Re: FOIA No. 2011-2041

This further responds to your request for records dated April 10, 2011, received in this Office on April 11, 2011, and assigned the above-referenced tracking number for processing under the Freedom of Information Act (FOIA), Privacy Act (PA) and related rules. 5 U.S.C. §§ 552-552a; 28 C.F.R. § 16.1, et seq.

We have processed your request in the most cost-efficient manner consistent with a fair reading of your correspondence as we understand it. After a reasonable search of agency records, 391 electronic documents have been located that appear to meet your request for information. Following legal review by this Office under the FOIA and the Privacy Act, we have determined that these documents will be released in their entirety.

Based upon the statutory standard for fee categories, Office of Management and Budget Fee Guidelines, Department of Justice regulations, and all of the information available to us, we conclude that for purposes of your request, you should be categorized as an "all other" requester.[1] This means that you may be charged for the direct costs of searching for responsive records, as well as for the duplication of records.[2] Under Department of Justice regulations, duplication fees for electronic records include the direct costs incurred in making copies of the documents. These direct costs include the cost of the compact disc (CD)[3] and the salary of the employee/contractor copying the electronic records.[4] Requesters in the "all other" fee category are entitled to the first two hours of search time and the first 100 pages of duplication without cost or the cost equivalent[5] of 100 pages, which, in this instance, amounts to $10.00.

In the course of processing your request, less than two hours of search time and fifteen minutes of duplication costs were incurred. As you requested, the responsive documents were copied onto a CD. Accordingly, after subtracting the cost equivalent of 100 pages, the total fee for processing your request is $17.68.[6]

Please remit a check or money order in the amount of $17.68 made payable to the United States Treasury, to the Executive Office For United States Trustees, Office of General Counsel, Attention: FOIA/PA Unit, Suite 8100, 20 Massachusetts Ave., N.W., Washington D.C. 20530. STATUTES, REGULATIONS, AND LEGISLATIVE HISTORY

STATEMENT OF JURISDICTION

The bankruptcy court had jurisdiction over the debtor's chapter 7 bankruptcy case under 28 U.S.C. §§ 157(a) and (b), and 1334(a). Those provisions also gave the bankruptcy court jurisdiction to decide the United States Trustee's[1] motion to dismiss the debtor's bankruptcy case for abuse under 11 U.S.C. § 707(b). The bankruptcy court denied the United States Trustee's motion by order entered May 4, 2007. The United States Trustee timely appealed that order under 28 U.S.C. § 158(c)(2) and Fed. R. Bankr. P. 8002(a) on May 11, 2007. This Court has jurisdiction over this appeal under 28 U.S.C. § 158(a)(1).

STATEMENT OF THE ISSUE

In 2005, Congress and the President amended section 707(b) of the Bankruptcy Code to prohibit debtors with above median income from obtaining chapter 7 relief, absent special circumstances, whenever their income, less allowable expenses, as calculated under a statutory means test, exceeds a specified amount. In this case, the United States Trustee sought dismissal

[1] Congress authorized the United States Attorney General to appoint 21 United States trustees, each to serve in a specific geographic region of the United States. See generally 28 U.S.C. § 581 et. seq. (establishing the United States Trustee Program). The United States trustees are senior officials of the Department of Justice. Id. The United States trustees "supervise the administration of cases and trustees" in all bankruptcy cases within his or her region through the exercise of a range of oversight responsibilities. 28 U.S.C. §586(a)(3). See generally, Morgenstern v. Revco, D.C., Inc. (In re Revco D.S. Inc.), 898 F. 2d 498, 500 (6th Cir. 1990)(explaining that United States trustees oversee the bankruptcy process, protect the public interest, and ensure that bankruptcy cases are conducted according to law.). United States trustees may raise, appear, and be heard on any issue in any case or proceeding under Title 11. 11 U.S.C. § 307; See also In re Revco, D.S, Inc., 898 F. 2d at 499-500 (upholding broad appellate standing of United States trustees). Section 707(b) explicitly authorizes United States Trustees to move to dismiss debtors' chapter 7 bankruptcy cases. In addition, when the United States Trustee determines that the presumption of abuse arises under the means test, section 704(b)(2) requires Unites States Trustees to either file a motion to dismiss under section 707(b) or file a statement setting forth the reasons the United States Trustee does not consider such a motion to be appropriate.

of Mr. Adams' bankruptcy case based upon the United States Trustee's conclusion that Mr. Adams failed that means test. The court below denied the United States Trustee's motion. The court below ruled that Mr. Adams' disposable income was less than the United States Trustee suggested because Mr. Adams could deduct monthly payments on a loan from a 401(k) retirement plan under section 707(b)(2)(A)(iii). This additional expense allowed Mr. Adams to pass the means test and obtain chapter 7 relief. Given that ruling, the issue presented to this Court for determination on appeal from the May 4, 2007, order denying the section 707(b) motion to dismiss is: Whether the bankruptcy court erred in ruling that Mr. Adams' voluntary loan repayments to a retirement plan constituted an expense under 11 U.S.C. § 707(b)(2)(A)(iii) that reduced his net disposable income to enable him to pass section 707(b)'s means test?

STANDARD OF REVIEW

On appeal, "conclusions of law are reviewed de novo, findings of fact are reviewed for clear error, and mixed questions of fact and law are reviewed de novo." In re National Gypsum Co., 208 F. 3d 498, 503 (5th Cir. 2000). Whether 11 U.S.C. § 707(b)(2)(A)(iii) permits debtors to claim an expense for loan repayments to a retirement plan and whether the presumption of abuse arose under 11 U.S.C. § 707(b)(2) are issues of law subject to de novo review.

STATEMENT OF THE CASE

On June 26, 2006 Nick O. Adams filed for bankruptcy protection under chapter 7 of the Bankruptcy Code. (Bankruptcy Docket Entry Number 1, hereafter "Dkt. 1"). On November 20, 2006, the United States Trustee filed a motion to dismiss Mr. Adams' case on two independent grounds: (1) Mr. Adams' monthly disposable income, when properly calculated, was sufficient to give rise to a presumption of abuse that mandated dismissal of his case under 11 U.S.C. §

707(b)(2); and (2) the totality of Mr. Adams' financial circumstances demonstrated abuse under 11 U.S.C. § 707(b)(3) because he had sufficient means to repay a meaningful portion of his debts. Dkt. 32.

On May 4, 2007, the bankruptcy court entered an order denying the United States Trustee's motion to dismiss Mr. Adams' case as a presumed abuse of chapter 7, concluding that 11 U.S.C. § 707(b)(2)(A)(iii) authorized him to claim as an expense his average monthly payments on account of a retirement plan loan. Dkt. 47. The court also denied the United States Trustee's request for relief under 11 U.S.C. § 707(b)(3). Id. The United States Trustee then timely filed this appeal, which appeals only on section 707(b)(2) grounds.[2] Dkt. 49.

STATEMENT OF FACTS

I. Statutory Framework

This appeal involves the interpretation of provisions added to the Bankruptcy Code, 11 U.S.C. § 101, et seq., by the Bankruptcy Abuse Prevention and Consumer Protection Act of 2005.[3] The 2005 Act significantly amended the Bankruptcy Code, including a new means test for determining whether granting a discharge to a chapter 7 individual debtor with primarily consumer debts would be an abuse. The means test is the "heart" of the 2005 Act's consumer bankruptcy reforms and acts as a "screening mechanism . . .to ensure that debtors repay creditors

[2] On April 30, 2007, before the bankruptcy court denied the motion to dismiss, the court clerk's office erroneously entered an order granting Mr. Adams a discharge. Dkt. No. 45. In an order dated May 21, 2007, the bankruptcy court vacated the April 30 discharge order "as having been entered prematurely through administrative error" because Federal Rule of Bankruptcy Procedure 4004(c)(D) provides that a discharge order should not be entered when a motion to dismiss the case under section 707(b) is pending. Dkt. No. 52.

[3] Pub. L. No. 109-8, 119 Stat. 23 (2005). The 2005 Act applies to Mr. Adams' case, because the act's general effective date is for cases filed on or after October 17, 2005.

the maximum they can afford." H.R. Rep. 109-31 at 1 (I)(2005), as reprinted in 2005 U.S.C.C.A.N. 88, 89. Legislative history to the 2005Act reveals that Congress meant to prevent debtors from obtaining chapter 7 relief if they had an ability to repay their creditors. Although "some bankruptcy debtors are able to repay a significant portion of their debts," Congress acted because existing law had "no clear mandate requiring these debtors to repay their debts." Id. at 5 and n. 18, as reprinted in 2005 U.S.C.C.A.N. 88, 92.

Prior to the 2005 Act, section 707(b) authorized dismissal based on a finding that granting a discharge of debts would be a "substantial abuse" of chapter 7. Section 707(b) now authorizes dismissal where the court finds that granting of relief merely would be an "abuse" of chapter 7 under the circumstances described in newly added subsections (b)(2) and (b)(3). Before the 2005 amendment, section 707(b) also required courts to presume that a debtor was entitled to relief under chapter 7 of the Bankruptcy Code. Section 707(b) repealed this former presumption and replaced it with a new presumption: a case will be presumed to be an "abuse" of chapter 7 if a detailed mathematical formula set out in the statute, commonly referred to as the "means test," yields a minimum amount of monthly disposable income. See 11 U.S.C. § 707(b)(2). When a presumption of abuse does not arise or is rebutted under subsection (b)(2), section 707(b)(3) allows the court to find abuse where the debtor filed the petition in bad faith, or the totality of the circumstances of the debtor's financial situation demonstrates abuse.

Section 707(b)(2)'s Means Test

Section 707(b)(2)'s means test requires the bankruptcy court to use a series of calculations when determining whether the presumption of abuse arises. See 11 U.S.C. § 707(b)(2)(A). The means test applies to debtors whose income exceeds the state median. Under it, the court calculates a debtor's "current monthly income" ("CMI") based on the debtor's average income for the six calendar months preceding the month of the bankruptcy filing. See 11 U.S.C. § 101(10A). If a debtor's annualized CMI is below the applicable state median family income, the debtor's case will not be presumed abusive. 11 U.S.C. § 707(b)(7).

When annualized CMI exceeds the applicable median family income, however, as is the case here, section 707(b)(2)(A) requires a calculation of the debtor's monthly disposable income available to repay creditors by reducing CMI by certain enumerated categories of expenses, such as the cost of food, clothing, utilities and health care. See 11 U.S.C. § 707(b)(2)(A)(ii). In addition, the debtor may deduct, inter alia, "monthly payments on account of secured debts," averaged over the 60 months following the date of the petition. Id. § 707(b)(2)(A)(iii).

If a debtor's monthly disposable income, determined by deducting allowed expenses from CMI, is less than $100 per month (or $6,000 over 60 months), the presumption of abuse does not arise. If the debtor's monthly disposable income is equal to or exceeds $166.67 per month (or $10,000 over 60 months), the presumption of abuse arises. If the above median income debtor's monthly disposable income is between $100 and $166.67 per month, the presumption of abuse arises if that amount, over 60 months, is sufficient to pay at least 25% of the debtor's nonpriority unsecured debt. 11 U.S.C. § 707(b)(2)(A)(i).

Every debtor in a chapter 7 case who owes primarily consumer debt is required to file, in conjunction with their bankruptcy schedules and statement of financial affairs, a Statement of Current Monthly Income and Means Test Calculation, Official Form 22A (the "Means Test Form"). 11 U.S.C. §§ 521, 707(b)(2)(C); Interim Fed. R. Bankr. P. 1007(b)(4). In chapter 7 cases, the main purpose of the Means Test Form is to calculate monthly disposable income (ability to pay) following the formula set forth in 11 U.S.C. § 707(b)(2), and determine whether the presumption of abuse arises.

The presumption of abuse under section 707(b)(2) can be rebutted if the debtor establishes "special circumstances, such as a serious medical condition or a call or order to active duty in the Armed Forces" and demonstrates that necessary expenses associated with those special circumstances reduce the debtor's current monthly income below the specified benchmarks. Id. § 707(b)(2)(B).

Even if the presumption of abuse does not arise or is rebutted under section 707(b)(2), a chapter 7 petition may be dismissed for abuse under section 707(b)(3), which requires the bankruptcy court to consider whether "the totality of the circumstances. . .of the debtor's financial situation demonstrates abuse."[4]

Congress enacted enforcement provisions to ensure that these reforms would be implemented. Under the 2005 Act, the United States Trustee reviews a chapter 7 debtor's petition and files with the court a statement explaining whether the presumption of abuse arises under section 707(b). Id. § 704(b)(1). If the United States Trustee determines that the presumption of abuse arises, he or she then files either a motion to dismiss or convert the chapter 7 petition, or a statement explaining why he or she believes such a motion is not appropriate. Id. § 704(b)(2).

II. Factual Background

The debtor, Mr. Adams, is the Vice President of CPI Concrete, and voluntarily

[4] Section 707(b)(3) also requires the court to consider "whether the debtor filed the petition in bad faith." 11 U.S.C. § 707(b)(3)(A).

participates in an ERISA-qualified 401(k) plan administered through CPI Concrete's parent corporation, Railworks Corporation. Dkt. 1., Schedules D and I. On February 17, 2005, Mr. Adams borrowed from his 401(k) retirement account and accepted the terms and conditions of the loan. See Debtor's Ex. 1.[5] Mr. Adams agreed to repay the loan, plus interest, in five years. Id. He also authorized his employer to deduct loan payments in the amount of $76.23 per week. Id. Under the terms of the agreement, Mr. Adams' last 401(k) loan repayment will be due in February 2010. Id.

To ensure repayment of the loan, Mr. Adams granted the plan a lien against 50% of his vested account balance, which he valued at $34,600 as of the date of his bankruptcy filing. Id.. See also, Dkt. 1, Schedule D. If Mr. Adams defaults on the loan, the agreement permits the plan administrator to foreclose upon the plan's security interest in Mr. Adams' vested account balance. See Debtor's Ex. 1. Nothing in the loan documents, however, permits Railworks Corporation to pursue Mr. Adams personally for any unpaid amounts. Id.

On June 26, 2006, Mr. Adams filed a voluntary chapter 7 bankruptcy petition with the United States Bankruptcy Court for the Northern District of Mississippi. Dkt. 1. In conjunction with the petition, he filed a Means Test Form with the court, which he amended on August 8, 2006, to correct an error. Dkt. 3, 11. The amended Means Test Form listed his monthly disposable income under section 707(b)(2) as $64.30. Dkt. 11.

The United States Trustee subsequently filed a motion to dismiss Mr. Adams' petition as an abuse of chapter 7 on two independent grounds. Dkt. 32. First, the United States Trustee argued that Mr. Adams' monthly disposable income, when properly calculated, was sufficient to create a presumption of abuse under 11 U.S.C. § 707(b)(2). Id. The United States Trustee explained that although Mr. Adams listed his monthly disposable income as $64.30, his calculations improperly included a deduction of $381.80 for payments Mr. Adams was making to repay his 401(k) savings account loan. Id. This deduction was improper, the United States Trustee explained, because section 707(b)(2) only allows a deduction for loan payments on account of "secured debts," calculated with reference due to amounts due to "secured creditors." 11 U.S.C. § 707(b)(2)(A)(iii). Id. The overwhelming majority of courts to consider the issue have held that retirement loans are not "debts" under the Bankruptcy Code because the retirement plans have no right of recourse against the debtor.

On January 10, 2007, after the United States Trustee filed his motion to dismiss, Mr. Adams filed a second amended Means Test Form that reduced his 401(k) loan repayments from $381.90 to $330.33. Dkt. 36. This reduction increased his monthly disposable income to $115.77. Id. At the hearing on the motion to dismiss, the United States Trustee demonstrated that once the 401(k) loan payments were removed from Mr. Adams' list of deductible expenses, his monthly disposable income was $446.10 and a presumption of abuse arose under section 707(b)(2). The United States Trustee also explained that even if the presumption of abuse did not arise in this case under section 707(b)(2), the totality of Mr. Adams' financial circumstances demonstrated abuse under 11 U.S.C. § 707(b)(3) because Mr. Adams has sufficient means to repay a meaningful portion of his debts. At the conclusion of the hearing, the bankruptcy court asked the parties to submit post-hearing briefs on the 401(k) loan issue. The court also granted Mr. Adams' request to file an amended schedule of current expenses (Schedule J), which Mr. Adams filed on January 25, 2007. Dkt. 37.

The bankruptcy court denied the United States Trustee's motion to dismiss Mr. Adams' petition as an abuse of chapter 7. The court concluded that Mr. Adams could properly list his 401(k) loan as secured debt on his Means Test Form, and thus had insufficient disposable income for purposes of section 707(b)(2). Dkt. 47. In light of additional documentation provided by Mr. Adams to the Unites States Trustee after the hearing, the United States Trustee was no longer seeking dismissal under section 707(b)(3), and was seeking relief solely under section 707(b)(2). Accordingly, the order denying the motion noted that the "remaining issues" had also been resolved based on documentation that Mr. Adams provided to the United States Trustee's office. Id. This appeal followed.

SUMMARY OF ARGUMENT

The bankruptcy court's denial of the United States Trustee's motion to dismiss should be reversed because Mr. Adams' disposable income, when properly calculated, gives rise to a presumption of abuse under section 707(b)(2). Although Mr. Adams listed his monthly disposable income as $115.77, which is below the threshold dollar amount necessary to trigger the presumption of abuse, his calculations improperly included a large deduction for payments he was making to his employer in order to repay a loan he took from his 401(k) savings account.

Allowing this expense as payments on a "secured debt" under 11 U.S.C. § 707(b)(2)(A)(iii) was improper for at least two reasons. First, as an overwhelming majority of courts have held, a debtor's obligation to repay a loan from his retirement account is not a "debt" within the meaning of the Bankruptcy Code. Second, retirement loans are not secured obligations under section 506 of the Bankruptcy Code because a debtor's interest in his retirement account is not property of the debtor's bankruptcy estate.

ARGUMENT

The court below erred by denying the United States Trustee's motion to dismiss on the ground that section 707(b)(2)(A)(iii) permits debtors to deduct retirement account loan repayments as secured debts in determining ability to repay because such loan repayments are not "debts" or "secured" obligations within the meaning of the Bankruptcy Code.

In this case, Mr. Adams would have failed the means test under section 707(b)(2) but for the fact that the court below allowed him to deduct an improper expense. Specifically, the bankruptcy court allowed as a payment on account of secured debts under section 707(b)(2)(A)(iii) Mr. Adams' monthly repayments for amounts borrowed from his 401(k) retirement plan account prior to his bankruptcy filing. An "overwhelming majority" of courts have held that such deductions are improper under section 707(b)(2), McVay v. Otero, 371 B.R. 190, 195 (W.D. Tex. 2007), for the reasons explained below. By disallowing this improper expense, Mr. Adams fails the means test and his case must be dismissed unless he chooses to convert it to chapter 13.

I. An obligation to repay a 401(k) loan is not a "debt" within the plain meaning of the Bankruptcy Code.

Section 707(b)(2) only allows a deduction for loan payments made on account of "secured debts." 11 U.S.C. § 707(b)(20(A)(iii). As defined by the Bankruptcy Code, the term "debt" means "liability on a claim." Id. § 101(12). In turn, the Bankruptcy Code defines the term "claim" broadly, to mean > judgment, fixed, contingent, matured, unmatured, disputed, undisputed, secured, or unsecured.

Id., § 101(5). The definitions of "claim" and "debt" are "coextensive." Pennsylvania Dept. of Public Welfare v. Davenport, 495 U.S. 552, 558 (1990); Johnson v. Home State Bank, 501 U.S. 78, 84-85 n.5 (1991); S. Rep. No. 989, 95th Cong. 2d Sess 23 (1978) reprinted in 1978 U.S. Code Cong. & Admin. News, pp. 5787, 5809 ("The terms 'debt' and 'claim' are coextensive: a creditor has a 'claim' against the debtor; the debtor owes a 'debt' to the creditor").

Courts have consistently ruled that a debtor's obligation to repay a loan from his or her retirement account is not a "debt" under the Bankruptcy Code. See In re Esquivel, 239 B.R. 146, 152 (Bankr. E.D. Mich. 1999) ("There is a clear consensus that an individual's pre-petition borrowing from his retirement account does not give rise to a secured or unsecured 'claim,' or a 'debt' under the Bankruptcy Code.") see also Eisen v. Thompson, 370 B.R. 762, 769 (N.D. Ohio 2007) (explaining that the "majority view. . .developed over the past 25 years" is that retirement plan loans are not secured debts under the Bankruptcy Code); McVay v. Otero, 371 B.R.190, 195 (W.D. Tex. 2007) (observing that the "overwhelming majority of courts that have addressed this issue" have held that retirement plan loans are not secured debts under the Bankruptcy Code).

This clear consensus is based, in part, on the fact that employer retirement plans generally lack the power to commence collection actions against the debtor, and hence have no enforceable "right to payment" against the debtor, as required by 11 U.S.C. § 101(5). The earliest and most frequently cited case on this point in In re Villarie, 648 F.2d 810 (2d Cir. 1981), a Second Circuit case in which the debtor borrowed money from his account with the state retirement system and listed the retirement system as a "secured creditor." After the debtor filed for bankruptcy, the retirement system sought declaratory relief that the loan was not a "debt" within the meaning of the Bankruptcy Code. The Second Circuit analogized the transaction to "an annuitant's withdrawal from the savings account of his annuity fund" or "an insured's advance from the reserve fund of his insurance policy," and held that it did not create a debtor-creditor relationship that gave rise to a claim under the Bankruptcy Code because the retirement system had no right to sue the debtor if he failed to repay the loan. Id. at 812.

The Sixth Circuit adopted this same reasoning in Mullen v. United States, 696 F.2d 470 (6th Cir. 1983). In Mullen, the debtor had received a "readjustment allowance" from his employer, the U.S. Air Force, pursuant to 10 U.S.C. § 687, when he was released following a force reduction. The statute provided, inter alia, that if the debtor returned to the military, he would not receive any retirement pay until he repaid 75% of the readjustment allowance. The debtor later returned to the military and retired after completing the necessary term of service, but without repaying the readjustment balance. Shortly after he left military service, the debtor filed a chapter 7 bankruptcy petition, and then filed a motion to hold the U.S. Air Force in contempt for violating the automatic stay[6] against collection efforts by continuing to withhold his retirement benefits. The Sixth Circuit rejected the debtor's argument, relying on both Villarie and the legislative history of 11 U.S.C. § 101, which notes that

> [the] definition of "debt" and the definition of "claim on which it is based, proposed 11 U.S.C. § 101(4), will not include a transaction such as a policy loan on an insurance policy. Under that kind of transaction, the debtor is not liable to the insurance company for repayment; the amount owed is merely available to the company for setoff against any benefits that become payable under the policy. As such, the loan will not be a claim (it is not a right to payment) that the company can > assert against the estate; nor will the debtor's obligation be a debt (a liability on a claim) that will be discharged under proposed 11 U.S.C. § 523 or 524.

Mullen, 696 F.2d at 472 (quoting H.R. No. 595, 95th Cong., 2d Sess., 310, reprinted in 1978 U.S. Code Cong. & Ad. News 5787, 6267).

Like the Air Force in Mullen, a debtor's retirement plan administrator has no right to recover any unpaid portion of the 401(k) loan from any source other than the debtor's vested retirement account balance, which is akin to the "prepaid retirement benefit" at issue in that case. As one district court explained,

> Retirement plan loans are qualitatively different than secured debts such as home mortgages and car loans. The retirement plan administrator does not loan the plan participant the administrator's money. It simply deducts the requested loan amount from the participant's own account, and credits the loan payments and interest back to the participant's account. If the participant defaults on the loan, the plan administrator deducts the amount owed from the vested account balance, and repays the loan with this deduction. The participant must treat this deduction as a distribution which is taxable as income to the participant in the default year. The participant may also be subject to an early withdrawal penalty. But, the plan administrator has no right to payment under the Bankruptcy Code.

Thompson, 370 B.R. at 768 n. 10.

Numerous district courts and bankruptcy courts have adopted this reasoning and concluded that retirement loan repayments are not debts within the meaning of the Bankruptcy Code. See, e.g., In re Cohen, 246 B.R. 658, 667 (Bankr. D. Colo. 2000) (explaining that a retirement loan is in essence a debt to oneself); In re Fulton, 211 B.R. 247, 264 (Bankr. S.D. Ohio 1997); Esquivel, 239 B.R. at 149-52; In re Scott, 142 B.R. 126, 127-31 (Bankr. E.D. Va. 1992); In re Jones, 138 B.R. 536, 537-38 (Bankr. S.D. Ohio 1991).

Because a debtor's obligation to repay his retirement loan does not constitute a "claim" or a "debt" under the Bankruptcy Code, the vast majority of courts to consider the issue after the enactment of the 2005 Act have held that debtors may not include payments on such loans as a deduction on their means test under section 707(b)(2). See, e.g., In re Smith, 388 B.R. 885, 887 (Bankr. C.D. Ill. 2008); In re Watkins, 2008 WL 2475749, at *6 (Bankr. D. Ariz. June 18, 2008); In re Mowris, 384 B.R. 235, 237-38 (Bankr. W.D. Mo. 2008); Otero, 371 B.R. at 195-97; Thompson, 370 B.R. at 768-72; In re Masur, 2007 WL 3231725, at *4-5 (Bankr. D. S.D. Oct. 30, 2007); In re Mordis, 2007 WL 2962903, at *4 (Bankr. E.D. Mo. Oct. 9, 2007); In re Turner, 376 B.R. 370, 376 (Bankr. D. N.H. 2007).

These decisions rely both on the plain language of the Bankruptcy Code and on two basic canons of statutory construction. Id.

The first canon requires courts to “presume that Congress is aware and understands past judicial interpretation and practice when it amends the Code.” Mordis, 2007 WL 2962903, at *3 (citing Dewsnup v. Timm, 502 U.S. 773, 779 (1992)). Because the overwhelming majority of pre-2005 Act opinions held that retirement plan loans were not “debts” under the Code, courts “must assume that Congress was aware of this judicial interpretation when it enacted [the 2005 Act] and intended to preserve it.” Id. at *4; see also Thompson, 370 B.R. at 771 (“Because overwhelming case law preceding the 2005 Act held that 401(k) loans were not ‘debts’ under the Code, and because Congress has not expressly said otherwise, the Court must presumed that ‘debt’ retains its pre-2005 Act meaning.”); Mowris, 384 B.R. at 238; Otero, 371 B.R. at 202-03.[7] [7] Indeed, Congress explicitly preserved that interpretation when it added section 362(b)(19), which provides that the automatic stay does not apply to automatic deductions from a debtor’s wages to repay a retirement plan loan, but expressly states that “nothing in this paragraph may be construed to provide that any loan made under . . . a contract or account under section 403(b), of the Internal Revenue Code of 1986 constitutes a claim or a debt under this title.” 11 U.S.C. § 362(b)(19); see also Mowris, 384 B.R. at 238.

The second relevant canon requires courts to presume that "when Congress includes particular language in one section of a statute but omits it in another section of the same Act, courts should presume that Congress acted intentionally in that exclusion." Mordis, 2007 WL 2962903, at *4 (citing KP Permanent Make-Up, Inc. v. Lasting Impression I, Inc., 543 U.S. 111, 118 (2004)). In enacting the 2005 Act, Congress expressly gave chapter 13 debtors the ability to deduct 401(k) loan payments from their disposable income calculation, see 11 U.S.C. § 1322(f), but did not include any similar exemption for chapter 7 debtors. As one court observed, "[i]n light of the amendments sprinkled throughout the Code [addressing 401(k) loans] – especially section 1322(f) – the lack of a 401k provision in section 707 is a glaring indication that Congress did not intend 401k loan repayments to be deducted in Chapter 7." Turner, 376 B.R. at 376; see also Masur, 2007 WL 3231725, at *5 ("Obviously, Congress knew well how to craft direct language requiring courts to treat 401(k) loans as secured debts for purposes of the means test, [but declined to do so.]").

Congress's decision to treat 401(k) loan payments differently under chapter 13 than chapter 7 is consistent with two of the 2005 Act's primary goals: protecting an individual's retirement savings while also "redirect[ing] chapter 7 petitioners into chapter 13 proceedings in order to 'ensure that those who can afford to repay some portion of their unsecured debts [be] required to do so.'" Otero, 371 B.R. at 201 (quoting 151 Cong. Rec. S2470 (daily ed. Mar. 10, 2005); see also Thompson, 370 B.R. at 771 ("Such an approach serves both the Congressional intent to protect retirement contributions and to ensure that debtors repay creditors an amount they can afford, a primary goal of the 2005 Act.").

II. Alternatively, because Mr. Adams' retirement loan obligations are not "secured" within the meaning of the Bankruptcy Code, the court below erred in ruling that the obligations were "secured debts" due to a "secured creditor" within the meaning of 11 U.S. C. § 707(b)(2)(A)(iii).

Although most courts have not found it necessary to reach this issue, the bankruptcy court's ruling should also be reversed because a 401(k) loan is also not "secured" within the meaning of the Bankruptcy Code. See Thompson, 370 B.R. at 770. Section 506(a) applies to all chapter 7 bankruptcy cases,[8] and provides a general framework for assessing whether and to what extent a creditor's claim is secured for bankruptcy purposes. See, e.g., In re Miller, 907 F.2d 80, 82 (8th Cir. 1990). Section 506(a)(1) provides, in relevant part, that "[a]n allowed claim of a creditor secured by a lien on property in which the estate has an interest, or that is subject to setoff under section 553 or this title, is a secured claim to the extent that the value of such creditor's interest in such title, is a secured claim to the extent that the value of such creditor's interest in such property." 11 U.S.C. § 506(a)(1). In other words, a secured claim under the Bankruptcy Code refers to a claim secured by a lien on property in which the debtor's bankruptcy estate owns an interest. See In re Foremost Mfg. Co., 137 F.3d 919, 924 (6th Cir. 1998).

A debtor's interest in his 401(k) retirement plan is not property of the debtor's bankruptcy estate because section 541 defines what property is included and excluded from a debtor's bankruptcy estate under section 541(c)(2), and "any interest in a plan or trust that contains a transfer restriction enforceable under any relevant nonbankruptcy law" is excluded from property of the estate. Patterson v. Shumate, 504 U.S. 753, 758-60 (1992). Moreover, section 541(b)(7) broadly excludes from "property of the estate" "any amount (A) withheld by an employer from the wages of employees for payment as contributions (i) to – (I) an employee benefit plan that is subject to . . .[ERISA] . . ." or (B) received by an employer from employees for payment as contributions (i) to . . . an employee benefit plan that is subject to [ERISA]. . . ." 11 U.S.C. § 541(b)(7). Under this section, any of Mr. Adams' contributions to his 401(k) account are not property of the debtor's bankruptcy estate. See Fulton, 211 B.R. at 263-64 (noting that no case law existed in support of debtors' proposition that their retirement loans were "secured debts" and that the Bankruptcy Code did not transform "this type of transaction – a loan from the debtor's pension fund – into a secured debt giving rise to a right to payment under § 101(5)."). Accordingly, Mr. Adams' repayment obligation on his 401(k) loan is neither a debt nor a secured debt under the Bankruptcy Code, and the bankruptcy court erred by holding to the contrary.

CONCLUSION

For these reasons, the United States Trustee respectfully asks this Court to reverse the order entered below denying the United States Trustee's motion to dismiss, and remand with instructions that the bankruptcy court correctly apply the statutory provisions of 11 U.S.C. § 707(b)(2).

I. INTRODUCTION

The United States Trustee's opening brief established that the bankruptcy court erred when it ruled that 11 U.S.C. § 707(b)(2)(A)(iii) permits a debtor to deduct retirement loan repayments. That error led the bankruptcy court to rule Mr. Adams "passed" the means test of section 707(b)(2). Mr. Adams has proffered several arguments to support the bankruptcy court's ruling, but fails to explain how money a debtor borrows from his own retirement account can ever be a "debt" — much less a secured debt owed to a secured creditor — within the meaning of the Bankruptcy Code. The expense deduction for means test purposes under section 707(b)(2)(A)(iii) is available only for payments on account of "debts" that are "secured," calculated with reference to amounts due to "secured" creditors.

Mr. Adams' retirement plan loan repayments do not qualify as a debt under section 707(b)(2)(A)(iii) for at least three reasons: First, a retirement loan is not a "debt" under 11 U.S.C. § 101(12) of the Bankruptcy Code because no debtor-creditor relationship exists between Mr. Adams and his retirement plan administrator. Second, a retirement loan is not a "secured" obligation under 11 U.S.C. § 506 of the Bankruptcy Code because Mr. Adams' interest in his retirement account was never property of the estate. Third, allowing a debtor to claim retirement loan repayments under the means test would contravene public policy objectives of bankruptcy reform legislation — to require a debtor to repay his debts when he can.

Without the deduction for retirement plan loan repayments, Mr. Adams' monthly disposable income increases to a level in which the statutory presumption of abuse arises. The record reflects that Mr. Adams' monthly 401(k) loan repayment was $330.33. Dkt. 36. If he is not allowed to take this as a deduction on his means test form, his monthly disposable income increases from $115.77 (Id.) (below the presumption of abuse) to $299.62 (Tr. of hearing at 21), which exceeds the $166.67 per month threshold necessary to trigger the presumption of abuse under 11 U.S.C. § 707(b)(2).

II. Section 707(b)(2)(A)(iii) does not permit Mr. Adams to deduct retirement account loan repayments.

A. The money Mr. Adams withdrew from his own retirement account does not constitute a "debt" under the Bankruptcy Code.

In his opening brief, the United States Trustee established that a debtor's retirement loan is not a "debt" under the Bankruptcy Code — a conclusion the Second Circuit has reached, and which the Sixth Circuit has followed. App. Brief at 17-18 [citing In re Villarie, 648 F.2d 810 (2d Cir. 1981) and Mullen v. United States, 696 F.2d 470 (6th Cir. 1983)]. In response, Mr. Adams asks this Court to split with the Second and Sixth Circuits by ruling his retirement account loan is a debt under the Code. He does so under a misplaced theory that the plan has recourse against his property.

Appellee's Brief at 4-5.

Mr. Adams suggests the specific language contained in the underlying "Loan Note and Security Agreement" (attached as Exhibit "A" to Appellee's Brief)[1] ("Agreement") makes his withdrawal a debt. Appellee's Brief at 4. He notes the Agreement gives the creditor the right to sue the debtor which necessarily transforms this retirement loan into a "debt" under the Bankruptcy Code. Appellee's Brief at 5. The Agreement itself contains much the same language as any "garden variety" loan, including the granting of a security interest "in that portion of my vested amount in the Plan (the 'Collateral') equal to the loan amount, which amount does not exceed 50% of my vested account balance under the Plan." Exhibit "A" to Appellee's Brief. It also includes the usual Truth-In-Lending (TILA) Disclosure Statement showing a finance charge of $2,895.67 being added to the amount financed ($17,000.00). Id.

The relevant question here is whether Mr. Adams' withdrawal from his retirement account is a "debt" as that term is used in the Bankruptcy Code. Section 101(12) defines the term "debt" to mean "liability on a claim." In turn, the Bankruptcy Code defines the term "claim" broadly, to mean

Id. § 101(5). The definitions of "claim" and "debt" are "coextensive." Pennsylvania Dept. of Public Welfare v. Davenport, 495 U.S. 552, 558 (1990); Johnson v. Home State Bank, 501 U.S. 78, 84-85 n.5 (1991); S. Rep. No. 989, 95th Cong. 2d Sess. 23 (1978) reprinted in 1978 U.S. Code Cong. & Admin. News, pp. 5787, 5809 ("The terms 'debt' and 'claim' are coextensive: a creditor has a 'claim' against the debtor; the debtor owes a 'debt' to the creditor"). The Second Circuit, in Villarie, and the Sixth Circuit, in Mullen, relied upon this analysis in concluding that the respective loans in those cases were not "debts" within the meaning of the Bankruptcy Code. In re Villarie, 648 F. 2d at 812; Mullen v. United States, 696 F.2d at 472.

The retirement loan documentation in one of the cases cited by the United States Trustee in his opening brief, In re Smith, 388 B.R. 885 (Bankr. C.D. Ill. 2008), bears a striking similarity to the facts of this case. In Smith, one of the joint debtors, Earl Smith, advanced much the same argument as Mr. Adams does here, pointing to the language contained in the underlying loan documents to support his contention there was a "debt" for bankruptcy purposes. The bankruptcy court ruled against Mr. Smith, finding that his plan trustee had no "claim" against him, and hence no "debt" which could be deducted as a "secured debt" for means test purposes. The bankruptcy court in Smith disallowed the retirement loan repayment as a deduction notwithstanding the underlying loan documentation (almost identical to the loan here) containing many of the same provisions as a typical secured transaction (e.g., a TILA disclosure statement and a collateral pledge of 50% of the vested retirement account). "The form of the documentation cannot get around the substance of the transaction, that [Mr. Smith] borrowed his own money." In re Smith, 388 B.R. at 887.

B. No valid right of setoff exists to transform Mr. Adams' transaction into a "secured debt" under 11 U.S.C. § 506(a).

In his opening brief, the United States Trustee also demonstrated that the Mr. Adams' interest in his retirement account is not property of his bankruptcy estate under section 541. App. Brief at 21-22. Accordingly, the United States Trustee argued that the Mr. Adams' interest cannot be a secured claim under section 506(a) of the Bankruptcy Code. Section 506(a) limits a secured claim to the extent of a creditor's interest in the bankruptcy estate's interest in the property.

Mr. Adams' responsive argument focuses on that part of section 506(a) that provides that an allowed claim "that is subject to setoff under section 553 of [the Bankruptcy Code]" is also a secured claim "to the extent of the amount subject to setoff." But section 553 of the Bankruptcy > recognizes and preserves rights of setoff in bankruptcy cases if four conditions exist: (I) the creditor holds a "claim against the debtor that arose before the commencement of the case, (ii) the creditor owes a "debt" to the debtor that also arose before the commencement of the case, (iii) the claim and debt are "mutual," and (iv) the claim and debt are each valid and enforceable.

Code[2] does not create an independent right to setoff, rather it

4 Collier on Bankruptcy ¶ 506.03[1][b] at 506-16 (15th ed. Rev. 2005).

Nor does Mr. Adams have a valid right of setoff under section 553(a). As the United States Trustee has already established, no creditor holds a claim against Mr. Adams. App. Brief at 17.

In addition, even assuming for the sake of argument that Mr. Adams' obligation to repay his retirement loan is a "debt" and the retirement plan's obligation to repay the funds in Mr. Adams' retirement is a "claim," the claim and the debt are not "mutual." In order to satisfy the mutuality requirement, the debt and claim must be owed by each entity in the same right or capacity. "Thus, for example, where the debt of an entity arises from a fiduciary duty, or is in the nature of a trust, there is no mutuality." In re County of Orange, 183 B.R. 609, 619 (Bankr. C.D. Cal. 1995); see Dakin v. Bayly, 290 U.S. 143, 146 (1933) (funds held in trust for a particular purpose may not be setoff against creditor's claims); Fore Improvement Corp. v. Selig, 278 F. 2d 143, 145 (2d Cir. 1960); Cohen v. Savings Building & Loan Co., 896 F. 2d 54, 57-58 (3d Cir. 1990); In re Bob Richards Chrysler - Plymouth Corp., 473 F. 2d 262, 265 (9th Cir. 1973).

[2] Section 553(a) provides, in relevant part: "Except as otherwise provided in this section and in sections 362 and 363 of this title, this title does not affect any right of a creditor to offset a mutual debt owing by such creditor to the debtor that arose before the commencement of the case under this title against a claim of such creditor against the debtor that arose before the commencement of the case . . ."

> This rule has been described in the following terms:
> If A in his individual capacity owes $100 to B in B's individual capacity, and B likewise owes $50 to A, the obligations are 'mutual.' On the other hand, if A in his individual capacity owes $100 to B, but B owes $50 to A in A's capacity as trustee of a trust, or as a fiduciary or agent for some other party, the obligations are not mutual because they are not acting in the same 'capacity.'

5 Collier on Bankruptcy ¶ 553.03[3][c] at 553-34 (15th ed. Rev. 2005).

In this case, Mr. Adams "owes" the plan administrator on account of the money the Debtor borrowed from his retirement account. However, the retirement plan's obligation to receive the loan repayments and to remit funds in his retirement account creates no mutual claim because, as Collier on Bankruptcy explains, it arises from a fiduciary obligation. See also In re Jones, 107 B.R. 888, 899 (Bankr. N.D. Miss. 1989) (Commodity Credit Corporation could not offset pecan disaster payments owed by it to sole proprietorship owned by individual debtor against deficiency obligation owed by corporate debtor owned 100% by individual debtor because there was no mutuality of debts).

Because no setoff rights exist and because the Mr. Adams' bankruptcy estate does not have any interest in his retirement account, no secured debt exists under section 506(a) of the Bankruptcy Code.

III. CONCLUSION

For these reasons, the United States Trustee respectfully asks this Court to reverse the order denying the motion to dismiss the case entered in the bankruptcy court and remand this case for further proceedings.

STATEMENT OF JURISDICTION

On February 12, 2010, the United States Bankruptcy Court for the Northern District Court of New York issued an order pursuant to 11 U.S.C. § 1112 dismissing the bankruptcy case of the Appellant, Adirondack Mines Inc. ("Adirondack"). (Bankr. Dkt. 77). On February 19, Adirondack timely filed a notice of appeal under 28 U.S.C. § 158(c)(2) and Fed. R. Bankr. P. 8002(a). (Bankr. Dkt. 82). An order of dismissal is a final order of the bankruptcy court. Pellegrino v. Boyajian (In re Pellegrino), 423 B.R. 586, 589 (B.A.P. 1st Cir. 2010). This Court has jurisdiction to hear the appeal pursuant to 28 U.S.C. § 158(a)(1).

ISSUE PRESENTED

1. Did the bankruptcy court abuse its discretion under 11 U.S.C. § 1112(b) when it dismissed Adirondack's bankruptcy case?

STANDARD OF REVIEW

Adirondack presents the standard of review for this court as de novo. (App. Br. at 1). This is incorrect. The bankruptcy court dismissed Adirondack's case on the basis of bad faith in filing. (Bankr. Dkt. 89 at 5). The bankruptcy court's determination of bad faith is a factual finding that is reviewed for clear error. Squires Motel, LLC v. Gance, 426 B.R. 29, 34 (N.D.N.Y. 2010) (Sharpe, J.). A bankruptcy court's decision to dismiss on the basis of bad faith is reviewed for an abuse of discretion. Id.; see also C-TC 9th Ave. P'Ship v. Norton Co. (In re C-TC 9th Ave. P'ship), 113 F.3d 1304, 1312 (2d Cir. 1997) ("Based on these factors, the bankruptcy court did not abuse its discretion in dismissing C-TC's petition for bad faith.").

STATUTORY BACKGROUND

"[A]bsent unusual circumstances specifically identified by the court," section 1112(b)(1) of Bankruptcy Code requires a bankruptcy court, upon a the request of a party in interest, to convert a bankruptcy case under another chapter to a chapter 7 case or dismiss the case "if the movant establishes cause." 11 U.S.C. § 1112(b)(1). The United States Trustee is authorized by statute to file motions to convert or dismiss bankruptcy cases. See 28 U.S.C. § 586(a)(8).

Subsection 1112(b)(4) of the Bankruptcy Code provides a list of what constitutes "cause" to convert or dismiss a case. 11 U.S.C. § 1112(b)(4). "[T]his list is illustrative, not exhaustive." In re C-TC 9th Ave. P'ship, 113 F.3d at 1311; see also 11 U.S.C. § 102(3) (defining the term "includes" as used, inter alia, in section 1112(b)(4)'s list of bases for dismissal as "not limiting"). Bad faith, or the absence of good faith, is a well established basis for dismissal for cause. In re C-TC 9th Ave. P'ship, 113 F.3d at 1310; In re Copy Crafters Quickprint, Inc., 92 B.R. 973, 985 (Bankr. N.D.N.Y. 1988).

STATEMENT OF THE CASE

Adirondack is a New York corporation formed March 19, 2009. (Bankr. Dkt. 56 at Ex. A). On June 18, 2009, 91 days after it was formed, Adirondack filed a voluntary bankruptcy petition under chapter 11 of the United States Bankruptcy Code. (Bankr. Dkt. 1). The president and sole shareholder of Adirondack is Ms. Christine Thomas. (Id. at 3, 4).

I. The Las Vegas Properties.

In its Schedules and Statement of Financial Affairs filed with its petition, Adirondack lists six assets: five rental properties in Las Vegas, Nevada; and a "[c]laim against State of New York for failure to renew mining permit in Groton, NY." (Id. at 9, 11). Four of the properties were transferred by quitclaim deed from Ms. Thomas to Adirondack on April 1, 2009. (Bankr. Dkt. 40 at Ex. 1). The fifth property was transferred that same day by grantors listing the same address as Ms. Thomas. (Id.). Each of the quitclaim deeds recite consideration of between $150,000 and $765,000. (Id.). There is no evidence, however, that Adirondack actually made any payments to the grantors.

Each of the five properties is subject to a note and deed of trust executed by Ms. Thomas or her husband, Anthony Thomas, or both. (Bankr. Dkt. 68 at Exs. B-D, F, H).[1] The secured creditor listed on Adirondack's schedules for these properties is Countrywide Home Loans ("Countrywide"). Countrywide's loans were transferred in November 2008 to Bank of America, N.A. ("Bank of America").[2] (Bankr. Dkt. 68 at 1-2 and Ex. A). BAC Home Loan Servicing, L.P. ("BAC") is the loan servicer on behalf of Bank of America for loans previously held by Countrywide. (Id.). Consequently, the secured creditor for present purposes is BAC.

Section 13 of each of the deeds of trust requires approval by the lender of any successor in interest to the borrower. (E.g., id. at Ex. B). Section 18 of each of the deeds of trust permits the lender to require "immediate payment in full of all sums" in the event that "all or any part of the Property is sold or transferred without Lender's prior written consent." (Id.). This provision of the deeds is known as a "due on sale" clause. In an affidavit filed with the bankruptcy court, Ms. Thomas informed the court that she did not notify or seek the consent of Countrywide or

[1] Two of the properties are also the security interests for home equity lines of credit. (Bankr. Dkt. 68 at Exs. E, G).

[2] Bank of America acquired Countrywide's parent, Countrywide Financial Corporation on July 1, 2008. Bank Of America Completes Countrywide Acquisition, Bus. Rev. (Albany), July 1, 2008, available at 2008 WLNR 12350796. Bank of America is the ultimate parent of Countrywide.

BAC prior to transferring the properties to Adirondack. (Bankr. Dkt. 65 at Ex. A).

II. The Mining Permit Claim.

The final asset held by Adirondack is a "[c]laim against State of New York for failure to renew a mining permit in Groton, NY," valued by Adirondack at $950,000. (Bankr. Dkt. 1 at 11). The claim was acquired from International Mining, Inc. in exchange for a promissory note in the amount of $950,000. (Bankr. Dkt. 1 at 6). The mining permit at issue involved gravel mining rights.[3] In 2003, an earlier holder of the permit, Internetworkone.com, Inc. initiated an adversary proceeding against the New York State Department of Environmental Conservation in its own bankruptcy case in the United States Bankruptcy Court for the District of Nevada claiming the Department had improperly revoked the permit prior to its 2004 expiration date. Internetworkone.com, Inc. v. Crotty, 03-01006 (Bankr. D. Nev.). In August 2004, the bankruptcy court issued an order abstaining from hearing the adversary proceeding. (03-01006 Bankr. Dkt. 53).

There is no evidence that Adirondack has ever commenced litigation against the State of New York regarding this claim. The United States Trustee submitted to the bankruptcy court a declaration of Phillip Lodico, deputy counsel for the New York State Department of Environmental Conservation. (Bankr. Dkt. 55). In his declaration, Mr. Lodico stated that he found, after review of the Department's files from 1988 until August 2009, no evidence that Adirondack had filed any legal proceeding against the Department or the State of New York.

[3] In its Schedules and Statement of Financial Affairs, Adirondack lists its business as "[m]ining, sand and gravel exploration; real estate investment and management." (Bankr. Dkt. 1, at 4). There is no evidence, however, that other than holding the rights to pursue a legal claim involving a mining permit, that Adirondack, a company with no employees, is actually involved in the business of mining, or sand and gravel exploration.

(Id.).

III. Adirondack's Monthly Operating Reports and Plan of Reorganization.

Adirondack filed monthly operating reports with the bankruptcy court for July through December 2009. (Bankr. Dkts. 16, 17, 20, 38, 53, 63). These reports show that Adirondack has made no mortgage payments on the Las Vegas properties. (Id.). In its December 2009 monthly operating report, Adirondack listed cumulative post-petition receipts of $30,355 and $88,578 in unpaid cumulative post-petition mortgage payments. (Bankr. Dkt. 63 at 8, 12). Under that section of the operating report where the debtor is instructed to "[e]xplain how and when the Debtor intends to pay any past due post-petition debts," Adirondack wrote only that "[s]ecured [d]ebts have not been paid." (Id. at 12).

On November 10, 2009, Adirondack filed an amended motion to abandon two of the properties. (Bankr. Dkt. 30). Six days later, Adirondack filed a plan of reorganization. (Bankr. Dkt. 33). This plan proposed recasting the mortgages on the remaining properties as 30 year fixed interest mortgages at a rate of prime on the date the plan is effective plus one percent. As of the date Adirondack filed its plan of reorganization, the prime rate was 3.25%.[4] At the time the plan was filed, the interest rate for the loans securing two of the properties Adirondack did not seek to abandon was fixed at 6.25%. (Bankr. Dkt. 68 at Ex. B, D). The third property was subject to an adjustable interest rate calculated by reference to the LIBOR plus 2.25%. (Id. at Ex. H). On December 2, 2009, the United States Trustee filed an objection to Adirondack's disclosure statement and plan of reorganization. (Bankr. Dkt. 39). On January 13, 2010, BAC filed an objection to Adirondack's motion to abandon. (Bankr. Dkt. 57).

IV. The United States Trustee's Motion to Dismiss.

On November 9, 2009, the United States Trustee moved to dismiss Adirondack's case for cause pursuant to pursuant to 11 U.S.C. § 1112(b). (Bankr Dkt. 27). The United States Trustee asserted three principal bases for the motion. First, that Adirondack had acted in bad faith in filing the case. (Id. at 1). Second, that there existed "'substantial or continuing loss to or diminution of the estate and the absence of a reasonable likelihood of rehabilitation.'" (Id.) (citing 11 U.S.C. § 1112(b)(4)(A)). Third, that Adirondack had failed "to timely file a disclosure statement and plan." (Id.) (citing 11 U.S.C. § 1112(b)(4)(J)).

Adirondack filed a response to this motion on December 4, 2009. (Bankr. Dkt. 40). In response to the United States Trustee's argument that it had failed to timely file a disclosure statement and plan, Adirondack noted that after the motion to dismiss it had filed a disclosure statement and plan and that there was no court ordered date for filing the statement or plan. (Id. at 1, 2). Adirondack also disputed the United States Trustee's claim that it had filed for bankruptcy in bad faith and challenged the United States Trustee's assertion that is was afflicted with "new debtor syndrome." (Id. at 3-5). In the course of doing so, Adirondack acknowledged the reason for its formation: "The fact that the debtor was formed months prior to its bankruptcy filing and that the bankruptcy filing was timed to prevent a sale at foreclosure is not itself an indication of bad faith." (Id. at 5).

A hearing was held on the United States Trustee's motion on December 9, 2009 and supplemental briefing ordered by the bankruptcy court on jurisdictional issues in anticipation of a further hearing on January 20, 2010. (Bankr. Dkt. 95). The United States Trustee submitted its supplemental briefing on January 7. (Bankr. Dkt. 55). Adirondack filed a reply on January 13. (Bankr. Dkt. 56).

V. The Bankruptcy Court's Order of Dismissal.

At the January 20 hearing, the bankruptcy court raised the issue of Ms. Thomas's non-compliance with the due on sale clauses in the deeds of trust. (Bankr. Dkt. 97 at 1). The bankruptcy court expressed concern that the transfer of the properties to Adirondack was accomplished without the consent of BAC in a bad faith effort to invoke the protection of chapter 11:

> [I]f it's clear to me, as I said, that this was artificially created to generate a Title 11 case, then with all due respect to everyone, I'm going to dismiss that as not being filed in good faith.

(Id. at 8). The bankruptcy court directed the parties to file additional briefing addressing the transfer of the properties to Adirondack and reiterated its position that if the transfers occurred in violation of the due on sale clause it would dismiss the case. (Id. at 12-13).

In its filing, Adirondack conceded that no notice had been provided to BAC of the quitclaim transfers of the five properties to Adirondack. (Bankr. Dkt. 65 at Ex. A). As noted above, Ms. Thomas admitted in an affidavit attached to this filing that she did not notify or seek consent for the transfers to Adirondack. (Id.). Nonetheless, Adirondack argued that the due on sale clause could "be cured or modified" in a chapter 11 bankruptcy, and the violation was not sufficient to dictate dismissal of the case. (Bankr. Dkt. 65 at ¶ 8).

BAC also filed papers supporting the motion to dismiss and addressing the bankruptcy court's concern regarding the due on sale clauses. (Bankr. Dkt. 68). In its filing, BAC argued that Adirondack had breached the due on sale clauses and its case should be dismissed for bad faith. (Id.).

On February 10, the bankruptcy court held a third hearing on the motion to dismiss. (Bankr. Dkt. 89). At that hearing, the court dismissed Adirondack's case. Noting Adirondack's admission that it "'was formed months prior to its bankruptcy filing and that the bankruptcy filing was timed to prevent a sale at foreclosure,'" (id. at 4) (citing Bankr. Dkt. 40 at 5), the bankruptcy court held that it could not "countenance the deliberate, strategic breach of an otherwise valid agreement which would be actionable at law and then use that breach as a sword in Title 11, while at the same time, hide behind the protective skirts of the automatic stay found in Section 362." (Bankr. Dkt. 89 at 4). The bankruptcy found "bad faith both in the debtors' acquisition of the property and in the Chapter 11 filing." (Id. at 5). The court also noted that:

> The U.S. Trustee makes many valid points in its own motion to dismiss. However, to even discuss those points dilutes the seriousness of the Court's very narrow sua sponte concerns and even serves to give some legitimacy to a debtor whose short, shadowy existence should never have given rise to a Chapter 11 filing.

(Id.). An order of dismissal granting the United States Trustee's motion was entered on February 12, 2010. (Bankr. Dkt. 77). This appeal followed.

SUMMARY OF ARGUMENT

This Court should affirm the bankruptcy court's order. The bankruptcy court did not abuse its discretion in dismissing Adirondack's case on the basis of bad faith. The underlying factual finding that the case was filed in bad faith was not clearly erroneous. Adirondack is a short-lived corporation with assets consisting solely of properties transferred to it by its sole shareholder in violation of valid due on sale clauses and a latent claim against the state of New York. The conclusion of the bankruptcy court that: a) Adirondack was formed and entered into bankruptcy for the purpose of avoiding foreclosure of properties previously owned by Ms. Thomas, its sole shareholder and; b) Ms. Thomas transferred these properties to Adirondack in violation of the lending documents and then attempted through reorganization to obtain a subsequent favorable modification of the mortgages, is fully supported by the record.

The issues raised in the United States Trustee's motion to dismiss were briefed by both parties to the bankruptcy court and provide additional bases for dismissal. Adirondack is an example of "new debtor syndrome" whereby a newly formed and closely held entity is created to shelter assets and avoid foreclosure. Moreover, Adirondack's monthly operating reports demonstrate that there exists a "substantial or continuing loss to or diminution of the estate and the absence of a reasonable likelihood of rehabilitation." 11 U.S.C. § 1112(b)(4). For these reasons, this Court should affirm.

ARGUMENT

A. The Bankruptcy Court Did Not Abuse Its Discretion in Dismissing This Case For Bad Faith.

After three hearings and a series of briefings by the United States Trustee, Adirondack, and BAC, the district court ordered dismissal on the basis that Adirondack had acted in bad faith in filing this case. This conclusion is fully supported by the record and is not clearly erroneous. Adirondack holds the Las Vegas properties, its principal assets, only as the result of a violation by Ms. Thomas of due on sale clauses in mortgages securing the property that require notice of transfer to the lender and consent to the transfer by the lender. (Bankr. Dkt. 65 at Ex. A). Ms. Thomas has admitted that prior to transferring the properties to Adirondack she neither sought nor received the consent of the lender. (Id.). The bankruptcy court was correct to recognize the situation for what it was: an attempt by Ms. Thomas to divert, in violation of contracts and to the detriment of her creditors, properties at risk for foreclosure to an entity under her sole control which would file for bankruptcy and then use the protection of bankruptcy as a bulwark against the enforcement of the terms of the contract. (Bankr. Dkt. 89 at 4).

The bankruptcy court's decison to dismiss is consistent with this Court's two-pronged test for the establishment of bad faith in filing. Squires Motel, LLC v. Gance, 426 B.R. 29, 34 (N.D.N.Y. 2010). "First, the movant must demonstrate the objective futility of the reorganization process such that at the time of filing there was no reasonable probability that the debtor would eventually emerge from bankruptcy proceedings. Second, in demonstrating subjective bad faith, the movant must show that there was no reasonable likelihood that the debtor intended to reorganize." Id. (citing In re Cohoes Indus. Terminal, Inc., 931 F.2d 222, 227 (2d Cir.1991)).

In the present case, the bankruptcy court was correct in finding bad faith by Adirondack. The objective futility of reorganization is supported by the record. Despite Adirondack's claims to the contrary, nothing in its filings before the bankruptcy court suggest a "reasonable probability that [it] would eventually emerge from bankruptcy proceedings." Id.

Throughout the post-petition period, Adirondack has accumulated substantial arrearages. All of Adirondack's operating reports show that it has not made its current mortgage payments as they became due. Over the course of the operating reports, Adirondack incurred post-petition $88,578 in unpaid secured mortgage debt compared to cash receipts of only $30,355. (Bankr. Dkt. 63 at 8, 12). No portion of these receipts was dedicated to paying down secured debt. Adirondack's monthly secured debt payments are $12,654. (See e.g., id. at 12). Its operating reports show that it had positive cash flow in four of the months covered by the operating reports and negative cash flows in two of the months (including the last operating report). However, even in positive months, cash flow never exceeded approximately 73% of the due, but not paid, secured debt payments for that month.[5]

Adirondack filed its last operating report in January and its financial condition from that time to present is unknown. There is no reason to believe, however, that since January Adirondack has begun the process of paying down post-petition secured debt. In all of its filings since the motion to dismiss was filed (including its brief to this Court) Adirondack has certainly not suggested its financial picture has markedly improved or that it has made any payments on secured debt, surely something Adirondack would be eager to emphasize.

Subjective bad faith also exists. The Second Circuit has listed the following factors as evidence of subjective bad faith:

> (1) the debtor has only one asset;
> (2) the debtor has few unsecured creditors whose claims are small in relation to those of the secured creditors;
> (3) the debtor's one asset is the subject of a foreclosure action as a result of arrearages or default on the debt;
> (4) the debtor's financial condition is, in essence, a two party dispute between the debtor and secured creditors which can be resolved in the pending state foreclosure action;
> (5) the timing of the debtor's filing evidences an intent to delay or frustrate the legitimate efforts of the debtor's secured creditors to enforce their rights;
> (6) the debtor has little or no cash flow;
> (7) the debtor can't meet current expenses including the payment of personal property and real estate taxes; and > (8) the debtor has no employees.

C-TC 9th Ave. P'Ship v. Norton Co. (In re C-TC 9th Ave. P'ship), 113 F.3d 1304, 1311 (2d Cir.

[5] Adirondack's July operating report shows net cash flow of $9,310. (Bankr. Dkt. 16 at 2). In no month did Adirondack's operating cash flow exceed $6,935 or 55% of due, but not paid, secured debt payments for that month. (Id.).

1997) (quoting Pleasant Pointe Apts., Ltd. v. Kentucky Hous. Corp., 139 B.R. 828, 832 (W.D. Ky.1992)).

Adirondack has no employees. Although Adirondack holds more than one asset, the situation is similar to that in Squires Motel, where the debtor held a small number of properties all subject to one secured creditor. See Squires Motel, LLC, 426 B.R. at 31. The principal assets held by Adirondack are properties transferred to it by its sole shareholder and president shortly before it filed for bankruptcy, a mere 91 days into the corporation's existence. All of the properties are secured by loans from the same lender.

Adirondack's only other asset is a $950,000 claim against the State of New York evidenced only by a lawsuit filed seven years ago for a mining permit that expired by its own terms six years ago. Supra at 4. Neither Adirondack nor any previous holders of that claim have demonstrated any interest in pursuing the claim since a bankruptcy court abstained from hearing the claim when raised by another party in 2004. Id. Adirondack has not filed a lawsuit to support the claim and has not provided the bankruptcy court with any evidence it intends to do so. Adirondack's conclusion in its disclosure statement that the asset's value is "speculative" (Bankr. Dkt. 34, Disclosure Statement at 3) is all too accurate.

Tied to this claim is the "nearly a million dollars in unsecured debt" Adirondack points to distinguish it from typical bad faith cases where the debtor has "few if any unsecured debts." (App. Br. At 3) (citing In re Adbrite Corp., 290 B.R. 209, 218 (Bankr. S.D.N.Y. 2003)). Adirondack's "nearly a million dollars in unsecured debt" is the $950,000 promissory note on this dormant claim against the state of New York.

Although Adirondack's principal assets were not yet "the subject of a foreclosure action as a result of arrearages or default on the debt," In re C-TC 9th Ave. P'ship, 113 F.3d at 1311, Adirondack has admitted the purpose for its formation: to avoid the sale at foreclosure of properties held by its sole shareholder. (Bankr. Dkt. 40 at 5; App. Br. at 3). Thus, "the timing of the debtor's filing evidences an intent to delay or frustrate the legitimate efforts of the debtor's secured creditors to enforce their rights." In re C-TC 9th Ave. P'ship, 113 F.3d at 1311. In this case it is not just the timing of the filing that was intended "to delay or frustrate the legitimate efforts of the debtor's secured creditors to enforce their rights," id., the bankruptcy court was correct to conclude that the formation of Adirondack was part of an effort to frustrate secured creditors of its president and sole shareholder.

Adirondack attempts to minimize the breach by Ms. Thomas of the due on sale contracts by suggesting that "[e]very bankruptcy case involves breach of contractual obligations, whether monetary or non-monetary." (App. Br. at 4). While debtors may breach contractual obligations to make payments to their creditors and the reorganization of debtors often involves the reworking of the contractual obligations of debtors and creditors, the contractual breach here is of a different type. While a breach may not categorically deprive a debtor of the right to bring a bankruptcy case, it also does not entitle a debtor to that relief. Here the debtor was formed for the express and admitted purpose of holding assets subsequent to a breach of contract. As the bankruptcy court noted:

> This Court deals with contractual breaches, default and cures every day from individuals who failed to tender their contractually mandated mortgage payments and then propose a cure through a Chapter 13, to a corporation that overexpanded and needs to reject the lease pursuant to Section 365. The difference is that in the above examples, the breach didn't give rise solely to an entree to the bankruptcy process.

(Bankr. Dkt. 89 at 4-5).

B. The United States Trustee's Motion to Dismiss Provides Support for the Bankruptcy Court's Decision to Dismiss the Case.

Although the bankruptcy court's decision to dismiss was based on the breach of the due on sale clauses, it acknowledged the arguments raised by the United States Trustee in its motion to dismiss. (Bankr. Dkt. 89 at 4). These arguments were briefed by both parties and provide strong support for the bankruptcy court's dismissal of the case.

1. Adirondack Filed in Bad Faith and Exhibits New Debtor's Syndrome.

Although the bankruptcy court did not describe Adirondack as such, it is clear the court considered it an example of the subset of bad faith filers who exhibit "new debtor syndrome." The court described the debtor as having a "short, shadowy existence [that] should never have given rise to a Chapter 11 filing." (Id. at 5). Such is precisely the case with new debtor syndrome. "[N]ew debtor syndrome involves a transfer of distressed property into a newly created corporation on the eve of foreclosure for no consideration; the debtor has no assets other than the transferred property; the debtor has no or minimal unsecured debt and no employees or ongoing business and no means to service the debt." In re Diamond Oaks Vineyards, Inc., No. 09-12995, 2010 WL 580099, at *1 (Bankr. N.D. Cal. Feb., 2010).[6] transfer of property to a newly formed entity to avoid foreclosure is not by itself an indication of bad faith. (App. Br. at 3). Adirondack is correct in that courts should not "blindly impute bad faith under such circumstances." Id. at 218 (emphasis added). Nonetheless, the same court noted that "last minute changes in form by the debtor are subject to close scrutiny as possibly indicative of bad faith where such transformation serves to shield certain assets." Id.

Citing In re Levinsky, 23 B.R. 210 (Bankr. E.D.N.Y. 1982), Adirondack argues that

[6] Most cases involving new debtor syndrome involve newly formed entities holding only a single asset. This Court, however, has found new debtor syndrome where the debtor possessed more than one distressed asset. In Squires Motel, LLC, 426 B.R. at 35, this Court recently found new debtor syndrome where the debtor held more than one asset. Other courts have done the same. See also In re Diamond Oaks Vineyards, Inc., 2010 WL 580099, at *1; In re McCarthy, 312 B.R. 413, 418 (Bankr. D. Nev. 2004) (in new debtor syndrome case holding that "[w]hile one of the factors generally listed as evidence of a bad faith filing is that the debtor has only one asset, the Court does not view the fact that there are multiple properties involved in this case as helpful to the debtor.").

In the present case, the bankruptcy court's close scrutiny revealed a clear factual basis for finding bad faith. Here it is not just the transfer of assets to a newly formed entity that suggests bad faith. It is the transfer of assets in admitted violation of an anti-transfer provision to a newly formed entity controlled by the transferor that establishes bad faith. Squires Motel, LLC, 426 B.R. at 35.

Levinsky is also inapposite on its facts. Levinsky concerned the transfer of property from individuals to a newly-formed New York general partnership with the individuals as the general partners. Id. at 216. The court held that the transfer did not impair the substantive or procedural rights of creditors of the individuals because under New York partnership law, the individuals remained as "as liable as partners for their debts as they were as individuals." Id. at 218. Here of course, the transfer was to a New York corporation where a shareholder is not liable for the debt of the corporation. See generally Townley v. Emerson Elec. Co., 178 Misc.2d 740, 742-43, 681 N.Y.S.2d 741 (N.Y. Sup. Ct. 1998).

Moreover, the absence of notice of the transfer also distinguishes this case from Levinsky. In that case, the creditor claimed a fraudulent conveyance of property from a corporation to individuals in violation of an anti-transfer provision. Levinsky, 23 B.R. at 221.[7] The court held that the creditor "had clear notice" of the transfer, the transfer had been accomplished for the benefit of the creditor, and the creditor had raised no issue for ten years during which mortgage payments were made until the individuals transferred their interest to a general partnership and filed for bankruptcy. Id. In the present case, there was not "clear notice" to the lender. There was no notice at all.

2. There Exists Substantial or Continuing Loss to or Diminution of the Estate and the Absence of a Reasonable Likelihood of Rehabilitation Which Forms a Sufficient Alternative Basis for Affirming the Bankruptcy Court Under 11 U.S.C. § 1112(b)(4)(A).

The monthly operating reports submitted by Adirondack justify dismissal on the basis that there exists a "substantial or continuing loss to or diminution of the estate and the absence of a reasonable likelihood of rehabilitation." 11 U.S.C. § 1112(b)(4)(A). The United States Trustee argued this basis for dismissal to the bankruptcy court and believes that it provides support for the bankruptcy court's decision to dismiss Adirondack's case.

Adirondack, however, claims in its brief that "[n]o one made any allegation of gross mismanagement or even a continuing loss to the Estate, § 1112(4)(b)(A) and (B) [sic]." (App. Br. at 2). This is incorrect. The United States Trustee has repeatedly advanced continuing loss to the estate as a basis for dismissal. The first argument advanced in the United States Trustee's motion to dismiss was that "sufficient facts under 11 U.S.C. § 1112(b)(4)(A) . . . exist to convert or dismiss this case." (Bankr. Dkt. 27 at 5, ¶¶ 20-22). The United States Trustee again referred to this basis for dismissal in its Second Supplement and in two hearings on the motion. (Bankr. Dkt. 67 at 4; Bankr. Dkt. 95 at 8; Bankr. Dkt. 97 at 10).

For the same reasons that objective bad faith exists in the filing of this case, there is also continuing and substantial loss to the estate. Throughout the period covered by the operating reports, Adirondack continued to accrue outstanding secured debt, well outstripping any cash flow or proceeds from the rental of its properties. *Taub v. Taub (In re Taub),*427 B.R. 208, 231 (Bankr. E.D.N.Y. 2010) ("One indication of continuing loss to the bankruptcy estate is negative cash flow after the bankruptcy case is commenced."). Adirondack has made no payments to its secured creditor throughout this case and offered nothing where it was asked in the monthly reports to explain its plan for repaying secured debt. In re Strawbridge, No. 09-17208, 2010 WL 779267, at 4 (Bankr. S.D.N.Y. March 5, 2010) ("[The debtor] Strawbridge continues to [flout] her payment obligations to her secured creditors, causing continuing losses to the estate."); see also In re 3868-70 White Plains Road, Inc., 28 B.R. 515, 518 (Bankr. S.D.N.Y. 1983) (finding continuing and substantial loss to the estate where "[t]he debtor has been unable to make any payments to its first mortgagee during the pendency of this case, which is now over six months old.").

The continual and substantial loss to the estate cannot be rebutted by asserting, as Adirondack does, the mining permit claim as an integral part of Adirondack's plan of rehabilitation. (App. Br. at 4). Whatever merits the mining permit claim may have, courts have tended to disregard the potential effect that recovery from a lawsuit would have on the rehabilitation prospects of a debtor. See In re FRGR Managing Member LLC, 419 B.R. 576, 584 (Bankr. S.D.N.Y. 2009) (collecting cases); In re Rey, No. 04 B 35040, 2006 WL 2457435, at *7 (Bankr. N.D. Ill. Aug. 21, 2006) ("To confirm a plan, a debtor's income projections must be based on concrete evidence and must not be speculative or conjectural. A lawsuit's outcome, though, is always speculative. Without a solid basis for believing litigation is highly likely to generate large sums of money quickly, it cannot provide a sufficiently reliable source of income to support confirmation.") (internal citations omitted); cf. In re Jensen, 425 B.R. 105, 110 (Bankr. S.D.N.Y. 2010) (finding debtor's chapter 13 plan infeasible because it was premised in part on a "speculative lawsuit").

There is no reason to believe that losses to the estate have not continued to present and, aside from its aspirations to solvency, there is no reason to believe that these losses will not continue into the future. Id. at *19 ("The debtor's 'boundless confidence' that reorganization will be successful is not a sufficient basis on which to conclude that rehabilitation is possible.") (citing Hansen, Inc. v. Tiana Queen Motel, Inc. (In re Tiana Queen Motel, Inc.), 749 F.2d 146, 151 (2d Cir.1984)). The record provides ample support for this Court to conclude that "continual and substantial loss to the estate" persists and that the case should be dismissed on that basis.

ON APPEAL FROM THE UNITED STATES
BANKRUPTCY APPELLATE PANEL OF THE SIXTH CIRCUIT

FINAL BRIEF FOR FEDERAL APPELLANT

STATEMENT OF JURISDICTION

This is a bankruptcy case where the United States Trustee appealed from a decision of the Bankruptcy Appellate Panel ("BAP"). The bankruptcy court's jurisdiction in the underlying chapter 11 proceeding was proper under 11 U.S.C. § 157(b)(1). The bankruptcy court authorized Airspect Air, Inc. ("Airspect") to retain Jeffrey Nischwitz and related attorneys ("Nischwitz") as special counsel. The bankruptcy court awarded fees to Nischwitz, who appealed the amount of that award to the BAP. The BAP had jurisdiction over that appeal under 28 U.S.C. §§ 158(b) and (c). On February 6, 2003, the BAP reversed. Airspect's sole interest-holder filed a notice of appeal to this Court on February 27, 2003; that case was docketed as Nischwitz v. Miskovic, No. 03-3303. The United States Trustee filed a timely notice of appeal on April 2, 2003, based on his authority to "be heard on any issue in any case or proceeding under [Title 11]." 11 U.S.C. § 307; In re Pillowtex, Inc., 304 F.3d 246, 250 (3d Cir. 2002); In re Donovan Corp., 215 F.3d 929, 930 (9th Cir. 2000); see also Fed. R. App. P. 4(a)(1).[1] This Court has jurisdiction over this appeal pursuant to 28 U.S.C. § 158(d).

ISSUE PRESENTED

Whether a bankruptcy court that authorizes employment of a professional as special counsel under 11 U.S.C. § 327(e) also presumptively approves that professional's contingent fee agreement as a "term[] or condition[] of employment" for purposes of 11 U.S.C. § 328(a).

STATEMENT OF THE CASE

This case arises from Airspect's voluntary petition for reorganization under chapter 11. 11 U.S.C. § 1101, et seq. The bankruptcy court authorized Airspect, as a debtor-in-possession, to retain Nischwitz as special counsel. Nischwitz applied for fees, but the bankruptcy court awarded only part of the requested amount. Nischwitz appealed to the BAP, which reversed and remanded. On remand, the bankruptcy court again awarded only part of Nischwitz's requested fees. Nischwitz appealed, and the BAP again reversed.

STATEMENT OF FACTS

1. Statutory Background

This case concerns three Bankruptcy Code provisions that regulate the employment of special counsel by trustees or debtors-in-possession.[2] Under 11 U.S.C. § 327(e) ("Section 327(e)"), bankruptcy courts may authorize employment of special counsel if such employment is in the estate's best interest, and if the attorney does not represent or hold any interest adverse to the debtor or the estate with respect to the matter on which the professional is employed.[3]

Payment of special counsel is governed by 11 U.S.C. § 328 ("Section 328") and 11 U.S.C. § 330 ("Section 330"). Section 328 allows, but does not require, bankruptcy courts to approve terms and conditions of employment proposed by the trustee or

[2] 11 U.S.C. § 1107 provides that, in respects pertinent here, "a debtor in possession shall have all of the rights * * * and powers, and shall perform all the functions and duties * * * of a trustee serving in a case under this chapter."

[3] 11 U.S.C. § 327(e) ("The trustee, with the court's approval, may employ, for a specific special purpose * * * an attorney that has represented the debtor, if in the best interest of the estate, and if such attorney does not represent or hold any interest adverse to the debtor or to the estate with respect to the matter on which such attorney is to be employed.").

debtor-in-possession if they are "reasonable."[4] If the bankruptcy court chooses to approve specific employment terms, those terms must be followed, and cannot be changed by the bankruptcy court unless they "prove to have been improvident in light of developments not capable of being anticipated at the time." 11 U.S.C. § 328(a).

If a bankruptcy court does not approve specific employment terms, or if such terms prove improvident, compensation is determined by the bankruptcy court under Section 330, after notice and a hearing.[5] Section 330 allows bankruptcy courts to award reasonable compensation to approved professionals for "actual, necessary services rendered" and "actual, necessary expenses." 11 U.S.C. § 330.

[4] 11 U.S.C. § 328 ("The trustee, * * * with the court's approval, may employ [special counsel] * * * on any reasonable terms and conditions of employment, including on a retainer, on an hourly basis, or on a contingent fee basis. * * * [T]he court may allow compensation different from the compensation provided under such terms and conditions after the conclusion of such employment, if such terms and conditions prove to have been improvident in light of developments not capable of being anticipated at the time of the fixing of such terms and conditions.").

[5] 11 U.S.C. § 330 ("After notice * * * and a hearing, and subject to [Section 328], * * * the court may award to [special counsel] * * * (1) reasonable compensation for actual, necessary services rendered * * * based on the nature, the extent, and the value of such services, the time spent on such services, and the cost of comparable services other than in a case under this title; and (2) reimbursement for actual, necessary expenses.").

2. Factual Background

Airspect Air, Inc. provided aircraft services at the Akron-Fulton International Airport, and held a lease with the City of Akron prescribing rent and fees for use of the airport. When legal disputes arose concerning the lease, Airspect sued the City of Akron in state court. (R. 161 at 2, J.A. 397) In December 1995, Airspect's counsel withdrew from that litigation, and Airspect retained Nischwitz. In turn, Nischwitz referred Airspect to a bankruptcy attorney, and on March 13, 1996, Airspect filed for chapter 11 reorganization. The state lawsuit concerning the lease was stayed and transferred to federal bankruptcy court as an adversary proceeding in the chapter 11 reorganization. (R. 191 at 3-4, J.A. 418-419)

During the bankruptcy proceedings, Airspect administered its affairs as a "debtor in possession." See 11 U.S.C. § 1107. (R. 19 at 1, J.A. 26) On May 3, 1996, Airspect applied to the bankruptcy court for authorization to employ Nischwitz as special counsel to handle issues concerning the prior state lawsuit. See 11 U.S.C. § 327(e) (governing the appointment of special counsel). Airspect's application requested a $7000 retainer and indicated that "[f]ees, other than expenses, are to be paid on a contingency basis and are subject to approval by this court. The fee agreement states 33% [sic] if settled at least two weeks before trial; 40% if within two weeks of trial or, after commencement of trial; 50% if post-trial or re-trial.” On May 20, 1996, the bankruptcy court issued an order authorizing Nischwitz’s employment, and allowing payment of the $7000 retainer. The order also directed “Nischwitz * * * [to] submit application for fees to this Court for approval.” (R. 24 at 1, J.A. 30) In July 1999, the chapter 11 proceedings concluded when the bankruptcy court granted Airspect’s motion to settle the case and sell the estate’s assets. Airspect surrendered the leased property and received $575,000 from the City. (R. 208 at 3, J.A. 457)

On February 2, 2000, Nischwitz applied to the bankruptcy court for $189,750 in fees (33% of Airspect’s total payment). Objections were filed by Airspect’s sole interest-holder, Spasoje Miskovic. (R. 191 at 7, J.A. 422) On February 28, 2000, the U.S. Trustee filed comments suggesting that the amount of Nischwitz’s fees was “a two party dispute” that should be “resolved by the Court” using standards of “reasonableness.” (R. 144 at 1-2, J.A. 211-212) On March 6, 2000, the U.S. Trustee commented that he had no objection to the amount of Nischwitz’s fee request.[6] (R. 146 at 1, J.A. 392) At that time, there was no dispute that Nischwitz’s fees would be determined pursuant to [6] The U.S. Trustee interprets his second comment, which was filed four days after a hearing on Nischwitz’s fees, as reasserting the views expressed in the first comment, namely, that the precise amount of Nischwitz’s fees constitutes a two party dispute to be resolved by the court according to standards of reasonableness.

Section 330’s standard of “reasonableness.” On September 23, 2000, the bankruptcy court held that Nischwitz’s fees were not compensable under the contingent fee agreement, and the court awarded Nischwitz $37,050 for “actual and necessary” services under Section 330. (R. 191 at 8, J.A. 423)

Nischwitz appealed, and on August 10, 2001, the BAP reversed. The BAP held that the bankruptcy court had, in its initial order authorizing Nischwitz’s employment, implicitly “approved the retention agreement * * * between Nischwitz and the Debtor” as a term or condition of employment under Section 328. (R. 191 at 5, J.A. 420) Because the BAP concluded that the contingent fee had been approved as a term of employment under Section 328, the BAP held that the bankruptcy court had erred in awarding fees using Section 330’s reasonableness standard. Accordingly, the BAP determined that Nischwitz must be paid according to his fee agreement unless the agreement was “improvident” as that term is used in Section 328. Because the bankruptcy court had not made any findings of improvidence, the BAP reversed and remanded with instructions for the bankruptcy court to apply Section 328. (Id. at 10-11, J.A. 436-37)

On March 29, 2002, the bankruptcy court again awarded Nischwitz $37,050. The bankruptcy court first expressed its view that it had never approved Nischwitz’s fee agreement under Section 328. The bankruptcy court explained that fee agreements may be “approved” under Section 328 only if (i) the application to employ counsel under Section 327(e) unambiguously requests approval of fees under Section 328, and (ii) the court unconditionally approves that application. The bankruptcy court found such approval lacking in this case for three reasons. First, Airspect’s application to employ Nischwitz under Section 327(e) did not invoke Section 328. Second, the order authorizing Nischwitz’s employment did not mention the fee arrangement. Third, all briefs concerning Nischwitz’s fee request had, prior to the BAP appeal, relied only on Section 330, not Section 328. (R. 197 at 11-12, J.A. 437-38)

The bankruptcy court nonetheless followed the BAP’s instructions and applied Section 328. The bankruptcy court determined that Nischwitz’s fee agreement was “improvident” under Section 328, and therefore granted reimbursement only of $37,050 in “actual, necessary expenses” under Section 330. (Id. at 13-18, J.A. 438-44)

Nischwitz appealed, and on February 6, 2003, the BAP again reversed. First, the BAP held that Nischwitz’s fee agreement was not “improvident” under Section 328. (R.208 at 8-12, J.A. 462-66)   Second, the BAP found that the bankruptcy court had “clearly” approved Nischwitz’s contingent fee agreement under Section 328 by granting Airspect’s motion to employ special counsel under Section 327(e). (Id. at 13, J.A. 467) The BAP held that because Airspect's motion to employ Nischwitz under Section 327(e) indicated that fees, other than expenses, "are to be paid on a contingency basis," (ibid.) "[i]f the bankruptcy court had wished to approve his employment on some other basis, it had the duty, in all fairness, to propose a different employment," (id. at 18, J.A. 472). The BAP's conclusion regarding Section 328 was not altered by the bankruptcy court's statement that Nischwitz must "submit application for fees to [the] Court for approval." Rather, the BAP held that the bankruptcy court's reserved right to review Nischwitz's fees was not enough to allow determination of fees by the court under Section 330. (Id. at 16-18, J.A. 470-72) The BAP concluded that "[m]erely reciting * * * that obvious statutory requirements are in effect does not warn counsel that he is being employed on a basis other than the one he agreed to. Thus, where counsel clearly proposes a specific employment and the court wishes to change it, the court should clearly restate the different terms of employment." (Id. at 18, J.A. 472)

On February 27, 2003, Miskovic filed a notice of appeal to this Court from the BAP's decision. On April 2, 2003, the United States Trustee filed a notice of appeal based on his authority to "be heard on any issue in any case or proceeding under [Title 11]." 11 U.S.C. § 307.[7]

SUMMARY OF ARGUMENT

Departing from principles adopted by the Third, Fifth, and Ninth Circuits, the BAP held that Nischwitz's contingent fee agreement was legally binding under Section 328 even though the bankruptcy court neither mentioned Section 328 nor explicitly "approved" the terms of Nischwitz's fee agreement. Instead, contrary to settled law, the BAP presumed that Nischwitz's fee agreement had been approved under Section 328 because the bankruptcy court authorized Nischwitz's employment under Section 327(e). That reasoning conflates distinct legal inquiries under Section 327(e) and Section 328, and misconstrues bankruptcy courts’ gatekeeping function with respect to professional fees.

Under Section 327(e), bankruptcy courts determine whether professional employment is in the estate’s best interest and whether the professional is free of disqualifying conflicts of interest. If so, the bankruptcy court considers the separate question of how such professionals should be paid. Under Section 328, bankruptcy courts may approve proposed terms of compensation if they are “reasonable.” But if specific terms of employment are not approved by the court, Section 330 allows payment only for “actual, necessary services rendered” and “actual, necessary expenses.”

In this case, the bankruptcy court’s May 1996 order authorized Nischwitz’s employment under Section 327(e). But that order never determined that Nischwitz’s fee agreement was “reasonable” for purposes of Section 328, much less did the order “approve” Nischwitz’s fee agreement as legally binding. On the contrary, the order expressly reserved the bankruptcy court’s right to review Nischwitz’s fees. The Bankruptcy Code does not presume that fee agreements are “reasonable” until found unreasonable, nor that they are “approved” unless disapproved. Thus, the bankruptcy court’s silence with respect to Nischwitz’s contingent fee agreement in no way “approved” such compensation under Section 328. Under the Bankruptcy Code, private employment agreements have no necessary effect on determining fees until and unless the bankruptcy court “approves” terms of employment under Section 328. Primary evidence of bankruptcy court approval must be sought in the express terms of the bankruptcy court’s order, and there is no such evidence in this case.

Bankruptcy courts have independent discretion to authorize professional employment and to prescribe the amount of professionals’ payment, and those judgments may be made simultaneously or separately. The BAP was wrong in compelling the bankruptcy court to “use or lose” its discretion to determine fees under Section 330. As Section 330 indicates, bankruptcy courts have inherent authority by default to award fees for “actual, necessary services rendered” and “actual, necessary expenses.” Contrary to the BAP’s ruling, bankruptcy courts do not need to “disapprove” a contingent fee agreement, much less must they propose “different terms of employment” to preserve their authority under Section 330. Accordingly, in this case, where the bankruptcy court’s retention order did not mention a fee agreement, that agreement was not “approved” and does not bind the bankruptcy court under Section 328.

STANDARD OF REVIEW

Bankruptcy courts' decisions regarding attorney's fees are reviewed for abuse of discretion. In re Kisseberth, 273 F.3d 714, 719 (6th Cir. 2001). Whether authorization of employment under Section 327(e) presumptively constitutes approval of fees under Section 328 is a legal question that is reviewed de novo. See In re Federated Dep't Stores, Inc., 44 F.3d 1310, 1315 (6th Cir. 1995).

ARGUMENT

The bankruptcy court authorized Nischwitz's employment and approved payment of a $7000 retainer, as Airspect had requested. But Airspect did not request, and the bankruptcy court did not grant, approval of Nischwitz's contingent fee agreement. Because the court did not "approve" Nischwitz's contingent fee agreement for purposes of Section 328, the bankruptcy court was authorized under Section 330 to reimburse only Nischwitz's "actual, necessary services rendered" and "actual, necessary expenses."

I. The Bankruptcy Code Requires Determination of Nischwitz's Fees Under Section 330.

The BAP reasoned that the bankruptcy court necessarily approved Nischwitz's contingent fee agreement under Section 328 when it approved his employment for purposes of Section 327(e). (R. 208 at 13, J.A. 467) But that analysis, which has not been adopted by any court of appeals, misconstrues the relevant provisions of the Bankruptcy Code. The Code provides two methods for bankruptcy courts to award professional fees. If the bankruptcy court pre-approves specific, “reasonable” terms and conditions under Section 328, those terms are binding unless they are found to have been “improvident.” In the vast majority of cases, however, bankruptcy courts wait until the professionals’ services are rendered, and then approve reimbursement under Section 330 of “actual, necessary services rendered” and “actual, necessary expenses.” The Bankruptcy Code prescribes compensation under Section 330 as a default rule, and assigns bankruptcy courts the discretion to pre-approve specific terms under Section 328. The BAP’s contrary conclusion that “[t]he provisions of § 328 are not exceptions to those in § 330” conflicts with clear statutory text. Compare R. 208 at 17, J.A. 471 with 11 U.S.C. § 330 (authorizing courts to reimburse actual expenses “subject to section[] * * * 328”).

The BAP also failed to acknowledge the difference between general authorization of employment under Section 327(e) and approval of specific employment terms under Section 328. Section 327(e) provides that a professional’s employment must be in the estate’s best interest, and that the professional must not suffer from a disqualifying conflict of interest. Section 328 imposes additional requirements that the specific terms of employment be “reasonable” and that the bankruptcy court exercise its discretion to “approve” those terms.

Airspect’s motion to employ Nischwitz illustrates those different standards. Consistent with Section 327(e), Airspect’s motion to employ Nischwitz contained specific allegations that “[i]t would be in this best interest of the estate to employ Nischwitz” and that Nischwitz had “no connection as relates to the debtor, any of the creditors or any party in interest.” (R. 19 at 1-2, J.A. 26-27) The motion did not, however, contain any allegation under Section 328 that the terms of Nischwitz’s fee agreement were “reasonable.” That omission explains why the bankruptcy court declined to consider whether Nischwitz’s fee agreement was “reasonable” for purposes of Section 328, and declined to “approve” that agreement as legally binding. The issue of reasonableness, which is critical under Section 328, did not arise before the bankruptcy court because both Airspect and the court were focused solely on standards for general authorization of employment under Section 327(e).

The BAP’s statement is unsupported that, in approving Nischwitz’s general employment under Section 327(e), the bankruptcy court “clearly” approved his contingent fee agreement. (R. 208 at 13, J.A. 467) The BAP overlooked the fact that the bankruptcy court’s May 1996 order authorizing Nischwitz’s employment did not mention the fee agreement. The BAP also discarded the bankruptcy court’s explanation on remand that it had not intended to approve the fee agreement under Section 328 when it authorized Nischwitz’s employment. (R. 208 at 11-12, J.A. 465-66)

Instead, the BAP focused on two sentences in the bankruptcy court’s March 2000 decision to award fees under Section 330. First, the BAP relied on the bankruptcy court’s factual observation that “Applicant was retained as special counsel on a contingency basis.” (R. 208 at 13, J.A. 467) Nothing in that statement supports the BAP’s conclusion that the bankruptcy court approved Nischwitz’s fee agreement. On the contrary, the bankruptcy court’s opinion makes clear that its May 1996 order did not intend to approve that agreement. (R. 208 at 11-12, J.A. 465-66) The bankruptcy court’s view of the May 1996 order also finds support in the order’s text, which did not even mention Nischwitz’s fee agreement.

Second, the BAP noted that, in awarding fees under Section 330, the bankruptcy court’s first step was to “assess[] the award of professional fees * * * by reference to [the contingent fee] agreement.” (R. 208 at 13, J.A. 467) Regardless of whether a fee agreement that lacks bankruptcy court approval is a proper basis for determining fees under Section 330, the bankruptcy court’s statement in no way suggests that the fee agreement was judicially approved under Section 328. Indeed, the very decision to apply Section 330 implicitly contradicts such approval.

In any event, the BAP was wrong to focus on two isolated statements from the bankruptcy court’s March 2000 opinion. The critical evidence of what the bankruptcy court allegedly “approved” in its May 1996 order must be the order’s explicit language. The bankruptcy court’s May 1996 order does not support the BAP’s ruling because it does not mention, must less approve, Nischwitz’s fee agreement.

Without legal support, the BAP assumed that a bankruptcy court’s decision to authorize professional employment under Section 327(e) presumptively and implicitly approves any fee agreement that is in place for purposes of Section 328. Thus, the BAP felt justified in asking “[w]hat arrangement did the court approve,” and in replying that Nischwitz’s employment was offered “only on a contingent fee basis.” (R. 208 at 17-18, J.A. 471-72) The BAP similarly declared that the bankruptcy court had a duty to warn Nischwitz if it wished to “change” the terms of employment or “to propose a different employment.” (Id. at 18, J.A. 472)

That analysis is incorrect. The bankruptcy court had no duty to “warn” Nischwitz of any “change[d]” terms of employment because the bankruptcy court had never “approved” such terms in the first place. Indeed, Airspect’s application to employ Nischwitz never requested approval for the contingency fee arrangement, and that application expressly noted that the court would retain authority to review fee requests. Under Section 328, professionals may rely on specific terms and conditions of employment only if a bankruptcy court approves them. Professionals are not entitled to rely on fee agreements simply because such agreements are mentioned by the applicant in a motion before the bankruptcy court — and that is all Nischwitz did here.

Applicants have long borne the burden of showing that their requested fee award is warranted. See, e.g., Zolfo, Cooper & Co. v. Sunbeam-Oster Co., 50 F.3d 253, 261 (3d Cir. 1995). In contrast, bankruptcy courts have never been required to demonstrate that a proposed fee agreement was not approved, in order to preserve their statutory authority to set fees under Section 330. The BAP's contrary ruling in this case finds no support in the Bankruptcy Code, and its upside-down burden of proof would constrain bankruptcy courts' gatekeeping role with respect to professional fees.

II. Decisions From Other Circuits Require Determination Of Nischwitz's Fees Under Section 330.

The BAP characterized its judgment as stemming from the Fifth Circuit's decision In re National Gypsum Co., 123 F.3d 861 (5th Cir. 1997). But in fact the BAP's decision conflicts with rulings from the Third, Fifth, and Ninth Circuits, each of which has applied Section 328 only where a bankruptcy court has specifically approved a term or condition of employment. See Zolfo, Cooper & Co. v. Sunbeam-Oster Co., 50 F.3d 253, 261-62 (3d Cir. 1995); In re National Gypsum Co., 123 F.3d at 862; In re Circle K Corp., 279 F.3d 669, 671 (9th Cir.), cert. denied, 536 U.S. 959 (2002).

Contrary to the BAP's characterization, In re National Gypsum does not support the result in this case. The language of the bankruptcy court's order in In re National Gypsum explicitly authorized professional employment "'upon the terms and conditions of [a] certain engagement letter dated April 16, 1991.'" Id. at 862 (quoting bankruptcy court order) (emphasis added). The bankruptcy court in this case, by contrast, never approved any term of employment except the $7000 retainer. The controversy in In re National Gypsum — which is not at issue here — was whether the bankruptcy court's express approval of terms was contradicted by the bankruptcy court's statement that it "retain[ed] the right to consider and approve the reasonableness and amount of * * * fees on both an interim and final basis." Ibid.

The Fifth Circuit in In re National Gypsum resolved the internal conflict in the bankruptcy court's decision, which approved a term of employment yet asserted discretion to alter that term, by narrowly construing the court's "retain[ed] * * * right to consider and approve" fees. The Fifth Circuit interpreted the bankruptcy court as merely "recit[ing] its control of the compensation in the event of subsequent and unanticipated circumstances affecting the reasonableness of that agreed fee," id. at 863, i.e., as reserving only questions of "improvidence" under Section 328. Even if that were a fair construction of the order in In re National Gypsum, the Fifth Circuit's analysis does not support the BAP's result in this case, because the bankruptcy court here did not expressly approve Nischwitz's contingency arrangement in its order authorizing his employment under Section 327(e).

Moreover, the Ninth Circuit has cogently criticized that aspect of In re National Gypsum. The Ninth Circuit noted that bankruptcy courts do not need expressly to "retain" their authority to review professional fees for "improvidence" under Section 328. See In re B.U.M. Int'l, Inc., 229 F.3d 824, 829 (9th Cir. 2000). Thus, the Fifth Circuit's approach makes superfluous the bankruptcy court's effort to "retain" supervisory review over professional fees. Moreover, the bankruptcy court's language in In re National Gypsum invoked authority to review fees' "reasonableness," which appears significantly broader than mere "improvidence" analysis under Section 328.

Regardless of how this Court would decide a case like In re National Gypsum, the Fifth Circuit's analysis does not support the BAP's decision in this case. Here, the bankruptcy court's order contains no internal conflict because that order does not include any language approving Nischwitz’s fee agreement. On the contrary, the bankruptcy court expressly directed that Nischwitz “submit application to [the] Court for approval” of fees, and the court never indicated approval of the parties’ private agreement regarding fees. Consistent with the face of the May 1996 order, the bankruptcy court’s requirement that Nischwitz submit fee requests for further judicial approval only illustrates that the bankruptcy court did not “approve” Nischwitz’s contingent fee agreement under Section 328 when it authorized his employment under Section 327(e). Even the Fifth Circuit in In re National Gypsum readily acknowledged that terms of employment must be judicially approved in order to be legally binding. 123 F.3d at 862. No such approval occurred in this case; thus, the bankruptcy court’s order cannot reasonably be read as granting Nischwitz a legal right to his contingent fee.

The BAP’s analysis also conflicts with cases from the Ninth and Third Circuits analyzing judicial “approval” under Section 328. The Ninth Circuit in In re B.U.M. International, Inc. refused to restrict a bankruptcy court’s authority to award fees under Section 330, even though the bankruptcy court had explicitly approved employment “under the terms and conditions set forth in the application.” 229 F.3d at 826. The court of appeals reached that result because the bankruptcy court’s order also stated that “‘all fees and costs * * * are subject to Court approval,'" and the bankruptcy court clarified its intent to review the reasonableness of professional fees after the services were rendered. Ibid. Given such conflicting evidence of "approval" and a reserved right to disapprove, the Ninth Circuit concluded that the bankruptcy court had "conditionally" approved the professional's terms of employment, and that the court was not legally bound because it had "not convey[ed] its complete approval under § 328." Id. at 829.

Although the Ninth Circuit's analysis demonstrates an appropriately narrow interpretation of the term "approve," that approach also can be taken too far. For example, the Ninth Circuit's analysis of Section 328 in In re Circle K Corp., 279 F.3d at 673-74, unduly focused on the applicant's retention application, apparently requiring applicants to cite Section 328 specifically. That pleading requirement seems unnecessary under the Code. Because Section 328 turns explicitly on whether the bankruptcy court has "approved" terms and conditions, the primary factor is the court's opinion, not the litigant's application.[8] [8] Indeed, the result in Circle K is supportable without reference to the litigant's application. The bankruptcy court's order stated that the professional should be paid "the amount of $100,000 per month and reimburse[d] expenses as set forth in the Application and Retainer Agreement subject to review by the court in a final fee application to be submitted * * * on notice pursuant to relevant provisions of the Bankruptcy Code." Id. at 672 (emphasis added). Under In re B.U.M., 229 F.3d at 829, that reservation of judicial review is enough to render the bankruptcy court's order a "conditional approval," which does not bind the bankruptcy court's authority to calculate fees under Section 330.

Thus, although the better practice would be for applicants to cite Section 328 explicitly or to otherwise make their intentions clear, the United States Trustee does not view the Bankruptcy Code as requiring any specific form of pleading for that purpose.

The Third Circuit's opinion in Zolfo, Cooper & Co v. Sunbeam-Oster Co., 50 F.3d at 253, rests on similarly solid principles, but its analysis also may go too far in contexts unrelated to this case. The Zolfo court stated that if a bankruptcy court's order does not "expressly and unambiguously state specific terms and conditions * * * that are being approved pursuant to the first sentence of sentence 328(a), then the terms and conditions are merely those that apply in the absence of specific agreement." Id. at 261 (internal quotation marks omitted). Articulating important bankruptcy principles, the Third Circuit explained its rule as:

> a useful and appropriate presumption that prevents courts from being bound to specific terms unintentionally. There is no reason why the burden should be on the court to specify in its order authorizing retention of the professional that it rejects specific terms and conditions. Instead, the burden should rest on the applicant to ensure that the court notes explicitly the terms and conditions if the applicant expects them to be established at that early point. Further, the bankruptcy court's duty to conduct an independent examination of fee applications for services rendered would be unduly restricted if employment authorization orders were routinely construed as binding the court to particular terms of employment.

Id. at 262 (citation omitted); accord In re Engel, 124 F.3d 567, 576-77 (3d Cir. 1997).

The analysis underlying Zolfo is unquestionably correct. But the Third Circuit was perhaps too strict in refusing to allow bankruptcy courts to "approve" employment terms by reference and incorporation within a judicial order. Specifically, although the bankruptcy court in Zolfo had authorized professional employment "as set forth in the foregoing Motion and Affidavit," the Third Circuit interpreted Section 328 as requiring the court explicitly to reiterate the pertinent employment terms in its order, rather than incorporate them by reference. Zolfo, 50 F.3d at 262. Where the bankruptcy court's order explicitly refers to employment terms and endorses them unambiguously, it might seem overly formalistic to hold that such terms are not "approved" unless directly set forth in full.

Accordingly, and consistent with principles adopted in three other circuits, the United States Trustee views the Bankruptcy Code as prescribing a "middle ground" that flatly contradicts the BAP's judgment in this case. The BAP erred in finding that the bankruptcy court had "approved" Nischwitz's fee agreement for purposes of Section 328, even though the court's order never mentioned that agreement — much less approved it. The BAP also erred in placing an unwarranted burden on the bankruptcy court to "disapprove" of any terms of employment it deemed unsuitable, or forfeit its authority to regulate fees under Section 330. On the other hand, proper recognition of bankruptcy courts' gatekeeping function does not require any particular form of "approval" or "magic words" by the bankruptcy court or by applicants seeking approval of employment terms. Rather, Section 328 seems satisfied if and only if the bankruptcy court's order is reasonably read, using standard methods of interpretation, as having "approved" specific terms and conditions of professional employment. Approval of specific compensation under Section 328 may occur within an order that also authorizes employment under Section 327(e), but the BAP legally erred in holding that those different types of judicial approval are interchangeable.

Rejecting the BAP's interpretation of "approve" would also yield practical benefits for the general administration of bankruptcy proceedings. Judges who preside over large bankruptcy cases typically receive many professional employment applications during the litigation's early stages. In the exceptional case, where specific terms of employment are necessary to obtain adequate professional services, an applicant may of course seek approval of those terms at the time employment begins. In many other contexts, however, bankruptcy courts approve professional applications under Section 327(e), but the professionals' fees are restricted to what the court deems reasonable after a hearing under Section 330.

By binding bankruptcy courts to fee agreements that they never intended to approve, the BAP’s rule would force courts and litigants to scour the record before approving any professional’s employment, for fear that a cursory description of some professional’s fee arrangement might inadvertently constrain the court under Section 328. That approach would needlessly increase the administrative costs of authorizing professional employment under Section 327(e), and would incite novel litigation over how much of a fee arrangement must be disclosed for preclusive effect to attach under Section 328.

The BAP’s approach would also risk substantial costs for the estate by forcing bankruptcy courts to “implicitly approve” payment of potentially excessive professional fees. Because debtors are often insolvent, funds that go to their professionals typically reduce creditors’ ability to recover. Indeed, some debtors’ liabilities so exceed their assets that their chapter 11 cases are administratively insolvent, which means that only professional and similar claims receive payment. See 11 U.S.C. § 507 (establishing priority of payments). Even though Airspect in this case ultimately had a surplus so that all creditors were paid regardless of Nischwitz’s fees, more general concerns to preserve estate assets explain why debtors may not hire or compensate counsel without judicial approval, and why bankruptcy courts play such a critical role in supervising professional fees. Bankruptcy courts are responsible for approving counsel under Section 327(e) and for either approving specific compensation under Section 328 at the time employment begins, or determining fees at the end of the case under Section 330. By limiting the bankruptcy court’s discretion and improperly reducing judicial authority to calculate fees under Section 330, the BAP’s rule distorts current bankruptcy practice and risks the diversion of estate funds to pay fees that no bankruptcy court ever explicitly approved.

The United States Trustee submits that the most sensible rule is that prescribed by the Bankruptcy Code itself. Where the bankruptcy court’s order affirmatively “approves” specific terms and conditions of professional employment as “reasonable,” Section 328 applies. Under those circumstances, the bankruptcy court has discharged its proper gatekeeping responsibility, and the professional must be compensated according to those terms unless they prove to be “improvident.” Where the bankruptcy court’s order authorizes employment for purposes of Section 327(e), but does not expressly approve terms for compensating that employment, fee determinations are governed by Section 330’s default rule. Under those more typical circumstances, payment issues are deferred until an evidentiary hearing after professional services are complete, and the professional is compensated only for “actual, necessary services” and expenses.

There is no reason that bankruptcy professionals should receive a special presumption in favor of their fee agreements, and the Bankruptcy Code does not create one. The BAP’s contrary holding is mistaken.

CONCLUSION

For the foregoing reasons, this Court should reverse the BAP’s judgment and should remand for determination of whether the amount of the bankruptcy court’s award under Section 330 was proper.

STATEMENT REGARDING ORAL ARGUMENT

The appellee, John P. Fitzgerald, III, the Acting United States Trustee for Region 1, believes that the Court can decide this appeal on the briefs. Fed. R. Bankr. P. 8012; 1st Cir. BAP L.R. 8012-1.

STATEMENT OF JURISDICTION

The United States Bankruptcy Court for the District of Massachusetts had jurisdiction over Ms. Dora L. Aja's bankruptcy case under 28 U.S.C. 157(b). Appendix ("App.") at 1 - 30.[1] This Court has jurisdiction over Ms. Aja's appeal from the bankruptcy court's March 19, 2010 order denying her third request to reconsider its order converting her chapter 11 case to chapter 7 under 28 U.S.C. 158(a) and (c). Id. at 541.

STANDARD OF REVIEW

Denial of a request for reconsideration is reviewed for abuse of discretion. Aybar v. Crispin-Reyes, 118 F.3d 10, 15 (1st Cir. 1997).

STATEMENT OF THE ISSUE PRESENTED FOR REVIEW

The bankruptcy court granted the United States Trustee's motion to convert Ms. Aja's chapter 11 case to chapter 7, because she failed to insure her assets, to open a debtor-in-possession bank account and to appear at her initial debtor interview. 11 U.S.C. 1112(b). She failed to file a timely appeal from the conversion order. She sought reconsideration three times. The third attempt is at issue here. In order to prevail on reconsideration, a movant must demonstrate newly discovered, material evidence or manifest error of law or fact.

[1] Ms. Aja's appendix omits relevant parts of the record below. The United States Trustee has included these documents in his Appendix and has separately moved to supplement the record on appeal. 1st Cir. BAP L.R. 8009-2.

The bankruptcy court re-opened the record and conducted a plenary hearing on the third request for reconsideration. Ms. Aja admitted on the record that she had converted estate property (rents) that she was required to surrender to the chapter 7 trustee. She also admitted that she had skipped her chapter 7 section 341 meeting. She presented no newly discovered, material evidence and identified no manifest error of law or fact.

Did the bankruptcy court abuse its discretion in denying Ms. Aja's third request for reconsideration?

STATEMENT OF THE CASE AND STATEMENT OF THE FACTS

A. Nature of the Case.

This Court has twice ruled that Ms. Aja did not timely appeal the conversion order and that the sole issue presented here is whether the bankruptcy court erred when it denied her third request to reconsider. App. at 31 - 36.

On March 18, 2010, the bankruptcy court re-opened the record and conducted a plenary hearing on Ms. Aja's third request for reconsideration. Id. at 37 - 66; 532 - 540. As with her first two requests, she presented no newly discovered, material evidence, and she identified no manifest error of law or fact. Compare Id. at 490 - 493, and 500 - 503, with 532 - 540. She admitted that she had converted estate property (rents) that she was required to surrender to the chapter 7 trustee. Id. at 62 - 64. She admitted that she skipped her chapter 7 section 341 meeting. Id. The bankruptcy court denied reconsideration. Id. at 18 - 19; 63 - 64; 541. This appeal followed. Id. at 13; 31 - 36.

B. Statutory Framework.

Individuals file bankruptcy to stop collection actions and to relieve themselves of personal liability for their debts. Like Ms. Aja, the vast majority of people who file for bankruptcy do so voluntarily. 11 U.S.C. 301 et seq.

Individuals may choose to file bankruptcy under chapters 7, 11 or 13 of title 11. Regardless of the chapter, the Bankruptcy Code and Rules impose duties upon them.

Prior to filing, individual debtors must obtain credit counseling from a credit counseling agency approved by the United States Trustee, unless they certify "exigent circumstances." 11 U.S.C. 109(h).[2] They must also file schedules of assets and liabilities and statements of financial affairs under penalty of perjury, appear and testify under oath at an initial meeting of creditors and cooperate with any appointed trustee. 11 U.S.C. §§ 341 and 521; Fed. R. Bankr. P. 4002; MLBR 4002-1.

Under chapter 11, debtors may obtain a discharge only by confirming a plan to repay creditors' claims. 11 U.S.C. 1129 and 1141. They have a 120 day "exclusive" period within which to propose plans. 11 U.S.C. 1121. Creditors have the right to vote for or against plans. 11 U.S.C. 1126. Bankruptcy courts may confirm plans notwithstanding creditors' objections.

Chapter 11 debtors, including individuals, remain in possession of all of their property, and they may continue to operate their businesses in the ordinary course. Chapter 11 imposes numerous, additional responsibilities upon debtors that are not required by chapters 7 and 13.[3]

[2] The United States Trustee has attached relevant statutes and rules to this brief as an addendum.

[3] For example, chapter 11 debtors must account for all property received, examine proofs of claim, furnish information to parties in interest, file reports with the United States Trustee and

Chapter 11 debtors may use cash collateral, which is defined as rents or proceeds of secured creditors' pre-petition collateral, only if they file a written request and receive, after notice and a hearing, court permission to do so. 11 U.S.C. 363 and 364; Fed. R. Bankr. P. 4001. Otherwise, they must escrow cash collateral for the benefit of creditors asserting interests in it.

United States Trustees are officials of the Department of Justice appointed by the Attorney General to supervise the administration of bankruptcy cases and trustees. See 28 U.S.C. 581-589 (specifying the powers and duties of United States Trustees).[4] Congress has expressly authorized United States Trustees to supervise chapter 11 cases and to ensure that the chapter 11 process works efficiently and transparently. 28 U.S.C. 586(a)(3).

United States Trustees have issued comprehensive, written operating guidelines that all chapter 11 debtors, including individuals, follow. Id. The guidelines require chapter 11 debtors to file monthly reports of their income and expenses, to provide evidence that they have insured all of their assets and operations and to use only debtor-in-possession bank accounts for all post-petition

Chapter 11 debtors receive the guidelines soon after they file for bankruptcy. See 3 United States Trustee Manual, ch. 11, Case Administration, § 3-3.1 - 3-3.3.6. United States Trustees review the guidelines with chapter 11 debtors at initial debtor interviews, which are conducted before section 341 meetings. 28 U.S.C. 586(a)(3). United States Trustees conduct chapter 11 section 341 meetings no earlier than 21 days and no later than 40 days after the order for relief. 11 U.S.C. 341; Fed. R. Bankr. P. 2003.

United States Trustees request conversion or dismissal of chapter 11 cases under 11 U.S.C. 1112(b) for cause, including when debtors do not comply with the guidelines and/or violate the Bankruptcy Code, such as by failing to provide evidence of insurance, to open a debtor-in-possession account or to attend the initial debtor interview. 28 U.S.C. 586(a)(8). Bankruptcy courts consider motions under these sections "after notice and a hearing . . . ." 11 U.S.C. 102, 307, 1104 and 1112. Fed. R. Bankr. P. 2002(a)(4).

The Bankruptcy Code defines "after notice and a hearing" as "after such notice as is appropriate in the particular circumstances, and such opportunity for a hearing as is appropriate in the particular circumstances . . . ." 11 U.S.C. 102(1). Bankruptcy courts may exercise discretion to reduce notice periods "for cause shown . . . with or without motion or notice . . . ." Fed. R. Bankr.

C. Factual Background and Proceedings Below.

1. In 2003 and 2004, Ms. Aja acquired two rental properties through an LLC. She then left the country for two years.

Dora L. Aja acquired two rental properties in Worcester, Massachusetts in 2003 and 2004.[6] App. at 68; 85. She paid $375,000 for 92 Hamilton Street. Id. at 85. It had six units. Id. at 99.

Ms. Aja paid $830,000 for 9-11 William Street. Id. at 68. It had 12 units. Id. at 99; 149 - 177.

Ms. Aja owned the properties through an entity called 86-92 Hamilton Street Realty, LLC. Id. at 67 - 106; 149 - 177. At all times, she owned 100% of the equity interest in the LLC and was its sole managing member. Id. at 98 - 99; 132; 343; 380; 406. The LLC had its own taxpayer identification number but no employees. Id. at 133; 139. Ms. Aja "disregarded" the LLC as a separate entity and reported its income on her personal tax return. Id. at 139.

Soon after acquiring the properties, Ms. Aja left the United States "to better herself" and to study medicine. Id. at 149 - 150. She claimed that she did not return for two years. Id.

2. Beginning in 2004, Ms. Aja incurred mortgage and car loan debt, and she refinanced the LLC's debts with Emigrant.

Ms. Aja took out a personal loan totaling $362,500 from Shamrock Financial Corporation on December 20, 2004. Id. at 178 - 192. She secured the loan by granting Shamrock a lien on a condominium located at 22.5 Sigourney Street, Unit F, Jamaica Plain, Massachusetts. Id. At 184 - 189.

On July 13, 2005, Ms. Aja purchased a silver Cadillac STS for $35,103.40 Id. at 193 - 199. She financed the $20,941.85 purchase through Brookline Bank. Id. Ms. Aja listed a Portland, Maine address in the retail installment sale agreement. Id. at 195.

On April 13, 2006, Ms. Aja refinanced the LLC's mortgage debt through Emigrant Funding Corporation. Id. at 98 - 99; 200 - 245. She obtained $625,000 in new loans, which she secured by granting Emigrant mortgages on the LLC's Worcester properties. Id. As additional collateral, she provided Emigrant an assignment of rents. Id.

Ms. Aja took out a personal loan totaling $600,000 from Fremont Investment & Loan on December 13, 2006. Id. at 250 - 279. She secured the loan by granting Fremont a mortgage on rental property located at 103 Townsend Street, Roxbury, Massachusetts. Id.

The record is unclear whether Ms. Aja used the Shamrock, Emigrant and Fremont loans to cash out equity from the properties.

Ms. Aja had difficulty finding a full-time job. Id. at 68 - 70; 85 - 87. She earned only "sporadic" income. Id. She experienced problems in repaying the Emigrant loans. Id. She negotiated with Emigrant. Id. She could not refinance the Emigrant loans. Id. Emigrant published a notice that it intended to foreclose on the Worcester properties. Id.

3. Ms. Aja filed three voluntary chapter 11 petitions for the LLC to prevent Emigrant from foreclosing on the Worcester properties. All of these cases, which lasted a total of 523 days, were dismissed for failure to comply with court orders.

Over a 27 month period, Ms. Aja filed three successive voluntary chapter 11 petitions for the LLC in order to stop Emigrant's foreclosure. Id. at 68 - 70; 85 - 87; 280 - 317. The first case was assigned to Judge Hillman. Id. at 280. The next two cases were assigned to Judge Feeney. Id. at 283 - 317.

The first case lasted 62 days. Id. at 280 - 282. The second lasted 217 days. Id. at 283 - 297. The third case lasted 244 days. Id. at 298 - 317.

Ms Aja affirmed under penalty of perjury in each case that she was authorized, as the LLC's manager and 100% shareholder, to file each petition. Id. at 319; 343; 348; 375; 378 ,380; 385 - 386; 406. Her home address and the LLC's were the same. Compare Id. at 318, and 348, and 383, with 435.

Ms. Aja filed schedules and a statement of financial affairs in each case, executing them as the LLC's manager under penalty of perjury. Id. at 334; 345; 366; 377; 400; 409 - 410. She acknowledged that the net value of the Worcester properties (current fair value less liens) declined from $469,030.12 in the first case, to $268,078.47 in the second case and to $13,000 in the third case. Id. at 321; 349; 398.

Ms. Aja stated that the LLC had made no payments requiring disclosure to creditors, including mortgagees, during the 90 days prior to each filing. Id. at 336; 368; 402. The LLC retained, or applied to retain, counsel in each case. Id. at 280 - 317.

Ms. Aja admitted that she continually collected rents from the Worcester properties in each case. Id. at 332; 381;411 - 424. But she never sought bankruptcy court permission to use the rents as cash collateral in the first case. Id. at 280 - 282. She did not do so in the second for more than four months after filing in the second case. Id. at 411 - 420. She did so in the third case after five weeks. Id. at 421 -424.

Ms. Aja never proffered a disclosure statement and plan of reorganization in any of the LLC's cases.[7] Id. at 280 - 317. The bankruptcy court dismissed all three cases for failure to comply with the Bankruptcy Code and/or court orders, including to file monthly operating reports, to pay quarterly fees and to file disclosure statements and plans.[8] Id. at 425 - 427.

Ms. Aja agreed to the dismissal of the LLC's third case on July 22, 2009. Id. at 427. Emigrant then scheduled a foreclosure sale on the Worcester properties for December 8, 2009. Id. at 68 - 70; 85 - 87; 202 - 203.

On December 2, 2009, the LLC filed an emergency motion to vacate the dismissal of the third case. Id. at 428 - 432. Ms. Aja argued that the LLC could cure its deficiencies and file a plan and disclosure statement within "30-60 days of an Order Re-Opening the Debtor's case . . . ." Id.

[7] She had requested and received an extension to do so in the third case. Id. at 314.

[8] The court dismissed the second case twice. Id. at 284.

The bankruptcy court scheduled a hearing on the motion to vacate for 11:45 a.m. on December 7, 2009, one day before Emigrant's scheduled foreclosure sale. Id. at 316. Ms. Aja took a personal credit counseling course that morning at 10:35 a.m. Id. at 433.

The bankruptcy court denied the motion to vacate. Id. at 317; 434.

4. Ms. Aja transferred the Worcester rental properties to herself and filed her own voluntary chapter 11 petition.

On December 8, 2009, Ms. Aja transferred the Worcester properties from the LLC to herself by quitclaim deed in exchange for $1. Id. at 248 - 249. She filed the deed with the Worcester Registry of Deeds at 9:06 a.m. Id.

Ms. Aja filed her personal, voluntary chapter 11 petition 65 minutes later. Id. at 435. She did not include a telephone number in the blank provided on the petition. Id. at 436.

The case was assigned to Judge Feeney. Id. at 1. Emigrant completed its foreclosure sale at 10:17 a.m., unaware of Ms. Aja's filing. Id. at 203.

In her schedules, Ms. Aja stated under penalty of perjury that her principal assets were her home, a rental property located at 103 Townsend Street, Dorchester, MA, the two Worcester rental properties previously owned by the LLC and her Cadillac. Id. at 453 - 456. She admitted that her total liabilities exceeded the value of all of her real estate and other assets by $243,320. Id. at 452.

In her schedule "I," Ms. Aja said that rents represented most of her monthly income. Id. at 466. In her SOFA, she stated that she had made installment payments totaling $1,800 during the 90 days prior to filing, but not to Emigrant. Id. at 443.

She did not attend her initial debtor interview with the United States Trustee. Id. at 472.

5. Ms. Aja did not appear at the January 21, 2010 hearings on the United States Trustee's motion to convert and her own cash collateral motion.

The United States Trustee filed a motion to convert Ms. Aja's chapter 11 case to chapter 7, arguing that her failure to insure her real properties and the Cadillac, to attend her initial debtor interview and to open a debtor-in-possession account constituted "cause" under 11 U.S.C. 1112(b)(4)(B) ("gross mismanagement"), (C) ("failure to maintain appropriate insurance that poses a risk to the estate or to the public"), (F) ("unexcused failure to satisfy timely any filing or reporting requirement established by [title 11] or any rule applicable to a case under this chapter") and (H) ("failure timely to provide information or attend meetings reasonably requested by the United States trustee . . . ."). Id. at 472 - 475.

The Clerk scheduled a hearing on the motion to convert for February 17, 2010 at 10:15 a.m. Id. at 3. The United States Trustee mailed a written notice of the hearing to the Debtor and all other parties in interest. Id. at 474 - 475.

On January 15, 2010, Ms. Aja filed an expedited motion to use cash collateral. Id. at 149 - 177. She included her telephone number on it. Id. at 153. The Clerk scheduled a hearing on the Cash Collateral Motion for January 21, 2010 at 10:00 a.m. Id. at 4.

On January 19, 2010, citing Ms. Aja's failure to provide evidence of insurance, the bankruptcy court sua sponte rescheduled the hearing on the motion to convert for January 21, 2010 at 10:00 a.m., the same date and time as the hearing on her cash collateral motion. Id. 11 U.S.C. 102(1); Fed. R. Bankr. P. 2002(a)(4) and 9006(c). The United States Trustee mailed written notice of the re-scheduled hearing to Ms. Aja that day. App. at 4; 477 - 478.

The United States Trustee's attorney, Paula R. C. Bachtell, confirmed at the January 21, 2010 hearing that she had called Ms. Aja on January 19, 2010, informed her of the date and time of the consolidated hearings and explained to her how to cure the deficiencies cited in the motion to convert.[9] Id. at 482 - 483. Ms. Aja did not appear at the hearing. Id. at 481 - 489.

Attorney Bachtell stated that she had met in person with Ms. Aja at the January 12, 2010 section 341 first meeting of creditors.[10] Id. at 485 - 486. She related that Ms. Aja had emailed on the evening of January 20, 2010, inquiring whether the United States Trustee had received confirmation of insurance coverage.[11] Id. at 484 - 485.

Attorney Bachtell informed the bankruptcy court that, as of that morning, Ms. Aja had provided evidence of insurance on all of her assets, except 103 Townsend Street and her Cadillac. Id. at 485. She added that she had "other communication" with Ms. Aja "regarding the opening of a debtor-in-possession account, because the operating report we have shows her still using the account that was being used in the last [LLC] case . . . ." Id. at 484.

[9] "I told her that the motion to convert was being scheduled at the same time as her motion to use cash collateral, which was scheduled for today . . . And that in order to respond to the motion to convert she needed to produce insurance, evidence of a DIP account, and her first operating report . . . ." Id. at 483 - 484. The court noted that "our Clerk's office has attempted to contact Ms. Aja by phone as well . . ." and that Ms. Aja "should have received the mailed notices by now . . . ." Id. at 483.

[10] Ms. Aja had admitted under oath at the section 341 meeting "that after the Court's hearing and the Court's order denying the motion to reopen Case 3, she did transfer Hamilton Street and Williams Street to herself . . . ." Id. at 486.

[11] Attorney Bachtell had promptly replied, informing Ms. Aja that she still needed to provide evidence of insurance for the 103 Townsend Street property and her Cadillac. Id. at 484.

After reviewing the record, including a monthly operating report signed by Ms. Aja,[12] the court denied Ms. Aja's cash collateral motion and granted the motion to convert. It stated:

> Well, the debtor is not here to pursue her motion filed on an expedited basis for use of cash collateral, and as of right now she's using cash collateral without authority. The U.S. Trustee has not received evidence of insurance on all of the properties; albeit the debtor has produced evidence of some insurance, she is required to submit proof of insurance for all properties; and based upon the operating report, which is mathematically deficient, it appears that there is no likelihood of rehabilitation, and I find that there is cause to convert the case under Section 1112. The case is converted . . . .

Id. at 488; 479 - 480

6. In her first written request for reconsideration, Ms. Aja presented no new, material evidence and identified no manifest error of law or fact. The bankruptcy court denied it.

Ms. Aja filed her first request for reconsideration on January 22, 2010. Id. at 490 - 493. But she offered no new, material evidence, and she identified no manifest error of law or fact. Id.

Ms. Aja did not dispute that she had received telephonic notice of the hearing from Attorney Bachtell. Id. Nor did she complain that the bankruptcy court had acted unreasonably under the circumstances in re-scheduling the hearing on shortened notice for January 21, 2010. Id.

Ms. Aja did not allege that the court had misinterpreted or misapplied Bankruptcy Rules 2002(a)(4) and 9006(c) or 11 U.S.C. 102(1). Id. She stated only that she had not received mail notice of the January 21, 2010 hearing "until January 22nd, 2010 . . . ." Id. at 490.

[12] The court expressed concern that the rent collections reported in the report did not "add up," because "those aren't all of the rent rolls . . . as I recall from the prior case . . . ." Id. at 486 - 487.

Ms. Aja acknowledged that she still had not provided evidence of insurance for 103 Townsend Street and her Cadillac to the United States Trustee. Id. at 490. But she did not identify any "unusual circumstances" demonstrating that conversion was not in the best interests of creditors and the estate under 11 U.S.C. 1112(b)(1). Id. at 490 - 493.

Ms. Aja did not suggest that the deficiencies cited by the United States Trustee were justified or that she could presently cure them. Id. She could have stated that there was a reasonable likelihood that she could confirm a plan within the time established by the Bankruptcy Code. Id. She might have outlined the parameters of her reorganization scheme. Id. She did neither of those things. Id.

The bankruptcy court denied Ms. Aja's reconsideration motion without a hearing on January 26, 2010, finding that "[b]ased upon the representations of the attorney for the U.S. Trustee, [Ms. Aja] was provided with both notice by mail and telephonic notice on January 19, 2010 of the date and the time of the hearing on the U.S. Trustee's Motion to Convert . . . ." Id. at 6 - 7; 494. The court found that she "did not proffer a credible excuse for her failure to appear at the hearing . . . ." " Id. at 494. The court concluded that Ms. Aja "has presented no new evidence or demonstrated an error of law warranting reconsideration . . . ." Id. at 494.

7. At a February 3, 2010 hearing, Ms. Aja orally requested reconversion. She again presented no new, material evidence and identified no manifest error of law or fact.

At a February 3, 2010 hearing on Emigrant's stay relief motions, Ms. Aja orally moved for reconversion, not reconsideration.[13] Id. at 502 - 503. She again presented no new, material evidence, and she directed the court's attention to no manifest error of fact or law. Id. She did not discuss whether she was eligible to re-convert to chapter 11 under 11 U.S.C. 706(a). Id..

The bankruptcy court denied reconversion, stating "[Y]ou just couldn't put it together in three bankruptcy cases in a reorganization, and I don't think that you can now. So I'm denying your request to reconvert to chapter 11. And I wish you luck in the future . . . ." Id. at 503.

8. Ms. Aja did not attend her chapter 7 section 341 meeting. She did not produce documents requested by the chapter 7 trustee. She did not turn over rents that she said she was holding.

The chapter 7 trustee met with Ms. Aja for an hour and a half after the February 3, 2010 hearing. Id. at 524 - 526. She asked Ms. Aja to provide her with documents, including tax returns, so that she might determine the value of the Worcester properties and decide whether selling them would benefit the estate. Id. Ms. Aja said that she had the documents and would cooperate. Id. at 529.

The chapter 7 trustee also directed Ms. Aja to turn over rents that she had collected on the 9-11 Williams Street property for the months of January and February, 2010. Id. at 528 - 529. The trustee understood that the property "generate[d] $14,000/month gross income . . . ." Id. Ms. Aja represented to the trustee that she was holding the rents. Id. at 528.

The chapter 7 trustee followed up with Ms. Aja by telephone. Id. at 525. She also emailed Ms. Aja on February 10, 2010 (at the email address that Ms. Aja had provided) to remind her of her section 341 meeting the next day. Id.

subsequently treated it as such. Id. at 31 - 36; 37 - 66.

Ms. Aja did not attend the meeting.[14] Id. She did not produce the documents. Id. at 525 and 60. She did not turn over the rents. Id. at 529; 60 - 64. She did not return the chapter 7 trustee's subsequent telephone calls and emails. Id. at 525.

The trustee filed a motion to compel Ms. Aja to attend the rescheduled 341 meeting and to produce documents. Id. at 524 - 527. The bankruptcy court granted the motion. Id. at 12.

9. In her third request for reconsideration, Ms. Aja admitted that Attorney Bachtell had called her. She advanced new arguments that she could have previously made.

Ms. Aja filed her second written request for reconsideration on February 18, 2010. Id. at 13; 532 - 540. She admitted that Attorney Bachtell had called her prior to January 21, 2010 and had told her that the hearings on the motions to use cash collateral and to convert had been consolidated. Id. at 533. But she claimed that she did "not have recollection of any date being mentioned in that conversation . . . ." Id. (emphasis in original).

Ms. Aja admitted receiving separate email notice from Attorney Bachtell the morning of the hearing. Id. But she said that she "did not read that email until after the hearing had taken place . . . ." Id.

Ms. Aja advanced four new arguments in her motion. First, she insisted that only 21 days' mail notice of the hearing on the conversion motion would be sufficient under Fed. R. Bankr. P. 2002(a)(4). Id. Second, she said that the bankruptcy court's re-scheduling the hearing for January [14] The Clerk issued a notice of the conversion, scheduling the chapter 7 section 341 meeting of creditors for February 11, 2010 at 2:30 p.m. Id. at 519 - 520. The Bankruptcy Noticing Center certified on January 23, 2010 that it had mailed the notice to all parties in interest, including Ms. Aja, by United States mail, First Class postage pre-paid. Id. at 521 - 523. Ms. Aja never disputed that she had received this notice.

21, 2010 deprived her of "due process." Id. at 534. Third, she claimed that the court erred in finding that she had no likelihood of rehabilitating her affairs. Id. at 535. Fourth, she argued that the decision to convert was premature. Id. She could have asserted these arguments in her first reconsideration motion but had not done so.

10. At the March 18, 2010 hearing, the bankruptcy court opened the record and permitted Ms. Aja to proffer evidence in support of reconsideration.

The bankruptcy court heard the third reconsideration motion on March 18, 2010.[15] Id. at 17 - 18; 37. It opened the record and solicited input from Ms. Aja, the United States Trustee, Emigrant and the chapter 7 trustee. Id. at 37 - 65.

Ms. Aja proffered evidence of her personal and business income and expenses. Id. at 39 - 44. She handed up to the court written forecasts, showing that she expected to have cash totaling $23,732.79 by the end of June, 2010. Id. at 39 - 42. Ms. Aja explained that she anticipated increasing her income from personal services, such as language translations, and rents. Id. at 42. She said that she could begin making plan payments in July, 2010. Id. at 42 - 43.

The bankruptcy court directed questions to Ms. Aja and Emigrant's counsel about the amount of Emigrant's claim. Id. at 43 - 45; 48 - 49; 56. It asked whether Emigrant had credited adequate protection payments in the LLC's cases. Id. at 56.

Ms. Aja argued that she did not have notice of the January 21, 2010 hearing on her cash collateral motion and the United States Trustee's conversion motion. Id. at 45. The court stated that Ms. Aja "knew about the hearing because we notified you of the hearing on your [cash collateral] motion . . . ." Id. at 46. When Ms. Aja stated that she "was not called for the expedited motion to use cash collateral . . . ," the court responded that "Our records show differently . . . ." Id.

The court also asked Ms. Aja to explain what interest rate she intended to apply to Emigrant's claim under her proposed plan, to quantify proposed debt service payments to Emigrant and to discuss her tax liabilities to the Internal Revenue Service. Id. at 48 - 49. She did so. Id.

Attorney Bachtell stated that Ms. Aja had cured the deficiencies cited in the conversion motion. Id. at 53. She added that while the United States Trustee did not oppose reconsideration, it was unclear whether Ms. Aja could propose a viable plan. Id. at 54 - 55.

After listening to Ms. Aja, Emigrant and the United States Trustee, the bankruptcy court stated that the threshold question before it was "whether there is a likelihood of a viable reorganization here, based upon a restructuring of the obligation to the bank . . . . ." Id. at 59. The court then asked the chapter 7 trustee to weigh in. Id. at 60.

11. Ms. Aja admitted at the March 18, 2010 hearing that she had not only skipped her chapter 7 section 341 meeting but also converted rents that she should have surrendered to the chapter 7 trustee. The bankruptcy court denied reconsideration.

The chapter 7 trustee stated that Ms. Aja had not complied with court's order compelling her to turn over financial records. Id. at 60. This had required her to gather information about the rental properties independently. Id.

The trustee said that Ms. Aja had skipped the chapter 7 section 341 meeting and had intercepted the February rents on the 9-11 Williams Street property. Id. at 60 - 62. She added that Ms. Aja had failed to provide an accounting. Id.

The court asked Ms. Aja to confirm this. Id. at 62. Ms. Aja admitted that she had collected rents totaling $6,592 and that she had not turned them over to the trustee, because "I had many issues regarding the Chapter 7 bankruptcy . . . ." Id.

The court then asked whether this was the reason that she had skipped the section 341 meeting. Ms. Aja confirmed that it was. Id. at 62 - 63.

The court responded:

> [T]hat's not your decision. The Trustee is entitled to examine you under oath, and if you had cooperated with the Trustee and appeared at the 341 meeting and had complied with the order to provide the Trustee with documents, I would have converted you back to Chapter 11, but I will not now, because you have failed in your duties as a debtor . . . You have not cooperated with the Trustee, which is your duty . . . .
>
> [Y]ou've had three chances to propose a viable plan of reorganization, and you have failed at each step . . . You could not do it in your prior two cases when you were represented, and I don't believe that you can do it now, even based upon the documents that you've given me today. You simply do not have the ability to propose or fund a viable plan of reorganization. And I am distressed to hear that you have not given the Trustee documentation in support of the income and expenses; and moreover, I find that you have converted property of the estate in retaining the rents that were sent directly to you. You should have turned those over immediately to the Chapter [7] Trustee, and you have not.
> And therefore, I deny the motion for reconsideration and for stay pending appeal . . . . .

Id. at 63 - 64.

The bankruptcy court memorialized its order denying Ms. Aja's third reconsideration request the next day. Id. at 541. For the second time, it "reject[ed] [Ms. Aja's] contention . . . that she did not have notice of the hearing on the U.S. Trustee's Motion to Convert as [Attorney Bachtell] represented in open court at the hearing on January 21, 2010 that she spoke personally to the Debtor on the telephone on January 19, 2010 about the date and time of the hearing on the [cash collateral motion and the motion to convert] . . . ." Id.

The court found that re-conversion to chapter 11 would be "futile . . . ." Id. "[E]ven were this Court to reconsider conversion in the exercise of its discretion, the Court further finds that the Debtor does not have a plan of reorganization in prospect . . . Upon review of the cash flow projections, which the Debtor submitted in open court, and upon consideration of the Debtor's arguments in support of her request for an opportunity to submit a reorganization plan in a Chapter 11 case, the Court finds that the Debtor's proposal for a plan of reorganization is not feasible . . . ." Id.

The court also found that Ms. Aja's failure to cooperate with Trustee Dwyer by attending the section 341 meeting, providing requested documents and turning over the rents undercut her claim for relief. Id.

Ms. Aja appealed. Id. at 13; 31 - 36.

SUMMARY OF ARGUMENT

The bankruptcy court did not abuse its discretion in denying Ms. Aja's third request for reconsideration. She presented no newly discovered material evidence or manifest error of law. She rehashed arguments she had previously made or should have made.

The bankruptcy court did not abuse its discretion in shortening the notice of the January 21, 2010 hearing, because Ms. Aja had not provided evidence of insurance. Ms. Aja credibly received telephonic notice of the January 21, 2010 hearing on the cash collateral and conversion motions from Attorney Bachtell. Any conceivable prejudice was cured when the court conducted a plenary hearing on the third reconsideration motion and allowed Ms. Aja to proffer evidence supporting reconversion.

For purposes of 11 U.S.C. 102(1), notice and opportunity for hearing were appropriate under the circumstances. Accordingly, she received due process.

Ms. Aja has waived her argument that the bankruptcy court and the United States Trustee were biased, because she did not raise them below. Her claim that the bankruptcy court erred in not considering her objection to Emigrant's stay relief motion fails for the same reason.

Ms. Aja misunderstands the role and capacity of the chapter 7 trustee. Contrary to her argument, the trustee owed no fiduciary duty to protect Ms. Aja. A trustee's foremost duties are to the creditors and the bankruptcy estate. The trustee breached no fiduciary duty in assenting to Emigrant's stay relief motion.

Ms. Aja converted estate assets (rents) and failed to appear at her chapter 7 section 341 meeting. In doing so, she exhibited bad faith and was ineligible under 11 U.S.C. 706(a) to reconvert to chapter 11. This Court can sustain the bankruptcy court's order on that basis.

Alternatively, because the bankruptcy court granted stay relief as to all of the assets upon which Ms. Aja could predicate a reorganization, including the Worcester rental properties, this appeal is moot, as the Court can grant no effective relief. The Court should dismiss this appeal.

ARGUMENT

I. The Bankruptcy Court Did Not Abuse Its Discretion In Denying Ms. Aja's Third Request For Reconsideration

A. A party seeking reconsideration must demonstrate newly discovered, material evidence or a manifest error of law or fact.

In order to prevail on a request for reconsideration, a movant must demonstrate "newly discovered material evidence or a manifest error of law or fact that enables the court to correct its own errors . . . ." Aybar v. Crispin-Reyes at 16 (citations omitted) (interpreting Fed. R. Civ. P. 59(e) and affirming denial of appellants' second reconsideration motion, because they had presented no new evidence). The rule does not permit "a party to undo its own procedural failures . . . ." Id.

Nor may a party use reconsideration to introduce new evidence or to propound new arguments "that could and should have been presented to the [lower] court prior to the judgment . . . ." Id. It "is not a means by which parties can rehash previously made arguments . . . ." In re Wedgestone Financial, 142 B.R. 7, 8 (Bankr. D. Mass. 1992).

Courts have considerable discretion in deciding whether to grant reconsideration. Venegas-Hernandez v. Sonolux Records, 370 F.3d 183, 190 (1st Cir. 2004). "That discretion requires a balancing of the need for finality of judgments with the need to render a just decision . . . ." Id. Granting reconsideration "is an extraordinary remedy which should be used sparingly . . . ." Palmer v. Champion Mort., 465 F.3d 24, 29 (1st Cir. 2006) (internal quotation marks and citations omitted).

B. Ms. Aja cannot obtain review of the underlying conversion of her case under section 1112(b) because only the denial of her third attempt to obtain reconsideration is before this Court. If Ms. Aja had a case to make, she should have made it earlier.

The First Circuit has long held that an appellant with a procedural record such as the one in this case - with a notice of appeal timely only to obtain review from the denial of reconsideration - cannot seek review of the merits of the underlying judgment. See, e.g., Rodriguez-Antuna v. Chase Manhattan Bank Corp., 871 F.2d 1, 2 (1st Cir. 1989) ("a punctual appeal from an order denying such a [post-judgment] motion does not automatically produce a Lazarus-like effect; it cannot resurrect appellants' expired right to contest the merits of the underlying judgment, nor bring the judgment itself before us for review . . . ."). In other words, as the First Circuit has previously stated, Ms. Aja, "if [she] had a case to make, should have made it in a timeous fashion in the [trial] court . . . ." Id. at 3.

Moreover, when only the denial of reconsideration is before this Court, the appellant has an extremely difficult burden on appeal, because this Court's review is highly deferential to the trial court. The First Circuit has observed that "[a]n appellate court ought not to overturn a trial court's denial of a motion for reconsideration unless a miscarriage of justice is in prospect or the record otherwise reveals a manifest abuse of discretion." Ruiz Rivera v. Riley, 209 F.3d 24, 27 (1st Cir. 2000) (emphasis added); see also Ramos-Pena v. New Puerto Rico Marine Mgmt., Inc. 2 Fed. Appx. 19, 22, No. 00-1228, 2001 WL 113678, *2 (1st Cir. Feb. 8, 2001) (noting that a lower court's denial of a successive motion for reconsideration is "reviewed deferentially").

As discussed in further detail below, the record in this case does not establish that a miscarriage of justice would occur if the bankruptcy court's denial of reconsideration is affirmed. Indeed, quite the opposite is true.

C. Ms. Aja's due process argument fails, because notice and opportunity for hearing on the conversion motion were appropriate under the circumstances.

Ms. Aja reiterates the argument advanced in her third reconsideration motion that anything less than 21 days' mail notice of the hearing on the conversion motion deprived her of substantive and procedural due process. Appellant's Brief at 10 - 13, citing Rule 2002(a)(4) and U.S. Const. amend. XIV, § 1. This argument fails, because she received appropriate notice and opportunity to be heard under the circumstances, as required by 11 U.S.C. 102(1)(A). There are three reasons why this is so.

First, notice was appropriate under the circumstances. The Bankruptcy Rules govern bankruptcy procedure generally and cannot themselves trump substantive bankruptcy law.[16] 28 U.S.C. 2075 (providing that "[s]uch rules shall not abridge, enlarge, or modify any substantive right . . . ."). Id. "[T]o the extent that the Bankruptcy Rules and the Bankruptcy Code are inconsistent, the statute controls . . . ." In re Perrotta, 406 B.R. 1, 8 (Bankr. D.N.H. 2009) (holding that two rules affecting the timing of discharge must yield to the substantive right to object to discharge under 11 U.S.C. 727(a)).

Section 1112(b) provides that conversion may occur "after notice and a hearing . . . ." Section 102(1)(A), in turn, defines this term as "after such notice as is appropriate in the particular circumstances, and such opportunity for a hearing as is appropriate in the particular circumstances . . . ." 11 U.S.C. 102(1)(A).[17] See 2 Collier on Bankruptcy ¶ 102.02[1] (Alan N. Resnick & Henry J. Sommer, eds., 16th ed. rev. 2010).

Ms. Aja assigns error to the bankruptcy court's consolidating the hearings on her cash collateral motion and the conversion motion on two days' notice. Appellant's Brief at 10 - 13. Consistent with her first motion for reconsideration, however, she does not dispute that she had failed to provide evidence of insurance for all her assets as of January 6, 2010, when the United States Trustee filed the conversion motion. Id.; App. at 490 - 493. She also does not dispute that she had skipped her initial debtor interview and that she had not yet opened a debtor-in-possession account.

[16] Rule 1001 provides that "[t]hese rules shall be construed to secure the just, speedy, and inexpensive determination of every case and proceeding . . . ."

[17] Section 102(1)((B) also authorizes bankruptcy courts to act "without an actual hearing if such notice is given properly and if . . such hearing is not requested timely by a party in interest . . . or . . . there is insufficient time for a hearing to be commenced before such act must be done, and the court authorizes such act . . . ."

Id.[18] Appellant's Brief at 10 - 13.

As of January 19, 2010, after reading the United States Trustee's conversion motion, the bankruptcy court reasonably understood that Ms. Aja, with whom she was familiar after two previous cases, was operating in chapter 11 without adequate insurance. App. at 32. This exposed the estate to unnecessary risk – an uninsured casualty involving any of Ms. Aja's real properties or Cadillac would have created an administrative priority claim.[19]

The estate, which Ms. Aja admits was balance sheet insolvent, would have had no means of paying it. Id. at 452. Under the undisputed circumstances as they existed on January 19, 2010, the bankruptcy court acted prudently in sua sponte rescheduling the hearing on two days notice. Id. at 4. In re AbiJoe Realty Corp., 943 F.2d 121, 125 - 126 (1st Cir. 1991) (affirming dismissal of chapter 11 case under 11 U.S.C. 1112(b) and rejecting appellant's due process argument, because notice was adequate under the circumstances, as required by 11 U.S.C. 102).

Second, Rule 9006(c) permitted the bankruptcy court to shorten the 21 day notice period of Rule 2002(a)(4) "for cause shown . . . in its discretion or without motion or notice order. . . ." See 10 Collier on Bankruptcy at ¶ 9006.09. Shortening notice was a reasonable exercise of discretion for the reasons stated above. App. at 4; 490 - 493. Ms. Aja is incorrect in suggesting that the court could only reduce the notice period on motion filed by the United States Trustee. See Appellant's Brief at [18] As late as January 22, 2010, she had still not yet provided evidence of insurance for 103 Townsend Street and her Cadillac. App. at 490 - 493. Again, she does not dispute this on appeal. Appellant's Brief at 10 - 13.

[19] Compare 11 U.S.C. 502 and 503; 11 U.S.C. 1112(b)(4)(C) ("the term 'cause' includes . . . failure to maintain appropriate insurance that poses a risk to the estate or to the public . . . ."). See In re Gilroy, 2008 WL 4531982,*5 (BAP 1st Cir. 2008) (affirming order dismissing individual chapter 11 debtor's case for "cause" under 11 U.S.C. 1112(b)(4)(C), because she had not insured her assets). See also 3 United States Trustee Manual at § 3-3.2.3; 7 Collier on Bankruptcy at ¶1112.04[6][c].

Telephonic notice of the hearing was also appropriate under the circumstances. 11 U.S.C. 102(1)(A). It is implausible for Ms. Aja to insist here, as she did in the third reconsideration motion, that Attorney Bachtell, who called her on January 19, 2010, informed her that the court had consolidated the hearings on the cash collateral and conversion motions and explained to her how to cure the deficiencies cited by the United States Trustee, would have not informed her of the date and time of the hearing. Appellant's Brief at 11 - 12; App. at 532 - 540. The bankruptcy court correctly found that Ms. Aja had "no credible excuse" for not attending the January 21, 2010 hearing. Id. at 494.

Third, Ms. Aja received an adequate opportunity to be heard. The bankruptcy court reopened the record on March 18, 2010 and permitted her to proffer evidence supporting reconversion to chapter 11. Id. at 37 - 60. Ms. Aja delimited how she would treat creditors under a plan. Id. at 39 - 52. She provided the court with her projected financial performance. Id. She argued that she could confirm a plan. Id.

The bankruptcy court seemed willing to reconvert Ms. Aja's request, based upon her presentation. Id. at 63. But she undercut herself when she admitted that she had converted the rents and failed to appear at her chapter 7 section 341 meeting. Id. at 62 - 63.

A neutral review of the record confirms that notice and opportunity for a hearing were reasonable under 11 U.S.C. 102(1)(A). Ms. Aja received procedural and substantive due process. In re Bartle, 560 F.3d 724, 729 - 730 (7th Cir. 2009) (affirming conversion order and holding that appellant was not denied due process, because he timely sought reconsideration, which provided him with the opportunity to present his defense).[20]

The bankruptcy court committed no abuse of discretion. AbiJoe Realty Corp. at 125 - 126 (affirming dismissal). The Court should affirm the order below.

D. The bankruptcy court did not abuse its discretion in rejecting Ms. Aja's arguments that she could confirm a plan and that conversion was premature.

Ms. Aja, reiterating two arguments advanced in her third reconsideration request, claims that the bankruptcy court erred in finding that she could not submit a confirmable chapter 11 plan and that conversion was appropriate six weeks into the case.[21] Appellant's Brief at 10 - 14 and 16 (arguments 2 and 5). The Court should affirm, because Ms. Aja has not demonstrated how the bankruptcy court abused its discretion in rejecting these arguments for a second time. Palmer v. Champion Mort. at 29 (affirming denial of reconsideration, because motion rehashed arguments propounded at trial).

Moreover, Ms. Aja points to no evidence in the record that the bankruptcy court erroneously failed to consider. Aybar v. Crispin-Reyes at 17 (affirming denial of reconsideration, because "the evidence that appellants submitted to support the argument they advanced for the first time in their second motion for reconsideration was neither new or unavailable at the time the [lower court] entered judgment . . . ."). The Court should credit the bankruptcy court's evaluation of Ms. Aja's credibility. App. at 46; 494; 541. Fed. R. Bankr. P. 8013 (stating that "due regard shall be given to the opportunity of the bankruptcy court to judge the credibility of the witnesses . . . ."). See Palmacci v. Umpierrez, 121 F.3d 781, 785 (1st Cir. 2005) (evaluating deference accorded to witness credibility).

Inasmuch as Ms. Aja fails to demonstrate how the bankruptcy court abused its discretion, this Court should affirm. Palmer v. Champion Mort. at 29.

E. Ms. Aja's final two arguments are barred, because she did not present them below.

Ms. Aja's remaining arguments – bias by the bankruptcy court[22] and the United States Trustee (Appellant's Brief at 14 - 15), failure to consider her objection to Emigrant's stay relief motion (Appellant's Brief at 15 - 16) – are barred, because she raises them for the first time here. Taylor v. U.S. Dept. of Labor, 440 F.3d 1, 8 (1st Cir. 2005) (holding that arguments presented for the first time on appeal are waived).

Separately, her suggestion (Appellant's Brief at 15 - 16) that the chapter 7 trustee breached her fiduciary duty by withdrawing her objection to Emigrant's stay relief motion misapprehends that the trustee, not the debtor, is the sole estate representative and may exercise her discretion in administering estate assets without a debtor's input. 11 U.S.C. 323 and 704. "The trustee does not represent the debtor and does not owe the debtor any fiduciary duty . . . ." 3 Collier on Bankruptcy at ¶ 323.02[1]. Regardless, Ms. Aja lacks standing to raise objections to creditors' claims, because, as she admitted below, the estate is insolvent. App. at [31]; In re Choquette, 290 B.R. 183, 188 - 189 (Bankr. D. Mass, 2003).

Accordingly, the Court should affirm.

II. The Court Can Also Affirm On The Alternative Ground That Ms. Aja Was Ineligible To Reconvert Under 11 U.S.C. 706(a)

Additionally, the Court can affirm, because Ms. Aja was ineligible to reconvert to chapter 11 under 11 U.S.C. 706(a).

Section 706(a)(1) gives chapter 7 debtors a one-time right to convert to a different chapter at any time, "if the case has not been converted to under section 1112 . . . ."[23] Debtors who exhibit "bad faith," however, may not do so. Marrama v. Citizens Bank of Mass., 549 U.S. 635 (2007) (holding that a debtor who concealed assets would be subject to dismissal under 11 U.S.C. 1307(c) and did not have the right to convert to chapter 13).

Ms. Aja converted estate assets. App. at 60 - 64; 524 - 531. She failed to produce documents requested by the chapter 7 trustee, even after she was ordered to do so. Id. She failed to attend her chapter 7 section 341 meeting. Id.

Ms. Aja exhibited bad faith. She was therefore ineligible for chapter 11. Marrama v. Citizens Bank of Mass. The Court can affirm on that basis.

III. Alternatively, The Court Should Dismiss This Appeal As Moot, Because It Can Grant No Effective Relief

Emigrant obtained stay relief on both of the Worcester properties. App. at 9 - 10; 18; 554 - 555. Ms. Aja unsuccessfully sought to stay Emigrant's foreclosure sales pending appeal from both the bankruptcy court and this Court. Id. at 19; 542 - 546. Emigrant has foreclosed on the 92 Hamilton Street, extinguishing Ms. Aja's state law right of redemption. Id. at 547 - 549.

[23] Courts are divided on whether they have discretion to reconvert to chapter 11 a case that has already been converted under 11 U.S.C. 1112(b). See In re Nelson, 2009 WL 3062319 (Bankr. D. Md. 2009) (collecting cases).

The holders of liens against her remaining significant assets, including the rental properties located at 103 Townsend Street, her home and her Cadillac, also obtained stay relief. Id. at 11 (as to her home); 14 - 15; 552 (Cadillac); 553 (103 Townsend Street). Ms. Aja did not oppose them. Id. at 1 - 30. The chapter 7 trustee abandoned all of Ms. Aja's real properties, because they were burdensome to the estate. Id. at 567 - 578. 11 U.S.C. 554.

The chapter 7 trustee filed her final report on July 19, 2010. Id. at 556 - 566. She proposes to distribute $7,602.13 in satisfaction of chapter 7 administrative priority claims. Id. at 556. Holders of pre-petition claims will receive nothing. Id. There are no impediments to Ms. Aja receiving her chapter 7 discharge.[24] 11 U.S.C. 727(a).

Consequently, this Court cannot provide an effective remedy, because stay relief has been granted as to all of the assets upon which Ms. Aja predicated her proposed reorganization at the March 18, 2010 hearing.[25] Id. at 1 - 30; 37 - 66; 542 - 578. This appeal is, therefore, moot, and the Court should dismiss it. Rochman v. Northeast Utilities Group (In re Public Service Co. of New Hampshire), 963 F.2d 469, 476 (1st Cir. 1992) (dismissing appeal of order confirming plan, because plan had been consummated, appellant had failed to obtain a stay pending appeal, which "[left] the court powerless to grant effective relief . . . .").

CONCLUSION

For all of the foregoing reasons, this Court should affirm the denial of Ms. Aja's third reconsideration request or, alternatively, dismiss this appeal as moot.

[24] The extended deadline for objecting to Ms. Aja's discharge expired on June 21, 2010. App. at 20 - 21.

[25] Alternatively, all effective relief to which Ms. Aja is entitled – possession of the assets upon which her creditors have not foreclosed – has been effectuated through the chapter 7 trustee's abandonment. Id. at 1 - 30; 37 - 66; 542 - 578.

UNITED STATES TRUSTEE'S ANSWER IN OBJECTION TO APPELLANT'S MOTION FOR LEAVE TO APPEAL

The United States Trustee ("UST"), Appellee, by and through Assistant United States Trustee Pamela J. Griffith, objects to the Motion for Leave to Appeal, Docket #154[1], filed by Fred Leroy Allman ("Allman")[2], Appellant, on the grounds that an appeal of the interlocutory order at issue would result in increased delay and expense and would waste judicial resources.

[1] All docket references are to the docket in the adversary proceeding entitled United States Trustee v. Fred Leroy Allman, United States Bankruptcy Court for the District of Oregon Adv. No. 08-03115-elp. A copy of the adversary proceeding docket is contained in Exhibit 1, pages 1-15.

The UST filed his complaint objecting to Allman's discharge pursuant to 11 U.S.C. § 727 on June 30, 2008. In early September 2008, the court set a trial in the adversary proceeding for December 17, 2008. Docket #10 (Exhibit 1, page 16). The court denied Allman's December 11, 2008 motion to postpone the trial, see Docket #62, 63 (Exhibit 1, pages 17-21), but determined that Allman could present his defense on April 29, 2009, after the UST presented his case. See Docket # 68, 82, 84 (Exhibit 1, pages 22-25). Allman declined to appear when the UST presented his case on December 17, 2008 and January 21, 2009. See Docket #92, 93, 94, 95, 98 (Exhibit 1, pages 26-56).

Allman filed his Motion for Order to Change Venue and Judicial Oversight on April 7, 2009. Docket #136 (Exhibit 1, pages 57-58). He filed a memorandum in support of the motion on April 15, 2009. Docket #141 (Exhibit 1, pages 59-84). In the memorandum, Allman complained about a number of the court's pre-trial rulings and asserted that the bankruptcy judge was biased. (See Exhibit 1, pages 60-61).

The court conducted a hearing on Allman's Motion for Order to Change Venue and Judicial Oversight on April 22, 2009. Allman did not appear at the hearing. See Docket #143 (Exhibit 1, page 85). The court entered an order denying the motion on April 24, 2009. Docket #144 (Exhibit 1, pages 87-89). This appeal followed.

Allman filed his notice of appeal on April 28, 2009. Docket # 147 (Exhibit 1, pages 90-96). He failed to appear the next day, April 29, 2009, the date that the court had set for him to present his case in the adversary proceeding. The court therefore heard the UST's closing argument and took the matter under advisement. See Docket #152 (Exhibit 1, page 97). The court has not yet issued its opinion or judgment.

Legal Argument

The Bankruptcy Appellate Panel ("BAP") has jurisdiction to hear bankruptcy appeals from final judgments, orders, and decrees as well as from interlocutory orders as to which the BAP grants leave to appeal. See 28 U.S.C. §§ 158(a) and (b).

A final judgment or order is one that finally determines the rights of the parties in securing the relief they sought in the suit. In re Moberg Trucking, Inc., 112 B.R. 362, 363 (9th Cir. BAP 1990). In the instant adversary proceeding, the final judgment will occur when the bankruptcy court enters the judgment granting or denying Allman's discharge.

The April 24, 2009 Order Denying Motion for Order to Change Venue and Judicial Oversight that Allman seeks to appeal is an interlocutory order. See, e.g., In re Goodwin, 194 B.R. 214, 221 (9th Cir. BAP 1996)(order denying motion to recuse is interlocutory); In re Donald, 328 B.R. 192, 196 (9th Cir. BAP 2005)(order transferring case to another district is interlocutory). Therefore, for the appeal to proceed, the BAP must grant leave to appeal the order pursuant to 28 U.S.C. §§ 158(a)(3) and (b).

The BAP's decision to grant or deny leave to appeal is an exercise of discretion. In re City of Desert Hot Springs, 339 F.3d 782, 787-88 (9th Cir. 2003).[3] Factors to be considered in the analysis include whether or not 1) the order on appeal involves a controlling question of law as to which there is a substantial ground for difference of opinion; 2) an immediate appeal may materially advance the ultimate termination of the litigation; and 3) a denial of leave to appeal will result in wasted litigation and expense. In re Roderick Timber Company, 185 B.R. 601, 604 (9th Cir. BAP 1995).

Application of the In re Roderick Timber Company factors in this case compels the conclusion that leave to appeal should be denied. No controlling question of law is presented as to which there is a substantial ground for difference of opinion. The appeal will not materially advance the ultimate termination of the litigation. Indeed, all evidence in the adversary proceeding has been presented and final argument has been made. The outcome of the litigation awaits only the bankruptcy court's opinion and judgment. Denying leave to appeal would not result in increased litigation and expense. To the contrary, granting leave to appeal would have this result. The final judgment in this adversary proceeding is imminent. Either the UST will not prevail, in which event the appeal will become moot, or the UST will prevail, at which time Allman can, if he so chooses, appeal the court's judgment and raise the issues about which he complains in the Motion for Order to Change Venue and Judicial Oversight as well as any other appealable issues. Granting leave to appeal at this time very likely could result in two appeals and the unnecessary costs and burdens associated therewith. See In re Lewis, 113 F.3d 1040, 1043 (9th Cir. 1997) noting that "traditional finality concerns nonetheless dictate that "'we avoid having a case make two complete trips through the appellate process'"(quoting In re Vylene Enterprises, Inc., 968 F.2d 887, 895 (9th Cir. 1992).

Conclusion

The BAP should deny Allman's motion for leave to appeal the Order Denying Motion for Order to Change Venue and Judicial Oversight and dismiss this appeal. Continuation of the appeal would result in increased delay and expense and would waste judicial resources.

I. PRELIMINARY STATEMENT

This is an appeal from the judgment of the United States Bankruptcy Court for the Eastern District of California, denying the discharge of husband-and-wife debtors, Rodney and Valerie Andrews (hereinafter, "Appellants" or "the Andrews"), based on 11 U.S.C. §727(a)(4)(A) (False Oath or Account). The Andrews have appealed this judgment, asking for reversal of the bankruptcy court's judgment under Federal Rule of Bankruptcy Procedure 60(b)(6) (hereinafter "Rule 60(b)(6)" or "Rule 60(b)").

II. JURISDICTIONAL STATEMENT

Sections 157(b)(1) and (b)(2) of Title 28 of the United States Code confer jurisdiction upon bankruptcy courts to hear and determine all core proceedings under title 11 of the United States Code. An adversary proceeding seeking denial of a debtor's discharge under 11 U.S.C. § 727 is a core proceeding pursuant to 28 U.S.C. § 157(b)(2)(J). On April 7, 2010, the bankruptcy court entered its judgment denying the Appellants' discharge. The Appellants filed a timely notice of appeal on April 20, 2010. The Appellee elected to have the appeal heard by this Court. This Court has jurisdiction over this appeal. 28 U.S.C. § 158(a)(1), (c)(1)(B).

III. STANDARD OF REVIEW

"The bankruptcy court's conclusions of law are reviewed de novo, and its findings of fact are reviewed for clear error." In re Doser, 412 F.3d 1056, 1061 (9th Cir. 2005). The Ninth Circuit standard of review of a judgment on an objection to discharge is that: (1) the court's determinations of the historical facts are reviewed for clear error; (2) the selection of the applicable legal rules under § 727 is reviewed de novo; and (3) the application of the facts to those rules requiring the exercise of judgments about values animating the rules is reviewed de novo. Searles v. Riley (In re Searles), 317 B.R. 368, 373 (9th Cir. BAP 2004) (citations omitted), aff'd, 212 Fed. Appx. 589 (9th Cir. 2006); Khalil v. Developers Sur. & Indem. Co. (In re Khalil), 379 B.R. 163, 171 (9th Cir. BAP 2007), aff'd, 578 F.3d 1167 (9th Cir. 2009).

IV. STATEMENT OF ISSUES PRESENTED

A. Whether the bankruptcy court clearly erred in denying the Appellants discharge under 11 U.S.C. § 727(a)(4)(A).

B. Whether the Appellants may seek relief under Rule 60(b) from an appellate court.

V. STATEMENT OF THE CASE

A. Nature of the proceedings.

This case is about whether denial of the Appellants' bankruptcy discharge was warranted based on material misstatements and omissions that they made under oath during the course of their bankruptcy.

B. Course of proceedings and disposition in the court below.

On March 4, 2009, the then-Acting United States Trustee[1] ("United States Trustee") filed a complaint to deny the Appellants discharge under § 727 of the Bankruptcy Code. Trial was conducted on March 9, 2010. At the conclusion of trial, the bankruptcy court entered judgment in favor of the United States Trustee and denied the Appellants a discharge pursuant to 11 U.S.C. § 727(a)(4)(A), entitled False oath or Account.

C. Statutory Framework.

1. 11 U.S.C. § 727(a)(4)(A) denies discharge to a debtor who knowingly and fraudulently makes a false oath or account in the course of a bankruptcy case.

---

[1] Sara L. Kistler was the Acting United States Trustee until July 20, 2010, on which date August B. Landis assumed that position. Pursuant to F. R. Civ. P. Rule 25(d), as incorporated in F.R. Bankruptcy P. 7025, Mr. Landis was automatically substituted as a party.

Section 727(a)(4)(A) of the Bankruptcy Code denies a discharge to a debtor who "knowingly and fraudulently" makes a false oath or account in the course of the bankruptcy case. 11 U.S.C. § 727(a)(4)(A). It provides:

> (a) The court shall grant the debtor a discharge unless –
> . . .
> (4) the debtor knowingly and fraudulently, in connection with the case –
>
> (A) made a false oath or account . . .

2. Fed. R. Civ. P. 60(b).

The Appellants request that the district court reverse the bankruptcy court's judgment denying their discharge based on Federal Rule of Civil Procedure 60(b)(6).

Rule 60(b)(6) provides:

> (b) Grounds for Relief from a Final Judgment, Order, or Proceeding. On motion and just terms, the court may relieve a party or its legal representative from a final judgment, order, or proceeding for the following reasons:
> . . . . . .
> (6) any other reason that justifies relief.

Rule 60 applies in bankruptcy courts, with exceptions not relevant here, by virtue of Fed. R. Bankr. P. 9024.

VI. STATEMENT OF THE FACTS

A. The Appellants' Circumstances as of, and Prior to, the Filing of Their Chapter 7 Case.

Prior to filing this bankruptcy, the Appellants had been in a chapter 13 case in which they received a discharge.[2] A 13; A 17, P 17, Ln 10-25 - P 18, Ln 1-7; A 17, P 77, Ln 9-12.[3] In 2007, during the course of that case, the Appellants incurred a $315,000 debt to a creditor named Vicki Martin. A 1, P 25. The Appellants filed the instant chapter 7 case primarily to seek relief from this debt, and they claimed that Ms. Martin was threatening to "take our home." A 17, P 20, Ln 12, through P 21, Ln 18.

On June 29, 2007, while still in chapter 13, the Appellants held an elaborate Sweet 16 birthday party for their daughter at the Sacramento Grand Ballroom. A 15, Pg 84-93; A 17, P 53, Ln 21-25; A 15, P 84, Ln 3-22. It was filmed and televised as part of MTV's reality show "My Super Sweet 16," and cost approximately $26,000.00. A 15, P 84, Ln 23, through Pg 85, Ln 7; A 17, P 54, Ln 1-6; A 15, P 84, Ln 23, through P 85, Ln 9. The Appellants paid for the party with: (1) a $10,000 advance on a loan received from a person named Peter Slater, which loan had been acquired in order to pay off the Appellants' chapter 13 plan, and was secured by a second deed of trust on the Appellants' home. A 15, Pg 93, Ln 3-22; (2) a few thousand dollars from the Appellants' business; (3) some commissions Mr. Andrews had received; and (4) $4,000-5,000 received from his brother. A 15, Pg 94, Ln 21, through Pg 95, Ln 20.

When they filed their chapter 7 bankruptcy case on July 2, 2008 [A 1, P 1], Valerie Andrews had been employed for over 23 years as an auditor for the State of California,

[2] Although the issue on appeal in this case is a denial of discharge under 11 U.S.C. § 727(a)(4)(A), the fact that the Appellants had received a chapter 13 discharge within six years of the filing of their chapter 7 bankruptcy case was another reason that they were not entitled to chapter 7 relief. See 11 U.S.C. § 727(a)(9) (denying discharge under certain conditions to serial bankruptcy filers who have received chapter 13 relief within six years of filing under chapter 7).

[3] Per the naming convention utilized herein: "A" refers to the United States Trustee's Appendix, consisting of Exhibits 1-15 which were admitted into evidence at trial [See the Trial Transcript, P 10, L 10-11], plus Exhibit 16 [the United States Trustee's Trial Brief], and Exhibit 17 [the Trial Transcript]; the number "1" means Exhibit 1; "P 1" means Page 1.

Department of Water Resources. A 17, P 76, Ln 9-12. She had a bachelor's degree in business administration. A 17, P 76, Ln 6-8. Rodney Andrews had worked over the years in various real estate-related and construction-related businesses. A 17, P 13-16.

At the time of filing, the Appellants owned and operated a sole proprietorship called "Andrews Investment Group." A 17, P 35, Ln 14-19; A 17, P 38, Ln 22, through P 39, Ln 1; A 17, P 83, Ln 10-20; A 15, P 28, Ln 10-12; A 15, P 30, Ln 14-19. It had been started in 2007 under the name "Rod Andrews & Associates" and it had been engaged in the business of generating construction and refinance leads. A 17, P 14, Ln 18 - P 15, Ln 14. In 2007, Rod Andrews & Associates had generated gross income of $82,667. A 11, Pg 4, Part 1, Ln 1; A 17, Pg 88, Ln 15-24. At some point the name Rod Andrews & Associates was changed to "Andrews Investment Group," or more fully, "Andrews Investment Group Mortgage Specialists." A 17, P 15, Ln 7-11. As of the bankruptcy, the company was engaged in generating loan modifications and loans. A 15, P 28, Ln 10-18. Although Valerie worked for the State, she also spent some time on weekends helping her husband in the Andrews Investment Group business. A 17, P 76, Ln 24, through Pg 77, Ln 1.

Just five months before bankruptcy, Valerie Andrews executed a 36-month lease on a business premises for "Andrews Investment Group." A 9; A 17, P 84, Ln 23, through P 85, Ln 8. The lease was still in existence when the bankruptcy was filed. A 17, P 85, Ln 1-4.

The Appellants had also owned and operated a construction company named "Skyline Construction" from about 1989 to 2005 or 2006, prior to the bankruptcy. A 17, P 13, Ln 10-12; A 1, Pg 76, Ln 18-22.

As of the bankruptcy filing, the Appellants had three bank accounts:

(1) an account in Valerie Andrews' name, ending in 2994, into which her pay checks from the State of California were deposited ("Valerie's pay check account"). A 5; A 17, P 78, Ln 19, through P 79, Ln 3.

(2) an account in the name of Andrews Investment Group Mortgage Specialists, ending in 8368 ("Andrews Investment Group account"), which had been opened on May 15, 2008. A 6; A 17 , P 79, Ln 4-10; A 6, Pg 2.

(3) another account in Valerie Andrews' name, ending in 9504 ("Valerie's second account"), which had been opened on June 10, 2005. A 7; A 17, P 79, Ln 4-13.

All three accounts were in Valerie Andrews' name and she had the sole signature authority over them, because her husband Rodney had trouble opening bank accounts in his own name due to bounced checks. A 17, P 79, Ln 17-21; A 17, P 31 Ln 1-20.

During the six months prior to the filing of the bankruptcy, $24,146 was deposited into the Andrews Investment Group account and $15,000 was deposited into Valerie's second account. A 3, P 1; A 17, P 106, Ln 5-9. This money was not attributable to Valerie's salary or inter-account transfers among the three accounts; it was additional income from outside sources. A 17, P 99, Ln 2, through P 100, Ln 4; A 17, P 105, Ln 21-24.

During the month in which the bankruptcy was filed (July, 2008), $8,596 was deposited into the Andrews Investment Group account and $4,389.07 was deposited into Valerie's second account. A 3, P 2; A 17, P 107, Ln 14-24. In comparison, $4,789 was deposited into Valerie's pay check account. A 3, P 2; A 17, P 108, Ln 1-3.

The total gross income received by the Appellants from all sources in the six months preceding the month in which the bankruptcy was filed (i.e., January through June of 2008) was at least $76,897.73. A 4, P 1; A 17, P 108, Ln 4 - P 109, Ln 25.

B. The Appellants' Schedules, Statement of Financial Affairs, and Means Test.

The picture painted by the Appellants in their Petition, Schedules, Statement of Financial Affairs, and Means Test, all of which were signed under penalty of perjury, was not that of a couple who spent $26,000 on a televised birthday party for their teenage daughter and operated an income-producing loan-modification business in addition to receiving a salary from the State. Rather, the picture was that of a State-worker wife and her unemployed husband.[4]

On their chapter 7 Petition, the Appellants failed to list their prior chapter 13 case, in which they had just recently received a discharge. A 1, Pg 2.[5]

The Appellants listed only one of their three bank accounts on Schedule B – Valerie's pay check account. A 1, Pg 13, Item 2. They failed to list the Andrews Investment Group account or Valerie's second account, despite the fact that $39,146 had gone into those two accounts during the two months before bankruptcy. A 3, Pg 1. Almost $13,000.00 more was deposited into those accounts during the month the Appellants filed for chapter 7 relief. A 3, Pg 2.

The Appellants nowhere revealed that they owned an active, income-producing business, "Andrews Investment Group." On Schedule B at Item 13, where they should have listed this sole proprietorship, they answered "None." A 1, Pg 14, Item 13. On the Statement of Financial Affairs at Item 18a, which asks for businesses in which they had an interest within the last six years, they also answered "None." A 1, Pg 38, Item 18a. On Schedule G, which asks for unexpired leases, instead of listing the 36-month commercial lease Valerie Andrews had recently entered into for the purpose of providing a business premises for Andrews Investment Group, they checked the box indicating that they had no leases. A 1, Pg 27.

[4] The initially filed documents are at A1, and a subsequent amendment is at A2.

[5] This failure to disclose was not only a material omission, the Andrews' serial bankruptcy filing was also, as noted above, another reason to deny discharge, pursuant to 11 U.S.C. § 727(a)(9). This appeal concerns only section 727(a)(4)(A), however.

The Appellants did not reveal in the Statement of Financial Affairs at Item 18a that during the previous six years they had owned and operated a construction company named "Skyline Construction."

On the Means Test,[6] the Appellants listed only Valerie Andrews' salary from the State. A1, Pg 49, Ln 3. In fact, more than $39,000.00 had been deposited into the Andrews Investment Group account and Valerie Andrews' second account during that period. A 3, Pg 1. Moreover, additional amounts, other than the payments from the State, had been deposited into Valerie's pay check account. A 4.

Consistent with this false picture of their income, the Appellants showed Rodney Andrews' current income on Schedule I as "0.00." A 1, Pg 29, Ln 1. The Appellants stated at the bottom of Schedule I at Line 17, "Debtor [Mr. Andrews] is self employed, but he claims he has not made any income for this year of 2008." A 1, Pg 29, Ln 17. In truth, as shown by the bank statements for the two unscheduled accounts, money was flowing in immediately before and after the bankruptcy was filed. A 6 and A 7; A 3. Likewise, the Statement of Financial Affairs, Item 1, asserted that Rodney Andrews' year-to-date gross income in 2008 was "0.00." A 1, Pg 33, Item 1. In fact, as already noted, thousands of dollars had been deposited into the undisclosed Andrews Investment Group account. A 3; A 6. Item 1 also asserted that, in 2007, Rodney Andrews' gross income had been only $30,000. A 1, Pg 33, Item 1. In fact, Rodney Andrews had received gross income of $82,667 from the operation of Rod Andrews & Associates, per Schedule C of his 2007 Federal Income Tax return. A 11, Pg 4, Part 1, Ln 1; A 17, Pg 88, Ln

Overall, the bankruptcy papers concealed the Appellants' involvement, both past and present, in their various businesses, most notably Andrews Investment Group, and the cash flow generated therefrom. Yet as far as the casual observer could tell, the case involved merely a long-time state worker and her unemployed husband.

C. The 341 Meeting.

Even a month after filing their chapter 7 petition, the Andrews were perpetuating an inaccurate picture of their financial circumstances via testimony under oath at the First Meeting of Creditors ("the 341 meeting"). A 14.

The questioning started with the chapter 7 trustee establishing the Appellants' familiarity with, and agreement with, the content of their bankruptcy papers:

TRUSTEE ACEITUNO: . . . Now, did you both sign the bankruptcy petition and the schedules that were filed in the case?

MS. ANDREWS: Yes.

MR. ANDREWS: Yes.

TRUSTEE ACEITUNO: And did you read the petition and the schedules before you signed them?

MR. ANDREWS: Yes.

MS. ANDREWS: Yes.

TRUSTEE ACEITUNO: And are you personally familiar with everything that's in your petition and schedules?

MS. ANDREWS: Yes.

MR. ANDREWS: Yes.

TRUSTEE ACEITUNO: To the best of your knowledge is everything in your petition an schedules true and correct?

MS. ANDREWS: Yes.

MR. ANDREWS: Yes.

TRUSTEE ACEITUNO: All right. Do you have any changes or corrections to bring up at this time?

MS. ANDREWS: No.

MR. ANDREWS: No.

A 14, Pg 3, Ln 14, through Pg 4, Ln 10.

When the trustee asked Rodney Andrews "What kind of work do you do?," Mr. Andrews answered "I was in the mortgage business" (past tense). The trustee then asked "Are you no longer working at all?" Rodney Andrews answered "Not now I'm not working at all." The trustee followed up by asking "Have you had any gross income during 2008?," to which Mr. Andrews untruthfully answered " – the first month, January.". . . "Probably about 9,000." A 14, Pg 6, Ln 8-18.

No mention of the thousands of dollars which had been deposited into the unscheduled Andrews Investment Group account and Valerie Andrews' second account. No mention of the recently leased business premises in which Andrews Investment Group was currently operating. And a needless lie about having received income in January of 2008. Mr. Andrews had undergone a serious eye surgery on December 21, 2007, and did not work for approximately the first four months of 2008, as evidenced by the lack of deposits into the unscheduled accounts during that time and by his later testimony. A 3, Pg 1; A 15, Pg 38, Ln 14, through Pg 39, Ln13.

Creditor Vicki Martin's attorney, Helen Liu, was at the 341 meeting and asked questions of the Appellants. In answering both her questions and those of the chapter 7 trustee, the Appellants continued to cover up their true financial situation and their business operations. Ms. Liu asked Rodney Andrews whether he currently held any checking accounts other than the Downey savings account listed in the petition (Valerie's pay check account). Mr. Andrews answered, "No, I don't." Valerie Andrews did not contradict him or say anything about the two unscheduled accounts. A 14, Pg 7, Ln 13-19.

Then Ms. Liu asked if he had had any checking accounts in the last five years other than the one listed on the petition (Valerie's pay check account). Mr. Andrews answered "Yes," but he limited his answer to an account they had previously held at Wells Fargo Bank. Again, no mention of the two unscheduled Downey Savings and Loan accounts. Again, no contradiction by Valerie Andrews. A 14, Pg 7, Ln 19, through Pg 8, Ln 10.

Ms. Liu asked Rodney Andrews whether he owned a computer. He answered "Two at my office." A 14, Pg 9, Ln 12. Alerted thereby to the existence of an office, the trustee asked "Where is your office located?" Mr. Andrews answered "It's – well we're moving out. We got kicked out. We're at 1004 J Street. That's where we were." A 14, Pg 9, Ln 13-17. He failed to mention that they had a new office space, recently leased from Zoe Treaster, at 7321 Stockton Blvd. A 9.

The trustee asked "What's the business name?" Mr. Andrews answered "Andrews Investment." A 14, Pg 9, Ln 18-19. The trustee asked when he had stopped operating Andrews Investment. Mr. Andrews responded, "Well, we still have the company. We're just not doing any business. Nobody's doing mortgages." A 14, Pg 9, Ln 20-24.

The trustee pointed out that the business was not listed on Schedule B or the Statement of Financial Affairs. A 14, Pg 9, Ln 25 - Pg 10, Ln 3. An "Unidentified Speaker," believed to be the Andrews' then-attorney, Steele Lanphier,[7] asked "How long has it been closed?" Mr. Andrews testified ". . . - - about since January." A 14, Pg 10, Ln 6-7.

When the trustee asked whether Mr. Andrews had operated any other businesses during the past six years, he said he had worked as an employee of "SM1 [sic] Mortgage" but didn't own it. A 14, Pg 10, Ln 17-24. He did not mention having owned and operated "Skyline Construction."

Ms. Liu embarked upon a series of questions regarding the televised Sweet 16 party, including asking how much the Andrews had spent on the party. Mr. Andrews testified, "We didn't spend anything. It was gifts from family members." A 14, Pg 19, Ln 10-13. He later retreated from this position. A 15, Page 94, through Pg 95, Ln 20.

D. The Rule 2004 Examination.

Having received a letter of complaint from Vicki Martin's attorney, the United States Trustee began independently to investigate the matter. The United States Trustee then subpoenaed the Appellants for a Rule 2004 Examination (a deposition-like interview), requiring that they produce various documents. A 15, Exh. A and B. The Examination was held on December 8, 2008. The Andrews testified, accompanied by their attorney Steele Lanphier. A 15.

The United States Trustee had asked for documents on all financial accounts the Andrews had held during the 2 1/2 years before filing for chapter 7 bankruptcy. A 15, Exh. A and B, document requests # 3-4. Among the documents produced were some which alerted the United States Trustee, for the first time, to the existence of the previously concealed Andrews

[7] The Appellants were represented by Steele Lanphier in the bankruptcy case in chief, by Julius Engel in the Adversary Proceeding and trial, and are now represented by Steven Royston in the appeal.

Investment Group account. However, these documents related only to the period of time from the filing of bankruptcy forward. When asked why the United States Trustee had not been given documents from before the bankruptcy, both Appellants testified that it was because the account had been opened on July 1, 2008, just one day before the bankruptcy was filed. A 15, Pg 44, Ln 8-21. The complete bank records later revealed that the account had been opened on May 15, 2008 (pre-bankruptcy). A 6, Pg 2.

The Appellants failed to produce any documents relating to Valerie's second account which had not been listed in the bankruptcy. The United States Trustee independently discovered the existence of this account by noticing inter-account transfers on computer printouts relating to Valerie's pay check account. During the 2004 Examination, the United States Trustee asked the Appellants whether there had been any money in Valerie's second account on the day they filed bankruptcy. Valerie Andrews testified "No" . . . "Maybe $12. Not very much." A 15, Pg 46, Ln 23, through Pg 47, Ln 3. In fact, on July 2, 2008, the date of filing, that account had a balance of $2,149.17. A 7 Pg 28. Upon obtaining the records on Valerie's second account, the United States Trustee determined that the account had been opened on June 10, 2005. A 7, Pg 6.

Under questioning by the United States Trustee, the Andrews "came clean" about Andrews Investment Group, admitting that it still exists and is operating from premises located at 7321 Stockton Blvd. A15, Pg 28, Ln 10-18, and Pg 30, Ln 14-19. The United States Trustee had previously become aware of Valerie Andrews' lease of the business premises on Stockton Blvd. from a motion and declaration filed in the case by the landlord, Zoe Treaster. A 8. In response to the Rule 2004 subpoena, the Andrews furnished a copy of the lease to the UST. A 9. Valerie Andrews testified that she had leased the premises so they could operate their business, Andrews Investment Group. A 15, P 71, Ln 2-5.

Both Rodney and Valerie Andrews admitted that their gross income in 2007 from the business "Rod Andrews & Associates" (the former name of Andrews Investment Group) had been $82,667, as shown on their 2007 tax return, and not $30,000, as shown on their Statement of Financial Affairs. A 15, Pg 82, Ln 2-19; A 11, Pg 4.

The document requests in the United States Trustee's subpoena sought very specific Sweet 16 party-related documents. A 15, Exh A and B. The Andrews supplied birthday party-related documents and finally admitted that, with the exception of $4,000 to $5,000, they had picked up the tab for the $26,000 party. A 15, Pg 93, Ln 3-22; A 15, Pg 94, Ln 21, through Pg 95, Ln 20.

E. The Trial.

The United States Trustee filed a complaint for denial of the Appellants' discharge under 11 U.S.C. § 727 on March 4, 2009, based on the errors and omissions in the Appellants' bankruptcy papers and in their sworn testimony during the 341 meeting and Rule 2004 examination. Trial on the matter was held on March 9, 2010. A 17.

Rodney Andrews testified at trial that he had never seen his bankruptcy papers before. He claimed that the paperwork had been prepared over the phone with someone in their attorney's office, and that he and Valerie had later gone into the office to sign the documents. He claimed that his attorney (Steele Lanphier) had never given them copies of the bankruptcy papers. A 17, Pg 18, Ln 19, through Pg 19, Ln 25; Pg 65, Ln25, through Pg 66, Ln 13; Pg 72, Ln 20-21; Pg 73, Ln 14-16; Pg. 74, Ln 5-7. This directly contradicted the couple's recognition of, and acknowledged familiarity with, the bankruptcy papers during their 341 meeting. A 14, Pg 3, Ln 14, through Pg 4, Ln 10.

Mr. Andrews also claimed a lack of knowledge regarding the Andrews Investment account and Valerie's second account, saying "You'll have to ask her [Valerie] about that, because she took – because I don't know. I don't know." A 17, Pg 25, Ln 2-13. Those two accounts had been discussed at length during the Rule 2004 examination. A 15, Pg 43-46. Eventually, Mr. Andrews admitted that he knew about the accounts. A 15, Pg 31, Ln 2-20; A 15, Pg 33, Ln 11-14.

Mr. Andrews also admitted that at the time the bankruptcy was filed he owned and operated Andrews Investment Group, and he blamed his attorney, Steele Lanphier, for not having included the business in the bankruptcy papers. A 17, Pg 35, Ln 14-19. He testified that he had told the attorney they had a business. A 17, Pg 38, Ln 25, through Pg 39, Ln 1. He also blamed the attorney for not listing the 36-month lease with Zoe Treaster on Schedule G. A 17, Pg 42, Ln 12-24.

When asked if he recognized their 2007 Federal Income Tax return (A 11), Mr. Andrews testified: "No, I don't. My wife prepares them." A 17, Pg 48, Ln 3-6. He had admitted to recognizing the tax return and to its accuracy during the 2004 Examination. A 15, Pg 82, Ln 12-16. After this initial denial at trial, he finally agreed that his gross income had been $82,657 as shown on the tax return. A 17, Pg 48, Ln 16-25.

When asked about the Sweet 16 party, Mr. Andrews would only admit to having spent about $5,000 of their money on it. A 17, Pg 54, Ln 15, through Pg 55, Ln 23. Eventually, however, he admitted that he and his wife had paid for most of the party, except for about $5,000. A 17, Pg 56, Ln 24, through Pg 57, Ln 10. And yet, on cross-examination by his attorney, he reverted to asserting that they had spent only $5,000. A 17, Pg 58, Ln 8-13.

When Valerie Andrews took the stand, she, too, denied ever having seen the bankruptcy papers. A 17, Pg 77, Ln 13-18. But after having her recollection refreshed by her testimony at the Rule 2004 Examination, she ultimately admitted that she had seen the paperwork before. A 17, Pg 77, Ln 19, through Pg 78, Ln 1. When asked whether she read the documents before she signed them, she admitted, “Very briefly. But yes.” A 17, Pg 78, Ln 12-14.

She also admitted that when the couple filed bankruptcy, the unlisted Andrews Investment Group account and Valerie’s second account were still open. A 17, Pg 79, Ln 4-20. She agreed that the 36-month lease was still in existence on the day the case was filed, and that it had been entered into for the purpose of providing a business premises for Andrews Investment Group. A 17, Pg 85, Ln 1-8.

In connection with discussing the Means Test (A 1, Pg 49-50), a form on which the Appellants claimed that Rodney Andrews had had zero income during the six months prior to filing, the United States Trustee’s questions regarding whether Valerie Andrews knew the difference between gross income and net income were met with objections by her counsel. A 17, Pg 85, Ln 9, through Pg 86, Ln12. The Court responded: “If she’s a bookkeeper, she would know the difference between gross and net income. Being an auditor, she should be in a higher status than a bookkeeper.” A 17, Pg 86, Ln 13-16.

Valerie Andrews admitted that she had prepared the couple’s 2007 tax return, and that Rodney’s gross income of $82,667, as shown on the return, was correct. A 17, Pg 88, Ln 15-24.

The United States Trustee’s Bankruptcy Analyst, Teresa Field, testified regarding the funds which had been deposited into the two undisclosed bank accounts, as summarized by the charts at A 3 and A 4. Not only were the accounts not revealed on the bankruptcy papers, but the money received and deposited into them was also not revealed as income. A 17, Pg 105, Ln 21-25. Instead of receiving income of $33,701.34 during the six months prior to filing, as shown on the bankruptcy papers, the Andrews actually received gross income of $76,897.73. A 17, Pg 109, Ln 19-25.

In rebuttal, Rodney Andrews asserted that many of the funds in the unlisted Andrews Investment Group account had been held in trust for another company and were not his. A 17, Pg 114, Ln 3, through Pg 116, Ln 8. However, no evidence was provided to substantiate that assertion, and the deposited checks bore no indication that they were trust funds. A 17, Pg 119, Ln 13-15; A 6.

F. The Bankruptcy Court's Ruling.

The bankruptcy court ruled in favor of the United States Trustee, and denied the Appellants' discharge under 11 U.S.C. § 727(a)(4)(A).

The bankruptcy court opined that, although he had found the Appellants to be honest and forthcoming, (A 17, P 126, Ln 23; P 127, Ln 3), the United States Trustee had presented an overwhelming number of mistakes and omissions, many of which were material. A 17, P 127, Ln 7-8. The court rejected the Appellants' defense of not having read the schedules, saying "The law is, that you just can't bury your head in the sand." A 17, P 127, Ln 14-18. The court stated that certainly people with the background of the Appellants would recognize that it is important to actually read the documents when signing under penalty of perjury. A 17, P 127, Ln 25, through P 128, Ln 1-4. The court was troubled by the fact that the Appellants had failed to amend their schedules to correct the errors in them, despite having had the right to do so and sufficient time. A17, P 128, Ln 8-12.

The court stated that he did not know whether the Appellants' first bankruptcy attorney (Mr. Lanphier) had given them improper advice as they had alleged. A 17, P 128, Ln 15-16. The court noted, however, that the Appellants could have called that attorney or his staff as witnesses to find out what had transpired, but the Appellants had not done so. A 17, P 128, Ln 17-20.

The court referenced an Eighth Circuit case[8] in which failure to read the schedules had been found to be a reckless indifference to the truth, and in turn, fraudulent intent. The court opined that he guessed that the difference there was that actual fraudulent intent may not have necessarily been present.[9] A 17, P 129, Ln 1-7.

Although favorably impressed by the Appellants' demeanor at trial, the court concluded "But darn it. The debtor knowingly and fraudulently, or in connection with the case, made false oaths or accounts. And then you have the cases that say not reading the Schedules is not a defense to that provision to cover." A 17, P 129, Ln 17-23.

The court denied the Appellants' discharge under section 727(a)(4)(A). A 17, P 129, Ln 24-25, through A 17, P130, Ln 1.

VII. ARGUMENT

A. The purpose and application of 11 U.S.C. § 727(a)(4)(A).

"The fundamental purpose of § 727(a)(4)(A) is to insure that the trustee and creditors have accurate information without having to conduct costly investigations." Fogal Legware of Switzerland, Inc. v. Wills (In re Wills) 243 B.R. 58, 63 (9th Cir. BAP 1999) (citation omitted).

There are three elements to a section 727(a)(4)(A) determination: (1) debtor made such a [8] The UST believes the reference was to a case cited in the UST's trial brief , Jordan v. Bren (In re Bren), 303 (B.R. 610, 614(8th Cir. BAP 2004).

[9] Under the controlling 9th Circuit case of Khalil v. Developers Sur. & Indem. Co. (In re Khalil), 578 F.3d 1167(9th Cir. 2009), which affirmed the 9th Circuit BAP's decision in Khalil v. Developers Sur. & Indem. Co. (In re Khalil), 379 B.R. 163 (9th Cir. BAP 2007), recklessness can be probative of fraudulent intent, and reckless indifference to the truth can be combined with other circumstantial evidence to prove fraudulent intent, but recklessness alone is insufficient to prove fraudulent intent. See also Retz v. Samson (In re Retz), 606 F.3d 1189, 1199 (9th Cir., 2010).

false statement or omission, (2) regarding a material fact, and (3) did so knowingly and fraudulently. In re Khalil, 379 B.R. at 172.

1. False statement or omission.

A false oath need not be an oral oath. A false statement or an omission in the debtor's bankruptcy schedules or statement of financial affairs can constitute a false oath. In re Khalil, 379 B.R. at 172. See also In re Wills, 243 B.R. at 62.

2. Involving a material fact.

The debtor's false statement or omission must involve a material fact. A fact is material if it bears a relationship to the debtor's business transactions or estate, or concerns the discovery of assets, business dealings, or the existence and disposition of the debtor's property. In re Khalil, 379 B.R. at 173, citing In re Wills, 243 B.R. at 62 (citations omitted).

A false statement or omission may be material even if it does not cause direct financial prejudice to creditors. In re Wills, 243 B.R. at 63; In re Hoblitzell, 223 B.R. 211, 215-16 (Bankr. E.D. Cal. 1998). An omitted asset may ultimately be found to have no value, but its disclosure is necessary "if it aids in understanding the debtor's financial affairs and transactions." Garcia v. Coombs (In re Coombs) 193 B.R. 557, 564 (Bankr. S.D.Cal. 1996).

3. Made knowingly and fraudulently.

The debtor must have "knowingly and fraudulently" made a false oath or account. A debtor acts "knowingly" if he or she acts deliberately and consciously. In re Khalil, 379 B.R. at 173, citing Roberts v. Erhard (In re Roberts), 331 B.R. 976, 883 (9th Cir. BAP), aff'd 241 Fed.Appx. 420 (9th Cir. 2005). A debtor acts "fraudulently" if he or she: (1) made the representations; (2) at the time, knew they were false; and (3) made them with the intention and purpose of deceiving the creditors. In re Khalil, 379 B.R. at 173; In re Roberts, 331 B.R. at 884 (citations omitted).

Although mere recklessness alone is not equivalent to "knowing" under the statute, In re Roberts, 331 B.R. at 884, recklessness can be probative of fraudulent intent, In re Khalil, 379 B.R. at 173. Intent usually must be proven by circumstantial evidence or inferences drawn from the debtor's course of conduct. In re Khalil, 379 B.R. at 174; Retz v. Samson (In re Retz), 606 F.3d 1189, 1199 (9th Cir., 2010) (requisite intent found from significant number of omissions and errors, large monetary value of omitted transfers, debtor's failure to read schedules and Statement of Financial Affairs before signing them, and debtor's failure to amend the documents to correct the errors). See, e.g., In re Searles, 317 B.R. at 377 (evidence supported "factual inference" that debtor "intended to list a sum below the trustee's radar screen"); In re Roberts, 331 B.R. at 884 (fraudulent intent "may be established by inferences drawn from [debtor's] course of conduct"); In re Wills, 243 B.R. at 64 (same).

A court may find the requisite intent where there has been a pattern of falsity or from a debtor's reckless indifference to or disregard of the truth. Coombs, 193 B.R. at 564; Wills, 243 B.R. at 64. As stated in Coombs:

> The essential point is that there must be something about the adduced facts and circumstances which suggest that the debtor intended to defraud creditors or the estate. For instance, multiple omissions of material assets or information may well support an inference of fraud if the nature of the assets or transactions suggests that the debtor was aware of them at the time of preparing schedules and that there was something about the assets or transactions which, because of their size or nature, a debtor might want to conceal.

Coombs, 193 at 565 (emphasis added) (cited in In re Khalil, 379 B.R. at 174).

The advice of counsel is not a defense when the erroneous information should have been evident to the debtor. In re Retz, 606 F.3d at 1199 (quoting Boroff v. Tull (In re Tully), 818

F.2d 106, 111 (1st Cir. 1987)). "A debtor cannot, merely by playing ostrich and burying his head deeply enough in the sand, disclaim all responsibility for statements which he has made under oath." Id.

As discussed below, under these legal standards, the bankruptcy court did not clearly err in finding that the Appellants were not entitled to a discharge.

B. The bankruptcy court did not clearly err in denying the Appellants' discharge under 11 U.S.C. § 727(a)(4)(A).

Each element of section 727(a)(4)(A) was present in this case.

1. The bankruptcy court did not clearly err in finding that the Appellants made false oaths and omissions in the course of their bankruptcy case.

It is not disputed that there were numerous errors and omissions in the Appellants' bankruptcy papers and in their sworn testimony at the 341 meeting, 2004 examination, and even at trial, as described above. Most notably, there were no references whatsoever to the business, Andrews Investment Group, no mention of the income received from its operations, and no mention of the two bank accounts into which the business income and other income unrelated to Valerie Andrews' job with the State were deposited. Mr. Andrews falsely testified at the 341 meeting that the business had ceased operations and that the Appellants had no bank accounts when they filed, other than the one listed on Schedule B.

2. The bankruptcy court did not clearly err in finding that the Appellants' false oaths and omissions involved material facts.

The Appellants' falsehoods and omissions bore a relationship to the Appellants' business, Andrews Investment Group, to the income from that business and other sources, to the bank accounts into which that income was deposited, to the existence of a prior business, and to the expenditure of approximately $21,000 for a $26,000 Sweet 16 party at a time when the Appellants owed Vicki Martin $315,000. As such, the falsehoods and omissions bore a relationship to the debtor's business transactions or estate or the existence and disposition of the debtor's property, and the omission harmed creditors. Accordingly, the falsehoods and omissions were material. In re Khalil, 379 B.R. at 173, citing In re Wills, 243 B.R. at 62-63 (citations omitted)

3. The bankruptcy court did not clearly err in finding that the Appellants made the false oaths knowingly and fraudulently.

"[O]missions of several significant assets and disclosures of significant transfers, which reveal a pattern, are willful and knowing admissions and therefore warrant a denial of discharge." In re Slater, 318 B.R. 881, 888 (Bankr. M.D. Fla. 2004). In this case, the sheer number of inaccuracies in the bankruptcy papers makes it impossible to conclude that those inaccuracies derived from innocent mistake, misunderstanding, or inadvertence. That the omissions primarily related to Mr. Andrews' business, Andrews Investment Group, also supports the inference that the Andrews intended the chapter 7 trustee and creditors not to find out about the business and the income generated from it. A bankruptcy court does not clearly err — and the court below did not clearly err — by finding that an omission can be a false oath under 11 U.S.C. § 727(a)(4)(A). In re Roberts, 331 B.R. 876 at 882-83.

Valerie Andrews had signed a three-year lease of the business premises just five months prior to filing the bankruptcy. During the six months prior to the filing of the bankruptcy, $24,146 was deposited into the Andrews Investment Group account and $15,000 was deposited into Valerie's second account. A 3, P 1; A 17, P 106, Ln 5-9. These were not remote events. They had to have been fresh in the minds of the Appellants at the time their bankruptcy was prepared and filed.

Also of significance, as noted by the bankruptcy court in its ruling, at no time did the Appellants amend their bankruptcy paperwork to correct their numerous errors and omissions, despite having had the right and the opportunity to do so. This, too, is evidence of fraudulent intent. See In re Retz, 606 F.3d at 1199 (requisite intent found from, among other things, the debtor's failure to amend the documents to correct the errors).

Moreover, rather than "coming clean" to their chapter 7 trustee immediately after the case was filed, the Appellants continued to tell a variety of falsehoods under oath at their 341 meeting, the Rule 2004 Examination, and even at trial, as described above. The truth, when it finally came out, came out begrudgingly and piecemeal.

The Appellants' defense of not having read the bankruptcy papers before signing them and of having relied on their prior attorney (A 17, Pg 78, Ln 12-14) is not well taken. Valerie Andrews ultimately admitted that she had read the papers before signing. A 17, Pg 78, Ln 12-14. Rodney Andrews' continued insistence that he had never seen the paperwork before is, at a minimum, evidence of a reckless indifference to the truth or falsity of his statements made under penalty of perjury, which in turn, is evidence of fraudulent intent when viewed in the context of all of the other circumstances. In re Retz, 606 F.3d at 1199 (requisite intent found from, among other things, debtor's failure to read schedules and Statement of Financial Affairs before signing them).

Thus, based upon the record of this case, the bankruptcy court did not clearly err when it denied the Appellants a discharge under 11 U.S.C. § 727(a)(4)(A).

C. The Appellants' request for Rule 60(b) relief is misplaced because requests for relief under Rule 60(b) must be presented to the rendering court, not the appellate court.

In their opening brief, the Appellants argue that this Court should grant them relief under Federal Rule of Civil Procedure 60(b)(6). But Rule 60(b) motions[10] must be directed in the first instance to the trial court. First Beverages, Inc. of Las Vegas v. Royal Crown Cola Co., 612 F.2d 1164, 1172 (9th Cir. 1980). See Board of Trustees, Sheet Metal Workers' Nat'l Pension Fund v. Elite Erectors, Inc., 212 F.3d 1031, 1034 (7th Cir. 2000) (requests for modification of a judgment under Rule 60(b) must be presented to the rendering court); 11 C. Wright & A. Miller, Federal Practice and Procedure § 2865 (1973) (discussing that relief under Rule 60(b) ordinarily is obtained by motion in the court that rendered the judgment).

Rule 60(b) complements the discretionary power that bankruptcy courts have as courts of equity "to reconsider, modify or vacate their previous orders so long as no intervening rights have become vested in reliance on the orders." In re International Fibercom, Inc., 503 F.3d 933, 940 (9th Cir. 2007) (citing In re Lenox, 902 F.2d 737, 740 (9th Cir. 1990)). The Appellants could have presented a Rule 60(b) motion to the bankruptcy court following entry of the adverse judgment, but did not. Rule 60(b) is not a rule under which one obtains appellate relief. The appellate court's role as to Rule 60(b) motions is limited to reviewing the propriety of the trial court's decision on the motion. First Beverages, Inc. of Las Vegas, 612 F.2d at 1172.

The two cases cited by the Appellants in their brief bear this out. Community Dental Services v. Tani, 282 F.3d 1164 (9th Cir. 2002) was the circuit court's review of the propriety of the trial court's (district court's) denial of a Rule 60(b) motion. AB, Pg 10, Ln 20-26. The same is true of Latshaw v. Trainer Wortham & Co., 452 F.3d 1097 (9th Cir. 2006). AB, Pg 11, Ln 3-6. The Rule 60(b) motions had been brought in the first instance in the trial court.

Accordingly, the Appellants' request for Rule 60(b)(6) relief in this Court, which is sitting in its appellate capacity, should be denied.

D. The Appellants' assertions that they are entitled to reversal because the bankruptcy court found that their lawyer was negligent are incorrect and unsupported by the record.

Appellants' sole argument on appeal is that they are entitled to reversal because — according to their characterization of the record — the bankruptcy judge sua sponte found that their bankruptcy attorney was grossly negligent. The record does not bear out this assertion.[11]

The Appellants' "Statement of Issue on Appeal" says that Judge Russell clearly and candidly accused and acknowledged "on the transcript of record" that: Attorney Steele Lanphier, who had represented the Appellants in the bankruptcy case in chief but not in the adversary proceeding, had committed acts of gross negligence in their representation; the Appellants had recourse against Mr. Lanphier; his acts had directly resulted in injury to the Appellants; and the Appellants had no reason to know about or protect themselves against that gross negligence. Appellants' Brief (hereinafter "AB"), Pg 2-3.

There were no such finding by Judge Russell. What Judge Russell said about Mr. Lanphier in the course of rendering his findings of fact and conclusions of law was: "Now, it could be that the debtors were not getting proper advice. I don't know. But as Ms. Hotze points out, again, you could have called Mr. Lanphier, you could have called the clerk or tried to find out who the person was that interviewed you over the phone, and what was said and not said. But it wasn't done. It wasn't done." A 17, Pg 128, Ln 15-21 [Emphasis added]. Judge Russell further said, "And if you got bad advice, I'm sure Mr. Engel can explain to you that there are other potential rights." The bankruptcy court made no findings of wrongdoing by Mr. Lanphier.

[11] In addition, Appellant's brief includes some clerical errors that might be confusing to a reviewing court. Judge David Russell is referred to as "Judge Thomas Russell." Attorney Steele Lanphier is sometimes referred to as "Steele Lamphier,""Steele Lamphire," and "Mr Steele." Attorney Julius Engel is referred to as "Jewel Eagle."

The Appellants' "Statement of the Case and Statement of Facts" states that ". . . Judge Russell noted with extraordinary candor from the bench that the Appellants had been 'plowed down the road' by their 'representation' by Mr. Steele. Among numerous shortcomings he noted that day, schedules had not been filed and those which were in need of amending which Mr. Lamphier did not have the Appellants do with his input." AB, Pg 7, Ln 3-8. This statement is a distortion of what was actually said by the bankruptcy court. While Judge Russell did, in fact, admonish the Appellants for not having amended their erroneous schedules, he did not blame this shortcoming on Mr. Lanphier. He stated: "And what I don't – and what troubles me here, and that there were several times when corrective action could have been taken. Debtors always have the right to amend schedules. And there was time for them to amend schedules, to correct the errors that were in there. But it wasn't done. There were no amendments filed that I could see in the proceedings. We just went plowing ahead." A 17, Pg 128, Ln 6-14.

The Appellants' "Statement of the Case and Statement of Facts" also erroneously asserts that "The court found no fault in the Appellants conduct in trusting and relying on Mr. Lamphier, and said in essence the Appellants had been 'thrown under the bus' by their counsel." AB, Pg 7, Ln 13-15. In reality, the court said, "But to file documents, sure, you're going to rely on your attorney. But to file documents that are essentially very misleading, full of misstatements and omissions is improper. It's wrong." A 17, Pg 129, Ln 8-11. The United States Trustee's closing argument included the assertion that the Appellants were attempting to defend themselves by throwing Mr. Lanphier under the bus, to which the court opined generally that "Sometimes attorneys deserve to be thrown under the bus." A 17, Pg 121, Ln 10-15. Again, the bankruptcy court made no findings of wrongdoing by Mr. Lanphier.

The above-referenced inaccuracies are essentially repeated in the Appellants' "Argument and Conclusion." AB, Pg 8-10. This Court should not be swayed by these inaccurate characterizations of the record.

VIII. CONCLUSION

The bankruptcy court did not clearly err in denying the Appellants' discharge under 11 U.S.C. § 727(a)(4)(A). The Appellants are not entitled to seek Rule 60(b) relief from the appellate court. And the bankruptcy court did not find that the Appellants' false oaths and omissions were due to the negligence of their attorney. For these reasons, the United States Trustee respectfully asks this Court to affirm the judgment of the bankruptcy court denying the Appellants' discharge pursuant to 11 U.S.C. § 727(a)(4)(A).

BRIEF FOR APPELLANT

PRELIMINARY STATEMENT

Neither the opinion of the district court (Scullin, J.) nor that of the bankruptcy court (Littlefield, J.) is reported.

STATEMENT OF JURISDICTION

The bankruptcy court had jurisdiction under 28 U.S.C. §§ 157(b) and 1334. After that court entered a final order on December 21, 2000, appellant filed a timely notice of appeal to the district court. See Appendix ("App.") 38. The district court had jurisdiction over the appeal under 28 U.S.C. § 158(a), and it entered a final judgment on July 30, 2002. See App. 42. A notice of appeal was filed on September 20, 2002, see App. 150, so the appeal is timely under Fed. R. App. P. 4(a)(1)(B). This Court has jurisdiction under 28 U.S.C. §§ 158(d) and 1291.

STATEMENT OF THE ISSUE PRESENTED FOR REVIEW

Whether the bankruptcy court erred in entering a retroactive decree closing a case in order to allow the debtor to avoid paying fees to the United States Trustee expressly required by statute, 28 U.S.C. § 1930(a)(6).

STATEMENT OF THE CASE

3 Appellee Aquatic Development Group, Inc., and several affiliated debtors (collectively, "Aquatic") filed petitions under Chapter 11 of the Bankruptcy Code. The bankruptcy court consolidated the cases, and in February 1996, it confirmed a reorganization plan. During the pendency of the case, appellant United States Trustee sent quarterly bills to Aquatic under 28 U.S.C. § 1930(a)(6), which provides that debtors must pay a fee to the United States Trustee "for each quarter... until the case is converted or dismissed." Aquatic paid only some of the bills. In September 1999, the United States Trustee asked the bankruptcy court for an order compelling Aquatic to pay its overdue fees. Instead, the bankruptcy court granted Aquatic's motion to declare the case closed as of December 1996, and it relieved Aquatic of the obligation to pay fees incurred after that date. On appeal, the district court affirmed the bankruptcy court's ruling. The United States Trustee now appeals that ruling to this Court.

STATEMENT OF FACTS

A. Statutory Background

This case involves the statutory obligation of debtors in Chapter 11 bankruptcy proceedings to pay quarterly fees to the United States Trustee. See 28 U.S.C. § 1930(a)(6). The United States Trustee is an official of the Executive Branch of the federal government and is responsible for "protecting the public interest and ensuring that bankruptcy cases are conducted according to the law." H.R. Rep. No. 95-595, at 109 (1978), reprinted in 1978 U.S.C.C.A.N. 5963, 6070. United States Trustees are authorized by statute to perform specific duties that include, among other things, "supervis[ing] the administration of cases" in chapter 11 proceedings. 28 U.S.C. § 586(a)(3). [FN1]

Fees paid by debtors are a significant source of revenue to the United States Trustee system. Congress has provided:

> In addition to the filing fee paid to the clerk, a quarterly fee shall be paid to the United States trustee, for deposit in the Treasury, in each case under chapter 11 of title 11 for each quarter (including any fraction thereof) until the case is converted or dismissed, whichever occurs first.

This statute was amended by Congress in January 1996. See Pub. L. No. 104- 99, § 211, 110 Stat. 26, 37-38 (1996), amending Pub. L. No. 104-91, § 101(a), 110 Stat. 7, 11 (1996), enacting into law H.R. Conf. Rep. No. 104- 378, at 17 (1995). Under the old version of the statute, debtors were obliged to pay fees "until a plan is confirmed or the case is converted or dismissed." 28 U.S.C. § 1930(a)(6) (1994) (emphasis added). In January 1996, Congress deleted the first part of this clause, so the current statute continues the obligation to pay "until the case is converted or dismissed." 28 U.S.C. § 1930(a)(6) (2000). In other words, a debtor must continue to pay fees even after a reorganization plan is confirmed.

In September 1996, Congress enacted an additional provision to clarify the meaning and effect of the January 1996 amendment. The clarifying legislation provided that, "notwithstanding any other provision of law, the fees under 28 U.S.C. 1930(a)(6) shall accrue and be payable from and after January 27, 1996, in all cases (including, without limitation, any cases pending as of that date), regardless of confirmation status of their plans." Pub. L. No. 104- 208, § 109(d), 110 Stat. 3009, 3009-19 (1996).

B. Facts and Prior Proceedings

4 1. In 1995, Aquatic Development Group, Inc., and several related entities filed voluntary bankruptcy petitions under Chapter 11 of the Bankruptcy Code. See App. 119. Shortly thereafter, Aquatic filed a reorganization plan, and in February 1996, the bankruptcy court confirmed the reorganization plan. See App. 44-70. Under the terms of the plan, Aquatic was required, among other things, to issue stock in the name of the unsecured creditors and to then redeem that stock either by a stream of payments tied to its after-tax profits, or by a lump-sum payment. See App. 48-49. The plan provided that the bankruptcy court would retain jurisdiction "until there is substantial consummation of the plan," App. 53, and the order confirming the plan stated that "substantial consummation" would be achieved "only when all payments to the holders of general unsecured claims under the plan have been made," App. 59-60. Aquatic did not begin making cash payments until 1999. See App. 77.

The confirmation order also directed, in conformity with 28 U.S.C. § 1930(a)(6), that Aquatic pay all fees owed to the United States Trustee within ten days. See App. 70. And it required that, on an ongoing basis, "all fees due to the Office of the United States Trustee shall be timely paid." App. 59. In February 1996, the United States Trustee mailed notices to all debtors in pending bankruptcy cases -- including Aquatic -- to inform them of the statutory change of the previous month. See App. 74. The notices stated: "Effective January 27, 1996, all cases with confirmed reorganization plans which are pending before the Bankruptcy Court will be required to make quarterly fee payments based on disbursements until the case is converted to another chapter of the Code, dismissed by the Court, or closed by Court order." App. 86.

In June 1996, the United States Trustee sent Aquatic a bill for $11,000 for fees due since the inception of the case. See App. 75. Aquatic paid the bill, and its attorney stated, "I understand there will be some additional fees." Ibid. Thereafter, the United States Trustee sent Aquatic a bill every quarter, but Aquatic made only two more fee payments, the last of which was in November 1996. See App. 76, 79.

In September 1999, the United States Trustee sought an order directing Aquatic to pay its overdue fees, which totaled about $110,000. See App. 30. In response, Aquatic asked the bankruptcy court to rule that the reorganization plan was substantially consummated on December 5, 1996, and to enter an order retroactively closing the case as of that date, thus relieving it of the obligation to pay the fees that were subsequently incurred. See App. 31.

2. In December 2000, the bankruptcy court entered a closure order that was retroactive to December 1996. See App. 118-133. It began with the premise that "a bankruptcy court, as a court of equity, has an inescapable duty to ensure fundamental fairness." App. 124. In the court's view, Aquatic's motion was appropriately evaluated under the framework of In re Keren Ltd. Partnership, 189 F.3d 86 (2d Cir. 1999). Ibid. The bankruptcy court observed that in that case, this Court stated: "Nunc pro tunc approval should only be granted in narrow situations and requires that (i) if the application had been timely, the court would have authorized the [relief], and (ii) the delay in seeking court approval resulted from extraordinary circumstances." Keren, 189 F.2d at 87. The bankruptcy court concluded that both of these requirements were satisfied.

5 The bankruptcy court determined that it would have entered a final decree had it been asked to do so in December 1996. Even though an adversary proceeding was pending at the time, the court concluded that it could have terminated the case while retaining jurisdiction over that proceeding. See App. 125. The court rejected the argument that the plan and the confirmation order defined "substantial consummation" to require payments to the holders of general unsecured claims, and that cash payments were not completed until January 2000. It noted that in August 1996, Aquatic had transferred stock intended for the unsecured creditors to its attorney. See App. 126-127. In the court's view, the debtor's attorney was acting as the agent for the unsecured creditors, so the transfer of stock satisfied the payment requirement. Because "[a]ll but one of the factors necessary for the final decree" had been met by December 1996, the bankruptcy court concluded that it would have entered a final decree at that time if it had been asked to do so. See App. 128.

Next, the court concluded that Aquatic's failure to seek a final decree in 1996 was due to extraordinary circumstances, which included "the prolonged nature of this plan; and the timing of the amendment of 28 U.S.C. § 1930; the consequences of that change; and the failure of the parties to adequately monitor the progress of this case." App. 129. Specifically, the court determined that payment of fees to the United States Trustee would not be equitable and would not "serve the Code's underlying purpose of providing deserving debtors a fresh start" -- especially since the continued accumulation of fees had not been possible under the version of the statute in effect at the time the plan was filed. App. 130. In addition, it found that Aquatic's failure to respond to the bills it received from the United States Trustee was excusable because the United States Trustee "did not contact the Debtor for payment of the fees." App. 131. Accordingly, the bankruptcy court held that a retroactive decree was appropriate, with the effect that Aquatic was not required to pay the accrued fees.

3. The United States Trustee appealed to the district court. See 28 U.S.C. § 158(a)(1); App. 38. The district court affirmed, giving essentially the same reasons as the bankruptcy court. See App. 134-149. The United States Trustee filed a timely notice of appeal to this Court. See App. 150.

SUMMARY OF ARGUMENT

The bankruptcy court entered a retroactive closure order to relieve Aquatic from its obligation to pay statutorily mandated fees to the United States Trustee. This action was improper for several independent reasons.

Most fundamentally, the equitable powers of a bankruptcy court, like those of any court, are limited by the requirements of statutes. Title 28 U.S.C. § 1930(a)(6) specifies that Chapter 11 debtors must pay quarterly fees to the United States Trustee even after a reorganization plan has been confirmed. And a subsequent statute made clear that this provision applies even to cases that were pending when it was enacted. Because of this clear statutory command, the bankruptcy court lacked the authority to enter a order enabling Aquatic to avoid paying these fees.

6 Even if the bankruptcy court did have discretion to enter a retroactive closure order, that discretion was abused. Retroactive relief is appropriate only when extraordinary circumstances prevented a timely application, and when a timely application would have been granted by the court. Here, neither condition is satisfied. There is nothing extraordinary about the fees in this case, which are simply those prescribed by statute. They continued to accrue only because of Aquatic's lack of diligence in seeking to have the case closed. Simple inadvertence or oversight is not an extraordinary circumstance. In addition, a timely application for closure could not have been granted by the bankruptcy court. The order approving Aquatic's reorganization plan specified that the case could only be closed once payments had been made to the unsecured creditors in accordance with the plan, and those payments had not yet been made. Moreover, closure would have left the bankruptcy court without jurisdiction to issue the many orders it entered during the pendency of the case.

STANDARD OF REVIEW

"When it is acting as an appellate court in a bankruptcy case, a district court's rulings are subject to plenary review." In re Bean, 252 F.3d 113, 116 (2d Cir. 2001). This Court therefore reviews the bankruptcy court's legal conclusions de novo. See ibid.

ARGUMENT

I. The Bankruptcy Court Lacked Discretion to Enter a Retroactive Closure Order to Allow Aquatic to Avoid its Obligation to Pay Fees to the United States Trustee.

A. The bankruptcy court erred when it determined that it had discretion to enter an order relieving Aquatic from its statutory obligation to pay fees to the United States Trustee. As a general matter, a bankruptcy court is a court of equity with broad powers to "issue any order, process, or judgment that is necessary or appropriate to carry out the provisions of" the bankruptcy code. 11 U.S.C. § 105(a); see In re Ionosphere Clubs, Inc., 85 F.3d 992, 999 (2d Cir. 1996). But a bankruptcy court may not use its equitable powers to contravene the requirements of a statute: this Court has held that "[t]he equitable powers emanating from § 105(a)... are not a license for a court to disregard the clear language and meaning of the bankruptcy statutes and rules." In re Barbieri, 199 F.3d 616, 620-621 (2d Cir. 1999), quoting Official Comm. of Equity Sec. Holders v. Mabey, 832 F.2d 299, 302 (4th Cir. 1987); see also Raleigh v. Illinois Dep't of Revenue, 530 U.S. 15, 24-25 (2000) ("Bankruptcy courts are not authorized in the name of equity to make wholesale substitution of underlying law controlling the validity of creditors' entitlements, but are limited to what the Bankruptcy Code itself provides").

As the Supreme Court has explained, "a court sitting in equity cannot 'ignore the judgment of Congress, deliberately expressed in legislation."' United States v. Oakland Cannabis Buyers' Cooperative, 532 U.S. 483, 497 (2001), quoting Virginian Ry. Co. v. Railway Employees, 300 U.S. 515, 551 (1937); see also Miller v. French, 530 U.S. 327, 338 (2000) (Courts may not "exercise their equitable discretion" to "contradict [a statute's] plain terms"). If Congress has "decided the order of priorities in a given area, it is... for the courts to enforce them when enforcement is sought." TVA v. Hill, 437 U.S. 153, 194 (1978).

7 In this case, Congress has directly addressed the question of when the United States Trustee may collect fees from debtors. Under the statute, "a quarterly fee shall be paid... until the case is converted or dismissed." 28 U.S.C. § 1930(a)(6) (emphasis added). This statute is written in mandatory terms ("shall be paid"), and it leaves the bankruptcy court with no discretion to decide that fees should stop at any point before the case is "converted or dismissed." [FN2] Indeed, the entire purpose of the January 1996 amendment was to eliminate the possibility of an earlier cutoff to fees, by removing the phrase "a plan is confirmed or" before the phrase "the case is converted or dismissed." See Pub. L. No. 104-99, § 211, 110 Stat. 26, 37-38 (1996), amending Pub. L. No. 104-91, § 101(a), 110 Stat. 7, 11 (1996), enacting into law H.R. Conf. Rep. No. 104-378, at 17 (1995).

Nor is there any ambiguity about how the statute should apply to cases, like this one, that were pending when it was amended. Congress addressed that issue in September 1996 when it provided that, "notwithstanding any other provision of law, the fees under § 1930(a)(6) shall accrue and be payable from and after January 27, 1996, in all cases (including, without limitation, any cases pending as of that date), regardless of confirmation status of their plans." Pub. L. No. 104-208, § 109(d), 110 Stat. 3009, 3009-19 (1996) (emphasis added). Under this statute, fees continue to accrue in all cases pending as of January 1996.

Although the bankruptcy court relied on its power "as a court of equity... to ensure fundamental fairness," App. 124, it exceeded the scope of its discretion. Under 28 U.S.C. § 1930(a)(6), Aquatic incurred fees every quarter between December 1996 and December 2000, because the case had not yet been closed. The bankruptcy court used the legal fiction of retroactive closure to relieve Aquatic from this explicit statutory obligation. Because its order nullified the effect of the statute, it was improper.

B. The bankruptcy court based its decision on In re Keren Limited Partnership, 189 F.3d 86 (2d Cir. 1999), aff'g 225 B.R. 303 (S.D.N.Y. 1998). Its reliance on that case was misplaced. In Keren, the debtor had retained a brokerage firm without seeking the court's permission as required by 11 U.S.C. § 327(a). See 189 F.3d at 87-88; 225 B.R. at 305-306. The brokerage firm subsequently sought nunc pro tunc approval of its retention, in order to allow it to be paid for its services under 11 U.S.C. § 503(b). See ibid. The bankruptcy court denied the motion, and the district court affirmed. See 225 B.R. at 306-307. This Court affirmed, noting that nunc pro tunc approval "should only be granted in narrow situations." 189 F.3d at 87.

Keren does not support the decision below, for two reasons. First, the case considered the limited issue of the appointment of a professional. See 189 F.3d at 87. Although the Court stated that a bankruptcy court has discretion to make a retroactive appointment, it did not establish the broad proposition that bankruptcy courts may enter retroactive orders whenever they deem retroactivity to be equitable. Second, Keren arose in a very different statutory context. The Court in Keren relied on the First Circuit's decision in In re Jarvis, 53 F.3d 416 (1st Cir. 1995). In Jarvis, as in Keren, the court considered whether retroactive approval of the retention of a professional was permissible under § 327(a). See Jarvis, 53 F.3d at 419. The First Circuit concluded that the issue was essentially one of statutory construction, and that § 327(a) was ambiguous. It noted that "[s]ection 327(a) neither expressly sanctions nor expressly forbids the post facto authorization of outside professional services." Ibid. It therefore concluded that retroactive approval of the retention of professionals was permissible under limited, extraordinary circumstances.

8 Unlike § 327(a), section 1930(a)(6) contains no ambiguity. It clearly expresses the congressional mandate that quarterly fees be paid in all cases, irrespective of plan consummation or confirmation status. Indeed, as noted above, Congress enacted clarifying legislation providing that fees would accrue in all pending cases "notwithstanding any other provision of law." Pub. L. No. 104-208, § 109(d), 110 Stat. 3009, 3009-19 (1996). The use of the phrase "notwithstanding any other provision of law" demonstrates the desire of Congress that this provision prevail in any conflict with another statutory provision.

This case was open in every quarter between December 1996 and December 2000, and no exercise of equitable discretion can alter that historical fact. Section 1930(a) therefore requires that the debtor pay a fee for each of those quarters, and the bankruptcy court's equitable authority under § 105(a) may not be used to circumvent the clearly expressed will of Congress.

II. Even If the Bankruptcy Court Did Have Discretion to Enter a Retroactive Closure Order, That Discretion Was Abused.

The retroactive closure of a case is almost unprecedented, and as we have explained, it is wholly inappropriate when done for the sole purpose of excusing a debtor from paying a valid, statutorily mandated fee. Nevertheless, even assuming that the bankruptcy court had discretion to enter a retroactive order closing the case and relieving Aquatic of its obligation to pay fees, it abused its discretion in doing so. The bankruptcy court applied the framework of In re Keren and concluded that it could enter a retroactive order so long as (1) the order would have been granted had a timely motion been made and (2) the failure to make a timely motion resulted from extraordinary circumstances. As noted, Keren dealt with an entirely different issue, and it does not justify retroactive relief here. But in any event, neither of the two conditions identified in Keren is satisfied in this case.

A. Aquatic's Failure to Seek Closure in December 1996 Was Not the Result of "Extraordinary Circumstances."

The bankruptcy court identified several features of this case that, in its view, constituted extraordinary circumstances justifying Aquatic's failure to make a timely motion for closure of the case in 1996. None withstands scrutiny. Instead, even assuming that retroactive relief was within the power of the bankruptcy court, no aspect of this case made that unusual remedy appropriate.

The bankruptcy court believed that "unique provisions" of Aquatic's reorganization plan "led to the case being open post-confirmation for several years." App. 129. But the case remained open for several years only because Aquatic failed to take the actions necessary to close the case in a timely manner. [FN3] Those, of course, are the very omissions that the bankruptcy court sought to excuse. That fact that the case remained open for a long time therefore cannot be an "extraordinary circumstance," or else retroactive relief would always be appropriate when a case remains open for an extended period of time due to the fault of the debtor. Moreover, the fact that the case was in a "post-confirmation" status cannot be a basis for relief. To the contrary, Congress expressly provided that fees would accrue in all pending cases, "regardless of confirmation status of their plans." Pub. L. No. 104-208, § 109(d), 110 Stat. 3009, 3009-19 (1996).

9 The bankruptcy court also emphasized its view that the fees incurred by Aquatic were very large, indeed "staggering," and it observed that no fees would have been required under the statute in effect at the time the reorganization plan was confirmed. App. 130. But both of these factors were expressly considered by Congress. The amount of the United States Trustee's fees are fixed by a schedule set out in 28 U.S.C. § 1930(a)(6); over the course of this case, the quarterly fees owed by Aquatic ranged from $5,000 to $10,000, see App. 117. Likewise, Congress specifically chose to make the new statute apply to pending cases, so that fees would accrue after plan confirmation, even though such a result might not have been anticipated at the time the plan was adopted. See Pub. L. No. 104-208, § 109(d), 110 Stat. 3009, 3009-19 (1996). Since these factors were the direct result of the statute, there was nothing "extraordinary" about them.

Finally, the bankruptcy court noted that, although the United States Trustee sent quarterly bills to Aquatic, it did not "contact the Debtor for payment" or "monitor the case in any other manner." App. 131. The bankruptcy court's reasoning in this regard was wrong for two reasons. First, the amendment to § 1930(a)(6) did not impose on the United States Trustee an obligation to monitor plan consummation, nor does anything in the statute link the debtor's obligation to pay fees to the amount of effort expended by the United States Trustee in a given case. See In re Jamko, Inc., 240 F.3d 1312, 1316 n.6 (11th Cir. 2001) (recognizing that fees are not tied to the post-confirmation activity of the United States Trustee).

Second, if Aquatic wanted to avoid paying fees, it had the burden of taking timely action. Aquatic was on notice that it was continuing to accrue liability to the United States Trustee. Aquatic was fully informed of its obligation to pay: it was sent a notice of the statutory change, and it also was sent a bill every quarter. See App. 74, 79. Even the bankruptcy court acknowledged that Aquatic "should have reacted to these billings in some manner." App. 131. If Aquatic believed that the bills were in error, it should have taken some action to correct the error. One who ignores three years of quarterly bills from the federal government should not later be able to complain that it was ignorant of its accruing obligation. Aquatic's failure to act for three years does not support "extraordinary" equitable relief from its obligation to pay the United States Trustee. See Jarvis, 53 F.3d at 421 ("[I]f the category of extraordinary circumstances were expanded to include mere oversight, the modifying adjective 'extraordinary' would be completely stripped of its meaning"); see also In re Land, 943 F.2d 1265, 1268 (10th Cir. 1991) ("[s]imple neglect" is not an extraordinary circumstance); In re Arkansas Co., Inc., 798 F.2d 645, 650 (3d Cir. 1986) (Extraordinary circumstances "do not include the mere neglect of the professional who was in a position to file a timely application").

10 As a general matter, a party must have acted with reasonable diligence in order to merit equitable relief. See Chapman v. Choicecare Long Island Term Disability Plan, 288 F.3d 506, 512 (2d Cir. 2002). In this case, Aquatic exercised no diligence during the period in which it accrued fees. It failed even to adhere to the terms of payments to unsecured creditors set out in its own plan and the court order confirming the plan. It therefore was not entitled to the extraordinary relief granted by the bankruptcy court.

B. An Order Closing the Case Would Not Have Been Appropriate in December 1996.

As we have shown, even if the case could have been closed in December 1996, it was not proper for the bankruptcy court to enter an order in December 2000 retroactively closing the case as of that date. Retroactive relief is an extraordinary remedy that is not to be granted simply because a case could have been closed earlier. But in any event, the bankruptcy court's order closing the case as of December 1996 was improper for the independent reason that, had the court been asked to close the case at that time, it could not have done so.

What the bankruptcy court did in this case was not a simple correction of an omission in the court's records -- the traditional use of the nunc pro tunc device. See, e.g., In re Singson, 41 F.3d 316, 318 (7th Cir. 1994); cf. Wight v. Nicholson, 134 U.S. 136, 143-146 (1890). Nor was it the belated entry of an order that could have been entered at an earlier date but was not entered because of an oversight, as contemplated in Keren. Instead, it was an order whose purported retroactivity was entirely inconsistent with proceedings that occurred in the case during the four years after the order's supposed entry. The retroactive closure order was therefore improper, both because the conditions for closure specified in the reorganization plan and the confirmation order had not been satisfied by the time of the purported closure, and because unresolved issues remained in the case as of that time.

1. Under Bankruptcy Rule 3022, the bankruptcy court "shall enter a final decree closing" a Chapter 11 reorganization case "[a]fter an estate is fully administered." Conversely, "[i]f the plan or confirmation order provides that the case shall remain open until a certain date or event because of the likelihood that the court's jurisdiction may be required for specific purposes prior thereto, the case should remain open until that date or event." Fed. R. Bankr. P. 3022, Advisory Committee Note (1991). In this case, the plan provided that the court "shall retain jurisdiction... until there is substantial consummation of the Plan." App. 53. And the confirmation order defined "substantial consummation" as occurring "only when all payments to be made to the holders of general unsecured claims under the Plan have been made." App. 60. As of December 1996, Aquatic had not made these payments.

11 The reorganization plan prescribed, in considerable detail, the method by which payment would take place. On the effective date of the plan, unsecured creditors were to "receive a new issue of preferred stock in the reorganized debtor with a face value of $1,500,000.00." App. 48. Thereafter, the stock was to be redeemed by annual payments equal to twenty percent of Aquatic's after-tax income. See ibid. Accordingly, the payments were to "continue until such time as [Aquatic] has redeemed all of the [preferred] stock issued in satisfaction" of the unsecured creditors' claims. See App. 48-49. At "any time prior to the final payment for redemption," the debtor could choose to redeem the remaining stock by a lump-sum cash payment. App. 49. With some modifications, these provisions were restated in the confirmation order. See App. 62-63.

Aquatic had not taken these steps by December 1996. Instead, Aquatic had simply issued stock to its attorney, whom the bankruptcy court believed was "acting as the agent for the unsecured creditors." App. 126; see also App. 104 (stock certificate in the name of Aquatic's attorneys "as escrow agent for the Aquatic Development Group, Inc. official committee of unsecured creditors"). Relying on the definition of "payment" in Black's Law Dictionary, the bankruptcy court concluded that this issuance of stock constituted payment to the creditors. See App. 127. But while it may have been "payment" in some abstract sense, it did not constitute "all payments... under the Plan," as required by the confirmation order. App. 60. Nor is there any indication in the record that Aquatic's attorney had the power to consent, on behalf of the creditors, to a payment scheme other than that specified in the reorganization plan. To be sure, a bankruptcy court normally is entitled to some deference in the interpretation of its own order. See In re Casse, 198 F.3d 327, 333 (2d Cir. 1999). But here the court simply disregarded the detailed payment requirements set out in its order, so its interpretation does not deserve deference.

2. Closure as of December 1996 was also inappropriate because of its effect on the bankruptcy court's ongoing exercise of its jurisdiction. A retroactive closure of a bankruptcy case is virtually unprecedented -- so far as we are aware, there is no case, other than In re Jr. Food Mart of Arkansas, Inc., 201 B.R. 522 (Bankr. E.D. Ark. 1996), in which a bankruptcy court has closed an entire case retroactively. But during much of the time it was open, the Jr. Food Mart case was stayed in order to allow a state court case to proceed. See id. at 525-26. Therefore there were no legal or factual matters resolved by the bankruptcy court while the case was pending that might have been affected by a retroactive closure.

In contrast, this case was pending for four years after December 1996, and legal proceedings continued during that period. In particular, two adversary proceedings were pending, and they were not dismissed until March 1997 and January 2000. See App. 30, 34-35. Also pending as of December 1996 were motions to determine unsecured claims and for turnover of property, as well as a motion for administrative expenses. These motions were not resolved by the court until March 1997. See App. 30. In addition, the bankruptcy court adjudicated attorney's fee applications in early 2000. See App. 37-38. All of the orders issued after the closure of the case were issued when the bankruptcy court no longer had jurisdiction. The ongoing proceedings demonstrate that the case was not actually closed in December 1996, and indeed that it could not have been closed until much later. The bankruptcy court's order purporting to close the case as of that date was therefore improper.

CONCLUSION

FN1. Each of the 21 United States Trustees is responsible for bankruptcy proceedings within a particular region. Carolyn S. Schwartz, the appellant in this case, is the United States Trustee for Region 2, which includes New York, Connecticut, and Vermont.

FN2. Although the statute does not explicitly refer to the closure of cases, every court of appeals to consider the question has held that fees stop accruing once a case is closed. As the Tenth Circuit explained, "because a 'case' no longer exists once it is closed... the obligation to pay [United States Trustee] fees terminates upon closure, dismissal, or conversion of a Chapter 11 case." In re CF&I Fabricators of Utah, Inc., 150 F.3d 1233, 1236 (10th Cir. 1998), quoting In re A.H. Robins Co., 219 B.R. 145, 149 (Bankr. E.D. Va. 1998); see also Vergos v. Gregg's Enterps., Inc., 159 F.3d 989 (6th Cir. 1998).

FN3. In order to achieve "substantial consummation" and enable it to seek closure, Aquatic would have had to make payments under its reorganization plan to all unsecured creditors in accordance with the court's order confirming the plan. As we explain below, see infra pp. 21-23, it had not done so by 1996, and in fact it did not even begin those payments until 1999. That is an independent reason why retroactive closure was improper.

Statement of Appellate Jurisdiction

Bankruptcy courts have jurisdiction over all core proceedings under the Bankruptcy Code. 28 U.S.C. § 157(b)(1)-(2). The bankruptcy court's award of "reasonable" fees under sections 329 and 330 of the Bankruptcy Code is a core proceeding. 28 U.S.C. §157(b)(2)(A).

A determination of attorney fees under sections 329 and 330 is a final order. 28 U.S.C. §158(a)(1); 28 U.S.C. § 158(c)(1)(B); see Bernheim v. Damon and Morey, LLP, slip op., No. 06-3386-BK, 2007 WL 1858292, at *1 (2d Cir. June 28, 2007) (order); cf. In re Stable Mews Assoc., 778 F.2d 121 (2d Cir. 1985) (contrasting award of interim attorney fees to final fee award and holding the former is not final).

The bankruptcy court awarded Mr. Xu fees on March 19, 2010. [Dkt. #40]. On March 29, 2010 Mr. Xu filed a timely indication of his intent to appeal. Fed. R. Bankr. P. 8002(a). On that day he filed a district court civil docket sheet in the bankruptcy court to notice his appeal. [Dkt. #43-44] The space to name the appellees was left blank. Id. The sheet contained only the following information (1) the debtors' names; (2) identification of Mr. Xu as their attorney; the bankruptcy case number; and the date. Id.

This filing did not "conform substantially" with the official bankruptcy form for noticing an appeal, as required by the bankruptcy rules. Fed. R. Bankr. P. 8001(a). However, an "appellant's failure to take any step other than timely filing a notice of appeal does not affect the validity of the appeal," although an appellate court has discretion to take appropriate action, including dismissal. Id.

In this case, the clerk of the bankruptcy court notified the chapter 13 trustee of Mr. Xu's appeal by mail. [Dkt. #45]. The chapter 13 trustee in turn informed the United States Trustee. Therefore, Mr. Xu's deficient notice of appeal did not prejudice the appellees, and this Court may assert jurisdiction over his appeal. Longmire v. Guste, 921 F.2d 620, 623 (5th Cir. 1991) (holding that failure to name appellees did not defeat jurisdiction as long as they had notice of the appeal).

Issues Presented[1]

1. Did the bankruptcy court abuse its discretion under sections 329 and 330 of the Bankruptcy Code when it awarded Mr. Xu $4,000 in fees, given that (a) chapter 13 attorneys typically receive no more than $4,500 in such cases, and (b) Mr. Xu's legion of errors in the case led the bankruptcy court to conclude that he had "performed at an incompetent level?"
2. Did the bankruptcy court abuse its discretion when it refused to consider a motion to avoid a second mortgage lien at the hearing scheduled to decide Mr. Xu's attorney fee award, given that the motion was facially defective and given that Mr. Xu could have separately scheduled it but never did so?

[1] Mr. Xu has also appealed the bankruptcy court's order that he return his excess fees to the trustee rather than to the debtors. This is a two-party dispute between the chapter 13 trustee and the debtors. The United States Trustee did not take a position on the issue in the bankruptcy court and does not do so here.

Statement of the Case

This is a section 329 and 330 fee award case. Appellant, Frank Xu, Esq., sought an award of more than $34,000 for representing Lihua and Manuel Arebalo in their chapter 13 case. The bankruptcy court held two hearings to determine an appropriate fee. After the second hearing on March 11, 2010, the bankruptcy court awarded Mr. Xu $4,000, even though the Court found Mr. Xu's representation had been incompetently performed.

Mr. Xu appeals to this Court on three grounds. First, he argues that the bankruptcy court abused its discretion in awarding him $4,000 rather than the $34,000 he sought. Second, he maintains the bankruptcy court misapplied 11 U.S.C. 1306 by ordering fees to be turned over to the chapter 13 trustee instead of the Arebalos.[2] Third, he claims the bankruptcy court abused its discretion when it refused to consider a motion to avoid a second mortgage lien during the fee hearing.

1. Statutory Framework

This appeal arises from a chapter 13 bankruptcy case. Under chapter 13, "a debtor commits to repay some portion of his or her financial obligations" over a period of no more than five years. Under this scenario, the debtor retains non-exempt assets and, after completing the repayment plan, receives a discharge. See 11 U.S.C. §§ 1321-1330.

[2] The United States Trustee questions, however, whether Mr. Xu has standing to challenge the bankruptcy court's determination that the trustee should receive the funds. In order to have standing, a litigant in bankruptcy must be a "person aggrieved." Int'l Trade Admin. v. Rensselaer Polytechnic Institute, 936 F.2d 744, 747 (2d Cir. 1991). A "person aggrieved" is someone who is "'directly and adversely affected pecuniarily by'" the challenged order of the bankruptcy court." Id. (citation omitted). Mr. Xu's interests will not be affected in any way by who receives the funds he has been ordered to return. In this case, the aggrieved party would be the debtors.

Under sections 329 and 330 of the Bankruptcy Code, attorneys are allowed to charge only a reasonable fee for such costs, and those federal statutes require the court determine a reasonable fee amount. 11 U.S.C. § 329 (stating a court can reduce or eliminate fees if the "compensation exceeds the reasonable value" of the services provided; 11 U.S.C. § 330(a)(4)(B) (allowing "reasonable compensation" to a debtor's attorney in a chapter 13 case).

In this chapter 13 case attorney Frank Xu provided legal counsel to Mr. and Mrs. Arebalo to obtain confirmation of a repayment plan under chapter 13. The chapter 13 trustee objected to Mr. Xu's subsequent fee request and the United States Trustee appeared at the hearing.

The United States trustees are senior officials of the Department of Justice. See generally, 28 U.S.C. § 581 et. seq. They "supervise the administration of cases and trustees" in all bankruptcy cases within his or her region through the exercise of a range of oversight responsibilities. 28 U.S.C. §586(a)(3). See generally, Morgenstern v. Revco, D.C., Inc. (In re Revco D.S. Inc.), 898 F. 2d 498, 500 (6th Cir. 1990) (explaining that United States trustees oversee the bankruptcy process, protect the public interest, and ensure that bankruptcy cases are conducted according to law.). United States trustees may raise, appear, and be heard on any issue in any case or proceeding under Title 11. 11 U.S.C. § 307. Section 586(a)(3)(A)(i)-(ii) explicitly authorizes United States Trustees to object to attorney fee applications.

In assessing an attorney fee request, a bankruptcy court must conduct a two-step analysis. First it evaluates the value of the attorney's work and, in a chapter 13 case, the "benefit and necessity" of those services to the debtor. 11 U.S.C. § 329(b); 11 U.S.C. § 330(a)(4)(B). Second, it determines whether the fees the attorney seeks are reasonable in light of other factors, such as the time, reasonableness of the work, and skill of the practitioner. Id.

If a bankruptcy court determines that a fee request is excessive, it may reduce a requested award or cancel the agreement between a debtor and his attorney and "order the return of any such payment, to the extent [it is] excessive." 11 U.S.C. § 329(b). And under section 330(a)(4)(B) the court will issue an award of reasonable fees.

Mr. Xu is also appealing the refusal of the bankruptcy court to consider his motion to avoid a second lien on the Arebalos' home mortgage. The Rules of Federal Bankruptcy Procedure require that this action be brought by complaint. Adjudications to determine the "validity, priority, or extent of a lien or other interest in property" must be decided in the context of an adversary proceeding. Fed. R. Bankr. P. 7001(2). An adversary proceeding is commenced by serving a complaint. Fed. R. Bankr. P. 7004. It is then adjudicated under a process that incorporates extensive portions of the Federal Rules of Civil Procedure. See, generally, Fed. R. Bankr. P., Part VII.

2. Statement of Facts

On April 1, 2009, Lihua and Manuel Arebalo, the debtors, hired attorney Frank Xu, Esq. to handle their chapter 13 bankruptcy case. They gave him approximately $28,000 to keep in his trust account. Appx. at 78. Mr. Xu filed the chapter 13 petition on behalf of the Arebalos on June 3, 2009. Appx. at 4, Dkt. #1.

The same day the Clerk's office issued a deficiency notice because the petition Mr. Xu filed was missing a pre-petition statement. Appx. at 5 (docket statement). It lacked a summary of schedules. Id. It had no statistical summary of liabilities. Id. The schedule H was missing. Id. It did not include a proposed chapter 13 plan. Id. It did not append the Arebalos' pay stubs from the previous sixty days, as required. Id.

During the case, Mr. Xu made a number of other incomplete or improper filings. Specifically:

- On six separate occasions, Mr. Xu amended one or more of the Arebalos' bankruptcy schedules, statement of current monthly income, statement of financial affairs, or schedule summaries – June 23, July 30, July 31, August 2, August 11, and August 13 of 2009. Appx. at 6-10, Dkt. #s12, 13, 14, 16, 17, 18, 20, 22. He amended the Arebalos' chapter 13 repayment plan three times – August 11, August 31, September 9. Appx. at 8-12, Dkt #s19, 25, 28.
- Mr. Xu failed to notify the trustee virtually every time he filed an amended document, although the bankruptcy court court clerk informed Mr. Xu of the notice requirement five separate times. Bankr. Local R. 1009-1(a). Appx. at 6-10, Dkt. #12, 14, 20, 21, 22.

- On or about November 13, Mr. Xu filed a motion to avoid a second lien on the Arebalos' mortgage as a "presentment," which was not allowed under the courtroom practice of the presiding judge. None of his attempts to correct the error complied with proper bankruptcy court procedure because he never filed an adversary proceeding to resolve the matter, as required by Federal Rule of Bankruptcy Procedure 7001.
- Mr Xu's first applications for attorney compensation was rejected as deficient. Appx. at 12 (docket statement).
- Mr. Xu's first amended application for attorney compensation was similarly rejected because it was deficient. Appx. at 13-14.

Mr. Xu's corrected filings cost extra filing fees, which Mr. Xu billed to the Arebalos. See Appx. at 65 (claiming 3 ECF charges).

Mr. Xu had to amend the chapter 13 plan that he prepared three times before the bankruptcy court approved it on September 18, 2009. Appx. at 29. The order provided that "no property received by the Trustee for the purpose of distribution under the Plan shall revest in the Debtor(s) except to the extent that such property may be in excess of the amount needed to pay in full all allowed claims as provided in the Plan." Id. It also provided that "such property as may revest in the Debtor(s) shall so revest upon the approval by the Court of the Trustee's Final Report and Account." Id. The confirmation order also specified that any reference in the plan to avoiding liens "is null and void" unless such an avoidance is "explicitly . . . approved by the Court." Id.

a. Attorney Fee Request

On October 7, 2009, Mr. Xu applied for court approval of $18,405.93 in attorney's fees, based on a half-page "Statement of Attorney Bill. Appx. at 30.

The chapter 13 trustee, Michael Macco, opposed Mr. Xu's fee request. Trustee Aff. in Opp'n at 1 (Jan. 27, 2010) (Dkt. #38) (stating that he was "thoroughly confused" by the application).

On November 13, Mr. Xu filed an amended fee request in which he asserted he charged the Arebalos a $2,000 retainer and billed them at a rate of $350 per hour. Appx. at 42. The bankruptcy court rejected it as improperly entered as a "presentment." Appx. at 13-14. Mr. Xu filed a third application on January 19, 2010. Appx. at 54, Dkt. #37.

The bankruptcy court held two hearings on Mr. Xu's attorney fee request, the first on February 8, 2010, which was continued when Mr. Xu could not produce time records and expense reports. Appx. at 14-15. The hearing resumed on March 11, at which time Mr. Xu argued that his bill was "quite modest" and "reasonable for the value of the service rendered." Appx. at 88 (fee hearing transcript).

The bankruptcy court found that the Arebalos' case was a routine chapter 13 consumer debt case. Appx. at 86 (including statement by the court that this was "not a complicated case"). The court also found that the standard fee for an "experienced practitioner"in the Eastern District of New York is $4,500. Appx. at 86-87. Mr. Xu, in contrast, sought authorization to bill the Arebalos a total of $34,650 in attorney's fees, plus $409.93 in expenses. Appx. at 64-65. At the fee hearing, Mr. Xu petitioned the court for $15,353.45 – the balance of his fees, because the Arebalos had already paid him a $2,000 retainer and $17,296.55 in legal fees. Appx. at 82-84 (fee hearing testimony), 64-65 (attorney bill). The latter payment was made without bankruptcy court approval. Appx. at 83, 89-90.

After Mr. Xu's testimony, the bankruptcy court found that Mr. Xu did not "understand the fundamentals of the bankruptcy process." Appx. at 88. It further concluded that Mr. Xu "performed at an incompetent level" and that Mr. Xu was "lucky" that the court "decided not to sanction him." Appx. at 90. In fact, Mr. Xu himself admitted to "possible procedural inexperience" in his fee application. Appx. at 33, 55.

In spite of its assessment of Mr. Xu's performance, the court authorized a $4,000 fee. Appx. at 88 (stating "you're lucky I'm giving you $4,000"). It summarily rejected Mr. Xu's argument that the $4,000 would "overrule the debtor's wishes to pay for the service rendered." Id. Accordingly, the court ordered Mr. Xu to return over $15,000, the amount above $4,000 that he had already been paid. Id. at 14-15, 17. In its order, the bankruptcy court clarified that Mr. Xu was required to return the excess to the chapter 13 trustee. Appx. at 29; compare Fee Hr'g tr. at 14 (Appx. at 87) (stating money should be given to the estate) with 15 (Appx. at 88) (stating money should go to the debtors).

b. Motion to Avoid Second Lien

Mr. Xu commingled his November, 2009 and January, 2010 fee requests with a request that the bankruptcy court avoid the lien securing the Arebalos' second mortgage. Appx. at 31, 54. The bankruptcy court refused to consider the avoidance issue at the March 11 fee hearing. Mr. Xu never sought to reassert that part of the blended motion in a separate hearing and never filed a complaint to avoid the lien under Federal Rule of Bankruptcy Procedure 7001.

The record is unclear concerning when Mr. Xu first raised the second mortgage avoidance issue. Mr. Xu states that he filed the motion dated November 11, 2009 as a "presentment," namely as an order to be signed by the judge without hearing. Xu Br. at 3 and Ex. A. But the docket sheet does not contain an entry for November 11 but does have an entry for November 13 indicating "ENTERED INCORRECTLY ADVISED ATTORNEY TO REFILE; Application for Compensation." (Emphasis in original). Appx. at 13-14. The entry also indicates that the clerk "terminated presentment on November 16, 2009." Id.

The case docket has no indication that Mr. Xu attempted to re-file the avoidance request either as a separate motion or as an adversary proceeding.

The lien avoidance issue was raised in Mr. Xu's second amended fee application, filed on January 19, 2010, however. Appx. at 54. The Amended Notice of Motion for Attorney Compensation and Mortgage Lien Avoidance requests consideration of the issue at the compensation hearing, then scheduled for February 8, 2010. Id. The accompanying affidavit raises the issue in paragraphs 4-7. Appx.

at 56-58. The certificate of service indicates that the Notice was served on Dennis Jose, attorney for JP Morgan Chase in Buffalo, New York. Appx. at 59. Mr. Jose represented the servicer of the Arabelos' first mortgage, which was held by Bank of America. Appx. at 10, Dkt. #24 (notice of appearance). The second lien is held by JP Morgan Chase in its own right operating out of Ohio. Appx. at 112, 115. The record does not indicate that Mr. Xu served notice on JP Morgan Chase in its capacity as second lien holder.

The bankruptcy court did not consider the lien avoidance request because the fee application was the only issue that had been calendared. Appx. at 13-15. After confirming its understanding of the purpose of the hearing with the United States Trustee, the court responded to Mr Xu: "Look, this is a fee app that's on today. I don't know what you're talking about mortgages or anything else. That's the only thing on today." Appx. at 75-76.

On March 29, 2010, Mr. Xu appealed the bankruptcy court's fee award order to this Court. Although the order did not mention the lien issue, he also appealed the bankruptcy court's refusal at the hearing to consider the Arebalos' request that their second mortgage lien be avoided.[3] [3] At the March 11 hearing, Mr. Xu testified about the funds that the Arebalos had placed in his client trust fund and how Mr. Xu had used the funds to pay himself and some of the debtors' other obligations. The bankruptcy court raised concerns about the propriety of Mr. Xu's actions, but that issue is not before this Court on appeal. See Appx. at 81-82.

Standard of Review

A bankruptcy court's factual findings are reviewed for clear error, and its conclusions of law are reviewed de novo. Lubow Mach. Co. v. Bayshore Wire Prods. (In re Bayshore Wire Prods.), 209 F.3d 100, 103 (2d Cir. 2000) (citation omitted). In the Second Circuit, "[a]n abuse of discretion may consist of an error of law or a clearly erroneous finding of fact." Jasco Tools, Inc. v. Dana Corp. (In re Dana Corp.), 574 F.3d 129, 145 (2d Cir. 2009) (quotation omitted). It is "basic" that a reviewing court will not overturn a fee award "absent a clear abuse of discretion." In re Arlan's Dept. Stores, Inc., 615 F.2d 925, 943 (2d. Cir. 1979).

Summary of Argument

Mr. Xu sought to charge his client $34,000 for his chapter 13 work on their behalf, which is $29,500 more than the maximum amount chapter 13 attorneys in the Eastern District of New York typically receive. The bankruptcy court awarded Mr. Xu $4,000 for what it termed to be an "uncomplicated case."[4] This corresponds to the $4,000-$4,500 that bankruptcy attorneys generally receive for a chapter 13 case. The $4,000 award was not an abuse of the broad discretion this bankruptcy court had under two provisions of the Bankruptcy Code, 11 U.S.C. § 329 and 11 U.S.C. § 330(a)(4)(B), to limit Mr. Xu's fees to a "reasonable" amount.

Although the bankruptcy court awarded Mr. Xu the same fees that most chapter 13 attorneys receive under sections 329 and 330, the court could have reasonably awarded Mr. Xu far less. Mr. Xu made a host of mistakes in this case, as the bankruptcy court docket demonstrates. That led the bankruptcy court to find that Mr. Xu had "performed at an incompetent level."[5] That finding was supported by substantial evidence, so the court below did not abuse its discretion in awarding Mr. Xu $4,000 for his work here, pursuant to sections 329 and 330.

In addition, the bankruptcy court did not abuse its discretion when it refused to consider Mr. Xu's mortgage lien avoidance motion during the fee hearing. A bankruptcy court generally must consider the validity of a lien in response to a complaint filed to initiate an adversary proceeding. Fed. R. Bankr. P. 7001(2). Furthermore, Mr. Xu served the first, not the second, lien-holder with the notice of his motion to avoid the second lien. This error underscores Mr. Xu's "incompeten[ce]" in this case.

Even if the issue could have been properly raised by motion, the bankruptcy court scheduled the March 11 hearing only on the issue of the fee application. Like any other court, a bankruptcy court is entitled to exercise discretion over how it handles its docket. The bankruptcy court did not abuse its discretion when it refused to consider the avoidance issue during the fee hearing. If Mr. Xu seriously wanted to pursue that motion, he could have calendared it separately or asked the court to schedule another hearing. He did neither.

I. The Bankruptcy Court Did Not Abuse its Discretion Under 11 U.S.C. § 329 and 11 U.S.C. § 330(a)(4)(B) When it Awarded Mr. Xu $4,000 in Fees.

The bankruptcy court did not abuse its discretion under 11 U.S.C. § 329 and 11 U.S.C. § 330 when it awarded Mr. Xu a typical chapter 13 fee of $4,000. Counsel bears the burden of proof to demonstrate entitlement to the requested fees, including providing documentation of time worked. See Hensley v. Eckerhart, 461 U.S. 424, 437 (1983). Therefore, a bankruptcy court is required to examine the nature, extent, and value of the services provided by an attorney. Riker Danzig, Scherer, Hyland & Perretti v. Official Comm. Unsecured Creditors (In re Smart World Technologies, LLC) , 552 F.3d 228, 232 (2d Cir. 2009). The bankruptcy court did not clearly err in finding that Mr. Xu failed to demonstrate that he deserved $34,000 in fees for a routine chapter 13 case.

In this case, the bankruptcy court did not commit clear error in finding that Mr. Xu's work in the Arebalos' case did not provide services that were of "necessity and benefit" to them. 11 U.S.C. § 329(b); 11 U.S.C. § 330(a)(3); 11 U.S.C. § 330(a)(4)(B). See Grant v. George Schumann Tire & Battery Co., 908 F.2d 874, 877-78 (11th Cir. 1990) (describing criteria for fees as nature, value and extent of services rendered; difficulty of legal question; customary fees; efficiency of the representation and whether any of the services rendered were duplicative).

Here, the bankruptcy court did not clearly err in finding that Mr. Xu "performed at an incompetent level," and that therefore his $34,000 fee request was excessive. Appx. at 90. This is so for three reasons.

A. The bankruptcy court did not err under sections 329 and 330 in awarding Mr. Xu the typical fee for attorneys handling chapter 13 cases.

Attorneys in the Eastern District typically receive fees ranging from $4,000-$4,500 for chapter 13 cases.[6] Appx. at 84-85; see e.g., In re Herbert, No. 04-86487, 2009 WL 1941978, at *1 (Bankr. E.D.N.Y. July 2, 2009) (increasing initial attorney fee of $3,000 to $4,500 for a chapter 13 case that lasted over two years and involved four proposed repayment plans).

In further comparison, the Utica Division of the Bankruptcy Court for the Northern District of New York has capped chapter 13 fees at $3,700 by administrative order. Debtor Counsel Fees in Chapter 13 Cases Filed in the Utica Division, Admin. Order 09-07 (Bankr. N.D.N.Y. Aug. 8, 2009), Appx. at 94. In fact, Mr. Xu's award of $4,000 is at the high end of the scale. In re Wesseldine, 434 B.R. 31, 40, n.9 (N.D.N.Y 2010) (citing instances of chapter 13 flat fees throughout the country, ranging from $2,000 to $4,500). In contrast, Mr. Xu seeks over $34,000 in compensation.

[6] The Eastern District of New York Bankruptcy Court has not promulgated any local rule or administrative order regarding fees, but the $4,500 figure reflects local practice. Appx. at 84-85.

The bankruptcy court did not clearly err when it did not permit Mr. Xu to pass on the costs of educating himself about chapter 13 bankruptcy law. Mr. Xu used the Arebalos' case to educate himself about chapter 13 procedure, not an activity that the Bankruptcy Code subsidizes through a higher fee award. See 11 U.S.C. § 330(a)(3)(E) (citing "skill and experience in the bankruptcy field" as a factor for determining attorney compensation). Mr. Xu's high fee request stems in part from the fact that he spent far more time on the Arebalos' case than is the norm. In re Thorn, 192 B.R. 52, 56 (Bankr. N.D.N.Y. 1995) (assuming a simple chapter 13 case would require six hours of work); In re Wesseldine, 434 B.R. at 35 (26 hours). The United States Trustee attributed this to inexperience. Appx. at 84. The bankruptcy court agreed because it found that Mr. Xu did not "understand the fundamentals of the bankruptcy process." Appx. at 88; see also Appx. at 87 (stating that the $4,500 fee was for an "experienced practitioner").

Furthermore, in chapter 13, attorneys are compensated for services that are of "benefit and necessity" to the debtor. 11 U.S.C. § 330(a)(4)(B). Mr. Xu acknowledges that his efforts did not always benefit the Arebalos directly. He stated in his November 11 affirmation in support of fees that he "self-studied chapter 13 procedures and substantive law." Appx. at 33. He also acknowledged "possible procedural inexperience." Id. He repeated these admissions in his January 19 filing. Id. at 55.

Furthermore, Mr. Xu was required to re-file the Arebalos' schedules several times due to inaccuracies and missing documentation. In total, Mr. Xu filed 28 different documents, including multiple amendments to the petition, schedules, and repayment plans. The Arebalos did not benefit, and were more likely harmed, by the filing delays and inaccuracies in their schedules. And they were certainly harmed when Mr. Xu billed them for the additional filing fees.

The extra hours Mr. Xu spent on the case did not benefit the Arebalos, as required by the Code. Therefore the bankruptcy court did not abuse its discretion in refusing to compensate Mr. Xu for the full amount of time he spent on the case.

B. The evidence supports the bankruptcy court's finding that the Arebalos' chapter 13 case was routine and thus did not warrant exceptional compensation.

Third, the bankruptcy court did not clearly err in finding that the Arebalos' case was straight-forward and thus not eligible for exceptional compensation above the $4,500 norm. In re Wesseldine, 434 B.R. at 40 (stating that "debtors should not be overcharged in cases that lack the complexity or difficulty"). A typical chapter 13 case requires an attorney to handle issues such as secured debt, such as a house and automobile, a judgment liens or claims based on financing of other personal property. Id. at 38 (citing In re Dabney, 417 B.R. 826, 834 (Bankr. N.D. Ga. 2009)). Other issues commonly include pending foreclosure of the debtor's home and priority tax debt. Id. A chapter 13 debtor's attorney must therefore anticipate having to handle requests for stay relief, mortgage arrears work-outs, adequate protection payments for secured creditors, whether liens may be avoided, or whether cramdown is available. Id.

In this case, Mr. Xu faced few of these issues. One creditor, Bank of America, objected to the Arebalos' plan on August 19, 2009. Dkt #23. It withdrew that objection on September 1, 2009, after the debtors amended their plan. Dkt #27. The court entered an order confirming the plan on September 18, 2009. Dkt #29. Mr. Xu attempted to avoid a second lien on the Arebalos' mortgage by having the issue adjudicated in conjunction with his fee application. Even if this were the proper procedure, an avoidance motion does not bring the case outside of the normal chapter 13 standard. Wesseldine, 434 B.R. at 38. The bankruptcy court did not clearly err in concluding that the Arebalos' chapter 13 bankruptcy case was routine.

In addition, the bankruptcy court did not commit clear error in concluding that the Arebalos' case was straight-forward because Mr. Xu's billing descriptions do not indicate otherwise.[7] Mr. Xu initially filed with the court a one-page accounting of his time with block entries such as "Preparation of petition, schedules, statement of affairs; review and analysis of documents gathered on monthly budget, creditors, earnings and assets; etc. from April 1, 2009 to September 21, 2009........20 hours." Appx. at 29.

In his first amended request for fees, Mr. Xu submitted a hand-written document supporting his fee request, in which block entries were reduced from several months to "9 a.m. - 5:30 p.m. x 5 days." Appx. at 45 (assigning five days to [7] Mr. Xu was required to provide copies of contemporaneous billing statements that "describe with specificity, by attorney, the nature of the work done, the hours expended, and the dates on which the work was performed." In re Bailey, No. 08-73915, 2009 Bankr. LEXIS 4166, at *14 (Bankr. E.D.N.Y. July 14, 2009).

the description “study substantive and procedural law regarding chapter 13 bankruptcy lien avoidance and motion practice, draft affirmation in support of attorney compensation and second mortgage lien avoidance, etc.”).

In his second amended request for fees, Mr. Xu produced a table with dates, billing descriptions, and hours worked. Appx. at 60-63. His activities included “client consultation,” “preparation of petitions,” “legal research,” “section 341(a) meeting appearance,”“amended form schedules,” “plan confirmation hearing” and “telephonic and fax negotiation” with the trustee and JP Morgan Chase Bank. Id. None of these tasks go beyond those expected in a routine chapter 13 case. In re Wesseldine, 434 B.R. at 38.

The bankruptcy court did not clearly err in concluding that $4,000 – the standard rate in the Eastern District of New York – was appropriate compensation. It therefore did not abuse its discretion when it ordered Mr. Xu to disgorge the remaining $15,432.48 in fees he had already collected to the chapter 13 trustee.

II. The Bankruptcy Court Did Not Improperly Limit Mr. Xu’s Fees, Regardless of Mr. Xu’s Payment Agreement with the Arebalos.

The bankruptcy court did not commit clear error by rejecting Mr. Xu’s argument that it should honor the desire of the Arebalos to pay him $34,000 for their chapter 13 case. Mr. Xu’s argument fails for two reasons.

Mr. Xu. fundamentally misunderstands bankruptcy law. In a chapter 13 case, section 330(a)(4)(B) authorizes the court to determine the statutorily reasonable amount. Mr. Xu does not make that decision. Nor do his clients. See

Appx. 88-90. The court does that by evaluating the factors set forth in section 330(a)(3). Section 329 also allows the court to review and reduce fees that exceed a reasonable amount.[8]

This bankruptcy court was required to analyze Mr. Xu's fee request to determine whether his requested payment was reasonable, rather than simply comply with Mr. Xu's desires or even with the Arebalos' alleged wishes. 11 U.S.C. §§ 329-30; see In re Busy Beaver Bldg. Centers, Inc., 19 F.3d 833, 841 (3d Cir. 1994) (stating in the chapter 11 context that a bankruptcy court has "a duty" to review fee applications); Thorn,192 B.R. at 55 (same in chapter 13 context).

In addition, it is particularly important in a chapter 13 case that courts determine fees. Debtors have no incentive to curtail attorney fees, as the funds that go to fees otherwise will be paid to creditors. In turn, creditors may be deterred from challenging a fee request because of the litigation costs. Busy Beaver Bldg., 19 F.3d at 842-43; Thorn,192 B.R. at 55. Thus, although Mr. Xu claimed at the fee hearing that the bankruptcy court "overrule[d] the debtor's wishes to pay for the service rendered," the bankruptcy court followed the law here.

Secondly, the bankruptcy court has an "inherent obligation to monitor the debtor's estate and to serve the public interest." Busy Beaver Bldg, 19 F.3d at 841. Ensuring that section 329 and 330 fee awards are reasonable serves the "overarching policy of avoid the waste of the debtor's estate" and reinforces public trust in the bankruptcy system. Id. (citing In re Wonder Corp. of America, 82 B.R. 186, 191 (D. Conn.1988)).

In addition, bankruptcy courts preserve the integrity of the bankruptcy system by scrutinizing fees applications "to prevent overbearing attorneys from taking advantage of desperate debtors." In re Jackson, 401 B.R. 333 (Bankr. N.D. Ill. 2009); See In re Datta, No. 8-08-72740-ast, 2009 WL 1941974 at *6 (Bankr. E.D.N.Y. July 2, 2009) (stating that section 329 is designed to protect debtors). Furthermore, oversight prevents "overreaching attorneys" from "drain[ing] [the estate] of wealth" which should be distributed to unsecured creditors. Busy Beaver Bldg., 19 F.3d at 843-44 (citing numerous cases). Accordingly, Mr. Xu is incorrect that an attorney is always entitled to whatever fee that the debtor has agreed to pay him. Datta, 2009 WL 1941974 at *5 (citing In re Geraci, 138 F.3d 314, 319-20 (7th Cir. 1998)).

Here, the bankruptcy court addressed the reasonableness of Mr. Xu's attorney's fees and adjusted them accordingly. See Fed. R. Bankr. P. 2017; 11 U.S.C. § 329; 11 U.S.C. § 330; In re Monahan Ford Corp. of Flushing, 390 B.R. 493, 503 (Bankr. E.D.N.Y. 2008). The Arebalos' consent to statutory award was not necessary.

III. The Bankruptcy Court Did Not Abuse Its Discretion in Refusing to Consider Mr. Xu's Motion to Strip a Second-Mortgage Lien During the Fee Hearing.

The bankruptcy court did not abuse its discretion in refusing to consider Mr. Xu's second-mortgage lien avoidance motion during the attorney compensation hearing on March 11, 2010 on two grounds.

Mr. Xu failed to follow bankruptcy court procedures to ensure that the issue would be adjudicated. The bankruptcy court did not commit clear error in declining to waive these safeguards for three reasons.

First, issues related to a property liens should be considered pursuant to Federal Rule of Bankruptcy 7001(2), which requires that an attorney file an adversary complaint. Fed. R. Bankr. P. 7001(2) (stating that a proceeding to determine "the validity, priority, or extent of a lien" is an adversary proceeding).

Second, Mr. Xu's attempt to raise the issue by motion was procedurally incorrect. The original presentment motion to avoid the lien was not docketed because this form of motion is not allowed under local practice.

Third, Mr. Xu never corrected this deficiency by initiating an adversary proceeding or a separate motion to resolve the issue. Indeed, he did not even request a separate hearing on the motion, something he could have done.

As a separate and independent ground, the March 11 hearing was noticed to approve Mr. Xu's application for attorney's fees. Dkt. #36, 37. Like any court, a bankruptcy court has the power to regulate its docket. In re MPM Enters., Inc., 231 B.R. 500, 504 (E.D.N.Y. 1999) (citing In re Robinson, 198 B.R. 1017, 1025 (Bankr.

N.D. Ga. 1996)). The bankruptcy court did not abuse its discretion in refusing to hear the mortgage avoidance issue that had not been properly noticed or calendared.

Conclusion

For the foregoing reasons, the United States Trustee respectfully asks this Court to affirm the bankruptcy court's order of March 19, 2010.

IN THE UNITED STATES COURT OF APPEALS FOR THE FIFTH CIRCUIT

JOHN F. ARENS, Appellant,
v.
AL BOUGHTON, TRUSTEE, ET AL.,

ON APPEAL FROM THE UNITED STATES DISTRICT COURT FOR THE WESTERN DISTRICT OF LOUISIANA

BRIEF OF THE UNITED STATES TRUSTEE, APPELLEE

STATEMENT OF JURISDICTION

The subject matter jurisdiction of the United States Bankruptcy Court for the Western District of Louisiana is based on 28 U.S.C. § 157(b)(1) and the jurisdiction of the United States District Court for the Western District of Louisiana is based on 28 U.S.C. §§ 158(a) and 1334. This Court has jurisdiction over this appeal under 28 U.S.C. § 158(d) and 1291. The appeal is taken from the final order of the district court entered on October 12, 1993, affirming the bankruptcy court's final order requiring debtors' counsel to disgorge his entire retainer fee of $75,000. The notice of appeal to the district court was timely filed on February 16, 1993, and the notice of appeal from the district court's order was timely filed on November 4, 1993 in accordance with 4(a) and 6(b) of the Federal Rules of Appellate Procedure.

STANDARD OF REVIEW

The applicable standard of review on appeal is clearly erroneous as to findings of fact and de novo as to conclusions of law. In re Consolidated Bancshares, Inc., 785 F.2d 1249, 1252 (5th Cir. 1986). A bankruptcy court's award or denial of compensation is reviewed under an abuse of discretion standard. Id.; In re Anderson, 936 F.2d 199 (5th Cir. 1991).

STATEMENT OF THE ISSUE

Whether the bankruptcy court correctly ordered the disgorgement of all fees paid to debtors' counsel.

STATEMENT OF THE CASE

A. Course of Proceedings and Disposition Below

[*4] This matter arose in August 1992, in the Alexandria Division of the United States Bankruptcy Court for the Western District of Louisiana upon the motion of the United States Trustee to examine the transactions of Mr. and Mrs. Batten and Ms. Prudhomme (collectively, the "debtors") with their attorneys, the Arens Law Firm. (R. Vol. 3 at 439, 448-467.) On August 18, 1992, Farm Credit Bank ("FCB"), the debtors' major creditor, filed a motion to intervene in support of the United States Trustee's motion, and also filed a motion for disgorgement of the retainer paid by debtors to the Arens Law Firm. (Id. at 468-488.) On September 1, 1992, the plan trustee [FN1], Mr. Al Boughton, moved for intervention in support of FCB's motion for disgorgement. (Id. at 489-495.)

A consolidated evidentiary hearing on the U.S. Trustee's and FCB's motions was held October 28, 1992. (Id. at 424, 440.) The court entered its Reasons for Decision on January 29, 1993 (Aplt. Excerpts at 13-65), and entered an order on February 1, 1993, requiring Arens to pay the plan trustee the full sum of $75,000. (Id. at 11-12.) On February 16, 1993, Arens filed a notice of appeal from the final order to the United States District Court for the Western District of Louisiana (R. Vol. 1 at 2-3), and on October 12, 1993, the district court entered an order affirming the bankruptcy court's decision. (R. Vol. 6 at 980-985.) Arens now appeals the district court's ruling to this Court pursuant to 28 U.S.C. § 158(d). (Id. at 986-987.)

B. Statement of the Facts

In February 1990, Mr. and Mrs. John Batten and Ms. Daisy Prudhomme hired John Arens' law firm to represent them in "all dealings and negotiations and representations with Farm Credit system for how ever long it took." (10/28/92 Transcript at 25:20-25:23.) [FN2] After their initial meeting with Arens in Arkansas, the debtors returned to their home in Louisiana where they signed the retainer agreement and returned it to Arens with a payment of $50,000. [FN3] (Aplee. Excerpts at 1 and 10/28/92 Transcript at 25:24-26:3, 26:23-26:25.) An additional $25,000 payment was made on February 27, 1991. (10/28/92 Transcript at 26:25, and U.S. Trustee Ex. Nos. 2 and 11.) [FN4] The retainer agreement also provided that Arens would acquire a 40% interest in the debtors' lender liability claim against FCB. (Aplee. Excerpts at 1.)

On July 30, 1991, the Arens Law Firm filed a Chapter 11 bankruptcy petition for Ms. Prudhomme. (R. Vol. 3 at 430.) On September 4, 1991, pursuant to Local Bankruptcy Rule 7.1 and Uniform District Court Rule 20.06, Mr. Eldred N. Bell of the Arens Law Firm filed an application to be admitted to practice in the Bankruptcy Court for the Western District of Louisiana. (R. Vol. 1 at 14-15.) Attached to this application was a document entitled "Affidavit for Approval of Employment of Attorney under a General Retainer" which stated in pertinent part:

> Neither I, the Firm of Arens and Alexander, nor any member or associate thereof, insofar as I have been able to ascertain, has any connection with the trustee herein, the estate's creditors, or any other party in interest, or their respective attorneys and accountants.... Neither I, the firm of Arens and Alexander, nor any member or associate, insofar as I have been able to ascertain, represents any interest adverse to that of the estate, the trustee or the debtor in the matters upon which said law firm is to be engaged.

[*5] (Aplee. Excerpts at 2.) Notwithstanding the disclosure requirements of Bankruptcy Rule 2014, the firm did not disclose the retainer agreement, the payments they received pursuant to the agreement, or the contingency interest in the debtors' lender liability claim which they had acquired. (Id.) On September 9, 1991, the court entered an order approving counsel's employment application, based on his representation that the Arens Law Firm represented no interest adverse to the debtor in possession or her estate, and that they are disinterested persons under sections 101(13) and 327 of title 11, United States Code. (R. Vol. 1 at 18-19.) Terry Zelinski and Richard Alexander, also members of the Arens Law Firm, were subsequently admitted. (Id. 20-23.)

The firm also failed to file a supplemental schedule as required by Local Bankruptcy Rule 4.0, Western District of Louisiana, which, if filed, would have required the disclosure of the $50,000 payment received in February 1990, the $25,000 payment received in February 1991, and the 40% contingency interest. (R. Vol. 3 at 430-445.) [FN5] Additionally, while the cause of action against the FCB is listed in the debtor's Schedule B as an asset under item "q", there is no listing of the interest of the Arens Law Firm in that cause of action. (U.S. Trustee Ex. Nos. 3 and 4.) The Statement of Financial Affairs also failed to disclose counsel's interest in the lender liability claim. (Id. No. 2.)

The Arens Law Firm filed a Chapter 11 bankruptcy petition on behalf of the Battens on October 15, 1991. (R. Vol. 3 at 409.) The court entered an order authorizing the debtors in possession to employ Robert Royer and the Arens Law Firm on November 14, 1991. (Aplee. Excerpts at 4-7.) The order was signed by Mr. Royer and Ms. Terry Zelinski (on behalf of the Arens Law Firm), who agreed that they "represent[ed] no interest adverse to the debtors in possession." (Id. at 7.) Other Arens' firm lawyers admitted in the Batten case include Eldred Bell, Gregory House and Richard Alexander. (R. Vol. 3 at 411-412, 414.)

Although a supplemental schedule pursuant to Local Bankruptcy Rule 4.0 was filed in this case, which listed the $25,000 payment received in February 1991, it did not mention the existence of counsel's contingency interest in debtors' lender liability claim. (U.S. Trustee Ex. No. 13.) Likewise, the Statement of Financial Affairs failed to disclose counsel's interest in the lender liability claim. (Id. No. 11.)

Further, while the disclosure statement and the first amended disclosure statement submitted in connection with the Battens' plan of reorganization list the lender liability claim as an asset, neither document mentions counsels' interest in this asset. (Id. Nos. 17 and 18.) The Arens Law Firm finally revealed its interest in the debtors' lender liability claim against the FCB in the second amended disclosure statement filed in the Batten case on April 30, 1992. (Id. No. 19.) The contingency fee interest was never disclosed in any of the pleadings filed in the Prudhomme case. (R. Vol. 3 at 430-445.)

[*6] On August 5, 1992, the United States Trustee filed a motion in the Batten case to examine debtors' transactions with the debtors' attorneys. (R. Vol. 3 at 448-467.) A similar motion was filed in the Prudhomme case on September 1, 1992. (R. Vol. 3 at 439.) On August 18, 1992, FCB filed a motion to intervene in support of the United States Trustee's motion, and also filed a motion for disgorgement of the retainer paid by debtors to the Arens Law Firm. (Id. at 468-488.) The plan trustee, Mr. Al Boughton, moved for intervention in support of FCB's motion for disgorgement on September 1, 1992. (Id. at 489- 495.)

A consolidated evidentiary hearing on the U.S. Trustee's and FCB's motions was held October 28, 1992. (Id. at 424, 440.) No representative appeared on behalf of the Arens Law Firm. (10/28/92 Transcript at 2:1-2:18.) The court established a posthearing briefing schedule (id. 118:9-118:25), and the U.S. Trustee and FCB filed timely briefs. (R. Vol. 4 at 511-567 and 568-587.) Arens obtained two extensions of time, and eventually filed an untimely brief on December 29, 1992. (Id. at 595-615.) Attached to this brief were untimely proffers of evidence in affidavit form and attorney time sheets. (Id. at 616- 663 and 664-680.) The court entered its Reasons for Decision on January 29, 1993 (Aplt. Excerpts at 13-65), and entered an order on February 1, 1993, requiring Arens to pay the plan trustee the full sum of $75,000. (Id. at 11- 12.)

In his Reasons for Decision, the bankruptcy judge determined that he had jurisdiction to examine the reasonableness of fees paid for services rendered in connection with bankruptcy proceedings, regardless of their source, (id. at 40), and that in this instance, not only were the fees paid in contemplation of bankruptcy, but they were excessive in light of the lack of benefit to the debtors and their estates. (Id. at 58.) The court also found that the Arens Law Firm "consciously avoids disclosure" (id. at 61-62), and that in this case, they breached their affirmative duty to disclose the retainer fee received from the debtors as well as their contingency interest in an asset of the debtors. (See id. at 39-40, 52-55.) The court concluded that disgorgement of the entire retainer fee was an appropriate sanction for the firm's intentional misrepresentations to the court and for their failure to perform competent services for the debtors and their estates. (Id. at 62, 65.)

Arens filed a timely notice of appeal to the district court on February 16, 1993 (R. Vol. 1 at 2-3), and on October 12, 1993, the district entered an order affirming the bankruptcy court's order. (R. Vol. 6 at 980-985.) The court concluded that debtors' counsel failed to disclose all their connections with the debtors as required by Rules 2014 and 2016(b) of the Federal Rules of Bankruptcy Procedure, section 329(a) of the Bankruptcy Code, and Local Bankruptcy Rule 4.0. (Aplt. Excerpts at 7-9.) In recognition of the bankruptcy court's broad equitable discretion in awarding and denying attorneys' fees, the court held that the bankruptcy court did not abuse its discretion in ordering the disgorgement of the entire retainer fee. (Id. at 9-10.)

SUMMARY OF THE ARGUMENT

[*7] In recognition of the need to protect the integrity of the bankruptcy process as well as protect failing debtors (and their creditors) from overreaching by their attorneys, Congress furnished the bankruptcy courts with extensive supervisory power to regulate the attorney-client relationship in bankruptcy cases. To that end, sections 327 of the Bankruptcy Code requires court approval before a debtor in possession can hire counsel to assist him in fulfilling his statutory duties. In addition, 11 U.S.C. § 329, Bankruptcy Rules 2014 and 2016, and Local Bankruptcy Rule 4.0(9) require debtors' counsel to disclose all connections with the debtors, including any proposed arrangement for compensation and any amounts paid within 18 months before filing. The purpose of these stringent disclosure requirements is to facilitate the bankruptcy court's determination of disinterestedness and its review of debtors' transactions with their attorneys. In light of the unique nature of bankruptcy proceedings, debtors' counsel are held to a high fiduciary standard, thus failure to make complete disclosure can result in disqualification, denial of compensation, and disgorgement of previously received fees.

In the instant case, the bankruptcy court determined that counsel violated their statutory and fiduciary obligations to the court, and accordingly ordered counsel to disgorge the entire retainer fee received from the debtors. Disgorgement was particularly appropriate in this case where the court determined that the value of the services rendered to the debtors and their estates amounted to zero. In light of the court's broad discretion in awarding and denying fees paid in connection with bankruptcy proceedings, the court was entitled to sanction debtors' counsel for their lack of candor with the court, their breach of fiduciary obligations to the court and the estates, and their multiple violations of mandatory disclosure requirements.

ARGUMENT

THE BANKRUPTCY COURT CORRECTLY ORDERED THE DISGORGEMENT OF FEES PAID TO DEBTORS' COUNSEL

A. Counsel's flagrant nondisclosure and lack of candor with the court, without more, warranted total disgorgement of fees

Section 327 of the Bankruptcy Code, 11 U.S.C. § 101 et seq., requires a chapter 11 debtor in possession [FN6] to obtain court approval prior to employing counsel to assist him in fulfilling his statutory duties. Section 327(a) provides as follows:

> Except as otherwise provided in this section, the trustee, with the court's approval, may employ one or more attorneys, accountants, appraisers, auctioneers, or other professional persons, that do not hold or represent an interest adverse to the estate, and that are disinterested persons, to represent or assist the trustee in carrying out the trustee's duties under this title.

In order to assist the court in its determination of whether counsel is disinterested and free from the influence of adverse interests, [FN7] Federal Rule of Bankruptcy Procedure 2014 requires proposed counsel to file an affidavit with the court setting forth "all of [counsel's] connections with the debtor, creditors, or any other party in interest." Fed. R. Bankr. P. 2014(a). See In re Arlan's Dept. Stores, Inc., 615 F.2d 925, 936 (2d Cir. 1979) (General Order in Bankruptcy 44, a predecessor of Rule 2014, required disclosure of all connections between proposed counsel and debtors, which included, inter alia, a substantial pre-petition retainer); In re Futuronics Corp., 655 F.2d 463, 469 (2d Cir. 1981) (Bankruptcy Rule 215, a predecessor of Rule 2014, required counsel to disclose all "connections" which included counsels' retainer agreement).

[*8] In addition to the disclosure requirements of Federal Rule of Bankruptcy Procedure 2014(a), Local Bankruptcy Rule 4.0 of the Western District of Louisiana requires all employment applicants to file a supplemental schedule disclosing "any amount owed by the debtor or its affiliates to proposed counsel or proposed counsel's law firm at the time of filing, and also amounts paid within 18 months before filing." Local Bankruptcy Rule 4.0(9); See also Order Regarding Amendment of Local Bankruptcy Rules at (Aplee. Excerpts at 8-9.) (This rule was established upon a determination by the local bankruptcy judges that the disclosure requirements of Rule 2014 were insufficient in providing the court with enough information to make a proper determination of disinterestedness.) [FN8]

The purpose of these stringent disclosure requirements is to ensure that the bankruptcy court is informed of all facts that may be relevant to its determination of disinterestedness. In re Granite Sheet Metal Works, Inc., 159 B.R. 840, 845 (Bankr. S.D. Ill.

1993); In re Lee, 94 B.R. 172, 176 (Bankr. C.D. Cal. 1988). Thus, the disclosure of any connection must be made at the time of application, and it is not sufficient for information concerning counsel's disinterested status to surface at a later point. In re Martin, 817 F.2d 175, 182 (1st Cir. 1987); In re B.E.S. Concrete Products, Inc., 93 B.R. 228, 236-37 (Bankr. E.D. Cal. 1988). Disclosure of all connections is mandatory. "[R]ule ... Failure to make complete disclosure can result in disqualification and denial of all compensation. In Woods v. City National Bank & Trust Co., 312 U.S. 262, 269 (1941), the Supreme Court concluded that the only way to assure that professionals maintain the requisite standards of fiduciary conduct is to strictly enforce compliance with the conflict of interest rules by denial of compensation. See generally In re Haldeman & Supply Co., 417 F.2d at 1305; In re Kendavis Industries International, Inc., 91 B.R. 742, 748 (Bankr. N.D. Even beyond the statutory duties imposed by the Bankruptcy Code and Rules, counsel for a debtor in possession serves as an officer of the court, and consequently owes a fiduciary duty to both the court and the estate. See In re Evangeline Refining Co., 890 F.2d 1312, 1323 (5th Cir. 1989); In re Consolidated Bancshares, 785 F.2d 1249, 1255 (5th Cir. 1986); In re Burke, 147 B.R. 787, 800 (Bankr N.D. Okla. 1992); In re Coastal Equities, Inc., 39 B.R. at 308 (citations omitted) ("[I]t is a well established principle that those performing duties in the administration of an estate are doing so as officers of the court.") Breaches of this fiduciary obligation are sanctionable by the denial of all compensation and the disgorgement of previously received fees. See In re Evangeline Refining Co., 890 F.2d at 1323; In re Arlan's Dept. Stores, Inc., 615 F.2d 925, 943 (2d Cir. 1979); In re Futuronics Corp., 655 F.2d 463, 471 (2d Cir. 1981); In re Coastal Equities, Inc., 39 B.R. at 309.

[*9] The Second Circuit's opinion in In re Futuronics is particularly instructive. In that case, the debtor's general counsel and special counsel failed to disclose their receipt of compensation from the debtor as well as a fee-splitting agreement between them. 655 F.2d at 469-471. The Second Circuit held that given counsels' "callous disregard for the disclosure requirements of Rule 215" and their "flagrant[] breach[] [of] their fiduciary obligations to the bankruptcy court," the bankruptcy court abused its discretion by permitting debtor's counsel to "retain any of the fees they had received, let alone to allow any further compensation." Id.

In the instant case, debtors' counsel violated their statutory and fiduciary obligations to the court by failing to disclose all their connections with the debtors. Notably, counsel failed to disclose that they had been employed by debtors since February 1990 in connection with debtors' bankruptcy cases. Consistent with this lack of candor is counsel's failure to reveal any information relating to their employment fee, which consisted in part of a $75,000 retainer, $50,000 of which was paid in February 1990, with the remaining $25,000 paid in February 1991. Counsel also failed to disclose that they had acquired a 40% interest in a state court lender liability claim against the primary creditor, FCB, thereby giving counsel a substantial potential interest in the estate.

Even though counsel had an affirmative duty pursuant to Federal Rule of Bankruptcy Procedure 2014 to disclose "all connections" it had with the debtors, none of these aforementioned connections were revealed by counsel in their Rule 2014 affidavits. Instead, counsel averred in both cases that the Arens Law Firm had no connection with the trustee, the estate's creditors, or any other party in interest, and that they represented no interest adverse to that of the estate, the trustee or the debtor. (Aplee. Excerpts at 2-3, 4, 7.) While the $25,000 payment was mentioned in debtors' statements of financial affairs, this did not vitiate counsel's duty to disclose this transaction in the employment applications. It is not the court's obligation to search through the files for information regarding counsel's disinterested status. See In re Maui 14k, Ltd., 133 B.R. 657, 661 (Bankr. D. Hawaii 1991); In re Rusty Jones, Inc., 134 B.R. 321, 345 (Bankr. N.D. Ill. 1991).

Debtors' counsel also failed to file a supplemental schedule as required by Local Bankruptcy Rule 4.0 in the Prudhomme case. (R. Vol. 3 at 430-445.) Had counsel complied with this rule, they would have been required to disclose their interest in the lender liability claim as well as the $50,000 they received in February 1990 and the $25,000 payment they received in February 1991. While they did file the supplemental schedules in the Batten case, which disclosed the $25,000 payment they received in February 1991, they did not list their contingency interest in the lender liability claim. (U.S. Trustee Ex. No. 13.) In fact, the contingency interest was not disclosed until April 30, 1992, six months after the Batten petition was filed and nine months after the Prudhomme petition was filed.

[*1]0 Ultimately, the bankruptcy court concluded that not only was there "inadequate disclosure but that the modus operandi of the Arens Firm was to avoid disclosure at all costs." (Aplt. Excerpts at 62.) Based on the facts presented in this case, which clearly establish a pattern of nondisclosure, coupled with the Arens firm's behavior in other bankruptcy cases, (see id. at 41-51), this finding was not clearly erroneous. In light of the court's broad discretion in awarding and denying fees paid in connection with the bankruptcy proceedings, the court was entitled to sanction debtors' counsel for their lack of candor with the court, their breach of fiduciary obligations to the court and the estates, and their multiple violations of mandatory disclosure requirements. See Woods v. City National Bank & Trust Co., 312 U.S. 262, 268 (1941); In re Anderson, 936 F.2d 199, 204 (5th Cir. 1991); In re Futuronics Corp., 655 F.2d 463, 471 (2d Cir. 1981); In re Arlan's Dept. Stores, Inc., 615 F.2d 925, 943 (2d Cir. 1979). The court determined that the appropriate sanction was to order John Arens to disgorge the entire retainer fee. In light of the circumstances of this case, this decision was an appropriate exercise of discretion.

B. Section 329(a) does not restrict the court's authority to order the disgorgement of fees paid to a debtor's attorney more than a year pre-petition

Arens argues that because the $75,000 retainer fee was paid pursuant to an agreement that was made more than one year before the date of the filing of either bankruptcy petition, the bankruptcy court had no authority to examine the reasonableness of the retainer fee or order its disgorgement. As support for this proposition, Arens cites to 11 U.S.C. § 329(a). [FN9] Arens' reliance on section 329(a) to limit the court's authority is misplaced. The one year look-back period of section 329(a) simply provides debtor's counsel with a perimeter regarding which prior transactions with the debtors must be reported. The disclosure requirements of section 329(a) were designed to facilitate the court in its examination of counsel's prior transactions with the debtors, not limit the court's authority in this regard.

Instead, the court's authority to examine the reasonableness of fees paid to debtors' counsel pre-petition and order the disgorgement of any fees determined to be excessive is based on 11 U.S.C. § 329(b) of the Bankruptcy Code and on Federal Rule of Bankruptcy Procedure 2017. In re Hargis, 895 F.2d 1025 (5th Cir. 1990), clarifying, 887 F.2d 77 (5th Cir. 1989) ("Section 329 authorizes the bankruptcy court to order an attorney to return fees paid for services rendered in connection with a bankruptcy proceeding, if those fees are determined by the court to be excessive, regardless of their source."); In re Walters, 868 F.2d 665, 668 (4th Cir. 1989) ("The regulatory effect of neither section 329 nor Bankruptcy Rule 2017 is conditioned on the source of payment; rather it depends upon the services rendered.")

> (b) If [debtor's attorney's] compensation exceeds the reasonable value of any such services, the court may cancel such agreement, or order the return of any such payment, to the extent excessive, to--
>
> (1) The estate, if the property transferred--
>
> > (A) would have been property of the estate....
> > (B) was paid by or on behalf of the debtor under a plan under chapter 11, 12, or 13 of this title; or
> (2) the entity that made such payment.

Rule 2017(a) states that:

> (a) Payment of Transfer to Attorney Before Order for Relief. On motion by any party in interest or the court's own initiative, the court, after notice and a hearing may determine whether any payment of money or any transfer of property by the debtor, made directly or indirectly and in contemplation of the filing of a petition under the Code by or against the debtor or before entry of the order for relief in an involuntary case, to an attorney for services rendered or to be rendered is excessive. (emphasis added.)

Neither of these provisions, which speak directly to the court's authority to examine pre-petition transactions between debtors and their counsel places a limitation on the court's authority as suggested by Arens. In fact, "Bankruptcy Rule 2017's only requirement for review is that the services be in any way related to the bankruptcy case." In re Walters, 868 F.2d at 667. Cf. In re Olivier, 819 F.2d 550, 554-55 (5th Cir. 1987) (the court upheld the bankruptcy court's denial of discharge under 11 U.S.C. § 727(a)(2)(A) even though the concealment at issue occurred prior to the statute's one-year examination period); In re Sanders, 128 B.R. 963, 966 (Bankr. W.D. La. 1991) (Not all transfers which occur more than one year before the filing of the petition are immune from the court's review.)

To interpret section 329 in the manner suggested by debtors' counsel would defeat the statute's very purpose, which is to protect persons with financial troubles from unscrupulous attorneys. See H.R. Rep. 595, 95th Cong., 1st Sess. 329, reprinted in 1978 U.S. Code Cong. & Admin. News 5963, 6285; S. Rep. No. 989, 95th Cong., 2d Sess. 39, reprinted in 1978 U.S. Code Cong. & Admin. News 5787, 5825. See also In re Woods & Henderson, 210 U.S. 246, 253 (1908) (Section 60d, a predecessor to section 329, was enacted in recognition of "the temptation of a failing debtor to deal too liberally with his property in employing counsel to protect him in view of financial reverses and probable failure.")

C. The bankruptcy court correctly found that the $75,000 retainer agreement was made in contemplation of bankruptcy

Arens argues that even if the court had the authority to look beyond the one year limitation of section 329(a), the court improperly examined the reasonableness of these fees because they were clearly not made in contemplation of the filing of a petition in bankruptcy. This argument is without merit. It is the court, and not debtors' counsel, who determines whether a fee arrangement was made in contemplation of bankruptcy. 11 U.S.C. § 329(b); Fed. R. Bankr. P. 2017(b).

[*1]2 Following the guidance of the court's decision in In re Rheuban, 121 B.R. 368, 378 (Bankr. C.D. Cal. 1990), the bankruptcy court below applied a subjective rather than objective test in making this determination. (Aplt. Excerpts at 36.) Noting that the subjective nature of the "in contemplation of" test is made clear by the Supreme Court's decision in Conrad, the Rheuban court stated:

> ... the controlling question is with respect to the state of mind of the debtor and whether the thought of bankruptcy was the impelling cause of the transaction. [Citation] If the payment or transaction was thus motivated, it may be reexamined and its reasonableness be determined.

Rheuban, 121 B.R. 368, citing, Conrad, Rubin & Lesser v. Pender, 289 U.S. 472, 476-77 (1932). See also In re GIC Government Secur., Inc., 92 B.R. 525, 530-31 (Bankr. M.D. Fla. 1988) (applying subjective test). Arens contends that the "test of 'in contemplation of' bankruptcy goes far beyond any subjective test envisioned by the United States Supreme Court." (Aplt. Opening Brief at 30.) However, he cites no authority for this position, and then concludes that the bankruptcy court's findings in this regard were clearly erroneous. Id.

In light of existing law on this issue, the bankruptcy court did not abuse its discretion in relying on Conrad and concluding that an ensuing bankruptcy was reasonably predictable at the time the payment or transfer to the attorney was made. See In re Placid Oil Co., 158 B.R. 404, 418 (N.D. Tex. 1993); 8 Collier on Bankruptcy, Section 2017.05 (3) (15th ed. 1992).

In this case, the court reviewed all relevant facts and determined that the retainer was made in contemplation of bankruptcy. In reaching this conclusion, the court appeared to consider the following circumstances: 1) the debtors were in desperate financial straits at the time of consulting the Arens Law Firm; 2) they had been unsuccessful in their restructuring efforts; 3) they were pessimistic about their chances on appeal; 4) their business could not survive without new capital; 5) a merger or takeover were not realistic possibilities; and 6) extrication from financial difficulties was urgently needed. Additionally, while Arens claims not to have contemplated bankruptcy for his clients when he received the $50,000 payment in February 1990, it is clear from the evidence that bankruptcy was not completely ruled out. (Arens Dep. 87:3- 96:2 and FCB Ex. Nos. 8-11.) [FN10] In December 1990 counsel was preparing a chapter 12 petition and in February 1991 members from the Arens Law Firm were threatening FCB that debtors would probably have to file bankruptcy. Id.

The court's ruling that the fees were paid in contemplation of bankruptcy is a factual finding. Cf. In re Hargis, 895 F.2d 1025, 1026 (5th Cir. 1990), clarifying, 887 F.2d 77 (5th Cir. 1989) (remanding the case to the bankruptcy court for a determination of the amount of fees owed for services rendered on matters unrelated to the bankruptcy proceeding and the amount and reasonableness of fees charged for bankruptcy-related services). To overcome this decision Arens must show that the court was clearly erroneous. Arens has not met this burden, and consequently the lower court's decision should be affirmed.

D. The bankruptcy court correctly found that the retainer payment was unreasonable and excessive

[*1]3 Upon determining that the retainer fee was paid "in contemplation of bankruptcy," the court examined the "reasonableness" of the fee in light of the legal services rendered. To the extent that the compensation exceeded the value the attorney's services, disgorgement was the proper remedy. In re Kroh Bros. Development Co., 120 B.R. 997, 1000 (W.D. Mo. 1989); In re Chapel Gate Apartments., Ltd., 64 B.R. 569, 572-74 (Bankr. N.D. Tex. 1986). See also Louisiana State Bar Asso. v. Kilgarlin, 550 So.2d 600, 605 (La. 1989) (Attorneys practicing in the courts of Louisiana are required to return unearned portions of advanced fees.) [FN11]

In this case, the record is replete with evidence showing that the Arens Law Firm did not render any services that benefitted either the debtors or their estates. In fact, the evidence shows that the Arens Law Firm actually injured the debtors. For example, in the Prudhomme case, had counsel filed the chapter 12 petition that was prepared in December 1990, Ms. Prudhomme probably would not have lost her property. (See 10/28/92 Transcript at 69:6-73:2.) Additionally, Robert Berry gave expert testimony that the Arens Law Firm was unsatisfactory, and Mrs. Batten testified that their counsel probably hurt them more than helped them. (Id. at 47:24-48:2.) In fact, Arens wrote a letter to the Battens apologizing for the quality of service provided by the Arens firm. (Id. at 39:30-41:19 and Aplt. Excerpts at 66-69.)

While Arens insists that the retainer fee was paid to the Arens Law Firm for its services in restructuring the debt, Arens failed to introduce admissible evidence to show how the fees were earned for pre-petition services. In fact, neither Arens nor anyone from his firm appeared at the hearing. [FN12] All the evidence that was admitted at the hearing shows that the Arens Law Firm did little, if anything at all, to restructure the debt pre-petition. Further, to the extent that proof of services rendered was offered in the form of affidavits and time sheets, it was untimely submitted after the evidence was closed, and therefore properly found to be inadmissible. United States v. Glass, 744 F.2d 460 (5th Cir. 1984); United States v. Stone, 604 F.2d 922 (5th Cir. 1979); (Aplt. Excerpts at 11, 56 and R. Vol. 3 at 426, 442.)

Even if the affidavits and time sheets had been admissible, the court made the factual determination that they were inadequate in addressing the factors relative to the quality of representation required by In re First Colonial Corporation of America, 544 F.2d 1291, 1298-1300 (5th Cir.), reh'g denied, 547 F.2d 573 (5th Cir.), cert. denied, 431 U.S. 904 (1977); (Aplt. Excerpts at 57-59.) Based on the evidence presented in the affidavits, this determination was not clearly erroneous. (R. Vol. 4 at 616-680.) See the

[*1]4 The bankruptcy court has broad discretion in determining the reasonableness of an attorney's compensation, and debtors' counsel bears the burden of proof to show that his fees are reasonable. See In re Evangeline Refining Co., 890 F.2d 1312, 1325-26 (5th Cir. 1989); In re U.S. Golf Corp., 639 F.2d 1197 (5th Cir. 1981); In re Land, 138 B.R. 66, 70 (D. Neb. 1992); In re Kroh Bros. Development Co., 120 B.R. 997, 1001 (W.D. Mo. 1989). In the instant case, the record clearly supports the bankruptcy court's determination that counsel's fees were excessive and unreasonable. As such, the bankruptcy court's disgorgement of the entire fee was not an abuse of discretion.

E. To the extent that the debtors retained an equitable interest in the unearned portion of the $75,000 retainer fee, the court did not abuse its discretion in ordering the entire fee disgorged upon finding that counsel did not render any valuable services to the debtors or their estates

Independent of the court's authority to order the disgorgement of unreasonable and excessive fees pursuant to 11 U.S.C. § 329(b) and Federal Rule of Bankruptcy Procedure 2017(b) is the court's authority to order estate assets returned to the estate for the benefit of its creditors. See 11 U.S.C. §§ 541(a)(1) & 542. In general, a bankruptcy estate is comprised of all legal and equitable interests of the debtor in property, wherever located, as of the commencement of the case. 11 U.S.C. § 541(a)(1) (emphasis added). Both the statutory language and its legislative history reflect the Congressional intent that this section be construed broadly. See H.R. Rep. No. 595, 95th Cong., 1st Sess. 367-68, reprinted in 1978 U.S. Code Cong. & Admin. News 5963, 6323-24; S. Rep. No. 989, 95th Cong., 2nd Sess. 82-83, reprinted in 1978 U.S. Code Cong. & Admin. News 5787, 5868-69; United States v. Whiting Pools, Inc., 462 U.S. 198, 204-05 (1983) ("The House and Senate Reports on the Bankruptcy Code indicate that section 541(a)(1)'s scope is broad"); In re Missionary Baptist Foundation of America, Inc., 792 F.2d 502, 504 (5th Cir. 1986), citing In re U.S. Golf Corp., 706 F.2d 574, 578 (5th Cir. 1983).

While federal bankruptcy law defines what is property of the estate, state law determines a debtor's interest in any particular property. Butner v. United States, 440 U.S. 48, 55 (1979); In re Missionary Baptist Foundation, Inc., 792 F.2d at 504, citing In re U.S. Golf Corp., 706 F.2d at 578. In the instant case, the bankruptcy court correctly applied Louisiana law in guiding its decision to disgorge the entire retainer fee. (Aplt. Excerpts at 41.) See, e.g., In re Printing Dimensions, Inc., 153 B.R. 715, 720 (Bankr. D. Md. 1993) (attorneys who practice before the bankruptcy courts in Maryland are subject to Maryland's Rules of Professional Conduct); In re NBI, Inc., 129 B.R. 212, 220 n.5 (Bankr. D. Colo. 1991) (same); In re Doors and More, Inc., 127 B.R. 1001, 1003 (Bankr. E.D. Mich. 1991) (bankruptcy court sitting in Michigan applied Michigan law).

[*1]5 Under Louisiana law, an advanced fee or retainer paid to an attorney for particular services not yet performed constitutes "funds of the client" which must be deposited in a trust account and not withdrawn or withheld without the client's consent." See Louisiana State Bar Asso. v. Kilgarlin, 550 So.2d 600, 605 (La. 1989); Louisiana State Bar Asso. v. Williams, 512 So.2d 404, 408 (La. 1987) ("[counsel] was bound to refund ... some amount which reasonably represented the unearned portion of the advanced fee.") Thus, based on applicable law, the debtors in the instant case retained an equitable interest in any portion of the retainer fee that was not earned by their counsel. Id. [FN13] Accordingly, the court was entitled to examine the services allegedly performed by debtors' counsel to determine what, if any, portion of the retainer fee had been earned. As discussed previously (see supra at pp. 22- 25), the court concluded that the Arens Law Firm did not perform any services which justified compensation by the debtors or their estates, and appropriately ordered Arens to disgorge the entire retainer fee. In light of the standards of conduct required of attorneys who appear before the state and federal courts in Louisiana, the court did not abuse its discretion in reaching this decision.

CONCLUSION

For the foregoing reasons, the district court's order should be affirmed.

FOOTNOTES

FN1. In both cases, FCB obtained approval of a disclosure statement and, ultimately, confimed a plan of reorganization in which a trustee was appointed to administer the plans post-confirmation. (R. Vol. 3 at 436-437.)

FN2. This transcript is contained in Record Supp. No. 3.

FN3. Although the firm has been referred to as Arens and Alexander, the evidence in the record clearly indicates that Arens was the sole proprietor of the firm. All attorneys employed there were his agents, and Arens retained ultimate decision-making authority and responsibility over debtors' cases. See Arens Dep. at 14:21-16:3, 65:9-65:23, 116:9-116:15 contained in R. Supp. No. 6; Bell Dep. at 57:18-57:19, 57:24-58:8, 60:13-62:24 contained in R. Supp. No. 11.

FN4. All U.S. Trustee Hearing Exhibits are contained in Record Supp. Nos. 1 and 2.

FN5. This rule requires the disclosure of payments made to attorneys within 18 months of a petition or any amount owed by the debtors to counsel.

FN6. Although § 327(a) refers to the "trustee", 11 U.S.C. § 1107(a) makes § 327(a) applicable to chapter 11 debtors in possession.

FN7. A "disinterested person" is defined at section 101(14), inter alia, as one "... who does not have an interest materially adverse to the interest of the estate...". 11 U.S.C. § 101(14)(E). While the Code does not define what it means to "hold or represent an adverse interest to the estate," courts have interpreted the phrase as "possessing, or serving as an attorney for a person possessing, either an 'economic interest that would tend to lessen the value of the bankruptcy estate or that would create either an actual or potential dispute in which the estate is a rival claimant ... or ... a predisposition under circumstances that render such a bias against the estate.'" Utah 1985), aff'd in part and rev'd in part en banc, 75 B.R. 402 (D. Utah 1987).

FN8. Regardless of whether bankruptcy counsel seeks appointment under section 327(a), the Bankruptcy Code requires all counsel to file a statement of compensation paid or agreed to be paid for any services rendered or to be rendered in contemplation of or in connection with a bankruptcy case. See 11 U.S.C. § 329(a). As Federal Rule of Bankruptcy Procedure 2016(b) makes clear, the disclosure provisions of section 329(a) are mandatory. See In re Investment Bankers, Inc., 4 F.3d 1556, 1566 (10th Cir. 1993), petition for cert. filed, 62 U.S.L.W. 3429 (U.S. Dec. 16, 1993) (No. 93-956) (an attorney who fails to comply with the requirements of section 329(a) forfeits any right to receive compensation for services rendered on behalf of the debtor). See also In re Bennett, 133 B.R. 374, 378 (Bankr. N.D. Tex. 1991); In re Chapel Gate Apartments, Ltd., 64 B.R. 569, 575 (Bankr. N.D. Tex. 1986).

FN9. Section 329(a) states as follows:
Any attorney representing a debtor in a case under this title, or in connection with such a case, whether or not such attorney applies for compensation under this title, shall file with the court a statement of the compensation paid or agreed to be paid, if such payment or agreement was made after one year before the date of the filing of the petition, for services rendered or to be rendered in contemplation of or in connection with the case by such attorney, and the source of such compensation.

FN10. Arens Dep. is located in Record Supp. No. 6, and FCB Exhibits are in Record Supp. No. 3.

FN11. The Louisiana Rules of Professional Conduct have been adopted by the United States District Courts for Louisiana pursuant to Uniform District Court Rule 20:04, and the District Court Rules apply to proceedings in the Bankruptcy Courts of the Western District of Louisiana pursuant to Local Bankruptcy Rule 7.1.

FN12. Arens' failure to offer evidence to support the reasonableness of his fees may be considered in affirming the amount of fees ordered disgorged. See In re Placid Oil Co., 158 B.R. 404, 419 n.17 (N.D. Tex. 1993).

FN13. The same result would likely occur under Arkansas law. Arkansas has adopted the Model Rules of Professional Conduct. See Arkansas Court Rules 1.5, 1.15, and 1.16. Courts which have construed these rules have generally concluded that advanced fees for services not yet performed are client funds which must be deposited in a client trust account, and counsel is bound to return the unearned fees. MEMORANDUM IN SUPPORT OF THE MOTION OF THE UNITED STATES TRUSTEE TO DISMISS APPEAL

Appellee, Richard F. Clippard, the United States Trustee for Region 8, moves for a summary action under Federal Rule of Bankruptcy Procedure 8011 to dismiss this appeal for lack of jurisdiction and respectfully submits this Memorandum of Law in Support of the Motion of the United States Trustee to Dismiss Appeal.

FACTUAL AND PROCEDURAL BACKGROUND

1. On April 22, 2009, Barry Lee Armistead ("Debtor"), proceeding pro se,[1] filed a voluntary petition for relief under Chapter 7 of Title 11 of the U.S. Code (In re Armistead, Case No. 09-11656 Docket No. 1). A copy of the docket of In re Armistead, Case No. 09-11656 is attached as Exhibit A.[2]

2. On May 8, 2009, the bankruptcy court issued a Notice of Commencement of Bankruptcy Case and Meeting of Creditors. A copy of the Notice is attached as Exhibit B. Pursuant to the Notice, the bankruptcy clerk notified the Debtor and his creditors that the Debtor's 11 U.S.C. § 341 meeting of creditors was scheduled to be held on June 9, 2009. (Docket No. 19). The Notice was served on the Debtor and all creditors on the creditor matrix on May 10, 2009. (Docket No. 21).

3. The Debtor did not appear at the June 9, 2009 meeting of creditors or otherwise arrange for a waiver of appearance. The meeting was continued until June 23, 2009. (Docket No. 25).

4. The Debtor did not appear on June 23, 2009 at the first continued meeting of creditors or otherwise arrange for a waiver of appearance. The meeting was continued a second time until July 21, 2009. (Docket No. 30).

[1] Debtors proceeding pro se do so at their own peril. The Sixth Circuit Court of Appeals declared in Sharwell v. Baumgart (In re Sharwell), No. 97-3320, 1997 U.S. App. LEXIS 30278 at *1 (6th Cir. October 30, 1997) that "[w]hile [the debtor] was proceeding pro se and may not have fully understood the rules of procedure, he was still required to comply with the rules; his pro se status does not exempt him from compliance." (citing Jourdan v. Jabe, 951 F.2d 108, 110 (6th Cir. 1991)).

[2] All references to docket numbers shall refer to Exhibit A.

5. The Debtor did not appear on July 21, 2009 at the second continued meeting of creditors or otherwise arrange for a waiver of appearance. On September 2, 2009, the Chapter 7 Trustee filed his report and recommendation that the Debtor's case be dismissed. (Docket No. 39).

6. The Debtor's attendance at his § 341 meeting is required by statute. 11 U.S.C. § 343. Pursuant to Standing Order No. 05-0004, the bankruptcy court has the authority to dismiss a bankruptcy case for the Debtor's failure to appear at his § 341 meeting upon the United States Trustee's report and recommendation for dismissal. A copy of Standing Order No. 05-0004 is attached as Exhibit C. The United States Trustee filed his report and recommendation for dismissal on September 17, 2009. (Docket No. 40).

7. On September 17, 2009, the bankruptcy court entered an order dismissing the case, incorporating the United States Trustee's report and recommendation for dismissal. (Docket No. 40). A copy of the order of dismissal is attached as Exhibit D.

8. On September 19, 2009, the Debtor was served with the order dismissing his case. (Docket No. 41).

9. On September 29, 2009, the Debtor filed a Notice of Appeal for the order of dismissal. (Docket No. 43). A copy of the Notice of Appeal is attached as Exhibit E.

10. On October 29, 2009, the United States Trustee elected to have this appeal heard by the district court. (Docket No. 21).

11. The appeal was docketed with this Court on November 13, 2009. (Docket No. 54).

ARGUMENT

THE DISTRICT COURT SHOULD DISMISS THE DEBTOR'S APPEAL FOR LACK OF JURISDICTION, BECAUSE THE NOTICE OF APPEAL WAS UNTIMELY FILED.

A. The Timely Filing of a Notice of Appeal in a Bankruptcy Cases is Jurisdictional.

The failure to file a timely notice of appeal is a jurisdictional defect that prohibits appellate review. The appellate jurisdiction of this Court is granted pursuant to 28 U.S.C. § 158(a)(1), which states that "[t]he district courts of the United States shall have jurisdiction to hear appeals from final judgments, orders, and decrees." Subsection 158(c)(2) sets forth a time frame for appealing bankruptcy decisions to the district courts, requiring that such appeals "shall be taken in the same manner as appeals in civil proceedings generally are taken to the courts of appeals from the district courts and in the time provided by Rule 8002 of the Bankruptcy Rules." 28 U.S.C. § 158(c)(2). Federal Rule of Bankruptcy Procedure 8002(a) specifically provides that "[t]he notice of appeal shall be filed with the clerk within 10 days of the date of entry of the judgment, order, or decree appealed from."[3]

In Bowles v. Russell, 551 U.S. 205 (2007), the U.S. Supreme Court confirmed that when the time limit for filing a notice of appeal is statutorily prescribed, the time limit is jurisdictional. The Supreme Court held that "the taking of an appeal within the prescribed time is 'mandatory and jurisdictional.'" Id. at 209 (quoting Griggs v. Provident Consumer Discount Co., 459 U.S. 56

[3] Amendments to the Federal Rules of Bankruptcy Procedure took effect on December 1, 2009, altering the ten (10) day deadline in Rule 8002 to fourteen (14) days. However, such amendments were not in effect at the time of the filing of the Notice of Appeal in this case.

(1982)). The Supreme Court stated that it has always "regarded statutory limitations on the timing of appeals as limitations on [the court's] own jurisdiction."[4] Id.

Within the Sixth Circuit, it is well established that the ten-day deadline for filing a notice of appeal from a bankruptcy court order is jurisdictional. LML Corp. v. Bank of Cadiz (In re LBL Sports Center, Inc.), 684 F.2d 410, 412 (6th Cir. 1982) (applying former Bankruptcy Rules 801, 802, and 893, which also established a ten0day deadline for filing notices of appeal). All of the United States Courts of Appeals appear to agree. See, e.g., In re Siemon, 421 F.3d 167, 169 (2d Cir. 2005); In re Bond, 254 F.3d 669, 673 (7th Cir. 2001); *Hamilton v. [4] In Bowles, the Supreme Court differentiated its earlier decision in Kontrick v. Ryan, 540 U.S. 443 (2004), which held that the period of time for a creditor to object to a debtor's discharge established by Federal Rule of Bankruptcy Procedure 4004 was not jurisdictional because it was not established by statute. In contrast, the period of time for filing a notice of appeal is not merely established by Rule; it is derived from 28 U.S.C. § 158(c)(2) and is therefore jurisdictional.

Topco, Inc.), 894 F.2d 727, 733 & n.7 (5th Cir. 1991); Slimick v. Silva (In re Slimick), 928 F.2d 304, 306 (9th Cir. 1990); Greene v. United States (In re Souza), 795 F.2d 855, 856-57 (9th Cir. 1986); Stelpflug v. Fed. Land Bank of St. Paul, 790 F.2d 47, 49 (7th Cir. 1986); Whitemere Dev. Corp., Inc. v. Township of Cherry Hill, 786 F.2d 185, 187 (3d Cir. 1986); In re Abdallah, 778 F.2d 75, 77 (1st Cir. 1985); In re Universal Minerals, Inc., 755 F.2d 309, 310 (3d Cir. 1985).

The requirement of a timely appeal is included in the statutory language of 28 U.S.C. § 158(c)(2), which expressly references Federal Rule of Bankruptcy Procedure 8002. Thus, 28 U.S.C. § 158(c)(2) creates a jurisdictional requirement for a timely appeal. "[F]ailure to file a timely notice of appeal of the . . . Order 'creates a jurisdictional defect barring appellate review.'" Rieser v. Dinsmore & Shohl, LLP (In re Troutman Enterprises, Inc.), 343 B.R. 590, 605 (Bankr. S.D. Ohio 2005) (quoting Shareholders v. Sound Radio, Inc., 109 F.3d 873, 879 (3d Cir. 1997)); see also Anderson v. Duvoisin (In re Southern Indus. Banking Corp.), 70 B.R. 196 (E.D. Tenn 1986).

B. The Notice of Appeal in the Present Case was Untimely.

The Debtor's Notice of appeal was filed outside of the ten day time period established by the Rules. On September 17, 2009, based on the U.S. Trustee's Report and Recommendation, the bankruptcy court entered an order dismissing the Debtor's case for failure to attend the meeting of creditors. The Debtor had ten days — or until September 28, 2009 — to appeal from the order dismissing the case.[5] See 28 U.S.C. § 158(c)(2) and Fed. R. Bankr. P. 8002(a). The Debtor filed a notice of appeal on September 29, 2009, twelve days after entry of the bankruptcy court's [5] Pursuant to Federal Rule of Bankruptcy Procedure 9006, the period was actually eleven (11) calendar days, because the last day of the period fell on a Sunday, thus extending the final day to appeal until the following Monday — September 28, 2009.

September 17, 2009 order. (Docket No. 43). Therefore, the notice of appeal was untimely, and this Court does not have jurisdiction to entertain the Debtor's appeal.

CONCLUSION

The Debtor filed his Notice of Appeal after the ten day limitation period of 28 U.S.C. §158(c)(2) and Federal Rule of Bankruptcy Procedure 8002(a). Accordingly, this Court should dismiss the Debtor's appeal for lack of subject matter jurisdiction.

INTEREST OF THE UNITED STATES

The Attorney General appoints United States Trustees to supervise the administration of bankruptcy cases and trustees in regions comprising the vast majority of federal judicial districts. 28 U.S.C. §§ 581-589a. United States Trustees "serve as bankruptcy watchdogs to prevent fraud, dishonesty, and overreaching in the bankruptcy arena." H.R. Rep. No. 595, 95th Cong., 1st Sess. 88 (1977). The United States Trustee Program thus acts in the public interest to promote the efficiency and to protect and preserve the integrity of the bankruptcy system. By statute, "[t]he United States Trustee may raise and may appear and be heard on any issue in any case or proceeding under this Title." 11 U.S.C. § 307. See also In re Donovan Corp., 215 F.3d 929, 930 (9th Cir. 2000) (upholding broad appellate standing of United States Trustees).

This case involves a dispute over confirmation of a plan under chapter 13 of the Bankruptcy Code. In this matter, the United States Trustee has two separate and distinct interests. First, the United States Trustee has the statutory duty to oversee the administration of chapter 13 cases, which includes monitoring and, if necessary, objecting to chapter 13 plans under 11 U.S.C. § 1324. 28 U.S.C. § 586(a)(3)(C). Second, the United States Trustee has an interest in this appeal because the issue on appeal directly implicates 11 U.S.C. § 707(b), which the United States Trustee oversees pursuant to her duties set forth in 11 U.S.C. § 704(b), and under which United States Trustees regularly seek relief involving the same legal issue.

The question of law involved in this appeal is not limited to the Armstrongs. Rather, it will apply globally to thousands of debtors in a myriad of different financial circumstances who will file bankruptcy cases in this district and nationally. For this reason, the United States Trustee respectfully offers this Court its views on whether debtors in a chapter 13 case may deduct the IRS Local Standard expense for vehicle financing costs, even though they do not make monthly note or lease payments.

STATEMENT OF APPELLATE JURISDICTION

The Bankruptcy Court had jurisdiction over this matter pursuant to 28 U.S.C. § 1334(b) and § 157(b)(2)(L). The District Court has jurisdiction over this appeal pursuant to 28 U.S.C. § 158(a)(1) and (b) and Federal Rule of Bankruptcy Procedure 8001. Daniel Brunner, Chapter 13 Trustee, appeals from orders of the United States Bankruptcy Court, Eastern District of Washington, overruling his Objection to Confirmation of Chapter 13 Plan filed in the case of the Debtors, Nathan and Georgena Armstrong, (“Debtors”), and confirming the Armstrongs’ chapter 13 plan.

STATEMENT OF ISSUES PRESENTED FOR REVIEW

The Chapter 13 Trustee objected to confirmation of the Debtors’ modified plan on the grounds that it did not commit all of the Debtors’ disposable income to the plan as required under 11 U.S.C. § 1325(b)(1)(B). The Bankruptcy Court overruled the Chapter 13 Trustee’s objection and confirmed the plan, holding that the Debtors could properly claim the IRS Local Standard expense allowance for vehicle ownership, notwithstanding that the Debtors had no vehicle loan or lease payment, thereby substantially reducing the funds available to pay creditors under the plan.

In this case, the Debtors’ income exceeds the family median income for the State of Washington. In chapter 13 bankruptcy cases, when the debtors’ income exceeds their state’s family median income, 11 U.S.C. § 1325(b)(3) requires the debtors to use the “means test” provisions of 11 U.S.C. § 707(B)(2)(A) and (B) to determine their expenses. Given that 11 U.S.C. 707(B)(2)(A)(ii)(I) allows only “applicable” vehicle ownership expenses to be deducted under the means test, the issue presented is whether the Bankruptcy Court erred by holding that the Debtors could claim the IRS Standard expense allowance for vehicle financing in the calculation of their disposable income, even though they had no vehicle financing expense because they owned their car debt free.

STANDARD OF REVIEW

On appeal "conclusions of law are reviewed de novo, findings of fact are reviewed for clear error, and mixed questions of fact and law are reviewed de novo." Since the underlying facts are not disputed, the question is one in which legal issues predominate and is thus subject to de novo review. United States v. McConney, 728 F.2d 1195, 1199-1204 (9th Cir. 1984) (en banc), cert. denied, 469 U.S. 824, 105 S.Ct. 101, 83 L.Ed.2d 46 (1984); In re Kelly, 841 F.2d 908, 911 (9th Cir., 1988). In an appeal taken from a bankruptcy court order, a district court reviews the bankruptcy court’s findings on questions of law de novo. In re Emery, 317 F.3d 1064, 1069 (9th Cir. 2003) (citing In re Allen, 300 F.3d 1055, 1058 (9th Cir. 2002)).

STATUTORY FRAMEWORK AND BACKGROUND

I. Statutory Framework

The Bankruptcy Abuse Prevention and Consumer Protection Act of 2005 (the “2005 Reform Act”) altered the analysis bankruptcy courts must employ when determining whether to confirm proposed chapter 13 repayment plans. When, as here, a trustee or holder of an allowed unsecured claim objects to plan confirmation, 11 U.S.C. § 1325(b)(1) conditions plan confirmation upon the debtors committing all of their "projected disposable income" to payments to unsecured creditors through the plan. "Disposable income" is the current monthly income received by the debtors (other than child support payments, foster care payments, or disability payments for a dependent child) less amounts reasonably necessary to be expended. 11 U.S.C. § 1325(b)(2). The term "current monthly income" is the average monthly income from all sources that the debtors receive during the six-month period ending on the last day of the calendar month immediately preceding the date of the commencement of the case, including any amount paid by a third party on a regular basis for the household expenses of the debtor or the debtor's dependents, but excluding benefits received under the Social Security Act. 11 U.S.C. § 101(10A). For above-median-income debtors, the "amounts reasonably necessary to be expended" are determined "in accordance with" § 707(b)(2)(A)[1]and (B), which provides various specific expense categories from which debtors may reduce their "current monthly income."[2] 11 U.S.C. § 1325(b)(3).

The "means test" provisions of §§ 707(b)(2)(A) and (B) are used in determining the expenses of chapter 13 debtors, like these debtors, whose income exceeds their state's median family income. 11 U.S.C. § 1325(b)(3). In determining expenses, § 707(b)(2)(A)(ii)(I) provides that a debtor's "monthly expenses shall be the debtor's applicable monthly expense amounts specified under the National Standards and Local Standards and the debtor's actual monthly expenses for the categories specified as Other Necessary Expenses issued by the Internal Revenue Service for the area in which the debtor resides…." 11 U.S.C. § 707(b)(2)(A)(ii)(I) (emphasis added).

[1] As amended by the 2005 Reform Act, § 707(b)(2) repealed the former presumption in favor of the debtor, and replaced it with a new presumption. A case is an "abuse" of Chapter 7 if a detailed mathematical formula set out in the statute, commonly referred to as the "means test," yields a minimum amount of monthly disposable income. The means test uses a series of calculations to determine whether the § 707(b)(2) presumption of abuse arises in Chapter 7 cases. See 11 U.S.C. § 707(b)(2)(A).

II. Factual Background

On their Schedule B, the Armstrongs listed ownership of one vehicle, a 1998 GMC Truck. CR No. 1.[3] They stipulated before the lower court they had no payment associated with the vehicle. CR No 59. They did not list any secured debt for their GMC truck on their Schedule D. CR No 1. On their Official Form 22C, Line 28, the Armstrongs claimed the IRS Standard "transportation ownership/lease expense" in the amount of $471 for the GMC truck.[4] CR No. 34.

On November 8, 2007, the Chapter 13 Trustee filed an objection to confirmation of the Debtors' Chapter 13 plan, claiming the plan failed to provide all of the Debtors' disposable income for the payment of creditors, contrary to 11 U.S.C. §§ 1325(a)(3) and (b)(1)(B). CR No. 27. The objection was amended December 22, 2006. CR No. 40 and 41. In his objection, the Chapter 13 Trustee argued that the Debtors had more income to devote to paying creditors because they were improperly claiming the IRS Standard expense for vehicle financing expenses, even though that expense deduction was not applicable because these Debtors have no vehicle or lease payments. Id.

[4] This amount is in addition to the "vehicle operation expenses" taken on Line 27. Because the vehicle is over six years old, the United States Trustee would also allow the Debtors an additional $200 operating expense per vehicle, based on the Internal Revenue Manual which allows such an additional vehicle operating expenses. See Internal Revenue Manual, Part 5 (entitled Collecting Process), Chapter 8, § 5.8.5.5.2, Treatment of Non-Business Transportation Expenses, which may be found on the IRS website at http://www/irs/gov/irm/part5/ch08s05.html.

The parties briefed their respective positions, CR No. 59 and 61. Argument was held On May 15, 2007.

On June 12, 2007, the bankruptcy court overruled the Chapter 13 Trustee's objection to the Debtors' plan. CR No. 65. The bankruptcy court ruled that Mr. and Mrs. Armstrong were entitled to reduce their disposable income by the amount of the IRS Standard allowance for vehicle financing costs even though they had no vehicle financing costs. Id.

On August 22, 2007, the court confirmed the plan of the debtors. CR No. 73.

This appeal followed on August 31, 2007. CR No.77.

SUMMARY OF ARGUMENT

The bankruptcy court erred as a matter of law in overruling the Chapter 13 Trustee's objection to confirmation and confirming the Armstrongs' chapter 13 plan. It did so by misinterpreting when debtors can claim a vehicle ownership expense under section 707(b)(2), which is made applicable to chapter 13 debtors under § 1325(b). The court held that the Armstrongs were entitled to deduct $471 in vehicle ownership expenses for their vehicle, even though the vehicle was owned free and clear of encumbrances. This was incorrect because 11 U.S.C. § 707(b)(2)(A)(ii)(I) allows the Armstrongs to claim only "applicable" expenses, and they had no applicable vehicle ownership expenses because the vehicle was not subject to a loan or lease payment. By using the word "applicable," Congress limited eligibility for expenses under the Local Standards to debtors for whom the expenses apply. Because the vehicle acquisition/financing expense does not apply with respect to the Armstrongs' vehicle, the bankruptcy court erred in holding they were eligible to deduct the expense under the means test.

Reading "applicable" in section 707(b)(2) as requiring debtors to have a loan or lease payment on a vehicle as a prerequisite to eligibility for the vehicle ownership expense has the salutary effect of applying the means test in a manner that is consistent with the Internal Revenue Service's longstanding application of this standard. Under section 707(b)(2), the means test looks to the IRS to establish certain standard expenses. 11 U.S.C. § 707(b)(2)(A)(ii)(I). In applying its standards to taxpayers, the IRS does not allow taxpayers to claim vehicle ownership expenses absent a monthly car expense. See IRS Collection Financial Standards attached hereto as Exhibit 1 of the Addendum.[5]

[5] The IRS revised its Collection Financial Standards, effective October 1, 2007, and such revisions will be made applicable to bankruptcy cases filed as of January 1, 2008. Because the Armstrongs' case was filed on October 3, 2006, only the Collection Financial Standards in effect prior to October 1, 2007, are applicable to the Armstrongs' case. For the Court's convenience, a true and correct PDF copy of the Collection Financial Standards applicable to this case are attached as Exhibit "1" on the Addenda and incorporated herein by reference. It is important to note, however, that

Finally, the bankruptcy court's order overruling the Chapter 13 Trustee's objection to confirmation of the Armstrongs' plan conflicts with sound notions of public policy and the primary purpose of Congress in passing bankruptcy reform legislation in 2005 - including the amendments at issue in this appeal. The 2005 Reform Act was intended to ensure that debtors repay their debts when they can. By allowing the Armstrongs to claim a fictional expense for their vehicle, the bankruptcy court frustrated that purpose.

ARGUMENT

I.

THE BANKRUPTCY COURT ERRED IN HOLDING THAT THE ARMSTRONGS WERE ELIGIBLE TO CLAIM THE IRS LOCAL STANDARDS FOR VEHICLE OWNERSHIP FOR THEIR VEHICLE BECAUSE THE EXPENSE WAS NOT APPLICABLE TO THEM.

The bankruptcy court's order overruling the Chapter 13 Trustee's objection to confirmation of the Armstrongs' plan should be reversed because it fails to recognize that the Bankruptcy Code only allows debtors to claim vehicle expenses that are applicable to them. 11 U.S.C. § 707(B)(2)(A)(ii)(I). The Armstrongs do not have any "applicable" vehicle ownership expense because they own their vehicle outright.

A. Vehicle ownership expenses are allowable only if "applicable" to the debtors.

the revisions made by the IRS effective October 1, 2007, do not change any result in this case. As set forth in the current Collection Financial Standards, the Local Standard for Vehicle Operation is still made expressly contingent on the existence of a loan or lease payment on a vehicle. See Id. As explained by the IRS, the recent revisions to the Local Standards were made to create equal allowances for first and second vehicles, add a separate public transportation allowance and reorganize the manner in which taxpayers in certain counties calculate their transportation operating expenses. See id., under heading "Recent Revisions."

Section 707(b)(2)(A)(ii)(I) of the Bankruptcy Code provides that a "debtor's monthly expenses shall be the debtor's applicable monthly expense amounts specified under the...Local Standards...issued by the Internal Revenue Service..." 11 U.S.C. § 707(b)(2)(A)(ii)(I) (emphasis added). The statute expressly provides that before the specific IRS expense amounts may be included in the debtor's allowed monthly expenses, the expense must itself first be applicable to the debtor. Id.

The Bankruptcy Code does not define the word "applicable," nor has the United States Trustee identified any Supreme Court or Ninth Circuit decision that provides a definition in the bankruptcy context.[6] Where, as here, a statutory term is undefined, a basic principle of statutory construction provides that courts should give such terms their ordinary meanings. E.g., Smith v. U.S., 508 U.S. 223, 228 (1993) ("When a word is not defined by statute, we normally construe it in accord with its ordinary or natural meaning."). See also Watson v. Ray, 192 F.3d 1153, 1155 (8th Cir. 1999) ("When interpreting a statute the court starts with the statute's plain meaning"). The dictionary defines "applicable" to mean applying or capable of being applied; relevant; suitable; appropriate. Random House Unabridged Dictionary (2006). Accordingly, such a meaning should be imparted to the term "applicable" as it appears in section 707(b)(2)(A)(ii)(I) absent clear indication to the contrary. See Johnson v. Aljian, 490 F3d 778,780 (9th Cir. 2007) (quoting U.S. v. TRW Rifle 7.62x51 Meter Caliber, 447 F.3d 686,689 (9th Cir. 2006) ("[W]e follow the common practice of consulting dictionary definitions to clarify their ordinary meaning[] and look to how the terms were defined at the time [the statute] was adopted.”).

By inserting the word “applicable” in section 707(b)(2)(A)(ii)(I), Congress limited eligibility for expenses under the Local Standards to debtors for whom such expenses are “relevant; suitable; appropriate”-- thereby excluding phantom ones. The bankruptcy court’s order is inconsistent with the ordinary, common sense definition of “applicable” because it allows debtors like the Armstrongs to deduct expenses that do not apply to them. If such inapplicable expenses are disallowed, the Armstrongs have the ability to repay their unsecured creditors an additional $16,260 in their 60-month chapter 13 repayment plan.

The court below concluded that the Armstrongs could deduct vehicle expenses they do not have because "applicable" in section 707(b)(2)(A)(ii)(I) refers solely to choosing the correct number from the IRS expense tables based on the "geographical location of the debtors and the number of vehicles... .” CR No. 65, p.8 and 11 . In other words, the court read "applicable" merely as referring to the number of standardized expenses amounts the Armstrongs can claim.

The court’s reading does not interpret section 707(b)(2)(A)(ii)(I), it rewrites it. For its proffered construction to be the correct one, the statute would need to read "[t]he debtor's monthly expenses shall be the ~~debtor's~~ applicable [number of] monthly expense amounts . . ." 11 U.S.C. § 707(b)(2)(A)(ii)(I) (as modified). The statute does not say that. Nowhere does it state "applicable" means the "number" of expenses. To the contrary, "applicable" follows the word "debtor's," making it clear that the section asks debtors to claim those IRS standard expenses that apply to them.

Given this, the Armstrongs should not be allowed to claim inapplicable expenses, ones they do not have.

Not surprisingly, both appellate courts that have interpreted the word applicable in section 707(b)(2)(A)(ii)(I) have rejected the bankruptcy court's proffered reading. In re Ross-Tousey, 368 B.R. 762, 766 (E.D. Wis. 2007); In re Hartwick, 373 B.R. 645, 649-50 (D. Minn. 2007). They did so, in part, because the bankruptcy court's reading is not faithful to the purpose underlying section 707(b)(2)'s means test. As the Ross-Tousey court noted, "if it really is that simple, the statute would not seem to achieve its purpose" of ensuring that debtors are allowed expenses for the necessities of life but pay creditors from what remains. Ross-Tousey, 368 B.R at 766 (E.D. Wis. 2007). See also In re Howell, 366 B.R. 153, 157 (Bankr. D. Kan. 2007) ("denying debtors the ownership allowance when they have no ownership expense (i.e. loan or lease payments) is entirely consistent with one of the apparent objectives of BAPCPA: to ensure that debtors actually pay what they are capable of paying to unsecured creditors.").

The bankruptcy court's proffered numerical definition also fails to appreciate that a debtor's ability to pay creditors is not affected by mere vehicle ownership but by payments on a car. Accordingly, section 707(b)(2)(A)(ii)(I) does not focus on how many cars a debtor owns, but how many cars she makes payments on every month. Ross-Tousey, 368 B.R. at 766 ("The statute is only concerned about protecting the debtor's ability to continue owning a car, and if the debtor already owns the car, the debtor is adequately protected."); see also Hartwick, 373 B.R. at 652 (same).

In addition, the Hartwick and Ross-Tousey courts reversed the bankruptcy court rulings in those cases because they, like the court here, created an arbitrary distinction between the word "actual" and "applicable" expenses in section 707(b)(2)(A)(ii)(I). See, e.g., In re Fowler, 349 B.R. 414, 418 (Bankr. D. Del. 2006) (stating "The use of 'actual' with respect to the Other Necessary Expenses and 'applicable' with respect to the National and Local Standards must mean that Congress intended two different applications.) The bankruptcy court below agreed with courts like Fowler that "applicable" and "actual" must have different meanings, reasoning that because Congress used both terms in the statute, debtors like the Armstrongs need not have any "actual" expense for the Ownership Expense Standard to be "applicable." CR No. 65, p. 5 and 11. This logic is misguided, however, because, as the Ross-Tousey court explained, there is no indication in section 707(b)(2)(A)(ii)(I) that Congress intended the words "applicable" and "actual" to have essentially opposite meanings. Ross-Tousey, 368 B.R. at 765. Rather, the better reading of "applicable" in the context of section 707(b)(2)(A)(ii)(I) is that it may have two meanings: first, the ownership expense is "applicable" if the debtor makes a loan or lease payment on a vehicle, and second, the amount allowed to the debtor is the "applicable" amount provided under the IRS Standards, and not the "actual" amount." Id. See also Hartwick, 373 B.R. at 653. "This reading gives meaning to the distinction between 'applicable' and 'actual' without taking a further step to conclude that 'applicable' means "nonexistent' or 'fictional.'" Ross-Tousey, 368 B.R. at 765.

By giving the term "applicable" its proper meaning, a determination of allowable expenses under the means test is a two-step process. The first step is eligibility—i.e., does the debtor qualify for an expense allowance in the category at issue? If so, then the second step is to quantify the expense amount the eligible debtor is allowed by looking at the IRS Standard amounts that are specified for the number of vehicles owned by the debtor and where the debtor lives. See, e.g., In re Carlin, 348 B.R. 795, 798 (Bankr. D. Or. 2006)("There is nothing absurd in Congress drawing the line for vehicle ownership expense eligibility at those debtors who are making payments on the vehicle.") The bankruptcy court's ruling impermissibly skips the first step of determining whether the Armstrongs are eligible for the ownership expense by virtue of having a loan or lease payment for a vehicle, and proceeds directly to the second—only considering the amount the IRS would allow eligible taxpayers to claim for ownership of two vehicles.

B. The UST's construction of "applicable" in § 707(b)(2) has the salutary effect of treating transportation costs the same way in bankruptcy cases that the IRS treats them.

Reversal of the bankruptcy court's order allowing the Armstrongs to deduct vehicle financing expenses that they do not have has the additional benefit of treating inapplicable phantom expenses in bankruptcy cases the way the IRS has long treated them. In providing which deductions debtors may take under the means test, Congress specifically stated that debtors are permitted to deduct "the debtor's applicable monthly expense amounts specified under the…Local Standards…issued by the Internal Revenue Service." 11 U.S.C. § 707(b)(2)(A)(ii)(I) (emphasis added). Accordingly, how the Internal Revenue Service applies the Standards that it developed for its own internal debt collection purposes is instructive on the question of how the same Standards might be applied in bankruptcy cases under section 707(b)(2). See, e.g., Hartwick, 373 B.R. at 650-51 ("in order to determine whether the expense Standards issued by the IRS are 'applicable,' the most logical resource to consult is the IRS"). See also In re Slusher, 359 B.R. 290, 309 (Bankr. D. Nev. 2007) ("if guidance is sought on the meaning of the IRS standards that Congress incorporated into the Bankruptcy Code, practical reason would suggest that court should consider the full manner by which the IRS uses these standards.").

The IRS Collection Financial Standards in effect as of the date of the Armstrongs' bankruptcy filing[7] fully support the United States Trustee's construction of the term "applicable" and provide as follows:

> The transportation standards consist of nationwide figures for monthly loan or lease payments referred to as ownership costs, and additional amounts for monthly operating costs….The ownership costs provided maximum allowances for the lease or purchase of up to two automobiles if allowed as a necessary expense….If a taxpayer has a car payment, the allowable ownership cost added to the allowable operating cost equals the allowable transportation expense. If a taxpayer has no car payment, or no car, the operating costs portion of the transportation standard is used to come up with the allowable transportation expense.

See IRS Collection Standards attached hereto as Exhibit 1of the Addendum; (emphasis added); see also Internal Revenue Manual, Financial Analysis Handbook, Pt. 5, ch. 15, § 5.15.1.7(4.B), available at http://www.irs.gov/irm/part5/ch15s01.html#d0e187819.

As of the date the Armstrongs filed their bankruptcy petition,[8] the "ownership cost" was specifically calculated by the IRS based on the cost to finance the acquisition of a vehicle, and not simply a cost associated with owning a car, such as repair or maintenance. The IRS noted that the "ownership cost" Standards are based on the "five-year average of new and used car financing data compiled by the Federal Reserve Board of Governors." See id. (emphasis added). As such, the IRS does not treat the "ownership cost" expense as applicable when a taxpayer does not have a monthly expense related to financing a car. In exercising its discretion to collect taxes, the IRS recognizes that taxpayers may claim the vehicle "ownership cost" portion of the Local Transportation Standards only in situations where the taxpayer has a monthly vehicle acquisition financing expense, i.e., has a monthly vehicle loan or lease payment. See id.

II.

THE BANKRUPTCY COURT'S ORDER CONFLICTS WITH THE MAJOR GOALS OF THE 2005 AMENDMENTS TO THE BANKRUPTCY CODE.

The bankruptcy court's order is also inconsistent with Congress' goals and purpose in implementing bankruptcy reform. Congress amended the Bankruptcy Code in 2005 to rectify perceived abuses in the bankruptcy process. "Among the abuses identified by Congress was the easy access to chapter 7 liquidation proceedings by consumer debtors who, if required to file under chapter 13, could afford to pay some dividend to their unsecured creditors." In re Hardacre, 338 B.R. 718, 720 (Bankr. N.D. Tex. 2006) (citing 151 Cong. Rec. S2459, 2469-70 (March 10, 2005)). A "primary goal" of the 2005 Reform Act was to "ensure that debtors repay creditors the maximum they can afford." In re Lenton, 358 B.R. 651 (Bankr. E.D. Pa. 2006) (citing H.R. Rep. No. 109-31, pt. 1, at 1 (2005), reprinted in 2005 U.S.C.C.A.N. 88, 89). In cases such as this one, where the Armstrongs have no loan or lease payment, Congress has established a system which does not provide them an expense deduction for vehicle financing. “Allowing debtors to deduct from their disposable income a fictional ownership allowance would give debtors with unencumbered vehicles a windfall at the expense of their unsecured creditors.” In re Howell, 366 B.R. 153, 157 (Bankr. D. Kan. 2007).

CONCLUSION

For all of these reasons, the United States Trustee respectfully asks this Court to reverse the July 30, 2007, Orders entered by the bankruptcy court overruling the Chapter 13 Trustee’s objection to confirmation of the Debtors’ plan and confirming the Debtors’ plan, and remand this case to the bankruptcy court for further proceedings.

INTEREST OF THE UNITED STATES

The Attorney General appoints United States Trustees to supervise the administration of bankruptcy cases and trustees in regions comprising the vast majority of federal judicial districts. 28 U.S.C. §§ 581-589a. United States Trustees "serve as bankruptcy watchdogs to prevent fraud, dishonesty, and overreaching in the bankruptcy arena." H.R. Rep. No. 595, 95th Cong., 1st Sess. 88 (1977). The United States Trustee Program thus acts in the public interest to promote the efficiency and to protect and preserve the integrity of the bankruptcy system. By statute, "[t]he United States Trustee may raise and may appear and be heard on any issue in any case or proceeding under this Title." 11 U.S.C. § 307. See also In re Donovan Corp., 215 F.3d 929, 930 (9th Cir. 2000) (upholding broad appellate standing of United States Trustees).

This case involves a dispute over confirmation of a plan under chapter 13 of the Bankruptcy Code. In this matter, the United States Trustee has two separate and distinct interests. First, the United States Trustee has the statutory duty to oversee the administration of chapter 13 cases, which includes monitoring and, if necessary, objecting to chapter 13 plans under 11 U.S.C. § 1324. 28 U.S.C. § 586(a)(3)(C). Second, the United States Trustee has an interest in this appeal because the issue on appeal directly implicates 11 U.S.C. § 707(b), which the United States Trustee oversees pursuant to her duties set forth in 11 U.S.C. § 704(b), and under which United States Trustees regularly seek relief involving the same legal issue.

The question of law involved in this appeal is not limited to the Armstrongs. Rather, it will apply globally to thousands of debtors in a myriad of different financial circumstances who will file bankruptcy cases in this district and nationally. For this reason, the United States Trustee respectfully offers this Court its views on whether debtors in a chapter 13 case may deduct the IRS Local Standard expense for vehicle financing costs, even though they do not make monthly note or lease payments.

STATEMENT OF APPELLATE JURISDICTION

The Bankruptcy Court had jurisdiction over this matter pursuant to 28 U.S.C. § 1334(b) and § 157(b)(2)(L). The District Court has jurisdiction over this appeal pursuant to 28 U.S.C. § 158(a)(1) and (b) and Federal Rule of Bankruptcy Procedure 8001. Daniel Brunner, Chapter 13 Trustee, appeals from orders of the United States Bankruptcy Court, Eastern District of Washington, overruling his Objection to Confirmation of Chapter 13 Plan filed in the case of the Debtors, Nathan and Georgena Armstrong, ("Debtors"), and confirming the Armstrongs' chapter 13 plan.

STATEMENT OF ISSUES PRESENTED FOR REVIEW

The Chapter 13 Trustee objected to confirmation of the Debtors' modified plan on the grounds that it did not commit all of the Debtors' disposable income to the plan as required under 11 U.S.C. § 1325(b)(1)(B). The Bankruptcy Court overruled the Chapter 13 Trustee's objection and confirmed the plan, holding that the Debtors could properly claim the IRS Local Standard expense allowance for vehicle ownership, notwithstanding that the Debtors had no vehicle loan or lease payment, thereby substantially reducing the funds available to pay creditors under the plan.

In this case, the Debtors' income exceeds the family median income for the State of Washington. In chapter 13 bankruptcy cases, when the debtors' income exceeds their state's family median income, 11 U.S.C. § 1325(b)(3) requires the debtors to use the "means test" provisions of 11 U.S.C. § 707(B)(2)(A) and (B) to determine their expenses. Given that 11 U.S.C. 707(B)(2)(A)(ii)(I) allows only "applicable" vehicle ownership expenses to be deducted under the means test, the issue presented is whether the Bankruptcy Court erred by holding that the Debtors could claim the IRS Standard expense allowance for vehicle financing in the calculation of their disposable income, even though they had no vehicle financing expense because they owned their car debt free.

STANDARD OF REVIEW

On appeal "conclusions of law are reviewed de novo, findings of fact are reviewed for clear error, and mixed questions of fact and law are reviewed de novo." Since the underlying facts are not disputed, the question is one in which legal issues predominate and is thus subject to de novo review. United States v. STATUTORY FRAMEWORK AND BACKGROUND

I. Statutory Framework

The Bankruptcy Abuse Prevention and Consumer Protection Act of 2005 (the "2005 Reform Act") altered the analysis bankruptcy courts must employ when determining whether to confirm proposed chapter 13 repayment plans. When, as here, a trustee or holder of an allowed unsecured claim objects to plan confirmation, 11 U.S.C. § 1325(b)(1) conditions plan confirmation upon the debtors committing all of their "projected disposable income" to payments to unsecured creditors through the plan. "Disposable income" is the current monthly income received by the debtors (other than child support payments, foster care payments, or disability payments for a dependent child) less amounts reasonably necessary to be expended. 11 U.S.C. § 1325(b)(2). The term "current monthly income" is the average monthly income from all sources that the debtors receive during the six-month period ending on the last day of the calendar month immediately preceding the date of the commencement of the case, including any amount paid by a third party on a regular basis for the household expenses of the debtor or the debtor's dependents, but excluding benefits received under the Social Security Act. 11 U.S.C. § 101(10A). For above-median-income debtors, the "amounts reasonably necessary to be expended" are determined "in accordance with" § 707(b)(2)(A)[1]and (B), which provides various specific expense categories from which debtors may reduce their "current monthly income."[2] 11 U.S.C. § 1325(b)(3).

[1] As amended by the 2005 Reform Act, § 707(b)(2) repealed the former presumption in favor of the debtor, and replaced it with a new presumption. A case is an "abuse" of Chapter 7 if a detailed mathematical formula set out in the statute, commonly referred to as the "means test," yields a minimum amount of monthly disposable income. The means test uses a series of calculations to determine whether the § 707(b)(2) presumption of abuse arises in Chapter 7 cases. See 11 U.S.C. § 707(b)(2)(A).

determining the expenses of chapter 13 debtors, like these debtors, whose income exceeds their state's median family income. 11 U.S.C. § 1325(b)(3). In determining expenses, § 707(b)(2)(A)(ii)(I) provides that a debtor's "monthly expenses shall be the debtor's applicable monthly expense amounts specified under the National Standards and Local Standards and the debtor's actual monthly expenses for the categories specified as Other Necessary Expenses issued by the Internal Revenue Service for the area in which the debtor resides…." 11 U.S.C. § 707(b)(2)(A)(ii)(I) (emphasis added).

II. Factual Background

On their Schedule B, the Armstrongs listed ownership of one vehicle, a 1998 GMC Truck. CR No. 1.[3] They stipulated before the lower court they had no payment associated with the vehicle. CR No 59. They did not list any secured debt for their GMC truck on their Schedule D. CR No 1. On their Official Form 22C, Line 28, the Armstrongs claimed the IRS Standard "transportation ownership/lease expense" in the amount of $471 for the GMC truck.[4] CR No. 34.

On November 8, 2007, the Chapter 13 Trustee filed an objection to confirmation of the Debtors' Chapter 13 plan, claiming the plan failed to provide all of the Debtors' disposable income for the payment of creditors, contrary to 11 U.S.C. §§ 1325(a)(3) and (b)(1)(B). CR No. 27. The objection was amended December 22, 2006. CR No. 40 and 41. In his objection, the Chapter 13 Trustee argued that the Debtors had more income to devote to paying creditors because they were improperly claiming the IRS Standard expense for vehicle financing expenses, even though that expense deduction was not applicable because these Debtors have no vehicle or lease payments. Id.

[4] This amount is in addition to the "vehicle operation expenses" taken on Line 27. Because the vehicle is over six years old, the United States Trustee would also allow the Debtors an additional $200 operating expense per vehicle, based on the Internal Revenue Manual which allows such an additional vehicle operating expenses. See Internal Revenue Manual, Part 5 (entitled Collecting Process), Chapter 8, § 5.8.5.5.2, Treatment of Non-Business Transportation Expenses, which may be found on the IRS website at http://www/irs/gov/irm/part5/ch08s05.html.

The parties briefed their respective positions, CR No. 59 and 61. Argument was held On May 15, 2007.

On June 12, 2007, the bankruptcy court overruled the Chapter 13 Trustee's objection to the Debtors' plan. CR No. 65. The bankruptcy court ruled that Mr. and Mrs. Armstrong were entitled to reduce their disposable income by the amount of the IRS Standard allowance for vehicle financing costs even though they had no vehicle financing costs. Id.

On August 22, 2007, the court confirmed the plan of the debtors. CR No. 73.

This appeal followed on August 31, 2007. CR No.77.

SUMMARY OF ARGUMENT

The bankruptcy court erred as a matter of law in overruling the Chapter 13 Trustee's objection to confirmation and confirming the Armstrongs' chapter 13 plan. It did so by misinterpreting when debtors can claim a vehicle ownership expense under section 707(b)(2), which is made applicable to chapter 13 debtors under § 1325(b). The court held that the Armstrongs were entitled to deduct $471 in vehicle ownership expenses for their vehicle, even though the vehicle was owned free and clear of encumbrances. This was incorrect because 11 U.S.C. § 707(b)(2)(A)(ii)(I) allows the Armstrongs to claim only "applicable" expenses, and they had no applicable vehicle ownership expenses because the vehicle was not subject to a loan or lease payment. By using the word "applicable," Congress limited eligibility for expenses under the Local Standards to debtors for whom the expenses apply. Because the vehicle acquisition/financing expense does not apply with respect to the Armstrongs' vehicle, the bankruptcy court erred in holding they were eligible to deduct the expense under the means test.

Reading "applicable" in section 707(b)(2) as requiring debtors to have a loan or lease payment on a vehicle as a prerequisite to eligibility for the vehicle ownership expense has the salutary effect of applying the means test in a manner that is consistent with the Internal Revenue Service's longstanding application of this standard. Under section 707(b)(2), the means test looks to the IRS to establish certain standard expenses. 11 U.S.C. § 707(b)(2)(A)(ii)(I). In applying its standards to taxpayers, the IRS does not allow taxpayers to claim vehicle ownership expenses absent a monthly car expense. See IRS Collection Financial Standards attached hereto as Exhibit 1 of the Addendum.[5]

[5] The IRS revised its Collection Financial Standards, effective October 1, 2007, and such revisions will be made applicable to bankruptcy cases filed as of January 1, 2008. Because the Armstrongs' case was filed on October 3, 2006, only the Collection Financial Standards in effect prior to October 1, 2007, are applicable to the Armstrongs' case. For the Court's convenience, a true and correct PDF copy of the Collection Financial Standards applicable to this case are attached as Exhibit "1" on the Addenda and incorporated herein by reference. It is important to note, however, that

Finally, the bankruptcy court's order overruling the Chapter 13 Trustee's objection to confirmation of the Armstrongs' plan conflicts with sound notions of public policy and the primary purpose of Congress in passing bankruptcy reform legislation in 2005 - including the amendments at issue in this appeal. The 2005 Reform Act was intended to ensure that debtors repay their debts when they can. By allowing the Armstrongs to claim a fictional expense for their vehicle, the bankruptcy court frustrated that purpose.

ARGUMENT

I.

THE BANKRUPTCY COURT ERRED IN HOLDING THAT THE ARMSTRONGS WERE ELIGIBLE TO CLAIM THE IRS LOCAL STANDARDS FOR VEHICLE OWNERSHIP FOR THEIR VEHICLE BECAUSE THE EXPENSE WAS NOT APPLICABLE TO THEM.

The bankruptcy court's order overruling the Chapter 13 Trustee's objection to confirmation of the Armstrongs' plan should be reversed because it fails to recognize that the Bankruptcy Code only allows debtors to claim vehicle expenses that are applicable to them. 11 U.S.C. § 707(B)(2)(A)(ii)(I). The Armstrongs do not have any "applicable" vehicle ownership expense because they own their vehicle outright.

A. Vehicle ownership expenses are allowable only if "applicable" to the debtors.

the revisions made by the IRS effective October 1, 2007, do not change any result in this case. As set forth in the current Collection Financial Standards, the Local Standard for Vehicle Operation is still made expressly contingent on the existence of a loan or lease payment on a vehicle. See Id. As explained by the IRS, the recent revisions to the Local Standards were made to create equal allowances for first and second vehicles, add a separate public transportation allowance and reorganize the manner in which taxpayers in certain counties calculate their transportation operating expenses. See id., under heading "Recent Revisions."

Section 707(b)(2)(A)(ii)(I) of the Bankruptcy Code provides that a "debtor's monthly expenses shall be the debtor's applicable monthly expense amounts specified under the...Local Standards...issued by the Internal Revenue Service..." 11 U.S.C. § 707(b)(2)(A)(ii)(I) (emphasis added). The statute expressly provides that before the specific IRS expense amounts may be included in the debtor's allowed monthly expenses, the expense must itself first be applicable to the debtor. Id.

The Bankruptcy Code does not define the word "applicable," nor has the United States Trustee identified any Supreme Court or Ninth Circuit decision that provides a definition in the bankruptcy context.[6] Where, as here, a statutory term is undefined, a basic principle of statutory construction provides that courts should give such terms their ordinary meanings. E.g., Smith v. U.S., 508 U.S. 223, 228 (1993) ("When a word is not defined by statute, we normally construe it in accord with its ordinary or natural meaning."). See also Watson v. Ray, 192 F.3d 1153, 1155 (8th Cir. 1999) ("When interpreting a statute the court starts with the statute's plain meaning"). The dictionary defines "applicable" to mean applying or capable of being applied; relevant; suitable; appropriate. Random House Unabridged Dictionary (2006). Accordingly, such a meaning should be imparted to the term "applicable" as it appears in section 707(b)(2)(A)(ii)(I) absent clear indication to the contrary. See Johnson v. Aljian, 490 F3d 778,780 (9th Cir. 2007) (quoting U.S. v. TRW Rifle 7.62x51 Meter Caliber, 447 F.3d 686,689 (9th Cir. 2006) ("[W]e follow the common practice of consulting dictionary definitions to clarify their ordinary meaning[] and look to how the terms were defined at the time [the statute] was adopted.”).

By inserting the word “applicable” in section 707(b)(2)(A)(ii)(I), Congress limited eligibility for expenses under the Local Standards to debtors for whom such expenses are “relevant; suitable; appropriate”--thereby excluding phantom ones. The bankruptcy court’s order is inconsistent with the ordinary, common sense definition of “applicable” because it allows debtors like the Armstrongs to deduct expenses that do not apply to them. If such inapplicable expenses are disallowed, the Armstrongs have the ability to repay their unsecured creditors an additional $16,260 in their 60-month chapter 13 repayment plan.

The court below concluded that the Armstrongs could deduct vehicle expenses they do not have because "applicable" in section 707(b)(2)(A)(ii)(I) refers solely to choosing the correct number from the IRS expense tables based on the "geographical location of the debtors and the number of vehicles... .” CR No. 65, p.8 and 11 . In other words, the court read "applicable" merely as referring to the number of standardized expenses amounts the Armstrongs can claim.

The court’s reading does not interpret section 707(b)(2)(A)(ii)(I), it rewrites it. For its proffered construction to be the correct one, the statute would need to read "[t]he debtor's monthly expenses shall be the ~~debtor's~~ applicable [number of] monthly expense amounts . . ." 11 U.S.C. § 707(b)(2)(A)(ii)(I) (as modified). The statute does not say that. Nowhere does it state "applicable" means the "number" of expenses. To the contrary, "applicable" follows the word "debtor's," making it clear that the section asks debtors to claim those IRS standard expenses that apply to them.

Given this, the Armstrongs should not be allowed to claim inapplicable expenses, ones they do not have.

Not surprisingly, both appellate courts that have interpreted the word applicable in section 707(b)(2)(A)(ii)(I) have rejected the bankruptcy court's proffered reading. In re Ross-Tousey, 368 B.R. 762, 766 (E.D. Wis. 2007); In re Hartwick, 373 B.R. 645, 649-50 (D. Minn. 2007). They did so, in part, because the bankruptcy court's reading is not faithful to the purpose underlying section 707(b)(2)'s means test. As the Ross-Tousey court noted, "if it really is that simple, the statute would not seem to achieve its purpose" of ensuring that debtors are allowed expenses for the necessities of life but pay creditors from what remains. Ross-Tousey, 368 B.R at 766 (E.D. Wis. 2007). See also In re Howell, 366 B.R. 153, 157 (Bankr. D. Kan. 2007) ("denying debtors the ownership allowance when they have no ownership expense (i.e. loan or lease payments) is entirely consistent with one of the apparent objectives of BAPCPA: to ensure that debtors actually pay what they are capable of paying to unsecured creditors.").

The bankruptcy court's proffered numerical definition also fails to appreciate that a debtor's ability to pay creditors is not affected by mere vehicle ownership but by payments on a car. Accordingly, section 707(b)(2)(A)(ii)(I) does not focus on how many cars a debtor owns, but how many cars she makes payments on every month. Ross-Tousey, 368 B.R. at 766 ("The statute is only concerned about protecting the debtor's ability to continue owning a car, and if the debtor already owns the car, the debtor is adequately protected."); see also Hartwick, 373 B.R. at 652 (same).

In addition, the Hartwick and Ross-Tousey courts reversed the bankruptcy court rulings in those cases because they, like the court here, created an arbitrary distinction between the word "actual" and "applicable" expenses in section 707(b)(2)(A)(ii)(I). See, e.g., In re Fowler, 349 B.R. 414, 418 (Bankr. D. Del. 2006) (stating "The use of 'actual' with respect to the Other Necessary Expenses and 'applicable' with respect to the National and Local Standards must mean that Congress intended two different applications.) The bankruptcy court below agreed with courts like Fowler that "applicable" and "actual" must have different meanings, reasoning that because Congress used both terms in the statute, debtors like the Armstrongs need not have any "actual" expense for the Ownership Expense Standard to be "applicable." CR No. 65, p. 5 and 11. This logic is misguided, however, because, as the Ross-Tousey court explained, there is no indication in section 707(b)(2)(A)(ii)(I) that Congress intended the words "applicable" and "actual" to have essentially opposite meanings. Ross-Tousey, 368 B.R. at 765. Rather, the better reading of "applicable" in the context of section 707(b)(2)(A)(ii)(I) is that it may have two meanings: first, the ownership expense is "applicable" if the debtor makes a loan or lease payment on a vehicle, and second, the amount allowed to the debtor is the "applicable" amount provided under the IRS Standards, and not the "actual" amount." Id. See also Hartwick, 373 B.R. at 653. "This reading gives meaning to the distinction between 'applicable' and 'actual' without taking a further step to conclude that 'applicable' means "nonexistent' or 'fictional.'" Ross-Tousey, 368 B.R. at 765.

By giving the term "applicable" its proper meaning, a determination of allowable expenses under the means test is a two-step process. The first step is eligibility—i.e., does the debtor qualify for an expense allowance in the category at issue? If so, then the second step is to quantify the expense amount the eligible debtor is allowed by looking at the IRS Standard amounts that are specified for the number of vehicles owned by the debtor and where the debtor lives. See, e.g., In re Carlin, 348 B.R. 795, 798 (Bankr. D. Or. 2006)("There is nothing absurd in Congress drawing the line for vehicle ownership expense eligibility at those debtors who are making payments on the vehicle.") The bankruptcy court's ruling impermissibly skips the first step of determining whether the Armstrongs are eligible for the ownership expense by virtue of having a loan or lease payment for a vehicle, and proceeds directly to the second—only considering the amount the IRS would allow eligible taxpayers to claim for ownership of two vehicles.

B. The UST's construction of "applicable" in § 707(b)(2) has the salutary effect of treating transportation costs the same way in bankruptcy cases that the IRS treats them.

Reversal of the bankruptcy court's order allowing the Armstrongs to deduct vehicle financing expenses that they do not have has the additional benefit of treating inapplicable phantom expenses in bankruptcy cases the way the IRS has long treated them. In providing which deductions debtors may take under the means test, Congress specifically stated that debtors are permitted to deduct "the debtor's applicable monthly expense amounts specified under the…Local Standards…issued by the Internal Revenue Service." 11 U.S.C. § 707(b)(2)(A)(ii)(I) (emphasis added). Accordingly, how the Internal Revenue Service applies the Standards that it developed for its own internal debt collection purposes is instructive on the question of how the same Standards might be applied in bankruptcy cases under section 707(b)(2). See, e.g., Hartwick, 373 B.R. at 650-51 ("in order to determine whether the expense Standards issued by the IRS are 'applicable,' the most logical resource to consult is the IRS"). See also In re Slusher, 359 B.R. 290, 309 (Bankr. D. Nev. 2007) ("if guidance is sought on the meaning of the IRS standards that Congress incorporated into the Bankruptcy Code, practical reason would suggest that court should consider the full manner by which the IRS uses these standards.").

The IRS Collection Financial Standards in effect as of the date of the Armstrongs' bankruptcy filing[7] fully support the United States Trustee's construction of the term "applicable" and provide as follows:

> The transportation standards consist of nationwide figures for monthly loan or lease payments referred to as ownership costs, and additional amounts for monthly operating costs….The ownership costs provided maximum allowances for the lease or purchase of up to two automobiles if allowed as a necessary expense….If a taxpayer has a car payment, the allowable ownership cost added to the allowable operating cost equals the allowable transportation expense. If a taxpayer has no car payment, or no car, the operating costs portion of the transportation standard is used to come up with the allowable transportation expense.

See IRS Collection Standards attached hereto as Exhibit 1of the Addendum; (emphasis added); see also Internal Revenue Manual, Financial Analysis Handbook, Pt. 5, ch. 15, § 5.15.1.7(4.B), available at http://www.irs.gov/irm/part5/ch15s01.html#d0e187819.

As of the date the Armstrongs filed their bankruptcy petition,[8] the "ownership cost" was specifically calculated by the IRS based on the cost to finance the acquisition of a vehicle, and not simply a cost associated with owning a car, such as repair or maintenance. The IRS noted that the "ownership cost" Standards are based on the "five-year average of new and used car financing data compiled by the Federal Reserve Board of Governors." See id. (emphasis added). As such, the IRS does not treat the "ownership cost" expense as applicable when a taxpayer does not have a monthly expense related to financing a car. In exercising its discretion to collect taxes, the IRS recognizes that taxpayers may claim the vehicle "ownership cost" portion of the Local Transportation Standards only in situations where the taxpayer has a monthly vehicle acquisition financing expense, i.e., has a monthly vehicle loan or lease payment. See id.

II.

THE BANKRUPTCY COURT'S ORDER CONFLICTS WITH THE MAJOR GOALS OF THE 2005 AMENDMENTS TO THE BANKRUPTCY CODE.

The bankruptcy court's order is also inconsistent with Congress' goals and purpose in implementing bankruptcy reform. Congress amended the Bankruptcy Code in 2005 to rectify perceived abuses in the bankruptcy process. "Among the abuses identified by Congress was the easy access to chapter 7 liquidation proceedings by consumer debtors who, if required to file under chapter 13, could afford to pay some dividend to their unsecured creditors." In re Hardacre, 338 B.R. 718, 720 (Bankr. N.D. Tex. 2006) (citing 151 Cong. Rec. S2459, 2469-70 (March 10, 2005)). A "primary goal" of the 2005 Reform Act was to "ensure that debtors repay creditors the maximum they can afford." In re Lenton, 358 B.R. 651 (Bankr. E.D. Pa. 2006) (citing H.R. Rep. No. 109-31, pt. 1, at 1 (2005), reprinted in 2005 U.S.C.C.A.N. 88, 89). In cases such as this one, where the Armstrongs have no loan or lease payment, Congress has established a system which does not provide them an expense deduction for vehicle financing. "Allowing debtors to deduct from their disposable income a fictional ownership allowance would give debtors with unencumbered vehicles a windfall at the expense of their unsecured creditors." In re Howell, 366 B.R. 153, 157 (Bankr. D. Kan. 2007).

CONCLUSION

For all of these reasons, the United States Trustee respectfully asks this Court to reverse the July 30, 2007, Orders entered by the bankruptcy court overruling the Chapter 13 Trustee's objection to confirmation of the Debtors' plan and confirming the Debtors' plan, and remand this case to the bankruptcy court for further proceedings.

INTRODUCTION AND STATEMENT OF BASIS FOR APPELLATE JURISDICTION

The United States Trustee appeals an order of the United States Bankruptcy Court for the Southern District of Georgia (the "Bankruptcy Court") issued on October 17, 2005 (the "Order"). The United States Trustee is an official of the United States Department of Justice that must administer and enforce the Bankruptcy Code. See 11 U.S.C. § 307 (United States Trustee has standing to "raise . . . any issue in any case or proceeding" under Bankruptcy Code); 28 U.S.C. § 586 (setting forth many duties of United States Trustee); United States Trustee v. Columbia Gas Systems, Inc. (In re Columbia Gas Systems, Inc.), 33 F.3d 294, 295-299 (3d Cir. 1994).

The Order interprets certain provisions of the Bankruptcy Abuse Prevention and Consumer Protection Act of 2005 that define and regulate "debt relief agencies." See 11 U.S.C. §§ 526-528.[1] The Bankruptcy Court ruled that these provisions, which became effective on the date the Bankruptcy Court issued the Order, do not apply to attorneys and that attorneys admitted to practice before the Bankruptcy Court are "excused from compliance" with them. Order at 9. The Bankruptcy Court so ruled even though the statutory definition of "debt relief agencies" includes persons that provide "legal representation" in bankruptcy proceedings. See 11 U.S.C. §§ 101(12A),[2] 101(4A). The Order plainly undermines the enforcement of the Bankruptcy Code (and undermines the United States Trustee's ability to assist with such enforcement) because it purports to render these new statutory provisions inoperative in the Southern District of Georgia as applicable to attorneys.

[1] The full text of these sections is set forth in the attached Addendum.

[2] The full text of § 101(12A) is likewise set forth in the Addendum.

The Order is final in the sense that it disposes of all issues raised by the Bankruptcy Court. See Order at 4, n.1. This Court therefore has appellate jurisdiction to review the Order under section 158(a) of title 28.[3] As explained more extensively in the body of the brief, however, the Bankruptcy Court lacked both Article III and statutory jurisdiction to issue the order sua sponte due to the absence of a live case or controversy between actual parties. The United States Trustee therefore believes that this Court should vacate the Order for lack of jurisdiction and need not address the merits of the Order in this appeal. See United States v. Corrick, 298 U.S. 435, 440 (1936) (court had "jurisdiction on appeal, not of the merits, but merely for the purpose of correcting the error of the lower court in entertaining the suit" (footnotes omitted) (quoted in Arizonans for Official English and Robert D. Park v. Arizona, 520 U.S. 43, 73 (1997) (vacating with remand for dismissal for lack of case or controversy)). See also Steel Co. v. Citizens For A Better Environment, 523 U.S. 83, 110 (1998) (vacating with remand for dismissal for lack of case or controversy).

In the event, however, that this Court deems it appropriate to reach the merits, the United States Trustee requests that this Court reverse the Bankruptcy Court and hold that the Bankruptcy Court premised the Order on an erroneous construction of the statutory provisions regarding debt relief agencies.

STATEMENT OF THE ISSUES

[3] If it did not have jurisdiction under section 158, this Court would have jurisdiction to review the Order under the authority of mandamus set forth in section 1651 of title 28, because the Bankruptcy Court plainly exceeded its jurisdiction in issuing the Order. See In re BellSouth Corp., 334 F.3d 941 (11th Cir. 2003) (mandamus is extraordinary remedy that may be used to correct a "judicial usurpation of power" and "'confine a lower court to its jurisdiction'"), quoting In re Evans, 524 F.2d 1004, 1007 (5th Cir.1975).

The United States Trustee raises three issues on appeal:

1. Did the Bankruptcy Court lack jurisdiction to enter the Order based on the absence of a "case or controversy" under Article III of the United States Constitution?

2. Did the Bankruptcy Court lack authority under section 151 of title 28 to enter the Order because there was no properly commenced "action, suit or proceeding" pending before the Bankruptcy Court?

3. Assuming arguendo that the Bankruptcy Court properly exercised its jurisdiction, was it correct in ruling that the provisions of the Bankruptcy Abuse Prevention and Consumer Protection Act of 2005 regulating debt relief agencies do not apply to licensed attorneys?

STANDARDS OF REVIEW

The standards of review on appeal are clearly erroneous as to findings of fact and de novo as to conclusions of law. In re Sublett, 895 F.2d 1381 (11th Cir. 1990); Fed. R. Bankr. P. 8013. This appeal raises only issues of law.

STATEMENT OF THE CASE

I. PROCEDURAL HISTORY

As indicated above, the Bankruptcy Court issued the Order sua sponte on October 17, 2005, the date that the relevant provisions of the Bankruptcy Abuse Prevention and Consumer Protection Act of 2005 (the "BAPCPA") took effect. There was no case or proceeding pending in the Bankruptcy Court to which the Order related, and it consequently contained no case or docket number at the time the Bankruptcy Court issued it. The Bankruptcy Court posted the Order on its Internet web site and later docketed it as Miscellaneous Proceeding No. 05-00400. The United States Trustee filed a timely notice of appeal from the Order on October 27, 2005.

II. THE STATUTORY AND LEGISLATIVE BACKGROUND

The President signed the BAPCPA into law on April 20, 2005, and the bulk of its provisions became effective on October 17, 2005. This legislation constitutes the most extensive overhaul of the Bankruptcy Code since its enactment in 1978. As indicated by its title, the BAPCPA has two primary goals: the prevention of bankruptcy abuse and the protection of consumers involved in the bankruptcy process. The consumer protection provisions consist, inter alia, of enhanced disclosure requirements and other safeguards pertaining to reaffirmations of dischargeable debt by bankruptcy debtors, penalties for abusive practices by creditors, requirements for credit counseling and debtor education, and the provisions at issue in this appeal pertaining to debt relief agencies.

The requirements imposed on debt relief agencies are for the benefit of persons "whose debts consist primarily of consumer debts and the value of whose nonexempt property is less than $150,000," 11 U.S.C. § 101(3), i.e., persons of moderate and less than moderate means. These requirements are set forth in three new sections of the Bankruptcy Code: 526, 527 and 528. Section 526 prohibits debt relief agencies from: (i) misrepresenting to assisted persons the services to be provided to them or the risks attendant upon becoming a debtor; (ii) advising an assisted person to make untrue or misleading statements in bankruptcy filings; and (iii) advising an assisted person to incur more debt in contemplation of filing bankruptcy or for the purpose of paying an attorney or bankruptcy petition preparer for bankruptcy services. It also provides that any waiver of rights under sections 526, 527 and 528 is unenforceable.

Section 527 requires debt relief agencies to provide assisted persons with certain information, notices and disclosures, including: (i) notice of the right to proceed pro se, hire an attorney or hire a bankruptcy petition preparer; (ii) information on how to complete the bankruptcy schedules, value assets and determine what property is exempt; and (iii) notice of the obligation of debtors to provide truthful and accurate information and the potential consequences of failing to do so.

Section 528 requires debt relief agencies to provide assisted persons a written contract explaining clearly and conspicuously the nature of services they will render, the amount of the fees or charges for such services, and the terms of payment. In addition, section 528 requires debt relief agencies to disclose in their advertising that they are debt relief agencies, that the assistance they provide may involve bankruptcy relief, and that they are in the business of helping people file for relief under the Bankruptcy Code.

SUMMARY OF THE ARGUMENT

This Court should vacate the Order because the Bankruptcy Court entered it in the absence of a case or controversy under Article III of the United States Constitution. Alternatively, the Bankruptcy Court lacked the power and jurisdiction to enter the Order under under sections 151 and 157 of title 28. Assuming arguendo that the Bankruptcy Court had authority to enter the Order, the United States Trustee submits that this Court should reverse the Order as an erroneous interpretation of the statutes regarding debt relief agencies.

ARGUMENT

I. THE BANKRUPTCY COURT LACKED JURISDICTION UNDER ARTICLE III OF THE UNITED STATES CONSTITUTION BECAUSE THERE WAS NO "CASE OR CONTROVERSY." THE BANKRUPTCY COURT HAD NO CASE OR PROCEEDING BEFORE IT, AND NO PARTIES WITH STANDING SOUGHT JUDICIAL RELIEF FROM THE BANKRUPTCY COURT.

"[I]t is well settled that the jurisdiction of the bankruptcy courts to hear cases related to bankruptcy is limited initially by statute and eventually by Article III." In re Lemco Gypsum, Inc., 910 F.2d 784, 787 (11th Cir. 1990). Although a bankruptcy court is not itself an Article III court, see Northern Pipeline Construction Co. v. Marathon Pipe Line Co., 458 U.S. 50, 60-61 (1982), a bankruptcy court may exercise a judicial function as a "unit of the district court." See 11 U.S.C. § 151 ("In each judicial district, the bankruptcy judges . . . shall constitute a unit of the district court to be known as the bankruptcy court for that district."); In re Goerg, 930 F.2d 1563, 1565 (11th Cir. 1991) ("original jurisdiction over bankruptcy cases is vested in Article III courts and [] bankruptcy courts obtain jurisdiction only at the discretion of the district court"). Accordingly, bankruptcy courts are bound by the jurisdictional limitations of Article III.

The Bankruptcy Court's entry of the Order violates an essential premise of judicial power under the Constitution – judicial action is limited to cases and controversies. United States Constitution, Article III, section 2, cl. 1. As the United States Supreme Court stated in Aetna Life Ins. Co. v. Haworth, 300 U.S. 227, 239-40 (1937) (citations omitted):

> The controversy must be definite and concrete, touching the legal relations of parties having adverse legal interests. It must be a real and substantial controversy admitting of specific relief through a decree of a conclusive character, as distinguished from an opinion advising what the law would be upon a hypothetical state of facts.

See also Dixie Electric Co-op. v. Citizens of the State of Alabama, 789 F.2d 852, 857-58 (11th Cir. 1986) (federal court may not adjudicate potential issues that may arise). In summary, the dispute must call "for an adjudication of present right upon established facts." Aetna, supra, 300 U.S. at 242. By limiting the judicial role to such cases or controversies, brought by parties with standing, Article III thereby limits the judicial power "to those disputes which confine federal courts to a role consistent with a system of separated powers and which are traditionally thought to be capable of resolution through the judicial process." Valley Forge Christian College v. Americans United for Separation of Church and State, 454 U.S. 464, 472 (1982).

It is clear beyond peradventure that the Bankruptcy Court had no concrete case or controversy before it when it issued the Order. The Bankruptcy Court issued the Order on the very morning that the new federal statutes became effective, before a concrete dispute could even be brought to the Bankruptcy Court by parties having a stake in the interpretation of the statutes.

The Order also presents a pristine illustration of why standing is a crucial element of the “case or controversy” requirement of Article III. In the absence of any party possessing standing to request or contest the relief granted by the Bankruptcy Court, the Bankruptcy Court could neither address any alleged violations of the relevant statutes, nor consider the arguments for or against any particular interpretation of the relevant statutes as made by parties affected by the outcome. The absence of any briefing meant the Bankruptcy Court below acted in a vacuum without the benefit of the views of the United States Trustee, who helps administer these statutes, affected debtors, whom Congress enacted the statutes to protect, or attorneys, whom Congress regulated by passing the statutes. Practically speaking, it was precipitous for the Bankruptcy Court to interpret these federal statutes this way. Constitutionally speaking, it lacked jurisdiction to enter an opinion with no case and no parties.

Due to the lack of a cognizable case or controversy below, the United States Trustee respectfully submits that this Court should exercise "jurisdiction on appeal, not of the merits, but merely for the purpose of correcting the error of the lower court in entertaining the suit." United States v. Corrick, 298 U.S. 435, 440 (1936) (footnotes omitted) (quoted in Arizonans for Official English and Robert D. Park v. Arizona, 520 U.S. 43, 73 (1997) (vacating with remand for dismissal for lack of case or controversy). See also Steel Co. v. Citizens For A Better Environment, 523 U.S. 83, 110 (1998) (vacating with remand for dismissal for lack of case or controversy). The United States Trustee, therefore, asks the Court to vacate the Order for lack of a case or controversy.

II. ALTERNATIVELY, THE BANKRUPTCY COURT LACKED BOTH JURISDICTION AND POWER TO ENTER THE ORDER UNDER SECTIONS 151 AND 157 OF TITLE 28.

Due to the absence of a case or controversy, this Court should vacate the Order and need not evaluate any other arguments raised in this brief. Nonetheless, the Order was also improper because the Bankruptcy Court lacked jurisdiction to enter the Order under section 157 of title 28 and lacked power to enter the Order under section 151 of title 28.

1. The Bankruptcy Court Lacked Jurisdiction Under Section 157 of Title 28.

The Bankruptcy Court derives its jurisdiction from the bankruptcy jurisdiction of the District Court. Section 1334(a) of title 28 provides that the district courts, except as set forth in subsection (b), "shall have original and exclusive jurisdiction of all cases under title 11."

(Emphasis added). Subsection (b), in turn, provides that the district courts have "original but not exclusive jurisdiction of all civil proceedings arising under title 11, or arising in or related to cases under title 11." (Emphasis added). A bankruptcy court's jurisdiction is then based on the referral of such cases and proceedings from the district court to the bankruptcy court pursuant to section 157 of title 28: "Each district court may provide that any or all cases under title 11 and any and all proceedings arising under title 11 or arising in or related to a case under title 11 shall be referred to the bankruptcy judges for the district." (Emphasis added.) [4]

The Order did not adjudicate an issue in a pending bankruptcy "case" or "proceeding." Consequently, the Bankruptcy Court lacked jurisdiction to enter the Order.

2. The Bankruptcy Court Lacked Power to Enter the Order Under Section 151 of Title 28.

Alternatively, the Bankruptcy Court lacked statutory power under section 151 of title 28 to enter an order without a pending bankruptcy case. A bankruptcy court is a "unit of the district court" and derives its authority from the district court. 28 U.S.C. § 151.[5] A bankruptcy court has authority "with respect to any action, suit, or proceeding . . . except as otherwise provided by law or by rule or order of the district court." Id.

The Bankruptcy Court exceeded its statutory authority under section 151 of title 28 by interpreting five new statutory provisions outside of any "action, suit or proceeding." The United States Trustee is aware of no authority for the proposition that a bankruptcy court may interpret federal statutes, and thereby excuse compliance with those statutes, outside of an action, suit or proceeding being brought by a party with standing to seek relief from the court. The Bankruptcy Court based its authority on sections 105 and 526(c) of title 11, but those provisions presume the existence of a bankruptcy case within which a bankruptcy court may consider a matter. "Except as provided in section 1161 of this title, chapters 1, 3, and 5 of this title apply in a case under chapter 7, 11, 12, or 13 of this title." 11 U.S.C. § 103(a) (emphasis added). The Bankruptcy Court's issuance of the Order outside of its grant of judicial authority also rendered ineffective the procedural protections normally afforded to litigants under the Federal Rules of Bankruptcy Procedure and, to the extent that they are incorporated therein, the Federal Rules of Civil Procedure. See Fed. R. Bankr. P. 1001 ("The Bankruptcy Rules and Forms govern procedure in cases under title 11 of the United States Code.") (emphasis added). S*ee also* Fed. R. Bankr. P. 7001 and 9014 (addressing applicability of various rules to adversary proceedings and contested matters within bankruptcy cases). Cf. Reserve Mining Co. v. Lord, 529 F.2d 181, 185 (8th Cir. 1976) (lower court exceeded its authority by unilaterally ordering deposit of $100,000 as bond without affording due process to affected party).

III. THE BANKRUPTCY COURT'S RULING THAT THE PROVISIONS OF THE BAPCPA REGULATING DEBT RELIEF AGENCIES DO NOT APPLY TO LICENSED ATTORNEYS WAS INCORRECT AS A MATTER OF LAW.

If this Court determines that the Order satisfies the Article III "case or controversy" requirement and that the Bankruptcy Court had the jurisdiction and power to issue the Order, then the United States Trustee submits that this Court should reverse the Order as an erroneous construction of the statutory provisions regarding debt relief agencies.

1. Statutory Framework – The Debt Relief Agency Provisions.

The BAPCPA creates a new term, “debt relief agency.” Section 101(12A) of title 11[6] defines it to mean, with certain listed exceptions not applicable here, “any person who provides any bankruptcy assistance to an assisted person in return for the payment of money or other valuable consideration” or who is a bankruptcy petition preparer.[7] Section 101(4A) defines the term “bankruptcy assistance” to mean:

> [A]ny goods or services sold or otherwise provided to an assisted person with the express or implied purpose of providing information, advice, counsel, document preparation, or filing, or attendance at a creditors' meeting or appearing in a case or proceeding on behalf of another or providing legal representation with respect to a case or proceeding under this title.

(Emphasis supplied). Section 101(3) of title 11 defines the term “assisted person” to mean “any person whose debts consist primarily of consumer debts and the value of whose nonexempt property is less than $150,000.”

Sections 526, 527 and 528 of title 11 impose obligations and prohibitions on debt relief agencies designed to, inter alia: i) protect consumer debtors of modest means from becoming debtors under the Bankruptcy Code without full awareness that they are doing so or without knowledge of the obligations and consequences attendant on doing so; and ii) prevent those in the business of providing document preparation, planning, or other bankruptcy-related services from engaging in misleading or exploitative conduct in their dealings with debtors or prospective debtors.

[6] The full text of this section is set forth in the attached Addendum.

[7] Section 110(a)(1&2) defines the term “bankruptcy petition preparer” to mean “a person, other than an attorney for the debtor or an employee of such attorney under the direct supervision of such attorney, who prepares for compensation ... a petition or any other document prepared for filing by a debtor in a United States bankruptcy court or a United States district court in connection with a [bankruptcy] case ...” Regulation of bankruptcy petition preparers under section 110 of title 11 existed prior to the BAPCPA.

Section 526 prohibits a debt relief agency from:

- failing to perform any service that it promised an assisted person or prospective assisted person it would perform in connection with a bankruptcy case;
- making any statement or counseling or advising any assisted person or prospective assisted person to make a statement in a document filed in a bankruptcy case that is untrue or misleading or that, upon the exercise of reasonable care, it should have known was untrue or misleading;
- misrepresenting to an assisted person or prospective assisted person the services that it will provide or the benefits and risks that may result if the person becomes a debtor in a bankruptcy case; or
- advising an assisted person or prospective assisted person to incur more debt in contemplation of filing a bankruptcy case or for the purpose of paying an attorney or bankruptcy petition preparer for services performed in preparing for or representing the assisted person.

Section 526 further specifies that any waiver by a assisted person of any protection or right provided thereunder is unenforceable and provides civil remedies and penalties for violations of that section, section 527 or section 528.

Section 527 requires debt relief agencies to provide assisted persons with certain information, notices and disclosures pertaining to the rights and obligations of bankruptcy debtors, including: (i) notice of the right to proceed pro se or to hire an attorney or bankruptcy petition preparer; (ii) information on how to complete the bankruptcy schedules, value assets and determine what property is exempt; and (iii) notice of the obligation of debtors under the Bankruptcy Code to provide truthful and accurate information and of the potential consequences of failing to do so.

Section 528 requires debt relief agencies to provide assisted persons to whom they provide bankruptcy assistance a copy of a written contract explaining clearly and conspicuously the services the agency will provide, the fees or charges for such services, and the terms of payment. In addition, section 528 requires debt relief agencies to disclose in their advertising that they are debt relief agencies, that the assistance they provide may involve bankruptcy relief, and that they are in the business of helping people file for relief under the Bankruptcy Code.

2. The Bankruptcy Court's Interpretation of the Provisions Regarding Debt Relief Agencies Was Erroneous.

The Bankruptcy Court acknowledged both that "the language defining debt relief agencies is broad enough on its face to include attorneys" and that "the reference to 'providing legal representation' in § 101(4A) suggests that attorneys are covered." Order at 2. The Bankruptcy Court further acknowledged that published legal commentary on the BAPCPA has assumed that the term "debt relief agency" includes attorneys. Order at 3. The Bankruptcy Court concluded, however, that "[b]ecause the definition of 'debt relief agency' omits express reference to attorneys and includes a term [i.e., ‘bankruptcy petition preparer’] which excludes attorneys,” Congress did not intend to include attorneys within the its purview. Order at 5. Instead, reasoned the Court:

> the inclusion of the term “legal representation” in the definition of “bankruptcy assistance” was Congress's effort to empower the Bankruptcy Courts presiding over a case with authority to protect consumers who are before the Court, who may have been harmed by a debt relief agency that may have engaged in the unauthorized practice of law, and whose existing remedies for any damage is more theoretical than real.

Order at 5-6. Stated differently,

> Congress intended to establish regulation of entities who interface with debtors in shadowy, gray areas not already covered by bankruptcy petition preparer regulations and to bolster the existing regulation of bankruptcy petition preparers, but it did not intend to regulate attorneys.

Order at 6.

The Bankruptcy Court expressed concern that if the definition of “debt relief agency” encompasses attorneys, “a new layer of regulation will be superimposed on the bar of this Court, and evaluation of new risks and liabilities will preoccupy them as they strive to represent their clients, comply with existing state regulation of their practice, learn the new substantive and procedural mandates of this new law, and adhere to the separate professional standards applicable to members of the Bar of this Court,” a result that the Bankruptcy Court stated “should not be borne by the Bar needlessly or merely out of an abundance of caution” but only “if that is the result Congress mandated.” Order at 4. In the Bankruptcy Court’s view, the effect of such an interpretation would be to “usurp state regulation of the practice of law” and thereby “possibly violate the Tenth Amendment to the Constitution ...” Order at 8.

"In ascertaining the plain meaning of the statute, the court must look to the particular statutory language at issue, as well as the language and design of the statute as a whole." K Mart Corp. v. Cartier, Inc., 486 U.S. 281, 291 (1988). As the Bankruptcy Court noted, the language of sections 101(12A) and (4A) is broad enough on its face to include attorneys. Section 101(12A) defines a "debt relief agency" as "any person who provides any bankruptcy assistance to an assisted person ... or who is a bankruptcy petition preparer under section 110 ..." (Emphasis added). Section 101(4A) defines "bankruptcy assistance" to include "providing legal representation with respect to a case or proceeding under the [Bankruptcy Code]." There is no doubt that bankruptcy attorneys provide legal representation with respect to bankruptcy cases. While section 101(12A) lists several exclusions from the definition of debt relief agency (e.g., nonprofit organizations, depository institutions, and distributors of copyrighted works), attorneys are not among them. Thus, the plain and ordinary meaning of the statutory language used to define "debt relief agency" encompasses attorneys, and the reference to "legal representation" should not be narrowly read as "unauthorized legal representation."

Aside from the statutory language used to define "debt relief agency" and "bankruptcy assistance," other provisions of the legislation also indicate that Congress intended to include attorneys and lawful legal representation within its purview. Section 526(d)(2), for example, provides that no language in sections 526, 527, or 528 shall be deemed to > limit or curtail the authority or ability –

>
> (A) of a State or subdivision or instrumentality thereof to determine and enforce qualifications for the practice of law under the laws of that State; or
> (B) of a Federal Court to determine and enforce the qualifications for the practice of law before that court.

This provision would be meaningless if the provisions regarding debt relief agencies did not apply to attorneys. Also, section 527(b) requires debt relief agencies to provide assisted persons with a written notice containing the following disclosures:

> If you decide to seek bankruptcy relief, you can represent yourself, you can hire an attorney to represent you, or you can get help in some localities from a bankruptcy petition preparer who is not an attorney. THE LAW REQUIRES AN ATTORNEY OR BANKRUPTCY PETITION PREPARER TO GIVE YOU A WRITTEN CONTRACT SPECIFYING WHAT THE ATTORNEY OR BANKRUPTCY PETITION PREPARER WILL DO FOR YOU AND HOW MUCH IT WILL COST. Ask to see the contract before you hire anyone.

It makes little sense to require someone other than an assisted person's attorney to disclose to the assisted person that the law requires the attorney to provide the assisted person with a written contract specifying what the attorney is going to do and how much it will cost. While the Bankruptcy Court found it "hard to imagine" that this provision "really requires an attorney to tell an assisted person that he/she has the right to hire an attorney or how to prepare documents pro se that the attorney is poised to prepare on that person's behalf," Order at 6, this is no more odd than requiring a non-attorney petition preparer who is poised to prepare documents for an assisted person to disclose to the assisted person that "you can get help in some localities from a bankruptcy petition preparer who is not an attorney."

The legislative history of the BAPCPA reinforces the conclusion that Congress intended the term "debt relief agency" to encompass attorneys and lawful legal representation. In March 2005, while the BAPCPA was under consideration by the Senate, Senator Feingold offered an amendment to exclude attorneys from the definition of debt relief agency. The amendment would have changed section 101(12A) of title 11 to read, in relevant part, as follows:

> The term “debt relief agency” means any person, other than an attorney or an employee of an attorney, who provides any bankruptcy assistance to an assisted person in return for the payment of money or other valuable consideration, or who is a bankruptcy petition preparer under section 110 ...

Id. It would also have removed the words “an attorney or” from the title of the notice required by section 527(b) so as to make it read, “IMPORTANT INFORMATION ABOUT BANKRUPTCY ASSISTANCE SERVICES FROM A BANKRUPTCY PETITION PREPARER,” rather than “IMPORTANT INFORMATION ABOUT BANKRUPTCY ASSISTANCE SERVICES FROM AN ATTORNEY OR BANKRUPTCY PETITION PREPARER.”

Senator Feingold discussed his amendment on the floor of the Senate as follows:

> Another of my amendments deals with a provision that bankruptcy lawyers are very concerned about. This is amendment No. 93 on debt relief agencies. The amendment is strongly supported by the American Bar Association. This amendment would exclude lawyers from the provisions dealing with “debt relief agencies” in sections 226 to 228 of the bill. As currently written, the bill would impose a number of unnecessary burdens on the attorney/client relationship in bankruptcy proceedings. Subjecting attorneys to the "debt relief agency" provisions will add little substantive protection for consumers, but require substantial amounts of extra paperwork and cost.
> Requiring lawyers to call themselves “debt relief agencies” will do more to confuse the public than to protect it. I think members of the public generally understand what the word “lawyer” means, but the phrase “debt relief agency” is vague and unhelpful. It is also misleading, because there are significant differences between lawyers and nonlawyers, but both would be identifying themselves as debt relief agencies under this bill.
> Only lawyers are permitted to give legal advice, to file pleadings, or to represent debtors in bankruptcy hearings. Perhaps most importantly, only lawyers are bound to confidentiality by the attorney-client privilege. These distinctions are important to consumers, but they would be obscured by the bill as written.

> Furthermore, these provisions would apparently apply to any law firm that provides bankruptcy services, even if that law firm were primarily providing landlord-tenant advice even to landlords criminal defense services, or other unrelated services. Large firms with only one bankruptcy practitioner may be required to advertise themselves as "debt relief agencies."
> I think this will be immensely confusing to consumers without any apparent benefit.
>
> The substantive provisions on "debt relief agencies" would add little to the already existing laws and regulations governing attorney conduct. Attorneys currently have extensive duties relating to disclosures, fees, and ethical obligations. These provisions would micromanage that relationship without adding any meaningful substantive protection. I think the intention of the bill's drafters was to prevent attorneys from tricking consumers into bankruptcy by not telling consumers from the beginning that they work on bankruptcy issues, and then sort of springing the idea of bankruptcy on the consumer. But rather than simply prohibiting this sort of unethical behavior, the bill tries to micromanage the attorney-client relationship by requiring large amounts of additional paperwork and disclosure. Extra paperwork substantially burdens the consumer and adds to the cost of bankruptcy. Given that attorney conduct is already regulated, I believe these provisions are unnecessary as applied to attorneys and provide no clear benefit.

151 Cong Rec. S2306 (daily ed. Mar. 09, 2005) (statement of Sen. Feingold).

Because Congress did not adopt Senator Feingold's amendment, it is clear from the legislative history of the BAPCPA, as well as its plain language and the design of the statute as a whole, that Congress intended for the provisions governing debt relief agencies to be applicable to attorneys.

The Bankruptcy Court was, of course, correct in its observation that this will impose a new layer of regulation on bankruptcy attorneys already subject both to state regulation of their practice and to the separate professional standards applicable under the rules of this Court and the Bankruptcy Court. However, this is not the first time Congress has extended the reach of consumer protection legislation to attorneys. There is no question, for example, that debt collection attorneys are subject to the requirements of The Fair Debt Collection Practices Act, 15 U.S.C. §§ 1601 et seq. See Crossley v. Lieberman, 868 F2d 566, 569 (3rd Cir. 1989). If a debt collection attorney qualifies as a "person ... who regularly collects or attempts to collect ... debts owed or due or asserted to be owed or due another" within the contemplation of section 1692a(6) of title 15, there is no reason why a bankruptcy attorney would not qualify as a "person who provides any bankruptcy assistance" within the contemplation of section 101(12A) of title 11.

Congress has likewise subjected attorneys to federal regulation for the purpose of protecting investors. Section 307 of the Sarbanes-Oxley Act of 2002 (codified as 15 U.S.C. § 7245) requires the U.S. Securities and Exchange Commission to "issue rules, in the public interest and for the protection of investors, setting forth minimum standards of professional conduct for attorneys appearing and practicing before the Commission ... in the representation of issuers," including certain specified requirements regarding the reporting of evidence of violations of the securities laws. Accordingly, the provisions of the BAPCPA governing debt relief agencies are by no means unique in their application to conduct by attorneys. They are simply another effort by Congress to protect a segment of the public, in this case a vulnerable class of consumer debtors, from the detrimental acts of third parties, including attorneys.[8] [8] Contrary to the Bankruptcy Court's suggestion (Order at 8 & n.4), this construction of these statutes presents no Tenth Amendment problems. Congress has express constitutional authority to establish federal bankruptcy laws (U.S. Const., Art. I, sec. 8), and nothing in the relevant provisions involves any federal commandeering of state resources. See Printz v. United States, 521 U.S. 898 (1997); New York v. United States, 505 U.S. 144 (1992).

CONCLUSION

Based on the foregoing legal authorities and analysis, the United States Trustee respectfully requests that this Court vacate the Order due to the absence of a "case or controversy" in the Bankruptcy Court as required under Article III of the United States Constitution. Alternatively, the Bankruptcy Court lacked statutory jurisdiction and power to enter the Order. If, however, this Court concludes that the Bankruptcy Court properly exercised its jurisdiction and authority, the United States Trustee submits that the Bankruptcy Court nonetheless erred in its interpretation of the statutes regarding debt relief agencies, and respectfully requests that this Court reverse the Order.

11 U.S.C. § 526 provides as follows:

Restrictions on debt relief agencies.

> (a) A debt relief agency shall not--
>
> (1) fail to perform any service that such agency informed an assisted person or prospective assisted person it would provide in connection with a case or proceeding under this title;
>
> (2) make any statement, or counsel or advise any assisted person or prospective assisted person to make a statement in a document filed in a case or proceeding under this title, that is untrue and misleading, or that upon the exercise of reasonable care, should have been known by such agency to be untrue or misleading;
>
> (3) misrepresent to any assisted person or prospective assisted person, directly or indirectly, affirmatively or by material omission, with respect to--
>
> (A) the services that such agency will provide to such person; or

(B) the benefits and risks that may result if such person becomes a debtor in a case under this title; or

(4) advise an assisted person or prospective assisted person to incur more debt in contemplation of such person filing a case under this title or to pay an attorney or bankruptcy petition preparer fee or charge for services performed as part of preparing for or representing a debtor in a case under this title.

(b) Any waiver by any assisted person of any protection or right provided under this section shall not be enforceable against the debtor by any Federal or State court or any other person, but may be enforced against a debt relief agency.

(c) (1) Any contract for bankruptcy assistance between a debt relief agency and an assisted person that does not comply with the material requirements of this section, section 527, or section 528 shall be void and may not be enforced by any Federal or State court or by any other person, other than such assisted person.

(2) Any debt relief agency shall be liable to an assisted person in the amount of any fees or charges in connection with providing bankruptcy assistance to such person that such debt relief agency has received, for actual damages, and for reasonable attorneys' fees and costs if such agency is found, after notice and a hearing, to have–

(A) intentionally or negligently failed to comply with any provision of this section, section 527, or section 528 with respect to a case or proceeding under this title for such assisted person;

(B) provided bankruptcy assistance to an assisted person in a case or proceeding under this title that is dismissed or converted to a case under another chapter of this title because of such agency's intentional or negligent failure to file any required document including those specified in section 521; or

(C) intentionally or negligently disregarded the material requirements of this title or the Federal Rules of Bankruptcy Procedure applicable to such agency.

(3) In addition to such other remedies as are provided under State law, whenever the chief law enforcement officer of a State, or an official or agency designated by a State, has reason to believe that any person has violated or is violating this section, the State--

(A) may bring an action to enjoin such violation;

(B) may bring an action on behalf of its residents to recover the actual damages of assisted persons arising from such violation, including any liability under paragraph (2); and

(C) in the case of any successful action under subparagraph (A) or (B), shall be awarded the costs of the action and reasonable attorneys' fees as determined by the court.

(4) The district courts of the United States for districts located in the State shall have concurrent jurisdiction of any action under subparagraph (A) or (B) of paragraph (3).

(5) Notwithstanding any other provision of Federal law and in addition to any other remedy provided under Federal or State law, if the court, on its own motion or on the motion of the United States trustee or the debtor, finds that a person intentionally violated this section, or engaged in a clear and consistent pattern or practice of violating this section, the court may –

(A) enjoin the violation of such section; or

(B) impose an appropriate civil penalty against such person.

(d) No provision of this section, section 527, or section 528 shall –

(1) annul, alter, affect, or exempt any person subject to such sections from complying with any law of any State except to the extent that such law is inconsistent with those sections, and then only to the extent of the inconsistency; or

(2) be deemed to limit or curtail the authority or ability –

(A) of a State or subdivision or instrumentality thereof, to determine and enforce qualifications for the practice of law under the laws of that State; or

(B) of a Federal court to determine and enforce the qualifications for the practice of law before that court.

Disclosures.

(a) A debt relief agency providing bankruptcy assistance to an assisted person shall provide–

(1) the written notice required under section 342(b)(1); and

(2) to the extent not covered in the written notice described in paragraph (1), and not later than 3 business days after the first date on which a debt relief agency first offers to provide any bankruptcy assistance services to an assisted person, a clear and conspicuous written notice advising assisted persons that--

(A) all information that the assisted person is required to provide with a petition and thereafter during a case under this title is required to be complete, accurate, and truthful;

(B) all assets and all liabilities are required to be completely and accurately disclosed in the documents filed to commence the case, and the replacement value of each asset as defined in section 506 must be stated in those documents where requested after reasonable inquiry to establish such value;

(C) current monthly income, the amounts specified in section 707(b)(2), and, in a case under chapter 13 of this title, disposable income (determined in accordance with section 707(b)(2)), are required to be stated after reasonable inquiry; and

(D) information that an assisted person provides during their case may be audited pursuant to this title, and that failure to provide such information may result in dismissal of the case under this title or other sanction, including a criminal sanction.

(b) A debt relief agency providing bankruptcy assistance to an assisted person shall provide each assisted person at the same time as the notices required under subsection (a)(1) the following statement, to the extent applicable, or one substantially similar. The statement shall be clear and conspicuous and shall be in a single document separate from other documents or notices provided to the assisted person:

IMPORTANT INFORMATION ABOUT BANKRUPTCY ASSISTANCE SERVICES FROM AN ATTORNEY OR BANKRUPTCY PETITION PREPARER.

If you decide to seek bankruptcy relief, you can represent yourself, you can hire an attorney to represent you, or you can get help in some localities from a bankruptcy petition preparer who is not an attorney. THE LAW REQUIRES AN ATTORNEY OR BANKRUPTCY PETITION PREPARER TO GIVE YOU A WRITTEN CONTRACT SPECIFYING WHAT THE ATTORNEY OR BANKRUPTCY PETITION PREPARER WILL DO FOR YOU AND HOW MUCH IT WILL COST. Ask to see the contract before you hire anyone.

The following information helps you understand what must be done in a routine bankruptcy case to help you evaluate how much service you need. Although bankruptcy can be complex, many cases are routine.

Before filing a bankruptcy case, either you or your attorney should analyze your eligibility for different forms of debt relief available under the Bankruptcy Code and which form of relief is most likely to be beneficial for you. Be sure you understand the relief you can obtain and its limitations. To file a bankruptcy case, documents called a Petition, Schedules and Statement of Financial Affairs, as well as in some cases a Statement of Intention need to be prepared correctly and filed with the bankruptcy court. You will have to pay a filing fee to the bankruptcy court. Once your case starts, you will have to attend the required first meeting of creditors where you may be questioned by a court official called a 'trustee' and by creditors.

If you choose to file a chapter 7 case, you may be asked by a creditor to reaffirm a debt. You may want help deciding whether to do so. A creditor is not permitted to coerce you into reaffirming your debts.

If you choose to file a chapter 13 case in which you repay your creditors what you can afford over 3 to 5 years, you may also want help with preparing your chapter 13 plan and with the confirmation hearing on your plan which will be before a bankruptcy judge.

If you select another type of relief under the Bankruptcy Code other than chapter 7 or chapter 13, you will want to find out what should be done from someone familiar with that type of relief.

Your bankruptcy case may also involve litigation. You are generally permitted to represent yourself in litigation in bankruptcy court, but only attorneys, not bankruptcy petition preparers, can give you legal advice.

(c) Except to the extent the debt relief agency provides the required information itself after reasonably diligent inquiry of the assisted person or others so as to obtain such information reasonably accurately for inclusion on the petition, schedules or statement of financial affairs, a debt relief agency providing bankruptcy assistance to an assisted person, to the extent permitted by nonbankruptcy law, shall provide each assisted person at the time required for the notice required under subsection (a)(1) reasonably sufficient information (which shall be provided in a clear and conspicuous writing) to the assisted person on how to provide all the information the assisted person is required to provide under this title pursuant to section 521, including –

(1) how to value assets at replacement value, determine current monthly income, the amounts specified in section 707(b)(2) and, in a chapter 13 case, how to determine disposable income in accordance with section 707(b)(2) and related calculations;

(2) how to complete the list of creditors, including how to determine what amount is owed and what address for the creditor should be shown; and

(3) how to determine what property is exempt and how to value exempt property at replacement value as defined in section 506.

(d) A debt relief agency shall maintain a copy of the notices required under subsection (a) of this section for 2 years after the date on which the notice is given the assisted person.

Requirements for debt relief agencies.

(a) A debt relief agency shall –

(1) not later than 5 business days after the first date on which such agency provides any bankruptcy assistance services to an assisted person, but prior to such assisted person's petition under this title being filed, execute a written contract with such assisted person that explains clearly and conspicuously--

(A) the services such agency will provide to such assisted person; and

(B) the fees or charges for such services, and the terms of payment;

(2) provide the assisted person with a copy of the fully executed and completed contract;

(3) clearly and conspicuously disclose in any advertisement of bankruptcy assistance services or of the benefits of bankruptcy directed to the general public (whether in general media, seminars or specific mailings, telephonic or electronic messages, or otherwise) that the services or benefits are with respect to bankruptcy relief under this title; and

(4) clearly and conspicuously use the following statement in such advertisement: "We are a debt relief agency. We help people file for bankruptcy relief under the Bankruptcy Code." or a substantially similar statement.

(b) (1) An advertisement of bankruptcy assistance services or of the benefits of bankruptcy directed to the general public includes--

(A) descriptions of bankruptcy assistance in connection with a chapter 13 plan whether or not chapter 13 is specifically mentioned in such advertisement; and

(B) statements such as "federally supervised repayment plan" or "Federal debt restructuring help" or other similar statements that could lead a reasonable consumer to believe that debt counseling was being offered when in fact the services were directed to providing bankruptcy assistance with a chapter 13 plan or other form of bankruptcy relief under this title.

(2) An advertisement, directed to the general public, indicating that the debt relief agency provides assistance with respect to credit defaults, mortgage foreclosures, eviction proceedings, excessive debt, debt collection pressure, or inability to pay any consumer debt shall –

(A) disclose clearly and conspicuously in such advertisement that the assistance may involve bankruptcy relief under this title; and

(B) include the following statement: "We are a debt relief agency. We help people file for bankruptcy relief under the Bankruptcy Code." or a substantially similar statement.

I. NOTWITHSTANDING THE INTERVENORS' CHARACTERIZATION OF THE ORDER ON APPEAL AS A "GENERAL ORDER," THIS COURT SHOULD VACATE THE ORDER BECAUSE IT VIOLATES THE UNITED STATES CONSTITUTION'S CASE OR CONTROVERSY REQUIREMENT.

In her opening brief, the United States Trustee demonstrated that this Court should vacate the Order on appeal because the Bankruptcy Court entered it in the absence of a case or controversy under Article III of the United States Constitution. Leiden & Leiden, P.C., filed a brief opposing the United States Trustee's position on December 2, 2005. Another group of attorneys (the "Intervenors") did the same on January 5, 2006. Both Leiden & Leiden and the Intervenors (collectively, the "Appellees") assert in their briefs that their interests are affected by the Order. The Appellees fail to rebut the government's argument that the court below could not enter a substantive order interpreting federal cases in the absence of a "case or controversy." Consequently, this Court should vacate the Order.[1]

A. THE ORDER IS NOT A GENERAL ORDER THAT IS IMMUNE FROM CONSTITUTIONAL ATTACK DUE TO THE ABSENCE OF A CASE OR CONTROVERSY.

The Intervenors argue that Judge Lamar Davis could issue the Order without a "case or controversy" because it is a "general order" issued pursuant to the Bankruptcy Court's statutory and inherent authority to regulate attorneys. Because the Order does not have any of the incidents of a general order and would violate various provisions of law if it were such an order,

[1] Attorneys in at least three other federal districts have moved bankruptcy courts to follow Judge Davis' lead and issue a similar order. Each court has denied such relief. See In re McCartney, 2006 WL 75306, 2006 Bankr. LEXIS 36 (Bankr. M.D. Ga. Jan. 12, 2005) (denying motion based on absence of a case or controversy). The United States Trustee attaches two unpublished decisions in an appendix to this brief for this Court's convenience should the Court desire to consider them.

the United States Trustee does not believe that Judge Davis intended the Order to be a general order, and this Court should not consider it as such. Even if the Order is a general order, however, it nonetheless violates Article III's requirement of a case or controversy because it is not procedural in nature.

Rules and general orders that govern practice and procedure before the federal courts are issued pursuant to federal statutes and, ultimately, Article III of the United States Constitution:

> Article III of the Constitution . . . empowers Congress to establish a system of federal district and appellate courts and, impliedly, to establish procedural Rules governing litigation in these courts. In the Rules Enabling Act, Congress authorized [the Supreme Court] to prescribe uniform rules to govern the 'practice and procedure' of the federal district courts and courts of appeals.

Burlington Northern Railroad Co. v. Woods, 480 U.S. 1, 5 n.3 (1987). Because each bankruptcy court is a unit of the district court, 28 U.S.C. § 151, the bankruptcy courts' authority to issue generally applicable rules is therefore also derived from Article III of the United States Constitution, federal statutes, and federal rules that govern the establishment of rules of practice and procedure. See 28 U.S.C. §§ 2071-2075 (providing authority and procedures to be followed in prescribing rules); Fed. R. Civ. P. 83 (outlining authority and procedures to be followed by district court in prescribing local rules); Fed. R. Bankr. P. 9029 (bankruptcy court's equivalent of Rule 83); Local Bankr. R. 9029-1(providing authority to local bankruptcy court).

The Intervenors characterize the Order as a "general order" issued under Fed. R. Bankr. P. 9029 and Local Bankr. R. 9029-1. Brief of Intervenors, at 11. Those rules state:

> Rule 9029. Local Bankruptcy Rules; Procedure When There is No Controlling Law
>
> (a) Local Bankruptcy Rules
>
> (1) . . . A district court may authorize the bankruptcy judges of the district, subject to any limitation or condition it may prescribe and the requirements of 83 F.R.Civ.P., to make and amend rules of practice and procedure which are consistent with – but not duplicative of – Acts of Congress and these rules . . . Local rules shall conform to any uniform numbering system prescribed by the Judicial Conference of the United States.
>
> (b) Procedure When There is No Controlling Law. A judge may regulate practice in any manner consistent with federal law, these rules, Official Forms, and local rules of the district. No sanction or other disadvantage may be imposed for noncompliance with any requirement not in federal law, federal rules, Official Forms, or the local rules of the district unless the alleged violator has been furnished in the particular case with actual notice of the requirement.

Fed. R. Bankr. P. 9029. Local Bankr. R. 9029-1 states as follows:

> Pursuant to Bankruptcy Rule 9029, the Bankruptcy Court may by General Order regulate its practice in any manner not inconsistent with these Rules or the District Court Local Rules."

(Emphasis added).

The Order on appeal is not a general order under Local Bankr. R. 9029-1 for several reasons. First, Judge Davis did not caption the Order as a "general order." Unlike other general orders issued by the United States Bankruptcy Court for the Southern District of Georgia, this Order is not denominated and numbered as such (for example, "General Order 2005-1").

Second, the Order on appeal has not been placed with the general orders on the Bankruptcy Court's website, but instead, it has been placed on the website under the heading of BAPCPA Decisions of the Southern District of Georgia (included in the attached Appendix is a copy of the website page listing the various general orders and a copy of the website page listing the various BAPCPA decisions).[2] Third, the Order has been published as a decision of the Bankruptcy Court, at 322 B.R. 66 (Bankr. S.D. Ga. 2005). Fourth, the Bankruptcy Court expressly based its authority, inter alia, on 11 U.S.C. § 526, which authorizes a court to enjoin a violation of the debt relief agency provisions of the BAPCPA[3] sua sponte. See Order at 2, n.1. In other words, the Bankruptcy Court based its authority to issue the Order on the statute being construed and not upon its authority to issue general orders. Fifth, and most importantly, the Order is clearly a ruling on an issue of substantive law, and thereby purports to decide an issue that is an improper subject for a general order.

The non-procedural nature of the Order is clear from its first paragraph, where the Court states the issue upon which it is ruling:

[2] The Bankruptcy Court's website at http://www.gas.uscourts.gov/usbc/lbr/GenOrders.htm currently lists eight general orders issued in 2005, addressing procedures in that court. They are numbered General Order 2005-1 through General Order 2005-8. The Order on appeal is not among them. The Order on appeal likewise does not appear among the general orders listed at www.gasb.uscourts.gov . Instead, the Order appears on the Bankruptcy Court's website at http://www.gas.uscourts.gov/usbc/bapcpa.html under the heading of BAPCPA Decisions of the Southern District of Georgia.

[3] Bankruptcy Abuse Prevention and Consumer Protection Act of 2005.

> The issue before the Court is whether amendments to the Bankruptcy Code, which become effective today, regulating Debt Relief Agencies apply to attorneys licensed to practice law who are members of the Bar of this Court.

Order at 1. The remainder of the Order consists of statutory construction, focusing on the language of the statutes, their legislative history, and the published commentary on the statutes. The Order concludes with the Bankruptcy Court's holding. The Order thus is not procedural in nature.

Federal rules and standing orders are not proper vehicles for a federal court's determination of substantive law. See Burlington Northern Railroad Co. v. Woods, 480 U.S. 1, 5 (1987) (stating that rules that are "procedural" satisfy constitutional standard); Adams v. Bonner, 734 F.2d 1094, 1102 (5th Cir. 1984) ("[T]he test is whether the rule will operate to abridge, enlarge, or modify the rules of decision by which the court will adjudicate the parties' rights.").

It is axiomatic that a federal court may resolve legal questions only in the context of an Article III "case" or "controversy." See McConnell v. Fed. Election Comm'n, 540 U.S. 93, 225 (2003). Absent a live controversy between adverse parties, the court's legal interpretation amounts to an advisory opinion, which is impermissible under Article III. See United States National Bank of Oregon v. Independent Insurance Agents of America, Inc., 508 U.S. 439, 446 (1993); Dixie Electric Co-op. v. Citizens of State of Alabama, 789 F.2d 852, 857 (11th Cir. 1986)

("Federal courts may not render advisory opinions on abstract or hypothetical propositions of law.").[4]

The Appellees' reliance upon the "inherent authority" of the Bankruptcy Court ignores limitations on the Bankruptcy Court's authority. The bankruptcy courts are a creation of Congress, and there is "no general grant of legislative authority to regulate the practice of law." Rodgers v. United States Steel Corp., 508 F.2d 152, 163 (3d. Cir. 1975)), certiorari denied, 423 U.S. 832 (1975) (citation omitted). Courts may, once created, have certain inherent authorities, including the inherent authority to sanction inappropriate conduct in the context of a particular case. See, e.g., Chambers v. NASCO, Inc., 501 U.S. 32, 43 (1991) (sanctioning party for bad faith litigation); Matter of Egwim, 291 B.R. 559, 581 (Bankr. N.D. Ga. 2003) (addressing sanctions of counsel for conduct in case). However, all the cases cited by the Appellees for the "inherent authority" of the Court arise, not surprisingly, within the context of a particular case or controversy.

The fact that members of the bar now seek to present arguments to this Court in this appeal, as affected parties, demonstrates the wisdom of the historic requirement that a "case or controversy" exist before a court determines an issue of substantive law. Local rules and general orders cannot impair substantive rights of any persons, whether attorneys or debtors. Sections 2072 and 2075 of title 28 specifically provide that federal rules cannot "abridge, enlarge or modify any substantive right . . . ." Indeed, such rules may not even be duplicative of such substantive law. Fed. R. Bankr. P. 9029(a)(1).

[4] "[I]t is well settled that the jurisdiction of the bankruptcy courts to hear cases related to bankruptcy is limited initially by statute and eventually by Article III." In re Lemco Gypsum, Inc., 910 F.2d 784, 787 (11th Cir. 1990). Although a bankruptcy court is not itself an Article III court, see Northern Pipeline Construction Co. v. Marathon Pipe Line Co., 458 U.S. 50, 60-61 (1982), a bankruptcy court may exercise a judicial function only as a "unit of the district court." See 11 U.S.C. § 151 ("In each judicial district, the bankruptcy judges . . . shall constitute a unit of the district court to be known as the bankruptcy court for that district."); In re Goerg, 930 F.2d 1563, 1565 (11th Cir. 1991) ("original jurisdiction over bankruptcy cases is vested in Article III courts and [] bankruptcy courts obtain jurisdiction only at the discretion of the district court"). Accordingly, bankruptcy courts are bound by the jurisdictional limitations of Article III.

Local rules and general orders which infringe on substantive rights, or which affect procedural rights under duly-prescribed federal rules of procedure, are simply invalid. See Miner v. Atlass, 363 U.S. 641 (1960) (invalidating local rule as contrary to federal admiralty rules); Brown v. Crawford County, GA, 960 F.2d 1002, 1008-09 (11th Cir. 1992) (invalidating local summary judgment rule of Middle District of Georgia because it violates the parties' procedural and substantive rights under Fed. R. Civ. P. 56); In re Standing Order With Reasons Regarding Objections to Discharge Under 11 U.S.C. § 727 and Purported Settlement of Actions, 272 B.R. 917, 923 (W.D. La. 2001) (invalidating rule that impairs creditors' substantive rights under 11 U.S.C. §§ 727 and 523, where bankruptcy court also lacked delegated authority to prescribe local rule); In re Steinacher, 283 B.R. 768, 773-74 (Bankr. 9th Cir. 2002) (invalidating a local rule that impairs debtors' substantive rights under 11 U.S.C. § 1322(b)); cf. Northland Ins. Co. v. Shell Oil Co., 930 F.Supp. 1069, 1074, 1076 (D.N.J. 1996) (describing procedure for prescribing local rules, and upholding local rule as consistent with the Federal Rules of Civil Procedure).

The Order on appeal is especially problematic because it is not even a local rule promulgated by a majority of the bankruptcy judges acting under authority delegated by the District Court. General orders issued under Fed. R. Bankr. P. 9029 do not satisfy the procedural requirements of Rule 9029(a) that local rules be issued by the entire court , acting by a majority of the judges, "after giving appropriate public notice and an opportunity for comment . . . ." See Fed. R. Bankr. P. 9029(a) (applying notice and comment requirements of Fed. R. Civ. P. 83 to all local bankruptcy rules). In sharp contrast to local rules, a single judge may issue general orders under Rule 9029(b), but such general orders cannot be the basis for "disadvantage" to a person violating the order "unless the alleged violator has been furnished in the particular case with actual notice of the requirement." By its terms, the Order on appeal addresses, and determines, the rights and obligations of attorneys under the debt relief agency statutes and, importantly, the rights of their debtor clients as well. The court below issued this Order with no official notice or opportunity for comment whatsoever.

In sum, (i) Judge Davis did not denominate the Order a general order; (ii) the Order does not serve the purpose of a general order; and (iii) the Order addresses matters that do not fall within the permissible scope of a general order. Finally, even if the Bankruptcy Court intended it to be a general order, the Order on appeal determines issues under substantive law, and therefore could not have been entered absent a case or controversy. Consequently, this Court should vacate the Order.

B. THERE IS NO MOOTNESS ISSUE PRESENTED BY THIS APPEAL, AND THUS THE ALLEGED "EXCEPTION" TO THE REQUIREMENT OF A CASE OR CONTROVERSY DOES NOT APPLY.

The Intervenors attempt to argue a limited "exception" to the case or controversy requirement at page 14, footnote 3, of their brief filed January 5, 2006. They assert that the Court should affirm the Order because attorney actions that may fall subject to the debt relief agency statutes are "capable of repetition but would otherwise evade review."

This argument fails for several reasons. First and foremost, each decision to which the Intervenors cite pertains to an actual case commenced by actual plaintiffs. See Bourgeois v. Peters, 387 F.3d 1303, 1307 (11th Cir. 2004) (plaintiffs sought injunctive relief); Irish Lesbian & Gay Org. v. Giuliani, 143 F.3d 638, 645 (2d. Cir. 1998) (plaintiffs sought injunctive relief).

Second, the court below did not invoke that exception and did not enter its order under it. Third, the "capable of repetition" standard is an exception to the mootness doctrine. A federal court cannot entertain a matter "unless an actual dispute continues to exist between the parties." Bourgeois, 387 F.3d at 1307-08. "Past injury . . . does not in itself show a present case or controversy regarding injunctive relief, if unaccompanied by current adverse effects." Id. at 1308 (quoting Lynch v. Baxley, 744 F.2d 1452, 1456 (11th Cir. 1984)). If there are no longer adverse effects from a past injury, then the court may nonetheless entertain an otherwise moot case if it arises from a situation that is "capable of repetition, yet evading review." Id.; Alabama Disabilities Advocacy Program v. J.S. Tarwater Devel., 97 F.3d 492, 496 n.1 (11th Cir. 1996).

In order to satisfy the mootness exception, there are three requirements:

> (1) the challenged action was in its duration too short to be fully litigated prior to its cessation or expiration, and (2) there was a reasonable expectation that the same complaining party would be subjected to the same action again..

Bourgeois, 387 F.3d at 1308 (quoting Weinstein v. Bradford, 423 U.S. 147, 149 (1975) (per curiam)). "As a final requirement, if there exists some alternative vehicle through which a particular policy may effectively be subject to a complete round of judicial review, then the courts will not generally employ this exception to the mootness doctrine." Id.

These requirements are not met in the present circumstances. The Order did not address any particular, concrete instance of an attorney's conduct. There was no challenged action of an attorney, whether by a debtor or the United States Trustee. No attorney sought judicial relief. There was never a case or controversy to become moot. There is no record that can support the mootness argument, because the Bankruptcy Court issued the Order on the very morning that the applicable statutes came into effect, before a case or controversy could even arise. Indeed, it is the Order itself which eliminates the opportunity for judicial review of attorney actions under the debt relief agency provisions.

C. THE ABSENCE OF A CASE OR CONTROVERSY IN THE BANKRUPTCY COURT DOES NOT PRECLUDE THE UNITED STATES TRUSTEE'S STANDING TO APPEAL THE ORDER.

Leiden & Leiden argue that the United States Trustee lacks standing to appeal the Order because of the lack of a case or controversy. Brief of Leiden & Leiden at pp. 3- 4. This Court, however, has jurisdiction to vacate the Order based on the absence of a case or controversy. Bender v. Williamsport Area School District, 475 U.S. 534, 541 (1986) (vacating lower court's decision where there was a lack of jurisdiction in that court). The United States Trustee, in turn, has standing to raise that issue based on her role as an officer of the Executive Branch.

The Supreme Court has held that a public interest may "give a sufficient stake in the outcome of a bankruptcy case to confer appellate standing." Morganstern v. Revco D.S., Inc. (In re Revco D.S., Inc.), 898 F.2d 498 (6th Cir. 1990) (citing SEC v. U.S. Realty & Imp. Co., 310 U.S.

434, 460 (1940) and Data Processing Serv. v. Camp, 397 U.S. 150, 153 (1970)). The United States Trustee’s role in behalf of such a public interest is specifically delineated in the statute at issue. See 11 U.S.C. §§ 526(c)(5) (United States Trustee may seek judicial relief for violations of the statute). The Order on appeal impairs the United States Trustee’s performance of that role, and consequently the United States Trustee’s interest in pursuing the appeal lies "within the zone of interests to be protected or regulated by the statute . . . in question." Revco D.S., Inc., 898 F.2d at 499 (quoting Data Processing Serv. v. Camp, 397 U.S. 150, 153 (1970)). The contention that the United States Trustee lacks standing is also contrary to the broad grants of authority set forth in 11 U.S.C. § 307 and 28 U.S.C. § 586. See Brief of United States Trustee as Appellant, at 1. All courts of appeals that have addressed the issue agree that a United States Trustee has standing to appeal bankruptcy court decisions. United States Trustee v. Columbia Gas Sys. Inc. (In re Columbia Gas Sys. Inc.), 33 F.3d 294, 295-299 (3d Cir. 1994) (holding U.S. Trustee has broad standing, including ability to challenge investment guidelines for chapter 11 debtor); United States Trustee v. Price Waterhouse, 19 F.3d 138, 141 (3d Cir. 1994) (finding United States Trustee has standing to appeal appointment of professionals in chapter 11 case); In re Clark, 927 F.2d 793, 795-96 (4th Cir. 1991) (finding standing to appeal denial of motion to dismiss); In re Plaza de Diego Shopping Ctr., Inc., 911 F.2d 820, 824 (1st Cir. 1990) (standing to appeal appointment of trustee); Morganstern v. Revco D.S., Inc. (In re Revco D.S., Inc.), 898 F.2d at 498 (standing to appeal decision refusing to appoint examiner). See also United States Trustee v. Fishback (In re Glados, Inc.), 83 F.3d 1360, 1361 n.1 (11th Cir. 1996) (noting United States Trustee has standing under § 307 to raise issues concerning calculation of compensation and statutory construction under § 726); St. Angelo v. Victoria Farms, Inc., 38 F.3d 1525, 1535 (9th Cir. 1994), modified, 46 F.3d 969 (1995) (holding United States Trustee had standing to bring appeal involving constitutional and statutory issues).

II. BOTH THE PLAIN LANGUAGE OF THE STATUTE AND ITS LEGISLATIVE HISTORY LEAD INESCAPABLY TO THE CONCLUSION THAT CONGRESS INTENDED TO SUBJECT BANKRUPTCY ATTORNEYS REPRESENTING CONSUMER DEBTORS TO THE "DEBT RELIEF AGENCY" REQUIREMENTS OF THE BAPCPA.

A. THE DICTIONARY DEFINITION OF "AGENCY" HAS NO BEARING ON THE MEANING OF THE TERM "DEBT RELIEF AGENCY" AS USED IN THE BAPCPA.

The Intervenors argue that the plain and ordinary meaning of "debt relief agency" excludes attorneys because "[n]one of the [dictionary] definitions of 'agency' reasonably would be understood by a consumer to suggest a lawyer or law firm." Brief of Intervenors, at 17. However, the dictionary definition of a statutory term does not govern its interpretation where the statute itself defines the term. See FDIC v. Meyer, 510 U.S. 471, 476, 114 S.Ct. 996 (1994); Smith v. United States, 508 U.S. 223, 228, 113 S.Ct. 2050, 2054 (1993). Subject to certain exclusions not applicable here, 11 U.S.C. § 101(12A) defines the term "debt relief agency" to mean, inter alia, "any person who provides any bankruptcy assistance to an assisted person in return for the payment of money or other valuable consideration … " Section 101(4A), in turn, defines "bankruptcy assistance" to include "providing legal representation with respect to a case under this title." Under these circumstances, it is the plain and ordinary meaning of "legal representation" that determines whether the term "debt relief agency" encompasses lawyers, rather than the plain and ordinary meaning of "agency." The United States Trustee submits that it is not reasonably open to dispute that bankruptcy attorneys are "person[s]" in the business of "providing legal representation with respect to" bankruptcy cases.

B. NOTWITHSTANDING A SENATOR'S PERSONAL BELIEFS ON THE ISSUE, THE LEGISLATIVE HISTORY OF THE BAPCPA ESTABLISHES BEYOND QUESTION THAT CONGRESS INTENDED THE TERM "DEBT RELIEF AGENCY" TO ENCOMPASS BANKRUPTCY ATTORNEYS.

On March 10, 2005, shortly before the Senate passed the BAPCPA in the form of S. 256, Sen. Feingold withdrew several amendments that he had proposed, including Amendment No. 93,[5] which sought to exclude lawyers from the definition of "debt relief agency." In so doing, he stated:

> Mr. President, I appreciate the fact that we have had some opportunity to make a few modest modifications at the end of this process. Obviously, I hoped for more, but I do thank [several named Senators], who are working on a number of changes and accepting a couple of amendments so we can move this process through. The result will be that the next five votes on my amendments will not be necessary, if this agreement is made. So I hope that causes the unanimous consent agreement to go through.

151 Cong.Rec. S2462-3 (March 10, 2005).

The Intervenors argue that this record does not indicate that Sen. Feingold withdrew the amendment due to lack of support but is "at least equally as consistent with an interpretation that the amendment was withdrawn because Senator Feingold decided on further reflection that it was redundant and unnecessary." Brief of Intervenors, at 21. Clearly, however, Senator Feingold introduced the amendment because he concluded, like the American Bar Association, the Federal Bar Association, and the United States Trustee in this case, that the debt relief agency provisions of the bill did apply to attorneys,[6] and he did not want them to so apply. Given his accompanying comments, the United States Trustee submits that it is highly unlikely that the Senator withdrew the amendment because he decided on further reflection that it was redundant and unnecessary.

Whatever Senator Feingold's thoughts may have been, however, the official House Judiciary Committee report on the bill makes it clear that Congress did intend for the debt relief agency provisions to apply to attorneys. "'[I]t is the official committee reports that provide the authoritative expression of legislative intent …'" In re Walton, 866 F.2d 981, 983 (8th Cir.1989), quoting Zolg v. Kelly (In re Kelly), 841 F.2d 908, 912 n. 3 (9th Cir.1988). Under the heading, "Highlights of Bankruptcy Reforms," the House Judiciary Committee report on the BAPCPA provides, as follows:

> Consumer Debtor Bankruptcy Protections. The bill's consumer protections include provisions strengthening professionalism standards for attorneys and others who assist consumer debtors with their bankruptcy cases. S. 256 mandates that certain services and specified notices be given to consumers by professionals and others who provide bankruptcy assistance. To ensure compliance with these provisions, the bill institutes various enforcement mechanisms.[7]

[6] See note 1, supra.

[7] This language from the House Judiciary Committee report also conflicts with the Intervenors' contention, on page 3 of their brief, that Congress did not intend the debt relief agency provisions to be consumer protection provisions but instead designed them to reduce the number of bankruptcy filings "by making it especially difficult for poorer debtors to get competent assistance to file a bankruptcy petition." The Court will note that this contention by the Intervenors also conflicts with their position that Congress did not intend for the debt relief agency provisions to apply to attorneys.

Congress' use of the term "professionals" in this paragraph is as revealing as its use of the term "attorneys." "Professional" is used as a term of art in the Bankruptcy Code to include attorneys, not to exclude them, and Congress is presumed to draft legislation with an understanding of existing law. See., e.g., 11 U.S.C. § 327(a) (trustee may employ "attorneys . . . or other professional persons."); 11 U.S.C. § 327(b) ("attorneys . . . or other professional persons"); 11 U.S.C. § 328 (use of professional person in this section includes attorneys employed under § 327(a)); 11 U.S.C. § 330(a) (same). Consequently, the legislative history of the BAPCPA does establish that Congress intended the statutory definition of debt relief agency to encompass attorneys.

III. THE DEBT RELIEF AGENCY PROVISIONS OF THE BAPCPA DO NOT CONFLICT WITH THE GEORGIA RULES OF PROFESSIONAL CONDUCT. EVEN IF THERE WERE SUCH A CONFLICT, THE FEDERAL STATUTE WOULD GOVERN.

The United States Trustee disagrees with the Intervenors' contention that an attorney cannot refer to him or herself as a debt relief agency without violating Rule 7.5(e) of the Georgia Rules of Professional Conduct. Rule 7.5(e) permits an attorney in private practice to use a trade name provided:

> (1) the trade name includes the name of at least one of the lawyers practicing under said name ...; and
> (2) the trade name does not imply a connection with a government entity, with a public or charitable legal services organization or [with] any other organization, association or institution or entity, unless there is, in fact, a connection.

The term "debt relief agency" as used in the BAPCPA neither refers to nor implies a connection with any existing organization, association or institution or entity. Rather, it is a generic term defined, subject to certain enumerated exclusions not applicable here, to mean "any person who provides any bankruptcy assistance to an assisted person in return for the payment of money or other valuable consideration, or who is a bankruptcy petition preparer under section 110 . . . . " 11 U.S.C. § 101(12A). Consequently, a Georgia attorney providing bankruptcy assistance to an "assisted person" would not violate Rule 7.5(e) by identifying him or herself as a debt relief agency.

The United States Trustee likewise disagrees with Leiden & Leiden's contention that the requirement of 11 U.S.C. § 527(d) that debt relief agencies retain for two years copies of the notices required by § 527(a) conflicts with the requirement of Rule 1.6 of the Georgia Rules of Professional Conduct that lawyers "maintain in confidence all information gained in the professional relationship with a client ... " A statutorily required notice to a client does not equate to "information gained in the professional relationship with a client."

If a conflict does exist between the state rule and the federal statute, however, then under the Supremacy Clause of the United States Constitution the federal statute must control.[8] The Supremacy Clause requires courts to follow federal, not state, law when Congress enacts a federal statute within the realm of its constitutional authority. Barnett Bank of Marion County, N.A. v. Nelson, 517 U.S. 25, 30 (1996). As the Supreme Court recently reiterated in Crosby v.

[8] The Supremacy Clause of the United States Constitution mandates that "the Laws of the United States . . . shall be the supreme Law of the Land; and the Judges in every State shall be bound thereby, any Thing in the Constitution or Laws of any State to the Contrary notwithstanding." U. S. Const. art. VI, § 2. Thus, under the Supremacy Clause, federal legislation can preempt state or local laws. See M'Culloch v. Maryland, 17 U. S. (4 Wheat.) 316, 327 (1819).

Nat'l Foreign Trade Counsel, 530 U.S. 363, 372-73 (2000), inconsistent state laws must yield to congressional enactments when one of two tests is met, regardless of whether Congress has inserted a clause in legislation explicitly preempting state law. First, where Congress intends federal law to occupy a given field, it preempts state law in that area. Crosby, 530 U.S. at 372-73 (citations omitted). Second, even if Congress has not entirely displaced state regulation over the matter in question, federal law still preempts state law to the extent that state law actually conflicts with federal law. Id. This occurs when it is impossible to comply with both state and federal law, or when the state law stands as an obstacle to the accomplishment of the full purposes and objectives of Congress. Id. Accord Edgar v. MITE Corp., 457 U.S. 624, 631, 102 S.Ct. 2629, 2635 (1982); Cipollone v. Liggett Group, Inc., 505 U.S. 504, 516, 112 S.Ct. 2608, 2717 (1992).

The debt relief agency provisions clearly satisfy the second test because the Bankruptcy Code supersedes state law when there is a conflict and because state law cannot stand as an obstacle to the administration of bankruptcy cases as mandated by the Bankruptcy Code. Sections 526 through 528 are part of a comprehensive and pervasive statutory scheme to address the rights and obligations of debtors, creditors, and other persons involved in bankruptcy matters. See, e.g., Sherwood Partners, Inc. v. Lycos, Inc., 394 F.3d 1198, 1201 (9th Cir. 2005) ("Bankruptcy law [preempts inconsistent state law] because it occupies a full title of the United States Code. It provides a comprehensive system of rights, obligations and procedures, as well as a complex administrative machinery that includes a special system of federal courts and United States Trustees."). Bankruptcy is particularly federal because the Bankruptcy Clause of the Constitution, U. S. Const. art. I, § 8, cl. 4, grants Congress the power [t]o establish . . . uniform Laws on the subject of Bankruptcies throughout the United States." Congress has exercised that power by enacting the Bankruptcy Code, 11 U.S.C. § 101, et seq. Attorneys are not excluded from the reach of federal bankruptcy laws. See, e.g., 11 U.S.C. § 327 (giving courts rather than debtors and trustees control over selection of counsel to represent estate); 11 U.S.C. § 328 (allowing courts to approve or disapprove conditions of employment of counsel on behalf of estate); 11 U.S.C. § 329 (allowing courts to evaluate the quality of services of debtors' attorneys even where services were provided pre-bankruptcy); 11 U.S.C. § 330 (allowing courts rather than clients to determine whether, and how much, attorneys may receive for work performed in representation of bankruptcy estate); 11 U.S.C. § 503(b)(2) (deeming certain attorneys fees eligible for payment as administrative expenses); and 11 U.S.C. § 507 (dictating the payment priority attorneys have vis-à-vis assets of the estate). Thus, sections 526 through 528 preempt Georgia law to the extent, if any, that Georgia law conflicts with them. Indeed, section 526(d)(1) expressly provides that these sections will supersede state law to the extent that they are inconsistent.[9]

>
> (1) annul, alter, affect, or exempt any person subject to such sections from complying with any law of any State except to the extent that such law is inconsistent with those sections, and then only to the extent of the inconsistency; or
> (2) be deemed to limit or curtail the authority or ability –
>
> (A) of a State or subdivision or instrumentality thereof, to determine and enforce qualifications for the practice of law under the laws of that State; or
> (B) of a Federal court to determine and enforce the qualifications for the practice

The United States Trustee submits, however, that the debt relief agency provisions of the BAPCPA do not conflict with regulations of the Georgia Bar governing the admission of attorneys to the practice of law, either in state court or federal court, and do not govern attorneys' relationships with their clients in general. Rather, the new statutes at issue in this appeal require specified disclosures by attorneys, and others, who give bankruptcy advice to debtors. But even if there were a conflict in regard to such matters as the disclosures required under these statutes, then Congress clearly crafted the legislation in such a way as to serve a bankruptcy purpose. Consequently, this Court must give the legislation supremacy.

Finally, no "conflict" issue was properly raised before the Bankruptcy Court. The Bankruptcy Court did not enter the Order in response to a challenge to Congress' authority to enact the debt relief agency provisions. Judge Davis did not determine that Congress lacked the authority to apply the debt relief agency provisions of the BAPCPA to attorneys, but instead determined sua sponte that Congress did not intend to do so. If the Intervenors determine that they wish to challenge Congress' authority to enact the provisions at issue in this appeal, they must do so in a proceeding that satisfies the "case or controversy" requirement of Article III of the United States Constitution.

CONCLUSION

For the foregoing reasons, the United States Trustee respectfully renews her request that this Court either vacate or, in the alternative, reverse the Order from which this appeal is taken.

JURISDICTIONAL STATEMENT

The United States Bankruptcy Court for the Northern District of Ohio had subject matter jurisdiction under 28 U.S.C.§ 1334 and 157(b) over Mr. Dennis Babcock's motion asking it to dissolve a bankruptcy committee the United States Trustee appointed under 11 U.S.C. § 1102(a)(1).[1] The bankruptcy court denied the motion in an oral ruling on March 28, 2006. (B.R. 9217 Transcript, pg. 10, Apx. pg. ___).[2] Mr. Babcock filed an appeal from the oral ruling on May 2, 2006. (D.R. 1 Appeal, Apx. pg. ___). The bankruptcy court reaffirmed its denial in a written order entered May 12, 2006. (B.R. 9289 Order Denying Motion, Apx. pg. __). Mr. Babcock appealed this order. (See D.R. 9 Merit Brief, Apx. pg. __). The United States District Court for the Northern District of Ohio had jurisdiction under 28 U.S.C. § 158(a) over Mr. Babcock's appeals. In an opinion and order entered March 27, 2007,

[1] Mr. Babcock was joined in the motion by James Baske, Eric Evans, and George Henning. (B.R. 9116 Motion to Dissolve, Apx. pg. __). Each is a former LTV employee sued by the bankruptcy committee under a court-authorized lawsuit for losses sustained in operating LTV. (see D.R. 9 Merits Brief, pg. 1, Apx. pg. __; B.R. 8942 Memorandum of Opinion and Order, Apx. pg. __). All four individuals jointly appealed to the district court and are appellants in the current appeal. (see D.R. 9 Merit Brief, Apx. pg. __). Each individual filed an administrative claim. (B.R. 9100-9103 Administrative Expense Claims, Apx. pg. __). This brief, for simplicity, refers to the joint appellants as "Mr. Babcock."

the district court dismissed Mr. Babcock's appeals for lack of standing. (D.R. 31 Opinion and Order, pg. 8, Apx. pg. ___). Mr. Babcock filed a timely notice of appeal to this Court on April 20, 2007. (D.R. 33 Notice of Appeal, Apx. pg. __). This Court has appellate jurisdiction under 28 U.S.C. § 158 (d)(1) over this appeal.

The bankruptcy court's orders are final because they "finally dispose[] of discrete disputes within the larger case." In re Dow Corning Corp., 86 F.2d 482, 488 (6th Cir. 1996) (holding that partial denial of motions to transfer claims was final order) (internal quotation omitted). The two orders were final because they finally adjudicated the contested matter and determined the question of the committee's right to proceed. See 1-5 Collier on Bankruptcy 5.07 [1][b] (15th ed. rev.) (each contested matter is a "discrete unit" for purposes of analyzing finality). See also In re Saco Dev. Corp., 711 F.2d 441, 445 (1st Cir. 1983)) (noting the "uninterrupted tradition of judicial interpretation in which courts have viewed a 'proceeding' within a bankruptcy case as the relevant 'judicial unit' for purposes of finality"). Cf. Tiboni v. Cleveland Trinidad Paving Co., 36 F.3d 533, 534 (6th Cir. 1994) (assuming jurisdiction without discussing finality where district court's order dismissed an action without prejudice to reopening upon motion by either party).

STATEMENT OF THE ISSUE

Did the district court clearly err in finding Mr. Babcock lacked prudential standing to appeal the bankruptcy court's order denying his motion to dissolve the committee of unsecured creditors?

STATEMENT OF THE CASE

This appeal challenges the district court's dismissal of an appeal for lack of prudential standing. The district court determined Mr. Babcock lacked prudential standing to appeal the bankruptcy court's order refusing to dissolve a bankruptcy committee in the LTV Steel bankruptcy case, because he was not a person aggrieved by the order. Because the district court dismissed on standing grounds, it did not pass upon the substantive question whether the bankruptcy court erred in denying Mr. Babcock's motion to dissolve the committee.

LTV Steel Corporation filed a voluntary chapter 11 bankruptcy petition in December 2000. In February 2003, the United States Trustee appointed the bankruptcy committee that Mr. Babcock challenged. Neither Mr. Babcock nor anyone else questioned the committee's propriety at that time. More than two years later, in April 2005, the committee filed a motion asking the bankruptcy court to allow it to sue former directors and officers of LTV Steel, including Mr. Babcock, on behalf of the LTV Steel estate. The court authorized the lawsuit in September 2005. Although he was provided notice, Mr. Babcock did not object to the committee's motion to sue him, did not appear at the hearings on the motion, and did not appeal the order authorizing the suit.

In September 2005, the committee filed a lawsuit that named Mr. Babcock and others as defendants. In February 2006, Mr. Babcock filed a motion to dissolve the committee. This was the first time that any party sought to dissolve or alter the committee. The bankruptcy court denied Mr. Babcock's motion in an oral bench ruling in March 2006. In May 2006, the bankruptcy court issued a written order reaffirming the denial. After Mr. Babcock appealed both, the district court dismissed his appeals on the ground that Mr. Babcock lacked standing to appeal. This appeal followed.

STATEMENT OF THE FACTS

I. Statutory Framework

In a chapter 11 case, "the United States trustee shall appoint a committee of creditors holding unsecured claims and may appoint additional committees of creditors or of equity security holders as the United States trustee deems appropriate." 11 U.S.C. § 1102(a)(1). A committee appointed by the United States Trustee under section 1102 may "investigate the acts, conduct, assets, liabilities, and financial condition of the debtor, the operation of the debtor's business . . . and any other matter relevant to the case." 11 U.S.C. § 1103(c)(2). In addition, a committee may perform such other services as are in the interest of those represented." Id. at (c)(5). Section 1109(b) of the Bankruptcy Code provides that "a creditors' committee . . . may raise and may appear and be heard on any issue in a case under this chapter." 11 U.S.C. § 1109(b).

Congress has authorized the Attorney General to appoint twenty-one United States Trustees, each to serve in a specific geographic region of the United States. See generally 28 U.S.C. § 581 et seq. (establishing United States Trustee Program). United States Trustees are senior Justice Department officials. Id. They "supervise the administration of cases and trustees" in all bankruptcy cases within his or her region through a range of oversight responsibilities. 28 U.S.C. § 586(a)(3). See generally Morganstern v. Revco D.S. Inc. (In re Revco D.S., Inc.), 898 F.2d 498, 500 (6th Cir 1990) (explaining United States Trustees oversee the bankruptcy process, protect the public interest, and ensure that bankruptcy cases are conducted according to law). The United States Trustee may raise and may appear and be heard on any issue in any case or proceeding under the Bankruptcy Code. 11 U.S.C. § 307; see also Revco, 898 F.2d at 499-500 (affirming the appellate standing of United States Trustees).

II. Factual Background and Proceedings Below

LTV Steel Corporation filed a voluntary chapter 11 bankruptcy petition on December 29, 2000. (See B.R. 9289 Order Denying Motion, pg. 2, Apx. pg. __). In January 2001, the United States Trustee appointed a committee of unsecured creditors. (B.R. 79 Notice of Appointment, Apx. pg. ___). That first-appointed committee participated in the bankruptcy case for more than two years. (See B.R. 5485 Notice of Disbandment, Apx. pg. __)

After more than two years of attempted reorganization, LTV concluded it could not devise a plan to reorganize as an ongoing business. For that reason, it filed a motion to liquidate its chapter 11 estate on January 15, 2003. (B.R. 5114 Motion of Debtor, Apx. pg. __). LTV informed the court that it did not have enough assets even to pay the costs associated with administering its bankruptcy case, and informed the court that no unsecured creditor would receive any compensation on any unsecured claim. Id. The court accepted LTV's proposal to liquidate its assets in chapter 11. (B.R. 5286 Order Sustaining in Part Motion of Debtor, Apx. pg. __).

In light of these developments, on February 25, 2003, the United States Trustee appointed a subsequent committee of unsecured creditors (the "committee")[3] under

[3] The committee referred to itself as the Official Committee of Administrative Claimants, using the same label as in the notice of appointment filed by the United States Trustee. (See D.R. 21 Brief of United States Trustee, pg. 7, Apx. pg. __). It is undisputed that each member of the committee was an

the power granted by 11 U.S.C. § 1102(a)(1).[4] (B.R. 5365 Notice of Appointment, Apx. pg. __). There was no opposition to the committee's formation. The committee had eleven members, each of whom held a prepetition unsecured claim. (B.R. 5374 Notice ofAmended Appointment, Apx. pg. __; B.R. 985 LTV Steel Schedule F, Apx. pg. __). In March 2003, the United States Trustee disbanded the first-formed committee. (B.R. 5485 Notice of Disbandment, Apx. pg. __).

The new committee performed a number of tasks in the LTV Steel case relating to liquidation, settlement of claims, and resolution of appeals. Specifically, the bankruptcy court authorized the committee to negotiate and agree on: 1) budgets for liquidation expenses; 2) the timing and amount of interim distributions; 3) amounts to be deposited in LTV's post-dismissal accounts; 4) the timing and amount of final distributions; and 5) modifications or amendments to any of the distribution procedures. (B.R. 9217 Transcript, pgs. 4-5, Apx. pg. __). The committee also brokered large settlements of administrative claims, including the United Steelworkers' claim. (B.R. 7493 Committee Statement, Apx. pg. __). In addition, the unsecured creditor who, in addition to this prepetition claim, held an administrative expense claim. (B.R. 9217 Transcript, pg. 6, Apx. pg. __).

[4] In a chapter 11 case, "the United States trustee shall appoint a committee of creditors holding unsecured claims and may appoint additional committees of creditors or of equity security holders as the United States trustee deems appropriate." 11 U.S.C. § 1102(a)(1).

committee obtained court authorization to settle numerous avoidance actions. (B.R. 7201 Committee Report, Apx. pg. __). It also brokered an inter-company settlement, (See B.R. 6967 Findings of Fact and Conclusions of Law, pg. 11, Apx. pg. ___) and actively participated in settling appeals related to allocation and the liquidation order. (B.R. 7071 Joint Motion, Apx. pg. __).

On April 14, 2005, the committee filed a motion for leave to commence and prosecute a lawsuit against certain LTV directors and officers, including Mr. Babcock, on behalf of the LTV bankruptcy estate. (B.R. 8704 Motion, Apx. pg. __). LTV provided Mr. Babcock with a copy of this motion. (see B.R. 9218 Transcript, pg. 13, Apx. pg. __) .

Mr. Babcock did not appear at the hearings on the motion to allow the committee to sue him. Nor did he object to the motion. Although the bankruptcy court never ruled on the issue, Mr. Babcock's counsel has subsequently suggested Mr. Babcock did not exercise these rights because he assumed LTV would adequately represent his interests. Id. at 14. No one else objected to the committee's proposed lawsuit. Some creditors filed motions supporting it. (B.R. 8942 Memorandum of Opinion and Order, pg. 47, Apx. pg. __).

On September 2, 2005, the bankruptcy court granted the committee's motion to sue Mr. Babcock. Id. The court concluded a successful lawsuit by the committee could yield a recovery of more than $100 million for the benefit of the estate. Id. at pg. 4. Because LTV projected approximately $66 million of administrative claims, such a recovery would mean $44 million of the $100 million recovery could be available for unsecured creditors who otherwise will receive nothing. (D.R. 21 Brief of Appellee United States Trustee, pg. 8, Apx. pg. __) . Mr. Babcock did not appeal the order authorizing the committee's lawsuit.

On September 13, 2005, the committee filed a complaint in United States District Court against Mr. Babcock and other defendants, alleging breach of fiduciary duties, negligence, and corporate waste. Complaint, United States District Court, Northern District of Ohio, Case No. 05-CV-2158; See Mr. Babcock's Opening Brief ("BOB") at pg. 9.

Mr. Babcock has incurred no defense costs related to the committee's lawsuit against him. (D.R. 18 Opposition to Motion to Dismiss, Ex. A., pg. 4, Apx. pg. __). Instead, his costs have been fully covered by a trust established for former LTV officers, directors, and managers.[5] Id.

[5] Mr. Baske's costs are also covered by the trust and Mr. Baske is covered by LTV Steel's Directors and Officers ("D&O") liability insurance. See Mr. Babcock's Opening Brief ("BOB"), pg. 18. Mr. Evans and Mr. Henning are covered by D&O insurance. Id. at pg. 10.

Mr. Baske, Mr. Evans, and Mr. Henning are former LTV officers. See BOB at pg. 6. Although Mr. Babcock claims that he is not a former LTV director or officer, see BOB at pg. 6, that is a question of fact not before this Court. Mr.

In early 2006, Mr. Babcock asked the bankruptcy court to grant him the status of an administrative claimant. (B.R. 9100-9103 Administrative Expense Claims, Apx. pg. __). He commenced that process by filing administrative expense claims seeking reimbursement and indemnification for his defense against the committee's complaint. Id.; See also 11 U.S.C. § 503(a). Administrative expense claims may only be allowed after notice and a hearing. See 11 U.S.C. § 503(b). The bankruptcy court has not yet ruled on Mr. Babcock's request to be deemed an administrative claimant. Nor has a hearing on his request been held. See id.

On February 9, 2006 – almost three years after the committee was appointed without any objection – Mr. Babcock filed a motion to dissolve the committee on the ground that the committee had not been properly appointed. (B.R. 9116 Motion to Dissolve, Apx. pg. __). The United States Trustee objected, as did the committee and various administrative claimants. (see B.R. 9218 Transcript, pgs. 18-19, Apx. pg. __; B.R. 9149 Objection by Committee, Apx., pg. __; B.R. 9150 Objection by Liquidity Solutions, Inc., Apx., pg. __; B.R. 9175 Objection by Hunter Corp., Apx. pg. __).

III. The Bankruptcy Court's Decision

On March 28, 2006, the bankruptcy court entered an oral ruling denying Mr.

Babcock requested coverage under LTV's D&O policy. (D.R. 18 Opposition to Motion to Dismiss, Ex. A, pg. 4, Apx. pg. __). He was initially denied coverage by the insurer. Id.

Babcock's motion to dissolve the committee. (B.R. 9217 Transcript, Apx. pg. __). The bankruptcy court found it "undisputed" that due process was met regarding the appointment of the committee because a notice of appointment had been issued to all entitled parties. Id. at pg. 5. The bankruptcy court also concluded the appointment was lawful. Id. at pgs. 5-6. The court, alternatively, ruled that law of the case doctrine and laches each barred Mr. Babcock from seeking dissolution of the committee. Id. at pg. 9.

On May 12, 2006, the bankruptcy court entered a written order reaffirming the oral ruling. (B.R. 9289 Apx. pg. __). The written order found that the committee had been "quite effective" in representing the interests of the administrative claimants and the estate generally, and that dissolution "would clearly be prejudicial to the committee, the Debtor's estate, creditors and claimants." Id. at Finding of Fact S.

Mr. Babcock appealed both the oral ruling and the written order. On June 6, 2006, the committee filed a motion to dismiss the appeals, arguing that Mr. Babcock lacked prudential standing. (D.R. 10 Motion to Dismiss, Apx. pg. __). On July 14, 2006, the United States Trustee filed an appellee brief agreeing that the appeals should be dismissed for lack of prudential standing. (D.R. 21 Brief of United States Trustee, Apx. pg. __). On September 1, 2006, the district court consolidated the appeals. (D.R. 28 Stipulation and Order to Consolidate, Apx. pg. __).

IV. The District Court's Decision

On March 27, 2007, the district court granted the committee's motion to dismiss Mr. Babcock's two appeals for lack of prudential standing. (D.R. 31 Opinion and Order, pg. 8, Apx. pg. __). The court found Mr. Babcock lacked prudential standing because was not a person aggrieved by the underlying orders, a prerequisite one must satisfy to have appellate standing in a bankruptcy case. Id. at pgs. 5-6. The court also found that bestowing appellate standing upon Mr. Babcock "would serve to encourage the filing of frivolous motions in order to confer appellate standing." Id. at pg. 6.

In dismissing Mr. Babcock's appeal, the district court specifically held that Mr. Babcock's status as a civil defendant in a lawsuit does not give him standing to appeal the denial of the motion to dissolve. Id.[6]

In dismissing the appeal, the district court found Mr. Babcock was not injured by his inability to appeal because he had "the unimpaired right and ability to raise all available defenses" against the committee's complaint in the actual case being brought against him. Id. Although Mr. Babcock claimed to suffer a financial burden in defending against the committee's complaint, the district court found that defense costs were covered by a court-approved trust established by LTV that is segregated from estate assets. Id. Finally, the court rejected Mr. Babcock's argument that the committee's complaint negatively impacted his credit, concluding that a potential inability to obtain credit in the future is “too speculative” to constitute the adverse financial effect necessary to satisfy the prudential standing parties must meet in bankruptcy appeals. Id. at pgs. 6-7.

[6] On this point, the court followed its prior decision in Moran v. Official Comm. of Admin.Claimants, No 1: 05CV2285 (N.D. Ohio Nov. 8, 2006), available at 2006 WL 3253128 (dismissing appeal by former LTV officer of bankruptcy court's September 2005 order authorizing the committee's lawsuit).

The district court also rejected Mr. Babcock's argument that he possessed “public interest” standing that overcame any lack of person aggrieved prudential standing. Id. at pg. 7. The court found that Mr. Babcock was not an individual the law recognized as “[one authorized to] safeguard[] the public interest.” Id. The court found Mr. Babcock instead “championed” only “a very private interest in derailing the litigation instituted on behalf of the LTV bankruptcy estate.” Id.

The district court next rejected Mr. Babcock’s arguments that his alleged status as a “party in interest” under 11 U.S.C. § 1109(b) conferred standing to appeal. Id. The district court held that even if Mr. Babcock was a party in interest, that was not equivalent to a person aggrieved who possessed prudential standing to appeal a bankruptcy court order. Id.

Finally, the district court found any potential harm suffered by Mr. Babcock arose not from the orders he was appealing but from the bankruptcy court’s September 2005 order authorizing the committee to commence the lawsuit. Id. The district court noted that Mr. Babcock neither opposed or appealed that order, nor did he object to the committee's motion to commence the litigation, and he did not even appear at hearings on the motion. Id. This led the district court to conclude Mr. Babcock's appeal was an "untimely, inappropriate attempt to challenge the authorization" of the committee to pursue its lawsuit against Mr. Babcock. Id. at pg. 8.

On April 20, 2007, Mr. Babcock timely appealed the district court's order dismissing his appeal. (D.R. 33 Notice of Appeal, Apx. pg. __).

SUMMARY OF ARGUMENT

1. The district court properly dismissed Mr. Babcock's appeal for lack of prudential standing. This Court and ten other circuits require parties to possess more than Article III standing to appeal a bankruptcy court order.[7] They must also possess person aggrieved prudential standing. In re Troutman Enters., Inc., 286 F.3d 359, 364 (6th Cir. 2002). This Court has ruled this sets a very high appellate bar, one that requires an appellant to establish that it has been "directly and adversely affected pecuniarily by the order." Id. (quoting Fidelity Bank, 77 F.3d at 882).

The court below ruled Mr. Babcock did not possess prudential standing, a determination this Court reviews under a clear error standard. The court below did not commit clear error by dismissing Mr. Babcock's appeal. Mr. Babcock is only a civil defendant in another case. This Court's jurisprudence supports the conclusion, and three other circuits have held, that bankruptcy court orders merely exposing parties to potential liability in other proceedings are not appealable by these parties. See Fidelity Bank, 77 F.3d at 883 (holding that an order that may subject appellants to future litigation "is remote and consequential rather than direct and immediate, and thus insufficient to confer standing").[8] The order challenged by Mr. Babcock in no way impaired his ability to defend against the actual lawsuit brought against him. Mr. Babcock is free to mount any and all challenges in that suit.

2. If this Court were to conclude the district court clearly erred in deciding Mr. Babcock lacks standing to appeal, this Court should remand to the district court for consideration of the merits of his appeal. See, e.g., In re Westwood Cmty. Two Ass'n, Inc., 293 F.3d 1332, 1338 (holding that appellant was person aggrieved, reversing district court order dismissing appeal, and remanding to district court for further proceedings); In re Clark, 927 F.2d 793, 797 (4th Cir. 1991) (holding that United States Trustee had standing to appeal dismissal of its motion, reversing decisions of district court and bankruptcy court, and remanding to district court for remand to bankruptcy court for consideration of the merits of the motion. Muskingum College, 318 F.3d 674, 676 (6th Cir. 2003) (reversing district court decision dismissing claim for lack of subject matter jurisdiction, and remanding for consideration of the merits of the claim).

3. Although Mr. Babcock specifically asks this Court to remand so the district court can consider the merits of his appeal, he also inconsistently devotes a large part of his brief to arguing multiple merits issues. This Court should not address these issues at this juncture. Should this Court reach them, they should be rejected.

STANDARD OF REVIEW

Whether an appellant has standing to appeal under the person aggrieved standard is a question of fact that the district court decides. Fidelity Bank, 77 F.3d at 882. This Court reviews that finding for clear error. Troutman Enters., 286 F.3d at 363. Clear error review is a “deferential” standard of review. United States v. Watford, 468 F.3d 891, 906 (6th Cir. 2006). Reversal is proper only if this Court has “the definite and firm conviction that a mistake has been committed.” Tran v. Gonzales, 447 F.3d 937, 943(6th Cir. 2006) (internal quotation omitted).

In reviewing a bankruptcy court's decision, this Court reviews its legal conclusions de novo. Troutman Enters., 286 F.3d at 363.

ARGUMENT

I. The district court did not commit clear error in holding that Mr. Babcock's status as a civil defendant did not give him prudential standing to appeal the bankruptcy court's order refusing to dissolve the LTV bankruptcy committee.

A. The district court did not commit clear error in deciding that Mr. Babcock is not sufficiently affected by the bankruptcy court's order to possess person aggrieved standing to appeal it.

1. The district court did not clearly err in dismissing Mr. Babcock's appeal for lack of standing because Mr. Babcock did not meet the stringent person aggrieved standard that governs bankruptcy appellate standing. As the district court explained, prudential standing in bankruptcy cases is more stringent than Article III standing. (D.R. 31 Opinion and Order, pg. 4, Apx. pg. __). See Troutman Enters., 286 F.3d at 364 ("Appellate standing in bankruptcy cases is more limited than Article III standing."). Under Article III, a party may establish standing by demonstrating that he has suffered a concrete injury-in-fact that is fairly traceable to the defendant's allegedly improper conduct and that is likely to be redressed by a favorable decision. See Fieger v. Ferry, 471 F.3d 637, 643 (6th Cir. 2006).

By contrast, a bankruptcy appellant must show more – that he is a person aggrieved. Fidelity Bank, 77 F.3d at 882. To qualify as a person aggrieved, a litigant must have "a financial stake in the bankruptcy court's order" and "must have been directly and adversely affected pecuniarily" by the challenged order. Id.

Mr. Babcock's only status in the LTV bankruptcy case is as a civil defendant being sued by the committee on behalf of the estate.[9] But this Court has indicated, as have the United States courts of appeals for the First, Third, and Ninth Circuits, that such civil defendants lack person aggrieved prudential standing to appeal orders outside the lawsuit they are defending.

2. In Fidelity Bank, for example, this Court ruled a party's status as a potential civil defendant did not give it person aggrieved standing. Id. at 882 (rejecting appellant's argument that it had standing because the order would subject it to defending future litigation). Such an order "does not impair" the ability of civil defendants "to defend themselves" in future suits, because they will retain all available defenses. Id.

[9] Mr. Babcock has sought the status of an administrative claimant, but his claim has not been approved. (B.R. 9100-9103 Administrative Expense Claims, Apx. pg. __). Even if Mr. Babcock held a bona fide administrative claim, Mr. Babcock's brief makes no argument that this helps render him a person aggrieved. Instead, Mr. Babcock argues only that his alleged status as an administrative claimant makes him a "party in interest" under 11 U.S.C. § 1109(b). BOB at pgs. 20-23.

Like the appellant who lacked prudential standing in Fidelity Bank, Mr. Babcock's status as a civil defendant is too remote to give him person aggrieved prudential standing, especially when he retains the full ability to defend himself in the lawsuit. At a minimum, the district court did not commit clear error in making that determination.

Also like the Fidelity Bank appellant, Mr. Babcock as a civil defendant must restrict himself to litigating his issues with the lawsuit within that lawsuit. There is nothing unfair in that. He is free to mount any and all challenges to the litigation against him. He can raise affirmative defenses. He can seek dismissal of the suit. He can move for summary judgment. He can appeal an adverse judgment. But he cannot shortcut that process and manufacture appellate review by moving to dissolve the plaintiff and appeal the bankruptcy court's refusal to grant that relief. See In re Monus, 63 Fed. Appx. 215 (6th Cir. 2003) (unpublished decision) (so holding).

The district court's decision here draws support from a decision of the Bankruptcy Appellate Panel of the Sixth Circuit. In re First Cincinnati, Inc., 286 B.R. 49 (6th Cir. BAP 2002) . There, the appellate panel also held that a potential civil defendant lacks person aggrieved prudential standing. Id. at 54 (holding even a bankruptcy court order authorizing litigation against a party does not give that civil defendant standing to appeal the order).

3. The district court's ruling in this case is also fully consistent with the rulings of the Third, Ninth, and Tenth Circuits, each of which ruled litigants like Mr. Babcock lack standing to challenge a bankruptcy court order, whenever such an order exposes them to liability in another proceeding. See Travelers Ins. Co. v. H.K. Porter Co., 45 F.3d 737, 743 (3d Cir. 1995) (holding that "a potential defendant in [a separate] adversary proceeding" lacks standing to appeal an order reinstating claims against debtor); In re El San Juan Hotel, 809 F.2d 151, 155-56 (1st Cir. 1987) (holding a potential civil defendant lacks prudential standing to appeal from an order granting the United States leave to sue him); In re Fondiller, 707 F.2d 441, 443 (9th Cir. 1983) (holding that appellant was not a person aggrieved as a potential civil defendant from an order appointing special counsel); see also In re Alpex Computer Corp., 71 F.3d 353, 354, 358 (10th Cir. 1995) (holding that appellant's "status as a defendant in a [separate] civil suit" did not render it a "party in interest" with standing to move to reopen a chapter 11 bankruptcy case).

The First Circuit's decision in San Juan Hotel, 809 F.2d at 151, is particularly instructive. The bankruptcy court in San Juan Hotel issued an order authorizing the United States to bring suit against a former bankruptcy trustee for breach of fiduciary duty. See id. at 153. The former trustee sought to appeal the order authorizing suit against him. See id. The First Circuit held that he lacked standing, because the bankruptcy court's order had "'no direct and immediate impact on [his] pecuniary interests,'" but only exposed him to future litigation. See id. at 155-56 (appellant's "'only demonstrable interest in the order [was] as a potential party defendant in an adversary proceeding'") (quoting Fondiller, 707 F.2d at 443). The court recognized that the "former trustee [did] have an interest in defending himself against liability, but the order in question [did] not prevent [him]" from doing that, because he could assert any claims or defenses in the separate suit. See San Juan Hotel, 809 F.2d at 155.

4. This Court's ruling in Fidelity Bank that a party's exposure to liability in another proceeding is insufficient to confer prudential standing is fully consistent with this Court's other prudential standing holdings. In re L.T. Ruth Coal Co. supports the conclusion that a civil defendant like Mr. Babcock cannot appeal an order that merely exposes him to potential liability in another proceeding. 803 F.2d 720, *3 (6th Cir. 1986) (unpublished disposition) (holding a party lacked prudential standing to appeal an order sanctioning deficiency judgment for which the party could be liable). In re Monus supports the conclusion that an order preserving a party's full rights in outside civil proceedings, as in Mr. Babcock's case, will not render the party a person aggrieved. 63 Fed. Appx. 215 (6th Cir. 2003) (unpublished decision) (holding a party lacked prudential standing to appeal a tax settlement order that allowed the party to challenge the tax assessment in separate civil proceedings).

Where this Court has recognized that an appellant had prudential standing to appeal a bankruptcy court order, it has done so where there is a far stronger interest than Mr. Babcock's stake as a civil defendant in another proceeding. This Court held that investors have standing to appeal orders approving and finalizing a plan for distributing proceeds, because they "have a clear financial stake" in the challenged orders. SEC v. Basic Energy & Affiliated Res., Inc., 273 F.3d 657, 665 (6th Cir. 2001) (applying bankruptcy person aggrieved standard in receivership case). SEC is in harmony with other circuit case law that found standing to appeal from bankruptcy court orders transferring significant estate assets. See, e.g., In re P.R.T.C. Inc., 177 F.3d 774, 779 (9th Cir. 1999) (holding that creditor is person aggrieved from order transferring the bankruptcy estates' only significant assets). Although Mr. Babcock cites P.R.T.C. to support his claim of standing, see AOB 23, the P.R.T.C. order is far different from the order that he appealed, which simply permitted a committee appointed more than three years earlier to continue operations, including prosecuting a lawsuit that the committee commenced with court approval and without appearance, objection, or appeal by Mr. Babcock.

5. The facts of this case reveal how remote and speculative Mr. Babcock's interest is in the order he appealed. Any future financial impact that Mr. Babcock may experience will not be the direct result of the order he challenges, but instead would depend on a separate judgment that might issue in his civil case. He could appeal that order. But he lacks standing to appeal this one. See Travelers, 45 F.3d at 741 (appellant lacked standing because its interest was "too remote and contingent to satisfy the standing requirement[s] of bankruptcy appeals"). Indeed, Mr. Babcock is not even incurring defense costs. These are being paid by a trust using non-estate funds, and insurance may cover any liability he ultimately incurs. (D.R. 18 Opposition to Motion to Dismiss, Ex. A., pg. 4, Apx. pg. __); supra n.5.

6. Mr. Babcock's appeal is exactly the type of appeal the person aggrieved rule is designed to prohibit. The person aggrieved standard exists to avoid unreasonable delays and promote efficiency in bankruptcy proceedings, which often involve a "myriad of parties indirectly affected by every bankruptcy court order." In re Combustion Eng'g, Inc., 391 F.3d 190, 215 (3d Cir. 2004) (internal quotation omitted); see also First Cincinnati, 286 B.R. at 51 (the person aggrieved rule "is [designed] to prevent marginally interested parties from litigating satellite issues up and down the appellant [sic] chain while the bankruptcy case stalls out and neither creditors nor debtors receive the relief intended by the Code").

Mr. Babcock's appeal is inappropriate under this standard, because he has no interest in the bankruptcy proceedings. Instead, he would delay administration of this case and drain estate resources in litigating his outside interest as a civil defendant.

Mr. Babcock's only alleged financial stake in the LTV bankruptcy estate is his self-professed administrative claim for his defense costs against the committee's suit. (B.R. 9100-9103 Administrative Expense Claims, Apx. pg. __). Moreover, the order Mr. Babcock appeals does not even affect this alleged stake: the order does not increase his burden of establishing his administrative claim or impair his rights to assert this interest. The order Mr. Babcock appealed simply permitted the committee to continue operating, as it had for more than three years without any challenge. Mr. Babcock seeks to undermine the legitimate efforts of a committee to bring value to the LTV bankruptcy estate.

7. Even assuming Mr. Babcock's potential liability in the separate civil lawsuit were somehow sufficient to confer prudential standing to appeal the order that exposed him to liability,[10] Mr. Babcock failed to appeal that order – the order authorizing the suit against him. Therefore, he cannot relitigate through this appeal after declining the earlier opportunity. The district court correctly recognized that Mr. Babcock's appeal was untimely and inappropriate given his failure to participate earlier. (D.R. 31 Opinion and Order, pg. 8, Apx. pg. __).

[10] But even that order did not require that Mr. Babcock pay any money to the LTV Steel estate, and did not adjudicate any of Mr. Babcock's rights or obligations relating to the LTV Steel bankruptcy or the separate lawsuit. (B.R. 8942 Memorandum of Opinion and Order, Apx. pg. __). Nor did it directly dispose of any bankruptcy assets in which Mr. Babcock may claim any interest. Id.

Mr. Babcock has no right here to litigate an already-decided issue for three separate and distinct reasons. First, Mr. Babcock is barred by the reasoning this Court employed in In re Pioneer Investment Servs. Co. There, a party received actual notice of a pending motion, but did not file any objection, participate in the hearing, or appeal the resulting order directly. 21 F.3d 428 at *3 (6th Cir. 1994) (unpublished decision). Instead, the party filed a Rule 60(b) motion several months after the order was issued. Id. This Court rejected this challenge to the order, holding that the party "attempts nothing other than to relitigate issues already properly decided, and to have the courts examine the substance and validity of [an] order it never bothered properly to challenge or appeal." Id. at *4.

Similar to Pioneer Investment, Mr. Babcock had notice of the proceedings leading to the order authorizing the lawsuit, but chose not to object to the committee's motion, participate in the hearing, or appeal the order directly. Instead, more than five months after the order, Mr. Babcock attempted to relitigate an issue that was already properly decided – the propriety of the committee's lawsuit against him – and to make the bankruptcy court re-examine an order he never properly challenged.

Second, collateral estoppel bars Mr. Babcock's attempt to relitigate the issue of the committee's authority to sue him, even if he would otherwise have standing to appeal the order authorizing the suit. Collateral estoppel dictates that once a court has decided an issue of fact or law necessary to its judgment, that decision may preclude relitigation of the issue in an action on a different cause of action involving a party to the first case. See In re Commonwealth Inst. Secs., Inc., 394 F.3d 401, 405 (6th Cir. 2005). Here, the bankruptcy court's order authorizing the suit necessarily decided that the committee was properly appointed. Mr. Babcock was fully apprised of the proceedings leading to the order and had a full and fair opportunity to litigate.

Finally, Mr. Babcock's failure to promptly appeal the order authorizing the lawsuit constitutes laches barring him from belatedly litigating the same issue in this appeal, even if he had prudential standing to appeal the earlier order. See Cont'l Can Co. v. Graham, 220 F.2d 420, 423 (6th Cir. 1955) ("The bankruptcy court is conducted upon principles of equity and equity will not aid those who have slept upon their rights.").

B. Mr. Babcock's general status as a "party in interest" that can participate at the bankruptcy court level is insufficient to satisfy the requirement that he also possess person aggrieved prudential standing in order to appeal bankruptcy court orders.

1. Even assuming Mr. Babcock is a "party in interest" under 11 U.S.C. § 1109(b), that status does not absolve Mr. Babcock – or the myriad of others who want to appeal bankruptcy court orders – from meeting the additional requirement that they possess person aggrieved prudential standing.[11] See, e.g., Combustion Eng'g, 391 F.3d at 217 (holding that person aggrieved standard, not party in interest standard, determines bankruptcy appellate standing); Westwood Cmty. Two, 293 F.3d at 1336-37 (holding that committee had appellate standing because it was person aggrieved, not because it appeared as party in interest in bankruptcy case); P.R.T.C., 177 F.3d at 778 ("[A] creditor has no independent standing to appeal an adverse decision regarding a violation of the automatic stay.") (internal quotation omitted) In re Am. Ready Mix, Inc., 14 F.3d 1497, 1502 (10th Cir. 1994) (rejecting argument that section 1109(b) provides standing to appeal); Kane v. Johns-Manville Corp., 843 F.2d 636, 642 (2d Cir. 1988) ("[A] party to the bankruptcy proceedings is permitted to appeal a particular order only if the order directly affects his pecuniary interests.").[12]

[11] Section 1109(b) provides that "[a] party in interest, including the debtor, the trustee, a creditors' committee, an equity security holders' committee, a creditor, an equity security holder, or any indenture trustee, may raise and may appear and be heard on any issue in a case under this chapter."

[12] A leading bankruptcy treatise discusses why this is so:

> It might be said that all creditors and the debtor are parties to every order entered in a bankruptcy proceeding. However, that does not help in determining which parties have standing to take an appeal. If such reasoning were employed, the result would be a rule that any party who is involved either directly, indirectly or tangentially in the bankruptcy proceeding has the power to appeal from almost any order entered by the bankruptcy judge.

10 Collier on Bankruptcy § 8001.05, p. 8001-11 (Lawrence P. King ed., 15th ed.

2. Nor do the cases Mr. Babcock cites support his novel argument that the circuits' rigorous prudential standing requirement evaporates whenever someone is a party in interest who can participate at the bankruptcy court level. See BOB pgs. 21-23. In In re Caldor Corp., 303 F.3d 161, 176 (2d Cir. 2002), for example, the Second Circuit held that a party had the right to intervene in adversary proceedings before the bankruptcy court. This is not akin to the right to appeal to the district court, something the Second Circuit has recognized in Johns-Manville Corp., 843 F.2d at 642 (holding "a party to the bankruptcy proceedings is permitted to appeal a particular order only if the order directly affects his pecuniary interests"). Mr. Babcock also cites Southern Pacific Transp. Co. v. Voluntary Purchasing Groups, Inc., 227 B.R. 788, 792-93 (E.D. Tex. 1998). BOB at 22. But Southern Pacific merely held that a party aggrieved had the right under section 1109(b) to be heard as an appellee in an appeal brought by another party. Id. at 793. The court conducted both analyses because it stated that it was unclear that the person aggrieved inquiry governed whether a party may be an appellee. Id. at 790. Applying Southern Pacific's reasoning, Mr. Babcock's appeal would be analyzed under the person aggrieved framework. Under this framework, he has no standing.

II. Should this Court rule that Mr. Babcock possesses prudential standing, this Court should remand so the district court can address the merits of Mr. Babcock's appeal.

If this Court were to conclude that the district clearly erred by holding that Mr. Babcock lacks standing, this Court should remand to the district court for consideration of the merits of Mr. Babcock's appeal. Because the district court dismissed on standing grounds, it did not reach any merits issues. (D.R. 31 Opinion and Order, Apx. pg. __). If the standing order were reversed, the case should be remanded to reach the merits. See Westwood Cmty Two, 293 F.3d at 1338 (holding that appellant was person aggrieved, reversing district court order dismissing appeal, and remanding to district court for further proceedings); In re Clark, 927 F.2d at 797 (holding that United States Trustee had standing to appeal dismissal of its motion, reversing decisions of district court and bankruptcy court, and remanding to district court for remand to bankruptcy court for consideration of the merits of the motion); see also Muskingum College, 318 F.3d at 676 (reversing district court decision dismissing claim for lack of subject matter jurisdiction, and remanding for consideration of the merits of the claim); Smith v. City of Cleveland Heights, 760 F.2d 720, 724-25 (6th Cir. 1985) (holding that appellant had standing, reversing judgment of the district court dismissing action, and remanding for further proceedings on the merits).

III. Mr. Babcock's merits arguments are inappropriate and unpersuasive.

Although Mr. Babcock himself asks that this Court remand so the district court can consider the merits of his appeal, See BOB at pg. 40, he inconsistently presses arguments before this Court spanning ten pages of his brief. Because Mr. Babcock briefs two merits issues in his opening brief, the United States Trustee briefly responds in the event the Court should choose to address them.

A. Mr. Babcock's Due Process Argument Lacks Merit.

Mr. Babcock contends the committee's appointment violated due process, because it was formed to sue on behalf of administrative claimants without a finding as to its adequacy of representation. See BOB at pg. 4. This argument is both legally incorrect and factually inaccurate.

As the Supreme Court has noted, representative litigation commenced for the benefit of the bankruptcy estate is separate from that governed by Rule 23. "[R]epresentative damages litigation is common – from class actions under Fed.R.Civ.P. 23(b)(3) to suits by trustees representing hundreds of creditors in bankruptcy to parens patriae actions by state governments to litigation by and against executors of decedents' estates." United Food and Commercial Workers Union Local 751 v. Brown Group, Inc., 517 U.S. 544, 557 (1996) (quoting with approval In re Oil Spill by the Amoco Cadiz Off the Coast of France on Mar. 16, 1978, 954 F.2d 1279, 1319 (7th Cir. 1992) (per curiam)). See also Glanton ex rel. ALCOA Prescription Drug Plan v. AdvancePCS Inc., 465 F.3d 1123, 1126 (9th Cir. 2006) ("Trustees and executors . . . have a stake in the litigation because they are acting on behalf of the estate, which owns the claims being litigated.").

The law permits representative lawsuits in a wide variety of contexts that render Federal Rule of Civil Procedure 23 inapplicable, and this lawsuit is no exception. It is an action on behalf of the LTV Steel bankruptcy estate, rather than a class action. Here, the committee had a proper stake in the litigation because it was acting with court-approved standing on behalf of the LTV Steel estate, which owns the claims being litigated. A successful lawsuit could bring millions of dollars to unsecured creditors and to administrative claimants.

Mr. Babcock's argument would absurdly require that corporations and trustees suing on behalf of the bankruptcy estate go through class-action certification procedures. As debtor-in-possession, LTV Steel had broad powers including the statutory authority to sue as the representative of the estate. See 11 U.S.C. § 1107(a), 11 U.S.C. § 323(a),(b); Commodity Futures Trading Com'n v. Weintraub, 471 U.S. 343, 352 (1986). See also In re Senior Cottages of America, LLC, 482 F.3d 997 (8th Cir. 2007) (holding that bankruptcy trustee may sue on behalf of debtor corporation against corporate principals for breach of fiduciary duty, because these claims could have been asserted by the debtor corporation).[13]

In this circuit, a creditor may file suit with court approval on behalf of the bankruptcy estate in a chapter 11 case. In re Gibson, 66 F.3d 1436 (6th Cir. 1995). Relying on this Court's precedential ruling in Gibson, the bankruptcy court unsurprisingly held the LTV committee similarly had standing to proceed on behalf of the estate, given LTV Steel's refusal to assert its claim. (B.R. 8942 Memorandum of Opinion and Order, pgs. 46-47, Apx. pg. __). See also Official Comm. of Unsecured Creditors of Cybergenics Corp. ex rel. Cybergenic Corp. v. Chinery, 330 F.3d 548, 580 (3d Cir. 2003) (en banc) (holding that in chapter 11 case bankruptcy court may grant standing to a creditors' committee to pursue claims on behalf of the bankruptcy estate, when the debtor neglects this duty).

The sole authority Mr. Babcock cites for his constitutional argument, Hansberry v. Lee, does not support it. See BOB at pgs. 32-33. In Hansberry, the Supreme Court held that a state court had impermissibly judged a party bound by another's court judgment in an earlier litigation to which it was not a party. 311 U.S. 32 (1940). In contrast to Hansberry, here there has been no adjudication of the rights of Mr. Babcock, and all of the bankruptcy court's actions were preceded by notice and opportunity to be heard. See Hansberry, 311 U.S. at 40.

[13] Under Mr. Babcock's reasoning, state agencies would inexplicably have to be class-certified for participating in bankruptcy proceedings under consumer protection acts. But case law already holds that Rule 23 is not applicable to state agencies suing in bankruptcy proceedings, because the state has its own sufficient interest in ensuring consumer protection. See In re Edmond, 934 F.2d 1304, 1313 (4th Cir. 1991).

Nor has Mr. Babcock identified how the existence of the committee – or the authorization of the lawsuit – is actually unfair to the interests of absent parties. In the lawsuit against him, Mr. Babcock is in no way bound by the bankruptcy court's actions. He can raise all claims and defenses, including that the committee is an improper plaintiff. Mr. Babcock's desire to dissolve the committee simply stems from his desire to avoid having a lawsuit to defend. If judgment is entered against him, he can appeal that judgment. This is not an issue of constitutional import.

Factually, Mr. Babcock miscasts the committee's appointment as being for the purpose of bringing the lawsuit. Mr. Babcock questions "whether the appointment of an official committee of administrative claimants to pursue a derivative action" violated due process. BOB at pg. 4. The committee, in fact, existed for more than two years before it requested any authorization to sue. (see B.R. 5365 Notice of Appointment, Apx pg. __; B.R. 8704 Motion, Apx. pg. __). In that time, the committee undertook an array of actions that brought assets to the LTV Steel estate and enabled proper administration of the case, as credited by the bankruptcy court below. (B.R. 9289 Order Denying Motion, Conclusion of Law S, Apx. pg. __). The committee performed wide-ranging duties relating to liquidation, claim settlement, and appeals resolution. (B.R. 9217 Transcript, pgs. 4-5, Apx. pg. __; B.R. 7493 Committee Statement, Apx. pg. __; B.R. 7201 Committee Report, Apx. pg. __; B.R. 6967 Findings of Fact and Conclusions of Law, pg. 11, Apx. pg. __; B.R. 7071 Joint Motion, Apx. pg. __). The committee only sued on behalf of the bankruptcy estate after LTV Steel refused to bring the action itself, a refusal the bankruptcy court concluded was unjustifiable. (B.R. 8942 Memorandum of Opinion and Order, pgs. 47-48, Apx. pg. __).

Mr. Babcock also erroneously suggests that the lawsuit is a shareholder derivative lawsuit. BOB at pg. 31. The lawsuit is not a shareholder derivative action; quite simply, the committee does not include LTV shareholders or members of an association. See Fed. R. Civ. P. 23.1; Fed. R. Bankr. P. 7023.1. Instead, the suit was brought by creditors of the LTV bankruptcy estate, acting for the benefit of the LTV bankruptcy estate. (see B.R. 8942 Memorandum of Opinion and Order, pg. 1, Apx. pg. __). The standing that the committee has under this Court's holding in Gibson may be "derivative" in that the committee is standing in the shoes of LTV Steel, but it is fundamentally different from a shareholder derivative suit.

Finally, the United States Trustee is aware of no case law, and Mr. Babcock cites none, where person aggrieved standing is waived for reasons of public policy or any other purpose. But Mr. Babcock asks this Court to waive person aggrieved standing rules and order the district court to review the merits of his appeal, because he is "entitled" to a "day in court." BOB at pg. 40. Granting this request would be unwise. Person aggrieved prudential standing is a doctrine that must be applied neutrally if it is to have integrity. Case-by-case exceptions will only engender confusion and destroy the predictability the doctrine exists to provide.

B. Mr. Babcock's statutory argument lacks merit.

Mr. Babcock devotes seven pages of his brief to his argument that the committee's formation constituted a violation of 11 U.S.C. § 1102 because the United States Trustee exceeded its authority in appointing a committee to represent the interests of administrative claimants. See BOB at pgs. 33-39.

First, this is a remand issue. Second, this argument lacks merit. A committee whose members are all creditors holding unsecured claims is, by definition, a lawful committee under section 1102(a)(1). See 11 U.S.C. § 1102(a)(1) ("[T]he United States trustee shall appoint a committee of creditors holding unsecured claims . . ."). Here, each member of the committee was a creditor holding an unsecured claim. (B.R. 5374 Notice ofAmended Appointment, Apx. pg. __; B.R. 985 LTV Steel Schedule F, Apx. pg. __). The Bankruptcy Code does not prohibit a committee of creditors holding unsecured claims who also hold administrative claims. (D.R. 21 Brief of United States Trustee, pgs. 14-15, Apx. pg. __). For these reasons, the bankruptcy court expressly rejected Mr. Babcock's statutory argument and held the appointment valid in all respects. (B.R. 9289 Order Denying Motion, Conclusion of Law 10, Apx. pg. __).

CONCLUSION

For these reasons, the United States Trustee respectfully asks this Court to affirm the district court's order dismissing Mr. Babcock's appeal for lack of prudential standing. Should this Court decide Mr. Babcock possesses prudential standing, it should remand to the district court for consideration of the merits of Mr. Babcock's appeal.

Respectfully submitted,

II. JURISDICTIONAL STATEMENT

By order dated April 26, 2006, the bankruptcy court denied all compensation and substantially all expenses sought by Cohen, Estis & Associates, LLP as counsel to the Chapter 11 debtors prior to the conversion of the cases to Chapter 7. By Memorandum Decision dated July 7, 2006, the bankruptcy court denied the April 28, 2006 motion for reconsideration, and entered an order on July 10, 2006 sustaining the April 26, 2006 order. In addition to denying all compensation and substantially all expenses, the bankruptcy court ordered the retainer disgorged and delivered to the Chapter 7 trustee to hold subject to further determination by the bankruptcy court in connection with the Chapter 7 trustee's adversary proceeding. Cohen, Estis & Associates, LLP timely filed a notice of appeal on July 14, 2006. This Court has jurisdiction over the final order denying fees and expenses pursuant to 28 U.S.C. § 158(a)(1).[1] See, e.g. In re Ames Department Stores, Inc., 76 F.3d 66 (2d Cir. 1996)(noting that the appeal was from a final order denying fees); See also In re Palm Coast Matanza Shores Limited Partnership, 101 F.3rd 253, 256 (2d Cir. 1996)(in context of retention of counsel, setting forth a broad, flexible finality standard in bankruptcy cases, and noting that " '[O]rders in bankruptcy cases may be immediately appealed if they finally dispose of discrete disputes within the larger case.' (Citations omitted); In re Bethlehem Steel Corporation, 2003 WL 21738964 (S.D.N.Y. 2003)(part of order disposing of fee application was final, part addressing success fee which was subject to further review was interlocutory).

[1] The United States Trustee only appeared in connection with the fee application of Cohen, Estis & Associates, LLP. The order directing the turnover of the retainer to the Chapter 7 trustee to hold pending a final determination of the Chapter 7 trustee's adversary proceeding appears to be interlocutory, requiring leave of this Court to appeal under 28 U.S.C. § 158(a)(3). See In re Bethlehem Steel Corporation, 2003 WL 21738964 (S.D.N.Y. 2003)(part of order addressing success fee which required additional future review was interlocutory because it did not finally determine matter.

III. STATEMENT OF ISSUE PRESENTED

Did the bankruptcy court err by denying all compensation and substantially all expenses to Cohen, Estis & Associates, LLP?

IV. STANDARD OF REVIEW ON APPEAL

A bankruptcy court has broad discretion in determining applications for compensation. See In re Nine Associates, Inc., 76 B.R. 943, 944 (S.D.N.Y. 1987). Federal Rule of Bankruptcy Procedure 8013 provides that findings of fact, whether based upon oral or documentary evidence, shall not be set aside unless clearly erroneous. The bankruptcy court's findings of fact are subject to a clearly erroneous standard of review; its legal conclusions are reviewed de novo; and its decisions to award or deny fees are subject to an abuse of discretion standard. See In re United Merchants and Mfrs., Inc., 1999 WL 4929 (S.D.N.Y. 1999); In re JLM, Inc., 210 B.R. 19, 23 (2d Cir. BAP 1997).

As set forth in further detail below, the factual bases for the bankruptcy court's denial of fees were virtually undisputed, and are not clearly erroneous. The standard of review on appeal, therefore, is whether the bankruptcy court abused its broad discretion in denying compensation based upon those facts.

V. STATEMENT OF THE CASE

The law firm representing the Chapter 11 debtors prior to the conversion of the cases to Chapter 7, Cohen, Estis & Associates, LLP ("CEA"), filed this appeal from the bankruptcy court's July 10, 2006 order sustaining on reconsideration its April 26, 2006 order denying all compensation and denying reimbursement of substantially all expenses.

The United States Trustee, the Chapter 7 Trustee and a creditor had argued below that CEA's multiple untimely and incomplete disclosures required by Federal Rules of Bankruptcy Procedure 2014(a) and 2016(b) and the firm's lack of disinterest under 11 U.S.C. §§ 328(c), 327(a) and 101(14) should result in a denial of compensation. CEA asserts that the bankruptcy court should have held an evidentiary hearing on its fee application, and that it abused its discretion in denying all compensation.[2] and 2016. The bankruptcy court denied all compensation and substantially all expenses based upon its conclusion that CEA had made untimely and inaccurate disclosures of its connections to parties-in-interest, and that it was not disinterested as required by 11 U.S.C. §§ 327(a) and 101(14). The bankruptcy court also directed the turnover of the retainer received by CEA to the Chapter 7 trustee pending an evidentiary hearing on the ownership of the funds. On July 10, 2006, the bankruptcy court entered an order implementing the terms of its Memorandum Decision, and CEA timely appealed to this Court.

In its July 7, 2006 Memorandum Decision, the bankruptcy court extensively reviewed CEA's disclosures required by 11 U.S.C. § 329(a) and Federal Rules of Bankruptcy Procedure 2014

[2] It also asserts that the bankruptcy court did not have jurisdiction to order the turnover of the retainer to the trustee pending a resolution of the Chapter 7 trustee's adversary proceeding.

VI. FACTS

A. Procedural Background

Balco Equities, Ltd., Haddon Holdings, Ltd. and Sarah Enterprises International, Ltd. filed separate voluntary petitions under Chapter 11 of the United States Bankruptcy Code on March 31, 2004. (BR at 1 - Voluntary Petition; HR at 1 - Voluntary Petition; SR at 1 - Voluntary Petition)[3]. The cases were jointly administered pursuant to an order entered on April 8, 2004. (BR at 14, HR at 5; SR at 5 - Order Granting Motion for Joint Administration). By order dated April 8, 2004, the Court approved the retention of Cohen, Estis & Associates, LLP ("CEA") as counsel to the debtors-in-possession. (BR at 16 - Order Authorizing Retention). By order dated December 14, 2004, the cases were converted to cases under Chapter 7, and Paul L. Banner was appointed trustee. (BR at 248; HR at 22; SR at 22 - Order Granting Motion to Convert Cases to Chapter 7; BR at 247 - Notice of Appointment of Chapter 7 Trustee). CEA filed a fee application dated November 11, 2005 seeking compensation and reimbursement of expenses as counsel to the superceded debtors-in-possession. (BR at 314 - Application for Compensation). The United States Trustee, the Chapter 7 trustee and creditor Epic Orange LLC filed objections to the application, alleging, inter alia, CEA's failure to make appropriate and timely disclosures pursuant to FRBP 2014(a) and 2016(b) and lack of disinterest under 11 U.S.C. §§ 328(c), 327(a) and 101(14). (BR at 319, 320 and 322 - Objections to Fee Application). The Chapter 7 trustee had also commenced an adversary proceeding seeking the return to the estate of the retainer paid to CEA. (BR at 311 - Notice of Complaint, Adversary 05-9045).

At an initial hearing on the fee application held on February 21, 2006[4], the bankruptcy court declined to schedule an evidentiary hearing, but provided CEA with the opportunity to file an affidavit setting forth any matters it wished the Court to consider in making a determination on the fee application. (February 21, 2006 Transcript at pp.7-10). CEA availed itself of that opportunity, filing a March 17, 2006 affidavit of Ronald Cohen in a supplemental statement in further support of its fee application on March 20, 2006 (BR. at 325 - Supplemental Statement and Affidavit), and filed a response to the trustee's reply memorandum on March 31, 2006. (BR. at 328 - Response).

After another hearing held on April 11, 2006, the Court orally rendered a decision denying all fees, and all expenses except the three filing fees. (April 11, 2006 Transcript at pp. 27-37). The Court also directed the disgorgement to the Chapter 7 trustee of all fees paid, subject to all parties rights in the adversary proceeding commenced by the trustee. The Court has not yet determined the ultimate disposition of those funds, which is the subject of the adversary proceeding. A written order reflecting the Court's oral decision was entered on April 26, 2006. (BR at 329 - Order).

On April 28, 2006, CEA filed a motion for reconsideration of the bankruptcy court's April 26, 2006 order, attaching the affidavit of a CEA partner, Deborah Weisman-Estis, Esq. and that of Mr. Cohen's physician. (BR at 330 and 331 - Motion to Reconsider and Affidavit). The United States Trustee and the Chapter 7 trustee filed objections to the motion (BR at 333 and 335 - Objections to Motion for Reconsideration), and CEA filed a written response (BR. at 334 - Response). By Memorandum Decision dated July 7, 2006, the bankruptcy court denied the April 28, 2006 motion for reconsideration (BR. at 338 - Memorandum Decision), and entered an order on July 10, 2006 sustaining the April 26, 2006 order. (BR. at 339 - Order Sustaining April 26, 2006 Order). In addition to denying all compensation and substantially all expenses, the bankruptcy court ordered the retainer disgorged and delivered to the Chapter 7 trustee to hold subject to further determination by the bankruptcy court in connection with the Chapter 7 trustee's adversary proceeding. Cohen, Estis & Associates, LLP timely filed a notice of appeal on July 14, 2006. (BR. at 329 - April 26, 2006 Order; BR. at 339 - Order Sustaining April 26, 2006 Order).

B. CEA's Disclosures of Connections to Parties-in-Interest

By application filed on April 8, 2004, the debtors-in-possession sought Court approval pursuant to 11 U.S.C. § 327(a) of the retention of Cohen, Estis & Associates, LLP ("CEA") as their counsel. (BR. at 10 - Application for Retention of Cohen, Estis & Associates, LLP). The application was supported by the April 7, 2004 affidavit pursuant to Federal Rule of Bankruptcy Procedure ("FRBP") 2014(a) of Ronald J. Cohen, Esq. (BR. at 10 - Affidavit), which, inter alia, contained the following statements:

> 3. CEA utilizes a number of procedures (the "Firm Procedures") to determine its relationships, if any, to parties that may have connections to a client debtor. In implementing such Firm Procedures, the following actions were taken to identify parties that may have connections to the Debtors and CEA's relationship with such parties:
> a) CEA requested and obtained from the Debtors a list of interested parties and significant creditors (the "Potential Parties-In-Interest"), which has been revised and supplemented from time-to-time. The Potential Parties-In-Interest include equityholders, officers, directors and major trade creditors.
>
> b) CEA compared each of the Potential Parties-In-Interest to the names in its master database of current and former clients (the "Client Database"). The Client Database generally includes the name of each client, the name of the parties that are or were adverse to such client with regard to the subject of CEA's retention, and the names of the CEA personnel who are or were primarily responsible for matters for such clients.
>
> c) A conflicts check was issued and an investigation performed to determine whether there were any connections between CEA and any of the Potential Parties-in-Interest as such connection may relate to the Debtors.
>
> d) Known connections between CEA and Potential Parties-In-Interest were compiled for purposes of preparing this Affidavit.
>
> 4. As a result of the foregoing procedures, I have ascertained that, upon information and belief, CEA has no connections with the Debtors and the Potential Parties-In-Interest except as follows:
> (a) Because of its broad-based general practice, CEA has appeared in the past and may appear in the future in cases unrelated to this chapter 11 case where one or more of the Potential Parties-In-Interest may be involved

> (b) Prior to the Petition Date, CEA represented certain of the Debtors with respect to providing counsel for certain transactions, and has also provided general restructuring advice and provided legal counsel with respect to organizing and preparing for the filing of these cases.
> (c) CEA has not represented any Potential Parties-In-Interest.
>
> (d) Certain members of CEA and certain associates of and "of counsel" attorneys to CEA, and certain of such persons' relatives may have familial or personal relationships with officers, directors and/or shareholders of creditors of the Debtors, competitors of the Debtors and/or other parties in interest in these cases. As of the date hereof, CEA is not aware of any such relationships.
>
> (e) Certain members of CEA and certain of the associates of and "of counsel" attorneys to CEA, and certain of such persons' relatives, may directly or indirectly be shareholders of creditors of the Debtors, competitors of the Debtors and/or other parties in interest. As of the date hereof, CEA is not aware of any such relationships.
>
> (f) Certain members of CEA and certain of the associates and "of counsel" attorneys to CEA, and certain of their relatives, may have business, contractual, economic, familial or personal relationships with creditors of the Debtors and/or other parties in interest or such entities' respective officers, directors or shareholders. As of the date hereof, CEA is not aware of any such relationships.

By order dated April 8, 2004, the Court approved the retention of CEA as counsel to the debtors-in-possession. (BR. at 16 - Retention Order).

CEA filed three subsequent amended FRBP 2014(a) affidavits. The first one, dated May 12, 2004 and signed by Andrew Wulfman, Esq., who at the time was an associate of CEA, clarified prior general statements by disclosing the pre-petition representation of Balco Equities, Ltd. ("Balco") with respect to the Epic Orange real estate transaction. (BR. at 85 - Supplemental Affidavit).

The next amended FRBP 2014(a) affidavit was dated July 29, 2004 and signed by Ronald J. Cohen, Esq., and disclosed, in response to an issue raised by Epic Orange, Mr. Cohen’s prior representation of a proposed purchaser of real property owned by Balco. (BR. at 171 - Affidavit Pursuant to FRBP 2014).

The last amended FRBP 2014(a) statement was dated December 8, 2004, just days prior to the return date of the United States Trustee’s motion to convert or dismiss the Chapter 11 cases. (BR. at 241 - Second Supplemental Affidavit). It disclosed for the first time that CEA had represented a major creditor of Haddon Holdings, Ltd. ("Haddon"), the Estate of Frederick J. Warmers. The Warmers Family Trust is listed in amended schedules filed in Haddon on May 18, 2004 as having a claim of $1,266,080.00. (HR at 11 - Amended Schedules). The affidavit described the connection to the Frederick J. Warmers Estate as follows:

> 7. The Estate of Frederick J. Warmers (the “Warmers Estate”), is a creditor of Haddon Holdings, Ltd., (Case No. 04-35778), as set forth on amended schedules filed on behalf of the debtor on May 3, 2004. Frederic J. Warmers died December 30, 1998.
> 8. Donald P. Boehm, served as Executor of the Warmers Estate from May 20, 1999 to October, 2003 pursuant to testamentary letters issued by the Surrogates Court, Orange County.

9. On information and belief, between 1999 and early 2003, the Warmers Estate was represented by a law firm located in Newburgh, New York that continued to serve as counsel to the Warmers Estate until in or about early 2003. At about that time, the principal of that law firm retired and relocated to the State of Florida, retaining all the legal files pertaining to the administration of the Warmers Estate.

10. On information and belief, approximately concurrent with the retirement of the principal of that firm, a beneficiary of the Warmers Estate brought an application to compel an interim accounting by the Executor.

11. CEA was retained on behalf of the Warmers Estate on March 23, 2003 for the specific purpose of securing the pertinent information relating to the prior administration of the Warmers Estate and facilitating the submission of an accounting with respect to such periods.

12. As a result of subsequent proceedings in the Surrogate's Court, in or about October, 2003, Mr. Boehm was removed as Executor and a successor executrix was appointed. At that time, the successor executrix retained separate counsel to represent the Warmers Estate.

13. Notwithstanding the retention of separate counsel by the Warmers Estate, CEA continued to provide services in connection with the submission of a "final" accounting with respect to the prior administration of the Warmers Estate.

14. On March 8th, 2004, this firm filed an amended final accounting (the > "Accounting"), with the Surrogate's Court.

>
> 15. After the commencement of these bankruptcy cases, CEA was called on to provide additional legal services supplemental to the submission of the Accounting, in proceedings before the Surrogate's Court. Those proceedings remain outstanding at this time.
> 16. The Firm has applied to the Surrogate's Court for an reimbursement of counsel fees incurred on behalf of the Warmers Estate. As of August 11, 2004, the fees and expenses sought to be awarded to the Firm total approximately $28,000.00.

This disclosure indicates that CEA was rendering services to a major creditor of Haddon until a month prior to the bankruptcy petitions being filed, continued to render services after the filing of the case, and was seeking payment from the Surrogates Court for its services, yet never disclosed the representation to the bankruptcy court in three prior FRBP 2014(a) affidavits.

The affidavit also indicated that CEA had represented Donald Boehm, the debtors' principal, and various other entities in which Mr. Boehm had an interest or served in a fiduciary capacity. These connections were described as follows:

> 24. Based on that review, I determined that CEA has represented and/or does presently represent certain third parties who are "parties-in-interest" or "related" to parties in interest in connection with certain transactions and/or legal proceedings which are completely unrelated to these bankruptcy proceedings. In particular, in addition to the matter of the Warmers Estate, CEA has represented Mr. Boehm and/or entities > in which Mr. Boehm was, or is a principal with respect to transactions and/or legal proceedings that, to the best of my knowledge, do not implicate any aspect of these bankruptcy cases. These include the following matters:

> (a) Representation of the Tessie Warmers Trust in connection with the sale of certain real estate holdings;
>
> (b) Representation of, LMAD, Inc., (General Partner of Senlar Associates, NY General Partnership), Connelly Industries, Inc., and Donald Boehm, individually, in the case DeBrizzi, et al., vs. Senlar Associates, et als., Index No. 5854/99, State Of New York Supreme Court, Orange County;

C. CEA's FRBP 2016(b) Statements and Other Fee Disclosures.

CEA filed a total of four FRBP 2016(b) statements in the three cases:

(a) A statement in Balco dated May 3, 2004, signed by Ronald J. Cohen reflecting an agreement to accept $45,000.00, actual receipt of $3,000.00, and a balance due of $42,000.00, received from "Nancy Cook, Cook Family Trust, Donald Boehm." (BR. at 59 - Schedules containing 2016(b) Statement)

(b) An amended statement in Balco dated May 11, 2004, signed by Ronald J. Cohen reflecting an agreement to accept $45,000.00, actual receipt of $45,000.00, and a balance due of $0.00, received from "Donald Boehm; payment was received April 29, 2004." (BR. at 84 - Updated Rule 2016 Statement).

(c) A statement in Haddon dated May 3, 2004, signed by Andrew S. Wulfman reflecting an agreement to accept $0.00, actual receipt of $0.00 and a balance due of $0.00. (HR at 11 - Schedules containing 2016(b) Statement).

(d) A statement in Sarah dated May 3, 2004, signed by Andrew S. Wulfman reflecting an agreement to accept $0.00, actual receipt of $0.00 and a balance due of $0.00. (SR at 11 - Schedules containing 2016(b) Statement)

The application for retention prepared by CEA, and signed by Nancy Cook, Balco and Haddon’s president, indicates that "CEA received prepetition retainers in the collective amount of $3,000, for preparation for the bankruptcy filing and postpetition fees, and it intends to apply to the Court for postpetition fees and expenses." (BR at 10 - Application for Retention).

The fee application, at paragraph 37 indicates that the > "...sum of $3,000.00 was paid in two checks issued by Balco Equities, Ltd., Inc., dated on or about March 31, 2004. Of the sum of $3,000.00 which was paid on March 31, 2004, the sum of $2,517.00 was applied to filing fees for the three cases and the remaining balance of $483 was applied to the legal fee. We believe that this fee was earned by us prepetition for the work we did prior to the filing late in the day on March 31st. (Our computer records show that an additional sum of $3,000.00 was paid/credited to this file > #00008269 in our computer system but upon good faith and diligent investigation we believe that this sum has been misapplied by bookkeeper mistake). The balance of the retainer payments we received in the sum of $42,000.00 was applied to legal fees."

(BR. at 314 - Fee Application).

CEA has never disputed that it filed these statements, which constituted a central part of the record considered by the bankruptcy court.[5] (BR at 338 - Memorandum Decision, pp. 17-26)

VII. ARGUMENT

A. CEA's Failure to Make Full and Timely Disclosure Under Federal Rule of Bankruptcy Procedure 2014(a) Justified the Bankruptcy Court's Denial of all Compensation.

Federal Rule of Bankruptcy Procedure ("FRBP") 2014(a) provides:

> (a) Application for and Order of Employment. An order approving the employment of attorneys, accountants, appraisers, auctioneers, agents, or other professionals pursuant to § 327, § 1103, or § 1114 of the Code shall be made only on application of the trustee or committee. The application shall be filed and, unless the case is a chapter 9 municipality case, a copy of the application shall be transmitted by the applicant to the United States trustee. The application shall > state the specific facts showing the necessity for the employment, the name of the person to be employed, the reasons for the selection, the professional services to be rendered, any proposed arrangement for compensation, and, to the best of the applicant's knowledge, all of the person's connections with the debtor, creditors, any other party in interest, their respective attorneys and accountants, the United States trustee, or any person employed in the office of the United States trustee. The application shall be accompanied by a verified statement of the person to be employed setting forth the person's connections with [the specified parties]. (emphasis added.)

It is patently clear that CEA had an obligation to disclose all connections to parties-in-interest in existence at the time of the filing of the retention application. It failed to meet this responsibility.

All professionals appointed pursuant to 11 U.S.C. § 327 or § 1103 have a continuing obligation to disclose their connections to parties-in-interest. The obligation to disclose facts relevant to disinterest continues throughout the case. See, In re Bennett Funding Group, Inc., 226 B.R. 331, 334 (Bankr. N.D.N.Y. 1998); In re Granite Partners, L.P., 219 B.R. 22 (Bankr. S.D.N.Y. 1998); In re Tinley Plaza Associates, L.P., 142 B.R. 272, 278 (Bankr. N.D. Ill., Eastern Division, 1992). Disclosure after more than seven months denies all concerned a reasonable opportunity to properly assess applicant's eligibility to be retained prior to the entry of an order authorizing the retention.

> "Absent the spontaneous, timely and complete disclosure required by section 327(a) and Fed.R.Bankr.P. 2014(a), court appointed counsel proceed at their own risk." Rome v. Braunstein, 19 F.3d 54, 59 (1st Cir. 1994), citing In re Roger J. Au & Son, Inc., 71 B.R. 238, 242 (Bankr. N.D. Ohio 1986)("failure to disclose facts material to potential conflict may provide totally independent ground for denial of fees, quite apart from the actual representation of competing interests.")(Remaining citations omitted)(Italics in original).

See also In re the Leslie Fay Companies, Inc., 175 B.R. 525, 533 (Bankr. S.D.N.Y. 1994) citing Futuronics Corp. v. Arutt, Nachamie & Benjamin (In re Futuronics Corp.), 655 F.2d 463, 469 (2d Cir.1981); Matter of Arlan's Department Stores, Inc., 615 F.2d 925, 933 (2d Cir. 1979)(decided under substantially similar predecessor to FRBP 2014); Rome v. Braunstein, 19 F.3d 54, 59 (1st Cir. 1994); In re Granite Sheet Metal Works, Inc., 159 B.R. 840, 847 (Bankr.S.D.Ill.1993); In re Envirodyne Industries, Inc., 150 B.R. 1008, 1021 (Bankr.N.D.Ill.1993).

FRBP 2014 is extremely broad, and requires disclosure of all connections with parties in interest in the case, rather than just those which appear to implicate disinterestedness or adverse interest. See In re etoys, 331 B.R. 176, 190 (Bankr. D. Del. 2005), citing In re Filene's Basement, Inc., 239 B.R. 850, 856 (Bankr. D. Mass. 1999). See also In re C&C Demo, Inc., 273 B.R. 502, 507 (Bankr. E.D. Tex. 2001). As stated by one court:

> The professional cannot pick and choose which connections to disclose. No matter how old the connection, no matter how trivial it appears, the professional seeking employment must disclose it. The court and interested parties are then informed and the professional does not run the risk of serving the estate pro bono.

In re EWC, Inc., 138 B.R. 276, 281 (Bankr. W.D. Okla. 1992).

The failure to make proper disclosure under FRBP 2014(a) is not excused by general disclaimers in retention affidavits designed to explain the possibility of a remote and difficult to ascertain connection not identified in a thorough review. See In re C&C Demo, Inc., 273 B.R. 502, 507 (Bankr. E.D. Tex. 2001).

CEA cannot contend in this case that it merely omitted a remote connection through inadvertence after making an otherwise meaningful disclosure. It made no disclosure of the significant connections described for almost eight months.

A professional's duty to make full disclosure under FRBP 2014(a) is self-policing, with the Court and parties-in-interest relying on forthright disclosure, without the necessity for conducting independent investigations. See In re Granite Partners, L.P., 219 B.R. 22, 35 (Bankr. S.D.N.Y. 1998); In re C&C Demo, Inc., 273 B.R. 502, 507 (Bankr. E.D. Tex. 2001).

The courts of appeals have recognized the importance of these disclosure requirements and the power of the bankruptcy courts to sanction attorneys for noncompliance. See, e.g., Kravit, Gass & Weber, S.C. v. Michel (In re Crivello), 134 F.3d 831, 836 (7th Cir. 1998); Neben & Starrett, Inc. v. Chartwell Financial Corp. (In re Park-Helena Corp.), 63 F.3d 877, 881-882 (9th Cir. 1995), cert. denied, 516 U.S. 1049, 116 S.Ct. 712, 133 L.Ed. 2d 667 (1996); Rome v. Braunstein, 19 F.3d 54, 59-60 (1st Cir. 1994). In Park-Helena, in which the debtor's attorney failed to disclose the source of a prepetition retainer, the Ninth Circuit acknowledged that the disclosure requirements of Rule 2014 are applied "strictly." Id. at 881. "All facts that may be pertinent to a court's determination of whether an attorney is disinterested or holds an adverse interest to the estate must be disclosed." Id. at 882. "The duty of professionals is to disclose all connections with the debtor, debtor-in-possession, insiders, creditors, and parties in interest ... They cannot pick and choose which connections are irrelevant or trivial ... No matter how old the connection, no matter how trivial it appears, the professional seeking employment must disclose it." Id. The Ninth Circuit further stated that "[t]he disclosure rules are applied literally, even if the results are sometimes harsh." Id. at 881. Negligent or inadvertent omissions "do not vitiate the failure to disclose." Id. The failure to comply with the disclosure rules is a sanctionable violation, even if proper disclosure would have shown that the attorney had not actually violated any Bankruptcy Code provision or Bankruptcy Rule. Id. at 880. Applying these strict standards, the Park-Helena court held that the attorney's failure to describe the circumstances of the payment of the retainer violated the disclosure requirements of Rule 2014, and that the bankruptcy court did not abuse its discretion in denying all the attorney's requested fees as a sanction for the attorney's failure to disclose. Id. at 882; See also Kravit, Gass & Weber, S.C. v. Michel (In re Crivello), 134 F.3d 831, 836 (7th Cir. 1998) ("failure to disclose is sufficient grounds to revoke an employment order and deny compensation"); Rome v. Braunstein, 19 F.3d at 59-60 (counsel's failure to make full and spontaneous disclosure of financial transactions between debtor and insiders provided sufficient ground for denial of compensation). CEA's failure to identify its connections to parties-in-interest properly resulted in a denial of all compensation.

B. CEA's Lack of Disinterestedness Supports the Denial of Fees.

Section 328(c) of the Bankruptcy Code provides:

> § 328. Limitation on compensation of professional persons.
>
> (c) Except as provided in section 327(c), 327(e) or 1107(b) of this title, the court may deny allowance of compensation for services and reimbursement of expenses of a professional person employed under section 327 or 1103 of this title if, at any time during such professional person's employment under section 327 or 1103 of this title, such > professional person is not a disinterested person, or represents or holds an interest adverse to the interests of the estate with respect to the matter on which such professional person is employed.

In this case, CEA represented the debtors-in-possession as general counsel in the bankruptcy cases. This was not a discrete litigation for which an assertion could be made that the representation did not conflict with its obligations to the estate, nor could the assertion be made that the creditors and other parties represented by CEA were not significant. CEA represented the debtors’ principal, and another creditor who was a major creditor of Haddon.

In this case, the Court, the United States Trustee and other parties were denied the right to evaluate CEA’s other representations prior to the entry of an order authorizing CEA’s retention under 11 U.S.C. § 327(a), which the United States Trustee believes would have been denied by the Court if CEA had made proper disclosure of its connections. Retention of a professional under 11 U.S.C. § 327(a) requires that the professional to be retained "...not hold or represent an interest adverse to the estate, and that are disinterested persons...." The twin requirements combine into a single hallmark, which requires that the professional not have a meaningful incentive to act contrary to the best interests of the estate and its creditors - an incentive sufficient to place those parties at more than acceptable risk - or the reasonable perception of one. See In re Martin, 817 F.2d 175, 180 (1st Cir. 1987).

> "A fiduciary ... may not perfect his claim to compensation by insisting that, although he had conflicting interests, he served his several masters equally well or that his primary loyalty was not weakened by the pull of his secondary one."

Rome v. Braunstein, 19 F.3d 54, 62 (1st Cir. 1994)(noting that the bankruptcy court is authorized to impose sanctions under 11 U.S.C. § 328(c)), citing Woods v. City Nat'l Bank & Trust Co., 312 U.S. 262, 269, 61 S.Ct. 493, 497, 85 L.Ed. 820 (1941)(in the context of a bondholders committee); In re Roger J. Au, 71 B.R. 238, 241 (Bankr. N.D. Ohio 1986).

"Once counsel is employed, 'a lawyer owes his allegiance to the entity and not to the stockholder, director, officer, employee, representative or other person connected with the entity.'" In re The Leslie Fay Companies, Inc., 175 B.R. 525, 532 (Bankr. S.D.N.Y. 1994), citing In re Grabill Corp., 113 B.R. 966, 970 (Bankr.N.D.Ill.1990), quoting In re King Resources Co., 20 B.R. 191, 200 (D. Col. 1982). See also Interwest Business Equipment, Inc. v. United States Trustee (Interwest Business Equipment, Inc.), 23 F.3d 311, 318 (10th Cir. 1994)(affirming the bankruptcy court's finding: that a law firm's simultaneous representation of multiple debtors-in-possession and one of the other estates as a creditor constituted representation of an interest adverse to the estate, and that the firm was thus not disinterested; and that the existence of a pre-petition debt from one estate to the other created a disqualifying conflict of interest. Id. at 314, 318. In so holding, the court recognized the importance of the fiduciary duty of the debtor in possession, as trustee of the estate, and of counsel's obligation to serve the trustee independently. Id. at 317; See also In re BH & P, Inc., 949 F.2d 1300, 1317-1318 (3d Cir. 1991) (affirming disqualification of counsel for multiple related bankruptcy estates of corporation and its two principals, where estates had claims against one another and counsel failed to disclose potential conflicts).

C. CEA's Failure to Fully Comply with the Requirements of FRBP 2016(b) Supports the Denial of All Compensation.

Section 329(a) of the Bankruptcy Code provides:

§ 329. Debtor's transactions with attorneys.

> (a) Any attorney representing a debtor in a case under this title, or in connection with such a case, whether or not such attorney applies for compensation under this title, shall file with the court a statement of the compensation paid or agreed to be paid, if such payment or agreement was made after one year before the date of filing of the petition, for services rendered or to be rendered in contemplation of or in connection with the case by such attorney, and the source of such compensation.

FRBP 2016(b) requires the § 329 statement to be filed and sent to the United States trustee within 15 days after the order for relief, or at another time as the court may direct, and requires a supplemental statement to be filed and transmitted to the United States trustee within 15 days after any payment or agreement not previously disclosed, and 11 U.S.C. § 329(b) authorizes the Court to order the return of any payment deemed excessive.[6] A failure to fully comply with the disclosure requirements of FRBP 2016(b) is a basis for denial of all compensation and the disgorgement of all fees paid. See In re LaFerriere, 286 B.R. 520, 526-27 (Bankr. D. Vt. 2002)(FRBP 2016(b) disclosure requires "total candor"). See also Neben & Starrett, Inc. v. Chartwell Financial Corp. [6] Pursuant to 11 U.S.C. § 329(b), the bankruptcy court may order the return of a pre-petition retainer to the estate, if the property transferred would have been property of the estate or was to be paid under a plan, or to the entity that made such payment. This question is the subject of the trustee’s adversary proceeding and state court litigation. The trustee, CEA and the Tessie Warmers Trust have all claimed that the retainer should be returned to them.

The bankruptcy court followed this established line of cases in holding that CEA's inconsistent disclosures did not meet the requirements of FRBP 2016(b), and warranted the sanction imposed.

D. The Salient Facts Were Undisputed, and CEA Received a Full and Fair Hearing.

CEA's own sworn statements admit its representation of multiple entities who were parties in the bankruptcy cases. It does not dispute that it failed to disclose these prior and concurrent representations to the bankruptcy court in the sworn statements required to obtain an order authorizing its retention. The United States Trustee certainly would have filed an objection at the outset of the case, and does not believe that the Court would have authorized the firm's retention under 11 U.S.C. §§ 101(14) and 327 had CEA's first sworn FRBP 2014(a) statement accurately set forth its connections to all parties-in-interest. (See BR at 335 - United States Trustee Objection to Reconsideration, Par. 11) The bankruptcy court came to the same conclusion, noting that

> "Cohen Estis does not dispute that it failed to adequately disclose its connections with parties in interest. The failure to disclose resulted in the employment of Cohen Estis as Debtors' counsel when it was not eligible for retention."

(BR at 338 - Memorandum Decision at p. 36).

As set forth above, the bankruptcy court properly exercised its broad discretion to deny CEA's fees based upon CEA's own sworn statements which demonstrated (1) CEA’s failure to disclose its connections to parties in interest under FRBP 2014(a); (2) its failure to properly disclose the sources and amounts of its receipt of pre-petition retainer funds under 11 U.S.C. § 329(a) and FRBP 2016(b); and its patent lack of disinterestedness under 11 U.S.C. §§ 101(14), 327(a) and 328(c). Any one of these failures by CEA could properly form the basis for a denial of compensation, but all three are present here.

CEA’s suggestion that it was denied due process because it was “...not allowed to be present at an evidentiary hearing...” creates the unfortunate impression that the bankruptcy court’s decision was made in a vacuum. Nothing could be further from the truth. CEA initiated the fee application hearing by filing an application and scheduling a hearing. (BR at 316 - November 14, 2005 Notice of Hearing on Fee Application; BR at 316 - December 8, 2006 Amended Notice of Hearing)[7]. Objections to the fee application were filed by the United States Trustee, the Chapter 7 trustee and a creditor well in advance of the hearing date (BR at 319 - January 20, 2006 Epic Orange Objection; BR at 320 - February 6, 2006 Chapter 7 trustee Objection; BR at 322 and 323 - February 8, 2006 United States Trustee Objection and Memorandum of Law), which was in any event adjourned for a week at CEA's request. (BR at un-numbered February 14, 2006 entry - Notice of Adjournment.) The bankruptcy court held a hearing on February 21, 2006, which was attended by CEA's counsel.

[7] The notice and application mis-characterized the application as one for interim, rather than final compensation. It covered the entire Chapter 11 period of the cases, which had concluded by conversion to Chapter 7, and CEA’s services in the Chapter 11 cases had terminated. The application was treated by the bankruptcy court as a final fee application. (BR at 338 - Memorandum Decision at P. 2).

At that hearing, the bankruptcy court afforded CEA the opportunity to file an affidavit setting forth any information it wished the court to consider in making a ruling. (February 21, 2006 Transcript, at pp. 7-10). CEA took advantage of the opportunity, filing a Supplemental Statement supported by the affidavit of Ronald Cohen, Esq. (BR at 325 - Affidavit and Supplemental Statement filed on March 20, 2006). It also filed a response to the Chapter 7 trustee's reply memorandum. (BR at 328 - March 31, 2006 Response). The bankruptcy court then held another hearing and oral argument on April 11, 2006, which was attended by CEA's counsel. Subsequent to that hearing, CEA filed a motion for reconsideration, supported by affidavits by Deborah Weisman-Estis, Esq., a CEA partner, and Mr. Cohen's physician, Andrew Hirsch, D.O., as well as a memorandum of law. (BR at 330, 331 and 332 - Motion to Reconsider filed April 28, 2006 and attached affidavit; Affidavit of Andrew Hirsch, D.O. filed on April 28, 2006; Memorandum of Law) CEA also filed a response to the objections to the motion for reconsideration. (BR at 334 - Response filed on May 10, 2006).

CEA was afforded a full and fair opportunity to support its fee application. It had multiple opportunities to be heard and to provide the bankruptcy court with both sworn statements and legal argument: (1) it filed a fee application containing narrative in support of its fee request; (2) it scheduled a hearing, which it attended through counsel; (3) it filed a supplemental statement and an affidavit of a partner of the firm; (4) it filed a response; (5) it attended another hearing through its counsel; (6) it filed a motion for reconsideration, supported by the affidavit of another partner of the firm; (7) it filed an affidavit of one of the partner's physicians; (8) it filed a memorandum of law; and (9) it filed another response.

Section 330 of the Bankruptcy Code authorizes the bankruptcy court to award compensation after the specified notice and a hearing. The phrase "after notice and a hearing" is defined in 11 U.S.C. § 102(1) as meaning "...after such notice as is appropriate in the particular circumstances, and such opportunity for a hearing as is appropriate in the particular circumstances...." 11 U.S.C. § 102(1)(A). An evidentiary hearing is not a requirement. See In re Busy Beaver Building Centers, Inc., 19 F.3d 833, 846 (3d Cir. 1994); In re I Don't Trust, 143 F.3d 1, 3 (1st Cir. 1998); In re Ingersoll, 238 B.R. 202, 211 (D. Col. 1999); In re Pfleghaar, 215 B.R. 394, 397 (8th Cir. BAP 1997). See also In re BDC 56 LLC, 330 F.3d 111, 119 (2d Cir. 2003)(in context of hearing on determination of involuntary case, noting that bankruptcy court may rely on documentary evidence, that an evidentiary hearing is not obligatory, that the nature of a bankruptcy court’s findings is not altered by whether it holds an evidentiary hearing, and that factual findings based upon documentary evidence and affidavits are reviewed for “clear error,” not de novo).

In this case, the bankruptcy court’s findings were based primarily on the undisputed facts embodied by CEA’s own affidavits in the case. The bankruptcy court clearly had the discretion to deny fees based upon those facts.

VIII. CONCLUSION

For these reasons, the United States Trustee respectfully asks this Court to affirm the order entered below denying all compensation and substantially all reimbursement of expenses.

BRIEF REGARDING APPLICATION TO APPEAL WITHOUT PREPAYMENT OF FEES

The United States Trustee respectfully files this Brief Regarding Phillip Monroe Ballard's Application to Proceed Without Prepayment of Fees and Affidavit (the "application"). Pursuant to the Court's December 23, 1997 letter,[1] we offer the following regarding Mr. Ballard's application to waive appellate fees here and proceed in forma pauperis ("IFP").

PROCEDURAL HISTORY

Phillip Monroe Ballard, a non-debtor, signed his name to a bankruptcy petition and other documents, as a "bankruptcy petition preparer," and caused to be filed a voluntary chapter 7 case upon behalf of Mr. and Mrs. Forshee (the "debtors"). Section 110 of the Bankruptcy Code, 11

[1] That letter essentially requested citations to legal authority governing the imposition, and waiver, of court fees in appeals such as this, as well as inviting legal argument upon the issue.

U.S.C. § 110, governs the conduct of bankruptcy petition preparers, and the Code prescribes fines and other remedies that a bankruptcy court may take to ensure compliance with Section 110.

After an evidentiary hearing in which Mr. Ballard participated fully, the bankruptcy court found that Mr. Ballard violated several provisions of Section 110. It thus entered an order on September 26, 1997, fining Mr. Ballard $500, directing him to return to the debtors all money they paid him (at least $1,000 known), and enjoining him from acting as a bankruptcy petition preparer. Mr. Ballard did not appeal from this order. Instead, on October 6, 1997, he filed a motion to amend or for a new trial. The bankruptcy court denied that motion for lack of new facts, evidence, or law on October 21, 1997 ("Order On Motion To Amend").

On October 30, 1997, Mr. Ballard filed a Notice of Appeal regarding the bankruptcy court's Order On Motion To Amend. Although the United States Trustee was not served with the Notice of Appeal, Mr. Ballard designated the United States Trustee as appellee. Also on October 30, 1997, Mr. Ballard filed a "Declaration in Support of Request to Proceed In Forma Pauperis," stating that he had no assets and no funds with which to pay the $105 appellate filing fee,[2/] although he admittedly received income between $8,000 and $10,000 in the preceding 12 months. On November 5, 1997, Mr. Ballard filed a form entitled "Application to Proceed without Prepayment of Fees and Affidavit," again stating that he had no assets, although he had received $8,000 to $10,000 from self employment in the prior year.

By order dated November 24, 1997, the District Court (Chief Judge Buchmeyer) referred Mr. Ballard's IFP application to Bankruptcy Judge Abramson for review, and in a November 14th letter, the District Court Clerk established a briefing schedule, pursuant to Bankruptcy Rule 8009,

[2/] The United States Trustee is not aware whether or not Mr. Ballard has also sought to waive the transcript preparation fee. See generally Bankruptcy Rules 5007(a) ("Transcript Fees"); 8007(a) ("Duty of Reporter to Prepare and File Transcript"); and 8014 ("Costs").

under which Mr. Ballard's opening brief was due by December 2, 1997. Because appellant failed to file a timely brief, we filed a Motion to Dismiss Appeal on December 9, 1997, one week after passage of appellant's briefing deadline.

The District Court initially granted our motion, in an Order Dismissing Appeal entered on December 15, 1997. However, on December 19, the Court vacated the dismissal and reinstated Mr. Ballard's appeal, "pending consideration of Appellant's Application to Proceed Without Prepayment of Fees and Affidavit." Also on December 19, the Court entered two additional orders (1) withdrawing its prior reference to Bankruptcy Judge Abramson, and (2) referring Mr. Ballard's IFP application to Magistrate Judge Sanderson. We now brief the IFP issue pursuant to the Magistrate's instructions of December 23, 1997, which asked the parties to address the following matters:

> 1. Rules and/or statutes which set out the applicable fees which are normally imposed upon a person who appeals a bankruptcy judge's ruling to a judge of a district court.
> 2. Rules and statutes which permit an appealing party to seek review in forma pauperis.
>
> In addition . . . each of you may include any arguments or authority in favor of or in opposition to Mr. Ballard's [IFP] request. . . .

THE UNITED STATES TRUSTEE'S RESPONSES TO THE COURT'S QUESTIONS

1. "Rules and/or statutes which set out the applicable fees which are normally imposed upon a person who appeals a bankruptcy judge's ruling to a judge of a district court"

Bankruptcy fees are prescribed by 28 U.S.C. § 1930, and in particular, subsections (b)-(c) set forth fees the bankruptcy court collects in appeals. The total filing fee in an appeal from a bankruptcy court decision is $105, consisting of two parts. First, section 1930(c) authorizes the bankruptcy clerk to collect $5 from the appellant for filing "any . . . notice of appeal or . . . writ of certiorari."[3] Further, section 1930(b) authorizes the Judicial Conference of the United States to establish additional fees.[4] Pursuant to this authority, the Judicial Conference has prescribed a $100 fee for filing an appeal (such as this) under 28 U.S.C. § 158(a).[5] See Judicial Conference Fee Schedule, ¶ 16.[6] Consequently, upon filing his appeal here, Mr. Ballard owed the clerk of the bankruptcy court a $105 filing fee.

2. "Rules and statutes which permit an appealing party to seek review in forma pauperis"

The above-referenced filing fees may be waived to the extent permitted by 28 U.S.C. § 1915, pursuant to which courts of the United States may allow indigents to proceed in forma pauperis. The statute provides in pertinent part:

> Subject to subsection (b) [regarding suits by "prisoners," as defined in subsection (h)], any court of the United States may authorize the commencement, prosecution or defense of any suit, action or proceeding, civil or criminal, or appeal therein, without prepayment of fees or security therefor, by a person who submits an affidavit that includes a statement of all assets such [person] possesses [and] that the person is unable to pay such fees or give security therefor. Such affidavit shall state the nature of the action, defense or appeal and affiant's belief that the person is entitled to redress.

28 U.S.C. § 1915(a)(1) (emphasis added). Further, Local Rule 83.6 of the Northern District of [4] See 28 U.S.C. § 1930(b) ("The Judicial Conference of the United States may prescribe additional fees in cases under title 11 of the same kind as [it] prescribes under section 1914(b) of this title").

[5] Mr. Ballard's October 30, 1997 appeal notice states it was filed under 28 U.S.C. § 158(a)(1), which provides that "[t]he district courts of the United States shall have jurisdiction to hear appeals . . . from final judgments, orders, and decrees . . . of bankruptcy judges."

[6] Paragraph 16 of the Judicial Conference's fee schedule provides in pertinent part as follows: "For docketing a proceeding on appeal or review from a final judgment of a bankruptcy judge pursuant to 28 U.S.C. § 158(a) and (b), $100." See notes following 28 U.S.C. § 1930.

Texas provides that "[a] party desiring to proceed without prepayment of fees or costs must complete the appropriate form and file it with the clerk."

Despite the seemingly broad language in section 1915 authorizing IFP status, Congress specifically barred waiver of the bankruptcy case-filing fees prescribed by 28 U.S.C. § 1930(a). Section 1930(a) states that "[n]otwithstanding section 1915 . . . , the parties commencing a case under title 11 shall pay . . . [specified] filing fees" — whose amounts vary, according to which Bankruptcy Code chapter is invoked — although such fees may, in certain circumstances, be paid in "installments." Id. (emphasis added); see also United States v. Kras, 409 U.S. 434, 439-40 (1973) (holding that under former Bankruptcy Act of 1898 parties must pay commencement fees for filing a bankruptcy petition, and prior IFP statute similar to section 1915 was inapplicable to cases under former Bankruptcy Act). Thus, debtors clearly may not obtain IFP status to avoid paying the initial bankruptcy case-filing fees prescribed by section 1930(a).[7]

There is, however, a split of authority as to whether a bankruptcy court may grant IFP status to waive the appellate filing fees prescribed by sections 1930(b)-(c). The leading case holding against the existence of IFP status in bankruptcy appeals is Perroton v. Gray (In re Perroton), 958 F.2d 889 (9th Cir. 1992). Noting that only "courts of the United States" are authorized by section 1915(a) to grant IFP status, the Ninth Circuit focused upon whether a bankruptcy court is a "court of the United States" within the meaning of section 1915. The term

[7] It should, however, be noted that Congress authorized a 3-year "pilot" program between October 1994-1997, during which six districts (not including this District) were allowed to waive fees under section 1930. The Judicial Conference is to file a report with Congress in March 1998 addressing fee policy and the results of the pilot program. See Pub. L. No. 103-121, § 111(d)(3), 107 Stat. 1153, 1165 (Oct. 27, 1993) ("Waiver of Fees in Selected Districts. . . . [T]he Judicial Conference . . . shall carry out in not more than six judicial districts, throughout the 3-year period beginning October 1, 1994, a program under which fees payable under section 1930 of title 28 . . . may be waived in cases under chapter 7 of title 11 . . . for debtors who are individuals unable to pay such fees in installments"); accord § 111(d)(1) ("Not later than March 31, 1998, the Judicial Conference . . . shall submit a report to [Congress] . . . relating to the bankruptcy fee system and the impact of such system on various participants in bankruptcy cases").

"court of the United States" is defined in 28 U.S.C. § 451 as > the Supreme Court . . . , courts of appeals, district courts constituted under chapter 5 of this title, including the Court of International Trade and any court created by Act of Congress the judges of which are entitled to hold office during good behavior.

28 U.S.C. § 451 (emphasis added). The Perroton court concluded that it was unclear what Congress meant by "entitled to hold office during good behavior." 958 F.2d at 893. Although a bankruptcy court, in In re Shumate, 91 B.R. 23 (Bankr. W.D. Va. 1988), had previously allowed IFP filings on the theory that bankruptcy judges hold their office during good behavior, Perroton disagreed. Rather, the Ninth Circuit held that "good behavior" is a term-of-art mirrored in Article III of the Constitution,[8] which guarantees life-time tenure subject only to impeachment. Perroton, 958 F.2d at 893. Thus, a "court of the United States" is only an Article III court. Id. Because bankruptcy judges are not Article III judges, they lack authority to allow IFP filings. Id.

The Perroton court also found support for its conclusion in section 451's legislative history. It noted that Congress initially amended section 451 to include bankruptcy judges. Pub. L. No. 95-598, § 213, 92 Stat. 2668 (Nov. 6, 1978). Yet, Congress eliminated the amendment before it took effect. Pub. L. No. 98-353, § 113, 98 Stat. 333, 343 (July 10, 1984). Based on this action, Perroton held that Congress did not intend bankruptcy courts to be "courts of the United States" or to possess power to waive fees under section 1915. Id., 958 F.2d at 894.

In reaching this conclusion, the Ninth Circuit expressly rejected amicus arguments advanced by the United States Trustee, to the effect that appellate fees under sections 1930*(b)-(c)* could be waived because the restrictive language "[n]otwithstanding section 1915" appeared only in connection with initial case-filing fees under section 1930*(a)*. Rather, while noting that the notwithstanding language in section 1930(a) "admittedly reinforces congressional intent" to bar the waiver of initial case-filing fees, Perroton held that the absence of such language in subsections (b)-(c) cannot be construed as legislative intent to permit the granting of IFP status under section 1915, "given the clearer implication to the contrary evidenced by Congress's decision not to include the bankruptcy court in § 451." Perroton, 958 F.2d at 895 (emphasis in original).

At least three other appellate courts have reached the conclusion that bankruptcy courts are not "courts of the United States."[9] See also In re Jeyes, 202 B.R. 153 (10th Cir. BAP 1996) ("The Tenth Circuit . . . has held that [the term] 'court of the United States,' as used in 28 U.S.C. § 451, is limited to Article III courts. . . . The Bankruptcy Appellate Panel is not an Article III court, and therefore lacks power to grant leave to proceed [on appeal] in forma pauperis.").

On the other hand, a number of bankruptcy courts have disagreed with Perroton and held that section 1915 allows them to waive fees other than the initial case-filing fees specified in section 1930(a), which, as noted, requires payment "notwithstanding" section 1915. For instance, the bankruptcy court in Huff v. Brooks (In re Brooks), 175 B.R. 409 (S.D. Ala. 1994) criticized Perroton's analysis and held that it could still grant IFP status under section 1915, reasoning as follows:

> As "units of the district court" pursuant to 28 U.S.C. § 151, authority flows to the bankruptcy courts from the district courts through the order of reference. Bankruptcy judges' authority to deal with [in forma pauperis] motions is derived from this "flow > down" jurisdictional scheme. . . . [L]anguage specifically including bankruptcy judges in section 451 would be superfluous at best, and contradictory at worst, with this structure.

Id. at 412. Moreover, Brooks concluded that Perroton read too much into Congress's election to delete bankruptcy courts from the definition of "courts of the United States" in 28 U.S.C. § 451, because after Northern Pipeline Constr. Co. v. Marathon Pipeline Co., 458 U.S. 50 (1982), Congress reconstituted bankruptcy courts as "units of the district court," and language including them in section 451 was no longer necessary. Brooks, 175 B.R. at 412. Or, as reasoned in McGinnis v. McGinnis (In re McGinnis), 155 B.R. 294 (Bankr. D.N.H. 1993):

> Congress' subsequent amendment of 28 U.S.C. § 451 should not be interpreted to mean, as the Perroton court suggests, that Congress intended to strip the bankruptcy court of the power to enter appropriate orders in matters . . . incidental to proceedings which are properly before the court. . . . In its response to Northern Pipeline, Congress also enacted 28 U.S.C. § 157, the current statute under which the district court delegates authority to bankruptcy courts. . . . [In so] delegating . . . the district court also delegates its authority to entertain petitions and motions necessary to fully and fairly adjudicate these cases, including petitions to proceed in forma pauperis under 28 U.S.C. § 1930(b) or (c).

THE POSITION OF THE UNITED STATES TRUSTEE

As the foregoing reflects, the law is unsettled as to whether bankruptcy courts may grant IFP status under section 1915 and waive the filing fees required by section 1930(b)-(c) for appeals from bankruptcy judges to district courts. The central question has been viewed in terms of whether bankruptcy courts are "courts of the United States" and, thus, authorized to grant IFP

M.D. Fla. 1980), and In re Gurda Farms, Inc., 10 B.R. 479 (S.D.N.Y. 1980) (holding that bankruptcy courts may waive fees other than section 1930(a) case-filing fees, on the theory that bankruptcy courts are "courts of the United States" for section 1915 purposes since their authority derives from a district court's general order of reference, and/or that Congress intended the absolute requirement that fees be paid to apply only to initial case-filing fees under section 1930(a) and its "notwithstanding" language).

status under section 1915. However, we believe there is an equally important issue to consider, namely, whether non-payment of an appellate filing fee in the court below deprives this Court of jurisdiction over the appeal. A review of the applicable law suggests that — irrespective of whether bankruptcy courts are "court of the United States" under section 1915 — this Court possesses jurisdiction to hear or dismiss the appeal.

More specifically, Rule 8001(a) of the Federal Rules of Bankruptcy Procedure (Fed. R. Bankr. P.) provides as follows in this regard:

> An appeal from a judgment, order or decree of a bankruptcy judge to a district court or bankruptcy appellate panel as permitted by 28 U.S.C. § 158(a)(1) or (a)(2) shall be taken by filing a notice of appeal with the clerk within the time allowed by Rule 8002. An appellant's failure to take any step other than timely filing a notice of appeal does not affect the validity of the appeal. . . .

Fed. R. Bankr. P. 8001(a) (emphasis added). Likewise, the Supreme Court has long held that failure to timely tender appellate filing fees, though sanctionable, does not deprive the reviewing court of jurisdiction. See Parissi v. Telechron, 349 U.S. 46 (1955) (per curiam) (holding that an appeal was not jurisdictionally defective despite appellant's failure to include a $5 filing fee along with a timely-filed notice of appeal, even though 28 U.S.C. § 1917 required that the $5 fee be paid "upon the filing" of the notice). Following Parissi, other courts have similarly held that a failure to pay appellate filing fees is not jurisdictionally fatal. As the Eighth Circuit, for example, held in H.L. Thorndal v. Smith, Wild, Beebe & Cades, 339 F.2d 676 (8th Cir. 1965):

> Here as in Parissi, the statute fixing the time for appeal contains no provision or condition with respect to payment of fees. In Parissi, the filing fee requirement is found in a separate federal statute. Here the [appellate] filing fee provision is found in local court rules . . . [which] cannot enlarge statutory jurisdictional requirements. Hence, in our view a firmer basis here exists for supporting jurisdiction than was present in Parissi.

Id. at 678-79 (further noting, however, that "Courts are not without power to provide sanctions for failure to pay fees"); accord Wrenn v. American Cast Iron Pipe Co., 575 F.2d 544, 547 (5th Cir. 1978) ("untimely payment of a filing fee does not vitiate the validity of a notice of appeal"); cf. Ecker v. Replogle (In re Replogle), 70 B.R. 444, 446 (Bankr. D. Mont. 1987) ("Since all the other prerequisite for filing [an adversary proceeding], namely, prompt receipt of the filing fee and cover sheet, were immediately cured, the Plaintiff's complaint should be deemed [timely] filed").

While non-payment of fees may not vitiate appellate jurisdiction, it remains for the reviewing court to determine whether those fees should be waived or, possibly, whether sanctions are warranted. See Fed. R. Bankr. P. 8001(a). Here, the reviewing court is an Article III district court, which is clearly a "court of the United States" and thus authorized to waive fees under section 1915.[11/] As a neighboring district court recently held, "to deny an indigent person the right to defend in bankruptcy . . . merely because he cannot afford to pay the fees would amount to an unconstitutional deprivation of due process and denial of equal protection." Tripati v. U.S. Bankruptcy Court for the Eastern District of Texas, 180 B.R. 160, 163 (E.D. Tex. 1995).

Finally, one should consider the appropriate standard to be applied in reviewing an IFP application. We believe the proper standard was enunciated in United States v. Merritt (In re Merritt), 186 B.R. 924 (Bankr. S.D. Ill. 1995).[12/] As that court explained:

> Qualification for in forma pauperis relief under § 1915 requires not only financial eligibility but also legal eligibility. . . . Congress, while opening the federal courts to individuals with rights to be adjudicated but inadequate means to pay the filing fees, at the same

[11/] Indeed, it appears the Court here recognized as much when it withdrew its prior referral to the bankruptcy court on December 19, 1997, and instead referred to this Magistrate the issue of whether appellant should be allowed to proceed with this appeal in forma pauperis.

[12/] The bankruptcy court in Merritt was in one of the districts authorized to grant IFP status during the "pilot" program discussed above. Although the three-year pilot program has now concluded, that has no bearing on this Court's authority, as an Article III court of the United States, to grant IFP status at any time. (Note: The six pilot districts included the bankruptcy courts in Brooklyn (E.D.N.Y.), Philadelphia (E.D. Pa.), Memphis (W.D. Tn.), Peoria (S.D. Ill.), Great Falls (D. Mont.), and Salt Lake City (D. Utah).)

> time attempted to safeguard these courts from vexatious litigation that would require a disproportionate expenditure of time and judicial resources. . . . With regard to appeals, the statute provides that "[a]n appeal may not be taken in forma pauperis if the trial court certifies in writing that it is not taken in good faith." 28 U.S.C. § 1915(a)[3]. This "good faith" requirement is an objective one based on the legal merit of the issues sought to be appealed.

> Unlike the right to appeal a criminal conviction or seek redress for a violation of civil rights, obtaining a discharge of one's debts in bankruptcy is a matter of legislative grace, not a constitutional right. . . . Requiring such a litigant to show a reasonable likelihood of success before granting in forma pauperis relief incorporates into the court's evaluation the factors a paying litigant would consider in his decision to sue — the chance of success balanced against the anticipated cost of bringing suit.

Merritt, 186 B.R. at 930, 932 (emphasis added).

Here, we submit, Mr. Ballard has not and cannot make the requisite showing to allow his appeal to proceed in forma pauperis, either legally or financially. As a matter of law, Mr. Ballard does not appear to have a realistic expectation of success on the merits. He merely appeals a denial of rehearing in which he wholly failed to assert any new facts or law sufficient to warrant reconsideration of the bankruptcy court's sanctions under 11 U.S.C. § 110. Likewise, from a financial perspective, Mr. Ballard has utterly failed to demonstrate such indigence as to excuse his payment of the $105 appeal filing fee. To the contrary, he received at least $1,000 for his services as bankruptcy petition preparer here, and admits to having earned at least $8,000 to $10,000 in income from self-employment during the preceding 12 months.[13] At a minimum, before granting IFP status here, an evidentiary hearing, in which Mr. Ballard bears the burden of proof, would clearly seem to be required.

[13] Moreover, inasmuch as Mr. Ballard admitted to the bankruptcy court that he renounced his social security number approximately 20 years ago, establishing his true financial worth may be quite difficult.

Finally, it is worth repeating that the Judicial Conference is required by law to submit a report to Congress by March 31, 1998, addressing the future of bankruptcy fees and IFP status. Presumably, Congress may revisit this entire area and perhaps enact amendments to sections 1915 and/or 1930 that will simplify their application in the future. Until the law is changed, however, we believe the Court should handle Mr. Ballard's IFP application as discussed above.

STATEMENT OF ISSUES TO BE PRESENTED

1) Whether the Bankruptcy Court erred in finding sufficient evidence from which to conclude by a preponderance that the Appellant/Defendant, with the intent to hinder, delay, and/or defraud creditors, transferred numerous articles of person property and horses in violation of 11 U.S.C. §727(a)(2)(A) and (B).

2) Whether the Bankruptcy Court erred in finding sufficient evidence from which to conclude by a preponderance that the Appellant/Defendant knowingly and fraudulently made a false oath when completing and filing his Schedules and Statement of Financial Affairs ("SOFA") in violation of 11 U.S.C. §727(a)(4)(A).

STANDARD OF REVIEW

The issues raised in this appeal are principally questions of fact. Findings of fact can be set aside only if found clearly erroneous. See Fed. R. Bankr. Pro. 8013. This Court reviews question of law de novo. Matter of Pengo Industries, Inc., 962 F.2d 543 (5th Cir. 1992), Matter of Luce, 960 F.2d 1277 (5th Cir. 1992).

STATEMENT OF THE CASE

The Appellant filed a voluntary pro se Chapter 11 petition on November 4, 2003. On December 12, 2003, the Court converted this case to Chapter 7, and Harvey Morton was appointed Trustee. The United States Trustee timely filed this adversary seeking under 11 U.S.C. §727 to deny the Appellant's discharge. The Complaint, as amended, alleged 21 counts of conduct under 11 U.S.C. §727 justifying denial of the discharge. Trial was held over several days in October and November 2004. On March 30, 2005, The Bankruptcy Court entered its Memorandum Opinion in which it found for the United States Trustee on seven of those twenty-one counts. On April 4, 2005, the Bankruptcy Court entered an Order denying the Appellant's discharge. On April 15, 2005, the Appellant filed a motion for a new trial. On July 21, 2005, after a hearing on that Motion, the Bankruptcy Court denied the Appellant a new trial. It is from the April 4, 2005 and July 21, 2005, Orders that the Appellant appeals.

STATEMENT OF FACTS

General Background[1]

Prior to filing this case, the Appellant was engaged in the repairing of roads and highways under contract with the Texas Department of Transportation. This business involved an extensive amount of equipment and vehicles, many million of dollars of loans and contract payments, and a number of projects at locations widely spread across this State. Beyond his business, the Appellant was involved in a variety of avocational activities. One of these was his owning, breeding, raising, and training of horses. The Appellant periodically bought and sold horses to third parties and family members. However, he also used some horses to participate in roping and other rodeo activities. He practiced for these activities in a Preifert portable arena he owned and kept on his ranch. See infra. Most of the horses he owned were registered quarter and paint horses.

Starting on or about December 16, 1998, the Appellant and First Coleman National Bank ("Bank") entered into what became a series of loans and security agreements. See Record pages 161-179, see also Record Volume 4, PX 6(a)-6(q), PX 7(a)-(p). These transaction stretched over the next several years and culminated in the Appellant owing the Bank a total of $2,216,064.04. By virtue of these collective transactions, the Appellant had given the Bank encumbrances on inter alia a ranch of approximately 392 acres, virtually all his other personal property, equipment, vehicles, fixtures, and livestock, including, 29 specifically identified horses. One of the specifically identified horses was named "Justalena Peppy

[1] This case is extremely fact intensive. It involves numerous transactions concerning various items of personal property and horses. The Statement of Facts will only identity facts relevant to the Counts of the Complaint on which the Court found for the United States Trustee. For ease of understanding, the facts will be presented topically rather than chronologically.

Dawn", see infra.

Beginning approximately June 2000 the Appellant began having financial difficulties, and the Bank noted defaults under the various notes. See Record page 192. The Bank began to pressure the Appellant for payments. Despite the Bank's patience and willingness to loan the Appellant additional funds, the Appellant's financial troubles continued. Ultimately, these defaults and the Bank's pressure led the Appellant to file this voluntary Chapter 11 proceeding on November 4, 2003.

PRE-PETITION TRANSACTIONS

Diamond Tennis Bracelet

Several years before this case was filed, the Appellant purchased as a present for his wife a diamond tennis bracelet from Keith Neal, a pawn store owner in Brownwood, Texas. See Record pages 144-146. Sometime thereafter, Mrs. Baum developed medical problems which required the Appellant's mother to care for their children. To repay those services, the Appellant and Mrs. Baum gave Mrs. Baum's mother the bracelet. See Record pages 575, 883. As the Appellant's financial problems deepened, she gifted the bracelet back to the Appellants, see Record page 883, without any expectation that she get it or the proceeds from its sale. See Record page 884. Approximately two weeks before this case was filed, the Appellant resold the bracelet back to Mr. Neal for approximately $2,500.00. See Record pages 146-148. The Appellants Statement of Financial Affairs ("SOFA") required the Appellant to disclose all transfers of assets within the year prior to the filing of his case. The Appellant did not disclose the sale of the tennis bracelet. See Record Volume 4, PX 4 (Statement of Financial Affairs, questions 6-7, 10), PX 5 (Statement of Financial Affairs, questions 6-7, 10).

Weapons

Approximately a year before this case was filed, the Appellant sold the house he lived in to Dr. Michael Bailey, a friend of the Appellant's. See Record page 369. In a separate transaction done approximately the same day, the Appellant also sold Dr. Bailey a large steel gun safe which he left at Dr. Bailey's house. See Record pages 369-370. When Dr. Bailey bought the safe he observed it to be full of guns, mostly rifles. See Record page 372. He originally estimated the number of weapons at between 60 and 65, but later learned it had spaces for 24 rifles and a shelf for pistols. See Record pages 373, 377. At the time of this sale the Appellant neither did nor said anything at the time to suggest that these weapons belonged to anyone other than himself. See Record page 373. Only Dr. Bailey's wife and the Appellant knew how to open the safe. See Record page 371. Between September 2003 and January 2004, just before and two months after he filed bankruptcy, the Appellant came to Dr. Bailey's house at least two times and removed guns from this safe. Once he was observed by Dr. Bailey, see Record pages 374-375, and once by Maria Hurtado, Dr. Bailey's housekeeper. See Record pages 391-395. Approximately January 2004, about the time Ms. Hurtado saw the Appellant removing weapons, Dr. Bailey observed the open safe and found it to contain only the few weapons he (Dr. Bailey) owned. See Record page 376.

As the Appellant's financial troubles continued, he let it be known in the community he had weapons in a safe for sale. See Record pages 148-149, 835. Several weeks before this case was filed, Mr. Barker, then a friend of the Appellant, went with the Appellant to Dr. Bailey's house to examine a .45 caliber pistol he was considering purchasing. See Record pages 839-840. Although Mr. Barker and the Appellant could not agree on a price, Mr. Barker observed the safe to be full of weapons. See Record pages 837-840. Mr. Barker also indicated he did not purchase the weapon because the Appellant told him he intended to file bankruptcy, and Mr. Barker believed it was too close to his doing so to buy any weapons. See Record pages 842-843. The Appellant eventually sold the .45 caliber pistol to Mr. Neal for $500.00 in the same transaction in which he resold the tennis bracelet. See Record page 152-153.

The Appellant's Schedule of assets required him to disclose all weapons he owned. Similarly, the Appellants SOFA required the Appellant to disclose all transfers of assets within the year prior to the filing of his case. See Record Volume PX 4 (Statement of Financial Affairs, questions 5-8, 10). Other than three guns: a .308 caliber rifle, a .22 caliber mag rifle, and a .22 rifle, see Record Volume 4, PX 4 (Schedule B), the Appellant did not disclose his ownership of any other weapons. Though he disclosed the sale of 2 shotguns and rifle to Keith Neal for $600.00, see Record Volume PX 4, (Statement of Financial Affairs, question 14), the Appellant did not disclose the sale of the .45 caliber pistol.

POST-PETITION TRANSACTIONS

Preifert Portable Arena

The Appellant owned a Preifert portable arena which he kept and used on his ranch. See Record page 398, see also Record Volume 11, Exhibit 4. This arena was pledged to the Bank as general equipment collateral. See Record page 179, See also Record Volume 4, PX 4, e.g. Exhibit 7(p). On January 5, 2004, after the case was converted to Chapter 7, and after the Bankruptcy Court gave the Bank relief from the automatic stay to foreclose its collateral, the Bank's agents appeared at the Appellant's ranch to take possession of its collateral.[2] See Record page 199. Though the Bank's agents noted that the arena was on the property at that time, they did not seize it, as they anticipated foreclosing the ranch the next day and did not want to incur the expense of moving it. See Record page 199. The ranch was foreclosed January 6, 2004, but the Bank did not actually physically take possession until February 11, 2004. See Record pages 199, 207. However, on or about February 3, 2004, before it took possession of the ranch, the Bank's agent noted that the arena was no longer on the ranch. See Record page 199, 229. The Bank later found the arena in the possession of one John Curtis, another friend of the Appellant. See infra.

[2] The Bank initially tried to peacefully foreclose on December 18, 2004. However, the Appellant refused the Bank's representatives peaceful entry to the property, stating that he was going to require the Bank to obtain yet another Court order. The Bank then filed for and obtained a writ of sequestration from the State Court in Coleman.

The Appellant's original Schedules and SOFA[3] filed on January 10, 2004, two months after the case was filed, indicated that the Appellant owned a Preifert portable arena with a fair market value of $12,000.00. See Record Volume PX 4 (Schedule B, question 31, exhibit B-31). However, the Appellant testified at the first Chapter 7 creditors' meeting on January 22, 2004[4] that the Preifert portable arena belonged to one Russell Johnson, a friend of the Appellant's. See Record page 228. Consistent with that testimony, the Appellant amended his SOFA on January 29, 2004, to show the arena was only being held for Mr. Johnson. See Record Volume 4, PX 5 (Statement of Financial Affairs, question 14).

Despite the Appellant's creditors' meeting testimony and his amended schedules, Mr. Johnson testified he never owned or claimed any interest in that arena. See Record pages 399-401, 410. Rather, the Appellant tried to offer the arena to Mr. Johnson in payment of a personal favor the Appellant thought he owed Mr. Johnson.[5] See Record pages 399-401. Mr. Johnson is not listed as a creditor on either set of Schedules, and is not shown as the recipient of any transfers in the year prior to the case being filed. See Record Volume 4, PX 4 (Statement of Financial Affairs, questions 6-7). Indeed, after the case's conversion to Chapter 7, the Appellant approached John Curtis, another friend, about holding the arena for Mr. Johnson. See Record pages 434-438. Mr. Curtis agreed and picked-up the arena from the Appellant's ranch. See Record page 436. Mr. Curtis held the arena on his own property until the Bank learned of its whereabouts. Mr. Curtis ultimately surrendered the arena to the Bank. See Record pages 229, 437.

[3] It was only after the Appellant retained counsel on or about December 30, 2003, that the Appellant filed any schedules or a statement of financial affairs. Such documents should have been filed 15 days after the case was filed. However, even after the Bankruptcy Court extended the due-date to December 4, 2003, the Appellant still did not file schedules and a SOFA until January 10, 2004.

[4] Technical problems caused there to be no audible or useable recording of either meeting.

[5] Mr. Johnson could not identify whether the Appellant's offer of the arena was pre- or post-petition. However, the only difference the date would make is whether §727(a)(2)(A) or (a)(2)(B) was applicable. The resulting effect of the transfer would have been the same regardless of the date it occurred.

Damaged Guardrail

As a result of his work on roads and highways, the Appellant was in possession of a quantity of damaged guardrail when he filed this case. See Record page 261. This was kept on his ranch and was there the day he filed his petition. On or about February 20, 2004, the Appellant, by or through another friend, Terry Gardner, arranged with Pine Street Salvage in Abilene for the sale of this damaged guardrail as scrap. See Record page 262. This guardrail to be removed from his ranch by Mason Cullins, an agent of the Pine Street Salvage. Mr. Cullins drove a truck to the Appellant's ranch and, and with the Appellant's personal assistance and direction, loaded this guardrail onto the truck. See Record pages 445-447. Mr. Cullins then took this guardrail from the Appellant's ranch to the Pine Street Salvage, which purchased it for $532.40. See Record page 262, see also Record Volume 7, PX 23. Mr. Morton, the Chapter 7, Trustee learned of this unauthorized sale of estate property and was able to intercept the check. See Record page 262. This guardrail was property of the bankruptcy estate. It was, however, neither scheduled nor exempted. The Trustee had not authorized the Appellant to dispose of the property, nor did the Appellant ask his permission. See Record page 262. It was not property over which the Appellant could unilaterally exercise dominion or control.

The Horse Justalena Peppy Dawn

As previously mentioned, the Appellant had granted the Bank a security interest in all his livestock. See Record pages 175 et seq. The October 25, 2002, security agreement specifically granted the Bank a lien on a horse named "Justalena Peppy Dawn". See Record page 185, see also Record Volume 4, PX 7(m). Shortly after granting the Bank this lien, the Appellant delivered the horse's registration papers to the Bank to hold. See Record page 184. Justalena Peppy Dawn was not found on the Appellant's ranch when the Bank's agents seized the collateral on January 5th. The horse was later found in the possession of one Tim Broadfoot, another friend of the Appellant. See Record page 200.

The Appellant testified at his creditors' meeting about Justalena Peppy Dawn. He explained that the horse had been sold to one Billy Dean Wilson, the Appellant's friend, on October 20, 2002. See Record pages 218, 233, 289. However, the evidence shows that on October 23, 2002, three days after the Appellant said he sold Justalena Peppy Dawn to Mr. Wilson, the Appellant had presented the American Quarter Horse Association ("AQHA") a transfer report asking that he be shown as the horse's owner. See Record pages 415-416, see also Record Volume5, PX 16 (deposition page 8-10, deposition exhibit A, pages 27-28).

Moreover, in February 2003, the Appellant was apparently trying to sell this horse and asked the Bank for the registration certificates. See Record page 185. The Bank delivered the papers to the Appellant, who apparently took them with him to a horse event in Big Spring. See Record page 186. Faxes exchange between the Bank and the Appellant indicate the Appellant was still trying to sell that horse through at least April 2003. See Record pages 186-189. Russell Johnson also testified that approximately September 2003, he observed the Appellant riding this horse in an event in San Angelo, see Record pages 403-404, as did Mr. Barker. See Record page 851. The AQHA records show that when this case was filed the Appellant owned Justalena Peppy Dawn. See Record Volume 5, PX 16 (deposition pages 8-10, deposition exhibit pages 27-28).

The Horses Hickorys Up In Smoke and Colonel Stone

Among the other horses the Appellant owned were "Hickorys Up In Smoke" and "Colonel Stone". He scheduled these horses, but indicated they were being held for his children. See Record Volume 4, PX4 (Statement of Financial Affairs question 14 and exhibit SFA-14). These horses were seized by the Bank from the Appellant's ranch on January 5, 2004. Because he claimed these horses belonged to his children, on or about January 24, 2004, the Appellant requested that the Bank release these horses. See Record pages 208, 210. As part of his effort to get the Bank to release these two horses, on January 25, 2004, the Appellant presented the Bank with registration certificates from the American Paint Horse Association ("APHA"). See Record page 211. These certificates indicated that the Appellant had transferred the two horses to his children on May 10, 2002. See Record page 212, see also Record Volume 6, PX 17 (deposition page 2). However, the Bank learned that the request to change the recorded ownership of these animals was presented to the APHA on January 23, 2004, and that the Appellant provided the APHA with the dates of these alleged transfers. See Record page 213. The Appellant did not volunteer information about his recent transfer of registration to Mr. Sloan. See Record page 213. This request to change the registration was after the case had been filed and converted to Chapter 7.

Testimony at the Creditors' Meeting

The Debtor testified at his creditors' meetings. This testimony was under oath. See 11 U.S.C. §343. The Appellant was asked about his transfer of the tennis bracelet and about weapons other than the ones he had scheduled. See Record pages 292-293, 264. In that testimony he denied owning any other weapons, including any at Dr. Bailey's house, and testified that the tennis bracelet belonged to his mother.

Requirements of the Schedules and Statement of Financial

The Schedules and Statement of Financial Affairs Appellants are required to file under penalty of perjury requires the disclosure of all assets owned or being held by those Appellants. See e.g. Record Volume 4, PX 4 (Schedules A and B, Statement of Financial Affairs, question 14. The documents also require Appellants to disclose the disposition of any assets within one year from the time a case is filed. See e.g. Record Volume 4, PX 4 (Statement of Financial Affairs questions 5-8, 10). Furthermore, Appellants are required to answer truthfully under oath questions put to them at creditors' meetings held under 11 U.S.C. §341. See 11 U.S.C. §343.

Inter alia, as a result of the Appellant's:

a) failure to fully disclose all the weapons he owned;

b) failure to list the transfer of the tennis bracelet and .45 caliber pistol;

c) his unauthorized disposition of the damaged guardrail;

d) attempt to conceal his ownership of certain horses

the United States Trustee filed a complaint to deny the Appellant's discharge. Because Mr. Baum was the only person the United States Trustee believed was responsible for the acts alleged in the Complaint, only Mr. Baum was named as a defendant. After a trial on this Complaint, the Bankruptcy Court found for the United States Trustee on counts related to this failures and denied the Appellant a discharge of his debts. This meant his lawful creditors were free to attempt to collect what was owed to them outside the bankruptcy process.

The Defendant filed a motion for a new trial. After a hearing on that motion, the Bankruptcy Court found that the Appellant failed to identify any manifest error of law or any newly discovered evidence warranting a new trial. It also found that the Appellant failed to raise any of the grounds identified in Federal Rule of Civil Procedure 60, as incorporated by Federal Rule of Bankruptcy Procedure 9024, warranting relief from the judgment. It is from these two orders that the Appellant appealed.

ARGUMENT

I. Initial Observations Concerning the Appellant's Brief

Taken as a whole, it appears the Appellant contends the Bankruptcy Court erred by making findings against the manifest weight of the Evidence. It appears, however, the Appellant does not understand that a Bankruptcy Court's factual findings cannot be reversed or supplanted on appeal unless clearly erroneous. Federal Rule of Bankruptcy Procedure 8013. See also First National Bank LaGrange v. Martin (In re Martin), 963 F.2d 809 (5th Cir. 1992), *In re Anderson, 936 F.2d 199, 204 (5th Cir.1991)*

("The bankruptcy court is in the best position to judge the credibility of any witness who testifies under oath before it . . ."), Matter of Texas Mortgage Services Corp., 761 F.2d 1068, 1078 (5th Cir.1985) ("We will not attempt to reassess the credibility of witnesses whom we have not had an opportunity to see on the stand"). What the Appellant appears to misapprehend most is the wide discretion the Bankruptcy Judge has when considering the evidence. Judge Jones was free to believe or disbelieve any or all of the testimony of any witness, and to give total, little, or no effect to any or all of the tangible evidence presented. It was required to weigh that testimony and evidence according to the beliefs it developed during trial, and to rule accordingly.

It is difficult to glean the Appellant's legal theories in support of reversing the decision below. For example, his Brief discusses how the Bankruptcy Court erred in making findings concerning facts and issues which are wholly unrelated to the Counts on which it found for the United States Trustee. See e.g. Appellant's Brief, page 1 (discussing how the United States Trustee waived the right to complain about schedules not being timely filed because the Appellant's spouse was not named as a defendant), see also Brief page 30 (discussing whether the Appellant had or had not validly guaranteed corporate debts to the Bank).[6] The Brief also intermixes facts and findings on the various Counts without ever identifying with specificity how the evidence the United States Trustee presented was insufficient to constitute a preponderance.

In general, the Brief is a series of confusing and self-serving statements, most of which chronicle the findings the Defendant wishes the Bankruptcy Court would have made, but did not. Taken in its entirety, the Brief appears to claim the Bankruptcy Court erred simply because it rejected the "I testified about it, and therefore it must be true" approach the Appellant takes in arguing his case. Furthermore, what the Appellant characterizes as factual "inconsistencies" does not invalidate the inferences or [6] To the extent the Appellant does not support issues and arguments in the general context of his notice of appeal, his identification of issues, and/or his Brief, the United States Trustee believes these have been waived.

conclusions the Court was entitled to make from the totality of evidence, particularly given that the United States Trustee's burden of proof was to a preponderance. Clearly, there was sufficient evidence and testimony to support a finding for the United States Trustee on the seven Counts identified in the Court's Opinion.

II. Applicable Law

A. Concealment, Transfer, and Removal of Assets

Debtors who file Chapter 7 bankruptcy seek a summary discharge of all dischargable debts. Provided that debtors inter alia fully list all their pre-petition assets, liabilities, and transactions, truthfully testify about their financial affairs, do not conceal any assets, and file their petition in "good faith", they will get that discharge. However, if debtors materially fail to inter alia list all assets, liabilities, and transactions, attempt to conceal property from the bankruptcy trustee, or fail to testify truthfully about their affairs, they can be denied their discharge. See generally, 11 U.S.C. §727(a). This means creditors are free to pursue those debtors even after their bankruptcy case has been fully administered and closed.

In the Appellant's case, and for the reasons set forth supra, the United States Trustee brought a complaint to deny the Appellant's discharge. The Bankruptcy Court found for the United States Trustee principally on two subsections of 11 U.S.C. §727(a); the subsection dealing with the transfer and concealment of assets, and the subsection dealing with making a false oath or account. As to the former, §727(a)(2) states in pertinent part:

> > (2) the Appellant, with intent to hinder, delay, or defraud a creditor or an officer of the estate charged with custody of property under this title, has transferred, removed, destroyed, mutilated, or concealed, or has permitted to be transferred, removed, destroyed, mutilated, or concealed--
> >
> > > (A) property of the Appellant, within one year before the date > > of the filing of the petition; or

> > (B) property of the estate, after the date of the filing of the petition;

The United States Trustee had the burden of proving the elements of §727(a) by a preponderance. In re Womble, 289 B.R. 836 (Bankr. N.D. Tex. 2003).

To succeed under §727(a)(2)(A) (pre-petition concealment) or §727(a)(2)(B) (post-petition concealment), a plaintiff must establish that: (1) the Appellant transferred, removed, or concealed, or permitted to be transferred, removed, or concealed; (2) property of (i) the Appellant within one year before the petition was filed [in the case of a pre-petition concealment - §727(a)(2)(A)] or (ii) property of the bankruptcy estate [in the case of a post-petition concealment - §727(a)(2)(B)]; (3) with the intent to hinder, delay or defraud the creditor. In re Bastrom, 106 B.R. 223 (Bankr. D. Mont.1989), In re Martin, 88 B.R. 319 (D. Colo.1988). Any transfer of interest in property, including a transfer of possession, custody, or control in the absence of any transfer of title, qualifies as a "transfer" within the meaning of §727(a)(2) . In re Golob, 252 B.R. 69 (Bankr. E.D. Va. 2000). This includes property of which Appellant has possession, either actual or constructive, and is not limited to property titled in the Appellant's name.

To prove an act of "concealment" within the meaning of §727(a)(2), it must shown that Appellant placed assets beyond the reach of creditors or withheld knowledge of assets by failing or refusing to divulge information to which creditors were entitled. In re Hayes, 229 B.R. 253 (1st Cir. BAP 1999).

B. False Oath or Account

As for dealing with a false oath or account, §727(a)(4) further states in pertinent part:

> (a) The court shall grant the Appellant a discharge, unless--
>
> > (4) the Appellant knowingly and fraudulently, in or in connection with the case--
> > > (A) made a false oath or account....

To prevail under §727(a)(4)(A), a plaintiff must prove by a preponderance that a) the Defendant made a statement under oath, b) the statement was false, c) the Appellant knew the statement was false, d) the Appellant made the statement with fraudulent intent, and e) the statement materially related to the bankruptcy case. Beaubouef v. Beaubouef, (In re Beaubouef), 966 F.2d 174 (5th Cir. 1992), Morton v. Dreyer (In re Dreyer), 127 B.R. 587 (Bankr. N.D. Tex.1991). A false oath can include testimony given at a creditors' meeting or information listed in or omitted from the Appellant's schedules or statement of financial affairs. In re Korte, 262 B.R. 464 (8th Cir. BAP Iowa 2001). False testimony at a hearing can constitute a false oath for purposes of 11 U.S.C. §727(a)(4)(A). See e.g. In re Wallace,289 B.R. 428 (Bankr. N.D. Okla. 2003), In re Bujak, 86 B.R. 30 (Bankr. W.D. N.Y. 1986), Matter of Hussan, 56 B.R. 288 (Bankr. E.D. Mich. 1985).

C. The Intent Elements of §727(a)

A plaintiff can demonstrate the intent elements of §727(a) by circumstantial evidence. Pavy v. Chastant (In re Chastant), 873 F.2d 89 (5th Cir. 1989). Fraudulent intent, or the intent to hinder, delay, or defraud may be inferred from certain "badges of fraud" which include, but are not limited to:

a) the lack or inadequacy of consideration;

b) the family, friendship, or close association between the parties to a transaction;

c) the retention of possession, benefit, or use of the property in question;

d) the financial condition of the party both before and after the transactions in question;

e) the existence or cumulative effect of the pattern or series of transactions or course of conduct after the onset of financial difficulties; and/or

f) the general chronology of the events and transactions.

In re Womble, supra. Any one or more of these factors may be sufficient to find actual fraudulent intent, and an accumulation of several such factors strongly indicates that the Appellant possessed the requisite intent. FDIC v. Sullivan (In re Sullivan), 204 B.R. 919 (Bankr. N.D. Tex. 1997), Cullen Center Bank &

Trust v. Lightfoot (In re Lightfoot), 152 B.R. 141 (Bankr. S.D. Tex. 1993), Sholdra v. Chilmark Fin., L.L.P. (In re Sholdra), 249 F.3d 380 (5th Cir. 2001). See The Cadle Company v. Mitchell (In re Mitchell), 2003 WL 22016948 (N.D. Texas 2003). Fraudulent intent may also be shown by a Appellant's reckless indifference to the truth. In re Krich, 97 B.R. 919 (Bkrtcy.N.D.Ill.1988).

III. There is more than sufficient evidence from which the Court could find by a preponderance that the Appellant, with the intent to hinder, delay, and/or defraud creditors, transferred numerous articles of person property and horses in violation of 11 U.S.C. §727(a)(2)(A) and (B)

It is axiomatic that when this case was filed all the Appellant's property, regardless of where located or the character of the Appellant's interest in that property, became property of the Appellant's bankruptcy estate. See 11 U.S.C. §541. After the case's conversion to Chapter 7, the Appellant lost all legal right to unilaterally convert, transfer, or otherwise effectuate any disposition of any of his property.

Counts 5 and 6 of the United States Trustee's Complaint allege under §727(a)(2)(A) and (a)(2)(B) that the Appellant's removal and concealment of inter alia the Preifert portable arena, other weapons, and the damaged guardrail property violated §727(a)(2)'s prohibition against the removal and concealment of estate property.[7] The evidence clearly shows that in addition to the horses (which are the subject of additional counts, see infra), the Appellant removed, transferred, or concealed the portable arena, weapons, and guardrail.

A. Portable Arena

With respect to the portable arena, there was ample evidence from which the Bankruptcy Court could find that the Appellant owned the arena when he filed the case, that he attempted to conceal his

---

[7] These Counts also allege that the Appellant removed and/or concealed the .45 caliber pistol and the tennis bracelet. The Bankruptcy Court found that the Appellant had neither illegally removed nor concealed these items, as their sale was for valuable consideration. However, the Bankruptcy Court also found culpable the Appellant's failure to disclose the transfers. See infra.

ownership, and that he attempted to conceal the arena from both the Bank and the Trustee:

a) the receipt showing he purchased the arena, see Record Volume 11, Exhibit 4;

b) the original Schedules wherein Appellant identified himself as owner of the arena, see Record Volume 4, PX 4, Schedule B, Exhibit B-31;

c) the arena appeared on a person financial statement the Appellant published, see Record Volume 11, Exhibit 4, page 3;

d) that he was in possession of the arena when the case was converted to Chapter 7, see Record Page 199;

e) the testimony of Mr. Sloan that arena was on the ranch at the time of foreclosure, see Record page 199;

f) that he caused it to be removed from his property, see Record Page 436;

g) testimony of John Curtis that Appellant asked him to hold the arena, see Record pages 434-438; and

h) testimony of Russell Johnson denying having accepted or having possession and/or control over the arena), see Record pages 399-401, 410.

By removing the arena or permitting its removal after a) the case was filed, b) after the case was converted to Chapter 7, and c) after the Bank was given authority to seize its collateral, the Appellant knowingly removed and concealed the arena from both the Bank and/or the Trustee, either of which were entitled to possess it. There was more than sufficient evidence from which the Court could derive this conclusion.

That this was done with the intent to hinder, delay, or defraud is evident from those same facts:

a) Mr. Johnson, a friend of the Appellant's, disavowed ever owning or possessing it the arena;

b) it was removed post-petition and post-conversion from the Appellant's property at the Appellant's direction by Mr. Curtis, another of the Appellant's friends;

c) there was no consideration paid for this arena;

d) it was still within the Appellant's possession and control up until the time it was moved;

e) the Appellant remained constructively under his control while it was in Mr. Curtis's possession;

f) it was never delivered to Mr. Johnson;

g) it was allegedly disposed of during financially troubled times; and

h) it was originally scheduled as owned by the Appellant.

These collective circumstances are clear indicia that the Appellant's claim to have transferred the arena was fiction. Moreover, under the prevailing standards for surmising fraudulent intent, they are sufficient "badges" of fraud from which the Bankruptcy Court could infer a fraudulent intent to hinder, delay and defraud.

Even if the Bankruptcy Court were to have accepted the Appellant's explanation that he had given the arena to Mr. Johnson by the time this case was either filed or converted, he had not consummated the gift with delivery. This is a necessarily act in order to effectively transfer legal title. See e.g. Estate of Kuenstler v. Trevino, 836 S.W.2d 715 (Tex.App.-San Antonio1992). Therefore, the Appellant's explanation fails.

Furthermore, the facts belie his claim. The Appellant's original Schedules claimed he owned the arena, and that Mr. Johnson was neither a creditor nor a person to whom payment was made within 90 days preceding the petition's filing. See Record Volume 4, PX 4 (Statement of Financial Affairs). Additionally, neither the original or amended SOFA identify the arena's transfer as one occurring in the year prior to the case's filing. This alleged gift also occurred after the Appellant had retained counsel, thus giving the Appellant an opportunity to consult with counsel prior to effectuating the alleged gift. Had his attorney's advice been sought, the attorney would likely have recognized that the gift had not and/or could not have been legally consummated, and would have advised against the Appellant acting as he claims. These factors are additional badges of fraud from which the Bankruptcy Court could find that the Appellant removed and concealed the arena with fraudulent intent. The collective effect of these facts and circumstances can easily lead to the conclusion that the Appellant fraudulently attempted to conceal the arena. The Appellant's present claim that this finding is clearly erroneous is without merit.

B. Damaged Guardrail

Similarly, there is ample evidence the Appellant permitted the post-petition, post-conversion removal of a quantity of damaged guardrail from his ranch. There was testimony that while on his ranch the Appellant met the truck picking-up the guardrail, directed it to the guardrail's location, identified what guardrail was to be removed, and permitted its removal. See Record pages 445-447 (testimony of Mason Cullins). The Trustee also testified that he neither knew about nor authorized the guardrail's removal or sale. See Record Page 262 (testimony of Mr. Morton). Again, there was no credible or substantiated evidence that this guardrail did not become property of the estate when the case was filed. Even if the Appellant had formed the intent pre-petition to gift this property, the gift was not consummated with delivery, thus causing the guardrail to remain property of the estate. See Estate of Kuenstler v. Trevino, supra. Post-petition, and especially post-conversion, the Appellant was without any authority to transfer or dispose of the guardrail. The Appellant's intent to hinder, delay, or defraud in trying to dispose of the property can be inferred from the fact that:

> a) Terry Gardner, the putative donee, has made no claim to the proceeds of sale, see Record page 261-263 (testimony of Mr. Morton);
> b) that the Appellant failed to consult the Trustee or any other party-in-interest before attempting to dispose of the guardrail, see Record page 262;
>
> c) that the guardrail was in the Appellant's possession and control when the case was filed;
> d) that the disposition was done during financial troubles; and > e) Mr. Gardner is not listed as a creditor, the recipient of a payment within 90 days, or the recipient of a transfer within the year before the case commenced. See Record Volume 4, PX 4 (Statement of Financial Affairs).

And as with the portable arena, the Appellant caused or allowed the property to be removed after counsel had been retained, and after the Appellant filed his schedules (both original and amended) wherein he does not show the guardrail as property being held for another.

Causing or permitting this guardrail to be removed and sold, either directly or though Mr. Gardner, was a post-petition transfer which removed and concealed property of the estate from the Trustee. The collective effect of this evidence can easily lead to the conclusion that the Appellant fraudulently attempted to conceal and dispose of the guardrail. The Appellant's claim that this finding is clearly erroneous is without merit.

C. Undisclosed Disposition of Weapons

There was also ample evidence that the Appellant owned more weapons than were disclosed on his schedules or discussed in his SOFA. There was also ample evidence that he removed, concealed, and/or transferred those weapons with the intent to hinder, delay, and/or defraud. Specifically, the Court found credible the testimony of Dr. Bailey, a friend of the Appellant, who stated that the Appellant had a large collection of weapons at his house after he purchased the house from the Appellant in June 2001. See Record page 372 (testimony of Dr. Bailey).[8] At the time, the Appellant neither did nor said anything to indicate these were not his weapons. See Record page 373 (testimony of Dr. Bailey). He thereby created at least the belief, if not a tacit representation of the actual fact, that these were really his weapons.

Moreover, there were at least two occasions between September 2003 and January 2004 when the Appellant is known to have appeared at Dr. Bailey's house and removed weapons. See Record pages 374-375 (testimony of Dr. Bailey), Record pages 391-395 (testimony of Maria Hurtado). Dr. Bailey testified that as of January 2004, the weapons had been removed. See Record page376. Since the Appellant did not credibly explain the loss or whereabouts of all the weapons in the safe, the Bankruptcy Court determined that those weapons were there when this case was filed, or were at least subject to the Appellant's possession and disposition at times which should have been discussed on the SOFA. The Court noted that the Appellant listed only three weapons on his schedules, far less than the amount Dr.

[8] In his deposition Dr. Bailey initially testified there may have been as many as 65 guns in the safe when it bought the safe. However, at trial he indicated he had since counted and found the safe to have 24 spaces for storing rifles and a shelf for pistols. See Record pages 373,377.

Bailey said the Appellant had in the safe.

However, Dr. Bailey’s testimony does not stand alone. It is supported by Mr. Neal’s testimony that about the time he purchased the Appellant’s .45 caliber Colt (shortly before this case was filed) the Appellant had let it be known he had other weapons for sale over and above those scheduled. Mr. Neal testified that by the time he told the Appellant he was interested in purchasing other weapons, there were apparently no more available. See Record pages 148-150 (testimony of Mr. Neal). No sales of weapons other than those already sold to Mr. Neal appeared on the Schedules and SOFA. Even if the Court accepted the explanation that these were not his weapons, the Appellant’s schedules do not identify any weapons as being held for others. See Record Volume 4, PX 4, (Statement of Financial Affairs, question 14).

Moreover, both Dr. Bailey’s and Mr. Neal’s testimony is supported by the testimony of Mr. Barker. He testified that shortly before this case was filed, both he and the Appellant went to Dr. Bailey’s house to view and negotiate for the purchase of the .45 caliber Colt. See Record page 839 (testimony of Mr. Barker). After the Appellant opened the safe, Mr. Barker observed the safe to be full of weapons, mostly rifles. See Record pages 837-840 (testimony of Mr. Barker). The Appellant neither did nor said anything to cause Mr. Barker to believe these weapons were not his. See Record page 840 (testimony of Mr. Barker). Based on the testimony of these four witnesses, it can hardly be said there was insufficient evidence from which the Court could find that the Appellant owned more weapons than were shown on his schedules.

As for the Appellant’s intent in not disclosing the weapons, the Court again looked to the surrounding circumstances for indicia of fraudulent intent;

> a) the Appellant sold the .45 caliber Colt to a friend at a time when he was under severe financial distress;
> b) he had left other weapons with another friend under circumstances where it was > unlikely anyone would know about their existence;

>
> c) there is no record of this or any other transactions of weapons, and the private ownership and sale of weapons is generally unregistered and untraceable;
>
> d) the Appellant also continued to exercise control over those weapons, as he was able to effectuate their disappearance and/or disposition at times relevant to this case; and
> e) other than later claiming that his 8 year-old son owned some of these large and powerful weapons, he did not volunteer anything in his testimony to suggest that the weapons in the safe as of June 2001 belonged to anyone other than himself.

Without credible evidence to contradict facts which strongly suggested that these weapons actually belonged to the Appellant, and having been directly asked about weapons and given ample opportunity to amend his schedules, the Court found sufficient indicia that the Appellant's failure to disclose his ownership and disposition of these weapons was done knowingly and fraudulently. Without doubt, the collective effect of this evidence can easily lead to the conclusion that the Appellant fraudulently attempted to conceal and dispose of undisclosed weapons. The Appellant's claim that there is insufficient evidence to support this finding is clearly without merit.

D. The Horses Justalena Peppy Dawn, Colonel Stone, Hickorys Up In Smoke, and Tari Gay Diamond

As relevant to this appeal, the Court found for the United States Trustee on Count 7 of the Complaint. That count alleged, and the Court found the Appellant's attempted concealment of his ownership of "Hickorys Up In Smoke" and "Colonel Stone" culpable under §727(a)(2)(A). The Bankruptcy Court also found for the United States Trustee on Counts 12 and 16 of the Complaint. Those Counts alleged, and the Court found that the Appellant's attempt to conceal his ownership of the horses, "Tari Gay Diamond",[9] and "Justalena Peppy Dawn" was culpable under §727(a)(2)(A) and §727(a)(2)(B).

[9] Other than indicating Tari Gay Diamond was purportedly sold pre-petition, the Bankruptcy Court's Opinion did not detail the sale the Appellant claimed to have made. The Appellant claimed in both his Schedules and creditors' meeting testimony to have sold the horse Tari Gay Diamond pre-petition to another friend, L.P. Carter. However, this horse was found on the Appellant's ranch during the January 5th seizure. There were no records produced at trial to memorialize the sale. Mr. Carter tried to claim this horse from the Bank after the seizure. Ultimately, the Bank filed suit in State court to "quiet title" to the horse. The Bank was awarded "title" to this horse.

Again, it is axiomatic that these horses become property of the estate when the case was filed. 11 U.S.C. §541. Documents from the AQHA and APHA clearly show that the Appellant had owned these horses.[10] See Record page 415-416, see also Record Volume 5, PX 16 (deposition pages 8-10, deposition Exhibit A, pages 27-28, Record Volume 5, PX 17 (deposition pages 2-3, deposition Exhibit A, pages 37-39, 46-48. Thereafter, the Appellant claims to have transferred these horses. However, the Court did not find these claims credible. Rather, the Court had before it evidence that the Appellant failed to schedule Hickorys Up In Smoke and Colonel Stone as being held for another, and that he attempted to "back-date" the purported transfers, see Record Volume 5, PX 17 (deposition pages 2-3). It also had before it evidence that:

> a) he registered Justalena Peppy Dawn into his name after the date he testified he sold the horse to someone else, see Record pages 415-416;
> b) that he pledged the horse to the Bank after the purported sale, see Record page 185 (security agreement), see also Record Volume 4, PX 7(m);
>
> c) that after he purportedly sold the horse he represented to the Bank that he was again trying to sell the horse, see Record pages 185-189 (testimony of Mr. Sloan), Record Volume 7, PX 25;
>
> d) that he continued to use the horse after he purportedly sold it. See Record pages 403-405 (testimony of Mr. Johnson) and Record page 851 (testimony of Mr. Barker);
> e) Tari Gay Diamond, Colonel Stone, and Hickorys Up In Smoke were all in his possession, see Record page 205 (testimony of Mr. Sloan), and Justalena Peppy Dawn was in the possession of a friend.

With only the Appellant's testimony to contradict that of these witnesses, there is ample evidence before the Court to conclude that the Appellant owned these horses when the case was filed. His attempts to cover that ownership constituted the concealment for purposes of §727(a)(2).

That the Appellant's attempt to conceal the horse's true ownership was done with the intent to hinder, delay, or defraud is again evident from the circumstances;

[10] The United States Trustee agrees with the Appellant that registration and registration certificates alone do not establish ownership. They are, however, indicia of ownership which the Court can consider in assessing whether or not the Appellant owned the horses during the time in question.

> a) Tari Gay Diamond, Colonel Stone, and Hickorys Up In Smoke were in the Appellant's possession at the time of seizure;
>
> b) Justalena Peppy Dawn was being held by a friend;
>
> c) these horses had been purportedly transferred to friends or family members for no apparent consideration or were allegedly transferred for cash;
>
> d) there are no records evidencing these transfers which were made contemporaneously with the transfers, and virtually no means to confirm the Appellant's story;[11]
>
> e) With respect to "Hickorys Up In Smoke" and "Colonel Stone", the Appellant did not schedule these horses as being held for his children, despite contending that he had gifted them more than a year and one-half prior;
>
> f) he did not volunteer to Mr. Sloan his recent change in the registration when he requested the Bank to release these horses;
>
> g) In the case of "Tari Gay Diamond", he did not volunteer his attempt to change the registration, even though the Bank knew the AQHA had refused to "back-date" the change of registrations; and
> h) he had continued use of Justalena Peppy Dawn after the purported transfer and shortly before this case was filed.

Based on the foregoing, there is more than sufficient evidence from this the Court can conclude by a preponderance that the concealment was done with a fraudulent intent to hinder delay, or defraud. Though the Appellant attempts to "nit-pick" the witnesses testimony, he points to no manifest error or omission in the Bankruptcy Court's analysis. On the joint and several Counts, there was sufficient evidence from which the Court could conclude that the Appellant concealed and/or removed weapons, the .45 Colt, the guardrail, and the horses with fraudulent intent, and that this warranted denying his discharge under §727(a)(2)(A) and or §727(a)(2)(B).

IV. There was more than sufficient evidence from which the Court could find that [11] It is somewhat hypocritical that the Appellant now argues how a horse's registration is not proof of ownership, when, at the time he tried to secure the horses' release from the Bank, he attempted to use those certificates for exactly that proposition.

by a preponderance that the Appellant made a false oath and account under 11 U.S.C. §727(a)(4) when he failed to disclose certain transfers, and when he failed to testify about those transfers at his creditors' meeting.

The Bankruptcy Court found for the United States Trustee on Count 20 and 21 of the Complaint. As relevant to this appeal, these Counts alleged under §727(a)(4)(A) that the Appellant knowingly and fraudulently made a false oath when he testified at the creditors' meetings about not owning any weapons other than those scheduled, and about having not sold or transferred any property (other than what is disclosed on the SOFA) outside the ordinary course of business in the year preceding the case.

Again, the Bankruptcy Court was free to accept or reject any or all of any witness's testimony, and to give whatever weight it felt appropriate to any or all evidence. As has been explained, there was more than sufficient evidence to show the Appellant owned and disposed of more property than he disclosed. See supra. It is highly unlikely a person would admit to disposing of certain items of his personal property while also maintaining that he never owned it. The Court's giving credibility to other witnesses' testimony instead of the Appellant's is not clearly erroneous. This other testimony provides a substantial basis for a finding of culpability in the Appellant's failure to disclose ownership and/or disposition of those assets, particularly when there is an affirmative duty to disclose such ownership and/or dispositions.

A. Undisclosed Ownership and Disposition of Weapons and .45 Caliber Pistol

Having found that the Appellant a) owned more weapons when this case was filed than were disclosed on his schedules, b) that he effectuated an undisclosed transaction of those weapons, and c) that he sold a .45 caliber Colt during a time when such transactions must be disclosed on the SOFA, the Court went on to find that the Appellant made a false oath when he filed the schedules and the SOFA which omitted information concerning the ownership and transaction of these weapons. See Record Volume 4, PX 4 (Schedule B question 8, and Statement of Financial Affairs question 10). There the Appellant scheduled only 3 weapons and the pre-petition transfer of only certain weapons, not including the kind witnesses indicated were in the safe, and not a sale of a .45 caliber Colt. Additionally, the Court had evidence that the Appellant testified, albeit falsely, at the creditors' meeting that he did not own other weapons, was not holding weapons for others, and/or had not transferred any weapons. See Record pages 292-293 (testimony of Mr. Harris), Record page 264 (testimony of Mr. Morton). For the same reasons and from the same circumstances surrounding the underlying transactions, the Court also inferred the Appellant's intent to defraud in making these statements. Any one of these false oaths warrants denying his discharge under §727(a)(4)(A).

The Appellant disputes that he owned or disposed of any weapons other than those shown on his schedules. But as discussed supra, the Appellant fails to show how the Bankruptcy Court's findings about his having owned and disposed of other weapons was clearly erroneous. Until that is shown, there is little "room" for the Appellant to argue that there was a concomitant and clearly erroneous finding that he fraudulently made a false oath and account about his ownership and disposition of the weapons.

Interestingly, the Appellant does not dispute the fact that the sale of the .45 caliber Colt occurred, or that the sale was not disclosed on his schedules. Even if this Court were to find the Bankruptcy Court's findings about the Appellant's ownership of additional weapons clearly erroneous, the failure to disclose the sale of the .45 caliber Colt on the SOFA and his false testimony about not having made such a sale was sufficient false oath or account to deny his discharge. See Mitchell, supra, see also United States Trustee v. Moschella (In re Moschella), Case No. 04-4055 (Bankr. N.D. Tex. Aug. 9, 2004).

B. Undisclosed Disposition of the Tennis Bracelet

The Appellant failed to schedule his disposition of the diamond tennis bracelet. Although it is unclear whether this sale occurred pre- or post-petition, it occurred. There is no dispute over this fact. There is also no dispute that it was not scheduled. See Record Volume 4, PX 4 (Statement of Financial Affairs, question 10). Standing alone, the failure to schedule the sale was a false oath and account for §727(a)(4) purposes. That the failure to disclose this transaction was done fraudulently was inferred from the circumstances;

a) the sale occurred at a time the Appellant was under sever financial distress;

b) it was facilitated by a friend of the Appellant;

c) it was done in cash;

d) it is not the kind of property typically bought with cash; and

e) it was not memorialized by any check, receipts, or any other documentation.

It appears the Appellant's chief complaint about the Bankruptcy Court's finding that he should have disclosed the bracelet's sale is that the bracelet was not his. However, the mother testified that she gave the Appellants the bracelet with donative intent, she delivered it to them, and had no expectation that it be returned. See Record pages 883-884. As the Bankruptcy Court pointed out in the Appellant's closing argument, see Record pages 924-925, at the time of delivery, all the elements of a gift had been met and the watch became his. That he did not comprehend the import of his receipt and subsequent sale does not mitigate against its legal effect. More importantly, he should have disclosed the transaction regardless of what he believed rather than making a legal decision on his own about the effect. See e.g. FDIC v. Sullivan (In re Sullivan), supra (if a Appellant is uncertain as to whether certain assets are legally required to be included in his petition, it is his duty to disclose the assets so that any questions may be resolved). That he chose not to disclose the transaction when there was any question of its legal effect is yet another circumstance from which the Court could construe fraudulent intent. Since the Appellant does not and cannot dispute that the sale of the bracelet occurred, and that the sale was not disclosed on the SOFA, he cannot assert the Bankruptcy Court's findings on this issue was clearly erroneous. Without being clearly erroneous, there is no error in the Bankruptcy Court's factual finding.

STATEMENT REGARDING ORAL ARGUMENT

This appeal is essentially premised on the Appellant's contention that both the Bankruptcy Court's and District Court's decisions were against the manifest weight of the evidence. The Appellant advances neither errors of law nor novel legal theories. The evidence on which those decisions were based clearly appear in the trial court record. This Court can fully assess from that record whether there was sufficient evidence to support those Courts' findings. The United States Trustee believes oral argument is unnecessary.

STATEMENT OF JURISDICTION

The Debtor filed a voluntary petition under §301 and §1101 et seq. of Title 11 of the United States Code.[1] The bankruptcy court had jurisdiction under 28 U.S.C. §§ 157(a) and (b), and 1334(a) to hear the underlying case and the adversary complaint brought under 11 U.S.C. §727(a). The bankruptcy court's adjudication of that complaint constituted a final and immediately appealable order. See In re Koch, 109 F.3d 1285, 1287 (8th Cir. 1997), In re Christian, 804 F.2d 46, 47-48 (3d Cir. 1986). The Defendant timely filed a notice of appeal from that order to the District Court. The District Court had jurisdiction to hear the appeal under 28 U.S.C. § 158(a). The district court affirmed, and the Defendant timely filed a notice of appeal to this Court. This Court has jurisdiction to hear the appeal under 28 U.S.C. § 158(d) and §1291.

STANDARD OF REVIEW

The issues raised in this particular appeal are solely questions of fact. Questions of fact will not be reversed unless found to be clearly erroneous. See Fed. R. Bankr. Pro. 8013.

STATEMENT OF ISSUES TO BE PRESENTED

1) Whether the District Court erred in finding that the Bankruptcy Court had

[1] The case was subsequently converted to a case under Chapter 7, 11 U.S.C. §701 et seq.

sufficient evidence to conclude that the Appellant, with fraudulent intent transferred numerous items in violation of 11 U.S.C. §727(a)(2)(A) and (B).

2) Whether the District Court erred in finding that the Bankruptcy Court had sufficient evidence to conclude that the Appellant fraudulently made a false oath in violation of 11 U.S.C. §727(a)(4)(A).

STATEMENT OF THE CASE

The Appellant filed a voluntary pro se Chapter 11 petition on November 4, 2003. On December 12, 2003, the Bankruptcy Court converted this case to Chapter 7. The U.S. Trustee timely filed a complaint seeking under 11 U.S.C. §727 to deny the Appellant's discharge. The Complaint, as amended, alleged 21 counts under §727. Trial was held over several days in October and November 2004. On March 30, 2005, the Bankruptcy Court entered its Memorandum Opinion finding for the U.S. Trustee on seven of those counts. On April 4, 2005, the Bankruptcy Court entered an Order denying the Appellant's discharge. On April 15, 2005, the Appellant filed a motion for a new trial. On July 21, 2005, after a hearing on that Motion, the Bankruptcy Court denied the Appellant a new trial. The Appellant appealed that decision to the U.S. District Court. On March 21, 2006, the District Court issued its Opinion and Order affirming the Bankruptcy Court's decision in all respects. The Appellant now appeals the District Court's March 21, 2006, decision.

STATEMENT OF FACTS

Prior to filing bankruptcy, the Appellant was engaged in the repaire of roads and highways. The Appellant was also involved in a variety of avocational activities, including the owning, breeding, and training of horses. The Appellant periodically bought and sold horses, but also used some horses to participate in roping and other rodeo activities. He practiced for these activities in a Preifert portable arena he owned and kept on his ranch. See infra. Most of the horses he owned were registered quarter and paint horses.

Starting on or about December 16, 1998, the Appellant and First Coleman National Bank ("Bank") entered into what became a series of loans and security agreements. See App. Record Vol. 2, pages 161-179, see also Plaintiff's Exhibit Vol. 4, Exhibit 6(a)-6(q), PX 7(a)-(p). These transactions stretched over the next several years and culminated in the Appellant owing the Bank $2,216,064.04. Through these contracts, the Appellant had given the Bank encumbrances on inter alia a ranch of approximately 392 acres, virtually all his other personal property, equipment, vehicles, fixtures, and livestock, including, 29 specifically identified horses. One of these was a horse was named “Justalena Peppy Dawn”, see infra.

Beginning approximately June 2000 the Appellant began having financial difficulties. See App. Rec. Vol. 2, page 192. The Bank began to pressure the Appellant for payments. Despite receiving additional loans and concessions from the Bank, his troubles continued. Ultimately, these defaults and the Bank’s pressure led the Appellant to file a voluntary Chapter 11 proceeding on November 4, 2003.

PRE-PETITION TRANSACTIONS

Diamond Tennis Bracelet

Several years before filing this case, the Appellant purchased for his wife a diamond tennis bracelet from Keith Neal, a pawn store owner in Brownwood, Texas. See App. Rec. Vol. 2, pages 144-146. Sometime thereafter, Mrs. Baum developed medical problems which required the Appellant’s mother to care for their children. To repay those services, the Appellant and Mrs. Baum gave Mrs. Baum’s mother the bracelet. See App. Rec. Vol. 3, pages 575, Vol. 4, page 883. As the Appellant’s financial problems deepened, Mr.s Baum’s mother gifted the bracelet back to the Appellants, see App. Rec. Vol. 4, page 883, without any expectation that she get it or the proceeds from its sale. See App. Rec. Vol. 4, page 884. Approximately two weeks before this case was filed, the Appellant resold the bracelet to Mr. Neal for $2,500.00. See App. Rec. Vol. 2, pages 146-148. The Appellants Statement of Financial Affairs (“SOFA”) required him to disclose all transfers of assets within the year prior to filing of his case. The Appellant did not disclose the sale of the tennis bracelet. See Plaintiff's Exh. Vol. 4, Exhibit 4 (SOFA, questions 6-7, 10), Exhibit 5 (SOFA, questions 6-7, 10).

Weapons

Approximately a year before filing this case, the Appellant sold the house he lived in to Dr. Bailey, one of his friends. See App. Rec. Vol. 3, page 369. In a separate transaction done about the same day, the Appellant also sold Dr. Bailey a large steel gun safe which he left at Dr. Bailey's house. See App. Rec. Vol. 3, pages 369-370. When Dr. Bailey bought the safe he observed it to be full of guns, mostly rifles. See App. Rec. Vol. 3, page 372. Dr. Bailey originally estimated the number of weapons at between 60 and 65, but later learned the safe had spaces for 24 rifles and a shelf for pistols. See App. Rec. Vol. 3, pages 373, 377. At the time of this sale the Appellant said or did nothing to suggest that these weapons belonged to anyone other than himself. See App. Rec. Vol. 3, page 373. Only Dr. Bailey's wife and the Appellant knew how to open the safe. See App. Rec. Vol. 3, page 371. Between September 2003 and January 2004, just before and two months after he filed bankruptcy, the Appellant came to Dr. Bailey's house at least two times and removed guns from the safe. Once he was observed by Dr. Bailey, see App. Rec. Vol. 3, pages 374-375, and once by Maria Hurtado, Dr. Bailey's housekeeper. See App. Rec. Vol. 3, pages 391-395. Approximately January 2004, Dr. Bailey observed the open safe and found it to contain only the few weapons he (Dr. Bailey) owned. See App. Rec. Vol. 3, page 376.

As the Appellant's financial troubles continued, he let it be known in the community he had weapons in a safe for sale. See App. Rec. Vol. 2, pages 148-149, Vol 4, page 835. Several weeks before this case was filed, Mr. Barker, then a friend of the Appellant, went with the Appellant to Dr. Bailey's house to examine a .45 caliber pistol he was considering purchasing. See App. Rec. Vol. 4, pages 839-840. Although Mr. Barker and the Appellant could not agree on a price, Mr. Barker observed the safe to be full of weapons. See App. Rec. Vol. 4, pages 837-840. Mr. Barker also indicated he did not purchase the gun because the Appellant told him he intended to file bankruptcy, and Mr. Barker believed it was too close to his doing so to buy weapons. See App. Rec. Vol. 4, pages 842-843. The Appellant eventually sold the pistol to Mr. Neal for $500.00. See App. Rec. Vol. 2, page 152-153.

The Appellant's Schedule required him to disclose all weapons he owned. His SOFA required him to disclose all transfers made within the year prior to filing. See Plaintiff's Exh. Vol. 4, Exh. 4 (SOFA, questions 5-8, 10). Other than a .308 rifle, a .22 mag rifle, and a .22 rifle, see Plaintiff's Exh. Vol. 4, Exh. 4 (Schedule B), the Appellant did not schedule any other weapons. Though he disclosed the sale of 2 shotguns and a rifle to Keith Neal for $600.00, see Plaintiff's Exh. Vol. 4, Exh. 4 (SOFA, question 14), the Appellant did not disclose the sale of the .45 caliber pistol.

POST-PETITION TRANSACTIONS

Preifert Portable Arena

The Appellant owned a Preifert portable arena which he kept and used on his ranch. See App. Rec. Vol. 3, page 398, see also Plaintiff's Exh. Vol. 11, Exh. 4. This arena was pledged to the Bank as general equipment collateral. See App. Rec. Vol. 2, page 179, See also Plaintiff's Exh. Vol. 4, Exh. 7(p). On January 5, 2004, after the case was converted to Chapter 7, and the Bankruptcy Court had given the Bank permission to foreclose its collateral, the Bank's agents appeared at the Appellant's ranch.[3] See App. Rec. Vol. 2, page 199. Though these agents noted that the arena was on the property at that time, they did not seize it, as they anticipated foreclosing the ranch the next day and did not want to incur the expense of moving it. See App. Rec. Vol. 2, page 199. The ranch was foreclosed January 6, 2004, but the Bank did not actually physically take possession until February 11, 2004. See App. Rec. Vol. 2, pages 199, 207. However, on or about February 3, 2004, before taking possession of the ranch, the agent noted that the arena was no longer there. See App. Rec. Vol. 2, [3] The Bank initially tried to peacefully foreclose on December 18, 2004. However, the Appellant refused the Bank's representatives peaceful entry to the property, stating that he was going to require the Bank to obtain yet another Court order. The Bank then filed for and obtained a writ of sequestration from the State Court.

---

pages 199, 229. The Bank later found the arena in the possession of one John Curtis, another friend of the Appellant. See infra.

The Appellant's original Schedules and SOFA, which were filed on January 10, 2004, two months after the case commenced, indicated the Appellant owned a Preifert portable arena with a fair market value of $12,000.00.[4] See Plaintiff's Exh. Vol. 4, Exh. 4 (Schedule B, question 31, exhibit B-31). However, the Appellant testified at the first creditors' meeting on January 22, 2004[5] that the arena belonged to one Russell Johnson, a friend of the Appellant's. See App. Rec. Vol. 2, page 228. The Appellant then amended his SOFA, to show that he was only holding the arena for Mr. Johnson. See Plaintiff's Exh. Vol 4, Exh. 5 (SOFA, question 14).

Contrary to the Appellant's testimony and amended schedules, Mr. Johnson testified at trial that he never owned or claimed any interest in that arena. See App. Rec. Vol. 3, pages 399-401, 410. Rather, he said the Appellant offered the arena to him in payment of a personal favor he thought he owed him.[6] See App. Rec. Vol. 3, pages 399-401. Mr. Johnson was never scheduled as a creditor, nor was he shown as

[4] It was only after the Appellant retained counsel on or about December 30, 2003, that the Appellant filed any schedules or a statement of financial affairs. Such documents should have been filed 15 days after the case was filed. However, even after the Bankruptcy Court extended the due-date to December 4, 2003, the Appellant still did not file schedules and a SOFA until January 10, 2004.

[5] Technical problems caused there to be no audible or useable recording of either meeting.

[6] Mr. Johnson could not identify whether the Appellant's offer of the arena was pre- or post-petition. However, the only difference the date would make is whether §727(a)(2)(A) or (a)(2)(B) was applicable. The resulting effect of the transfer would have been the same regardless of the date it occurred.

the recipient of any transfers in the prior year. See Plaintiff's Exh. Vol. 4, Exh. 4 (SOFA, questions 6-7). Rather, after the case converted to Chapter 7, the Appellant asked John Curtis, another friend, to hold the arena for Mr. Johnson. See App. Rec. Vol. 3, pages 434-438. Mr. Curtis agreed, took the arena from the Appellant's ranch. see App. Rec. Vol. 3, page 436, and held it on his own property until the Bank learned of its whereabouts. Mr. Curtis ultimately surrendered the arena to the Bank. See App. Rec. Vol. 2, page 229, Vol. 3, page 437.

Damaged Guardrail

The Appellant was in possession of a quantity of damaged guardrail at his ranch when he filed this case. See See App. Rec. Vol. 2, page 261. On or about February 20, 2004, the Appellant, by or through another friend, Terry Gardner, arranged with Pine Street Salvage in Abilene to sell this damaged guardrail as scrap. See See App. Rec. Vol. 2, page 262. Mason Cullins, an agent of the Pine Street Salvage, drove a truck to the Appellant's ranch and, and with the Appellant's personal assistance and direction, loaded this guardrail onto the truck. See See App. Rec. Vol. 3, pages 445-447. Mr. Cullins then took this guardrail to Pine Street Salvage, which weighed and purchased it for $532.40. See See App. Rec. Vol. 2, page 262, see also Plaintiff's Exh. Vol. 7, Exh. 23. The Chapter 7 Trustee, learned of this unauthorized sale of estate property and intercepted the check. See See App. Rec. Vol. 2, page 262. This guardrail was property of the bankruptcy estate. It was, however, neither scheduled nor exempted. The Trustee had not authorized the Appellant to dispose of the property, nor did the Appellant ask his permission. See See App. Rec. Vol. 2, page 262.

The Horse Justalena Peppy Dawn

The October 25, 2002, security agreement specifically granted a lien on a horse named "Justalena Peppy Dawn". See App. Rec. Vol. 2, page 185, see also Plaintiff's Exh. Vol. 4, Exh. 7(m). Shortly after granting the Bank this lien, the Appellant delivered the horse's registration papers to the Bank. See App. Rec. Vol. 2, page 184. However, the Bank did not find Justalena Peppy Dawn on the Appellant's ranch when it seized its collateral. It was later found in the possession of Tim Broadfoot, another friend. See App. Rec. Vol. 2, page 200.

The Appellant testified at his creditors' meeting that Justalena Peppy Dawn was sold to Billy Dean Wilson, another of the Appellant's friends, on October 20, 2002. See App. Rec. Vol. 2, pages 218, 233, 289. However, on October 23, 2002, three days after the Appellant said he sold Justalena Peppy Dawn to Mr. Wilson, the Appellant had presented the American Quarter Horse Association ("AQHA") a transfer report asking that he be shown as the horse's owner. See App. Rec. Vol. 3, pages 415-416, see also Plaintiff's Exh. Vol. 5, Exh. 16 (deposition page 8-10, deposition exhibit A, pages 27-28).

Moreover, in February 2003, the Appellant was trying to sell this horse and asked the Bank for the registration certificates. See App. Rec. Vol. 2, page 185. The Bank delivered the papers to the Appellant, who apparently took them with him to a horse event in Big Spring. See App. Rec. Vol. 2, page 186. Faxes exchange between the Bank and the Appellant indicate the Appellant was still trying to sell that horse through at least April 2003. See App. Rec. Vol. 2, pages 186-189. The AQHA records show that when this case was filed the Appellant owned Justalena Peppy Dawn. See Plaintiff's Exh. Vol. 5, Exh. 16 (deposition pages 8-10, deposition exhibit pages 27-28). Furthermore, Russell Johnson testified that in September 2003, he observed the Appellant riding this horse in an event in San Angelo, see App. Rec. Vol. 3, pages 403-404, as did Mr. Barker. See App. Rec. Vol. 4, page 851.

The Horses Hickorys Up In Smoke and Colonel Stone

The Appellant also owned horses named "Hickorys Up In Smoke" and "Colonel Stone". He scheduled these horses, but indicated they were being held for his children. See Plaintiff's Exh. Vol. 4, Exh. 4 (SOFA, question 14 and exhibit SFA-14). These horses were seized from the ranch on January 5, 2004. Because he claimed these horses belonged to his children, on or about January 24, 2004, the Appellant requested that these horses be released. See App. Rec. Vol 2, pages 208, 210. On January 25, 2004, he presented Mr. Sloan with registration certificates from the American Paint Horse Association ("APHA"), see App. Rec. Vol 2, page 211, which indicated that the Appellant had transferred the two horses to his children on May 10, 2002. See App. Rec. Vol 2, page 212, see also Plaintiff's Exh. Vol. 6, Exh. 17 (deposition page 2). However, the Bank learned the request to change the horses' records was presented to the APHA on January 23, 2004, and that the Appellant provided the APHA with the dates of these alleged transfers. See App. Rec. Vol 2, page 213. The Appellant did not volunteer this recent record change to Mr. Sloan. See App. Rec. Vol 2, page 213.

Testimony at the Creditors' Meeting

The Debtor testified at his creditors' meetings under oath. See 11 U.S.C. §343. He was asked about his transfer of the tennis bracelet and about weapons other than the ones he had scheduled. See App. Rec. Vol 2, pages 292-293, 264. He denied owning any other weapons, including any at Dr. Bailey's house, and testified that the tennis bracelet belonged to his mother.

Requirements of the Schedules and Statement of Financial

The Schedules and SOFA required him to disclose under penalty of perjury all assets he owned or was holding for anyone else. See e.g. Plaintiff's Exh. Vol. 4, Exh. (Schedules A and B, SOFA, question 14. They also required him to disclose the disposition of any assets within one year before he filed bankruptcy. See e.g. Plaintiff's Exh. Vol. 4, Exh. 4 (SOFA, questions 5-8, 10).

Inter alia, as a result of the foregoing conduct, U.S. Trustee filed a complaint to deny the Appellant's discharge. Only Mr. Baum was named as a defendant. After a three and one-half day trial, the Bankruptcy Court found for the United States Trustee on counts related to these failures and denied the Appellant's discharge. The Defendant moved for a new trial. The Bankruptcy Court found after a hearing that the Appellant failed to identify any grounds warranting a new trial. The Appellant then prosecuted an appeal to the United States District Court. In an Opinion that demonstrated a thorough reviewed the evidence, the District Court found there to be more than sufficient evidence from which the Bankruptcy Court could conclude that the Appellant materially violated a variety of the provisions in 11 U.S.C. §727(a). It is from this March 21, 2006, Opinion that the Appellant appeals to this Court.

SUMMARY OF THE ARGUMENT

The United States Trustee's Complaint to deny the Debtor's discharge under 11 U.S.C. §727(a) was based inter alia upon the Debtor's concealment, transfer, and removal of assets, and upon the Debtor's having given a false oath and/or account with respect to his assets and transfers. At trial, the United States Trustee presented a multitude of witnesses and exhibits substantiating the Complaint's allegations. In a detailed Opinion, the Bankruptcy Court denied the Debtor's discharge based upon specific facts and circumstances which demonstrated not only the transfers, concealments, removals, and false oaths and accounts, but also circumstances from which the Court inferred that the Debtor took these actions with fraudulent intent. The Debtor appealed the Bankruptcy Court's decision to the District Court. The District Court found that the Bankruptcy Court's findings were not clearly erroneous, and that there was more than enough evidence from which it could find the Debtor culpable for the acts alleged in the Complaint. In this appeal, the Debtor continues to plead that the Bankruptcy Court's findings were clearly erroneous, whereas the United States Trustee maintains that there was more than sufficient evidence to demonstrate how the Debtor knowingly and fraudulently transferred, removed, and concealed assets and gave a false oath and account with respect to those assets.

ARGUMENT

I. Initial Observations Concerning the Appellant's Brief

Taken as a whole, it appears the Appellant continues to contend that the lower Courts' findings are against the manifest weight of the evidence. It also appears, however, the Appellant continues not to understand that factual findings cannot be reversed or supplanted on appeal unless clearly erroneous. Federal Rule of Bankruptcy Procedure 8013. See also First National Bank LaGrange v. Martin (In re Martin), 963 F.2d 809 (5th Cir. 1992), *In re Anderson, 936 F.2d 199, 204 (5th Cir.1991)* ("The bankruptcy court is in the best position to judge the credibility of any witness who testifies under oath before it . . ."), *Matter of Texas Mortgage Services Corp., 761 F.2d 1068, 1078 (5th Cir.1985)* ("We will not attempt to reassess the credibility of witnesses whom we have not had an opportunity to see on the stand"). As the District Court explained, Judge Jones was afforded wide discretion when considering the evidence, and was free to believe or disbelieve any or all of the testimony of any witness, and give total, little, or no effect to any or all of the exhibits. He was required to weigh that testimony and evidence according to the beliefs developed during trial, and to rule accordingly. While the Appellant's Brief identifies fragments, and paraphrases of various witnesses' testimony, see e.g. Appellant's Brief pg. 10-12, these do nothing to discredit, refute, or render suspect the quality or quantity of evidence on which Judge Jones relied.

It is difficult to glean the Appellant's legal theories in support of reversing either of the lower Courts' decisions. For example, his Brief discusses how the Bankruptcy Court erred in making findings concerning facts and issues which are wholly unrelated to the Counts on which the U.S. Trustee prevailed. See e.g. Appellant's Brief, page 5, ¶2 (discussing how the U.S. Trustee waived the right to complain about schedules not being timely filed because the Appellant's spouse was not named as a defendant). He also complains about various adjectives and characterizations in the U.S. Trustee's District Court Brief, see e.g. Appellant's Brief page 26 (complaining about use of the term "avocational"), and about transactions never made an issue in Bankruptcy Court. See e.g. Appellant's Brief pg. 22 (discussing the purchase of - presumably a horse - named Genuine Command). The Appellant also intermixes facts and findings, and never identifies with specificity how the evidence was insufficient to reach a preponderance.

In general, the Brief is a series of confusing and self-serving statements which at times border on gibberish. Most of these statements chronicle the findings the Defendant wishes the Bankruptcy Court would have made, but did not. In its entirety, the Appellant appears to claim the lower Courts erred simply because they rejected the "I testified about it, and therefore it must be true" approach he advances. Furthermore, what the Appellant characterizes as factual "inconsistencies" does not invalidate the inferences or conclusions Judge Jones was entitled to make from the totality of evidence, particularly given that the burden of proof was to a preponderance. Clearly, as the District Court discussed, there was sufficient evidence to support a finding for the U.S. Trustee on the seven relevant Counts. In the present appeal, the Debtor raises no novel arguments identifying clearly erroneous findings.

II. Applicable Law

A. Concealment, Transfer, and Removal of Assets

Debtors who file Chapter 7 bankruptcy will typically receive a discharge of all dischargable debts provided they inter alia fully list all their pre-petition assets, liabilities, and transactions, truthfully testify about their financial affairs, do not conceal any assets, and file their petition in "good faith". However, if debtors materially fail with those duties or in any of those respects, they can be denied their discharge. See generally, 11 U.S.C. §727(a).

In the Appellant's case, the Bankruptcy Court found for the U.S. Trustee principally on two subsections of 11 U.S.C. §727(a); the subsection dealing with the transfer and concealment of assets, and the subsection dealing with making a false oath or account. As to the former, §727(a)(2) states in pertinent part:

> (2) the Appellant, with intent to hinder, delay, or defraud a creditor or an officer of the estate charged with custody of property under this title, has transferred, removed, destroyed, mutilated, or concealed, or has permitted to be transferred, removed, destroyed, mutilated, or concealed--
>
>> (A) property of the Appellant, within one year before the date of the filing of the petition; or
>> (B) property of the estate, after the date of the filing of the petition;

The U.S. Trustee had the burden of proving the elements of §727(a) by a preponderance. In re Womble, 289 B.R. 836 (Bankr. N.D. Tex. 2003).

To succeed under §727(a)(2)(A) (pre-petition concealment) or §727(a)(2)(B) (post-petition concealment), a plaintiff must establish that: (1) the Appellant transferred, removed, or concealed, or permitted to be transferred, removed, or concealed; (2) property of (i) the Appellant within one year before the petition was filed [in the case of a pre-petition concealment - §727(a)(2)(A)] or (ii) property of the bankruptcy estate [in the case of a post-petition concealment - §727(a)(2)(B)]; (3) with the intent to hinder, delay or defraud the creditor. In re Bastrom, 106 B.R. 223 (Bankr. D. Mont.1989), In re Martin, 88 B.R. 319 (D. Colo.1988). Any transfer of interest in property, including a transfer of possession, custody, or control in the absence of any transfer of title, qualifies as a "transfer" within the meaning of §727(a)(2) . In re Golob, 252 B.R. 69 (Bankr. E.D. Va. 2000). This includes property of which Appellant has possession, either actual or constructive.

To prove an act of "concealment" within the meaning of §727(a)(2), it must shown that Appellant placed assets beyond the reach of creditors or withheld knowledge of assets by failing or refusing to divulge information to which creditors were entitled. In re Hayes, 229 B.R. 253 (1st Cir. BAP 1999).

B. False Oath or Account

As for dealing with a false oath or account, §727(a)(4) states in pertinent part:

> (a) The court shall grant the Appellant a discharge, unless--
>
> (4) the Appellant knowingly and fraudulently, in or in connection with the case--
> (A) made a false oath or account....

To prevail under §727(a)(4)(A), it must be proven that a) the Defendant made a statement under oath, b) the statement was false, c) the Appellant knew the statement was false, d) the Appellant made the statement with fraudulent intent, and e) the statement materially related to the bankruptcy case. Beaubouef v. Beaubouef, (In re Beaubouef), 966 F.2d 174 (5th Cir. 1992), Morton v. Dreyer (In re Dreyer), 127 B.R. 587 (Bankr. N.D. Tex.1991). A false oath can include testimony given at a creditors' meeting or information listed in or omitted from the schedules or SOFA. In re Korte, 262 B.R. 464 (8th Cir. BAP Iowa 2001).

C. The Intent Elements of §727(a)

A plaintiff can demonstrate the intent elements of §727(a) by circumstantial evidence, Pavy v. Chastant (In re Chastant), 873 F.2d 89 (5th Cir. 1989), and may be inferred from "badges of fraud" which include, but are not limited to:

> a) the lack or inadequacy of consideration;
>
> b) the family, friendship, or close association between the parties to a transaction;
>
> c) the retention of possession, benefit, or use of the property in question;
>
> d) the financial condition of the party both before and after the transactions in question;
>
> e) the existence or cumulative effect of the pattern or series of transactions or course of conduct after the onset of financial difficulties; and/or
> f) the general chronology of the events and transactions.

In re Womble, supra. Any one or more of these factors may be sufficient to find fraudulent intent, and an accumulation of several factors is strongly indicative of the requisite intent. FDIC v. Sullivan (In re Sullivan), 204 B.R. 919 (Bankr. N.D. Tex. 1997), Cullen Center Bank & Trust v. Lightfoot (In re Lightfoot), 152 B.R. 141 (Bankr. S.D. Tex. 1993), Sholdra v. Chilmark Fin., L.L.P. (In re Sholdra), 249 F.3d 380 (5th Cir. 2001). See The Cadle Company v. Mitchell (In re Mitchell), 102 Fed. Appx. 860 (5th Cir. 2004). Fraudulent intent may also be shown by reckless indifference to the truth. In re Krich, 97 B.R. 919 (Bkrtcy.N.D.Ill.1988).

III. There was sufficient evidence to find that the Appellant fraudulently transferred items in violation of 11 U.S.C. §727(a)(2)(A) and (B)

It is axiomatic that when this case was filed all the Appellant's property, regardless of where located or the character of the Appellant's interest in that property, became property of his bankruptcy estate. See 11 U.S.C. §541. After the case's conversion to Chapter 7, the Appellant lost all legal right to unilaterally convert, transfer, or effectuate any disposition of any of his property.

Counts 5 and 6 of the United States Trustee's Complaint allege under §727(a)(2)(A) and (a)(2)(B) that the Appellant's removal and concealment of inter alia the Preifert portable arena, other weapons, and the damaged guardrail property violated §727(a)(2).[7] The evidence clearly shows that in addition to the horses (which are the subject of additional counts, see infra), the Appellant removed, transferred, or concealed the portable arena, weapons, and guardrail.

A. Portable Arena

There was ample evidence from which the lower Courts could find that the Appellant owned the arena when he filed the case, that he attempted to conceal his ownership, and that he attempted to conceal the arena from both the Bank and the Trustee. This included:

a) the receipt for the arena's purchase, see Plaintiff's Exh. Vol. 11, Exh. 4; [7] These Counts also allege that the Appellant removed and/or concealed the .45 pistol and tennis bracelet. The Court found that the Appellant had neither illegally removed nor concealed these items. However, the Court also found culpable the Appellant's failure to disclose the transfers. See infra.

> b) the original Schedules wherein Appellant identified himself as owner of the arena, see Plaintiff's Exh. Vol. 4, Exh. 4 (Schedule B, Exhibit B-31); > c) the arena appeared on a person financial statement the Appellant published, see Plaintiff's Exh. Vol. 11, Exh. 4, page 3; > d) that he was in possession of the arena when the case was converted to Chapter 7, see App. Rec. Vol. 2, page 199;
>
>
> e) the testimony of Mr. Sloan that arena was on the ranch at the time of foreclosure, see App. Rec. Vol. 2, page 199;
>
> f) that he caused it to be removed, see App. Rec. Vol. 4, page 436;
>
> g) testimony of John Curtis that Appellant asked him to hold the arena, see App. Rec. Vol. 3, page 434-438; and > h) testimony of Mr. Johnson denying having accepted or having possession and/or control over the arena), see App. Rec. Vol. 3, pages 399-401, 410.

By removing the arena or permitting its removal after a) the case was filed, b) after the case was converted to Chapter 7, and c) after the Bank was given authority to seize its collateral, the Appellant knowingly removed and concealed the arena from both the Bank and/or the Trustee, either of which were entitled to possess it. There was more than sufficient evidence from which the Court could that the Appellant's claim to have transferred the arena was fiction.

That this was done with the fraudulent intent is evident from those same facts:

> a) Mr. Johnson, a friend of the Appellant's, disavowed ever owning or possessing it the arena;
>
> b) it was removed post-petition and post-conversion from the Appellant's property at the Appellant's direction by another of the Appellant's friends;
>
> c) there was no consideration paid for this arena;
> d) it was still within the Appellant's possession and control up until the time it was moved;

e) the Appellant remained constructively under his control while it was in Mr. Curtis's possession;

f) it was never delivered to Mr. Johnson;

g) it was allegedly disposed of during financially troubled times; and

h) it was originally scheduled as owned by the Appellant.

Under the prevailing standards, there are sufficient "badges" of fraud from which the lower Courts could infer a fraudulent intent to hinder, delay and defraud.

Even if the lower Courts had accepted the Appellant's explanation that he had given the arena to Mr. Johnson, he had not consummated the gift with delivery. This is a necessarily act in order to effectively transfer legal title. See e.g. Estate of Kuenstler v. Trevino, 836 S.W.2d 715 (Tex.App.-San Antonio1992). Therefore, the Appellant's explanation fails.

Furthermore, the facts belie his claim. The Appellant's original Schedules claimed he owned the arena, and that Mr. Johnson was neither a creditor nor the recipient of a transfer within 90 days preceding the petition's filing. See Plaintiff's Exh. Vol. 4, Exh. 4 (SOFA). Additionally, neither the original or amended SOFA identify the arena's transfer as occurring in the year prior to bankruptcy. This alleged gift also occurred after the Appellant had retained counsel, thus giving the Appellant an opportunity to consult with counsel, who would likely have advised that the gift had not and/or could not have been legally consummated. These factors are additional badges of fraud from which the Bankruptcy Court could find that the Appellant removed and concealed the arena with fraudulent intent. The collective effect of these facts and circumstances could easily lead the District Court to the conclusion that the Bankruptcy Court's findings were not clearly erroneous.

B. Damaged Guardrail

There is ample evidence the Appellant permitted the post-petition, post-conversion removal of a quantity of damaged guardrail from his ranch. There was testimony that while on his ranch the Appellant met the truck picking-up the guardrail, directed it to the guardrail's location, identified what guardrail was to be removed, and permitted its removal. See App. Rec. Vol, 3, pages 445-447. The Trustee also testified that he neither knew about nor authorized the guardrail's removal or sale. See App. Rec. Vol, 2, page 262. Again, there was no credible or substantiated evidence that this guardrail did not become property of the estate when the case was filed. Even if the Appellant had formed the intent pre-petition to gift this property, the gift was not consummated with delivery and, therefore, remained property of the estate. See Estate of Kuenstler v. Trevino, supra.

The Appellant's intent to hinder, delay, or defraud in trying to dispose of the property can be inferred from the fact that:

> a) Terry Gardner, the putative donee, has made no claim to the proceeds of sale, see App. Rec. Vol, 2, pages 261-263;

> b) the Appellant failed to consult the Trustee or any other party before attempting to dispose of the guardrail, see App. Rec. Vol, 3, page 262;
>
> c) the guardrail was in the Appellant's possession and control when the case was filed;
>
> d) the disposition was done during financial troubles; and
> e) Mr. Gardner is not listed as a creditor, the recipient of a payment within 90 days, or the recipient of a transfer within the year before the case commenced. See Plaintiff's Exh. Vol. 4, Exh. 4 (SOFA).

And as with the portable arena, the Appellant caused or allowed the property to be removed after counsel had been retained, and after the Appellant filed his schedules (both original and amended) wherein he made no mention of the guardrail.

Causing or permitting this guardrail to be removed and sold, either directly or though Mr. Gardner, was a post-petition transfer which removed and concealed property of the estate from the Trustee. The effect of this evidence easily leads to a conclusion that it was not clearly erroneous to find the Appellant fraudulently attempted to conceal and dispose of the guardrail.

C. Undisclosed Disposition of Weapons

There was ample evidence that the Appellant owned more weapons than were disclosed on his schedules or SOFA. There was also ample evidence that he removed, concealed, and/or transferred those weapons with the intent to hinder, delay, and/or defraud. Specifically, the Court found credible the testimony of Dr. Bailey, who stated that the Appellant had a large collection of weapons at his house when he purchased it from the Appellant in June 2001. See App. Rec. Vol. 3, page 372[8] At the time, the Appellant neither did nor said anything indicating these were not his weapons. See App. Rec. Vol. 3, page 373.

Moreover, there were at least two occasions between September 2003 and January 2004 when the Appellant appeared at Dr. Bailey's house and removed weapons. See App. Rec. Vol. 3, pages 374-375, and pages 391-395. Dr. Bailey testified that as of January 2004, the weapons had been removed. See App. Rec. Vol. 3, page 376. Since the Appellant did not credibly explain the loss or whereabouts of all the weapons in the safe, the Bankruptcy Court determined that those weapons were there when this case was filed, or were at least subject to the Appellant's possession and disposition at times which should have been discussed on the SOFA. The Court noted that the Appellant listed only three weapons on his schedules, far less than the amount Dr. Bailey said the Appellant had in the safe.

Dr. Bailey's testimony is supported by Mr. Neal's testimony that about the time he purchased the Appellant's .45 Colt (shortly before this case was filed) the Appellant had let it be known he had other weapons in a safe for sale. Mr. Neal testified that by the time he told the Appellant he was interested in purchasing other weapons, there were apparently no more available. See App. Rec. Vol. 2, pages 148-

[8] In his deposition Dr. Bailey initially testified there may have been as many as 65 guns in the safe when it bought the safe. However, at trial he indicated he had since counted and found the safe to have 24 spaces for storing rifles and a shelf for pistols. See Appellant Rec. Vol. 3, pages 373,377.

150. Yet no sales of weapons other than those already sold to Mr. Neal appeared on the Schedules or SOFA. Even if the Court accepted the explanation that these were not his weapons, the Appellant's schedules do not identify any weapons as being held for others. See Plaintiff's Exh. Vol. 4, Exh. 4, (SOFA, question 14).

Moreover, both Dr. Bailey's and Mr. Neal's testimony is supported by Mr. Barker, who testified that shortly before this case was filed, he and the Appellant went to Dr. Bailey's house to view and negotiate the purchase of the .45 Colt. See App. Rec. Vol. 4, page 839. After the Appellant opened the safe, Mr. Barker observed it to be full of weapons, mostly rifles. See App. Rec. Vol. 4, pages 837-840. As before, the Appellant neither did nor said anything to suggest these weapons were not his. See App. Rec. Vol. 4, page 840. Based on the testimony of these four witnesses, it can hardly be said there was insufficient evidence from which the Court could find that the Appellant owned more weapons than appeared on his schedules.

As for the Appellant's intent in not disclosing the weapons, the Court again looked to the surrounding circumstances for indicia of fraudulent intent;

> a) the Appellant sold the .45 caliber Colt to a friend at a time when he was under severe financial distress;
> b) he had left other weapons with another friend under circumstances where it was unlikely anyone would know about their existence;
>
> c) there is no record of any transactions of weapons, and the private ownership and sale of weapons is generally unregistered and untraceable;
> d) the Appellant also continued to exercise control over those weapons, as he > was able to effectuate their disappearance and/or disposition at times relevant to this case; and

> e) other than later claiming that his 8 year-old son owned some of these large and powerful weapons, he did not volunteer anything in his testimony to suggest that the weapons in the safe as of June 2001 belonged to anyone other than himself.

Without credible evidence to contradict facts which strongly suggested that these weapons belonged to the Appellant, and having been directly asked about weapons and given ample opportunity to amend his schedules, the Court found sufficient indicia of fraudulent intent in failing to disclose his ownership and disposition of these weapons. Without doubt, the District Court could conclude that Judge Jones's findings about this were not clearly erroneous.

D. The Horses Justalena Peppy Dawn, Colonel Stone, Hickorys Up In Smoke, and Tari Gay Diamond

The Bankruptcy Court found for the U.S. Trustee on Count 7 of the Complaint (that the Appellant's attempt to conceal his ownership of "Hickorys Up In Smoke" and "Colonel Stone" was culpable under §727(a)(2)(A) and Counts 12 and 16 of the Complaint (that the Appellant's attempt to conceal his ownership of the horses, "Tari Gay Diamond",[9] and "Justalena Peppy Dawn" was culpable under §727(a)(2)(A) and

[9] Other than indicating Tari Gay Diamond was purportedly sold pre-petition, the Bankruptcy Court's Opinion did not detail the sale the Appellant claimed to have made. The Appellant claimed in both his Schedules and creditors' meeting testimony to have sold the horse Tari Gay Diamond pre-petition to another friend, L.P. Carter. However, this horse was found on the Appellant's ranch during the January 5th seizure. There were no records produced at trial to memorialize the sale. Mr. Carter tried to claim this horse from the Bank after the seizure. The Bank filed suit in State court to "quiet title" to the horse, and was ultimately given its "title".

§727(a)(2)(B). Again, it is axiomatic that these horses become property of the estate when the case was filed. 11 U.S.C. §541. Documents from the AQHA and APHA clearly show that the Appellant had owned these horses.[10] See App. Rec. Vol. 3, pages 415-416, see also Plaintiff's Exh. Vol. 5, Exh. 16 (deposition pages 8-10, deposition Exhibit A, pages 27-28), Plainfiff's Exh. Vol. 5, Exh. 17 (deposition pages 2-3, deposition Exhibit A, pages 37-39, 46-48). Thereafter, the Appellant claims to have transferred these horses. However, the Court did not find these claims credible. Rather, the Court found credible the fact that the Appellant failed to schedule Hickorys Up In Smoke and Colonel Stone as being held for another, and attempted to "back-date" the purported transfers. See Plaintiff's Exh. Vol. 5, Exh. 17 (deposition pages 2-3). It also had before it evidence that:

> a) he registered Justalena Peppy Dawn into his name after the date he testified he sold the horse to someone else, see App. Rec. Vol. 3, pages 415-416;
> b) that he pledged the horse to the Bank after the purported sale, see App. Rec. Vol. 2, page 185, see also Plaintiff's Exh. Volume 4, Exh. 7(m);
>
> c) that after he purportedly sold the horse he represented to the Bank that he was again trying to sell the horse, see App. Rec. Vol. 2, pages 185-189, Plaintiff's Exh. Vol. 7, Exh. 25;
>
> d) that he continued to use the horse after he purportedly sold it. See App. Rec. Vol. 3, pages 403-405 and App. Rec. Vol. 4, page 851; and
>
> e) Tari Gay Diamond, Colonel Stone, and Hickorys Up In Smoke were all in his possession, see App. Rec. Vol. 2, page 205, and Justalena Peppy Dawn was in the possession of a friend.

---

[10] The United States Trustee agrees with the Appellant that registration and registration certificates alone do not establish ownership. They are, however, indicia of ownership which the Court can consider in assessing whether or not the Appellant owned the horses during the time in question.

With only the Appellant's testimony to contradict that of these witnesses, there is ample evidence before the Court to conclude that the Appellant owned these horses when the case was filed. His attempts to cover that ownership constituted the concealment for purposes of §727(a)(2).

That his intent was fraudulent is again evident from the circumstances;

> a) Tari Gay Diamond, Colonel Stone, and Hickorys Up In Smoke were in the Appellant's possession at the time of seizure;
>
> b) Justalena Peppy Dawn was being held by a friend;
>
> c) these horses were purportedly transferred to friends or family members for no apparent consideration or were allegedly transferred for cash;
>
> d) there are no records evidencing these transfers which were made contemporaneously with the record change, and virtually no means to confirm the Appellant's story;[11]
>
> e) With respect to "Hickorys Up In Smoke" and "Colonel Stone", the Appellant did not schedule these horses as being held for his children, despite asserting that he had gifted them more than a year and one-half prior;
>
> f) he did not volunteer to Mr. Sloan his recent change in the registration when he requested the Bank to release these horses;
>
> g) In the case of "Tari Gay Diamond", he did not volunteer his attempt to change the registration, even though the Bank knew the AQHA had refused to "back-date" the change of registrations; and
> h) he had continued use of Justalena Peppy Dawn after the purported transfer and shortly before this case was filed.

[11] It is somewhat hypocritical that the Appellant now argues how a horse's registration is not proof of ownership, when, at the time he tried to secure the horses' release from the Bank, he attempted to use those certificates for exactly that proposition.

Based on the foregoing, there is more than sufficient evidence from this the Court can infer fraudulent intent. Though the Appellant attempts to "nit-pick" the witnesses testimony, he points to no manifest error or omission in the lower Courts' analysis.

IV. There was sufficient evidence to conclude that the Appellant made a false oath and account under 11 U.S.C. §727(a)(4)

The Bankruptcy Court found for the U.S. Trustee on allegations under §727(a)(4)(A) that the Appellant knowingly and fraudulently made a false oath when he testified at the creditors' meetings that he owned no weapons other than those scheduled, and about having not transferred any property (other than what is on the SOFA) outside the ordinary course of business in the year preceding the case. Again, the Bankruptcy Court was free to accept or reject any or all of any witness's testimony, and to give whatever weight it felt appropriate to any or all evidence.

As has been explained, there was more than sufficient evidence to show the Appellant owned and disposed of more property than he disclosed. Supra. It is highly unlikely a person would admit to disposing of certain items of his personal property while also maintaining that he never owned it. The Court's giving credibility to other witnesses' testimony instead of the Appellant's is a substantial basis for finding culpable his failure to disclose ownership and/or disposition of those assets.

A. Undisclosed Ownership and Disposition of Weapons and .45 Pistol

Having found that the Appellant a) owned more weapons when this case was filed than were disclosed on his schedules, b) that he effectuated an undisclosed transaction of those weapons, and c) that he sold a .45 Colt during a time when such transactions must be disclosed on the SOFA, the Court went on to find that the Appellant made a false oath when he filed the schedules and the SOFA which omitted this information. See Plaintiff's Exh. Vol. 4, Exh. 4 (Schedule B question 8, and SOFA, question 10). There the Appellant scheduled only 3 weapons and the pre-petition transfer of only certain weapons(not including the kind witnesses indicated were in the safe). Additionally, the Court had evidence that the Appellant testified, albeit falsely, at the creditors' meeting that he did not own other weapons, was not holding weapons for others, and/or had not transferred any weapons. See App Rec. Vol. 2, pages 264, 292-293. For the same reasons and from the same circumstances surrounding the underlying transactions, the Court inferred the Appellant's intent to defraud. Any one of these false oaths warranted denying his discharge under §727(a)(9)(4).

The Appellant disputes that he owned or disposed of any weapons other than those on his schedules. But as discussed supra, the Appellant fails to show how the Bankruptcy Court's findings about his having owned and disposed of other weapons was clearly erroneous. Until that is shown, there is little basis for the Appellant to contend that there was a clearly erroneous finding that he fraudulently made a false oath and account about his ownership and disposition of the weapons.

Interestingly, the Appellant does not dispute that the sale of the .45 Colt occurred, or that this was not disclosed on his SOFA. Even if this Court views the lower Courts' findings about the ownership of additional weapons as clearly erroneous, the failure to disclose the sale of the .45 Colt on the SOFA and his false testimony about not making such a sale was sufficient to deny his discharge. See Mitchell, supra, see also United States Trustee v. Moschella (In re Moschella), Case No. 04-4055 (Bankr. N.D. Tex. Aug. 9, 2004).

B. Undisclosed Disposition of the Tennis Bracelet

Although it is unclear whether the sale of the tennis bracelet occurred pre- or post-petition, there is no dispute over the fact that it occurred or that it was not scheduled. See Plaintiff's Exh. Vol. 4, Exh. (SOFA, question 10). Standing alone, the failure to schedule this sale was a false oath and account under §727(a)(4). That the failure to disclose this transaction was done fraudulently was again inferred from the circumstances;

a) the sale occurred at a time the Appellant was under sever financial distress;
b) it was facilitated by a friend of the Appellant;
c) it was done in cash;
d) it is not the kind of property typically bought with cash; and
e) it was not memorialized by any check, receipts, or any other documentation.

It appears the Appellant's chief complaint about the lower Courts' finding that he should have disclosed the sale is that the bracelet was not his. However, the mother testified that she gave him the bracelet with donative intent, she delivered it to them, and had no expectation that it be returned. See App. Rec. Vol 4, pages 883-884. As the Bankruptcy Court pointed out, see App. Rec. Vol. 4, pages 924-925, at the time of delivery, all the elements of a gift had been met and the bracelet became his. That he did not comprehend the import of his receipt and subsequent sale does not mitigate its legal effect. More importantly, he should have disclosed the transaction rather than making a unilateral legal decision. See e.g. FDIC v. Sullivan (In re Sullivan), supra. That he chose not to disclose the transaction is yet another circumstance from which the Court could construe fraudulent intent. Since the Appellant does not and cannot dispute that the bracelet was sold, and that the sale was not disclosed, he cannot assert the findings on this issue was clearly erroneous. Without being clearly erroneous, there is no error in the lower Courts' decisions.

Conclusion

WHEREFORE, the U.S. Trustee respectfully prays that this Court affirm the District Court's decision in all respects.

Statement Regarding Oral Argument

Diana G. Adams, the Acting United States Trustee for Region 2, requests oral argument. The issue on appeal impacts the integrity of the bankruptcy system, and oral argument would be of material assistance to the Court.

Statement of Jurisdiction Statement of Jurisdiction

A. The bankruptcy court had subject matter jurisdiction and the power to resolve the motion to appoint a chapter 11 trustee. The bankruptcy court had subject matter jurisdiction and the power to resolve the motion to appoint a chapter 11 trustee.

The Article III federal district courts have “original and exclusive” subject matter jurisdiction over bankruptcy cases. 28 U.S.C. § 1334*; see* U.S. Const. Art. I, § 8; Celotex Corp. v. Edwards, 514 U.S. 300, 307 (1995); 115 S. Ct. 1493, 1498 (1995) (explaining that “[t]he jurisdiction of the bankruptcy courts . . . is grounded in and limited by statute”). The Article I bankruptcy courts acquire the power to resolve bankruptcy issues such as those in the Bayou cases through the standing order of reference from the district court. 28 U.S.C. § 157(a); Standing Order of Referral of Cases to Bankruptcy Judges of the United States District Court for the Southern District of New York, dated July 10, 1984 (Ward, Acting C.J.).

Bankruptcy jurisdiction is broader than bankruptcy power. Bankruptcy courts lack the power to resolve some bankruptcy issues that fall within the jurisdictional grant, so an Article III federal district court must resolve those issues. Walker v. Cadle Co. (In re Walker), 51 F.3d 562, 570 (5th Cir. 1995) (distinguishing between bankruptcy jurisdiction and power). “A bankruptcy court may exercise plenary power only over ‘core proceedings.’” Marshall v. Marshall, 126 S. Ct. 1735, 1743 (2006) (construing 28 U.S.C. § 157 (b)-(c)). Here, the bankruptcy court held that it lacked the power to enter an order appointing a trustee. Tr. 23:23-24:3, Brief Appendix B; Order Denying United States Trustee’s Motion to Appoint a Trustee, Brief Appendix C. As detailed below, however, bankruptcy trustee issues are within the bankruptcy court’s plenary, core powers.

B. The United States Trustee had standing to bring the motion to appoint the trustee.The United States Trustee had standing to bring the motion to appoint the trustee.

Congress assigned the United States Trustee broad oversight responsibilities over bankruptcy cases. 28 U.S.C. § 586 (defining United States Trustee's responsibilities). The United States Trustee for Region 2 is a senior official of the Department of Justice appointed by the Attorney General. 28 U.S.C. § 581(a)(2). She acts as the "watchdog" of the bankruptcy system and may be "compared . . . to a prosecutor" for cases that arise under Title 11 of the Bankruptcy Code. H.R. Rep. No. 95-595, at 109 (1977), as reprinted in 1978 U.S.C.C.A.N. 5963, 6049 (using "watchdog" analogy); 6071 (using "prosecutor" analogy). Within this district, the United States Trustee "supervise[s] the administration of cases and trustees in cases under chapter 7, 11, 12, 13, or 15 of title 11." 28 U.S.C. §§ 581(a)(2) and 586(a)(3)(A). Section 1104, the statute governing chapter 11 trustee appointments, specifies that the United States Trustee has standing to seek a trustee. 11 U.S.C. § 1104(a); see also 11 U.S.C. § 307 (broadly defining United States Trustee's ability to raise issues).

C. This Court has appellate jurisdiction because the order denying appointment of a chapter 11 trustee is a final order.This Court has appellate jurisdiction because the order denying appointment of a chapter 11 trustee is a final order.

This Court has appellate jurisdiction over "final judgments, orders, and decrees" of bankruptcy judges. 28 U.S.C. §158(a)(1). The appellate courts have adopted a "flexible standard of finality" for bankruptcy cases. Dicola v. American Steamship Owners Mut. Prot. and Indem. Ass'n, Inc. (In re Prudential Lines), 59 F.3d 327, 331 (2d Cir. 1995). A bankruptcy case serves as an umbrella for distinct sub-issues, and rulings on the sub-issues often immediately impact creditors and the outcome of a bankruptcy case. State Gov't Creditors' Comm. v. McCay (In re Johns-Manville Corp.), 920 F.2d 121, 126 (2d Cir.1990)(citations omitted). Orders granting or denying appointment of a trustee have such impact, so these orders are final. Committee of Dalkon Shield Claimants v. A.H. Robins Co., 828 F.2d 239, 241 (4th Cir. 1987); In re Adelphia Communications Corp., 342 B.R. 122, 125 & n. 1, 128-29 (S.D.N.Y. 2006) (citations omitted); *see also Silverman v. Issue Presented Issue Presented

Upon a bankruptcy filing, the debtor's property vests in a bankruptcy estate that serves as a trust for the benefit of creditors. In a chapter 11 reorganization case, either the debtor's management or a trustee serves as the fiduciary for this trust. Section 543 of the Bankruptcy Code requires pre-bankruptcy receivers to turn over estate property to the appropriate bankruptcy fiduciary. Given that the Bankruptcy Code required the pre-bankruptcy receiver to turn over all estate property to these debtors' dishonest managers, should the bankruptcy court have granted the United States Trustee's motion for the appointment of an impartial trustee to administer the bankruptcy estate for the benefit of all creditors?

Standard of ReviewStandard of Review

This Court reviews the bankruptcy court's findings of fact for clear error. Fed. R. Bankr. P. 8013. In many contexts the appointment of a trustee involves factual interpretation and therefore appellate review is subject to the abuse of discretion standard. In re Sharon Steel Corp., 871 F.2d 1217, 1222, 1225 (3d Cir. 1998)

Here no party disputes the material facts. Marwil's Memorandum of Law in Response to the Motion of the United States Trustee for the Appointment of a Chapter 11 Trustee, D.E. 35; p.

1, Preliminary Statement. By ruling from the bench without opening the evidence, the bankruptcy court acknowledged that the Bayou Motion to Appoint a Trustee did not involve factual interpretation. Cf. In re Sharon Steel Corp., 871 F.2d 1217, 1225 (3d Cir. 1998) (discussing standards of review in context of motion to appoint a trustee). Here, appellate review is analogous to reviewing a summary judgment decision. The parties dispute the ultimate fact, which is the legal result of the undisputed facts. Sharon Steel, 871 F.2d at 1222, 1225. This Court reviews this question of law under a de novo standard of review. Sharon Steel, 871 F.2d at 1222.

Statement of the CaseStatement of the Case

Promoters marketed the Bayou Group and related legal entities (collectively "Bayou") as hedge funds – private pooled investment funds. But Bayou was ultimately exposed as a totally fraudulent enterprise. Bayou's managers falsely reported financial data and misappropriated assets. Federal agencies have filed forfeiture actions against Bayou's physical assets. The two key managers pled guilty to federal criminal charges, and they await sentencing. Israel and Marino Pleas; D.E. 41, Ex. B, Parts 1 and 2.[1] The parties uniformly agree that the prior management must not control Bayou.

After prior management's fraud was discovered, Bayou ceased all operations. Bayou's tangible assets were forfeited, so Bayou's only remaining assets were litigation claims. No one was pursuing these litigation claims. Some of Bayou's creditors styling themselves the "Unofficial On-Shore Creditors' Committee"[2] filed a securities lawsuit in the United States

[1] The appellate record is organized by reference to the bankruptcy court's docket entries. The bankruptcy court ruled without opening an evidentiary record, indicating the Court considered judicial admissions and took judicial notice of transcripts and orders attached to pleadings.

[2] The Unofficial Committee consisted of voting and non-voting members. In accordance with 11 U.S.C. § 1102(a), the United States Trustee appointed an Official Creditors' Committee after the bankruptcy filing.

District Court for the Southern District of New York and asked the District Court to appoint a federal equity receiver to pursue the claims. Order Consolidating 06CIV2379 with MDL 1775 and Scheduling Conference; D.E. 41, Exhibit F, p. 3. When the District Court received the request, the District Court required additional notice to creditors and noted, "what the Unofficial Committee seeks is very much akin to what occurs in bankruptcy . . . . [A] trustee is appointed . . . ." Scheduling Order, D.E. 41, Exhibit F, p. 3. "I asked why the Unofficial Committee had not chosen to proceed in bankruptcy . . . . I confess that I did not understand the answer." Scheduling Order, D.E. 41, Exhibit F, p. 4.

The District Court ultimately appointed Jeff Marwil, the Unofficial Committee's candidate, as a non-bankruptcy federal equity receiver. The District Court's Order defined Marwil as the "Receiver" and created a Receivership Estate, which also was defined as the Bayou Entities. Order Granting the Unofficial On-Shore Creditors' Committee's Motion to Appoint a Receiver (the "Receivership Order"), Brief Appendix A, para. 1, p. 2; Appendix A to D.E. 35. The Bayou Receiver was expressly appointed pursuant to 28 U.S.C. § 754, 28 U.S.C. § 959, Federal Rule of Civil Procedure 66, and the District Court's inherent powers. Receivership Order, Brief Appendix A, para. 1.

The Receivership Order itemized the Receiver's duties. "[T]he Receiver is specifically authorized, empowered and directed to perform the following duties and responsibilities . . . . Corporate Governance: [The Receiver] . . . [shall] succeed to be the sole and exclusive managing member and representative of each of the Bayou Entities." Receivership Order, ¶ 7(e), Brief Appendix A. He "manage[s] and direct[s] the business and financial affairs of the Bayou Entities." Receivership Order, ¶ 7(e), Brief Appendix A. In addition to giving the Bayou Receiver the power to file bankruptcy, the Receivership Order specified that the Bayou Receiver would "be deemed a debtor-in-possession for . . . the Bayou Entities . . . and prosecute such adversary proceedings and other matters as may be permitted under the [Bankruptcy] Code and/or applicable law." Receivership Order, ¶ 7(e) (emphasis added), Brief Appendix A.

On May 30, 2006, the Bayou Receiver filed voluntary bankruptcy petitions for each of the Bayou entities. The United States Trustee agreed that the Bayou Receiver had the power to file the bankruptcy cases because the filing was a pre-bankruptcy act authorized by the Receivership Order and not prohibited by the Bankruptcy Code. The United States Trustee contended – and contends – that the federal law terminated the Receiver's authority to manage the estates of the Bayou entities when the bankruptcy cases were filed.

The United States Trustee filed a Motion to Appoint a Chapter 11 Trustee. D.E. 29. The United States Trustee sought the appointment of a neutral bankruptcy trustee based on the following legal position:

- The bankruptcy filing created a bankruptcy estate of property held in trust for the creditors. 11 U.S.C. § 541.
- This bankruptcy estate unwound the Receivership Estate that the Bayou Receiver controlled. See Receivership Order, ¶ 1, p. 2, Brief Appendix A (defining Receivership Estate).
- In bankruptcy, the Bayou Receiver became a custodian by operation of law, 11 U.S.C. § 101(11)(A), and the Bayou Receiver was required to turn over the property to the corporate management or the bankruptcy trustee. 11 U.S.C. § 543(a).
- Because Bayou's former corporate management had pled guilty to federal crimes, everyone concurred that the property should not be turned over to the former management.

The United States Trustee argued below that the appointment of a bankruptcy trustee was necessary to fill the vacuum of lawful management under the Bankruptcy Code. The Bayou Receiver would turn over the property to the chapter 11 trustee, to be administered in accordance with the requirements of the Bankruptcy Code. 11 U.S.C. § 543. The United States Trustee acknowledged, "[t]here's actually no per se rule against a receiver becoming a trustee . . . . [W]e certainly would listen to the parties and assuming Mr. Marwil meets the disinterested standardness [sic] that will all be taken into consideration so it's not as if we're trying to necessarily displace Mr. Marwil. We're trying to get it into the proper procedural format." Tr. 13:4-17, Brief Appendix B, D.E. 84; see 11 U.S.C. § 1104(d) (requiring United States Trustee to confer with "parties in interest" when appointing a trustee); 11 U.S.C. § 101(14) (defining "disinterested person").

The Garfinkels, investors being sued by the Receiver, joined in the United States Trustee's Motion to Appoint a Chapter 11 Trustee. The Garfinkels focused on the Receiver's standing issue as it impacted them. They contended the Bayou Receiver lacked standing to pursue avoidance actions under the Bankruptcy Code. Garfinkels' Objection, ¶ 2; D.E. 41.

The Bayou Receiver and the Official Committee of Creditors opposed the appointment of a bankruptcy trustee, generally contending that the Bayou Receiver was Bayou's management under the Receivership Order and that the Receivership Order controlled the bankruptcy case. Receiver's Memorandum in Opposition, D.E. 35; Committee's Objection, D.E. 39; Receiver's Supplemental Response, D.E. 44.

Agreeing with the Bayou Receiver and the Official Committee, the bankruptcy court denied the United States Trustee's Motion to Appoint a Chapter 11 Trustee. The bankruptcy court held that it had subject matter jurisdiction but not the power to resolve the dispute because a District Court had appointed the pre-bankruptcy Bayou Receiver. Tr.16:4-10; 23:23-24:14, Brief Appendix B. The United States Trustee asked the bankruptcy court to defer ruling so she could seek withdrawal of the reference. Tr. 17:6-9. Instead of deferring the issue or dismissing the Motion to Appoint the Trustee, the bankruptcy court ruled. Rather than viewing the issue as one of the Bankruptcy Code supplanting the Receivership Order, the bankruptcy court perceived the Motion to Appoint a Chapter 11 Trustee as a collateral attack. "[T]his is not the Court to reverse Judge McMahon's order. . . . I haven't the power to do it, and I won't do it." Tr. 10:20-22, Brief Appendix B.

Alternatively, the bankruptcy court held the Bayou Receiver was "not a custodian any more than had the District Court approved the appointment of a new board of directors, a new president, somebody with a title other than receiver. I haven't studied her order that carefully . . . . I don't know how many times the word "receiver" appears. . . . But the substance of the order is that Mr. Marwil is not simply a custodian. He is given the management of these entities." Tr. 9:1-9, see also Tr. 24:3-10, Brief Appendix B. The bankruptcy court initially stated that the bankruptcy court would have the power to replace the Bayou Receiver if the Bayou Receiver was involved in wrongdoing, but the bankruptcy court later indicated that the District Court might be the proper court for that issue. Tr. 16:24-17:3, Brief Appendix B.

Based on these findings and conclusions, the bankruptcy court entered the Order Denying Motion of the United States Trustee for the Appointment of a Chapter 11 Trustee. D.E. 49. The United States Trustee thereafter filed a timely notice of appeal.

Summary of the ArgumentSummary of the Argument

When a debtor's property is under the control of a pre-bankruptcy receiver who has replaced unscrupulous management, the Bankruptcy Code requires the appointment of a bankruptcy trustee to succeed the pre-bankruptcy receiver and to administer the bankruptcy estate for the benefit of all creditors. When Congress adopted the Bankruptcy Code, it enacted § 543, which explicitly curtails the authority of custodians, including receivers such as the one in the Bayou case, and barred courts from appointing receivers under § 105(b). The Code also requires custodians to turn over property in their possession or control to the debtor in possession or a chapter 11 trustee to be administered pursuant to the Bankruptcy Code. Permitting receivers appointed before the filing of a chapter 11 petition to remain as bankruptcy management would not only violate federal law; it would also encourage races to non-bankruptcy courthouses and thereby vitiate statutory procedures designed to ensure the transparency of the process by which bankruptcy trustees are selected. Furthermore, real confusion would arise over whether the receivers were acting pursuant to the ad hoc terms of the orders appointing them or the fixed statutory requirements of the Bankruptcy Code. Congress' carefully thought-out statutory scheme for selecting independent estate fiduciaries cannot be circumvented by permitting a receiver to manage the debtor because of terms contained in the now-superseded pre-bankruptcy order originally appointing the receiver.

Argument Argument

A.A The bankruptcy court erred when it held that the Bayou Receiver could act as management for the debtor-in-possession.The bankruptcy court erred when it held that the Bayou Receiver could act as management for the debtor-in-possession.

Even since he filed the chapter 11 petitions for the Bayou debtors, the Bayou Receiver has been a "custodian" of the property of those entities. As defined by federal law, a "custodian" includes every "receiver or trustee of any of the property of the debtor, appointed in a case or proceeding not under this title." 11 U.S.C. § 101(11)(A). The application of this definition to the facts of this case is straightforward. Here, the District Court: (a) in a case not under title 11 of the U.S. Code; (b) appointed the Bayou Receiver "to be the federal equity receiver" of the Bayou entities, Receivership Order ¶ 1, p. 2, Brief Appendix A; (c) to have "complete jurisdiction and control over" all property of those entities , Receivership Order ¶ 2, p. 2, Brief Appendix A. Because the Bayou Receiver is a custodian, he is subject to the requirements of 11 U.S.C. § 543.

Under § 543, the Bayou Receiver is expressly prohibited from "tak[ing] any action in the administration of [] property of the debtor . . . or property of the estate . . . except such action as is necessary to preserve such property." 11 U.S.C. § 543(a). Instead, federal law requires the Bayou Receiver to turn over to the bankruptcy trustee all property of the debtor held by him and to file an accounting of property of the debtor that at any time was in his possession, custody, or control. 11 U.S.C. § 543(b). The Bayou Receiver, as a custodian, must turn all estate property over to the debtor in possession, or if a chapter 11 trustee has been appointed, to the trustee. 11 U.S.C. §§ 1106 and 1107.

These provisions expressly prohibit the Bayou Receiver from administering the debtors' property after the filing of Bayou's chapter 11 petitions. In re 400 Madison Ave. Ltd. Partnership, 213 B.R. 888, 894 (Bankr. S.D.N.Y. 1997). Under § 543 of the Bankruptcy Code, the Bayou Receiver is neither a debtor-in-possession nor a trustee and therefore cannot act in either of those capacities. Id. at 894; s*ee also In re Plantation Inn Partners*, 142 B.R. 561, 563-4 (Bankr. S.D. Ga. 1992) (improper to vest receiver with obligations of debtor in possession).

The limitations on the authority of receivers under the Bankruptcy Code represent a change from prior law. Under the Bankruptcy Act of 1898, receivers were frequently appointed in bankruptcy cases. The bankruptcy courts selected receivers and trustees. When Congress enacted the Bankruptcy Reform Act of 1978, it "sought to separate the administrative duties in bankruptcy from the judicial tasks, leaving the bankruptcy judges free to resolve disputes untainted by knowledge of administrative matters unnecessary and perhaps prejudicial to an impartial judicial determination." H.R.Rep. No. 764, 99th Cong., 2d Sess. 18 (1986), as reprinted in 1986 U.S.C.C.A.N. 5227, 5230. Accordingly, the Bankruptcy Code expressly prohibits a court from appointing a receiver in a bankruptcy case. 11 U.S.C. § 105(b). "The Bankruptcy Code has ample provision for the appointment of trustees when needed. Any appointment of a receiver would simply circumvent the established procedures." H.R. Rep. No 595, 95th Cong., 1st Sess. 317 (1977), as reprinted in 1978 U.S.C.C.A.N. 5787, 5815.

Under the Bankruptcy Code, the United States Trustee initially appoints trustees, and unsecured creditors are given the right to elect trustees. 11 U.S.C. §§ 701, § 702 (appointments and elections of chapter 7 trustees); 11 U.S.C. §1104(b)(1),(d) (elections and appointments of chapter 11 trustees). When a trustee election is held, the Bankruptcy Code sets forth strict requirements for voting eligibility and for calculating the percentage of claims held. 11 U.S.C. § 702*; see* 6 Collier on Bankruptcy ¶ 702 (Lawrence P. King, et al. eds., 15th ed. rev. 2006). (discussing standards for electing trustees). To assure that an elected trustee is not selected by creditors holding a small amount of claims against the debtor, holders of at least twenty percent of the dollar amount of eligible claims must request the election and vote. 11 U.S.C. § 702(b), (c)(1). Creditors cannot vote if they have an adverse interest. 11 U.S.C. § 702(a)(2). A creditor who received a possibly preferential transfer will not be permitted to vote in a trustee election. In re Centennial Textiles, Inc., 209 B.R. 31, 33 (Bankr. S.D.N.Y. 1997). A report of election is filed. Fed. R. Bankr. P. 2003(d). If an election is disputed, the bankruptcy court will resolve the dispute by, among other things, determining what creditors were eligible to vote for a trustee. See Centennial Textiles, 209 B.R. at 33 (resolving such a dispute). Furthermore, the improper solicitation of votes by a candidate for trustee may result in the disapproval of the election. In re Dalsimer & Co., 56 F.2d 644, 645-46 (S.D.N.Y. 1932). While no one suggests that the procedures followed by the District Court in appointing the Bayou Receiver were anything other than exemplary, those procedures clearly did not mirror the requirements of the Bankruptcy Code for the selection of an independent fiduciary to administer a chapter 11 estate.

If the Bayou Receiver is permitted to remain in possession of the estate notwithstanding the requirements of § 543, it is easy to envision a future situation where multiple state or federal courts, at the instance of creditors with differing interests, appoint multiple receivers for the same entity. Presumably the first such receiver to file a chapter 11 petition for the debtor entity would then argue that she, and none of the other receivers, is permitted by the terms of her order of appointment to serve as debtor in possession. In other words, affirming the Bayou Receiver's effort to remain in possession would set the stage for the classic "race to the courthouse." Each plaintiff group will want their selected receiver to manage the bankruptcy case, and that receiver might be beholden to that constituency. For example, in this case, Bayou investors who received redemptions may have participated in the selection of the Bayou Receiver. Bankruptcy policy eschews races to the courthouse that allow one creditor to impede others solely by acting quickly. Cf. Celotex Corp. v. Edwards, 514 U.S. 300,310, 115 S. Ct. 1493, 1500 (1995); Union Bank v. Wolas, 502 U.S. 151, 162, 112 S. Ct. 527, 533 (1991) (discussing "race to the courthouse" in context of bankruptcy preferences). The United States Trustee need not show that these harms occurred in this case. The possibility of harm in this or other cases is sufficient. Cf. Weil v. Neary, 278 U.S. 160, 173 49 S. Ct. 144, 149 (1929) (first using oft-quoted bankruptcy language about tendency to harm as opposed to actual harm). Accordingly, when an equity receiver is the only one serving as management, the appointment of a chapter 11 trustee pursuant to the explicit guidelines of the Bankruptcy Code will prevent the manipulation of the system and assure that the estate fiduciary represents the interests of all creditors.

Notwithstanding the clear dictates of the Bankruptcy Code and guidance provided by its legislative history, the bankruptcy court ruled that the Bayou Receiver did not have to comply with the turnover requirement of § 543. It based this decision on its view that the Bayou Receiver is not a custodian; the court held, "[t]he substance of the order is that [the Receiver] . . . is not simply a custodian. He is given the management of these entities." Tr. 9:7-9; Brief Appendix B. In reaching this conclusion, however, the bankruptcy court ignored a fundamental underpinning of the District Court action. The sole basis for the appointment of the Bayou Receiver was the request by some of Bayou's creditors for the appointment of a federal equity receiver in a non-bankruptcy case. See Receivership Order, ¶ 1, p. 2 (invoking federal equity receivership authority and duties in accordance with 28 U.S.C. § 754, 28 U.S.C.§ 959, Fed. R. Civ. P. 66, and inherent powers), Brief Appendix A. The corporate governance paragraph that the bankruptcy court quoted is preceded and qualified by the District Court's reference to the "duties and responsibilities" of the Receiver. Receivership Order, ¶ 7.[3] But for the Receivership Order the Bayou Receiver would have had no authority whatsoever. Therefore, because the Receiver's authority to "manage" these entities is completely dependent upon his status as a custodian, this authority cannot serve as a basis to allow the Bayou Receiver to violate § 543 of the Bankruptcy Code by allegedly serving as a debtor in possession and refusing to turn over estate property. Nor, given the clear prohibition of § 105(b), may the bankruptcy court appoint the pre-bankruptcy Bayou Receiver to act as a receiver in the Bayou bankruptcy cases.

Based upon the foregoing, it is clear that the bankruptcy court erred by not ordering the appointment of a chapter 11 trustee to whom the Bayou Receiver could turn over estate property pursuant to 11 U.S.C. § 543.

B. The Bankruptcy Code formalizes trustee obligations to protect creditors, but these requirements are not imposed on Bayou Receiver under the Receivership Order The Bankruptcy Code formalizes trustee obligations to protect creditors, but these requirements are not imposed on Bayou Receiver under the Receivership Order .

The Bankruptcy Code contains numerous mandatory provisions regulating a chapter 11 trustee's administration of a chapter 11 estate. These mandatory provisions establish how a chapter 11 case must be administered when the estate is in the hands of an independent fiduciary. Under the Receivership Order, the Bayou Receiver, while acting as a de facto quasi-trustee in these cases, is subject to requirements that differ substantially from those of the Bankruptcy Code. The following chart illustrates distinctions between the Bayou Receiver's duties and obligations under the Receivership Order and a chapter 11 trustee's duties and obligations under the Bankruptcy Code:

[3] This situation differs from one where a business entity voluntarily changes management pursuant to its organizational documents and applicable non-bankruptcy law and then seeks bankruptcy relief. The Bankruptcy Code generally does not alter that result. 11 U.S.C. § 1107 (debtor-in-possession has powers of a trustee); 11 U.S.C. § 1104(a)(defining bases to remove management).

Duties of a Trustee under the Bankruptcy Code	Duties of the Bayou Receiver under the Receivership Order
Must be disinterested. 11 U.S.C. § 1104(b)(1),(d); 11 U.S.C. §101(14)	Does not require disinterest.
Trustee must post a surety bond. 11 U.S.C. § 322(a)	Does not require a bond absent a hearing. Receivership Order, ¶ 21. Bayou Receiver is indemnified. Receivership Order, ¶ 19.
Defers compensation until trustee makes disbursements to creditors and court approves compensation. 11 U.S.C. §§ 326(a), 331.	Compensation is monthly. Receivership Order, ¶ 9.
Compensation subject to a statutory cap and must be reasonable. 11 U.S.C. §§ 326(a), 330(a)(1)(A).	Compensation is the "greater of" $20,000 per month or two percent of the net amount of funds distributed. Receivership Order, ¶ 9.
Trustee must undergo a background check. U.S. Trustee requirement.	Not required.
Investments must be "insured or guaranteed by the United States" or subject to a bankruptcy court order authorizing an exception. 11 U.S.C. § 345	Bayou Receiver confers with unofficial committee about investments. Receivership Order, ¶ 7(k).
Settles cases subject to Court approval on notice to creditors. Fed. R. Bankr. P. 9019.	Settles cases after conferring with the unofficial committee. Receivership Order, ¶ 7(d).
Requires broad investigation of debtor and filing of public report of investigation with the Court. 11 U.S.C. § 1106(a)(3) - (4).	Requires limited investigation of claims of the Bayou Entities. Confidential report to be provided to only the unofficial committee. Receivership Order, ¶ 7(b).
Reporting contemplates recommendation whether or not to file a plan or to convert the bankruptcy case to chapter 7. 11 U.S.C. § 1106(a)(5)	Bayou Receiver files a liquidation plan "[u]nless a case is filed under the Bankruptcy Code." Receivership Order, ¶ 7(h)
Upon the appointment of a trustee, any party in interest may file a chapter 11 plan of reorganization. 11 U.S.C. § 1121(c)(1)	Bayou Receiver has exclusive right to file a plan unless bankruptcy case is filed. Receivership Order, ¶ (h). Because Bayou Receiver purports to be the debtor in possession, Bayou Receiver now claims exclusive right to file a chapter 11 plan. 11 U.S.C. § 1121(b).

As the chart establishes, the Bankruptcy Code imposes substantial requirements on a trustee to protect creditors' interests. The Bayou Receiver and Creditors' Committee contend that the Receivership Order makes the Bayou Receiver management and therefore a debtor in possession governed by § 1107 of the Bankruptcy Code. But the requirements of the Receivership Order differ substantially from those of §§ 1107 and 1106, and that deviation is improper under federal law. See, e.g., In re 400 Madison Ave. Ltd Partnership, 213 B.R. 888 (Bankr. S.D.N.Y. 1997). ("[N]o section of the Code includes a receiver who remains in possession within the definition of trustee, [so] the receiver does not take on the obligations of a trustee nor the somewhat different ones of a debtor-in-possession.").

Based upon the foregoing, this Court must direct the bankruptcy court to order the appointment of a disinterested trustee for the Debtors. Only such an appointment will clarify that the Bankruptcy Code alone governs the responsibilities of the person acting as a fiduciary for these estates.

C. The bankruptcy court had the power to order the appointment of a bankruptcy trustee, and the bankruptcy court erred when it held that it was bound to violate the Bankruptcy Code due to the Receivership Order.The bankruptcy court had the power to order the appointment of a bankruptcy trustee, and the bankruptcy court erred when it held that it was bound to violate the Bankruptcy Code due to the Receivership Order.

The bankruptcy court denied of the United States Trustee's motion seeking the appointment of a chapter 11 trustee based upon that court's doubts over whether it had jurisdiction to displace a pre-bankruptcy receiver appointed by a district court in a non-bankruptcy case. As federal courts, bankruptcy courts have jurisdiction to determine their own jurisdiction, e.g. United States v. United Mine Workers, 330 U.S. 258, 291, 67 S. Ct. 677, 695 (1947). In addition, bankruptcy courts must determine whether they have the power to resolve particular bankruptcy issues. 28 U.S.C. § 157(b)(3). In this case, the bankruptcy court incorrectly held that it lacked the power to resolve a motion seeking the appointment of a trustee.

Under 28 U.S.C. §§ 1334(a) and (e), district courts have exclusive jurisdiction over bankruptcy cases before them and all property of the debtor and of the estate. 28 U.S.C. § 1334(a),(e). As is discussed above, this Court, pursuant to 28 U.S.C. § 157(a), has delegated all cases under title 11 to the bankruptcy judges of this district. Given this, the bankruptcy court has jurisdiction over this case, and all property of the debtor and the estate, and it was bound to follow the requirements of §§ 543, 105(b), and 1104(a) of the Bankruptcy Code by precluding the pre-bankruptcy Bayou Receiver from continuing to control debtor and estate assets, something that violated federal law.

While an issue may properly fall within bankruptcy jurisdiction, the issue of the bankruptcy court's power involves a determination of where a particular issue falls within the three possibilities: core, "related to," or excluded from bankruptcy court authority. Bankruptcy courts most clearly have the power to resolve core issues, 28 U.S.C. § 157(b)(1); and precedent in this district holds that appointment of a trustee is a core matter. Ngan Gung Rest., Inc. v. Official Committee of Unsecured Creditors (In re Ngan Gung Rest., Inc.), 195 B.R. 593, 597 n. 3 (S.D.N.Y. 1996). That precedent was correctly decided.

"Proceedings can be core by virtue of their nature if either (1) the type of proceeding is unique to or uniquely affected by the bankruptcy proceedings, or (2) the proceedings directly affect a core bankruptcy function." United States Lines, Inc. v. American Steamship Owners Mut. Protection Ass'n (In re United States Lines, Inc.), 197 F.3d 631, 637 (2d Cir. 2005)(internal citation omitted); see also Jamaica Shipping Co., Ltd. v. Orient Shipping Rotterdam (In re Millenium Seacarriers, Inc.), 458 F.3d 92 (2d Cir. 2006) (per curiam) (applying same standard). The Second Circuit construes the bankruptcy court's core powers broadly. Id. The appointment of a bankruptcy trustee profoundly impacts the administration of the bankruptcy estate. 28

U.S.C. § 157(b)(2)(A) (defining administration of estate as core matter). The request and standards for appointment are governed by § 1104, a statute that applies only because a bankruptcy case is pending. 11 U.S.C. § 1104. Thus, appointment of a bankruptcy trustee is unique to bankruptcy proceedings and impacts a core bankruptcy function, the control of the bankruptcy estate. The appointment of a trustee is a core issue.

The Receivership Order did not divest the bankruptcy court of its core jurisdiction to consider and rule on a motion seeking the appointment of a chapter 11 trustee. In a variety of contexts – including fact patterns similar to that of this case – federal courts have recognized that bankruptcy law supercedes other law and court orders. Examples include:

- District court's collateral order ignoring the bankruptcy court's injunction reversed. A bankruptcy court's order enjoining draw on supersedeas bond must be honored by other federal district courts absent appellate reversal. Celotex Corp. v. Edwards, 514 U.S. 300, 308-311, 115 S. Ct. 1493, 1499-1501 (1995);

- District court's injunction barring parties from asking for interpretation of stay and relief in bankruptcy court reversed. The need for uniformity in bankruptcy is paramount when multiple parties have the same issue. Erti v. Paine, Webber, Jackson & Curtis, LLP (In re Baldwin-United Corp.), 765 F. 2d 343, 347-48 (2d Cir. 1985);

- An assignee for the benefit of creditors became a "custodian" under the Bankruptcy Code and therefore could not pursue state law avoidance actions. Bankruptcy ends creditors' race to courthouse by creating a ratable distribution system and affords a trustee the power to avoid preferential transfers. The "trustee exercising powers to liquidate a corporation is not hand-picked by the debtor, as was the [assignee] Sherwood, but appointed and supervised by the United States Trustee, an official of the Department of Justice . . . or elected by the creditors . . . to ensure impartiality." Sherwood Partners, Inc. v. Lycos, Inc. (In re Sherwood Partners, Inc.), 394 F.3d 1198, 1203-04 (9th Cir.), cert. denied, 126 S. Ct. 1198 (2005);

- Federal district court erred by failing to honor bankruptcy automatic stay even though federal district court's federal equity receivership arose in first filed case. Bankruptcy was preferred to federal equity receivership. Gilchrist v. General Elec. Capital Corp., 262 F.3d 295, 297-98 (4th Cir. 2001) (relying on Erti v. Paine, Webber, Jackson & Curtis, LLP (In re Baldwin-United Corp.), 765 F. 2d 343, 347-48 (2d Cir. 1985));

- "Of the fact that the suit was begun in the circuit court with the express leave of the court of bankruptcy it suffices to say that the latter was not at liberty to > surrender its exclusive control over matters of administration, or to confide them to another tribunal." United States Fid. & Guar. Co. v. Bray, 225 U.S. 205, 218, 32 S.Ct. 620, 625 (1912).

The appellate record suggests that the District Court intended to honor the Bankruptcy Code's subsequent impact, Receivership Order, ¶ 7(e) (limiting the Receiver's powers to those permitted under the Bankruptcy Code), Brief Appendix A, and that the bankruptcy court intended to honor the District Court's authority. The result of this mutual deference is a quagmire. The effective operation of the bankruptcy system depends on the bankruptcy court's ability and willingness to exercise its core jurisdiction and to compel compliance with the mandatory requirements of the Bankruptcy Code in all bankruptcy cases, including the Bayou cases. Nothing inherently distinguishes a Southern District of New York court order from an order of a federal district court or a state court in another jurisdiction. Just as orders enjoining parties from acting in the bankruptcy court or disagreeing with a bankruptcy court's ruling cannot eviscerate bankruptcy law, so also the pre-bankruptcy Receivership Order cannot license a bankruptcy court to violate the Bankruptcy Code by allowing a receiver to administer a debtor's estate in contravention of 11 U.S.C. §§ 543 and 105(b).

In the federal system, the laws of Congress reign supreme, subject only to the constraints of the Constitution. U.S. Const. art.VI, cl. 2. Certainly, the bankruptcy court's reluctance to diverge from the District Court's Receivership Order is understandable. And, without question, the District Court order was entirely proper up to the moment Bayou went into bankruptcy. But thereafter federal law prohibited the Bayou Receiver from controlling or operating the debtor in possession. Because the debtor in possession's managers are convicted felons who cannot be trusted to fulfill the responsibilities of a debtor in possession, the bankruptcy court erred in not ordering the appointment of a federal bankruptcy trustee under 11 U.S.C. § 1104(a). See C.F.T.C. v. Weintraub, 471 U.S. 343, 355; 105 S.Ct. 1986, 1994 (1985) (a bankruptcy trustee's fiduciary duties run to all creditors and equity security holders).

ConclusionConclusion

For these reasons, the United States Trustee respectfully asks this Court to reverse the order entered below and remand this case for additional proceedings consistent with such reversal.

ON APPEAL FROM THE UNITED STATES DISTRICT COURT
FOR THE SOUTHERN DISTRICT OF NEW YORK

BRIEF FOR THE APPELLANT

PRELIMINARY STATEMENT

Diane G. Adams, United States Trustee, appeals from a decision rendered by the United States District Court for the Southern District of New York (Hon. Colleen McMahon, J.) dated February 2, 2007, and entered on February 6, 2007. The decision is not yet reported but is currently available on Westlaw at 2007 WL 437675 (S.D.N.Y. Feb. 2, 2007). The district court's decision affirmed a decision of the United States Bankruptcy Court for the Southern District of New York (Hon. Adlai S. Hardin, Jr., J.). That decision is unreported.

JURISDICTIONAL STATEMENT

The bankruptcy court had jurisdiction pursuant to 28 U.S.C. § 157(b)(1). On June 30, 2006, the bankruptcy court denied the U.S. Trustee's motion to appoint a Chapter 11 trustee pursuant to 11 U.S.C. § 1104(a), and the U.S. Trustee appealed the order to the district court on July 10, 2006. The district court had subject matter jurisdiction pursuant to 28 U.S.C. § 158(a). The district court affirmed the denial of the motion to appoint a trustee in a decision and order signed on February 2, 2007, and entered on the docket on February 6, 2007. The U.S. Trustee filed a timely notice of appeal to this Court on April 6, 2007 (Appendix ("App.") A-216). See Fed. R. App. P. 4(a)(1). This Court has jurisdiction pursuant to 28 U.S.C. § 158(d).

STATEMENT OF THE ISSUE

Whether the district court's judgment affirming the bankruptcy court's refusal to order the appointment of a Chapter 11 bankruptcy trustee should be reversed, where both the district and bankruptcy courts incorrectly concluded that, under sections 1104 and 543 of the Bankruptcy Code, 11 U.S.C. §§ 1104 and 543, the person the district court had appointed as "federal equity receiver" prior to bankruptcy became a "debtor in possession" upon bankruptcy who could administer the bankruptcy estate, rather than a "custodian" who could not.

STATEMENT OF THE CASE

A. Nature of the Case

The Bayou Group, L.L.C., and related entities (collectively, Bayou), was a group of hedge funds that are now in bankruptcy. Bayou's managers committed fraud, and the company collapsed. Federal investigations ensued, Bayou's managers pleaded guilty to a variety of federal crimes, and Bayou ceased all operations. The government obtained forfeiture orders covering all of Bayou's tangible assets; the company's only remaining assets were litigation claims.

A group of Bayou's creditors organized themselves into an unofficial creditors' committee and filed a lawsuit in the United States District Court for the Southern District of New York. They sought to have Jeff J. Marwil appointed as receiver to pursue the company's litigation claims and mitigate the creditors' massive losses. After a hearing, the district court entered an order appointing Marwil "the federal equity receiver" for Bayou, and authorizing him as receiver to act as exclusive managing member and representative of the Bayou Entities.

One month after being appointed receiver, Marwil caused each of the Bayou companies to file voluntary petitions for Chapter 11 bankruptcy in the Southern District of New York. The U.S. Trustee then appointed an official creditors' committee, comprised mostly of members of the unofficial creditors' committee, and asked the bankruptcy court to order the appointment of a Chapter 11 trustee. The bankruptcy court denied the U.S. Trustee's motion for appointment of a trustee and the district court affirmed. The district court held that its previous order clearly appointed Marwil to be both receiver and Bayou's corporate management. In doing so, the court rejected the argument that Marwil was a "custodian" under 11 U.S.C. § 101(11)(A) & (C) of the Bankruptcy Code, finding that, as debtor in possession, he was under no obligation to turn over Bayou's property to a bankruptcy trustee pursuant to 11 U.S.C. § 543(b).

This appeal followed.

B. Statutory Framework

In a Chapter 11 bankruptcy, the debtor usually administers the bankruptcy estate, exercising most of the rights and fiduciary duties of a trustee. The debtor is then known as a "debtor in possession." 11 U.S.C. § 1107. A trustee may be appointed to administer the estate "for cause, including fraud, dishonesty, incompetence, or gross mismanagement of the affairs of the debtor by current management" or "if such appointment is in the interests of creditors, any equity security holders, and other interests of the estate." 11 U.S.C. § 1104(a)(1)-(2). When a court orders appointment of a trustee, the U.S. Trustee consults with parties in interest and appoints a disinterested person to serve as trustee, subject to the court's approval. 11 U.S.C. § 1104(d). Alternatively, a party in interest may request that the U.S. Trustee gather the creditors and hold a trustee election. 11 U.S.C. § 1104(b). Importantly, "a court may not appoint a receiver" in a Chapter 11 bankruptcy case, 11 U.S.C. § 105(b);[1] the bankruptcy estate must be administered by either a debtor in possession or a trustee.

Any "custodian" holding the debtor's property must "deliver to the [bankruptcy] trustee any property of the debtor held by or transferred to such custodian . . . on the date that such custodian acquires knowledge of the commencement of the [bankruptcy case]." 11 U.S.C. § 543(b). The term "custodian" includes any "receiver or trustee of any of the property of the debtor, appointed in a case or proceeding not under" Chapter 11 and any "trustee, receiver, or agent . . . that is appointed or authorized to take charge of property of the debtor for the purpose of enforcing a lien against such property, or for the purpose of general administration of such property for the benefit of the debtor's creditors." 11 U.S.C. § 101(11)(A), (C).

C. Procedural History and Facts

1. Bayou Group is an affiliated group of legal entities that created and managed private pooled investment funds, or so-called "hedge funds." Bayou's managers operated the funds fraudulently and Bayou collapsed under the weight of the fraud. The United States Attorney for the Southern District of New York, the Securities and Exchange Commission and the Commodity Futures Trading Commission each conducted investigations into the fraud. On September 29, 2005, Bayou's managers pleaded guilty to conspiracy to commit mail and wire fraud and investment advisor fraud. Slip. Op. at 3-4 (App. A-191 to A-192).

After the fraud was discovered, Bayou ceased all operations. The United States seized all of Bayou's tangible assets pursuant to forfeiture orders covering those assets. Bayou's only remaining assets were litigation claims. Id. at 4 (App. A-192). A group of more than 60 Bayou creditors, holding more than $130 million in claims, organized themselves as the "Unofficial On-Shore Creditors' Committee of the Bayou Family of Companies" (Unofficial Creditors' Committee). On March 27, 2006, the Unofficial Creditors' Committee filed a securities lawsuit in federal district court seeking the appointment of Jeff J. Marwil as "federal equity receiver" to pursue these litigation claims and thereby mitigate the massive losses suffered by the creditors and others. See ibid. As authority for the appointment of a receiver, the Unofficial Creditors' Committee's motion cited Fed. R. Civ. P. 66, which is entitled, "Receivers Appointed by Federal Courts," and deals with "action[s] wherein a receiver has been appointed" and the rules and practice applicable to such actions. See Notice of Mot. of Pl. for Appointment of a Receiver (Mar. 28, 2006) at 1 (Addendum).

2. The district court conducted hearings to consider Marwil's appointment as receiver for the Bayou entities. On April 28, 2006, the district court, without objection, entered an order appointing Marwil as "the federal equity receiver." Order Granting the Unofficial On-Shore Creditors' Committee's Mot. to Appoint a Receiver ("Receivership Order") (April 28, 2006) ¶ 1 (App. A-38). The district court's order defined Marwil as the "Receiver" and created a "Receivership Estate," which was defined as the Bayou entities. Ibid.

According to the district court, its appointment of the receiver was "warranted under Section 10(b) of the Securities Exchange Act of 1934 and SEC Rule 10b-5 thereunder, state law claims of fraud and breach of fiduciary duty, Federal Rule of Civil Procedure 66, and the facts and circumstances of this case." Receivership Order ¶ 3 (App. A-39). The receiver was expressly appointed "[p]ursuant to 28 U.S.C.

§§ 754 and 959, Federal Rule of Civil Procedure 66 and [the] court's inherent authority." Id. ¶ 1 (App. A-38).

In a section entitled "RECEIVER'S AUTHORITY AND DUTIES," the Receivership Order "authorized, empowered, and directed [the Receiver] to perform . . . [a number of] duties and responsibilities," Receivership Order ¶ 7 (App. A-40), including the responsibility for "Corporate Governance," id. ¶ 7e (App. A-41). The portion of the order dealing with "Corporate Governance" directed Marwil, "[p]ursuant 28 U.S.C. § 959(b),"[2] to "succeed to be the exclusive managing member and representative of each of the Bayou [On-Shore] Entities . . . ." Ibid.

3. On May 30, 2006, one month after his appointment as "federal equity receiver," Marwil caused each of the Bayou entities to file separate voluntary petitions for relief under Chapter 11 of the Bankruptcy Code. Slip op. at 8 (App. A-196). On June 15, 2006, the U.S. Trustee appointed an Official Committee of Unsecured Creditors (Official Creditors' Committee), consisting of five members – four of whom were voting members of the Unofficial Creditors' Committee. Id. at 9 (App. A-197).

[2] Section 959(b) provides: "a trustee, receiver or manager appointed in any cause pending in any court of the United States, including a debtor in possession, shall manage and operate the property in his possession . . . according to the requirements of the valid laws of the State in which such property is situated."

On June 20, 2006, the U.S. Trustee moved the bankruptcy court to order the appointment of a Chapter 11 trustee pursuant to 11 U.S.C. § 1104(a). U.S. Trustee's Mot. to Appoint a Chapter 11 Trustee (June 20, 2006) (App. A-80). The U.S. Trustee asserted that, because Bayou's former corporate management had pleaded guilty to federal crimes, turning over the property to former management was inconceivable. Appointment of a Chapter 11 trustee was thus necessary to fill the vacuum of lawful management. Ibid. Bayou and the Official Creditors' Committee opposed the motion, asserting that Marwil was Bayou's management under the district court's order and therefore could serve as debtor in possession. See Tr. of Hrg. On Mot. To Appoint a Trustee (June 29, 2006) at 19-20 (App. A-67 to A-68).

The bankruptcy court denied the U.S. Trustee's motion. The bankruptcy court found that the motion for appointment of a Chapter 11 trustee as a collateral attack on the district court's Receivership Order and held that it did "not have power to enter an order that would completely change and undermine the order entered by [the district court]." Id. at 24 (App. A-72). Alternatively, the bankruptcy court ruled that, even if it did have the power to appoint a Chapter 11 trustee, it would not do so because it viewed the district court's order "as not simply appointing a custodian or a receiver, but as appointing new management of these debtors . . . ." Ibid.

4. On July 10, 2006, the U.S. Trustee appealed the bankruptcy court's order to the district court. By Decision and Order dated February 2, 2007, the district court affirmed the bankruptcy court's decision. The district court held that its previous order "clearly contemplated appointing Marwil both as receiver and as Bayou's corporate management," and that Marwil's "corporate management appointment was not merely derivative of his receivership appointment" because the "corporate governance appointment was not made pursuant to federal receivership statutes only, but pursuant to federal securities law and this court's inherent authority as well." Slip Op. 13 (App. A-201). Thus, "[w]hen Marwil caused the Bayou entities to file for Chapter 11 bankruptcy . . . Marwil's status as corporate governor automatically blossomed into that of debtor-in-possession since, as managing member of Bayou, Marwil was the debtor's management." Id. at 20 (App. A-208). The court rejected the argument that Marwil was as a "custodian" under the Bankruptcy Code, finding that, as debtor in possession, he was "under no obligation to turn over Bayou's property to a bankruptcy trustee." Id. at 21 (App. A-209).

The district court admitted that this result "expose[d] a loophole in the Bankruptcy Code," inasmuch as the 1978 Bankruptcy Reform Act "expressly sought to supplant federal equity receivers in bankruptcy proceedings with the U.S. Trustee." Id. at 22 (App. A-210). The district court acknowledged that "[its] decision contradicts the spirit – albeit not the letter – of the 1978 Bankruptcy Reform Act" insofar as it permits creditors "to appoint their own bankruptcy 'trustee,' by having a district judge do it prior to any filing in bankruptcy." Id. at 25 (App. A-213). The court nevertheless expressed the view that "the remedy lies with Congress," since "nothing in the Code precludes a federal district judge from appointing corporate management, prior to the filing of any petition in bankruptcy." Ibid. For these reasons, the district court affirmed the bankruptcy court's denial of the U.S. Trustee's motion to appoint a Chapter 11 trustee. Id. at 26 (App. A-214).

This appeal followed.

STANDARD OF REVIEW

An order of the district court functioning in its capacity as an appellate court in a bankruptcy case is subject to plenary review, meaning that this Court undertakes an independent examination of the factual findings and legal conclusions of the bankruptcy court. In re Taylor, 243 F.3d 124, 128 (2d Cir. 2001). The bankruptcy court's findings of fact are reviewed for clear error and its conclusions of law – including its interpretation of the Bankruptcy Code – are reviewed de novo. See In re Lehal Realty Assocs., 101 F.3d 272, 276 (2d Cir. 1996). Finally, this Court reviews the bankruptcy court's exercise of discretion for abuse. Ibid.

SUMMARY OF ARGUMENT

1. The district court's initial order appointed Marwil as "federal equity receiver" so that he could manage Bayou's property. The district court vested Marwil with management powers, but those powers were to be exercised as part of his receivership. The district court did not appoint Marwil to be Bayou's management.

2. Because Marwil served as a receiver pre-petition, he became a custodian post-petition. The definition of "custodian" in 11 U.S.C. § 101(11)(A) & (C) is broad, and it includes any receiver or agent of a debtor's property appointed in a non-Chapter 11 case, and any receiver appointed or authorized to administer the debtor's property for the benefit of the debtor's creditors. The plain terms of the district court's order makes clear that Marwil fell within both of these descriptions. Moreover, as custodian, Marwil was required to deliver to the bankruptcy trustee any property of the debtor held by or transferred to him and to file an accounting of the property within his custody or control.

The district attempted to justify the retention of Marwil as receiver post-bankruptcy by asserting that he was appointed pursuant to federal securities law and the court's inherent authority, and not solely pursuant to federal receivership statutes. However, the source of the court's authority to appoint receivers in securities cases is the same inherent equitable power that applies outside the securities context; and, in any event, there is no authority for the proposition that a person appointed by a district court to take control of property and manage the affairs of a defendant in a securities action would not be deemed a "custodian" if that defendant later became a debtor in a case under the Bankruptcy Code.

3. The district court's order also violates the policy of the Bankruptcy Code. The Bankruptcy Code gives the U.S. Trustees the authority to appoint disinterested trustees to administer bankruptcy estates. The district court's order calls that authority into question by allowing a select group of creditors to appoint their own trustee before a debtor files for bankruptcy, without any guarantee that the trustee is disinterested. As the district court itself recognized, this result is "contrary to the spirit" of the Bankruptcy Code.

4. The decisions of the bankruptcy court and the district court in this case also are inconsistent with the relevant case law. The cases, though few, uniformly suggest that courts may not permanently vest a receiver with the duties and powers of a debtor-in-possession and that the Bankruptcy Code clearly contemplates that the long-term administration of a Chapter 11 case will be managed by a trustee or debtor-in-possession, not a hybrid created by judicial fiat. The district court here, however, has done just that: it has created a receiver that, post-petition, effectively serves as trustee or debtor-in-possession.

ARGUMENT

THE BANKRUPTCY COURT ABUSED ITS DISCRETION IN DENYING THE U.S. TRUSTEE'S MOTION TO APPOINT A CHAPTER 11 TRUSTEE

A. The District Court's Initial Order Made Marwil A "Receiver" Within the Meaning Of The Bankruptcy Code And Nothing Else.

It is clear from the district court's order that the court appointed Marwil as a receiver and any management duties were to be exercised as a part of that receivership. The Receivership Order authorized the receiver to perform a number of duties and responsibilities, including the responsibility for "Corporate Governance." There is nothing unusual in giving a receiver authority to manage the affairs of a business estate.

The portion of the order dealing with "Corporate Governance," however, directed Marwil to "succeed to be the exclusive managing member and representative of each of the Bayou [On-Shore] Entities . . . ." Receivership Order at ¶ 7e (App. A-41). The district court subsequently reasoned that, by virtue of this provision, it had "appointed Marwil as receiver and as the exclusive managing member of Bayou." Slip op. at 21 (App. A-209). Moreover, the court determined, these roles were separate: "[Marwil's] corporate governance powers [were] not derived from his receivership." Ibid. Thus, the court concluded, "upon causing Bayou to file its bankruptcy petition, Marwil's receivership ended and he immediately became the managing member of a debtor-in-possession." Ibid.

Despite these assertions, it is clear from the motion filed by the Unofficial Creditors' Committee, which specifically asked the district court to appoint a receiver, and from the key portion of the district court's order, which deemed Marwil "the federal equity receiver" and gave him authority over Bayou's property, that the sole purpose of the appointment was to make Marwil a receiver. See Unofficial On-Shore Creditors' Comm.'s Mem. in Support of its Mot. To Appoint a Receiver (Mar. 28, 2006) at 2 (App. A-121);[3] see also Receivership Order ¶¶ 1, 2 (App. A-38). To be sure, the Unofficial Committee asked the court to "grant [the] receiver powers that include the day-to-day management of the business entity," Unofficial On-Shore Creditors' Comm.'s Mem. in Support of its Mot. to Appoint a Receiver (Mar. 28, 2006) at 20 (App. A-139); and the Committee included such powers in its proposed order, see Receivership Order at ¶ 7e (App. A-41). But nothing in the Unofficial Creditors' Committee motion or supporting memorandum suggests that these management duties could not be performed by a receiver; and the order granting the motion to appoint a receiver simply gave the receiver these customary powers to manage the companies.

[3] The Unofficial Creditors' Committee notice of motion for appointment of a receiver cited Fed. R. Civ. P. 66 as authority for the appointment of a receiver. Rule 66 is entitled, "Receivers Appointed by Federal Courts," and deals with "action[s] wherein a receiver has been appointed" and the rules and practice applicable to such actions.

Indeed, as the district court acknowledged, "[f]ederal courts may grant a receiver powers that include the day-to-day management of the business entity, including the authority to liquidate assets, the authority to pursue claims, and the authority to file for bankruptcy." Slip op. at 14 (App. A-202) (citing SEC v. Credit Bancorp, Ltd., 297 F.3d 127, 130 (2d Cir. 2002) (recognizing lower court's appointment of receiver "who was granted broad powers to, inter alia, issue subpoenas, marshal [corporate] assets, liquidate those assets, and reinvest the proceeds in Treasury instruments")). In giving Marwil management responsibilities as part of his appointment as receiver, moreover, the district court stated that those responsibilities were to be exercised "with a view towards" preserving and distributing the Bayou assets. Receivership Order ¶ 7 (App. A-40). Thus, the management responsibilities were designed solely to ensure that Marwil could fulfill his role as receiver. The district court did not appoint him to a separate role as Bayou's manager that was independent of his receivership.

For these reasons, both the bankruptcy court and the district court were wrong to conclude that Marwil's corporate governance powers were not derived solely from his receivership.

B. Once Bankruptcy Petitions Were Filed, Marwil Became A "Custodian" Within The Meaning Of The Bankruptcy Code.

1. The Bankruptcy Code expressly prohibits courts from appointing receivers in Chapter 11 bankruptcy cases. 11 U.S.C. § 105(b). When Marwil caused the Bayou entities to file voluntary petitions for bankruptcy, Marwil's authority as receiver was circumscribed by operation of the Bankruptcy Code. Upon filing, he became a "custodian" within the meaning of the Code and subject to the turnover obligations set forth in § 543.

The statutory definition of "custodian" is broad, and it includes any "receiver . . . of the property of the debtor" appointed in a non-Chapter 11 case, and any "receiver, or agent . . . appointed or authorized to take charge of property of the debtor . . . for the purpose of general administration of such property for the benefit of the debtor's creditors." 11 U.S.C. § 101(11)(A), (C). Marwil qualifies under both of these provisions. That is, the court appointed Marwil to be "receiver . . . of the property of the debtor . . . in a case or proceeding not under [title 11]" of the U.S. Code. Moreover, Marwil plainly was a "receiver or agent" who was "authorized to take charge of property of the debtor . . . for the purpose of general administration of such property for the benefit of the debtor's creditors." Nothing in section 101(11)(A) or (C) excludes Marwil from the definition of "custodian" because, as receiver, he was authorized to manage the affairs of the debtor.

For these reasons, both the bankruptcy court and the district court were wrong to conclude that Marwil was not a "custodian" merely because he had been granted the "corporate governance powers" of a "managing member and representative" of the Bayou Entities. See Tr. of Hrg. On Mot. To Appoint a Trustee (June 29, 2006) at 9 (App. A-57); slip op. at 21 (App. A-209). As the legislative history of 11 U.S.C. § 101(11)(A) & (C) explains, courts are required to look beyond particular labels to determine if an officer of the court functions substantially like a receiver or trustee: "custodian" means "a prepetition liquidator of the debtor's property, . . . or administrator of the debtor's property. The definition of custodian to include a receiver or trustee is descriptive, and not meant to be limited to court officers with those titles." S. Rep. No. 95-989, at 23 (1978), reprinted in 1978 U.S.C.C.A.N. 5787, 5809 (emphasis added). There is no doubt that, under the terms of the Receivership Order, Marwil became "administrator of the debtor's property," responsible for liquidating Bayou's litigation claims. See Receivership Order ¶¶ 6-7 (App. A-39 to A-42).

As a custodian, Marwil was subject to the requirements of 11 U.S.C. § 543. Under § 543, "[a] custodian with knowledge of the commencement of a case under this title concerning the debtor may not make any disbursement from, or take any action in the administration of, property of the debtor, proceeds, product, offspring, rents, or profits of such property, or property of the estate, in the possession, custody, or control of such custodian, except such action as is necessary to preserve such property." Id. § 543(a). Instead, the custodian must "deliver to the trustee any property of the debtor held by or transferred to such custodian" and "file an accounting of any property of the debtor . . . that, at any time, came into the possession, custody, or control of such custodian." Id. § 543(b).

2. The district court wrongly attempted to make a distinction between receivers allegedly appointed "pursuant to federal receivership statutes alone," slip op. at 13 (App. A-201), and persons appointed to act as corporate management "pursuant to federal securities laws and the court's inherent authority," id. at 14 (App. A-202) (footnote omitted). See also Receivership Order at 1 (App. A-37); slip op. at 4-5 (App. A-192 to a-193) (citing Section 10(b) of the Securities Exchange Act of 1934 and SEC Rule 10b-5, Fed. R. Civ. P. 66, 28 U.S.C. §§ 754 and 959). The district court acknowledged that the former would be "custodians," but asserted that the latter are not. See ibid.

However, neither Section 10(b) of the Securities Exchange Act of 1934 nor SEC Rule 10b-5, cited by the district court, specifically vests courts with the power to appoint receivers. See SEC v. American Bd. of Trade, Inc., 830 F.2d 431, 436 (2d Cir. 1987) ("[N]either the Securities Act of 1933 nor the Securities Exchange Act of 1934 explicitly vests district courts with the power to appoint trustees or receivers . . . ."), cert. denied, 485 U.S. 938 (1988); see also SEC v. Manor Nursing Ctrs., Inc., 458 F.2d 1082, 1105 (2d Cir. 1972) (noting "the absence of explicit statutory authority" to appoint a trustee "to receive the proceeds, to distribute them to defrauded public investors and to report to the court on the true state of affairs"). Rather, such authority derives wholly from the general equity powers of the district courts. See American Bd. of Trade, 830 F.2d at 436; Manor Nursing Ctrs., 458 F.2d at 1105. The same is true with regard to a district court's authority to appoint a receiver in a non-securities case, so no distinction can be drawn between receivers appointed in securities cases and those appointed in other cases.

Nor did the district court cite any authority for the proposition that a person appointed by a district court to take control of the property and manage the affairs of a defendant in a securities action would not be deemed a "custodian" if that defendant later became a debtor in a case under the Bankruptcy Code. The definition of "custodian" in 11 U.S.C. § 101(11) contains no exception for custodians appointed in securities cases; and there appears to be no case law supporting such a distinction.

Furthermore, this straightforward reading of the definition of "custodian" is consistent with the framework of the Bankruptcy Code. Prior to bankruptcy, any number of persons may be engaged in helping to manage the property of a struggling company, but once the company declares bankruptcy, the Code authorizes only the debtor itself or a trustee to administer the estate. Thus, anyone previously serving as receiver or agent to manage the company's property becomes a custodian who must account for and turn over the property. 11 U.S.C. § 543.

This analysis is buttressed by the Code's prohibition on the appointment of receivers in bankruptcy. See 11 U.S.C. § 105(b); see also S. Rep. No. 95-989, at 23 (1978), reprinted in 1978 U.S.C.C.A.N. 5787, 5809 ("custodian" means "a prepetition liquidator of the debtor's property, . . . or administrator of the debtor's property. The definition of custodian to include a receiver or trustee is descriptive, and not meant to be limited to court officers with those titles.") (emphasis added). If the debtor cannot administer the estate as debtor in possession, then a disinterested trustee (not a receiver) is to perform that function.

C. The Rulings Below Override The Scheme Contemplated By The Bankruptcy Code By Supplanting The Authority Of The U.S. Trustee In Chapter 11 Cases.

An appointment that seeks to circumvent the bankruptcy scheme established by Congress is invalid. The district court had the authority to appoint a receiver with management powers to run the affairs of the Bayou entities prior to bankruptcy. But, under the Bankruptcy Code, that authority did not supplant the right of the U.S. Trustee to appoint a trustee in Chapter 11 cases and to does not affect the status of receivers as custodians. See 11 U.S.C. §§ 101(11)(A)&(C); 105(b); 543.

An important policy underlying the Bankruptcy Code is the need to ensure that there are disinterested trustees, overseen by the U.S. Trustee, to manage bankrupt companies. See 11 U.S.C. § 1104 (requiring that a trustee appointed by the court at the request of the U.S. Trustee must be a "disinterested person").[4] In defining the obligation of "disinterestedness," the Code says that examiners and trustees may "not have an interest materially adverse to the interest of the estate or of any class of

[4] The Code defines "disinterested person" as a person that:

> (A) is not a creditor, an equity security holder, or an insider;
>
> (B) is not and was not, within 2 years before the date of the filing of the petition, a director, officer, or employee of the debtor; and
>
> (C) does not have an interest materially adverse to the interest of the estate or of any class of creditors or equity security holders, by reason of any direct or indirect relationship to, connection with, or interest in, the debtor, or for any other reason.

11 U.S.C. § 101(14).

creditors or equity security holders, by reason of any direct or indirect relationship to, connection with, or interest in, the debtor, or for any other reason." 11 U.S.C. § 101(14)(C) (emphasis added). "By prohibiting any 'materially adverse' 'interest' to any party to the bankruptcy 'for any ... reason,' Congress plainly invited – indeed compelled – federal courts to construe 'disinterestedness' against the backdrop of the equitable duties that apply to positions of trust." In re Big Rivers Elec. Corp., 355 F.3d 415, 431 (6th Cir. 2004).

The decisions of the district and bankruptcy courts, however, effectively allow creditors to handpick a person prior to bankruptcy to administer the bankruptcy estate, without any guarantee that the person will be disinterested. As a result, the district court's decision improperly intrudes on the role of the U.S. Trustees and undermines the policy of the federal bankruptcy system.

As explained, the district court admitted that this result seemed to "expose[] a loophole in the Bankruptcy Code," inasmuch as the 1978 Bankruptcy Reform Act "expressly sought to supplant federal equity receivers in bankruptcy proceedings with the U.S. Trustee." Slip Op. at 22 (App. A-210). But the supposed "loophole" in the statutory scheme results from the district court's mischaracterization of its Receivership Order and its faulty construction of the Bankruptcy Code provisions that make up the statutory scheme. See Matter of Plantation Inn Partners, 142 B.R. 561, 564 (Bankr. S.D. Ga. 1992) ("[T]o permit the Receiver to indefinitely remain in possession and to vest him permanently with all the duties and powers of a debtor-in-possession goes far beyond the limited relief envisioned by Section 543. . . . Clearly the Code contemplates that the long-term administration of a Chapter 11 case will be managed by a trustee or debtor-in-possession, not a hybrid created by judicial fiat.").

D. The Bankruptcy Court's Decision Is Inconsistent With Other Case Law.

The relevant case law supports the government's view. For example, in Matter of Plantation Inn Partners, 142 B.R. 561 (Bankr. S.D. Ga. 1992), the debtor sought turnover of property from a custodian (who had previously been a receiver), and the custodian sought to excuse turnover under the exception contained in 11 U.S.C. 543(d). But, as explained, the bankruptcy court held that the custodian could not continue to administer the estate, despite the statutory exception. To do so would "vest [the custodian] permanently with all the duties and powers of a debtor-in-possession" and thus far exceed the limited relief envisioned in Section 543. Id. at 564. As the court noted, the Bankruptcy Code clearly "contemplates that the long-term administration of a Chapter 11 case will be managed by a trustee or debtor-in-possession, not a hybrid created by judicial fiat." Ibid.

Similarly, in In re Stratesec, Inc., 324 B.R. 156 (Bankr. D.D.C. 2004), the court held that allowing a receiver "to continue to manage the affairs of the debtor while that debtor utilizes chapter 11 of the Bankruptcy Code" would be "inconsistent with the Bankruptcy Code"; "[i]f a fiduciary is necessary, it should be a trustee appointed by the United States Trustee." Id. at 157-158. See also In re 400 Madison Ave. Ltd. P'ship, 213 B.R. 888, 894 (Bankr. S.D.N.Y. 1997) ("Since no section of the Code includes a receiver who remains in possession within the definition of trustee, the receiver does not take on the obligations and duties of a Chapter 11 trustee nor the somewhat different ones of a debtor-in-possession set forth in Code § 1107."). Here, the district court did not cite any contrary authority for the proposition that it had the authority to appoint a person to fulfill the duties of a receiver who could also administer the estate after the filing of a bankruptcy petition.

It also is important to note that Marwil's service as a custodian, standing alone, did not automatically disqualify him from being appointed or elected as a Chapter 11 trustee. See Tr. of Hrg. On Mot. To Appoint a Trustee (June 29, 2006) at 13:12-16 (App. A-61). But Marwil has never filed an affidavit of disinterestedness. See ibid. If Marwil cannot satisfy the requirements of "disinterestedness," then he should not continue in charge of the debtor during the bankruptcy.

The district court stated in its order that "[t]he U.S. Trustee can take some solace in the fact that this chain of events will rarely occur" because "[t]he necessary ingredients – corrupt management, inevitable bankruptcy, and a highly motivated group of creditors desirous of a particular individual to manage a troubled estate – will not often appear ensemble." Slip op. at 25 (App. A-213). But, the U.S. Trustee Program is confronted regularly with variations on this fact pattern. Although the district court decision is as yet unpublished, it has received substantial attention in the bankruptcy press. Therefore, unless the order is reversed, the U.S. Trustee's Office is likely to encounter creditor groups in non-bankruptcy courts carefully following the district court's roadmap to take advantage of the "loophole" so that they may dictate who will serve as estate fiduciary.

CONCLUSION

For the foregoing reasons, the decision of the district court should be reversed with instructions to remand the case to the bankruptcy court for entry of an order appointing a Chapter 11 trustee.

ON APPEAL FROM THE UNITED STATES DISTRICT COURT
FOR THE SOUTHERN DISTRICT OF NEW YORK

REPLY BRIEF FOR THE APPELLANT

INTRODUCTION

1. In our opening brief, we demonstrated that the bankruptcy court abused its discretion in denying the U.S. Trustee's motion to appoint a Chapter 11 trustee to take control of Bayou's property. The district court entered an order in April 2006 appointing Jeff Marwil as "the federal equity receiver," vesting him with corporate governance powers necessary to manage Bayou's property. App. A-38, A-41. The district court later construed this order as, in effect, having appointed Marwil both as receiver and as corporate management. App. A-201. The court further held that Marwil's purported appointment as management meant that Marwil did not have to be treated as a "custodian" under the Bankruptcy Code when Bayou filed for bankruptcy and that Marwil therefore was under no obligation to turn over Bayou's property to a bankruptcy trustee. App. A-209.

Because the 1978 Bankruptcy Reform Act expressly sought to supplant federal equity receivers in bankruptcy proceedings with Chapter 11 trustees, the district court acknowledged that its decision contradicted the spirit, if not the letter, of the 1978 Reform Act. App. A-213. The district court simply chalked up the result to a "loophole" in the Bankruptcy Code. App. A-210.

We showed, however, that the district court's initial order simply appointed Marwil Bayou's "receiver" and vested him with the powers necessary to manage the company, Br. for Appellant at 14-16; and that, as a receiver prior to the filing of a bankruptcy petition, Marwil became a "custodian" post-petition who, as such, was required to deliver to the bankruptcy trustee any property of the debtor held by him and to file an accounting, id. at 17-19. The district court was wrong to believe that a person appointed to take control of the property and manage the affairs of a defendant in a securities action could avoid becoming a "custodian" if that defendant later became a debtor in a case under the Bankruptcy Code. See id. at 19-21. The refusal by the district court and the bankruptcy court to grant the U.S. Trustee's motion to appoint a Chapter 11 trustee improperly intrudes on the authority of the U.S. Trustee and undermines the policy of the federal bankruptcy system by effectively allowing creditors to handpick a person prior to bankruptcy to administer the bankruptcy estate without any guarantee that the person will be disinterested. See Br. for Appellant at 21-24. Finally, relevant case law holds that it is inconsistent with the Bankruptcy Code for a court to allow a receiver to continue to manage the affairs of the debtor while that debtor utilizes Chapter 11 of the Code. Those cases make clear that, if a fiduciary is necessary, it should be a trustee appointed by the U.S. Trustee. See Br. for Appellant at 24-26.

2. Without addressing our argument that he became a "custodian" subject to the Code's turnover provisions once bankruptcy proceedings began, the Bayou Entities respond that the district court had authority to appoint Marwil to be Bayou's management and that, as management, he was automatically authorized to act as the debtor-in-possession upon the filing of bankruptcy petitions. See Br. for Appellees at 9-10, 20-21. Bayou does not identify the source of any such authority; and it is clear from the court's order that the appointment of Marwil as managing members was entirely derivative of his appointment as receiver.

Bayou argues that the U.S. Trustee "did not raise a valid basis for the appointment of a trustee" in Marwil's stead. Id. at 12. Specifically, Bayou argues that the U.S. Trustee has not shown that Marwil has engaged in any of the misconduct enumerated in § 1104(a)(1) of the Bankruptcy Code and, as a consequence, has "failed to offer 'clear and convincing evidence' of 'cause' for the appointment of a trustee in the underlying bankruptcy cases." Id. at 13-14. Bayou also argues that Marwil is doing a good job as Bayou's management, id. at 14-18, and that a Chapter 11 trustee was not, and is not, in the best interests of Bayou's creditors. Id. at 18-19. These arguments miss the point, because the district court did not have authority to appoint a receiver with management authority that superseded the requirements of the Bankruptcy Code.

Likewise, the Official Committee of Unsecured Creditors' argument that the U.S. Trustee's motion to appoint a trustee is "an impermissible collateral attack" on the district court order appointing Marwil receiver and managing member should be rejected. See Br. of Appellee Official Comm. Of Unsecured Creditors ("Creditors' Br.") at 9. The U.S. Trustee's motion, of course, is not a collateral attack on the district court's appointment order at all, but only requires construction of that order.

Nor is there merit to the Unsecured Creditors' Committee's argument that the bankruptcy court correctly found that Marwil was a managing member with powers distinct from his receivership powers under the plain terms of the appointment order, id. at 14, and that the U.S. Trustee ignores the plain language and intent of that order. Id. at 18-20.

The U.S. Trustee's motion does not ignore the plain language and intent of the appointment order. Rather, the motion was premised on the fact that the district court did not – and could not – consistent with the Bankruptcy Code, appoint a receiver with management authority that survived the filing of the bankruptcy petitions. The judgment of the district court should be reversed.

SUMMARY OF ARGUMENT

1. The Official Creditors' Committee filed a Motion to Appoint a Receiver. In granting the motion, the district court stated that it was appointing Jeff Marwil as "federal equity receiver" to manage Bayou's property. The court confirmed that this is what it was asked to do and this is what it intended to do. As receiver, when Marwil caused the Bayou Entities to file petitions for bankruptcy, he became a "custodian" within the meaning of the Bankruptcy Code (11 U.S.C. § 101(11)(A)) and was subject to the turnover requirements of 11 U.S.C. § 543.

2. Bayou and the Official Creditors' Committee argue that the plain language of the appointment order states that Marwil was to be the "managing member" of the Bayou Entities and deemed a debtor-in-possession for any or all of the Bayou Entities in proceedings under Chapter 11 of the Code. But the order also states that the receiver is empowered to prosecute adversary proceedings and other matters "as may be permitted under the [Bankruptcy] Code and/or applicable law." Although the district court had the authority to appoint a receiver with management powers to run the affairs of the Bayou entities prior to bankruptcy, under the Bankruptcy Code, that authority did not supplant the jurisdiction of the bankruptcy court to direct the appointment of a trustee in Chapter 11 cases. Thus, the plain language of the order does not appoint Marwil as a managing member of Bayou following its bankruptcy filings.

3. In this regard, the scope of Marwil's authority is not a question of fact reviewable under the clearly erroneous standard, as the appellees suggest. Rather, it involves a legal question – the interpretation of the district court's appointment order in light of applicable Bankruptcy Code provisions – which is reviewable de novo.

4. The U.S. Trustee's motion to appoint a trustee cannot be characterized as a "collateral attack" on the district court's order appointing Marwil a receiver. The motion merely required the bankruptcy court to construe that order, a task courts routinely perform. In any event, the principle that precludes collateral attacks on a prior ruling or judgment has no application where the person challenging the prior ruling or judgment was not a party or a privy to the first proceeding. The U.S. Trustee was not a party or a privy to the proceedings to appoint a receiver. On the other hand, once the receiver filed bankruptcy petitions on behalf of the Bayou Entities, the U.S. Trustee had every right to seek the appointment of a trustee and to have the receiver, as "custodian" of the debtors' property, turn over that property pursuant to § 543 of the Bankruptcy Code.

5. Bayou and the Creditors' Committee argue that the U.S. Trustee has failed to offer "clear and convincing evidence" of "cause" for the appointment of a trustee in the underlying bankruptcy cases because Marwil has not engaged in fraud, dishonesty, incompetence, gross mismanagement, or similar misconduct and because Marwil has done a good job managing the affairs of the Bayou Entities. This argument misses the point. Consideration of what is in the "best interests of creditors" cannot override the requirements of the Bankruptcy Code. If Marwil's corporate governance powers were derived from his receivership, then he became simply a "custodian" within the meaning of the Bankruptcy Code when petitions for bankruptcy were filed. Under these circumstances, "cause" exists for the appointment of a trustee, since prior management's fraud precludes turning the property back over to them.

ARGUMENT

THE BANKRUPTCY COURT ABUSED ITS DISCRETION IN DENYING THE U.S. TRUSTEE'S MOTION TO APPOINT A CHAPTER 11 TRUSTEE

A. Marwil's Appointment As Bayou's "Receiver" Made Him A "Custodian" Within The Meaning Of The Bankruptcy Code.

As explained in our opening brief (at pp. 14-17), it is clear from the district court's order that the court appointed Marwil as a receiver and that any management duties he was given were to be exercised as a part of that receivership. The Receivership Order is entitled "ORDER GRANTING THE UNOFFICIAL ON-SHORE CREDITORS' COMMITTEE'S MOTION TO APPOINT A RECEIVER," and under the heading "APPOINTMENT OF RECEIVER AND PROPERTY OF THE RECEIVERSHIP ESTATE," the court stated, "the Court hereby APPOINTS Jeff J Marwil . . . to be the federal equity receiver [of the Bayou Entities]." At the hearing on appeal from the bankruptcy court's ruling, the district court made clear that its intention was to appoint a receiver, just as it was asked:

> The federal remedy I issued was the appointment of a receiver pursuant to Rule 66 of the Federal Rules of Civil Procedure. That's what I was asked to do, that's what I > did. I was not asked to appoint an interim director. . . . I know what I was asked to do. I was asked to appoint a receiver, somebody who could marshall assets.

Nov. 17, 2006 Hearing Tr. 19-20 (at p. 10) (Dkt No. 15).

As we also explained (at pp. 17-21), when Marwil caused the Bayou entities to file voluntary petitions for bankruptcy, Marwil's authority as receiver was circumscribed by operation of the Bankruptcy Code. Upon filing, he became a "custodian" within the meaning of the Code and subject to the turnover obligations set forth in 11 U.S.C. § 543.

The statutory definition of "custodian" is broad, and it includes any "receiver . . . of the property of the debtor" appointed in a non-Chapter 11 case, and any "receiver, or agent . . . appointed or authorized to take charge of property of the debtor . . . for the purpose of general administration of such property for the benefit of the debtor's creditors." 11 U.S.C. § 101(11)(A), (C). Marwil qualifies under both of these provisions. He was a receiver of property of the debtor appointed in a non-Chapter 11 case, and he was a receiver appointed to take charge of the property of the debtor and administer it for the benefit of the debtor's creditors. As a custodian, Marwil's role in the bankruptcy case is limited. Custodians cannot "take any action in the administration of [] property of the debtor . . . or property of the estate . . . except such action as is necessary to preserve such property." 11 U.S.C. § 543(a).

To this end, Marwil was obliged to "deliver to the trustee any property of the debtor held by or transferred to [him]" and to "file an accounting of any property of the debtor . . . that, at any time, came into [his] possession, custody, or control . . . ." Id. § 543(b).

B. The "Plain Language" Of The Appointment Order Does Not Require A Conclusion That Marwil's Management Powers Were Distinct From His Receivership Powers.

In their appellee briefs, Bayou and the Official Creditors' Committee never come to grips with our argument that, as a receiver, Marwil falls squarely within the Bankruptcy Code's definition of "custodian." Rather, the appellees argue that the district court's appointment order effectively preempts application of the Code's provisions applicable to "custodians." That is, the appellees argue that the plain language of the district court's appointment order states that Marwil was to be the "managing member" of the Bayou Entities and that his powers as managing member were to be distinct from his receivership powers. Specifically, the appellees cite that portion of the district court's Receivership Order stating that "[Marwil shall] succeed to be the sole and exclusive managing member . . . and in connection therewith be and be deemed a debtor-in-possession for any or all of the Bayou Entities in proceedings under Chapter 11 of the Code . . . ." See Br. of Appellees at 5-6 (quoting Receivership Order at ¶ 7(e)); Creditors' Br. at 15 (same). That same provision, however, makes clear that, in such circumstances, the receiver is empowered to "prosecute such adversary proceedings and other matters as may be permitted under the [Bankruptcy] Code and/or applicable law." App. A-41 (emphasis added).

As our previous brief explained (at pp. 21-24), an appointment that seeks to circumvent the bankruptcy scheme established by Congress is invalid. The district court had the authority to appoint a receiver with management powers to run the affairs of the Bayou entities prior to bankruptcy. But, under the Bankruptcy Code, that authority did not supplant the jurisdiction of the bankruptcy court to direct the appointment of a trustee in Chapter 11 cases and does not affect the status of receivers as custodians. See 11 U.S.C. §§ 101(11)(A)&(C); 543. Nor does that authority permit the district court to supersede the Bankruptcy Code's prohibition on the appointment of receivers in bankruptcy. See 11 U.S.C. § 105(b); S. Rep. No. 95-989, at 29 (1978), reprinted in 1978 U.S.C.C.A.N. 5787, 5815 ("The bankruptcy judge is prohibited from appointing a receiver in a case under title 11 under any circumstances. The bankruptcy code has ample provision for the appointment of a trustee when needed. Appointment of a receiver would simply circumvent the established procedures.").

In any event, the Official Creditors' Committee is wrong in asserting that "[t]here is no suggestion anywhere in the text of the appointment order that the district court intended [Marwil's] appointment as managing member to be derivative of Mr. Marwil's powers under the equity receivership." Id. at 15-16. First, if Marwil had all the powers of management that the appellees now claim he did separate and apart from his receivership appointment, it is a wonder the district court bothered to appoint him receiver at all. His receivership powers would be entirely superfluous to the powers he would have had as actual management.

But it is evident, in any event, that the district court's appointment of Marwil as managing member necessarily was derivative of his appointment as receiver. If Marwil were, in fact, a true "managing member" of the Bayou limited liability companies ("LLCs"), he would need to be admitted as a managing member in compliance with applicable state law governing LLC members, such as Conn. Gen. Stat. § 34-179 (2005). Furthermore, to be a true manager of a Connecticut LLC, Marwil would need to be designated as such in compliance with Conn. Gen. Stat. § 34-140 (2005).[1] There is no evidence that Marwil was admitted to membership in the Bayou entities in compliance with this statute or with similar statutes in other pertinent states. Rather, Marwil's status as managing member derives from the Receiver Order itself, and not from applicable state law.

[1] Conn. Gen. Stat. § 34-101(13) defines "manager" or "managers" to mean "the person or persons designated in accordance with section 34-140" to manage the LLC. Conn. Gen. Stat. § 34-101(14) defines "member" or "members" of an LLC to mean "a person or persons who have been admitted to membership in a limited liability (continued...)

It is also evident that Marwil, as "managing member," did not have the full panoply of discretion that an ordinary manager has to operate the business of the debtor. The Receivership Order directed that Marwil was to perform his duties "at all times with a view towards (a) locating, preserving, and protecting the Bayou Assets; and (b) distributing the Bayou Assets that the Receiver collects as expeditiously as possible to creditors (including investors) of the Bayou Entities, pursuant to further order of [the] Court." Receivership Order ¶ 7 (App. A-40). Thus, even as "sole managing member," Marwil was not free to exercise normal managerial discretion. App. A-40. That is, Marwil's powers and rights, including the right to compensation (see App. A-43 to A-44), were entirely constrained by the district court order appointing him. Accordingly, the plain language of the district court's order company as provided in section 34-179 and who have not disassociated from the limited liability company as provided in section 34-180." The principal Bayou entity is a Connecticut LLC, but other debtors are Delaware and New York LLCs. The LLC statutes of those jurisdictions do not differ in any material respects from those of Connecticut. See Del. Code § 18-301 (admission of members); id. § 18-401 (admission of managers); N.Y. Limited Liability Company Law § 102(p) (definition of manager); id. § 408 (management by managers); id. § 410 (qualification of managers); § 602 (admission of members).

does not require that Marwil's management powers were distinct from his receivership powers.[2]

C. The Scope Of Marwil's Authority Is A Legal Question Subject To De Novo Review.

In this regard, the scope of Marwil's authority is not a question of fact reviewable under the clearly erroneous standard, as the appellees suggest. See Br. for Appellees at 20; Creditors' Br. at 14-15. Rather, it involves the interpretation of the district court's appointment order in light of applicable Bankruptcy Code provisions. As such, it involves a legal question reviewable de novo. See United States v. Spallone, 399 F.3d 415, 423 (2d Cir. 2005) ("The interpretation of the text of a court order or judgment is considered a conclusion of law subject to de novo review."); In re Duplan Corp., 212 F.3d 144, 151 (2d Cir.2000) (reviewing bankruptcy court's interpretation of district court order de novo). While, as appellees note (Br. for Appellees at 19-20), an issuing judge's interpretation of her own order is entitled to deference, Spallone, 399 F.3d at 423, "where, as in this case, an ambiguity in terminology results in a lack of clarity as to the scope of the ruling, a reviewing court may properly examine the entire record for the purpose of determining what was decided," id. at 424 (citation and internal quotation marks omitted). Furthermore, "an order will not be construed as going beyond the motion in pursuance of which the order was made, for a court is presumed not to intend to grant relief which was not demanded." Ibid. (citation and internal quotation marks omitted).

[2] For these reasons, appellees' assertion that various federal agencies, including the Department of Justice and SEC, reviewed and consented to the proposed order before it was entered by the district court (Br. for Appellees at 2), is irrelevant. The order does not grant Marwil separate management powers apart from his role as receiver, and the Government therefore did not consent to Marwil serving as Bayou's management after its bankruptcy filing.

Here, as explained, the Official Creditors' Committee filed a "Motion to Appoint A Receiver" and, in granting that motion, the district court appointed Jeff Marwil to be the "federal equity receiver" of the Bayou Entities. The bankruptcy court and then the district court subsequently interpreted that order as having appointed Marwil as management of those entities with powers that would have made his appointment as receiver entirely unnecessary and which, as the district court admitted, "contradicts the spirit . . . of the 1978 Reform Act." In re Bayou Group, L.L.C., 363 B.R. 674, 689 (S.D.N.Y. 2007). That interpretation of the appointment order should not be sustained.

D. The U.S. Trustee's Motion To Appoint A Trustee Is Not An Impermissible Collateral Attack On The District Court's Order Appointing Marwil A Receiver.

The Official Creditors' Committee assert that the U.S. Trustee's motion to appoint a trustee is "an impermissible collateral attack on the district court order appointing Mr. Marwil as receiver and managing member." Creditors' Br. at 9. According to the Creditors' Committee, the proper course for the U.S. Trustee would have been "to seek appropriate relief directly with the district court." Id. at 13. The Creditors' Committee is mistaken.

First, the U.S. Trustee's motion simply is not a collateral attack on the district court's appointment order. Rather, the motion merely seeks the appointment of a Chapter 11 trustee in light of the fact that Marwil became a "custodian" once the bankruptcy petitions were filed. To the extent that the bankruptcy court was called upon to construe the district court's Receivership Order before granting the motion, that fact does not transform the U.S. Trustee's motion into a collateral attack on the district court order. See United States v. Spallone, 399 F.3d 415, 424 (2d Cir. 2005) ("Court orders are construed like other written instruments, except that the determining factor is not the intent of the parties, but that of the issuing court.").

But even if the U.S. Trustee's motion could be considered a collateral attack on the district court's Receivership Order, the principle that precludes collateral attacks on a prior ruling or judgment – a principle derived from the related doctrines of res judicata and collateral estoppel[3] – has no application where the person challenging the prior ruling or judgment was not a party or a privy to the first proceeding. See Parklane Hosiery Co. v. Shore, 439 U.S. 322, 327 n. 7 (1979) ("It is a violation of due process for a judgment to be binding on a litigant who was not a party or a privy and therefore has never had an opportunity to be heard."); Doctor's Associates, Inc. v. Reinert & Duree, P.C., 191 F.3d 297, 302 (2d 1999) ("a court cannot 'make a decree which will bind any one but a party'") (quoting Alemite Mfg. Corp. v. Staff, 42 F.2d 832, 832 (2d Cir.1930) (L. Hand, J.)). The U.S. Trustee was not a party to, nor indeed had any notice of, the appointment proceedings.

Although the district court invited the U.S. Attorney's Office to send representatives to the appointment hearing to ensure that the appointment of a receiver did not interfere with ongoing federal forfeiture proceedings, the United States Trustee was not a party to the receivership proceedings. In this regard, the U.S. Trustee has no standing outside of cases under title 11. See 11 U.S.C. § 307 and 28

[3] "Collateral estoppel, like the related doctrine of res judicata, has the dual purpose of protecting litigants from the burden of relitigating an identical issue with the same party or his privy and of promoting judicial economy by preventing needless litigation." Parklane Hosiery Co. v. Shore, 439 U.S. 322, 326 (1979).

U.S.C. § 586.[4] See also United States v. Mendoza, 464 U.S. 154, 162-63 (1984) ("The conduct of government litigation in the courts of the United States is sufficiently different from the conduct of private civil litigation in those courts so that what might otherwise be economy interests underlying a broad application of collateral estoppel are outweighed by the constraints which peculiarly affect the government.").

Because the U.S. Trustee was not a party or a privy to the appointment proceedings, there is no basis for the bankruptcy court's suggestion that the U.S. Trustee "could make a motion directly before Judge McMahon seeking leave from her to displace the person she appointed as the manager of these entities . . . ." > [T]he U.S. Trustee's Office was obviously not involved at the District Court level. We were not given notice that this order was being entered in. Obviously, we were only aware of this once the bankruptcy was filed. We obviously would have had no standing at the time the order was entered, because until a bankruptcy is filed . . . there is no standing for the U.S. Trustee's Office to appear and be heard . . . even if we had been made aware of the order.

[5] The authorities cited in the Official Creditors' Committee's brief (at pp. 10-

On the other hand, once the receiver filed bankruptcy petitions on behalf of the Bayou Entities, the U.S. Trustee had every right to seek the appointment of a trustee and to have the receiver, as "custodian" of the debtors' property, turn over that property pursuant to § 543 of the Bankruptcy Code. In this regard, it was perfectly appropriate for the U.S. Trustee to argue, in support of her motion, that the district court did not, and could not, grant Marwil management powers that were independent of, and outlasted, his receivership powers.

12) are not to the contrary. Each of those authorities involved a collateral attack by a person who was a party or a privy to the appointment proceedings or who had some prior opportunity to challenge the appointment. See, e.g., Miller v. Hockley, 80 F.2d 980, 983 (4th Cir.) (the appointment of receivers for realty company could not be collaterally attacked by "[t]he defendant [who] knew of the appointment of the receivers . . . and made no objection to it until suit was brought against him by the receivers upon the notes here involved"), cert. denied, 298 U.S. 657 (1936); Badger v. Hoidale, 88 F.2d 208, 212 (8th Cir. 1937) (stockholders could not collaterally attack appointment of a receiver because they were in privity with corporation that was a party to original suit in which appointment was ordered); Grant v. A.B. Leach & Co., 280 U.S. 351, 359 (1930) (defendant in suit by receiver (Grant) to recover the value of bonds alleged to have been illegally obtained from furnace company in exchange for preferred stock could not collaterally attack appointment of the receiver where the "validity [of the appointment] was not challenged in any respect by the answer of [defendant] in the District Court, which admitted the allegation that Grant had been 'duly appointed' receiver of all the Company's property"); Stevens v. Carolina Scenic Stages, 208 F.2d 332, 336 (4th Cir. 1953) ("If there was error in the appointment here, . . . it would not be a matter which would subject the appointment to collateral attack in the court of bankruptcy, since the appointing court had jurisdiction of the subject matter and the parties."), cert. denied, 347 U.S. 917 (1954); 65 Am. Jur.2d § 67 n.8 (2007) (when the court appointing a receiver has subject matter jurisdiction as well as "jurisdiction over the parties," its order appointing the receiver cannot be collaterally attacked); 75 C.J.S. § 84 (2007) ("Where the court has jurisdiction of the subject matter and of the necessary parties, its action with respect to the appointment of a receiver, whether or not erroneous, may not be questioned in a collateral proceeding.").

E. The Standard For Appointing A Trustee Under Section 1104 Of The Bankruptcy Code Has Been Met.

1. A trustee shall be appointed to administer a Chapter 11 bankruptcy estate "for cause, including fraud, dishonesty, incompetence, or gross mismanagement of the affairs of the debtor by current management" or "if such appointment is in the interests of creditors, any equity security holders, and other interests of the estate." 11 U.S.C. § 1104(a)(1)-(2). Bayou and the Creditors' Committee argue that the U.S. Trustee has failed to offer "clear and convincing evidence" of "cause" for the appointment of a trustee in the underlying bankruptcy cases because Marwil has not engaged in fraud, dishonesty, incompetence, gross mismanagement, or similar misconduct and because Marwil has done a good job managing the affairs of the Bayou Entities. See Br. for Appellees at 12-18; Creditors' Br. at 21-23.

Of course, whether Bayou and the Creditors' Committee are correct that there is no cause for appointing a trustee depends on whether they are correct that Marwil's powers as manager of the debtor companies survived the termination of the receivership. If, as we have argued, Marwil's corporate governance powers were derived from his receivership and he became a "custodian" within the meaning of 11

U.S.C. § 101(11)(A) & (C), then it is evident that "cause" exists for the appointment of a trustee since prior management's fraud precludes turning the property back over to them.

2. The appellees engage in semantics by arguing that the U.S. Trustee "mischaracterizes the Bankruptcy Court and District Court holdings as stating that upon filing of the bankruptcy petitions, Marwil became the debtor-in-possession. . . . [N]o one ever argued, and neither lower court held, that Marwil became a debtor-in-possession." Br. for Appellees at 16. Of course, the district court itself characterized Marwil in this manner. See In re Bayou Group, 363 B.R. at 687 ("When Marwil caused the Bayou entities to file for Chapter 11 bankruptcy one month after his appointment, Marwil's status as corporate governor automatically blossomed into that of debtor-in-possession since, as managing member of Bayou, Marwil was the debtor's management.") (emphasis added). The U.S. Trustee merely characterized Marwil's status in the same way. While it might have been technically more correct for the court to characterize Marwil's status as sole managing member of the debtors-in-possession, as appellees suggest, Br. for Appellees at 16, the point remains that, as sole managing member of the debtors-in-possession, Marwil would be making the decisions for the debtors-in-possession. Cf. In re Bayou Group, 363 B.R. at 687

("[U]pon causing Bayou to file its bankruptcy petition, Marwil's receivership ended and he immediately became the managing member of a debtor-in-possession.").

3. In our previous brief (at pp. 22-23), we argued that an important policy underlying the Bankruptcy Code is the need to ensure that there are disinterested trustees to manage bankrupt companies. See 11 U.S.C. § 1104 (requiring that a trustee appointed by the court at the request of the U.S. Trustee must be a "disinterested person"). We also argued that the decisions of the district and bankruptcy courts, however, effectively allow creditors to handpick a person prior to bankruptcy to administer the bankruptcy estate, without any guarantee that the person will be disinterested. The appellees understood this argument to apply to "creditors in as-yet unfiled cases." Br. for Appellees at 17. But the concern was with this very case: The Official Creditors' Committee handpicked Marwil prior to bankruptcy to administer Bayou's bankruptcy estates without any guarantee that Marwil was "disinterested" within the meaning of the Bankruptcy Code. Indeed, Marwil still has not filed a sufficient affidavit demonstrating that he meets the standard of disinterestedness set forth at 11 U.S.C. § 101(14).

The appellees' position, moreover, would encourage creditors in anticipation of a bankruptcy to race to the courthouse to seek the appointment of a receiver/manager before another group of creditors got there first. In this way, one group of creditors can select who would get to wind up the affairs of the company post-bankruptcy whether or not that person satisfied the prerequisites of the Bankruptcy Code.

4. The appellees also argue that replacement of Marwil with a Chapter 11 trustee is not in the best interests of creditors. See Br. for Appellees at 18-19; Creditors' Br. at 23-24. But if we are correct that the district court had no authority to appoint a receiver with management authority that survived the filing of bankruptcy petitions, then it plainly is in the interests of all creditors to have a trustee appointed to administer the bankruptcy estate. See In re Stratesec, Inc., 324 B.R. 156, 157-58 (Bankr. D.D.C. 2004) (allowing a receiver "to continue to manage the affairs of the debtor while that debtor utilizes Chapter 11 of the Bankruptcy Code" would be "inconsistent with the Bankruptcy Code"; "[i]f a fiduciary is necessary, it should be a trustee appointed by the United States Trustee"); Matter of Plantation Inn Partners, 142 B.R. 561, 564 (Bankr. S.D. Ga. 1992) ("[T]o permit the Receiver to indefinitely remain in possession and to vest him permanently with all the duties and powers of a debtor-in-possession goes far beyond the limited relief envisioned by Section 543. . . . Clearly the Code contemplates that the long-term administration of a Chapter 11 case will be managed by a trustee or debtor-in-possession, not a hybrid created by judicial fiat.").

In this regard, as explained in our previous brief (at p. 25), Marwil's service as a custodian, standing alone, did not automatically disqualify him from being appointed or elected as a Chapter 11 trustee. See Tr. of Hrg. On Mot. To Appoint a Trustee (June 29, 2006) at 13:12-16 (App. A-61). But, the Bankruptcy Code gives the authority to appoint to the U.S. Trustee, not to the district court. As a result, consideration of what is in the best interest of creditors cannot override the requirements of the Code.

CONCLUSION

For the foregoing reasons, the decision of the district court should be reversed with instructions to remand the case to the bankruptcy court for entry of an order directing the appointment of a Chapter 11 trustee.

I. INTRODUCTION AND STATEMENT OF JURISDICTION

Diana G. Adams, the United States Trustee for Region 2 (the "United States Trustee"),[1] respectfully submits this memorandum of law in opposition to the appeal of Donna Berg (the "Debtor") from the order of the Honorable Burton R. Lifland, dated May 6, 2008 (the "Order"), granting the motion of the United States Trustee to dismiss her Chapter 11 Case with prejudice to re-filing for a period of one year [D-11; ECF 67].[2]

On July 24, 2006, the Debtor filed a voluntary petition under Chapter 7 of the Bankruptcy Code. The case was converted to a case under Chapter 11 of the Bankruptcy Code on October 2, 2007. Under 28 U.S.C. § 157, the United States Bankruptcy Court for the Southern District of New York had jurisdiction over the bankruptcy case. On May 6, 2008, the Bankruptcy Court entered the Order and the Debtor filed a timely notice of appeal. This Court has jurisdiction to hear and determine this appeal pursuant to 28 U.S.C. § 158(a), which provides, in part, that the district courts of the United States shall have jurisdiction to hear appeals from final judgments, orders, and decrees of bankruptcy judges entered in cases under 28 U.S.C. § 157.

No. 95-595, 95th Cong., 2d Sess. 109 (1978), reprinted in 1978 U.S.C.C.A.N. 5963, 6070. See 28 U.S.C. §586(a).

[2] "D-" is used herein to identify a document by its number in the Debtor's Designation of Contents for Inclusion in Record on Appeal and Statement of Issues On Appeal. For convenience, this brief will cross-reference the document to the corresponding docket entry on the electronic case filing system ("ECF") in the bankruptcy case, In re Donna Berg, Case No. 06-11682 (Bankr. S.D.N.Y.).

II. STATEMENT OF ISSUE PRESENTED

The Debtor consented to the dismissal of her bankruptcy case. The Debtor conceded that dismissal with prejudice for three to six months was reasonable. The only issue presented on appeal is whether the Bankruptcy Court abused its discretion when it imposed upon the Debtor a one-year bar to filing another petition.

III. STANDARD OF APPELLATE REVIEW

A district court reviews appeals of a bankruptcy court's conclusions of law de novo. Findings of fact made by a bankruptcy court may not be set aside unless clearly erroneous. See Fed. R. Bankr. P. 8013; Casse v. Key Bank Nat'l. Ass'n (In re Casse), 198 F.3d 327, 332 (2d Cir. 1999) (bankruptcy court's factual findings will be accepted unless clearly erroneous); Gulf States Exploration Co. v. Manville Prods. Corp. (In re Manville Prods. Corp.), 896 F.2d 1384, 1388 (2d Cir. 1990). This deferential standard applies not only to credibility assessments but also to interpretations deriving from "physical or documentary evidence or inferences from other facts." Anderson v. City of Bessemer, 470 U.S. 564, 574 (1985). A reviewing court may not "reverse the findings of the trier of fact simply because it is convinced that it would have decided the case differently." Anderson, 470 U.S. at 573 (1985). In a frequently cited passage, the Seventh Circuit explained, "[t]o be clearly erroneous, a decision must strike us as more than just maybe or probably wrong; it must . . . strike us as wrong with the force of a five-week-old, unrefrigerated dead fish." Parts & Elec. Motors, Inc. v. Sterling Elec., Inc., 866 F.2d 228, 233 (7th Cir. 1988). A bankruptcy court's order dismissing or converting a case is reviewed under an abuse of discretion standard. See Sullivan Cent. Plaza I, Ltd. v. Bancboston Real Estate Capital Corp., 935 F.2d 723, 728 (5th Cir. 1991); Hall v. Vance, 887 F.2d 1041, 1044-45 (10th Cir.

1989); In re Camden Ordnance Mfg. Co. of Ark, 245 B.R. 794, 797 (E.D. Pa. 2000); In re Sphere Holding Corp., 162 B.R. 639, 642-43 (E.D.N.Y. 1994). Discretion will be found to have been abused only when "the judicial action is arbitrary, fanciful or unreasonable which is another way of saying that discretion is abused only where no reasonable [person] would take the view adopted by the trial court." Camden Ordnance, 245 B.R. at 797 (quoting In re Blackwell, 162 B.R. 117, 119 (E.D. Pa. 1993)).

IV. STATEMENT OF FACTS

The facts of this case are largely undisputed. On July 24, 2006, the Debtor commenced this bankruptcy case by filing a voluntary petition under Chapter 7 of the Bankruptcy Code. [D-1; ECF 1]. The Debtor is an individual who is the sole principal and sole employee of an events planning business known as Donna Berg Productions Inc. ("DB Productions"). See Debtor's Brief in Support of Appeal ("Debtor's Brief"), p. 3, ¶2]. DB Productions was incorporated as a New York Subchapter S corporation [D-8; ECF 61 - Declaration of Brian S. Masumoto in support of Motion to Convert or Dismiss, ¶4].

While the Debtor concedes that DB Productions was only a "modest success" prior to filing bankruptcy, the Debtor lived an extraordinary lifestyle, wearing designer clothes, living in an apartment with a monthly rent of $7,100.00 and providing nanny care for her son at a cost of $2,800.00 per month. [CD- 1, pp.3- 4, ¶¶ 9, 12, 15; D-1; ECF 1 - Schedule J]. The Debtor's bankruptcy schedules list assets totaling $30,982.00. [D-1; ECF 1 - Schedule B]. These assets consist primarily of the security deposit of $14,000.00 on her apartment and an IRA valued at $15,000.00. [Id.]. The Debtor's liabilities, as set forth in the Bankruptcy Schedules, total $530,869.00, which includes $41,040.00 of priority tax claims and $489,829.00 of general unsecured claims.[D-1; D-2; ECF 1 - Schedule E; 6 - Amended Schedule F]. The general unsecured claims are comprised of amounts advanced by the Debtor's family members of approximately $144,000.00, amounts charged by the Debtor to credit cards totaling approximately $168,000.00, amounts owed by the Debtor for personal income taxes and related interest and penalties for the years 1993 though 2000 totaling $87,000.00, and amounts owed to vendors and service providers to DB Productions that were personally guaranteed by the Debtor, totaling approximately $81,000.00. [D-2; ECF 6].

The Chapter 7 Case and the United States Trustee's Motion to Dismiss the Chapter 7 Case for Bad Faith and Abuse, Pursuant to 11 U.S.C. § 707

Upon the filing of the Debtor's Chapter 7 case, Robert L. Geltzer, Esq., was appointed as Interim Chapter 7 Trustee and, thereafter, became permanent Chapter 7 Trustee of the Debtor's estate by operation of law (the "Chapter 7 Trustee").[3] On August 29, 2006, the Debtor appeared at the initial §341(a) Meeting of Creditors (the "341 Meeting"). [Debtor's Brief at Page 4 ¶2]. By Orders dated January 11, 2007, the Chapter 7 Trustee was authorized to retain the law firm Bryan Cave LLP as his counsel, and the accounting firm Davis Graber Plotzker & Ward, LLP as his accountants, to assist in his administration of the Debtor's chapter 7 estate. [Id.; ECF 14].

On March 30, 2007, the United States Trustee filed a motion seeking to dismiss the Debtor's Chapter 7 case for abuse under 11 U.S.C. §707(b) and for bad faith under 11 U.S.C.

[3] A Chapter 7 trustee is appointed by the United States Trustee in all Chapter 7 cases. 11 U.S.C. § 701(a)(1) provides: "Promptly after the order for relief under this chapter, the United States Trustee shall appoint one disinterested person that is a member of a panel of private trustees established under section 586(a)(1) of title 28 . . . to serve as interim trustee in the case." Pursuant to 11 U.S.C. § 702(d), the interim trustee shall serve as the permanent trustee in the case if the creditors do not elect a trustee. The duties of a Chapter 7 trustee include, among other things, investigating the financial affairs of the debtor. 11 U.S.C. §704.

§707(a) (the "Section 707 Dismissal Motion"). [CD-1; ECF 20].[4] The Section 707 Dismissal Motion was based upon the Debtor's testimony at the 341 Meeting, as well as an evaluation of her credit card statements, which confirmed that the majority of the charges were for recurring luxury purchases such as Chanel suits and other couture clothing, recreational travel and fine dining. [Id. at pp. 2-3; ¶¶7-9]. The Debtor's bank statements also revealed that, prior to the bankruptcy filing, she spent significant sums on non-essential items such as yoga classes, designer chocolates, manicures, and wine. [CD-1; ECF 20, at pp. 5-6 ¶17(a)]. In addition, although the Debtor reported in her Bankruptcy Schedules that loans received from family members totaling approximately $144,000.00 were for the operation of DB Productions, she testified at the 341 Meeting that these funds were provided to help her with expenses that arose in connection with her divorce and otherwise. [CD-1; ECF 20 at p. 3, ¶8]. By characterizing the majority of her debts as "business debts," the Debtor circumvented the requirement of filing a means-test form in her bankruptcy case.[5] [CD-1; ECF 20, at p. 9, ¶20]. Based upon the totality of the circumstances, the United States Trustee sought to dismiss the Debtor's Chapter 7 case for abuse and bad faith. [Id. at p. 5, ¶ 17; p. 8, ¶¶19-20].

The Debtor's Conversion of Chapter 7 Case to Chapter 11

In response to the Section 707 Dismissal Motion, on July 6, 2007 the Debtor filed a motion seeking to convert the Chapter 7 case to a case under Chapter 11 of the Bankruptcy Code. [CD-2; ECF 29]. On October 2, 2007, the Bankruptcy Court entered an order converting the Chapter 7 case to one under Chapter 11. [D-3; ECF 34]. Upon the conversion, the Chapter 7 Trustee was released of his rights, powers and duties over the Debtor's estate.[6]

The Relationship Between the Debtor and DB Productions

A lingering issue that existed in this case was the interrelationship between the Debtor and DB Productions. The Bankruptcy Court noted at a number of hearings that DB Productions had not filed for bankruptcy relief despite the fact that the Debtor and the corporation operated as a unit. [CD- 4; ECF 74, p. 3:23-25 and p. 4:1-2; 11-15; CD-5, p. 8:18-24; D-10; ECF 73, p. 12:13-15]. On January 24, 2008, the Bankruptcy Court held a status conference in the Debtor's chapter 11 case, and directed the Debtor to file a response to various questions posed by the Court regarding DB Productions. [D-8; ECF 61 - Declaration of Brian S. Masumoto, ¶ 13]. The Debtor filed a response to the Bankruptcy Court's directive on January 29, 2008, stating that DB Productions was operated out of her apartment and that she took money from the company whenever necessary to pay her bills. [Id.].

The Debtor, however, failed to address the Bankruptcy Court's concerns regarding the lack of transparency and disclosure of the financial relationship between the Debtor and DB Productions. [CD-4; ECF 74, p. 4:1-2, 13-15]. At the status conference held on February 28, 2008, the Court stated that the Debtor's response to the Court's directive did not answer the Court's questions and "raised more questions along the lines of those that were asked previously." CD- 4; ECF 74, p. 10:8-10]. The Court reiterated its concerns about the interrelated finances of the Debtor and DB Productions, stating that the Debtor was using DB

[6] The appointment of a chapter 7 trustee pursuant to 11 U.S.C. §§ 701 and 702 terminates, by operation of law, upon conversion of a Chapter 7 case to Chapter 11. Under 11 U.S.C. § 1101(1), a Chapter 11 debtor operates as a "debtor in possession" and maintains possession and control of the property of her estate during the Chapter 11 case.

Productions as "... a piggy bank, whenever she needs money she takes it out of the corporation; she operates it as if they were a unit, the individual and the corporation." [CD- 4; ECF 74, p. 3: 25; p. 4:1-2]. The Court also questioned the Debtor's viability in Chapter 11 given the request for administrative expenses by the chapter 7 professionals, which the Court concluded "... is another potential devastating hole in the possibility of any successful reorganization here." [Id. at p. 4:7-15]. The Debtor was further cautioned that "... the aroma of substantial abuse still seems to be here." [CD-4; ECF 74, p. 9:10-11].

The Bankruptcy Court's Concern Over the Debtor's Delay in Administering the Estate

Throughout the course of this case, the Bankruptcy Court expressed concern as to the existence of abuse by the Debtor and the Debtor's failure to move the case through the bankruptcy process in a timely manner. At the March 11, 2008, hearing on the fee applications of the Chapter 7 professionals, the Court noted that "... there's been an inordinate delay in this case, and it has not been shown that this delay has been occasioned by the administration of the [Chapter 7] trustee and the accountants to the trustee. Clearly their efforts have been sufficient to bring on a motion by the U.S. Trustee for abuse, and a lot of the factors with respect to that abuse still have not been dissipated, at least in my eyes." [CD-5, p. 9 :21-25; p. 10:1-3].

The United States Trustee's Motion to Dismiss the Chapter 11 Case, Pursuant to 11 U.S.C. § 1112(b)

On March 28, 2008, the United States Trustee filed a Motion to Convert the Chapter 11 Case to a Chapter 7 Case, or in the Alternative, to Dismiss the Chapter 11 Case (the "Motion to Convert or Dismiss"). [D-8; ECF 61]. The Motion to Convert or Dismiss was premised on a number of factors, including the failure of the Debtor to satisfactorily comply with the Court's January 24, 2008, request for detailed information regarding DB Productions. [D-8; ECF 61 at ¶11]. The Motion to Convert or Dismiss also cited the operating losses reported in the Debtor's Monthly Operating Reports filed for the periods October 2, 2007 through February 29, 2008. [D-8; ECF 61 at ¶¶ 17-20]. These reports, prepared by the Debtor's accountants, established that the Debtor operated at a significant loss every month with the exception of the month of December 2007, where there was a profit of only $1,320.00. [Id.]. In connection with her financial reporting requirements, the Debtor failed to provide bank statements and copies of cancelled checks as required by the United States Trustee Guidelines,[7] which prevented the United States Trustee from verifying any of the information provided. [D-8; ECF 61, pp. 8-9]. Given these losses, the United States Trustee concluded that the Debtor lacked the financial wherewithal to propose a feasible plan of reorganization such that she would be able to pay the administrative claims of the Chapter 7 professionals, the Chapter 11 professionals, her tax liabilities and her unsecured debt. [D-8; ECF 61, p.10]. The Debtor also failed to pay all of the statutory fees due to the United States Trustee as required by 28 U.S.C. § 1930(a)(6). [D-8; ECF 61, p. 11].

On May 1, 2008, the Debtor filed her response to the Motion to Convert or Dismiss, and advised the Bankruptcy Court and the United States Trustee that the Debtor no longer believed that she could successfully confirm a Chapter 11 plan, and that she would consent to either the conversion of her case to chapter 7 or the dismissal of her chapter 11 case. [D-9, ECF 66 ¶ 12;

In accordance with 28 U.S.C. § 586(a)(3), and in accordance with 11 U.S.C. § 704(8) and Federal Rule of Bankruptcy Procedure 2015, the United States Trustee for Region 2 has established Operating Guidelines and Reporting Requirements for Chapter 11 debtors. The Bankruptcy Court's Decision and Order Dismissing the Debtor's Bankruptcy Case with Prejudice to Refiling for a Period of One Year

The hearing on the Motion to Convert or Dismiss was held on May 6, 2008, and the Bankruptcy Court ruled in favor of the dismissal of the Debtor's case. Debtor's counsel conceded a number of times at the hearing that the Debtor agreed to a dismissal with prejudice, and stated that a bar to refiling for a three to six month period would be reasonable. [D-10; ECF 73, p. 4:5-10, p. 13:19-23, p. 14:15-16]. The Bankruptcy Court concluded, however, that there was substantial justification for the dismissal of the Debtor's case with prejudice for a one year period, which was supported by the record. [Id.; ECF 73, p. 10:13-15, p. 13:22-25, p. 14:1-2 and 9-10]. The Court also expressed concern as to the Debtor's motivation with respect to her position on the one year prohibition, and the perception that the Debtor had the intention to refile for bankruptcy relief after dismissal:

> "[I]f this debtor has an intention possibly or is harboring some intention of coming back to this court, we've had enough exposure to the debtor that I see that the U.S. Trustee's request for with prejudice has substantial justification for a one year period."

[Id. at p. 5:19-24].

> "I'm beginning to suspect that you are contemplating a refiling here. . . . I'm having a problem with you, Mr. Pick [Debtor's counsel], if that's what you're contemplating and that's the basis for your arguing for an additional six months with prejudice, you concede that a with prejudice would be appropriate in this case or you wouldn't resist it"

[Id. at p. 11:18-19; 23-25; p. 12:1-2].

The Bankruptcy Court recited a number of factors in reaching its conclusion, including possible refiling, the escalating administrative expenses, chapter 7 professional fees, the substantial claims filed by the taxing authorities and credit card companies, and the Debtor's failure to explain the abuse as alleged by the United States Trustee. [D-10; ECF 73, p. 4:18-20;11-13; 14-22; p. 5: 5-11; p. 11: 23-25; p. 12:1-2]. The Court stated that ". . . [t]he abuse has never been fully explained except in colloquy in front of the court and that she needs to be very well dressed in order to function in her business, which is to show herself off at great expense, and that there is another entity out there that may or may not be bearing the freight." [Id. at p. 5:5-11]. The Court also expressed concern as to why the Debtor had not caused DB Productions to file for bankruptcy relief, despite the intermingling of its financial affairs with those of the Debtor, and noted that "[t]his case is just peppered with the lack of any information or potential for a successful Chapter 11." [D-10; ECF 73, p. 6:2-3; p. 12:13-15; p. 10:22-24].

In light of the Debtor's history in the bankruptcy court, which included conversion of her Chapter 7 case to Chapter 11 when faced with a motion to dismiss for abuse and bad faith, the inability to successfully reorganize in Chapter 11, and the lack of adequate disclosure with regard to the relationship between the Debtor and DB Productions, the Court found substantial justification for dismissal of the bankruptcy case with prejudice to the Debtor refiling for bankruptcy for a one year period. [D-10; ECF 73, p. 4:18-20;11-13; 14-22; p. 5: 5-11; p. 11: 23-25; p. 12:1-2].

V. SUMMARY OF ARGUMENT

The Debtor's conduct over the last two years gave the Bankruptcy Court ample cause to dismiss her bankruptcy case with prejudice. The Court had the discretion to impose what it deemed an appropriate prejudicial period to prevent the Debtor from immediately filing another petition. The record clearly reflects that the Court did not abuse its discretion, and the Order dismissing this case with prejudice to refiling for one year should be affirmed.

VI. ARGUMENT

A. Cause Existed to Dismiss the Case

The United States Trustee asks this Court to affirm the Bankruptcy Court's Order dismissing the case and precluding the Debtor from filing again for one year. There is no dispute that dismissal was proper. 11 U.S.C. § 1112(b) provides that on the request of a party in interest, and after notice and a hearing, the "Court shall convert a case to a case under chapter 7 or dismiss a case under this chapter, whichever is in the best interests of creditors and the estate, if the movant establishes cause." 11 U.S.C. § 1112(b)(1). Section 1112(b)(4) of the Bankruptcy Code describes a variety of enumerated factors which may constitute "cause" for conversion or dismissal, including substantial or continued diminution of the estate and absence of a reasonable likelihood of rehabilitation, gross mismanagement of the estate, unexcused failure to satisfy timely any filing or reporting requirement, failure to timely provide information requested by the United States Trustee, [failure to timely pay postpetition taxes], or failure to pay fees required under title 28. 11 U.S.C. § 1112(b)(4). The list is not exhaustive. In re State Street Assoc., 348 B.R. 627, 639, n. 24 (Bankr. N.D.N.Y. 2006) (citing In re RAM, Inc., 343 B.R. 113, 117 (Bankr. E.D. Pa. 2006)).[8] See also In re The 1031 Tax Group, LLC, 374 B.R.78, 93 (Bankr. S.D.N.Y. 2007) (a case may be dismissed for reasons other than those specified in §1112(b), as long as the reasons establish "cause").

[8] Although decided before the enactment of the Bankruptcy Abuse Prevention and Consumer Protection Act of 2005 (the "BAPCPA"), Second Circuit authority providing that the list of factors in pre-BAPCPA section 1112(b) was illustrative rather than all-inclusive is still applicable. In re C-TC 9th Ave. P'ship., 113 F.3d 1304, 1311 (2d Cir. 1997) (bankruptcy court may dismiss chapter 11 filing upon a finding that case was filed in "bad faith" even without consideration of the factors set out in section 1112(b)).

In this case, the Debtor did not timely pay United States Trustee fees. She did not file a disclosure statement. She did not, and indeed could not, file a plan capable of confirmation. Despite the requests from the United States Trustee and a direction from the Bankruptcy Court, she continued to use the assets of DB Productions in order to fund her extravagant spending, apparently with monies from DB Productions without a full accounting. She did not timely provide the United States Trustee with information and documents as requested. She filed monthly operating reports that consistently reflected losses. In addition, the Debtor herself consented to dismissal.

B. Cause Existed to Dismiss the Case with Prejudice to Refiling for a One Year Period

The Second Circuit has long held that when dismissing a chapter 11 case under §1112(b) of the Bankruptcy Code, the bankruptcy court may preclude the debtor from refiling for bankruptcy relief for a specified period. See, e.g., In re Casse, 198 F.3d at 339-41 (it is within the sound discretion of the bankruptcy court to find "cause" to preclude a debtor from filing another petition for bankruptcy relief is made by the bankruptcy court within its discretion). The exercise of discretion to dismiss a bankruptcy case with prejudice should be based upon a review of a debtor's overall conduct throughout the entire bankruptcy process. In re Ladd, 82 B.R. 476, 477 (Bankr. N.D. Ind. 1988); In re McClure, 69 B.R. 282 (Bankr. N.D. Ind. 1987); see also In re Jones, 289 B.R. 436, 439 (Bankr. M.D. Ala. 2003) (finding that the Debtor's history in her bankruptcy case demonstrated an "abuse of the protection[s] of the Bankruptcy Code" sufficient to support dismissal with prejudice to refiling for one year); Phoenix Land Corp, 164 B.R. 174, 176 (Bankr. S.D. Fla. 1993) (filing a chapter 11 case in order to delay and thwart the efforts of secured creditors to enforce their rights was sufficient to dismiss with prejudice for a period of one year).

Significantly, the Debtor did not object to dismissal of the case with prejudice at the May 6, 2008 hearing on the Motion to Convert or Dismiss, and she does not object now. [D-10 ; ECF 73 - Page 4:5-10, Page 13:19-23, Page14:15-16]. Nor has the Debtor denied that the Bankruptcy Court has the power to bar her from refiling another case for longer than 180 days. Rather, she now argues that the Bankruptcy Court abused its discretion in entering a bar of one year, because her conduct was not sufficiently egregious to warrant such a lengthy prejudicial period. [Debtor's Brief at p. 15].[9] Her examples of such behavior included debtors who filed repeatedly on the eve of foreclosure (i.e., the "serial filers") (see e.g., Casse, 198 F. 3d at 341-42; Tomlin Colonial Auto Ctr. v. Tomlin (In re Tomlin), 105 F. 3d 933, 937 (4th Cir. 1997); In re Herrera, 194 B.R. 178 (Bankr. N.D. Ill. 1996), failure to file required schedules and refusal to comply with court directives (see e.g., In re Hughes, 360 B.R. 202, 205-06 (Bankr. N.D.Tex. 2007), and other delays and contumacious conduct (see e.g., In re Martin-Trigona, 35 B.R. 596, 601 (Bankr. S.D.N.Y. 1983) (quoting Durham v. Florida East Coast Railway Co., 385 F.2d 366, 368 (5th Cir. 1967)). The Debtor also argues that she was not a party to any litigation, she owns no real estate, she is current on her lease, does not have any property held under restraint or subject to tax lien, and that this case is her first bankruptcy case. She states that she is merely a bad businesswoman

[9] The Debtor was aware that the United States Trustee was seeking dismissal with prejudice to refiling for a one year period well in advance of the hearing on the Dismissal Motion. Any contention that the Debtor was hindered because the Dismissal Motion did not expressly request that the case be dismissed with prejudice should not be entertained on this appeal. At the hearing held on March 11, 2008 – nearly seven weeks prior to the hearing on the Dismissal Motion – Debtor's counsel indicated that he had been in contact with the United States Trustee's Office concerning a motion to convert or dismiss, and stated that "[T]he alternative relief they've asked me is about dismissing the case. I said that we are prepared to discuss that with them and we'll agree to a certain period of time, but at the moment they are asking for a year that she can't [ever] refile." [CD-5 - Page 21:18-21].

None of the cases and/or examples of willful conduct relied upon by the Debtor present facts that are present here. What they do share, however, is one major and significant theme: a debtor may be found to act in bad faith, and therefore, subject herself to dismissal with prejudice, when she causes delay that harms the estate, creditors and other parties in interest, or when she does not fulfill her duties as a debtor-in-possession. See also In re Phoenix Land Corp, 164 B.R. at 176 (in determining whether to dismiss a case with prejudice, courts have considered any factor which evidences a debtor's intent to abuse the judicial process). That is precisely what happened in this case and why the Bankruptcy Court found cause to impose the one-year bar.

From the time the Debtor filed her Chapter 7 case, the Bankruptcy Court was concerned not only with her extravagant lifestyle, which included a couture wardrobe, a $7,100 per month apartment and a $2,800 per month nanny for her son, but also the Debtor's continued use of DB Productions as a "piggy bank" to fund her personal needs. [CD-1; ECF 20, pp. 2-3; ¶7-9;CD- 4; ECF 74, p. 3: 25; p. 4:1-2]. The Court raised the issue of the "unity" between the Debtor and DB Productions on more than one occasion, viewing the indebtedness of the Debtor and the indebtedness of the corporation to be interchangeable "... as if they were a unit." [CD- 4; ECF 74, p. 3:23-25, p. 4:1-2; 11-15; 13-15; CD-5, p. 8:18-24; D-10; ECF 73, p. 12:13-15]. The Court was not satisfied with the Debtor's explanation that she needed an expensive wardrobe to appear to be a successful corporate events planner and that if DB Productions filed a bankruptcy petition, the business would be unable to operate. [D-10; ECF 73, p. 5:5-11].

At nearly every hearing and status conference in this case, the Bankruptcy Court chastised the Debtor for her lack of candor and her abuse of the bankruptcy process. For example, at the February 28, 2008, hearing, the Bankruptcy Court stated that “the aroma of substantial abuse still seems to be here” and found that the Debtor’s response to the Court’s directive to provide information regarding DB Productions insufficient to allow the Court to determine whether the Debtor was capable of filing a feasible plan of reorganization. [[CD-4, p. 9:10-11; ECF 74]. The Court further stated that the case “is just peppered with the lack of any information or potential for a successful Chapter 11.” [D-10; ECF 73, p. 10:22-24]. This lack of information cannot be underestimated, as “accurate financial disclosure is the lifeblood of the Chapter 11 process.” In re Berryhill, 127 B.R. 427, 433 (Bankr. N.D. Ind. 1991); see also In re Phouminh, 339 B.R. 231, 247 (Bankr. D. Colo. 2005)(in denying discharge in a Chapter 7 case, the court stated that “a lack of transparency creates a cloud of doubt as to the true nature of the debtor’s pre-petition activities.”); In re V Companies and V-S Architects, Inc., 274 B.R. 721, 725 (Bankr. N.D. Ohio 2002)(undue delay includes a debtor’s failure to provide meaningful information at any stage of the proceeding).

Further, at the March 11, 2008, hearing, the Bankruptcy Court expressed concern for the “inordinate delay” in the case and stated unequivocally that the factors in the United States Trustee’s Section 707 Dismissal Motion with respect to abuse “still have not been dissipated, at least in my eyes.” [CD-5, p. 9:21-25; Page 10:1-3]. At the May 6, 2008, hearing on the Motion to Convert or Dismiss was granted, the Bankruptcy Court further stated that “[t]he abuse has never been fully explained except in colloquy in front of the court that [the Debtor] needs to be very well dressed in order to function in her business, which is to show herself at great expense, and that there is another entity out there that may or may not be bearing the freight.” [D-10; ECF 73, p. 5:5-11]. The Bankruptcy Court opined that the Debtor would become a serial filer, and harbored the desire for “a potential refiling” of this case either in Chapter 7 or Chapter 11. [Id. at p. 11:18-19; 23-25; p. 12:1-2].

Moreover, as already stated, the Debtor failed or refused to carry out the duties required of a debtor in chapter 11. She did not timely pay United States Trustee fees. She did not file a disclosure statement or a plan. She could not propose a plan capable of confirmation. She took money from DB Productions to fund her extravagant spending and did not fully account for it. due. She did not timely provide the United States Trustee with information and documents as requested. She filed monthly operating reports that consistently reflected losses. She could not explain to the Bankruptcy Court the reasons for delay or why or how this case was going to succeed. The Bankruptcy Court properly determined that these circumstances supported its exercise of discretion to limit the Debtor’s access to future bankruptcy relief for a period of one year.

VII. CONCLUSION

Based on the foregoing, the United States Trustee requests that the Court affirm the Bankruptcy Court's order dismissing the Debtor's bankruptcy court with prejudice and grant other relief as is just and proper.

In Re:
BH&P, INC. a New Jersey Corporation, PHILIP ALAN HERMAN, BRUCE BERKOW, DEBTORS

CARMEN J. MAGGIO, Individually and Trustee for BH&P, INC., Debtor, and RAVIN, GREENBERG & MARKS, P.A. (Formerly RAVIN, GREENBERG & ZACKIN, P.A.), APPELLANTS

ON APPEAL FROM THE UNITED STATES DISTRICT COURT FOR THE DISTRICT OF NEW JERSEY

BRIEF OF THE UNITED STATES TRUSTEE
AS AMICUS CURIAE

JURISDICTION

This appeal was taken from an order of the United States District Court for the District of New Jersey (the "District Court"), filed September 13, 1990, affirming in part and reversing and remanding in part an order of the United States Bankruptcy Court for the District of New Jersey (the "Bankruptcy Court"), filed June 13, 1989. The Bankruptcy Court and District Court opinions are published at 103 Bankruptcy Reporter 556 and 119 Bankruptcy Reporter 35.

The Bankruptcy Court's order disqualified and removed Carmen J. Maggio ("Maggio"), Ravin, Greenberg & Zackin, P.A. ("RGZ") and Bederson & Co. [FN1] (collectively, the "Applicants") from their respective positions as the chapter 7 trustee, trustee's bankruptcy counsel and accountants in the bankruptcy cases of Phlip Alan Herman ("Herman") and Bruce Berkow ("Berkow"). The Bank of New York initiated the proceeding as an objection to interim fee applications filed by the Applicants, and the proceeding was consequently a "core proceeding" arising under title 11 of the United States Code. 28 U.S.C. § 157(b)(2)(B). The bankruptcy court's subject matter jurisdiction was therefore based on 28 U.S.C. § 157(b)(1).

The appellate jurisdiction of the District Court was based on 28 U.S.C. § 158(a), because the Bankruptcy Court's order disqualifying and removing Maggio and RGZ and denying compensation was a "final order". To the extent that the District Court affirmed the disqualification and removal of Maggio and RGZ, its decision was a "final order". See United States v. Miller, 624 F.2d 1198, 1199 (3d Cir. 1980). This Court has appellate jurisdiction over the issues of disqualification and removal pursuant to 28 U.S.C. § 158(d). The District Court's remand for a determination of whether all compensation to the Applicants should be denied due to conflicts of interest raises questions collateral to the Applicants' disqualification and removal, and the remand should not impede this Court's appellate jurisdiction. [FN2]

STATEMENT OF ISSUES

[*4] I. Whether this Court has appellate jurisdiction over the matters raised in this appeal.

II. Whether RGZ should be disqualified and removed from serving as bankruptcy counsel to the chapter 7 trustee in the bankruptcy cases of Herman and Berkow pursuant to 11 U.S.C. §§ 101(13) and 327(a), because it also represented the trustee in the related bankruptcy case of BH&P, a corporation possessing disputed claims against Herman and Berkow.

III. Whether Maggio should be disqualified and removed as bankruptcy trustee for the estates of Herman and Berkow pursuant to 11 U.S.C. §§ 101(13) and 324, based on a conflict of interest, where Maggio served as trustee for the estate of BH&P, a corporation possessing disputed claims against Herman and Berkow.

STATEMENT OF THE CASE

The issues on appeal concern the presence and effect of conflicts of interest allegedly posed for Maggio and RGZ as a result of their multiple representation of BH&P and BH&P's two shareholders, Herman and Berkow, in their three bankruptcy cases.

A. Procedural History of the Three Cases

BH&P commenced its case under chapter 11 of the Bankruptcy Code ("Reorganization") on April 14, 1986. Following the sale of a substantial portion of BH&P's assets and the cessation of its business operations, the United States Trustee filed a motion to convert BH&P's case to a case under chapter 7 of the Bankruptcy Code ("Liquidation"). On November 10, 1986, the Bankruptcy Court filed its order converting BH&P's case to chapter 7.

On or about January 28, 1987, the United States Trustee appointed Maggio as the interim trustee in BH&P's chapter 7 case pursuant to 11 U.S.C. § 701(a)(1). Maggio continued to serve as the permanent chapter 7 trustee when BH&P's creditors failed to elect a trustee. 11 U.S.C. § 702(d).

On February 3, 1987, Maggio applied to retain RGZ as his counsel in the BH&P case under 11 U.S.C. § 327 and Bankruptcy Rule 2014. (A-188) The application to employ RGZ was approved by the Bankruptcy Court in an order filed February 20, 1987.

On February 9, 1987, one of BH&P's stockholders, Herman, filed his bankruptcy case under Chapter 7. On February 11, 1987, the United States Trustee appointed the Maggio as the interim trustee for Herman's bankruptcy estate, and Maggio continued to serve as permanent chapter 7 trustee. Maggio again applied to retain RGZ as his counsel in Herman's case. On April 20, 1987, the Bankruptcy Court filed an order approving employment of RGZ to represent the estate of Herman.

On September 18, 1987, the other shareholder in BH&P, Berkow, filed his case under Chapter 7. On September 23, 1987, the United States Trustee appointed the Maggio as the interim chapter 7 trustee in Berkow's case. Once again, Maggio applied to hire RGZ as his attorneys. On October 27, 1987, the Bankruptcy Court filed its order approving employment of RGZ in the Berkow case.

The three bankruptcy cases were administratively consolidated in two stages. Maggio first requested joint administration of the BH&P and Herman cases, which the Bankruptcy Court authorized in an order filed July 7, 1987. Following his appointment in the Berkow case, Maggio then requested joint administration of all three cases, which the Bankruptcy Court authorized in an order filed December 14, 1987.

B. History of the Appeal

[*5] The proceeding which gives rise to this appeal was initiated by the Bank of New York's objection to the Applicants' interim fee applications in the BH&P case. The Bank of New York asserted, inter alia, that the Applicants had conflicts of interest resulting from their multiple representation of BH&P, Herman, and Berkow which justified a denial of compensation.

On March 23, 1989, the Bankruptcy Court conducted a hearing on the interim fee applications, at which time it denied the fee applications without prejudice and ordered the Applicants and the Bank of New York to file certifications of facts relevant to the confict of interest allegations and briefs on the legal issues. The Bankruptcy Court filed a written order to that effect on April 10, 1989. The Applicants did not file a notice of appeal from that order.

The Bankruptcy Court conducted additional hearings on the conflict of interest issues on June 12, 1989 and June 22, 1989. In a bench opinion rendered at the conclusion of the June 22, 1989 hearing and in a written order entered July 19, 1989, the Bankruptcy Court disqualified and removed the Applicants from any further involvement in the Herman and Berkow cases, but allowed them to continue rendering services in the BH&P case. In addition, the Bankruptcy Court: (i) vacated the orders which administratively consolidated the three cases, (ii) directed the United States Trustee to appoint new trustees in the Herman and Berkow cases, (iii) denied compensation and reimbursement to Applicants for their services and expenses in the Herman and Berkow cases, and (iv) stayed the Applicants from filing fee applications in the BH&P case until ninety days following appointment or employment of replacement trustees and professionals in the Herman and Berkow cases. (A-423 to 425)

On July 28, 1989, Maggio timely filed a notice of appeal from the Bankruptcy Court's written order entered July 19, 1989. (docket no. 423, A-127) An amended notice of appeal from that order was filed by Maggio and RGZ on August 2, 1989. (A-472)

On August 11, 1989, the Bankruptcy Court filed its memorandum opinion in which it held that: (i) the Applicants knowingly and intentionally withheld required disclosures in the Herman and Berkow cases; (ii) the trustee was removable for "cause" under 11 U.S.C. § 324 because, as a "creditor", he failed the disinterest requirement of 11 U.S.C. § 701(a)(1); (iii) RGZ and Bederson & Co. possessed an actual conflict of interest which disqualified them from employment and justified a denial of compensation to them in the Herman and Berkow cases pursuant to 11 U.S.C. §§ 105(a) and 327; (iv) denial of compensation to the Applicants was based on their breach of a duty of disclosure, Maggio's intentional or negligent employment of an interested professional, and RGZ's and Bederson's employment by an interested trustee; and (v) the orders for joint administration of the three cases were vacated for failure to disclose potential conflicts of interest. The Bankruptcy Court also enunciated a standard for multiple representation of related entities in bankruptcy cases, holding that it is presumptively improper in related cases to appoint a single trustee, a single creditors' committee, or the same counsel, where certain enumerated interrelations between the debtors are present, and that the presumption is irrebuttable if there is an actual conflict of interest. Lastly, the Bankruptcy Court modified in one regard its earlier order, holding that the Applicants could not refile fee applications for services in the BH&P case until further order of the court or until the case was being closed. [FN3]

[*6] On September 13, 1990, the District Court filed its order and opinion affirming in part, and reversing and remanding in part, the Bankruptcy Court's order and memorandum opinion. Although the District Court questioned the Bankruptcy Court's conclusion that Maggio was a "creditor" under 11 U.S.C. § 101(13)(A), it nevertheless found that Maggio failed the disinterest requirement because he had a "materially adverse" interest under 11 U.S.C. § 101(13)(E). The District Court affirmed the Bankruptcy Court's conclusion that RGZ and Bederson & Co. failed the disinterest requirements of 11 U.S.C. §§ 101(13) and 327 due to actual conflicts of interest. The District Court reversed the Bankruptcy Court's finding that the Applicants had "knowingly and intentionally" breached their duty of disclosure (A-29), but upheld the Bankruptcy Court's determination that the duty of disclosure had, in fact, been breached (A-31). The District Court then remanded the matter for a reconsideration of the compensation issue, on the ground that the Bankruptcy Court might not have denied all compensation in the Herman and Berkow cases if it had found that the Applicants' failures to disclose were unintentional. (A- 32)

On October 12, 1990, Maggio and RGZ timely filed a notice of appeal from the District Court's order and opinion of September 13, 1989. No cross-appeal has been filed in the case, and the Bank of New York has not participated in the case as Appellee.

STATEMENT OF RELATED CASES

The United States Trustee is aware of no proceedings or cases on appeal which are related to these cases.

STANDARD OR SCOPE OF REVIEW

The Bankruptcy Court's findings of fact are subject to the "clearly erroneous" standard of review. Sharon Steel Corp. v. National Fuel Gas Distribution Corp., 872 F.2d 36, 38 (3d Cir. 1989). This Court's review of the legal conclusions of the Bankruptcy Court and District Court is plenary. Id. at 39; United States v. Miller, 624 F.2d 1198, 1201 (3d. Cir. 1980).

ARGUMENT

I. THIS COURT HAS APPELLATE JURISDICTION PURSUANT TO 28 U.S.C. § 158(d) BECAUSE THE DISTRICT COURT'S ORDER WAS A "FINAL" ORDER NOTWITHSTANDING THE LIMITED REMAND.

Pursuant to 28 U.S.C. § 158(d), this Court has jurisdiction over appeals from all "final decisions, judgments, orders, and decrees" entered by the district courts pursuant to their appellate jurisdiction under 28 U.S.C. § 158(a). This appeal does not raise any issue of the District Court's jurisdiction under 28 U.S.C. § 158(a).

The Third Circuit has expressed reluctance to expansively interpret the finality requirement. Matter of Marin Motor Oil, Inc., 689 F.2d 445, 448 (3d Cir. 1982) (citing Bachowski v. Usery, 545 F.2d 363, 373-74 (3d Cir. 1976)). However, the "unique characteristics of bankruptcy cases have led [the Third Circuit] to 'consistently consider [] finality in a more pragmatic and less technical way in bankruptcy cases than in other situations.' " F/S Airlease II, Inc. v. Simon, 844 F.2d 99, 103 (3d Cir. 1988), cert. denied 488 U.S. 852 (1988) (quoting In re Amatex Corp., 755 F.2d 1034, 1039 (3d Cir. 1985)). The Third Circuit has consistently followed a "pragmatic" or "functional" approach to finality in bankruptcy cases. See, e.g. U.S. v. Nicolet, Inc., 857 F.2d 202, 205 (3d Cir. 1988), Matter of West Electronics Inc., 852 F.2d 79, 81 (3d Cir. 1988), In re White Beauty View, Inc., 841 F.2d 524, 526 (3d Cir. 1988), Wheeling-Pittsburgh Steel Corp. v. McCune, 836 F.2d 153, 157 (3d Cir. 1987), In re Jeannette Corp., 832 F.2d 43, 45 (3d Cir. 1987), In re Meyertech Corp., 831 F.2d 410, 414 (3d Cir. 1987), Matter of Christian, 804 F.2d 46, 48 (3d Cir. 1986).

[*7] The District Court's remand on the issue of compensation poses a threshold jurisdictional question as to whether the remand renders the District Court's decision non-final for purposes of this Court's appellate jurisdiction under 28 U.S.C. § 158(d). The proceeding was remanded for a determination of whether the Applicants should be denied all compensation where their failure to disclose was non-wilful.

The Third Circuit has addressed the effect of a remand on finality in five bankruptcy cases. In three of those cases, the Third Circuit held that the remand did not render the district court's judgment non-final. F/S Airlease II, Inc. v. Simon, 844 F.2d 99 (3d Cir. 1988); In re Meyertech Corp., 831 F.2d 410 (3d Cir. 1987); Universal Minerals, Inc. v. C. A. Hughes & Co., 669 F.2d (3d Cir. 1981). In the other two cases involving remand, the Third Circuit held that it did not have jurisdiction because the judgment was not final. In re Jeannette Corp., 832 F.2d 43 (3d Cir. 1987); In re Brown, 803 F.2d 120 (3d Cir. 1986). Of these five cases, the case most strongly on point is F/S Airlease, a case which held that remand did not render the district court's order non-final.

In the bankruptcy proceeding in F/S Airlease, the debtor and creditors objected to a broker's application for compensation on the grounds that, inter alia, the broker was not a qualified professional whose employment was timely approved by the court and the amount of compensation requested was unreasonable. In re F/S Airlease II, Inc., 59 Bankr. 769, 772-73 (Bankr. W.D. Pa. 1986). The bankruptcy court approved the employment of the broker nunc pro tunc, holding that the broker satisfied the disinterest requirement of 11 U.S.C. § 327, that circumstances justified approval of the broker's employment nunc pro tunc, and that the requested compensation was reasonable and necessary.

The district court in F/S Airlease affirmed the bankruptcy court's determinations that the broker was disinterested and that the circumstances justified a nunc pro tunc approval of the broker's employment, but remanded for a more extensive investigation of the reasonableness of the requested compensation. In re F/S Airlease II, Inc., 84 Bankr. 389, 394 (W.D. Pa. 1986).

The Court of Appeals in F/S Airlease considered three factors relevant to the issue of finality: "the impact of the matter on the assets of the bankruptcy estate, the preclusive effect of a decision on the merits, and whether the interests of judicial economy will be furthered." 844 F.2d at 104 (citing Meyertech, 831 F.2d at 414). Applying those factors, the Court determined that the orders granting nunc pro tunc approval of the broker's employment were final. The Court stated that the resolution of that "discrete dispute ... would further the goal of judicial economy because it would obviate the need for further action by the bankruptcy court." Id. The Court added that, because the size of the compensation sought was so substantial, it would "severely affect the rights of the other creditors" as well as, perhaps, the debtor's chance for a reorganization. Id.

[*8] The Court of Appeals then specifically addressed the effect of the district court's remand for a determination of the amount of compensation to be paid to the broker, and found that the remand did not affect the finality of the approval of employment, because the remand did not deal with the issue on appeal. The Court stated that the district court's order "conclusively determined the question presented by this appeal". Id. at 105 (quoting Universal Minerals, 669 F.2d at 101). The Court of Appeals contrasted the remand in F/S Airlease with those which "involved the development of 'further factual findings related to a central issue raised on appeal.' " Id. at 104- 05, n. 4 (quoting In re Stanton, 766 F.2d 1283, 1287 (9th Cir. 1985).

The two Third Circuit cases which found that remands caused the district court orders to be non-final were distinguished. In Jeannette Corp., a remand for determination of whether Rule 11 sanctions should be imposed rendered non- final a district court's decision to affirm the bankruptcy court's finding that the attorney violated duties under Rule 11. The "liberal construction" of the bankruptcy finality requirement was held not to "apply in situations unrelated to the special needs of bankruptcy litigation." Id. at 105, n. 5. In Brown, the district court's order reversing the finding of a violation of the automatic stay and remanding for a calculation of damages "did not 'affect the distribution of the debtor's assets or the relationship among the creditors.' " Id. (quoting Brown, 803 F.2d at 123).

The instant appeal bears a number of similarities to F/S Airlease. In both cases, objections were filed to applications for compensation on the ground that, inter alia, the applicant was not disinterested, and the remand in each case was for a determination of the amount of compensation to be paid to the applicant(s).

Although this appeal involves an order affirming disqualification and removal, as opposed to the order approving employment that was at issue in F/S Airlease, the basis upon which the Third Circuit assumed jurisdiction in F/S Airlease supports the view that a remand for purposes of determining allowable compensation does not destroy the finality of an order regarding the qualifications of an applicant for employment. In addition, independent application of the F/S Airlease factors indicates that the District Court's order was final, and this appeal presents those general types of circumstances which call for a more "liberal" construction of finality in bankruptcy cases.

The first factor considered in F/S Airlease was the effect on assets in the estates. The Bankruptcy Court disqualified and removed the Applicants, in part, to ensure that conflicts of interest would not impede the resolution of BH&P's large, disputed claims against Herman and Berkow. The resolution of that litigation could affect the assets available to creditors in all three cases. In addition, while the disqualification and removal of professionals would seemingly confer an immediate benefit on the estates of Herman and Berkow, insofar as it ensures their representation by disinterested professionals, the apparent benefits may only be transitory. In the long run, the impact of the lower courts' ruling will necessitate, for these cases as well as others, separate trustees and professionals -- a factor which will inevitably increase administrative costs in such related-debtor cases.

[*9] The other two factors listed in F/S Airlease and considered by the Third Circuit in its cases were "the preclusive effect of a decision on the merits, and whether the interests of judicial economy will be furthered." This Court's determination of the issues on appeal would effectively resolve the issues of disqualification and removal, precluding additional consideration of those issues in the lower courts. In addition, if this Court were to determine that the Applicants were qualified and should not have been removed, then its decision would effectively reverse the grounds for a denial of compensation. The Applicants could then proceed with applications for compensation in the Herman and Berkow cases under 11 U.S.C. § 330 and Bankruptcy Rule 2014. [FN4] Cf. Meyertech, 831 F.2d 410, 414 (decision by court of appeals would "preclude the necessity of further activity by the fact-finding tribunal, will obliterate the need for more litigation and serves the ever-prevailing interest of judicial economy").

II. THE BANKRUPTCY COURT'S FINDING THAT RGZ POSSESSED AN ACTUAL CONFLICT OF INTEREST IN VIOLATION OF 11 U.S.C. § 327 WAS NOT IN ERROR.

This case concerns RGZ's eligibility for employment in light of the statutory requirements which govern the employment of professionals in bankruptcy cases. The analysis begins, as it must, with the language of the statute. U.S. v. Ron Pair Enterprises, Inc., 489 U.S. 35, 109 S. Ct. 1026, 1030 (1989). It then turns to the judicial construction of the relevant statutes and, specifically, a consideration of whether the Bankruptcy Court's conclusion that RGZ was disqualified for employment was in error.

The qualifications for employment of professionals are set forth in 11 U.S.C. §§ 327. Section 327(a) provides that the trustee may employ professionals "that do not hold or represent an interest adverse to the estate" and that are "disinterested persons". An examination of the definition of "disinterested person" in Section 101(13) indicates some overlap between the "no adverse interest" requirement and the "disinterested person" requirements. Viewed practically, persons failing one of the two requirements will often fail the other requirement as well, although the two requirements are not completely coterminous. See In re Martin, 817 F.2d 175, 179 n.4 (1st Cir. 1987) (there is "something of a redundancy" between Section 101(13) and Section 327(a)); Cf. Roger J. Au & Son, Inc., 64 Bankr. 600, 604 (N.D. Ohio 1986) (both requirements of Section 327(a) are met when a person is found to be disinterested under Section 101(13)).

Section 101(13) defines "disinterested person" negatively. A person is "disinterested" if the person is not excluded from that status under one of the five subparagraphs of Section 101(13). The first four subparagraphs exclude persons who have any of the enumerated relationships to the debtor. 11 U.S.C. § 101(13)(A)-(D). The fifth subparagraph, 11 U.S.C. § 101(13)(E), is the provision under which the Bankruptcy Court held that RGZ was disqualified.

[*1]0 Subparagraph (E) of Section 101(13), the so-called "catch-all" provision, provides that a person is disinterested if the person

> (E) does not have an interest materially adverse to the interest of the estate or of any class of creditors or equity security holders, by reason of any direct or indirect relationship to, connection with, or interest in, the debtor or an investment banker specified in subparagraph (B) or (C) of this paragraph, or for any other reason.

In order to fail the disinterest requirement under Subparagraph (E), a person would have to hold an interest materially adverse to the interest of the estate or to the interest of any class of creditors or equity security holders. Such a "materially adverse interest" may arise by reason of any relationship or connection with the debtor or "for any other reason".

The second qualification set forth in Section 327(a), that the professional not "hold or represent an interest adverse to the estate," is not further defined in the comparatively precise way that "disinterested person" is defined by Section 101(13). However, the phrase does bear some resemblance to the language of Section 101(13)(E), which provides that a disinterested person may not have "an interest materially adverse" to certain enumerated interests.

The differences between the language of Section 327(a) and Section 101(13)(E) are somewhat instructive. First, Section 327(a) refers merely to an interest that is "adverse", whereas subparagraph (E) refers to a "materially adverse" interest. Second, Section 327(a) disqualifies persons that hold or represent such an interest. In contrast, subparagraph (E) merely provides that a person may not have such an interest. All else being equal, these statutory differences demonstrate a somewhat broader standard of adversity in Section 327(a). However, subparagraph (E) appears to be more stringent than Section 327(a) in one regard. The adverse interest clause of Section 327(a) merely precludes employment of persons holding or representing an interest adverse to the estate, whereas subparagraph (E) addresses interests that are materially adverse to the interest of the estate or of any class of creditors or equity security holders. The additional language of subparagraph (E) appears to contemplate the possibility that a person might have an interest that is materially adverse to a class of creditors or equity security holders, but not to the more general interest of the estate.

These statutory distinctions are further complicated by the provision in subsection (c) of Section 327 that a professional is not disqualified for employment "solely because of such person's employment by or representation of a creditor, unless there is an objection by another creditor or the United States trustee, in which case the court shall disapprove such employment if there is an actual conflict of interest." (emphasis added) Thus, notwithstanding the requirements of Sections 327(a) and 101(13), a professional is not ineligible for employment simply because he represents a creditor, absent actual conflict being shown.

[*1]1 This appeal raises the issue of whether RGZ's representation of BH&P created an "actual conflict of interest" which requires their disqualification in the Herman and Berkow cases under Section 327(c). The Bankruptcy Court noted in its opinion that BH&P possessed "substantial claims against Herman and Berkow, including claims for transfers from BH&P within a year of its bankruptcy petition of approximately $1.7 million into seven real estate tax shelters of which Herman and Berkow were the sole limited partners." 103 Bankr. 559. Such transfers were found to raise the possibility of fraudulent transfers, conversions, and breaches of fiduciary duties. 103 Bankr. at 561. Indeed, the trustee filed proofs of claims on behalf of BH&P against Herman and Berkow making such allegations. [FN5] Id.

Although mere representation of a creditor is not, per se, a disqualification from employment, 11 U.S.C. § 327(c), in this case the Bankruptcy Court found that RGZ possessed an "actual conflict of interest". In reaching that conclusion, the Bankruptcy Court appeared to consider the following circumstances: (i) RGZ had to assert claims on behalf of the BH&P estate against its other clients, the estates of Herman and Berkow; (ii) RGZ would have to form an opinion on behalf of the Herman and Berkow estates as to the merits of those claims; (iii) there was a possibility, at least, that there were other inter-debtor claims to be investigated; (iv) the dispute over the claims were not such as would be conducive to RGZ putting forth their best efforts on behalf of the Herman and Berkow estates (at least in part, because such efforts would render any conflict even more "actual"); and (v) there were assets in the Herman and Berkow estates which might be sufficient to pay a dividend to unsecured creditors. 103 Bankr. at 565-66. [FN6]

Where the language is of a statute is unambiguous, the sole function of the court is to enforce the statute according to its terms. U.S. v. Ron Pair Enterprises, Inc., 489 U.S. 235, 109 S. Ct. 1026, 1030 (1989). However, where the meaning of a statutory provision is ambigous, the statute may be construed so as to effectuate just and reasonable results; it is a maxim of statutory construction that "[s]tatutes should be interpreted to avoid untenable distinctions and unreasonable results whenever possible." American Tobacco Co. v. Patterson, 456 U.S. 63, 71 (1981). Insofar as the term "actual conflict of interest" is not unambiguous, the statute affords considerable room for the courts to exercise their judgement and discretion, in determining whether an actual conflict exists "in light of the particular facts of each case." In re Star Broadcasting, Inc., 81 Bankr. 835, 844 (Bankr. D. N.J. 1988); In re Hoffman, 53 Bankr. 564, 566 (Bankr. W.D. Ark. 1985).

As RGZ noted in their appellate brief filed with this Court, some courts have indeed permitted multiple representation of related debtors having claims against one another. See, e.g., In re International Oil Co., 427 F.2d 186 (2d Cir. 1970); In re Global Marine, Inc., 108 Bankr. 998, 1004 (Bankr. S.D. Tex. 1987) (parent corporation and numerous subsidiaries); In re O.P.M. Leasing Services, Inc., 16 Bankr. 932 (Bankr. S.D. N.Y. 1982).

[*1]2 O.P.M. presents a typical multiple representation case involving numerous related corporate entities having intercorporate debts. The bankruptcy court held that counsel representing parent and subsidiary debtors having inter-debtor claims did not represent adverse interests, where the debtors shared a "unity of interest". O.P.M., 16 Bankr. at 941. Such a conclusion may be justifiable where several affiliated corporate entities are engaged in a single, large business enterprise whose operation would be severely disrupted by the appointment of a large number of separate trustees and counsel. See generally 2 Collier on Bankruptcy ¶ 327.03 (15th ed. 1990)

Other courts have found disqualifying conflicts of interest as a result of multiple representation. See, e.g., In re Star Broadcasting, Inc., 81 Bankr. 835, 841 (1987) (prohibiting dual representation of debtor and creditor/sole shareholder); In re Paolino, 80 Bankr. 341 (Bankr. E.D. Pa. 1987) (prohibiting representation of debtor and unrelated creditor). Cf. W.F. Development Corp., 905 F.2d 883 (5th Cir. 1990), cert. den., 59 USLW 3636 (March, 1991) (prohibiting dual representation of partnership debtors because of inter-debtor claims).

The present chapter 7 liquidations, which involve debtors who do not appear to be engaged in a single, overall business enterprise, are quite distinguishable from many of the multidebtor cases in which multiple-debtor representation has been allowed. Contrast H & S Transp. Co., Inc., 53 Bankr. 128 (Bankr. M.D. Tenn.) (describing four corporate debtors engaged in a single enterprise, represented by a single trustee and set of counsel).

The claims asserted in this case should also be distinguished, for some courts have focused on the nature of the claims as being somewhat dispositive. Thus, for example, the district court in In re Roberts, 75 Bankr. 402, 405- 06, 409 (D. Utah 1987), found, inter alia, that since inter-debtor claims were neither disputed nor priority claims, simultaneous representation of the debtors was not per se conflictual. Cf. Hathaway Ranch Partnership, 116 Bankr. 208, 220-21 (Bankr. C.D. Calif. 1990) (counsel disqualified for actual conflicts because the inter-debtor claims arose out of fraudulent transfers).

Insofar as the caselaw permits considerable judicial discretion in this area and because the presence of an actual conflict of interest should be considered in the light of the circumstances of each case, it is difficult to conclude that the Bankruptcy Court's decision in the instant cases was in error. [FN7]

III. MAGGIO'S REMOVAL FOR "CAUSE" WAS NOT IN ERROR.

The Bankruptcy Code imposes the "disinterested" requirement upon all interim chapter 7 trustees appointed by the United States Trustee. 11 U.S.C. § 701(a). Cf. 11 U.S.C. § 702 (no disinterest requirement imposed on trustees elected by creditors). [FN8] If creditors do not elect a chapter 7 trustee pursuant to Section 702, then the interim trustee continues to serve as trustee in the case. 11 U.S.C. § 702(d). There is no procedural requirement of court approval of trustee appointments in chapter 7.

[*1]3 The removal of all trustees is governed by 11 U.S.C. § 324, which provides that "[t]he court, after notice and a hearing, may remove a trustee... for cause." Section 324 does not enumerate the types of circumstances which constitute "cause".

Contrast 11 U.S.C. § 1104(a) (setting forth a nonexclusive list of circumstances which may constitute "cause" for appointment of a trustee in a chapter 11 case). Common grounds for removal include: incompetence or unwillingness to perform duties; fee-splitting arrangements; violations of fiduciary obligations through acting for one's own benefit and enrichment; the commission of bankruptcy crimes; and having an interest adverse to the general interest of the estate. 2 Collier on Bankruptcy ¶ 324.02, 324-6 (15th ed. 1990).

Several courts have stated that a lack of disinterest may be grounds for removal. See In re Micro-Time Management Systems, Inc., 102 Bankr. 602, 609 (Bankr. E.D. Mich. 1989) (vacating appointment of chapter 11 trustee); In re Southern Diversified Properties, Inc., 110 Bankr. 992, (Bankr. N.D. Ga. 1990) (dicta) (trustee resignation for conflict of interest and lack of disinterest "proper"); In re Paolino, 80 Bankr. 341 (Bankr. E.D. Pa. 1987) (dicta) (trustee resigned); O.P.M., 16 Bankr. at 937 (dicta) (court found no disinterest or impermissible conflict of interest). However, this is the first time that a court of appeals has considered the issue of whether a trustee may be removed for a lack of disinterest arising out of his capacity as trustee in another bankruptcy case. But cf. Katz v. Kilsheimer, 327 F.2d 633, 635-36 (2d Cir. 1964).

In considering whether to remove a trustee, courts have noted the effect of removal on the continuity of administration in a bankruptcy case, and the serious repercussions which removal of a trustee can have. Consequently, some courts have required the presence of circumstances in addition to a failure to satisfy the disinterest requirement. Courts in the Second Circuit, in particular, have adopted an additional "harm" or "prejudice" requirement for removal, in recognition of the disturbing effects which the removal of a trustee can have on a case. See, e.g., In re Freeport Italian Bakery, Inc., 340 F.2d 50, 54 (2d. Cir. 1965); Matter of REA Holding Corp., 2 Bankr. 733, 735 (S.D. N.Y. 1980). The requirement of "harm" or "prejudice" may be especially relevant in cases, such as Freeport and REA, where the trustees were elected by creditors (and thus do not need to be "disinterested"), but the concern for disruption to the estate has also been expressed in appointed trustee cases. See, e.g., O.P.M., 16 Bankr. at 939 (noting the importance of continuous representation in cases, and denigrating attempts to remove estate representatives for the purpose of delay).

Notwithstanding its agreement with the result reached by the lower courts, the United States Trustee is reluctant to endorse the use of Section 101(13)(E) as a standard for removing trustees under Section 324, particularly where the trustee's adverse interest is not personal but arises solely out of his role as trustee in another bankruptcy case. That is not to say that any clash between estates can be tolerated; merely that the trustee's ability to serve in multiple cases may be best determined by whether sufficient "cause" exists to remove him for purposes of Section 324. Thus, in this instance, the lower courts' rulings can be more easily explained in terms of traditional conflict principles, rather than by a difficult, and not completely convincing, application of Section 101(13).

[*1]4 This perspective comports with Bankruptcy Rule 2009(d), which requires that separate trustees be appointed in jointly administered cases on a showing that a conflict of interest will prejudice creditors or equity security holders. Significantly, the predicate for application of Bankruptcy Rule 2009(d) is not that a common trustee is "disinterested", but that prejudice will occur as a result of the trustee's dual representation.

This view would also lessen the potential for abusive, tactical maneuvers being directed against trustees. These fiduciaries play an invaluable and important role in the administration of bankruptcy cases. Multiple debtor cases inevitably require a high degree of responsibility on the part of the trustee, not only to balance competing interests but to guard against competing conflicts. Despite these tensions, one trustee can often maximize the return to jointly administrated estates. Trustees serving in multiple debtor cases should not have to bear an unreasonable risk of forfeiture simply because, in hindsight, it might be said that the mere fact of the trustee's appointment in a related case caused him not to be "disinterested".

Where trustees are found to have irreconcilable conflicts of interest, they should by all means be removed. Furthermore, despite suggestions that a conflict is only a potential conflict until an actual possibility of harm manifests itself, the United States Trustee believes that the line between potential and actual need not be drawn with a broad stroke. The difficult task of deciding where to draw the line is one that should be left largely to the discretion of the court. In considering the important issues presented by this appeal, the United States Trustee would urge this Court to limit its determination to the facts of the particular case.

The Bankruptcy Court found that Maggio's failure to satisfy the disinterest requirements of 11 U.S.C. § 101(13) constituted "cause" for his removal as trustee in the Herman and Berkow cases under 11 U.S.C. § 324. The conclusion that Maggio is a "creditor" is, as a matter of law, erroneous, but the conclusion that Maggio is disinterested under 11 U.S.C. § 101(13)(E) finds some support in the facts of the case.

The District Court appropriately called into question the Bankruptcy Court's conclusion that Maggio was disinterested as a creditor under Section 101(13)(A). A person who asserts a claim in a representative capacity is not thereby made a "creditor" for purposes of applying Section 101(13)(A). Cf. In re Hartley, 50 Bankr. 852, 861 (Bankr. N.D. Ohio 1985) (noting that the trustee succeeds to the debtor's property interests by operation of law). Indeed, if that were not the case, then every time the trustee filed a proof of claim on behalf of a creditor, which 11 U.S.C. § 501(c) specifically allows, the trustee would be automatically disqualified from serving. The Bankruptcy Court's reliance upon In re Enercons Virginia, Inc., 812 F.2d 1469, 1472 (4th Cir. 1987), was misplaced. In Enercons, the Fourth Circuit addressed the issue of whether the trustee of a foreign bankrupt creditor could pursue a claim of that creditor against the debtor in the case. The Fourth Circuit concluded that the trustee had authority to file a proof of claim as a "creditor" under 11 U.S.C. § 101(9). Enercons did not address the issue of whether a trustee, by asserting a claim in his representational capacity, actually becomes a creditor in his personal capacity for purposes of Sections 101(13)(E) and 701(a)(1).

[*1]5 The language of 11 U.S.C. §§ 101(13) and 327 dictate a reading of Section 101(13)(A) contrary to that reached by the Bankruptcy Court. The Bankruptcy Court's construction of Section 101(13)(A) would cause every counsel who represents a creditor and who files a claim on behalf of that creditor to automatically fail the disinterest requirement set forth in subparagraph (A). [FN9] Such a construction would also lead to anomolous results in light of Congress' express rejection of a per se bar to dual representation of creditors and the debtor in the 1984 amendment of Section 327(c). In addition, Section 327(a) clearly distinguishes between persons who hold adverse interests and persons who represent adverse interests, disqualifying both types of persons. These distinctions are absent in Section 101(13), which speaks only in terms of persons who have disqualifying interests. Section 101(13) does not disqualify persons because of whom they represent, but rather because of the nature of their own personal status, e.g. because they personally are creditors of the debtor or because they personally "have an interest" which is "materially adverse" under subparagraph (E).

Alternatively, the Bankruptcy Court concluded that Maggio failed the disinterest requirement of Section 101(13)(E). In discussing Maggio's disinterest under subparagraph (E), the Bankruptcy Court stated as follows:

> As trustee of BH&P, Maggio has the right and duty to pursue the claims of BH&P against Herman and Berkow. Unless all creditors are paid in full, such claims are materially adverse to those of the other unsecured creditors of Herman and Berkow, because all allowed unsecured claims will share pro rata in any dividend from the estates of Herman and Berkow....

103 Bankr. at 561. The Bankruptcy Court appears to have concluded that Maggio's obligation to BH&P to pursue claims against Herman and Berkow created an interest that was materially adverse to the interests of the other unsecured creditors of Herman and Berkow. Although that is not a foregone conclusion in all cases, such a conclusion in this case cannot be said to be in error. The Bankruptcy Court's conclusion is based on the facts cited in support of its holding that RGZ has a an actual conflict of interest, particularly the disputed nature of the claims against Herman and Berkow, and the resultant need for advocacy of competing interests.

The present case is easily distinguishable from the related-corporate debtor cases which condone multiple representation by trustees, of which In re O.P.M. Leasing Services, Inc., 16 Bankr. 932 (Bankr. S.D. N.Y. 1982), is illustrative. In O.P.M., a single trustee was appointed for two related debtors, a parent company and its subsidiary, in reorganization cases under Chapter 11 of the Bankruptcy Code. Notably, different trustees were appointed for the individual owners of the parent company in their liquidation cases. Objections were made to the multiple representation at a rather late point in the cases, during hotly contested adversary proceedings between the corporate debtors and the individual stockholders. The Bankruptcy Court found that the corporate debtors possessed a decisive "unity of interest and singleness of purpose" in prevailing in the adversary proceedings against the individual shareholders, even though there was a potential conflict between the parent and the subsidiary as to their respective rights to share in any proceeds of the litigation, and even though there were other intercorporate claims.

[*1]6 In cases involving multiple representation of related debtors, measures can sometimes be taken to cure conflict of interest problems. Thus, the O.P.M. court noted that the potential conflict regarding the debtors' respective rights to the litigation proceeds did not require the appointment of different trustees, because apparent conflicts of interest "might be resolved in a number of ways," including the appointment of special counsel. 16 Bankr. at 939 (quoting In re General Economics Corp., 360 F.2d 762 766 (2d Cir. 1966)). Although rejected as a general rule by the Bankruptcy Court, the appointment of separate or special counsel has been endorsed by several courts as a curative measure for conflicts. See, e.g., Katz v. Kilsheimer, 327 F.2d 633, 636 (2d Cir. 1964); In re O'Connor, 52 Bankr. 892 (Bankr. W.D. Okla. 1985); see also In re Iorizzo, 35 Bankr. 465, 468-69 (Bankr. E.D. N.Y. 1983); In re Fondiller, 15 Bankr. 890, 892 (Bankr. 9th Cir. 1981) (Section 327(a) precludes representation of adverse interests relating to the services to be performed).

O.P.M. illustrates the pragmatic treatment of conflict of interest problems in reorganization cases involving related corporate debtors having inter- affiliate claims, particularly where the objection to representation arises late in the case. While cases such as O.P.M., International Oil, and Global Marine do not stand for the proposition that the strictures of Section 101(13) and 327(a) may be violated for merely "equitable" grounds, they do demonstrate the care which is required in determining whether a trustee, as a factual matter, has a conflict of interest which constitutes cause for removal.

As suggested, this Court need not reach the issue of whether a failure of disinterest is an automatic ground for removal in every case, because the facts may be read to support affirmance on the alternative ground that the conflicts presented warrant separate trustees. When the Bankruptcy Court initially converted the BH&P case to Chapter 7, it stated as one ground for conversion the need for an independent fiduciary (a chapter 7 trustee) to pursue the claims against Herman and Berkow. (A-174) The Bankruptcy Court viewed the pursuit of those claims as a matter vital to the continuation of BH&P's case. The subsequent determination that the same claims justify the appointment of separate trustees indicates that Maggio's removal is not based on "non-harmful" conflicts, but rather on conflicts which had been, or would become, detrimental to the estates of BH&P, Herman and/or Berkow.

CONCLUSION

For the reasons stated, the orders of the Bankruptcy Court, as modified by the District Court, should be affirmed.

FOOTNOTES

FN1. Bederson & Co. is not a party to the appeal.

FN2. In response to the Court's request, the United States Trustee files this amicus brief to address, in part, the issue of appellate jurisdiction. That issue will therefore be more fully addressed in the arguments set forth subsequently in this brief.

FN3. The Bankruptcy Court directed counsel for the Bank of New York to submit a draft order to effectuate the modification. (A-471)

FN4. The instant appeal does not arise out of fee applications in the Herman and Berkow cases. Rather, it arises out of contested applications for compensation in the BH&P case.

FN5. Claims are broadly defined in the Bankruptcy Code so as to include claims that are disputed or contingent. See 11 U.S.C. § 101(4), (9) (defining "claim" and "creditor").

FN6. Some of the concerns of the Bankruptcy Court (Stripp, J.) were not new. Before the Herman and Berkow cases were even filed, the Bankruptcy Court (Wizmur, J.) conducted a hearing on the conversion of the BH&P case to Chapter 7, and found that "cause" existed for converting the case pursuant to 11 U.S.C. § 1112(b). During that hearing, the Bankruptcy Court indicated that it would grant the motion to convert, in part, on the ground that it would be in the interest of the estate for an independent fiduciary (a chapter 7 trustee) to investigate possible actions involving transfers to, or on behalf of, Herman and Berkow. The Bankruptcy Court noted that its decision to convert the case was not "a reflection on negative or deficient conduct on the part of" BH&P during the Chapter 11 case. (A-174)

FN7. Even if this Court were to determine that the finding of an actual conflict of interest was erroneous, the disqualification of RGZ might still be justified on other grounds, namely the presence of a potential conflict of interest. As noted by the Bankruptcy Court, Section 327(c) does not preclude disqualification on potential conflict grounds. 103 Bankr. at 564. A potential conflict of interest may result in RGZ failing the "disinterest" or "adverse interest" requirements of Section 327(a), because Section 327(c) merely provides that a professional is not precluded from employment "solely" because of the professional's representation of a creditor. See 2 Collier on Bankruptcy ¶ 327.03, 327-44, n. 40.

FN8. It is somewhat analogous that in chapter 11 cases the debtor in possession need not be disinterested, but if a trustee is ordered to be appointed, the appointee must meet the disinterest requirement. 11 U.S.C. § 1104(c).

FN9. Carried to its logical conclusion, the Bankruptcy Court's refusal to distinguish the personal and representative capacities of a trustee would also result in an absolute and automatic prohibition of dual representation of many affiliated corporate entities, even in the absence of inter-affiliate claims, because the trustee would be an "insider". See 11 U.S.C. § 101(30)(E) ("insider" includes an insider of an affiliate) and 11 U.S.C. § 101(2) (defining "affiliate").

SUMMARY OF THE CASE

In this case, a bankruptcy court denied a chapter 11 debtor-in-possession's application under 11 U.S.C. 327(a) to retain counsel. The debtor and the professional appealed to the United States District Court for the District of Nebraska. The district court dismissed their appeal holding that the decision of the bankruptcy court was not a final appealable order. We believe that the district court's decision dismissing the appeal from the bankruptcy court's order was a final order, and that this Court has jurisdiction under 28 U.S.C. 158(d) to determine whether the district court erred in dismissing the order of the bankruptcy court.

The U.S. Trustee has consistently taken the position that orders granting or denying a retention application under Section 327(a) are final. Although the courts of appeals have split on the issue, the test for finality in the bankruptcy context in this Circuit supports the U.S. Trustee's position. Retention orders resolve a discrete segment of the bankruptcy proceeding and are thus final.

The government believes that the issue of the court's jurisdiction is adequately presented in the briefs and that oral argument is not necessary. The government stands ready to present oral argument, however, if the Court believes that argument will facilitate its deliberations in this case.

BRIEF FOR CHARLES E. RENDLEN, III,
U.S. Trustee, Appellant for Jurisdiction Only

STATEMENT OF JURISDICTION

The Bankruptcy Court had jurisdiction over Big Mac Marine Inc.'s ("Big Mac Marine") chapter 11 bankruptcy case under 28 U.S.C. 157(b). During this case, on July 10, 2003, the bankruptcy court issued an order pursuant to 11 U.S.C. 327(a), denying Big Mac Marine, as a chapter 11 debtor-in-possession, authorization to retain the law firm of William Needler and Associates ("Needler") as counsel in the chapter 11 proceeding. Big Mac Marine and Needler appealed this order to the United States District Court of Nebraska. On February 13, 2004, the district court (Bataillon, J.) held that the bankruptcy court's order was not final, and declined to grant leave to appeal the interlocutory order. Needler filed a timely notice of appeal on March 11, 2004, and the U.S. Trustee filed a timely notice of appeal on March 31, 2004.[1] Pursuant to this Court's order of March, 30, 2004, the parties have been "directed to file briefs addressing the question of this court's jurisdiction to consider this appeal." We believe that this Court has jurisdiction pursuant to 28 U.S.C. 158(d).

STATEMENT OF THE ISSUE

Whether this Court has jurisdiction to review the district court's decision holding that the bankruptcy court's order denying a chapter 11 debtor-in-possession's application under 11 U.S.C. 327(a) to retain counsel is not a final order.

STATEMENT OF THE CASE

Big Mac Marine, a chapter 11 debtor-in-possession, filed an application to retain Needler as counsel under 11 U.S.C. 327(a). The bankruptcy court denied the application. Needler and Big Mac Marine appealed to the district court, which dismissed the appeal on the grounds that the bankruptcy court's decision was not a final appealable order. Needler appealed the district court's decision to the Eighth Circuit, which ordered the parties to brief its jurisdiction to hear the appeal. On March 31, 2004, Charles Rendlen, III, U.S. Trustee also filed a notice of appeal for jurisdictional purposes only.[2]

STATEMENT OF FACTS

A. Statutory Framework.

1. Section 327(a) of the Bankruptcy Code authorizes courts to approve the appointment of a bankruptcy professional if the professional does "not hold or represent an interest adverse to the estate" and the professional is "disinterested." 11 U.S.C. 327(a). A person lacks disinterestedness if they are a creditor, an equity holder or an insider. 11 U.S.C. 101(14)(A). They also lack disinterestedness if they were an officer, director or employee of the debtor in the two years preceding bankruptcy. 11 U.S.C. 101(14)(D). Finally, a person is not disinterested if he possesses "an interest materially adverse to the interest of the estate or of any class of creditors * * * by reason of any direct or indirect relationship to, connection with, or interest in, the debtor * * * or for any other reason." 11 U.S.C. 101(14)(E).

In addition, section 327(c) allows a creditor or the United States Trustee to object when a debtor seeks to employ an attorney who has represented a creditor. The court must deny "such employment if there is an actual conflict of interest." Id.

District courts shall have jurisdiction to hear bankruptcy appeals from "final judgments, orders, and decrees." 28 U.S.C. 158(a)(1). In addition, courts of appeals shall have jurisdiction of appeals from "all final decisions, judgments, orders, and decrees" entered under section 158(a). 28 U.S.C. 158(d).

B. Facts.

Big Mac Marine filed for bankruptcy under chapter 11 of the Bankruptcy Code in April 2003. See 11 U.S.C. 1101, et seq. Big Mac Marine was wholly owned by Edward and Shirley Schmidt. The Schmidts were chapter 11 debtors-in-possession in their own personal bankruptcy when Big Mac Marine filed for bankruptcy protection. The Schmidts' chapter 11 counsel was Needler. Big Mac Marine filed an application under 11 U.S.C. 327(a) seeking authorization also to employ Needler as its counsel.[3] The application represented that Needler had no interest adverse to the debtor-in-possession and its bankruptcy estate. However, in a declaration submitted with the application, Needler stated that he represented Edward and Shirley Schmidt in their chapter 11 bankruptcy case, that the Schmidts owned 100% of Big Mac Marine, and that the Schmidts were creditors of Big Mac Marine.

Pinnacle Bank, a creditor of Big Mac Marine and the Schmidts, objected to the debtor's application to employ Needler. Pinnacle asserted, inter alia, that Needler was representing the Schmidts in their personal chapter 11 case and would have to pursue their rights as shareholders and creditors against Big Mac Marine. Pinnacle argued that Needler's representation of persons who had potential disputes with Big Mac Marine, who were not disinterested under 11 U.S.C. 101(14)(A),(D) and (E), made Needler himself not disinterested, and thus precluded his employment as counsel for Big Mac Marine under 11 U.S.C. 327(a). The United States Trustee requested the court consider whether Needler represented an adverse interest to the Big Mac Marine estate because of Needler's representation of the Schmidts in their chapter 11 proceeding, which included an adversary proceeding against Pinnacle Bank.[4]

C. Bankruptcy Court Order.

On July 10, 2003, the bankruptcy court denied Big Mac Marine's application to employ Needler under Section 327(a). A copy of the Order is in Addendum A to this brief. The court found that Needler's representation of the debtor's creditors, the Schmidts, in another bankruptcy proceeding, which included an adversary proceeding against Pinnacle Bank, precluded approval of Needler as counsel for Big Mac Marine because Needler represented interests adverse to the bankruptcy estate.

The court also determined that if the Schmidt adversary proceeding against Pinnacle Bank was completed, and if the Schmidts withdrew any claims they have in the Big Mac Marine case, then Needler might not have a conflict of interest. But until that occurred, the court prohibited Needler from representing Big Mac Marine.

D. District Court Decision.

Big Mac Marine and Needler appealed the denial of the retention application to the United States District Court for the District of Nebraska. Pinnacle filed a motion to dismiss the action for lack of finality. The United States Trustee did not address the finality issue in the district court. The district court held that the bankruptcy court's decision was not a final order. Big Mac Marine, Inc. v. Jensen, 305 B.R. 309 (D. Neb. 2004).

The court noted that an order entered before the conclusion of a bankruptcy proceeding is not appealable unless it finally resolves a discrete segment of that proceeding, citing In re Woods Farmers Co-op. Elevator Co., 983 F.2d 125, 127 (8th Cir. 1993). 305 B.R. at 311. It then articulated the test to determine whether an order in a bankruptcy proceeding is final to be "'the extent to which (a) the order leaves the bankruptcy court nothing to do but execute the order; (2) delay in obtaining review would prevent the aggrieved party from obtaining effective relief; and (3) a later reversal on that issue would require recommencement of the entire proceeding,'" quoting from In re Apex Oil Co., 884 F.2d 343, 347 (8th Cir. 1989). Ibid. The court, however, did not apply these factors but instead concluded, without further analysis, that "[o]rders regarding appointment of counsel are generally regarded as interlocutory," and then dismissed the appeal as interlocutory. Ibid. The court further declined to hear this appeal under Bankruptcy Rule 8001(b) which permits a district court to exercise its discretion to consider interlocutory appeals. Ibid.

SUMMARY OF ARGUMENT

The ultimate jurisdictional question for the Court is whether the bankruptcy court's order denying the application for the retention of a professional under 11 U.S.C. 327(a) is final. If it was, then the district court's order was final because it disposed of a final order of the bankruptcy court which was appealable under 11 U.S.C. 158(a). Thus, this Court has jurisdiction under 11 U.S.C. 158(d) to determine that the district court erroneously dismissed the appeal of the bankruptcy court's order. Because the district court erred in dismissing the appeal of the bankruptcy court order, this Court should reverse and remand the case for the district court to consider the merits of the appeal.

The U.S. Trustee has consistently taken the position that orders granting or denying a retention application are final. Although the courts of appeals have split on the issue, the test for finality in the bankruptcy context in this Circuit supports the U.S. Trustee's position in this case. This Court's test for finality is whether (1) the order leaves the bankruptcy court with nothing to do but execute the order; (2) delay in obtaining review would prevent the aggrieved party from obtaining effective relief; and (3) a later reversal on that issue would require recommencement of the proceeding. See, e.g., In re Apex Oil Co., 884 F.2d 343, 347 (8th Cir. 1989). For counsel who are denied retention, the bankruptcy court's order is in reality final; a later appeal at the close of the case will do them little good since the debtor will have moved on and retained other counsel. Similarly, for counsel who are granted retention, a later appeal alleging they had an impermissible adverse interest or lacked disinterestedness would mean a debtor would have been receiving advice about important strategic calls from a lawyer who labored under an impermissible conflict, and that tainted advice could not be undone at the end of the case because it would be practically impossible to unwind or relitigate the entire bankruptcy case.

STANDARD OF REVIEW

This Court reviews issues of jurisdiction "de novo." In re Minnesota Mut. Life Ins. Co., 346 F.3d 830, 834 (8th Cir. 2003); Hansen v. United States, 248 F.3d 761, 763 (8th Cir. 2001).

ARGUMENT

THIS COURT HAS JURISDICTION TO DETERMINE THAT THE DISTRICT COURT ERRED IN DISMISSING THE APPEAL FROM A FINAL ORDER OF THE BANKRUPTCY COURT.

1. District courts have jurisdiction to hear bankruptcy appeals from final judgments, orders and decrees. 28 U.S.C. 158(a)(1). The courts of appeals, in turn, have jurisdiction over appeals from all final decisions, judgments, orders, and decrees entered by the district courts. 28 U.S.C. 158(d). The U.S. Code, however, does not specify which bankruptcy court orders are final and provides no test for determining finality. Ultimately, this Court's jurisdiction turns on whether the bankruptcy court's decision was a final decision appealable to the district court. If it was, then the district court had jurisdiction and should have exercised it. This Court has jurisdiction to determine that the district court's decision was final and that it erred in holding that the bankruptcy court's order was not final. If this Court determines that the decision of the bankruptcy court was a final order, this case should be remanded to the district court to consider the merits.

Section 327(a) of the Bankruptcy Code specifically prohibits the retention of counsel who are not "disinterested" or who have a conflict of interest. Unless this Court determines that the bankruptcy's court's decision prohibiting the retention of Needler as counsel to Big Mac Marine is final and subject to review, Needler cannot represent Big Mac Marine in its bankruptcy proceedings. Although the U.S. Trustee agrees with the bankruptcy court's decision in this particular case, that Needler is not a "disinterested" person and should not be retained as counsel, the principle of finality should be resolved by this Court.[5] [5] The U.S. Trustee, an appellee in the district court, did not take a position on the finality question. We nonetheless are appealing this question, because the matter is jurisdictional,

In practical terms, appointment decisions cannot be reviewed effectively if they are treated as interlocutory. Allowing counsel who are not "disinterested" to represent debtors-in-possession by preventing the prompt appeal of appointment orders would undermine confidence in the fair and impartial administration of bankruptcy cases. Reviewing such appointments after conflicted counsel have represented debtors in no way ameliorates this problem. Even though counsel improperly appointed ultimately might be ordered to disgorge their fees, it would be practically impossible to undo the many actions taken by the debtor based on the advice of conflicted counsel. Similarly, counsel who are unjustly not appointed lose a valid business opportunity, and the client may be denied better representation than other available counsel. Allowing appeals of appointment decisions at the end of the entire case is no answer because the work would have already been performed by other counsel. Thus, if a retention decision is deferred to the end of the bankruptcy proceeding, the United States Trustee will have no meaningful opportunity to carry out the function assigned to him by and is important to the government. Moreover, the Bankruptcy Code gives the U.S. Trustee very broad standing to raise issues in the courts, and this is the kind of issue that warrants participation by the U.S. Trustee. See 11 U.S.C. 307 ("The United States trustee may raise and may appear and be heard on any issue in any case or proceeding under this title but may not file a [reorganization] plan pursuant to section 1121(c) of this title."). See also, In re Pillowtex, 304 F.3d 246, 250 (3d Cir. 2002) (The U.S. Trustee has standing to appeal a retention order).

Congress, of policing the integrity of the bankruptcy system and ensuring that the letter of the Bankruptcy Code is observed in bankruptcy proceedings. See In re Revco D.S., Inc., 898 F.2d 498, 499 (6th Cir. 1990); In re Plaza de Diego Shopping Ctr., Inc., 911 F.2d 820, 825-826 (1st Cir. 1990).

There is no principled distinction for finality purposes between judicial orders authorizing appointment of counsel and those that refuse such authorization as in this case. See In re Kurtzman, 194 F.3d 54, 56 (2d Cir. 1999). For example, if a bankruptcy court errs in such decisions, it is possible, if there is no review of that decision, that counsel who are disinterested might be denied work unfairly. In such cases, however, the debtor usually proposes a substitute, who is usually disinterested. Thus, in case of error, the only party with harm from a denial of retention is often only the professional. More importantly, though, an unlawful appointment will taint the entire proceeding with unresolvable doubts about the "disinterest" of the debtor-in-possession's attorney. The only post hoc remedy available would be to deny the firm all compensation for its work, an extreme remedy that cannot retroactively remove the taint cast over the proceeding by the firm's "interest."

2. This Court, like other circuit courts, has recognized that in bankruptcy proceedings courts take "a more liberal view of what constitutes a separate dispute for purposes of appeal."

In re Woods, 983 F.2d 125, 127 (8th Cir. 1993) (citation omitted). See, e.g., In re Arochem Corp., 176 F.3d 610, 619 (2d Cir. 1999); In re Devlieg, Inc., 56 F.3d 32, 33 (7th Cir. 1995) (per curiam) ("[M]yriad are the cases which say that finality is to be interpreted more liberally in bankruptcy cases."). The reason for this is because to apply the concept of "finality" used in ordinary civil litigation, such that the order closing the entire bankruptcy proceeding would be the only "final" order in the entire process, would be "absurd," 1 KING ET AL., COLLIER ON BANKRUPTCY ¶507[1][b], at 5-23 (15th ed. rev. 1997), because a bankruptcy proceeding is in reality not a unitary adversary proceeding between two parties, but a "conglomeration of separate adversary proceedings." In re James Wilson Assoc., 965 F.2d 160, 166 (7th Cir. 1992). Instead, courts have adhered to the concept of "finality" described by one of the drafters of the Bankruptcy Reform Act of 1978, whereby any "'proceeding arising in or related to'" a bankruptcy case, including any "adversary proceeding, contested matter, administrative matter, proceeding in bankruptcy or controversy arising in a proceeding in bankruptcy" is appealable when finally resolved by the bankruptcy court. Richard P. Levin, Bankruptcy Appeals, 58 N.C. L. Rev. 967, 985 (1980); accord In re Louisiana World Exposition, Inc., 832 F.2d 1391, 1396 (5th Cir. 1987); see also In re Johns-Manville Corp., 920 F.2d 121, 126 (2d Cir. 1990) ("'orders in bankruptcy cases may be immediately appealed if they finally dispose of discrete disputes within the larger case;'" accord In re Saco Local Dev. Corp., 711 F.2d 441, 443-446 (1st Cir. 1983).

An application to retain counsel triggers a contested matter under Fed. R. Bankr. P. 9014 and thus is "final," as Professor Levin notes above. Bankruptcy Rule 9014(a) provides that contested matters typically are triggered by motions. Rule 9013 explains that an application is the functional equivalent to a motion. The Advisory Committee Note to Rule 9013 specifically provides that "an application under Rule 2014 for approval of the employment of a professional," is an "[e]xcept[ion]" to the general rule that a "request [] for court action must be made by motion." Thus, under rules 9013 and 9014, Big Mac Marine's application to employ Needler triggered a contested matter, and the bankruptcy court's denial of that motion was a final order for purposes of 28 U.S.C. 158(a)(1).

Although this Circuit has not determined whether appointment decisions under Section 327(a) are final, it has addressed various bankruptcy finality issues.[6] In doing so, this Court has noted that an order entered before the conclusion of a bankruptcy proceeding may be appealed under Section 158(d) if it "finally resolves a discrete segment of that proceeding." In re Woods, 983 F.2d at 127.

To determine whether a bankruptcy order is final, this Circuit considers the following factors: "the extent to which (1) the order leaves the bankruptcy court nothing to do but execute the order; (2) delay in obtaining review would prevent the aggrieved party from obtaining effective relief; and (3) a later reversal on that issue would require recommencement of the entire proceeding." In re Apex Oil Co., 884 F.2d 343, 347 (8th Cir. 1989). This is a "more liberal standard of finality" than is generally applied to nonbankruptcy proceedings. In re Yukon Energy Corp., 138 F.3d 1254, 1258 (8th Cir. 1998).

Applying the above factors to this case, this Court should determine that the order denying the application for employment was final because the bankruptcy court's order resolved a discrete segment of the proceeding, and nothing remains for the bankruptcy court to do because it has already executed the order denying appointment. First, the bankruptcy court is left with nothing more to do to prevent Needler from acting as counsel to Big Mac Marine. See, Lamie v. United State Trustee, 124 S. Ct.

884 F.2d 343 (8th Cir. 1989) (Order declining to order relief from automatic stay under 11 U.S.C. 362(d) is final); In re Bestmann, 720 F.2d 484 (8th CiO. 1983) (Order determining adversary proceeding concerning hog ownership was final).

1023, 1030 (2004) ("A debtor's attorney not engaged as provided by § 327 is simply not included within the class of persons eligible for compensation" from the debtor's estate in a bankruptcy case.). Second, delay would require use of other counsel even though Needler might ultimately be determined to be "disinterested." Finally, a later reversal could, in theory, require relitigating the entire complex chapter 11 case. This is unlikely to happen because it would not be practical. The expense and delay of relitigating the case makes such an event unlikely to occur. Thus, this Court should conclude that the bankruptcy court's decision was final and appropriate for review by the district court.[7]

Other circuits have split on the issue of whether appointment decisions under Section 327(a) are final. The Second, Third, Fourth, and Sixth Circuits treat orders regarding professional employment as appealable. See, e.g., In re Pillowtex, Inc., 304 F.3d 246, 250 (3d Cir. 2002); In re Arochem Corp., 176 F.3d at 619-620; In re Federated Dep't. Stores, Inc., 44 F.3d 1310 (6th Cir. 1995); and In re Harold & Williams Dev.

[7] The bankruptcy court's order stated it would reconsider the motion to employ Needler if "the Schmidt adversary proceeding against Pinnacle Bank is completed, and if the Schmidts withdraw any claims they have in the Big Mac Marine case." July 10, 2003 order at 2. There is no indication either would ever happen. To the contrary, the Schmidts need to press their claims to protect their own chapter 11 case. Thus, there is at most a very speculative chance Big Mac Marine could reapply to appoint Needler. But, unless and until these unlikely results came about, the debtor could not use Needler and he would not be employed.

Co., 977 F.2d 906 (4th Cir. 1992). The Fifth, Seventh, and Ninth Circuits, however, have treated such orders as interlocutory. See, e.g., In re SS Retail Stores Corp., 162 F.3d 1230 (9th Cir. 1998); In re Firstmark Corp., 46 F.3d 653, 657-659 (7th Cir. 1995); In re Delta Servs., Indus., 782 F.2d 1267 (5th Cir. 1986).

In sum, the "proceeding" on review in this case is the debtor-in-possession's request for permission to employ Needler to represent it in the chapter 11 reorganization; this proceeding involves a "discrete dispute" over whether Needler is eligible to fill that position under the Bankruptcy Code. The bankruptcy court's order denying authorization of the employment of Needler, following a hearing at which the United States Trustee and others had a full opportunity to state their objections, finally disposed of this discrete dispute, and thus is "final" and appealable to the district court under Section 158(a). 11 U.S.C. 158(a). The district court's dismissal of the appeal was a final order and this Court has jurisdiction under Section 158(d) to determine that the dismissal was in error.

If this Court determines that the district court's order is final and appealable, it should not reach the merits but should remand the case to the district court to consider the merits in the first instance since the district court did not address the merits. If, however, the Court determines to reach the merits, we will be a cross-appellee. We will argue that the application to appoint Needler should be denied because of his several conflicts of interest.

CONCLUSION

For the foregoing reasons, this Court has jurisdiction to consider this appeal.

SARA L. KISTLER,
Acting United States Trustee,

ACTING UNITED STATES TRUSTEE'S MOTION TO REMAND TO BANKRUPTCY COURT WITH INSTRUCTIONS

I. INTRODUCTION.

Pursuant to Fed. R. App. P. 27 and Cir. R. 27-1 and 27-11, appellee Sara L. Kistler, Acting United States Trustee (hereinafter "U.S. Trustee"), respectfully requests that this Court remand the above-captioned matter to the bankruptcy court with instructions to transmit the notice of appeal and the record to the United States District Court for the Northern District of California. As set forth below, this Court should do so on the following grounds: (1) The Court lacks jurisdiction over the appeal because debtors-appellants have failed to file a petition for permission to appeal as required by Section 1233(b)(4) of the Bankruptcy Abuse Prevention and Consumer Protection Act of 2005 ("BAPCPA"), Pub. L. No. 109-8, 119 Stat. 23 (2005), see 28 U.S.C. § 158 Note; or (2) even if it could exercise jurisdiction, the Court, in its discretion, would decline to do so under 28 U.S.C. § 158(d)(2)(A).

II. STATUTORY AND REGULATORY BACKGROUND.

A. Relevant Statutory Provisions.

1. On April 20, 2005, Congress enacted BAPCPA. See Pub. L. 109-8, 119 Stat. 23 (2005). As relevant to the present case, BAPCPA amended Section 158 of Title 28 to provide courts of appeals, under specified conditions, with jurisdiction to hear direct appeals from bankruptcy court orders or judgments.

Under Section 158(d), a bankruptcy court, district court, or bankruptcy appellate panel “shall” make a certification to the court of appeals if it determines, “on its own motion or on the request of a party” that at least one of the following three circumstances exists:

> (i) the judgment, order, or decree involves a question of law as to which there is no controlling decision of the court of appeals for the circuit or of the Supreme Court of the United States, or involves a matter of public importance;
>
> (ii) the judgment, order, or decree involves a question of law requiring resolution of conflicting decisions; or
> (iii) an immediate appeal from the judgment, order or decree may materially advance the progress of the case or proceeding in which the appeal is taken.

28 U.S.C. § 158(d)(2)(A), (B)(i). The court of appeals has jurisdiction over the appeal if the bankruptcy court, district court, bankruptcy appellate panel involved, or “all the appellants and appellees (if any) acting jointly, certify” that at least one of these three circumstances exists, and “if the court of appeals authorizes the direct appeal of the judgment, order, or decree.” 28 U.S.C. § 158(d)(2)(A). Thus, even if a court or the parties make a certification, the court of appeals will not take jurisdiction of the appeal unless it exercises its discretion to authorize a direct appeal. Id.

2. Section 1233(b) of BAPCPA, which is uncodified and appears in 28 U.S.C. § 158 Note, sets forth "[p]rocedural [r]ules" that apply to appeals under Section 158(d) until "a rule of practice and procedure" applicable to such appeals is promulgated or amended. Pub. L. 109-8, § 1233(b)(1), 28 U.S.C. § 158 Note. Because no such rules have yet been promulgated, Section 1233(b) applies here.

Section 1233(b) provides that an appeal pursuant to Section 158(d)(2)(A) "shall be taken in the manner prescribed" in Federal Rule of Appellate Procedure 5(a)(1),(b),(c),(d). The statute further makes clear that a petition that complies with the requirements of Fed. R. App. P. 5 must "be filed with the circuit clerk not later than 10 days after the certification is entered on the docket" of the court that issued the certification. Pub. L. 109-8, § 1233(b)(3),(4), 28 U.S.C. § 158 Note.

Under Fed. R. App. P. 5, where, as here, "an appeal is within the court of appeals' discretion," a party must "file a petition for permission to appeal" in the court of appeals, which includes the "facts necessary to understand the question presented"; the "question itself"; the "relief sought"; and "the reasons why the appeal should be allowed and is authorized by statute or rule." Fed. R. App. P. 5(a)(1), (b)(1)(A)-(D). A copy of the relevant order or judgment and any related opinion or memorandum and a copy of the certification must be attached to the petition. Fed. R. App. P. 5(b)(1)(E).

B. Applicable Rules.

The Committee on Rules of Practice and Procedure of the Judicial Conference of the United States and the Judicial Conference of the United States have approved Interim Bankruptcy Rules to implement the changes mandated by BAPCPA. Courts have since adopted the Interim Rules as local rules in most districts, including the Northern District of California. Under Interim Rule 8001(f), where a bankruptcy court certifies a judgment under 28 U.S.C. § 158(d)(2), the certification “shall not be treated” as “entered on the docket within the meaning of” BAPCPA Section 1233(b)(4)(A) “until a timely appeal has been taken” in accordance with Federal Rule of Bankruptcy Procedure (“Bankruptcy Rule”) 8001(a) or (b), and “the notice of appeal has become effective under Rule 8002.” Interim Rule 8001(f)(1). Thus, the 10-day time period for filing a petition for permission to appeal with the court of appeals does not begin to run until a timely notice of appeal from the bankruptcy court’s judgment has become effective. Under Bankruptcy Rules 8001 and 8002, to appeal a bankruptcy court order or judgment to the district court or bankruptcy appellate panel, a party must file a notice of appeal with the bankruptcy court within 10 days of the order or judgment. Fed. R. Bankr. P. 8001(a), 8002.

II. PROCEDURAL BACKGROUND.

On November 15, 2006, debtors John Charles Blausey and Deann

Janine Blausey filed a voluntary petition for relief under Chapter 7 of the Bankruptcy Code in the United States Bankruptcy Court for the Northern District of California. Bankruptcy Court Docket Record ("R.") 1. The U.S. Trustee moved to dismiss debtors' case pursuant to 11 U.S.C. § 707(a), or, in the alternative § 707(b)(2) or (3). R. 20. Before the bankruptcy court ruled on that motion, the U.S. Trustee filed a first amended motion to dismiss the case pursuant to 11 U.S.C. § 707(b)(2), or, in the alternative, § 707(b)(3)(B). R. 23. In her motion, the U.S. Trustee argued that debtors' case was presumptively an abuse of chapter 7 under Section 707(b)(2), or, in the alternative, that the totality of the circumstances of debtors' financial situation demonstrated abuse under Section 707(b)(3)(B).[1] The U.S. Trustee contended that debtors should have -- but did not -- include the $4,000 per month that Mrs. Blausey receives from a disability insurance policy as current monthly income in their Statement of Current Monthly Income and Means Test Calculation.

[1] Under BAPCPA, cases may be dismissed for abuse under Section 707(b)(1) following an analysis under either Section 707(b)(2) or 707(b)(3). Section 707(b)(2) provides objective standards – the "Means Test" – for courts to determine whether a case is presumed to be an abuse of chapter 7. If a case is presumed abusive, it will be dismissed without the need for further evidence unless the debtor can show "special circumstances" to rebut the presumption. See 11 U.S.C. § 707(b)(2)(B)(i). If the presumption of abuse does not arise or is rebutted, the U.S. Trustee may still bring a motion seeking dismissal for abuse under Section 707(b)(3), either because the debtor filed a petition in bad faith or the totality of the circumstances of the debtor's financial situation demonstrates abuse. See 11 U.S.C. § 707(b)(3)(A),(B).

Pursuant to Section 101(10A)(A) of the Bankruptcy Code "current monthly income" "means the average monthly income from all sources that the debtor receives * * * without regard to whether such income is taxable income," and, under Section 101(10A)(B), "includes any amount paid by any entity other than the debtor * * * on a regular basis for the household expenses of the debtor or the debtor's dependents." 11 U.S.C. § 101(10A)(A),(B). The U.S. Trustee thus argued that contrary to debtors' position, regardless of whether disability insurance payments fall within the definition of "gross income" under the Internal Revenue Code, such payments qualify as "current monthly income" under the Bankruptcy Code. See R. 29. (U.S. Trustee Reply). The U.S. Trustee explained that when the disability insurance payments are included in debtors' income, a proper calculation of debtors' disposable income under Sections 707(b)(2)(A)(ii),(iii), and (iv) demonstrates that the presumption of abuse arises under Section 707(b)(2)(A)(i), and that debtors have sufficient income to pay their scheduled liabilities in full. See R. 23.

On April 30, 2007, after briefing from the parties and a hearing, the bankruptcy court issued a Memorandum re Inclusion of Disability Payments in Current Monthly Income, R. 30, and, on May 3, 2007, in accordance with the memorandum, issued an order granting the motion to dismiss. R. 31. The court held that Mrs. Blausey's disability insurance payments must be included as "current monthly income" under Section 101(10A), and therefore the presumption of abuse arose under Section 707(b)(2). R. 30.

On May 10, 2007, debtors filed a timely notice of appeal from the bankruptcy court's dismissal of their case. R. 34. Consistent with the Official Bankruptcy Form for a notice of appeal, debtors did not specify the court to which they were appealing. See Official Form 17. In addition, debtors filed a statement of election to have their appeal heard by the district court (as opposed to the bankruptcy appellate panel). R. 36. That same day, debtors filed a request for certification of the bankruptcy court's order for direct appeal to this Court under 28 U.S.C. § 158(d)(2). R. 35. The debtors' statement of election to have the appeal heard in district court accordingly noted that they had filed a request for certification for direct appeal, and would "have the appeal heard at the Ninth Circuit if so allowed." R. 36. Debtors also moved for a stay of the dismissal order pending appeal. R. 37.

The bankruptcy court docketed the notice of appeal as a "notice of appeal to 9th Circuit Court (Direct Appeal)," even though, as noted, debtors had not referenced the court to which they were appealing, and had filed a statement of election to have the appeal heard in district court. See R. 34. On May 22, 2007, the bankruptcy court granted debtors' request for certification of its dismissal order for direct appeal pursuant to 28 U.S.C. § 158(d)(2). R. 42. The court found that certification was appropriate because its order "involves questions of law for which there is no controlling authority and are a matter of public importance." Id. The bankruptcy court also forwarded the record on appeal directly to this Court. R. 43. The record reflects that the bankruptcy court sent this Court "the Notice of Appeal, certified copy of the docket and order being appealed to form the record on appeal for assignment to a Ninth Circuit Court of Appeals Judge."[2] Id.

Thus, the bankruptcy court never transmitted the notice of appeal to the district court in accordance with Bankruptcy Rule 8007(b), which provides that "[w]hen the record is complete for purposes of appeal, the clerk shall transmit a copy thereof forthwith to the clerk of the district court." Bankr. R. 8007(b). The case therefore has never been docketed in district court.

On June 1, 2007, this Court docketed the appeal, assigned it a case number, and set a briefing schedule. According to the schedule, appellant's opening brief would be due on September 7, 2007.[3] See Docket, Blausey v. U.S Trustee, 9th Cir. No. 07-15955.

III. DISCUSSION

For the reasons set forth below, this Court should remand the appeal to the bankruptcy court with instructions to transmit the notice of appeal and the record to the district court. This Court should do so on one of the following grounds: (1) it lacks jurisdiction over the appeal because debtors failed to comply with the statutory requirement that they file a petition for permission to appeal within 10 days of entry of the certification on the docket; or (2) even if it could exercise jurisdiction, the Court, in its discretion, would decline to do so because the issues presented would benefit from further litigation in district court prior to any possible appeal to this Court.

[2] After the transmittal of the certified copy of the docket to this Court, on June 21, 2007, the bankruptcy court granted debtors' motion to stay. R. 46.

[3] Circuit Rule 27-11(a)(3) provides that a motion requesting a full remand "shall stay the schedule for record preparation and briefing pending the court's disposition of the motion."

A. Debtors’ Appeal Cannot Proceed In This Court Because They Have Failed To Comply With The Requirement In BAPCPA Section 1233(b) That A Party File A Petition For Permission To Appeal In Accordance With Fed. R. App. P. 5.

Under Section 1233(b) of BAPCPA, a party must file a petition for permission to appeal in the court of appeals “not later than 10 days after the certification is entered on the docket of the bankruptcy court.” Pub. L. No. 109-8, § 1233(b)(4); 28 U.S.C. § 158 Note. The petition must comply with Fed. R. Civ. P. 5, and thus must include the “facts necessary to understand the question presented”; the “question itself”; the “relief sought”; and “the reasons why the appeal should be allowed and is authorized by statute or rule.” Id. at § 1233(b)(3)-(5); Fed. R. App. P. 5(b)(1)(A)-(D).

Since Section 1233(b) specifies that direct appeals under Section 158(d) “shall be taken in the manner prescribed in” the relevant provisions of Fed. R. App. P. 5, which, in turn, applies to petitions for permission to take an interlocutory appeal under 28 U.S.C. § 1292(b), case law regarding the petition requirement under that statute is relevant here. In In re Benny, 812 F.2d 1133 (9th Cir. 1987), cert. denied, 510 U.S. 1029 (1993), this Court held that “[t]he timely filing of a petition for leave to appeal following district court certification pursuant to 28 U.S.C. § 1292(b) is jurisdictional.” Id. at 1136. The Court had thus dismissed an earlier appeal in the same case for lack of jurisdiction because “the Department’s petition for leave to appeal was filed more than ten days after the district court’s certification of the case for interlocutory appeal under 28 U.S.C. § 1292(b).” Id.

Here, although debtors filed a timely notice of appeal and request for certification, they failed to file a petition for permission to appeal in accordance with Rule 5 as required by Section 1233(b) of BAPCPA. Thus, under the reasoning in Benny, this Court lacks jurisdiction to authorize a direct appeal under Section 158(d)(2).

The Supreme Court’s recent decision in Bowles v. Russell, — U.S. –, 127 S. Ct. 2360 (2007), also supports this conclusion. In that case, the Court addressed the requirements of 28 U.S.C. § 2107(c), which provides the district court with “statutory authority to grant motions to reopen the time for filing an appeal for 14 additional days” after it enters the order to reopen if specified conditions are met. Id. at 2363. In Bowles, the district court erroneously reopened the filing period for more than 14 days, and petitioner filed his notice of appeal outside the statutory 14-day period, but within the time allowed by the district court. See id. The Supreme Court held that the court of appeals lacked jurisdiction over the appeal because “statutory time limits for taking an appeal” are “jurisdictional.” Id. at 2364. In so holding, the Court emphasized that its precedent has “recognized the jurisdictional significance of the fact that a time limitation is set forth in a statute.” Id. Indeed, as the Supreme Court noted, this Court also has found that “‘[t]he distinction between jurisdictional rules and inflexible but not jurisdictional timeliness rules * * * turns largely on whether the timeliness requirement is or is not grounded in a statute.’” Id. at 2365 n.3 (quoting United States v. Sadler, 480 F.3d 932, 936 (9th Cir. 2007)).

Like the time limits at issue in Benny and Bowles, supra, the 10-day limit for filing a petition for permission to appeal under 28 U.S.C. § 158(d)(2) is statutory in nature. The petition requirement, and the 10-day time period for fulfilling it, are set forth in Section 1233(b) of BAPCPA, which appears in 28 U.S.C. § 158 Note. See Pub. L. No. 109-8, § 1233(b)(4); 28 U.S.C. § 158 Note. Where, as here, a statute delineates when a court of appeals has jurisdiction over a direct appeal from the bankruptcy court, statutory prerequisites –- unlike claim-processing rules -- would limit the category of cases that the court can hear, and thus are jurisdictional in nature. See Sadler, 480 F.3d at 936-37. Moreover, that the statute applies only “until a rule of practice and procedure relating to such provision and such appeals is promulgated or amended” does not change the result. Pub. L. 109-8, § 1233(b)(1), 28 U.S.C. § 158 Note. Unless or until rules of practice and procedure supercede

Section 1233(b), the 10-day limit for filing a petition for permission to appeal indisputably is grounded in a statute enacted by Congress. This Court therefore lacks jurisdiction over debtors' appeal.[4]

[4] This Court's decision in Amalgamated Transit Union Local 1309 v. Laidlaw Transit Serv., Inc., 435 F.3d 1140 (9th Cir. 2006), which involved the Class Action Fairness Act (CAFA), does not cast doubt on this conclusion. In that case, this Court held that Fed. R. App. P. 5 applied to 28 U.S.C. § 1453(c)(1) of the CAFA, which provides that "'a court of appeals may accept an appeal from an order of a district court granting or denying a motion to remand a class action to the State court from which it was removed if application is made to the court of appeals not less than 7 days after entry of the order.'" 435 F.3d at 1142-45 (quoting 28 U.S.C. § 1453(c)(1)) (emphasis added). The Court further held that Congress actually meant the opposite of what the plain language states – i.e., that Congress intended that "application" to the court of appeals (in the form of a petition under Rule 5) must be made "not more than 7 days" after entry of the district court order. Id. at 1146. This Court found that it had "construed the statute to require a procedural framework that is not readily apparent from the statutory text or its legislative history" and had "changed the statutory deadline for seeking to appeal to the opposite of what the plain language of the statute says." Id. Under this interpretation, "plaintiffs' timely notice of appeal is ineffectual," and "their subsequent petition for permission to appeal was filed too late." Id. The Court held, however, that "[t]o avoid the serious unfairness and potential due process violation that applying our holdings to this case might raise," it would "construe plaintiffs' timely notice of appeal and untimely petition for permission to appeal as together constituting one timely and proper petition for permission to appeal." Id. at 1146-47.

In contrast, the requirements in Section 1233(b) are entirely clear, and they derive directly from the plain language of the statute itself. Indeed, the statute expressly refers to Rule 5, and expressly requires that "[a] petition requesting permission to appeal, that is based on a certification * * * shall * * * be filed with the circuit clerk not later than 10 days after the certification is entered on the docket of the bankruptcy court[.]" Pub. L. 109-8, § 1233(b)(3),(4); 28 U.S.C. § 158 Note. Moreover, although debtors' notice of appeal was timely in this case, it was filed prior to the certification, so it cannot in any way substitute for a timely petition to appeal, and, in any case, debtors have never filed a petition, untimely or otherwise, in this Court.

In any event, even assuming arguendo it were not jurisdictional, the requirement in BAPCPA that a party file a petition for permission to appeal in accordance with Fed. R. App. P. 5 is mandatory, and must be strictly enforced so that both the parties and the Court are on notice of what issues the petitioner will raise, and why it is necessary or appropriate for the court of appeals to address such issues in the first instance without prior review by the district court or bankruptcy appellate panel.[5] See, e.g., Eberhart v. United States, 546 U.S. 12, 126 S. Ct. 403, 407 (2005) (mandatory claim-processing rules such as time limits in Federal Rules of Criminal Procedure “assure relief to a party properly raising them”). The bankruptcy court’s certification of its order was entered on the docket on May 22, 2007. To our knowledge, no petition to this Court has been filed by any party, and the 10-day time limit has long since expired.[6] Indeed, because no petition was filed, the U.S. Trustee has not had the opportunity to respond to the petition, and the Court has [5] Debtors’ Request for Certification filed in bankruptcy court included a statement of the issues and a discussion in support of their request for certification. See R. 35. This does not fulfill the separate, statutory requirement in Section 1233(b) of filing a petition for permission to appeal in this Court, however. Indeed, although the U.S. Trustee did not oppose the certification, as we acknowledge that this case meets one of the criteria for certification of a direct appeal, for the reasons discussed in the text, infra pp. 15-18, we would have filed an opposition to a petition for permission to appeal in this Court.

[6] The deadline for filing a petition in this Court was June 6, 2007. See Fed. R. App. P. 26(a)(2) (exclude “intermediate Saturdays, Sundays, and legal holidays when the period is less than 11 days, unless stated in calendar days”; 10 days from May 22nd excluding weekends and holidays is June 6th).

not had the opportunity to consider whether, in its discretion, it would be appropriate to assume jurisdiction over the appeal.[7]

In short, debtors' failure to file a petition for permission to appeal under Section 1233(b) deprives this Court of jurisdiction over debtors' appeal. We emphasize, however, that a refusal by this Court to hear the case -- on jurisdictional grounds or otherwise –- should not leave debtors without a valid appeal. To the contrary, the appeal may still proceed in district court. Debtors did timely comply with the Rules of Bankruptcy Procedure in filing their notice of appeal, and the bankruptcy court erred by failing to transmit that notice of appeal to the district court. See Fed. R. Bankr. P. 8007(b). The applicable bankruptcy rules make clear that even when a bankruptcy court certifies an order for direct appeal, a debtor must proceed with the normal process of appealing to the district court or bankruptcy appellate panel. Indeed Interim Bankruptcy Rule 8001(f) provides that a certification of an order for direct appeal to a court of appeals under Section 158(d)(2) "shall not be treated as a certification entered on the docket within the meaning of § 1233(b)(4)(A) of [BAPCPA] until a timely appeal has been taken in the manner required by subdivisions (a) or (b) of this rule and the notice of appeal has become effective under Rule 8002.” Interim Fed. R. Bankr. P. 8001(f)(1). Rules 8001 and 8002 outline the procedures for ordinary appeals from the bankruptcy court to the district court or bankruptcy appellate panel. See Fed. R. Bankr. P. 8001, 8002.

[7] In addition, the bankruptcy court's error in forwarding the notice of appeal and the record to this Court, rather than the district court, appears to have led the clerk's office to docket this case as an ordinary appeal and erroneously enter a briefing schedule without allowing this Court first to determine whether to exercise discretionary jurisdiction under Section 158(d)(2). Had the bankruptcy court properly sent the notice and record to the district court, and had debtors properly filed a petition for permission to appeal in accordance with Section 1233(b), this Court would have been on notice that it should determine whether to exercise jurisdiction prior to setting a briefing schedule on the merits.

Here, debtors filed their notice of appeal within the 10-day time limit set in accordance with Bankruptcy Rule 8001(a). It was the bankruptcy court, not debtors, that construed the filing as a notice of appeal to the Ninth Circuit. Compare Notice of Appeal with Bankr. Docket Entry R. 34. Moreover, Congress made clear in BAPCPA that a certification of a judgment for direct appeal under Section 158(d) does not stay proceedings in the bankruptcy court, district court, or bankruptcy appellate panel, and thus, in essence, required the timely filing of a notice of appeal under Rule 8001 in order for appellants to preserve their rights should the court of appeals decline to authorize a direct appeal. 28 U.S.C. § 158(d)(2)(D).

This Court should therefore vacate the briefing schedule and remand the case to the bankruptcy court with instructions to transmit the notice of appeal and the record to district court.

B. Regardless Of Any Jurisdictional Or Procedural Defects, This Court Should, In Its Discretion, Decline To Exercise Jurisdiction Over The Appeal.

In the alternative, this Court could also rule that even if it had jurisdiction over the appeal, it would decline to exercise it at this stage of the litigation. See, e.g., Sinochem Int’l Co. Ltd. v. Malaysia Int’l Shipping Corp. 127 S. Ct. 1184 (2007). As the Supreme Court recently reaffirmed, “a federal court has leeway to choose among threshold grounds for denying audience to a case on the merits.” Id. at 1191 (internal quotations omitted). The Court noted that, for example, “a district court declining to adjudicate state-law claims on discretionary grounds need not first determine whether those claims fall within its pendent jurisdiction.” Id.

Similarly, this Court may decline to adjudicate the merits of the current appeal on discretionary grounds without first determining whether, due to the debtors’ failure to file a petition, it lacks appellate jurisdiction. Indeed, “[j]urisdiction is vital only if the court proposes to issue a judgment on the merits.” Sinochem, 127 S. Ct. at 1191-92. As noted, even where, as here, the bankruptcy court certifies that its order satisfies at least one of the three statutory criteria for direct appeal, this Court has discretion whether to exercise jurisdiction. 28 U.S.C. 158(d)(2)(A); see Weber v. United States Trustee, 484 F.3d 154, 157, 161 (2d Cir. 2007) (“Congress has explicitly granted us plenary authority to grant or deny leave to file a direct appeal, notwithstanding the presence of one, two, or all three of the threshold conditions”).

Here, the bankruptcy court certified its order holding that Mrs. Blausey’s disability insurance payments must be included as “current monthly income” under Section 101(10A) for direct appeal on the ground that the order involves "questions of law for which there is no controlling authority" and which are "a matter of public importance." R. 42. The U.S. Trustee does not dispute the lack of controlling authority on whether monthly disability insurance payments are "current monthly income" as defined in 11 U.S.C. § 101(10A). In fact, the U.S. Trustee is unaware of any published district court or court of appeals decision addressing the issue. That, however, suggests that the parties' arguments should be fully aired and considered by at least one Article III district court judge before they are presented to this Court.

And although the U.S. Trustee also does not dispute that the issue is important, this case does not involve questions that are of such great public importance that a direct appeal is necessary, or even advisable. To the contrary, the bankruptcy court's order involves a narrow and focused dispute over whether a particular type of private insurance payment falls under the broad statutory definition of "current monthly income." Lower courts and, if necessary, this Court, can address this issue in the ordinary appellate process.

Moreover, this Court would benefit from lower courts' views on this issue should it ever reach the circuit level. See Weber, 484 F.3d at 160 ("In many cases involving unsettled areas of bankruptcy law, review by the district court would be most helpful. Courts of appeals benefit immensely from reviewing the efforts of the district court to resolve such questions."). Much like the Supreme Court's discretion to deny review by writ of certiorari where an important issue has not sufficiently "percolated" in the lower courts, this Court has discretion to deny an immediate appeal where the issue would benefit from further analysis in the district courts or other fora. Indeed, "[p]ermitting direct appeal too readily might impede the development of a coherent body of bankruptcy case-law." Weber, 484 F.3d at 160. For these reasons, this Court should not authorize a direct appeal in the present case.

IV. CONCLUSION

For the foregoing reasons, this Court should remand the case to the bankruptcy court with instructions to transmit the notice of appeal and the record to the district court.[8]

I. Statement of Issues and Standard of Review[1]

The United States Trustee asserts that additional issues requiring review in this matter are whether the appellant waived his right to appeal findings that he violated Fed. R. Bankr. Proc. 9011 in view of his repeated admissions of such violations before the trial Court.

Sanctions should be reviewed for abuse of discretion. Morris v. Wachovia Securities, 448 F.3d 268, 277 (4th Cir. 2006); Brickwood Contractors, Inc. v. Datanet Engineering, 369 F.3d 385, 390 (4th Cir. 2004). A court abuses its discretion only if the "'court below committed a clear error of judgment in the conclusion it reached upon a weighing of the relevant factors." Morris at 277, citing Westberry v. Gislaved Gummi AB, 178 F.3d 257, 261 (4th Cir. 1999)

The applicable standard of review was set forth in In re Gallagher, 388 B.R. 694, 697 (W.D.N.C. 2008):

> The decision of the Bankruptcy Court is reviewed by a two-step process. Reversal of the findings of fact of the Bankruptcy Court may occur only where such findings are clearly erroneous. See Educational Credit Mgmt. Corp. v. Frushour (In re Frushour), 433 F.3d 393, 398 (4th Cir.2005). The Bankruptcy Court's legal conclusions, however, are subject to a de novo standard of review. [1] The United States Trustee notes that appellant's brief fails to comply with the requirements of Fed. R. Bankr. Proc. 8010(a)(1)(C), in that he fails to specify any applicable standard of appellate review. The United States Trustee also notes that the brief of appellant exceeds the page limitation requirements of Fed. R. Bankr. Proc. 8010(c).

II. Statement of Facts

The United States Trustee asserts that the facts relied on by the Bankruptcy Court in imposing sanctions are clearly and succinctly set out in its memorandum opinion and in the supporting documentation supplementing its opinion. App. Docs. 14, 15, 16.

The United States Trustee notes that the lengthy supplemental documents included in the opinion of the Bankruptcy Court include correspondence between Mr. Bowman and the Court. Most significant therein is Judge Stone's letter of August 28, 2007 setting forth his reasoning for commencing formal proceedings against Mr. Bowman. App. Doc.14, unnumbered page, third from the last.

In addition, the supplemental documents include the Court's invitation to Mr. Bowman to request a hearing on the Order to Show Cause and Mr. Bowman's acknowledgment of the Court's willingness to hold a hearing and his willingness to forego hearing. "It is my understanding, based on the Court's previous letters, that the three judges of the Court will consider my proposed resolution of the show cause matter, and that no hearing will be held. That procedure is agreeable to me." App.Doc.14, last two pages. (emphasis added) (It should also be noted that at the time Mr. Bowman sent this letter he clearly knew that all three judges of the Bankruptcy Court would participate in the final decision and made no objection to the participation of Chief Judge Krumm either in his letter or by motion.)

The Appellant's brief here contains a lengthy recitation of "facts" without citations to the actual record. Many of the factual assertions made on appeal appear to amplify personal explanations rejected by the Bankruptcy Court and may not be appropriate for consideration on appeal if they were not raised before the Bankruptcy Court. It is not necessary for this Court to engage in the cumbersome process of parsing the record to compare the current "facts" with those provided in the original Response to Order to Show Cause in view of the fact that Mr. Bowman admitted at least three violations of Fed. R. Bankr. Proc. 9011, as set forth in detail below.

III. Argument

A. Summary of Argument

The matter before this Court is the appeal of an Order of the United States Bankruptcy Court imposing sanctions against appellant, Attorney Gary M. Bowman, (hereafter "Mr. Bowman") for violations of Rule 9011 of the Federal Rules of Bankruptcy Procedure.

The proceedings in Bankruptcy Court were initiated by an Order to Show Cause issued sua sponte by United States Bankruptcy Court Judge William F. Stone, Jr. App. Doc. 4. The Order to Show Cause, which will be discussed at length below, required Mr. Bowman to explain why sanctions should not be imposed against him for violations of Rule 9011 in the Bousman (In re Michael and Sandra Bousman, No. 99-01086 (Bankr. W.D.V.A.)) and Perkins (In re Kim Perkins, No. 7-01-0418- WRS-13 (Bankr. W.D.V.A.)) cases and specified the matters to which Mr. Bowman was required to respond. Mr. Bowman responded by filing a Motion to Recuse Judge Stone, which was denied. App. Docs. 7, 12,13. He also filed a detailed reply to the Motion for Order to Show Cause.[2] App. Doc. 8 (attachments to response to order to show cause, App. Docs. 9-11.)

In his response, although he disputed many of the matters referred to in the Order to Show Cause, Mr. Bowman admitted that he had violated Rule 9011 in both Perkins and Bousman and that the imposition of sanctions was appropriate.[3]

[2] Several requests for extensions of time were also filed, all of which were granted.

[3] Nowhere in the Appellant's brief to this Court does he mention, let alone attempt to explain, the fact that at the Bankruptcy Court he admitted three violations of Rule 9011.

Mr. Bowman acknowledged that the Motion to Reopen in Bousman contained a factual allegation which did not have evidentiary support and "thus violated Rule 9011(b)(3)." Mr. Bowman also acknowledged that, in a separate adversary proceeding in the same case, he requested relief against a secured creditor that could not be granted by the Court. "Therefore, the claim for relief violated Rule 9011(b)(2), which prohibits the filing of a claim which is not 'warranted by existing law.' " Response to Order to Show Cause, p.30 "For these reasons, I do not think that my inaccurate statements in the Bousman pleadings, although improper and in violation of 9011, were done for an entirely improper purpose because there was a legally justified goal which I was trying to achieve for my clients." Response to Order to Show Cause, p. 38, (italics added). Similarly in Perkins, Mr. Bowman admitted that the allegations of his adversary complaint "contained a statement in violation of Rule 9011(b)(3)":

> "The calculations that I had done in December indicated that the debtor had not made sufficient payments to pay off the lien, and the claim that the 'lien on the property is satsified and should be released' was not accurate. This statement was a factual contention which did not have evidentiary support and violated Rule 9011(b)(3)." App.Doc. 10, Response to Order to Show Cause, p.30 (emphasis added.)

The findings of the Bankruptcy Court relied both on its own independent analysis and on Mr. Bowman's admissions. Accordingly, Mr. Bowman has waived his right to appeal those findings.

In view of these admissions and the pattern of conduct discussed at length in its order, the Bankruptcy Court, with all three Bankruptcy Judges participating, imposed a sanction consisting of an admonition to comply with applicable federal law and state ethics requirements, a requirement that he certify within 90 days his familiarity with various rules and cases related thereto and a requirement that he take ethics courses approved by Chief United States Bankruptcy Judge Krumm.

Mr. Bowman was further barred from filing any new cases until he complied with the terms of the Order.[4] App. Doc. 16.

The sanction imposed was notably similar to what Mr. Bowman himself acknowledged would be an appropriate sanction in view of his admissions that he violated Fed. R. Bankr. Proc. 9011. Mr. Bowman recommended a probationary period of one year and an admonition against further misbehavior of the same kind. Mr. Bowman's recommendation was somewhat disingenuous since, at that time, he planned to discontinue his law practice anyway for at least one year while he was on active military duty. App. Doc. 9,Response to Order to Show Cause, p. 51.[5]

The actual sanction appears mild in view of the recurring pattern of conduct and basically set no probationary period as suggested by Mr. Bowman, but required proof of additional ethical education as a condition to filing new cases. Accordingly, Mr. Bowman "held the keys to the jail" and can recommence his bankruptcy practice at any time he completes the required education and review.

Ironically, in view of the basis of the sanction imposed by the Bankruptcy Court, the appellant's brief fails to make any mention of his admissions that he violated Fed. R. Bankr. Proc. 9011. His concerns before the Bankruptcy Court were apparently assuaged by the fact that he was not disbarred or sanctioned more severely. That, of course, does not entitle a party to re-litigate on appeal matters it has already admitted below. It appears that now that Mr. Bowman got

[4] To date, Mr. Bowman has filed the certificate within the time frame required by the Court. Nothing appears of record to indicate compliance with the educational requirement. No new cases have been filed by Mr. Bowman since entry of the Order.

[5] The Brief of Appellant filed herein also fails to mention the fact that, before the Bankruptcy Court, he himself recommended the imposition of some discipline.

essentially what he requested and was neither suspended or disbarred, he wants to disavow everything he admitted before the Bankruptcy Court.

A careful reading of the order to show cause and the order entered pursuant to it, makes clear that after many years of dealing with specified cases where factual and legal allegations made by Mr. Bowman were found to be, at best, lacking in substance, the Court concluded that its repeated admonitions to Mr. Bowman were not resulting in the desired "correction of course" and that only a more serious action would cause him to change his ways. Mr. Bowman was given the opportunity to respond, which he did; and for a hearing, which he declined.[6]

The appellants brief fails to set forth any basis for reversal of the finding of the Bankruptcy Court. Instead it simply makes the same excuses (in many cases word for word) that failed in the trial court. In some cases, the excuses are amplified to include new factual explanations. These are unsupported by evidentiary matters in the record and are mostly a repetition of Mr. Bowman's dissatisfaction with the trial court's decision. Dissatisfaction with the decision of a trial court, particularly when great discretion is allowed by law, cannot be a substitute for a demonstration of abuse of discretion sufficient to justify reversing a decision on appeal.

[6] The necessity for hearing to resolve any disputed facts was clearly vitiated by the Bowman admission that he had violated Fed. R. Bankr. Proc. 9011.

B. Specific Issues

1. Judge Stone's denial of the Motion for recusal was appropriate.

The appellant's initial complaint is that Judge Stone should have recused himself from hearing the case. Mr. Bowman alleged in his motion before the trial court that 28 U.S.C. §§ 455(a) and (b)(1) required recusal.[7] The requested relief relies upon a single dispute in a case arising before Judge Stone was appointed to the bench and a series of matters after he was on the bench, allegedly demonstrating a bias sufficient to require recusal under § 455.

In his opinion denying the motion for recusal, Judge Stone provides a lengthy history of the events proceeding his appointment to the bench, App. Doc. 12, p.3-8. Judge Stone notes that two years after the case in question, he invited Mr. Bowman to his investiture. He also points out that he held a favorable view of Mr. Bowman because of his continuing military service.

As noted in a recent case decided by United States District Court Judge Turk, "the issue is not whether the judge is impartial in fact but rather whether a reasonable person might question the impartiality of the judge under the surrounding facts and circumstances." United States v. $15,716 in U.S. currency, 2008 WL 4326491 (W.D. Va.) (citations omitted.) As Judge Widener noted in United States v. DeTemple, 162 F.3rd 279, 289 (4th Cir. 1998):

> Application of the objective standard thus requires a nuanced approach. On the one hand, we must keep in mind that the hypothetical reasonable observer is not a judge himself or a judicial colleague but a person outside the judicial system. Judges, accustomed to the process of dispassionate decision making and keenly aware of their Constitutional and > ethical obligations to decide matters solely on the merits, may regard asserted conflicts to be more innocuous than an outsider would. On the other hand, a reasonable outside observer is not a person unduly suspicious or concerned about a trivial risk that a judge may be biased. There is always some risk of bias; to constitute grounds for disqualification, the probability that a judge will decide a case on a basis other than the merits must be more than "trivial." (citation omitted) (emphasis added).

Nothing under the present circumstances would lead a reasonable person to conclude that Judge Stone was biased against Mr. Bowman. Only a single incident involving Mr. Bowman and Judge Stone prior to his appointment to the bench is cited. Active attorneys regularly have disagreements with other attorneys about the respective rights of their clients. In specific practice areas like bankruptcy in relatively sparsely populated parts of the country, it is virtually inconceivable that over the years attorneys representing clients would not have disagreements. United States v. DeTemple, 162 F.3d at 290. Adopting Mr. Bowman's views, with no additional showing of personal animosity, would virtually preclude any active practitioner from later performing their duties as a judge when doing so required them to rule in cases where previously opposing counsel appeared. There is no recitation that the sole dispute referred to was even particularly acrimonious. For example, neither side sought sanctions and no trial was held. Section 455(a) is not intended to provide parties with a "veto" power over the judge hearing a particular case or matter. Judge Stone's lengthy opinion denying the motion for recusal sets forth in considerable detail both the factual and legal matters relating to recusal here. App. Doc. 12, pp. 24-27. This sort of every day dispute among counsel representing clients is certainly not enough to allow a reasonable person to conclude that Judge Stone possessed a personal bias requiring recusal, particularly in view of Judge Stone's detailed recitation of the pre-appointment events which Mr. Bowman did not dispute.

The balance of Mr. Bowman's attempts to prove bias consists of a series of cases over the years in which Judge Stone questioned various factual and legal issues raised by Mr. Bowman. It is axiomatic that knowledge by the Judge gained relating to a matter or a party as result of cases cannot be the basis for recusal under § 455. Liteky v. U.S., 510 U.S. 540, 554(1994), United States v. DeTemple, 162 F.3d 279,(4th Cir. 1998); In re Beard, 811 F.2d 818 (4th Cir. 1987). As Judge Stone noted, an action brought pursuant to Fed. R. Bankr. Proc. 9011 by the Court implies some knowledge of the underlying circumstances including other matters handled inappropriately by counsel. App. Doc. 12, p. 22.

Mr. Bowman apparently believes that the incidents referred to in his previous cases with Judge Stone support his contention that, basically, Judge Stone was out to get him since before he took the bench.

Even assuming arguendo that issues raised by a Judge relating to specific cases can, by themselves, form the basis for claims under § 455, the facts here not only do not demonstrate ongoing bias-- they demonstrate exactly the opposite. In the instances cited by Mr. Bowman where his conduct was questioned, upon hearing Mr. Bowman's explanation, Judge Stone chose not to initiate formal proceedings against Mr. Bowman. As Judge Stone states, it was his ongoing hope and expectation that Mr. Bowman would correct his issues without formal court action. It was only when it became clear that performance not in accord with the applicable standards was continuing, that this formal proceeding was initiated. This ongoing judicial restraint demonstrates the Court's reluctance to take action unless and until pressed to the point where it became clear that informal admonitions were not likely to be effective. This is hardly the course of conduct of a judicial officer driven by bias over a minor matter occurring over ten years earlier. Section 455(a) "does not require recusal on the basis of suspicion or 'unsupported, irrational, or highly tenuous speculation." United States v. Black, 490 F. Supp. 2d 630, 656 (E.D.N.C. 2007). This is precisely the type of "trivial" allegation for which recusal is not required.

Mr. Bowman also alleges that Judge Stone was required to recuse himself pursuant to § 455(b)(1) because he had personal knowledge of facts which were unknown to him and not in the opinion. His complaint here relates to the content of a letter sent by Judge Stone to Mr. Bowman dated August 28, 2007. App.Doc. 14. This reckless allegation is unfortunately similar in nature to the sort of statement that resulted in Mr. Bowman's sanction. The comments Mr. Bowman refers to were general in nature and amply supported by minutely detailed recitations of particular incidents. His complaint that he received no "guidance which would have caused me to change my course" (App. Brief 29) simply ignores the previous incidents he had with Judge Stone. While not constituting formal actions by the Court, these incidents were sufficiently clear to indicate to any experienced practitioner that much stricter compliance to applicable legal and ethical standards requirements and attention to detail was required. This is hardly the type of underlying extra-judicial knowledge of facts for which recusal under § 455(b) is required.

2. The Bankruptcy Court appropriately initiated a disciplinary separate proceeding outside of the underlying case.

This argument was not raised at the trial court and was waived. Timely raising of this issue would have resolved it, if necessary, by re-opening cases for limited purposes.

Mr. Bowman contends that the Bankruptcy Court erred by reviewing his conduct in a miscellaneous proceeding separate from the underlying cases which gave rise to the current proceedings. Following Mr. Bowman's position to its logical conclusion, any attorney who engaged in egregious conduct in violation of Fed. R. Bankr. Proc. 9011 before the Bankruptcy Court could get away with it as long as such egregious conduct was not discovered before the case was closed. Additionally, his view appears to be that a court could not rely on similar conduct in prior closed cases in determining what the appropriate sanction should be. There is nothing in the language of the rule that limits action by the Court to enforce its provisions to open cases.[8] Keeping cases open indefinitely while allegations of violations of Fed. R. Bankr. Proc. 9011 matters were being resolved, particularly in a bankruptcy case, could have serious consequences for both debtors and their creditors.

The Supreme Court has upheld the jurisdiction of courts to issue Rule 11 sanctions in dismissed cases. Cooter & Gell v. Hartmarx Corp., 496 U.S. 384, 395 (1990), as well as in instances where the court was found to have lacked federal subject matter jurisdiction over the underlying case. Willy v. Coastal Corp., 503 U.S. 131, 138-39 (1991) (holding that Rule 11 sanctions may be imposed even where there is no subject matter jurisdiction over the merits of the related controversy, as the court's interest in having rules of procedure obeyed does not disappear); see also In re Whitney Place Partners, 123 B.R. 117, 120 (Bankr. N.D. Ga. 1991) (court may impose sanctions under Fed. R. Bankr. Proc. 9011 even after bankruptcy case is dismissed); Hunter v. Earthgrains Company Bakery, 281 F.3rd 144, 152 (4th Cir. 2002); In re Kuntsler 914 F.2d 505,517 (4th Cir. 1990); Red Carpet Studios Division of Source Advantage, Ltd. v. Sater, 465 F.3d 642, 645 (6th Cir.

[8] The matter could have easily been raised by the Court as a violation of ethical rules.

2006) (upholding a sanction under 28 U.S.C. § 1927 even though the underlying lawsuit in which the sanction arose had been settled and voluntarily dismissed.).

3. Judge Krumm was not precluded from participating in resolution of the Order to Show Cause.

This allegation was not raised below and was thus waived. An appellant cannot challenge matters admitted in the court below through vague challenges to the lower court's overall decision or through ambiguous statements of issues not raised below. Korangy v. U.S. F.D.A., 498 F.3d 272, 275 (4th Cir. 2007). See also United States v. Benton, 523 F.3d 424, 428 (4th Cir. 2008)(rejecting an appeal of magistrate's findings because "a party must object to the [magistrate's] finding or recommendation ... with sufficient specificity so as reasonably to alert the district court of the true ground for the objection."); Telecommunications v. Commissioner of Internal Revenue, 104 F.3d 1229, 1233 (10th Cir. 1997) ("Propounding new arguments on appeal in an attempt to prompt us to reverse the trial court undermines important judicial values. In order to preserve the integrity of the appellate structure, we should not be considered a "second-shot" forum, a forum where secondary, back-up theories may be mounted for the first time").

Mr. Bowman contends that Chief Judge Krumm would have been precluded from participating in the resolution of the Order to Show Cause had the matter been initiated in the underlying case because Chief Judge Krumm routinely recuses himself from disputed matters relating to Wachovia Bank. Timely raising of this issue might have allowed Chief Judge Krumm to either provide the detailed type of explanation that Judge Stone provided or for Chief Judge Krumm to recuse himself, although under these circumstances he was not required to do so.

The United States Trustee acknowledges that Chief Judge Krumm recuses himself from resolving actual disputes involving Wachovia Bank. In many cases where Wachovia is a creditor but no actual disputes arise involving Wachovia, he does not recuse himself. The Order to Show Cause did not involve Wachovia. The Order to Show Cause did not relate to the amount, validity, or payment of any claim by Wachovia Bank. No legal authority is cited for the proposition that Judge Stone's recusal was required under these circumstances.

4 The Bankruptcy Court appropriately relied on Mr. Bowman's pattern of conduct in determining the appropriate sanction.

The appellant contends that the reliance on other instances involving inaccurate or misleading statements was not appropriate because he committed no wrongdoing in those cases.

The brief of appellant goes on at considerable length in its efforts to dispute the conclusions reached by the Court with regard to Mr. Bowman's conduct in prior cases. The recitation of "facts" now cited by Mr. Bowman fails to show that any of these "facts" were in evidence before the trial court or that any attempt to prove them before the trial court was improperly rejected. His explanations were rejected, based upon his admission of violations of Fed. R. Bankr. Proc. 9011, and the Court's determination arriving at a decision relating to the appropriate remedy did not require a painstaking analysis of Mr. Bowman's mental state at the time. Mr. Bowman does not agree with the Court's conclusions. A party's disagreement with a trial court decision is not a basis for overruling such decision. Mr. Bowman makes no showing that the reliance on other incidents in other cases constituted an abuse of discretion, particularly in view of his admitted violations.

Finally, the Bankruptcy Court did not "relitigate" anything; it simply relied on actual events that occurred in those cases.

5. The consideration by the Bankruptcy Court of Mr. Bowman's conduct was not an abuse of discretion.

In his final basis for appeal, Mr. Bowman continues his running disagreement with the Bankruptcy Court relating to its overall conclusions relating to his conduct. On appeal, this court is only called on to determine whether or not reversible error occurred. There is nothing in the rule that requires a demonstration of a pattern of conduct as a prerequisite to the imposition of sanctions. Even if there were, Mr. Bowman, does not dispute that sanctions were imposed upon him in a prior bankruptcy case.

Regardless, the trial Court specifically rejected the idea that it was finding that Mr. Bowman's actions were "designed to mislead the Court or a creditor." The Court specifically found that:

> In light of the disposition we determine to be appropriate under the circumstances presented here, we choose not to sift all relevant evidence in an effort to determine whether the Respondent consciously decided to file misleading and unsupported pleadings or that he recklessly did so without giving full consideration to what he was doing or that in his own mind he convinced himself that he was simply being a vigorous advocate on behalf of his clients and that it was the responsibility of other parties affected by his efforts to object to them if they believed themselves to be prejudiced. At the very least he can be charged with a negligent, although reckless seems much closer to the correct characterization, indifference or blindness to his responsibilities under Rule 9011(b) and the Court believes that it need not go beyond that, believing that a full evidentiary hearing would be the appropriate procedure to make any more damaging determination of his intent. App. Doc 16, 11-12.

The facts and circumstances of the prior cases were appropriately considered by the Bankruptcy Court for the limited purposes it described and did not constitute an abuse of discretion.

6. No error existed in the reference by the Bankruptcy Court to United States v. Shaffer.

Finally the appellant complains about the citation by the Bankruptcy Court to United States v. Shaffer, 11 F.3rd 450 (4th Cir. 1993). This case is a leading case in this Circuit setting forth the responsibilities of counsel. The trial Court cited it correctly for that proposition and does not say or imply that Mr. Bowman engaged in conduct identical to that criticized there. The suggestion that the citation to this case somehow shows a negative mind set on the part of the Court has no basis in fact or law.

IV. Conclusion

This appeal is a hodge podge of issues that were either not raised before the trial court or were rejected by it for sound reasons. No concise statement of issues showing abuse of discretion is attempted. No specification of erroneous findings of fact or conclusions of law is provided. New "facts" are alleged without reference to any record in a stream-of-consciousness manner that apparently this Court is supposed to figure out.

The real facts of this case are clear. After many years of informally attempting to motivate Mr. Bowman to be more careful, the Bankruptcy Court felt that more formal action was required. A very detailed Order to Show Cause was issued to which Mr. Bowman responded. He admitted violations of Rule 9011. Despite the fact that he had been both previously cautioned by the Court and had formal discipline imposed upon him for violations of Rule 9011, the Bankruptcy Court imposed a mild sanction, basically requiring him to demonstrate knowledge of his ethical and legal responsibilities and prohibiting him from filing new cases until he did.

The appellant has shown no abuse of discretion or other error warranting reversal by this Court. The Bankruptcy Court appropriately performed its duty; and set forth the important reasons for taking the action it did:

> They [the Bankruptcy Judges] have jointly concluded, based on the facts and applicable law noted in this opinion, their individual experiences with the Respondent in his practice in this Court over a period of years and after considering the representations and arguments made by him in his Response to the Show Cause Order, that an admonition to him accompanied by requirements that he take an appropriate professional responsibility course and complete a personal study and certification to the Court of Rule 9011(B), the case authority interpreting and applying the same, and pertinent Rules of Professional Conduct found in Part 6 of the Rules of the Supreme Court of Virginia, are likely to be sufficient to deter repetition of the conduct noted in this opinion or comparable conduct within the meaning of Bankruptcy > Rule 9011(c)(2). It is not their intent to chill advocacy which is vigorous or innovative or both, so long as it is supported both factually and by good faith legal argument within the fair meaning of the Rule, and is not advanced in a manner which is reasonably likely to be misleading either to the other parties affected thereby or to the Court. Finally, the undersigned judges of this Court intend to put the Respondent on specific notice that any future material violation by him of Bankruptcy Rule 9011(Attorney B) or the Virginia Rules of Professional Conduct, Part 6 of the Rules of the Supreme Court of Virginia, in connection with any pleading filed or appearance made in this Court which occurs after this date will be considered by this Court as prima facie cause for the suspension or termination of his right to practice as a member of its bar. App.Doc. 15, p.21.

The decision of the Bankruptcy Court should be affirmed.

INTRODUCTION

On October 28, 2008, Mr. Douglas Boyce filed for chapter 7 bankruptcy relief. The United States Trustee filed a motion to dismiss Mr. Boyce's case under 11 U.S.C. § 707(b)(3)(A) for bad faith and under 11 U.S.C. § 707(b)(3)(B) based on the totality of the financial circumstances. The bankruptcy court granted the motion, finding cause to dismiss under both sections 707(b)(3)(A) and (B). This appeal followed.

STATEMENT OF APPELLATE JURISDICTION

This Court has appellate jurisdiction under 28 U.S.C. § 158(a)(1), which confers jurisdiction on the district courts of the United States to hear appeals "from final judgments, orders, and decrees" of bankruptcy judges. The bankruptcy court's final order granting the United States Trustee's motion to dismiss Mr. Boyce's case under 11 U.S.C. § 707(b) was entered on April 8, 2010. Mr. Boyce timely filed a notice of appeal under 28 U.S.C. § 158(c)(2) and FED. R. BANKR. P. 8002(a) on April 22, 2010.

STATEMENT OF THE ISSUES

Did the bankruptcy court abuse its discretion when it dismissed Mr. Boyce's chapter 7 bankruptcy case under 11 U.S.C. § 707(b)(3)(A) for bad faith?

Did the bankruptcy court abuse its discretion when it dismissed Mr. Boyce's chapter 7 bankruptcy case under 11 U.S.C. § 707(b)(3)(B) based on the totality of the financial circumstances ?

STANDARD OF REVIEW

The bankruptcy court's conclusions of law are reviewed de novo and its factual findings are reviewed for clear error. Price v. U.S. Trustee (In re Price), 353 F.3d 1135, 1138 (9th Cir. 2004). A bankruptcy court's decision to dismiss a case under 11 U.S.C. § 707(b) is reviewed for abuse of discretion. Id. "A court abuses its discretion if it does not apply the correct law or if it bases its ruling on a clearly erroneous view of the facts." Reed v. Anderson (In re Reed), 422 B.R. 214, 220 (C.D. Cal. 2009). "The reviewing court cannot reverse for abuse of discretion unless it has a definite and firm conviction that there has been a clear error in judgment." Id.

STATEMENT OF THE CASE

I. Statutory framework of 11 U.S.C. § 707(b)

Most individual debtors choose between two forms of relief under the Bankruptcy Code: chapter 7 and chapter 13. In a chapter 7 case, the debtor receives an immediate discharge of debt in exchange for the liquidation of all non-exempt assets. See 11 U.S.C. § 701, et seq. In a chapter 13 case, the debtor retains non-exempt assets, but must repay creditors over a period of time. See 11 U.S.C. § 1301, et seq.

Congress enacted section 707(b) in response to "concerns that some debtors who could easily pay their creditors might resort to chapter 7 to avoid their obligations." H.R. Rep. 109-31 (2005) at 12, reprinted in 2005 U.S.C.C.A.N. 88, 92. As originally enacted in 1984, section 707(b) established a presumption in favor of granting a debtor's petition for bankruptcy relief. The bankruptcy court could overcome this presumption and dismiss the debtor's case if the court found that granting the debtor a chapter 7 discharge would constitute "substantial abuse." Bankruptcy Amendments and Federal Judgeship Act of 1984, Pub. L. No. 98-353, § 312, 98 Stat. 355, 381 (1984). "Courts looked to the totality of the circumstances to make this substantial abuse determination." Egebjerg v. U.S. Trustee (In re Egebjerg), 574 F.3d 1045, 1048 (9th Cir. 2009).

In 2005, Congress found that section 707(b) was insufficient to control abuse of chapter 7 for several reasons, including confusion about what would permit the court to dismiss under the "substantial abuse" standard and the "presumption that favors granting a debtor a discharge." H.R. Rep. 109-31 at 12. In particular, Congress remained concerned about "the pursuit of Chapter 7 liquidations instead of Chapter 13 debt repayment plans by consumer debtors who could afford to repay some of their debts." Morse v. Rudler (In re Rudler), 576 F.3d 37, 40 (1st Cir. 2009) (citing 151 Cong. Rec. S2459, 2468-70 (daily ed. Mar. 10, 2005) (statement of Sen. Hatch).

Congress therefore enacted the Bankruptcy Abuse Prevention and Consumer Protection Act of 2005 ("BAPCPA"), Pub. L. No. 109-8, 119 Stat. 23, in order "to correct perceived abuses of the bankruptcy system." Milavetz, Gallop & Milavetz, P.A. v. United States, 130 S. Ct. 1324, 1329 (2010). Specifically, BAPCPA implemented "needs-based reforms" to shift debtors "into chapter 13 . . . as opposed to chapter 7." H.R. Rep. 109-31 at 12. "The heart of the bill's consumer bankruptcy reforms . . . is intended to ensure that debtors repay creditors the maximum they can afford." Id. at 2.

Congress substantially revised section 707(b) under BAPCPA. See Egebjerg, 574 F.3d at 1048 (describing BAPCPA as a "sea change" in the law). As amended, section 707(b) now states, "[a]fter notice and a hearing, the court . . . may dismiss a case filed by an individual debtor under this chapter whose debts are primarily consumer debts . . . if it finds that the granting of relief would be an abuse of the provisions of this chapter." 11 U.S.C. § 707(b)(1).

BAPCPA made four key changes to section 707(b):

First, Congress repealed the statutory presumption in favor of granting relief to the debtor. Compare 11 U.S.C. § 707(b) (1986) with 11 U.S.C. § 707(b)(1) (2006).

Second, Congress lowered the standard for dismissal from "substantial abuse" to mere "abuse." Id.

Third, Congress authorized dismissal when a mathematical formula based on the debtor's pre-petition income and expenses — the means test — indicates a presumption of abuse. 11 U.S.C. § 707(b)(2)(A)(I).

Fourth, Congress bifurcated the totality of the circumstances test into two separate and distinct tests for finding abuse that a bankruptcy court "shall consider" when section 707(b)(2)'s presumption of abuse does not arise or is rebutted. 11 U.S.C. § 707(b)(3). One test is if the debtor filed the petition in bad faith. 11 U.S.C. § 707(b)(3)(A). The other test is based on the totality of the circumstances of the debtor's financial situation. 11 U.S.C. § 707(b)(3)(B).

By enacting sections 707(b)(3)(A) and (B) disjunctively, Congress clarified that a debtor’s honesty and neediness are now separate and independent grounds for the dismissal or conversion of a debtor’s bankruptcy case. Reed, 422 B.R. at 233.

II. Statement of the facts

A. Mr. Boyce’s financial circumstances

Mr. Douglas Boyce is a claims adjuster for GEICO. Excerpt of Record (“ER”) at 39. Mr. Boyce receives two major sources of compensation from GEICO: a base salary of approximately $57,000 and an annual profit sharing payment. Id. That payment has varied from 18% to 28% of Mr. Boyce’s taxable income. Id. at 17. Mr. Boyce has received a profit sharing payment every year since 2002. ER at 63 (year 2010); Excerpt of Record-Supplement (“ER-S”) at 60 (years 2002-2009).

Under the profit sharing plan, GEICO pays eligible employees a percentage of the employee’s taxable income based upon two factors: (1) the rate of policy growth and (2) the company’s combined underwriting ratio. ER at 16. This payment is made every February. Id. at 21. The first 10% of a profit sharing payment is deposited into a retirement account and any remainder is distributed to the employee as cash. Id. at 23. Profit sharing payments are discretionary, but when GEICO has not met its growth targets in the past, it has still made profit sharing payments, although in reduced amounts. Id.

Mr. Boyce enjoys two other substantial benefits from GEICO. One is a series of miscellaneous cash incentive benefits. Id. at 64-65. The other is the ability to use his work vehicle for personal use. ER-S at 60. GEICO provided Mr. Boyce with a brand new Chevrolet Malibu in 2007. ER at 45. He may use 15% of the miles on that car for personal use. ER-S at 60. For personal mileage above 15%, amounts are deducted biweekly from his pay. Id. Through 2009, his personal use deduction was $48 per pay period. Id. In addition, GEICO pays for all of the maintenance and car insurance expenses on the vehicle. ER at 45.

In 2008, Mr. Boyce earned $67,961 in total cash compensation from GEICO. ER-S at 59. That figure includes an $8,519 profit sharing payment, which amounts to 12.5% of his total compensation. ER at 63. Previously, he had earned $63,560 in 2006 and $67,098 in 2007. ER-S at 26.

Mr. Boyce’s financial difficulties began in September 2007. While Mr. Boyce’s divorce was being finalized, he purchased his current residence in Salem, Oregon. Id. He financed this purchase by taking out a $194,500 mortgage and a $16,010 401(k) loan. Id. at 60. The total monthly payment is approximately $1,200 per month, which amounts to 21% of his income. ER at 119.

At the time Mr. Boyce purchased the house, he received roughly $600 per month in rent and utilities from a roommate. Id. at 61. This roommate moved out in March or April 2008. Id. Mr. Boyce obtained another roommate who paid $300 per month in rent from October until December 2008. Id. at 62.

On October 31, 2007, Mr. Boyce’s marriage was dissolved by a stipulated judgment. ER-S at 59. Neither parent pays child support. Id. Mr. Boyce and his former spouse share custody of their minor child, who lives with each parent on alternating weeks. Id. Pursuant to the stipulated judgment, Mr. Boyce assumed responsibility for $34,000 in student loans and two credit cards, each with a balance of $8,000. Id. at 60.

Except for the loss of his original roommate, Mr. Boyce documented no exceptional or unforseen circumstances that would have precipitated his bankruptcy filing. ER at 87 (testifying that he initially contemplated bankruptcy after his first roommate moved out). He has been continuously employed by GEICO since August 2000. ER at 39. He experienced no drop in income in the year he filed for bankruptcy, as he made $56,801 by October 16, 2008. ER-S at 26. And he did not expect an increase in his medical expenses prior to filing. ER at 115-16.

Instead, Mr. Boyce experienced financial difficulties because of his spending habits. He incurred $17,000 in new, unsecured credit card debt between October 2007 and when he filed for chapter 7 bankruptcy on October 28, 2008. Compare ER-S at 60 (listing $16,000 in credit card debt) with id. at 20 (listing $35,229 in credit card debt). For example, he took out a new credit card, charged $3,365, and never made a single payment on the account. ER at 69.

In March 2008 — around the same time Mr. Boyce lost his original roommate and first considered the possibility of bankruptcy — the lease on his Ford 150 pickup truck expired. Id. at 53. In response, he spent $2,000 on a down payment and incurred new monthly payments in the amount of $186 to purchase another Ford F350 pickup truck. ER-S at 61.

Mr. Boyce continued to spend after filing for bankruptcy. He surrendered the Ford F350 pickup truck and, in January 2009, borrowed $14,750 from his 401(k) account to purchase a Dodge Ram pickup truck from a friend in Wyoming. ER at 123; ER-S at 61. He then sold the Dodge Ram pickup truck in September 2009 and purchased a Chevrolet pickup truck. ER at 60. In addition, Mr. Boyce borrowed another $6,000 from his 401(k) account to purchase a towable recreational camper. ER at 138.

B. Omissions in Mr. Boyce’s bankruptcy petition

Mr. Boyce did not disclose all of his income and liabilities when he filed for bankruptcy.

First, Mr. Boyce admits that he did not disclose the existence of his annual profit sharing payment in his bankruptcy schedules. ER at 43; see ER-S at 23 (requiring that employment income not paid monthly should be prorated). Mr. Boyce reported earning $4,872 per month from GEICO, which amounts to $58,464 per year. ER-S at 23. But in his statement of financial affairs, he stated he had already earned $54,607 by September 26, 2008. Id. at 26. And his pay statements showed year-to-date earnings in the amount of $67,961 as of December 24, 2008. ER-S at 59. Mr. Boyce’s 2008 profit sharing payment, when prorated across 12 months, would increase his estimated monthly income by $710.

Second, even if Mr. Boyce’s profit sharing payment is excluded, he still did not report all of his income from GEICO. Without profit sharing, Mr. Boyce earned $48,281 as of October 16, 2008. His average monthly income, prorated by the number of pay periods, averaged $4,981. See ER-S at 39. That amount is $109 more than the $4,872 in monthly income that Mr. Boyce reported.

Third, Mr. Boyce did not disclose the rental income he received from both roommates in his statement of financial affairs. Id. at 62; see ER-S at 27 (requiring disclosure of all non-employment income received within the prior two years).

Finally, Mr. Boyce failed to schedule approximately $34,000 in student loan debt on his bankruptcy schedules. ER at 51-52. Mr. Boyce has never filed amended schedules to show his student loans. Id. at 118.

III. Statement of the proceedings below

The United States Trustee commenced a contested matter against Mr. Boyce on January 20, 2009.[1] ER at 1; see FED. R. BANKR. P. 9014 (stating the rules applicable to contested matters). That contested matter was brought under 11 U.S.C. § 707(b). It asked the bankruptcy court to dismiss Mr. Boyce's case.

The United States Trustee argued that Mr. Boyce's case should be dismissed for bad faith under section 707(b)(3)(A) because Mr. Boyce (1) misrepresented his financial situation by failing to report his profit sharing payments, rental income,

[1] The United States Trustee is an official of the United States Department of Justice appointed by the Attorney General to supervise the administration of bankruptcy cases in this district. 28 U.S.C. § 581(a)(18). "The United States trustee may raise and may appear and be heard on any issue in any case or proceeding under this title but may not file a plan pursuant to section 1121(c) of this title." 11 U.S.C. § 307. Courts have repeatedly held that the United States Trustee has standing under section 307 to appear and be heard on any issue in any bankruptcy case, despite the lack of pecuniary interest in the outcome. See Morgenstern v. Revco D.S., Inc. (In re Revco D.S., Inc.), 898 F.2d 498, 500 (6th Cir. 1990); see also United Artists Theater Co. v. Walton (In re United Artists Theater Co.), 315 F.3d 217, 225 (3d Cir. 2003); Stanley v. McCormick (In re Donovan Corp.), 215 F.3d 929, 930 (9th Cir. 2000) ("The United States trustee may . . . intervene and appear at any level of the proceedings from the bankruptcy court on . . . as either a party or an amicus."); Scott v. U.S. Trustee, 133 F.3d 917 (4th Cir. 1997).

and student loans; (2) incurred substantial debts on the eve of bankruptcy; and (3) made unnecessary luxury purchases after filing for chapter 7 bankruptcy relief. ER-S at 51-54.

In the alternative, the United States Trustee argued that Mr. Boyce's case should be dismissed based on the totality of the circumstances under section 707(b)(3)(B) because Mr. Boyce has the financial capability, without hardship, to repay his creditors an average of $778 per month. Id. at 55-56 (averaging the amount of spare income Mr. Boyce may have in a year when he can claim his child as a dependent and in a year when he can not).

Mr. Boyce opposed dismissal of his case. ER at 3. Mr. Boyce argued that his filing was not in bad faith because (1) he did not need to include his profit sharing payments in his schedules because those payments were speculative; (2) no creditors had objected to his bankruptcy filing; and (3) "the United States government has encouraged him" to live beyond his means. Id. at 4. Mr. Boyce argued that he was not subject to dismissal based on his ability to repay his debts because his means test demonstrated he did not have the ability to repay. Id. at 5.

After the parties completed discovery, the bankruptcy court held an evidentiary hearing on April 6, 2010. Id. at 14. The court heard testimony from Ms. Irene Citron, a regional human resources director for GEICO, regarding GEICO’s bonus policies, id. at 15; Mr. Kevin Files, a financial analyst with the United States Trustee, regarding Mr. Boyce’s ability to pay his debts, id. at 96; and Mr. Boyce, regarding his past, present, and future financial circumstances. Id. at 39, 114. At the conclusion of the hearing, the court decided the case should be dismissed on two alternative grounds — under section 707(b)(3)(A) for bad faith and under section 707(b)(3)(B) based on the totality of the financial circumstances. Id. at 166.

On the issue of bad faith, the court found that “the debtor has significantly understated his income.” Id. at 163. The court rejected Mr. Boyce’s contention that it was unlikely he would receive a bonus, stating, “I think that the far stronger basis of prediction was the history leading up to the time the debtor filed and not the rumor mill that every institution is subject to which takes a more pessimistic view of things.” Id. at 164. The court believed Mr. Boyce had “made choices that did not put the interest of creditors at the forefront, and that this is what a bad-faith filing actually is.” Id.

On the issue of Mr. Boyce’s financial circumstances, the bankruptcy court found that “the debtor is capable of making some payment . . . to his creditors, and that under the totality of these circumstances . . . it would be an abuse . . . to allow the case to go forward.” Id. The court did not “believe that it’s appropriate to effectively subordinate every other creditor to the 401(k) loan." Id. at 165. Furthermore, the court noted, "in this context the second car may be an expense that could be foregone because of the existence of the free car." Id. at 166.

The bankruptcy court concluded that "the fact that the debtor has a demonstrated ability to repay something and the fact that his schedules have materially misstated his income are together, and separately, grounds to allow the U.S. Trustee's motion to dismiss." Id. The court allowed Mr. Boyce to avoid dismissal by converting his case to one under chapter 13. Id.

On April 8, 2010, the bankruptcy court entered a separate order granting the United States Trustee's motion to dismiss. ER-S at 67. On April 22, 2010, Mr. Boyce timely filed a notice of appeal. Id. at 64.

SUMMARY OF THE ARGUMENT

In this case, the United States Trustee sought dismissal of Mr. Boyce’s chapter 7 bankruptcy case on two alternative theories: (1) under section 707(b)(3)(A) for bad faith because he misrepresented his income in his bankruptcy schedules and demonstrated bad faith in other respects; and (2) under section 707(b)(3)(B) because the totality of his financial circumstances demonstrated he has the ability to repay his creditors an average of $778 per month. The bankruptcy court, after considering the testimony and other evidence presented by the parties, agreed with the United States Trustee on both grounds. Accordingly, the court ordered Mr. Boyce’s case be dismissed or converted to chapter 13.

That order may be affirmed on either ground. First, the bankruptcy court did not abuse its discretion when it found that Mr. Boyce had filed his chapter 7 case in bad faith under section 707(b)(3)(A). The record shows Mr. Boyce’s omissions regarding his income and debt, numerous consumer purchases in the months before filing for bankruptcy, and continued spending after obtaining protection from his creditors under chapter 7 of the Bankruptcy Code. Mr. Boyce’s conduct demonstrates that he has sought to take advantage of the Bankruptcy Code, rather than use the bankruptcy process to work out a fair deal with his creditors.

Second, the bankruptcy court did not abuse its discretion when it found that

Mr. Boyce has the ability to repay his debts under section 707(b)(3)(B). The evidence in the record supports the court’s finding that Mr. Boyce was more likely than not to receive some form of profit sharing payment, and that Mr. Boyce had incurred an unnecessary vehicle expense by purchasing a second car when he had personal use of a corporate vehicle at a substantially reduced cost. These facts indicate that Mr. Boyce, on average, could pay his creditors up to $778 per month.

Finally, Mr. Boyce’s arguments on appeal are unpersuasive. He primarily argues that the bankruptcy court improperly deviated from the results of section 707(b)(2)’s means test when the court considered the motion to dismiss under section 707(b)(3). The text of the statute and the case law, however, demonstrate that the means test and the section 707(b)(3) inquiries are independent of each other.

Because the bankruptcy court’s factual determinations were based upon ample evidence in the record, its findings were not clearly erroneous and this Court should affirm the order entered below.

ARGUMENT

I. The bankruptcy court did not abuse its discretion when it dismissed Mr. Boyce's case under 11 U.S.C. § 707(b)(3)(A) for bad faith

Under section 707(b)(3)(A), a bankruptcy court "shall consider . . . whether the debtor filed the petition in bad faith." § 707(b)(3)(A). Although there is no Ninth Circuit law on what constitutes bad faith under section 707(b)(3)(A), as it is a new statute, bankruptcy courts agree that a case may be dismissed for bad faith if the circumstances indicate that the case is inconsistent with the purpose and spirit of the Bankruptcy Code, even if the purpose may otherwise be lawful. See In re Hageney, 422 B.R. 254, 260 (Bankr. E.D. Wash. 2009).

The bad faith analysis is a fact-specific inquiry that focuses on the debtor's intent and conduct in connection with the case, and not the debtor's financial circumstances. Hageney, 422 B.R. at 260. "[N]either malice nor fraudulent intent by the debtor is required for a finding of bad faith." In re Mitchell, 357 B.R. 142, 155 (Bankr. C.D. Cal. 2006). Rather, a case may be dismissed for bad faith when the debtor seeks an "impermissible head start at the expense of her creditors." Id. at 157.

Evidence of bad faith conduct may be found in both pre and post-petition facts and circumstances, and may include "factors such as the circumstances that precipitated the debtor's filing for bankruptcy, the debtor's intentions in filing for bankruptcy, and whether the debtor has honestly disclosed his financial conditions." U.S. Trustee v. Hilmes (In re Hilmes), No. 4:09-732, 2010 WL 3292807, at *6 (N.D. Tex. Aug. 19, 2010) (citing Mitchell, 357 B.R. at 155 (noting other considerations)).

The bankruptcy court did not abuse its discretion when it found that Mr. Boyce acted in bad faith because there is substantial evidence in the record to support finding that (1) he misrepresented his income and his liabilities in his bankruptcy documents; (2) he purchased consumer goods that he did not need and could not afford, both before and after he filed for bankruptcy; and (3) the circumstances precipitating his bankruptcy filing do not demonstrate a genuine need for relief.

A. There is substantial evidence in the record to support finding that Mr. Boyce misrepresented his income and liabilities in his bankruptcy petition

A debtor is required to report all income and liabilities when filing a petition for bankruptcy relief. On Schedule I, a debtor must state current income received from employment activities, prorated if not paid monthly, and note any changes in income "reasonably anticipated to occur within the year." FED. R. BANKR. P. OFFICIAL FORM 6 (Schedule I); see ER-S at 23 (Mr. Boyce's Schedule I). A debtor is also required to disclose in a statement of financial affairs all other sources of income received during the previous two years. FED. R. BANKR. P. OFFICIAL FORM 7; see ER-S at 26 (Mr. Boyce's statement of financial affairs). And on Schedule F, a debtor must list all unsecured debts. FED. R. BANKR. P. OFFICIAL FORM 6 (Schedule F); see ER-S at 19 (Mr. Boyce's Schedule F).

A debtor's misrepresentation of income and expenses is evidence of bad faith. Mitchell, 357 B.R. at 155; cf. Thomson v. Glenn (In re Glenn), 335 B.R. 703, 707 (Bankr. W.D. Mo. 2005) (denying a debtor a discharge under 11 U.S.C. § 727(a)(4) for making a false oath because the debtor failed to prorate and include in his Schedule I anticipated bonus income that he reasonably anticipated to receive post-petition). Here, there are five examples in the record of Mr. Boyce omitting income and expenses when he filed his bankruptcy petition. The first four examples were uncontested.

First, even if profit sharing is excluded, Mr. Boyce still failed to report $109 in monthly income from GEICO. ER-S at 39.

Second, Mr. Boyce failed to report approximately $11,700 in rental income derived from taking on roommates within the 24 month lookback period required by his statement of financial affairs. ER at 44, 61-62; ER-S at 61.

Third, Mr. Boyce failed to schedule $34,000 in student loan debt. ER at 118; ER-S at 60.

Fourth, Mr. Boyce never amended his schedules in order to correct these omissions prior to trial, despite being aware of their use against him — at the latest — in a joint stipulation of facts and in the United States Trustee's pre-trial memorandum. See ER at 118; ER-S at 27, 41, 60.

The fifth omission is Mr. Boyce's failure to disclose the existence of his annual profit sharing payments. ER-S at 23, 26. Mr. Boyce contends that he was not required to disclose the profit sharing payments because he did not believe he would receive future payments when he filed for bankruptcy. Appellant's Br. at 5. But the record supports the bankruptcy court's finding that Mr. Boyce's belief was not reasonable: the document that Mr. Boyce relies upon to support this belief does not state that annual profit sharing payments would not be made and Mr. Boyce had received profit sharing payments in previous years when the criteria had not been met.

First, as Mr. Boyce admits, the document that he produced to support omitting his profit sharing payments did not actually state that profit sharing payments would not be made. ER at 92-93. The document, issued by GEICO CEO Tony Nicely, stated that the current policy growth rate was projected at 7.8%, rather than the 8% target normally required for a profit sharing payment. Id. at 75-76. But it also asserted that the other factor in the equation, underwriting ratio, was "doing sensationally" and that the company was beating its profitability estimates through the quarter. Id. at 90.

The document continued to explain that a new monthly payment plan was "really helping sales and retentions" and growth in internet sales was improving efficiency. Id. at 91-92. And it concluded that a cash incentive program "has helped us get toward that eight percent growth that we all need . . . I'm going to bet that we make it because we're that close." Id. at 92.

Second, a GEICO human resources officer testified at trial that the company had paid profit sharing payments in reduced amounts when the 8% policy growth target had not been met. Id. at 23. Subsequently, Mr. Boyce admitted that in 2002, when growth was 4% — only half of the 8% growth target — he received a profit sharing payment, but in a reduced amount. Id. at 93.

After considering the GEICO document and the testimony of Mr. Boyce and the GEICO human resources officer, the bankruptcy court rejected Mr. Boyce's proffered testimony that "it seemed likely that [the profit sharing payment] was going to go way." Id. at 163. Instead, the bankruptcy court found, "the far stronger basis of prediction was the history leading up to the time the debtor filed and not the rumor mill that every institution is subject to which takes a more pessimistic view of things." Id. at 164. Accordingly, given the record before it, the bankruptcy court did not abuse its discretion when it found that Mr. Boyce should have reported his profit sharing payment in his bankruptcy schedules. ER at 163-64.

B. Mr. Boyce made substantial, unnecessary consumer purchases before and during his bankruptcy case

The purchase of consumer goods that a debtor does not need and could not reasonably afford is evidence of bad faith. Hageney, 422 B.R. at 262. This factor is particularly significant when the purchases occur at the expense of unsecured creditors, such as when a debtor incurs new secured debt prior to bankruptcy. Id.

For example, in Hageney, the bankruptcy court found that the debtors had acted in bad faith by purchasing a new motorcycle prior to filing for bankruptcy. Id. at 261. At the time, the debtors both had functional vehicles and were already experiencing difficulty meeting their monthly payment obligations. Id. at 261-62. The "purchase of this unnecessary luxury item merely worsened the debtors' insolvency and occurred at the expense of the debtors' unsecured creditors. Such a purchase must result in a determination of bad faith." Id. at 262.

Mr. Boyce has financial problems because of his spending habits. He incurred $17,000 in new, unsecured consumer credit card debt — doubling the total amount of credit card debt he was obligated to repay — in the year before filing for bankruptcy. Compare ER-S at 60 (listing approximately $16,000 in credit card debt) with id. at 20 (listing $35,229 in credit card debt).

Mr. Boyce also incurred unnecessary vehicle expenses. Mr. Boyce may take personal use of his brand new work vehicle, and GEICO would continue to pay all of the insurance and maintenance expenses. ER at 45; ER-S at 61. Yet, despite allegedly facing financial hardship, Mr. Boyce spent $2,000 on a down payment and incurred new monthly payments in the amount of $186, as well as insurance and maintenance expenses, to purchase a Ford F350 pickup truck. ER-S at 61.

After filing for bankruptcy, Mr. Boyce continued to purchase consumer goods he could not afford. In January 2009, two months after filing for bankruptcy, Mr. Boyce surrendered the Ford F350 pickup truck and borrowed $14,750 from his 401(k) account to purchase a Dodge Ram pickup truck from a friend in Wyoming. ER at 123; ER-S at 61. Mr. Boyce sold the Dodge Ram pickup truck in September 2009, alleging financial hardship, but then purchased a Chevrolet pickup truck. ER at 60. In addition, Mr. Boyce borrowed another $6,000 from his 401(k) account to purchase a towable recreational camper. ER at 138.

In total, Mr. Boyce has withdrawn approximately $38,000 from his 401(k) account to purchase consumer goods during the year before filing for bankruptcy and after obtaining the protection of chapter 7, but asserts that economic hardship prevented him from making a single payment on his $34,000 in student loans over the last five years. ER at 40-41.

Mr. Boyce's purchases were unnecessary and unaffordable under the state of facts Mr. Boyce swore to in his bankruptcy petition. Furthermore, Mr. Boyce financed these purchases using 401(k) loans that, in a chapter 13 bankruptcy, allow him to replenish his savings account rather than repay his unsecured creditors. See infra Part II.B. Like in Hageney, Mr. Boyce's purchases "merely worsened [his] insolvency and occurred at the expense of [his] unsecured creditors." Hageney, 422 at 262. Such purchases "must result in a determination of bad faith." Id.

C. The circumstances surrounding Mr. Boyce's filing indicate bad faith

Mr. Boyce attributes his need for bankruptcy relief to having his roommate move out in March or April 2008. ER at 86; ER-S at 61. But this explanation alone does not indicate a need for bankruptcy relief.

Mr. Boyce purchased his home in September 2007, the month before the stipulated judgment was entered in his divorce. ER-S at 60. Mr. Boyce applied for the loan solely using his own income, and his mortgage payment was approximately 21% of his gross annual income at the time he filed for bankruptcy. See ER at 89, 118; ER-S at 59. If the loss of a roommate alone caused Mr. Boyce to file for bankruptcy, then he purchased a home he knew he could not afford, which is indicative of bad faith. Mitchell, 357 B.R. at 155.

Furthermore, even under the most favorable projections, Mr. Boyce's lost income from having his roommate move out is nowhere close the amount of credit card debt that Mr. Boyce incurred in the year prior to filing for bankruptcy. Mr. Boyce received no rent for four months and $300 for three months. ER at 61; ER-

S at 60. At the time Mr. Boyce filed for bankruptcy, this left a $3,300 deficit against what he could have expected to receive if his original roommate had not left. Yet Mr. Boyce incurred $17,000 in new credit card debt around that period of time. Compare ER-S at 60 (listing approximately $16,000 in credit card debt) with id. at 20 (listing $35,229 in credit card debt).

There is no evidence of circumstances such as unexpected bills, unemployment, medical emergency, or some form of calamity justifying Mr. Boyce's increased spending and need for bankruptcy relief in the record. Mr. Boyce testified that he first contemplated filing for bankruptcy around March or April 2008 when his roommate moved out. ER at 86; ER-S at 61. But Mr. Boyce then waited around three months, until August 6, 2008, in order to obtain the credit counseling required to file for bankruptcy. ER at 87. Afterwards, Mr. Boyce waited almost three more months before filing for bankruptcy on October 28, 2008. ER-S at 1. Mr. Boyce's actions show that he was in no urgent need to obtain bankruptcy relief.

Mr. Boyce misrepresented his financial circumstances upon commencing his bankruptcy case and has taken advantage of his case in order to maintain his preferred lifestyle at the expense of his creditors. These are classic examples of bad faith behavior. See Mitchell, 357 B.R. at 142. Because the bankruptcy court carefully considered this evidence before rendering its decision, the court did not abuse its discretion when it found that Mr. Boyce acted in bad faith.

II. Alternatively, the bankruptcy court did not abuse its discretion when it dismissed Mr. Boyce's case under 11 U.S.C. § 707(b)(3)(B) based on his ability to repay his creditors

Under section 707(b)(3)(B), the bankruptcy court "shall consider . . . whether the totality of the circumstances . . . of the debtor's financial situation demonstrates abuse." § 707(b)(3)(B). There is no controlling law within the Ninth Circuit on what should be considered under section 707(b)(3)(B)'s totality of the financial circumstances test.

Courts within the Ninth Circuit have recognized that an ability to repay standing alone was sufficient to justify dismissal under the much higher, pre-BAPCPA, substantial abuse standard. See Price v. U.S. Trustee (In re Price), 353 F.3d 1135, 1140 (9th Cir. 2004) ("[A] debtor's ability to pay his debts will, standing alone, justify a section 707(b) dismissal.") (quoting Zolg v. Kelly (In re Kelly), 841 F.2d 908, 914 (9th Cir. 1988)). Because Congress has lowered the standard for dismissal to mere abuse, these courts agree that a debtor's ability to repay creditors remains sufficient to demonstrate abuse under the totality of the financial circumstances. See Reed v. Anderson (In re Reed), 422 B.R. 214, 220

(C.D. Cal. 2009) ("Section 707(b)(3)(B) . . . necessarily requires an examination of a debtors' ability to pay."); In re Stubblefield, 430 B.R. 639, 645 (Bankr. D. Or. 2010) (citing Price for the same).

A. Mr. Boyce has the actual ability to make substantial repayments to his creditors

The ability to pay analysis is based on the debtor's financial circumstances at the time of discharge, and is not limited to the facts present when the petition was filed. U.S. Trustee v. Cortez (In re Cortez), 457 F.3d 448, 455-56 (5th Cir. 2006). Thus, whether the debtor has an ability to repay his or her debts under section 707(b)(3)(B) is a question of fact that requires a bankruptcy court to scrutinize a debtor's actual income and expenses. Ross-Tousey v. Neary (In re Ross-Tousey), 549 F.3d 1148, 1162 (7th Cir. 2008). And in doing so, "courts may take into account both current and foreseeable circumstances." Morse v. Rudler (In re Rudler), 576 F.3d 37, 51 (1st Cir. 2009) (quoting In re Hartwick, 359 B.R. 16 (Bankr. D.N.H. 2007)); see In re Lamug, 403 B.R. 47, 54 (Bankr. N.D. Cal. 2009) (stating that a debtor's "actual current and future income and expenses, intentions, and resulting ability or inability to pay are crucial" to assessing the totality of the financial circumstances).

Bankruptcy courts within the Ninth Circuit, drawing upon the financial considerations under the pre-BAPCPA totality of the circumstances test, have considered a wide variety of factors when analyzing a debtor's actual income and expenses. See, e.g., Stubblefield, 430 B.R. at 645. These considerations may include:

The debtor's ability to reduce excessive or unreasonable expenses. Hageney, 422 B.R. at 263 (considering the debtors' ability to reduce their mortgage payments and surrender their luxury vehicles); Reed, 422 B.R. at 214 (considering the debtor's ability to reduce a $333 per month child care expense when one of the debtors was unemployed, living at home, and could not provide any reason why the expense was reasonable).

Future events or other mitigating factors that will affect the debtor's source of future income or actual expenses. Stubblefield, 430 B.R. at 646 (considering the debtor's expectation regarding future sales commissions and the stable earnings of the debtor's domestic partner).

And the debtor's ability to obtain relief through alternative measures. In re Maya, 374 B.R. 750, 754-55 (Bankr. S.D. Cal. 2007) (considering the debtor's eligibility for chapter 13 or chapter 11 bankruptcy); In re Baeza, 398 B.R. 692, 697-98 (Bankr. E.D. Cal. 2008) (considering the debtors' actual ability to repay creditors $479 per month, although they would not be required to pay anything through a chapter 13 repayment plan).

At trial, the United States Trustee produced documentary evidence and testimony demonstrating that Mr. Boyce would continue to receive profit sharing payments into the foreseeable future and had incurred unnecessary vehicle expenses. See supra Part I.A. The United States Trustee explained that, extrapolating from Mr. Boyce's current expenses and his 2009 profit sharing payment, Mr. Boyce could have an average of $778 per month to repay his creditors. ER-S at 55 (averaging the amount of spare income Mr. Boyce may have in a year when he can claim his child as a dependent and in a year when he can not).

The bankruptcy court agreed, finding that the "history leading up to the time the debtor filed" was "the far stronger basis" for predicting whether Mr. Boyce would receive his bonus. ER at 164. The court also found that Mr. Boyce's second vehicle was "an expense that could be foregone because of the existence of the free car." ER at 166.

This means Mr. Boyce could repay 100% of his unsecured debts after 47 months. See 11 U.S.C. § 1325(b)(4)(B) (allowing a chapter 13 repayment plan for a period under 5 years if it will repay the unsecured creditors in full).

B. The bankruptcy court appropriately considered the effects of Mr. Boyce’s 401(k) loan under the totality of the financial circumstances

Mr. Boyce states — without providing a citation to the record — that both the United States Trustee and the bankruptcy court acknowledge that he would not be required to pay anything to his unsecured creditors under a chapter 13 repayment plan because his 401(k) loan payments would reduce the amount of disposable income that he must commit to a chapter 13 repayment plan to almost zero. Appellant’s Br. at 4 (referring to 11 U.S.C. § 1322(f)). Therefore, he believes that he should be given chapter 7 bankruptcy relief. Appellant’s Br. at 14.

This is incorrect for two reasons. First, neither the United States Trustee nor the bankruptcy court stated that Mr. Boyce would not be required to pay anything in a chapter 13 bankruptcy. Second, the bankruptcy court considered the alternative form of chapter 13 relief within the totality of the circumstances and still found that dismissal, with the option of conversion to chapter 13, was appropriate because Mr. Boyce (1) was paying himself through his 401(k) loan payments while discharging the debts of his unsecured creditors, and (2) had the ability to repay his creditors under a chapter 13 repayment plan, even after taking his 401(k) loan payments into account.

A dismissal for abuse is not conditioned on whether a debtor would be required to pay his creditors through a chapter 13 plan. Under the totality of the financial circumstances test, "[t]he question before the court is not whether the Debtors would be required to pay anything to their unsecured creditors in a chapter 13, but rather, whether they have the ability to pay something substantial to their unsecured creditors." Baeza, 398 B.R. at 697. "Nothing in the text of section 707(b)(3)(B) requires the Court to anticipate what would happen if Debtors converted to chapter 13." Lamug, 403 B.R. at 57.

Mr. Boyce's 401(k) loan payments are "essentially a debt owed to himself — he has borrowed his own money." Egebjerg v. Anderson (In re Egebjerg), 574 F.3d 1045, 1049 (9th Cir. 2009). Should Mr. Boyce "fail to repay himself, the administrator has no personal recourse against him. Instead, the plan will deem the outstanding loan balance to be a distribution of funds, taxable as income, thereby reducing the amount available" to Mr. Boyce in the future. Egebjerg, 574 F.3d at 1049. For this reason, some courts have refused to consider the expense of 401(k) loan payments when determining abuse under the totality of the financial circumstances test. See Hilmes, 2010 WL 3292807, at *6 (holding that the debtor's 401(k) loan payments suggested abuse because the debtor "is essentially repaying herself while discharging her other debts"); In re Pandl, 407 B.R. 299, 302 (Bankr. S.D. Ohio 2009) (considering 401(k) loan repayments indicative of abuse because the debtor's decision to borrow from himself "should not insulate his actions to the prejudice of his creditors"); but see In re Latone, No. 08-3311, 2008 WL 5049460, at *2 (Bankr. D. Ariz. 2008) (finding that the debtor did not have an ability to repay because his monthly $1,483 401(k) loan payment could not be used to fund a chapter 13 repayment plan) (deciding prior to Egebjerg).

Here, in the year before filing for bankruptcy and afterwards, Mr. Boyce chose to withdraw roughly $22,000 from his 401(k) in order finance unnecessary recreational vehicles. ER at 137-18. Mr. Boyce also took out $16,010 from his 401(k) in order to purchase a house. ER-S at 60.

At trial, the court discussed with the parties the potential consequences of Mr. Boyce's 401(k) loans in a chapter 13 case. See ER at 143-62. Mr. Boyce argued that if he received no profit sharing, the dividend from a chapter 13 plan would only be $8 per month. Id. at 146. The United States Trustee disagreed, arguing that "[t]here needs to be some belt tightening . . . I think even with his 401(k) he could still - - there would still be money left over." Id. at 161.

The bankruptcy court agreed with the United States Trustee, stating it was "persuaded by the evidence presented that the debtor is capable of making some payment, whether under a chapter 13 plan or otherwise." Id. at 164. In addition, the court noted, “the second car may be an expense that could be foregone.” Id. at 166. And although the court was “not unmindful of the fact that there are tax consequences” associated with the failure to repay a 401(k) loan, it was not appropriate for Mr. Boyce “to effectively subordinate every other creditor to the 401(k) loan.” Id. at 165; see Pandl, 407 B.R. at 302 (stating that a debtor’s 401(k) loan payments “should not insulate his actions to the prejudice of his creditors”).

The bankruptcy court carefully considered the evidence and testimony offered by both parties at trial, and reviewed the exhibits and Mr. Boyce’s bankruptcy schedules before rendering its opinion. Id. at 163. Accordingly, the court did not abuse its discretion by finding “that the debtor is capable of making some payment, whether under a Chapter 13 plan or otherwise, to his creditors and that under the totality of these circumstances . . . it would be an abuse . . . to allow the case to go forward.” Id. at 164.

III. Mr. Boyce’s “current monthly income” under 11 U.S.C. § 707(b)(2) is irrelevant to dismissal under 11 U.S.C. § 707(b)(3)

Mr. Boyce states that the issue in this case concerns the standard for calculating current monthly income (“CMI”), a phrase defined by section 101(10A) of the Bankruptcy Code as “the average monthly income from all sources that the debtor receives . . . without regard to whether such income is taxable income, derived during the 6-month period" prior to the debtor's commencement of the bankruptcy case. 11 U.S.C. § 101(10A). He argues that, because his income under section 707(b)(2) is calculated using CMI, his income under section 707(b)(3) should be calculated the same way. Appellant's Br. at 8-9; 10-14. This position lacks a valid basis in the statute, and the courts that have considered the issue agree with the United States Trustee that CMI is irrelevant when deciding if a case should be dismissed under section 707(b)(3).

A. Bankruptcy courts are not required to consider only a debtor's "current monthly income" under section 707(b)(3)

Section 707(b)(2) contains the means test. The means test reduces a debtor's CMI by an amount of statutorily defined expenses in order to determine if a debtor's bankruptcy case is presumptively abusive. § 707(b)(2)(A)(I). If the means test indicates that the case is abusive, then the court may dismiss the case. § 707(b)(1).

If the means test does not indicate abuse, then "the court shall consider (A) whether the debtor filed the petition in bad faith; or (B) the totality of the circumstances . . . of the debtor's financial situation." § 707(b)(3). This means that the United States Trustee "can still request dismissal . . . under section 707(b)(3)." Ross-Tousey, 549 F.3d at1161-62; see Rudler, 576 F.3d at 51 ("[S]ection 707(b)(3) . . . remains a backup option when the Trustee is dissatisfied by the results of the means test."). In particular, section 707(b)(3)(B)'s totality of the financial circumstances test involves a broad inquiry into the financial affairs and the neediness of the debtor. This includes the debtor's actual income and expenses, which are separate from the "inflexible and divorced" income and expense figures that are utilized under the means test. Rudler, 576 F.3d at 51.

Had Congress wanted bankruptcy courts to rely upon "current monthly income" under section 707(b)(3), it could have required so. It did not, and for a good reason. The purpose of BAPCPA is to make "more funds available for the payment of unsecured creditors." See Schultz v. United States, 529 F.3d 343, 347 (6th Cir. 2008). Congress enacted the means test to provide an "easily applied formula for determining" when a case is abusive. In re Henebury, 361 B.R. 595, 603 (Bankr. S.D. Fla. 2007). In contrast, Congress enacted section 707(b)(3) in order to clarify that a debtor's case could be separately dismissed for either bad faith or lack of need. In re Srikantia, 417 B.R. 505, 508-09 (Bankr. N.D. Ohio 2009); see H.R. Rep. 109-31 (2005) at 12, reprinted in 2005 U.S.C.C.A.N. 88, 92 ("The standard for dismissal — substantial abuse — is inherently vague, which has lead to its disparate interpretation and application by the bankruptcy bench.").

Accordingly, sections 707(b)(2) and 707(b)(3) serve entirely different purposes. Section 707(b)(2) is a uniform "screening mechanism" that allows bankruptcy courts to dismiss a case for abuse when an objective set of criteria has been met. See H.R. Rep. 109-31 at 2, 12. In contrast, section 707(b)(3) is an individualized test that requires the courts to adjudicate the merits of granting the debtor chapter 7 relief. See Reed, 422 B.R. at 233.

The United States District Court for the Northern District of Texas recently confronted and rejected an argument similar to the one Mr. Boyce now raises. In Hilmes, the debtor argued that her income, for the purpose of assessing abuse, should be determined using her "disposable income" as calculated under the means test. 2010 WL 3292807, at *7.

The Hilmes court rejected this argument. "[A]s is clear by the section's language and structure, the means test of section 707(b)(2) and dismissal for abuse under section 707(b)(3) are separate analyses." Id. The district court described the debtor's argument as "simply nonsensical." Id. at *10. "A court's analysis under section 707(b)(3)(B) is not so limited . . . courts have recognized that the section allows for consideration of the debtor's actual income and expenses, notwithstanding what is considered under the means test." Id.; see In re Booker, 399 B.R. 662, 666 (Bankr. W.D. Mo. 2009) (holding that a court's section 707(b)(3)(B) analysis is not "bound by the itemization of expenses which the debtors are entitled to deduct from that current monthly income pursuant to section 707(b)(2)"); accord Ross-Tousey, 549 F.3d at1161-62; Rudler, 576 F.3d at 51.

Accordingly, there is no support in the text of the statute for applying CMI to section 707(b)(3). Mr. Boyce's arguments — that CMI should apply under section 707(b)(3), Appellant's Br. at 7-9; and that the means test and the ability to pay standard duplicate each other, id. at 11-14 — are therefore incorrect.

B. The Supreme Court's recent decision in Hamilton v. Lanning does not apply to this case

Mr. Boyce relies upon the Supreme Court's recent decision in Hamilton v. Lanning for his argument that the bankruptcy court applied the wrong standard when the court took his future profit sharing payments into consideration. Appellant's Br. at 8-9 (citing Hamilton v. Lanning, 130 S. Ct. 2464 (2010)). This reliance is unjustified.

The decision in Lanning concerns the definition of the phrase "projected disposable income" under 11 U.S.C. § 1325(b), which requires a chapter 13 debtor to commit all projected disposable income to unsecured creditors in a repayment plan. Although the Bankruptcy Code does not define projected disposable income, it does define the phrase "disposable income," which in turn looks to a debtor's CMI as defined by section 101(10A). Lanning, 130 S. Ct. at 2469. In Lanning, the chapter 13 debtor had received a one time severance payout during the 6-month CMI period, but the debtor's income from her new job was insufficient to make the payments required under section 1325(b) based on her CMI. Id. at 2470.

The Supreme Court held that a bankruptcy court could deviate from CMI when projecting disposable income for the purpose of confirming a chapter 13 repayment plan under section 1325(b), but only in rare circumstances to account for changes "that are known or virtually certain at the time of confirmation." Id. at 2475-76. This prevented "senseless results that we do not think Congress intended," such as when the debtor's actual income is substantially higher or lower than CMI during the repayment period. Id.

Lanning is inapplicable because, in contrast to sections 1325(b) or 707(b)(2), section 707(b)(3)(B) never refers to projected disposable income, disposable income, CMI, section 101(10A), or any other language that could indicate congressional intent to restrict the scope of the court's analysis. See § 707(b)(3)(B). Instead, section 707(b)(3)(B) refers to the totality of the financial circumstances, which includes the debtor's actual income. See supra Part II. Mr. Boyce's attempt to utilize Lanning is inapposite.

If anything, Lanning undermines Mr. Boyce's argument that he would not be required to fund a viable chapter 13 plan and is therefore in greater need of chapter 7 relief under the totality of the financial circumstances. If Mr. Boyce chose to convert his case to one chapter 13, the bankruptcy court could adjust Mr. Boyce's payment obligation under a chapter 13 repayment plan to reflect the post-petition changes in his income. Lanning, 130 S. Ct. at 2475-76. This would allow the court to establish a payment obligation accounting for the profit sharing payments that Mr. Boyce received in 2009 and 2010, which occurred while the chapter 7 proceedings were pending. ER at 63.

CONCLUSION

For these reasons, the United States Trustee respectfully asks this Court to affirm the order entered below.

PRELIMINARY STATEMENT

The Appellant Larry Bresnick ("Bresnick") appeals an order of the United States Bankruptcy Court for the Eastern District of New York (the "Bankruptcy Court"), entered on June 26, 2007, granting the United States Trustee's motion to appoint a Chapter 11 trustee in Bresnick's Chapter 11 case. Larry Bresnick, Case No. 07-41580 (CEC) (Bankr. E.D.N.Y. June 26, 2007). Bresnick Designation, No. 7. The Order should be affirmed by this Court. This brief is respectfully submitted by the United States Trustee in support of the Order.[1]

STATEMENT OF THE ISSUE

Whether the bankruptcy court abused its discretion by finding that the United States Trustee established cause for the appointment of a Chapter 11 trustee, based upon evidence properly admitted without objection from Bresnick, which established that: (i) Bresnick's bankruptcy schedules and statement of financial affairs contained material omissions, (ii) Bresnick was guilty of gross mismanagement, (iii) Bresnick failed to properly report his post-petition income, (iv) Bresnick failed to provide proof that he closed his pre-petition bank accounts, and (v) Bresnick could not account for large sums of monies he received prior to filing his Chapter 11 petition?

SUMMARY OF ARGUMENT

The bankruptcy court did not abuse its discretion when it found that cause existed for the appointment of a Chapter 11 trustee, based on Bresnick's failure to disclose assets and Bresnick's gross mismanagement of his operations. Bresnick's material omissions from his schedules and his gross mismanagement, each constitute separate grounds for the appointment of a Chapter 11 trustee.

Bresnick omitted significant assets from his bankruptcy schedules. Disclosures in Bresnick's divorce case, made ten days prior to his bankruptcy filing, revealed that Bresnick failed to disclose, on his bankruptcy schedules, bank accounts, stock accounts, business interests, luxury automobiles, and other items with an estimated aggregate value in excess of $500,000.00.

Bresnick grossly mismanaged his operations and this gross mismanagement continued post-petition. He received significant sums of money within the two year period prior to filing for bankruptcy, yet claimed to have less than $30,000.00 in his bank accounts, in April 2007. He could not account for the dissipation of certain funds he received from sales of real estate and his bank records evidenced that he routinely ignored corporate formalities by co-mingling his personal assets with his corporate assets.

Subsequent to the filing of his bankruptcy case, Bresnick failed to accurately report his post-petition income in his first monthly operating report, failed to operate solely out of a debtor-in-possession account, and failed to provide proof to the United States Trustee that he closed his pre-petition bank accounts.

The bankruptcy court properly directed the appointment of a Chapter 11 trustee. At the evidentiary hearing, Bresnick did not offer any testimony in opposition to the United States Trustee's motion. The bankruptcy court, after reviewing the evidence, found that the United States Trustee had established "cause" for the appointment of a Chapter 11 trustee. The Order should be affirmed.

APPLICABLE STANDARD OF REVIEW

An order directing the appointment of a Chapter 11 trustee is a final order from which an appeal will lie. Silverman v. Tracar (In re American Preferred Prescription, Inc.), 255 F.3d 87, 92 (2d Cir. 2001) (dicta) (citing Cajun Elec. Power Coop., Inc. v. Central La. Elec. Co. (In re Cajun Elec. Power Coop., Inc.), 69 F.3d 746, 747-48 (5th Cir. 1995)).

In connection with appeals from a bankruptcy court, a district court reviews a bankruptcy court's conclusions of law de novo. Findings of fact made by a bankruptcy court may not be set aside unless clearly erroneous. See Fed. R. Bankr. P. 8013; Casse v. Key Bank Nat'l Ass'n (In re Robert E. Casse), 198 F.3d 327, 332 (2d Cir.1999) (bankruptcy court's factual findings will be accepted unless clearly erroneous); Gulf States Exploration Co. v. Manville Prods. Corp. (In re Manville Prods. Corp.), 896 F.2d 1384, 1388 (2d Cir. 1990). This deferential standard applies not only to credibility assessments but also to interpretations deriving from "physical or documentary evidence or inferences from other facts." Anderson v. City of Bessamer City, 470 U.S. 564, 574 (1985). A reviewing court may not "reverse the findings of the trier of fact simply because it is convinced that it would have decided the case differently." Anderson, 470 U.S. at 573 (1985). Given the wide discretion afforded the bankruptcy court, a decision should not be set aside "by a reviewing court unless it has a definite and firm conviction that the court below committed a clear error of judgment in the conclusion it reached upon a weighing of the relevant factors." G.M. v. New Britain Bd. of Educ., 173 F.3d 77, 80 (2d Cir.1999). In a frequently cited passage, the Seventh Circuit explained, "[t]o be clearly erroneous, a decision must strike us as more than just maybe or probably wrong; it must . . . strike us as wrong with the force of a five-week-old, unrefrigerated dead fish." Parts & Elec. Motors, Inc. v. Sterling Elec., Inc., 866 F.2d 228, 233 (7th Cir. 1988)

A bankruptcy court's ultimate determination to appoint a Chapter 11 trustee is reviewed for abuse of discretion. In re Sharon Steel Corp., 871 F.2d 1217, 1225 (3d Cir.1989) (appointment of trustee reviewed under abuse of discretion standard); In re Owen, 96 B.R. 427, 428 (N.D.N.Y. 1989) (abuse of discretion standard governs review of appointment of trustee).

STATEMENT OF FACTS

A. Statutory Framework

1. Authority to Remain as a Debtor-in-Possession

When a debtor files for bankruptcy under Chapter 11, see 11 U.S.C. § 1101, et seq., all of its assets are transferred to a new legal entity: the estate. See 11 U.S.C. 541(a). In re Bell, 225 F.3d 203, 215 (2d Cir. 2000). At that time, the debtor becomes the "debtor-in-possession" and is responsible for administering the estate. See 11 U.S.C. § 1107(a).

Affirmative disclosure by a debtor-in-possession is required because it protects the integrity of the bankruptcy process. Rosenshein v. Kleban, 918 F.Supp. 98, 104 (S.D.N.Y. 1996). A debtor-in-possession has an affirmative duty under section 521(a)(1) of the Bankruptcy Code to file schedules disclosing all assets and liabilities. In re Costello, 255 B.R. 110, 113 (Bankr.E.D.N.Y. 2000); 11 U.S.C. §1106(a)(2). A debtor-in-possession must also file monthly operating reports with the bankruptcy court. See, 11 U.S.C. §704(8) (made applicable by 11 U.S.C. §1106(a)(1); E.D.N.Y. Loc. R. 2015-1; 28 U.S.C. §586(a)(3)(D) (authorizing the United States Trustee to take action to ensure that all reports required under Title 11 are timely filed). In order to comply with its supervisory role (discussed below) under 28 U.S.C. §586(a), the United States Trustee for each region has established Operating Guidelines and Reporting Requirements for Chapter 11 debtors and trustees. These guidelines require a debtor to close its pre-petition bank accounts and open new debtor-in-possession accounts.

The debtor, as a "debtor-in-possession," serves as a fiduciary to the creditors of the estate. Wolf v. Weinstein, 372 U.S. 633, 649-650 (1963). In that fiduciary role, the debtor must "refrain from acting in a manner which could damage the estate, or hinder a successful reorganization." In re Northwest Airlines Corp., 483 F.3d 160, 181 (2d Cir. 2007) (quoting In re Ionosphere Clubs, Inc., 113 B.R. 164, 169 (Bankr. S.D.N.Y.1990)). Full disclosure by a debtor-in-possession is of prime importance in a reorganization case. In re Momentum Mfg. Corp., 25 F.3d 1132, 1136 (2d Cir. 1994). "Open, honest and straightforward disclosure to the Court and creditors is intrinsic to the entire reorganization process and begins on day one, with the filing of the Chapter 11 petition." In re V. Savino Oil & Heating Co., 99 B.R. 518, 526 (Bankr. E.D.N.Y.1989). In addition, the debtor has an obligation to "protect and conserve property in its possession for the benefit of creditors." Ionosphere Clubs, 113 B.R. at 169.

Although the Bankruptcy Code provides the debtor with this opportunity to operate the bankruptcy estate, section 1104(a) of the Bankruptcy Code states that the debtor should be replaced by a Chapter 11 trustee in certain circumstances. "Section 1104 represents a protection that the Court should not lightly disregard or encumber with overly protective attitudes towards debtors-in-possession". Savino Oil, 99 B.R. at 525. Under section 1104, "[a]t any time after the commencement of the case but before confirmation of a plan, on request of a party in interest or the United States Trustee, and after notice and a hearing, the [bankruptcy] court shall order the appointment of a trustee":

> (1) for cause, including fraud, dishonesty, incompetence, or gross mismanagement of the affairs of the debtor by current management, either before or after the commencement of the case, or similar cause, but not including the number of holders of securities of the debtor or the amount of assets or liabilities of the debtor;
> (2) if such appointment is in the interests of creditors, any equity security holders, and other interests of the estate, without regard to the number of holders of securities of the debtor or the amount of assets or liabilities of the debtor.

11 U.S.C. § 1104(a).

If the bankruptcy court concludes that either of the above standards has been satisfied, the court is required to direct the United States Trustee to appoint, subject to the court's approval, a"disinterested person" to serve as the Chapter 11 trustee. 11 U.S.C. § 1104(d). In re Kashani, 190 B.R. 875, 883, n.8 (9th Cir. BAP 1995)

2. The United States Trustee's Role in Trustee Motions

Congress assigned the United States Trustee broad oversight responsibilities over bankruptcy cases. 28 U.S.C. § 586 (defining the United States Trustee's responsibilities). The United States Trustee for Region 2 is a senior official of the Department of Justice appointed by the Attorney General. 28 U.S.C. § 581(a)(2). She acts as the "watchdog" of the bankruptcy system and may be "compared . . . to a prosecutor" for cases that arise under Title 11 of the Bankruptcy Code. H.R. Rep. No. 95-595, at 109 (1977), as reprinted in 1978 U.S.C.C.A.N. 5963, 6049 (using "watchdog" analogy); 6071 (using "prosecutor" analogy). Within this district, the United States Trustee "supervise[s] the administration of cases under chapter 7, 11, 12, 13, or 15 of title 11." 28 U.S.C. § 581(a)(2) and 586(a)(3)(A). Therefore, the United States Trustee, as a party in interest, had standing to seek the appointment of a Chapter 11 trustee under section 1104 of the Bankruptcy Code. 11 U.S.C. § 1104 (providing that the United States Trustee may request the appointment of a Chapter 11 trustee).

B. Bresnick's Bankruptcy Filing

On March 30, 2007, Bresnick filed a voluntary petition for bankruptcy under Chapter 11. (Bankr. Case No. 07-41580), ECF Docket Entry No. 1. Bresnick's schedules and statement of financial affairs were filed on April 19, 2007. UST Designation, No. 1, ECF Docket Entry Nos. 14-17. Bresnick signed his schedules and statement of financial affairs, under penalty of perjury, attesting to the truth and accuracy of the information contained therein. UST Designation No. 1, ECF Docket Entry Nos. 14-17.

C. Bresnick's Divorce Proceedings

At the time he filed for bankruptcy, Bresnick's wife was suing him for divorce in Palm Beach County, Florida. UST Designation No. 1, Statement of Financial Affairs, Question 4, ECF Docket Entry No. 16. Bresnick filed several pleadings in the divorce action shortly before he filed his Chapter 11 petition. UST Designation Nos. 2-4.

Ten days prior to filing his Chapter 11 petition, Bresnick filed a second amended financial affidavit. UST Designation No. 2. Nine days prior to filing his Chapter 11 petition, Bresnick completed his responses to various interrogatories. UST Designation No. 3. Bresnick attested to the truth and accuracy of the information contained in both the interrogatories and the divorce financial affidavit. UST Designation Nos. 2 & 3. Approximately one month after he filed his bankruptcy case, Bresnick served a notice of detailed compliance with his wife's Request to Produce in the divorce proceeding. Bresnick's divorce financial affidavit, interrogatories and response to notice to produce provide a detailed picture of Bresnick's financial condition at the time he commenced his Chapter 11 case.

During the course of the divorce proceeding, on October 20, 2005, Circuit Judge William J. Berger entered an order enjoining Bresnick, or any business entities owned by him, from transferring assets located in two bank accounts. UST Designation No. 6, ¶1; Bresnick Designation No. 4, at 3, ¶10. On March 19, 2007, Bresnick served an affidavit in response to his wife's motion to disgorge funds, setting forth that he transferred monies out of his accounts, prior to learning about the injunction. UST Designation No. 6, ¶10. Bresnick transferred these funds to his attorneys' IOLA account. UST Designation No. 6, ¶10, Exhibit F.

D. Bresnick's Failure to Disclose Assets and Other Information

Although Bresnick's second financial affidavit in the divorce case was filed only ten days prior to the commencement of his bankruptcy case, the schedules and statements filed in Bresnick's bankruptcy case failed to disclose certain assets, claims, and other relevant information that was contained in the divorce financial affidavit.

1. Undisclosed Bank Accounts

A debtor is required to list any interest in checking, savings, or other financial accounts on his schedules. UST Designation No. 1, Schedule "B", Question 2. When he filed his bankruptcy schedules, Bresnick attested, under oath, that he had six bank accounts. The amounts in each of the bank accounts were left blank. There is a notation on the side of the page that indicates "Larry to furnish amounts." UST Designation No. 1, Schedule "B", Question 2 (ECF Docket Entry No. 15).

Although Bresnick swore in his bankruptcy schedules that he had only six bank accounts, Bresnick's divorce financial affidavit, attested to under oath, set forth that he had an interest in eighteen bank accounts, with an aggregate value of $241,423.00. UST Designation No. 2, Schedule "A". Bresnick claimed that four accounts were titled in the name of his wife, one account was a joint account, and thirteen accounts were titled in his name. UST Designation No. 2, Schedule "A".

In response to the United States Trustee's motion to appoint a trustee, Bresnick's matrimonial accountant asserted that the undisclosed bank accounts were not titled in Bresnick's name or the name of his corporations. Bresnick Designation No. 4, at 1, ¶A (ECF Docket Entry No. 49). He further alleged that the divorce financial affidavit reflected assets and liabilities to which Bresnick may not have title, but in which Bresnick alleged an interest because the asset was construed to be marital in nature. Bresnick Designation No. 4, at 1 (ECF Docket Entry No. 49)

A debtor is required to list any interest in alimony, maintenance, support or other property to which a debtor may be entitled. UST Designation No. 1, Schedule "B", Question 17. Additionally, a debtor must list any interest in other personal property that is not already set forth on Schedule "B". UST Designation No. 1, Schedule "B", Question 17. Bresnick did not disclose his interest in the alleged marital accounts in response to either question "17" or "34" on his bankruptcy petition. UST Designation No. 1, Schedule "B", Questions 17 & 34.

2. Undisclosed Stock Interests

A debtor is required to disclose all interests he has in stocks and all interests he has in incorporated and unincorporated businesses. UST Designation No. 1, Schedule "B", Question 13.

When he filed his bankruptcy schedules, Bresnick attested, under oath, that his only stock interests were his interests in the twelve corporations set forth on the schedule attached to his Schedule "B". UST Designation No. 1, Schedule "B", Question 13.

a. Additional Stock Interests

Although Bresnick swore in his bankruptcy schedules that he only had an interest in twelve corporations, his divorce financial affidavit, attested to under oath, revealed that he claimed an interest in sixteen corporations. UST Designation No. 2, Schedule B.

Bresnick's interrogatories reflect that Bresnick claimed a fifty percent interest in an Equity Membership at Boca Raton Resort & Hotel, with a fair market value of $45,000.00. This interest was not disclosed on Schedule "B" of Bresnick's bankruptcy petition. UST Designation No. 3, Question 5(b), UST Designation No. 1, Schedule "B", Question 13.

In response to the United States Trustee's motion to appoint a trustee, Bresnick's accountant asserted that the undisclosed stock interests were titled in his wife's name. Bresnick Designation No. 4., at 1, ¶B,C, at 2, ¶8(c-1&2) (ECF Docket Entry No. 49). Despite the fact that his interrogatories were signed under oath nine days prior to filing his bankruptcy petition, Bresnick claimed to be uncertain about any equity membership at the Boca Raton Resort and Hotel. Bresnick Designation No. 4., at 2, ¶8(c-4) (ECF Docket Entry No. 49).

Although Bresnick asserted an interest in these assets in the divorce proceeding, Bresnick did not disclose the existence of these alleged marital assets in response to either question "17" or "34" on Schedule "B" of his bankruptcy schedules. UST Designation No. 1, Schedule "B".

b. Dormant Corporations

Bresnick's divorce financial affidavit, attested to under oath, contained a schedule of nine (9) dormant corporations in which Bresnick still maintained an interest. UST Designation No. 2, Schedule C. Bresnick failed to list his interest in the dormant corporations on his bankruptcy schedules. UST Designation No. 1, Schedule "B", Question 13. Bresnick's ownership interest in these corporations was not contested. Bresnick Designation No. 4, at 2, ¶8(c)-3) (ECF Docket Entry No. 49).

c. Ameritrade Account

In the divorce proceeding, Bresnick claimed an interest in his wife's Ameritrade account, with a fair market value of $514,923.00, and his wife's Charles Schwab Account, with a fair market value of $83,917.00. UST Designation No. 2, Section IIIA. Neither of these accounts was listed in response to Question "2" (bank accounts), "13" (stock interests) or "17" (marital interests) on Schedule B of Bresnick's bankruptcy schedules. UST Designation No. 1, Schedule B.

3. Undisclosed Contingent and Unliquidated Claims

A debtor is required to disclose any contingent or unliquidated claims of every nature, including tax refunds, counterclaims of the debtor, and rights to setoff. UST Designation No. 1, Schedule B, Question 21. When he filed his schedules under oath, Bresnick claimed he had no contingent or unliquidated claims. UST Designation No. 1, Schedule B, Question 21.

Bresnick's disclosures in his divorce proceedings revealed that he was owed money by "Husband's Enterprise "A" - $480,000 Face Value, 6% Convertible Notes". UST Designation No. 2, Section IIIA.

4. Undisclosed Interests in Automobiles

A debtor is required to disclose all interests in automobiles. UST Designation No. 1, Schedule B, Question 17. When he filed his schedules under oath, Bresnick claimed an interest in only one automobile - a 2006 GMAC Truck with a fair market value of $23,750.00. UST Designation No. 1, Schedule B, Question 17.

Despite disclosing only one automobile in his bankruptcy schedules, Bresnick's divorce financial affidavit, attested to under oath, reflects that he also has an interest in two Mercury Mountaineers. UST Designation No. 2, Section IIIA. Although Bresnick leases one Mercury Mountaineer, this lease was not listed on Schedule G of his bankruptcy petition. UST Designation No. 11, UST Designation No. 1, Schedule G. Bresnick asserted that the second Mercury Mountaineer was totaled. UST Designation No. 3, Question 5(b); Bresnick Designation No. 4., at 3, ¶8(e) (ECF Docket Entry No. 49). However, Bresnick's loss of the second Mercury Mountaineer is not reflected in response to Question 8 of his Statement of Financial Affairs, which requires such disclosure. UST Designation No. 1, Statement of Financial Affairs, ¶8.

In the divorce proceedings, Bresnick also claimed to have a fifty (50%) percent interest in a 2001 Jaguar, with a fair market value of $19,350.00, and a fifty percent interest in a 2007 Lexus SUV, with an unknown fair market value. UST Designation No. 3, Question 5(b). Bresnick did not disclose the existence of these alleged marital assets in response to either line "17" or "34" on Schedule "B" of his bankruptcy petition.

5. Failure to Disclose Property Transfers

A debtor is required to disclose all property transfers within the two year period prior to the bankruptcy filing. UST Designation No. 1, Statement of Financial Affairs, ¶10. On his Statement of Financial Affairs, Bresnick attested, under oath, that he had made no transfers within the two year period prior to the commencement of his case. UST Designation No. 1, Statement of Financial Affairs, ¶10.

Bresnick's divorce financial affidavit again conflicts with his statement of financial affairs. In his divorce financial affidavit, Bresnick disclosed that he transferred his sixty-six percent interest in Red Star Technologies, Inc., to Louise Merritt (6%), Chelsea Ann Bresnick (20%), Tara Michelle Bresnick (20%), and Julie Allysa Bresnick (20%) in 2005. UST Designation No. 2, Schedule B; Bresnick Designation No. 4, at 3, ¶8(g) (ECF Docket Entry No. 49).

Bresnick's statement of financial affairs also fails to reflect Bresnick's transfer of $3,500,000.00 from his personal bank account to his attorneys' IOLA account in October 2005. UST Designation No. 6, Exhibit F.[2]

6. Failure to Disclose Safety Deposit Boxes

A debtor is required to disclose all safety deposit boxes in which a debtor had cash or other valuables within the one year period prior to the bankruptcy filing. UST Designation No. 1, Statement of Financial Affairs, ¶12. On his Statement of Financial Affairs, Bresnick attested, under oath, that he had no safety deposit boxes. UST Designation No. 1, Statement of Financial Affairs, ¶12.

[2] The United States Trustee's motion asserted that Bresnick failed to list either the existence or loss of a boat. Bresnick Designation No. 1. In opposition to the motion, Bresnick's accountant claimed the boat was totaled in Hurricane Bonnie. Bresnick Designation No. 4, at ¶8(f). As reflected in the record, the United States Trustee's attorney was unable to verity the date of Hurricane Bonnie, and properly advised the bankruptcy court at the hearing. Bresnick Designation No. 6, at 46, lns 19-25. A review of the transcript reveals that The bankruptcy court did not consider the omission of the boat when rendering its decision. Bresnick Designation No. 6, at 97.

Bresnick's response to interrogatories in the divorce proceeding reflected that he had three safety deposit boxes at Richmond County Savings Bank, Valley National Bank, and Nation's Bank. UST Designation No. 3, Question 5j.

Bresnick's accountant asserted that the safety deposit boxes held property owned by his brother. Bresnick Designation No. 4, at 3, ¶8(h) (ECF Docket No. 49). However, Bresnick answered "none" in response to the question on his statement of financial affairs requiring disclosure of property held for another person. UST Designation No. 1, Statement of Financial Affairs, ¶14.

E. Bresnick's Pre-Petition Transfers of Funds

The uncontroverted evidence established that Bresnick could not account for substantial sums of money he received prior to filing bankruptcy.

1. Bresnick's Accounting for the $3,500,000.00

In opposition to his wife's motion to disgorge funds, Bresnick provided an accounting of the dissipation of the $3,500,000.00 that was transferred to Gaines & Fishler, LLP. UST Designation No. 6, Exhibit F.

Fourteen days after entry of the injunction, the sum of $2,208,021.00 was used to satisfy two mortgages on properties owned by Bresnick's companies (Seven Oaks at Howell and Kommit Associates at New Durham, LLC). Neither mortgage had matured. UST Designation No. 6, Schedule "E", Bresnick Designation No. 4 at 4 ¶14 (ECF Docket Entry No. 49).

The accounting reflects that between January 19, 2006, and June 1, 2006, Bresnick transferred the sum of $201,395.00 to himself, and expended the sum of $801,847.00 for various corporate expenses. UST Designation No. 6, Exhibit "F" (delineated as Schedule E), Bresnick Designation No. 4, at 4, ¶¶17, 18 (ECF Docket Entry No. 49).[3]

2. Bresnick's Accounting for Dissipation of $3,000,000

In opposition to his wife's motion to disgorge funds, Bresnick also provided an accounting of the $3,000,000.00 removed from his Certificate of Deposit Account at Richmond County Savings Bank in violation of the injunction. UST Designation No. 6, Exhibit D. The accounting provides explanations for five of the withdrawals. Bresnick was unable to account for withdrawals in the aggregate amount of $411,983.00. UST Designation No. 6, Exhibit D, Bresnick Designation No. 4, at 5, ¶19 (ECF Docket Entry No. 49). The accounting provides that $138,000.00 was transferred to Bresnick on October 21, 2005. UST Designation No. 6, Exhibit D, Bresnick Designation No. 4, at 5, ¶19(ECF Docket Entry No. 49).

3. Bresnick's Accounting for Dissipation of $2,000,000

In opposition to his wife's motion to disgorge funds, Bresnick also provided an accounting of the $2,000,000.00 removed from his Certificate of Deposit Account at Independence Community Bank. UST Designation No. 6, Exhibit "G". The accounting provides that $100,000.00 was transferred to Bresnick on October 28, 2005. UST Designation No. 6, Exhibit G.

[3] The United States Trustee's motion asserted that Bresnick transferred sums to Red Star Technologies, LLC, despite the fact that he transferred his interest in that company in 2005. Bresnick Designation No. 1, at ¶16. It appears that Bresnick transferred his interest in Red Star Technologies, Inc., and not the LLC. UST Designation No. 2, Schedule B. This issue was clarified by the objecting creditors at the hearing, and a review of the transcript reveals that the bankruptcy court did not consider this transfer when rendering its decision. Bresnick Designation No. 6 at 84, lns. 2-14, 97, lns. 3-19.

4. Bresnick's Additional Accountings

Bresnick filed amended schedules and an amended statement of financial affairs on June 24, 2007. UST Designation No. 12. Annexed to the statement of financial affairs, was an exhibit (delineated as "Exhibit Three") which provided an accounting of approximately $6.8 million that Bresnick received from the sale of real property in June 2005.[4] UST Designation No. 12. Bresnick did not account for $246,000.00 in disbursements made to him from the account. UST Designation No. 12; Bresnick Designation No. 4, Exhibit Three (ECF Docket Entry No. 51).

A second exhibit, designated as "Schedule II," reflects that between August 17, 2005 and June 1, 2006, transfers in the aggregate amount of $917,086.00 were made directly to Bresnick. Bresnick Designation No. 4, Schedule II (ECF Docket Entry No. 51); UST Designation No. 12. Despite receiving in excess of $900,000.00 within the one and one-half year period prior to filing his bankruptcy case, Bresnick's amended schedules reflected that as of April 22, 2007, he had only between $25,000 and $30,000 in his bank accounts. UST Designation No. 12, Schedule B. The schedule, which provides an accounting of funds, reflects that Bresnick did not account for $709,928.70. UST Designation No. 12.

F. Bresnick's Co-Mingling of Assets

Bresnick admitted co-mingling his personal and business assets and ignoring corporate formalities. Bresnick Designation No. 4, at 1, ¶F (ECF Docket Entry No. 49). All funds, whether corporate or personal, were co-mingled in Bresnick's individual bank account, and [4] This exhibit was also included as an attachment to the affidavit filed by Bresnick's accountant in opposition to the motion to appoint a trustee. Bresnick Designation No. 4, Exhibit Three (ECF Docket Entry No. 51).

Bresnick admitted using his personal accounts to pay business obligations. UST Designation No. 6, ¶6, and Exhibits "D" and "G" thereto.

G. Bresnick's Failure to Comply with Debtor-in-Possession Duties

Bresnick filed an operating report on May 23, 2007, which reflected income received and disbursements made for the period March 30, 2007 through May 22, 2007. UST Designation No. 7. Bresnick received a paycheck on April 13, 2007, in the net amount of $2,377.67. UST Designation No. 8. Although he was required to disclose all income he received during the reporting period, Bresnick's operating report did not reflect the monies he received on April 13th. UST Designation No. 7. Additionally, in violation of the United States Trustee's operating guidelines, Bresnick made deposits into a non debtor-in-possession account in April 2007. UST Designation No. 9.

Bresnick also failed to provide the United States Trustee with proof that he closed his pre-petition bank accounts. UST Designation No. 10. This fact was not contested. Bresnick Designation No. 6, at pgs. 61-63. When Bresnick filed amended schedules, the balances set forth in his bank accounts were dated as of April 22, 2007, three weeks after Bresnick filed his case. UST Designation No. 12, Schedule B.

H. The United States Trustee's Motion to Appoint a Trustee

Due to the vast omissions in Bresnick's schedules, his inability to account for funds, and his failure to comply with his duties as a debtor-in-possession, the United States Trustee filed a motion for the appointment of a Chapter 11 trustee. Bresnick Designation No. 1. On June 25, 2007, the Honorable Carla E. Craig, Chief United States Bankruptcy Judge for the Eastern District of New York, held a hearing on the United States Trustee's motion seeking the appointment of a Chapter 11 trustee, under section 1104(a)(1) or 1104(a)(2) of the Bankruptcy Code. Bresnick Designation No. 1 (ECF Docket No. 34).

The bankruptcy court concluded based on its review of all the documents, evidence, and argument presented, that cause existed for the appointment of a Chapter 11 trustee under section 1104(a) of the Bankruptcy Code. Bresnick Designation No. 6, at 97-98. The bankruptcy court specifically found:

> In short, I think the presentation from the United States Trustee's Office shows a failure to adequately disclose and account for the debtor's business activities that reflects I think by necessity incompetence or gross mismanagement or possibly dishonesty, but at least at the minimum incompetence and gross mismanagement.

Bresnick Designation No. 6, at 97, lns. 14-19.

The bankruptcy court, in a proper exercise of its discretion, granted the United States Trustee's motion directing the appointment of a Chapter 11 trustee.

Although Bresnick now disputes the admissibility of certain of the evidence relied on by the bankruptcy court, the documents relied upon by the United States Trustee were admitted at the hearing without objection. Bresnick's Brief, at 5, n.2, at 7; Bresnick Designation No. 6, at pg. 21. Although he questions the authenticity of the documents in the opening section of his brief, Bresnick concedes at the conclusion of his brief that the subject documents were admitted "without objection". Bresnick's Brief, at 5, n.2, and 38. In any event, contrary to Bresnick's characterization, the United States Trustee's attorney did not act as an "unsworn witness", but rather, at the bankruptcy court's request, guided the bankruptcy court through the information contained in the properly admitted documents. Bresnick's Brief, at 7; Bresnick Designation No. 6, at 23, ln. 12, pgs. 23-49. At the conclusion of the United States Trustee's case-in-chief, Bresnick's attorney made arguments in opposition to the motion. Bresnick Designation No. 6, at 50-67. At no time did Bresnick's attorney either request to put Bresnick on the stand, or proffer any rebuttal evidence to counter the evidence presented by the United States Trustee. Bresnick's Brief, at 7; Bresnick Designation No. 6, at 50-67. The bankruptcy court did not take testimony of Bresnick or any other party on Bresnick's behalf because no request for such testimony was made. Bresnick Designation No. 6, at 50-67. At the hearing, Bresnick failed to propound any admissible evidence, whether through documents, testimony, or proffer, in opposition to the United States Trustee's motion. Bresnick Designation No. 6, at 50-67.

Before rendering its decision, the bankruptcy court heard extensive argument from Bresnick's attorney, the attorney for the United States Trustee, the attorney for the Debtor's wife, and the attorney for a group of creditors that opposed the motion. The bankruptcy court also reviewed the various pleadings that had been filed in the case by the aforementioned parties.

On June 25, 2007, the bankruptcy court signed an order directing the appointment of a Chapter 11 trustee. Bresnick Designation No. 10 (ECF Docket Entry No. 54).

I. The Appeal

On June 27, 2007, Bresnick filed a Notice of Appeal from the Bankruptcy Court's June 25, 2007 Order. Bresnick Designation No. 8 (ECF Docket Entry No. 59).

ARGUMENT

The bankruptcy court granted the United States Trustee's motion and directed the appointment of a Chapter 11 trustee. In a proper exercise of its discretion, the bankruptcy court found that Bresnick's omissions from his bankruptcy schedules, his failure to account for funds, his co-mingling of assets, his failure to properly account for post-petition income, constituted cause for the appointment of a Chapter 11 trustee. Because the bankruptcy court did not abuse its discretion in finding "cause," the Order should be affirmed.

A. The Bankruptcy Court Did Not Abuse Its Discretion When it Found that Cause Existed for the Appointment of a Chapter 11 Trustee

The bankruptcy court did not abuse its discretion when it found that cause existed for the appointment of a Chapter 11 trustee. After reviewing the evidence, the bankruptcy court properly found that the United States Trustee established the requisite “cause” for the appointment of a Chapter 11 trustee under section 1104 of the Bankruptcy Code.

1. The Bankruptcy Court Followed the Correct Standard for the Appointment of a Chapter 11 Trustee

Taken as a whole, it appears Bresnick contends that the bankruptcy court erred by making findings against the weight of the evidence. Bresnick’s Brief at 28-29, 33-39. As articulated above, a bankruptcy court’s factual findings cannot be reversed or supplanted on appeal unless clearly erroneous. Federal Rule of Bankruptcy Procedure 8013. It is Bresnick’s burden to establish that the bankruptcy court abused its discretion, and it is improper for Bresnick to seek a de novo evidentiary hearing on appeal.

The bankruptcy court had wide discretion when considering the evidence. The bankruptcy court was free to give total, little, or no effect to any or all of the evidence presented. Contrary to Bresnick’s claims, the bankruptcy court did not accept mere representations of the United States Trustee. Bresnick’s Brief, at 29. Rather, the United States Trustee guided the bankruptcy court through the information contained in the myriad of documents that were properly admitted at the hearing. Bresnick Designation No. 6, at 23, ln. 12. The bankruptcy court was required to weigh that evidence, and to rule accordingly. As the trier of fact, the bankruptcy court was in the best position to determine the credibility of the evidence admitted. The record establishes that there was sufficient evidence to support a finding for the United States Trustee that cause existed for the appointment of a Chapter 11 trustee.

2. The United States Trustee Established Cause for the Appointment of a Trustee

Section 1104(a)(1) of the Bankruptcy Code compels the appointment of a trustee when the bankruptcy court finds fraud, dishonesty, incompetence, gross mismanagement, or other cause. 11 U.S.C. §1104. The appointment of a trustee under section 1104(a)(1) of the Bankruptcy Code is mandatory upon a finding of cause. Sharon Steel, 871 F.2d at 1226; Savino Oil, 99 B.R. at 525; In re The 1031 Tax Group, LLC., 374 B.R. 78, 86 (Bankr.S.D.N.Y. 2007); In re Bonded Mailings, 20 B.R. 781, 786 (Bankr.E.D.N.Y. 1982); In re McCordi Corp., 6 B.R. 172, 178 (Bankr.S.D.N.Y. 1980). "The decision to appoint a Chapter 11 trustee is a factual determination entrusted to the discretion of the bankruptcy judge", In re Adelphia Commc'ns Corp., 336 B.R. 610, 656 (Bankr.S.D.N.Y. 2006), and a judge has wide latitude in determining whether the conduct rises to the level of cause. 1031 Tax Group, 374 B.R. at 86.

The evidence presented by the United States Trustee established, and the bankruptcy court found, that: (i) Bresnick's schedules and statement of financial affairs contained material omissions, (ii) Bresnick was guilty of gross mismanagement, (iii) Bresnick failed to properly report his post-petition income, (iv) Bresnick failed to provide proof that he closed his pre-petition bank accounts, and (v) Bresnick could not account for large sums of monies he received prior to filing his Chapter 11 petition. Bresnick Designation No. 6, at 97-98. Taken separately, or as a whole, these findings warrant the appointment of a Chapter 11 trustee.

a. The Bankruptcy Court Did Not Abuse its Discretion When it Found that Bresnick's Material Omissions Constituted Cause for the Appointment of a Chapter 11 Trustee

Debtors are required to fully and completely disclose all relevant and material information at the outset of a case. Savino Oil, 98 B.R. at 526; see also, In re St. Vincents Catholic Medical Centers of New York, 2007 WL 2497287, at *16 (Bankr.S.D.N.Y. August 29, 2007) ("[c]omplete and timely disclosure of all relevant material information and documents lies at the heart of the bankruptcy process."). Recognizing this important principle, courts will direct the appointment of a Chapter 11 trustee under 11 U.S.C. §1104, when a debtor fails to disclose material and relevant information from his schedules. Tradex Corp. v. Morse, 339 B.R. 823, 832-33 (D.Mass. 2006); Savino Oil, 99 B.R. at 526; In re Deena Packaging Industries, Inc., 29 B.R. 705, 707-08 (Bankr.S.D.N.Y. 1983); In re Sanders, 2000 WL 329574, at *5 (Bankr.N.D.Ill. March 2, 2000).

The evidence presented at the hearing established that Bresnick failed to disclose material and relevant information in his bankruptcy schedules and statement of financial affairs.[5] This information was contained in documents filed by Bresnick in his divorce case, ten days before he filed his bankruptcy case. UST Designation Nos. 2-3. Although this information was readily available to him, Bresnick failed to include these assets on his schedules and statement of financial affairs.[6]

[5] Although Bresnick contended that his non-disclosure of his interest in dormant corporations is immaterial, the disclosure has been held to be material. Bresnick Designation No. 4, at 2, ¶8(c)-3. Disclosure of dormant interests may lead to the discovery of assets. In re Beaubouef, 966 F.2d 174, 178-79 (5th Cir. 1992)

[6] Although not raised at the hearing, Bresnick now asserts that his interest in marital assets did not need to be included on the schedules. Bresnick's Brief, at 19-21. This assertion is incorrect. Question "17" on Schedule B of a debtor's bankruptcy schedules, requires disclosure of all marital interests, to which the debtor "is or may be

The bankruptcy court did not abuse its discretion when it found that the material omissions constituted cause for the appointment of a Chapter 11 trustee.

b. The Bankruptcy Court Did Not Abuse its Discretion When it Found that Bresnick's Amendments to His Bankruptcy Schedules did not Cure the Falsity of his Original Schedules

Bresnick filed amended schedules and an amended statement of financial affairs one day before the hearing on the United States Trustee's motion. UST Designation No. 12. He asserts that these amendments to his schedules and statement of financial affairs cured any deficiencies and that any omissions were rectified at the time of the hearing. Bresnick's Brief, at 19-21, 29, 35. Bresnick claims that the bankruptcy court ignored Federal Rule of Bankruptcy Procedure 1009, which permits a debtor to amend bankruptcy schedules at any time prior to the closing of the case. Bresnick's Brief, at 29-31, 34-35. These arguments ignore well-settled law.

As a result of Bresnick's material omissions, the bankruptcy court questioned whether Bresnick was trustworthy enough to maintain control of his operations. The bankruptcy court noted, "[i]n the absence of complete disclosure, I have no confidence that I'm being told the truth about what's coming in, what's going out". Bresnick Designation No. 6, at pg. 65, lines 19-22. The bankruptcy court's concern with Bresnick's veracity, was not cured by the last minute amendments to Bresnick's bankruptcy schedules.

A subsequent amendment of bankruptcy schedules does not cure the initial false statement or omission. See, In re Mellor, 226 B.R. 451, 459 (D.Co. 1998); In re Acuri, 116 B.R. 873, 882 (Bankr.S.D.N.Y. 1990), abrogated by Grogan v. Garner, 498 U.S. 279, 286, 111 S.Ct. 654, 659, 112 L.Ed.2d 755 (1991) (as to burden of proof) (debtor's amendment to schedules in response to complaint seeking denial of discharge did not cure original false oath in schedules); In re Tovar, 2005 WL 2451684, at *2 (Bankr.S.D.Fl. April 19, 2005) (finding that a debtor's amendment of his schedules to disclose previously omitted assets did not cure the initial failure to disclose, for purposes of finding cause to dismiss case under section 1307 of the Bankruptcy Code). "The general rule is that an amendment 'does not expunge the falsity of an oath'". Acuri, 116 B.R. at 882, quoting, In re Cline, 48 B.R. 581, 585 (Bankr.E.D.Tenn. 1985).

Although Bankruptcy Rule 1009 provides Bresnick with the right to amend his schedules, the amendment did not cure the effect of Bresnick's initial failure to disclose. The bankruptcy court specifically found that the omissions in Bresnick's schedules " . . . were so pervasive and gross as to lead [the Court] to conclude that there [was] an inability on the part of [Bresnick] to function as a fiduciary in this case." Bresnick Designation No. 6, at 55, lns 18-21.

Bresnick's argument that his matrimonial accountant was to blame for the omissions in his schedules is without merit. Bresnick's Brief, at 35; Bresnick Designation No. 6, at 60, lns. 2-13. His alleged reliance on his matrimonial accountant to complete his schedules and statement of financial affairs was not reasonable. Bresnick had a duty to carefully review his schedules and statement of financial affairs as they were signed under penalty of perjury. In re Hatton, 204 B.R. 477, 484 (E.D.Va 1997); In re Eppers, 311 B.R. 826 (Bankr.D.N.M. 2004); In re Nazarian, 18 B.R. 143, 147 (Bankr.Md. 1982) (finding that reliance on counsel is not reasonable when it is self-evident that property should be scheduled). "A debtor cannot, merely by playing ostrich and burying his head deeply enough in the sand, disclaim all responsibility for statements which he has made under oath". In re Dubrowsky, 244 B.R. 560, 576 (E.D.N.Y. 2000), quoting, In re Tully, 818 F.2d 106, 111 (1st Cir. 1987).

The information omitted from the schedules and statement of financial affairs was contained in Bresnick's divorce financial affidavit which he signed ten days prior to filing bankruptcy, and should have been included in Bresnick's schedules. Any reliance on his matrimonial accountant was not reasonable, as it is self-evident that the omitted property and information should have been scheduled. The bankruptcy court recognized that Bresnick should have known both about his own business affairs, and about the information contained in the financial affidavit filed mere days before his bankruptcy case. Bresnick Designation No. 6, at 90, lns. 4-18. Although Bresnick's attorney asserted that he previously raised the omissions at a prior status conference, as the bankruptcy court acknowledged, the amendments were not filed until the day before the hearing, and only after the United States Trustee gave Bresnick a "road map". Bresnick Designation No. 6, at 59, lns. 9-16, pg. 90, lns. 16-18.

Bresnick claims that because the bankruptcy court did not find "bad faith" in the filing of the amendments, the amendments cannot be stricken. Bresnick's Brief, at 31. Bresnick's reliance on In re Corbi, 149 B.R. 325 (Bankr.E.D.N.Y. 1993), is misplaced, as that case involved a Chapter 7 trustee's motion to strike amendments to a debtor's schedules of exemptions. Id. Here, Bresnick's rights under Bankruptcy Rule 1009 are not disputed, and no party has moved to strike the amendments. However, the issue before the bankruptcy court was not whether Bresnick could amend his schedules, but rather whether his initial false disclosures called his veracity into question. The evidence presented at the hearing established that Bresnick's schedules and statement of financial affairs contained material omissions. Bresnick does not dispute the omissions, but rather seeks to place blame on his matrimonial accountant. This alleged reliance was not reasonable as the information missing from the bankruptcy schedules was readily available from the pleadings filed in his divorce case. Bresnick signed all of these documents under the penalty of perjury and is charged with the knowledge of the information they contained. Standing alone, Bresnick's material initial omissions constitute cause for the appointment of a Chapter 11 trustee, notwithstanding his eleventh-hour attempt to cure those omissions.

c. The Bankruptcy Court Did Not Abuse its Discretion When it Found that Bresnick's Actions Constituted Gross Mismanagement

A debtor's gross mismanagement of his business also establishes cause for the appointment of a trustee under section 1104(a)(1) of the Bankruptcy Code. Sharon Steel, 871 F.2d at 1226; In re McCorhill Pub, Inc., 73 B.R. 1013, 1017 (Bankr. S.D.N.Y. 1987). Courts can consider both a debtor's pre-petition and post-petition conduct in determining whether "cause" exists for the appointment of a trustee. In re Oklahoma Ref. Co., 838 F.2d 1133 (10th Cir. 1988) (pre-petition activity may be considered in an 1104(a) determination); 1031 Tax Group, 374 B.R. at 86 (citing, Midatlantic Nat'l Bank v. Anchorage Boat Sales, Inc. (In re Anchorage Boat Sales, Inc.), 4 B.R. 635, 644-45 (Bankr.E.D.N.Y.1980)). The record reflects, and the bankruptcy court did not err by finding, that Bresnick grossly mismanaged his operations.

Self-dealing, failing to maintain separate books and records for corporate entities, and a co-mingling of assets, rises to the level of gross mismanagement and warrants the appointment of a trustee under section 1104(a)(1). Anchorage Boat Sales, 4 B.R at 645; In re Paolino, 53 B.R. 399, 401 (Bankr. E.D.Pa. 1985); In re Philadelphia Athletic Club, Inc., 15 B.R. 60, 63-64 (Bankr.E.D.Pa 1981); In re Main Line Motors, Inc., 9 B.R. 782 (Bankr.E.D.Pa 1981).

Bresnick admitted co-mingling assets. Bresnick Designation No. 4, at 1, ¶6. He ignored corporate formalities by co-mingling his personal and corporate assets. He used his personal bank accounts to pay his corporate expenses, and it appears that all funds, whether corporate or personal, were co-mingled in his individual bank account. UST Designation No. 6, ¶6, and Exhibits "D" and "G" thereto. Bresnick admitted using his personal accounts to pay business obligations. UST Designation No. 6, ¶6. This rises to the level of gross mismanagement. Philadelphia Athletic, 15 B.R. at 64; Main Line Motors, Inc., 9 B.R. at 784.

Additionally, Bresnick could not account for the dissipation of significant sums of money he received prior to filing his case. He was unable to account for withdrawals in the aggregate amount of $411,983.00. UST Designation No. 6, Exhibit D, Bresnick Designation No. 4, at 5, ¶19 (ECF Docket Entry No. 49). He also could not account for $246,000.00 in disbursements made to him from his attorneys' IOLA account. Bresnick Designation No. 4, Exhibit Three (ECF Docket Entry No. 51). Bresnick received the sum of $917,086.00 between August 17, 2005 and June 1, 2006. Bresnick Designation No. 4, Schedule II (ECF Docket Entry No. 51). However, as of April 22, 2007, he only had between $25,000 and $30,000 in his bank accounts. UST Designation No. 12, Schedule B. Bresnick's inability to account for the dissipation of these funds constitutes gross mismanagement. In re Rivermeadows Assoc., Ltd., 185 B.R. 615 (Bankr.D.Wy. 1995) (debtor's pattern of intermingling funds, of expedient transfers, and absence of proper record keeping, evidenced lack of sound business management); McCorhill, 73 B.R. at 1017 (gross mismanagement will be found when a debtor fails to maintain complete and accurate financial records); In re Colby Construction Corp., 51 B.R. 113, 117 (Bankr.S.D.N.Y. 1985) (gross mismanagement found where debtor's records were in shambles and accounting system did not reflect debtor's true financial condition).

Bresnick could not provide the bankruptcy court with an explanation as to the dissipation of these funds. At the evidentiary hearing, the bankruptcy court questioned Bresnick's attorney regarding Bresnick's inability to account for funds that Bresnick transferred to his own attorney's IOLA accounts. Bresnick Designation No. 6, at 51, lns. 8-13. Bresnick's attorney's response was that Bresnick wanted to retain an accountant to help Bresnick "find these monies". Bresnick Designation No. 6, at 51, lns. 14-17. Bresnick also proposed that a creditors' committee could help locate the missing funds. Bresnick Designation No. 6, at 51-52, lns. 25, 1-5. Bresnick's failure to produce any records to account for these funds, and his attorney's admission that Bresnick needed to retain an accountant to find the monies supports the bankruptcy court's finding of gross mismanagement.

Although Bresnick failed to testify at the evidentiary hearing to explain his inability to account for funds, on appeal he attempts to explain the information contained in the accountings. Bresnick's Brief, at 10-13. He provides explanations that were not part of the record and should not be considered by the Court. Bresnick's Brief, at 12-13 (explaining transfers in the amount of $201,395.00). This Court cannot consider the legal effect of facts not raised below. Universal Church v. Geltzer, 463 F.3d 218, 299 (2d Cir. 2006). The documentary evidence regarding the monies received Bresnick and monies for which Bresnick could not account is clear and unambiguous. The documents establish that:

> (i) Bresnick transferred the sum of $3,500,00.00 from his accounts to his attorneys' IOLA account in October 2005. Between January 19, 2006, and June 1, 2006, Bresnick transferred the sum of $201,395.00 to himself. UST Designation No. 6, Exhibit F.

(ii) Bresnick removed $3,000,000.00 from his Certificate of Deposit Account at Richmond County Savings Bank in violation of the injunction. Bresnick's accounting provides that $138,000 was transferred to Bresnick on October 21, 2005. UST Designation No. 6, Exhibit D.

(iii) Bresnick was unable to account for withdrawals from the Richmond County Certificate of Deposit account the in the aggregate amount of $411,983.00. The notations provide "how disbursed is unknown at this time". UST Designation No. 6, Exhibit D.

(iv) Bresnick's accounting of the $3,000,000.00 removed from his Certificate of Deposit Account at Independence Community Bank provides that $100,000 was transferred to Bresnick on October 28, 2005. UST Designation No. 6, Exhibit G.

(v) Between August 17, 2005 and June 1, 2006, transfers in the aggregate amount of $917,086.00 were made directly to Bresnick. Bresnick Designation No. 4, Schedule II (ECF Docket Entry No. 51); UST Designation No. 12.

(vi) Bresnick's reconciliation of sale proceeds from property in Rockland County fails to account for $709,928.70. Bresnick Designation No. 4, Schedule II (ECF Docket Entry No. 51); UST Designation No. 12.

(vii) An accounting prepared for monies in Bresnick's attorneys' IOLA account reveals that Bresnick did not account for $246,000.00 in disbursements made to him from the account. UST Designation No. 12 (Exhibit Three annexed to end of schedules); Bresnick Designation No. 4, Exhibit Three (ECF Docket Entry No. 51).

(viii) Despite the funds received in the period before he filed bankruptcy, Bresnick's amended schedules reflected that as of April 22, 2007, he only had between $25,000 and $30,000 in his bank accounts. UST Designation No. 12, Schedule B.

Bresnick's failure to comply with corporate formalities, the admitted co-mingling of his corporate and personal assets, and his inability to account for withdrawals in the aggregate amount of $411,983.00 from his pre-petition certificate of deposit accounts and $709,928.70 from his attorney's IOLA account constitute gross mismanagement and warranted the appointment of a Chapter 11 trustee. Anchorage Boat Sales, 4 B.R at 645; Paolino, 53 B.R. at 401; Philadelphia Athletic Club, 15 B.R. at 63-64.

Bresnick argues that a Chapter 11 trustee was not warranted as the Debtors' professionals, Patricia Bresnick and the objecting creditors, could investigate Bresnick's actions. Bresnick's Brief, at 24, 39. Despite Bresnick's arguments to the contrary, the perceived ability of a third party to investigate Bresnick's pre-petition transfers would not alleviate the need for a Chapter 11 trustee. See, Sharon Steel, 871 F.2d at 1228 (affirming appointment of trustee and holding that appointment of creditors' committee would not have alleviated debtor's mismanagement); In re PRS Ins. Group, Inc., 274 B.R. 381, 388 (Bankr.D.Del. 2001) (court appointed trustee to pursue actions against insiders and found that transferring those rights to potential creditors' committee was not in best interests of creditors). Furthermore, as set forth above, once the bankruptcy court found "cause" under section 1104(a)(1) of the Bankruptcy Code, it was mandated to appoint a Chapter 11 trustee. Savino Oil, 99 B.R. at 525. Due to the mandatory nature of the statute, the bankruptcy court was not in a position to even consider whether a committee or Patricia Bresnick could investigate Bresnick's actions.

On the basis of a review of the evidence of record, it is clear that the bankruptcy court properly determined that Bresnick's failure to account for funds, his co-mingling of assets, his failure to properly account for post-petition income, constituted cause for the appointment of a Chapter 11 trustee, under section 1104(a)(1) of the Bankruptcy Code. This determination is supported by ample evidence of record and should be affirmed.

d. The Bankruptcy Court Did Not Abuse its Discretion When it Found that Bresnick was Responsible for His Own Gross Mismanagement

The bankruptcy court did not abuse its discretion when it found that Bresnick was responsible for his own gross mismanagement. On appeal, Bresnick attributes his pre-petition mismanagement solely to his wife, Patricia Bresnick. Bresnick's Brief, at 26-27, 35-36. He argues that a Chapter 11 trustee was not warranted, as Patricia was prior management, and Bresnick is now the current management. Bresnick's Brief, at 27, 35. This argument is belied by the evidence presented at the hearing.

First, Bresnick's co-mingling was admitted by Bresnick's matrimonial accountant. UST Designation No. 6, ¶6. In an effort to explain this admission, at the evidentiary hearing Bresnick's attorney advised that the co-mingling was "the nature of the real estate profession". Bresnick Designation No. 6, at 51, lns. 5-7. Despite the arguments raised by Bresnick in his appellate brief, Bresnick's affidavit submitted in opposition to the United States Trustee's motion fails to contain any assertion, under oath, that the co-mingling was due to Patricia Bresnick's actions. Bresnick Designation No. 5. Bresnick cannot raise this issue for the first time on appeal. Universal Church, 463 F.3d at 228.

Second, Bresnick's co-mingling of his personal and corporate assets is apparent from his own documents submitted in opposition to the disgorgement motion in the divorce action. UST Designation No. 6. Bresnick's accounting, which he prepared, evidenced that he transferred monies from his personal bank accounts to his attorneys' IOLA account and then directed the attorneys to pay both corporate and personal expenses. UST Designation No. 6, Exhibit F (Schedule E). Bresnick's accounting of his certificate of deposit account at Independence Community Bank, reflect that he transferred funds from this individual account to various corporate and personal accounts. UST Designation No. 6, ¶10 and Exhibit G. Finally, Bresnick admits in the affidavit filed in the divorce proceeding that " . . . hundreds of thousands of dollars regularly flowed through these accounts to pay [Bresnick's] ongoing business obligations". UST Designation No. 6, at ¶6.

Bresnick's reliance upon 1031 Tax Group in support of his argument that the bankruptcy court should not have directed the appointment of a Chapter 11 trustee as "prior management" had been replaced, is misplaced, as the specific facts of that case are inapposite to case at bar. Bresnick's Brief, at 25. In 1031 Tax Group, the Court held that the appointment of a Chapter 11 trustee was not warranted, as the debtor met its burden of establishing that the new management was " . . . unconflicted by any association with the tainted members of the governing body that made the selection or appointment". Id., at 88. The Court in 1031 Tax Group found that the debtor's new management was free from any taint associated with the prior management, as it had no prior relationship with the debtor's former management. Id., at 88-90. Thus, the facts of 1031 Tax Group, which presume a wholesale change in the identities of debtor's management, are plainly inapplicable to an individual chapter 11 case.

First, as set forth above, Bresnick did not preserve this argument for appeal, as he failed to attribute his pre-petition actions to Patricia Bresnick at the evidentiary hearing. However, even if this argument had been made to the bankruptcy court, Bresnick could not satisfy the standard enunciated in 1031 Tax Group. Bresnick claimed in his divorce proceeding, that he and Patricia Bresnick, worked jointly as real estate developers. UST Designation No. 6, at ¶3. As a result, even if the court had accepted Bresnick's unsubstantiated claim that all wrongdoing was solely attributable to Patricia Bresnick, Bresnick remained an active participant in the management of his own assets, and could not have demonstrated that he was "free from taint" in connection with his own affairs.

Bresnick's argument that Patricia Bresnick was "prior management" and thus responsible for Bresnick's failures, is further undermined by the evidence presented at the hearing that Bresnick's gross mismanagement continued post-petition. As the bankruptcy court recognized, Bresnick's omissions from his schedules were not a "one-time" mistake. Bresnick Designation No. 6, at 53, lns. 14-15. Bresnick failed to operate solely out of a debtor-in-possession account, failed to provide the United States Trustee with proof that he closed his pre-petition bank accounts, and filed inaccurate operating reports. UST Designation No. 7-10. These failures individually and collectively also establish cause for the appointment of a Chapter 11 trustee. See, In re Cohoes Indus. Terminal, Inc., 65 B.R. 918, 922-23 (Bankr.S.D.N.Y. 1986) (debtor's failure to comply with United States Trustee's operating guidelines constituted cause for appointment of Chapter 11 trustee), In re Ford, 36 B.R. 501, 504 (Bankr. Ky. 1983)(failure to file accurate financial reports constitutes grounds for the appointment of a Chapter 11 trustee).

Bresnick claims there was no evidence presented that he failed to close his pre-petition bank accounts. Bresnick's Brief, at 36. Contrary to Bresnick's arguments on appeal, Bresnick's admitted failure to provide proof of the closing of the pre-petition bank account was not the subject of a "mere colloquy" between the bankruptcy court and the attorney for the Office of the United States Trustee. Bresnick's Brief at 36. The letter sent to Bresnick's counsel advising of the failure to receive the proof of closure was admitted into evidence without objection. UST Designation No. 10. This letter confirmed that the proof had not been received. UST Designation No. 10. While there may have been an issue at the hearing regarding Bresnick's attorney's facsimile number, at numerous occasions throughout the hearing, Bresnick's attorney admitted that the proof had not been provided. Bresnick Designation No. 6, at 61, lns. 20-25; pg.

63, lns. 7-8, pg. 66, lns. 23-25. The bankruptcy court recognized that this routine obligation should have been fulfilled long before the hearing. Bresnick Designation No. 6, at 63, lns. 11-17. The bankruptcy court found that Bresnick's failure to provide his attorney with the proof in response to the motion evidenced Bresnick's disregard for his duties and responsibilities as a debtor-in-possession. Bresnick Designation No. 6, at 63, lns. 11-17, pg. 67, lns. 1-7.

Additionally, and most troubling to the bankruptcy court, was Bresnick's failure to disclose his bank account balances as of the date he filed his petition on March 30, 2007. Bresnick Designation No. 6, at 52, lns. 13-23. Bresnick's amended schedules, filed the day before the hearing on the motion, reflected bank account balances as of April 23, 2007. UST Designation No. 12, Exhibit B. The lack of information as to the sums of money in Bresnick's bank account on the day he filed his petition, coupled with the failure to provide proof that he closed his pre-petition accounts, prevented both the bankruptcy court and the United States Trustee from confirming that all of Bresnick's pre-petition funds were transferred into his debtor-in-possession accounts. The bankruptcy court was understandably concerned that there was a three week period " . . . post-petition where we don't know what was in [Bresnick's] bank account, what went in, what went out." Bresnick Designation No. 6, at 52, lns. 20-22.

The record reflects that the bankruptcy court did not abuse its discretion when it attributed Bresnick's gross mismanagement, to Bresnick.

B. The Bankruptcy Court Considered the Correct Statutory Standard

When rendering its decision, the bankruptcy court found that the United States Trustee established "ample cause" for the appointment of a Chapter 11 trustee. Bresnick Designation No. 6, at 97, lns. 3-5. Bresnick argues that the bankruptcy court erred because it was required to use a "clear and convincing evidence" standard of proof, rather than "ample cause". Bresnick's Brief, at 32-33. This argument is without merit.[7]

There is a split of authority as to the proper burden of proof under section 1104(a) of the Bankruptcy Code. Several bankruptcy courts within the Second Circuit have required the moving party to establish cause by "clear and convincing evidence", see, 1031 Tax Group, 374 B.R. at 85; In re Euro-American Lodging, Corp., 365 B.R. 421, 426 (Bankr.S.D.N.Y. 1997); Ionosphere Clubs 113 B.R. at 167, while others have imposed a "preponderance of the evidence" standard. In re Altman, 230 B.R. 6, 16-17 (Bankr.D.Conn. 1999), vacated in part on other grounds, 254 B.R. 509 (D.Conn. 2000). District and Circuit courts are also split on the issue. The Third Circuit has imposed a "clear and convincing" burden of proof upon the moving party, In re G-I Holdings, Inc., 385 F.3d 313 (3rd Cir. 2004), while a district court in the First Circuit has adopted a preponderance of the evidence standard. Tradex Corp, 339 B.R. at 832.[8]

The split of authority is irrelevant to this Court's determination of the appeal. A review of the complete record indicates that the United States Trustee established "cause" for the appointment of a Chapter 11 trustee, under either standard. Moreover, the bankruptcy court did not, as Bresnick suggests, reference "ample cause" as the applicable burden of proof. Rather, the [7] Bresnick failed to argue at the evidentiary hearing or in pleadings, that the bankruptcy court should require the United States Trustee to establish cause by "clear and convincing" evidence. This new issue should not be considered by the Court for the first time on appeal. Universal Church, 463 F.3d at 299.

[8] The United States Trustee submits that the proper burden of proof is preponderance of the evidence. In the absence of an express congressional direction to apply a higher standard of proof, the burden of proof in bankruptcy litigation should generally be the preponderance of the evidence. Grogan, 498 U.S. at 286. There is no express Congressional intent in the language of section 1104 of the Bankruptcy Code, which requires a higher standard of proof. Thus, the United States Trustee submits that the burden of establishing cause for the appointment of a Chapter 11 trustee, is by a preponderance of the evidence. Altman, 230 B.R at 16-17; Tradex Corp., 339 B.R. at 832.

bankruptcy court's reference to "ample cause" simply referred to the standard enumerated in the statutory text. See 11 U.S.C. §1104. By finding "ample cause", the bankruptcy court implicitly found that the United States Trustee had met her burden of proof.

Nor did the Bankruptcy Court err by not explicitly describing the burden of proof before finding that cause had been established. The cases cited by Bresnick support the United States Trustee's argument that the bankruptcy court was simply required to find "cause" and was not mandated to articulate the burden of proof required. In McCordi, the bankruptcy court found that the secured creditor had established "cause" for the appointment of a trustee, without referring to the moving party's burden of proof . McCordi, 6 B.R. at 178. Similarly, the Court in In re McCall, 34 B.R. 68 (Bankr.E.D.Pa 1983), appointed a Chapter 11 trustee, without reference to the burden of proof that the moving party was required to establish.

The bankruptcy court applied the correct standard in reaching its decision. The United States Trustee met her burden of establishing "cause" for the appointment of a Chapter 11 trustee, by either a preponderance of the evidence, or, by clear and convincing evidence. The bankruptcy court properly found that the United States Trustee established "cause" for the appointment of a Chapter 11 trustee, as required by the statutory text, and its decision should be affirmed.

CONCLUSION

For the reasons set forth above, the United States Trustee respectfully requests that the Court affirm the Order of the bankruptcy court and grant such other relief as the Court deems just and proper.

I. INTRODUCTION AND STATEMENT OF JURISDICTION

Appellant Lawrence Morrison, P.C. ("Mr. Morrison"), counsel to chapter 11 debtor, Larry BRESNICK ("Mr. Bresnick" or the "Debtor"), appeals an order of the United States Bankruptcy Court for the Eastern District of New York, Brooklyn Division, entered on June 23, 2009 (the "Order"). [ER, Ex. B, at 3].[1] The Order denied Mr. Morrison's First and Final Application for Allowance of Compensation and Reimbursement of Expenses as Counsel to the Debtor (the "Application"), to the extent that it sought an award of fees incurred after the appointment of a chapter 11 trustee in Mr. Bresnick's case. [ER, Ex. G, at 102]. The United States Trustee respectfully requests that this Court affirm the Order.[2]

The bankruptcy court had jurisdiction over the Application under 28 U.S.C. §§ 157(b)(2)(A) and 1334. The Order is a final order under 28 U.S.C. § 158(a)(1). See In re Yermakov, 718 F.2d 1465, 1469 (9th Cir. 1983) (orders denying fees under § 330 are final orders if they conclusively determine the entire compensation to be paid to a professional). See also In re Pegasus Agency, Inc., 101 F.3d 882, 885 (2d Cir. 1996) (a bankruptcy court order is final if it "completely resolve[s] all of the issues pertaining to a discrete claim, including issues as to the proper relief") (citations omitted). On July 2, 2009, Mr. Morrison filed a timely Notice of Appeal. [ER, Ex. A, at 1]. This Court, therefore, has jurisdiction to hear the appeal under 28 U.S.C. § 158(a)(1).

[1] "ER" refers to the Excerpts from the Record on Appeal filed with the Appellee's Brief. "Ex. [x]" refers to the exhibit letter of the document in the ER, and "at #" refers to the consecutively numbered pages in the ER.

[2] Under 11 U.S.C. § 307, the United States Trustee may appear and be heard on any issue in any case or proceeding under the Bankruptcy Code.

II. STATEMENT OF THE ISSUE ON APPEAL

In Lamie v. United States Trustee, 540 U.S. 526 (2004), the Supreme Court unanimously ruled that federal bankruptcy law precludes the use of bankruptcy estate funds to pay a chapter 11 debtor's attorney for work that the attorney performs after the appointment of a chapter 7 trustee unless the trustee re-employs the attorney under 11 U.S.C. § 327(a). In this case, relying on Lamie, the bankruptcy court denied the Application with respect to services that Mr. Morrison rendered to Mr. Bresnick after the appointment of a chapter 11 trustee in Mr. Bresnick's case. [ER, Ex. C, at 9-10]. Therefore, the issue on appeal is whether the bankruptcy court erred when it denied the Application in accordance with Lamie.

III. STANDARD OF APPELLATE REVIEW

Appellate courts review a bankruptcy court's decision "independently, accepting its factual findings unless clearly erroneous, but reviewing its conclusions of law de novo." Ball v. A.O. Smith Corp., 451 F.3d 66, 69 (2d Cir. 2006). See also In re Ionosphere Clubs, Inc., 922 F.2d 984, 988 (2d Cir. 1990) (the appellate court reviews the bankruptcy court's conclusions of law de novo and its findings of fact for clear error). This appeal involves a question of law, which this Court must review de novo.

IV. SUMMARY OF ARGUMENT

This Court should affirm the Order because the bankruptcy court properly applied settled law to undisputed facts. The debtor in possession in this case, Mr. Bresnick, obtained court approval under 11 U.S.C. § 327 to employ Mr. Morrison as the lawyer for his chapter 11 bankruptcy estate. Mr. Bresnick could do that because he was the debtor in possession. 11 U.S.C. § 1107 (debtors in possession have the powers of a trustee, which includes hiring counsel under section 327). But Mr. Bresnick was later replaced by a chapter 11 trustee, which meant that the trustee took control of the estate, including the selection and retention of its counsel. See 11 U.S.C. § 1101(1) (trustee becomes the debtor in possession upon appointment); 11 U.S.C. § 1106 (trustee duties). See also 11 U.S.C. § 323(a) (the trustee represents the bankruptcy estate).

In Lamie, 540 U.S. at 532, the Supreme Court ruled that the appointment of a bankruptcy trustee "terminate[s]" the debtor's "status as debtor-in-possession and so terminate[s] [the lawyer's role] under § 327 as an attorney for the debtor-in-possession." For that reason, the Supreme Court ruled that the work the lawyer did after the appointment of the trustee could not be compensated from the estate, given that the lawyer was no longer employed by the estate, because the new trustee had not obtained a new appointment of the attorney as his lawyer under § 327 of the Code. Lamie, 540 U.S. at 538-39 (holding "[i]f the attorney [formerly hired by the deposed debtor in possession] is to be paid from estate funds under § 330(a)(1) in a chapter 7 case [for work done after a trustee is appointed], he must be employed by the trustee and approved by the court").

Lamie controls this case. Indeed, the facts are virtually identical. Both the Lamie lawyer and Mr. Morrison were employed by the debtor in possession under § 327. Both debtors in possession were later replaced by trustees. Neither trustee re-employed the lawyer under § 327 after the trustee was appointed. Both lawyers nonetheless did work after their non re-employment. The Supreme Court ruled the non re-employed lawyer in Lamie could not be compensated from estate funds for the post-trustee work. Mr. Morrison cannot either.

Lamie's bright line rule serves an important purpose. Absent a bright line, people could be confused about which lawyer speaks for the estate. Lamie removes that doubt. Only lawyers appointed by the trustee after the trustee's appointment can work or speak for the estate. Given the multitude of parties in large chapter 11 cases, that clarity protects both the estate and those that deal with it.

V. STATEMENT OF THE FACTS

A. Statutory Framework

1. The Bankruptcy Estate

When an entity files a bankruptcy case, all of its assets are transferred by operation of law to a bankruptcy estate. See 11 U.S.C. § 541(a)(1) (the filing of a bankruptcy petition "creates an estate . . . comprised [with some exceptions] of all legal or equitable interests of the debtor in property as of the commencement of the case").[3] See also In re Bell, 225 F.3d 203, 215 (2d Cir. 2000) (filing a bankruptcy petition constitutes the commencement of a case and creates a bankruptcy estate under § 541).

2. Chapter 11 Debtors in Possession

After the commencement of a case, chapter 11 debtors retain control of the bankruptcy estate and any business operations as "debtors in possession." See 11 U.S.C. §§ 1101(1) and 1108. Duties imposed on debtors in possession include accounting for estate property, disclosing their assets, liabilities and financial affairs, timely filing tax returns, preparing and filing periodic financial reports, and proposing plans of reorganization. See 11 U.S.C. §§ 1107(a), 521, 1106(a)(5) and (6), and 704(a)(2), (7) and (8).

[3] The full text of 11 U.S.C. § 541 and other Bankruptcy Code provisions cited is attached as Exhibit 1.

3. Retention and Compensation of Professionals

The retention of professionals in chapter 11 cases is governed by 11 U.S.C. § 327, which provides, in part, that:

> (a) Except as otherwise provided in this section, the trustee, with the court's approval, may employ one or more attorneys, accountants, appraisers, auctioneers or other professional persons, that do not hold or represent an interest adverse to the estate, and that are disinterested persons, to represent or assist the trustee in carrying out the trustee's duties under this title.

11 U.S.C. § 327(a). Debtors in possession may, subject to court approval, retain professionals, including lawyers and accountants to represent them in their cases under 11 U.S.C. § 327. In re AroChem Corp., 176 F.3d 610, 620-621 (2d Cir. 1999).

Retained professionals must apply to the bankruptcy court for the award of reasonable compensation and the reimbursement of actual and necessary expenses under 11 U.S.C. § 330, which provides, in part, that:

> (1) After notice to parties in interest and the United States trustee, the court may award a trustee, examiner, . . . or a professional person employed under section 327 . . . --
>
> (A) reasonable compensation for actual, necessary services rendered by the . . . professional person or attorney . . .; and
> (B) reimbursement for actual, necessary expenses.

11 U.S.C. § 330(a)(1) (emphasis added). Only professionals retained under 11 U.S.C. § 327 are entitled to receive compensation from estate funds under 11 U.S.C. § 330. Lamie, 540 U.S. at 538-539.

4. Appointment of Chapter 11 and Chapter 7 Trustees

11 U.S.C. § 1104 governs the appointment of chapter 11 trustees. Under § 1104,

> (a) At any time after the commencement of the case but before confirmation of a plan, on request of a party in interest or the United States trustee, the court shall order the appointment of a trustee –

> (1) for cause, including fraud, dishonesty, incompetence, or gross mismanagement of the affairs of the debtor by current management, either before or after the commencement of the case, or similar cause . . . .
>
> (2) if such appointment is in the best interests of creditors, any equity security holders, and other interests of the estate . . . .; or
>
> (3) if grounds exist to convert or dismiss the case under § 1112, but the court determines that the appointment of a trustee . . . is in the best interests of creditors and the estate.

11 U.S.C. § 1104(a).

After the bankruptcy court has entered an order directing the appointment of a chapter 11 trustee, the United States Trustee appoints the trustee after consultation with parties in interest. See 11 U.S.C. § 1104(d). United States Trustees are officials of the Department of Justice appointed by the Attorney General to supervise the administration of bankruptcy cases and trustees. See 28 U.S.C. §§ 581-589 (specifying the powers and duties of United States Trustees).[4]

Under 11 U.S.C. § 701,

> (a)(1) Promptly after the order of relief under [chapter 7], the United States trustee shall appoint one disinterested person that is a member of the panel of private trustees established under section 586(a)(1) of title 28 . . . to serve as interim trustee in the case.

Revco D.S., Inc. (In re Revco D.S., Inc.)*, 898 F.2d 498, 499 (6th Cir. 1990) ("[t]he United States trustee, an officer of the Executive Branch, represents . . . [the] public interest"); In re Castillo, 297 F.3d 940, 950 (9th Cir. 2002) (the United States Trustee is the "'watchdog' of the bankruptcy system . . . charged with preventing fraud and abuse and with 'fill[ing] the vacuum' caused by possible creditor inactivity").

11 U.S.C. § 701(a)(1). If the creditors do not elect a trustee under 11 U.S.C. § 702, the interim trustee "shall serve as trustee in the case." 11 U.S.C. § 702(d).

5. The Effect of the Appointment of a Trustee

After the United States Trustee has appointed a chapter 7 or chapter 11 trustee, the trustee is the estate's sole representative. See 11 U.S.C. § 323(a) (the trustee in a case under this title is the representative of the estate). The duties of a chapter 7 trustee are set forth in 11 U.S.C. § 704 and include liquidating the estate, accounting for estate property, and investigating the debtor's financial affairs. See 11 U.S.C. § 704(a)(1), (2) and (4). Under 11 U.S.C. § 1106, the duties of a trustee likewise include accounting for the property of the estate, investigating the debtor's financial affairs and proposing a plan that calls for liquidation of the debtor's assets or reorganization of the debtor's financial affairs. 11 U.S.C. § 1106(a)(1), (3) and (5). Under § 327(a), trustees have the authority to retain professionals. Lamie, 540 U.S. at 531-32.

In a chapter 11 case, the appointment of a trustee, whether through conversion to chapter 7 or appointment of a trustee under § 1104, divests the debtor in possession of control of the estate. See CFTC v. Weintraub, 471 U.S. 343, 352-53 (1985) (holding that a trustee ousts corporate management and controls the corporate debtor, including its decisions relating to counsel). The services of the debtor in possession's professionals are terminated and the professionals are not entitled to compensation under § 330 for services rendered after the trustee's appointment. Lamie, 340 U.S. at 537. After the appointment of a trustee, only the trustee's retained professionals are entitled to compensation from estate funds. Id. The debtor in possession's terminated counsel would only be entitled to compensation under § 330 if the trustee retained them. See id. (§§ 327 and 330, "taken together, allow . . . trustees to engage attorneys, including debtors' counsel, and allow courts to award them fees").

B. Factual Background.

1. The Debtor

On March 30, 2007 (the "Petition Date"), Mr. Bresnick filed a chapter 11 petition in the Bankruptcy Court for the Eastern District of New York, Brooklyn Division. [ER, Ex. K, at 173, ECF Doc. No. 1]. On Schedule B, Personal Property, filed on April 19, 2007, Mr. Bresnick disclosed, among other things, that he held a fifty percent interest in Block 7094, LLC ("Block 7094) and Tower Hill at Springville, LLC ("Tower Hill"). [ER, Ex. J, at 120-171]. Tower Hill, a non-debtor, owns an undeveloped parcel of real property in Staten Island, New York (the "Tower Hill Property"). [ER, Ex. H, at 151, and Ex. I, at 168].

On April 24, 2007, the Debtor filed an application to retain Mr. Morrison as bankruptcy counsel under § 327(a). [ER, Ex. K, at 176, ECF Doc. No. 23]. On April 15, 2007, the bankruptcy court entered an order approving Mr. Morrison's retention effective as of the Petition Date. [ER, Ex. K, at 177, ECF Doc. No. 28]. On August 9, 2007, the United States Trustee appointed an official committee of unsecured creditors in the Debtor's case (the "Creditors' Committee"). [ER, Ex. K, at 185, ECF Doc. No. 80]. On September 24, 2007, the bankruptcy court approved the retention of Pick & Zabicki as counsel to the Creditors' Committee. [ER, Ex. K, at 190, ECF Doc. No. 108].

2. Block 7094

On March 30, 2007, Mr. Bresnick, as managing member, filed a chapter 11 petition on behalf of Block 7094 in the Bankruptcy Court for the Eastern District of New York, Brooklyn Division (Case No. 07-41576). On Schedule A, Real Property, filed on April 22, 2007, Block 7094 disclosed that it owned an undeveloped parcel of land on Staten Island (the "Block Property"). [ER, Ex. L, at 221]. The Block Property abuts the Tower Hill Property. [ER, Ex. D, at 19, Lines 1-7].

On May 11, 2007, the United States Trustee appointed an official committee of unsecured creditors (the “Block 7094 Creditors’ Committee”). [ER, Ex. M, at 227, ECF Doc. No. 24]. On June 1, 2007, the bankruptcy court approved the retention of Pick & Zabicki as counsel to the Block 7094 Creditors’ Committee. [ER, Ex. M, at 227, ECF Doc. No. 29].

3. Appointment of the Trustee

On June 5, 2007, the United States Trustee filed a motion, under 11 U.S.C. § 1104(a), seeking an order directing the appointment of a chapter 11 trustee, alleging, among other things, that the Debtor had failed to disclose assets and pre petition transfers of cash. [ER, Ex. K, at 178, ECF Doc. No. 34]. After an evidentiary hearing, the bankruptcy court granted the United States Trustee’s motion, on June 25, 2007, for cause under 11 U.S.C. § 1104(a)(1). [ER, Ex. K, at 181-182, ECF Doc. No. 54].

After consulting with parties in interest under 11 U.S.C. § 1104(d), the United States Trustee filed a notice of appointment of Gregory Messer as chapter 11 trustee (the “Trustee”) and an application for approval of the appointment of the Trustee on June 27, 2007. [ER, Ex. K, at 182, ECF Doc. Nos. 57 and 58]. The bankruptcy court entered an order approving the appointment on June 28, 2007. [ER, Ex. K, at 182, ECF Doc. No. 61].

On July 3, 2007, the Trustee filed an application to employ the firm of LaMonica, Herbst & Maniscalco, LLP (the “Lamonica Firm”), as bankruptcy counsel under 11 U.S.C. § 327(a). [ER, Ex. K, at 183, ECF Doc. No. 65]. On July 20, 2007, the bankruptcy court approved the Lamonica Firm’s retention. [ER, Ex. K, at 184, ECF Doc. No. 73]. The Lamonica Firm was the only bankruptcy counsel that the Trustee retained. [ER, Ex. K, at 184-221].

4. The Sale of the Block Property and the Tower Hill Property

On January 28, 2008, Mr. Bresnick, Block 7094, the Creditors’ Committee and the Block 7094 Creditors’ Committee filed a joint motion seeking the entry of an order approving the sale of the Block Property and the Tower Hill Property. [ER, Ex. K, at 195, ECF Doc. No. 134]. On April 4, 2008, the Court entered an order (the "Sale Order") authorizing the sale of the Block Property and Tower Hill Property for $8.1 million. [ER, Ex. I, at 167]. Under the terms of the Sale Order, $7.1 million was allocated to the sale of the Block Property and $1 million was allocated to the sale of the Tower Hill Property (the "Tower Hill Sale Proceeds"). [ER, Ex. I, at 168-169].

5. Settlement of Claims and Dismissal of Mr. Bresnick’s Case

On March 13, 2009, the Bankruptcy Court approved a stipulation of settlement (the "Stipulation") resolving claims against Mr. Bresnick’s estate and providing for the dismissal of the case. [ER, Ex. H, at 148]. Under the Stipulation, estate funds in the Trustee’s possession would be used to pay professional fees and expenses approved by the bankruptcy court. [ER, Ex. H, at 155, ¶ 8]. The parties also agreed that the proceeds of the sale of the Tower Hill Property would be paid to the estate to satisfy any shortfall with respect to fee awards. [ER, Ex. H, at 155-156, ¶ 8]. In accordance with the terms of the Stipulation, the bankruptcy court dismissed Mr. Bresnick’s case on June 29, 2009. [ER, Ex. H, at 157-158, ¶ 15, and Ex. K, at 218, ECF Doc. No. 245]. The bankruptcy court retained jurisdiction to consider the professionals’ applications for compensation. [ER, Ex. H, at 155, ¶ 8].

6. The Application

Mr. Morrison filed the Application on April 23, 2009, seeking $11,455.00 in fees for time incurred prior to the appointment of the Trustee and $103,792.83 for work performed after the appointment of the Trustee. [ER, Ex. G, at 102]. On May 7, 2009, the United States Trustee filed an objection (the "Objection") to the request for fees incurred after the appointment of the Trustee, because, under Lamie, Mr. Morrison was not entitled to receive compensation from estate funds for services rendered to Mr. Bresnick after the appointment of the Trustee. [ER, Ex. F, at 89].

7. The Bankruptcy Court's Decision and Order

On May 21, 2009, the bankruptcy court entered an order awarding Mr. Morrison fees in the amount of $9,085 for work performed before the appointment of the Trustee. [ER, Ex. K, at 217, ECF Doc. No. 235]. On June 23, 2009, the bankruptcy court entered a decision and order denying the Application with respect to fees incurred following the appointment of the Trustee. [ER, Ex. B, at 4, and Ex. C, at 5]. The bankruptcy court, citing Lamie, 540 U.S. at 538, held that Mr. Morrison was not entitled to compensation for work performed for Mr. Bresnick after the Trustee was appointed in the case because "§ 330(a)(1) does not authorize compensation awards to debtors' attorneys from estate funds, unless they are employed as authorized under § 327(a)." [ER, Ex. C, at 9]. After the appointment of the Trustee, Mr. Bresnick lost his status as debtor in possession and Mr. Morrison's appointment as counsel terminated. [ER, Ex. C, at 9-10]. The Court, therefore, denied Mr. Morrison's request for fees in the amount of $103,792.83. [ER, Ex. B, at 4]. On July 2, 2009, Mr. Morrison filed a timely notice of appeal. [ER, Ex. A, at 1].

VI. ARGUMENT

A. The Bankruptcy Court Properly Followed the Supreme Court's Ruling in Lamie When It Denied Mr. Morrison's Request for Compensation Because Mr. Morrison's Role as Attorney for the Debtor in Possession Terminated Upon the Appointment of the Trustee.

The bankruptcy court properly followed Lamie, 540 U.S. at 532, 538-39, in denying Mr. Morrison's request for post-trustee compensation. Under Lamie, Mr. Morrison's role as attorney for the debtor-in-possession, i.e., the Bresnick bankruptcy estate, terminated upon the appointment of the Trustee. Id. Given that Mr. Morrison was not retained by the Trustee to represent the estate post-appointment, Lamie precludes Mr. Morrison from receiving estate funds for services rendered after his non re-employment by the Trustee. Id. Because the bankruptcy court did not err in relying on Lamie, this Court should affirm the Order.

1. Only Professionals Re-Employed by a Trustee under 11 U.S.C. § 327 After a Trustee's Appointment Are Entitled to Represent the Trustee and the Bankruptcy Estate, and Receive Compensation From the Estate Under 11 U.S.C. § 330.

By enacting the Bankruptcy Code, Congress has established a comprehensive set of rules that dictate how attorneys may be retained at estate expense, how they are compensated by the estate, how they receive payment from the estate, and what priority their payment receives. See 11 U.S.C. §§ 327, 330, 503, and 507. In order to receive compensation from the bankruptcy estate, an attorney working as counsel for a chapter 11 debtor must meet two tests.

First, the attorney must be employed as counsel for the debtor in possession under 11 U.S.C. 327(a). Lamie, 540 U.S. at 538 ("Adhering to conventional doctrines of statutory interpretation, we hold that § 330(a)(1) does not authorize compensation awards to debtors' attorneys from estate funds, unless they are employed as authorized by § 327 . . . ."); In re Crafts Retail Holding Corp., 378 B.R. 44, 49 (Bankr. E.D.N.Y. 2007) (denying fee application of attorneys hired by financial advisors, because the court had not previously approved law firm's retention by debtor). Section 327(a) of the Bankruptcy Code authorizes a debtor in possession, subject to court approval, to retain one or more professional persons to assist it in fulfilling its fiduciary duties, provided that the person 1) does not represent an interest adverse to the estate; and 2) is disinterested. In re Leslie Fay Cos., Inc., 175 B.R. 525, 531 (Bankr. S.D.N.Y. 1994); Rome v. Braunstein, 19 F.3d 54, 58 (1st Cir. 1994).

Second, the bankruptcy court must award the attorney fees under 11 U.S.C. § 330(a). Lamie, 540 U.S. at 538-39. Section 330(a) grants a bankruptcy court broad discretion to pay debtor's counsel what the court determines to be a "reasonable" fee for "actual" services that are "necessary." 11 U.S.C. 330(a). In re Cenargo Intern., PLC, 294 B.R. 571, 596 (Bankr. S.D.N.Y. 2003).

Everyone concedes that Mr. Morrison could represent Mr. Bresnick's chapter 11 estate prior to the time that the Trustee was appointed by the court. That is so because Mr. Bresnick, in his role as the debtor in possession, obtained approval under 11 U.S.C. § 327 to use Mr. Morrison as the estate's attorney. 11 U.S.C. §§ 1101(1) (the debtor acts as the debtor in possession unless a trustee is appointed in the case) and 1107 (debtors in possession have the powers of a trustee, which includes hiring counsel under section 327). Everyone also agrees that Mr. Morrison can be paid from estate funds under 11 U.S.C. § 330 for the work he did on behalf of the estate prior to the time Mr. Bresnick was replaced by the Trustee.

But, as the bankruptcy court ruled, once Mr. Bresnick was replaced by the Trustee, the Trustee controlled the estate as a matter of federal law. See 11 U.S.C. § 323(a) (the trustee is the representative of the bankruptcy estate). At that juncture, the Trustee had to obtain court approval to retain Mr. Morrison's as trustee counsel under § 327(a) if Mr. Morrison were to act as the trustee's counsel or obtain compensation for post-trustee work under § 330. See 11 U.S.C. § 1101(1) (trustee becomes the debtor in possession upon appointment); 11 U.S.C. § 327(a) (trustee must apply to use counsel); 11 U.S.C. § 1106 (trustee duties). Because the Trustee chose to employ the Lamonica Firm, rather than to re-employ Mr. Morrison, Mr. Morrison cannot ask this estate's creditors to pay him for work he performed after the Trustee's appointment.

In Lamie, the Supreme Court confirmed that the appointment of a trustee "terminate[s]" the debtor's "status as debtor-in-possession and so terminate[s] [the lawyer's role] under § 327 as an attorney for the debtor-in-possession." Lamie, 540 U.S. at 532. And, under Lamie, any work such a lawyer performs post-trustee appointment cannot be compensated from the estate,. Lamie, 540 U.S. at 538-39 (holding "[i]f the attorney [formerly hired by the deposed debtor in possession] is to be paid from estate funds under § 330(a)(1) in a chapter 7 case [for work done after a trustee is appointed], he must be employed by the trustee and approved by the court").

Thus, under Lamie, Mr. Morrison cannot ask the Bresnick estate, i.e., its creditors, to pay him for work he performed after the Trustee was appointed. As Lamie held, that was possible only if the Trustee had obtained a new appointment of Mr. Morrison as his counsel under § 327, which the trustee chose not to do - preferring the LaMonica Firm to Mr. Morrison.[5]

The similarities between the facts of this case and those of Lamie make clear that Mr. Morrison's failure to be employed by the Trustee precludes him from asking the estate to pay his post-trustee fees. In Lamie, Mr. Lamie agreed to represent a debtor in its chapter 11 case. 540 U.S. at 531-32. So did Mr. Morrison. [ER, Ex. K, at 176, ECF Doc. No. 23]. Mr. Lamie's client filed an application under 11 U.S.C. 327(a) to employ Mr. Lamie as debtor's counsel in its chapter 11 bankruptcy case. 540 U.S. at 531-532. So did Mr. Morrison's client. [ER, Ex. K, at 176, ECF Doc. No. 23]. Mr. Lamie's retention in the chapter 11 case was approved by the bankruptcy court under section 327(a). 540 U.S. at 531-532. So was Mr. Morrison's. [ER, Ex. K, at 177, ECF Doc. No. 28]. Mr. Lamie performed services during his client's chapter 11 case. 540 U.S. at 531-532. So did Mr. Morrison. [ER, Ex. G. at 102]. Mr. Lamie's client's chapter 11 case was converted to a chapter 7 case and a chapter 7 trustee appointed. 540 U.S. at 531-532. In this case, a chapter 11 trustee was appointed. [ER, Ex. K, at 182, ECF Doc. Nos. 57 and 58]. The chapter 7 trustee never filed an application to employ Mr. Lamie under § 327. 540 U.S. at 532. The Trustee never filed an application to employ Mr. Morrison. [ER, Ex. K, at 184-221]. Without approval of his retention as trustee's counsel under section 327, Mr. Lamie did work after the appointment of the trustee. 540 U.S. at 532. Mr. Morrison also did work after the appointment of the Trustee. [ER, Ex. G. at 102]. Mr. Lamie then filed an application seeking final compensation under § 330 of the Bankruptcy Code. 540 U.S. at 532. So did Mr. Morrison. [ER, Exhibit G, at 102]. Mr. Lamie took the position that he was entitled to compensation for the work he did after the trustee's appointment. 540 U.S. at 533-542. Notwithstanding the Lamie precedent, so did Mr. Morrison. [ER, Exhibit G, at 102, and Ex. E, at 69].

Under these facts, the Supreme Court ruled that Mr. Lamie had no right to payment for services performed post-conversion because the trustee had not retained him under § 327. Lamie, 540 U.S. at 533-42. Given that, the bankruptcy court properly ruled that Mr. Morrison had no entitlement to compensation for any work he performed following the appointment of the Trustee because his role as attorney was terminated upon the appointment of the Trustee, and the Trustee had not retained Mr. Morrison under § 327.

Second Circuit precedent in related contexts is wholly consistent with Lamie's requirement that an attorney obtain a court order authorizing his employment as a prerequisite to requesting and receiving compensation. See United Merchants & Mfrs., Inc. v. Henry Schroder Bank and Trust Co. (In re United Merchants & Mfrs., Inc.), 597 F.2d 348 (2d Cir. 1979) (denying fee application submitted by counsel to indenture trustee, because the bankruptcy court had not previously entered an order authorizing the firm's employment); and In re Keren Ltd. P'ship, 189 F.3d 86, 88 (2d Cir. 1999) (denying real estate broker's request for commission, because it had not been employed).

And, also consistent with Lamie, the Second, Third, Seventh and Tenth Circuits have held that a § 330 award is the only way a professional may receive compensation from estate funds under the Bankruptcy Code and the right to such an award is conditioned upon a section 327(a) appointment. See In re Milwaukee Engraving Co., 219 F.3d 635, 636 (7th Cir. 2000) (holding attorneys may not receive compensation under the Bankruptcy Code when their section 327(a) employment application is denied (relying upon In re Singson, 41 F.3d 316, 320 (7th Cir. 1994)); F/S Airlease II, Inc. v. Simon, 844 F.2d 99, 108-109 (3rd Cir. 1988) (same); Keren, 189 F.3d at 88 (same); In re Albrecht, 233 F.3d 1258, 1260 (10th Cir. 2000) (denying compensation because the court did not approve the retention under § 327).

2. Even if the Bankruptcy Court had been Free to Ignore the Lamie Ruling, the Applicable Bankruptcy Statutes Confirm that Mr. Morrison Has No Right to Receive Compensation from the Bresnick Estate Under 11 U.S.C. § 330 for his Post-Trustee Work.

After the commencement of a case, chapter 11 debtors retain control of the bankruptcy estate and any business operations as “debtors in possession” with the powers and duties of a trustee, including the power to retain professionals under § 327. In re Worldcom, 311 B.R. 151, 163 (Bankr. S.D.N.Y. 2004). See also 11 U.S.C. §§ 1101(1) and 1107. However, the appointment of a trustee terminates this debtor in possession status and divests the debtor of possession and control of the bankruptcy estate. See 11 U.S.C. §§ 323(a) (trustee is the representative of the estate) and1101(1) (defining a debtor in possession as the debtor, except when a person that has qualified under § 322 is serving a trustee). See also Lamie, 540 U.S. at 532 (appointment of chapter 7 trustee terminated debtor’s status as a debtor in possession) and In re Footstar, Inc., 323 B.R. 566, 571 (Bankr. S.D.N.Y. 2005) (once a trustee is appointed, the debtor is no longer a debtor in possession and the trustee succeeds to the rights and property of the debtor).

Upon his or her appointment, a chapter 7 or 11 trustee takes control of the estate’s assets and business and has full and sole authority to represent the estate and dispose of estate property. Footstar, 323 B.R. at 571 (citations omitted). See also 11 U.S.C. § 323(a) (the trustee in a case is the representative of the estate); 11 U.S.C. § 704 (duties of a trustee); 11 U.S.C. § 1101(1) (trustee becomes the debtor in possession); and 11 U.S.C. § 1106 (defining duties of a trustee). Sections 323(a), 1101(1) and 1106 give a chapter 11 trustee the sole right to decide whether the estate will hire lawyers, and who those lawyers should be. Cf. Lamie, 540 U.S. at 532, 538.

Consistent with the Code, the Supreme Court has squarely held that once a trustee is appointed in a case, he or she manages the corporate debtor and controls counsel. CFTC v. Weintraub, 471 U.S. 343 (1985). In CFTC, the Supreme Court held that “the Bankruptcy Code gives the trustee wide-ranging management authority over the debtor.” Id. at 352. The Court made clear that former corporate management’s role upon the appointment of a trustee “is to turn over the corporation's property to the trustee and to provide certain information to the trustee and to the creditors. Congress contemplated that when a trustee is appointed, he assumes control of the business, and the debtor's directors are ‘completely ousted.’" Id. at 352-53 (quoting in part H.R.Rep. No. 95-595, pp. 220-221 (1977)). As CFTC held, this transfer of power is so complete it even gives “ the trustee[] control of the corporation's attorney-client privilege with respect to prebankruptcy communications.” Id. at 353.

As the trustee completely controls the debtor upon appointment, the appointment of a trustee and the concomitant termination of debtor in possession status also terminates the services of the debtor in possession’s professionals retained under § 327. Lamie, 540 U.S. at 532, 538. After the services of the professionals have been terminated, the terminated attorney is not entitled to compensation under § 330 for services rendered after the termination. Id. at 534. The terminated lawyer may not be paid from estate funds even if the services were related to its prior retention as the debtor in possession’s counsel or provided benefit to the estate. In re CK Liquidation Corp., 343 B.R. 376, 385 (D. Mass. 2006); In re Anderson, 362 B.R. 575, 584-85 (Bankr.E.D.N.Y. 2007). Likewise, the type or quality of services rendered is irrelevant because retention as § 327(a) counsel is terminated as a matter of law. CK Liquidation, 343 B.R. at 385, citing Lamie, 540 U.S. at 534.

This statutory scheme is fully consistent with the binding precedent enunciated by the Court in Lamie, that only if the Trustee had retained Mr. Morrison under § 327, would Mr. Morrison have been entitled to compensation from the estate. See CFTC, 471 U.S. 353 (trustee controls counsel and determines whether they waive the attorney-client privilege). However, the Trustee did not retain Mr. Morrison and only the Trustee's retained professionals are entitled to compensation under § 330. See Lamie, 540 U.S. at 538-539 (if a debtor's attorney is to be compensated from estate funds, he or she must be employed by the trustee). Instead, the Trustee chose the LaMonica Firm, which is entitled to compensation from the estate for its post-trustee work.

Mr. Morrison suggests a number of reasons why he should be entitled to compensation for services rendered after the appointment of the Trustee. First, he alleges that the parties in the case "explicitly and implicitly" treated him as the attorney for the debtor in possession after the appointment of the Trustee, including identifying him as counsel to the debtor in possession on the signature page of the Stipulation. See Brief of Appellant, at 11-12. Second, he claims that he assisted with the resolution of the case and no party objected to his involvement. Id.

However, Morrison ignores well-settled law cited above - Lamie, Keren, F/S Airlease, Albrecht, Milwaukee Engraving, which each held that an attorney not appointed under section 327(a) cannot be compensated under the Bankruptcy Code. And Mr. Morrison cites no authority for his contrary position. The fact that the parties might have dealt with him after the appointment of the Trustee or that he assisted the Trustee does not circumvent the holding of Lamie and the Bankruptcy Code that appointment of a trustee divests the debtor in possession of control over the estate, including the right to retain professionals under § 327 and to compensate them under § 330. Lamie, 540 U.S. at 532. See also Footstar, 323 BR at 571 (a trustee has full and sole authority over the estate).

Moreover, the parties' failure to object to Mr. Morrison's involvement did not have the effect of vitiating Lamie. Cf. In re Bartmann, 320 B.R. 725, 742 (Bankr. N.D. Okla. 2004) (trustee did not ratify or waive any right of the estate to challenge debtor's counsel's actions by seeking counsel's assistance). See also In re Interwest Bus. Equip, Inc., 23 F.3d 311 (10th Cir. 1994) (rejecting argument that firm should be retained despite conflicts of interest because court "permitted" the firm to continue to represent debtors in possession although it was not retained under § 327); and In re EBW Laser, Inc., 333 B.R. 351, 356 (Bankr. M.D.N.C. 2005) ("[u]napproved representation–even when expressly agreed to by the parties-- generally is not compensable by the bankruptcy estate").

"Professionals who render services to the estate without first obtaining an order authorizing their employment are effectively volunteers." Bartmann, 320 B.R. at 742. It is undisputed that following his termination as attorney for the debtor in possession, Mr. Morrison was never employed the Trustee under § 327. Therefore, the fact that Mr. Morrison continued providing services is irrelevant. See Interwest, 23 F.3d at 318 ("[i]f we were to reverse the denial of the [employment] applications in these cases simply because counsel chose to take a calculated risk and continue employment absent necessary authorization, it would effectively write § 327(a) out of the Bankruptcy Code").

Mr. Morrison claims that he deserves compensation for the valuable services he provided in this case. See Appellant's Brief, at 11-14. In Lamie, the terminated attorney similarly argued that compensation was warranted due to a debtor's need for counsel in a converted case, and basic fairness. See Brief of Petitioner in Lamie v. United States Trustee, 2003 WL 21295241, at 30-36. The Supreme Court, however, dismissed Mr. Lamie's policy arguments. Although it found the policy concerns advanced by Mr. Lamie unpersuasive, Lamie, 540 U.S. at 538, the Court rejected them for a more fundamental reason, the Court's "unwillingness to soften the import of Congress' chosen words even if [those words] lead to a harsh outcome." Id. Thus, the Court refused to rule for Mr. Lamie based upon the Court's "longstanding" unwillingness to rewrite statutes, an unwillingness that "result[ed] from deference to the supremacy of the Legislature . . . ." Id. (internal quotations omitted).

Notably, Mr. Morrison is not without recourse for the payment of its fees. As recognized by the bankruptcy court, although Mr. Morrison continued to be involved in the case, it was clear that he continued to represent Mr. Bresnick personally, as the debtor, rather than representing the trustee or debtor-in-possession. [ER, Ex. D, at 48, Lines 10-25, and 49, Lined 1-6.] The Court has dismissed Mr. Bresnick's case, [ER, Ex. K, at 218, ECF Doc. No. 245], and, except for the Tower Hill Proceeds, Mr. Bresnick's assets reverted to him upon the dismissal of his case under 11 U.S.C. §349(b)(3). Mr. Morrison may therefore seek the payment of any outstanding fees owed to hm by Mr. Bresnick directly from Mr. Bresnick.

Finally, Lamie's bright line rule protects the public. Absent the bright line, people could be confused about which lawyer speaks for the trustee and the estate. Lamie removes that doubt. Only lawyers appointed by the trustee after the trustee's appointment can do work or speak for the estate. Given the multitude of parties in large chapter 11 cases, that clarity protects both the estate and those that deal with it.

3. Lamie Applies to the Appointment of Chapter 7 and 11 Trustees.

The only difference between Lamie and this case is that the Lamie trustee was a chapter 7 trustee, and the Trustee in this case is a chapter 11 trustee. See Appellant's Brief, at 13-14 (Mr. Morrison argues that the bankruptcy court erred in applying the holding of Lamie to a chapter 11 case, because Lamie involved the conversion of a case to chapter 7 and the appointment of a chapter 7 trustee).

However, that difference has no legal significance for four reasons. First, both types of trustees control the appointment of counsel. 11 U.S.C. 327(a). Second, § 327(a) lumps chapter 7 and 11 trustee appointments together, merely providing that "the trustee," regardless of chapter, "may employ one or more attorneys" "with the court's approval[.]" 11 U.S.C. § 327(a). Third, Lamie did not distinguish between chapter 7 and 11 trustees, which is not surprising given that both retain counsel the same way, and given that both control the estate. 11 U.S.C. §§ 323(a), 704, 1101(1), and 1106 (both types of trustees are the representative of the bankruptcy estate). Fourth, in both circumstances, the trustee is the sole representative of the bankruptcy estate, obtaining complete control of estate property. 11 U.S.C. §§ 323(a), 704, 1101(1) and 1106. See, e.g., In re Johnson, 397 B.R. 486, 490 (Bankr. E. D. Cal. 2008) (Lamie applies equally to chapter 11 cases because the underlying rationale is the debtor's loss of status as a debtor in possession). As the sole representative of the estate, only a trustee has the authority to retain counsel under § 327. Lamie, 540 U.S. at 533.

Given all this, it is not surprising that a recent decision, In re Bay Voltex Corp., 2006 WL 3834300, at *1 (Bankr. N.D. Cal. December 29, 2006), held, in disallowing the fee request of the former counsel for the debtor in possession for services rendered after the appointment of a chapter 11 trustee, that the distinction between a chapter 11 and 7 trustee was irrelevant:

> Under § 323(a), the trustee is the representative of the estate. Neither a chapter 7 debtor nor a debtor out of possession is a trustee, and neither represents the estate. Section 330(a) makes no provision for compensation of professionals employed by a debtor that is not a trustee.

Id. See also In re Del Monico, 2006 WL 345013, at *2 (Bankr. N .D. Ill. February 15, 2006) (denying fees for debtor's counsel after the appointment of a chapter 11 trustee). Bay and Del Monico are consistent with pre-Lamie case law that disallowed fees for a debtor's attorney following the appointment of a chapter 11 trustee. See In re Pro-Snax Distributors, 157 F.3d 414, 424 (5th Cir. 1998) (holding that by deleting the words "to the debtor's attorney" from § 330 in the 1994 amendments, Congress indicated that debtor's attorneys could not be compensated from the estate after the appointment of a chapter 11 trustee).

B. The Tower Hill Proceeds are Property of the Bankruptcy Estate and May Not Be Used to Pay Mr. Morrison.

Mr. Morrison argues for the first time on appeal that Lamie is inapplicable because the funds used to pay professionals are not property of the estate. See Brief of Appellant, at 16-17. Specifically, Mr. Morrison claims that the Tower Hill Proceeds are not property of the estate, and because any shortfall is to be paid from them, he was not seeking compensation from estate funds. See Brief of Appellant, at 16.

Appellate courts will not consider an issue raised for the first time on appeal. Allianz Ins. Co. v. Lerner, 416 F.3d 109, 114 (2d Cir. 2005). The record on appeal shows that Mr. Morrison failed to present this argument in either his original fee application, his reply brief, or during the extensive hearing on the Application. [ER, Exhibit D, E, and G]. The United States Trustee specifically relied upon Lamie in her Objection to the Application. [ER, Ex. F, at 100, ¶¶ 42-44].

Although Mr. Morrison was on notice that the United States Trustee relied on Lamie as controlling precedent, he did not argue that he would be paid from non-estate funds. [ER, Exhibit D, E, and G]. Mr. Morrison is, therefore, barred from raising this issue for the first time on appeal. See Allianz, 416 F.3d at 114 (issue raised for the first time on appeal is waived). See also Universal Church v. Geltzer, 463 F.3d 218, 299 (2d Cir. 2006) (court will not consider any issues raised for the first time on appeal).

Even if Mr. Morrison had preserved this issue for appeal, the Tower Hill Estate Proceeds are property of the estate. Under the terms of the Stipulation, the parties agreed, and the Court directed, that the Tower Hill Sale Proceeds would be used to pay the balance of the allowed professional fees incurred in Mr. Bresnick's case. [ER, Ex. H, at 155-156, ¶ 8]. Mr. Bresnick, as owner of Tower Hill, assigned his interest in the Tower Hill Proceeds to the bankruptcy estate. [ER, Ex. H, at 56, ¶ 8]. See In re Fry, 2007 WL 7023829, at *8 (Bankr. S. D. Ga. March 23, 2007) (post-petition cause of action that debtor assigned to the trustee is property of the estate under § 541(a)(7)). Moreover, under the Stipulation, the funds were earmarked pay the balance of allowed professional fees, and they became estate property under the express terms of the Stipulation. [ER Ex. H, at 155-156, ¶ 8]. See 11 U.S.C. 541(a)(7) (defining property of the estate as property that the estate acquires after the commencement of the case). Therefore, despite Mr. Morrison's arguments to the contrary, the Tower Hill Sale Proceeds became estate property upon approval of the Stipulation.

Significantly, although Mr. Bresnick's case was dismissed, this dismissal neither altered the terms of the Stipulation nor re-vested Mr. Bresnick with title to the Tower Hill Sale Proceeds, and the proceeds remain property of the Bresnick estate. Section 349 of the Code governs the effect of dismissal of bankruptcy cases. 11 U.S.C. §349. Section 349(b)(2) of the Code provides that only certain orders are automatically vacated upon the dismissal of a bankruptcy case: (a) orders requiring the turnover of property to the trustee (§ 542) or to the debtor (§ 522(i)(1)), (b) orders avoiding the transfer of property (§ 550), and (c) orders permitting the exercise of set-off rights (§ 553). 11 U.S.C. § 349(b)(2). As the Stipulation does not fall within the delineated actions, it was not vacated upon the dismissal of Mr. Bresnick's case. Norton v. Hoxie State Bank, 61 B.R. 258 (Bankr. D. Kan. 1986) (holding that § 349(b)(2) affects only those actions delineated in the section). Additionally, the terms of the Stipulation explicitly provide that "the parties' obligations under this Stipulation shall survive the dismissal of Mr. Bresnick's bankruptcy case." [ER, Ex. H, at 157-158, ¶ 15].

Section 349(b)(3) likewise provides that unless the Court orders otherwise, a dismissal of a case revests estate property in the entity in which such property was vested prior to the bankruptcy case. 11 U.S.C. § 349(b)(3). In this case, however, the Tower Hill Sale Proceeds did not revest in Mr. Bresnick, because the distribution of the Tower Hill Sale Proceeds and the rights of Mr. Bresnick's professionals to receive the Tower Hill Sale Proceeds, was specifically provided for in the Stipulation. [ER, Ex. H, at 155-156, ¶ 8]. Therefore, notwithstanding the dismissal of Mr. Bresnick's case, the Stipulation continues to control the distribution of the Tower Hill Sale Proceeds. See, e.g., In re Witte, 279 B.R. 585, 588 (Bankr. E.D. Cal. 2002) (holding that § 349(b) of the Code did not require turnover of sale proceeds to the debtor upon the dismissal of the debtor's chapter 13 case, because the order approving the sale controlled the distribution of the sale proceeds). Here, the Stipulation dictates the distribution of the Tower Hill Proceeds and the parties to the Stipulation specifically agreed and acknowledged that it would survive the dismissal of Mr. Bresnick's case. [ER, Ex. H, at 155-156, ¶ 8, and 157-158, ¶ 15]. See Witte, 279 B.R. at 589 (holding that an order directing distribution of sale proceeds survived dismissal of the debtor's chapter 13 case). The Tower Hill proceeds became property of Mr. Bresnick's estate and the terms of the Stipulation continue to control the distribution of the proceeds.

VII. CONCLUSION

For these reasons, the United States Trustee respectfully asks this Court to affirm the Order entered below.

TITLE 11 > CHAPTER 3 > SUBCHAPTER II > § 330

§ 330. Compensation of officers

(1) After notice to the parties in interest and the United States Trustee and a hearing, and subject to sections 326, 328, and 329, the court may award to a trustee, a consumer privacy ombudsman appointed under section 332, an examiner, an ombudsman appointed under section 333, or a professional person employed under section 327 or 1103—

(A) reasonable compensation for actual, necessary services rendered by the trustee, examiner, ombudsman, professional person, or attorney and by any paraprofessional person employed by any such person; and

(B) reimbursement for actual, necessary expenses.

(2) The court may, on its own motion or on the motion of the United States Trustee, the United States Trustee for the District or Region, the trustee for the estate, or any other party in interest, award compensation that is less than the amount of compensation that is requested.

(3) In determining the amount of reasonable compensation to be awarded to an examiner, trustee under chapter 11, or professional person, the court shall consider the nature, the extent, and the value of such services, taking into account all relevant factors, including—

(A) the time spent on such services;

(B) the rates charged for such services;

(C) whether the services were necessary to the administration of, or beneficial at the time at which the service was rendered toward the completion of, a case under this title;

(D) whether the services were performed within a reasonable amount of time commensurate with the complexity, importance, and nature of the problem, issue, or task addressed;

(E) with respect to a professional person, whether the person is board certified or otherwise has demonstrated skill and experience in the bankruptcy field; and

(F) whether the compensation is reasonable based on the customary compensation charged by comparably skilled practitioners in cases other than cases under this title.

(4)

(A) Except as provided in subparagraph (B), the court shall not allow compensation for—

(i) unnecessary duplication of services; or

(ii) services that were not—

(I) reasonably likely to benefit the debtor’s estate; or

(II) necessary to the administration of the case.

(B) In a chapter 12 or chapter 13 case in which the debtor is an individual, the court may allow reasonable compensation to the debtor’s attorney for representing the interests of the debtor in connection with the bankruptcy case based on a consideration of the benefit and necessity of such services to the debtor and the other factors set forth in this section.

(5) The court shall reduce the amount of compensation awarded under this section by the amount of any interim compensation awarded under section 331, and, if the amount of such interim compensation exceeds the amount of compensation awarded under this section, may order the return of the excess to the estate.

(6) Any compensation awarded for the preparation of a fee application shall be based on the level and skill reasonably required to prepare the application.

(7) In determining the amount of reasonable compensation to be awarded to a trustee, the court shall treat such compensation as a commission, based on section 326.

(b)

(1) There shall be paid from the filing fee in a case under chapter 7 of this title $45 to the trustee serving in such case, after such trustee's services are rendered.

(2) The Judicial Conference of the United States—

(A) shall prescribe additional fees of the same kind as prescribed under section 1914 (b) of title 28; and

(B) may prescribe notice of appearance fees and fees charged against distributions in cases under this title; to pay $15 to trustees serving in cases after such trustees' services are rendered. Beginning 1 year after the date of the enactment of the Bankruptcy Reform Act of 1994, such $15 shall be paid in addition to the amount paid under paragraph (1).

(B) in connection with transferring patients from the health care business that is in the process of being closed to another health care business; and

(9) the value of any goods received by the debtor within 20 days before the date of commencement of a case under this title in which the goods have been sold to the debtor in the ordinary course of such debtor's business.

(c) Notwithstanding subsection (b), there shall neither be allowed, nor paid—

(1) a transfer made to, or an obligation incurred for the benefit of, an insider of the debtor for the purpose of inducing such person to remain with the debtor's business, absent a finding by the court based on evidence in the record that—

(C) either—

(i) the amount of the transfer made to, or obligation incurred for the benefit of, the person is not greater than an amount equal to 10 times the amount of the mean transfer or obligation of a similar kind given to nonmanagement employees for any purpose during the calendar year in which the transfer is made or the obligation is incurred; or

TITLE 11 > CHAPTER 5 > SUBCHAPTER I > § 507

§ 507. Priorities

(a) The following expenses and claims have priority in the following order:

(1) First:

(A) Allowed unsecured claims for domestic support obligations that, as of the date of the filing of the petition in a case under this title, are owed to or recoverable by a spouse, former spouse, or child of the debtor, or such child's parent, legal guardian, or responsible relative, without regard to whether the claim is filed by such person or is filed by a governmental unit on behalf of such person, on the condition that funds received under this paragraph by a governmental unit under this title after the date of the filing of the petition shall be applied and distributed in accordance with applicable nonbankruptcy law.

(B) Subject to claims under subparagraph (A), allowed unsecured claims for domestic support obligations that, as of the date of the filing of the petition, are assigned by a spouse, former spouse, child of the debtor, or such child's parent, legal guardian, or responsible relative to a governmental unit (unless such obligation is assigned voluntarily by the spouse, former spouse, child, parent, legal guardian, or responsible relative of the child for the purpose of collecting the debt) or are owed directly to or recoverable by a governmental unit under applicable nonbankruptcy law, on the condition that funds received under this paragraph by a governmental unit under this title after the date of the filing of the petition be applied and distributed in accordance with applicable nonbankruptcy law.

(3) Third, unsecured claims allowed under section 502 (f) of this title.

(4) Fourth, allowed unsecured claims, but only to the extent of $10,000 for each individual or corporation, as the case may be, earned within 180 days before the date of the filing of the petition or the date of the cessation of the debtor's business, whichever occurs first, for—

(A) wages, salaries, or commissions, including vacation, severance, and sick leave pay earned by an individual; or

(B) sales commissions earned by an individual or by a corporation with only 1 employee, acting as an independent contractor in the sale of goods or services for the debtor in the ordinary course of the debtor's business if, and only if, during the 12 months preceding that date, at least 75 percent of the amount that the individual or corporation earned by acting as an independent contractor in the sale of goods or services was earned from the debtor.

(5) Fifth, allowed unsecured claims for contributions to an employee benefit plan—

(A) arising from services rendered within 180 days before the date of the filing of the petition or the date of the cessation of the debtor's business, whichever occurs first; but only

(B) for each such plan, to the extent of—

(i) the number of employees covered by each such plan multiplied by $10,000; less

(6) Sixth, allowed unsecured claims of persons—

(A) engaged in the production or raising of grain, as defined in section 557 (b) of this title, against a debtor who owns or operates a grain storage facility, as defined in section 557 (b) of this title, for grain or the proceeds of grain, or

(8) Eighth, allowed unsecured claims of governmental units, only to the extent that such claims are for—

(A) a tax on or measured by income or gross receipts for a taxable year ending on or before the date of the filing of the petition—

(C) a tax required to be collected or withheld and for which the debtor is liable in whatever capacity;

(D) an employment tax on a wage, salary, or commission of a kind specified in paragraph (4) of this subsection earned from the debtor before the date of the filing of the petition, whether or not actually paid before such date, for which a return is last due, under applicable law or under any extension, after three years before the date of the filing of the petition;

(E) an excise tax on—

(i) a transaction occurring before the date of the filing of the petition for which a return, if required, is last due, under applicable law or under any extension, after three years before the date of the filing of the petition; or

(ii) if a return is not required, a transaction occurring during the three years immediately preceding the date of the filing of the petition;

(F) a customs duty arising out of the importation of merchandise—

(i) entered for consumption within one year before the date of the filing of the petition;

(ii) covered by an entry liquidated or reliquidated within one year before the date of the filing of the petition; or

(iii) entered for consumption within four years before the date of the filing of the petition but unliquidated on such date, if the Secretary of the Treasury certifies that failure to liquidate such entry was due to an investigation pending on such date into assessment of antidumping or countervailing duties or fraud, or if information needed for the proper appraisement or classification of such merchandise was not available to the appropriate customs officer before such date; or

(G) a penalty related to a claim of a kind specified in this paragraph and in compensation for actual pecuniary loss.

An otherwise applicable time period specified in this paragraph shall be suspended for any period during which a governmental unit is prohibited under applicable nonbankruptcy law from collecting a tax as a result of a request by the debtor for a hearing and an appeal of any collection action taken or proposed against the debtor, plus 90 days; plus any time during which the stay of proceedings was in effect in a prior case under this title or during which collection was precluded by the existence of 1 or more confirmed plans under this title, plus 90 days.

(9) Ninth, allowed unsecured claims based upon any commitment by the debtor to a Federal depository institutions regulatory agency (or predecessor to such agency) to maintain the capital of an insured depository institution.

(10) Tenth, allowed claims for death or personal injury resulting from the operation of a motor vehicle or vessel if such operation was unlawful because the debtor was intoxicated from using alcohol, a drug, or another substance.

(b) If the trustee, under section 362, 363, or 364 of this title, provides adequate protection of the interest of a holder of a claim secured by a lien on property of the debtor and if, notwithstanding such protection, such creditor has a claim allowable under subsection (a)(2) of this section arising from the stay of action against such property under section 362 of this title, from the use, sale, or lease of such property under section 363 of this title, or from the granting of a lien under section 364 (d) of this title, then such creditor's claim under such subsection shall have priority over every other claim allowable under such subsection.

(c) For the purpose of subsection (a) of this section, a claim of a governmental unit arising from an erroneous refund or credit of a tax has the same priority as a claim for the tax to which such refund or credit relates.

(d) An entity that is subrogated to the rights of a holder of a claim of a kind specified in subsection (a)(1), (a)(4), (a)(5), (a)(6), (a)(7), (a)(8), or (a)(9) of this section is not subrogated to the right of the holder of such claim to priority under such subsection.

(1) for cause, including fraud, dishonesty, incompetence, or gross mismanagement of the affairs of the debtor by current management, either before or after the commencement of the case, or similar cause, but not including the number of holders of securities of the debtor or the amount of assets or liabilities of the debtor;

(2) if such appointment is in the interests of creditors, any equity security holders, and other interests of the estate, without regard to the number of holders of securities of the debtor or the amount of assets or liabilities of the debtor; or

(3) if grounds exist to convert or dismiss the case under section 1112, but the court determines that the appointment of a trustee or an examiner is in the best interests of creditors and the estate.

(b)

(1) Except as provided in section 1163 of this title, on the request of a party in interest made not later than 30 days after the court orders the appointment of a trustee under subsection (a), the United States trustee shall convene a meeting of creditors for the purpose of electing one disinterested person to serve as trustee in the case. The election of a trustee shall be conducted in the manner provided in subsections (a), (b), and (c) of section 702 of this title.

(2)

Basis of Appellate Jurisdiction

This court has jurisdiction over this appeal under 28 U.S.C. § 158. The United States Trustee timely elected to have this appeal heard by the District Court pursuant to 28 U.S.C. § 158(c)(1)(A).

Issue Presented and Standard of Review

Did the Bankruptcy Court err in holding that bankruptcy trustees cannot resign their positions in particular cases unless the bankruptcy court, upon motion by the trustee, elects to accept that resignation?

The issue presented is a pure question of law. On appeal to this Court, questions of law are reviewed de novo. E.g., Chrysler Financial Corp. v. Nolan (In re Nolan), 232 F.3d 528, 531 (6th Cir. 2000); Palmer v. U.S. (In re Palmer), 219 F.3d 580, 583 (6th Cir. 2000).

Statement of the Case and Statutory Framework

Appellee Michael V. Demczyk is the Chapter 12 Standing Trustee for the Eastern Division of the Northern District of Ohio. He attempted to resign as trustee, which resulted in the entry of a sua sponte order by the Bankruptcy Court enjoining him from resigning. Appellant Donald M. Robiner is the United States Trustee for Region 9 (Michigan and Ohio). Mr. Demczyk was appointed to his position as a Chapter 12 Standing Trustee by Mr. Robiner's predecessor as United States Trustee.

Statutory Background

A "chapter 12" case is one of the four principal types of bankruptcy cases under the Bankruptcy Code, commonly known as chapter 7, chapter 11, chapter 12, and chapter 13. In a chapter 7 case, a debtor's assets are liquidated for the benefit of creditors. 11 U.S.C. § 701, et seq. In a chapter 11 case, a debtor attempts to reorganize its business operations by implementing a plan of reorganization approved by the bankruptcy court. 11 U.S.C. § 1101, et seq. Cases under chapters 12 or 13 are similar. Both types of case allow debtors to repay their debts over a period of years pursuant to a repayment plan; the chapters differ principally in that chapter 12 applies only to family farmers and chapter 13 to individuals with regular income. Compare 11 U.S.C. § 1201, et seq. (adjustment of debts of a family farmer) with 11 U.S.C. § 1301, et seq. (adjustment of debts of an individual).

In every chapter 7, 12, and 13 case, an independent trustee is appointed to oversee the administration of the debtor's bankruptcy estate for the benefit of the debtor's creditors. Under the Bankruptcy Code, the United States Trustee appoints these trustees. See 28 U.S.C. §§ 586(a) ("Each United States trustee . . . shall (1) establish, maintain, and supervise a panel of private trustees . . . in cases under chapter 7"), and 586(b) ("If the number of cases under chapter 12 or 13 . . . so warrants, the United States trustee . . . may, subject to the approval of the Attorney General, appoint one or more individuals to serve as standing trustee."). See also 11 U.S.C. §§ 701(a)(1) (the "United States trustee shall appoint" an interim Chapter 7 trustee, who becomes the permanent trustee unless a different trustee is elected by the creditors), 1104(d) (if ordered by the court, the "United States trustee . . . shall appoint" a trustee in a chapter 11 case), 1202(a) (the "United States trustee shall appoint" the chapter 12 trustee), and 1302(a) (the "United States trustee shall appoint" the chapter 13 trustee).

United States Trustees such as Mr. Robiner are officials of the Department of Justice appointed by the Attorney General to supervise the administration of all bankruptcy cases and trustees within specified geographic regions. See 28 U.S.C. §§ 581-589 (specifying the powers of United States Trustees); United States Trustee v. Revco D.S., Inc. (In re Revco D.S., Inc.), 898 F.2d 498, 499 (6th Cir. 1990) ("[t]he United States trustee, an officer of the Executive Branch, represents . . . [the] public interest"). Congress established United States Trustees because it concluded that then-existing bankruptcy laws called the partiality of Bankruptcy Judges into question because the 1898 Act required them to fulfill incompatible roles as adjudicator and administrator. H.R. Rep. No. 95-595, at 89-91 (1977), reprinted in 1978 U.S.C.C.A.N. 5787, 6050-52. In response, the Congress established a pilot United States Trustee Program in the Executive Branch within the Department of Justice to relieve the bankruptcy judges of their current roles in the administration of bankruptcy cases. Bankruptcy Reform Act of 1978, Pub. L. No. 95-598, § 101, 92 Stat. 2549, 2651-57 (1978). The United States Trustee Program was subsequently expanded nationwide. Bankruptcy Judges, United States Trustees, and Family Farmer Bankruptcy Act of 1986, Pub. L. No. 99-554, §§ 111-115, 201-230, 100 Stat. 3008, 3090-95, 3097-3103 (1986).

The law is settled that United States Trustees may terminate the eligibility of a panel trustee or standing trustee to receive any future cases. See, e.g., Joelson v. United States, 86 F.3d 1413, 1417-19 (6th Cir. 1996) (finding that a United States Trustee's decision to terminate a trustee's eligibility to receive future cases is committed to agency discretion).[1] The Code also expressly provides that bankruptcy courts may involuntarily "remove" trustees from pending cases if "cause" exists. 11 U.S.C. § 324(a).

[1] Subsequent to the Joelson decision, the Justice Department promulgated a regulation, 28 C.F.R. § 58.6, granting trustees the right to obtain agency review, and thereafter district court review, of United States Trustees' decisions to terminate the eligibility of a trustee to receive future cases.

Trustees also frequently resign voluntarily from particular cases. They may do so because of a conflict of interest, a heavy caseload, or for personal reasons. The Bankruptcy Code does not specify how a trustee may resign or who accepts the resignation. Prior to the decision issued below, the right of trustees to freely resign was universally recognized. Bankruptcy Courts and United States Trustees typically followed a uniform practice when a trustee voluntarily resigned from a pending case: trustees resigned by notifying their United States Trustee, and the United States Trustee accepted, as a ministerial act, the resignation and appointed a successor trustee. The courts are free to adopt particular notice requirements but Bankruptcy Courts have not – until now – claimed the power to block a trustee's voluntary resignation.

Statement of Facts

Mr. Demczyk effected his resignation by sending a letter dated October 31, 2000 to the United States Trustee announcing his resignation as Chapter 12 Standing Trustee effective November 30, 2000. Brookover Docket #31 at 5-6, Montgomery Farms Docket #82 at 5-6, Giulitto Docket #64 at 5-6[2], reported as In re Brookover, 259 B.R. 884 (Bankr. N.D. Ohio 2001). The United States Trustee sent a letter to Mr. Demczyk accepting his resignation. B.Dkt. #14, M.F.Dkt. #75, G.Dkt. #56. Upon receipt of Mr. Demczyk's notice, the United States Trustee promptly notified all bankruptcy judges in the Northern District of Ohio of Mr. Demczyk's resignation. B.Dkt. #15, M.F.Dkt. #74, G.Dkt. # 57.

After receiving the notice provided by the United States Trustee of Mr. Demczyk's resignation, the Bankruptcy Court entered identical orders in the three cases that are the subject of this appeal. B.Dkt. #16, M.F.Dkt. #76, G.Dkt. #58. By those orders, the Bankruptcy Court made clear that Mr. Demczyk could not resign unless he first asked for and received the Court's permission. The orders stated in part:

> Michael V. Demczyk is the Standing chapter 12 trustee in this case. . . . The Letters [of resignation and acceptance of resignation] raise a question about whether Mr. Demczyk wishes to continue to serve as the Chapter 12 Trustee. If a change is requested, the Court will await a motion filed and served on all parties in interest. . . . Mr. Demczyk is to continue to carry out his responsibilities in this case, absent a Court Order to the contrary.

Id. The United States Trustee filed a motion with the court on December 7, 2000 reiterating that Mr. Demczyk had resigned, and respectfully asking it to reconsider its order requiring Mr. Demczyk to continue serving as trustee notwithstanding his resignation. B.Dkt. #17, M.F.Dkt. #77, G.Dkt. #59.

The Bankruptcy Court conducted a hearing on the United States Trustee's motion in all three cases on February 16, 2001. At the hearing, Mr. Demczyk testified he had resigned voluntarily. Transcript, p. 11, line 21 to p. 13, line 5. After the conclusion of the hearing, the Bankruptcy Court on March 26, 2001 entered its Memorandum of Opinion and Order in the three cases denying the United States Trustee's Motion to Reconsider and ordering Mr. Demczyk to remain as Chapter 12 Standing Trustee.

The United States Trustee timely appealed this order. B.Dkt. #34, M.F.Dkt. #85, G.Dkt. #67.

Summary of Argument

It is basic to our way of life that people can quit their jobs. United States Trustees can resign from the Justice Department. Judges can retire or resign from the bench. Factory workers can walk off the shop floor. We can identify nothing in the law that diminishes the right of Chapter 12 Standing Trustees to resign. The Bankruptcy Court erred when it prohibited Mr. Demczyk from resigning.

Prior to the unprecedented decision of the Bankruptcy Court below, it was accepted within the bankruptcy community that trustees have the same power to resign that everyone else enjoys. United States Trustees perform the ministerial task of "accepting" these resignations. They do this because the United States Trustee is, as the Bankruptcy Court acknowledged, the party who must appoint the successor trustee. We do not view the function of accepting a resignation as conveying the power to block a resignation. When trustees resign, United States Trustees promptly notify courts and parties in interest of the old trustee's resignation and the successor trustee's appointment.

Argument

I. MR. DEMCZYK WAS FREE TO RESIGN HIS POSITION AS TRUSTEE AND THE BANKRUPTCY COURT ERRED WHEN IT ORDERED HIM TO CONTINUE TO SERVE AS TRUSTEE UNLESS AND UNTIL THE COURT DECIDED IT WAS APPROPRIATE FOR HIM TO RESIGN

A. A Trustee May Vacate His Office by Death, Resignation, or Removal, and Only Removal Requires Bankruptcy Court Action

The Bankruptcy Court concluded that its express statutory power under 11 U.S.C. § 324 to "remove" a trustee "for cause" implicitly allowed it to prohibit Mr. Demczyk from resigning his position as Chapter 12 trustee unless the court determined it was appropriate for him to do so.

Memorandum Opinion at 8-17. Although acknowledging that section 324 applies only to removal, not resignation, the court concluded this section also applied to resignation because section 324 "does not restrict the use of this procedure to only certain, specified cases, and does not prevent its use in cases of resignation." Id. at 8.

There is no support for the notion that a statute will be presumed to apply to things it does not mention. The Federal Deposit Insurance Act, for example, does not "prevent its use," to quote the decision below, in cases brought under the Migratory Birds Act, but its failure to prohibit such an application is meaningless. It would be impossible to draft a statute that enumerates everything to which a statute does not apply. The plain language of section 324 applies only to removals and should properly be limited to removals.

The court below also erred in ruling that its power to remove encompasses a power to block a resignation. "Remove" and "resign" have totally different meanings. To "remove" means "to force (one) to leave a place or to go away: as . . . to dismiss from office." Webster's Third New International Dictionary of the English Language Unabridged, p. 1921 (Merriam-Webster, Inc. 1993). To resign is "to give up, relinquish, or forswear one's office, rank, membership, post, or charge esp. formally and definitely." Id. at 1932. See also Webster's II New Riverside University Dictionary, p. 1000 (Riverside Pub. Co. 1988) (defining the word "resign" as "to give up a position, esp. by formal notification: QUIT.").[3] Removal requires a second party who uses force to dismiss the office holder, while resignation requires only one actor who voluntarily gives up his office.

[3] Cf. Gresham v. Superior Court, 44 Cal.App.2d 664, 666, 112 P.2d 965, 967 (Ct. App. 1941) (in context of attorney discipline "To resign means to give up or surrender voluntarily the privilege of practicing law. This definition presupposes the voluntary act and volition of the attorney in relinquishing his privilege and does not connote any misconduct upon the part of the person resigning from the State Bar, it being presumed that he did so for reasons good and sufficient to him and not because of any misconduct on his part.").

The Bankruptcy Code and Rules also carefully distinguish between the terms "remove" and "resign." The Code recognizes that the office of trustee in a particular case may from time to time become vacant, and expressly protects pending actions and proceedings initiated by a prior trustee. 11 U.S.C. § 325 (vacancy does not abate pending actions – successor trustee automatically substituted as party). Federal Rule of Bankruptcy Procedure 2012, which implements section 325, expressly provides that a successor trustee is automatically substituted when one of four things happens: the " trustee dies, resigns, is removed, or otherwise ceases to hold office" (emphasis added). Moreover, two other sections of the Bankruptcy Code, 703(a) and 1104(d), expressly list the terms "remove" and "resign" in the same sentence and separate them by the disjunctive "or." 11 U.S.C. §§ 703(a) and 1104(d) (noting a trustee can "die[] or resign[] during a case" or be "removed under section 324 of this title.").

On this point, the Sixth Circuit has said that "[i]t is a basic principle of statutory construction that terms joined by the disjunctive 'or' must have different meanings because otherwise the statute or provision would be redundant." United States v. Hill, 79 F.3d 1477, 1482-83 (6th Cir. 1996) (citing Garcia v. U.S., 469 U.S. 70, 73 (1984) (holding that "[c]anons of construction indicate that terms connected in the disjunctive in this manner be given separate meanings.")).[4] Given the Code's disjunctive separation of the terms "remove" and "resign," a separation also found in Federal Rule of Bankruptcy Procedure 2012, it was error for the Bankruptcy Court to conclude that its power to "remove" trustees also gave it the power implicitly to prevent a trustee's voluntary resignation. This conclusion is also consistent with other rules of statutory construction. When interpreting section 324, one must presume that Congress "says in a statute what it means and means in a statute what it says." Connecticut National Bank v. Germain, 503 U.S. 249, 254 (1992). Here the statute grants the Bankruptcy Court the power over trustee removal – not resignation – and that language should be applied as written. Similarly, the Bankruptcy Court's interpretation violates the canon of expressio unius est exclusio alterius. "It is generally presumed that Congress acts intentionally and purposely in the disparate inclusion or exclusion." Russello v. U.S., 464 U.S. 16, 23 (1983). Congress limited section 324 to trustee removal. Its inclusion excludes other acts creating a vacancy in the office of trustee such as a resignation.

The decision below also conflicts with the purposes underlying the Bankruptcy Code. As discussed above, Congress separated the administrative and judicial functions in the Bankruptcy Reform Act of 1978. United States Trustees were given the administrative duties of appointing and replacing trustees. Accepting a resignation is a similar task. The only purpose of acceptance is to memorialize the creation of a vacancy and prevent the subsequent withdrawal of a resignation having a future effective date. See Davis v. Marion County Engineer, 60 Ohio St.3d 2000) ("Different words in a statute, in this case 'authorized' and 'consistent,' should be given different meanings unless the context indicates otherwise." (citing Bailey v. United States, 516 U.S. 137, 143 (1995)); United States v. Rouleau, 894 F.2d 13, 14 (1st Cir.1990) (a series of operative terms in a criminal statute must be read in the disjunctive and are distinct in their meaning); United States v. Behnezhad, 907 F.2d 896, 898 (9th Cir.1990) (a statute written in the disjunctive is generally construed as "setting out separate and distinct alternatives").

53, 55, 573 N.E.2d 51, 54 (1991) ("Absent acceptance in this manner [i.e., a in writing clearly indicating that the resignation was accepted by the party empowered to do so], the public employee should be free to withdraw his or her tender of resignation prior to its purported effective date."). This is fundamentally different from determining whether to remove a trustee for "cause" under section 324. The latter requires a judicial determination of whether cause exists. In order to make this determination, the court must give notice, conduct a hearing, receive and weigh evidence, and enter findings of fact and conclusions of law. The mere acceptance of a resignation contains none of these requirements.

The Bankruptcy Court's decision also diverges from the overwhelming weight of authority recognizing that trustees may freely resign. See 2A James W. Moore & Lawrence P. King, Collier on Bankruptcy ¶ 44.20 (14th ed.1978) ("The statute [Bankruptcy Act of 1898] does not specifically provide for the resignation of the trustee, although a trustee, of course, may resign."). Countless reported cases note the resignation of a trustee without comment. E.g., United States v. Curran, 967 F.2d 5, 6 (1st Cir. 1992); In re Stillwell, 12 F.2d 205, 206 (6th Cir. 1926); In re Carolina Cooperage Co., 96 F. 950, 952 (E.D.N.C.1899) (bankruptcy trustees "can relieve themselves of the burden [of office] without the nominal expense of a postage stamp, by a few lines resigning the trust, sent under a frank as official business.").

In fact, a trustee may voluntarily resign even in the face of removal. Resignation in these circumstances moots any pending motion to remove a trustee. See In re Grand Jury Proceedings, 119 B.R. 945, 947 (E.D. Mich. 1990) (bankruptcy court dismissed motion to remove trustee as moot because of trustee's voluntary resignation); Flournoy v. Hershner, 68 B.R. 165, 168 (M.D. Ga. 1986) (prosecution of pending removal motion became "unnecessary" due to standing trustee's voluntary resignation); In re Slodov, 28 B.R. 698, 706-7 (Bankr. N.D. Ohio 1983), aff'd, 849 F.2d 610 (6th Cir. 1988) (table) ("Had [former trustee] not resigned, it may well be that he would have been removed from office."). See also Petrino v. Graham (In re Graham), 946 F.2d 901, 1991 WL 204953 (10th Cir. Oct. 11, 1991) (removal action mooted by trustee's resignation).

B. A Trustee's Resignation is Effective When Received by the United States Trustee

The Bankruptcy Code and Rules are silent on the mechanics of resignation. Under the common law, the authority who exercises the power to appoint a successor also accepts the resignation of a public officer.[5] E.g., Rockingham County v. Luten Bridge Co., 35 F.2d 301, 306 (4th Cir. 1929) ("It is well-established law that, in the absence of express statutory enactment, the authority to accept the resignation of a public officer rests with the power to appoint a successor to fill the vacancy" (emphasis added)); Van Orsdall v. Hazard, 3 Hill 243, 247 (N.Y. Sup. Ct. 1842) ("the right to accept a resignation passes incidentally with a right to elect."). Therefore, a trustee wishing to voluntarily resign from the office of trustee must tender his resignation to the United States Trustee, the officer who appointed the trustee and who will appoint a successor. The resignation may be either "in writing or by parol, express, or even by implication." Van Orsdall, 3 Hill at 247. For obvious reasons, resignations in writing are preferred, and Mr. Demczyk, in a clear and unambiguous statement, resigned as standing trustee: "Please accept my resignation as the standing Chapter 12 trustee for the Northern District of [5] Section 325 refers to the "office" of trustee. See also In re Grand Jury Proceedings, 119 B.R. 945, 950 (E.D. Mich. 1990) ("the position of Chapter 7 Trustee is a public office").

Ohio, Eastern Division, effective November 20, 2000." Memorandum Opinion at 5-6. That would have been effective but for the court's sua sponte order to the contrary.

Mr. Demczyk, and any other bankruptcy trustee, may freely resign from the office of bankruptcy trustee. This doctrine, as applied to public officers generally, was first set forth in United States v. Wright, 28 F. Cas. 792 (C.C.D. Ohio 1839) (No. 16,775). In that case, Circuit Justice McLean stated:

> There can be no doubt that a civil officer has a right to resign his office at pleasure, and it is not in the power of the executive to compel him to remain in office. It is only necessary that the resignation should be received, to take effect, and this does not depend upon the acceptance or rejection of the resignation by the president.

Id. at 793. This view of resignation has been followed in a number of states, including Ohio. Reiter v. State ex rel. Durrell, 51 Ohio St. 74, 81, 36 N.E. 943, 945 (1894). In the bankruptcy context, one old case also appears to follow the view that a trustee resignation would be effective upon receipt. Carolina Cooperage, 96 F. at 952 (trustees "can relieve themselves of the burden without the nominal expense of a postage stamp, by a few lines resigning the trust, sent under a frank as official business.").

Another older line of authority states that a resignation is not complete unless "accepted" by the appointing power. E.g., Edwards v. U.S., 103 U.S. 471, 474 (1880) ("after an office was conferred and assumed, it could not be laid down without the consent of the appointing power."); Rockingham County, 35 F.2d at 306 ("[I]n the absence of statute regulating the matter, his resignation should be tendered to the tribunal or officer having power to appoint his successor."); Van Orsdall, 3 Hill at 247 ("One familiar method of vacation is by resignation; and I believe it has never been doubted that, independently or any statutory or constitutional provision, resignations may be effected by the concurrence of the incumbent and the appointing power."). The focus on "acceptance" derived from early laws requiring persons to assume a public office:

> In England a person elected to a municipal office was obliged to accept it . . . and he subjected himself to a penalty by refusal. An office was regarded as a burden with the appointee was bound . . . to bear. And from this it followed [that an appointee could not resign] without the consent of the appointing power. This was required in order that the public interests might suffer no inconvenience for the want of public servants to execute the laws.

Edwards, 103 U.S. at 473-74. Whether "acceptance" is required need not be resolved by this court.[6] Mr. Demczyk's resignation was promptly accepted by the United States Trustee: "I have received your letter of resignation as Chapter 12 Standing Trustee. . . . I accept your resignation. . . ." B.Dkt. #14, M.F.Dkt. #75, G.Dkt. #56.

C. The Procedure for Trustee Resignation Advanced by the Bankruptcy Court would Unduly Burden the Administration of Bankruptcy Cases

In addition to being in error as a matter of law, the resignation procedure created by the Bankruptcy Court (in effect no different than a motion to remove "for cause") would unduly burden the resigning trustee and the administration of bankruptcy cases as a whole. Under the regime envisioned by the Bankruptcy Court, a trustee seeking to resign must file a motion, provide notice to parties in interest, and must establish "cause" to remove himself. The delays created by following this procedure would further shorten the strict deadlines imposed by the Code and Rules upon a successor trustee. E.g., Fed. R. Bankr. P. 4003(b) (trustee must object to claimed exemptions within 30 days after conclusion of meeting of creditors); 4004(a) (trustee must object to discharge within 60 days after first date set for meeting of creditors). The delay also interjects a period of uncertainty as to the trustee's future status. In contrast to the Bankruptcy Court's procedure, the present system of trustee resignation, whereby a resigning trustee tenders his resignation to the United States Trustee in writing, and the United States Trustee accepts and appoints a successor,[7] promotes judicial efficiency and certainty.

[6] If this issue required resolution, the bankruptcy court would have to decide whether to adopt state law as a rule of decision or follow federal common law. See In re Dittmer, 96 B.R. 154, 155 (Bankr. C.D. Ill. 1988) (discussion of Erie doctrine in context of bankruptcy).

II. THE FACT THAT BANKRUPTCY TRUSTEES ARE REFERRED TO AS "OFFICERS OF THE COURT" IN OTHER CONTEXTS DOES NOT GIVE THE BANKRUPTCY COURT THE AUTHORITY TO PREVENT MR. DEMCZYK'S RESIGNATION

The Bankruptcy Court also held that it could prevent Mr. Demczyk's resignation because it had the inherent power to regulate him as an "officer of the court," and because Mr. Demczyk is an attorney. Memorandum Opinion at 18. As an "officer of the court" and attorney, the Bankruptcy Court held that Mr. Demczyk was bound by the Ohio Code of Professional Responsibility[8] as adopted by the Bankruptcy Court. Id. at 20-21. As a preliminary matter, this

[7] The Bankruptcy Court makes much of the perceived lack of "transparency" surrounding Mr. Demczyk's resignation. Memorandum Opinion at 4. However, the Bankruptcy Court ignores the fact that the resignation was not yet effective, and that the United States Trustee fully intended to provide adequate "transparency" once the resignation became effective and a successor was appointed: "Notice will be filed with the Bankruptcy Court in each case of your resignation and my appointment as Chapter 12 interim trustee." B.Dkt. #14, M.F.Dkt. #75, G.Dkt. # 56. This orderly procedure was interrupted by the Bankruptcy Court's sua sponte order.

Ohio R. Prof. Resp. DR-110, adopted by LR 83.7 (N.D. Ohio) and LBR 2090-2 (Bankr. N.D. Ohio).

The Bankruptcy Court's decision on this point is also in error because the Bankruptcy Court's power to regulate the attorney-client relationship does not extend to the statutory office of bankruptcy trustee. In numerous cases, state courts have refused to extend the procedural requirements of their disciplinary rules to other offices absent misconduct on the part of the attorney reflecting on his fitness to practice law. E.g., In re Confidential, 664 A.2d 364, 366-68 (D.C. 1995) (disciplinary rule governing trust accounts not applicable to attorney acting as a stakeholder in private commercial transaction); In re Disciplinary Proceedings Against Jacobs, 161 Wis.2d 392, 409, 467 N.W.2d 783, 791 (1991) (lawyer acting as fiduciary outside attorney-client relationship not required to comply with disciplinary rule regarding handling of client funds); Layton v. State Bar, 50 Cal.3d 889, 904, 789 P.2d 1026, 1034, 268 Cal.Rptr. 845, 853 (1990) ("executor not required to be attorney, and executors are not, as such, subject to [disciplinary rules] that govern attorneys . . .").

The purpose behind regulating the withdrawal of attorneys from representation is to police the contract between attorney and client. An attorney undertaking representation of a client generally has an obligation to see the matter through to completion. E.g., Haines v. Liggett Group, Inc., 814 F. Supp. 414, 424 (D.N.J. 1993). An attorney qua "officer of the court"[9] is qualitatively different from other persons traditionally labeled "officers of the court." In the case of Cammer v. United States, 350 U.S. 399 (1956), the Supreme Court reviewed a citation for criminal contempt entered against an attorney. The Supreme Court concluded that an attorney is not an "officer of the court" within the relevant contempt statute[10]:

[9] Commentators have criticized the application of the term "officer of the court" to attorneys. See James A. Cohen, Lawyer Role, Agency Law, and the Characterization "Officer of the Court", 48 Buffalo L. Rev. 349 (2000) (use of term "mostly rhetoric, caused by self-love and self-promotion"); Eugene R. Gaetke, Lawyers as Officers of the Court, 42 Vand. L. Rev. 39 (1989) (term "vacuous and unduly self-laudatory").

> It has been stated many times that lawyers are "officers of the court." One of the most frequently repeated statements to this effect appears in Ex parte Garland, [71 U.S. 333 (1866)]. The Court pointed out there, however, that an attorney was not an "officer" within the ordinary meaning of that term. Certainly nothing that was said in Ex parte Garland or in any other case decided by this Court places attorneys in the same category as marshals, bailiffs, court clerks or judges. Unlike these officials a lawyer is engaged in a private profession, important though it be to our system of justice. In general he makes his own decisions, follows his own best judgment, collects his own fees and runs his own business. The word 'officer' as it has always been applied to lawyers conveys quite a different meaning from the word 'officer' as applied to people serving as officers within the conventional meaning of that term. . . . We see no reason why the category of 'officers' subject to summary jurisdiction of a court under § 401(2) should be expanded beyond the group of persons who serve as conventional court officers and are regularly treated as such in the laws. See 28 U.S.C. §§ 601 – 963.

Id. at 405. Therefore, the Bankruptcy Court cannot rely on its inherent power to police attorneys as "officers of the court" in their contractual relations with clients because attorneys as "officers of the court" are qualitatively different from other "officers of the court" such as trustees.

Three criminal statutes[11] include trustees in an enumerated list with "other officer of the court," but this fact alone does not place trustee resignation under the control of the Court. The appointment and supervision of trustees were transferred to the United States Trustees by Congress. The use of the term "officer of the court" in an enumerated list with trustees, custodians, and marshals is merely a catchall, and possibly a vestige of the court's former power to appoint trustees. The only practical import of labeling trustees "officers of the court" is in the context of ascertaining whether a trustee enjoys immunity from suit. See In re DeLorean Motor Company, 991 F.2d 1236, 1241 (6th Cir. 1993) ("It is well settled that leave of the appointing forum must be obtained by any party wishing to institute an action in a non-appointing forum against a trustee, for acts done in the trustee's official capacity and within the trustee's authority as an officer of the court"); Kashani v. Fulton (In re Kashani), 190 B.R. 875, 883 (B.A.P. 9th Cir. 1995) ("As an officer of the court, the trustee is entitled to a form of derivative judicial immunity from liability for actions carried out within the scope of the trustee's official duties").

[10] The current statute states that a "court of the United States" shall have the power to punish as contempt, inter alia, "Misbehavior of any of its officers in their official transactions." 18 U.S.C. § 401(2).

[11] 18 U.S.C. §§ 152(1) and (9) ("custodian, trustee, marshal, or other officer of the court"), 153 ("trustee, custodian, marshal, attorney, or other officer of the court"), 154 (custodian, trustee, marshal, or other officer of the court").

Finally, the Bankruptcy Court's conclusion that it may prevent Mr. Demczyk's resignation based upon his status as "officer of the court" is overbroad. The inherent power of the court "must be exercised with restraint and discretion," Chambers v. NASCO, 501 U.S. 32, 44 (1991) (citation omitted), and "is not a broad reservoir of power, ready at an imperial hand, but a limited source; an implied power squeezed from the need to make the court function." NASCO v. Calcasieu Television & Radio, 894 F.2d 696, 702 (5th Cir. 1990), aff'd, 501 U.S. 32 (1991). The Bankruptcy Court relief upon Local Bankruptcy Rule 2090-2 in forbidding Mr. Demczyk's resignation, Memorandum Opinion at 18 n.11, but this rule by its plain language only grants the Bankruptcy Court the authority to sanction "to control or eliminate disruptive, abusive, or unprofessional practices or conduct." The term "officer of the court" as applied in cases and statutes often includes persons under the control of the Executive Branch such as bankruptcy trustees and United States Marshals. See e.g., 18 U.S.C. § 153 (embezzlement by "trustee, custodian, marshal, attorney, or other officer of the court"). The Bankruptcy Court's reasoning concerning its authority over "officers of the court" has no limits, and could be used by a court in support of an order preventing the resignation of a United States Marshal, United States Attorney, United States Trustee, or any other Executive Branch official who perform a role in the administration of justice. Such an assertion of authority over so-called "officers of the court" would eviscerate the separation of powers enshrined in the Constitution. See generally Mistretta v. United States, 488 U.S. 361 (1989).

ON APPEAL FROM THE UNITED STATES DISTRICT COURT FOR THE NORTHERN DISTRICT OF OHIO

PROOF BRIEF FOR THE APPELLANT

Statement Of Jurisdiction

The district court had jurisdiction under 28 U.S.C. 158(a)(1) & (c)(1)(A) over these consolidated appeals from a final collateral order of the bankruptcy court. This Court has jurisdiction pursuant to 28 U.S.C. 1291. Lindsey v. O'Brien, Tanski, Tanzer & Young, et al. (In re Dow Corning Corp.), 86 F.3d 482, 488 (6th Cir. 1996), cert. denied, 519 U.S. 1071 (1997). The district court entered its judgment on October 24, 2001. This appeal was timely filed on December 21, 2001. R. 12, Apx. __.

Statement Of The Issue

Whether the voluntary resignation of a bankruptcy trustee in a pending case can be accepted by the United States Trustee as a ministerial act, or must be submitted to the bankruptcy court for approval, after an evidentiary hearing, as justified.

Statement Of The Case

A. Nature Of The Case, Course Of Proceedings, And Disposition Below.

This appeal arises from three cases filed under Chapter 12 of the Bankruptcy Code, 11 U.S.C. 1201 et seq., in the bankruptcy court in the Eastern Division of the Northern District of Ohio: In re Dale R. Brookover, et al., N.D. Ohio Bankr. No. 00-52012; In re Montgomery Farms, N.D. Ohio Bankr. No. 95-50187; and In re Jack Guilitto, et al., N.D. Ohio Bankr. No. 93-51659. The trustee for each case was Michael V. Demczyk, the standing Chapter 12 trustee appointed by the United States Trustee pursuant to 28 U.S.C. 586(b) & 11 U.S.C. 1202. In October 2000, Mr. Demczyk tendered his resignation as standing trustee in these cases to the United States Trustee, who accepted it and notified the bankruptcy court that a successor trustee would be substituted. Bankr. R. 14 (Trustee's Rejection Of Appointment), Apx. __; Bankr. R. 15 (Letter from U.S. Trustee To Bankruptcy Court), Apx. __.[1]

The bankruptcy court, sua sponte, issued an order in each case directing Mr. Demczyk to continue to serve as trustee, pending a court order to the contrary. Bankr. R. 16, Apx. __. The United States Trustee filed a motion for reconsideration. Bankr. R. 17, Apx. __. Following a hearing, the bankruptcy court issued a published decision in all three cases denying reconsideration. Bankr. R. 31, Apx. __; In re Dale R. Brookover, et al., 259 B.R. 884 (Bankr. N.D. Ohio 2001).

The United States Trustee appealed the orders to the district court pursuant to 28 U.S.C. 158(a). D. Ct. R. 1 (Notice of Bankruptcy Appeal), Apx. __. The district court consolidated the three appeals, designating In re Brookover as the lead case, D. Ct. R. 8, and issued an order affirming the bankruptcy court. D. Ct. R. 10 (Mem. Opinion and Order), Apx. __; D. Ct. R. 11 (Judgment), Apx. __; Robiner v. Demczyk, 269 B.R. 167 (N.D. Ohio 2001).[2] Mr. Demczyk continues to serve as trustee pursuant to the bankruptcy court's order. The United States Trustee took this appeal.

[2] This Court has re-styled the consolidated appeal as In re Brookover, Montgomery Farms, and Guilitto, to reflect that Mr. Demczyk is not an adverse party in this appeal. See D. Ct. R. 10 at 2-3 nn. 4, 6 & 7, Apx. __, nn. 4, 6 & 7, 269 B.R. at 168-69 nn. 4, 6 & 7.

B. Statutory Scheme: Bankruptcy Trustees And The U.S. Trustee.

A bankruptcy trustee is a disinterested professional (a lawyer, certified public accountant, or other qualified individual) appointed to administer the debtor's estate for the benefit of creditors. See 11 U.S.C. 704 & 1106 (duties of a trustee); 28 U.S.C. 586(d); 28 C.F.R. 58.3(b) & 58.4(b). Bankruptcy trustees are not government employees, and their compensation comes from the private bankruptcy estate, not from the government. The United States Trustee (UST) is an official appointed by the Attorney General with responsibility for supervising the administration of bankruptcy cases within a geographic region, including the selection, appointment and supervision of bankruptcy trustees. See 28 U.S.C. 581 et seq. The UST also has standing to raise any issue under the bankruptcy title and may appear and be heard on any bankruptcy issue. 11 U.S.C. 307.

The office of United States Trustee was created to improve bankruptcy administration, primarily by relieving the courts of responsibility for appointment and supervision of bankruptcy trustees, which did not work well and had created the appearance of bias. See Morgenstern v. Revco D.S., Inc. (In re Revco D.S., Inc.), 898 F.2d 498, 500 (6th Cir. 1990). Congress specified that the United States Trustees "were to be independent of direct court supervision, as 'executives of the bankruptcy network,'" and "it likened the U.S. trustee's relation to that of a prosecutor." Id.

(citation omitted). This Court has noted that in creating the UST system, Congress "'sought to separate the administrative duties in bankruptcy from the judicial tasks, leaving the bankruptcy judges free to resolve disputes untainted by knowledge of administrative matters unnecessary and perhaps prejudicial to an impartial judicial determination.'" Joelson v. United States, 86 F.3d 1413, 1415 (6th Cir. 1996) (citation omitted).

Chapter 12 of the Bankruptcy Code, 11 U.S.C. 1201 et seq., under which the underlying cases were filed, provides for the adjustment of debts of family farmers with regular annual income. Chapter 12 is modeled after Chapter 13, 11 U.S.C. 1301 et seq., which provides for adjustment of debts of individuals with regular income. Both chapters allow debtors to repay their debts over a period of years pursuant to a repayment plan.

A trustee in a Chapter 12 or 13 case is appointed by the UST. See 11 U.S.C. 1202 & 1302. The UST either appoints a trustee for each individual case, or where the number of Chapter 12 or 13 cases brought in a particular region warrants, the UST may appoint a "standing trustee" to serve in all cases filed under such chapter. 28 U.S.C. 586(b); 11 U.S.C. 1202(a) & 1302(a). Either way, the trustee is supervised by the UST. 28 U.S.C. 586(a) & (b). The trustee must file a bond in favor of the United States for the faithful performance of his or her duties, 11 U.S.C. 322, and the trustee is compensated out of the debtor's estate. 11 U.S.C. 326 & 28 U.S.C. 586(e).

The UST also appoints and supervises trustees in the two other principal types of bankruptcy, Chapter 7 (liquidation) and Chapter 11 (business reorganization).[3] In a Chapter 7 case, the UST appoints an interim trustee, 11 U.S.C. 701(a)(1) & 28 U.S.C. 586(a), who becomes the permanent trustee unless another trustee is elected by the creditors, see 11 U.S.C. 702 & 28 U.S.C. 586(a)(1). And in a Chapter 11 case, the court may order the UST to appoint a trustee, rather than the debtor, to manage the reorganization process, 11 U.S.C. 1104(a), and such a trustee is also supervised by the UST. 28 U.S.C. 586(a). Chapter 7 and Chapter 11 trustees must also file a bond in favor of the United States, and are also compensated out of the debtor's estate. 11 U.S.C. 322 & 326.

C. Statement Of The Facts.

1. Mr. Demczyk's Resignation.

In this case, Michael V. Demczyk was the standing Chapter 12 bankruptcy trustee serving in the Eastern Division of the Northern District of Ohio. In that [3] Chapters 7, 11, 12 and 13 are the four principal types of bankruptcy. The remaining type, Chapter 9 (adjustment of debts of a municipality), is not implicated here because there is no trustee in a Chapter 9 case and the UST has no role under Chapter 9.

capacity, he served as trustee in the three Chapter 12 cases giving rise to this appeal. On October 31, 2000, Mr. Demczyk sent a letter to the UST voluntarily resigning as standing Chapter 12 trustee, effective November 30, 2000. See Bankr. R. 14; see also Bankr. R. 31, Mem. Op., at 5-6, Apx. ____; 259 B.R. at 888. The UST accepted his resignation by letter dated November 17, 2000, in which the UST thanked Mr. Demczyk for his years of service and noted that "[t]here have been insufficient Chapter 12 case filings over the past few years to support a Standing Trustee operation, and we appreciate your willingness to administer these cases for minimal compensation." Bankr. R. 14, Apx.__ (UST Letter to Demczyk, Nov. 17, 2000). The UST stated that he would notify the bankruptcy court of Mr. Demczyk's resignation and of the UST's substitution as interim Chapter 12 trustee in all pending cases. Id. And, the UST stated that his staff would "be in contact with you regarding the transition of funds and files to our office," and anticipated "your full cooperation in this regard and in the filing of your final annual report." Id.

At the same time, the UST sent copies of this letter to all bankruptcy judges in the district and the court clerk. Id. The UST included a cover letter to the bankruptcy judge in these three cases further stating that "[o]n the active Chapter 12 cases, we anticipate appointing successor individual case trustees under 11 U.S.C. § 1202(a)." Bankr. R. 15, Apx. __ (UST Letter to Judge Shea-Stonum, Nov. 17, 2000).

2. The Bankruptcy Court Order, Motion To Reconsider, And Hearing.

On November 28, 2000, the bankruptcy court, sua sponte, issued an order in each of these cases, stating that if Mr. Demczyk wishes to resign as trustee, "the Court will await a motion filed and served on all parties in interest." Bankr. R. 16, Apx. __. Meantime, "Mr. Demczyk is to continue to carry out his responsibilities in [each case], absent a Court Order to the contrary." Id., citing 11 U.S.C. 324.

The UST moved for reconsideration, asserting that it is within the UST's administrative authority under the Bankruptcy Code to accept trustee resignations, and there is no basis for judicial intervention. Bankr. R. 17, Apx. __, & Bankr. R. 20 (Mem. in Support). At the hearing on the motion, Mr. Demczyk testified that he resigned as standing Chapter 12 trustee on his own initiative. Bankr. R. 39 (Hearing Transcript) at 11, Apx. __. He testified that he told members of the UST staff at the time that he wished to resign because "the effort expected of me" to continue with the cases still pending "simply isn't reflected in the amount of compensation" he was receiving, id. at 12, Apx. __, and he "would prefer not to be burdened with the additional work effort." Id. at 13, Apx. __. The UST pointed out that the Bankruptcy Code assigns responsibility for appointing and supervising trustees to the UST, and the Code and Rules are silent on the mechanics of trustee resignation. Accordingly, the UST argued, the common law rule applies, which recognizes that the authority to accept the resignation of a public officer rests with the person having authority to appoint the successor, which in these circumstances is the UST. See Bankr. R. 20 (Mem. in Support of Motion); Bankr. R. 39 (Transcript of Hearing); Bankr. R. 29 (Supp. Mem. in Support of Motion).

3. The Bankruptcy Court Ruling.

The bankruptcy court denied reconsideration. Bankr. R. 31 (Mem. Opinion); Apx. __; In re Dale R. Brookover, 259 B.R. 884 (Bankr. N.D. Ohio 2001).[4] The court recognized that the UST has authority to appoint a trustee, to replace a trustee who has departed, or to discontinue using a standing trustee for future cases, but it disagreed that the Code is silent on the procedure for trustee resignations from pending cases. Id., Mem. Op. at 7-15; Apx. ____; 259 B.R. at 889-92. Rather, the court held, trustee resignations come within 11 U.S.C. 324, which provides that "[t]he Court, after notice and a hearing, may remove a trustee * * * for cause." Id. In the court's view, the language of § 324 "does not prevent its use in cases of resignation." Id., Mem. Op. at 8; Apx. _; 259 B.R. at 889. The court reasoned that this "plain" language, "clearly setting forth" the court's role when a trustee "seeks * * * removal" from a pending case, precludes resort to the common law. Id., Mem. Op. at 9; Apx. _; 259 B.R. at 889-90. In addition, in the court's view, since 28 U.S.C. 586, which sets forth the duties of a UST, does not mention a duty to accept a trustee's resignation from a pending case, "such duty can be presumed to be excluded." Id., Mem. Op. at 15-17; Apx. ____; 259 B.R. at 892-94.

The bankruptcy court refused to recognize resignation and removal as distinct events under the Bankruptcy Code, as they are treated in 11 U.S.C. §§ 703(a) and 1104(d) (UST to appoint successor trustee in certain circumstances if a trustee under those Chapters "dies or resigns * * * or is removed under section 324"). The court reasoned that "Congress did not reiterate that same language in §1202," and this is a Chapter 12 case. Id., Mem. Op. 10-11; Apx. ____; 259 B.R. at 890. Moreover, the court concluded that "for cause" removal under § 324 is broad enough to encompass a trustee's voluntary resignation, because a dictionary definition of "for cause" is not limited to wrongdoing but also "contemplates considerations of public policy and law," which the court held could not be adequately addressed without notice to interested parties and a judicial hearing. Id., Mem. Op. at 11-12; Apx. ____; 259 B.R. at 890-91. The court also remarked that if such a hearing were held and elicited evidence similar to that at the hearing on the UST's motion for reconsideration, "this Court would have determined that there was nothing to justify allowing [Mr. Demczyk's] resignation from the pending cases." Id., Mem. Op. at 5 n.2; Apx. __ n.2; 259 B.R.at 887 n.2.

Finally, the court stated that a bankruptcy trustee is "an officer of the court," and thus is subject to the court's "inherent power to regulate those officers of the court admitted before it." Id., Mem. Op. at 18 & n.11; Apx. __ & n.11; 259 B.R. at 894 & n.11 (citing the court's inherent disciplinary authority over "any attorney or party" under Local Bankruptcy Rule 2090-2(c)). The court also invoked its "inherent power to control its docket as superintendent of its pending caseload." Id. And, it noted that although a bankruptcy trustee is not required to be an attorney, Mr. Demczyk "happens to be an attorney," and is therefore subject to the Code of Professional Responsibility and Local Civil Rule 83.9, under which an "attorney of record" may not withdraw from a pending case without notice to all parties and leave of the court. Id., Mem. Op. 18-21 & n.12; Apx. _____& n.12; 259 B.R. at 894-95 & n.12.

Accordingly, the bankruptcy court directed that Mr. Demczyk "will remain the Standing Chapter 12 Trustee" in these cases "unless and until his resignation or removal is authorized by this Court after proper notice and hearing." Id., Mem. Op. at 21; Apx. __; 259 B.R. at 895.

4. The District Court Ruling.

The district court affirmed, without separate analysis, "for the reasons set forth in the Bankruptcy Judge's well-reasoned opinion." D.Ct. R. 10 at 8; Apx. __; Robiner v. Demczyk, 269 B.R. 167, 171 (N.D. Ohio 2001). As stated, Mr. Demczyk continues to serve as trustee pursuant to the bankruptcy court's order.

Summary Of Argument

It is a common occurrence for bankruptcy trustees to resign voluntarily in pending cases, for any number of personal or professional reasons. Acceptance of such resignations, and the appointment of successor trustees, is handled expeditiously by United States Trustees as a routine ministerial act, with prompt notice to the court and all interested parties. This case appears to be the first instance in which a court has claimed the power to approve or block a trustee's voluntary resignation. Moreover, the procedure that the bankruptcy court would require – prior notice to all interested parties, an evidentiary hearing, and a judicial determination of whether the trustee's voluntary resignation is "justif[ied]" – creates a controversy where none exists and introduces needless delay. It would substantially burden the resigning trustee, protract the resolution of his status and replacement, and interfere with timely and efficient bankruptcy administration. And, since the ruling does not appear to be limited to resignations of Chapter 12 trustees, it has the potential to disrupt the efficient administration of bankruptcy cases filed under Chapters 7, 11 and 13 as well.

1. The bankruptcy court's ruling is not supported in law. The Bankruptcy Code itself specifies no procedure for the acceptance of a trustee's voluntary resignation, whether by the court or anyone else. However, the Code does expressly provide that a trustee will be appointed and supervised by the United States Trustee. That power is broad enough to encompass acceptance of trustee resignations. Congress's purpose in creating the office of United States Trustee was expressly to take administrative responsibility for bankruptcy cases away from the courts, and place it with the UST. It is a well-established common law principle that, absent a specific statutory provision to the contrary, the authority to accept a public officer's resignation rests with the official having power to appoint the successor. Congress legislates against the backdrop of the common law and is presumed to be aware of its established principles. Accordingly, pursuant to established common law principles and principles of statutory interpretation, and consistent with Congress's intent in creating the UST, the UST's statutory authority to appoint and supervise extends to encompass the acceptance of a trustee's voluntary resignation, without intervention by a court.

2. The court's authority to remove a trustee for "cause" under 11 U.S.C. 324 is inapplicable to a trustee's voluntary resignation. In numerous statutes, including the Bankruptcy Code, Congress has consistently treated resignation and removal as separate and distinct events that may cause a vacancy in public office. Moreover, "removal" for "cause" is *in*voluntary, usually based on a shortcoming of the officerholder, which is not true in the case of a voluntary resignation for the trustee's own reasons. Thus, contrary to the bankruptcy court's view, a court's role in the removal of a trustee for "cause" under 11 U.S.C. 324 cannot be stretched to cover a trustee's voluntary resignation.

3. There is no basis to construe the UST's statutorily enumerated duties to exclude the acceptance of a trustee's resignation. First, the UST's statutory duty to "supervise" trustees comfortably embraces the administrative authority to accept a trustee's resignation, particularly since Congress did not withhold such power from the UST or assign it to anyone else, such as the court. Moreover, the maxim expressio unius est exclusio alterius is only an interpretive aid, and cannot be used to override legislative intent. Applying it as the bankruptcy court would do here would defeat Congress's dominant purpose in creating the office of UST, which was to take over the administration of bankruptcy cases, and particularly the management of case trustees, from the courts.

4. Finally, there is no basis for judicial intervention in a trustee's resignation on the ground that a trustee is an "officer of the court." A trustee is not appointed by the court, is not a court employee or official, and is specifically not required to be a lawyer. Nor does the trustee function in a lawyer-client relationship. Accordingly, the bankruptcy court's reliance on disciplinary rules and canons applicable to the attorney-client context is inapposite here. Although the trustee in this case happens to be a lawyer, Congress surely did not intend that the procedure governing a trustee's resignation would vary depending on whether a trustee is or is not an attorney. Moreover, because Congress has made it the UST's responsibility, and not the court's, to assure that trustees fulfill their responsibilities, and to substitute successor trustees when necessary, there is no need or occasion for a court to invoke its "inherent power" over its own functioning in order to conduct a purely speculative inquiry into the bona fides of a bankruptcy trustee's resignation.

Accordingly, as we show, the district court's judgment should be reversed.

Argument

Standard of Review. This is an appeal in a bankruptcy case raising questions of law only. Accordingly, review is de novo. Mayor and City Council of Baltimore, Md., v. State of West Virginia, et al. (In re Eagle-Picher Indus., Inc.), 285 F.3d 522, 526-27 (6th Cir. 2002); Barlow v. M.J. Waterman & Assocs., Inc. (In re M.J. Waterman & Assocs., Inc.), 227 F.3d 604, 607 (6th Cir. 2000).

THE UNITED STATES TRUSTEE, WHO APPOINTS AND SUPERVISES TRUSTEES UNDER THE BANKRUPTCY CODE, HAS INHERENT AUTHORITY TO ACCEPT A TRUSTEE'S RESIGNATION.

A. The Common Law Rule Applies Because It Is Consistent With Congress's Intent In Creating The UST And There Is No Contrary Provision In The Bankruptcy Code.

The Bankruptcy Code authorizes the United States Trustee to appoint and supervise bankruptcy trustees under all chapters of the Code. 28 U.S.C. 586; 11 U.S.C. 701, 1104, 1202 & 1302. The Code makes no specific provision for acceptance of a trustee's voluntary resignation. Therefore, consistent with common law principles and Congress's express purpose to relieve the courts of administrative duties in bankruptcy cases, see Morgenstern and Joelson, the UST's powers to appoint and to "supervise" are necessarily broad enough to subsume the authority to accept a trustee's voluntary resignation, as an administrative matter, without intervention by a court.

Under the common law, absent an express statutory provision to the contrary, a public officer[5] has the right to resign, and the authority to accept the resignation resides with the person or body having authority to appoint the successor. Rockingham County v. Luten Bridge Co., 35 F.2d 301, 306 (4th Cir. 1929) ("in the absence of express statutory enactment, the authority to accept the resignation of a public officer rests with the power to appoint a successor to fill the vacancy. The right to accept a resignation is said to be incidental to the power of appointment"); McCarthy v. State, 55 Ariz. 328, 337, 101 P.2d 449, 452 (1940); Sawyer v. San Antonio, 149 Tex. 408, 412-13, 234 S.W.2d 398, 401 (1950); Tooele County v. De La Mare, 90 Utah 46, 59 P.2d 1155, 1159 (1936). See 63C Am. Jur. 2d, Public Officers and Employees §§ 153 & 155 (1997). See also Carlucci v. Doe, 488 U.S. 93, 99 (1988) (citing the "general proposition" that where a public official has the statutory power to appoint others, "absent a 'specific provision to the contrary, the power of removal from office is incident to the power of appointment'") (citation omitted).

These common law principles apply here. Astoria Fed. Sav. and Loan Ass'n v. Solimino, 501 U.S. 104, 108 (1991) ("where a common-law principle is well established * * * the courts may take it as given that Congress has legislated with an expectation that the principle will apply except 'when a statutory purpose to the contrary is evident'") (quoting Isbrandtsen Co. v. Johnson, 343 U.S. 779, 783 (1952)). The bankruptcy court rejected the common law rule because it erroneously concluded that the Bankruptcy Code specifies a role for the court in accepting or refusing the voluntary resignation of a trustee. It does not.

The Bankruptcy Code and Rules make no explicit provision anywhere for acceptance of trustee resignations by anyone. However, the Code and Rules plainly contemplate that a trustee may resign – or die, or be removed – creating a vacancy that requires appointment of a successor. See 11 U.S.C. 325 ("[a] vacancy in the office of trustee during a case does not abate any pending action or proceeding, and the successor trustee shall be substituted as a party in such action or proceeding");[6] Bankr. Rule 2012(b) ("[w]hen a trustee dies, resigns, is removed, or otherwise ceases to hold office during the pendency of a case under the Code * * * the successor is automatically substituted"). See also 2A James W. Moore & Lawrence P. King, Collier on Bankruptcy ¶ 44.20 (14th ed. 1978) (the Bankruptcy Act of 1898 "does not specifically provide for the resignation of the trustee, although a trustee, of course, may resign.") And, as the bankruptcy court acknowledged, the UST unquestionably wields the sole authority to appoint and supervise successor Chapter 12 trustees, just as the UST has sole authority to appoint and supervise the original

Burr*, 64 Fla. 83, 86, 59 So. 787, 788 (Fla. 1912) ("[t]he purpose of [the former version of] this provision of the bankruptcy law [which actually only referred to death or disability] was to prevent the abatement of suits involving the estate of the bankrupt upon a vacancy in the office of the trustee, and it makes no difference how such vacancy occurs, whether by the death, removal, or resignation of the trustee") (emphasis added).

trustee. See Advisory Committee Note to Bankr. Rule 2012(b) ("a court order is not required for the appointment of a successor trustee").

Nor, contrary to the bankruptcy court's view (cf. Bankr. R. 31, Mem. Op. 10-11; Apx. __; 259 B.R. at 890), does it matter for this purpose that Chapters 7 and 11 of the Code expressly refer to the UST's role in appointing a successor for a trustee who "dies," or "resigns," or "is removed," whereas Chapter 12 (and Chapter 13, on which it was modeled) do not. It was necessary to specify the UST's role in appointing individual successor trustees under Chapters 7 and 11 because that role is contingent – in Chapter 7, on whether the creditors have exercised their right to elect a trustee,[7] and in Chapter 11, on whether the court ordered appointment of a trustee in the first instance (rather than allowing the debtor-in-possession to manage the reorganization).[8] The absence of any parallel provision in Chapters 12 and 13 specifying the UST's authority to appoint a successor to a trustee who either "dies," "resigns" or "is removed" is not surprising, since the Code already makes clear that the UST "shall appoint" the trustee under those chapters, or that a standing trustee

[7] Chapter 7 provides that the UST shall appoint a successor trustee if a Chapter 7 trustee "dies or resigns * * * or is removed under [11 U.S.C.] 324" and the creditors fail to elect a successor trustee. 11 U.S.C. 703.

[8] Chapter 11 provides that the UST shall appoint a successor trustee if the court had ordered the UST to appoint a Chapter 11 trustee who later "dies or resigns * * * or is removed under [11 U.S.C.] 324." 11 U.S.C. 1104(d).

appointed by the UST under 28 U.S.C. 586(b) "shall serve" in the case, neither of which is contingent on any role for the court or creditors. See 11 U.S.C. 1202(a) & 1302(a).

Thus, under the common law rule, the UST, as the official with the authority to appoint successor trustees, has the administrative authority to accept a trustee's resignation, regardless of whether the trustee serves under Chapter 7, 11, 12 or 13.

B. The Court's Authority To Remove A Trustee "For Cause" Under 11 U.S.C. 324 Has No Bearing On A Trustee's Voluntary Resignation.

The removal provision, 11 U.S.C. 324, on which the bankruptcy court principally relied in rejecting the common law rule, is inapplicable to a trustee's voluntary resignation. Contrary to the court's assertion, its "plain" language addresses only "remov[al] * * * for cause," and cannot be stretched to encompass a trustee's voluntary resignation, any more than it can be stretched to cover a trustee's disability or death.

Congress has consistently treated resignation and removal as separate and distinct events that may cause a vacancy in a public office, both under the Bankruptcy Code, see 11 U.S.C. 703(a) & 1104(d), and Bankr. Rule 2012(b), and elsewhere.[9] [9] In addition to the Bankruptcy Code, the Constitution and numerous federal statutes treat "resignation" and "removal" as distinct events. See U.S. Const. Art. II § 1, cl. 5 ("Removal, Death, Resignation or Inability" of the President or Vice President);

Moreover, the terms have entirely different dictionary definitions: "resignation" is self-initiated, whereas "removal" is imposed by someone else. See Webster's Third New International Dictionary of the English Language Unabridged 1921 (1993) (to "remove" means "to force (one) to leave a place or to go away: as * * * to dismiss from office"); id. 1932 (to "resign" means "to give up, relinquish, or forswear one's office, rank, membership, post, or charge, esp. formally and definitely"). departing from the common understanding of these separate terms, or for conflating the two types of events. Indeed, to do so would ascribe redundancy to numerous U.S. Code provisions.[11]

Moreover, "for cause" removal necessarily implies involuntary termination based on some fault or shortcoming of the person being removed, which is not true in the case of a voluntary resignation for the trustee's own reasons. The Bankruptcy Code does not define "cause," but the term, rooted in the common law, see Arnett v. Kennedy, 416 U.S. 134, 159-60 (1974), is commonly used in federal statutes and regulations relating to the involuntary removal of an officer or dismissal of an employee.[12] The "for cause" standard, in contrast to service "at will," requires a personal reasons implies no such thing. When Congress uses a common law term with a settled meaning, the term must be given that meaning unless Congress indicates otherwise. Nationwide Mut. Ins. Co. v. Darden, 503 U.S. 318, 322 (1992). “Cause” is such a term, and nothing in the Bankruptcy Code suggests that it should be given other than its usual meaning.

C. The UST's Statutorily Enumerated Duties Do Not Exclude The Common Law Authority To Accept A Trustee's Voluntary Resignation.

The bankruptcy court also reasoned that, because acceptance of trustee resignations is not one of the UST's enumerated duties under 28 U.S.C. 586, the UST is barred from such a function under the maxim expressio unius est exclusio alterius. Bankr. R. 31, Mem. Op. at 15-17; Apx. ____; 259 B.R. at 893-94. There are several obvious flaws to this reasoning.

First and foremost, the UST's enumerated duties expressly do include the power to "supervise" bankruptcy trustees, 28 U.S.C. 586(a), and in particular, a standing Chapter 12 trustee. 28 U.S.C. 586(b). The power to "supervise" is certainly (quoting Dillon, Municipal Corporations § 477 (5th ed. 1911)). And see In re Baker, 38 B.R. 705 (D. Md. 1983) ("[m]ost of the case law concerning the removal of a trustee involves intentional misconduct or negligence," id. at 707, or "the best interests of the estate," id. at 708-09) broad enough to encompass the administrative authority to accept a trustee's voluntary resignation, particularly when that authority is not expressly withheld. See Carlucci v. Doe, 488 U.S. at 99 (statutory power to appoint implicitly encompasses power to remove, unless the statute specifically denies such power); Rockingham County v. Luten Bridge Co., 35 F.2d at 306 (common law authority to accept resignations is subsumed in the authority to appoint).

Second, the court's exressio unius argument begs the question, if not the UST, then who can accept a trustee's resignation? Clearly not the court, since § 324 removal procedures do not apply to trustee resignations, and there is no other Code provision or Rule assigning such a duty to the court. Moreover, imputing such a role to the court in resignations is both contrary to the common law rule and, more significantly, defeats Congress's dominant purpose in creating the office of the United States Trustee in the first place, which was to take over the administration of bankruptcy cases, and particularly the management of case trustees, from the courts. Expressio unius is only a canon of statutory construction, to be used as an aid in determining legislative intent. United States v. Barnes, 222 U.S. 513, 519 (1912). "Such canons 'long have been subordinated to the doctrine that courts will construe the details of an act in conformity with its dominating general purpose.'" Herman &

MacLean v. Huddleston, 459 U.S. 375, 387 n.23 (1983), quoting SEC v. Joiner Corp., 320 U.S. 344, 350-51 (1943).

Expressio unius also "'stands on the faulty premise that all possible alternatives or supplemental provisions were necessarily considered and rejected by the legislative draftsmen.'" Abdullah v. American Airlines, Inc., 181 F.3d 363, 372-73 (3d Cir. 1999), quoting National Petroleum Refiners Ass'n v. FTC, 482 F.2d 672, 676 (D.C. Cir. 1973), cert. denied, 415 U.S. 951 (1974). Congress legislates against the backdrop of the common law. Astoria Federal Sav. and Loan, 501 U.S. at 108. The acceptance of trustee resignations is entirely consistent with the UST's other statutorily assigned duties for the appointment, supervision and general administrative management of trustees, and it is consistent with the common law. There is nothing to indicate that Congress consciously rejected the common law rule, or intended to preclude the UST from performing such a clearly related, common law administrative function – especially when it has not been assigned to anyone else. Expressio unius accordingly does not apply as a basis to negate the UST's authority to accept trustee resignations.

D. The Court Cannot Base Its Intervention In A Trustee's Voluntary Resignation On The Premise That A Trustee Is An "Officer Of The Court."

Labeling the trustee an "officer of the court" also provides no basis for judicial intervention in a trustee's voluntary resignation. The bankruptcy court asserted authority over trustee resignations based on its "inherent power to regulate those officers of the court admitted before it and to take appropriate action to assure that they live up to their obligations." Bankr. R. 31 at 18; Apx. __; 259 B.R. at 894.

However, "officer of the court" is an amorphous label, even when applied to lawyers. See generally Eugene R. Gaetke, Lawyers As Officers Of The Court, 42 Vand. L. Rev. 39 (1989). Moreover, a bankruptcy trustee is not appointed by the court, is not a court employee or official, and is specifically not required to be a lawyer. See 28 U.S.C. 586(d); 28 C.F.R. 58.3(b) & 58.4(b) (trustee may be a lawyer, certified public accountant or other person with educational and business qualifications to manage a bankruptcy estate). Rather, the trustee is a private individual appointed by the Executive Branch.

Furthermore, a court's "inherent power" to manage proceedings and participants before it is "not a broad reservoir of power, ready at an imperial hand, but a limited source; an implied power squeezed from the need to make the court function." NASCO, Inc. v. Calcasieu Television and Radio, Inc., 894 F.2d 696, 702 (5th Cir. 1990), cited with approval in Chambers v. NASCO, Inc., 501 U.S. 32, 42 (1991). There is no need to draw upon it here. Congress has deliberately taken administrative responsibility for trustees away from courts and placed it with the United States Trustee, making it the UST's responsibility, not the court's, to assure that trustees fulfill their obligations. 28 U.S.C. 586. A court's re-insertion of itself into trustee resignations undermines Congress's clear intent. The court also has no need to get involved in trustee resignations in order to "make the court function," because the Code already requires the UST to appoint a qualified successor trustee who is automatically substituted in the case, with no abatement of any pending action or proceeding. 11 U.S.C. 325.[15]

The court's citation (Bankr. R. 31, Mem. Op. at 18; Apx. __; 259 B.R. at 894) to two criminal statutes, 18 U.S.C. 153 & 154 – which provide criminal sanctions where fraud, embezzlement, self-dealing, concealment of documents, and other crimes are committed by virtue of an individual's participation in the administration of the bankruptcy estate as a "trustee, custodian, marshal, attorney, or other officer of the court" – adds nothing that would support court intervention in a trustee's

[15] The UST also makes it standard practice to provide prompt notice to the courts and all interested parties regarding the resignation of a trustee and the assignment of a successor. The bankruptcy court's criticism of the adequacy and "transparency" of the UST's notice procedures in this case (see Bankr. R. 31, Mem. Op. 3-6 & n.1; Apx.___ & n.1; 259 B.R. at 886-87 & n.1) is inaccurate and unfair. The court's own opinion demonstrates that the UST provided prompt notice of Mr. Demczyk's resignation to all bankruptcy judges and the clerk's office, and was pretermitted from notifying other interested parties by the court's own order overriding Mr. Demczyk's resignation and requiring him to continue to serve. See id. & n.3.

voluntary resignation. The phrase "other officer of the court" does not necessarily imply that "trustee" is an officer of the court, since it could refer to an "attorney," the proverbial "officer of the court." Moreover, the "officer of the court" terminology is unchanged from the time when trustees were in fact appointed and supervised by the court, and in any event it does not suggest what obligations, beyond honest dealing with the property of the estate, that a trustee might owe to the court or anyone else, and that would not be adequately addressed by the criminal law. A crooked trustee is just as much subject to criminal prosecution whether or not he resigns, and he can be removed, pursuant to 11 U.S.C. 324, if he does not resign. Thus, potential criminal liability of a trustee as an "officer of the court" provides no premise for the court to reach out under its "inherent power" to involve itself in the purely administrative matter of a trustee's voluntary resignation.

The fact that the trustee in this case "happens to be an attorney" (Bankr. R. 31, Mem. Op. at 18-21 & n.12; Apx.____ & n.12; 259 B.R. at 894-95 & n.12) does not alter the equation. Congress surely did not intend that the procedure governing resignation of bankruptcy trustees would vary depending on whether or not a particular trustee happens to be an attorney. Mr. Demczyk is not acting as an attorney in these cases, but rather in an administrative capacity, as a trustee appointed by the UST to perform delegated statutory duties in which he is overseen by the UST. There is no attorney-client relationship. The bankruptcy court's citations (id.) to the Ohio disciplinary rule DR 2-110 and Ohio Local Civil Rule 83.9, which require court permission for an attorney to withdraw from representation of a client in a pending proceeding, are therefore inapposite.[16] And, if the court believes an attorney trustee has committed sanctionable misconduct under any other disciplinary rule, it is free to lodge such charges regardless of whether he resigns, just as it is presumably free to sanction him, like "any attorney or party," under N.D. Ohio Bankr. Local Rule 2090-2(c) (see Bankr. R. 31, Mem. Op. at 18 n.12; Apx.____ n.11; 259 B.R. at 894 n.12), "[w]hen necessary to control or eliminate disruptive, abusive, or unprofessional practices or conduct." That possibility, like the possibility of criminal liability under the criminal statutes, provides no reason for the court to get involved in the purely administrative process of resignation in order to conduct a wholly speculative inquiry into the resigning trustee's bona fides.

[16] Indeed, a number of state courts have recognized that attorneys acting in a non-lawyer capacity are not subject to disciplinary rules governing attorney relationships to clients and client funds. See In re Confidential, 664 A.2d 364, 366-68 (D.C. 1995) (disciplinary rule governing trust accounts not applicable to attorney acting as a stakeholder in private commercial transaction); In re Disciplinary Proceedings Against Jacobs, 467 N.W. 2d 783, 791 (Wis. 1991) (lawyer acting as fiduciary outside attorney-client relationship not required to comply with disciplinary rule regarding handling of client funds); Layton v. State Bar, 789 P.2d 1026, 1034 (Cal. 1990) (executor not required to be an attorney, and executors are not, as such, subject to attorney disciplinary rules).

Conclusion

For the foregoing reasons, this Court should reverse the judgment of the district court, with instructions to direct the bankruptcy court to vacate its orders requiring Mr. Demczyk to continue to serve as Chapter 12 trustee in these cases.

STATEMENT OF APPELLATE JURISDICTION

This Court has jurisdiction over the appeal under 28 U.S.C. § 158(a)(1), which confers jurisdiction on the district courts of the United States to hear appeals "from final judgments, orders, and decrees" of bankruptcy judges. An order converting a bankruptcy case from chapter 11 to chapter 7 is a final order subject to appeal. Rosson v. Fitzgerald (In re Rosson), 545 F.3d 764, 770 (9th Cir. 2008). The bankruptcy court's final order converting the appellant's chapter 11 bankruptcy case to a case under chapter 7 of the Bankruptcy Code was entered on December 17, 2009. [BC #115].[1] The appellant's notice of appeal was timely filed under 28 U.S.C. § 158(a)(2) and Fed. R. Bankr. P. 8002(a) on December 28, 2009, giving rise to this appeal.

[1] Documents in the record transmitted to the district court by the bankruptcy court are identified by the designation "BC #" followed by the docket number assigned to the document by the clerk of the bankruptcy court.

STATEMENT OF THE ISSUES

The only issue presented in this appeal is whether the bankruptcy court abused its discretion by granting the chapter 11 trustee's motion to convert the appellant's bankruptcy case from chapter 11 to chapter 7 under 11 U.S.C. § 1112(b)(1), rather than dismissing the case, based on the court's factual finding that conversion was in the best interest of the creditors and the estate.

STANDARD OF REVIEW

This court reviews the bankruptcy court's decision to convert a case under 11 U.S.C. § 1112(b)(1) from chapter 11 to chapter 7 for abuse of discretion, which occurs when the "court's decision rests upon a clearly erroneous finding of fact, an errant conclusion of law, or an improper application of law to fact." United States v. Baker, 432 F.3d 1189, 1202 (11th Cir. 2005); Lumber Exch. Bldg. Ltd. P'ship v. Mut. Life Ins. Co. (In re Lumber Exch. Bldg. Ltd. P'ship), 968 F.2d 647, 648 (8th Cir. 1992) ("The bankruptcy court has broad discretion in deciding whether to dismiss or convert a Chapter 11 case."); Kates v. Mazzocone, 180 B.R. 782, 785 (E.D.Pa. 1995) (noting that the legislative history directs the bankruptcy court "to use its equitable powers to reach an appropriate result in individual cases").

This court reviews findings of fact for clear error and conclusions of law de novo. Southtrust Bank of Alabama v. Thomas (In re Thomas), 883 F.2d 991, 994 (11th Cir. 1989); Whiting-Turner Contracting Co. v. Elec. Mach. Enter., Inc. (In re Elec. Mach. Enter., Inc.), 479 F.3d 791, 795 (11th Cir. 2007); Fed. R. Bankr. P. 8013 ("Findings of fact . . . shall not be set aside unless clearly erroneous."). Cause to convert a bankruptcy case is a finding of fact, which is clearly erroneous only "when the record contains no evidence on which [the bankruptcy court] rationally could have based that decision." Pioneer Liquidating Corp. v. U.S. Trustee (In re Consol. Pioneer Mortg. Entities), 264 F.3d 803, 806-7 (9th Cir. 2001). A bankruptcy court's determination under section 1112(b)(1) that conversion, instead of dismissal, would better serve the interests of creditors and the estate is a factual finding reviewed for clear error. Id. at 808-09.

STATEMENT OF THE CASE

The appellant, Linda Coty Bullock, commenced this bankruptcy case by filing a voluntary petition for relief under chapter 11 of the Bankruptcy Code on November 3, 2008. Ms. Bullock filed her bankruptcy schedules on December 1, 2008, listing as assets of the estate twenty parcels of real property, including a horse farm, which she valued at $13,599,700, subject to secured claims totaling $4,024,350. [BC #26].

This was Ms. Bullock's second bankruptcy case in under 180 days. Ms. Bullock had previously filed for chapter 13 bankruptcy on July 1, 2008, and had voluntarily dismissed that case on September 10, 2008, after a secured creditor filed a motion for relief from the automatic stay. [BC #62]. Although Ms. Bullock was presumptively prohibited under these circumstances from filing another bankruptcy case for 180 days, the bankruptcy court nevertheless permitted her to proceed with the present case based on "a line of cases that ... permit the second filing under limited circumstances ..." [BC #148 at 15-16]; see 11 U.S.C. § 109(g)(2) (prohibiting an individual from being a debtor in a bankruptcy case if, at any time in the preceding 180 days, he or she requested and obtained the voluntary dismissal of a prior case following a request for relief from the automatic stay).

On June 25, 2009, the United States Trustee moved under 11 U.S.C. § 1112(b) and 28 U.S.C. § 586(a)(8) to dismiss or convert the case.[2] The United States Trustee alleged cause existed to convert or dismiss the case because Ms. Bullock (1) was not administering the estate in the interest of her creditors and had failed to maintain insurance on her properties to protect the interests of her creditors, (2) operated no meaningful business and generated no significant income, (3) had not taken any steps to sell her property in order to pay the claims against the estate, (4) had no cash to fund a reorganization plan, and (5) had not proposed a reorganization plan. [BC #65].

[2] The United States Trustee is an official of the United States Department of Justice appointed by the Attorney General to supervise the administration of bankruptcy cases in this district. 28 U.S.C. § 581(a)(21). Under 11 U.S.C. § 307 "[t]he United States trustee may raise and may appear and be heard on any issue in any case or proceeding under this title but may not file a plan pursuant to section 1121(c) of this title." Courts have repeatedly held that the United States Trustee has standing under section 307 to appear and be heard on any issue in any bankruptcy case, despite the lack of pecuniary interest in the outcome. See, e.g., United Artists Theater Co. v. Walton, 315 F.3d 217, 225 (3d Cir.2003); Scott v. U.S. Trustee, 133 F.3d 917 (4th Cir. 1997); In re Revco D.S., Inc., 898 F.2d 498, 500 (6th Cir. 1990); In re Donovan Corp., 215 F.3d 929, 930 (9th Cir. 2000) ("The United States trustee may . . . intervene and appear at any level of the proceedings from the bankruptcy court on . . . as either a party or an amicus.") (internal quotations omitted). The United States Trustee is explicitly authorized to bring a motion for relief under section 1112 of title 11. 28 U.S.C. § 586(a)(8).

On July 21, 2009, the bankruptcy court, acting on a motion of a creditor, ordered the appointment of an independent chapter 11 trustee to administer the estate. [BC #74]; see 11 U.S.C. §§ 1104 and 1106 (allowing for the appointment and establishing the duties of chapter 11 trustees). Ms. Bullock did not appeal that order, nor does she contest it in this appeal. On July 29, 2009, the United States Trustee appointed Ronald Glass to serve as the chapter 11 trustee. [BC #77].

Mr. Glass investigated the assets of the estate and found that — contrary to Ms. Bullock's schedules — the properties were heavily encumbered and of limited market value, the estate had no cash, there was no operating business, and there was "no reasonable likelihood of rehabilitation." [BC #97]. On November 13, 2009, Mr. Glass filed a motion under 11 U.S.C. § 1112(b) to convert the case to chapter 7 in order to "eliminate . . . expenses unique to chapter 11, such as professional fees incurred in connection with the preparation and confirmation of a disclosure statement and plan and . . . U.S. Trustee fees," thereby "ensur[ing] that Debtor's assets, if any, will be distributed directly to the creditors" and "minimiz[ing] the delay in any distribution to creditors that might be caused by the plan process." Id.

The court held a hearing on this motion on December 16, 2009 [BC #148]. At the hearing, the court concluded that the bankruptcy case had “hit a dead end.” [Id. at 16]. The court expressed concern that Ms. Bullock was enjoying the protections of the Bankruptcy Code but had failed to propose a plan of reorganization. [Id. at 17]. The court also expressed concern regarding the “level of cooperation” that Ms. Bullock was providing to Mr. Glass and the United States Trustee and noted that the court still “did not know what the whole situation is” in regard to the nature and value of her property interests. [Id.].

The bankruptcy court determined that dismissal would be inappropriate under these circumstances because it would give Ms. Bullock the benefit of the protections of the Bankruptcy Code “without having to pay the price . . . which is to come clean and make sure that all of the assets are administered through the bankruptcy court.” [Id. at 18]. The court noted that in a chapter 7 liquidation, to the extent that Ms. Bullock’s property was worth more than Mr. Glass’s assessment, creditors would be paid and any excess value would be returned to Ms. Bullock. [Id.]. Therefore, the court found that it was in the interests of the creditors and Ms. Bullock to “get things drawn to a conclusion” because the ultimate result of the chapter 7 liquidation would benefit everyone. [Id. at 19-20].

As the court told Ms. Bullock, "[y]ou're on the same team. You're trying to get the creditors paid and the residual, if any, back to you." [Id.].

On December 17, 2009, the bankruptcy court entered its order converting the case to chapter 7. [BC #115]. On December 28, 2009, Ms. Bullock filed a timely notice of appeal. [BC #123].

SUMMARY OF ARGUMENT

Section 1112(b)(1) of title 11 provides that if, on motion by a party in interest, the court finds that cause exists to convert or dismiss a case, then, absent unusual circumstances, the court "shall convert a case under this chapter to a case under chapter 7 or dismiss a case under this chapter, whichever is in the best interests of the creditors and the estate ..." Ms. Bullock failed to fulfill her fiduciary obligations as a debtor in possession or to propose any plan of reorganization or liquidation during the pendency of the case in chapter 11, receiving the benefit of the protections offered by the Bankruptcy Code without producing any corresponding benefit to the bankruptcy estate and its creditors.

Based upon these facts, the bankruptcy court did not commit clear error when it found that conversion of the case to chapter 7 would be in the best interests of creditors because (1) dismissal would be unjust given Ms. Bullock's conduct, and (2) conversion to chapter 7 would force a speedy resolution of the bankruptcy case, thereby (a) preventing further diminution of the estate and increasing the amount available to creditors or ultimately distributed to Ms. Bullock, and (b) reducing further unnecessary delay in any distribution to the creditors.

On appeal, Ms. Bullock complains of Mr. Glass's conduct as chapter 11 trustee, suggesting that he engaged in religious, racial, and sexual discrimination. These baseless accusations were not raised in the bankruptcy court, are not supported by the record, and are not properly before this court in this appeal. The only arguments raised by Ms. Bullock that bear on the issue of whether the bankruptcy court abused its discretion in converting her case consist of unsubstantiated assertions that her property is worth more than its valuation by Mr. Glass and that creditors would be better off if she were allowed to negotiate a workout without the expense of paying a trustee to supervise the estate.

The question before this Court, however, is not whether Ms. Bullock's desired outcome is actually in the best interest of the creditors but whether the bankruptcy court abused its discretion when it decided that conversion rather than dismissal was in the best interest of the creditors. It did not. The bankruptcy court's findings are supported by the record, and the bankruptcy court carefully considered all of the arguments and evidence in the record before rendering its decision. Therefore, this Court should affirm the order entered below.

ARGUMENT

I. Statutory framework

Section 1112(b)(1) provides that if, upon motion by a party in interest, the court finds that cause exists to convert or dismiss a chapter 11 case, then, absent unusual circumstances, the court "shall convert a case under this chapter to a case under chapter 7 or dismiss a case under this chapter, whichever is in the best interests of the creditors and the estate." 11 U.S.C. § 1112(b)(1).

"Cause" is defined by 11 U.S.C. § 1112(b)(4) to include a list of factors, including "substantial or continuing loss to or diminution of the estate and the absence of a reasonable likelihood of reorganization," "gross mismanagement of the estate," and "failure to comply with an order of the court." However, this list is not exhaustive and the court may consider other factors as they arise. In re Albany Partners, Ltd., 749 F.2d 670, 674 (11th Cir. 1984). Thus, the court is given judicial discretion to determine what factors shall constitute cause under the circumstances of each case. Colonial Daytona Ltd. P'ship v. Am. Sav. of Florida, 152 B.R. 996, 1001 (M.D. Fla. 1993); All Denominational New Church v. Pelofsky (In re All Denominational New Church), 268 B.R. 536, 538 (B.A.P. 8th Cir. 2001); see also 11 U.S.C. § 102(3) (" 'includes' and 'including' are not limiting"); In re 3 Ram, Inc., 343 B.R. 113, 117 (Bankr. E.D. Pa. 2006) ("While the enumerated examples of 'cause' to convert or dismiss a chapter 11 case now listed in § 1112(b)(4) have changed under BAPCPA, the fact that they are illustrative, not exhaustive has not.") (internal citations omitted).

II. The bankruptcy court did not commit clear error when it found that conversion of Ms. Bullock's case from chapter 11 to chapter 7 was in the best interest of the creditors and the estate.

Section 1112(b)(1) of title 11 requires the bankruptcy court to determine whether conversion or dismissal is in the best interests of the creditors and the estate. In this case, the bankruptcy court found that conversion was in the best interest of the creditors and the estate because (1) dismissal would be unjust considering the length of time the case had been pending and Ms. Bullock's "level of cooperation" during that period [BC # 148 at 17], and (2) conversion to chapter 7 would force a speedy resolution to the bankruptcy case, thereby (a) preventing further diminution of the assets of the estate and increasing the amount available to creditors or ultimately returned to Ms. Bullock and (b) reducing further unnecessary delay in any distribution to creditors. Based on that finding, which was supported by the record, conversion of the case from chapter 11 to chapter 7 was appropriate.

During the nine months that Ms. Bullock was in control of the bankruptcy estate as a debtor in possession, she neither proposed any chapter 11 plan nor filed any motion pursuant to 11 U.S.C. § 363(b)(1) seeking authorization to sell any of her properties. The record contains nothing that would suggest she had any business to reorganize at the time the conversion order was entered. In fact, her operating reports filed in the case reveal that her only sources of income during the pendency of the case were rent and social security payments. [BC #35, 40, 49, 52, 54, 57, 71, 88, 89, and 109]. Thus, Ms. Bullock had been incurring the expenses associated with a chapter 11 reorganization for no valid purpose while delaying any distribution to the creditors.

In addition, the bankruptcy court considered Ms. Bullock's prior history as a bankruptcy debtor. The court noted that she had filed this case less than 180 days after voluntarily dismissing a previous chapter 13 case in the face of a creditor's motion for relief from the automatic stay. Although a bankruptcy petition is subject to dismissal pursuant to 11 U.S.C. § 109(g)(2) under these circumstances, the court had allowed the case to go forward based on "a line of cases that ... permit the second filing under limited circumstances." [BC #148 at 16]. The court expressed concern that despite this respite and although the case had been pending for over a year, Ms. Bullock still had not presented a clear picture of the nature and extent of her property interests — the horse farm business appeared to be non-existent — and had not provided Mr. Glass with a high level of cooperation during his administration of the case as chapter 11 trustee. [Id. at 16-17].

The bankruptcy court observed that "dismissing the case at this point really would give the debtor the benefit of an awful lot of things that go on in bankruptcy without having to pay the price of that, which is to come clean and make sure that all of the assets are administered through the bankruptcy court." [Id. at 17-18]. The court warned Ms. Bullock that failure to cooperate with the trustee in the chapter 7 proceedings could lead to denial of her discharge. [Id. at 20]. By converting the case to chapter 7 instead of dismissing it, the bankruptcy court was able to (1) prevent Ms. Bullock from using the successive dismissal of cases to frustrate creditors and (2) allow an independent trustee to conduct an effective administration of the estate, liquidating assets and expediting payment to creditors. See 11 U.S.C. § 704(a) (authorizing the chapter 7 trustee to liquidate the estate and use the funds to pay creditors).

The bankruptcy court carefully considered the facts in rejecting the option of dismissal. The court found that conversion to chapter 7 would "get things drawn to a conclusion" and would be in the best interests of everyone, including Ms. Bullock. [Id. at 19-20]. The court's finding that cause existed to dismiss or convert the case and its determination that conversion was in the best interest of the creditors and the estate are supported by the record and are not clearly erroneous.

III. Ms. Bullock does not demonstrate that dismissal would have been in the best interest of the creditors and the estate.

Ms. Bullock made no contention during the hearing that cause did not exist to convert the case. Instead, she simply expressed a preference for dismissal over conversion, based on her belief that there was equity in the properties and that "she'd be better equipped to ... to try to work out some kind of resolution [with creditors] outside of bankruptcy." [BC #148 at 13-15].

Section 1112(b)(1) provides that when cause for dismissal or conversion has been established, the choice between the two remedies will be guided by "whichever is in the best interests of creditors and the estate," not what is in the best interest of the debtor. In light of Ms. Bullock's refusal to identify and administer the assets of the estate while in chapter 11, the court had a justifiable basis to be skeptical of her stated desire to resolve the claims outside of bankruptcy and was authorized to find that a supervised liquidation under the provisions of chapter 7 was in the best interest of creditors. Ms. Bullock has offered this court no basis upon which to conclude that the bankruptcy court committed clear error in finding that conversion of the case from chapter 11 to chapter 7 would serve the interests of creditors and the bankruptcy estate better than dismissal.

CONCLUSION

For these reasons, the United States Trustee respectfully asks this Court to affirm the order entered below.

Background

Appellant Linda Coty Bullock filed a voluntary petition for relief under chapter 11 of the Bankruptcy Code on November 3, 2008. [BC #1]. Her case was converted to chapter 7 on December 17, 2009. [BC #115].

Pursuant to 11 U.S.C. § 343, the debtor in a bankruptcy case must "appear and submit to examination under oath at" a meeting of her creditors convened under 11 U.S.C. § 341 . Ms. Bullock failed to appear at any of the five such meetings scheduled in this case subsequent to its conversion to chapter 7. [BC #122, 150, 171, 176, 179, 191]. Therefore, on June 4, 2010, the chapter 7 trustee, Kyle A. Cooper, filed a motion to compel her to attend. [BC #182].

On June 7, 2010, the bankruptcy court granted the trustee's motion to compel and entered an order (the "Order") directing Ms. Bullock to attend the next scheduled section 341 meeting or be deemed in contempt of court. [BC #183]. In response, Ms. Bullock timely filed a notice of appeal on June 21, 2010. [BC #188].

There is no basis for this Court to grant leave to appeal of the Order

The Order from which Ms. Bullock is appealing is not a final order, and there is no basis for this court to grant interlocutory review.

District courts have jurisdiction to hear appeals from final judgments, orders and decrees of bankruptcy judges and, "with leave of court, from ... interlocutory orders and decrees of bankruptcy judges ..." 28 U.S.C. § 158(a). Even if this Court were to construe Ms. Bullock's notice of appeal as a motion for such leave, the record does not demonstrate that any basis for interlocutory review exists.

Because 11 U.S.C. § 158(a) and Fed. R. Bankr. P. 8003 do not provide guidance for determining when to grant leave to appeal, district courts look to the standards set forth in 28 U.S.C. § 1292(b). In re Brentwood Golf Club, L.L.C., 329 B.R. 239, 242 (E.D. Mich. 2005). Accord Matter of Ichinose, 946 F.2d 1169, 1177 (5th Cir. 1991); Roderick v. Levy, 185 B.R. 601, 604 (B.A.P. 9th Cir.1995); Patrick v. Dell Fin. Services, 366 B.R. 378, 385 (M.D. Pa. 2007); Delta Air Lines, Inc. v. A.I. Leasing II (In re Pan Am Corp.), 159 B.R. 396, 401 (S.D.N.Y. 1993).

Under section 1292(b), an appeal from an interlocutory order may be granted when the order involves: "[1] a controlling question of law [2] as to which there is substantial ground for difference of opinion and [3] an immediate appeal [...] may materially advance the ultimate termination of the litigation[;] and [4] a court should consider whether denying leave to appeal would result in wasted litigation and expense." Brentwood Golf Club, 329 B.R. at 242, supra (citations omitted).

"In bankruptcy cases, movants for leave to appeal an interlocutory order have the burden of demonstrating that 'exceptional circumstances exist.'" Gache v. Balaber-Strauss, 198 B.R. 662, 664 (S.D.N.Y. 1996) (quoting In re Johns-Manville Corp., 47 B.R. 957, 960 (S.D.N.Y. 1985)); s*ee also Orson, Inc. v. Miramax Film Corp.*, 867 F. Supp. 319, 320 (E.D. Pa. 1994). "Leave to appeal from interlocutory orders should be granted only in exceptional circumstances because to do otherwise would contravene the well-established judicial policy of discouraging interlocutory appeals and avoiding the delay and disruption which results from such piecemeal litigation." In re Wicheff, 215 B.R. 839, 844 (B.A.P. 6th Cir. 1997) ("The appellate court may deny the appeal for any reason, including docket congestion.").

The bankruptcy court's decision to compel Ms. Bullock to attend the section 341 meeting of creditors in her chapter 7 case did not involve any controlling question of law as to which there is a substantial ground for a difference of opinion. As a bankruptcy debtor, Ms. Bullock has a statutory obligation under 11 U.S.C. § 343 to attend and submit to examination under oath at such a meeting, and she raised no argument to the contrary in the bankruptcy court. "[T]he purpose of the section 341(a) meeting is discovery," In re Chandler, 66 B.R. 334, 337 (N.D. Ga. 1986), and under Eleventh Circuit law, "discovery orders are not appealable." Carpenter v. Mohawk Indus., Inc., 541 F.3d 1048, 1052 (11th Cir. 2008).

In addition, Ms. Bullock's bankruptcy case would not be materially advanced if interlocutory review of the Order were granted. To the contrary, an immediate appeal would prolong the administration of the bankruptcy case and result in wasted time and expense. Ms. Bullock has neither established nor alleged any circumstances in connection with this matter, exceptional or otherwise, that would justify a departure from the basic policy of postponing appellate review until after the entry of a final judgment.

Conclusion

For the foregoing reasons, the United States Trustee respectfully requests that this Court dismiss Ms. Bullock's appeal.

The United States submits this brief under Fed. R. App. P. 29, as amicus curiae in support of reversal of the bankruptcy court's order.

INTEREST OF THE UNITED STATES

This appeal involves a dispute over the interpretation of two provisions of the United States Bankruptcy Code, 11 U.S.C. §§ 1325(b) and 707(b)(2)(A). Together, these provisions determine whether debtors have met their statutory obligation to dedicate their projected disposable income to paying unsecured creditors through their chapter 13 plans.

The United States has a direct interest in the proper construction of these provisions because United States Trustees, who are Justice Department officials appointed by the Attorney General, supervise the administration of bankruptcy cases in all federal judicial districts within this circuit. See 28 U.S.C. § 581-589a. See also H.R. Rep. No. 95-595 at 88 (1977), reprinted in 1978 U.S.C.C.A.N. 5963, 6049 (United States Trustees "serve as bankruptcy watch-dogs to prevent fraud, dishonesty, and overreaching in the bankruptcy arena").

The questions presented by this appeal affect the duties of United States Trustees for at least two reasons. First, under 28 U.S.C. § 586(a)(3)(C), United States Trustees monitor chapter 13 plans and file comments with the court in connection with plan confirmation hearings under section 1324 of the Bankruptcy Code. Second, United States Trustees have an interest in the proper interpretation of section 707(b)(2) because, in addition to its relevance in chapter 13 cases, that provision determines whether chapter 7 cases filed by above-median-income debtors are presumed to be abusive. See 11 U.S.C. § 707(b)(1), (2). Pursuant to section 704(b), United States Trustees are responsible for reviewing chapter 7 cases for abuse and seeking dismissal where appropriate. See 11 U.S.C. § 704(b); Schultz v. United States, 529 F.3d 343, 348 (6th Cir. 2008).

Given these interests, the United States submits this brief as amicus curiae in order to share its views on the application of sections 1325(b) and 707(b)(2). See 28 U.S.C. § 517 (authorizing Department of Justice "to attend to the interests of the United States in a suit pending in a court of the United States"); 11 U.S.C. § 307 (United States Trustee "may raise and may appear and be heard on any issue in any case or proceeding").

STATUTORY BACKGROUND

On April 20, 2005, Congress enacted the Bankruptcy Abuse Prevention and Consumer Protection Act of 2005. See Pub. L. No. 109-8, 119 Stat. 23 (2005). The 2005 Act significantly altered how debtors obtain relief under chapters 7 and 13 of the Bankruptcy Code.

In a chapter 13 case, a debtor's unsecured creditors or trustee may insist that the debtor devote all of his "projected disposable income" to pay unsecured creditors. See 11 U.S.C. § 1325(b)(1)(B). The Bankruptcy Code partially defines the term "projected disposable income" by reference to section 1325(b)(2), which defines "disposable income" as "current monthly income received by the debtor . . . less amounts reasonably necessary to be expended. . . ." 11 U.S.C. § 1325(b)(2).[1]

Under the 2005 Act, above-median-income chapter 13 debtors, like the Burbanks, determine "amounts reasonably necessary to be expended . . . in accordance with" sections 707(b)(2)(A)(ii), (iii), and (iv) of the Bankruptcy Code. See 11 U.S.C. § 1325(b)(3) (incorporating those provisions). Deducting all allowed expenses from a debtor's current monthly income yields a net number – disposable income. However, because above-median-income chapter 13 debtors are required to pay their projected disposable income to unsecured creditors over the life of their chapter 13 plan, rather than merely pay their disposable income, the inquiry initiated under sections 707(b)(2)(A) and 1325(b)(3) does not end there. See 11 U.S.C. § 1325(b)(1)(B) (emphasis added). Instead, courts must determine a debtor's projected disposable income under section 1325(b)(1). Id.

At issue in this appeal is how the word "projected" in section 1325(b)(1) impacts a debtor's disposable income calculation when that calculation does not reflect reality.

SUMMARY OF ARGUMENT

Section 1325(b)(1)(B) of the Bankruptcy Code requires chapter 13 debtors to devote all of their "projected disposable income" to the repayment of their unsecured creditors during the pendency of their plan. This provision reflects a "clear congressional intent . . . that debtors repay creditors the maximum they can afford." Coop v. Frederickson (In re Frederickson), 545 F.3d 652, 657 (8th Cir. 2008), petition for cert. denied, 129 S. Ct. 1630 (2009) (internal citations omitted).

In this case, the Burbanks sought to reduce their projected disposable income by claiming, among other deductions, a $978 ownership expense for two vehicles, and a $2,615 mortgage expense on a second home. However, the Burbanks' schedules reflect that the two vehicles are not encumbered by a loan or lease, and their chapter 13 plan proposes to surrender their second home, for which they will no longer be making large mortgage payments.

The bankruptcy court committed an error of law in ruling all chapter 13 debtors can claim such expenses even when the debtors will not be paying such expenses over the life of their repayment plan. That ruling relied upon the Ninth Circuit's minority construction of section 1325(b)(1), which has been rejected in five precedential decisions issued by the Fifth, Seventh, Eight, and Ninth Circuits.

The bankruptcy court's ruling was erroneous as a matter of law because even if these expenses are properly included in the computation of the Burbanks' "disposable income" under sections 707(b)(2)(A) and 1325(b)(3), they are still excluded from the definition of "projected disposable income" under section 1325(b)(1)(B). This is so because "projected disposable income" is a forward-looking provision that directs courts to take into account changes in a debtor's income and expenses over the five year life of their plan, including, as in this case, the lack of any future payment obligations associated with the Burbanks' vehicles and second home. Thus, section 1325(b)(1) precludes the Burbanks from deducting expenses they will never actually pay over the life of their chapter 13 plan – expenses the Ninth Circuit correctly termed "fictitious," and the Seventh Circuit correctly termed "phantom," in Ransom and Turner. See Ransom v. MBNA, America Bank, N.A. (In re Ransom), – F.3d–, 2009 WL 2477609, at *4 (9th Cir. Aug. 14, 2009); In re Turner, – F.3d –, 2009 WL 2136867, at *7 (7th Cir. July 20, 2009).

The Burbanks' phantom and fictitious expenses were improperly allowed for a second reason. They are both barred by section 707(b)(2)(A), which section 1325(b)(3) incorporates into the Burbanks' chapter 13 case. See 11 U.S.C. § 1325(b)(3) (expressly incorporating sections 707(b)(2)(A)(ii)(I) and 707(b)(2)(A)(iii)(I)). Under section 707(b)(2)(A)(ii)(I), a debtor with no installment or lease payments due on his vehicle has no "applicable" vehicle ownership expense under section 707(b)(2)(A)'s standardized transportation expense deductions because that debtor, literally, has no vehicle ownership expense capable of being applied. Ransom, – F.3d–, 2009 WL 2477609, at *4-6. Under section 707(b)(2)(A)(iii)(I), while this Court recently ruled that a chapter 7 debtor may deduct mortgage payments on property that the debtor intends to surrender, see Morse v. Rudler (In re Rudler), – F.3d –, 2009 WL 2385469, at *10 (1st Cir. Aug. 5, 2009), this Court left open whether a similar result was dictated in chapter 13. It is not.

ARGUMENT

THE BANKRUPTCY COURT'S RULING MAY BE REVERSED ON EITHER OF TWO SEPARATE AND INDEPENDENT GROUNDS: (A) THE IMPROPER APPLICATION OF 11 U.S.C. § 1325(b)(1); AND (B) AN ERRONEOUS CONSTRUCTION OF 11 U.S.C. § 707(b)(2)(A)(ii)(I). IN EITHER CASE, THE BURBANKS ARE NOT ENTITLED TO DEDUCT PAYMENTS FOR EXPENSES THEY DO NOT HAVE AND WILL NEVER ACTUALLY MAKE.

I. Unlike the court below, most courts, including the Fifth, Seventh, Eighth, and Tenth circuits, read "projected disposable income" under section 1325(b)(1)(B) as allowing courts to alter the presumptive income and expenses determined under section 707(b)(2)'s means test when those amounts do not reflect reality.

Regardless of how a debtor's disposable income is calculated under sections 707(b)(2)(A) and 1325(b)(2) and (3), most courts, including the Fifth, Seventh, Eighth, and Tenth circuits, read "projected disposable income" under section 1325(b)(1)(B) to permit the consideration of credible evidence of changes in income and expenses that are likely over the life of a debtor's chapter 13 plan in order to reflect reality. See, e.g., McCarty v. Lasowski (In re Lasowksi), – F.3d –, 2009 WL 2448246 (8th Cir. Aug. 12, 2009); In re Turner, – F.3d –, 2009 WL 2136867; In re Nowlin, – F.3d –, 2009 WL 2105356 (5th Cir. July 17, 2009); Hamilton v. Lanning (In re Lanning), 545 F.3d 1269, 1278-82 (10th Cir. 2008), pet. for cert. filed, No. 08-998 (Feb. 3, 2009); Frederickson, 545 F.3d at 659-60; Hildebrand v. Thomas (In re Thomas), 395 B.R. 914, 923 (B.A.P. 6th Cir. 2008); Hildebrand v. Petro (In re Petro), 395 B.R. 369, 377-78 (B.A.P. 6th Cir. 2008); Pak v. eCast Settlement Corp. (In re Pak), 378 B.R. 257, 262 (B.A.P. 9th Cir. 2007), abrogated by Maney v. Kagenveama (In re Kagenveama), 541 F.3d 868 (9th Cir. 2008); Kibbe v. Sumski (In re Kibbe), 361 B.R. 302, 314-15 (B.A.P. 1st Cir. 2007) (per curiam).

In our view, this forward-looking approach to section 1325(b)(1)(B) represents the better approach for three reasons:

First, the forward looking approach treats "projected disposable income" as a future-oriented concept, as required by the language of section 1325(b)(1)(B). Although the word "projected" is not defined under the Bankruptcy Code, the dictionary defines "project" as forward-looking. See The Random House Dict. of English Lang., 1546 (2d ed. 1987) (defining to "project" as inter alia, "to set forth or calculate (some future thing); They projected the building costs for the next five years.”); Webster’s Third New Int’l Dict., 1813 (1993) (defining “projected” as inter alia, “planned for future execution: contrived, composed,” as “[projected] outlays for new plant and equipment.”). This forward-looking meaning should therefore be imparted to the term “projected” in section 1325(b)(1)(B). See Bailey v. United States, 516 U.S. 137, 144-45 (1995) (turning to dictionary definition of a term to define its statutory meaning).

The statutory requirements that a chapter 13 plan include all of a debtor’s projected disposable income “to be received” during the plan period, and that these amounts “will be applied to make payments” to unsecured creditors also support this forward-looking reading. See 11 U.S.C. § 1325(b)(1)(B). A court must interpret a statute as a symmetrical and coherent regulatory scheme and fit, if possible, all parts into a harmonious whole. See Food & Drug Admin. v. Brown & Williamson Tobacco Corp., 529 U.S. 120, 1301 (2000). Each of these phrases anticipates future action during the life of a debtor’s plan. Thus, they reinforce the forward-looking nature of section 1325(b)(1)(B).

Second, the forward-looking approach to section 1325(b)(1)(B) is faithful to the definition of “disposable income” found in sections 1325(b)(2) and (3) as an historical number. This is so because it uses the historical income figures calculated under section 707(b)(2)(A)’s means test as a starting point prior to considering those figures within the context of section 1325(b)(1)(B). Thus, the phrase “projected disposable income” appropriately “embrace[s] a forward-looking view grounded in the present via the statutory definition of ‘disposable income’ premised on historical data.” See In re Nowlin, – F.3d –, 2009 WL 2105356, at *3.

Third, the forward-looking approach to section 1325(b)(1)(B) is consistent with Congress’ desire that section 707(b)(2)(A)’s means test merely serve as a stage-one “screening mechanism” under the Bankruptcy Code. See H.R. Rep. 109-31 (I) at 1(2005), reprinted in 2005 U.S.C.C.A.N. 88, 89. See also Rudler, – F.3d –, 2009 WL 2385469, at *10 (section 707(b)(3)(B)’s totality of the circumstances test “remains a backup option when the Trustee is dissatisfied by the results of [section 707(b)(2)’s] means test.”); Blausey v. United States Trustee (In re Blausey), 552 F.3d 1124, 1127 n.1 (2009) (same); Ross-Tousey v. Neary, 549 F.3d 1148, 1161-62 (7th Cir. 2008) (same). Indeed, regardless of a contrary result under section 707(b)(2)’s means test, section 707(b)(3)(B) mandates the dismissal of a chapter 7 debtor’s case based upon an evaluation of a debtor’s actual income and expenses. See Ross-Tousey, 549 F.3d at 1161-62.

Similarly, section 1325(b)(1)(B) requires that a chapter 13 debtor make plan payments based upon his actual income and expenses (as projected over the life of his plan), and regardless of section 1325(b)(3)’s incorporation of section 707(b)(2)’s means test. In fact, to read section 1325(b)(1)(B) otherwise would elevate section 707(b)(2)'s means test from "screening mechanism" to final arbiter in section 1325(b), something Congress never intended.

II. The bankruptcy court's approach to section 1325(b)(1)(B), which principally relied on the Ninth Circuit's decision in Kagenveama, is flawed.

In its ruling, the bankruptcy court rejected the majority, forward-looking construction of section 1325(b)(1)(B) and construed "disposable income" and "projected disposable income" as identical concepts, concluding that "projected disposable income" would be determined as of a historical moment in time – specifically, the moment when the Burbanks filed for bankruptcy. See In re Burbank, 401 B.R. 67, 74 (Bankr. D.R.I. 2009) (citing Kagenveama, 541 F.3d at 868).

In addition to those reasons addressed in the preceding section of this brief, the bankruptcy court's ruling reflects a flawed reading of section 1325(b)(1)(B) for two reasons:

First, the bankruptcy court's construction of section 1325(b)(1)(B), like Kagenveama, fails to consider the term "projected" in its proper context. See Hibbs v. Winn, 542 U.S. 88, 101 (2004) (statutory words must be construed in context). As previously explained, the use of the term "projected" in the context of section 1325(b)(1)(B) suggests a forecast or estimate of an expected future financial reality. See United States Br., supra, at 6-10. While the calculation of "projected" financial data may well begin with historical data, it does not necessarily (or even usually) end there, nor does it entail a rigid and inviolable assumption, made by the bankruptcy court, that "projected" expenses will be identical with claimed expenses under section 707(b)(2)'s means test even when available facts demonstrate otherwise. The bankruptcy court's construction ignores this context of the statutory language.[2]

Second, Kagenveama – the case upon which the bankruptcy court principally relies – has led to troubling results in the Ninth Circuit. For example, in one post-Kagenveama case, the bankruptcy court confirmed a chapter 13

[2] Indeed, Congress's use of the term "projected" in Section 1325(b)(1)(B) would be extremely odd if it had intended the "project[ion]" to be nothing more than the rote mathematical calculation – historic disposable income multiplied by the number of months in a debtor's plan – the bankruptcy court's construction requires. See, e.g., Kagenveama, 541 F.3d at 874 ("To get from the statutorily defined 'disposable income' to 'projected disposable income,' 'one simply takes the calculation ... and does the math.'"). "The word 'multiplied' is quite different from the word 'projected,'" Kibbe, 361 B.R. at 312 n.9, and Congress knew how to provide for the process of multiplication when it wanted to. See 11 U.S.C. § 1325(b)(3) (providing that debtor's current monthly income be "multiplied by 12" to determine whether debtor has above-median income); 11 U.S.C. § 1325(b)(4) (same); 11 U.S.C. § 704(b)(2) (same); 11 U.S.C § 707(b)(2)(A)(i) (providing that debtor's current monthly income be "multiplied by 60" to determine in part whether presumption of abuse arises); 11 U.S.C. § 1322(d)(1)-(2) (providing that debtor's current monthly income be "multiplied by 12" to determine length of plan); 11 U.S.C. § 1326(b)(3)(B)(ii) (providing that certain payments be "multiplied by 5 percent" to determine trustee compensation).

repayment plan that reduced plan payments to creditors by $7,185.00 per month for expenses related to two abandoned homes and a liquidated car that will never be paid.[3] See In re Smith, 401 B.R. 469 (Bankr. W.D. Wash. 2008), appeal pending Case No. 07-43853 (B.A.P. 9th Cir.). "A fixed debt that will disappear . . . is not intended to enrich the debtor at the expense of his unsecured creditors. It is intended to adjust the respective rights of a secured creditor . . . and the unsecured creditors." In re Turner, – F.3d –, 2009 WL 2136867, at *7. See also H.R. Rep. 109-31 (I) at 1 (2005), as reprinted in 2005 U.S.C.C.A.N. 88, 89 (section 707(b)(2)'s means test acts "to ensure that debtors repay creditors the maximum they can afford."). Those courts following Kagenveama, like the bankruptcy court below, would perpetuate these troubling results, and create "an incentive for the picaresque. . . ." Kagenveama, 541 F.3d 878 (Bea, J., dissenting). The majority of courts – like the Fifth, Seventh, Eighth, and Tenth Circuits which follow the forward looking approach to section 1325(b)(1)(B) – would not.

[3] Cases following Kagenveama on the income side of the equation are just as troubling. See, e.g., In re Stansell, 395 B.R. 457 (Bankr. D. Idaho 2008) (requiring income received from debtor's deceased spouse to be included in debtor's calculation of "current monthly income"); In re Featherstone, Case No. 08-00016, 2008 WL 5217936 (D. Mont. Dec. 11, 2008) (denying confirmation of debtors' plan where debtors sought to exclude income received from one-time sale of livestock from their "projected disposable income" calculation).

III. Turner, the most analogous decision, has concluded that section 1325(b)(1) is forward-looking.

On July 20, 2009, the United States Court of Appeals for the Seventh Circuit decided In re Turner. In re Turner, – F.3d –, 2009 WL 2136867. Turner is one of five successive circuit decisions to consider, and reject, the Ninth Circuit's interpretation of section 1325(b)(1)(B) in Kagenveama. Lasowski, – F.3d –, 2009 WL 2448246, at *1 (8th Cir.); Turner, – F.3d –, 2009 WL 2136867, at *6-7 (7th Cir.); Nowlin, – F.3d –, 2009 WL 2105356, at *1 (5th Cir.); Lanning, 545 F.3d at 1269 (10th Cir.); Frederickson, 545 F.3d at 652 (8th Cir.). Moreover, Turner, like this case, interpreted section 1325(b)(1)(B) with respect to a claimed expense under section 707(b)(2)'s means test. In doing so, Turner articulated the same forward-looking approach to section 1325(b)(1)(B) that the Fifth, Eighth, and Tenth circuits employ.[4] See Turner, – F.3d –, 2009 WL 2136867, at *6-7.

Under this approach, a court determines, based on the evidence presented, whether a debtor has, and will continue to have, certain expenses going forward when determining projected disposable income under section 1325(b)(1)(B). Id.

[4] On August 28, 2009, the Eighth Circuit, in Washburn, confirmed this forward-looking approach as the better approach to section 1325(b)(1)(B), but failed to reach the merits of the projected disposable income issue in that case because: (a) the parties failed to articulate a legal theory at trial under section 1325(b)(1)(B); and (b) the factual record at trial was undeveloped. See Babin v. Washburn (In re Washburn), – F.3d –, 2009 WL 2634333, at *6-7 (8th Cir. Aug 28, 2009).

If a debtor does not have a current expense, or will not have the expense in the future, Turner dictates that such information should be considered as part of the projected disposable income calculation. Id. Accord Lasowski, – F.3d –, 2009 WL 2448246, at *3; Nowlin, – F.3d –, 2009 WL 2105356, at *6; Frederickson, 545 F.3d at 659. The lower court's ruling conflicts with this forward-looking approach because it refused to consider, as part of the projected disposable income calculation, that the Burbanks do not, and will not, make payments on their vehicles, and will not make payments on their second home. See Trustee's Designation of Record No. 4 (Chapter 13 Plan, at 3) (identifying no liens on vehicles and surrender of Woonsocket, RI property); Trustee's Appendix, at 25 (Schedule J, at lines 1, 17, 19) (identifying no payments on vehicles or second home, and failing to describe any increase in expenditures anticipated to occur within the year following the filing of Schedule J). Accordingly, should this court adopt the forward-looking approach to section 1325(b)(1) as articulated in Turner, reversal of the bankruptcy court's order is appropriate.

IV. Alternatively, under the "reasonably necessary" test of sections 707(b)(2) and 1325(b)(3), the Burbanks may not claim deductions for vehicle ownership expenses they will never actually make.[5]

If this Court agrees with the conclusions reached by the Fifth, Seventh, Eighth, and Tenth circuits that section 1325(b)(1)(B) permits courts to alter the presumptive income and expenses determined under section 707(b)(2)'s means test when those amounts do not reflect reality, then there is no need for this Court to address this subsidiary issue. Indeed, the Seventh Circuit followed just that course in Turner. See Turner, – F.3d –, 2009 WL 2136867 (reaching conclusion based on section 1325(b)(1)(B)'s language alone).

If, however, this court agrees with the opposite conclusion (i.e., that the rigid approach to section 1325(b)(1)(B) articulated in Kagenveama and by the bankruptcy court below is the better approach), then the "reasonably necessary"

[5] On August 5, 2009, this Court decided Morse v. Rudler. See Rudler, – F.3d –, 2009 WL 2385469. Rudler considered whether chapter 7 debtors may, under section 707(b)(2)(A)(iii)(I), deduct secured debt expenses notwithstanding that they are surrendering the collateral associated with those debts. Id. This Court found that they could. Id. While the government disagrees with Rudler's construction of section 707(b)(2)(A)(iii)(I), Rudler did not discuss the proper calculation of an above-median-income chapter 13 debtor's "projected disposable income." Id. at n.11. Rather, it addressed the distinct question whether a chapter 7 debtor's petition was subject to the presumption of abuse that arises when that debtor's "disposable income" exceeds a specific threshold. Id. Accordingly, Rudler does not foreclose the government's argument that section 1325(b)(1)(B) provides an independent basis for this Court to reverse the bankruptcy court's ruling as to the Burbanks' claimed secured debt expense. See United States Br., supra, at 6-14.

test of sections 707(b)(2) and 1325(b)(3) provides an independent basis for reversal. Subject to exceptions that are not relevant in this case, in calculating disposable income for an above-median-income debtor, like the Burbanks, the court must deduct from current monthly income "amounts reasonably necessary to be expended for the maintenance and support of the debtor and his dependents." 11 U.S.C. § 1325(b)(2). Only those claimed expenses that are among the deductions listed under section 707(b)(2) will it be treated as an "amount reasonably necessary to be expended" under section 1325(b)(3). Id. ("[a]mounts reasonably necessary to be expended . . . shall be determined in accordance with [section 707(b)(2)(A) and (B)]").

A. A vehicle ownership expense is "applicable" under section 707(b)(2)(A)(ii)(I) only when debtors make corresponding loan or lease payments on their vehicles.

1. For purposes of the chapter 7 means test, section 707(b)(2)(A)(ii)(I) permits above-median-income debtors, like the Burbanks, to claim a vehicle ownership expense amount only when that expense is "applicable." See 11 U.S.C. § 707(b)(2)(A)(ii)(I).[6]

The Bankruptcy Code does not define the term "applicable." Nor has the [6] Section 707(b)(2)(A)(ii)(I) provides that a debtor's "monthly expenses shall be the debtor's applicable monthly expense amounts specified under the . . . Local Standards . . . issued by the Internal Revenue Service. . . ." 11 U.S.C. § 707(b)(2)(A)(ii)(I) (emphasis added).

United States identified any controlling decision providing a definition in the bankruptcy court context. Accordingly, where, as here, a statutory term is undefined, the term should be given its ordinary meaning. Smith v. United States, 508 U.S. 223, 228 (1993) ("When a word is not defined by statute, we normally construe it in accord with its ordinary or natural meaning.").

The dictionary defines "applicable" to mean "capable of being applied: having relevance . . . fit, suitable, or right to be applied: APPROPRIATE" Webster's Third New Int'l Dict., at 105 (1981) (emphasis in original). Such a meaning should therefore be imparted to the term "applicable" used in section 707(b)(2)(A)(ii)(I). See Bailey, 516 U.S. at 144-45 (turning to dictionary definition of a term to define its statutory meaning).

The bankruptcy court's interpretation of section 707(b)(2)(A)(ii)(I) is inconsistent with this ordinary meaning because it allows the Burbanks to claim a monthly vehicle ownership expense amount when they have no associated monthly loan or lease expenses. "Given the ordinary sense of the term 'applicable,' how is the vehicle ownership expense allowance capable of being applied to [a] debtor if he does not make any lease or loan payments on the vehicle?" Ransom, – F.3d–, 2009 WL 2477609, at *5 (quoting Ransom, 380 B.R. at 807-08) (emphasis in original). The answer is, it is not. "An 'ownership cost' is not an 'expense' – either actual or applicable – if it does not exist, period."

Ransom, – F.3d–, 2009 WL 2477609, at *4. But see Tate v. Bolen (In re Tate), 571 F.3d 423 (5th Cir. 2009) (declining to apply the dictionary meaning of the word "applicable" during the course of statutory analysis and determining opposite); Ross-Tousey, 549 F.3d 1148 (same). If debtors, like the Burbanks, have no loan or lease payments on their vehicles, then there is simply no expense capable of being applied. For this reason alone, the lower court's orders should be reversed.

2. If there were ever any doubt regarding what Congress intended the term "applicable" to mean under section 707(b)(2)(A)(ii)(I), it would be answered in the next subsection of the Bankruptcy Code: subsection 707(b)(2)(A)(ii)(II). That subsection states, in relevant part, that a "debtor's monthly expenses may include, if applicable, the continuation of actual expenses paid by the debtor . . . for care and support of an elderly, chronically ill, or disabled household member or member of the debtor's immediate family. . . ." 11 U.S.C. § 707(b)(2)(A)(ii)(II) (emphasis added). Thus, Congress used the terms "applicable" and "actual" under section 707(b)(2)(A)(ii)(II) differently, employing the term "applicable" to only allow expenses to debtors if those expenses literally apply to that particular debtor.

Because it is a basic rule of statutory construction that "'identical words used in different parts of the same act are intended to have the same meaning[,]'" Commissioner of Internal Revenue v. Lundy, 516 U.S. 235, 250 (1996) (citations omitted), the same meaning of the term "applicable" in section 707(b)(2)(A)(ii)(II) should be given to the term "applicable" in section 707(b)(2)(A)(ii)(I).

B. The bankruptcy court's reading of section 707(b)(2)(A)(ii)(I) renders the word "applicable" superfluous.

The interpretation of section 707(b)(2)(A)(ii)(I) offered by the bankruptcy court suggests that the term "applicable" modifies the phrase "amounts specified under the . . . Local Standards" and not the debtor's "monthly expense." See Burbank, 401 B.R. at 71-72. However, the bankruptcy court's reading cannot be right because even if the word "applicable" were stricken from section 707(b)(2)(A)(ii)(I), the remaining words in section 707(b)(2)(A)(ii)(I) still lead debtors to the same line under the IRS Local Standards as follows:

> a "debtor's monthly expenses shall be the debtor's ~~applicable~~ monthly expense amounts specified under the . . . Local Standards . . . issued by the Internal Revenue Service. . . ."

See Ransom, – F.3d–, 2009 WL 2477609, at *5 (quoting Ransom, 380 B.R. at 808, for the proposition that such a construction would "read[] 'applicable' right out of the Bankruptcy Code."). Accordingly, the bankruptcy court's reading makes the word "applicable" superfluous.

Congress deliberately chose to include the term "applicable" in section 707(b)(2)(A)(ii)(I). Because "courts should strive to give operative meaning to every word in a statute," see Cooper Indus., Inc. v. Aviall Servs., Inc., 543 U.S.

157, 167 (2004), the word “applicable” must be read as adding something to the statute. See United States Trustee v. Deadmond (In re Deadmond), Case No. 07-15-H-CCL, 2008 WL 191165, at *4 (D. Mont. Jan. 22, 2008) (“The word [‘applicable’] must mean something, and if some monthly expenses are applicable, then other monthly expenses are not applicable.”). The United States’ construction does that. The bankruptcy court’s construction does not.

Further, contrary to the lower court’s belief, see Burbank, 401 B.R. 71-72 (quoting Ross-Tousey, 549 F.3d at 1158), the United States’ construction of section 707(b)(2)(A)(ii)(I) does not equate "applicable” with “actual.” Rather, its construction gives the words “applicable” and “actual” entirely different meanings. Vehicle expense amounts under section 707(b)(2)(A)(ii)(I) are not the debtor’s “actual,” or literal, vehicle ownership expenses. Rather, they are static, fixed amounts, drawn from the IRS Standards, used regardless of the debtor’s “actual” expenses. See Fokkena v. Hartwick (In re Hartwick), 373 B.R. 645, 650 (D. Minn. 2007) (recognizing that a debtor’s “actual” expense does not control the amount of the vehicle ownership deduction under section 707(b)(2)(A)(ii)(I)). Under the IRS Standards, debtors currently receive $489 for the first vehicle that has an associated loan or lease payment, and $489 for the second. See Addendum attached hereto (true and correct copy of IRS National Vehicle Standards). These are the opposite of "actual" expenses.[7] See Meade v. McVay (In re Meade), 384 B.R. 132, 136 (W.D. Tex. 2008) (explaining how the terms "applicable" and "actual" have different meanings under 707(b)(2)(A)(ii)(I)); Wieland v. Thomas (In re Thomas), 382 B.R. 793, 798 (D. Kan. 2008) (finding that "the juxtaposition of 'applicable . . . amounts' and 'actual . . . expenses' in the statute is not inconsistent with the Court's interpretation" that vehicle ownership expense amounts are only applicable if a debtor is making loan or lease payments on a vehicle).

C. The lower courts' interpretation of Section 707(b)(2)(A)(ii)(I) yields inequitable results not contemplated by Congress.

In interpreting sections 707(b)(2)(A)(ii)(I) this Court may consider relevant legislative history to determine the statute's objectives and illuminate its text. See Almendarez-Torres v. United States, 523 U.S. 224, 228 (1998) ("We therefore look to the statute before us and ask what Congress intended. . . . In answering this question, we look to the statute's language, structure, subject matter, context, and history-factors that typically help courts determine a statute's objectives and thereby illuminate its text."); Crandon v. United States, 494 U.S. 152, 158 (1990) ("In determining the meaning of the statute, we look not only to the particular statutory language, but to the design of the statute as a whole and to its object and policy.").

[7] Even if the terms "applicable" and "actual" meant the same thing in section 707(b)(2)(A)(ii)(I), the Supreme Court has recognized that there is nothing wrong with two different words within a single section of a statute being synonymous. See Wachovia Bank v, Schmidt, 546 U.S. 303, 314 (2006) ("Congress may well have comprehended the words 'located' and 'established,' as used in [28 U.S.C.] § 1348, not as contrasting, but as synonymous or alternative terms.").

According to its legislative history, the 2005 Act seeks to "ensure that debtors repay creditors the maximum they can afford." H.R. Rep. No. 109-31 (I), at 1, 2005 U.S.C.C.A.N. at 89.[8] Congress felt this aspect of bankruptcy reform legislation was so important that it included this language in the first paragraph of the first page of the 2005 Act's legislative history. Id. Congress saw fit to reiterate this point when it addressed the legislative history to section 707(b). Id. at 97-100. Given how important this was to Congress, section 707(b)(2)(A)(ii)(I) should be interpreted in accordance with this overarching goal that underpins the 2005 Act.

The bankruptcy court's interpretation of section 707(b)(2)(A)(ii)(I) would frustrate the 2005 Act's goal of proper repayment by allowing above-median-income debtors, like the Burbanks, to claim a fictitious expense that does not apply to them. See Ransom, – F.3d–, 2009 WL 2477609, at *4 ("Ironic it would be indeed to diminish payments to unsecured creditors in this context on the basis of a fictitious expense not incurred by a debtor."); Thomas, 382 B.R. at 798 ("If a debtor were permitted a car ownership allowance when he actually incurs no such expense, application of the means test would not accurately reflect the debtor's ability to repay creditors, and the purpose of the statute would be frustrated."). Indeed, under the lower courts' reading of section 707(b)(2)(A)(ii)(I), a higher-income debtor with an inoperable car could claim the ownership expense amount simply because the car is an automobile and he owns it. This statutory reading has been rejected because it "defies common sense." Deadmond, 2008 WL 191165, at *4. This Court should hold similarly.

[8] There is no Senate Report or Conference Report to the 2005 Act.

D. Although there is a divergence of opinion on this issue, those courts allowing debtors a vehicle ownership expense under section 707(b)(2)(A)(ii)(I) do not articulate a valid basis for doing so.

Among those circuit courts to have considered the vehicle ownership expense within the context of section 707(b)(2)(A)(ii)(I), there is a split with respect to whether the expense should be allowed. Compare Ransom, – F.3d–, 2009 WL 2477609 (not allowing expense), with Tate, – F.3d –, 2009 WL 1608890 (allowing expense), Ross-Tousey, 549 F.3d at 1148 (same); and Washburn, – F.3d –, 2009 WL 2634333, at *3-6 (same) (split 2-1 decision).

Because the United States believes the decisions in Tate, Ross-Tousey, and the cases that follow them fail to articulate a valid basis for allowing the vehicle ownership expense under section 707(b)(2)(A)(ii)(I), it urges this Court to follow the line of decisions denying the expense.

Ross-Tousey primarily relied on interpretive conclusions reached by a divided Sixth Circuit bankruptcy appellate panel in Kimbro, whose decision was entered after briefing was completed in Ross-Tousey.[9] See Ross-Tousey, 549 F.3d at 1155-60 (citing and quoting extensively from Hildebrand v. Kimbro (In re Kimbro), 389 B.R. 518 (B.A.P. 6th Cir. 2008)). Tate relied almost exclusively on the factual and legal reasoning used in Ross-Tousey and Kimbro. See Tate, –F.3d –, 2009 WL at 1608890 (citing and quoting extensively from Ross-Tousey, 549 F.3d at 1148, and Kimbro, 389 B.R. at 518). Accordingly, the government's concerns regarding Kimbro, each of which are discussed below, are equally applicable to Ross-Tousey, Tate, and the cases that follow them.

First, while the panels in Ross-Tousey and Tate, like the majority in Kimbro, concluded that the government's construction of section 707(b)(2)(A)(ii)(I) improperly gives the same meaning to the words "applicable" and "actual" in section 707(b)(2)(A)(ii)(I), the government's reading actually [9] Kimbro is currently on appeal to the Sixth Circuit. See Hildebrand v. Kimbro (In re Kimbro), Case No. 08-5871 (6th Cir.). During that appeal the United States, as amicus curiae, has shared its views with the Sixth Circuit as to why the majority bankruptcy appellate panel's decision in Kimbro was wrongly decided. Had the government had the opportunity to address those concerns with the Seventh Circuit in Ross-Tousey it would have done so.

gives them different ones. Compare Kimbro, 389 B.R. at 523-24 with United States Br., supra, at 19-21. Indeed, this juxtaposition of terms was explained by the dissent in Kimbro when it stated that "Congress intended and used the phrases 'applicable monthly expense amounts' . . . and 'actual expenses' . . . simply in recognition of the differing ways in which the IRS uses the National Standards and Local Standards versus the Other Necessary Expense Categories." Kimbro, 389 B.R. at 533 (Fulton, J., dissenting).

Second, while the panels in Ross-Tousey and Tate, like the majority in Kimbro, erroneously concluded that the vehicle ownership amount was necessary to cover operating costs, a separate IRS expense standard governs those types of vehicle expenses. Compare Kimbro, 389 B.R. at 531 (referencing "depreciation, insurance, licensing fees and taxes") with Ransom, – F.3d–, 2009 WL 2477609, at *2 ("IRS's Local Standards include allowable transportation expenses . . . broken down into two categories: (1) operating costs and public transportation costs, and (2) 'ownership costs.'").

Third, while the panels in Ross-Tousey and Tate, like the majority in Kimbro, ruled that the phrase "monthly expenses of the debtor shall not include any payments for debts" justifies an ownership expense allowance, see, e.g., Kimbro, 389 B.R. at 523, it does not. Rather, debtors for whom the ownership expense is applicable receive a fixed standard allowance, not the dollar amount associated with a "payment for a debt." See United States Br., supra, at 20 (debtors receive $489 for the first vehicle that has an associated loan or lease payment, and $489 for the second).

Fourth, the panels in Ross-Tousey and Tate, like the majority in Kimbro, relied upon the legislative history of a statute never enacted in order to support their conclusions. See, e.g., Kimbro, 389 B.R. at 525-27. Such an approach has been rejected by the Supreme Court and at least three circuit courts of appeal because it opens the door to the potential subversion of statutory language actually voted on by Congress and signed into law by the President. See, e.g., Mead Corp. v. Tilley, 490 U.S. 714, 723 (1989) ("We do not attach decisive significance to the unexplained disappearance of one word from an unenacted bill because 'mute intermediate legislative maneuvers' are not reliable indicators of congressional intent."); Com. of Puerto Rico v. Blumenthal, 642 F.2d 622, 635 n.23 (D.C. Cir. 1980) ("[Appellant's] argument that we should not consider the legislative history of a bill that was never enacted represents a correct statement of the law."); United States v. Lincoln Rochester Trust Co., 297 F.2d 891, 893 (2d Cir. 1962) (finding that portion of House report referring to language not included in Technical Amendments Act of 1958, as finally adopted, may not be relied on in interpreting Act), cert. denied, 369 U.S. 887 (1962); Interstate Natural Gas Co. v. Federal Power Comm., 156 F.2d 949, 952 (5th Cir. 1946) ("the legislative history of a bill that was not adopted cannot be resorted to construe a bill that was.”), aff’d, 331 U.S. 682 (1947).

Fifth, the panels in Ross-Tousey and Tate, like the majority in Kimbro, erroneously declined to apply the dictionary meaning of the word “applicable.” See Tate, 571 F.3d at 423 (declining to apply the dictionary meaning of the word “applicable” during the course of statutory analysis in determining ownership expenses should be allowed); Ross-Tousey, 549 F.3d at 1148 (same); Kimbro, 389 B.R. at 518 (same). Had they done so, they would have had to question how the vehicle ownership expense allowance is “capable of being applied” to a debtor if the debtor does not make any lease or loan payments. See, e.g., Ransom, – F.3d–, 2009 WL 2477609, at *5. Accordingly, because the panels in Ross-Tousey and Tate, like the majority in Kimbro, failed to take this fundamental step as part of their statutory analysis, their construction of section 707(b)(2)(A)(ii)(I) is suspect and should not be followed by this Court.

CONCLUSION

For these reasons, the United States respectfully asks the Court to reverse the lower court's order.

ADDENDUM

Local Standards: Transportation

Disclaimer: IRS Collection Financial Standards are intended for use in calculating repayment of delinquent taxes. These Standards are effective on March 1, 2009 for purposes of federal tax administration only. Expense information for use in bankruptcy calculations can be found on the website for the U.S. Trustee Program.

The transportation standards consist of nationwide figures for monthly loan or lease payments referred to as ownership costs, and additional amounts for monthly operating costs. The operating costs include maintenance, repairs, insurance, fuel, registrations, licenses, inspections, parking and tolls (These standard amounts do not include personal property taxes).

The ownership costs provide maximum allowances for the lease or purchase of up to two automobiles, if allowed as a necessary expense. A single taxpayer is normally allowed one automobile.

If a taxpayer has a car payment, the allowable ownership cost added to the allowable operating cost equals the allowable transportation expense. The taxpayer is allowed the amount actually spent, or the standard, whichever is less.

If a taxpayer has a car, but no car payment, only the operating costs portion of the transportation standard is used to figure the allowable transportation expense. The taxpayer is allowed the amount actually spent, or the standard, whichever is less.

There is a single nationwide allowance for public transportation based on Bureau of Labor Statistics expenditure data for mass transit fares for a train, bus, taxi, ferry, etc. Taxpayers with no vehicle are allowed the standard amount monthly, per household, without questioning the amount actually spent.

If a taxpayer owns a vehicle and uses public transportation, expenses may be allowed for both, provided they are needed for the health and welfare of the taxpayer or family, or for the production of income. However, the expenses allowed would be actual expenses incurred for ownership costs, operating costs and public transportation, or the standard amounts, whichever is less.

If the amount claimed is more than the total allowed by the transportation standards, the taxpayer must provide documentation to substantiate those expenses are necessary living expenses.

STATEMENT OF JURISDICTION

The bankruptcy court had jurisdiction over debtor Bruce A. Burton's chapter 7 bankruptcy case under 28 U.S.C. §§ 157(a) and (b), and 1334(a) to decide the United States Trustee's [1] motion to dismiss Mr. Burton's bankruptcy case for abuse under 11 U.S.C. § 707(b)(1). The bankruptcy court granted the United States Trustee's motion to dismiss by order entered December 13, 2007, and denied Mr. Burton's motion for reconsideration on February 6, 2008. Mr. Burton timely appealed the order of dismissal and order denying reconsideration under 28 U.S.C. § 158(c)(2) and Fed. R. Bankr. P. 8002(a) and 8002(b) on February 15, 2008. This Court has jurisdiction over this appeal under 28 U.S.C. § 158(a)(1).

STATEMENT OF ISSUES PRESENTED

Whether the bankruptcy court abused its discretion in dismissing Mr. Burton's chapter 7 case for abuse under 11 U.S.C. 707(b)(1) and (3)(B) based on the totality of the circumstances of his financial situation.

---

[1] Congress authorized the United States Attorney General to appoint 21 United States trustees, each to serve in a specific geographic region of the United States. See generally, 28 U.S.C. § 581 et. seq. (establishing the United States Trustee Program). The United States trustees are senior officials of the Department of Justice. Id. The United States trustees "supervise the administration of cases and trustees" in all bankruptcy cases within his or her region through the exercise of a range of oversight responsibilities. 28 U.S.C. §586(a)(3). See generally, Morgenstern v. Revco, D.C., Inc. (In re Revco D.S. Inc.), 898 F. 2d 498, 500 (6th Cir. 1990)(explaining that United States trustees oversee the bankruptcy process, protect the public interest, and ensure that bankruptcy cases are conducted according to law.). United States trustees may raise, appear, and be heard on any issue in any case or proceeding under Title 11. 11 U.S.C. § 307; See also, In re Revco, D.S, Inc., 898 F. 2d at 499-500 (upholding broad appellate standing of United States trustees). Section 707(b) explicitly authorizes United States Trustees to move to dismiss debtors' chapter 7 bankruptcy cases.

STANDARD OF REVIEW

On appeal, this Court reviews the bankruptcy court's findings of fact under the clearly erroneous standard and reviews conclusions of law de novo In re Isaacman, 26 F. 3d. 629, 631(6th Cir. 1994) (citing In re Zick, 931 F.2d 1124, 1126 (6th Cir.1991). Mixed questions of law and fact are separated and reviewed under the applicable standard. Since a dismissal for abuse under 11 U.S.C. § 707(b)(3) is an equitable determination, an appeal of the dismissal of a chapter 7 case for abuse under 11 U.S.C. § 707(b)(3) is reviewed by an abuse of discretion standard. See In re Behlke, 358 F. 3d 429 (6th Cir. 2004).

STATEMENT OF THE CASE

Appellant Bruce A. Burton filed a voluntary petition for relief under chapter 7 of the Bankruptcy Code on November 13, 2006. (Bankruptcy Court Docket No. 1).[2] The United States Trustee moved to dismiss Mr. Burton's case, asserting that his Chapter 7 case was abusive under 11 U.S.C. § 707(b)(2) and (3)(B). (Docket No. 15). After an initial hearing, the bankruptcy court denied that portion of the United States Trustee's motion requesting a dismissal based upon a presumption of abuse under 11 U.S.C. § 707(b)(2). The court scheduled an evidentiary hearing to consider the remaining portion of the United States Trustee's motion to dismiss for abuse under the totality of the circumstances provision in 11 U.S.C. § 707(b)(3)(B). (Docket Nos. 24, 25, and 26).

Counsel for Mr. Burton and the United States Trustee appeared at the hearing on September 20, 2007 and indicated there were no remaining evidentiary issues.[3] The parties agreed the United States Trustee's dismissal motion would turn on whether income the debtor was taking from his pay check to repay 401(k) loan should be considered when evaluating the "totality" of the debtor's financial circumstances 11 U.S.C. § 707(b)(3)(B). (Docket Entry dated September 20, 2007; Docket No. 36 p. 1-2, Burton's Supplemental Brief; Docket No. 40, p. 2, Burton's Motion to Reconsider). After consideration of the parties' briefs and Mr. Burton's bankruptcy petition, schedules, and amended schedules of assets and liabilities, on December 13, 2007, the bankruptcy court granted the United States Trustee's motion to dismiss Mr. Burton's chapter 7 case based upon the totality of his financial circumstances under 11 U.S.C. § 707(b)(3)(B). (Docket Nos. 34, 35, 36, and 37). Mr. Burton filed a motion to reconsider the bankruptcy court's decision, which was denied. This appeal followed.

STATEMENT OF FACTS

1. Statutory Framework.

A. Section 707(b)(3)(B).

Congress enacted 11 U.S.C. § 707(b)(3) in the Bankruptcy Abuse Prevention and Consumer Protection Act of 2005 ("2005 Act"). Prior to the 2005 Act, section 707(b) authorized courts to dismiss cases when Chapter 7 relief would constitute "substantial abuse." 11 U.S.C. § 707(b) (superceded). In evaluating whether substantial abuse existed under the old section 707(b), courts simultaneously balanced both the debtor's conduct and the debtor's ability to pay his debts outside bankruptcy, or through a Chapter 13 repayment plan. In re Krohn, 886 F.2d 123, 126 (6th Cir. 1989);

[3] The bankruptcy court did not conduct a hearing on the record but rather met with the parties in chambers.

Behlke v. Eisen (In re Behlke), 358 F.3d 429, 433 (6th Cir. 2004). See, also In re Kelly, 841 F.2d 908, 915 (9th Cir. 1988); In re Stewart, 175 F.3d 796 (10th Cir. 1999); In re Lamanna, 153 F.3d 1 (1st Cir. 1998). Most courts, including the Sixth Circuit, agreed that a debtor's ability to pay a portion of his debts was the predominate factor.

Congress substantially rewrote section 707(b) in the 2005 Act in three ways. See 11 U.S.C. § 707(b)(1), (2), and (3). First, Congress lowered the standard for dismissal under all subsections of new section 707(b) from "substantial abuse" to mere "abuse." See 11 U.S.C. § 707(b)(1) (cases are now dismissed for "abuse"); 11 U.S.C. § 707(b)(2) (subjecting cases to dismissal for abuse); 11 U.S.C. § 707(b)(3)(same).

Second, Congress authorized dismissal when a mathematical formula, known as the "means test," yields monthly disposable income that exceeds a statutory trigger. 11 U.S.C. § 707(b)(2).

Third, Congress enacted a new section 707(b)(3). This section allows courts to dismiss cases based upon either a debtor's bad faith, 11 U.S.C. § 707(b)(3)(A), or the totality of the debtor's financial circumstances, 11 U.S.C. § 707(b)(3)(B).

Sections 707(b)(3)(A) and (B) of the 2005 Act represent a significant departure from old section 707(b) because they mandate that cases can be dismissed either solely for misconduct, or solely based upon a debtor's ability to pay a portion of his debts. See, e.g., In re Henebury, 361 B.R. 595, 607 (Bankr. S.D. Fla. 2007) (By bifurcating section 707(b)(3)(A) and (B), "the debtor's total financial situation as a measure of ability to pay, and bad faith are separate and sufficient grounds for dismissal. Either ability to pay or bad conduct in connection with the bankruptcy will warrant dismissal for abuse under section 707(b)(3).").

Each prong of section 707(b)(3) is independent. Henebury, 361 B.R. at 607. If a debtor engages in bad faith, the debtor's case is dismissed under section 707(b)(3)(A). If, instead, the debtor can voluntarily repay a portion of his debt, dismissal is mandated by section 707(b)(3)(B).

B. The 2005 Act Provided Statutory Protection of Retirement Loan Repayments to Chapter 13 Debtors.

The 2005 Act incorporated a number of new provisions that govern the treatment of retirement savings in some types of cases and in some circumstances.

Foremost, Section 1322, which addresses the content of a chapter 13 plan, specifically provides that a chapter 13 plan may not modify the terms of a loan from a qualified retirement plan and excludes as disposable income, as defined in section 1325, the funds needed to repay such loans. See 11 U.S.C. § 1322(f). [4]

The 2005 Act did not extend the protections that section 1322(f) provides chapter 13 debtors to debtors, like Mr. Burton, who seek relief under chapter 7. Neither the Bankruptcy Code nor any applicable Rules and Official Forms, including the chapter 7 means test form, contain language analogous to section 1322(f) which permit debtors to exclude 401(k) loan repayments from their disposable income.

[4] In addition, property of the estate was redefined to exclude certain retirement plans and articulated that contributions to such plans do not constitute disposable income in a chapter 13 case. 11 U.S.C. § 541(b)(7). Another protection included expanding the automatic stay provision to provide that the withholding of income to repay a qualified retirement plan loan does not violate the stay. See 11 U.S.C. § 362(b)(19). The automatic stay typically protects debtors by prohibiting the collection of pre-petition debts after the bankruptcy is filed. See 11 U.S.C. § 362(a). However, excluding qualified retirement plan loan repayments from the stay protects debtor's retirement accounts in bankruptcy.

2. Factual Background.

Mr. Burton, the Appellant, is an Applications Engineer who has been employed by UGS Corp. for over six years. (Docket No. 1, Schedule I; Docket No. 35, amended Schedule I). Mr. Burton filed his voluntary chapter 7 bankruptcy petition on November 13, 2006 and scheduled assets of $396,494.03, including a residence valued at $375,000, and 401(k) plan valued at $17,384.03. (Docket No. 1, Schedules A and B; Docket No. 37, p. 2, Memorandum Opinion). His combined scheduled liabilities totaled $459,587.75. These liabilities included a $14,126.74 statutory lien on the 401(K) savings plan with Vanguard Group, two mortgages, priority obligations of $2,577.87, and general unsecured debt of $70,832.77. (Docket No. 1, Schedules D, E, and F; Docket 37 p. 2, Memorandum Opinion, p. 2).

Shortly after his bankruptcy filing, Mr. Burton relocated to Texas, where he continues to work as an engineer for UGS. (Docket No.16; Docket No. 35; Docket No. 36, p. 2, Burton's Supplemental Brief and Docket No. 37, p.2, Memorandum Opinion). After the move, Mr. Burton earned gross monthly wages of $6,862.64 with a net of $4,283.64 per month. Each month, he voluntarily transfers $422.34 from his paycheck to pay down a 401(k) loan he borrowed from himself in 2005 . (Docket No. 1, Schedule D; Docket No. 35, amended Schedule I and J; Docket No. 37, p. 2, Memorandum Opinion). Mr. Burton has monthly living expenses of $4,363. (Docket No. 35, amended Schedule I and J).

Both parties agree Mr. Burton would have disposable income of $342.98 per month to pay creditors if he stopped using $422.34 of his monthly income to repay his retirement account. (Docket No. 36, Burton's Supplemental Brief, p. 2; Docket No. 37 p. 4, Memorandum Opinion).

The United States Trustee moved to dismiss Mr. Burton's chapter 7 case under both section 707(b)(2), on the ground the presumption of abuse arose in his case, and under section (b)(3)(B), on the ground he had the ability to repay a portion of his unsecured debts with the income allocated to repay the 401(k) loan. (Docket No. 15). Mr. Burton objected to the motion to dismiss. (Docket Nos. 18 and 23). The bankruptcy court determined that a presumption of abuse did not arise and scheduled an evidentiary hearing on the remaining section 707(b)(3)(B) portion of the motion. (Docket Nos. 24, 25, and 26).[5]

The parties stipulated that the dispositive issue before the bankruptcy court was whether the bankruptcy court could include the $422.34 in monthly income Mr. Burton was using to repay his 401(k) loan when determining the "totality" of Mr. Burton's financial situation under 11 U.S.C. § 707(b)(3)(B). (Docket entry dated September 20, 2007; Docket No. 36, p. 2, Debtor's Supplemental Brief). After considering the parties' post-hearing briefs on this issue, along with Mr. Burton's amended schedules of income and expenses, the bankruptcy court concluded it could consider all his income, including the $422.34, in determining the totality of Mr. Burton's financial situation.(Docket Nos. 34, 35, 36, 37, and 38).

After looking at all of Mr. Burton's income, the court concluded Mr. Burton could repay a portion of his debts and therefore dismissed his chapter 7 bankruptcy case under section 707(b)(3)(B). Id.

[5] Although the United States Trustee does not agree with the bankruptcy court's analysis under section 707(b)(2), he has not raised the (b)(2) decision as an issue on appeal.

In reaching these conclusions, the bankruptcy court found Mr. Burton had $342.98 of disposable income after payment of his monthly expenses if he did not devote his $422.34 solely to repaying his own loan. (Docket No. 37, p. 4-8, Memorandum Opinion). In its analysis, the court noted that Mr. Burton had been employed by the same employer for a number of years and was earning income above the state median income. Relying on both pre- and post-2005 Act cases, the court held this debtor shall not make voluntary loan payments back to his 401(k) plan in lieu of using that excess income to pay creditors.

Mr. Burton filed a motion to reconsider the dismissal order, which was denied for failure to present any new evidence or demonstrate a clear error of law. (Docket No. 45). Mr. Burton timely appealed the bankruptcy court's orders dismissing his case and denying his motion to reconsider the dismissal order. (Docket No. 47).

SUMMARY OF ARGUMENT

The bankruptcy court did not abuse its discretion under 11 U.S.C. § 707(b)(3)(B) in dismissing Mr. Burton's chapter 7 case on the ground that the totality of Mr. Burton's financial situation allowed Mr. Burton to voluntarily repay a meaningful portion of his unsecured creditors in either a chapter 13 or 11 proceeding, or outside of bankruptcy.

In determining the amount of disposable income Mr. Burton could use to pay creditors, the bankruptcy court correctly treated the $422.34 of monthly income Mr. Burton was using to make loan repayments to his 401(k) as disposable income available to help pay all creditors. In making that determination, the bankruptcy court considered those factors that were relevant to totality of the circumstances of Mr. Burton's financial situation, including the stability of employment, whether the debtor was eligible for chapter 13 relief, and whether the debtor has any age or health related issues that would affect his income, and concluded such factors did not hinder or impair the debtor's ability to repay. As such, the court below did not abuse its discretion in dismissing Mr. Burton's chapter 7 case under section 707(b)(3)(B).

ARGUMENT

I. The bankruptcy court did not abuse its discretion in dismissing Mr. Burton's case under 11 U.S.C. § 707(b)(3)(B).

Under Section 707(b)(3)(B) of 2005 Act, a court deciding whether to dismiss a Chapter 7 case must consider whether "the totality of the circumstances . . . of the debtor's financial situation demonstrates abuse." 11 U.S.C. § 707(b)(3)(B). The Bankruptcy Code does not define the term "financial situation" used in section 707(b)(3)(B). However, as recognized by the Supreme Court, "[w]hen terms used in a statute are undefined, we give them their ordinary meaning." Asgrow Seed Co. v. Winterboer, 513 U.S. 179, 187 (1995)(citations omitted).

Both the ordinary meaning and the case law interpretation of "financial situation" support an understanding focusing on the financial factors of a debtor's (a) income, (b) expenses, (c) liabilities, and (d) assets. See, e.g., John A. E. Pottow, "The Totality of the Circumstances of the Debtor's Financial Situation in a Post-Means Test World," 71 Mo. L. Rev. 1053, 1066 (2006) (Under section 707(b)(3)(B)'s "totality of circumstances" of a debtor's "financial situation" test, courts must consider the debtors liabilities and assets, both exempt and non-exempt as well as income and expenses). Defined separately, the term "finance" is commonly understood to mean "relating to finance," and the term "situation" refers to "the way in which something is placed in relation to its surroundings." Webster's New Int'l Dictionary 851, 2129 (3d ed. 1981); Bailey v. United States, 516 U.S. 137, 144-45 (1995) (turning to dictionary definition of a term in order to determine its meaning). Where courts have had to evaluate the "financial situation" of the litigants before them, both within and outside the bankruptcy context, they have consistently applied an assets, income, liabilities, and expenses understanding of the term. Cf., Wisconsin Dep't Health and Family Servs., 534 U.S. 473, 491-92 (2002) (holding "income-first" method to calculate post-eligibility financial situation of a married couple seeking Medicaid eligibility permissible statutory interpretation).

Thus a full analysis of Mr. Burton's financial situation would by necessity include such liabilities as his 401(k) loan and his corresponding voluntary paycheck deduction each month to pay that particular debt at the expense of his other debts.

Mr. Burton argues that his voluntary repayment of one of his debts - his repayment of his 401(k) loan is a deduction that is "proper" for all debtors to exclude "per se "in all chapter 7 cases in a section 707(b)(3)(B) analysis because such deductions are protected under 11 U.S.C. § 1322(f). This argument is flawed.

Although the 2005 Act amended section 1322(f) to permit chapter 13 debtors to exclude retirement loan repayments from disposable income, Congress declined to extend this protection to chapter 7 debtors. The Bankruptcy Code contains no language permitting debtors to exclude 401(k) loan repayments from their disposable income. See Eisen vs. Thompson, (In re Thompson), 370 B.R. 762 (N.D. Ohio 2007).

To the contrary, the plain language of section 707(b)(3)(B) mandates that courts evaluate the totality of a debtor's financial situation when determining whether to dismiss his case under section 707(b)(3)(B).

In this case, the totality of Mr. Burton's financial situation includes the fact that Mr. Burton has more than $400 in monthly income he can spread among all creditors. It is understandable Mr Burton wants to shield this income from unaffiliated third-party creditors and use it to pay a debt he owes to himself, but nothing in chapter 7 of the Code mandates that.

Without question, there may be cases where a debtor's declining health or age means he must pay back a 401(k) loan in order to ensure an acceptable standard of living. In such a situation, a court could rule that the totality of that debtor's financial situation requires that debtor to continue repaying a 401(k) loan.

But that is not the case here. Mr. Burton is a well compensated, highly specialized engineer. He has steady employment. There is no reason from the record in this case to conclude he cannot continue to work for decades. Given this, the court below did not abuse its discretion in ruling that the totality of Mr. Burton's financial situation allowed him to divide this $400 income at this point in his life among all creditors.

Mr. Burton also suggests that 11 U.S.C. § 362(b)(19) allows him to repay himself rather than other creditors. (Appellant's Brief, p. 4). But section 362(a)(19), merely provides that the automatic stay does not apply to payroll deductions taken to repay 401(k) loans. That has no bearing on dismissing cases under section 707(b)(3)(B)'s totality of the debtor's financial circumstances test. Nor does it protect such repayments from being considered as disposable income. While section 362(a)(19) " is consistent with Congress' intent to preserve retirement accounts during the pendency of bankruptcy proceedings," the provision is "not inconsistent with characterizing the money used to repay 401(k) loans as income." See Eisen vs. Thompson, (In re Thompson), 370 B.R. 762, 770 (N.D. Ohio 2007).

Mr. Burton also suggests that dismissal under section 707(b)(3)(B) is proper only where a debtor is able to fund a chapter 13 plan. (Appellant's Brief p. 4). There is simply no textual support for reading the new statute as mandating dismissal only if a debtor can fund a chapter 13 plan. Instead, debtors' cases should be dismissed based on whether debtors can voluntarily repay a meaningful portion of their debt (a) outside bankruptcy, (b) through a chapter 11 repayment plan, or (c) through a chapter 13 repayment plan. See 11 U.S.C. 707(b)(1) (allowing a court to dismiss a case for abuse, or allowing the court and the debtor to agree that the case should be converted to chapter 11 or chapter 13 instead).

Furthermore, the default remedy for abuse under section 707(b)(3)(B) is dismissal, not conversion. See 11 U.S.C. 707(b)(1). Dismissal puts a debtor outside bankruptcy. The default remedy evidences a congressional intent to dismiss debtors' cases when they can voluntarily make meaningful payments outside bankruptcy. See H.R. Rep. 109-31 at 5 & n.18 (2005), reprinted in 2005 U.S.C.C.A.N. 88, 92 (Congress enacted section 707(b) to issue a "clear mandate requiring these debtors to repay their debts."). Accordingly, a debtor's case is "abusive" under section 707(b)(3)(B) when the debtor voluntarily can make meaningful payments to creditors outside bankruptcy. See, e.g., In re Henebury, 361 B.R. at 607 (ability to pay, standing alone, is sufficient for dismissal under section 707(b)(3)(B)); In re Pennington, 348 B.R. 647 (Bankr. D. Del. 2006) (below-median debtors to whom means test is inapplicable could have case dismissed for abuse given future projection of income where debtors had ability to pay more than 25% of unsecured debt). The common theme in such cases is the debtor's ability to pay his debts voluntarily outside of bankruptcy and not just within the context of funding a chapter 13 plan.

Here, the bankruptcy court examined Mr. Burton's financial situation in its totality of circumstances analysis by considering such factors as his job stability and his above-median annual income. (Docket No. 37, p. 6, Memorandum Opinion). The bankruptcy court determined, well within its broad discretion, that Mr. Burton could pay "a meaningful amount of his consumer debt with relative ease from future income" by no longer using $422.34 to repay himself. (Docket No. 37, Memorandum Opinion p. 8). Indeed, Mr. Burton stipulated he would have $342.98 a month in disposable income if he ceased preferring one obligation, his 401(k) loan, over his other obligations. This would enable him to pay over seventeen percent (17%) of his scheduled general unsecured debt outside of bankruptcy for thirty-six months or twenty-eight percent (28%) of his consumer obligations for over sixty months (Docket No. 37, p. 4, Memorandum Opinion). This equals $12,347.28 over three years and $20,578.80 over five years.

Mr. Burton therefore has viable options outside of bankruptcy. As previously described, he could cease making voluntary deductions from his paycheck to his 401(k) loan and use those funds to repay his unsecured creditors. Mr. Burton could attempt to work out forbearance agreements with his creditors to gradually repay his debts.

Even within bankruptcy, Mr. Burton is able to repay a significant portion of his debt through chapter 13. Mr. Burton's 401(k) loan obligation at filing was $14,126.74. (Doc. No. 1, Schedule D). In a chapter 13 proceeding, Mr. Burton could repay the 401(k) loan obligation in full with monthly pretax deductions in under 34 months[6]. Mr. Burton could thereafter repay a portion of his consumer debt during the remaining 26 months of a chapter 13 plan at a rate of $342.98 a month and pay $8,917.48, or more than ten percent (10%), of his consumer debt. Mr. Burton could therefore pay a meaningful portion of his debt in a chapter 13 proceeding.[7] See In re Davis, 378 B.R. 549, 549-50 (Bankr. N.D. Ohio 2007) (court held that debtor had ability to repay her creditors through chapter 13 because she would be able to pay off her thrift savings plan loan sooner than a prospective chapter 13 plan).

II. Mr. Burton's case would have been subject to dismissal even under the more debtor-friendly pre-2005 Act version of section 707(b).

The bankruptcy court's construction of section 707(b)(3)(B) is consistent with Sixth Circuit pre-2005 Act case law. Section 707(b)(3)(B) requires debtors to repay their debts when they can. Similarly, the pre-2005 Act case law mandated dismissal of chapter 7 cases when debtors had the ability to voluntarily pay a portion of their debt. See, e.g., In re Behlke, 358 F.3d 429 (6th Cir. 2004) (affirming dismissal when debtors had ability to pay creditors a part of debt); In re Lamanna, 153 F.3d 1 (1st Cir. 1998) (affirming dismissal when debtor had monthly disposable income to repay part of debt). Prior to the 2005 Act, dismissal under section 707(b) was predicated on a finding of "substantial abuse." Congress then removed "substantial," which lowered the amount of abuse

[6] Mr. Burton has presumably been paying down his 401(k) loan since he filed his chapter 7 bankruptcy in November 2006. Therefore the amount of time he would need to pay off his loan while in a chapter 13 would be far less than 34 months, thereby freeing up even more income to pay creditors.

[7] Were Mr. Burton to convert to chapter 13, his applicable commitment period for a plan would be five years because his income is above his state median family income. The applicable commitment period for a chapter 13 plan is determined by comparing the debtor's annualized income with the median family income; if his annualized income is greater than the median family income, the applicable commitment is not less than five years unless the debtor can pay off his creditors within a shorter period of time. §1325(b)(4)(A)(ii).

necessary for dismissal. While pre-2005 Act case law applying the concepts may still be used in determining abuse, this case law addresses dismissal under a higher "substantial abuse" standard.[8] Thus the bankruptcy court's conclusion, which is consistent with pre-2005 Act case law, is also consistent with the higher "substantial abuse" standard for dismissal.

The Sixth Circuit Court of Appeals' opinions in Krohn and Behlke predicated dismissal either for lack of honesty or want of need. In re Krohn, 886 F.2d 123, 126 (6th Cir. 1989); In re Behlke, 358 F.3d 429, 433 (6th Cir. 2004). These two independent bases for dismissal are reflected in the post-2005 Act section 707(b)(3)(A) (dismissal for bad faith) and 707(b)(3)(B) (dismissal under totality of circumstances). But in analyzing want of need, Krohn listed several non-exclusive factors used to determine whether a case should be dismissed for the higher substantial abuse standard under the former section 707(b). 886 F.2d at 126. The primary factor was a debtor's ability to repay his debts. Id. at 126. The other factors, relating to the debtor's financial situation, included whether the debtor has a stable source of future income, his eligibility for Chapter 13 relief, the availability of state law and private negotiations to remedy his finances, and whether his expenses may be reasonably reduced. Id. at 126-27.[9] [8] Not all pre-2005 Act "totality of the circumstances" case law is consistent with the current section 707(b)(3)(B). See, e.g., In re Kelly, 841 F.2d 908, 914 (9th Cir. 1988)(debtor's ability to pay his debts, when due, as determined by his ability to fund a chapter 13 plan, is the primary factor to be considered in determining whether granting relief would be substantial abuse); In re Koch, 109 F.3d 1285, 1288 (8th Cir. 1997)(ability to pay for section 707(b) purposes is measured by evaluating debtors' financial condition in a hypothetical chapter 13 proceeding). These cases should be disregarded to the extent they base their analyses exclusively on a debtor's ability to repay through a chapter 13 plan.

[9] This construction of prior law is consistent with that of other courts within the Sixth Circuit, which have focused on the debtor's ability to pay debts while giving weight to other circumstances related to financial situation. See In re Stewart, __ B.R. __, 2008 WL 161357 (N.D. Ohio 2008); In re Wright, 364 B.R. 640, 643 (Bankr. N.D. Ohio 2007); In re Edighoffer, 375 B.R. 789 (Bankr. N.D. Ohio 2007); In re Mestemaker, 359 B.R. 849 (Bankr. N.D. Ohio, 2007); In re Simmons, 357 B.R. 480 (Bankr. N.D. Ohio 2006) (noting where presumption of abuse does not arise under (b)(2) ability to repay standard, a (b)(3) totality of the circumstances analysis may be considered).

Retirement loan repayments were also deemed disposable income in a totality of circumstances analysis prior to the 2005 Act. In Behlke, the Sixth Circuit Court of Appeals examined whether a debtor's voluntary repayment of her retirement loans should be treated as disposable income under the old section 707(b). Behlke v. Eisen (In re Behlke), 358 F.3d 429, 435 (6th Cir. 2004). Behlke, following Krohn, held that retirement loan repayments are disposable income because they are unnecessary for the "maintenance or support" of debtors.

The bankruptcy court did not abuse its discretion in discussing this pre-2005 Act case law, which, significantly, examined ability to pay under a higher "substantial abuse" standard. Nothing in section 707(b)(3)(B) suggests that this analysis should be narrowed. In lowering the standard from "substantial" to mere abuse and requiring consideration of "the totality of the circumstances . . . of the debtor's financial situation," Congress has mandated bankruptcy courts to consider all possible financial factors in weighing a debtor's ability to pay creditors.

CONCLUSION

For these reasons, the United States Trustee respectfully asks this Court to affirm the order entered below granting the United States Trustee's motion to dismiss under 11 U.S.C. § 707(b)(3)(B) and dismissing Mr. Burton's chapter 7 bankruptcy case.

BRIEF FOR THE APPELLEE

JURISDICTIONAL STATEMENT

The bankruptcy court had jurisdiction under 28 U.S.C. §§ 157 (a) and (b), and 1334(a) to issue its final order granting the United States Trustee's motion to dismiss the Debtors' chapter 7 bankruptcy case. The bankruptcy court entered this order, which also gave the Debtors the option to file a motion to convert their case to a chapter 13 proceeding, on November 10, 2008. On November 20, 2008, the Debtors filed a Motion to Alter or Amend Judgment and to Grant New Trial and Request to be Heard; a Motion to Reconsider, to Grant Relief from Order, to Amend Findings of Fact or to Make Additional Findings of Fact and Request to be Heard; a Motion for Reconsideration and for Relief from Order and Request to be Heard, and; a Motion to Stay Order Pending Reconsideration and Request to be Heard. The bankruptcy court granted the Debtors' Motion to Stay Order Pending Reconsideration. On January 15, 2009, the bankruptcy court entered an order denying the Debtors' Motion to Alter or Amend Judgment and to Grant New Trial and the Debtors' Motion for Reconsideration and for Relief from Order, and granting in part the Debtors' Motion to Reconsider, to Grant Relief from Order, to Amend Findings of Fact or to Make Additional Findings of Fact. The Debtors filed a notice of appeal, which is timely under 28 U.S.C. §§ 158(a) and (c)(2), on January 26, 2009. This Court has appellate jurisdiction under 28 U.S.C. § 158(a)(1), a statutory provision under which district courts have jurisdiction to hear appeals from final judgments, orders, and decrees of bankruptcy judges.

STATEMENT OF THE ISSUE

Whether the bankruptcy court abused its discretion by dismissing the Debtors' chapter 7 petition under 11 U.S.C. § 707(b)(3)(B), which allows courts to dismiss chapter 7 petitions when the totality of the circumstances of a debtor's financial situation demonstrates abuse.

STANDARD OF REVIEW

In an appeal taken from a bankruptcy court order, a district court reviews a bankruptcy court's conclusions of law de novo and its findings of fact for clear error. See In re Merry-Go-Round Enterprises, Inc., 400 F.3d 219, 224 (4th Cir. 2005).

STATEMENT OF THE CASE

On February 27, 2008, the Debtors filed a voluntary bankruptcy petition under chapter 7 of the Bankruptcy Code, 11 U.S.C. § 701, et seq. On May 23, 2008, the United States Trustee[1] filed a motion to dismiss the Debtors' petition on the grounds that the totality of the Debtors' financial circumstances demonstrates abuse under 11 U.S.C. § 707(b)(3)(B) because the Debtors have sufficient means to repay a significant amount of their unsecured debts. Granting the motion to dismiss, the bankruptcy court agreed with the United States Trustee and found abuse under § 707(b)(3)(B). In its order, the bankruptcy court also gave the Debtors the opportunity to file a motion to convert their case to a chapter 13, as § 707(b)(1) allows it to do. The Debtors did not move to convert. Instead, they appealed the dismissal order to this Court.

STATEMENT OF THE FACTS

I. Statutory Background

The Bankruptcy Code establishes two primary forms of bankruptcy relief for individual debtors – chapter 7 and chapter 13. Under chapter 7, "an individual debtor receives an immediate unconditional discharge of personal liability for certain debts in exchange for relinquishing his or her nonexempt assets to a bankruptcy trustee for liquidation and distribution to creditors." H.R. Rep. 109-31(I), at 10; see 11 U.S.C. §§ 701-727. Under chapter 13, "a debtor commits to repay

---

[1] United States Trustees "serve as bankruptcy watch-dogs to prevent fraud, dishonesty, and overreaching in the bankruptcy arena." H.R. Rep. No. 95-595, 1st Sess. 4, 88 (1977), as reprinted in 1978 U.S.C.C.A.N. 5963, 5966, 6071. The United States Trustee Program therefore acts in the public interest to promote and preserve the efficiency and integrity of the bankruptcy system. Congress has provided that "[t]he United States trustee may raise and may appear and be heard on any issue in any case or proceeding . . . ." 11 U.S.C. § 307. See Thompson v. Greenwood, 507 F.3d 416, n.3 (6th Cir. 2007) (stating "[t]he United States Trustee is an interested party by statute").

some portion of his or her financial obligations" over a specified period "in exchange for retaining nonexempt assets and receiving a broader discharge of debt than is available under chapter 7." H.R. Rep. 109-31(I), at 10; see 11 U.S.C. §§ 1321-1330.

The difference between chapter 7 and 13 is dramatic. In chapter 7 cases, creditors may look solely to debtors' pre-bankruptcy, non-exempt assets for payment. See 11 U.S.C. § 541 (limiting property of the estate to debtors' pre-petition assets). Debtors' post-bankruptcy income is not subject to creditor claims. Id. Subject to narrow exceptions, debtors receive a complete discharge of all their pre-petition debts in a chapter 7 case. See 11 U.S.C. § 727(b). Historically, in roughly 96% of chapter 7 cases, unsecured creditors received no payment. See, e.g., Brief of the United States in Lamie v. United States Trustee, 2003 WL 21839367 at *38 (2003).

Chapter 13 is different because debtors must use post-petition income to fund a chapter 13 payment plan. See 11 U.S.C. § 1306(a)(2) (property of the bankruptcy estate also includes post-petition income); 11 U.S.C. § 1325(b) (projected disposable income applied to make payments to unsecured creditors). In chapter 13, debtors receive a discharge only after they have fully completed their chapter 13 repayment plans. See 11 U.S.C. §§ 1328(a) and (c); see also 11 U.S.C. § 1328(b) (listing exceptions to this rule).

Since 1984, Congress has enacted a series of tests that have allowed courts to dismiss chapter 7 cases, and thereby prevent unjust discharge of pre-petition debts. In 1984, Congress amended chapter 7 to permit dismissal of a chapter 7 bankruptcy petition under § 707(b) if a court found "substantial abuse." Bankruptcy Amendments and Federal Judgeship Act of 1984, Pub. L. No. 98-353, § 312, 98 Stat. 333, 335. Congress enacted this amendment to respond "to concerns that some debtors who could easily pay their creditors might resort to chapter 7 to avoid their obligations." H.R. Rep. 109-31(I), at 12 (internal quotation omitted). Two years later, Congress again amended this provision to authorize the United States Trustee to seek dismissal of chapter 7 petitions for "substantial abuse." Bankruptcy Judges, United States Trustees, and Family Farmer Bankruptcy Act of 1986, Pub. L. No. 99-554, § 21, 100 Stat. 3088, 3101.

After twenty-years' experience, Congress found that these amendments were insufficient to control abuse of chapter 7. Congress identified, among other problems, the "inherent[] vague[ness]" of the "substantial abuse" standard, which led to disagreement in the courts about whether a debtor's ability to repay a significant portion of his or her debts out of future income[2] constitutes substantial abuse, meriting dismissal. H.R. Rep. 109-31(I), at 12. Another problem was that the Bankruptcy Code established "a presumption in favor of granting the relief requested by the debtor," which influenced courts' decisions whether to find substantial abuse. 11 U.S.C. § 707(b) (2000 suppl. 4); See H.R. Rep. 109-31(I), at 12.

Responding to these perceived shortcomings of the Bankruptcy Code, Congress held hearings over five years to identify what reforms it could adopt "to ensure that debtors repay creditors the maximum they can afford." H.R. Rep. 109-31(I), at 2, 12. The Bankruptcy Abuse

[2] In evaluating whether substantial abuse existed, courts jointly considered both the debtor's conduct and the debtor's ability to pay his debts outside bankruptcy or through a chapter 13 repayment plan. See, e.g., In re Stewart, 175 F.3d 796 (10th Cir. 1999); In re Lamanna, 153 F.3d 1 (1st Cir. 1998); In re Krohn, 886 F.2d 123 (6th Cir. 1989); In re Kelly, 841 F.2d 908, 915 (9th Cir. 1988). Most courts recognized that a debtor's ability to pay a portion of his debt was the predominant factor when determining whether to dismiss a chapter 7 case. Id.

Prevention and Consumer Protection Act of 2005 (the "2005 Act" or "BAPCPA"), S. 256, Pub. L. No. 109-8, 119 Stat. 23, implemented the reforms Congress identified in four ways.

First, Congress repealed the statutory presumption in favor of granting relief to the debtor. Compare 11 U.S.C. § 707(b) (1986) with 11 U.S.C. § 707(b) (2005).

Second, Congress lowered the standard for dismissal under all subsections of new § 707(b) from "substantial abuse" to mere "abuse." See 11 U.S.C. § 707(b)(1) (cases are now dismissed for "abuse"); 11 U.S.C. § 707(b)(2) (subjecting cases to dismissal for abuse); 11 U.S.C. § 707(b)(3) (same).

Third, Congress authorized dismissal when a mathematical formula, known as the "means test," yields monthly disposable income that exceeds a statutory threshold. See 11 U.S.C. § 707(b)(2). The 2005 Act provides specific criteria which, if satisfied, require a court to presume the existence of abuse, requiring "dismissal [or conversion to chapter 13] based on a chapter 7 debtor's ability to repay." H.R. Rep. 109-31(I), at 15. To determine if abuse exists, a court first compares the debtor's annualized "current monthly income" to the "median family income" of a similarly-sized family in the debtor's state.[3] If the debtor's current monthly income is below the median, then the presumption of abuse does not arise. See 11 U.S.C. § 707(b)(7); H.R. Rep. 109-31(I), at 15. When a debtor's current monthly income is above the median and his or her monthly disposable income meets or exceeds the statutory threshold amount, the presumption is triggered, and the debtor's case must be dismissed as abusive (or converted to chapter 13, if the debtor consents), absent an express showing of special circumstances by the debtor. See 11 U.S.C. § 707(b)(1) and (2).

[3] "Current monthly income," a defined term, is used to calculate gross historical income for purposes of the means test. See 11 U.S.C. § 101(10A) (defining "current monthly income" as the debtor's average monthly income for the six-month period preceding the month of the filing of the debtor's petition). Section 707(b)(2) requires debtors to file a statement of current monthly income and other calculations disclosing whether a presumption of abuse arises. See 11 U.S.C. §§ 521(a)(1)(B)(ii), 707(b)(2)(C); Fed. R. Bankr. P. 1007(b)(1)(B).

Fourth, Congress enacted new § 707(b)(3). This section allows courts to dismiss cases based upon either a debtor's bad faith, 11 U.S.C. § 707(b)(3)(A), or the totality of a debtor's financial circumstances, 11 U.S.C. § 707(b)(3)(B). Thus, even if the presumption of abuse does not arise or is rebutted under § 707(b)(2), a chapter 7 petition should be dismissed for abuse under § 707(b)(3) when "the totality of the circumstances. . .of the debtor's financial situation demonstrates abuse." 11 U.S.C. § 707(b)(3)(B).

Sections 707(b)(3)(A) and (B) of the 2005 Act represent a significant departure from old § 707(b) because they clarify that cases can be dismissed either solely for misconduct, under § 707(b)(3)(A), or solely based upon the totality of the circumstances of a debtor's financial situation, under § 707(b)(3)(B). See, e.g., In re Henebury, 361 B.R. 595, 607 (Bankr. S.D. Fla. 2007) (by bifurcating § 707(b)(3)(A) and (B), "the debtor's total financial situation as a measure of ability to pay, and bad faith are separate and sufficient grounds for dismissal. Either ability to pay or bad conduct in connection with the bankruptcy will warrant dismissal for abuse under § 707(b)(3).").

II. Factual and Procedural Background

Mr. Calhoun is the former Chief Financial Officer of University Hospital in Augusta, Georgia. See Joint Stipulation. On February 27, 2008, he and his wife filed a voluntary chapter 7 bankruptcy petition, seeking to discharge $106,707 in unsecured debt. See Joint Stipulation, Schedule F, Notice of Chapter 7 Bankruptcy Case.

The Debtors live in a 3,300 square foot home, on three and a half acres of land, at 208 Tennis Ranch Rd. in Jackson, South Carolina. See Joint Stipulation and Schedule A.

The Debtors' joint income is 179% of the median for a household of two in South Carolina.[4] See Transcript of 10/1/08 hearing, page 11, and UST Exhibit # 4 (median income for households of two in South Carolina is $48,944.). Mr. Calhoun, who is retired and does not work, receives monthly retirement income totaling $7,313, or $87,756 annually. See Joint Stipulation. Mr. Calhoun also receives a monthly Social Security benefit of $1,459. Id. Mrs. Calhoun does not work. Id.

The Debtors currently have monthly mortgage payments totaling $2,151. See Joint Stipulation; Schedules D and J. According to local mortgage standards for Aiken County, South Carolina, which are based on IRS collection financial standards derived from the U.S. Census Bureau and Bureau of Labor Statistics data, the Debtors' monthly mortgage amount is almost 300% of the applicable maximum IRS housing standard of $750 for a family of two residing in Aiken County, South Carolina. See Transcript of 10/1/08 hearing, page 11, and UST Exhibit # 4.

The Debtors spend $930 per month for food, $439 per month on two life insurance policies which insure Mr. Calhoun's life for $800,000, $111 per month for satellite television, and $350 for transportation. See Schedules I and J.

[4] 215% of the median for a household of two if the Debtors' Social Security income is included.

In the 22 months before the Debtors decided to attempt to discharge all their debts in chapter 7, they had been able to pay their unsecured creditors $2,638 per month through ClearPoint Credit Counseling Services. See Transcript of 10/1/08 hearing, page 21. During this period, the Debtors remained current on their other expenses, including their mortgage payments, their car payments, and their utilities. See Transcript of 10/1/08 hearing, pages 23 and 24. They also had the ability to maintain their lifestyle on their 3.5 acre property.

On May 23, 2008, the United States Trustee filed a motion to dismiss the Debtors' petition as an abuse of chapter 7 under 11 U.S.C. §§ 707(b)(1) and (b)(3)(B). See United States Trustee Mot. To Dismiss at 1. Not only did the Debtors' Schedules I and J show that the Debtors admitted they had, in their own estimation, monthly disposable income of $133, excluding Social Security income, but the United States Trustee alleged that with some modest belt-tightening the Debtors would have considerably more disposable income than reflected on their Schedule J. The United States Trustee argued that the totality of the Debtors' financial circumstances demonstrated abuse because the Debtors had the ability to repay a substantial portion of their debts. The United States Trustee also relied upon the fact that the Debtors had been able to pay creditors $2,638 per month for the 22 months prior to filing bankruptcy as evidence the Debtors had an ability to repay creditors.

On November 12, 2008, the United States Bankruptcy Court for the District of South Carolina entered an order dismissing the Debtors' bankruptcy case. The court found the totality of the Debtors' financial circumstances established abuse under 11 U.S.C. § 707(b)(3) because the Debtors could make payments to their creditors while maintaining a reasonable lifestyle. The bankruptcy court concluded that the Debtors' budget was excessive and that there was ample room for reduction of the Debtors' expenses, which the court found bordered on the extravagant. See Order re: Motion to Dismiss at page 10. Specifically, the bankruptcy court concluded that the Debtors have excessive expenses for housing, food, transportation and life insurance. Id., pages 10 - 11. The bankruptcy court also found that the Debtors' Social Security "income should not...be excluded from consideration in analyzing ability to pay as a component of the totality of the debtor's financial circumstances under § 707(b)(3)." Id., page 9.

As 11 U.S.C. § 707(b)(1) allows, the bankruptcy court gave the Debtors the option to convert their case to chapter 13. In a chapter 13 case, the Debtors could receive a discharge of their unsecured debts after five years simply by using their excess income during the period to make monthly payments to their creditors. 11 U.S.C. §§ 1321 - 1328. The Debtors declined to use excess income to fund a five-year chapter 13 repayment plan, electing instead to file a notice of appeal to this Court pursuant to 28 U.S.C. § 158(a).[5]

SUMMARY OF THE ARGUMENT

The bankruptcy court did not abuse its discretion in ruling the Debtors should not receive a chapter 7 discharge that would wipe out their debts. The court did so because the Debtors had excess income that would allow them to repay a portion of their debts. The court's ruling is substantially supported in the record before it. Among other things, the Debtors had shown they could repay creditors by having done so - they paid over $2,638 each month for 22 months prior to [5] Were the order below to be sustained on appeal, the Debtors could file a chapter 13 case at that time. Indeed, there is no bar to the Debtors filing a chapter 13 case today, although that would moot this appeal.

---

filing bankruptcy. The Debtors admit on their own schedules they have excess income, even without accounting for Social Security payments Mr. Calhoun receives.

Given this ability to repay, the court acted reasonably in giving the Debtors the option to obtain a discharge of their debts by paying what they could afford in a chapter 13 repayment plan. See 11 U.S.C. § 707(b)(1); see also 11 U.S.C. §§ 1321 - 1328.

The Debtors refused that offer. That is their right but, given it, the bankruptcy court's dismissal of the Debtors' chapter 7 petition should be affirmed because the bankruptcy court did not abuse its discretion in dismissing under § 707(b)(3)'s "totality of the circumstances" inquiry. First, the bankruptcy court correctly applied the statutory framework of § 707(b)(3)(B) when it found that the totality of the circumstances of the Debtors' financial situation demonstrated abuse because the Debtors have the financial ability to repay a portion of their unsecured debts. The Debtors' challenges to the bankruptcy court's dismissal misunderstand the relevant statutory provisions and rely on case law which has been superceded by statute or is at odds with the vast majority of courts that have considered § 707(b)(3)(B). Specifically, the Debtors fail to recognize that In re Green, 934 F. 2d 568 (4th Cir. 1991), was superceded by the 2005 Act. Second, in considering the totality of the circumstances, the bankruptcy court properly exercised its discretion in determining that the Debtors' bankruptcy filing was abusive, including Debtors' excessive expenses and consideration of Debtors' Social Security income. Finally, the bankruptcy court made no clear error in finding that the Debtors have the ability to pay a substantial amount to unsecured creditors.

ARGUMENT

I. The bankruptcy court did not abuse its discretion in dismissing the Debtors' chapter 7 petition based on the "totality of the circumstances" under § 707(b)(3)(B).

A. The bankruptcy court properly applied the statutory framework of § 707(b)(3)(b) when it found that the totality of the circumstances of the Debtors' financial situation demonstrated abuse because the Debtors have an ability to repay their unsecured debts.

To determine whether providing chapter 7 relief to a debtor constitutes abuse under 11 U.S.C. § 707(b)(3)(B), a bankruptcy court considers the "totality of the circumstances" of the debtor's "financial situation." See 11 U.S.C. § 707(b)(3)(B). A bankruptcy court should "take into consideration a debtor's actual income and expenses" when determining whether to dismiss a debtor's case for abuse under § 707(b)(3)(B)'s "totality of circumstances" test. In re Ross-Tousey, 549 F.3d 1148 (7th Cir. 2008) (citing In re Zaporski, 366 B.R. 758, 768 (Bankr. E.D. Mich. 2007)). "The ability to pay, standing alone, is sufficient to warrant dismissal of a Chapter 7 case for abuse pursuant to 11 U.S.C. § 707(b)(3)(B)." Henebury, 361 B.R. at 607.

Both the written and oral record provide ample basis for the bankruptcy court's conclusion that the Debtors have an ability to repay their unsecured debts. The Debtors conceded that for the 22 months which preceded the filing of their bankruptcy case, they paid $2,638 per month to unsecured creditors through payments to ClearPoint Credit Counseling Services, and did so without falling behind in their mortgage payments or other expenses.[6] See Transcript of 10/1/08 hearing,

[6] The Debtors argue that in attempting to repay their creditors through their pre-bankruptcy debt repayment plan, they had "attempted what the UST suggests and determined that they are not able pages 21 - 24. The Debtors have not experienced a reduction in income from what they received during those 22 months, nor have they experienced a significant increase in expenses from those they paid during that period. See Transcript of 10/1/08 hearing, pages 23-25. The Debtors' own budget filed in their bankruptcy case reflects that they have monthly disposable income of $133.00, without including any Social Security income. See Schedules I and J.

Moreover, the court below did not err in concluding the Debtors' expenses are excessive. See Order re: Motion to Dismiss at pages 10 - 11. Debtors expend $406.35 per month for two life insurance policies on Mr. Calhoun's life. See Schedule J and Transcript of 10/1/08 hearing, pages 15 - 17. One of these policies provides coverage of $500,000 and costs $249.75 per month. Id. The second policy provides coverage of $300,000 and costs $156.60 per month. Id. Mr. Calhoun testified that the $300,000 policy was required so that Mrs. Calhoun would be able to pay off the mortgages on their home upon his death. Id. Mr. Calhoun testified that the $500,000 policy was required to provide for Mrs. Calhoun after his death. Id. However, Mrs. Calhoun is entitled to 75% of Mr. Calhoun's retirement income after his death and if the $300,000 policy remains in effect and pays off the home upon Mr. Calhoun's death, Mrs. Calhoun will no longer have to pay $2,151 per month on the mortgages that the Debtors now pay. Transcript of 10/1/08 hearing, pages 28-29. Therefore, with just the $300,000 policy in place, upon Mr. Calhoun's death, Mrs. Calhoun's gross annual income would exceed $65,000 and she would have no mortgage expenses. She would own to pay their creditors." In fact, the United States Trustee has not suggested, nor did the bankruptcy court find, that the Debtors have the disposable income to repay all of their debt or to make payments equal to the payments made pre-bankruptcy. The facts demonstrate, however, that the Debtors have disposable income to make substantial payments to their unsecured creditors.

a home worth over $250,000 free and clear. In short, the second insurance policy on Mr. Calhoun's life is an extravagant and unnecessary expense. See, e.g., In re Schwenk, No. 08-03055, 2009 WL 975160, at *6 (Bankr. M.D. Pa. 2009) (finding debtor's efforts to reduce income in order to provide for a future benefit for co-debtor spouse indicative of abuse in the absence of any evidence that co-debtor spouse will be unable to provide for her own support).

The Debtors also claim to spend $930.00 per month on food, an expense the bankruptcy found to be excessive. See Transcript of 10/1/08 hearing, page 13; UST Exhibit # 10; Order re: Motion to Dismiss at page 10. The Debtors' monthly satellite television bill includes $37.96 for a sports package, high definition reception, DVR (recording) services, and two additional receivers. See Transcript of 10/1/08 hearing, page 18 and UST Exhibit # 11. The Debtors also claim monthly transportation expenses of $360.00, although they do not have to travel to and from work. See Schedule J.

Having reviewed all of the facts, the bankruptcy court determined that the "[D]ebtors' family budget is excessive and there is ample room for reduction of expenses," and that the Debtors' expenses "border on the extravagant." See Order re: Motion to Dismiss at page 10. The bankruptcy court found that the Debtors did not justify their transportation expense in light of the reduced need for travel during retirement. Id., page 11. The bankruptcy court also found that "[t]he contention that the Debtors cannot now pay any dividend to the unsecured creditors is undermined by the fact that the Debtors made a significant payment for 22 months. The Debtors paid $2,638 to creditors without falling behind in payment of other household expenses. This undermines the credibility of the scheduled current living expenses and suggests that the expenses are significantly over-stated." Id., at page 11 (Emphasis added.).

In sum, the bankruptcy court was well within its discretion in finding abuse under § 707(b)(3)(B) because the totality of the circumstances of the Debtors' financial situation demonstrates an ability to repay unsecured creditors. See, e.g., In re Behlke, 358 F.3d 429 (6th Cir. 2004) (affirming dismissal under superceded § 707(b) when debtors had ability to pay creditors $634 per month); In re Lamanna, 153 F.3d 1 (1st Cir. 1998) (affirming dismissal under superceded § 707(b) when debtor had $771 in monthly disposable income); Hebbring v. United States Trustee, 463 F.3d 902 (9th Cir. 2006) (affirming dismissal under superceded § 707(b) because debtor had $615 available each month to pay creditors). The bankruptcy court should be affirmed.

The Debtors argue that "[t]he means test provisions of the Bankruptcy Code[,] replace the ability to pay analysis" of § 707(b)(3)(B). See Appellant's Brief at page 5. The Debtors rely on In re Nockerts, 357 B.R. 497 (Bankr. E.D. Wis. 2006) for the proposition that cases cannot be dismissed under § 707(b)(3) if they pass the means test under section §707(b)(2). However, the Seventh Circuit effectively overruled Nockerts in In re Ross -Tousey, 549 F.3d at 1161-62 (holding debtors' cases can be dismissed under 11 U.S.C. § 707(b)(3) even if those cases survived review under § 707(b)(2)). This is obvious from the plain language of the statute, which provides that courts "shall" consider whether cases should be dismissed under § 707(b)(3) if they are not dismissed under § 707(b)(2). 11 U.S.C. § 707(b)(2).

When a debtor has an ability to pay but instead files under chapter 7, the case can be dismissed as abusive under § 707(b)(3)(B). This is because, as numerous courts have recognized, the terms "totality of [the] circumstances" and "financial situation" in the 2005 Act "clearly encompass a debtor's ability to pay." In re Lenton, 358 B.R. 651, 663 (Bankr. E.D. Pa. 2006); see also In re Sullivan, 370 B.R. 314, 321(Bankr. D. Mont. 2007) ("[T]he plain language of § 707(b)(3). . . compels a conclusion that a court must consider a debtor's actual debt-paying ability in ruling on a motion to dismiss based on abuse where the presumption does not arise or is rebutted" (quoting In re Sorrell, 359 B.R. 167 (Bankr. S.D. Ohio 2007)); In re Pak, 343 B.R. 239 (Bankr. N.D. Cal. 2006) ("It would be counterintuitive to construe 'totality of the circumstances' [in § 707(b)(3)] to exclude a consideration of the debtor's ability to pay.").

Next, relying upon a case that applied the superceded statute, In re Green, 934 F. 2d 568 (4th Cir. 1991), the Debtors argue that under §707(b)(3)(B) the "[a]bility to pay creditors, standing alone, is insufficient to require dismissal of a Chapter 7 case." See Appellant's Brief at page 6. However, the Debtors' argument fails to recognize that the 2005 Act supercedes Green.

Section 707(b)(3), as embodied in the 2005 Act, divides the prior § 707(b) into two separate grounds for dismissal. Section 707(b)(3)(A) now allows courts to dismiss a case for bad faith by the debtor. Section 707(b)(3)(B), in turn, allows courts to dismiss the case if the court finds abuse based on the totality of the circumstances of the debtor's financial situation. (Emphasis added) Thus, under the 2005 Act, the court may consider either the totality of the debtor's financial situation, including the debtor's ability to pay, or the debtor's bad faith. Because applying the Green analysis to the law as amended by the 2005 Act improperly conflates these factors, see In re

Green, 934 at 572-73, reliance on Green as binding precedent is misplaced. Indeed, recently, the Fourth Circuit Court of Appeals recognized the changes wrought by the 2005 Act, noting that "Congress undoubtedly did intend the BAPCPA to benefit unsecured creditors-by requiring those debtors with sufficient means to file under Chapter 13 rather than Chapter 7 . . .". In re Price, 2009 WL 975796, at *7 (4th Cir. April 13, 2009).

The legislative history of the 2005 Act supports the plain language reading of § 707(b)(3). In it, Congress stated that the 2005 amendments to § 707 were enacted "to ensure that debtors repay creditors the maximum they can afford." H.R. Rep. 109-31 at 1 (I) (2005). The bankruptcy court's application of the statute is consistent with Congress' stated purpose for enacting § 707. The Calhoun's proffered construction is not.

B. The bankruptcy court did not err in considering Debtors' Social Security income and monthly mortgage payment, in determining whether the totality of the circumstances of the Debtors' financial situation demonstrated abuse.

The Debtors argue that the bankruptcy court erred in considering benefits they received under the Social Security Act, noting that §101(10A) of the Bankruptcy Code defines "current monthly income" to specifically exclude any "benefits received under the Social Security Act." Based on this definition, Debtors argue that the court is therefore forbidden from considering Social Security income in determining the totality of the circumstances under § 707(b)(3)(B) . The Debtors ignore that, although § 707(b)(2) specifically refers to "current monthly income,"and thus excludes Social Security benefits, § 707(b)(3)(B) is silent as to whether courts may consider income items excluded from "current monthly income" (such as Social Security income) when determining a debtor's ability to pay under the totality of the circumstances.

The factual record below makes it clear that the court found that the Debtors have the ability to repay a substantial amount of their debts without consideration of their Social Security income. Nevertheless, it was within the bankruptcy court's discretion to consider the Debtors' income from Social Security in determining whether the Debtors' filing is abusive under § 707(b)(3)(B).

First, and as the bankruptcy court noted, in computing the means test under § 707(b)(2) and calculating disposable income for above-median chapter 13 debtors under § 1325,[7] Congress expressly excluded benefits received under the Social Security Act from "current monthly income." The enumeration of specific exclusions from the operation of a statute is an indication that the statute should apply to all cases not specifically excluded. Blausey v. United States Trustee, 552 F.3d 1124, 1133 (9th Cir. 2009). A fortiori if Congress did not want Social Security Act income considered as part of the "totality of the circumstances" in § 707(b)(3)(B), it would have expressly excluded it.

Second, there is no basis to conclude that this text: "totality of the circumstances of the debtor's financial situation," cannot include the consideration of all the income that the debtor receives. See, e.g., In re Booker, 399 B.R. 662, 667 (Bankr. W.D. Mo. 2009) (noting that notwithstanding the definition of current monthly income, Social Security income is part of the totality of a debtor's financial circumstances). "It is well established that when the statute's language is plain, the sole function of the courts - at least where the disposition required by the text is not absurd - is to enforce it according to its terms." Lamie v. U.S. Trustee, 540 U.S. 526, 534 (2004) (internal quotation marks omitted). The phrase "totality of the circumstances of the debtor's financial situation" is not ambiguous, and necessarily it allows the bankruptcy court to consider income derived from Social Security.

[7] The Debtors argue under In re Siegel, No. 06-02291, 2006 WL 3483987 (Bankr. D.S.C. Nov. 20, 2006), that in a chapter 13 case they would not be required to fund a plan using Social Security income. The Debtors ignore that the default mechanism under § 707(b) is dismissal not conversion to chapter 13. 11 U.S.C. § 707(b)(1) (the court may dismiss or, with the debtor's consent, convert to chapter 11 or chapter 13). Moreover, even if the Debtors had elected to convert their case to Chapter 13, which they did not, in order to provide a return to unsecured creditors they could voluntarily fund a plan with Social Security income, In re Siegel, 2006 WL 3483987 at *2, or propose a plan that would not pay a dividend to unsecured creditors. See In re Johns, 342 B.R. 626, 629 (Bankr. E.D. Okla. 2006) (fact that debtor would propose zero-percent plan in chapter 13 is not a special circumstance in considering motion to dismiss under § 707(b)(2)(B)).

Similarly, the Debtors contend that the amount of their mortgage payment should not be a part of the analysis under § 707(b)(3)(B) because debtors may deduct mortgage payments as an expense on the means test under § 707(b)(2), citing In re Johnson, 399 B.R. 72 (Bankr. S.D. Cal. 2008). This argument fails because the means test analysis under § 707(b)(2) and the totality of the circumstances analysis under § 707(b)(3)(B) are separate and distinct evaluations. Congress established the means test under § 707(b)(2) as a screen to determine whether in the first instance a case is abusive because, under the prescribed formula, a debtor is deemed able to pay unsecured creditors an amount set by Congress. However, Congress did not intend for the means test to be the end of the analysis to determine abuse. Rather, when the means test yields no presumption or the presumption is rebutted, § 707(b)(3)(B) requires a consideration of the totality of the circumstances of the debtor's financial situation, including the debtor's ability to pay unsecured creditors.

Congress directed the courts to consider all circumstances of the debtor's financial situation under a separate subsection of § 707(b), so that abuse which evaded the initial filter of the means test would be identified and such cases dismissed. See, e.g., Ross -Tousey, 549 F.3d at 1161-62 (where debtor's petition is not presumed abusive, the United States Trustee can still request dismissal based on the totality of circumstances, which includes the debtor's actual income and expenses) (emphasis in original); In re Kaminiski, 387 B.R. 190 (Bankr. N.D. Ohio 2008) (finding debtor's allocation of $1,856.12 for housing impermissibly high).

CONCLUSION

For the foregoing reasons, the order of the bankruptcy court should be affirmed.

ISSUE PRESENTED

Under 11 U.S.C. § 707(b)(3)(B) may a debtor's chapter 7 bankruptcy case be dismissed, or converted to chapter 13, if the bankruptcy court, after considering the circumstances of the debtor's financial situation, determines that the debtor, although not acting in bad faith, has the ability to pay back a portion of debts owed to his or her creditors?

STATEMENT OF THE CASE

This is an appeal from a bankruptcy court order, affirmed by the district court, which held two debtors, John and Glenda Calhoun, have sufficient income to repay their creditors and thus are ineligible for a discharge of their debts under chapter 7 of the Bankruptcy Code. The parties dispute whether that issue should be decided under the test mandated by this Court's 1991 decision, Green v. Staples (In re Green), 934 F.2d 568 (4th Cir. 1991) (Addendum). That case established the test for dismissal pursuant to a repealed version of 11 U.S.C. § 707(b) of the Bankruptcy Code, under a now-superseded "substantial abuse" standard. The massive changes made to the Bankruptcy Code in 2005 by the Bankruptcy Abuse Prevention and Consumer Protection Act ("2005 Act") cast the relevance of Green to post-2005 cases. This case will allow this Court to clarify what the new factors should be for determining whether a chapter 7 case should be dismissed under the new "financial" abuse standard of the current section 707(b)(3)(B).

A. Statutory Framework

1. Relief Available to Individual Debtors

The Bankruptcy Code establishes two primary forms of relief for individual debtors – chapter 7 and chapter 13. Under chapter 7, a debtor receives "an immediate unconditional discharge of personal liability" for consumer debts. In exchange, a bankruptcy trustee liquidates the debtor's non-exempt assets, if any, and distributes the proceeds to creditors. H.R. Rep. 109-31 (2005) at 10, reprinted in 2005 U.S.C.C.A.N. 88, 92; (Addendum); see 11 U.S.C. §§ 701-727. Under chapter 13, in contrast, "a debtor commits to repay some portion of his or her financial obligations" over a period of no more than five years. Under this scenario, the debtor retains non-exempt assets and, after completing the repayment plan, receives a discharge. H.R. Rep. 109-31 at 10; see 11 U.S.C. §§ 1321-1330.

The difference between chapter 7 and 13 is dramatic. In chapter 7 cases, creditors may look solely to a debtor's pre-bankruptcy, non-exempt assets for payment. See 11 U.S.C. § 541 (limiting property of the estate to a debtor's pre-petition assets). A chapter 7 debtor's post-bankruptcy income is not subject to creditor claims. Id. Subject to narrow exceptions, debtors receive a complete discharge of all their pre-petition debts in a chapter 7 case. See 11 U.S.C. § 727(b).

Chapter 13 is different because debtors must use post-petition income to fund a chapter 13 payment plan. See 11 U.S.C. § 1306(a)(2) (property of the bankruptcy estate includes post-petition income); 11 U.S.C. § 1325(b) (projected disposable income applied to make payments to unsecured creditors). In chapter 13, debtors typically receive a discharge only after they have fully completed their chapter 13 repayment plans. See 11 U.S.C. §§ 1328(a) and (c); see also 11 U.S.C. § 1328(b) (listing exceptions to this rule).

In 2005, Congress enacted a major revision of the Bankruptcy Code, known as the Bankruptcy Abuse Prevention and Consumer Protection Act of 2005. Pub. L. 109-8, 119 Stat. 27 (Apr. 20, 2005) ("the 2005 Act").

2. Former Section 707(b): Dismissal of Chapter 7 Cases for Substantial Abuse

Beginning in 1984, Congress enacted a series of tests that have allowed courts to dismiss chapter 7 cases, and thereby prevent unjust discharge of pre-petition debts. In 1984, Congress amended chapter 7 to permit dismissal of a chapter 7 bankruptcy petition under Section 707(b) if a court found "substantial abuse." Bankruptcy Amendments and Federal Judgeship Act of 1984, Pub. L. No. 98-353, § 312, 98 Stat. 333, 335. Congress enacted this amendment to respond "to concerns that some debtors who could easily pay their creditors might resort to chapter 7 to avoid their obligations." H.R. Rep. 109-31 at 12 (internal quotation omitted). Two years later, Congress again amended this provision to authorize United States Trustees to seek dismissal of chapter 7 petitions for "substantial abuse." Bankruptcy Judges, United States Trustees, and Family Farmer Bankruptcy Act of 1986, Pub. L. No. 99-554, § 21, 100 Stat. 3088, 3101.

After twenty-years of experience, Congress found that these amendments were insufficient to control abuse of chapter 7. Congress identified, among other problems, the "inherent[] vague[ness]" of the "substantial abuse" standard. The courts disagreed whether a debtor's ability to repay a significant portion of his or her debts out of future income, by itself, constituted substantial abuse, meriting dismissal. H.R. Rep. 109-31 at 12. Another problem was that the Bankruptcy Code established "a presumption in favor of granting the relief requested by the debtor," which influenced courts' decisions on whether to find substantial abuse. 11 U.S.C. § 707(b) (2000 suppl. 4); see H.R. Rep. 109-31; Green, 934 F.2d at 572.

Responding to these perceived shortcomings of the Bankruptcy Code, Congress held hearings over five years to identify what reforms it could adopt "to ensure that debtors repay creditors the maximum they can afford." H.R. Rep. 109-31 at 2, 12.

3. Changes Under the 2005 Act

The 2005 Act implemented four important reforms (see Addendum comparing statutes):

First, Congress repealed the statutory presumption in favor of granting relief to the debtor. Compare 11 U.S.C. § 707(b) (1986) with 11 U.S.C. § 707(b) (2005).

Second, Congress lowered the standard for dismissal under all subsections of new section 707(b) from "substantial abuse" to "abuse." 11 U.S.C. § 707(b)(1)-(3) (cases are now dismissed for abuse).

Third, Congress authorized dismissal when a mathematical formula, known as the "means test," yields monthly disposable income that exceeds a statutory threshold. 11 U.S.C. § 707(b)(2). The means test enacted pursuant to the 2005 Act provides specific criteria which, if satisfied, require a court to presume the existence of abuse, and if the presumption is not rebutted, requiring "dismissal [or conversion to chapter 13] based on a chapter 7 debtors' ability to repay." H.R. Rep. 109-31 at 15.

To determine if abuse exists under the means test, a court first compares the debtors' annualized "current monthly income" to the "median family income" of a similarly-sized family in the debtor's home state. 11 U.S.C. § 101(10A). If the debtors' current monthly income is below the median, then the presumption of abuse does not arise. 11 U.S.C. § 707(b)(7); H.R. Rep. 109-31 at 15. When a debtors' current monthly income is above the median after subtracting allowed expenses, and his or her monthly disposable income meets or exceeds the statutory threshold amount, the presumption is triggered. Then the debtors' case must be dismissed as abusive (or converted to chapter 13, if the debtor consents), absent an express showing of special circumstances by the debtor. 11 U.S.C. § 707(b)(1) and (2).

Fourth, Congress enacted new section 707(b)(3). This section allows courts to dismiss cases based upon either a debtor's bad faith, 11 U.S.C. § 707(b)(3)(A), or the totality of a debtor's financial circumstances, 11 U.S.C. § 707(b)(3)(B). Thus, even if the presumption of abuse does not arise, or is rebutted under section 707(b)(2), a chapter 7 petition should be dismissed for abuse under section 707(b)(3) when there is either bad faith or "the totality of the circumstances . . . of the debtor's financial situation demonstrates abuse." 11 U.S.C. § 707(b)(3)(B); In re Ross-Tousey, 549 F.3d 1148, 1161-62 (7th Cir. 2008).

Sections 707(b)(3)(A) and (B) of the 2005 Act represent a significant departure from old section 707(b) because they clarify that cases can be dismissed either solely for misconduct, under subsection 707(b)(3)(A), or solely based upon the totality of the circumstances of a debtor's financial situation, under section 707(b)(3)(B).

STATEMENT OF THE FACTS

The debtors, John and Glenda Calhoun, are a married couple, aged 64 and 57. JA at 113. Mr. Calhoun was the Chief Financial Officer of University Hospital in Augusta, Georgia until he retired in 1997. JA at 113, 202. He now volunteers at his local credit union. Mrs. Calhoun is not employed. JA at 113.

The Calhouns live in a 3,300 square foot home, with four bedrooms, three full baths, and a home office on three and a half acres of land, at 208 Tennis Ranch Rd. in Jackson, South Carolina. JA at 113-14. After their children left home, they tried briefly to sell the house and then decided to remodel instead to enable them to live there as they grew older. JA at 99, 197. They had counted on using the income from a retirement investment fund to pay for the renovations, but the stocks in the fund lost much of their value. JA at 208. Therefore, to finance the remodeling, they withdrew retirement funds and increased their mortgage. JA at 99.

The Calhouns' self-described "belt-tightening" measures included not maintaining their tennis court, which had been unused since 1997, when their son was on his high school tennis team. JA at 100, 204. They also stopped using their pool, and ultimately filled it in. JA at 99, 204-05.

The Calhouns' annual household income, $105,264, is 226 percent of the median income of $46,521 for a household of two in South Carolina. JA at 87, 120. Mr. Calhoun, who no longer works, receives monthly retirement income totaling $7,313, or $87,765 annually. Mr. Calhoun also receives a monthly social security benefit of $1,459. JA at 85, 113. Mrs. Calhoun has no independent source of income. JA at 198.

The Calhouns currently have monthly mortgage payments totaling $2,151. JA at 99. In September 2008, they owed $206,800 and $92,000 on their mortgages. JA at 114. The Calhouns' monthly mortgage payment amount is almost 300 percent of the applicable maximum IRS housing standard of $750 for a family of two residing in that area. JA at 128. The Calhouns spend $930 per month for food. JA at 46. They spend $439 per month on two life insurance policies which insure Mr. Calhoun's life for $800,000, although Mrs. Calhoun will receive 75 percent of Mr. Calhoun's pension, should he predecease her. JA at 46, 191-92, 221-22. They also pay $111 per month for cable television, $69 per month on internet, and $350 for transportation. JA at 46-47.

In the 22 months before the Calhouns filed their chapter 7 petition, from April 2006 to February 2008, they paid their unsecured creditors $2,638 per month through ClearPoint Credit Counseling Services. JA at 122. Even though they were paying their creditors $2,638 every month, the Calhouns remained current on their other expenses, including their mortgage and car payments, and utilities. They also were able to maintain their lifestyle on their 3.5 acre property. Id.

On February 27, 2008, Mr. Calhoun and his wife filed a voluntary chapter 7 bankruptcy petition, seeking to discharge $106,707 in unsecured debt. JA at 29-31. They did so based on Mr. Calhoun's internet research that they could pass the means test under § 707(b)(2) necessary for discharge. JA at 122. As Mr. Calhoun testified:

> A: Well, at that time, I, I went on the website, and national site for bankruptcy, and I said maybe there's relief for us. . . . I looked at what a Chapter 7 bankruptcy was. I saw the means test that was in there. I went through that process of calculating based on what's on the website. When I reached the bottom I said yes, we have the possibility of qualifying.

JA at 234-35.

On May 23, 2008, the United States Trustee filed a motion to dismiss the Calhouns' petition under 11 U.S.C. §§ 707(b)(1) and (b)(3)(B). JA at 84-87. The Calhouns themselves estimated on their Schedules I and J that they had monthly disposable income of $133, excluding social security income. JA at 46, 86. The United States Trustee alleged that with some modest belt-tightening the Calhouns would have considerably more disposable income to repay creditors than reflected on their Schedule J. JA at 86.

On November 12, 2008, the United States Bankruptcy Court for the District of South Carolina entered an order dismissing the Calhouns' bankruptcy case. In re Calhoun, 396 B.R. at 270, 277 (Bankr. D.S.C. 2008); JA at 118-129. It found the totality of the Calhouns' financial circumstances justified dismissal under 11 U.S.C. § 707(b)(3)(B). JA at 125. In doing so, the bankruptcy court held that "while the totality of the debtor's financial circumstances must be examined, the ability to pay a significant dividend to creditors and the failure to do so standing alone can be an abuse of chapter 7, absent mitigating factors." Calhoun, 396 B.R. at 276; JA at 125. Considering the Calhouns' schedules, the bankruptcy court found that they could pay their creditors significantly more each month than the $133 in disposable monthly income they claimed to have. Id. The court further found that the Calhouns were subtracting income from social security, "shielding it from creditors." Calhoun, 396 B.R. at 276; JA at 125-26. The court ruled the Calhouns' financial situation demonstrated they can repay a substantial portion of their debts, as demonstrated by the fact that they had been able to pay creditors $2,638 per month for the 22 months before filing bankruptcy. Id. at 276; JA at 128. These factors, two life insurance policies, and an excessive budget, led the bankruptcy court to order dismissal. Id. at 277; JA at 127-29.

The bankruptcy court gave the Calhouns the option to convert their case to chapter 13. 11 U.S.C. § 707(b)(1); JA at 129. Had they converted, they could have received a discharge of their unsecured debts after five years by paying their disposable income in monthly installments to their creditors. 11 U.S.C. §§ 1321 - 1330. The Calhouns declined to convert to chapter 13, electing first to seek reconsideration, JA at 130-34, and then to appeal the bankruptcy court's decision. JA at 151.

The United States District Court for the District of South Carolina affirmed the dismissal of the Calhouns' chapter 7 case. In re Calhoun, No. 3:09-822, slip op. at 1 (D.S.C. filed May 26, 2009); JA at 394-409. It rejected the Calhouns' argument that the means test is the only method to determine a debtor's ability to pay, thereby precluding a second consideration of ability to pay under section 707(b)(3)(B)'s "totality of financial situation" standard. Id. at 8; JA at 401; accord Ross-Tousey, 549 F.3d at 1161-62. After reviewing the facts of the Calhouns' case, it held that the bankruptcy court did not err in finding that the Calhouns' expenses were excessive and "border[ed] on the extravagant." Id. at 14-15; JA at 407-08.

This appeal followed.

STANDARD OF REVIEW

When a district court has acted in its capacity as a bankruptcy appellate court, this Court reviews the bankruptcy court's decision independently. Banks v. Sallie Mae Servicing Corp. (In re Banks), 299 F.3d 296, 300 (4th Cir. 2002). This Court reviews the bankruptcy court's factual findings for clear error and its legal conclusions de novo. See Kielisch v. Educ. Credit Mgmt. Corp. (In re Kielisch), 258 F.3d 315, 319 (4th Cir. 2001).

In determining whether providing chapter 7 relief to a debtor would constitute abuse under 11 U.S.C. § 707(b)(3), bankruptcy courts apply a "totality of the circumstances" test to the debtor's financial situation. See 11 U.S.C. § 707(b)(3)(B). The "totality of the circumstances" test is a "fact-intensive determination" which is reviewed on appeal for abuse of discretion. Cf. Hebbring v. U.S. Trustee, 463 F.3d 902, 907-08 (9th Cir. 2006) (pre-2005 Act case).

SUMMARY OF THE ARGUMENT

The bankruptcy court's order dismissing the Calhouns' chapter 7 petition, which also gave them the opportunity to convert their case to chapter 13, should be affirmed. The bankruptcy court did not abuse its discretion in finding abuse under section 707(b)(3)(B)'s "totality of the financial situation" inquiry.

There are three reasons for affirming the bankruptcy court's dismissal. First, the bankruptcy court properly applied the statutory framework of new section 707(b)(3)(B) when it found that the totality of the circumstances of the Calhouns' financial situation demonstrated abuse. The court considered all circumstances pertinent to their financial situation and correctly concluded that they have the financial ability to repay a portion of their unsecured debts. The Calhouns' challenges to the bankruptcy court's dismissal are premised upon an incorrect understanding of these new statutory provisions and case law.

Second, the bankruptcy court did not need to analyze any of the non-financial factors listed in this Court's 1991 decision Green v. Staples (In re Green), 934 F.2d 568, 570 (4th Cir.1991). Green was superseded by statute with the enactment of the 2005 Act. Under the 2005 amendment, non-financial facts are now relevant to section 707(b)(3)(A) bad faith cases, rather than section 707(b)(3)(B) "financial circumstances" cases.

Finally, the bankruptcy court did not abuse its discretion by including Mr. Calhoun's social security income in its analysis of the totality of his financial circumstances, even though that income would not be included in determining whether there was a presumption of abuse under section 707(b)(2) or what the Calhouns could pay under a chapter 13 plan.

ARGUMENT

I. Under the New Section 707(b)(3)(B), the Bankruptcy Court Did Not Abuse Its Discretion in Applying the "Totality of the Financial Situation" to Dismiss Calhouns' Chapter 7 Petition.

The issue in this appeal is whether, under the 2005 Act, a court may dismiss a case under section 707(b)(3)(B) when a debtor has an ability to pay a portion of his or her debts. The better interpretation of the statute suggests that result. Because the Calhouns can pay back their creditors, the orders entered below should be affirmed.

A. Analysis of a Debtor's "Financial Situation" under the 2005 Act is Limited to Consideration of Financial Factors.

1. The Plain Meaning of the Section 707(b)(3) Shows congressional intent to allow dismissal on financial grounds

Under the revised language of section 707(b)(3)(B), a court deciding whether to dismiss a chapter 7 case must consider whether "the totality of the circumstances (including whether the debtor seeks to reject a personal services contract and the financial need for such rejection as sought by the debtor) of the debtor's financial situation demonstrates abuse." 11 U.S.C. § 707(b)(3)(B). By inserting the phrase "financial circumstances" in the 2005 Act, Congress signaled a departure from, and narrowing of, the old totality of the circumstances test. See Connecticut Nat'l Bank v. Germain, 503 U.S. 249, 253 (1992) (stating that the interpretation of a statute should not render any word superfluous).

Two changes in the statutory language are particularly significant. First, the presumption against a finding of abuse is gone. Compare 11 U.S.C. § 707(b) (1986) with 11 U.S.C. § 707(b) (2005) (Addendum); In re Wolf, 390 B.R. 825, 831-32 (Bankr. D.S.C. 2008). The standard has been lowered from "substantial abuse" to "abuse." 11 U.S.C. § 707(b)(1)-(3). Accordingly, the best reading of section 707(b)(3)(B) is: if the debtor's financial circumstances demonstrate ability to pay a meaningful portion of his debts to his creditors, that fact should lead a court to dismiss a chapter 7 case for abuse.

Congress did not define the new term "financial situation." Therefore, this Court should give it its ordinary meaning. Asgrow Seed Co. v. Winterboer, 513 U.S. 179, 187 (1995) (citations omitted). Both the ordinary meaning and the case law interpretation of "financial situation" demonstrate that a bankruptcy court should dismiss a chapter 7 case when the financial factors of a debtor's income, expenses, assets, and liabilities so warrant.

As a starting point, a debtor's "financial situation" consists of the debtor's reasonable income and expenses. Ross-Tousey, 549 F.3d at 1162 (court may consider actual income and expenses); In re Mestemaker, 359 B.R. 849, 854-55 (Bankr. N.D. Ohio 2007). Within this inquiry, however, a court must determine and balance "multiple factors," constrained only to the extent that those factors must be economic. In re Wolf, 390 B.R. 825, 832 (Bankr. D.S.C. 2008); In re Haar, 373 B.R. 493, 500 (N.D. Ohio 2007).

Furthermore, the limitation to considering financial factors does not deprive bankruptcy courts of their discretion to weigh other financial factors. Morse v. Rudler (In re Rudler), 576 F.3d 37, 51 (1st Cir. 2009) (describing section 707(b)(3)(B) as a totality of the circumstances inquiry that "remains a backup option when the Trustee is dissatisfied by the results of the means test.").

The "financial situation" factors that a bankruptcy court may consider include: the debtor's assets, liabilities, expenses, and expected future income, and whether any of the debtor's obligations are secured by unnecessary luxury goods. In short, financial factors that are relevant to the determination of the debtor's ability to pay creditors should fall under the bankruptcy's scrutiny. Wolf, 390 B.R. at 833 (Bankr. D.S.C. 2008) ("The plain meaning of "financial situation" must necessarily include the debtor's ability to pay creditors."); Haar, 373 B.R. at 500.

The intent behind the enactment of the statute bolsters this reading. The 2005 amendments were designed to "respond to many of the factors contributing to the increase in consumer bankruptcy filings, such as lack of personal financial accountability, the proliferation of serial filings, and the absence of effective oversight to eliminate abuse in the system." Perlin v. Hitachi Capital Am. Corp., 497 F.3d 364, 371 (3d Cir. 2007) (quoting H.R. Rep. No. 109-31 at 2). By specifying "financial circumstances," Congress underscored its concern that chapter 7 be reserved for debtors who truly could not repay their creditors by amending the statute. United States v. Am. Trucking Ass'ns, 310 U.S. 534, 543 (1940) (stating that the words of a statute are the best indication of its purpose). This is borne out by the legislative history that expressed that debtors "will be channeled into chapter 13 of the Bankruptcy Code which requires people to repay a portion of their debt." 151 Cong. Rec. S 1856 (Mar. 1, 2005) (statement of Sen. Charles Grassley).

The bankruptcy court here did not ignore any financial factors in its analysis. It carefully considered the Calhouns income, expenditures, stability of income, need for life insurance, as well as money spent on items such as dry-cleaning, cable, and internet. Calhoun, 396 B.R. at 277; JA at 127-28. Rather, it simply balanced the Calhouns' financial factors in a way that they do not like.

2. 11 U.S.C. § 707(b)(3) now contains two independent analyses – one for bad faith and the other for the totality of the debtor's financial situation.

Section 707(b)(3) allows a bankruptcy court to dismiss a case if either the totality of the debtor's financial circumstances or the debtor's bad faith so indicate. Congress limited analysis under section 707(b)(3)(B) to "financial" conditions. That modifier necessarily precludes courts from considering non-economic factors, such as debtor conduct, as part of the section 707(b)(3)(B) analysis.

The text of the new section 707 makes this plain. As the statute indicates, issues, such as whether the petition was filed accurately or in good faith, are addressed under section 707(b)(3)(A). In fact, the two analyses should be kept separate to avoid "collapsing the two separate justifications into one." In re Booker, 399 B.R. 662, 667 (Bankr. W.D. Mo. 2009).

This reading of the current statute is not necessarily a radical departure from pre-2005 Act "totality of the circumstances" analysis. Under the previous version of section 707(b), some courts evaluated whether "substantial" abuse existed by considering simultaneously both the debtor's conduct and the debtor's ability to pay his debts outside bankruptcy or through a chapter 13 repayment plan. See, e.g., In re Stewart, 175 F.3d 796 (10th Cir. 1999). Others took a different approach. The Sixth Circuit, for example, did not mandate both "bad faith" and "ability to repay" findings to support dismissal. Rather, the Sixth Circuit held that "substantial abuse can be predicated upon either lack of honesty or want of need." In re Krohn, 886 F.2d 123, 126 (6th Cir. 1989) (emphasis added). It also held in 2004 that bankruptcy courts could dismiss under superceded section 707(b) without making bad faith findings. In re Behlke, 358 F.3d 429, 435 (6th Cir. 2004) (affirming dismissal because "[t]he bankruptcy court committed no legal error in finding substantial abuse absent a finding of 'dishonesty'").

Congress codified the Behlke approach by disentangling bad faith cases from ability to repay cases. The Seventh Circuit recognized this distinction when it stated that the United States Trustee could seek dismissal under new section 707(b)(3) either for bad faith or under totality of the debtor's financial circumstances. Ross-Tousey, 549 F.3d at 1162.

Thus under the 2005 Act, if a debtor has an ability to repay and also engages in misconduct, then a bankruptcy court has two separate and independent grounds upon which to base an order granting a motion to dismiss – sections 707(b)(3)(A) and (B). However, if a debtor has an ability to repay, considering the entire financial situation, a portion of his debt, then dismissal is permissible, regardless of intent: "Thus the debtor's total financial situation as a measure of ability to pay, and bad faith are separate and sufficient grounds for dismissal." In re Henebury, 361 B.R. 595, 607 (Bankr. S.D. Fla. 2007); see also Reed v. Anderson (In re Reed), No. 07-04357, slip op. at 24-25 (C.D. Cal. Nov. 24, 2009) (Addendum).

Accordingly, the bankruptcy court did not abuse its discretion when it determined that the Calhouns' financial factors, primarily their ample income and overly-generous budget, dictated that a chapter 7 discharge would be an abuse under section 707(b)(3)(B)..

II. The Holding and Rationale of Green v. Staples is Superseded by the 2005 Act.

Before 2005, old section 707(b) cases were reviewed under a combination of financial and non-financial factors. Green, 934 F.2d at 572. Now Congress has bifurcated these, so section 707(b)(3)(B) cases are reviewed based solely upon financial factors. Thus, a one court has held "nothing in the structure of the 'totality of the circumstances' test of § 707(b)(3) suggests that a debtor's ability to repay an obligation must, as a prerequisite for dismissal, be coupled with other [non-financial] factors." In re Haar, 373 B.R. at 499-500. Other courts have followed this logic. In re Hoffman, 413 B.R. 191, 195 (M.D. Pa. 2008) ("[T]he specific statutory provisions of § 707(b)(3) . . . provide that bad faith and the totality of the circumstances are separate, distinct bases for a finding of abuse."); Wolf, 390 B.R. at 832 ("Nevertheless, abuse is found, if at all, based on either bad faith or the totality of the circumstances.").

In Green v. Staples (In re Green), this Court established the test in this Circuit to determine if a chapter 7 filing should be dismissed under the previous standard of "substantial abuse." This Court read the now-superseded language of the Bankruptcy Code to foreclose a finding of substantial abuse based solely on an ability to pay creditors. Green, 934 F.2d at 572. In doing so, this Court noted that substantial abuse "occurs under Section 707(b) when a debtor attempts to use the provisions of the Code to get a 'head start' rather than a 'fresh start.'" Id. at 570. In the 15 years since Green was decided, Congress has made the qualifications for obtaining that "fresh start" more demanding, requiring a reassessment of the Green decision.

As demonstrated above, having ability to pay may result in dismissal or conversion of a chapter 7 petition under new section 707(b)(3)(B) of the 2005 Act. Indeed, the lower courts in this case recognized that the Green rule requiring more than ability to pay for dismissal under new section 707(b)(3) is no longer viable. The bankruptcy court concluded that the new language of the 2005 Act 1) reducing the standard from "substantive abuse" to "abuse" and 2) removing the presumption in favor of the debtor, superseded the rule in Green that ability to pay, standing alone, was an insufficient basis for dismissing a chapter 7 case. Calhoun, 396 B.R. at 274-75; JA at 123-124. The district court agreed that the 2005 Act "likely undercut the holding in Green." Slip op. at 10; JA at 403; see also In re Smith, No. 09-691, 2009 WL 4262842, at *4, n.5 (Bankr. N.D. W.Va. Nov. 23, 2009) (" By citing to Green in this Memorandum Opinion, the court is not stating that Green continues to be good law following the changes to § 707.").

The Green decision also is no longer relevant because its conclusion that ability to pay alone cannot compel dismissal of a chapter 7 on the then-existing "statutory presumption that a debtor's Chapter 7 petition should be granted." Green, 934 F.2d at 572. The 2005 Act repealed that presumption and thus the statutory underpinnings for the Green decision. Wolf, 390 B.R. at 831-32.

The Calhouns' argument that ability to repay debts cannot be the sole basis for dismissal under section 707(b)(3) has no basis in the current statutory text. "[N]othing in the structure of the 'totality of circumstances' test of § 707(b)(3) suggests that a debtor's ability to repay an obligation must, as a prerequisite for dismissal, be coupled with other factors." Haar, 373 B.R. at 499-500. They mistakenly seek to read into § 707(b)(3)(B) a requirement that no longer exists. Id.

Furthermore, even before the 2005 reforms, some circuits determined that ability to pay standing alone can justify dismissal. "A court would not be justified in granting discharge if income allows distribution of consumer debts with relative ease." In re Krohn, 886 F.2d 123, 126 (6th Cir. 1989); In re Lamanna, 153 F.3d 1 (1st Cir. 1998) (ability to pay alone sufficient). The distinction among these cases was not whether ability to pay would be taken into consideration, but instead what weight it would be given.

The post-2005 Green factors that implicate bad faith are no longer relevant to determining whether the debtor has an ability to pay under § 707(b)(3)(B).[1] See

[1] In re Green held that in addition to a debtor's ability to pay, courts were required to consider five additional factors: 1) whether the bankruptcy petition was filed because of sudden illness, calamity, disability or unemployment; 2) whether the debtor incurred cash advances and made consumer purchases far in excess of his ability to repay; 3) whether the debtor's proposed family budget is excessive or unreasonable; 4) whether the debtor's schedules and statement of current income and expenses reasonably and accurately reflect the true financial condition; and 5)

Henebury, 361 B.R. at 607 (stating that bad faith and financial circumstances are two independent grounds for dismissal of a chapter 7 case). Rather, the totality of the debtor's financial circumstances must govern this determination. 11 U.S.C. § 707(b)(3)(B).

Given that each debtor has unique circumstances, this must be a case-by-case analysis that assesses all factors related to the debtor's financial condition. Furthermore, "totality" is a broad term, suggesting that a court should consider not only income or expenditures but the long-term effect those payments and credits will have on the debtor's entire financial situation.

For example, a debtor who loses his $30,000 a year job will face a drastic decline in income, which almost certainly would foreclose an ability to pay debts under a totality of the circumstances analysis. However, if that same debtor wins $1,000,000 in the lottery the day after becoming unemployed, then the job loss would be meaningless. That debtor, although he is not working, can pay his debts and thus his chapter 7 case should be dismissed under section 707(b)(3)(B).

The same analysis applies to accidents or illness. If a debtor is diagnosed with cancer and faces debilitating treatment that will increase his expenses whether the petition was filed in good faith. Green, 934 F.2d at 572. Of these factors, only the first – sudden calamity – arguably relates to the totality of the financial circumstances. The rest are primarily, or completely, related to bad faith, which is covered under Section 707(b)(3)(A).

dramatically and prevent him from working, then discharge under chapter 7 is appropriate. If however, the debtor must miss work for a broken ankle that insurance covers, resulting in a temporary loss of income and minimum medical costs, then the totality of the financial circumstances would not necessarily warrant discharge, even in light of the temporary and modest loss of wages.

Similarly, a medical resident debtor finishing a contract for $30,000 a year might well not meet the totality of the financial circumstances test if the evidence showed that this debtor rejected employment as a physician for $150,000 annually.

Thus, under section 707(b)(3)(B), the relevant inquiry is whether past or upcoming events will affect the debtor's financial circumstances. See Calhoun, 396 B.R. at 276; JA at 125 (mentioning the importance of mitigating factors). That will be the case when the event will cause income or expenses to change, or assets or liabilities to be modified. When an event will not change income, expenses, assets or liabilities, it will not affect the debtor's financial situation and is not relevant to the section 707(b)(3)(B) analysis.

In sum, the Green factors should be bifurcated and those pertinent to analysis to a debtor's financial situation applied on a case-by-case basis under section 707(b)(3)(B). In this case, based on the Calhouns' financial factors, the bankruptcy court did not abuse its discretion in granting the United States

Trustee's section 707(b)(3)(B) motion. Neither their income – Mr. Calhoun's retirement and social security – nor their expenses will change significantly in the next five years. Calhoun, 396 B.R. at 277; JA at 128. Accordingly, the Calhouns did not present evidence of any factors that would indicate that their financial circumstances would prevent them from paying back a meaningful portion of their debts. Indeed, the Calhouns did not present evidence of any factors that would indicate that their financial circumstances would prevent them from paying back their debts. The bankruptcy court did not err to the extent it assessed the totality of the Calhouns' financial circumstances, including their $105,000 annual income and a generous family budget, to determine that they were not eligible for a chapter 7 discharge.

III. The Totality of the Calhouns' Financial Circumstances Supports Dismissal of Their Case.

A. The Bankruptcy Court Did Not Err in Determining That the Calhouns Are Able to Repay Their Creditors.

The bankruptcy court did not commit clear error in finding that granting the Calhouns' chapter 7 discharge would be an abuse based on their total financial circumstances. The following financial circumstances demonstrate that the Calhouns have money they could use to repay their creditors:

- The Calhouns were able to pay their creditors $2,638 per month before filing bankruptcy and their financial circumstances have not changed; JA at 126, 128

- The Calhouns enjoy an annual income of $105,264, and that is more than twice the median income for a household of two in South Carolina; JA at 114, 120, 127

- The Calhouns spend $439 per month for two life insurance policies. Cancelling one would provide funds for the Calhouns' creditors without undermining Mrs. Calhoun's financial situation as she will receive 75 percent of her husband's pension should he pre-decease her; JA at 127

- The Calhouns' housing costs, including upkeep for a four-bedroom home, and maintaining a John Deere tractor to handle the lawn-mowing; JA at 128; In re Hoffman, 413 B.R. 191, 196-97 (M.D. Pa. 2008) (citing cases for the proposition that housing costs two to three times the IRS allowances demonstrate abuse).[2]

The Calhouns listed 11 sources of credit on their Schedule F, with a total consumer indebtedness of $106,707. JA at 40-42. Mr. Calhoun blamed his financial problems on the "Universal Default" clause which allowed the credit card companies to increase interest rates on the five credit cards he and his wife used. JA at 208-210; JA at 121; 233 (testimony by Mr. Calhoun that interest rate increases on his credit card bills increased to a point that he "just couldn't pay them anymore"). Nor did the bankruptcy court commit clear error in finding that

[2] The Calhouns are incorrect that a bankruptcy court may not consider housing costs. Calhoun Br. at 13. Consideration of propriety of housing expenses should include family size, cost of alternative housing, and "traditional ties to the homestead." In re Crink, 402 B.R. 159, 171 (M.D.N.C. 2009); Shaw v. United States Bankr. Adm'r (In re Shaw), 310 B.R. 538, 541 (M.D.N.C. 2004) (high mortgage payment indicates inflated budget).

the Calhouns could make payments to their creditors. They stopped using credit cards in March 2006 and were able to pay $2,638 a month – a large sum of money – to their creditors for 22 months preceding filing their chapter 7 petition. JA at 121-22. Mr. Calhoun, a former CFO, has a sophisticated knowledge of business and must have understood the risks to obtaining multiple lines of credit.

The Calhouns argue that the loss of their retirement account should entitle them to chapter 7 relief because it was a financial calamity. Calhoun Br. at 12; see Green, 934 F.2d at 572. Mr. Calhoun testified that when he retired as Chief Financial Officer of the University Hospital in Augusta, he had a $154,000 retirement account that he converted into an IRA. JA. at 202. He managed the stock investments in the account until they reached a value of slightly less than $500,000 and then he began to lose money. JA at 203. Mr. Calhoun did not remove his money for one and a half to two years because, by his own admission, he was "overconfident" in his investing skills. Id.

The loss of the retirement account, although a financial set-back, does not change the Calhouns' financial situation. Fortunately, despite it, they can live well and still make large repayments to creditors. In any event, this loss is not a "calamity." As a comparison, even relocation across the country and purchase of a new home based on a promised job that does not materialize is not a "calamity."

In re Myers, No. 08-11744, 2009 WL 1456921, at *5 (Bankr. M.D.N.C. May 22, 2009). The Calhouns' situation is less dire. At the time that Mr. Calhoun lost his retirement fund, some of which was used to finance the $130,000 expended for house renovations, he and his wife still had a house with 3.5 acres of land, his retirement salary, and his social security benefits. JA at 99.

The bankruptcy court was correct not to deem the loss of the retirement account in light of the other relevant financial circumstances including the Calhouns' available disposable income, as a financial circumstance that would warrant a chapter 7 discharge. See JA at 127. The issue here is credit card interest that Mr. Calhoun feels he should not have to pay back, and the Calhouns' reluctance to impose a frugal budget upon themselves. JA at 240, 127-28. Although repaying debts rates can be burdensome, they are not calamitous, especially when the debt is accrued over several years.

IV. The Calhouns' Legal Arguments are Unavailing

A. The Section 707(b)(2) "Means Test" Is Irrelevant to the Totality of the Financial Circumstances Analysis under Section 707(b)(3)(B).

The 2005 Act creates a two-step financial analysis for determining if a chapter 7 petition should be dismissed. The first is a mechanical calculation under section 707(b)(2), known as the "means test." The second is a subjective analysis under section 707(b)(3)(B). The plain language of the statute demonstrates that these subsections perform two distinct functions in determining whether a debtor is eligible for a discharge.

The means test, namely the calculations mandated by section 707(b)(2)(A)(i)-(iv), reflects congressional intent that there be an "easily applied formula" to create a presumption of abuse. Henebury, 361 B.R. at 602-03. "Passing the means test" merely means that the court will not "presume abuse exists;" it is not a determination that the debtor is entitled to relief under chapter 7. 11 U.S.C. § 707(b)(2)(A)(i); In re Lenton, 358 B.R. 651, 660-61 (Bankr. E.D. Pa. 2006); Booker, 399 B.R. at 666 (stating that the results of the "means test" are "not dispositive").

The means test does more than identify abusive chapter 7 debtors. In re Fowler, 349 B.R. 414, 420 (Bankr. D. Del. 2006). It also establishes the burden of proof between the debtor and the moving party, usually the United States Trustee. Lenton, 358 B.R. at 660. If the debtor passes the means test, then the United States Trustee has the burden of proof to show abuse. In re Parada, 391 B.R. 492, 496 (Bankr. S.D. Fla. 2008). In contrast, debtors who fail the means test must show that a special circumstance exists that would make them eligible for chapter 7 relief. 11 U.S.C. § 707(b)(2)(B)(I). Therefore, the Calhouns' argument that the means test and section 707(b)(3)(B) duplicate each other is incorrect. Calhoun Br. at 7-8; Ross-Tousey, 549 F.3d at 1161-62.

Instead, the "developing body of case law" confirms a relationship between the means test and section 707(b)(3)(B) that amounts to an objective evaluation of a debtor's financial circumstances followed by a more subjective, flexible consideration of whether discharge is appropriate considering the financial circumstances. In re McGillis, 370 B.R. 720, 747 (Bankr. W.D. Mich. 2007).

The means test is a mechanical, objective application to determine only whether there is a presumption of abuse. Rudler, 576 F.3d at 51. It is not meant to be conclusive or comprehensive analysis of whether granting the debtor relief would be an abuse of chapter 7. Toward that end, Congress designed section 707(b)(3)(B) to be a subjective look at the totality of the debtor's financial circumstances. See Krohn, 886 F.3d at 126-27 (broad-ranging analysis).[3]

The majority of courts have rejected the Calhouns' argument that the means test replaces the ability-to-pay analysis mandated in section 707(b)(3)(B). Calhoun Br. at 7. Ross-Tousey, 549 F.3d at 1161-62 (post-2005 7th Circuit case ruling that passing the means test does not foreclose a section 707)(b)(3)(B) analysis); In re Crink, 402 B.R. 159, 168-69 (M.D.N.C. 2009) (citing 13 cases). First, the statute mandates that the court "shall" consider a debtor's financial condition and circumstances if the presumption of abuse does not arise from the means test. 11 U.S.C. § 707(b)(3); Reed, No. 07-04357, slip op. at 21. If Congress had intended that the means test foreclose further consideration of ability to pay, it would not have required further analysis of petitions which passed that test. Instead, "a court must consider a debtor's actual debt-paying ability in ruling on a motion to dismiss based on abuse where the presumption does not arise or is rebutted." Mestemaker, 359 B.R. at 854-55; Parada, 391 B.R. at 498, n.4 (stating that analysis under section 707(b)(3)(B) "unambiguously presupposes that the debtor has 'passed' the means test"). If Congress had intended to eliminate consideration of ability to pay, "it would have done so expressly or by explicit references to § 707(b)(2)(A)." Lenton, 358 B.R. at 663.

[3] Similarly, section 707(b)(3)(A) permits the court to look into whether the debtor filed the petition in bad faith.

The Calhouns rely on a single case, In re Nockerts, for their argument that the means test replaces the ability to pay analysis. Calhoun Br. at 7 (citing In re Nockerts, 357 B.R. 497, 507 (Bankr. E.D. Wis. 2006)). First, Nockerts is no longer good law. In 2007, the Seventh Circuit ruled that section 707(b)(3)(B) applies to debtors who passed the means test. Ross-Tousey, 549 F.3d at 1161-62. Second, the Calhouns misread Nockerts, which only holds – incorrectly – that ability to pay cannot be the sole basis for a section 707(b)(3)(B) dismissal. In re McGillis, 370 B.R. at 745; In re Crink, 402 B.R. at 169, n.8 (commenting that Nockerts is sometimes wrongly cited for proposition that debtor's ability to pay should not be considered under section 707(b)(3)(B)). In fact, "there is overwhelming support for consideration of this factor [ability to pay] within an analysis of the totality of the circumstances." In re Hoffman, 413 B.R. at 194 (citing cases); Reed, slip op. at 23-24 (rejecting Nockerts).

B. Courts May Consider Social Security Income as Part of the Analysis of the Totality of the Circumstances of a Debtor's Financial Situation.

The bankruptcy court properly considered Mr. Calhoun's $1400 per month in social security income when it determined that the totality of the Calhouns' financial situation indicated they could repay their creditors. Calhoun, 396 B.R. at 276; JA at 125-26. In the context of chapter 13 confirmation, this Court has determined that all "income that a debtor is actually receiving at the time of confirmation" is relevant to the income test under 11 U.S.C. § 1325(b). Solomon v. Cosby (In re Solomon), 67 F.3d 1128, 1132 (4th Cir. 1995). Mr. Calhoun receives social security benefits and these payments constitute income and are thus relevant to the § 707(b)(3)(B) analysis. Perlin, 497 F.3d at 372-73.

As the Calhouns argue, it is certainly true that the definition of "current monthly income" excludes social security payments. 11 U.S.C. § 101(10A). The means test of section 707(b)(2) utilizes "currently monthly income," thus it is also true that social security income is not included in that calculation. Calhoun Br. at 9; see In re Waters, 384 B.R. 432, 436 (Bankr. N.D. W. Va 2008). But in the section 707(b)(3) context, Congress did not require bankruptcy courts to gauge the totality of the debtor's "current monthly income;" it required assessment of the totality of the debtor's "financial situation" – a much broader term. If Congress uses particular language in one section of the statute but not in another, it is "generally presumed that Congress acts intentionally and purposely in the disparate inclusion or exclusion." Russello v. United States, 464 U.S. 16, 23 (1983) (citation omitted); Solomon, 67 F.3d at 1132. The exclusion of social security in one part of the statute has no bearing on whether it should be considered in another.

The same is true of the Calhouns' argument that their social security income should not be considered because it would not be counted in a hypothetical chapter 13 plan. Calhoun Br. at 9; see also 11 U.S.C. § 1325(b)(2) (excluding social security from "currently monthly income"). The first, albeit obvious, point is that this is not a chapter 13 case. Secondly, no textual support exists to limit a finding of abuse under section 707(b)(3)(B) to an analysis of non-exempt income in chapter 13. See In re Taylor, 212 F.3d 395, 397 (8th Cir. 2000) (stating that whether a pension is exempt from creditors in chapter 13 is "wholly independent" from whether the pension is necessary to support the debtor). Third, courts can consider non-estate property when judging abuse under section 707(b)(3)(B). The Fifth Circuit held that "[i]f sufficient income to fund a Chapter 13 plan is anticipated, a complete discharge of the debtor's obligations would constitute a substantial abuse of Chapter 7." United States Trustee v. Cortez (In re Cortez), 457 F.3d 448, 457 (5th Cir. 2006). This led to the conclusion that a court "can and should take into account for purposes of determining substantial abuse under § 707(b)" income, such as social security, that is not property of the estate. Id. at 458.

This conclusion makes logical sense. Social security income is designed to contribute toward ensuring that a person's basic needs are provided for after retirement. Once that safety net is in place, a retired debtor theoretically has enough income to maintain a basic standard of living. That debtor should not exclude funds to provide for his or her old age from the court's analysis of his or her ability to repay a second time. Allowing the Calhouns to shield social security from the analysis of their financial circumstances would allow them to remove funds for basic living expenses from the court's calculation of ability to pay twice – a double-counting that contradicts the purpose of the reforms in the 2005 Act. See In re Schnabel, 153 B.R. 809, 817 (Bankr. N.D. Ill. 1993) (stating under pre-2005 Act Code that if a debtor is assured of an income sufficient to meet his basic needs, then social security and pension benefits can be used to fund a chapter 13 plan).

Most fundamentally, the 2005 Act allows a court to consider the debtor's ability to repay creditors outside of bankruptcy under sections 707(b)(1) and (b)(3) and to dismiss a case if a debtor can voluntarily repay a meaningful portion of his or her debt outside bankruptcy or through a chapter 13 repayment plan. See 11 U.S.C. § 707(b)(1). The default remedy for abuse under section 707(b)(3)(B) is dismissal, not conversion to another chapter of the Code. See 11 U.S.C. § 707(b)(1). The default remedy evidences congressional intent to dismiss debtors' cases when they can voluntarily make meaningful payments outside bankruptcy. See H.R. Rep. 109-31 at 5 & n.18. (Congress enacted section 707(b) to issue a "clear mandate requiring these debtors to repay their debts."). The Calhouns' social security income contributes to their ability to make meaningful payments to creditors outside bankruptcy and thus is relevant to the section 707(b)(3)(B) analysis.

CONCLUSION

For the reasons outlined above, the United States Trustee respectfully requests that this Court affirm the lower courts' orders.

STATEMENT OF THE BASIS OF APPELLATE JURISDICTION

The bankruptcy court had jurisdiction over Susan Lisa Campbell's chapter 7 bankruptcy case under 28 U.S.C. § 157(b). Ms. Campbell's notice of appeal was timely filed under 28 U.S.C. § 158(c)(2) and Fed. R. Bankr. P. 8001(a).

The notice of appeal denominates Ms. Campbell as the appellant. However, the issues raised on appeal appear to relate exclusively to the rights of Ms. Campbell's attorney, William A. Cohn. Accordingly, to the extent that the Court finds that the designation of Ms. Campbell as appellant was erroneous, the Court may construe the notice of appeal as an appeal by Mr. Cohn individually. Citizens Bank & Trust Co. v. Case (In re Case), 937, F.2d 1014 (5th Cir. 1991). Under such a circumstance, this Court would have jurisdiction to hear this appeal under 28 U.S.C. § 158(a)(1). To the extent the Court construes this appeal as an appeal by Ms. Campbell and not Mr. Cohn, however, the Court lacks Article III subject matter jurisdiction because the appeal does not allege any case or controversy by which Ms. Campbell is aggrieved. Elk Grove Unified Sch. Dist. v. Newdow, 524 U.S. 1, 11 (2004); Scruggs v. Lowmann (In re Scruggs), 392 F.3d 124, 128 (5th Cir. 2004). As we explain in the Statement of Facts, Ms. Campbell's bankruptcy case is closed, and she can receive no further relief in her case through this appeal.

It is the United States Trustee's view that the notice of appeal erroneously designated Ms. Campbell, and this Court has appellate jurisdiction. Both below, and in the opening brief, Mr. Cohn has addressed issues relating solely to his right to act as counsel in future cases. The United States Trustee has always understood this appeal to involve legal claims pressed on behalf of Mr. Cohn, and not Ms. Campbell.

STANDARD OF APPELLATE REVIEW

The facts relevant to this appeal are not in dispute. This Court reviews the legal issues raised by Mr. Cohn de novo. Young v. Repine (In re Repine), 536 F.3d 512, 518 (5th Cir. 2008).

STATEMENT OF THE CASE

On March 11, 2008, the bankruptcy court issued an order directing William A. Cohn to comply with Uniform Local Rule 83.1 by obtaining orders for admission pro hac vice in any future cases in which he appears in the bankruptcy court. On March 12, 2008, Mr. Cohn filed a timely notice of appeal.

STATEMENT OF FACTS

Mr. Cohn is a member of the state bar of Tennessee, but is not currently licensed to practice in the state courts of Mississippi. (Br. 6). However, Mr. Cohn contends that he was issued a certificate of admission by the clerk of the United States District Court for the Northern District of Mississippi in 1982, and further contends that the certificate has never been revoked through a disbarment proceeding. (Id. 7). Mr. Cohn's pleadings do not identify the local rule or other authority, if any, pursuant to which the clerk issued him the certificate of admission in 1982.

On or about December 27, 2007, Mr. Cohn or an employee of his firm, filed a bankruptcy petition for Susan Lisa Campbell in the United States Bankruptcy Court for the Northern District of Mississippi, using Mr. Cohn's electronic case filing login and password. (Dkt. 12 at 2). Although R. Chadwick Reeves, an associate of Mr. Cohn's firm, is admitted to practice in the state courts of Mississippi, Mr. Cohn has not sought authorization to appear on Ms. Campbell's case pro hac vice.

Rule 83.1 of the Uniform Local Rules of the United States District Courts for the Northern and Southern Districts of Mississippi provides that attorneys (other than attorneys representing the United States) may be admitted to practice before those district courts only if they: (1) are members of the Mississippi state bar, or (2) are admitted to practice pro hac vice to participate in a particular action. The current version of Uniform Rule 83.1 is substantially identical to the former General Rule G-1(3) of the Local Rules for the United States District Court for the Northern District of Mississippi, which would have been in effect at the time Mr. Cohn received his certificate to practice before the district court.

On July 18, 2006, the United States District Courts for the Northern and Southern Districts of Mississippi entered a General Order re: Pro Hac Vice Admissions (No. 3:85mc26) (the "General Order"). The General Order provides that Uniform Local Rule 83.1(A)(2) is the sole method by which an attorney not admitted to the Mississippi state bar may practice in the district courts. The General Order also expressly provides that there is no "grandfathering" provision applicable to non-Mississippi attorneys.[1]

[1] The relevant text of the General Order is as follows:

> UNIFORM RULE 83.1(A)(2) is the only authority permitting a non-resident attorney who is not a member of the Mississippi Bar and not admitted to practice before the Mississippi Supreme Court to practice in a United States district court serving Mississippi. The UNIFORM RULES provide no "grandfathering" provision allowing a non-resident attorney not a member of the Mississippi Bar to practice in a district court other than on a case-by-case pro hac vice admission.

General Order at 2.

On January 16, 2008, the United States Trustee filed a Motion to Examine Fees of Attorney and for Other Relief (Dkt. 12) (the "Motion"). In relevant part, the Motion requested that the bankruptcy court determine whether Mr. Cohn lacked authorization to file a bankruptcy petition in the Mississippi bankruptcy court, and if so, whether any portion of the fees received by Mr. Cohn should be returned to Ms. Campbell. The United States Trustee also requested that any associates of Mr. Cohn's law firm who are members of the Mississippi bar obtain their own electronic case filing logins and passwords, and that they use such logins and passwords for any future bankruptcy petitions and pleadings filed by Mr. Cohn's firm.

On January 29, 2008, Mr. Cohn filed a Response and Objection to the Motion (Dkt. 17) (the "Response"). The Response did not contest the factual allegations of the Motion, but rather argued only that the General Order was ineffective as applied to non-Mississippi lawyers who had already been admitted before the district court.

Following a hearing, the bankruptcy court issued an order granting the United States Trustee's Motion on March 11, 2008 (Dkt. 26). The order determined that Mr. Cohn was unauthorized to practice before the bankruptcy court, ordered that any future pleadings or documents in Ms. Campbell's case be filed under the login and password of Mr. Reeves, and further ordered that Mr. Cohn "shall be allowed to practice before this court only upon admission pro hac vice since Mr. Cohn is not a member of the Mississippi Bar." The Court did not order the disgorgement of fees or any further relief against Mr. Cohn.

On April 10, 2008, the chapter 7 trustee filed a Report of No Distribution in Ms. Campbell's case. On May 27, 2008, the bankruptcy court granted Ms. Campbell a chapter 7 discharge. (Dkt. 39). On information and belief, there are no longer any pending matters in Ms.

Campbell's bankruptcy case other than the present appeal.

SUMMARY OF ARGUMENT

Mr. Cohn's arguments provide no basis for overturning the bankruptcy court's order. Mr. Cohn objects to the order on two grounds: (1) application of Rule 83.1 and the General Order is impermissibly retroactive as to him, and (2) to the extent that Rule 83.1 and/or the General Order are applicable to him, their enforcement would violate the constitutional prohibition against ex post facto laws. Neither argument has merit. Because the bankruptcy court's application of Rule 83.1 and the General Order only affects cases filed after the effective date of those provisions, the bankruptcy court's order does not raise any retroactivity issues. In addition, because the bankruptcy court's order, the General Order, and Rule 83.1 are each civil and regulatory in nature, and because no criminal sanction is at issue, the constitutional prohibition against ex post facto laws is also inapplicable.

ARGUMENT

1. The bankruptcy court's application of the Rule 83.1 and the General Order to Mr. Cohn is not retroactive.

Mr. Cohn's primary argument on appeal is that by enforcing Rule 83.1 through the General Order, the bankruptcy court impermissibly applied those provisions retroactively. Mr. Cohn's argument fails, however, because nothing in the bankruptcy court's order gave those provisions retroactive effect.

As the Supreme Court has explained, a statute is retroactive only when it "would impair rights a party possessed when he acted, increase a party's liability for past conduct, or impose new duties with respect to transactions already completed." Landgraf v. USI Film Products, 511 U.S. 244, 280 (1994). In particular, in order for a regulation to be deemed retroactive, it must relate specifically to conduct occurring before the regulation's effective date. See McAndrews v. Fleet Bank of Massachusetts, 989 F.2d 13, 16 (1st Cir. 1993) (holding that "[t]he determination of whether a statute's application in a particular situation is prospective or retroactive depends upon whether the conduct that allegedly triggers the statute's application occurs before or after the law's effective date").

Conversely, a change in law affecting only future behavior does not raise retroactivity concerns. Thus, in FDIC v. Faulkner, 991 F.2d 262 (5th Cir. 1993), a district court imposed an injunction against the defendant in a fraud action pursuant to a federal statute that had not been enacted when the lawsuit was originally filed. The Fifth Circuit declined to characterize the district court's application of the injunction-statute as retroactive, noting that the injunction "implicates future conduct, in the sense that the asset freeze applies only to future transfers of the [defendants'] assets." Id. at 266; see also Landgraf, 511 U.S. at 269 (holding that statute is not retroactive "merely because it . . . upsets expectations based in prior law").

In this case, the bankruptcy court order interpreting the General Order and Rule 83.1 is not retroactive because its effect is on a case in which Mr. Cohn appeared after the General Order was adopted: whereas the General Order took effect in July 2006, Mr. Cohn did not file the instant matter on behalf of Ms. Campbell until over a year later, in December 2007. Thus, in this instance the order did not impose new duties or liabilities on Mr. Cohn relating to a case in which he had already appeared, nor attach any legal consequences to actions that he took while relying on the validity of his 1982 certificate. Accordingly, none of the orders or regulations that Mr. Cohn challenges have been applied retroactively.

2. The General Order is not an ex post facto Law.

The constitutional prohibition against ex post facto laws is also inapplicable to Rule 83.1 and to the orders at issue in this appeal. As the Supreme Court has explained, the ex post facto clause of the Constitution prohibits four types of enactments: (1) laws that make actions criminal that were not criminal at the time they were taken; (2) laws that retroactively aggravate the classification of a crime; (3) laws that retroactively increase the penalty for a crime; and (4) laws that retroactively alter the rules of evidence in order to convict an offender. See Stogner v. California, 539 U.S. 607, 612 (2003).

In this case, Rule 83.1 and the General Order violate none of these prohibitions. First, the rules regarding eligibility to practice in the federal courts are not a criminal statute, but a non-punitive civil regulation. As the Supreme Court has held, the ex post facto clause is inapplicable to such civil regulations. See Smith v. Doe, 538 U.S. 84, 92 (2002) (holding that because a sex offender registration statute was intended to regulate rather than punish, the statute did not raise ex post facto concerns). Secondly, even if a requirement that Mr. Cohn obtain admission pro hac vice were treated as a criminal sanction, for the reasons stated above, none of the orders and regulations at issue in this appeal have been applied retroactively. Mr. Cohn has not suffered any sanction or punishment based on actions he took in cases prior to July 2006. Indeed, the bankruptcy court order on appeal is wholly prospective in nature, and seeks to regulate only Mr.

Cohn's future conduct. Accordingly, Mr. Cohn's argument that enforcement of the General Order and Rule 83.1 would violate the ex post facto clause lacks merit.

CONCLUSION

For these reasons, this Court may affirm the order entered below.

Statement Regarding Oral Argument

Counsel for the Trustee believes that oral argument would be beneficial in helping the court resolve this case.

TABLE OF AUTHORITIES

Constitution:

Statutes:

Rules:

Statement of Jurisdiction

1. The bankruptcy court had jurisdiction over Appellant Susan Campbell's Chapter 7 bankruptcy petition under 28 U.S.C. 157(b).

On March 11, 2008, the bankruptcy court issued an order concluding that one of Campbell's bankruptcy attorneys, Mr. William Cohn, is unauthorized to practice before that court because he is not a member of the Mississippi Bar, and because he has not applied for permission to appear in this case pro hac vice. Mr. Cohn filed a filed a timely notice of appeal from that order, naming Ms. Campbell as the appellant, on March 12, 2008. See District Court Record, USCA5 4.[1]

2. The district court construed the notice of appeal as an appeal by Mr. Cohn individually, since his appeal brief addressed only his own asserted rights to appear as counsel, and not any asserted rights belonging to Ms. Campbell. See Order of September 3, 2009, at 1 (USCA5 53).[2]

[1] The notice of appeal stated that Campbell was appealing to the Fifth Circuit Court of Appeals Bankruptcy Panel. See USCA5 4. There being no Fifth Circuit Bankruptcy Panel, the appeal was docketed in the United States District Court for the Northern District of Mississippi.

[2] The district court's ruling on that point is consistent with applicable circuit precedent, since there is no indication in any of Mr. Cohn's pleadings in the courts below or in this Court that he is attempting to vindicate the interests of Ms. Campbell, rather than those of his own. See Garcia v. Wash, 20 F.3d 608, 610 (5th Cir. 1994); In the Matter of George Milton Case, 937 F.2d 1014, 1021 (5th Cir. 1991).

Reading the notice of appeal in that manner, the district court held that it had jurisdiction over the appeal pursuant to 28 U.S.C. 158(a)(1), which provides that "[t]he district courts of the United States shall have jurisdiction to hear appeals (1) from final judgments, orders, and decrees . . . of bankruptcy judges . . .." 28 U.S.C. 158(a)(1).

a. The district court did not explain why it thought the bankruptcy court's March 11, 2008, order falls within the terms of 28 U.S.C. 158(a)(1). Because that order did not resolve all the claims of all the parties,[3] or finally dispose of a discrete bankruptcy claim of any individual party,[4] the district court presumably concluded that the order was final under the collateral order doctrine.

[3] Ms. Campbell's bankruptcy case was still pending when the bankruptcy court issued the order in question. Ms. Campbell's bankruptcy case was not closed until November 6, 2009. See No. 07-14692-DWH (U.S. Bank. Ct., N.S. Miss.) Docket No. 45. Mr. Cohn's notice of appeal from the bankruptcy court's March 11, 2008 order did not ripen into a timely notice of appeal upon the entering of the order closing Ms. Campbell's bankruptcy case. See United States v. Cooper, 135 F.3d 960 (5th Cir. 1980).

[4] As this Court noted in In re Delta Services Industries/Foster Securities, Inc. v. Sandoz, 782 F.2d 1267 (5th Cir. 1986), "courts properly view finality more flexibly under § 158(d) . . . than under [28 U.S.C.] 1291." Id. at 1269. As a result, "bankruptcy court orders that conclusively determine substantive rights of parties" are considered final and appealable, even if they do not resolve all the claims of all the parties. Id. at 1270. That rule, however, does not apply to orders disqualifying attorneys from participating in a bankruptcy proceeding. See, e.g., id. at 1273 (holding that an order disqualifying an attorney from participating as counsel in a bankruptcy proceeding in federal court was not immediately appealable).

"The collateral order doctrine is a 'narrow exception' . . . whose reach is limited to trial court orders affecting rights that will be irretrievably lost in the absence of an immediate appeal." Richardson-Merrell, Inc. v. Koller, 472 U.S. 424, 430-31 (1985) (citations omitted). "To fall within the exception, an order must at a minimum satisfy three conditions: It must 'conclusively determine the disputed question,' 'resolve an important issue completely separate from the merits of the action,' and 'be effectively unreviewable on appeal from a final judgment." Id. at 431.

To the extent Mr. Cohn is challenging the bankruptcy court's order disqualifying him from participating as Ms. Campbell's lawyer in this case, that order is not immediately appealable under the collateral order doctrine. See Richardson-Merrell, 472 U.S. at 440 (holding that an order disqualifying counsel in a civil case is not a collateral order subject to immediate appeal). Accord RCT v. Bright, 6 F.3d 336, 340 n.5 (5th Cir. 1993) (applying Richardson-Merrill to a civil non-bankruptcy case). As we have already noted, this Court has held that this rule applies to bankruptcy cases. See In re Delta Services, 782 F.2d at 1273.

The order on appeal here, however, arguably goes beyond merely disqualifying Mr. Cohn from appearing as counsel in the Northern District of Mississippi in this case. It also recites that Mr. Cohn "shall be allowed to practice before this court only upon admission pro hac vice since Cohn is not a member of the Mississippi Bar." USCA5 23. That language could reasonably be understood as limiting Mr. Cohn's ability to appear before that court not only in this case, but also in other cases. In that respect, we believe the district court had jurisdiction to consider Mr. Cohn's appeal under the collateral order doctrine. The order is conclusive on that issue and separate from the merits of Ms. Campbell's bankruptcy petition, and it was effectively unreviewable on appeal from a final judgment insofar as it restricted Mr. Cohn's ability to practice before that court in other cases before Ms. Campbell's bankruptcy case was closed. See Richardson-Merrell, 472 U.S. at 431.[5]

b. We note that in Gallo v. United States District Court for the District of Arizona, 349 F.3d 1169 (9th Cir. 2003), cert. denied, 541 U.S. 1073 (2004), the Ninth Circuit held that it lacked jurisdiction to consider an appeal of a district court order which held that an attorney could no longer appear before the court without successfully completing a pro hac vice application. The attorney previously had been admitted to the district court's bar, but was later informed by the court clerk that, [5] Mr. Cohn has not specifically identified any court appearances he would have wished to make in other cases in the Northern District of Mississippi during the period between March 11, 2008 (when the order on appeal was issued) and November 6, 2009 (when Ms. Campbell's bankruptcy case was closed). We are unaware of any case authority that would require him to make such a showing in order to invoke the collateral order doctrine.

pursuant to a recent rules change, he could no longer practice before the court without either (1) becoming a member of the state bar in which the court sat, or (2) applying for admission pro hac vice. See id. at 1173. The Ninth Circuit, construing the attorney's objection to the clerk's letter as a petition for admission to the district court's bar, held that it lacked jurisdiction over the appeal because "the denial of a petition for admission to a district court bar is neither a final order appealable under 28 U.S.C. § 1291 . . . nor an interlocutory order appealable under 28 U.S.C. § 1291." Id. at 1176 (citing In re Wasserman, 240 F.2d 213 (9th Cir. 1956)). [6]

Wasserman, on which the Ninth Circuit relied in Gallo, held that the courts of appeals lack jurisdiction to review "routine orders of denial or granting of admission of attorneys where the District Court followed its own rules and did not violate any right of applicant." 240 F.2d at 216 (citing Brooks v. Laws, 208 F.2d 18 (D.C. Cir. 1953)). Subsequently, however, in District of Columbia Ct. of Appeals v. Feldman, 460 U.S. 462 (1983), the Supreme Court held that "[a] claim of a present right to admission to the bar of a state and a denial of that right is a controversy." Id. at 479. In light of Feldman, we believe the district court had jurisdiction over the bankruptcy court's order applying Local Rule 83.1 to Mr. Cohn. That order is a judicial order which, under Feldman, was reviewable on appeal by the district court pursuant to 28 U.S.C. 158(a)(1). See Matter of Palmisano, 70 F.3d 483, 485 (7th Cir.) (concluding that Feldman implicitly overruled Brooks v. Laws, supra), cert. denied, 517 U.S.1223 (1995).

[6] The Ninth Circuit went on to entertain the appeal pursuant to 28 U.S.C. 1651(a) because the plaintiff had, in the alternative, requested the court to treat his notice of appeal as a petition for a writ of mandamus. See Gallo, 349 F.3d at 1777. Mr. Cohn has made no such request in this case.

3. On September 18, 2009, Mr. Cohn filed a notice of appeal from the district court's September 3, 2009 order. See USCA5 55.[7] This Court has jurisdiction over this appeal pursuant to 28 U.S.C. 158(d), which provides that "[t]he courts of appeals shall have jurisdiction of appeals from all final decisions, judgments, orders, and decrees entered under subsections (a) and (b) of this section." That statute applies here because the district court's September 3 order finally disposed of the only issue that was before that court – Mr. Cohn's argument that the bankruptcy court incorrectly applied Local Rule 83.1 to him. See Ichinose v. Homer National Bank, 946 F.2d 1169, 1177 (5th Cir. 1991) (holding that the district court's reversal of an order of a bankruptcy court was a final order for appeal to this Court even though the bankruptcy court's order was interlocutory when appealed to the district court).

[7] The notice of appeal identifies the appeal as being on behalf of the "debtor/appellant." USCA5 55. For the reasons explained above, however, the Court should construe this notice as having been filed on behalf of Mr. Cohn personally, since it is clear from the notice and all the pleadings regarding this issue that Mr. Cohn is raising his own rights rather those of Ms. Campbell.

Statement of the Issues

1. Whether the district court correctly held that Local Rule 83.1 can be applied to attorney Cohn without violating the general presumption against retroactive application of laws or rules.

2. Whether the district court correctly held that Local Rule 83.1 can be applied to Mr. Cohn without violating the Constitution's ex post facto clause.

Statement of the Case

Appellant William Cohn filed a bankruptcy petition on behalf of a debtor, Susan Campbell, in the U.S. Bankruptcy Court for the Northern District of Mississippi. Shortly after he filed that petition, the Bankruptcy Court issued an order advising Mr. Cohn that, pursuant to Local Rule 83.1 of Rules of the United States District Court for the Northern District of Mississippi, he could not appear as counsel before that court in this case, or in any future case, unless he either (1) becomes a member of the Mississippi bar, or (2) obtains permission to appear before the Northern District pro hac vice. Mr. Cohn immediately appealed that order, arguing that it is impermissibly retroactive as applied to him, and that it violates his rights under the Ex Post Facto Clause. The district court rejected those arguments, and Mr. Cohn filed this appeal to present the same arguments to this Court.

District Court Rule at Issue

1. As explained below, Attorney William Cohn filed a bankruptcy petition on behalf of Susan Lisa Campbell in the United States Bankruptcy Court for the Northern District of Mississippi on December 27, 2007. At that time, the admission of attorneys to the bar of the federal district court for the Northern District of Mississippi was governed by Local Rule 83.1, a copy of which is attached to this brief as an addendum. Local Rule 83.1, which became effective on September 1, 1998, provided that in order to be authorized to practice before that court, an attorney had to be either (1) a member of the Mississippi Bar, or (2) admitted pro hac vice to practice before that court in a particular case. See Local Rule 83.1(A)(1) & (2).[8]

On July 18, 2006, the Northern District of Mississippi entered a General Order which reiterated that the Local Rules governing that court and the Southern District of Mississippi "recognize[] two categories of attorneys (other than attorneys for the United States of America and federal agencies) who may practice in the United States district courts serving Mississippi:

[8] The only exception to the above rule was for attorneys representing the United States. See Local Rule 83.1(A)(3). Local Rule 83.1 was amended effective December 1, 2009. The amended rule, which also is provided as an addendum to this brief, imposes the same requirements as the prior version of the Rule for attorneys who wish to practice before the Northern District of Mississippi.

> A. Attorneys who are members of the Mississippi Bar and have been formally admitted to practice in district court. Uniform Rule 83.1(A)(1).
> B. Non-resident attorneys who are not members of the Mississippi Bar and not admitted to practice before the Mississippi Supreme Court but have been admitted to practice pro hac vice in a particular case in district court. Uniform Rule 83.1(A)(2).

Order of July 18, 2006 (copy attached as addendum).[9] The Order goes on to state that "Uniform Rule 83.1(A)(2) is the only authority permitting a nonresident attorney who is not a member of the Mississippi Bar and not admitted to practice before the Mississippi Supreme Court to practice in a United States district court serving Mississippi." Order of July 18, 2006, ¶ 2 (emphasis in original). As the Order then explains, "[t]he Uniform Rules provide no 'grandfathering' provision allowing a non-resident attorney not a member of the Mississippi Bar to practice in a district court other than on a case-by-case pro hac vice admission." Ibid.

Effective December 1, 2009, the substance of General Order 3:85mc26 was added to the text of the Local Rules for the Northern District of Mississippi. See Local Rule 83.1(d)(2).

[9] A copy of the General Order is electronically available on Pacer by accessing the Pacer site for the Northern District of Mississippi. The order appears as docket entry 14 in case number 3:85mc26.

2. Prior to 1998, admission to the Northern District of Mississippi Bar was governed by Local General Rule G-1 (copy attached as addendum), which became effective in 1980. That Rule also stated that an attorney had to be either a member of the Mississippi Bar or admitted pro hac vice for an individual case in order to practice before the Northern District of Mississippi. See General Rule G-1(2), (3). That Rule also provided, however, that graduates of the University of Mississippi Law School could be "admitted by a judge or the clerk of this court upon the representation of the University Law School that they have satisfactorily completed all requirements for a diploma of the Law School and have been duly admitted to practice by order of the Chancery Court of the county of the applicant's residence, or of the county in which applicant intends to practice, or Lafayette County." General Rule G-1(1).[10]

Statement of Facts

1. Bankruptcy Court Proceedings

On December 27, 2007, Susan Lisa Campbell filed a chapter 7 petition in bankruptcy in the United States Bankruptcy Court for the Northern District of Mississippi. See Case No. 07-14692-DWH (U.S. Bank. Ct., N.D. Miss.). The petition identified three attorneys who were representing Ms. Campbell in that proceeding: William A. Cohn, Jerry R. Givens, and G. Chadwick Reeves. All were members of the Cohn Law Firm in Cordova, Tennessee. See id., Bankruptcy Petition, Docket No. 1, at 3.

In December of 2008, the U.S. Trustee notified the bankruptcy court that, upon information and belief, Mr. Cohn was not a member of the Mississippi Bar and that he had not been admitted pro hac vice for the purposes of handling Ms. Campbell's bankruptcy petition. See Motion to Examine Fees of Attorney and For Other Relief, p. 1 (USCA5 19). For those reasons, the U.S. Trustee pointed out, it appeared that Mr. Cohn lacked the authority to represent Ms. Campbell before that court pursuant to Local Rule 83.1.

In response, Mr. Cohn argued that the bankruptcy court should not apply Rule 83.1 to him because he had been admitted to the district court's bar prior to the issuance of that Rule, and because no disbarment proceedings had ever been instituted against him. See Response to and Objection to United States Trustee's Motion to Examine Fees of Attorney, p. 1-3, No. 07-14692-DWH (U.S. Bank. Ct., N.D. Miss.), Docket No. 12. In support of this argument, Mr. Cohn referred to a bar certificate that he had previously submitted as Exhibit 1 to Docket Number 8 in that proceeding. The certificate purports to attest to the admission of Mr. Cohn to the bar of the United States District Court for the Northern District of Mississippi on February 9, 1983, by Norman Gillespie, Clerk.[11]

The bankruptcy court held a hearing on the U.S. Trustee's motion on February 27, 2008, and issued an order granting the motion approximately two weeks later, on March 11, 2008. The order concluded "that the debtor's attorney, William Cohn, is not a member of the Mississippi Bar, is not licensed to practice law in Mississippi and is therefore unauthorized to practice before this court." Order on Motion to Examine Fee at 1 (USCA5 23). The order also recited that "William Cohn shall be allowed to practice before this court only upon admission pro hac vice since Cohn is not a member of the Mississippi Bar." Ibid. The order thus decreed that "all further pleadings or documents filed in this case shall be filed under the login and password of R. Chadwick Reeves, associate in the Cohn Law Firm and member of the Mississippi Bar," and that "[t]he court record should be amended to reflect R. Chadwick Reeves as counsel for the debtor." Ibid.

On March 12, 2008, Mr. Cohn filed a notice of appeal from the March 11, 2008 order on behalf of the "Debtor/appellant" to the "United States Fifth Circuit Court of Appeals Bankruptcy Appellate Panel."[12] The notice is signed both by Mr. Cohn and by Mr. Reeves. See Debtor/Appellant's Notice of Appeal to Bankruptcy Appellate Panel, No. 07-14692-DWH (U.S. Bank. Ct., N.D. Miss.), Docket No. 28.

As of March 12, 2008, the bankruptcy court had not yet finally disposed of Ms. Campbell's bankruptcy proceeding. The court would not issue an order discharging Ms. Campbell until May 27, 2008. See No. 07-14692-DWH (U.S. Bank. Ct, N.D. Miss.) Docket No. 39. The bankruptcy court closed that bankruptcy proceeding by order of November 6, 2009. See id., Docket No. 45.

2. District Court Proceedings

Mr. Cohn's appeal was docketed in the Northern District of Mississippi as case number 2:09-cv-00025-WAP. Thereafter, Mr. Cohn, under his own signature, filed a brief challenging the bankruptcy court's March 11, 2008 order. The brief argued that the March 11 order was entered in error because "[n]o disbarment proceedings have ever been instituted to divest [Mr. Cohn] of [the privilege of practicing before the U.S. District Court for the Northern District of Mississippi] as required under the 5th Amendment Due Process Clause," and because "no law or rule can be instituted under Article 1, Section 10 of the United States Constitution, proscribing ex post facto laws . . ..” Brief at 7 (USCA5 38).

The U.S. Trustee filed a brief defending the bankruptcy court’s ruling, and on September 3, 2009, the district court entered an order affirming that order and dismissing Mr. Cohn’s appeal. See USCA5 53-54. The court concluded that the bankruptcy court’s application of Local Rule 83.1(a)(2) to Mr. Cohn is not impermissibly retroactive because it “affect[s] only cases filed after the effective date of those provisions.” See USCA5 54 (citation omitted). The court held that the bankruptcy court’s order does not violate the ex post facto clause because Rule 83.1 is “civil and regulatory in nature.” Ibid. (citation omitted). On October 10, 2009, attorney Cohn, under his own signature, filed a notice of appeal on behalf of Ms. Campbell from the above order. See USCA5 55.

Summary of Argument

1. Mr. Cohn’s principal argument in this appeal is that Northern District of Mississippi Local Rule 83.1 is being applied to him retrospectively, in violation of the presumption against retroactivity recognized in Landgraf v. U.S.I. Film Products, 511 U.S. 244 (1994). That argument lacks merit because a General Order issued by the Northern District before Mr. Cohn filed the bankruptcy petition in this case contains an express command notifying members of the Northern District’s bar that they must satisfy Local Rule 83.1 in order to appear before that court.

As Landgraf makes clear, that kind of express command required the courts below to apply the Local Rule 83.1 to Mr. Cohn, without regard to whether applying that rule to him is considered prospective or retrospective.

2. Mr. Cohn also argues that the bankruptcy court's application of Local Rule 83.1 to him violates his rights under the Ex Post Facto Clause. The district court correctly rejected that claim, however, because the Ex Post Facto Clause only applies to laws that inflict criminal punishments. Rule 83.1 is a civil rule designed to regulate practice before the Northern District, and it does not impose anything that could be viewed as a criminal punishment. Mr. Cohn also appears to be raising a due process claim, though it is unclear whether he preserved that claim below or in this Court. If this Court were to consider that claim, it should reject it because there is a rational basis for Local Rule 83-1, and for applying that Rule to attorneys who were already members of the Northern District's bar when the Rule took effect.

Statement of the Standard of Review

Appellant's Brief raises purely legal issues pertaining to (1) the proper interpretation of the Local Rule in question and (2) whether those rules violate appellant's constitutional rights. The district court's rulings on those points are thus reviewable de novo. See, e.g., United States v. Green, 508 F.3d 195, 202 (5th Cir. 2007), cert. denied, 128 S. Ct. 2871 (2008).

Argument

I. The District Court Correctly Held That Local Rule 83.1 Can Be Applied to Attorney Cohn Without Violating Statutory Interpretation Principles Regarding Retroactivity.

Mr. Cohn argues that Local Rule 83.1 may not be applied to him consistent with Landgraf v. USI Film Products, 511 U.S. 244 (1994), which holds that there is a general presumption against the retroactive application of statutes or rules. This argument has no basis. As explained below, General Order 3:85mc26 contains an express command that Rule 83.1 be applied in cases such as this one. Under Landgraf, that kind of express command is sufficient by itself, in terms of statutory construction, to require a court to apply a statute or rule in accordance therewith.

A. General Principles Governing the Alleged Retroactive Application of Statutes and Rules.

As Landgraf explains, there is a "presumption against retroactive legislation" that is "deeply rooted in our jurisprudence." 511 U.S. at 265 (footnote omitted) (noting that "[e]lementary considerations of fairness dictate that individuals should have an opportunity to know what the law is and to conform their conduct accordingly") (footnote omitted). "For that reason," Landgraf explains, "'the legal effect of conduct should ordinarily be assessed under the law that existed when the conduct took place . . ..'" Ibid. (citation omitted).

The presumption against retroactive legislation recognized in Landgraf flows from principles of statutory construction, not from any general requirement of the Constitution. See Falek v. Gonzales, 475 F.3d 285, 290 (5th Cir. 2007) (citation omitted).[13] As a result, the presumption does not apply where Congress, or some other government actor that issues a statute or rule, has "expressly prescribed the statute's proper reach." Landgraf, 511 U.S. at 280.

Where a statute or rule contains no such express command, courts examine a number of factors to determine whether the statute should not be applied to the conduct at issue, including "whether it would impair rights a party possessed when he acted, increase a party's liability for past conduct, or impose new duties with respect to transactions already completed." Landgraf, 511 U.S. at 280. As Landgraf also explains, however, "[a] statute does not operate 'retrospectively' merely because it is applied in a case arising from conduct antedating the statute's enactment." 511 U.S. at 269 (citation omitted). Accord Republic of Austria v. Altmann, 541 U.S. 677, 697 n.17 (2004).

[13] As the Supreme Court explained in Landgraf, several provisions in the Constitution are triggered in part by retrospective application of government action, see 511 U.S. at 266, but no constitutional provision establishes the presumption against retroactivity that the Supreme Court adopted in that case. See id. at 267 (noting that "[a]bsent a violation of one of those specific [constitutional] provisions, the potential unfairness of retroactive civil legislation is not a sufficient reason for a court to fail to give a statute its intended scope").

B. There is No Landgraf Violation Here Because District Court General Order 3:85mc26 Expressly Requires That Rule 83.1 Be Applied In Cases Like This.

As noted above, where a statute or rule contains an "express command" that it applies to particular conduct, a court should so apply the statute or rule, without considering the factors Landgraf held otherwise determine whether a statute or rule may be applied retroactively. See 511 U.S. at 280.

Here, General Order 3:85mc26 of the United States District Court for the Northern District of Mississippi contains an "express command" that Local Rule 83.1 apply to all attorneys who seek to practice before that court in cases after the Rule's effective date, which was September 1, 1998. See p. 9, supra. As we have explained, General Order 3:85mc26, after reciting the text of Local Rule 83.1, emphasizes that the Rule "provide[s] no 'grandfathering' provision allowing a non-resident attorney not a member of the Mississippi Bar to practice in a district court other than on a case-by-case pro hac vice admission."

In this context, a "grandfathering" provision would be one that allows an attorney who was admitted to the bar of the Northern District of Mississippi prior to the adoption of Rule 83.1 to continue appearing in that court without having to satisfy the requirements imposed by that Rule. See Gallo, 349 F.3d at 1175 (discussing the nature of a "grandfather clause").

Since the General Order contains an express statement that Local Rule 83.1 contains no "grandfathering provision," it is a direct command that the Rule apply to an attorney, such as Attorney Cohn, who alleges he had been admitted to the Northern District of Mississippi Bar prior to Rule 83.1's effective date. As a result, therefore, pursuant to Landgraf, Local Rule 83.1 applies to Mr. Cohn, as a matter of statutory construction, regardless of whether it regulates past or future conduct on his part or disturbs any vested rights he may or may not have. Thus, this Court need not go on to consider the issues discussed in subsection C, below, in order to reject Mr. Cohn's claim that Landgraf bars the application of Rule 83.1 to him.

C. In the Alternative, Local Rule 83.1 Arguably Is Not Being Applied Retroactively to Mr. Cohn.

As the district court correctly observed, "[t]he Bankruptcy Court's application of Rule 83.1 and the General Order affect only cases filed after the effective date of those provisions." Order at 2 (USCA5 54). To reiterate briefly, Local Rule 83.1 became effective on September 1, 1998, and the General Order was issued on July 18, 2006. See p. 9, supra. Mr. Cohn filed the bankruptcy petition that initiated this case on December 27, 2007. See p. 10, supra.

1. Mr. Cohn does not explain why he considers the Bankruptcy Court's application of Rule 83.1 to him retroactive, other than to state that he was admitted to the bar of the Northern District of Mississippi in 1982 and that he has never been disbarred. For the following reasons, this Court could reasonably decide that Mr. Cohn's prior admittance to the Northern District's bar is not the relevant conduct this Court should consider in determining whether 83.1 Rule is being applied to him retroactively, and that the relevant conduct is his desire to appear as counsel before that court in this case and, presumably, future cases.

To begin, Rule 83.1 clearly does not impose any affirmative penalty on Mr. Cohn based on his 1982 bar admission, or impose any new obligations on him that arise out of his prior bar membership. Cf. Landgraf, 511 U.S. at 280.

Whether Rule 83.1 deprives Mr. Cohn of any "vested rights," Landgraf, 511 U.S. at 269 (citation omitted), is a more complex question. On the one hand, there is authority for the proposition that an attorney does not have vested interest in the terms and conditions of bar membership that exist when he or she is admitted to the bar. See In re Isserman, 345 U.S. 286, 289 (1953) (plurality opinion) ("There is no vested right in an individual to practice law. Rather, there is a right in the Court to protect itself, and hence society, as an instrument of justice"), vacated on other grounds, 348 U.S. 1 (1954); Tinkoff v. United States, 212 F.2d 18, 20 (7th Cir. 1954) (noting that "'[m]embership in the bar is a privilege burdened with conditions'") (quoting In re Rouss, 221 N.Y. 81, 84 (Ct. App. N.Y. 1917) (Cardozo, J.)).

Moreover, as this Court has observed, "[t]raditionally, courts enjoy broad discretion to determine who shall practice before them and to monitor the conduct of those who do." United States v. Dinitz, 538 F.2d 1214 (5th Cir. 1976) (noting that "[s]ince attorneys are officers of the courts before which they appear, such courts are necessarily vested with the authority, within certain limits, to control attorneys' conduct") (citations omitted). To conclude that Landgraf bars a court from imposing new conditions on attorneys who are already members of the bar of that court unless the rule in question contains an express "no grandfathering" clause could be viewed as substantially impairing a court's ability to control the practice of litigation before it.

For example, a court arguably should be able to impose reasonable fees upon members of its bar as a condition of continued bar membership, as many courts have done in order to provide additional needed sources of revenue, without triggering concerns related to whether the new rule is retroactive. Similarly, a court arguably should be able to impose upon its bar members new rules relating to ethical standards or inappropriate conduct (such as a prohibition against engaging in discrimination, sexual harassment, or other forms of unacceptable behavior) without triggering Landgraf's presumption against retroactivity. Indeed, under Mr. Cohn's view of the law, a court could not require an attorney who is a member of that court's bar to participate in a case management/electronic filing program unless the Court's administrative rule concerning electronic filing expressly contains a "no grandfathering" clause. Cf. Landgraf, 511 U.S. at 275 (noting that "changes in procedural rules may often be applied in suits arising before their enactment without raising concerns about retroactivity").

In addition, Local Rule 83.1 does not deprive any attorney of his or her right to practice law in general; impose anything that could be construed as a penalty or punishment upon a lawyer, such as would be involved in a disbarment proceeding; or prevent an attorney from appearing before the Northern District either (1) by becoming a member of the Mississippi bar, or (2) by applying for admission pro hac vice. The current fee for appearing pro hac vice in the Northern District is only $100, see http://www.msnd.uscourts.gov/general.htm (fee schedules), an amount Mr. Cohn does not contend would prevent him from representing clients before that court, and there is at least one other lawyer in Mr. Cohn's firm who is a member of the Mississippi Bar and who could move Mr. Cohn's admission pro hac vice and attend legal proceedings with him. See generally Local Rule 83.1(d)(3) & (4).

As we have already explained, these rules were publicly available when Mr. Cohn agreed to file Ms. Campbell's bankruptcy petition in this case. Moreover, Mr. Cohn does not argue that the Northern District lacked statutory authority to promulgate those rules or to make them applicable to attorneys who had already been admitted to its bar. The Rules Enabling Act provides that "all courts established by Act of Congress may from time to time prescribe rules for the conduct of their business," 28 U.S.C. 2071(a), and that any such rule "shall take effect upon the date specified by the prescribing court and shall have effect on pending proceedings as the prescribing court may order." Id. 2071(b).

Thus, the unexplained reference to Bowen v. Georgetown University Hospital, 488 U.S. 204 (1988), in Appellant's Brief is inapt. Bowen held that "a statutory grant of legislative rulemaking authority will not, as a general matter, be understood to encompass the power to promulgate retroactive rules unless the power is conveyed by Congress in express terms." Id. at 472 (citation omitted). Here, as noted above, the Rules Enabling Act gives courts the authority to promulgate rules of procedure and to apply those rules to pending and future proceedings. As explained above, the bankruptcy court's application of its Northern District Local Rule 83.1 to Mr. Cohn does nothing more than that.

Moreover, as noted above, "[a] statute does not operate 'retrospectively' merely because it is applied in a case arising from conduct antedating the statute's enactment." Landgraf, 511 U.S. at 269 (citation omitted). Thus, where, as here, the court applied Rule 83.1 to Mr. Cohn's appearance in this and future cases, the fact that his prior admission to the court's bar allegedly occurred prior to the court's announcement that he must abide by the rule does not, by itself, make the court's action retrospective as to Mr. Cohn. For all the above reasons, therefore, it could be argued that an attorney who has been admitted to a federal district court bar holds not an "immediate fixed right of present or future enjoyment," Fernandez-Vargas v. Gonzales, 548 U.S. 30, 44 n.10 (2006) (citation omitted), but rather only a "contingent" interest, ibid., in appearing in that court under terms and conditions set by Congress and the courts.

2. On the other hand, the Supreme Court has held that an attorney has a sufficient property interest in federal bar membership to assert due process rights in opposition to disbarment proceedings. See In re Ruffalo, 390 U.S. 544, 550 (1968). In addition, in Gallo, the Ninth Circuit ruled that an attorney who, like Mr. Cohn, was required to join the state bar in which a federal district court is located as a condition of retaining his or her membership in the federal court's bar had a property interest for due process clause purposes. See 349 F.3d at 1179.

Neither Ruffalo nor Gallo discussed whether an attorney's federal bar membership also constitutes a "vested right" for purposes of applying Landgraf.[14] This Court also need not address that question here, however, because, as we have explained, General Order 3:85mc26 contains an express command that Local Rule 83.1 applies to all attorneys, with no "grandfather" exception.

II. Rule 83.1 Does Not Violate the Ex Post Facto Clause or Any of Mr. Cohn's Rights Under the Due Process Clause.

The district court correctly held that the Bankruptcy Court's application of Local Rule 83.1 to Mr. Cohn does not violate any of his constitutional rights.

A. Rule 83.1 Does Not Violate the Ex Post Facto Clause.

As the district court correctly observed, see USCA5 54, the Ex Post Facto Clause[15] is applicable only to laws that inflict criminal punishments. See, e.g., Smith

---

[14] For purposes of applying the due process clause, however, Gallo did draw a distinction between the disbarment of a lawyer, which is "a punishment or penalty imposed on the lawyer," 349 F.3d at 1182 (citation omitted), and the adoption of a rule that requires an existing bar member to satisfy certain new conditions in order to maintain his or her federal bar membership. See id. at 1182-83.

[15] The Constitution actually contains two Ex Post Facto Clauses: one that applies to the federal government, see U.S. Const., Art. I, § 9, cl. 3 (providing that "[n]o Bill of Attainder or ex post facto Law shall be passed), and another that applies to the states. See U.S. Const., Art. I, § 10, cl. 1 ("[n]o State shall . . . pass any Bill of Attainder, ex post facto Law, or Law impairing the Obligation of Contracts"). This case obviously involves the federal provision. The Supreme Court has interpreted the two clauses synonymously. See Stogner v. California, 539 U.S. 607, 610 (2003).

v. Doe, 538 U.S. 84, 92 (2002). Accord United States v. Young, 585 F.3d 199, 204 (5th Cir. 2009). Mr. Cohn does not contend that Local Rule 83.1 imposes a criminal penalty or any other sanction that could be viewed as punitive under the Supreme Court's precedents, see generally Doe, 538 U.S. at 97, and the purpose and effect of the Rule are both plainly civil and regulatory – to ensure a minimum level of competence for lawyers practicing before the Northern District of Mississippi commensurate with local standards. See Gallo, 349 F.3d at 1180 (upholding a similar rule applied by the Arizona federal district court). Thus, the district court correctly held that Rule 83.1 does not violate the Ex Post Facto Clause as applied to Mr. Cohn in this case and any future appearances he may wish to make in the Northern District of Mississippi.

B. Rule 83.1 Also Does Not Violate Any of Mr. Cohn's Rights Under the Due Process Clause.

1. With respect to the Due Process Clause, it is not clear that Mr. Cohn has adequately presented or preserved any argument sufficient for this Court to review. Mr. Cohn's appeal brief (p. 7) states that "[n]o disbarment proceedings have ever been instituted to divest him of [the privilege of appearing in the Northern District of Mississippi] as required under the 5th Amendment Due Process Clause," but he fails to provide any supporting argument or to suggest why Rule 83.1 lacks a rational basis as applied to him. See Adams v. Unione Medittanea Di Sicurta, 364 F.3d 646, 653 (5th Cir.) ("Issues not raised or inadequately briefed on appeal are waived"), cert. denied, 543 U.S. 979 (2004).

2. Even if Mr. Cohn had preserved a due process argument, any such argument would fail. In Gallo, supra, the Ninth Circuit rejected a due process challenge to exactly the kind of local federal district court rule Mr. Cohn attacks here. In so doing, the Ninth Circuit explained that such a rule satisfies due process if it bears a rational relationship to a legitimate state interest, since it would not impair any fundamental rights and because lawyers are not a suspect class See Gallo, 349 F.3d at 1179. As was true of the rule at issue in Gallo, Northern District of Mississippi Local Rule 83.1 easily satisfies that standard because it "serves the legitimate interest of ensuring that all attorneys practicing before the [United States District Court for the Northern District of Mississippi] 'clear the standard required' by the respective state bar association[].'" Id. at 1181 (citing Russell v. Hug, 275 F.3d 812, 819 (9th Cir. 2002)).

As Gallo explains, "[h]istorically . . . 'the licensing and regulation of lawyers has been left exclusively to the states and the District of Columbia within their respective jurisdictions.'" 349 F.3d at 1180 (citation omitted). Thus, it follows that federal district courts "may rely on the infrastructure provided by state bar associations in meeting their own needs for monitoring attorney admission and practice in the federal courts." Ibid. (citing Russell, 275 F.3d 812). In addition, a federal district court's requirement that attorneys who practice before it be members of the local state bar is "rationally related to the federal court's legitimate interest 'in policing ethical conduct of the lawyers who practice law'" before it. Gallo, 349 F.3d at 1180 (quoting Russell, 275 F.3d at 820).

Every other decided case of which we are aware also rejects the idea that due process forbids a federal court from requiring attorneys who seek admission to its bar to be admitted to the bar of the state in which the court sits. See Roberts v. Roberts, 682 F.2d 105 (3d Cir. 1982); In re Pawlak, 1995 WL 723177 (E.D. Pa. 1995).[16] See also Brown v. McGarr, 774 F.2d 777 (7th Cir. 1985) (rejecting procedural due process challenge to federal district court bar rule requiring attorneys to demonstrate prior trial experience before being allowed to join a newly formed court "trial bar").[17]

Significantly, the Third Circuit in Roberts noted that tying district court admission to state bar membership "tends to protect the interests of the public."

[16] In re Pawlak is an unpublished disposition. We cite the case not as controlling precedent, but for background purposes only.

[17] Cf. Frazier v. Heebe, 482 U.S. 641 (1987) (holding that a federal district court may not require an attorney who is a member of the bar of the state in which the court is located also to reside or maintain an office in that state in order to be admitted to the district court's own bar).

Roberts, 682 F.2d at 108. "For example," the Third Circuit noted, "when a choice of either a federal or a state forum is available in a particular case an attorney admitted only to the federal court may choose that forum solely for that reason, possibly disregarding the interests of his clients." Ibid.[18] In addition, the Third Circuit also has "expressed concern . . . that admission to the federal but not the state bar implies disapproval of the action of the state court, and undermines public confidence in the legal system and in the bar." In re Pawlak, 1995 WL 723177 *4 (citing In re Abrams, 521 F.2d 1094, 1106 (3d Cir.), cert. denied, 423 U.S. 1038 (1975)).

Moreover, we also note that the district court applied Local Rule 83.1 to Mr. Cohn only prospectively – that is, with respect to his appearance in this case and any future proceedings before the Northern District – and that, as explained above, the Rule does not deprive Mr. Cohn of the ability to practice law in general or to appear in the Northern District by admission pro hac vice. See p.22, supra.

[18] The Third Circuit in Roberts also concluded that an attorney lacks a liberty or property interest in his or her membership in a federal court bar. See 682 F.2d at 107. The Ninth Circuit took the opposite view of that question in Gallo, see 349 F.3d at 1179, and the Supreme Court in In re Ruffalo, supra, appeared to take the same view as the Ninth Circuit did in Gallo, although the Supreme Court did not address the question in those precise terms. See p. 24, supra. This Court need not resolve that issue in order to resolve this appeal because there are numerous other grounds upon which the Court can reject Mr. Cohn's due process "argument," to the extent it can be called that.

For all the above reasons, therefore, this Court should conclude that Local Rule 83.1 has a rational basis as applied to Mr. Cohn in this case, and thus fully comports with the Due Process Clause.

3. Mr. Cohn also suggests that "no notice was given to the debtor's attorney to participate in such decisions." Appellant's Brief at 9. Mr. Cohn does not identify the "decisions" to which he refers, but he appears to point to the Northern District of Mississippi's "policy change," ibid.,[19] requiring membership in the Mississippi bar as a prerequisite to membership in the district court bar. As the Ninth Circuit explained in Gallo, however, that kind of rules change, which applies to all attorneys who wish to appear before the Northern District of Mississippi, satisfies the requirements of procedural due process "if the enacting body provides public notice and open hearings." Gallo, 349 F.3d at 1181. Accord Brown v. McGarr, 774 F.2d at 785 (due process did not require individual notice before application to attorney of new court rule requiring attorneys to demonstrate trial experience before they can appear alone in that court). See also Gallo, 349 F.3d at 1182 (distinguishing a disbarment proceeding, which is based on an allegation of attorney misconduct).

[19] As explained above, Local Rule 83.1 in fact was substantially similar to the previous rule that governed admission to the bar of the Northern District, see p. 10, supra, and Mr. Cohn has failed to prove, or argue, why he could have been properly admitted under the former rule.

Mr. Cohn does not contend that Local Rule 83.1 did not result from appropriate proceedings or involve adequate opportunity for comment by the bar, and we are not aware of any reason to believe the Rule did not flow out of the process required by Fed. R. Civ. P. 83(a)(1) ("After giving public notice and an opportunity for comment, a district court, acting by a majority of its district judges, may adopt and amend rules governing its practice). Thus, Mr. Cohn is not constitutionally entitled to a pre-deprivation individual hearing concerning whether he may continue to appear before the Northern District of Mississippi in light of Rule 83.1. See Gallo, 349 F.3d at 1181-1183.

Conclusion

For the foregoing reasons, the district court's decision should be affirmed.

BRIEF FOR THE UNITED STATES TRUSTEE

JURISDICTIONAL STATEMENT

The bankruptcy court had jurisdiction pursuant to 28 U.S.C. § 157(b) over the appellant's voluntary petition for bankruptcy under chapter 11 of the Bankruptcy Code, 11 U.S.C. §§ 1101 et seq. The bankruptcy court's order dismissing the case was entered on October 3, 2006. Appellant's notice of appeal from the bankruptcy court's order, filed on October 19, 2006 (SA 19),[1] was therefore untimely. See Fed. R. 28 U.S.C.§ 158(c)(2) (adopting appeal time provided by Bankruptcy Rule 8002); Fed. R. Bankr. P. 8002(a) (establishing 10-day time period to file notice of appeal from entry of the judgment, order, or decree appealed from).[2] Because appellant's notice of appeal was untimely, the district court lacked subject-matter jurisdiction over the appeal. See Bowles v. Russell, 551 U.S. 205, 207 (2007). Appellant's notice of appeal from the district court's order, filed April 16, 2007 (Dist. Ct. Docket Entry 3), is therefore a nullity. Because the [2] Citations to the Fed. R. Bankr. P. are to the version of the rules in effect in 2006 when appellant filed his notice of appeal. Fed. R. Bankr. P. 8002(a) was amended, effective December 1, 2009, to increase the time for filing a notice of appeal from 10 to 14 days. See Order Amending Federal Rules of Bankruptcy Procedure (S.Ct. March 26, 2009) ("The foregoing amendments to the Federal Rules of Bankruptcy Procedure shall take effect on December 1, 2009, and shall govern in all proceedings in bankruptcy cases thereafter commenced and, insofar as just and practicable, all proceedings then pending.") (accessible at: http://www.supremecourt.gov/orders/ courtorders/frbk09.pdf).

Given the posture of this case, where the period for filing an appeal has long passed, application of the new 14 day time period would appear impracticable. See Landgraf v. USI Film Prod., 511 U.S. 244, 275 n.29 (1994) ("Of course, the mere fact that a new rule is procedural does not mean that it applies to every pending case," rather, the Court's orders approving amendments to federal procedural rules "reflect the commonsense notion that the applicability of such provisions ordinarily depends on the posture of the particular case."). But even assuming the new 14 day time period were applicable in this case, the outcome would be no different because Caterbone's notice of appeal was filed on the 16th day after entry of the bankruptcy court's order.

district court lacked subject-matter jurisdiction to hear the merits of appellant's appeal, this Court, too, lacks jurisdiction over appellant's appeal from the district court's dismissal of the case. Bowles, 551 U.S. at 207.

STATEMENT OF THE ISSUES

1. Whether any objection to appellant's untimely appeal to the district court was forfeited by the Trustee's failure to challenge it in the district court, see Kontrick v. Ryan, 540 U.S. 443 (2004), or whether the time-period for filing such an appeal is a jurisdictional time-constraint, not subject to such waiver, within the meaning of Bowles v. Russell, 551 U.S. 205 (2007).

2. Assuming this Court has appellate jurisdiction, did the district court abuse its discretion by dismissing appellant's bankruptcy appeal due to appellant's failure to comply with Fed. R. Bankr. P. 8006.

STATEMENT OF THE CASE

A. Nature of Case and Disposition Below

In an order entered on October 3, 2006, the United States Bankruptcy Court for the Eastern District of Pennsylvania granted a motion by the United States Trustee to dismiss appellant Stanley J. Caterbone's (Caterbone) chapter 11 bankruptcy case for cause under 11 U.S.C. § 1112(b). On October 19, 2006, sixteen days after entry of the bankruptcy court's order, Caterbone filed an untimely notice of appeal from the bankruptcy court's order to the United States District Court for the Eastern District of Pennsylvania. The untimeliness of Caterbone's appeal was not brought to the district court's attention by the United States Trustee. However, the district court, acting on its own motion, dismissed the appeal on March 15, 2007, on the nonjurisdictional grounds that Caterbone had failed to comply with Fed. R. Bankr. P. 8006's requirement that he designate the contents of the record on appeal and file a statement of issues to be raised on appeal.

Caterbone filed a notice of appeal to this Court from the district court's order, and the United States Trustee has moved to dismiss the appeal for lack of subject-matter jurisdiction.

B. Statutory and Regulatory Framework

Bankruptcy protection under chapter 11 of the Code, 11 U.S.C. §§ 1101 et seq., is designed to allow a financially distressed debtor the opportunity to reorganize. See In re Philadelphia Newspapers, LLC, 599 F.3d 298, 303 (3d Cir. 2010) ("Chapter 11 of the Bankruptcy Code strikes a balance between two principal interests: facilitating the reorganization and rehabilitation of the debtor . . . and protecting the value of the bankruptcy estate."); see also United Sav. Ass'n v. Timbers of Inwood Forest Assocs., 484 U.S. 365, 376 (1988) ("There must be a reasonable possibility of a successful reorganization within a reasonable time.") (citation and internal quotation marks omitted).

While chapter 11 is typically used to reorganize a business, individuals may also file a voluntary petition for protection under chapter 11, as Caterbone did in this case. 11 U.S.C. § 301. After commencing a bankruptcy case, the debtor must comply with various document filing requirements mandated by the Federal Rules of Bankruptcy Procedure and the Bankruptcy Code. For instance, the debtor must file with the bankruptcy court: (1) schedules of assets and liabilities; (2) a schedule of current income and expenditures; (3) a schedule of executory contracts and unexpired leases; and (4) a statement of financial affairs. Fed. R. Bankr. P. 1007. If the debtor is an individual, there are additional document filing requirements. See 11 U.S.C. § 521 (detailing filing requirements). A written disclosure statement and a plan of reorganization typically must also be filed with the court. 11 U.S.C. §§ 1121, 1125. The debtor is also required to pay certain statutory fees upon commencing a bankruptcy case. See 28 U.S.C. § 1930(a)(3) & (6).

The United States Trustee plays a significant role in monitoring and supervising a chapter 11 case. The United States Trustee Program was established as a component of the United States Department of Justice to undertake certain statutorily mandated responsibilities with respect to bankruptcy cases. See 28 U.S.C. §§ 581-589. Thus, the United States Trustee "may appear and be heard on any issue in any case or proceeding" in bankruptcy. 11 U.S.C. § 307. See also In re Columbia Gas Sys. Inc., 33 F.3d 294, 296 (3d Cir. 1994) (United States Trustees oversee the bankruptcy process, protect the public interest, and ensure that bankruptcy cases are conducted according to law.).

Part VIII of the Federal Rules of Bankruptcy Procedure prescribe the manner for appealing a bankruptcy court's final decision. In particular, Rule 8001 states that an appeal "from a judgment, order, or decree of a bankruptcy judge to a district court or bankruptcy appellate panel as permitted by 28 U.S.C. § 158(a)(1) or (a)(2) shall be taken by filing a notice of appeal with the clerk within the time allowed by Rule 8002." Fed. R. Bankr. P. 8001(a). The rule further provides that "[a]n appellant's failure to take any step other than timely filing a notice of appeal does not affect the validity of the appeal, but is ground only for such action as the district court . . .

deems appropriate, which may include dismissal of the appeal." Id. (emphasis added). At the time Caterbone filed his appeal of the bankruptcy court's order to the district court in this case, the "time allowed" by Rule 8002 to appeal was ten days. See also 28 U.S.C. § 158(c)(2) (bankruptcy appeals "shall be taken . . . in the time provided by Rule 8002 of the Bankruptcy Rules").

C. Factual and Procedural Background

1. On May 23, 2005, Caterbone, acting pro se, filed a voluntary chapter 11 petition for bankruptcy in the bankruptcy court. On June 13, 2005, the bankruptcy court sua sponte entered an order dismissing the case for Caterbone's failure to timely file required documents. Caterbone appealed the dismissal to the district court and, on October 5, 2005, the district court ordered reinstatement of the case in the bankruptcy court, "provided that [Caterbone] comply with the rules and requirements applicable to all debtors seeking relief under the Bankruptcy Code." In re Caterbone, No. 05-3689 (E.D. Pa. Oct. 5, 2005).

2. Thereafter, on May 30, 2006, the United States Trustee filed a motion in the bankruptcy court to dismiss or convert the case to one under chapter 7. SA 09 (Bankr. Ct. Docket Entry No. 60). A hearing was held on the United States Trustee's motion on June 29, 2006. SA 10 (Bankr. Ct. Docket Entry No. 66). On October 3, 2006, the bankruptcy court dismissed Caterbone's chapter 11 case both for "cause" pursuant to 11 U.S.C. § 1112(b), and "due to Debtor's failure to defend." SA 01. In so doing, the bankruptcy court found that the United States Trustee met her burden of proving that cause existed to dismiss the case by establishing that Caterbone: (1) had been and was unable to propose and obtain confirmation of a viable plan of reorganization; (2) had failed to remain current with the filing of required financial reports pursuant to the United States Trustee Operating Guidelines and Local Bankr. R. 2015.1; and (2) had failed to pay the required statutory fees under 28 U.S.C. §1930(a)(6). As for Caterbone' failure to defend, the bankruptcy court noted that Caterbone did not file a brief in opposition to the United States

Trustee's motion to dismiss the case, and did not attend two hearings and a chapter 11 status conference. SA 02 n.4.

The bankruptcy court's order dismissing the case was entered that same day (October 3, 2006), and was served by the court clerk on October 5, 2006. Caterbone filed a notice of appeal to the district court from the bankruptcy court's order on October 19, 2006, sixteen days after the order was entered.

3. On March 15, 2007, the district court sua sponte issued an order dismissing the appeal and remanding the matter to the bankruptcy court, citing Caterbone's failure to file a designation of the contents of the record on appeal and statement of issues to be raised on appeal as required by Fed. R. Bankr. Proc. 8006. App. 1.[3] Caterbone filed a notice of appeal to this Court from the district court's order on April 16, 2007.

[3] "App." denotes appendix submitted by appellant with his opening brief.

In a motion filed in this Court on June 8, 2007, the United States Trustee moved to dismiss Caterbone's appeal for lack of jurisdiction. In support of her motion, the United States Trustee pointed out that Caterbone's appeal of the bankruptcy court's October 3, 2006, order was untimely because the notice of appeal was filed on October 19, 2006, sixteen days after entry of the order. Under 28 U.S.C. § 158(c)(2) and Fed. R. Bankr. P. 8002, the United States Trustee noted, any notice of appeal with respect to the bankruptcy court's October 3, 2006, order was required to be filed within ten calendar days of the date of entry of the order; that is, by October 13, 2006. SA 23. Explaining that failure to comply with the bankruptcy rule's filing deadlines creates a jurisdictional defect barring appellate review, the United States Trustee asserted that the district court lacked jurisdiction over Caterbone's appeal. SA 24-25. Because the district court lacked jurisdiction over the appeal, the United States Trustee argued, this Court also lacks jurisdiction to entertain the merits of Caterbone's appeal under 28 U.S.C. § 158(d). SA 25.

4. By order of July 8, 2009, this Court referred the United States Trustee's motion to dismiss to a merits panel, and directed the clerk to locate and appoint amicus counsel on behalf of the Court. In a subsequent order entered on December 16, 2009, amicus counsel was appointed, with representation limited to addressing the jurisdictional issue.

SUMMARY OF ARGUMENT

1. In 28 U.S.C. § 158(c)(2), Congress established a mandatory and jurisdictional deadline for appealing a bankruptcy court's judgment through its explicit adoption of the "time provided by Rule 8002[a] of the Bankruptcy Rules." As such, Rule 8002(a) implicates a district court's subject-matter jurisdiction to hear bankruptcy appeals. The jurisdictional issue posed by the Court is whether any objection to appellant's untimely appeal to the district court was forfeited by the United States Trustee's failure to challenge it in the district court, see Kontrick v. Ryan, or whether the time-period for filing such an appeal is a jurisdictional time-constraint, not subject to waiver, within the meaning of Bowles v. Russell. This case is governed by Bowles.

As the Supreme Court explained in Bowles, where Congress has by statute specifically established a time limit for taking an appeal, "that limitation is more than a simple 'claim-processing rule.'" 551 U.S. at 213. Caterbone's failure to file his notice of appeal in accordance with the congressionally-mandated time limit thus deprived the district court of its statutory power to adjudicate the case. Because "'[t]his . . . concept of subject-matter jurisdiction involves a court's power to hear a case, [it] can never be forfeited or waived." United States v. Cotton, 535 U.S. 625, 630 (2002). "Consequently, defects in subject-matter jurisdiction require correction regardless of whether the error was raised in district court." Id. (citations omitted).

Indeed, treating Rule 8002(a)'s appeal time limit as jurisdictional follows naturally from a examination of the requirement's text, context, and historical treatment. See Reed Elsevier Inc. v. Muchnick, 130 S. Ct. 1237, 1246 (2010). As we discuss, Rule 8002(a)'s timeliness condition, which is affirmatively incorporated by 28 U.S.C. § 158(c)(2), is located in the same section of the statute that grants district courts jurisdiction to hear bankruptcy appeals. See 28 U.S.C. § 158(a)-(b). Further, federal case law jurisprudence has for over 100 years treated time limits for filing a notice of appeal as jurisdictional. For instance, Rule 4(a) of the Federal Rules of Appellate Procedure, after which Rule 8002(a) was expressly modeled, has long been held to be "mandatory and jurisdictional." See Browder v. Dir. of Corr. of Ill., 434 U.S. 257, 264 (1978). It was upon this basis that the Tenth Circuit recently reaffirmed its pre-Kontrick precedent which had consistently held that "Rule 8002(a) is jurisdictional." See In re Latture, 605 F.3d 830, 836 (10th Cir. 2010).

For all of these reasons, the Court should dismiss Caterbone's appeal for lack of subject-matter jurisdiction.

2. If, however, the Court is unpersuaded by our arguments (and those of amicus counsel) that jurisdiction is lacking, and proceeds to a determination of the merits, then it should affirm the district court's dismissal of the appeal for failure to prosecute. As we discuss, dismissal of the appeal was warranted in this case because Caterbone did nothing more to sustain his challenge to the bankruptcy court's order than file a notice of appeal – and an untimely one at that. The Bankruptcy Rules are straightforward in their requirement that, ten (now fourteen) days after noticing an appeal, the appellant is required to file with the bankruptcy court a designation of the items to be included in the record on appeal and a statement of the issues to be raised. Fed. R. Bankr. P. 8006. Rule 8001(a) also clearly warns litigants that an appellant who fails to take any steps beyond filing a "timely notice of appeal" runs the risk of having his case dismissed by the district court. Fed. R. Bankr. P. 8001(a). Although Caterbone now recites a long list of reasons why his failure to comply with the Bankruptcy Rules constitutes "excusable neglect," the record instead suggests that his failures emanated from indifference and a cavalier attitude toward the requirements of the Rules.

In sum, if this Court finds that jurisdiction exists, then it should affirm the district court's judgment.

STANDARD OF REVIEW

The district court dismissed Caterbone's case without addressing its jurisdiction. It is well-settled that subject matter jurisdiction may be raised at any time during the same civil action, even if the issue is initially raised at the appellate level. Kontrick, 540 U.S. at 455. Indeed, courts have an independent obligation to determine whether subject-matter jurisdiction exists, even in the absence of challenge by any party. Arbaugh v. Y&H Corp., 546 U.S. 500, 514 (2006).

Assuming the Court finds that it has jurisdiction over Caterbone's appeal, it must review the district court's dismissal order only for an abuse of discretion. In re Jewelcor Inc., 11 F.3d 394, 397 (3d Cir. 1993).

ARGUMENT

I. CATERBONE'S APPEAL MUST BE DISMISSED FOR LACK OF SUBJECT-MATTER JURISDICTION

Pending before this Court is the motion of the United States Trustee to dismiss Caterbone's appeal for lack of subject-matter jurisdiction. In referring the motion to this merits panel, the Court raised the issue whether the Trustee forfeited the right to object to the untimeliness of Caterbone's appeal of the bankruptcy court's order by not raising the issue in district court, or whether the time-period for filing such an appeal is a nonwaivable jurisdictional time-constraint.[4] As we discuss below,[5] and as amicus counsel agrees, because the time allowed for appeal by Fed. R. Bankr. P. 8002(a) is embodied in statute (28 U.S.C. § 158(c)(2)), it is a nonwaivable time-constraint such that "this Court lacks subject matter jurisdiction over the appeal." Amicus Counsel Br. 4.

[4] In his brief on appeal, appellant states that he "will not argue this issue." Appellant's Br. 8.

[5] See also Mot. of U.S. Trustee to Dismiss Appeal. SA 23-24 & n.3.

A. Congress Authorized District Courts to Exercise Subject-Matter Jurisdiction Over Bankruptcy Appeals in 28 U.S.C. § 158, Which Expressly Incorporates the Time Provided in Fed. R. Bankr. P. 8002 for Taking Appeals

Federal courts are courts of limited subject-matter jurisdiction. See Kokkonen v. Guardian Life Ins. Co. of Am., 511 U.S. 375, 377 (1994). Thus, "[t]hey possess only that power authorized by Constitution and statute, . . . which is not to be expanded by judicial decree." Id. (citations omitted); see U.S. Const. Art. III, § 1. Congress, through 28 U.S.C. § 158, has authorized federal district courts to exercise subject-matter jurisdiction over appeals from final judgments, orders, and decrees of bankruptcy courts. In particular, § 158(c)(2) provides that an appeal "shall be taken in the same manner as appeals in civil proceedings generally are taken to the courts of appeals from the district courts and in the time provided by Rule 8002 of the Bankruptcy Rules." 28 U.S.C. § 158(c)2) (emphasis added). In 2006, Rule 8002 ("Time for Filing Notice of Appeal") stated in pertinent part:

> (a) TEN-DAY PERIOD. The notice of appeal shall be filed with the clerk within 10 days of the date > of the entry of the judgment, order, or decree appealed from.

Fed. R. Bankr. P. 8002(a).

The Bankruptcy Rules permit a bankruptcy judge to extend the time for filing a notice of appeal by any party, provided that the "request to extend the time for filing a notice of appeal [is] made by written motion filed before the time for filing a notice of appeal has expired, except that such a motion filed not later than 20 days after the expiration of the time for filing a notice of appeal may be granted upon a showing of excusable neglect." Fed. R. Bankr. P. 8002(c)(2). It is not disputed that Caterbone neither sought, nor obtained, an extension of time to file an appeal from the bankruptcy court's October 3, 2006, final order. Thus, Caterbone's notice of appeal was out of time because it was filed on October 19, 2006, six days after the time to file a notice of appeal expired. The district court therefore lacked subject-matter jurisdiction over the appeal. Because the district court lacked subject-matter jurisdiction under 28 U.S.C. § 158(c), this Court also lacks jurisdiction under 28 U.S.C. § 158(d) to determine the merits of Caterbone's appeal. The appeal should be dismissed accordingly. As the Supreme Court has long held, "when an 'appeal has not been prosecuted in the manner directed, within the time limited by the acts of Congress, it must be dismissed for want of jurisdiction.'" Bowles, 551 U.S. at 213 (quoting United States v. Curry, 47 U.S. (6 How.) 106, 113 (1848)).

B. Because Rule 8002's Time Limit is Mandatory and Jurisdictional, Objection to the Untimeliness of Caterbone's Appeal Cannot be Forfeited

Rule 8002(a)'s time limit, adopted by Congress in 28 U.S.C. § 158(c)(2), thus implicates a district court's subject-matter jurisdiction to hear bankruptcy appeals. And because "subject-matter jurisdiction . . . involves a court's power to hear a case, [it] can never be forfeited or waived." United States v. Cotton, 534 U.S. at 630.

This Circuit has long regarded Rule 8002(a)'s time limit for filing an appeal to be mandatory and jurisdictional. See e.g., Shareholders v. Sound Radio, Inc., 109 F.3d 873, 879 (3d Cir. 1997) (Rule 8002(a)'s deadline "is strictly construed" and "[t]he failure to file a timely notice of appeal creates a jurisdictional defect barring appellate review.");

Whitemere Dev. Corp., Inc. v. Twp. of Cherry Hill, 786 F.2d 185, 187 (3d Cir. 1986) (The time limit under Rule 8002(a) "is strictly construed and is jurisdictional in effect."); In re Universal Minerals, Inc., 755 F.2d 309, 311 (3d Cir. 1985) (It cannot be "doubted that [Rule 8002(a)] is jurisdictional in effect. The Advisory Committee's Note to Rule 8002 expressly states that it is 'an adaptation of Rule 4(a) of the Federal Rules of Appellate Procedure.'"). This Court's view is also in line with the decisions of other courts of appeals that have addressed the question. See e.g., In re Siemon, 421 F.3d 167, 169 (2d Cir. 2005) ("We . . . follow our sister circuits in holding that the time limit contained in Rule 8002(a) is jurisdictional, and that, in the absence of a timely notice of appeal in the district court, the district court is without jurisdiction to consider the appeal . . . ."); In re Don Vicente Macias, Inc., 168 F.3d 209, 211 (5th Cir. 1999) (failure to file a timely notice of appeal under Rule 8002(a) deprived district court of jurisdiction; in turn, court of appeals lacked jurisdiction over merits raised on appeal); In re Herwit, 970 F.2d 709, 710 (10th Cir. 1992) (The "failure to file a timely notice of appeal [is] a jurisdictional defect barring appellate review" of a bankruptcy court's order); In re Slimick, 928 F.2d 304, 306 (9th Cir. 1990) ("The untimely filing of a notice of appeal is jurisdictional.").

C. Treating The Time Limit Prescribed By Rule 8002(a) as Jurisdictional is Consistent with Kontrick and Bowles

The Supreme Court's decisions in Kontrick and Bowles, supra, reinforce and reaffirm the correctness of the courts of appeals' treatment of Rule 8002(a)'s time limit as jurisdictional. In Kontrick, the Court confronted the question of whether Fed. R. Bankr. P. 4004(a), which sets the time limit for filing objections to a debtor's discharge, and Fed. R. Bankr. P. 9006(b)(3), which instructs the court on the limits of its discretion to grant objection filing time extensions, are jurisdictional. In holding that they are not, the Court explained that "no statute . . . specifies a time limit for filing a complaint objecting to the debtor's discharge," rather, "[t]he time constraints applicable to objections to discharge are contained in Bankruptcy Rules prescribed by [the Supreme] Court for '[t]he practice and procedure'" in bankruptcy cases. Kontrick, 540 U.S. at 453 (quoting 28 U.S.C. § 2075). Declaring "it is axiomatic that such rules do not create or withdraw federal jurisdiction," id. (citation and internal quotation marks omitted), the Court concluded that "[i]n short, the filing deadlines prescribed in Bankruptcy Rules 4004 and 9006(b)(3) are claim-processing rules that do not delineate what cases bankruptcy courts are competent to adjudicate." Id. at 454. Because the debtor failed to raise the untimeliness of the creditor's late-filed objections until after the complaint was adjudicated on the merits, he forfeited his right to object.[6] Id. at 459.

[6] Similarly, in Eberhart v. United States, 546 U.S. 13 (2005), the Court examined whether Federal Rules of Criminal Procedure 33(b) and 45(b)(2), which closely parallel the rules at issue in Kontrick, are jurisdictional. In holding that those rules, which set forth the time limits for a criminal defendant's motion for a new trial, are nonjurisdictional claim-processing rules, the Court reasoned that "[i]t is implausible that the Rules considered in Kontrick can be nonjurisdictional claim-processing rules, while virtually identical provisions of the Rules of Criminal Procedure can deprive federal courts of subject-matter jurisdiction." 546 U.S. at 16. Thus, the Court held that where a party fails to raise the defense of untimeliness under a claim-processing rule until after the district court has reached the merits, it forfeits the defense. Id. at 19. Cf. Arbaugh, 546 U.S. at 515 (holding that Title VII's employee numerosity (continued...)

In contrast here, a statutory provision, 28 U.S.C. § 158(c)(2), does set the time limit for filing a notice of appeal to the district court from a bankruptcy court's decision. Rule 8002(a) simply carries the statute into practice. In that regard, the question in our case is more akin to the issue in Bowles, where a district court had purported to extend a party's time for filing an appeal beyond the time limit permitted by statute. Stating that it has "long and repeatedly held that the time limits for filing a notice of appeal are jurisdictional in nature," the Court held that the petitioner's untimely notice of appeal – even though filed in reliance upon the district court's order – deprived the court of appeals of jurisdiction. 551 U.S. at 206-07. In so holding, the Court explained that 28 U.S.C. § 2107(a) establishes the time period for filing a notice of appeal in civil cases, and that Fed. R. App. P. 4(a) carries § 2107 into practice. Id. at 208.

requirement, 42 U.S.C. § 2000e(b), is not jurisdictional, but is simply an element of a plaintiff's claim for relief).

Opining further, Bowles pointed out that the Court has consistently held that the requirement of filing a timely notice of appeal is "'mandatory and jurisdictional.'" 551 U.S. at 207 (quoting Browder, 434 U.S. at 264). See also Griggs v. Provident Consumer Disc. Co., 459 U.S. 56, 61 (1982) (per curiam). The Court remarked that even before creation of the circuit courts of appeal, it had regarded statutory limitations on the timing of appeals as limitations on its own jurisdiction. Bowles, 551 U.S. at 210. Indeed, the Supreme Court has treated statutory time limits for taking an appeal as jurisdictional for well over a century. Id. at 209-10. The courts of appeals, too, "[r]eflecting the consistency of th[e] Court's holdings, . . . routinely and uniformly dismiss appeals for lack of jurisdiction." Id. at 209.

The Bowles Court summed up the jurisdictional distinction between court-promulgated rules and limits enacted by Congress as follows:

> Jurisdictional treatment of statutory time limits makes good sense. Within constitutional bounds, Congress decides what cases the federal courts have jurisdiction to consider. Because Congress decides whether federal courts can hear cases at all, it can also determine when, and under what conditions, federal courts can hear them. Put another way, the notion of subject-matter jurisdiction obviously extends to classes of cases . . . falling within a court's adjudicatory authority, but it is no less jurisdictional when Congress prohibits federal courts from adjudicating an otherwise legitimate class of cases after a certain period has elapsed from final judgment.

Id. at 212-213 (citations and internal quotation marks omitted) (ellipsis in original).

As the Supreme Court recently elaborated in attempting to further clarify the distinctions between jurisdictional prescriptions and claim-processing rules, the jurisdictional analysis must focus on the "legal character" of the requirement, which the court must "discern[] by looking to the condition's text, context, and relevant historical treatment." Reed Elsevier, Inc. v. Muchnick, 130 S.Ct. 1237, 1246 (2010). In applying that approach to Rule 8002(a), the Tenth Circuit has concluded that Kontrick and its progeny "reaffirm our holding in In re Herwit . . . that Rule 8002(a) is jurisdictional." In re Latture, 605 F.3d at 836. The court of appeals elaborated:

> Congress . . . explicitly include[d] a timeliness condition in 28 U.S.C. § 158(c)(2) – the requirement that a notice of appeal be filed within the time provided by Rule 8002(a). Furthermore, the timeliness requirement contained in Section 158(c)(2) is located in the same section granting district courts and bankruptcy appellate courts jurisdiction to hear appeals from bankruptcy courts – Section 158(a)-(b).

Id. at 837. As the Tenth Circuit also explained, Bowles noted that "'time limits for filing a notice of appeal have been treated as jurisdictional in American law for well over a century.'" Id. (quoting Bowles, 551 U.S. at 210 n.2). The Tenth Circuit found it to be of no consequence that Bowles was discussing Fed. R. App. P. 4(a), and not the rules governing appeals from bankruptcy courts. Id. Indeed, in treating Rule 8002(a) as jurisdictional, the courts of appeals, including this Circuit, have relied on the fact the rule is modeled after Fed. R. App. 4(a), whose time limit is without question "mandatory and jurisdictional." See e.g., In re Siemon, 421 F.3d at 169; In re Universal

Minerals, Inc., 755 F.2d at 311. Finally, in the looking to the rule's historical treatment, the court in In re Latture observed that "all circuits prior to Kontrick and its progeny uniformly treated Rule 8002(a) as jurisdictional." 605 F.3d at 837.

In light of the foregoing discussion, this Court, like the Tenth Circuit, should reaffirm its prior precedent in In re Universal Minerals, Inc. and its progeny and continue to treat Rule 8002(a)'s time limit as jurisdictional. Because Caterbone's notice of appeal was untimely, the appeal should be dismissed for lack of subject matter jurisdiction.

II. THE DISTRICT COURT DID NOT ABUSE ITS DISCRETION IN DISMISSING CATERBONE'S APPEAL FOR FAILURE TO PROSECUTE

If this Court determines that it has jurisdiction to entertain the merits of the district court's dismissal of Caterbone's bankruptcy case for failure to comply with Fed. R. Bankr. P. 8006, then it should affirm the district court's ruling. Rule 8006 provides in pertinent part:

Record and Issues on Appeal

> Within 10 days after filing the notice of appeal as provided by Rule 8001(a) . . . the appellant shall file with the clerk and serve on the appellee a designation of the items to be included in the record on appeal and a statement of the issues to be presented.

Fed. R. Bankr. P. 8006. As the bankruptcy court docket sheet reflects, Caterbone's notice of appeal was filed on October 19, 2006, and the clerk made a docket entry that same date stating, "Appellant Designation due by 10/30/2006." SA 14. The docket shows no entry reflecting that Caterbone filed a designation of items to be included in the record on appeal or a statement of the issues to be presented as required by Rule 8006. Nor does the docket reflect that Caterbone requested an extension of time to meet Rule 8006's requirements. See Fed. R. Bankr. P. 9006(b) (court may grant extension of time for performing act required by the rules). The district court sua sponte dismissed the appeal on March 15, 2007, approximately five months after the notice of appeal was filed.

Bankruptcy Rule 8001(a) empowers a district court to dismiss an appeal for failure to prosecute or otherwise follow the procedures established by the Bankruptcy Rules. Rule 8001(a) states: "An appellant's failure to take any step other than timely filing a notice of appeal does not affect the validity of the appeal, but is ground only for such action as the district court . . . deems appropriate, which may include dismissal of the appeal." Id. (emphasis added). Fed. R. Bankr. P. 8001(a).

This Court "review[s] a dismissal for failure to prosecute only for an abuse of discretion, but the district court must have considered less severe sanctions." In re Jewelcor Inc., 11 F.3d at 397. The district court's order does not elaborate on the factors it considered in dismissing the appeal in this case. It is clear from the record, however, that dismissal was warranted.

Caterbone's multiple failures to comply with the Bankruptcy Rules' deadlines "show negligence or indifference, or both." In re YMR

Fashions Corp., 173 B.R. 750, 753 (M.D. Ala. 1994).[7] First, Caterbone's notice of appeal of the bankruptcy court's order was untimely. Next, he did nothing to prosecute his appeal beyond filing the untimely notice. Further, the bankruptcy court's dismissal of Caterbone's case was itself based, in part, on Caterbone's failure to attend two hearings and his failure to file a responsive brief to the United States Trustee's motion to dismiss. SA 01-02. Moreover, Caterbone's bankruptcy case had earlier been dismissed by the bankruptcy court due to his failure to file the documents required by Fed. R. Bankr. P. 1007. The district court (Brody, J.) reinstated Caterbone's bankruptcy case, with the express admonishment that "Debtor-Appellant comply with the rules and requirements applicable to all debtors seeking relief under the Bankruptcy Code." In re

[7] Although Caterbone has proceeded pro se throughout these proceedings, he is still obligated to fully comply with all relevant rules of procedure and substantive law. See Faretta v. California, 422 U.S. 806, 834 n.46 (1975) (The right to self-representation is not a "license not to comply with relevant rules of procedure and substantive law.").

Caterbone, No. 05-3689 (E.D. Pa. Oct. 5, 2005). It bears noting that the same district court judge who dismissed Caterbone's present appeal ordered reinstatement of the earlier case, with the directive that Caterbone comply with the rules and requirements of the Code. Given the district court's earlier warning, Caterbone's behavior exhibits "a cavalier attitude" regarding the requirements of the Bankruptcy Rules. See In re YMR Fashions Corp., 173 B.R. at 753. Under these circumstances, the district court could have reasonably determined that a less severe sanction would be ineffective.

There is no merit to Caterbone's argument that the district court should have employed the lesser sanction of ordering the clerk to prepare a copy of the items to be included in the record on appeal, and to then charge him ".50 per page for [the] record." Appellant's Br. 7. Caterbone misplaces his reliance on Rule 8006 in support of this argument. Rule 8006 states that any party filing a designation of items to be included in the record on appeal "shall provide to the clerk a copy of the items designated or, if the party fails to provide the copy, the clerk shall prepare the copy at the party's expense." Fed. R. Bankr. P. 8006. Because Caterbone did not file a designation of any items to be included in the record on appeal, the clerk could not have prepared a copy of the items and then billed him for the expense.

Nor should this Court accept Caterbone's argument that his failure to comply with Rule 8006 should be deemed "excusable neglect." Appellant's Br. 8. The majority of Caterbone's assertions (Br. 8-10) regarding unrelated litigation that he is or has been engaged in since 1987 simply have no bearing on his failure to timely comply with Rule 8006.[8] Although Caterbone claims that he was "falsely imprisoned in the Lancaster County Prison" from October 30, 2006, (the date that the designation of record and statement of issues on appeal was due in bankruptcy court) until December 29, 2006, the district court did not dismiss his appeal until March 15, 2007. Caterbone does not explain why after his release he did not seek leave of court for an extension of time to comply with Rule 8006's filing requirements. See Fed. R. Bankr. P. 9006(b)(2) (The court may "on motion made after the expiration of the specified period permit the act to be done where the failure to act was the result of excusable neglect.").

[8] Indeed, the bulk of Caterbone's litany of excuses relates to reasons why he failed to file certain documents and failed to appear at various hearings in the bankruptcy court, which led up to the bankruptcy court's dismissal of his chapter 11 petition for "cause" and failure to defend. See Appellant's Br. 9-10.

CONCLUSION

For the foregoing reasons, the Court should dismiss the appeal for lack of jurisdiction, or, in the alternative, the district court's order dismissing the case for failure to prosecute should be affirmed.

REPLY BRIEF FOR APPELLEES/CROSS-APPELLANTS

INTRODUCTION AND SUMMARY

In the Bankruptcy Abuse Prevention and Consumer Protection Act of 2005, Pub. L. No. 109-8, Congress enacted a series of provisions designed to "strengthen[] professionalism standards for attorneys and others who assist consumer debtors with their bankruptcy cases." H.R. Rep. No. 109-31, pt. 1, at 17. Among those provisions are the measures that the district court below declared unconstitutional in whole or in part. Section 528 requires consumer bankruptcy attorneys and other "debt relief agencies" to include specified disclosures in their advertisements of bankruptcy-related services to the public, see 11 U.S.C. § 528(a)(4), (b)(2), and section 526(a)(4) precludes attorneys from advising their clients to amass new debt in contemplation of filing a petition for bankruptcy, see 11 U.S.C. § 526(a)(4).

In June 2009, after the parties filed their principal briefs in these appeals, the Supreme Court granted certiorari to determine the constitutionality of both of these provisions. Milavetz, Gallop & Milavetz, P.A. v. United States, S.Ct. Nos. 08-1119 & 08-1225 (consolidated) (cert. granted June 8, 2009). In addition, the Supreme Court indicated that it will consider the threshold statutory question, also raised in this case (see Gov. Br. 16-20), of whether attorneys for consumer debtors are "debt relief agencies" under the Bankruptcy Code. The Court's decision in Milavetz is therefore likely to control, if not resolve, nearly every issue raised in these appeals.

If this Court decides these appeals before the Supreme Court issues its decision in Milavetz, the district court's partial invalidation of the 2005 Act should be reversed. Nothing in the Constitution prohibits Congress from regulating the professional conduct of attorneys practicing in the federal courts in this manner. The district court's ruling to the contrary rests on faulty statutory premises and disregards fundamental principles of constitutional avoidance, which required the district court to refuse plaintiffs' invitation to interpret the Act as broadly as possible to invite constitutional difficulties.

The district court's declaration that the advertising disclosure requirements in section 528 are unconstitutional "as applied to attorneys representing clients other than consumer debtors filing for bankruptcy," JA96, is both mistaken and wholly unnecessary. The government explained in district court that the "debt relief agency" provisions of the 2005 Act, including section 528, have no application to attorneys for creditors and other non-debtor parties in bankruptcy. Nevertheless, disregarding basic principles of constitutional avoidance, the district court proceeded to adopt a constitutionally problematic interpretation of the 2005 Act rather than the reading that accords most naturally with the statutory text. As we explained in our opening brief (at 46-48), attorneys for creditors are not "debt relief agencies" under the Act, and plaintiffs' brief makes no serious effort to address our arguments on this score.

The district court similarly erred in invalidating section 526(a)(4), which prohibits an attorney from advising a debtor "to incur more debt in contemplation of such person filing a case under this title." As we explained in our opening brief, Congress enacted this provision in recognition of the fact that debtors frequently "load up" with new debt on the eve of bankruptcy in an effort to game the bankruptcy system. Plaintiffs do not suggest that attorneys enjoy a categorical First Amendment privilege to encourage their clients to subvert the bankruptcy process in this fashion. Instead, they insist that section 526(a)(4) is unconstitutional because, in their view, the statute must also be construed to prohibit advice to engage in entirely legitimate, good-faith transactions.

That interpretation is neither required by the statutory text nor consistent with Congress's purposes in the 2005 Act, and the district court erred in adopting it. As our opening brief explains (at 54-56), Congress and the federal courts have commonly described pre-petition debts amassed for improper purposes as debts incurred "in contemplation of" bankruptcy. That usage is consistent with the settled connotations of that phrase in the bankruptcy context. See, e.g., Black's Law Dictionary 336 (8th ed. 2004) (explaining that the phrase "contemplation of bankruptcy" typically connotes "the thought of declaring bankruptcy * * * often coupled with action designed to thwart the distribution of assets in a bankruptcy proceeding"). Plaintiffs make no effort to come to grips with these authorities, which establish that the statute is amenable to a construction that implicates no constitutional concerns. Section 526(a)(4) merely provides a bankruptcy-specific rule of professional conduct that precludes attorneys from encouraging their clients to engage in the well-recognized practice of "loading up" on new debt on the eve of bankruptcy in order to abuse the protections of the Code.

Plaintiffs' arguments to the contrary are without merit. Their suggestion that the government "plucked the term 'abuse' from thin air" (Br. 52) is difficult to fathom: "abuse" has been an established concept in bankruptcy law for decades, see 11 U.S.C. § 707(b), and the "debt relief agency" provisions were enacted as part of the Bankruptcy Abuse Prevention and Consumer Protection Act of 2005. Likewise, plaintiffs' claim that the government's interpretation of section 526(a)(4) renders the statute "entirely superfluous" (Br. 50) in light of state-law prohibitions on unethical attorney advice only underscores the error of plaintiffs' argument. Congress undoubtedly possesses the authority to provide uniform rules of professional conduct for attorneys in the federal bankruptcy system, and section 526 adds a new federal cause of action (and federal jurisdiction) for debtors to recover damages from attorneys whose abusive advice causes them harm.

ARGUMENT

I. THE DISTRICT COURT ERRED IN DECLARING 11 U.S.C. § 528 UNCONSTITUTIONAL "AS APPLIED" TO ATTORNEYS FOR CREDITORS.

As we explained in our opening brief (at 46-50), the district court had no basis for declaring the advertising disclosure requirements in 11 U.S.C. § 528 unconstitutional "as applied" to attorneys for creditors and other non-debtor parties in bankruptcy. See JA78-79, JA91-95. Even plaintiffs do not suggest that Congress intended to sweep such attorneys within the ambit of the statute, and the most natural reading of the statutory language excludes them.

Section 528 requires "debt relief agencies" to make certain advertising disclosures. The term "debt relief agency" includes "any person" who, for a fee, "provides any bankruptcy assistance to an assisted person." 11 U.S.C. § 101(12A). An "assisted person" is "any person whose debts consist primarily of consumer debts and the value of whose nonexempt property is less than" an inflation-adjusted sum, currently $164,250. Id. § 101(3). These provisions cannot plausibly be extended to cover attorneys for creditors. As discussed in our opening brief (at 47), and as plaintiffs do not dispute, the definition of "assisted person" speaks in terms relevant only to debtors under the Bankruptcy Code. Nothing in the Code turns on whether a creditor's own debts "consist primarily of consumer debts." Nor do creditors have "nonexempt property": the very concept of "exempt" property has application only to a debtor's property in a bankruptcy proceeding. See 11 U.S.C. § 522(b) (describing the property that "an individual debtor may exempt from the property of the estate" (emphasis added)). In the face of this textual evidence, it strains credulity to suggest that Congress intended to regulate attorneys for creditors as "debt relief agencies," and the government has consistently disavowed any such interpretation.

Plaintiffs' only response is that the definition of "assisted person" does not use the word "debtor." Congress accomplished its end just as clearly, however, by defining "assisted person" as one "whose debts consist primarily of consumer debts" and whose "nonexempt property" is less than a prescribed ceiling. Id. § 101(3). That Congress did not use the term "debtor" in the definition of "assisted person," moreover, is hardly surprising. The term "debtor" is defined in the Code as a person concerning whom a petition for bankruptcy relief has already been filed. See 11 U.S.C. § 101(13). Many of the provisions concerning debt relief agencies, by contrast, pertain not only to persons already in bankruptcy, but also to persons who may be considering bankruptcy. E.g., 11 U.S.C. § 528(a) (written contract requirement).

Plaintiffs likewise fail to address other relevant statutory language that makes clear that section 528 has no application to attorneys for creditors. Plaintiffs make no reference to the written-contract provision of section 528, for example, which provides that a contract must be signed within a specified period after "the first date on which such agency provides any bankruptcy assistance services to an assisted person, but prior to such assisted person's petition under this title being filed." 11 U.S.C. § 528(a)(1) (emphasis added). Similarly, section 527 requires debt relief agencies to provide "assisted persons" with information that is relevant only to debtors, see 11 U.S.C. § 527(b), and expressly cross-references provisions that are applicable only to debtors, see, e.g., 11 U.S.C. § 527(a)(1) (instructing debt relief agencies to provide assisted persons with the "notice required under section 342(b)(1)," a provision that applies only to "individual[s]" who "commence[] * * * a case under this title"). These provisions would make little sense if Congress intended the term "assisted person" to encompass creditors, and plaintiffs make no argument to the contrary.

Nor do plaintiffs make any effort to reconcile their theory with the relevant legislative history. The House Report accompanying the 2005 Act explained that Congress enacted the "debt relief agency" provisions to "strengthen[] professionalism standards for attorneys and others who assist consumer debtors with their bankruptcy cases." House Report, at 17 (emphasis added). Plaintiffs cite no evidence in the legislative history suggesting that Congress intended to regulate attorneys for creditors under the same provisions, and we are aware of none.

For all of these reasons, the district court erred in holding that attorneys for creditors and other non-debtor parties are subject to regulation as "debt relief agencies." Even if the meaning of the statutory language were in doubt, however, fundamental canons of constitutional avoidance required the district court to reject an interpretation that is, at a minimum, not compelled by the statutory text. See, e.g., John Doe, Inc. v. Mukasey, 549 F.3d 861, 872 (2d Cir. 2008) ("It is well established that courts should resolve ambiguities in statutes in a manner that avoids substantial constitutional issues.").

In any event, even if section 528 were applicable to attorneys for creditors and other non-debtor parties, the statute would not be facially unconstitutional. Congress permitted debt relief agencies to substitute, in lieu of the two-sentence statement set forth in the statute, any "substantially similar" statement. 11 U.S.C. § 528(a)(4); id. § 528(b)(2)(B). As the Eighth Circuit has held, this flexibility is sufficient to avoid any facial constitutional defect, even if the statute applies to attorneys for creditors. See Milavetz, Gallop & Milavetz, P.A. v. United States, 541 F.3d 785, 789-92 (8th Cir. 2008), cert. granted, Nos. 08-1119 & 08-1225 (U.S. June 8, 2009). Such attorneys "can and should tailor their advertisement disclosure statements to factually represent the 'bankruptcy assistance' they provide." Ibid.

Plaintiffs resist this reasoning, urging that even a substantially similar alternative that correctly described attorneys for creditors — e.g., "We represent people in bankruptcy cases under the Bankruptcy Code" (see Gov. Br. 49 n.19) — would be unconstitutional because of erroneous "inference[s]" that might be drawn by the public. Br. 41. This objection only underscores that speculation regarding the advantages and disadvantages of various "substantially similar" statements is not a proper basis for declaring section 528 unconstitutional in a pre-enforcement, facial challenge. See Olsen v. Gonzales, 350 B.R. 906, 920 (D. Or. 2006), appeals pending, Nos. 07-35616 & 07-35762 (9th Cir.) (because the question whether a particular statement is "substantially similar" to the section 528 statutory statement "would require a case-by-case determination, a facial challenge is inappropriate"). Because the statute affords attorneys adequate flexibility to describe with accuracy the bankruptcy assistance services they provide, section 528 is facially constitutional even if (contrary to the best reading of the statutory text) it were applicable to attorneys for creditors and other non-debtor parties.

II. SECTION 526(a)(4) CONSTITUTIONALLY PROHIBITS BANKRUPTCY ATTORNEYS FROM ENCOURAGING THEIR CLIENTS TO ABUSE THE BANKRUPTCY SYSTEM.

In June 2009, after the parties filed their principal briefs in these appeals, the Supreme Court granted certiorari to resolve the circuit split over the constitutionality of 11 U.S.C. § 526(a)(4). See United States v. Milavetz, Gallop & Milavetz, P.A., S.Ct. No. 08-1225 (cert. granted June 8, 2009); compare Hersh v. United States ex rel. Mukasey, 553 F.3d 743, 752-64 (5th Cir. 2008) (upholding the statute), with Milavetz, 541 F.3d at 792-94 (8th Cir. 2008) (invalidating statute).[1] If this Court decides the question before the Supreme Court resolves the matter, it should make clear that the district court erred in interpreting section 526(a)(4) to sweep far beyond Congress's limited purpose, which was to prevent attorneys and other debt relief agencies from acting as the affirmative engines of bankruptcy abuse. See Hersh, 553 F.3d at 752-64; Milavetz, 541 F.3d at 797-801 (Colloton, J., dissenting).

[1] In addition, as we noted in our opening brief (at 50), an identical constitutional challenge to section 526(a)(4) has previously been briefed and argued to this Court. See Zelotes v. Adams, No. 07-1853 (2d Cir.) (argued Oct. 10, 2008).

1. As we established in our opening brief (at 52-53), Congress has long been aware that debtors commonly abuse the protections of the Bankruptcy Code by "loading up" with new debt on the eve of bankruptcy. See, e.g., House Report, at 15 (expressing concern that earlier legislative measures had not adequately restricted the ability of debtors to "knowingly load up with credit card purchases or recklessly obtain cash advances and then file for bankruptcy relief"); S. Rep. No. 98-65, at 9 (1983) (noting special problem posed by "'loading up' in contemplation of bankruptcy"); Report of the Commission on the Bankruptcy Laws of the United States, H.R. Doc. No. 93-137, pt. I, at 11 (July 1973) (concluding that "the most serious abuse of consumer bankruptcy is the number of instances in which individuals have purchased a sizable quantity of goods and services on credit on the eve of bankruptcy in contemplation of obtaining a discharge"). In hearings preceding the 2005 Act, moreover, Congress heard evidence that "misconduct by attorneys and other professionals" had been "consistently identified" by the U.S. Trustee Program as a source of abusive bankruptcy filings. See House Report, at 5 (citation omitted). It was against this background that Congress enacted 11 U.S.C. § 526(a)(4).

None of this is controverted. Plaintiffs do not contend that attorneys enjoy a categorical First Amendment privilege to advise their clients to subvert the bankruptcy process. Nor do they deny that Congress possesses the authority to prohibit and punish abuses of the Bankruptcy Code, including by requiring bankruptcy attorneys to certify that their clients' petitions are not an "abuse" under 11 U.S.C. § 707. See Br. 51 (citing 11 U.S.C. § 707(b)(4)(C)-(D)). Nor do plaintiffs dispute that common ethical rules governing the advice that attorneys provide to clients are consistent with the First Amendment. See, e.g., Model Rule of Professional Conduct 1.2(d) (prohibiting lawyers from "counsel[ing] a client to engage * * * in conduct that the lawyer knows is criminal or fraudulent"); Conn. R. Prof. Conduct 1.2(d) (same). Plaintiffs' contention, instead, is that section 526(a)(4) must be read not merely to prohibit advice to engage in abusive conduct, but as expansively as possible to include even lawful and ethical attorney advice that Congress had no reason to disturb.

Such arguments turn the canon of constitutional avoidance on its head. Plaintiffs are not entitled to insist upon the broadest possible interpretation of section 526(a)(4) in order to secure its invalidation. As the Supreme Court recently reiterated, "judging the constitutionality of an Act of Congress is 'the gravest and most delicate duty that [a] Court is called on to perform.'" Northwest Austin Municipal Utility District Number One v. Holder, ___ U.S. ___, 2009 WL 1738645, at *9 (U.S. June 22, 2009) (quoting Blodgett v. Holden, 275 U.S. 142, 147-148 (1927) (Holmes, J., concurring)) (construing statutory definitions to avoid constitutional questions posed by § 5 of the Voting Rights Act). Basic principles of constitutional avoidance not only authorize, but require courts to adopt an available limiting construction of statute where necessary to preserve the statute's validity. See Boos v. Barry, 485 U.S. 312, 330-31 (1988). This Court has accordingly stressed that a federal court construing a federal statute "operat[es] under a broad charge: to save the statute's constitutionality if it c[an] through a 'fairly possible' limiting construction of the statutory language." Vermont Right to Life Committee, Inc. v. Sorrell, 221 F.3d 376, 390 (2d Cir. 2000) (citing Concrete Pipe & Prods. v. Construction Laborers Pension Trust, 508 U.S. 602, 629 (1993)).

2. Plaintiffs' boundless construction of section 526(a)(4) is clearly not compelled by the terms of the statute. As we explained in our opening brief (and as plaintiffs do not dispute), Congress and the federal courts have both commonly described pre-petition debts amassed for improper purposes as debts incurred "in contemplation of" bankruptcy. See Gov. Br. 54-56. That use of the phrase reflects settled connotations in the bankruptcy context. See Black's Law Dictionary 336 (8th ed.

2004) (explaining that the phrase "contemplation of bankruptcy" typically connotes "action designed to thwart the distribution of assets in a bankruptcy proceeding"). See also, e.g., United States v. Fox, 95 U.S. 670, 672 (1877) ("To legislate for the prevention of frauds * * * when committed in contemplation of bankruptcy, would seem to be within the competency of Congress."); In re Mercer, 246 F.3d 391, 421 n.43 (5th Cir. 2001) (en banc) (describing "loading up" as the practice of "incurring card debt in contemplation of bankruptcy"); In re Charles, 334 B.R. 207, 222 (Bankr. S.D. Tex. 2005) ("It is settled law that a debtor's good faith should be questioned if the debtor makes purchases in contemplation of a bankruptcy case."); cf. 18 U.S.C. § 152(7) (prohibiting fraudulent transfer or concealment of assets "in contemplation of a case under title 11").

Thus, as the Fifth Circuit has explained, "when enacting this statute Congress's focus was on instances of bankruptcy abuse to be prevented." Hersh, 553 F.3d at 758; see also Milavetz, 541 F.3d at 799 (Colloton, J., dissenting) ("American and English authorities construing the bankruptcy laws also support the proposition that the words 'in contemplation of' may be understood to require an intent to abuse the bankruptcy laws.") (citing cases).

Plaintiffs make no effort to reconcile their arguments with these authorities. Instead, plaintiffs rely on Conrad, Rubin & Lesser v. Pender, 289 U.S. 472 (1933), in which the Court gave a broad reading to the phrase "in contemplation of" bankruptcy. Br. 48. But that case only highlights the error of plaintiffs' argument. Pender involved section 60d of the former Bankruptcy Act of 1898, which granted bankruptcy courts the authority to reexamine transfers of property made to a debtor's attorney "in contemplation of filing a petition," and to direct that any "excess" payment be returned to the estate for the benefit of creditors. See Law of July 1, 1898, ch. 541, § 60(d), 30 Stat. 544, 562, repealed by Bankruptcy Reform Act of 1978, 92 Stat. 2549. Like section 526(a)(4), section 60d was manifestly directed to preventing abusive conduct by the debtor — in that case, preferential conveyances to the debtor's own attorney in order to frustrate the distribution of assets to creditors. Indeed, in a case decided before Pender, the Supreme Court explained that Congress enacted section 60d precisely because debtors' pre-petition payments to attorneys are "'capable of abuse.'" In re Wood, 210 U.S. 246, 251 (1908) (quoting Furth v. Stahl, 205 Pa. 439 (1903)); see also id. at 258 (purpose of section 60d was to "prevent the diminution of the estate").

Plaintiffs are thus wrong to assert that Pender precludes a limiting construction of section 526(a)(4). To the contrary, Pender underscores Congress's consistent use of the phrase "in contemplation of" bankruptcy in circumstances involving abusive pre-petition conduct by debtors. Moreover, nothing in Pender suggests that the phrase "in contemplation of" bankruptcy must invariably have the same broad meaning – particularly where, as here, there is additional textual evidence that Congress intended the phrase in a narrower sense in section 526(a)(4). See generally Gov. Br. 56-58.

In particular, plaintiffs disregard the statutory context in which Congress placed the provision. Cf. Field Day, LLC v. County of Suffolk, 463 F.3d 167, 177 (2d Cir. 2006) ("In interpreting statutes, this Court reads statutory language in light of the surrounding language and framework of the statute."). As we explained in our opening brief (at 57), section 526(a)(4) is one of four subsections of section 526(a). The other three subsections indisputably provide rules of professional conduct designed to protect debtors from abusive practices by bankruptcy attorneys and other debt relief agencies. See 11 U.S.C. § 526(a)(1) (debt relief agencies must perform all promised services); id. § 526(a)(2) (prohibiting debt relief agencies from advising debtors to make false or misleading statements to obtain bankruptcy relief); id. § 526(a)(3) (prohibiting debt relief agencies from misrepresenting to debtors the services to be provided or the costs or benefits of filing for bankruptcy relief). Construed in pari materia with these provisions, it is plain that Congress "did not enact 526(a)(4) as a sweeping prohibition on good faith, lawful, and ethical advice." Hersh, 553 F.3d at 761.

3. Properly construed, section 526(a)(4) provides a bankruptcy-specific rule of professional conduct that restricts attorneys from encouraging their clients to engage in the well-recognized abusive practice of "loading up" on new debt prior to filing for bankruptcy. Understood in this manner, there is little doubt that section 526(a)(4) satisfies the First Amendment. As the Supreme Court stressed in Gentile v. State Bar of Nevada, 501 U.S. 1030 (1991), attorneys are not merely agents of their clients but also officers of the courts, and for that reason may be "subject to ethical restrictions on speech to which an ordinary citizen would not be." Id. at 1071. The Court in Gentile quoted with approval Justice Stewart's dispositive concurrence in In re Sawyer, 360 U.S. 622 (1959), in which he rejected the notion "that a lawyer can invoke the constitutional right of free speech to immunize himself from even-handed discipline for proven unethical conduct," because "[a] lawyer belongs to a profession with inherited standards of propriety and honor, which experience has shown necessary in a calling dedicated to the accomplishment of justice. * * * Obedience to ethical precepts may require abstention from what in other circumstances might be constitutionally protected speech." Id. at 646-47 (Stewart, J., concurring in judgment); see Gentile, 501 U.S. at 1071.

Section 526(a)(4) provides a bankruptcy-specific rule of conduct akin to Model Rule of Professional Conduct 1.2(d), which states that an attorney may not "counsel a client to engage, or assist a client, in conduct that the lawyer knows is criminal or fraudulent." That rule has been applied to precisely the conduct that section 526(a)(4) addresses. See Attorney Grievance Comm'n of Maryland v. Culver, 381 Md. 241, 275-76 (2004) (attorney violated Rule 1.2(d) by advising a client to obtain credit card loans with the intent that the debt be discharged in bankruptcy). Moreover, Congress itself described the "debt relief agency" provisions of the 2005 Act as "professionalism standards for attorneys." See House Report at 17 (debt relief agency provisions "strengthen[] professionalism standards for attorneys and others who assist consumer debtors with their bankruptcy cases").

Plaintiffs assert that Congress could not have intended section 526(a)(4) as an ethical rule, urging that a federal restriction on abusive attorney advice would be "entirely superfluous" in light of existing state-law ethical rules and federal criminal sanctions. Br. 50. But Congress plainly has the power to provide uniform rules of professional conduct for attorneys in the federal bankruptcy courts, even where state law already supplies the underlying norm. Cf. U.S. Const., Art. I, § 8, cl. 4. Moreover, the statute does more than merely provide such a uniform rule. Section 526 supplies a federal cause of action for aggrieved debtors to recover their "actual damages" from improper attorney advice that violates the statute (together with federal jurisdiction to adjudicate such a claim irrespective of the amount in controversy). See 11 U.S.C. § 526(c). It is, in effect, a specialized federal remedy for a form of attorney malpractice that Congress determined was of particular concern to the integrity of the bankruptcy process. The Constitution does not bar Congress from regulating legal practice in the federal courts in this manner, irrespective of the potential availability of criminal sanctions in egregious cases or post-hoc malpractice remedies in state court.[2]

4. The district court's error in this respect was highlighted by its invalidation of section 526(a)(4) in its entirety, without separately analyzing the portion of the statute that precludes an attorney from advising a client to incur additional debt to pay the attorney's own fees. See 11 U.S.C. § 526(a)(4) (prohibiting advice "to incur more debt * * * to pay an attorney or bankruptcy petition preparer fee or charge for services performed as part of preparing for or representing a debtor in a case under this title"). It was manifestly improper

[2] Plaintiffs thus fail to appreciate the significance of the fact that, as they emphasize, rules of professional conduct in every state already prohibit "advice to engage in fraudulent or improper conduct." Br. 50. These authorities do not establish, as plaintiffs believe, that section 526(a)(4) is "superfluous," but rather that a restriction on advice to engage in the abusive accumulation of new debt on the eve of bankruptcy is entirely consistent with the First Amendment. Cf. Hersh, 553 F.3d at 756 (noting that no court has questioned the constitutionality of the advice restrictions in Model Rule 1.2(d)).

for the district court to declare a federal statute unconstitutional and invalid on its face without even addressing half of the statutory provision at issue.

Plaintiffs do not suggest that the district court analyzed the second clause of section 526(a)(4), and their efforts to supply their own analysis provide no basis for invalidating the statute. Congress undoubtedly possesses the authority to prevent bankruptcy attorneys from abusing their positions as officers of the court and "trusted agents of their clients," Ohralik v. Ohio State Bar Ass'n, 436 U.S. 447, 460 (1978), by seeking preferential treatment for themselves in the bankruptcy process. An attorney who encourages a debtor to incur new (and almost certainly unsecured) debt in order to pay the attorney's own fees is effectively urging the debtor to exploit the bankruptcy system to shift the cost of the lawyer's services onto unsuspecting creditors. Nothing in the First Amendment prevents Congress from forbidding such deceptive practices by members of the bankruptcy bar. See Gentile, 501 U.S. at 1071.[3]

[3] Plaintiffs argue that chapter 13 debtors often incur a debt to their attorneys as part of chapter 13 payment plans. Br. 56. Yet nothing in the 2005 Act or its legislative history indicates that, by prohibiting attorneys from advising debtors to incur "more debt * * * to pay an attorney," Congress meant to preclude payment arrangements with the attorney herself. Cf. 11 U.S.C. § 101(12A)(C) (excluding the debtor's own creditors from regulation as "debt relief agencies"). The attorneys-fee provisions of section 526(a)(4), like the other paragraphs of section 526(a), are concerned with abusive conduct – e.g., shifting the cost of the lawyer's services onto unsuspecting third-party creditors (such as by encouraging debtors to pay

Plaintiffs also contend that the attorney-fee provisions of section 526(a)(4) are unconstitutional because the statute inhibits the ability of debtors to hire legal representation, thereby stifling lawful advocacy. Br. 56-57. But section 526(a)(4) does not prohibit advice to hire a bankruptcy attorney. Rather, it prohibits attorneys from encouraging debtors to incur new debt — debt that will be discharged in bankruptcy — in order to pay the attorney's own fees, at the expense of other creditors. Nor, in any event, do restrictions on the ability of debtors to compensate their attorneys violate the Constitution. See generally Lamie v. U.S. Trustee, 540 U.S. 526 (2004) (discussing restrictions on compensation for debtors' attorneys under the Bankruptcy Code); cf. United States v. Kras, 409 U.S. 434, 446 (1973) ("There is no constitutional right to obtain a discharge of one's debts in bankruptcy.").

their attorneys' fees by credit card). Where the attorney herself is the creditor, there is no risk of fraud or abuse because it is only the attorney who stands to lose if the debt is not repaid.

CONCLUSION

For the foregoing reasons, the district court's judgment should be reversed to the extent it holds that 11 U.S.C. § 526(a)(4) and 11 U.S.C. §§ 528(a)(3)-(4) and (b) violate the Constitution. In all other respects, the judgment should be affirmed.

UNITED STATES TRUSTEE,

CF&I FABRICATORS,

On Appeal From The United States District Court
For The District Of Utah

JURISDICTION

The bankruptcy court had subject matter jurisdiction pursuant to 28 U.S.C. § 157. The district court had jurisdiction to hear the United States Trustee's appeal pursuant to 28 U.S.C. § 158(a).

Appellee agrees with appellants that this Court has appellate jurisdiction. Although, technically, the case was remanded for further proceedings (district court slip op., at 2), as a practical matter, there is nothing to do on remand but implement the legal holding of the district court. Because no significant future proceedings are contemplated on the quarterly fee issue, the district court's remand order should be regarded as final for purposes of 28 U.S.C. § 158(d). In re Buckner, 66

F.3d 263, 264 (9th Cir. 1995); In re Lederman Enterprises, Inc., 997 F.2d 1321, 1323 (10th Cir. 1993).

Alternatively, this Court has appellate jurisdiction under the "collateral order" doctrine. Cf., Cohen v. Beneficial Industrial Loan Corp., 337 U.S. 541 (1949).

STATEMENT OF THE QUESTIONS PRESENTED FOR REVIEW

In this Chapter 11 bankruptcy case, a reorganization plan was confirmed on February 12, 1993. By operation of 28 U.S.C. § 1930(a)(6) in effect at that time, quarterly fees ceased following confirmation. On January 26, 1996, § 1930(a)(6) was amended, deleting the reference to plan confirmation as an event effecting fees. The questions presented are:

1. Whether Congress intended the quarterly fees set forth in 28 U.S.C. § 1930(a)(6) to be collected in ongoing cases where a reorganization plan was confirmed prior to the amendment of the statute on January 26, 1996.

2. Whether the imposition of the fees is unconstitutional under the due process clause or separation of powers doctrine.

STATEMENT OF THE CASE

Nature of the Case and Course of Proceedings:

This is a dispute over the imposition of quarterly fees in certain Chapter 11 (reorganization) bankruptcy cases.

Based upon an amendment to the language of the statutory provision for quarterly fees, 28 U.S.C. 1930(a), as amended Pub. L. 104-99, § 211, 110 Stat. 26, 37-38 (January 26, 1996), the United States Trustee charged quarterly fees in all Chapter 11 cases pending subsequent to that date. Appellants essentially seek to "grandfather" the fee-free status of certain pending Chapter 11 cases; they contend that the fees should not be imposed in cases where a reorganization plan had been confirmed prior to the amendment date.

The bankruptcy court (Hon. Judith A. Boulden) agreed with the appellants. However, in a decision dated April 24, 1997, the district court (Hon. Tena Campbell) reversed, upholding the government's position on the applicability of the fees and the constitutionality of that application. Debtors, seeking to avoid the imposition of the quarterly fees, appeal from that determination.

Statement of Facts:

1. The Chapter 11 (reorganization) bankruptcy proceedings from which this fee dispute arises began in 1990 and a reorganization plan was approved on February 12, 1993. At that time, 28 U.S.C. § 1930(a)(6) provided, in pertinent part (emphasis added):

> In addition to the filing fee paid to the clerk, a quarterly fee shall be paid to the United States trustee, for deposit in the Treasury, in each case under chapter 11 of title 11 for each quarter (including an fraction thereof) until a plan is confirmed or the case is converted or dismissed, whichever occurs first.

Thus, since the reorganization plan in this case was confirmed by the bankruptcy court on February 12, 1993, bankruptcy fees were not chargeable for the next quarter, beginning April 1, 1993.

On January 26, 1996, however, Congress amended § 1930(a)(6), deleting the words "until a plan is confirmed or." Pub. L. 104-99, § 211, 110 Stat. 26, 37-38 (1996). The Conference Report contains this description of the amendment:

> The conference agreement includes section 111 as proposed in the House and Senate bills, which extends the quarterly fee payments for debtors under Chapter 11 of the Bankruptcy Code to include the period from which a reorganization plan is confirmed by the Bankruptcy Court until the case is converted or dismissed. The conferees intend that this fee will apply to both pending and new cases.

H.R. Conf. Rep. 104-378 at 101 (Dec. 1, 1995).[1]

2. Debtors paid the fees but, on June 10, 1996, debtors moved for an order directing the United States Trustee to refund them. The bankruptcy court granted the motion on September 5, 1996.

In the bankruptcy court's perspective, in assessing the fees, the United States Trustee was seeking a modification of the previously-confirmed reorganization plan. "The UST essentially asserts claims arising after the expiration of all applicable bar dates, against funds already allocated to creditors with allowed claims." Bankr. Ct. slip op., at 8. The bankruptcy court reasoned that only the proponent of a reorganization plan, or the reorganized debtor, may seek to modify it, and that party may do so only before substantial consummation, 11 U.S.C. § 1127(b).

[1] The fees were based upon the level of disbursements made during the quarter. Nine of the debtors' estates were assessed $250, the minimum fee for a docket with disbursements of less than $15,000. A tenth estate was charged $3,750, indicating quarterly disbursements of between $300,000 and $1 million. 28 U.S.C. 1930(a)(6).

The United States Trustee was neither a plan proponent nor a debtor, and the reorganization plan had been substantially consummated. Accordingly, the bankruptcy court's characterization of the fees as proposed modifications to the plan precluded their application to these cases. Id., at 8-10. The bankruptcy court also stated that Congress did not, with sufficient clarity, show an intent to have the fees applied "retroactively." Id., at 18-26.

3. Shortly after the bankruptcy court decision (and, possibly, because of it), on September 30, 1996, Congress enacted a further clarification of 28 U.S.C. § 1930(a)(6). In § 109(d) of Title I of Pub. L. 104-208, Congress prescribed:

> Section 101(a) of Public Law 104-91, as amended by section 211 of Public Law 104-99, is further amended by inserting: "Provided further, That, notwithstanding any other provision of law, the fees under 28 U.S.C. 1930(a)(6) shall accrue and be payable from and after January 27, 1996, in all cases (including, without limitation, any cases pending as of that date), regardless of confirmation status of their plans" ***.

See, 110 Stat. 3009, 3009-19; 28 U.S.C. 1930 note.

4. In a decision dated April 24, 1997, the district court reversed the bankruptcy court decision. As to the intended reach of the amendment to § 1930(a)(6), the district court held that "[t]he clarifying amendment leaves no doubt, if there was any before, that Congress intended that § 1930(a)(6) apply to all pending Chapter 11 cases, including those with plans confirmed prior to the effective date of the statute." District court slip op., at 4.

The district court rejected the contention that the United States Trustee was seeking an unlawful, post-confirmation plan modification: "The fees that debtors must pay are 'administrative expense[s] attendant to an open case.' In re McLean Square Associates, 201 B.R. 436, 441 (Bankr. E.D. Va. 1996) ." District court slip op., at 6. The district court also found no constitutional infirmity, holding appellants' taking and separation of powers arguments to be without merit. Id., at 6-7.

SUMMARY OF THE ARGUMENT

1. That Congress intended coverage of the amendment to § 1930(a)(6) to include the instant bankruptcy cases cannot be seriously debated. In plain terms, § 1930(a)(6) requires the payment of quarterly fees until conversion or dismissal; the confirmation of a plan or reorganization no longer provides relief from the fee obligations. Appellants' alternative interpretation -- that the fees are not owed if there is a successful Chapter 11 reorganization -- is not tenable for several reasons. It ignores the requirement in § 1930(a)(6) that the fees must be collected on an ongoing basis. Appellants' interpretation would mean that no fees could be collected until a reorganization fails, a truly absurd result. It is also contrary to the legislative history, which confirms that Congress "expect[ed] that these fees will apply to all pending Chapter 11 cases with confirmed reorganization plans." H.R. Conf. Rep. 104-

378, 104th Cong., 1st Sess. (December 4, 1995); 141 Cong. Rec. H13894 (December 4, 1995) (emphasis added).

2. The application of the fees to Chapter 11 cases after a plan is confirmed does not create any constitutional problem.

a. At issue is a generally-applicable user fee applied across-the-board in bankruptcy cases. Including those cases in which a plan had already been confirmed does not create a taking. The impact here, estimated at more than $100,000, is a tiny fraction of the total disbursements and there is no severe disruption to commercial expectations. The statute does not create an unconstitutional taking of appellants' property. See, Ruckelshaus v. Monsanto Co., 467 U.S. 986, 1005 (1984); In re Prines, 867 F.2d 478, 485 (8th Cir.1989).

b. Appellants' contention that Congress has violated separation of powers principles is also wide of the mark. Plaut v. Spendthrift Farm, Inc., 514 U.S. 211 (1995), is easily distinguished since, in this case, the putative judgment (i.e., the confirmed plan) was on appeal and not final. This, alone, gave Congress free rein. See, 514 U.S. at 226-27. Moreover, the plan in this case expressly gave the bankruptcy court continuing authority to allow postconfirmation fee claims. ¶ 86; JA 203-04. Finally, and in any event, the Supreme Court's decision in Holywell v. Smith, 503 U.S. 47, 58-59 (1992), makes it clear that the imposition of fees on appellants' postconfirmation activities cannot be said to conflict with either the reorganization plan involved in this appeal or the Bankruptcy Code.

3. Appellants' contentions that the fees cause administrative difficulties and/or inconsistencies with other Bankruptcy Code provisions are legal non sequiturs. These assertions are unproven and, in our view, exaggerated. But, if there is, truly, an unavoidable conflict created by the amendment of § 1930(a)(6), the fees must be collected. Congress said "[n]otwithstanding any other law ," and previous, inconsistent provisions were modified to the extent necessary to give effect to that directive.

STANDARD OF REVIEW

This appeal raises questions of law to be addressed by this Court on a de novo basis.

ARGUMENT

I. CONGRESS'S INTENT TO HAVE THE FEES APPLY TO THE BANKRUPTCY DOCKETS INVOLVED IN THIS APPEAL IS UNMISTAKABLE.

A. THE APPELLANTS' PROPOSED INTERPRETATION IS NOT PLAUSIBLE.

Toward the end of the Argument section of the appellants' initial brief (at 36-37), appellants somewhat tepidly contend that the language of 28 U.S.C. § 1930(a)(6), as amended, does not require that the quarterly fees be applied to the instant bankruptcy dockets, where a reorganization plan was confirmed prior to the statute's amendment in 1996. We address this statutory coverage contention first because, if the fees do not apply as a matter of statutory construction, then this Court will not need to reach appellants' constitutional arguments.

Appellants urge that the fee payments are required only until a Chapter 11 case is "converted or dismissed" and, since not all Chapter 11 bankruptcy cases will end in a conversion or dismissal, appellants argue that,

> [T]he current language of § 1930(a)(6) is not clear and can be interpreted as meaning that Congress intended that no quarterly fees be paid when a case is closed without having been converted or dismissed once a chapter 11 plan has been confirmed.

Appellants' initial brief, at 36, citing _In re Gryphon at the Stone Mansion, Inc._, 204 B.R. 460, 468 (Bankr. W.D. Pa. 1997), appeal pending W.D. Pa No. 97-345.

Appellants' interpretation violates fundamental principals of statutory construction.

First, it erroneously focuses upon a few words in insolation and ignores "the specific context in which that language is used, and the broader context of the statute as a whole." _Robinson v. Shell Oil Co._, 117 S. Ct. 843, 846 (1997). See, also, _United States National Bank of Oregon, Petitioner v. Independent Insurance Agents of America, Inc._, 508 U.S. 439, 454 (1993).

Looking to other words in § 1930(a)(6), it can be seen that the statute requires, by its unambiguous language, quarterly payments until something happens -- conversion or dismissal -- in "each case." With respect to the Chapter 11 bankruptcy cases at bar, none was converted or dismissed during the quarter for which the fees were charged. Accordingly, "The fee [was] payable on the last day of the calendar month following the calendar quarter for which the fee is owed." 28 U.S.C. § 1930(a)(6). Because the statute mandates ongoing fees, it is not plausible to read from this language that Congress "intended that no quarterly fees be paid when a case is closed without having been converted or dismissed once a chapter 11 plan has been confirmed." (Appellant's initial brief, at 36).

Second, appellants' construction would create totally absurd results. Unless and until a conversion or dismissal occurs, it cannot be known how a given Chapter 11 case will ultimately be resolved. Under appellants' construction, the fees would never be collectable while a Chapter 11 case is pending. Indeed, under such a construction, the only time fees would be collectible would be in unsuccessful Chapter 11 cases, in which cases there would not likely be any funds from which the fees could be paid. Such an improbable regime could not have been intended and, even if it were an arguable, alternative interpretation of the words in § 1930(a)(6), appellants' approach must be rejected. "Where the literal reading of a statutory term would 'compel an odd result,' we must search for other evidence of congressional intent to lend the term its proper scope." Public Citizen v. Department of Justice, 491 U.S. 440, 454 (1989), quoting Green v. Bock Laundry Machine Co., 490 U.S. 504, 509 (1989). See, also, Holy Trinity Church v. United States, 143 U.S. 457, 459 (1892).

These obviously unintended results are easily avoided by reading the statute in a natural way: When a confirmed plan is successfully performed -- as hopefully will be the case here -- the case will be closed. No fees will be assessed where there is no open docket in which to assess the fees. It was, thus, not necessary for Congress, after deleting the words "a plan is confirmed or" to expressly add the possibility of successful closure to the events that would terminate the liability for additional fees. Section 1930(a)(6) may not be a textbook example of elegant legislative drafting, but its meaning is quite clear in the context in which it operates.

Third, appellant's proposed interpretation also ignores the "history of evolving congressional regulation in this area." Dunn v. Commodity Futures Trading Comm'n, 117 S. Ct. 913, 918 (1997). It would not be "faithful to the contemporary legal context in which the [statute] was drafted." Id., at 920 (internal quotation marks omitted).

The intent of Congress was to expand the fee scheme for Chapter 11 cases so that all pending cases were charged, not just those awaiting plan confirmation.

> The legislative history of the January amendment clearly establishes congressional intent that the fee amendment apply to all pending Chapter 11 cases. The initial House Report of the Committee on Appropriations recommended "an extension of the quarterly fee payments under Chapter 11 to include the period after a reorganization plan has been confirmed by the bankruptcy court until the case has been dismissed (i.e., the post-confirmation period)." H. R. Rep. No. 104-196, 104th Cong., 1st Sess., at 16 (1995). The Senate Committee on Appropriations made a similar recommendation. See S. Rep. No. 104-139, 104th Cong., 1st Sess., at 16 (1995). Also, the Joint Explanatory Statement of the Committee of Conference comments that "... the conferees ... expect that these fees will apply to all pending Chapter 11 cases with confirmed reorganization plans." 141 CONG. REC. H13894. "The conferees intend that this fee will apply to both pending and new cases." 141 CONG. REC. H13899.

B. APPELLANTS' RETROACTIVITY ARGUMENT IS WITHOUT MERIT.

1. The Statute Doe Not Operate Retroactively.

Appellants argue that the amendments to § 1930(a)(6) should not be applied in this case in order to avoid retroactivity. Appellants correctly state that there is a presumption against retroactive legislation, "[a]bsent plain language in a statute or clear legislative intent." Appellants' initial brief, at 37, citing Landgraf v. USI Film Products, 511 U.S. 244 (1994). Appellants, however, are incorrect in their application of this principle to this case. The collection of the fees in this and other Chapter 11 cases with confirmed plans cannot be properly characterized as retroactive legislation.

To determine whether a statute operates "retroactively" under Landgraf, one must examine "whether the new provision attaches new legal consequences to events completed before its enactment." 511 U.S. at 270. A statute does not operate retroactively "merely because it is applied in a case arising from conduct antedating the statute's enactment, or upsets

[2] The amendment to § 1930(a) is part of a broader, ongoing trend in federal legislation to make the costs of government more directly borne by the persons utilizing the particular government service. Cf., Skinner v. Mid-America Pipeline Co., 490 U.S. 212 (1989). As this court recognized in Gallegos v. Lyng, 891 F.2d 788, 798 (10th Cir. 1989), it is incongruous to construe a revenue-enhancing measure to cause a reduction in revenues.

expectations based in prior law." Id. at 269 (citation omitted). As the court in McAndrews v. Fleet Bank of Massachusetts, 989 F.2d 13, 16 (1st Cir. 1993), put it:

> [A] statute may modify the legal effect of a present status or alter a preexisting relationship without running up against the retroactivity hurdle. The key lies in how the law interacts with the facts. So long as the neotonic law determines status solely for the purposes of future matters, its application is deemed prospective.

Under the amendments to § 1930(a)(6), the statute changes fees only for the post-January 27, 1996 quarters in which a bankruptcy case is open; it is not retroactively applied to quarters prior to the enactment of the amendments.

> Contrary to Debtors' arguments, the amendment to § 1930(a)(6) does not operate retroactively by imposing a quarterly fee on debtors with confirmed plans. The amendment does not provide for collection of fees from the date the plan was confirmed until entry of a final decree, and the U.S. Trustee does not seek to impose such fees in the present case. The amendment only triggers prospective assessment of fees from the amendment's effective date until entry of the final decree. See [In re Foxcroft Square Co., 198 B.R. 99, 104 (Bankr. E.D. Penn.1996); In re Upton Printing, 197 B.R. 616, 620 (Bankr. E.D. La.1996); In re Central Florida Electric, Inc., 197 B.R. 380, 381 (Bankr. M.D. Fla.1996).] This limitation is now expressly stated in the September 1996 amendment to § 1930(a)(6).

In re Richardson Service Corporation, 210 B.R. at 334.

2. Characterizing The Statute As "Retroactive" Would Not Change The Results In This Case.

Moreover, even if the application of these fees to an ongoing Chapter 11 case whose reorganization plan was confirmed prior to January 26, 1996 could be properly characterized as having some retroactive nature, that would not change the result in this case. Retroactivity is permissible so long as it is clearly intended and rationally based. Landgraf v. USI Film Products, 511 U.S. 244, 280-81, 286 (1994); U.S. v. Carlton, 512 U.S. 26-28 (1994). The intent of Congress to have the fees apply in cases such as the one at bar cannot be seriously debated.

>  Equally clear is that the amendment is supported by a rational basis: the amendment was enacted to collect additional revenues to support the self-funded administration of bankruptcy cases. H. R. Rep. No. 104-196, at 4; Upton Printing, 197 B.R. at 620; see also, In re Prines, 867 F.2d 478, 485 (8th Cir. 1989) (U.S. Trustee Program is meant to be self-funded and to be paid for by the users of the bankruptcy system).

In re Richardson Service Corporation, 210 B.R. at 334.

II. THE ASSESSMENT OF THE FEES IN THESE CASES IS NOT UNCONSTITUTIONAL.

As previously shown, appellants' proffered interpretation of the statute to avoid the fees in controversy, is not a "fairly possible" one. Cf., Arizonans for Official English v. Arizona, 117 S. Ct. 1055, 1074 (1997). See, also, Reno v. American Civil Liberties Union, 117 S. Ct. 2329, 2350 (1997); Virginia v. American Booksellers Assn., Inc., 484 U.S. 383, 397 (1988), Ashwander v. Tennessee Valley Authority, 297 U.S. 288, 348 (1936) (Brandeis, J., concurring). Accordingly, unless the imposition of the fees is held to be unconstitutional, Congress's intent must be honored.

A. CONGRESS'S IMPOSITION OF FEES ON PENDING CHAPTER 11 CASES, INCLUDING THOSE WHERE REORGANIZATION PLANS HAVE BEEN CONFIRMED, IS NOT AN UNCONSTITUTIONAL TAKING.

Appellants point to no case precedent that would indicate that the imposition of new or increased administrative fees to a pending bankruptcy docket would be regarded as a taking. Appellants invoke (initial brief, at 37) the general considerations taken into account by the courts in taking controversies, as summarized in Ruckelshaus v. Monsanto Co., 467 U.S. 986, 1005 (1984). These include "the character of the governmental action, its economic impact, and its interference with reasonable investment-backed expectations." 467 U.S. at 1005. Analysis of § 1930(a)(6), as amended, under these factors, shows that no taking has occurred in this case.

The character of the governmental action here is the expansion of a generally-applicable user fee, a type of revenue-enhancing measure that has not been historically equated with the condemnation-type governmental actions that typify public takings. The economic impact of the fees is relatively minor. Appellants predict (initial brief, at 39) a total cost of at least $100,000 in additional fees not contemplated at the time the reorganization plan was approved. This is but a small fraction of the disbursements involved. There is no record evidence cited to show that approval of the plan was based upon an expectation that new fees would not be applied before the cases were closed. Indeed, any such expectation would not have been a "reasonable" one; and the "interference" here — similar to a change in the Tax Code or and increase in postal rates — is so indirect and modest it is inconceivable that it should rise to the level of a "taking."

The invalidation of the fees sought by appellants cannot be reconciled with In re Prines, 867 F.2d 478, 485 (8th Cir. 1989), which is probably the most analogous appellate application of the Ruckelshaus v. Monsanto Co. factors to the case at bar. The debtors in Prines objected to the application of the fees in § 1930(a)(6) that were not in effect at the time they filed their bankruptcy petition. The Eighth Circuit rejected the notion that the debtors' expectations regarding Congressional action on fees in pending cases created property interests that could be "taken" for Fifth Amendment purposes. Although the taking argument presented in Prines was essentially identical to that presented here, and the district court below cited Prines in its decision, appellants fail to address it.

B. THE IMPOSITION OF FEES AT ISSUE HERE IS NOT AN IMPERMISSIBLE REOPENING BY CONGRESS OF A FINAL JUDGMENT.

In Plaut v. Spendthrift Farm, Inc., 514 U.S. 211 (1995), the Court considered the constitutional validity of an amendment to the Securities and Exchange Act of 1934 that reopened final, unappealed dismissal judgments. Such a measure, the Court held, impermissibly trenched upon the power of the Judicial Branch to decide cases or controversies. Contrary to appellants' argument, that principle is not implicated by Congress's imposition quarterly fees by amending § 1930(a)(6).

In the first place, when Congress amended § 1930(a)(6) on January 26, 1996, appellate proceedings over the confirmed plan in the instant case were still pending. See, United States v. Reorganized CF & I Fabricators of Utah, Inc., 116 S.Ct. 2106

(June 20, 1996). Because the confirmation order, itself, was on appeal (and therefor not final) when the amendment took effect, whatever problems Plaut might present in other cases with pre-amendment confirmed plans, it has no bearing here whatsoever. See, 514 U.S. at 226-27.

Moreover, the confirmed reorganization plan in this case provided ample space for allowing fees imposed by Congress after confirmation. Under the plan, the bankruptcy court retained jurisdiction -- > to enter any orders  without limitation  (a) to allow, disallow,  or determine any Claim, including Fee Claims , (b) to hear and determine all Claims  commenced before or after the confirmation date , and (l) to enter a final decree closing the Cases and making such administrative final provisions for the Cases as may be appropriate.

Plan of Reorganization dated December 1, 1992, ¶ 86; JA 203-04. Thus, the confirmed plan, by its own terms, is not a final decree that would bar accommodation of increased quarterly fees.

In this regard, the new fee is more appropriately viewed as a postconfirmation statutory fee, permissible under the terms of the plan. It is permissible, moreover, without regard to whether it was anticipated in the plan, and without regard to whether or not the United States Trustee can fairly be regarded "just as any other creditor."[3] [3] Appellants' initial brief, at 32. In our view, appellants seriously distort the role and interest of the United States Trustee in a Chapter 11 proceeding. See, id., at 16-19. The interest of appellee is administrative, not financial. See, 28 U.S.C. 586; In re Clark, 927 F.2d 793, 795 (4th Cir. 1991).

The argument that the fee is inconsistent with the plan (appellants' brief at 32-36) is, in any event, foreclosed by Holywell Corp. v. Smith, 503 U.S. 47, 58-59 (1992). In Holywell, the confirmed plan placed all of the debtor’s property in a trust and appointed a trustee to liquidate the trust assets and distribute the same to creditors of the debtors’ estates; the plan made no provision for the payment of post-confirmation taxes by the trustee or the filing of tax returns. The plan was confirmed by the Court, with no objection from the United States. When the IRS attempted to collect capital gains taxes, the trustee argued, inter alia, that the terms of the confirmed plan, which did not provide for the filing of tax returns or the payment of taxes post-confirmation, were binding on the United States and precluded the imposition of the taxes. 503 U.S. at 50-52.

The Supreme Court flatly rejected the trustee’s argument. The Court noted that the liability to pay the taxes did not accrue until the time for filing the returns, which was after the plan was confirmed in that case. The Court relied on the plain language of section 1141(a) of the Bankruptcy Code, which specifies that the plan is binding on the pre-confirmation claims of “creditors,” and section 101(10) of the Bankruptcy Code, which specifies that a “creditor” is an entity holding various pre-confirmation claims. The Court concluded that the plan could not bind the United States, or any other party, with respect to postpetition claims.

The post-confirmation fees at issue in the present case are no different than the post-confirmation taxes sought by the United States in Holywell. In each case, the liability did not accrue until events occurred post-confirmation.[4]

III. THE ASSESSMENT OF THE FEES IS NOT INCONSISTENT WITH THE OVERALL SCHEME OF BANKRUPTCY ADMINISTRATION.

Appellants argue that the postconfirmation imposition of the quarterly fee will create insurmountable difficulties in the administration of the bankruptcy process. This exposition is extensive, occupying the bulk of the appellants' Argument (initial brief, at 15-28). However, whatever administrative difficulties the new fees present, these matters are not a valid legal objection to the imposition of the fees.

Congress required that fees be imposed, to these bankruptcy cases, "notwithstanding any other provision of law ." 110 Stat. 3009, 3009-19; 28 U.S.C. 1930 note (emphasis added). This phrase is deliberately used by legislators when writing in complex statutory territory to insure that a particular provision will prevail in any conflict with another provision. Cf., McCarty v. McCarty, 453 U.S. 210, 241 (1981).

[4] Under Holywell, the government’s participation in a Chapter 11 proceeding cannot be realistically be characterized as a “contract” between the government and the other parties regarding the future course of legislation on taxes or fees. United States v. Winstar, 518 U.S. ___, 116 S.Ct. 2432 (1996), invoked by appellants (initial brief 32-36), has no bearing upon the instant controversy.

room, the most basic of stautory construction canons would still require the fees to be collected. Assuming arguendo that the new fees are incompatible with some pre-existing Bankruptcy Code provisions, it would not follow, as appellants presume, that the fees would not be collectable. Rather, the bankruptcy process would be adjusted to accommodate the new fees. As a general rule of statutory construction, the more specific fee provision would control the general bankruptcy provisions invoked by appellants. See, e.g., Radzanower v. Touche Ross & Co., 426 U.S. 148, 153 (1976); Morton v. Mancari, 417 U.S. 535, 550-551 (1974). And, the later-enacted amendment to § 1930(a)(6) statute would control the pre-enacted Bankruptcy Code provisions. See, e.g., Radzanower v. Touche Ross & Co., 426 U.S. at 154.

In sum, the fees trump any putative inconsistency with the preamendment bankruptcy laws. However "bad" one might think this policy is, it is not the role of the federal courts to re-write policy falling within Congress's constitutional purview. TVA v. Hill, 437 U.S. 153 (1978).

While legal irrelevancy is a complete answer to the appellants' incompatibility arguments, we wish to make clear our disagreement with the appellants' premise. The appellants' perspective is incorrect. In a large, lengthy reorganization process, increased expenses and other postconfirmation administrative obligations are not only normal, they are to be expected. A reorganized debtor is not immune from fee increases changed by law any more than it would be immune from increases in rent, attorneys fees, electricity, taxes or postal rates. Appellants' objection that the collection of the fees will "create a mess" (initial brief, at 24) is overstated, as the payment of fees in many other cases shows.

It is the duty of the federal courts to endeavor to accommodate both laws to the maximum extent possible; implied repeals are heavily disfavored in the law. See, e.g., Crawford Fitting Co. v. J.T. Gibbons, Inc., 482 U.S. 437, 444-45 (1987); Owen v. Magaw, 122 F.3d 1350 (10th cir. 1997); Crow Tribe v. Repsis, 73 F.3d 982, 989 (10th Cir. 1995), cert. denied 116 U.S. 1851 (1996). Appellants have not shown that Chapter 11 proceedings, including those whose reorganization plans had been confirmed before January 26, 1996, cannot accommodate the new fees.

Speculative assertions regarding funding problems should await the development of some actual controversy. But, again, if the imposition of the new fee prevents some reorganized debtor from successfully emerging from a Chapter 11 proceeding, that would not provide a basis for striking the fee.[5]

CONCLUSION

The decision of the district court should be affirmed.

[5] Appellants' argument that the bankruptcy court lacked jurisdiction to enforce payment of the fees (initial brief at 22-23) is rebutted by the text of the reorganization plan itself, supra. Moreover, the bankruptcy court always retains jurisdiction to adjudicate postconfirmation disputes "related to" the bankruptcy case. 28 U.S.C. § 1334(b).

UNITED STATES TRUSTEE'S OBJECTION TO COUNTRYWIDE HOME LOANS, INC.'S MOTION FOR LEAVE TO APPEAL INTERLOCUTORY ORDER

Pursuant to 28 U.S.C. 158(a) and Fed. R. Bankr. P. 8001 and 8003, the United States Trustee objects to the motion ("Motion") [D.E. #88] filed by Countrywide Home Loans, Inc. ("Countrywide") for leave to appeal the bankruptcy court's December 10, 2007 order ("Order") [D.E. #86] overruling, in part, Countrywide's objection ("Objection") [D.E. #62] to the United States Trustee's second amended notice of 2004 examination ("Notice") [D.E. #55], because:

- the Order is interlocutory;
- the Order is not immediately reviewable under any exception to the final order doctrine; and, accordingly,
- the United States District Court lacks subject matter jurisdiction to consider the merits of Countrywide's appeal.

In support, the United States Trustee states:

FACTS

1. On October 13, 2005, William Chadwick and Joyce Chadwick (the "Debtors") filed a voluntary petition for relief under chapter 13 of the Bankruptcy Code.

2. On January 23, 2006, creditor Countrywide Home Loans, Inc. ("Countrywide") appeared in this case by filing its Request for Service of Notices [D.E. #12].

3. On or about February 9, 2006, Countrywide caused a proof of claim – Claim #9 (the "Proof of Claim") to be filed with this court in this case. In the Proof of Claim, Countrywide represented that it had a secured claim against the Debtors in the amount of $100,733.88. Countrywide further represented that $2,396.29 was the amount of an arrearage ("Arrearage") included in the secured claim at the time the case was filed. Despite this assertion, no breakdown of the Arrearage was filed with the Proof of Claim. Contrary to Fed.R.Bankr.P. 3001(d), the Proof of Claim was also not accompanied by evidence that Countrywide's security interest had been perfected.

4. On March 6, 2006, the Debtors filed an objection to Countrywide's Proof of Claim [D.E. #18] invoking a 30-day negative notice period for responding to the Objection to Claim.

5. In their objection to claim, the Debtors' asserted that all "prepetition mortgage payments" had been paid. The Debtors' also requested that the Arrearage component of the claim be stricken.

6. Countrywide did not file a response to the Debtor's objection. Accordingly, on April 17, 2006 - after the time to respond to the objection lapsed, the Debtors filed a Certificate of No Response or Settlement and Request for Entry of Order [D.E. #27] relating to the objection. Subsequently, on April 18, 2006, the Court entered its Order Sustaining Objection to Claim [D.E. #31] (the "Order Sustaining the Objection to Claim.").

7. Pursuant to the Order Sustaining the Objection to the Claim, the Arrearage contained in Countrywide's Proof of Claim was stricken.

8. The UST subsequently opened an inquiry into this matter in an effort to determine whether Countrywide's conduct in this particular case deviated from the standards established by the bankruptcy code and/or whether its particular actions threatened an abuse of the bankruptcy system or its procedures. 11 U.S.C. § 307; 28 U.S.C. § 586; In re: A-1 Trash Pickup, Inc., 802 F.2d 774, 775 (4th Cir. 1996) (Congress intended the U.S. Trustee to be an enforcer of bankruptcy laws).

9. In furtherance of its inquiry into this matter, the UST filed and served Countrywide with a Second Amended Notice of Examination under Fed. R. Bankr. P. 2004 and Service of Subpoena (Duces Tecum) [D.E. #55] (the "Notice") on October 24, 2007. Through this examination, the UST intends to ascertain, inter alia:

A. The factual and legal basis for Countrywide's representation that the Debtors owed a $2,396.29 mortgage arrearage at the time the proof of claim was filed;

B. Why Countrywide failed to appear to litigate their claim; and

C. If the Proof of Claim filed with this Court contained factual misrepresentations, what actions, if any were taken to correct the proof of claim.

10. On November 2, 2007, Countrywide filed Countrywide Home Loans, Inc.'s Objections to Notice of Examination under Fed. R. Bankr. P. 2004 and Subpoena (Duces Tecum) [D.E. # 55] (the "Objection"), and on November 28, 2007, Countrywide filed a Memorandum of Law in Support of the Objection [D.E. 73]. On November 29, 2007, the UST filed its Response to the Objection of Countrywide to the Notice of Examination under Fed. R. Bankr. P. 2004 and Subpoena (Duces Tecum) [D.E. # 76].

11. On December 3, 2007 the court heard oral argument on this matter. Countrywide's counsel asserted that the proof of claim was not truly at issue in this case, stating that "[a]t the time that the case was filed, Mr. and Mrs. Chadwick did indeed owe the amount set forth in the proof of claim." See Transcript [D.E. # 81] (the "Transcript"), at 7, lines 2 - 4. In support of this assertion, Countrywide's counsel made the following representation:

> Due to the intervention of the bankruptcy amendments, subsequent to that date, the date of their filing, and the date that we were notified that they had filed, they made up their past-due payments post-petition, but at the time the case was filed, the proof of claim would have correctly reflected the amount the Chadwick's owed.

Transcript at 7, lines 4 - 9.

12. This explanation creates at least two possible scenarios: (1) either the proof of claim was accurate and Countrywide violated the automatic stay by accepting post-petition payments and applying them to a pre-petition debt; or (2) the proposed chapter 13 plan and the Debtors' schedules were accurate - ergo, the proof of claim was inaccurate. Under either scenario, the documents and representations that have been filed and/or made to this court by Countrywide raise issues regarding the administration of this case, and constitute "cause" to support an examination under Fed.R.Bankr.P 2004.

13. Given the above, the bankruptcy court was correct when it overruled Countrywide's Objection. See Transcript at 18. Specifically, the bankruptcy court found that the UST has the "right and duty to investigate any and all affairs of the debtor or the creditors in a case," that there is "authority under 28 U.S.C. 586 to conduct such an investigation," and to the extent necessary the bankruptcy court would exercise its "equitable powers to authorize" the UST to "conduct this kind of investigation to insure the integrity of the bankruptcy system and to insure the equal and fair application of justice in this Court...." Transcript at 18-19.

14. The bankruptcy court entered its Order on December 10, 2007. In the Order, the court found that the UST was authorized to examine and to obtain documents from Countrywide under Fed. R. Bankr. P. 2004 per the Notice, pursuant to the UST's authority under 11 U.S.C. Section 307 and 28 U.S.C. Section 586. In overruling Countrywide's Objection, the court ordered that the term documents in the subpoena be deemed limited to the definition of "documents" in the Federal Rules of Civil Procedure, and further ordered that the UST's document requests be limited to all "documents evidencing the Debtors' payment history and any other documents evidencing the outstanding debt under the Debtors' mortgage as of the date Countrywide filed its proof of claim." Order, at 2-3. The Order also conditioned Countrywide's producing the documents described in Notice Exhibit "A" upon the United States Trustee's providing Countrywide with a certificate of compliance under the Right To Financial Privacy Act of 1978, 12 U.S.C. 3401 et seq.[1] Id. at 3.

15. Countrywide filed the Motion and its notice of appeal [D.E. #89] on December 20, 2007.

16. The sole issue implicated in the Order and presented for consideration on interlocutory appeal is whether the bankruptcy court abused its discretion in authorizing the United States Trustee, a party in interest in this case, to conduct discovery of Countrywide under Fed. R. Bankr. P. 2004. See Order.

ARGUMENT

THE DISTRICT COURT SHOULD DENY THE MOTION AND DISMISS THIS APPEAL, BECAUSE IT LACKS JURISDICTION TO HEAR AN APPEAL OF A NON-FINAL, INTERLOCUTORY DISCOVERY ORDER

A. As the intermediate appeals court, a district court can hear appeals only from final bankruptcy court orders.

17. A district court has jurisdiction to hear appeals only from final orders rendered by a bankruptcy court. 28 U.S.C. 158(a)(1); Int. Horizons, Inc. v. Committee of Unsecured Creditors (Matter of Int. Horizons, Inc.), 689 F.2d 996, 1000 (11th Cir. 1982) (interpreting the predecessor to 28 U.S.C. 158 and holding that bankruptcy court orders granting or denying discovery were not final, appealable orders, unless the appellant had either asserted an unprotected privilege or been found in contempt for failure to comply with an underlying discovery order). See 15B Charles Alan Wright et al., Fed. Prac. & Proc. Juris.2d § 3914.23 (2007 Supp.) (surveying cases). A district court also has discretionary jurisdiction to hear appeals of interlocutory orders, upon leave. Matter of Int. Horizons, Inc., 689 F.2d at 1000; 28 U.S.C. 158(a)(3).

18. A final order "is an order that concludes the litigation on the merits of the case and 'leaves nothing for the court to do but execute the judgment . . . .'" Spencer, Spencer, Depper & Guthrie v. Paskay (In re Hillsborough Holdings Corp.), 164 B.R. 673, 674 (S.D. Fla. 1994), citing Catlin v. United States, 324 U.S. 229 (1945). By contrast, an interlocutory order is "[a]n order that is final with regard to a particular issue, but does not end the litigation on the merits, is not a final order under Catlin and is not immediately appealable . . . ." Masters, Mates & Pilots Plans v. Lykes Bros. Steamship Co., Inc. (In re Lykes Bros. Steamship Co., Inc.), 200 B.R. 933, 937 (M.D. Fla. 1996). Limiting appellate jurisdiction to final orders – the final order doctrine - promotes both judicial efficiency and economy by preventing delay tactics and the concomitant increase in legal fees. Id.

19. Interlocutory appeals will not be granted absent "exceptional circumstances . . . [t]o do otherwise 'would contravene the well-established judicial policy of discouraging interlocutory appeals and avoiding the delay and disruption which results from such piecemeal litigation . . . .'" Escondido Mission Village L.P. v. Best Products Company (In re Escondido), 137 B.R. 114, 116 (S.D.N.Y. 1992) (citing In re Casco Bay Lines, Inc., 8 B.R. 784, 786 (B.A.P. 1st Cir.1981). See Colonial Bank v. Freeman (In re Pacific Forest Products Corp.), 335 B.R. 910, 919 (S.D. Fla. 2005) (stating that "[i]nterlocutory review is generally disfavored for its piecemeal effect on cases . . . ."). The party seeking immediate review of an interlocutory order "bears the burden of demonstrating exceptional circumstances . . . ." American Freight System, Inc. v. Transport Ins. Co. (In re American Freight System, Inc.), 194 B.R. 659, 661 – 662 (D. Kan. 1996) (denying motion for leave to appeal bankruptcy court order authorizing discovery of a creditor's "practices and procedures . . ." underlying its proof of claim).

B. Bankruptcy court discovery orders are interlocutory, not final, and they can be reviewed only in situations where a third party asserts a privilege of non-disclosure.

20. In a case directly on point here, the Eleventh Circuit observed that orders entered by a bankruptcy court granting or denying discovery are generally not final and appealable. Matter of Int. Horizons, Inc., 689 F.2d at 1000 – 1001, citing Rouse Construction International, Inc. v. Rouse Construction Corp., 680 F.2d 743, 745 (11th Cir. 1982). In Horizons, the creditors' committee sought access to documents and work papers in the possession of the debtor's accountant. The accountant refused, citing the protections of a state law accountant-client privilege. The bankruptcy court rejected the asserted privilege and directed the firm to produce the requested documents. Both the firm and the debtor appealed. Id. at 999.

21. Citing holdings of Fifth, Second, Ninth and Tenth Circuits, the court in Horizons stated that a person subject to a bankruptcy court discovery order has two choices – 1) to comply with it and to challenge the order at the conclusion of the case, when it is final, or 2) to refuse to comply and to challenge the order, if subsequently cited for contempt. Id. at 1001. The court recognized that a major exception to this rule occurs where the person subject to a discovery order "has custody of materials as to which another person may claim a privilege of non-disclosure . . . ." Id.

22. In Horizons, the court ultimately dismissed the appeal by the accountants, holding that the discovery order was not final and, therefore, not appealable, because the firm had not yet been cited for civil contempt arising from its refusal to produce the documents requested by the creditors' committee. Id. The court held that the discovery order was final and appealable as to the debtor, however, "because it claims a privilege of non-disclosure relating to materials that another party has been directed to produce . . . ." Id. at 1001 – 1002. After hearing the merits of the debtor's appeal, the court affirmed the lower courts' orders compelling production, finding that the accountant-client privilege was invalid under Fed. R. Evid. 501, federal common law and principles of comity. Id. at 1004 – 1005.

23. Here, Countrywide does not assert that its complying with the Order will jeopardize any asserted privilege. Motion. Therefore, it has two options. It can comply with the Notice and the Order by producing the documents requested by the United States Trustee and submitting its designated representative for examination on the dates indicated. It can then challenge the Order at the conclusion of the Debtors' case. Alternatively, it can refuse to comply and appeal the Order in the context of a subsequent civil contempt order. Matter of Int. Horizons, Inc., 689 F.2d at 1000 – 1001.

24. Countrywide's argument that the Order constitutes a final, appealable order overlooks controlling law in the Eleventh Circuit. Motion at 4 – 5. Inasmuch as the Order is interlocutory and not final, the Court should deny the Motion and dismiss the appeal. Id.[2]

C. The Order cannot be immediately appealed under any exception to the final order doctrine.

25. In the Eleventh Circuit, interlocutory orders issued by bankruptcy courts - other than discovery orders - can be immediately appealed to the district court under one of two exceptions to the final order doctrine – the Forgay-Conrad rule (also known as the doctrine of practical finality) and the Cohen (collateral order) doctrine. In re Lykes, 200 B.R. at 938; Lockwood v. Snookies, Inc. (In re Hickory House, Inc.), 60 F.3d 724, 726 – 727 (11th Cir. 1995). Countrywide argues that the Order fits within one or both of these exceptions. Motion at 5 – 6. Assuming that the controlling law in the Eleventh Circuit, as articulated in Horizons, does not proscribe interlocutory appeals of bankruptcy court discovery orders, the Order is nevertheless not constructively final, because it does not meet one or more of the required elements.

1. The Order is not appealable under the Forgay-Conrad rule.

[2] Accord, Robinson v. Tanner, 798 F.2d 1378 (11th Cir. 1986), cert. den., 481 U.S. 1039 (1986) (holding than an order imposing sanctions for discovery abuses was not immediately appealable); Aetna Casualty & Surety Co. v. Glinka, 154 B.R. 862, 868 (D. Vt. 1993) (district court dismissed appeal from orders quashing subpoenas and directing third party to produce documents under Fed. R. 2004, because the orders were interlocutory. The court noted that "[t]he virtue of the contempt adjudication before allowing an appeal is that if affords the parties a 'second look' before determining whether to pursue or resist the discovery . . . ." (citation omitted)); First Nat. Bank of Atlanta v. AMR Group, Inc., 67 B.R. 311, 312 – 313 (S.D. Ga. 1986) (district court dismissed motion for leave to appeal order requiring appellant to produce documents, because the order was interlocutory and not immediately appealable under either 28 U.S.C. 1292(b), which governs the appeal of interlocutory orders issued by the district court to the court of appeals, or the collateral order doctrine, because the bankruptcy court had not yet issued a civil contempt order). See Firestone Tire & Rubber Co. v. Risjord, 449 U.S. 368, 377 (1981) (observing in dicta "we have generally denied review of pretrial discovery orders . . . Our rationale has been that in the rare case when appeal after final judgment will not cure an erroneous discovery order, a party may defy the order, permit a contempt citation to be entered against him, and challenge the order on direct appeal of the contempt ruling . . . .") (citations omitted) (holding that orders denying motions to disqualify opposing party's counsel in a civil case were not appealable prior to final judgment in underlying litigation).

26. The Forgay-Conrad rule permits review of an interlocutory order "that decides the right to the property in contest, and directs it to be delivered up by the defendant to the complainant, or directs it to be sold, or directs the defendant to pay a certain sum of money to the complainant, and the complainant is entitled to have such decree carried immediately into execution . . . ." (citations omitted). In re Hickory House, Inc., 60 F.3d at 726 – 727.

27. Countrywide concedes that the Order does not require Countrywide to deliver physical property to the United States Trustee. Motion at 5 – 6. As such, it is not constructively final for purposes of the Forgay-Conrad rule. In re Lykes, 200 B.R. at 938 (holding that an order denying a motion for appointment to the creditors' committee "does not require the immediate delivery of physical property, so this exception is not applicable . . . ."). See In re Hillsborough Holdings Corp., 164 B.R. at 675 (denying interlocutory review of interim fee award, because "money is not generally considered physical property . . . .").

2. The Order is not appealable under the Cohen doctrine.

28. Under the Cohen doctrine, a district court may review interlocutory orders "that '(1) finally determine a claim separate and independent from the other claims in the action; (2) cannot be reviewed after the final judgment because by then effective review will be precluded and rights conferred will be lost; and (3) are too important to be denied review because they present a significant and unresolved question of law . . . .'" Id. (citations omitted).

29. The Order neither determined a discrete claim nor precluded effective review, because there is yet much to be done in connection with the discovery. As a threshold matter, it is unclear whether Countrywide will comply with the subpoenas attached to the Notice. Assuming that Countrywide fails to do so, it is unclear whether the United States Trustee will move to compel compliance. It is equally unclear whether the bankruptcy court would hold Countrywide in civil contempt if Countrywide were to fail to comply with an order compelling it to obey the Order. Aetna Casualty & Surety Co. v. Glinka, 154 B.R. at 868 (finding that the uncertainty regarding the target's future compliance with subpoenas, the movant's response and the bankruptcy court's possible enforcement actions rendered the orders interlocutory and nonappealable). Inasmuch as the Order does not conform with at least two of the three elements[3] of the Cohen doctrine, it is not constructively final, and the court should deny the Motion. See Atlantic Fed. Savings & Loan v. Blythe, 890 F.2d 371 (11th Cir. 1989) (dismissing appeal from an order imposing discovery sanctions for lack of jurisdiction, because the order did not fit within the Forgay-Conrad and Cohen exceptions to the final judgment rule).

3. The district court should not exercise discretionary review of the Order.

30. Countrywide further offers that the district court should exercise discretionary, interlocutory review of the Order. Motion at 6 – 9. A district court may do so using a three part test that is analogous to that governing appeals of interlocutory orders from the district court to the court of appeals under 28 U.S.C. 1292(b). In re Pacific Forest Products Corp., 335 B.R. at 919 (citations omitted). Under this test, a district court may review an interlocutory order "if the subject issue (1) involves a controlling question of law, (2) as to which there is a substantial ground for difference of opinion, and (3) is such that an immediate appeal would advance the ultimate termination of the litigation . . . If the party moving for leave to appeal fails to establish any of these three elements, then leave must be denied . . . ." Id.

[3] The United States Trustee addresses the third element – a "significant and unresolved question of law" – infra at subsection 3 in the context of the district court's discretionary review of interlocutory orders.

31. The legal issue presented by the Motion – whether the bankruptcy court abused its discretion in partially denying the Objection and authorizing the United States Trustee, as a party in interest, to conduct discovery of the factual basis for Countrywide's proof of claim – presents no controlling, disputed question of law. Rather, issues concerning the scope of discovery under Fed. R. Bankr. P. 2004 are inherently interlocutory, present no controlling issues of law and "are left to the sound discretion of the court that is fully familiar with the entire proceeding – the bankruptcy judge . . . ." Hoffenberg v. Cohen (In re Towers Fin. Corp.), 164 B.R. 719, 720 (S.D.N.Y. 1994) (dismissing appeal of order denying motion for 2004 examination).

32. The Order did not finally adjudicate the validity of Countrywide's proof of claim under 11 U.S.C. 502. It merely authorized the United States Trustee to investigate its factual basis. See In re American Freight System, Inc., 194 B.R. at 662 (holding that discovery orders "do not present 'controlling issues of law' capable of significantly advancing the litigation . . . .'"). (citations omitted).

33. Moreover, as noted above, the controlling law in the Eleventh Circuit is clear – bankruptcy court discovery orders are interlocutory and not final and appealable. Matter of Int. Horizons, Inc., 689 F.2d at 1000 – 1001. "[W]here there is controlling authority in the jurisdiction where the order was rendered, there cannot be a substantial difference of opinion . . . ." In re Pacific Forest Products Corp., 335 B.R. at 922 (citations omitted).

34. Countrywide advances the theory that the United States Trustee lacks authority under 11 U.S.C. 307 and 28 U.S.C. 586 to conduct discovery of creditors and that this theory constitutes a disputed, controlling issue of law. Motion at 7 – 8.

35. This issue does not make the Order immediately reviewable under the District Court's discretionary authority, however. Under 11 U.S.C. 307, the United States Trustee

"may raise and may appear and be heard on any issue . . . ."[4] This broad grant of standing is not circumscribed by the United States Trustee's statutory duties, which are enumerated in 28 U.S.C. 586. In re Miles, 330 B.R. 848, 850 (Bankr. M.D. Ga. 2005) (overruling objection to a motion to transfer venue filed by the United States Trustee, stating that under section 307, "the U.S. Trustee is given the same right to be heard as a party in interest, but retains the discretion to decide when a matter of concern to the proper administration of the bankruptcy laws should be raised [under 28 U.S.C. 586] . . . ."). Countrywide cites no authority holding that otherwise interlocutory, nonappealable discovery orders in the Eleventh Circuit are converted to final, appealable orders owing to the involvement of the United States Trustee.

36. Countrywide has not met its burden of demonstrating that a substantial basis for difference of opinion exists on a controlling issue of law and that the Order presents issues materially different from routine discovery matters, which are not final and appealable in the Eleventh Circuit. In re American Freight System, Inc., 194 B.R. at 662. Accordingly, the Court should deny the Motion and dismiss this appeal.

PRAYER

For the foregoing reasons, the United States Trustee prays that this Court deny the Motion and dismiss the appeal.

JURISDICTIONAL STATEMENT

The bankruptcy court had jurisdiction under 28 U.S.C. §§ 157 (a) and (b), and 1334(a) to issue its order denying the United States Trustee's motion to dismiss the Chapmans' chapter 7 bankruptcy case. The bankruptcy court issued its opinion and entered its order on June 10, 2010. That order was a final order. Stuart v. Koch (In re Koch), 109 F.3d 1285, 1287 (8th Cir. 1997). The United States Trustee filed a notice of appeal on June 23, 2010, which is timely under 28 U.S.C. §§ 158(a) and (c)(2) and Fed. R. Bankr. P. 8002. This Court has appellate jurisdiction under 28 U.S.C. § 158(a)(1) and (b), statutory provisions under which bankruptcy appellate panels have jurisdiction to hear appeals from final judgments, orders, and decrees of bankruptcy judges.

STATEMENT OF THE ISSUE

The sole issue in this appeal is whether the bankruptcy court erred in concluding that 11 U.S.C. § 707(b)(1) does not apply to a case that has been converted from chapter 13 to chapter 7 of the Bankruptcy Code.

STANDARD OF REVIEW

A bankruptcy court's findings of fact are reviewed for clear error and its conclusions of law are reviewed de novo. In re Litzinger, 322 B.R. 108, 112 (B.A.P. 8th Cir. 2005). In this case, the facts are undisputed, and the bankruptcy court's interpretation of 11 U.S.C. § 707(b)(1) is a conclusion of law subject to de novo review.

STATEMENT OF THE CASE

The Chapmans sought chapter 13 bankruptcy relief in the United States Bankruptcy Court for the District of Minnesota. See 11 U.S.C. § 1301 et seq. A year later, the Chapmans converted their case to chapter 7. See 11 U.S.C. § 1307(a). The United States Trustee moved to dismiss the Chapmans' chapter 7 case for abuse under 11 U.S.C. § 707(b)(1) on the grounds that a presumption of abuse arose and the totality of the Chapman's financial circumstances demonstrated abuse. See 11 U.S.C. § 707(b)(1), (2) & (3). The bankruptcy court held that section 707(b)(1) did not apply to cases that had not started in chapter 7 and denied the United States Trustee's motion to dismiss for that reason without considering the merits of the motion. The United States Trustee appealed.

STATEMENT OF FACTS

The Chapmans commenced this case by filing a petition for relief under chapter 13 of the Bankruptcy Code on October 10, 2008. [Chapter 13 Voluntary Petition, #1]. The Chapmans' plan was confirmed on January 29, 2009. [Confirmation Order, #23]. The Chapmans agreed to pay $1,150 per month to fully pay their unsecured creditors' claims and to separately make their home and car payments. [See Plan, #20]. The Chapmans made several plan payments, but did not make their mortgage and car payments, enabling their secured creditors to obtain relief from the automatic stay. [Debtors' Response to Motion to Dismiss, #46 at 2-3]. The Chapmans attribute their inability to pay to a reduction in Mrs. Chapman's overtime income and unanticipated personal expenses. [Id.]. The Chapmans did not seek to modify their confirmed plan to reduce or delay their payments.

Instead, the Chapmans converted their case to chapter 7 on October 16, 2009. [Notice of Conversion, #36]. They filed new schedules and a Chapter 7 Statement of Current Monthly Income and Means-Test Calculation in the converted case using income and expense figures that were current as of the time of conversion, instead of their average monthly income for the six months prior to the commencement of their chapter 13 case.[1] [#36 at 38-45; see Debtors' Response to Motion to Dismiss, #46 at 3]. They checked the box indicating that the presumption of abuse arose. [Means-Test Calculation, #36 at 38].

The United States Trustee moved to dismiss the Chapmans' chapter 7 case for abuse. [Motion to Dismiss, #43]. The United States Trustee's motion alleged that the elimination of Ms. Chapman's overtime had a negligible impact on her income and did not rebut the presumption of abuse. [Id. at 3]. Further the motion alleged that the Chapmans' case should be deemed abusive under the totality of the circumstances because they had actual disposable income of over $1,400 per month that they could use to repay creditors. [Id. at 3-4].

In response to the United States Trustee's motion, the Chapmans also argued that additional special circumstances exist that rebut the presumption of abuse and they had no ability to repay their creditors. [Debtors' Response to Motion to Dismiss, #46 at 7-9]. The Chapmans also asserted that the Bankruptcy Code does not allow a court to dismiss a case initially filed under chapter 13 for abuse. [Id. at 4]. The bankruptcy court heard argument on the legal issue of whether section 707(b) applies to converted cases; no evidence was taken concerning the factual issues raised by the motion.

The bankruptcy court issued its decision denying the United States Trustee's motion on June 10, 2010. [Order, #47].[2] Because the decision only addressed whether the Bankruptcy Code authorizes dismissal of a case for abuse where the debtors initially file under chapter 13, it did not reach any conclusions with respect to whether the Chapmans' case was presumptively abusive or whether it should be deemed abusive under the totality of the circumstances. [Id.]. The United States Trustee appealed. [Notice of Appeal, #49].

SUMMARY OF ARGUMENT

This appeal is not about whether the Chapmans' bankruptcy case would be an abuse of chapter 7, although the United States Trustee believes that it would. The bankruptcy court has yet to consider that issue. This appeal will decide whether debtors who initiate cases in one chapter and then convert them to chapter 7 will escape scrutiny for abuse under (a) section 707(b)(2)'s means test, (b) section 707(b)(3)(A)'s bad faith test, and (c) section 707(b)(3)(B)'s totality of the debtor's financial circumstances test.

The bankruptcy court found that section 707(b)(1) does not apply in a case originally commenced under chapter 13 and subsequently converted to chapter 7. [Order, #47]. The court did so because it read these words in section 707(b)(1) – "may dismiss a case filed by an individual debtor under this chapter whose debts are primarily consumer debts" – as unambiguously limiting dismissal under section 707(b) to cases originating under chapter 7. 11 U.S.C. § 707(b)(1) (emphasis added). [Order, #47 at 2].

But those words are anything but clear. Courts in approximately equal numbers have taken opposite views of the "plain meaning" of the statute.

One reading of section 707(b) is better though. The better reading permits a court to dismiss any chapter 7 case filed by an individual debtor with primarily consumer debts for abuse, regardless of how the case got to chapter 7. It is better because at least seven separate indications in the Code, its legislative history and relevant case law lead to the conclusion that section 707(b) applies to all chapter 7 cases. That body of law demonstrates this language does not exclude converted cases from scrutiny under section 707(b), but instead acts to limit the application of section 707(b) to chapter 7 cases involving individual debtors with primarily consumer debts. Those indicators outweigh any countervailing indications, making this interpretation the better one.

First, in the context of the Bankruptcy Code, cases that are converted to chapter 7 from chapter 13 are "deemed" to have been "filed under" chapter 7. Resendez v. Lindquist, 691 F.2d 397, 399 (8th Cir. 1982); see 11 U.S.C. § 348(a). This supports the conclusion that the phrase "filed . . . under this chapter" refers both to cases that originated under chapter 7 and those that were converted to chapter 7.

Second, sections 1112(b)(1), 1208(b), and 1307(b) of the Bankruptcy Code allow a court to "dismiss a case under this chapter." That language is the same as that found in section 707(b), except that section 707(b), unlike those sections, adds the words "filed by an individual debtor" to identify those cases pending in chapter 7 that can be dismissed under that subsection. Sections 1112(b), 1208(b), and 1307(b) serve the same purpose as 707(b), authorizing dismissal when the applicable statutory basis is met. There is no reason to read them more expansively than section 707(b).

Third, courts almost unanimously have interpreted the language "in a case filed under" in 11 U.S.C. § 1328(f) to include cases converted to the specified chapters. There is no reason to interpret the substantially similar phrase in section 707(b)(1) the opposite way.

Fourth, Congress explicitly excepted some chapter 7 cases from dismissal under section 707(b). But it did not explicitly except cases converted to chapter 7. Given that Congress knew how to create explicit exceptions to section 707(b) when it wished, there is no reason to find an implicit exception here.

Fifth, in section 704(b) of the Code, Congress required the United States Trustee to review materials submitted by individual debtors in chapter 7 cases and move to dismiss or convert the case under section 707(b) if the debtor's case would be presumed to be an abuse or explain why a motion would not be appropriate. Section 704(b) makes no exception for converted cases.

Sixth, for over twenty years prior to the enactment of the Bankruptcy Abuse Prevention and Consumer Protection Act of 2005,[3] bankruptcy courts – relying on the same language at issue here – dismissed converted cases for substantial abuse under section 707(b) and routinely expressed the belief that converted cases could remain in chapter 7 only if it would not be a substantial abuse of that chapter. Given the textual indications of Congressional intent, it is not surprising that no one previously questioned section 707(b)'s applicability to converted cases. The language did not change in 2005, so the result should not either.

Seventh, the bankruptcy court's ruling would defeat the objective of section 707(b) to ensure that debtors with the ability to repay their creditors do so. Instead it would invite abuse by enabling debtors to obtain relief under chapter 7 simply by commencing their case in chapter 13 and then converting to chapter 7.

And it would discourage debtors who have some ability to pay but are unwilling or unable to make full payment under their current plan from engaging in necessary belt-tightening or attempting to modify their plans to obtain relief under chapter 13. Many such debtors would instead convert to chapter 7, wasting the time and resources already spent by the court, the parties and the trustee in chapter 13 and unnecessarily burdening the new chapter 7 trustee.

ARGUMENT

I. Although Section 707(b) is not artfully drafted, the Bankruptcy Code's language and structure, past practice under section 707(b), and section 707(b)'s purpose all establish that section 707(b) is best read as applying to converted cases.

A. Standing alone, section 707(b)(1) is ambiguous on the question of whether section 707(b) applies to converted cases.

The bankruptcy court held that the Chapmans' case could not be dismissed for abuse under section 707(b)(1) because that section did not apply to converted cases. [Order, #47]. The court interpreted the statutory language permitting it to dismiss for abuse "a case filed by an individual debtor under this chapter whose debts are primarily consumer debts " to limit the reach of section 707(b) to cases that began under chapter 7. 11 U.S.C. § 707(b)(1); [see Order, #47 at 2]. Although the bankruptcy court believed the statutory language unequivocally compelled that result, that decision diverged from a twenty-year, pre-BAPCPA practice of reviewing converted cases for substantial abuse under the identical statutory language.[4] And courts have continued to rule that section 707(b) applies to converted cases, in spite of several recent decisions to the contrary. Justice v. Advanced Control Solutions, Inc., No. 07-5231, 2008 WL 4368668 (W.D. Ark.

[4] In BAPCPA, Congress lowered the standard for dismissal under 707(b) from "substantial abuse" to "abuse," but the language at issue here remained unchanged. Pub. L. No. 109-8, 119 Stat. at 27.

Sept. 22, 2008) (holding that section 707(b) does apply to cases converted to chapter 7); In re Willis, 408 B.R. 803 (Bankr. W.D. Mo. 2009) (Hon. Jerry W. Venters) (same); In re Kellett, 379 B.R. 332 (Bankr. D. Or. 2007) (same); In re Kerr, No. 06-12302, 2007 WL 2119291 (Bankr. W.D. Wash. Jul. 18, 2007) (same); In re Perfetto, 361 B.R. 27 (Bankr. D.R.I. 2007) (same).

The bankruptcy court's difficulty in applying section 707(b) to converted cases is understandable. The language of section 707(b)(1) is anything but clear. The sixteen words at the heart of the controversy include

- five nouns, and
- three modifying phrases or clauses, but
- no punctuation.

Adding to the ambiguity, "under this chapter" sits haphazardly in the middle of the independent phrase "filed by a debtor . . . whose debts are primarily consumer debts."

But unlike the twenty-year practice under section 707(b), the bankruptcy court's reading goes against the language and structure of the Bankruptcy Code and the well-recognized purpose of that provision, as explained below. Taken in context, the better interpretation of the statute is that section 707(b) applies to all cases under chapter 7.

B. The language and structure of the Bankruptcy Code, however, lead to the conclusion that converted cases are subject to dismissal for abuse.

The relevant language in section 707(b) must be construed in the context of the Bankruptcy Code. See McCarthy v. Bronson, 500 U.S. 136, 139 (1991) (rejecting arguments relying on a "natural reading" of statutory language in isolation). Courts look at the design of the statute as a whole and to its object and policy, not just the particular statutory language, to determine its meaning. Crandon v. United States, 494 U.S. 152, 158, (1990). The language and structure of the Code and the history of section 707(b) show that section 707(b) applies to all cases under chapter 7.

1. The fact that the Eighth Circuit and other courts hold that section 348(a) treats converted cases as filed under the converted chapter supports the Government's reading.

While most civil cases are filed only once, bankruptcy cases are different. A single bankruptcy case can proceed under various chapters by conversion from one chapter to another. In that context, one bankruptcy case pend under more than one chapter.[5]

---

[5] The term "filed under" is not defined in the Code. Merriam-Webster's online dictionary defines "file" among other things as "to place among official records as prescribed by law." See www.merriam-webster.com/dictionary/file (Aug. 9, 2010). Using that definition, the Chapmans' case was filed under chapter 13 when they filed their petition and then filed under chapter 7 when they filed their notice of conversion.

The Bankruptcy Code treats converted cases as if they were originally commenced under the chapter to which they are converted. Section 348, which governs the effect of conversion, states that:

> Conversion of a case from a case under one chapter of this title to a case under another chapter of this title constitutes an order for relief under the chapter to which the case is converted, but, except as provided in subsections (b) and (c) of this section, does not effect a change in the date of the filing of the petition, the commencement of the case, or the order for relief.

11 U.S.C. § 348(a) (emphasis added).[6] In other words, upon conversion, a case is treated as if it had been commenced under the new chapter at the time the original petition was filed. As the United States Bankruptcy Court for the Western District of Missouri has explained:

> [T]he clear intent of [section 348(a)] is to retain the original filing date as the date of the "filing of the petition," "commencement of the

[6] Subsections (b) and (c) of section 348 provide:

> (b) Unless the court for cause orders otherwise, in section 701(a), 727(a)(10), 727(b), 728(a), 728(b), 1102(a), 1110(a)(1), 1121(b), 1121(c), 1141(d)(4), 1146(a), 1146(b), 1201(a), 1221, 1228(a), 1301(a), and 1305(a) of this title, "the order for relief under this chapter" in a chapter to which a case has been converted under section 706, 1112, 1208, or 1307 of this title means the conversion of such case to such chapter.
> (c) Sections 342 and 365(d) of this title apply in a case that has been converted under section 706, 1112, 1208, or 1307 of this title, as if the conversion order were the order for relief.

> case" or "order for relief" except in the circumstances provided for in subsections (b) and (c), where these terms are instead deemed to refer to the conversion date. Because Section 707(b) is not mentioned in either subsection (b) or (c) of Section 348, it follows that the original filing date is retained upon conversion, but the case is otherwise treated as if the debtor had originally filed under the converted chapter.

In re Willis, 408 B.R. at 808 (quoting In re Kerr, 2007 WL 2119291 at *3 (emphasis added)). Cf. Justice, 2008 WL 4368668 at *3-5; Perfetto, 361 B.R. at 30-31; In re Kellett, 379 B.R. at 335-40; In re Kerr, 2007 WL 2119291 at *2-*4.[7]

And it is the law of this circuit that debtors who convert their cases from chapter 13 to chapter 7 "are deemed to have filed a Chapter 7 case at the time the Chapter 13 case was filed." Resendez, 691 F.2d at 399.[8] Accord In re Perfetto, 361 B.R. at 31 (debtors who convert their cases to other chapters "are deemed to have 'filed under' the converted to chapter, as of the date the original petition was filed.") (italicized in original); In re Sours, 350 B.R. 261, 266-68 (Bankr. E.D. Va. 2006); In re Grydzuk, 353 B.R. 564, 568 (Bankr. N.D. Ind. 2006); In re Capers, 347 B.R. 169, 171-72 (Bankr. D.S.C. 2006).

So when the Chapmans' case was converted to chapter 7, it was "filed

[7] Because section 707(b) does not refer to "the order for relief under this chapter," there would be no reason to reference it in section 348(b) in any event.

[8] Although the Resendez case did not address the precise issue before this court, it is instructive as to how the Code treats converted cases.

under" chapter 7, which supports the idea that it should be evaluated under section 707(b) for potential abuse. The bankruptcy court misconstrued section 348(a) when it reached the opposite conclusion.

2. The fact that other Code provisions providing for dismissal use similar language that includes converted cases without expressly saying so supports the Government's reading.

Provisions in various chapters of the Bankruptcy Code governing the dismissal of cases also support the conclusion that section 707(b) applies to all cases under chapter 7. See 11 U.S.C. § 1112(b), § 1208(b), and § 1307(b) of the Bankruptcy Code. Each of those sections allows a court to "dismiss a case under this chapter." And that language includes converted cases even though it does not expressly say so. Otherwise, there would no reason to expressly except certain converted cases from the reach of section 1208(b) and section 1307(b).[9]

That language is the same as that found in section 707(b), except that section 707(b), unlike those sections, adds a second qualifier, i.e. the case also must be "filed by an individual debtor . . . whose debts are primarily consumer debts" to be dismissed under that subsection. Sections 1112(b), 1208(b), and 1307(b) serve the same purpose as 707(b), authorizing dismissal when the [9] Section 1208(b) does not apply if the case has been converted under section 706 or 1112. Section 1307(b) does not apply if the case has been converted under section 706, 1112, or 1208. See 11 U.S.C. §§ 1208(b) & 1307(b).

applicable statutory basis is met. Thus, section 707(b) should be construed in the same way – as applying to converted cases – because it is a basic rule of statutory construction that "'identical words used in different parts of the same act are intended to have the same meaning.'" Commissioner of Internal Revenue v. Lundy, 516 U.S. 235, 250 (1996) (citations omitted). There is no reason to interpret it in an opposite manner, as the bankruptcy court did.

3. The fact that courts have interpreted the words "filed under" in the Code to encompass converted cases supports the Government's reading.

In BAPCPA, Congress used the phrase "filed . . . under" twice when it added 11 U.S.C. § 1328(f), prohibiting debtors from receiving a discharge in a chapter 13 case filed within specified periods of time after filing previous cases in which they had received a discharge. See 11 U.S.C. § 1328(f)(1) & (2).

The phrases "in a case filed under chapter 7, 11, 12 of this title" and "in a case filed under chapter 13" in section 1328(f) have been overwhelmingly interpreted to encompass cases converted to those chapters, as well as cases originally commenced under those chapters.[10] In re Dalton, No. 09-12024, 2010

[10] Section 1328(f)(1) & (2) provide:

> Notwithstanding subsections (a) and (b), the court shall not grant a discharge of all debts provided for in the plan or disallowed under section 502, if the debtor has received a discharge–

WL 55499 (Bankr. M.D.N.C. Jan. 7, 2010) (debtor who commenced case under chapter 13 and then converted to chapter 7 and received chapter 7 discharge found to have "filed under" chapter 7 for the purpose of section 1328(f)); Grice v. WE Energies (In re Grice), 373 B.R. 886, 888-89 (Bankr. E.D. Wis. 2007) (same); In re Ybarra, 359 B.R. 702 (Bankr. S.D. Ill. 2007) (same); In re Sours, 350 B.R. at 268 (same); In re Capers, 347 B.R. at 171-72 (same); In re Knighton, 355 B.R. 922 (Bankr. M.D. Ga. 2006) (same); In re Grydzuk, 353 B.R. 564 (same). But see In re Hamilton, 383 B.R. 469 (Bankr. W.D. Ark. 2008).[11]

There is no discernable reason to give those same words an opposite meaning in section 707(b)(1). Specific language within the Code should be interpreted the same way. Lundy, 516 U.S. at 250 (citations omitted). Therefore, the language in section 707(b) referring to "a case filed . . . under this chapter"

> (1) in a case filed under chapter 7, 11, or 12 of this title during the 4-year period preceding the date of the order for relief under this chapter, or
> (2) in a case filed under chapter 13 of this title during the 2-year period preceding the date of such order.

11 U.S.C. § 1328(f) (emphasis added).

[11] A Fourth Circuit decision that narrowly interpreted "filed" in section 1328(f) did not address how that section applied to converted cases. See Branigan v. Bateman (In re Bateman), 515 F.3d 272 (4th Cir. 2008).

should be read as referring to both cases originating in chapter 7 and cases converted to chapter 7 like the substantially similar language in section 1328(f).

Other provisions in the Code buttress the conclusion that the term "filed under" encompasses cases converted to a chapter as well as those originating in that chapter. For example, in section 342(f), Congress provided that an entity may file a notice of address with a bankruptcy court to be used to provide notice to the entity in "all cases under chapters 7 and 13," and that the court will use the address provided to give notice in any case "filed under chapter 7 or 13" with certain caveats. 11 U.S.C. § 342(f)(1) & (2) (emphasis added). Using the bankruptcy court's narrow construction of the term "filed under," section 342(f) would have to be understood as inviting entities to request that the bankruptcy courts send notice to them at a specific address in all chapter 7 and 13 cases, but requiring the bankruptcy courts to honor those requests only in cases originally commenced under chapters 7 and 13. That makes no sense.

4. The fact that section 707(b) expressly excepts certain cases – but not converted cases – from section 707(b)(2) supports the Government's reading.

Although Congress did not choose to except converted cases expressly from the reach of section 707(b), it did choose to include other explicit exceptions to means testing in that section. See 11 U.S.C. § 707(b)(2)(D) (excluding precisely defined subsets of disabled combat veterans and national guardsmen and reservists).

Had Congress intended to create a similar exception for converted cases, it could have said so unequivocally in section 707(b)(1) or included the exception in section 707(b)(2)(D).[12] See Sanchez v. Holder, 560 F.3d 1028, 1032 (9th Cir. 2009).

The contrast between section 707(b)(2)(D)'s explicit exception, and section 707(b)(1)'s text could hardly be more profound. Not only does the former specifically define the exception, it carefully delineates its parameters. It does so in detail. It leaves no ambiguity, expressly providing that section 707(b)(2) "shall not apply" to a well-defined class of excepted cases. 11 U.S.C. § 707(b)(2)(D). And, because the exception is express and detailed, it is clear.

Given that Congress took great care to craft its express exception in section 707(b)(2)(D), there is no cause to presume it intended there to be any implicit exception in section 707(b). Because section 707(b)(2)(D)'s detailed nature underscores just how seriously Congress undertook its drafting of section 707(b), the lack of an express exception in section 707(b)'s text underscores that none

[12] Congress did not avail itself of a second opportunity to include an express exception for converted cases when it amended section 707(b)(2)(D) after BAPCPA's passage. See Pub. L. No. 110-438 (2008).

5. The fact that Congress did not expressly or impliedly except converted cases from the scope of the United States Trustee's obligation under section 704(b) to review individual debtors' chapter 7 cases for presumptive abuse and take appropriate action under section 707(b) supports the Government's reading.

The bankruptcy court's conclusion that section 707(b) does not apply in converted cases cannot easily be reconciled with section 704(b). In fact, one decision, upon which the bankruptcy court relied, conceded that point. See McDow v. Dudley (In re Dudley), 405 B.R. 790, 797 n.18 (W.D. Va. 2009), appeal dismissed, 428 B.R. 686 (W.D. Va. 2010). Section 704(b) expressly requires the United States Trustee to determine whether the presumption of abuse under section 707(b) arises "[w]ith respect to a debtor who is an individual in a case under [chapter 7]," and if it does to file either a motion to dismiss or convert under section 707(b) or a statement explaining why such a motion would not be appropriate. 11 U.S.C. § 704(b)(1) & (2). Because the statute refers to "a case under" chapter 7, it applies to any chapter 7 case no matter how it got there. So under section 704(b), the United States Trustee must review cases converted to chapter 7 by individual debtors for abuse and file a motion to dismiss or convert under section 707(b) if it believes that a presumption of abuse arises. Plainly, the United States Trustee cannot fulfill his mandatory statutory duties under section 704(b) if the bankruptcy court is correct in holding that section 707(b) does not apply to converted cases.

Admittedly, a similar tension exists between the United States Trustee's interpretation of section 707(b) and the clerk's duty under 11 U.S.C. § 342(d) to provide creditors notice within ten days of the filing of the petition if the presumption of abuse has arisen. As some have noted, that might not be possible in a converted case. But the other indicators outweigh that potential inconsistency, leading to the conclusion that the better reading of section 707(b) is that it applies in converted cases.

C. The fact that courts dismissed converted cases under section 707(b) for more than twenty years before BAPCPA supports the Government's reading.

The language at issue in this case has been in the statute unchanged since section 707(b) was added in 1984. See Pub. L. No. 98-353, 98 Stat. 333 (1984). For over 20 years before the enactment of BAPCPA, parties brought motions under section 707(b) to dismiss cases that had been converted to chapter 7 from other chapters – and bankruptcy courts granted those motions – without anyone questioning section 707(b)'s applicability to converted cases. See, e.g., In re Beharry, 264 B.R. 398, 399-400 (Bankr. W.D. Pa. 2001); In re Morris, 153 B.R. 559, 563-64 (Bankr. D. Or. 1993); In re Traub, 140 B.R. 286, 287-88, 291 (Bankr.

D.N.M. 1992) (dismissing case converted from chapter 11 to chapter 7 under section 707(b)). And courts assessing the potential for a chapter 13 debtor to abuse the bankruptcy system by converting to chapter 7 often identified section 707(b) as a mechanism to curb such abuse. See, e.g., In re Fulton, 211 B.R. 247, 260 n.14 (Bankr. S.D. Ohio 1997) (indicating that "if the debtor converts . . . under 11 U.S.C. § 1307(a), the debtor must be eligible to file a Chapter 7 which would include an analysis under § 707(b) as to whether a significant amount of disposable income indicates an abuse of the system").[13]

Pre-BAPCPA bankruptcy practice is significant because courts "will not read the Bankruptcy Code to erode past bankruptcy practice absent a clear indication that Congress intended such a departure." Hamilton v. Lanning, 130 S. Ct. 2464, 2473 (2010) (internal quotation omitted). Congress retained the term "filed under" in 2005 when it made significant changes to section 707(b). If [13] Accord In re Murry-Hudson, 147 B.R. 960, 964 (Bankr. N.D. Cal. 1992) (stating that "[w]hile § 1307(a) gives a debtor the unbridled right to convert to Chapter 7, it does not give him the unbridled right to remain there. If he has the ability to complete his Chapter 13 plan, or the Court otherwise finds that the granting of Chapter 7 relief would be a substantial abuse of the provisions of that chapter, his case could be dismissed pursuant to § 707(b)."); In re Hargis, 103 B.R. 912, 917 n.2 (Bankr. E.D. Tenn. 1989) (indicating that "a debtor who chooses to convert his or her chapter 13 case to a case under chapter 7 . . . would still be subject to the provisions of 11 U.S.C. § 707(b)"). The United States Trustee is not aware of any pre-BAPCPA case raising the issue of whether section 707(b) applies to converted cases.

Congress had intended section 707(b) to apply only in cases that originated in chapter 7, it would have said so expressly and unambiguously in BAPCPA.[14]

D. Only if every case under chapter 7 is reviewed for abuse will all debtors with the ability to repay their creditors be asked to do so.

Congress enacted the BAPCPA "'to ensure that debtors repay creditors the maximum they can afford.'" Coop v. Frederickson (In re Frederickson), 545 F.3d 652, 657 (8th Cir. 2008) (quoting H.R. Rep. No. 109-31, pt.1, at 2 (2005), reprinted in 2005 U.S.C.C.A.N. 2005 88, 89). See also 151 Cong. Rec. S 2470 (March 10, 2005) ("The means test was intended to 'ensure that those who can afford to repay some portion of their unsecured debts [be] required to do so.'"). Congress was concerned that under the prior system, "some bankruptcy debtors are able to repay a significant portion of their debts" but are not required to do so. H.R. Rep. No. 109-31 (I), at 5, reprinted in, 2005 U.S.C.C.A.N. 88, 92. In amending section 707(b), Congress sought to close or reduce "the loopholes and incentives that allow and – sometimes – even encourage opportunistic personal [14] Congress knew how to refer unambiguously to cases originally commenced under a specific chapter and conversely, how to expressly exclude converted cases, but it did neither in section 707(b)(1). See 11 U.S.C. § 1112(a)(2) (referring to cases that "originally [were] commenced . . . under this chapter"); 11 U.S.C. § 706(a) (permitting a debtor to convert a case "if the case has not been converted under" specified sections), 11 U.S.C. § 1112(a)(3) (permitting conversion "unless the case was converted" involuntarily).

filings and abuse." Id.

The bankruptcy court's approach has the opposite effect. It encourages debtors to convert cases in an effort to escape scrutiny not only under 707(b)(2)'s test for presumption of abuse, but also under section 707(b)(3)(A)'s bad faith test and 707(b)(3)(B)'s test of the totality of the circumstances of the debtor's financial situation, giving those with a clear-cut ability to repay the opportunity to avoid having to repay anything at all. The bankruptcy court's interpretation would invite debtors with disposable income sufficient to repay their creditors in full to escape section 707(b) review simply by filing chapter 13 petitions and shortly thereafter converting their cases to chapter 7.

It would also encourage chapter 13 debtors, who might otherwise amend their chapter 13 plans, to convert to chapter 7 and eliminate their payments to creditors instead of utilizing the remedies available for such debtors under chapter 13. Those conversions would waste the time and effort expended by the court, the parties, and the chapter 13 trustees, and would unnecessarily create work for the new chapter 7 trustees who must review the debtors' filings and prepare for the section 341 meetings.

And while some courts suggest that parties may seek to dismiss converted cases for "bad faith" under section 707(a), that does not necessarily solve the problem for several reasons. First, in this circuit and some others, it has not been clearly established that bad faith constitutes "cause" under section 707(a) that warrants dismissal, posing a significant risk that debtors may strategically file in chapter 13 and convert to chapter 7 with impunity. See In re Huckfeldt, 39 F.3d 829, 832 (8th Cir. 1994). See also In re Padilla, 222 F.3d 1184, 1193 (9th Cir. 2000) (limiting the application of section 707(a)). Second, bad faith may be difficult to prove where dishonest debtors make a payment or two under a confirmed plan before converting to chapter 7. In addition, parties would still lose several of their three means of detecting and remedying abusive cases through dismissal – the means test of section 707(b)(2), a bad faith analysis under section 707(b)(3)(A), and consideration of the totality of the debtor's financial circumstances under section 707(b)(3)(B), leaving them no recourse against debtors with a meaningful ability to pay who convert to chapter 7 but whose conduct may not rise to the level of bad faith.

In spite of the potential abuses associated with conversion, the bankruptcy court concluded that it would be unfair and pointless to review converted cases for abuse because the means test calculation is based on income and expenses figures that predated the chapter 13 case. But that is only the starting point for section 707(b) review. Congress included a provision in section 707(b) that permits a debtor to allege special circumstances, including changes in their income or expenses, to rebut the presumption that their converted case would be abusive. See 11 U.S.C. § 707(b)(2)(B).[15] And the bankruptcy court considers the totality of the debtor's financial situation. See Ross-Tousey v. Neary (In re Ross-Tousey), 549 F.3d 1148, 1162 (7th Cir. 2008). And, in a section 707(b)(3)(B) case, the conditions existing at discharge govern. In re Cortez, 457 F.3d 448, 458 (5th Cir. 2006). In addition, if a case is converted from chapter 13 to chapter 7, and the United States Trustee determines that the debtor has no ability to repay, he likely would decline to bring a motion to dismiss the debtor's case.[16] See 11 U.S.C. § 704(b)(2). So only a debtor with disposable income at the time of the conversion has any real risk of having his converted case reconverted or dismissed. That debtor should be denied chapter 7 relief if he still has an ability to make meaningful payments to his creditors, regardless of whether he converted his case from chapter 13.

[15] Nothing in section 707(b)(2)(B) limits the special circumstances that a debtor may raise to those existing at the time he filed his original petition.

[16] In fiscal year 2009, the United States Trustees declined to seek dismissal in about 60 percent of the presumed abusive cases after considering the debtors' special circumstances – most frequently job losses. United States Trustee Program Report of Significant Accomplishments Fiscal Year 2009 at 15 (available at www.justice.gov/ust/public_affairs/annualreport/docs/ar2009.pdf).

One answer for an honest debtor who fails in chapter 13 because of deteriorating finances, but still has disposable income is to try to modify his plan.[17] See 11 U.S.C. § 1329. A debtor with a confirmed chapter 13 plan who is unable to afford payments under the plan may be able to modify the plan to reduce or postpone his monthly payments. And if modification is impracticable, the debtor may qualify for a hardship discharge under section 1328(b), obviating the need to convert to chapter 7.

Here, it appears that if the Chapmans had originally commenced a chapter 7 case at the time they converted their case, it would have been presumed to have been abusive based on numbers that were current as of the conversion provided by the Chapmans. And it appears that the Chapmans still have an actual ability to pay. So even if they cannot afford to make the monthly payments of $1,150 required by their plan, they may be able to make smaller, but still meaningful payments to their creditors as Congress intended.

If this Court holds that the section 707(b) applies to the Chapmans' case,

[17] Previously, some chapter 13 debtors with deteriorating finances were unable to get a plan confirmed in chapter 13. That risk has been substantially reduced following the Supreme Court's pronouncement in Lanning that courts can consider changes in income and expenses that are known or virtually certain at the time of confirmation in calculating projected disposable income. 130 S. Ct. at 2478.

they will have the opportunity to prove that special circumstances exist based on their current financial situation that rebut the presumption of abuse and to show that they in fact have no ability to repay their creditors. If they are successful, they can remain in chapter 7. If not, they fall within the group of debtors that Congress has concluded are not in need of liquidation relief. See Lanning, 103 S. Ct. at 2484 n.7 (Scalia, J. dissenting). The Chapmans could request to reconvert and obtain relief under chapter 13 that fully takes into account their altered financial circumstances.

The United States Trustee simply seeks judicial review of all individual chapter 7 cases for abuse, regardless of what chapter the cases began in, and the ability to take appropriate action under section 707(b) if warranted.

CONCLUSION

For those reasons, the United States Trustee respectfully asks this Court to reverse the order entered by the bankruptcy court, and remand this case for further proceedings.

Respectfully submitted,
HABBO G. FOKKENA
United States Trustee

I. The Orders Appealed From Were Final Under Eighth Circuit Precedent And the Decisions of Four Other Circuits.

The Appellees are incorrect when they argue that the orders on appeal are not final. The Eighth Circuit held in Stuart v. Koch (In re Koch), 109 F.3d 1285, 1287-88 (8th Cir. 1997) that a bankruptcy court order denying dismissal pursuant to section 707(b) was a final, appealable order.[1] The Appellees do not attempt to distinguish Koch; they argue that Koch was wrongly decided and this Court should not follow the Eighth Circuit's holding. Appellees' brief at 8-9.

A bankruptcy appellate panel, however, is compelled to follow the precedent of its respective circuit court. See Gonzales v. Conagra Grocery Prods. Co. (In re Furr's Supermarkets, Inc.), 373 B.R. 691, 707 (B.A.P. 10th Cir. 2007) ("[T]his court is compelled to follow the precedent of the Tenth Circuit. It does not have the authority to ignore or overrule such precedent."); McDonald v. Checks-N-Advance, Inc. (In re Bobby Ferrell, Jr.), 358 B.R. 777, 791 (B.A.P. 9th Cir. 2006)

[1] Although Koch was decided prior to the 2005 amendments to section 707(b), there is no reason to depart from its holding. Indeed, BAPCPA's addition of deadlines for filing motions to dismiss under section 707(b)(2) made such decisions more final because, as a practical matter, only one such motion can be made in a case. See 11 U.S.C. § 704(b) (deadline for filing section 707(b)(2) motions). See also Fed. R. Bankr. P. 1017(e)(1) (deadline for filing section 707(b)(3) motions).

(same), aff'd, 539 F.3d 1186 (9th Cir. 2008). In light of the Eighth Circuit's holding in Koch, this Court has jurisdiction to review these final orders.

Further, the clear weight of circuit law supports the conclusion that orders denying motions to dismiss under section 707(b) are final. Four circuits in addition to the Eighth Circuit have held that such orders are final, while only one circuit has disagreed. The First Circuit and Seventh circuits expressly have held that bankruptcy court orders denying section 707(b) motions to dismiss under the current version of the statute are final. Morse v. Rudler (In re Rudler), 576 F.3d 37, 43-44 (1st Cir. 2009); Ross-Tousey v. Neary (In re Ross-Tousey), 549 F.3d 1148, 1153 (7th Cir. 2008). In addition, the Third and the Fifth circuits have adjudicated appeals from orders denying section 707(b) motions to dismiss under the pre-2005 version of the statute. See In re Christian, 804 F.2d 46, 47-48 (3d Cir. 1986) (holding that an order denying a section 707(b) motion to dismiss for substantial abuse is final); In re Cortez, 457 F.3d 448, 453-54 (5th Cir. 2006) (treating as final an order denying the United States Trustee's section 707(b) motion to dismiss for substantial abuse).

The Appellees rely on the lone circuit court decision to hold otherwise, Barben v. Donovan (In re Donovan), 532 F.3d 1134 (11th Cir. 2008). That decision did not address Koch and other contrary decisions directly on point, but relied instead on authority holding that motions to dismiss chapter 11 cases are not final. Id. at 1137. A case from another circuit cannot trump Eighth Circuit precedent.

II. The Government's Interpretation Furthers the Goals of Section 707(b) And Is More Consistent With the Bankruptcy Code As a Whole.

In his opening brief, the United States Trustee established two things. First, there is no reason why a debtor in a converted case who has the ability to repay creditors should be able to obtain a chapter 7 discharge. Second, the text of section 707(b)(1) and the Bankruptcy Code as a whole best support the government's reading, which would permit converted cases to be reviewed for abuse under section 707(b)(2) & (3). The Appellees' brief does not address the first point and fails to effectively rebut the second.

A. The Appellees Fail To Explain Why Congress Would Allow Debtors Who Have the Ability To Repay Their Creditors To Avoid Doing So.

The United States Trustee showed in his opening brief that the Appellees' interpretation of section 707(b) – which limits review for abuse to cases originally commenced under chapter 7 – would permit debtors in converted cases with an ability to repay their creditors to obtain a chapter 7 discharge. Not once in their brief do the Appellees explain why Congress would have wanted that result or suggest any reason to exempt converted cases from review under section 707(b).

Congress enacted section 707(b) in 1984 at the urging of consumer lenders to allow bankruptcy courts to dismiss cases when it would be a substantial abuse of chapter 7 to discharge the debtor's debts because the debtor could easily repay those debts. In re Huckfeldt, 39 F.3d 829, 831 (8th Cir. 1994); S. Rep. No. 65, 98th Cong, 1st Sess. 53, 54 (1983).[2] The Appellees have offered no reason – and the United States Trustee can think of none – why Congress would have wanted to shield cases converted to chapter 7 from scrutiny for substantial abuse.[3]

In 2005, Congress removed the presumption in favor of granting relief to debtors and lowered the standard for dismissal from "substantial abuse" to mere "abuse." The purpose of the 2005 amendments was to ensure that debtors repay creditors the maximum they can afford. H.R. Rep. No. 109-31, pt. 1 at 2 (2005).

[2] Senate Report No. 65 is a report on an early draft of the 1984 Act. There is no Senate Report or House Report on the final version of the Act.

[3] The language at issue in these appeals was part of the original section 707(b) that Congress added to the statute in 1984. Congress did not change that language in BAPCPA, so it is appropriate to inquire whether Congress intended to except converted cases from review for substantial abuse when it added section 707(b).

The Appellees also fail to explain how their interpretation of section 707(b)(1) serves that purpose.

The Appellees imply that debtors in converted cases with the ability to repay their debts should be able to obtain a chapter 7 discharge, but they do not explain why. See Appellees' brief at 20 (asserting that it is appropriate that debtors in converted cases are not subject to dismissal based on ability to pay under either section 707(a) or 707(b)). But as explained above, the legislative history of section 707(b) shows that Congress wanted debtors who could repay their debts to do so. The only ones who benefit from Appellees' interpretation are the same debtors whom Congress believed did not belong in chapter 7 in the first instance.[4]

Some courts have rationalized that debtors who fail to repay their debts in chapter 13 should be able to obtain chapter 7 relief because they were unable to obtain chapter 13 relief. See, e.g., In re Chapman, 431 B.R. 216, 221 (Bankr. D. Minn. 2010). That reasoning is based on two flawed presumptions. First, this view assumes that all debtors who fail to complete their chapter 13 plans have no ability

[4] The Appellees cite a portion of a 2005 floor debate as support for the notion that Congress intended that all converted cases could proceed under chapter 7 regardless of the debtor's ability to repay creditors. Appellees' brief at 15. In the cited passage, Representative Sensenbrenner notes that a debtor who wants to get out of chapter 13 can convert to chapter 7 under section 1307. But nowhere does he suggest that the converted case would not be subject to review for abuse. Thus, the passage does not bear on the issue on appeal.

to repay their creditors. Second, it misreads the Bankruptcy Code to conclude that section 707(a) alone can ensure that debtors with abusive cases do not convert to chapter 7 and receive discharges. Neither premise is true.

Debtors with an ability to repay may fail to follow through with their chapter 13 plans for some of the same reasons such debtors opted for chapter 7 pre-BAPCPA – they may not want to commit their future income to repay past debts or live for years under the budgetary constraints of chapter 13. Or those debtors may not be able to make full plan payments, but they may be able to make smaller payments.[5] Such debtors should not be allowed to circumvent the system through conversion to chapter 7 to obtain a benefit otherwise not available to them.

And section 707(a) does not eliminate the potential for abusive chapter 7 cases for two reasons. First, it has not been established in every circuit that bad faith constitutes "cause" for dismissal under section 707(a). See In re Huckfeldt, 39 F.3d at 832; In re Padilla, 222 F.3d 1184, 1193 (9th Cir. 2000). And second, even if that were the case, it only begs the question of what constitutes bad faith.

Not everyone with an ability to repay can be shown to have acted in bad faith by converting to chapter 7. The Appellees acknowledge that under this Circuit's [5] Those debtors may be able to modify their chapter 13 plans or obtain hardship discharges in chapter 13. See Appellant's Chapman brief at 26.

decision in Huckfeldt, a debtor's actual ability to repay creditors may not constitute cause for dismissal under section 707(a). Appellees' brief at 20. Accord Perlin v. Hitachi Capital Am. Corp. (In re Perlin), 497 F.3d 364, 372 (3d Cir. 2007) (holding that ability to repay creditors is not a ground for dismissal under section 707(a)). So even if courts can dismiss cases converted to chapter 7 in bad faith, there still may be no way to prevent all debtors with the clear ability to repay their creditors from converting to chapter 7 and receiving discharges under the Appellees' reading of section 707(b)(1).

B. The Two Best Ways of Reading Section 707(b)(1) Support the Conclusion That Congress Did Not Intend Converted Cases To Escape Review For Abuse.

The United States Trustee established in his opening brief that under the better reading of section 707(b)(1), section 707(b) applies both to cases originally commenced under chapter 7 and to cases converted to chapter 7. This reading is supported by the text of the statute and the Bankruptcy Code as a whole.

1. The phrase "under this chapter," which Congress used in three other dismissal statutes has nothing to do with the separate and independent limitation that the case be "filed by an individual debtor."

The Appellees' interpretation hinges on the assumption that section 707(b) applies only to cases filed under chapter 7. But that is not what the provision says.

It says the court may "dismiss a case filed by an individual debtor under this chapter . . . ." 11 U.S.C. § 707(b)(1). Other Code provisions strongly suggest that the five words "filed by an individual debtor" were intended to limit the application of section 707(b) to individual debtors. Therefore, reading those words to exclude converted cases is unwarranted.

When Congress drafted statutes providing for dismissal in chapters 11, 12 and 13, it directed the court to "dismiss a case under this chapter." 11 U.S.C. §§§ 1112(b), 1208(b) and 1307(b). All of those provisions apply to converted cases except as otherwise expressly indicated in the statutes. And when Congress excluded certain converted cases from the reach of those statutes, it did so expressly and unambiguously. See 11 U.S.C. § 1208(b) (which applies "if the case has not been converted under section 706 or 1112"); § 1307(b) (which applies "if the case has not been converted under section 706, 1112, or 1208").

The following table sets out the relevant portions of the three dismissal statutes and the language of section 707(b)(1) at issue here. A comparison of those statutes shows that Congress used identical language in all four – but it added the five additional words to section 707(b) "filed by an individual debtor."

11 U.S.C. § 707(b)(1)	“the court . . . may dismiss a case [filed by an individual debtor] under this chapter”
11 U.S.C. § 1112(b)	“the court shall . . . dismiss a case under this chapter ”
11 U.S.C. § 1208(b)	“the court shall dismiss a case under this chapter.”
11 U.S.C. § 1307(b)	“the court shall dismiss a case under this chapter.”

(Emphasis and brackets added).

Those five words make up a self-contained limitation on the application of section 707(b), ensuring that only cases involving individual debtors can be dismissed for abuse. There is no indication in the text that Congress also intended those five words to change the meaning of the phrase “a case . . . under this chapter” from including converted cases to excluding those cases. If Congress wanted to exclude converted cases from dismissal for abuse under section 707(b), it could have done so expressly and unambiguously as it did in the other dismissal statutes.

2. Alternatively, even if section 707(b)(1) is read to apply only to a case filed under chapter 7, the Code indicates that Congress did not intend the word “filed” to exclude converted cases.

Even if this Court were to conclude that the text of section 707(b)(1) applies only to cases “filed . . . under” chapter 7, the United States Trustee established that when a bankruptcy case is converted to another chapter, it is deemed to have been "filed" under that new chapter. Appellant's Chapman brief at 11-14. The Eighth Circuit said so in Resendez v. Lindquist, 691 F.2d 397, 399 (8th Cir. 1982) (citing 11 U.S.C. § 348(a), the statutory provision governing the effect of conversion). The nearly unanimous view held by bankruptcy courts that the words "filed under" in section 1328(f) encompass converted cases buttress that conclusion. See cases cited in Appellant's Chapman brief at 15-16. And twenty years of pre-BAPCPA practice during which courts assumed that converted cases could be reviewed for substantial abuse provides further support that section 707(b) applies to converted cases. See Appellant's Chapman brief at 20-22.

The Appellees have no real response to these arguments. They assert that section 707(b) is not among the sections excepted from the general rule in section 348(a) that conversion does not change the date of the order for relief. Appellees' brief at 18. But that is a different issue. The Appellees fail to explain how that rebuts Resendez and the numerous bankruptcy court decisions holding that converted cases are deemed "filed" under the new chapter. See cases cited in Appellant's Chapman brief at 13.

Section 348(b) is essentially a timing provision. It says that the reference in certain provisions to "the order for relief under this chapter" will mean the date of conversion. Since section 707(b)(1) has no reference to "the order for relief under this chapter," there would be no reason to include it in section 348(b). In any event, the date of the order for relief is not an issue in this case. Section 348(a) squarely supports the government's position that converted cases are filed under the new chapter, as the Eighth Circuit stated in Resendez.

The Appellees do not dispute the Eighth Circuit's interpretation of section 348; they argue only that Resendez did not address the precise issue in these appeals. Appellees' brief at 18. Even if Resendez is not binding precedent on the present issue, it is persuasive authority for the United States Trustee's view that section 707(b)(1) applies to converted cases.

Further, the Appellees ignore the fact that courts almost unanimously have held that the term "filed under" in section 1328(f) of the Bankruptcy Code encompasses converted cases. Similar language in the Bankruptcy Code should be interpreted the same way. Commissioner of Internal Revenue v. Lundy, 516 U.S. 235, 250 (1996). The Appellees fail to explain why the language in section 707(b) should be read more narrowly than the identical language in section 1328(f).

The Appellees try to minimize the relevance of pre-BAPCPA practice, asserting that even though everyone assumed section 707(b) applied to converted cases before 2005, no court actually decided the issue. But whether or not courts directly confronted the issue on appeal, pre-BAPCPA practice undermines the Appellees' argument that the word "filed" can only mean originally commenced. If that were so, it is difficult to imagine how section 707(b) could have been misinterpreted by bankruptcy courts and practitioners for over twenty years.

Contrary to the Appellees' contention, the government's reading does not render the words "filed" and "under this chapter" superfluous. Appellees' brief at 14, 17. Congress's word choice reflects its intent to include, rather than exclude converted cases from review for abuse.

Congress used the phrase "originally . . . commenced" when it meant only the initiation of the entire case. 11 U.S.C. § 1112(a)(2). It used the term "filed" to include both cases originally commenced under and cases converted to a particular chapter. 11 U.S.C. § 1328(f). Congress did not say "originally commenced" in section 707(b). It said "filed." The purpose of using that word together with the phrase "under this chapter" was to include all cases pending under chapter 7, both those that began in chapter 7 and those converted to that chapter.

C. There Is No Majority Position On This Issue.

The Appellees place great weight on their assertion that the majority of courts that have decided this issue agree with their interpretation of section 707(b). The Appellees cite five bankruptcy court decisions in addition to the two on appeal here. Appellees' brief at 16. But one of the cited decisions, In re Miller, 381 B.R.

736 (Bankr. W.D. Ark. 2008) (sustaining objections to chapter 13 debtors' plans) does not even involve a chapter 7 case, so its commentary on whether section 707(b) applies in converted cases is dicta. And the Appellees did not cite the most recent decision on this issue, which agreed that a case converted to chapter 7 may be scrutinized for abuse. In re Kraft, No. 09-21052, slip op. at 8-9 (Bankr. D. Wyo. Aug. 13, 2010). By the United States Trustee's count, there are six decisions going each way – hardly a compelling majority. Further, three of the decisions the Appellees rely on – the decisions below and In re Dudley – are currently on appeal.[6] And, the only reviewing court to consider the issue to date affirmed the applicability of section 707(b) to converted cases. Justice v. Advanced Control Solutions, Inc., No. 07-5231, 2008 WL 4368668 (W.D. Ark. Sept. 22, 2008).

The lack of a clear majority on this issue weighs against relying on the supposedly plain and unequivocal meaning of the word "filed" as referring only to the commencement of a case. If "filed" actually were susceptible to only one interpretation, courts would not have interpreted it to mean something else for years and would not continue to do so today.

[6] In re Dudley, 405 B.R. 790 (Bankr. W.D. Va. 2009), is currently on appeal to the United States District Court for the Western District of Virginia.

The courts that have held that section 707(b) applies in converted cases have not, as the Appellees allege, rejected the plain language of the statute. They simply have refused to base their statutory interpretation on a single word taken out of context. They have chosen instead to interpret the statute in the context of the Bankruptcy Code as a whole, in a way that not only respects the statutory language, but also effectuates its purpose of preventing debtors with a clear ability to pay to avoid doing so.

D. Including Converted Cases Within the Scope of Section 707(b) Does Not Lead to Absurd Results.

The Appellees argue that the broader interpretation of section 707(b) leads to absurd results for two reasons. First, the bankruptcy clerk might not be able to give timely notice of a presumption of abuse under section 342(d) in a converted case. And second, the means test might be based on outdated financial data in a converted case. Not only are those arguments not persuasive, but Appellees' own interpretation leads to an irreconcilable conflict within the Code and numerous other inconsistencies.

1. Debtors can be given adequate notice in converted cases that the presumption of abuse has arisen.

The Appellees' contention that the government's interpretation is absurd in light of section 342(d)'s notice requirement is unfounded. Appellees' brief at 17-

18. Even assuming that in some converted cases, bankruptcy clerks could not provide notice that the presumption of abuse arises within ten days of "the filing of the petition" as section 342(d) directs, there is no problem. Bankruptcy courts can use their power under section 102(1) to extend the time for notice in those cases. See 11 U.S.C. § 102(1) (defining "notice" as such notice as is appropriate in the particular circumstances). At least one bankruptcy court has considered and rejected the argument that section 342(d) supports the Appellees' interpretation, attributing the discrepancy simply to "sloppy drafting." In re Kerr, Nos. 06-12302, 06-12881, 2007 WL 2119291, at *4 (Bankr. W.D. Wash. July 18, 2007).

2. Application of the means test does not produce absurd results in converted cases.

Nor does application of the means test based on a previously filed form lead to absurd results as Appellees assert. Appellees' brief at 18. Under section 707(b)(2)(B), debtors can introduce evidence of special circumstances in connection with their means test if their financial circumstances have changed since they commenced their case. 11 U.S.C. § 707(b)(2)(B). Then where appropriate, their monthly income or expenses can be adjusted for purposes of rebutting the presumption of abuse. Id. Moreover, section 707(b)(3)(B)'s test of actual ability to pay relies on financial circumstances existing at discharge. In re

Cortez, 457 F.3d at 458. Also, if circumstances warrant, the United States Trustee could decline to file a motion to dismiss. 11 U.S.C. § 704(b)(2).

3. The Appellees' interpretation produces an irreconcilable conflict and numerous inconsistencies with other Code provisions.

And at a minimum, the Appellees' interpretation of section 707(b) is irreconcilable with one section of the Code and is inconsistent with numerous others. The United States Trustee has previously discussed in this reply how the Appellees' interpretation is inconsistent with sections 348(a), 1328(f), and three other dismissal provisions. In addition, the Appellees have failed to explain how their interpretation of section 707(b) can be reconciled with the United States Trustee's obligation under section 704(b) to review all individual debtors' cases under chapter 7 for abuse and take appropriate action. 11 U.S.C. § 704(b). Nor have they addressed the fact that Congress expressly and unequivocally excepted certain debtors, such as active duty military personnel, but did not expressly except converted cases from scrutiny for abuse under section 707(b). 11 U.S.C. § 707(b)(2)(D). They also have not explained why Congress used the term "originally commenced" in the Code rather than "filed" to refer exclusively to the initiation of a bankruptcy case. 11 U.S.C. § 1112(a)(2). In short, the United States

Trustee's interpretation is more consistent, makes better sense, and is the only interpretation that effectuates the purpose of the statute.

Preliminary Statement: Why The Government Appeals.

Last year, a unanimous Supreme Court ruled that federal law prohibited an attorney who represented a chapter 11 bankruptcy-debtor from being paid by the debtor's bankruptcy estate for work the attorney performed after his client's chapter 11 case converted to chapter 7 because the chapter 7 trustee had not retained the attorney as chapter 7 counsel. Lamie v. United States Trustee, 540 U.S. 526 (2004).

The facts of this case mirror Lamie's so the result should have been the same. The court below, however, acting without the benefit of briefing by the parties, determined it could award under state law the very compensation that Lamie prohibited under federal law. The government appeals that erroneous ruling to uphold the rule of law pronounced in Lamie and thereby ensure that bankruptcy estate funds are used to pay lawyers only in the manner that Congress directed in the Bankruptcy Code.

The government also appeals because the decision below denies federal bankruptcy law its rightful primacy in federal bankruptcy cases. Through the Bankruptcy Code, Congress has enacted a comprehensive federal scheme for administering federal bankruptcy cases and compensating lawyers in those cases. The lower court's state law ruling interferes with this comprehensive federal scheme and is preempted by it.

Statement of Jurisdiction

The United States Bankruptcy Court for the District of Massachusetts had jurisdiction over Ropes & Gray's final fee application in the CK Liquidation Corporation bankruptcy case under 28 U.S.C. 157(a) (A479).[1] That court granted Ropes' application by order entered September 15, 2004 (A601). The bankruptcy court denied the United States Trustee's timely-filed motion for reconsideration (A614) by order entered February 28, 2005 (A682). The United States Trustee timely appealed the bankruptcy court's September 15, 2004, and February 28, 2005, orders by notice of appeal filed under 28 U.S.C. 158(c)(2) and Fed. R Bankr. P. 8002(b) on March 10, 2005 (A694). This Court has jurisdiction over this appeal under 28 U.S.C. 158(a)(1).

Standard of Review

The government does not appeal the lower court's $455,331 award to Ropes & Gray for work the firm performed while CK was a chapter 11 debtor. See In re CK Liquidation Corp., 321 B.R. 10, 12 (Bankr. D. Mass. 2005) (Ropes received $455,331 in fees and expenses for that work). The government suggests the lower court committed an error of law in relying upon Massachusetts lien law to award Ropes $7,820 for work it performed after the debtor converted from chapter 11 to chapter 7. Id. This Court reviews questions of law de novo. Smith v. Fitchburg Pub. Sch., 401 F.3d 16, 21 (1st Cir. 2005).

Statement of the Issues Presented for Review

1. Last year, the Supreme Court ruled unanimously that federal bankruptcy law forbids courts from using bankruptcy-estate money to pay a chapter 11 debtor's attorney for work the attorney performs after his client's case converts to chapter 7 unless the chapter 7 trustee re-employs the attorney under 11 U.S.C. 327(a). In this case, the lower court awarded Ropes & Gray $7,820 of estate funds for work performed after its client's chapter 11 case converted to chapter 7 even though the trustee did not employ Ropes as chapter 7 counsel. Did the lower court violate federal law in doing so?

2. Through the Bankruptcy Code, Congress has enacted comprehensive federal schemes for administering bankruptcy cases and awarding fees to bankruptcy professionals. The Supreme Court and the United States Court of Appeals for the First Circuit have consistently ruled that such federal bankruptcy law schemes preempt inconsistent state laws. Did the court below err by relying upon Massachusetts lien law to pay $7,820 to Ropes when those payments are inconsistent with the Bankruptcy Code?

3. Under Massachusetts lien law several conditions must be met before a party may impose a lien upon funds of another party. Assuming an attorney could rely upon Massachusetts lien law to obtain payment for post-conversion work when not employed under section 327(a), is it proper to allow Ropes to satisfy its $7,820 claim under Massachusetts lien law if those conditions have not been satisfied?

Statement of the Case

CK Liquidation Corporation filed a chapter 11 bankruptcy case in an effort to reorganize its business (A1). Acting under 11 U.S.C. 327(a), the bankruptcy court appointed Ropes & Gray to act as CK's chapter 11 bankruptcy counsel (A156).[2] CK could not successfully reorganize. On February 2, 2004, CK filed a motion under 11 U.S.C. 1112(a) to voluntarily convert its case to a chapter 7 liquidation case (A433). See 11 U.S.C. 701, et seq. (federal statutes governing liquidation cases). The bankruptcy court granted that motion (A443), which had the effect under Lamie v. United States Trustee, 540 U.S. 526, 531-32 (2004) of "terminat[ing]" Ropes' employment.

Without being re-employed under section 327(a) in the chapter 7 case, Ropes provided modest services after the case converted to chapter 7, and then filed a final fee application under 11 U.S.C. 330 seeking $455,331 for its chapter 11 work and $7,820 for its chapter 7 work (A474). The United States Trustee did not object to Ropes' $455,331 fee request (A606). The United States Trustee opposed Ropes' request that it receive $7,820 for chapter 7 work on the ground that the Supreme Court had prohibited such compensation in Lamie v. United States Trustee, 540 U.S. 526 (2004) (A606-07). By order entered September 15, 2004, the bankruptcy court awarded Ropes all the fees it sought (A601). The United States Trustee asked the court to reconsider its award of post-conversion chapter 7 fees (A614). The bankruptcy court denied the reconsideration motion by a memorandum of decision and order entered February 28, 2005 (A682). This appeal followed.

Statement of the Facts

1. Statutory Framework. The Bankruptcy Code, 11 U.S.C. 101, et seq., regulates the retention, compensation and payment of bankruptcy professionals in chapter 7 and chapter 11 cases. The Code also gives chapter 7 trustees control over estate assets and the management and selection of counsel. Finally, the Code dictates that third parties possessing estate property, including professionals, must turn it over to the trustee upon the trustee's appointment.

Sections 327(a) and 1107(a) of the Bankruptcy Code allow chapter 11 debtors in possession to ask the bankruptcy court for permission to retain a lawyer to help represent the chapter 11 bankruptcy estate. See Lamie v. United States Trustee, 540 U.S. 526, 531-32 (2004) (construing and applying 11 U.S.C. 327(a) and 1107(a)). In order to receive compensation from a bankruptcy estate, attorneys in chapter 7 and chapter 11 cases must meet two tests. First, they must be employed under section 327(a). Lamie, 540 U.S. at 529 ("affirm[ing]" the lower court's ruling that attorneys may not be compensated from the estate "unless the attorney has been appointed under § 327 of the Code."). Second, they must receive a fee award under section 330. Id.

Section 330(a) fee awards are not self-executing. Section 503(b)(2) of the Code authorizes a bankruptcy estate to pay compensation awarded under section 330(a)(1) as an administrative expense. 11 U.S.C. 503(b)(2). This is significant because administrative expense awards receive first payment priority under section 507(a) of the Code. 11 U.S.C. 507(a)(1) (giving first priority to "administrative expenses allowed under section 503(b)").

The Bankruptcy Code does not authorize bankruptcy courts to award fees to attorneys who represent chapter 7 debtors unless the chapter 7 trustee retains the firm under 11 U.S.C. 327(a). Lamie, 540 U.S. at 538-39 ("we hold that § 330(a)(1) does not authorize compensation awards to debtors' attorneys from estate funds unless they are employed as authorized by § 327. If the attorney is to be paid in a chapter 7 case, he must be employed by the trustee and approved by the court.").

Under the Code, a lawyer's representation of a debtor in chapter 11 "terminate[s]" as a matter of federal law when the chapter 11 case converts to chapter 7 and thereafter the chapter 7 trustee controls the selection of new chapter 7 counsel. Lamie, 540 U.S. at 531-32. A "terminated" chapter 11 counsel may receive compensation from the estate for chapter 7 work only if the trustee re-employs terminated counsel under section 327 to perform chapter 7 work. Id.

Upon commencement of a chapter 7 case, all of the debtors' property becomes property of the bankruptcy estate. 11 U.S.C. 541(a). Under the Bankruptcy Code, all third parties - including "terminated" debtors' counsel - must turn over all property of the estate to the chapter 7 trustee. 11 U.S.C. 542(a). Under federal law, the chapter 7 trustee becomes the estate's sole representative. 11 U.S.C. 323(a). See CFTC v. Weintraub, 471 U.S. 343, 352-53 (1985) (holding a trustee ousts corporate management and controls the corporate debtor, including its decisions relating to counsel). The chapter 7 trustee's duties include taking possession of all estate property and liquidating it for division among the debtors' pre-petition creditors. 11 U.S.C. 704. If the trustee needs legal assistance in doing so, the trustee may file a motion under section 327 requesting authorization to retain counsel. 11 U.S.C. 327; Lamie, 540 U.S. at 531-32.

2. Factual Background.

Ropes & Gray is approved as CK’s chapter 11 counsel.

CK Liquidation Corporation, formerly known as Cadkey Corporation, sought relief under the debt reorganization provisions of chapter 11 of the Bankruptcy Code, 11 U.S.C. 1101, et seq., by petition filed August 22, 2003 (A1). CK immediately asked the bankruptcy court to appoint Ropes & Gray to act as chapter 11 bankruptcy counsel (A12).

The application sought authorization to employ Ropes only to do chapter 11 work (A16-18).[4] Similarly, in the “Wherefore” clause of its application CK sought permission to employ Ropes only “during the Chapter 11 case” (A23).

CK’s application was accompanied by the affidavit of Mr. James M. Wilton, a Ropes partner (A28). In it, Ropes disclosed it had received a pre-petition “security retainer” from CK (A39). Ropes told the court and the parties in interest that Ropes held the retainer “in connection with” the chapter 11 case, and Ropes never indicated that it wished to use the retainer to pay fees after the chapter 11 case terminated or if it subsequently converted to a chapter 7 case. Id.

In a February 19, 2003, pre-bankruptcy engagement letter signed by Ropes and CK, attached to Mr. Wilton’s affidavit, Ropes “acknowledge[d] that [CK] ha[d] delivered to us a vacuum’ caused by possible creditor inactivity.").

[4] Ropes represented that “[b]y this Application, the Debtor seeks to . . . employ . . . Ropes in connection with the filing of its chapter 11 petition and prosecution of its Chapter 11 Case” (A16).

[pre-petition] retainer in the amount of $81,715, which we are holding as security for payment of our invoices " (A43-44). The engagement letter provided that the retainer was restricted to legal work involving CK's "obligation to its creditors, Micro Control Systems, Inc. and Harold Bowers as well as a possible Chapter 11 filing by [CK] and sale of assets." Id. The retainer did not purport to transfer title to the retainer funds to Ropes. Id. The retainer did not purport to apply to any work Ropes might perform in a chapter 7 proceeding. Id. The retainer did not purport to give Ropes any rights different from or greater than it was entitled to receive as bankruptcy counsel in a bankruptcy case. Id. In the retainer, Ropes agreed that "[a]ny remaining portion of the amounts advanced will be refundable at the conclusion of our representation. . . ." Id.

Acting under 11 U.S.C. 327(a), the bankruptcy court appointed Ropes to act as CK's bankruptcy counsel (A156). The order did not purport to give Ropes any right to receive funds outside that allowed under sections 327, 330, 503 and 507 of the Bankruptcy Code.

After CK converts from chapter 11 to chapter 7, CK's chapter 7 trustee never employs Ropes as his chapter 7 counsel.

CK could not successfully reorganize. On February 2, 2004, CK filed a motion under 11 U.S.C. 1112(a) asking the court to convert its case to a chapter 7 liquidation case (A433), which the court promptly granted (A443). See generally 11 U.S.C. 701, et seq. (federal statutes governing chapter 7 cases).

John A. Burdick was appointed to act as the chapter 7 trustee to administer and liquidate the CK bankruptcy estate (A448). See 11 U.S.C. 323(a) (making Mr. Burdick the representative of the estate); 704 (specifying the duties of a chapter 7 trustee). By application filed March 5, 2004, Mr. Burdick sought permission under 11 U.S.C. 327(a) to appoint himself as legal counsel to the trustee (A450). The court granted the chapter 7 trustee's application by order entered March 19, 2004 (A462). The chapter 7 trustee also filed an application under section 327(e) asking the court to appoint Sherin and Lodgen LLP as special counsel to the chapter 7 trustee (A464). The court entered an order approving Sherin and Lodgen's appointment as special counsel (A599).

The chapter 7 trustee never filed an application - under section 327 or otherwise - seeking to appoint Ropes as chapter 7 counsel. The bankruptcy court never entered an order appointing Ropes to act as chapter 7 counsel.

Ropes never turned over the retainer funds in its possession to the chapter 7 trustee after CK's case converted to chapter 7. Although Ropes had not received an order under section 327 authorizing it to provide services in the chapter 7 case, Ropes did modest work in the chapter 7 case. CK, 321 B.R. at 12.

The bankruptcy court uses bankruptcy-estate funds to pay Ropes for its chapter 11 and its chapter 7 work.

Ropes subsequently filed a final fee application under 11 U.S.C. 330 (A479). In it, Ropes sought not only $455,331 for its chapter 11 work but also $7,820 for its chapter 7 work. Id. The United States Trustee did not oppose Ropes' $455,331 fee request but opposed its $7,820 request for chapter 7 fees on the ground that the Supreme Court had prohibited such compensation in Lamie v. United States Trustee, 540 U.S. 526 (2004) (A606-07). By order entered September 15, 2004, the bankruptcy court, with no analysis, awarded Ropes all the fees it sought (A601).

The bankruptcy court denies the United States Trustee's reconsideration motion.

The United States Trustee sought reconsideration of the court's $7,820 award of post-conversion chapter 7 fees on the ground the award was barred by the Bankruptcy Code as interpreted by the Supreme Court in Lamie (A614). The bankruptcy court denied the reconsideration motion by a memorandum of decision and order entered February 28, 2005 (A682). In re CK Liquidation Corp., 321 B.R. 10 (Bankr. D. Mass. 2005).

In that, decision, the court below rejected the two arguments that Ropes raised in support of its chapter 7 fee request, ruling both "fail[ed]" under Lamie. CK, 321 B.R. at 17. Instead, the court determined sua sponte that post-conversion compensation could be awarded despite Lamie because Ropes possessed a state law lien arising from its pre–petition retainer and that lien independently allowed Ropes to recover for post-conversion work. Id. In the lower court's view, Lamie never "suggest[ed] or intimate[ed] that compensation for necessary transition services [when a case converts from chapter 11 to chapter 7] could not be made from the balance of a pre-petition retainer." Id. at 19. The court instead surmised "the Supreme Court suggested the opposite," because the Court concluded that "section 330(a)(1) does not prevent a debtor from engaging counsel before a chapter 7 conversion and paying reasonable compensation in advance to ensure that the filing is in order." Id. at 19 (quoting in part Lamie, 540 U.S. at 537-38). The court determined this statement meant Ropes could collect and use a pre-petition retainer throughout the case, concluding "the Supreme Court could only have been referring [in the preceding passage] to a pre-petition payment made for legal services to be rendered in a Chapter 11 case and in the form of either a flat fee or security retainer." Id.

The Court next concluded that Ropes possessed a lien under Massachusetts law that encumbered estate assets sufficient to pay its post-conversion fees. Id. at 17-20 (relying upon ch. 106, Article 9 of the General Laws of the Commonwealth). The court suggested that "[i]n order for a security interest to attach [under that provision], value must be given, the debtor must have rights in the collateral (or the power to transfer those rights) and at least one of a number of other conditions must be met as set forth in § 9- 203(b), one of which is an authenticated security agreement. M.G.L. ch. 106, § 9-203(b)." Id. at 18.

In the court's view, "each of those requirements were met" in the CK case. Id. The court reasoned Ropes & Gray gave "value . . . by virtue of the legal services which R[opes] & G[ray] provided to the Debtor as a debtor in possession and was compelled to provide in the Chapter 7 case which followed." Id. The court concluded that "the Debtor had rights in the pre-petition funds transferred to R[opes] & G[ray] as a retainer, as well as the right to transfer those funds; and the written retainer agreement between the parties, evidencing the transfer of the moneys to the attorney as a retainer, served as a sufficient security agreement. Perfection of R[opes] & G[ray]'s security interest was satisfied by possession of the funds, notwithstanding the requirement to hold the monies in trust." Id. (citing Mass. Gen. Laws ch. 106, § 9-313(a)). Given that, the court concluded that Massachusetts law allowed Ropes to keep estate property after the chapter 7 case commenced, provide services post-petition without seeking or obtaining a court order under section 327, and to simply take payment from estate funds.

The court reached those legal conclusions without any briefing by the parties. In reaching its decision, the court did not address whether: (A) any rights Ropes had to the retainer terminated as a matter of federal law upon the institution of the chapter 7 case, or (B) federal bankruptcy law preempted the Massachusetts Uniform Commercial Code provisions the court sought to rely upon.

Summary of Argument

The court below used bankruptcy-estate funds to pay Ropes & Gray for work Ropes performed after its client's chapter 11 case converted to chapter 7. That decision merits reversal because it contradicts the Supreme Court's unanimous ruling last term in Lamie v. United States Trustee, 540 U.S. 526 (2004). Lamie held that conversion of a debtor's chapter 11 case to chapter 7 "terminate[s]" the chapter 11 counsel's representation and prohibits former chapter 11 counsel from receiving bankruptcy-estate funds for any work it performs in the ensuing chapter 7 case unless the chapter 7 trustee obtains an order under 11 U.S.C. 327 re-employing the firm to perform chapter 7 work. Ropes was not re-employed in CK's chapter 7 case so Lamie squarely prohibited the lower court's $7,820-award to Ropes for post-conversion services.

Alternatively, the lower court's decision merits reversal because federal law preempts the state law payment theory the lower court replied upon to negate Lamie. First, sections 327, 330, 503 and 507 of the Bankruptcy Code establish a comprehensive scheme that controls the retention of lawyers and governs their compensation and payment from bankruptcy-estate funds. These sections preempt the lower court's state law award because Ropes had not been retained in the chapter 7 case under section 327, which meant it could not receive a fee award under section 330 and could not receive payment from the bankruptcy estate under sections 503 and 507.

In addition, the Bankruptcy Code independently preempts the lower court's state law compensation theory because it conflicts with sections 323(a), 541(a), 542(a) and 704(1) and (2), which dictate how decisions in chapter 7 cases are made. These sections require everyone - including Ropes - to turn over all estate funds to the chapter 7 trustee as soon as the chapter 7 case commences and then allows only the chapter 7 trustee to select the counsel that will work in the chapter 7 case. The lower court's state law award theory interferes with this scheme because it was premised upon Ropes' using estate funds that it had failed to turn over in violation of sections 541(a) and 542(a), and upon the erroneous notion that Ropes could perform chapter 7 work without a section 327 retention by the trustee even though that negated the trustee's power under sections 323 and 704, and conflicted with the Supreme Court's ruling in CFTC v. Weintraub, 471 U.S. 343 (1985), both of which authorize only the trustee to make counsel decisions for corporate-bankruptcy debtors - like CK - in cases managed by trustees.

Finally, even the court's construction of Massachusetts law is wrong. The court below, without any suggestion by Ropes, wrongly concluded that Ropes' retainer agreement satisfied the conditions precedent to Ropes having a valid lien under Massachusetts law. That erroneous interpretation of state laws forms a separate and independent basis for reversal.

Argument

Relying largely upon state law, the bankruptcy court awarded fees to a terminated chapter 11 debtor's counsel for work counsel performed after its client's case converted to chapter 7. The lower court's ruling merits reversal for four separate and independent reasons. First, it violates the Supreme Court's decision in Lamie v. United States Trustee, 540 U.S. 526 (2004). Second, federal law preempts the lower court's state law payment theory for two separate and independent reasons. Finally, the court's ruling fails even under state law.

A. The order entered below violated federal law, as the Supreme Court interpreted it in Lamie, because it awarded fees to a firm that had not been retained in the chapter 7 case under 11 U.S.C. 327.

This appeal is controlled by Lamie v. United States Trustee, which "held that § 330(a)(1) does not authorize compensation awards to debtors' attorneys from estate funds [for chapter 7 work], unless they are employed [in the chapter 7 case by the chapter 7 trustee] as authorized by § 327." Lamie v. United States Trustee, 540 U.S. 526, 529, 538 (2004). Lamie mandates reversal here.

Lamie held that Mr. John Lamie's section 327(a) appointment as chapter 11 debtor's counsel did not allow Mr. Lamie to be paid from bankruptcy-estate funds for work he performed after the chapter 11 case of his client, Equipment Services, converted to chapter 7. Lamie, 540 U.S. at 531-32. Lamie also held that the conversion of Equipment Services' case from chapter 11 to chapter 7 "terminated [Equipment Services'] status as a debtor-in-possession and so terminated [Mr. Lamie's] service under § 327 as an attorney for the debtor in possession." Id. Lamie then held that Mr. Lamie, as a terminated chapter 11 attorney, could not receive estate compensation for work he performed in Equipment Services' chapter 7 liquidation case because the chapter 7 trustee had not obtained a court order under section 327 authorizing Mr. Lamie's retention as counsel to the chapter 7 trustee. Id. at 529, 531-32.

Consistent with Lamie, the Second, Third, Seventh and Tenth circuits have held that a section 330 award is the only way a professional may receive compensation from estate funds under the Bankruptcy Code and the right to such an award is conditioned upon a section 327(a) appointment. In re Milwaukee Engraving Co., 219 F.3d 635, 636 (7th Cir. 2000) (holding attorneys may not receive compensation under the Bankruptcy Code when their section 327(a) employment application is denied (relying upon In re Singson, 41 F.3d 316, 320 (7th Cir. 1994)); F/S Airlease II, Inc. v. Simon, 844 F.2d 99, 108-109 (3rd Cir. 1988) (same); In re Keren Limited Partnership, 189 F.3d 86, 88 (2nd Cir. 1999) (same); In re Albrecht, 233 F.3d 1258, 1260 (10th Cir. 2000) (denying such compensation under the Bankruptcy Code).

Thus, under the Bankruptcy Code, a firm must be retained by the chapter 7 trustee under section 327(a) and subsequently receive an award under section 330 in order to have its chapter 7 fees paid by the estate. As Lamie, Milwaukee Engraving, Singson, F/S Airlease, Keren, and Albrecht hold, there are no exceptions under the Code to this two-part requirement.

The court below allowed post-conversion fees, in part, because it read Lamie as allowing fees in converted cases so long as the debtor made an anticipatory payment to its counsel prior to filing bankruptcy. CK, 321 B.R. at 19. This reading cannot be reconciled with Lamie's holding because Mr. Lamie received a pre-petition retainer at the same point in the Equipment Services case that Ropes received one in the CK case. That payment did not take Mr. Lamie outside the ambit of section 327(a). Lamie, 540 U.S. at 538. CK's payment does not take Ropes outside section 327(a) either.

There can be no serious question that the rule of law the Supreme Court announced in Lamie controls here because the facts of the two cases mirror one another. In Lamie, Mr. Lamie agreed to represent a corporate debtor in its chapter 11 case.[5] So did Ropes.[6] Mr. Lamie received a security retainer from his client prior to filing a chapter 11 bankruptcy petition.[7] So did Ropes.[8] Mr. Lamie's client filed an application under 11 U.S.C. 327(a) to employ Mr. Lamie as debtor's counsel in its chapter 11 bankruptcy case.[9] So did Ropes' client.[10] Mr. Lamie's retention in the chapter 11 case was approved by the bankruptcy court under section 327(a).[11] So was Ropes'.[12] Mr. Lamie performed services during his client's chapter 11 case.[13] So did Ropes.[14] Mr. Lamie's client's chapter 11 case was converted to a chapter 7 case.[15] So was Ropes'. After conversion to chapter 7, a surplus remained in the security retainer held by Mr. Lamie.[16] Ropes' security retainer also had a post-conversion surplus.[17] Upon conversion, a chapter 7 trustee was appointed in Mr. Lamie's client's chapter 7 case.[18] That also occurred in Ropes' case.[19] Mr. Lamie failed to turn over estate property - the unused retainer balance - to the trustee under 11

U.S.C. 542(a).[20] Although Ropes admits the unused retainer was estate property it also failed to turn it over to the chapter 7 trustee.[21] The chapter 7 trustee never filed an application to employ Mr. Lamie in the chapter 7 case under section 327.[22] The CK trustee never filed an application to employ Ropes in this chapter 7 case.[23] Without court order and without having been retained under section 327, Mr. Lamie did modest work after his client's case converted to chapter 7.[24] So did Ropes.[25] Mr. Lamie then filed an application seeking final compensation under section 330 of the Bankruptcy Code.[26] So did Ropes.[27] Mr. Lamie took the position that he was entitled to compensation for the work he did after Equipment Service's conversion to chapter 7.[28] Despite the Lamie decision, so did Ropes.[29]

Under these facts, the Supreme Court ruled that Mr. Lamie had no right to draw upon the retainer to pay for any work he performed post-conversion because he had not been retained under section 327 by the chapter 7 trustee. Lamie, 540 U.S. at 533-42. The Supreme Court's ruling controls in Ropes' case just as it did in Mr. Lamie's. For this reason, the court below erred in diverging from Lamie by awarding post-conversion fees.[30]

B. The lower court's arguments for distinguishing Lamie reprise arguments that were pressed before and rejected by the Supreme Court in Lamie.

The bankruptcy court premised its ruling, in part, on a series of policy judgments regarding its perception of counsel's ethical obligations in a converted case, a debtor's need for counsel in a converted case, and basic fairness.[31] CK, 321 B.R. at 12-15, 20. Ironically, Mr. Lamie advanced the same arguments before the Supreme Court, which rejected them. See Brief of Petitioner in Lamie v. United States Trustee, 2003 WL 21295241, at 30-36. Like the court

[30] The court below also misread Lamie's dicta that section 330(a)(1) does not prevent attorneys from taking a pre-petition retainer "to ensure the [bankruptcy] filing is in order." CK, 321 B.R. at 19. The court's error stemmed from its failure to recognize the significance of the word "filing" in that sentence. The "filing" of a petition occurs before the case is commenced. 11 U.S.C. 301 (a bankruptcy case "is commenced by the filing" of the case). In the Lamie dicta, the Supreme Court was merely describing how law firms in chapter 7 cases get compensated for their pre-filing bankruptcy preparation work. This was a question that the United States and Mr. Lamie discussed extensively in their briefs. See, e.g., Brief of Respondent in Lamie v. United States Trustee, 2003 WL 21839367 at 38. Contrary to the inference drawn by the court below, the Supreme Court never suggested attorneys could evade Lamie's holding by siphoning-off estate property to fund a war-chest for post-petition work not authorized by the trustee or the Code. Nor are we aware of any other court having reached such an odd conclusion. And, as we explain below, this view conflicts not only with Lamie but with the Indian Motocycle, Equipment Services, and Mahendra circuit decisions as well. As we also explain below, the lower court's reading of this passage inarguably conflicts with Bankruptcy Code sections 327, 330, 503, 507, 542(a), 323(a) and 704, as well as with the Supreme Court's holdings in Lamie and CFTC.

[31] The bankruptcy court's decision states the United States Trustee agreed that Ropes "had continuing post-conversion duties." CK, 321 B. R. at 13. The court below inquired about this point during the hearing on the United States Trustee's reconsideration motion (A642-45). In response, the United States Trustee tried to explain that foremost these were the debtor's duties under section 521 of the Bankruptcy Code (643). More significantly, the government has not and does not take the position that counsel is necessary post-conversion. Section 521of the Bankruptcy Code imposes duties on the debtor, not its counsel, and management - not counsel, must perform those duties, which are mostly routine. Counsel's overriding duty upon conversion is to turn over all estate property in its possession. 11 U.S.C. 542(a).

below, Mr. Lamie contended that the government's construction of sections 327 and 330 would force lawyers to work for free in converted cases.[32] Id. at 33. In addition, Mr. Lamie specifically argued before the Supreme Court that converted cases should be treated with more leniency because, in his view, those debtors had a particular need for legal services.[33] Id. at 30-31.

In response, the government explained that these concerns were immaterial because few chapter 7 cases are converted chapter 11cases (only 0.26%). See Brief of Respondent in Lamie v. United States Trustee, 2003 WL 21839367 at 43. The government also explained that counsel, like Mr. Lamie - and Ropes - would not be unfairly saddled with excessive duties in converted cases. Id. (noting that "counsel may seek in advance to limit the scope of the representation to his services for the chapter 11 debtor-in-possession as approved by the court under Section 327(a) (citing the Model Rules of Professional Conduct Rule 1.2(c) (2002)).

Nor do debtors need counsel in order to perform the modest post-conversion duties that section 521 asks them to complete. In Lamie, for example, Mr. Lamie's post-conversion services [32] Mr. Lamie argued that "[a ruling for the government] creates in the attorney's mind the fear that he or she will be left working for free, in part because state law ethical obligations may require an attorney to continue to perform as counsel, regardless of the potential prohibition of payment. Fearing that the canons of ethics would prevent them from abandoning their client once a trustee entered the case, attorneys will stay away from the outset. Cf. Model Rules of Professional Conduct Rule 1.16(b) (permitting attorneys to withdraw from representing a client only 'if withdrawal can be accomplished without material adverse effect on the interests of the client' or if other unusual circumstances exist)." Id. at 33 (citation omitted).

[33] Mr. Lamie told the Court that "[t]he owners of Equipment Services, a small mine services company, had no capacity to prepare either the Chapter 11 filing or the adversary complaint that petitioner filed on behalf of the debtor. Nor would the debtor have been aware of either the significance of the conversion of the case to a Chapter 7 proceeding or its obligation to cooperate with the appointed trustee. Upon conversion, only counsel would have had the knowledge and experience either to arrange the 'Section 341' creditors meeting or to coordinate the proceedings on the adversary complaint." Id. at 30-31.

amounted to a mere $1,000. 2003 WL 21839367 at 3. Similarly, Ropes' post-conversion fees amount to a mere $7,820 (A623), and $3,567 of that are fees Ropes wants to charge for writing its bill (A630). This, perhaps as much as anything, belies the argument that debtors require massive assistance from sophisticated counsel to perform the simple tasks required of them in converted cases. And whenever terminated chapter 11 counsel's services are necessary in the chapter 7 case, CFTC[34] and Lamie allow the chapter 7 trustee to file a section 327 motion asking the court for permission to retain the "terminated" chapter 11 counsel in the chapter 7 case, something that did not happen here.

Furthermore, the Supreme Court's rationale for dismissing Mr. Lamie's policy arguments is significant. Although it found the policy concerns advanced by Mr. Lamie - the same concerns articulated by the court below - unpersuasive, Lamie, 540 U.S. at 538, the Court rejected them for a more fundamental reason, the Court's "unwillingness to soften the import of Congress' chosen words even if [those words] lead to a harsh outcome." Id. Thus, the Court refused to rule for Mr. Lamie based upon the Court's "longstanding" unwillingness to rewrite statutes, an unwillingness that "result[ed] from deference to the supremacy of the Legislature . . ." Id. (internal quotations omitted).

Just as Mr. Lamie's invitation to rewrite binding federal statutes was rebuffed by the Supreme Court, the lower court decision's to side-step Lamie and rewrite these statutes based, in part, upon policy rationale, merits reversal of the order entered below.[35]

[35] As the government explained in its response brief in Lamie, those results are not actually harsh in the typical bankruptcy case And, as the Supreme Court explained, "[s]eeming order has attended the [government's] rule's application for five years in the Fifth Circuit and for

C. The lower court's reliance upon Massachusetts lien law to authorize payment that federal law prohibits violated the Supremacy and Bankruptcy clauses of the United States Constitution and was preempted by the Bankruptcy Code.

1. Introduction.

The court below readily conceded that Lamie would have barred the court from awarding Ropes fees for work it performed during the chapter 7 case but for its sua sponte conclusion that Ropes had a state law lien that allowed such compensation. CK, 321 B.R. at 16 (holding Ropes' "argument in support of payment for post-conversion services must fail [b]ut . . . [for] the availability of [its pre-petition] retainer [as a source] for payment" under Massachusetts law). Thus, in the court's view, Massachusetts lien law could authorize payment when federal law otherwise mandated a different result.

This ruling is plainly wrong. In this case, there are two separate and independent reasons why the Bankruptcy Code would preempt any right under state lien law to use a pre-petition contract between an attorney and a client to create a lien that allows the attorney to use the retainer to pay fees it generates during a chapter 7 case. First, that would be inconsistent with the Code's comprehensive scheme under 11 U.S.C. 327, 330, 503 and 507 for retaining, awarding and paying fees to attorneys from estate funds for work done in chapter 7 cases. Second, it would be inconsistent with the Bankruptcy Code's provisions governing the administration of estate assets in chapter 7 cases - 11 U.S.C. 323(a), 541(a), 542(a) and 704, which transfer title to all estate property to the chapter 7 estate, require all third parties to turn over all estate property to the trustee, and allow only the trustee to make decisions for the corporate debtor.

four years in the Eleventh Circuit." Lamie, 540 U.S. at 537. Similarly, in the year since Lamie issued, the United States Trustee Program is not aware of any serious problems emanating from the Supreme Court's construction of federal law.

2. Under the Supremacy and Bankruptcy clauses of the United States Constitution federal bankruptcy law preempts inconsistent state laws.

It is beyond dispute under the Supremacy Clause of the United States Constitution that federal law preempts inconsistent state law.[36] The Supremacy Clause requires courts to follow federal, not state, law when Congress enacts a federal statute within the realm of its constitutional authority. Barnett Bank of Marion County, N.A. v. Nelson, 517 U.S. 25, 30 (1996).

As the Supreme Court recently reiterated in Crosby v. Nat'l Foreign Trade Counsel, inconsistent state laws must yield to congressional enactments when one of two tests is met, regardless of whether Congress has inserted a clause in legislation explicitly preempting state law. Crosby v. Nat'l Foreign Trade Council, 530 U.S. 363, 372-73 (2000). First, where Congress intends federal law to occupy a given field, state law in that area is preempted. Crosby, 530 U.S. at 372-73 (citations omitted). Second, even if Congress has not entirely displaced state regulation over the matter in question, state law is still preempted to the extent it actually conflicts with federal law. Id. This occurs when it is impossible to comply with both state and federal law, or when the state law stands as an obstacle to the accomplishment of the full purposes and objectives of Congress. Id.

Congress has satisfied these tests in the bankruptcy arena, where Congress has enacted a comprehensive and pervasive statutory scheme. See, e.g., Sherwood Partners, Inc. v. Lycos, Inc.,

[36] The Supremacy Clause of the United States Constitution mandates that "the Laws of the United States . . . shall be the supreme Law of the Land; and the Judges in every State shall be bound thereby, any Thing in the Constitution or Laws of any State to the Contrary notwithstanding." U. S. Const. art. VI, § 2. Thus, under the Supremacy Clause, federal legislation can preempt state or local laws. See M'Culloch v. Maryland, 17 U. S. (4 Wheat.) 316, 327 (1819).

394 F.3d 1198, 1201 (9th Cir. 2005) ("Bankruptcy law [preempts inconsistent state law] because it occupies a full title of the United States Code. It provides a comprehensive system of rights, obligations and procedures, as well as a complex administrative machinery that includes a special system of federal courts and United States Trustees.").

Bankruptcy is particularly federal because the Bankruptcy Clause of the Constitution, U. S. Const. art. I, § 8, grants Congress the power [t]o establish . . . uniform Laws on the subject of Bankruptcies throughout the United States." Congress has exercised that power by enacting the Bankruptcy Code, 11 U.S.C. 101, et seq. See, e.g., Sherwood, 394 F.3d at 1201 ("There can be no doubt that federal bankruptcy law is 'pervasive' and involves a federal interest 'so dominant' as to 'preclude enforcement of state laws on the same subject' - much like many other areas of congressional power listed in Article I, Section 8, of the Constitution, such as patents, copyrights, currency, national defense and immigration."); Eastern Equip. and Servs. Corp., v. Factory Point Nat'l Bank, Bennington, 236 F.3d 117, 120 (2d Cir. 2001) (same).

For these reasons, the First Circuit has repeatedly held that the Bankruptcy Code preempts state laws and private agreements that conflict with the Code. See, e.g., Commonwealth of Massachusetts v. Boston Reg'l Med. Ctr., Inc. (In re Boston Reg'l Med. Ctr., Inc.), 291 F.3d 111, 120 (1st Cir. 2002) (disregarding state law because the question "whether an obligation imposed by state law receives priority . . . under the Bankruptcy Code is a matter of federal, not state law") (citation omitted)); Bessette v. Avco Fin. Serv., Inc., 230 F.3d 439, 447 (1st Cir. 2000) (state law remedies for unjust enrichment to collect debt preempted by Bankruptcy Code); Patriot Portfolio, LLC v. Weinstein (In re Weinstein), 164 F.3d 677, 683 (1st Cir. 1999) (Massachusetts homestead statute preempted by 11 U.S.C. 522(c)); Summit Inv. and Dev. Corp. v. Leroux, 69 F.3d 608, 610 (1st Cir. 1995) (Bankruptcy Code provision governing executory contracts preempted partnership agreement); Western Auto Supply Co. v. Savage Arms, Inc. (In re Savage Indus., Inc.), 43 F.3d 714, 723 (1st Cir. 1994) (explaining that state laws are preempted whenever they "pose[] a genuine threat to the legitimate operation of the Bankruptcy Code"); Corporacion de Servicios Medicos Hospitalirios v. Moro (In re Corporacion de Servicios Medicos Hospitalarios de Fajardo), 805 F.2d 440, 444 n.3 (1st Cir. 1986) (holding 11 U.S.C. 541(a), 362(a)(3) and 365 "clearly preempt any contradictory state law"). See also Fracasso v. Reder (In re Fracasso), 187 F.3d 621 (Table) (1st Cir. 1999) (unpublished) (state homestead statute preempted by 11 U.S.C. 522) (citing Patriot Portfolio, 164 F.3d at 683).

Similarly, the Supreme Court has held that the Bankruptcy Act preempted inconsistent state laws. See, e.g., Perez v. Campbell, 402 U.S. 637 (1971) (Bankruptcy Act of 1898 preempted inconsistent provisions of the Arizona Safety Responsibility Act). See also Butner v. United States, 440 U.S. 48, 54 n.9 (1979) (state laws are "suspended only to the extent of actual conflict with the system provided by the Bankruptcy Act of Congress") (citations omitted)).

a. The Bankruptcy Code's comprehensive federal scheme under sections 327, 330, 503 and 507 for retaining lawyers, awarding them fees and paying those fees preempts inconsistent Massachusetts lien law.

The professional compensation provisions of the Bankruptcy Code - 11 U.S.C. 327 330, 503, and 507 - collectively "reveal a clear, but implicit, preemptive intent," and "create a scheme of federal regulation 'so pervasive as to make reasonable the inference that Congress left no room for the States to supplement it." Crosby, 530 U.S. at 372-73. Accord Barnett, 517 U.S. at 31.

Significantly, the Supreme Court has long held that the federal statutory scheme governing the compensation of bankruptcy professionals in bankruptcy cases is a pervasive scheme of regulation that preempts inconsistent state laws. Brown v. Gerdes, 321 U.S. 178, 183 (1944) (Chandler Act amendments to the Bankruptcy Act of 1898 created "comprehensive supervision over compensation and allowances" under federal law and "provided centralized control" over attorney fees). This is because bankruptcy jurisdiction over professional fees in bankruptcy cases is "paramount and exclusive" and federal provisions governing professional compensation "cause any conflicting [state] procedure to give way." Brown, 321 U.S. at 183 (holding that under the Bankruptcy Act, bankruptcy courts, not state courts, fix compensation for attorneys representing the estate, even in state litigation) (citations omitted).

The Bankruptcy Code of 1978, like the former Bankruptcy Act construed by the Supreme Court in Brown, comprehensively governs the retention, fee award and compensation of lawyers from estate funds. Indeed, one of the most fundamental aspects of the Bankruptcy Code is this governance and control of administrative and professional expenses under 11 U.S.C. 327, 330, 503 and 507.[37] Cf. Rome v. Braunstein, 19 F.3d 54, 57 (1st Cir. 1994) (Bankruptcy Code imposes rigorous restraints upon employment of professionals in bankruptcy cases).

Through the Bankruptcy Code, Congress has established a comprehensive set of rules, which dictate: (A) how attorneys may be retained at estate expense - through the granting of a [37] The federal bankruptcy scheme controlling professional compensation is so comprehensive that section 329 of the Code requires bankruptcy court to review even those fees that attorneys charge before they file bankruptcy petitions, and which are not paid from estate funds. 11 U.S.C. 329. Under section 329, the court may order the return of those non-estate funds if the attorney's charges were unreasonable. See, e.g., Bethea v. Adams, 352 F.3d 1125 (7th Cir. 2003) (applying section 329).

section 327 employment motion; (B) how they are compensated by the estate - through a section 330 fee award; (C) how they receive payment from the estate - through the payment of their section 330(a) award under section 503(b)(2); and (D) what priority their payment receives - first administrative priority under section 507.

Section 327(a) allows trustees to retain attorneys in chapter 7 cases by court order. 11 U.S.C. 327(a). In turn, section 330(a) allows the court to award fees to an attorney but only if the attorney has been "employed under section 327."[38] 11 U.S.C. 330(a). Section 503(b)(2) allows an attorney to receive payment from the estate for his professional services but only if "compensation . . . [has been] awarded [to the attorney] under section 330(a)." 11 U.S.C. 503(b)(2). Finally, section 507(a)(1) gives an attorney fee award under section 503(b)(2) first priority of payment as an "administrative expense" of the estate. 11 U.S.C. 507(a)(1).

Significantly, Congress made these provision interdependent. For example, an attorney's right to payment under section 503(b)(2) is conditioned upon a section 330(a) fee award and the right to grant such a section 330(a) award is conditioned upon the attorney having been retained under section 327. In this way, the Code provides a cradle-to-grave scheme for compensating attorneys from estate funds.[39]

Consistent with this pervasive scheme, the United States courts of appeals for the First, Fourth and Eighth circuits have held that attorneys may not use the proceeds of security retainers

[38] Section 330(a) also allows awards to attorneys who represent chapter 11 creditors' committees under section 1103(a), but that provision does not apply here.

[39] Even when professionals have a right to payment from the estate, the bankruptcy court may not subvert the priority scheme set forth by Congress by allowing professionals to receive more than their pro rata share from an administratively insolvent estate. See, e.g., Specker v. Eisen, 393 F.3d 659, 662-64 (6th Cir. 2004).

post-petition, holding instead that attorneys must receive compensation through valid section 330 orders. Indian Motocycle Assoc. III Partnership v. Massachusetts Housing Fin. Agency, 66 F.3d 1246, 1255 (1st Cir. 1995) (ruling "counsel would be required to file a section 330 fee application to withdraw [funds from a pre-petition security] retainer"); United States Trustee v. Equip. Serv., Inc. (In re Equip Serv., Inc.), 290 F.3d 739, 746-747 (4th Cir. 2002) (the portion of a security retainer in an attorney's possession becomes property of the chapter 7 bankruptcy estate and must be turned over to the estate), aff'd sub. nom. Lamie v. United States Trustee, 540 U.S. 526 (2004); Snyder v. Dewoskin (In re Mahendra), 131 F.3d 750, 755-56 (8th Cir. 1997) (attorney cannot use a pre-petition security retainer secured by a lien for post-petition services because the "[d]ebtor lost the right to authorize [the attorney's] legal services which could potentially further encumber this asset of the bankruptcy estate. Only the bankruptcy court could control further encumbrances of estate property" under a section 330 award) (8th Cir. 1997).

Significantly, the Eighth Circuit's Mahendra decision categorically repudiated the idea that a state law lien could authorize payment outside sections 327 and 330, holding the attorney's "lien - to the extent it was valid - was extinguished on the [bankruptcy] petition date with respect to any future advances." Mahendra, 131 F.3d at 755. Most recently, the Bankruptcy Appellate Panel for the Eight Circuit has specifically ruled that federal law prohibits an attorney from using a state law lien arising from a pre-petition security retainer to fund work in a chapter 7 case when the chapter 7 trustee had not retained the attorney under section 327 of the Code. In re On-Line Serv. Ltd, __ B.R. __, 2005 WL 600361 (B.A.P. 8th Cir. 2005) (following Lamie and Mahendra).

Also consistent with this pervasive scheme, the Second, Third, Seventh, and Tenth circuits have held that the only way attorneys may receive "payment" from bankruptcy estate funds is under subsection 503(b)(2), which requires as a condition precedent to payment that the attorney have an award under section 330 and an order of employment under section 327. Milwaukee Engraving Co., 219 F.3d at 636; Singson, 41 F.3d at 320; F/S Airlease II, Inc. v. Simon, 844 F.2d at 108-109; Keren, 189 F.3d at 88; Albrecht, 233 F.3d at 1260. Accord Lamie, 540 U.S. at 529, 538 (section 330 awards can be made in chapter 7 cases only to attorneys who had been lawfully retained under section 327).

In light of Congress' thorough regulation of all aspects of professional compensation, it is unquestionable that the bankruptcy court's application of the Massachusetts lien statute to circumvent that federal scheme was improper. Because the lower court's construction of Massachusetts law would allow recovery from the CK bankruptcy estate when sections 327, 330, 503 and 507 do not, the lower court's contrary application of Massachusetts lien law stands "as an obstacle to the accomplishment and execution of the full purposes and objectives . . . Congress" mandated in enacting the Bankruptcy Code and is preempted by the Bankruptcy Code. California Fed. Savings and Loan Assoc. v. Guerra, 479 U.S. 272, 281 (1987).

b. The Bankruptcy Code's comprehensive federal scheme for administering debtors under sections 323(a), 541(a), 542(a) and 704(1) also preempts Ropes' post-conversion claim because title to Ropes' retainer transferred to the estate; only the chapter 7 trustee could make decisions about the retainer after that; and Ropes had to turn the retainer over to the chapter 7 trustee - not retain it to unilaterally create a post-conversion secured claim against the estate for work it could not perform under the Code.
