerage) for the sale, lease, purchase, modification, termination or restructuring of: (i) real estate interests and (ii) furniture, fixtures and equipment ("FF&E") and other assets (such as customer lists) not provided for above which services may include marketing, organizing the bidding and sale process, reviewing relevant documentation, and negotiating rent reductions, lease modifications and bankruptcy claims.

(D-1, Dkt. 4) (Retention Application, pp. 9-10).

As compensation for these business and restructuring services, the Debtor agreed to pay Newmark a monthly advisory fee of $65,000. (D-1, Dkt. 4) (Retention Application, p. 11). In addition, Newmark has the potential to earn a commission on numerous types of transactions (the "Transactional Fees") including, but not limited to, Newmark's (i) renegotiating the Debtor's existing debt and securing DIP financing,[2/] (ii) securing the disposition of the Debtor's real estate interests, (iii) securing the disposition of the Debtor's FF&E and inventory, and (iv) negotiating the Debtor's leases. (D-1, Dkt. 4) (Retention Application, p. 11-12). In total, Newmark has

[2/] On April 12, 2000, the Bankruptcy Court approved the Debtor's application for DIP financing with Paragon Capital LLC wherein Paragon agreed to loan the Debtor $15,000,000. Under the Retention Application, which was slightly modified by the Retention Order, Newmark received a .667% commission on this transaction, for a total of $100,050.

the potential to earn up to $215,000 per month,[3] consisting of the guaranteed minimum plus Transaction Fees. (D-1, Dkt. 4) (Retention Application, p. 13).[4]

At the March 10th Hearing, the United States Trustee[5] orally raised certain objections to the Retention Application, including an objection to a provision in the Retention Application which sought to have the Bankruptcy Court approve the Debtor's agreement to indemnify Newmark from and against any losses, claims, damages, expenses and liabilities related to, arising out of, or in connection with its activities as business and restructuring advisor to the Debtor. Specifically, the United States Trustee objected to the proposed Retention Application which included the following agreement by the Debtor:

> As set forth in more detail in the Letter Agreement, the Debtor has agreed to indemnify [Newmark] (and others associated with [Newmark] in connection with the Debtor's engagement of Newmark) from and against any losses, claims, damages, expenses and liabilities (unless [Newmark] has committed willful misconduct or gross negligence) related to, arising out of, or in connection with its activities as business and restructuring advisor to the Debtor.

[3] As set forth in the Retention Application, in the event Newmark earns commissions for securing any of the various transactions described above, up to $40,000 per month will be credited against the $65,000 monthly advisory fee. (D-1, Dkt. 4) (Retention Application, p. 11).

[4] The Retention Order modifies the total maximum amount of monthly compensation under the Retention Application. Initially, under the Retention Application, the total amount of compensation payable to Newmark was the $65,000.00 advisory fee (excluding the credit for Transaction Fees) actually paid, plus $200,000. (D-10, Dkt. 108) (Retention Order, p. 6). This amount was reduced to $150,000, following negotiations with the committee of unsecured creditors (the "Committee").

[5] The United States Trustee is the official of the Executive Branch responsible for "protecting the public interest and ensuring that bankruptcy cases are conducted according to the law." H.R. Rep. No. 95-595, 95th Cong., 2d Sess. 109 (1978), reprinted in U.S.C.C.A.N. 5963, 6070. See also 28 U.S.C. § 586; 11 U.S.C. § 307.

(D-1, Dkt. 4) (Retention Application, p. 14). The Letter Agreement (the "Agreement") from Newmark to the Debtor, annexed to the Retention Application, disclosed the following terms:

> (a) The [Debtor] acknowledges and agrees that [Newmark] has been retained to act solely for the matters contained herein. In such capacity, [Newmark] shall act as an independent contractor,[6/] and any duties arising out of its engagement pursuant to this Agreement shall be owed solely to the [Debtor]. Because [Newmark] will be acting on the [Debtor's] behalf in this capacity, it is customary for us to receive indemnification (see below). . . .
> (b) In consideration of [Newmark's] engagement and services hereunder and in connection with the association between [Newmark] and the [Debtor], its affiliates, shareholders, lenders and creditors (the "Engagement"), the [Debtor] agrees to idemnify and hold harmless [Newmark], its affiliates and the shareholders, members, managing members, partners, owners, employees, officers, directors, consultants and agents of [Newmark] and its affiliates ([Newmark], its affiliates and each such other entity or person being an "Indemnified Party") from and against any losses, claims, damages, expenses and liabilities whatsoever, whether joint or several, related to, arising out of or in connection with the Engagement or the Agreement and will reimburse each Indemnified Party for all expenses (including reasonable attorneys fees, expenses and disbursements) as they are incurred, including in connection with the enforcement of the Agreement and investigating, preparing, defending, responding and/or testifying to any subpoena or deposition, being called as a witness or assisting in the defense of any action, claim, suit, investigation or proceeding related to, arising out of or in connection with the Engagement or Agreement, whether or not pending or threatened, whether or not any Indemnified Party is a party, whether or not resulting in any liability and whether or not such action, claim, suit, investigation or proceeding is initiated or brought by the [Debtor]. Notwithstanding the foregoing sentence, the [Debtor] will not be liable under the foregoing indemnification provision for any losses, claims, damages or liabilities (or expenses related thereto) that are finally judicially determined by a court of competent jurisdiction

[6/] At an adjourned hearing on the Retention Application held before the Bankruptcy Court on March 30, 2000, the United States Trustee raised the issue of whether, notwithstanding this "independent contractor" language, Newmark, as a retained professional, was a fiduciary of the Debtor's estate. (D-7) (March 30th Transcript, p. 25, lines 6-8). In response to the inquiry, Newmark conceded it is a fiduciary of the Debtor's estate. (D-7) (March 30th Transcript, p. 25, lines 9-16).

> to have primarily resulted from the bad faith, gross negligence or willful misconduct of [Newmark].

(D-1, Dkt. 4) (Retention Application, Exhibit 1, p. 4) (emphasis added).

At the conclusion of the March 10th Hearing, the Bankruptcy Court adjourned the hearing on the Retention Application to March 15, 2000 (the "March 15th Hearing") in order to provide the United States Trustee, the Debtor's counsel and Newmark an opportunity to discuss the United States Trustee's objections to the Retention Application. However, the parties were unable to resolve their differences. As a result, at the March 15th Hearing, the United States Trustee informed the Bankruptcy Court that she objected to the indemnification provision in the Retention Application and requested an opportunity to brief the issue. The Bankruptcy Court adjourned the hearing on the Retention Application to March 30, 2000 (the "March 30th Hearing").

Subsequently, on March 22, 2000, the United States Trustee filed her objection (the "Objection") to the Retention Application (D-5, Dkt. 44) and Newmark filed its response (the "Response") on March 29, 2000 (D-6, Dkt. 77). The Debtor did not file a response to the Objection, nor did the Committee.

At the March 30th Hearing, after hearing oral arguments and considering the parties' submissions, the Bankruptcy Court issued an oral ruling approving the Retention Application, including the indemnification provision, and overruling the United States Trustee's objections. (D-9, Dkt. 95). Subsequently, on April 4, 2000, the Bankruptcy Court issued the Memorandum Decision regarding the indemnification provision in the Retention Application. (D-9, Dkt. 95).

Thereafter, by order dated April 10, 2000, which was entered on the docket on April 11, 2000, the Bankruptcy Court approved the retention of Newmark, modifying the indemnification provision in the Retention Application to add the phrases "breach of trust," "self dealing" and "breach of fiduciary duties (other than ordinary negligence)" to the list of situations in which Newmark shall not be indemnified. (D-10, Dkt. 108). As will be demonstrated below, these modifications are of little import because under the Retention Order, Newmark will be indemnified for its breach of trust, bad faith, self dealing, breach of fiduciary duties, gross negligence or willful or reckless misconduct unless there is a final judicial determination finding that Newmark is primarily liable for the particular loss, claim, or damage. The United States Trustee timely filed her Notice of Appeal on April 14, 2000.

IV. SUMMARY OF THE ARGUMENT

The Bankruptcy Court erred in approving, under § 327 of the Bankruptcy Code, the retention of Newmark as business and restructuring advisors to the Debtor which included an absolute grant of indemnification. Pursuant to the Retention Order and Memorandum Decision, Chief Bankruptcy Judge Stuart M. Bernstein approved an overly broad indemnification provision which requires the Debtor's bankruptcy estate to reimburse Newmark for Newmark's own negligence and, under certain circumstances, even for Newmark's breach of trust, bad faith, self dealing, breach of fiduciary duties (other than ordinary negligence), gross negligence or willful or reckless misconduct. Except for Newmark's attorneys' fees and expenses, the Retention Order requires the Debtor to reimburse Newmark without any further court review or notice to the parties in interest.

The Bankruptcy Court's preapproval of Newmark's indemnification in this case, without any review for reasonableness, contravenes § 330 of the Bankruptcy Code. The Bankruptcy Court improperly compressed two distinct steps into one: retention of professionals under § 327 of the Bankruptcy Code and approval of payments under § 330 of the Bankruptcy Code. Moreover, the indemnification provision constitutes blatant overreaching by a professional that will be well compensated for its services to the estate while placing further financial pressure upon the Debtor and its creditor body. Finally, the Bankruptcy Court improperly found that the Debtor met its burden to demonstrate that the indemnification provision is a reasonable condition of Newmark's employment and in the best interests of the Debtor's estate.

V. ARGUMENT

A. THE INDEMNIFICATION PROVISION VIOLATES THE BANKRUPTCY CODE'S FRAMEWORK FOR (i) RETENTION AND (ii) COMPENSATION AND REIMBURSEMENT OF PROFESSIONALS

1. The Indemnification Provision Violates § 330 of the Bankruptcy Code

It is well-settled that courts are required to apply the plain meaning rule of statutory construction. "[A]s long as the statutory scheme is coherent and consistent, there is generally no need for a court to inquire beyond the plain meaning of the statute." United States v. Ron Pair Enter., Inc., 489 U.S. 235, 240 (1989).

The Bankruptcy Code sets forth a clear framework for the (i) retention and (ii) compensation and reimbursement of professionals. Pursuant to § 327(a) of the Bankruptcy Code:

> the trustee, with the court's approval, may employ one or more attorneys, accountants, appraisers, auctioneers, or other professional persons, that do not hold or represent an interest adverse to the estate, and that are disinterested persons, to represent or assist the trustee in carrying out the trustee's duties under this title.

11 U.S.C. § 327(a). However, "approval under § 327 [of the Bankruptcy Code] establishes only that [a professional] may be employed by the debtor-in-possession, and not that his employment will therefore or thereafter be compensated from estate funds." In re Engel, 124 F.3d 567, 572 (3d Cir. 1997); see United States Trustee v. Garvey, Schubert & Barer (In re Century Cleaning Serv., Inc.), 195 F.3d 1053, 1060 n.9 (9th Cir. 1999)(§327 of the Bankruptcy Code authorizes the trustee to employ professionals but § 330(a) governs compensation of professionals); In re Johns-Manville Corp., 32 B.R. 728, 731 (S.D.N.Y. 1983)("section 327 approvals are merely preliminary 'go aheads' rather than conclusive determinations [of fees and expenses]"); In re United Co. Fin. Corp., 241 B.R. 521, 524 (Bankr. D. Del. 1999)(obligation to review and approve fee requests was not affected by a prior agreement by the debtor to pay fees); In re C & P Auto Transp., Inc., 94 B.R. 682, 685 (Bankr. E.D. Cal. 1988)("the actual determination of compensation is left to the standards stated in section 330"). Thus, it is clear that retention under § 327 of the Bankruptcy Code does not, by itself, guarantee a professional payment of its anticipated fees and expenses, including indemnification expenses.

Rather, the actual payment of fees and expenses of a professional is governed by § 330 of the Bankruptcy Code. Specifically, § 330(a) provides that:

> (1) After notice to the parties in interest and the United States trustee and a hearing, and subject to sections 326, 328, and 329, the court may award to a trustee, an > examiner, a professional person employed under section 327 or 1103-

>
> (A) reasonable compensation for actual, necessary services rendered by the trustee, examiner, professional person, or attorney and by any para-professional person employed by any such person; and
> (B) reimbursement for actual, necessary expenses.

11 U.S.C. § 330(a)(1)(A) and (B). Thus, under the Bankruptcy Code, "[c]ompensation from the estate depends on the second look taken by the bankruptcy court, as mandated by § 330, for a determination of 'benefit to the estate [for the professional's work].'" Engel, 124 F.3d at 571 (emphasis added). Because this "second look" is so important to the application of § 330, a fortiori, it must take place after the services are rendered.

Furthermore, under § 330 of the Bankruptcy Code, it is insufficient that services are rendered on behalf of the debtor. These services must be "beneficial to the estate." In re Lederman Enter., Inc., 997 F.2d 1321, 1323 (10th Cir. 1993). Accordingly, an application for compensation and reimbursement of expenses must demonstrate that the professional's services were necessary and made a beneficial contribution to the estate or its creditors. Engel, 124 F.3d at 573 (citing In re Arkansas Co., Inc., 798 F.2d 645, 648-49 (3d Cir. 1986)(other citation omitted)); Zolfo, Cooper & Co. v. Sunbeam-Oster Co., Inc., 50 F.3d 253, 261 (3d Cir. 1995)(citation omitted); Huhn v. Wein (In re Huhn), 145 B.R. 872, 875 (W.D. Mich. 1992); In re Copeland, 154 B.R. 693 (Bankr. W.D. Mich. 1993); In re McLean Indus., Inc., 88 B.R. 36, 38 (Bankr. S.D.N.Y. 1988). Therefore, the bankruptcy court has the authority to reduce fees or expenses requested when they are disproportionate to the benefit to the estate. In re Taxman

Clothing Co., 49 F.3d 310, 316 (7th Cir. 1995); see Zolfo, 50 F.3d at 262 (affirming lower courts' denial of improperly documented and inadequately detailed expenses). Moreover, "[s]ervices of a poor quality which are the consequence of wrongful or unethical conduct, may result in denial of any fee or an order for return of any fee paid." In re Whitman, 51 B.R. 502, 506 (Bankr. D. Mass. 1985)(citing Red Carpet Corp. v. Miller, 708 F.2d 1576 (11th Cir. 1983)).

Pursuant to the Retention Order, any expense or fee which Newmark may incur in connection with the broad indemnity granted to it is pre-approved, without any right by the court or parties in interest to object to its "reasonableness."[7/] As such, the indemnity provision is inconsistent with the statutory scheme of (i) retention and (ii) compensation and reimbursement of professionals.

In the Engel case, the Third Circuit held that court authorization to retain a professional under § 327 of the Bankruptcy Code and compensation under § 330 of the Bankruptcy Code cannot be compressed into one step. Engel, 124 F.3d at 572. The Third Circuit found that such a procedure "would render meaningless the structure of the Bankruptcy Code and Rules which contain provisions requiring both approval of employment and after the fact approval of compensation." Id. (emphasis added) (citations omitted); see Davis v. Hibbits (In re Sullivan's Jewelry, Inc.), 226 B.R. 624, 626 (Bankr. 8th Cir. 1998) (professionals may be compensated under §

[7/] The Retention Order requires any attorneys defending Newmark in any action to seek approval of their fees and expenses from the Bankruptcy Court. (D-10, Dkt. 108) (Retention Order, p. 4). Apart from such fees, however, any other component covered by the indemnity (e.g., damages, settlement amounts, etc.) does not require any review by the Bankruptcy Court.

330 of the Bankruptcy Code only after an application is made to the bankruptcy court).

Professionals' requests for compensation are carefully reviewed "because of 'the temptation of a failing debtor to deal too liberally with his property in employing counsel' and because transactions with debtor's attorney provide potential for 'evasion of creditor protection provisions of bankruptcy laws' and 'overreaching by the debtor's attorney.'" Whitman, 51 B.R. at 506 (quoting In re Wood, 210 U.S. 246, 253 (1908) and H.R. Rep. No. 595, 95th Cong. 1st Sess. 329 (1977) U.S.C.C.A.N. 1978, pp. 5787, 6285)(other citation omitted); see In the Matter of Concrete Prod., Inc., 208 B.R. 1000, 1006 (Bankr. S.D. Ga. 1996)("close supervision of administrative expenses is mandated in order to prevent depletion of debtor's estate"). Thus, the two-step process of retaining professionals under § 327 and then compensating such professionals under § 330 "was adopted by Congress to eliminate 'abuses and detrimental practices' attributable to attorney control of bankruptcy cases." Engel, 124 B.R. F.3d at 572-73 (quoting In re Arkansas Co., Inc., 798 F.2d 645, 649 (3d Cir. 1986)); see Huhn v. Wein (In re Huhn), 145 B.R. at 875 ("every dollar expended on legal fees results in a dollar less that is available for distribution to the creditors or for use by the debtor").

Therefore, an automatic payment to professionals of fees or expenses, including an indemnification payment, without a review by the bankruptcy court or the parties in interest for reasonableness and necessity under § 330, subverts the clear intent of the Bankruptcy Code. See In re Commercial Fin. Serv., Inc., 231 B.R. 351, 355 (Bankr. N.D. Okla. 1999)("[n]either section 330 or 331 provides authority for the outright payment of professional fees prior to at least interim scrutiny by the Court"); In the Matter of Schroeder, 120 B.R. 527, 529 (Bankr. D.

Neb. 1990)("post-petition payments to professionals without leave of court circumvents carefully drafted statutes and rules governing the retention and compensation of professionals in connection with bankruptcy cases"); In re C & P Auto Transp., Inc., 94 B.R. at 689 (the Bankruptcy Code requires that fees be awarded by the court after withstanding scrutiny from parties in interest).

To be consistent with the framework of the Bankruptcy Code, "[w]hether indemnification should be offered to a professional should be determined on a case-by-case basis, after the claim has been asserted for which indemnity is sought." In re Mortgage & Realty Trust, 123 B.R. 626, 631 (Bankr. C.D. Cal. 1991) (emphasis added).

2. The Indemnification Provision Violates § 328(c) of the Bankruptcy Code

As noted in the preceding discussion, § 327 of the Bankruptcy Code requires a professional to be a "disinterested person" and not "hold or represent an interest adverse to the estate." 11 U.S.C. § 327(a). Under 11 U.S.C. § 328(c), the bankruptcy court retains the power to deny compensation and reimbursement of expenses to a professional retained under § 327 of the Bankruptcy Code. Section 328(c) provides, in pertinent part, that:

> the court may deny allowance of compensation for services and reimbursement of expenses of a professional person employed under section 327 or 1103 of this title, if, at any time during such professional person's employment under section 327 or 1103 of this title, such professional person is not a disinterested person, or represents or holds an interest adverse to the estate with respect to the matter on which such professional person is employed.

11 U.S.C. § 328(c); see Kravit, Gass & Weber, S.C. v. Michel (In re Crivello), 134 F.3d 831, 839 (7th Cir. 1998)("§ 328(c) remains as a retroactive penalty for those professionals whose retention under §327(a) was improper or who fail to satisfy § 327(a) requirements while working for the estate")(citation omitted); Electro-Wire Prod., Inc. (In re Prince), 40 F.3d 356, 359 (11th Cir. 1994) (§ 328(c) permits a court to deny compensation to professionals found not to be disinterested).

Although not defined in the Bankruptcy Code, an adverse interest exists if a professional has an economic interest "that would tend to lessen the value of the bankruptcy estate or that would create either an actual or potential dispute in which the estate is a rival claimant" or that would create a predisposition against the estate. Prince, 40 F.3d at 361; see also In re BH & P, Inc., 949 F.2d 1300, 1314 (3d Cir. 1991); In re Granite Partners, L.P., 219 B.R. 22, 32-33 (Bankr. S.D.N.Y. 1998); In re Angelika Films 57th, Inc., 227 B.R. 29, 39 (Bankr. S.D.N.Y. 1998) ("what is clear is that undivided loyalty is central to disinterestedness"), aff'd, 246 B.R. 176 (S.D.N.Y. 2000). To the extent that both the "disinterestedness" and "adverse interest" prongs of § 327(a) are duplicative, they form a single test to judge conflicts of interest. In re Martin, 817 F.2d 175, 179 n.4 (1st Cir. 1987); Granite, 219 B.R. at 33. Importantly, the disinterestedness and adverse interest prohibitions under §327(a) cannot be waived, even upon agreement by counsel to the debtor and counsel to the creditors' committee. See In re Tinley Plaza Assoc., 142 B.R. 272, 277-78 (Bankr. N.D. Ill. 1992) ("[s]ection 327(a) is a prohibition without exceptions") (citing In re Diamond Mortgage Corp., 135 B.R. 78, 94 (Bankr. N.D. Ill. 1990); see also Meredith v. Thralls, 144 F.2d 473, 475 (2d Cir.), cert. denied sub nom., Consolidated Realty Corp. v. Meredith, 323 U.S. 758 (1944)(test of disinterestedness cannot be waived because of the integrity or ability of the particular individual under scrutiny) (decided under the former Bankruptcy Act).

By approving the indemnification provision at the outset of the Debtor's chapter 11 case, the Bankruptcy Court abrogated its supervisory role over retained professionals. See Rome v. Braunstein, 19 F.3d 54, 57-58 (1st Cir. 1994) ("the need for self scrutiny and avoidance of conflicts of interest does not end upon appointment"); In re Angelika Films 57th, Inc., 246 B.R. 176, 180 (S.D.N.Y. 2000) ("[c]ompliance with the disinterested requirements . . . is critical at the time of retention, but also throughout the case 'and is so crucial to the proper functioning of the bankruptcy system that a court may raise it and dispose of it whenever its sanctity is questioned.'") (quoting In re Vebeliunas, 231 B.R. 181, 187 (Bankr. S.D.N.Y. 1999), appeal dismissed, 246 B.R. 172 (S.D.N.Y. 2000)); In re Plaza Hotel Corp., 111 B.R. 882, 891 (Bankr. E.D. Cal.) ("the court's continuing supervisory role during the case includes the ability to revisit such issues as conflicts whenever appropriate" and "the court must be prepared to revoke its approval if circumstances so dictate"), aff'd, 123 B.R. 466 (Bankr. 9th Cir. 1990)(table).

The Bankruptcy Court erred in not considering the possible effect of the indemnification upon Newmark's disinterestedness. When Newmark seeks to enforce the indemnification provision and the Debtor disputes Newmark's right to seek an indemnity, such a dispute may affect Newmark's ability to continue representing the Debtor. For example, if Newmark were sued for a certain action it took, it might allege that it acted under direction from the Debtor and the Debtor may dispute that allegation, thus causing a conflict between the parties seeking to blame each other for the resulting problem. If the Bankruptcy Court has no further review over the enforcement of the indemnification provision, these conflicts of interest, which would most likely require the disqualification of Newmark, will never be brought before it. This untenable situation can be avoided by requiring Newmark to request an indemnity payment from the Debtor, upon notice and with the Bankruptcy Court's approval, if an indemnification situation actually arises. If this is required, the Bankruptcy Court, at the time the request is made, can make a determination whether to grant such an indemnity and whether the grant of such an indemnity would create a conflict of interest which would require the disqualification of Newmark. See In re Arochem Corp., 176 F.3d 610, 624 (2d Cir. 1999)(disqualification is mandatory where professional has an actual conflict of interest).

3. The Bankruptcy Court Erred In Relying On Trusts and Corporate Law When the Bankruptcy Code is Clear and Unambiguous

The Bankruptcy Court, relying on the Second Circuit's decision in In re Palm Coast, Matanza Shores Limited Partnership, 101 F.3d 253 (2d Cir. 1996),[8] erred in looking to the law of trusts and New York and Delaware corporate law for justification to permit the indemnification provision. The plain language of the Bankruptcy Code sets forth the framework for retaining and compensating professionals. As discussed in the preceding sections, the Bankruptcy Code does not permit pre-approved payments from a debtor's bankruptcy estate to professionals at the outset of a bankruptcy case. Instead, § 330 of the Bankruptcy Code requires professionals

[8] In Palm Coast, the Second Circuit, in determining whether or not the Bankruptcy Code permits a Chapter 11 trustee to employ his real estate firm as real estate consultant to the bankruptcy estate, found that because the Bankruptcy Code and legislative history on this issue were not clear, it could look to the law of trusts for guidance. Palm Coast, 101 F.3d at 257 (citing United States v. Sanges, 144 U.S. 310, 311 (1892)).

seeking compensation and reimbursement of expenses from a debtor's estate to make such a request on notice so that parties in interest are afforded an opportunity to object before the bankruptcy court awards fees and expenses. In addition, § 330(a)(2) of the Bankruptcy Code requires the Court to independently review all requests for compensation and reimbursement of expenses whether or not a party in interest objects. See In re Busy Beaver Bldg. Centers, Inc., 19 F.3d 833, 841 (3d Cir. 1994)(the bankruptcy court has the power and the duty to review fee applications notwithstanding the absence of objections from other parties in interest). Therefore, because "'the statutory scheme [of the Bankruptcy Code] is coherent and consistent, there generally is no need for a court to look beyond the plain meaning of the statute.'" In re Am. Steel Prod., Inc., 197 F.3d 1354, 1356 (11th Cir. 1999)(quoting United States v. Ron Pair Enter., Inc., 489 U.S. 235, 240 (1989)).[9]

Even if the Bankruptcy Code were not clear, neither state law nor the law of trusts support the approval of the indemnification provision. The Bankruptcy Court acknowledged that different types of trusts require different standards of care. Specifically, the Bankruptcy Court found that while trustees for inter vivos trusts may be indemnified for their own negligence, trustees for testamentary trusts under New York law may not. (D-9, Dkt. 95) (Memorandum

[9] At the March 30th Hearing, the Bankruptcy Court noted that § 1125 of the Bankruptcy Code contemplated indemnification provisions. See (D-7) (March 30th Transcript, p. 24, lines 13). However, § 1125(e) of the Bankruptcy Code is limited in scope and applicability to a person who "solicits acceptance or rejection of a plan, in good faith" or "participates in the offer, issuance, sale, or purchase of a security, offered or sold under the plan." See 11 U.S.C. § 1125(e). This provision, by its terms, relates to conduct surrounding a debtor's plan of reorganization and does not apply to the retention of professionals.

Decision, p. 7). The Bankruptcy Court, in distinguishing the fiduciary duties surrounding these two different types of trustees, found, without any explanation, that the scope of fiduciary duties required of a trustee of an inter vivos trust should apply to bankruptcy professionals. The United States Trustee submits that the nature of a testamentary trust is more analogous to a bankruptcy case because creditors of a bankruptcy estate rely on professionals to maximize the value of the assets of the estate as beneficiaries of a testamentary trust rely on an executor to protect the assets of a testamentary trust.

Furthermore, the Bankruptcy Court's reliance on provisions of New York and Delaware corporate law, which provisions are applicable to officers and directors, to determine that bankruptcy professionals may be indemnified for their own negligence is also misplaced. See (D-9, Dkt. 95) (Memorandum Decision, p. 8). Both within and outside of bankruptcy, officers and directors of a corporation may request and receive many terms of employment that are not available to professionals being retained by a bankruptcy estate as fiduciaries. For example, relatives of the debtor's principals and shareholders may serve as officers and directors; in contrast, § 327(a) of the Bankruptcy Code prohibits such "interested" parties from serving as professionals.[10/] In addition, officers and directors may normally be hired and paid with no court review; in contrast, §§ 327 and 330 specifically require that the retention and compensation of professionals take place only after notice, a hearing and court approval. Many other differences exist, making it clear that what may be available in the treatment of officers and directors cannot serve as a guide on how professionals in a bankruptcy case may be retained and compensated. Rather, when it comes to professionals, the Bankruptcy Code and existing case law form a sufficient basis to craft appropriate terms of employment without reference to state and common law. Therefore, the Bankruptcy Court's reliance on state corporate law does not support the result reached.

[10/] The Bankruptcy Code defines "disinterested person" as a person that "is not a creditor, an equity security holder, or an insider." 11 U.S.C. § 101(14)(A). If a debtor is a corporation, the term "insider" includes a "relative of a general partner, director, officer, or person in control of the debtor." 11 U.S.C. § 101(31)(B)(vi).

The insistence by financial advisors in bankruptcy cases for indemnification provisions has become more common in recent years.[11/] A bankruptcy court is not free, however, to craft its own solution to a perceived flaw in the Bankruptcy Code which exposes fiduciaries to liability for their own wrongful acts. See In re Fresco Plastics Corp., 996 F.2d 152, 154-55 (7th Cir. 1993) (court may not disregard a specific Bankruptcy Code provision addressing an issue and instead employ its equitable powers to achieve a result not contemplated in the Bankruptcy Code); cf. Amchem Prod., Inc. v. Windsor, 521 U.S. 591, 627 (1997) (innovative class action settlement of mass tort liability was found unjustifiable under Fed. R. Civ. P. 23 where Court noted that Congress can adopt a nationwide solution if it deems such a solution appropriate). It is clear that the indemnification provision in this case is inappropriate, over broad and inconsistent with the Bankruptcy Code, bankruptcy principles and precedent. Therefore, the Bankruptcy Court's decision regarding the indemnification provision must be reversed.

[11/] In the widely reported In re Merry-Go-Round Enter., Inc. case, after the reorganization failed, the chapter 7 trustee sued the financial advisors who eventually settled by paying the estate $185 million. See (D-6, Dkt. 77) (Response, p. 6).

B. THE INDEMNIFICATION PROVISION IS UNREASONABLE AND NOT IN THE BEST INTERESTS OF THE DEBTOR'S ESTATE

In addition to the fact that the indemnification provision violates §§ 330 and 328(c) of the Bankruptcy Code, the Bankruptcy Court abused its discretion in finding that the indemnification provision was a reasonable condition of Newmark's employment. Under 11 U.S.C. § 328(a):

> [t]he trustee, or a committee appointed under section 1102 of this title, with the court's approval, may employ or authorize the employment of a professional person under section 327 or 1103 of this title, as the case may be, on any reasonable terms and conditions of employment, including on a retainer, on an hourly basis, or on a contingent fee basis.

11 U.S.C. § 328(a) (emphasis added). As set forth below, the broad indemnification provision is inconsistent with Newmark's fiduciary duty to the Debtor's estate. Furthermore, as discussed below, the indemnification provision encourages Newmark to settle to keep any dispute regarding the indemnification provision from the scrutiny of a court. In addition, under the terms of the indemnification provision, Newmark has no incentive to negotiate a reasonable settlement.

1. Newmark's Request for Indemnification for its Own Errors and Omissions is Inconsistent with Its Fiduciary Duty

As conceded by Newmark,[12] professionals retained in a bankruptcy case under § 327 of the Bankruptcy Code, including financial advisors, are fiduciaries of a debtor's estate. See In re Gillett Holdings, Inc., 137 B.R. 452, 458 (Bankr. D. Colo. 1991) (investment bankers and financial advisors employed under § 327 of the Bankruptcy Code by a debtor are fiduciaries); In re Allegheny Int'l, Inc., 100 B.R. 244, 246 (Bankr. W.D. Pa. 1989) (investment bankers and financial advisors are fiduciaries of a debtor's estate); see also Woods v. City Nat. Bank & Trust Co. of Chicago, 312 U.S. 262, 278 (1941)(holding that trustees are fiduciaries). As fiduciaries, professionals "'have obligations of fidelity, undivided loyalty and impartial service in the interest of creditors they represent.'" Allegheny, 100 B.R. at 246 (quoting United Steelworkers of America v. Lampl (In re Mesta Machine Co.), 67 B.R. 151, 156 (Bankr. W.D. Pa. 1986)).

It is well settled that a fiduciary has the obligation to maximize the value of the bankruptcy estate for the benefit of creditors. CFTC v. Weintraub, 471 U.S. 343, 352 (1985). As fiduciaries, professionals subject themselves to exacting court review to safeguard against the "temptation of a failing debtor to deal too liberally with his property in employing" its professionals. In re Wood, 210 U.S. 246, 253 (1908). Transactions with the debtor's professionals provide the potential for "evasion of creditor protection provisions of the bankruptcy laws" and "overreaching" by the debtor's professionals. In re Whitman, 51 B.R. at 506 (citing H.R.Rep. No. 595, 95th Cong. 1st Sess. 329 (1977), reprinted in U.S.C.C.A.N. 5787, 6285 (1978)); In re Consol. Bancshares, Inc., 785 F.2d 1249, 1256 n.6 (5th Cir. 1986) ("The standards for the employment of professionals are strict, for Congress has determined that strict standards are necessary in light of the unique nature of the bankruptcy process.").

Bankruptcy courts have repeatedly held that broad indemnification provisions are inconsistent with the fiduciary duties of professionals. In the case of In re Drexel Burnham Lambert Group, 133 B.R. 13 (Bankr. S.D.N.Y. 1991), the court, in considering a retention application of an investment banker, denied the indemnification provision as a term of the retention for, inter alia, the following reasons:

> [T]he reason for hiring a person is that the person has special expertise that is beneficial to the debtor or the committee. The court expects that such professionals would be especially diligent in making sure they meet the standard of care for exercising their expertise in their work in this case. Indemnification is not consistent with professionalism. [In re Mortgage & Realty Trust, 123 B.R. 626, 630-631 (Bankr. C.D. Cal. 1991)]
> Simply stated, indemnification agreements are inappropriate. Moreover, we know that [professionals] carry coverage to protect themselves from malpractice liability. This expense, like professional fees to negotiate a retention, are part of a [professional's] overhead, usually more than adequately covered by a retention fee.

Id. at 27.

Likewise, in Allegheny, the court sua sponte reconsidered an already approved retention order which contained an indemnification provision. Allegheny, 100 B.R. at 246. The Allegheny court held that "holding a fiduciary harmless for its own negligence is shockingly inconsistent with the strict standard of conduct for fiduciaries." Id. at 247. The Allegheny court reasoned that "'[m]any forms of conduct permissible in a workaday world for those acting at arm's length, are forbidden by those bound by fiduciary ties . . . .'" Id. at 246-47 (quoting Meinhard v. Salmon, 249 N.Y. 458, 164 N.E. 545, 546 (1928) (Cardozo, J.)).

The court in In re Mortgage & Realty Trust, 123 B.R. at 632, declined to approve an indemnification provision which allowed the financial advisor to be indemnified by the debtor for losses and claims resulting from a breach of fiduciary duty by the financial advisor. In that case, the debtor moved the court for reconsideration of its previous order denying indemnification for its investment advisor. Id. at 628. Originally, the investment advisor sought approval of an overreaching indemnification provision protecting it against all claims, damages, losses, liabilities, costs and expenses in connection with the investment advisor's engagement except that the debtor would not be liable for the investment advisor's gross negligence or willful misconduct. Id. at 629 n.3. In the motion to reconsider, the investment advisor limited its request for indemnification to include acts other than negligence, gross negligence or willful misconduct. Id. at 629. The court, however, still declined to approve the indemnification provision because the investment advisor sought indemnification for breaches of its fiduciary duty which was broader than allowed under state law and what the Allegheny court authorized. Id. at 632; see also In re Glosser Bros., Inc., 102 B.R. 38, 42 (Bankr. W.D. Pa. 1989) (court declined to approve indemnification provision where financial advisor/investment banker would not be liable for its own "run-of-the-mill" negligence).

Following the Allegheny and Mortgage & Realty Trust decisions, the court in In re Gillett Holdings, 137 B.R. at 452, declined to approve an indemnification provision where an investment banker sought indemnification for its "own errors and omissions, [its] own negligence." Id. at 458. The court found that request "entirely improper" and "unacceptable." Id. The court found that the investment bankers could not "absolve themselves of such a broad range of potential liability or responsibility for their own actions which might constitute negligence or misfeasance." Id.

The Bankruptcy Court below summarily dismissed the reasoning behind these published cases cited above, finding the reactions of the courts to be "visceral." (D-9, Dkt. 95) (Memorandum Decision, p. 9). The Bankruptcy Court was incorrect. These courts' holdings are completely consistent with the Bankruptcy Code and the policy goals of the bankruptcy system which prevents overreaching by professionals and imposes the highest of fiduciary standards upon professionals responsible for bankruptcy estates with limited funds. Newmark's indemnification from its own wrongful acts or omissions is inconsistent with its fiduciary's role.

2. The Bankruptcy Court Erred in Approving an Indemnification Provision that Protects Newmark From Its Own Wrongful Acts

The indemnification provision provides that the Debtor will not be liable for any losses, claims, damages or liabilities (or expenses related thereto) that are finally judicially determined by a court of competent jurisdiction to have primarily resulted from the breach of trust, bad faith, self dealing, breach of fiduciary duties (other than ordinary negligence), gross negligence or willful or reckless misconduct of Newmark. See (D-10, Dkt. 108) (Retention Order, pp. 3-4) (emphasis added). Under these terms and conditions, Newmark may still be indemnified for its own bad faith, breach of fiduciary duty, breach of trust, self-dealing, willful or reckless misconduct or gross negligence if there is never a final judicial determination of liability.

For example, if Newmark is sued for breach of trust, bad faith, self dealing, breach of fiduciary duties (other than ordinary negligence), gross negligence or willful or reckless misconduct, the Debtor would still be liable for the damages caused by Newmark's wrongdoing if the case is settled by Newmark before a final judicial determination of liability is made. This is true whether or not a complaint is actually filed. Moreover, because Newmark is covered by the indemnity, it has incentive to settle to keep the dispute from the scrutiny of a court, but it has no incentive to negotiate a reasonable settlement. Finally, the Debtor is liable for the damages caused by Newmark's breach of trust, bad faith, self dealing, breach of fiduciary duties (other than ordinary negligence), gross negligence or willful or reckless misconduct if there is a final judicial decision that finds that Newmark was only 49% responsible, and not primarily responsible for the particular loss, claim or damage. This "comparative" standard of liability, which permits Newmark to be "secondarily responsible," cannot be in the best interest of the Debtor or its estate.

3. The Debtor Failed to Submit Any Evidence to Demonstrate that the Indemnification Provision is in the Best Interest of the Estate

The burden of proof to establish that the terms and conditions of employment are reasonable is on the Debtor, the moving party. To meet its burden, the Debtor must provide specific evidence to establish that "the terms and conditions are in the best interest of the estate." In re Gillett Holdings, Inc., 137 B.R. at 455 (quoting In re C & P Auto Transp., Inc., 94 B.R. 682, 686 (Bankr. E.D. Cal. 1988); accord In re Chas. A. Stevens & Co., 109 B.R. 853, 854 (Bankr. N.D. Ill. 1990).

In determining that the terms of the Retention Application, including the indemnification provision, are reasonable and in the best interests of the Debtor's estate, the Bankruptcy Court below improperly relied upon the unsubstantiated opinion of counsel for the Committee[13/] that the indemnification provision in the Retention Application is a customary request, and routinely agreed to, outside of the bankruptcy realm. (D-7) (March 30th Transcript, p. 22 lines 2-6) and (D-9, Dkt 95) (Memorandum Decision, p. 11); see generally Exeter Bancorporation, Inc. v. Kemper Securities Group, Inc., 58 F.3d 1306, 1312 n. 5 (8th Cir.1995)(statements of counsel not evidence). The Debtor did not meet its burden with respect to the Retention Order. The decision of the Bankruptcy Court should be reversed because the Debtor failed to demonstrate why the indemnification provision is a reasonable condition of Newmark's employment and is in the best interests of the Debtor's estate. Alternatively, the Court may remand the issue so that the parties can take discovery on such issues as, inter alia, whether indemnification provisions constitute "industry practice" outside of bankruptcy.[14]

VI. CONCLUSION

For the reasons set forth above, the United States Trustee respectfully requests that the Court reverse the Retention Order and grant such other relief as is just.

v.

Saul Eisen, United States Trustee,

On Appeal from the Bankruptcy Appellate Panel for the Sixth Circuit

STATEMENT OF JURISDICTION

The United States Bankruptcy Court for the Northern District of Ohio had subject matter jurisdiction under 28 U.S.C. § 1334 and 157 over Gary Gorski's motion filed under 11 U.S.C. 503(b)(3)(D) and (4) for expenses and attorney fees. The Bankruptcy Appellate Panel of the Sixth Circuit had jurisdiction under 28 U.S.C. § 158(a), (b) and (c) over Mr. Gorski's appeal from the bankruptcy court's order denying his fee request. This Court has appellate jurisdiction under 28 U.S.C. § 158 (d) over Mr. Gorksi's appeal from the appellate panel's order affirming the denial of expenses and fees.

The bankruptcy court entered its memorandum opinion and order denying Mr. Gorski's § 503(b)(3)(D) and (4) motion on June 15, 2005. (Bankruptcy Court Docket record entry 260 Memorandum opinion & order; Joint Appendix ____).[1] This final order ruled Mr. Gorski - who was the sole shareholder and sole managing member of the chapter 11 debtor in this case, Henricks Commerce Park, LLC - could not recover his attorney fees under § 503(b)(3)(D) and (4). Mr. Gorski filed a timely notice of appeal to the appellate panel on July 18, 2005. (R. 266 Notice of appeal; Apx. __).

The Bankruptcy Appellate Panel docket does not contain docket reference numbers and so this brief refers to entries filed with the appellate panel as BAP Doc. ____(date) p. ___ . Citations to the Joint Appendix filed with this Court are cited as "Apx. ___ .

The appellate panel entered a final opinion and judgment affirming the bankruptcy court's order on June 15, 2006. (BAP Doc. 6/15/06 Opinion and judgment; Apx.___). Mr. Gorski timely appealed the appellate panel's order to this Court on July 12, 2006. (BAP Doc. 7/12/06 Notice of appeal; Apx. _____).

STATEMENT OF THE ISSUES PRESENTED FOR REVIEW

Section 503(b)(3)(D) and (4) of the Bankruptcy Code authorize bankruptcy courts to use bankruptcy estate assets to pay the expenses and attorney's fees of (a) equity security holders, (b) creditors, (c) indenture trustees, and (d) chapter 11 committees, but only when their services provide a substantial benefit to the bankruptcy case. §503(b)(3)(D) and (4) do not allow the recovery of attorneys fees for work performed on behalf of a debtor; those fees are allowable only if the debtor's counsel is appointed as debtor's counsel by the bankruptcy court under § 327 of the Bankruptcy Code and the debtor's counsel's fees are subsequently approved by the bankruptcy court under § 330 of the Code.

The chapter 11 debtor in this case is Henricks Commerce Park, LLC. The appellant here is Mr. Gary Gorski, who is Henricks' sole equity security holder; he also runs Henricks as its managing partner. Before the bankruptcy court, Mr. Gorski sought attorneys fees under § 503(b)(3)(D) and (4) for work Simon & Short, LLC ("Simon") performed in the Henricks bankruptcy case. Prior to Simon performing that work, the bankruptcy court had entered an order denying Henricks' motion to have Simon appointed to act as its § 327 debtor's counsel because the firm failed to meet § 327's disinterestedness requirements. Thereafter, Mr. Gorski nevertheless used Simon to perform what the United States Trustee and the appellate panel concluded was debtor's work and sought reimbursement under § 503(b)(3)(D) and (4) for that debtor's work.

Given this, the two issues presented to this Court are:

1. Whether the bankruptcy appellate panel of the Sixth Circuit correctly determined Mr. Gorski could not recover attorney fees under 11 U.S.C.§ 503(b)(3)(D) and (4) because those fees constituted work on behalf of a debtor, which falls outside § 503(b)(3)(D) and (4)'s limited authorization of fees only for work performed for equity security holders, creditors, indenture trustees, and committees.

2. Alternatively, if this Court concludes the record below was not sufficiently developed for the appellate panel to reach that conclusion, should this Court remand this case to the bankruptcy court with instructions that it determine;

> A. Whether, as a matter of fact, Simon's services were performed for the debtor and therefore are not recoverable under 11 U.S.C. § 503(b)(3)(D) and (4); and
> B. If the bankruptcy court determines that any of Simon & Short's services were in fact performed solely for Mr. Gorski in his status as equity security holder, and therefore could conceivably fall within § 503(b)(3)(D), whether Mr. Gorski made a substantial contribution under § 503(b)(3)(D) and (4) warranting approval of any of those fees under that section and, if so, what is the reasonable amount of any such attorney's fees?

STANDARD OF APPELLATE REVIEW

This Court "review[s] a bankruptcy appeal differently than a typical appeal from the District Court. The bankruptcy court makes findings of fact and conclusions of law. The [bankruptcy appellate panel or] district court[[2]] then reviews the bankruptcy court's findings of fact for clear error and the bankruptcy court's conclusions of law de novo. STATEMENT OF THE CASE

This appeal involves the question whether § 503(b)(3)(D) and (4) require the Henricks Commerce Park, LLC (the "Debtor") chapter 11 bankruptcy estate to use estate assets to pay the attorney's fees that Simon incurred in representing Mr. Gary T. Gorski, who is the Debtor's sole equity holder and sole managing member. The Debtor filed a petition for relief under chapter 11 of the Bankruptcy Code on August 28, 2002. (Bankr. Doc. entry 1; Apx. ___). On January 26, 2004, the bankruptcy court entered an order denying the Debtor's motion, brought under § 327 of the Code, asking the court to appoint Simon as its bankruptcy counsel. The court denied the motion because Simon's lack of disinterestedness rendered it ineligible under § 327 to act as Henricks' counsel. (R. 82 Order denying application to retain Simon; Apx. _____). Neither the Debtor nor Simon appealed the disqualification order. Sixteen months later, Mr. Gorski filed a motion under 11 U.S.C. 503(b)(3)(D) and (b)(4) asking the bankruptcy court to order the Debtor's bankruptcy estate to pay all fees Simon had incurred since the disqualification order. This motion was based on the ground that services had been provided to Mr. Gorski, not the debtor, and those services met § 503(b)(3)(D)'s requirement that they made a substantial contribution to the Debtor's bankruptcy case. (R. 252 Motion for payment of Simon 's fees; Apx. __). The United States Trustee objected to the motion.[3] (R. 255 Objection of UST to Simon's fees; Apx. ___).

The bankruptcy court denied the motion finding Simon's prior disqualification under § 327 rendered it ineligible to receive fees under § 503(b)(3)(D) and (4). (R. 260 Memorandum and opinion; Apx. ___). Mr. Gorski appealed the bankruptcy court's decision to the appellate panel which affirmed on an alternative ground - holding Simon performed debtor's work, and § 503(b)(3)(D) and (4) do not allow recoveries for such work because they restrict recoveries to work performed for equity

STATEMENT OF FACTS

I. Statutory Framework

a. Debtors Have Ascribed Duties and Obligations Imposed by the Bankruptcy Code.[4]

In a chapter 11 bankruptcy proceeding, a debtor or debtor-in-possession assumes most of the rights and duties of a trustee. 11 U.S.C. § 1107(a).[5] The Bankruptcy Code imposes specific duties and obligations upon debtors. Among other things, a debtor-in-possession has the duty to be accountable for estate assets (11 U.S.C. § 704(a)(2)); review and object to claims (11 U.S.C. § 704(a)(5)); provide requested information to parties in interest (11 U.S.C. § 704(a)(7)); file reports regarding business operations and other requested information where debtor-in-possession has an operating business (11 U.S.C. § 704(a)(8), Fed. R. Bankr. P. 2015); file a plan and disclosure statement (11 U.S.C. § 1106(a)(5) and 1125); file

---

[4] The Bankruptcy Code was substantially amended by the Bankruptcy Abuse Prevention and Consumer Protection Act of 2005 which, in general, became effective on October 17, 2005. Since this case was filed prior to the effective date of the amendments, the amendments do not apply to this case.

[5] A debtor means "debtor-in-possession" in a chapter 11 case unless a trustee is appointed. 11 U.S.C. § 1101(1).

postconfirmation reports (11 U.S.C. § 1106(a)(7)); and operate its business, unless ordered otherwise.

Some of these duties may only be performed by a debtor. These tasks encompass the internal operations of the debtor's business and certain tasks specific to bankruptcy that only a debtor has authority to undertake. Responsibilities exclusive to a debtor include filing monthly operating reports with the United States Trustee and bankruptcy court; securing authority to use cash collateral and selling assets outside of the ordinary course of business (11 U.S.C. § 363 authorizes debtor to use cash collateral or sell assets after notice and a hearing); securing credit or financing (11 U.S.C. § 364 providing for debtor to secure credit or financing); assuming and rejecting leases (11 U.S.C. § 365 provides debtor may assume or reject unexpired lease of executory contract); prosecuting lawsuits against creditors (11 U.S.C. § 545 allows debtor to avoid statutory lien, 547 provides for debtor to avoid preferential transfers, and 548 allows for avoidance of fraudulent transfers).

Other tasks, while falling within the scope of responsibilities of a debtor, may also be undertaken by other interested parties. For example, non-debtor parties are specifically authorized to file a plan of reorganization (11 U.S.C. § 1121) and object to claims (11 U.S.C. § 502). Some courts have determined that parties in interest, other than a debtor, may also prosecute certain causes of action upon court authorization.

b. Bankruptcy Code § 327 Provides the Exclusive Mechanism for Selecting Attorneys to Perform Duties of a Debtor and § 330 Provides the Sole Means to Award Compensation for Such Services.

A debtor in possession, with court approval, may retain counsel to help it carry out its debtor duties. 11 U.S.C. § 327(a) (giving courts discretion to make such appointments). To qualify to represent a debtor, counsel must not represent an interest adverse to the estate and must be disinterested. Id.

In addition to court approval of a debtor's attorney, the Bankruptcy Code also requires an attorney who is authorized to represent a debtor to have its fees approved before they are paid by a debtor. 11 U.S.C. 330(a)(1). Section 330 of the Bankruptcy Code provides that after notice and a hearing, the court may award reasonable compensation and expenses to a professional retained under § 327.

Only those professionals approved by the court under § 327(a) may apply to the court for compensation. Therefore, an attorney seeking payment of fees from a bankruptcy estate must 1) be approved by the Bankruptcy Court, and 2) secure, upon application to the Court, an order approving its fees. The Supreme Court has held that a debtor's attorney is not entitled to be compensated from a bankruptcy estate under 11 U.S.C. § 330 unless retained with bankruptcy court authority. Lamie v. United States Trustee, 540 U.S. 526, 124 S. Ct. 1023 (2004) (counsel retained by debtor-in-possession in chapter 11 proceeding was not entitled to compensation for services rendered on behalf of debtor after case converted to chapter 7 when counsel was not retained by chapter 7 trustee post-conversion).

c. The Bankruptcy Code Provides Equity Holders and Creditors an Administrative Expense Claim for Fees When a Substantial Contribution to the Estate is Demonstrated.

Bankruptcy Code § 503(b)(3)(D) provides that certain parties, including an equity holder, may ask the court to require the bankruptcy estate to pay expenses it incurred in making a "substantial contribution in [the] case." 11 U.S.C. § 503(b)(3)(D).[6] This statute is restricted to expenses incurred by an equity holder, creditor, indenture trustee, and a committee. It is not available to a debtor and does not allow expenses of an equity holder incurred for services rendered to a debtor. Id.

[6] 11 U.S.C. § 503(b)(3)(D) provides:

> After notice and a hearing, there shall be allowed, administrative expenses, other than claims allowed under § 502(f) of this title, including –
>
> > (3) the actual, necessary expenses, other than compensation and reimbursement specified in paragraph (4) of this subsection, incurred by –
> > > (D) a creditor, an indenture trustee, an equity holder, or a committee representing creditors or equity security holders other than a committee appointed under § 1102 of this title, making a substantial contribution in a case under chapter 9 or 11 of this title;

If an equity holder demonstrates a substantial contribution has been made in the case, the party may then have its attorney's fees reimbursed to the extent they constitute "reasonable compensation for professional services...based upon the time, the nature, the extent, and the value of such services...." 11 U.S.C. § 503(b)(4).

II. Statement of Facts

Henricks Commerce Park, LLC filed a petition for relief under chapter 11 of the Bankruptcy Code on August 28, 2002. (Bankr. Doc. entry 1; Apx. ___). The Debtor's sole managing member and sole equity holder is Gary T. Gorski. (R. 252 p. 1 Motion for Payment of Simon's fees p. 1; Apx. ___). At the outset of this case, the Debtor secured a bankruptcy court order under 11 U.S.C. § 327 authorizing it to retain Porter Wright Morris & Arthur LLP as its bankruptcy counsel in the Debtor's chapter 11 bankruptcy proceeding. (R. 25 Order authorizing retention of Porter Wright; Apx. __). Thereafter, Porter Wright appeared on behalf of and represented the Debtor in its chapter 11 bankruptcy proceeding.

Sixteen months later, on December 31, 2003, the Debtor filed an emergency application to employ Simon as its substitute legal counsel. (R. 67 Emergency application of debtor to retain Simon; Apx ___). The United States Trustee objected to the Debtor's emergency application to retain Simon because Simon did not meet the requirements for retention under 11 U.S.C. § 327.[7] (R. 69 Objection of UST to Simon retention; Apx. ___). The bankruptcy court entered an order denying Simon's retention after a hearing because it did not meet the standards of § 327(a). The court determined Simon's personal representation of Henricks' sole shareholder - Mr. Gorski - in his individual bankruptcy case gave it a conflict between the Debtor estate and someone with an equity interest in the estate; Simon received a substantial post petition retainer from Mr. Gorski; and, Mr. Gorski, not the Debtor, would continue to pay Simon for the work it performed on the Debtor's behalf in the bankruptcy case. (R. 82 Order denying Simon retention; Apx. ___).

Neither Simon nor the Debtor appealed the order denying Simon's retention. Porter Wright remained the only firm approved under § 327 to provide bankruptcy services to the Debtor. Three days after Simon was disqualified from representing the Debtor, Simon filed a notice of appearance on behalf of Mr. Gorski.

(Bankr. Doc. entry 87; Apx. __).

[7] 11 U.S.C. § 327(a) provides:

> Except as otherwise provided in this section, the trustee, with the court's approval, may employ one or more attorneys, accountants, appraisers, auctioneers, or other professional persons, that do not hold or represent an interest adverse to the estate, and that are disinterested persons, to represent or assist the trustee in carrying out the trustee's duties under this title.

Simon then commenced rendering services on behalf of Mr. Gorski that were duties of the Debtor. Simon provided some services that were within the exclusive duties of the Debtor and provided other services that were responsibilities of the Debtor but which could be independently provided by non-debtor parties.

Simon undertook tasks that were exclusively the Debtor's responsibilities as follows:

> 1. Retention of professionals - Simon negotiated, drafted and filed joint motions requesting authority for Debtor to retain professionals including an appraiser, loan broker and special counsel. (Bankr. Doc entries 149, 159, 235; R. 252 Motion for payment of Simon's fees, Ex. 2 p.21, 26-27, 65; Apx. ___). See 11 U.S.C. § 1107 and 327(a) (debtor has authority to retain professionals to carry out debtor's duties).
>
> 2. Operating reports - Simon reviewed and filed Debtor's monthly operating reports. (Bankr. Doc. entries 152, 153, 156, 175, 185, 189, 206, 218, 245, 247, 258, 259; R. 252 Motion for payment of Simon's fees, Ex. 2 p. 24, 31, 32, 40, 44, 49, 57,67; Apx.___). See 11 U.S.C. § 704(8) (debtor has duty to file periodic reports with Court and U.S. Trustee.); Fed. R. Bankr. P. 2015 (duty to keep records and reports).
>
> 3. Cash collateral - Simon drafted and filed joint motions for the Debtor's use of cash collateral and negotiated agreements for the Debtor's use of cash collateral. (Bankr. Doc. entries 180, 181; R. 252 Motion for payment of Simon's fees, Ex. 1 p. 13, Ex. 2 p. 7, 8, 9, 10, 31, 36, 39-41, 43; Apx. ___). 11 U.S.C. § 363 (providing debtor may use cash collateral).
> 4. Financing - Simon drafted, filed and negotiated a joint motion for the Debtor to borrow funds for insurance premiums. (Bankr. Doc. entry 117; R. 252 Motion for payment of Simon's fees Ex. 1 p.13, Ex. 2 p. 9, 14; Apx. ____). 11 U.S.C. § 364 (debtor may borrow funds on certain terms).

5. Lease assumption - Simon negotiated, drafted, and filed a joint motion for the Debtor to assume its lease with Main Steel. (Bankr. Doc. entry 222; R. 252 Motion for payment of Simon's fees Ex. 1 p. 13, Ex. 2 p. 26, 62; Apx. ___). 11 U.S.C. § 365 (debtor may assume or reject unexpired leases and executory contracts).

6. Internal business matters and operations - Simon worked with Debtor's sole managing member, facilities manager (Dan Cagle), and accountant (Mike Gaia) and assisted with internal business matters such as insurance, property appraisals, tenants and leases, and real estate taxes. (R. 252 Motion for payment of Simon's fees, Ex. 1 p. 13, Ex. 2 p. 8, 13, 17, 21, 26, 30, 41,50, 61, 64, 65, 67, 68; Apx. ___). 11 U.S.C. § 1108 (unless ordered otherwise, debtor may operate its business).

The motion for payment of Simon's fees categorizes 78.30 hours of time spent on financing, cash collateral, and efforts to seek long term financing; 33 hours of time spent relating to case administration which would include finalizing and filing operating reports and other administrative tasks; and, 10.40 hours of time spent on business operations including lease approval. (R. 252 Motion for payment of Simon's fees, Ex. 1 p. 13; Apx. ___).

Simon litigated and settled disputes of the Debtor. The firm filed complaints for the Debtor that also named Mr. Gorski as a plaintiff. These actions were for the purpose of litigating claims disputed by the Debtor and/or administering estate assets. Simon negotiated and drafted settlements of adversary proceedings as well as disputes with the Debtor's creditors. These actions and settlements involved the following:

1. Danieli Litigation - Simon drafted and filed a complaint commenced by the Debtor and Mr. Gorski to determine the extent and validity and amount of the Danieli/Sky Bank secured claim, handled discovery, briefed and litigated this action. The docket identifies the Debtor and Mr. Gorski as plaintiffs and lists Simon as counsel for both parties. Simon & Short states its time totaled 161.2 hours for this action. (Bankr. Pro. Doc. No. 04-4097; R. 252 Motion for payment of Simon's fees, Ex. 1 p. 5-6, 13, Ex. 2 p. 19, 21, 25, 26-42; Apx. ___).

2. Tort Litigation - Simon drafted and filed a complaint for the Debtor against its secured creditor (Danieli) and real estate leasing agent (Oxford) for certain tort actions and handled discovery resulting in 124.7 hours of time charged by Simon. The Debtor as well as Mr. Gorski were named as plaintiffs in this action. (Bankr. Pro. Doc. No. 04-4096; R. 252 Motion for payment of Simon's fees, Ex. 1 p. 6-7, Ex. 2 p. 19-25, 27-33, 41-48; Apx. ___).

3. Danieli Settlement - Simon negotiated with the Debtor's secured creditor and for a resolution of all issues with Danieli and reviewed, revised, and filed motion for approval of settlement agreement. Simon requested fees for 71 hours of time related to this settlement. (Bankr. Doc. entry 207; R. 252 Motion for payment of Simon's fees, Ex. 1 p. 7-9, 14, Ex. 2 p. 47-56; Apx. ___). Fed. R. Bankr. P. 9019(a) (debtor in possession may file motion for approval to compromise or settle matter).

4. Oxford Settlement - Simon negotiated and sought approval of a settlement of claims between Oxford and the Debtor totaling 17.3 hours. (Bankr. Doc. entry 207; R. 252 Motion for payment of Simon's fees, Ex. 1 p. 9, 14, Ex. 2 p. 49-58; Apx. ___).

5. Employee personal injury claim - Simon spent 8.10 hours of time drafting and filing an objection of the Debtor and Mr. Gorski to this claim and negotiating an agreement for this matter to be adjudicated in state court. (Bankr. Doc. entry 199, 210; R. 252 Motion for payment of Simon's fees, Ex. 1 p. 9-10, 14; Apx ___).

6. Settlement of mechanics lien of Kleen All of America, Inc. for remediation work rendered to Debtor - Simon drafted a complaint that was not filed against Kleen All challenging the amount and extent of its mechanics lien and negotiated, drafted, and filed a joint motion seeking approval of a settlement of the claim. The time Simon spent on these tasks totaled 19.10 hours. (Bankr.

> Doc. entry 221; R. 252 Motion for payment of Simon's fees, Ex. 1 p. 10-11, 14, Ex. 2 p. 47, 58-61, 63; Apx. ___).
> 7. Debtor's claim against environmental consultant - Simon spent 11.10 hours of time relating to litigation of the Debtor's claim against its environmental consultant for breach of contract and negligence. Services included drafting an exhibit list and discussions with Debtor's special counsel who was approved to represent the Debtor in this matter. (R. 252 Motion for payment of Simon's fees, Ex. 1 p. 11-12, 14, Ex. 2 p. 50-51, 58, 62-66; Apx ___).

Simon also filed for Mr. Gorski a motion to intervene generally in an action that was commenced by the Debtor against its tenant Main Steel:

> Main Steel Litigation -Simon filed a motion to intervene for Mr. Gorski in this adversary action initiated by the Debtor against Main Steel relating to a rent dispute. The firm rendered services relating to a settlement totaling 65.40 hours. (Bankr. Adv. Pro. Doc. No. 02-4247; R. 252 Motion for payment of Simon's fees, Ex. 1 p. 13, Ex. 2 p. 6-7, 11-17; Apx. ___). 11 U.S.C. § 502 (party in interest may object to claims), 704(5) (debtor has duty to examine and object to claims); Fed. R. Bankr. P. 6009 (debtor in possession may defend or initiate any action on behalf of debtor).

Simon rendered some services that were within the scope of the Debtor's duties but which were not exclusive to a debtor. These services included the following:

> Disclosure statement and plan of reorganization - Simon formed a plan strategy, drafted, negotiated, and filed a disclosure statement and plan and various amended versions of a joint disclosure statements and joint plan of reorganization and reviewed and objected to secured creditor's disclosure statement and plan totaling 320 hours of time. (Bankr. Doc. entries 88, 89, 113, 114, 123, 132, 133, 150, 151, R. 252 Motion for payment of Simon's fees, Ex. 1 p. 13, Ex. 2 p. 15-21; Apx. ___). 11 U.S.C. § 1106(5) (debtor in possession has duty to file plan under § 1122); See also 11 U.S.C. § 1125 (plan cannot be solicited without disclosure statement).

During the time Simon rendered these services, Porter Wright remained the Debtor's only approved counsel authorized under § 327 to assist the Debtor with carrying out its general bankruptcy duties. However, Porter Wright was limited in its capacity to act on behalf of the Debtor as Mr. Gorski acted "solely with and through [Simon] in the Bankruptcy Proceedings, both in his capacity as sole representative of the Debtor and as the sole equity security holder of the Debtor...." (R. 252, Motion for payment of Simon's fees, Ex. 3 Gorski Affidavit, p.2; Apx. ___). The Debtor had little contact with Porter Wright once Mr. Gorski retained Simon as his personal counsel. (R. 252, Motion for payment of Simon's fees, Ex. 3 Gorski Affidavit, p.3; Apx. ___). Simon would advise Porter Wright as to efforts being made relating to the Debtor's reorganization and other efforts. On a significant number of occasions, documents drafted by Simon were forwarded to Porter Wright for review, comment and approval. (R. 252, Motion for payment of Simon's fees Ex. 4 Short Affidavit, p. 2-4, Ex. 5 Simon Affidavit, p. 2-4; Apx. ___).

After an order was entered confirming the Debtor's Joint Plan of Reorganization. (Bankr. Doc. entry 249; Apx. ___), Mr. Gorski filed the motion for payment of Simon's fees as an administrative expense of the bankruptcy estate based upon a substantial contribution pursuant to 11 U.S.C. § 503(b)(3)(D) and (b)(4) (R. 252 Motion for payment of Simon's fees; Apx. ___) and a brief in support (R. 253 Brief; Apx. __). Mr. Gorski requested approval of legal fees incurred by Simon in the amount of $298,590 and reimbursement of expenses in the amount of $3,392.62 pursuant to 11 U.S.C. § 503(b)(3)(D) and (b)(4). (R. 252, Motion for payment of Simon's fees, p. 1; Apx.___). The United States Trustee objected to the motion on the ground that the work performed was debtor's work and that no substantial contribution was made in any event. (R. 255 UST Objection to motion for payment of Simon's fees, p. 5; Apx. __).

The bankruptcy court held a hearing on the motion on June 8, 2005 (Bankr. Doc. entry dated 6/8/2005; Apx. ___), and on June 15, 2005 entered a Memorandum Opinion and Order denying Simon's fees. (R. 260 Memorandum opinion and order; Apx. ____). The bankruptcy court held Simon's fees were not entitled to administrative expense treatment because Simon was disqualified by court order from representing the Debtor and the fees it incurred were for representing Mr. Gorski in his capacity as sole managing member and sole equity holder of the Debtor. (R. 260 Memorandum opinion and order, p. 4, 7; Apx ___.) The court noted that Mr. Gorski admitted he used Simon on behalf of the Debtor as well as on behalf of himself. (R. 260 Memorandum opinion and order p. 8; Apx. ___). The bankruptcy court found that despite Simon's disqualification, Mr. Gorski retained Simon to represent him as sole equity holder and also as the Debtor's sole representative. The Court determined that parties negotiating with Simon must have assumed the law firm had the authority to bind the Debtor or else they would not have settled matters with Mr. Gorski. The bankruptcy court therefore found that the work Simon undertook was for the Debtor and that Mr. Gorski's two roles were so intertwined that it was not possible to separate fees that related only to representation of him as sole shareholder. (R. 260 Memorandum opinion and order p. 12-13; Apx. ___). Based upon these finding, the bankruptcy court ruled that the disqualification of Simon precluded an administrative expense claim for attorney fees incurred by Simon in the representation of Mr. Gorski under 11 U.S.C. 503(b)(3)(D) and (4). (R. 260 Memorandum opinion and order, p. 13; Apx. ___).

Mr. Gorski timely asked the court to alter or amend its order (R. 262 Motion to alter or amend; Apx. ___), to which the United States Trustee filed an objection (R. 263 Objection of UST to motion to alter or amend; Apx. ___). The bankruptcy court entered an order denying the motion to alter or amend on July 8, 2005. (R. 264 Order denying motion to alter or amend; Apx. __). The bankruptcy court noted that Mr. Gorski presented no new law or facts; he had the opportunity to introduce evidence; and his conduct amounted to a waiver of an evidentiary hearing. The court reiterated the facts demonstrated that Simon's fees were incurred on behalf of Mr. Gorski as sole representative of the Debtor and sole equity holder and that counsel for a debtor had to be disinterested in accordance with 11 U.S.C. § 327. Simon's performance of services on behalf of Mr. Gorski individually while also performing services for the Debtor did not allow for Simon to bypass the disinterested requirement. (R. 264 Order denying motion to alter or amend, p. 3-4; Apx. __).

Mr. Gorski appealed the order denying his motion to the appellate panel by timely Notice of Appeal on July 18, 2005. (R. 266 Notice of appeal; Apx. ___). The United States Trustee took the position on appeal that the bankruptcy court was correct in its final decision but erred in its legal conclusion that the order disqualifying Simon from representing the Debtor automatically precluded an allowance of attorney fees under 11 U.S.C. 503(b)(3)(D) and (b)(4). On appeal, the United States Trustee requested a remand to the bankruptcy court to address two issues: 1) whether the fees incurred by Simon were incurred for Debtor work or work on behalf of the Debtor that fall outside of § 503(b)(3)(D) and (4); and 2) if legal services performed for Mr. Gorski fall within the parameters of 11 U.S.C. § 503(b)(3)(D), whether Mr. Gorskit made a "substantial contribution" under 11 U.S.C. § 503(b)(3)(D) and (4) warranting administrative expense treatment of legal fees. (BAP entry 11/1/2005 Brief of UST).

On appeal, the appellate panel affirmed the bankruptcy court decision denying Mr. Gorski reimbursement of his counsel fees from the bankruptcy estate and found that a remand was not appropriate. The appellate panel found "no clear error in the bankruptcy court's factual finding that the S & S Firm's work was actually performed on behalf of the Debtor itself." (BAP Doc. 6/15/06 Opinion, p. 10; Apx. ____). The appellate panel noted, after a review of the record, that Simon "was in effect representing the Debtor" (BAP Doc. 6/15/06 Opinion, p.11-12; Apx. ____).

The appellate panel agreed with the United States Trustee that § 503(b)(3)(D) and (b)(4) do not contain any disinterested requirement and that an order disqualifying counsel from representing a debtor under § 327(a) does not automatically preclude treatment of counsel's fees as an administrative expense under 503(b)(3)(D) and (b)(4). However, the appellate panel emphasized that "allowance under § 503(b)(3)(D) and (b)(4) is limited to specified entities: 'a creditor, an indenture trustee, an equity holder, or a committee representing creditors or equity security holders....' Thus, before the issues of substantial contribution and reasonableness may be considered, a movant under [Section] 503(b)(3)(D) and (4) must establish that it is one of the covered entities." (BAP Doc. 6/15/06 Opinion, p. 8; Apx. ____). The appellate panel concluded based on the bankruptcy court record that "[i]t was undisputed that the work performed by [Simon] was work which would routinely be performed by a debtor's counsel." (BAP Doc. 6/15/06 Opinion, p. 9; Apx. ____). The appellate panel further determined that Mr. Short conceded at oral argument that his firm represented the Debtor when he agreed with the bankruptcy court that Debtor's sole managing member and sole equity holder was the same person in terms of approving Simon's actions and Mr. Short conceded at oral argument that he never distinguished between the two. (BAP Doc. 6/15/06, Opinion, p. 10; Apx. ____). The appellate panel found the record supported the bankruptcy court's determination that it was impossible to decipher services rendered by Simon on behalf of Gorski as sole equity holder from those tasks rendered for Mr. Gorski as Debtor's sole managing member. The appellate panel noted that Mr. Gorski never identified any tasks Simon performed for the Debtor's sole managing member that were separate from those services it rendered for Mr. Gorski as sole equity holder and Mr. Gorski did not dispute this finding of the bankruptcy court. The appellate panel stated fees incurred by Simon on behalf of the Debtor's sole managing member were not compensable under § 503(b)(3)(D) because it does not apply to a debtor's attorney fees. Further, the appellate panel found that any services performed on behalf of Mr. Gorski as sole equity holder were so intertwined with the services rendered on behalf of him as the Debtor's sole managing member so as to fall outside of the scope of this provision. (BAP Doc. 6/15/06 Opinion, p. 12; Apx. ____).

The appellate panel further concluded that since the services rendered by Simon were on behalf of Mr. Gorski in his capacity as Debtor's sole managing member, i.e.

the Debtor, as well as Debtor's sole equity holder, fees had to be reviewed in the context of § 327 and 330 as well as § 503(b)(3)(D) and (b)(4). (BAP Doc. 6/15/06 Opinion, p. 11-12; Apx. __).

Given the record, and Mr. Short's concessions, the appellate panel held a remand was not necessary because the record clearly supported the bankruptcy court's factual findings that Simon rendered services on behalf of Mr. Gorski and the Debtor; and, the services rendered were so intertwined that they could not be attributable solely to equity precluding Mr. Gorski's claim under § 503(b)(3)(D) and (b)(4). At the end of its decision, the appellate panel also noted that it would not remand the case for further findings as to what services were rendered on behalf of Debtor and what work was performed on behalf of equity. (BAP Doc. 6/15/06 Opinion, p. 12-13; Apx. ___.)

Mr. Gorski filed a timely notice of appeal of the appellate panel decision affirming the Bankruptcy Court decision on July 12, 2006. (BAP Doc. 7/12/06 Notice of appeal; Apx. __.)

SUMMARY OF ARGUMENT

This Court can affirm the appellate panel's decision affirming the bankruptcy court's denial of Mr. Gorski's administrative expense claim under 11 U.S.C. § 503(b)(3)(D) and (b)(4) for attorney fees incurred by Simon because Mr. Gorski's claim falls outside the scope of recoveries allowed by those sections. Section 503(b)(3)(D) and (4) allow compensation only for fees incurred by one of four types of entities - equity security holders, creditors, indenture trustees and committees. In this case, the bankruptcy court concluded the services Simon provided involved debtor services, which fall outside § 503(b)(3)(D) and (4). On appeal, the bankruptcy appellate panel relied upon the bankruptcy court record and concessions Simon made at oral argument to affirm on the ground that Simon's services were rendered on behalf of the Debtor or were so intertwined with services provided by the Debtor that they fell outside a possible § 503(b)(3)(D) and (4) recovery.

This ruling merits affirmance because the record and concessions below establish that Mr. Gorski used Simon in his capacity as the Debtor's sole managing member & sole equity holder to perform debtor services, including many services that the law allows only debtors to perform. As such, the courts below did not err in denying Mr. Gorski's claim for fees under § 503(b)(3)(D) and (b)(4).

In the alternative, if this Court determines the record and concessions below were not adequate to allow the appellate panel to conclude Simon provided solely debtor's services, this Court should remand this case to the bankruptcy court for further proceedings. If this Court remands, the United States Trustee respectfully asks that the remand include instructions that the bankruptcy court first determine whether any of the services were performed on behalf of an equity security holder, creditor, indenture trustee or committee. If they were, the court on remand would then determine whether any services conferred a "substantial benefit" in the case as required by § 503(b)(3)(D) and, if so, what would be the reasonable amount of fees recoverable for such services that contributed a substantial benefit to the case under § 503(b)(4).

ARGUMENT

I. The Record and Concessions Below Support the Appellate Panel's Conclusion that Mr. Gorski's Claim for Attorney Fees Falls Outside the Scope of § 503(b)(3)(d) and (b)(4), given Simon's work in the case, which involved services that were Exclusively Duties of the Debtor or Litigation of Debtor Disputes where the Debtor was the Primary Plaintiff.

The record below and the concessions Simon made at oral argument support the appellate panel determination that Mr. Gorski's claim for attorney fees fall outside the scope of Bankruptcy Code § 503(b)(3)(D) and (b)(4) because services rendered by Simon were duties of a debtor which only the Debtor had authority to undertake, or related to litigation of debtor disputes where the Debtor was the primary plaintiff. Mr. Gorski's motion for payment of Simon's fees, including the attached exhibits and affidavits of Mr. Simon, Mr. Short, and Mr. Gorski detailing the services rendered, his brief in support, as well as the bankruptcy court docket demonstrate that, as a matter of fact, services rendered by Simon were duties of the Debtor or litigation of debtor disputes where the Debtor was the primary party. Compensation for these types of services fall outside § 503(b)(3)(D) and (4) because those sections allow recoveries only by creditors, equity security holders, indenture trustees and committees. Id.

Not only is there no basis to pay Simon's fees under § 503(b)(3)(D) and (4) for performing debtor duties, but the United States Trustee, like the courts below, believes it was highly improper for Mr. Gorski to circumvent the bankruptcy court's prior order, disqualifying Simon from performing debtor's work - an order neither appealed, by rendering services that only debtors could lawfully perform under the facade of representing Mr. Gorski.[8] Put simply, Simon bypassed the bankruptcy court's disqualification order through prospectively performing for Mr. Gorski many of the same debtor tasks that only debtor's counsel could perform.

The record amply establishes that Simon performed tasks that were duties only the Debtor could undertake. The firm provided these debtor services knowing that it could not represent the Debtor and that the Debtor could have sought approval of other substitute bankruptcy counsel. (Gary Short response to Court questions at TR p. 216-217, 220-221; Apx. ___).

Simon assisted the Debtor with internal business operations. See 11 U.S.C. § 1108 (unless ordered otherwise, debtor may operate its business). It worked with the Debtor's sole managing member, facilities manager, and accountant and assisted with insurance issues, property appraisals, tenant and lease issues, and real estate taxes. (R. 252 Motion for payment of Simon's fees, Ex. 2 p. 8, 13, 17, 21, 26, 30, 41,50, 61, 64, 65, 67, 68; Apx. ___). Id. Simon filed motions to retain professionals to represent the Debtor. (Bankr. Doc entries 149, 159, 235; R. 252 Motion for payment of Simon's fees, Ex. 2 p.21, 26-27, 65; Apx. ___). See 1107 and 327(a) (debtor has authority to retain professionals to carry out debtor's duties). The firm assisted with the preparation and filing of the Debtor's monthly operating reports. (Bankr. Doc. entries 152, 153, 156, 175, 185, 189, 206, 218, 245, 247, 258, 259; R. 252 Motion for payment of Simon's fees, Ex. 2 p. 24, 31, 32, 40, 44, 49, 57,67; Apx.___). See 11 U.S.C. § 704(8) (debtor has duty to file periodic reports with Court and U.S. Trustee.); Fed. R. Bankr. P. 2015 (duty to keep records and reports). Simon sought and secured the Debtor's use of cash collateral. (Bankr. Doc. entries 180, 181 ; R. 252 Motion for payment of Simon's fees, Ex. 1 p. 13, Ex. 2 p. 7, 8, 9, 10, 31, 36, 39-41, 43; Apx.

___). See 11 U.S.C. § 363 (providing debtor may use cash collateral). It filed a motion for the Debtor to secure financing to pay its insurance. (Bankr. Doc. entry 117; R. 252 Motion for payment of Simon's fees Ex. 1 p. 13, Ex. 2 p. 9, 14; Apx. ____). See 11 U.S.C. § 364 (debtor may borrow funds on certain terms). Simon negotiated, drafted, and filed a motion to assume its lease with Main Steel. (Bankr. Doc. entry 222; R. 252 Motion for payment of Simon's fees Ex. 1 p. 5, 13, Ex. 2 p. 26, 62; Apx. ___). See 11 U.S.C. § 365 (debtor may assume or reject unexpired leases and executory contracts).

Since these tasks were exclusive duties of the Debtor, Simon could only be compensated for these services if the bankruptcy court had entered an order under § 327(a) authorizing the Debtor to retain Simon to assist the Debtor in carrying out its debtor duties. 11 U.S.C. § 327. See 11 U.S.C. § 327 and 330. Lamie v. United States Trustee, 540 U.S. 526, 124 S. Ct. 1023 (2004). The bankruptcy court order denying Simon's employment by the Debtor under § 327(a), prohibited Simon from lawfully providing debtor services to the Debtor.[9] (R. 82 Order denying Simon's retention;

[9] Mr. Gorski suggests the U.S. Trustee somehow approved of Simon's representation and resulting fees. Mr. Gorski asserts the United States Trustee requested "Gorski, as 'equity', and the Debtor act jointly on matters in the case, if possible, including submission of plan(s) of reorganization" and allegedly stated "if the Debtor and Gorski did not act jointly going forward, the U.S. Trustee may file a motion to have a chapter 11 trustee appointed." (Gorski Brief p. 14-15). First, the U.S. Trustee disputes Appellant's assertions and further states that any

Since Simon was precluded from representing the debtor, as a matter of law, it cannot be compensated for these debtor services which are the sole responsibility of the Debtor. 11 U.S.C. § 327(a) and 330. See also In re 5900 Associates, Inc., __ 3rd __, 2006 WL 3196441 (6th Cir. 2006) (stating "11 U.S.C. § 330 establishes the exclusive means of allowing a claim for professional fees in a bankruptcy proceeding" and finding counsel retained under 327 whose fees were never allowed by Bankruptcy Court under 330 could not enforce claim after case was dismissed).

Mr. Gorski also seeks payment of Simon's fees resulting from litigating and settling debtor disputes. Simon commenced lawsuits and/or assisted with resolving disputes in which the Debtor was the primary plaintiff. In the lawsuits, Mr. Gorski in his capacity as the Debtor's sole managing member and sole equity holder was also named as a plaintiff. Simon drafted and filed an action of the Debtor against Danieli alleged statements are reinterpretations of discussions which related to attempted resolution of pending matters (and thus not admissible evidence) which did not in any way involve "pre-approval" of any legal costs which might be incurred by Appellant. Second, even if Mr. Gorski's assertions were true, the parties could not vitiate the court's § 327 disqualification order. The bankruptcy court ruled Simon could not represent this debtor; the United States Trustee had no power to supercede that order. Third, Mr. Gorski cannot estop the United States government. See Estate of Elinor M. James v. U.S. Department of Agriculture, 404 F. 3d 989 (6th Cir. 2005) (noting federal government cannot be estopped as private parties, rather evidence must show affirmative misconduct by government agent).

challenging the validity and extent of a security interest acquired from Sky Bank. (Bankr. Pro. Doc. No. 04-4097; R. 252 Motion for payment of Simon's fees, Ex. 1 p. 5-6, 13, Ex. 2 p. 19, 21, 25, 26-42; Apx. ___). Simon drafted and filed a tort action for the Debtor against its secured creditor and real estate leasing agent. (Bankr. Pro. Doc. No. 04-4096; R. 252 Motion for payment of Simon & Short's fees, Ex. 1 p. 6-7, Ex. 2 p. 19-25, 27-33, 41-48; Apx. ___). Simon filed a motion to intervene generally for Mr. Gorski in an action involving a rent dispute which was commenced by the Debtor against its tenant Main Steel. (Bankr. Adv. Pro. Doc. No. 02-4247; R. 252 Motion for payment of Simon's fees, Ex. 1 p. 5, 13, Ex. 2 p. 6-7, ____; Apx. ___).

Simon negotiated a global settlement with Danieli resolving all issues and reviewed, revised, and filed a motion for approval of the settlement agreement. (Bankr. Doc. entry 207; R. 252 Motion for payment of Simon's fees, Ex. 1 p. 7-9, 14, Ex. 2 p. 47-56; Apx. ___). The firm negotiated and sought approval of a settlement of claims between the Debtor and Oxford, its real estate leasing agent. (Bankr. Doc. entry 207; R. 252 Motion for payment of Simon's fees, Ex. 1 p. 7-9, 14, Ex. 2 p. 49-58; Apx. ___). Simon filed an objection of the Debtor and Mr. Gorski to a personal injury claim brought by an employee against the Debtor and negotiated an agreement for this claim to be adjudicated in state court. (Bankr. Doc. entry 199, 210; R. 252 Motion for payment of Simon's fees, Ex. 1 p. 9-10, 14; Apx ___.) The firm drafted a complaint against the holder of a mechanics lien filed against the Debtor, and it negotiated, drafted, and filed a joint motion seeking approval of a settlement of the claim. (Bankr. Doc. entry 221; R. 252 Motion for payment of Simon's fees, Ex. 1 p. 10-11, 14, Ex. 2 p. 47, 58-61, 63). Simon provided services relating to litigation of the Debtor's claim against an environmental consultant for breach of contract and negligence. (R. 252 Motion for payment of Simon's fees Ex. 1 p. 11-12, 14, Ex. 2 p. 50-51, 58, 62-66).

These litigation and dispute settlement services provided by Simon (as well as all of the other services provided by Simon) were performed in the name of Mr. Gorski as the Debtor's sole managing member and sole equity holder. However, the underlying actions involved disputes and/or claims of the Debtor in which the Debtor was the primary plaintiff. (R. 252 Motion for payment of Simon's fees Exhibit 1, p. 5-12; Apx. __).

Some of these litigation services provided by Simon related to litigation that was not within the exclusive duties of the Debtor. See 11 U.S.C. § 502 (party in interest may object to claims). However, the Debtor was the primary plaintiff in all of these matters and only the Debtor had authority to prosecute bankruptcy actions and settle all of the debtor disputes. Fed. R. Bankr. P. 6009 (debtor in possession may defend or initiate any action on behalf of debtor); 9019 (trustee or debtor may move to compromise or settle dispute). See also 11 U.S.C. § 704(5) (debtor has duty to examine and object to claims). In each of these matters, Simon was only able to file the complaints and/or settle the disputes because the Debtor was the primary plaintiff and agreed to the settlements. See Fed. R. Bankr. P. 6009 and 9019. Fees resulting from Simon's litigation of actions and settlement of disputes in which the Debtor was the primary plaintiff are not recoverable under § 503(b)(3)(D) and (b)(4). As admitted by Mr. Gorski, Simon handled these Debtor actions on behalf of Mr. Gorski as sole equity holder and also as the Debtor's sole representative. Mr. Gorski as sole representative of the Debtor did not deal with the Debtor's firm. Rather, he acted for the Debtor through Simon. (R. 252 Motion for Payment of Simon's fees, Exhibit 3 Gorski affidavit p. 2-3; Apx. __). As stated by Mr. Short at the bankruptcy court hearing, Simon acted as lead counsel in this case. (Gary Short at TR 14; Apx. ___).

Therefore, Mr. Gorski cannot recover Simon's fees for these litigation and settlement services because § 503(b)(3)(D) and (b)(4) do not cover expenses of a Debtor. § 503(b)(3)(D) and (b)(4) by its own terms is only available to a creditor or equity holder. See In re Lebron, 27 F. 3d 937, 943 (3rd Cir. 1994) (stating "under 503(b)(3)(D) four categories of persons may apply for reimbursement of expenses: (1) creditors, (2) indenture trustees, (3) equity security holders, and (4) creditor and equity holder committees....”). See also, In re American Plumbing and Mechanical, Inc., 327 B.R. 273, 293-294 (Bankr. W.D. Texas 2005) (debtor’s founders who were also officers and directors and equity holders could not assert claim to extent acted in capacity as officers and directors since outside scope of § 503(b)(3)(D).)

Mr. Gorski argues that the appellate panel erred in considering the type of services rendered and who typically provides such services under § 503(b)(3)(D) and (b)(4). Instead, Mr. Gorski argues the test is whether a substantial contribution was made in the case and the results of services rendered. (Gorski Brief p. 32-34). As a matter of law Mr. Gorski is incorrect. As set forth above, § 503(b)(3)(D) and (b)(4) do not cover the expenses of a Debtor nor do they apply to professional services for a Debtor. Rather, Bankruptcy Code § 327, 330 and 331 are the sole provisions that provide for the retention and payment of a debtor’s counsel for debtor services. See also In re 5900 Associates, Inc., __ 3rd __, 2006 WL 3196441 (6th Cir. 2006).

Mr. Gorski in his capacity as Debtor’s sole equity holder did have authority to file a plan and disclosure statement. 11 U.S.C. § 1121(c). Simon did prepare a plan and disclosure statement, amended versions of such documents, and negotiated with creditors on the terms of the plan and treatment of claims. Approximately one-third of the fees requested by Simon relates to plan and disclosure statement related services. (R. 252 Motion for payment of Simon's fees Ex. 1 p. 12-13; Apx. __).

However, as properly concluded by the bankruptcy court and the appellate panel, Simon rendered services to Mr. Gorski as Debtor's sole role representative and sole equity holder. (R. 260 Memorandum opinion p. 7; BAP Doc 6/15/06 Opinion p. 9; Apx. ___). The motion for payment of Simon's fees was filed by Mr. Gorski in his dual position. The narrative, billing statements, and affidavits, fail to identify any disclosure statement and plan related services that were provided to Mr. Gorski solely in his capacity as the Debtor's sole equity holder. (R. 252 Motion for Payment of Simon's fees p. 1, 5, Ex. 1p. 1, 4-5, Ex. 3 Gorski affidavit; Apx. ___). Mr. Gorski's admission that he refused to work directly with Porter Wright on all matters including the plan and disclosure statement and his decision to work only through Simon in his capacity as Debtor's sole representative further shows he used Simon to represent the Debtor's interests. (R. 252 Motion for payment of Simon's fees Ex. 3 Gorski affidavit p. 2-3; Apx. ___).

Since Mr. Gorski failed to demonstrate any of Simon & Short's fees were for plan and disclosure related services rendered solely to Mr. Gorski in his capacity as equity holder, fees incurred in this category also fall outside the scope of § 503(b)(3)(D). Therefore, the appellate panel was correct in finding that Mr. Gorski's Motion for Payment of Simon's fees was without merit. (BAP Doc. 6/15/06 Opinion p. 12; Apx. ___).

II. In the alternative, if this Court determines that certain factual matters were not sufficiently developed, then a remand is warranted for a determination as to whether any of the services rendered by Simon & Short were for Mr. Gorski solely in his capacity as Debtor's sole equity holder and within the scope of § 503(b)(3)(D) and (b)(4).

The appellate panel properly held Mr. Gorski could not assert a claim under § 503(b)(3)(D) and (b)(4) because services rendered by Simon for Mr. Gorski were debtor services performed on behalf of Gorski as sole managing member of Debtor and Debtor's sole equity holder. The appellate panel refused to remand for any further factual determinations. (BAP Doc. 6/15/06 p. 12-13; Apx __). It specifically noted that Mr. Gorski had ample opportunity to present testimony and evidence to the Bankruptcy Court and he never requested an evidentiary hearing. He also never separated those services rendered by Simon, if any, that were performed for Debtor from those performed for equity. (BAP Doc. 6/16/06 p. 7, 12; Apx. __).

If this Court disagrees, and orders a remand for further factual findings, the United States Trustee respectfully requests that any such remand should first address whether any of the work performed by Simon was for services that could be performed by a party other than the Debtor and were provided solely to Mr. Gorski in his capacity as the Debtor's equity holder.

Mr. Gorski asks this Court to reverse the appellate panel decision and remand his motion for payment of Simon's fees solely for a determination on whether there was an '"actual and demonstrable benefit to the estate", the extent of that benefit, and the reasonableness of the fees. (Groski Brief p. 49-50). Mr. Gorski's request, however, omits any determination of this preliminary factual issue which is required for any fee allowance under § 503(b)(3)(D).

If on remand, Mr. Gorski shows that some tasks were in fact undertaken by Simon solely on behalf of Mr. Gorski as equity holder, only then would a determination be needed as to whether there was a "substantial contribution" and, if so, what would the reasonable fees be for those services.[10] If this case is remanded, it is important that the bankruptcy court be allowed to consider (a) whether these were impermissible debtor's services; (b) if any tasks were permissible as an equity security

[10] Equity security holders and others must meet a heavy burden in order to establish they made a substantial contribution in a bankruptcy case. In re Consolidated Bancshares, Inc., 785 F.2d 1249, 1253 (5th Cir. 1986) (court may award fees only when the applicant establishes that the services significantly "foster and enhance, rather than retard or interrupt the progress of reorganization."); Lebron v. Mecham Financial, Inc., 27 F.3d 937, 944 (3rd Cir. 1994) (The mere pursuit of an applicant's own interests in the case is insufficient, if the applicant cannot demonstrate a direct benefit to the estate.); In re Lister, 846 F.2d 55, 58 (10th Cir. 1988) (at a minimum an applicant's "efforts must result in an actual and demonstrable benefit to the bankruptcy estate."). It is the position of the United States Trustee that Mr. Gorski cannot satisfy section 503(b)(3)(D)'s substantial contribution standard.

holder, whether any constituted a substantial contribution; and (c) if any did, what constitutes reasonable fees for that contribution. This is so because Mr. Gorski will not be able to satisfy any of these independent conditions precedent to recover under § 503(b)(3)(D) and (b)(4) upon remand. First, Mr. Gorski will not be able to show that the services rendered provided an actual and demonstrable benefit to the estate. Second, those services did not make a substantial contribution to the case, as the United States Trustee would establish on remand. Third, Simon's services were not necessary because all of the services Simon rendered, including those not exclusive to a debtor, were tasks that would normally be performed by debtor's counsel in assisting debtor with carrying out its obligations and duties. Many of the services rendered by Simon duplicated those provided by the Debtor's counsel. To the extent Simon took the lead in handling the Debtor's reorganization efforts and drafting and filing pleadings, it was because Mr. Gorski as the Debtor's sole representative curtailed Porter Wright from being able to act on the Debtor's by terminating communications with the Debtor's counsel. See In re Ace Finance Company, 69 B.R. 827, 830-831 (Bankr, N.D. Ohio 1987) (party covered by § 503(b)(3)(D) cannot be compensated for services that fall within the scope of duties of a debtor, debtor-in-possession, or other officer of the estate); See also In re Rockwood Computer Corporation, 61 B.R. 961 (Bankr. S.D. Ohio 1986) (finding indenture trustee did not make substantial contribution warranting allowance of legal fees rather services rendered were for primary benefit of indenture trustees and noting services rendered for indenture trustee that are routine tasks of debtor’s counsel are not compensable.); In re Lease-A-Fleet, Inc., 148 B.R. 419, 427 (Bankr. E.D. Pa. 1992) (services that are also rendered by the Debtor are not compensable and a “claimant cannot supplant the debtor’s role unless it shows that the debtor is unable or unwilling to act.” [Citations omitted].) ‘ “Services that duplicate those rendered by the debtor or other court appointed officers, absent proof that they are unwilling or unable to act, are not compensable because they entail an excessive and undue burden to the estate.” ’In re Matter of New Power Company 311 B.R. 118, 125 (Bankr. N.D. Ga. 2004) citing In re Granite Partners, L.P., 213 B.R. 440, 446 (Bankr. S.D.N.Y. 1997).

CONCLUSION

For these reasons, the United States Trustee respectfully asks this Court to affirm the Bankruptcy Appellate Panel decision or, in the alternative, to remand this matter to the Bankruptcy Court for further proceedings consistent with the foregoing.

Respectfully submitted,

STATEMENT OF APPELLATE JURISDICTION

The United States Bankruptcy Court for the District of Minnesota had jurisdiction over Michael and Crystal Hennen's chapter 11 bankruptcy case under 28 U.S.C. §§ 157 and 1334. The bankruptcy court converted the Hennens' chapter 11 case to one under chapter 7 on November 16, 2010. The Hennens timely filed a notice of appeal from that order under 28 U.S.C. § 158(c)(2) and Fed. R. Bankr. P. 8002(a) on November 30, 2010.

This Court has jurisdiction over this appeal under 28 U.S.C. § 158(a). The bankruptcy court's order converting the Hennens' case is a final, appealable order. See Hedquist v. Fokkena (In re Hedquist), 450 F.3d 801, 802 (8th Cir. 2006).

STATEMENT OF THE ISSUE

Section 1112(b)(1) of the Bankruptcy Code requires a bankruptcy court to convert a chapter 11 case to one under chapter 7 or dismiss the case, whichever is in the best interests of creditors and the bankruptcy estate, if the movant establishes cause and no unusual circumstances exist that establish that conversion or dismissal is not in the best interests of creditors and the estate.

Here, did the bankruptcy court abuse its discretion when it converted the Hennens' chapter 11 bankruptcy case to one under chapter 7, rather than dismiss their bankruptcy case?

STANDARD OF REVIEW

This Court reviews a bankruptcy court's decision to convert a chapter 11 case for abuse of discretion. See Loop Corp. v. U.S. Trustee, 379 F.3d 511, 515 (8th Cir. 2004) (noting the bankruptcy court's "broad discretion" in deciding whether to dismiss or convert a chapter 11 case). A bankruptcy court abuses its discretion only if it "fails to apply the proper legal standard or fails to follow proper procedures in making its determination, or if the court bases an award upon findings of fact that are clearly erroneous." City of Sioux City, Iowa v. Midland Marina, Inc. (In re Midland Marina, Inc.), 259 B.R. 683, 686 (B.A.P. 8th Cir. 2001) (citation omitted). Findings of fact "will not be reversed as clearly erroneous unless the reviewing court is left with a definite and firm conviction that a mistake has been committed." Id.

STATEMENT OF THE CASE

The United States Trustee moved to convert the Hennens' chapter 11 bankruptcy case for cause under 11 U.S.C. § 1112(b)(4), based on the Hennens' misconduct during the case, failure to prosecute their chapter 11 case, and the presence of significant non-exempt assets available for liquidation.[1] The Hennens agreed that cause existed, but

[1] Congress has authorized the United States Attorney General to appoint 21 United States Trustees, each to serve in a specific geographic region of the United States. See generally 28 U.S.C. § 581 et seq. (establishing the United States Trustee Program). The United States Trustees are senior officials of the Department of Justice. Id. The United States Trustees "supervise the administration of cases and trustees" in all bankruptcy cases within their region through the exercise of a range of oversight responsibilities. 28 U.S.C. § 586(a)(3); see generally Morgenstern v. Revco D.S. Inc. (In re Revco D.S., Inc.), 898 F.2d 498, 500 (6th Cir. 1990) (explaining that United argued that dismissal, rather than conversion, was in the best interests of their creditors and the estate. After hearing from the Hennens' major secured creditor, New Market Bank, and Mr. Hennen, the bankruptcy court agreed with the United States Trustee and converted the Hennens' chapter 11 case to one under chapter 7. This appeal followed.

STATUTORY FRAMEWORK

When a debtor commences a bankruptcy case, a separate legal entity known as the "estate" is created. 11 U.S.C. § 541(a). The estate contains all of the debtor's property, subject to exceptions not applicable here. Id.

When a debtor files a case to reorganize under chapter 11 of the Bankruptcy Code, the debtor becomes a "debtor-in-possession" of that estate. 11 U.S.C. § 1101. The debtor-in-possession maintains control over the estate's property, but also obtains the rights, powers, and fiduciary duties of a trustee. 11 U.S.C. §§ 1106-1108.

Section 1112(b)(1) of the Bankruptcy Code provides that a debtor's chapter 11 bankruptcy case shall be dismissed or converted to one under chapter 7, "whichever is in the best interests of creditors and the estate," upon a showing of "cause."[2] 11 U.S.C. § 1112(b)(1). Section 1112(b)(4) provides examples of cause, which "includes — . . .

States Trustees oversee the bankruptcy process, protect the public interest, and ensure that bankruptcy cases are conducted according to law). United States Trustees may raise, appear, and be heard on any issue in any case or proceeding under Title 11. 11 U.S.C. § 307; see Revco, 898 F.2d at 499-500 (upholding broad appellate standing of United States Trustees).

[2] Section 1112(b) was amended on December 20, 2010. Those amendments are not relevant to this case.

failure timely to provide information . . . reasonably requested by the United States Trustee," 11 U.S.C. § 1112(b)(4)(H); and "failure to maintain appropriate insurance that poses a risk to the estate or to the public." 11 U.S.C. § 1112(b)(4)(C). And under section 102(3), "including" is "not limiting," so section 1112(b)(4)'s list is illustrative, not exhaustive. 11 U.S.C. § 102(3).

STATEMENT OF THE FACTS

1. Background

Michael and Crystal Hennen owned property in Jordan, Minnesota, which New Market Bank — the Hennens' secured lender — had scheduled for foreclosure. DE #31 at 1.[3] On the eve of the foreclosure sale, June 2, 2010, the Hennens filed a voluntary petition for chapter 11 bankruptcy relief. Id.; DE #1. Two weeks later, on June 16, 2010, they filed their bankruptcy schedules and a statement of financial affairs. DE #4. The Hennens' bankruptcy schedules disclosed real estate valued at $4,237,100, which was encumbered by secured claims totaling $977,000. DE #4 at 2-3. They also disclosed nearly $1.8 million in personal property, id. at 4-6, but only $133,123.56 in general unsecured liabilities. Id. at 11-13.

The United States Trustee convened the meeting of the Hennens' creditors pursuant to 11 U.S.C. § 341 on July 16, 2010. DE #25 at 3. At that meeting, the Hennens represented that they intended to hire professionals to sell the Jordan property. DE #31 at 1. They also revealed that their original bankruptcy schedules failed to include sufficient detail about a $1.2 million account receivable, the value of an inheritance recently received, and did not accurately reflect their 2008 federal and state tax liabilities. DE #4 at 5, 9-10; DE #25 at 3 n.2. In addition, their original statement of financial affairs failed to disclose the Hennens' activity as officers, directors, or partners in certain business entities, such as the interest in their farming business, Hennen Udder Farms, or their excavation business, Hennen Dirt Works. DE #4 at 28; DE #25 at 3 n.2.

After the Hennens testified at the meeting of their creditors, the United States Trustee requested that they correct the omissions or misstatements in their bankruptcy schedules and statement of financial affairs, and provide supporting documentation for other information provided in the schedules. DE #25 at 3. Despite assurances from the Hennens and their counsel, they failed to correct the omissions or provide any supporting documentation to the United States Trustee. Id. The Hennens also failed to retain professionals or make any other attempt to sell the Jordan property. See DE #31 at 1.

In addition, the Hennens had further problems satisfying their responsibilities as chapter 11 debtors and in prosecuting their bankruptcy case. First, the Hennens failed to provide proof of current insurance for their assets. DE #25 at 3-4; see 11 U.S.C. § 363(e) (allowing estate property to be used upon the provision of "adequate protection" for the creditor's interest in that property). Second, the Hennens failed to file any disclosure statement or plan of reorganization.[4] DE #25 at 4. Third, the Hennens failed to explain certain transactions, such as a $9,225.83 cash withdrawal that occurred on July 20, 2010, six weeks after the case was filed, which was just one day after they deposited $42,012.01 in inheritance proceeds into their bank account. DE #31 at 2-3. Fourth, the Hennens' monthly operating report for the month of July failed to include a profit and loss statement that indicated their net cash flow during that month. DE #21. Finally, the Hennens' monthly operating reports indicated that the bankruptcy estate had been operating at a net loss of $5,310. DE #17 at 6; DE #22 at 6; DE #30 at 6; DE #31 at 2.

2. The United States Trustee's Motion to Convert Under Section 1112(b)(1)

The United States Trustee filed a motion to convert the Hennens' case under 11 U.S.C. § 1112(b)(1) and (4) on October 14, 2010. DE #25. The United States Trustee sought conversion of the case, rather than dismissal, because, "[b]ased on the Debtors' schedules, there appear to be significant non-exempt assets which a chapter 7 trustee could liquidate." Id. at 5; DE #4 at 2-6 (demonstrating nearly $5 million in equity in the Hennens' real and personal property). The United States Trustee argued that the circumstances of the case suggested the Hennens were attempting to avoid their creditors by "park[ing] this case under the protection of the automatic stay [for over four months] without providing required information to determine whether this case really belongs in bankruptcy or whether the Debtors are avoiding their creditors." DE #25 at 5. New Market Bank — the Hennens' major secured creditor, which holds an $850,000 secured claim representing 87% of all secured debt and 76% of all debt in the case — supported converting the Hennens' chapter 11 bankruptcy case to one under chapter 7, instead of dismissing the case. DE #31 at 2.

On November 11, 2010, the Hennens responded to the motion. DE #33. They admitted that cause existed to dismiss or convert the case. Id. at 3. They argued, however, that dismissal served the best interests of creditors and the estate because conversion to chapter 7 would require "significant additional administrative expenses and a liquidation of the farm property in a down market (rather than continued farming operations) may not maximize value for the estate." Id. at 5. The Hennens contended they had not engaged in ongoing fraud or dishonesty that would prejudice creditors. Id. Finally, they argued that sufficient assets existed to pay all of their debts and that creditors could pursue state law remedies in the event of dismissal. Id. They presented no evidence to support their arguments.

3. The Bankruptcy Court's Conversion Order

On November 16, 2010, the bankruptcy court held a hearing on the United States Trustee's motion to convert the Hennens' case. At the hearing, New Market Bank stated its desire to have the Hennens' chapter 11 case converted to one under chapter 7 due to the Hennens' failure to disclose their financial information. Tr. at 8:20-25. In the event that the court decided to dismiss the case rather than convert it, New Market Bank requested dismissal with prejudice to prevent further delay. Id. at 9:4-10.[5]

Mr. Hennen testified regarding the farming operations of Hennen Udder Farms. Id. at 11:18-25, 12:1-25. He stated that they had earned $15,000 to $20,000 from farming in 2009, but that they no longer had a bank account for Hennen Udder Farms. Id. at 13:6-25, 14:1-3. Instead, they reinvested that money into their excavation business, Hennen Dirt Works. Id. at 14:1-16. He also spoke about the prospects for their farming operations, explaining that "there's issues of marketing, transporting and everything . . . A lot of crops right now have everything full so I can't sell." Id. at 16:7-11. And he affirmed that the majority of their income came from the excavation business, rather than farming. Id. at 23:8-18.

At the conclusion of the testimony, the bankruptcy court stated that it would convert the case to chapter 7. Id. at 24:23-24. The bankruptcy court concluded, "it's in the best interest of creditors to convert it. Here I actually think it is." Id. at 25:14-17. The bankruptcy court observed that "this debtor has been here for over -- for a goodly number of months . . . he's been parked here . . . keeping a creditor at bay when there was a foreclosure impending while the case was filed. I don't like that kind of conduct." Id. at 25:18-24. "There's been no activity in this case and I think just for that reason alone when you come in to [sic] bankruptcy you can’t get out of it all that easily, especially if you have not been honest necessarily or careful with the court.” Id. at 25:24-25, 26:1-4. It concluded:

> I don’t know whether it’s a lack of care or dishonesty, but . . . I think this is a case where a Chapter 7 trustee might find lots of very interesting things going on . . . and I think it’s a good place for the creditors to be taken care of under the circumstances.

Id. at 26:4-11. The bankruptcy court entered an order converting the case on November 16, 2010. DE #35.

SUMMARY OF ARGUMENT

The bankruptcy court did not abuse its discretion in converting the Hennens’ chapter 11 bankruptcy case because its finding that conversion was in the best interests of creditors and the estate is supported by the record. First, the United States Trustee and New Market Bank, which holds 87% of the secured debt and 76% of all debt in the Hennens’ case, supported conversion. Furthermore, no other creditor opposed conversion or supported dismissal.

Second, the bankruptcy court concluded, based upon the uncontested allegations of the United States Trustee and New Market Bank, that the Hennens engaged in misconduct during the bankruptcy proceeding and attempted to use the proceedings merely to stall foreclosure, rather than honestly reorganize their farming business. Significantly, the

Hennens offered no evidence, either by way of their verified response or evidence at the hearing, that the allegations were not true.[6]

Third, the bankruptcy court did not clearly err in finding that the Hennens' creditors could benefit from having a chapter 7 trustee maintain oversight of the Hennens' assets. That is because the Hennens engaged in questionable asset transfers immediately before and after commencing their bankruptcy case. Again, the Hennens offered no evidence to the contrary. Thus, those findings are sufficient to support the bankruptcy court's order converting the case.

At trial, the Hennens produced no evidence whatsoever that dismissal would be in the best interest of creditors and the estate, nor can they show that the bankruptcy court failed to adequately consider the interests of the estate when deciding to convert. None of the evidence adduced at the November 16, 2010, hearing contradicts the information provided in the Hennens' schedules, which indicates that the Hennens possessed nearly $5 million of non-exempt assets available for immediate liquidation and distribution to creditors. In fact, the Hennens possessed sufficient assets to pay all creditors in full in a chapter 7 liquidation.

Additionally, the bankruptcy court found that the Hennens' misconduct and misrepresentations warranted conversion to chapter 7 in order to protect the assets of the estate and the creditors. Therefore, the record fully supports the bankruptcy court's conclusion that conversion to chapter 7 was in the best interests of both the creditors and the estate.

ARGUMENT

I. The bankruptcy court did not abuse its discretion in converting the Hennens' chapter 11 bankruptcy case to one under chapter 7 because their major secured creditor supported conversion, the Hennens engaged in misconduct, and the estate could recover improperly transferred assets in a chapter 7 proceeding.

The Bankruptcy Code provides that, upon finding cause, "the court shall convert a case under this chapter to a case under chapter 7 or dismiss a case under this chapter, whichever is in the best interests of creditors and the estate." 11 U.S.C. § 1112(b)(1) (emphasis supplied). Once cause is established, the bankruptcy court enjoys "broad discretion as to whether the case should be converted or dismissed." Lumber Exch. Bldg. Ltd. P'Ship v. Mut. Life Ins. Co. of New York (In re Lumber Exch. Bldg. Ltd. P'Ship), 968 F.2d 647, 648 (8th Cir. 1992). Although the moving party ultimately carries the burden of proof, a party opposing conversion must produce adequate rebuttal evidence in support of its position. Loop Corp., 379 F.3d at 518. A bankruptcy court is not required to accept mere speculation, including self-serving testimony or affidavits, as fact. Id.

Determining whether conversion or dismissal serves the best interests of creditors and the estate requires the bankruptcy court to "ascertain the impact on the creditors and on the estate of each of the options." Rollex Corp. v. Associated Materials, Inc. (In re Superior Siding & Window, Inc.), 14 F.3d 240, 243 (4th Cir. 1994). First, when evaluating the best interests of creditors, a court should compare "the creditors' interests in bankruptcy with those they would have under state law." Id. Furthermore, the bankruptcy court should "consider the interests of all creditors." Id. (emphasis in original); see Shulkin Hutton, Inc. v. Treiger (In re Owens), 552 F.3d 958, 961 (9th Cir. 2009) (finding dismissal, rather than conversion, appropriate where the debtor was profitable and had the ability to repay creditors outside of bankruptcy). The principle of equality among similar creditors is "central to the Bankruptcy Code" and "is one of the factors to be considered in determining the 'best interest of the creditors' under section 1112(b)." Rollex Corp., 14 F.3d at 243.

Second, "[t]he element of the best interest of the estate focuses upon whether the economic value of the estate is greater inside or outside of bankruptcy." In re Staff Inv. Co., 146 B.R. 256, 261 (Bankr. E.D. Cal. 1992); see In re OptInRealBig.com, LLC, 345 B.R. 277, 290 (Bankr. D. Colo. 2006) (finding that dismissal, rather than conversion, was in the best interest of the estate because the chapter 11 debtor was profitable and would be more valuable as a going concern outside of bankruptcy than it would be to liquidate the company under chapter 7). "When a court determines that a debtor's economic value is likely to be greater by dismissing the case rather than converting it, the court maximizes the opportunity of individual creditors to recover their claims." OptInRealBig.com, 345 B.R. at 290.

When evaluating this factor, it is important to recognize that the interests of the debtor and the estate are not the same. Significantly, the best interests of the debtor is not a factor under section 1112(b). Staff Inv. Co., 146 B.R. at 261. "Persons in control of the debtor commonly have other interests that are inconsistent with vigorous maximization of the value of the economic enterprise." Id.

Also, when considering whether to dismiss or convert a case, a bankruptcy court may consider the debtor's misconduct and mismanagement in the bankruptcy case. Reagan v. Wetzel (In re Reagan), 403 B.R. 614, 622 (B.A.P. 8th Cir. 2009). In Reagan, the panel affirmed a bankruptcy court order converting a case, over the opposition of the debtor, based on the debtor's mismanagement of the estate, including the failure to file operating reports and misuse of estate funds. Id. Conversion was necessary because it was preferable for the assets of the estate to be overseen by a trustee rather than the debtor. Id. Furthermore, conversion had been particularly appropriate because the debtor "had filed her chapter 11 petition voluntarily, her estate had benefitted from the automatic stay and staved off creditors for four years, and . . . she should not be able to walk away from the bankruptcy now that she felt it did not suit her purposes." Id.

This factor is particularly important when there are actions available only in a chapter 7 case that could inure to the benefit of the creditors. "As the trustee's powers to recover property are generally greater than [what] would be available outside of bankruptcy, this factor tends to favor conversion where there is not continuing revenue-generating activity." Staff Inv. Co., 146 B.R. at 261; see In re Citi-Toledo Partners, 170 B.R. 602, 609 (Bankr. N.D. Ohio 1994) ("[T]he fact that creditors will likely enjoy greater rights in bankruptcy court than they would enjoy in state court militates in favor of conversion.”).

Here, the bankruptcy court’s determination that conversion was in the best interests of the creditors and the estate is well-supported by the record. First, New Market Bank — the secured creditor with an $850,000 secured claim representing 87% of all secured debt and 76% of all debt in the Hennens’ case — supported conversion, and no other creditors supported dismissal. DE #31 at 2. This supports conversion over dismissal because (a) all of the creditor’s preferences would be satisfied, Rollex Corp., 14 F.3d at 243; and (b) the creditor with the most substantial interest in the case supports conversion. Staff Inv. Co., 146 B.R. at 261.

Second, the record shows that the Hennens engaged in misconduct during their chapter 11 case. Specifically, the Hennens failed to provide information reasonably requested by the United States Trustee. DE #25 at 3. They failed to correct significant errors contained in documents filed with the bankruptcy court. Id.; see DE #4 at 20, 29 (requiring debtor to attest to accuracy of those documents under penalty of perjury). They did not present proof that they maintained adequate insurance on their properties, as required by statute. DE #25 at 3-4; see §§ 363(e), 1112(b)(4)(C). And they used the case as a mechanism to stall New Market Bank’s foreclosure proceedings. Tr. at 25:18-25, 26:1-2. In particular, the bankruptcy court looked askance at the Hennens’ “parking” of the case in chapter 11 to keep New Market Bank “at bay” when foreclosure was imminent. Id. These facts show that the interests of the estate support conversion over dismissal because it would allow a chapter 7 trustee to preserve the property of the estate, and effectively and expeditiously liquidate property of the estate for the benefit of creditors. Reagan, 403 B.R. at 622.

Third, the Hennens' assets could be liquidated quickly to satisfy all claims in the case. See DE #25 at 5; DE #31 at 2. The Hennens' schedules indicate that their non-exempt, unencumbered assets total $4,727,600, and their unsecured claims total $133,123.56. DE #4 at 2-6, 11-13; DE #8. Outside of bankruptcy, the Hennens' creditors would rush to judgment to seize these assets. Converting, rather than dismissing, the case supports "the policy of equality of distribution" for all creditors because the chapter 7 trustee could execute a swift, orderly liquidation of the assets and satisfy all of the claims against the estate. Rollex, 14 F.3d at 243.

Fourth, the Hennens' monthly operating reports demonstrate net losses of at least $5,310 during the pendency of the case. DE #31 at 2; DE #17 at 6; DE #22 at 6; DE #30 at 6. That the estate was operating at a loss while under the protection of the automatic stay supports conversion over dismissal because it allows the property of the estate to be quickly and effectively distributed to creditors before the operating losses further diminish the assets available to satisfy the outstanding debts. Staff Inv. Co., 146 B.R. at 261.

Fifth, the Hennens engaged in questionable transfers and uses of estate property. For example, in one of their monthly operating reports, the Hennens disclosed a $3,500 post-petition transfer as an "other cash receipt" and $17,292.30 in bank withdrawals for no apparent purpose. See DE #31 at 2-3. The Hennens offered no explanation or rebuttal to such facts.

Therefore, the bankruptcy court properly recognized the potential for significant recoveries of such questionable transfers in a chapter 7 case. Tr. at 26:7-11. The opportunity for the chapter 7 trustee to recover those assets supports conversion over dismissal because "the economic value of the estate is greater inside" the bankruptcy case, thereby providing a benefit to both the estate and its creditors. Staff Inv. Co., 146 B.R. at 261. This is particularly true when the estate is not generating other revenue, like the estate here. Id.

Sixth, conversion is the most equitable outcome. The Hennens used the automatic stay to stave off their major secured creditor, rather than to make a good faith effort to reorganize their financial affairs and repay their creditors. Tr. at 25:18-25, 26:1-6. Conversion is an appropriate outcome where a debtor voluntarily files for bankruptcy, obtains a significant benefit at the creditors' expense, and seeks to walk away when the bankruptcy no longer suits the debtor's purpose. Reagan, 403 B.R. at 622. Here, dismissal would be in the interest of the Hennens, not the estate and the creditors, because it would validate the Hennens' dilatory tactics.

On appeal, the Hennens maintain that "liquidation would require expensive administrative costs" and that creditors could simply pursue their claims in state court. Appellant's Br. at 9-10. But the Hennens presented no evidence of this below, nor is there anything in the record to indicate that the administrative costs of a chapter 7 liquidation would be more expensive and time consuming — for both the Hennens and their creditors — than the multiplicity of state court proceedings that would follow after dismissal.

In short, the Hennens did not "produce adequate rebuttal evidence in support of their position." Loop, 379 F.3d at 518. They provided no evidence that the estate would be larger if the case were dismissed, rather than converted. They provided no evidence that an independent fiduciary, such as the chapter 7 trustee, was not necessary to investigate their assets and impartially liquidate the estate. Therefore, they cannot show that the bankruptcy court abused its discretion when it found that conversion was in the best interests of the creditors and the estate.

II. The bankruptcy court was not required to make specific factual findings on whether conversion was in the best interests of the estate separate from whether conversion was in the best interests of creditors.

The Hennens also contend that reversal is necessary because the bankruptcy court only considered the best interests of the creditors and failed to make a specific finding that conversion was in the best interests of the estate. Appellant's Br. at 10. That argument is without merit because the bankruptcy court is not required to make specific and distinct findings solely on the best interests of the estate when deciding whether conversion or dismissal is appropriate.

For over thirty years, the law of the Eighth Circuit has been settled. When it is clear from the record that the trial court considered the appropriate factors when reaching a decision, the failure to use "magic words" does not constitute reversible error. United States v. Evans, 697 F.2d 240, 249 (8th Cir. 1983).

This principle applies equally to bankruptcy courts. A bankruptcy court need not set forth extensive findings of fact to support its decision to convert a bankruptcy case. Loop Corp., 379 F.3d at 519. In Loop, the Eighth Circuit affirmed a conversion order where the bankruptcy court merely "listed the reasons it considered Chapter 7 to be preferable to Chapter 11." Id. In fact, the Loop court further observed that a bankruptcy court's factual findings may be sufficient even when it consists of a single sentence. Id. (citing In re Fossum, 764 F.2d 520, 521-22 (8th Cir. 1985)). Consistent with this principle, the Eighth Circuit has repeatedly affirmed section 1112(b) orders when the bankruptcy court has articulated a cognizable reason based in the record. See, e.g., Cedar Shore Resort, Inc. v. Mueller (In re Cedar Shore Resort, Inc.), 235 F.3d 375, 381-82 (8th Cir. 2000) (affirming dismissal based on equitable grounds); Lumber Exch., 968 F.2d at 648 (affirming dismissal based solely on the finding that the case was "substantially a single liability case").

Here, the record shows that the bankruptcy court considered both the interest of the creditors and the estate. The bankruptcy court believed chapter 7 was "a good place for the creditors to be taken care of under the circumstances." Tr. at 26. This shows that the court considered the best interests of the creditors. See Rollex Corp., 14 F.3d at 243 (emphasizing the importance of the creditor's preferences).

The court also observed that "this is a case where a Chapter 7 trustee might find lots of very interesting things going on." Tr. at 26. This shows that the court considered the best interests of the estate. See Staff Inv. Co., 146 B.R. at 261 (explaining that the ability for a chapter 7 trustee to recover assets supports conversion over dismissal). Therefore, the bankruptcy court did not abuse its discretion when it entered the conversion order.

Additionally, this Court may affirm on any basis supported by the record. Schoelch v. Mitchell, 625 F.3d 1041, 1046 (8th Cir. 2010). As explained above, the record shows that conversion was in the interests of both the creditors and the estate. See supra Part I. Thus, the bankruptcy court's order may be affirmed on this basis as well.

CONCLUSION

For these reasons, the United States Trustee respectfully asks this Court to affirm the order entered by the bankruptcy court.

STATEMENT OF THE ISSUE

Whether 11 U.S.C. § 526(a)(4), which provides that attorneys and other bankruptcy professionals should not advise clients to take on additional debt in contemplation of filing a bankruptcy petition, violates the First Amendment.

STATEMENT OF THE CASE

As part of the Bankruptcy Abuse Prevention and Consumer Protection Act of 2005, Pub. L. No. 109-8, 119 Stat. 23 (2005), Congress provided that attorneys and other professionals should not advise clients to take on additional debt in contemplation of filing a bankruptcy petition. See 11 U.S.C. § 526(a)(4). Plaintiff, an attorney who represents debtors in bankruptcy, filed this facial challenge to section 526(a)(4) and to 11 U.S.C. § 527, which requires attorneys to make certain disclosures to clients. The district court dismissed plaintiff's challenge to section 527, but held that section 526(a)(4) is unconstitutionally overbroad and potentially limits an attorney's ability to provide a client with her best advice. The United States appealed from the order invalidating section 526(a)(4), and plaintiff cross-appealed.[2]

[2] Relying in part on the decision of the district court in this case, district courts in three other circuits have held that section 526(a)(4) violates the First Amendment. See Zelotes v. Martini, 352 B.R. 17 (D. Conn. 2006), appeal docketed, No. 07-1853 (2d Cir.); Milavetz, Gallop & Milavetz P.A. v. United States, 355 B.R. 758 (D. Minn. 2006), appeal docketed, No. 07-

STATEMENT OF FACTS

A. Statutory Background

1. In the Bankruptcy Abuse Prevention and Consumer Protection Act of 2005, Pub. L. No. 109-8, Congress enacted “a comprehensive package of reform measures” designed “to improve bankruptcy law and practice by restoring personal responsibility and integrity in the bankruptcy system and ensure that the system is fair for both debtors and creditors.” H.R. Rep. No. 109-31, pt. 1, at 2 (2005), reprinted in 2005 U.S.C.C.A.N. 88, 89 (“House Report”). Described by Congress as “the most comprehensive set of [bankruptcy] reforms in more than 25 years,” id. at 3, the Act both modifies the substantive standards for bankruptcy relief and adopts a variety of new measures intended to curb abusive practices that Congress concluded had come to pervade the bankruptcy system.

As part of this reform package, Congress established certain minimum standards of professional conduct for attorneys and other bankruptcy professionals — collectively termed “debt relief agencies” — who provide for-profit services to consumer debtors.

2405 (8th Cir.); Olsen v. Gonzales, 350 B.R. 906 (D. Or. 2006) (final judgment not yet entered). Several additional challenges to the statute are pending in other district courts. See, e.g., Conn. Bar Ass'n v. United States, No. 06-729 (D. Conn.); In re Reyes, No. 07-20689 (S.D. Fla.).

See 11 U.S.C. § 101(12A) (definition of "debt relief agency").[3] Misleading and abusive practices by such professionals, Congress determined, had become a substantial cause of unnecessary bankruptcy petitions and, in some circumstances, jeopardized debtors' ability to obtain a discharge of their debts. For example, Congress heard evidence that a civil enforcement initiative undertaken by the United States Trustee Program had "consistently identified * * * misconduct by attorneys and other professionals" as among the sources of abuse in the bankruptcy system. House Report, at 5 (citation omitted). Congress therefore responded in the 2005 Act by "strengthening professionalism standards for attorneys and others who assist consumer debtors with their bankruptcy cases." Id. at 17.

2. The new standards enacted by Congress are principally set forth in 11 U.S.C. §§ 707 and 526-528.[4] Section 707, as amended by the 2005 Act, now requires bankruptcy attorneys to make their own reasonable investigation into the circumstances giving rise to the debtor's petition, including a specific

[3] The term "debt relief agency" includes "any person" who, for a fee, "provides any bankruptcy assistance to an assisted person." 11 U.S.C. § 101(12A). "Bankruptcy assistance," in turn, is defined to include "providing legal representation." Id. § 101(4A). An "assisted person" is "any person whose debts consist primarily of consumer debts and the value of whose nonexempt property is less than $164,250." Id. § 101(3); cf. id. § 104(a) (adjustment of dollar figures).

inquiry into the veracity of the debtor’s debt and asset schedules. See 11 U.S.C. § 707(b)(4)(C)-(D). The legislation further requires that the attorney certify that she has determined that the petition does not constitute an “abuse” under section 707(b). See ibid.

Sections 527 and 528 set forth several interrelated disclosure requirements. Section 527 requires debt relief agencies to provide specific notices to clients, including a description of the different types of relief available in the bankruptcy system. Section 528(a) similarly requires debt relief agencies to provide clients with written contracts that clearly explain the services that will be provided and the fees that will apply, while section 528(b) requires debt relief agencies to make related disclosures in their advertisements to the public.

Section 526 lays down four basic rules of professional conduct. Section 526(a)(1) requires debt relief agencies to perform all promised services. Section 526(a)(2) prohibits debt relief agencies from advising an assisted person to make statements that are untrue or misleading in seeking bankruptcy relief. Section 526(a)(3) precludes debt relief agencies from misrepresenting the services they will provide, the benefits that will accrue, or the risks that may be entailed in filing for bankruptcy.

Section 526(a)(4), the provision at issue in this appeal, states:

> A debt relief agency shall not * * * advise an assisted person or prospective assisted person to incur more debt in contemplation of such person filing a case under this title or to pay an attorney or bankruptcy petition preparer fee or charge for services performed as part of preparing for or representing a debtor in a case under this title.

11 U.S.C. § 526(a)(4).

The primary remedy for violations of these sections is a civil action by the debtor, or by the relevant state attorney general, to recover actual damages to the debtor. See 11 U.S.C. § 526(c)(2) & (c)(3). A bankruptcy court may impose an "appropriate civil monetary penalty" if it finds intentional violations of these provisions or a clear and consistent practice of violations. Id. § 526(c)(5).

B. Facts and Prior Proceedings

1. Plaintiff Susan B. Hersh is an attorney who represents consumer debtors in bankruptcy. CR198-CR199. Shortly after the 2005 Act became effective, Hersh filed this suit against the United States, seeking declaratory and injunctive relief to prohibit federal officials from enforcing the Act's professional conduct provisions against licensed attorneys.[5] See CR7-CR11

[5] Although the complaint also named the State of Texas as a defendant, Hersh's claims against Texas were dismissed for failure to effect service of process. CR282 (final judgment).

(complaint). Hersh amended her complaint to allege that attorneys are not “debt relief agencies” within the meaning of the Bankruptcy Code. CR24 (First Am. Compl., ¶ 10). She further claimed that, to the extent attorneys are considered debt relief agencies, the professional conduct restrictions in section 526(a)(4) and the disclosure requirements of section 527 violate the First Amendment.[6] Finally, Hersh contended that both provisions unconstitutionally invade her clients’ Fifth Amendment right to counsel in a civil matter. CR24.

2. In July 2006, the district court dismissed Hersh’s challenge to section 527, as well as her effort to assert Fifth Amendment claims on behalf of her prospective clients, but refused to dismiss Hersh’s First Amendment challenge to section 526(a)(4). See CR165-CR179 (RE2); Hersh v. United States, 347 B.R. 19 (N.D. Tex. 2006).

As a threshold matter, the district court found that the “plain meaning” of the Bankruptcy Code forecloses Hersh’s [6] Hersh’s initial complaint purported to challenge sections 527 and 528. See CR9-CR10 (Compl. ¶¶ 6, 10, 14). Subsequent filings made clear that she was in fact challenging sections 526(a)(4) and 527, and both parties litigated the case as though the latter two provisions were principally at issue. See, e.g., CR125; CR40 n.1. The district court likewise focused on those provisions in ruling on the government’s motion to dismiss. See CR166 n.1. Hersh later amended her complaint formally to challenge sections 526(a)(4) and 527. See CR182-CR183 (RE3, at ¶¶ 6, 12-18).

assertion that the term “debt relief agency” does not encompass attorneys. See 347 B.R. at 22-23.

The district court also rejected Hersh’s constitutional challenge to the disclosure requirements of section 527, reasoning that the government “has a legitimate interest in attempting to ensure that a client is informed of certain basic information before he or she commences a case in bankruptcy.” Id. at 27. The court further held that Hersh lacks standing to challenge the debt relief agency provisions as an infringement on her prospective clients’ Fifth Amendment right to counsel. Id. at 28.

The district court declined, however, to dismiss Hersh’s challenge to section 526(a)(4), which the court regarded as facially invalid under the First Amendment. The court did not dispute that Congress designed section 526(a)(4) to “end the manipulation of the [bankruptcy] system by certain filers who took on additional debt prior to bankruptcy.” 347 B.R. at 24. Nevertheless, in the court’s view, section 526(a)(4) “prevents lawyers from giving their clients their best advice,” because in some cases “taking on more debt could be the most financially prudent option for someone considering bankruptcy.” Ibid. The court reasoned that, for example, a person contemplating bankruptcy might want to “refinanc[e] [her debts] at a lower rate to reduce payments and forestall or even prevent entering bankruptcy." Ibid. Alternatively, a person might want to "tak[e] on secured debt such as [a] loan on an automobile that would survive bankruptcy and also enable the debtor to continue to get to work and make payments." Ibid.

3. In December 2006, the district court granted plaintiff's motion for summary judgment and issued a permanent injunction barring the United States from enforcing section 526(a)(4). CR282-CR283 (RE5). These appeals followed.

SUMMARY OF ARGUMENT

The Bankruptcy Abuse Prevention and Consumer Protection Act of 2005 contains a range of measures designed to curb abuses of the bankruptcy system, both by debtors and by the professionals who represent them. A principal concern of the legislation was to address the recurring problem of debtors' incurring new debt in contemplation of filing a bankruptcy petition in order to take advantage of the Bankruptcy Code's discharge provisions or otherwise manipulate its protections. In addition to other measures, the 2005 Act restricts the ability of debtors to discharge such debt and expands the authority of bankruptcy courts to dismiss petitions for abuse of the bankruptcy system, including in cases in which debtors abuse the Code by taking on additional debt in contemplation of filing a petition.

Congress also addressed the responsibilities of attorneys and other professionals for ensuring that bankruptcy filings do not abuse the Code. The legislation thus seeks to enhance standards of professional conduct in the bankruptcy bar by imposing a duty on bankruptcy attorneys to certify that the petitions filed by their clients do not constitute an abuse of the Code, and by authorizing bankruptcy courts to impose sanctions for violations of that duty.

Section 526(a)(4), at issue in this suit, complements this duty by requiring an attorney not to advise a client to “to incur more debt in contemplation of” filing a petition for bankruptcy relief. 11 U.S.C. § 526(a)(4). As the district court did not dispute, this provision, like other provisions in the 2005 Act, is designed to “end the manipulation of the [bankruptcy] system by certain filers who took on additional debt prior to bankruptcy.” 347 B.R. at 24.

The district court did not suggest that debtors can properly take on additional debt to manipulate the bankruptcy system, or that attorneys are constitutionally entitled to encourage them to do so. Nevertheless, the district court concluded that section 526(a)(4) is fatally overbroad because it believed that the provision encompasses even advice to engage in conduct consistent with the Bankruptcy Code and the client’s legitimate interests.

That reading extends section 526(a)(4) far beyond Congress’s purpose. A statute should be construed to avoid, rather than to invite, constitutional difficulties. In precluding attorneys from urging their clients to take on additional debt “in contemplation of” a bankruptcy filing, Congress was concerned only with debt purposefully accumulated in order to manipulate the bankruptcy system. Neither the language of the statute nor relevant legislative history warrants the district court’s assumption that section 526(a)(4) would restrict a lawyer from offering candid advice on the legality of a debtor’s proposed course of conduct, nor that it would prohibit an attorney from urging a client to take actions consistent with the Bankruptcy Code and the client’s best interests.

Indeed, the principal remedies provided by Congress for violations of section 526(a)(4) — suits for “actual damages” suffered by the debtor — presuppose that the client has, in fact, been injured by the attorney’s advice. As these remedies reflect, section 526(a)(4) is directed to the very kind of abusive accumulation of additional debt that can trigger penalties against the debtor under the Code, including dismissal of the petition or denial of a discharge. The statute has no apparent application to good-faith advice to engage in conduct consistent with the Code and the client’s interests, and the district court erred in reading the statute to encompass such circumstances.

The district court’s analysis also departs from basic principles of overbreadth analysis. Even outside the context of regulations governing attorneys and other closely regulated professions, a facial challenge may succeed only when the asserted overbreadth is both real and substantial in relation to the statute's legitimate goals. The district court did not question that the statute would be constitutional in many of its applications even under the court's own broad reading. The court articulated no basis for striking down the statute on its face, and indeed, enjoined enforcement even of the aspects of section 526(a)(4) that plaintiff has not challenged.

STANDARD OF REVIEW

A facial challenge to the constitutionality of a statute presents a question of law subject to de novo review. United States v. Bredimus, 352 F.3d 200, 203 (5th Cir. 2003).

ARGUMENT

CONGRESS CONSTITUTIONALLY REGULATED THE CONDUCT OF BANKRUPTCY PROFESSIONALS BY PRECLUDING THEM FROM ENCOURAGING CLIENTS TO ABUSE THE BANKRUPTCY SYSTEM BY TAKING ON ADDITIONAL DEBT IN CONTEMPLATION OF FILING A PETITION.

Congress adopted section 526(a)(4) in the Bankruptcy Abuse Prevention and Consumer Protection Act of 2005 as one of several measures designed to "end the manipulation of the [bankruptcy] system by certain filers who took on additional debt prior to bankruptcy." 347 B.R. at 24. Among other reforms, the 2005 Act both expanded the authority of the bankruptcy courts to dismiss petitions for abuse and required bankruptcy attorneys affirmatively to certify that no basis exists for deeming their clients’ petitions abusive. Section 526(a)(4) complements these reforms by precluding bankruptcy professionals from encouraging their clients to abuse the bankruptcy system by incurring new debt in anticipation of filing a petition. Because the First Amendment does not disable Congress from regulating the professional conduct of bankruptcy attorneys in this manner, the district court’s judgment with respect to section 526(a)(4) should be reversed.

A. The 2005 Act Addresses Abuses Of The Code By Debtors Who Incur New Debt In Anticipation Of Bankruptcy And By Attorneys Who Encourage Clients To Engage In Such Conduct.

1. Abuses Of The System By Debtors Incurring Additional Debt In Contemplation Of Bankruptcy.

A principal purpose of the 2005 legislation was to curb a variety of abusive practices by consumer debtors and their representatives that Congress concluded had come to pervade the bankruptcy system. Among the primary abuses that Congress sought to address is the problem of debtors attempting to exploit the Code’s discharge provisions, or otherwise manipulate the bankruptcy system, by purposefully accumulating additional debt in contemplation of filing a petition for bankruptcy.

Congress had long been aware that this practice poses a fundamental threat to the Code’s twin goals of affording debtors a fresh start while providing an orderly and equitable system of resolving creditors’ claims. For example, when Congress enacted 11 U.S.C. § 523(a)(2)(C), which creates a presumption that certain eve-of-bankruptcy debts are not dischargeable, the accompanying Senate Report emphasized that “[e]xcessive debts incurred within a short period prior to the filing of the petition present a special problem: that of ‘loading up’ in contemplation of bankruptcy.” S. Rep. No. 98-65, at 9 (1983). The report explained that “[a] debtor planning [to] file a petition with the bankruptcy court has a strong economic incentive to incur dischargeable debts for either consumable goods or exempt property,” noting that “[i]n many instances, the debtor will go on a credit buying spree in contemplation of bankruptcy at a time when the debtor is, in fact, insolvent.” Ibid. As the report concluded, “[n]ot only does this result in direct losses for the creditors that are the victims of the spree, but it also creates a higher absolute level of debt so that all creditors receive less in liquidation. During this period of insolvency preceding the filing of the petition, creditors would not extend credit if they knew the true facts.” Ibid. Indeed, as early as 1973, Congress was informed that “the most serious abuse of consumer bankruptcy is the number of instances in which individuals have purchased a sizable quantity of goods and services on credit on the eve of bankruptcy in contemplation of obtaining a discharge.” Report of the Commission of the Bankruptcy Laws of the United States, H.R. Doc. No. 93-137, Part I, at 11 (July 1973).

In adopting the 2005 Act, Congress expressed concern that these earlier measures had not adequately restricted the ability of debtors to "knowingly load up with credit card purchases or recklessly obtain cash advances and then file for bankruptcy relief." House Report at 15. Accordingly, Congress took a series of new steps in the 2005 Act to combat the problem of debts incurred in contemplation of bankruptcy. Thus, the Act reduced the threshold amounts at which certain types of eve-of-bankruptcy debts, such as cash advances, become presumptively fraudulent and therefore nondischargeable.[7] See Pub. L. No. 109-8, § 310, 119 Stat. at 84 (amending 11 U.S.C. § 523(a)(2)(C)).

More fundamentally, Congress greatly expanded the authority of the bankruptcy courts to dismiss petitions for abuse of the bankruptcy system, including in cases in which debtors abuse the Code by purposefully incurring additional debt in contemplation of filing a petition. Even before the 2005 legislation, a bankruptcy court was authorized to dismiss a petition for [7] One of the factors that bankruptcy courts consider in determining whether a debt is fraudulent and nondischargeable, moreover, is "[w]hether or not an attorney has been consulted concerning the filing of bankruptcy before the charges were made." In re Eashai, 87 F.3d 1082, 1087 (9th Cir. 1996); see also In re Mercer, 246 F.3d 391, 408 (5th Cir. 2001) (en banc) ("whether, prior to card-use, an attorney was consulted about bankruptcy").

"substantial abuse" under former 11 U.S.C. § 707(b)(1). Moreover, it was established that, under the "substantial abuse" standard, a debtor's purposeful accumulation of debt in contemplation of bankruptcy could justify dismissal of the petition. See, e.g., In re Price, 353 F.3d 1135, 1139-40 (9th Cir. 2004) (describing factors relevant to a finding of substantial abuse, including "[w]hether the debtor has engaged in eve-of-bankruptcy purchases"); In re Charles, 334 B.R. 207, 222 (Bankr. S.D. Tex. 2005) ("It is settled law that a debtor's good faith should be questioned if the debtor makes purchases in contemplation of a bankruptcy case."); In re Rathbun, 309 B.R. 901, 904 (Bankr. N.D. Tex 2004); In re Aiello, 284 B.R. 756, 761 (Bankr. E.D.N.Y. 2002).[8]

In the 2005 Act, Congress reduced the threshold finding required under 11 U.S.C. § 707(b) for a bankruptcy court to dismiss a debtor's petition as abusive, from "substantial abuse" to merely "abuse," see House Report at 48, and it repealed the statutory presumption in favor of granting the relief sought by the debtor, see id. at 49; Pub. L. No. 109-8, § 102, 119 Stat. at 27. Congress further made clear that, in determining whether a petition should be dismissed for abuse, a bankruptcy court may properly consider “whether the debtor filed the petition in bad faith” and whether “the totality of the circumstances * * * of the debtor’s financial situation demonstrates abuse.” 11 U.S.C. § 707(b)(3). At the same time, Congress authorized any party in interest — including, for example, unsecured creditors aggrieved by a debtor’s eleventh-hour accumulation of new debt — to file a motion for such relief. See id. § 707(b)(1). Under prior law, only the United States Trustee, or the court on its own motion, could seek to dismiss a petition as abusive.

[8] As the Supreme Court recently explained in the context of chapter 13 debtors, bad faith pre-petition conduct by the debtor justifies dismissal of the petition because such a debtor "is not a member of the class of 'honest but unfortunate debtor[s]' that the bankruptcy laws were enacted to protect." Marrama v. Citizens Bank, 127 S. Ct. 1105, 1111 (2007) (quoting Grogan v. Garner, 498 U.S. 279, 287 (1991)).

2. Abuses Of The System By Lawyers And Other Bankruptcy Professionals.

Congress also responded in the 2005 Act to evidence that attorneys and other bankruptcy professionals often played a critical role in abuse of the bankruptcy system. Citing data collected by the U.S. Trustee Program, the House Report noted that the study “consistently identified” among the sources of abuse “misconduct by attorneys and other professionals” and “problems associated with bankruptcy petition preparers.” House Report at 5 (quoting Darling & Redmiles, Protecting the Integrity of the System: the Civil Enforcement Initiative, Am. Bankr. Inst. J. 12 (Sept. 2002)).

The need to address misconduct by bankruptcy professionals was made particularly urgent by the “principal consumer bankruptcy reform” in the 2005 legislation, which was the adoption of a “means testing” mechanism intended to restrict debtors who have the ability to repay at least some of their debts from obtaining a complete discharge under chapter 7. See House Report at 48; see also id. at 3 (describing means testing as the “heart” of the 2005 Act’s reform provisions). Under the new means-testing provision, a debtor’s petition for complete relief under chapter 7 is presumed to be abusive if the debtor’s income exceeds his unsecured debts by a certain ratio. See 11 U.S.C. § 707(b)(2)(A). The effect of the means test is to ensure that debtors who have the ability to repay a portion of their debts are channeled into chapter 13, which provides an opportunity for a structured repayment plan.

As Congress recognized, however, the means test exacerbates the incentive for debtors to manipulate the system by “loading up” on debt in contemplation of filing a petition, because a higher debt ratio can allow an otherwise borderline debtor to avoid the burdens of a chapter 13 repayment plan and obtain a complete and immediate discharge under chapter 7. Concern was expressed at the congressional hearings that attorneys would respond to the means test by counseling their clients to take on additional debt before filing for bankruptcy. As one bankruptcy judge testified, “[t]he more debt that is incurred prior to filing, the more likely the debtor will qualify for chapter 7.” Thus, “[p]erverse as it may seem, I can envision debtor’s counsel advising their clients to buy the most expensive car that someone will sell them, and sign on to the biggest payment they can afford (at least until the bankruptcy is filed) as a way of increasing their deductions under [the means test].” Bankruptcy Reform Act of 1998: Part I, Hearing on H.R. 3150 before House Judiciary Comm., 105th Cong. 25 (1998) (testimony of Judge Randall Newsome).

Congress addressed these problems in the 2005 Act by “strengthening professionalism standards for attorneys and others who assist consumer debtors with their bankruptcy cases” in return for a fee. House Report at 17. Under the amended provisions of the Code, an attorney who represents a consumer debtor in filing a bankruptcy petition must make her own reasonable investigation into the circumstances giving rise to the debtor’s petition, including a specific inquiry into the veracity of the debtor’s debt and asset schedules. See 11 U.S.C. § 707(b)(4)(C)-(D). By signing the petition, the attorney personally certifies that she believes the petition is warranted by the facts, that she has no reason to believe the debtor’s schedules are incorrect, and that she has determined that the petition does not constitute an “abuse” under section 707(b). See ibid. Congress thus effectively required bankruptcy attorneys to warrant that their clients’ pre-petition conduct and financial circumstances — including any assumption of debt in contemplation of bankruptcy — do not provide grounds for dismissal of the petition as abuse of the bankruptcy system.

Two provisions of section 526(a) complement these requirements by precluding attorneys and other “debt relief agencies,” see 11 U.S.C. § 101(12A) (definition), from advising consumer debtors to abuse the bankruptcy system. Section 526(a)(2) prohibits attorneys from encouraging clients to make false statements in a bankruptcy proceeding. Section 526(a)(4), at issue here, precludes attorneys from encouraging their clients to abuse the bankruptcy system by taking on additional debt in contemplation of filing a bankruptcy petition.

B. Section 526(a)(4) Constitutionally Restricts Attorneys From Encouraging Clients To Take On Additional Debt In Contemplation of Bankruptcy.

1. The First Amendment Does Not Preclude Restrictions On Attorney Advice To Engage In Improper Conduct.

The district court did not suggest that the First Amendment bars Congress from restricting attorneys from encouraging their clients to abuse the bankruptcy system. Indeed, it is established that attorneys, like other professionals, are subject to various restrictions in urging their clients to undertake action. See, e.g., ABA Model Rules of Prof. Conduct R. 1.2(d) (“A lawyer shall not counsel a client to engage, or assist a client, in conduct that the lawyer knows is criminal or fraudulent, but a lawyer may discuss the legal consequences of any proposed course of conduct with a client and may counsel or assist a client to make a good-faith effort to determine the validity, scope, meaning, or application of the law”); accord Tex. Discip. R. Prof. Conduct 1.02(c); La. R. Prof. Conduct 1.2(d); Miss. R. Prof. Conduct 1.2(d).

Regulations of professional ethics of this kind do not violate the First Amendment. See Gentile v. State Bar of Nevada, 501 U.S. 1030, 1071-76 (1991) (discussing the standards governing regulation of attorney speech). Indeed, Rule 1.2(d) has been applied to precisely the type of conduct that Congress addressed by section 526(a)(4). See Attorney Grievance Comm'n of Maryland v. Culver, 381 Md. 241, 275-76 (2004) (attorney violated Rule 1.2(d) by advising a client to obtain credit card loans with the intent that the debt be discharged in bankruptcy).

2. Section 526(a)(4) Should Not Be Construed More Broadly Than Necessary To Achieve Congress’s Purpose.

The district court expressed concern, however, that section 526(a)(4) “prevents lawyers from giving their clients their best advice,” because in some cases “taking on more debt could be the most financially prudent option for someone considering bankruptcy.” 347 B.R. at 24. The court reasoned that a person contemplating bankruptcy might want to “refinanc[e] [her debts] at a lower rate to reduce payments and forestall or even prevent entering bankruptcy.” Ibid. Alternatively, a person might want to “tak[e] on secured debt such as [a] loan on an automobile that would survive bankruptcy and also enable the debtor to continue to get to work and make payments.” Ibid. Without analysis, the court thus assumed that the statute would apply to advice by an attorney that is consistent both with the client’s interests and with the policies of the Bankruptcy Code.

Reading the statute in this manner expands its scope far beyond Congress’s purpose to “end the manipulation of the [bankruptcy] system by certain filers who took on additional debt prior to bankruptcy.” 347 B.R. at 24. By providing that a debt relief agency shall not advise a client “to incur more debt in contemplation of such person filing a case under this title,” § 526(a)(4) (emphasis added), Congress addressed only advice to a debtor to accumulate additional debt for the purpose abusing the bankruptcy system, such as by “loading up” on new debt in order to obtain a more advantageous discharge. Like section 526(a)(2), which precludes attorneys from advising clients to make false statements, section 526(a)(4) thus encompasses advice to engage in improper or abusive conduct.

That interpretation follows from Congress’s unmistakable purposes in the 2005 Act. As already discussed, section 526(a)(4) represents only one of many measures in the 2005 Act aimed at preventing abuses of the bankruptcy system by debtors and their professional representatives. Among other significant amendments, Congress enhanced the authority of bankruptcy courts to dismiss petitions as abusive, see 11 U.S.C. § 707(b)(1), expanded the definition of "abuse" to take account of a debtor's bad faith in seeking bankruptcy relief, see id. § 707(b)(3), and specifically required bankruptcy attorneys to investigate the facts underlying a debtor's petition and to certify that no basis exists for dismissing the petition as abusive, see 11 U.S.C. § 707(b)(4)(C)-(D). Against the background of such amendments, it is apparent that Congress intended the phrase "to incur more debt in contemplation of" bankruptcy in section 526(a)(4) as a reference to the recognized problem of debtors purposefully accumulating new debt in an effort to abuse the protections of the Bankruptcy Code. Cf. Report of the Commission of the Bankruptcy Laws of the United States, H.R. Doc. No. 93-137, Part I, at 11 (July 1973) (observing that "the most serious abuse of consumer bankruptcy is the number of instances in which individuals have purchased a sizable quantity of goods and services on credit on the eve of bankruptcy in contemplation of obtaining a discharge" (emphasis added)).

That understanding, moreover, is consistent with Congress's repeated references, in the legislative histories cited above, to debts incurred to manipulate the bankruptcy system as debts incurred "in contemplation of" bankruptcy. See S. Rep. No. 98-65, at 9 ("In many instances, the debtor will go on a credit buying spree in contemplation of bankruptcy at a time when the debtor is, in fact, insolvent" (emphasis added)); see also Consumer Bankruptcy Reform Act of 1998, S. Rep. No. 105-253, at 83 (1998) (minority views) ("Clearly, debtors should not incur debts with the intention not to repay them, e.g., if they know that they are going to file for bankruptcy," but "debts incurred within 90 days prior to filing may not have been incurred in contemplation of bankruptcy, and thus the isolation of these debts for special treatment is somewhat arbitrary."); cf. 18 U.S.C. § 152(7) (prohibiting the fraudulent transfer or concealment of property "in contemplation of a case under title 11"); In re Charles, 334 B.R. at 222 ("It is settled law that a debtor's good faith should be questioned if the debtor makes purchases in contemplation of a bankruptcy case.").

Section 526(a)(4) therefore has no application to the hypothetical conduct that troubled the district court. An attorney would be free to advise a client to refinance her debts at a lower rate to prevent bankruptcy, 347 B.R. at 24,[9] or to [9] Indeed, as an initial matter, the district court failed to explain why merely refinancing an existing debt — that is, exchanging one loan for another with the same principal balance but a different interest rate or repayment period — would constitute incurring "more debt" within the meaning of section 526(a)(4). In any event, as explained above, advising a debtor to refinance a debt in order to avoid bankruptcy would not trigger section 526(a)(4), because it would not involve encouraging the debtor to incur unnecessary debt for the purpose of abusing the bankruptcy system.

"tak[e] on secured debt such as [a] loan on an automobile that would survive bankruptcy and also enable the debtor to continue to get to work and make payments," ibid., assuming that the client made all necessary disclosures to the lender. In neither case would the attorney be advising the debtor to incur unnecessary debt for the purpose of abusing the bankruptcy system. Cf. Culver, 381 Md. at 275-76 (attorney violated Rule 1.2(d) by advising a client to obtain credit card loans with the intent that the debt be discharged in bankruptcy).

In other contexts, the phrase "in contemplation of bankruptcy" may reflect the broad scope assumed here by the district court. E.g., Conrad, Rubin & Lesser v. Pender, 289 U.S. 472, 478 (1933) (interpreting bankruptcy provision regarding attorney compensation). Yet the same phrase also has an accepted narrower meaning. See Black's Law Dictionary 336 (8th ed. 2004) (defining "contemplation of bankruptcy" as "the thought of declaring bankruptcy because of the inability to continue current financial operations, often coupled with action designed to thwart the distribution of assets in a bankruptcy proceeding"); see also In re Mercer, 246 F.3d 391, 421 n.43 (5th Cir. 2001) (en banc) (describing "loading up" as the practice of "incurring card debt in contemplation of bankruptcy"); id. at 421 (referring to "a dishonest but patient debtor who intends to incur card-debt in contemplation of discharge”).[10] As the text and purposes of the 2005 Act make clear, it is this narrower sense in which Congress used the phrase in section 526(a)(4).

In any event, the district court erred in adopting the broadest possible reading of the statute without regard to whether it was required by the statutory language and congressional intent. It is fundamental that when “an otherwise acceptable construction of a statute would raise serious constitutional problems,” a federal court must “construe the statute to avoid such problems unless such a construction would be plainly contrary to legislative intent.” Planned Parenthood v. Sanchez, 403 F.3d 324, 341 (5th Cir. 2005) (quoting Edward J. DeBartolo Corp. v. Fla. Gulf Coast Bldg. & Constr. Trades Council, 485 U.S. 568, 575 (1988)) (internal quotation marks omitted). The district court departed from this principle in failing to adopt — or even address — readings of section 526(a)(4) that would avoid the constitutional difficulties that it postulated.

[10] See also Webster’s Third New International Dictionary 491 (1993) (defining “contemplation” to mean, inter alia, “the act of intending or considering a future event”); Random House Dictionary Unabridged 438 (2d ed. 1987) (“contemplate” means, inter alia, “to have as a purpose; intend”).

3. Section 526(a)(4) Does Not Preclude A Candid Discussion Of Legal Options.

The district court also erred in assuming that section 526(a)(4) would preclude a bankruptcy attorney from providing a candid discussion of a client’s legal options. Rules governing legal practice commonly distinguish between a circumstance in which an attorney “counsels” (or, in this case, “advises”) a course of conduct, and a case in which an attorney simply discusses various options.

Thus, although the ABA Model Rules of Professional Conduct provide that “[a] lawyer shall not counsel a client to engage, or assist a client, in conduct that the lawyer knows is criminal or fraudulent,” the same rule also provides that “a lawyer may discuss the legal consequences of any proposed course of conduct with a client and may counsel or assist a client to make a good-faith effort to determine the validity, scope, meaning, or application of the law.” ABA Model Rule 1.2(d). The commentary to Model Rule 1.2 underscores the point: “There is a critical distinction between presenting an analysis of legal aspects of questionable conduct and recommending the means by which a crime or fraud might be committed with impunity.” ABA Model Rule 1.2, cmt 9. In section 526(a)(4), Congress intended the phrase “advise * * * to incur more debt” in the same sense of affirmative encouragement. Cf. Webster’s Third New International Dictionary 32 (1993) (defining “advise” to mean, inter alia, “counsel” or “recommend”).

Contrary to the district court’s understanding, therefore, section 526(a)(4) does not “prevent[] lawyers from giving their clients their best advice.” 347 B.R. at 24. Like the model rules, section 526(a)(4) reaches only the conduct of an attorney in affirmatively urging (“advis[ing]”) a client to pursue a particular course of conduct, without impairing the attorney’s ability to offer a candid assessment of the client’s legal options. Cf. ABA Model Rule 1.2, cmt 9 (explaining that the prohibition against advising clients to engage in fraud “does not preclude the lawyer from giving an honest opinion about the actual consequences that appear likely to result from a client's conduct”).

The restriction of section 526(a)(4) thus parallels that of section 526(a)(2), which provides that a debt relief agency shall not “counsel or advise any assisted person or prospective assisted person to make a statement in a document filed in a case or proceeding under this title, that is untrue and misleading.” Congress’s concern in both provisions was not to proscribe ordinary legal advice, but to prevent attorneys and other bankruptcy professionals from becoming the affirmative engines of bankruptcy abuse, thereby both undermining the policies of the Code and jeopardizing their clients’ petitions for relief.

4. The Remedies For Violations of Section 526(a)(4) Are Consistent With Its Purpose Of Restricting Encouragement To Engage In Abusive Conduct That Jeopardizes a Client's Interests.

The remedial provisions of the statute underscore the error of the district court's interpretation. Congress's intent in section 526(a)(4) was to protect consumer debtors from active encouragement by their representatives to engage in conduct that abuses the bankruptcy system and may result in the dismissal of their petition or other sanctions. Consistent with that intent, the principal remedy for a violation of section 526(a)(4) is a suit against the attorney to recover the debtor's "actual damages," as well as restitution of any fees paid by the debtor. See id. § 526(c)(2); see also id. § 526(c)(3)(B) (authorizing suits by state attorney general to recover "actual damages" on debtor's behalf). The power of the bankruptcy court to impose an "appropriate civil penalty" is limited to cases of intentional violations and patterns of misconduct. See id. § 526(c)(5). Congress's emphasis in these provisions on the debtor's "actual damages" presupposes that the debtor has been injured by the attorney's conduct: advice that is in the debtor's best interests and fully consistent with the Bankruptcy Code does not trigger any remedial provision.

Quite apart from section 526(a)(4), moreover, an attorney faces sanctions under the Bankruptcy Code for actively encouraging a debtor to accumulate additional debt in order to facilitate a bankruptcy filing, because the 2005 Act requires attorneys to certify that the petitions filed by their clients are not abusive. As discussed above, the Act imposed a new duty on every bankruptcy attorney make a reasonable investigation into the factual basis for the debtor’s petition (including a reasonable inquiry into the veracity of the debtor’s debt and asset schedules) and to certify that, in the attorney’s judgment, the petition will not be subject to dismissal for abuse. See 11 U.S.C. § 707(b)(4)(C)-(D); see also id. § 707(b)(4)(A)-(B) (authorizing civil monetary penalties against attorneys who make false certifications). At the same time, Congress lowered the standard for dismissing a petition as abusive, and it made clear that a bankruptcy court, in determining whether to grant such a motion, should consider whether the debtor has acted in bad faith. Id. §§ 707(b)(1), 707(b)(3); cf. In re Charles, 334 B.R. 207, 222 (Bankr. S.D. Tex 2005) (“It is settled law that a debtor's good faith should be questioned if the debtor makes purchases in contemplation of a bankruptcy case.”). Under these circumstances, it is highly unlikely that a bankruptcy attorney could encourage a client to incur unnecessary debts in order to buttress an anticipated bankruptcy filing without herself violating her obligations under the Code. Section 526(a)(4) addresses the increased risk of dismissal resulting from such unethical attorney advice and provides the debtor with remedies against attorneys who encourage abusive conduct.

C. The District Court Failed To Apply Basic Principles of Overbreadth Analysis.

Even outside the context of ethical rules governing attorneys and other closely regulated professions, a statute may not be invalidated on its face solely because of posited concerns raised by some of its potential applications. Instead, “[t]he Court has made clear that facial challenges of this sort can succeed only if there is a significant imbalance between the protected speech the statute should not punish and the unprotected speech it legitimately reaches: ‘[O]verbreadth of a statute must not only be real, but substantial as well, judged in relation to the statute's plainly legitimate sweep.’” Shackelford v. Shirley, 948 F.2d 935, 940 (5th Cir. 1991) (quoting Broadrick v. Oklahoma, 413 U.S. 601, 615 (1973)).

The district court recognized that, even under its own reading of the statute, section 526(a)(4) would be constitutional in many of its applications. The court did not explain why it nevertheless believed facial invalidation was appropriate, even assuming that it was compelled to read the statute to cover instances in which an attorney’s advice to encourage additional debt is fully consistent with the Bankruptcy Code and the client’s interests.

The district court's error is highlighted by its invalidation of section 526(a)(4) in its entirety, without addressing that part of the statute that precludes an attorney from advising a client to incur additional debt in order to pay the attorney's own fees. See 11 U.S.C. § 526(a)(4) ("A debt relief agency shall not * * * advise an assisted person or prospective assisted person to incur more debt * * * to pay an attorney or bankruptcy petition preparer fee or charge for services performed as part of preparing for representing a debtor in a case under this title."). Plaintiff makes no allegation that she plans to encourage clients to take on additional debt in order to pay her fees, see, e.g., CR182-CR184 (RE3) (complaint); CR198-CR202 (plaintiff's affidavit in support of summary judgment), and a challenge to that part of the statute was therefore not properly before the district court.

More fundamentally, the district court's willingness to strike down section 526(a)(4) on its face, without addressing this part of the statute, underscores the court's failure to recognize the nature of the issues presented by this facial challenge and to adopt a reading of the statute that avoids constitutional questions to the extent possible. Nothing in the record indicates that the attorneys-fee portion of section 526(a)(4) is fatally overbroad, and the district court identified no reason why that provision should be enjoined (or why Hersh even has standing to challenge it). Nor, as with its analysis of the remainder of the provision, did the court explain why any posited defects could not be addressed by reading the provision to avoid any asserted constitutional difficulties.

CONCLUSION

For the foregoing reasons, the judgment of the district court with respect to the constitutionality of 11 U.S.C. § 526(a)(4) should be reversed.

INTRODUCTION AND SUMMARY

In the Bankruptcy Abuse Prevention and Consumer Protection Act of 2005, Pub. L. No. 109-8, Congress enacted a series of provisions designed to "strengthen[] professionalism standards for attorneys and others who assist consumer debtors with their bankruptcy cases." H.R. Rep. No. 109-31, pt. 1, at 17. Among them are the measures challenged here, which preclude attorneys from advising their clients to take on additional debt in contemplation of bankruptcy, see 11 U.S.C. § 526(a)(4), and require attorneys to provide debtors with basic factual information about the bankruptcy process, see id. § 527(b).

Notwithstanding Congress's belief that it was adopting these provisions to establish stronger "professionalism standards for attorneys," plaintiff devotes much of her brief to arguing that attorneys are exempt from all of the professional conduct regulations established by the 2005 Act. Her interpretation founders on the plain language of the statute, which makes the professional conduct regulations in the 2005 Act applicable to "any person" who provides paid "legal representation" to consumer debtors. See 11 U.S.C. § 101(4A); id. § 101(12A).

Plaintiff's constitutional claims fare no better. Section 526(a)(4) prohibits an attorney from advising a debtor "to incur more debt in contemplation of such person filing a case under this title." As plaintiff does not dispute, Congress enacted this provision in recognition of the fact that debtors frequently "load up" with new debt on the eve of bankruptcy in an effort to game the bankruptcy system. Plaintiff does not suggest that attorney advice to take on new debt for such a purpose is protected by the First Amendment. Instead, she insists that the statute should be also be construed to apply "in all the varied circumstances where there is a bona fide, good faith, lawful and ethical reason for incurring the debt and where doing so would be in the client's best interest." Br. 20.

That interpretation is neither required by the statutory text nor consistent with Congress's purposes in the 2005 Act. As our opening brief establishes (at 22-24), Congress and the federal courts have frequently described pre-petition debts amassed for improper purposes as debts incurred "in contemplation of" bankruptcy. This Court's en banc decision in In re Mercer, which involved allegedly fraudulent credit-card purchases made prior to bankruptcy, employed the same phrase in the same sense. See 246 F.3d 391, 421 n.43 (5th Cir. 2001) (en banc) (describing "loading up" as the practice of "incurring card debt in contemplation of bankruptcy" (emphasis added)); see also Black's Law Dictionary 336 (8th ed. 2004) (explaining that the phrase "contemplation of bankruptcy" typically connotes "action designed to thwart the distribution of assets in a bankruptcy proceeding"). Plaintiff makes no reference to these authorities, nor does she attempt to explain why this Court should adopt the broadest possible reading of the statute in order to sustain her facial challenge.

On her cross-appeal, plaintiff presses her constitutional challenge to 11 U.S.C. § 527(b), which requires bankruptcy attorneys to provide debtors with a notice that explains basic factual information about the bankruptcy process. Congress enacted section 527(b) in response to evidence that many debtors lacked even the most rudimentary information regarding the bankruptcy system. As the district court concluded, "[t]he government clearly has a legitimate interest in attempting to ensure that a client is informed of certain basic information before he or she commences a case in bankruptcy," and the Supreme Court has repeatedly upheld similar disclosure requirements in other contexts.

The district court properly rejected plaintiff's assertion that section 527(b) requires plaintiff to make false and misleading statements. As the district court explained, plaintiff's contention, at bottom, is that the notice requires elaboration and context. If plaintiff believes this to be the case, nothing in section 527(b) prevents her from providing that elaboration. Indeed, the statute itself provides that the disclosures may be provided in any "substantially similar" form, and are mandatory only "to the extent applicable" in the circumstances.

ARGUMENT

I. CONGRESS ENACTED THE "DEBT RELIEF AGENCY" PROVISIONS OF THE 2005 ACT TO REGULATE ATTORNEYS AS WELL AS OTHER BANKRUPTCY PROFESSIONALS.

1. In enacting the 2005 bankruptcy amendments, Congress was concerned not merely with abuses by debtors, but also with abuses committed by — and at the encouragement of — debtors' professional representatives in the bankruptcy system. See generally Gov. Br. 23-28. Accordingly, as part of "a comprehensive package of reform measures," Congress enacted the "debt relief agency" provisions of the 2005 Act to "strengthen[] professionalism standards for attorneys and others who assist consumer debtors with their bankruptcy cases." H.R. Rep. No. 109-31, pt. 1, at 2, 17 (2005), reprinted in 2005 U.S.C.C.A.N. 88, 89, 103 ("House Report").

Plaintiff nevertheless devotes much of her brief to arguing that attorneys are exempt from all of the professional conduct regulations established by the 2005 Act. As the district court recognized, that contention founders on the plain language of the statute. See 347 B.R. at 22-23. Congress defined the term "debt relief agency" to include "any person" who, for a fee, "provides any bankruptcy assistance to an assisted person." 11 U.S.C. § 101(12A). "Bankruptcy assistance," in turn, includes "providing information, advice, counsel, document preparation, or filing * * * with respect to a case or proceeding under this title," including in particular "appearing in a case or proceeding on behalf of another" or "providing legal representation." Id. § 101(4A) (emphasis added). By its plain terms, therefore, the statute encompasses "any person" who "counsel[s]" or provides "legal representation" to consumer debtors in exchange for a fee — a category that unmistakably includes bankruptcy attorneys.

Congress chose this definition for a reason. As our opening brief explains (at 17-20), Congress enacted the 2005 legislation partly in response to evidence that identified misconduct by attorneys as a source of abusive and unnecessary bankruptcy filings. For example, the House Report accompanying the 2005 Act cited a study that "consistently identified," among the sources of bankruptcy abuse, "misconduct by attorneys and other professionals." House Report at 5 (quoting Darling & Redmiles, Protecting the Integrity of the System: the Civil Enforcement Initiative, 21 Am. Bankr. Inst. J. 12 (Sept. 2002)). Similarly, in adopting the advertising disclosure requirements in section 528, Congress heard evidence of "increasingly aggressive lawyer advertising" that offered to make consumers' debts "disappear," but failed to explain that such relief would require a petition for bankruptcy. See 108th Cong. 55 (2003). Congress responded to these concerns by enacting the debt relief agency provisions to "strengthen[] professionalism standards for attorneys and others who assist consumer debtors with their bankruptcy cases" in return for a fee. House Report at 17 (emphasis added).

2. Plaintiff makes no attempt to reconcile her arguments with this declaration of congressional intent, and her efforts to derive a contrary purpose from the text of the statute fail at every turn.

Plaintiff stresses, for example, that the definition of "debt relief agency" does not expressly mention attorneys. Br. 11-12. The definition does, however, use the term "bankruptcy assistance," which in turn explicitly includes "legal representation." 11 U.S.C. § 101(4A). Plaintiff does not explain why Congress would define "bankruptcy assistance" to include "legal representation" if it meant to exclude lawyers from the statute's scope. Congress was not required to state, in addition, that a statute regulating persons who provide "legal representation" encompasses the very persons who provide such representation. See Heintz v. Jenkins, 514 U.S. 291, 294-95, 298 (1995) (lawyers who engage in debt collection are "debt collectors" under the Fair Debt Collection Practices Act, even though the statute does not specifically refer to lawyers or the practice of law); Goldfarb v. Virginia State Bar, 421 U.S. 773, 787-88 (1975) (noting the "heavy presumption against implicit exemptions," and accordingly refusing to construe the Sherman Act to exempt lawyers).

Equally mistaken is plaintiff's reliance on 11 U.S.C. § 527(b), which requires debt relief agencies to inform debtors that "you can represent yourself, you can hire an attorney to represent you, or you can get help in some localities from a bankruptcy petition preparer who is not an attorney." Ibid. Plaintiff urges that it would be "illogical and absurd" to require attorneys to inform clients of their right to hire an attorney. Br. 12. By the plain terms of the statute, however, the disclosures are mandatory only "to the extent applicable." 11 U.S.C. § 527(b). Moreover, plaintiff's logic would also exclude bankruptcy petition preparers from the definition of "debt relief agency" — even though bankruptcy petition preparers are expressly referenced in that definition. See 11 U.S.C. § 101(12A).

Nor is there any merit to plaintiff's argument that attorneys cannot be "debt relief agencies" because consumer bankruptcy attorneys are sometimes retained to advise creditors. Br. 12-13. The debt relief agency provisions apply only when an attorney advises an "assisted person." See 11 U.S.C. § 101(12A) (debt relief agency is "any person who provides bankruptcy assistance to an assisted person"). An "assisted person," in turn, is "any person whose debts consist primarily of consumer debts and the value of whose nonexempt property is less than $164,250." Id. § 101(4A). The Code thus contemplates that "debt relief agencies" are persons who advise debtors, not creditors.[1] See House Report at 17 (describing the debt relief agency provisions as "professionalism standards for attorneys and others who assist consumer debtors with their bankruptcy cases" (emphasis added)). And even if creditors were "assisted persons" under the Code, it is unclear exactly what "absurd results" (Br. 13) plaintiff believes would ensue — neither of the two provisions whose validity plaintiff challenges, for example, would remotely apply in such a circumstance. See 11 U.S.C. § 526(a)(4) (governing advice given to an assisted person "in contemplation of such person filing a case under this title"); id. § 527(b) (requiring certain disclosures to assisted persons "to the extent applicable").

3. Plaintiff suggests that interpreting the 2005 Act to encompass bankruptcy lawyers would impermissibly intrude on "the states' traditional role of regulating attorneys." Br. 14. This assertion is baseless. It cannot seriously be disputed that Congress may provide rules for the conduct of attorneys practicing in the federal courts, including in the federal bankruptcy courts. See, e.g., 28 U.S.C. § 1927; Fed. R. Civ. P.

[1] Congress could not simply use the word "debtor" in the definition of "assisted person" because, for purposes of the Bankruptcy Code, a "debtor" is a person with respect to whom a bankruptcy case has already been commenced. See 11 U.S.C. § 101(13). The debt relief agency provisions, by contrast, govern the interactions between attorneys and their bankruptcy clients both pre- and post-petition.

11; Fed. R. Bankr. P. 9011; cf. Chambers v. NASCO, Inc., 501 U.S. 32 (1991). Indeed, federal law commonly supplies rules of professional conduct for attorneys in regulatory areas that, like bankruptcy, reflect uniquely federal concerns. See, e.g., 15 U.S.C. § 7245 (Securities and Exchange Commission); 31 C.F.R. Part 10 (Internal Revenue Service); 37 C.F.R. Part 10 (Patent and Trademark Office).[2]

Plaintiff's reliance on the preemption savings clause in section 526(d) is misplaced for similar reasons. See Br. 13. Section 526(d) provides that nothing in the 2005 Act shall "be deemed to limit or curtail the authority * * * of a State * * * to determine and enforce qualifications for the practice of law under the laws of that State." 11 U.S.C. § 526(d)(2)(A). The challenged provisions create substantive standards of conduct for debt relief agencies in the federal bankruptcy system; they do not purport to regulate state bar admission or other "qualifications for the practice of law." In fact, section 526(d) expressly distinguishes between restrictions on conduct and qualifications for legal practice, preempting state rules of conduct “to the extent” they are inconsistent with the federal debt relief agency requirements, see 11 U.S.C. § 526(d)(1), while leaving undisturbed state bar admission requirements, see id. § 526(d)(2)(A). The preemption savings clause merely ensures that nothing in the 2005 Act will limit the ability of the states to decide who may become members of their respective bars.

[2] Plaintiff cites Leis v. Flynt, 439 U.S. 438 (1979), for the proposition that the regulation of attorneys is exclusively entrusted to the states. See Br. 14 n.9. The Court in Leis, however, merely rejected a claim that the Fourteenth Amendment prohibits state courts from denying pro hac vice admission to attorneys from other states. See 439 U.S. at 441-45. Nothing in Leis casts doubt on the authority of the federal government to regulate attorneys practicing before federal tribunals. See In re Desilets, 291 F.3d 925, 929 (6th Cir. 2002) ("Leis does not hold that state rules govern practice in federal courts.").

4. Finally, plaintiff wrongly suggests that, notwithstanding the plain text of the statute, this Court may exclude attorneys from the scope of the 2005 Act under the rubric of constitutional avoidance. Br. 11, 14. As an initial matter, plaintiff’s interpretation would “avoid” far more than her constitutional claims: her reading would exempt bankruptcy attorneys not merely from the two provisions whose validity she challenges, but also from the many other professional conduct regulations in the 2005 Act whose constitutionality is undisputed. See, e.g., 11 U.S.C. § 526(a)(1) (requirement to perform all promised services); id. § 527 (requirement to provide written notice of debtors’ rights and obligations in bankruptcy); id. § 528(a)(1)-(2) (requirement to prepare a written contract with clear notice of applicable fees).

More fundamentally, the avoidance canon permits — indeed, requires — a court to adopt any reasonable construction of a statute that avoids a serious constitutional question, but it does not permit a court to disregard an unambiguous expression of congressional intent. Congress enacted the debt relief agency provisions to establish "professionalism standards for attorneys and others who assist consumer debtors with their bankruptcy cases," House Report at 17 (emphasis added), and plaintiff cannot properly invoke the doctrine of avoidance to frustrate that intent.

II. SECTION 526(a)(4) CONSTITUTIONALLY PROHIBITS BANKRUPTCY ATTORNEYS FROM ENCOURAGING THEIR CLIENTS TO ABUSE THE BANKRUPTCY SYSTEM.

A. Section 526(a)(4) Should Not Be Construed More Broadly Than Necessary To Achieve Congress's Purposes.

As discussed at length in our opening brief, Congress has long been aware that debtors frequently abuse the protections of the bankruptcy code by "loading up" with new debt on the eve of bankruptcy. See House Report at 15 (expressing concern that earlier legislative measures had not adequately restricted the ability of debtors to "knowingly load up with credit card purchases or recklessly obtain cash advances and then file for bankruptcy relief"); S. Rep. No. 98-65, at 9 (1983) (noting special problem posed by "'loading up' in contemplation of bankruptcy"); Report of the Commission of the Bankruptcy Laws of the United States, H.R. Doc. No. 93-137, pt. I, at 11 (July 1973) (concluding that "the most serious abuse of consumer bankruptcy is the number of instances in which individuals have purchased a sizable quantity of goods and services on credit on the eve of bankruptcy in contemplation of obtaining a discharge”).

In hearings preceding the 2005 Act, moreover, Congress heard evidence that “misconduct by attorneys and other professionals” had been “consistently identified” by the U.S. Trustee Program as a source of abusive bankruptcy filings. See House Report at 5 (citation omitted). Other witnesses, including bankruptcy judges, informed Congress that these problems were likely to be exacerbated by the new “means testing” provisions in the 2005 legislation, which create an incentive for unethical attorneys to encourage their clients to run up additional debt on the eve of bankruptcy in order to obtain a full discharge of their debts under chapter 7. See generally Gov. Br. 17-20. It was against this background that Congress enacted 11 U.S.C. § 526(a)(4).

None of this is controverted. Plaintiff does not deny Congress’s purpose in adopting these reforms, nor does she dispute that Congress targeted a genuine problem. Nor, indeed, does plaintiff deny that Congress can properly restrict attorneys from encouraging their clients to engage in such abusive practices. Her contention, instead, is that section 526(a)(4) must be read expansively to apply “in all the varied circumstances where there is a bona fide, good faith, lawful and ethical reason for incurring the debt and where doing so would be in the client’s best interest.” Br. 20.

That approach turns the canon of constitutional avoidance on its head. Plaintiff is not entitled to insist upon the broadest possible interpretation of section 526(a)(4) in order to secure its invalidation. When "an otherwise acceptable construction of a statute would raise serious constitutional problems," a federal court must "construe the statute to avoid such problems unless such a construction would be plainly contrary to legislative intent." Planned Parenthood v. Sanchez, 403 F.3d 324, 341 (5th Cir. 2005) (quoting Edward J. DeBartolo Corp. v. Florida Gulf Coast Bldg. & Constr. Trades Council, 485 U.S. 568, 575 (1988)). Although plaintiff acknowledges this principle elsewhere in her brief, see Br. 11 & n.5, she makes no mention of the avoidance canon in pressing her challenge to section 526(a)(4). If plaintiff believes that avoidance principles may be jettisoned merely because she asserts an overbreadth claim, she is mistaken: Even when First Amendment interests are potentially affected, a court will "presume any narrowing construction or practice to which the law is 'fairly susceptible,'" and will not strike down a statute on the basis of facial overbreadth "when a limiting construction has been or could be placed on the challenged statute." Baby Dolls Topless Saloons, Inc. v. City of Dallas, 295 F.3d 471, 483 (5th Cir. 2002) (quoting City of Lakewood v. Plain Dealer Publishing Co., 486 U.S. 750, 770 n.11 (1988), and Broadrick v. Oklahoma, 413 U.S. 601, 612 (1973)).

B. Plaintiff's Sweeping Interpretation Of Section 526(a)(4) Is Neither Required By The Text Of The Statute Nor Consistent With Congress's Purposes.

Plaintiff's interpretation of section 526(a)(4) is plainly not compelled by the terms of the statute. As we explained in our opening brief (and as plaintiff does not dispute), Congress and the federal courts have both commonly described pre-petition debts amassed for improper purposes as debts incurred "in contemplation of" bankruptcy. See Gov. Br. 22-24. This Court's en banc decision in In re Mercer, which involved allegedly fraudulent credit-card purchases made prior to bankruptcy, employed the same phrase in the same sense. See 246 F.3d 391, 421 n.43 (5th Cir. 2001) (en banc) (describing "loading up" as the practice of "incurring card debt in contemplation of bankruptcy" (emphasis added)); see also id. at 421 (referring to "a dishonest but patient debtor who intends to incur card-debt in contemplation of discharge").

This use of the phrase "in contemplation of," moreover, reflects settled connotations in the bankruptcy context. See Black's Law Dictionary 336 (8th ed. 2004) (explaining that the phrase "contemplation of bankruptcy" typically connotes "action designed to thwart the distribution of assets in a bankruptcy proceeding"). See also, e.g., United States v. Fox, 95 U.S. 670, 672 (1877) ("To legislate for the prevention of frauds * * * when committed in contemplation of bankruptcy, would seem to be within the competency of Congress."); In re Charles, 334 B.R. 207, 222 (Bankr. S.D. Tex. 2005) ("It is settled law that a debtor's good faith should be questioned if the debtor makes purchases in contemplation of a bankruptcy case."); cf. 18 U.S.C. § 152(7) (prohibiting fraudulent transfer or concealment of assets "in contemplation of a case under title 11").

Plaintiff's construction of section 526(a)(4), by contrast, would require the Court to disregard the context in which Congress placed the provision. Section 526(a)(4) is one of four subsections of section 526(a). The other three subsections indisputably provide rules of professional conduct designed to protect debtors from abusive practices by bankruptcy attorneys and other debt relief agencies. See 11 U.S.C. § 526(a)(1) (debt relief agencies must perform all promised services); id. § 526(a)(2) (prohibiting debt relief agencies from advising debtors to make false or misleading statements to obtain bankruptcy relief); id. § 526(a)(3) (prohibiting debt relief agencies from misrepresenting to debtors the services to be provided or the costs or benefits of filing for bankruptcy relief). Against this background, it is apparent that Congress did not enact, as the fourth item in this list, the sweeping prohibition on "good faith, lawful and ethical" advice that plaintiff claims.

Likewise, plaintiff makes no attempt to reconcile her interpretation with the remedial provisions of the statute. As our opening brief explains (at 29-31), the principal remedy for a violation of section 526(a)(4) is a suit against the attorney to recover the debtor's "actual damages." See 11 U.S.C. § 526(c)(2); see also id. § 526(c)(3)(B). Congress's emphasis on compensating the debtor's "actual damages" from violations of section 526 underscores the error of plaintiff's interpretation: Congress was concerned with abusive practices that risk dismissal of the debtor's petition, denial of a discharge, and other "actual damages" to the debtor, not ordinary legal advice that is consistent with the Bankruptcy Code and the client's best interests.

Plaintiff is thus quite wrong to insist that the statute prohibits "a wide range of legally permissible, ethical, advisable conduct." Br. 28. Echoing the district court, for example, plaintiff contends that section 526(a)(4) would prevent her from advising a client to borrow money to buy a dependable automobile in order to continue working during bankruptcy, or to obtain student loans in order to complete her education and better her financial condition. Br. 28-29. But as we made clear in our opening brief, section 526(a)(4) has no application to such advice, nor to any other advice similarly consistent with the policies of the Bankruptcy Code and with the client's best interests, provided all necessary disclosures are made to the lenders.[3] See Gov. Br. 24-25. Section 526(a)(4) simply prevents attorneys and other professionals from becoming the affirmative engines of bankruptcy abuse.

C. Section 526(a)(4) Provides A Bankruptcy-Specific Rule Of Professional Conduct That Constitutionally Precludes Attorneys From Encouraging Debtors To Abuse The Bankruptcy Code.

Understood in this manner, there is little doubt that section 526(a)(4) satisfies the First Amendment. As we have noted, even plaintiff does not contend that she has a First Amendment right to encourage her clients to file abusive bankruptcy petitions, or to load up on new debt prior to bankruptcy with the intent that the debt be discharged. As the Supreme Court made clear in Gentile v. State Bar of Nevada, 501 U.S. 1030 (1991), attorneys are not merely agents of their clients but also officers of the courts, and for that reason may be "subject to ethical restrictions on speech to which an ordinary citizen would not be." Id. at 1071. The Court in Gentile quoted with approval Justice Stewart's dispositive concurrence in In re Sawyer, 360 U.S. 622 (1959), in which he rejected the notion "that a lawyer can invoke the constitutional right of free speech to immunize himself from even-handed discipline for proven unethical conduct," because "[a] lawyer belongs to a profession with inherited standards of propriety and honor, which experience has shown necessary in a calling dedicated to the accomplishment of justice. * * * Obedience to ethical precepts may require abstention from what in other circumstances might be constitutionally protected speech." Id. at 646-47 (Stewart, J., concurring in judgment); see Gentile, 501 U.S. at 1071. See also Ohralik v. Ohio State Bar Ass'n, 436 U.S. 447, 460 (1978) (sustaining a restriction on attorney solicitation because the government "bears a special responsibility for maintaining standards among members of the licensed professions"); Goldfarb, 421 U.S. at 792 (the government's interest "in regulating lawyers is especially great since lawyers are essential to the primary governmental function of administering justice, and have historically been 'officers of the courts'").

[3] Plaintiff is thus incorrect to assert that these examples would be prohibited even under the government's interpretation of the statute. Br. 28.

Plaintiff insists that section 526(a)(4) does not regulate professional conduct and should not be analyzed under the principles discussed in Gentile. Br. 15-19. That contention is difficult to fathom. Section 526(a)(4) provides a bankruptcy-specific rule of conduct akin to Model Rule of Professional Conduct 1.2(d), which states that an attorney may not "counsel a client to engage, or assist a client, in conduct that the lawyer knows is criminal or fraudulent." As we observed in our opening brief, that rule has been applied to precisely the conduct that section 526(a)(4) addresses. See Attorney Grievance Comm'n of Maryland v. Culver, 381 Md. 241, 275-76 (2004) (attorney violated Rule 1.2(d) by advising a client to obtain credit card loans with the intent that the debt be discharged in bankruptcy). Moreover, Congress itself described the "debt relief agency" provisions of the 2005 Act as "professionalism standards for attorneys." See House Report at 17 (debt relief agency provisions "strengthen[] professionalism standards for attorneys and others who assist consumer debtors with their bankruptcy cases").

Plaintiff nevertheless offers a series of reasons why, in her view, the Gentile standard is inapplicable. None has merit. First, plaintiff contends that section 526(a)(4) cannot be construed as an ethical standard because "there exists no independent basis which prohibits the attorney conduct contained in 11 U.S.C. § 526(a)(4)." Br. 17. That contention, however, merely reflects plaintiff's position that section 526(a)(4) should be read to prohibit all attorney advice to incur debt, even for a "bona fide, good faith, lawful and ethical reason." Br. 20. As plaintiff does not dispute, a substantial body of law does prohibit debtors from amassing debt on the eve of bankruptcy without the intent and ability to repay, or for the purpose of abusing the Bankruptcy Code's protections. See 11 U.S.C. § 523(a)(2); id. § 707(b); 18 U.S.C. § 157; see also, e.g., Uniform Fraudulent Transfer Act §§ 4-5 (1984).[4] Indeed, plaintiff herself acknowledges that, because "incurring debt with no intent to repay is already fraudulent * * * and has potential criminal ramifications under many state laws, an attorney could not, lawfully or consistent with state ethical requirements, advise a client to incur it." Br. 18 n.14.

Plaintiff argues that interpreting section 526(a)(4) in this manner would render the statute "completely unnecessary" in light of underlying state ethical rules. Br. 18 n.14. But Congress undoubtedly has the power to provide uniform rules of professional conduct for attorneys in bankruptcy cases, even where state law already supplies the underlying norm. Cf. 28

[4] Plaintiff suggests that the power of a bankruptcy court under 11 U.S.C. § 707(b) to dismiss a debtor's petition for abuse of the Bankruptcy Code is irrelevant to the First Amendment analysis because, in plaintiff's view, that section provides a "substantive rule of law" rather than a penalty for particular conduct. Br. 17. That contention is baseless. Plaintiff does not dispute that a debtor's deliberate accumulation of debt on the eve of bankruptcy for the purpose of manipulating the Code would constitute an "abuse" under section 707(b), and she admits that a determination of abuse "can result in denial of a debtor's discharge" or "dismissal of the proceeding." Br. 17. Section 707(b) thus imposes a very real penalty on debtors for abusive pre-petition conduct. Moreover, as our opening brief explains (at 29-31), the 2005 Act imposes an affirmative duty on bankruptcy attorneys themselves to certify, on pain of civil penalties, that their clients' petitions do not constitute an abuse of the Code. See 11 U.S.C. § 707(b)(4). And while plaintiff is correct that section 707 applies only in chapter 7 cases, it is well established that bad-faith pre-petition conduct by a debtor justifies dismissal under other chapters of the Code as well. See Marrama v. Citizens Bank, 127 S. Ct. 1105, 1110-12 (2007); see generally 11 U.S.C. § 1307(c) (chapter 13); id. § 1208(c) (chapter 12); id. § 1112(b) (chapter 11).

U.S.C. § 1927; Fed. R. Civ. P. 11. Moreover, section 526 supplies a federal cause of action for aggrieved debtors to recover their "actual damages" from unethical attorney advice. See 11 U.S.C. § 526(c). The Constitution does not bar Congress from regulating practice in federal courts, regardless of the potential availability of post-hoc malpractice remedies in state court.

Nor is there any merit to plaintiff's contention that, although an attorney's advertising, solicitation, and other public conduct may be subject to regulation, the government lacks the authority to regulate a lawyer's advice to "actual, living, breathing clients." Br. 18-19. To the contrary, it is when an attorney serves as the trusted agent for an "actual, living, breathing" client who seeks relief from a court that the government's interest in preventing unethical attorney conduct reaches its zenith. See Gentile, 501 U.S. at 1071; Ohralik, 436 U.S. at 460.

Plaintiff's attack on section 526(a)(4) as a "content-based restriction" on speech, Br. 25, likewise fails to come to grips with the distinctions between regulation of professional conduct and general restrictions on public speech. Rules governing attorneys and other professionals are typically content-based. Model Rule 1.2(d), which precludes attorneys from advising clients to engage in fraud, is no less a content-based restriction on attorney speech. At bottom, plaintiff’s claim is not that Congress may not regulate the content of professional speech, but that it should not regulate the particular speech at issue — a contention that merely reflects her view that section 526(a)(4) should be read as broadly as possible to invite constitutional concerns.

The error of plaintiff’s analysis is reflected in her reliance on Thomas v. Collins, 323 U.S. 516 (1945). See Br. 29. The Supreme Court in that case upheld the right of a union organizer to give a speech in a public forum urging workers to join his labor union, finding no “clear and present danger” to the public interest. Id. at 530. As Gentile later made clear, such analysis is wholly inapposite to regulations governing the professional conduct of attorneys as officers of the courts. See Gentile, 501 U.S. at 1071.

Plaintiff’s reliance on Legal Services Corp. v. Velazquez, 531 U.S. 533 (2001) is similarly wide of the mark. See Br. 20-23. The statute at issue in Velazquez conditioned the receipt of federal funds on an attorney’s agreement not to challenge the validity of state or federal welfare laws. 531 U.S. at 538. The provision did not seek to regulate attorney ethics or avoid client abuses. Instead, the statute prevented attorneys from making “all the reasonable and well-grounded arguments necessary for proper resolution of the case,” thereby inhibiting the unfettered advocacy upon which courts depend for the exercise of judicial power. Id. at 545. Section 526(a)(4) does nothing of the sort. Indeed, it does the opposite: section 526(a)(4) prevents attorneys from subverting the bankruptcy process and jeopardizing their clients' interests by encouraging debtors to abuse the protections of the Code.

D. The District Court Further Erred In Striking Down Section 526(a)(4) On Its Face.

Finally, as we explained in our opening brief (at 31-33), the district court additionally erred in striking down section 526(a)(4) on its face, without pausing to consider whether the statute's allegedly unconstitutional applications were not only "real, but substantial as well, judged in relation to the statute's plainly legitimate sweep." Shackelford v. Shirley, 948 F.2d 935, 940 (5th Cir. 1991) (quoting Broadrick v. Oklahoma, 413 U.S. 601, 615 (1973)). The court's error in this respect was highlighted by its invalidation of section 526(a)(4) in its entirety, without addressing the portion of the statute that precludes an attorney from advising a client to incur additional debt to pay the attorney's own fees. See 11 U.S.C. § 526(a)(4) (prohibiting advice "to incur more debt * * * to pay an attorney or bankruptcy petition preparer fee or charge for services performed as part of preparing for or representing a debtor in a case under this title").

In her brief, plaintiff admonishes the government for addressing this portion of the statute on appeal "for the first time in this case." Br. 30-33. This characterization entirely misperceives the issue. At no point in the district court did plaintiff challenge the attorney-fee provision of section 526(a)(4), or even specifically allege that she intends to violate it.[5] The constitutionality of that provision therefore was not before the district court, and the court could not properly declare the entire statute invalid on its face.

In any event, plaintiff's belated attack on the validity of the attorney-fee provisions of section 526(a)(4) is without merit. Congress undoubtedly possesses the authority to prevent bankruptcy attorneys from abusing their positions as officers of the court and "trusted agents of their clients," Ohralik v. Ohio State Bar Ass'n, 436 U.S. 447, 460 (1978), by seeking preferential treatment for themselves in the bankruptcy process. An attorney who encourages a debtor to incur new (and almost certainly unsecured) debt in order to pay the attorney's own fees is effectively urging the debtor to exploit the bankruptcy system

[5] Plaintiff now claims that she did raise the issue in district court, see Br. 30 n.35, citing a line in her affidavit that paraphrases the provisions of section 526(a)(4) and an equally generic allegation that she "intend[s] to engage in protected speech or conduct that violates the statute at issue." CR200. Such generalized references were not sufficient to place the constitutionality of the second half of section 526(a)(4) in issue. Plaintiff's district court briefs did not discuss the provision, and the court consequently did not address it.

to shift the cost of the lawyer's services onto unsuspecting creditors. Nothing in the First Amendment prevents Congress from forbidding such deceptive practices by members of the bankruptcy bar. See Gentile, 501 U.S. at 1071.[6]

III. SECTION 527(b) CONSTITUTIONALLY REQUIRES BANKRUPTCY ATTORNEYS TO PROVIDE DEBTORS WITH BASIC FACTUAL INFORMATION ABOUT THE BANKRUPTCY PROCESS.

In her cross-appeal, plaintiff renews her contention that the disclosure requirements in 11 U.S.C. § 527(b) constitute compelled speech in violation of the First Amendment.

A. Congress Enacted Section 527(b) To Ensure That Consumer Debtors Will Receive Basic Information About Their Rights And Obligations In The Bankruptcy System.

In hearings preceding the 2005 Act, Congress heard evidence that many consumer debtors lack even the most rudimentary information about their rights and obligations in the bankruptcy process. For example, one debtor who had filed for bankruptcy

[6] Plaintiff objects that "[l]aws inhibiting advice to hire a lawyer have long been held to violate the First Amendment." Br. 32. But section 526(a)(4) does not prohibit advice to hire a bankruptcy attorney. Rather, it prohibits attorneys from encouraging debtors to incur new debt — debt that will be discharged in bankruptcy — in order to pay the attorney's own fees, at the expense of other creditors. Plaintiff's further suggestion that Congress may not in any respect limit a debtor's ability to retain counsel in a bankruptcy proceeding is plainly mistaken. See Hadd v. LSG-Sky Chefs, 272 F.3d 298, 301 (5th Cir. 2001) (no right to counsel in a civil case, regardless of legal sophistication or ability to pay); United States v. Kras, 409 U.S. 434, 446 (1973) ("There is no constitutional right to obtain a discharge of one's debts in bankruptcy."); cf. Lamie v. U.S. Trustee, 540 U.S. 526 (2004) (discussing restrictions on compensation for debtors' attorneys under the Bankruptcy Code).

urged Congress to "require attorneys or the bankruptcy court to tell debtors about their options, both within bankruptcy and outside of bankruptcy," explaining that his own attorney had never mentioned chapter 13 and had not discussed the possibility of credit counseling. Bankruptcy Reform Act of 1998: Part I, Hearing on H.R. 3150 Before House Judiciary Comm., 105th Cong. 93, 94 (1998) (testimony of Nicholl J. Russell).

Similarly, a professor at Iowa State University described to Congress a survey she had conducted of debtors' experiences in the bankruptcy system. See Consumer Bankruptcy Reform Act: Seeking Fair and Practical Solutions to the Bankruptcy Crisis, Hearing on S. 1301 Before Senate Judiciary Comm., 105th Cong. 28 (1998) (testimony of Dr. Tahira K. Hira). She testified that most of the surveyed debtors had learned what little they knew about the bankruptcy system from friends and family, and from attorney advertisements. Id. at 28-29. In hindsight, many complained that they had not received adequate information from their lawyers. Ibid. Suggestions from the debtors for improving the system included that someone should "explain laws and terms in plain English"; that "[t]here should be strict guidelines for lawyers [requiring them] to inform clients fairly and not for their own wallets"; and that "[t]he lawyers should be made to explain details instead of taking the money and moving you through the system like cattle." Id. at 32.

Congress reacted to these concerns by enacting 11 U.S.C. § 527(b), which requires attorneys and other debt relief agencies to provide their clients with a "clear and conspicuous" statement of basic factual information about the bankruptcy process. The statute describes the content of the required notice in detail, see 11 U.S.C. § 527(b), and requires that the attorney provide the prescribed information to the debtor, "to the extent applicable" under the circumstances, within three days of the start of the representation, see ibid.

Among other information, the notice required by section 527(b) explains:

- that in the bankruptcy system, a debtor may represent herself, hire a lawyer, or in some cases, hire a bankruptcy petition preparer;
- that attorneys and bankruptcy petition preparers are obligated to provide written contracts explaining the services they will provide and how much they will cost;
- that there are different types of debt relief available under the bankruptcy system, and that the debtor will have to choose which type to seek;
- that filing for bankruptcy involves submitting documents to a court, and that a filing fee will apply; and
- that bankruptcy may involve litigation.

See generally 11 U.S.C. § 527(b).

B. The District Court Correctly Rejected Plaintiff's Claim That Section 527(b) Violates the First Amendment.

The district court rejected plaintiff's claim that the disclosure requirements in section 527(b) violate the First Amendment. See 347 B.R. at 25-27. That conclusion is not subject to substantial challenge. The Supreme Court has repeatedly made clear that the statutes requiring attorneys and other professionals to disclose basic factual information to their clients will be upheld if they are reasonably related to a legitimate government interest and are not unduly burdensome. See Zauderer v. Office of Disciplinary Counsel of Supreme Court of Ohio, 471 U.S. 626, 650-52 (1985); Planned Parenthood v. Casey, 505 U.S. 833, 881-884 (1992).

The Supreme Court in Zauderer upheld an Ohio rule of professional conduct that required attorneys to disclose, in advertisements for contingency-fee arrangements, the manner in which court costs and fees would be charged to the client. See 471 U.S. at 633. Like plaintiff here, see Br. 40, the attorney in Zauderer urged the Court to strike down the disclosure requirement by analogy to compelled speech cases such as West Virginia State Board of Education v. Barnette, 319 U.S. 624 (1943) (recitation of the pledge of allegiance), and Wooley v. Maynard, 430 U.S. 705 (1977) ("live free or die" motto). But the Court rejected that analogy, explaining that the First Amendment interests implicated by a regulation requiring attorneys to provide "purely factual and uncontroversial information" to potential clients are simply "not of the same order." Id. at 651. The Ohio disclosure requirement "easily passe[d] muster" under the First Amendment because it was "reasonably related" to the state's legitimate interest in "preventing the deception of consumers." Id. at 650-51.[7]

Similarly, in Planned Parenthood v. Casey, physicians challenged a state law requiring them to provide patients with basic factual information regarding the risks of abortions and the alternative options available to the patient. Like plaintiff here, the physicians argued that the requirement to disclose specific information in the manner mandated by the state violated their First Amendment rights against compelled speech. And as in Zauderer, the Court rejected that argument, finding "no constitutional infirmity in the requirement that the physician provide the information mandated by the State." 505 U.S. at 884. The Court explained that the physicians' First Amendment rights were implicated only "as part of the practice of medicine," which

[7] Like the advertising regulations in Zauderer, section 527(b) involves a regulation of commercial speech. Indeed, one purpose of the disclosures required by the statute — which must be made within three days of the attorney's first "offer[] to provide any bankruptcy assistance" to the debtor, see 11 U.S.C. § 527(a)(2); id. § 527(b) — is to enable the debtor to make an informed decision regarding whether to hire an attorney. Thus, the required statement indicates that debtors have the right to represent themselves, and warns debtors to "[a]sk to see [a] contract before you hire someone." § 527(b).

In any event, even outside of the commercial speech context, statutes requiring licensed professionals to disclose factual information to their clients will be upheld if they are reasonably related to a legitimate state interest. See Casey, 505 U.S. at 884.

in turn was "subject to reasonable licensing and regulation by the State." Ibid.

Although the district court specifically relied on Casey in rejecting her challenge to section 527(b), plaintiff makes no attempt to distinguish these authorities in her brief. Nor does she dispute the court's conclusion that "[t]he government clearly has a legitimate interest in attempting to ensure that a client is informed of certain basic information before he or she commences a case in bankruptcy." 347 B.R. at 27. As the district court observed, "among consumer creditors, attorneys, and their debtor clients, the consumer debtor is often at an informational disadvantage." Ibid. Consequently, a "factual, viewpoint-neutral statement provides a sufficiently benign and narrow means of ensuring that clients are aware of certain general information regarding bankruptcy." Ibid.

Plaintiff disputes none of this. Instead, she offers ten respects in which, in her view, the disclosures in section 527(b) are "false" or "potentially misleading." Br. 34-35.[8]

Not one of plaintiff's examples, however, actually involves a factual or legal error. In a few instances, plaintiff's understanding of the statute is simply inaccurate. For example, four of plaintiff's alleged inaccuracies (examples three, six, eight, and nine) involve variants of the claim that section 527(b) "fails to state that attorneys are the only ones authorized by law to provide" certain legal advice. In fact, the disclosure in section 527(b) specifically states that "only attorneys, not bankruptcy petition preparers, can give you legal advice." 11 U.S.C. § 527(b).

Plaintiff's remaining examples of "false and misleading" statements are, as the district court recognized, merely instances in which plaintiff would prefer to add further context or elaboration to the basic information provided by the statute. And as the court observed, nothing in section 527(b) prevents her from doing so. See 347 B.R. at 27 ("[I]n an area of law as intricate as bankruptcy, a generalized statement may often require further explanation by a client's attorney. Nothing in section 527 prevents this.").[9] Indeed, section 527(b) authorizes the required disclosures to be given in any "substantially similar" form, and the statements need only be provided "to the extent applicable." As the district court concluded, this freedom "leaves the bankruptcy attorney with sufficient control * * * to avoid any undue burden." Ibid.

[9] To take plaintiff's first example of a purportedly "false" statement, for example, section 527(b) requires plaintiff to warn her clients that a petition for bankruptcy will require a filing fee in bankruptcy court. See 11 U.S.C. § 527(b). Nothing prevents plaintiff from further advising her clients that, in some instances, these fees can be deferred under Fed. R. Bankr. P. 1006(b). See Br. 34.

Equally baseless is plaintiff's contention that section 527(b) unconstitutionally compels her to make irrelevant disclosures to creditors and other clients who are not consumer debtors. Br. 37-38. As discussed in Part I above, the premise of this argument — that the statutory term "assisted person" includes creditors as well as debtors — is incorrect. See supra at 8-9. But even if it were otherwise, the disclosures in section 527(b) are mandatory only "to the extent applicable" under the circumstances. See 11 U.S.C. § 527(b). The statute thus does not oblige plaintiff to make irrelevant disclosures to her creditor clients.

Finally, plaintiff briefly suggests that the statute violates her right to due process, hypothesizing that she may be unable to determine immediately whether a particular consumer debtor qualifies as an "assisted person" under the statute and thus is entitled to receive the disclosures in section 527(b). Br. 36. Such speculation is plainly not a proper basis for invalidating a federal statute on its face. And in any event, nothing in section 527(b) bars plaintiff from simply providing the required statement to such a client with the caveat that the disclosure may not be legally mandatory. Cf. Zauderer, 471 U.S. at 651 ("[A]ppellant's constitutionally protected interest in not providing any particular factual information * * * is minimal.").

CONCLUSION

For the foregoing reasons, the district court's judgment with respect to 11 U.S.C. § 526(a)(4) should be reversed, and its judgment with respect to 11 U.S.C. § 527(b) should be affirmed.

STATEMENT ON ORAL ARGUMENT

Appellees, United States Trustee and Fran Strange, Assistant United States Trustee, believe that the principal briefs suffice to enable this Court to render an appropriate decision. Nevertheless, given the significance to the United States Trustee of the issues in the case, we do not oppose the holding of oral argument, and would be pleased to participate should this Court decide that such argument is desirable.

ON APPEAL FROM THE UNITED STATES DISTRICT COURT FOR THE WESTERN DISTRICT OF LOUISIANA

BRIEF FOR APPELLEES, US TRUSTEE;
FRAN STRANGE, Assistant Trustee

JURISDICTIONAL STATEMENT

A. The district court had subject matter jurisdiction of this case by virtue of 28 U.S.C. 1334.

B. This Court has jurisdiction pursuant to 28 U.S.C. 1291.

C. On May 18, 2000, appellant Dianne Hill, filed a timely notice of appeal from the judgments entered, March 23, 2000 and April 20, 2000. See Fed. R. App. P. 4(a)(1).

D. This appeal is from final orders that dispose of all the parties' claims.

STATEMENT OF THE ISSUES PRESENTED FOR REVIEW

1. Whether, under 11 U.S.C. 324(a), the bankruptcy court validly removed appellant, Dianne Hill, "for cause" as a Chapter 7 Bankruptcy Panel Trustee in In re Unclaimed Freight, Inc., and acted within its discretion in allowing her removal, under 11 U.S.C. 324(b), from all other bankruptcy cases to which she was assigned as a Panel Trustee.

2. Whether the bankruptcy court abused its discretion when it held Hill in civil contempt for failure to comply with the court's orders to turn over all case files, financial records and estate funds.

3. Whether the bankruptcy court abused its discretion when it denied Hill all compensation in cases in which she previously had served as trustee.

4. Whether the bankruptcy court abused its discretion when it suspended Hill from practice before it as an attorney on the grounds that she had lied to the court, altered its orders, and failed to comply with its orders.

5. Whether the bankruptcy judge abused his discretion when he declined to recuse himself in Hill's contempt hearing.

STATEMENT OF THE CASE

A. Nature of the Case.

In this case, a former bankruptcy trustee, Dianne Hill, appeals from two judgments of the federal district court, affirming orders in which the bankruptcy court first, removed her as trustee in all cases in which she was presently serving in that capacity based on her having altered an order of the court and her "continuing * * * inability to properly comply with the requirements of the United States Trustee"[1] (CR 902, SRE, Tab 100 at 93), second, held her in civil contempt for failure to comply with the court's orders to relinquish her estate files and funds to the successor trustee, third, based largely on her "egregious conduct" (CR 62, SRE, Tab 145 at 17), denied her all compensation in cases from which she was removed as trustee, and fourth, suspended her from practice before it as an attorney on the grounds that she had lied to the court, and altered and disobeyed its orders.

B. Course of Proceedings and Disposition Below.

On May 24, 1999, in In re Unclaimed Freight, the bankruptcy court issued an order granting the motion of the United States

[1] The United States Trustee -- not to be confused with the private individual, such as Hill, who is appointed as bankruptcy trustee for a particular case -- is an Executive Branch official who is responsible for "protecting the public interest and ensuring that bankruptcy cases are conducted according to the law." H.R. Rep. No. 95-595, at 109 (1978), reprinted in 1978 U.S.C.C.A.N. 5963, 6070.

Trustee (UST) to remove Hill as trustee from all open bankruptcy cases to which she was then assigned and requiring her to turn over all case files, case funds, and financial records to the successor trustee and provide him with status reports. CR 958, SRE, Tab 92 at 1. On September 8, 1999, in In re Spohn, the bankruptcy court suspended Hill from practicing as an attorney before that court and denied her compensation in that case. SRE, Tab 136. On October 29, 1999, pursuant to a hearing held on August 4, 1999, the bankruptcy court found Hill in civil contempt for failure to comply with its turnover order and its subsequently issued order to comply. CR 63, SRE, Tab 145 at 18. The court further ordered that Hill pay a successor trustee $1,500, and that she not receive compensation in any of the cases from which she had been removed as trustee.[2] Id.

On March 23, 2000, the district court affirmed the removal of Hill as a trustee, the denial of compensation in Spohn, and her suspension from practicing before the bankruptcy court. CR Vol 3, 410, RE, Tab D at 1. On April 20, 2000, the district court affirmed the finding of civil contempt, the payment of $1,500 to the successor trustee, and the denial of compensation

[2] On August 3, 1999, Hill had filed with the district court a Rule to Show Cause requesting compensation for prior trustee case assignments. CR Vol. 1, Docket Sheet, RE, Tab A at 4. On April 4, 2000, the district court determined that this request was moot in that the court would address Hill's compensation in its review of the pertinent order of the bankruptcy court. CR Vol. 1, Docket Sheet, RE, Tab A at 8.

in all other cases from which Hill had been removed as trustee. CR Vol. 3, RE, Tab F at 1.

STATEMENT OF FACTS

I. Statutory Scheme[3]

United States Trustees are officials of the Department of Justice appointed by the Attorney General to appoint trustees in bankruptcy cases and supervise the administration of bankruptcy cases. 28 U.S.C. 581-589. They generally have standing to "raise and * * * appear and be heard on any issue in any case or proceeding under this title * * * ." 11 U.S.C. 307. See generally United States Trustee v. Columbia Gas Sys., Inc. (In re Columbia Gas Sys., Inc.), 33 F.3d 294, 296 (3d Cir. 1994) (United States Trustees oversee the bankruptcy process, protect the public interest, and ensure that bankruptcy cases are conducted according to law).

The United States Trustee, by region, is given the mandate to establish, maintain, and supervise a panel of private trustees that are eligible to serve as trustees in chapter 7 cases. 28 U.S.C. 586(a)(1). To be a chapter 7 trustee, a candidate must make application to the United States Trustee after the position is publicly advertised. If the candidate meets the qualifications as set forth in 28 C.F.R. 58.3 and is selected by the United States Trustee in that region, the trustee must be prepared to accomplish the duties of the chapter 7 trustee as set forth in 11 U.S.C. 704. The duties include in part: collecting and liquidating assets, investigating the financial affairs of the debtor, being accountable for the assets, disbursing the funds after reviewing the claims, filing a final report and a final accounting, and closing the case as soon as is expeditious. The United States Trustee is responsible for supervising and evaluating the performance and integrity of appointed bankruptcy trustees.

[3] The pertinent statutes and regulations are set forth in the addendum to this brief.

The trustees may be removed administratively, under 28 C.F.R. 58.6, or by order of the bankruptcy court, under 11 U.S.C. 324. In regard to judicial removal, the Bankruptcy Code, 11 U.S.C. 324(a), provides that the bankruptcy court "after notice and a hearing, may remove a trustee * * * for cause." The Code, 11 U.S.C. 324(b), further provides that [w]henever the court removes a trustee * * * under subsection (a) * * *, such trustee * * * shall thereby be removed in all other cases * * * in which such trustee * * * is then serving unless the court orders otherwise."

II. Facts[4]

Hill served as a member of a panel of chapter 7 trustees established by the UST for cases filed in the Monroe Division of the United States Bankruptcy Court for the Western District of Louisiana. CR 46, SRE, Tab 145 at 1. In late 1998, in connection with the Unclaimed Freight case, Hill's "role as a Trustee reached a critical point," when she filed her final report and account (TFR). Id. The UST filed a Comment and Objection to the Report that noted several defects, most significantly that "the purported copy of an Order of [the bankruptcy court] * * * served by Ms. Hill and included in her report appeared to have been altered, in that certain material had been 'obliterated,' and the copy served by Ms. Hill on interested parties would suggest that the order she presented had been granted, whereas, in fact, it was denied."[5] CR 47, SRE, Tab 145 at 2. The bankruptcy court sustained the objection of the UST, partially sustained the objection of an objecting bank[6] [4] This summary is based on the findings of fact by the bankruptcy court in its October 29, 1999 opinion on contempt. CR 46-63, SRE, Tab 145 at 1-18.

[5] The UST's objections also noted that Hill failed "to object to or take some corrective action concerning a claim that was misfiled in the Unclaimed Freight claims file and pertained to an unrelated debtor." CR 47, SRE, Tab 145 at 2.

[6] Hibernia National Bank had also filed an objection, alleging that Hill "had improperly administered collateral on which it had a secured claim." CR 47, RE, Tab 145 at 2. All proceeds of the bank's fully secured collateral should have been (whose fully secured collateral proceeds would have been disbursed to Hill and invalid claimants), and disallowed the TFR. CR 47, SRE, Tab 145 at 2.

Hill's testimony on the alteration of the court's order was "conflicting" - - "once stating that she had personally altered the order," and then stating "that the alteration was actually performed by an employee in her office, who could not be identified." Id. Hill "attach[ed] no apparent significance to the fact that the Court had denied the order," "insist[ing] that she contacted the office of the Clerk of the Bankruptcy Court and was advised that the order was 'filed' and 'valid,' and, thus, the change [from the Court's handwritten 'denied'] was justifiable." CR 47-48, SRE Tab 145 at 2-3.

Subsequently, the court held a hearing for Hill "to show cause why she should not be held in contempt and sanctions should not be imposed in connection with the alteration of the Court's order." CR 48, SRE, Tab 145 at 3. In an order, which Hill did not appeal, she was suspended from practice in the bankruptcy court for 30 days. Id. Shortly thereafter, the UST requested an order removing Hill as a trustee, and requiring her to file accountings and turn over all case records. Id.

distributed to Hibernia rather than the erroneous distribution that Hill had proposed.

On May 20, 1999, the bankruptcy court entered an order ("removal order") removing Hill from all 287 cases in which she served as Chapter 7 trustee, requiring her to file a status report in each case, and requiring her to turn over "all case files, financial records, and estate funds" (collectively "case files") to the successor trustee in each case. CR 48-49, SRE, Tab 145 at 3-4. Following removal, the UST unsuccessfully attempted to arrange an amicable transfer of records. CR 49, SRE, Tab 145 at 4. The UST then filed, on June 18, 1999, a motion to compel Hill to turn over the case files. That same day, the bankruptcy court entered an order ("order to compel") "directing Ms. Hill to turn over all estate property on each of [her] cases," and "expressly authoriz[ing] the United States Marshal to enter the offices of Ms. Hill and to remove the items described in the Removal Order, should Ms. Hill fail to appear or in any manner oppose the enforcement of the Court's Orders." Id.

Once again the UST tried to arrange an amicable transfer. "Partial Delivery was accomplished on [June 23, 1999]." Id. On July 14, 1999, the UST moved to hold Hill in contempt for failing to comply with the removal order and the order to compel. Id. The bankruptcy court scheduled a hearing on the motion for August 4, 1999 at 11:00 a.m. Id. Hill was also directed to be present in her office at 9:00 a.m. on that date to "(hopefully) finally complete the transfer of estate property and records 'in the manner in which they were kept in the usual course of business, to the successor trustees, their agents, or the agents of the [UST].'" CR 49-50, SRE, Tab 145 at 4-5.

The hearing was held as scheduled. The UST called two witnesses - Philip Reiland, a Bankruptcy Analyst for the UST (CR 50, SRE, Tab 145 at 5), and Eugene Hastings, the successor trustee in many of Hill's cases. CR 51, SRE, Tab 145 at 6. Hill was present and represented by counsel, but did not testify or offer any evidence. CR 55, SRE, Tab 145 at 10.

Reiland testified that when Hill was a trustee, "on all the occasions when the [UST's] audit team [had] visited Ms. Hill's office, her files had contained 'Form 1's'[[7]], activity notes, trustee time sheets, telephone notes, accounts receivables logs, copies of pleadings and correspondence." CR 50, SRE, Tab 145 at 5. But "when the documents were turned over to the successor trustee [(Hastings)] these documents were in large part not present as required by the Removal Order and the Order to Compel," such that "the files were not in the condition in which they were maintained in the 'ordinary' course of business." Id.

The disparity was shown "by the comparison of the file in the Bruce case * * *, one of four retrieved by the United States Marshal on June 23, 1999," with "over 282 case files" also turned over to Hastings on that day. CR 50-51, SRE, Tab 145 at 5-6. Hastings testified that these files were "incomplete," "[m]any contain[ing] only ['incomplete'] copies of court pleadings." CR 51, SRE, Tab 145 at 6. Further, Hill "ha[d] filed no status report in any of the cases." Id.

[7] A "Form 1" is a listing of a debtor's assets submitted every 180 days to the United States Trustee by panel trustees in each case.

In the period between the partial removal of June 23, 1999 and the August 4, 1999 contempt hearing, Hill filed "requests for compensation in the cases in which she had previously served as trustee." Id. In five of these cases, the requests referenced pleadings that Hastings testified he had not received from Hill. Id. He further testified that "just that morning, at her office, Ms. Hill told him, her attorney, Mr. Reiland and an Assistant United States Trustee that the records in question had been destroyed." Id.

On September 1, 1999, after the contempt hearing, but before the bankruptcy court's October 29, 1999 judgment, there was a hearing in the Spohn[8] case, one of the cases from which Hill had been removed as trustee and Hastings substituted. Id. There, Hastings and Morehouse General Hospital, a secured creditor, sought to have funds in Hasting's possession paid to the hospital in recognition of its claim. CR 51-52, SRE, Tab 145

[8] As a result of this hearing, the bankruptcy court entered an order suspending Hill from practice in the bankruptcy courts of the Western District of Louisiana, and denying her request for compensation in Spohn. CR 52-53, SRE, Tab 145 at 7-8.

at 6-7. Hill objected on the ground that "no provisions had been made to pay her compensation and expenses as the prior trustee." CR 52, SRE, Tab 145 at 7. In her testimony, she "acknowledg[ed] * * * that the records formerly contained in her files had been destroyed," but "stated she could not remember just when and how the destruction occurred." Id. She went on, however, to state "that some records could be reconstructed from her word processing equipment, telephone logs, postage meter, and by other means." Id. Based upon this "stunning" development, the bankruptcy court ordered a United States Marshal to accompany Hill, Hastings, and Assistant UST Frances Hewitt Strange to Hill's office "to collect any items covered by the Turnover Order or Order to Compel." Id. "Numerous documents were downloaded from Ms. Hill's computer word-processing program or were retrieved from various locations in the office." Id. "[N]ot only were numerous records recovered, but funds [('total[ing] $864.00 and consist[ing] of eleven checks, dated from June 25, 1999, to August 21, 1999')] pertaining to the Spohn estate were located which had not been turned over to the Successor Trustee." Id. "All of these checks post-date[d] both the Removal Order and the Order to Compel." Id. "Four checks actually post-date[d] the contempt hearing." Id. "Another [was] dated August 4, 1999, the date of the contempt hearing, and presumably received by [Hill] afterwards." Id.

Based on the evidence developed at the August 4 and September 1 hearings, the Bankruptcy Court entered an order, on October 29, 1999, holding Hill in contempt and filed reasons supporting the decision. CR 64, SRE, Tab 146. The order sanctioned Hill by (1) denying her compensation in all cases in which she previously served as trustee, and (2) ordering her to pay the successor trustee, Hastings, $1500. Id. On November 2, the bankruptcy court supplemented its reasons, noting that a $1050 check dated May 28, 1999 belonging to the Healthy Lifestyles estate was subsequently discovered among the documents seized from Hill on September 1, and ordering the Clerk to turn the original check over to Hastings. CR 75-76, 231-232, SRE, Tab 148 at 1-2.

III. Opinions of the Bankruptcy Court

A. May 24, 1999 (Unclaimed Freight) -- Removal Of Hill As Panel Trustee From Unclaimed Freight And All Other Cases[9]

Initially, the court adopted the findings it had made at previous hearings, including that holding Hill in contempt for violating a bankruptcy court order. CR 900, SRE, Tab 100 at 91. The court also "adopt[ed] as findings of fact and conclusions of law the supporting memorandum filed on behalf of the [UST's] Office." CR 900, SRE, Tab 100 at 91. See Memorandum. CR 431-

454, Tab 58, 1-24. The court explained that 11 U.S.C. 324 does * * * require cause but, as is usually the case with the Code, cause is a standard that is not defined, and we adopt the case standard * * * within the memorandum of the United States Trustee in support of the removal here."[10] CR 902, SRE, Tab 100 at 93.

The court concluded that Hill demonstrated "a continuing pattern of the inability to properly comply with the requirements of the United States Trustee." CR 902, SRE, Tab 100 at 93. Specifically, the court found that Hill: (1) failed to deposit checks and keep records thereof, (2) failed to visit the Clerk's Office in Alexandria, Louisiana to examine the claims files (and relied solely on the Claims Register instead), (3) made no effort to comply with the guidelines of the United States Trustee Manuals or the checklists that were provided here, (4) failed to investigate the financial affairs of the debtor, (5) relied solely on statements made by the debtor concerning collateral and failed to conduct a proper UCC-1 search until it was too late to do so, (6) failed to close the estate as expeditiously as compatible with the best interests of the parties in interest, and (7) failed to prepare a final report and final account with [10] The UST's memorandum stated that "Cause exists * * * when removal of the trustee is in the best interests of the estate. Actual malfeasance is not required. Further, a trustee may be removed if the best interests of the estate are harmed by the trustee's continued service, ' * * * without reflection upon his honesty or integrity.'" CR 441, SRE, Tab 58 at 11 (footnote omitted).

the Court and the United States Trustee. CR 900-905, SRE, Tab 100 at 91-96.

The court stated that "[i]n short, the activities of this trustee * * * justify removal for cause, even if the shocking situation with regard to the alteration of the Court's Order had not occurred." CR 905, SRE, Tab 100 at 96. The court further stated that it "believes that the activities of the trustee * * * indicate that she cannot continue to serve as a trustee in the Division and in the District and that the best interest of creditors and the estate and the public interest justify her removal not only from this case, but as set forth in Section 324 of the Code, (b), that she be removed from all other cases under this Title in which she serves." Id. The court recognized that it had "the authorization to order otherwise in connection with the removal from all other cases," but "d[id] not find cause or any reason to order otherwise." Id.

B. September 8, 1999 (Spohn) - - Denial Of Fees And Suspension Of Hill From Practicing Before Bankruptcy Court[11]

The court held that Hill was not entitled to compensation in that her "objection" "d[id] not comply with the Local Rules and the requirement that a copy be served on the [UST] and that [the application] contain an accurate, detailed explanation of the nature of the services and the tasks that were performed." RE, Tab – - at 97. Further, the court noted, "[w]e have the problem that it is a reconstructed time record and subject to, therefore, the lack of possible credibility." RE, Tab – - at 97. Additionally, the court stated, "we have the situation that the services * * * essentially were of no benefit to this estate with regard to this particular asset * * *." Id.

The court then highlighted "the absolutely, truly amazing situation that developed here today in Ms. Hill's testimony," where having previously testified at the August 4 contempt hearing "that the records had been destroyed, today we had Ms. Hill's testimony that there items that were shown on her objection had been reconstructed by a review of items that were available in her office, including the records that might include a demand letter, one of something like 180 she sent to patients of Dr. Spohn's, the possible reconstruction of phone logs, copy expenses and so forth." RE, Tab – - at 97-98. The court then alluded to "over $800 that appeared to pertain to this case and to the administration of this case by the successor Trustee that Mr. Hastings has never seen before today and that for reasons known only to her, Ms. Hill was apparently concealing from the successor Trustee and the Court." Id. The court cited "records in this case, correspondence from the account debtors, correspondence from other attorneys and other documents in other cases in which Mr. Hastings is the successor Trustee that have been concealed from [him]." Id. at 98-99.

[11] This summarizes the oral findings of fact and conclusions of law of the bankruptcy court on September 1, 1999. RE, Tab -- at 92. On September 8, 1999, the court issued its order of suspension (RE, Tab 136 at 1) and its Reasons For Order Concerning Suspension From Practice. RE, Tab 135 at 1. In this opinion, the court relied on its "reasons orally assigned at the [September 1, 1999] hearing * * *." Id. at 2.

The court concluded that Hill "ha[d] engaged in a deliberate pattern [of concealing] assets of this estate and particularly, the sums exceeding $800 * * *." RE, Tab – - at 100. Further, the court stated, it believed that Hill "ha[d] deliberately concealed and withheld documents pertaining to the administration of this case and other cases." Id. Reserving decision on "[w]hether or not * * * those documents were * * * within the confines and the description of this Court's Order for the turnover or motion to compel," the court stated that "what we have here, regardless of the contents of those Orders or Ms. Hill's interpretation, is a false application, a situation in which she has repeatedly lied or omitted information that would have been helpful to this Court and the ongoing administration of this and other cases by * * * the successor Trustee." Id.

The Court described the "situation" as one "in which the Court finds that the counsel - - Ms. Hill is not just a Trustee, a predecessor Trustee. She is a lawyer. She has lied to this Court. She has altered its Orders, She has failed to comply with its Orders." Id. The court further indicated that "the next action that the Court will [take] with regard to Ms. Hill is a referral to the United States Attorney in the hope that she will be prosecuted for bankruptcy crimes and the Court intends to make a referral [of] this matter pursuant to [18 U.S.C. 151][[12]] * * *." RE, Tab – - at 101. In conclusion, the court stated that "[i]t just seems to me that beginning with what happened in the Unclaimed Freight case as incompetence of the highest order, we now have more than just incompetence. We have the deliberate willful breach of a fiduciary duty." RE, Tab – - at 103.

C. October 29, 1999 - - Holding Hill In Civil Contempt And Imposing Sanctions[13]

Distinguishing between criminal and civil contempt, the court stated that "[a] bankruptcy court has the authority to conduct civil contempt proceedings." CR 53, SRE, Tab 145 at 8. The court then stated that the Fifth Circuit "has delineated the test for civil contempt," by requiring a showing that "(1) a court order was in effect; (2) the order required certain conduct; and (3) the respondent failed to comply with the order." CR 54, SRE, Tab 145 at 9. Further, the court noted, "the burden of proof is clear and convincing, as opposed to preponderance of [the] evidence." Id. Once this test has been met, the court explained, "the respondent bears the burden of showing mitigating circumstances * * *." Id.

After quoting from its "Order Of Removal" and "Order To Compel," the court stated that "[t]here can be little doubt that the test has been met here." CR 54-55, SRE, Tab 145 at 9-10. Both orders, the court stated, "simply required Ms Hill to (1) turnover (a) records and (b) funds and (2) to file status reports

[13] At the August 4, 1999 hearing, the bankruptcy judge declined a motion to recuse himself. CR 160, SRE, Tab 147 at 64. The judge stated that "if the Court feels any feelings toward Ms. Hill's capacity in this case, or her demeanor, it is because of her own actions that she has created in consistently being late and not properly filing her pleadings * * *. It arose from within the case. I do not believe that constitutes cause for a recusal." CR 161, SRE, Tab 147 at 65.

in each of the cases from which Ms. Hill was removed as trustee." CR 55, SRE, Tab 145 at 10. Here, "Ms. Hill failed to comply with both prongs * * *." Id.

Turning to Hill's defense, the court stated that her "only explanation, other than that the records were destroyed, is a statement she made on September 1, at the hearing in the Spohn case," where "she observed * * * that the turnover of the file contents in their entirety was not required by the order, apparently a reference to the original turnover order." Id. The court responded that "[w]hile it is true that the removal order specified 'case files, financial records, and estate funds in each case listed' and the Order to Compel referred to 'files, financial documents, funds and other assets and the Records * * *,' Ms. Hill's attempt to quibble over the differing language of the orders falls on deaf ears." Id.

Alluding to "the history of Ms. Hill's understanding of this Court's orders," the court stated that "one might think she would simply comply, rather than again applying her own gloss or interpretation to the same." Id. The court noted that "[r]egardless of the difference in the descriptions of the items, both orders clearly required Ms. Hill to file a status report in each case, which she has not done." CR 55, SRE, Tab 145 at 10. The court pointed out that "Ms. Hill did not testify at the contempt hearing, offered no evidence of any mitigating circumstances, and filed no brief." Id. Noting that Hill's counsel had argued that she lacked intent to violate the court's orders, the court stated that "intent is not an element in civil contempt matters," and that "the basic rule is that all orders and judgments of courts must be complied with promptly." CR 55-56, SRE, Tab 145 at 10-11.

The court then addressed the destruction of records, acknowledging that "[t]he[ir] destruction * * * could possibly be a mitigating circumstance, had they been destroyed by a fire or flood." CR 56, SRE, Tab 145 at 11. But here, the court explained, Hill had testified in the September 1, 1999 hearing in Spohn "that the records were destroyed," but "has offered no explanation, other than her statement on September 1, 1999 that she could not remember the details of the destruction." Id. The court "d[id] not find sufficient evidence of a mitigating circumstance," and noted that "Ms. Hill is hard-pressed to explain her non-compliance with the portions of the orders that required her to file status reports." Id.

Finally, citing Hill's testimony in Spohn "that she was able to reconstruct certain documents and time and expense records," the court stated that "it was incumbent upon Ms. Hill to make every effort to do so without delay." CR 56, SRE, Tab 145 at 11. The court found to be "without any justification whatsoever," Hill's "continued intransigence in the face of repeated efforts by the Court and the [UST] to seek compliance." Id. Thus, the court stated, "the only conclusion that can be adduced is that Ms. Hill willfully and deliberately flouted the Court's directives."[14] Id.

The Court then turned to the matter of a remedy, in particular as related to compensation of the trustee. Id. The court noted that in addition to seeking compensation in the bankruptcy court, Hill also had sought compensation in the district court in over 287 cases. CR 58, SRE, Tab 145 at 13. The bankruptcy court expressed its hope that "the District Court will decide that the compensation issues should first be resolved in this forum." CR 58 n.9, SRE, Tab 145 at 13 n.9.

Addressing compensation in the asset cases, under 11 U.S.C. 326, the court rejected Hill's claim that since she was precluded from taking the cases to completion, in which case compensation would be a percentage of moneys she had disbursed, her compensation was to be based on $100.00 per hour expended. CR 58, SRE, Tab 145 at 13. The court reasoned that "[t]he compensation of a Chapter 7 trustee is 'capped' at the percentages set forth in 11 U.S.C. §326," and "is based on monies actually disbursed or turned over in the case by the trustee to parties in interest, and is unconditional." Id. Further, the court stated, "[a]ny award, within the maximum rate, is subject to the discretion of the court, to be determined based on the reasonable value of the services." CR 58-59, SRE, Tab 145 at 13-14.

[14] On November 2, 1999, the bankruptcy court supplemented its reasons for finding Hill in contempt to reflect the subsequent discovery, within the materials removed from her office on September 1, 1999, of an additional check ($1050) payable to her as trustee, relating to one of her cases, Healthy Lifestyles. CR 75, SRE, Tab 148 at 1. The court stated that "Ms. Hill deliberately concealed property of more than one of the estates she had been appointed to administer as trustee prior to her removal" and noted that "[i]n the Healthy Lifestyles case the funds are dated May 27, 1999, after entry of the Removal Order, but prior to the Order to Compel." CR 232, SRE, Tab 148 at 2. The court further stated that "[d]espite these orders, Ms. Hill failed to turn over these funds to the successor trustee," and that "[n]othing could more clearly demonstrate her total disregard for the Orders of the Court." Id. Finally, the court stated, "[s]he has shown no mitigating circumstance preventing her from complying with the orders." Id.

"Thus," the court concluded, "there is no support under 11 U.S.C. § 326 for Ms. Hill's applications for compensation, absent their being correlated to disbursements to creditors." CR 59, SRE, Tab 145 at 14. And, the court added, "[u]nfortunately, the same statutory scheme bars an award [for] Mr. Hastings * * *." Id. The court then explained that, by contrast, "the same result is not required as to six Consensual Sale matters for which Ms. Hill received the compensation, but [which] Mr. Hastings was required to complete the sale." CR 59, SRE, Tab 145 at 14. "[A]s to those matters," the court stated, "Ms. Hill should not be permitted to profit to the detriment of the successor trustee," and noted that "[t]he sales at issue" amounted to $1500. CR 59-60, SRE, Tab 145 at 14-15. The court further held that Hill's applications for compensation were "incompatible with the lack of records." CR 60, SRE, Tab 145 at 15. The court explained that "[t]he fact that compensation is fixed by statute does not * * * obviate the need for time records or for a proper application." Id.

The court first pointed out that Hill's ability "to itemize her time and expense records in 287 cases" was "scarcely compatible with her professed inability to produce the records," and then, alluding to Spohn, noted that "[i]t strains credulity to suggest that Ms. Hill can account for sending 198 demand letters at a cost of $65.34 while simultaneously claiming her records were mysteriously destroyed." CR 61, SRE, Tab 145 at 16. Further, the court stated, Hill's "applications are defective on their face" for failure to comply with Local Bankruptcy Rule (LBR) 2016-1, "which incorporates a requisite showing of the factors relative to the quality of representation * * *." Id. Additionally, noting that "[a]ll applications exceeding $500.00 must be noticed for a hearing which counsel must attend," and that "[a]ll pleadings including applications for professional compensation, must be served in accordance with LBR 9013-3 and accompanied by a Certificate of Service," the court stated that "Ms. Hill's applications were not noticed for hearings and were not served on any party in interest." CR 62, SRE, Tab 145 at 17.

Finally, the court, stated that the "most compelling reason for the denial of all compensation, relates to this former trustee's conduct." Id. Stating that Hill's "egregious conduct warrants the denial of all compensation" (id.), the court explained that Hill "has repeatedly failed to comply with orders of the court."[15] CR 63, SRE, Tab 145 at 18. The court stated that "[p]ermitting her to continue the farce of seeking compensation while all the while disregarding the orders of the court would only burden the United States Trustee, the Successor Trustees, and this Court with an inordinate number of unnecessary hearings." Id. Therefore, the court denied Hill compensation "in all cases in which she previously served as Trustee," ordered her to pay Hastings $1,500 (compensation she had already had received), and, "in the event the District Court should grant relief under Ms. Hill's Rule to Show Cause," "report[ed] and recommend[ed] that the District Court deny all compensation to Hill in all the cases from which she was removed as Trustee." Id.

IV. Opinions of the District Court

A. March 23, 2000 - - Removal Of Hill As Chapter 7 Panel Trustee (Unclaimed Freight); Denial Of Compensation In Spohn As Predecessor Trustee; Suspension From Practicing Before Bankruptcy Court (Spohn)

The district court affirmed the bankruptcy court's order in Unclaimed Freight (May 24, 1999), and its orders in Spohn (September 8, 1999). CR Vol. 3 at 406, RE, Tab C at 1. The court explained that the findings of fact of the bankruptcy court were to be "scrutinized under the clearly erroneous standard of review," and that its "conclusions of law are subject to de novo review." CR Vol. 3 at 407, RE, Tab C at 2. The court stated that it "ha[d] reviewed [each] appeal in accordance with the appropriate standards and finds no error in the bankruptcy court's decision." CR Vol. 3 at 408-409, RE, Tab C at 3-4.

Addressing Hill's removal in connection with Unclaimed Freight, the court summarized the bankruptcy court's findings as to "Hill['s] contempt of court for altering a bankruptcy court Order," and as to Hill having "engaged in a 'continuing pattern of the inability to properly comply with the requirements of the United States Trustee.'" CR Vol. 3 at 407, RE, Tab C at 2.

Turning to Spohn, the court noted the bankruptcy court's finding "that Hill had engaged in a deliberate pattern of concealing assets of the estate from the successor trustee and that she intentionally withheld documents pertaining to the administration of the case." CR Vol. 3 at 409, RE, Tab C at 4.

B. April 20, 2000 - - Contempt; Denial Of Compensation In All Cases (__Contempt Decision__, October 29, 1999)

The district court affirmed the bankruptcy court's decision of October 29, 1999, holding Hill in civil contempt and imposing sanctions against her. CR Vol. 3 at 429, RE, Tab E at 1. The court explained that the findings of fact of the bankruptcy court were to be "scrutinized under the clearly erroneous standard of review," and that its "conclusions of law are subject to de novo review." CR Vol. 3 at 440, RE, Tab E at 2. The district court concluded that it "ha[d] reviewed this appeal in accordance with the appropriate standards and f[ound] no error in the bankruptcy's court's decision."[16] CR Vol. 3 at 443, RE, Tab E at 5.

After the court summarized the events leading to the finding of contempt and the imposition of sanctions, the court explained that the bankruptcy judge "concluded that the U.S. Trustee proved by clear and convincing evidence that Hill willfully and [16] The court further noted that on November 2, 1999, the bankruptcy court had supplemented its reasons, noting that a May 28, 1999 check for $1,050.00 which belonged to an estate in one of Hill's cases "was discovered among the documents seized from Hill's office on September 1, 1999," and had "ordered the original check [turned] over to the Successor Trustee." The district court also affirmed this order. CR Vol. 3 at 444 n.2, RE, Tab E at 6 n.2.

deliberately failed to comply with the bankruptcy court's Orders" (CR Vol. 3 at 442, RE, Tab E at 4), and "further concluded that Hill failed to prove the existence of any mitigating circumstances that might have prevented her from complying * * *." CR Vol. 3 at 443, RE, Tab E at 5. The court then summarized the bankruptcy court's reasoning supporting the denial of fees to Hill including the bankruptcy court's having found that "Hill's egregious conduct * * *, including her repeated failure to comply with the bankruptcy court's Orders, warranted the denial of all compensation." Id.

SUMMARY OF ARGUMENT

1. The bankruptcy court acted reasonably in removing Hill as trustee in Unclaimed Freight and in not preventing her removal from all her other cases. The "cause" for which a bankruptcy judge may remove a trustee, under 11 U.S.C. 324(a), includes the trustee's incompetence or unwillingness to perform his or her duties. See 3 Collier On Bankruptcy ¶ 324.02, at 324-3 (Lawrence P. King, ed., 15th ed. 2000). Thus, contrary to Hill's apparent claim, the Code does not require the bankruptcy court to wait until demonstrated incompetence or unwillingness results in a significant loss to one or more of the trustee's estates.

The Code does not define "cause," but the term, rooted in the common law, is commonly used in federal statutes and regulations relating to the removal of an officer or employee.

The "for cause" standard, in contrast to service "at will," requires a ground for removal that is reasonably related to a substantial failure by the officer or employee to fulfill the requirements of his or her position. When, as in the Bankruptcy Code, Congress uses a common law term with a settled meaning, the term must be given that meaning unless Congress otherwise indicates. "Cause" is such a term, and nothing in the Bankruptcy Code suggests that it should be given other than its usual meaning, requiring a case-by-case evaluation of the circumstances alleged to warrant removal. Once the bankruptcy court removes a trustee "for cause," the Code, 11 U.S.C. 324(b), provides that the trustee "shall thereby be removed in all other cases under this title in which such trustee * * * is then serving unless the court orders otherwise" (emphasis supplied). Thus, only an exercise of the court's discretion can prevent this broader removal.

Here, Hill does not contest the bankruptcy court's findings of fact that overwhelmingly demonstrate her incompetence or unwillingness to perform her duties. Thus her removal "for cause" as trustee in Unclaimed Freight was valid. This same evidence made unthinkable her continued service in this capacity in any case. Hill offered the bankruptcy court no reason to reach a contrary result. And it properly did not.

2. The bankruptcy court also validly held Hill in civil contempt for failure to comply with its orders. Hill did not testify at the contempt hearing, offered no other evidence to dispute the UST's case, and did not file a brief. She now acknowledges that "[t]he crux of the contempt order is that the files turned over were incomplete" (Aplnts. Br. 14). Then by discussing what documents should or should not be in a trustee's file, she attempts to divert attention from the fact that the bankruptcy court dealt with her failure to relinquish numerous documents _already in her files_ as trustee. She also claims that the court's orders were insufficiently comprehensive, but never explains why. A reading of those orders, which refer to "all case files" and "all * * * files" demonstrates that they indeed required her to turn over the entirety of the files. Finally, contrary to Hill's claim, the court made totally clear the fact that her belated turnover of files was incomplete.

Hill's attack on the constitutionality of the contempt finding is equally unavailing. The bankruptcy court afforded Hill, who while an attorney herself was represented by counsel, a full hearing consistent with due process. Hill claims, however, that there was an improper "reopening"of the contempt hearing during the September 1, 1999 hearing in _Spohn_. There was no such reopening. Rather, in her efforts to collect a fee, Hill there testified that the missing records contained in the case files had been destroyed, but that certain records could be reconstructed from her word processing equipment, telephone logs, postage meter, and other means.

Based upon this "stunning" development (CR 52, SRE, Tab 145 at 7) and the two outstanding orders to produce the files, the bankruptcy court had more than sufficient reason, including possible further destruction of files, to order a United States Marshal to accompany Hill, Hastings, and Assistant U.S. Trustee Strange to Hill's office to collect any documents covered under the removal order. And that search of Hill's office retrieved numerous records, and eleven checks belonging to the Spohn estate. Hill never requested a reopening of the contempt hearing to explain her failure previously to turn over these items, nor did she submit any written explanation to the court. The bankruptcy court appropriately considered these further developments, (including a twelfth such check later discovered in the court's exhibits) when it held Hill in contempt.

3. The bankruptcy court also properly exercised its discretion to deny compensation to Hill in all of her cases. Her "egregious conduct" (CR 62, SRE, Tab 145 at 17), violating her trustee's duty as an officer of the court who is held to high fiduciary standards more than sufficed as the basis for such denial. Continental Ill. Nat'l Bank & Trust Co. v. Charles N. Wooten, Ltd. (In re Evangeline Refining Co.), 890 F.2d 1312, 1323, 1325 (5th Cir. 1989). Moreover, even without such misconduct, Hill failed to submit the documentation necessary to support her claim for fees. Under Bankruptcy Rule 2106, "an application must be sufficiently detailed and accurate that, in conjunction with any proceeding in connection therewith and the record in the case, a court can make an independent evaluation as to what level of fees are actual, necessary and reasonable." Evangeline, 890 F.2d at 1326. Further, this Court has recognized that while contemporaneous records are not required per se, reconstructed records are highly problematic where they become "a mere guess by the applicant" (id. at 1326-27), and that while a total denial of fees is "rare" (id at 1327), it may be warranted. This is such a case.

Here, the bankruptcy court properly held that Hill's applications were "defective on their face" (CR 61, SRE, Tab 145 at 16) under Local Bankruptcy Rule 2016-1. Hill is wrong to suggest that the rule is inapplicable. See Evangeline, 890 F.2d at 1326 (applying Rule 2016 to a trustee). Further, the bankruptcy court also correctly invoked Hill's failure to comply with the formal requirements in local rule 9013-2C(5), since this was not the "ordinary" case in which the court might well overlook such matters. Finally, the court properly found that Hill's applications were incompatible with the lack of records. The court had every reason to doubt Hill's ability "to itemize her time and expense records in 287 cases" (CR 61, SRE, Tab 145 at 16), yet simultaneously not produce the records.

4. The bankruptcy court also reasonably determined that Hill be suspended from practice before it. This Court has recognized that "a bankruptcy court does have the power to conduct a disciplinary hearing and discipline the attorneys who practice before it," and that the purpose is not punishment, "'but * * * to determine the fitness of an official of the court to continue in that capacity and to protect the courts and the public from the official ministration of persons unfit to practice.'" Cunningham v. Ayers (In re Johnson), 921 F.2d 585, 586-87 (5th Cir. 1991).

Here, the bankruptcy court found that "[Hill] has lied to this Court. She has altered its Orders. She has failed to comply with its Orders." SRE, Tab - - at 100. Under these circumstances, Hill's suspension was entirely warranted.

5. Finally, the bankruptcy judge correctly declined to recuse himself at Hill's contempt hearing. Opinions formed by the judge from "facts introduced or events occurring in the course of the current proceedings, or of prior proceedings" may be invoked as a basis for seeking recusal only if "they display a deep-seated favoritism or antagonism that would make fair judgment impossible." Liteky v. United States, 510 U.S. 540, 555 (1994).

Here, in the testimony Hill cites, the bankruptcy judge simply recounted her derelictions, for example, that "she has burdened the Court and the Clerk with processing innumerable [claims] for * * * Compensation where it is the policy of the [UST] that Applications for Compensation in asset cases must be supported by time records, that for reasons that are yet unknown to me, and perhaps you know them, Mr. Charles [(Hill's then attorney)], she has not turned over." CR 160, SRE, Tab 147 at 64. As for Hill's claim that the judge had "personal knowledge" (Aplnts. Br. 25) that required recusal, he had only the knowledge that derived from the very course of his official and proper involvement with Hill and the successor trustee in the matters related to her contempt.

STANDARD OF REVIEW

This Court reviews decisions relating to (1) a finding of civil contempt, (2) the award of compensation to a bankruptcy trustee, (3) the suspension of an attorney, and (4) the issue of recusal, under an abuse of discretion standard. United States v. Brumfield, 188 F.3d 303, 307 (5th Cir. 1999) (civil contempt); Continental Ill. Nat'l Bank & Trust Co. v. Charles N. Wooten, Ltd. (In re Evangeline Refining Co.), 890 F.2d 1312, 1322 (5th Cir. 1989) (compensation of trustee); Cunningham v. Ayers (In re Johnson), 921 F.2d 585, 587 (5th Cir. 1991) (suspension of attorney); United States v. Wilson, 77 F.3d 105, 110 (5th Cir.

1996) (recusal). Further, since, in the case of a trustee removed in one case, under 11 U.S.C. 324(a), the bankruptcy court may, under 11 U.S.C. 324(b), prevent the trustee's automatic removal from all other assigned cases, the court's decision on this issue must be reviewed for abuse of discretion.

"A bankruptcy court's findings of fact are subject to the clearly erroneous standard of review and will be reversed only if, considering all the evidence, we are left with the definite and firm conviction that a mistake has been made. Strict application of this standard is particularly appropriate when the district court has affirmed the bankruptcy court's findings. We are particularly mindful of 'the opportunity of the bankruptcy court to judge the credibility of the witnesses.' Conclusions of law, of course, are reviewed de novo" (footnotes omitted). ARGUMENT

I.

THE BANKRUPTCY JUDGE HAD "CAUSE," UNDER 11 U.S.C. 324(a), TO REMOVE HILL AS TRUSTEE IN UNCLAIMED FREIGHT, AND ACTED WITHIN ITS DISCRETION IN ALLOWING HER REMOVAL, UNDER 11 U.S.C. 324(b), FROM ALL OTHER BANKRUPTCY CASES TO WHICH SHE WAS ASSIGNED AS A PANEL TRUSTEE

A. "Cause" Includes A Trustee's Incompetence Or Unwillingness To Perform Her Duties

1. "Cause" Is A Commonly Used Federal Standard

The Bankruptcy Code provides that a trustee may be removed for "cause," but does not define it. The term, however, was not written "on a clean slate." It is commonly used in federal statutes governing removal of an officer[17] or dismissal of an employee,[18] and is rooted in the common law. See Arnett v. Kennedy, 416 U.S. 134, 159-60 (1974).

2. The Usual Meaning Of "Cause"

Persons who may be removed "at will," are contrasted with persons who may be removed only for "cause." An "at will" officer or employee is subject to removal for any reason or no reason. But in the case of an officer or employee who may be 40 removed only for "cause," there must be a ground for removal that is reasonably related to a substantial failure to fulfill the requirements of his or her position.[19] Although, the "for cause"

3. The Meaning Of "Cause" In The Bankruptcy Code

"Where Congress uses terms that have accumulated settled meaning under * * * the common law, a court must infer, unless the statute otherwise dictates, that Congress means to incorporate the established meaning of these terms." Nationwide Mut. Ins. Co. v. Darden, 503 U.S. 318, 322 (1992). See also

Finally, a regulation relating to "School Boards For Department of Defense Domestic Dependent Elementary And Secondary Schools" provides that "[s]chool board members may be removed * * * for dereliction of duty, malfeasance, or other grounds for cause shown" (emphasis supplied). 32 C.F.R. 69.5(d)(6).

Bragdon v. Abbott, 524 U.S. 624, 645 (1998) ("[w]hen administrative and judicial interpretations have settled the meaning of an existing statutory provision, repetition of the same language in a new statute indicates, as a general matter, the intent to incorporate its administrative and judicial interpretations as well"). As just shown, "cause" is precisely such a term. Further, nothing in the Bankruptcy Code suggests that it "otherwise dictates" (Nationwide, 503 U.S. at 322) that Section 324's "for cause" standard be given a new meaning.

Thus, in In re Lundborg, 110 B.R. 106 (Bankr. D. Conn. 1990), the court stated that "[c]ause, which is not defined by the Code, must be determined by courts on an ad hoc basis." Id. at 108. See also In re University Ave. Properties, 55 B.R. 986, 991 (Bankr. E.D. Wis. 1986) ("'cause' * * * can only be defined on a case-by-case basis depending on the facts of the particular case"). Nothing in the decisions cited by Hill, pertaining to removal for either alleged "conflict of interest" or "misconduct" "involving losses to the estate" (Aplnts. Br. 8-9), supports her claim that "[c]ases involving removal of trustees fall into two categories," i.e., that these are the sole grounds for removal.[21]

[21] Thus, in In re Baker, 38 B.R. 705 (D. MD 1983) (Aplnts. Br. 9), the court noted that "[m]ost of the case law concerning removal of a trustee involves intentional misconduct or negligence" and that "[i]n several cases * * * a trustee was seemingly removed on the basis of" "the best interests of the

If this were so, the bankruptcy court could not act even when presented, as here, with overwhelming evidence of a trustee's incompetence or unwillingness to perform his or her duties, until such time as a significant loss resulted to an estate.

To the contrary, as with other offices as to which the removal "for cause" standard applies, "[c]auses for removal [of a trustee] include situations in which the trustee is found to be incompetent or unwilling to perform [his or her] duties * * *." 3 Collier On Bankruptcy ¶ 324.02, at 324-3 (Lawrence P. King, ed., 15th ed 2000). This was the case in In re Schoen Enters., Inc., 76 B.R. 203 (Bankr. M.D. Fla. 1987). There, the court held, in circumstances closely resembling Hill's, that it was appropriate to remove a corporate Chapter 7 trustee that "ha[d] estate." Id. at 707-08. The court upheld the decision of the bankruptcy judge not to remove the trustee since there was insufficient evidence of negligence or misconduct, and since there was "substantial foundation" for the bankruptcy judge's conclusion that removal was not in the best interests of the estate. Id. at 708-09. And in In re Peckinpaugh, 50 B.R. 865 (Bankr. N.D. Ohio 1985), the court stated that "[s]ome courts professed to rule on the basis of the 'best interest of the estate' or * * * 'avoiding even the appearance of impropriety,' but "most of the courts faced with alleged potential conflict of interest or potential wrongdoing hold that 'potential conflicts of interest do not warrant the removal of a trustee' in the absence of fraud and actual injury." Id. at 867 (citing, In re Freeport Italian Bakery, Inc., 340 F.2d 50, 54 (2d Cir. 1965)). Finally, Ford Motor Credit Co. v. Weaver, 680 F.2d 451 (6th Cir. 1982) (Aplnts. Br. 9) has nothing to do with removal or disqualification of a trustee. Rather, the decision concerns only the standard to be applied in determining personal or official liability. 680 F.2d at 461-62.

failed to perform the functions required of it by the Bankruptcy Code."[22] Id. at 206.

The court explained that the trustee "has neglected to 'investigate the financial affairs of the debtor' in failing to pursue possible avoidable preferences." The court then noted that "[this neglect is coupled with the further failure to 'furnish such information concerning the estate and the estate's

[22] The Bankruptcy Code, 11 U.S.C. 704, establishes the "[d]uties of the [t]rustee," requiring that the trustee:

> (1) collect and reduce to money the property of the estate for which such trustee serves, and close such estate as expeditiously as is compatible with the best interests of parties in interest;
>
> (2) be accountable for all property received;
>
> (3) ensure that the debtor shall perform his intention as specified in section 521(2)(B) of this title;
>
> (4) investigate the financial affairs of the debtor;
> (5) if a purpose would be served, examine proofs of claims and object to the allowance of any claim that is improper; administration as is requested by a party in interest,'" and "intentional[] violation of] the order of this Court * * *." 76 B.R. at 205. Similarly, in Matter of Island Amusement, Inc., 74 B.R. 18, 19 (Bankr. D.P.R. 1987) and In re Mira-Pak, Inc., 72 B.R. 430, 431 (Bankr. S.D. Tex. 1987), the courts held that an unreasonable delay in the performance of a trustee's duties was sufficient "cause" for removal. And in In re Cee Jay Discount Stores, Inc., 171 B.R. 173, 175 (Bankr. E.D.N.Y. 1994), the court stated that "[v]arious remedies are available when a trustee is found to have acted negligently," and that "[a]n extreme solution is removal of the trustee upon a showing of cause."

B. The Facts Overwhelmingly Show Hill's Incompetence Or Unwillingness To Perform Her Duties

Hill does not contest the factual determinations of the bankruptcy court that demonstrate her incompetence or unwillingness to perform the duties of a trustee. Nor could she. As explained by the district court, at the time the bankruptcy judge held a hearing on the motion of the UST for Hill's removal, he had already held Hill "in contempt of [the] court for altering a bankruptcy court order" (CR Vol. 3 at 407, RE, Tab C at 2), a matter that the bankruptcy judge deemed to be a "shocking situation." CR Vol. 3 at 408, RE, Tab C at 3. The court then quoted the bankruptcy judge's finding that "Hill engaged in a 'continuing pattern of the inability to properly comply with the requirements of the [UST].'"[23] CR Vol. 3 at 407, RE, Tab C at 2.

C. Once Having Removed Hill As Trustee In Unclaimed Freight, The Bankruptcy Court Did Not Abuse Its Discretion, Under 11 U.S.C. 324(b), In Allowing Her Removal As Trustee In All Her Cases To Take Effect

The Bankruptcy Code, 11 U.S.C. 324(b), provides that "[w]henever the court removes a trustee * * * under subsection(a) * * * such trustee * * * shall thereby be removed in all other cases under this title in which such trustee * * * is then serving unless the court orders otherwise" (emphasis supplied). Thus, the statute makes clear that once the bankruptcy court removed Hill for "cause" in Unclaimed Freight, the court would have had to exercise its discretion and make an exception in Hill's favor if she were to continue as trustee in her remaining cases.

Hill states that "[t]he court removed [her] as trustee from all other cases * * * citing her refusal to undergo continual training." Aplnts. Br. 9. Thus, she misdirects this Court by suggesting that it was her failure to participate in training that led to this result. Rather, the overwhelming and unrefuted evidence of incompetence or unwillingness to perform her duties as a trustee made unthinkable her continued service in this capacity in any case. After referencing "the shocking situation with regard to the alteration of the Court's Order" (CR 905, SRE, Tab 100 at 96), the court stated that it "believe[d] that the activities of [Hill] in this case indicate that she cannot continue to serve as a trustee in the Division and in the District and that the best interest of creditors and the estate and the public interest justify her removal" (id.) from all of her cases. Hill offered the bankruptcy court no reason to reach a contrary result. The court, referring to its discretion as to whether to remove Hill from the remaining cases, simply noted her "refusal * * * to undergo continual training" (emphasis supplied). Id.

THE BANKRUPTCY COURT VALIDLY HELD HILL IN CIVIL CONTEMPT FOR FAILURE TO COMPLY WITH THE COURT'S ORDERS

A bankruptcy court may conduct civil contempt proceedings. 11 U.S.C. 105(a); Placid Refining Co. v. Terrebonne Fuel and Lube (In re Terrebonne Fuel and Lube, Inc.), 108 F.3d 609, 612-13 (5th Cir. 1997). A party seeking an order of civil contempt must show, by clear and convincing evidence,[24] that (1) a court order was in effect, (2) the order required certain conduct by the respondent, and (3) the respondent failed to comply. Piggly Wiggly Clarksville v. Mrs. Baird's Bakeries, Inc., 177 F.3d 380, [24] Evidence is clear and convincing if it is so clear, direct and weighty and convincing as to enable the finder of fact to come to a clear conviction, without hesitancy. Travelhost, Inc. v. Blandford, 68 F.3d 958, 961 (5th Cir. 1995).

382 (5th Cir. 1999). If these requirements are met, the party alleged to be in contempt must show sufficient mitigating circumstances to avoid a finding. Whitfield v. Pennington, 832 F.2d 909, 913 (5th Cir. 1987), cert. denied, 487 U.S. 1205 (1988).

Here, as shown below, the bankruptcy court correctly applied these standards to determine that Hill was in contempt. Moreover, the court's determination met constitutional standards.

A. The Bankruptcy Court Correctly Found That Hill Had Failed To Comply With Its Orders

Hill did not testify at the contempt hearing, offered no other evidence to dispute the UST's case, and did not file a brief.[25] Hill properly recognizes that "[t]he crux of the contempt order is that the files turned over were incomplete." Aplnts. Br. 14. Yet by stating that "[t]here was no testimony as to what makes a file complete" (id.), and that "there is no requirement that certain records be kept, or that certain records be turned over with case files" (id. at 16), she attempts to distract attention from the fact that the controversy was over the numerous documents already in her files as trustee that she didn't turn over. She also maintains that while the bankruptcy judge "considered the order for turnover of case files to cover [25] Thus, she never raised before the bankruptcy court her claims as to the scope of the Court's orders or any other aspect of the court's proceedings.

every document in the file," "this was not the order of the court." Aplnts. Br. 13. But Hill neither sets forth nor discusses the bankruptcy court's actual orders. A reading of those orders demonstrates that they indeed required her to turn over the entirety of the files.

On May 20, 1999, in connection with Hill's removal as trustee from all cases in which she was acting as trustee, the court directed her to (1) "turn over all case files, financial records, and estate funds in each case * * * to the successor trustee in each case" (emphasis supplied) and (2) "turn over to the United States Trustee a status report for each case * * *." CR 183-184, 937-938, SRE, Tab 70 at 1-2.

Then, on June 18, 1999, after Hill had failed to turn over any of the specified materials, the court issued an order ("order to compel") requiring that she "shall immediately comply with the Order for Removal" and authorizing the United States Marshal, if necessary, to enter Hill's offices and remove the case files. The order further provided that "on Wednesday, June 23, 1999, at 10 a.m.," Hill "shall turn over all of the Estate Property (including but not limited to: files, financial documents, funds and other assets) and the Records * * * on each of her formerly assigned cases without a final decree to the successor trustee or to the [UST] where there is no successor trustee" (emphasis supplied).[26] CR 958, SRE, Tab 92 at 1.

Finally, Hill is wrong and misleading when she states that the judge "never articulated in his ruling what was defective about the files that were turned over to the successor trustee." Aplnts. Br. 12-13 The opinion of the bankruptcy court describes in detail the deficiencies with Hill's compliance. See CR 50-52, 55, SRE, Tab 145 at 5-7, 10; CR 75-76, 231-232, SRE, Tab 148 at 1-2.

B. The Bankruptcy Court Met Constitutional Standards

On August 3, 1999, the bankruptcy court afforded Hill, who while an attorney herself was represented by counsel, a full hearing on contempt consistent with the requirements of due process. Hill's claims of constitutional violations (Aplnts. Br. 18-19) relate almost entirely to the September 1, 1999 hearing in Spohn and are insubstantial.[27] What Hill terms a "reopening" of [26] The order further required "that the Estate Property and Records be turned over in the manner they were used and maintained in the ordinary course of business * * *." CR 958, SRE, Tab 92 at 1.

[27] Hill also claims a violation of due process in that "[s]ixteen days after the [contempt] hearing and ruling, the judge himself submitted additional evidence, indicating that he considered it in his ruling." Aplnts. Br. 18. The "additional evidence" was a check that was among the records found in Hill's office on September 1. Assistant UST Strange, while making copies of exhibits for a criminal referral, discovered the check in the Clerk of Court's exhibit file stuck between two pieces of paper. She turned the check and referencing documents over to the contempt proceeding at the Spohn hearing was something quite different. The bankruptcy court never reopened the contempt hearing. Rather, during the course of Spohn, involving a joint motion to pay secured creditor and an objection filed by Hill as former trustee, Hill testified that the missing records contained in the case files had been destroyed, but that certain records could be reconstructed from her word processing equipment, telephone logs, postage meter, and other means.

Based upon this "stunning" development (CR 52, SRE, Tab 145 at 7), the bankruptcy court ordered a United States Marshal to accompany Hill, Hastings, and Assistant U.S. Trustee Strange to Hill's office that afternoon to collect any documents covered under the removal order. The Marshal returned with numerous records, and eleven checks belonging to the Spohn estate. All of the checks postdated both the removal order and the order to compel, and four checks even postdated the August 4 contempt hearing. Subsequent to these events, Hill never requested that the contempt hearing be reopened to afford her the opportunity to explain her failure previously to turn over the materials found in her office, nor did she submit any written justification to the clerk who gave them to the bankruptcy judge., who ultimately sent it to the successor trustee and put a copy into the exhibit file. See CR 75-76, 231-232, SRE, Tab 148 at 1.

the court. The bankruptcy court appropriately considered these further developments when, on October 29, 1999, it held Hill in contempt.

The bankruptcy court's response to the unanticipated disclosure by Hill was not only understandable, but entirely consistent with constitutional requirements. Hill's claim that "[i]t was premature to seize any documents before a ruling on contempt" (Aplnts. Br. 20) is unsupported. There is no requirement of a prior "judgment specifying what additional documents were necessary to comply with the turnover order." Id. Certainly, Hill's admission in open court provided the bankruptcy judge with more than probable cause to order the seizure of materials from Hill's office.

Further, Hill's claim that her "arrest" (being taken into the custody of the United States Marshall from the time of the court's recess at 12:42 p.m. until it reconvened at 3:00 p.m. See CR 56, 58-61, SRE, Tab - - at 56, 58-61.) in connection with the search and seizure was invalid because "[a]rrest is allowed only to secure compliance to a court order" (Aplnts. Br. 20) and that her "arrest and detention * * * was unlawful as it is a criminal sanction, beyond the authority of Bankruptcy Courts" (id. at 23), ignores the two outstanding orders requiring the turnover of her files as trustee. Given these orders and Hill's testimony regarding destruction of records, her "arrest" was a reasonable measure to bring about her cooperation and ensure that there would be no further destruction prior to the Marshal's seizure of the additional items at her office. See United States v. Rizzo, 539 F.2d 458, 465 (5th Cir. 1976) ("Dr. Rizzo was ordered incarcerated until he produced the cards. This coercive imprisonment, contempt of which he could purge himself should he produce the cards, is civil").

III.

THE BANKRUPTCY COURT REASONABLY DECIDED TO DENY HILL COMPENSATION IN ALL CASES IN WHICH SHE PREVIOUSLY HAD SERVED AS TRUSTEE[28]

The denial of compensation to Hill in all of her cases is sustainable independent of "reimbursing the injured party for losses and expenses incurred for noncompliance" (Aplnts. Br. 21) as a remedy for civil contempt.[29] Cf. Cunningham v. Ayers (In re

---

[28] Beyond challenging the bankruptcy court's October 29, 1999 denial of all fees, Hill objects to the district court's ruling, on April 4, 2000, holding to be moot her August 3, 1999 "Rule to Show Cause * * * demanding compensation for prior trustee case assignments" Aplnts. Br. 11. Hill neglects to explain that the district court went on to state that "[t]he Court will address the issue of whether or not Hill is entitled to compensation when it rules on her appeal in cv99-2113" (CR Vol. 1 at 437, RE Docket Sheet at 8), i.e., the appeal from the bankruptcy court's order denying all fees. Of course, on April 20, 2000, the district court affirmed that order. CR Vol. 3 at 445, RE, Tab F at 1.

[29] The bankruptcy court recognized that "civil contempt is intended to compensate the aggrieved party for its losses Johnson), 921 F.2d 585, 586 (5th Cir. 1991). Thus, Hill's complaint that the bankruptcy court's denial of compensation "does not attempt to determine actual costs incurred by the successor trustee as a result of violations of the turnover order" (Aplnts. Br. 21) is besides the point.

A. Fees Were Properly Denied Based on Hill's "Egregious Conduct"

This Court has emphasized that "[w]hen persons perform duties in he administration of the bankruptcy estate, they act as 'officers of the court' and not private persons," and that, "[a]s such, trustees and attorneys for trustees are held to high fiduciary standards of conduct." Continental Ill. Nat'l Bank & Trust Co. v. Charles N. Wooten, Ltd. (In re Evangeline Refining Co.), 890 F.2d 1312, 1323 (5th Cir. 1989). Serious misconduct by a trustee may warrant the denial of all compensation. Thus, in Evangeline, this Court held that all fees should be denied a trustee who makes intentional misrepresentations on a fee application. Id. at 1325. In Peerless Mfg. Co. v. United Merchants & Mfrs., Inc., 523 F.2d 110, 112 (7th Cir. 1975), the resulting from noncompliance with the Court's orders." The court referred to the information provided by the UST that "the Successor Trustees have suffered damages in that the cases formerly handled by Ms. Hill have required both curative work and action to move the cases toward completion," and "[that] [m]any of these efforts will go uncompensated." CR 57, SRE, Tab 145 at 12. For this reason, the court ordered Hill to pay to Hastings the $1,500 in compensation that she had received in connection with six consensual sale matters. CR 63, SRE, Tab 145 at 18.

court in upholding the award of fees to a validly appointed trustee who had been replaced, emphasized that "[this is not a situation in which there was a finding of negligence, abuse of trust, or unfaithfulness."

Here, the bankruptcy court, has ample ground to deny all fees. Quoting at length from Evangeline, the court concluded that "the final, and most compelling reason for the denial of all compensation" was Hill's "egregious conduct." CR 62, SRE, Tab 145 at 17. Noting that "Hill has repeatedly failed to comply with orders of the court," the court stated that "[p]ermitting [Hill] to continue the farce of seeking compensation while all the while disregarding the orders of the court would only burden the United States Trustee, the Successor Trustees, and this Court with an inordinate number of unnecessary hearings." CR 63, SRE, Tab 145 at 18.

B. Fees Were Properly Denied To Hill For Lack Of Necessary Documentation

In Evangeline, this Court also addressed the technical requisites for obtaining an award of fees. This Court first stated that "[s]ince bankruptcy judges have discretion in determining attorney and trustee's fees, we will reverse a determination of fees only upon abuse of discretion." 890 F.2d at 1325. See also Anderson v. Anderson (In re Anderson), 936 F.2d 199, 204 (5th Cir. 1991) (upholding award of fees, but noting that "we would likely have affirmed a total disallowance of fees had the bankruptcy court so held"); Arens v. Boughton (In re Prudhomme), 43 F.3d 1000, 1003 (5th Cir. 1995) (emphasizing bankruptcy court's "broad discretion in awarding and denying fees paid in connection with bankruptcy proceedings").

This Court explained in Evangeline that "[t]he applicant bears the burden of proof in a fee application case," and that "[t]he reviewing court should not venture guesses nor undertake extensive investigation to justify a fee for an attorney or trustee who has not done so himself." 890 F.2d at 1325. Turning to Bankruptcy Rule 2016, requiring a "detailed statement," this Court stated that while less than an "'ideal level of completeness' may suffice," "an application must be sufficiently detailed and accurate that, in conjunction with any proceeding in connection therewith and the record in the case, a court can make an independent evaluation as to what level of fees are actual, necessary and reasonable." 890 F.2d at 1326. See James B. Hirsch, Bankruptcy Fee Applications: Compensable Service Or Cost Of Doing Business, 58 Fordham L. Rev. 1327, 1351 (1990) (("little dispute that lack of specificity in a fee application may jeopardize a fee award").

With respect to whether the records must be contemporaneous, this Court stated that "[w]hile a lack of contemporaneous record keeping does not per se result in a denial of fees, where reconstructed records become a mere guess by the applicant, it is difficult, if not impossible, for a reviewing court to make an independent evaluation as to what fees are actual, necessary and reasonable based upon a record sufficiently detailed and accurate to support that evaluation." 890 F.2d at 1327. Recognizing that "[t]he harsh sanction of total denial of compensation is a rare one," this Court stressed that "a court should only award fees to the level that has been proven to be actual, necessary and reasonable" and that "[a]ny lesser requirement would make the applicant's burden of proof a mere shell." 890 F.2d at 1327.

Here, the bankruptcy court properly determined that Hill's applications for compensation were "incompatible with the lack of records." Contrary to Hill's claim the court did not hold that her "time sheets are fraudulent because they were not kept contemporaneously." Aplnts. Br. 17. Rather the court was skeptical of Hill's ability "to itemize her time and expense records in 287 cases" because it was "scarcely compatible with her professed inability to produce the records" (CR 61, SRE, Tab 145 at 16), and observed that "[i]t strains credulity to suggest that Ms. Hill can account for sending 198 demand letters at a cost of $65.34 while simultaneously claiming her records were mysteriously destroyed." Id.

Further, the bankruptcy court properly held that Hill's applications were "defective on their face" for failure to comply with Local Bankruptcy Rule 2016-1. Id. Hill is wrong in suggesting that this rule is inapplicable to a trustee. Aplnts. Br. 17. See Evangeline, 890 F.2d at 1326.[30] Also, the court was correct in invoking Hill's failure to meet the formal requirements of local Rule 9013-3C(5). Hill correctly notes that such failure does not "ordinarily result in loss of right" (emphasis supplied). Aplnts. Br. 17. But this is not an "ordinary" case. The bankruptcy court was warranted in considering this failure as part of the totality of circumstances supporting a denial of fees.

IV.

THE BANKRUPTCY COURT REASONABLY DETERMINED TO SUSPEND HILL FROM PRACTICE BEFORE IT ON THE GROUNDS THAT SHE HAD LIED TO THE COURT, ALTERED ITS ORDERS, AND FAILED TO COMPLY WITH ITS ORDERS

In Cunningham v. Ayers (In re Johnson), 921 F.2d 585 (5th Cir. 1991), this Court reviewed a contempt judgment of a bankruptcy court in which, as in this case, the court removed the trustee from all pending cases and suspended her from the practice of law before the bankruptcy court. This Court, although finding the bankruptcy court's judgment to be invalid for conflict of interest, held that "a bankruptcy court does have the power to conduct a disciplinary hearing and discipline the attorneys who practice before it * * *." Id. at 587. Noting that "[a]lthough [the bankruptcy judge] referred to the hearing as a contempt proceedings, he also indicated that he considered the proceedings to be disciplinary," this Court explained that "[c]ourts have used [Bankruptcy Code 105(a)][[31]] as a basis for holding that bankruptcy courts have both statutory and inherent authority to deny attorneys and others the privilege of practicing before that bar." Id. at 586.

[30] The local rule implements the requirements of 11 U.S.C. 330, which applies to trustees, such as Hill, whose compensation is governed by 11 U.S.C. 326(b).

This Court further explained that "'[d]isbarment proceedings are not for the purpose of punishment, but rather seek to determine the fitness of an official of the court to continue in that capacity and to protect the courts and the public from the official ministration of persons unfit to practice.'" Id. at 586 (quoting, In re Derryberry, 72 B.R. 874, 881 (Bankr. N.D. Ohio 1987)). See Dragoo v. Akard (In re Dragoo), 186 F.3d 614 (5th Cir. 1999) (sustaining a four-year suspension); D.H. Overmyer Co. v. Robson, 750 F.2d 31, 33 (6th Cir. 1984) (attorney admitted pro hac vice suspended for failing to comply with court rule regarding disclosure of conflicts).

Here, the suspension of Hill, occurring prior to the bankruptcy court's decision on contempt, was not "punitive"

[31] This section provides that "[t]he court may issue any order, process, or judgment that is necessary or appropriate to carry out the provisions of this title."

(Aplnts. Br. 21) and had nothing to do with "assur[ing] compliance with the turnover order" (id. at 24). Rather, the concern was "'the fitness of an official of the court.'" Cunningham, 921 F.2d at 586. In the September 1, 1999 hearing (Spohn), the court concluded that "what we have here * * * is a false application, a situation in which [Hill] has repeatedly lied or omitted information that would have been helpful to this Court and the ongoing administration of this and other cases by * * *." SRE, Tab - - at 100. The court further stated that

"[i]t is a situation in which the Court finds that the counsel - - Ms. Hill is not just a Trustee, a predecessor Trustee. She is a lawyer. She has lied to this Court. She has altered its Orders. She has failed to comply with its Orders." SRE, Tab - - at 100. Under these circumstances, Hill's suspension was entirely warranted.

V.

THE BANKRUPTCY JUDGE PROPERLY DECLINED TO RECUSE HIMSELF AT THE CONTEMPT HEARING

A. The Standard For Recusal

In Liteky v. United States, 510 U.S. 540 (1994), the Court described the circumstances, under 28 U.S.C. 455, in which "opinions formed by the judge on the basis of facts introduced or events occurring in the course of the current proceedings, or of prior proceedings" may "constitute a basis for a bias or partiality motion." Id. at 555. The Court held that such opinions may not be invoked "unless they display a deep-seated favoritism or antagonism that would make fair judgment impossible." Id. "Thus," the Court explained, "judicial remarks during the course of a trial that are critical or disapproving of, or even hostile to, counsel, the parties, or their cases, ordinarily do not support a bias or partiality challenge." Id.

The Court noted that such in-trial remarks "may [support a bias or partiality challenge] if they reveal an opinion that derives from an extrajudicial source; and they will do so if they reveal such a high degree of favoritism or antagonism as to make fair judgment impossible." Id. Finally, the Court emphasized that "[n]ot establishing bias or partiality * * * are expressions of impatience, dissatisfaction, annoyance, and even anger, that are within the bounds of what imperfect men and women, even after having been confirmed as federal judges, sometimes display." Id. See also Hollywood Fantasy Corp. v. Gabor, 151 F.3d 203, 215-16 (5th Cir. 1998); Conkling v. Turner, 138 F.3d 577, 593 (5th Cir. 1998).

B. The Standard Is Not Met

Hill claims that in the contempt hearing, "the judge vented his hostility [against her] for asserting her legal rights in filing 'voluminous' documents in this proceeding, and verbalized a preconceived bias against her." Aplnts. Br. 25. The transcript reads differently. There is no "deep-seated favoritism or antagonism that would make fair judgment impossible" (Liteky, 510 U.S. at 555), but simply a recounting of Hill's derelictions.

Addressing Hill's attorney, Mr. Charles, the judge, first noted that Hill has been "30 minutes late on an objection that she filed in the Unclaimed case" (CR 159, SRE, Tab 147 at 63), which objection she "did not serve." CR 160, SRE, Tab 147 at 64. The judge then stated that "she has burdened the Court and the Clerk with processing innumerable requests for * * * compensation where it is the policy of the [UST] that Applications for Compensation in asset cases must be supported by time records, that for reasons that are yet unknown to me, and perhaps you know them, Mr. Charles, she has not turned over." CR 160, SRE, Tab 147 at 64.

Hill's claim that "[t]he judge's personal knowledge of facts in controversy ma[d]e him unsuitable to serve in this case" (Aplnts. Br. 25) is equally baseless. Specifically, Hill cites the judge's "personal knowledge of disputed facts with regard to the destruction of files," his "putting on the record his contact with the successor trustee regarding the status of cases,"[32] and [32] The judge explained that "[t]he Court and the Panel Trustee have an obligation to administer the cases and keep the Court's business working. At the time of Ms. Hill's removal, there were consensual sales and abandonments that were pending. I attempted and instructed my Chambers and the Office of the his turning over of "certain pleadings and files" to the successor trustee. Aplnts. Br. 25. Yet, the judge evinced only the knowledge that derived from the very course of his official and proper involvement with Hill and Hastings in the bankruptcy matters as to which her contempt occurred.[33]

In sum, the bankruptcy court's responses to Hill's "egregious" misconduct and her unwillingness or incapacity to perform the duties of a bankruptcy trustee were reasonable and valid in all respects and must be upheld.

CONCLUSION

For the foregoing reasons, the judgments of the district court should be affirmed .

STATEMENT OF JURISDICTION

The bankruptcy court had jurisdiction under 28 U.S.C. 157(a) and (b) to hear the underlying case, a voluntary petition under chapter 7 of the Bankruptcy Code, 11 U.S.C. 701, et seq.[1] The bankruptcy court had jurisdiction under 28 U.S.C. 157(a) and (b) over the trustee's motion to compel turnover of funds held by Shawn P. Ryan, attorney for John Edward Hill, who filed a voluntary bankruptcy petition. The bankruptcy court granted the trustee's motion in a memorandum opinion entered Nov. 30, 2006. Excerpt of Record ("ER") 42-52. The bankruptcy court ordered turnover of the retained funds, by final order entered December 5, 2006. ER 54. Ryan and Hill filed a timely notice of appeal of this final order on December 13, 2006. ER 55-56. The same day, Ryan and Hill also timely filed an objection to Bankruptcy Appellate Panel referral and a motion to stay turnover pending appeal. ER 4-5. On January 31, 2007, the bankruptcy court granted Ryan's motion to stay. ER 6. This court has jurisdiction over this appeal under 28 U.S.C. 158(a)(1).

STATEMENT OF THE ISSUES

court correctly hold that these unearned funds became property of the estate by the debtor's filing the bankruptcy petition?

2. Does the Bankruptcy Code preempt Oregon law that would permit a debtor's attorney to be paid from property of the estate through an otherwise-valid attorney's lien, when the attorney has not met the Code's own payment provisions?

3. Is an Oregon attorney's lien valid against funds not yet earned by an attorney, when such a lien secures only amounts due for "services rendered to the client"?

STATEMENT OF THE CASE

I. Nature of the Case

This appeal challenges a bankruptcy court's order that a debtor's attorney turn over unearned funds to the trustee administering the debtor's bankruptcy case. John Edward Hill filed a voluntary chapter 7 bankruptcy petition on October 13, 2005. ER 1. For bankruptcy representation, Hill had paid his attorney Shawn P. Ryan a $5,000 retainer which Ryan placed into an attorney trust account. ER 42-43. When Hill filed his petition, Ryan stated there was no unpaid compensation due from Hill. ER 7. Ryan had earned and withdrawn $2,115 from the $5,000 for his pre-petition services and paid Hill's $209 filing fee from the retainer. Id. Hill listed the unearned $2,676 remaining in the retainer as his personal property. ER 10. Contending that these funds were property of the bankruptcy estate, the chapter 7 trustee in Hill's case filed a motion to compel Ryan to turn over these funds. ER 12. After briefing by the parties and two hearings, the bankruptcy court granted the trustee's motion in a published opinion. In re Hill, 355 B.R. 260 (Bankr. D. Or. 2006); ER 42-52. The court held that because there was no underlying debt to Ryan when Hill filed his petition, the retainer became property of the estate. ER 45. The court also concluded that even if Ryan held a state-law lien in the retainer, that lien could not be used to pay Ryan from property of the estate for services provided after Hill filed his petition, under the Supreme Court's holding in Lamie v. United States Trustee, 540 U.S. 526 (2004). ER 51-52. The court held that interpreting state lien law to allow payments specifically prohibited by the Bankruptcy Code violates the Supremacy Clause. Id. The court ordered turnover of the funds to the trustee. See ER 4. This appeal followed.

II. Statement of Facts

A. Statutory Background

An individual who seeks to discharge his past debts may file a petition under chapter 7 of the Bankruptcy Code. See 11 U.S.C. 701, et seq.[2] By filing such a petition, the individual "commences" a bankruptcy case and becomes a "debtor." See 11 U.S.C. 301(a), 101(13). When a case is commenced, practically all of the debtor's property at that time becomes property of the bankruptcy estate. 11 U.S.C. 541(a).

Under the Bankruptcy Code, all third parties must turn over all property of the estate to the chapter 7 trustee. 11 U.S.C. 542(a). Under federal law, the chapter 7 trustee becomes the estate's sole representative. 11 U.S.C. 323(a). The chapter 7 trustee's duties include taking possession of all estate property and liquidating it for distribution among the creditors who have filed claims against the estate. See 11 U.S.C. 704(1). If the trustee needs legal assistance in performing these duties, the trustee may file a motion under section 327 requesting authorization to retain counsel. 11 U.S.C. 327; Lamie, 540 U.S. at 531-32. Barring debtor misconduct or other special situations, the bankruptcy court will eventually issue an order discharging most of the debtor's pre-petition financial obligations. See 11 U.S.C. 727.

The Bankruptcy Code also regulates the retention, compensation and payment of attorneys in chapter 7 cases. The Code does not authorize a bankruptcy court to award fees to an attorney for a chapter 7 debtor unless the trustee retains the attorney pursuant to 11 U.S.C. 327(a) to represent or assist the trustee in carrying out the trustee's duties. See Lamie, 540 U.S. at 538-39 ("we hold that § 330(a)(1) does not authorize compensation awards to debtors' attorneys from estate funds unless they are employed as authorized by § 327. If the attorney is to be paid in a chapter 7 case, he must be employed by the trustee and approved by the court.").

To receive compensation from a bankruptcy estate, attorneys in chapter 7 cases must meet two tests. First, they must be employed under section 327(a). Lamie, 540 U.S. at 529 (affirming the lower court's ruling that attorneys may not be compensated from the estate "unless the attorney has been appointed under § 327 of the Code"). Second, attorneys must receive a fee award under section 330. Id. Section 330(a) fee awards are not self-executing. Section 503(b)(2) of the Code authorizes a bankruptcy court to pay compensation awarded under section 330(a)(1) as an administrative expense. 11 U.S.C. 503(b)(2). This is significant because administrative expense awards receive first payment priority under section 507(a)(1) of the Code. See 11 U.S.C. 507(a)(1).

United States Trustees are officials of the Department of Justice appointed by the Attorney General to supervise the administration of bankruptcy cases and trustees. See 28 U.S.C. 581-589 (specifying the powers and duties of United States Trustees).[3] Congress

John Edward Hill filed a voluntary chapter 7 bankruptcy petition on October 13, 2005. ER 1. Hill had paid his attorney Shawn P. Ryan a $5,000 retainer which Ryan placed into an attorney trust account. ER 42-43. When Hill filed his petition, Ryan had actually earned and withdrawn $2,115 of the $5,000. ER 7. Ryan also paid Hill's $209 filing fee from the retainer. Id. Ryan listed as zero the unpaid compensation due and payable to him from Hill. Id. Hill listed the remaining $2,676 as his personal property on Schedule B filed with his bankruptcy petition. ER 10. As the date Hill filed his bankruptcy petition, the $2,676 remaining in the trust account held by Ryan was unearned by Ryan. See ER 7, 43.

The written fee agreement between Hill and Ryan, which Hill signed the same day he filed his bankruptcy petition, did not purport to transfer title to the retainer funds to Ryan. ER 36-37. Nor did the agreement state in any way that any retainer funds would be earned by Ryan upon receipt. See id. On the contrary, the agreement's heading states that the agreement was for "hourly" representation and that "client agrees to pay for such services on an hourly basis." ER 36. The agreement did not purport to give Ryan any rights different from or greater than he was entitled to receive as counsel in a bankruptcy case. Id. The agreement offers no notice that Ryan would have any potential attorney's lien or any potential rights therein. Id.

On November 3, 2005, Rodolfo A. Camacho was appointed trustee to administer and liquidate Hill's bankruptcy estate. See ER 1. The trustee never sought authorization, under 11 U.S.C. 327 or otherwise, to appoint Ryan as chapter 7 counsel. See ER 1-6. The bankruptcy court never entered an order appointing Ryan to act as chapter 7 counsel. See id.

After Hill filed his petition, Ryan did not turn over to the trustee the unearned retainer funds in his trust account. Contending that these funds were property of the bankruptcy estate, the trustee filed a motion on May 4, 2006 to compel Ryan to turn over these funds. ER 12.

C. The Bankruptcy Court's Decision

The bankruptcy court issued a published opinion, In re Hill, 355 B.R. 260 (Bankr. D. Or. 2006), following briefing by the parties as well as hearings held on June 21 and September 26, 2006. ER 42-52. The bankruptcy court concluded that under Oregon state law, funds in the retainer held by Ryan remained Hill's property until earned by Ryan. ER 45. The bankruptcy court ordered that the $2,676 be turned over to the trustee for distribution to creditors. ER 52.

To support its holding, the bankruptcy court cited the Oregon Supreme Court's holding that retainer funds are client property unless there is a clear written agreement between the lawyer and client that advance fees constitute an earned-on-receipt retainer. Id. at 44 (citing Conduct of Biggs, 318 Or. 281, 864 P.2d 1310 (1994)). The bankruptcy court noted that it was undisputed that there was no written agreement between Ryan and Hill that the fees were an earned-on-receipt retainer. ER 45. Therefore, at the time of filing, Hill owed no fees to Ryan and had an absolute right to a refund of the funds remaining in the retainer. Id. Accordingly, by operation of law, the funds became property of the estate under 11 U.S.C. 541(a)(1). Id. The court rejected Ryan's argument, which relied on a since-reversed Kansas bankruptcy court decision,[4] that the trustee had only a reversionary interest in the funds in the retainer when Hill filed his bankruptcy petition. Id.

The bankruptcy court also rejected Ryan's alternative argument that even if the unearned funds were property of the estate, Ryan held a state-law security interest pursuant to an Oregon attorney's lien, Or. Rev. St. 87.430, which allowed him to be paid from estate funds for services provided after Hill filed his petition. ER 51-52. The bankruptcy court acknowledged that an Oregon bankruptcy court and the Ninth Circuit Bankruptcy Appellate Panel had held prior to Lamie that if a chapter 7 debtor's attorney could not be paid from estate property under section 330, a valid attorney's lien on a pre-petition retainer could justify paying the attorney from estate property for post-petition services. ER 46-47; See Century Cleaning Servs., Inc., 202 B.R. 149, 153 (Bankr. D. Or. 1996), aff'd, 215 B.R. 18 (9th Cir. BAP 1997).[5] The bankruptcy court stated that Lamie overruled these holdings. ER 47. Regardless of whether Ryan held a security interest in the funds remaining in the retainer, it held, the funds could not be used to compensate Ryan for his post-petition services, because Ryan was not authorized to act as attorney for the trustee under section 327. Id. at 52. The court concluded that interpreting state lien law to allow payments specifically prohibited by the Bankruptcy Code violates the Supremacy Clause. Id. at 51-52. Ryan and Hill appealed. ER 55-56.

[5] On appeal of the Century Cleaning BAP decision, the Ninth Circuit reversed the BAP without deciding the attorney's lien issue. See In re Century Cleaning Servs., Inc., 195 F.3d 1053, 1061 (9th Cir. 1999).

STANDARD OF REVIEW

The interpretation of the Bankruptcy Code and state law are questions of law reviewed de novo. See In re Eliapo, 468 F.3d 592, 596 (9th Cir. 2006); In re Estate of Covington, 450 F.3d 917, 925 n.8 (9th Cir. 2006).

SUMMARY OF ARGUMENT

1. The bankruptcy court correctly held that retainer funds that were a debtor's property as of filing a bankruptcy petition became property of the bankruptcy estate. It is undisputed that Hill owed Ryan no fees when Hill filed his petition. Under Oregon law, unearned funds in such a retainer remain a client's property. Therefore the funds became property of the estate and were subject to turnover to the trustee. This court should affirm the bankruptcy court.

2. Assuming arguendo that Ryan had an otherwise-valid Oregon attorney's lien in funds that were property of the estate, the bankruptcy court correctly concluded that it would violate the Supremacy Clause to authorize payment through this lien. First, sections 327, 330, 503 and 507 of the Bankruptcy Code establish a comprehensive scheme that controls the retention of attorneys and governs their compensation from bankruptcy estate funds. These sections preempt the operation of contrary state law because Ryan had not been retained in the chapter 7 case under section 327, which meant he could not receive a fee award under section 330 and could not receive payment from the bankruptcy estate under sections 503 and 507. Second, the Bankruptcy Code independently preempts Ryan's compensation under state law because this would conflict with sections 542(a), 323(a), and 704(1), which present a comprehensive federal scheme for administering debtors' estates. Ryan's state-law theory interferes with this scheme because it is premised upon Ryan's using estate funds that he had failed to turn over in violation of section 542(a), and upon the erroneous notion that Ryan could perform chapter 7 work without a section 327 retention by the trustee even though that would negate the trustee's power under sections 323 and 704. Finally, under Ninth Circuit law, allowing Ryan to assert a state lien for payment from estate property violates the Bankruptcy Code's goal of equitable distribution of debtor assets. This court should affirm the bankruptcy court.

3. Ryan did not have a valid lien pursuant to the Oregon attorney's lien statute, Or. Rev. St. 87.430. When Hill filed his petition, Ryan was due nothing for the services he had rendered. The lien statute does not apply against unearned funds, under its plain language and under the general rule of law that attorney liens only secure fees and charges which are due.

4. Ryan misconstrues section 329, erroneously characterizing it as a provision authorizing payments from estate property. In fact, section 329 is a disclosure provision that allows a court to recoup for the benefit of the bankruptcy estate any pre-petition fees deemed unreasonable. As the Ninth Circuit had recognized, section 329 aims to prevent overreaching by debtor's attorneys. Ryan also makes a meritless "bundle of sticks" argument, with his only authority a reversed Kansas bankruptcy court case. Finally, strong policy rationales buttress the bankruptcy court's decision.

ARGUMENT

This court should affirm the bankruptcy court's order that Ryan turn over to the trustee the $2,676 in funds unearned when Hill filed his bankruptcy petition. The unearned funds became property of the estate when Hill filed his bankruptcy petition. Assuming arguendo that Ryan had an otherwise-valid attorney's lien on this estate property, paying Ryan from estate property pursuant to this lien is preempted by the Bankruptcy Code. The Code comprehensively addresses attorney retention and payment, trustee control over estate property, and establishes a unique scheme for equitable distribution to creditors. But Ryan did not have a valid Oregon attorney's lien on the funds, because such liens only apply to funds already due. Finally, Ryan's arguments misconstrue the operation of section 329, his "bundle of sticks" argument lacks merit, and strong policy reasons support the bankruptcy court's decision.

I. The unearned fees were Hill's property and became property of the estate when Hill filed his bankruptcy petition.

As the bankruptcy court correctly held and as Ryan himself concedes, the unearned funds in the retainer became property of Hill's estate when Hill filed his bankruptcy petition.[6] In bankruptcy, the threshold questions of the existence and scope of the debtor's interest in a given asset are determined under state law. See In re Raintree Healthcare Corp., 431 F.3d 685, 688 (9th Cir. 2005). At the time Hill filed his petition, the extent of interest in the retainer held by Ryan depends on the terms of the fee agreement, under applicable Oregon law. Applicable Oregon law that establishes that Hill had full ownership of the unearned funds. The Oregon Supreme Court has held that "[w]ithout a clear written agreement between a lawyer and a client that fees paid in advance constitute a non-refundable retainer earned on receipt, such funds must be considered client property . . ." Matter of Biggs, 318 Or. 281, 293 (1994).[7] As the [6] See Ryan's Opening Brief ("ROB") 1 ("The issue for appeal is whether an attorney's security retainer that is property of the estate, but subject to an attorney lien . . . can be used to pay the attorney's post-petition fees and costs.) (emphasis added).

[7] The Oregon Supreme Court recently cited this holding in Biggs and stated that if an advance retainer is not earned on receipt, "the retainer payment is the client's money until the lawyer performs legal services that the client has agreed to pay for." Conduct of Balocca, 342 Or. 279, 287-88, 151 P.3d 154, 159 (2007).

bankruptcy court noted, it was undisputed that there was no agreement between Hill and Ryan that the advance fees were earned on receipt. Therefore the funds remained Ryan's and became estate property by operation of Section 541(a), which includes "all legal or equitable interests of the debtor in property as of the commencement of the case." See In re Feiler, 218 F.3d 948, 955 (9th Cir. 2000) ("Property [of the estate] is broadly defined by the Bankruptcy Code."); In re Hines, 147 F.3d 1185, 1189 (9th Cir. 1998) (noting a "host" of cases holding that the right to unearned attorney fees as of the petition filing date "becomes property of the estate as a matter of bankruptcy law").

Other courts have reviewed similar retainers under applicable state law and have reached the same conclusion that unearned funds remain client property and become property of the estate upon the filing of a bankruptcy petition. See Barron v. Countryman, 432 F.3d 590, 597(5th Cir. 2005) (concluding that Texas law is settled that funds remaining in a pre-petition retainer become property of the estate when the petition is filed); In re Equip. Servs., Inc., 290 F.3d 746-47 (4th Cir. 2002) (concluding, based on Virginia disciplinary rules, that remaining funds in a pre-petition retainer became property of estate), aff'd sub nom. Lamie v. United States Trustee, 540 U.S. 526 (2004); Indian Motocycle Assoc. III Ltd. P'ship v. Massachusetts Hous. Fin. Agency, 66 F.3d 1246, 1255 (1st Cir. 1995) (noting that under ethical rules applicable in most jurisdictions, a retainer to secure payment of anticipated legal expenses remains client property until services are actually performed); In re Mahendra, 131 F.3d 750, 756 (8th Cir. 1997) (same).

The $2,676 in unearned advance fees that Ryan continues to hold is property of Hill's bankruptcy estate. The bankruptcy court did not err in this conclusion.

II. Ryan’s attempt to rely upon Oregon lien law would violate the Supremacy Clause of the United States Constitution and is preempted by the Bankruptcy Code.

Assuming arguendo that Ryan has an otherwise valid Oregon attorney’s lien under Or. Rev. St. § 87.430 on the unearned retainer funds, the Bankruptcy Code preempts any right Ryan might have to assert that lien to ensure that he receive payment from property of the estate for his post-petition services. The Supremacy Clause of the United States Constitution establishes that federal law preempts inconsistent state law.[8] The Bankruptcy Clause of the Constitution, U. S. Const. art. I, § 8, cl. 4, expressly grants Congress the power to establish “uniform” laws on the subject of bankruptcies throughout the United States. Congress has exercised that power by enacting the Bankruptcy Code, 11 U.S.C. 101, et seq.

Congress has broad authority to preempt state laws, and its intent to do so is properly inferred where “state law stands as an obstacle to the accomplishment and execution of the full purposes and objectives of Congress.” California Fed. Sav. and Loan Ass’n v. Guerra, 479 U.S. 272, 281 (1987) (internal quotation omitted). Alternatively, a federal statute may create a scheme of federal regulation so pervasive as to make reasonable the inference that Congress left no room for the states to supplement it. Barnett Bank of Marion County, N.A. v. Nelson, 517 U.S. 25, 31 (1996). The Ninth Circuit has observed that federal bankruptcy law is pervasive and involves a federal interest so dominant as to preclude enforcement of state laws on the same subject. Sherwood Partners, Inc. v. Lycos, Inc., 394 F.3d 1198, 1201 (9th Cir. 2005) (noting that the Bankruptcy Code occupies a full title of the United States Code and provides a comprehensive system of rights, obligations and procedures and a complex administrative machinery that includes a special system of federal courts and United States Trustees.).

[8] The Supremacy Clause of the United States Constitution mandates that “the Laws of the United States . . . shall be the supreme Law of the Land; and the Judges in every State shall be bound thereby, any Thing in the Constitution or Laws of any State to the Contrary notwithstanding.” U. S. Const. art. VI, § 2. Thus, under the Supremacy Clause, federal legislation can preempt state or local laws. See M'Culloch v. Maryland, 17 U. S. (4 Wheat.) 316, 327 (1819).

There are three separate and independent reasons why the Bankruptcy Code preempts paying Ryan from estate property through an otherwise-valid Oregon attorney's lien under Or. Rev. St. § 87.430. First, reliance upon the lien statute to pay Ryan for his post-petition services would run squarely counter to the Bankruptcy Code's comprehensive scheme for retaining, awarding, and paying fees to attorneys from estate funds for post-petition work done in chapter 7 cases. Second, paying Ryan through the lien would be inconsistent with the Bankruptcy Code's provisions governing the administration of estate assets in chapter 7 cases which establish that the trustee is the representative of the estate and which require all third parties to turn over all estate property to the trustee. Third, enforcing the lien would place Ryan ahead of other post-petition creditors seeking compensation from estate property, and would run counter to the Ninth Circuit's recognition that equitable distribution of assets among creditors is a key goal of the Bankruptcy Code.

A. The Bankruptcy Code's comprehensive federal scheme for retaining, awarding and paying fees to attorneys from estate funds for work done in chapter 7 cases preempts inconsistent Oregon lien law.

Ignoring the dictates of the Bankruptcy Code, Ryan impliedly asserts that where an attorney has a valid attorney's lien under Or. Rev. St. § 87.430, that attorney need not file a fee application with the bankruptcy court to be compensated from estate funds for his post-petition legal services to a chapter 7 debtor. As the bankruptcy court correctly held, this legal construction would violate the Supremacy Clause. See ER 51-52 ("Interpreting state lien law to allow payments that are specifically prohibited by the Bankruptcy Code violates the Supremacy Clause.”).[9] The Bankruptcy Code provides no general right to recover attorney’s fees incurred during a bankruptcy case. Instead, attorneys must rely on a statutory source of authority to order to have their fees paid by the estate.

Significantly, the Supreme Court has long held that the federal statutory scheme governing the compensation of bankruptcy professionals in bankruptcy cases is a pervasive scheme of regulation that preempts inconsistent state laws. Brown v. Gerdes, 321 U.S. 178, 183 (1944) (Chandler Act amendments to the Bankruptcy Act of 1898 created “comprehensive supervision over compensation and allowances” under federal law and “provided centralized control” over attorney fees). This is because bankruptcy jurisdiction over professional fees in bankruptcy cases is “paramount and exclusive” and federal provisions governing professional compensation “cause any conflicting [state] procedure to give way.” Brown, 321 U.S. at 183 (holding that under the Bankruptcy Act, bankruptcy courts, not state courts, fix compensation for attorneys representing the estate, even in state litigation) (citations omitted).

The Bankruptcy Code of 1978, like the former Bankruptcy Act construed by the Supreme Court in Brown, comprehensively governs the retention, fee award and compensation of lawyers from estate funds. Indeed, one of the most fundamental aspects of the Bankruptcy Code is this governance and control of administrative and professional expenses under 11 U.S.C. 327, 330, 503 and 507.[10]

[9] A federal district court recently held in similar fashion that the Supremacy Clause would preempt payment to a debtor’s attorney under state lien law, where the attorney was not appointed under section 327. See In re CK Liquidation Corp., 343 B.R. 376 (D. Mass. 2006).

[10] The federal bankruptcy scheme controlling professional compensation is so comprehensive that section 329 of the Code requires bankruptcy courts to review even those fees that attorneys charge before they file bankruptcy petitions, and which are not paid from estate funds. 11 U.S.C. 329. Under section 329(b), the court may order the return of those non-estate

The relevant professional compensation provisions of the Bankruptcy Code – 11 U.S.C. §§ 327 330, 503, and 507 – collectively reveal a comprehensive scheme covering attorney retention and compensation. See In re Reimers, 972 F.2d 1127, 1128 (9th Cir. 1992) ("The bankruptcy code contains specific provisions governing compensation of professionals."); In re Occidental Financial Group, Inc., 40 F.3d 1059, 1063 (9th Cir. 1994) (rejecting debtor's attorney argument for quantum meruit award of fees from estate funds and citing In re Shirley, 134 B.R. 940, 944-45 (9th Cir. BAP 1992) that allowing attorney to recover under state law theories "would void bankruptcy code and rules requiring court approval of employment").

Allowing state law to operate in conflict with this system would present an obstacle to the accomplishment and execution of congressional purposes. See California Fed. Sav., 479 U.S. at 281. Alternatively, these Bankruptcy Code provisions present a federal scheme of federal regulation so pervasive as to make reasonable the inference that Congress left no room for the States to supplement it. See Barnett Bank, 517 U.S at 31.

Through the Bankruptcy Code, Congress has established a comprehensive set of rules, which dictate: (i) how attorneys may be retained at estate expense – through the granting of a section 327 employment motion; (ii) how they are compensated by the estate – through a section 330 fee award; (iii) how they receive payment from the estate – through the payment of their section 330(a) award under section 503(b)(2); and (iv) what priority their payment receives – first administrative priority under sections 507(a)(1). Section 327(a) allows trustees to retain attorneys in chapter 7 cases by court order. 11 U.S.C. 327(a). See also Fed. R. Bankr. P.

funds if the attorney's charges were unreasonable. See In re Jastrem, 253 F.3d 438 (9th Cir. 2001) (reducing attorney fees under section 329(b) for pre-petition services provided to an individual). Ryan wrongly asserts that his post-petition services are analyzed and payable under Section 329. See ROB 6, 10; infra section IV.A.

2014(a) (governing application for and order for employment of professionals pursuant to section 327). In turn, section 330(a) allows the court to award fees to an attorney but only if the attorney has been "employed under section 327."[11] 11 U.S.C. 330(a). Section 503(b)(2) allows an attorney to receive payment from the estate for his professional services but only if "compensation . . . [has been] awarded [to the attorney] under section 330(a)." 11 U.S.C. 503(b)(2). Finally, section 507(a)(1) grants first payment priority to an attorney fee award under section 503(b)(2), as an "administrative expense" of the estate. 11 U.S.C. 507(a)(1).

That Congress made these provisions interdependent indicates that they constitute a comprehensive and self-contained scheme. For example, an attorney's right to payment under section 503(b)(2) is expressly conditioned upon a section 330(a) fee award and the right to receive such a section 330(a) award is conditioned upon the attorney having been retained under section 327. Compensation for services rendered without the court's approval or prior to the retention date established by the court is not payable from the estate under Section 330. See Lamie, 540 U.S. 526, 538-39 ("we hold that 330(a)(1) does not authorize compensation awards to debtors' attorneys from estate funds, unless they are employed as authorized by 327"); see also Barron v. Countryman, 432 F.3d 590, 595 (5th Cir. 2005) ("The Code requires approval of all attorneys fees sought to be paid from the estate of the debtor."); In re F/S Airlease II, Inc. 844 F.2d 99, 109 (3d Cir. 1988) ("If [the debtor's attorney] were able to be compensated under section 503(b)(1)(A), it would render section 327(a) nugatory and contravene Congress' intent in providing for prior approval."); In re Williams, 357 B.R. 434 (6th Cir. BAP 2007) (stating it would be “impermissible” for chapter 7 debtor’s attorney to seek payment of fees from estate funds unless his employment was authorized under section 327).

Federal appellate law supports the conclusion that to the extent that Oregon lien law would otherwise apply, once Hill filed his bankruptcy petition, the Bankruptcy Code governed solely. For example, the Eighth Circuit categorically repudiated the idea that a state law lien could authorize payment from estate property for post-petition legal services provided by a chapter 7 debtor’s attorney outside sections 327 and 330. In re Mahendra,131 F.3d 750, 756 (8th Cir. 1997). Similarly, the Ninth Circuit’s Bankruptcy Appellate Panel held after its earlier decision in Century Cleaning that an attorney’s lien secures “only the amount of fees and costs specifically allowed by the bankruptcy court” rather than the entire retainer, because otherwise “would render the employment and compensation requirements of the Code and Rules meaningless.” In re Monument Auto Detail, Inc., 226 B.R. 219 (9th Cir. BAP 1998). See also In re On-Line Servs. Ltd., 324 B.R. 342, 347-48 (8th Cir. BAP 2005) (citing Lamie for the conclusion that an attorney is prevented from using a state law lien arising from a pre-petition security retainer for work in a chapter 7 case when the trustee had not retained the attorney under section 327).

In light of Congress’ thorough regulation of all aspects of professional compensation in bankruptcy cases, Ryan’s attempt to apply Oregon’s attorney’s lien statute to circumvent the Bankruptcy Code is improper. Ryan’s construction of state law would allow recovery from the Hill bankruptcy estate when sections 327, 330, 503 and 507 would not. Such a conclusion stands “as an obstacle to the accomplishment and execution of the full purposes and objectives . . . Congress” mandated in enacting the Bankruptcy Code and is preempted by the Bankruptcy Code. California Fed. Sav., 479 U.S. at 281. Indeed, applying the Oregon lien statute would squarely conflict with federal law. Alternatively, the Code presents such a pervasive scheme of federal regulation of attorney compensation in bankruptcy cases that it is reasonable to infer that Congress left no room for states to supplement the scheme. See Barnett Bank, 517 U.S. at 31. The bankruptcy court properly concluded that Ryan could not be paid from estate funds through an Oregon attorney's lien.

B. The Bankruptcy Code's comprehensive federal scheme for administering debtors also preempts Ryan's claim because the Code governs the administration of estate assets in chapter 7 cases and requires all third parties to turn over all estate property to the trustee.

Similarly, to permit Ryan to hoard and dispose of property of the estate based on the Oregon attorney's lien statute is inconsistent with the Bankruptcy Code's provisions governing the administration of assets in chapter 7 cases. Because the unearned funds became property of the bankruptcy estate under section 541(a), Ryan had a duty under section 542(a) to turn over the funds to the trustee. Under sections 323(a) and 704(1), only the trustee could administer estate funds, including the retainer. Those sections also gave the trustee the sole right to decide whether the estate would hire lawyers in the chapter 7 case, and who those lawyers should be.

Ryan has failed to turn over the funds and continues to hold this estate property in direct contravention of the Bankruptcy Code. The Code requires that estate property be turned over to the trustee. It is clear that the unearned funds in the retainer became property of the estate under section 541(a) once Hill filed his bankruptcy petition. See In re FitzSimmons, 725 F.2d 1208, 1210 (9th Cir. 1984) (noting that the bankruptcy estate comprises the property that will be available to satisfy the costs of bankruptcy administration and pay off the claims of the creditors). Therefore, section 542(a) of the Code commands that Ryan "deliver to the trustee" such funds. See In re Gerwer, 898 F.2d 730, 734 (9th Cir. 1990) ("The Trustee's power under Section 542 to obtain turnover does encroach upon the expectations of a lienholder.").

The Bankruptcy Code also provides that only the chapter 7 trustee, not the debtor's attorney, had the power to control and administer the funds at issue. Once a chapter 7 case commences, the trustee "is the representative of the estate." 11 U.S.C. 323(a). It is the role of solely the trustee to collect and administer estate property. 11 U.S.C. 704(1). As the Ninth Circuit has noted, a chapter 7 trustee can liquidate a debtor's right to legal services "by rejecting the contract with the attorney and demanding a refund of the unearned fees." In re Hines, 147 F.3d 1185, 1189 (9th Cir. 1998).

Significantly, the Supreme Court in Lamie relied upon this concept of the trustee's power to buttress its holding that a debtor's attorney shall not be paid from estate funds for chapter 7 work unless the trustee hires the attorney under section 327. Lamie, 540 U.S. at 537. Lamie explained that "[s]ection 327's limitation on debtors' incurring debts for professional services without the chapter 7 trustee's approval is not absurd. In the context of a chapter 7 liquidation it advances the trustee's responsibility for preserving the estate." Id.

In Hill's bankruptcy case, once the trustee was appointed, only the trustee could make decisions regarding estate property. Under federal law, Ryan was required to deliver the funds to the trustee. And only the trustee could decide whether the estate needed legal services and who should be nominated under section 327. But the trustee did not seek to use Ryan to perform services on behalf of the estate. Instead, he sought and obtained permission under section 327 to use another attorney. Ryan was not acting as chapter 7 counsel to the extent he performed post-petition services for Hill.

For these reasons, sections 542(a), 323(a), and 704(1) preempt Ryan's ability under state law to retain estate property.[12] The Oregon attorney's lien statute would effectively grant Ryan trustee-like powers and would present a square conflict with the Bankruptcy Code. Applying the Oregon statute in this bankruptcy context would grant Ryan "powers that are within the heartland of bankruptcy administration," requiring its preemption. Sherwood Partners, Inc. v. Lycos, Inc., 394 F.3d 1198, 1201 (9th Cir. 2005). Even if Ryan had a valid lien in a non-bankruptcy context, here he sought to employ that lien in derogation of these Code provisions, and in derogation of Lamie and thus was preempted by federal law. This court should affirm the turnover order. See In re Mahendra, 131 F.3d 750, 755(8th Cir. 1997) (holding that attorney cannot use a pre-petition retainer secured by a state-law lien to pay for his post-petition services because the debtor "lost the right to authorize" the attorney's legal services "which could potentially further encumber this asset of the bankruptcy estate.").

[12] Within the context of bankruptcy case administration, Ryan's argument for payment from estate funds under the Oregon attorney's lien statute also runs afoul of preemption doctrine for its conflict with the automatic stay provisions of the Bankruptcy Code. See 11 U.S.C. 362(a). Because it is apparent that Congress included these provisions as part of a pervasive and comprehensive scheme governing administration of bankruptcy cases, state law must give way to the extent it conflicts with this federal scheme.

Specifically, the estate created by section 541 is protected from the piecemeal reach of creditors by section 362, which imposes an automatic stay on all actions and proceedings that affect a debtor's property. See 11 U.S.C. 362(a). Once Hill filed his petition, Ryan was prohibited under section 362(a)(3) from "any act . . . to exercise control over property of the estate," i.e, the funds in the retainer. Ryan was also barred under section 362(a)(4) from taking "any act to create, perfect, or enforce any lien against property of the estate." Finally, Ryan was prohibited by section 362(a)(5) from "any act to create, perfect, or enforce against property of the debtor any lien to the extent that such lien secures a claim that arose before the commencement of the case under this title." Ryan's argument that under state law he was entitled to assert a lien for payment from estate property must fail. Under Ryan's attorney's lien theory of recovery, his efforts to control or otherwise interfere with estate property violate the automatic stay. The Oregon statute is therefore preempted by federal law.

C. Allowing Ryan to assert a state lien for payment from estate property violates the Bankruptcy Code's goal of equitable distribution of debtor assets.

Finally, allowing Ryan payment from estate funds pursuant to the Oregon attorney's lien statute runs impermissibly counter to a central goal of the Bankruptcy Code – the equitable distribution of debtor assets. The Ninth Circuit has observed that chapter 7 of the Bankruptcy Code embodies the twin goals of a fresh start for an individual debtor and the equitable distribution of debtor assets among competing creditors. Sherwood Partners, Inc. v. Lycos, Inc., 394 F.3d 1198, 1203 (9th Cir. 2005). Therefore, state statutes that implicate either goal will be preempted. Id. As Sherwood Partners observed, the Bankruptcy Code seeks to accomplish equitable distribution "through a distinctive form of collective proceeding . . . that makes bankruptcy different from a collection of actions by individual creditors." Id. The filing of a bankruptcy petition brings the bankruptcy estate into being and triggers the automatic stay, "which prevents creditors from enforcing their claims, thus preserving the debtor's assets for ultimate distribution by the bankruptcy trustee." Id. at 1204. For these reasons, in addition to the assignee preference statute preempted in Sherwood Partners, the Ninth Circuit has repeatedly held that the Bankruptcy Code preempts state laws and private agreements that conflict with the Code. See, e.g., In re Miles, 430 F.3d 1083 (9th Cir. 2005); MSR Exploration, Ltd. v. Meridian Oil, Inc., 74 F.3d 910 (9th Cir. 1996); Gonzales v. Parks, 830 F.2d 1033 (9th Cir. 1987); Matter of 268 Ltd., 789 F.2d 674 (9th Cir. 1986).

Ryan's use of the attorney's lien statute would undermine the Code's distinctive collective method of asset distribution, including the automatic stay and the trustee's exclusive role in preserving assets for equitable distribution. If each debtor's attorney with a state-law attorney's lien on a pre-petition security retainer could simply ignore the Code and freely perform services after a case is filed, the Code's scheme would be effectively rewritten. The bankruptcy court was correct to resist Ryan's invitation to do so.

III. The Oregon attorney's lien statute is invalid against funds unearned by an attorney.

Setting aside the issue of preemption of an otherwise-valid lien, Ryan lacked a valid lien from the beginning. Ryan did not have a valid security interest for services not yet rendered. Or. Rev. St. 87.430 grants an attorney a lien on client money in his or her possession "for services rendered to the client." Or. Rev. St. 87.430. When Hill filed his petition, Ryan was due nothing for the services he rendered. Ryan's alleged lien did not exist, because Hill had paid for all services Ryan had rendered to date

Although fundamental black-letter law requires the existence of an actual debt or obligation before any lien is created, Ryan alleges a lien where Hill owed no obligation. A lien is an "incident of" a debt or obligation secured, and therefore "cannot exist in the absence of the debt or obligation the payment of which it secures." 53 C.J.S. Liens § 4 (updated Feb. 2007). More specifically, the standard rule is that a lien such as Ryan's applies only to secure attorney fees and charges which are due for services rendered. See 7A C.J.S. Attorney & Client § 445 (updated Feb. 2007); see also In re Monument Auto Detail, Inc., 226 B.R. 219 (9th Cir. BAP 1998) (holding that an attorney's lien secures "only the amount of fees and costs specifically allowed by the bankruptcy court" rather than the entire retainer); Tri City Equipment Co. v. Modern Real Estate Investments, Ltd., 460 N.W. 2d 464, 466 (Iowa 1990) ("Under the general rule and the Iowa cases, a retaining lien is available only to secure the attorney's fees and charges which are due for services already rendered.").

There are no Oregon state court cases that allow an attorney's lien to become effective for future services, and it indeed demands a tortured reading of the plain language of Or. Rev. St. 87.430 to conclude that an attorney's lien attaches for services not yet performed or otherwise unearned. The statute clearly provides that the lien applies only for services "rendered." Those services that an attorney might render in the future are simply not included. If the Oregon legislature had intended that a lien apply "for services rendered and for future services to be rendered" then presumably it would have said so. But allowing an attorney to retain client property to secure future services threatens interference with a client's undisputed power to terminate counsel at will with or without cause, subject to possible liability for breach of contract. See In re Lachmund's Estate, 170 P.2d 748, 752, 179 Or. 420, 429 (1946). Although Ryan makes much of the earlier bankruptcy court interpretation of Or. Rev. St. 87.430 in Century Cleaning, that interpretation – which is not binding on this court – was based on a single statement from a general liens treatise. See In re Century Cleaning Servs., Inc., 202 B.R. 149, 153 (Bankr. D. Or. 1996).

Finally, Ryan himself appeared to share the common-sense understanding that he would lack any rights over client property until he performed services requiring payment. Ryan told the bankruptcy court that "the clear written agreement [] provides for me to be able to charge against those monies for services that the client, the debtor, asks me to do. And to the extend [sic] that I do that, then I have a claim to that money." ER 62. In other words, Ryan recognized that he would only gain a legal claim over retainer funds once he had provided services that Hill asked him to perform. Ryan could not claim lien rights over money he had not yet earned and which remained his client's property. Ryan had no lien.

IV. Ryan's section 329 argument misconstrues the statute, his "bundle of sticks" argument lacks merit, and strong policy rationales support the bankruptcy court's ruling.

A. Ryan's section 329 argument misconstrues the statute.

Ryan mischaracterizes the operation of the Bankruptcy Code's section 329 as a provision authorizing payments to chapter 7 debtor attorneys from estate property. See ROB 9-11. In doing so, he relies on a Kansas bankruptcy court decision, In re Wagers, 340 B.R. 391 (Bankr. D. Kan. 2006), that was reversed several months before he filed his brief. See In re Wagers, 355 B.R. 268 (10th Cir. BAP 2006). Section 329 does not operate to authorize payment from estate funds or to authorize compensation for post-petition services. See In re Smith, 317 F.3d 918, 924 (9th Cir. 2002) ("Section 330(a) of the Bankruptcy Code governs the compensation of officers and professionals working on a bankruptcy case.").

Instead, section 329 is a disclosure provision that requires attorneys for debtors to state what compensation they have received during the year before petitioning for bankruptcy and that allows the bankruptcy court to recoup for the benefit of the estate any pre-petition fees deemed unreasonable. See 11 U.S.C. 329. In light of the comprehensive Bankruptcy Code scheme for retaining and compensating attorneys in bankruptcy cases, it is unsurprising that even fees paid to chapter 7 attorneys from non-estate funds – by a debtor pre-petition – are subject to scrutiny under section 329(a). As the Ninth Circuit has recognized, the legislative history of Code provisions including section 329 suggests such provisions were "intended to prevent overreaching or the collusive use of fee arrangements." Matter of 268 Ltd., 789 F.2d 674, 677 (9th Cir. 1986).

Ironically, in light of this legislative purpose, Ryan attempts to overreach by using section 329 as a safe harbor from the applicable requirements of the Code. As Lamie recognized, it is only section 330 in the Code that authorizes payment to a chapter 7 debtor attorney's from estate funds.

B. Ryan's "bundle of sticks" argument lacks merit.

Ryan's brief also relies on the reversed In re Wagers Kansas bankruptcy court case to support the misleading and inaccurate notion that he had an all-consuming "stick in the bundle" of property rights in the retainer. See ROB 11; In re Wagers, 355 B.R. 268 (10th Cir. BAP 2006), rev'g 340 B.R.391 (Bankr. D. Kan. 2006). Similarly, Ryan's assertion that the trustee had only a contingent reversionary interest in the unearned funds is without support beyond the reversed In re Wagers decision. As correctly concluded by the bankruptcy court under Oregon law, unearned funds in an attorney retainer remain client property, and become estate property under federal law when a client files a bankruptcy petition.

C. Strong policy rationale supports the bankruptcy court's ruling.

Although a chapter 7 debtor's attorney must be employed by the trustee to be paid from estate property, this has not presented undue hardships in bankruptcy cases. As the Supreme Court explained in Lamie, "[s]eeming order has attended the [government's] rule's application for five years in the Fifth Circuit and for four years in the Eleventh Circuit." Lamie, 540 U.S. at 537. Similarly, in the three years since Lamie issued, the United States Trustee Program is not aware of chaos emanating from the Supreme Court's construction of federal law. Post-petition attorney's fees can be paid out of a chapter 7 debtor's post-petition earnings, which are not property of the estate. Additionally, to the extent that the services of the debtor's attorney would benefit the bankruptcy estate, the attorney could seek to be employed by the chapter 7 trustee pursuant to section 327, as explicitly provided for in section 330.

Moreover, Chapter 7 debtors routinely pay their attorney a flat fee prior to filing bankruptcy to compensate the attorney for preparing and filing their petitions. See Lamie, 526 U.S. at 537 (recognizing the propriety of popular flat fee-type pre-petition retainers). Ryan had the opportunity to structure his fee arrangement with Hill this way, but instead chose an hourly arrangement for pre- and post-petition services. If Hill had the incorrect understanding that all funds in all pre-petition retainers immediately become attorney property, that may be attributable to Ryan's misunderstanding of federal law but is hardly "unfair." See ROB 12.

By contrast, adopting Ryan's approach would encourage attorneys for chapter 7 debtors to obtain substantial pre-petition retainers to serve as collateral for liens without which they would not be allowed by federal law to recover fees from the estate for post-petition services. The net result of such a scheme would be to reduce the amount available to pay creditors of the estate and valid administrative expenses, a result clearly contrary to the fundamental principles of the Bankruptcy Code. After all, as the Supreme Court noted in Lamie, section 327's requirement of trustee approval "advances the trustee's responsibility for preserving the estate" in the context of a Chapter 7 liquidation. Lamie, 526 U.S. at 537. A chapter 7 debtor does not administer or control the estate on behalf of creditors; a trustee does. Moreover, every dollar taken from the chapter 7 estate reduces the funds available for creditors. It is reasonable to prohibit the siphoning of finite assets in chapter 7 cases by preventing debtors from using estate funds to pay the bills of their personal attorneys for post-petition services that do not benefit the estate.

CONCLUSION

For these reasons, the United States Trustee respectfully asks that this court affirm the bankruptcy court's decision ordering turnover of Ryan's unearned retainer to the trustee.

JURISDICTIONAL STATEMENT

The bankruptcy court had jurisdiction under 28 U.S.C. §§ 157(a) and (b), and 1334(a) to issue its final order denying the United States Trustee's motion to dismiss the Debtor's chapter 7 bankruptcy case under 11 U.S.C. §§ 707(b)(1) and (b)(3)(B). The bankruptcy court issued its final order denying the United States Trustee's motion on October 15, 2009. See U.S. Trustee v. Cortez (In re Cortez), 457 F.3d 448, 453-54 (5th Cir. 2006) (an order denying a motion to dismiss a bankruptcy case is a final order under 28 U.S.C. § 158(d)). The United States Trustee filed a notice of appeal on October 23, 2009, which is timely under 28 U.S.C. §§ 158(a) and (c)(2). This Court has appellate jurisdiction under 28 U.S.C. § 158(a)(1), a statutory provision under which district courts have jurisdiction to hear appeals from final judgments, orders, and decrees of bankruptcy judges.

STANDARD OF REVIEW

On appeal "conclusions of law are reviewed de novo, findings of fact are reviewed for clear error, and mixed questions of law and fact are reviewed de novo." Century Indem. Co. v. Nat'l Gypsum Co. Settlement Trust (In re Nat'l Gypsum Co.), 208 F. 3d 498, 504 (5th Cir. 2000).

In determining whether providing chapter 7 relief to a debtor would constitute abuse under 11 U.S.C. § 707(b)(3), bankruptcy courts apply a "totality of the circumstances" test to the debtor's financial situation. See 11 U.S.C. § 707(b)(3)(B). The "totality of the circumstances" test is a "fact-intensive determination" which is reviewed on appeal for abuse of discretion. Cf. Hebbring v. U.S. Trustee, 463 F.3d 902, 905 (9th Cir. 2006) (pre-2005 Act case).

In this case, the bankruptcy court's interpretations of 11 U.S.C. §§ 707(b)(1) and 707(b)(3)(A) raise both issues of law, subject to de novo review, and issues concerning whether the bankruptcy court abused its discretion in failing to grant the relief requested by the United States Trustee.

STATEMENT OF THE ISSUES PRESENTED

(1) Whether the Bankruptcy Court erred as a matter of law by utilizing the standard of "substantial abuse" rather than the correct standard of mere "abuse" in failing to dismiss the Debtor's case pursuant to 11 U.S.C. § 707(b)(3)(B)?

(2) Whether the Bankruptcy Court erred as a matter of law by requiring the United States Trustee to prove that the Debtor had a current ability to repay her unsecured creditors through a chapter 13 plan in order to dismiss the Debtor's case for abuse under section 707(b)(3)(B)?

(3) Whether the Bankruptcy Court abused its discretion in failing to grant the relief requested by the United States Trustee, and by failing to consider the United States Trustee's alternative "bad faith" argument under 11 U.S.C. § 707(b)(3)(A)?

STATEMENT OF THE CASE

On April 20, 2009, the Debtor sought chapter 7 bankruptcy relief in the United States Bankruptcy Court for the Northern District of Texas. See 11 U.S.C. § 701 et seq. On July 20, 2009, the United States Trustee[1] filed a motion to dismiss the Debtor's case for abuse under 11 U.S.C. §§ 707(b)(1) and (b)(3)(B). On August 31, 2009, the Debtor filed a response to the motion to dismiss. On October 15, 2009, the bankruptcy court entered an order denying the United States Trustee's motion to dismiss. This appeal followed.

STATUTORY FRAMEWORK

I. Relief Available to Individual Debtors

The Bankruptcy Code establishes two primary forms of bankruptcy relief for individual debtors – chapter 7 and chapter 13. Under chapter 7, "an individual debtor receives an immediate unconditional discharge of personal liability for certain debts in exchange for relinquishing his or her nonexempt assets to a bankruptcy trustee for liquidation and distribution to creditors." H.R. Rep. 109-31(I), at 10 (2005), as reprinted in 2005 U.S.C.C.A.N. 88, 97; see 11 U.S.C. §§ 701-727. Under chapter 13, "a debtor commits to repay some portion of his or her financial obligations" over a specified period "in exchange for retaining nonexempt assets and receiving a broader discharge of debt than is available under chapter 7." H.R. Rep. 109-31(I), at 10; see 11 U.S.C. §§ 1321-1330.

The difference between chapter 7 and 13 is dramatic. In chapter 7 cases, creditors may look solely to debtors' pre-bankruptcy, non-exempt assets for payment. See 11 U.S.C. § 541 (limiting property of the estate to debtors' pre-petition assets). Debtors' post-bankruptcy income is not subject to creditor claims. Id. Subject to narrow exceptions, debtors receive a complete discharge of all their pre-petition debts in a chapter 7 case. See 11 U.S.C. § 727(b).

Chapter 13 is different because debtors must use post-petition income to fund a chapter 13 payment plan. See 11 U.S.C. § 1306(a)(2) (property of the bankruptcy estate also includes post-petition income); 11 U.S.C. § 1325(b) (projected disposable income applied to make payments to unsecured creditors). In chapter 13, debtors typically receive a discharge only after they have completed their chapter 13 repayment plans. See 11 U.S.C. §§ 1328(a) and (c); see also 11 U.S.C. § 1328(b) (listing exceptions to this rule).

II. Former Section 707(b): Dismissal of Chapter 7 Cases for Substantial Abuse

Since 1984, Congress has enacted a series of tests that have allowed courts to dismiss chapter 7 cases to prevent unjust discharge of pre-petition debts. In 1984, Congress amended chapter 7 to permit dismissal of a chapter 7 bankruptcy petition under § 707(b) if a court found "substantial abuse." Bankruptcy Amendments and Federal Judgeship Act of 1984, Pub. L. No. 98-353, § 312, 98 Stat. 333, 335. Congress enacted this amendment to respond "to concerns that some debtors who could easily pay their creditors might resort to chapter 7 to avoid their obligations." H.R. Rep. 109-31(I), at 12 (2005), reprinted in 2005 U.S.C.C.A.N. 88, 98 (internal quotation omitted). Two years later, Congress again amended this provision to authorize the United States Trustee to seek dismissal of chapter 7 petitions for "substantial abuse." Bankruptcy Judges, United States Trustees, and Family Farmer Bankruptcy Act of 1986, Pub. L. No. 99-554, § 219, 100 Stat. 3088, 3101.

After twenty-years' experience, Congress found that these amendments were insufficient to control abuse of chapter 7. Congress identified, among other problems, the "inherent[] vague[ness]" of the "substantial abuse" standard, which led to disagreement in the courts about whether a debtor's ability to repay a significant portion of his or her debts out of future income constitutes substantial abuse, meriting dismissal. H.R. Rep. 109-31(I), at 12. Another problem was that the Bankruptcy Code established "a presumption in favor of granting the relief requested by the debtor," which influenced courts' decisions whether to find substantial abuse. 11 U.S.C. § 707(b) (2000 suppl. 4); See H.R. Rep. 109-31(I), at 12.

Responding to these perceived shortcomings of the Bankruptcy Code, Congress held hearings over five years to identify what reforms it could adopt "to ensure that debtors repay creditors the maximum they can afford." H.R. Rep. 109-31(I), at 2, 12. The Bankruptcy Abuse Prevention and Consumer Protection Act of 2005 (the "2005 Act"), Pub. L. No. 109-8, 119 Stat. 23, implemented the reforms Congress identified.

III. Changes Under the 2005 Act

On October 17, 2005, most provisions of the 2005 Act took effect, thereby implementing significant changes to the Bankruptcy Code. In enacting the 2005 Act, Congress:

> concluded that the complete overhaul of § 707(b) was necessary, with clear, non discretionary requirements imposed on the bankruptcy court to reject the notion that debtors were entitled to a discharge as a matter of right without regard to their ability to pay and to assure that in practice those with the ability to pay would not be entitled to chapter 7 relief.

146 Cong. Rec. S11700 (December 7, 2000), reprinted in http://www.gpoaccess.gov/crecord/retrieve.html; see also 151 Cong. Rec. S1856 (Mar. 1, 2005). Congress enacted the section 707(b) amendments to curb bankruptcy abuse by, inter alia, dismissing chapter 7 cases filed by debtors seeking to have their debts discharged despite having the ability to repay their creditors. See 151 Cong. Rec. S1856 (Mar. 1, 2005) (statement of Sen. Charles Grassley).[2] To effectuate this goal, Congress took four important steps.

First, Congress repealed the statutory presumption in favor of granting relief to the debtor. Compare 11 U.S.C. § 707(b) (1986) with 11 U.S.C. § 707(b) (2005).

Second, Congress lowered the standard for dismissal under all subsections of new section 707(b) from "substantial abuse" to mere "abuse." See 11 U.S.C. § 707(b)(1) (cases are now dismissed for "abuse"); 11 U.S.C. § 707(b)(2) (subjecting cases to dismissal for abuse); 11 U.S.C. § 707(b)(3) (same).

[2] In his statement, Senator Grassley explained the purpose behind the section 707(b) amendments as follows: "[i]t is this simple: if repayment is possible, then [a debtor] will be channeled into chapter 13 of the Bankruptcy Code which requires people to repay a portion of their debt. . . ." Id.

Third, Congress authorized dismissal when a mathematical formula, known as the "means test," yields monthly disposable income that exceeds a statutory threshold. See 11 U.S.C. § 707(b)(2).

Fourth, Congress enacted new § 707(b)(3). This section allows courts to dismiss cases based upon either a debtor's bad faith, see 11 U.S.C. § 707(b)(3)(A), or the totality of a debtor's financial circumstances, see 11 U.S.C. § 707(b)(3)(B). Thus, even if a presumption of abuse does not arise or is rebutted under section 707(b)(2), a chapter 7 petition should still be dismissed for abuse under section 707(b)(3) when "bad faith" is demonstrated or "the totality of the circumstances . . . of the debtor's financial situation demonstrates abuse." 11 U.S.C. § 707(b)(3)(A) and (B); In re Ross-Tousey, 549 F.3d 1148, 1161-62 (7th Cir. 2008).

Sections 707(b)(3)(A) and (B) of the 2005 Act represent a significant departure from old section 707(b) because they clarify that cases can be dismissed either solely for misconduct, under subsection 707(b)(3)(A), or solely based upon the totality of the circumstances of a debtor's financial situation, under section 707(b)(3)(B).

FACTUAL BACKGROUND

I. Events Leading Up to the Debtor's Bankruptcy Filing

Approximately one year prior to filing for bankruptcy, the Debtor received a $12,170 income tax refund for 2007. See Transcript of Hearing, October 7, 2009 (hereinafter "Tr.")[3] Tr.31:5-15 [UST Exhibit 5, UST Exhibit 10]. In the same month, the Debtor had gastric bypass surgery. See Tr. 64:2-9 [UST Exhibit 23]. The Debtor's out of pocket expense for this surgery was $2,500. See Tr. 123:1-12. After shrinking from a size 16 to a size 0, the Debtor spent over $450 to alter her knee length mink coat. See Tr. 17:10-23, 104:22-105:11.

In May 2008, the Debtor borrowed $35,000 from her 401k account.[4] See Tr. 56:4-9 [UST Exhibit 15]. The Debtor used the loan to pay for general household expenses and her daughter's private school tuition See Tr. 40:24-41:11. A week after taking out the loan, the Debtor put a down payment on a summer vacation to Destin, Florida. See Tr. 65:10-19 [UST Exhibit 22]. That same month, the Debtor also charged $950 to a credit card for her daughter's summer camp expense. See Tr. 65:2-6 [UST Exhibit 22].

In August 2008, the Debtor and her daughter drove to Destin, Florida for a week long vacation, stopping in New Orleans on the return trip. See Tr. 42:17-22. The Debtor charged a substantial portion of this trip on her credit cards, including the condominium rental, hotel charges, and activities. See Tr. 43:15-20, 66:15-68:16 [UST Exhibit 23].

In September 2008, the Debtor leased a new BMW 328i as a birthday gift for her sixteen year old daughter, creating an additional monthly household expense of $484.79. See Appellant R. No. 39, Tr. 69:24-70:8 [Schedule J, UST Exhibit 23]. According to the Debtor, she "didn't even think buying her a car would be an issue." See Tr. 111:2-3.

In the same month, the Debtor changed her gym membership from one costing approximately $108 per month to one costing $200 per month. See Tr. 71:31-72:15, 121:12-122:8.

At approximately the same time, the Debtor's sister informed her that she was returning to school and would be unable to assist with the mortgage payments on a rental property located in Rhode Island . See Tr. 28:9-21, 120:18-22. The Debtor and her sister had purchased the rental property for $310,000 in 2005. See Appellant R. No. 21, Tr. 117:4-5, 14:2-9 [Schedule A]. Although the Debtor is solely liable for the mortgage on the property, she and her sister split the cost of expenses incurred outside of the rental income. See Tr. 14:10-14, 78:11-14, 117:6-13. The Debtor never made a profit on this rental property, and calculated losses on the property totaling $11,104 in 2007, and $23,040 in 2008. See Tr. 120:2-5, 130:22-131:3. However, the Debtor received an income tax refund in the amount of $12,170 for 2007, and $9,930 for 2008, in part due to the losses she sustained from the rental property. See Tr. 120:10-12 [UST Exhibit 5]. The October 2008 mortgage payment was the final payment the Debtor made on the rental property.[5] See Tr. 14:12-14, 120:23-121:5.

The Debtor continued to use her credit cards, even after learning her sister would no longer make rental payments and after admitting her financial problems associated with the rental property. See Tr. 72:16-74:24 [UST Exhibit 23]. In October 2008, the Debtor took out a cash advance from a credit card in the amount of $11,800, and used the money for routine household expenses and for other credit card payments. See Tr. 44:17-45:20 [UST Exhibit 22].

Between November 8th and November 16th, 2008, the Debtor spent over $700 in clothing purchases for her daughter at designer boutiques such as Juicy Couture, True Religion and Ed Hardy. See Tr. 72:22-73:12 [UST Exhibit 23].

[5] During the course of the Debtor's bankruptcy, JP Morgan Chase moved to lift the bankruptcy stay as to the Rhode Island property in order to foreclose on its lien. See Appellant R. No. 71[Docket Sheet, UST Exhibit 1, Motion for Relief From Stay]. The Debtor and JP Morgan Chase agreed to lift the stay and to allow the lender to foreclose. See Appellant R. No. 114 [Agreed Order Lifting Stay]. Thus, the Debtor is no longer liable for making payments on the Rhode Island property. See Appellant R. No. 114 [Agreed Order Lifting Stay].

The Debtor and her daughter also traveled to Phoenix, Arizona for Thanksgiving to visit a sick friend. See Tr. 43:6-7, 127:14-20.

On December 15, 2008, the Debtor learned she would not be receiving a bonus. See Tr. 34:21-23. The Debtor contends that she based her financial decisions for the previous year on the assumption that she would be receiving the additional, discretionary bonus money. See Tr. 35:1-8. Thus, after failing to receive her anticipated bonus, the Debtor acknowledged she had financial problems. See Tr. 146:15-18.

However, rather than reducing her expenses, the Debtor continued to increase her expenditures as follows:

- From December 17, 2008 through January 13, 2009, the Debtor used her credit card to purchase $1,644.95 in consumer goods from vendors such as overstock.com, the Buckle, and Diesel. See Tr. 75:4-18.
- From December 17, 2008 through December 31, 2008, the Debtor took out $3,000 in cash advances on her credit cards. See Tr. 47:8-18.
- In December 2008, the Debtor traveled with her daughter to Rhode Island. See Tr. 43:2-5 [UST Exhibit 11].
- From January 1, 2009 through April 16, 2009, the Debtor incurred $7,471.35 in purchases and cash advances on her credit cards for consumer goods and services. See Tr. 75:18-77:8 [UST Exhibit 23].

II. The Debtor's Bankruptcy Filing

On April 20, 2009, the Debtor filed a voluntary petition for relief under the liquidation provisions of chapter 7 of the Bankruptcy Code in the United States Bankruptcy Court for the Northern District of Texas. See Appellant R. No. 4, 10 [Docket Sheet, Petition]. The Debtor is a 51 year old manager for Sabre Holdings (Travelocity). See Appellant R. No. 38, Tr. 7:15-8:2 [Schedule I]. She has a Bachelors Degree in Architecture, a Bachelors Degree in Psychology, and an Associates Degree in Interior Design. See Tr. 8:9-11. She is not married and has one dependent, a sixteen year old daughter. See Appellant R. No. 38 [See Schedule I].

The Debtor's yearly salary totals $123,000, which is more than double the $54,908 median income for a household of two in Texas. See Appellant R. No. 63, Tr. 96:1-2 [UST Exhibit 3, Means Test]. The Debtor's gross monthly income totals $9,886.00. See Appellant R. No. 38, Tr. 24:12-17 [Schedule I]. In addition to her base salary, the Debtor is eligible for a bonus of up to 25% of her salary. See Tr. 34:24-35:8. The Debtor has worked at Sabre Holdings since 1997, although she left the company from 2000-2004 for another employment opportunity. See Tr. 8:2-8. She has been consistently employed over the past five years. See Tr. 7:20-24.

The Debtor's voluntary contributions to her retirement accounts and the repayment of a 401k loan total $1,652.49 per month. See Appellant R. No. 38 [Schedule I]. With respect to the former, the Debtor contributes $988.65, or 10% of her gross monthly income, to her retirement accounts, and receives matching contributions from her employer to that account totaling 6% of her contributions. See Appellant R. No. 38, Tr. 24:18-23, 25:4-8 [Schedule I]. With respect to the latter, the Debtor repays herself $663.84 per month for a 401k loan, for which payments are due through June 4, 2013. See Appellant R. No. 38, Tr. 24:24-25:3 [Schedule I; UST Exhibit 15]. The Debtor did not reduce her retirement contributions before or after bankruptcy. See Tr. 24:18-25:3, 33:5-6. As of the date of filing, the Debtor had $158,669.48 in her retirement accounts, but wants at least one million dollars in that account for retirement. See Appellant R. No. 23-24, Tr. 103:2-12 [Schedule B].

The Debtor lives with her sixteen year old daughter in a 3,800 square foot home, located in Flower Mound, Texas, valued at $500,000. See Appellant R. No. 21, Tr. 10:15-16, 13:7-11 [Schedule A]. She custom built this home in 2006. See Tr. 11:24-12:12. The home contains four bedrooms, three bathrooms, a pool, three car garage, outdoor patio and grill and a media room. See Tr. 10:15-24 [UST Exhibit 27].

The Debtor's total monthly mortgage expense totals $3,888.76, which consists of a first mortgage payment of $3,155, and a second mortgage payment of $733.76. See Appellant R. No. 39 [Schedule J]. The utility costs associated with the home total $400 per month. See Appellant R. No. 39 [Schedule J]. By comparison, the IRS Local Standard for Housing and Utilities for the Debtor's household size in the county in which the Debtor lives was $1,769 as of October 6, 2009.[6] See Tr. 84:5-11 [See UST Exhibit 26]. Thus, the Debtor's total housing expense is more than double the IRS Standard.

Prior to moving to her custom built home, the Debtor owned a home that sold in April 2006 for $257,245.01. See Appellant R. No. 45, Tr. 30:1-6 [Statement of Financial Affairs]. The monthly mortgage payment for the Debtor's prior home was $2,400, or approximately 40% less than the Debtor's current mortgage payment. See Appellant R. No. 39, Tr. 30:13-18 [Schedule I]. When the Debtor's former home was sold, the Debtor used the $41,359.23 in net proceeds to: (a) pay off the loan on her 2003 BMW X5; and (b) use as a down payment on her new home. See Appellant R. No. 45, Tr. 30:7-12 [Statement of Financial Affairs].

At the time she filed for bankruptcy, the Debtor stated her intention to retain her custom built Flower Mound home and reaffirm the debt associated with that home. See Appellant R. No. 52 [Statement of Intent]. However, she has never reaffirmed the debt on this property. See [6] This amount covers both housing and attendant costs such as gas and electricity. See [UST Exhibit 26].

Appellant R. No. 4-9 [See Docket Sheet]. Instead, she listed the home for sale with a realtor for $524,000. See Tr. 9:18-10:8, Tr. 13:12-18 [UST Exhibit 27].

The Debtor currently leases two vehicles, a 2008 BMW 528i and a 2008 BMW 328i, at a cost of $1,124.04 per month. See Appellant R. No. 39 [See Schedule B]. The Debtor spends $639.25 per month on the 528i and $484.79 per month on the 328i. See Appellant R. No. 39, Tr. 27:17-20, 28:2-8 [Schedule J]. The IRS Local Standard transportation ownership/lease expense for one vehicle is $489, and $978 for two vehicles. See Appellant R. No. 64-65 [UST Exhibit 3, Means Test]. Thus, the Debtor's total monthly vehicle ownership expenses exceed this amount by $146.04. See Appellant R. No. 39 [Schedule J]. The Debtor drives the new 528i while her sixteen year old daughter drives the new 328i. See Tr. 20:18-21:15. As previously discussed, the 328i was a birthday present for her daughter's sixteenth birthday. See Tr. 21:19-24. The Debtor pays for most of the other costs associated with the vehicles, including the insurance premiums for both vehicles and repairs to her daughter's vehicle after car accidents. See Tr. 21:25-22:5 . The only vehicle expense her daughter covers is gas. See Tr. 22:2-3.

In total, the Debtor's total scheduled monthly expenses (i.e., $8,395.76) exceed her monthly net income (i.e., $6,299.93) by $2,095.83 per month. See Appellant R. No. 39 [Schedule J]. However, the Debtor failed to schedule several routine monthly expenses, including those for her housekeeper and for manicure and haircut expenses for her and her daughter. See Tr. 27:3-16, 28:22-29:14.

The Debtor's bankruptcy schedules reflect total assets of $1,033,190.81. See Appellant R. No. 19 [Summary of Schedules]. Those assets include the Debtor's custom built Flower Mound home and her Rhode Island rental property. See Appellant R. No. 21 [Schedule A]. Those assets also include the following personal property: (a) household goods which the Debtor valued on her schedules at $3,960; (b) retirement accounts which the Debtor valued on her schedules at $158,669.48; (c) clothing and personal effects which the Debtor valued on her schedules at $950; (d) furs which the Debtor valued on her schedules at $350; (e) pictures and art objects which the Debtor valued on her schedules at $200; and (f) jewelry which the Debtor valued on her schedules at $880. See Appellant R. No. 22-26 [Schedule B]. By comparison, the insured value of the Debtor's art, fur, and jewelry totals $2,390, $6,000, and $8,120 respectively. See Appellant R. No. 122 [Motion to Dismiss at ¶15, UST Exhibit 20]. Thus, the discrepancy between the Debtor's valuations of certain personal property listed on the Debtor's bankruptcy schedules and what the Debtor actually insured that property for was over $15,000. See Appellant R. No. 122 [Motion to Dismiss at ¶15].

The Debtor's bankruptcy schedules reflect total liabilities of $905,802. See Appellant R. No. 19 [Summary of Schedules]. The Debtor admits her liabilities are primarily consumer debt. See Appellant R. No. 10, 122, 139 [Petition, UST Motion at ¶ 14; Debtor's Response at ¶ 14]. The Debtor's schedules reflect $833,260.46 in secured debt, and $72,541.68 in unsecured debt. See Appellant R. No. 19, 30-31, 33-35 [Schedules D and F]. The Debtor's unsecured debt consists primarily of credit card charges for entertainment, shopping and various consumer goods and services. See Tr. 24:9-11. These charges include purchases for designer clothing for her daughter at luxury boutiques such as Ed Hardy and Juicy Couture. See Tr. 72:22-73:13, 89:20-90:5.

III. The Debtor's Post-Bankruptcy Filing Activities

Since filing for bankruptcy, the Debtor continues to use at least four credit cards.[7] See

---

[7] These cards had zero balances at the time of the Debtor's bankruptcy filing and therefore were not included as part of the Debtor's bankruptcy filing. See Tr. 125:18-126:4.

Tr. 22:10-23:23, 126:5-19. For example, from April 20, 2009, the date she filed her bankruptcy petition, until May 4, 2009, the date she paid her Discover Card bill, the Debtor charged $786 and paid that amount off in full. See Tr. 52:3-12 [UST Exhibit 13].

Further, following the filing of her bankruptcy petition, the Debtor withdrew $15,000 from her JP Morgan Chase 401(k) retirement accounts to pay her daughter's 2009-2010 tuition. See Tr. 20:1-9, 56:20-57:2. This withdrawal left the Debtor with approximately $143,669 in retirement savings. See Tr. 52:3-12.

Finally, in May 2009, the month after filing for bankruptcy, the Debtor transferred $500 from her personal bank account into her daughter's bank account. See Tr. 55:12-56:3 [UST Exhibit 14].

IV. The Motion to Dismiss and the Bankruptcy Court's Ruling

On July 20, 2009, the United States Trustee timely filed his motion to dismiss the Debtor's case as an abuse under 11 U.S.C. §§ 707(b)(1), (b)(3)(A), and (b)(3)(B). See Appellant R. No. 119 [United States Trustee Mot. To Dismiss at 1]. The Debtor opposed the relief requested by the United States Trustee. See Appellant R. No. 136 [Debtor's Response to United States Trustee Mot. To Dismiss]. The United States Trustee subsequently replied to the Debtor's Response, providing additional information regarding the totality of the circumstances of the Debtor's financial situation. See Appellant R. No. 155 [UST Reply].

On October 7, 2009, the bankruptcy court held a hearing on the motion to dismiss. See Appellant R. No. 7 [Docket Sheet]. In its ruling, the bankruptcy court utilized the old standard of "substantial abuse" set forth under the old section 707(b) as opposed to the new standard of "abuse" set forth under the 2005 Act. See Transcript of Ruling at 11:18-25 (hereinafter "Tr. Ruling"). Further, the bankruptcy court found that because the Debtor might not be required to make payments to her unsecured creditors under a hypothetical chapter 13 plan, the Debtor did not have an ability to repay her creditors. See Tr. Ruling 3:7-24. Finally, the bankruptcy court completely failed to opine on the reasonableness of the Debtor's retirement contributions. See Tr. Ruling.

More specifically, the bankruptcy court found that:

- The Debtor's housing and car expenses were not excessive because the Debtor purchased theses items "at a time when she had the ability to do so, and these were well within her means." See Tr. Ruling at 4:23-25.
- The Debtor was "living off cash flow" instead of off a budget, her expenses were not excessive. See Tr. Ruling at 7:24-8:8.
- Because it was the Debtor's habit to incur high amounts of consumer debt, she was "emotionally unfit to stop it, and she became complicit in her daughter's spending habits." See Tr. Ruling 11:12-17.
- The Debtor's spending habits were not "the type of mentality Congress was trying to address when it instructed courts to dismiss cases for substantial abuse." See Tr. Ruling 11:17-21.

Ultimately, the bankruptcy court entered an order denying the United States Trustee's motion to dismiss, and the United States Trustee now appeals that decision. See Appellant R. No. 1-2, 3 [Order Denying Motion; Notice of Appeal].

SUMMARY OF THE ARGUMENT

The bankruptcy court's order dismissing the Debtors' chapter 7 petition should be reversed and remanded on any of four alternative bases:

First, the bankruptcy court committed an error of law by applying the incorrect standard for dismissal under new bankruptcy section 707(b)(3)(B). By utilizing the pre-2005 Act standard of "substantial abuse" rather than the correct post-2005 Act standard of "abuse" the bankruptcy court committed an error of law. This case should be remanded so the court can evaluate the case under the proper legal standard.

Second, the bankruptcy court committed an error of law by requiring the United States Trustee to prove that the Debtor had a current ability to repay her unsecured creditors under a chapter 13 plan in order to dismiss the Debtor's case for abuse under section 707(b)(3)(B). Dismissal under section 707(b)(3)(B)'s totality of the financial circumstances test is not dependent on a debtor's ability to propose a viable payment plan under chapter 13. Instead, the default remedy for abuse under section 707(b)(3)(B) is dismissal.

Third, by failing to opine as to the reasonableness of the Debtor's $1,652.49 in monthly retirement related expenses, and $3,888.76 in monthly mortgage related expenses, the bankruptcy court abused its discretion in denying the United States Trustee's motion to dismiss. In section 707(b)(3)(B), Congress underscored its concern that chapter 7 be reserved only for debtors who truly cannot repay their creditors by mandating that courts utilize a totality of the financial circumstances test in determining abuse. By ignoring the Debtor's discretionary choice to devote approximately 26% of her net monthly income towards retirement related endeavors (i.e., $1,652.49/$6,299.93), and approximately 61% of her net monthly income towards the Flower Mound home she is actively seeking to sell and has not reaffirmed (i.e., $3,888.76/$6,299.93), the bankruptcy court abused its discretion in applying section 707(b)(3)(B)'s totality of the financial circumstances test.

Fourth, the bankruptcy court abused its discretion by failing to consider the United States Trustee's "bad faith" argument under new bankruptcy section 707(b)(3)(A). In addition to lowering the standard for abuse under section 707(b), the 2005 Act also created a new basis for dismissal under section 707(b)(3)(A) – "bad faith." The United States Trustee presented several examples of the Debtor's "bad faith" at trial, but the bankruptcy court's findings are silent on this subject. Accordingly, the bankruptcy court abused its discretion for this reason as well.

ARGUMENT

I. Because the Bankruptcy Court Committed an Error of Law by Utilizing the Pre-2005 Act Standard of "Substantial Abuse" Rather than the Correct Post-2005 Act Standard of "Abuse" this Court Should Reverse and Remand Congress enacted the 2005 Act to respond to an upward trend in consumer bankruptcy filings and concern that bankruptcy relief was "too readily available" and "sometimes used as a first resort, rather than a last resort." See Morse v. Rudler (In re Rudler), 576 F.3d. 37, 40 (1st Cir. 2009) (citing H.R. Rep. No. 109-31(I), at 4 (2005), reprinted in 2005 U.S.C.C.A.N. 88, 90). Correspondingly, the 2005 Act relaxed the standard for dismissal of a case under section 707(b). In re Rudler, 576 F.3d at 40; In re King, No. 08-41975, 2009 WL 62252 at *4 (Bankr. E. D. Tex. Jan. 6, 2009). Before the 2005 Act, a showing of "substantial abuse" was required for dismissal under section 707(b), and a presumption existed in favor of discharging the debtor. See In re King, 2009 WL 62252 at *4. Following the enactment of the 2005 Act, the word "substantial" was removed, and section 707(b) now allows for a case to be dismissed if granting a discharge will be a mere "abuse" of the code. See In re Rudler, 576 F.3d at 40; In re Meurer, No. 09-41446, 2009 WL 4263368 at *2 (Bankr. N.D. Tex. Nov. 18, 2009); 11 U.S.C. §§ 707(b)(1) and 707(b)(3)(B) (each referencing "abuse" as a threshold). In its ruling, the bankruptcy court stated that although the Debtor was "emotionally unfit" to stop her spending habits, "it just doesn't strike the Court that that is the type of mentality that Congress was trying to address when it instructed courts to dismiss cases for substantial abuse." See Tr. Ruling 11:14-25 (emphasis added). Thus, the bankruptcy court applied the wrong legal standard to its abuse analysis in this case.

Further, because the bankruptcy court's error affected the United States Trustee's substantive right to obtain the dismissal of this case using the proper legal standard (i.e., mere "abuse" not "substantial abuse"), its decision should be reversed. See 28 U.S.C. § 2111. As previously discussed, the United States Trustee established at trial: (a) that the Debtor's spending habits were unreasonable; (b) that the Debtor had an ability to repay her creditors; (c) that portions of the Debtor's schedules were inaccurate; and (d) that the Debtor's post-bankruptcy filing spending habits were unreasonable in light of her attempts to discharge all of her unsecured debts. See United States Trustee's Br., supra at 6-14. Prior to the enactment of the 2005 Act, most circuit decisions interpreting old section 707(b) opined that a debtor's ability to repay a meaningful portion of her debt, standing alone, justifies dismissal under the heightened "substantial abuse" test prescribed by the old statute. See, e.g., Stewart v. U.S. Trustee (In re Stewart), 175 F.3d 796, 809 (10th Cir. 1999); Kornfield v. Schwartz (In re Kornfield), 164 F.3d 778, 784 (2d Cir. 1999); First U.S.A. v. Lamanna (In re Lamanna), 153 F.3d 1, 4-5 (1st Cir. 1998); Zolg v. Kelly (In re Kelly), 841 F.2d 908, 914-15 (9th Cir. 1998); Stuart v. Koch (In re Koch), 109 F.3d 1285, 1288 (8th Cir. 1997); In re Krohn, 886 F.2d 123, 126 (6th Cir. 1989). No less is true under new section 707(b)(3)(B), in which Congress lowered the bar for dismissing cases. Accordingly, because the United States Trustee provided significant reasons to dismiss the Debtor's case beyond even what the old standard for abuse required, the bankruptcy court's error of law in this case was material, and reversal and remand for consideration of abuse under section 707(b)(3)(B)'s proper legal standard is appropriate.

II. Because an Ability to Repay in Chapter 13 is Not Determinative of Abuse in Chapter 7, the Bankruptcy Court Committed an Error of Law by Requiring the United States Trustee to Prove that the Debtor had a Current Ability to Repay Her Unsecured Creditors Under a Chapter 13 Plan in Order to Dismiss the Debtor's Case for Abuse Under Section 707(b)(3)(B)

In ruling, the bankruptcy court determined that it could not dismiss the Debtor's case for abuse because the Debtor had no disposable income available to creditors under a hypothetical chapter 13 means test. Tr .Ruling 3:14-24. This was an error of law. Nothing in the text of section 707(b)(3)(B) makes dismissal under the "totality of the financial circumstances" test dependent on a debtor's ability to propose a viable payment plan under chapter 13. The opposite is true. Under the statute, the default remedy for abuse under section 707(b)(3)(B)'s plain language is dismissal. See 11 U.S.C. § 707(b)(1) (referencing dismissal of case absent debtor's consent). Accordingly, because the bankruptcy court failed to recognize this important aspect of section 707(b)(1), its decision should be reversed and remanded for this reason as well.

Before the enactment of the 2005 Act, dismissal for abuse was not conditioned on eligibility for a chapter 13. In re Krohn, 886 F.2d 123, 127 (6th Cir. 1989) ("[I]nability to qualify under Chapter 13 should not be dispositive of whether there may be a § 707(b) dismissal, since there are other factors to be considered in deciding if a debtor is needy"). Following the enactment of the 2005 Act, this result has not changed. See In re Baeza, 398 B.R. 692, 697 (Bankr. E.D. Cal. 2008) ("[t]he question before the court is not whether the Debtor[] would be required to pay anything to [his] unsecured creditors in a chapter 13, but rather, whether [he has] the ability to pay something substantial to [his] unsecured creditors.") (emphasis in original). To the contrary, the default remedy for abuse under sections 707(b)(3)(A) and (B) is dismissal, not conversion. See 11 U.S.C. § 707(b)(1).

Were abuse under section 707(b)(3)(B) determined solely by evaluating whether a debtor could fund a hypothetical chapter 13 plan, the totality analysis required under section 707(b)(3)(B) would, in many cases, be superfluous to the means test analysis required by section 707(b)(2): each would determine abuse based solely on a debtor's income and expenses. Cf. Fed. R. Bankr. P. Official Form 22A (the chapter 7 means test form), and Fed. R. Bankr. P. Official Form 22C (the chapter 13 means test form).

Under new section 707(b)(3)(B), a court deciding whether to dismiss a chapter 7 case must consider whether "the totality of the circumstances (including whether the debtor seeks to reject a personal services contract and the financial need for such rejection as sought by the debtor) of the debtor's financial situation demonstrates abuse." 11 U.S.C. § 707(b)(3)(B). The dictionary defines "totality" to mean "the state of being total; entirety" Random House Dictionary. (2009) (emphasis added). Such a meaning should therefore be imparted to the term "totality" used in section 707(b)(2)(3)(B). See Bailey v. United States, 516 U.S. 137, 144-45 (1995) (turning to dictionary definition of a term to define its statutory meaning).

In this regard, section 707(b)(3)(B)'s totality of the financial circumstances test directs courts to look not only at income and expenses, but also to other factors, including assets, liabilities, and post-petition economic circumstances impacting a debtor's ability to repay. See John A.E. Pottow, The Totality of the Circumstances of the Debtor's Financial Situation in a Post-Means Test World, 71 Mo. L. Rev. 1053, 1066 (2006); see also U.S. Trustee v. Cortez (In re Cortez), 457 F.3d 448, 456 (5th Cir. 2006).

This comports with the chapter 13 process in general. In this Circuit, increases in income and reductions in expenses are to be considered as part of the chapter 13 plan confirmation process. See Nowlin v. Peake (In re Nowlin), 576 F.3d 258, 267 (5th Cir. 2009) (adopting a forward-looking, holistic approach to 11 U.S.C. § 1325(b)). Further, even after a chapter 13 plan is confirmed a debtor, a debtor's standing chapter 13 trustee, or a debtor's unsecured creditors may still seek modification of prescribed plan payments based on increases in income or reductions in expenses. See 11 U.S.C. § 1329(a)(1). Finally, under chapter 13 a bankruptcy court may deny confirmation of a chapter 13 plan or dismiss a chapter 13 case before a confirmed plan is completed when it finds that the plan has not been proposed in good faith or plan payments are not being made. See 11 U.S.C. §§ 1307(c) and 1325(a)(3). Thus, sections 1307(c), 1325(a), 1325(b), and 1329(a) all support the conclusion that a total reliance on a debtor's hypothetical ability to fund a chapter 13 plan, as the bankruptcy court engaged in below, is nothing less than speculative.

Because the United States Trustee provided significant reasons to dismiss the Debtor's case beyond merely the Debtor's hypothetical ability to fund a chapter 13 plan, see United States Trustee's Br., supra at 6-14, reversal and remand for consideration of abuse under the totality of the Debtor's financial circumstances is appropriate so the court below can apply the correct legal standard.

III. By Ignoring the Debtor's Choice to Devote Approximately 26% of Her Net Monthly Income Towards Retirement Related Endeavors, and Approximately 61% of Her +Net Monthly Income Towards the Flower Mound Home She is Actively Seeking to Sell and Has Not Reaffirmed, the Bankruptcy Court Abused its Discretion in Applying Section 707(b)(3)(B)'s Totality of the Financial Circumstances Test

Courts have long held that the totality of a debtor's financial circumstances is abusive if a debtor may reduce expenses without being deprived of basic necessities. See, e.g., In re Camp, 416 B.R. 304, 313 (Bankr. N.D. Tex. 2009) (noting that debtors "were enjoying a relatively affluent lifestyle" and that with the surrender of their prior home, "there must be some room in their budget to pay their existing secured creditors"); In re Wadsworth, 383 B.R. 330, 334

(Bankr. N.D. Ohio 2007) ("[D]ebtors may be expected to do some belt tightening, including, where necessary, foregoing the reaffirmation of those secured debts which are not reasonably necessary for the maintenance and support of the debtor and his family"). This belt-tightening notion, which pre-dates the 2005 Act, assumes a debtor may not be able to immediately repay unsecured creditors until that debtor has reduced unnecessary expenses. See In re Krohn, 886 F.2d at 128. Otherwise, permitting consumer debtors with unreasonable expenses to receive a chapter 7 discharge rewards "outrageous abusers of consumer credit, while denying to those with more moderate consumer debt the benefits of Chapter 7." Krohn, 886 F.2d at 127.

The intent behind the enactment of the 2005 Act bolsters this conclusion. The 2005 amendments were designed to "respond to many of the factors contributing to the increase in consumer bankruptcy filings, such as lack of personal financial accountability, the proliferation of serial filings, and the absence of effective oversight to eliminate abuse in the system." Perlin v. Hitachi Capital Am. Corp. (In re Perlin), 497 F.3d 364, 371 (3d Cir. 2007) (quoting H.R. Rep. No. 109-31(I), at 2). By mandating a "financial circumstances" test under the amended statute, Congress underscored its concern that chapter 7 be reserved for debtors who truly could not repay their creditors. See United States v. Am. Trucking Ass'ns, 310 U.S. 534, 543 (1940) (stating that the words of a statute are the best indication of its purpose). This is borne out by the legislative history to the 2005 Act which expressed that "debtors repay creditors the maximum they can afford." H.R. Rep. 109-31(I), at 2.

In this case, the Debtor and her daughter live an extravagant lifestyle. See United States Trustee's Br., supra at 6-14. Given this lifestyle, the United States Trustee challenged those expenses which were unnecessary. See Appellant R. No. 119 [UST Motion to Dismiss]. The challenged expenses included the Debtor's secured debt payments on her Flower Mound home and two vehicles, her retirement related contributions, designer clothing, vacations, housekeeping services, manicures, and gym trainers. While the Bankruptcy Court found many of these expenses "are simply not very defensible," see Tr. Ruling 9:7-9, it did not determine whether a reduction of the Debtor's unnecessary expenses would have freed up available income for her creditors. See Tr. Ruling 9:7-9. In particular, it failed to take into account the Debtor's choice to devote roughly 26% of her net income to retirement related endeavors, and approximately 61% of her net monthly income towards the Flower Mound home she is actively seeking to sell and has not reaffirmed. See Tr. Ruling. Accordingly, in light of the express purpose behind the 2005 Act (i.e., ensuring that debtors repay creditors the maximum they can afford), the bankruptcy court abused its discretion in finding that the Debtor's case did not constitute an abuse of chapter 7.

A. Retirement-Related Expenses

Under pre-2005 Act law, courts in this district excluded voluntary retirement-related expenses from a debtor's budget and included those contributions in disposable income. See, e.g., In re Rathbun, 309 B.R. 901, 905 (Bankr. N.D. Tex. 2004); In re Watkins, 216 B.R. 394, 396 (Bankr. N.D. Tex. 1997). Following the enactment of the 2005 Act, retirement-related expenses are still considered a factor under the totality of the circumstances test. See, e.g., In re Tucker, 389 B.R. 535, 539-541 (Bankr. N.D. Ohio 2008) (holding that voluntary retirement contributions must be evaluated in the context of a totality of the circumstances analysis, including the age of the debtor, the amount of the contribution, and overall budget); In re Lenton, 358 B.R. 651, 663-666 (Bankr. E.D. Penn. 2006) (holding that repayment of 401k loans can be considered under a totality of the circumstances analysis).[8]

While the bankruptcy court below failed to make any specific findings regarding the Debtor's retirement-related expenses, see Tr. Ruling, the record before the bankruptcy court demonstrated that the Debtor, who had $158,669 in retirement savings at the time her bankruptcy case was filed, continues to contribute $1,652.49 per month towards retirement-related expenses ($988.65 in retirement contributions and $663.84 in retirement loan repayments). See United States Trustee's Br., supra at 6-14. This amount constitutes approximately 26% of the Debtor's net monthly income. Id. At the same time, the Debtor, who is in good health and currently earns more than double the median income for a household size of two in Texas, can anticipate working for at least another fifteen years. Id. Further, the Debtor's last payment on her 401K loan is due on June 4, 2013. Id. Accordingly, in light of the substantial circuit law opining that a debtor's ability to repay a meaningful portion of her debt, standing alone, justified dismissal under the heightened "substantial abuse" test prescribed by the pre-2005 Act section 707(b), see,

[8] Those courts holding the opposite do so under the theory that because a court may not consider a debtor's retirement related contributions as disposable income under section 1325(b)(2) of the Bankruptcy Code, the same must be true under section 707(b)(3)(B)'s totality of the circumstances analysis. See, e.g., In re Phillips, 417 B.R. 30, 40-41 (Bankr. S.D. Ohio 2009) (cannot include voluntary retirement contributions and loan repayments in disposable income because of statutory changes wrought by 11 U.S.C. § 541(b)(7)); In re Mravik, 399 B.R. 202, 211 (Bankr. E.D. Wis. 2008) (cannot include retirement contributions in disposable income because specifically excluded by Congress under 11 U.S.C. § 541(b)(7)). This theory is misplaced because it does not conform to the language of the statute. The prohibition against considering retirement-related income under section 1325(b)(2)'s disposable income analysis finds its genesis in sections 541(b)(7) and 1322(f) of the Bankruptcy Code. See 11 U.S.C. §§ 541(b)(7) and 1322(f). However, sections 541(b)(7) and 1322(f), by their very language, only impact section 1325(b)(2)'s disposable income analysis, and there is no mention of section 707(b) – the statute at issue in this case – anywhere in those provisions. Id. Accordingly, the cases holding that retirement-related contributions cannot be considered in the context of a section 707(b) should not be relied upon.

e.g., Stewart, 175 F.3d at 809; Kornfield, 164 F.3d at 784; Lamanna, 153 F.3d at 4-5; Kelly, 841 F.2d at 914-15; Koch, 109 F.3d at 1288; Krohn, 886 F.2d at 126, and the Bankruptcy Code's diminished requirement for a finding of abuse under the post-2005 Act section 707(b), the bankruptcy court abused its discretion in failing to consider this substantial outlay as part of its section 707(b)(3)(B) analysis.[9]

B. Mortgage-Related Expenses

While secured debt payments – like the $3,888.76 in mortgage payments at issue in this case – are allowed, under certain conditions, in determining whether an evidentiary presumption of abuse arises under section 707(b)(2)'s means test, courts may still consider those payments in analyzing whether abuse is present under section 707(b)(3)(B). See In re Gonzalez, 388 B.R. 292, 302 n.5 (Bankr. S.D. Tex. 2008); In re Kaminski, 387 B.R. 190, 196 (Bankr. N.D. Ohio 2008).[10] Indeed, several courts, including Texas courts, have found that excessive secured debt

[9] Indeed, it would be extremely odd for the Fifth Circuit to mandate the consideration of such outlays as part of a section 1325(b)(2) projected disposable income analysis, see Nowlin, 576 F.3d at 267 (requiring consideration of income that would become available to debtor due to anticipated termination of 401K loan repayments), and not do the same as part of a section 707(b)(3)(B) analysis.

[10] Some courts have held that it is improper to consider the reasonableness of a debtor's mortgage payment as part of a section 707(b)(3)(B) analysis. See In re Johnson, 399 B.R. 72, 76-77 (Bankr. S.D. Cal. 2008) (concluding that to look at the reasonableness of a mortgage payment would contravene Congress' intent in legislating § 707(b)(2)); In re Jensen¸ 407 B.R. 378, 385-86 (Bankr. C.D. Cal. 2009) (concluding that court could not reach a result that is inconsistent with the implicit policies of the means test under section 707(b)(3)(B)); In re Dumas, No. 08-61190, 2009 WL 3856664, *4 (Bankr. E.D. Tex. November 17, 2009) (Congressional failure to include a limit on the allowable housing expense on a means test under § 707(b)(2)(A)(iii) prevented the court from determining whether the overall expense was reasonable). However, an analysis of the totality of a debtor's financial circumstances under section 707(b)(3)(B) requires consideration of a debtor's "actual income and expenses," notwithstanding what may or may not be allowed under section 707(b)(2)'s means test. See Ross-Tousey v. Neary (In re Ross-Tousey), 549 F.3d 1148, 1161-62 (7th Cir. 2008) (emphasis added). Furthermore, the Fifth Circuit has instructed that courts should be able to look to a debtor's future ability to repay his debts due to postpetition changes in circumstances.

expenses weighed in favor of dismissal under section 707(b)(3)(B). See, e.g., In re Castellaw, 401 B.R. 223, 228 (Bankr. N.D. Tex. 2009) (concluding, inter alia, that $5,100 per month mortgage payment for $1.2 million dollar, 3,600 square foot home was excessive); In re Meurer, No. 09-41446, 2009 WL 4263368, *4 (Bankr. N.D. Tex. November 18, 2009) (concluding, inter alia, that $4,072.72 per month mortgage payment for a $500,000 home was excessive); In re King, No. 08-41975, 2009 WL 62252, *4 (Bankr. E. D. Tex. January 9, 2009) (concluding, inter alia, that $3,008 per month in housing related expenses for $385,000, 3,407 square foot home was excessive); In re Talley, 389 B.R. 741, 745 (Bankr. W.D. Wash. 2008) (ordering dismissal under section 707(b)(3)(B) after finding that the debtor's mortgage payment was three times the local IRS standard); In re Oot, 368 B.R. 662, 669 (Bankr. N.D. Ohio 2007) (concluding that debtor's $4,000 per month mortgage payment is a luxury item and excessive under section 707(b)(3)(B)).

The bankruptcy court's findings regarding the reasonableness of the Debtor's mortgage payments are far from clear. While it stated that her "house is an expensive house and it's a large house for a household of two people," it also stated that "the fact that debtors have nice houses . . . is not the be-all and end-all of excessiveness." See Tr. Ruling 4:3-12. At the same time, the record shows that the Debtor's mortgage payments, exclusive of the associated costs for insurance and utility payments, are more than double the corresponding IRS local housing standard for the Debtor's locality; that the $3,888.76 in mortgage payments at issue in this case constitute roughly 61% of the Debtor's net monthly income; and that the Debtor has put her Flower Mound home on the market, and did not seek to reaffirm the debt on that home. See

See Cortez, 457 F.3d at 456. Accordingly, Johnson, Jensen, Dumas and the cases that follow them should not be relied upon.

Appellant R. No. 39-40 [UST Exhibit 26, UST Exhibit 27]. These facts demonstrate that the Debtor's budgeted mortgage-related expenses are excessive, and lend credence to the United States Trustee's position that there is a substantial likelihood that a future reduction in the Debtor's housing costs is likely. Accordingly, by failing to consider the true scope of these substantial expenditures as part of its section 707(b)(3)(B) analysis, the bankruptcy court abused its discretion for this reason as well.

IV. The Bankruptcy Court Abused its Discretion By Failing to Consider the United States Trustee's Alternative "Bad Faith" Argument Under New Bankruptcy Section 707(b)(3)(A).

As an alternative to his arguments under section 707(b)(3)(B)'s totality of the financial circumstances test, the United States Trustee also presented the bankruptcy court with facts and argument demonstrating that the Debtor's case should be dismissed under section 707(b)(3)(A)'s "bad faith" test. See Appellant R. No. 119 [United States Trustee Mot. To Dismiss at 1]; United States Trustee's Br., supra at 6-14. Because the bankruptcy court failed to even consider the United States Trustee's "bad faith" argument in reaching its decision, see Tr. Ruling, it abused its discretion for this reason as well.

CONCLUSION

For these reasons, the United States Trustee respectfully asks this Court to reverse the order entered by the bankruptcy court below and remand for further proceedings.

INTRODUCTION

In his opening brief, the United States Trustee established that the bankruptcy court committed an error of law when it did not dismiss Ms. Hilmes's chapter 7 bankruptcy case for abuse. In response, Ms. Hilmes attempts to defend the bankruptcy court's analysis by arguing that the totality of the circumstances test for dismissal under the Bankruptcy Abuse Prevention and Consumer Protection Act ("2005 Act") is essentially the same as before. This is incorrect – the 2005 Act fundamentally changed the approach that bankruptcy courts must take when determining if a chapter 7 case should be dismissed. In addition, Ms. Hilmes fundamentally misunderstands the Code when she argues that mortgage and retirement expenses are exempt from review under the totality of the financial situation analysis because they are not considered under the section 707(b)(2) means test. The other arguments Ms. Hilmes raises are equally unpersuasive.

As the United States Trustee has established, and Ms. Hilmes fails to rebut, Ms. Hilmes's pattern of lavish spending demonstrates she has the financial means to pay her creditors. Ms. Hilmes does not seriously dispute that she can change her lifestyle to set aside money to re-pay her creditors. To the contrary, she implicitly admits in her brief to this Court that she can pay something back. See Appellee Br. at 38.

It is undisputed that Ms. Hilmes receives a salary of over $120,000 per year to support herself and her daughter, Brittany. Record at 38, (Schedule I). By her own admission, Ms. Hilmes leases two late model BMW cars – a 528i for herself and a 328i for Brittany, whom she "has in the past overindulged." Appellee Br. at 14, Record at 25, (Schedule B). In 2006, Ms. Hilmes purchased a house with four bedrooms, three baths, and a media room that is worth approximately $500,000; she wanted that much space for two people to "accommodate Brittany and her friends." Id. at 18; UST Ex. 27. Despite being in debt, Ms. Hilmes joined a health club in 2008 that offered personal training because she "was not familiar with the ins and outs of exercising . . . ." Appellee Br. at 22.

Ms. Hilmes admits to these expenses and offers no plausible reason why they cannot be significantly reduced so that Ms. Hilmes can pay back her creditors. In other cases, it might be difficult to gauge whether the debtor's "financial situation" warrants dismissal. Not so here. The bankruptcy court erred when it failed to assess Ms. Hilmes's ability to pay her debts. The decision below should be reversed.

ARGUMENT

I. The Bankruptcy Court's Explicit Statement and Reasoning Demonstrates That it Applied the Superseded "Substantial Abuse" Standard, an Error of Law Warranting Reversal.

Contrary to Ms. Hilmes's argument, the bankruptcy court erred by applying a substantial abuse standard when determining whether Ms. Hilmes was entitled to a discharge. Appellee Br. at 30. The court explicitly mentioned "substantial abuse" – the incorrect standard – when assessing Ms. Hilmes's "habit to incur a lot of consumer debt." Opinion Tr. at 11. Specifically the court stated "it just doesn't strike the Court that that is the type of mentality that Congress was trying to address when it instructed courts to dismiss cases for substantial abuse . . . ." Id.

Ms. Hilmes argues that the bankruptcy judge simply misspoke when he invoked the "substantial abuse" standard during his ruling from the bench. Appellee Br. at 30. Even if she is correct, the decision must still be reversed because the court's analysis did not comport with any of the requirements of the 2005 Act. The reasoning of the decision, however, demonstrates that the bankruptcy court erroneously applied the superseded substantial abuse standard, warranting reversal.

Before the 2005 Act, courts in the Fifth Circuit determined substantial abuse under a totality of the circumstances review. U.S. Trustee v. Cortez (In re Cortez), 457 F.3d 448, 456 n.7 (5th Cir. 2006). In deciding whether to dismiss a case, courts emphasized ability to repay creditors but also included other factors such as good faith, fair dealing with creditors leading up to bankruptcy, and precipitating events leading up to the bankruptcy. Id. (citing In re Hill, 328 B.R. 490, 494-96 (Bankr. S.D. Tex. 2005)).

As Ms. Hilmes admits, before 2005 the courts engaged in value judgments to decide if, on balance, it would be equitable to grant the debtor a discharge. Appellee Br. at 10. The court in this case performed a classic pre-2005 substantial abuse totality of the circumstances analysis, weighing a variety of factors together. The court acknowledged that Ms. Hilmes's expenses were excessive: "[i]t is safe to say that many of the items that have been pointed out by Ms. Ziegler today are simply not very defensible items." Opinion Tr. at 9. It considered whether it was prudent for Ms. Hilmes to lease two BMWs, take three vacations in the six months before bankruptcy, and to live in a four-bedroom house. Id. It compared Ms. Hilmes's situation to those of other debtors and posited that Ms. Hilmes's spending was the product of societal pressure to over-spend. Id. at 8. It concluded that Ms. Hilmes's situation was a close-call, but on balance decided that she had been living on "the edge," incurring "a lot of consumer debt." Id. at

10. She had nevertheless paid her credit cards along the way, and therefore was not "carelessly and frivolously incurring more consumer debt," making her eligible for a fresh start through a chapter 7 discharge. Id. at 11-12. This consideration of a variety of factors ranging from Ms. Hilmes's spending patterns to her intent in accumulating debt reflects the ad hoc discretionary approach to determining eligibility for discharge that the 2005 Act was designed to curtail.

Even under the pre-2005 Act "substantial abuse" standard, the court erred in granting Ms. Hilmes a discharge. Under the previous version of section 707(b), lower courts in the Fifth Circuit followed the Sixth Circuit test to evaluate whether "substantial" abuse existed by considering simultaneously both the debtor's conduct and the debtor's ability partially to repay his debts outside bankruptcy or through a chapter 13 repayment plan. In re Krohn, 886 F.2d 123, 126 (6th Cir. 1989)("substantial abuse can be predicated upon either lack of honesty or want of need."); In re Cortez, 457 F.3d at 456 n. 7 (noting that lower courts in the Fifth Circuit have adopted the totality of circumstances approach). This was a wide-ranging analysis with ability to pay a central consideration. See Krohn, 886 F.2d at 126-27. Furthermore, a debtor cannot get a discharge simply because she would not be able to make a substantial repayment to creditors. Behlke v. Eisen (In re Behlke), 358 F.3d 429, 437 (6th Cir. 2004). Ms. Hilmes has not demonstrated any financial need and can pay something back to her creditors. Under any standard, she is not entitled to a discharge.

A. The bankruptcy court failed to conduct the analysis required under 11 U.S.C. 707(b)(3), an error of law requiring reversal and remand.

The court below erred as a matter of law in performing that pre-2005 Act classic substantial abuse totality of the circumstances analysis. It was error because the 2005 Act "produced a sea change." Egebjerg v. Anderson (In re Egebjerg), 574 F.3d 1045, 1048 (9th Cir. 2009). The statutory presumption favoring chapter 7 relief is gone and the emphasis is on repaying creditors as much as possible. Id. (citing H.R.Rep. No. 109-31, pt. 1 at 2 (2005), reprinted in 2005 U.S.C.C.A.N. 88, 89.). Even if the bankruptcy court tried to apply the 2005 Act, it did so incorrectly for the reasons outlined below.

The court failed to analyze independently bad faith and ability to repay. Section 707(b)(3) now requires that a bankruptcy court conduct two separate analyses before granting discharge. Yuan v. McVay (In re Yuan), No. 1:09-cv-00833-SS, slip op. at 6 (W.D. Tex. Feb. 4, 2010). First, the court must determine if the debtor filed a petition in bad faith. 11 U.S.C. § 707(b)(3)(A). Second, the court must determine if the totality of the debtor's financial circumstances indicates that she can re-pay her creditors. 11 U.S.C. § 707(b)(3)(B). The second analysis requires consideration of a debtor's "actual income and expenses." Ross-Tousey v. Neary (In re Ross-Tousey), 549 F.3d 1148, 1161-62 (7th Cir. 2008). Sections 707(b)(3)(A) and (B) of the 2005 Act represent a significant departure from old section 707(b) because they clarify that cases can be dismissed either solely for misconduct, under subsection 707(b)(3)(A), or solely based upon the totality of the circumstances of a debtor's financial situation, under section 707(b)(3)(B).

In deciding whether a debtor has the ability to repay creditors under section 707(b)(3)(B), a court must look only at the totality of a debtor's financial circumstances, including whether a debtor may reduce expenses without being deprived of basic necessities. In re Camp, 416 B.R. 304, 312 (Bankr. N.D. Tex. 2009). Under section 707(b)(3)(B), courts must consider the debtor's assets, liabilities, expenses, and expected future income, and whether any of the debtor's obligations are secured by unnecessary luxury goods: in short, financial factors that are relevant to the determination of the debtor's ability to pay creditors. In re Wolf, 390 B.R. 825, 833 (Bankr. D.S.C. 2008) ("[t]he plain meaning of "financial situation" must necessarily include the debtor's ability to pay creditors"); see In re Yuan, slip op. at 5.

In an opinion issued on February 4, 2010, Judge Sparks of the Western District of Texas recognized that the 2005 Act represents a "significant departure" from the old statute and requires rigorous analysis of the debtor's ability to repay. In re Yuan, slip op. at 5 (copy attached). Judge Sparks affirmed dismissal of the debtors' chapter 7 case because Mr. Yuan wished to pay the mortgage on his parents' house in Colorado and rent an apartment in a luxury high-rise in downtown Austin rather than repay his substantial credit card debt. Id. at 8 ("Here the debtors would be able to repay their creditors, even if Ms. Eichhorst's [Mr. Yuan's wife] continued unemployment, were they not spending so much in rent."). Judge Sparks dismissed the case even though the debtors were honest and even though they faced financial difficulties. Id. at 9. He dismissed the case because the 2005 Act does not allow debtors to maintain a high-style standard of living when they can no longer afford it. Id.

In contrast, the bankruptcy court in this case would discharge debts Ms. Hilmes is able to substantially repay because "the Court sense[d] that she [Ms. Hilmes] was just emotionally unfit to stop it [consumer spending], and she became complicit in her daughter's spending habits, something she can no longer do." Opinion Tr. at 11-12. This was an error of law: the standard is whether the debtor's "financial circumstances" allow her to repay creditors; the debtor's intent when accumulating debt is irrelevant under 11 U.S.C. § 707(b)(3)(B). In re Yuan, slip op. at 7 (citing In re Zaporski, 366 B.R. 758, 770 (Bankr. E.D. Mich. 2007)).

The bankruptcy court compounded this error by failing to analyze Ms. Hilmes's "financial situation." 11 U.S.C. § 707(b)(3)(B). It did not consider her assets, her future earning potential, or changes she could make to her lifestyle to reduce her costs. The bankruptcy court did not consider Ms. Hilmes's actual financial situation but accepted at face value her assertion that a hypothetical chapter 13 plan would not result in a dividend for creditors as evidence that she could not repay her debts. Appellee Br. at 32.

This was an error of law because ability to fund a chapter 13 plan is not the governing standard for dismissing a chapter 7 petition. The Bankruptcy Code does not mention chapter 13 in section 707. Instead, section 707(b)(3) states that the court "must" conduct an independent review of a debtor's ability to repay creditors based on the totality of the financial circumstances, which includes consideration of all sources of income. This includes consideration of a debtor's future ability to repay creditors due to post-petition changes in circumstances. See Cortez, 457 F.3d at 456. Also relevant are future housing expenses and retirement loan repayment terms. The bankruptcy court did not address any of these factors. Instead, it excused Ms. Hilmes's pattern of lavish spending because "we have, as a society, basically done what the debtor has done here, and that is to say that in many instances, we've taken what are purely discretionary items and redefined those as necessary items in our lives, and gone out and lived as if they are in fact necessary." Opinion Tr. at 9. That is not the standard Congress established. This failure to consider whether Ms. Hilmes could pay back her creditors constitutes reversible error.

B. Ms. Hilmes is not entitled to a discharge because she can make payments to her creditors.

The bankruptcy court did not analyze whether Ms. Hilmes could reduce her expenses to help repay her creditors. In re Wadsworth, 383 B.R. 330, 334 (Bankr. N.D. Ohio 2007) ("[D]ebtors may be expected to do some belt tightening . . . ."). Ms. Hilmes does not indicate how she has reduced her expenses, except to note that she has given up her gym membership and that she shares clothes with her daughter. Appellee Br. at 22. Instead, the court improperly excused her from trying because "it was her habit to incur a lot of consumer debt. That was just the way she was." Opinion Tr. at 11. Common sense, however, dictates that allowing a debtor to keep two BMW cars, a four bedroom house, and to condone continued extravagant spending deprives creditors of funds that could be used to repay debts.

Ms. Hilmes makes approximately $120,000 per year to support a family of two. Tr. 96:1-2. By her own calculation, she spends $137.04 more per month on her two BMWs than the IRS allowance for two cars. Appellee Br. at 38. She has arranged for cosmetic breast surgery for her daughter for March 16, 2010 for which for which she has already put down $5,000. Id. at 23. Even after filing her bankruptcy petition, she has continued to shop at major department stores, a habit she could break. Tr. 14:13-15:25. Partial payment is enough to prevent discharge. In re Behlke, 358 F.3d at 437 (affirming dismissal for substantial abuse because debtors could repay 14-23% of their debts, depending on the length of the chapter 13 plan). Because Ms. Hilmes can repay her creditors at least partially, the bankruptcy court committed reversible error by determining that Ms. Hilmes was entitled to a discharge.

II. The Bankruptcy Court Also Abused its Discretion By Failing to Consider the United States Trustee's Alternative "Bad Faith" Argument Under Section 707(b)(3)(A).

The United States Trustee's motion sought dismissal under two independent grounds. The first ground was based upon the debtor's financial circumstances under section 707(b)(3)(B) Independent of that, the Trustee sought dismissal due to Ms. Hilmes's bad faith under section 707(b)(3)(A). See Appellant's Br. at 14, 27, Appellant R. No. 119 [United States Trustee Mot. To Dismiss at 1]. Ms. Hilmes maintains the bankruptcy court found the case was not an abusive filing based on bad faith. Appellee Br. at 13, 27, 33. This is incorrect.

The bankruptcy court limited its bad faith analysis to determining that Ms. Hilmes's testimony was credible without making an explicit finding as to whether the case was filed in bad faith. Tr. Ruling at 6:15-18. The bankruptcy court erred in not conducting an independent analysis of bad faith under section 707(b)(3)(A) that considered Ms. Hilmes's conduct both before and after the bankruptcy filing. See In re Hageney, ___ B.R.___, 2009 WL 5217674, *4, (Bankr. E.D. Wash. 2009), In re Honkomp, 416 B.R. 647, 649 (Bankr. N.D. Iowa 2009), In re Booker, 399 B.R. 662, 667 (Bankr. W.D. Mo. 2009). Ms. Hilmes admits that she took three vacations in the nine months before she filed for bankruptcy protection. Appellee Br. at 23-24. The United States Trustee established that she continued to make clothing purchases at major department stores even after she filed her chapter 7 petition. UST 14; Tr. 14:13-15:25. Failure to consider bad faith as an independent grounds for dismissal constitutes grounds for reversal.

See Krohn, 886 F.2d at 127 (affirming dismissal because of "a consistent pattern of living on credit or beyond the debtor's means" before and after filing a chapter 7 petition).

III. Ms. Hilmes's Justifications for the Bankruptcy Court's Decision to Grant Her a Discharge Ignore the Requirements of the 2005 Act.

A. The fact Ms. Hilmes passed the means test is irrelevant.

Ms. Hilmes's attempts to shield her full financial situation from scrutiny under section 707(b)(3)(B) are unavailing. Ms. Hilmes argues that because she passed the means test, the bankruptcy court did not abuse its discretion in granting a discharge. Appellee Br. at 33. That is incorrect.

The 2005 Act creates a two-step financial analysis for determining if a chapter 7 petition should be dismissed. The first is a mechanical calculation under § 707(b)(2), known as the "means test." The second is a subjective analysis under § 707(b)(3)(B). In re Yuan, slip op. at 6. Indeed, the Seventh Circuit squarely held in Ross-Tousey that passing the means test did not preclude dismissal under section 707(b)(3). Ross-Tousey, 549 F.3d at 1161-62.

The plain language of the 2005 Act demonstrates that the subsections of section 707(b) perform two distinct functions in determining whether a debtor is eligible for a discharge. The "means test," namely the calculations mandated by section 707(b)(2)(A)(i)-(iv), reflects congressional intent that there be an "easily applied formula" to create a presumption of abuse. In re Henebury, 361 B.R. 595, 603 (Bankr. S.D. Fla. 2007); see Appellee Br. at 33 ("mathematical formula"). "Passing the means test" merely means that the court will not "presume abuse exists;" it is not a finding of fact that the debtor is entitled to relief under chapter 7. 11 U.S.C. § 707(b)(2)(A)(i); In re Yuan, slip op. at 5-6 (means test does not create a "safe harbor"); In re Booker, 399 B.R. 662, 666 (Bankr. W.D. Mo. 2009) (stating that the results of the "means test" are "not dispositive").

The means test is an objective evaluation of a debtor's financial circumstances. Section 707(b)(3)(B) follows with a more subjective, flexible consideration of whether discharge is appropriate considering the financial circumstances. In re McGillis, 370 B.R. 720, 747 (Bankr. W.D. Mich. 2007). An expense that is allowed under the means tests may also provide the basis for dismissal under section 707(b)(3)(B).

For instance, the Seventh Circuit held that car payments that are allowed under section 707(b)(2) must also be reviewed under (b)(3)(B). Ross-Tousey, 549 F.3d at 1161 ("[p]ermitting a debtor to take the deduction . . . does not insulate his case from dismissal"). Even if there is no presumption of abuse, a bankruptcy court can still dismiss the case "either for bad faith, or based on the totality of circumstances, which can take into consideration a debtor's actual income and expenses." Id. at 1161-62. Passing the means test has no relevance to analysis of the debtor's finances under section 707(b)(3)(B). In re Yuan, slip op. at 6.

The majority of courts have rejected the Ms. Hilmes's theory that passing the means test limits any further consideration of her financial situation. In re Crink, 402 B.R. 159, 168-69 (Banrk. M.D.N.C. 2009) (citing 13 cases). First, the statute mandates that the court "shall" consider a debtor's financial condition and circumstances if the presumption of abuse does not arise as a result of the means test calculation. 11 U.S.C. § 707(b)(3); Reed v. Anderson (In re Reed),__B.R.__, No. 07-04357, 2009 WL 5227840, at *13 (C.D. Cal. Nov. 24, 2009). If Congress had intended that the means test foreclose further consideration of a debtor's ability to pay, it would not have required further analysis of petitions which passed that test. Instead, "a court must consider a debtor's actual debt-paying ability in ruling on a motion to dismiss based on abuse where the presumption does not arise or is rebutted." In re Mestemaker, 359 B.R. 849, 854-55 (Bankr. N.D. Ohio 2007). If Congress had intended to eliminate consideration of ability to pay, "it would have done so expressly or by explicit references to § 707(b)(2)(A)." In re Lenton, 358 B.R. 651, 663 (Bankr. E.D. Pa. 2006).

B. Ms Hilmes improperly wants to shield her mortgage payment and retirement funds from consideration of the totality of her financial circumstances analysis.

Ms. Hilmes claims her retirement related expenses are immune from review as a chapter 13 means test excludes retirement contributions from disposable income, but this is not persuasive. Appellee Br. at 39. No statutory language supports the theory that income that is excluded from calculation of a chapter 13 plan, or the chapter 7 means test, is automatically immune from the section 707(b)(3)(B) totality of the financial circumstances analysis. In addition, it is established law that retirement contributions maybe be included in disposable income. In re Taylor, 212 F.3d 395, 397 (8th Cir. 2000); In re Rathbun, 309 B.R. 901, 905 (Bankr. N.D. Tex. 2004); In re Watkins, 216 B.R. 394, 396 (Bankr. N.D. Tex. 1997). As the purpose of the 2005 Act was to make it harder for debtors to obtain chapter 7 discharges, this line of cases is still valid. In re Yuan, slip op. at 5.

Ms. Hilmes argues that because Congress failed to impose limits on the amount of secured debt payment in a chapter 13 or chapter 7 means test through section 707(b)(2), all payments for secured debt on housing expenses are inherently reasonable and a party in interest is precluded from determining whether a housing expense is excessive in the context of a totality of the circumstances analysis. Appellee Br. at 36-37. Mortgage payments, like retirement payments, are considered a part of the totality of the debtor's financial circumstances and are thus subject to court scrutiny. In re Yuan, slip op. at 7. The reasonableness of these payments is a consideration in analyzing whether abuse is present under section 707(b)(3)(B). See In re Gonzalez, 388 B.R. 292, 302 n.5 (Bankr. S.D. Tex. 2008); In re Kaminski, 387 B.R. 190, 196 (Bankr. N.D. Ohio 2008). Texas courts have held that excessive secured debt expenses weighed in favor of dismissal under section 707(b)(3)(B). See, e.g., In re Castellaw, 401 B.R. 223, 228 (Bankr. N.D. Tex. 2009)(concluding, inter alia, that $5,100 per month mortgage payment for a $1.2 million home was excessive); In re Meurer, No. 09-41446, 2009 WL 4263368, *4 (Bankr. N.D. Tex. November 18, 2009) (concluding, inter alia, that $4,072.72 per month mortgage payment for a $500,000 home was excessive); In re King, No. 08-41975, 2009 WL 62252, *4 (Bankr. E. D. Tex. 2009) (concluding, inter alia, that $3,008 per month in housing related expenses for $385,000, 3,407 square foot home was excessive).

C. Notwithstanding the Debtor's new allegations to the contrary, the Debtor's bankruptcy filing is a consumer case

For the first time on appeal, Ms. Hilmes contends this is a "business debt" case. Appellee Br. at 34. This argument lacks merit. First, Ms. Hilmes signed her bankruptcy petition under oath, representing that she had accumulated primarily consumer debt. Record at 10, (Petition). She is estopped from arguing the contrary now.

Second, Ms. Hilmes admits her “debts are primarily consumer debts.” Appellee Br. at 34. Debt is considered to be consumer debt when more than half of the total amount and the majority of creditors are categorized as consumer. In re Booth, 858 F.2d 1051, 1055 (5th Cir. 1988). Only two of her seventeen creditors are business related, which constitutes approximately 30% of her total debt, while over 70% of her debt is for her residence and personal credit cards. Record at 30-31, 33-35, (Schedules D and F). The Debtor made one bad investment in commercial property in Rhode Island, but her bankruptcy filing resulted from a lavish lifestyle that her income could not support.

D. The failure of creditors to join in the United States Trustee’s motion to dismiss is immaterial to an analysis of abuse under bankruptcy Section 707(b)(3).

Ms. Hilmes argues that no other party in interest filed a motion to dismiss and therefore her case is not abusive. Appellee Br. at 35. No other party in interest has participated because it is the statutory duty of the United States Trustee to police the bankruptcy system to, among other things, prevent abusive filings. 11 U.S.C. § 707(b)(1); 11 U.S.C. § 307 (granting United States Trustee standing to raise any issue). Before the enactment of the 2005 Act, parties in interest could not allege substantial abuse. 11 U.S.C. § 707(b) (2004). Now they can. 11 U.S.C. § 707(b)(2005). This does not mean that the United States Trustee no longer has the primary responsibility to monitor chapter 7 cases for abuse to protect the integrity of the system. 11 U.S.C. § 707(b) (2010). Absence of Ms. Hilmes’s creditors is immaterial.

CONCLUSION

For these reasons, the United States Trustee respectfully asks this Court to reverse the order entered by below and remand for further proceedings.

STATEMENT OF APPELLATE JURISDICTION

This Court has jurisdiction over this appeal under 28 U.S.C. §§ 158(a) and (c). The United States Bankruptcy Court for the District of Hawaii had jurisdiction over Hokulani Square, Inc.'s chapter 7 bankruptcy case under 28 U.S.C. §§ 157 and 1334. The bankruptcy court's final order approving the chapter 7 trustee's final fee application under 11 U.S.C. § 330 was entered on November 12, 2010. The United States Trustee timely filed a notice of appeal under 28 U.S.C. § 158(c)(2) and Fed. R. Bankr. P. 8002(a) on November 26, 2010.

STATEMENT OF THE ISSUE

When a secured creditor purchases its collateral from the estate, it may "credit bid" and offset the liability under the sale agreement against its secured claim under 11 U.S.C. § 363(k).

The question presented is whether the amount offset from a sale price because of a credit bid constitutes "moneys disbursed" by a chapter 7 trustee to a secured creditor under 11 U.S.C. § 326(a)?

STANDARD OF REVIEW

The bankruptcy court's conclusions of law are reviewed de novo and its factual findings are reviewed for clear error. Price v. U.S. Trustee (In re Price), 353 F.3d 1135, 1138 (9th Cir. 2004). Questions of statutory interpretation are reviewed de novo. Sacora v. Thomas, 628 F.3d 1059, 1065 (9th Cir. 2010).

STATEMENT OF THE CASE

In the case below, the chapter 7 trustee sold fully secured condominiums to a group of secured creditors, who used a credit bid to offset the entire purchase price against their secured claims. No money changed hands. The chapter 7 trustee then included the value of the credit bid when determining the amount of "moneys disbursed" under section 326(a).

The bankruptcy court agreed. Although the chapter 7 trustee had not disbursed cash to the secured creditors, the court thought the trustee might have been able to structure the transaction as a cash sale — and if the trustee had done so, he could have disbursed money to the secured creditors. The court also believed that the Ninth Circuit already considered credit bids to be "moneys disbursed." This appeal followed.

I. Statutory Framework

Section 326(a) of title 11 establishes the maximum amount of compensation that a bankruptcy court may award to a chapter 7 or 11 trustee under 11 U.S.C. § 330. Under section 326(a), a trustee's section 330 fee award may not exceed a percentage of "moneys disbursed or turned over in the case by the trustee to parties in interest, excluding the debtor, but including holders of secured claims." 11 U.S.C. § 326(a).

Section 363(k) of title 11 allows a secured creditor to "credit bid" the amount of the secured claim at a sale of the secured property, and if the secured creditor obtains the property, it may offset the value of the secured claim against the purchase price. 11 U.S.C. § 363(k). The purpose of this statute is to allow a secured creditor to obtain possession of its collateral if the price bid at an auction would not satisfy the amount of the creditor's secured claim. 3 Collier on Bankruptcy § 363.06[10] (16th ed. 2010).

II. Statement of the Facts

Hokulani Square, Inc., filed a petition for relief under chapter 11 of the Bankruptcy Code on May 10, 2007. ER, Tab A, at 3. Hokulani's principal asset was a 19-unit condominium building, which was fully encumbered by mortgages on the property. ER, Tab B, at 11.

After two years of continuing losses and management disputes, two secured creditors holding the mortgages on the building — Investors Funding Corporation and Walter and Sylvia Chang (collectively, the "secured creditors") — moved to convert the case to chapter 7 or for the appointment of a chapter 11 trustee. ER, Tab C, at 53. The bankruptcy court ordered the appointment of a chapter 11 trustee. ER, Tab D, at 89. The United States Trustee then appointed Bradley R. Tamm to serve as the chapter 11 trustee. ER, Tab E, at 91.

Eleven days later, Mr. Tamm moved to convert the chapter 11 case to one under chapter 7 based on the absence of a reasonable likelihood of rehabilitation. ER, Tab F, at 93-94. The bankruptcy court entered the conversion order the same day. ER, Tab G, at 95. Mr. Tamm was then appointed to serve as the chapter 7 trustee. Id.

Subsequently, Mr. Tamm moved to transfer the remaining condominium units in the building to the secured creditors in response to a joint $1.5 million credit bid of their outstanding secured claims. ER, Tab H, at 104. The proposed transaction also provided the opportunity for others to overbid the credit bid and purchase the condominiums at a cash price of $1.65 million. Id. at 105-06. Mr. Tamm acknowledged that the transaction "will not result in any distributions to unsecured creditors." ER, Tab I, at 123-24.

The bankruptcy court approved the motion. ER, Tab J, at 128. No overbids occurred, and Mr. Tamm transferred the condominiums to the secured creditors. ER, Tab K, at 141.

Mr. Tamm then finished administering the estate and filed his final report. ER, Tab L, at 142. It showed $2.72 million in disbursements. Id. That amount included a $1.5 million "liquidation" from the credit-bid transaction, which is listed as the $1.5 million sale price simultaneously offset against the $1.5 million in mortgage liability. Id. at 153. The entry for the credit-bid transaction, however, did not record any moneys disbursed under column 6, "Disbursements ($)." Id.

Based on the $2.72 million figure, Mr. Tamm stated his maximum compensation pursuant to section 326(a) was $109,293. Id. at 143. He then requested that amount for his fees. Id. at 161.

III. Statement of the Proceedings Below

The United States Trustee objected to Mr. Tamm's calculation. ER, Tab M, at 165. The United States Trustee argued that the amount of the credit bid could not be considered "moneys disbursed" for the purpose of calculating Mr. Tamm's maximum fee under section 326(a) because no money was ever paid to the secured creditors in satisfaction of their secured claims. Id. at 171-72.

Without monetizing the $1.5 million credit bid, the United States Trustee stated that Mr. Tamm's maximum compensation would be $69,267. Id. at 168.

Mr. Tamm replied, arguing that the equities of the case justified including the credit bid in his section 326(a) calculation because he was able to secure a 28.2% return for the general unsecured creditors.[1] ER, Tab N, at 195. In addition, he argued that two Ninth Circuit cases, which were decided approximately 30-years ago under the Bankruptcy Act of 1898, implied that credit bids should be considered "moneys disbursed." Id. at 196.

The bankruptcy court agreed with Mr. Tamm and held that "credit bids should be treated as moneys disbursed" in the section 326(a) calculation. ER, Tab O, at 219. The court provided two reasons.

First, the bankruptcy court believed that if credit bids were not treated as "moneys disbursed," it might elevate form over substance. Id. at 219-220. The court speculated that if credit bids were not included in the section 326(a) calculation, "then Trustees would simply insist that potential credit bidders hand them a check for the amount of the credit bid, and the Trustee would then endorse

[1] After paying other administrative expenses, Mr. Tamm stated the general unsecured creditors would receive $15,018 on $53,316 in allowed unsecured claims. This amount excludes the Changs' unsecured remainder of their mortgage on the condominium building, which was allowed as a $436,209 unsecured claim. The Changs waived any recovery on that claim when they settled the estate's litigation against them concerning various business torts. ER, Tab L, at 162-63.

the check and hand it right back to the creditor." Id. The court did, however, reject Mr. Tamm's argument that the equities of the case should be considered. Id. at 223. As the court stated, "it's either moneys disbursed or it's not moneys disbursed, and the underlying circumstances of the case I don't think are relevant." Id.

Second, the bankruptcy court agreed with Mr. Tamm that the Ninth Circuit case law allowed credit bids to be included in the section 326(a) calculation. Although the court recognized the existence of directly on-point authority from the Third and Fifth Circuits to the contrary, it stated that the Ninth Circuit "would probably stick with" the existing case law. Id. at 233. The court did not explain how it reached that conclusion.

SUMMARY OF THE ARGUMENT

Section 326(a) limits the maximum amount of compensation that a trustee may receive to a percentage of all "moneys disbursed" by the trustee. Here, when Mr. Tamm calculated the amount of money he disbursed, he included the credit bid, i.e., the amount of the liability under the transaction agreement that the secured creditors offset against their secured claims. The United States Trustee objected because Mr. Tamm did not disburse any money to the creditors. The only thing that changed hands in the transaction was the title to the condominiums.

The bankruptcy court overruled this objection. The court held that a broad interpretation of section 326(a) was necessary to prevent raising form over function. The court also reasoned that the Ninth Circuit already allowed credit bids to be treated as disbursements to creditors.

This Court should reverse the bankruptcy court's decision on both grounds. First, the bankruptcy court failed to apply the plain language of section 326(a). The phrase "moneys disbursed" means that money — currency, not property or future interests — must change hands, as the Third and Fifth Circuits have held. Here, no money changed hands. Transferring the condominiums and offsetting the mortgage liability was not disbursing money. Because this statutory language is not absurd, the court was required to enforce the statute as written. It did not.

Second, the bankruptcy court erred when it predicted that the Ninth Circuit would split with the Third and Fifth Circuits, and require bankruptcy courts to consider credit bids "moneys disbursed" under section 326(a). The case law the court relied upon for this prediction — two 30-year-old decisions rendered under the Bankruptcy Act of 1898 — are not controlling. They did not concern credit bids and did not attempt to define the meaning of the phrase "moneys disbursed." Consequently, the construction of section 326(a) remains open within this circuit.

And given the Ninth Circuit's practices in cases like this, there is no reason to presume it would create a circuit split.

Therefore, this Court should reverse the bankruptcy court's decision and hold that credit bids are not "moneys disbursed" under section 326(a).

ARGUMENT

I. A credit-bid transaction does not constitute "moneys disbursed" by a trustee under 11 U.S.C. § 326(a).

The Bankruptcy Code does not define the phrase "moneys disbursed" or the terms individually. Thus, the plain and ordinary meaning of the language applies. Ransom v. FIA Card Serv., N.A., 131 S. Ct. 716, 724 (2011). When inquiring into the meaning of a statute, courts "must give its terms their ordinary and plain meaning, and may follow the common practice of consulting dictionaries to determine how the terms were defined at the time the statute was adopted." Stanford v. MemberWorks, Inc., 625 F.3d 550, 559 (9th Cir. 2010) (quotation omitted). "[T]he structure and purpose of a statute may also provide guidance in determining the plain meaning of its provisions." Bailey v. Hill, 599 F.3d 976, 980 (9th Cir. 2010).

A. The plain and ordinary meaning of the phrase “moneys disbursed” is limited to payments made in currency.

Money means “[c]urrent coin . . . in portable form as a medium of exchange and measure of value.” Oxford English Dictionary 992 (2d ed. 1989). Accord U.C.C. § 1-201(24) (“Money means a medium of exchange currently authorized or adopted by a domestic or foreign government.”); Merriam-Webster’s Collegiate Dictionary 801 (11th ed. 2005) (“something generally accepted as a medium of exchange, a measure of value, or a means of payment”); Black’s Law Dictionary 1096 (9th ed. 2009) (“[t]he medium of exchange authorized or adopted by a government”).

Disbursement means “to pay out or expend money.” Oxford English Dictionary 726 (2d ed. 1989) (explaining that the word derives from the Old French term for a purse or pocket). Accord Merriam-Webster’s Collegiate Dictionary 355 (11th ed. 2005) (to “pay out,” “expend . . . from a fund,” or “make a payment in settlement of a bill”); Black’s Law Dictionary 530 (9th ed. 2009) (“The act of paying out money, commonly from a fund or in settlement of a debt or account payable.”).

Although the Ninth Circuit has not squarely addressed the meaning of the phrase “moneys disbursed” in section 326(a), it has held that money should be given its dictionary meaning. Worley v. United States, 340 F.2d 500, 502 (9th Cir.

1965) ("[M]oney . . . means money; the kind one could bite, feel or pinch. If one should define it 'as money or the right to receive money,' the door would be open beyond any reasonable width that Congress could have had in mind."). The Ninth Circuit has also held that disbursement should be given its dictionary meaning in a bankruptcy context. St. Angelo v. Victoria Farms, Inc., 38 F.3d 1525, 1534 (9th Cir. 1994) (defining "disbursement" under 28 U.S.C. § 1930(a)(6), which governs the amount of quarterly fees paid in chapter 11 cases).

The Third and Fifth Circuits, however, have rendered decisions on the meaning of "moneys disbursed" in section 326(a). They agree that it is limited to payments made in currency. Staiano v. Cain (In re Lan Assoc. XI), 192 F.3d 109, 118 (3d Cir. 1999) (holding that a credit bid was not "moneys disbursed" under section 326(a) because the statutory language is limited to "something generally accepted as a medium of exchange"); U.S. Trustee v. Pritchard (In re England), 153 F.3d 232, 235 (5th Cir. 1998) (holding that a credit bid was not "moneys disbursed" under section 326(a) because money's "common everyday meaning . . . does not include property"). Cf. Vienna Park Prop. v. United Postal Sav. Ass'n (In re Vienna Park Prop.), 976 F.2d 106, 116 (2d Cir. 1992) (adopting the "general definition" of money as "a medium of exchange" and holding that "[a] contractual right to obtain money at some future time is not the same thing as money itself").

Therefore, the plain and ordinary meaning of "moneys disbursed" in section 326(a) is limited to payments made in (1) legal currency or (2) an asset that may be used like cash, such as certificates of deposit, checks, and credit card balances.

B. The statutory context supports interpreting the phrase "moneys disbursed" according to its plain and ordinary meaning.

Giving the phrase "moneys disbursed" its plain and ordinary meaning in section 326(a) is bolstered by (1) the statutory framework and (2) the statutory language in the Bankruptcy Act, in other sections of the Bankruptcy Code, and elsewhere in the United States Code.

First, section 326(a) is congruent with the larger statutory scheme regulating how chapter 7 trustees are compensated. The trustee's fundamental duty is to "collect and reduce to money the property of the estate." 11 U.S.C. § 704(a)(1). This means the trustee is required to liquidate the property of the estate to pay the creditors' claims. Thus, it makes sense that Congress would create an incentive for trustees to maximize the amount of money available to creditors by linking that duty with the maximum potential compensation under section 326(a) — but then only allow "reasonable compensation" under section 330 to prevent trustees from taking advantage of section 326(a). See Lan, 192 F.3d at 120-21 (analyzing the interplay between sections 326(a), 330, and 704(a)(1)); England, 153 F.3d at 236-37 (observing the same).

Second, if Congress wanted to expand the ambit of section 326(a) beyond money payments, it could have employed a broader term. Such was the case under section 76(g) of the Bankruptcy Act, predecessor to the modern section 326(a). That statute compensated "reorganization" trustees based upon "all moneys disbursed or turned over . . . and where under the plan of reorganization any part of the consideration to be paid to unsecured creditors is other than money, upon the amount of the fair value of such consideration." 11 U.S.C. § 76(g) (repealed 1978). In enacting section 326(a), however, "Congress intended to distinguish between the concepts of property and money . . . Congress's decision not to include such language in section 326(a) is indicative of its intent to limit trustee compensation to 'moneys' in the strict sense of the word." Lan, 192 F.3d at 118.

The language employed in various sections of the Bankruptcy Code also supports a plain-language interpretation of section 326(a). For example, the Bankruptcy Code elsewhere distinguishes money from other types of valuable property. In section 547(a)(2), Congress defined the phrase "new value" as "money or money's worth in goods, services, or new credit, or release by a transferee of property previously transferred to such transferee in a transaction." 11 U.S.C. § 547(a)(2). This shows that Congress understands how to delineate money as a medium of exchange, i.e., cash and its functional equivalents, separately from money as a measure of value in property. See 11 U.S.C. §§ 345 (referring to investing or depositing the money of the estate), 704(a)(1) (reducing the property of the estate to money), 748 (governing how the trustee must reduce securities to money).

The Bankruptcy Code also distinguishes money disbursements from other types of property conveyances. Congress referred to "disbursements" of money from the estate as the basis for calculating quarterly fees in chapter 11 cases. See 28 U.S.C. § 1930(a)(6). But when referring to dispositions of property in general, Congress has utilized terms such as transfer or distribute. See § 547 ("transferring" property of the estate); 11 U.S.C. § 726 ("distributing" the property of the estate).

Finally, applying the plain and ordinary meaning of "moneys disbursed" in section 326(a) is consistent with the meaning of the terms in other titles of the United States Code. See 31 U.S.C. § 5340 (defining "money" as "cash or cash equivalent proceeds" for the purposes of money laundering); 26 U.S.C. § 430 (defining "disbursements" as all payments from a pension plan for benefits and administrative expenses under ERISA).

Congress chose to limit a trustee's maximum compensation in section 326(a) to "moneys disbursed." That choice should be respected, particularly when the statutory context, the history of the statute, and the language found in other statutes all indicate that Congress deliberately used the phrase "moneys disbursed," rather than employ a broader phrase such as "the value of property distributed." See Bailey, 599 F.3d at 980. The plain and ordinary meaning of "moneys disbursed" in section 326(a) thus ensures that the phrase "carries meaning, as each word in a statute should." Ransom, 131 S. Ct. at 724.

C. A credit-bid transaction does not result in "moneys disbursed" because no money changes hands.

The credit-bid transaction between Mr. Tamm and the secured creditors did not involve any money being passed from the estate to the secured creditors. Under section 363(k), the secured creditors in this case "offset [their] claim against the purchase price of such property." 11 U.S.C. § 363(k). Mr. Tamm simply recognized the offset in satisfaction of the mortgages, and transferred the condominiums to the secured creditors. ER, Tab L, at 153.

As no moneys were disbursed to the secured creditors, the transaction did not fall within the plain language of section 326(a). Nonetheless, the bankruptcy court considered the offset against the purchase price to be "moneys disbursed" under section 326(a). ER, Tab O, at 232-33. The court analogized using a credit bid to a simple credit transaction, like "handing a check to somebody." Id. This analogy was mistaken.

Here, Mr. Tamm did not hand the secured creditors cash, a check, or another instrument that allowed them to withdraw a specific amount of money from a bank. He gave them condominiums.

This means there was no money disbursed from the estate. Unlike a personal check or credit card, a credit bid against a secured claim cannot be offered to purchase groceries, or drawn on to receive money from a bank. Because this credit is not money, it cannot be "moneys disbursed" under the plain language of section 326(a). Lan, 192 F.3d at 118; England, 153 F.3d at 237.

To the contrary, a credit bid simply allows a secured creditor to offset liability from the sale agreement against its secured claim. See § 363(k). Just as using a coupon to obtain a discounted price at a store does not result in money being disbursed to a shopper, using a credit bid to reduce the purchase price of property at a section 363 sale does not result in money being given to a secured creditor. In fact, the Bankruptcy Code supports using offsets to avoid the needless transaction costs arising from "making A pay B when B owes A." Citizens Bank of Md. v. Strumpf, 516 U.S. 16, 18 (1995); see 11 U.S.C. §§ 362(b)(27) (exempting master-netting agreements from the automatic stay), 542(b) (allowing a creditor to retain property of the estate when a debt may be offset), 553 (recognizing setoff rights established by non-bankruptcy law).

Thus, because the estate does not disburse any money by recognizing a credit bid, such transactions cannot result in "moneys disbursed" under the plain language of section 326(a). See St. Angelo, 38 F.3d at 1534 (defining disbursement as expenditures or payments from the estate); 3 Collier on Bankruptcy § 362.02[1][f][i] (16th ed. 2010) ("When the secured creditor bids on the property pursuant to section 363(k) and sets off its claim against the purchase price, courts generally hold that such credit-bid sales should be excluded from the scope of 'moneys disbursed.'").

II. Applying the plain and ordinary meaning of the phrase "moneys disbursed" does not produce absurd results.

"It is well established that when the statute's language is plain, the sole function of the courts — at least where the disposition required by the text is not absurd — is to enforce it according to its terms." Lamie v. U.S. Trustee, 540 U.S. 526, 534 (2004) (quotation omitted). The rule that courts may not "soften the import of Congress's chosen words even if . . . the words lead to a harsh outcome is longstanding." Id. at 538. The "avoidance of unhappy consequences is not an adequate basis for interpreting a text." Nixon v. Mo. Mun. League, 541 U.S. 125, 141 (2004) (Scalia, J., concurring).

The canon against absurdities should be invoked only "where it is quite impossible that Congress could have intended the result . . . and where the alleged absurdity is so clear as to be obvious to most anyone." Pub. Citizen v. Dep't of Justice, 491 U.S. 440, 470-71 (1989) (Kennedy, J., concurring). The statute must be more than arbitrary or irrational — it must "render another section within the statute or within the act inoperative or contradictory." Amalgamated Transit Union Local 1309, AFL-CIO v. Laidlaw Transit Serv., Inc., 448 F.3d 1092, 1098 (9th Cir. 2006). See also United States v. Cook, 594 F.3d 883, 891 (D.C. Cir. 2010) ("A statutory outcome is absurd if it defies rationality by rendering a statute nonsensical or superfluous or if it creates an outcome so contrary to perceived social values that Congress could not have intended it.").

This standard is extraordinarily high. Sturges v. Crowninshield, 17 U.S. (4 Wheat.) 122, 202-03 (1819) (stating that absurdity must be "so monstrous, that all mankind would, without hesitation, unite in rejecting" it); Am. Bankers Ins. Group v. United States, 408 F.3d 1328, 1334 (11th Cir. 2005) (citations omitted) (stating that absurdity must be "so gross as to shock the general moral or common sense . . . plainly at variance with the policy of the legislation as a whole"). There must be nothing in the statutory language, context, or legislative history that suggests Congress intended the absurd result. United States v. Rollness, 561 F.3d 996, 998 (9th Cir. 2009) (per curiam). Compare Taylor v. Dir., Office of Workers Comp. Programs, 201 F.3d 1234, 1241 (9th Cir. 2000) (holding that a workers' compensation statute that allowed a spouse to recover twice for the same injury to her husband — once before his death and once afterwards — was not absurd) with United States v. Mack, 164 F.3d 467, 472 (9th Cir. 1999) (holding that a statute simultaneously authorizing law enforcement officers to confiscate prohibited weapons and punishing them for possessing the confiscated weapons was absurd).

Here, the bankruptcy court rejected the plain language of section 326(a) because if "credit bids weren't treated as moneys disbursed, then Trustees would simply insist that potential credit bidders hand them a check . . . and the Trustee would then endorse the check and hand it right back to the Creditor." ER, Tab O, at 219-20. Thus, "rather than force people to go through that little ritual," the court held that it was appropriate to "make the substance consistent with the form." Id.

That does not render section 326(a) absurd, and does not justify departing from the plain language of section 326(a). What the statutory text requires — that trustees actually pay money to creditors to include the value of the asset administered in the trustee's maximum-fee calculation — is the result of Congress's decision to bring trustee compensation in-line with the monetary benefits provided to creditors. See supra Part I.B.; 3 Collier on Bankruptcy § 362.LH[4] (16th ed. 2010) (reviewing the legislative history and summarizing the changes effected by the Bankruptcy Reform Act of 1978). For example, Congress also removed the ability to include non-monetary consideration from the trustee's maximum-fee calculation in chapter 11 cases and reduced the minimum compensation by 87% in chapter 7 cases, but then increased the percentage of "moneys disbursed" that establish a trustee's maximum fee in both chapter 7 and chapter 11 cases. Id.

The statutory text, context, and legislative history all indicate that Congress made a deliberate policy choice to narrow a trustee's fee base to only "moneys disbursed" under section 326(a) as an incentive for trustees to get the best price for property of the estate. To be sure, this requirement causes Mr. Tamm to lose approximately $40,000 in fees based on the form of the credit-bid transaction. But he would still be paid almost $70,000 — at an effective rate of $182 per hour — as compensation for his services to the estate. This is what Congress intended, and it is not an absurd result. Rollness, 561 F.3d at 998.

Therefore, there is no cause to re-write section 326(a) merely because one might perceive that it would "make the substance consistent with the form." ER, Tab O, at 219. Even when Congress's chosen words "lead to a harsh outcome," bankruptcy courts must enforce the law according to its terms. Lamie, 540 U.S. at 534 (denying all compensation to an estate professional based on the professional's failure to re-apply for employment after the bankruptcy case was converted from chapter 11 to chapter 7). The bankruptcy court below did not.

III. Ninth Circuit law does not dictate that the value of a credit bid constitutes "moneys disbursed" under 11 U.S.C. § 326(a).

The bankruptcy court also reasoned that Ninth Circuit law treats credit bids as "moneys disbursed," based on York Int'l Building, Inc. v. Chaney (In re York), 527 F.2d 1061 (9th Cir. 1976) and Southwestern Media, Inc. v. Rau, 708 F.2d 419 (9th Cir. 1983). ER, Tab O, at 220, 233. This too was wrong.

A. York and Southwestern Media are not binding precedent on whether credit bids are considered "moneys disbursed."

Under Ninth Circuit law, "where a panel confronts an issue germane to the eventual resolution of the case, and resolves it after reasoned consideration in a published opinion, that ruling becomes the law of the circuit." United States v. Luong, 627 F.3d 1306, 1310 (9th Cir. 2010). The issue decided must have been "fairly presented" and "refined through the adversary process." United States v. Johnson, 256 F.3d 895, 916 (9th Cir. 2001) (en banc) (opinion of Kozinski, J.) (plurality); see also Sanchez v. Mukasey, 521 F.3d 1106, 1111 (9th Cir. 2008) (Wallace, J., concurring) (observing that the issue before the previous panel was not binding because it was not "refined by the fires of adversary presentation.") (quoting United States v. Crawley, 837 F.2d 291, 293 (7th Cir. 1988)).

But "where it is clear that a statement is made casually and without analysis, where the statement is uttered in passing without due consideration of the alternatives, or where it is merely a prelude to another legal issue that commands the panel's full attention," it is not law of the circuit. Gonzalez v. Arizona, 624 F.3d 1162, 1190-91 (9th Cir. 2010) (citing Johnson). And a "casual, off-hand remark or a broad statement of principle" is not considered a pronouncement of circuit law. Johnson, 256 F.3d at 916.

For example, a one-sentence observation about legal doctrine — stated in an appeal that does not turn on the mentioned doctrine — is not binding circuit law. Gonzalez, 624 F.3d at 1190-91 (citing Johnson) (holding that a statement about the law-of-the-circuit doctrine mentioned in a case that did not involve the doctrine was not a reasoned, binding decision on the issue discussed). Nor can an analogy become the basis for binding precedent. Thacker v. FCC (In re Magnacom Wireless, LLC), 503 F.3d 984, 993-94 (9th Cir. 2007) (explaining that an analogy equating the FCC's ability to cancel licenses under 11 U.S.C. § 525 with foreclosure on collateral did not decide whether cancelling a license was a lien-enforcement action under the automatic stay).

Under this test, neither York nor Southwestern Media are controlling here. York, which dates from 1976, is a Bankruptcy Act case that concerned the amount of reasonable compensation awarded to a trustee. In York, the trustee had sold a building subject to existing loans. In a footnote, the panel stated that "[f]or the purpose of calculating the trustee's fee under this section, we treat the assumption of the existing mortgages as a disbursement." York, 527 F.2d 1061, 1704 n.12.

As the panel recognized, it made an assumption — not a decision. It was a lone sentence uttered as a prelude to the issue of the reasonableness of the trustee's services, made without supporting analysis or reasoned consideration. See Gonzalez, 624 F.3d at 1190-91. It was not litigated by the parties or "refined through the adversary process." Johnson, 256 F.3d at 916.

Southwestern Media, which dates from 1983, is also a Bankruptcy Act case. In Southwestern Media, the trustee sold fully secured property to a third party and then distributed the cash proceeds from the sale to satisfy a secured creditor's lien on the property. Southwestern Media, 708 F.2d at 421-22. The issue before the Southwestern Media panel was whether "moneys disbursed" was impliedly limited to the "net equity value" realized by the estate. Id. at 423. In coming to its decision, the panel observed that three century-old district court cases from New York, Massachusetts, and Pennsylvania, as well as York, allowed sales of encumbered property to lien creditors, rather than third parties, to be counted toward the trustee's maximum fees. Id. at 423.

Again, this single sentence was just a passing observation uttered without supporting analysis, not a reasoned decision on whether credit bids should be included in a section 326(a) calculation. See Gonzalez, 624 F.3d at 1190-91. It was raised as an analogy to show that the equity value of property held in the estate is irrelevant to the amount of money disbursed by the trustee. Its persuasive value is properly limited to the case in which it was made. See Thacker, 503 F.3d at 993-94.

Thus, there was no reason for the bankruptcy court to believe that either York or Southwestern Media should determine the issue of whether a credit bid constitutes "moneys disbursed" under section 326(a). Neither involved credit-bid purchases by secured creditors. Neither held what the phrase "moneys disbursed" means. Neither analyzed the statutory context and the consequential differences between the Bankruptcy Act and the Bankruptcy Code. Neither decided, after engaging in reasoned consideration, whether properties transferred to secured creditors in satisfaction of a lien constituted "moneys disbursed."

Accordingly, York and Southwestern Media are not binding Ninth Circuit law in this appeal. Gonzalez, 624 F.3d 1191. This Court is free to decide the issue before it on the merits.

B. There is no "strong reason" for the Ninth Circuit to extend York or Southwestern Media to include credit bids.

When confronting an issue that other circuits have already decided, "absent a strong reason to do so," the Ninth Circuit "will not create an inter-circuit conflict." Torre v. Brickey, 278 F.3d 917, 919 (9th Cir. 2002). This is particularly important when a decision would result in the inconsistent application of a uniform federal law. Silvers v. Sony Pictures Entm't, 402 F.3d 881, 890 (9th Cir. 2005). Where Congress's intent for national uniformity is clear, "the creation of a circuit split would be particularly troublesome" because "[i]nconsistent rules among the circuits would lead to different" results in different areas of the country, even if the same conduct is occurring nationwide. Id.

"The Bankruptcy Clause, which grants Congress the power to make bankruptcy laws, U.S. Const. art. I, § 8, cl. 4, stresses that such rules must be 'uniform.'" Sherwood Partners, Inc. v. Lycos, Inc., 394 F.3d 1198, 1201 (9th Cir. 2005). And here, both the Third and Fifth Circuits have held that credit bids do not constitute "moneys disbursed" under section 326(a). Lan, 192 F.3d at 118 (Third Circuit); England, 153 F.3d at 235 (Fifth Circuit). The Government does not believe that 30-year-old case law of questionable relevancy presents a "strong reason" for the Ninth Circuit to invite the inconsistent application of the Bankruptcy Code across the country by creating an "inter-circuit conflict" with the Third and Fifth Circuits. Torre, 278 F.3d at 919.

CONCLUSION

For these reasons, the United States Trustee respectfully asks this Court to reverse the order entered below.

ADDENDUM - 11 U.S.C. §§ 326, 363

EFFECTIVE DATE OF 1994 AMENDMENT

Amendment by Pub. L. 103–394 effective Oct. 22, 1994, and not applicable with respect to cases commenced under this title before Oct. 22, 1994, see section 702 of Pub. L. 103–394, set out as a note under section 101 of this title.

EFFECTIVE DATE OF 1986 AMENDMENT

Effective date and applicability of amendment by section 207 of Pub. L. 99–554 dependent upon the judicial district involved, see section 302(d), (e) of Pub. L. 99–554, set out as a note under section 581 of Title 28, Judiciary and Judicial Procedure.

Amendment by section 257 of Pub. L. 99–554 effective 30 days after Oct. 27, 1986, but not applicable to cases commenced under this title before that date, see section 302(a), (c)(1) of Pub. L. 99–554.

EFFECTIVE DATE OF 1984 AMENDMENT

Amendment by Pub. L. 98–353 effective with respect to cases filed 90 days after July 10, 1984, see section 552(a) of Pub. L. 98–353, set out as a note under section 101 of this title.

§ 323. Role and capacity of trustee

(a) The trustee in a case under this title is the representative of the estate.

(b) The trustee in a case under this title has capacity to sue and be sued.

(Pub. L. 95–598, Nov. 6, 1978, 92 Stat. 2562.)

HISTORICAL AND REVISION NOTES

SENATE REPORT NO. 95–989

Subsection (a) of this section makes the trustee the representative of the estate. Subsection (b) grants the trustee the capacity to sue and to be sued. If the debtor remains in possession in a chapter 11 case, section 1107 gives the debtor in possession these rights of the trustee: the debtor in possession becomes the representative of the estate, and may sue and be sued. The same applies in a chapter 13 case.

§ 324. Removal of trustee or examiner

(a) The court, after notice and a hearing, may remove a trustee, other than the United States trustee, or an examiner, for cause.

(b) Whenever the court removes a trustee or examiner under subsection (a) in a case under this title, such trustee or examiner shall thereby be removed in all other cases under this title in which such trustee or examiner is then serving unless the court orders otherwise.

(Pub. L. 95–598, Nov. 6, 1978, 92 Stat. 2562; Pub. L. 99–554, title II, § 208, Oct. 27, 1986, 100 Stat. 3098.)

HISTORICAL AND REVISION NOTES

SENATE REPORT NO. 95–989

This section permits the court, after notice and a hearing, to remove a trustee for cause.

AMENDMENTS

1986—Pub. L. 99–554 amended section generally, designating existing provisions as subsec. (a), substituting ‘‘a trustee, other than the United States trustee, or an examiner’’ for ‘‘a trustee or an examiner’’, and adding subsec. (b).

EFFECTIVE DATE OF 1986 AMENDMENT

Effective date and applicability of amendment by Pub. L. 99–554 dependent upon the judicial district involved, see section 302(d), (e) of Pub. L. 99–554, set out as a note under section 581 of Title 28, Judiciary and Judicial Procedure.

§ 325. Effect of vacancy

A vacancy in the office of trustee during a case does not abate any pending action or proceeding, and the successor trustee shall be substituted as a party in such action or proceeding.

(Pub. L. 95–598, Nov. 6, 1978, 92 Stat. 2562.)

HISTORICAL AND REVISION NOTES

SENATE REPORT NO. 95–989

Section 325, derived from Bankruptcy Act section 46 [section 74 of former title 11] and Bankruptcy Rule 221(b), specifies that a vacancy in the office of trustee during a case does not abate any pending action or proceeding. The successor trustee, when selected and qualified, is substituted as a party in any pending action or proceeding.

§ 326. Limitation on compensation of trustee

(a) In a case under chapter 7 or 11, the court may allow reasonable compensation under section 330 of this title of the trustee for the trustee’s services, payable after the trustee renders such services, not to exceed 25 percent on the first $5,000 or less, 10 percent on any amount in excess of $5,000 but not in excess of $50,000, 5 percent on any amount in excess of $50,000 but not in excess of $1,000,000, and reasonable compensation not to exceed 3 percent of such moneys in excess of $1,000,000, upon all moneys disbursed or turned over in the case by the trustee to parties in interest, excluding the debtor, but including holders of secured claims.

(b) In a case under chapter 12 or 13 of this title, the court may not allow compensation for services or reimbursement of expenses of the United States trustee or of a standing trustee appointed under section 586(b) of title 28, but may allow reasonable compensation under section 330 of this title of a trustee appointed under section 1202(a) or 1302(a) of this title for the trustee’s services, payable after the trustee renders such services, not to exceed five percent upon all payments under the plan.

(c) If more than one person serves as trustee in the case, the aggregate compensation of such persons for such service may not exceed the maximum compensation prescribed for a single trustee by subsection (a) or (b) of this section, as the case may be.

(d) The court may deny allowance of compensation for services or reimbursement of expenses of the trustee if the trustee failed to make diligent inquiry into facts that would permit denial of allowance under section 328(c) of this title or, with knowledge of such facts, employed a professional person under section 327 of this title.

HISTORICAL AND REVISION NOTES

LEGISLATIVE STATEMENTS

Section 326(a) of the House amendment modifies a provision as contained in H.R. 8200 as passed by the House. The percentage limitation on the fees of a trustee contained in the House bill is retained, but no additional percentage is specified for cases in which a trustee operates the business of the debtor. Section 326(b) of the Senate amendment is deleted as an unnecessary restatement of the limitation contained in section 326(a) as modified. The provision contained in section 326(a) of the Senate amendment authorizing a trustee to receive a maximum fee of $150 regardless of the availability of assets in the estate is deleted. It will not be necessary in view of the increase in section 326(a) and the doubling of the minimum fee as provided in section 330(b).

Section 326(b) of the House amendment derives from section 326(c) of H.R. 8200 as passed by the House. It is a conforming amendment to indicate a change with respect to the selection of a trustee in a chapter 13 case under section 1302(a) of title 11.

SENATE REPORT NO. 95–989

This section is derived in part from section 48c of the Bankruptcy Act [section 76(c) of former title 11]. It must be emphasized that this section does not authorize compensation of trustees. This section simply fixes the maximum compensation of a trustee. Proposed 11 U.S.C. 330 authorizes and fixes the standard of compensation. Under section 48c of current law, the maximum limits have tended to become minimums in many cases. This section is not intended to be so interpreted. The limits in this section, together with the limitations found in section 330, are to be applied as outer limits, and not as grants or entitlements to the maximum fees specified.

The maximum fee schedule is derived from section 48c(1) of the present act [section 76(c)(1) of former title 11], but with a change relating to the bases on which the percentage maxima are computed. The maximum fee schedule is based on decreasing percentages of increasing amounts. The amounts are the amounts of money distributed by the trustee to parties in interest, excluding the debtor, but including secured creditors. These amounts were last amended in 1952. Since then, the cost of living has approximately doubled. Thus, the bases were doubled.

It should be noted that the bases on which the maximum fee is computed includes moneys turned over to secured creditors, to cover the situation where the trustee liquidates property subject to a lien and distributes the proceeds. It does not cover cases in which the trustee simply turns over the property to the secured creditor, nor where the trustee abandons the property and the secured creditor is permitted to foreclose. The provision is also subject to the rights of the secured creditor generally under proposed section 506, especially 506(c). The $150 discretionary fee provision of current law is retained.

Subsection (b) of this section entitles an operating trustee to a reasonable fee, without any limitation based on the maximum provided for a liquidating trustee as in current law, Bankruptcy Act §48c(2) [section 76(c)(2) of former title 11].

Subsection (c) [enacted as (b)] permits a maximum fee of five percent on all payments to creditors under a chapter 13 plan to the trustee appointed in the case.

Subsection (d) [enacted as (c)] provides a limitation not found in current law. Even if more than one trustee serves in the case, the maximum fee payable to all trustees does not change. For example, if an interim trustee is appointed and an elected trustee replaces him, the combined total of the fees payable to the interim trustee and the permanent trustee may not exceed the amount specified in this section. Under current law, very often a receiver receives a full fee and a subsequent trustee also receives a full fee. The resultant ‘‘double-dipping’’, especially in cases in which the receiver and the trustee are the same individual, is detrimental to the interests of creditors, by needlessly increasing the cost of administering bankruptcy estates.

Subsection (e) [enacted as (d)] permits the court to deny compensation to a trustee if the trustee has been derelict in his duty by employing counsel, who is not disinterested.

AMENDMENTS

1994—Subsec. (a). Pub. L. 103–394 substituted ‘‘25 percent on the first $5,000 or less, 10 percent on any amount in excess of $5,000 but not in excess of $50,000, 5 percent on any amount in excess of $50,000 but not in excess of $1,000,000, and reasonable compensation not to exceed 3 percent of such moneys in excess of $1,000,000’’ for ‘‘fifteen percent on the first $1,000 or less, six percent on any amount in excess of $1,000 but not in excess of $3,000, and three percent on any amount in excess of $3,000’’.

1986—Subsec. (b). Pub. L. 99–554 amended subsec. (b) generally, substituting ‘‘under chapter 12 or 13 of this title’’ for ‘‘under chapter 13 of this title’’, ‘‘expenses of the United States trustee or of a standing trustee appointed under section 586(b) of title 28’’ for ‘‘expenses of a standing trustee appointed under section 1302(d) of this title’’, and ‘‘under section 1202(a) or 1302(a) of this title’’ for ‘‘under section 1302(a) of this title’’.

1984—Subsec. (a). Pub. L. 98–353, §430(a), substituted ‘‘and three percent on any amount in excess of $3000’’ for ‘‘three percent on any amount in excess of $3,000 but not in excess of $20,000, two percent on any amount in excess of $20,000 but not in excess of $50,000, and one percent on any amount in excess of $50,000’’.

Subsec. (d). Pub. L. 98–353, §430(b), amended subsec. (d) generally. Prior to amendment, subsec. (d) read as follows: ‘‘The court may deny allowance of compensation for services and reimbursement of expenses of the trustee if the trustee—

‘‘(1) failed to make diligent inquiry into facts that would permit denial of allowance under section 328(c) of this title; or

‘‘(2) with knowledge of such facts, employed a professional person under section 327 of this title.’’

EFFECTIVE DATE OF 1994 AMENDMENT

Amendment by Pub. L. 103–394 effective Oct. 22, 1994, and not applicable with respect to cases commenced under this title before Oct. 22, 1994, see section 702 of Pub. L. 103–394, set out as a note under section 101 of this title.

EFFECTIVE DATE OF 1986 AMENDMENT

Effective date and applicability of amendment by Pub. L. 99–554 dependent upon the judicial district involved, see section 302(d), (e) of Pub. L. 99–554, set out as a note under section 581 of Title 28, Judiciary and Judicial Procedure.

EFFECTIVE DATE OF 1984 AMENDMENT

Effective Date of 1984 Amendment

Amendment by Pub. L. 98–353 effective with respect to cases filed 90 days after July 10, 1984, see section 552(a) of Pub. L. 98–353, set out as a note under section 101 of this title.

Report to Congressional Committees

Section 5001(a) of Pub. L. 99–509 directed Secretary of Transportation and Secretary of Commerce, before July 1, 1989, to submit reports to Congress on the effects of amendments to 11 U.S.C. 362 by this subsection.

§363. Use, sale, or lease of property

(a) In this section, ''cash collateral'' means cash, negotiable instruments, documents of title, securities, deposit accounts, or other cash equivalents whenever acquired in which the estate and an entity other than the estate have an interest and includes the proceeds, products, offspring, rents, or profits of property and the fees, charges, accounts or other payments for the use or occupancy of rooms and other public facilities in hotels, motels, or other lodging properties subject to a security interest as provided in section 552(b) of this title, whether existing before or after the commencement of a case under this title.

(b)(1) The trustee, after notice and a hearing, may use, sell, or lease, other than in the ordinary course of business, property of the estate, except that if the debtor in connection with offering a product or a service discloses to an individual a policy prohibiting the transfer of personally identifiable information about individuals to persons that are not affiliated with the debtor and if such policy is in effect on the date of the commencement of the case, then the trustee may not sell or lease personally identifiable information to any person unless—

(A) such sale or such lease is consistent with such policy; or

(B) after appointment of a consumer privacy ombudsman in accordance with section 332, and after notice and a hearing, the court approves such sale or such lease—

(i) giving due consideration to the facts, circumstances, and conditions of such sale or such lease; and

(ii) finding that no showing was made that such sale or such lease would violate applicable nonbankruptcy law.

(2) If notification is required under subsection (a) of section 7A of the Clayton Act in the case of a transaction under this subsection, then—

(A) notwithstanding subsection (a) of such section, the notification required by such subsection to be given by the debtor shall be given by the trustee; and

(B) notwithstanding subsection (b) of such section, the required waiting period shall end on the 15th day after the date of the receipt, by the Federal Trade Commission and the Assistant Attorney General in charge of the Antitrust Division of the Department of Justice, of the notification required under such subsection (a), unless such waiting period is extended—

(i) pursuant to subsection (e)(2) of such section, in the same manner as such subsection (e)(2) applies to a cash tender offer;

(ii) pursuant to subsection (g)(2) of such section; or

(iii) by the court after notice and a hearing.

(c)(1) If the business of the debtor is authorized to be operated under section 721, 1108, 1203, 1204, or 1304 of this title and unless the court orders otherwise, the trustee may enter into transactions, including the sale or lease of property of the estate, in the ordinary course of business, without notice or a hearing, and may use property of the estate in the ordinary course of business without notice or a hearing.

(2) The trustee may not use, sell, or lease cash collateral under paragraph (1) of this subsection unless—

(A) each entity that has an interest in such cash collateral consents; or

(B) the court, after notice and a hearing, authorizes such use, sale, or lease in accordance with the provisions of this section.

(3) Any hearing under paragraph (2)(B) of this subsection may be a preliminary hearing or may be consolidated with a hearing under subsection (e) of this section, but shall be scheduled in accordance with the needs of the debtor. If the hearing under paragraph (2)(B) of this subsection is a preliminary hearing, the court may authorize such use, sale, or lease only if there is a reasonable likelihood that the trustee will prevail at the final hearing under subsection (e) of this section. The court shall act promptly on any request for authorization under paragraph (2)(B) of this subsection.

(4) Except as provided in paragraph (2) of this subsection, the trustee shall segregate and account for any cash collateral in the trustee's possession, custody, or control.

(d) The trustee may use, sell, or lease property under subsection (b) or (c) of this section only—

(1) in accordance with applicable nonbankruptcy law that governs the transfer of property by a corporation or trust that is not a moneyed, business, or commercial corporation or trust; and

(2) to the extent not inconsistent with any relief granted under subsection (c), (d), (e), or (f) of section 362.

(e) Notwithstanding any other provision of this section, at any time, on request of an entity that has an interest in property used, sold, or leased, or proposed to be used, sold, or leased, by the trustee, the court, with or without a hearing, shall prohibit or condition such use, sale, or lease as is necessary to provide adequate protection of such interest. This subsection also applies to property that is subject to any unexpired lease of personal property (to the exclusion of such property being subject to an order to grant relief from the stay under section 362).

(f) The trustee may sell property under subsection (b) or (c) of this section free and clear of any interest in such property of an entity other than the estate, only if—

(1) applicable nonbankruptcy law permits sale of such property free and clear of such interest;

(2) such entity consents;

(3) such interest is a lien and the price at which such property is to be sold is greater than the aggregate value of all liens on such property;

(4) such interest is in bona fide dispute; or

(5) such entity could be compelled, in a legal or equitable proceeding, to accept a money satisfaction of such interest.

(g) Notwithstanding subsection (f) of this section, the trustee may sell property under subsection (b) or (c) of this section free and clear of any vested or contingent right in the nature of dower or curtesy.

(h) Notwithstanding subsection (f) of this section, the trustee may sell both the estate's interest, under subsection (b) or (c) of this section, and the interest of any co-owner in property in which the debtor had, at the time of the commencement of the case, an undivided interest as a tenant in common, joint tenant, or tenant by the entirety, only if—

(1) partition in kind of such property among the estate and such co-owners is impracticable;

(2) sale of the estate's undivided interest in such property would realize significantly less for the estate than sale of such property free of the interests of such co-owners;

(3) the benefit to the estate of a sale of such property free of the interests of co-owners outweighs the detriment, if any, to such co-owners; and

(4) such property is not used in the production, transmission, or distribution, for sale, of electric energy or of natural or synthetic gas for heat, light, or power.

(i) Before the consummation of a sale of property to which subsection (g) or (h) of this section applies, or of property of the estate that was community property of the debtor and the debtor's spouse immediately before the commencement of the case, the debtor's spouse, or a co-owner of such property, as the case may be, may purchase such property at the price at which such sale is to be consummated.

(j) After a sale of property to which subsection (g) or (h) of this section applies, the trustee shall distribute to the debtor's spouse or the co-owners of such property, as the case may be, and to the estate, the proceeds of such sale, less the costs and expenses, not including any compensation of the trustee, of such sale, according to the interests of such spouse or co-owners, and of the estate.

(k) At a sale under subsection (b) of this section of property that is subject to a lien that secures an allowed claim, unless the court for cause orders otherwise the holder of such claim may bid at such sale, and, if the holder of such claim purchases such property, such holder may offset such claim against the purchase price of such property.

(l) Subject to the provisions of section 365, the trustee may use, sell, or lease property under subsection (b) or (c) of this section, or a plan under chapter 11, 12, or 13 of this title may provide for the use, sale, or lease of property, notwithstanding any provision in a contract, a lease, or applicable law that is conditioned on the insolvency or financial condition of the debtor, on the commencement of a case under this title concerning the debtor, or on the appointment of or the taking possession by a trustee in a case under this title or a custodian, and that effects, or gives an option to effect, a forfeiture, modification, or termination of the debtor's interest in such property.

(m) The reversal or modification on appeal of an authorization under subsection (b) or (c) of this section of a sale or lease of property does not affect the validity of a sale or lease under such authorization to an entity that purchased or leased such property in good faith, whether or not such entity knew of the pendency of the appeal, unless such authorization and such sale or lease were stayed pending appeal.

(n) The trustee may avoid a sale under this section if the sale price was controlled by an agreement among potential bidders at such sale, or may recover from a party to such agreement any amount by which the value of the property sold exceeds the price at which such sale was consummated, and may recover any costs, attorneys' fees, or expenses incurred in avoiding such sale or recovering such amount. In addition to any recovery under the preceding sentence, the court may grant judgment for punitive damages in favor of the estate and against any such party that entered into such an agreement in willful disregard of this subsection.

(o) Notwithstanding subsection (f), if a person purchases any interest in a consumer credit transaction that is subject to the Truth in Lending Act or any interest in a consumer credit contract (as defined in section 433.1 of title 16 of the Code of Federal Regulations (January 1, 2004), as amended from time to time), and if such interest is purchased through a sale under this section, then such person shall remain subject to all claims and defenses that are related to such consumer credit transaction or such consumer credit contract, to the same extent as such person would be subject to such claims and defenses of the consumer had such interest been purchased at a sale not under this section.

(p) In any hearing under this section—

(1) the trustee has the burden of proof on the issue of adequate protection; and

(2) the entity asserting an interest in property has the burden of proof on the issue of the validity, priority, or extent of such interest.

Historical and Revision Notes

legislative statements

Section 363(a) of the House amendment defines ''cash collateral'' as defined in the Senate amendment. The broader definition of ''soft collateral'' contained in H.R. 8200 as passed by the House is deleted to remove limitations that were placed on the use, lease, or sale of inventory, accounts, contract rights, general intangibles, and chattel paper by the trustee or debtor in possession.

Section 363(c)(2) of the House amendment is derived from the Senate amendment. Similarly, sections 363(c)(3) and (4) are derived from comparable provisions in the Senate amendment in lieu of the contrary procedure contained in section 363(c) as passed by the House.

The policy of the House amendment will generally require the court to schedule a preliminary hearing in accordance with the needs of the debtor to authorize the trustee or debtor in possession to use, sell, or lease cash collateral. The trustee or debtor in possession may use, sell, or lease cash collateral in the ordinary course of business only ''after notice and a hearing.''

Section 363(f) of the House amendment adopts an identical provision contained in the House bill, as opposed to an alternative provision contained in the Senate amendment.

Section 363(h) of the House amendment adopts a new paragraph (4) representing a compromise between the House bill and Senate amendment. The provision adds a limitation indicating that a trustee or debtor in possession sell jointly owned property only if the property is not used in the production, transmission, or distribution for sale, of electric energy or of natural or synthetic gas for heat, light, or power. This limitation is intended to protect public utilities from being deprived of power sources because of the bankruptcy of a joint owner.

Section 363(k) of the House amendment is derived from the third sentence of section 363(e) of the Senate amendment. The provision indicates that a secured creditor may bid in the full amount of the creditor's allowed claim, including the secured portion and any unsecured portion thereof in the event the creditor is undersecured, with respect to property that is subject to a lien that secures the allowed claim of the sale of the property.

SENATE REPORT NO. 95–989

This section defines the right and powers of the trustee with respect to the use, sale or lease of property and the rights of other parties that have interests in the property involved. It applies in both liquidation and reorganization cases.

Subsection (a) defines ''cash collateral'' as cash, negotiable instruments, documents of title, securities, deposit accounts, or other cash equivalents in which the estate and an entity other than the estate have an interest, such as a lien or a co-ownership interest. The definition is not restricted to property of the estate that is cash collateral on the date of the filing of the petition. Thus, if ''non-cash'' collateral is disposed of and the proceeds come within the definition of ''cash collateral'' as set forth in this subsection, the proceeds would be cash collateral as long as they remain subject to the original lien on the ''non-cash'' collateral under section 552(b). To illustrate, rents received from real property before or after the commencement of the case would be cash collateral to the extent that they are subject to a lien.

Subsection (b) permits the trustees to use, sell, or lease, other than in the ordinary course of business, property of the estate upon notice and opportunity for objections and hearing thereon.

Subsection (c) governs use, sale, or lease in the ordinary course of business. If the business of the debtor is authorized to be operated under § 721, 1108, or 1304 of the bankruptcy code, then the trustee may use, sell, or lease property in the ordinary course of business or enter into ordinary course transactions without need for notice and hearing. This power is subject to several limitations. First, the court may restrict the trustee's powers in the order authorizing operation of the business. Second, with respect to cash collateral, the trustee may not use, sell, or lease cash collateral except upon court authorization after notice and a hearing, or with the consent of each entity that has an interest in such cash collateral. The same preliminary hearing procedure in the automatic stay section applies to a hearing under this subsection. In addition, the trustee is required to segregate and account for any cash collateral in the trustee's possession, custody, or control.

Under subsections (d) and (e), the use, sale, or lease of property is further limited by the concept of adequate protection. Sale, use, or lease of property in which an entity other than the estate has an interest may be effected only to the extent not inconsistent with any relief from the stay granted to that interest's holder. Moreover, the court may prohibit or condition the use, sale, or lease as is necessary to provide adequate protection of that interest. Again, the trustee has the burden of proof on the issue of adequate protection. Subsection (e) also provides that where a sale of the property is proposed, an entity that has an interest in such property may bid at the sale thereof and set off against the purchase price up to the amount of such entity's claim. No prior valuation under section 506(a) would limit this bidding right, since the bid at the sale would be determinative of value.

Subsection (f) permits sale of property free and clear of any interest in the property of an entity other than the estate. The trustee may sell free and clear if applicable nonbankruptcy law permits it, if the other entity consents, if the interest is a lien and the sale price of the property is greater than the amount secured by the lien, if the interest is in bona fide dispute, or if the other entity could be compelled to accept a money satisfaction of the interest in a legal or equitable proceeding. Sale under this subsection is subject to the adequate protection requirement. Most often, adequate protection in connection with a sale free and clear of other interests will be to have those interests attach to the proceeds of the sale.

At a sale free and clear of other interests, any holder of any interest in the property being sold will be permitted to bid. If that holder is the high bidder, he will be permitted to offset the value of his interest against the purchase price of the property. Thus, in the most common situation, a holder of a lien on property being sold may bid at the sale and, if successful, may offset the amount owed to him that is secured by the lien on the property (but may not offset other amounts owed to him) against the purchase price, and be liable to the trustee for the balance of the sale price, if any.

Subsection (g) permits the trustee to sell free and clear of any vested or contingent right in the nature of dower or curtesy.

Subsection (h) permits sale of a co-owner's interest in property in which the debtor had an undivided ownership interest such as a joint tenancy, a tenancy in common, or a tenancy by the entirety. Such a sale is permissible only if partition is impracticable, if sale of the estate's interest would realize significantly less for the estate that sale of the property free of the interests of the co-owners, and if the benefit to the estate of such a sale outweighs any detriment to the co-owners. This subsection does not apply to a co-owner's interest in a public utility when a disruption of the utilities services could result.

Subsection (i) provides protections for co-owners and spouses with dower, curtesy, or community property rights. It gives a right of first refusal to the co-owner or spouse at the price at which the sale is to be consummated.

Subsection (j) requires the trustee to distribute to the spouse or co-owner the appropriate portion of the proceeds of the sale, less certain administrative expenses.

Subsection (k) [enacted as (l)] permits the trustee to use, sell, or lease property notwithstanding certain bankruptcy or ipso facto clauses that terminate the debtor's interest in the property or that work a forfeiture or modification of that interest. This subsection is not as broad as the anti-ipso facto provision in proposed 11 U.S.C. 541(c)(1).

Subsection (l) [enacted as (m)] protects good faith purchasers of property sold under this section from a reversal on appeal of the sale authorization, unless the authorization for the sale and the sale itself were stayed pending appeal. The purchaser's knowledge of the appeal is irrelevant to the issue of good faith.

Subsection (m) [enacted as (n)] is directed at collusive bidding on property sold under this section. It permits the trustee to void a sale if the price of the sale was controlled by an agreement among potential bidders. The trustees may also recover the excess of the value of the property over the purchase price, and may recover any costs, attorney's fees, or expenses incurred in voiding the sale or recovering the difference. In addition, the court is authorized to grant judgment in favor of the estate and against the collusive bidder if the agreement controlling the sale price was entered into in willful disregard of this subsection. The subsection does not specify the precise measure of damages, but simply provides for punitive damages, to be fixed in light of the circumstances.

INFORMAL BRIEF

Re: Hollis v. United States Trustee, Case No. 04-2543

In compliance with Local Rule 34(b) and this court's Order entered December 22, 2004, the United States Trustee submits this informal brief and supporting memorandum.

Statement of Jurisdiction

On appeal is the district court's order (1) dismissing the appeal, for lack of subject matter jurisdiction resulting from an untimely notice of appeal, of the bankruptcy court's March 12, 2004, judgment under 11 U.S.C. 110; and (2) affirming the bankruptcy court's denial of appellant's two post-trial motions, for which notice of appeal was timely filed. This Court lacks jurisdiction, as did the district court, over the merits of the appeal of the underlying March 12 bankruptcy court judgment. This Court has jurisdiction pursuant to 28 U.S.C. 158(d) to review the district court's dismissal of the appeal of the underlying judgment and the district court's affirmance of the bankruptcy court orders denying the two post-trial motions.

This Court stated in its December 22, 2004, order that it would consider only issues raised in appellant's informal brief. Mr. Hollis raised three issues in his brief to this Court. First, whether “irregularities” in the bankruptcy and district court proceedings denied him due process and equal protection of the law; second, whether he is entitled to “an impartial review of factual and legal disputes” in the bankruptcy court proceedings; and third, whether the district court had jurisdiction to hear his untimely notice of appeal.

The “irregularities” in the bankruptcy court cited by Mr. Hollis as violations of his constitutional rights are at best issues that could be raised on a review of the merits of the underlying order on remand if this Court reverses the district court’s dismissal of the appeal. None of his allegations, even if true, however, can confer appellate jurisdiction upon the district court absent such jurisdiction granted by Congress. Likewise, the alleged “irregularities” cannot create a right to “an impartial [appellate] review of factual and legal disputes” in the bankruptcy court as argued by Mr. Hollis when jurisdiction to hear those issues is lacking. Under the Constitution, the district court has no authority not granted to it by Congress. The district court’s appellate review is limited by statutes granting such, like 28 U.S.C. 158. The sole issue before this Court with respect to the underlying judgment of the bankruptcy court, therefore, is whether, under 28 U.S.C. 158, the district court possessed appellate jurisdiction over this case. If this Court finds it did not, Mr. Hollis’ appeal should be dismissed. If this Court finds it did, this matter should be remanded for an adjudication of the merits of Mr. Hollis’ claims.

Issues on Appeal

1. As a matter of law, did the district court properly dismiss an appeal from the bankruptcy court for lack of jurisdiction when Mr. Hollis filed his notice of appeal from the bankruptcy court’s order twenty-seven days after the entry of the judgment appealed from and where 28 U.S.C. 158(c)(2) makes the timely filing of a notice of appeal as jurisdictional requirement?

2. Did the bankruptcy court abuse its discretion by denying the appellant’s untimely filed post-trial motions seeking to alter or amend judgment under Fed. R. Bankr. P. 9023?

Standard of Review

A determination of subject matter jurisdiction by the district court is reviewed de novo. See, e.g., New Horizon of NY LLC v. Jacobs, 231 F.3d 143, 150 (4th Cir. 2000) (citation omitted). The denial of motions under Fed. R. Bankr. P. 9023 are reviewed for abuse of discretion.[1/] Stamathis v. Flying J, Inc., 389 F.3d 429, 436 (4th Cir. 2004) (court has discretion whether to grant motion under Fed. R. Civ. P. 59) (citations omitted); see also Fed. R. Bankr. P. 9023 (making Fed. R. Civ. P. 59 applicable to bankruptcy cases).

Supporting Facts and Background

There are no factual disputes relevant to the matter before this Court. Mr. Meldon Hollis is a bankruptcy petition preparer and disbarred attorney who helped debtor Romeo E. Sackar prepare a chapter 7 bankruptcy petition and related documents. In assisting the debtor, Mr. Hollis violated a number of provisions of 11 U.S.C. 110, which governs the conduct of petition preparers, and the United States Trustee initiated an adversary proceeding against Mr. Hollis in response to those statutory violations. (Complaint, Bankr. Ct. Case No. 03-01127, Dkt #1). The bankruptcy court entered a judgment against Mr. Hollis on the merits of the United States Trustee's complaint on March 12, 2004. (Order Entering Judgment, Bankr. Ct. Case No. 03-01127, Dkt #73). That merits ruling is not before this court because the district court dismissed the appeal of the judgment for lack of jurisdiction arising from Mr. Hollis' failure to timely appeal the March 12

[1/] Mr. Hollis erroneously suggests the standard of review as "clearly erroneous," under Fed. R. Bankr. P. 8013, which states that findings of fact of the bankruptcy court should not be set aside unless "clearly erroneous." The district court's jurisdictional statement was based upon uncontested facts and Mr. Hollis fails to identify any finding of fact by the bankruptcy court or district court that is disputed. This appeal presents the legal question of whether an untimely notice of appeal from a bankruptcy court confers appellate jurisdiction to the district court under 11 U.S.C. 158, which this Court reviews de novo, and requires a review the denial of post-trial motions, which is a matter committed to the discretion of a bankruptcy court.

order. (Order, Dist. Ct. Case No. 04-1581, Dkt #14). Mr. Hollis also appealed the denial by the bankruptcy court of two post-trial motions. (Notice of Appeal, Bankr. Ct. Case No. 03-01127, Dkt #83). The notice of appeal was timely as to these two orders. See 28 U.S.C. 158(c), Fed. R. Bankr. P. 8002. The district court asserted jurisdiction over the appeal of the two orders and affirmed the bankruptcy court. Order, Dist. Ct. Case No. 04-1581, Dkt #14. This Court has jurisdiction to rule on the merits of this appeal with respect to the orders denying the post-trial motions, but not on the merits of the underlying March 12 judgment.

Mr. Hollis filed the first of his post-trial motions in the bankruptcy court seventeen days after entry of the March 12 judgment, on March 29, 2004, in the form of a motion to extend the time to alter or amend the judgment under Fed. R. Bankr. P. 9023. (Motion, Bankr. Ct. Case No. 03-01127, Dkt #77). The bankruptcy court denied this motion on March 31, 2004. (Order, Bankr. Ct. Case No. 03-01127, Dkt #78). Despite the court's refusal to grant additional time, on April 6, 2004, twenty-four days after the entry of the underlying judgment, Mr. Hollis filed his second post-trial motion, an untimely motion to alter or amend judgment under Fed. R. Bankr. P. 9023. (Motion, Bankr. Ct. Case No. 03-01127, Dkt #80). The bankruptcy court denied this motion on April 8, 2004. (Order, Bankr. Ct. Case No. 03-01127, Dkt #81).

Mr. Hollis filed his notice of appeal to the district court on April 9, 2004, twenty-seven days after the entry of the bankruptcy court's March 12 merits ruling. (Notice of Appeal, Bankr. Ct. Case No. 03-01127, Dkt #83). The United States Trustee moved to dismiss the appeal for lack of jurisdiction. (Motion, Dist. Ct. Case No. 04-1581, Dkt #9). The district court entered a memorandum opinion and order on November 17, 2004, dismissing the appeal of the March 12 judgment and affirming the bankruptcy court's denial of the two post-trial motions. (Order, Dist.

Ct. Case No. 04-1581, Dkt #14, 15). Mr. Hollis filed a notice of appeal from the district court on December 14, 2004. (Notice of Appeal, Dist. Ct. Case No. 04-1581, Dkt #16).

MEMORANDUM IN SUPPORT OF APPELLEE'S INFORMAL BRIEF

1. The district court lacked subject matter jurisdiction to consider the merits of the bankruptcy court's March 12 judgment because Mr. Hollis' appeal from that was untimely under Fed. R. Bankr. P. 8002, and 28 U.S.C. 158(c)(2) grants appellate jurisdiction only where the notice of appeal is filed in compliance with the time limits set forth in Rule 8002.

"Federal courts are not courts of general jurisdiction; they have only the power that is authorized by article III of the Constitution and the statutes enacted by Congress thereto." Brickwood Contractors, Inc. v. Datanet Eng'g, Inc., 369 F.3d 385, 389 (4th Cir. 2004) (quoting Bender v. Williamsport Area Sch. Dist., 475 U.S. 534, 541 (1986). A district court's appellate jurisdiction to review final judgments, orders and decrees of bankruptcy judges is established by 28 U.S.C. 158(a) and 158(c)(2). Accord Hamilton v. Lake Elmo Bank (In re Delta Eng'g Int'l, Inc.), 270 F.3d 584, 585 (8th Cir. 2001) (bankruptcy appellate panel jurisdiction conferred by 28 U.S.C. 158 (b) and (c)). A district court's appellate jurisdiction, therefore, cannot be expanded beyond what is authorized by section 158. Subsection 158(c)(2) sets forth a time frame for appealing bankruptcy decisions to the district courts, requiring that such appeals "shall be taken in the same manner as appeals in civil proceedings generally are taken to the courts of appeals from the district courts," and "in the time provided by Rule 8002 of the Bankruptcy Rules." 28 U.S.C. 158(c)(2) (emphasis added). In turn, Fed. R. Bankr. P. 8002(a) requires a notice of appeal be filed within ten days of the bankruptcy court's order unless an appellant had filed one of the motions identified in Fed. R. Bankr. P. 8002(b) within that ten day period.

Bankruptcy Rule 8002(b) provides that where any party files a "timely motion" (1) to amend under Fed. R. Bankr. P. 7052; (2) to alter or amend judgment or for a new trial under Fed.

R. Bankr. P. 9023; or (3) for relief under Fed. R. 9024 filed within ten days after the entry of judgment, "the time for appeal for all parties runs from the entry of the order disposing of the last such motion outstanding." Fed. R. Bankr. P. 8002(b). Hollis filed a notice of appeal of the March 12 judgment almost a month after the entry of the judgment. The time to file a notice of appeal, however, expired ten days after the entry of the March 12 judgment, because neither Hollis, nor any other party, took any actions to toll or extend the time to file a notice of appeal.

As explained, the time to file a notice of appeal may be tolled by the timely filing of certain post-trial motions. Fed. R. Bankr. P. 8002(b). The time to file a notice of appeal may also be extended beyond the ten day limit by the timely filing of a motion to extend the time to file a notice of appeal. Fed. R. Bankr. P. 8002(c). Mr. Hollis never filed a motion to extend the time to file a notice of appeal, and the only motion filed by Mr. Hollis that could have tolled the time to file a notice of appeal was his motion to alter or amend judgment filed on April 6, 2004. To toll the time to file a notice of appeal, Mr. Hollis must have filed his motion within ten days after the entry of the March 12 judgment. He filed his motion, however, twenty-five days after the entry of March 12 judgment. Under Rule 8002(b), motions must be filed within ten days of the entry of the order appealed to toll the time for appealing. Fed. R. Bankr. P. 8002(b); see also, e.g., Whitemere Dev. Corp., Inc. v. Township of Cherry Hill, 786 F.2d 185, 187 (3d Cir. 1986). This motion was untimely filed by fifteen days, and untimely motions do not toll the time to file a notice of appeal under Fed. R. Bankr. P. 8002. See, e.g., Constellation Dev. Corp. v. Dowden (In re B.J. McAdams, Inc.), 999 F.2d 1221, 1225 (8th Cir. 1993) (citation omitted). Therefore, Mr. Hollis' motion did to alter or amend did not toll his time to appeal the March 12 order and did not confer jurisdiction upon the district court to hear his appeal.[2/]

Although this Court has not issued a precedential decision[3/] determining whether a timely notice of appeal from a bankruptcy court order is a condition precedent to the district court's exercise of appellate jurisdiction, the United States courts of appeals for the First, Third, Fifth, Sixth, Eighth, Ninth, and Eleventh circuits have concluded it is. See, e.g., Suhar v. Burns (In re Burns), 322 F.3d 421, 425 (6th Cir. 2003); In re Bond, 254 F.3d 669, 673 (7th Cir. 2001); *Hamilton v. [2/] Mr. Hollis' other post-trial motion, the motion for an extension of time to file a motion to alter or amend, which was untimely filed on March 29, 2004, is not a type of motion that tolls the time to file a notice of appeal under Fed. R. Bankr. P. 8002(b), even if it was timely.

[3/] In dicta, however, in a case examining jurisdiction under 28 U.S.C. 1334, this Court stated that an order was final "because it was not appealed from on or before 10 days [after entry of the order] pursuant to 28 U.S.C. § 158(a) and § 158(c) and Rule 8002 of the Bankruptcy Rules." New Horizons of NY LLC v. Jacobs, 231 F.3d 143, 152 (4th Cir. 2000) (emphasis added).

It is worth noting that 28 U.S.C. 158(c)(2), not Fed. R. Bankr. P. 8002, creates the jurisdictional requirement of a timely appeal.[4/] In granting appellate jurisdiction over bankruptcy court decisions to the district court in section 158(c)(2), Congress specifically incorporated the requirement of compliance with Fed. R. Bankr. P. 8002. 28 U.S.C. 158(c)(2) ("An appeal . . . shall be taken . . . in the time provided by [Bankruptcy] Rule 8002."). As the Supreme Court recently noted in Kontrick v. Ryan (a case examining the nature of Fed. R. Bankr. P. 4004), procedural rules may not create or withdraw jurisdiction. 124 S. Ct. 906, 914 (2004). Unlike the statute at issue in Kontrick, however, section 158(c)(2) is one of the "[c]ertain statutory provisions" which "contain built-in time constraints." Kontrick v. Ryan, 124 S. Ct. 906, 914 (2004) (noting 28 U.S.C. 157(c) limits the jurisdiction of federal district courts to review bankruptcy court findings and conclusions in non-core proceedings to matters to which party has "timely and specifically objected").

Congress' express incorporation of Rule 8002's ten day filing deadline into section 158(c)(2) conditions the exercise of appellate jurisdiction upon the timely filing of a notice of appeal. See, e.,g., In re Bond, 254 F.3d 669, 673 (7th Cir. 2001) (to perfect an appeal of a final judgment filed under section 158 and confer appellate jurisdiction, notice of appeal must be filed within ten days of bankruptcy court's decision); River Prod. Co., Inc. v. Webb (In re Topco, Inc.), 894 F.2d 727, 734 (5th Cir. 1991) (appeals under section 158(a) must comply with time requirements of section 158(c)) (citing Fed. R. Bankr. P. 8002).

[4/] A number of courts have inarticulately stated that Rule 8002 is "jurisdictional," which incorrectly implies the Rule itself creates jurisdiction.

Mr. Hollis argues that the United States Trustee's motion to dismiss for lack of jurisdiction was "untimely," and that the district court therefore violated Mr. Hollis' equal protection rights by "permitting late and unjustified filings [by the United States Trustee] while denying late filings from [Hollis]." Appellant's Brief at 9, 10. Subject matter jurisdiction, however, can be raised at any time, "even initially at the highest appellate interest." Grupo Dataflux v. Atlas Global Group, L.P., 124 S. Ct. 1920, 1927 (2004) (quoting Kontrick v. Ryan, 124 S. Ct. 906, 915 (2004)). Moreover, an objection to a federal court's subject matter jurisdiction cannot be forfeited. Id.; see also Kontrick v. Ryan, 124 S. Ct. 906, 916 (2004). Nor can subject-matter jurisdiction be conferred by agreement of the parties or a defect in jurisdiction waived. See, e.g., Brickwood Contractors, Inc. v. Datanet Eng'g, Inc., 369 F.3d 385, 389 (4th Cir. 2004) (citing United States v. Cotton, 535 U.S. 625, 630 (2002)).

Mr. Hollis also argues that the bankruptcy court should have extended the time to file a notice of appeal based on "excusable neglect" under Fed. R. Bankr. P. 8002(c). The "excusable neglect," presumably, is the fact that Mr. Hollis was out of town when notice of the court's March 12 judgment was delivered to him. This argument fails for two reasons. First, Mr. Hollis cites no authority to support, nor is there any support, for the failure of an appellant to be home to receive properly sent notice, even if, as Mr. Hollis contends, the bankruptcy court "had notice" that he was going to be out of town. In fact, the Bankruptcy Rules specifically state that "[l]ack of notice does not affect the time to appeal or authorize the court to relieve a party for failure to appeal within the time allowed, except as provided by Rule 8002." Fed. R. Bankr. P. 9022(a). The failure to receive notice of entry of a judgment is not excusable neglect because a party has an affirmative duty to monitor the dockets. More importantly, even if Mr. Hollis could demonstrate excusable neglect, Rule 8002(c) only allows for the extension of time for filing a notice of appeal by a request made by "written motion filed before the time for filing the notice of appeal has expired," and Mr. Hollis never requested an extension of time to file a notice of appeal – neither prior to nor after the expiration of the time allowed for such a request. Fed. R. Bankr. P. 8002(c).

Mr. Hollis offers no legal support for his argument that the district court and this Court may make the "equitable decision" to hear his appeal in violation of the jurisdictional bar imposed by 28 U.S.C. 158(c)(2). Under that section, the district court lacked jurisdiction to review the merits of the judgment against him. Given that, this Court also does not have jurisdiction to review the merits of the underlying judgment at this time. Where a district court lacks subject matter jurisdiction, a circuit court of appeals also lacks jurisdiction. See, e.g., Don Vincente Macias, Inc. v. Texas Gulf Trawling Co., Inc. (In re Don Vincente Macias, Inc.), 168 F.3d 209, 211 (5th Cir. 1999); Weston v. Mann (In re Weston), 18 F.3d 860, 862 (10th Cir. 1994); Colon v. Hart (In re Colon), 941 F.2d 242, 244 (3d Cir. 1991).

2. The bankruptcy court did not abuse its discretion by denying the untimely motion to extend the time to file a motion to alter or amend or by denying the untimely motion to alter or amend.

Hollis' notice of appeal was timely as to the March 31 order denying his motion to extend time to file a motion to alter or amend judgment and the April 8 order denying his motion to alter or amend judgment. Therefore, the timing of the notice of appeal presents no jurisdictional bar to review by the district court or this Court. The denial of these motions by the bankruptcy court was proper because both motions were untimely filed, and the district court properly affirmed these orders. A motion to alter or amend a judgment in a bankruptcy case is governed by Fed. R. Bankr. P. 9023, which makes Fed. R. Civ. P. 59 applicable to cases under the Bankruptcy Code. Civil Procedure Rule 59(e) provides that "[a]ny motion to alter or amend a judgment shall be filed no later than 10 days after the entry of the judgment." Fed. R. Civ. P. 59(e). In this case, the time to file a motion to alter or amend the judgment expired on March 22, 2004. After the expiration of this time, on March 29, 2004, Hollis filed his motion for an extension of time. The bankruptcy court correctly denied this motion because Fed. R. Bankr. P. 9006, governing the computation, enlargement, and reduction of time periods in bankruptcy cases, expressly prohibits the court from enlarging the time to file a motion to alter or amend judgment. Fed. R. Bankr. P. 9006(b)(2); see also Alston v. MCI Communications Corp., 84 F.3d 705, 706 (4th Cir. 1996).

Mr. Hollis acknowledges the fact that Rule 9006 prohibited the bankruptcy court from granting his extension of time to file a motion to alter or amend, but claims that "this fact was not known [to Hollis] at the time of filing the motion to alter or amend judgment." Appellant's Brief at 13. He also acknowledges that Rule 9006 is part of the reason he is not able to "contest[] the Bankruptcy Court's judgement [sic] in the most appropriate manner." Id. Even if the bankruptcy court had disregarded Rule 9006 and granted the extension of time to file a motion to alter or amend, this would have no impact on the court's lack of jurisdiction to review the underlying March 12 judgment because the time to file a notice of appeal expired before Mr. Hollis filed his motion, and, moreover, this motion is not a motion that has the potential to toll the filing of a notice of appeal under 28 U.S.C. 158 and Fed. R. Bankr. P. 8002.

Despite the fact that the bankruptcy court denied his motion for an extension of time, Hollis proceeded to file an untimely motion to alter or amend judgment. The bankruptcy court correctly denied this motion because, in addition to the motion being untimely, there were no legal grounds for altering or amending the judgment. The three narrow grounds for amending an earlier judgment are (1) to accommodate an intervening change in controlling law; (2) to account for new evidence not available at trial; or (3) to correct a clear error of law or prevent manifest injustice. See Hutchinson v. Staton, 994 F.2d 1076, 1081 (4th Cir. 1993). Mr. Hollis neither asserted nor proved any of these grounds.

Conclusion

For these reasons, the United States Trustee respectfully asks this Court to dismiss Mr. Hollis' appeal from the March 12 order for lack of subject matter jurisdiction; affirm the district court's order dismissing Mr. Hollis' appeal from the March 12 order; and affirm the district court's order affirming denial of Mr. Hollis' post-trial motions by the bankruptcy court.

Respectfully Submitted,

ON APPEAL FROM THE UNITED STATES BANKRUPTCY
APPELLATE PANEL OF THE TENTH CIRCUIT

BRIEF FOR UNITED STATES TRUSTEE

STATEMENT OF JURISDICTION

The United States Bankruptcy Court for the Northern District of Oklahoma had jurisdiction over the Chapter 11 proceeding in this case pursuant to 11 U.S.C. § 157(b)(1). On January 10, 2003, the bankruptcy court approved a final fee award of $904,000 to Houlihan Lokey Howard & Zukin Financial Services, Inc. ("Houlihan"). On January 20, 2003, Houlihan appealed the amount of that award to the Bankruptcy Appellate Panel ("BAP"). The BAP had jurisdiction under 28 U.S.C. § 158(b) and (c). On August 27, 2003, the BAP affirmed the bankruptcy court's decision. On September 25, 2003, Houlihan appealed the BAP's decision to this Court, which has jurisdiction under 28 U.S.C. § 158(d).

STATEMENT OF THE ISSUE

Whether the bankruptcy court abused its discretion in awarding $904,000 to Houlihan as "reasonable compensation" under 11 U.S.C. § 330(a).

STATEMENT OF THE CASE

Commercial Financial Services, Inc., and its subsidiary, CF/SPC NGU, Inc., filed voluntary petitions for reorganization under chapter 11. See generally 11 U.S.C. § 1101, et seq. The United States Trustee appointed a committee to represent creditors holding asset-based securities ("ABS Committee"). 11 U.S.C. § 1102(a)(1). The bankruptcy court authorized the ABS Committee to retain Houlihan as a financial advisor. 11 U.S.C. § 1103(a). Houlihan applied for fees, and the bankruptcy court awarded part of the requested amount. 11 U.S.C. § 330. Houlihan appealed the award, and the BAP affirmed.

STATEMENT OF FACTS

A. Statutory Background

This case concerns bankruptcy courts' authority under Section 330 of the Bankruptcy Code to award reasonable compensation to professionals employed by creditors committees. In chapter 11 bankruptcy cases, the U.S. Trustee appoints an unsecured creditors committee and additional creditors committees as appropriate. 11 U.S.C. § 1102. Under 11 U.S.C. § 1103(a), creditors committees may, if the bankruptcy court approves, employ attorneys and other professionals to serve or represent the committee.[1]

Payment of bankruptcy professionals is governed by 11 U.S.C. § 328 and 11 U.S.C. § 330. Under Section 328, bankruptcy courts may – but are not obliged to – approve specific, reasonable terms of employment prior to a professional's service.[2] When a bankruptcy court does not specifically preapprove a professional's terms of employment, the court must determine compensation under Section 330 after notice and a hearing.[3]

Section 330 is the provision relevant here. It allows bankruptcy courts to award reasonable compensation only for
