Out-of-pocket health care expenses include medical services, prescription drugs, and medical supplies (e.g. eyeglasses, contact lenses, etc.). Elective procedures such as plastic surgery or elective dental work are generally not allowed.

Taxpayers and their dependents are allowed the standard amount monthly on a per person basis, without questioning the amounts they actually spend. If the amount claimed is more than the total allowed by the health care standards, the taxpayer must provide documentation to substantiate those expenses are necessary living expenses. Generally, the number of persons allowed should be the same as those allowed as exemptions on the taxpayer's most recent year income tax return.

The out-of-pocket health care standard amount is allowed in addition to the amount taxpayers pay for health insurance.

Disclaimer: IRS Collection Financial Standards are intended for use in calculating repayment of delinquent taxes. These Transportation Standards are effective on October 1, 2007 for purposes of federal tax administration only. Expense information for use in bankruptcy calculations can be found on the website for the U.S. Trustee Program. For bankruptcy purposes, the effective date for the standards will be January 1, 2008, to allow for the orderly administration of the bankruptcy laws.*

The transportation standards consist of nationwide figures for monthly loan or lease payments referred to as ownership costs, and additional amounts for monthly operating costs. The operating costs include maintenance, repairs, insurance, fuel, registrations, licenses, inspections, parking and tolls (These standard amounts do not include personal property taxes).

The ownership costs provide maximum allowances for the lease or purchase of up to two automobiles, if allowed as a necessary expense. A single taxpayer is normally allowed one automobile.

If a taxpayer has a car payment, the allowable ownership cost added to the allowable operating cost equals the allowable transportation expense. The taxpayer is allowed the amount actually spent, or the standard, whichever is less.

If a taxpayer has a car, but no car payment, only the operating costs portion of the transportation standard is used to figure the allowable transportation expense. The taxpayer is allowed the amount actually spent, or the standard, whichever is less.

There is a single nationwide allowance for public transportation based on Bureau of Labor Statistics expenditure data for mass transit fares for a train, bus, taxi, ferry, etc. Taxpayers with no vehicle are allowed the standard amount monthly, per household, without questioning the amount actually spent.

If a taxpayer owns a vehicle and uses public transportation, expenses may be allowed for both, provided they are needed for the health and welfare of the taxpayer or family, or for the production of income. However, the expenses allowed would be actual expenses incurred for ownership costs, operating costs and public transportation, or the standard amounts, whichever is less.

If the amount claimed is more than the total allowed by the transportation standards, the taxpayer must provide documentation to substantiate those expenses are necessary living expenses.

BASIS OF APPELLATE JURISDICTION

Appellee, William T. Neary, the United States Trustee for the Northern District of Illinois states that this Court has jurisdiction to hear the appeal from the bankruptcy court under 28 U.S.C. § 158(a).

STATEMENT OF THE ISSUES

South Beach Securities, Inc., the debtor in the bankruptcy case below, has one creditor, Scattered Corp., and that one creditor is an insider. South Beach has no ongoing business to reorganize, no employees, and no assets of alleged value other than $3.2 million in net operating losses it hoped to use to offset taxable income — the only purpose set forth by South Beach for its bankruptcy in its disclosure statement. Did the bankruptcy court err in denying plan confirmation and dismissing the case when (1) the plan was not accepted by a non-insider creditor and (2) the plan's principal purpose was tax avoidance?

APPLICABLE STANDARD OF REVIEW

A bankruptcy court's decision to dismiss a Chapter 11 case for cause is reviewed for an abuse of discretion. In re Woodbrook Assocs., 19 F.3d 312, 316 (7th Cir. 1994); In re Han, 2002 WL 31049846 at *4 (N.D. Ill. Sept. 12, 2004). The District Court reviews the bankruptcy court's findings of fact with the clearly erroneous standard, and conclusions of law are reviewed de novo. In re Woodbrook Assocs., 19 F.3d at 316.

STATEMENT OF THE FACTS

When it filed its Chapter 11 bankruptcy case on April 27, 2005, South Beach Securities, Inc. listed just one asset, stock in Health Risk Management ("HRM"), and just one creditor, Scattered Corp. Docket #6, Schedule B, #12. South Beach valued its sole listed asset at $0 and purported to owe Scattered $3,297,498. Docket #6, Schedule F. South Beach has had no income for at least two years, Docket #7, p.1, and has no employees or ongoing business operations of any kind. Docket #130, p. 1. Leon Greenblatt III was the Debtor's authorized agent who signed the petition and schedules on behalf of South Beach. Docket #1, 6, 7.

About three months after the case was filed, and before any plan or disclosure statement had been proposed, the bankruptcy court invited the parties to brief whether the case should be dismissed for bad faith under § 1112. A month later, the bankruptcy court dismissed the case, and South Beach appealed. Judge Kennelly found that although South Beach's sole creditor was likely an insider, that alone was an insufficient basis for a finding of bad faith under § 1112(b), reversing dismissal and remanding the case for further proceedings. Five months later, South Beach filed its plan, which was jointly proposed with Scattered, Docket #130, p. 9, and a short time later filed its disclosure statement.

In its disclosure statement, South Beach disclosed additional assets, including an account receivable owed from NOLA, its parent company, of the same amount that South Beach owed Scattered. Docket #106, p.12. According to South Beach, it "waived its $3,297,400 claim against NOLA for purposes of this bankruptcy case" without any explanation. Id. South Beach also disclosed certain Net Operating Losses ("NOLs") arising from the acquisition of the HRM stock. Id., Docket #89, p. 6. South Beach argued that the NOLs were the only source of value from which it could compensate Scattered and that the value of the NOLs could only be preserved for the benefit of its creditor through a plan of reorganization. Docket #30, pp. 3-4. At confirmation, however, South Beach changed its position and stated it did not need bankruptcy to "monetize" its NOLs and that the purpose of the Chapter 11 case was actually to avoid litigation, though no evidence or explanation was provided regarding this new purpose. Docket #130, p. 9.

The U.S. Trustee objected to the proposed plan because (1) it had no impaired, non-insider creditors voting in favor and thus failed to satisfy § 1129(a)(10); (2) its principal purpose was tax avoidance in violation of § 1129(d); and (3) it provided for a discharge in a liquidating case in violation of § 1141(d)(3). The bankruptcy court conducted an evidentiary hearing and the only party to testify for South Beach was Leon Greenblatt III. Docket #130, p. 2. Greenblatt, an officer of Scattered, had signed South Beach's bankruptcy petition and had testified on behalf of the South Beach at the Meeting of Creditors. Docket #1, 6, 7. No party examined Greenblatt on behalf of Scattered, and after the U.S. Trustee and the bankruptcy court questioned Greenblatt, the bankruptcy court took the matter under advisement.

Later, the bankruptcy court issued a Memorandum Opinion, sustaining the U.S. Trustee's objections under § 1129(a)(10) and § 1129(d), while finding it unnecessary to address the § 1141(d)(3) discharge issue due to its ruling on the other two issues. Docket #130. Shortly after the bankruptcy court denied plan confirmation, the U.S. Trustee moved to dismiss South Beach's case under § 1112(b)(2), and that motion was granted.[1] Docket #134. South Beach, Scattered, and Greenblatt pro se appealed both the order denying confirmation and the order dismissing the case, but this Court later granted the U.S. Trustee's motion to dismiss Greenblatt's appeal for lack of standing. Scattered filed its brief, which South Beach adopted in lieu of filing a brief of its own.

[1] South Beach, Scattered, and Greenblatt all filed interlocutory appeals from the order denying confirmation before a hearing was held on dismissal. To procedurally simplify the appeals, this Court dismissed the interlocutory appeals so the bankruptcy court could rule on the motion to dismiss. The motion to dismiss was granted without objection, except for the objections raised at the confirmation hearing.

I. BECAUSE THE DEBTOR'S SOLE CREDITOR WAS AN INSIDER, THE DEBTOR COULD NOT SATISFY § 1129(a)(10) AND DENIAL OF PLAN CONFIRMATION WAS THEREFORE NOT ONLY CORRECT, BUT REQUIRED

A. South Beach's Plan Did Not Meet All the Requirements of § 1129(a) so Confirmation Was Properly Denied

Every Chapter 11 debtor "has the burden of proving by at least a preponderance of the evidence that the plan satisfies all of the requirements of 11 U.S.C. § 1129(a)." In re Rusty Jones, Inc., 110 B.R. 362, 373 (Bankr. N.D. Ill. 1990) (emphasis added); In re Repurchase Corp., 332 B.R. 336, 342 (Bankr. N.D. Ill. 2005). This includes § 1129(a)(10), which requires that "[i]f a class of claims is impaired under the plan, at least one class of claims that is impaired under the plan has accepted the plan, determined without including any acceptance of the plan by an insider." Scattered was impaired and voted to accept the plan, so the only issue was whether Scattered was an insider. The bankruptcy court properly found that Scattered was an insider based on the evidence and testimony provided.

Appellants' assertion that the plan was "otherwise confirmable" is both irrelevant and incorrect. "Close enough" does not suffice. Appellants' argument is factually incorrect that the U.S. Trustee "addressed only the insider and tax avoidance issues of § 1129." Appellants' Brief ("Brief"), p. 10. Actually, the U.S. Trustee also objected to confirmation because the proposed plan provided for a discharge in violation of § 1141(d)(3), though the bankruptcy court found it unnecessary to rule on that issue because of the plan's other fatal flaws. Docket #130, Opinion, p. 2, fn. 1 (finding no need to address § 1141(d)(3) "given the outcome on the other objections"). Because the only creditor of South Beach was an insider, South Beach could not satisfy its burden under § 1129(a)(10) and the bankruptcy court properly denied plan confirmation and correctly exercised its discretion in dismissing the case.

B. South Beach's Sole Creditor Was an Insider so the Bankruptcy Court Properly Found the Plan Did Not Satisfy § 1129(a)(10)

There are two types of insiders: those specifically listed by way of example in 11 U.S.C. § 101(31) (most often referred to as "statutory" insiders), and those insiders not listed in the statute but that nonetheless have a close, less-than-arm's length relationship with a party (most often referred to as "extra-statutory" or "non-statutory" insiders). The bankruptcy court found that Scattered was both. Section 101(31)(B) defines "insider" for corporate debtors, including a "person in control of the debtor." However, the statutory definition is not exhaustive and § 101(31)(B) "is intended to be illustrative rather than exhaustive." In re Krehl, 86 F.3d 737, 741 (7th Cir. 1996) (referencing § 102(3)); In re Kunz, 489 F.3d 1072, 1075 (10th Cir. 2007) (noting that "[c]ourts have held that the use of the word 'includes' in this section [101(31)] indicates that Congress did not intend for the categories listed to be exclusive"). Therefore, the term "insider" also "encompasses anyone with 'a sufficiently close relationship with the debtor that his conduct is made subject to closer scrutiny than those dealing at arm's length with the debtor.'" In re Krehl, 86 F.3d at 741 (quoting S. Rep. No. 989, 95th Cong.2d Sess.).

1. Both Scattered and South Beach Concede That Scattered Is an Insider

The Appellants argue at length that Scattered is not in control of the debtor under § 101(31)(B), Brief, pp.6-8, but make no argument whatsoever that Scattered does not have a close relationship with South Beach, that the relationship does not merit closer scrutiny, or that the transactions between the two were conducted at arm's length. In other words, Appellants concede that Scattered is an extra-statutory insider. Although the Appellants state that "Scattered does not fall into any of the categories of 'insider,'" Brief, p.6, Scattered does not need to fall into any of the § 101(31)(B) categories, as the bankruptcy court held. Docket #130, p. 16-17. The bankruptcy court looked at the relationship between South Beach and Scattered and applied criteria established by case law to determine that the conduct between South Beach and Scattered was subject to closer scrutiny than a normal arm's length transaction. See In re Krehl, 86 F.3d at 742 (determining insider status by looking "to the closeness of the relationship between the parties and to whether any transactions between them were conducted at arm's length"). There was more than sufficient evidence to support the bankruptcy court's conclusion.[2]

In addition, Appellants chose not to appeal the bankruptcy court's finding that Scattered is an insider not specifically mentioned by way of example in § 101(31) (i.e. a non-statutory insider) and offered no evidence to the contrary in the hearing below. Docket #130, p. 16 (noting that "no evidence was adduced showing arm's length transactions between Scattered and South Beach"). In fact, to its credit since South Beach and Scattered are so intimately intertwined, South Beach did not even argue the point before the bankruptcy court. Docket #130, p. 16. Appellants have thus waived that issue and this Court need not re-visit it.

2. If the Court Revisits the Relationship Between South Beach and Scattered, it will Find the Parties did not Deal at Arm's Length and That Scattered is an Insider of South Beach

Though Appellants did not raise the issue before the bankruptcy court or argue Scattered's non-statutory insider status to this Court, a review of the uncontested facts reveal the insider relationship: (1) Greenblatt signed the petition on behalf of South Beach, testified at the Meeting of Creditors, and testified for South Beach at confirmation, Docket #130, p. 2; (2) Greenblatt is an officer and director of Scattered, Docket #130, p. 2; (3) South Beach and Scattered share the identical mailing address, Docket #130, p. 3, 6, 14; (4) Greenblatt executed the original loan agreement on behalf of South Beach, as the borrower, Docket #130, p. 5; (5) when the loan was assigned by the lender to Scattered, Greenblatt executed the agreement on behalf of Scattered, Docket #130, p. 6; and (6) Scattered is listed as the preparer on South Beach's tax returns, Docket #130, p. 9. These uncontested facts demonstrate that Scattered is both a statutory ("in control") insider and a non-statutory insider since "none of [the dealings between South Beach and Scattered] were remotely arm's length." Docket #130, p. 17. Because the dealings were not at arm's length and merited careful scrutiny, see In re Three Flint Hill Ltd. Ptship., 213 B.R. 292, 298 (D. Md. 1997) (citing Butler v. Shaw, 72 F.3d 437, 443 (4th Cir. 1996)), the bankruptcy court was correct in finding that Scattered was an insider of South Beach.

C. The Bankruptcy Court Properly Applied the Plain Language of § 1129(a)(10)

Appellant's policy argument attempts to circumvent the plain language of § 1129(a)(10). If a statute's language is not ambiguous, the court should apply its plain meaning to the facts before it. Lexington Ins. Co. v. Rugg & Knopp, Inc., 165 F.3d 1087, 1091 (7th Cir. 1999). Only if the statute is ambiguous should the court attempt to "discern legislative intent by looking beyond the language to the scope, history, context, subject matter and object of the statute." Id. at 1092 (citing Kenison v. Wellington Ins. Co., 582 N.W.2d 69, 71 (1998)).

Section § 1129(a)(10) is not ambiguous. It is correct, as Appellants state, that § 1129(a)(10), at times, prevents "cramdown of a plan from being triggered unless a legitimate creditor finds the plan's treatment of its claim acceptable." Brief, p.8. The U.S. Trustee also agrees with Judge Kennelly's general statement that there is no "blanket prohibition on insider creditors collecting on their debts as part of a bankruptcy proceeding." Docket #52, p. 8 (emphasis added). True: as long as a plan satisfies § 1129(a)(10) by having at least one impaired class, not counting insiders, vote to accept the plan, and as long as the other requirements of § 1129(a) are met, insider creditors may (and often do) collect as part of a confirmed Chapter 11 plan.

But if § 1129(a)(10) somehow did not apply in cases where a debtor's only creditor was an insider, at least two questions arise: (1) why doesn't the statute say that? and (2) where is the body of case law supporting such a curious proposition? Certainly South Beach has not cited to a single case from any district where a bankruptcy court confirmed such a plan, and this Court should not be the first to approve such a scheme. As it asked the bankruptcy court, South Beach now asks this Court to rewrite the statute to help it accomplish its tax goals, and the Court should not so oblige. The bankruptcy court did not err in finding the language of § 1129(a)(10) unambiguous and applying it, as written, to the facts at hand in denying confirmation. Thus, since South Beach did not satisfy § 1129(a)(10), the bankruptcy court properly exercised its discretion in dismissing the case.

II. BECAUSE THE ONLY PURPOSE OF THE PLAN WAS TAX AVOIDANCE, THE BANKRUPTCY COURT PROPERLY FOUND THE PLAN VIOLATED § 1129(d)

The only purpose of South Beach's plan was tax avoidance, Docket #130, p. 8, 22-25, because the only purpose of this case is, and has always been, to use net operating losses to substantially offset some future taxable income, i.e. tax avoidance, despite the eleventh-hour invention at trial of the litigation avoidance purpose. It is not for this Court to decipher the tax maneuvers of South Beach but rather to determine whether the bankruptcy court erred in finding the plan's principal purpose was tax avoidance.

A. The Bankruptcy Court Correctly Discerned the Plan's Principal Purpose, Which South Beach Had Set Forth in its Disclosure Statement

As the bankruptcy court noted, "The disclosure statement explains the motivation behind the plan." Docket #130, p.7. The bankruptcy court was in the best position to determine the plan's principal purpose, considering the long-standing Disclosure Statement which was never amended, the credibility of Greenblatt, South Beach's sole witness, and the timing of the newly-claimed but detail-deficient purpose.[3] See generally Luke v. C.I.R., 351 .F2d 568, 571-72 (7th Cir. 1965) (finding the determination of motivation "is essentially factual and entitled to great weight"). From the time of the § 341 Meeting in June 2005 to the confirmation hearing in January 2007, South Beach made it clear that its only purpose was to "monetize" its NOLs. Even if a purpose of the plan was to avoid "being lured" into litigation with creditors of Debtor's parent, nothing whatsoever in testimony or evidence indicates the principal purpose of the plan was anything other than tax avoidance, and the bankruptcy court thus properly found the proposed plan violated § 1129(d).

B. South Beach Created a New Purpose Only After the U.S. Trustee's § 1129(d) Objection

The new "litigation avoidance" purpose was mentioned nowhere in the 37-page Disclosure Statement, though lawsuits a debtor faces are virtually always set forth in disclosure statements. See 9C Am.Jur. 2d Bankruptcy § 2895 (2008) (noting that "courts often require that a disclosure statement must include . . . the existence, likelihood, and possible success of nonbankruptcy litigation"); In re Dakota Rail, Inc., 104 B.R. 138, 142 (Bankr. D. Minn. 1989). In addition, South Beach pointed to no action in which it is actually a defendant, Docket #130, p. 9, fn. 10.

South Beach created a new purpose only after the U.S. Trustee's § 1129(d) objection, Docket #130, p. 25-26, and South Beach has now completely changed its position on its need for bankruptcy. Compare the following statements:

> (1) "In light of the Debtor's financial condition and the restrictions contained in the Internal Revenue Code on transferring the NOLs, "the only way to monetize the sole valuable asset of the Debtor — the NOLS — is the[sic] for the Debtor to cancel its current stock, issue New Stock and allow its post-confirmation equity to utilize the tax benefits of the NOLs." Docket Entry #130, p.8.
> (2) "A bankruptcy filing was simply not necessary in order for Debtor to maximize its NOLs." Brief, p.11.

The first statement is from the Disclosure Statement, followed by a seven-page discussion of tax consequences to the Debtor, while the second statement is from Appellant's Brief, followed by the new announcement that "[s]imply put, under applicable tax law, Debtor did not need to confirm a plan in order to maximize its NOLs." Brief, p.11. This sudden change and vague new assertion, of course, occurred only after the U.S. Trustee alleged the plan's only purpose was tax avoidance and the bankruptcy court properly gave the newly-created purpose little weight in determining the plan's principal purpose of tax avoidance. Because the plan violated § 1129(d), the bankruptcy court was correct to deny plan confirmation on that basis.

III. BECAUSE THE PRIOR APPEAL INVOLVED ONLY DISMISSAL UNDER §1112, NOTHING INVOLVING § 1129(a)(10) IS THE LAW OF THE CASE.

In an earlier appeal from an order of dismissal under § 1112(b), § 1129 was not and could not have been litigated by the parties because the case was not at the confirmation stage. Docket #130, p. 13 (finding that "[b]ecause the district court never suggested, let alone held, that a plan can be confirmed in a Chapter 11 case where the debtor's only creditor is an insider holding an impaired claim, the district court's decision is not the law of the case on that point . . ."). The law of the case doctrine means that "once an issue is litigated and decided," that same matter should be ended and not re-litigated. Ienco v. Angarone, 429 F.3d 680, 684 (7th Cir. 2005). The doctrine does not apply to issues that are similar but contain different elements, In re Christopher K, 841 N.E.2d, 945, 956-59 (Ill. 2005), or to dicta, Ienco, 429 F.3d at 684.

On appeal, the District Court held that the Debtor's case could not be dismissed for bad faith under § 1112(b) based only on the fact that the Debtor's sole creditor is an insider. The law the parties addressed was § 1112(b) and the issue litigated by the parties was whether the case should be dismissed as bad faith under that section. The issue stated by both the Debtor and the U.S. Trustee in the first appeal back in 2005 was whether the bankruptcy court abused its discretion in dismissing the case, and this was the issue addressed by the district court. Plan confirmation was not before the district court and thus nothing involving confirmation is — or could possibly be — the law of the case here. Section 1129 was never addressed by the U.S. Trustee and was referenced only once in a "see also" parenthetical by the Debtor. An issue never even mentioned by one party, much less an issue not litigated by the parties, cannot be the law of the case.

Appellants ask this Court to make a quantum leap in assuming that because Judge Kennelly found the case should not have been dismissed at an early stage based primarily on the fact that the case was filed to benefit an insider that, therefore, he was holding any proposed plan could meet the confirmation requirements of § 1129(a). It is difficult, if not impossible, to imagine the district court was attempting to rule on a confirmation issue in a case not at the confirmation stage, and that it did so in a novel way, unsupported by any accompanying case law, that changed the requirements of § 1129(a)(10). The proposed plan "was not even filed until five months after the case had been remanded ," Docket #130, p. 12, so the district court could not possibly have known whether at some point in the future South Beach could conceivably satisfy all the necessary provisions of § 1129(a). Therefore, because § 1129 was not litigated by the parties and thus not ruled on by the district court,[4] nothing involving confirmation is the law of the case here.

In January of 2008, however, the case was in an entirely different posture than it was during its prior appeal in 2005. A plan had been filed, a contested confirmation hearing was held, complete with testimony from South Beach's only witness, and confirmation was denied on two solid bases. South Beach was given a full and fair opportunity to present its plan and argue that it satisfied all the requirements of § 1129(a), while the bankruptcy court and the U.S. Trustee were likewise given an opportunity to examine the proposed plan, to examine the witness, and to determine whether the proposed plan met the statutory requirements for confirmation. After confirmation was denied, the bankruptcy court had ample basis to the dismiss the case under § 1112(b)(2), and did not abuse its discretion in so doing.

[4] Judge Kennelly did note that "Scattered is likely an insider vis-à-vis South Beach . . . ." Docket #130, p. 2.

CONCLUSION

The bankruptcy court properly denied plan confirmation because the plan did not satisfy § 1129(a)(10) and the plan violated § 1129(d). The sole creditor of South Beach was an insider, so South Beach could not satisfy § 1129(a)(10) and the bankruptcy court was right to thus deny confirmation on that basis. Also, the plan's only purpose — right up to the confirmation stage, that is — was to use $3.2 million in NOLs to offset taxable income in hopes of avoiding significant taxes, which the bankruptcy court correctly found violates § 1129(d). Bankruptcy was not meant to be used for the sole purpose of helping an insider avoid taxes, and the U.S. Trustee asks this Court to affirm the bankruptcy court's denial of plan confirmation and dismissal of the case of South Beach.

JURISDICTIONAL STATEMENT

Pursuant to Circuit Rule 28(b) Appellee states that the jurisdictional statement in the appellant's brief was found by this Court to be incomplete in an order dated October 29, 2009.

A. This is an appeal from an order of the United States District Court for the Northern District of Illinois, affirming the bankruptcy court's denial of plan confirmation and dismissal of a case arising under chapter 11 of the Bankruptcy Code. The district court had jurisdiction under 28 U.S.C. § 158(a)(1), which confers jurisdiction on the district court to hear appeals from final judgments, orders and decrees of bankruptcy courts.

B. This Court has jurisdiction under 28 U.S.C. § 158(d)(1), which confers jurisdiction on the courts of appeals to hear bankruptcy appeals from final decisions, judgments, orders and decrees entered by district courts under 28 U.S.C. § 158(a).

C. The district court's order affirming the judgment of the bankruptcy court was entered on July 24, 2009. No motion was filed claiming to toll the time within which to appeal. Scattered Corporation and South Beach Securities, Inc. filed separate notices of appeal 28 days thereafter, on August 21, 2009, within the time limit set forth in Fed. R. App. P. 4(a)(1)(B). The United States Trustee did not cross-appeal. This Court dismissed South Beach Securities, Inc.'s appeal on October 16, 2009 for non-compliance with Circuit Rule 3(c) after it failed to file a docketing statement.

D. The appeal in this case is from a final order. The district court's July 24, 2009 judgment disposed of all parties' claims, and nothing remains to be adjudicated by the lower courts.

ISSUES PRESENTED

1. Whether the district court correctly affirmed the bankruptcy court's judgment of dismissal where 11 U.S.C. § 1129(a)(10) provides that a chapter 11 bankruptcy plan of reorganization cannot be confirmed unless it is accepted by at least one impaired class of non-insiders, but that did not occur because the only accepting creditor in this case is an insider.

2. Alternatively, whether the district court correctly affirmed the bankruptcy court's judgment of dismissal where 11 U.S.C. § 1129(d) provides that a chapter 11 bankruptcy plan of reorganization cannot be confirmed if its principal purpose is the avoidance of taxes, and the sole purpose of filing bankruptcy in this case was to take advantage of the tax attributes of the debtor's net operating losses.

This Court may affirm if it determines the lower courts decided either of these issues correctly.

STATEMENT OF THE CASE

This is an appeal from a judgment of the district court affirming the bankruptcy court's denial of plan confirmation and dismissal of a case arising under chapter 11 of the Bankruptcy Code.

In April 2005, debtor South Beach Securities, Inc. ("South Beach") filed a voluntary petition for chapter 11 bankruptcy relief in the United States Bankruptcy Court for the Northern District of Illinois. In re South Beach Securities, Inc., No. 05-16679 (Bankr. N.D. Ill. Apr. 27, 2005). Shortly thereafter, the bankruptcy court sua sponte made a preliminary finding that the case should be dismissed under 11 U.S.C. § 1112(b) because it appeared to have been filed in bad faith. See Order, In re South Beach Securities, Inc., No. 05-16679 (Bankr. N.D. Ill. July 28, 2005) (Bankr. Doc. 29).[1] Following briefing — in which the United States Trustee[2] supported dismissal — the bankruptcy court dismissed the case. See Order of Dismissal, In re South Beach Securities, Inc., No. 05-16679 (Bankr. N.D. Ill. Aug. 24, 2005) (Bankr. Doc. 38).

[2] United States Trustees are officials of the Department of Justice appointed by the Attorney General and charged with appointing trustees in bankruptcy cases and supervising the administration of bankruptcy cases. 28 U.S.C. §§ 581-89. United States Trustees oversee the bankruptcy process, protect the public interest, and ensure that bankruptcy cases are conducted according to law. See generally United States Tr. v. Columbia Gas Sys., Inc. (In re Columbia Gas Sys., Inc.), 33 F.3d 294, 296 (3d Cir. 1994). To accomplish this objective, "the United States trustee may raise and may appear and be heard on any issue in any case or proceeding under this title . . . ." 11 U.S.C. § 307. The United States Trustee and his staff constitute an agency of the United States. See Joelson v. United States, 86 F.3d 1413, 1417 (6th Cir. 1996) ("parties . . . do not dispute that the U.S. Trustee's Office is an agency within the definition of the Administrative Procedure Act").

After dismissal of its case, South Beach appealed to the district court, which reversed and remanded so the chapter 11 case could go forward, concluding that the record as it existed did not support the bankruptcy court's finding of bad faith. See Supp. Appx. 000050 (Memorandum Op. at 8, In re South Beach Securities, Inc., No. 1:05-cv-05957, 341 B.R. 853 (N.D. Ill. Apr. 6, 2006) (D. Doc. 14)).

On remand, the bankruptcy court, after briefing and an evidentiary hearing, denied confirmation of South Beach's proposed plan of reorganization. See Supp. Appx. 000001 (Memorandum Op., In re South Beach Securities, Inc., No. 05-16679 (Bankr. N.D. Ill. Nov. 1, 2007) (Bankr. Doc. 130)). Subsequently, the bankruptcy court dismissed the case. See Supp. Appx. 000027a (Order Dismissing Bankr. Case, In re South Beach Securities, Inc., No. 05-16679 (Bankr. N.D. Ill. Jan. 2, 2008) (Bankr. Doc. 173)).

The bankruptcy court's denial of plan confirmation was based on two alternate grounds. First, the bankruptcy court found South Beach was incapable of meeting the requirements of 11 U.S.C. § 1129(a)(10) — which requires denial of plan confirmation unless the plan is accepted by at least one "non-insider" class — because South Beach's only creditor is Scattered Corporation ("Scattered"), an "insider." Second, the bankruptcy court found South Beach's plan could not be confirmed under 11 U.S.C. § 1129(d) — which requires denial of confirmation where the principal purpose of the bankruptcy plan is avoidance of taxes — because South Beach's stated purpose in filing for bankruptcy relief was to "monetize" the tax attributes of its net operating losses for the benefit of its sole creditor, Scattered.

South Beach and Scattered appealed to the district court, which consolidated the appeals. See Minute Entry, In re South Beach Securities, Inc., No. 1:08-cv-01135 (N.D. Ill. Mar. 6, 2008) (D. Doc. 5). After briefing, the district court affirmed the bankruptcy court, finding that the bankruptcy court's decision was correct in fact and law. See Supp. Appx. 000028 (Mem. Op. and Order, In re South Beach Securities, Inc., No. 1:08-cv-01135 (N.D. Ill. July 24, 2008) (D. Doc. 51)).

South Beach and Scattered both appealed to this Court, but South Beach's appeal was dismissed, leaving only Scattered's appeal, which has been assigned case number 09-3079.

STATUTORY BACKGROUND

Every chapter 11 debtor has the burden of proving by at least a preponderance of the evidence that the plan satisfies all of the requirements of 11 U.S.C. § 1129(a). See, e.g., In re Madison Hotel Assocs., 749 F.2d 410, 416 & n.7

(7th Cir. 1984); In re Rusty Jones, Inc., 110 B.R. 362, 373 (Bankr. N.D. Ill. 1990); see also In re Repurchase Corp., 332 B.R. 336, 342 (Bankr. N.D. Ill. 2005).

This case involves the requirement found in section 1129(a)(10), which states: "[i]f a class of claims is impaired under the plan, at least one class of claims that is impaired under the plan has accepted the plan, determined without including any acceptance of the plan by any insider." In other words, the debtor's plan of reorganization must be accepted by at least one impaired class of non-insiders. A class is "impaired" if the plan alters the legal, equitable, or contractual rights of the members of that class. See 11 U.S.C. § 1124. For example, a class comprised of general unsecured claims is impaired if the plan fails to pay the members of that class 100% of their claims plus interest.

The other statutory section relevant to this appeal is 11 U.S.C. § 1129(d), which prohibits confirmation of a chapter 11 plan if its principal purpose is the avoidance of taxes. Section 1129(d) provides as follows:

> (d) Notwithstanding any other provision of this section, on request of a party in interest that is a governmental unit, the court may not confirm a plan if the principal purpose of the plan is the avoidance of taxes or the avoidance of the application of section 5 of the Securities Act of 1933. In any hearing under this subsection, the governmental unit has the burden of proof on the issue of avoidance.

STATEMENT OF THE FACTS

A. General Background

The following facts are undisputed. Debtor South Beach is a Mississippi company incorporated in 1984. See Supp. Appx. 000235 (Exhibit G to Objection to Confirmation of Plan, In re South Beach, No. 05-16679 (Bankr. N.D. Ill. Jan. 12, 2007) (Bankr. Doc. 106-7)). Although it was once registered with the Securities and Exchange Commission as a broker-dealer, it relinquished that registration years ago. See Supp. Appx. 000156 (Exhibit A to Objection to Confirmation of Plan at pp. 21-22, In re South Beach, No. 05-16679 (Bankr. N.D. Ill. Jan. 12, 2007) (Bankr. Doc. 106-1)).

When it filed its chapter 11 bankruptcy petition and schedules in 2005, South Beach claimed no business operations and no income for the preceding two years. See Supp. Appx. 000068 (Exhibit D to Objection to Confirmation of Plan, In re South Beach, No. 05-16679 (Bankr. N.D. Ill. Jan. 12, 2007) (Bankr. Doc. 106-4)). South Beach had no business operations aside from attempting to have its chapter 11 plan confirmed. Supp. Appx. 000223-000224 (Confirmation Hrg. South Beach's only creditor is an entity called Scattered Corporation, which claimed to be owed approximately $3.3 million. See Supp. Appx. 000054 (Exhibit D to Objection to Confirmation of Plan, In re South Beach, No. 05-16679 (Bankr. Leon A. Greenblatt, III is South Beach's authorized agent, and he signed its bankruptcy petition. See id. Supp. Appx. 000053. Mr. Greenblatt is also an officer and director of Scattered. Scattered is South Beach's creditor by virtue of its purchase of a loan that South Beach obtained from an entity called Loop Corp.[3] See Supp. Appx. 000244, 000249 (Exhibits B and C to Objection to Confirmation of Plan, In re South Beach, No. 05-16679 (Bankr. Shortly after South Beach filed its bankruptcy petition and schedules, the bankruptcy court sua sponte made a preliminary finding that the case should be dismissed under 11 U.S.C. § 1112(b) because it appeared to have been filed in bad faith.[4] See Order, In re South Beach Securities, Inc., No. 05-16679 (Bankr. N.D. Ill. July 28, 2005) (Bankr. Doc. 29). After the parties briefed the issue, the bankruptcy court dismissed the case, concluding that Scattered was an insider and the point of the South Beach bankruptcy was to take advantage of South Beach's NOLs. See Order of Dismissal, In re South Beach Securities, Inc., No. 05-16679 (Bankr. N.D. Ill. Aug. 24, 2005) (Bankr. Doc. 38).

This case does not require a determination of the applicability of federal tax law, but as a general matter, NOLs may be used to offset income taxes. See generally 26 U.S.C. § 172. An NOL can occur when tax deductions exceed gross income for a taxable year. See 26 U.S.C. § 172(c). In certain situations, 26 U.S.C. § 172 can allow a taxpayer to offset income in previous and future years with losses from other years.

After the 2005 dismissal of its case, South Beach appealed to the district court, which reversed and remanded. The district court held that, although Scattered was "likely an insider vis-à-vis South Beach," there is no "blanket prohibition on insider creditors collecting on their debts" in bankruptcy, so "more was needed" before the case could be dismissed. See In re South Beach Securities, Inc., 341 B.R. 853, 857-58 (N.D. Ill. 2006).

On remand, South Beach filed a disclosure statement in which it asserted that the NOLs were its only valuable asset, and that the value of the NOLs could only be preserved for the benefit of its creditor, Scattered, through a plan of reorganization. See Supp. Appx. 000119-000120 (Disclosure Statement at pp. 7-8, In re South Beach, No. 05-16679 (Bankr. N.D. Ill. Oct. 18, 2006) (Bankr. Doc. 89)). South Beach stated:

> [T]he only way to monetize the sole valuable asset of the Debtor — the NOLs — is the [sic] for the Debtor to cancel its current stock, issue New Stock and allow its post-confirmation equity to utilize the tax benefits of the NOLs. In this regard, the Debtor and Scattered have agreed to allow Scattered the right to receive 1,000 shares of New Stock. The Plan sets forth the mechanics for the release of the New Stock to Scattered.

South Beach's plan of reorganization was jointly proposed with its sole creditor, Scattered. The plan proposed two classes of claims and interests. Class 1 was described as general unsecured claims and was comprised of a single creditor, Scattered, with its $3.3 million claim. See Supp. Appx. 000086 (Debtor's Plan of Reorganization at p. 13, In re South Beach, No. 05-16679 (Bankr. N.D. Ill. Sept. 21, 2006) (Bankr. Doc. 83)).

The only other class listed in the plan was described as "holders of interests" in the debtor, South Beach. Id. The plan identified no members of class 2, but described them as holders of South Beach stock, whose interests would be canceled upon confirmation of the plan. Id. As such, the members of class 2 were conclusively presumed to reject the plan. See 11 U.S.C. § 1126(g). Thus, the only impaired class eligible to vote for acceptance or rejection of the plan was Scattered, the sole creditor.

The United States Trustee objected to the plan of reorganization on the two grounds at issue in this appeal. First, because section 1129(a)(10) requires that, if there is an impaired class of claims under the plan, at least one impaired, non-insider class must vote in favor of the plan, South Beach was incapable of meeting this requirement because its only impaired class consisted of Scattered, an insider. Second, the plan's principal purpose was tax avoidance in violation of section 1129(d). See Objection to Confirmation of Plan, In re South Beach, No. 05-16679 (Bankr. N.D. Ill. Jan. 12, 2007) (Bankr. Doc. 106).[5] [5] The United States Trustee raised a third ground of objection, namely that the plan provided for a discharge in a liquidating case in violation of section 1141(d)(3). Section 1141(d)(3) provides:

The bankruptcy court conducted an evidentiary hearing on the proposed plan of reorganization. See Supp. Appx. 000162 (Confirmation Hrg. Tr., In re South Beach, No. 05-16679 (Bankr. N.D. Ill. Jan. 17, 2007)). Only one witness testified: Leon A. Greenblatt, III, the authorized agent of both South Beach and Scattered. Previously, Mr. Greenblatt had been examined under oath by the United States Trustee in a deposition-like proceeding pursuant to Fed. R. Bankr. P. 2004. See Supp. Appx. 000151 (Exhibit A to Objection to Confirmation of Plan at 16, 17, 20, In re South Beach, No. 05-16679 (Bankr. N.D. Ill. Jan. 12, 2007) (Bankr. Doc. 106-1)). During the Rule 2004 examination, Mr. Greenblatt stated that he could not recollect even the most basic information about himself, such as when he graduated from high school, what his occupation had been since 1990, and whether he signed South Beach's bankruptcy petition. See id. Supp. Appx. 000154-

Because the bankruptcy court sustained the United States Trustee's objections under sections 1129(a)(10) and 1129(d), it found it unnecessary to address the section 1141(d)(3) discharge issue.

000155. The bankruptcy court characterized Mr. Greenblatt as “taciturn and uncooperative.” See Supp. Appx. 000003 (Memorandum Op. at 3 (Bankr. N.D. Ill. Nov. 1, 2007) (Bankr. Doc. 130)).

At the evidentiary hearing, Mr. Greenblatt was asked how South Beach’s plan of reorganization would — to use the term from the disclosure statement — “monetize” the NOLs. He testified that, after confirmation of the plan, South Beach would use the NOLs to offset its income. See Supp. Appx. 000182-000183 (Confirmation Hrg. Tr. at pp. 21-22, In re South Beach, No. 05-16679 (Bankr. N.D. Ill. Jan. 17, 2007)). When asked how an entity with no business operations would generate income, Mr. Greenblatt said that South Beach’s new owner, Scattered, would make a capital contribution to South Beach — “enough capital to use up the NOL.” See id. Supp. Appx. 000224-000225 (Confirmation Hrg. Tr. at pp. 63-64). In addition, Mr. Greenblatt testified that Scattered had prepared South Beach’s tax returns for the preceding five years “for the purposes of confirming the plan” of reorganization. See id. Supp. Appx. 000217 (Confirmation Hrg. Tr. at p. 56).

Although South Beach’s disclosure statement stated that the purpose of the bankruptcy was to preserve the value of the NOLs, Mr. Greenblatt denied that the purpose of the plan was to avoid taxes. Rather, at the hearing, Mr. Greenblatt testified for the first time that the purpose of the plan was to "avoid litigation" with the creditors of South Beach's parent company. See id. Supp. Appx. 000170, 000180, 000182, 000183 (Confirmation Hrg. Tr. at pp. 9, 19, 21, 23). No evidence or explanation was provided regarding this new purpose, and no explanation was given for how South Beach — an entity that had no assets and had conducted no business for years — might somehow become embroiled in litigation. See id.

A ballot in which Scattered voted to accept the plan was entered into the record. See Supp. Appx. 000271 (Chapter 11 Ballot, In re South Beach, No. 05-16679 (Bankr. N.D. Ill. Jan. 9, 2007) (Bankr. Doc. 100)).

B. The Bankruptcy Court's Ruling

The bankruptcy court issued a memorandum opinion sustaining the United States Trustee's objections on the two alternate bases, section 1129(a)(10) and section 1129(d). See Supp. Appx. 000001 (Memorandum Op., In re South Beach Securities, Inc., No. 05-16679 (Bankr. N.D. Ill. Nov. 1, 2007) (Bankr. Doc. 130)).

With respect to section 1129(a)(10), the bankruptcy court determined that under governing law, South Beach, as plan proponent, had failed to prove by a preponderance of the evidence that Scattered is not a "person in control of the debtor," and was, therefore, an "insider" of South Beach. See 11 U.S.C. § 101(31)(B)(iii). The court found that Scattered qualified as a "person in control of the debtor" in view of, inter alia: Scattered and South Beach's shared business address; Mr. Greenblatt's role as an officer and director of Scattered and his role as the sole officer and employee of the manager of South Beach's parent; and Mr. Greenblatt's dual role as an "authorized person" for both South Beach and Scattered. See Supp. Appx. 000013-000015 (Memorandum Op. at 13-15).

In addition, the bankruptcy court found that even if Scattered did not qualify as a person in control of the debtor under section 101(31)(B)(iii), because the list of insiders is nonexclusive, citing In re Krehl, 86 F.3d 737, 741 (7th Cir. 1996), Scattered was a non-statutory insider. The court was persuaded by the fact that Mr. Greenblatt directs the affairs of South Beach from his position as an officer and director of Scattered. See Supp. Appx. 000015-000017 (Memorandum Op. at 15-17). The court relied upon the fact that South Beach made no attempt to dispute that Scattered qualified as a non-statutory insider. See id.

The bankruptcy court concluded that all evidence suggested that Scattered was an insider of South Beach. Based on its findings that Scattered was an insider and the sole member of the only impaired class in the plan, the court held there was not at least one class of impaired claims, excluding insiders, voting in favor of the plan as required by section 1129(a)(10). Therefore, the court concluded the plan could not be confirmed.

Alternatively, the bankruptcy court found that the United States Trustee had proved by a preponderance of the evidence that the principal purpose of the plan was an improper one, avoidance of taxes, making the plan unconfirmable under section 1129(d). See Supp. Appx. 000022-000026 (Memorandum Op. at 22-26). The court stated that the "plan's principal purpose is to put Scattered in a position to inject money into South Beach, enabling South Beach to use the net operating losses to obtain a tax deduction." Id. at Supp. Appx. 000022. The bankruptcy court rejected the newly-stated purpose of litigation avoidance and denied confirmation under section 1129(d). Id. at Supp. Appx. 000025-000026.

Shortly after the bankruptcy court denied plan confirmation, the United States Trustee moved to dismiss South Beach's case for cause under section 1112(b). See Notice of Motion and Motion to Dismiss Case, In re South Beach Securities, Inc., No. 05-16679 (Bankr. N.D. Ill. Nov. 5, 2007) (Bankr. Doc. 134). The United States Trustee asserted that cause for dismissal existed because confirmation of the plan was denied and South Beach was unable to effectuate a plan of reorganization given that its sole creditor was determined to be an insider. Id. The court granted the motion and dismissed the case. See Supp. Appx. 000027a (Order Dismissing Case, In re South Beach Securities, Inc., No. 05-16679 (Bankr. N.D. Ill. Jan. 2, 2008) (Bankr. Doc. 173)).

South Beach, Scattered, and Mr. Greenblatt, pro se, filed notices of appeal from the order denying confirmation and the order dismissing the case. See In re South Beach Securities, Inc., No. 05-16679 (Bankr. N.D. Ill.) (Bankr. Docs. 135, 139, 154, 177, 183, 185). The district court consolidated the appeals and granted the United States Trustee's motion to dismiss Mr. Greenblatt's appeal for lack of standing. See In re South Beach Securities, Inc., No. 1:08-cv-01135 (N.D. Ill. Mar. 6 and May 16, 2008) (D. Docs. 5, 25).

C. The District Court's Ruling

On appeal to the district court, Scattered filed a brief, which South Beach adopted in lieu of filing a brief of its own. See In re South Beach Securities, Inc., No. 1:08-cv-01135 (N.D. Ill. Apr. 11 and 17, 2008) (D. Docs. 14, 22).

With respect to the section 1129(a)(10) "insider" issue, the appellants disputed that Mr. Greenblatt's role in both South Beach and Scattered was sufficient to support the finding that Scattered was an insider. They further asserted that the orders denying plan confirmation and dismissing the case should be reversed because Scattered, the sole creditor, accepted the plan and therefore confirmation of the plan would prejudice no one. On the section 1129(d) "tax avoidance" issue, Scattered and South Beach reasserted that the plan's purpose was litigation avoidance, not tax avoidance.

The United States Trustee countered that the evidence supported the bankruptcy court's finding that Scattered is an insider, and the plain language of section 1129(a)(10) therefore forbade confirmation of the plan. See Appellee's Brief, In re South Beach Securities, Inc., No. 1:08-cv-01135 (N.D. Ill. June 6, 2008) (D. Doc. 28). The United States Trustee further argued that tax avoidance was the principal purpose of the plan, as stated explicitly in South Beach's disclosure statement, and that the new claim of "litigation avoidance" was an unsupported and incredible eleventh-hour excuse.

On July 24, 2009, the district court affirmed the bankruptcy court's decision. Its memorandum opinion sustained the United States Trustee's objections under section 1129(a)(10) and section 1129(d). See Supp. Appx. 000028 (Mem. Op. and Order, In re South Beach Securities, Inc., No. 1:08-cv-01135 (N.D. Ill. July 24, 2008) (D. Doc. 51)).

The district court's opinion closely mirrors the bankruptcy court's. On the section 1129(a)(10) issue, the district court noted the bankruptcy court's "elaborate findings" regarding the close interrelationships among Greenblatt-controlled entities, and the district court concluded that "Greenblatt was for all intents and purposes Scattered and South Beach. Greenblatt was a shareholder of Scattered, acted on behalf of Scattered, and 'managed' South Beach by making all decisions pertaining to it." Mem. Op. and Order at 13. The district court concluded that "the bankruptcy court's findings of historical facts are consistent with the record evidence and its conclusion that South Beach failed to prove that Scattered was not an insider is correct as a matter of law." Id.

The district court also found that the evidence supported the bankruptcy judge's alternative conclusion that the only purpose of the plan was to avoid taxes in violation of section 1129(d). Reviewing the bankruptcy court's findings, the district court determined that, whether South Beach or Scattered could have offset the NOLs without the plan (as they argued they could, contrary to their position taken before the bankruptcy court) was immaterial to the plan's actual purpose. The district court, therefore, found it unnecessary to analyze whether South Beach or Scattered could have taken deductions for the NOLs under the tax law. Mem. Op. and Order at 13-14.

South Beach and Scattered timely appealed the district court's order to this Court. On October 16, 2009, South Beach's appeal was dismissed for failure to comply with Circuit Rule 3(c). Therefore, only Scattered remains as an appellant.

SUMMARY OF ARGUMENT

This case involves the straightforward application of unambiguous statutory language. Under 11 U.S.C. § 1129(a)(10), a plan of reorganization cannot be confirmed if a class of claims is impaired under the plan unless at least one impaired class of non-insiders votes to accept it. In this case, there was only one impaired class, and it consisted of only one creditor, Scattered. Based on the record evidence establishing that Scattered controlled South Beach through its officer, director and owner, Mr. Greenblatt, there was no clear error in the bankruptcy court's finding that Scattered was indeed an "insider." Thus, under the plain language of section 1129(a)(10), South Beach's plan was unconfirmable, and the lower courts did not err in reaching this conclusion.

Likewise, South Beach's plan was unconfirmable under the plain language of 11 U.S.C. § 1129(d). Under that section, a plan cannot be confirmed if "the principal purpose of the plan is the avoidance of taxes." By South Beach's own admission, the entire point of its proposed plan was to "monetize" South Beach's net operating losses by using them to offset income tax. On the record of this case, the lower courts committed no error in concluding that section 1129(d) applied to prevent confirmation of the proposed plan.

This Court may affirm the judgment of the district court if it agrees with either basis under 11 U.S.C. § 1129.

ARGUMENT

I. STANDARD OF REVIEW

The standard of review in a case involving determinations under 11 U.S.C. § 1129 are well established. This court exercises de novo review of the district court's and the bankruptcy court's conclusions of law. Findings of fact made by the bankruptcy court are reviewed under a clearly erroneous standard. In re Andreuccetti, 975 F.2d 413, 419-20 (7th Cir. 1992).

II. THE LOWER COURTS DID NOT ERR IN FINDING SOUTH BEACH'S PLAN OF REORGANIZATION WAS UNCONFIRMABLE UNDER 11 U.S.C. § 1129(a)(10).

Under 11 U.S.C. § 1129(a)(10), if there is an impaired class under the plan, the plan cannot be confirmed unless it is accepted by at least one impaired class that has no "insider." South Beach's plan of reorganization was unconfirmable because its only impaired class consisted solely of Scattered, an "insider." There was not at least one class of "non-insiders" to accept the plan. Thus, South Beach was not capable of meeting the requirements of section 1129(a)(10). Moreover, South Beach did not even attempt to dispute the facts supporting the lower courts' findings that Scattered is an insider.

A. The Lower Courts Did Not Err in Determining That South Beach Could Not Satisfy § 1129(a)(10) Because its Sole Creditor, Scattered, is an Insider.

Section 1129(a) sets out the mandatory conditions that must exist before a bankruptcy court may confirm a chapter 11 plan of reorganization. One of these requirements is section 1129(a)(10), which requires that "[i]f a class of claims is impaired under the plan, at least one class of claims that is impaired under the plan has accepted the plan, determined without including any acceptance of the plan by an insider."

The bankruptcy court found that Scattered, as South Beach's only creditor, was an "impaired" class within the meaning of the Bankruptcy Code. See Supp. Appx. 000010 (Memorandum Op. at 10, In re South Beach Securities, Inc., No. 05-16679 (Bankr. N.D. Ill. Nov. 1, 2007) (Bankr. Doc. 130)). The record more than adequately supports this conclusion. South Beach's plan would have altered Scattered's "legal, equitable, or contractual rights," see 11 U.S.C. § 1124, because it called for issuance of 1,000 shares of New Stock to Scattered in full satisfaction of the debt owed by South Beach, see Supp. Appx. 000086 (Debtor's Plan of Reorganization at p. 13, In re South Beach, No. 05-16679 (Bankr. N.D. Ill. Sept. 21, 2006) (Bankr. Doc. 83)).

Accordingly, if — as the lower courts correctly concluded — Scattered is an insider, Scattered's vote to accept the plan of confirmation could not satisfy section 1129(a)(10). Based on the evidence and testimony provided, the bankruptcy court properly found that Scattered was an insider, and the district court correctly affirmed that conclusion.

1. The Lower Courts Committed No Error in Concluding that Scattered Meets the Definition of "Statutory Insider."

Under the Bankruptcy Code, there are two types of insiders: those specifically listed by way of example in 11 U.S.C. § 101(31) (most often referred to as "statutory" insiders), and those insiders not listed in the statute but that nonetheless have a close, less-than-arm's length relationship with a party (most often referred to as "extra-statutory" or "non-statutory" insiders). Section 101(31)(B) defines what it means to be an "insider" of a corporate debtor. The definition includes such titles as officer, director, and general partner, but also includes a "person in control of the debtor." 11 U.S.C. § 101(31)(B)(iii).

A review of uncontested facts demonstrates that the lower courts correctly concluded that Scattered is a statutory insider of South Beach. Indeed, under the facts of this case, it is difficult to see how anyone other than Scattered could be "in control" of South Beach. As Mr. Greenblatt admitted, South Beach's "operations" during the relevant time period consisted of preparing the bankruptcy case. See Supp. Appx. 000224 (Confirmation Hrg. Tr. at pp. 63, In re South Beach, No.

05-16679 (Bankr. N.D. Ill. Jan. 17, 2007)). Scattered, via its officer and director Mr. Greenblatt, conducted all of those operations for South Beach. Mr. Greenblatt signed South Beach's bankruptcy petition as well as the accompanying schedules and monthly operating reports. See Supp. Appx. 000053; 000055, 000067, 000073 (Exhibit D to Objection to Confirmation of Plan, In re South Beach, No. 05-16679 (Bankr. N.D. Ill. Jan. 12, 2007) (Bankr. Doc. 106-4)). He participated in formulating the reorganization plan, testified at the meeting of creditors, and testified at the confirmation hearing. See Supp. Appx. 000206 (Confirmation Hrg. Tr. at p. 45, In re South Beach, No. 05-16679 (Bankr. N.D. Ill. Jan. 17, 2007)). Also in his hearing testimony Mr. Greenblatt stated — in his dual role as an authorized agent of both Scattered and South Beach — that Scattered had prepared South Beach's tax returns "for the purposes of confirming the plan." See id. Supp. Appx. 000217 (Confirmation Hrg. Tr. at p. 56); see also Supp. Appx. 000251-000270 (tax returns).[6]

Scattered's brief cites several bankruptcy cases and asserts that, to be "in control" of the debtor, there must be more than financial control, there should be

[6] Although the photocopies of South Beach's tax returns for the years 2001 to 2005 are not the highest quality, it is undisputed that Scattered prepared South Beach's taxes for these years. See Supp. Appx. 000217(Confirmation Hrg. Tr. at p. 56). Scattered's name can clearly be seen in the field for "preparer" on the bottom of pages Supp. Appx. 000259, 000263, 000267.

instead day-to-day control over production, purchasing, personnel, management, etc. See Appellant's Br. at 7 (citing, e.g., In re Armstrong, 231 B.R. 746 (Bankr. E.D. Ark. 1999); In re Octagon Roofing, 124 B.R. 522 (Bankr. N.D. Ill. 1991); In re Technology For Energy Corp., 56 B.R. 307 (Bankr. E.D. Tenn. 1985)). This argument is wholly inapposite here, however, because South Beach is a holding company with no ongoing business. There is simply no going concern to manage. The type of control that Scattered exercises over South Beach goes far beyond "financial control incident to the creditor-debtor relationship." In re Winstar Communications, Inc. 554 F.3d 382, 399 (3d Cir. 2009). Scattered was conducting the only "operations" that South Beach had. Indeed, Scattered exercised over South Beach the only kind of control that could possibly be exerted, because South Beach conducted no operations other than preparing the bankruptcy case. Scattered's actions, carried out by Mr. Greenblatt, are thus the actions of a "person in control of the debtor," 11 U.S.C. § 101(31)(B)(iii), and the bankruptcy court did not commit clear error in so finding. As the district court aptly phrased it, "Scattered via its officer and director who is also South Beach's [parent company's] sole officer and employee, i.e., Greenblatt, was in control of South Beach." See Supp. Appx. 000038 (Mem. Op. and Order at 11, In re South Beach Securities, Inc., No. 1:08-cv-01135 (N.D. Ill. July 24, 2008) (D. Doc. 51)). This Court should affirm the lower courts' conclusion that Scattered is a statutory insider within the meaning of 11 U.S.C. § 101(31)(B)(iii) and § 1129(a)(10).

2. Alternatively, This Court Should Affirm the Conclusion that Scattered Meets the Definition of "Non-Statutory Insider."

The statutory definition of "insider" is not exhaustive. As this Court has observed, the statutory list of insiders "is intended to be illustrative rather than exhaustive." In re Krehl, 86 F.3d 737, 741 (7th Cir. 1996) (referencing § 102(3)); accord In re Kunz, 489 F.3d 1072, 1075 (10th Cir. 2007) (noting that "[c]ourts have held that the use of the word 'includes' in this section [101(31)] indicates that Congress did not intend for the categories listed to be exclusive"). In addition to the roles set forth in the statutory definition, therefore, the term "insider" also "encompasses anyone with 'a sufficiently close relationship with the debtor that his conduct is made subject to closer scrutiny than those dealing at arm's length with the debtor.' " In re Krehl, 86 F.3d at 741 (quoting S. Rep. No. 95-989 (1978), reprinted in 1978 U.S.C.C.A.N. 5787).

In the district court, Scattered conceded that it was a "non-statutory insider" by offering no argument contesting the bankruptcy court's conclusion on this point. In this Court, Scattered does not assert separate "statutory" and "non-statutory" insider arguments, instead objecting generally to the "insider" finding.

Appellant's Br. at 7-8. Arguably, therefore, this Court could affirm on the grounds that South Beach and Scattered failed to preserve any challenge to the lower court's non-statutory insider findings. See generally Houskins v. Sheahan, 549 F.3d 480, 494 (7th Cir. 2008) (citing the fundamental principle that appellate review is precluded on arguments not made below).

Moreover, based on the facts and law, this Court can affirm the lower courts' conclusions that Scattered is a "non-statutory insider." As the bankruptcy court observed, "none of [the dealings between South Beach and Scattered] were remotely arm's length." Supp. Appx. 000017 (Memorandum Op. at 17, In re South Beach Securities, Inc., No. 05-16679 (Bankr. N.D. Ill. Nov. 1, 2007) (Bankr. Doc. 130)). Scattered and South Beach share the same address and share Mr. Greenblatt as authorized agent. On the loan papers that gave rise to South Beach's debt to Scattered, Mr. Greenblatt executed the original loan agreement on behalf of South Beach as the borrower, and later, when the loan was assigned by the lender to Scattered, Greenblatt executed the agreement on behalf of Scattered, the creditor. See Supp. Appx. 000248, 000250; see also Supp. Appx. 000195-000196 (Confirmation Hrg. Tr. at pp. 34-35, In re South Beach, No. 05-16679 (Bankr. N.D. Ill. Jan. 17, 2007)).

Because the dealings between Scattered and South Beach were not at arm's length and merited careful scrutiny, see In re Three Flint Hill Ltd. Ptship., 213 B.R. 292, 298 (D. Md. 1997) (citing Butler v. Shaw, 72 F.3d 437, 443 (4th Cir. 1996)), the district court was correct to affirm the bankruptcy court's finding that Scattered was an insider of South Beach. Both the bankruptcy court and district court looked at the relationship between South Beach and Scattered and applied criteria established by case law to determine that the conduct between South Beach and Scattered was subject to closer scrutiny than a normal arm's length transaction. See In re Krehl, 86 F.3d at 742 (determining insider status by looking "to the closeness of the relationship between the parties and to whether any transactions between them were conducted at arm's length"). Because the evidence was more than sufficient evidence to support these findings, this Court should affirm.

B. The Lower Courts Did Not Err in Rejecting Scattered's Law of the Case Assertions.

This Court should reject Scattered's argument that the lower courts erred by misapplying "law of the case." Appellant's Br. at 8-9. This flawed contention is premised on the district court's ruling in an earlier appeal from the bankruptcy court's dismissal for bad faith under 11 U.S.C. § 1112(b).

In 2006, in case number 1:05-cv-05957, the district court considered an appeal from the dismissal of South Beach's bankruptcy for bad faith under 11 U.S.C. § 1112(b). In that appeal, the district court concluded that South Beach's case could not be dismissed at that juncture for bad faith under section 1112(b) based on the fact that South Beach's sole creditor, Scattered, is an insider. See Supp. Appx. 000043 (Memorandum Op., In re South Beach Securities, Inc., No. 1:05-cv-05957, 341 B.R. 853 (N.D. Ill. Apr. 6, 2006) (D. Doc. 14)). Scattered now asserts that the district court's prior holding that South Beach's case should not have been dismissed for bad faith under section 1112(b) foreclosed the court from later finding that South Beach's plan could not be confirmed under section 1129(a)(10).

Scattered is incorrect. The district court's conclusions under section 1112(b) did not consider whether South Beach's plan could be confirmed under section 1129(a)(10). Plan confirmation was not even before the district court in the first appeal. In fact, the proposed plan was not filed until five months after the case had been remanded. See Supp. Appx. 000074 (Debtor's Plan of Reorganization, In re South Beach, No. 05-16679 (Bankr. N.D. Ill. Sept. 21, 2006) (Bankr. Doc. 83)).

Although as a general matter under the law of the case doctrine, "once an issue is litigated and decided," that same matter should be ended and not re-litigated by the same court, see Ienco v. Angarone, 429 F.3d 680, 684 (7th Cir. 2005), the doctrine has its limits. Law of the case does not apply when the facts or circumstances have changed between the time of the two rulings in question, nor does it apply when the issues are not the same. See, e.g., Sharp Electronics Corp. v. Metropolitan Life Ins. Co., 578 F.3d 505, 510 (7th Cir. 2009).

Here, the issues under consideration in the first appeal and the subsequent proceedings were not the same. In the 2006 appeal, the parties addressed only section 1112(b), not section 1129(a)(10). An issue that was not litigated by the parties and not determined by the district court cannot be the law of the case. As the bankruptcy court correctly observed and the district court correctly affirmed, "[b]ecause the district court never suggested, let alone held, that a plan can be confirmed [under 11 U.S.C. § 1129(a)(10)] in a Chapter 11 case where the debtor's only creditor is an insider holding an impaired claim, the district court's decision is not the law of the case on that point." See Supp. Appx. 000013 (Memorandum Op. at 13, In re South Beach Securities, Inc., No. 05-16679 (Bankr. N.D. Ill. Nov. 1, 2007) (Bankr. Doc. 130)).[7] This Court should find no error.

Furthermore, it should go without saying that the law of the case doctrine cannot bind this Court to the district court's opinion in the first appeal. See [7] The district court's opinion in the first appeal actually cuts against Scattered on the "insider" issue. On that point, the district court stated, "We agree that Scattered is likely an insider vis-a-vis South Beach: the owners of Scattered — including Greenblatt — are the sons of South Beach's owners." See Supp. Appx. 000049 (Memorandum Op. at 7, In re South Beach Securities, Inc., No. 1:05-cv-05957, 341 B.R. 853 (N.D. Ill. Apr. 6, 2006) (D. Doc. 14) (citing 11 U.S.C. § 101(31)(B)(vi) (insiders include "relative[s] of a general partner, director, officer, or person in control of the debtor")).

Marseilles Hydro Power LLC v. Marseilles Land & Water Co., 481 F.3d 1002, 1004 (7th Cir. 2007) (noting that law of the case "has no application to the review of rulings by a higher court"). "[T]he law of the case doctrine has little force when a higher court is reviewing decisions of a lower court." Sharp Electronics, 578 F.3d at 510; see also 8 FEDERAL PRACTICE & PROCEDURE § 4478, at 801 ("So long as a matter is properly preserved in the lower court, the fact that the lower court can properly refuse reconsideration as a matter of law of the case of course does not prevent subsequent review and reversal on appeal."). Accordingly, this Court should reject Scattered's law-of-the-case contentions.

C. The Lower Courts Correctly Applied the Plain Language of § 1129(a)(10), Notwithstanding Scattered's Assertions About How Its Vote Should Have Been Counted.

This Court should also reject Scattered's assertion that the bankruptcy court somehow miscalculated its vote accepting South Beach's proposed plan under 11 U.S.C. § 1126. Appellant Br. at 9-10. Notwithstanding Scattered's mathematical musings about denominators and dividing by zero, there is no dispute that, in this case, there was only one impaired class, and Scattered was the sole member of that class. There was also no dispute that Scattered cast its sole vote to accept the plan. See Supp. Appx. 000271 (Chapter 11 Ballot, In re South Beach, No. 05-16679 (Bankr. N.D. Ill. Jan. 9, 2007) (Bankr. Doc. 100)).

Thus, no matter how it was counted, there was only one vote, and it came from Scattered, an insider. And therein lies the reason that South Beach's plan of reorganization was unconfirmable. Regardless of how Scattered's vote was calculated, it came from an insider, and that factual circumstance rendered the plan unconfirmable under the plain and unambiguous language of 11 U.S.C. § 1129(a)(10). Under the statute, if a class of claims is impaired under the plan, there must be at least one accepting vote by an impaired class of non-insiders before a plan can be confirmed.

If a statute's language is not ambiguous, the court should apply its plain meaning to the facts before it. See, e.g., Lexington Ins. Co. v. Rugg & Knopp, Inc., 165 F.3d 1087, 1091 (7th Cir. 1999). Application of that plain language here yields but one conclusion: Because the only creditor of South Beach was an insider, South Beach could not satisfy its burden under § 1129(a)(10) and the bankruptcy court properly denied plan confirmation and correctly dismissed the case. The district court properly affirmed. This Court should affirm, as well.

III. ALTERNATIVELY, THIS COURT SHOULD CONCLUDE THAT THE LOWER COURTS COMMITTED NO ERROR IN FINDING THE PLAN UNCONFIRMABLE UNDER 11 U.S.C. § 1129(d) BECAUSE ITS PRINCIPAL PURPOSE WAS TAX AVOIDANCE.

South Beach's own words in its disclosure statement admitted that the purpose of the plan was to use net operating losses to substantially offset some future taxable income, i.e., to avoid taxes. Indeed, this was not merely a principal purpose of the plan, but its sole evident purpose, notwithstanding the eleventh-hour excuse given by Mr. Greenblatt at trial regarding the plan being merely for the purpose of "avoiding litigation." The bankruptcy court's factual determination that the principal purpose of the plan was tax avoidance is supported by the record and is not clearly erroneous. As a result, the bankruptcy court properly denied confirmation under 11 U.S.C. § 1129(d), and the district court properly affirmed.

A. Under 11 U.S.C. § 1129(d), a Plan Cannot Be Confirmed if its Principal Purpose is Tax Avoidance.

In pertinent part, 11 U.S.C. § 1129(d) provides that "the court may not confirm a plan if the principal purpose of the plan is the avoidance of taxes." Section 1129(d), by its plain terms, looks at the purpose of the plan, not at whether the avoidance of taxes purported by the plan would be permissible under tax law, and not whether a particular tax treatment is achievable with or without the plan. For this reason, it is immaterial whether — as Scattered asserts — the use of NOLs is "legal" or whether South Beach "needed" to confirm a chapter 11 plan to maximize its NOLs. Appellant's Br. at 5-6. If, as was the case here, the stated purpose of the plan is to avoid taxes, section 1129(d) applies.

Moreover, when a debtor such as South Beach has "no business" to reorganize, "no assets except a potential tax loss," and proposes a plan solely as a way to take advantage of the tax loss, a court is entitled to conclude that the purpose of the plan is tax avoidance. See, e.g., In re Maxim Indus., Inc., 22 B.R. 611, 611 (Bankr. D. Mass. 1982) (denying confirmation under such facts). That was the case here, and as discussed further below, the lower courts were correct to apply 11 U.S.C. § 1129(d) on this record.

B. The Bankruptcy Court Did Not Clearly Err in Finding That Tax Avoidance Was the Plan's Principal Purpose.

From the outset, the record has left no doubt that the purpose of South Beach's proposed plan of reorganization was to take advantage of the tax benefits of its net operating losses ("NOLs"). South Beach's disclosure statement admitted this explicitly, stating that "the sole asset of any value of the Debtor was a net operating loss ("NOL") carryovers for U.S. federal income tax purposes," and > the only way to monetize the sole valuable asset of the Debtor — the NOLs — is the for the Debtor to cancel its current stock, issue New Stock and allow its post-confirmation equity to utilize the tax benefits of the NOLs. In this regard, the Debtor and Scattered have agreed to allow Scattered the right to receive 1,000 shares of New Stock. The Plan sets forth the mechanics for the release of the New Stock to Scattered.

See Supp. Appx. 000113, 000019-000120 (Disclosure Statement at pp. 1, 7-8, In re South Beach, No. 05-16679 (Bankr. N.D. Ill. Oct. 18, 2006) (Bankr. Doc. 89)).

In addition to the disclosure statement, there was the testimony of Mr. Greenblatt at the confirmation hearing. Mr. Greenblatt explained that, after confirmation of the plan, South Beach would use the NOLs to “offset its income.” See Supp. Appx. 000182-000183 (Confirmation Hrg. Tr. at pp. 21-22, In re South Beach, No. 05-16679 (Bankr. N.D. Ill. Jan. 17, 2007)). Given that South Beach has no business operations, the income would be in the form of a capital contribution from South Beach’s new owner, Scattered, which would contribute “enough capital to use up the NOL.” See id. Supp. Appx. 000224-000225 (Confirmation Hrg. Tr. at pp. 63-64). Thus, Mr. Greenblatt confirmed that the “mechanics” of the plan, as described in the disclosure statement, were to engineer a circumstance in which the NOLs could be used to offset income taxes.

As for the purpose that Mr. Greenblatt offered for the first time at the confirmation hearing —“litigation avoidance” — it was most remarkable for its timing and lack of detail. The “litigation avoidance” purpose was offered two years after the bankruptcy petition was filed, only after the United States Trustee objected to the plan under section 1129(d). Denying that the plan was for the purpose of tax avoidance, Mr. Greenblatt asserted that the plan’s purpose was to avoid litigation with the creditors of South Beach’s pre-confirmation parent company. See Supp. 000182, 000183 (Confirmation Hrg. Tr. at pp. 21, 23, In re South Beach, No. 05-16679 (Bankr. N.D. Ill. Jan. 17, 2007)). Yet Mr. Greenblatt did not explain how such litigation could extend to South Beach.

Nothing in South Beach’s bankruptcy petition and accompanying schedules disclosed the existence or threat of litigation. See Supp. Appx. 000052-000073 (Exhibit D to Objection to Confirmation of Plan, In re South Beach, No. 05-16679 (Bankr. N.D. Ill. Jan. 12, 2007) (Bankr. Doc. 106-4)). The disclosure statement — which devoted multiple pages to a detailed discussion of "monetizing" the NOLs — did not contain a single mention of potential litigation with the creditors of South Beach's parent or otherwise. See Supp. Appx. 000119-000120, 000141-000149 (Disclosure Statement at pp. 7-8, 29-37, In re South Beach, No. 05-16679 (Bankr. N.D. Ill. Oct. 18, 2006) (Bankr. Doc. 89)). Lawsuits a debtor faces are virtually always set forth in disclosure statements. See 9C Am.Jur. 2d Bankruptcy § 2895 (2008) (noting that "courts often require that a disclosure statement must include . . . the existence, likelihood, and possible success of nonbankruptcy litigation"); see also In re Dakota Rail, Inc., 104 B.R. 138, 142 (Bankr. D. Minn. 1989). Indeed, as the bankruptcy court observed, South Beach could point to no litigation in which it is actually a defendant. See Supp. Appx. 000009 (Memorandum Op. at 9, n.10, In re South Beach Securities, Inc., No. 05-16679 (Bankr. N.D. Ill. Nov. 1, 2007) (Bankr. Doc. 130)).

As the court that heard the evidence firsthand, the bankruptcy court was in the best position to determine the plan's principal purpose, considering the long-standing disclosure statement that was never amended, the credibility of Mr. Greenblatt, South Beach's sole witness, and the timing and plausibility of the newly-claimed but detail-deficient “litigation avoidance” purpose. See generally Luke v. C.I.R., 351 .F2d 568, 571-72 (7th Cir. 1965) (finding the determination of motivation “is essentially factual and entitled to great weight”). The bankruptcy court observed, “the disclosure statement makes no bones about” the sole purpose of the plan:

> [T]here is nothing here to reorganize, no business to resuscitate, no going concern to keep going. The whole point of the South Beach bankruptcy and the proposed plan is to make use of South Beach’s NOLs.

Supp. Appx. 000023 (Memorandum Op. at 23*, In re South Beach Securities, Inc.,* No. 05-16679 (Bankr. N.D. Ill. Nov. 1, 2007) (Bankr. Doc. 130) (citing In re Maxim Indus., Inc., 22 B.R. 611, 611 (Bankr. D. Mass. 1982))).

Until the United States Trustee objected, South Beach made it clear that the plan’s only purpose was to “monetize” the NOLs. Even if a purpose of the plan was to avoid being lured into litigation with creditors of its parent, nothing whatsoever in testimony or evidence indicates the principal purpose of the plan was anything other than tax avoidance.[8] The bankruptcy court thus properly found the proposed plan was unconfirmable under section 1129(d), and the district court

[8] Perhaps if South Beach were genuinely concerned about the threat of litigation, it would have remained an active participant in this appeal. It may be telling that South Beach knowingly allowed its appeal in this Court to be dismissed, despite being advised that it could preserve its appeal merely by filing a docketing statement.

correctly affirmed. This Court likewise should find no clear error.

C. The United States Trustee Had Standing to Object Under 11 U.S.C. § 1129(d).

Scattered's brief states that "Scattered does not understand how the United States Trustee has standing to object here." Appellant's Br. at 4. This Court need not reach this question if it affirms under section 1129(a)(10). In addition, this Court need not reach this issue because Scattered has not adequately preserved it. Scattered offers no legal citations or argument to support a conclusion that the United States Trustee somehow lacks standing; rather, Scattered simply states that it "does not understand" standing. This is insufficient to preserve an argument. See United States v. Dunkel, 927 F.2d 955, 956 (7th Cir.1991) ("A skeletal 'argument,' really nothing more than an assertion, does not preserve a claim.") (citation omitted).

Should this Court consider the standing issue, however, it should readily conclude that the United States Trustee does have standing in this case. Indeed, 11 U.S.C. § 307 confers broad standing on the United States Trustee, providing: "The United States trustee may raise and may appear and be heard on any issue in any case or proceeding under this title [11]."

The United States Trustee's standing is broad because Congress created the United States Trustee Program to "supervise the administration of [bankruptcy] cases." 28 U.S.C. § 586(a)(3). In its report discussing the need for the Program, the House of Representatives determined that bankruptcy cases suffered from woefully inadequate administration. See H.R. Rep. No. 595, 95th Cong. 1st Sess. (1977), reprinted in 1978 U.S.C.C.A.N. 5963 (the "House Report"). The United States Trustee Program was created because "there is a public interest in the proper administration of bankruptcy." Id. at 88. United States Trustees "serve as bankruptcy watch-dogs to prevent fraud, dishonesty, and overreaching in the bankruptcy arena." Id.

Although the section 1129(d) objection may be raised only by a "governmental unit," the United States Trustee qualifies. In the Bankruptcy Code, the term "governmental unit" is defined in 11 U.S.C. § 101(27). Although the definition excludes "a United States trustee while serving as a trustee in a case under this title," in this case, the United States Trustee was not serving as a trustee of the bankruptcy estate. Rather, he was carrying out his duties under 28 U.S.C. § 586(a)(3)(B), which include "monitoring plans and disclosure statements filed in cases under chapter 11 of title 11 and filing with the court, in connection with hearings under sections 1125 and 1128 of such title, comments with respect to such plans and disclosure statements." As such, the United States Trustee had standing to object under section 1129(d).

As for Scattered's suggestion that creditors, not the United States Trustee, should “carry the day,” it is indeed the plain language of section 1129(d) that must “carry the day” in this case. And the statutory language required denial of South Beach’s proposed plan of reorganization.

IV. THIS COURT SHOULD AFFIRM THE DISMISSAL OF SOUTH BEACH’S BANKRUPTCY CASE.

The bankruptcy court’s order dismissing the case was based upon the rulings under 11 U.S.C. § 1129(a)(10) and § 1129(d). See Notice of Motion and Motion to Dismiss Case, In re South Beach Securities, Inc., No. 05-16679 (Bankr. N.D. Ill. Nov. 5, 2007) (Bankr. Doc. 134); see Supp. Appx. 000027a (Order Dismissing Case, In re South Beach Securities, Inc., No. 05-16679 (Bankr. N.D. Ill. Jan. 2, 2008) (Bankr. Doc. 173)). For all of the reasons discussed above, South Beach was unable to effectuate a plan of reorganization, and never will be able to do so. See, e.g., 11 U.S.C. § 1112(b)(4)(M) (“inability to effectuate substantial confirmation of a confirmed plan” is cause for dismissal). Accordingly, the dismissal of its bankruptcy case was correct, and this Court should affirm.

CONCLUSION

For these reasons, the United States respectfully asks this Court to affirm the decision of the United States District Court for the Northern District of Illinois, which affirmed the decision of the United States Bankruptcy Court for the Northern District of Illinois.

1. Attorney Time. Department of Justice attorney Anne W. Stukes, who works at the Executive Office for United States Trustees in Washington, D.C., represented the appellee on the brief and at oral argument. She expended approximately 174 hours on this appeal at an estimated cost of $92.73 per hour, for a subtotal of $16,134.67. Department of Justice attorney Cameron M. Gulden, who works at the Office of United States Trustee in Chicago, entered an appearance in this appeal and assisted in the briefing and preparation for oral argument. He expended approximately 64 hours on this appeal at an estimated cost of $83.00 per hour, for a subtotal of $5,311.98.

2. Attorney Travel. The cost of airfare, food and lodging for the United States Trustee's counsel to travel to Chicago to present oral argument was $650.83.

3. Photocopies. The United States Trustee filed 10 copies and served 2 copies of a 279-page supplemental appendix. The United States Trustee filed 25 copies and served 4 copies of a 51-page brief. Two non-attorney employees of the Executive Office for United States Trustees in Washington, D.C. spent approximately 12 hours photocopying and binding the materials. Estimated costs are $25.10 in paper and $439.93 in labor, for a total of $465.03.

TOTAL ESTIMATED COSTS: $22,562.51

Support for these amounts is set forth in the accompanying declarations of Anne W. Stukes, Cameron M. Gulden, and Joni E. Reilly.

DECLARATION OF ANNE W. STUKES IN SUPPORT OF ESTIMATE OF THE UNITED STATES TRUSTEE'S COSTS

I, Anne W. Stukes, do declare and affirm as follows:

1. My name is Anne W. Stukes. I am employed as an attorney by the United States Department of Justice in the Office of the General Counsel, Executive Office for United States Trustees. I have been a member in good standing of the Georgia bar since 1997 and the District of Columbia bar since 2000. I am admitted to practice before numerous federal courts across the country. As part of my job responsibilities, I appear on behalf of United States Trustees in federal appeals.

2. In this appeal, I appeared as counsel for the appellee, United States Trustee William T. Neary. I prepared the appellee's brief and presented oral argument.

3. As an attorney in the Office of the General Counsel, Executive Office for United States Trustees, I do not maintain contemporaneous time records, nor do my weekly time sheets reflect task-based descriptions of the matters on which I work.

4. Upon receipt of this Court's July 28, 2010, order inviting the United States Trustee to submit an estimate the costs of his participation in this appeal, I endeavored to assess a reasonable estimate of my time spent on the case. I reviewed my calendar, internal files and e-mails to approximate the days and hours that I devoted to this appeal. When in doubt, I underestimated the time spent. In good faith, I estimate that I devoted at least 174 hours to this case from August 21, 2009 to July 28, 2010.

5. My colleague, attorney Cameron M. Gulden in the Office of the United States Trustee in Chicago, also in good faith estimated the time he spent on this appeal. According to his declaration submitted herewith, Mr. Gulden devoted 64 hours to this appeal.

6. In estimating my time, I did not include the time of other attorneys and supervisory staff with the United States Trustee Program who reviewed the brief or otherwise spent time on the case.

7. Because I am a government attorney, I do not bill by the hour. Nonetheless, an hourly cost can be estimated using the my annual base salary plus benefits. The calculated hourly cost to the Department of Justice for an hour of my time is $92.73 per hour.

8. Accordingly, based on an estimate of 174 hours, the total cost estimate of my time in this case is $16,134.67.

9. In addition, the United States Trustee Program incurred costs for my travel from Washington, D.C. to Chicago for oral argument in this case. The total in airfare, lodging, and meals for my round-trip travel on February 18-19, 2010 was $650.83.

10. Finally, the United States Trustee Program incurred photocopying expenses in submitting the brief and appendix in this case. At least twelve copies of the appellee's 279-page appendix were made (ten filed with the court; two served on the appellants). At least 29 copies of the appellee's 51-page brief were made (25 filed with the court; four served on the appellants). Under my supervision, two non-attorney employees of the Executive Office for United States Trustees in Washington, D.C. spent at least 12 hours photocopying and binding the materials. Estimated costs are $25.10 in paper and $439.93 in labor, for a total of $465.03.

11. Based on calculations performed at my request by Joni E. Reilly, Deputy Assistant Director, Budget and Travel Division in the Executive Office for United States Trustees, the total, good-faith estimate the costs of the United States Trustee Program's participation in this appeal, including personnel costs, travel, and photocopying, is $22,562.51. Further support for this total is contained in the declaration of Joni E. Reilly and the spreadsheet that she prepared, submitted herewith.

I hereby affirm under penalty of perjury that the foregoing is true and correct to the best of my knowledge.

Dated this 11th day of August, 2010.

DECLARATION OF CAMERON M. GULDEN IN SUPPORT OF ESTIMATE OF THE UNITED STATES TRUSTEE'S COSTS

I, Cameron M. Gulden, do declare and affirm as follows:

1. My name is Cameron M. Gulden. I am a Department of Justice attorney employed in the Office of the United States Trustee in Chicago since 2003. As part of my job responsibilities, I appear on behalf of United States Trustees in federal appeals. I have been a member in good standing of the Minnesota bar since 2001. I am also admitted to practice before the District Court for the Northern District of Illinois and before the Seventh Circuit Court of Appeals. I represented the United States Trustee when this case was before the bankruptcy court and the district court. I have entered an appearance before this Court and assisted in the drafting and editing of the United States Trustee's brief.

2. As an attorney employed by the Department of Justice, I do not record my time for billing purposes. I do, however, keep and submit weekly time sheets through our Professional Timekeeping System.

3. Upon receipt of this Court's July 28, 2010, order inviting the United States Trustee to submit an estimate the costs of his participation in this appeal, I reviewed my weekly time sheets dated August 21, 2009, to July 28, 2010. In good faith, I estimate that I devoted at least 64 hours to this case.

4. This estimate does not include time spent on this appeal by other attorneys and supervisory staff with the United States Trustee Program who reviewed the brief or otherwise spent time on the case.

5. As a government attorney, I do not bill by the hour. Nonetheless, an hourly cost can be estimated using my annual base salary plus benefits. Based upon information provided to me by Joni E. Reilly, the Chief of Budget and Travel for the Executive Office of United States Trustees, I understand that the calculated hourly cost to the Department of Justice for my time is $83.00 per hour.

6. Accordingly, the total cost estimate of attorney time for the undersigned in this case is $5,311.98.

I hereby affirm under penalty of perjury that the foregoing is true and correct to the best of my knowledge.

DECLARATION OF JONI E. REILLY IN SUPPORT OF ESTIMATE OF THE UNITED STATES TRUSTEE'S COSTS

I, Joni E. Reilly, do declare and affirm as follows:

1. My name is Joni E. Reilly. I am employed by the United States Department of Justice as the Deputy Assistant Director, Budget Execution and Travel Division in the Executive Office for United States Trustees. I have been head of the budget division for the United States Trustee Program since 1995.

2. As part of my job responsibilities, I maintain information about the budget of the United States Trustee Program, including information about the costs of payroll, travel, and office supplies. Specifically, I have access to information about the salaries and benefits of all employees in the United States Trustee Program, the travel expenses of employees in the United States Trustee Program, and the cost of office supplies like paper.

3. When it is necessary to do so, I am responsible for calculating the costs of United States Trustee Program's participation in court cases. I have performed such a calculation in this case.

4. To calculate the cost-per-hour of the time an employee of the United States Trustee Program has devoted to a particular case, I retrieve information about the employee's salary and benefits from the Department of Justice's financial system, and then divide the annual salary and benefits by 2,080, the number of hours a full-time employee is paid to work per year. This calculation yields an hourly rate that serves as an approximation of the cost to the United States Trustee Program for the employee's time. I multiply the hourly rate by the number of hours that the employee devoted to a particular case, which yields a dollar amount for the employee's time devoted to that case.

5. For this case, I ran reports from the Department of Justice financial system for attorneys Anne Stukes and Cameron Gulden and performed the calculation in paragraph 4. The hourly cost to the Department of Justice for attorney Anne Stukes' salary and benefits is $92.73 per hour, and for attorney Cameron Gulden is $83.00 per hour.

6. I was informed that Ms. Stukes devoted 174 hours to this case, and Mr. Gulden devoted 64 hours. Using these amounts, I calculated the total cost estimate of attorney time in this case to be $21,446.65 ($16,134.67 for Ms. Stukes and $5,311.98 for Mr. Gulden).

7. In addition, the United States Trustee Program incurred costs for attorney Anne Stukes' travel from Washington, D.C. to Chicago for oral argument in this case. The United States Trustee Program's official travel records indicate that the total in airfare, lodging, and meals for counsel's round-trip travel on February 18-19, 2010 was $650.83.

8. To calculate the cost to the United States Trustee Program of producing briefs and appendices, I retrieve information on the cost of paper and the hourly cost of employee(s) who photocopy and bind the material.

9. In this case, I was informed that at least twelve copies of the appellee's 279-page appendix were made (3,348 pages), and at least 29 copies of the appellee's 51-page brief were made (1,479 pages), for a total of 4,827 pages. I was further informed that two employees of the Executive Office for United States Trustees in Washington, D.C. spent at least 12 hours photocopying and binding the materials. Thus, the estimated costs for the briefs and appendices are $25.10 in paper and $439.93 in labor, for a total of $465.03.

10. Based on the foregoing, the total, good-faith estimate the costs of the United States Trustee Program's participation in this appeal, including personnel costs, travel, and photocopying, is $22,562.51. Calculations of this total are contained on the attached spreadsheet that I prepared.

I hereby affirm under penalty of perjury that the foregoing is true and correct to the best of my knowledge.

Specker Motor Sales Co. dba Choice Motor,

v.

Saul Eisen, United States Trustee,
Appellee.

On Appeal from the United States District Court for the Western District of Michigan at Marquette

STATEMENT OF JURISDICTION

As a threshold issue, this Court must determine whether defects in the notice of appeal divest the Court of jurisdiction. A difficult jurisdictional issue was created in this case when attorney Donald Bays filed the notice of appeal on behalf of Specker Motor Sales Company ("Specker Motors"), rather than on behalf of himself. Specker Motors, the named appellant, lacks standing, and Mr. Bays has standing but lacks authority to appeal on behalf of Specker Motors and is not named as an appellant.

By way of background, in March 1997, Specker Motors filed a petition for reorganization under chapter 11 of the Bankruptcy Code and Mr. Bays was appointed by the court as its chapter 11 attorney. (R.1.1, Voluntary Petition, Apx. pg. __; R.1.67, Order Granting Application to Employ Donald Bays, Apx. pg. __). This appeal is related to the distribution of estate property in payment of Mr. Bays' attorney fees incurred during the chapter 11 bankruptcy. On September 24, 1997, Specker Motors' case was converted to chapter 7 under 11 U.S.C. 1112(b), and an independent trustee was appointed as its representative and to manage its bankruptcy estate. (R.1.168, Order Granting Motion to Convert Case from Chapter 11, Apx. pg. __). Under 11 U.S.C. 323, the trustee became the representative of the debtor with the capacity to sue and be sued on its behalf. See also 11 U.S.C. 704 (enumerating essential duties of trustee). As a result, as of March 24, 1997, Mr. Bays lost his authority to act on behalf of debtor Specker Motors. Most significantly, Mr. Bays no longer had the authority to appeal future bankruptcy court orders on behalf of Specker Motors, because in a chapter 7 proceeding related to the bankruptcy estate, the chapter 7 trustee alone has standing to prosecute an appeal of a bankruptcy court order. See Spenlinhauer v. O'Donnell, 261 F.3d 113, 118 (1st Cir. 2001); Richman v. First Woman's Bank (In re Richman), 104 F.3d 654, 657 (4th Cir. 1997); In re El San Juan Hotel, 809 F.2d 151, 155 (1st Cir. 1987).

Nevertheless, on July 1, 2003, Mr. Bays filed a notice of appeal to this Court on behalf of Specker Motors. The notice of appeal states:

> Notice is hereby given that Specker Motor Sales Company, Debtor/Appellant in the above captioned matter*, hereby appeals* to the United States Court of Appeals for the Sixth Circuit from a Final Judgment Affirming the Bankruptcy Court's Order Determining Administrative Insolvency and Disgorgement of Fees entered on the 23rd Day of June, 2003.

(R.16, Notice of Appeal, Apx. pg. __) (emphasis added). The notice was signed by Donald W. Bays as "Attorney for the Debtor/Appellant." (R.16, Notice of Appeal, Apx. pg. __). There is no specification of anyone other than Specker Motors as appellant in the notice of appeal.

Specker Motors, however, lacks standing because the outcome will not affect its pecuniary interest, property, or rights. "To appeal from an order of the bankruptcy court, [an] appellant[] must have been directly and adversely affected pecuniarily by the order . . . [and] only when the order directly diminishes a person's property, increases his burdens, or impairs his rights will he have standing to appeal." Marlow v. Rollins Cotton Co. (In re The Julien Co.), 146 F.3d 420, 423 (6th Cir. 1998). This appeal involves Mr. Bays' personal pursuit of his attorney fees. Moreover, a chapter 7 debtor generally lacks standing to appeal an order of the bankruptcy court, except where a successful appeal would create an estate that has assets in excess of liabilities or unless the appeal is taken from orders affecting a debtor's discharge. See Cult Awareness Network, Inc. v. Martino (In re Cult Awareness Network, Inc.), 151 F.3d 605, 607 (7th Cir. 1998);

McGuirl v. White, 86 F.3d 1232 (D.C. Cir. 1996); Weston v. Mann (In re Weston), 18 F.3d 860, 863-864 (10th Cir. 1994); In re El San Juan Hotel, 809 F.2d 151, 155 (1st Cir. 1987). In this case, Specker Motors will not receive any money from the estate regardless of the outcome of this appeal, and this appeal is unrelated to discharge. (R.1.244, Order for Payment of Dividends, Apx. pg. __). Specker Motors' lack of standing divests this court of jurisdiction over this appeal. See In re Troutman Enters., Inc., 286 F.3d 359, 364 (6th Cir. 2002) (standing is a jurisdictional requirement); Zurich Ins. Co. v. Logitrans, Inc., 297 F.3d 528, 531 (6th Cir. 2002) (party seeking relief must have standing in order for court to exercise jurisdiction).

Although Specker Motors lacks standing as an appellant, and only the trustee could appeal on its behalf, Mr. Bays has standing to bring this appeal on his own behalf because he has a direct pecuniary interest in the outcome of his personal request for fees. However, further difficulty arises because Mr. Bays is not named as an appellant, and a court may not exercise jurisdiction over an unnamed party after the time for filing a notice of appeal has passed. See Torres v. Oakland Scavenger Co., 487 U.S. 312, 314-315 (1988). The requirement under Fed. R. App. P. 3(c) that a notice of appeal " specify the party or parties taking the appeal," is jurisdictional, and cannot be waived by the court, and consequently, the failure to name a party in a notice of appeal constitutes a failure of that party to appeal. Torres, 487 U.S. at 314-315.

Although this Court cannot waive a jurisdictional deficiency, it may exercise jurisdiction over this appeal if it finds the "functional equivalent" of the specification of Mr. Bays as the appellant so as to meet the jurisdictional requirement of Fed. R. App. P. 3(c). See id. at 312 (use of et al. in notice of appeal is not functional equivalent of specifying parties). "In order for a litigant's acts to be considered as the functional equivalent [of a jurisdictional requirement], they must be such that the document affords notice to the appellee of the litigant's intent to seek appellate review." Mattingly v. Farmers State Bank, 153 F.3d 336, 337 (6th Cir. 1998) (citations omitted).

The United States Trustee does not assert insufficient notice of Mr. Bays' intent to bring this appeal in his capacity as the former counsel for a former chapter 11 debtor. Indeed, the subjective understanding of the United States Trustee throughout the relevant proceedings is that Mr. Bays has been pursing this appeal on his own behalf.[1] This Court, however, must make the final determination as to jurisdiction. See Troutman, 286 F.3d at 364 (court is under continuing obligation to verify its jurisdiction over a particular case).

[1] Neither the United States Trustee nor Mr. Bays previously raised or took steps to correct issues related to the notice of appeal. However, since the United States Trustee has identified this potential jurisdictional issue he raises it now, as a jurisdictional requirement cannot be waived. See Torres v. Oakland Scavenger Co., 487 U.S. 312, 317 (1988) (jurisdictional requirements of Fed. R. App. P. 3 cannot be waived); Zurich Ins. Co. v. Logitrans, Inc., 297 F.3d 528, 531 (6th Cir. 2002) (standing may not be waived and can be brought up at any time in the proceeding); Adland v. Russ, 307 F.3d 471, 477 (6th Cir. 2002) (court must verify standing even if issue not raised on appeal).

Assuming this Court finds that the notice of appeal contains no jurisdictional deficiencies, the Court has jurisdiction over this appeal under 28 U.S.C. 158(d). The United States Bankruptcy Court for the Western District of Michigan had jurisdiction over the bankruptcy case under 28 U.S.C. 157(b)(1). The United States District Court for the Western District of Michigan had jurisdiction over the appeal from the bankruptcy court under 28 U.S.C. 158(a) and 1334, assuming that similar defects in the notice of appeal from the bankruptcy court do not deprive that court of jurisdiction.[2] (R.1.267, Notice of Appeal by Specker Motor Sales Company, Apx. pg.__). The appeal to this Court is taken from the final order of the district court entered on June 20, 2003, affirming the bankruptcy court's final judgment entered February 26, 2003, requiring the counsel for the former chapter 11 debtor to return interim fees exceeding the amount of the pro rata payment he was entitled to receive under 11 U.S.C. 726(b). The notice of appeal to the district court was timely filed on March 12, 2003, and the notice of appeal from the district court's order was timely filed on July 22, 2003.

[2] Some of the confusion with respect to the notice of appeal to this Court may emanate from the notice of appeal of the bankruptcy court's order. (R.1.267, Notice of Appeal, Apx. pg. __). That notice of appeal stated "Donald W. Bays, attorney for the Debtor, appeals under 28 U.S.C. § 158 . . ." and noted that Mr. Bays was "Appellant/Attorney for Debtor," but was signed by Mr. Bays as "Attorney for Appellant." Id. Bays also filed a Designation of Record and Statement of Issues that was ambiguous as to the identity of the appellant(s), stating "[n]ow comes the Attorney for Debtor/Appellant, Donald W. Bays, by and through his attorneys, Osstyn, Bays, Ferns and Quinnell, by Donald W. Bays, and submits the following as his Designation of Record ...." (R.1.268, Appellant Designation of Record and Statement of Issues, Apx. pg. __). The Designation was signed by Mr. Bays as "Attorney for Appellant." Id. The bankruptcy and district courts logically assumed that Specker Motors, as the debtor, was the appellant, and styled the appeal accordingly.

STATEMENT OF THE ISSUE

Under section 726(b) of the Bankruptcy Code, payments to classes of people who are owed chapter 11 expenses in chapter 7 cases converted from chapter 11 "shall be made pro rata" among everyone in that class whenever there is too little money to pay them all fully. May a bankruptcy court prefer a former chapter 11 debtors' counsel by paying him more than his pro rata share under section 726(b), and thereby necessarily give everyone else in his class less than their pro rata share?

STATEMENT OF THE CASE

This appeal arose when, at the conclusion of a bankruptcy case that was converted from chapter 11 to chapter 7, the bankruptcy court required Specker Motors' former chapter 11 attorney Donald Bays to return a portion of interim compensation to the estate because the amount of the interim compensation was more than the amount Bays was entitled to receive at the conclusion of the case. The court ordered the return of the difference because, under the pro rata distribution requirement of section 726(b), that money was owed to Carroll Motor Supply, the State of Michigan Treasury Department ("Michigan Treasury"), the State of Michigan Unemployment Agency ("Michigan Unemployment Agency"), and the Internal Revenue Service ("IRS"). Mr. Bays filed a motion for reconsideration and a motion for determination of administrative insolvency and disgorgement, and was opposed by the United States Trustee, the State of Michigan and the IRS.[3] On appeal, the United States Trustee, the State of Michigan, and the IRS supported the bankruptcy court's decision. The district court affirmed the bankruptcy court's decision, and this appeal ensued.

STATEMENT OF FACTS

1. Statutory Background.

This appeal primarily involves section 726 of the Bankruptcy Code, the provision governing the division of estate property in a liquidation case under chapter 7. Specifically, this appeal involves the distribution of estate property in payment of administrative expenses allowed under 11 U.S.C. 503(b), including attorney fees awarded under 11 U.S.C. 330. Relevant to the arguments raised in this appeal are the overall employment and compensation of attorneys under the Bankruptcy Code and the determination of prepetition and postpetition claims and expenses in a case converted from chapter 11 to chapter 7. Finally, the statutory basis for the United States Trustee's oversight of the distribution of estate assets is also relevant because the appeal is brought by the United States Trustee as part of his oversight of bankruptcy matters in Michigan.

a. Priority and Distribution of Bankruptcy Estate Property.

Congress established a system of priorities to govern the allocation of bankruptcy estate assets in a liquidation bankruptcy case under the chapter 7 of the Bankruptcy Code, 11 U.S.C. 701 et seq. Section 726(a) lists in rank order six categories to which property of the estate is to be distributed. The first category is of "claims of a kind specified in" 11 U.S.C. 507(a), which consists of a group of nine types of expenses and claims that Congress deemed entitled to top priority for distribution. 11 U.S.C. 726(a)(1). Section 507(a) prioritizes those elite groups of expenses and claims. 11 U.S.C. 507(a). First priority under section 507(a) is given to "administrative expenses allowed under section 503(b) [of the Bankruptcy Code], and any fees and charges assessed against the estate under chapter 123 of title 28." 11 U.S.C. 507(a)(1). Notwithstanding certain unpaid secured claims given "superpriority" under section 507(b), and fees under chapter 123 of title 28, administrative expenses allowed under section 503(b) ("allowed administrative expenses") ultimately enjoy top priority for payment out of property of the estate at the conclusion of a bankruptcy case.

Beginning with the category of allowed administrative expenses, pursuant to section 726 payments are made to each category in the order established by sections 726 and 507, until all estate assets are distributed. If there is insufficient property in the estate to pay in full all expenses or claims in the last category of expenses or claims to receive any payment, then, pursuant to section 726(b), payment to that group of expenses or claims is made pro rata. See 11 U.S.C. 726(b). Once all property of the estate is distributed in this manner, expenses and claims in any subordinate categories, unfortunately, receive nothing.

This mandatory pro rata distribution applies to all chapter 7 cases. Section 726(b) includes one additional provision with respect to allowed administrative expenses that is applicable only to certain cases that have been converted to chapter 7 after originally being filed under chapters 11, 12, or 13 of the Bankruptcy Code. See 11 U.S.C. 726(b). In those converted cases, allowed administrative expenses incurred postconversion under chapter 7 have priority over preconversion allowed administrative expenses incurred under chapter 11, 12, or 13. Id. Since allowed administrative expenses as group are paid prior to all other classes of claims, practically speaking this exception is relevant only in converted cases that are "administratively insolvent," where the estate contains insufficient funds at the conclusion of the chapter 7 case to cover both chapter 7 and chapter 11 allowed administrative expenses. Specker Motors is such a case.

b. Attorney Employment and Compensation.

The importance of attorneys to the bankruptcy system is underscored by the per se high priority administrative expenses status granted to attorney fees awarded under section 330. 11 U.S.C. 503(b)(2) (compensation and reimbursement awarded under section 330(a) allowed as administrative expenses). On the other hand, the potential for the abuse of the power afforded to bankruptcy attorneys is recognized by the number of provisions regulating the employment and compensation of attorneys and other professionals. Under the Bankruptcy Code, the retention, employment, and award of compensation to professionals working for the bankruptcy estate or debtor in possession, including debtor's counsel, are highly supervised by the bankruptcy court, and the courts must disqualify attorneys or reduce or disgorge fee awards as a sanction for failure to comply with statutory requirements.

Prior to approving the employment of a professional employed by a trustee or debtor in possession, the court must first ensure that such professional does "not hold or represent an interest adverse to the estate" and is a disinterested person. 11 U.S.C. 327(a); see also 11 U.S.C. 101(14) (definition of "disinterested person"). At the outset of employment, the court reviews and approves "reasonable terms and conditions of employment," which may include a retainer, hourly payment, or contingent fees. 11 U.S.C. 328(a). Once a professional has rendered services, the court determines, using prescribed criteria, the amount to award as "reasonable compensation for actual necessary services rendered" and "reimbursement for actual, necessary expenses." 11 U.S.C. 330(a).

The bankruptcy court retains a great deal of discretion in making such determinations, and also to make modifications during the pendency of a case or at the conclusion of a case. See, e.g., 11 U.S.C. 328(c) (court may deny compensation if professional becomes disinterested or has adverse interest). The court has the discretion to authorize the interim disbursement of compensation to professionals under 11 U.S.C. 331, although the court is required to reduce the final compensation it awards by any interim compensation and is authorized to order the return of compensation to the estate if the interim amount awarded is in excess of the final amount awarded. See 11 U.S.C. 330(a)(5).

The Bankruptcy Code and the Bankruptcy Rules impose strict demands on professionals employed in bankruptcy cases. Rule 2014 dictates the requirements of an application for employment. See Fed. R. Bankr. P. 2014. Rule 2016 sets forth the requirements for filing an application for interim or final fees, including disclosures that must be made. See Fed. R. Bankr. P. 2016. Failure to comply with the demands may result in the denial or reduction of fees or the disgorgement of interim or final compensation received, at the court's discretion.

c. Oversight Responsibilities of the United States Trustee.

Congress has authorized the Attorney General to appoint twenty-one United States Trustees, each to serve in a specific geographic region of the United States. See generally 28 U.S.C. § 581 et seq. (establishing United States Trustee Program). The United States Trustees are employees of the Department of Justice. Id. The United States Trustee must "supervise the administration of cases and trustees" in all bankruptcy cases within his or her region through a range of oversight responsibilities. 28 U.S.C. § 586(a)(3). See generally Morganstern v. Revco D.S. Inc. (In re Revco D.S., Inc.), 898 F.2d 498, 500 (6th Cir 1990) (explaining that Unites States Trustees oversee the bankruptcy process, protect the public interest, and ensure that bankruptcy cases are conducted according to law).

The United States Trustee's responsibilities include monitoring bankruptcy court filings, such as plans and disclosure statements, monitoring creditors' committees and the progress of bankruptcy cases, and bringing to the attention of the United States Attorneys any possible criminal activity occurring in the bankruptcy context. Id.; § 586(a)(3)(B), (C), (E), (F). The United States Trustee may raise and may appear and be heard on any issue in any case or proceeding under Title 11. 11 U.S.C. 307; see also In re Revco D.S., Inc., 898 F.2d at 499-500 (appellate standing of United States Trustee).

2. Factual Background.

Specker Motors filed a petition for relief under the debt reorganization provisions of chapter 11 of the Bankruptcy Code on March 18, 1997. (R.1.1, Voluntary Petition, Apx. pg. __), and on March 26, 1997, it filed an application with the court requesting permission to employ Donald Bays as its chapter 11 counsel. (R.1.17, Application to Employ Counsel, Apx. pg. __); see 11 U.S.C. 327(a) and Fed. R. Bankr. 2014 (requirements for obtaining court permission to retain counsel). Specker Motors requested that Mr. Bays perform work on an hourly basis "at the compensation rate of $125.00 per hour plus out of pocket expenses." (R.1.17, Application to Employ Counsel, Apx. pg. __). Specker Motors also sought permission to give Mr. Bays a "general retainer" of $10,000, which Specker Motors indicated would represent eighty hours of work at the hourly rate of $125.00 per hour. Id. The Application did not seek permission to transfer title to the $10,000 to Mr. Bays. Instead, it acknowledged that Mr. Bays' right to use the $10,000 as a source of payment for the work he performed in the case "shall be subject to the final approval of the Court at the conclusion of the case." Id.

Along with the application, Specker Motors filed an Affidavit of Donald W. Bays as required by Fed. R. Bankr. P. 2014(a) ("affidavit") (R.1.18, Affidavit of Donald Bays, Apx. pg. __). In his affidavit, Mr. Bays represented that Specker Motors "[w]as not indebted to [Bays] for pre-petition services or otherwise rendered to the Debtor." Id. Bays then disclosed that Specker Motors had given him $800 for the filing fee and "a general retainer of $10,000." Id. Mr. Bays affirmatively represented to the court, however, that "compensation paid or promised to [Bays] for services rendered or to be rendered in connection with the case is as follow [sic]: Debtor will pay an hourly rate of $125 per hour for services rendered." Id.

The bankruptcy court reviewed the application and authorized Specker Motors[4] to employ Mr. Bays at the "compensation rate of $125.00 per hour plus out of pocket expenses" by order entered April 21, 1997. (R.1.67, Order Granting Application to Employ Donald Bays, Apx. pg. __). The order neither approved Mr. Bays retention of the retainer nor authorized him to draw upon it without court order. See 11 U.S.C. 331 and Fed R. Bankr. P. 2016 (specifying procedures counsel must follow if they wish to obtain interim compensation in a bankruptcy case); see also 11 U.S.C. 330(a)(5) (making such interim compensation non-final and subject to reduction at the time of the final fee award).

[4] The order authorizing Mr. Bays employment by Specker Motors identifies "E & L Enterprises, Inc." as the Debtor and Debtor-In-Possession. (R.1.67, Order Granting Application to Employ Donald Bays, Apx. pg. __). E & L Enterprises, Inc. was a debtor in the United States District Court for the Western District of Michigan, Case No. 97-90179 (petition filed March 18, 1997). This is presumably a typographical error.

For a short period of time after filing its petition, Specker Motors continued to operate its business, but on May 22, 1997, less than sixty days after filing its bankruptcy petition, Specker Motors filed a motion for an auction sale of its assets free and clear of liens. (R.1.88, Motion for Auction Sale, Apx. pg. __). On June 24, 1997, the court authorized and confirmed the sale of all of the assets of Specker Motors for $500,000. (R.1.123, Order Authorizing and Confirming Sale, Apx. pg. __). Specker Motors never filed a chapter 11 disclosure statement or plan as contemplated by 11 U.S.C. 1121 through 1129 (specifying plan and disclosure requirements).

As a result of the sale of all of the assets of Specker Motors, combined with the fact that it had not filed mandatory monthly financial reports and had failed to pay certain postpetition debts such as contributions to the health and retirement funds for Specker Motors' employees, the United States Trustee filed a motion to convert under 11 U.S.C. 1112(b). (R.1.144, Motion to Convert, Apx. pg. __). Specker Motors' case was converted to a chapter 7 liquidation case on September 24, 1997, and James Boyd, Esq. was appointed as the chapter 7 trustee ("trustee"). (R.1.168, Order Granting Motion to Convert, Apx. pg. __). Under 11 U.S.C. 542(a), Mr. Bays had an express duty to turn over the retainer, which was property of the estate, to the chapter 7 trustee, who is the representative of the estate. See 11 U.S.C. section 323(a); 11 U.S.C. 542(a). Mr. Bays did not do so.

Approximately four years later,[5] on October 9, 2001, Mr. Bays filed an application seeking $17,343.10 in compensation, accompanied by an invoice detailing his activities and calculating payment based on the authorized rate of $125 per hour. (R.1.235, Application for Professional Fees, Apx. pg. __). The court awarded Mr. Bays fees totaling $17,343.10, and approved taking of $10,000 of the fees by order entered February 4, 2002. (R.1.241, Order for Approval of Retainer Paid and Fees, Apx. pg. __). Such compensation was "interim." See (R.1.244 Order for Payment of Dividends, Apx pg.__; R.1.241, Order For Approval of Attorney Retainer Paid, Apx. pg. ___); see 11 U.S.C. 330(a)(5), 331 (codifying allowance of interim compensation). Total fees in the amount of $17,343.10 were awarded pursuant to 11 U.S.C. 330 on August 5, 2002. Id.

The bankruptcy court also approved the trustee's final report and ordered payment as proposed by the trustee's report on August 5, 2002. Id. In compliance with the Bankruptcy Code, the trustee proposed distribution in full to chapter 7 allowed administrative claimants, and pro rata distribution of the remaining money to the chapter 11 allowed administrative claimants. (R.1.242, Notice of [5] From the time of conversion on September 24, 1997 until the trustee's final report in June, 2002, activity in the case consisted of valuation and distribution of sale proceeds, the trustee's efforts to obtain certain documents, matters pertaining to claims, and matters pertaining to administration by the trustee. See generally Bankruptcy Court Docket Report.

Trustee Report and Final Account to Creditors, Apx. pg. __). All remaining allowed claims, totalling $653,457.73, unfortunately, would receive no payment because the case was administratively insolvent, which means that the cost of administering the case in bankruptcy was greater than all the assets of the estate. Id.

Mr. Bays was one of five chapter 11 allowed administrative expense claimants entitled to payment of a pro rata share of estate property toward their respective claims. Id. Mr. Bays was the only one of these five that had already received interim payment out of property of the estate. Id. As a result, his pro rata share was less than the interim compensation he already received. The pro rata distribution to these claimants is summarized below:

Chapter 11 Allowed Administrative Expense Claimant	Allowed Claim Amount	Interim Payment as of date of Final Report	Pro Rata* Share	Payment
Internal Revenue Service	$128,094.19	$0.00	$7,189.46	$7189.46
Michigan Treasury	$52,695.18	$0.00	$2,957.59	$2,957.59
Donald W. Bays	$17,343.10	$10,000	$973.41	$-9026.59
Michigan Unemployment Agency	$5,724.86	$0.00	$321.32	$321.32
Carroll Motor Supply	$942.41	$0.00	$52.89	$52.89

See id.

To ensure that Carroll Motor Supply, Mr. Bays, the Michigan Treasury, the Michigan Unemployment Agency, and the IRS shared the estate property equally, Mr. Bays was required to return a portion of the interim compensation so that this amount could be fairly distributed to the other four claimants. (R.1.244, Order for Payment of Dividends, Apx. Pg. __; R.1.266, Court's Opinion and Order Determining Administrative Insolvency and Disgorgement, Apx. pg.__). However, Mr. Bays opposed returning the difference to the trustee so that Carroll Motor Supply, the Michigan Treasury, the Michigan Unemployment Agency, and the IRS could receive payment. (R.1.245, Motion by Debtor Specker Motor Sales Company for Reconsideration of Trustee's Final Account and Report, Apx. pg. __; R.1.254, Debtor's Motion for Determination re: Administrative Insolvency and Disgorgement, Apx. pg. __). Following several motions and hearings the bankruptcy court found that Mr. Bays must "disgorge interim fees paid to him in the Chapter 11 so that they can be distributed pro rata among all Chapter 11 administrative claimants," and that disgorgement was mandatory to ensure compliance with 11 U.S.C. 726(b). (R.1.266, Opinion Determining Administrative Insolvency and Disgorgement ("Opinion"), Apx. pg. __).

The bankruptcy court first noted that

> The rule provided in [section] 726(b) is a simple one. When a Chapter 11 case is converted to one under Chapter 7, the Chapter 7 administrative expenses have a priority of payment over the Chapter 11 administrative > expenses." Once the Chapter 7 expenses have been paid in full, Chapter 11 administrative expenses are paid. If the estate cannot pay all Chapter 11 administrative expenses in full, they are paid pro rata.

Id. Because he held himself out as a bankruptcy professional, the bankruptcy court found that Mr. Bays was on notice that he might have to return interim compensation if there was not enough money to pay all chapter 11 allowed administrative claimants at the conclusion of the case as required by section 726(b). Id. Further, the order of disgorgement was fair because "all administrative expenses [accrued in the same chapter] are on parity as to payment," in accord with the policy of equality of distribution, and "[t]here is no priority among administrative claimants." Id.

The bankruptcy court rejected Mr. Bays' argument that disgorgement is discretionary, holding that while disgorgement of interim compensation is discretionary because "the allowance of compensation is always discretionary," section 726(b) requires "disgorgement of interim compensation in every case of administrative insolvency in order to achieve the 'pro rata' disbursement described in [section 726(b)]." (R.1.266, Opinion, Apx. pg. __). Finally, the court noted that "interim allowances are interlocutory in nature and are always subject to the court's re-examination and adjustment during the course of a case," and accordingly "the amount of fees subject to review at the end of a case are not only the balance due at the end but all compensation sought including the interim fees and the retainer already received." Id.

On appeal,[6] the district court affirmed the order of the bankruptcy court. (R.14, Opinion, Apx. pg. __). The district court noted "[t]here is no dispute that the retainer [Mr. Bays] received was not a final payment and was subject to disgorgement," and Mr. Bays "acknowledged this potential and now cannot claim surprise when such an event occurs." Id. Not only did the district court reject Mr. Bays argument that the risk of disgorgement renders him a "guarantor of the estate," stating that Mr. Bays "is no more a guarantor of the estate than any other creditor incurring post-petition debt who must await resolution of the bankruptcy proceedings before hoping to collect," and is a "gambler in such proceedings like every other administrative creditor," but the court noted the sound policy reasons for delaying final payment of debtors' counsel until the conclusion of the case. Id.

The district court found that efficient administration of a bankruptcy case is ensured by "diminishing counsel's incentive to incur large fees," and that delaying final compensation until the end of a case "keeps the attorney alert to the on-going reorganization chances of the debtor" because "attorneys are less likely to allow a Chapter 11 business to continue when [the attorneys] are amassing large fee bills which may go unpaid." Id. (citation omitted). Further, the court noted that interim payments are not final, but are intended only to "relieve the economic burden on professionals providing services," and to treat them as final would mean that sections 330 and 331 could not be given effect "as the court would be denied the opportunity to correct" improprieties. (R. __, Opinion, Apx. pg. __).

[6] Pending resolution of the appeals, the parties agreed and the court ordered to stay the disgorgement order upon deposit by Mr. Bays of $9,200 into the Bankruptcy Court Registry Fund. (R.1.292, Order to Stay Order to Disgorge Attorney Fees Pending Appeal, Apx. pg. __).

The district court emphasized that failure to disgorge the interim compensation received by Mr. Bays would dishonor the intent of the Code and violate the "ultimate aim" of bankruptcy law of equality between like creditors by creating a "superpriority" for debtors' counsel because in a group otherwise considered equal under the Code, professionals are the only ones eligible to receive interim compensation. Id. Distinguishing between disgorgement under 330 and 331 as a "harsh remedy" which for the purpose of sanctions should be employed with discretion, and disgorgement necessary to effect compliance with pro rata distribution, which requires no discretion, the district court noted that the courts are not free exercise discretion when not authorized by Congress. Id. (noting use of word "may" in sections 330 and 331 and use of "shall" in section 726(b)).

Finally, the district court countered Mr. Bays argument that mandatory disgorgement when necessary to comply with pro rata distribution will discourage the involvement of attorneys in bankruptcy cases. The district court observed that "[l]awyers regularly get involved in legal matters without knowing if they will be compensated. It is the potential payout that makes it worthwhile and which the Court is confident will continue in this line of business." Id.

Following the district court's affirmance of the decision of the bankruptcy court, Mr. Bays initiated the appeal to this Court.

SUMMARY OF THE ARGUMENT

Mr. Bays cannot keep money that legally and equitably belongs to Carroll Motor Supply, the Michigan Treasury, the Michigan Unemployment Agency, and the IRS. These are the claimants with whom Mr. Bays is similarly situated under 11 U.S.C. 503(b) and with whom he shares estate assets pro rata under 11 U.S.C. 726(b). The position that Mr. Bays advances results in a fundamentally unfair result because it prefers himself to the detriment of other claimants who are equally deserving and equally entitled to payment, and there is simply no way around the fact that allowing Mr. Bays to keep the interim fees in his possession in excess of his pro rata share means that the other claimants will receive significantly less than the pro rata shares to which they are entitled under the Bankruptcy Code.

By its order of disgorgement, the bankruptcy court not only ensured equitable treatment of Carroll Motor Supply, Mr. Bays, the Michigan Treasury, the Michigan Unemployment Agency, and the IRS, but it also ensured compliance with the plain language of the section 726(b) that payment “shall be made pro rata.” The bankruptcy and district courts correctly recognized that there is nothing that allows the courts to create a unique superpriority for Mr. Bays (or any other claimant), unless authorized by Congress to do so. An unavoidable and unfortunate fact of bankruptcy is that there is rarely enough money to pay all persons who should receive payment. For this reason, Congress established a system of priorities and distribution. Under the facts of this appeal, Mr. Bays should receive no more than his fair share.

1. Standard of Review.

This court “review[s] a bankruptcy appeal differently than a typical appeal from the district court. The bankruptcy court makes findings of fact and conclusions of law. The district court then reviews the bankruptcy court's findings of fact for clear error and the bankruptcy court's conclusions of law de novo.” Wesbanco Bank Barnesville v. Rafoth (In re Baker & Getty Fin. Servs. Inc.), 106 F.3d 1255, 1259 (6th Cir. 1997) (citations omitted). This Court reviews the decision of the bankruptcy court directly, reviewing its factual findings for clear error and its legal conclusions de novo. Suhar v. Burns (In re Burns), 322 F.3d 421, 425 (6th Cir. 2003). The factual findings relevant to this appeal are not disputed. This Court conducts a de novo review of the bankruptcy court's legal conclusion that "[11 U.S.C.] 726(b) requires mandatory disgorgement of $9,026.59 from Specker Motors' counsel so that the administrative claimants can be paid pro rata." (R.1.266, Order and Opinion, Apx. pg. ___).

2. Mr. Bays Cannot Keep Money That Equitably and Legally Belongs to Carroll Motor Supply, the Michigan Treasury, the Michigan Unemployment Agency, and the IRS.

Allowing Mr. Bays the interim compensation he received in excess of his pro rata share means that the other four claimants will each receive less than their respective pro rata shares in violation of both 11 U.S.C. 726(b) and the fundamental bankruptcy principle of equality of distribution. Mr. Bays does not dispute that he received interim compensation that was conditioned on the court's final award of fees, nor does he dispute that section 726(b) requires pro rata distribution among similarly situated creditors. Nevertheless, Mr. Bays advocates a position that he should be allowed to receive a distribution that is 57.9% of his claim while Carroll Motor Supply, the Michigan Treasury, the Michigan Unemployment Agency, and the IRS receive 0.7% of their respective claims. The court below correctly refused to allow such an inequity of distribution in violation of the Bankruptcy Code.

In drafting the Bankruptcy Code, Congress weighed policy considerations with respect to giving deference to certain claims and expenses with the need for fair and equitable distribution of bankruptcy estate assets. The result was a system for liquidating cases under chapter 7 of the Bankruptcy Code which ranks expenses and claims by class and systematically distributes estate funds by such class in order of priority, but provides for payment within each class pro rata. 11 U.S.C. 726. “Equality of distribution among creditors is a central policy of the Bankruptcy Code [and] according to that policy, creditors of equal priority should receive pro rata shares of the debtor's property.” Begier v. Internal Revenue Service, 496 U.S. 53, 58 (1990). In its simplest terms, pro rata means that each claimant within a class must have an equal percentage of his or her claim paid. Carroll Motor Supply, Mr. Bays, the Michigan Treasury, the Michigan Unemployment Agency, and the IRS each hold claims incurred under chapter 11 and allowed under section 503(b) and are each entitled to payment of an equal percentage of 5.6% of their claims. See 11 U.S.C. 726(b) (payment on claims of a kind specified in 507(a) shall be made pro rata); 11 U.S.C. 507(a) (priority class of administrative claims allowed under section 503(b)). If the court allows Mr. Bays to retain the award as interim compensation, he would receive far too much and the other claimants would receive far too little. This result would be a clear violation of the pro rata distribution rule of section 726(b) and would be a subversion of the core bankruptcy principle of equality of distribution.

3. Carroll Motor Supply, Mr. Bays, the Michigan Treasury, and the Michigan Unemployment Agency are "Similarly Situated" Claimants Entitled to Pro Rata Distribution.

The five chapter 11 administrative claimants in this case, Carroll Motor Supply, Mr. Bays, the Michigan Treasury, the Michigan Unemployment Agency, and the IRS, are "similarly situated" for purposes of distribution of estate property because they enjoy the same priority of distribution by virtue of their status under 503(b). Moreover, they share the same priority status because their claims share the characteristics of each being incurred post-petition under chapter 11 of the Bankruptcy Code but preconversion to chapter 7; of each meeting the definition of a specific administrative expense under section 503(b), see 503(b)(1)(A) (Carroll Motor Supply); 503(b)(2) (Mr. Bays); 503(b)(1)(B) (Michigan Treasury, Michigan Unemployment Agency, and IRS); and each being "allowed" under 503(b).

The bankruptcy court, pursuant to the Bankruptcy Code, made a correct determination with respect to "similarly situated" claims, and Mr. Bays' current arguments with respect to the issue are meritless. Courts do not treat administrative expense status lightly, because "these claims are the first priority unsecured claims . . . and are paid before all other unsecured creditors." United States v. Ginley (In re Johnson), 901 F.2d 513, 516 (6th Cir. 1990) (superceded by Fed. R. Bankr. P. 1019 on other grounds). The bankruptcy court in the instant case considered and rejected requests for chapter 11 administrative expenses from entities other than the five that were ultimately allowed. See, e.g., Bankruptcy Court Docket Nos. 130, 131,151, 163, 164, 180 (claim of United States Department of Labor); Nos. 154, 155, 160, 165, 170 (claim of Halron Oil Co.).

Mr. Bays does not even dispute the status of any of the allowed chapter 11 administrative expense claims now. His sole argument that his is not "similarly situated" with the other claimants is based on his former position as Specker Motors' chapter 11 lawyer. See App. br. at 10. His prior relationship with Specker Motors, however, is irrelevant to the classification of his claim for purposes of distribution.[7]

[7] Mr. Bays raises a second argument related to the fiduciary relationship between himself and Specker Motors: That enforcement of pro rata distribution under 726(b) creates "an insurmountable conflict of interest" that destroys the attorney-client relationship because the attorney's pecuniary interest may be better served by advising Specker Motors not to pay certain administrative expenses during the pendency of the case. App. br. at 10-12. However, in a successful reorganization under chapter 11, funds will exist to pay allowed attorney fees in full. It is only when the chapter 11 case converts to a case under chapter 7 and is administratively insolvent that the attorney's fees will be affected.

Mr. Bays' fiduciary duty compels him to advise his clients how to deal with claims fairly. Any attorney would do nothing less than breach his fiduciary duty if he advised his client to engage in misconduct so the attorney could receive a fee greater than allowed by federal law. Moreover, Mr. Bays' policy argument on this point cannot be reconciled with the plain language of the section 726(b) and that plain language controls the outcome of this appeal. See United States v. Ron Pair Enters., Inc., 489 U.S. 235, 242 (1989) (plain language and meaning of legislation conclusive unless literal meaning demonstrably at odds with drafters' intention).

4. There is Nothing in the Bankruptcy Code that Allows A Court to Disregard the Plain Language of Section 726(b) and Create a Superpriority for Professionals.

There is no basis in the law for excepting Mr. Bays from the plain language of section 726(b) requiring pro rata distribution.[8] That 726(b) requires pro rata distribution is not disputed by Mr. Bays. Section 726(b) states that "payment shall be made pro rata . . ." 11 U.S.C. 726(b) (emphasis added). The statutory use of the term "shall" normally "creates an obligation impervious to judicial discretion." Lexecon, Inc. v. Milberg Weiss Bershad Hynes & Lerach, 523 U.S. 26, 35 (1998) (citations omitted). Because the language of 726(b) is plain and there is nothing absurd about the result of similar claimants sharing equally, the sole function of [8] Mr. Bays alleges incorrectly that he should be allowed to keep more than his pro rata share because he lacked notice that he might have to disgorge his interim fee award. App. br. at 8. It is enough of a general response to note that parties are presumed to know the law. Accord (R.1.266, Opinion Determining Administrative Insolvency and Disgorgement, Apx. pg. __). Indeed, this issue had been litigated in courts, and courts had ruled against Mr. Bays' substantive position, prior to the inception of the Specker Motors bankruptcy case. See, e.g., In re Wilson-Seafresh, Inc., 263 B.R. 624 (Bankr. N.D. Fla. 2001); In re Kingston Turf Farms, Inc., 176 B.R. 308 (Bankr. D.R.I. 1995). Alternatively, the debtor and Mr. Bays acknowledged in the original application to employ him that his compensation would be set by final order. (R.1.17, Application to Employ Counsel, Apx. pg. __; R.1.18, Affidavit of Donald Bays, Apx. pg. __). That happened here and Mr. Bays cannot complain that his final compensation was determined in compliance with federal law. Finally, Mr. Bays had notice and an opportunity to defend his position below. There were a flurry of motions and hearings before the bankruptcy court prior to its ruling against Mr. Bays on the merits.

the court is to enforce section 726(b) according to its terms. See Hartford Underwriters Ins. Co. v. Union Planters Bank, N.A., 530 U.S. 1, 6 (2000) (citations omitted).

In order to enforce section 726(b) according to its terms and ensure pro rata distribution in this case, the bankruptcy court properly ordered Mr. Bays to return $9,026.59 the estate to be paid to Carroll Motor Supply, the Michigan Treasury, the Michigan Unemployment Agency, and the IRS. The court's power to order the disgorgement arises from the authority granted by 11 U.S.C. 105(a) to "issue any order, process or judgment necessary or appropriate to carry out the provisions" of the Bankruptcy Code, and authority that "must and can only be exercised within the confines of the Bankruptcy Code." Norwest Bank Worthington v. Ahlers, 485 U.S. 197, 206 (1988); see also 11 U.S.C. 330(a)(5) (courts can require return of interim compensation).

There is no explicit provision in the Bankruptcy Code that permits a court to use its equitable power to except Mr. Bays from its enforcement of the terms of 726(b). A search for a similar implied exception in the Bankruptcy Code provisions is equally in vain. The most likely section from which to imply such an exception would be section 331. The fact that Mr. Bays received interim compensation, however[9] does not assist Mr. Bays in this appeal, since interim compensation is always subject to final approval at the conclusion of a case. See 11 U.S.C. 330(a)(5); see e.g., In re Regan, 135 B.R. 216, 218 (Bankr. E.D.N.Y. 1992) (only at conclusion of case is thorough analysis possible). Interim compensation is often reduced or disgorged prior to or at the time of final approval, for example, on the merits, see, e.g., In re Taxman Clothing Co., 49 F.3d 310 (7th Cir. 1995), or as a sanction, or to satisfy superpriority claims under section 507(b). See, e.g., In re Wilson-Seafresh, Inc., 263 B.R. 624, 631 (Bankr. N.D. Fla. 2001). Other courts have held that interim compensation must be reduced or disgorged to effectuate pro rata distribution. See, e.g., In re Wabash Valley Power Assoc., Inc., 69 B.R. 471, 475 (Bankr. S.D. Ind. 1987).

Even if the court were to find justification in section 331 to prefer Mr. Bays over the other four claimants, to do so would impermissibly create a priority between allowed administrative expenses. In drafting section 726(a), Congress ranked the categories for distribution of property of the estate: "[p]roperty of the estate shall be distributed . . . first . . . second . . . third . . ." 11 U.S.C. 726(a). In drafting section 507(a), Congress established the order of priority of categories of expenses and claims: “The following expenses and claims have priority in the following order . . .” 11 U.S.C. 507(a). Noticeably absent in section 503(b), however is any ranking or order of priority of among allowed administrative expenses. Section 503(b) simply states that “there shall be allowed, administrative expenses . . . including . . .” 11 U.S.C. 503(b). As previously noted, the sole provision in the Code establishing priority among any type of allowed administrative expenses is the priority granted by section 726(b) to chapter 7 allowed administrative expenses in a case converted to chapter 7 over any preconversion allowed administrative expenses.

[9] Even if the interim compensation paid to Mr. Bays was still part of the retainer, this would not except him from pro rata distribution and allow him to keep the $9,026.59. Retainers paid to counsel for the debtor are held in trust for the debtor and debtor's equitable interest in the trust is estate property. See Mapother & Mapother, P.S.C. v. Cooper (In re Downs), 103 F.3d 472, 478 (6th Cir. 1996).

Clearly, any priority granted to an allowed administrative expense held by Mr. Bays cannot arise by statute, but must instead be authorized by the court in deviation from the statute. However, as this Court has held, “if the claims of a class of creditors are to receive preferential treatment from the courts, the right to such treatment must have been authorized by Congress in clear and precise terms.” Travelers Prop. Cas. Corp., v. Birmingham-Nashville Express, Inc. (In re Birmingham-Nashville Exp., Inc.), 224 F.3d 511, 515 (6th Cir. 2000). There are no “clear and precise” terms in the Code or legislative history granting Mr. Bays priority over Carroll Motor Supply, the Michigan Treasury, the Michigan Unemployment Agency, or the IRS, nor are there even ambiguous or imprecise terms granting such priority. In fact, there is clear and precise language, in section 726(b), that ensures that neither debtors' attorneys nor any holder of an allowed administrative expense claim has priority over the others. "Payment on claims [for allowed administrative expenses] shall be made pro rata among claims of the kind . . . 11 U.S.C. 726(b) (emphasis added).

5. Reliance on Unitcast is Misplaced Because Unitcast Fails to Distinguish Between Disgorgement as a Sanction and Disgorgement to Ensure Equal Distribution.

This appeal does not involve the remedy of disgorgement as a sanction for misconduct or noncompliance. Compare Mapother & Mapother, P.S.C. v. Cooper (In re Downs), 103 F.3d 472 (6th Cir. 1996). That type of disgorgement is a discretionary remedy, one that should be applied when mandated by the equities of a case, determined at the court's discretion. Id. This appeal involves disgorgement as a means to ensure a fair division of estate assets as expressly mandated by federal statute. 11 U.S.C. 726(b). The division of estate property under section 726 allows no discretion, and when disgorgement is necessary to comply with the statutory mandate of section 726, the court simply may not exercise discretion. For this reason, the court's analysis in United States v. Schottenstein, Zox, & Dunn (In re Unitcast), 219 B.R. 741 (6th Cir. B.A.P. 1998) is flawed because it rests on an assumption that disgorgement cannot be both discretionary and mandatory, failing to recognize that disgorgement is merely a remedy whose nature depends upon the context within which it is used. The sole similarity between "disgorgement" used as a sanction originating from an attorney's misconduct and the "disgorgement" of funds previously received in excess of the amount of the attorney's pro rata share is that both "disgorgements" involve the order of return of money to the estate. This similarity is insufficient justification to yoke the court's duty to enforce a non-discretionary statute like section 726(b) with discretionary punitive disgorgement.

The court in Unitcast reasoned that disgorgement is discretionary even when necessary to comply with section 726 because "disgorgement is a remedy within the discretion of bankruptcy judges as the final arbiters of professional fee requests under §§ 330 and 331." 219 B.R. at 753. True, the bankruptcy court is the final arbiter of the award of professional fee requests under sections 330 and 331 by virtue of the discretion granted to the courts by Congress under those sections. Unitcast is correct that disgorgement is a discretionary remedy. But even that exercise of discretion has limits. See Mapother & Mapother, P.S.C. v. Cooper (In re Downs), 103 F.3d 472 (6th Cir. 1996) (bankruptcy court erred in not requiring complete disgorgement for intentional misconduct). Further, the Unitcast court assumes, without any authority, that disgorgement can only be discretionary, and can only be used as a remedy under 330 or 331. The court's faulty assumption stems from the failure to distinguish between the award of professional fees and the distribution of estate property in payment of such fees.

The discretion granted to the bankruptcy court to award, and hence to reduce or disgorge the amount of fees, pursuant to section 330 and 331 is utterly lacking with respect to the distribution of estate property under section 726. Sections 330 and 331 are fraught with discretionary language. See 11 U.S.C. 330, 331 ("after notice and hearing," "the court may award,""the court shall consider,""the court may allow,""the court may allow and disburse"). In contrast, there is not a single reference to the court, nor a hint of discretionary language in section 726. See 11 U.S.C. 726. Section 726(b), in particular affords no discretion. To the contrary, it uses the word "shall." Id.

The court in Unitcast tried to avoid the mandatory language of 726(b) by stating that "[s]ection 726(b) contemplates distribution based on the requests for payment of administrative expenses allowable at the time of distribution." Unitcast, 219 at 753. However, in doing so, the court arbitrarily excluded retainers and interim fees from the definition of claims allowable at distribution, and excluded retainers and fees from final distribution and review. To do so is not only contradictory to the tentative nature of interim fee awards, see 11 U.S.C. 330(a)(5), but also has the effect of silently depriving the pro rata distribution requirement of enforcement or meaning. A pro rata distribution at the conclusion of a case that ignores retainers and interim fee awards would not be pro rata distribution, but an exaggeration of an already unequal distribution.

Courts must give effect to sections 330, 331 and 726(b), as the courts below correctly did. When two statutes are capable of coexistence, it is the duty of the courts, absent a clearly expressed congressional intention to the contrary, to regard each as effective." Fed. Communications Comm'n v. Nextwave Personal Communications, Inc., 537 U.S. 293, 303 (2003) (citations omitted). The simplest way to give effect to all three sections is to acknowledge that compensation awards under section 331 really are "interim," and that under section 330(a)(5) all professional fee final awards are clearly subject to review, and to disgorge interim fees when necessary to ensure pro rata distribution.

6. No Remand Is Necessary.

No remand is necessary if the Court determines that disgorgement is mandatory when required to ensure compliance with section 726(b). Mr. Bays asserts that this matter must be remanded to the bankruptcy court even if this Court requires him to disgorge his interim fees because the bankruptcy court "must determine what other Administrative Expenses were paid and then recover those payments . . . to be distributed pro rata to all Administrative Expense creditors." App. br. at 20. Such a remand is wholly unnecessary because the record reflects that no other allowed administrative expense claims subject to disgorgement received interim payment other than Mr. Bays' claim. (R.1.242, Notice of Trustee Report and Final Account to Creditors, Apx. pg. __; R.1.244, Order for Payment of Dividends, Apx. pg. __).

At issue in this appeal is the provision of section 726(b) under which Mr. Bays is entitled to distribution, which states that "[p]ayment of claims of a kind specified in paragraph (1) . . . of section 507(a) . . . shall be made pro rata among claims the kind specified in [such] paragraph," except that "a claim allowed" under section 503(b) incurred under chapter 7 "has priority over a claim under section 503(b)" incurred prior to conversion. 11 U.S.C. 726(b). Unquestionably, under section 726(b), the chapter 7 administrative expense claims paid by the trustee had priority and were entitled to payment, and no determination of payment on those claims is necessary.[10] (R.1.242, Notice of Trustee Report and Final Account to Creditors, Apx. pg. __; R.1.244, Order for Payment of Dividends, Apx. pg. __); 11 U.S.C. 726(b). The only claims subject to pro rata distribution, and therefore disgorgement of payments made if necessary to ensure pro rata distribution, are "administrative expenses allowed under [section] 503(b)" incurred under chapter 11 prior to conversion to chapter 7. See 11 U.S.C. 726(b).

[10] The statutory fees paid to the United States Trustee pursuant to 28 U.S.C. 1930(a)(6) are entitled to priority under 11 U.S.C. 507(a), and in a case converted from chapter 11 to chapter 7, share pro rata with chapter 7 administrative expenses. (R.1.242, Notice of Trustee Report and Final Account to Creditors, Apx. pg. __; R.1.244, Order for Payment of Dividends, Apx. pg. __).

In this case, there were five administrative expenses allowed under section 503(b) that were incurred under chapter 11 prior to conversion. First, Carroll Motor Supply in the amount of $942.41; second, Donald Bays in the amount of $17,343.10; third, the Michigan Unemployment Agency in the amount of $5,724.86; fourth, the Michigan Treasury in the amount of $52,695.18; and fifth, the IRS in the amount of $128,094.19. (R.1.242, Notice of Trustee Report and Final Account to Creditors, Apx. pg. __; R.1.244, Order for Payment of Dividends, Apx. pg. __). The only one of the five to receive any payments toward their allowed administrative expense claims under section 503(b) was Mr. Bays, who received $10,000 interim compensation. Id. The record is clear and undisputed as to these facts and Mr. Bays states no foundation for his assertion of the necessity of a remand.

Although Mr. Bays' brief is far from clear on this point, he may be implying that the "ordinary course of business expenses" Specker Motors may have paid during the short pendency of the chapter 11 case should also be subject to disgorgement. Such an assertion would contravene the Bankruptcy Code, and would radically upset the manner in which chapter 11 cases are administered.

Unlike Mr. Bays' claim, ordinary course of business expenses that are paid during a chapter 11 case are not "allowed" under section 503(b). Instead, sections 363(c)(1), 1107 and 1108 authorize a chapter 11 trustee or debtor in possession to pay ordinary course of business claims as they go. 11 U.S.C. 363(c)(1) (debtor may use estate property in the ordinary course of business without prior court approval); 11 U.S.C. 1108 (trustee authorized to operate debtor's business); 11 U.S.C. 1107 (chapter 11 debtor in possession has rights of trustee). In every chapter 11 case, debtors and/or trustees use this power to operate the business. Those costs never become claims under section 503(b) because they are fully satisfied upon payment. No hearing is required, no court approval is necessary, no additional review occurs.[11] Thus, paid ordinary course of business transaction may not be disgorged to be distributed pro rata to allowed administrative expense claimants because they have been paid fully under section 363(c)(1), 1107 and 1108, and never become an administrative expense claim subject to pro rata payment under section 503(b). This is so because expenses paid in the ordinary course of business are paid (1) under sections 363(c)(1) and 1108 - not 503(b), and (2) without notice and a hearing unlike 503(b), which requires notice and a hearing for expenses to be "allowed" and entitled to the resulting priority status. Thus, these two classes of claims are mutually exclusive.

The preconversion payment of ordinary course of business expenses is distinct from Mr. Bays' situation, because compensation awarded under 330 is specifically designated as an administrative expense, and because section 330 awards are specifically required to be paid under section 503(b)(2). Conversely, ordinary course of business expenses are paid without notice and hearing pursuant to sections 363(c)(1), 1107, and 1108, and are not subject to section 503(b). They are simply paid by the debtor in possession during the pendency of the chapter 11 case under the debtor's power to make such payments under sections 363(c)(1), 1107 and 1108.

CONCLUSION

For the foregoing reasons, the United States Trustee respectfully requests that the judgment of the district court be affirmed.

Respectfully Submitted,

ON APPEAL FROM THE UNITED STATES DISTRICT COURT
FOR THE NORTHERN DISTRICT OF CALIFORNIA

BRIEF FOR THE APPELLANT

STATEMENT OF JURISDICTION

The bankruptcy court (Jellen, C. Bankr. J.) had jurisdiction over the underlying bankruptcy case pursuant to 28 U.S.C. §§ 157 and 1334. The district court (Breyer, J.) had jurisdiction over the United States Trustee's appeal from the bankruptcy court pursuant to 28 U.S.C. § 158(a)(1).[1] The district court entered an order dismissing the

[1] Although it granted appellees' motion to dismiss as moot the United States Trustee's appeal, the district court stated that its dismissal was not based on a finding of "mootness." Excerpts of Record 66-67 n.3. It is thus unclear whether the district court may properly be said to have concluded that it lacked jurisdiction over the appeal. At any rate, as we show infra in argument II, the district court's analysis was improper.

United States Trustee's appeal on April 30, 1999. Excerpts of Record (ER) 64-68. The United States Trustee filed a notice of appeal from the district court's order on June 28, 1999 (ER 68-69); this notice was timely pursuant to Federal Rule of Appellate Procedure 4(a)(1)(B). This Court has jurisdiction over this appeal pursuant to 28 U.S.C. § 158(d).

STATEMENT OF THE ISSUES

1. Whether a law firm with an "interested" partner who served as Assistant Secretary of the debtor corporation until less than two weeks prior to the filing of the debtor corporation's chapter 11 petition may nevertheless qualify as a "disinterested person" eligible to serve as counsel to the debtor-in-possession.

2. If not, whether the district court properly dismissed the United States Trustee's appeal on the ground that the firm had an equitable entitlement to retain all of its fees even if it was never eligible to collect them.

STATEMENT OF THE CASE

A. Nature of the Case, Course of Proceedings, and Disposition in the Courts Below

This case arises out of proceedings commenced by S.S. Retail Stores Corporation (the debtor) for reorganization under chapter 11 of the Bankruptcy Code. Lawrence Calof, a partner of the law firm Gibson, Dunn & Crutcher (Gibson, Dunn) applied, on the debtor's behalf, for the bankruptcy court's authorization to retain Gibson, Dunn as counsel to the debtor-in-possession in the chapter 11 case. Calof had served as the debtor's Assistant Secretary until less than two weeks prior to the bankruptcy filing. The United States Trustee objected, arguing that the firm was ineligible to serve as counsel to the debtor-in-possession because it could not qualify as a "disinterested person" as required by the Bankruptcy Code. The bankruptcy court authorized the debtor-in-possession to employ the firm over the United States Trustee's objection. The United States Trustee appealed to the bankruptcy appellate panel, which affirmed. This Court dismissed the United States Trustee's appeal from the bankruptcy appellate panel's decision, holding that the order authorizing the employment of the firm was not a final, appealable order.

Back in the bankruptcy court, the United States Trustee again pressed her argument that Gibson, Dunn's employment contravened the Bankruptcy Code, through objections to the bankruptcy court's orders approving the firm's final fee application and issuing a final decree in the case. The bankruptcy court denied the United States Trustee's objections, and the district court dismissed the United States Trustee's appeal. The district court held that even if the firm's employment contravened the Bankruptcy Code, a disgorgement remedy would be impermissibly inequitable. The United States Trustee now appeals the district court's order.

B. The Bankruptcy Code's "Disinterested Person" Requirement

The Bankruptcy Code requires a chapter 11 debtor-in-possession[2] to obtain the bankruptcy court's authorization to employ certain types of "professional persons" to represent or assist it in carrying out its duties under the Code:

> Except as otherwise provided in this section, the trustee, with the court's approval, may employ one or more attorneys, accountants, appraisers, auctioneers, or other professional persons, that do not hold or represent an interest adverse to the estate, and that are disinterested persons, to represent or assist the trustee in carrying out the trustee's duties under this title.

11 U.S.C. § 327(a). The Code further provides that a "disinterested person" must be a person who (inter alia) "is not and was not, within two years before the date of the filing of the petition, a director, officer, or employee of the debtor." 11 U.S.C. § 101(14)(D).

This "disinterested person" requirement originated in the Chandler Act of 1938. In 1937, then-Chairman of the Securities and Exchange Commission William O. Douglas testified to Congress that insiders of debtor corporations had all too often exercised "absolute control" over corporate reorganizations, and had sacrificed the financial well-being of investors and the public to "the insiders' desires for protection and for further profit." H.R. Rep. No. 75-1409 (House Report), at 37 (1937). Douglas laid particular stress upon the fact that, under the existing system, "one of [the debtor corporation's] officials may be appointed trustee for the debtor," which he thought "a strange and novel privilege for debtors in a bankruptcy proceeding" because it permitted insiders to evade any meaningful scrutiny from, or responsibility to, interests other than their own. Id. at 37-38. He accordingly urged that "something must be done to provide impartial, capable control over reorganizations." Id. at 37.

Congress acted upon Commissioner Douglas's recommendation by mandating that corporate reorganizations involve persons free of any substantial connection to the debtor corporation's insiders. The Chandler Act of 1938 provided that trustees would be appointed to participate in corporate reorganizations involving debts of $250,000 or more, and that these trustees, as well as any attorneys appointed to represent them, would be "disinterested" — meaning that they could not have been officers of the debtor corporation during the two years preceding the filing of the bankruptcy petition. Chandler Act §§ 156-158, 52 Stat. 840, 888. A House Report noted that the role of these "disinterested persons" was "difficult to overemphasize" (House Report at 43), since "[t]he central problem in reorganization is to see to it that power is not exploited by reorganizers but appropriated for the benefit of investors" (id. at 44).

The federal law of bankruptcy has since been amended several times, most extensively by the Bankruptcy Reform Act of 1978, Pub. L. No. 95-598 (1978) (codified as amended in scattered sections of Title 11 of the United States Code) (1978 Act). But from 1938 to the present Congress has retained the requirement that a "disinterested person" — i.e., someone sufficiently detached from the debtor corporation's insiders to provide a safeguard against insider manipulation — must be involved in corporate reorganizations. Thus, while the 1978 Act authorized debtor corporations to remain in possession of their property while reorganizing, Congress required these debtors-in-possession to hire only "disinterested persons" to assist them in the reorganization process (11 U.S.C. § 327(a)) and excluded from this category persons who have served as officers of the debtor corporation during the two years preceding the filing of the bankruptcy petition (id. § 101(14)(D)).

C. Statement Of Facts And Prior Proceedings

In connection with the filing of the debtor corporation's voluntary chapter 11 petition, Gibson, Dunn partner Lawrence Calof filed a request, on the debtor corporation's behalf, for the bankruptcy court's authorization to employ his firm as attorney for the debtor-in-possession in the chapter 11 case. ER 1-6. Calof also filed a declaration in support of the application, in which he disclosed that he had served as Assistant Secretary of the debtor corporation from an unspecified point in time until thirteen days prior to the filing of the bankruptcy petition. ER 9; see also ER 13-14.

The United States Trustee[3] objected to the firm's employment, on the ground that the representation would contravene the Bankruptcy Code. ER 11-12. The United States Trustee argued that, since Calof had been an officer of the debtor corporation well within the two-year period preceding the filing of the debtor's bankruptcy petition, neither he nor Gibson, Dunn could qualify as "disinterested persons" eligible to represent the debtor-in-possession.

After two hearings on the matter, the bankruptcy court issued a four-sentence order in which it "assum[ed]" that Calof was disqualified for "interest," but nevertheless authorized the employment of Gibson, Dunn as counsel for the debtor-in-possession. ER 40-41.

[3] The United States Trustees are "bankruptcy watch-dogs" charged with "prevent[ing] fraud, dishonesty, and overreaching in the bankruptcy arena." H.R. Rep. No. 95-595, at 88 (1977), reprinted in 1978 U.S.C.C.A.N. 5963, 6049. They are authorized to raise "any issue in any case or proceeding under [the Bankruptcy Code]," 11 U.S.C. § 307, and are directed to participate in bankruptcy cases in a variety of ways, including by monitoring applications for the employment of professional persons filed under § 327 of the Bankruptcy Code. See 28 U.S.C. § 586(a)(3)(H); see also St. Angelo v. Victoria Farms, Inc., 38 F.3d 1525, 1530 (9th Cir. 1994), amended, 46 F.3d 969 (1995); In re A-1 Trash Pickup, Inc., 802 F.2d 774, 775-76 (4th Cir. 1986).

The United States Trustee appealed to the bankruptcy appellate panel (Hagan, Ryan, and Ollason, Bankr. JJ.), which affirmed. Although the panel held that Calof was not a "disinterested person," it went on to hold that his law firm could nevertheless be considered a "disinterested person" and could represent the debtor-in-possession. The panel reasoned that, because the Bankruptcy Code included no "vicarious disqualification" provision "despite the legislative opportunity to include the disqualification," the "attribution" of Calof's disqualification to his firm "should not occur in this instance." ER 52-53.

While the United States Trustee's appeal from the bankruptcy appellate panel was pending, Gibson, Dunn filed a motion to dismiss the appeal as moot. The firm stated that the reorganization plan had been fully consummated, and argued that any disgorgement remedy for the firm's unlawful representation of the debtor-in-possession would be impermissibly inequitable. This Court (through its Appellate Commissioner) denied Gibson, Dunn's motion. (The Appellate Commissioner is authorized to dispense with plainly meritless motions without referring them to a motions panel, merits panel, or individual judge. See Ninth Circuit General Orders (January 1999) 51-52.)

A panel of this Court subsequently held that it lacked jurisdiction over the appeal because the order authorizing the employment of Gibson, Dunn was not a "final" order appealable pursuant to 28 U.S.C. § 158(d). In re S.S. Retail Stores Corp., 162 F.3d 1230 (9th Cir. 1998).

Meanwhile, the underlying bankruptcy case proceeded to completion in the bankruptcy court, and Gibson, Dunn filed its final fee application and asked the bankruptcy court to issue a final decree in the case. The United States Trustee opposed both requests, reiterating her argument that the firm's employment contravened the Bankruptcy Code. ER 55-59. The bankruptcy court entered the requested final orders over the United States Trustee's objections. ER 60-63.

The district court dismissed the United States Trustee's appeal from the final orders in the bankruptcy case. The court reasoned that "equity favor[ed]" Gibson, Dunn's request to dismiss the appeal, because no competing claims to the firm's fees had been made, the firm disclosed Calof's service as Assistant Secretary of the debtor corporation when it applied to represent the debtor-in-possession, "no harm or prejudice to creditors was proved," the United States Trustee had not alleged any "actual wrongdoing or misfeasance on the part of [Gibson, Dunn]," the fee was found to be appropriate, and "perhaps most importantly," Gibson, Dunn "can hardly be expected to abandon its representation of the debtor for fear that it was legally disqualified * * * after both the Bankruptcy Court and the [bankruptcy appellate panel] had issued legal rulings to the contrary." ER 67. The district court held that "[i]t would not be equitable to order the disgorgement of [Gibson, Dunn's] fees," and accordingly dismissed the appeal. ER 68.

The United States Trustee now appeals from the district court's order.

SUMMARY OF ARGUMENT

Permitting a law firm to qualify as a "disinterested person" despite not being composed of "disinterested persons" violates the plain language of the Bankruptcy Code, and is fundamentally contrary to the "disinterested person" requirement's essential purpose of guarding against insider manipulation of the corporate reorganization process. The Code provides that a "disinterested person" must not have served as an officer of the debtor corporation within the two years preceding the chapter 11 filing, and insofar as only natural persons (and not law firm "persons") may serve as corporate officers, the plain language of this requirement must be read to disqualify firms which — like Gibson, Dunn in this case — are subject to the "interest" created by their members' service as officers of the debtor.

The bankruptcy court's contrary holding creates a loophole in the "disinterested person" requirement through which law firm "persons" may easily pass, regardless of the "interest" of the attorneys of which they are composed. In carving out this loophole, the bankruptcy court undermined the "disinterested person" requirement's essential purpose, because law firms that are not composed of "disinterested" individuals cannot be relied upon to act like "disinterested" individuals. To the contrary, a firm's "interest" (created by the "interest" of its former-officer partner) by its nature erodes the firm's inclination aggressively to pursue the interests of the bankruptcy estate — the true "client" of counsel to a debtor-in-possession.

The district court's holding, that the firm has an equitable entitlement to retain all of its fees even if they were all collected in violation of the Bankruptcy Code, is insupportable. Bankruptcy courts enjoy broad discretion to order appropriate remedies for Code violations, and this Court's controlling precedent, as well as ample precedent from other courts, establishes that a disgorgement remedy would be an entirely permissible exercise of that discretion in this case. Indeed, this Court's precedents not only establish that a disgorgement remedy would be consistent with equitable principles, but also indicate that the district court's equitable analysis was fundamentally improper. This Court has made plain that the bankruptcy courts' equitable powers may be used only to further the Bankruptcy Code's purposes, and permitting a firm to leapfrog a strict disqualification provision set forth in the Code can hardly be thought to further the Code's purposes. Furthermore, even if the equitable concerns cited by the district court could properly be thought to bar the bankruptcy court from ordering full disgorgement, the district court erred in refusing to consider the equitability of a partial disgorgement remedy.

This Court should eliminate the loophole in the "disinterested person" requirement that the bankruptcy court created, reject the district court's holding that the firm is equitably entitled to keep all of its fees even if none of the fees were lawfully collected, and remand the case so that an appropriate remedy may be provided.

ARGUMENT

Statement Of The Applicable Standard Of Review

This appeal presents only pure questions of law, which this Court reviews de novo. Committee of Dental Amalgam Mfrs. and Distribs. v. Stratton, 92 F.3d 807, 810 (9th Cir.), cert. denied, 519 U.S. 1084 (1997).

I. GIBSON, DUNN'S APPOINTMENT AS COUNSEL TO THE DEBTOR-IN-POSSESSION VIOLATED THE BANKRUPTCY CODE.

A. Permitting A Law Firm That Is Not Composed Of "Disinterested Persons" To Qualify As A "Disinterested Person" Contravenes The Plain Language Of The Bankruptcy Code.

It has long been recognized that "professionals engaged in the conduct of a bankruptcy case should be free of the slightest personal interest which might be reflected in their decisions concerning matters of the debtor's estate or which might impair the high degree of impartiality and detached judgment expected of them during the course of administration." In re Philadelphia Athletic Club, Inc., 20 B.R. 328, 334 (E.D. Pa. 1982) (quoting 1 Collier Bankruptcy Manual § 101.13 (1981)). The loophole through which the bankruptcy court permitted Gibson, Dunn to evade the "disinterested person" requirement flies in the face of this important principle.

By defining the term "person" to include "individual, partnership, and corporation" (11 U.S.C. § 101(41)), the Bankruptcy Code provides that a law firm must be treated as a "person," and the Code draws no distinction between the "disinterest" requirement it imposes upon a law-firm "person" and that which it imposes upon a natural "person" (id. § 327(a)). Thus, the plain language of the "disinterest" requirement must be "rigidly applied" to law firm "persons," just as it is to natural persons. In re Jartran, Inc., 78 B.R. 524, 526 (Bankr. N.D. Ill. 1987); accord In re TMA Assocs., 129 B.R. 643, 646 (Bankr. D. Colo. 1991). Gibson, Dunn plainly could not meet this standard, because the firm's partner Lawrence Calof was an officer of the debtor corporation until less than two weeks before the debtor's bankruptcy petition was filed. ER 9.

The bankruptcy court's refusal to apply the "disinterested person" requirement to the firm cannot be squared with the Code's plain language. Whereas the Code makes all aspects of the "disinterested person" requirement applicable to law firms, the bankruptcy court's construction would introduce a "law firm exception," at least for the provision ascribing "interest" to recent service as an officer of the debtor corporation, that is nowhere to be found in the statute. This innovation upon the plain language of the statute must be rejected.

B. Permitting A Law Firm That Is Not Composed Of "Disinterested Persons" To Qualify As A "Disinterested Person" Would Severely Undermine The Purpose Of The "Disinterested Person" Requirement.

Even if it could be thought consistent with the relevant language of the Bankruptcy Code considered in vacuo, the bankruptcy court's construction of this language must be rejected as fundamentally contrary to the purposes for which the "disinterested person" requirement was created. The Supreme Court has stressed "[o]ver and over" that "[i]n expounding a statute, [courts] must not be guided by a single sentence or member of a sentence, but look to the provisions of the whole law, and to its object and policy." Regions Hosp. v. Shalala, 522 U.S. 448, 460 n.5 (1998) (internal quotation marks and citations omitted).

The bankruptcy court's conclusion that a law firm "person" may be considered "disinterested" despite the "interest" of its former-officer partner severely undermines the "object and policy" underlying the "disinterested person" requirement, because a firm partly composed of "interested persons" cannot be relied upon to act in the thoroughly detached fashion in which a "disinterested" individual would act. For example, if a "disinterested" individual serving as counsel to the debtor-in-possession were to uncover evidence indicating that the officers of the debtor corporation were legally liable for wrongdoing committed before the bankruptcy filing, she would not hesitate to initiate a lawsuit against the officers to recover money and property which rightfully belongs to the bankruptcy estate — the true "client" of counsel to a debtor-in-possession (In re Perez, 30 F.3d 1209, 1219 (9th Cir. 1994)). See, e.g., Trone v. Smith, 621 F.2d 994, 996 (9th Cir. 1980) (trustee initiated legal action against officers of the debtor corporation); In re Sally Shops, Inc., 50 B.R. 264, 265 (Bankr. E.D. Pa. 1985) (same).

But if counsel for the debtor-in-possession is a law firm with a partner or partners who are, or recently were, officers of the debtor, the firm's loyalty to the bankruptcy estate is impaired. The detachment and vigilance of the "interested" attorney's partners would be undermined by a natural resistance to initiating a legal action that might subject their own former-officer partner to liability. They would be less motivated to seek out evidence of wrongdoing by the debtor corporation's officers than "disinterested" counsel would be. The "interested" attorney's partners would also be inclined to exercise less vigilant scrutiny over the debtor corporation's business plans than would "disinterested" counsel, because they would think it possible that their former-officer partner had a hand in creating the plans, or could in any case be held legally responsible for them by virtue of his former position.

Although the threat to the estate posed by these factors will vary from case to case, Congress expressly declined to leave determinations as to whether recent service as an officer of the debtor corporation gives rise to disqualifying "interest" to case-by-case inquiry, choosing instead to create a categorical rule of disqualification. See 11 U.S.C. §§ 101(14)(D), 327(a). The preferability of such a prophylactic rule over a case-by-case inquiry was a legislative judgment well within Congress's authority to make, and courts are bound to respect it. See In the Matter of Consolidated Bancshares, Inc., 785 F.2d 1249, 1256 n.6 (5th Cir. 1986) ("The standards for the employment of professional persons are strict, for Congress has determined that strict standards are necessary in light of the unique nature of the bankruptcy process").

In a steady stream of decisions beginning as far back as the early 1980s, courts have recognized these principles, and have steadfastly refused to create a loophole in the "disinterested person" requirement for law firm "persons." See In re Michigan Interstate Ry. Co., 32 B.R. 327, 330 (Bankr. E.D. Mich. 1983) ("this Court is of the opinion that the 'insider' characteristics of one lawyer associated with the firm * * * are sufficient to strip the firm of its claim to disinterestedness"); In re Wells Benrus Corp., 48 B.R. 196, 199 (Bankr. D. Conn. 1985) ("The disqualification of any attorney pursuant to Code § 327(a) causes every attorney in that attorney's firm to be disqualified as well"); In re SIS Corp., 97 B.R. 361, 362 (Bankr. N.D. Ohio 1989) (because, among other reasons, a member of the law firm served as corporate secretary of the debtor during the two years preceding the filing of the bankruptcy petition, the firm could not qualify as a "disinterested person"); In re Tinley Plaza Assocs., 142 B.R. 272, 277 (Bankr. N.D. Ill. 1992) ("If an attorney who is a member of a law firm is disqualified from employment by the debtor-in-possession because he or she does not meet [the criteria set out in §§ 327(a) and 101(14)(D)], then all the members of the attorney's law firm are also disqualified"); In re Envirodyne Indus., 150 B.R. 1008, 1017 (Bankr. N.D. Ill. 1993) ("[I]f one attorney with a law firm is ineligible to represent a debtor-in-possession, then that firm is disqualified from such representation"); In re Weibel, Inc., 161 B.R. 479, 483 (Bankr. N.D. Cal. 1993) ("If a partner is disqualified, the firm is disqualified"), aff'd, 176 B.R. 209 (9th Cir. B.A.P. 1994).

C. The Bankruptcy Court And Bankruptcy Appellate Panel Fundamentally Misunderstood The "Disinterested Person" Requirement.

The record demonstrates that, in overruling the United States Trustee’s objections to the firm’s employment, the bankruptcy court fundamentally misunderstood the "disinterested person" requirement’s purpose. As explained above, Congress created the "disinterested person" requirement in order to ensure that counsel to a debtor-in-possession is completely detached from the debtor corporation's insiders. Yet the bankruptcy judge reasoned that the requirement should not be applied to Gibson, Dunn because the firm's "interested" partner was "not the enemy" of the debtor corporation. ER 25 ("[Mr. Calof has] been on the Debtor's team all along, remains on the Debtor's team * * * he's not the enemy") (emphasis added). The very closeness to the debtor corporation's insiders that the bankruptcy court believed rendered the representation lawful was in fact the basis for Congress's concern in adopting the Code's prophylactic "disinterested person" requirement.

In affirming the bankruptcy court, the bankruptcy appellate panel likewise misconstrued the functioning of the "disinterested person" requirement. The panel relied primarily upon the proposition that the disqualification of a firm for "interest" should not be available because § 327(a) includes no language specifically providing for the "vicarious" disqualification of law firm "persons." See ER 52 ("[n]o vicarious disqualification is provided for in the applicable sections of the Bankruptcy Code, despite the legislative opportunity to include the disqualification"). But the panel's reasoning was misguided. Law firms are clearly incorporated into the definition of "persons" in § 101(41) of the Code, and are just as clearly required to be "disinterested" in order to be employed as "professional persons" under § 327(a). Thus, the Code disqualifies "interested" law firms directly, and no inquiry into whether these firms may also be disqualified "vicariously" is necessary.

Even if it were correct in thinking "vicarious disqualification" necessary to the United States Trustee's objection, the panel's "negative pregnant" reasoning for concluding that § 327(a) cannot provide for this type of disqualification was mistaken. The panel did not explain its reasons for concluding that there was a "negative pregnant" in § 327(a) with regard to "interested" law firm "persons," but it did offer a clue by citing the Missouri bankruptcy court's decision in In re Creative Restaurant Management, Inc., 139 B.R. 902 (Bankr. W.D. Mo. 1992). See ER 52. The Creative Restaurant court's rationale for its "negative pregnant" theory was that, because Rule 5002(a) of the Federal Rules of Bankruptcy Procedure (Bankruptcy Rules) expressly provides that another type of disqualification must apply to a disqualified individual's law firm, this rule injects a "negative pregnant" into § 327(a) of the Bankruptcy Code regarding a firm's disqualification based on its partner's "interest." Creative Restaurant, 139 B.R. at 913; see also Vergos v. Timber Creek, Inc., 200 B.R. 624 (W.D. Tenn. 1996) (following Creative Restaurant); In re Capen Wholesale, Inc., 184 B.R. 547 (N.D. Ill. 1995) (same); In re Timber Creek, Inc., 187 B.R. 240 (Bankr. W.D. Tenn. 1995) (same).

The Creative Restaurant court's reasoning is fatally flawed. The rationale of the "negative pregnant" principle of statutory construction is that "[w]here Congress includes particular language in one section of a statute but omits it in another section of the same Act, it is generally presumed that Congress acts intentionally and purposely in the disparate inclusion or exclusion." Bates v. United States, 522 U.S. 23, 29-30 (1997) (internal quotation marks and citation omitted). But the language that the Creative Restaurant court used to insert a "negative pregnant" into § 327(a) does not appear in the "same Act," nor does it appear in any other Act, and in fact it was not even drafted by Congress. Rule 5002 was drafted by an advisory committee, which referred its draft to the Committee on Rules of Practice and Procedure of the United States Judicial Conference, which approved the draft and submitted it to the Supreme Court, which in turn transmitted the proposed Rules to Congress. Congress took no action to disapprove or amend the Rule within the time period specified by the Court and, in this fashion, Rule 5002 took effect by congressional default. See 9 King et al., Collier on Bankruptcy ¶ 5002RH[1], at 5002-9; ¶ 1001.02[2], at 1001-4 - 1001-5 (15th ed. & 1998 Supp.). Sound inferences as to Congress's intent may not be drawn by comparing the language that Congress placed in a statute to the language that an advisory committee placed in a rule.

Furthermore, using the Bankruptcy Rules to inject "negative pregnants" into the Bankruptcy Code runs counter to the Rules Enabling Act, which bars any use of the Federal Rules of Bankruptcy Procedure to "abridge, enlarge, or modify any substantive right," 28 U.S.C. § 2075, and thereby "requires that procedural rules be consistent with bankruptcy law as contained in titles 11 and 28 of the United States Code." 9 King et al., Collier on Bankruptcy ¶ 1001.01[1], at 1001-2 (15th ed. & 1997 Supp.).

These flaws in the Creative Restaurant court's reasoning compound that court's fundamental failure to understand the purpose and significance of the "disinterested person" requirement. As Professor Warner observed in a recent article in the American Bankruptcy Institute Law Review, Creative Restaurant and its progeny "lose sight of the prophylactic nature of [the Code's disqualification of former officers of the debtor corporation] and effectively read it out of the statute." G. Ray Warner, Of Grinches, Alchemy And Disinterestedness: The Commission's Magically Disappearing Conflicts Of Interest, 5 Am. Bankr. Inst. L. Rev. 423, 433 n.52 (1997). It is "simply inconsistent" with the premise of the Code's disqualification of officers of the debtor corporation "to adopt a rule permitting the employment of a two-person firm, where one of the partners is the corporate secretary," and "[m]oving to a 100-member firm is merely a change in the extent of the relationship, not in its type." Ibid.

This Court should reject the notion that the position held by the United States Trustee, and supported by overwhelming precedent, may be discarded pursuant to the use of a Bankruptcy Rule to read a "negative pregnant" into § 327(a) of the Bankruptcy Code, and should eliminate the loophole that the bankruptcy court carved out of the "disinterested person" requirement.

II. THE DISTRICT COURT ERRED IN HOLDING THAT GIBSON, DUNN IS EQUITABLY ENTITLED TO RETAIN ALL OF ITS FEES EVEN IF IT WAS NEVER ELIGIBLE TO COLLECT THEM.

A. This Court's Precedent, And Other Pertinent Caselaw, Strongly Supports The Availability Of A Disgorgement Remedy In This Case.

There is no serious doubt that the bankruptcy court can order a disgorgement remedy if this Court holds that Gibson, Dunn's service as counsel to the debtor-in-possession was void ab initio under the Bankruptcy Code. Indeed, bankruptcy courts enjoy "considerable equitable discretion in fashioning an appropriate bankruptcy remedy" (In re Reeves, 65 F.3d 670, 674 (8th Cir. 1995)), and disgorgement is the standard remedy when an attorney or law firm has collected fees for professional services in a chapter 11 case despite the fact that the attorney or firm was not eligible under § 327(a) to provide the services. See, e.g., Occidental Fin. Group, Inc., 40 F.3d 1059, 1062-63 (9th Cir. 1994) (affirming an order requiring a law firm to disgorge the full $140,000 in fees it had collected for its services in a chapter 11 case because the firm was ineligible to serve under § 327(a)); In re B.E.T. Genetics, Inc., 35 B.R. 269 (Bankr. E.D. Cal. 1983) (ordering full disgorgement by a law firm in a chapter 11 case because the firm was ineligible — due in part to the fact that one of its partners had served as Assistant Secretary of the debtor corporation within the two years preceding the chapter 11 filing — to serve under § 327(a)).

This Court has clearly stated that the line of cases originating in In re Roberts Farms, Inc., 652 F.2d 793 (9th Cir. 1981), which the district court cited in support of its dismissal (ER 67 n.3), is simply "inapplicable" when, as in this case, the Court may fashion effective monetary relief that does not infringe upon the rights of persons not before the court. In re Baker & Drake, Inc., 35 F.3d 1348, 1351 (9th Cir. 1994). Ordering the firm to disgorge unlawfully-collected fees would provide effective relief for the Bankruptcy Code violation, would not injure individuals not before the Court, and would be entirely consistent with the relevant equities articulated in this Court's decisions.

This Court has explained that the question of whether equity weighs against a requirement that a professional disgorge unlawfully-collected funds turns upon whether the professional had early notice that its ability to collect those funds was under challenge. In this case, as in several cases in which this Court affirmed the appropriateness of a disgorgement remedy, the potentially-disgorging party has known from the very beginning that its right to collect the funds was under challenge. See In re Cascade Roads, Inc., 34 F.3d 756, 761 (9th Cir. 1994) (observing that "[t]he trustee is a party to this appeal and has been aware at all times that the United States would seek appellate review," and concluding that "[g]iven the trustee's notice and participation in this appeal, it would not be inequitable to [order the trustee to disgorge money erroneously disbursed]"); In re Spirtos, 992 F.2d 1004, 1007 (9th Cir. 1993) (concluding that, because the "[d]ebtor knew at the time he received and spent his plan distribution that [a creditor] had appealed the bankruptcy court's decision [that the debtor's interest in pension plans was exempt]," it would not be "inequitable" to order disgorgement); In re International Envtl. Dynamics, Inc., 718 F.2d 322, 326 (9th Cir. 1983) (holding that, since counsel for certain creditors "has known since [the fees were disbursed] that [the trustee] contests the bankruptcy court's order that he be paid from the certificate of deposit," it would not be "inequitable" to order disgorgement).

This Court's precedents not only establish that a bankruptcy court could, consistently with equitable principles, provide a disgorgement remedy in this case, but also demonstrate that the equitable analysis that the district court considered mandatory was actually fundamentally improper. This Court has repeatedly observed that a bankruptcy court's equitable powers "may not be invoked to defeat clear statutory language, nor to reach results inconsistent with the statutory scheme established by the [Bankruptcy] Code." In re Powerine Oil Co., 59 F.3d 969, 973 (9th Cir.), cert. denied, 516 U.S. 1140 (1996); see also In re Futoran, 76 F.3d 265, 267 (9th Cir. 1996) ("The bankruptcy court's equitable powers may only be exercised in furtherance of the goals of the Bankruptcy Code") (internal quotation marks and citations omitted). Authorizing a law firm to escape a strict disqualification provision set forth in the Code can hardly be thought to be "consistent with" — much less to "further" — the Code's goals.

The district court does not appear to have consulted any of these controlling decisions of this Court. Instead, the district court opted to rely upon broad equitable considerations (such as the lack of evidence that the bankruptcy estate was actually harmed by the unlawful representation) and decisions of a bankruptcy appellate panel and the Sixth Circuit. ER 67-68. Neither of these bases of the district court's decision is sound.

In addition to contravening this Court's precedents discussed above, the district court's reference to broad equitable principles was wholly inappropriate to the particular context of this case. As Justice Douglas (whose testimony as Chairman of the Securities and Exchange Commission inspired the creation of the "disinterested person" requirement (see supra at 4-6)) observed for the Supreme Court in Woods v. City National Bank & Trust Co., 312 U.S. 262, 268 (1941), when a fiduciary's ability to provide "loyal and disinterested service" was impaired by that professional's interests, "[i]t is no answer to say that fraud or unfairness were not shown to have resulted." The remedy of denying compensation to a fiduciary who was unqualified to collect it is designed to eradicate "not only actual evil results" but also the "tendency to evil in other cases," and a bankruptcy court should not have to "speculate" as to whether a particular statutory ground for disqualification might have caused harm to the bankruptcy estate. Ibid. (internal quotation marks and citations omitted).

The decisions of the Sixth Circuit and a bankruptcy appellate panel from which the district court derived its equitable analysis are likewise unavailing. See ER 67-68 (relying upon In re CIC Investment Corp., 192 B.R. 549 (B.A.P. 9th Cir. 1996), and In re Federated Department Stores, Inc., 44 F.3d 1310 (6th Cir. 1995)). The bankruptcy appellate panel's conclusion in CIC Investment that a professional should be able to retain compensation for work performed pursuant to a bankruptcy court order through the time that the panel reversed the order (see 192 B.R. at 553) directly contradicts this Court's precedent. The potentially-disgorging parties in Cascade Roads, Spirtos, and Environmental Dynamics had all collected money in reliance upon bankruptcy court orders authorizing them to do so, and in none of these cases did this Court suggest that this fact would vest them with an equitable entitlement to keep the money they had collected in violation of the Code. See Cascade Roads, 34 F.3d at 759; Spirtos, 992 F.2d at 1006; Environmental Dynamics, 718 F.2d at 324.

Nor may the Sixth Circuit's Federated Department Stores decision provide a sound basis for the district court's holding. In that case, the Sixth Circuit rejected a mootness argument very similar to the one that Gibson, Dunn pressed before the district court. Like Gibson, Dunn, the professional whose "disinterestedness" was challenged in Federated Department Stores claimed an equitable entitlement to retain all of the fees it had collected from the challenged representation, and argued that even if its employment had violated the Bankruptcy Code, the violation therefore could not be remedied. Federated Dep't Stores, 44 F.3d at 1317. The court disagreed, held that the professional's appointment had contravened the Bankruptcy Code, and required it to disgorge the fees it had collected for close to eight months of work on the bankruptcy case. See id. at 1314, 1320. Although the court permitted the unlawfully-appointed professional to retain some of its fees, it did so only in recognition of the case's "peculiar and unique circumstances" and applied an ad hoc equitable rationale (based on the issuance of a controlling court of appeals decision establishing the professional's ineligibility (id. at 1320)), that departs from the equitable principles articulated in this Court's precedents.

B. The District Court Erred In Failing To Consider The Equitability Of A Partial Disgorgement Remedy.

Furthermore, even if the district court's equitable entitlement theory could properly be applied to bar the bankruptcy court from ordering full disgorgement, the district court erred in failing to consider the equitability of partial disgorgement. As explained above, the general rule calls for the disgorgement of all fees collected in violation of the Code, but even in a case in which a bankruptcy court adjusted a firm's forfeiture of fees in light of equitable factors similar to those that animated the district court below, the bankruptcy court — rather than simply turning a blind eye to the Code violation — nevertheless required partial disgorgement. See In re Kendavis Indus. Int'l, Inc., 91 B.R. 742, 762 (Bankr. N.D. Tex. 1988) (accepting the general rule that a professional's ineligibility to collect fees under the Bankruptcy Code requires a disallowance of all fees, but holding that in light of the fact that the law firm had "committed a great deal of time and labor" to the cases, in reliance upon court orders authorizing it to undertake the representation while the final determination of the issue of the firm's lack of disinterestedness was postponed, the law firm should forfeit only half of the over $4,000,000 in fees it had been awarded for its services).

C. The Application Of The District Court's Equitable Entitlement Theory Would Undermine The Bankruptcy Process.

Acceptance of the district court's theory that a law firm is equitably entitled to keep all of the fees it collects in bankruptcy cases regardless of the unlawfulness of the representation could have any of several effects, each of which would undermine the efficiency and fairness of the bankruptcy system.

First, the holding could undermine the effective enforcement of types of statutory disqualification that the courts of appeals have not yet addressed. Confident that they will be able to collect all of their fees before a court of appeals can rule on a challenge to their eligibility, attorneys will feel free to engage in representations that appellate courts would, given the opportunity, declare unlawful. By the same token, the district court's rule would provoke undue haste on the part of professionals who are aware of, or who foresee, challenges to their eligibility to collect fees: If they can win the race against the challenger's appeals, they will be rewarded with an equitable entitlement to retain their fees notwithstanding the possible unlawfulness of their employment. The district court's approach could also force United States Trustees to seek to stay bankruptcy cases pending review of their challenges to professional persons' eligibility to collect fees. Such a result would burden the other parties affected by bankruptcy cases, and would conflict with this Court's observation that no stay of a bankruptcy case should be required when the effective remedy of disgorgement is available. Environmental Dynamics, 718 F.2d at 326.

The equitable entitlement theory upon which the district court's dismissal rested would substantially interfere with the purposes of the Bankruptcy Code and the interests of other parties involved in bankruptcy cases. This Court should correct the district court's failure to implement the applicable principles of order and fairness set forth in its controlling precedent.

CONCLUSION

For the foregoing reasons, this Court should hold that the bankruptcy court erred in rejecting the United States Trustee's objections to Gibson, Dunn's employment as counsel to the debtor-in-possession, reverse the district court's dismissal of the United States Trustee's appeal, and remand the case either for the issuance of a specified remedy, or for the lower courts' determination of the appropriate remedy.

S.S. RETAIL STORES CORPORATION and OFFICIAL UNSECURED CREDITORS COMMITTEE,

Appellees.

ON APPEAL FROM THE UNITED STATES DISTRICT COURT
FOR THE NORTHERN DISTRICT OF CALIFORNIA

REPLY BRIEF FOR THE APPELLANT

In her opening brief, the United States Trustee explained that she has from the beginning objected to Gibson, Dunn's employment as general counsel in this chapter 11 case because the firm had a statutorily-impermissible connection to the debtor corporation's insiders. She also explained that, in holding that this Bankruptcy Code violation could not be remedied, the district court overlooked controlling precedent establishing that a disgorgement remedy would fall well within the bankruptcy court's remedial discretion.

S.S. Retail's response is, for the most part, not to respond. Rather than attempting to identify any flaw in the United States Trustee’s arguments, S.S. Retail simply adopts the lower courts' reasoning. Her essential points unrebutted, the United States Trustee reiterates her request that the decisions below be overturned and the Bankruptcy Code violation inherent in the firm's employment remedied.

I. GIBSON, DUNN WAS NOT A "DISINTERESTED PERSON" ELIGIBLE TO REPRESENT THE ESTATE UNDER THE BANKRUPTCY CODE.

A. S.S. Retail Ignores The "Disinterested Person" Requirement's Plain Language And Purpose.

In her opening brief, the United States Trustee showed that a properly strict application of the "disinterested person" requirement’s plain language requires that a law firm "person" subject to the "interest" of its former-officer partner must be disqualified. She also noted that this result would further the requirement's purpose, which is to ensure that counsel representing bankruptcy estates in chapter 11 cases are completely detached from the debtor corporations' insiders.

S.S. Retail does not attempt to argue that the firm's employment was consistent with a strict application of the "disinterested person" requirement's plain language. Nor does S.S. Retail's brief include any discussion of the "disinterested person" requirement's purpose, except insofar as it dismisses the relevant concerns raised by the firm's participation in the case as "gremlins and goblins." Br. Appellee 14. S.S. Retail even embraces the bankruptcy court's statement that Gibson, Dunn should be thought "disinterested" because the firm’s former-officer partner was always "on the debtor's team." Br. Appellee 37. Indeed, under S.S. Retail's understanding of the "disinterest" requirement, Gibson, Dunn would have been even better suited to represent the bankruptcy estate if all of its partners had recently been officers of the debtor corporation — that would create even more reason to believe that the firm would be "on the debtor's team." As the United States Trustee explained, this gets the matter exactly backwards, because the "disinterest" requirement exists to guarantee that counsel for the bankruptcy estate is completely detached from the debtor corporation's insiders. Br. Appellant 17-18.

S.S. Retail also appears to assume that Gibson, Dunn represented the debtor in this case, and that what is at issue is the debtor’s ability to select "its own" counsel. Br. Appellee 29. S.S. Retail thus steadfastly refuses to heed this Court’s exhortation that counsel for the estate in chapter 11 cases must "keep firmly in mind that [their] client is the estate and not the debtor individually." In re Perez, 30 F.3d 1209, 1219 (9th Cir. 1994) (emphasis added); cf. Br. Appellant 15 (citing this portion of Perez); see also In re First Jersey Securities, Inc., 180 F.3d 504 (3d Cir. 1999) (overruling order authorizing the employment of "interested" law firm which the bankruptcy court had justified by, inter alia, the premise that there is "a presumption that a party should be entitled to the professionals of the party's choice" (187 B.R. 135, 145 (Bankr. D.N.J. 1995))).

B. S.S. Retail's Arguments Amount To Efforts To Rewrite The Code.

Rather than addressing the "disinterested person" requirement's purpose or attempting to show that the firm's employment did not thwart that purpose, S.S. Retail essentially urges that the requirement should be ignored, speculating that "there is no indication * * * that Congress considered the peculiar application of [the "disinterested person" requirement] to the debtor in possession structure of the Code." Br. Appellee 33 n.30. To the contrary, however, as the National Bankruptcy Review Commission ("Commission") observed in its 1997 report, "[t]he history of the bankruptcy system during the period 1890-1939, together with the legislative history of the 1978 Code, tends to show that Congress consciously implemented broader application [sic] of disinterestedness" that applies to both debtor-in-possession and non-debtor-in-possession cases. I Report of the National Bankruptcy Review Commission 880 (October 20, 1997) ("Commission Report") (available at www.nbrc.gov/report/).

Moreover, Congress received the specific recommendation of the Commission (which it created by statute (Pub. L. No. 103-394, tit. VI, 108 Stat. 4106, 4147-50 (1994))) that the "disinterested person" requirement should remain fully applicable in debtor-in-possession cases. In making this recommendation, the Commission noted that all of the policies supporting the strict application of this rule in non-debtor-in-possession cases also support its strict application in debtor-in-possession cases. See Commission Report at 873-77, 881. (S.S. Retail's speculation would of course be irrelevant in any event, insofar as the assertion that Congress failed to "consider" a statutory mandate's application to a particular type of situation creates no license for a court to refuse to apply the statute as written. United States v. Wells, 519 U.S. 482, 497 (1997) (factor suggesting that Congress may have "overlooked" an issue "does nothing to muddy the ostensibly unambiguous provision of the statute as enacted by Congress").)

The logic of S.S. Retail's contrary theory appears to be that, because Congress in the Bankruptcy Reform Act of 1978 permitted chapter 11 debtors to retain possession and control of their assets during bankruptcy cases, it could not have intended for the "disinterested person" requirement to deter manipulation of the reorganization process by the debtor's insiders. Br. Appellee 29. In other words, because it created a system that raised certain recognized dangers of insider manipulation, Congress must have intended to remove from the Code any protections against these dangers. This makes no sense. As the Commission aptly noted, the concerns favoring the application of the strict "disinterest" requirement are even stronger in debtor-in-possession cases than in non-debtor-in-possession cases. See Commission Report at 875 ("because the debtor in possession has inherent conflicts of interest and is by definition not disinterested, an even stricter adherence to disinterestedness may be appropriate for the debtor in possession's professionals than for those of a disinterested trustee"); id. at 876 ("requiring disinterestedness is probably even more important when the estate is being administered by a debtor in possession; arguably, the debtor in possession and any creditors' committee lack the same incentives and ability to monitor the performance of counsel that a trustee has") (emphases added).

S.S. Retail also makes much of the fact that the Code permits a debtor's prepetition counsel to continue as counsel after the debtor becomes a debtor-in-possession (11 U.S.C. § 1107(b)). Br. Appellee 29. But the plain language of the Code demonstrates that Congress drew a line between a corporation's former officers and its former counsel, and the rationale underlying this line is clear and compelling. The relationship between the non-officer attorney and the attorney's corporate client is generally conducted at "arm's-length." A corporation's officers, by contrast, are part of the corporation. The importance of this difference is well-recognized in the law of professional responsibility. See 1 GEOFFREY C. HAZARD, JR. & W. WILLIAM

HODES, THE LAW OF LAWYERING § 1.13:110, at 402 ("a lawyer who must give detached legal advice and at the same time be mindful of his or her own potential liability as a corporate office[]-holder cannot blink the possibility that the quality of the representation may suffer"). (Further, S.S. Retail's argument once again misperceives the role of courts in applying statutes. Even when its rationale is less evident, courts may not second-guess Congress's line-drawing unless a line has been placed "'very wide of any reasonable mark.'" Schweiker v. Wilson, 450 U.S. 221, 238-39 n.23 (1981) (quoting Louisville Gas & Electric Co. v. Coleman, 277 U.S. 32, 41 (1938) (Holmes, J., dissenting)).)

S.S. Retail cites four recent lower-court cases (among which is one of the very decisions being challenged here) as "overwhelming case law" (Br. Appellee 9) in its favor, and asserts that the United States Trustee has cited no authority for the proposition that "every single partner must be disinterested" in order for a law firm to qualify as a "disinterested person" (id. at 32) (emphasis removed). These assertions are perplexing, given the fact that the United States Trustee cited six cases in support of her position, and quoted language from each of these cases clearly setting forth this very proposition. Br. Appellant 16-17. S.S. Retail's assertion that the decisions upon which it relies did not apply a "negative pregnant" theory (Br. Appellee 32) is equally perplexing, given that its own summary of these decisions' reasoning confirms that they did. See id. 35 (observing that these decisions reasoned that "Congress could have imputed a person's disqualification to his/her firm if it wanted to," and citing Bankruptcy Rule 5002(a)).

S.S. Retail's persistent stress upon the fact that the debtor's creditors did not object to the firm's employment (Br. Appellee 8, 23, 25) is similarly misplaced. One of the foremost concerns underlying Congress's decision to create the United States Trustees and empower them to monitor compliance with the Bankruptcy Code was its finding that "[t]he notion of creditor control [wa]s a myth." H.R. Rep. No. 95-595, ch. 2, at 92 (1977), reprinted in 1978 U.S.C.C.A.N. 5963, 6053 (footnote omitted); see also Commission Report at 876 (noting that creditors' committees lack sufficient incentive and ability to monitor counsel's performance). And S.S. Retail's assertion that the application of the "disinterested person" requirement's plain language could be unreasonably burdensome in cases in which a law firm's partner owns a single share of stock in the debtor (Br. Appellee 32) is mistaken. Congress declined to impose on equity holders the "two-years-back" requirement that it placed upon former officers. 11 U.S.C. § 101(14)(A) (compare id. § 101(14)(D)). Thus, the hypothetical share-owning partner need only sell her share in order to render her firm immediately eligible to undertake the representation.

In short, S.S. Retail has failed to explain why Gibson, Dunn deserved to be exempted from the Code's strict "disinterest" requirement. Because a law firm with an "interested" partner lacks the complete detachment from the debtor corporation's insiders that the Code requires, the bankruptcy court should have accepted the United States Trustee's objection to the firm's employment.

C. This Court Can And Should Address The Issue Of Whether Gibson, Dunn's Employment Violated The Bankruptcy Code.

S.S. Retail suggests that the fact that the district court declined to decide whether Gibson, Dunn's employment violated the Bankruptcy Code precludes this Court from addressing the issue. Br. Appellee 28. This suggestion is incorrect. While this Court could confine itself to the district court's "mootness" holding and direct the district court on remand to address the legality of the firm's employment, it is under no obligation to do so. To the contrary, this Court enjoys the discretion to address even issues that were never raised before the district court, and commonly does so when the issues involve only pure questions of law and considering them would prejudice neither party. See, e.g., United States v. Roberts, 5 F.3d 365, 368 n.2 (9th Cir. 1993); see also 28 U.S.C. § 2106 (vesting courts of appeals with power to affirm, modify, vacate, set aside or reverse any judgment, decree, or order lawfully brought before them, and to remand causes with directions to enter such judgments, decrees, or orders, or to engage in such further proceedings, as are "just under the circumstances").

All of the pertinent factors strongly recommend that this Court address the propriety of Gibson, Dunn's employment in the instant appeal. This issue not only was briefed and argued before the district court below, it was also briefed and argued twice in the bankruptcy court, was briefed, argued, and decided in the bankruptcy appellate panel, and has now been briefed in this Court twice. It involves a pure question of law that this Court is "equally if not better suited than the district court" to decide, United States v. Real Property Known as 22249 Dolorosa Street, 190 F.3d 977, 981 (9th Cir. 1999), and far from prejudicing any party, deciding the issue now would spare the parties the burden of litigating a wholly unnecessary further round of appeals (for which Gibson, Dunn evidently would not be compensated (see Br. Appellee 28)). Under these circumstances, there is no compelling reason for this Court not to address the issue at this stage.

II. GIBSON, DUNN HAS NO EQUITABLE ENTITLEMENT TO RETAIN ALL OF ITS FEES.

A. There Is No Equitable Bar To A Disgorgement Remedy In This Case.

In her opening brief, the United States Trustee demonstrated that the district court erred in concluding that no remedy is available and dismissing her appeal from the bankruptcy court's final orders. This Court has noted that it "may only dismiss an appeal if it is impossible to fashion 'relief that is both effective and equitable.'" St. Angelo v. Victoria Farms, Inc., 38 F.3d 1525, 1533 (9th Cir. 1994); amended, 46 F.3d 969 (9th Cir. 1995) (quoting In re Spirtos, 992 F.2d 1004, 1007 (9th Cir. 1993)). S.S. Retail has failed to show that this is the case. To the contrary, this Court's precedents establish that where, as here, the effective remedy of disgorgement may be applied against a party that has had notice that disgorgement might be ordered, and disgorgement would not impair the interests of third parties not before the Court, equity supports the bankruptcy court's discretion to order a disgorgement remedy.[1] S.S. Retail's brief fails to obscure the clear application of this controlling precedent.

S.S. Retail argues that a bankruptcy appeal becomes "equitably moot" when an appellant has not sought to stay the challenged bankruptcy court order, and the money which would form the basis for the disgorgement remedy has already been transferred. But this is precisely the theory that this Court rejected in In re International

[1] The United States Trustee notes that 11 U.S.C. § 328(c) authorizes bankruptcy courts to deny compensation to "professional person[s] employed under section 327" if the persons were, at any time during their service, not "disinterested." The United States Trustee does not believe that this provision applies when a professional's employment was void ab initio, and thus the professional was never validly "employed under section 327." The courts of appeals have divided on this question. Compare In re Federated Department Stores, 44 F.3d 1310, 1320 (6th Cir. 1995) with In re Crivello, 134 F.3d 831, 837 (7th Cir. 1998). This Court need not decide the issue, however, because even if § 328(c) were applicable here, it clearly could not support the district court's conclusion that no remedy is available in this case.

Environmental Dynamics, Inc., 718 F.2d 322, 325-26 (9th Cir. 1983) and Spirtos, 992 F.2d at 1006-07. In each of these decisions, this Court held that it could fashion relief that was both effective and equitable by ordering the disgorgement of erroneously-disbursed funds. See also In re Cascade Roads, Inc., 34 F.3d 756, 759-61 (9th Cir. 1994) (rejecting litigant's argument that the payment to the estate of the money sought to be recovered mooted the appeal).

S.S. Retail does not attempt to deny that the effective relief of disgorgement is likewise available here. Instead, S.S. Retail argues only that any disgorgement remedy would be impermissibly inequitable. Br. Appellee 10-28. But as in Environmental Dynamics, Spirtos, and Cascade Roads, Gibson, Dunn has known from the beginning that its right to collect the fees that would underlie any disgorgement remedy was under challenge. Thus, as in those cases, equity supports the availability of the remedy here. See Environmental Dynamics, 718 F.2d at 326; Spirtos, 992 F.2d at 1007; Cascade Roads, 34 F.3d at 761.

Indeed, S.S. Retail does not deny that the equities articulated in these precedents support the availability of a disgorgement remedy in this case. Rather, S.S. Retail seeks to distinguish these decisions, claiming that each of them dealt with situations in which there were "competing claimants" to "particular funds." Br. Appellee 21. If S.S. Retail means to refer to situations in which multiple parties compete for the assets of a limited fund, the assertion is incorrect. Only one of these cases dealt with such a situation, and in that case the Court found the existence of competing claimants relevant only to the question of whether the (private-party) appellant qualified as an "aggrieved person" under the (pre-1978) Bankruptcy Act. Environmental Dynamics, 718 F.2d at 326; cf. Spirtos, 992 F.2d at 1005-07 (Court examined whether Debtor would be required to reimburse estate for money that was placed into pension plans and then distributed); Cascade Roads, 34 F.3d at 758-60 (Court examined whether estate would be required to return money judgment awarded in contract action).

If S.S. Retail instead means to refer to situations in which other entities with an interest in the bankruptcy estate would receive the disgorged funds, the instant case also involves such "competing claimants." Should this Court find that Gibson, Dunn's employment contravened the Bankruptcy Code and remand the case for the provision of a remedy, the bankruptcy court presumably would reopen the case pursuant to 11 U.S.C. § 350(b), order Gibson, Dunn to disgorge funds, and distribute the disgorged funds to the unsecured creditors — who received only nineteen cents for each dollar they were owed, pursuant to the plan. Br. Appellee 3-4; see also First Jersey, 180 F.3d at 514 (reversing order authorizing the employment of an "interested" law firm and remanding the case to the district court with directions to remand to the Bankruptcy Court with instructions to disqualify the "interested" law firm and "take such further action as is consistent with this opinion").

S.S. Retail's assertion that this appeal is rendered moot by a "comprehensive change of circumstances" (Br. Appellee 13) is likewise unavailing. The "comprehensive changes" to which S.S. Retail refers cannot render this appeal moot, for the simple reason that they have nothing whatever to do with the effective remedy of disgorgement. The decisions to which S.S. Retail refers deal with litigants seeking remedies that would require the Court to "unscramble the eggs" of a largely-completed reorganization. In re Baker & Drake, Inc., 35 F.3d 1348, 1351 (9th Cir. 1994). When the Court can fashion effective relief by ordering a party to disgorge money, there is no need to undo "transactions that are * * * complex or difficult to unwind," In re Lowenschuss, 170 F.3d 923, 933 (9th Cir. 1999), and those decisions are inapplicable. Ibid.; accord Baker & Drake, 35 F.3d at 1351; Cascade Roads, 34 F.3d at 759-60; Spirtos, 992 F.2d at 1006; Environmental Dynamics, 718 F.2d at 326.

S.S. Retail's heavy reliance upon the Sixth Circuit's decision in In re Federated Department Stores, Inc., 44 F.3d 1310 (6th Cir. 1995) (Br. Appellee 16-19) is curious, since in that case the Sixth Circuit applied the very principles set forth above to reject "mootness" arguments virtually identical to those pressed by S.S. Retail here. The Sixth Circuit was unpersuaded by the professional's argument that the United States

Trustee's failure to seek a stay of the bankruptcy proceeding, pending appeal of his challenge to the professional's employment order, required dismissal of the United States Trustee's appeal. The court observed that, pursuant to this Court's Environmental Dynamics decision, equity did not require dismissal of the appeal on this ground, because the professional had known "[f]rom the outset" that the United States Trustee objected to its appointment and that the challenged retention order "would be subject to reversal." Federated Dep't Stores, 44 F.3d at 1317 (citing Environmental Dynamics). The Court also rejected the professional's argument that the appeal had been mooted by the completion of the reorganization, noting that even when the completion of a reorganization has mooted "issues directly involving the reorganization of the estate," the "collateral or ancillary" issues raised by a challenge to the lawfulness of an employment order may remain alive. Id. at 1316 (quoting In re Dahlquist, 751 F.2d 295, 298 (8th Cir. 1985)). Having determined that the United States Trustee's appeal was neither constitutionally nor "equitably" moot, the Sixth Circuit proceeded to review — and to reverse — the challenged employment order. Id. at 1318-19.

Still more curious is S.S. Retail's refusal even to address the Supreme Court’s decision in Woods v. City National Bank & Trust Company, 312 U.S. 262 (1941), which the United States Trustee discussed at some length in her opening brief (at 25-26). In Woods, the Supreme Court stated that, because "'reasonable compensation for services rendered' necessarily implies loyal and disinterested service," a fiduciary whose ability to provide such service was impaired should be denied compensation, notwithstanding his assertion that "fraud or unfairness were not shown to have resulted." Id. at 268. The Woods decision has been widely cited for its entire 58-year history, and is recognized as "[t]he seminal conflict of interest case" in the bankruptcy context. In re Florida Peach Corp., 110 B.R. 589, 592 (Bankr. M.D. Fla. 1990); see also Matter of York Int'l Bldg., Inc., 527 F.2d 1061, 1075 (9th Cir. 1975) ("In Woods, the Supreme Court said that a fiduciary who represents several masters may not perfect a claim for compensation by insisting that his primary loyalty was not weakened by the pull of his secondary one"). Significantly, the Commission relied upon Woods in disapproving proposals to replace the Code's strict "disinterestedness" requirement with a "less rigorous showing of materially adverse conflict," noting that conflicts "can cripple public confidence in the bankruptcy system even if their magnitude cannot be quantified." Commission Report at 876 (citing Woods).

The governing principles set forth in this seminal decision foreclose S.S. Retail’s persistent argument (Br. Appellee 6, 8, 9, 14, 21, 35) that no disgorgement remedy may be provided unless the United States Trustee can prove that Gibson, Dunn’s "interest" gave rise to specific, identifiable shortcomings in its representation.

By its very nature, an attorney's "interest" reduces the value of the attorney's services, In re Coastal Equities, Inc., 39 B.R. 304, 312 (Bankr. S.D. Cal. 1984), and thus the bankruptcy court would be well within its discretion in retroactively reducing the firm's compensation in light of its "interest," even if it could not conclusively determine that the firm's "interest" actually impaired its representation or harmed the estate.[2]

B. Even If This Court Were To Adopt S.S. Retail's Generalized Equitable Analysis, Affirmance Of The District Court's Dismissal Would Not Be Proper.

Even if this Court were to adopt S.S. Retail's suggested broad equitable analysis of the remedial issue, this analysis cannot support the district court's conclusion that equity bars the provision of any remedy in this case.

[2] In any event, neither the United States Trustee nor this Court would be in any position to make such a determination at this stage. This would require a factual inquiry necessitating intimate knowledge of the details of the case, and would therefore be a question that would have to be addressed in the first instance by the bankruptcy court. (Because it concluded that Gibson, Dunn was "disinterested," the bankruptcy court did not reach or consider the question.) Thus, the bankruptcy appellate panel in the CIC Investment decision (upon which S.S. Retail relies (Br. Appellee 15, 16)) remanded the case to the bankruptcy court for its determination of "whether [the professional person's] failure to be disinterested negatively interfered with its efforts" in the case. In re CIC Investment Corp., 192 B.R. 549, 554 (B.A.P. 9th Cir. 1996). S.S. Retail's attempt to distinguish this aspect of CIC Investment (Br. Appellee 16 n.22) is unavailing. The burden of proof in regard to a professional's compensation rests upon the professional, and not (as S.S. Retail appears to assume) on the United States Trustee. Zolfo, Cooper & Co. v. Sunbeam-Oster Co., Inc., 50 F.3d 253, 261 (3d Cir. 1995); In re Vann, 136 B.R. 863, 871 (D. Colo. 1992), affirmed, 986 F.2d 1431 (10th Cir. 1993) (Table). (Indeed, the bankruptcy court would have the duty of determining whether this burden has been carried even if the United States Trustee had never objected to the firm's employment. Zolfo, 50 F.3d at 262.) Moreover, this matter would not necessarily have to be resolved on the basis of the current record, since the bankruptcy court on remand could well decide that its examination of the role the firm's "interest" may have played in the case required further record development.

Although portions of S.S. Retail's brief appear to take the position that there are no relevant concerns weighing in favor of the relief sought by the United States Trustee, S.S. Retail does acknowledge that the "systemic harms" the United States Trustee described in her brief constitute relevant "equities." Br. Appellee at 13 n.21. Inexplicably, however, S.S. Retail asserts that "[i]t is not suggested that these equities apply here." Ibid. These equities self-evidently do apply here, and if they are to be accorded even minimal weight, the district court's conclusion that equity bars the provision of any remedy cannot stand.

A broad systemic harm that would result from an affirmance of the district court's dismissal would be the creation of a "catch-22" system of review, whereby it will generally be impossible for a United States Trustee to obtain this Court's review of a bankruptcy court's unlawful employment order. See Br. Appellant 29-30. Because this Court has held that an initial employment order is not "final" and appealable, In re S.S. Retail Stores Corp., 162 F.3d 1230 (9th Cir. 1998), a United States Trustee must wait for the final orders in a chapter 11 case before appealing the denial of her objection to a professional's employment. An affirmance of the district court's "mootness" holding would turn this Court's finality doctrine into a "catch-22" trap, whereby pre-final-order appeals are dismissed as premature, and post-final-order appeals are dismissed as "equitably moot." The net result would be that the power to object to an unlawful employment order, which Congress expressly conferred upon the United States Trustees, 28 U.S.C. § 586(a)(3)(H), would be partially nullified. Such a review framework has no basis in this Court's precedents, and would severely undermine the orderliness and fairness of the bankruptcy review process.

Finally, it is important to reiterate that the district court's dismissal cannot stand unless S.S. Retail establishes that the firm has an equitable entitlement to retain every penny of its fees — i.e., that an order requiring the disgorgement of any sum, however small, would be outside the boundaries of the bankruptcy court's broad remedial discretion. Given the extreme nature of this proposition, it is notable that S.S. Retail makes so serious effort to defend it. Instead, S.S. Retail offers only an unelaborated assertion that "any disgorgement remedy would be inequitable." Br. Appellee 24. Yet S.S. Retail cites no case in which any court has held that equity entitled a professional whose employment contravened the Bankruptcy Code from the beginning to retain all of its fees.

In summary, S.S. Retail's proffered equitable analysis contradicts controlling precedent, and the equitable entitlement to retain all of its fees to which Gibson, Dunn lays claim does not exist. The governing law establishes that this Court should address the merits of the United States Trustee's objection to the firm's employment, and remand the case to the bankruptcy court for the provision of an appropriate remedy.

CONCLUSION

For the foregoing reasons, and for the reasons set forth in the United States Trustee's opening brief, this Court should hold that the bankruptcy court erred in rejecting the United States Trustee's objections to Gibson, Dunn's employment as counsel to the debtor-in-possession, reverse the district court's dismissal of the United States Trustee's appeal, and remand the case either for the issuance of a specified remedy, or for the lower courts' determination of the appropriate remedy.

I. JURISDICTION

The United States Trustee, as appellee, adopts the jurisdictional statement of the appellants, Nicholas Stamat and Penny Stamat ("the Debtors"). This Court has appellate jurisdiction under 28 U.S.C. § 158(a)(1) and Fed. R. Bankr. P. 8001(a) over the bankruptcy court's final order entered in favor of the United States Trustee on September 24, 2008.

II. ISSUE PRESENTED FOR REVIEW[1]

Whether the bankruptcy court abused its discretion by denying the Debtors' discharge under 11 U.S.C. §§ 727(a)(2), (a)(4), and (a)(5), which allow courts to deny granting a discharge where there is evidence that required bankruptcy documents are not truthful.

III. STATEMENT OF THE CASE

On July 26, 2007, the Debtors filed a voluntary bankruptcy petition under chapter 7 of the Bankruptcy Code, 11 U.S.C. § 701 et seq. On December 21, 2007, the United States Trustee[2] filed

[1] The Debtors raised eight issues in their notice of appeal but their brief raises sixteen issues. The Debtors do not individually address each issue and it is unclear whether the issues raise challenges to finding of fact or mixed findings of fact and conclusions of law. As noted in the brief, supra, the standard of review varies.

[2] United States Trustees "serve as bankruptcy watch-dogs to prevent fraud, dishonesty, and overreaching in the bankruptcy arena." H.R. Rep. No. 95-595, at 88 (1977). The United States Trustee Program therefore acts in the public interest to promote and preserve the efficiency and integrity of the bankruptcy system. Congress has provided that "[t]he United States trustee may raise and may appear and be heard on any issue in any case or proceeding . . . ." 11 U.S.C. § 307. See, e.g.,Thompson v. Greenwood, 507 F.3d 416, n.3 (6th Cir. 2007) (stating "[t]he United States Trustee is an interested party by statute"); In re South Beach Sec., Inc., 376 B.R. 881, 892-893 (Bankr.N.D. Ill. 2007) (stating "the U.S. Trustee is the watchdog that guards the public interest . . . [and] protects the integrity of the system.").

a complaint objecting to the discharge of debts under 11 U.S.C. §§ 727(a)(2), (4) and (5). On September 24, 2008, the bankruptcy court agreed with the United States Trustee and entered a final judgment order denying the Debtors' discharges. The Debtors filed a timely notice of appeal on October 4, 2008.

IV. STANDARD OF REVIEW

An appellate court reviews a bankruptcy court's legal interpretations and mixed questions of law and fact de novo. Mungo v. Taylor, 355 F.3d 969, 974 (7th Cir. 2004). An appellate court reviews findings of fact entered by the bankruptcy court for clear error. In re Scott, 172 F.3d 959, 966 (7th Cir. 1999).

In reviewing a bankruptcy court's decision to deny discharge, neither an appellate court nor a district court will overturn the decision unless it is clearly erroneous. In re D'Agnese, 86 F.3d 732, 734 (7th Cir. 1996) (citing In re Martin, 698 F.2d 883, 886 (7th Cir. 1983)); see also Fed. R. Bankr. P. 8013 and Fed. R. Civ. P. 52(a).

A finding is clearly erroneous when the appellate court is left with the definite and firm conviction that the lower court has made a mistake. In re Thirtyacre, 36 F.3d 697, 700 (7th Cir. 1994) (citing Anderson v. Bessemer City, 470 U.S. 564, 573 (1985)).

Since proof of conduct satisfying any one of section 727(a)'s sub-sections is enough to deny discharge, (In re Krehl, 86 F.3d 737, 744 (7th Cir. 1996) (citing Farouki v. Emirates Bank Int'l, Ltd., 14 F.3d 244, 250 (4th Cir. 1994)), appellate courts grant great deference to bankruptcy courts under the clearly erroneous standard of review. Green Bay Packaging, Inc. v. Oscarson, 2007 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 84057 (N. D. Ill. 2007) (citing In re Yonikus, 974 F.2d 901, 903 (7th Cir. 1992)).

V. STATEMENT OF FACTS

The Debtors are Nicholas Stamat, a medical doctor with his own medical practice, and his wife, Penny Stamat, who holds a bachelor's degree in math and accounting, and has worked as a business controller. (Adv. Dkt. 36, ¶¶ 3, 15, 16)[3] Before filing for bankruptcy, Mrs. Stamat formed a medical billing company, On Time Billing, LLC, and managed the couple's business and personal finances. (Id. at ¶ 19 and Tr. P. 22 lines 5-11). The Debtors filed a voluntary chapter 7 bankruptcy petition on July 26, 2007. (Plf. Ex. 1)

Debtors filed the required official bankruptcy Schedules and Statement of Financial Affairs ("SOFA"), which they signed under penalty of perjury.[4] The Debtors' original schedules disclosed the following:

- Schedule A disclosed two homes valued at $1,475,000;
- Schedule B identified personal assets, excluding real property, worth $16,420.67;[5] and,
- Schedule D identified secured liabilities of $1,227,491.38, most of which is secured by Debtors' two houses; and Schedule F identified unsecured liabilities of $364,114.87. (Id.)

[4] The Schedules and SOFA are official forms that debtors must complete. See Fed. R. Bankr. P. Official Form 6 (Schedules) and Form 7 (Statement of Financial Affairs). The Schedules require disclosure of a debtor's assets and liabilities as of the date of the bankruptcy filing. The SOFA requires disclosure of financial information over a longer time period before bankruptcy.

[5] Debtors valued their interests in the medical practice and On Time Billing, LLC at zero.

At the Debtors' first meeting of creditors (the section 341 meeting) on November 14, 2007, the chapter 7 trustee and the Debtors' creditors questioned the Debtors about the completeness and accuracy of their Schedules and SOFA. (Plf. Ex. 11)

At the meeting, the creditors revealed information that the Debtors should have disclosed, but had not: (1) transfers of property that occurred within two years of filing; (2) numerous business interests that the Debtors owned within 6 years of filing; and, (3) Dr. Stamat's position as a part-time police officer and two revolvers that he owned. (Id.)

In early December, 2007, the Debtors amended their Schedule B personal property disclosure to include the revolvers. (Plf. Ex. 2, Dkt. 52) The Debtors did not make any other disclosures despite their testimony at the section 341 meeting that acknowledged other omissions.

On December 21, 2007, the United States Trustee filed his complaint to deny discharge under Bankruptcy Code §§ 727(a)(2), (4) and (5). (Adv. Dkt. 1)

On April 16, 2008, the United States Trustee conducted a sworn oral examination of both Debtors. (Plf. Ex. 12) The United States Trustee questioned the Debtors about omissions from the Schedules and SOFA discovered at the section 341 meeting and during the United States Trustee's review of the Debtors' subpoenaed documents.

Included in the documents produced by the Debtors and introduced as evidence at trial were:

- tax returns for the Debtors and their businesses, which revealed that, in 2006, Dr. Stamat's income from his medical practice was $265,012; (Def. Ex. 16-20)
- a November 2005 closing statement from a refinancing of the Debtors' Michigan home and an October 2006 closing statement from a later refinancing for which the Debtors received a total of more than $90,000; (Plf. Ex. 10)
- a cancelled check in the amount of $10,000 the Debtors had written to settle litigation; (Plf. Ex. 9)

- acknowledgment of prior ownership of business interests; (Plf. Ex. 5) and,
- bank statements and copies of cancelled checks for the Debtors' personal and business accounts. (Plf. Ex. 7-8; Def. Ex. 1-12)

During the section 341 meeting (Plf. Ex. 11), the U.S. Trustee examination (Plf. Ex. 12) and at trial, the Debtors acknowledged that they had failed to disclose on their Schedules and SOFA: (1) their business income; (2) the refinancings of their Michigan home; (3) the settlement payment they had paid; and, (4) their prior ownership of numerous business interests. (Adv. Dkt. 36, Finding ¶¶ 11, 32, 36, and 38)

On May 8, 2008, the last day for filing pre-trial documents, the Debtors filed an amended Schedule I, adding Dr. Stamat's additional income from working as a police officer and an amended SOFA. (Dkt. 60, 61) The Debtors amended their SOFA to disclose their two home refinances, and their $10,000 settlement payment. The Debtors also amended their SOFA to reflect their ownership in their business interests, including interest in Stamat Pediatrics, LLC; On Time Billing, LLC; Meyer Medical Physicians Group; 4425 West 63rd Medical Center; and, Hoffman/Elk Grove Physicians Group.[6]

At trial, the Debtors conceded that their amended disclosures should have been previously disclosed. (Adv. Dkt. 36, Finding ¶¶ 31-41)

Despite the last minute amendments, the Debtors still failed to disclose other omissions

[6] Each of the disclosed businesses are related to Dr. Stamat's practice: Stamat Pediatrics LLC and On-Time Billing LLC are 100 % debtor-owned; Meyer Medical was a medical partnership of which Dr. Stamat was a partner with approximately six other individuals; 4425 W. 63rd was an entity that owned the building in which Meyer Medical operated; and Hoffman/ElkGrove was another pediatric medical practice, now no longer operational, in which Dr. Stamat was a partner.

identified during the section 341 meeting and the U.S. Trustee examination. For example, the Debtors did not disclose: (1) their income from the medical practice; (2) their ownership in four other business interests, which included two limited partnerships and two stock positions; or, (3) their counterclaims against a bank. (Adv. Dkt. 36, Concl. ¶13, 14, and 25)

At trial, the Debtors did not provide the bankruptcy court with factual or legal support for their non-disclosures. With respect to the undisclosed income, the Debtors argued that they did not have to disclose the medical practice's gross income because the medical practice is an LLC and has its own tax identification number. (Tr. p. 136, line 9 - p. 138, line 6) Mrs. Stamat could not explain how she determined the disclosed income on either the original SOFA ($53,309) (Tr. p. 35 line 22 - p. 36, line 10) or the amended SOFA ($53,309 + $5330) (Tr. p. 41, line 1; p. 42 line 6). The Debtors could not tie the disclosed amount to any particular line from the LLCs' tax returns, nor could the Debtors explain where the disclosed income figure came from, other than basing it on an estimate of the Debtors' monetary withdrawals from the LLCs. (Tr. p. 81, line 23 - p. 83, line 6.)

The Debtors originally failed to disclose any business interests, despite the instructions given on the SOFA form to disclose business interests owned in the six years prior to filing the bankruptcy petition. (Pl. Ex. 1)

The Debtors acknowledged that they had ownership interests in entities that should have been initially disclosed on their Schedules and SOFA. (Tr. p. 65, lines 17-22) At trial, Mrs. Stamat testified that she did not know why she did not disclose business interests in the medical practice and the billing company. (Tr. p. 105, lines 6-18) Mrs. Stamat also testified that, during the six years before filing her bankruptcy petition, the Debtors owned several different partnership and limited partnership interests,[7] including a membership interest in an LLC, a less than 5% interest in a corporation, and an unknown position in another entity, Hoffman/ElkGrove Physicians Group, Ltd. (Tr. p. 62, line 1 - p. 64, line 15)

The Debtors argued that the United States Trustee failed to prove that the Debtors had a counterclaim that should have been disclosed. Although no documents from the litigation were introduced into evidence at trial, Mrs. Stamat acknowledged that the Debtors have been suing Standard Bank since 2001 and that the Debtors likely possessed information about the lawsuit. (Tr. p. 69, line 25 - p. 71, line 3)

The Debtors did not explain the loss of their assets and inability to repay their debts, especially with respect to their $90,000 home refinancing proceeds, which they received within two years of filing their bankruptcy petition. Mrs. Stamat testified that she deposited the $90,000 into her and Dr. Stamat's personal bank account and they used the money for living expenses and the medical practice. (Tr. p. 73, line 11 - p. 74, line 18) Mrs. Stamat, who is the bookkeeper for the household and the medical practice, did not specifically detail how she and Dr. Stamat used the money, nor did she explain how she accounted for the proceeds between the practice and the individuals.

A review of the bank statements revealed numerous checks made payable to cash with no indication on the face of the check regarding how the $90,000 was used. (Def. Ex. 1-12) Although the Debtors testified that they produced the checking account information as their explanation of loss, the bankruptcy court found that their records were "disjointed and fragmented." (Adv. Dkt. 36,

[7] The Debtors also owned interests in 4425 W. 63rd Medical Center; Trailhead Land Investment Limited Partnership; Eagle Crest Golf Club; and Windy City Investors, LLC.

Finding 56)

On September 24, 2008, the bankruptcy court issued its order denying the Debtors' discharge. The bankruptcy court concluded that the Debtors' inability to explain the basis of their non-disclosures exhibited a reckless disregard for the truth in completing the SOFA. (Adv. Dkt. 36, Concl. ¶¶ 12-14) With respect to the non-disclosures, the bankruptcy court concluded that the Debtors exhibited a reckless disregard for the truth, especially in connection with their Schedules and SOFA and denied their discharge under section 727(a)(2). (Id.) The bankruptcy court found that the Debtors signed their Schedules and SOFA under penalty of perjury and that they knew or should have known that they were inaccurate and incomplete (Id., Concl. ¶ 25(a)) and that the cumulative effect of their misrepresentations and omissions clearly establish the Debtors' pattern of reckless indifference to the truth. (Id.) Therefore, the bankruptcy court concluded that the Debtors' discharge should be denied under section 727(a)(4). Finally, the bankruptcy court found that the Debtors failed to meet their burden to offer a satisfactory explanation for the unavailability of the substantial and identifiable assets. (Id., Concl. ¶ 36) The bankruptcy court concluded that the Debtors explanation was vague, indefinite and uncorroborated and required the court, creditors and the U.S. Trustee to speculate as to what actually happened to the Debtor's assets. (Id.) Therefore, the bankruptcy court concluded that the Debtors' discharge should be denied under section 727(a)(5).

Pursuant to 28 U.S.C. § 158(a), the Debtors timely filed a notice of appeal to this Court on October 4, 2008.

VI. SUMMARY OF THE ARGUMENT

The bankruptcy court did not abuse its discretion in denying the Debtors' discharge. The testimony and evidence show that the Debtors did not make full disclosures on their Schedules and SOFA and support the bankruptcy court's denial of the Debtors' discharge under sections 727(a)(2), (4) and (5). The Debtors do not identify any of the bankruptcy court's findings of fact as being in error. Rather, they merely identify findings of fact with which they are displeased.

VII. ARGUMENT

A. Discharge Standards

When objecting to discharge, the United States Trustee must establish each element of an objection by a preponderance of the evidence. In re Scott, 172 F.3d 959, 966-67 (7th Cir. 1999). Once the United States Trustee establishes each element, the burden of production shifts to the debtors to provide a "credible explanation" of their actions. In re Costello, 299 B.R. 882, 894 (Bankr. N.D. Ill. 2003). Discharge in bankruptcy is limited to the "honest but unfortunate" debtors. Scott, 172 F.3d at 966. If a debtor violates any provision of section 727, this completely bars a bankruptcy court from entering a discharge. Costello, 299 B.R. at 894. Here, the bankruptcy court found that the Debtors violated three subsections of 727. This Court can affirm on any of those three grounds.

Section 727(a)(2) denies a discharge of debts to a debtor who, with intent to delay, hinder or defraud creditors transfers or conceals property of the bankruptcy estate within one year of filing the bankruptcy petition or anytime post-petition. See 11 U.S.C.§ 727(a)(2). Section 727(a)(2) requires a denial of discharge where a court finds (1) a transfer or concealment of property of the estate and (2) a subjective intent to hinder, delay or defraud creditors, (3) within the year before filing or post-petition. Id. See also In re Self, 325 B.R. 224, 237 (Bankr. N.D. Ill. 2005). Concealment includes "failing or refusing to divulge information to which creditors were entitled." In re Holstein, 299 B.R 211, 229 (Bankr.N.D. Ill.2003) (citations omitted). Transfer or concealment may occur even if creditors are not harmed by it. In re Costello, 299 B.R. at 894.

Intent may be proved by circumstantial evidence or inferences from a debtor's conduct. Id at 895. Where a debtor does not care about the truth or falsity of a statement, this satisfies the intent requirement of section 727(a)(2). In re Chavin, 150 F. 3d 726, 728 (7th Cir. 1998).

The bankruptcy court found that the Debtors concealed assets by failing to disclose required information to which creditors were entitled. (Adv. Dkt. 36, Concl. ¶¶ 13-14) The bankruptcy court relied on the evidence and testimony to conclude that the Debtors failed to disclose personal property, personal business income, business interests, two home refinances, and ongoing litigation against a bank. (Id.) The bankruptcy court found that the Debtors were obligated to disclose information requested in the Schedules and SOFA, and the Debtors did not do so. (Id.) The bankruptcy court also found that the Debtors attempted to rectify their omissions by filing last minute amendments before trial, but even those last minute amendments were incomplete. (Id.)

Based on its findings, the bankruptcy court did not commit clear error when it concluded that the Debtors intentionally concealed property of the estate through their failure to make required disclosures and denied discharge under section 727(a)(2). (Id., Concl. ¶ 15)

Section 727(a)(4) requires denial of a discharge if the debtor knowingly and fraudulently, in connection with the filing of a bankruptcy petition, makes a false oath or account, among other actions. The party objecting to discharge "has the burden of proof to establish five elements: (1) the debtor made a statement under oath; (2) the statement was false; (3) the debtor knew the statement was false; (4) the debtor made the statement with intent to defraud; and (5) the statement related to the bankruptcy case in a material way." In re Costello, 299 B.R. at 899 (citing In re Bailey, 145 B.R 919, 926). Although the burden of proof rests on the plaintiff at all times, the debtor cannot prevail if he is unable to offer credible evidence after the plaintiff has established a prima facie case. Id. (citing In re Sapru, 127 B.R. 306, 314 (Bankr. E.D.N.Y. 1991)).

The purpose of section 727(a)(4) is to "enforce the debtor's duty of disclosure and to ensure that the debtors provide reliable information to those who have an interest in the administration of the estate." In re Broholm, 310 B.R. 864, 879 (Bankr.N.D.Ill. 2004) (citing In re Bostrom, 286 B.R. 352, 359 (Bankr. N.D. Ill. 2002)). For purposes of section 727(a)(4), a debtor's bankruptcy petition and schedules, statement of financial affairs, statements made at a section 341 meeting and testimony at a Rule 2004 examination all constitute statements that are made under oath. Id. Filing schedules with material omissions or representations with an intent to mislead creditors as to the debtor's financial condition constitutes a false oath under section 727(a)(4). Id.

A debtor must disclose all ownership interests he holds in property. In re Costello, 299 B.R. at 899 ("It is not the debtor's responsibility to decide which assets are to be disclosed to creditors; rather, his job is simply to address each question and answer it accurately and completely.")

(citations omitted). "Complete financial disclosure is 'a condition precedent to the privilege of discharge.'" In re Olbur, 314 B.R. 732, 745 (Bankr. N.D. Ill. 2004) (citing Glucoma Am., Inc. v. Ardisson (In re Ardisson), 272 B.R. 346, 359 (Bankr. N.D. Ill. 2001)).

It is not enough to allow a debtor to file amended schedules and SOFA once caught in a pattern of non-disclosure. "Allowing a debtor to submit false schedules and then, on discovery, avoid the negative consequences of his dishonesty by amending those schedules is contrary to the spirit of the law which aims to relieve honest debtors only . . . ." In re Costello, 299 B.R. at 899-900 (citations omitted).

Fraudulent intent must be inferred from circumstantial evidence or by a debtor's conduct. In re Costello, 299 B.R. at 900 (citing In re Bailey, 145 B.R. at 928). Moreover, if a debtor's schedules and statements indicate that the debtor is recklessly indifferent to the truth, an objecting creditor or other party does not have to offer any additional evidence of fraud. Id. The cumulative effect of a number of false oaths by a debtor establishes a pattern of reckless and cavalier disregard for the truth by the debtor. Id. (citing In re Calisoff, 92 B.R. 346, 355 (Bankr. N.D. Ill. 1988)). "[T]here comes a point when the aggregate errors and omissions cross the line past which a debtor's discharge should be denied." In re Costello, 299 B.R. at 899 (citing In re Bostrom, 286 B.R. 352, 360-61 (Bankr. N.D. Ill. 2002)).

A party objecting to discharge must show that the false statements made by the debtor relate materially to the bankruptcy case. For purposes of section 727(a)(4), a statement is material if it relates to the debtor's estate, involves the discovery of assets, or concerns the disposition of the debtor's property or his entitlement to discharge. Id. (citations omitted).

The bankruptcy court ruled that the Debtors knowingly did not include material disclosures in their Schedules and SOFA, which they signed under penalty of perjury. (Adv. Dkt. 36, Concl. ¶ 25) The bankruptcy court's ruling was not clearly erroneous. It was supported by substantial evidence. (Id.) The Debtor's omissions directly relate to the Debtors' estate, and their material non-disclosures included undisclosed assets and the disposition of property, such as the disappearance of equity from their second home during the two years before the bankruptcy. (Id.) The Debtors' misrepresentations and omissions were material to their bankruptcy petition and establish the Debtors' reckless indifference to the truth.

The Debtors' subsequent amendments to their Schedules and SOFA, which only partially corrected previous omissions, do not erase or excuse the falsity of their prior oaths. See, e.g., Stathopoulos v. Bostrom, 2003 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 2470 (N.D. Ill. 2003) (stating "[i]f debtors could omit assets at will, with the only penalty that they had to file an amended claim once caught, cheating would be altogether too attractive") (citing Payne v. Woods, 775 F.2d 202, 205 (7th Cir. 1985); In re Costello, 299 B.R. at 899-900 ("[A] debtor cannot excise a false oath by making subsequent corrections to his bankruptcy petition . . . .") (citations omitted).

The bankruptcy court did not commit clear error when it denied the Debtors' discharge under section 727(a)(4).

Section 727(a)(5) denies a debtor a discharge if a debtor does not "satisfactorily" explain any loss of assets or deficiency of assets to meet the debtor's liabilities. See 11 U.S.C. § 727(a)(5).

Section 727(a)(5) is one of several Bankruptcy Code provisions meant to "relieve [ ] creditors and courts of the full burden of reconstructing the debtor's financial history and condition, placing it instead upon the debtor." In re Olbur, 314 B.R. at 740 (Bankr. N.D. Ill. 2004) (quoting In re Hermanson, 273 B.R. 538, 545 (Bankr. N.D. Ill. 2002)). Under section 727(a)(5), the bankruptcy court has "broad power to decline to grant a discharge . . . where the debtor does not adequately explain a shortage, loss, or disappearance of assets." Id. (quoting In re D'Agnese, 86 F.3d 732, 734 (7th Cir. 1996).

To make the case for why a debtor should be denied discharge under section 727(a)(5), the moving party bears the burden of showing that the debtor "at one time owned substantial and identifiable assets that are no longer available to his creditors." In re Olbur, 314 B.R. at 740 (citing In re Bostrom, 286 B.R. at 359 (Bankr. N.D. Ill. 2002) and In re Hermanson, 273 B.R. at 545). Once this showing is made, the burden falls on the debtor to offer a "satisfactory explanation" for the unavailability of those assets. Id. A court exercises its discretion to determine whether an explanation is satisfactory. In re Olbur, 314 B.R. at 741 (citing In re Bostrom, 286 B.R. at 364). A court focuses on "the completeness and truth of the debtor's explanation." In re Costello, 299 B.R. at 901.

A debtor's explanation must meet two criteria to be deemed "satisfactory." In re Mantra, 314 B.R. 723, 730 (Bankr. N.D. Ill. 2004) (citing In re Bryson, 187 B.R. 939, 955 (Bankr. N.D. Ill. 1995)). First, the debtor's explanation must be supported by documentation. In re Costello, 299 B.R. at 901. Second, the supporting documentation must be sufficient to "eliminate the need for the Court to speculate as to what happened to all the assets." Id. (citing In re Bostrom, 286 B.R. at 364-65); see also In re Hansen, 325 B.R. at 763 (noting the intertwined relationship between the documentation required by section 727(a)(3) and the adequacy of the explanation under section 727(a)(5)). The debtor must explain in good faith "what really happened to the assets in question." In re Olbur, 314 B.R. at 740 (citing In re Bailey, 145 B.R. at 925). The debtor's explanation must amount to more than a "vague, indefinite, and uncorroborated hodgepodge of financial transactions." In re Olbur, 314 B.R. at 741 (citing In re Costello, 299 B.R. 882, 901 (Bankr. N.D. Ill. 2003)).

A debtor "cannot abuse the bankruptcy process by obfuscating the true nature of his affairs and then refusing to provide a credible explanation." In re Mantra, 314 B.R. at 730 (citing In re Johnson, 98 B.R. 359, 366 (Bankr.N.D.Ill. 1988). A "satisfactory" explanation about an asset's disappearance depends on the subjective nature or honesty of the debtor's explanation and the objective adequacy of the explanation. In re Mantra, 314 B.R. at 730 (citing In re D'Agnese, 86 F.3d at 734-35). A debtor's failure to satisfactorily justify a substantial loss of assets, however, does not have to be the product of fraudulent intent. In re Mantra, 314 B.R. at 730 (citing In re Gannon, 173 B.R. 313, 317 (Bankr. S.D.N.Y. 1994)).

The bankruptcy court did not commit clear error by finding that the Debtors at one time owned substantial and identifiable assets that are no longer available to their creditors. (Adv. Dkt. 36, Concl. ¶¶ 35-36) The Schedules state, under penalty of perjury, that the Debtors have only $16,620.67 in personal property and that their homes are subject to mortgages. (Id.) However, the section 341(a) meeting and review of the Debtors' subpoenaed documents revealed that, prior to filing their bankruptcy petition, they had received $90,000 from home refinances within two years of filing their bankruptcy petition. (Plf. Ex. 10) Also, in 2006, the year before filing, the Debtors received $265,012 in gross income from Dr. Stamat's medical practice. (Def. Ex. 19)

The bankruptcy court did not commit clear error in ruling that the Debtors failed to offer a satisfactory explanation for the unavailability of the substantial and identifiable assets, especially the $90,000 of equity in their Michigan home. (Adv. Dkt. 36, Concl. ¶36) Although the Debtors produced a collection of bank statements and cancelled checks and testified about their general financial demise, the Debtors could not explain how their personal and professional bank accounts reconciled, how their income was determined or what happened to all of the cash removed from their accounts. (Id.) Although they stated that the funds were spent on their personal expenses and Dr. Stamat's medical practice, no documents were identified that corroborate their explanation. (Id.)

The bankruptcy court did not abuse its discretion when it found that the Debtors failed to adequately explain their loss or deficiency of assets to meet their liabilities, and a denial of discharge was required under section 727(a)(5).

I. JURISDICTIONAL STATEMENT

The jurisdictional statement in the Stamats' Brief is not complete and correct. The bankruptcy court had jurisdiction to enter the order denying the Appellants' discharge in the core adversary proceeding arising in Appellants' chapter 7 bankruptcy case under 28 U.S.C. § 157(a), (b)(1) & (b)(2)(J). That order was a final order and was entered on September 24, 2008. (Adv. Doc. 38).[1] The Appellants timely filed a notice of appeal to the district court under 28 U.S.C. § 158(c)(2) and Fed. R. Bankr. P. 8002 on October 4, 2008. (Adv. Doc. 41).

The district court had jurisdiction under 28 U.S.C. § 158(a)(1) to review the bankruptcy court's order. The district court entered its judgment affirming the bankruptcy court's order on September 2, 2009. (D.Ct. Doc. 38). The Appellants timely filed their notice of appeal under 28 U.S.C. § 158(a)(1) and Fed. R. App. P. 4(a)(1) to this Court of the district court's judgment on October 2, 2009. (D.Ct. Doc. 39). This Court has jurisdiction to review the final judgment of the district court under 28 U.S.C. § 158(d)(1) and 28 U.S.C. § 1291.

[1] Documents filed in the Stamats' bankruptcy case (No. 07-13379) are cited herein as "Bankr. Doc. __." Documents filed in the adversary proceeding (No. 07-01278) arising out of that case are cited herein as "Adv. Doc. __." Documents filed in the district court appeal (No. 08-06543) are cited herein as "D.Ct. Doc. __."

II. STATEMENT OF THE ISSUES

The bankruptcy court denied the Stamats a discharge of their debts on three independent statutory grounds, 11 U.S.C. §§§ 727(a)(2), 727(a)(4), and 727(a)(5), so the bankruptcy court's decision merits affirmance unless the bankruptcy court's decision to deny the discharge is clearly erroneous as to each of the three grounds. Therefore, the issue presented by in this appeal is whether:

(a) the bankruptcy court's determination under 11 U.S.C. § 727(a)(4) that the Stamats fraudulently made false statements under oath is clearly erroneous; and

(b) the bankruptcy court's determination under 11 U.S.C. § 727(a)(5) that the Stamats failed to satisfactorily explain the loss of assets is also clearly erroneous; and

(c) the bankruptcy court's determination under 11 U.S.C. § 727(a)(2) that the Stamats concealed estate assets with the intent to defraud their creditors is also clearly erroneous.

III. STATEMENT OF THE CASE

The Stamats filed their voluntary Chapter 7 bankruptcy petition on July 27, 2007. (Supp.App. 1).[2] On December 21, 2007, the United States Trustee filed his complaint objecting to the discharge of the Stamats' debts on three statutory grounds: concealing property with the intent to defraud creditors, making false oaths with fraudulent intent, and failing to satisfactorily explain the loss of substantial assets or deficiency of assets to meet their liabilities. (Adv. Doc. 1). See 11 U.S.C. §§ 727(a)(2), (4) and (5). The bankruptcy court tried the matter on May 22, 2008. (Supp.App. 49). On September 24, 2008, the bankruptcy court entered its judgment denying the Stamats' discharge on each of the three grounds. (Adv. Doc. 38).

The Stamats appealed the judgment to the district court on October 4, 2008. (Adv. Doc. 41). On September 2, 2009, the district court entered an order affirming the bankruptcy court's decision to deny discharge pursuant to Section 727(a)(4) for fraudulently making a false oath, without reaching the two other grounds. (App. 1-13). This appeal followed.

IV. STATUTORY FRAMEWORK

Under chapter 7 of the Bankruptcy Code, "a debtor [typically] receives an immediate unconditional discharge of personal liability for certain debts in exchange for relinquishing his or her nonexempt assets to a bankruptcy trustee for liquidation and discharge to creditors." H.R. Rep. 109-31(I) at 10 (2005), reprinted in 2005 U.S.C.C.A.N. 88, 97; see 11 U.S.C. §§ 701-727. A discharge under section 727(a) releases the debtor from liability for debts that arose before the case was filed, with limited exceptions. See 11 U.S.C. § 727(b). However, the chapter 7 trustee, a creditor, or the United States Trustee[3] may object to the granting of a discharge on the basis of any of the grounds set forth in 11 U.S.C. § 727(a). 11 U.S.C. § 727(c)(1). Specifically, a court may deny a discharge to a debtor if the debtor knowingly and fraudulently made a false oath in the case. 11 U.S.C. §§ 727(a)(4)(A). In addition, it may do so if the debtor failed to explain satisfactorily any loss of assets or deficiency of assets to meet his liabilities. 11 U.S.C. § 727(a)(5).   A debtor's concealment of property to hinder his creditors is also grounds to deny a discharge. 11 U.S.C. § 727(a)(2).

A denial of discharge means the independent chapter 7 trustee continues to liquidate the debtor's non-exempt assets for distribution to creditors, but those

V. STATEMENT OF FACTS

A. Relevant Facts

The bankruptcy court found the following facts based on the parties' stipulations and the evidence adduced at trial.

1. Background

The debtors are Nicholas Stamat, a medical doctor with his own medical practice, and his wife, Penny Stamat, who holds a bachelor's degree in math and accounting and has worked as a business comptroller. (App. 24 - 25, ¶¶ 3, 15, 16); (Supp.App. 78, 176). Mrs. Stamat owned and operated a medical billing company, On Time Billing, LLC, and managed the couple's business and personal finances. (App. 25, ¶ 19); (Supp.App. 80, 164, 178). When they filed their petition, the Stamats owned two homes, which they valued together at $1,475,000. (Supp.App. 4).

2. Omissions and Misrepresentations in the Stamats' Schedules and Statement of Financial Affairs

The Stamats filed a voluntary chapter 7 bankruptcy petition on July 26, 2007 seeking relief from over $1.5 million in secured and unsecured debt. (App.

24, ¶¶ 1, 5, 6); (Supp.App. 1, 25). Shortly thereafter, the Stamats filed the required official bankruptcy schedules and Statement of Financial Affairs ("SoFA"), which they signed under penalty of perjury.[4] (App. 24 at ¶ 1); (Supp.App. 26, 34). The Stamats testified at trial that they understood their obligation to provide complete and accurate information in those documents. (App. 30 at ¶ 12); (Supp.App. 85-86, 183). They were represented by experienced bankruptcy counsel when they prepared and filed those documents. (App. 30 at ¶ 12); (Supp.App. 81-82).

a. Income

In response to Question 1 of their original SoFA,[5] the Stamats listed gross income they received from their businesses in 2006 as $53,309 (Supp.App. 27), although Dr. Stamat's medical practice had grossed $265,012 in 2006 and Mrs.

[4] The schedules and SoFA are official forms that debtors must complete. 11 U.S.C § 521(a)(1)(B). The schedules require disclosure of a debtor's assets and liabilities as of the date of the bankruptcy filing. See Fed. R. Bankr. P. Official Form 6. The SoFA requires disclosure of financial information over a longer time period before bankruptcy. See Fed. R. Bankr. P. Official Form 7.

[5] Question 1 of their SoFA read in pertinent part:

> State the gross amount of income the debtor has received from employment, trade, or profession, or from operation of the debtor's business, including part-time activities either as an employee or in independent trade or business . . . during the two years immediately preceding this calendar year." (Supp.App. 27) (emphasis in original); (App. 27, ¶ 41(b)).

Stamat's business had grossed $22,188. (App. 27 at ¶ 41(a) & App. 31 at ¶ 14(c)); (Supp.App. 87); (Supp.App. 54, 56). At the first meeting of creditors in the Stamats' case (the "§ 341 meeting")[6] on November 14, 2007, the chapter 7 trustee and the Stamats' creditors questioned the Stamats about the completeness and accuracy of their schedules and SoFA and identified specific information that the Stamats had not disclosed in those documents. (App. 25-26 at ¶¶ 26-32); (Adv. Doc. 31 at ¶¶ 27-32, Doc. 33 at ¶¶ 27-32). After the § 341 meeting, the Stamats filed amended schedules to disclose two previously unreported guns (App. 26 at ¶ 33); (Supp.App. 36), but still did not change their SoFA to reflect the $287,200 in gross income from Dr. Stamat's medical practice and Mrs. Stamat's billing business.

The United States Trustee subsequently subpoenaed the Stamats' tax returns. (App. 26 at ¶ 34). On April 16, 2008, he conducted an oral examination of the Stamats pursuant to Rule 2004 of the Federal Rules of Bankruptcy Procedure ("Rule 2004 examination") (App. 26 at ¶ 34), and questioned them about omissions from their schedules and SoFA discovered at the § 341 meeting and as a result of the United States Trustee's review of the Stamats' subpoenaed documents. Although given an opportunity to complete the record, the Stamats still did not volunteer that Dr. Stamat's medical practice had grossed $265,012, nor did they include that amount in their gross income when they amended their SoFA on the eve of trial.[7] (Supp.App. 41). They did amend their Schedule I, however, to separately indicate Dr. Stamat's $80 monthly income from his part-time position with the Village of Thornton. (App. 25-26 at ¶¶ 27-28; App. 24 at ¶ 4); (Supp.App. 40).

Although the Stamats' tax return was completed on June 26, 2007, the Stamats' response to Question 1 in their original SoFA did not correspond to any particular line from those returns. (App. 31-32, at ¶ 41(c)-(d)); (Supp.App. 49-57); (Supp.App. 138-42). Mrs. Stamat testified that the income figures in the SoFA's were estimates of the amounts the Stamats had taken from the business in 2006. (Supp.App. 138-42). The SoFA, however, did not indicate that the gross income figure was an estimate. (Supp.App. 27).

b. Business interests

The Stamats originally failed to disclose in their SoFA any business interests owned in the six years prior to filing the bankruptcy petition.[8] (App. 25 at ¶ 11; App. 26 at ¶¶ 37 - 38); (Supp.App. 34). At the § 341 creditors meeting, the Stamats were asked about and acknowledged that they had ownership interests in numerous entities that were not initially disclosed on their schedules and SoFA. (App. 26 at ¶¶ 37-38; App. 29 at ¶ 70); (Supp.App. 164-65). However, they did not immediately amend their SoFA to correct the omission. (App. 29, ¶¶ 70-73).

[7] The Stamats filed an amended schedule I and an amended SoFA on May 8, 2008, the last day for filing documents before trial. (Supp.App. 40, 41).

At their Rule 2004 examination, the Stamats acknowledged they currently or formerly had ownership interests in: 1) Stamat Pediatrics, L.L.C., 2) On Time Billing, LLC, 3) Meyer Medical Physician Group Ltd., 4) 4425 E. 63rd Medical Center, 5) Hoffman/Elk Grove Physicians Group Ltd., 6) Trailhead Land Investment L.P., and 7) Eagle Crest Golf Club, Ltd. Partnership, none of which had been disclosed in their SoFA. (App. 25 at ¶¶ 21-25; App. 26 at ¶¶ 37-38); (Supp.App. 170-71). Still, they did not amend their Schedules and SoFA to add those disclosures.

Immediately before trial, the Stamats finally amended their SoFA to reflect

[8] Question 18 of the SoFA required the Stamats to list specific information about "all businesses in which the debtor was an officer, director, partner, or managing executive of a corporation, partner in a partnership, sole proprietor, or was self-employed in a trade, profession, or other activity either full- or part-time within six years immediately preceding the commencement of this case . . . ." (Supp.App. 34) (emphasis in original).

their ownership in five of the businesses: Stamat Pediatrics, LLC; On Time Billing, LLC; Meyer Medical Physicians Group; 4425 West 63rd Medical Center; and, Hoffman/Elk Grove Physicians Group. (App. 29, ¶ 72); (Supp.App. 48). Even then, the Stamats did not disclose their ownership interest in Trailhead Land Investment L.P. and Eagle Crest Golf Club, Ltd. Partnership in their amended SoFA. (Supp.App. 48).

c. Counterclaim

The Stamats failed to disclose on their original Schedule B they had a counterclaim pending against Standard Bank and Trust seeking to invalidate a lien against their home.[9] (App. 26-27 at ¶40); (Supp.App. 6).   Mrs. Stamat testified at trial that the Stamats had been suing Standard Bank since 2001, though the value of the claim was not proved. (App. 26-27, ¶ 40); (Supp.App. 128-29). The Stamats never amended their Schedule B to disclose their counterclaim. (App. 30-31, ¶¶ 13, and 14).

d. Transfers

Question 10 of the SoFA required the Stamats to list all property transferred within the two years before they filed bankruptcy.[10] (Supp.App. 31). The Stamats' original SoFA does not list any transfers of assets in response to Question 10. (Id.); (App. 25 at ¶ 11). At the § 341 meeting, the Stamats were questioned about and acknowledged a transfer of assets within two years before filing for bankruptcy that they had not disclosed on their SoFA. (App. 26 at ¶ 31); (Supp.App. 158). Dr. Stamat confirmed that he had transferred $10,000 in September 2005 to Financial Group of Oak Brook to settle pending litigation against the Stamats, but the Stamats did not immediately amend their response to Question 10. (App. 26 at ¶ 31); (Supp.App. 158). The Stamats did not correct their sworn SoFA, until months later on the eve of trial. (Supp.App. 45).

[9] Line 21 of Schedule B directs the debtor to list "[o]ther contingent and unliquidated claims of every nature, including . . . counterclaims of the debtor . . . ." (Supp.App. 6).

At the Rule 2004 examination, Mrs. Stamat acknowledged that the Defendants had refinanced their Michigan home twice in the two years before filing the petition, receiving total cash in excess of $90,000. (App. 26 at ¶ 35); (Adv. Doc. 31 at ¶ 35, Doc. 33 at ¶ 35). Neither of those transfers had been disclosed in their SoFA. The Stamats did not immediately amend their SoFA to add the omitted transfers, but waited until May 8, 2008, the last day for filing pretrial documents. (Supp.App. 45).

e. Assets

Line 8 of Schedule B required the Stamats to disclose all of their firearms. (App. 25 at ¶ 8); (Supp.App. 5). The Stamats initially failed to disclose two service revolvers owned by Dr. Stamat. (App. 26 at ¶ 30); (Supp.App. 5). At the § 341 meeting of creditors, Dr. Stamat admitted he owned two guns. (App. 26 at ¶ 29); (Adv. Doc. 31 at ¶ 29, Doc. 33 at ¶ 29). The Stamats amended their Schedule B on December 7, 2007 to disclose their ownership of the revolvers, but failed to correct other omissions on their schedules and SoFA. (App. 25 at ¶ 10); (Supp.App. 36).

3. Failure to explain loss of assets

The Stamats did not explain the loss of their assets and inability to repay their debts, especially the $90,000 home refinancing proceeds they had received within two years of filing their bankruptcy petition. The Stamats owned only $16,420.67 in personal property when they filed for bankruptcy according to their schedules. (App. 24 at ¶ 7); (Supp.App. 7). Mrs. Stamat, who is the bookkeeper for the household and the medical practice, testified that she deposited the $90,000 into the Stamats' personal bank account and they used the money for living expenses and the medical practice. (Supp.App. 158-61). She did not specifically detail how she and Dr. Stamat used the money, nor did she explain how she accounted for the proceeds between the practice and the individuals. (Id.).

The Stamats produced bank statements and copies of cancelled checks for their personal and business accounts. (App. 28 at ¶ 56, App. 36 at ¶ 36); (Supp.App. 159-160); (Plaintiff's Exs. 7-8).[11] The bankruptcy court found the Stamats' records "disjointed and fragmented " and insufficient to corroborate their vague testimony. (App. 28 at ¶ 56).

The two exhibits total over 200 pages and were too voluminous to be scanned into the district court's electronic record. They have been transmitted in paper form to this Court as part of the appellate record. C. Decisions Below

1. Bankruptcy Court

On December 21, 2007, the United States Trustee filed a complaint seeking a denial of the Stamats' discharge based on the numerous false oaths in their schedules and SoFA, their failure to explain the loss of substantial assets including the money they pulled out of their house and the income from Dr. Stamat's medical practice, and their concealment of assets. (App. 24 at ¶ 2). The bankruptcy court held a trial in which the parties offered evidence and the Stamats testified about the reasons for their omissions and what had happened to their assets. (App. 14-37).

The bankruptcy court, after a detailed analysis of the evidence, denied the Stamats' discharge under sections 727(a)(2), (4), and (5). (App. 37). With respect to the denial under sections 727(a)(4), the bankruptcy court found that the Stamats signed their schedules and SoFA under penalty of perjury and that they knew or should have known that they were inaccurate and incomplete, and that such omissions were false oaths. (App. 34-35 at ¶ 25). The cumulative effect of their misrepresentations and omissions established the Stamats' pattern of reckless indifference to the truth. (App. 30-31 at ¶13, 14). Therefore, the bankruptcy court concluded that the Stamats' discharge should be denied under section 727(a)(4). (App. 37).

In addition, the bankruptcy court found that the Stamats' non-disclosures and reckless disregard for the truth in connection with completing their schedules and SoFA also constituted the concealment of assets of the estate with intent to defraud creditors, warranting a denial of discharge under section 727(a)(2). (App. 29-32).

Finally, the bankruptcy court found that the Stamats failed to meet their burden to offer a satisfactory explanation for the unavailability of the substantial and identifiable assets, specifically the $90,000 in proceeds from their home refinancings. (App. 36). The bankruptcy court concluded that the Stamats' explanation was vague, indefinite and uncorroborated and required the court, creditors and the United States Trustee to speculate about what happened to the Stamats' assets. (Id.). Therefore, the bankruptcy court concluded that the Stamats' discharge should be denied under section 727(a)(5) as well. (Id.).

2. District Court

On September 2, 2009, the district court affirmed the bankruptcy court's denial of discharge under section 727(a)(4) on the briefs. (App. 1 n.1 & 13). The district court agreed with the bankruptcy court's extensive findings of fact and its conclusion that the United States Trustee proved each of the elements of section 727(a)(4). (App. 4-13). The district court affirmed the denial of discharge under that section. (App. 13). Because a denial of discharge under one part of section 727(a) was sufficient to affirm the bankruptcy court's judgment, the district court did not address the denial of discharge under either section 727(a)(2) or (5). (Id.). The Stamats appealed the district court decision to this Court.

VI. SUMMARY OF ARGUMENT

The bankruptcy court denied the Stamats' discharge of their debts on three separate and independent grounds: 11 U.S.C. §§§ 727(a)(2), 727(a)(4) and 727(a)(5). (App. 37). This court can affirm on any of these bases.

There were substantial factual bases to deny their discharge under each ground. The Stamats, sophisticated, well-educated debtors, filed a chapter 7 bankruptcy case seeking to be relieved of over $1.5 million in secured and unsecured debt. In return, they were required to provide specific financial information under penalty of perjury on official bankruptcy schedules and statements to allow the bankruptcy trustee to identify and collect non-exempt assets for distribution to the Stamats' creditors.

The Stamats were better positioned than most chapter 7 debtors to complete those forms given their education and experience. They had owned no less than seven businesses. Nevertheless, the United States Trustee, upon investigation, discovered at least fourteen misstatements and omissions in those documents, some quite substantial. Those errors included the failure to disclose:

- over $200,000 in gross income from Dr. Stamat's medical practice,
- multiple business interests,
- a pending counterclaim against a bank,
- a $10,000 payment to settle a claim against them, and
- two recent home refinancings resulting in at least $90,000 in proceeds.

The private chapter 7 trustee in their case, the Stamats' creditors and United States Trustee had to root out that information at the § 341 meeting of creditors, at the Stamats' examination and by subpoenaing documents.

Although the Stamats filed amended schedules shortly after the § 341 meeting to disclose some guns, they did not correct more substantial omissions until the eve of trial on the United States Trustee's complaint objecting to their discharge, six months after the § 341 meeting and a month after the Rule 2004 examination. Even then, they did not correct all of their errors. That response, which was insufficient under the Code, together with the cumulative number of misstatements and omissions in their statements and schedules established a reckless indifference by the Stamats to the accuracy of those documents. In this Circuit, as in at least four other circuits, reckless indifference to the truth is the equivalent of fraudulent intent. In re Chavin, 150 F.3d 726, 728 (7th Cir. 1998); In re Yonikus, 974 F.2d 901, 905 (7th Cir. 1992). Accord In re Duncan, 562 F.3d 688, 695 (5th Cir. 2009); In re Keeney, 227 F.3d 679, 686 (6th Cir. 2000); In re Tully, 818 F.2d 106, 112 (1st Cir. 1987); In re Kaiser, 722 F.2d 1574, 1584 n.4 (2d Cir. 1983).

The bankruptcy court rejected the Stamats' explanation that they had misunderstood the questions on the schedules and SoFA and the district court agreed that the Stamats' explanations for their errors were not credible.

The bankruptcy court found that the Stamats' omissions and inaccuracies on their schedules and SoFA were material because they related to the Stamats' assets or the disposition of those assets. The United States Trustee was not required to prove that the false oaths harmed the creditors.

Full and accurate disclosure in a debtor's original schedules is essential to the success of the bankruptcy process because without it, the trustee can not identify potential preferential and fraudulent transfers and maximize estate assets available for distribution to creditors, the creditors cannot make an informed choice about their level of participation in the case, the bankruptcy court cannot properly oversee its cases, and the United States Trustee cannot fulfill its statutory role as “watchdog” over the bankruptcy process. The Stamats invaded the provinces of all of those entities by choosing which information to disclose instead of disclosing all responsive information. This Court should not condone that conduct.

Alternatively, this Court should affirm because the record supports the bankruptcy court’s finding that Stamats failed to satisfactorily explain what happened to the $90,000 they received from the two refinancings of their home, warranting the denial of their discharge under section 727(a)(5).

As a third alternative, this Court should affirm the denial of discharge because the Stamats, by failing to disclose financial information on their schedules and SOFA, concealed assets of the estate with the intent to defraud creditors justifying the denial of their discharge under section 727(a)(2).

VII. ARGUMENT

A. Standard of Review

When considering an appeal from a district court order affirming a bankruptcy court decision, this Court reviews the bankruptcy court decision and applies the same standard of review as the district court did: the clear error standard applies to the bankruptcy court's findings of fact and its conclusions of law are reviewed de novo. Ojeda v. Goldberg, 599 F.3d 712, 716 (7th Cir. 2010). A finding is clearly erroneous when the appellate court is left with the definite and firm conviction that the lower court has made a mistake. In re Thirtyacre, 36 F.3d 697, 700 (7th Cir. 1994) (citing Anderson v. Bessemer City, 470 U.S. 564, 573 (1985)). "Where there are two permissible views of the evidence, the fact finder's choice between them cannot be clearly erroneous." Anderson, 470 U.S. at 574.

An appellate court should not overturn a bankruptcy court's decision to deny discharge unless it is clearly erroneous. In re D'Agnese, 86 F.3d 732, 734 (7th Cir. 1996). Moreover, whether a debtor acted with fraudulent intent is a question of fact reviewed for clear error. In re Yonikus, 974 F.2d at 905 & n. 10; Carini v. Matera, 592 F.2d 378, 380 (7th Cir. 1979). The intent determination often will depend upon a bankruptcy court's assessment of the debtor's credibility, making deference to that court's finding particularly appropriately. In re Krehl, 86 F.3d 737, 743 (7th Cir. 1996).

B. The Bankruptcy Court Did Not Abuse Its Discretion By Denying The Stamats' Discharge Under Section 727(a)(4) Because The Stamats Made False Oaths In Connection With Their Bankruptcy Case.

A bankruptcy court may deny a debtor's discharge if the debtor knowingly and fraudulently makes a false oath in or in connection with his bankruptcy case. 11 U.S.C. § 727(a)(4).[12] The party objecting to discharge must prove by a preponderance of the evidence that: (1) the debtor made a statement under oath; (2) the statement was false; (3) the debtor knew the statement was false; (4) the debtor made the statement with intent to defraud; and (5) the statement related to the bankruptcy case in a material way. In re Hudgens, No. 03-3153, 149 Fed. Appx. 480, 487, 2005 WL 2077288, at *6 (7th Cir. Aug. 26, 2005) (unpublished); Clean Cut Tree Svc., Inc. v. Costello (In re Costello), 299 B.R. 882, 899 (Bankr. N.D. Ill. 2003). See Peterson v. Scott (In re Scott), 172 F.3d 959, 966-67 (7th Cir. 1999) (grounds for denial of discharge must be proved by preponderance of evidence).

It is undisputed that the original schedules and statement filed by the Stamats constitute statements made under oath for the purposes of 11 U.S.C. §

1. The bankruptcy court did not clearly err in finding the Stamats acted with reckless indifference to the truth based on their cumulative errors and conduct.

The bankruptcy court correctly found that the Stamats acted with fraudulent intent.[15] (App. 30-31). In this Circuit as in numerous others, reckless indifference to or reckless disregard for the truth is the equivalent of fraudulent intent for the purpose of section 727(a). In re Chavin, 150 F.3d at 728; In re Yonikus, 974 F.2d [13] Bankruptcy Rule 1008 requires all schedules and statements to be verified or contain an unsworn declaration as provided in 28 U.S.C. § 1746. Fed. R. Bankr. P. 1008.

Sommer, Collier on Bankruptcy ¶ 727.04[1][c] (15th ed. 2009). Such false oaths can not be cured by the debtor's subsequent amendment to his schedules and SoFA. Payne v. Wood (In re Payne), 775 F.2d 202, 205 (7th Cir. 1985) ("If debtors could omit assets at will, with the only penalty that they had to file an amended claim once caught, cheating would be altogether too attractive."), cert. denied, 475 U.S. 1085 (1986); *Mazer v. [15] A debtor must act "knowingly and fraudulently" to be denied a discharge under section 727(a)(4)(A). Both are encompassed within a finding of fraudulent intent. See, e.g., In re Chavin, 150 F.3d at 728; In re Yonikus, 974 F.2d at 905.

To establish fraudulent intent under section 727(a), "the court must find the debtor knowingly intended to defraud the trustee, or engaged in such reckless behavior as to justify the finding of fraud. In re Yonikus, 974 F.2d at 905. Not caring whether some representation is true or false, the state of mind known as "reckless disregard," satisfies the fraudulent intent element. In re Chavin, 150 F.3d at 728.

Fraudulent intent may be inferred from circumstantial evidence or by a debtor's conduct. In re Yonikus, 974 F.2d at 905. The cumulative effect of a number of false oaths by a debtor establishes a pattern of reckless disregard for the truth by the debtor, warranting a denial of discharge under section 727(a)(4). See In re Chavin, 150 F.2d at 728-29 (affirming denial of discharge on the basis of seventeen false statements and omissions in bankruptcy schedules and filings where debtor offered no credible explanation). Accord Sholdra v. Diodati (In re Diodati), 9 B.R. 804, 808-09 (Bankr. D. Mass. 1981).

The bankruptcy court found that the Stamats made numerous false oaths in their original schedules and SoFA, including the omissions of:

- over $200,000 in gross income from their businesses,
- multiple business interests,
- a pending counterclaim against a bank,
- a $10,000 payment to settle a claim against them, and
- two recent home refinancings resulting in $90,000 in proceeds.

(App. 31). The Stamats do not dispute that they failed to accurately disclose the gross income they received from Dr. Stamat's medical practice and Mrs. Stamat's business and they do not dispute that they were required, but failed, to disclose much of the omitted information.[16] Moreover, as explained in section VII.B.2. infra, their arguments that they were not required to disclose other omitted information were rejected by the bankruptcy court and the district court. (App. 6, 9, 31-32, 34-35).

As the district court observed, "there comes a point when the aggregate errors and omissions cross the line past which a debtor's discharge should be denied." (App. 3). The bankruptcy court concluded the Stamats had crossed that line, finding that the Stamats had acted with reckless indifference. (App. 34).

[16] Specifically, the Stamats do not dispute that were required, but failed to disclose their interests in at least five businesses in response to Question 18 of their original SoFA. They also do not dispute that they failed to separately report Dr. Stamat's part-time job on their original Schedule I and to include his guns on their original Schedule B.

That finding was not clear error. The numerous errors and omissions in the Stamats' schedules, the Stamats' failure to correct those errors on their own even after they were identified by the creditors, private trustee and United States Trustee, and the Stamats' lack of credible explanations for the deficiencies all established the Stamats' reckless disregard for the accuracy of their statements and schedules. That satisfies the fraudulent intent element. See In re Chavin, 150 F.3d at 728; In re Yonikus, 974 F.2d at 905. Accord In re Duncan, 562 F.3d at 695; In re Keeney, 227 F.3d at 686; In re Tully, 818 F.2d at 112; In re Kaiser, 722 F.2d at 1584 n.4.

The Stamats' contention that fraudulent intent was not established for specific omissions (Appellants' brief at 13, 24) ignores the bankruptcy court's finding that the Stamats completed their schedules with a reckless indifference to the truth. (App. 34). In light of that finding, no further proof of fraudulent intent was necessary. In re Chavin, 150 F.3d 726. Accord In re Sholdra, 249 F.3d at 383; In re Costello, 299 B.R. at 900; In re Diodati, 9 B.R. at 808-09.

2. The bankruptcy court did not clearly err in rejecting the Stamats' excuses for the numerous deficiencies in their schedules and statements.

The Stamats continue to assert that they were not required to disclose certain information in response to three questions on their SoFA, but their strained interpretations of those questions do not excuse their failure to answer them truthfully. The bankruptcy court and the district court not only disagreed with the Stamats' interpretations, they rejected them as credible explanations for the Stamats' errors.[17] (App. 6, 9, 31, 34-35).

First, Question 18 of the SoFA required the Stamats to list all businesses and partnerships in which they were partners within the six year prior to filing for bankruptcy.[18] The Stamats contend that they were not required to report their interests in two limited partnerships because limited partners are not "partners" within the meaning of the question. Appellants' brief at 14-15. But the plain meaning of the term "partner" encompasses both general partners and limited partners. Moreover, the instructions for Questions 19-25 of the SoFA expressly excepts limited partnerships from the reach of those questions.[19] Therefore,

[17] This Court should defer to the bankruptcy court's credibility determination. Fed. R. Bankr. P. 8013; In re D'Agnese, 86 F.3d at 734.

[18] Question 18 requires individual debtors to list specific information about "all businesses in which the debtor was an officer, director, partner, or managing executive of a corporation, partner in a partnership, sole proprietor, or was self-employed in a trade, profession, or other activity, either full or part-time within six years immediately preceding the commencement of this case . . . ." (Supp.App. 34) (emphasis in original).

[19] Those instructions state:

The following questions are to be completed by every debtor that is a Question 18, which has no express exception for limited partnerships, includes them. The Stamats further contend that it would be absurd to require disclosure of limited partnerships (Appellants' brief at 15-16), but it is not the debtor's province to decide which information is useful to the trustee and creditors; the debtor must answer the questions accurately and completely. In re Chavin, 150 F.3d at 729.

Second, the Stamats contend they did not have to report their $10,000 settlement payment and their two home refinancings in response to Question 10 of their SoFA because those transactions were not outside the ordinary course of their business.[20] Appellants' brief at 18-22. Neither the SoFA, nor the Bankruptcy Code defines the phrase "in the ordinary course of business," so that phrase should corporation or partnership and by any individual debtor who is or has been, within six years immediately preceding the commencement of this case, any of the following: an officer, director, managing executive, or owner of more than 5 percent of the voting or equity securities of a corporation; a partner, other than a limited partner, of a partnership, a sole proprietor, or self-employed . . . ."

Fed. R. Bankr. P. Official Form 7 (emphasis added).

[20] Question 10 requires the debtors to "[l]ist all property, other than property transferred in the ordinary course of business or financial affairs of the debtor, transferred either absolutely or as security within two years immediately preceding the commencement of this case." (Supp.App. 31) (emphasis in original). It is undisputed that the Stamats paid $10,000 to Oak Brook Financial Group in settlement of pending litigation against Dr. Stamat and twice refinanced their second home, receiving $90,000 in proceeds, during the relevant period. (App. 26 at ¶¶ 31, 35).

be given its ordinary meaning. See Asgrow Seed Co. v. Winterboer, 513 U.S. 179, 187 (1995) (undefined terms in statutes are given their ordinary meaning). Black's Law Dictionary defines "ordinary" as "normal" or "usual"; it defines "course of business" as "the normal routine in managing a trade or business." Black's Law Dictionary (8th ed. 2004). There is nothing usual or routine about an individual paying thousands of dollars to settle a claim or pulling nearly $100,000 out of her home. Those are extraordinary transactions about which the trustee and the Stamats' creditors would want to know. Moreover, the Stamats' argument that the refinancings were in the ordinary course of their business because they used the funds to pay their personal bills and expenses of Dr. Stamat's medical practice also fails because the Stamats have not shown how they spent the money.[21] (App. 36).[22]

Third, the Stamats contend that they actually overstated their gross income

[21] The bankruptcy court separately denied the Stamats' discharge under section 727(a)(5) because they failed to satisfactorily explain the loss of those proceeds. (App. 36).

[22] Appellants also contend that the bankruptcy court found that the refinancings were made in the ordinary course of the Stamats' business. Appellants' brief at 20-21. That contention is wrong because, as the district court observed, it relies on a statement in the opinion that the Stamats have taken out of context; the statement refers to what the Stamats testified to at trial, not to what the court found. (App. 8-9).

in response to Question 1 of the SoFA because they did not have to report the nearly $300,000 their businesses grossed, but only the amount they netted from those businesses.[23] Appellants' brief at 22-23. The bankruptcy court correctly held that federal tax law concerning single member limited liability corporations compelled the disclosure of the full amount of their businesses' 2006 gross income. (App. 31). The Stamats had a duty to report their businesses' gross income of $287,200. Their disclosure of $53,309, whether or not it overstates their net income does not change the fact that they failed to report their businesses' entire gross income or excuse that failure. Moreover, as the bankruptcy court observed, the figure reported by the Stamats did not match their reported net income either. (App. 31).

The bankruptcy court did not credit the Stamats' explanations for good reason. The questions in the schedules and SoFA are the result of years of work by the Judicial Conference and Committee on Rules of Practice and Procedure. See Report of the Advisory Committee on Bankruptcy Rules (May 8, 2007) (describing process of drafting and vetting new official forms for the 2005 amendments to the Bankruptcy Code) (available in Alan M. Resnick, Henry J. Sommer, 2009 Bankruptcy Rules at T-12-T-23 (Collier pamphlet ed.)). They are open to public comment for 6 months, approved by the Judicial Conference and the Supreme Court and then sent to Congress. Id. at T-1-T-23. Given that level of review, and the Stamats' education and experience and resources, they should not have had to struggle to understand the forms. The Stamats' interpretations of the questions are not in keeping with the proverbial "honest debtor" who acts in good faith to provide required information, particularly an honest debtor who has as much business savvy as the Stamats. See In re Scott, 172 F.3d at 966 (discharge in bankruptcy is limited to the "honest but unfortunate" debtors); In re Yonikus, 974 F.2d at 906 (discharge in bankruptcy is privilege granted only to "the honest debtor").

[23] Question 1 asks the debtor to "[s]tate the gross amount of income the debtor has received from employment, trade, or profession, or from operation of the debtor's business, including part-time activities either as an employee or in independent trade or business . . ." (Supp.App. 27).

In addition, the Stamats assert that there was insufficient proof of the counterclaim that they were required to list on their schedule of assets. Appellants' brief at 16-18. The bankruptcy court found that the Stamats had an undisclosed counterclaim based on Mrs. Stamat's testimony that the Stamats had been suing their lender for years to invalidate their mortgage and the district court affirmed the finding.[24] (App. 39-40); (Supp.App. 127-29). Although Mrs. Stamat also testified that she was unaware of a counterclaim, the apparent inconsistency in Mrs. Stamat's testimony did not negate her testimony but created a credibility issue that the bankruptcy court as factfinder resolved. This Court should not disturb that finding. See Fed. R. Bankr. P. 8013; In re Krehl, 86 F.3d at 743 (deference to bankruptcy court's finding particularly appropriate where based on credibility findings); In re D'Agnese, 86 F.3d at 734.

Given the Stamats' education, business experience and representation, they have not provided an explanation for all of the deficiencies in their schedules as they are required to do. Fourteen errors, including understating gross income by over $200,000 demonstrates they acted with reckless indifference to the truth.

3. The bankruptcy court correctly found that the Stamats' omissions were material because they related to the Stamats' assets and their disposition of those assets.

The bankruptcy court correctly found based on the evidence that the Stamats' false oaths were material. For purposes of section 727(a)(4), a statement is sufficiently material to bar discharge if it relates to the debtor's business transactions or estate, involves the discovery of assets, or concerns the existence and disposition of the debtor's property. In re Pratt, 411 F.3d 561, 566 (5th Cir. 2005); In re Keeney, 227 F.3d at 686; In re Chalik, 748 F.2d 616, 618 (11th Cir. 1984). Each of the Stamats' false oaths were material because it related to the Stamats' estate or business dealings or the existence or disposition of the Stamats' property. The omissions concerned income they had received the year prior to filing for bankruptcy, business interests that they still owned or had disposed of within six years of filing, a counterclaim against their lender that the Stamats might recover on, and recent transfers of money or property. All of this information is important to the chapter 7 trustee because the trustee has the duty to search out, gather, and liquidate estate assets for distribution to creditors. 11 U.S.C. § 704. The trustee can also unwind preferential transfers and fraudulent conveyances and bring the transferred assets back into the estate for distribution to creditors. 11 U.S.C. § 547.

[24] The Stamats cited no authority for their contention that the United States Trustee was required to introduce the actual pleading into evidence. Appellants' brief at 18.

The Stamats assert that their omissions were not material because they involved assets the Stamats no longer owned or were worthless, or because they disclosed the information elsewhere, so their creditors were not harmed by their omissions. Appellants' brief at 11-14, 24-25. However, many of the false statements concerned the receipt or disposition of substantial assets. For example, the Stamats failed to report their businesses grossed over $250,000 in 2006. They also failed to disclose the depletion of $90,000 in equity from their Michigan home. Certainly, the trustee has an interest in determining where that money went.

There is no legal requirement that omitted assets have value as of the date of the filing in order to be material. In re Pratt, 411 F.3d at 566-67; In re Chalik, 748 F.3d at 618 (false oaths regarding worthless assets can still bar discharge of debts). Nor is proof of harm to creditors required. In re Smiley, 864 F.2d 562, 569 (7th Cir. 1989). Complete transparency is the price a debtor must pay for a discharge, because complete and accurate disclosure is essential in a bankruptcy case. Ross v. RJM Acquisitions Funding LLC, 480 F.3d 493, 498 (7th Cir. 2007) (Bankruptcy Code hinges on debtor's veracity and full disclosure); In re Payne, 775 F.2d at 205 (proper operation of the bankruptcy system depends on honest reporting by the debtor); In re Broholm, 310 B.R. 864, 880 (Bankr.N.D.Ill. 2004) (purpose of section 727(a)(4) is to "enforce the debtor's duty of disclosure and to ensure that the debtors provide reliable information to those who have an interest in the administration of the estate."). Without full disclosure, the chapter 7 trustee, the bankruptcy court, and the United States Trustee can not do their jobs effectively. The chapter 7 trustee has a duty to collect the assets of the estate for liquidation and distribution. 11 U.S.C. § 704. Information regarding worthless assets, such as empty bank accounts may lead to the discovery of existing assets of value, and information about former assets and the disposition of those assets may enable the trustee to identify fraudulent or preferential payments that can be recovered for the benefit of the creditors. The creditors need full and accurate disclosure to make an informed decision about what resources to devote to the case, which depends on whether they believe that their efforts in the case can significantly increase their distribution. The bankruptcy courts need full disclosure to fulfil their statutory obligations such as evaluating repayment plans. See United Student Aid Funding, Inc. v. Espinosa, __ U.S. __, 130 S. Ct. 1367, 1381 (2010). And the United States Trustee requires full disclosure to ensure that the debtor is not abusing the bankruptcy process and that only honest debtors receive a discharge. See 11 U.S.C. § 707(b) & 727(a).

It is essential that a debtor's original schedules and statements are accurate and complete because those documents are filed with the court and in the public record. The trustee, the creditors, the bankruptcy court and the United States Trustee all must be able to rely on the information in those documents. Rejecting a similar "no-harm, no foul" argument, one court explained:

> The critical time for disclosure is at the time of the filing of a petition and the Debtor has the responsibility to do so. Bankruptcy law requires debtors to be honest and to take seriously the obligation to disclose all matters. The bankruptcy schedules and statements of affairs are carefully designed to elicit certain information necessary to > the proper administration and adjudication of the case. To allow the debtor to use his discretion in determining the relevant information to disclose would create an end-run around this strictly crafted system.

Siegel v. Weldon (In re Weldon), 184 B.R. 710, 715 (Bankr. D.S.C. 1995). The Stamats did not take seriously their obligation to fully and accurately disclose all matters at the beginning of their case. They did not care about the truth of the information they provided. And the Stamats decided what information the trustee, the creditors, the court and the United States Trustee should receive instead of fully and accurately reporting the required information as required. By doing so, the Stamats invaded the province of the trustee, the United States Trustee, the creditors and the court. The bankruptcy court did not allow that conduct and neither should this Court.

C. Alternatively, This Court Should Affirm The Denial Of The Discharge Under 11 U.S.C. § 727(a)(5) Because The Bankruptcy Court's Finding That The Stamats Failed To Satisfactorily Explain The Loss Of The Proceeds From Their Refinancings Is Not Clearly Erroneous.

Although the district court affirmed the denial of discharge under section 727(a)(4) without reaching the two alternative grounds cited by the bankruptcy court, this Court can affirm on any ground passed on by the bankruptcy court.[25] It is well established that a reviewing court may affirm the judgment of a lower court on any grounds supported by the record. In re Volpert, 110 F.3d 494, 500 (7th Cir. 1997) (citing Schweiker v. Hogan, 457 U.S. 569, 585 & n. 24 (1982)). The appellate record shows that the bankruptcy court did not err in concluding that denial of the Stamats' discharge was warranted under section 727(a)(5) for their inability to satisfactorily explain the loss of substantial assets including $90,000 in proceeds they received by refinancing their house.

[25] If this Court does not agree that a denial of discharge is warranted under 11 U.S.C. §727(a)(4) and chooses not to consider the alternate grounds cited by the bankruptcy court for denying the Stamats' discharge, the United States Trustee

Under section 727(a)(5),[26] the bankruptcy court has "broad power to decline to grant a discharge . . . where the debtor does not adequately explain a shortage, loss, or disappearance of assets." See 11 U.S.C. § 727(a)(5); In re D'Agnese, 86 F.3d at 734. Section 727(a)(5) is one of several Bankruptcy Code provisions meant to "relieve [ ] creditors and courts of the full burden of reconstructing the debtor's financial history and condition, placing it instead upon the debtor." In re Olbur, 314 B.R. 732, 740 (Bankr. N.D. Ill. 2004). Whether a debtor has satisfactorily explained a loss of assets is a question of fact that will not be overturned on review unless clearly erroneous. In re D'Agnese, 86 F.3d at 734.

The bankruptcy court's inquiry focuses on "the completeness and truth of the debtor's explanation." In re Costello, 299 B.R. at 901. However, fraudulent intent is not required for denial of discharge under section 727(a)(5). See In re D'Agnese, 86 F.3d at 734 (explanation need not be a lie to be unsatisfactory). A debtor's explanation must be supported by documentation sufficient to "eliminate the need for the Court to speculate as to what happened to all the assets." In re Costello, 299 B.R. at 901. Vague, indefinite, and uncorroborated assertions by the debtor of what happened to the assets are not adequate under section 727(a)(5). In re D'Agnese, 86 F.3d at 734; Baum v. Earl Millikin, Inc., 359 F.2d 811, 814 (7th Cir. 1966).

The bankruptcy court found that the Stamats at one time owned substantial and identifiable assets that are no longer available to their creditors. (App. 36 at ¶¶ 34-35). The schedules state, under penalty of perjury, that the Stamats had only $16,620.67 in personal property and that their homes were subject to mortgages. (Id.); (Supp.App. 4, 7). However, the Stamats acknowledged they had received $90,000 from home refinances within two years of filing their bankruptcy petition. (App. 26 at ¶ 35). Also, the year before they filed for bankruptcy, Dr. Stamat's medical practice grossed $265,012. (Supp.App. 54).

The Stamats failed to offer a satisfactory explanation for the unavailability of those assets, especially the $90,000 the took out of their Michigan home. (App. 36). Although the Stamats produced a collection of bank statements and cancelled checks and testified about their general financial challenges, the Stamats could not explain how their personal and professional bank accounts reconciled, how their income was determined or what happened to all of the cash removed from their accounts. (Id.); (Supp.App. 158-63). The Stamats asserted that the funds were spent on their personal expenses and Dr. Stamat's medical practice, but they offered no specific details or documents to corroborate their explanation. (App. 36); (Supp.App. 158-63). Under the circumstances, it was not clearly erroneous for the bankruptcy court to find that the Stamats failed to satisfactorily explain a loss of assets and deny their discharge on that basis. See In re D'Agnese, 86 F.3d at 735 (affirming denial of discharge where debtor failed to provide documentation or adequate explanation for missing assets).

D. Alternatively, This Court Should Affirm The Denial Of The Discharge Under 11 U.S.C. § 727(a)(2) Because The Bankruptcy Court's Finding That The Stamats Concealed Assets With The Intent To Defraud Their Creditors Was Not Clearly Erroneous.

As a third alternative, this Court should affirm the bankruptcy court's decision to deny the Stamats' discharge under section 727(a)(2) because the appellate record supports the bankruptcy court's finding that the Stamats concealed property with the intent to defraud creditors warranting a denial of their discharge on that ground as well. It is well established that a reviewing court may affirm the judgment of a lower court on any grounds supported by the record. In re Volpert, 110 F.3d at 500.

Section 727(a)(2) denies a discharge of debts to a debtor who, with intent to delay, hinder or defraud creditors transfers or conceals property of the bankruptcy estate within one year of filing the bankruptcy petition or anytime post-petition. See 11 U.S.C.§ 727(a)(2).[27] Section 727(a)(2) requires a denial of discharge where

[27] Section 727(a)(2) provides:

(a) The court shall grant the debtor a discharge, unless–

(2) the debtor, with intent to hinder, delay, or defraud a creditor or an officer of the estate charged with custody of property under this title, has transferred, removed, destroyed, mutilated, or concealed, or has permitted to be transferred, removed, destroyed, mutilated, or concealed–

(A) property of the debtor, within one year before the date of a court finds (1) a transfer or concealment of property of the estate by the debtor and (2) a subjective intent to hinder, delay or defraud creditors, (3) within the year before filing or post-petition. 11 U.S.C. § 727(a)(2). See Village of San Jose v. McWilliams, 284 F.3d 785, 791 (7th Cir. 2002).

"Debtors have an absolute duty to report whatever interests they hold in property, even if they believe their assets are worthless . . . ." In re Yonikus, 974 F.2d at 904. Concealment includes failing or refusing to divulge information to which creditors were entitled. See In re Scott, 172 F.3d at 967. Transfer or concealment may occur even if creditors are not harmed by it. In re Smiley, 864 F.2d at 569.

Intent may be proved by circumstantial evidence or inferences from a debtor's conduct. In re Yonikus, 974 F.2d at 905. Where a debtor does not care about the truth or falsity of a statement, this satisfies the intent requirement of section 727(a)(2). In re Chavin, 150 F. 3d at 728.

The bankruptcy court found that the Stamats concealed assets by failing to > the filing of the petition; or

> (B) property of the estate, after the date of the filing of the petition;

disclose required information to which creditors were entitled. (App. 30-31 at ¶¶ 8, 13-14). The bankruptcy court relied on the evidence and testimony to conclude that the Stamats failed to disclose personal property, business income, business interests, two home refinances, and ongoing litigation against a bank. (Id.). The bankruptcy court found that the Stamats were obligated to disclose information requested in the schedules and SoFA, and the Stamats did not do so. (Id.). Based on its findings, the bankruptcy court did not commit clear error when it concluded that the Stamats concealed property of the estate through their failure to make required disclosures with the intend to defraud creditors and denied discharge under section 727(a)(2). (App. 32 at ¶ 15).

VIII. CONCLUSION

JURISDICTIONAL STATEMENT

On December 17, 2008, the bankruptcy court entered Findings of Fact and Conclusions of Law and a separate Judgment sustaining the United States Trustee's objections to discharge under 11 U.S.C. §§ 727(a)(2)(B), and (6)(A) and accordingly denied the Standiferds' discharge.[1] The Standiferds filed their Notice of Appeal of the Judgment on December 24, 2008. This Court has appellate jurisdiction over the bankruptcy court's entry of a judgment in favor of the United States Trustee pursuant to 28 U.S.C. § 158(a)(1) and Federal Bankruptcy Rule 8001(a).

STATEMENT OF ISSUES TO BE PRESENTED

(1) The bankruptcy court denied the Standiferds' discharge under section 727(a)(6)(A) because the Standiferds refused to obey a lawful order of the court. The question on appeal is whether the bankruptcy court properly applied 11 U.S.C. §727(a)(6)(A), and, if so, whether it committed clear error in finding that the Standiferds' disobeyed a lawful order of the Court.

(2) The bankruptcy court also denied the Standiferds' discharge under section 727(a)(2) because the Standiferds concealed property of the chapter 13 estate after the petition date with the intent to hinder, delay, or defraud creditors. The question on appeal is whether:

(a) As the Standiferds suggest, the bankruptcy court must, as a matter of law, ignore their misconduct while their bankruptcy case was pending in chapter 13, when denying their discharge under section 727(a); and

(b) If the bankruptcy court properly considered that misconduct, whether the bankruptcy court committed clear error in finding that the Standiferds converted their case in bad faith and concluding that their concealed assets are property of the chapter 7 estate.

[1] The Court alternatively held that the Standiferds' bad acts during the pendency of their bankruptcy proceeding warranted dismissal of their case without discharge pursuant to 11 U.S.C. § 707(a)

This Court can affirm the denial of the Standiferd's discharge on either ground.

STATEMENT OF FACTS

The Standiferds filed a chapter 13 petition on December 28, 2000. See 11 U.S.C. § 1301, et seq. and (Exhibit 1)[3] In a chapter 13 case, the debtor must file a plan that provides for the contribution of all or such portion of a debtor's future earnings necessary to the execution of the plan. 11 U.S.C. §§ 1321, 1322. The debtor's post-petition earnings for services performed by the debtor become property of the bankruptcy estate. See 11 U.S.C. § 1306.

A bankruptcy court may only confirm a plan that has been proposed in good faith. See 11 U.S.C. § 1325(a). The proposed plan must also comply with the provisions of 11 U.S.C. § 1301, et seq. as well as all other applicable provisions of Title 11. Id. If the proposed plan meets the requirements of 11 U.S.C. § 1325, the bankruptcy court shall confirm the plan. Id. The provisions of the confirmed plan bind the debtor. 11 U.S.C. § 1327. The order confirming the plan may affect the rights and obligations of a debtor in connection with the plan. For example, the confirmation order may dictate the timing and manner of payments under the plan or may provide for, or limit, the re-vesting of estate property in the debtor. 11 U.S.C. §§ 1326 and 1327.

In this case, the Standiferds filed a proposed plan on January 12, 2001, (UST Exhibit 4) and later an amended plan February 8, 2001 (UST Exhibit 5). Both plans proposed to use the Standiferds tax refunds and other income to repay creditors. (UST Exhibits 4 and 5) The amended plan proposed to repay the Standiferds' debts over 36 months through monthly payments of $470 derived from earnings. (UST Exhibit 5) In order to adequately fund the plan, the Standiferds proposed to supplement these payments by the contributing their tax refunds and any proceeds from pending litigation against Mr. Standiferds' former business partners. (UST Exhibits 1 and 5)

In their original schedules and statements filed on January 12, 2001, under the penalty of perjury, the Standiferds disclosed a total of $229,217.93 in unsecured debt. (UST Exhibit 1)

On January 15, 2002, the bankruptcy court entered an order confirming the amended chapter 13 plan. (UST Exhibit 6) The order directed the Standiferds to do four things:[4]

(a) If the Standiferds began engaging in business they were required to file monthly operating reports. (UST Exhibit 6, ¶ 7)

(b) The Standiferds were required to timely file all tax returns and provide copies thereof to the chapter 13 trustee throughout the duration of the plan. The Standiferds were also to pay all federal and state tax refunds into the plan for distribution to creditors. (UST Exhibit 6, ¶ 11)

(c) The Standiferd were not to incur any additional debt outside the ordinary course of business without further order of the court. (Exhibit 6, ¶ 4)

(d) If the Standiferds received any bonuses, they were required to notify the chapter 13 trustee of the receipt of said bonuses with documentation showing the exact amount received. The Standiferds were further required to pay 60 percent of the gross amount of any bonuses they received to the chapter 13 trustee, in addition to the regular monthly plan payment of $470.00. (UST Exhibit 6, ¶ 12)

[4] It should be noted that the order contained other provisions affecting the rights and obligations of the Standiferds, for example with respect to specific creditors or claims, and also contained various administrative directives, i.e., that the Standiferds report any change of address to the chapter 13 trustee. (UST Exhibit 6)

In addition, the confirmation order also preserved the chapter 13 trustee's right to object to any discharge of a plan which paid less than 100 percent to unsecured creditors. (UST Exhibit 6, ¶ 10)

The Standiferds' attorney was served with a copy of the confirmation order (UST Exhibit 6). The Standiferds understood that they were required to provide copies of their tax returns to the chapter 13 trustee and file monthly operating reports. (Debtors' Exhibit C and D - as shown in the U. S. Trustee's Supplemental Findings and Conclusions, Docket No. 35, Exhibit "E"),[5] (UST Exhibit 43, p.11, line 16-17, Transcript pp. 30-31)

During their case, each of the four requirements of the confirmation order was triggered: the requirement that they file operating reports, the requirement that they account for bonuses, the requirement that they not incur additional debt, and the requirement that they provide tax returns to the trustee. However, the Standiferds did nothing. In June, 2002, Mr. Standiferd began working for STX Construction Inc. (STKX) (Transcript pp. 86-87)

Shortly after going to work for STKX, Mr. Standiferd approached the owner of STKX, Deke Noftsker, about the possibility of forming a partnership. (Transcript p. 88, lines 1-7) On July 10, 2002 STKX and Ron Standiferd, d/b/a Standiferd & Sons Company formed a new partnership called S & S Joint Venture.[6] (UST Exhibit 8, Transcript p. 89) The S & S Joint

[5] Debtors' Exhibits C and D as introduced at trial were voluminous and were not paginated. At the conclusion of trial, the Court directed the United States Trustee to file an addendum referring to the specific pages of Debtors' Exhibits C and D. (8/19/08 Transcript p.27). In this brief, reference will be made both to Debtors exhibits and to the United States Trustee's Supplemental Findings and Conclusions with separate documents attached thereto and separately labeled alphabetically (Exhibit UST A, B, C etc.).

[6] Mr. Standiferd also operated a sole proprietorship known as Standiferd & Sons Company since approximately 2000. (Transcript p. 23, line 6) Mr. Standiferd never opened a bank account in the name of Standiferd & Sons Company. (Transcript, p. 23, line 17) Mr. Standiferd also testified that he reported any revenues he received as sole proprietor of Standiferd & Sons Company on the Standiferds' individual income tax returns. (Transcript p. 24, lines 13-19)

Venture partnership agreement spelled out the means for the distribution of profits, ownership percentages, and procedures for resolving disputes. (UST Exhibit 8) All check writing authority would be with the certified public accountant for STKX and Deke Noftsker. (Transcript p. 97, line 1)

On November 8, 2004, Mr. Standiferd incorporated Standiferd & Sons, Inc.[7] (UST Exhibit 20) In June 2005, Standiferd and Sons, Inc. substituted as a partner for Standiferd and Sons Company in the S & S Joint Venture. (UST Exhibit 8, p.5) Standiferd & Sons, Inc. owned no vehicles or equipment or any other assets (Transcript p. 43, lines 13-15) except the right to receive bonuses from S & S Joint Venture. (Transcript p. 44, lines 6-8) Mr. Standiferd told Deke Noftsker that he sought the substitution to shield his assets and income. (Transcript p. 96, lines 17-22) Standiferd & Sons, Inc. did not have a bank account of any kind until August 2006. (Transcript p. 44, lines 17-19)

During the course of the chapter 13 bankruptcy proceeding, the partnership entered into several construction contracts which generated a profit. (UST Exhibits 9, 12, 15, 16) In 2003, Mr. Standiferd made $52,000 in wages from his employment with STKX. (UST Exhibit 10) In addition, Mr. Standiferd also received checks written from the S & S Joint Venture account which totaled $15,000 in bonuses. (UST Exhibit 11) The Standiferds deposited all revenues received from S & S Joint Venture into their personal account at Wells Fargo. (Transcript p. 29, lines 1-10)

Despite the requirements of the confirmation order, the Standiferds never disclosed these funds to the chapter 13 trustee in monthly operating reports, because they never filed any.

[7] Mr. Standiferd was a 70 percent owner and Betty Standiferd was a 30 percent owner. (Transcript p. 43, line 8).

(Transcript p. 28, lines 2-5) Needless to say, the Standiferds also failed to turn over any portion of the bonus to the chapter 13 trustee, despite the directive of the confirmation order. (Transcript p. 28, lines 1-10) The Standiferds also failed to provide tax returns, which would have disclosed these amounts, and were also required to be turned over to the chapter 13 trustee pursuant to the confirmation order. (UST Exhibit 6)

In 2004, Mr. Standiferd reported wages in the amount of $48,000.00 according to his W-2. (UST Exhibit 13) In addition, he received bonus checks from S & S Joint Venture totaling $100,000.00. (UST Exhibit 14) Once again, in violation of the requirements of the confirmation order, the Standiferds failed to disclose the bonuses received in 2004 from S & S Joint Venture to the chapter 13 trustee, failed to file monthly operating reports and again failed to provide their tax returns to the chapter 13 trustee as required under the confirmation order. (Transcript p. 28-29)

According to Mr. Standiferd's W-2 for 2005, Mr. Standiferd made wages in the amount of $52,000. (UST Exhibit 17) In addition, he received bonus checks totaling $20,000 from S & S Joint Venture. (UST Exhibit 14) None of the bonus funds were reported in monthly operating reports and none of the bonuses were disclosed to the chapter 13 trustee because Standiferds never provided tax returns to the chapter 13 trustee as required by the confirmation order. (Transcript p. 30, lines 11-13) Over the course of the three year plan term, the Standiferds ignored the three requirements of the confirmation order that they provide tax returns, report and provide 60 percent of bonuses received, and file operating reports to the extent they engaged in any business. Mr. Standiferd admitted that he never voluntarily told the chapter 13 trustee about S & S Joint Venture or the bonuses he received from it, nor did he amend his schedules to reflect his interest in S & S Joint Venture. (Transcript p. 50, lines 11-22)

The Standiferds were given every opportunity to comply with the requirements of the confirmation order. The chapter 13 trustee sent letters to the Standiferds reminding them of their obligation to submit tax returns to the chapter 13 trustee. (Transcript p. 59, lines 3-7) The chapter 13 trustee also sent end of the year reports to the Standiferds, reminding them of their obligation to submit tax returns to the trustee. (Debtors' Exhibit C and D - as shown in the United States Trustee's supplemental findings and conclusions, Docket No. 35, exhibit "A") The chapter 13 trustee never received tax returns for the years 2003, 2004, and 2005. (Transcript, p. 57, lines 13-15) Mr. Standiferd falsely testified at his Fed. R. Bankr. P. 2004 examination that the income he received from S & S Joint Venture was reported to the trustee in his personal tax returns though not in monthly operating reports.[8] (UST Exhibit 44, p. 30-33)

Rather than comply with the confirmation order, the Standiferds instead spent all of the unreported bonuses they received, with the majority of being spent on home improvements.[9] (Transcript p. 29, lines 11-13)

After failing to receive the Standiferds 2003 tax return, on May 16, 2003, the chapter 13 trustee filed a motion to dismiss alleging the Standiferds' failure to provide copies of tax returns and/or failure to contribute tax refunds to the plan as required by the confirmation order. (See No. 00-16958, Docket No. 102) On June 5, 2003, the Standiferds filed a motion to modify their plan by waving the requirement to contribute tax refunds for 2001 and 2002, due to Mr. Standiferd's unemployment between April to July 2002. (See Case No. 00-16958, Docket No.

The chapter 13 trustee's first motion to dismiss was denied. (Case No. 00-16958, Docket No. 116) The motion to waive the tax refund requirement was granted by stipulation between the parties. (Case No. 00-16958, Docket No. 116) The stipulation provided that payment of $3,907.00 in tax refunds, which the Standiferds had received in 2001 and 2002 would be deferred until the end of the plan term in the event that 100 percent of unsecured claims were not paid. (See No. 00-16958, Docket No. 116)

The chapter 13 trustee filed a second motion to dismiss on October 16, 2006, alleging inter alia, the Standiferds' failure to provide accounting of bonus income, failure to provide copies of tax returns, and failure to contribute tax refunds to the plan. (See No. 00-16958, Docket No. 123) The bankruptcy court held a hearing on the motion to dismiss on November 16, 2006. Several days later, on November 22, 2006, the Standiferds voluntarily filed a notice of conversion of their chapter 13 proceeding to one under chapter 7. (See No. 00-16958, Docket No. 129)

After conversion, the Standiferds amended their schedules. Despite the mandate of the confirmation order that they not incur debt outside the ordinary course without court approval, in their amended Schedule F filed on December 15, 2006, the Standiferds disclosed a total of $653,153.98 in unsecured debt. (UST Exhibit 3, p. 13; see also, No. 00-16958, Docket No. 134) During the course of the chapter 13 proceeding, the Standiferds' unsecured debt had nearly tripled from the amount set forth in their schedules at the outset of the case. (UST Exhibit 1) In their Amended Schedule B filed on May 8, 2007, the Standiferds also disclosed, for the first time, their 100 percent ownership of Standiferd & Sons, LLC and 100 percent ownership of Sands Construction, LLC, but still failed to disclose their interest in S & S Joint Venture. (UST Exhibit 16; see also, No. 00-16958, Docket No. 162)

The Standiferds never filed monthly operating reports (Exhibit 7) nor did they provide the chapter 13 trustee with copies of tax returns for 2003, 2004, or 2005. (Transcript p. 57 lines 13-15) The Standiferds never informed the chapter 13 trustee about the formation or operation of S & S Joint Venture, nor their ownership interest in it. (Transcript p. 50, lines 11- 22) Finally, the Standiferds never disclosed their business profits or bonuses from S & S Joint Venture to the chapter 13 trustee. (Transcript p. 50, lines 19- 22)

On May 21, 2007, the United States Trustee filed a complaint objecting to the Appellants' discharge under 11 U.S.C. §727 (a)(2)(B), 11 U.S.C. §727 (a)(4)(D), 11 U.S.C. §727(a)(6)(A), and 11 U.S.C. §727 (a)(5). (Adv. No. 07-01076, Docket No. 1)

After a two day trial, the bankruptcy court entered judgment in favor of the United States Trustee on December 17, 2008 and issued its findings of fact and conclusions of law that same day. (Case No. 07-01076, Docket Nos. 41 and 42) The Court denied the Standiferds' discharge under 11 U.S.C. § 727(a)(6)(A) and/or 11 U.S.C. § 727(a)(2)(B) (Case No. 07-01076, Docket Nos. 41 and 42) The bankruptcy court found that the Standiferds willfully failed to comply with the confirmation order, and further found that the Standiferds had concealed assets of the bankruptcy estate with the intent to hinder delay or defraud their creditors. (Case No. 07-01076, Docket No. 42) On December 24, 2008, the Standiferds timely appealed the bankruptcy court's judgment. (Case No. 07-01076, Docket No. 44)

SUMMARY OF ARGUMENT

The bankruptcy court found that denial of the Standiferds discharge was warranted under either 11 U.S.C. § 727(a)(6)(A) or 11 U.S.C. § 727(a)(2)(B). This Court can affirm under either basis. Denial was proper under section 727(a)(6)(A). The Standiferds willfully refused to comply with the terms of the bankruptcy court's order confirming their chapter 13 plan by failing to report and contribute business income, file operating reports and provide tax returns to the chapter 13 trustee. The confirmation order was a valid and enforceable order of the bankruptcy court and, thus, the court properly applied the plain meaning of section 727(a)(6) in determining that the Standiferds' willful and intentional conduct in disobeying that order supported denial of discharge.

Alternatively, Section 726(a)(2)(B) also warranted denial of the Standiferds' discharge because the Standiferds' concealed assets during their chapter 13 proceeding with the intent to, hinder, delay or defraud their creditors. The bankruptcy court properly considered the Standiferds' pre-conversion conduct in concluding that denial of discharge was warranted and in determining that the Standiferds converted their case in bad faith under section 348, which meant that the concealed assets became property of the chapter 7 estate upon conversion.

This Court may affirm the bankruptcy court's decision if the bankruptcy court's findings of fact and conclusions of law supported denial of discharge under either 11 U.S.C. § 727(a)(6)(A) or 11 U.S.C. § 727(a)(2)(B).

ARGUMENT

I. THE BANKRUPTCY COURT DENIED THE STANDIFERDS' DISCHARGE UNDER SECTION 727(a)(6)(A) BECAUSE THE STANDIFERDS REFUSED TO OBEY A LAWFUL ORDER OF THE COURT.

The United States Trustee filed his objection to discharge based, in part, on the Standiferds' admitted violation of their obligations under the confirmation order, to report bonus income to the trustee and contribute that income to their plan, file operating reports if they engaged in any business, and provide tax returns to the chapter 13 trustee. Section 727(a)(6)(A), provides that the Court shall deny the debtor a discharge when the debtor, as here, refuses to obey a lawful order of the Court.[10]

The requirements of 11 U.S.C. § 727(a)(6) are straightforward. Discharge is denied if "1) the Court issued an order directed at the debtor; 2) the order was lawful; 3) the order did not require the debtor to respond to a material question or to testify; and 4) the debtor refused to obey the order." In re Green, 335 B.R. 181,183 (Bankr. D. Utah 2005) Under 11 U.S.C. § 727(a)(6) some degree of willfulness or volition on the part of the debtor not to obey the order must be present. Id. at 184.

The initial burden is on the plaintiff to demonstrate that the debtor received the order and failed to comply with its terms. Smith v. Jordan (In re Jordan), 521 F.3d 430, 434 (4th Cir. 2008) The burden then shifts to the debtor who must then explain the reasons for non-compliance. Id.

As an initial matter, there is no question that the order confirming the chapter 13 plan is a valid order of the bankruptcy court. The Tenth Circuit has confirmed that a confirmation order is a valid order, noting that "'[u]pon becoming final, the order confirming the chapter 13 plan represents a binding determination of the rights and liabilities of the parties as ordained by the plan. Absent timely appeal the confirmed plan is res judicata and its terms are not subject to collateral attack.'" In re Talbot 124 F.3d 1201, 1209 (10th Cir. 1997) (quoting 8 Collier on Bankruptcy ¶ 1327.02 (Lawrence P. King 15th ed.1996)) See also In re Dial Business Forms 341 F.3d 738, 744 (8th Cir. 2003) (holding a confirmed chapter 11 plan is a contract and order of the court).

> The court shall grant the debtor a discharge unless–
> (6) the debtor has refused, in the case–
> (A) to obey any lawful order of the court, other than an order to respond to a material question or to testify;

11 U.S.C. § 727(a)(6).

The Standiferds violated the confirmation order in this case. The confirmation order required that they (1) timely file tax returns and provide copies to the chapter 13 trustee, (2) file operating reports if the Standiferds engaged in business, and (3) provide documentation to the chapter 13 trustee of all bonuses that the Standiferds received together with a payment of 60 percent of any such bonuses. (UST Exhibit 6) The Standiferds received the confirmation order and were aware of its terms. (Defendant's Exhibit C and D - itemized in United States Trustee's Supplemental Findings and Conclusions, Docket No. 35, Exhibit "UST E" and Exhibit 43) Six months after confirmation of their chapter 13 plan, in July 2002, the Standiferds formed S & S Joint Venture. (Exhibit 8) The purpose in forming the joint venture was to make money as a business venture. (Transcript p. 25, lines 9-12) During the next three years, the Standiferds received bonuses from their operation of a business totaling $135,000. (Exhibits 11, 14, 18) Not only did they fail to file monthly operating reports reflecting their operation of a business (Exhibit 7, Transcript p. 56, lines 6-8), they failed to report any of their bonus income or pay any portion thereof to the chapter 13 trustee. (Transcript, pp. 61-62, Exhibit 40) The Standiferds flagrantly disregarded the requirements of the confirmation order.[11]

The Standiferds' failure to provide tax returns also violated the confirmation order, and conveniently furthered their efforts to hide their income from bonus payments from the chapter 13 trustee. In fact, the Standiferds only provided their 2002 tax return to the chapter 13 trustee in response to the trustee's motion to dismiss for failing to provide her with tax returns.

[11] Not only did the Standiferds refuse to obey the confirmation order in failing to account for income, and providing tax returns, the Standiferds also ignored the provision of the order directing them not to incur additional debt outside the ordinary course without further order of the court. In their original schedules filed on January 12, 2001, the Standiferds disclosed unsecured claims totaling $229,217.93. (UST Exhibit 1, p.19) In an Amended Schedule F filed on December 15, 2006, the Standiferds disclosed unsecured debt totaling $653,153.98. While the Standiferds' case was pending in chapter 13, they virtually tripled their debt. (UST Exhibit 3, p.13) It is self evident that this is not the case of an unfortunate debtor, but an abuse of the chapter 13 process by debtors who believed they could ignore the order of the bankruptcy court and then avoid the consequences of their conduct by converting their case to one under chapter 7.

(Transcript pp. 56-57) At this point, there can be no argument that the Standiferds were unaware of their obligation to provide tax returns. Yet they continually failed to do so, which resulted in the chapter 13 trustee filing another motion to dismiss on October 16, 2006. (Exhibit 40) Although Mr. Standiferd testified under oath at his meeting of creditors on March 5, 2007, that he had provided tax returns "every year," (Exhibit 43, p.11, lines 11-16) it is clear he did not provide tax returns for the years 2003, 2004 and 2005 as testified by the chapter 13 trustee. (Transcript p. 57 lines 13-15)

A. THE BANKRUPTCY COURT PROPERLY APPLIED 11 U.S.C. §727(a)(6)(A).

Ample evidence in the record supports the bankruptcy court's finding that the Standiferds willfully disobeyed an order of the Court within the meaning of section 727(a)(6)(A). The Standiferds do not contest the evidence supporting this finding. (Appellants' Brief at 15-19) Instead, they argue that the bankruptcy court failed to apply the "plain meaning" of section 727, which they claim requires the conclusion that section 727(a)(6) is not applicable to orders issued while a case is pending in chapter 13. (Appellants' Brief at 8) However, Section 727(a)(6)(A) says no such thing. The Standiferds' seek to amend section 727(a)(6)(A) by adding words to the statute that are not there and then use those words to avoid the natural consequences of their misconduct. The bankruptcy court refused to allow the Standiferds to rewrite section 727 to achieve such an inequitable result. The court in doing so, applied the text of the relevant statute. The court's result, which is both just and lawful, merits affirmance.

Section 727(a)(6)(A) reads: "[t]he court shall grant the debtor a discharge unless . . . (6) the debtor has refused in the case– to obey any lawful order of the court . . .." 11 U.S.C. § 727(a)(6)(A) The Standiferds seek to amend it to add "in the [chapter 7] case" to the phrase "in the case." (Appellants' Brief at 15-16) The Standiferds do not cite even one case justifying the qualification "chapter 7" to the word "case" in section 727(a)(6)(A). Courts apply statutes as written. Lamie v. U.S. Trustee, 540 U.S. 526, 534 (2004) Here the Standiferds willfully violated a "lawful order of the court." As a result, denial of discharge was justified.

The Standiferds suggest that 11 U.S.C. § 1307(a) merits a different result. Section 1307(a) provides that "[t]he debtor may convert a case under this chapter to a case under chapter 7 of this title at any time." The Standiferds argue that because section 1307 does not read that the debtor may convert "the case from chapter 17 (sic) to chapter seven," the reference in section 1307(a) is to two separate cases. (Appellants' Brief at 16) The Standiferds therefore contend that upon conversion, the chapter 13 case is separate from the chapter 7 case. As a result, the Standiferds argue that 11 U.S.C. § 727(a)(6) applies only to orders issued by the court while a chapter 7 case is pending. This argument is wrong as a matter of statutory construction because the Standiferds' argument ignores 11 U.S.C. § 348(a) which provides:

> Conversion of the case from a case under one chapter of this title to a case under another chapter of this title constitutes an order for relief under the chapter to which the case is converted but, except as provided in subsections (b) and (c) of this section, does not effect a change in the date of the filing of the petition, the commencement of the case, or the order for relief.

11 U.S.C. § 348(a). The Standiferds reading of section 727 is similarly unsupported by case law See In re Lyons, 162. B.R. 242, 243 (Bankr. E.D. Mo. 1993) (interpreting section 348(a) in connection with an objection to discharge under 11 U.S.C. § 727(a)(8), and finding that where a chapter 13 case converted to chapter 7, the chapter 7 was deemed to have commenced on the date the original chapter 13 petition was filed); In re Sours 350 B.R. 261, 268 (Bankr. E.D. Va. 2006) (converted case deemed filed as of the date of the original petition); In re Capers 347 B.R. 169 (Bankr. D.S.C. 2006); Shaw v. Ehrlich 294 B.R. 260 (W.D. Va.2003); In re Canganelli 132 B.R. 369 (Bankr. N.D. Ind.1991); In re Burrel, 148 B.R. 820 (Bankr. E.D. Va. 1992); In re

Marshall, 74 B.R .185 (Bankr. N.D.N.Y. 1987).[12]

Nor could the general provisions of section 348 overturn section 727(a)(6)'s more specific rule that the court shall grant the debtor a discharge unless– "the debtor has refused, in the case- to obey any lawful order of the court. . ..." 11 U.S.C. § 727(a)(6) (emphasis added) Here the Standiferds violated multiple provisions of a court order. See supra, pp. 5-10. The bankruptcy court was well within its discretion in denying discharge given their misconduct.

B. THE STANDIFERDS DISOBEYED A LAWFUL ORDER OF THE COURT.

The Standiferds also contend that denial of discharge was improper under section 727(a)(6) because the confirmation order was not a "lawful order." (Appellants' Brief at 16) They argue that, "in a chapter 13 case, the confirmation order is, in fact, and can lawfully be no more than an approval of a proposal by the debtor to the creditors." (Appellants' Brief at 19) Therefore, they contend that the bankruptcy court had no authority to order that they file monthly operating reports, provide tax returns to the chapter 13 trustee, turnover tax refunds, or document bonuses and pay 60 percent of those proceeds to the chapter 13 trustee.

The Standiferds cite no support for this proposition. The Bankruptcy Code does not support their reading. See 11 U.S.C. §§ 1306 (b) (referring to the "order confirming a plan"); 1326(c) (referring to the "order confirming a plan"); 1327(b) (same); 1327(c) (same); 1330(a) (which provides for the revocation "of an order of confirmation"); and 1330(b) (which discusses the effect of revocation of "an order of confirmation.")

[12] The Standiferds quibble with In re Sharp, 305 B.R. 571 (Bankr. M.D. Fla.2003), a case cited by the bankruptcy court, suggesting it is inapplicable to this case because it was decided under section 727(a)(7) and not section 727(a)(6). That is not significant here, because section 727(a)(7) is even broader than (a)(6) in that it allows denial of discharge based on conduct occurring outside the bankruptcy or in an entirely different proceeding, let alone in a converted case. And, in Sharp, the denial of discharge under (a)(7) was based on a violation of a (6) because of the individual chapter 7 debtor's failure to obey an order entered in the chapter 11 case. More importantly, Sharp is not determinative here. Section 726(a)(6)'s text is, and, it allows denial of discharge when, as here, the debtors violate and order "in the case."

Given these repeated references to orders of confirmation, which occur in a debtor's case, it is clear that Congress intended confirmation orders to be exactly what they purport to be– an order "in the case." Beyond question, a confirmation order issued in this case. (No. 00-16958, Docket No. 71) The Standiferds violated it. (Findings of Fact and Conclusions of Law, Docket No. 42, p. 20) Given this, the bankruptcy court did not abuse its discretion in by denying discharge under section 726(a)(6).

The Standiferds next argue (again, without citing a single case) that chapter 13 is entirely voluntary, and thus a debtor may willfully and with impunity choose to ignore the confirmation order.[13] (Appellants' Brief at 18) According to the Standiferds' the only remedy for this conduct is to file a motion under 11 U.S.C. § 1307(c) to convert or dismiss the proceeding. (Appellants' Brief at 18) The problem with the Standiferds' argument is that no statute even remotely suggests this, and the plain language of section 726(a)(6) refutes it. Moreover, there is nothing improper in the confirmation order.[14] The Standiferds fail to explain why any provisions of the confirmation order were unnecessary or inappropriate to the confirmation process. In fact, such provisions were necessary and appropriate given that the Standiferds' plan proposed a 100 percent payment to unsecured creditors. (UST Exhibit 5) As listed in Schedule F of their schedules, the Standiferds owed $229,217.93 in unsecured debt (UST Exhibit 1, p.19) and clearly could not pay such debt with proposed monthly payments of $470.00 for a period of 36 months. (UST Exhibit 5) The confirmation order thus included provisions requiring the contribution of bonus proceeds and tax refunds. In support of their novel suggestion that the [13] The issue in this instance is not whether the Standiferds' could fail to comply with the bankruptcy court's direction that certain payments be made. Rather, the issue is the Standiferds' failure to disclose their finances which allowed them to conceal estate property.

[14] Even if there were, the Standiferds would have had to appeal that order. The did not, so they are collaterally estopped from challenging it here. See, e.g., In re Otasco, 18 F.3d 841 (10th Cir. 1994).

confirmation order was not an order but merely some sort of amorphous stipulation between the Standiferds, the chapter 13 trustee, and certain creditors, the Standiferds cite In re Jefferson, 323 B.R. 767 (Bankr. D. Colo. 2005), a case which was also cited by the bankruptcy court. The Jefferson case is clearly distinguishable from these circumstances, because it involved an order that simply approving a stipulation and the debtors in that case had no obligation to do anything under the terms of the order. 323 B.R. at 768. However, in this case, the last 12 paragraphs of the confirmation order entered on January 15, 2002, are preceded by the words, "IT IS FURTHER ORDERED, ADJUDGED AND DECREED . . .." (UST Exhibit 6) Clearly, the Standiferds were required to take certain actions and the confirmation order was not a simple stipulation. Further, as stated by one court, "An order confirming the chapter 13 plan is res judicata as to all justiciable issues which were or could have been decided at the confirmation hearing ." In re Patterson, 107 B.R. 576, 578 (Bankr. S.D. Ohio 1989) The confirmation order is far more than simply a rubber stamp of an agreement between the parties.

II. THE BANKRUPTCY COURT DENIED THE STANDIFERDS' DISCHARGE UNDER SECTION 727(a)(2) BECAUSE THE STANDIFERDS CONCEALED PROPERTY OF THE CHAPTER 13 ESTATE AFTER THE PETITION DATE WITH THE INTENT TO HINDER, DELAY, OR DEFRAUD CREDITORS

The bankruptcy court's denial of discharge pursuant to 11 U.S.C. § 727(a)(2) is supported by the record. Section 727(a)(2) provides for the denial of discharge where a debtor "with intent to hinder, delay, or defraud a creditor or an officer of the estate charged with custody of property under this title, has transferred, removed, destroyed, mutilated, do or concealed, or has permitted to be transferred, removed, destroyed, mutilated, or concealed" property of the estate, after the date of the filing of the petition. 11 U.S.C. § 727(a)(2) (emphasis added) To prevail in an adversary proceeding under this section, the plaintiff must prove that: (1) the debtor transferred or concealed; (2) property of the estate after the date of the filing of the petition; (3) with the intent to hinder, delay, or defraud creditors. In re Milano, 35 B.R.89, 91 (Bankr. S. D. N. Y. 1983); Hunter v Sowers (In re Sowers), 229 B.R. 151 (Bankr. N.D. Ohio 1998), In re Bostick, 400 B.R. 348 (Bankr. D. Conn. 2009) Denial of discharge under section 727(a)(2)(B) requires actual intent to hinder, delay, or defraud a creditor or officer of the estate. Johnson v Johnson (In re Johnson), 387 B.R. 728, 749 (Bankr. S. D. Ohio 2008)

Concealment within the meaning of 11 U.S.C. §727(a)(2)(B) means simply withholding knowledge of an asset by the failure or refusal to divulge required information. Sowers at 229 B.R. at 156 (citing In re Martin, 698 F. 2d 883 (7th Cir. 1983))

Fraudulent intent may be inferred based upon the surrounding facts and circumstances. In re Searles, 317 B.R. 368,369 (B.A.P. 9th Cir. 2004), aff'd 212 Fed. Appx. 589 (9th Cir. 2006) ("intent to hinder, or to delay, or to defraud the trustee . . . is a question of fact that requires the trier of fact to delve into the mind of the debtor and may be inferred from surrounding circumstances.") Just one wrongful act may be sufficient to show actual intent under section 727(a)(2) but a continuing pattern of wrongful behavior is a stronger indication of actual intent. Hunter v Sowers (In re Sowers), 229 B.R. 151,157 (Bankr. N. D. Ohio 1998) Evidence tending to show oversight or ignorance in his actions will tend to negate the actual intent to defraud as long as the debtor did not act in a manner constituting a reckless indifference to the truth. Id at157. See Retirement Company, LLC v Heil (In re Heil), 289 B.R. 897, 908 (Bankr. E. D. Tenn. 2003) (concluding that the cumulative evidence established fraudulent intent, or at a minimum reckless indifference for the truth, "which is a requisite for each section [§ 727(a)(2)(A), § 727(a)(2)(B), and § 727(a)(4)(A)].) Another strong factor tending to indicate a debtor's fraudulent intent under §727(a)(2)(B) involves examining the general chronology of the events and transactions under inquiry. Sowers at 157. The underlying purpose of 11 U.S.C. § 727(a)(2)(B) is "to deny discharge to a debtor who 'fails to disclose transactions regarding his assets subsequent to filing his petition for bankruptcy.'" Johnson, 387 B.R. at 749 (quoting Sicherman v Rivera (In re Rivera), 338 B.R. 318,328 (Bankr. N. D. Ohio 2006) (quoting In re Caserta, 182 B.R. 599, 606 (Bankr. S. D. Fla. 1995))

In this case, there is substantial evidence supporting the bankruptcy court's findings of concealment of property with the intent to hinder, delay, or defraud creditors, all of which supports the denial of discharge. The confirmation order required that the Standiferds take several actions. First, the order required that the Standiferds file monthly operating reports if they engaged in business. (Exhibit 6, p 3, ¶ 7) On July 10, 2002, S & S Joint Venture (hereafter S & S) was formed (Exhibit 8). Mr. Standiferd testified that S & S was formed as a money making venture. (Trans p. 25, lines 9-12)

In 2003, the Standiferds received bonus checks from S & S totaling $15,000. (UST Exhibit 11), (Findings of Fact and Conclusions of Law, Case No. 07-01076, Docket No. 42 at p. 5)

In 2004, the Standiferds received bonus checks from the S & S totaling $100,000 (UST Exhibit 14), (Findings of Fact and Conclusions of Law, Case No. 07-01076, Docket No. 42 at pp. 5-6)

Finally, in 2005 the Standiferds received bonus checks from S & S totaling $20,000. (UST Exhibit 18), (Findings of Fact and Conclusions of Law, Case No. 07-01076, Docket No. 42 at p. 6)

The Standiferds actively concealed these bonuses from the chapter 13 trustee by not filing operating reports and failing to provide tax returns to the chapter 13 trustee. (Findings of Fact and Conclusions of Law, Case No. 07-01076, Docket No. 42 at 18) Not a single monthly operating report is reflected in the case docket. (UST Exhibit 7) The bankruptcy court found that by not filing monthly operating reports and failing to provide tax returns as required by the plan, the Standiferds were intentionally concealing the bonuses received from S & S. (Findings of Fact and Conclusions of Law, Case No. 07-01076, Docket No. 42 at 18) This factual finding was not clearly erroneous. Indeed, the chapter 13 trustee never knew about the bonuses the Standiferds had received. (Transcript, p. 61, lines 15-25) At his creditors meeting in the converted chapter 7 case held on January 18, 2007, Mr. Standiferd admitted that he had agreed to report any business income outside of salary (Exhibit 42, p. 10, lines 2-10). But the unrebutted testimony of the chapter 13 trustee established that the Standiferds did not filed operating reports reflecting this income, which came from a business operated by the Standiferds. (Transcript pp. 55-56) Had the Standiferds filed such reports they would have disclosed the bonuses received from S & S.

The Standiferds' actual intent to defraud is further borne out by the record, which clearly demonstrates that the bankruptcy court's findings were not erroneous and ultimately support the bankruptcy court's conclusion that the Standiferds concealed estate assets with the intent to hinder, delay or defraud creditors. First, the confirmation order required that the Standiferds provide a copy of their tax returns to the Trustee. However, the Standiferds provided her a copy of the 2002 tax return only after the chapter 13 trustee filed her first motion to dismiss in 2002, and failed to provide returns for subsequent years through conversion. (Transcript p. 57, lines 10-12) Moreover, the chapter 13 trustee testified that she sends out requests twice a year reminding debtors to file their tax returns and provide copies to the chapter 13 trustee. (Transcript p. 57, lines 16-24) However, despite these requests, the chapter 13 trustee never received copies of tax returns from the Standiferds for 2003, 2004, and 2005. (Transcript p. 57, lines 13-15)

The chapter 13 trustee again alleged the Standiferds' failure to provide tax returns in her second motion to dismiss filed on October 16, 2006. (Exhibit 40) These tax returns would likely have disclosed the Standiferds concealed assets. When the chapter 13 trustee sought dismissal (UST Exhibit 40), the Standiferd's response was not to provide the tax returns, but instead to file a voluntary notice of conversion to chapter 7. (Exhibit 41) The bankruptcy court found that the failure to file operating reports or provide tax returns that would have revealed the Standiferds income under the facts and circumstances established that the Standiferds acted with the intent to hinder, delay or defraud their creditors. (Findings of Fact and Conclusions of Law, Case No. 07-01076, Docket No. 42 at 18)

This conclusion is further supported in the record by the testimony of Deke Noftsker, Mr. Standiferd's former business partner. Mr. Noftsker was a partner in S & S with Mr. Standiferd. He testified that Mr. Standiferd stated that he was going to use the profits from S & S to pay his creditors. (Transcript p. 101, lines 10-14) The Standiferds never did. Instead, they deposited all the bonuses received from S & S into their personal account (Transcript pp. 19-20) and used the funds to refurbish their home. (Transcript p. 20, lines 3-5)

Finally, the Standiferds' amended schedules, filed after the case was converted to chapter 7 (Exhibit 3) substantially support the bankruptcy court's finding of actual intent to hinder, delay or defraud. The amended schedules show their 100 percent interest in Standiferd and Sons, LLC and their 100 percent interest in Sands Construction LLC. However, the Standiferds still omitted their ownership interest in S & S. In response to the question regarding interests in partnerships or joint ventures, the Standiferds indicated they had none. (Exhibit 3, p. 16) There is also nothing in the amended schedules regarding the bonuses received from S & S. (Exhibit 3) Not only did the chapter 13 trustee never know about the bonuses, but by not disclosing them in the amended schedules, the Standiferds continued their ongoing concealment by preventing the chapter 7 trustee from making any inquiry at the chapter 7 section 341 meeting of creditors.

Thus, the bankruptcy court had ample support to find each element of a section 727(a)(2) violation. For that reason, denial of discharge merits affirmance.

A. SECTION 727 (a) IS APPLICABLE TO THE STANDIFERDS' ACTIONS AND OMISSIONS WHILE THEIR CASE WAS PENDING IN CHAPTER 13

The Standiferds do not contest the bankruptcy court's findings of fact in their brief. Instead, the Standiferds contend that section 727(a) does not apply to pre-conversion proceedings in the chapter 13 case. The Standiferds argue that under 11 U.S.C. § 103(b), section 727 applies only in chapter 7 cases and under 11 U.S.C. § 103(i), chapter 13 applies only in chapter 13 cases. Section 130(b) provides that subchapters "I and II of chapter 7 of this title apply only in a case under such chapter," while section 103(i) provides that chapter "13 of this title applies only in a case under such chapter." 11 U.S.C. § 103 (b) and (i) The Standiferds argument is incorrect on its face because it is not necessary to apply any provision of chapter 13 in finding that denial of discharge is proper under the facts and circumstances of this case. The Standiferds incorrectly equate the language of 103 to mean that their pre-conversion conduct cannot have any implication in connection with a denial of discharge under section 727. This is simply wrong.

The Standiferds' argument is unsupported by case law. In fact, the Fifth Circuit has held that sections 348(a) and (b), taken together, specifically incorporate 11 U.S.C. §727(b) and permit objections to discharge in converted cases. In re Baker 154 F.3d 534, 538 (5th Cir. 1998. While the Standiferds argue that Baker is not applicable since it dealt with facts which arose prior to the 1994 amendment to section 348, the 1994 amendment only added 11 U.S.C. § 348(f). In re Baker, 154 F.3d at 536, n. 2. The 1994 amendments made no changes to sections 348(a) and (b), so the Fifth Circuit's holding that section §727(b) has been incorporated by section 348 has not been overruled and remains valid.

In addition to Baker, a plain reading of section 727(a)(2) supports the applicability of objections to discharge in converted cases. As noted above, a discharge should be denied to a debtor who "with intent to hinder, delay, or defraud a creditor or an officer of the estate charged with custody of the property under this title has transferred, remove, destroyed, mutilated or concealed . . . property of the estate . . .." 11 U.S.C. 727(a)(2)(emphasis added) The phrase "under this title" makes clear that a discharge action may be pursued for the stated malfeasance committed while a case was pending under another chapter of Title 11.

Moreover, the Standiferds argument that 11 U.S.C. § 103(b) precludes the applicability of section 727(a) defies the rules of statutory construction. It is a well-settled rule of construction that statutory provisions should be interpreted so as to be in harmony with each other. Jones v. St. Louis-San Francisco Ry Company 728 F 2d. 257, 262 (6th Cir.1984); Matter of Robison 166 F.2d 166, 171 (7th Cir.1981); In re Wilson, 305 B.R. 4 (N.D. Iowa, 2004) But, sections 103(b) and section 727(a) harmonize easily, and in a common sense way. Section 103(b) states that "[s]ubchapters I and II of chapter 7 of this title apply only in a case under such chapter." 11 U.S.C. § 103(b) Section 727(a) is part of subchapter II of chapter 7. Section 103(b) certainly stands for the proposition that while a case is pending in chapter 13, statutory provisions under chapter 7 are not applicable. However, once a chapter 13 case is converted to chapter 7, statutory provisions such as section 727(a) are applicable to actions while the case was pending in chapter 13 in order to preserve the benefits of a chapter 7 discharge to honest debtors. Such an interpretation would also be in harmony with section 348(a) which, as stated above, provides that conversion from one chapter of title 11 to another does not effect a change in the date of the filing of the petition, the commencement of the case, or the order for relief. Indeed, as cited above, there are numerous cases which hold that in situations where cases are converted from chapter 13 to chapter 7, the chapter 7 is deemed to have been filed on the date of the original chapter 13. E.g., In re Lyons 162 B.R. 242 (Bankr. E.D. Mo. 1993)

B. THE STANDIFERDS INCORRECTLY ARGUE THAT SECTION 727(a) REQUIRES THAT (1) THE ACTS COMPLAINED OF MUST RELATE TO THE CHAPTER 7 CASE IN SPECIFIC WAYS AND (2) THAT THEIR CONCEALED ASSETS ARE NOT PROPERTY OF THE ESTATE.

While the Standiferds have argued that section 727(a) does not apply to pre-conversion proceedings in the chapter 13 case, they have at the same time admitted that section 727(a) does apply where the acts complained of relate to the chapter 7 case in specific ways. (Appellants' Brief at 11) The Standiferds contend that the property of the chapter 13 estate revested in the Standiferds during the chapter 13 and therefore, there was no estate property at the time of conversion. (Appellants' Brief at 13) As a consequence, the Standiferds argue they concealed no property of the estate within the meaning of section 727(a)(2)(B). The Standiferds seem to think that a debtor who conceals assets, but then dissipates those assets prior to conversion, cannot be held accountable post-conversion.

They are wrong. 11 U.S.C. § 1306(a) provides that property of a chapter 13 estate includes that property specified in section 541 as well as (1) all property of the kind specified in such section that the debtor acquires after the commencement of the case but before the case is closed, dismissed, or converted . . . and (2) earnings from services performed by the debtor after the commencement of the case but before the case is closed, dismissed, or converted . . ." 11 U.S.C. § 1306. The Standiferds' confirmed First Amended Plan mandated that property of the chapter 13 estate would only revest in the Standiferds "at the time of completion of the plan." (UST Exhibit 5 p.6) The plan further provided that should their case be "converted to a case under chapter 7 or 11 of Title 11, United States Code, property of the estate shall vest in accordance with applicable law. " (UST Exhibit 5 p. 6) It is clear that the Standiferds' unreported bonuses were property of the chapter 13 estate.

In this case, the Standiferds did not complete their plan and the property of the chapter 13 estate never revested in them. Because they converted their case to one under chapter 7, section 348(f) governs the subsequent disposition of property of their estate. Section 348(f) provides in relevant part:

> (f)(1) Except as provided in paragraph (2), when a case under chapter 13 of this title is converted to a case under another chapter under this title –
> > (A) property of the estate in the converted case shall consist of property of the estate, as of the date of the petition, that remains in the possession of or is under control of the debtor on the date of conversion...
> (2) If the debtor converts a case under chapter 13 of this title to a case under another chapter under this title in bad faith, the property of the estate in the converted case shall consist of the property of the estate as of the date of conversion.

11 U.S.C. §§ 348(f)(1)(A) and (f)(2) The purpose of section 348(f)(1)(A) is to "avoid penalizing debtors for their chapter 13 efforts by placing them in the same economic position they would have occupied if they had filed chapter 7 originally." In re Fobber, 256 B.R. 268, 277-278 (Bankr. E. D. Tenn. 2000) (citing In re Pearson, 214 B.R. 156,164 (Bankr. N.D. Ohio 1997)) Section 348(f)(1)(A) "was designed to mitigate the effect of §1306(a) [which provides that assets acquired post-petition are property of the estate] in cases converted from chapter 13 by excluding from property of the estate in the converted case property brought in to the estate under § 1306(a)." In re Fobber, 256 B.R. at 278; see also Warren v. Peterson, 298 B.R. 322, 326 (N.D. Ill. 2003) (the purpose of Section 348(f)(1) is to prevent debtors from losing additional property in a chapter 7 case after they have already made payments to creditors in an attempt to reorganize their debts through a chapter 13 plan).

In this case, the bankruptcy court found that the Standiferds failed to fully and accurately disclose their financial affairs before converting their case, therefore section 348(f)(1)(A) was not applicable. (Findings of Fact and Conclusions of Law, Case No. 07-01076, Docket No. 42 at 11-13) They do not contest this finding on appeal and their failure to provide monthly operating reports, tax returns and disclose their bonuses, clearly supports this finding. Conversion under such circumstances constitutes bad faith within the meaning of section 348(f)(2). In re Siegfried 219 B.R. 581 (Bankr. D. Colo. 1998) As a result, the bankruptcy court did not commit clear error in finding that the Standiferds converted their case in bad faith and the property of the chapter 7 estate comprised the property of the estate on the date of conversion. (Adv. No. 07-1076, Docket No. 42)

As of conversion though, the Stanidferds concealed income could not become property of the chapter 7 estate because the Standiferds spent it prior to conversion. The United States Trustee elicited testimony from Mr. Standiferd that the S & S profits were used to make home improvements. (Transcript p. 29, lines 11-13) Having established that the S & S profits were converted in form to improvements on the Standiferds' residence, it is clear that the appreciation in value of the Standiferds' home as a result of the improvements is property of the chapter 7 estate. The widely accepted rule is that, "[t]he conversion in form of property of the estate does not change its character as property of the estate." Bradt v. Woodlawn Auto Workers, F.C.U. 757 F.2d 512 (2nd Cir.1985); see also In re Sayre 321 B.R. 430 (Bankr. N.D. Ohio 2004) The improvements were property of the estate within the meaning of section 348(f)(2) on the date of conversion. For purposes of section 727(a)(2)(A), property of the estate, namely the S & S profits, were concealed in the form of improvements to the Standiferds' residence. Having established the other elements of section 727(a)(2)(A), the United States Trustee met the requirements for denial of the Standiferds' discharge.

C. WHILE CHAPTER 13 IS VOLUNTARY, CHAPTER 13 DEBTORS ARE BOUND BY THE REQUIREMENTS OF GOOD FAITH AND IN THE EVENT OF CONVERSION TO CHAPTER 7, ARE SUBJECT TO SECTION 727(A)

The Standiferds argue that chapter 13 is strictly voluntary and that the only remedies for their conduct in this case were either conversion to chapter 7 or dismissal of the chapter 13 case under 11 U.S.C. §1307(c). (Appellants' Brief at 5-6) They further argue that chapter 13 is designed "as something of a 'flea bath' for dishonest and unaccountable debtors." (Appellants' Brief at 10-11) First, this is legally irrelevant here. Second, it is wrong. The Standiferds contentions are at odds with the good faith requirement in filing a chapter 13 petition. 11 U.S.C. §1325(a)(7) In making an inquiry as to a debtor's good faith, consideration must be made "whether the debtor came to bankruptcy court seeking a fresh start under chapter 13 protection with an intent that is consistent with the spirit and purpose of that law-rehabilitation through debt repayment-or with an intent that contrary to its purposes-debt avoidance through manipulation of the Code." In re Paley, 390 B.R. 53 (Bankr. N.D.N.Y. 2008) (quoting In re McGovern, 297 B.R. 650, 660 (S.D. Fla. 2003))

In this case, the Standiferds filed their chapter 13 with $229,217.93 in unsecured debt. (UST Exhibit 1, p. 19) Upon conversion to chapter 7, the Standiferds listed $653,153.98 in unsecured debt. (UST Exhibit 3, p.13) They incurred this debt in violation of the confirmation order. (UST Exhibit 6) During the chapter 13, they withheld disclosure of $135,000 in bonuses they received. (UST Exhibits 11, 14) Nothing about the voluntary nature of chapter 13 allows the violation of the confirmation order or the manipulation of the Bankruptcy Code to allow the Standiferds to increase their unsecured indebtedness by nearly $424,000, while concealing property of the estate that would otherwise have been available to creditors.

III. THE BANKRUPTCY COURT DID NOT ERR IN CONSIDERING DISMISSAL OF THE CASE PURSUANT TO 11 U.S.C. SECTION 707(a) NOR DID THE COURT ABUSE ITS DISCRETION BY NOT DISMISSING THE CASE.

Finally, the Standiferds argue that they were somehow harmed by the bankruptcy court's dicta, that dismissal under section 707(a) would be an appropriate alternate ground for the decision. However, the the bankruptcy court did not base its ruling on section 707(a). (Appellants' Brief at 19) Thus, the Standiferds' argument is irrelevant. It is irrelevant because the bankruptcy court did not dismiss their case and because the bankruptcy court's ruling denied the Standiferds their discharge based on section 727(a) and not section 707(a). Moreover, even assuming, for the purposes of argument, that the bankruptcy court incorrectly considered dismissal under section 707(a), it was harmless error since the decision was not based on that ground. In this case, after considering the totality of the circumstances, the bankruptcy court did not abuse its discretion in ruling that the denial of discharge was the better resolution of the matter rather than the dismissal of the case. Given the Standiferds' scheme to hide in excess of $100,000 in income and their other misconduct, there was no error in the bankruptcy court's decision.

CONCLUSION

For these reasons, the United States Trustee respectfully requests that this court affirm the order entered below.

(b) Subchapters I and II of chapter 7 of this title apply only in a case under such chapter.

(h) Subchapter IV of chapter 11 of this title applies only in a case under such chapter concerning a railroad.

(i) Chapter 13 of this title applies only in a case under such chapter.

11 U.S.C. § 348(a) & (f)

(a) Conversion of a case from a case under one chapter of this title to a case under another chapter of this title constitutes an order for relief under the chapter to which the case is converted, but, except as provided in subsections (b) and (c) of this section, does not effect a change in the date of the filing of the petition, the commencement of the case, or the order for relief.

(f)(1) Except as provided in paragraph (2), when a case under chapter 13 of this title is converted to a case under another chapter under this title--

> (A) property of the estate in the converted case shall consist of property of the estate, as of the date of filing of the petition, that remains in the possession of or is under the control of the debtor on the date of conversion;
> (B) valuations of property and of allowed secured claims in the chapter 13 case shall apply only in a case converted to a case under chapter 11 or 12, but not in a case converted to a case under chapter 7, with allowed secured claims in cases under chapters 11 and 12 reduced to the extent that they have been paid in accordance with the chapter 13 plan; and
> (C) with respect to cases converted from chapter 13--
>> (i) the claim of any creditor holding security as of the date of the petition shall continue to be secured by that security unless the full amount of such claim determined under applicable nonbankruptcy law has been paid in full as of the date of conversion, notwithstanding any valuation or determination of the amount of an allowed secured claim made for the purposes of the case under chapter 13; and
>> (ii) unless a prebankruptcy default has been fully cured under the plan at the time of conversion, in any proceeding under this title or otherwise, the default shall have the effect given under applicable nonbankruptcy law.

(2) If the debtor converts a case under chapter 13 of this title to a case under another chapter under this title in bad faith, the property of the estate in the converted case shall consist of the property of the estate as of the date of conversion.

11 U.S.C. § 707 (a)

(a) The court may dismiss a case under this chapter only after notice and a hearing and only for cause, including –

> (1) unreasonable delay by the debtor that is prejudicial to creditors;
> (2) nonpayment of any fees and charges required under 123 of title 28; and;
> (3) failure of the debtor in a voluntary case to file, within fifteen days or such additional time as the court may allow after the filing of the petition commencing such case, the information required by paragraph (1) of section 521, but only on a motion by the United States trustee.

11 U.S.C. § 727(a)(2), (4), (5), (6), (7) and (8)

(a) The court shall grant the debtor a discharge, unless–

> (2) the debtor, with intent to hinder, delay, or defraud a creditor or an officer of the estate charged with custody of property under this title, has transferred, removed, destroyed, mutilated, or concealed, or has permitted to be transferred, removed, destroyed, mutilated, or concealed–
> > (A) property of the debtor, within one year before the date of the filing of the petition; or
> > (B) property of the estate, after the date of the filing of the petition;

> (D) withheld from an officer of the estate entitled to possession under this title, any recorded information, including books, documents, records, and papers, relating to the debtor's property or financial affairs;

(5) the debtor has failed to explain satisfactorily, before determination of denial of discharge under this paragraph, any loss of assets or deficiency of assets to meet the debtor's liabilities;

(6) the debtor has refused, in the case--

> (A) to obey any lawful order of the court, other than an order to respond to a material question or to testify;
> (B) on the ground of privilege against self-incrimination, to respond to a material question approved by the court or to testify, after the debtor has been granted immunity with respect to the matter concerning which such privilege was invoked; or

(b) Except as provided in section 523 of this title, a discharge under subsection (a) of this section discharges the debtor from all debts that arose before the date of the order for relief under this chapter, and any liability on a claim that is determined under section 502 of this title as if such claim had arisen before the commencement of the case, whether or not a proof of claim based on any such debt or liability is filed under section 501 of this title, and whether or not a claim based on any such debt or liability is allowed under section 502 of this title.

11 U.S.C. § 1306(a)

(a) Property of the estate includes, in addition to the property specified in section 541 of this title.

occurs first; and

(2) earnings from services performed by the debtor after the commencement of the case but before the case is closed, dismissed, or converted to a case under chapter 7, 11, or 12 of this title, whichever occurs first.

11 U.S.C. § 1307(a) & (c)

(a) The debtor may convert a case under this chapter to a case under chapter 7 of this title at any time. Any waiver of the right to convert under this subsection is unenforceable.

(c) Except as provided in subsection (e) of this section, on request of a party in interest or the United States trustee and after notice and a hearing, the court may convert a case under this chapter to a case under chapter 7 of this title, or may dismiss a case under this chapter, whichever is in the best interests of creditors and the estate, for cause, including--

(1) unreasonable delay by the debtor that is prejudicial to creditors;

(2) nonpayment of any fees and charges required under chapter 123 of title 28;

(3) failure to file a plan timely under section 1321 of this title;

(4) failure to commence making timely payments under section 1326 of this title;

(7) the action of the debtor in filing the petition was in good faith;

28 U.S.C. § 158(a)(1)

(a) The district courts of the United States shall have jurisdiction to hear appeals.

(1) from final judgments, orders, and decrees;

FED. R. BANKR. P. 7052

Rule 52 F. R. Civ. P. applies in every adversary proceeding.

FED. R. CIV. P. 52

(a) Findings and Conclusions.

(1) In General. In an action tried on the facts without a jury or with an advisory jury, the court must find the facts specially and state its conclusions of law separately. The findings and conclusions may be stated on the record after the close of the evidence or may appear in an opinion or a memorandum of decision filed by the court. Judgment must be entered under Rule 58.

(2) For an Interlocutory Injunction. In granting or refusing an interlocutory injunction, the court must similarly state the findings and conclusions that support its action.

(3) For a Motion. The court is not required to state findings or conclusions when ruling on a motion under Rule 12 or 56 or, unless these rules provide otherwise, on any other motion.

(4) Effect of a Master's Findings. A master's findings, to the extent adopted by the court, must be considered the court's findings.

(5) Questioning the Evidentiary Support. A party may later question the sufficiency of the evidence supporting the findings, whether or not the party requested findings, objected to them, moved to amend them, or moved for partial findings.

> (6) Setting Aside the Findings. Findings of fact, whether based on oral or other evidence, must not be set aside unless clearly erroneous, and the reviewing court must give due regard to the trial court's opportunity to judge the witnesses' credibility.

(b) Amended or Additional Findings. On a party's motion filed no later than 10 days after the entry of judgment, the court may amend its findings--or make additional findings--and may amend the judgment accordingly. The motion may accompany a motion for a new trial under Rule 59.

(c) Judgment on Partial Findings. If a party has been fully heard on an issue during a nonjury trial and the court finds against the party on that issue, the court may enter judgment against the party on a claim or defense that, under the controlling law, can be maintained or defeated only with a favorable finding on that issue. The court may, however, decline to render any judgment until the close of the evidence. A judgment on partial findings must be supported by findings of fact and conclusions of law as required by Rule 52(a).

FED.R.BANKR. P. 2004

(a) Examination on motion.

On motion of any party in interest, the court may order the examination of any entity.

(b) Scope of examination.

The examination of an entity under this rule or of the debtor under § 343 of the Code may relate only to the acts, conduct, or property or to the liabilities and financial condition of the debtor, or to any matter which may affect the administration of the debtor's estate, or to the debtor's right to a discharge. In a family farmer's debt adjustment case under chapter 12, an individual's debt adjustment case under chapter 13, or a reorganization case under chapter 11 of the Code, other than for the reorganization of a railroad, the examination may also relate to the operation of any business and the desirability of its continuance, the source of any money or property acquired or to be acquired by the debtor for purposes of consummating a plan and the consideration given or offered therefor, and any other matter relevant to the case or to the formulation of a plan.

(c) Compelling attendance and production of documents.

The attendance of an entity for examination and for the production of documents, whether the examination is to be conducted within or without the district in which the case is pending, may be compelled as provided in Rule 9016 for the attendance of a witness at a hearing or trial. As an officer of the court, an attorney may issue and sign a subpoena on behalf of the court for the district in which the examination is to be held if the attorney is admitted to practice in that court or in the court in which the case is pending.

(d) Time and place of examination of debtor.

The court may for cause shown and on terms as it may impose order the debtor to be examined under this rule at any time or place it designates, whether within or without the district wherein the case is pending.

(e) Mileage

An entity other than a debtor shall not be required to attend as a witness unless lawful mileage and witness fee for one day's attendance shall be first tendered. If the debtor resides more than 100 miles from the place of examination when required to appear for an examination under this rule, the mileage allowed by law to a witness shall be tendered for any distance more than 100 miles from the debtor's residence at the date of the filing of the first petition commencing a case under the Code or the residence at the time the debtor is required to appear for the examination, whichever is the lesser.

FED.R.BANKR. P. 8013

On an appeal the district court or bankruptcy appellate panel may affirm, modify, or reverse a bankruptcy judge’s judgment, order, or decree or remand with instructions for further proceedings. Findings of fact, whether based on oral or documentary evidence, shall not be set aside unless clearly erroneous, and due regard shall be given to the opportunity of the bankruptcy court to judge the credibility of the witnesses.

Federal Bankruptcy Rule 8001(a)

(a) Appeal as of right; how taken

An appeal from a judgment, order, or decree of a bankruptcy judge to a district court or bankruptcy appellate panel as permitted by 28 U.S.C. § 158(a)(1) or (a)(2) shall be taken by filing a notice of appeal with the clerk within the time allowed by Rule 8002. An appellant's failure to take any step other than timely filing a notice of appeal does not affect the validity of the appeal, but is ground only for such action as the district court or bankruptcy appellate panel deems appropriate, which may include dismissal of the appeal. The notice of appeal shall (1) conform substantially to the appropriate Official Form, (2) contain the names of all parties to the judgment, order, or decree appealed from and the names, addresses, and telephone numbers of their respective attorneys, and (3) be accompanied by the prescribed fee. Each appellant shall file a sufficient number of copies of the notice of appeal to enable the clerk to comply promptly with Rule 8004.

INTRODUCTION

Stetler Cross Ministries voluntarily filed a petition for relief under chapter 11 of the Bankruptcy Code on August 3, 2009. Stetler engaged Mr. Frank Yates, Jr. to file that petition and to serve as bankruptcy counsel for the estate. But Stetler never received bankruptcy court approval to employ Mr. Yates, as required by 11 U.S.C. § 327(a).

Almost a year later, the bankruptcy court converted Stetler's chapter 11 case to one under chapter 7. The appointment of the chapter 7 trustee automatically terminated Stetler's status as the debtor-in-possession and so terminated Mr. Yates's de facto representation. Lamie v. U.S. Trustee, 540 U.S. 526, 532 (2004).

The bankruptcy court then ordered Mr. Yates to return the money he took from his retainer. That was because he (1) had never been employed under section 327(a) and (2) neither received, nor was he eligible to receive, court authorization to pay himself out of the funds of the estate, as required by 11 U.S.C. § 330(a). Mr. Yates filed a notice of appeal from that order, but did so in Stetler's name, rather than his own. This appeal followed.

STATEMENT OF APPELLATE JURISDICTION

This Court has jurisdiction over this appeal under 28 U.S.C. § 158(a)(1). The United States Bankruptcy Court for the Western District of Kentucky had jurisdiction over Stetler Cross Ministries, Inc.'s chapter 11 bankruptcy case under 28 U.S.C. §§ 157 and 1334. The bankruptcy court's final order requiring Mr. Yates to return $2,000 in attorney's fees was entered on July 7, 2010. Mr. Yates timely filed a motion to reconsider that order on July 19, 2010, which the bankruptcy court denied on October 1, 2010.

Mr. Yates timely filed a notice of appeal from both orders on October 15, 2010, under 28 U.S.C. § 158(c)(2) and Fed. R. Bankr. P. 8002(a). Mr. Yates's notice of appeal listed Stetler as the appellant. That was incorrect for two reasons. First, the order on appeal concerns only Mr. Yates's personal obligation to return the $2,000 he took for his attorney's fees. Second, Mr. Yates does not currently represent Stetler. Its chapter 11 bankruptcy case was converted to one under chapter 7, and Mr. Yates was not retained as chapter 7 counsel after the conversion. See Lamie v. United States, 540 U.S. 526, 532 (2004). Currently, only the chapter 7 trustee may represent Stetler. See 11 U.S.C. § 704 (listing the trustee's duties).

Mr. Yates should have listed himself as the appellant, rather than Stetler. But this error is not fatal to Mr. Yates's appeal. Under Fed. R. Bankr. P. 8001(a), "[a]n appellant's failure to take any step other than timely filing a notice of appeal does not affect the validity of the appeal, but is ground only for such action as the district court . . . deems appropriate." Fed. R. Bankr. P. 8001(a).

The Sixth Circuit has previously held that under Fed. R. Bankr. P. 8001(a), an appellant's failure to name correctly the parties to an appeal, in an otherwise timely filed notice of appeal, does not prevent the district court from hearing the appeal. French v. Phoenix Corp. (In re Phoenix Corp.), No. 95-6679, 121 F.3d 709, 1997 WL 415315 (6th Cir. July 22, 1997) (unreported) (stating that "mere technicalities should not stand in the way of consideration of a case on its merits") (citation omitted); accord Fadayiro v. Ameriquest Mortg. Co., 371 F.3d 920, 922 (7th Cir. 2004) (observing the importance of potential confusion when evaluating whether a defective notice of appeal divests an appellate court of jurisdiction under Fed. R. Bankr. P. 8001(a)); but see Groetken v. Davis (In re Davis), No. 00-4071, 35 F. App'x 826, 2002 WL 1044832 (10th Cir. 2002) (unpublished) (holding that the district court lacks jurisdiction over a party not specifically designated as an appellant in the notice of appeal under Fed. R. Bankr. P. 8001(a)).

Here, Mr. Yates timely filed his notice of appeal. He has a direct, financial interest in the appeal. There has been no ambiguity that — as the only person subject to the order on appeal — he is prosecuting the appeal in his own interest. Therefore, the government does not believe that this Court lacks jurisdiction to consider his appeal on the merits. Phoenix Corp., 1997 WL 415315 at *2.

STATEMENT OF THE ISSUE

Did the bankruptcy court abuse its discretion when it held that Mr. Yates must return the $2,000 in compensation he received for representing Stetler in its chapter 11 bankruptcy case without first obtaining authorization from the bankruptcy court?

STANDARD OF REVIEW

An order requiring a bankruptcy professional to return compensation is reviewed for abuse of discretion. United States v. Schilling (In re Big Rivers Elec. Corp.), 355 F.3d 415, 429 (6th Cir. 2004). Findings of fact are reviewed for clear error and legal conclusions are reviewed de novo. Id.

STATEMENT OF THE CASE

I. Statutory Framework

A. The Retention, Compensation, and Payment of Professionals in a Chapter 11 Bankruptcy Case

When a debtor commences a bankruptcy case, a separate legal entity known as the "estate" is created. 11 U.S.C. § 541(a). That estate contains all of the debtor's property, subject to exceptions not applicable here. Id. Under the Bankruptcy Code, all third parties that possess property of the estate must return it. 11 U.S.C. § 542(a).

When a debtor files a case to reorganize under chapter 11 of the Bankruptcy Code, the debtor becomes a "debtor-in-possession" of the estate. 11 U.S.C. § 1101. The debtor-in-possession maintains control over the estate's property, but also obtains the rights, obligations, and fiduciary duties of a trustee. 11 U.S.C. §§ 1106-08. This includes the ability to ask the bankruptcy court for permission to employ professionals, including attorneys, to assist the debtor-in-possession with the reorganization of the bankruptcy estate. 11 U.S.C. § 327.

Such court-authorized attorneys are subject to strict regulations governing their retention, compensation, and payment. First, under section 327(a), the bankruptcy court must authorize the debtor to employ the attorney. 11 U.S.C.

§ 327(a). Then, under section 330(a), an attorney employed under section 327(a) may request "reasonable compensation for actual, necessary services rendered." 11 U.S.C. § 330(a). Indeed, employment under section 327(a) is a necessary prerequisite for an attorney to receive any compensation in the case. Lamie v. U.S. Trustee, 540 U.S. 526, 538 (2004).

Furthermore, even after an attorney (1) is employed under section 327(a), (2) requests reasonable compensation under section 330(a), and then (3) receives a section 330(a) fee award from the bankruptcy court, payment is not self-executing. Rather, section 503(b)(2) provides an attorney only with a claim against the estate for administrative expenses. 11 U.S.C. § 503(b)(2). At that point, an attorney's claim may then be paid by a distribution from the estate, which must be made in accord with the Bankruptcy Code's system of priorities. 11 U.S.C. § 507(a)(2) (giving attorneys for the estate second priority in a distribution from the estate).

B. The United States Trustee's statutory duty to monitor bankruptcy professionals and object to improper fees under 28 U.S.C. §§ 581-589.

The United States Trustee is an official of the United States Department of Justice appointed by the Attorney General to supervise the administration of bankruptcy cases. 28 U.S.C. §§ 581-589. The United States Trustee has a statutory obligation to review applications for compensation under section 330(a) and to object to applications the United States Trustee considers to be inappropriate. 28 U.S.C. § 586(a)(3)(A). The United States Trustee is also required to review applications for employment under section 327(a) and, "whenever the United States Trustee deems it to be appropriate, fil[e] with the court comments with respect to the approval of such applications." 28 U.S.C. § 586(a)(3)(H).

Furthermore, "[t]he United States trustee may raise and may appear and be heard on any issue in any case or proceeding under this title but may not file a plan pursuant to section 1121(c) of this title." 11 U.S.C. § 307. Courts have repeatedly held that the United States Trustee has standing under section 307 to appear and be heard on any issue in any bankruptcy case, despite the lack of pecuniary interest in the outcome. See Morgenstern v. Revco D.S., Inc. (In re Revco D.S., Inc.), 898 F.2d 498, 500 (6th Cir. 1990); see also Adams v. Zarnel (In re Zarnel), 619 F.3d 156, 161 (2d Cir. 2010); Stanley v. McCormick (In re Donovan Corp.), 215 F.3d 929, 930 (9th Cir. 2000) ("The United States trustee may . . . intervene and appear at any level of the proceedings from the bankruptcy court on . . . as either a party or an amicus.").

II. Statement of the Facts

Mr. Yates, the appellant, acted as de facto counsel for the corporate debtor, Stetler Cross Ministries, while its case proceeded under chapter 11 of the Bankruptcy Code. Chapter 11 Voluntary Petition dated 08/03/2009, B.C. Dkt. No. 1 at 3.[1] After filing Stetler's petition for chapter 11 bankruptcy relief, Mr. Yates disclosed the existence of a $2,000 fee agreement pursuant to 11 U.S.C. § 329(a) and Fed. R. Bankr. P. 2016 on August 17, 2009. Disclosure of Fee of Attorney dated 08/17/2009, B.C. Dkt. No. 13.

Mr. Yates, however, did not file an application to be employed as Stetler's counsel under 11 U.S.C. § 327. Nor did he apparently intend to. At a hearing regarding the conversion of Stetler's case on April 29, 2010, the bankruptcy court asked Mr. Yates about his $2,000 fee agreement. Transcript dated 04/29/2010, B.C. Dkt. No. 88 at 7. Mr. Yates admitted that he paid himself out of this retainer without providing notice or obtaining authorization from the bankruptcy court. Id. at 8.

The bankruptcy court recalled how it had warned Mr. Yates "at the very beginning of this case, that it all had to be done right . . . But if you have pulled that [$2,000] out of your escrow account and applied that to the bills of your office then you are in violation of Chapter 11." Id. at 13. "Where is that fee? . . . Why hasn't he filed an application to be paid?" Id. at 14. The court instructed Mr. Yates to file something with respect to his fee agreement and how he utilized the retainer. Id. at 16.

[1] Stetler's chapter 11 bankruptcy case was subsequently converted to one under chapter 7 on May 19, 2010. Conversion Order dated 05/19/2010, B.C. Dkt. No. 41. The conversion is irrelevant to Mr. Yates's appeal because he only is seeking attorney's fees for representing Stetler while its case was proceeding under chapter 11.

Two weeks later, Stetler filed an application under section 327(a) to employ Mr. Yates as counsel. Application to Employ Frank Yates, Jr. as Attorney dated 05/13/2010, B.C. Dkt. No. 37. That application, which was filed 10 months after Stetler initiated its bankruptcy case, included a copy of Mr. Yates's legal services agreement. Id at Attach. No. 2 (Agreement for Legal Services).

That agreement was never approved by the bankruptcy court under section 327(a). Yet it was signed almost two weeks after the commencement of the case, on August 15, 2009. Id. It provided that Mr. Yates would receive, as compensation for "any legal services to be provided herein," a retainer of $2,000, and a billable rate of $150 per hour. Id. It also contained a clause stating that it "supersedes all prior agreements, arrangements and understanding relating to the subject matter hereof." Id.

III. Statement of the Proceedings Below

The United States Trustee moved the bankruptcy court for an order requiring Mr. Yates to return any fees he drew from his retainer without prior court authorization in violation of sections 327(a) and 330(a). Motion of the U.S. Trustee for Disgorgement of Attorney Fees dated 05/04/2010, B.C. Dkt. No. 32. In response, Mr. Yates argued that he was not required to comply with the Bankruptcy Code's rules governing attorney compensation because (1) he allegedly received the retainer pre-petition, and thus it was not property of the estate, and (2) the "mechanical application of the rule" should not be applied since he disclosed his fees, they were not a large amount of money, and he had not overbilled his client. Response to Motion of the U.S. Trustee for Disgorgement of Attorney Fees dated 06/03/2010, B.C. Dkt. No. 48 at 5-6. Mr. Yates also requested that the bankruptcy court authorize nunc pro tunc his employment under section 327(a) and fee request under section 330(a). Id. at 7.

The bankruptcy court agreed with the United States Trustee and on July 7, 2010, ordered Mr. Yates to return the fees that he took without prior court authorization under sections 327(a) and 330(a). Mem. and Order dated 07/07/2010, B.C. Dkt. No. 52. The court held that the Bankruptcy Code and Rules "strictly regulate the compensation of professionals" and regardless of how small the fee, "[f]ailure to follow these rules . . . cannot be overlooked by this Court." Id. at 2. It also held that Mr. Yates's disclosure statement did "not alleviate the need for counsel's employment to be approved and prior approval before drawing on any retainer." Id. at 3.

The court found that Mr. Yates had drawn on the retainer without court approval, based on Mr. Yates's admission at the earlier hearing, which was never contradicted by any later statements. Id. It also noted that even if Mr. Yates's conduct was "an inadvertent or negligent failure to disclose . . . the failure to seek Court approval by Debtor's counsel prior to accepting the fee and having his employment approved by the Court is serious enough to require disgorgement." Id.

Mr. Yates then moved the bankruptcy court to set aside its order. Motion to Set Aside Order dated 07/19/2010, B.C. Dkt. No. 53. The bankruptcy court took the motion under consideration and on October 1, 2010, denied Mr. Yates's motion to set aside the order. Mem. and Order dated 10/01/2010, B.C. Dkt. No. 77. The court ruled that Mr. Yates must return the money because he (1) took it from the bankruptcy estate without authorization under the Bankruptcy Code, (2) was not eligible for compensation under the Bankruptcy Code, and (3) failed to demonstrate that he deserved nunc pro tunc relief. Id. at 2-3.

On October 15, 2010, Mr. Yates timely filed a notice of appeal from both orders. Amended Notice of Appeal dated 10/15/2010, B.C. Dkt. No. 79.

SUMMARY OF THE ARGUMENT

In Lamie v. U.S. Trustee, 540 U.S. 526, 539 (2004), the Supreme Court held that employment under 11 U.S.C. § 327(a) is a necessary prerequisite for a debtor's attorney to receive a fee award under 11 U.S.C. § 330(a). And the only way for a debtor's attorney to be compensated for fees earned in a chapter 11 bankruptcy case is to obtain a fee award under section 330(a). Thus, Mr. Yates violated federal law when he took a $2,000 retainer provided by his client — a chapter 11 debtor at the time — because he had never been employed under section 327(a) and never obtained a fee award under section 330(a).

After the bankruptcy court discovered what Mr. Yates had done, it ordered him to return the money to his client. That order was appropriate for two reasons. First, Mr. Yates had no right to take money from the estate for his attorney's fees. Section 330(a) is the only way a debtor's attorney may obtain compensation for services performed in a chapter 11 bankruptcy case. Because Mr. Yates had not been employed under section 327(a) and had never received a fee award under section 330(a), he was prohibited from receiving that compensation. Furthermore, because his failure to obtain bankruptcy court authorization for his employment and fee payment was due to mere negligence, he cannot show the existence of any extraordinary circumstances that would warrant nunc pro tunc relief.

Second, Mr. Yates had an independent statutory duty to return the $2,000 retainer because it was property of the estate. The legal services agreement under which Mr. Yates received the retainer was entered into after Stetler's bankruptcy case had been commenced and was for ongoing representation in Stetler's bankruptcy case. That means Mr. Yates had no pre-petition interest in the money when Stetler filed for bankruptcy. Therefore, it was property of the estate under 11 U.S.C. § 541(a) and subject to turnover under 11 U.S.C. § 542(a).

On appeal, Mr. Yates argues that he should be allowed to keep the money because it was provided as a general retainer for pre-petition services under Kentucky law. But this argument is without merit because there is no evidence in the record or legal authority to support Mr. Yates's argument. In fact, under the terms of his legal services agreement, it was impossible for him to have received such an interest as a matter of Kentucky law.

In addition, Mr. Yates's argument must fail because Kentucky law cannot provide Mr. Yates with compensation prohibited by the Bankruptcy Code. His proposed application of Kentucky law would undermine the "intended purpose and natural effect" of the Bankruptcy Code's comprehensive scheme for regulating attorney's fees in bankruptcy cases. Should this Court find that a conflict of law exists, Kentucky law would then be preempted under the Supremacy and Bankruptcy Clauses of the Constitution.

Accordingly, the bankruptcy court did not abuse its discretion when it required Mr. Yates to return the $2,000 retainer and its order should be affirmed.

ARGUMENT

I. The bankruptcy court correctly ordered Mr. Yates to return the $2,000 he took for his attorney's fees because it violated federal law.

A. Mr. Yates was ineligible to receive any compensation from the bankruptcy estate because he was not employed under section 327(a) and did not receive a fee award under section 330(a).

Section 330(a) does not authorize compensation to a debtor's attorney from estate funds unless that attorney's employment has been approved under section 327(a). Lamie v. U.S. Trustee, 540 U.S. 526, 538 (2004). Under Sixth Circuit law, "section 330 establishes the exclusive means of allowing a claim for professional fees in a bankruptcy proceeding." Dery v. Cumberland Cas. & Sur. Co. (In re 5900 Assoc., Inc.), 468 F.3d 326, 328 (6th Cir. 2006). It "is the sole mechanism by which fees may be enforced" in a bankruptcy case. Id. at 330.

Without a fee award under section 330(a), an attorney has no right to receive payment from a chapter 11 debtor. "Court approval under section 330(a) is what creates the liability, not performance of the services." Id. at 331 (citation omitted). "An attorney who extracts payments from debtors other than pursuant to proper disclosure, or to allowance under section 330, stands in violation of the provisions of the Bankruptcy Code, and may be properly stripped of all fees." Id. (citation omitted). Other circuits agree. See In re Milwaukee Engraving Co., 219 F.3d 635, 636 (7th Cir. 2000) (holding that attorneys may not receive compensation under the Bankruptcy Code when they have not been employed under section 327(a)); accord In re Albrecht, 233 F.3d 1258, 1260 (10th Cir. 2000); Cushman & Wakefield of Conn., Inc. v. Keren Ltd. P'ship (In re Keren Ltd. P'ship), 189 F.3d 86, 88 (2d Cir. 1999); F/S Airlease II, Inc. v. Simon (In re F/S Airlease II, Inc.), 844 F.2d 99, 109 (3d Cir.1988).

So too here. Mr. Yates took $2,000 as compensation pursuant to a post-petition legal services agreement with Stetler, which was a chapter 11 debtor at the time. Application to Employ Frank Yates, Jr. as Attorney dated 05/13/2010, B.C. Dkt. No. 37 at Attach. No. 2 (Agreement for Legal Services). That agreement, signed 12 days after Stetler filed its petition for bankruptcy relief, gave Mr. Yates a $2,000 retainer for "any legal services to be provided herein," billed at $150 per hour. Id. The agreement also contained a clause stating that it "supersedes all prior agreements, arrangements and understanding relating to the subject matter hereof." Id.

Stetler, however, was the "debtor-in-possession" of the estate under the Bankruptcy Code at the time the agreement was signed. See 11 U.S.C. § 1101. That means Mr. Yates's contract is with Stetler's bankruptcy estate, for services to be performed in the course of Stetler's bankruptcy case, with payment from the property of that bankruptcy estate. See 11 U.S.C. §§ 327(a), 541, 1106(a)(3).

Consequently, Mr. Yates was statutorily barred from taking that $2,000 for his attorney's fees. Without being employed under section 327(a), Mr. Yates could not receive a compensation award under section 330(a). Lamie, 540 U.S. at 538. Without a compensation award under section 330(a), Mr. Yates had no legal right to receive any fees for any services performed under the legal services agreement in connection with the bankruptcy case. 5900 Assoc., 468 F.3d at 330.

The same is still true even if Mr. Yates had been employed under section 327(a), or whether his failure to seek bankruptcy court authorization for his employment and fees was due to mere negligence. Section 330(a) is the sole method for a debtor's attorney to receive compensation for fees earned during a chapter 11 bankruptcy case. Id. Mr. Yates did not have authorization under section 330(a) prior to taking the fees for himself. Because he took that compensation in violation of these provisions of the Bankruptcy Code, "his fees are unenforceable" and he "may be properly stripped of all fees." Id. at 331.

B. Mr. Yates cannot show that the bankruptcy court abused its discretion by refusing to grant him nunc pro tunc relief.

The Sixth Circuit has recognized that a bankruptcy court may enter relief nunc pro tunc in some circumstances, but it has not addressed what standard should be used in deciding whether an application for employment under section 327(a) should be approved nunc pro tunc. Cf. In re Mitan, 573 F.3d 237, 245-46 (6th Cir. 2009) (holding that a bankruptcy court "did not err by entering a nunc pro tunc order" retroactively converting a case from chapter 11 to chapter 7 due to the presence of "extraordinary circumstances"). Lower courts within the Sixth Circuit appear to agree that — with some variation in how that test is articulated — a party requesting nunc pro tunc relief under section 327(a) must demonstrate "extraordinary circumstances." See,e.g., Farinash v. Vergos (In re Aultman Enter.), 264 B.R. 485, 489 (E.D. Tenn. 2001) (reviewing the case law among Sixth Circuit jurisdictions and adopting the nine-factor test of In re Twinton Prop. P'ship, 27 B.R. 817, 819-20 (Bankr. M.D. Tenn. 1983)).

Other circuits also require extraordinary circumstances. F/S Airlease II, 844 F.2d at 109 (Third Circuit); accord Albrecht, 233 F.3d at 1260 (Tenth Circuit); Keren Ltd. P'ship, 189 F.3d at 88 (Second Circuit); Atkins v. Wain, Samuel & Co. (In re Atkins), 69 F.3d 970, 974 (9th Cir. 1995) (adopting the Twinton test for the Ninth Circuit); but see In re Singson, 41 F.3d 316, 319 (7th Cir. 1994) (adopting "excusable neglect" standard).

Generally, this test requires that a section 327(a) applicant affirmatively demonstrate compelling reasons that justify nunc pro tunc approval of the employment application See Aultman, 264 B.R. at 493 (comparing the circuit court authority); see also Twinton, 27 B.R. at 819 (requiring clear and convincing evidence). Simple negligence or mere oversight can never constitute a satisfactory explanation for failure to comply with section 327(a). Aultman, 264 B.R. at 493.

On appeal, as a matter of law or as a matter of fact, Mr. Yates cannot show that the bankruptcy court abused its discretion by refusing to grant him nunc pro tunc relief. First, this Court need not consider this argument because it has been waived. An appellate court may summarily affirm a lower court's decision when a litigant fails to include supporting argument. Inge v. Rock Fin. Group, 388 F.3d 930, 937 (6th Cir. 2004); see, e.g., Garrett v. Selby Connor Maddux & Janer, 425 F.3d 836, 841 (10th Cir. 2005) (stating that conclusory allegations with no citations to the record or supporting legal authority is not considered adequate briefing and results in waiver). This Court "cannot fill the void by crafting arguments" for the appellant. Garrett, 425 F.3d at 841.

Here, although Mr. Yates has observed that nunc pro tunc relief is available "in proper circumstances" and "upon proper showing," he has never articulated what in the record supports his conclusion that he deserves nunc pro tunc relief. See Appellant's Br. at 18 (concluding, without providing explanation, that his request for employment and fees should be approved nunc pro tunc). Therefore, his argument has been waived. Inge, 388 F.3d at 937.

Second, there is nothing in the record to support Mr. Yates's request for nunc pro tunc relief. He never explained to the bankruptcy court why he failed to request court authorization for his employment under section 327(a). See Mem. and Order dated 07/07/2010, B.C. Dkt. No. 52 at 2. He never explained why he failed to request compensation under section 330(a), or an interim compensation award under section 331 to draw against his retainer. See id. And he never submitted the accounting of his time and expenses that the bankruptcy court ordered. Compare Transcript dated 04/29/2010, B.C. Dkt. No. 88 at 16 (requesting Mr. Yates "file something" explaining how he "utilized that retainer") with Response to Motion of the U.S. Trustee for Disgorgement of Attorney Fees dated 06/03/2010, B.C. Dkt. No. 48 at 5-6 (alleging that he did not "overbill" his client, but failing to provide any evidence in support).

Despite having an opportunity to present argument and facts to support his request for the bankruptcy court to approve his employment and fees nunc pro tunc, Mr. Yates never offered anything except for a conclusory statement that it should be given. Id. at 7. Therefore, the bankruptcy court did not abuse its discretion by denying that request.

II. Alternatively, Mr. Yates must return the payment under 11 U.S.C. § 542(a) because the money is property of the estate under 11 U.S.C. § 541(a).

The bankruptcy court was also correct to order Mr. Yates to return the $2,000 he took for his attorney's fees because that money was property of the estate.

A. Money held by an attorney as a retainer still constitutes property of the estate and is subject to turnover.

Section 541(a) defines the property of the estate. Under that section, the commencement of a case "creates an estate" and "all" of the debtor's property — subject to narrow exceptions not relevant here — becomes part of that estate. § 541(a). This property remains "subject to the same restrictions that existed at the time the debtor filed the petition." Demczyk v. Mut. Life Ins. Co. of New York (In re Graham Square, Inc.), 126 F.3d 823, 831 (6th Cir. 1997). Section 541(a) does not define property, but instead leaves that determination to state law. Butner v. United States, 440 U.S. 48, 55 (1979).

Under Section 542(a), individuals in possession of property of the estate "shall deliver" that property to the estate and account for its value. § 542(a). This equally applies to property held by a debtor's attorney in the form of an unearned retainer. Indian Motocycle Assoc. III Ltd. P'ship v. Mass. Housing Fin. Agency, 66 F.3d 1246, 1254-55 (1st Cir. 1995).

The record shows that Mr. Yates entered into a post-petition legal services agreement to represent Stetler in the course of its bankruptcy case. Application to Employ Frank Yates, Jr. as Attorney dated 05/13/2010, B.C. Dkt. No. 37 at Attach. No. 2 (Agreement for Legal Services). Pursuant to that agreement, the retainer was "to be paid" for "legal services to be provided herein," billed at the rate of $150 per hour. Id. Those services were to "provide legal counseling and services in relationship to her Business Bankruptcy and to perform all necessary Legal Services required to pursue the aforesaid Bankruptcy." Id.

Accordingly, Mr. Yates's legal right to compensation for those post-petition, bankruptcy-related services vested only if that employment agreement was authorized under section 327(a) and those fees were approved under section 330. 5900 Assoc., 468 F.3d at 331 ("Court approval under section 330(a) is what creates the liability, not performance of the services."). Neither occurred. Thus, he had no right to the money he took from the estate. Graham Square, 126 F.3d at 831. As such, the bankruptcy court was also justified in requiring Mr. Yates to return the money he took for his attorney's fees under section 542(a). Indian Motocycle, 66 F.3d at 1254-55.

B. Lamie does not allow chapter 11 attorneys to avoid the requirements of sections 327(a) and 330(a) by taking a pre-petition retainer for post-petition services.

Mr. Yates states that he received his retainer pre-petition and suggests that dicta in Lamie indicates that a pre-petition retainer is not property of the estate. Appellant's Br. at 13 (citing Lamie, 540 U.S. at 537-38). This, he believes, allowed him to take the money for his post-petition services without having to obtain bankruptcy court approval under section 327(a) and 330(a). Id. Even assuming that Mr. Yates received the retainer pre-petition — and there is no evidence of that in the record — Lamie would still not support Mr. Yates's position.

In Lamie, the Supreme Court held that when a chapter 11 bankruptcy case is converted to one under chapter 7, counsel previously employed by the chapter 11 debtor-in-possession must be separately employed by the chapter 7 trustee under section 327(a) and obtain a section 330(a) fee award to receive compensation for post-conversion services to the estate. Lamie, 540 U.S. at 538. In the dicta that Mr. Yates cites, the Lamie Court states that section 330(a) does not prevent an individual chapter 7 debtor from paying, pre-petition, a consumer bankruptcy attorney an advance fee for pre-petition work to prepare a chapter 7 bankruptcy filing. Id. at 537-38.

That is not the case here. Mr. Yates took money for post-petition work from the debtor in violation of sections 327(a) and 330(a), under Sixth Circuit and Supreme Court law. Furthermore, it makes no sense to extend Lamie's generalized approval of pre-petition payments for pre-petition services in chapter 7 cases to validate pre-petition retainers for post-petition services outside of the chapter 7 context. After all, chapter 7 cases are fundamentally different from chapter 11 cases.

This is because in a chapter 7 case the vast majority of the work is completed before the petition is filed and the debtor's non-exempt assets become part of the estate under section 541. See Brief of Resp't in Lamie v. U.S. Trustee, 2003 WL 21839367 at 39-40. As the Court observed in Lamie, chapter 7 attorney's fees are paid in advance "to ensure that the filing is in order." Id. at 538. The post-petition services paid through the pre-petition flat fee are typically limited because individual chapter 7 debtors can pay for post-petition legal services out of their current salary, as the property of the estate does not include post-petition income earned by individual debtors for services. 11 U.S.C. § 541(a)(6).

In contrast, under chapter 11, the debtor-in-possession's administration of the estate is co-extensive with the reorganization efforts. United States v. Schilling (In re Big Rivers Elec. Corp.), 355 F.3d 415, 431 (6th Cir. 2004). That requires the debtor-in-possession to engage in substantial post-petition activities vital to the administration of the estate, such as recovering property of the estate, avoiding transactions, and proposing and confirming a reorganization plan that includes post-petition assets for distribution to creditors. 11 U.S.C. §§ 1106-1108, 1122-1129.

The significance of these responsibilities gives rise to the "the unbending standards of fiduciary duty that the law and society long have come to expect of trustees in general . . . and bankruptcy trustees in particular," which section 327(a)'s requirements seek to ensure. Big Rivers, 355 F.3d at 431. Not one word of Lamie's dicta impliedly approves of a way for chapter 11 attorneys to circumvent such an important rule, particularly because at the very same time the Court held that an attorney must be employed under section 327(a) to receive compensation from the estate. Lamie, 540 U.S. at 539.

III. Mr. Yates's reliance on Kentucky law is without merit.

Mr. Yates asserts that the $2,000 he took for his services in Stetler's chapter 11 bankruptcy case was his property because it was taken from a pre-petition "general" retainer, i.e., a flat fee, under Kentucky law. Appellant's Br. at 13-14. Therefore, he argues the money was not property of the estate and was not subject to Bankruptcy Code's regulations. Id.

This argument is without merit, as nothing in the record supports Mr. Yates's position that he took the money pre-petition or received a pre-petition property right in that money. But even if this Court decides that Kentucky law did provide Mr. Yates with a right to compensation, he still must return the money. That is because Kentucky law would conflict with the Bankruptcy Code's comprehensive scheme for regulating attorney's fees in bankruptcy cases. In such circumstances, state law must give way to federal law under the Supremacy and Bankruptcy Clauses of the Constitution.

A. Mr. Yates did not have a property right in the retainer as a matter of law or fact.

Under Kentucky law, a "fee may be designated as a non-refundable retainer." Ky. Sup. Ct. R. 3.130(1.5)(f). "A non-refundable retainer fee agreement shall be in writing." Id. And to be valid, the non-refundable nature of the fee agreement must be in a writing signed by the client. Ky. Bar Ass'n, Ethics Opinion KBA E-380 (1995), available at http://www.kybar.org/30.

Kentucky law presumes that a retainer provides a security interest for fees to be earned in the future. The default expectation "is that the lawyer will perform the particular services requested and draw on the prepaid fees as services are rendered and then considered earned according to . . . the lawyer's hourly rate." Id.

A lawyer may designate an amount of a client's written fee payment as a non-refundable retainer "to make it clear to the client that a portion of the fee is earned at the time of payment." Id. This may occur when there has been initial work and responsibility in the process of accepting the matter, or when it is necessary to secure the future services of the lawyer. Id. But "[i]f a lawyer obtains an advance fee payment, and the arrangement is not a valid non-refundable retainer agreement," the funds must be held in the lawyer's trust account and treated like a traditional security retainer. Id.

Here, Mr. Yates entered into a post-petition agreement for legal services with Stetler. See Application to Employ Frank Yates, Jr. as Attorney dated 05/13/2010, B.C. Dkt. No. 37 at Attach. No. 2 (Agreement for Legal Services).

The terms of that agreement state that the $2,000 retainer was "to be paid" for "legal services to be provided herein," billed at the rate of $150 per hour. Id. Those services were to "provide legal counseling and services in relationship to her Business Bankruptcy and to perform all necessary Legal Services required to pursue the aforesaid Bankruptcy." Id.

The legal services agreement does not state that any portion of the payment was non-refundable. It does not state that any portion of the payment was for pre-petition or other services not listed under the terms of the contract. Instead, it states that Stetler would provide a $2,000 retainer and that Mr. Yates would bill for his services at $150 per hour. And although Mr. Yates argues differently, he does not show any evidence in the record that would support a different reading of the facts or explain how the legal services agreement complies with Kentucky law. Compare Transcript dated 04/29/2010, B.C. Dkt. No. 88 at 16 (requesting Mr. Yates "file something" explaining how he "utilized that retainer") with Response to Motion of the U.S. Trustee for Disgorgement of Attorney Fees dated 06/03/2010, B.C. Dkt. No. 48 (failing to provide such an explanation).

Thus, even assuming Mr. Yates took the $2,000 payment pre-petition, which is a proposition the evidence in the record contradicts, it was still impossible for Mr. Yates receive a pre-petition property interest in the fees he took from Stetler. His post-petition legal services agreement did not conform to SCR 3.130(1.5)(f) and therefore could not validly convey a non-refundable retainer. Ethics Opinion KBA E-380. As a result, Mr. Yates received only a security retainer. Id.

Security retainers, like this one, remain the client's property "until applied by counsel in payment of legal services actually performed" and become property of the estate on the date the petition for bankruptcy relief is filed. Indian Motocycle, 66 F.3d at 1254-55. As such, Mr. Yates cannot support his claim that the bankruptcy court erroneously ordered him to return the $2,000 he took because it was allegedly his property.

B. The Bankruptcy Code comprehensively governs the compensation of bankruptcy professionals and preempts state law.

Additionally, Mr. Yates may not rely on Kentucky law as a basis for taking the $2,000 retainer. The Supremacy and Bankruptcy clauses prohibit him from utilizing Kentucky law in a manner inconsistent with the Bankruptcy Code.

Federal law is the "supreme law of the land." U.S. Const. art. VI, § 2. Under the Supremacy Clause, federal law preempts inconsistent state law when Congress enacts a federal statute within the realm of its constitutional authority. Barnett Bank of Marion County, N.A. v. Nelson, 517 U.S. 25, 30 (1996).

When explicit preemption language does not appear in a statute, inconsistent state law must yield to federal law in at least two circumstances. Crosby v. Nat'l Foreign Trade Council, 530 U.S. 363, 372 (2000). The first circumstance is field preemption. When "congress intends federal law to occupy the field, state law in that area is preempted." Id. (citations omitted). The second circumstance is conflict preemption. That exists (1) when it is impossible to comply with both state and federal law, or (2) when state law stands as an obstacle to "the full purposes and objectives of Congress." Id. at 373. Whether state law is a sufficient obstacle is determined by examining the entirety of the federal statutory scheme and identifying its purpose and intended effects. Id.

Both of these tests are met in the instance of bankruptcy law. Under the Bankruptcy Clause, Congress has the power to establish "uniform laws on the subject of bankruptcies throughout the United States." U.S. Const. art. I, § 8, cl. 4. Congress has exercised that power by enacting the Bankruptcy Code. 11 U.S.C. § 101, et seq.

There is no doubt that the Bankruptcy Code is the exclusive law governing bankruptcy proceedings. Pertuso v. Ford Motor Credit Co., 233 F.3d 417, 425 (6th Cir. 2000). "The pervasive nature of Congress's bankruptcy regulation can be seen just by glancing at the Code." Id. The Bankruptcy Code occupies a full title of the United States Code and provides a comprehensive system of rights and responsibilities, its own set of procedures under the Federal Rules of Bankruptcy Procedure, and a "complex administrative machinery that includes a special system of federal courts and United States Trustees." Sherwood Partners, Inc. v. Lycos, Inc., 394 F.3d 1198, 1201 (9th Cir. 2005). Although bankruptcy law may reference state law at many points, it does not "permit the superimposition of state remedies on the many activities that might be undertaken in the management of the bankruptcy process." Pertuso, 233 F.3d at 425 (citation omitted).

C. Mr. Yates's attempt to obtain compensation under Kentucky law improperly circumvents the Bankruptcy Code's statutory framework governing professional compensation.

Mr. Yates may not rely on Kentucky law to justify retaining the fees he took for representing Stetler in its chapter 11 bankruptcy case. That is because "[f]ees in a bankruptcy proceeding are governed by federal, not state, law." Dery v. Cumberland Cas. & Sur. Co. (In re 5900 Assoc., Inc.), 468 F.3d 326, 329 (6th Cir. 2006). The professional compensation provisions of the Bankruptcy Code — 11 U.S.C. §§ 327-331, 503, 507 — collectively "reveal a clear, but implicit, preemptive intent," and "create a scheme of federal regulation so pervasive as to make reasonable the inference that Congress left no room for the States to supplement it." Crosby, 530 U.S. at 372-73 (citations omitted).

The Supreme Court has long held that the federal statutory scheme governing the compensation of bankruptcy professionals in bankruptcy cases is a pervasive scheme of regulation that provides centralized control over compensating professionals, and therefore preempts inconsistent state laws. Brown v. Gerdes, 321 U.S. 178, 183 (1944) (holding, under the Bankruptcy Act of 1898, that federal law governs compensation for attorneys representing the estate). The same is true today under the modern Bankruptcy Code. 5900 Assoc., 468 F.3d at 328. Federal law "establishes the exclusive means of allowing a claim for professional fees in a bankruptcy proceeding." Id.

In the Bankruptcy Code, Congress has enacted a comprehensive set of rules providing a cradle-to-grave scheme for retaining, compensating, and paying attorneys employed by the estate. It regulates (1) when attorneys may be employed by the estate, § 327(a); (2) the amount such attorneys may be compensated, §§ 328-330; (3) how they may receive that compensation from the estate, §§ 330-331, 503(b)(2); and (4) in what priority they may be paid. § 507(a)(1). This even includes oversight of all compensation, including for non-bankruptcy matters, received up to a year before the commencement of the bankruptcy case. § 329. The Bankruptcy Code requires courts to review those transactions, and may order the return of unreasonable fees. Id.

Significantly, these provisions are interdependent. Section 327(a) authorizes the estate to retain professionals, including attorneys, subject to bankruptcy court approval. § 327(a). This ensures that such professionals (1) do not have an adverse interest in the estate and (2) are disinterested persons, as defined under the Bankruptcy Code. Id. Strict enforcement of this provision is essential to ensuring fair and equitable bankruptcy proceedings. See Big Rivers, 355 F.3d at 429 (reviewing the history and significance of the fiduciary obligations imposed upon bankruptcy professionals).

In turn, sections 328 and 329 limit compensation to attorneys employed under section 327(a). Once authorized under section 327(a), the estate may employ attorneys on "reasonable terms and conditions." § 328. And section 329 requires the court to review compensation for pre-petition services "rendered in contemplation of or in connection with" the bankruptcy case, and allows the court to return any compensation received that "exceeds the reasonable value of any such services." § 329.

Sections 330(a) and 331 then allow a court to award compensation based on such services. Under section 330(a), a court may then award fees to a debtor's attorney, but only if the attorney has been employed under section 327(a). § 330(a)(1); see Lamie v. U.S. Trustee, 540 U.S. 526, 538 ("[W]e hold that section 330(a)(1) does not authorize compensation awards to debtors' attorneys from estate funds, unless they are employed as authorized by section 327."). Furthermore, a court may award "compensation that is less than the amount of compensation that is requested" by the attorney, § 330(a)(2), or grant an attorney the right to receive interim compensation throughout the pendency of the bankruptcy case. § 331.

Once a fee has been awarded, an attorney is not given a self-executing judgment in the amount approved by the bankruptcy court. Under section 503(b)(2), a fee award under section 330(a) only provides an attorney with a claim against the estate for administrative expenses. § 503(b)(2). At that point, an attorney's claim may then be paid from a distribution from the estate, which must be made in accord with the Bankruptcy Code's system of priorities. § 507(a)(2) (giving attorneys for the estate second priority in a distribution from the estate).

Mr. Yates may not circumvent this comprehensive process. The Bankruptcy Code exclusively governs attorney compensation in bankruptcy cases. And it does not allow Mr. Yates to retain the $2,000 he took for his bankruptcy fees. Any Kentucky law, or use thereof, allowing for the contrary is preempted because it would undermine the "intended purpose and natural effect" of the Bankruptcy Code's comprehensive regulatory scheme. Crosby, 530 U.S. at 373; see 5900

Assoc., 468 F.3d at 331 (holding that bankruptcy fees are not enforceable under state law because it is court approval under section 330(a) that creates the attorney's right to payment, not performance of the services); see also Pertuso, 233 F.3d at 425 (holding that state law cannot provide remedies for activities already governed by the Bankruptcy Code).

CONCLUSION

For these reasons, the United States Trustee respectfully asks this Court to affirm the order entered below.

STATEMENT OF RELATED CASES

There are no prior or related appeals.

STATEMENT OF JURISDICTION

The final order initially appealed from was entered by the Bankruptcy Court in a core proceeding that arose under title 11. The Bankruptcy Court had jurisdiction under 28 U.S.C. §§ 1334 and 157(a) and (b)(2)(J) over that proceeding. The Standiferds timely appealed the order to the United States Bankruptcy Appellate Panel of the Tenth Circuit on December 24, 2008 and the United States Trustee elected to have the appeal heard by the United States District Court for the District of New Mexico. The District Court had appellate jurisdiction over the Bankruptcy Court's final order under 28 U.S.C. § 158(a)(1). The District Court entered a final order on September 4, 2009 affirming the Bankruptcy Court's order. The Standiferds timely filed this appeal from the District Court's order on October 1, 2009. This Court has jurisdiction over this appeal under 28 U.S.C. §§ 158(d)(1) and 1291.

STATEMENT OF THE ISSUES PRESENTED

1. Whether the Bankruptcy Court erred by denying a discharge under 11 U.S.C. § 727(a)(6)(A) to debtors who willfully refused to obey the confirmation order issued by the court in the Chapter 13 portion of their bankruptcy case.

This issue was raised and decided in the Bankruptcy Court's Opinion at 8-19. Aplts. App. at 42-53.

2. Whether the Bankruptcy Court erred in denying a discharge under section 727(a)(2)(B) to debtors who fraudulently concealed over $100,000 in business profits with the intent to hinder their creditors during the Chapter 13 portion of their bankruptcy case.[1]

This issue was raised and decided in the Bankruptcy Court's Opinion at 19-22. Aplt. App. at 53-56.

STATEMENT OF THE CASE

This is an appeal from a final order of the United States District Court for the District of New Mexico ("District Court"), affirming a final order entered by the United States Bankruptcy Court for the District of New Mexico ("Bankruptcy Court"), denying the debtors, Ronald Hugh Standiferd and Betty Ann Standiferd, a discharge of their debts in a bankruptcy case that they initially filed under Chapter 13 of the Bankruptcy Code, but voluntarily converted over five years later to

[1] The Standiferds raise two additional issues on appeal concerning dicta in the Bankruptcy Court's opinion that the Standiferds' conduct would have justified dismissal of their case for cause under 11 U.S.C. § 707(a). The District Court did not consider those issues on appeal because the Bankruptcy Court did not dismiss their case under that section. Aplt. App. at 67. For the same reason, the United States Trustee will not address those issues in this brief.

Chapter 7. After the conversion, the United States Trustee objected to the discharge of the Standiferds' debts, alleging that the Standiferds had concealed property during the bankruptcy case with the intent to hinder creditors, refused to obey a lawful order of the Bankruptcy Court, failed to explain satisfactorily a loss of assets, and knowingly and fraudulently made a false oath while their bankruptcy case was pending. See 11 U.S. C. § 727(a). The Bankruptcy Court denied the discharge on two of the independent grounds advanced by the United States Trustee, finding that the Standiferds had fraudulently concealed property from their creditors within the meaning of section 727(a)(2)(B) and had intentionally refused to obey a court order within the meaning of section 727(a)(6)(A).

The District Court affirmed the judgment of the Bankruptcy Court on appeal on both grounds and the Standiferds appealed the decision to this Court.

STATEMENT OF APPROPRIATE STANDARD OF APPELLATE REVIEW

A bankruptcy court's findings of fact are reviewed for clear error and its conclusions of law are reviewed de novo. Gullickson v. Brown (In re Brown), 108 F.3d 1290, 1292 (10th Cir. 1997). A finding of fact is clearly erroneous when the appellate court is left with the definite and firm conviction that the lower court has made a mistake. United States v. U.S. Gypsum Co., 333 U.S. 364, 395 (1948). Mixed questions consisting of legal conclusions drawn from the facts are reviewed de novo. In re Brown, 108 F.3d at 1292. In addition, this Court must construe the Bankruptcy Code liberally in favor of the debtor. Id.

The Standiferds do not contest any of the Bankruptcy Court's findings of fact on appeal. The first issue involves the Bankruptcy Court's interpretation of 11 U.S.C. § 727(a)(6)(A), which is reviewed de novo. The second issue involves the Bankruptcy Court's interpretation of 11 U.S.C. §§ 727(a)(2)(B) and is also subject to de novo review.

STATUTORY FRAMEWORK[2]

Under Chapter 7, "a debtor [typically] receives an immediate unconditional discharge of personal liability for certain debts in exchange for relinquishing his or her nonexempt assets to a bankruptcy trustee for liquidation and discharge to creditors." H.R. Rep. 109-31(I) at 10 (2005), reprinted in 2005 U.S.C.C.A.N. 88,

[2] The Bankruptcy Abuse Prevention and Consumer Protection Act of 2005, Pub. L. 109-8, 119 Stat. 23 (codified in scattered sections of title 11) ("BAPCPA") significantly amended many provisions of the Bankruptcy Code. Because this case was filed prior to the October 17, 2005 effective date of the BAPCPA, all references and citations herein are to the pre-BAPCPA version of title 11 unless otherwise indicated.

98; see 11 U.S.C. §§ 701-727.[3] However, the Chapter 7 trustee, a creditor, or the United States Trustee[4] may object to the granting of a discharge on the basis of any of the grounds set forth in 11 U.S.C. § 727(a). 11 U.S.C. § 727(c)(1). Specifically, in Chapter 7, a court may deny a discharge to a debtor if the debtor refuses to obey a court order in the bankruptcy case or if the debtor transfers or conceals property to hinder his creditors. 11 U.S.C. §§ 727(a)(6)(A), 727(a)(2). A discharge under section 727(a) releases the debtor from liability for debts that arose before the case was filed, with limited exceptions. See 11 U.S.C. § 727(b). If the case was converted from Chapter 13, the debtor is discharged from all debts that arose prior to the time of conversion, with limited exceptions. See id.; 11 U.S.C. § 348(d).

While a bankruptcy case may begin in one chapter, it may not necessarily remain there. The Bankruptcy Code provides for conversions, both voluntary and involuntary between various chapters. See, e.g., 11 U.S.C. § 1307 (conversion from Chapter 13 to Chapter 7, 11 or 12); § 1112 (conversion from Chapter 11 to

[3] The Bankruptcy Code is divided into various chapters. All cases are filed under Chapter 7, 9, 11, 12 or 13, which are the operative chapters. Provisions set forth in Chapter 7 of the Code apply in Chapter 7 cases. See 11 U.S.C. § 103(b).

[4] The United States Trustee Program is a unit of the Department of Justice charged by Congress to, among other things, appoint trustees in Chapter 7 and Chapter 13 cases, and supervise the administration of Chapter 7 and Chapter 13 cases. See 28 U.S.C. § 586.

Chapter 7, 12 or 13). A debtor proceeding under Chapter 13 has the right to convert his case to Chapter 7 at any time.[5] 11 U.S.C. § 1307(a).

The conversion of a case from one chapter to another does not affect the date of the filing of the petition or the commencement of the case or the order for relief (11 U.S.C. § 348(a)), but it may change the composition of the bankruptcy estate. The estate of a debtor proceeding under Chapter 13 includes all property that the debtor has an interest in when the case is filed plus earnings and other property acquired by the debtor during the Chapter 13 case. 11 U.S.C. §§ 541, 1306(a). When a debtor's case is converted from Chapter 13 to Chapter 7, the Chapter 7 bankruptcy estate includes all of the debtor's interest in property as of the time the Chapter 13 petition was filed that the debtor still has at the time of conversion, but usually does not include property that the debtor acquired during the Chapter 13 proceeding. 11 U.S.C. § 348(f)(1)(A). If the debtor is found to have converted his case in bad faith, however, the property of the estate in the converted case includes all of the debtor's property at the time of conversion, including property and earnings that the debtor acquired while in Chapter 13. 11 U.S.C. § 348(f)(2).

[5] The debtor converts his case by filing a notice with the court. Fed. R. Bankr. P. 1017(f)(3).

STATEMENT OF FACTS

The Standiferds filed a voluntary petition under Chapter 13 of the Bankruptcy Code on December 28, 2000.[6] At the time, the Standiferds listed a total of $229,217.93 in unsecured debt on their bankruptcy schedules. Aplee Supp. App. at 13-19.

The Standiferds filed a plan for repaying their debts and subsequently amended their proposed plan. The Standiferds' filed their First Amended Plan ("Plan") on February 8, 2001. Aplee Add. at 1-7. The Plan proposed to pay 100% of the unsecured creditors' claims. Id. at 5. The Plan provided that the Standiferds would pay $470 per month from their earnings for a minimum of thirty-six months to their unsecured creditors. Id. at 1-2. It also provided that they would supplement the fixed monthly payments with variable amounts consisting of any tax refunds and proceeds from receivables to make up the shortfall of over $200,000 between the unsecured creditors' claims and the fixed monthly payments. Id. at 2.

[6] The Standiferds do not challenge the factual findings of the Bankruptcy Court in this appeal. Therefore, many of the record citations in the Statement of Facts are to the findings of fact set forth in the Bankruptcy Court's opinion. [Aplt. App. at 35-59]. Other citations herein are to the Appellants' Appendix [Aplt. App.], the Appellee's Supplemental Appendix [Aplee. Supp. App.] and the Appellee's Addendum [Aplee. Add.].

The Bankruptcy Court entered an order confirming the Standiferds' Plan on January 25, 2002. Aplee. Supp. App. at 31-35. As relevant here, the Confirmation Order directed the Standiferds to do two things:

- The Standiferds had to file all their tax returns on time, send copies of the returns to the Chapter 13 trustee, and pay any tax refunds they received into the Plan. Id. at 35, ¶ 11.
- If they engaged in business, they had to file monthly operating reports. Id. at 34, ¶ 7.

The tax returns and operating reports were intended to notify the trustee of the receipt of funds committed to the repayment of creditors under the Plan and alert the trustee to any increase in the Standiferds' income so she could seek to modify the Plan to increase payments to creditors under 11 U.S.C. § 1329(a). In addition, the Standiferds were ordered not to incur any additional debt outside the ordinary course of business without the Bankruptcy Court's approval. Aplee. Supp. App. at 34, ¶ 4. The trustee expressly was permitted to object to a discharge if plan paid less than 100 percent to the Standiferds' creditors. Id. at 35, ¶ 10.

The Standiferds' attorney signed the Confirmation Order. Id. at 35. The Standiferds received a copy of the Confirmation Order and understood that they had to give the trustee copies of their tax returns, file operating reports if they engaged in business and turn over their tax refunds to the trustee. Aplt. App. at 38;

Aplee. Supp. App. at 125(copy of order mailed to Standiferds by their attorney). See also Aplee. Supp. App. at 171-172, 181 (testimony of Ronald Standiferd).

In May or June of 2002, Mr. Standiferd obtained a job with STKX Construction, Inc. Aplee. Supp. App. at 227-228, 275.

Shortly thereafter, Mr. Standiferd, began engaging in business. Using the name Standiferd and Sons Company, he formed a business partnership with STKX Construction, Inc. called S & S Joint Venture. Id. at 228-229, 276. Through the joint venture, Mr. Standiferd engaged in the business of handling construction projects for Native Americans. Id. at 279-281. The Standiferds did not file an operating report as required by the Confirmation Order. Aplt. App. at 42, 54; Aplee. Supp. App. at 197.

The Standiferds received tax refunds for 2001 and 2002, but did not pay them into the Plan and did not give the trustee copies of their tax returns, despite annual reminders from the trustee requesting the tax returns. Aplee. Supp. App. at 198-199, See, Aplee. Supp. App. at 38. This violated the Confirmation Order.

On May 16, 2003, the Chapter 13 trustee filed a motion to dismiss the Standiferds' Chapter 13 bankruptcy case based on their failure to provide copies of their 2001 and 2002 tax returns and to contribute tax refunds to the Plan as required by the Confirmation Order. Aplt. App. at 26.

To avoid dismissal, the Standiferds agreed to pay the tax refunds at the end of their Plan, unless they had already paid their creditors in full; in turn, the trustee withdrew the May 2003 dismissal motion. See Aplt. App. at 29-31. The Standiferds belatedly provided a copy of their 2002 tax return to the trustee in connection with the motion to dismiss. Aplt. App. at 41; Aplee. Supp. App. at 197-198.

The Standiferds continued to engage in the construction business without reporting it as the order required. In 2003, Mr. Standiferd received profits from his business venture. Over the course of the year, he received three checks that year from his joint venture totaling $15,000. Aplt. App. at 39; Aplee. Supp. App. at 168-169; Aplee. Add. at 9-12. Although, paragraph seven of the order required reporting, the Standiferds did not file monthly operating reports for the joint venture. Aplt. App. at 42, 54; Aplee. Supp. App. at 191, 197. And they did not provide the trustee with a copy of their 2003 tax return on which they reported the income from the joint venture and that would have alerted the trustee to the fact that the Standiferds had started a business and were making money. Aplt. App. at 42, 54; Aplee. Supp. App. at 197-198.

Over the course of 2004, Mr. Standiferd received seven more checks from engaging in business through his joint venture; these totaled $80,000. [Aplt. App.

at 39-40]; Aplee. Supp. App. at 169-170; Aplee. Add. at 13-20. Those checks represented profits from the joint venture. [Aplt. App. at 39-40]; Aplee. Supp. App. at 169-170. The Standiferds did not notify the trustee of the receipt of any of that money. Aplee. Supp. App. at 202. They did not file monthly operating reports disclosing that Mr. Standiferd was engaging in business or that he received $80,000 in profits as required by the Confirmation Order. Aplt. App. at 42, 54; Aplee. Supp. App. at 168-169, 197. And, in violation of the Confirmation Order, they did not provide the trustee with a copy of their 2004 tax return that shows their income from the joint venture. Aplt. App. at 42,54; Aplee. Supp. App. at 198.

In November of 2004, Mr. Standiferd formed a corporation called Standiferd and Sons, Inc. to substitute for him as a partner in the joint venture and to receive the profits from the joint venture. Aplee. Supp. App. at 184-816. In 2005, the Standiferds received a check for $20,000 representing their profits from the joint venture. Aplt. App. at 40; Aplee. Supp. App. at 170-171; Aplee Add. at 21-24. Still, they filed no operating reports disclosing that they were engaging in business. Aplt. App. at 42, 54; Aplee. Supp. App. at 170-171, 197. That violated paragraph seven of the Confirmation Order. They did not give the trustee a copy of their 2005 tax return on which they reported their business profits as required by the order. Aplt. App. at 42, 54; Aplee. Supp. App. at 198. Instead, the Standiferds spent most of the $100,000+ in undisclosed profits that they had received from their business to renovate their home, which they retained throughout the Chapter 13 portion of their bankruptcy case. Aplt. App. at 52; Aplee. Supp. App. at 161, 168-169, 320, 333-334.

On October 16, 2006, the Chapter 13 trustee filed a second motion to dismiss the Standiferds' bankruptcy case on the ground that the Standiferds had failed to provide an accounting of bonus income, had failed to provide copies of their tax returns and had failed to contribute tax refunds to the Plan. Aplt. App. at 32. In response, on November 22, 2006, the Standiferds converted their proceeding to Chapter 7. Aplee. Supp. App. at 41. At the time of the conversion, the Standiferds' bankruptcy case had been pending for nearly six years. For the entire period, the Standiferds' creditors had been subject to an automatic stay of their claims against the Standiferds, which means they could look only to the money the Standiferds paid through the bankruptcy in satisfaction of their claims. See 11 U.S.C. § 362; Aplee. Supp. App. at 211. That stay remained in effect following the Standiferds conversion to Chapter 7.

Over the life of the Chapter 13 proceeding, the Standiferds paid $32,640 on their debt of $469,303.99, plus interest,[7] and did not disclose over $100,000 in business income. Aplee. Supp. App. at 2; Aplee. Supp. App. at 73.

The Standiferds filed amended schedules following their conversion to Chapter 7. Schedule F filed on December 15, 2006 showed that the Standiferds' unsecured debts had nearly trebled to $653,153.98 since they filed their bankruptcy petition. Aplee. Supp. App. at 42-48.

The first time the Standiferds disclosed their interest in S& S Joint Venture, the 2002 joint venture they created, was at the Chapter 7, section 341 meeting of creditors in January of 2007. Aplee. Supp. App. at 191-192. At a continuation of that meeting on March 5, 2007, the Standiferds also for the first time disclosed their interest in Standiferd & Sons LLC, years after they formed it. Aplee. Add. at 34. Subsequently, on May 8, 2007, the Standiferds filed an amended Schedule B formally listing their interest in Standiferd & Sons LLC, but still omitting their interest in S & S Joint Venture. See Aplee. Supp. App. at 51.

After conducting an investigation, the United States Trustee filed a complaint seeking to deny the Standiferds a discharge of their debts. The Complaint alleged a discharge should be denied on four separate grounds.

[7] That amount includes secured debt of $229,885.06, priority tax debt of $10,201, and unsecured debt of $229,217.93.

~~Complaint~~ Aplee. Supp. App. at 56-66. The United States Trustee's complaint alleged that the Standiferds: 1) knowingly and fraudulently had withheld recorded information relating to their property and financial affairs from the Chapter 13 trustee, which justified a denial of discharge under 11 U.S.C. § 727(a)(4)(D); 2) had failed to satisfactorily explain the loss of $140,000 received in distributions from S & S Joint Venture, which justified a denial of discharge under 11 U.S.C. § 727(a)(5); 3) had failed to file monthly operating reports and turn over any portion of the distributions from their joint venture to the Chapter 13 trustee as required by the Confirmation Order, which justified a denial of discharge under 11 U.S.C. § 727(a)(6)(A); and 4) had concealed and transferred the distributions from their joint venture with the intent to hinder, delay and defraud the trustee and their creditors, which justified a denial of discharge under 11 U.S.C. § 727(a)(2)(B). Id.

On December 17, 2008, after a two-day trial, the Bankruptcy Court issued a twenty-five page opinion and entered judgment in favor of the United States Trustee denying the Standiferds a discharge of their debts. Aplt. App. at 35-59, 60. The Bankruptcy Court found that the Standiferds had willfully failed to comply with the Confirmation Order, justifying a denial under section 727(a)(6)(A) and the Standiferds had concealed assets of the estate to hinder their creditors, justifying a denial under section 727(a)(2)(B). Aplt. App. at 52-56. In so holding, the Bankruptcy Court determined based on evidence of the Standiferds' fraudulent conduct and the timing of their conversion, they had converted their case to Chapter 7 in bad faith. Aplt. App. at 45. Therefore, their Chapter 7 estate included all of the assets of their Chapter 13 estate. Id. The Bankruptcy Court also squarely rejected the Standiferds' argument that their discharge could not be denied because section 727(a) did not apply to misconduct in Chapter 13. Aplt. App. at 42-50. Having determined denial was warranted on two independent grounds, the Bankruptcy Court indicated that section 727(a)(5) was not an appropriate ground for a denial of discharge and declined to address the fourth ground - section 727(a)(4)(D). Aplt. App. at 56.

In dicta, the Bankruptcy Court opined that the Standiferds' bankruptcy case could be dismissed for cause without the entry of a discharge pursuant to 11 U.S.C. § 707(a). Aplt. App. at 57-58. However, the Bankruptcy Court did not do that, but denied the Standiferds' discharge under section 727(a) instead. Aplt. App. at 59.

On December 24, 2008, the Standiferds timely appealed the Bankruptcy Court's judgment to the United States Bankruptcy Appellate Panel of the Tenth Circuit. Aplee. Supp. App. at 138. The appeal was transferred to the United States District Court for the District of New Mexico at the election of the United States

Trustee, where the appeal was referred to a magistrate judge. On August 17, 2009, the magistrate judge issued his recommendation that the decision of the Bankruptcy Court be affirmed on both independent grounds. Aplt. App. at 61-67. The Standiferds objected to the magistrate judge's recommendation. On September 4, 2009, the district court, following a de novo review of the record, adopted the magistrate judge's recommendation and denied the Standiferds' appeal. Aplt. App. at 70.

The Standiferds filed a timely notice of appeal to the Tenth Circuit on October 1, 2009. Aplee. Supp. App. at 140-141].

SUMMARY OF ARGUMENT

This is a garden variety denial of discharge case. The Bankruptcy Court denied the Standiferds' discharge on two independent grounds under 11 U.S.C. § 727(a) and this Court can affirm on either of those grounds. The Bankruptcy Court found that the Standiferds willfully refused to obey the Confirmation Order and fraudulently concealed their business profits during their bankruptcy case, warranting the denial of their discharge under 11 U.S.C. §§ 727(a)(6)(A) and (a)(2)(B), respectively. Those findings are not clearly erroneous; there is ample evidence in the record supporting them. The Standiferds do not dispute the Bankruptcy Court's factual findings. Instead, they raise several legal challenges based on the fact their case did not originate in Chapter 7, seeking to avoid the consequences of their misconduct. There is no merit to their arguments. The first two pertain to the Bankruptcy Court's dismissal under section 727(a)(6)(A). If the Court affirms on the first ground, section 727(a)(6)(A), it need not reach the remaining issues.

The Standiferds allege the Bankruptcy Court erred in denying their discharge under section 727(a)(6)(A) because: 1) the Confirmation Order was not a lawful order that the parties had to obey, but only a stipulation; and 2) the Confirmation Order was not an order "in the case" within the meaning of section 727(a)(6)(A) because it was entered in the Chapter 13 part of their bankruptcy case. In addition, they allege the Bankruptcy Court erred in denying their discharge under section 727(a)(2)(B) because section 727 does not apply to fraudulent conduct in Chapter 13 and the fraudulently diverted proceeds were not part of their postconversion estate. The Bankruptcy Court did not clearly err in finding that the Confirmation Order was a court order the Standiferds were required to obey. That order unambiguously directed the Standiferds to pay any tax refunds into the Plan, and provide tax returns and monthly operating reports to the trustee. The Standiferds never challenged the legality of the Confirmation Order and they are foreclosed from doing so now.

Nor did the Bankruptcy Court err in concluding the Standiferds' willful disregard of the confirmation order was a refusal "in the case" to obey a court order. The Standiferds filed and participated in only one bankruptcy case. The Bankruptcy Court entered the Confirmation Order and the Standiferds intentionally disregarded it during that case. Therefore, the Bankruptcy Court properly denied the Standiferds' discharge under section 727(a)(6)(A).

The Standiferds' challenges to denial under section 727(a)(2)(B) are equally unpersuasive. The Standiferds' contention section 727 did not apply to their fraudulent conduct because it occurred during the Chapter 13 part of their case is wrong for two reasons. First, section 727 applies to fraudulent conduct that occurs during any part of the bankruptcy case. The language and the purpose of the statute support that reading. Further corroborating that reading is a recent Supreme Court decision that rejected a debtor's attempt to avoid the consequences of his fraudulent conduct by converting his case, recognizing that preconversion conduct can support postconversion remedies under a different chapter. And under strikingly similar facts, the Fifth Circuit affirmed a decision denying a discharge under section 727(a)(2)(B) to debtors who, like the Standiferds, had fraudulently spent funds belonging to the bankruptcy estate during the Chapter 13 part of their case and then converted their case to Chapter 7.

Interpreting Section 727(a) as the Standiferds would, as applying only to fraud committed in the Chapter 7 part of converted cases would allow dishonest debtors to obtain debt relief through bankruptcy in contravention of Congress' express intent to the contrary. It also would provide a perverse incentive for debtors to abuse the bankruptcy process, knowing that they can convert to a new chapter and still obtain a discharge of their debts if they are caught.

Even if the Standiferds were right, and section 727 applies only to fraud committed in the Chapter 7 part of their case or that affected the assets of the Chapter 7 estate, it applies here because they put the money they diverted into their house, which became part of the Standiferds' Chapter 7 estate when they converted in bad faith. The Standiferds do not challenge the factual basis of the Bankruptcy Court's bad faith finding, which was amply supported by the evidence and not clearly erroneous. And it was not error for the Bankruptcy Court to consider the circumstances of the Standiferds' case conversion because the Standiferds, themselves, implicitly raised the issue of the scope of their Chapter 7 estate in response to the United States Trustee's objection to their discharge.

ARGUMENT

I. The Bankruptcy Court Properly Denied the Discharge under Section 727(a)(6)(A).

A. The Bankruptcy Court's Finding That the Standiferds Had Refused to Obey A Lawful Order in the Bankruptcy Case Was Not Clearly Erroneous.

A bankruptcy court may deny a debtor a discharge if he has refused to obey a lawful order of the court. 11 U.S. C. § 727(a)(6)(A); Martinez v. Los Alamos Nat'l Bank (In re Martinez), No. 04-2040, 126 Fed. Appx. 890, 896, 2005 WL 648218, at *4 (10th Cir. Mar. 22, 2005) (unpublished).[8] Discharge will be denied under § 727(a)(6)(A) if "1) the Court issued an order directed at the debtor; 2) the order was lawful; 3) the order was not one requiring a response to a material question or to testify; and 4) the debtor refused to obey the order." Gillman v. Green (In re Green), 335 B.R. 181, 183 (Bankr. D. Utah 2005). See 11 U.S.C. § 727(a)(6)(A).

There must be some degree of willfulness or volition on the part of the debtor not to obey the order. Martinez, 126 Fed. Appx. at 896, 2005 WL 648218, at *4; Smith v. Jordan (In re Jordan), 521 F.3d 430, 433 (4th Cir. 2008). The initial burden is on the plaintiff to demonstrate that the debtor received the order and failed to comply with its terms. Smith, 521 F.3d at 433. The burden then shifts to the debtor who must explain the reasons for non-compliance. Id.

[8] Section 727(a)(6) is intended to give the bankruptcy court a means to ensure the debtor is straightforward in dealing with creditors and complies with its orders. Id.

Ample evidence in the record supports the Bankruptcy Court's finding that the Standiferds willfully disobeyed a court order within the meaning of section 727(a)(6)(A). The Bankruptcy Court issued the Confirmation Order in the Standiferds' bankruptcy case and directed it to the parties in that case. Aplee. Supp. App. at 31-36. The Confirmation Order specifically directed the Standiferds to timely file tax returns and provide copies of the returns to the Chapter 13 trustee, to pay any tax refunds they received into the Plan, and to file operating reports if they engaged in business, presumably to enable the trustee to ensure that the Standiferds made all the required contributions to the Plan and to notify the trustee of any additional income the Standiferds received.[9] Id. at 34-35.

The Bankruptcy Court found that the Standiferds had received the Confirmation Order and had failed to comply with its terms. Aplt. App. at 38, 54-55. Specifically, the Bankruptcy Court found that the Standiferds formed S & S Joint Venture in 2002 and "engaged in business" thereafter for years, but never filed a monthly operating report regarding the Joint Venture. Aplt. App. at 54. The Bankruptcy Court further found that from 2003 - 2005, the Standiferds received 11 checks from their business representing their share of profits from the Joint Venture in an aggregate amount of $135,000. Aplt. App. at 39-40. Still, the [9] The Confirmation Order did not require the Standiferds to respond to a material question or testify.

Standiferds never filed a single monthly operating report. Aplt. App. at 42. They also failed to provide copies of their tax returns for the years, 2003, 2004, and 2005 to the trustee that would have alerted the trustee to the fact that the Standiferds had received thousands of dollars in business profits. Aplt. App. at 42. These omissions were in direct derogation of the terms of the Confirmation Order.

The Bankruptcy Court found based on the evidence adduced at trial, and the Standiferds did not dispute, they were aware of their obligations under the Confirmation Order and were able to comply with the Order. Aplt. App. at 55. They provided a copy of their 2002 tax return to the trustee when faced with a motion to dismiss. The Standiferds offered no explanation for their noncompliance with the Order. The Bankruptcy Court properly concluded therefore, that their refusal to obey was willful. Id.

The Standiferds do not dispute that they willfully disobeyed the Confirmation Order, but argue that the Confirmation Order was not a "lawful order" within the meaning of section 727(a)(6)(A), characterizing the Order as a court approval of a voluntary stipulation between the parties the Standiferds were free to disregard. They further contend the Bankruptcy Court had no authority to order them to do anything in the Confirmation Order. Those assertions are contrary to both the facts in this case and the relevant law.

It was not clearly erroneous for the Bankruptcy Court to determine that the Confirmation Order was, in fact, a court order and not merely a stipulation between the parties.[10] The Supreme Court recently upheld the enforceability of a confirmation order and incorporated insurance settlement order in Travelers Indem. Co. v. Bailey, concluding those final court orders were not subject to collateral attack and should be enforced according to their unambiguous terms. 129 S. Ct. 2195, 2204 (2009).[11] A confirmation order is recognized in this Circuit as a valid, binding order. United States v. Richman (In re Talbot), 124 F.3d 1201, 1209 (10th Cir. 1997). The Confirmation Order bore all of the hallmarks of a court order. It was appropriately designated "Order Confirming." It purported to "order[], adjudge[] and decree[]" specific things. See Aplee. Supp. App. at 31-36. Most importantly, the Confirmation Order clearly and directly required the Standiferds to take certain specified actions under certain specified circumstances. Id.

The Standiferds were required to obey the Confirmation Order. A court order "must be obeyed by the parties until it is reversed by orderly and proper proceedings." Maness v. Meyers, 419 U.S. 449, 459 (1975) (citation omitted). See [11] The Supreme Court also noted that most federal Courts of Appeals give substantial deference to a bankruptcy court's interpretation of its own orders. Id., n.4.

Martinez, 126 Fed. Appx. at 897, 2005 WL 648218, at * 5 (affirming denial of discharge under section 727(a)(6)); NCNB Tex. Nat'l Bank v. Jones (In re Jones), 966 F.2d 169, 174 n. 3 (5th Cir. 1992) ("The bankruptcy court entered an order that was within its equitable power. The debtors could have appealed the order, but absent a withdrawal of the order on appeal, the debtors were obligated to obey it."). The Standiferds never objected to or appealed the Confirmation Order as being beyond the authority of the Bankruptcy Court. Therefore, they were bound to follow its terms.

B. The Standiferds' Refusal Was "In The Case" Because There Was Only One Bankruptcy Case.

The Standiferds' refusal to obey the Confirmation Order was a refusal "in the case" to obey a lawful court order within the plain meaning of section 727(a)(6)(A). The Standiferds argue that because the Confirmation Order was entered (and disregarded by the Standiferds) during the Chapter 13 phase of their bankruptcy case, it is not an order in the Chapter 7 case as they incorrectly assert the statute requires. That argument is wrong for two reasons. First, the plain language of that section 727(a)(6)(A) includes no such limitation. Second, the Standiferds' construction requires the Chapter 13 and Chapter 7 proceedings to have been separate cases. They were not.

According to the statute, a denial of discharge is warranted when a debtor has refused to obey a court order "in the case."[12] The plain meaning of the phrase "in the case" is in the debtor's bankruptcy case.

The Chapter 13 proceeding and the Chapter 7 proceeding are both part of the single bankruptcy case filed by the Standiferds.[13] Section 301 of the Bankruptcy Code states that a voluntary case under any chapter is commenced by filing a petition with the bankruptcy court. 11 U.S.C. § 301(a). That case then continues until it is dismissed or closed. Thus, a case can only be commenced by filing a petition.[14]

[12] Section 727(a)(6)(A) provides:

> (a) The court shall grant the debtor a discharge, unless –
> * * *
> (6) the debtor has refused, in the case–
> (A) to obey any lawful order of the court, other than an order to respond to a material question or to testify;

[13] The Standiferds take the position that the proceeding under Chapter 13 and the proceeding under Chapter 7 in their bankruptcy case are separate cases, citing 11 U.S.C. § 1307(a). Appellants' Brief at 22-23. Section 1307(a) provides that "[t]he debtor may convert a case under this chapter to a case under chapter 7 of this title at any time. . . ." That argument is wrong because section 1307(a) does not govern or even address whether the conversion of a case from Chapter 13 to Chapter 7 begins a new, separate case.

[14] A voluntary conversion under section 1307(a), by contrast, is accomplished by filing a notice. See Fed R. Bankr. P. 1017(f)(3).

The conversion of a case to a new chapter does not begin a new case. See 11 U.S.C. § 348(a); Finney v. Smith (In re Finney), 992 F.2d 43, 45 (4th Cir. 1993) (conversion creates no break in a case); Calder v. Job (In re Calder), 973 F.2d 862, 866 (10th Cir. 1992) (". . . [a] proper reading of § 348 indicates that it is not a source of disruption but, instead, preserves the continuity of the bankruptcy proceedings.") (internal quotation omitted). Section 348, which governs the effect of conversion explains that conversion does not affect the date of the filing of the petition or the commencement of the case. By its terms, section 348(a) recognizes that in a converted case there is only one petition and one commencement of the case. 11 U.S.C. § 348(a) ("Conversion of a case . . . does not effect a change in the date of the filing of the petition, the commencement of the case, or the order for relief.") (emphasis added).

Rule 1019 of the Federal Rules of Bankruptcy Procedure, which implements section 348, was amended in 1997 to delete the phrase "superseded case" in subsection 3 specifically to dispel any misconception that conversion to a new chapter results in a new case. Advisory Committee Note to 1997 Amendment to Fed. R. Bankr. P. 1019 (explaining that the prior version of the rule "create[d] the erroneous impression that conversion of a case results in a new case that is distinct from the original case.").

When the Standiferds converted their case to Chapter 7, the existing Chapter 13 case was not dismissed or closed, and the Standiferds did not file a second petition with the Bankruptcy Court seeking relief under Chapter 7.[15] Therefore, they have commenced only a single bankruptcy case, one they converted to Chapter 7 after a portion of their misconduct was uncovered by the Chapter 13 trustee. Finally, the Bankruptcy Court's administrative handling of the Standiferds' case buttresses this conclusion. The Standiferds' Chapter 7 proceeding continued on the same docket report under the same case number as the Chapter 13 proceeding.

The Standiferds want this Court to read the phrase "in the case" as "in the Chapter 7 case." Appellants' Brief at 22 ("For the same reasons that § 727(a)(2)(B) cannot apply to property of the chapter 13 estate, orders in a chapter 13 case are not orders 'in the [chapter 7] case."). That construction of section 727(a)(6)(A) makes no sense because it relies on the erroneous premise that the Standiferds participated in two separate bankruptcy cases–one under Chapter 13 and one under Chapter 7. Further, it is not what the statute says. The Standiferds' attempt to construe the statute contrary to its plain meaning for policy reasons runs afoul of two basic tenets of statutory construction. First, where the statute's language is plain, the court must enforce it according to its terms. Lamie v. United States Trustee, 540 U.S. 526, 534 (2004). Second, a court may not read an absent word into a statute to change the reach of the statute. Id. at 538. The Supreme Court noted in Lamie that its unwillingness to soften the import of Congress' chosen words even if it believed the words lead to a harsh outcome is longstanding and results from deference to the supremacy of the Legislature and the recognition that Congressmen typically vote on the language of a bill. Id. In short, the statute plainly says a debtor who intentionally refuses to obey a court order issued in his bankruptcy case may be denied a discharge in Chapter 7. That is exactly what the Standiferds did, and the Bankruptcy Court did not err by denying their discharge.

[15] The Standiferds had the option of dismissing their Chapter 13 proceedings and filing a petition to commence a new case under Chapter 7, but they chose to convert their existing case instead. In fact, they converted their case to avoid dismissal.

II. Alternatively, the Bankruptcy Court Properly Denied the Discharge Under Section 727(a)(2)(B).

A. The Bankruptcy Court's Finding That the Standiferds Had Concealed Business Profits with the Intent to Hinder Their Creditors Was Not Clearly Erroneous.

Although this Court need not reach the remainder of the issues addressed in this brief if it affirms on the first ground, the Bankruptcy Court's denial of discharge on the alternate ground of 11 U.S.C. § 727(a)(2)(B) is also amply supported by the record evidence. To prevail under this section, the plaintiff must prove that: 1) the debtor transferred or concealed 2) property of the estate, 3) after the date of the filing of the petition, 4) with the intent to hinder, delay, or defraud creditors. Balaber-Strauss v. Milano (In re Milano), 35 B.R. 89, 91 (Bankr. S. D. N. Y. 1983). See Mathai v. Warren (In re Warren), 512 F.3d 1241, 1249 (10th Cir. 2008) (interpreting section 727(a)(2)(A)). Denial of discharge under this section requires actual intent to hinder, delay, or defraud a creditor or officer of the estate. Warren, 512 F.3d at 1249 (citing Marine Midland Bus. Loans, Inc. v. Carey (In re Carey), 938 F.2d 1073, 1077 (10th Cir. 1991)); Weston v. Goss, Nos. 94-4140, 94-4202, 94-4254, 69 F.3d 549 (table), 1995 WL 628125 at *1 (10th Cir. Oct. 26, 1995) (unpublished). Fraudulent intent may be established by circumstantial evidence, or by inferences drawn from a course of conduct. Warren, 512 F.3d at 1249; Weston, 1995 WL 628125, at *1; Farmers Coop. Ass'n of Talmadge, Kan. v. Strunk, 671 F.2d 391, 395 (10th Cir. 1982).

The Bankruptcy Court found that the Standiferds received over $100,000 in bonuses or profits from their business ventures during the Chapter 13 case. Aplt. App. at 52. That money was property of their bankruptcy estate pursuant to 11 U.S.C. §§ 541 and 1306, and the court-approved repayment plan.[16] Id. The Confirmation Order required the Standiferds to notify the trustee of the receipt of that money by filing monthly operating reports and providing copies of their tax returns. Id. The Standiferds never notified the trustee that they had received those funds. Id. Instead, they used the money to make improvements to their home. Id. In addition, the Bankruptcy Court inferred from the Standiferds' failure to provide the trustee with copies of their tax returns, which would have revealed their business income, that the Standiferds concealed the profits from their business with intent to hinder, delay, or defraud their creditors. Id. The Standiferds' failure to file monthly operating reports for their business as required further supports that finding. Id. Thus, it was not clearly erroneous for the Bankruptcy Court to find the Standiferds had fraudulently concealed the profits with the intent to hinder their creditors.

[16] The Plan provided that the Standiferds' property did not revest in the Standiferds until payments under the Plan had been completed. Am. Plan [Aplee. Add. at 6, ¶ 8].

B. The Standiferds' Contention They Cannot Be Held Accountable For Their Fraud Under Section 727 Because They Committed It During the Chapter 13 Part of Their Case Is Wrong For Two Reasons.

1. Section 727 Applies To Fraudulent Conduct That Occurs During Any Part of a Bankruptcy Case.

The language and purpose of the section 727(a)(2), case law and the necessary consequences of an alternate construction, all support the conclusion that section 727(a) applies to fraudulent conduct that occurs during any part of a debtor's bankruptcy case. Section 727(a)(2) by its terms authorizes a denial of discharge if a debtor fraudulently conceals or diverts assets that should be distributed to their creditors, within a year before or during his bankruptcy case. It provides:

(a) The court shall grant the debtor a discharge, unless –

> (2) the debtor, with intent to hinder, delay, or defraud a creditor or an officer of the estate charged with custody or property under this title, has transferred, removed, destroyed, mutilated, or concealed, or has permitted to be transferred, removed, destroyed, mutilated, or concealed–
>> (A) property of the debtor, within one year before the date of the filing of the petition;

The statute attempts to cover all methods by which a debtor may attempt to defeat the intent and effect of the bankruptcy process through efforts to keep his property from being equitably distributed to creditors. Subsection A covers fraudulent behavior prior to filing the bankruptcy case and subsection B covers fraudulent behavior during the bankruptcy case. The reference to “property of the estate” in subsection B, as opposed to “property of the debtor” in subsection A merely reflects the fact that postpetition, the debtor’s assets are no longer property of the debtor, but belong to the bankruptcy estate.[17] See 11 U.S.C. § 541 (broadly defining property of the estate).

The construction of the statute advocated by the Standiferds would create a temporal gap in the statute's reach. Under the Standiferds' construction of the statute, debtors like the Standiferds who file under Chapter 13 and subsequently convert to Chapter 7 could have their discharge denied on the basis of fraudulent conduct before they filed (under section 727(a)(2)(A)) and fraudulent conduct after they converted (under 727(a)(2)(B)), but would not be subject to denial of discharge for fraudulent conduct during the Chapter 13 portion of their case. That simply makes no sense.

The Standiferds' fraudulent concealment of their business profits during their bankruptcy case to prevent them from being distributed to their creditors is precisely the type of behavior section 727(a)(2)(B) is intended to punish and deter. Section 727 makes complete financial disclosure a condition precedent to the privilege of discharge. United States v. Ellis, 50 F.3d 419, 424 (7th Cir. 1995). The underlying purpose of 11 U.S.C. § 727(a)(2)(B) is to deny discharge to a debtor who fails to disclose transactions regarding his assets subsequent to filing his petition for bankruptcy. Sicherman v. Rivera (In re Rivera), 338 B.R.318, 328 (Bankr. N.D. Ohio 2006); Caserta v. S. Nat'l Bank of N.C. (In re Caserta), 182 B.R. 599, 606 (Bankr. S.D. Fla. 1995). The Standiferds did not fully and honestly disclose their assets in their bankruptcy case; they failed to disclose the receipt of over one hundred thousand dollars. Therefore, they were not entitled to a discharge of their debts.

[17] The Bankruptcy Code recognizes that a word may have different meanings in different sections of the Code. See 11 U.S.C. § 102(8). Therefore, the Court's interpretation of section 727(a)(2)(B) need not affect or be constrained by its interpretation of the word "estate" in other sections of the Code.

The Supreme Court's recent decision in Marrama v. Citizens Bank of Mass., 549 U.S. 365 (2007) sheds light on this case. In both cases, the debtors fraudulently concealed or transferred assets to protect them from creditors and then when caught, converted their cases in bad faith to a different chapter to avoid the consequences of their conduct. Id. at 368-69. The Supreme Court refused to construe bankruptcy statutes to limit a court's authority to take appropriate action in response to fraudulent conduct by the atypical debtor who has demonstrated that he is not entitled to relief available to the typical debtor. Id. at 374-75. Marrama established that a dishonest debtor cannot escape the consequences of his conduct by converting his case to a different chapter; after conversion a debtor is subject to the sanctions and remedies available under the chapter to which he has converted and such sanctions may be based solely on fraudulent and bad faith conduct committed in the preconversion proceeding and prepetition. Id. at 373-74 (individual's Chapter 13 case could be dismissed or converted under 11 U.S.C. § 1307(c) on the basis of prepetition bad faith including fraudulent acts committed in an earlier Chapter 7 proceeding).

In a case strikingly similar to this one, the Fifth Circuit affirmed the denial of a discharge under section 727 against debtors who fraudulently spent money on a trip while they were in Chapter 13 bankruptcy and then converted their case to Chapter 7. Baker v. Rank (In re Baker), 154 F.3d 534 (5th Cir. 1998). The Fifth Circuit squarely rejected the notion that the debtors could not be denied a discharge because section 727 does not apply to Chapter 13, concluding "[b]ecause Debtors' conduct occurred after the date they filed for Chapter 13, and because the court expressly found that this conduct hindered their creditors, it is relevant for consideration under § 727(a)(2)(B) and justified a denial of discharge." Id. at 538-39.[18]

Policy considerations also argue in favor of construing section 727 to apply to fraudulent conduct committed during every part of a debtor's bankruptcy case. As this Court has long recognized, the twin goals at the core of the federal bankruptcy system are giving the honest but unfortunate debtor a fresh start and ensuring the maximum possible equitable distribution to creditors. See, e.g., Stellwagen v. Clum, 245 U.S. 605, 617 (1918); Williams v. United States Fid. & Guar. Co., 236 U.S. 549 (1915). First, the Standiferds are not honest debtors. They did not simply fail to make their Plan payments. Over a period of years, they fraudulently concealed over $100,000 worth of assets that could have been used to pay to their creditors, spent those funds on home improvements instead, and racked up hundreds of thousands of dollars of additional debt, all the while keeping their creditors from pursuing their assets by means of the automatic stay. They avoided dismissal of their case by making the minimal $470 fixed monthly payments, leading the other parties to believe the Standiferds were complying with the Plan. When they got caught, they converted their case to Chapter 7 to avoid a dismissal without a discharge. Congress did not intend for dishonest debtors like the Standiferds to obtain relief from their debts through the bankruptcy process and this Court should not interpret section 727(a) to permit that result. See Marrama, 549 U.S. at 373-74 (because of bad faith conduct prepetition and in Chapter 7, debtor could not proceed under Chapter 13 because he was not a member of the class of honest, but unfortunate debtors that the bankruptcy laws were enacted to protect).

Second, the Standiferds' contention that neither Chapter 13 remedies,[19] nor section 727(a) sanctions can be imposed on a dishonest Chapter 13 debtor postconversion not only would not maximize the equitable distribution to creditors, it would create a perverse incentive for unscrupulous debtors to try to cheat the system. The unavoidable consequence of the Standiferds' view is a debtor can attempt to exploit the bankruptcy system by diverting assets committed to repayment of his creditors risk-free because if the dishonest debtor is caught, he can use his absolute right to convert his case to a new chapter and still receive a discharge. It strains credulity to believe that Congress intended that result.

2. Even If the Standiferds Were Right And Section 727 Applies Only To Fraud Committed In the Chapter 7 Part of the Case, It Applies Here Because They Put the Money They Diverted Into Their House, Which Became Property of Their Chapter 7 Estate Upon Conversion.

Even if the Court accepts the Standiferds' narrow construction of section 727(a)(2)(B) that in cases converted from other chapters, the fraudulently concealed assets must be part of the debtor's Chapter 7 estate upon conversion, the Standiferds' conduct still falls within the reach of section 727(a)(2)(B) because the Standiferds' bad faith conversion brought the concealed profits into their Chapter 7 estate. Property of the Chapter 7 estate following a bad faith conversion from [19] Once a debtor converts from Chapter 13 to Chapter 7, the remedies available under Chapter 13 no longer apply. See 11 U.S.C. § 103(i).

Chapter 13 is defined by 11 U.S.C. § 348(f)(2), which provides that "[i]f the debtor converts a case under chapter 13 of this title to a case under another chapter under this title in bad faith, the property in the converted case shall consist of the property of the estate as of the date of conversion." The Bankruptcy Court found that the Standiferds had converted their Chapter 13 case to a Chapter 7 case in bad faith, relying on its finding they had failed to fully or accurately disclose their financial affairs prior to converting the case. Aplt. App at 45. See In re Siegfried, 219 B.R. 581, 585-87 (Bankr. D. Colo. 1998) (finding bad faith conversion under 11 U.S.C. § 348(f)(2) based on cumulative effect of debtor's failures to disclose assets and debts during his Chapter 13 proceedings and his eleventh hour conversion to avoid hearings that might raise bad faith issues).[20] That finding was not clearly erroneous and the Standiferds do not challenge it except on limited procedural grounds. Therefore, the Standiferds' Chapter 7 estate included all of the assets of their Chapter 13 estate on the date of conversion, including the business profits.

[20] Contrary to the Standiferds' allegation, the Bankruptcy Court's finding they converted their case in bad faith, while based on much of the same fraudulent conduct, is not, in and of itself, a ground for denial of their discharge. Appellants' Brief at 29. The finding of bad faith simply means the scope of their bankruptcy estate after conversion is governed by section 348(f)(2) instead of section 348(f)(1).

At the time of the conversion, the business profits no longer existed as cash, but because the Standiferds had spent them on improvements to their home, which became part of their Chapter 7 estate, the business profits became part of the Chapter 7estate. Aplee. Supp. App. at 320, 333-334. It is widely accepted that, "[t]he conversion in form of property of the estate does not change its character as property of the estate." Bradt v. Woodlawn Auto Workers, F.C.U., 757 F.2d 512, 515 (2d Cir. 1985) (quoting H.R. Rep. No. 595, 95th Cong., 1st Sess. 368 (1977), reprinted in 1978 U.S.C.C.A.N. 5963, 6324). Therefore, the Bankruptcy Court properly found that all of the elements needed to deny the Standiferds a discharge pursuant to 11 U.S.C. § 727(a)(2)(B) had been established.

Finally, the Bankruptcy Court committed no procedural error by considering whether the Standiferds had converted their case in bad faith when it ruled in the adversary proceeding to deny the Standiferds' discharge. Contrary to the Standiferds' allegations, the Bankruptcy Court did not give them the option to convert their case, and then unfairly find their conversion to have been in bad faith and deny their discharge on that basis. See Appellants' Brief at 29. In fact, at the hearing on the trustee's second motion to dismiss, the Standiferds' attorney requested additional time to allow the Standiferds to come up with fees to convert the case, so it would not be dismissed, and the Bankruptcy Court granted that request. See Aplee. Supp. App. at 40.

The issue of whether the Standiferds were converting their case in good faith was not raised at the time of conversion, because the Standiferds had an absolute statutory right under 11 U.S.C. § 1307(a) to convert to Chapter 7 even while the motion to dismiss was pending, and no one had the right to object to the conversion. The Standiferds subsequently raised that issue, themselves, when they contended section 727 did not apply to their fraudulent conduct because the money they hid from their creditors was not property of the Chapter 7 estate, the scope of which depended on whether the Standiferds converted their case in good faith. See Aplee. Supp. App. at 136. Compare 11 U.S.C. § 348(f)(1)(defining estate after good faith conversion) with § 348(f)(2)(defining estate after bad faith conversion). In any event, the Standiferds' discharge was not denied because they converted the case in bad faith; it was denied under 11 U.S.C. § 727 because they refused to obey a court order and fraudulently concealed assets during their bankruptcy case. The bad faith issue has no bearing on the first ground and is relevant to the second ground only if the Court finds the Standiferds were right and section 727 applies only when the fraudulently diverted assets are part of the Chapter 7 estate.

CONCLUSION

For these reasons, the United States Trustee respectfully asks this Court to affirm the district court's order. If the Court does not affirm the order, the Court should remand the case to the Bankruptcy Court for a finding whether a denial of discharge is warranted under 11 U.S.C. § 727(a)(4)(D) in this case.

PRELIMINARY STATEMENT

In a bankruptcy case, a creditor may present its claims to the court by filing a proof of claim. 11 U.S.C. § 501(a). A proof of claim sets forth the amount and basis of the creditor's claim, and must be signed by the creditor or the creditor's authorized agent. Fed. R. Bankr. P. 3001(a), Official Form 10. A properly filed proof of claim creates a prima facie presumption that the creditor's claim is valid in the amount stated, and such claims generally are allowed automatically in the absence of an objection. 11 U.S.C. § 502(a), Fed. R. Bankr. P. 3001(f).

The filing of an inaccurate proof of claim undermines the integrity of the bankruptcy process in several ways. In a chapter 13 bankruptcy, such as the case below, debtors and trustees ordinarily rely on the accuracy of proofs of claim when calculating the amount of the payments that must be distributed to creditors under the debtor's plan. 11 U.S.C. § 1325, 1326. The allowance of an inflated claim ultimately may reduce the assets available to other creditors, and may make it difficult for a deserving individual debtor to achieve the fresh start that bankruptcy is intended to provide. In addition, as the history of this case illustrates, the task of untangling an error-riddled or incomprehensible proof of claim can impose a heavy administrative burden on the bankruptcy courts and other parties in the bankruptcy case.

These problems are particularly heightened in the case of claims filed by mortgage servicers. The amounts stated in those claims often represent a bundle of unpaid principal, interest, escrow charges, penalties, and other assorted fees. Absent clear documentation, it is often difficult, if not impossible, for the debtor or the court to disentangle these charges and verify whether the amounts claimed as owed are correct. Because the mortgage often represents the largest single claim in an individual bankruptcy, an error in the mortgage servicer's proof of claim may make it impossible for the debtor to successfully complete a bankruptcy plan, and may lead to foreclosure and the loss of the debtor's residence. See Katherine Porter, Misbehavior and Mistake in Bankruptcy Mortgage Claims, 87 Tex. L. Rev. 121 (Nov. 2008).

A federal bankruptcy court possesses statutory, inherent, and rule-based authority to remedy abusive conduct by creditors. Section 105 of the United States Bankruptcy Code authorizes bankruptcy courts to issue "any order, process, or judgment that is necessary or appropriate to carry out the provisions of this title," and also recognizes the authority of bankruptcy courts to "tak[e] any action or mak[e] any determination necessary or appropriate to enforce or implement court orders or rules, or to prevent an abuse of process." 11 U.S.C. § 105(a).

Federal Rule of Bankruptcy Procedure 9011 provides that any pleading submitted to a court (including a proof of claim) constitutes a representation that, among other things, "after an inquiry reasonable under the circumstances," the allegations and factual contentions of the pleading have evidentiary support. Fed R. Bankr. P. 9011(b), (b)(3).

This appeal raises important questions concerning the ability of a bankruptcy court to protect its proceedings from abusive proofs of claim. In this case, Wells Fargo filed a proof of claim that was so insufficiently documented and incomprehensible that it took the bankruptcy court four months and three hearings to unravel the basis for Wells Fargo's computations. After the bankruptcy court finally managed to reconcile Wells Fargo's account history, it became clear that Wells Fargo's claim included so many errors and invalid fees that the true amount of its claim had been overstated by more than ten thousand dollars. See Case No. 07-1113, Dkt. 61 at 44 ("Stewart I").[1]

More troublingly, the bankruptcy court's investigation revealed that many of the errors in Stewart were not based on factors unique to this case, but instead arose from Wells Fargo's corporate practice of preparing proofs of claim through a heavily automated process that leaves little room for human oversight before the claim is filed. Stewart I at 22. The bankruptcy court's findings also revealed that Wells Fargo had done little to correct its practices in the wake of In re Jones, 366 B.R. 584 (Bankr. E.D. La. 2007), an earlier decision by the same judge that had detected similar problems. Stewart I at 48. Thus, the evidence in Stewart not only revealed serious deficiencies in Wells Fargo's proof of claim in the immediate case, but also led the court to infer that similar problems existed, undetected, in countless other cases involving Wells Fargo mortgages.

Among other remedies, the bankruptcy court addressed the systemic nature of Wells Fargo's deficiencies by requiring it to conduct an audit of the claims it had filed in other cases in the Eastern District of Louisiana since the entry of the Jones decision. Id. In cases where errors were detected, the court ordered Wells Fargo to amend its claims "where necessary." Id. at 49. In a subsequent decision denying a motion by Wells Fargo to stay the judgment, the bankruptcy court clarified its order by stating that "[a]ssuming, after audit, Wells Fargo believes that every charge assessed against its borrowers is appropriate, no amendment to the proof of claim would be necessary." Case No. 07-11113, Dkt. 116 at 10 ("Stewart II").[2]

INTEREST OF THE UNITED STATES

This appeal is of interest to the United States because it involves the construction of 11 U.S.C. § 105(a) and other sources of authority that permit federal courts to regulate the conduct of parties appearing before them. The United States has a direct interest in the proper construction of these provisions because United States Trustees, who are Justice Department officials appointed by the Attorney General, supervise the administration of chapter 13 bankruptcy cases in this circuit. 28 U.S.C. §§ 586(a)(3)(A)-(H), (s). United States Trustees also are responsible for "prevent[ing] fraud, dishonesty, and overreaching in the bankruptcy arena." H.R. Rep. No. 95-595 at 88 (1977). The United States submits this brief pursuant to 28 U.S.C. § 517 (authorizing the Department of Justice to "attend to the interests of the United States in a suit pending in a court of the United States").

SUMMARY OF ARGUMENT

The United States files this amicus brief in order to address Wells Fargo's contention that the bankruptcy court lacked authority to order it to perform an audit of the proofs of claim it filed in certain unrelated cases, and to correct any claims which it determines to be erroneous as a result of that audit.[3] That remedy was based on the bankruptcy court's findings, which largely are not in dispute, that Wells Fargo's proof of claim contained numerous and substantial errors, and that those errors resulted from systemic deficiencies in Wells Fargo's claims-preparation practices.

[3] The United States limits its argument to the issue of whether it was permissible for the bankruptcy court to order non-monetary relief against Wells Fargo, a private party, under the facts of this particular case. The United States takes no position as to the appropriateness of the monetary relief ordered against Wells Fargo in this proceeding. In addition, because Wells Fargo is a private actor, it is unnecessary for this Court to reach the issue of whether, and to what extent, section 105 relief, or relief under the court's inherent powers, may be ordered against governmental creditors under the doctrine of sovereign immunity. See United States v. Nordic Village, Inc., 503 U.S. 30, 38 (1992) (narrowly construing waiver of sovereign immunity in bankruptcy cases).

Under these circumstances, the bankruptcy court's requirement that Wells Fargo investigate whether it had also made similar errors in other pending cases was reasonable, necessary, and narrowly tailored to the purpose of protecting the integrity of the bankruptcy system in the Eastern District of Louisiana. That remedy falls well within the statutory authority granted to the bankruptcy court by Congress under section 105(a) to "prevent abuse." It also is appropriate under the broad equitable power of federal courts to control the conduct of litigants, which this Court has long upheld under comparable circumstances.

The second part of the bankruptcy court's order, which requires Wells Fargo to amend claims in the event that errors are discovered, does nothing more than reiterate Wells Fargo's general duties as a claimant in a bankruptcy case. Because that order is limited by its own terms to claims which Wells Fargo itself believes to be defective, it does not preemptively resolve any issues that are in genuine dispute, nor does it prevent Wells Fargo from defending its accounting methods in other cases. Indeed, Wells Fargo's argument against the order to amend rests entirely on the false premise that without such order, it would be permissible for it to continue to maintain an erroneous proof of claim even after it had actual knowledge of the claim's inaccuracy. Wells Fargo does not, and cannot, provide any authority or justification for such a result.

ARGUMENT

1. The Undisputed Findings Below Demonstrate that Wells Fargo Engaged in a Systemic Abuse of the Bankruptcy System.

Although Wells Fargo disputes the exact amount by which it inflated its claim against Ms. Stewart, it does not dispute the underlying conclusion that its proof of claim contained numerous errors. In particular, it is undisputed that Wells Fargo's proof of claim contained, among other charges and fees, charges for property inspections that were performed without notice, that were never actually relied on by Wells Fargo, and that in some cases were performed on the wrong property (Stewart I at 25); charges for at least seven broker price opinions (BPOs) that Wells Fargo was unable to produce (Id. 26); duplicative charges for BPOs, and in two cases, charges for BPOs that could not possibly have been performed on the dates stated due to the occurrence of Hurricane Katrina (Id. 27); one charge for a BPO that was performed after Wells Fargo had already foreclosed on Ms. Stewart's property (Id. 29); charges for attorney's fees and foreclosure costs that overstated the expenses actually incurred by Wells Fargo (Id. 37); charges for various invalid bankruptcy-related fees in Ms. Stewart's prior bankruptcy cases that had never been disclosed to, or approved by, the bankruptcy court in those cases (Id. 36-37); and a charge for a title insurance policy that Wells Fargo acquired for itself after it had already foreclosed on Ms. Stewart's home, which the bankruptcy court characterized as a cost of ownership rather than collection. (Id. 38).

None of these findings are discussed by Wells Fargo in its brief. Thus, even were this Court to accept as true every one of the arguments raised by Wells Fargo, there would be no basis to disturb the bankruptcy court's conclusion that Wells Fargo filed a substantially inaccurate proof of claim.

Wells Fargo likewise does not challenge the bankruptcy court's finding that these errors were caused, in part, by general deficiencies in its policies and procedures for preparing proofs of claim. These deficiencies include Wells Fargo's practice of filing claims through counsel who are not provided with the debtor's loan history or with information necessary to explain or defend the amounts stated on the claim (Id. 14), as well as its practice of generating proofs of claim through a highly automated process under which no Wells Fargo employee actually reviews the claim until after it has already been filed and an objection to the claim is received. (Id. 15). In addition, the bankruptcy court found that Wells Fargo had a "corporate practice" of failing to notify debtors when fees, costs, or charges were assessed against their accounts. (Id. 22). As a result, the undisputed record supports the bankruptcy court's finding that the same errors that occurred in Ms. Stewart's case were likely occurring in many other cases in which Wells Fargo is a creditor.

2. The Bankruptcy Court's Audit Order was Authorized as an Exercise of its Statutory Power to "Prevent Abuse" Under 11 U.S.C. § 105(a)

The bankruptcy court's response to Wells Fargo's deficient practices was to order it to take a simple corrective action: it ordered Wells Fargo to review its recently-filed proofs of claim in other cases in the Eastern District of Louisiana for errors– an action that Wells Fargo should have performed, but apparently did not, before those claims were filed. See Fed. R. Bankr. P. 9011(b) (requiring that pleadings filed in bankruptcy cases, including proofs of claim, be based on a reasonable inquiry); see also Cash-n-Advance v. Dansereau, 64 Fed. Appx. 417 (5th Cir. 2003) (upholding sanctions under Rule 9011 against party that filed proof of claim without inquiry as to whether claim had legal or factual basis).

The bankruptcy court's remedy was within the Court's power, expressly authorized under section 105(a), to take "any action . . . necessary or appropriate to enforce or implement court orders or rules, or to prevent an abuse of process." 11 U.S.C. § 105(a) (emphasis added). As this Court has previously recognized, the grant of remedial authority under section 105(a) is broad. In re Sadkin, 36 F.3d 473, 478-79 (5th Cir. 1994) (stating that section 105(a) "provides equitable powers for the bankruptcy court to use at its discretion").

It is equally well established that section 105(a) may be invoked to protect the bankruptcy process from abuse. See Campbell v. Countrywide Home Loans, Inc., 545 F.3d 348, 356 n.1 (5th Cir. 2008) (noting that section 105 is available to discipline parties who "attempt to abuse the procedural mechanisms within the bankruptcy court"). In this respect, section 105(a) expands upon the traditional equitable power of federal courts to protect their proceedings by enjoining abusive litigants. See Balawajder v. Scott, 160 F.3d 1066, 1067-68 (5th Cir. 1998) (recognizing inherent power of federal courts to enjoin party from filing vexatious pleadings); Farguson v. MBank Houston, N.A., 808 F.2d 358, 360 (5th Cir. 1986) (holding that order enjoining abusive litigant from filing further suits against certain defendants "was well within the court's range of authority").

The record below supports the conclusion that the audit remedy ordered by the bankruptcy court is reasonable and necessary to prevent an abuse of process. In light of the significant errors discovered by the bankruptcy court, the requirement that Wells Fargo investigate other potential errors in recently-filed cases within the same district can only be described as mild. By contrast, in both Farguson and Balawajder, this Court upheld the far more drastic remedy of restricting a litigant's right to file future pleadings, a form of relief that has not been imposed against Wells Fargo in this case. Balawajder, 160 F.3d at 1067;

Farguson, 808 F.2d at 360.

Moreover, where a court is confronted with evidence of a pattern of abuse by a single party extending across many cases, it is reasonable for the court to enter a single order in one case to remedy the totality of that abuse. See, e.g., In re John Richards Home Bldg. Co., LLC, 404 B.R. 220, 226-27 (E.D. Mich. 2009) (holding that section 105(a) could be used to remedy misconduct that took place in other forums, and rejecting argument that movant was required to commence a separate proceeding in each and every court in which misconduct occurred). Particularly in a case such as this, the bankruptcy court's remedy is reasonable because the only alternative would be to commence a separate proceeding in each of the countless other cases in which Wells Fargo is a creditor, a procedure that would impose a substantial and unnecessary administrative burden on the court.

Wells Fargo nonetheless offers three unpersuasive arguments for why section 105(a) cannot support the bankruptcy court's remedy in this case. First, without citing to any authority, Wells Fargo argues that section 105(a) may only be invoked in cases where the court has explicitly found that a party has acted in bad faith. Br. 51. No such limitation, however, is present in the text of section 105(a). Moreover, where Congress has intended to make a remedy conditional on a finding of bad faith, it has done so explicitly. Compare 11 U.S.C. § 303(i)(2) (authorizing sanctions against creditors who file involuntary petition in bad faith);

§ 707(b)(3) (expressly providing that court may consider bad faith in determining whether to dismiss bankruptcy petition as abusive). As a result, as every court to have considered the matter has concurred, bad faith is not a prerequisite for relief under section 105(a). See In re Hardy, 97 F.3d 1384, 1389 (11th Cir. 1996) (holding that, for purposes of civil contempt proceedings under section 105(a), no showing of bad faith was required); In re Crayton, 192 B.R. 970, 976-77 (B.A.P. 9th Cir. 1996) (holding that bankruptcy court was not required to make explicit finding of bad faith prior to ordering non-monetary relief against attorney under section 105(a)).

Wells Fargo cites no cases decided under section 105(a) in support of its proposition that the bankruptcy court was required to make a finding of bad faith, instead relying on several decisions in which courts imposed sanctions for bad faith conduct under their inherent equitable powers. See Chambers v. NASCO, Inc., 501 U.S. 32, 34 (1991) (discussing "inherent powers" as independent basis for sanctioning power of federal court). However, although section 105(a) and the court's inherent powers are similar in some respects, they are distinct sources of authority. See Hardy, 97 F.3d at 1389 (noting that by enacting section 105(a), Congress created a source of sanction authority that is "distinct" from the court's inherent powers).

The court's inherent power to punish misconduct, as recognized in Chambers, also differs from its section 105(a) powers in several other fundamental respects. Inherent powers provide a mechanism for punishing misconduct, while section 105(a) includes the power to "prevent" abuse. Therefore, it is unsurprising that Congress did not put a bad faith prerequisite in section 105(a). An order to prevent abuse under section 105(a) is designed to protect parties and the bankruptcy system. It does not hinge on the culpability of the parties, but on the harm that is to be prevented. For that reason, there is no good reason to graft a bad faith limitation onto section 105(a) that Congress did not see fit to include.

Second, Wells Fargo misreads section 105(a) when it suggests that the bankruptcy court erred because section 105(a) may only be invoked in order to enforce another specific section of the Bankruptcy Code. Br. 52. Although one function of section 105(a) is to provide an enforcement mechanism for other sections of the Bankruptcy Code, that is far from its only purpose. See Marrama v. Citizens Bank of Mass., 549 U.S. 365, 375 (2007) (holding that "broad authority" of bankruptcy judge to prevent abuse under section 105(a) was sufficient basis for it to deny abusive motion to convert case). In particular, the clause of section 105(a) that permits courts to "prevent abuse" is separate from the clause that permits them to enforce other provisions of the Bankruptcy Code, and as a result section 105(a) may be invoked to prevent abuse even if no specific violation of another section of the Bankruptcy Code has occurred. Cf. Marrama, 549 U.S. at 383 (Alito, J., dissenting) (listing examples of remedies authorized under section 105(a)).

It is true that the bankruptcy court's equitable authority "must be exercised in a manner that is consistent with the Bankruptcy Code." In re Oxford Management, Inc., 4 F.3d 1329, 1334 (5th Cir. 1993). However, as one court has observed, "the scope of that restriction should not be exaggerated to the point at which bankruptcy courts feel powerless to act unless a party can present a specific textual quotation which precisely identifies the availability of a specific remedy." In re Barron, 264 B.R. 833, 844 (Bankr. E.D. Tex. 2001).

Moreover, even if Wells Fargo's narrow reading of section 105(a) were correct, the bankruptcy court did not err because the remedy in this case does operate to enforce specific provisions of the Bankruptcy Code and Rules. In particular, the bankruptcy court's decision ensures the proper functioning of 11 U.S.C. § 501 (regulating the filing of proofs of claim), Rule 3001(a) (contents of proof of claim), Rule 3001(f) (evidentiary effect of proof of claim) and Rule 9011 (requiring reasonable inquiry before filing of proof of claim). As a result, there is no merit to Wells Fargo's suggestion that the remedy in this case is somehow untethered to any other statutory provision.

Third, Wells Fargo argues that section 105(a) may not be used in a manner that affects other pending cases. Br. 53. Here again, nothing in the text of section 105(a) or in any authority cited by Wells Fargo supports such a limitation. Indeed, courts have regularly upheld orders under section 105(a) that have a much greater impact on other pending cases than the audit order at issue in this case. See, e.g., In re Davis, 730 F.2d 176, 184 (5th Cir. 1984) (upholding bankruptcy court order under section 105(a) that stayed litigation pending in other courts). In addition, in non-bankruptcy cases, this Court has rejected the argument that the effect of orders directed at abusive litigants should be confined to the court that issued the order. See Balawajder, 836 F.2d at 1067 (holding that pre-filing injunction issued by one district court was enforceable in other districts within the Fifth Circuit). Accordingly, the bankruptcy court did not exceed its authority by ordering Wells Fargo to amend its claims in other pending cases.

3. Wells Fargo's Objections to the Bankruptcy Court's Order to Amend Lack Merit.

Wells Fargo directs the bulk of its remaining arguments to the specific portion of the bankruptcy court's order that requires Wells Fargo to amend claims that it discovers to be in error as a result of the audit. Br. 35. Wells Fargo's arguments appear to be based on the misconception that this order preemptively resolves disputed legal issues in numerous unrelated cases to which Wells Fargo is a party. Id. The bankruptcy court's order has no such effect. Rather, as the bankruptcy court clarified, the obligation to amend is triggered only where Wells

Fargo itself believes that a proof of claim is incorrect, and therefore it is inapplicable to any claims that may be in bona fide dispute. Stewart II at 10.[4]

Contrary to Wells Fargo's argument, the amendment portion of the order neither interferes with the administration of other cases, nor does it materially alter Wells Fargo's rights or duties. As a claimant in a bankruptcy case, Wells Fargo is already under an ongoing duty to correct its proofs of claim once it discovers, through the audit, that they are erroneous. As lower courts consistently have recognized, once an error is discovered in a proof of claim, "it is the claimant's duty to amend in order to ensure accuracy." In re Hence, No. 06-32451-H4-13, 2007 WL 4333834 at *5 (Bankr. S.D. Tex. Dec. 5, 2007); see also In re Hannon, 421 B.R. 728, 733 (Bankr. M.D. Pa. 2009) (citing cases). By ordering Wells Fargo to amend claims it believes to be defective, the bankruptcy court has simply reiterated Wells Fargo's existing duties.

This result is consistent with this Court's jurisprudence under Fed. R.

[4] Wells Fargo's brief characterizes the order to amend as one that preemptively resolves various legal and contractual disputes that might arise in other cases involving Wells Fargo mortgages. Br. 33-34. As discussed, the United States construes the bankruptcy court's order more narrowly, and submits that the subsequent decision in Stewart II conclusively demonstrates that such order is applicable only to undisputed factual errors. Nevertheless, to the extent the issue is relevant, the United States concurs with Wells Fargo's view that the validity of Wells Fargo's accounting and collection actions should be determined according to the particular facts, contractual terms, and applicable regulatory framework of each case, and that the bankruptcy court's rulings on these issues in Stewart should not be dispositive of any other case.

Bankr. P. 9011 and Fed. R. Civ. P. 11.[5] Although this Court has recognized that compliance with Rule 11 is normally measured at the moment a pleading is filed, see Thomas v. Capital Sec. Services, Inc., 836 F.2d 866, 874 (5th Cir. 1987), in this case the record indicates that Wells Fargo never complied with Rule 9011 by making a reasonable inquiry into its proofs of claim in the first instance. As a result, to the extent that Wells Fargo has filed any erroneous claims for which no reasonable inquiry was ever made, it is already under a continuing obligation under Rule 9011 to verify and correct those claims. Cf. Skidmore Energy, Inc. v. KPMG, 455 F.3d 564 (5th Cir. 2006) (holding that Thomas did not preclude imposition of sanctions where party "never satisfied Rule 11 to begin with").

In addition, the bankruptcy court's order is not invalid because of a lack of specificity. Although Wells Fargo suggests that the bankruptcy court erred by requiring it "to comply with the principles established in this case and Jones," without separately defining those principles, Br. 29, any ambiguity in that order was cured by the court's subsequent decision in decision in Stewart II, which clarifies that Wells Fargo is required to correct only those claims that Wells Fargo itself believes to be inaccurate. Stewart II at 10.

The order to audit and amend claims also did not violate Wells Fargo's due process rights. Wells Fargo does not contend that it lacked notice of the conduct for which it was being held accountable, but rather contends that its due process rights were violated because the court did not provide it with notice that it was considering the specific remedy of a "broad injunction" involving other cases. Br. 40. Contrary to Wells Fargo's suggestion, however, there is no bright-line rule that a party must be given notice of the exact terms of an equitable remedy before such a remedy can be imposed. As courts have noted, "[t]he precise procedural protections of due process vary, depending upon the circumstances, because due process is a flexible concept unrestricted by any bright-line rules." Steinert v. Winn Group, Inc., 440 F.3d 1214 1222 (10th Cir. 2006). In particular, where a party is sanctioned for its litigation misconduct, this Court has not hesitated to hold that due process was satisfied merely upon a general warning to the party that sanctions might be imposed. See Henderson v. Dept. of Public Safety & Corrections, 901 F.2d 1288, 1294 (5th Cir. 1990) (warnings by district judge and magistrate judge that future frivolous motions may result in Rule 11 sanctions satisfied due process).

In any event, the record of this case demonstrates that Wells Fargo received ample due process before the bankruptcy court ordered it to audit and amend its claims. As Wells Fargo admits, it was given three evidentiary hearings to explain its conduct. Br. 9-11. Moreover, the order in Stewart I was preceded by the same bankruptcy judge's decision in Jones, which imposed equitable and injunctive relief against Wells Fargo based on deficiencies similar to those that occurred in Stewart. Stewart I at 18 n. 23. Consequently, even if Ms. Stewart's counsel did not specifically request non-monetary relief, Wells Fargo had actual notice that such remedies were a possibility. Finally, Wells Fargo offers no explanation for how it would have altered its trial strategy had it known that the court was considering equitable as well as monetary remedies.

Finally, there is also no merit to Wells Fargo's contention that the bankruptcy court lacked subject matter jurisdiction to remedy Wells Fargo's deficient claims-filing practices. Br. 35. The statutory subject matter jurisdiction of the bankruptcy courts includes, among other things, all matters "arising in a case under title 11." 28 U.S.C. § 157(b)(1). As this Court has observed, this jurisdictional grant includes proceedings to remedy misconduct occurring in a bankruptcy case. See In re TByrd Enterprises LLC, No. 08-41104, 2009 WL 3199593 (5th Cir. Oct. 7, 2009) (holding that "the imposition of sanctions on litigants in a bankruptcy case is clearly a matter 'arising in'" a bankruptcy case for purposes of 28 U.S.C. § 157). Moreover, there is no jurisdictional obstacle to a court imposing a form of discipline against a party that has the effect of regulating that party's conduct in other proceedings. See In re Martin-Trigona, 737 F.2d 1254, 1261 (2d Cir. 1984) (rejecting argument that district court lacked jurisdiction to impose nationwide, prospective injunction against vexatious litigant); Farguson, 808 F.2d at 360 (citing Martin-Trigona with approval). Accordingly, the bankruptcy court had subject matter jurisdiction to order Wells Fargo to audit and amend its claims.

CONCLUSION

For these reasons, the United States respectfully requests that this Court affirm the orders of the bankruptcy court and the district court.

SUPPLEMENTAL BRIEF OF THE UNITED STATES, AS AMICUS CURIAE, IN RESPONSE TO COURT DIRECTIVE DATED OCTOBER 15, 2010

PRELIMINARY STATEMENT

On May 1, 2010, the United States filed a brief in this appeal as amicus curiae in support of partial affirmance. The United States did not take a position on the merits of the dispute between Ms. Stewart and Wells Fargo regarding the interpretation of Ms. Stewart's mortgage. Instead, the United States argued that the bankruptcy court appropriately required that Wells Fargo to conduct an audit and take certain other actions in bankruptcy cases not involving Ms. Stewart. This Court heard argument on the appeal, in which the United States participated, on October 5, 2010.

On October 15, 2010, the Court issued a directive inviting the United States to submit a supplemental brief "addressing whether there exists an Article III case or controversy regarding injunctive relief when the debtor has not personally asserted a likelihood of future injury from the allegedly unlawful conduct." The United States submits this brief in response to that invitation.

ARGUMENT

I. The audit order presents a "case or controversy" because it is amenable to judicial resolution and because it arose in an adversarial context.

The grant of subject matter jurisdiction to a federal court is limited to actual "cases" or "controversies." U.S. Const. Art. III, Sec. 2. As this Court has observed, the case or controversy doctrine imposes two basic requirements before a federal court may exercise its jurisdiction: the question must be "presented in an adversary context," and it must be "amenable to resolution through the judicial process." Dailey v. Voight Aircraft Co., 141 F.3d 224, 227 (5th Cir. 1998).

Both requirements are met here. The Supreme Court has construed the "amenable to resolution" test as meaning that the court must have the practical ability to order relief, and that the relief must be something that is "historically viewed" as a judicial function. GTE Sylvania, Inc. v. Consumers Union of U. S., Inc., 445 U.S. 375, 382 (1980). Here, the audit remedy is amenable to resolution through the judicial process because it obligates Wells Fargo to take actions that it would not have been required to take absent the order, and because the court has the ability to monitor and enforce Wells Fargo's compliance with that order. Cf. In re Stewart, Case No. 07-11113, 2008 WL 5096011 (Bankr. E.D. La. Oct. 15, 2008) (establishing procedure for enforcement of audit remedy). In addition, the remedy of ordering an audit is a traditional function of bankruptcy courts. See Marrama v. Citizens Bank of Massachusetts, 549 U.S. 365, 383 (2007) (Alito, J., dissenting) (noting the historical equitable power of bankruptcy courts to "requir[e] accountings"). Furthermore, the extensive litigation record in this Court and in the proceedings below also reflects that the audit has been presented in an adversary context.

II. The bankruptcy court had power to order the audit because it was a recognized collateral proceeding and because it had statutory power to prevent abuse.

Although the basic jurisdictional requirement of a case or controversy is met, the United States understands the Court's directive to raise a related issue: does the bankruptcy court's subject matter jurisdiction over the audit terminate once there is no longer a case or controversy which affects Ms. Stewart personally? The United States submits that it does not, for two reasons: first, under the analysis adopted by the Supreme Court, the audit is a "collateral issue" over which the bankruptcy court could exercise jurisdiction independently of its jurisdiction in the underlying case. Secondly, because the bankruptcy court was authorized to order the audit on its own authority, and for the purpose of preventing abuse in the bankruptcy system as a whole, Ms. Stewart's participation was never necessary to the audit at all, and the resolution of all remaining issues affecting her cannot terminate the bankruptcy court's authority to enforce that order.

A. The audit order is a collateral order.

As the Supreme Court has noted, "[i]t is well established that a federal court may consider collateral issues after an action is no longer pending." Cooter & Gell v. Hartmarx Corp., 496 U.S. 384, 395-96 (1990). A "collateral issue," in turn, is one that "does not signify a[n] . . . assessment of the legal merits" of the underlying complaint, but which may be resolved independently of the main dispute. Id. at 396. Notably, the Supreme Court has described "the determination of . . . whether [an] attorney has abused the judicial process" as a prototypical example of a collateral issue. Id.; see also Willy v. Coastal Corp., 503 U.S. 131, 138 (1992) (same).

The audit remedy in this case differs from the remedies in Cooter and Willy in that was directed not at an attorney, but at a party. However, since the principal sources of authority for the remedies in both Cooter and Willy (Rule 11) and in this case (11 U.S.C. § 105(a)) are applicable to both attorneys and represented parties, there is no reason to distinguish Cooter and Willy on that basis.

A principal consequence of the collateral issue doctrine is that a court evaluates its subject matter jurisdiction over the collateral issue without regard to whether it also has subject matter jurisdiction in the underlying case. Thus, in Cooter, the Supreme Court upheld the jurisdiction of the trial court to enter a Rule 11 sanctions order even after the case in which the sanction arose had been voluntarily dismissed. Cooter, 496 U.S. at 398. In Willy, the underlying case was one over which the district court never had proper subject matter jurisdiction at all. Willy, 503 U.S. at 133. The Supreme Court nevertheless upheld the district court's jurisdiction to issue a sanction for misconduct that occurred before the case was dismissed, rejecting the petitioner's contention that the lack of underlying subject matter jurisdiction meant that there was no "case or controvers[y]" regarding the sanction. Id. at 135-36; see also Chambers v. NASCO, Inc., 501 U.S. 32 (1991) (affirming order that sanctioned party for misconduct occurring over the entire course of a lawsuit, where sanctions proceeding commenced after the lawsuit was decided).

In this case, the dispute over the audit is collateral to Ms. Stewart's bankruptcy case. The bankruptcy court's decision reflects that the audit was ordered not solely in response to the errors in Ms. Stewart's case, but was based on the court's determination that Wells Fargo was engaged in deficient practices in a wide range of other cases as well. See In re Stewart, 391 B.R. 327, 342 (Bankr. E.D. La. 2008) (attributing abuses to Wells Fargo's "corporate practice"). As the United States discussed in its brief, the principal findings underlying the determination of abuse are undisputed, and the audit can be affirmed even if Wells Fargo prevails on every other argument which it has raised on appeal. See U.S. Amicus Br. 8.

This Court recently applied the collateral issue doctrine to a case presenting a jurisdictional scenario virtually indistinguishable from the audit issue in this case. In Qureshi v. United States, a district court enjoined an abusive litigant from filing papers in Texas federal courts without prior written permission from the judge. Qureshi v. United States, 600 F.3d 523, 524 (5th Cir. 2010). Notably, like the audit remedy in this case, the Qureshi injunction was not limited to proceedings before the same judge, and by its terms it also extended to cases having nothing to do with the United States, the adverse party in the case in which the injunction was issued. Id.

Although this Court eventually vacated the injunction on other grounds, it specifically rejected Qureshi's claim that the injunction exceeded the district court's jurisdiction because the underlying case had been resolved. Id. at 525. Noting that there was no reason to distinguish between the equitable remedy imposed by the district judge and the Rule 11 sanctions discussed in Cooter and Willy, this Court held that the equitable remedy presented a "collateral issue." As a result, this Court concluded that the holdings of Cooter and Willy were directly applicable, and that the trial court's jurisdiction to impose the equitable remedy did not depend on it having continued subject matter jurisdiction over the underlying case. Id. at 526. The same reasoning applies here.

B. The bankruptcy court had the authority to order the audit sua sponte.

Indeed, the bankruptcy court's actions here are even more appropriate because it was acting under a federal statute that allowed it to act sua sponte. See 11 U.S.C. § 105(a) (authorizing bankruptcy court to "sua sponte [take] any action . . . necessary or appropriate to enforce or implement court orders or rules or to prevent an abuse of process"). The jurisdiction of courts to enter sua sponte orders to protect their own proceedings is well-established in this circuit, and is unremarkable in the bankruptcy context. See, e.g., In re Thomson, 48 Fed. Appx. 918 (5th Cir. 2002) (holding that district court had subject matter jurisdiction to open a proceeding captioned as "Thomson v. No Defendant Named" and to simultaneously issue a sua sponte order barring attorney from courthouse, independent of any pending case or controversy).

Furthermore, in addition to section 105(a), numerous provisions of the Bankruptcy Code give bankruptcy court express statutory authority to act sua sponte. See, e.g., 11 U.S.C. § 107 (bankruptcy court may enter protective order on court's own motion); § 110(h)(4) (court may initiate proceeding against bankruptcy petition preparer); § 526(c)(5) (authorizing sua sponte injunction against debt relief agency); § 707(b)(1) (authorizing sua sponte dismissal of consumer bankruptcy case).

In this case, section 105(a) expressly authorizes the bankruptcy court to enter sua sponte orders to prevent abuse, and not merely remedy abuse after the fact. The bankruptcy court's actions here fell well within its Congressional authorization, and should be upheld.

III. The bankruptcy court's power to prevent abuse is not limited to cases involving Ms. Stewart.

As the United States stated in its amicus brief, the audit remedy was an exercise of the bankruptcy court's statutory power under section 105 of the Bankruptcy Code, which authorizes bankruptcy courts to enter orders to "prevent an abuse of process." 11 U.S.C. §105(a); U.S. Amicus Br. 9. This authorization to prevent abuse is "broad." In re Marrama, 549 U.S. at 379. In particular, as numerous courts have recognized, section 105(a) does not merely authorize courts to protect particular parties from abuse in a single case. Rather, it also authorizes courts to take action on a global basis to protect the bankruptcy system as a whole. See, e.g., In re Morgan, 573 F.3d 615, 626 (8th Cir. 2009) (holding that section 105(a) authorized bankruptcy court to issue order removing private trustee from all cases in which she was appointed, even absent showing of actual harm to estate or creditors); In re Casse, 198 F.3d 327, 340 (2d Cir. 1999) (holding that section 105(a) authorized bankruptcy court to enjoin abusive litigant from filing future bankruptcy petitions).

For these reasons, the question of whether Ms. Stewart personally will suffer a future injury is not relevant to an analysis of the bankruptcy court's jurisdiction. The audit remedy is designed to protect the entire bankruptcy system, not solely Ms. Stewart. See In re Nosek, 544 F.3d 34 (1st Cir. 2008) (noting that purpose of section 105(a) is to "preserve the integrity of the bankruptcy system") (internal citation omitted). Thus, for purposes of evaluating the availability of injunctive relief in this case, it is the bankruptcy system, and not Ms. Stewart personally, that must be exposed to the threat of future injury. As the district court noted, to the extent that it is even applicable, that requirement was satisfied by the bankruptcy court's extensive findings regarding the systemic nature of Wells Fargo's misconduct. See In re Stewart, 2009 WL 2448054 at *15 (E.D. La. Aug. 7, 2009) (summarizing relevant bankruptcy court findings). Those findings have not been challenged on appeal.

IV. The bankruptcy court has independent authority to protect the integrity of its own proceedings, which it may exercise even in the absence of Ms. Stewart's participation.

Finally, as noted above, it is unnecessary for this Court to find that Ms. Stewart had standing to request the audit, because, as the text of section 105(a) itself provides, such relief could be ordered by the bankruptcy court on its own initiative. See 11 U.S.C. §105(a) (recognizing authority of court to prevent abuse sua sponte). Indeed, the authority of bankruptcy courts to enter sua sponte relief under section 105(a) is well established in this circuit. See In re Thomas, 223 Fed. Appx. 310, 314 (5th Cir. 2007) (affirming sua sponte order of bankruptcy court that vacated confirmed plan pursuant to section 105(a)); In re Beard, 84 F.3d 431 (5th Cir. 1996) (affirming sua sponte order denying confirmation of plan on grounds of bad faith); In re Hammers, 988 F.2d 32, 35 (5th Cir. 1993) (affirming sua sponte order of dismissal).

Nothing in this case is particularly novel. Court-initiated inquiries under 11 U.S.C. § 105(a) and other provisions into systemic abuses by national mortgage lenders and their attorneys have become common in bankruptcy cases in recent years. See, e.g., In re Parsley, 384 B.R. 138 (Bankr. S.D. Tex. 2008) (bankruptcy court issued order to show cause against lender and attorneys under 11 U.S.C. § 105(a) where factual errors in pleading were caused, in part, by corporate policy that prohibited direct communication between attorney and client); In re Cabrera-Mejia, 402 B.R. 335 (Bankr. C.D. Cal. 2008) (sua sponte proceeding under 11 U.S.C. § 105(a) and Fed. R. Bankr. P. 9011 to consider sanctions against law firm that persistently filed and withdrew inaccurate pleadings in multiple cases); In re Porcheddu, 338 B.R. 729 (Bankr. S.D. Tex. 2006) (order to show cause under Fed.

R. Bankr. P. 9011 directed against attorneys for lender who systemically falsified fee statements)

In some cases, court-initiated remedies may be not only permissible, but even mandatory. In Espinosa v. United Student Aid Funds, 130 S.Ct. 1367 (2010), for example, the Supreme Court considered the issue of an abusive chapter 13 plan that was confirmed by the bankruptcy court after no creditor objected. Reversing the judgment of the Ninth Circuit, the Supreme Court held that section 105(a), among other provisions, required the court to sua sponte deny confirmation. As a result, the Supreme Court concluded that "the Code makes plain that bankruptcy courts have the authority - indeed, the obligation - to direct a debtor to conform his plan" to the Bankruptcy Code, even when no party objects. Id. at 1381 (emphasis added).

In the context of creditor abuse litigation, there are also important public policy reasons why courts should be empowered to act to prevent abuse independently of the debtor. Individual debtors typically have little or no financial incentive to seek to curb a lender's abuses outside of their own cases. Moreover, such debtors almost invariably lack the legal resources required to fully investigate a lender's systemic conduct. Any rule that prohibited entities other than the debtor from investigating systemic creditor abuse could create perverse results, since any creditor could escape scrutiny of its conduct if the debtor agred to settle or lost the ability to continue his litigation efforts. Cf. In re Hill, 437 B.R. 503, 517 (Bankr. W.D. Pa. 2010) (attributing mortgage lender's desire to quickly settle case with debtor to desire to quash further investigation of its alleged abusive activities); see also Porcheddu, 338 B.R. at 729 (noting that death of debtor did not terminate court's inquiry into lender's misconduct).

These same principles apply here. Once the bankruptcy court determined that Wells Fargo's conduct constituted an abuse of the bankruptcy system, it had the authority, if not the obligation, to order relief to remedy that abuse. No action by Ms. Stewart was required in order to trigger that authority, and for the same reason, the termination of any continuing dispute involving Ms. Stewart does not deprive the court of its jurisdiction to protect the bankruptcy system against abuse.

CONCLUSION

For the foregoing reasons, the judgment of the courts below should be affirmed.

OF THE TENTH CIRCUIT

BRIEF FOR THE APPELLEE

STATEMENT OF SUBJECT MATTER AND APPELLATE JURISDICTION

The bankruptcy court had jurisdiction over this case under 28 U.S.C. 151 and 28 U.S.C. 1334. The court entered an order dismissing the debtor's petition (subject to the debtor's right to raise a constitutional challenge to 11 U.S.C. 707(b)) on October 31, 1996, App. 854-82, and entered an order finally dismissing the petition on January 31, 1997, App. 936-41. The debtor filed a timely notice of appeal on February 7, 1997. App. 943-45. The Bankruptcy Appellate Panel of the Tenth Circuit had jurisdiction over that appeal under 28 U.S.C. 158(c). The Panel entered an order affirming the order of the bankruptcy court on December 9, 1997. App. 1842-61. The debtor filed a timely notice of appeal on January 6, 1998. App. 1894-95. This Court has jurisdiction under 28 U.S.C. 158(d).

STATEMENT OF THE ISSUES

1. Whether granting chapter 7 relief to Stewart would be a substantial abuse of the provisions of that chapter, in light of his ability to repay his debts, the circumstances surrounding the filing of his chapter 7 petition, and other facts found by the bankruptcy court.

This issue was raised in Stewart's response to the U.S. Trustee's motion to dismiss, App. 193, and was ruled upon by the bankruptcy court, App. 877-82, and the Bankruptcy Appellate Panel, App. 1859-61.

2. Whether Stewart's debts were "primarily consumer debts" under 11 U.S.C. 707(b).

This issue was raised in Stewart's response to the U.S. Trustee's motion to dismiss, App. 193, and was ruled upon by the bankruptcy court, App. 870-77, and the Bankruptcy Appellate Panel, App. 1854-59.

3. Whether section 707(b) is consistent with equal protection and is not unconstitutionally vague.

This issue was raised in Stewart's response to the U.S. Trustee's motion to dismiss, App. 194, and was ruled upon by the bankruptcy court, App. 936-41, and the Bankruptcy Appellate Panel, App. 1851-54.

STATEMENT OF THE CASE

A. Nature of the Case.

This case arises out of a chapter 7 petition filed by Dr. Jeffrey D. Stewart, an obstetrician-gynecologist. Stewart sought to discharge his debts, which consisted in large part of alimony and child support to his ex-wife and children under a divorce settlement, amounts owing to his former in-laws, and student loan obligations. On motion of the U.S. Trustee pursuant to 11 U.S.C. 707(b), the bankruptcy court dismissed the petition for "substantial abuse." The debtor appealed, but the Bankruptcy Appellate Panel of the Tenth Circuit affirmed the dismissal. The debtor now appeals again.

B. Statutory Background.

1. The U.S. Trustees Program was created by Congress in 1978 in order to "separate the administrative duties in bankruptcy from the judicial tasks, leaving the bankruptcy judges free to resolve disputes untainted by knowledge of administrative matters unnecessary and perhaps prejudicial to an impartial judicial determination." H.R. Rep. No. 764, 99th Cong., 2d Sess. 18, reprinted in 1986 U.S.C.C.A.N. 5227, 5230. Until the Bankruptcy Reform Act was passed in 1978, administration of individual bankruptcy cases was the responsibility of bankruptcy judges.

Because of the bankruptcy judges' "dual responsibilities — administrative and judicial," there was a "close relationship between bankruptcy judges, trustees, trustees' attorneys, and the bankruptcy bar that led to the perception that there was a 'bankruptcy ring' that had the inside track on all bankruptcy matters." General Accounting Office, Bankruptcy Administration: Justification Lacking for Continuing Two Parallel Programs, Sept. 1992 (GAO/GGD-92-133), at 4; see H.R. Rep. No. 595, 95th Cong., 2d Sess. 95, reprinted in 1978 U.S.C.C.A.N. 5963, 6056-57 (discussing "bankruptcy ring").

Congress, accordingly, created the U.S. Trustees Program as an agency within the Department of Justice to take over the administrative responsibilities for bankruptcy cases. In doing so, Congress "likened the U.S. trustee's relation to that of a prosecutor." In re Revco D.S., Inc., 898 F.2d 498, 500 (6th Cir. 1990). But the U.S. Trustee was designed to serve not only as a prosecutor but also as a "watchdog." A "good watchdog guards the interests of those for whom it watches; the roles are not incompatible." Id.; see In re A-1 Trash Pickup, Inc., 802 F.2d 774, 775 (4th Cir. 1986) (legislative history "indicates that Congress expected for United States Trustees to oversee administration of bankruptcy cases and act as 'watchdogs . . . prevent[ing] fraud, dishonesty, and overreaching in the bankruptcy arena'") (citation omitted).

The duties of the U.S. Trustees are set forth in 28 U.S.C. 586(a). Principally, the U.S. Trustee is to "establish, maintain, and supervise a panel of private trustees that are eligible and available to serve as trustees in cases under chapter 7 of title 11," and to "supervise the administration of" chapter 7, 11, or 13 bankruptcy cases in numerous respects. 28 U.S.C. 586(a)(1) & (3)(A)-(H). In addition, the U.S. Trustee is authorized to serve as a bankruptcy trustee when required under title 11. 28 U.S.C. 586(a)(2), (4) & (5).

2. When Congress created the U.S. Trustees program, "it expected the trustees to actively oversee the administration of bankruptcy cases and to intervene whenever particular actions threatened an abuse of the bankruptcy system or its procedures." In re A-1 Trash Pickup, 802 F.2d at 775-76. Thus, in 1986,

Congress gave the U.S. Trustees the authority to file a motion to dismiss a chapter 7 petition for "substantial abuse":

> (b) After notice and a hearing, the court, on its own motion or on a motion by the United States trustee, but not at the request or suggestion of any party in interest, may dismiss a case filed by an individual debtor under this chapter whose debts are primarily consumer debts if it finds that the granting of relief would be a substantial abuse of the provisions of this chapter. There shall be a presumption in favor of granting the relief requested by the debtor.

11 U.S.C. 707(b).

C. Statement of Facts.

Stewart married Barbara Teichner in 1978 while they were enrolled in college and, after leaving college, had four children between 1980 and 1987. App. 854. During this time Stewart had a variety of jobs, including cook, baker, delivery truck driver, and ice skating teacher. "His family's standard of living was minimal." Id. Stewart took college classes from time to time. App. 855.

Stewart's in-laws, the Teichners, lent them money, which was used partly to cover the cost of Stewart's education but "largely to pay for his and his family's normal living expenses during his long period of part-time and/or low-paying employment." App. 871. Stewart also took loans from commercial lenders under "government-sponsored educational loan programs." Stewart obtained a Bachelor of Science degree. App. 855.

In 1988, Stewart went to medical school, enrolling at the University of Oklahoma at Norman. At medical school Stewart met Patricia Hill, and "[d]omestic difficulties ensued." Stewart moved his family to Tulsa and transferred to the medical school at the University of Oklahoma at Tulsa. Stewart and Barbara separated at some time between April and July 1990, and Stewart "promptly commenced a 'romantic liaison' and 'conjugal relationship' with Patricia." Id.

In September 1990, Barbara filed for divorce, which Stewart did not contest. Their Marital Settlement Agreement required Stewart to pay alimony (which it referred to as "support alimony") of $500 a month until he finished his residency or became a licensed physician, and after that $25,000 a year up to a total of $2 million. The $2 million total, however, would be reduced to $250,000 if Barbara remarried. In addition, Stewart agreed to pay $2000 a month in child support and some additional child-related expenses, including college and post-graduate tuition, room, and board. The agreement required Stewart to obtain a residency that would enable him to earn income to provide the child support. App. 855-56. A divorce decree, which approved the agreement, was entered in October 1990. App. 856-57.

Stewart graduated from medical school in 1992 and began his internship and residency at the University of Oklahoma at Tulsa. At about that time, he stopped paying support to Barbara, moved to modify his child support payments, and moved to vacate the divorce decree on the ground of duress (Barbara's alleged threat to make public Stewart's extramarital affair).[1] Barbara agreed

[1] Between November 1995 and January 1996, Stewart's motion to vacate the divorce decree was tried in state court and denied. His motion for a new trial was also denied, with the court explaining that Stewart's duress claim "makes no sense" since the extramarital affair had previously been disclosed. App. 859 (quoting state court order). The state court noted that Stewart to a 70% reduction in child support but not to modification or vacation of the divorce decree. App. 857. Barbara married Larry Rose in May 1993. App. 857-58.

D. Proceedings Below.

1. In May 1996, Stewart filed his chapter 7 petition. Stewart scheduled assets valued at $23,066 and debts totaling $2,548,440.37, which included $2,000,000 owed to Barbara, $272,133 in student loans (plus an unknown amount in additional student loans), and $230,000 owed to the Teichners. App. 1845. The $2 million owed to Barbara did not take into account the provision of the marital settlement reducing Stewart's obligation to $250,000 if Barbara remarried. Id. Stewart explained that he had set the alimony debt at $2 million because he was unsure what would happen to his obligation if Barbara's second husband died or if they divorced. App. 1848.

In June 1996, Stewart completed his residency in obstetrics-gynecology. He also filed an adversary proceeding against Barbara seeking discharge of his debts under the marital agreement on the ground that those debts "are not true alimony or support but merely property division" and are excessively hard for him to repay. App. 862. Before the bankruptcy court could was "intent on leaving the marriage and the problems of raising the four children born of it," and that Barbara was "in ill health, virtually bedridden and saddled with children reacting adversely to the separation and impending divorce." App. 859-60. The state court concluded: "The pressure on him was internal and of his own making. He wanted a divorce 'bad' and he got one — a bad divorce. [He] made a bad bargain but with eyes open, fully informed and under no threat other than dealing with his own conscience." App. 860.

rule, "another matter intervened": the U.S. Trustee filed a motion under 11 U.S.C. 707(b) to dismiss the petition for substantial abuse. Id. The U.S. Trustee's motion argued that Stewart was currently employed, had completed his OB/GYN residency, and had an earning potential of $100,000 to $250,000 a year. It also argued that upon completion of his fellowship, he would have an earning potential of $250,000 to $500,000 a year. Finally, it asserted that Stewart's sole purpose in filing a chapter 7 petition was to discharge marital and family obligations when Stewart was able to repay a substantial portion of his debts.[2] App. 862-63.

The same day Stewart responded to the U.S. Trustee's motion, he amended his bankruptcy schedules. He reduced slightly the value of his assets and increased his liabilities to about $2.6 million. He switched his purported $2 million debt to Barbara from Schedule F (unsecured nonpriority claims) to Schedule E (unsecured priority claims); he increased his debt to the Teichners to about $320,000, claimed student loan debts of about $218,000, and listed a total unsecured debt of $582,509. App. 1845. Stewart claimed that his monthly take-home pay was $2,556 and projected his average monthly take-home pay for 1996 at [2] The U.S. Trustee also pointed out that Stewart had failed to report the income of Patricia, his second wife, "who is a practicing physician and contributes to the payment of the monthly expenses." App. 863, quoting motion. The bankruptcy court concluded that by failing to include Patricia's income Stewart had presented a "seriously misleading picture of his actual financial status." App. 879. The Bankruptcy Appellate Panel disagreed, App. 1848-49, and we do not pursue this point here.

$3,403. He listed monthly expenses of $7,966. App. 1845-46.

2. The bankruptcy court held an evidentiary hearing on the U.S. Trustee's motion. There was testimony that in 1995 perinatology program graduates without board certification had estimated starting salaries of $100,000 to $140,000.[3] The U.S. Trustee introduced evidence that between 1991 and 1995 OB/GYN specialists earned salaries between $175,000 and $325,000 and that the highest salaries were in excess of $500,000. Stewart himself testified that if he were in private practice, instead of having accepted a perinatology fellowship, he could have been earning $80,000 to $100,000 a year. App. 866-67.

The bankruptcy court concluded that Stewart's chapter 7 petition should be dismissed for substantial abuse, applying a "totality of the circumstances" analysis: "All relevant circumstances should be considered, including but not limited to the debtor's ability to repay his debts." App. 877. The court relied primarily on Stewart's "considerable earning potential." Id. "By his own admission, he could be making $80,000-$100,000 per year right now, fresh out of medical school," and his own witnesses suggested he could "soon" earn up to $140,000 — a figure that could double or triple, according to the U.S. Trustee. App. 877-78. Stewart's reported expenses were "improvidently high" and he did not "tighten his belt." App. 880, quoting In re Goodson, 130 B.R. 897, 901 (Bankr. N.D. Okla.

[3] The published version of the opinion gives this range as $100,000 to $150,000. In re Stewart, 201 B.R. 996, 1001 (Bankr. N.D. Okla. 1996), aff'd, 215 B.R. 456 (B.A.P. 10th Cir. 1997).

1991). The court noted that Stewart's excuse — the need to maintain two houses — made no sense, since the second house was "kept to facilitate his travel to work at a new job that pays him less (very much less) than he is capable of earning." App. 880. Moreover, Stewart's effort to undo his divorce settlement, the timing of his bankruptcy petition, and "other circumstances (such as buying an expensive recreational vehicle while refusing to pay his children's medical bills)" indicate that he "has no intention of honoring the notes he gave Mr. and Mrs. Teichner, the marital agreement with Barbara, or his legal and moral obligation to support his own children." App. 878.

The bankruptcy court also held that Stewart's debts were "primarily consumer debts," — i.e., debts "incurred by an individual primarily for a personal, family, or household purpose." 11 U.S.C. 101(8). The student loans were not taken with a "profit motive," since a significant part of the proceeds went to pay the family's living expenses and Stewart himself disclaimed an interest in high income. App. 874. Similarly, the debts to Barbara and the Teichners were consumer debts because they, too, were for a personal, family, or household purpose. App. 876.

Noting that Stewart has the means to meet his financial obligations and that chapter 11 is, in any event, available to him and not unduly burdensome, the court held that granting relief under chapter 7 would be a substantial abuse. It would "amount to a reward for Stewart's own financial improvidence and judicial blessing of an unconscionably one-sided, opportunistic adjustment of Stewart's relationship with his domestic creditors." App. 882. The bankruptcy court, however, withheld action on the dismissal pending Stewart's briefing of his constitutional challenge to section 707(b).

On January 31, 1997, the bankruptcy court rejected the constitutional challenge. First, the court held that section 707(b)'s provision for dismissal of cases involving primarily consumer debts was not meant to imply a right to abuse chapter 7 by business debtors. Section 707(b)'s singling out of consumer debtors for special attention was rational, because it addresses "a type of bankruptcy case which is especially liable to abuse and especially deserving of review" — a case involving an individual debtor who "takes advantage of modern easy-credit practices to accumulate debts, for the immediate purpose of satisfying his private appetites and maintaining or enhancing his personal qualities and lifestyle, or those of his dependents — often in circumstances which offer creditors little security . . . ." App. 939, quoting App. 872-73.

The court also rejected Stewart's argument that the terms of the statute — "primarily," "consumer debt," "substantial," and "abuse" — were unconstitutionally vague, relying on its earlier decision in In re Higginbotham, 111 B.R. 955 (Bankr. N.D. Okla. 1990). App. 940.

3. Stewart appealed to the Bankruptcy Appellate Panel of the Tenth Circuit, which affirmed the bankruptcy court's dismissal for substantial abuse. The Panel first held that section 707(b) did not prohibit an action by the U.S. Trustee following Barbara's request or suggestion that one be commenced.

The statutory language "not at the request or suggestion of any party in interest" limits "who may file the motion[;] it does not limit the source of information or factual basis on which the United States Trustee or the court may initiate a § 707(b) motion." App. 1850. In any event, the U.S. Trustee in this case undertook an independent investigation and relied on information beyond that provided by Barbara. App. 1851.

Second, the Panel agreed that section 707(b) is constitutional. By using a "totality of the circumstances" test for substantial abuse, the courts are acting essentially the same as they act with regard to business debtors under 11 U.S.C. 105(a) and 11 U.S.C. 707(a). Because there was no practical distinction between consumer debtors and business debtors, it was not even necessary to reach the equal protection claim. App. 1852-52. The Panel also agreed that the terms in section 707(b) were not unconstitutionally vague. App. 1853.

Third, the Panel found that the debts to Barbara and the Teichners were consumer debts. The Teichner loans were made mostly to enable Stewart, Barbara, and their family to meet ordinary living expenses, App. 1856-57, and Stewart admitted that there was no authority for treating marital obligations as a business debt. App. 1858. The Panel held that student loans were not per se consumer debts, but it found no clear error in the bankruptcy court's determination that they were on the facts of this case. Even if they were not, however, Stewart's debts were primarily — that is, more than half, App. 1858 — consumer debts based on the marital debt and the debt to the Teichners.

Evidence at trial showed that the marital debt was $250,000, the Teichner debt was $320,000, and the student loan debt was $218,000. The $250,000 and the $320,000 amounts together ($570,000) represented more than half of Stewart's total of $837,009 in total debt, even without adding in the student loans. App. 1859.

Finally, the Panel concluded that the bankruptcy court properly dismissed the petition for substantial abuse. The Panel adopted the "totality of the circumstances" approach, including among the relevant factors:

> (1) circumstances surrounding the bankruptcy filing (i.e., was it induced by emergency, sudden illness, disability, unemployment, etc.); (2) whether the debtor incurred cash advances and made consumer purchases far in excess of his or her ability to pay; (3) whether the debtor's budget is excessive or unreasonable; (4) whether the debtor's schedules and statement of income and expenses reasonably and accurately reflect his or her true financial condition; (5) whether the petition was filed in good faith; and (6) whether the debtor has the ability to repay.

App. 1859-60. The Panel found that the record supported the bankruptcy court's determination that the chapter 7 proceeding constituted a substantial abuse. The petition had been filed shortly after the divorce but not after a sudden emergency. Although deeply in debt, Stewart has the "genuine ability to earn significant income" and he agrees that Patricia's income may be considered under section 707(b). App. 1860. Stewart has not earned significantly higher income only because he chose to enter a lower-paying fellowship. He has deferred income at a time when his monthly expenses exceeded his monthly income by about $4,500 and after living on institutional and family loans for 20 years.

He has tried to discharge some or all of the marital debt and all of the family loans, asking his family and his former in-laws once again to "bear the financial consequences of his personal ambition." App. 1861.

Because Stewart "has the current ability to pay, and in the near future his income prospects will increase significantly," and because of the circumstances surrounding the filing of the petition and the purpose for which the debts were used, the Panel found that this case presented a substantial abuse of chapter 7. Id.

I. The bankruptcy court found that granting relief to Stewart under chapter 7 would be a substantial abuse, and the Bankruptcy Appellate Panel agreed. Stewart accepts the "totality of the circumstances" approach to substantial abuse but disagrees with its application here. Nothing Stewart argues in this Court indicates that any fact finding or the conclusion that there was substantial abuse was wrong.

The bankruptcy court dismissed Stewart's petition for substantial abuse based on several findings of fact. It found that Stewart had "considerable earning potential," App. 877, and could soon earn up to $140,000 a year, but that he had chosen a low-paying fellowship, which made it difficult for him to pay his debts. It found that he filed for bankruptcy shortly after his divorce without any emergency or immediate need. The bankruptcy court also found that Stewart had no intention of making good on his obligations to his ex-wife, his children, and his former in-laws and that the main effect of permitting discharge would be to discharge those very obligations. It found that Stewart's expenses were also excessive. Finally, the bankruptcy court found that granting Stewart chapter 7 relief would "result in little or no dividend to creditors, and would amount to a reward for Stewart's own financial improvidence and judicial blessing of an unconscionably one-sided, opportunistic adjustment of Stewart's relationship with his domestic creditors." App. 882. These facts are sufficient to support dismissal under section 707(b).

Stewart argues that section 707(b) does not apply to him because his debts are not "primarily consumer debts." He does not dispute the meaning of that phrase but merely disagrees with the bankruptcy court's findings of fact regarding that issue. The bankruptcy court found that Stewart's debt to his ex-wife and his debt to his former in-laws were consumer debts because they were incurred "primarily for a personal, family, or household purpose." 11 U.S.C. 101(8). Stewart merely disputes the weight that the bankruptcy court gave to the testimony on this issue. He agrees that "primarily" means more than half, and the bankruptcy court found that the debts to his ex-wife and former in-laws were over half of his total debts. It is not necessary to decide here whether Stewart's student loans were also consumer debt, because his other consumer debts already are more than half the amount of his total debt.

Stewart is also mistaken in claiming that the U.S. Trustee's motion under section 707(b) was tainted because it was based on the suggestion of his ex-wife, a party in interest. The language of section 707(b) is clear that the court may not dismiss a case on the "request or suggestion of any party in interest," but that the U.S. Trustee is not precluded from making a motion based on such a request or suggestion. As the Bankruptcy Appellate Panel put it, the statutory language "limits who may file the motion, [but] it does not limit the source of information or factual basis on which the United States Trustee or the court may initiate a § 707(b) motion." App. 1850. The two canons of construction Stewart invokes do not support Stewart's position.

II. Stewart's two constitutional challenges to section 707(b) are wholly without merit. His vagueness challenge boils down to the observation that different courts have applied the terms of that provision differently. But this happens all the time, and it often requires a Supreme Court decision to bring uniformity to the case law. Stewart's equal-protection challenge is essentially a claim of underinclusiveness — that, while Congress may properly have covered consumer debtors under section 707(b), it was constitutionally required to include business debtors as well. This argument is without basis. Congress could rationally have concluded that abuse of chapter 7 by consumer debtors was a more serious problem. It is well established that under rational-basis review, it does not violate equal protection to address one portion of a problem without also addressing all other aspects of the problem.

ARGUMENT

Standard of Review. The Court reviews de novo the meaning of the terms used in section 707(b), United States v. Diaz, 989 F.2d 391, 392 (10th Cir. 1993), and the constitutional validity of the statute, United States v. Wilks, 58 F.3d 1518, 1519 (10th Cir. 1995). However, the bankruptcy court's findings of fact may be rejected only if they are clearly erroneous. In re Taylor, 133 F.3d 1336, 1340 (10th Cir. 1998). The bankruptcy court's ultimate conclusion that, based on the facts found, discharge would be a "substantial abuse" of chapter 7 is reviewed de novo. Fonder v. United States, 974 F.2d 996, 999 (8th Cir. 1992); In re Green, 934 F.2d 568, 570 (4th Cir. 1991).

I. THE BANKRUPTCY COURT AND THE BANKRUPTCY APPELLATE PANEL CORRECTLY FOUND THAT STEWART'S PETITION WAS A "SUBSTANTIAL ABUSE" OF CHAPTER 7.

The bankruptcy court concluded that granting relief to Stewart would be a substantial abuse of chapter 7. This conclusion was correct, and the Bankruptcy Appellate Panel properly affirmed.

A. "Substantial Abuse" Is Determined On The Totality Of Circumstances, With Ability To Repay Debts The Primary Factor.

This Court has not yet decided a case involving "substantial abuse" under section 707(b), and other circuits have not been completely uniform in their understanding of that provision. In our view, the proper approach is found in the Fourth Circuit's "totality of the circumstances" analysis, which the Bankruptcy Appellate Panel adopted, App. 1859-60. Stewart more or less agrees with this approach (Br. 19), although he disagrees with its application here.

1. Prior to enactment of section 707(b) in 1984 and its amendment in 1986 to permit dismissal on motion of the U.S. Trustee, chapter 7 debtors were subject to dismissal for cause under 11 U.S.C. 707(a), dismissal for various types of wrongdoing under 11 U.S.C. 727(a), and exceptions to discharge under 11 U.S.C. 523(a), but they otherwise "enjoyed an unfettered right to a 'fresh start' under Chapter 7, in exchange for liquidating their nonexempt assets for the benefit of their creditors." In re Krohn, 886 F.2d 123, 126 (6th Cir. 1989). Section 707(b), which permits dismissal of a chapter 7 case for "substantial abuse," was intended to "deny Chapter 7 relief to the dishonest or non-needy debtor." Id. (citing In re Walton, 866 F.2d 981, 983 (8th Cir. 1989). The goal was to "promote fairness to creditors, and thereby increase the flow of consumer credit." In re Koch, 109 F.3d 1285, 1288 (8th Cir. 1997).

Congress did not define "substantial abuse" in section 707(b), choosing instead to leave the standard "flexible," In re Krohn, 866 F.2d at 983; see In re Kelly, 841 F.2d 908, 914 (9th Cir. 1988), in order to enable courts to respond to a wide range of fact situations. All four courts of appeals to address the "substantial abuse" standard agree that the "primary" or "principal" factor is the debtor's ability to repay his debts. In re Green, 934 F.2d at 572; In re Krohn, 886 F.2d at 126; In re Walton, 866 F.2d at 984; In re Kelly, 841 F.2d at 914. "The primary factor that may indicate a substantial abuse is the ability of the debtor to repay the debts out of future disposable income." 6 Lawrence P. King, Collier on Bankruptcy ¶ 707.04[4], at 707-20 (15th ed. rev. 1997).

The principal difference among the circuits concerns whether the ability to repay debts is merely the primary factor or, rather, standing alone, supports dismissal under section 707(b). Both the Ninth Circuit, In re Kelly, 841 F.2d at 915, and the Eighth Circuit, United States v. Harris, 960 F.2d 74, 77 (8th Cir. 1992), have held that ability to repay is enough (although they recognize that other factors may be relevant). The Sixth Circuit agrees, at least in those cases in which the debtor has the ability to repay "with relative ease." In re Krohn, 886 F.2d at 126.

We are aware that if the ability to repay debts is sufficient, without more, to support dismissal under section 707(b), that would make it considerably easier for the U.S. Trustee, but we do not believe such a holding is justified. As the Fourth Circuit pointed out in In re Green, while the debtor's relative solvency may "raise an inference" that he is abusing the bankruptcy process and taking advantage of creditors, the statutory presumption in favor of granting chapter 7 relief suggests that solvency alone is not a basis for a finding of substantial abuse. 934 F.2d at 572.

The Fourth Circuit, accordingly, has applied a "totality of the circumstances" approach and has required that the "substantial abuse" determination be made on a case-by-case basis. Id. The Fourth Circuit has enumerated as the relevant factors not only the debtor's ability to repay but also "factors such as the following": (1) whether the petition was filed "because of sudden illness, calamity, disability, or unemployment"; (2) whether the debtor "incurred cash advances and made consumer purchases far in excess of his ability to pay"; (3) whether the debtor's "proposed family budget is excessive or unreasonable"; (4) whether the debtor's schedules and statement of current income and expenses "reasonably and accurately reflect [his] true financial condition"; (5) whether the petition "was filed in good faith." Id. A court need not analyze all these factors in every case, since substantial abuse is a case-specific and fact-based determination. See, e.g., In re Kestell, 99 F.3d 146, 150 (4th Cir. 1996) (focusing on lack of good faith of debtor who "sought to avoid paying what he owes to his former wife while making good on his other financial obligations").

The Sixth Circuit employs a similar "totality of the circumstances" approach (although the court is willing to allow dismissal based on ability to repay alone). In In re Krohn, the court offered a nonexclusive list of possibly relevant factors: "the debtor's good faith and candor in filing schedules and other documents, whether he has engaged in 'eve of bankruptcy purchases,' and whether he was forced into Chapter 7 by unforeseen or catastrophic events." 886 F.2d at 126. These factors are comparable to factors (1), (2), (4), and (5) under In re Green.

As we will now show, the bankruptcy court properly dismissed Stewart's petition as a substantial abuse under a totality of the circumstances, and the Bankruptcy Appellate Panel's affirmance was also correct.[4]

B. Stewart's Petition Was Properly Dismissed As A "Substantial Abuse" In Light Of Stewart's Ability To Repay His Debts, The Circumstances Surrounding The Filing Of His Petition, And Other Factors.

Dismissal of Stewart's petition for substantial abuse was proper under a totality of the circumstances. The bankruptcy court dismissed Stewart's petition for substantial abuse based on eight factors.[5] App. 1846-47. In affirming, the Bankruptcy Appellate Panel focused on three of those factors: Stewart's ability to pay his debts, the circumstances surrounding the filing of his chapter 7 petition, and the purpose and use of the debts incurred. App. 1859-61. The combination of these factors supports the bankruptcy court's dismissal of this case.

1. The bankruptcy court's dismissal of Stewart's petition was highly fact-based. First, and most important, the bankruptcy court found that Stewart, with his "considerable earning potential," App. 877, had the ability to repay his debts:

> By his own admission, he could be making $80,000-$100,000 per year right now, fresh out of medical school. According to his own witnesses, he will soon be capable of earning up to $140,000 per year. According to the [U.S. Trustee], as Stewart gains experience over the next few years his earning potential could rise much higher — the figure of $140,000 per year could double, or even triple. His current wife is also a doctor, and their combined earning potential is enormous — from ten times to

[4] Because one of those circumstances is that Stewart has the ability to repay his debts, dismissal also would have been proper under a rule that an ability to repay debts, standing alone, is enough to support dismissal.

[5] We do not challenge the Bankruptcy Appellate Panel's rejection of two of the bankruptcy court's findings of fact. App. 1848-49.

> twenty times what the average American makes in a year, perhaps even more.

App. 877-78. As the Bankruptcy Appellate Panel noted, Stewart had not realized this income because he had chosen to enter a low-paying fellowship, and to "defer[] income despite living on family and institutional loans for the last 20 years." App. 1861. Stewart's claim that the courts below did not make any determination of his ability to pay (Br. 21) is mistaken.

Second, Stewart's chapter 7 petition was filed soon after his divorce, and the bankruptcy court found that there was no "emergency, disaster or untenable situation to be remedied" by - the filing of the petition. App. 881. Stewart concedes this point. (Br. 23)

Third, the bankruptcy court found, on the basis of Stewart's conduct, that he had "no intention of honoring the notes he gave Mr. and Mrs. Teichner, the marital agreement with Barbara, or his legal and moral obligation to support his own children." App. 878. The main effect of permitting Stewart's chapter 7 case to proceed would be to discharge those debts. Id. This finding was upheld by the Bankruptcy Appellate Panel. App. 1847-48.

Fourth, Stewart failed to "tighten his belt" and lived an extravagant lifestyle; he himself claimed to be spending $4,500 more than he took home each month. App. 880. The bankruptcy court found that this was "certainly unnecessary" in that Stewart "maintains two households in two different cities, and drives back and forth between them — but the second home in Oklahoma City is kept to facilitate his travel to work at a new job that pays him less (very much less) than he is capable of earning." Id. The Bankruptcy Appellate Panel agreed that Stewart's monthly expenses were excessive. App. 1849.

Finally, the bankruptcy court found that chapter 7 relief would "result in little or no dividend to creditors, and would amount to a reward for Stewart's own financial improvidence and judicial blessing of an unconscionably one-sided, opportunistic adjustment of Stewart's relationship with his domestic creditors." App. 882. Stewart did not dispute this finding before the Bankruptcy Appellate Panel, App. 1847, and he does not dispute it here.

Based on the combination of these factors, the bankruptcy court properly dismissed Stewart's petition.

2. Stewart objects to dismissal for substantial abuse on four grounds, each of which is without merit.

His first objection is that the bankruptcy court "should have first determined whether or not Stewart had an 'ability to pay' before engaging in the rest of the substantial abuse analysis." (Br. 21) But, in fact, the court did precisely that. We quoted the relevant portion of the opinion above, in which the bankruptcy court discussed the evidence about the income Stewart could earn "right now, fresh out of medical school," App. 877, if he had taken into account his obligation to his creditors instead of deferring income by pursuing a low-paying fellowship. The bankruptcy court went on to state that Stewart "can afford to pay what he owes, to them and to all his other creditors — if not all at once, then certainly over time, within the near and foreseeable future, entirely from his own earnings if need be, but certainly with the help of his current wife, whose own considerable earnings can support them while Stewart pays his just debts." App. 881.

Along these same lines, Stewart contends that the court failed to consider whether all secured and unsecured debt, a portion of that debt, or "a significant dollar amount" could be paid in a chapter 13 or chapter 11 plan. (Br. 21) Again, the court did precisely that. It explained that while Stewart owed too much to be eligible for chapter 13, he was still eligible for chapter 11, adding that "[t]o whatever extent Stewart needs relief from his creditors' collection efforts, he can achieve it in Ch. 11, without heedless discharge of debts which can and should be repaid." App. 881. Contrary to Stewart's apparent position (Br. 23), future income may be considered as part of a debtor's ability to pay. Fonder, 974 F.2d at 998 ("essential inquiry remains whether the debtor's ability to repay creditors with future income" shows a substantial abuse); In re Krohn, 886 F.2d at 127 ("Krohn's ample future income" and other factors supported dismissal); 6 Collier on Bankruptcy, ¶ 707.04[4], at 707-20 (primary factor for substantial abuse is ability to repay debts out of "future disposable income").[6] Stewart's argument that the legislative history precludes reliance on future income (Br. 23-24 & n. 16) is mistaken. See In re Walton, 866 F.2d at 983; In re Kelly, 841 F.2d at 914.

[6] In In re Carlton, 211 B.R. 468 (Bankr. W.D.N.Y.), aff'd sub nom. Kornfield v. Schwartz, 214 B.R. 705 (W.D.N.Y.), appeal pending, No. 97-5080 (2d Cir.), on which Stewart relies (Br. 21-22), the bankruptcy judge cited as a factor supporting dismissal under section 707(b) the debtors' unwillingness to consider chapter 11, which "raise[d] concerns as to their honesty and good faith." 211 B.R. at 482.

Stewart's second objection is that there are actually 15 factors to be evaluated in determining substantial abuse and that only two of them operated against him. (Br. 22-23) He is mistaken about the number: Ability to repay — the primary factor — also operates against him. But in any event, the number is irrelevant. Those courts applying a "totality of the circumstances" analysis do not simply count the number of factors operating for and against a debtor. To the contrary, the court's decision whether granting relief would be a substantial abuse is merely guided by the enumerated factors and depends on a case-specific analysis of all the facts. See, e.g., In re Kestell, 99 F.3d at 149-50 (dismissal proper simply because petition filed with goal of favoring certain creditors over debtor's ex-wife).

Third, Stewart objects that since he is ineligible for chapter 13 and there was "no evidence that [he] could have made meaningful debt payments in a Chapter 11 case," dismissal of his chapter 7 petition means that there was "nowhere else in the Bankruptcy courthouse to go." (Br. 24) This argument lacks merit. Not only was there indeed such evidence, as discussed above, but Stewart's "nowhere to go" argument was persuasively rejected in In re Krohn. There, the Sixth Circuit concluded that an "inability to qualify under Chapter 13 should not be dispositive" under section 707(b), explaining that allowing debtors to avoid dismissal because their unsecured indebtedness is too high for chapter 13 eligibility "would be rewarding outrageous abusers of consumer credit, while denying to those with more moderate consumer debt the benefits of Chapter 7." 886 F.2d at 127. The court was concerned that debtors would be encouraged by such a rule to "run up [their] unsecured debts in excess of $100,000" to avoid dedicating their future earnings to debt reduction under chapter 13. Id. Moreover, the "nowhere to go" argument also fails because there is no constitutional right to a discharge, and Congress can deny access to a "fresh start" in bankruptcy to certain debtors based on policy concerns. Id. To put it another way, Congress has decided that "[a] fresh start is not the same thing as a 'free ride.'" Kornfield v. Schwartz, 214 B.R. 705, ___ (W.D.N.Y. 1997), appeal pending, No. 97-5080 (2d Cir.).

Finally, Stewart objects that there was no showing of "bad faith." (Br. 25) But bad faith is not a prerequisite to dismissal under a totality of the circumstances. As the Bankruptcy Appellate Panel explained, App. 1860, it is simply one factor. See In re Green, 934 F.2d at 572 (listing "good faith" as one factor); In re Krohn, 886 F.2d at 126 (one factor is debtor's "good faith and candor in filing schedules and other documents").

3. The bankruptcy court properly applied the "totality of the circumstances" analysis on these facts. The dismissal of Stewart's petition for substantial abuse was appropriate.

C. Stewart's Debts Were "Primarily Consumer Debts."

Stewart's debts were "primarily consumer debts" within the meaning of section 707(b). His claim to the contrary is based on his disagreement with the bankruptcy court's findings of fact that his debts were "consumer debts." (Br. 9-17) He agrees with us about the meaning of the term "primarily" in section 707(b). (Br. 17-18)

1. The Bankruptcy Code defines "consumer debt" to mean a "debt incurred by an individual primarily for a personal, family, or household purpose." 11 U.S.C. 101(8). A debt incurred with a profit motive is not consumer debt, because it is not incurred "primarily" for a personal, family, or household purpose under section 101(8). In re Burns, 894 F.2d 361, 363 (10th Cir. 1990); see In re Runski, 102 F.3d 744, 747 (4th Cir. 1996); In re Booth, 858 F.2d 1051, 1054 (5th Cir. 1988); In re Kelly, 841 F.2d at 908. The primary purpose of the debt controls; that is, if the debt was incurred not only for personal, family, or household purposes but also with a profit motive, the debt is consumer debt if the former purposes predominate over the profit motive. See 2 Lawrence P. King, Collier on Bankruptcy ¶ 101.08, at 101-47 (15th ed. rev. 1997); App. 1855-56.[7]

Whether the debtor has "primarily" consumer debts within the meaning of section 707(b) depends on whether the amount of those debts is more than half of the debtor's entire debt. In re

[7] It follows from the definition of "consumer debt" in section 101(8), in which a debt is either a consumer debt or not, depending on its primary purpose, that a debt cannot be divided into consumer-debt and non-consumer-debt parts. But see In re Booth, 858 F.2d at 1055 (when less than half of a debt was for consumer purposes, and more than half for a business venture, Fifth Circuit treated the consumer portion of the debt as consumer debt).

Kelly, 841 F.2d at 913 ("when 'the most part' — i.e., more than half — of the dollar amount owed is consumer debt, the statutory threshold is met"). This is the ordinary sense of the word "primarily." Stewart agrees here (Br. 18) that "primarily" means more than 50% of total debt.[8]

2. The Bankruptcy Appellate Panel correctly held that there was no clear error in the bankruptcy court's finding that Stewart's debt was "primarily consumer debt[]." App. 1859; see App. 876-77. The Panel noted that "[w]hen the marital obligation [of $250,000] is added to the $320,000 in debt to the former in-laws, the sum ($570,000) exceeds half of the $837,009 in total debt." App. 1859.

The bankruptcy court's finding was based on trial testimony. Stewart himself testified at trial that the money borrowed from the Teichners was "used for anything Stewart's family needed to pay, including vacation bills." App. 867. Barbara Stewart testified that her parents had loaned money to Stewart's family "to facilitate Stewart's education while maintaining his family in a 'certain life style' that would otherwise have been beyond their reach." Id. The bankruptcy court found that Stewart had borrowed this money partly for educational purposes but "largely to pay for his and his family's normal living expenses during his long period of part-time and/or low-paying employment." App. 871. Because "a significant part of the funds from Stewart's so-called student loans went to pay living expenses, vacation expenses, and the like for Stewart and his family, during the long period of his education as a doctor," App. 874, and because it believed in any event that education was "intimately 'personal,'" App. 875, the bankruptcy court held that the Teichner loans (and the institutional student loans) were consumer debt.

[8] Another circuit appears to consider, in addition to amount, the number of individual debts, In re Booth, 858 F.2d at 1055, but that additional requirement makes little sense. One does not file for bankruptcy protection based on the number of debts one has but rather on their overall amount. It introduces an element of arbitrariness to decide whether a debtor's debts are primarily consumer debts based on how many individual consumer debts he has, when that may depend entirely on whether or not he has chosen to consolidate them on a single credit card.

Based on the testimony cited by the bankruptcy court, that court's finding that the Teichner loans were primarily for a personal, family, or household purpose was not clearly erroneous. It is not necessary to decide whether the institutional student loans are also consumer debt, because, as the Bankruptcy Appellate Panel observed, the Teichner debt plus the marital debt exceeds half of Stewart's total debt. App. 1859.

3. Stewart admits that his marital debt is "probably" a consumer debt (Br. 17), see In re Kestell, 99 F.3d at 149 (lump sum owed to ex-wife from divorce judgment is consumer debt), but he otherwise disputes the bankruptcy court's findings of fact.

First, he disputes the court's description of his testimony, and he claims that the loans from the Teichners were not consumer debt, because they were primarily for his medical education. (Br. 12) But he adduces nothing to show that the bankruptcy court's evaluation of his testimony was clearly erroneous. He also admits that there was contrary trial testimony on this point from his ex-wife, yet he argues that the bankruptcy court "should have accorded Mrs. Stewart's testimony no weight in view of her conveniently shifting recollection" of the purpose of the loans. (Br. 13) Because Stewart's argument is merely a dispute over fact findings predicated on the court's evaluation of trial testimony, it does not support a showing of clear error. Miles v. Dorsey, 61 F.3d 1459, 1473 (10th Cir. 1995), cert. denied, 516 U.S. 1062 (1996)(quoting United States v. Frank, 956 F.2d 872, 875 (9th Cir. 1991), cert. denied, 506 U.S. 932 (1992) ("Clear error is not demonstrated by pointing to conflicting evidence in the record.")). Nor does his characterization of the court's reasoning as "non-sensical" (Br. 14) equate with proof of clear error.[9]

Second, Stewart argues that the institutional student loans are non-consumer debt. But the Bankruptcy Appellate Panel properly held that, while these loans are not per se consumer debt, their purpose may show that they are consumer debt. App. 1856. In any event, as we explained above, it is not necessary to reach this question, given that the Teichner loans and the alimony debt add up to over 50% of Stewart's total debt.

In short, Stewart's debts were "primarily consumer debts"

[9] The principal case he relies on, In re Frisch, 76 B.R. 801, 803 (Bankr. D. Colo. 1987), merely says that "First Trust has failed to provide any authority for the proposition that intra-family loans constitute consumer debt." It provides no analysis of the issue, other than the assertion that Congress, in enacting section 707(b), was interested in protecting the consumer credit industry. Id. Contrary to Frisch, intra-family loans may be consumer debt to the extent that they fit the statutory definition in 11 U.S.C. 101(8).

D. The U.S. Trustee's Motion Under 707(b) Was Not "Tainted."

Stewart argues that the U.S. Trustee's motion under section 707(b) was "tainted" because it was brought at the suggestion of an interested party, his ex-wife. (Br. 26-35) His argument is based upon a flawed reading of the statute. Under section 707(b), the court — but not the U.S. Trustee — is barred from proceeding "at the request or suggestion of any party in interest." Both the bankruptcy court and the Bankruptcy Appellate Panel correctly rejected Stewart's statutory argument.

1. Section 707(b) provides that "the court, on its own motion or on a motion by the United States trustee, but not at the request or suggestion of any party in interest, may dismiss" a chapter 7 petition for substantial abuse. The only court of appeals to address the issue has held that the phrase "but not at the request or suggestion of any party in interest" modifies "the court" and not the intervening phrase "on its own motion or a motion by the United States trustee." In re Clark, 927 F.2d 793, 797 (4th Cir. 1991).

That interpretation is clearly the right one. In section 707(b), the subject of the first sentence is "the court" and the corresponding verb is "may dismiss." Between the subject and the verb, section 707(b) describes three possible litigation events that might prompt the court to dismiss the case — the court's own motion, the U.S. Trustee's motion, and a "request or suggestion" of an interested party. The language of section 707(b) permits the court to dismiss based on either the first or second event, and it bars the court from dismissing based on the third. As the Bankruptcy Appellate Panel concluded, the language "limits who may file the motion, [but] it does not limit the source of information or factual basis on which the United States Trustee or the court may initiate a § 707(b) motion." App. 1850.

Congress's intent was that motions to dismiss under section 707(b) should come only from neutral and disinterested parties; thus, it expressly prohibited motions by "any party in interest." The goal was to prevent harassment of debtors by creditors. In re Joseph, 208 B.R. 55, 60 (B.A.P. 9th Cir. 1997). Indeed, in using the phrase "request or suggestion," Congress chose language broader than the term "motion" to prevent the court from entertaining "any motion to dismiss under § 707(b), however disguised, which is brought before the Court by anyone other than the [U.S. Trustee]." App. 869 (emphasis added). The effect of this language is prevent creditors from evading the statutory limitation by acting without a formal motion.

These concerns about creditor harassment have no application to a motion brought by the U.S. Trustee, a neutral and disinterested party who acts as an independent watchdog over the bankruptcy system. In re Revco D.S., Inc., 898 F.2d at 500; In re A-1 Trash Pickup, Inc., 802 F.2d at 775. A motion brought by the U.S. Trustee is not brought at the behest of creditors; it is brought in the interest of the proper administration of the bankruptcy system. As the bankruptcy court noted, creditor allegations that are brought to the attention of the U.S. Trustee are "reviewed and 'filtered' by the [U.S. Trustee] before being filed." App. 869. Section 707(b) requires no more.[10]

2. Stewart argues that section 707(b) bars the U.S. Trustee from seeking dismissal of the petition for substantial abuse if any of the information was brought to his attention by a creditor. That cannot possibly be the correct interpretation.

If Congress had intended to prevent the U.S. Trustee from making a motion under section 707(b) based on a "request or suggestion of any party in interest," as Stewart claims, it could hardly have chosen a more obscure and ungrammatical formulation. There are numerous more coherent ways of expressing such an intent, of which we will suggest four. First, the phrase could have been written thus: "who shall not act at the request or suggestion of any party in interest." The word "who" then would plainly have referred to the U.S. Trustee. Second, Congress could have used the phrase "which shall not be at the request or suggestion of any party in interest." The word "which" would have referred to the motion of the U.S. Trustee (or the court's own motion). Third, Congress could have used the phrase "but such motion shall not be at the request of suggestion of any party in interest." The underlined words would have made the referent clear. Finally, Congress could have omitted the phrase [10] The Bankruptcy Appellate Panel stated that the U.S. Trustee conducts an "independent investigation" of the allegations before bringing a motion under section 707(b). App. 1851. This is almost always the case, given the U.S. Trustee's institutional function, but there is no requirement that the U.S. Trustee prove he has conducted an independent investigation under the statute. The suggestion to the contrary in In re Morris, 153 B.R. 559, 563 (Bankr. D. Ore. 1993), is mistaken.

and inserted a new sentence between the two sentences currently in section 707(b): "No such motion may be made at the request of suggestion of any party in interest."

Stewart tries to justify his interpretation of section 707(b) by referring to two canons of statutory construction, which he admits are in conflict with each other. (Br. 34) Neither is sufficient to alter the plain sense of section 707(b).

Stewart first adverts to the "last antecedent doctrine" of interpretation. (Br. 29-31) Under that doctrine, a qualifying phrase qualifies the last antecedent — the term that immediately precedes it in the sentence. Use of this canon, however, is "not compelled," Nobleman v. American Savings Bank, 508 U.S. 324, 330 (1993), and is appropriate only if it appears to result in the most reasonable reading of the statute. As we have shown, that is not the case here. Indeed, a half century ago, this Court admonished that the "last antecedent doctrine" should not "be indulged to confuse that [which] is otherwise manifestly plain." Hughes v. Samedan Oil Corp., 166 F.2d 871, 873 (10th Cir. 1948). This admonition remains equally valid today.

Stewart also invokes the doctrine of reddendo singula singulis (Br. 31-34) to suggest that the phrase "but not at the request or suggestion of any party in interest" should be read "distributively" to modify both "on its own motion" and "on a motion by the United States trustee." This Latin canon is another way of saying that "[w]here a sentence contains several antecedents and several consequents they are to be read distributively." 2A Sutherland, Statutes and Statutory Construction § 47.26, at 240 (5th ed. 1992). Since there is only one consequent in section 707(b), it is not clear why Stewart thinks this canon applies. But, more to the point, the canon simply requires a court to "interpret a passage in which antecedents and consequents are unclear by reference to the context and purpose of the statute as a whole." Go-Video, Inc. v. Akai Electric Co., 885 F.2d 1406, 1412 (9th Cir. 1989). As we have already explained, the context and purpose of this statute do not support Stewart's interpretation.

II. THE BANKRUPTCY COURT AND THE BANKRUPTCY APPELLATE PANEL CORRECTLY REJECTED STEWART'S CONSTITUTIONAL CHALLENGE TO 11 U.S.C. 707(b).

Stewart contends that section 707(b) is unconstitutionally vague and violates equal protection. Both the bankruptcy court and the Bankruptcy Appellate Panel properly rejected these contentions.

A. Section 707(b) Is Not Unconstitutionally Vague.

Stewart contends that section 707(b) is unconstitutionally vague because different courts have analyzed the statute in different ways. (Br. 47-50) His contention is meritless.

First, Stewart is making a facial vagueness challenge to section 707(b) in arguing that "[t]he statute as written fails to impart notice to this debtor (or to any other Chapter 7 debtor) of the kind of conduct that may cause the debtor to be shown the Bankruptcy Courthouse door." (Br. 49) But facial vagueness challenges are unavailable when First Amendment rights are not at stake. United States v. Powell, 423 U.S. 87, 92 (1975); United States v. Mazurie, 419 U.S. 554, 550 (1975).

Second, when First Amendment rights are not involved, the requirements of the vagueness doctrine are minimal. Even in the case of a statute that imposes criminal liability, which section 707(b) does not, the vagueness doctrine requires only that the language "be sufficiently definite to give notice of the required conduct to one who would avoid its penalties, and to guide the judge in its application and the lawyer in defending one charged with its violation." Boyce Motor Lines, Inc. v. United States, 342 U.S. 337, 340 (1952); see Village of Hoffman Estates v. The Flipside, Hoffman Estates, Inc., 455 U.S. 489, 503 (1982) ("In reviewing a business regulation for facial vagueness, . . . the principal inquiry is whether the law affords fair warning of what is proscribed.").[11] These standards are even less strict when the statute is civil in nature and the penalty is merely a refusal to confer a bankruptcy discharge. Id. at 498-99 (Court has "expressed greater tolerance of enactments with civil rather than criminal penalties because the consequences of imprecision are qualitatively less severe").

Third, the statutory terms Stewart says are unconstitutionally vague are not. The term "consumer debt" is defined in 11 U.S.C. 101(8). While Stewart says the term

[11] See Boyce Motor Lines, 342 U.S. at 340 ("But few words possess the precision of mathematical symbols, most statutes must deal with untold and unforeseen variations in factual situations, and the practical necessities of discharging the business of government inevitably limit the specificity with which legislators can spell out prohibitions. Consequently, no more than a reasonable degree of certainty can be demanded. Nor is it unfair to require that one who deliberately goes perilously close to an area of proscribed conduct shall take the risk that he may cross the line.").

"primarily" in the phrase "primarily consumer debts" is vague, he also believes it indicates a clear test — whether the ratio of consumer debt to total debt exceeds 50%. (Br. 18) That is clarity enough. As for "substantial abuse," while that term is undefined in the statute, it no more unconstitutionally vague than the terms "substantial evidence" and "abuse of discretion," which are applied every day in administrative law. See In re Kelly, 841 F.2d at 916 ("the Supreme Court has upheld statutes that contain equally undefined standards of decision"); In re Heller, 160 B.R. 655, 661 (D. Kan. 1993); In re Higginbotham, 111 B.R. 955, 966 (Bankr. N.D. Okla. 1990) ("substantial abuse" provides a standard, "even though the details must be worked out by judicial decisions," as with "fraud," "good faith," and "due process").[12]

Section 707(b), in sum, is not unconstitutionally vague.

B. Section 707(b) Does Not Violate Equal Protection.

Nor does section 707(b) violate equal protection. The distinction between debtors with primarily consumer debts and all other debtors is rational.

1. Congress's distinction between debtors with primarily consumer debt and all other debtors is reviewed for rational basis, because the distinction implicates no fundamental right, United States v. Kras, 409 U.S. 434, 446 (1973) ("no constitutional right to obtain a discharge of one's debts in bankruptcy"), and affects no suspect classification.

[12] The fact that different courts have interpreted section 707(b) differently hardly shows that it is unconstitutionally vague; the Supreme Court grants certiorari in numerous cases each year to resolve conflicting statutory interpretations in the lower courts. See also The Federalist, No. 37, at 229 (J. Madison) (Clinton Rossiter ed.) ("All new laws, though penned with the greatest technical skill . . ., are considered as more or less obscure and equivocal, until their meaning be liquidated and ascertained by a series of particular discussions and adjudications.").

The rational-basis test is highly deferential, and the question for the court is only whether there is a "rational relationship between the disparity of treatment and some legitimate governmental purpose." Heller v. Doe, 509 U.S. 312, 320 (1993). The court may consider "any reasonably conceivable state of facts that could provide a rational basis for the classification." FCC v. Beach Communications, Inc., 508 U.S. 307, 313 (1993). Since the Supreme Court "never require[s] a legislature to articulate its reasons for enacting a statute, it is entirely irrelevant for constitutional purposes whether the conceived reason for the challenged distinction actually motivated the legislature." Id. at 315; see United States Railroad Retirement Bd. v. Fritz, 449 U.S. 166, 179 (1979). "In other words, a legislative choice is not subject to courtroom fact-finding and may be based on rational speculation unsupported by evidence or empirical data." Beach Communications, 508 U.S. at 315.

The limits on rational-basis review "have added force 'where the legislature must necessarily engage in a process of line-drawing.'" Id. (quoting Fritz, 449 U.S. at 179). In those circumstances, "the legislature must be allowed leeway to approach a problem incrementally." Id. at 316. "Evils in the same field may be of different dimensions and proportions, requiring different remedies." Williamson v. Lee Optical of Oklahoma, Inc., 348 U.S. 483, 489 (1955). Thus, Congress "may take one step at a time, addressing itself to the phase of the problem which seems most acute to the legislative mind" and "may select one phase of one field and apply a remedy there, neglecting the others." Id. "Particularly with respect to social welfare programs, so long as the line drawn by the State is rationally supportable, the courts will not interpose their judgment as to the appropriate stopping point." Geduldig v. Aiello, 417 U.S. 484, 495 (1974). Equal protection "does not require that a State must choose between attacking every aspect of a problem or not attacking the problem at all." Dandridge v. Williams, 397 U.S. 471, 486-87 (1970).[13]

Congress's goal in enacting section 707(b) appears to have been — and, certainly, could rationally have been — to give the courts, and the U.S. Trustees as watchdogs, the power to dismiss one class of chapter 7 cases that were particularly subject to abuse. As the bankruptcy court explained, the statute addresses > a type of bankruptcy case which is especially liable to abuse and especially deserving of review. That type of case involves an individual debtor who . . . takes advantage of modern easy-credit practices to accumulate debts, for the immediate purpose of satisfying his private appetites and maintaining or enhancing his personal qualities and lifestyle, or those of his dependents — often in circumstances which offer creditors little security, because the benefits acquired by the debts are used up ("consumed") by the debtor himself and assimilated to his person — and who effectively avoids repayment by keeping his unconsumed property and his income from wages or professional

[13] Contrary to Stewart's suggestion (Br. 40-41), there is only one rational-basis test. See Heller v. Doe, 509 U.S. at 321 (in earlier cases, Court did not "purport to apply a different standard of rational-basis review from that just described").

> earnings to himself and from his creditors, despite even bankruptcy . . . .

App. 872-73; see App. 939. While Congress surely could have provided for dismissal of any bankruptcy petition for substantial abuse, and not just ones filed by debtors with primarily consumer debts, it was not required to do so. Congress could permissibly address the most serious concern without addressing all concerns. See Williamson v. Lee Optical, 348 U.S. at 489.

2. Modeling his argument on In re Keniston, 85 B.R. 202, 205-12 (Bankr. D.N.H. 1988), Stewart contends that section 707(b) violates equal protection. (Br. 36-47) His argument is based almost entirely on a claim of underinclusiveness — that is, he argues that while it may be permissible for Congress to permit dismissal of consumer-debt cases under section 707(b), Congress is constitutionally required to include business debtors. (Br. 42-46) This simply is not the law.

When enacting social or economic legislation that is subject to rational-basis review, Congress may address one part of a problem at a time. It is not required to "choose between attacking every aspect of a problem or not attacking the problem at all." Dandridge v. Williams, 397 U.S. at 487. The only question is whether there is a rational basis for the classification. As we have explained, Congress rationally could have been concerned about the particular abuse of bankruptcy by consumer debtors, and that is all that is necessary to satisfy equal protection here.

3. A few words are necessary here about the Bankruptcy

Appellate Panel's effort to avoid the constitutional question by interpreting section 707(b) as requiring a "totality of the circumstances" analysis. App. 1853. The idea is that if a "totality of the circumstances" analysis is applied, courts use section 707(b) to review consumer-debt cases for dismissal "in much the same manner" that they use section 105(a), regarding abuse of process, and section 707(a), regarding dismissal for cause, to review business-debt cases for dismissal. Id.

We agree that the "totality of the circumstances" analysis is the correct approach to section 707(b), but we do not find the Panel's argument for avoiding the constitutional question persuasive, and we do not think this Court should follow that road. First, the equal-protection question is not a difficult one to resolve, and there is no need to avoid it. See, e.g., Almendarez-Torres v. United States, 118 S. Ct. ____, ____, 1998 WL 126904, at *10 (1998) (courts should not use doctrine of "constitutional doubt" to avoid "a constitutional difficulty that, upon analysis, will evaporate"). Second, even after adopting a "totality of the circumstances" approach to section 707(b), there remain differences between the treatment of consumer debtors under that section and the treatment of all debtors, including business debtors, under sections 105(a) and 707(a), which permit dismissal on specified grounds. Section 707(b), which applies only to debtors with primarily consumer debts, confers a broader authority on the court and the U.S. Trustee than those other provisions, while at the same time expressly creating a presumption that the debtor is entitled to chapter 7 relief.[14]

In short, the constitutional question cannot be avoided, but it is not a difficult question to resolve.

CONCLUSION

For the foregoing reasons, the judgment of the Bankruptcy Appellate Panel should be affirmed.

STATEMENT REGARDING ORAL ARGUMENT

Pursuant to Tenth Circuit Rule 28.2(f), the appellee desires oral argument. The appellant has raised two challenges to the constitutionality of a federal statute, only one of which has been addressed by any court of appeals. Furthermore, this Court has not yet interpreted the provision for dismissal for "substantial abuse" under 11 U.S.C. 707(b), and the matter is of great importance to the United States Trustees Program.

INTEREST IN THESE CONSOLIDATED APPEALS

I. The Weiderhold Appeal.

The United States Trustee for Region 3, as the appellant in the Weiderhold chapter 7 appeal, has a direct interest in its outcome. United States Trustees are Department of Justice Officials appointed by the Attorney General, who supervise the administration of chapter 7 and 13 bankruptcy cases in all federal judicial districts other than those located in Alabama and North Carolina. See 28 U.S.C. § 581-589(a). See also H.R. Rep. No. 95-595, at 88 (1977) as reprinted in 1978 U.S.C.C.A.N. 5963 (United States Trustee's "serve as bankruptcy watch-dogs to prevent fraud, dishonesty, and overreaching in the bankruptcy arena.").

By interpreting 11 U.S.C. § 707(b)(2)(A)(ii)(I), this appeal will determine the expenses above-median-income chapter 7 debtors may claim when completing their bankruptcy means test. This is significant because the means test determines whether an above-median-income chapter 7 debtor's case should be dismissed as abusive. See 11 U.S.C. § 707(b)(1) and (2). United States Trustees play a unique role in this process because 11 U.S.C. § 704(b) requires them to review all such cases and, whenever a case is deemed presumptively abusive under the means test, either: (a) seek its dismissal, or (b) file a statement declining to seek dismissal. See 11 U.S.C. § 704(b). See also Schultz v. United States, 529 F.3d 343, 348 (6th Cir. 2008) (describing the United States Trustees' enforcement of the Chapter 7 means test). Thus, United States Trustees have a direct interest in the proper construction of section 707(b)(2)(A)(ii)(I). Here, the United States Trustee for Region 3 filed a motion to dismiss the Weiderhold's case under 11 U.S.C. § 707(b)(1). The bankruptcy court denied the United States Trustee's motion, and the United States Trustee timely appealed.

II. The Stipe Appeal.

The United States, acting as amicus curiae, has a direct interest in the outcome of the Stipe chapter 13 appeal. In addition to determining what expenses above-median-income chapter 7 debtors may claim under section 707(b)(2)(A)(ii)(I), this consolidated appeal will also determine, by interpreting 11 U.S.C. § 1325(b), the amount above-median-income chapter 13 debtors must pay their creditors under their chapter 13 plans. The United States has an interest in this question because United States Trustees "supervise the administration of [Chapter 13] cases and trustees," monitor Chapter 13 plans, and file comments with the court regarding such plans in connection with plan confirmation hearings under section 1324 of the Bankruptcy Code. 28 U.S.C. § 586(a)(3)(C). Accordingly, the United States shares its views on the application of sections 707(b)(2)(A)(ii)(I) and 1325(b) as amicus curiae in the Stipe appeal. See 28 U.S.C. § 517 (authorizing the Department of Justice "to attend to the interests of the United States in a suit pending in a court of the United States"). See also 11 U.S.C. § 307 ("The United States trustee may raise and may appear and be heard on any issue in any case or proceeding.").

JURISDICTIONAL STATEMENT

I. The Weiderhold Chapter 7 Appeal.

On February 11, 2008, the United States Bankruptcy Court for the Middle District of Pennsylvania entered a final order denying the United States Trustee's motion to dismiss Douglas W. Weiderhold's and Kelly L. Weiderhold's (the "Weiderholds") chapter 7 bankruptcy case under 11 U.S.C. § 707(b)(1) and (2). (Weiderhold R. at Dkt. 25)[1] The bankruptcy court had jurisdiction over that proceeding under 28 U.S.C. §§ 157 and 1334. On February 21, 2008, the United States Trustee timely filed a notice of appeal from that order to this Court under 28 U.S.C. § 158(a) and Fed. R. Bankr. P. 8002(a). This Court has jurisdiction pursuant to 28 U.S.C. § 158(a)(1).

II. The Stipe Chapter 13 Appeal.

On November 21, 2007, the United States Bankruptcy Court for the Middle District of Pennsylvania entered a final order overruling chapter 13 trustee Charles J. DeHart, III's, objection to confirmation of Karen Stipe's ("Stipe") chapter 13 plan case under 11 U.S.C. §§ 1324 and 1325. (Stipe R. at Dkt. 17)[2] The bankruptcy court had jurisdiction over that proceeding under 28 U.S.C. §§ 157 and 1334. On November 30, 2007, the chapter 13 trustee timely filed a notice of appeal from that order to this Court under 28 U.S.C. § 158(a) and Fed. R. Bankr. P. 8002(a). This Court has jurisdiction pursuant to 28 U.S.C. § 158(a)(1).

STATEMENT OF THE ISSUES

These appeals involve two different types of bankruptcy, chapter 7 and 13. Because chapter 13 incorporates certain chapter 7 provisions, both appeals involve interpretation of chapter 7 provisions. But, chapter 13 imposes additional statutory obligations on debtors. For that reason, both the Weiderhold chapter 7 appeal and the Stipe chapter 13 appeal invite the interpretation of 11 U.S.C. § 707(b)(2)(A)(ii)(I), but the Stipe appeal also invites the interpretation of three subsections of 11 U.S.C. § 1325(b).

At issue in both of these consolidated appeals is whether section 707(b)(2)(A)(ii)(I) allows debtors to reduce their payments to creditors by claiming an expense for a car loan or car lease payment when the debtor has no such payment.

[2] "Stipe R." denotes a citation to the United States Trustee's "Designation of Items to be Included in the Record on Appeal" filed in Case No. 1:07-CV-2325 at Dkt. No. 2.

Additionally, at issue in the Stipe chapter 13 appeal is whether section 1325(b)'s additional requirements that expenses be for actual "support or maintenance," and that courts project real expenses over the life of a chapter 13 plan, independently bar phantom loan expenses even if they are authorized under the chapter 7 means test.

STATEMENT OF THE CASE

On August 29, 2007, the Weiderholds sought chapter 7 bankruptcy relief in the United States Bankruptcy Court for the Middle District of Pennsylvania. See 11 U.S.C. § 701 et seq. On November 14, 2007, the United States Trustee filed a motion to dismiss the Weiderhold's case for abuse under 11 U.S.C. § 707(b)(1) because a presumption of abuse arose as a matter of law under 11 U.S.C. § 707(b)(2)'s means test. On February 11, 2008, the bankruptcy court entered an order denying the United States Trustee's motion. The Weiderhold appeal followed.

On August 10, 2007, Ms. Stipe sought chapter 13 bankruptcy relief in the United States Bankruptcy Court for the Middle District of Pennsylvania. See 11 U.S.C. § 1301 et seq. That same day, Ms. Stipe filed her proposed chapter 13 repayment plan with the bankruptcy court. On October 19, 2007, Ms. Stipe's chapter 13 trustee, Charles J. DeHart, III, objected to Ms. Stipe's plan because it violated 11 U.S.C. § 1325. On November 21, 2007, the bankruptcy court entered an order overruling the chapter 13 trustee's objection. The Stipe appeal followed.

On May 12, 2009, the United States Trustee filed her motion with this Court seeking to consolidate the Weiderhold and Stipe appeals. That same day, this Court entered an order granting the motion to consolidate. These consolidated appeals are now ripe for decision.

STATEMENT OF THE FACTS

I. Statutory Background.

On April 20, 2005, Congress enacted the Bankruptcy Abuse Prevention and Consumer Protection Act of 2005. See Pub. L. No. 109-8, 119 Stat. 23 (2005). The 2005 Act significantly altered how debtors obtain relief under chapters 7 and 13 of the Bankruptcy Code.

A. The 2005 Chapter 7 Amendments.

1. Prior to the enactment of the 2005 Act, there was a presumption in favor of granting the relief requested by a debtor. See 11 U.S.C. § 707(b) (2004). This presumption could be overcome only if a court found that the "granting of relief would be a substantial abuse" of chapter 7. Id (emphasis added). "[The 2005 Act] produced a sea change." Egebjerg v. United States Trustee (In re Egebjerg), – F.3d –, 2009 WL 1492138, at *2 (9th Cir. May 29, 2009). Now, "section 707(b)(2) provides a means test by which bankruptcy courts determine whether a case is presumed to be an abuse of chapter 7. If the case is presumed abusive, it will be dismissed unless the debtor shows 'special circumstances' rebutting the presumption. If the presumption does not arise, the bankruptcy court may still find abuse under § 707(b)(3) based on the totality of the circumstances." Blausey v. United States Trustee (In re Blausey), 552 F.3d 1124, 1127 n.1 (2009) (internal citation omitted). See also Ross-Tousey v. Neary, 549 F.3d 1148, 1161-62 (7th Cir. 2008) (discussing use of section 707(b)(3)'s totality of the circumstances analysis where presumption of abuse does not apply under section 707(b)(2)'s means test).

2. The means test lies at the "heart" of the 2005 Act's consumer bankruptcy reforms and acts "to ensure that debtors repay creditors the maximum they can afford." H.R. Rep. 109-31 at 1 (I) (2005), as reprinted in 2005 U.S.C.C.A.N. 88, 89. Under prior law, "some bankruptcy debtors [were] able to repay a significant portion of their debts," but were not doing so because the law contained "no clear mandate requiring these debtors to repay their debts." Id. at 5 and n.18, 2005 U.S.C.C.A.N. at 92. Congress enacted the means test to ensure that debtors repay creditors the maximum they can afford. Id. at 1, 2005 U.S.C.C.A.N. at 89.

3. Under the means test, debtors first determine their average income for the six calendar months preceding the month of their bankruptcy filing. See 11 U.S.C. § 101(10A). If this averaged amount, multiplied by twelve, is below the median income for the debtor's state and household size, the debtor's case cannot be dismissed under the means test. See 11 U.S.C. § 707(b)(7). However, if this averaged amount exceeds the median income for the debtor's state and household size – as in the Weiderhold's case – section 707(b)(2)(A) prescribes a statutorily mandated calculation that yields an amount a debtor is presumed to be able to repay his creditors. This presumptive amount, commonly referred to as a debtor's monthly disposable income, is obtained by reducing a debtor's historic averaged income by certain enumerated categories of expenses. See 11 U.S.C. § 707(b)(2)(A)(ii), (iii) and (iv). After subtracting permitted expenses, an above-median-income debtor's case is presumed abusive as a matter of law when his historic averaged income reduced by prescribed expense amounts yields a net income that exceeds $182.50 per month. See 11 U.S.C. § 707(b)(2)(A)(i).

4. These consolidated appeals pose a question about a debtor's expense-side calculation under the means test. Section 707(b)(2)(A)(ii) of the Bankruptcy Code permits all above-median-income debtors in chapters 7 and 13 to deduct, among other things:

(a) certain prescribed "actual" expenses; and

(b) other "applicable" expense amounts.

See 11 U.S.C. § 707(b)(2)(A)(ii)(I). "Applicable" expense amounts are not the debtor's actual expenses. Instead, they are the static amounts listed in the Internal Revenue Service's Local and National Standards. See 11 U.S.C. § 707(b)(2)(A)(ii)(I).

The IRS's Local Standards include expenses for transportation. See Addendum "A" to this consolidated brief.[3] Transportation expenses are authorized in two standardized amounts. Id. They are: (1) monthly expenses for costs associated with operating vehicles; and (2) monthly expenses for costs associated with purchasing or leasing vehicles. Id. All debtors, including the Weiderholds and Ms. Stipe, receive monthly transportation expenses based on either public transportation costs or the costs associated with operating a vehicle. See Addendum "B" to this consolidated brief.[4] The standard operating expense includes amounts for vehicle maintenance, fuel, state and local registration, required inspection, parking fees, tolls, and driver's license fees. Id. Ownership expenses, when applicable, include allowances based on the average cost of financing a vehicle. Id. Both operating and ownership expenses are limited to no more than two vehicles. Id.

B. The 2005 Chapter 13 Amendments.

In section 1325(b) of the Bankruptcy Code – which addresses confirmation of a chapter 13 debtor's repayment plan – Congress implemented the means test by incorporating sections 101(10A) and 707(b)(2)(A)(ii), (iii), and (iv) of the Bankruptcy Code into what is commonly known as the "projected disposable income test." See 11 U.S.C. § 1325(b)(2) and (3). In a chapter 13 case, a debtor's unsecured creditors or trustee may insist the debtor devote all of his projected disposable income to pay creditors. See 11 U.S.C. § 1325(b)(1). Although "projected disposable income" is not defined, "disposable income" is defined as a net number: historic averaged income less prescribed expenses. See 11 U.S.C. § 1325(b)(2). Under the 2005 Act, above-median-income debtors, like Ms. Stipe, determine disposable income by first calculating their historic averaged income. See 11 U.S.C. § 1325(b)(2) (dictating that "current monthly income"[5] be used as part of disposable income calculation). Next, they deduct permitted expenses, which include "amounts reasonably necessary to be expended." See 11 U.S.C. § 1325(b)(2). Above-median-income chapter 13 debtors determine "amounts reasonably necessary to be expended . . . in accordance with" sections 707(b)(2)(A)(ii), (iii), and (iv) of the Bankruptcy Code. 11 U.S.C. § 1325(b)(3) (incorporating those provisions).

However, these expenses are limited to only those amounts "reasonably necessary to be expended" for "maintenance or support," domestic support obligations, charity, or business purposes. 11 U.S.C. § 1325(b)(2). Deducting all allowed expenses from a debtor's current monthly income yields a net number – projected disposable income.

II. The Facts and Proceedings Below.

A. Weiderhold.

On August 29, 2007, the Weiderholds filed a joint voluntary petition for relief under the liquidation provisions of chapter 7 of the Bankruptcy Code. (Weiderhold R. at Dkt. No. 1) The Weiderholds own three vehicles – a Chevy Cavalier, a Buick LeSabre, and a Jeep Wrangler. (Weiderhold R. at Dkt. No. 11) They own these vehicles free and clear of liens, which means the Weiderholds have no monthly payments on them. (Weiderhold R. at Dkt. No. 11)

The Weiderhold's have $6,508.38 in average monthly income, or $78,100.56 per year. (Weiderhold R. at Dkt. No. 11) The Weiderhold's income is substantially greater than the

[5] The term "current monthly income" is a defined term. See 11 U.S.C. § 101(10A) (defining "current monthly income" as the debtor's average monthly income for the six-month period preceding the month of the filing of the debtor's petition).

$48,612.00 annual median income for the Weiderhold's household size in Pennsylvania. (Weiderhold R. at Dkt. No. 11)

Because, the Weiderhold's income was well above the Pennsylvania median, they are subject to chapter 7's means test. See 11 U.S.C. § 707(b)(2) and (7). That required them to determine whether their case had to be dismissed or converted because they can pay creditors at least $182.50 per month. (Weiderhold R. at Dkt. No. 11)

The Weiderholds claimed monthly expense of $6,865.82. (Weiderhold R. at Dkt. No. 11) In making this calculation, the Weiderholds claimed the IRS Local Standard transportation ownership expense for two vehicles in the amounts of $471.00 and $332.00, respectively.[6] (Weiderhold R. at Dkt. No. 11) This resulted in claimed monthly disposable income on their means test form in the amount of negative $357.44 which was below the $182.50 required for the presumption of abuse to arise. (Weiderhold R. at Dkt. No. 11)

On November 14, 2007, the United States Trustee, pursuant to section 704(b)(2) of the Bankruptcy Code, filed his section 707(b)(2) motion to dismiss the Weiderhold's case for abuse. (Weiderhold R. at Dkt. No. 18) The motion claimed the Weiderholds miscalculated their claimed expenses on the means test. (Weiderhold R. at Dkt. No. 18) The United States Trustee also alleged that the Weiderholds failed the means test when their expenses were calculated correctly, and that their case therefore constituted an abuse of the provisions of chapter 7 of the Bankruptcy Code. (Weiderhold R. at Dkt. No. 18)

The crux of the dispute concerned the Weiderhold's attempt to claim expenses for vehicles

[6] In addition, the Weiderholds claimed a $393.00 deduction for the IRS Local Standard "transportation, vehicle operation/public transportation expense" for two or more vehicles. (Weiderhold R. at Dkt. No. 11) for which they had no loan or lease payments. (Weiderhold R. at Dkt. No. 18) The United States Trustee argued section 707(b)(2)(A)(ii)(I) did not allow them to claim vehicle payments as expenses because they had no vehicle payments. (Weiderhold R. at Dkt. No. 18) The Weiderhold's claimed they could.

Under the United States Trustee's interpretation, the Weiderhold's failed the means test and their case needed to be dismissed. (Weiderhold R. at Dkt. No. 18) Under the Weiderhold's interpretation, they were eligible for bankruptcy relief.

On February 11, 2008, the bankruptcy court denied the United States Trustee's motion to dismiss the Weiderhold's case pursuant to 11 U.S.C. § 707(b)(1). (Weiderhold R. at Dkt. No. 25)

On February 21, 2008, the United States Trustee timely filed a notice of appeal to this Court under 28 U.S.C. § 158(a) and Fed. R. Bankr. P. 8002(a).

B. Stipe.

On August 10, 2007, Ms. Stipe filed a voluntary petition for relief under the reorganization provisions of chapter 13 of the Bankruptcy Code. (Stipe R. at Dkt. No. 1) That same day, Ms. Stipe filed her bankruptcy Schedules A through J, means test form, and proposed chapter 13 repayment plan. (Stipe R. at Dkt. No. 1, 3) Ms. Stipe's Schedules I and J reflect that her current net monthly income totals $535.68. (Stipe R. at Dkt. No. 1) Ms. Stipe's Schedule A reflects that she owns a Mercury Grand Marquis. (Stipe R. at Dkt. No. 1) This vehicle is owned free and clear of liens, which means that Ms. Stipe has no monthly payments on it.[7] (Stipe R. at Dkt. No. 1)

Ms. Stipe's income is greater than the $41,706.00 annual median income for Ms. Stipe's

[7] For unknown reasons, Ms. Stipes Schedule J reflects a $200 auto installment payment. (Stipe R. at Dkt. No. 1) This cannot be accurate given the lack of any secured debts or leases listed on her Schedules D and G. (Stipe R. at Dkt. No. 1) Thus, Ms. Stipe's current net monthly income should total $735.68.

household size in Pennsylvania. (Stipe R. at Dkt. No. 1) Because, Ms. Stipe's income was above the Pennsylvania median, section 1325(b)(3) of the Bankruptcy Code required her to complete her means test form in full to determine her "projected disposable income" as a matter of law. (Stipe R. at Dkt. No. 1)

Ms. Stipe listed monthly expense deductions of $3,6214.13 on her means test form. (Stipe R. at Dkt. No. 1) In making these calculations, Ms. Stipe claimed a monthly ownership expense for one vehicle in the amount of $471.00.[8] (Stipe R. at Dkt. No. 1) This resulted in claimed monthly projected disposable income on her means test form in the amount of $179.69. (Stipe R. at Dkt. No. 1)

Based on that number, and notwithstanding that her Schedules I and J reflect a monthly net surplus after expenses of $535.68, Ms. Stipe's chapter 13 repayment plan proposed to pay her chapter 13 trustee only $180 per month over 60 months for a total of $10,800. (Stipe R. at Dkt. No. 3) From that amount, Ms. Stipe's chapter 13 trustee will distribute $3,574 to her bankruptcy attorney, leaving approximately $6,794[9] for distribution to Ms. Stipe's general unsecured creditors.[10] (Stipe R. at Dkt. No. 3)

On October 19, 2007, Ms. Stipe's chapter 13 trustee, pursuant to sections 1324(a) of the Bankruptcy Code, filed his objection to confirmation of Ms. Stipe's proposed repayment plan.

[8] In addition, Ms. Stipe claimed a $311.00 monthly operating expense for her vehicle. (Stipe R. at Dkt. No. 1)

[9] This number accounts for the costs of administering Ms. Stipe's bankruptcy estate, which equals 4% of the $10,800 to be distributed under Ms. Stipe plan, or $432. See http://www.usdoj.gov/ust/eo/bapcpa/20070201/bci_data/ch13_exp_mult.htm#PA.

[10] Ms. Stipes Schedule F reflects $83,708 in general unsecured debts. (Stipe R. at Dkt. No. 1) Thus, based on the record before this Court, it appears that the dividend to unsecured creditors in Ms. Stipe's case should total approximately eight cents on the dollar (i.e., $6,794 / $83,708).

(Stipe R. at Dkt. No. 15) The trustee alleged that Ms. Stipe's proposed repayment plan failed to commit all of her projected disposable income to her plan as required under section 1325(b)(1) of the Bankruptcy Code. (Stipe R. at Dkt. No. 15) And, the trustee alleged that Ms. Stipe's deduction of a vehicle ownership expense on her Form 22 was improper because absent that deduction she was able to fund a repayment plan in a substantially higher amount than the $180 per month proposed. (Stipe R. at Dkt. No. 15)

On November 21, 2007, the bankruptcy court overruled the trustee's objection to Ms. Stipe's chapter 13 plan. (Stipe R. at Dkt. No. 17)

On November 30, 2007, the trustee timely filed a notice of appeal to this Court under 28 U.S.C. § 158(a) and Fed. R. Bankr. P. 8002(a).

STANDARD OF REVIEW

These consolidated appeals involve questions of law, which this Court reviews de novo. See In re O'Brien Envtl. Energy, Inc., 188 F.3d 116, 122 (3d Cir. 1999).

SUMMARY OF ARGUMENT

I. Section 707(b)(2)(A)(ii)(I).

Neither basic notions of fairness nor the text of the Bankruptcy Code allow the Weiderholds and Ms. Stipe to reduce the amount they have to pay creditors by claiming expenses they do not have. They do that based upon an argument that section 707(b)(2)(A)(ii)(I) of the Bankruptcy Code allows them to claim $803 and $471 respectively in monthly vehicle loan or lease expenses even though they have no loan or lease payments on their vehicles.

Under the better reading of the Bankruptcy Code, neither the Weiderholds or Ms. Stipe can claim phantom vehicle ownership expenses because section 707(b)(2)(A)(ii)(I) only allows a debtor to claim such expenses when they are "applicable" to the debtors' vehicles. Here, they are not. Under the ordinary dictionary definition of "applicable" a debtor must have a loan or lease payment to claim a loan or lease expense. Because these debtors do not, they cannot claim such expenses on their means test form.

II. Section 1325(b).

The Stipe ruling fails to properly apply section 1325 of the Bankruptcy Code for two independent reasons. This Court can reverse the lower court's order in Stipe on either ground.

First, under section 1325(b)(1) of the Bankruptcy Code, a bankruptcy court may not confirm a chapter 13 plan over the chapter 13 trustee's objection unless "the plan provides that all of the debtor's projected disposable income to be received in the applicable commitment period . . . will be applied to make payments to unsecured creditors under the plan." 11 U.S.C. § 1325(b)(1) (emphasis added). Each of these phrases anticipates future action during the life of a debtor's chapter 13 plan. Therefore, each precludes a debtor, like Ms. Stipe, from deducting a vehicle ownership expense she will not have over the life of her chapter 13 plan.

Second, under section 1325(b)(2) of the Bankruptcy Code, the types of expenses a debtor may deduct in calculating projected disposable income are limited to those "reasonably necessary to be expended" for: (a) the maintenance or support of the debtor or a dependent of the debtor; (b) domestic support obligations; (c) charitable contributions; and (d) the continuation, preservation, and operation of a business. See 11 U.S.C. § 1325(b)(2)(A) and (B). Phantom vehicle expense deductions, such as those allowed by the bankruptcy court in Ms. Stipe's case, do not qualify.

III. Other Bases for Reversal.

The rulings below should also be reversed because they are unfair and fail to fulfill congressional goals related to the 2005 Act. Congress passed the 2005 Act to maximize debtor repayment to creditors and to eliminate opportunities for bankruptcy abuse. Allowing above-median-income debtors, like the Weiderholds and Ms. Stipe, from claiming inapplicable ownership expense amounts impairs these goals. Moreover, such a result is unfair because: (a) it allows above-median-income debtors to claim expenses they do not have; and (b) provides creditors with smaller payments on their debts notwithstanding a debtors financial ability to repay.

ARGUMENT

I. A Vehicle Ownership Expense is "Applicable" Under Section 707(b)(2)(A)(ii)(I) of the Bankruptcy Code Only When Debtors Make Corresponding Loan or Lease Payments on their Vehicles.

A. Section 707(b)(2)(A)(ii)(I) does not let debtors claim loan or lease expenses that are not "applicable" to them because they make no loan or lease payments.

1. The Bankruptcy Code permits above-median-income debtors, like the debtors here, to claim a vehicle ownership expense amount in a set amount when that expense is "applicable." See 11 U.S.C. § 707(b)(2)(A)(ii)(I). Section 707(b)(2)(A)(ii)(I) provides that a debtor's "monthly expenses shall be the debtor's applicable monthly expense amounts specified under the . . . Local Standards . . . issued by the Internal Revenue Service. . . ." 11 U.S.C. § 707(b)(2)(A)(ii)(I) (emphasis added).

The Bankruptcy Code does not define the term "applicable." The word should therefore be given its ordinary meaning. Smith v. United States, 508 U.S. 223, 228 (1993) ("When a word is not defined by statute, we normally construe it in accord with its ordinary or natural meaning."); Galloway v. United States, 492 F.3d 219, 223 (3d Cir. 2007) ("in interpreting statutes, the literal meaning of the statute is most important, and we are always to read the statute in its 'ordinary and natural sense.'").

The dictionary defines "applicable" to mean "capable of being applied: having relevance . . . fit, suitable, or right to be applied: APPROPRIATE." Webster's Third New Int'l Dict., at 105

(1981) (emphasis in original). Such a meaning should therefore be imparted to the term "applicable" used in Section 707(b)(2)(A)(ii)(I). See Hartford Underwriters Ins. Co. v. Union Planters Bank, N.A., 530 U.S. 1, 6 (2000) ("when the statute's language is plain, the sole function of the courts-at least where the disposition required by the text is not absurd-is to enforce it according to its terms.") (internal quotations omitted); Bailey v. United States, 516 U.S. 137, 144-45 (1995) (turning to dictionary definition of a term to define its statutory meaning).

The lower courts' interpretation of section 707(b)(2)(A)(ii)(I) is inconsistent with applicable's dictionary meaning because it allows debtors to claim a monthly vehicle ownership expense amount when they do not have associated monthly loan or lease expenses. As articulated by the Ninth Circuit bankruptcy appellate panel in Ransom, "[g]iven the ordinary sense of the term 'applicable,' how is the vehicle ownership expense allowance capable of being applied to [a] debtor if he does not make any lease or loan payments on the vehicle?" Ransom v. MBNA America Bank, N.A. (In re Ransom), 380 B.R. 799, 807-08 (B.A.P. 9th Cir. 2007), appeal pending Case No. 08-15066 (9th Cir. Jan. 4, 2008) (emphasis in original). The answer is, it is not. If a debtor, like those before this Court, does not have a loan or lease payment on their vehicle, then there is no expense capable of being applied. For this reason alone, the lower courts' orders should be reversed.

2. If there was ever any doubt regarding what Congress intended the term "applicable" to mean under Section 707(b)(2)(A)(ii)(I), it would be answered in the next subsection of the Bankruptcy Code: subsection 707(b)(2)(A)(ii)(II). That subsection states, in relevant part, that a "debtor's monthly expenses may include, if applicable, the continuation of actual expenses paid by the debtor . . . for care and support of an elderly, chronically ill, or disabled household member or member of the debtor's immediate family. . . ." 11 U.S.C. § 707(b)(2)(A)(ii)(II) (emphasis added).

Thus, Congress used the term "applicable" under Section 707(b)(2)(A)(ii)(II) to only allow those expenses that literally apply to that particular debtor.

Because it is a basic rule of statutory construction that "'identical words used in different parts of the same act are intended to have the same meaning[,]'" Commissioner of Internal Revenue v. Lundy, 516 U.S. 235, 250 (1996) (citations omitted), the same meaning of the term "applicable" in Section 707(b)(2)(A)(ii)(II) should be given to the term "applicable" in Section 707(b)(2)(A)(ii)(I).

B. The lower courts' reading of Section 707(b)(2)(A)(ii)(I) renders the word "applicable" superfluous.

The interpretation of section 707(b)(2)(A)(ii)(I) offered by the lower courts suggests that the term "applicable" modifies the phrase "amounts specified under the . . . Local Standards" not the debtor's "monthly expense." See, e.g., In re Weiderhold, 381 B.R. 626, 630 (Bankr. M.D. Pa. 2008). However, the lower courts' reading cannot be right because even if the word "applicable" were stricken from section 707(b)(2)(A)(ii)(I), the remaining words in section 707(b)(2)(A)(ii)(I) still lead debtors to the same line under the IRS Local Standards as follows:

> a "debtor's monthly expenses shall be the debtor's ~~applicable~~ monthly expense amounts specified under the . . . Local Standards . . . issued by the Internal Revenue Service. . . ."

See Ransom, 380 B.R. at 808 (concluding that such a construction would "read 'applicable' right out of the Bankruptcy Code."). Accordingly, the lower courts' reading makes the word "applicable" superfluous.

Congress deliberately chose to include the term "applicable" in section 707(b)(2)(A)(ii)(I). Because "courts should strive to give operative meaning to every word in a statute," see Cooper

Indus., Inc. v. Aviall Servs., Inc., 543 U.S. 157, 167 (2004), Rosenberg v. XM Ventures, 274 F.3d 137, 141 (3d Cir. 2001), the word "applicable" must be read as adding something to the statute. See United States Trustee v. Deadmond (In re Deadmond), Case No. 07-15-H-CCL, 2008 WL 191165, at *4 (D. Mont. Jan. 22, 2008) ("The word ['applicable'] must mean something, and if some monthly expenses are applicable, then other monthly expenses are not applicable."). The United States' construction does that. The lower courts' construction does not.

Moreover, contrary to the lower courts' belief, see Weiderhold, 381 B.R. at 630, the United States' construction of section 707(b)(2)(A)(ii)(I) does not equate "applicable" with "actual." Rather, its construction gives the words "applicable" and "actual" entirely different meanings. Vehicle expense amounts under section 707(b)(2)(A)(ii)(I) are not the debtor's "actual," or literal, vehicle ownership expenses. Rather, they are static, fixed amounts, drawn from the IRS Standards, used regardless of the debtor's "actual" expenses. See Fokkena v. Hartwick (In re Hartwick), 373 B.R. 645, 650 (D. Minn. 2007) (recognizing that a debtor's "actual" expense does not control the amount of the vehicle ownership deduction under section 707(b)(2)(A)(ii)(I)). Debtors receive $471.00 for the first vehicle that has an associated loan or lease payment, and $332.00 for the second. These are the opposite of "actual" expenses.[11] See Wieland v. Thomas (In re Thomas), 382 B.R. 793, 798 (D. Kan. 2008) (finding that "the juxtaposition of 'applicable . . . amounts' and 'actual . . . expenses' in the statute is not inconsistent with the Court's interpretation" that vehicle ownership expense amounts are only applicable if a debtor is making loan or lease payments on a vehicle); Meade v. McVay (In re Meade), 384 B.R. 132, 136 (W.D. Tex. 2008) (explaining how the terms "applicable" and "actual" have different meanings under 707(b)(2)(A)(ii)(I)).

[11] Even if the terms "applicable" and "actual" meant the same thing in section 707(b)(2)(A)(ii)(I), the Supreme Court has recognized that there is nothing wrong with two different words within a single section of a statute being synonymous. See Wachovia Bank v, Schmidt, 546 U.S. 303, 314 (2006) ("Congress may well have comprehended the words 'located' and 'established,' as used in [28 U.S.C.] § 1348, not as contrasting, but as synonymous or alternative terms.").

C. The lower courts' interpretation of Section 707(b)(2)(A)(ii)(I) yields inequitable results not contemplated by Congress.

According to its legislative history, the 2005 Act seeks to "ensure that debtors repay creditors the maximum they can afford." H.R. Rep. No. 109-31 (I), at 1, 2005 U.S.C.C.A.N. at 89.[12] A contrary interpretation of section 707(b)(2)(A)(ii)(I) would frustrate the 2005 Act's goal of proper repayment by allowing above-median-income debtors to claim phantom expenses that do not apply to them. Under the lower courts' reading of section 707(b)(2)(A)(ii)(I), a higher-income debtor with an inoperable car could claim the ownership expense amount simply because the car is an automobile and he owns it. This statutory reading has been rejected because it "defies common sense." Deadmond, 2008 WL 191165, at *4.

D. Although there is a divergence of opinion on this issue, those courts allowing debtors a vehicle ownership expense under Section 707(b)(2)(A)(ii)(I) do not articulate a valid basis for doing so.

Among those appellate courts to have considered the vehicle ownership expense within the context of section 707(b)(2)(A)(ii)(I), there is a split with respect to whether the expense should be allowed.[13]

[12] There is no Senate Report or Conference Report to the 2005 Act.

[13] Indeed, there is even a divergence of opinion on this issue among the bankruptcy judges in this district depending on the bankruptcy chapter involved. For example, in the chapter 7 context, Judge Opel has held that debtors may take the vehicle ownership allowance without a concomitant ownership expense, while Chief Judge Thomas has held the opposite. Compare In re Weiderhold, 381 B.R. at 626, with In re Talmadge, 371 B.R. 96 (Bankr. M.D.Pa. 2007). Similarly, in the chapter 13 context, Judge France has held that debtors may take the vehicle ownership allowance without a concomitant ownership expense, while Judge Opel has held the opposite. Compare In re Vaughn, Case No. 06-00788 (entered June 8, 2007) (unpublished decision), with In re Ponce, Case No. 08-

Some courts have found that the expense should not be allowed. See Babin v. Wilson (In re Wilson), 383 B.R. 729 (B.A.P. 8th Cir. 2008); Grossman v. Sawdy (In re Sawdy), 384 B.R. 199 (E.D. Wis. 2008), overruled sub nom. Ross-Tousey v. Neary, 549 F.3d at 1148; Thomas, 382 B.R. at 793; Meade, 384 B.R. at 132; Deadmond, 2008 WL 191165; Ransom, 380 B.R. at 799, appeal pending Case No. 08-15066 (9th Cir. Jan. 4, 2008); Fokkena v. Hartwick, 373 B.R. at 645.

Other courts, including the United States Courts of Appeal for the Fifth and Seventh Circuits, have found that the expense should be allowed. See Ross-Tousey, 549 F.3d at 1148; Tate v. Bolen (In re Tate), – F.3d –, 2009 WL 1608890 (5th Cir. Jun. 10, 2009); Hildebrand v. Kimbro (In re Kimbro), 389 B.R. 518 (B.A.P. 6th Cir. 2008), appeal pending Case No. 08-5871 (6th Cir. Aug. 24, 2008); Clippard v. Ragle (In re Ragle), 395 B.R. 387 (E.D. Ky. 2008); Brunner v. Armstrong (In re Armstrong), 395 B.R. 127 (E.D. Wash. 2008); Musselman v. eCast Settlement Corp., 394 B.R. 801 (E.D.N.C. 2008).

Because the United States believes the decisions in Ross-Tousey, Tate, Kimbro, and the cases that follow them fail to articulate a valid basis for allowing the vehicle ownership expense under section 707(b)(2)(A)(ii)(I), it urges this Court to follow the line of decisions denying the expense.

Ross-Tousey primarily relied on interpretive conclusions reached by a divided Sixth Circuit bankruptcy appellate panel in Kimbro, whose decision was entered after briefing was completed in Ross-Tousey. See Ross-Tousey, 549 F.3d at 1155-60 (citing and quoting extensively from Kimbro, 389 B.R. at 518). Tate relied almost exclusively on the factual and legal reasoning used in Ross-Tousey and Kimbro. See Tate, –F.3d –, 2009 WL at 1608890 (citing and quoting extensively from Ross-Tousey, 549 F.3d at 1148, and Kimbro, 389 B.R. at 518). Accordingly, the government's concerns regarding Kimbro, each of which are discussed below*,* are equally applicable to Ross-Tousey, Tate, and the cases that follow them.

First, while the panels in Ross-Tousey and Tate, like the majority in Kimbro, concluded that the government's construction of section 707(b)(2)(A)(ii)(I) improperly gives the same meaning to the words "applicable" and "actual" in section 707(b)(2)(A)(ii)(I), the government's reading actually gives them different ones. Compare Kimbro, 389 B.R. at 523-24 with United States' Brief, supra. at 17. Indeed, this juxtaposition of terms was explained by the dissent in Kimbro when it stated that "Congress intended and used the phrases 'applicable monthly expense amounts' . . . and 'actual expenses' . . . simply in recognition of the differing ways in which the IRS uses the National Standards and Local Standards versus the Other Necessary Expense Categories." Kimbro, 389 B.R. at 533 (Fulton, J., dissenting).

Second, while the panels in Ross-Tousey and Tate, like the majority in Kimbro, erroneously concluded that the vehicle ownership amount was necessary to cover operating costs, a separate IRS expense standard governs those types of vehicle expenses. Compare Kimbro, 389 B.R. at 531 (referencing "depreciation, insurance, licensing fees and taxes") with United States' Brief, supra. at 6-7 (discussing vehicle ownership and operating expenses).

Third, while the panels in Ross-Tousey and Tate, like the majority in Kimbro, ruled that the phrase "monthly expenses of the debtor shall not include any payments for debts" justifies an ownership expense allowance, see, e.g., Kimbro, 389 B.R. at 523, it does not. Rather, debtors for whom the ownership expense is applicable receive a fixed standard allowance, not the dollar amount associated with a "payment for a debt." See United States' Brief, supra. at n.17.

Fourth, the panels in Ross-Tousey and Tate, like the majority in Kimbro, relied upon the legislative history of a statute never enacted in order to support their conclusions. See, e.g., Kimbro, 389 B.R. at 525-27. Such an approach has been rejected by the Supreme Court and at least three circuit courts of appeal presumably because it opens the door to the potential subversion of statutory language actually voted on by Congress and signed into law by the President. See, e.g., Mead Corp. v. Tilley, 490 U.S. 714, 723 (1989) ("We do not attach decisive significance to the unexplained disappearance of one word from an unenacted bill because 'mute intermediate legislative maneuvers' are not reliable indicators of congressional intent."); Interstate Natural Gas Co. v. Federal Power Comm., 156 F.2d 949, 952 (5th Cir. 1946) ("the legislative history of a bill that was not adopted cannot be resorted to construe a bill that was."), aff'd. 331 U.S. 682 (1947); United States v. Lincoln Rochester Trust Co., 297 F.2d 891, 893 (2d Cir. 1962) (finding that portion of House report referring to language not included in Technical Amendments Act of 1958, as finally adopted, may not be relied on in interpreting Act), cert. denied, 369 U.S. 887 (1962); Com. of Puerto Rico v. Blumenthal, 642 F.2d 622, 635 n.23 (D.C. Cir. 1980) ("[Appellant's] argument that we should not consider the legislative history of a bill that was never enacted represents a correct statement of the law.").

Fifth, the panels in Ross-Tousey and Tate, like the majority in Kimbro, erroneously declined to apply the dictionary meaning of the word "applicable." See, e.g., Kimbro, 389 B.R. at 522-23. Had they done so, it would have had to question how the vehicle ownership expense allowance is "capable of being applied" to a debtor if the debtor does not make any lease or loan payments. See, e.g., Ransom, 380 B.R. at 807-808. Accordingly, because the panels in Ross-Tousey and Tate, like the majority in Kimbro, failed to take this fundamental step as part of their statutory analysis, their construction of section 707(b)(2)(A)(ii)(I) is suspect and should not be followed by this Court.

II. As a Separate, Independent, and Alternative Basis for Reversal in the Stipe Case, this Court Should Reverse Because Section 1325(b)(1) of the Bankruptcy Code is Forward-Looking and Excludes Phantom Expenses.

A. Frederickson, the only circuit court decision to interpret the expense side of Section 1325(b)(1), as this Court is tasked with doing in the Stipe case, has concluded that Section 1325(b)(1) is forward-looking.

On October 27, 2008, the United States Court of Appeals for the Eighth Circuit decided Coop v. Frederickson. Coop v. Frederickson (In re Frederickson), 545 F.3d 652, 659-60 (8th Cir. 2008), pet. for cert. denied No. 08-950 (Mar. 23, 2009). Frederickson is the only circuit court decision to interpret section 1325(b)(1) with respect to both claimed income and expenses.[14] In doing so, Frederickson articulated a forward-looking approach to section 1325(b)(1). See Frederickson, 545 F.3d at 659.

Under this approach, a court looks to whether a debtor has, and will continue have, certain expenses going forward when determining projected disposable income under section 1325(b)(1). Id. If a debtor does not have a current expense, or will not have the expense in the future, Frederickson dictates that such information should be considered as part of the projected disposable income calculation. Id. The lower court's ruling in Stipe conflicts with this forward-looking approach because it refused to consider, as part of the projected disposable income calculation in Ms. Stipe's case, that Ms. Stipe does not, and will not, make payments on her vehicle. (Stipe R. at 1) Accordingly, this court should reverse the lower court's ruling in favor of the forward-looking approach to section 1325(b)(1) articulated in Frederickson.

[14] Other circuit courts have considered section 1325(b)(1) with respect to income only. See Hamilton v. Lanning (In re Lanning), 545 F.3d 1269, 1278-82 (10th Cir. 2008), pet. for cert. filed No. 08-998 (Feb. 3, 2009) (adopting forward-looking approach to income under section 1325(b)); Maney v. Kagenveama (In re Kagenveama), 541 F.3d 868 (9th Cir. 2008) (rejecting forward-looking approach to income under section 1325(b)). See also Kibbe v. Sumski (In re Kibbe), 361 B.R. 302, 314-15 (B.A.P. 1st Cir. 2007) (per curium) (adopting forward-looking approach to income under section 1325(b)).

B. Because Section 1325(b)(1) is forward-looking, it precludes debtors, like Ms. Stipe, from including phantom vehicle ownership expenses on their means test that they will not incur during the life of their chapter 13 plans.

Under section 1325(b)(1) of the Bankruptcy Code, a bankruptcy court may not confirm a chapter 13 plan over the chapter 13 trustee's objection unless "the plan provides that all of the debtor's projected disposable income to be received in the applicable commitment period . . . will be applied to make payments to unsecured creditors under the plan."[15] 11 U.S.C. § 1325(b)(1) (emphasis added). Thus, the use of the terms "projected," "to be received," and "will be applied to make payments" in section 1325(b)(1) makes that section forward-looking.

Although the word "projected" is not defined under the Bankruptcy Code, the dictionary defines "projected" as forward-looking. See The Random House Dict. of English Lang., 1546 (2d ed. 1987) (defining to "project" as inter alia, "to set forth or calculate (some future thing); They projected the building costs for the next five years."); Webster's Third New Int'l Dict., 1813 (1993) (defining "projected" as inter alia, "planned for future execution: contrived, composed," as "[projected] outlays for new plant and equipment."). This forward-looking meaning should therefore be imparted to the term "projected" in section 1325(b)(1) absent a clear indication that Congress intended to give that term a different meaning. See Bailey v. United States, 516 U.S. at 137 (turning to dictionary definition of a term to define its statutory meaning). Accord Kibbe, 361 B.R. at 302; Lanning, 545 F.3d at 1269; Frederickson, 545 F.3d at 652. There is no such indication.

[15] Section 1325(b)(4) defines the term "applicable commitment period," with certain exceptions, as 3 years for below-median-income chapter 13 debtors, and not less than 5 years for above-median-income chapter 13 debtors like Ms. Stipe. See 11 U.S.C. § 1325(b)(4).

The statutory requirements that: (a) a chapter 13 plan include all of a debtor's projected disposable income "to be received" during the plan period; and that (b) these amounts "will be applied to make payments" to unsecured creditors, both support this forward-looking reading of section 1325. See 11 U.S.C. § 1325(b)(1)(B). A court must interpret a statute as a symmetrical and coherent regulatory scheme and fit, if possible, all parts into a harmonious whole. See Food & Drug Admin. v. Brown & Williamson Tobacco Corp., 529 U.S. 120, 1301 (2000). Each of these phrases anticipate future action during the life of a debtor's plan. Thus, they reinforce the forward-looking nature of section 1325. See, e.g., In re Coffin, 396 B.R. 804, 809 (Bankr. D. Me. 2008).

C. This forward-looking construction of Section 1325(b)(1) is consistent with Ross-Tousey.

The forward-looking construction of section 1325(b)(1) advocated by the United States is consistent with the Seventh Circuit's ruling in Ross-Tousey. See Ross-Tousey, 549 F.3d at 1148. While Ross-Tousey ruled that chapter 7 cases are initially evaluated for dismissal under section 707(b)(2),[16] it went on to find that: (a) merely passing section 707(b)(2)'s means test does not guarantee chapter 7 relief; (b) section 707(b)(3)(B) of the Bankruptcy Code requires the dismissal of cases that pass the means test when the totality of a debtor's financial situation establishes abuse; and (c) abuse is evaluated based on a debtor's "actual income and expenses." Id. at 1157-62.

Ross-Tousey's construction of section 707(b)(3)(B) supports the United States' reading of section 1325(b) in this case. Just as section 707(b)(3)(B) mandates the dismissal of a chapter 7 debtor's case based upon an evaluation of a debtor's actual income and expenses, and regardless of a contrary result under section 707(b)(2)'s means test, id. at 1161-62; so too does section 1325(b)(1) require that a chapter 13 debtor make plan payments based upon their actual income and expenses (as projected over the life of their plan), and regardless of section 1325(b)(3)'s incorporation of section 707(b)(2)'s means test. Indeed, a contrary reading would transform section 707(b)(2)'s means test – which is merely a stage-one "screening mechanism" in chapter 7, H.R. Rep. 109-31 at 1 (I) (2005), reprinted in 2005 U.S.C.C.A.N. 88, 89 – into the final arbiter of chapter 13 plan payments.

[16] As previously discussed, section 707(b)(2) evaluates a debtor's historical income and statutorily prescribed expense amounts. See United States' Brief, supra. at 5-6.

III. As a Separate, Independent, and Alternative Basis for Reversal in the Stipe Case, this Court Should Reverse Because Section 1325(b)(2) of the Bankruptcy Code Limits a Debtor's Expense Deductions, and the Phantom Vehicle Expense Deductions Allowed by the Bankruptcy Court in Ms. Stipe's Case Do Not Qualify.

Section 1325(b)(2) of the Bankruptcy Code defines disposable income to include "current monthly income received by the debtor . . . less amounts reasonably necessary to be expended" for: (a) the maintenance or support of the debtor or a dependent of the debtor; (b) domestic support obligations; (c) charitable contributions; and (d) the continuation, preservation, and operation of a business. See 11 U.S.C. § 1325(b)(2)(A) and (B). Thus, section 1325(b)(2) expressly and independently limits the types of expenses a debtor may deduct in calculating projected disposable income.

Ms. Stipe's claimed vehicle expense deduction does not qualify under section 1325(b)(2) because it is not necessary for her or her dependents "maintenance and support." See 11 U.S.C. § 1325(b)(2)(A). "Payments that a debtor does not propose to make during the pendency of the plan and that a debtor is not required to make under the plan cannot be said to be reasonably necessary for the [maintenance or] support of that debtor." In re McPherson, 350 B.R. 38, 44-45 (Bankr. W.D. Va. 2006) (emphasis added). See also In re Rahman, 400 B.R. 362, 370 (Bankr. E.D.N.Y.

2009) (stating that "the Court must look at a debtor's stated intentions of record as they exist on the date of confirmation to determine what expenses are 'reasonably necessary to be expended for the maintenance or support of the debtor or a dependent of the debtor' during the Chapter 13 plan.") (emphasis added). Because Ms. Stipe has no loan or lease payments associated with her vehicle, her claimed expense deduction for the vehicle cannot be said to be reasonably necessary for maintenance or support.[17] See McPherson, 350 B.R. at 44-45; Rahman, 400 B.R. at 370. Accordingly, the lower court's order in Stipe should be reversed as violating section 1325(b)(2) of the Bankruptcy Code.

IV. Limiting the Vehicle Ownership Expense to Debtors With Loan or Lease Payments Fulfills Two Goals Congress Expressed in Enacting the 2005 Act.

In interpreting sections 707(b)(2)(A)(ii)(I) and 1325, this Court may consider relevant legislative history to determine the statute's objectives and illuminate its text. See Almendarez-Torres v. United States, 523 U.S. 224, 228 (1998) ("We therefore look to the statute before us and ask what Congress intended. . . . In answering this question, we look to the statute's language, structure, subject matter, context, and history-factors that typically help courts determine a statute's objectives and thereby illuminate its text."); Crandon v. United States, 494 U.S. 152, 158 (1990) ("In determining the meaning of the statute, we look not only to the particular statutory language, but to the design of the statute as a whole and to its object and policy.").

The purpose of the 2005 Act was to "ensure that debtors repay creditors the maximum they can afford." H.R. Rep. No. 109-31 (I), at 1, 2005 U.S.C.C.A.N. at 89. See also Schultz, 529 F.3d at 347 ("The centerpiece of the [2005 Act] is the imposition of a 'means test' for chapter 7 filers.").

[17] The claimed expense deductions are also not necessary for a domestic support obligation, or for charitable or business purposes. See 11 U.S.C. § 1325(b)(2)(A) and (B).

Cf. Thomas, 382 B.R. at 798 ("If a debtor were permitted a car ownership allowance when he actually incurs no such expense, application of the means test would not accurately reflect the debtor's ability to repay creditors, and the purpose of the statute would be frustrated.").

Congress felt this aspect of bankruptcy reform legislation was so important that it included this language in the first paragraph of the first page of the 2005 Act's legislative history. See H.R. Rep. No. 109-31 (I), at 1, 2005 U.S.C.C.A.N. at 89 ("The heart of the bill's consumer bankruptcy reforms consists of the implementation of an income/expense screening mechanism ('needs-based bankruptcy relief' or 'means testing'), which is intended to ensure that debtors repay creditors the maximum they can afford.").

Congress saw fit to reiterate this point when it addressed the legislative history to section 707(b).[18] Id. at 97-100. Given how important this was to Congress, sections 707(b)(2)(A)(ii)(I) and 1325 should be interpreted in accordance with the overarching goal that underpins the 2005 Act.

Further, the 2005 Act also sought to eliminate "loopholes and incentives" in the system "that allow and – sometimes – even encourage opportunistic personal filings and abuse." H.R. Rep. No. 109-31 (I), at 5, 2005 U.S.C.C.A.N. at 92.

Ensuring that above-median-income debtors are eligible to claim standardized deductions for vehicle ownership expenses only when they have such expenses honors congressional intent that debtors repay their debts when they are able. See Ransom, 380 B.R. at 807 ("[W]hat is important is the payments that debtors actually make, not how many cars they own, because the payments that debtors make are what actually affect their ability to make payments to their

[18] As previously noted, section 1325 incorporates large portions of section 707(b). See 11 U.S.C. § 1325(b)(3) (incorporating sections 707(b)(2)(A)(ii), (iii), and (iv) of the Bankruptcy Code).

creditors."); Wilson, 383 B.R. at 733 (noting that for above-median-income chapter 13 debtors, the "purpose" of the 2005 Act was to "require" such debtors "to make more funds available to their unsecured creditors"); Hartwick, 373 B.R. at 652.

V. The Lower Courts' Construction of Sections 707(b)(2)(A)(ii)(I) and 1325 Fails to Implement Sound Bankruptcy Policy Because it is Unfair to Debtors and Creditors Alike.

The lower courts' interpretation of sections 707(b)(2)(A)(ii)(I) and 1325 is unfair to all debtors because it fails to establish a threshold – the existence of vehicle loan or lease payments – for claiming an ownership deduction that is consistent for all debtors under chapters 7 and 13.

First, it discriminates in favor of better off debtors.[19] While below-median-income debtors must actually incur an expense before claiming a deduction, see 11 U.S.C. § 1325(b)(2) (allowing such debtors only "reasonably necessary" expenses), above-median-income debtors may claim a deduction regardless of whether they have an actual expense capable of being applied. See Wilson, 383 B.R. at 729 (observing that below-median-income Chapter 13 debtors, who are not subject to section 707(b)(2)(A)(ii)(I), are not entitled to deduct the ownership costs for unencumbered vehicles in determining projected disposable income).

[19] Conversely, the argument that requiring the existence of an expense in order to claim the ownership deduction somehow discriminates against above-median-income debtors fails for two reasons. First, debtors who own an unencumbered vehicle that is over 6 years old or with 75,000 or more miles are entitled to an additional $200.00 expense deduction to cover increased monthly operating expenses associated with the vehicle's age. See Internal Revenue Manual, Offer in Compromise Financial Analysis Section at 5.8.5.6.3 (09-23-2008) (providing for additional $200 vehicle operating expense in cases of aged and/of high mileage vehicles). See also Ransom, 380 B.R. at 808 (recognizing $200.00 additional allowance); Hartwick, 373 B.R. at 652 (same); Wilson, 383 B.R. at 732 (same). Second, if a debtor needs a new vehicle during the course of his chapter 13 plan, plan modification is permitted to reduce payments to creditors to account for the new expense. See 11 U.S.C. § 1329(a); Wilson, 383 B.R. at 734 ("[I]n the event a debtor needs a new car during the course of a case, the debtor can move to modify the plan based on changed circumstances.").

Second, the lower courts' interpretation is unfair to creditors because they will receive smaller payments on their debts notwithstanding an above-median-income debtors financial ability to repay. For example, Ms. Stipe's bankruptcy schedules indicate that she has the present ability to repay at least $535.68 per month to her general unsecured creditors over a sixty month repayment plan. (Stipe R. at Dkt. 1) However, the lower court would require her to repay only $180 per month. (Stipe R. at Dkt. 3, 17) In enacting the 2005 Act, Congress was concerned that under the prior system, "some bankruptcy debtors are able to repay a significant portion of their debts" but are not required to do so. H.R. Rep. No. 109-31 (I), at 5, 2005 U.S.C.C.A.N. at 92. To read the 2005 Act as loosening the expense requirements for above-median-income debtors would benefit the very group of debtors that Congress enacted the 2005 Act to scrutinize more closely.

CONCLUSION

For these reasons, the United States respectfully asks the Court to reverse the decisions below.

JURISDICTIONAL STATEMENT

On September 21, 2009, the United States Bankruptcy Court for the District of Montana issued an order under 11 U.S.C. § 1112(b) converting Appellant John Patrick Stokes' chapter 11 bankruptcy case to a case under chapter 7 (the "conversion order"). (Bankr. Dkt. 97, 98). On October 1, Mr. Stokes timely filed a motion to have the bankruptcy court reconsider the conversion order, which stayed his time to file a notice of appeal. (Bankr. Dkt. 140). See Fed. R. Bankr. P. 8002(b). On October 8, the bankruptcy court denied Mr. Stokes' motion to reconsider. (Bankr. Dkt. 150). Mr. Stokes timely filed a notice of appeal on October 16, 2009, under 28 U.S.C. § 158(c)(2) and Fed. R. Bankr. P. 8002(a) and (b). (Bankr. Dkt. 154). The appeal of the conversion order and the motion to reconsider the conversion order is a timely appeal of a final order of the bankruptcy court. This Court has jurisdiction to hear the appeal pursuant to 28 U.S.C. § 158(a)(1).

STATEMENT OF THE ISSUES[1]

1. Did the bankruptcy court abuse its discretion under 11 U.S.C. § 1112(b)

[1] Mr. Stokes also appeals the bankruptcy court's September 21, 2009 order denying, without prejudice, his motion to modify the automatic stay under 11 U.S.C. § 362(a) to permit the Montana Supreme Court to hear an appeal by Mr. Stokes of a judgment against him. (Bankr. Dkt. 97, 99). Although Mr. Stokes devotes the majority of his appellate brief to this issue (App. Br. at 1-21), the United States Trustee took no position on this issue when it was before the bankruptcy court, and therefore takes no position on it in this appeal.

when it converted Mr. Stokes' chapter 11 bankruptcy case to a chapter 7 bankruptcy case?

2. Did the bankruptcy court abuse its discretion under 11 U.S.C. § 1112(b) by finding various objections that Mr. Stokes now alleges were "constitutional" violations were insufficient to prevent the conversion of his bankruptcy case?

STANDARD OF REVIEW

A bankruptcy court's decision to convert a case to chapter 7 pursuant to 11 U.S.C. § 1112(b) is reviewed for an abuse of discretion. In re Consol. Pioneer Mortg. Entities, 264 F.3d 803, 806 (9th Cir. 2001). The bankruptcy court's decision "'will be reversed only if based on an erroneous conclusion of law or when the record contains no evidence on which [the bankruptcy court] rationally could have based that decision.'" Id. at 806-07 (quoting In re Conejo Enter., Inc., 96 F.3d 346, 351 (9th Cir.1996)).

STATEMENT OF THE CASE

Mr. Stokes filed a voluntary bankruptcy petition under chapter 11 of the United States Bankruptcy Code.[2] (Bankr. Dkt. 4). Shortly thereafter, the United States Trustee filed a motion with the bankruptcy court to have Mr. Stokes' case converted to a chapter 7 case pursuant to 11 U.S.C. § 1112(b)(1). (Bankr. Dkt. 24). In support of the motion, the United States Trustee noted that Mr. Stokes' Schedules and Statement of Financial Affairs ("SOFA") were incomplete and inaccurate.[3] As set forth in more detail below: Mr. Stokes' description of his interest in real property is inaccurate; Mr. Stokes' recitation of his household property failed to disclose several thousand dollars worth of household items, a number of vehicles, an FCC radio license with an estimated value (according to Mr. Stokes) of $1.5 million, and two radio towers with an estimated value (according to Mr. Stokes) of $625,000; Mr. Stokes provided inaccurate information concerning the value of secured claims; Mr. Stokes failed to acknowledge priority claims including personal state and federal income taxes; and Mr. Stokes failed to list a number of unsecured creditors.

Mr. Stokes filed a response to the motion requesting conversion. (Bankr. Dkt. 29). In his response Mr. Stokes acknowledged inaccuracies in his SOFA but argued that conversion would not be in the best interests of Mr. Stokes' creditors and that efforts were underway to correct and amend the SOFA. (Id.) A hearing was held on the motion to convert on August 13 and 14, 2009. ("Hearing Tr." at Bankr. Dkt. 164, 165). All of Mr. Stokes' creditors who have made appearances, with the exception of his daughter, joined the United States Trustee's motion in support of conversion. (Bankr. Dkt. 30, 97 at p.32, 164, 165).

On September 21, 2009, the bankruptcy court entered the conversion order accompanied by an opinion supporting the order. In that opinion, the bankruptcy court found that sufficient "cause" required by 11 U.S.C. § 1112(b)(1) existed for the conversion of the case. (Bankr. Dkt. 97, Op. at 35). The bankruptcy court also found "the best interests of the creditors and estate clearly are served with conversion to Chapter 7, and appointment of a trustee and qualified and objective counsel to investigate and evaluate the Debtor's assets and lawsuits." (Bankr. Dkt. 97, Op. at 33).

In the same order, the bankruptcy court also denied, without prejudice, Mr. Stokes' motion to modify the automatic stay under 11 U.S.C. § 362(a) to permit the Montana Supreme Court to hear an appeal by Mr. Stokes from a judgment of $3.8 million. (Bankr. Dkt. 97, Op. at 36-37). Mr. Stokes argued that judgment was the basis for his decision to file for bankruptcy and that, "[l]iability cannot be established if any until the Supreme Court reviews to affirm or remand or dismiss." (Bankr. Dkt. 58, Stay Mot. at 1).

The bankruptcy court denied the motion to modify the stay, without prejudice, based on its finding that "it [is] premature to lift the stay to allow the Debtor's appeal of the Gardners' judgment to proceed in the Montana Supreme Court. With conversion of this case, a trustee will be appointed in the Chapter 7 case who must be permitted reasonable time to evaluate the Debtor's appeal along with the other assets and claims." (Bankr. Dkt. 97, Op. at 36). In the bankruptcy court, the United States Trustee took no position on Mr. Stokes' motion to modify the automatic stay, and takes no position on it now.

SUMMARY OF ARGUMENT

The bankruptcy court did not abuse its discretion when it converted this case from chapter 11 to chapter 7. The conversion order was supported by the bankruptcy court's findings of facts, which in turn were supported by the evidence, including Mr. Stokes' own documents, filed and subscribed under penalty of perjury, and his testimony. Because Mr. Stokes failed to show a reasonable justification for the deficiencies in filing and reporting and failed to show that there was a reasonable likelihood that a plan would be confirmed, the bankruptcy court acted within its discretion by converting the case to chapter 7.

Furthermore, the bankruptcy court did not abuse its discretion in ordering conversion of this case to chapter 7 notwithstanding the list of objections that Mr.

Stokes sets out in his brief as alleged violations of his Fourth and Fifth Amendment rights. Several of these objections are factually wrong. Moreover, Mr. Stokes did not establish in the bankruptcy court how any of these alleged violations required a different outcome on the issue of conversion, nor does he do so on appeal. Accordingly, this Court should affirm.

ARGUMENT

A. The Bankruptcy Court Did Not Abuse Its Discretion in Ordering This Case Converted to Chapter 7.

"[A]bsent unusual circumstances specifically identified by the court," 11 U.S.C. § 1112(b)(1) requires a bankruptcy court, upon a the request of a party in interest, to convert a bankruptcy case under another chapter to a chapter 7 case or dismiss the case, "whichever is in the best interests of creditors and the estate, if the movant establishes cause." 11 U.S.C. § 1112(b)(1). The United States Trustee "is a recognized party in interest with standing to request after notice and a hearing the dismissal or conversion of a Chapter 11 case." In re Johnston, 149 B.R. 158, 161 (B.A.P. 9th Cir. 1992). See 28 U.S.C. § 586(a)(8) (authorizing United States Trustees to file motions under section 1112(b)).

Subsection 1112(b)(4) of the Bankruptcy Code provides a list of what constitutes "cause" to convert or dismiss a case. 11 U.S.C. § 1112(b)(4). This list is non-exhaustive. In re Gonic Realty Trust, 909 F.2d 624, 627 (1st. Cir. 1990); In re Milford Connecticut Assocs., L.P., 404 B.R. 699, 707 (D. Conn. 2009). That is so because the section uses the term "including," which the Bankruptcy Code construes as being non-limiting. 11 U.S.C. § 102(3).

A debtor (or another party in interest) can successfully object to a motion to convert or dismiss under section 1112(b)(1) if the debtor can establish:

> (A) there is a reasonable likelihood that a plan will be confirmed within the timeframes established in sections 1121(e) and 1129(e) of this title, or if such sections do not apply, within a reasonable period of time; and
> (B) the grounds for granting such relief include an act or omission of the debtor other than under paragraph (4)(A) –
> > (i) for which there exists a reasonable justification for the act or omission; and
> > (ii) that will be cured within a reasonable period of time fixed by the court.

11 U.S.C. § 1112(b)(2).

In his brief, Mr. Stokes states that this is an appeal of the conversion order. (App. Br. at 5). Over the course of twenty-nine pages of his brief, however, he devotes only two paragraphs to his claim of error regarding the conversion order. (App. Br. at 22-23). Mr. Stokes provides no legal authorities in support of his appeal of the conversion order and does not provide this Court with any basis upon which it could find that the bankruptcy court abused its discretion in converting Mr. Stokes' case to a chapter 7 case.[4]

Mr. Stokes' brief sets out no adequate basis for reversing the bankruptcy court's conversion order. To the contrary, the court below did not abuse its discretion in finding that ample cause existed for the conversion of Mr. Stokes' chapter 11 case to a chapter 7 case. Put succinctly, Mr. Stokes repeatedly failed to give the bankruptcy court an adequate statement of his financial affairs. His testimony and filings were routinely in conflict. At every turn, Mr. Stokes failed to provide the bankruptcy court, the United States Trustee, and his creditors with a complete and accurate picture of his assets.

For example, in his original schedules, Mr. Stokes failed to list under several of the required schedules assets that, according to Mr. Stokes, are valued at several million dollars. On Schedule A, Mr. Stokes was required to list "all real property in which the debtor has any legal, equitable, or future interest[.]" (Bankr. Dkt. 17 at p.3). At a creditor's meeting held pursuant to 11 U.S.C. § 341 (a "section 341 meeting") Mr. Stokes acknowledged that he failed to list easement rights to property on which he maintains two radio towers that he estimated to be worth $6.6 million. (Bankr. Dkt. 81, Exh. 2 at 72-73). Mr. Stokes confirmed this failure in the hearing on the conversion motion. (Hearing Tr. at 47).

[4] This Court might be able to dismiss Mr. Stokes' appeal pursuant to Bankruptcy Rule 8010, which provides, inter alia, that a brief must include "contentions of the appellant with respect to the issues presented, and the reasons therefor, with citations to the authorities, statutes and parts of the record relied on." Fed. R. Bankr. 8010(a)(1)(E). Mr. Stokes' brief does not contain these items with respect to his appeal of the conversion order. Cf. In re Morrissey, 349 F.3d 1187, 1189 (9th Cir. 2003) (affirming B.A.P dismissal of an appeal where appellant's brief "lacked a statement of appellate jurisdiction; there was no intelligible statement of the issues presented or the applicable standard of appellate review; there was no statement of the case in the form required; and the argument sections omitted essential citations to the authorities, statutes and parts of the record relied on.") (internal citations omitted). But, as further review might be sought, it may be most prudent to address the merits, as the record fully supports affirmance.

On Schedule B, Mr. Stokes was required to list "[l]icenses, franchises, and other general intangibles." (Bankr. Dkt. 17 at p.4). At his section 341 meeting, Mr. Stokes acknowledged he failed to list a radio license issued by the FCC which he estimates has a fair market value of $1.5 million. (Bankr. Dkt. 81, Exh. 2 at 66-67, 71). Mr. Stokes was also required to list on Schedule B, "contingent and unliquidated claims of every nature[.]" (Bankr. Dkt. 17 at p.4). Mr. Stokes listed none. At his section 341 meeting, Mr. Stokes identified several claims he valued at more than $5.4 million. (Bankr. Dkt. 81, Exh. 2 at 57-60).

On Schedule D, Mr. Stokes was required to list creditors holding claims secured against his property, the value of the secured property, and the amount of the claim. (Bankr. Dkt. 17 at p.8). Mr. Stokes listed a 2002 Dodge truck with a value of $2,075. (Id.). Yet in his section 341 meeting, Mr. Stokes averred the value was close to $12,000. (Bankr. Dkt. 81, Exh. 2 at 66). Mr. Stokes listed Questa Resources as a secured creditor with a claim amount of $1.3 million. (Bankr. Dkt. 17, at p.8). In his section 341 meeting, Mr. Stokes acknowledged that Questa is no longer a secured creditor, having assigned its interest to other parties in 2000. (Bankr. Dkt. 81, Exh. 2 at 78-79). These parties are not listed on Mr. Stokes' original schedules.

On Schedule E, Mr. Stokes was required to list unsecured priority claims. (Bankr. Dkt. 17 at p.9). Included on the Schedule is a check box to indicate "[t]axes, customs duties, and penalties owing to federal, state, and local governmental units[.]" (Id.). Mr. Stokes checked the box indicating he was subject to no unsecured priority claims. In his section 341 meeting, however, Mr. Stokes testified that this was not true. (Bankr. Dkt. 81, Exh. 2 at 81). Mr. Stokes testified he had never filed a Montana income tax return since moving to the state in 1994 and had not filed federal income tax returns since 1985 and that he likely owed income taxes to both Montana and the United States. (Id. at 82-83).

These are but some of the problems with Mr. Stokes' original schedules and SOFA. In his amended schedules and SOFA, filed almost five months after he filed his bankruptcy petition and three months after the United States Trustee sought conversion, Mr. Stokes did belatedly correct some of the problems. (Bankr. Dkt. 69, 70). For example, Mr. Stokes' original Schedule A listed $3.1 million in interests in real property; his amended Schedule A listed $10.7 million. (Bankr. Dkt. 97, Op. at 15). But problems remained with Mr. Stokes' amended schedules and SOFA, and as the bankruptcy court properly noted, the amended schedules and SOFA "continue[] to reflect serious errors and omissions." (Id.).

Specifically, Mr. Stokes omitted from his amended schedules approximately $65 million in litigation claims for which he provided inaccurate numbers or failed to disclose at all. In his Amended Schedule B, Mr. Stokes lists a claim of $12 million in litigation against Davar and Todd Gardener. (Bankr. Dkt. 69 at p.13). Mr. Stokes complaint against the Gardeners, by his own admission, seeks closer to $50 million. (Hearing Tr. at 61-62). Mr. Stokes also listed in his Amended Schedule B a litigation claim against Wade Dahood at $410,000. (Bankr. Dkt. 69, at p.14). In the hearing on the conversion motion, Mr. Stokes admitted his complaint against Mr. Dahood seeks well over $12 million. (Hearing Tr. at 65).

Mr. Stokes also failed to list in his Amended Schedule B a lawsuit he had filed against, inter alia, Questa Resources and Boone Karlberg Employee Profit Sharing Trust. In the hearing on the conversion motion, Mr. Stokes admitted that he filed such a lawsuit and was seeking $2.7 million. (Hearing Tr. at 68-69).

Mr. Stokes' failure to file even reasonably accurate schedules and SOFA constitutes sufficient cause for conversion. In re Cohoes Indus. Terminal, Inc., 65

B.R. 918, 921 (Bankr. S.D.N.Y.1986) ("A debtor's failure to file proper schedules of assets and liabilities; a failure to file accurate monthly operating statements of assets and liabilities; an inability to obtain adequate insurance to protect its property; a failure to pay post-petition rent and mortgage charges, and the absence of a plan of reorganization or any forward movement during the more than five months after the filing of a Chapter 11 petition constitute sufficient cause for either dismissing the case or converting it for liquidation pursuant to 11 U.S.C. § 1112(b)."); see In re Charfoos, 979 F.2d 390 (6th Cir. 1992) (Chapter 11 case dismissed for, inter alia, factual misrepresentations and omissions on financial statements and bankruptcy pleadings).

Moreover, as the bankruptcy court noted in its decision supporting the conversion order, cause supporting conversion existed for a number of additional reasons. (Bankr. Dkt. 97, Op. at 30). At the hearing on the motion to convert Mr. Stokes' case, Larry Rezentes, the bankruptcy analyst and CPA for the United States Trustee, testified that Mr. Stokes failed to file satisfactory monthly operating reports as required by the United States Trustee. (Hearing Tr. at 15-18). According to Mr. Rezentes, the financial documents Mr. Stokes did file did not meet the United States Trustee's requirements, and Mr. Rezentes could not evaluate Mr. Stokes' financial condition. (Hearing Tr. at 19-20).

As a result of Mr. Stokes' failure to file satisfactory operating reports, the bankruptcy court did not abuse its discretion in finding cause for conversion under two of the categories listed at section 1112(b)(4). Mr. Stokes failed to "satisfy timely any filing or reporting requirement established by this title or by any rule applicable to a case under this chapter." 11 U.S.C. § 1112(b)(4)(F); In re Tucker, 411 B.R. 530, 535 (Bankr. S.D. Ga. 2009) ("cause" existed for conversion where "[d]ebtor's monthly operating reports [were] incomplete, misleading, and materially false in some respects."); In re Tornheim, 181 B.R. 161, 164 (Bankr. S.D.N.Y.1995) ("Refusal or inability to provide financial disclosure sounds the death knell of a chapter 11 case. The failure to file monthly operating statements required by the Trustee's operating guidelines, 'whether based on inability to do so or otherwise, undermines the chapter 11 process and constitutes cause for dismissal or conversion of the chapter 11 proceedings.'") (quoting In re Roma Group, Inc., 165 B.R. 779, 780 (S.D.N.Y.1994)); In re Wilkins Inv. Group, Inc., 171 B.R. 194, 196-97 (Bankr. M.D. Pa. 1994) (dismissal warranted in chapter 11 case, though not filed in bad faith, for failure to file monthly operating reports with trustee). Mr. Stokes also failed "to provide information . . . reasonably requested by the United States trustee." 11 U.S.C. § 1112(b)(4)(H). Accordingly, the bankruptcy court did not abuse its discretion in ordering the conversion Mr.

Stokes' case on these additional grounds.

Rather than contradict or deny any of these shortcomings, Mr. Stokes argues that the United States Trustee treated "every failure by Mr. Stokes . . . . as if he was represented by the best law firm in Montana instead of being forced to act pro se, having been abandoned by his lawyer (after the lawyer failed to properly do his job) in the middle of the proceedings." (App. Br. 22-23).[5] This is not so. And Mr. Stokes' omissions and his inaccuracies constitute material discrepancies. By Mr. Stokes' own account, he failed to include in his SOFA and amended schedules several million dollars worth of assets and failed to list a number creditors and claims. (Bankr. Dkt. 81, Exh. 2 at 57-60, 66-67, 71, 72-73, 78-79, 81, 82-83; Hearing Tr. at 47, 61-62, 65, 68-69). Mr. Stokes' case is precisely the type in which a trustee is necessary to examine a debtor's finances and arrive at an accurate picture of his assets and liabilities. See In re McCorhill Pub., Inc., 73

[5] The United States Trustee filed its motion to convert on April 22, 2009. At that time, and when Mr. Stokes prepared and filed his original schedules and SOFA, he was represented by counsel. (Bankr. Dkt. 17) (filed by counsel G. Duncan). Mr. Stokes' response to the motion was also filed on his behalf by counsel. (Bankr. Dkt. 28) (filed by counsel G. Duncan). Mr. Stokes's first counsel did not file a motion to withdraw until June 5, 2009. (Bankr. Dkt. 48).

Moreover, whether or not Mr. Stokes was represented by counsel is irrelevant in this circuit. While some leeway may be given to a pro se litigant in certain circumstances, no such leeway can extend to filing wholly inaccurate and misleading schedules of assets. Mr. Stokes has an obligation to prepare and submit accurate filings no matter if he is a pro se litigant or in fact represented by the best law firm in Montana. In re Glass, 60 F.3d 565, 570 (9th Cir. 1995) (the fact that a debtor proceeds pro se is no excuse for filing inaccurate or incomplete schedules).

B.R. 1013, 1017 (Bankr. S.D.N.Y. 1987) (noting the value of a trustee "when a debtor fails to maintain complete and accurate financial records, or fails to substantiate undocumented transactions, so that there appears to be a confusion in the debtor's accounting system"). Mr. Stokes admission that he failed to provide accurate information to the bankruptcy court underscores that the order converting this case to chapter 7 should be affirmed.

Once cause is established, a court must next decide whether to convert or dismiss a chapter 11 case is the "best interests of the creditors." 11 U.S.C. § 1112(b)(1) (requiring that "the court shall convert a case under this chapter to a case under chapter 7 or dismiss a case under this chapter, whichever is in the best interests of creditors and the estate, if the movant establishes cause.") (Emphasis added). Every one of Mr. Stokes' creditors who appeared at the hearing joined the United States Trustee's motion to convert this case to a chapter 7 case. (Bankr. Dkt. 30, 97 at p.32, 164, 165). There is perhaps no better evidence of how the creditors view their own interests. See Loop Corp. v. U.S. Trustee, 290 B.R. 108, 115 (D. Minn. 2003) (bankruptcy court did not abuse its discretion in converting to a chapter 7 case where creditor's committee favored conversion and noting that "these creditors were in the best position to determine their own best interests"). And the bankruptcy court specifically found conversion was in the creditors' best interest. (Bankr. Dkt. 97, Op. at p.33).

Accordingly, the bankruptcy court did not abuse its discretion when it converted Mr. Stokes' case to a chapter 7 case. As the bankruptcy court noted, "overwhelming evidence establishes the 'cause' identified under § 1112(b)(2) and (b)(4) that is necessary for conversion to chapter 7." (Bankr. Dkt. 97 at p.32). The decision of the bankruptcy court should be affirmed.

B. The Bankruptcy Court Did Not Abuse Its Discretion by Ordering Conversion Notwithstanding the Issues that Mr. Stokes Now Alleges as "Constitutional" Violations.

Finally, Mr. Stokes appears to assert that the bankruptcy court should not have converted his bankruptcy to a chapter 7 case because the United States Trustee allegedly violated his rights protected by the Fourth and Fifth Amendments to the United States Constitution. (App. Br. 23-27). Each of Mr. Stokes' allegations is a mere conclusory statement that his constitutional rights were violated. He provides no record support for his allegations. He provides no legal authorities to support his claims.[6] Mr. Stokes' allegations are without merit, and none provides a basis for concluding that the bankruptcy court abused its discretion in converting Mr. Stokes' case to one under chapter 7.

[6] See Fed. R. Bankr. P. 8010(a)(1)(E) (requiring the brief of an appellant to "contain the contentions of the appellant with respect to the issues presented, and the reasons therefor, with citations to the authorities, statutes and parts of the record relied on.").

Although Mr. Stokes lists seven allegations against "the US Trustee," (App. Br. at 25-27), not all of his allegations bear a connection to actions that were in fact undertaken by the United States Trustee. For instance, Mr. Stokes alleges the United States Trustee created a "perjury trap" by requesting that Mr. Stokes file amended schedules but still holding him accountable during the section 341 meeting for his answers in the original schedules and SOFA. (App. Br. at 25). This Court should not reverse the bankruptcy court based on Mr. Stokes' allegation of a "perjury trap." Mr. Stokes filed sworn statements setting forth the condition of his financial affairs. (Bankr. Dkt. 1, 4, 17, 70). He makes no effort to explain why holding him accountable for the filing of these statements or questioning their contents amounts to either a "perjury trap" or a violation of constitutional rights. Indeed, it is hard to imagine how it could be unconstitutional to require a debtor to provide truthful and accurate information in his bankruptcy schedules.

Second and third, Mr. Stokes alleges that the United States Trustee violated the bankruptcy court's order that he submit a witness list three days prior to the hearing on the motion to convert, (Bankr. Dkt. 77), and the United States Trustee "endorsed" a "violation of the three-day rule" when he "allowed" Mr. Stokes' creditors "to not provide their witness list until the day after" the August 13 hearing, (App. Br. at 25-26). Notwithstanding Mr. Stokes' allegations, the United States Trustee in fact filed a copy of his witness list with the bankruptcy court on August 10, 2009, three days before the hearing, and served the witness list on Mr. Stokes by mailing it the same day. (Bankr. Dkt. 83). Likewise, the record reflects that Mr. Stokes' creditors did the same. (Bankr. Dkt. 80). Even assuming the record established that the United States Trustee failed to comply with the bankruptcy court's scheduling order, Mr. Stokes' brief does not allege that his ability to prepare for or present his case at the hearing was prejudiced. In light of the record, this Court should find that the bankruptcy court did not abuse its discretion by converting this case to one under chapter 7 and overruling Mr. Stokes' objections, which do not rise to the level of constitutional violations. (Bankr. Dkt. 164, Hrg. Tr. at 6). See generally In re Finney, 992 F.2d 43, 45 (4th Cir. 1993) (finding that notice and a hearing in a proceeding to convert a case to a chapter 7 case satisfies due process).

Fourth, Mr. Stokes claims the United States Trustee "endorsed" a violation of "the rules of evidence" by an attorney for one of Mr. Stokes' creditors when Mr. Stokes allegedly "was not permitted to explain an answer in the critical August 13th Hearing." (App. Br. at 26). In that hearing, Mr. Stokes was asked by counsel for the creditor a yes-or-no question — whether a statement Mr. Stokes had made in his section 341 meeting was correct. (Bankr. Dkt. 164, at 129). Mr. Stokes fails to provide any legal or factual explanation for how the actions of third parties not under the control, nor acting at the direction, of the United States Trustee should be imputed to the United States Trustee. And Mr. Stokes does not allege that he was prejudiced or otherwise precluded from stating his position to the bankruptcy court after the creditor's counsel had finished his questions. This Court should not conclude that the bankruptcy court abused its discretion in any way related to this objection.

In his fifth allegation, Mr. Stokes seems to have confused the United States Trustee with the chapter 7 trustee, who is not a government official. Compare 28 U.S.C. § 581(a)(18) (the United States Trustee for this district is a Justice Department employee), with 11 U.S.C. §§ 326, 701, 702(d), and 704 (appointment, duties, and compensation of non-governmental chapter 7 trustees). Mr. Stokes alleges that the United States Trustee violated the Fourth Amendment by seizing personal papers, without a warrant or probable cause, from a radio station that he owned and operated. (App. Br. at 26). The chapter 7 trustee, Richard J. Samson, took possession of estate assets in furtherance of an order of the bankruptcy court that is not before the Court in this appeal. (Bankr. Dkt. 120). Moreover, the United States Trustee took no part in the enforcement of this order.

On this record, therefore, there is no basis to conclude that the United States Trustee committed any violation of the Fourth Amendment.[7]

Sixth, Mr. Stokes alleges that the United States Trustee "violated the principle of attorney-client privilege" between Mr. Stokes and his first bankruptcy counsel by allegedly ordering counsel to "hand over Stokes file." (App. Br. at 26). As alleged by Mr. Stokes on appeal and in the bankruptcy court, this is not an objection grounded in any right guaranteed by the constitution. If Mr. Stokes believes his former counsel erred in producing materials, Mr. Stokes' quarrel is with him. In any event, the record reflects that Mr. Stokes objected — not on constitutional grounds — to the admission into evidence of his proposed plan of reorganization and disclosure statement, and the bankruptcy court overruled this objection. (Bankr. Dkt. 164, Hrg. Tr. at 104-06). There was no abuse of discretion in this ruling, because a debtor's disclosure of his assets and liabilities to his attorney for the purpose of preparing bankruptcy petitions and schedules is not protected by the attorney-client privilege. See United States v. Bauer, 132 F.3d 504, 509 (9th Cir. 1997) ("When information is disclosed for the purpose of assembly into a bankruptcy petition and supporting schedules, there is no intent for the information to be held in confidence because the information is to be disclosed on documents publicly filed with the bankruptcy court.") (quoting United States v. White, 950 F.2d 426, 430 (7th Cir.1991)).

[7] Furthermore, it is unclear that Mr. Stokes properly preserved this issue. At the hearing on his motion for reconsideration, Mr. Stokes did not assert any Fourth Amendment violations related to the securing of his assets, but instead presented the issue as a request for a continuance of the hearing. (Bankr. Dkt. 163, Tr. at 5-7, 11).

Seventh and last, Mr. Stokes alleges the United States Trustee "failed to determine" the "actual value" of certain land associated with Mr. Stokes' estate by failing to get an appraisal or "by acquiring certain knowledge of the City of Kalispell's airport expansion plans." (App. Br. at 27). The United States Trustee had no role in the valuation of property associated with Mr. Stokes' estate. It is the responsibility of the chapter 7 trustee to evaluate the assets of the estate. See 11 U.S.C. § 704(a) (setting forth the duties of the chapter 7 trustee). Thus, there is no basis to conclude that the United States Trustee has violated any of Mr. Stokes' rights — constitutional or otherwise — in regard to this claim.

Even if Mr. Stokes had supported his allegations of "constitutional" violations with record evidence or legal authorities, he has not explained how or why these allegations were related to the subject of this appeal: the bankruptcy court's decision to convert Mr. Stokes bankruptcy case to a chapter 7. As demonstrated above, the bankruptcy court's decision was amply supported by the record. Mr. Stokes repeatedly failed to provide an accurate picture of his financial affairs and he failed to cooperate with the routine requirement of the United States Trustee that he submit monthly operating reports. Cause existed to support the conversion of the case to a chapter 7 case and it was in the best interests of the creditors to do so. 11 U.S.C. § 1112(b). The bankruptcy court did not abuse its discretion.

CONCLUSION

For all of the foregoing reasons, the bankruptcy court's order converting Mr. Stokes' case to a chapter 7 case should be affirmed.

SUMMARY OF THE CASE AND STATEMENT REGARDING ORAL ARGUMENT

In October, 1998 United States Trustee Barbara G. Stuart forwarded to the Minnesota Office of Lawyers Professional Responsibility (hereinafter "OLPR") findings of the United States Bankruptcy Court regarding the apparent attorney misconduct of Attorney 99-37. The Minnesota OLPR later commenced an Attorney disciplinary proceeding against Attorney 99-37.

Attorney 99-37 obtained a subpoena from Ramsey County District Court directing the United States Trustee to appear at a deposition. Attorney 99-37 sought the consent of the United States Department of Justice to the deposition. The United States Department of justice refused to allow the United States Trustee to be deposed, but did consent to the deposition of the subordinate Departmental attorney assigned to the case.

After the United States Trustee did not appear for the deposition, Attorney 99-37 brought an action in Ramsey County District Court, the court issuing the subpoena, to compel the United States Trustee's testimony and to have the United States Trustee found in contempt of a state court subpoena. The United States Trustee removed the subpoena and motion to compel from state court to federal court. The United States Trustee then moved to quash the subpoena and dismiss the action. Attorney 99-37 moved the District Court to remand the case to State Court or alternatively to compel the United States Trustee's testimony and for an award of attorney's fees and costs.

The District Court, the Honorable James M. Rosenbaum reviewed the merits of the case, quashed the subpoena and granted the United States Trustee’s dismissal motion.

Counsel for Appellee do not believe oral argument will assist the court appreciably in its consideration of the case.

STATEMENT OF THE CASE

Attorney 99-37 obtained a subpoena from Ramsey County District Court directing the United States Trustee, Barbara G. Stuart, to appear at a January 25, 2000 deposition. Ms. Stuart is the United States Trustee for Region 12 covering the Districts of Minnesota, North Dakota, South Dakota and Iowa. The U.S. Trustee Program ("USTP") is a component of the Department of Justice responsible for overseeing the administration of bankruptcy cases and private trustees. 28 U.S.C. § 586; 11 U.S.C. § 101, et seq.[1/]

Attorney 99-37 obtained the state court subpoena pursuant to Rule 9(d), Minnesota Rules on Lawyers Professional Responsibility. Earlier the Minnesota Office of Lawyers Professional Responsibility had commenced a disciplinary proceeding against Attorney 99-37. Neither the United States nor U.S. Trustee Stuart were a party to this proceeding. Attorney 99-37 sought to take Ms. Stuart's deposition in conjunction with that disciplinary procedure.

[1/] Congress established the office of the United States Trustee in the Bankruptcy Reform Act of 1978 to "protect[] the public interest and ensur[e] that bankruptcy cases are conducted according to the law." H. Rep. No. 95-595, 95th Cong., 2d Sess. at 109 (Sept. 8, 1977), reprinted in 1978 U.S. Code Cong. & Admin. News 5787, 5963, 6070. Congress declared that the United States Trustee "may be compared with . . . a prosecutor," and stated in no uncertain terms that United States Trustees "serve as bankruptcy watch-dogs to prevent fraud, dishonesty, and overreaching in the bankruptcy arena." Id. at 6071 and 6049; accord In Re Clark, 927 F.2d 793, 795-96 (4th Cir. 1991) ("The trustee serves the role of 'protecting the public interest and ensuring that bankruptcy cases are conducted according to law'"); In Re Revco D.S. Inc., 898 F.2d 498, 499-500 (6th Cir. 1990); In Re Columbia Gas Sys. Inc., 33 F.3d 294, 296-97 (3d Cir. 1994).

Counsel for Attorney 99-37 applied to the United States Department of Justice (hereinafter "Department" or "DOJ") pursuant to the DOJ Touhy Regulations to depose United States Trustee Stuart.[2] DOJ refused to allow the United States Trustee to testify, but did allow the deposition and hearing testimony of a subordinate attorney in the United States Trustee's office, Sarah J. Fagg. Ms. Fagg's deposition had already been completed at the time Attorney 99-37 sought to depose United States Trustee Stuart.

After thorough review of the supplemental deposition request under the Department's Touhy rules, DOJ refused to allow the deposition of the United States Trustee because her testimony would, at most, be duplicative of the testimony of Ms. Fagg -- who was the attorney assigned to the case and most knowledgeable of the underlying facts and Bankruptcy Court findings of impropriety -- and because there is no waiver of sovereign immunity compelling the appearance of senior Federal officials in state court proceedings. In addition, the United States Trustee's deposition would be unduly burdensome and disruptive of the operation of her office, and wholly superfluous in light of the prior deposition of a subordinate. Accordingly, the United States Trustee did not appear at the deposition.

[2] These rules are codified in the Code of Federal Regulations at 28 C.F.R. 16.21-16.29 (Subpart B, "Production or Disclosure in Federal and State Proceedings"). These regulations are sometimes referred to as the "Touhy" rules, after the seminal case of United States ex rel. Touhy v. Ragen, 340 U.S. 462 (1951), which is cited at 28 C.F.R. 16.28.

Attorney 99-37 then brought an action in State Court to compel the United States Trustee's testimony and to have Trustee Stuart found in contempt. Counsel for the United States Trustee removed the contempt action to Federal Court. The United States Trustee then moved to quash the subpoena and dismiss the action pursuant to Rule 12, Federal Rules of Civil Procedure, on the basis that the State Court lacked subject matter jurisdiction and that the Plaintiff had failed to state a claim upon which relief could be granted.

The District Court, the Honorable James Rosenbaum, reviewed the merits of the case, quashed the subpoena and granted the United States Trustee's dismissal motion.

Attorney 99-37 then filed this appeal.

STATEMENT OF THE FACTS

On October 21, 1998 United States Trustee Barbara G. Stuart made a referral to the Minnesota Office of Lawyers Professional Responsibility (hereinafter “OLPR”) involving the possible attorney misconduct of Attorney 99-37. The referral was based on pleadings filed by Attorney 99-37 and on the findings made by a federal bankruptcy judge. (See Parties Joint Appendix at 14 - 17.) The OLPR opened an investigation of Attorney 99-37. (App. at 18.)

Attorney 99-37 sought to depose the United States Trustee. (App. at 29 - 33.) The United States Department of Justice declined to allow the United States Trustee's testimony because a subordinate attorney in Trustee Stuart’s office had already been deposed by Attorney 99-37, because the United States was not a party to the OLPR litigation and because of the burden on the United States Trustee’s time and office. (App. at 36.)

Attorney 99-37 then brought an action in Ramsey County District Court to enforce the subpoena, to have the United States Trustee found in contempt of the state court subpoena, and for costs and attorneys fees. (App. at 48 - 49.)

The United States Trustee removed the subpoena and related contempt proceedings to Federal District Court. (App at 5 - 54.) Trustee Stuart did not remove the OLPR complaint against Attorney 99-37. (App. at 5 - 54.)

SUMMARY OF THE ARGUMENTS

1. Removal was proper under Title 28, United States Code, Section 1442(a)(1) as the United States Trustee while acting under color of office was named as a defendant in a contempt proceeding in State Court. (Appellee's Brief at Pgs 5 - 7.)
2. The Jurisdiction of a Federal Court upon removal pursuant to Title 28, United States Code, Section 1442 is derivative of that of the State Court. (Appellee's Brief at Pgs 8 - 9.)
3. The subpoena and contempt proceeding are barred by sovereign immunity. (Appellee's Brief at Pgs 10 - 16.)
4. Any Constitutional rights available to Attorney 99-37 in the context of the Minnesota disciplinary proceeding are not implicated in this subpoena case. (Appellee's Brief at Pg 17.)

ARGUMENTS

I. REMOVAL WAS PROPER UNDER TITLE 28, UNITED STATES CODE, SECTION 1442(a)(1).

Removal pursuant to Title 28, United States Code, Section 1442(a)(1) is proper where a federal officer has been named in a show cause proceeding, contempt proceeding, or other proceeding commenced within a pending state court case. See, e.g., Edwards v. United States Dep't of Justice, 43 F.3d 312, 314 (7th Cir. 1994)(removal pursuant to 28 U.S.C. § 1442(a)(1) where show cause proceeding were commenced against federal officials directing them to "show cause" why documents were not produced); Nationwide Investors v. Miller, 793 F.2d 1044, 1044-1046 (9th Cir. 1986) (removal pursuant to 28 U.S.C. § 1442(a)(1) upheld where state court issued "Order to Appear" to federal official in garnishment proceeding); DeTienne v. DeTienne, 815 F.Supp. 394, 395 (D. Kan. 1993) (removal pursuant to 28 U.S.C. § 1442(a)(1) where state court ordered federal agency official to appear and show cause why agency should not be held in contempt.)

A federal officer may remove even if not a party to the underlying state court proceeding. Louisiana v. Sparks, 978 F.2d 226, 231 (5th Cir. 1992)(contempt proceedings "need not be against parties in the underlying state case in order to fall within the ambit of the removal statute"); see Nationwide Investors, 793 F.2d at 1044-1046 (federal personnel employee's removal of Order to Appear for purposes of judgment creditor's garnishment in landlord tenant action); DeTienne, 815 F.Supp. at 395 (Social Security Administration's removal of garnishment proceeding in divorce action.)

Here, the Ramsey County District Court pursuant to Rule 9(a), Minn. R.L.P.R. issued a deposition subpoena to the United States Trustee. When the United States Trustee, pursuant to the instructions of the United States Department of Justice, failed to appear at the deposition, Attorney 99-37 brought an action in Ramsey County District Court to compel the United States Trustee's testimony and for a finding of civil contempt. Accordingly, the subpoena and contempt proceedings were removed as an action against a federal officer pursuant to 28 U.S.C. § 1442(a)(1). Only the deposition subpoena and related proceedings were removed from Ramsey County District Court. The underlying Office of Lawyers Professional Responsibility complaint was not removed from the jurisdiction of the Minnesota Supreme Court.

Attorney 99-37 argues that removal is improper because the entire attorney disciplinary proceeding was removed. He argues that this proceeding is neither a civil or criminal action but sui generis and as such not covered by 28 U.S.C. § 1442(a)(1). While it is clear from the record that only the subpoena and related proceeding were removed, the issue is not the exact nature of the proceedings but whether the action falls within the language and intent of the removal Statue. North Carolina v. Carr, 386 F.2d 129, 131 (4th Cir. 1967). In accord, Wisconsin v. Schaffer, 565 F.2d 961, 963 (7th Cir. 1977). The United States Trustee submits that a State Court contempt action against a federal officer falls within the language of 28 U.S.C. § 1442(a)(1).

Although Attorney 99-37 argues differently, the record below shows that the subpoena and contempt proceedings were a distinct action against the United States Trustee that were separate from the attorney disciplinary case and thus validly removed without removing the disciplinary case. United States v. Penney, 310 F.Supp. 1396, 1397 (D.C. 1970) and Wisconsin v. Schaffer, 565 F.2d at 964.

II. THE SUBPOENA AND MOTION TO COMPEL AND FOR A FINDING OF CIVIL CONTEMPT AGAINST THE UNITED STATES TRUSTEE ARE BARRED BY SOVEREIGN IMMUNITY.

A. The Jurisdiction of a Federal Court Upon Removal Pursuant to 28 U.S.C. § 1442 Is Essentially Derivative of That of the State Court.

An action against a federal officer may be removed even if there is no original federal subject matter jurisdiction over the action:

> [U]nlike removal pursuant to 28 U.S.C. § 1441 . . . a district court has jurisdiction to hear an action removed pursuant to 28 U.S.C. § 1442a even if the initial action could not have been commenced by the plaintiff in a federal forum.

Mir v. Fosburg, 646 F.2d 342, 344 (9th Cir. 1980); Johnson v. Showers, 747 F.2d 1228, 1229 (8th Cir. 1984)("Section 1442 'itself grants independent jurisdictional grounds over cases involving federal officers where a district court otherwise would not have jurisdiction.'")(quoting IMFC Professional Services, Inc. v. Latin American Home Health, Inc., 676 F.2d 152, 156 (5th Cir. 1982)); compare 28 U.S.C. § 1441(a), (b) (providing for removal of certain types of actions of which district courts have "original jurisdiction") with 28 U.S.C. § 1442(a)(1) (providing for removal of actions against federal officers without regard to existence of "original jurisdiction".)

Rather than being based on a grant of federal jurisdiction, "[t]he jurisdiction of the federal court upon removal, pursuant to 28 U.S.C. § 1442, is essentially derivative of that of the state court." Edwards, 43 F.3d at 316 (citing Arizona v. Manypenny, 451 U.S. 232, 242 n.17 (1981); As a "'purely derivative form of jurisdiction,'" Section 1442(a)(1) removal jurisdiction "'neither enlarg[es] nor contract[s] the rights of the parties.'" See, e.g., Guidry v. Durkin, 834 F.2d 1465, 1468 (9th Cir. 1987)(quoting Manypenny, 451 U.S. at 242, 101 S.Ct. at 1664 (footnote omitted.) "Thus, the net effect of Section 1442(a)(1) is to provide a federal officer with a federal forum in which the federal rules of procedure will be applied without changing the substantive law relevant to the plaintiff's claims." Guidry, 834 F.2d at 1468.

"However, because of the derivative nature of the jurisdiction conferred on the district court by [Section 1442(a)(1)], the federal court may not exercise jurisdiction over the removed action unless the state court initially had subject matter jurisdiction." Id. Accordingly, if the state court had no jurisdiction over the removed action, the action must be dismissed by the federal court for lack of jurisdiction. See, e.g., id. (removed state court action dismissed where state court "lacked subject matter jurisdiction over . . . claims . . . and, a fortiori, the district court acquired no subject matter jurisdiction over those claims upon removal"); Johnson, 747 F.2d at 1229 (dismissal of third-party complaint where state court had no jurisdiction.) Therefore, because, in this case, the federal court's jurisdiction is derivative of the state court's jurisdiction, if the state court had no jurisdiction over the federal Defendant, the subpoena was properly dismissed.

B. No Jurisdiction Exists Over the Subpoena And Related Proceedings Unless Authorized By Federal Statute.

A suit against federal defendants in their official capacities is a suit against the United States which is barred by the doctrine of sovereign immunity, unless the United States has waived immunity. Coleman v. Espy, 986 F.2d 1184, 1189 (8th Cir. 1993), cert. denied, Dye v. Espy, 510 U.S. 913, 114 S.Ct. 301 (1993); and Lukovsky v. Herstad, 748 F.2d 499, 500 (8th Cir. 1984).

Here, the motion to compel and for a finding of civil contempt does not assert any actions by the Federal Defendant in her individual capacities. Rather the motion and Subpoena assert actions by the Federal Defendant taken under color of office. Therefore, the motion to compel and for a finding of civil contempt based on the underlying State Court subpoena is an action against the United States that is barred by sovereign immunity unless there has been a waiver.

It is, of course, axiomatic, that waivers of sovereign immunity cannot be inferred; rather, any waiver of sovereign immunity of the United States from suit must be explicit, and should be strictly construed in favor of the United States. Ruckelshaus v. Sierra Club, 463 U.S. 680, 685 (1983); Lehman v. Nakshian, 453 U.S. 156, 160-161 (1981)(quoting Soriano v. United States, 352 U.S. 270, 276 (1957)); United States v. Kubrick, 444 U.S. 111, 117-118 (1979). A suit against the United States cannot be brought unless it can be shown that an act of Congress specifically authorizes the court to entertain his particular claim. McNutt v. General Motors Acceptance Corp., 298 U.S. 178 (1936); Lehigh Mining and Mfg. Co., v. Kelly, 160 U.S. 327, 337 (1895). "'Waiver of sovereign immunity is a jurisdictional prerequisite in the nature of . . . subject matter jurisdiction, in that unless sovereign immunity is waived, there may be no consideration of the subject matter.'" Louisiana v. Sparks, 978 F.2d 226, 235 (5th Cir. 1992) (quoting J.C. Driskill, Inc. v. Abdnor, 901 F.2d 383, 385 n.4 (4th Cir. 1990)).

Attorney 99-37 argues that the United States Trustee's actions in sending a referral letter to the OLPR constitute a waiver of sovereign immunity. The facts show that United States Trustee Stuart made a referral to the Office of Lawyers Responsibility solely in her official capacity as U.S. Trustee. Such referral was based on pleadings filed by Attorney 99-37 with the United States Bankruptcy Court for the District of Minnesota and on findings of apparent impropriety entered by the Honorable Dennis D. O'Brien, Chief United States Bankruptcy Judge. The referral contains no information based on any personal knowledge of United States Trustee Stuart.

The disclosure of factual information of this nature does not constitute a waiver of sovereign immunity as to other related matters. Smith v. Cromer, 159 F.3d 875, 880 (4th Cir. 1998); see also, Swett v. Schenk, 792 F.2d 1447, 1452 (9th Cir. 1986), (Permitting a federal employee to testify on certain matters which are not violative of the regulations at issue cannot be construed as an intent to waive immunity.)

After receiving the referral, the Minnesota Office of Lawyers Professional Responsibility chose to bring a disciplinary proceeding against Attorney 99-37. Attorney 99-37 argues that the United States Trustee brought the disciplinary proceeding against him/her. That is incorrect; the United States Trustee did not bring the proceeding. Rather, the United States Trustee simply brought the Bankruptcy Court's findings to the attention of the Office of Lawyers Professional Responsibility which then proceeded to act against Attorney 99-37. See Referral Letter dated October 21, 1998, at page 2 ("this referral [is] based on Judge O'Brien's findings that the transfer of real estate and the transfer of money were intentionally concealed from the Bankruptcy Court") (App. at 14-17).

Further, there is no merit to any suggestion that, by allowing Ms. Fagg's deposition, the Department waived sovereign immunity as a defense to the deposition of other DOJ officials, such as the United States Trustee. To the contrary, the Touhy regulations, 28 C.F.R. § 16.24 et seq., serve the salutary goal of minimizing the dissipation of scarce Federal resources by allowing the Department to determine which, if any, employees should testify in state court proceedings as to which sovereign immunity has not been waived. Nothing in these regulations provides that if DOJ allows the testimony of a certain employee, the Department must allow the testimony of any other DOJ employee, let alone a senior Departmental official.

Accordingly, no waiver exists for the deposition of the United States Trustee, and the subpoena and contempt proceedings were properly dismissed by the U.S. District Court because those state court proceedings do not fall within any exception to the doctrine of sovereign immunity expressly set forth in a federal statute. No such exception exists here.

C. The State Court Lacked Jurisdiction To Require Testimony From a Federal Employee Who Has Been Instructed, Pursuant to Touhy Regulations, Not To Testify In A State Court Matter.

The head of an executive department, such as the Department of Justice, may regulate the conduct of his employees and "the custody, use, and preservation of its records, papers, and property." 5 U.S.C. § 301. In United States ex rel. Touhy v. Ragen, 340 U.S. 462, 467-68 (1951), the Supreme Court validated this position by determining that the Attorney General of the United States could, by regulation, take from his subordinates the discretion to determine whether documents in their custody should be disclosed. See also Boron Oil Co. v. Downie, 873 F.2d 67, 69 (4th Cir. 1989) and Swett v. Schenk, 792 F.2d 1447, 1451-52 (9th Cir. 1986).

Accordingly, the Department of Justice has adopted regulations prohibiting the disclosure of "any information relating to or based upon material contained in the files of the Department ... without prior approval of the proper Department official...." 28 C.F.R. § 16.21-16.29[3]. The Department of Justice regulations at issue here,

[3] Section 16.21(a) provides in pertinent part:

> (a) This subpart sets forth procedures to be followed with respect to the production or disclosure of any material contained in the files of the department, any information relating to material contained in the files of the Department, or any information acquired by a person while such person was an employee of the Department as part of the performance of that person's official duties or because of that person's official status: ....

28 C.F.R. §§ 16.21-16.29, are valid and should be accorded the force of law. North Carolina v. Carr, 264 F.Supp. 75, 80 (W.D. N.C.), appeal dismissed 386 F.2d 129 (4th Cir. 1967) (upholding Department of Justice Order No. 324-64 (predecessor to 28 C.F.R. § 16.21, et seq.))[4]; see also United States v. Allen, 554 F.2d 398, 406 (10th Cir.), cert. denied, 434 U.S. 836 (1977). In Touhy, the that employee's individual capacity, when a subpoena, order, or other demand ... of a court ... is issued for such material or information....

Section 16.22 provides in pertinent part:
(a) In any ... state case ... in which the United States is not a party, no employee ... shall, in response to a demand, produce any material contained in the files of the Department, or disclose any information relating to or based upon material contained in the files of the Department, or disclose any information or produce any material acquired as part of the performance of that person's official duties or because of that person's official status without prior approval of the proper Department of Justice official in accordance with §§ 16.24 and 16.25 of this part....

(c) If oral testimony is sought by demand in any case or matter in which the United States is not a party, an affidavit, or, if that is not feasible, a statement by the party seeking the testimony or by his attorney, setting forth a summary of the testimony sought and its relevance to the proceeding must be furnished to the responsible U.S. Attorney. Any authorization for testimony by a present ... employee of the Department, shall be limited to the scope of the demand as summarized in such statement.

[4] Order no. 324-64, formerly 28 C.F.R. § 16.1, provided in part:

"No officer or employee of the Department of Justice shall produce or disclose, in response to a subpoena, order, or other demand ... of a court or other authority any information or material contained in the files of the Department of Justice or any other information or material acquired as part of the performance of his official duties or because of his official status, without the prior approval of the Attorney General."

Supreme Court upheld another predecessor of the regulations involved in this case and ordered the release from jail of a special agent of the F.B.I. who had been incarcerated on contempt charges. Touhy, 340 U.S. at 470. Petitioner Touhy, in a habeas corpus proceeding, demanded that an agent of the FBI produce certain records pertinent to his case. The subpoena required the production of certain records which, petitioner Touhy claimed, established that his conviction was brought about by fraud. Id. at 464-65. The agent requested instructions from his superiors, and was jailed for contempt of court when he declined to produce the files on orders from the Attorney General. Id. at 465.

The Supreme Court notes that it was appropriate for the Attorney General to prescribe regulations and procedures governing the custody, use, release, and preservation of records pertaining to the Department of Justice. Id. The Court held that the refusal of the official was proper and that the Attorney General may withdraw from his subordinates the power to release department papers. Id. at 467. The Court noted that employees of the Department of Justice have no discretion to honor subpoenas for official information and that they are bound to follow the lawful orders of the Attorney General. Id. This observation follows a judicial policy against holding a subordinate responsible for the discretionary acts of his superiors. N.L.R.B. v. Capitol Fish Co., 294 F.2d 868, 874 n.13 (5th Cir. 1961); Marcoux v. Mid-States Livestock, 66 F.R.D. 573, 579 (W.D.Mo. 1975).

_____Following the receipt of the request for testimony, which is required to be produced, the Department of Justice must consider whether or not disclosure of information through the oral testimony of the employee is appropriate under various factors listed in 28 C.F.R. § 16.26(a) and (b).

The Assistant Attorney General of the United States or his designee is charged with determining whether the requested materials should be produced. 28 C.F.R. §§ 16.22, 16.24. Here, after making the United States Trustee's subordinate available for deposition, the Director of the Executive Office for United States Trustees and the United States Attorney determined that United States Trustee Stuart’s testimony was not authorized, as previously explained. Attorney 99-37 then moved to compel and for a finding of civil contempt in Ramsey County District Court. The United States District Court properly determined that the State Court lacked jurisdiction to compel the United States Trustee's testimony in the underlying state court matter.

III. ATTORNEY 99-37 DOES NOT HAVE A CONSTITUTIONAL RIGHT TO CROSS EXAMINE TRUSTEE STUART IN THE CONTEXT OF THE MINNESOTA ATTORNEY DISCIPLINARY PROCEEDING.

The United States Trustee did not bring the attorney disciplinary complaint. Rather, that complaint was filed by the Minnesota Office of Lawyers Professional Responsibility based upon its independent review of the facts of record, including the findings of apparent impropriety by Attorney 99-37 before the Bankruptcy Court. Nor did the United States Trustee remove the underlying state attorney disciplinary proceedings to federal court or otherwise purport to subject those uniquely state matters of "attorney discipline" to federal jurisdiction.

Rather, the sole issue on appeal stems from the United States Trustee's exercise of her right, under 28 U.S.C. § 1442(a)(1), to remove the state court subpoena and related contempt proceedings filed against her by Attorney 99-37 from state court to U.S. District Court, which properly dismissed them for lack of federal jurisdiction.

Whatever constitutional rights Attorney 99-37 is guaranteed under the Constitution of the United States or the Minnesota Constitution are not implicated here. No response is required to the arguments contained in Part III of Appellant’s brief (Appellant’s brief at pgs. 17-22) because sovereign immunity controls the outcome.

CONCLUSION

For all these reasons Appellee Stuart requests that the judgment of the District Court be affirmed in all respects.

STATEMENT OF THE STANDARD OF REVIEW

This Court reviews the factual findings of the bankruptcy court for clear error, and reviews its conclusions of law de novo. In re San Patricio Cty. Comm. Action Agency, 575 F.3d 553, 557 (5th Cir. 2009). Where a bankruptcy court determines that sanctionable conduct has occurred, the resulting sanction is reviewed for abuse of discretion. In re Dragoo, 186 F.3d 614, 616 (5th Cir. 1999).

STATUTORY BACKGROUND

The decision below involves three separate sources of the bankruptcy court's disciplinary authority: Rule 9011 of the Federal Rules of Bankruptcy Procedure (the "Bankruptcy Rules"); 11 U.S.C. § 105(a); and the inherent powers of federal courts.

Rule 9011 provides that by filing, signing, or advocating a pleading, an attorney is deemed to have represented that, "to the best of the person's knowledge, information, and belief," and after "an inquiry reasonable under the circumstances," the pleading is not being presented for an improper purpose, its legal contentions are warranted by existing law, and the factual allegations have evidentiary support. Fed. R. Bankr. P. 9011(b). Where an attorney violates his Rule 9011 obligations, the court may impose both monetary and non-monetary sanctions, in an amount "sufficient to deter repetition of such conduct or comparable conduct by others similarly situated." Fed. R. Bankr. P. 9011(c).

Section 105(a) of the Bankruptcy Code authorizes bankruptcy courts to take "any action . . . necessary or appropriate to enforce or implement court orders or rules, or to prevent an abuse of process." 11 U.S.C. § 105(a) (emphasis added). The Fifth Circuit has construed Section 105(a) as providing an independent statutory basis for sanctions and remedial relief against litigants who abuse the bankruptcy system. Campbell v. Countrywide Home Loans, Inc., 545 F.3d 348, 356 n.1 (5th Cir. 2008); see also In re Sadkin, 36 F.3d 473, 478-79 (5th Cir. 1994) (stating that section 105(a) "provides equitable powers for the bankruptcy court to use at its discretion"). The bankruptcy court's Section 105(a) authority does not require a finding of bad faith. See In re Hardy, 97 F.3d 1384, 1389 (11th Cir. 1996) (holding that, for purposes of civil contempt proceedings under section 105(a), no showing of bad faith was required).

The bankruptcy court also possesses inherent authority to issue sanctions against attorneys and litigants who engage in misconduct before the court. See Chambers v. NASCO, Inc., 501 U.S. 32, 45-48 (1991); In re Yorkshire, LLC, 540 F.3d 328, 332 (5th Cir. 2008) (affirming sanctions under bankruptcy court's inherent powers). The fact that such conduct may arguably fall afoul of, or be governed by other rules and statutes does not deprive the court of its inherent power to sanction bad faith conduct. Chambers, 501 U.S. at 46-47. To invoke its inherent powers, the court must find that the party being sanctioned acted in bad faith. Yorkshire, 540 F.3d at 332 (citing Elliot v. Tilton, 64 F.3d 213, 217 (5th Cir. 1995)); see also Fink v. Gomez, 239 F.3d 989, 993-94 (9th Cir. 2001) (reckless statements made to the court coupled with an improper purpose, such as the manipulation of proceedings, was tantamount to bad faith and sufficient to impose sanctions under court's inherent authority).

STATEMENT OF THE CASE

On September 3, 2008, the United States Bankruptcy Court for the Southern District sanctioned Mr. Richard Fuqua, an attorney, for his role in filing a misleading bankruptcy petition for an entity that lacked any legitimate reorganization purpose, as well as for his subsequent actions in which he misrepresented facts to both the court and to the United States Trustee[1] in an effort to avoid judicial scrutiny of his behavior. That sanction consisted of a referral to the state bar of Texas, as well as a fine in the

No. 95-595 at 110 (1977) (describing United States Trustees' "obligation to execute and enforce the bankruptcy laws"). Among other duties, United States Trustees are authorized to commence "proceedings in the bankruptcy courts in particular cases in which a particular action taken or proposed to be taken deviate[d] from the standards established by the . . . bankruptcy code." H.R. Rep. No. 95-989 at 88, 109 (1977), quoted in In re A-1 Trash Pickup, 802 F.2d 774, 775 (4th Cir. 1986). amount of $15,000, pursuant to Fed. R. Bankr. P. 9011, 11 U.S.C. § 105(a), and the inherent powers of the court. (Dkt. 28).[2]

On September 11, 2008, Mr. Fuqua filed a timely notice of appeal from the bankruptcy court's sanctions order. (Dkt. 32). On August 28, 2009, this Court dismissed the appeal for failure to prosecute. (Dist. Ct. Dkt. 4). On September 4, 2009, Mr. Fuqua moved for reconsideration of this Court's dismissal order. (Dist. Ct. Dkt. 5). On October 22, 2009, this Court granted Mr. Fuqua's motion and reinstated this appeal. (Dist. Ct. Dkt. 10).

STATEMENT OF THE FACTS

1. Background.

The debtor, Sugar Hill Residential Development, Inc. ("Sugar Hill"), was a special-purpose entity whose only business activity was to act as general partner for SHRD Partners, LP (the "Limited Partnership"). See Transcript of June 16, 2008 Evidentiary Hearing (Dkt. 20) (hereinafter "Tr. _") at 27 (testimony of Mr. Easley). Apart from a small partnership interest in the Limited Partnership, Sugar Hill had minimal assets and no full-time employees. (Tr. 27). The Limited Partnership, in turn, was also a special-purpose entity, whose sole asset was an undeveloped 137-acre parcel of land in Harris County, Texas (the "Property"). (Tr. 51) (testimony of Mr. Fuqua). At the time of the Sugar Hill's bankruptcy filing, the Real Property had been posted for foreclosure by the Limited Partnership's secured creditor, Olympic Coast Investments ("Olympic"). (Tr. 53).

In addition to serving as the attorney for Sugar Hill, Mr. Fuqua controls the Fuqua Family Limited Partnership, which was the former owner of one of the parcels comprising the Property, and which at the time of the Sugar Hill bankruptcy owned an interest of between 15 and 20 percent of the Limited Partnership. (Tr. 95) (testimony of Mr. Fuqua). The bankruptcy court found that Mr. Fuqua "has been familiar with the ownership of the [Property] since at least 2001." (Dkt. 28 at 9). Mr. Fuqua did not file any pleading disclosing the relationship between the Fuqua Family Limited Partnership and the Limited Partnership.[3]

2. Mr. Fuqua files a bankruptcy petition on behalf of Sugar Hill, which the bankruptcy court finds to be incomplete and misleading.

Following the failure of workout negotiations, Olympic posted the Property for a foreclosure sale scheduled for March 4, 2008. (Tr. 23) (testimony of Mr. Easley).

[3] In a chapter 11 bankruptcy case, the attorney for the debtor is required to file a disclosure of compensation promised or received from the debtor, as well as a certification listing the attorney's connection with the debtor or other parties in the bankruptcy case. 11 U.S.C. § 329; Fed. R. Bankr. P. 2014, 2016. Mr. Fuqua did not file the documents disclosing connections required by Fed. R. Bankr. P. 2014 in the Sugar Hill case.

On about February 29, 2008, Thomas L. Easley, the president of Sugar Hill, directed Mr. Fuqua to prepare a chapter 11 bankruptcy petition in response to the foreclosure. (Tr. 52) (testimony of Mr. Fuqua). Although the owner of the Property was the Limited Partnership, and not Sugar Hill, Mr. Fuqua filed a bankruptcy petition on behalf of Sugar Hill alone. (Tr. 57).[4]

On March 3, 2008, Mr. Fuqua filed a chapter 11 bankruptcy petition on behalf of Sugar Hill. (Dkt. 1). The bankruptcy court found this petition to be incomplete and misleading in several respects. Although 11 U.S.C. § 521 and Fed. R. Bankr. P. 1007 require a chapter 11 debtor to file a complete set of financial schedules along with its bankruptcy petition, Sugar Hill's petition includes only a single schedule, Schedule A, which sets forth a debtor's interests in real property. That schedule, in turn, contained an entry for the Property, which was described without elaboration as a "3%

[4] According to the testimony of both Mr. Easley and Mr. Fuqua, this was done at the direction of Mr. Easley, who believed that a chapter 11 filing by Sugar Hill would be "less complicated." (Tr. 27) (testimony of Mr. Easley); (Tr. 57) (testimony of Mr. Fuqua). The bankruptcy court found that the testimony of Mr. Easley and Mr. Fuqua was not credible. (Dkt. 28 at 4). The bankruptcy court found that the actual motive for filing a petition on behalf of Sugar Hill and not the Limited Partnership was to avoid a disqualification of Mr. Fuqua under 11 U.S.C. § 327, which requires attorneys for the debtor-in-possession to be "disinterested." 11 U.S.C. § 327(a). Had the Limited Partnership filed a bankruptcy petition, Mr. Fuqua would likely have been unable to satisfy the disinterestedness requirement of section 327, and therefore would have been ineligible to serve as the bankruptcy attorney for the Limited Partnership, due to his control of the Fuqua Family Limited Partnership.

Interest." Sugar Hill did not initially file a Schedule B, which sets forth a debtor's interests in personal property. See Fed. R. Bankr. P. Official Form 6.

The bankruptcy court found that Mr. Fuqua's failure to file Schedule B with Schedule A was misleading under the circumstances of the case. Although Sugar Hill's Schedule A referenced a "3% interest," Sugar Hill did not actually have a direct ownership interest in the Property. Rather, Sugar Hill had a 3% interest in the Limited Partnership, not the Property. If Schedule B had been completed accurately, Mr. Fuqua would have been required to disclose that Sugar Hill's 3% interest was actually an interest in a partnership. The bankruptcy court found that timely filing of Schedule B would have removed any ambiguity concerning the nature of Sugar Hill's interest in the Property, and further found that the reason Mr. Fuqua did not file Schedule B with Schedule A was that he intended to create a false impression that Sugar Hill, rather that the Limited Partnership, was the actual owner of the Property. (Dkt. 28 at 9).

Mr. Fuqua denied having filed Sugar Hill's bankruptcy pleadings with an intent to deceive. Instead, he attributed the ambiguity of the Sugar Hill petition and schedules to the hurried manner in which the Sugar Hill bankruptcy was filed. In particular, Mr. Fuqua testified that prior to drafting Sugar Hill's bankruptcy petition, he "glanced" at the file provided to him by Mr. Easley but did not review the actual deed to the Property or any public documents. (Tr. 55). Mr. Fuqua further testified that at the time of the bankruptcy filing, he “really didn’t know either way” whether Sugar Hill or the Limited Partnership was the owner of the Property. (Id.).

The bankruptcy court found that Mr. Fuqua was not credible when he claimed not to know whether Sugar Hill owned the Property. (Dkt. 28 at 8). The bankruptcy court found it significant that Mr. Fuqua’s other testimony revealed that he “was very familiar with title to the [Property] and how the [Property] came to be owned by the Limited Partnership.” (Dkt. 28 at 2) (citing Tr. at 50-51). The bankruptcy court found further that even if title to the Property was unclear, Mr. Fuqua had three days between his engagement and the bankruptcy filing to determine ownership of the Property. (Dkt. 28 at 3). As a result, the bankruptcy court concluded that at the time Sugar Hill filed for bankruptcy, “he knew or should have known that [Sugar Hill] did not have an interest” in the Property. (Id. at 8).

Mr. Fuqua testified that the purpose of the bankruptcy filing was to delay foreclosure. This tactic was unsuccessful. On the morning of March 4, 2008, Mr. Fuqua contacted counsel for Olympic to advise them of Sugar Hill’s bankruptcy filing the previous evening. (Tr. 64) (testimony of Mr. Fuqua). Olympic’s counsel, however, concluded that the skeletal bankruptcy petition filed by Sugar Hill did not affect its ability to foreclose on an asset owned by the Limited Partnership.[5] As a result, Olympic proceeded with the foreclosure as scheduled on March 4. (Tr. 67). Sugar Hill did not contest the foreclosure. As a result of this foreclosure, Sugar Hill was left with no assets or business to reorganize. (Tr. at 74).

3. Mr. Fuqua files a motion for an extension of time for Sugar Hill to file its bankruptcy schedules, based on a representation that Sugar Hill's management was burdened by bankruptcy-related duties.

On March 18, 2008, nearly two weeks after the foreclosure of the Limited Partnership's only asset, Mr. Fuqua signed and filed the Debtor's Motion to Extend Time to File Schedules and Statement of Financial Affairs (Dkt. 6). That motion represented, among other things, that since the date of its bankruptcy petition, Sugar Hill "has maintained possession of its property, and remains in control of its ongoing business affairs." (Id. ¶ 1). The motion further represented that an extension of time to file the full schedules required by 11 U.S.C. § 521 was necessary because "the bankruptcy filing has placed additional burdens upon the Debtor's accounting staff, which has been working extremely hard to perform its normal duties while complying with the requirements of the Office of the United States Trustee and requests for information from various creditors." (Id. ¶ 3).

[5] Section 362 of the Bankruptcy Code provides that the filing of a bankruptcy petition acts as an automatic stay of, among other things, a pending foreclosure proceeding against property owned by the estate. 11 U.S.C. § 362(a)(1), (3), (4), (5). As Olympic's counsel correctly realized, however, the automatic stay normally does not stay actions against property owned by non-debtor affiliates of the debtor. See Arnold v. Garlock, Inc., 278 F.3d 426, 436 (5th Cir. 2001).

The bankruptcy court granted Sugar Hill a ten-day extension of time, through March 28, 2008, to file its schedules. (Dkt. 9). Sugar Hill did not comply with the extended deadline. (Dkt. 28 at 6). Instead, Sugar Hill took no action to file its schedules until the bankruptcy court expressly raised the issue of sanctions against Mr. Fuqua. (Dkt. 28 at 8). Sugar Hill's schedules eventually were filed on May 27, 2008. (Dkt. 15).

The bankruptcy court found that the factual representations in Sugar Hill's initial motion for an extension of time were false, or at the very least, seriously misleading. (Dkt. 28 at 5). It did so based on its finding that as of March 18, 2008, Sugar Hill had no "ongoing business affairs," due to the Limited Partnership's loss of its only asset. There was also no evidence that Sugar Hill's "staff" (consisting of a single shared employee) was being overtaxed by bankruptcy duties, or, for that matter, performing any duties at all. (Id.).

4. Acting on Mr. Fuqua's advice, Sugar Hill's president fails to attend two Initial Debtor Interviews as well as the Meeting of Creditors pursuant to 11 U.S.C. § 341.

In chapter 11 cases, United States Trustees conduct Initial Debtor Interviews ("IDIs") immediately after the bankruptcy petition is filed in order to ensure the accuracy of the debtor's schedules and ensure the debtor's compliance with its various administrative obligations. See United States Trustee Manual ¶ 3-3.1 (http://www.justice.gov/ust/eo/ust_org/ustp_manual/volume3/vol3ch03.htm); In re Stuart, Case No. 05-95809, 2005 WL 3953894 (Bankr. N.D. Ga. Dec. 19, 2005) (holding that debtor's failure to attend IDI may constitute cause for dismissal of bankruptcy petition). In addition, section 341 of the Bankruptcy Code requires that, within a reasonable time after the filing of the petition, the United States Trustee shall convene a meeting of creditors. 11 U.S.C. § 341(a). An officer of the debtor is required to attend the meeting of creditors and be examined under oath. 11 U.S.C. § 343.

In this case, the United States Trustee initially scheduled the IDI for March 19, 2008. Although Mr. Fuqua was present, Mr. Easley, the president of Sugar Hill, was not. Mr. Easley later testified that he failed to attend because "I was advised that it would not be a necessity." (Tr. at 38).[6] As a result, the United States Trustee rescheduled the IDI for April 4, 2008. Mr. Easley again did not appear. According to Mr. Easley's testimony, his failure to attend the April 4 IDI "would have had to have been for similar reasons to the previous one." (Id.).

[6] Mr. Easley testified that he could not specifically recall who advised him not to attend the IDI, explaining that "I would have probably gotten this through someone in our office, Mrs. Lefler perhaps, that would have probably spoken to someone on Mr. Fuqua's staff. But I don't want to speculate on that." (Tr. at 38). Based on Mr. Easley's testimony, the bankruptcy court concluded that the source of this advice was Mr. Fuqua. (Dkt. 28 at 9).

Mr. Easley also failed to attend the Meeting of Creditors, held on April 8, 2008. As before, Mr. Easley testified that his failure to attend was based on advice that his "presence was not specifically required." (Tr. 39).

5. At the Section 341 Meeting, Mr. Fuqua represents to counsel for the United States Trustee that Sugar Hill had reached an out-of-court settlement with Olympic.

No person attended the April 8, 2008 Section 341 meeting apart from Mr. Fuqua and Mr. Hector Duran, an attorney for the United States Trustee. Because no creditor or representative of the debtor was present, the proceedings were not recorded. (Tr. at 77) (testimony of Mr. Fuqua). It is undisputed that in the conversation that ensued, Mr. Fuqua urged the United States Trustee to seek dismissal of the Sugar Hill bankruptcy case. However, Mr. Duran and Mr. Fuqua offered conflicting testimony as to the exact content of that conversation. Mr. Duran testified that Mr. Fuqua informed him that "this case was filed due to a pending foreclosure by [Olympic], and that an out-of-court settlement had been reached by and between the Debtor and [Olympic]." Mr. Duran further testified that he was not informed of the foreclosure of the Property. (Id. at 106). In actuality, no settlement between Olympic and Sugar Hill or the Limited Partnership was ever reached. (Tr. 78) (testimony of Mr. Fuqua).

Mr. Fuqua denied that he had told Mr. Duran that a settlement existed. (Tr. 69). Instead, Mr. Fuqua testified that he told Mr. Duran only "that there was no ambition to file any other -- any further or other pleadings, foreclosure had occurred, that I thought a dismissal would be appropriate, there was nothing left." (Id.).

The bankruptcy court found Mr. Duran's account of the discussion to be credible, and Mr. Fuqua's testimony to be not credible. (Dkt. 28 at 7). In particular, the bankruptcy court noted that immediately after the Section 341 meeting, the United States Trustee filed a motion to dismiss the Sugar Hill bankruptcy case. (Dkt. 7). That motion stated that "[a]t the meeting of creditors, Debtor's counsel stated . . . that an out-of-court settlement had been reached by and between the Debtor and [Olympic]." (Id.). In addition, although Mr. Fuqua as served with a copy of the motion, he never filed any responsive pleading contradicting the allegations of Mr. Duran's motion. Based on this evidence, the bankruptcy court concluded that, contrary to Mr. Fuqua's testimony, he had affirmatively represented the existence of a settlement to Mr. Duran. (Dkt. 28 at 7).

On May 14, 2008, the bankruptcy court issued a memorandum-decision which ordered further proceedings in order to determine whether to dismiss or convert the Sugar Hill bankruptcy case, and to consider sanctions.[7] (Dkt. 12). As one of the factors relevant to its decision to convert or dismiss, the bankruptcy court mentioned the alleged settlement between Olympic and Sugar Hill reported in Mr. Duran's motion, unaware that such settlement did not exist. (Dkt. 28 at 7-8).

6. At a hearing on sanctions, Mr. Fuqua represents to the Court that recent changes in Texas law justified his filing of a bankruptcy petition on behalf of Sugar Hill.

The bankruptcy court held a hearing on the motion to dismiss and sanctions on June 16, 2008, at which Mr. Fuqua testified as a witness. When questioned about the misleading content of Schedule A, which classified Sugar Hill's partnership interest in the Limited Partnership as a real property interest, Mr. Fuqua alleged that under Texas law, Sugar Hill's partnership interest was considered a "fee interest" in real property. (Tr. 62-63). Mr. Fuqua further represented that, according to his research, "Texas Limited Partnership law, until a year and a half ago, would have -- if they would have filed -- if the general partner in a partnership would file, the stay would be effective because it was recognized as an interest in real property." (Tr. 66).

In response to Mr. Fuqua's assertions regarding Texas law, the bankruptcy

[7] Section 1112 of the Bankruptcy Code provides that, on request of a party and interest and for cause, the bankruptcy court may dismiss a chapter 11 case or convert the case to a liquidation under chapter 7. 11 U.S.C. § 1112(b). In determining whether to convert or dismiss, the bankruptcy court must consider which form of relief would be in the best interests of creditors and the estate. Id.

court issued an order requiring Mr. Fuqua to file a supplemental memorandum setting forth the citations and authority on which he based his analysis, as well as a memorandum identifying the change in Texas law to which Mr. Fuqua referred during his testimony. (Dkt. 21). Mr. Fuqua filed a memorandum in response to the bankruptcy court's order on July 7, 2008. (Dkt. 24). The bankruptcy court determined that Mr. Fuqua's memorandum did provide any support for his legal contentions and did not identify any changes in law.[8] As a result, the bankruptcy court concluded that Mr. Fuqua had intentionally misled the court concerning his legal research. (Dkt. 28 at 8).

[8] The bulk of Mr. Fuqua's memorandum was devoted to the argument that Mr. Fuqua had reasonably relied on the representations of Sugar Hill and had acted in good faith. Mr. Fuqua's discussion of Texas law consisted, in its entirety, of the following statement:

> This Court is correct in its understanding that Texas follows an entity theory of ownership whereby partnership property is owned by the partnership itself and not by the individual partners. However, under well-established partnership principles, ownership of property intended to be a partnership asset is not determined by legal title, but rather by the intention of the parties as supported by the evidence. Property acquired in the name of one or more of the partners, without an indication in the instrument transferring title to the property of the person's capacity as a partner or of the existence of a partnership, and without the use of partnership property, is presumed to be the partner's property, regardless of whether the property is used for partnership purposes.

Based on a full consideration of the evidence and the testimony of witnesses, the bankruptcy court found that Mr. Fuqua had engaged in several specific instances of deceptive conduct, which abused the bankruptcy process. Those factual findings are reviewed deferentially, and Mr. Fuqua offers no persuasive argument for why this Court should conclude that those findings were clearly erroneous. In addition, those findings are sufficient to support the imposition of sanctions under any of three alternative legal theories: Bankruptcy Rule 9011, 11 U.S.C. § 105(a), and the bankruptcy court's inherent powers.

Mr. Fuqua's principal substantive argument is that the bankruptcy court did not find that he had acted in bad faith by "clear and convincing" evidence. Mr. Fuqua's argument lacks merit, for two reasons: first, although the bankruptcy court did not expressly identify the standard of proof it was applying when it concluded that he had acted in bad faith, the weight of the evidence would support a finding of bad faith even under a clear and convincing standard. Second, under the facts of this case, a clear and convincing finding of bad faith is not necessary to support the judgment below. Two of the three sources of authority relied on by the bankruptcy court, Fed. R. Bankr. P. 9011 and 11 U.S.C. § 105(a), do not require a showing of bad faith at all. Although the Fifth Circuit has suggested that the third source of authority, the court's inherent powers, does require bad faith, none of the authorities cited by Mr. Fuqua stand for the proposition that a clear and convincing standard would be applicable to the bankruptcy court's bad faith finding in this case.

Finally, in an argument raised for the first time on appeal, Mr. Fuqua contends that the judgment below should be reversed because of judicial bias. Because Mr. Fuqua did not seek recusal of the bankruptcy judge in the proceedings below, this argument has not been preserved for appeal.

ARGUMENT

1. The bankruptcy court's determination that Mr. Fuqua engaged in sanctionable conduct is supported by the record and is not clearly erroneous.

In this case, based on the evidence presented at trial, the bankruptcy court identified numerous distinct instances of sanctionable conduct by Mr. Fuqua. These include: (1) Mr. Fuqua's filing of a bankruptcy petition that was filed without any real hope of reorganization; (2) Mr. Fuqua's filing of the Sugar Hill bankruptcy petition when he knew or should have known that Sugar Hill lacked an ownership interest in the Property; (3) Mr. Fuqua's failure to conduct a reasonable investigation prior to drafting and filing Sugar Hill's bankruptcy petition; (4) Mr. Fuqua's filing of an intentionally vague and misleading Schedule A in order to create a false impression that Sugar Hill had an ownership interest in the Property; (5) Mr. Fuqua's false representation to the court that there had been “changes” in Texas law; (6) Mr. Fuqua’s false representation to counsel for the United States Trustee that Sugar Hill and Olympic had reached a settlement; and (7) Mr. Fuqua’s direction to his client not to appear for the IDI or Section 341 meeting. (Dkt. 28 at 8-9).

Significantly, the majority of these factual findings are unchallenged by Mr. Fuqua. Indeed, the only factual conclusion with which Mr. Fuqua appears to take issue is the bankruptcy court’s determination that Mr. Fuqua knew or should have known that Sugar Hill did not have an ownership interest in the Property at the time he prepared the Sugar Hill bankruptcy petition. (Br. 8-9). As he argued in the proceedings below, Mr. Fuqua contends that the bankruptcy court should have credited his own testimony that he “reasonably relied” on what turned out to be false information provided by his client. (Br. 10).

The bankruptcy court, after weighing the evidence at trial and considering the demeanor and credibility of Mr. Fuqua, found otherwise, and concluded that Mr. Fuqua did not reasonably rely on his client’s representations. Dkt. 28 at 8-9. The bankruptcy court based this determination on, among other evidence, testimony that revealed that Mr. Fuqua was “exceptionally familiar” with the history of the Property prior to the Sugar Hill bankruptcy (Dkt. 28 at 2 n. 3), as well as Mr. Fuqua’s admitted failure to examine review such basic documents as the deed before he filed the bankruptcy petition (Id. n. 2). Although Mr. Fuqua may disagree with the bankruptcy court's weighing of the evidence, he falls well short of his burden of demonstrating clear error. See In re Morrison, 555 F.3d 473, 480 (5th Cir. 2009) (holding that, under clearly erroneous standard, appellate court should reverse trial court's findings only where it is "left with the definite and firm conviction that a mistake has been made") (internal citations omitted).

2. The bankruptcy court did not err by failing to apply a "clear and convincing" standard of proof to Mr. Fuqua's misconduct.

Although the bankruptcy court found that Mr. Fuqua acted in bad faith, it did not expressly state whether it made that finding under the normal preponderance of the evidence standard, or under a heightened "clear and convincing" standard. Mr. Fuqua argues that the correct standard in this case was clear and convincing, and argues further that the bankruptcy court's failure to apply that standard was error. (Br. 20).

Mr. Fuqua's argument is misplaced, for two reasons. First, a clear and convincing finding of bad faith was not essential under the facts of this case. The bankruptcy court sanctioned Mr. Fuqua under three alternative and independent sources of authority. Only one of these, the court's inherent powers, requires a showing of bad faith at all. The bankruptcy court did not need to find that Mr. Fuqua acted in bad faith in order to sanction him under Fed. R. Bankr. P. 9011, see In re DeVille, 361 F.3d 539, 548 (9th Cir. 2004) (in contrast to inherent power sanctions, sanctions under Rule 9011 do not require showing of bad faith); Fellheimer, Eichen & Braverman, P.C. v. Charter Tech., Inc., 57 F.3d 1215, 1225 (3rd Cir. 1995) (same), or under 11 U.S.C. § 105(a). See In re Dempsey, 247 Fed. Appx. 21, 25 (7th Cir. 2007) (court's use of section 105(a) to impose a one-year filing bar was justified despite absence of bad faith finding); In re Dyer, 322 F.3d 1178, 1191 (9th Cir. 2003) (holding that a court's use of its contempt power under section 105 does not require bad faith). Thus, even though the bankruptcy court made an express finding of bad faith in this matter, that finding was not essential to support the sanctions under Rule 9011 and 11 U.S.C. § 105.

In addition, the bankruptcy court did not err by failing to expressly apply a clear and convincing standard when it sanctioned Mr. Fuqua under its inherent powers. Although Mr. Fuqua is correct that inherent power sanctions are applied sparingly, the Fifth Circuit has never held that such sanctions require proof of bad faith by clear and convincing evidence, rather than the preponderance of evidence standard that is generally applicable in civil actions. See, e.g., In re OCA, Inc., 551 F.3d 359, 372 n.41 (5th Cir. 2008) (noting that preponderance of the evidence is the "fundamental civil case standard" and holding that the bankruptcy court erred by requiring willfulness to be proven by clear and convincing evidence on motion to set aside default judgment).

Even if a clear and convincing standard were applicable here, moreover, the evidence at trial is sufficient to meet such a standard. Under the clear and convincing standard, the finder of fact must be satisfied that the factual allegations in question are "highly probable." Colorado v. New Mexico, 367 U.S. 310, 316 (1984). The evidence below meets this standard. The bankruptcy court found that Mr. Fuqua acted in bad faith based on testimony that was either undisputed, or for which the bankruptcy court determined that Mr. Fuqua's version of events was not credible, or based on events for which Mr. Fuqua did not explain or justify his behavior. See. e.g., Dkt. 28 at 8-9 ¶ 1 (Mr. Fuqua filed bankruptcy petition for bad faith purpose of delaying foreclosure); ¶ 3 (Mr. Fuqua acted in bad faith by giving no meaningful thought to the purposes of chapter 11); ¶ 4 (finding that Mr. Fuqua intentionally chose vague and misleading language when drafting petition and finding alternative explanation offered by Mr. Fuqua not credible); ¶ 7 (concluding that various actions by Mr. Fuqua served no purpose except to delay case and avoid scrutiny of his own behavior). As the Fifth Circuit has observed, where a trial court makes an evidentiary determination based on its weighing of the credibility of witnesses, that determination may satisfy the clear and convincing standard. See OCA, 551 F.3d at 372 n. 42 (noting that application of clear and convincing standard does not permit court to ignore "he said, she said" evidence).

3. Mr. Fuqua's conclusory allegations of judicial bias are not grounds for overturning the sanctions below.

Lastly, Mr. Fuqua devotes the bulk of his brief to a discussion of other cases in which he was the subject of sanctions or adverse rulings by the bankruptcy court, and argues on the basis of those cases that the present sanctions should be overturned because of judicial bias. (Br. 13-20). Although Mr. Fuqua appears to believe that the bankruptcy judge should have recused himself under 28 U.S.C. § 455(a), Mr. Fuqua never filed a motion for recusal in the bankruptcy court, and consequently he has not preserved such issue for appeal. Taylor Acquisitions, L.L.C. v. City of Taylor, 313 Fed. Appx. 826, 838 (6th Cir. 2009) (appellate court may not consider allegation of judicial bias, where party did not first raise issue before trial court through motion to recuse); United States v. DiPina, 230 F.3d 477, 486 (1st Cir. 2000) (same); United States v. Mathison, 157 F.3d 541, 545-46 (8th Cir. 1998) (same). In any event, even if Mr. Fuqua had preserved this issue, the mere fact that he has been the subject of adverse decisions in the bankruptcy court in the past does not, without more, demonstrate judicial bias. See Taylor, 313 Fed. Appx. at 838 (holding that "[j]udicial bias must be predicated on a personal bias as distinguished from a judicial one, arising out of the judge's background and association and not from the judge's view of the law") (internal citations omitted).

CONCLUSION

For the foregoing reasons, the United States Trustee respectfully asks this Court to affirm the order of the bankruptcy court.

STATUTES

JURISDICTIONAL STATEMENT

The bankruptcy court had jurisdiction under 28 U.S.C. §§ 157(a) and (b), and 1334(a) to issue its final order granting the United States Trustee's motion to dismiss the Sullivans' chapter 7 bankruptcy case.[1] The order was entered on the docket on June 27, 2007, and the Sullivans filed a timely notice of appeal under 28 U.S.C. § 158(c)(2) and Fed. R. Bankr. P. 8002(a). This Court has appellate jurisdiction under 28 U.S.C. § 158(a)(1).

STATEMENT OF THE ISSUES

Whether the bankruptcy court abused its discretion in dismissing Mr. and Mrs. Sullivan's bankruptcy case as an abuse based on either the presumption of abuse that arose under 11 U.S.C. § 707(b)(2) or the totality of the circumstances of Mr. and Mrs. Sullivan's financial situation under 11 U.S.C. § 707(b)(3).

STANDARD OF REVIEW

In an appeal taken from a bankruptcy court order, a district court "reviews the bankruptcy court order dismissing a chapter 7 case for abuse of discretion; legal conclusions are reviewed de novo, and factual findings are reviewed for clear error." In re Hebbring, 463 F.3d 902, 905 (9th Cir. 2006). The bankruptcy court's holding that the facts did not support allowing the Sullivans to claim certain expenses in full is a factual finding reviewed for clear error. The bankruptcy court's holding that the Sullivans' case should be dismissed for abuse based on the totality of the circumstances of the Sullivans' financial situation under 11 U.S.C. § 707(b)(3) is also a factual finding subject to review for clear error.

STATEMENT OF THE CASE

On July 31, 2006, Mark and Diana Sullivan (the "Sullivans") filed a petition for relief under chapter 13 of the Bankruptcy Code. (Exh. 17, Exh. 15, docket no. 1). On November 8, 2006, the bankruptcy court entered an order converting the Sullivans' case to chapter 7. (Exh. 14). On January 25, 2007 the United States Trustee filed a motion to dismiss the Sullivans' case (Exh. 1), asserting that their chapter 7 case was abusive under 11 U.S.C. § 707(b). (Exh. 1, pg. 5).

The United States Trustee sought dismissal under two different theories. First, that a statutory presumption of abuse arose in the Sullivans' case that mandated its dismissal as a matter of law under 11 U.S.C. § 707(b)(2). (Exh. 1, pgs. 3, 4). In the alternative, the United States Trustee asserted that if the presumption of abuse did not arise, or was rebutted by the Sullivans, the case should be dismissed because the totality of their financial circumstances demonstrated that their use of chapter 7 was abusive under 11 U.S.C. § 707(b)(3). (Exh. 1, pgs. 4, 5).

On June 27, 2007, the bankruptcy court entered an order granting the United States Trustee's motion to dismiss on both grounds and issued a Memorandum of Decision (Exh. 2) containing its findings of fact and conclusions of law. This appeal followed.

STATEMENT OF THE FACTS

I. Statutory Framework

On October 17, 2005, most provisions of the Bankruptcy Abuse Prevention and Consumer Protection Act of 2005 (the "2005 Reform Act"), S. 256, Pub. L. No. 109-8, 119 Stat. 23, took effect, implementing significant changes to the Bankruptcy Code. 11 U.S.C. §§ 101 - 1532. As part of this effort, Congress amended section 707(b) of the Bankruptcy Code, which governs dismissal of chapter 7 bankruptcy cases for abuse. Analysis of the "means test," as contained within section 707(b)(2), is underpinned by Congress' general goal behind the complete overhaul of section 707(b), ensuring "that those who can afford to repay some portion of their unsecured debts be required to do so...". 151 CONG. REC. S2470 (March 10, 2005).

As it existed prior to the 2005 Reform Act, section 707(b) only authorized dismissal based on a finding that allowing the debtor relief constituted a “substantial abuse” of chapter 7. Further, section 707(b) prior to its amendment required courts to presume that a debtor was entitled to relief under chapter 7 of the Bankruptcy Code. Section 707(b) now authorizes dismissal where the court finds that the granting of relief would be an “abuse” of chapter 7. As amended by the 2005 Reform Act, section 707(b)(2) repealed the former presumption and replaced it with a new presumption: a case is an “abuse” of chapter 7 if a detailed mathematical formula set out in the statute, commonly referred to as the “means test,” yields a minimum amount of monthly disposable income.

The means test uses a series of calculations to determine whether the section 707(b)(2) presumption of abuse arises. See 11 U.S.C. § 707(b)(2)(A). Specifically, the means test calculates a debtor’s current monthly income, as defined under 11 U.S.C. § 101(10A) (hereafter “CMI”), based on the debtor’s average income for the six calendar months preceding the month of the bankruptcy filing. If the debtor’s CMI is above the applicable state median family income, as is the case here, 11 U.S.C. § 707(b)(2)(A) calculates the debtor’s monthly disposable income available to repay creditors by reducing the CMI by certain categories of expenses identified in 11 U.S.C. § 707(b)(2)(A)(ii), (iii), and (iv). If a debtor's monthly disposable income, calculated by reducing the CMI by allowed expenses under 11 U.S.C. § 707(b)(2)(A)(ii) - (iv), is less than $100 per month (or $6,000 over 60 months), the presumption of abuse does not arise. 11 U.S.C. § 707(b)(2)(A)(I).[2] If the debtor's monthly disposable income is equal to or exceeds $167 per month (or $10,000 over 60 months), the presumption of abuse does arise. Id. If the debtor's monthly disposable income is between $100 and $167 per month (between $6,000 and $10,000 over 60 months), the presumption of abuse arises if the disposable income, over 60 months, is sufficient to pay 25 percent of the debtor's nonpriority unsecured debt. Id.

If the presumption of abuse arises under section 707(b)(2) based on the means test, the debtor may attempt to rebut the presumption under 11 U.S.C. § 707(b)(2)(B) by demonstrating special circumstances that justify income or expense adjustments for which there is no reasonable alternative.

The amounts discussed herein are those in effect on the date of the filing of the Sullivans’ petition, July 31, 2006.

Even if the presumption of abuse does not arise in a chapter 7 case, or is rebutted, the court may nonetheless dismiss a case if it finds that the case was (1) filed in bad faith, or (2) the totality of the debtor's financial situation demonstrates abuse. 11 U.S.C. § 707(b)(3).

Each chapter 7 debtor with primarily consumer debts is required to file, in conjunction with his or her bankruptcy schedules and statement of financial affairs, a Statement of Current Monthly Income and Means Test Calculation, Official Form 22A of the Federal Rules of Bankruptcy Procedure ("Form 22A" or the "Means Test Form"). 11 U.S.C. §§ 521 and 707(b)(2)(C). In chapter 7 cases the main purpose of Form 22A is to calculate monthly disposable income following the formula set forth in 11 U.S.C. § 707(b)(2), and determine whether the presumption of abuse arises. Chapter 13 debtors are required to calculate their "disposable income" on Official Form 22C. The methodology for calculating monthly disposable income for above median income debtors in chapter 13 is similar to that used to calculate whether a presumption of abuse arises under 11 U.S.C. § 707(b)(2)(A). In fact, section 1325(b)(2) requires such debtors to subtract from their CMI the expenses set out in subparagraphs (A) and (B) of section 707(b)(2).[3]

II. Factual Background.

The Sullivans are a married couple residing in Montana. (Exh. 2, p. 2). They both are employed by the State of Montana and have four dependents. (Exh. 2 p. 3). They originally filed their bankruptcy case under chapter 13 of the Bankruptcy Code on July 31, 2006.

On September 26, 2006, chapter 13 trustee Robert G. Drummond (the "chapter 13 trustee") filed an objection (Exh. 12) to the Sullivans' proposed second amended chapter 13 plan.

[3] There also are several expenses that an above median income chapter 13 debtor is allowed to deduct from CMI that are not deductible for purposes of the chapter 7 "means test." Those are payments on certain retirement plan loans (11 U.S.C. § 1322(f)) and contributions to certain retirement plans (11 U.S.C. § 541(b)(7)). Chapter 7 debtors may only deduct retirement plan contributions if such contributions are mandatory, i.e. a condition of employment, as in the Sullivans' case.

(Exh. 7). That plan proposed bi-weekly payments of $35.00 over a period of 36 months, totaling $2,730.00, to be made to the trustee for disbursement to creditors. (Exh. 7, pg. 1). The chapter 13 trustee's objection alleged, among other things, that the plan failed to commit all of Mr. and Mrs. Sullivans' disposable income to fund the plan as required by 11 U.S.C. § 1325(b)(1); that the calculation of disposable income on their Form 22C was incorrect; and that the Sullivans were required to make payments over 60 months. (Exh. 12, pgs. 1, 2). On November 7, 2006, the bankruptcy court held a hearing on confirmation of the Sullivans' second amended chapter 13 plan. (Exh. 15, minute entry 11/7/06). Just a few days prior to the hearing, on November 3, 2006, the chapter 13 trustee moved to convert Mr. and Mrs. Sullivans' case to chapter 7 (Exh. 13), and the Sullivans consented. (Exh. 11, pg. 6, ll. 2 -7, pg. 36, ll. 12, 13). The bankruptcy court, in its order dated November 8, 2006, granted the motion to convert. (Exh. 14). The court based its order on the Sullivans' consent to the trustee's motion and its finding that Mr. and Mrs. Sullivan had intentionally omitted pre-petition debt from their bankruptcy schedules. (Exh. 14, pg. 2).

After the Sullivans' case was converted to chapter 7, the United States Trustee undertook an investigation to ascertain whether their bankruptcy case should be dismissed as an abuse under 11 U.S.C. § 707(b). Based on her review of the amended Form 22C filed in the Sullivans' chapter 13 case,[4] the U.S. Trustee determined that the presumption of abuse arose under 11 U.S.C. § 707(b)(2) and filed a statement of presumed abuse as required by 11 U.S.C. § 704(b)(1)(A). (Exh. 15, docket no. 44). On January 25, 2007, the United States Trustee timely filed her motion to dismiss the Sullivans' case under 11 U.S.C. § 704(b)(2) and 707(b)(1). (Exh. 1).

In her motion to dismiss, the United States Trustee alleged that the presumption of abuse arose under 11 U.S.C. § 707(b)(2). (Exh. 1, pgs. 3, 4). In particular, the United States Trustee alleged that the Sullivans overstated expenses for taxes, childcare, healthcare, and telecommunications and understated expenses for health insurance on their chapter 13 Means Test Form. Id. After adjusting for these errors, the United States Trustee alleged in her motion to dismiss that a properly completed Means Test Form would result in monthly disposable income of $1,107.46, which is sufficient to trigger a presumption of abuse. (Exh. 1, pgs. 4, 5). The motion also alleged that the totality of the circumstances of the Sullivans' financial situation demonstrated abuse under 11 U.S.C. § 707(b)(3). Id.

Mr. and Mrs. Sullivan filed a response to the United States Trustee's motion to dismiss on February 5, 2007. (Exh. 16). Their response did not refute any of the allegations in the motion to dismiss but simply set the matter for hearing. Id.

A hearing on the United States Trustee's motion was held on May 8, 2007. (Exh. 15, minute entry 5/8/07). Debtor Mark A. Sullivan and a bankruptcy analyst employed by the Office of the United States Trustee testified under oath regarding various aspects of the Sullivans' income and expenses. (Exh. 8). The parties presented legal arguments in briefs filed after the hearing. (Exh. 3; Exh. 9).

In her post-hearing brief, the United States Trustee argued, based on the evidence adduced at the hearing, that a properly completed Means Test Form would result in monthly disposable income at Line 50 of $492.67. (Exh. 9, pg. 7; Exh. 10, Line 50). The United States Trustee based her conclusion on adjustments to the Sullivans' claimed expenses on their amended Form 22C. (Exh. 6). These adjustments included a reduction of taxes (Line 30 of Form 22C - Line 25 of Form 22A) to $1,187.28; childcare (Line 34 of Form 22C - Line 30 of Form 22A) to $411; and telecommunications (Line 37 of Form 22C - Line 32 of Form 22A) to $66. (Exh. 9, pgs. 3-6). The United States Trustee accepted the Sullivans' claim of $414 for healthcare expenses (Line 36 of Form 22C - Line 31 of Form 22A) and increased the Sullivans' amount for "Health Insurance, Disability Insurance, and Health Savings Account Expenses" (Line 39 of Form 22C - Line 34 of Form 22A) to $1,068.38.[5] (Exh. 9, pg. 6).

[5] The Court will note also that the U.S. Trustee increased the second vehicle ownership expense (Line 29 of Form 22C - Line 24 of Form 22A) from $200 to $332. This is based on the Montana bankruptcy court's ruling that a debtor that owns a vehicle outright, i.e. free of loan or lease payments, is entitled to the full IRS ownership expense under the IRS National Standards. In re Naslund, 359 B.R. 781, 792 (Bankr. D. Mont. 2006).

In their post-hearing brief, the Sullivans conceded that all of the expense amounts asserted by the United States Trustee were correct. (Exh. 3, pgs. 2, 3). However, the Sullivans, for the first time, claimed that they were entitled to an expense of $450 at Line 21 of their Means Test Form for additional home repairs and $285 at Line 38 of Form 22A for "Education expenses for dependent children less than 18." (Exh. 3, pgs. 3, 4). According to the Sullivans, this would result in monthly disposable income at Line 50 of Form 22A of negative $175.95 and the presumption of abuse would not arise. (Exh. 4, Line 50).

The bankruptcy court, in its June 27, 2007 Memorandum of Decision, dismissed the Sullivans' chapter 7 case under section 707(b)(2) and (3). (Exh. 2, pg. 15). Under section 707(b)(2), it allowed the Sullivans education expenses of only $25 per month on Line 38 and additional home repair expenses of $95. (Exh. 2, pg. 14). Based on these findings, the court determined (a) that the Sullivans had $406.12 in monthly disposable income; (b) the presumption of abuse arose; and (c) the Sullivans failed to rebut the presumption. Id. The court alternatively determined that the totality of the Sullivans' financial situation demonstrated abuse under section 707(b)(3). (Exh. 2, pgs. 14, 15). This appeal followed.

SUMMARY OF ARGUMENT

The bankruptcy court dismissed the Sullivans' chapter 7 case on two alternate bases – as a statutorily presumed abuse under 11 U.S.C. § 707(b)(2) and as an abuse under 11 U.S.C. § 707(b)(3)(B) based on the totality of the circumstances of the Sullivans' financial situation. This Court can affirm under either theory.

First, this Court can affirm under 11 U.S.C. § 707(b)(2) because the bankruptcy court did not commit clear error in ruling the Sullivans failed the means test. Although the bankruptcy court allowed the Sullivans increased education and home repair expenses, it did so in amounts less than the Sullivans requested. That ruling was supported by substantial evidence. If this Court concludes the evidence was insufficient to support the bankruptcy court's expense findings, this Court should remand, but only if the Court first rules the bankruptcy court erred in alternatively dismissing the Sullivans' case under 11 U.S.C. § 707(b)(3).

The bankruptcy court's section 707(b)(3) holding constitutes a separate basis for affirmance. In dismissing the Sullivans' case on that ground, the bankruptcy court did not commit clear error in determining that the totality of the circumstances of the Sullivans' financial situation demonstrated they could make reasonable payments to creditors. The record before the bankruptcy court contained ample evidence to support the bankruptcy court's conclusion that the Sullivans' financial situation demonstrated abuse because they have the ability to pay amounts to their unsecured creditors.

ARGUMENT

I. The Bankruptcy Court's Dismissal Under 11 U.S.C. § 707(b)(2) Should be Affirmed Because the Factual Findings Supporting Dismissal Were Not Clearly Erroneous.

In their Opening Brief, the Sullivans suggest that, in calculating whether the presumption of abuse arose, the bankruptcy court should have allowed them to claim an additional $450 per month for housing and utilities expenses (Debtors' Br., pgs. 8, 9) and an additional $285 per month for educational expenses. Id., pg. 10. If the Sullivans are correct and should have been allowed either of those expense deductions in full, the presumption of abuse would not arise. Because the court below instead determined that the facts supported deductions for these expenses in amounts significantly less than those claimed by the Sullivans, they seek further review from this Court.

The bankruptcy court's factual findings are entitled to deference on appeal. See Anderson v. City of Bessemer City, N.C., 470 U.S. 564, 574 (1985) (because trial judge has expertise in fact determination, "review of factual findings under the clearly-erroneous standard-with its deference to the trier of fact-is the rule, not the exception"); Granfinanciera, S.A. v. Nordberg, 492 U.S. 33, 50 (1989) (district courts may set aside clearly erroneous factual findings by bankruptcy courts); Fed. R. Bankr. P. 8013 ("[f]indings of fact...shall not be set aside unless clearly erroneous, and due regard shall be given to the opportunity of the bankruptcy court to judge the credibility of the witnesses).

On appeal, the Sullivans contest the bankruptcy court's factual findings. To be clearly erroneous, those findings "must strike [the Court] more than just maybe or probably wrong; [they] must ... strike us as wrong with the force of a five-week-old, unrefrigerated dead fish." U.S. v. Bussell, 504 F.3d 956, 962 (9th Cir. 2007) (quoting Hayes v. Woodford, 301 F.3d 1054, 1067 n. 8 (9th Cir.2002)). Because the bankruptcy court's factual findings were supported by the evidence, "[n]o such stench lingers here." Id.

A. The Bankruptcy Court's finding that Mr. and Mrs. Sullivan failed to justify education expenses of more than $25 was not clearly erroneous.

In calculating whether the presumption of abuse arose under section 707(b)(2), the bankruptcy court found that the Sullivans had established they were entitled to an expense deduction of only $25 per month on Line 38 of their Means Test Form for "Education expenses for dependent children less than 18." (Exh. 2, pg. 14). This finding was amply supported by the evidence and should be affirmed.

Debtors are allowed to claim education expenses on Line 38 of the Means Test Form under 11 U.S.C. 707(b)(2)(A)(ii)(IV). That section provides, in pertinent part, that:

> ... the debtor's monthly expenses may include the actual expenses for each dependent child less than 18 years of age, not to exceed $1,500 per year per child, to attend a private or public elementary or secondary school if the debtor provides documentation of such expenses and a detailed explanation of why such expenses are reasonable and necessary, and why such expenses are not already accounted for in the National Standards, Local Standards, or Other Necessary Expenses referred to in subclause (I).

Accordingly, this section allows debtors a deduction of up to $1,500 per child on the Means Test Form for expenses to attend a private or public school if the debtor provides: (1) documentation; (2) a detailed explanation of the reasonableness and necessity of the expense; and (3) a detailed explanation of why the expense is not accounted for elsewhere on the Means Test Form in the IRS standards. Id.

The Sullivans failed to introduce any admissible evidence that they met the criteria in section 707(b)(2)(A)(IV). First, although the bankruptcy court noted that Mr. Sullivan testified that "the expenses ... pertain to daycare, school lunches, school supplies, extracurricular activities and the such" (Exh. 2, p. 13), Mr. Sullivan did not actually offer any testimony regarding any of those expenses except for daycare. (Exh. 8). Moreover, the Sullivans already received a deduction for those daycare expenses on Line 30 of their Means Test Form as an Other Necessary Expense, so those expenses clearly did not meet the criteria for inclusion on Line 38. See 11 U.S.C. § 707(b)((2)(A)(ii)(IV) (requiring debtors to establish, as a prerequisite to allowance of education expenses, that such expenses are not otherwise accounted for in the Other Necessary Expenses established by the IRS).[6] Based on Mr. Sullivan's testimony, the court was justified in finding that they failed to establish that they had allowable expenses under section 707(b)(2)(A)(ii)(IV). (Exh. 2, pg. 13). Likewise, although the Sullivans claimed they were entitled to $285 in education expenses on Line 38 based upon affidavits filed with their post-hearing brief, (Exh. 3, pg. 4), the court properly rejected those affidavits "on grounds they are hearsay, not subject to cross examination, and were filed after the close of testimony." (Exh. 2, pg. 4).

Given that, the bankruptcy court did not err when it limited the Sullivans' education expense deduction to $25. Indeed, the Sullivans themselves previously filed documents with the court indicating that their education expense totaled only $25 per month. (Exh. 2, pg. 5; Exh. 5; Exh. 6). Accordingly, the bankruptcy court's finding that Mr. and Mrs. Sullivan were entitled to deduct only $25 per month for education expenses on their Means Test Form should be affirmed.

B. The Bankruptcy Court's allowance of an adjustment of $95 per month for home repair was not clearly erroneous.

Mr. and Mrs. Sullivan also argue that the bankruptcy court erred because they were entitled to additional expenses for home repairs of $450 per month on Line 21 of Form 22A, instead of the $95 allowed by the bankruptcy court. Debtors' Br., pg. 9. They are wrong. The bankruptcy court's findings were not clear error because the court exercised proper discretion in weighing the evidence before it.

Section 707(b)(2)(A)(ii)(I) provides in relevant part that debtors are allowed to claim on their Means Test Form "applicable expense amounts specified under the ... Local Standards ... issued by the Internal Revenue Service...." 11 U.S.C. § 707(b)(2)(A)(ii)(I). The Local Standards issued by the IRS as of the date the Sullivans filed their bankruptcy case, as referred to in section [6] In fact, the U.S. Trustee elicited extensive testimony regarding Mr. and Mrs. Sullivans' daycare expenses (Exh. 8, pgs. 16-23) and asserted that they had average monthly daycare expenses of $411 that were allowable as an Other Necessary Expense on Line 30 of the Means Test Form. (Exh. 9, pg. 5; Exh. 10, Line 30). The Sullivans conceded this amount in their post-hearing brief and the Form 22A they filed with it. (Exh. 3, p. 2; Exh. 4, Line 30).

707(b)(2)(A)(ii)(I), are found in the Collection Financial Standards published by the IRS.[7]

At issue in this case is whether the Sullivans are entitled to adjust their Means Test form to account for home repair costs that exceed the amount allowed in the Local Standard for Housing and Utilities, Debtors' brief, pgs. 8, 9, which includes expenses for: mortgage or rent, property taxes, interest, insurance, maintenance, repairs, gas, electric, water, heating oil, garbage collection, telephone and cell phone. See http://www.irs.gov/irm/part5/ch15s01.html#d0e193592 (defining housing and utilities standards). On the Means Test Form, these expenses are represented on two lines: Line 20A includes the non-mortgage expenses included in the Standard, and Line 20B includes the mortgage or rent portion of the Standard. Id. See also Official Form 22A, Lines 20A and 20B. Because they are not part of a mortgage or rent, home repair costs may be accounted for on line 20A as part of the non-mortgage expenses.

On their Means Test Form, the Sullivans claimed not only the full allowance of $403 on Line 20A for non-mortgage housing and utilities expenses,[8] but also claimed additional expenses of $450 per month to complete repairs to their home. (Exh. 2, pgs 11, 12; Exh. 4, Line 21).[9]

[7] The IRS revised its Collection Financial Standards, effective October 1, 2007, see IRS Collection Financial Standards, at http://www.irs.gov/irm/part5/ch15s01.html#d0e193592 , and such revisions are applicable to bankruptcy cases filed as of January 1, 2008. See http://www.usdoj.gov/ust/eo/bapcpa/meanstesting.htm. Because the Sullivans' case was filed on July 31, 2006, only the Collection Financial Standards in effect prior to October 1, 2007, are applicable to their case. It is important to note, however, that the revisions made by the IRS effective October 1, 2007 do not change any result in this case.

[8] The Sullivans also claimed the full amount of the Mortgage/Rent expense available to them under the Standard. Because their actual mortgage expense exceeded the amount of the mortgage/rent standard expense on Line 20A, they were instead allowed the full amount of their mortgage in lieu of the Standard. (Exh. 10, Lines 20A and 42). Accordingly, Line 20A reflects an amount of $0, while the applicable deduction of $$1,570.86 for their mortgage is reflected at Line 42. Id.

[9] The Sullivans argued that they were entitled to this adjustment on Line 21 of their Means Test Form, and the bankruptcy court mistakenly allowed the reduced adjustment on this Line. (Exh. 2, pg. 13). However, the proper method of allowing this expense would be as a special circumstance to potentially rebut the presumption under 11 U.S.C. § 707(b)(2)(B). Line 21 is available only where a debtor claims that the process of separating the single IRS Housing and Utilities Standard into the mortgage and non-mortgage components on Lines 20A and 20B does not "accurately compute the allowance to which you are entitled under the ... Standards." Line 21 cannot be used to increase a debtor's housing and/or utility expenses simply because the debtor

However, the bankruptcy court found that the Sullivans failed to establish that $450 per month for home repairs was warranted under the circumstances because many of the repairs allegedly required were elective cosmetic repairs that “would be nice to do if a person could afford such repairs,” but were “certainly not necessary for the maintenance and support of the Debtors’ household.” (Exh. 2, pgs. 12, 13). As set forth below, the bankruptcy court carefully weighed the evidence before it and its factual findings should therefore be given deference by this Court.

In its opinion, the bankruptcy court carefully considered testimony offered by Mr. Sullivan. (Exh. 2, pgs. 11, 12, 13, 15). Based on Mr. Sullivan’s testimony, the bankruptcy court determined that many of these repairs were unnecessary and “should not be completed at the detriment of Debtors’ creditors.” Id. at 13. These included finishing the downstairs bathroom; improving the laundry room; adding a wall to the master bedroom; repairing a fence; resurfacing their driveway; and repairing kitchen cabinets. Id. at 11. The Sullivans have not identified any clear error in the bankruptcy court’s finding or the court’s analysis of Mr. Sullivan’s testimony in their Opening Brief, but simply disagree with the court’s factual conclusion that many of the claimed repairs would be “nice if you can afford them.” Debtors’ Br., pg. 9.

As further evidence that the bankruptcy court used proper discretion in weighing the evidence before it, the court did not flatly reject all of the home repairs sought by the Sullivans. Instead, it carefully considered the nature of the requested repairs, and allowed those that it considered necessary for the health and welfare of the Sullivans and their children. For example, the court allowed additional monthly expenses to fund replacement of a furnace because Mr. Sullivan had witnessed “flames shooting out of the side,” (Exh. 2, pg. 12), and to repair a deck that was suffering from rot and falling away from the house. Id. at 13. After averaging the costs for these two repairs over 60 months, as some other expenses on the Means Test Form are has higher expenses than allowed by the Standard. In re Sudhaker Rajender, No. 07-21945, 2007 WL 2345018, *1, 2 (Bankr. E.D. Cal. Aug. 7, 2007) (unpublished). See also In re Skaggs, 349 B.R. 594, 597 (Bankr. E.D. Mo. 2006) ("Neither party has argued that Lines 20A and 20B together do not set out the maximum allowance under the IRS Housing and Utilities Standards...."). Instead, those must be raised as “special circumstances” under 11 U.S.C. § 707(b)(2)(B). It is not, however, necessary for this Court to reach this issue. Whether allowed on Line 21 or as a special circumstance, the bankruptcy court was well within its discretion to limit the adjustment to $95.

averaged,[10] the court allowed an additional deduction of $95 per month for those repairs. Id.

Accordingly, even allowing the Sullivans to claim expenses over and above the Local Standards to perform necessary home repairs, the bankruptcy court concluded that the Sullivans nevertheless had over $400 per month in disposable income. Because this triggered the presumption of abuse, the court granted the United States Trustee's motion to dismiss. The Sullivans have not asserted any clear error in this analysis, and it should be affirmed.

C. The Sullivans failed to establish special circumstances below to rebut the presumption of abuse that the bankruptcy court found arose under 11 U.S.C. § 707(b)(2).

The Sullivans argue in their Opening Brief, for the first time, that this Court should find that they can establish special circumstances under 11 U.S.C. § 707(b)(2)(B) to rebut the presumption of abuse that arose under section 707(b)(2). Their proposed new special circumstance is the fact that the Sullivans purportedly would be unable to fund a chapter 13 plan. Debtors' Br., pgs. 7, 11, 13. As a preliminary matter, the Sullivans did not present any evidence at trial to rebut the presumption, (Exh. 2, pg. 14) ("Debtors failed to present evidence to rebut the presumption of abuse"), and so they have waived this argument. See Smith v. Marsh, 194 F. 3d 1045, 1052 (9th Cir. 1999) (appellate courts will not consider arguments raised for the first time on appeal because such arguments are waived). In fact, the Sullivans concede their failure to present evidence to the bankruptcy court on the issue of rebuttal of the presumption of abuse, and instead complain that the United States Trustee failed to elicit testimony at trial to establish their burden for them. Debtors' Br., pg. 7. Because it was the Sullivans' burden to rebut the presumption, and not the United States Trustee's, their attempt to litigate rebuttal of the presumption at this juncture should be rejected by this Court. See, e.g., In re Martin, 371 B.R. 347, 352 (Bankr. C.D. Ill. 2007) (burden of rebutting the presumption of abuse under section 707(b)(2) is on the debtor).

Should this Court consider this new issue, the Sullivans' contentions should be rejected because they fail to show that the bankruptcy court committed clear error in finding that they failed to rebut the presumption of abuse.

[10] See, e.g., 11 U.S.C. § 707(b)(2)(A)(iii) (allowing expenses for secured debt payments when averaged over 60 months); 11 U.S.C. § 707(b)(2)(A)(iv) (allowing payments for priority claims averaged over 60 months) See also Official Form 22A, Lines 42 and 44.

To demonstrate special circumstances, a debtor must itemize and document each adjustment of income or expenses, provide a detailed explanation of each adjustment under oath, demonstrate that there is no reasonable alternative to the adjustments, and the adjustments must cause the presumption of abuse to no longer arise. 11 U.S.C. § 707(b)(2)(B)(ii)-(iv); In re Batzkiel, 349 B.R. 518, 586 (Bankr. N.D. Iowa 2006).

On appeal, the Sullivans suggest that they have "special circumstances" because they cannot make any payments in a chapter 13 plan. Debtors' Br., pgs. 7, 11, 13. At trial, however, the Sullivans did not submit any documentation to support such a claim and have even admitted in their Opening Brief that they have the ability to repay 7 percent of their unsecured claims. Id. at 11. Further, the Sullivans' "special circumstances" claim is inconsistent with the bankruptcy court's finding that they have the ability to make payments on their unsecured debt, which finding was supported by substantial evidence. Finally, as other bankruptcy courts have found, "[t]he potential payback of zero percent to unsecured creditors in a Chapter 13[plan] is not a special circumstance contemplated under § 707(b)(2)(B)." In re Johns, 342 B.R. 626, 629 (Bankr. E.D. Okla. 2006).

Accordingly, the bankruptcy court's finding that the Sullivans failed to establish special circumstances to rebut the presumption under 11 U.S.C. § 707(b)(2)(B) is not clearly erroneous and should be affirmed.

II. The Bankruptcy Court's Finding that the Totality of the Circumstances of the Sullivans' Financial Situation Demonstrated Abuse Under 11 U.S.C. § 707(b)(3) was Not Clearly Erroneous.

The bankruptcy court dismissed the Sullivans' case on two independent grounds. In addition to the section 707(b)(2) dismissal, the court independently dismissed the case under section 707(b)(3)(B) of the Code. If this Court agrees with either of the two bases relied upon by the court below, that dismissal should be affirmed.

On appeal, the Sullivans suggest the bankruptcy court erred in finding that their case should also be dismissed under 11 U.S.C. § 707(b)(3). Debtors' Br., pgs. 11, 12. This argument lacks merit. The record is replete with evidence to support the bankruptcy court's conclusion that the Sullivans had the ability to repay their unsecured debt. See, e.g., Hebbring, 463 F.3d at 907 (holding, under pre-Reform Act section 707(b), that bankruptcy courts have broad discretion to evaluate facts that support dismissal based on the totality of the circumstances of a debtor's financial situation).

First, Schedules I and J filed by the Debtors indicate that the Debtors have $6,554.31 of monthly income and $6,477.79 of monthly expenses, leaving a surplus of $76.52 per month. (Exh. 17, Schedules I and J). However, the Sullivans included in that calculation the full $450 per month in home repairs that they requested in connection with their claim on the Means Test Form. (Exh. 17, Schedule J, l. 3). (As set forth above, the bankruptcy court used its discretion to determine that $450 per month in home repair costs was excessive, and properly reduced the home repair expenses claimed by the Sullivans to $95 per month to allow only for those repairs that are necessary. (Exh. 2, pg. 13). Accordingly, if the Sullivans' scheduled expenses were reduced to allow only $95 per month for home repair, without adjusting any of their other claimed expenses, their net monthly income would increase to $431.52 ($76.52 plus $355, which is the difference between the claimed $450 in repairs and the $95 allowed). Over the course of a 60 month plan, this would repay over $25,000 of the Sullivans' scheduled unsecured debt. (Exh. 17, Schedule F). See, e.g., Hebbring, 463 F.3d at 908 (affirming dismissal based on totality of the circumstances where debtor could repay $172 per month to unsecured creditors in a chapter 13 plan); In re Behlke, 358 F.3d 429, 437 (6th Cir. 2004) (affirming dismissal where debtor could repay 14% of unsecured debt in a chapter 13 plan).

Moreover, on Schedule J, the Sullivans scheduled expenses for school lunches twice, including an expense for "daycare and school lunches" in the amount of $610 and an expense for "school lunches" of $90. (Exh. 17, Schedule J, l. 17). Elimination of the redundant entry for "school lunches" of $90 alone would increase the Sullivans' net disposable income to $166.52 ($76.52 plus $90). If both the school lunch redundancy and home repair reduction were factored in, the Sullivans would have more than $521 per month in net monthly income ($76.52 plus $355 for disallowed home repairs plus $90 for disallowed redundant school lunch expenses).

Finally, the Sullivans admit in their Opening Brief that they can repay at least 7 percent of their accrued unsecured debt in a chapter 13 plan. Debtors' Br., pg. 11. Accordingly, their argument that they have no ability to repay creditors is disingenuous and does not render the bankruptcy court's contrary finding clearly erroneous.

CONCLUSION

For these reasons, the United States Trustee respectfully asks this Court to affirm the order entered below.

Respectfully submitted this 16th day of January, 2008.

STATEMENT OF ISSUE PRESENTED

Under section 503(b) of the Bankruptcy Code, certain post-petition expenditures may be granted administrative expense priority treatment, which allows them to be paid from the bankruptcy estate ahead of other claims. Appellant Ambrose Richardson III, a creditor in the bankruptcy case of Summit Metals, Inc., sought administrative expense priority treatment for $768,921.71 in hourly time he spent on various matters in Summit's bankruptcy case and other cases, and $107,826.96 for reimbursement of out-of-pocket expenses he incurred. The bankruptcy court only allowed administrative expense priority treatment for $2,533.65 in out-of-pocket expenses that Richardson had proven were incurred in his capacity as a member of the official committee of unsecured creditors in Summit's bankruptcy case. Did the bankruptcy court err in finding that Richardson had not made the requisite showing under section 503(b) to support an entitlement to administrative expense priority treatment for the remainder of his out-of pocket expenses and his entire request for hourly compensation?

STATEMENT OF APPROPRIATE STANDARD OF APPELLATE REVIEW

This Court conducts a de novo review of the bankruptcy court's legal findings. See, e.g., Rode v. Dellarciprete, 892 F.2d 1177, 1182 (3d Cir. 1990); In re Hechinger Inv. Co. of Del., Inc., 276 B.R. 43, 45 (D. Del. 2002). The bankruptcy court's findings of fact, however, will not be set aside unless they are either "completely devoid of minimum evidentiary support displaying some hue of credibility or bear [ ] no rational relationship to the supportive evidentiary data." Fellheimer, Eichen & Braverman P.C. v. Charter Technologies, Inc., 57 F.3d 1215, 1223 (3d Cir. 1995); see also Fed. R. Bankr. P. 8013 ("[F]indings of fact, whether based on oral or documentary evidence, shall not be set aside unless clearly erroneous, and due regard shall be given to the opportunity of the bankruptcy court to judge the credibility of the witnesses.").

STATEMENT OF THE CASE

I. Statutory Framework

The assets in a bankruptcy case must be distributed to claimants in the order established by 11 U.S.C. § 507(a).[1] First priority is afforded to administrative expenses allowed under 11 U.S.C. § 503(b). See 11 U.S.C. § 507(a)(1). The statutory administrative expense provisions are interpreted narrowly "so as to keep fees and administrative costs at a minimum." See Burlington N. R.R. v. Dant & Russell, Inc. (In re Dant & Russell, Inc.), 853 F.2d 700, 706 (9th Cir. 1988).

Section 503(b) contains a nonexclusive list of items that may be afforded administrative expense priority. Each subparagraph of section 503(b) refers to a separate kind of administrative expense. This appeal implicates subparagraphs (b)(1)(A), (b)(3), and (b)(4) of section 503.

A. Section 503(b)(1)(A)

Section 503(b)(1)(A) provides administrative expense priority treatment to "the actual, necessary costs and expenses of preserving the estate, including wages, salaries, or commissions for services rendered after the commencement of the case." Bankruptcy courts have broad discretion in determining whether to grant or deny administrative expense requests under section 503(b)(1)(A). See Burlington, 853 F.2d at 707.

An applicant under section 503(b)(1)(A) must prove three things: (i) that his costs and expenses were actually incurred (i.e., they are out-of-pocket expenses rather than "opportunity costs" or "services rendered"); (ii) that the estate received an actual benefit (i.e., not a conjectural, contingent, or potential benefit); and (iii) that there is a demonstrable causal connection between the applicant's actual expenses and a specific actual benefit received by the estate (i.e., the expenses were "necessary" to "preserving the estate"). See Calpine Corp. v. O'Brien Envtl. Energy, Inc. (In re O'Brien Envtl. Energy, Inc.), 181 F.3d 527, 532 (3d Cir. 1999) (applicant must prove connection between actual expense and actual benefit); Burlington, 853 F.2d at 706 (benefit to estate must be actual, not potential). The Third Circuit has stated that an applicant under section 503(b)(1)(A) bears a "heavy burden." Id.

In addition, as the "estate" to be preserved did not exist before the filing of the petition, a claimant seeking priority treatment under subparagraph (b)(1)(A) must show that his request is based on a post-petition transaction with the debtor in possession. See, e.g., Former Employees of Builders Square Retail Stores v. Hechinger Inv. Co. of Del. (In re Hechinger Inv. Co. of Del.), 298 F.3d 219, 226 (3d Cir. 2002); O'Brien, 181 F.3d at 532. If the transaction that gave rise to the claim predates the filing of the petition, the claim is a pre-petition unsecured claim that cannot be afforded section 503(b)(1)(A) administrative expense priority treatment.

B. Section 503(b)(3)

Section 503(b)(3) allows certain claimants to receive administrative expense priority for their "actual, necessary expenses" other than the compensation and reimbursement of professionals specified in subparagraph (b)(4). Thus, a creditor may never receive administrative expense priority under subparagraph (b)(3) for attorney compensation and expenses; attorney compensation and expenses may only receive administrative expense priority, if at all, under subparagraph (b)(4) (discussed below). In addition, subparagraph (b)(3) only allows for the reimbursement of a creditor's "actual" out-of-pocket "expenses," not the recovery of the value of the hours the creditor has put into the case.

1. Section 503(b)(3)(C)

Subparagraph (b)(3)(C) refers to out-of-pocket expenses incurred by "a creditor in connection with the prosecution of a criminal offense relating to the case or to the business or property of the debtor." Under this provision, a creditor must prove two things: (i) a direct relationship between the expenses sought and the prosecution of a criminal offense; and (ii) a direct relationship between the criminal offense and the debtor's bankruptcy case, business, or property. See Lebron v. Mechem Financial Inc., 27 F.3d 937, 943 n.1 (3d Cir. 1994). If a creditor cannot prove either of these connections, he cannot receive a section 503(b)(3)(C) claim.

2. Section 503(b)(3)(D)

Subparagraph (b)(3)(D) refers to out-of-pocket expenses incurred by a creditor "in making a substantial contribution in a case under chapter 9 or 11[.]" In determining whether he has made a "substantial contribution," the applicant bears an "especially difficult" burden. See In re U.S. Lines, Inc., 103 B.R. 427, 430 (Bankr. S.D.N.Y. 1989). To carry this burden, a creditor must prove three things: (i) that his expenses were actually incurred; (ii) that the estate received an "actual and demonstrable benefit"; and (iii) that the benefit is "more than an incidental one arising from activities the applicant has pursued in protecting his or her own interests." Lebron, 27 F.3d at 944. Essentially, creditors seeking section 503(b)(3)(D) treatment must show a causal connection between their services and the benefit, just like applicants under section 503(b)(1)(A). See In re Worldwide Direct, Inc., 334 B.R.112, 121 (Bankr. D. Del. 2005). Creditors are "presumed to be acting in their own interests"; the presumption is rebutted only if they "satisfy the court that their efforts have transcended self-protection." Lebron, 27 F.3d at 944. Unless the court finds that the creditor's actions "were designed to benefit others" rather than himself, the creditor cannot obtain administrative expense priority under subparagraph 503(b)(3)(D) even if there was a benefit to the estate. Id. at 946. The Third Circuit has held that "[t]he inquiry concerning the existence of a substantial contribution is one of fact, and it is the bankruptcy court that is in the best position to perform the necessary fact finding task." Id. As a result, the bankruptcy court has broad discretion to determine whether an applicant has carried his burden of proof.

3. Section 503(b)(3)(F)

Section 503(b)(3)(F) allows a member of an official committee of unsecured creditors to receive administrative expense priority for out-of-pocket expenses incurred in the performance of the duties of the committee.[2] A committee member cannot receive administrative expense priority for everything he does during the case, however; only out-of-pocket expenses proven to be incurred as a member of the committee may receive priority treatment under subparagraph (b)(3)(F). Specifically, a committee member cannot obtain hourly compensation for services he renders during the case. See In re County of Orange, 179 B.R. 195, 201 (Bankr. C.D. Cal. 1995).

C. Section 503(b)(4)

Section 503(b)(4) refers to "reasonable compensation for professional services rendered by an attorney or accountant of an entity whose expense is allowable under paragraph (3)[.]"

[2] Under the pre-BAPCPA version of section 503(b) applicable to this case, the Third Circuit had held that official committee members could also receive administrative expense priority treatment for reimbursement of out-of-pocket expenses constituting fees paid to attorneys. See First Merchants Acceptance Corp. v. J.C. Bradford & Co., 198 F.3d 394, 396 (3d Cir. 2000). This interpretation was superseded by the BAPCPA's amendment of subparagraph (b)(4) to expressly clarify that it does not apply to creditors specified in subparagraph (b)(3)(F). The First Merchants decision applied to a reimbursement of the out-of-pocket expenses of a committee member who had actually paid an attorney; it did not apply to compensation for hours spent on the case by the committee member itself.

This provision only provides for compensation for services rendered by the "attorney of" a creditor; it does not provide for the hourly compensation for services rendered by the creditor himself. Indeed, a creditor must actually have paid an attorney before he can obtain a subparagraph (b)(4) claim, as the Third Circuit "do[es] not read subsection (b)(4) to authorize a payment to a creditor in excess of the amount he or she was required to pay for those services." See Lebron, 27 F.3d at 947 n.5. In addition, subparagraph (4) only applies to attorney services rendered for a creditor who is himself entitled to administrative expense priority under subparagraph (b)(3); attorney services rendered for a creditor who does not meet the subparagraph (b)(3) requirements cannot receive priority treatment under subparagraph (b)(4). See Xifaras v. Morad (In re Morad), 328 B.R. 264, 269 (B.A.P. 1st Cir. 2005).

II. Statement of Facts

A. Background

Summit Metals, Inc. ("Summit") filed a petition for relief under chapter 11 of title 11 of the United States Code ("Bankruptcy Code") on December 30, 1998. D.I. 1.[3] Richard E. Gray ("Gray") is Summit's controlling shareholder and sole director. D.I. 320.

On March 4, 1999, the United States Trustee appointed an official committee of unsecured creditors ("Committee") under 11 U.S.C. § 1102(a). D.I. 37. The Committee's chairman, Ambrose R. Richardson, III ("Richardson"), was a creditor because of an indemnification claim for fees and expenses incurred in defending against litigation that implicated his actions as a former officer of Summit's predecessor, The Chariot Group, Inc. ("Chariot").[4] D.I. 599 (Transcript of April 4, 2006, Hearing ("Apr. Tr.") 130:16-21).

B. Summit Ligation Against Richardson

On May 3, 1999, Summit sued Richardson in bankruptcy court to recover, as an alleged preferential transfer, a pre-petition payment made on Richardson's indemnification claim. D.I. 82; D.I. 599 (Apr. Tr. 102:6-13; 143:5-144:4; 145:16-19). This adversary proceeding continued for several years, during which time Richardson, in defense of the action against him, conducted discovery regarding Summit and related entities. See Docket for Adv. Pro. No, 99-126. The parties ultimately agreed to resolve the adversary proceeding by an agreed stipulation of dismissal dated January 31, 2005, in which counsel to Richardson and counsel to the chapter 11 trustee in Summit's bankruptcy case[5] stipulated that "th[e] action is hereby dismissed, each party to bear its own fees and costs." See Adv. Pro. No. 99-126, D.I. 44 (emphasis added).

In addition, on August 3, 1999, Summit filed a RICO action against Richardson (among others). D.I. 133. This adversary proceeding was dismissed after only 10 days. Adv. Pro. No. 99-257 D.I. 1 (complaint), 3 (dismissal order).

[5] On September 13, 2004, the bankruptcy court entered an order granting the United States Trustee's motion for the appointment of a chapter 11 trustee, which was grounded in part on Gray's self-dealing and gross mismanagement of Summit. D.I. 329 (motion), 334 (order). The United States Trustee subsequently appointed Francis A. Monaco to serve as chapter 11 trustee. D.I. 338, 343.

C. Committee Litigation Against Gray

The Committee submitted an application under 11 U.S.C. § 1103(a) to employ Silverman, Harnes, Harnes, Prussin & Keller as special counsel on August 20, 1999; an order authorizing the employment was entered on August 27, 1999. D.I. 148, 155. A partner in that firm, H. Adam Prussin ("Prussin"),[6] had represented shareholders in pre-petition litigation in New York State in which it was alleged that Gray had looted Chariot for his own benefit. D.I. 599 (Apr. Tr. at 187:5-24.); see also Appellant's Appendix at A56-A71.

On September 21, 1999, the bankruptcy court entered an order authorizing the Committee to prosecute actions of Summit's estate against Gray and Gray-related entities. D.I. 168. Thereafter, on October 29, 1999, the Committee filed a complaint on behalf of Summit to recover property from Gray and several of his affiliated entities including Riverside Millwork Company, Inc. ("Rivco") and Jenkins Manufacturing, Inc. ("Jenkins"). D.I. 172. The complaint alleged that Gray breached his fiduciary duties owed to Summit and Chariot by engaging in unfair and fraudulent self-dealing transactions, including: (i) looting Chariot from 1991 to 1995; (ii) transferring Chariot's assets to Energy Savings Products ("ESP"); (iii) merging Chariot into Summit, and (iv) using ESP's money to acquire Rivco and Jenkins. Id.

On August 6, 2004, the Honorable Kent Jordan, United States District Judge,[7] issued post-trial findings of fact and conclusions of law in which he awarded a $48 million judgment in favor of Summit and directed Gray and his affiliated entities to transfer to Summit their interests in Rivco and Jenkins.[8] D.I. 320, Ex. A; District Court D.I. 221-22. Summit's chapter 11 trustee later sold Rivco's assets for over $9 million and Jenkins' assets for $6.7 million. D.I. 538, 562.

D. ESP Litigation Against Committee and Richardson in Tennessee

On October 13, 2000, an involuntary petition under chapter 11 of the Bankruptcy Code was filed against ESP in the Middle District of Tennessee. M.D. Tenn. Bankr. Case No. 00-09273, D.I.1. ESP then filed a complaint against the Committee, its counsel, and Richardson personally, in which it sought to stay the adversary proceeding pending in Delaware against Gray and Gray-related entities as well as monetary damages against the defendants and punitive damages against Richardson. See Docket for M.D. Tenn Bankr. Case No. 00-09273, D. I. 149. The ESP adversary proceeding was closed on April 29, 2005, after over three years of inactivity. See Docket for M.D. Tenn Adv. Pro. No. 01-00676.

E. Richardson's Application for Administrative Expense Priority Treatment

On February 15, 2005, Richardson filed his initial application ("Initial Application") under 11 U.S.C. §§ 507(a)(1) and 503(b) seeking the allowance of fees and expenses totaling $877,752.59[9] as an administrative expense. D.I. 403. The chapter 11 trustee and United States Trustee both objected to the Initial Application. D.I. 421, 427.

[8] Judge Jordan's decision is reported at 2004 WL 1812700.

[9] As a point of comparison, special counsel to the Committee received $1 million in fees and expenses, and counsel for the Committee received $770,300.25 in fees and $73,757.01 in expenses and. D.I. 580 (special counsel), 797 (counsel).

Thereafter, on March 13, 2006, Richardson filed an amended application ("Amended Application") reducing his total request to $869,631.50 and citing Sections 503(b)(1)(A), 503(b)(3)(B), (C), (D), and (F), and 503(b)(4) for legal authority. D.I. 587. In his Amended Application, Richardson provided a "Quantitative Summary of Claims" that divided his request into thirteen discrete tasks. Id.

Richardson filed a supplement to his Amended Application on April 3, 2006 ("Supplemental Application"), in which he provided an additional "Quantitative Summary of Claims II" that divided his request among the statutory provisions under which he sought administrative expense priority treatment.[10] D.I. 591. In his Supplemental Application, Richardson removed Section 503(b)(3)(B) as legal authority for his request, but he increased his total claim to $876,748.67. Id. Of the amount requested, a total of $768,921.71 was in the form of "fees" calculated by taking the number of hours worked by Richardson or an associate of his law firm and multiplying them by the corresponding hourly rate ($250 to $275 for Richardson). Id. (attached invoices). The remaining $107,826.96 was classified as "Expenses." Id.

Richardson's Amended Application seeks administrative expense priority treatment for services such as the following:

- defending against post-petition litigation brought against Richardson by Summit and ESP, on the theory that Summit is required to indemnify Richardson for all costs attendant to all litigation with Gray-related entities

[10] The division is as follows: $561,380.81 in fees and $81,816.65 under a combination of sections 503(b)(1)(A), (b)(3)(D), and (b)(4); $118,614.59 in fees and $23,638.17 in expenses under a combination of sections 503(b)(3)(D) and (b)(4); $57,615.06 in fees and $541.55 in expenses under section 503(b)(1)(A) only; $19,864.58 in fees and $1,827.59 in expenses under a combination of sections 503(b)(3)(C), (b)(3)(D), and (b)(4); and $11,466.67 in fees and $3.00 in expenses under section 503(b)(3)(C) only. D.I. 591.

(including the cost of post-petition efforts to collect his pre-petition indemnification claim);

- allegedly laying the factual and legal groundwork for virtually every asset collected during Summit's bankruptcy case, as well as other cases in other jurisdictions;
- taking actions in other jurisdictions that, as a matter of conjecture, might possibly have staved off actions adverse to Summit;
- taking measures in other jurisdictions that, while unsuccessful, nonetheless "did sow seeds of distrust against Gray"; and
- providing information that led to Gray's incarceration, in Missouri, for bankruptcy and tax fraud in a Missouri bankruptcy case.[11]

In addition, Richardson alleged that if he had not drafted pleadings, reviewed evidence, and formulated theories and strategies "there would have been no possibility of recover [sic] for himself or for the Estate." D.I. 587 at 7. Richardson also stated that his services in allegedly creating the Committee were vital because, without the results obtained by the Committee, "Richardson could not have recovered the indemnification due to him." Id. at 9.

On the other hand, Richardson acknowledged that Prussin "was active in this case," and that he and Prussin "worked closely" on the proceedings in which Gray was found to be in contempt of a pre-petition preliminary injunction obtained in New York state court by shareholders Prussin represented. Id. at 13 Indeed, Richardson acknowledged that "[t]he in court work was done by Prussin" in obtaining the preliminary injunction which, according to Richardson, laid the groundwork for all of the assets subsequently brought into Summit's estate. Id. at 19.

[11] Gray was incarcerated for fraud committed in the bankruptcy case of HomeStar Industries, Case No. 97-51831, which was filed in the District of Missouri on December 2, 1997.

With regard to the criminal proceedings in Missouri, Richardson stated that he provided authorities with "extensive background" and "the overall big picture," and the benefit derived from the incarceration was "the collapse of [Gray's] house of cards." Id. at 27.

In support of Richardson's claims connecting his services in this and other cases to great results in this case, the Amended Application supplied time records indicating that he put in the time – but provided no additional evidence to connect the time spent to the alleged resulting benefit to the estate. Id.

The United States Trustee, chapter 11 trustee, and Committee objected to the Amended Application arguing that (i) Richardson's efforts were duplicative of other parties' services, (ii) Richardson's section 503(b)(1)(A) claim failed because his fees and expenses did not arise from a post-petition transaction with the Debtor or provide an actual benefit to the estate; (iii) Richardson's section 503(b)(3)(C) claim failed because the criminal matters in which he assisted do not relate to the Debtor's case, business, or property; (iv) Richardson's section 503(b)(3)(D) claim failed because he did not make a substantial contribution to the Debtor's estate or creditors; and (v) Richardson could not recover his fees under section 503(b)(4) because the mere fact that he is an attorney does not entitle him to recover professional fees as he was not employed by an entity entitled to recover under subsection 503(b)(3). D.I. 421, 427.

F. Trial

The hearing on Richardson's administrative expense request spanned two days, March 16, 2006, and April 4, 2006, and featured testimony from both Richardson and Prussin. D.I. 589, 599. Relevant highlights of the testimony are as follows:

- Richardson admitted that, in the pre-petition New York shareholder lawsuits which he claimed laid the groundwork for most of the beneficial results obtained in this case, he was neither a plaintiff nor counsel to the plaintiffs. D.I. 599 (Apr. Tr. 91:9-14; 92:20-94:1;125:5-10). He also admitted that no assets were brought into Summit's bankruptcy estate through the pre-petition New York litigation. D.I. 589 (Transcript of March 16, 2006, Hearing ("Mar. Tr.") 19: 11-18); D.I. 599 (Apr. Tr. 126:1-4).

- Richardson admitted that his actions in defending against the short-lived RICO action provided no benefit to the estate. D.I. 599 (Apr. Tr. 151:3-9).

- Richardson admitted that the only benefit derived from Gray's incarceration in Missouri was "psychic gratification." D.I. 599 (Apr. Tr. 158:24-160:12).

- Richardson testified that James Kelly was the key witness in the adversary brought by the Committee against Gray, and that "it would have been impossible to go to trial" without him. D.I. 599 (Apr. Tr. 252:12).

- Prussin testified that Richardson did not participate in the trial in which Gray was originally jailed for contempt of the preliminary injunction entered in the New York shareholder litigation. D.I. 599 (Apr. Tr. at 188:24-189:15).

- Prussin testified that the majority of the facts and theories behind the various causes of action in the Committee's complaint against Gray were developed through the efforts of many different persons and were not solely the result of Richardson's exploits. D.I. 599 (Apr. Tr. 194-208).

On May 18, 2006, Richardson filed a post-hearing brief in which he stated, inter alia, that he was entitled to be indemnified by the Debtor and that his indemnification allowed him to collect his "costs of collection" under 11 U.S.C. § 503(b)(1)(A). D.I. 610 at 2. The United States Trustee filed a response, and the chapter 11 trustee and Committee filed a joint response.[12] D.I. 622, 620.

[12] The chapter 11 trustee and Committee sought leave to file a brief in excess of the page limits as the post-trial brief was joint in nature and addressed not only Richardson's Amended Application but that of Jepsco, another section 503(b) applicant.

G. Bankruptcy Court Decision

On December 4, 2007, the bankruptcy court issued an opinion and order.[13] D.I. 793, 795. The Bankruptcy Court found that Richardson failed to meet his burden of proof under section 503(b)(1)(A), (b)(3)(C), (b)(3)(D), and (b)(4). Id. The bankruptcy court denied all hourly compensation requested, and all but $2,533.62 of the out-of-pocket expenses requested.

On December 13, 2007, Richardson filed a timely notice of appeal. D.I. 809.

SUMMARY OF ARGUMENT

The only relief sought anywhere in Richardson's Memorandum of Law is "remand for rehearing with fair procedures." The procedures followed by the bankruptcy court were eminently fair, however. Richardson was allowed to amend and supplement his initial request for an administrative expense claim, he then had a two-day plenary hearing, and finally he was afforded to opportunity to submit a post-hearing brief. As Richardson received an eminently fair and thorough hearing, remand is not necessary, and the bankruptcy court's decision should be affirmed.

In addition, Richardson's request for hourly compensation was properly denied by the bankruptcy court. Neither section 503(b)(1)(A), 503(b)(3)(C), nor 503(b)(3)(D) allow administrative expense priority treatment for a creditor's time spent. In addition, section 503(b)(4) only applies to an attorney employed by a creditor, and not the creditor itself – and it only applies if the creditor may obtain administrative expense priority treatment under section 503(b).

[13] The Bankruptcy Court's decision is reported at 379 B.R. 40.

Furthermore, the bankruptcy court properly denied Richardson's request for administrative expense treatment of certain expenses pursuant to section 503(b)(1)(A), 503 (b)(3)(C), and 503(b)(3)(D). Richardson was not able to carry his burden of proving that he actually rendered services, that those services benefitted the estate, and that he could prove a causal connection between his services and the benefit. As Richardson could not carry the heavy burden attendant to section 503(b) claims, the bankruptcy court's denial of his request was not clearly erroneous, and should be affirmed.

ARGUMENT

I. The Procedures Followed by the Bankruptcy Court Were Fair, So Remand is Not Necessary

Federal Rule of Bankruptcy Procedure 8010(a)(1)(F) requires an appellant's brief to contain a conclusion "stating the precise relief sought." The only relief requested in the conclusion of Richardson's Memorandum of Law (or elsewhere, for that matter) is the request, at page 35, that "[t]he appropriate relief would be a remand for rehearing with fair procedures." As the conclusion and the paragraph immediately preceding it contain the only suggestion in Richardson's Memorandum of Law of procedural infirmity, it is difficult to discern precisely what he is complaining about. It would appear that Richardson thinks this matter should be remanded for further proceedings because he was not afforded the opportunity to file a reply to the responses filed to his post-hearing brief. See Richardson Memorandum of Law at 1, 35.

The only procedural requirement contained in section 503(b) is that administrative expense requests be subject to "notice and a hearing." Under 11 U.S.C. § 102(1)(A), "after notice and a hearing" means "such notice as is appropriate in the particular circumstances, and such opportunity for a hearing as is appropriate in the particular circumstances."

In this case, Richardson filed his Initial Application in February 2005 and the hearing did not take place until March and April of 2006, so there are presumably no notice issues. D.I. 403, 589, 599. As for the adequacy of the hearing his request received, Richardson filed not only his Initial Application, but also an Amended Application and a Supplement Application. He then received a plenary hearing with two full days of testimony, during which he not only testified but also presented documentary evidence that had not been provided with his application. Then, after the hearing, he was allowed to file an extensive post-hearing brief. Far from being "unfair" to Richardson, the bankruptcy court went out of its way to provide him with the opportunity to carry his burden of proof.

It is difficult to imagine how much more "fair" the proceedings would have been had Richardson been allowed to file a post-hearing reply brief. In addition, nothing in the record below remotely supports Richardson's allegations that the bankruptcy court was "misled" (page 18 of Richardson's Memorandum of Law), suffered from a "fundamental misconception" (page 19), was "unfamiliar with Judge Jordan's findings" (page 23), did not read Richardson's document submission (page 34), had a "predisposition that makes a fair hearing impossible" (page 34), had "fundamental misconceptions of the underlying facts and proceedings [that] taint the entire analysis" (page 34-35), or was "confused about . . . factual matters that were viewed in a distorted context" (page 35). Contrary to his belief that the bankruptcy court was either duped, predisposed, or grossly negligent, the record shows that Richardson received a thorough and fair hearing on his request during which all of his evidence and arguments were considered – he simply failed to carry his burden of proof, and he does not like the result. See Bankruptcy Court Decision at 23, 25, 27, 31, 37, 38, 39, 40. Given the extensive hearing Richardson has already received, there is no need for a remand that would only provide Richardson with yet another opportunity to attempt to carry his burden of proof.

As there is no need for a remand on this record, Richardson's request for remand should be denied. As Richardson's Memorandum of Law requests no relief other than remand, the bankruptcy court's decision should be affirmed.

II. The Bankruptcy Court Properly Denied Richardson's Request for Hourly Fees

The bulk of Richardson's administrative expense request consists of $768,921.71 in compensation for hourly time spent by Richardson and employees of his law firm in various matters attendant to this and other cases. As (i) sections 503(b)(1)(A) and (b)(3) do not allow administrative expense priority treatment to requests for compensation for services rendered, and (ii) section 503(b)(4) only allows administrative expense priority treatment to compensation for services rendered by an attorney employed by a creditor (but not to the creditor himself), the bankruptcy court did not err in denying Richardson's request to be paid for his time spent on this and other cases.

A. Section 503(b)(1)(A) Does Not Allow Administrative Expense Priority For Services Rendered

Of his total request, Richardson seeks to have hourly time valued at $643,197.46 afforded administrative expense priority treatment under section 503(b)(1)(A), either under that provision alone or "bootstrapped" with other provisions of section 503(b).[14] Under section 503(b)(1)(A), a

[14] It is inappropriate to "bootstrap" a request by seeking administrative expense treatment under myriad provisions of section 503(b) in the hope that if the request is denied under one party may obtain administrative expense priority treatment for his attorney fees only if he can carry what the Third Circuit has called "the heavy burden of demonstrating that the costs and fees for which [he] seeks payment provided an actual benefit to the estate and that such costs and expenses were necessary to preserve the value of estate assets." See Calpine Corp. v. O'Brien Environmental Energy, Inc. (In re O'Brien Environmental Energy, Inc.), 181 F.3d at 533.

As an initial matter, Richardson cannot prove that his hourly time spent is an "actual" cost or expense. He has not gone "out of pocket" to pay an attorney to provide these services; instead, he has rendered them himself. What he seeks to recover is not the reimbursement of an "actual" expense capable of being objectively proven, but the payment of a theoretical "opportunity cost" to which he has affixed a value. This is not the kind of "cost and expense" for which section 503(b)(1)(A) is intended.

Unlike other provisions of section 503(b), section 503(b)(1)(A) makes no mention of "compensation." Compare 11 U.S.C. § 503(b)(2), (4), & (5). Thus, applicants cannot obtain a section 503(b)(1)(A) claim in the amount of compensation for their services rendered. If Congress had so intended, it would have written "compensation" into subparagraph (b)(1)(A) like it did into other subparagraphs of section 503(b). Thus, subparagraph (b)(1)(A) only allows for reimbursement of the claimant's out-of-pocket "costs and expenses," but not for the hourly time spent by the claimant.

Even if he were entitled to request section 503(b)(1)(A) administrative expense priority treatment for services rendered, to carry his burden Richardson must do more than show that he provision it may be granted under another. Cf. F/S Airlease II, Inc. v. Simon, 844 F.2d 99, 108-09 (3d Cir. 1988), cert. denied, 488 U.S. 852 (1988) (professional may not use § 503(b)(1)(A) when he cannot meet requirement for § 503(b)(2) claim).

spent time on a matter in which the estate wound up with a good result; he must prove that his services were necessary to obtain the result – essentially, that he alone was the "catalyst" for the result. O'Brien, 181 F.3d at 533 (participation must be "necessary to accord the estate an actual benefit"), 537 (applicant must show not just benefit, but that he was the catalyst for benefit). In reviewing the denial of a section 503(b)(1)(A) request on appeal, this Court must "consider whether the record evidence supports the Bankruptcy Court's implicit conclusion that awarding [the requested] fees was not necessary to preserve the value of [the] estate." Id. at 536.

The record indicates that on most of the significant actions taken by Richardson, Prussin and others were involved, at least enough that Richardson cannot prove that he is the catalyst for the benefits received by the estate. D.I. 599 (Apr. Tr. 91:9-14, 92:20-94:1, 125:5-10). For example, Prussin testified that he was a principal draftsman of the Committee's complaint against Gray. D.I. 599 (Apr. Tr. 199:25, 200:1-8). In addition, matters filed in other courts were so attenuated that Richardson was not able to prove that they produced a demonstrable asset to the estate. D.I. (Apr. Tr. 151:3-9). As a result, even if compensation for services rendered was available under section 503(b)(1)(A), Richardson did make the necessary showing.

On the record before the bankruptcy court, it was not clear error to deny Richardson's request for section 503(b)(1)(A) administrative expense priority treatment for his hourly time spent. As a result, the bankruptcy court's decision should be affirmed.

B. Section 503(b)(3)

Of his total request, Richardson seeks to have hourly time valued at $711,326.65 afforded administrative expense priority treatment under section 503(b)(3)(C) and (D), either under those provisions alone or "bootstrapped" with other provisions of section 503(b). Due to the existence of section 503(b)(4), however, no hourly charges for legal services may ever be compensated under section 503(b)(3). The statutory construct expressly requires creditors to first prove that their actual out-of-pocket expenses, "other than compensation and reimbursement specified in [section 503(b)(4)]," may be afforded administrative expense priority under section 503(b)(3); only if they first make that showing can they seek administrative expense priority treatment for the fees incurred by their attorney. See In re Worldwide Direct, Inc., 334 B.R. at 120.

In addition, section 503(b)(3) only allows administrative expense priority treatment for "actual" expenses. As Richardson's hourly time spent is not an actual out-of-pocket expense, it is not subject to administrative expense priority treatment under section 503(b)(3).

Also, section 503(b)(3) requires proof that the expenses were "necessary" to achieve a benefit to the estate. To carry his burden, Richardson needed to not only produce time records and his own glowing account of his deeds – he needed to provide "corroborating testimony from a disinterested party." See Derivative Plaintiffs v. Columbia Gas Sys. (In re Columbia Gas Sys.), 2000 WL 1456298 (D. Del. Sept. 20, 2000). As he did not provide disinterested corroborating evidence, Richardson did not make the requisite showing to carry his burden of proof. D.I. 599 (Apr. Tr. 252:1-12).

Furthermore, section 503(b)(3)(C) applies only to criminal prosecution "relating to the case or to the business or property of the debtor." The fact that the prosecution was of Summit's principal, who may or may not have looted Summit, means that there is some question whether the prosecution was too attenuated. In any event, however, Richardson did not supply sufficient information to enable the bankruptcy court to determine that the prosecution implicated either Summit, its business, or its assets. D.I. 589 (Mar. Tr. 30:15-25).

As a result, the bankruptcy court's denial of Richardson's request to have his hourly services afforded administrative expense priority treatment under sections 503(b)(3)(C) and (D) was not erroneous, and the bankruptcy court's decision should be affirmed.

C. Section 503(b)(4)

Of his total request, Richardson seeks to have hourly time valued at $699,859.98 afforded administrative expense priority treatment under section 503(b)(4), either under that provision alone or "bootstrapped" with other provisions of section 503(b).

Section 503(b)(4) provides for the administrative expense priority treatment of the legal fees of the attorney for a creditor whose expenses are entitled to section 503(b)(3) priority treatment. Thus, unless a creditor has first received a section 503(b)(3) administrative expense, he cannot obtain section 503(b)(4) priority for his legal fees.

As has been addressed previously, Richardson was faced with a steep burden under section 503(b)(3)(D) – he had to rebut the presumption that everything he did in this case was done to benefit his own self-interest, such that every benefit that resulted was incidental and not a "substantial contribution." See Lebron v. Mechem Financial Inc., 27 F.3d at 944. Richardson was unable to rebut that presumption, so his section 503(b)(3)(D) request was properly denied. As a result, he cannot obtain section 503(b)(4) administrative expense treatment for his attorney fees, regardless of whether he actually paid for them or rendered them pro se.

Even if section 503(b)(4) was not inexorably linked to section 503(b)(3), Richardson would still not be entitled to receive administrative expense treatment for the pro se legal fees he alleges to have racked up in this case. The Third Circuit has noted that it reads section 503(b)(4) as only allowing a creditor to obtain an administrative expense claim equal to the amount he "was required to pay for [legal] services." Lebron, 27 F.3d at 947 n.5. As a result, Richardson could only recover attorney fees if he could prove that he had to pay for them, and then he would only receive the actual amount he had to pay. As he has not paid an attorney, but instead rendered the services himself, Richardson cannot receive administrative expense treatment under section 503(b)(4).

In any event, section 503(b)(4) applies to the attorney "of" a creditor, not the creditor himself (even if the creditor just so happens to be an attorney). As a result, even an attorney-creditor cannot obtain compensation for his own legal services under section 503(b)(4). See, e.g., In re Patriot Aviation Services, Inc., ___ B.R. ___, 2008 WL 506260 (Bankr. S.D. Fla. Feb. 21, 2008); In re Gimelson, 2004 WL 2713059 * 22 (E.D. Pa. Nov. 23, 2004); In re Pappas, 277 B.R. 171, 177-78 (Bankr. E.D.N.Y. 2002).[15]

Richardson argues at page 30-31 of his Memorandum of Law that he was awarded pro se legal fees in his indemnification, and so should be awarded his pro se legal fees here. This argument is unavailing, however. The Delaware indemnification law (pursuant to which Richardson obtained his claim) and the Bankruptcy Code are different statutes, with different purposes. It may very well be good public policy to award pro se legal fees in indemnification actions, but the overarching policy in bankruptcy cases is to limit the amount of administrative claims. See Burlington, 853 F.2d at 706 ("[K]eeping costs to a minimum serves the overwhelming concern of the Code: Preservation of the estate."). As section 503(b) is to be applied strictly, and Richardson's desired result would require a lax application, the bankruptcy court's denial of Richardson's pro se counsel fees were not clearly erroneous.

As a result, the bankruptcy court's denial of Richardson's request for his hourly time spent in this and other cases to be treated as legal fees under section 503(b)(4) was not erroneous, and should be affirmed.

III. The Bankruptcy Court's Denial of Richardson's Out-of-Pocket Expenses Was Not Clearly Erroneous

A. Denial of Richardson's Section 503(b)(1)(A) Request Was Not Clearly Erroneous

The bulk of Richardson's section 503(b)(1)(A) request is related to his attempts to collect the pre-petition indemnification award of $46,331.98 that he received after successfully defending himself in a suit by Gray alleging a violation of Richardson's fiduciary duty as an officer of Chariot, Summit's predecessor. See Gray v. Richardson, 251 A.D.2d 268, 675 N.Y.S.2d 57 (1st Dept. 1998), leave to appeal denied, 92 N.Y.2d 815, 706 N.E. 2d 747, 683 N.Y.S. 2d 759 (1998). Richardson seeks administrative expense priority for expenses he incurred in the Summit bankruptcy case, the RICO and preference actions brought against him by Summit, and several other cases in other venues in which he attempted to bring assets into the estate to increase the likelihood that he would collect on his indemnification award. See Bankruptcy Court Decision at 19. The bankruptcy court denied Richardson's entire indemnification-related request because, even if Richardson is entitled to an indemnification claim for his collection efforts, the claim would still not be entitled to section 503(b)(1)(A) administrative expense priority treatment because it would be a pre-petition claim. See Bankruptcy Court Decision at 20-21.

Under section 503(b)(1)(A), an applicant must show that the claim "arise[s] from a transaction with the debtor in possession," rather than a pre-petition transaction with the debtor (or its predecessor). See O'Brien, 181 F.3d at 532. Although the Richardson Memorandum of Law states at page 26 that each post-petition contested matter with Summit was a new post-petition "transaction," the actual transaction that gave rise to Richardson having any indemnification claim at all was his pre-petition employment transaction with Chariot, Summit's predecessor. D.I. 599 (Apr. Tr. 99:9-101:19). As the bankruptcy court correctly held, indemnification claim grounded on a claimant's pre-petition employment status is a form of pre-petition compensation, and thus is part of the claimant's pre-petition unsecured claim rather than a post-petition administrative claim subject to section 503(b)(1)(A) priority. See, e.g., In re Overland Park Fin. Corp., 240 B.R. 402, 405-06 (Bankr. D. Kan. 1999); In re Highland Group, Inc., 136 B.R. 475, 481 (Bankr. N.D. Ohio 1992). As a result, the bankruptcy court's denial of Richardson's request for administrative expense treatment for his indemnification claim was not clearly erroneous.

Richardson's analogy at page 27 and 28 of his Memorandum of Law to the Supreme Court's decision in Reading Co. v. Brown and similar cases is unavailing. In those cases, an administrative expense claim was awarded because an estate fiduciary was affirmatively found to have engaged in wrongdoing that harmed the applicant. See, e.g., Reading Co. v. Brown, 391 U.S. 471, 485 (1968) ("We hold that damages resulting from the negligence of a receiver acting within the scope of his authority as receiver gives rise to 'actual and necessary costs' of a Chapter XI arrangement."); Spunt v. Charlesbank Laundry, Inc. (In re Charlesbank Laundry, Inc.), 755 F.2d 200, 202 (1st Cir. 1985) (harm caused by debtor's violation of injunction during proceedings for nuisance damages afforded administrative expense priority). In the instant case, while Richardson has certainly accused Gray and his entities (including Summit) of causing him harm, there has been no affirmative determination that Richardson is owed any damages for any post-petition action taken against him by Summit. See Bankruptcy Court Decision at 19 (Richardson's reliance on Reading "is misplaced, as he has not accused [Summit] of committing a tort."). Indeed, the only actions taken by Summit against Richardson were a short-lived RICO claim that caused Richardson no harm and a preference action that, in the stipulation that dismissed the adversary proceeding, expressly stated that the parties would each pay their own costs. Adv. Pro. 99-126 D.I. 44. And of course, actions taken by any entity other than Summit could never justify a Reading administrative expense in Summit's case, barring a finding that Summit itself had engaged in wrongdoing. Without an affirmative finding of wrongdoing by Summit that caused Richardson to incur damages, there is simply no basis for a Reading administrative expense claim in this case.

The remainder of Richardson's section 503(b)(1)(A) claim is comprised of expenses incurred on various Committee matters that, according to Richardson, enabled the estate to recover assets. D.I. 610 at 2. Although Richardson's writings have continuously argued that his actions benefitted the estate, Richardson has not provided any separate evidence to corroborate the causal connection between his services and an actual specific benefit to the estate. Section 503(b)(1)(A) claims cannot simply be had for the asking; Richardson had the admittedly "heavy burden" of proving that his expenses were necessary to achieve an identifiable actual benefit to the estate, but he was unable to carry that burden, producing only unsupported conclusory statements but no real evidence. Given the broad discretion provided the bankruptcy court in this area, and especially given the deference accorded the bankruptcy court's ability to observe the witnesses, it cannot be said that the bankruptcy court's denial of Richardson's section 503(b)(1)(A) claim was clearly erroneous on the record before it. As a result, the bankruptcy court's decision should be affirmed.

B. Denial of Richardson's Section 503(b)(3)(D) Request Was Not Clearly Erroneous

Most of the expenses for which Richardson seeks section 503(b)(3)(D) administrative expense priority treatment were generated during Richardson's defense against litigation filed against him. Although Richardson's writings extol the benefits of his actions in these matters, the fact remains that at virtually every turn in this case Richardson was attempting to either defend himself against attack or collect on his indemnification claim.

The Third Circuit presumes that creditors are acting on their own behalf, unless they can rebut the presumption with proof that their actions were "designed to benefit others." Lebron, 27 F.3d at 946. The record below contained ample evidence that Richardson's actions were borne of an intent to benefit himself, and no evidence of altruistic intent. As a result, he did not rebut the presumption of self-interest, so any benefit to the estate from his actions must be deemed to be purely incidental. D.I. 599 (Apr. Tr. 151:3-9, 164:23-165:2, 132:3-14, 144:13-17).

In addition, many of Richardson's actions did not produce a demonstrable benefit to the estate. For example, on pages 25-26 of his Memorandum of Law Richardson posits a tenuous daisy chain linking (i) the pre-petition injunction against Gray in the New York shareholder litigation, (ii) Richardson's correspondence with the United States Trustee in Tennessee, (iii) Gray's federal indictment in Missouri, and (iv) the granting of a motion over Richardson's objection in a Tennessee bankruptcy court – all of which somehow, by Richardson's reckoning, led to a benefit to the Summit estate caused solely by Richardson. If this is a benefit, it is exactly the kind of benefit that the Third Circuit deems insufficient for section 503(b)(3)(D) purposes.

In order to carry his burden of proof under section 503(b)(3)(D), Richardson was required to introduce "'[s]omething more than mere conclusory, self-serving statements regarding [his] involvement in [the] case.'" See Derivative Plaintiffs v. Columbia Gas Sys. (In re Columbia Gas Sys), 2000 WL 1456298 (D. Del. Sept, 20, 2000) (quoting In re Buckhead Am. Corp., 161 B.R. 11, 15 (Bankr. D. Del. 1993). Indeed, he should have introduced "'[c]orroborating testimony [from] a disinterested party attesting to [his] instrumental acts.'" Id. (quoting In re U.S. Lines, Inc., 103 B.R. 427, 430 (Bankr. S.D.N.Y. 1989)). But he introduced no such evidence, relying instead on his time records and glowing narratives. Given the evidence that Prussin, as special counsel to the Committee, was intimately involved in most of the actions that produced value to the Summit estate, Richardson's failure to produce corroborating evidence is fatal to his section 503(b)(3)(D) request.

Even when Richardson was involved in a matter that produced a benefit to the estate – such as the Committee's complaint against Gray, which brought in over $48 million – he has failed to prove that his services were the necessary bridge to the benefit. While Richardson's writings certainly trumpet his services as the font from which all benefits sprung, the record placed before the bankruptcy court was devoid of any corroborating evidence to that effect, and no one – not the court, not the United States Trustee, not the chapter 11 trustee, and not the Committee – agreed with him on that point. All Richardson has shown is that he filed documents, responded to documents, and corresponded with people in this and other cases – but he has not proven the causal connection between these actions and the benefit received by the estate. Richardson has apparently fallen victim to the logical fallacy of "post hoc, ergo propter hoc" – essentially, "after this, therefore because of this." By focusing solely on his early actions and the ultimate result, he failed to prove the causal connection between his services and the result. See Bankruptcy Court Decision at 30 (Richardson provided no additional evidence to support assertions that he developed facts and theories regarding New York preliminary injunction and contempt proceedings against Gray), 32 (Richardson did not sow causal connection between his actions and Gray incarceration in Missouri), 33 (Richardson merely argues with no proof regarding alleged substantial contribution form actions in Tennessee proceedings).

As Richardson did not carry his burden of proof, the bankruptcy court's denial of his section 503(b)(3)(D) claim was not clear error. Thus, the bankruptcy court's decision should be affirmed.

C. Denial of Richardson's Section 503(b)(3)(C) Request Was Not Clearly Erroneous

Richardson's request for administrative expense treatment under section 503(b)(3)(C) for his expenses attendant to Gray's prosecution for bankruptcy and tax fraud in Missouri is not as large as his other requests, but it suffers from most of the same failings. As the bankruptcy court stated at page 26 of its decision, although a request under section 503(b)(3)(C) need not show a benefit to the estate, Richardson still must show a direct relationship between his expenses and Gray's prosecution, and he must show a connection between Gray's prosecution and Summit's bankruptcy case, business, or property. As the record below did not make these connections, the bankruptcy court properly denied Richardson's request. D.I. (Apr. Tr. 83:6-25, 84:1-5, 158:24-159:25).

The record only reflects that Richardson corresponded with the authorities; there is no indication from the FBI, IRS, or other governmental authorities that Richardson's information was instrumental in prosecuting Gray. Indeed, as the bankruptcy court stated at page 27 of its decision, it is not clear how Gray's criminal proceeding, or even the underlying Missouri bankruptcy case, had anything more than a tangential relation to Summit's case, property, or business. It is not enough to say that any criminal proceeding against Summit's principal, who looted Summit, is related to Summit's case, business, or property. Some quantum of proof was required, and none was provided by Richardson.

As Richardson failed to carry his burden of proof under section 503(b)(3)(C), the bankruptcy court's denial of his request was not clearly erroneous. Thus, the bankruptcy court's decision should be affirmed.

CONCLUSION

For these reasons, the Acting United States Trustee respectfully asks this Court to affirm the bankruptcy court's order.

STATEMENT OF JURISDICTION

The bankruptcy court had jurisdiction over this chapter 11 proceeding under 28 U.S.C. § 157(a). The district court had appellate jurisdiction over the bankruptcy court's final order under 28 U.S.C. § 158(a)(1). This appeal was timely filed on December 21, 2008. This Court has jurisdiction over the district court's final order dated October 7, 2008, under 28 U.S.C. §§ 158(d) and 1291.

STATEMENT OF THE ISSUE PRESENTED

Did the bankruptcy court err when it held that the appellant, Ambrose Richardson, was not entitled to compensation from the bankruptcy estate of Summit Metals, Inc. under section 503 of the United States Bankruptcy Code, where Richardson sought to be paid for his time and expenses litigating in his personal capacity in various proceedings against the principal shareholder of Summit and his related entities?

STATEMENT OF THE CASE

Around 1995, Ambrose Richardson, a director of The Chariot Group, Inc. ("Chariot"), caused the filing of a lawsuit in New York state court against Richard E. Gray, Chariot's controlling shareholder. Br. 6.[1] Gray counter-sued

Richardson, accusing him of violating his own fiduciary duties to Chariot. Id. These lawsuits began a protracted legal battle between Gray and Richardson, which has so far resulted in numerous lawsuits, claims, and criminal proceedings in multiple state and federal courts.

Since 1999, some of these legal battles have taken place within the chapter 11 bankruptcy case of Summit Metals, Inc. ("Summit"), a company into which Chariot merged. The present appeal involves Richardson's efforts to recoup the costs of his legal battle against Gray from the creditors and bankruptcy estate of Summit. In 2005, Richardson filed an application in the bankruptcy court for an award of $876,748.67 as an administrative expense. Under the provisions of the Bankruptcy Code, this expense, if allowed, would be required to be paid in full before any distribution could be made to Summit's unsecured creditors. See 11 U.S.C. §§ 503(b), 507(a). The greater part of this claim represents the alleged value of the personal time spent on Gray-related matters by Richardson, who is an attorney, despite the fact that the bankruptcy court never authorized Richardson to represent the Summit bankruptcy estate.

indicated as "B.D.I.[docket item number]." Citations to the electronic dockets and docket items in other cases or proceedings before the bankruptcy court below or other bankruptcy courts are indicated by specifying the court, case or proceeding number, and docket item number.

The bankruptcy court denied Richardson's claim, except for approximately $2,533.62 of expenses that Richardson had incurred in his capacity as a member of the Summit Creditors' Committee.[2] The district court subsequently affirmed the bankruptcy court's order. This appeal raises the questions of whether the bankruptcy court applied an incorrect legal standard, or made clearly erroneous findings of fact, in disallowing the balance of Richardson's administrative claim.

STATEMENT OF APPROPRIATE STANDARD OF APPELLATE REVIEW

This Court exercises the same review over the bankruptcy court's decision as did the district court. See Fellheimer, Eichen & Braverman P.C. v. Charter Technologies, Inc., 57 F.3d 1215, 1223 (3d Cir. 1995). As a result, this Court conducts a de novo review of the bankruptcy court's legal findings, but reviews the bankruptcy court's factual findings for clear error. Id. In particular, the bankruptcy court's findings of fact will not be set aside unless they are either "completely devoid of minimum evidentiary support displaying some hue of credibility or bear[ ] no rational relationship to the supportive evidentiary data."

[2] The bankruptcy court awarded Richardson compensation under section 503(b)(3)(F) of the Bankruptcy Code, which pertains to claims for reimbursement for out-of-pocket expenses incurred by a member of a creditors' committee in the course of their official duties. Richardson's section 503(b)(3)(F) fees are not at issue in this appeal.

Id.; see also Fed. R. Bankr. P. 8013 ("[F]indings of fact, whether based on oral or documentary evidence, shall not be set aside unless clearly erroneous, and due regard shall be given to the opportunity of the bankruptcy court to judge the credibility of the witnesses.").

STATUTORY FRAMEWORK

The United States Bankruptcy Code classifies certain expenses of the bankruptcy estate as "administrative expenses," which are paid in full before any distribution is made to unsecured creditors. See 11 U.S.C. §§ 503(b), 507.[3] In this circuit, the Bankruptcy Code's provisions authorizing payment of administrative expenses are interpreted narrowly in light of the Bankruptcy Code objective to "keep[ ] fees and administrative costs at a minimum so as to preserve as much of the estate as possible for creditors." Lebron v. Mechem Financial Inc., 27 F.3d 937, 944 (3d Cir. 1994).

Section 503(b) sets out a nonexclusive list of items that may be afforded administrative expense priority. In this case, Richardson bases his claim on subparagraphs (b)(1)(A), (b)(3)(C), (b)(3)(D), and (b)(4) of section 503. Br. 14,

Section 503(b)(1)(A) provides administrative expense priority treatment to "the actual, necessary costs and expenses of preserving the estate, including wages, salaries, or commissions for services rendered after the commencement of the case." Section 503(b)(3) provides administrative expense priority for "actual, necessary expenses" of the estate, other than professional fees. Under subparagraph (b)(3)(C), these expenses include the out-of-pocket expenses incurred by "a creditor in connection with the prosecution of a criminal offense relating to the case or to the business or property of the debtor." Subparagraph (b)(3)(D) provides administrative priority to expenses incurred by a creditor "in making a substantial contribution in a case under chapter 9 or 11[.]" Lastly, section 503(b)(4) provides administrative priority for "reasonable compensation for professional services rendered by an attorney or accountant of an entity whose expense is allowable under paragraph (3)[.]"

In the proceedings below, the United States Trustee was authorized to object to Richardson's administrative expense application by 11 U.S.C. §§ 503(b) and 307 and 28 U.S.C. § 586(a)(3). The United States Trustee Program is a unit of the Department of Justice charged by Congress to, among other things, appoint official committees of unsecured creditors in chapter 11 cases, appoint trustees in chapter 11 cases, and supervise the administration of chapter 11 cases. See 11 U.S.C. §§ 1102(a) & 1104(a), 28 U.S.C. § 586(a)(3). In addition, 11 U.S.C. § 307 enables the United States Trustee to raise and be heard on any issue in any chapter 11 case.

STATEMENT OF FACTS

I. Summit's Chapter 11 Bankruptcy Case

On December 30, 1998 Summit filed a petition for relief under chapter 11 of the Bankruptcy Code. B.D.I. 1. At the time of Summit's bankruptcy filing, Richardson was a creditor of Summit by virtue of a partially-uncollected indemnity judgment that Richardson had obtained against Gray and Summit (as successor-in-interest to Chariot) in state court. A678 (Transcript of April 4, 2006, Hearing ("Apr. Tr.") 102:18-22).

On March 4, 1999, pursuant to section 1102(a) of the Bankruptcy Code, the United States Trustee appointed an official committee of unsecured creditors in the Summit chapter 11 case (the "Committee"). B.D.I. 37. Richardson was elected chairman of the Committee, and has continued to serve as chairman at all times relevant to this appeal.

On September 13, 2004, the bankruptcy court ordered the appointment of a chapter 11 trustee to assume control of Summit. B.D.I. 334. Under sections 1104 and 1106 of the Bankruptcy Code, chapter 11 trustees are independent fiduciaries appointed to manage the chapter 11 debtor in the place of the debtor's prior management. Chapter 11 trustees may be appointed for cause, including mismanagement or misconduct by a debtor's current management. See 11 U.S.C. §§ 1104(a)(1), 1104(e), 1106. The United States Trustee subsequently appointed Francis A. Monaco to serve as chapter 11 trustee. B.D.I. 338, 343.

II. Litigation Involving Gray, Richardson, and Summit

Richardson's alleged administrative claims arise from the numerous lawsuits and collection actions which Gray and Richardson have litigated against one another, some (but not all) of which have also involved Summit as a party. Although there appear to be numerous other proceedings between Richardson and Gray that are not pertinent to this appeal, Richardson specifically bases his claim on five of these legal proceedings: the Chariot litigation pending in state court prior to the Summit bankruptcy; certain bankruptcy adversary proceedings filed by Gray, on behalf of Summit, against Richardson; a bankruptcy adversary proceeding filed against Gray by the Committee; the bankruptcy case of ESP, another company controlled by Gray; and various criminal proceedings against Gray.

A. State Court Derivative Litigation and Indemnity Judgment

In about 1995, Richardson caused the filing of a state court lawsuit against Gray on behalf of the shareholders of Chariot. A56. In response, Gray filed a complaint against Richardson for breaching his fiduciary duties as a director of Chariot. A61. In 1997, Richardson was granted summary judgment on Gray's claims against him. A84. As part of that judgment, the court also awarded Richardson indemnification under Chariot's bylaws. A86; see also Gray v. Richardson, 251 A.D.2d 268, 675 N.Y.S.2d 57 (1st Dept. 1998). This judgment was only partially paid prior to Summit's bankruptcy. Br. 6.

B. Bankruptcy Adversary Proceedings Against Richardson

On May 3, 1999, Summit, then still controlled by Gray, filed a complaint against Richardson in bankruptcy court, which sought to recover Summit's pre-petition partial payment of Richardson's indemnity judgment on the grounds that the payment was a preferential transfer voidable under section 547 of the Bankruptcy Code.[4] B.D.I. 82; A678, 719-21 (Apr. Tr. 102:6-13; 143:5-144:4; [4] Section 547of the Bankruptcy Code provides that, under certain circumstances, the debtor may sue to recover payments made to a creditor "on account of an 145:16-19). In 2005, after the appointment of the chapter 11 trustee, Richardson and Summit stipulated to the dismissal of the preferential transfer complaint, with each party agreeing to bear its own costs. See Del. Adv. Pro. No. 99-126, D.I. 44.

On August 3, 1999, Summit filed an action under the Racketeer Influenced and Corrupt Organizations Act, 18 U.S.C. § 1961 et seq. ("RICO") alleging that Richardson and others engaged in a scheme to defraud Summit's predecessor, Chariot. B.D.I. 133. On August 13, 1999, just ten days after it was filed, this action was dismissed. See Del. Adv. Pro. No. 99-257, D.I. 3.

C. Bankruptcy Adversary Proceeding Against Gray

On October 29, 1999, the Committee filed a complaint on behalf of Summit alleging that Gray had breached his fiduciary duties, engaged in self-dealing transactions, and otherwise misappropriated assets belonging to Chariot and Summit. A97. The factual basis for this lawsuit appears to have been similar to that of the New York derivative litigation. To represent its interests in this lawsuit, the Committee retained H. Adam Prussin, the same attorney who had earlier represented the plaintiffs in the New York litigation. B.D.I. 148, 155, 237. Richardson was not retained, and did not seek to be retained, as an attorney for the Committee or the estate. On August 6, 2004, the United States District Court for the District of Delaware granted Summit a $48 million judgment against Gray and directed Gray and his affiliates to return certain assets to Summit. A134, 175. Summit's chapter 11 trustee later sold those assets for an aggregate of $15.7 million. B.D.I. 538, 562.

D. ESP Bankruptcy Case

On October 13, 2000, an involuntary petition under chapter 11 of the Bankruptcy Code was filed against ESP, another company controlled by Gray, in the Middle District of Tennessee. M.D. Tenn. Bankr. Case No. 00-09273, D.I. 1. ESP then filed a complaint against the Summit Committee, its counsel, and Richardson personally, in which it sought to stay the adversary proceeding pending in Delaware against Gray and Gray-related entities as well as monetary damages against the defendants and punitive damages against Richardson. See Docket for M.D. Tenn Bankr. Case No. 00-09273, D.I. 149. The ESP adversary proceeding was closed on April 29, 2005, after over three years of inactivity. See Docket for M.D. Tenn Adv. Pro. No. 01-00676.

E. Criminal Proceedings

In 2001, Gray pled guilty to bankruptcy fraud and tax fraud relating to the bankruptcy case of HomeStar Industries ("HomeStar"), Case No. 97-51831, which was pending in the bankruptcy court for the Eastern District of Missouri. A7, A34, A159. The charges arose from Gray's misappropriation of HomeStar's insurance proceeds and providing false testimony during HomeStar's bankruptcy case. A29-30.

III. Richardson's Administrative Expense Claim

On February 15, 2005, Richardson filed his initial application under Bankruptcy Code sections 507(a)(1) and 503(b) seeking the allowance of fees and expenses totaling $877,752.59[5] as an administrative expense. B.D.I. 403.

Thereafter, on March 13, 2006, Richardson filed an amended application ("Amended Application") reducing his total request to $869,631.50, citing Bankruptcy Code sections 503(b)(1)(A), 503(b)(3)(B), (C), (D), and (F), and 503(b)(4) as the statutory basis for his application. A490.

Richardson filed a supplement to his Amended Application on April 3, 2006 ("Supplemental Application"), in which he removed section 503(b)(3)(B) as legal authority for his request, but he increased his total request to $876,748.67. A518. Of the amount requested, a total of $768,921.71 was in the form of “fees” calculated by taking the number of hours worked by Richardson or an associate of his law firm and multiplying them by the corresponding hourly rate ($250 to $275 for Richardson). Id. (attached invoices). The remaining $107,826.96 was classified as “Expenses.” Id.

[5] As a point of comparison, special counsel to the Committee received $1 million in fees and expenses, and counsel for the Committee received $770,300.25 in fees and $73,757.01 in expenses. B.D.I. 580 (special counsel), 797 (counsel).

Richardson’s Amended Application (A490-517) sought administrative expense priority treatment for, among other things:

- defending post-petition lawsuits brought against Richardson by Summit and ESP, on the theory that Summit is required to indemnify Richardson for all costs attendant to all litigation with Gray-related entities (including the cost of post-petition efforts to collect his pre-petition indemnification claim);
- allegedly laying the factual and legal groundwork for virtually every asset collected during Summit’s bankruptcy case, as well as in cases in other jurisdictions;
- taking actions in other jurisdictions that, as a matter of conjecture, might possibly have staved off actions adverse to Summit;
- taking measures in other jurisdictions that, while unsuccessful, nonetheless “did sow seeds of distrust against Gray”; and
- allegedly providing information that led to Gray’s incarceration, in Missouri, for bankruptcy and tax fraud in HomeStar’s Missouri bankruptcy case.

The United States Trustee, chapter 11 trustee, and the Committee each independently objected to the Amended Application on the grounds that (i) Richardson's efforts were duplicative of other parties' services, (ii) Richardson's section 503(b)(1)(A) request was improper because his fees and expenses did not arise from a post-petition transaction with Summit as debtor in possession and did not provide an actual benefit to the estate; (iii) Richardson's section 503(b)(3)(C) request was improper because the criminal matters in which he assisted do not relate to Summit's bankruptcy case, business, or property; (iv) Richardson's section 503(b)(3)(D) request was improper because he did not make a substantial contribution to Summit's bankruptcy estate or creditors; and (v) Richardson could not recover his fees under section 503(b)(4) because he was not employed by an entity entitled to recover under subsection 503(b)(3). B.D.I. 421, 427.

On May 18, 2006, Richardson filed a post-hearing brief in which he stated, among other things, that he was entitled to be indemnified by Summit and that his indemnification allowed him to collect his "costs of collection" under Bankruptcy Code section 503(b)(1)(A). B.D.I. 610 at 2. The United States Trustee filed a response, and the chapter 11 trustee and Committee filed a joint response. B.D.I. 622, 620.

IV. The Bankruptcy Court Decision

The bankruptcy court held evidentiary hearings on Richardson's administrative expense application on March 16, 2006, and April 4, 2006. A524, A577. On December 4, 2007, the bankruptcy court issued an opinion and order denying the majority of the fees and expenses sought by Richardson.[6] A4, A51. In pertinent part, the bankruptcy court found that, even assuming that Richardson had a right to recover his litigation and collection expenses pursuant to his indemnification agreement with Chariot (an issue the bankruptcy court did not reach), Richardson's claim was not entitled to administrative status in the Summit bankruptcy, because he failed to demonstrate that his indemnification claim arose from a transaction with Summit as debtor in possession. A24. The bankruptcy court further found that Richardson's legal fees and expenses incurred during the bankruptcy case were not compensable under section 503(b)(1)(A), because Richardson had not met his burden of demonstrating that those fees and expenses were necessary to preserve the value of estate assets. A26. Similarly, the bankruptcy court found that Richardson had not met his evidentiary burden with respect to his section 503(b)(3)(C) request, because he had not demonstrated that the criminal prosecution of Gray related to the business or property of Summit. A30.

[6] The bankruptcy court's decision is reported at 379 B.R. 40.

The bankruptcy court also found that Richardson had failed to prove any "substantial contribution" to the bankruptcy estate as a result of his various litigation activities against Gray, and was therefore ineligible to be compensated under section 503(b)(3)(D). A31-A43. In particular, based on the evidence and testimony before it, the bankruptcy court found that: (1) Richardson had provided no actual benefit to the estate through his litigation efforts; (2) to the extent that any of those proceedings did benefit the estate, such benefit was attributable to other professionals and not Richardson; (3) Richardson's primary motivation was to benefit himself, and not the Summit estate; and (4) many of Richardson's efforts were duplicative of those of the retained professionals in the Summit case. Id.

Lastly, the bankruptcy court denied Richardson's request for compensation under section 503(b)(4), on two grounds. First, the bankruptcy court found that by its plain terms, that section only authorized reimbursement to an attorney of a party who is eligible for compensation under section 503(b)(3), which Richardson was not. Second, the bankruptcy court alternatively held that section 503(b)(4) is inapplicable to attorneys, such as Richardson, who perform legal services on behalf on themselves. A27-A28.

Based on its findings of fact and legal conclusions, the Bankruptcy Court allowed Richardson an administrative expense of $ 2,533.65, representing certain incidental out-of-pocket expenses he had incurred while serving as a member of the Committee, and denied the remainder of his application. A2. On December 13, 2007, Richardson filed a timely notice of appeal of the bankruptcy court's order. A1.

V. The District Court Decision

On October 7, 2008, the district court entered an order affirming the bankruptcy court's decision, holding that the bankruptcy court's findings of fact and conclusions of law were not erroneous. Aiv. Among other conclusions, the district court found that Richardson had been afforded a "full and fair opportunity" to present his factual theories to the bankruptcy court, and that Richardson had failed to demonstrate that the bankruptcy court's weighing of the evidence was clearly erroneous. Id.

On October 17, 2008, Richardson filed a timely motion for reconsideration. Del. District Court Case No. 08-005, D.I. 23. The motion was denied on November 22, 2008. Aii.

On December 21, 2008, Richardson filed a timely notice of appeal. Ai.

SUMMARY OF ARGUMENT

Richardson challenges the bankruptcy court's decision denying his administrative expense application on five grounds. First, Richardson argues that the bankruptcy court erred by rejecting his contention that Richardson's pre-petition activities in the New York derivative litigation, which occurred long before any Summit bankruptcy was even contemplated, provided a "substantial contribution" to the Summit bankruptcy estate under section 503(b)(3)(D). The bankruptcy court, however, found that Richardson's actions did not benefit the estate, were intended to benefit himself, and were duplicative, and also found that any positive results were primarily due to Prussin and not Richardson. As recognized by the Third Circuit, each of these findings is an independent basis for denying Richardson's section 503(b)(3)(D) request. See Lebron, 27 F.3d at 944. Each of these factual findings, moreover, is amply supported by the evidentiary record, and Richardson cannot meet the stringent burden of demonstrating that they were clearly erroneous.

Second, Richardson argues that his claims arising from the defense of various actions brought against him by Gray should be deemed "actual, necessary costs and expenses of preserving the estate" under section 503(b)(1)(A). The bankruptcy court did not err when it rejected this argument, for at least two independent reasons. First, apart from his alleged Chariot indemnity rights, Richardson did not identify any contractual or legal right that would allow him to recoup his personal legal expenses from another party. The bankruptcy court found, however, that the Richardson's indemnity rights did not provide an actual benefit to the estate, and that finding was not clearly erroneous. Second, even assuming that Richardson's expenses during the bankruptcy case were somehow recoverable under his former indemnity rights as a director of Chariot, any such indemnity claim would be paid as an unsecured pre-petition claim. The bankruptcy court did not err by concluding that such claim could not be recharacterized as a first-priority, administrative obligation of the Summit bankruptcy estate.

Third, Richardson suggests that the bankruptcy court committed clear error when it found that Richardson's actions in the ESP case, a separate bankruptcy proceeding, did not create a substantial contribution to the estate of Summit. The bankruptcy court's findings were supported by the evidence and are not clearly erroneous. The bankruptcy court found, based on a full consideration of the evidence before it, that Richardson failed to meet his burden of demonstrating that his actions in Tennessee produced a direct benefit to the Summit estate, and was unable to rebut the presumption that his services were designed to benefit himself rather than others.

Fourth, Richardson argues that the bankruptcy court erred by denying his request for first-priority payment of his fees under section 503(b)(3)(C) for his alleged services in connection with the criminal prosecutions of Gray. The bankruptcy court denied this request on the grounds that Richardson had failed to show any connection between these criminal prosecutions and the Summit bankruptcy. The bankruptcy court's conclusion was not clearly erroneous, and as a result, it correctly determined that Richardson was ineligible to seek fees under section 503(b)(3)(C).

Fifth, Richardson argues that the bankruptcy court erroneously applied a "double standard" in denying fees for Richardson under section 503(b)(3), while allowing fees for the Committee counsel and other retained professionals under section 503(b)(2). That "double standard," however, is expressly mandated by the Bankruptcy Code. Section 503(b) differentiates between the administrative expense applications made by professionals who have been officially retained in the case, which are governed by section 503(b)(2), and other types of administrative expense claims, which are governed principally by section 503(b)(1)(A) and section 503(b)(3). In this case, Richardson is not a retained professional, and cannot rely on section 503(b)(2) in support of his request to be compensated. Moreover, because the criteria for compensation under section 503(b)(3) are far more stringent than those of section 503(b)(2), the fact that other professionals may have been compensated under section 503(b)(2) has no bearing on whether Richardson should be compensated under section 503(b)(3).

ARGUMENT

I. The Bankruptcy Court Did Not Err in Denying Section 503(b)(3)(D) Treatment to Richardson's Pre-Petition Actions in New York State Court

Bankruptcy Code section 503(b)(3)(D) allows for the administrative expense treatment of "the actual, necessary expenses, other than compensation and reimbursement specified in [section 503(b)(4)], incurred by . . . a creditor . . .in making a substantial contribution in a case under chapter 9 or 11 of [the Bankruptcy Code]." Under this provision, only actual, out-of-pocket "expenses" may be recovered, not hourly attorney services (which are recoverable, if at all, only under section 503(b)(4)).[7]

A decision to grant a claimant administrative status is significant. Because

[7] Section 503(b)(4) authorizes "reasonable compensation for professional services by an attorney or an accountant of an entity whose expense is allowable under subparagraph (A), (B), (C), (D), or (E) of paragraph (3) of this subsection[.]" 11 U.S.C. § 503(b)(4).

administrative claimants enjoy priority over all unsecured creditors, the allowance of an administrative claim will normally reduce the amount that will be paid to all unsecured creditors in the case. See City of White Plains v. A&S Galleria-Real Estate, Inc. (In re Federated Dept. Stores, Inc.), 270 F.3d 994, 1000 (6th Cir. 2001) ("[c]laims for administrative expenses under § 503(b) are strictly construed because priority claims reduce the funds available for creditors and other claimants").

For these reasons, to receive administrative expense priority under section 503(b)(3)(D), a claimant must prove three things: (i) that expenses were actually incurred; (ii) that the estate received an "actual and demonstrable benefit"; and (iii) that the benefit is "more than an incidental one arising from activities the applicant has pursued in protecting his or her own interests." Lebron, 27 F.3d at 944. To be reimbursable under section 503(b)(3)(D), a creditor's services must have "directly and materially contributed to the reorganization." Id. at 943 (emphasis added) (internal quotations omitted). Creditors seeking administrative claimant status are "presumed to be acting in their own interests," and such presumption is rebutted only if they "satisfy the bankruptcy court that their efforts have transcended self-protection." Id; see also Haskins v. United States (In re Lister), 846 F.2d 55, 57 (10th Cir.1988) ("Efforts undertaken by a creditor solely to further his own self-interest . . . will not be compensable, notwithstanding any incidental benefit accruing to the bankruptcy estate.”). Unless the bankruptcy court finds that the creditor’s actions “were designed to benefit others who would foreseeably be interested in the estate,” rather than “in pursuit of his own interests,” the creditor cannot obtain administrative expense priority under subparagraph 503(b)(3)(D) “even though there may have been an incidental benefit to the chapter 11 estate.” Lebron, 27 F.3d at 946 (emphasis added).

Richardson argues that he was solely responsible for the results of the preliminary injunction proceedings initiated against Gray in New York state court in October 1996, over two years before Summit’s bankruptcy petition in this case was filed. Br. 13-14. Based on his contention that many of the findings that arose from these pre-petition actions were later used successfully by the Committee in Summit’s bankruptcy case, Richardson argues that his services should be afforded section 503(b)(3)(D) treatment on the theory that they provided a “substantial contribution” in Summit’s bankruptcy case.

Although the bankruptcy court found that discovery from the pre-petition New York state court preliminary injunction aided the Committee in its successful litigation against Gray in bankruptcy court, it also noted that the materials produced in that state court proceeding had been sealed, and it was the Committee – not Richardson – that succeeded in obtaining and using the confidential documents in the Delaware adversary proceeding. A33-34. As a result, the bankruptcy court held that it could not find that Richardson's efforts in New York state court in 1996 and 1997 had directly benefitted the Summit estate in 2004 (when the Delaware adversary proceeding was successfully concluded) and 2005 (when the trustee sold the estate's interests in assets recovered in the Delaware Adversary proceeding). A34.

The bankruptcy court's decision finds support in the record, which demonstrates that "the participation of many led to the[ ] results" obtained in the successful Delaware adversary proceeding. A41. Richardson's self-serving, unsubstantiated statements to the contrary do not rise to the level of evidence required to prove that his pre-petition actions led directly to the ultimate benefit derived years later from the Committee's litigation efforts. In any case, although Richardson's proposed factual conclusions are different from those adopted by the bankruptcy court, Richardson cannot demonstrate that the bankruptcy court's findings were clearly erroneous.

In addition, Richardson does not rebut the bankruptcy court's finding that the New York litigation took place long before any bankruptcy filing by Summit was contemplated. See Lebron, 27 F.3d at 946 (expenses not reimbursable when incurred in litigation "initiated many months before a reorganization was anticipated by anyone"). Indeed, even after the Summit filed for bankruptcy, Richardson unsuccessfully sought to have its bankruptcy case dismissed. B.D.I. 24. Moreover, the record below contains ample evidence to support the bankruptcy court's conclusion that Richardson's actions were intended to benefit himself, not others. See, e.g., A720 (Apr. Tr. 144: 16-18) ("Q: And the actions you undertook in [Summit's preference suit] were taken with the intent of proving that you weren't liable? A: Yes."); A740-41 (Apr. Tr. 164:23-165:2) ("Q: And the actions that you undertook in connection with [ESP's suit against Richardson] were taken with the intent of proving that you weren't liable or otherwise responsible for any wrongdoing, isn't that right? A: Yes.").

Thus, even if the bankruptcy court erred when it held that Richardson's actions did not benefit the estate, Richardson offers no argument to rebut the bankruptcy court's findings that those actions were done out of self-interest. This fact alone precludes Richardson from seeking section 503(b)(3)(D) administrative priority. See Lebron, 27 F.3d at 946.

Stated differently, in order to meet his burden of establishing a "substantial contribution," Richardson must do more than merely allege that he spent time on a matter in which the estate wound up with a good result. Rather, he must prove that his services led directly to an actual and demonstrable benefit, and that the benefit was more than an incidental one arising from Richardson's pursuit of his own interests. Lebron, 27 F.3d at 943-44. As the record developed at trial did not prove any essential connection between Richardson's services and a specific benefit to the estate, the bankruptcy court's finding that Richardson had failed to demonstrate a substantial contribution was not clearly erroneous.

II. The Bankruptcy Court's Finding That Richardson's Defense Costs Were Not "Actual Necessary Expenses" of the Summit Estate is Supported by the Record and is Not Clearly Erroneous

Bankruptcy Code section 503(b)(1)(A) allows administrative expense priority treatment to "the actual, necessary costs and expenses of preserving the estate, including wages, salaries, or commissions for services rendered after the commencement of the case." In addition to demonstrating that the request is comprised of out-of-pocket "costs and expenses," an applicant under section 503(b)(1)(A) must prove three things: (i) that his request is based on a transaction with the debtor in possession that arose "after the commencement of the case"; (ii) that the estate received an actual benefit; and (iii) that there is a demonstrable causal connection between the applicant's actual expenses and a specific actual benefit received by the estate (i.e., the expenses were "necessary" to "preserving the estate”). See, e.g., Former Employees of Builders Square Retail Stores v. Hechinger Inv. Co. of Del. (In re Hechinger Inv. Co. of Del.), 298 F.3d 219, 226 (3d Cir. 2002) (request must be based on post-petition transaction with debtor in possession); Calpine Corp. v. O’Brien Envtl. Energy, Inc. (In re O’Brien Envtl. Energy, Inc.), 181 F.3d 527, 532 (3d Cir. 1999) (applicant must prove connection between actual expense and actual benefit). As this Court has stated, an applicant under section 503(b)(1)(A) bears a “heavy burden.” O’Brien, 181 F.3d at 532.

The bankruptcy court found that Richardson failed to demonstrate any of these three elements. A23. First, the bankruptcy court found that Richardson could not demonstrate that his claim was based on a post-petition transaction, rather than his pre-petition collection efforts. A24. As for the remainder of Richardson’s request, the bankruptcy court found that Richardson had not met his burden of proof under section 503(b)(1)(A) since, “although Richardson argues extensively that he conferred an actual benefit to the estate, he failed to establish that his costs and expenses were necessary to preserve the value of estate assets.” A25-26.

These findings were not clearly erroneous. Although Richardson appears to characterize each of the lawsuits filed against him by Gray as a post-petition “transaction” with Summit, with respect to at least two of the lawsuits on which Richardson bases his argument, this characterization is incorrect. The New York fiduciary duty lawsuit by Gray against Richardson was resolved long before the Summit bankruptcy, and served as the basis for Richardson's pre-petition indemnification claim. See Gray v. Richardson, 251 A.D.2d 268. Richardson also seeks compensation for defending the lawsuit against him in Tennessee. That lawsuit, however, was filed by ESP, not by Summit. None of the expenses rendered in either of those actions is recoverable under section 503(b)(1)(A), as they were not based on post-petition transactions with Summit.

At most, the only two lawsuits that can even plausibly be characterized as a post-petition "transaction" involving Summit are the RICO lawsuit and the preferential transfer litigation. The RICO lawsuit was dismissed ten days after it was filed, however, and Richardson does not identify any actual expenses that he was forced to incur during the brief time this lawsuit was pending. With respect to the preferential transfer adversary proceeding, moreover, Richardson cannot identify any legal basis for shifting his costs of litigation to Summit. Indeed, as part of the stipulation resolving that adversary proceeding, Richardson expressly waived his right to seek any such costs. See Del. Adv. Pro. No. 99-126, D.I. 44.

Although Richardson's argument appears to assume that he is entitled to force the plaintiffs to bear the costs of the various lawsuits he has defended,[8] the only apparent basis for such fee-shifting would be Richardson's alleged indemnification rights as a director of Chariot. Even assuming that Richardson's indemnity agreement was still effective, it would provide him with, at most, a pre-petition unsecured claim in Summit's bankruptcy case. That is so because it is impermissible to grant administrative status to a indemnification claims where "the claim for indemnity arose from prepetition services . . . provided to the corporation," even if "some of the litigation expenses did not accrue until after the petition was filed." In re Overland Park Fin. Corp., 240 B.R. 402, 405-06 (Bankr. D. Kan. 1999). Accord In re ANC Rental Corp., 341 B.R. 178, 179-80 (Bankr. D. Del. 2006); In re Pinnacle Brands, Inc., 259 B.R. 46, 50-51 (Bankr. D.Del. 2001); In re Mid-American Waste Sys., Inc., 228 B.R. 816, 821 (Bankr. D. Del. 1999); In re Pennsylvania Truck Lines, Inc., 189 B.R. 331, 334 (Bankr. E.D. Pa. 1995); In re Highland Group, Inc., 136 B.R. 475, 481 (Bankr. N.D. Ohio 1992).

Despite his failure to demonstrate any right to reimbursement or benefit to the estate as a result of his defense of lawsuits in which he was sued personally,

[8] Richardson's brief argues that his claims for legal fees and costs might also be "styled as tort claims for frivolous litigation or abuse of process." Br. 16. Richardson cannot identify any evidence in the proceedings below demonstrating that he would prevail against the Summit bankruptcy estate on any such tort theory.

Richardson argues that his fees are nevertheless entitled to administrative payment under the Supreme Court's decision in Reading Co. v. Brown, 391 U.S. 471 (1968). Br. 15-16. Richardson's reliance on Reading is misplaced. Reading considered the availability of tort damages under a provision of the 1898 Bankruptcy Act, which like section 503(b)(1)(A) provided payment for "the actual and necessary costs and expense of preserving the estate subsequent to filing the petition."[9] Reading, 391 U.S. at 475. In Reading, a building owned by the debtor burned while the debtor was under the protection of a bankruptcy receivership. See id. at 473. The owner of a building that neighbored the debtor's building claimed the damages that he suffered in the fire as administrative expenses. See id. For purposes of deciding whether his claim would receive administrative priority, the court stated that it "would be assumed that the damage to petitioner's property resulted from the negligence of the receiver and a workman he employed." Id. at 474.

[9] As relevant here, section 64a provided that

> The debts to have priority, in advance of the payment of dividends to creditors, and to be paid in full out of bankrupt estates, and the order of payment, shall be (1) the costs and expenses of administration, including the actual and necessary costs and expenses of preserving the estate subsequent to filing the petition . . . .

11 U.S.C. § 104(a)(1) (repealed 1978).

Reading held that the claim for damages was allowable as an "actual and necessary" expense of preserving the estate even though the negligence that led to the fire did not benefit the estate, because the receiver's operation of the business was an essential element of the debtor's rehabilitation. Reading, 391 U.S. at 485. But Reading did not recognize a freestanding right to payment under the 1898 Act. Instead, the Court assumed that the tort creditor in that case had a valid negligence claim against the trustee; the question was whether that claim qualified as an administrative expense entitled to priority. Id. at 482. In this case, as noted above, Richardson failed to demonstrate that any similar valid claim exists.

There has been no affirmative determination by the bankruptcy court that Richardson is owed any damages for any post-petition action taken against him by Summit or its estate fiduciaries. Also, although Richardson alleges that he incurred costs due to meritless actions, the bankruptcy court has not affirmatively determined that either of Summit's two actions against Richardson lacked merit. And, of course, no Reading claim could be imposed on Summit's bankruptcy estate due to actions, meritless or otherwise, taken by Gray pre-petition or by a different entity – ESP – in a different bankruptcy case. Reading, 391 U.S. at 482 ("tort claims arising during an arrangement [are] actual and necessary expenses of the arrangement") (emphasis added); Kadjevich v. Kadjevich (In re Kadjevich), 220 F.3d 1016, 1019-20 (9th Cir. 2000) (pre-petition debts may not be granted Reading administrative expense award). As a result, there is simply no basis for a Reading administrative expense award in this case.

Even if Richardson had stated a valid tort claim against Summit, moreover, Reading is distinguishable because Summit, unlike the debtor in Reading, is a liquidating company that is not engaged in any business. B.D.I. 671 (plan of liquidation), 672 (disclosure statement). An important rationale for the decision in Reading, by contrast, was that the debtor was operating when the damages were inflicted by the fire. See Reading, 391 U.S. at 475 ("[T]he words 'preserving the estate' include the larger objective, common to arrangements, of operating the debtor's business with a view of rehabilitating it."); id. at 478 ("[T]he question is whether the fire claimants should be subordinated to, should share equally with, or should collect ahead of those creditors for whose benefit the continued operation of the business . . . was allowed."); id. at 479 ([T]he "business [was] operating . . . for the benefit of the creditors and with the hope of rehabilitation. That benefit and that rehabilitation are worthy objectives. But it would be inconsistent with . . . the rule of fairness in bankruptcy to seek these objectives at the cost of excluding tort creditors. . . ."); id. at 483 ("[A]nalogous cases suggest that 'actual and necessary costs' should include costs ordinarily incident to operation of a business, and not be limited to costs without which rehabilitation would be impossible."); and id. at 485 n.12 ("Among other expenses incident to conducting a business and therefore allowable as an administrative expenditure may be . . . payments on claims for personal injuries inflicted in the operation of a business[.]").

These statements make clear that the continuing operation of a business was integral to Reading's holding. As the First Circuit has noted, moreover, applying Reading in an ordinary, nonoperating liquidation proceeding "appears extremely problematic, as one fundamental justification for the priority is that general creditors stand to benefit from the post-petition operation of the debtor's business, either through the immediate generation of operating profits or through the ultimate reorganization of the debtor as a viable business entity." Woburn Assoc. v. Kahn (In re Hemingway Transport, Inc.), 954 F.2d 1, 5 n.5 (1st Cir. 1992). Regardless of the merits of Gray's various lawsuits against Richardson, the creditors of Summit (other than Richardson) did not benefit from the fact that they were successfully defended. Similarly, Richardson does not suggest any Summit creditors benefitted from Gray's initial decision to commence such litigation. Accordingly, Reading's rationale that tort creditor's damages were administrative expenses because the general creditors stood to benefit from the trustee's operation of the debtor's business, and the damages were caused by the operation of the business, does not apply to this case.

III. The Bankruptcy Court Did Not Err in Denying Administrative Expense Priority Treatment in This Case to Richardson's Services Rendered in ESP's Bankruptcy Case in Tennessee Equally without merit is Richardson's contention that his actions in the ESP bankruptcy case in the Middle District of Tennessee made a substantial contribution to the Summit bankruptcy case. Br. at 19. The bankruptcy court found that Richardson did not prove that his services rendered in ESP's case resulted in a benefit to the Summit bankruptcy estate, and denied his request. A36-38. The bankruptcy court's factual finding was supported by the record and is not clearly erroneous.

Richardson's request for "substantial contribution" fees in connection with the ESP litigation is improper for the same reasons as his request for such fees in connection with the New York litigation. In particular, Richardson again has failed to meet his burden of demonstrating that such services rendered in the ESP case resulted in a direct benefit to the Summit bankruptcy estate. Lebron, 27 F.3d at 943. In addition, Richardson's services are presumed to have been designed to benefit himself and not others, particularly since similar services were already being performed on behalf of the Summit estate by Committee counsel. A41. As Richardson did not present sufficient evidence to rebut the presumption of self-interest, the bankruptcy court did not err in denying section 503(b)(3)(D) priority for his services in the ESP case.

Richardson's request for fees relating to the ESP litigation is also improper under section 503(b)(1)(A). Richardson's services in the ESP case do not constitute a "transaction" with Summit as debtor in possession, but rather involved ESP, which was a separate legal entity in its own chapter 11 case in Tennessee. Also, Richardson has shown neither that his services in the ESP case were "necessary to accord the [Summit] estate an actual benefit," nor that his services were the "catalyst" for any benefit the Summit estate derived. See O'Brien, 181 F.3d 533, 537.

In addition, even if the ESP litigation was considered as a necessary cost of doing business for Summit, Richardson was never retained as Summit's attorney, and he cannot rely on section 503(b)(1)(A) to circumvent the Bankruptcy Code's procedures for the appointment and compensation of estate professionals. See Lamie v. United States Trustee, 520 U.S. 526, 533 (2004) (stating that a "debtor's attorney not engaged as provided by § 327 is simply not included within the class of persons eligible for compensation"); F/S Airlease II, Inc. v. Simon, 844 F.2d 99, 108-09 (3d Cir. 1988), cert. denied, 488 U.S. 852 (1988) (allowing section 503(b)(1)(A) treatment to an unretained professional "would contravene Congress' intent in providing for prior approval").

IV. The Bankruptcy Court Did Not Err in Denying Section 503(b)(3)(C) Treatment to Richardson's Services Rendered in Gray's Criminal Proceedings in Missouri

Bankruptcy Code section 503(b)(3)(C) allows for the administrative expense priority treatment of the "actual, necessary expenses, other than compensation and reimbursement specified in [section 503(b)(4)], of "a creditor in connection with the prosecution of a criminal offense relating to the case or to the business or property of the debtor." As with any section 503(b)(3) request, only actual, out-of-pocket "expenses" may be recovered, not hourly attorney services. In addition, a claimant seeking section 503(b)(3)(C) administrative expense priority must prove not only that he incurred actual, necessary out-of-pocket expenses, but also (i) a direct relationship between the expenses sought and the prosecution of a criminal offense, and (ii) a direct relationship between the criminal offense and the debtor's bankruptcy case, business, or property. See Lebron, 27 F.3d at 943 n.1. Unless a claimant demonstrates that both of these criteria are present, he cannot receive a section 503(b)(3)(C) award.

The bankruptcy court did not clearly err when it found that Richardson satisfied neither of the requirements for section 503(b)(3)(C) compensation. A29. Gray's tax fraud apparently occurred before the Summit case was even filed. Br. 22. His bankruptcy fraud occurred in a Missouri bankruptcy case. Id. As the bankruptcy court found below, Richardson did not meet his burden of explaining how Gray's criminal proceedings, or even the underlying Missouri bankruptcy case, had anything more than a tangential relation to Summit's case, property, or business. A29.

V. The Bankruptcy Court Did Not Err in Denying Section 503(b)(3) and (b)(4) Treatment to Richardson's Hourly Time Spent Rendering Legal Services, Despite its Having Authorized Section 503(b)(2) Treatment to Services Rendered by Estate and Committee Professionals

Finally, Richardson suggests that the bankruptcy court improperly imposed a "double standard" by allowing section 503(b)(2) administrative expense treatment for the compensation requests of estate and Committee professionals while denying Richardson's request for administrative expense treatment under sections 503(b)(3) and (4) for similar hourly legal services. Br. 23. The bankruptcy court, however, was correct to distinguish between these two provisions. Section 503(b)(2) grants administrative expense priority to "compensation and reimbursement awarded under section 330(a) of [the Bankruptcy Code]" (emphasis added). Section 330(a)(1), in turn, allows the bankruptcy court to award "reasonable compensation for actual, necessary services rendered" as well as "reimbursement for actual, necessary expenses" to estate professionals employed under Bankruptcy Code section 327 and committee professionals employed under Bankruptcy Code section 1103. Under section 330(a)(3)(A), in determining an award for reasonable compensation the bankruptcy court "shall" consider "the time spent on such services." Thus, compensation for hourly services rendered is expressly authorized by section 503(b)(2).

Unlike section 503(b)(2), however, section 503(b)(3) does not allow for "compensation for services rendered" – it only allows for recovery of "actual, necessary expenses." Indeed, section 503(b)(3) by its express terms excludes compensation for creditors' attorney services, which may only be recovered, if at all, under section 503(b)(4). See Xifaras v. Morad (In re Morad), 328 B.R. 264, 269 (B.A.P. 1st Cir. 2005) ("As a stand-alone provision, § 503(b)(3) has no bearing upon a request for legal fees and costs.").

Section 503(b)(4) allows for the administrative expense priority treatment of "reasonable compensation for professional services rendered by an attorney or accountant of an entity whose expense is allowable under [section 503(b)(3)]."[10] This section only provides for compensation for services rendered by the "attorney of" a creditor; it does not provide for the hourly compensation for services rendered by the creditor himself. Indeed, a creditor must actually have paid an attorney before he can obtain a section 503(b)(4) claim, as this Court "do[es] not read subsection (b)(4) to authorize a payment to a creditor in excess of the amount he or she was required to pay for those services." See Lebron, 27 F.3d at 947 n.5 (emphasis added). In addition, section 503(b)(4) only applies to attorney services rendered for a creditor who is himself entitled to administrative expense priority under section 503(b)(3); attorney services rendered for a creditor who does not meet the section 503(b)(3) requirements cannot receive priority treatment under section 503(b)(4).

[10] Under the pre-BAPCPA version of section 503(b) applicable to this case, the Third Circuit had held that official committee members could receive administrative expense priority treatment for reimbursement of out-of-pocket expenses constituting fees paid to attorneys. See First Merchants Acceptance Corp. v. J.C. Bradford & Co., 198 F.3d 394, 396 (3d Cir. 2000). This interpretation has been superseded by the BAPCPA's amendment of subparagraph (b)(4) to expressly clarify that it does not apply to creditors specified in subparagraph (b)(3)(F). The First Merchants decision applied to a reimbursement of the out-of-pocket expenses of a committee member who had actually paid an attorney; it did not apply to compensation for hours spent on the case by the committee member itself.

Like all other creditors, Richardson is ineligible to compensate himself out of the estate for the alleged value of his hourly services personally rendered under section 503(b)(3). In addition, because Richardson did not make the requisite showing under any subparagraph of section 503(b), he is not entitled to recover attorney compensation under section 503(b)(4) regardless of whether the attorney services were rendered by Richardson himself or by someone else.

In any event, section 503(b)(4) applies to the attorney "of" a creditor, not the creditor himself (even if, as here, the creditor is also an attorney). As a result, the bankruptcy court's denial of administrative expense priority treatment under section 503(b)(3) and (4) for pro se legal services was consistent with other reported decisions. A27-28; see, e.g., In re Gimelson, 2004 WL 2713059 * 22 (E.D. Pa. Nov. 23, 2004) (denying section 503(b)(4) priority to creditor/attorney who represented himself and did not incur attorney fees); In re Patriot Aviation Services, Inc., 384 B.R. 649, 652 (Bankr. S.D. Fla. 2008) (denying section 503(b)(3)(D) and (b)(4) priority to creditor/law firm "seeking opportunity costs for services provided while representing itself"); In re Pappas, 277 B.R. 171, 177 (Bankr. E.D.N.Y. 2002) (denying section 503(b) priority to creditor/attorney for his own personal time devoted to case where his billable time, although valuable, was not an "actual expense").

Richardson attempts at page 18 of his brief to distinguish the Gimelson and Pappas decisions as being rendered in chapter 7 cases to which section 503(b)(3)(D) does not apply. But, the lawyer/creditors in Gimelson and Pappas sought compensation under section 503(b)(3)(B), which is applicable to chapter 7 cases, so the decisions in those cases are not "dictum" [sic] as stated by Richardson. Rather, Gimelson and Pappas stand for the proposition that a lawyer/creditor cannot obtain administrative expense priority treatment under any subsection of 503(b). See Gimelson, 2004 WL at * 22 ("'Section 503(b) provides that "actual" "expenses" may be afforded administrative expense status. [The creditor's] time, although valuable, was not an "actual expense" to him.'") (quoting Pappas, 277 B.R. at 177). In any event, the subsequent decision in In re Patriot Aviation Services, Inc., which did arise in the chapter 11 context, nevertheless relied on Gimelson and Pappas in holding that "[t]he record overwhelmingly supports the position that the time spent by [the lawyer/creditor] was in a personal capacity, which precludes administrative compensation under section 503(b)(3)(D) or section 503(b)(4)." Patriot Aviation, 384 B.R. at 653.

In addition, Richardson argues that his services could not have "duplicated" those of Committee counsel since Richardson's services were rendered first. Br. 23-24. However, Richardson's services did duplicate those of Committee counsel, regardless of the timing of when services were rendered, to the extent both the Committee's counsel and Richardson rendered comparable services. Committee counsel was authorized under section 1103 to render legal services on behalf of its client, the Committee, and its legal services were compensable under sections 330 and 503(b)(2). Richardson either rendered unauthorized concurrent, duplicative legal services on behalf of the Committee (which would not be compensable, as he was not employed to render such services) or he rendered services on behalf of himself (which would not be reimbursable from the estate unless he made the showing required under section 503(b)(3)(D)). See First Merchants, 198 F.3d at 396. The estate cannot be burdened with authorized Committee counsel's necessary hourly compensation plus the hourly compensation request of every creditor who chooses to shadow Committee counsel throughout the case.

Richardson also argues that, since the New York state court held that Delaware corporate law allowed him to recover pro se attorney fees as part of his indemnification claim, the bankruptcy court was required, under either a "law of the case" or comity theory, to allow administrative expense priority treatment for all of the hours he has personally rendered. Br. 17. This argument is unavailing, however. The New York state court's decision may be "law of the case" in the New York state court case in which it was rendered, but it is not "law of the case" in a completely different case, filed in federal bankruptcy court in Delaware. See Christianson v. Colt Indus. Operating Corp., 486 U.S. 800, 816 (1988) (under "law of the case" doctrine, "when a court decides upon a rule of law, that decision should continue to govern the same issues in subsequent stages in the same case") (emphasis added).

Similarly, while state law determines whether a creditor has a pre-petition claim against a debtor, it does not determine the relative priorities afforded various claims in a bankruptcy case, which are established by sections 503 and 507 of the Bankruptcy Code. Thus, the New York state court may determine whether Richardson has an indemnification claim and whether that claim includes compensation for pro se legal services, but only the bankruptcy court can determine whether that indemnification claim is entitled to administrative priority status under section 503(b).

In addition, Richardson's reliance on Jones v. Lujan, 883 F.2d 1031, 1034-35 (D.C. Cir. 1989), in support of his request for administrative expense priority for his pro se legal fees is unavailing as that case is inapposite. Br. 18. Jones v. Lujan was decided under the Equal Access to Justice Act ("EAJA") which by its own terms allows for the recovery of "fees and other expenses" incurred. See 28 U.S.C. § 2412(d)(1)(A) (emphasis added). Section 503(b)(3), by comparison, does not allow for the recovery of "fees" – only out-of-pocket "expenses." Thus, unlike actions under the EAJA, requests for section 503(b)(3) priority cannot include an attorney fee component.

CONCLUSION

For these reasons, the Acting United States Trustee respectfully asks this Court to affirm the district court's order.

BRIEF OF APPELLEE

STATEMENT OF JURISDICTION

The bankruptcy court had jurisdiction over this matter pursuant to 28 U.S.C. §§ 157(b) and 1334. On October 14, 2004, the bankruptcy court's Order Granting Change of Venue was entered on the docket. Bankruptcy Docket ("B. Doc..")[1] #16. On October 22, 2003, Wayne A. Swinney and Phoebe G. Swinney (hereinafter the "Debtors") filed a timely notice of appeal from that order with this Court, in accordance with Rule 8002 of the Federal Rules of Bankruptcy Procedure ("Fed. R. Bankr. P."). This Court possesses jurisdiction over the appeal by virtue of 28 U.S.C. § 158(a).

The United States Trustee believes this is a final order under the flexible approach to finality followed by this Circuit. In re F.D.R. Hickory House, Inc., 60 F.3d 724, 727 (11th Cir.1995)

[1] The United States Trustee will utilize the same method of citing the record as set forth by the Appellants. See Appellant's Brief at 1.

(discussing the more flexible standard of finality in appeals in bankruptcy orders). However, the United States Trustee also notes that this Circuit has held, in the non-bankruptcy context, that orders of transfer on grounds of forum non conveniens are non-appealable, interlocutory orders. Grayson v. K Mart Corp., 79 F.3d 1086, 1094 (11th 1996)(citing Dobard v. Johnson, 749 F.2d 1503, 1506 (11th Cir. 1985)("courts have fairly consistently held that transfer orders brought . . . are not generally final orders for the purpose of appeal")).

The United States Trustee further notes that even if the transfer order at issue here is not final, this Court may exercise jurisdiction over this matter pursuant to 28 U.S.C. 158(a)(3). See, e.g., In re Sorrells, 218 B.R. 580, 583-584 (10 Cir. BAP 1998) (exercising jurisdiction pursuant to 28 U.S.C. 158(a)(3)).

STATEMENT OF THE ISSUE

Whether the Bankruptcy Court erred in transferring this case to the Bankruptcy Court for the Middle District of Alabama pursuant to 28 U.S.C. § 1406(a) for lack of proper venue.

STANDARD OF APPELLATE REVIEW

Findings of fact are reviewed for clear error, while conclusions of law are reviewed de novo. The decision of the bankruptcy court insofar as it concerns the application of 28 U.S.C. § 1406(a) and Rule 1014 of the Fed. R. Bankr. P. constitutes an interpretation of a statute and a rule. It therefore involve conclusions of law, which are subject to a de novo standard of review. Pierce v. Underwood, 487 U.S. 552, 558 (1988). To the extent that this Court were to reach the bankruptcy court's alternative holding that it would not have retained the case, that decision should be reviewed under an abuse of discretion standard. See Christo v. Padgett, 223 F.2d 1335, 1335-1336 (11th Cir. 2000)

STATEMENT OF THE CASE AND STATEMENT OF THE FACTS

A. Nature of the Case and Procedural History

The Debtors challenge the bankruptcy court's decision to transfer this case to the Bankruptcy Court for the Middle District of Alabama pursuant to 28 U.S.C. § 1406. The Debtors filed their chapter 7 petition in bankruptcy in the Middle District of Georgia on July 10, 2003.[2] The United States Trustee timely objected to the Debtors' filing of their petition by filing a Motion for Change of Venue. B. Doc. # 3. On September 17, 2003, the Debtors responded to the UST's motion. B. Doc. #11 (Memorandum of Authorities In Opposition to Motion of U.S. Trustee to Dismiss Case or Transfer Venue). On September 18, 2003, a hearing was held on the United States Trustee's motion. The bankruptcy court issued its Order Granting Change of Venue on October 14, 2003. B. Doc. #16.

The Debtors perfected this appeal by filing a Notice of Appeal on October 22, 2003. B. Doc. #17

B. Statement of Facts

The facts in this matter are uncontested. The Debtors' petition disclosed that they reside at 3911 26th Ave, Phenix City, Alabama 36867, a city located in Federal judicial district for the Middle District of Alabama, Opelika Division. Appellants' Brief, at 2. The Debtors' did not check the "venue" box on their petition, which states: "place of business or principal assets in this District for 180 days immediately preceding the date of this petition or for a longer part of such 180 days than in any other District." B. Doc. #1 (Bankruptcy Petition) at 1. Instead they conceded that venue was not proper, by writing on the face of the Petition as follows: "Wrong, More Convenient Forum Filing!" Id.; Appellants' Brief at 2. On the Debtors' schedules, they claim exemptions under the statutes of Alabama. B. Doc #1 (Schedule C) pp. 1-2. Further, the schedules list 12 national credit card companies, none of which have a Georgia address. B. Doc #1 (Schedule F), pp. 1-2. The schedules do not disclose any tangible assets located in the Middle District of Georgia. B. Doc #1 (Schedule A) at 1. Indeed, the only nexus between the Debtors and Georgia are two small unsecured debts that represent a minuscule percentage of their total debts, B. Doc #1 (Schedule F) p. 1, and the fact that the Debtors are both employed in Columbus, Georgia. Hrg. Transcript (9/18/03) p. 22, ln. 17-21, p. 29 ln 25-p.30, ln 14.

[2] . 28 U.S.C. § 81(b) (Alabama is divided into three judicial districts). Phenix City is included in the Middle District).

Finally, if the Debtors' case were transferred to the seat of the Opelika Division of the Middle District of Alabama, they will only have to travel an additional 20 miles to court: the Debtors live within 10 miles of the courthouse for the Middle District of Georgia, Columbus Division, and withing 30 miles of courthouse for the Opelika Division of the Middle District of Alabama. Hrg. Transcript (9/18/03) p. 22, lns 2, 5-9. The Debtors assert in their brief that Mr. Swinney underwent surgery for the replacement of a heart defibulator. Appellants' Brief, at 4. The Debtors indicate in their brief that Mr. Swinney 's health concerns had made it difficult for him to travel. Id. Mr. Swinney plainly testified, however, that he was capable of driving to Opelika at the time his petition was filed. Hrg. Transcript (9/18/03) p. 20, lns 17-19. He further testified that he expected, after a sufficient recovery period, that he would again be capable of driving to Opelika. Hrg. Transcript (9/18/03) p. 22, lns 17-19. Finally, he testified that his wife was also capable of making that drive. Hrg. Transcript (9/18/03) p. 22, ln 17 to p. 23, ln 2.

ARGUMENT

I.PURSUANT TO 28 U.S.C. § 1406 AND BANKRUPTCY RULE 1014 CASES FILED IN THE WRONG VENUE ARE TO BE DISMISSED OR TRANSFERRED.

A statutory analysis begins with an examination of the language of the statutes involved. United States v. Ron Pair Enters., Inc. 489 U.S. 235, 241-41 (1989). Venue for bankruptcy cases is derived from 28 U.S.C. § 1408 which provides in relevant part that:

a case under title 11 may be commenced in the district court for the district—

(1) in which the domicile, residence, principal place of business in the United States, or principal assets in the United States, of the person, or entity that is the subject of such case have been located for the one-hundred-and-eighty days immediately preceding such commencement or for a longer portion of such one-hundred-and-eighty-day period than the domicile, residence, or principal assets in the United States, of such person were located in any other district; or....

Application of this statute to the facts found in the record in this matter clearly identifies the only proper venue is in the Middle District of Alabama, Opelika Division. The Debtors' place of residence is in the Middle District of Alabama, and; by their admission, they do not conduct business in the Middle District of Georgia. Appellants' Brief, at 6 (conceding jurisdiction lies the Middle District of Alabama). Further, the Debtors' schedules do not disclose any tangible assets located in the Middle District of Georgia. B. Doc #1 (Schedule A) p. 1

Cases discussing improper venue issues can be divided into a majority rule and a minority rule. The majority rule holds that a bankruptcy court may not retain improperly venued cases, but instead must either dismiss or transfer them pursuant to 28 U.S.C. 1406(a).[3] See, In re Sorrells,

[3] 28 U.S.C. § 1406(a) provides as follows:

Cure or waiver of defects

The district court of a district in which is filed a case laying venue in the wrong division or district shall dismiss, or if it be in the interest of justice, transfer such case to any district or division in which it could have been brought.

218 B.R. 580 (10th Cir. BAP 1998). See also In re Micci, 188 B.R. 697 (S.D. Fla. 1995); In re Columbia Western, Inc., 183 B.R. 660 (Bankr. Mass. 1995); In re Washington, Perito & Dubuc, 154 B.R. 853 (Bankr.S.D.N.Y. 1993); In re Great Lakes Hotel Associates, 154 B.R. 667 (E.D. Va. 1992); In re Petrie, 142 B.R. 404 (Bankr.D.Nev. 1992); In re Sporting Club, 132 B.R. 792 (Bankr. S.D. 1989); ICMR, Inc. v. Tri-City Foods, Inc., 100 B.R. 51 (D. Kan. 1989); In re Dorval, 1994 WL 228653 (Bankr. R.I. May 11, 1993).

The minority view, in contrast, holds that a bankruptcy court may retain a case filed in an improper venue pursuant to 28 U.S.C. 1412[4], if such retention is "in the interest of justice or for the convenience of the parties." The minority view, however, is represented only by those cases following the holding of In re Lazaro, 128 B.R. 168 (Bankr. W.D. Tex. 1991). See also In re Leonard, 55 B.R. 106, 108-09 (Bankr. D.C. 1985); In re Boeckman, 54 B.R. 110 (Bankr. S.D. 1985)

The bankruptcy court correctly followed those cases constituting the weight of authority, and held that a bankruptcy court may not retain a case where venue is improper. B. Doc. #15 (Memorandum Opinion), pp. 9-10. The Debtors' arguments that the bankruptcy court may retain an improperly venued case appears to be built on the premise that section 1412 implicitly allows retention of an improperly venued case. Appellants' Brief, at 6 n.1. The Debtors' argument in this regard, however, is without merit because section 1412's plain language neither makes it expressly applicable to improperly venued cases, nor states that a court has the option of

[4] 28 U.S.C. § 1412 provides as follows:

> Change of Venue
> A district court may transfer a case or proceeding under title 11 to a district court for another district, in the interest of justice or for the convenience of the parties.

retaining such a case. In re Sorrells, 218 B.R. 580, 587 (10th Cir. BAP 1998). Thus the Debtor's premises is unsupportable and should be rejected on the basis of the statute's plain language.

Next, the Debtors' assert that section 1406(a) is not applicable to bankruptcy courts, but only to the district courts. As the bankruptcy court correctly recognized, that argument is without merit, as is evident from a review of the Supreme Court's decision in Connecticut National Bank v. Germain, 503 U.S. 249, (1992). B. Doc. #15 (Memorandum Opinion) pp. 9-10. In Connecticut National Bank, 503 U.S. at 251-52, the Supreme Court addressed two statutes concerning appellate jurisdiction in the circuit courts of appeal. Id., at 251-252. The first statute, 28 U.S.C. § 158(d), afforded court of appeal jurisdiction over final, but not interlocutory, bankruptcy appeals from a district court. The second statute, 28 U.S.C. § 1292, which is not bankruptcy specific, provided for court of appeal jurisdiction from interlocutory injunctive orders originating in bankruptcy court. Id. The Supreme Court expressly rejected the notion that jurisdictional grant in section 1292 was somehow limited by section 158(d), stating that "each section confers jurisdiction over cases that the other section does not reach." Id., at 253.

The bankruptcy court below correctly held that the Connecticut National Bank case was controlling. B. Doc. #15 (Memorandum Opinion) pp. 9-10. It noted that in this case, as in the Connecticut National Bank case, there is a bankruptcy specific statute (section 1412) that is silent on the issue before it (i.e. the disposition of improperly venued cases), as well as a non-bankruptcy specific statute (section 1406(a)) that does address the issue. Id. Following the reasoning of the Supreme Court, the bankruptcy court determined that section 1406(a) applied to bankruptcy court cases and gave effect to each, concluding that "28 U.S.C. §1406(a) applies to cases that are not addressed in 28 U.S.C. § 1412, namely cases filed in the wrong venue." B. Doc. #15 (Memorandum Opinion) pp. 9-10. It therefore concluded that it had no discretion to retain cases filed in the wrong venue, but that it may only dismiss a case, or if the interests of justice or the convenience of the parties so dictate, transfer an improperly filed case to a district or division in which it could have properly filed in the first instance. B. Doc. #15 (Memorandum Opinion) at 10.

As discussed above, the statutory language of section 1412 plainly does not grant bankruptcy courts the authority to retain a case filed in an improper venue. Even if there were ambiguity concerning the meaning of section 1412, the legislative history of sections 1406 and 1412 further undermine the Debtors' claim. As the bankruptcy court correctly noted, pursuant to the Bankruptcy Amendments and Federal Judgeship Act, Pub. L. 98-353, 98 Stat. 333 (1984), Congress revised the bankruptcy venue statutes in 1984. B. Doc. #15 (Memorandum Opinion), p. 7 (citing In re Sorrells, 218 B.R. at 586). Prior to these amendments, venue of bankruptcy cases was governed by 28 U.S.C. sections 1475 and 1477 (repealed 1984). In re Sorrells, 218 B.R. at 586. Section 1475 had provided, in relevant part, as follows:

> Change in Venue
> A bankruptcy court may transfer a case under title 11 . . . to a bankruptcy court for another district, in the interest of Justice and for the convenience of the parties.

28 U.S.C. 1475 (repealed 1984).

In contrast, section 1477 had expressly allowed for the retention by bankruptcy courts of improperly venued cases. Section 1477 had provided as follows:

> The bankruptcy court of a district in which is filed a case or proceeding laying venue in the wrong division or district may, in the interest of justice and for the convenience of the parties, retain such case or proceeding, or may transfer, under section 1475 of this title, such case or proceeding to any other district or division.

28 U.S.C. 1477 (repealed 1984)(emphasis added).

Section 1477, along with section 1475, were repealed in the 1984 legislation. Pub L. 98-353, title I, §§ 102 and 114. Section 1412 was substituted for section for section 1475, bearing the same caption and the same standard for transfer as former section 1475. In re Sorrells, 218 B.R. at 587. In light of the similarities between former section 1475 and section 1412, it is clear that section 1412 should be construed as having the same scope of former section 1475. See In re Sorrells, 218 B.R. at 587 (nothing in the legislative history of section 1412 suggests that it should be expanded beyond the scope of former section 1475). Consequently, the Debtor's argument that section 1412 should be construed as implicitly allowing the retention of an improperly venued case should be rejected and the bankruptcy court's holding affirmed.

Finally, the bankruptcy court's statutory analysis is further supported by Rule 1014 of the Fed. R. Bankr. Procedure, and the Advisory Committee Note to that rule. Fed R. Bankr. P. 1014, which recognizes the attributes of both section 1406(a) and 1412. Rule 1014(a) of the Federal Rules of Bankruptcy Procedure provides:

> (1) Cases Filed in Proper District. If a petition is filed in a proper district, on timely motion of a party in interest, and after hearing on notice to the petitioner, the United States trustee, and other entities as directed by the court, the case may be transferred to any other district if the court determines that the transfer is in the interest of justice or for the convenience of the parties.
> (2) Cases Filed in Improper District. If a petition is filed in an improper district, on timely motion of a party in interest and after hearing on notice to the petitioners, the United States trustee, and other entities as directed by the court, the case may be dismissed or transferred to any other district if the court determines that transfer is in the interest of justice or for the convenience of the parties.[5]

Rule 1014 therefore reinforces the bankruptcy court's interpretation of section 1406(a) by providing that an improperly filed case may be either dismissed or transferred as set forth in sub-part (a)(2) of the Rule. The Rule also gives effect to section 1412 pursuant to sub-part Rule 1014(a)(1). Rule 1014(a)(1), however, says nothing about retention of an improperly venued case. This conclusion is further supported by the Advisory Committee Note to Rule 1014, which provides as follows:

[5]. The annotated statute is followed by the following commentary; "Section 1406 of Title 28 is addressed to a case in which venue has been laid in an improper district. It authorizes either a dismissal on that ground, or, if the court finds that the interest of justice would be served by a transfer, then a transfer instead. (A transfer from one proper district to another, based on the convenience of witnesses and the needs of justice, is governed by § 1404.)"

Advisory Committee Note (1987) to Fed. R. Bankr. P.

> Both paragraphs 1 and 2 of subdivision (a) are amended to conform to the standard for transfer in 28 U.S.C. § 1412. Formerly, 28 U.S.C. § 1477 authorized a court either to transfer or retain a case which had been commenced in a district where venue was improper. However, 28 U.S.C. § 1412, which supersedes 28 U.S.C. § 1477, authorizes only the transfer of a case. The rule is amended to delete the reference to retention of a case commenced in the improper district. Dismissal of a case commenced in the improper district as authorized by 28 U.S.C. § 1406 has been added to the rule. If a timely motion to dismiss for improper venue is not filed, the right to object to venue is waived.

Thus, contrary to the Debtors' argument, it is plain under both the statutes and the unambiguous language of Rule 1014 that only a properly filed case can be transferred for the "convenience of the parties" or retained by the court.

II. THE BANKRUPTCY COURT'S ALTERNATE HOLDING THAT THIS CASE SHOULD NOT BE RETAINED IN THE MIDDLE OF GEORGIA IS NOT AN ABUSE OF DISCRETION

The bankruptcy court below made an alternative holding, as follows:

> Even if the Court were to have found that it had discretion to retrain the case, the Court would have transferred the case to the United States Bankruptcy Court in the Middle District of Alabama given the equities involved. Respondents live in Alabama, their assets are in Alabama, and all of their creditors are either national or are located in Alabama. Therefore, other than the convenience of Respondents and their attorney, no interest would be served by keeping the case in Georgia. Further, Opelika is approximately 35 miles from Phenix City. This distance is not so far as to create an undue burden on Respondents.

B. Doc. #15 (Memorandum Opinion), pp. 10-11.

As discussed above, supra at 3, this alternative holding should be reviewed, if at all, under an abuse of discretion standard. See Christo v. Padgett, 223 F.2d 1335, 1335-1336 (11th Cir. 2000). Under this standard, a reviewing court should not overturn an exercise of discretion unless it is "left with a definite and firm conviction that the court below committed a clear error of judgment in the conclusion it reached upon a weighing of relevant factors." BankAtlantic v. Blythe Eastman Paine Webber, Inc., et al, 12 F.3d 1045, 1048 (11th Cir. 1994). In light of the factors discussed by the bankruptcy court in this regard, its alternate holding is not an abuse of discretion.

CONCLUSION

For the foregoing reasons, this Court should affirm the bankruptcy court's decision transferring this case to the Middle District of Alabama.

Respectfully submitted,

Appellant

v.

UNITED STATES TRUSTEE FOR THE NORTHERN DISTRICT OF TEXAS
Appellee

ON APPEAL FROM THE UNITED STATES DISTRICT COURT FOR THE NORTHERN DISTRICT OF TEXAS

BRIEF FOR APPELLEE UNITED STATES TRUSTEE

STATEMENT OF JURISDICTION

The bankruptcy court had jurisdiction over Wiladeen Reed's chapter 7 bankruptcy case under 28 U.S.C. 157 and 1334. Mr. Max R. Tarbox was appointed to act as the chapter 7 trustee in Ms. Reed's case. See 11 U.S.C. 701(a)(1) and 702(d) (trustee appointment procedures). Mr. Tarbox obtained an order in the case under 11 U.S.C. 327(a) to appoint his law firm as counsel to the trustee. R. 2-14 at Nos. 7, 8. On June 16, 2003, the bankruptcy court entered an order approving Mr. Tarbox's final report filed under 11 U.S.C. 704(9), and allowing him final compensation as an attorney and as a trustee under 11 U.S.C. 330(a). R. 3-96. Mr. Tarbox also sought interest on his compensation, which the court denied. Id.

On June 24, 2003, Mr. Tarbox filed a timely notice of appeal from that order to the United States District Court for the Northern District of Texas. R. 2-01; see Fed. R. Bankr. P. 8002(a). The district court had jurisdiction to hear the appeal under 28 U.S.C. 158(a). See also R. 1-35. On February 9, 2004, the district court affirmed the bankruptcy court's order refusing to authorize interest. R. 1-34, 35. Mr. Tarbox filed a timely notice of appeal to this Court from the district court's order on February 27, 2004. R. 1-49.

By letter dated March 25, 2004, this Court asked the parties to brief the question of "[w]hether the Order from which appeal is taken in this bankruptcy case, affirming the holding that interest on administrative fees and expenses of the trustee are not allowed, is a final order for purposes of appeal. [See In re] Aegis Specialty Marketing Inc. of Ala. 68 F.3d 919 (5th Cir. 1995)." Both parties to this appeal agree that the lower courts' orders are final. See Appellant Br. at 18-20. Because the orders are final, this Court has jurisdiction to hear Mr. Tarbox's appeal under 28 U.S.C. 158(d).

This Court has jurisdiction to hear "appeals from all final decisions, judgments, orders, and decrees." 28 U.S.C. 158(d). Finality of an order, for purposes of appeal pursuant to 28 U.S.C. 158(d), is determined case-by-case. Aegis Specialty Mktg., Inc. v. Ferlita (In re Aegis Specialty Mktg., Inc. of Ala.), 68 F.3d 919, 921 (5th Cir. 1999). To be considered final within the context of bankruptcy, an order must constitute a "final determination of the rights of the parties to secure the relief they seek," or must be a "final disposition of 'a discrete dispute within the larger bankruptcy case.'" Bartee v. Tara Colony Homeowners Ass'n (In re Bartee), 212 F.3d 277, 282 (5th Cir. 2000) (citations omitted).

The bankruptcy court's order awarding final compensation to Mr. Tarbox under 11 U.S.C. 330(a) was final. It conclusively determined his attorney and trustee compensation for the work performed in the Reed bankruptcy case, and unconditionally refused to authorize interest on his fees. This Court, like other circuit courts, has invariably treated such final fee award orders as final. See, e.g., Peele v. Cunningham (In re Tex. Sec., Inc.), 218 F.3d 443 (5th Cir. 2000) (adjudicating appeal from a final fee award under 11 U.S.C. 330(a)); Andrews & Kurth v. Family Snacks, Inc. (In re Pro-Snax Distrib., Inc.), 157 F.3d 414 (5th Cir. 1998) (holding section 330(a) does not authorize payments from estate funds to counsel for chapter 11 debtors out of possession); Cont'l Bank and Trust Co. of Chicago v. Wooten (In re Evangeline Ref. Co.), 890 F.2d 1312 (5th Cir. 1989) (reviewing interim and final fees awarded in a case in an appeal taken from the final fee award). See also In re McLaughlin, 244 B.R. 474, 477 (Bankr. M.D. Ala. 2000) (order approving trustee's final report and allowing compensation is a "final order"). We are unaware of any circuit decision holding that final fee award orders in bankruptcy cases are interlocutory. See, e.g., Iannochino v. Rodolakis (In re Iannochino), 242 F.3d 36, 44 (1st Cir. 2001) (holding that "a fee award that determines all of the compensation owed to an attorney under section 330 may be considered final.").

Similarly, the district court's order was final. It unconditionally affirmed the bankruptcy court's refusal to award interest to Mr. Tarbox on his section 330(a) compensation. Absent reversal by this Court, Mr. Tarbox will not receive interest on his fees in the Reed bankruptcy case. For these reasons, this Court has jurisdiction over Mr. Tarbox's appeal.

STANDARD OF REVIEW

This court reviews a bankruptcy court's findings of fact for clear error and its conclusions of law de novo. See, e.g., Total Minatome Corp. v. Jack/Wade Drilling, Inc. (In re Jack/Wade Drilling, Inc.), 258 F.3d 385, 387 (5th Cir. 2001).

This appeal involves a purely legal question of statutory construction which this Court reviews de novo.

STATEMENT OF THE ISSUE PRESENTED FOR REVIEW

Whether the lower courts erred in declining to approve post-petition interest on the compensation to be paid to the trustee under 11 U.S.C. 330(a) and 503(b)(2) of the Bankruptcy Code, where 11 U.S.C. 726(a) does not authorize interest on such administrative expense claims?

STATEMENT OF THE CASE

Willadeen Reed ("Debtor") filed a voluntary petition for relief under chapter 7 of the Bankruptcy Code, 11 U.S.C. 701 et seq., on May 14, 1999, and shortly thereafter, Max R. Tarbox was appointed as the chapter 7 trustee to administer the Debtor's bankruptcy estate. See R. 2-13. Mr. Tarbox received court authorization under 11 U.S.C. 327(a) to hire an independent accountant and Mr. Tarbox's law firm to assist him in administering the case. R. 2-14, No. 8; 2-15, No. 25. At the end of the case, the bankruptcy court awarded compensation to Mr. Tarbox and the accountant under 11 U.S.C. 330(a). R. 2-4. Mr. Tarbox's Final Report and Proposed Distribution ("Final Report") proposed to pay interest on this compensation, R. 3-18, 35, and the United States Trustee objected.[1] R. 3-58. After a hearing, the bankruptcy court concluded that Mr. Tarbox and the accountant were not entitled to interest. R. 3-89; see also R. 3-64 to 88 (hearing transcript). Therefore, the court entered an order approving the Final Report and allowing compensation but denying interest. R. 3-96. The district court affirmed the bankruptcy court's decision, holding trustee and professional compensation paid under section 11 U.S.C. 503, not 726(a)(1), and consequently, payment of interest is not allowed under section 726(a)(5). R. 1-46. Mr. Tarbox timely appealed that order to this Court. R. 1-49.

STATEMENT OF FACTS

I. Statutory Framework

A. Overview of Chapter 7 Case Administration

Chapter 7 of the Bankruptcy Code, 11 U.S.C. 701 et seq., is a liquidation provision. In a chapter 7 case, a bankruptcy trustee liquidates the assets a debtor

[1] The United States Trustee is an official of the United States Department of Justice, charged by statute with the duty to oversee and supervise the administration of bankruptcy cases. 28 U.S.C. 586(a). The United States Trustee is expressly given standing under to raise and be heard on any issue under title 11, except that the United States Trustee may not file a reorganization plan under chapter 11. 11 U.S.C. 307. A chapter 7 trustee is required to file a final account of the administration of a bankruptcy estate with both the court and with the United States Trustee. 11 U.S.C. 704(9).

has as of the date of the filing, and after payment of administrative expense claims, divides those assets among pre-bankruptcy petition creditors according the Bankruptcy Code's priority scheme. A voluntary chapter 7 bankruptcy case commences when the debtor files a bankruptcy petition. 11 U.S.C. 301; Fed. R. Bankr. P. 1002(a). Filing also constitutes "an order for relief" in the case, which acts to maintain the status quo while the case is administered. Id. Shortly after the order for relief takes effect, the United States Trustee, who is a Department of Justice official charged with the oversight of administration of bankruptcy cases, appoints a chapter 7 bankruptcy trustee.[2] A chapter 7 bankruptcy trustee is a disinterested person (a lawyer, certified public accountant, or other qualified individual) appointed to administer the debtor's estate for the benefit of pre-petition creditors. See 11 U.S.C. 704 (duties of a trustee); 28 U.S.C. 586(d); 28 C.F.R. 58.3(b), 58.4(b). The trustee is a representative of the estate, and is charged with specific statutory duties necessary to collect and reduce to money property of the estate. 11 U.S.C. 323(a); 704(1)-(9). A trustee is authorized to seek court permission to employ professionals to assist in the performance of those duties, including attorneys, accountants, and auctioneers. 11 U.S.C. 327.

[2] The United States Trustee initially appoints an interim trustee. 11 U.S.C. 701. The interim trustee becomes permanent at the time of the meeting of creditors under section 341 of the Bankruptcy Code unless the creditors exercise their right to elect a different trustee. 11 U.S.C. 702(d). The meeting of creditors, and therefore the permanent appointment of the interim trustee, occurs sometime between forty and sixty days after the order for relief. 11 U.S.C. 341; Fed. R. Bankr. P. 2003(a).

B. Allowance of Compensation of Trustees and Professionals Under 11 U.S.C. 503(b)(2) and Payment under 503(a)

Neither chapter 7 bankruptcy trustees nor professionals employed by the estate are government employees, and their compensation comes from the private bankruptcy estate. In order to receive payment, a trustee or a professional must be properly employed under either 11 U.S.C. 701 and 702(d) (trustee appointment) or 11 U.S.C. 327 (professional employment), and his compensation must be awarded under 11 U.S.C. 330(a). Lamie v. United States Trustee, 124 S. Ct. 1023, 1027 (2004); see also Fed. R. Bankr. P. 2016(a) (application for compensation for services).

Section 503(b) of the Bankruptcy Code authorizes bankruptcy courts to allow "administrative expenses" that arise after a bankruptcy petition is filed. 11 U.S.C. 503(b). Section 503(b)(2) specifically authorizes the allowance of compensation that has been awarded to a trustee or a professional under section 330(a).[3] 11 U.S.C. 503(b)(2). Under section 503(a), an entity with an administrative expense may file a "request for payment" of such an administrative expense claim. 11 U.S.C. 503(a).

C. Priorities Under 11 U.S.C. 507(a)

In most chapter 7 bankruptcy cases there are not enough funds generated from the liquidation of estate assets to pay all claims in full. In recognition of this, Congress has established a "priority" of payment system mandating that specified claims receive full payment as a prerequisite to claims in lower categories receiving any payment. See 11 U.S.C. 507(a) (establishing priorities). Under that scheme, trustee and professional fees receive first priority. Id. Under 11 U.S.C. 507(a)(1), certain filing fees, and administrative expense claims approved under 11 U.S.C. 503(b)(2), receive "priority" over all other types of claims. 11 U.S.C. 507(a)(1). In turn, section 503(b)(2) authorizes the payment of "compensation and reimbursement awarded [to trustees and professionals] under section 330(a)." 11 U.S.C. 503(b)(2). See Texas v. Lowe (In re H.L.S. Energy Co., Inc.), 151 F.3d 434, 437 (5th Cir. 1998) (conceptual justification for administrative expense priority is that creditors must pay for those expenses necessary to produce distribution to which they are entitled).

The remainder of section 507(a)(1) lists eight categories of claims that are entitled to lesser priority. Those categories include pre-petition employee wages and salaries, claims related to contributions to an employee benefit plan, alimony, maintenance and support, certain farming and fishing costs, and specific pre-petition tax claims. See 11 U.S.C. 507(a)(2)-(9). Other than administrative expense claims and court fees under section 507(a)(1), all other priority claims are pre-petition obligations of the debtor. See 11 U.S.C. 507(a)(1)-(9). Priority is the same whether the case is under chapter 7, 11, 12, or 13. 11 U.S.C. 103 (chapters 1, 3, and 5 of the Bankruptcy Code apply to cases under chapters 7, 11, 12, and 13. Administrative expenses, including trustee and professional compensation retain top priority for payment whether they are paid shortly after they are incurred or paid at the same time as final distribution to creditors under section 726(a). Any claim paid during the pendency of the case is subject to disgorgement prior to the final distribution as a result of the mandatory nature of the Code's priority scheme.

D. Distribution to Creditors Under 11 U.S.C. 726(a)

At the conclusion of a chapter 7 liquidation case, the chapter 7 trustee submits to the United States Trustee and files with the court a final report and an account of the administration of the estate. See 11 U.S.C. 704(9) (requiring this report). Once the court resolves any objections to the final report, the trustee distributes funds generated from the liquidation of estate property to pre-petition creditors in accordance with section 726 of the Bankruptcy Code. 11 U.S.C. 726.

Section 726(a) provides for the distribution of estate property in chapter 7 cases. 11 U.S.C. 726(a). The first four categories consist of various unsecured claims. See 11 U.S.C. 726(a)(1)-(4). The fifth category applies to the payment of post-petition interest "on any claim paid under" the first four categories. 11 U.S.C. 726(a)(5). Finally, any surplus property is distributed to the debtor. 11 U.S.C. 726(a)(6).

Of relevance in this appeal is section 726(a)(1), which provides that estate property is first distributed in payment of section 507 priority claims where proof has been filed under section 501. 11 U.S.C. 726(a)(1). Prior to the Bankruptcy Reform Act of 1994 ("the Act"), 108 Stat. 4106, section 726(a)(1) simply provided for the distribution of property of the estate to priority claims, specifically, "in payment of claims of the kind specified in and in the order specified in" section 507. Effective for cases filed after October 22, 1994, however, section 726(a)(1) was amended to restrict distribution under the section to claims for which a proof of claim had been "timely filed under" section 501, or had been "tardily filed before the date on which the trustee commences distribution under [section 726]." 11 U.S.C. 726(a)(1) (as amended by 1994 Act).

Only "creditors" and indenture trustees may file proofs of claims under section 501.[4] See 11 U.S.C. 501(a) ("A creditor or an indenture trustee may file a proof of claim."). The Bankruptcy Code defines "creditor" as an "entity that has a claim against the debtor that arose at the time of or before the order for relief concerning the debtor."[5] 11 U.S.C. 101(10)(A). A "proof of claim" is defined by the Bankruptcy Rules as "a written statement setting forth a creditor's claim." Fed. R. Bankr. P. 3001(a). A proof of claim must substantially conform to Official Form 10 and must be executed by the creditor or the creditor's authorized agent.[6] Fed. R. Bankr. P. 3001(a), (b); Fed. R. Bankr. P. Official Form 10. It is clear under the Bankruptcy Code and Rules that the procedures with respect to proof of claims apply only to creditors.[7] A pre-petition claim of a creditor, "proof of which

[4] Indenture trustee is defined in 11 U.S.C. 101(29). Indenture is defined in 11 U.S.C. 101(28). Those provisions have no relevance to this appeal.

[5] 11 U.S.C. 101(10)(B) and (C) also give creditor status to holders of certain specialized claims that are not at issue in this appeal. Within the context of bankruptcy, a "claim" refers generically and broadly to any "right to payment" or "right to equitable remedy." 11 U.S.C. 101(5).

[6] The exception to this rule, which is not relevant in this appeal, is under certain circumstances where a creditor fails to file a proof of claim, the debtor, codebtor, or trustee may file the proof of claim on behalf of the creditor. See Fed. R. Bankr. P. 3004, 3005.

[7] See, e.g., 11 U.S.C. 501 (creditor may file proof of claim); Fed. R. Bankr. P. 3001 (proof of claim sets forth creditor's claim) (proof of claim executed by creditor); Fed. R. Bankr. P. 3002 (creditor must file proof of claim for it to be is filed under section 501," is "deemed allowed" absent an objection. 11 U.S.C. 502. Compare with 11 U.S.C. 503(b)(2) (trustee and professional administrative fees may be allowed and paid only after notice and a hearing).

II. Facts of This Case

Willadeen Reed ("Debtor") filed a voluntary petition for relief under chapter 7 of the Bankruptcy Code on May 14, 1999, and Mr. Tarbox was appointed as trustee shortly thereafter. R. 3-89; R. 2-13. During the case, Mr. Tarbox requested and received court authorization to employ his law firm as counsel to the trustee and to hire an accountant pursuant to section 327 of the Bankruptcy Code.[8] R. 2-14; R. 2-15.

P. 3005 (where creditor fails to file a proof of claim); Fed. R. Bankr. P. 3006 (creditor may withdraw claim); Fed. R. Bankr. P. Official Form 10 (Proof of Claim). Further, the "Proof of Claim" form specifically states that it "should not be used to make a claim for an administrative expense" and that a "'request' for payment of an administrative expense may be filed pursuant to 11 U.S.C. [section] 503." Fed. R. Bankr. P. Official Form 10; see also Fed. R. Bankr. P. 9013 (request for an order shall be by written motion).

[8] Mr. Tarbox filed an application for employment of counsel under 11 U.S.C. 327 on July 20, 1999 and received court authorization on July 21, 1999. R. 2-14. Mr. Tarbox filed an application for employment of the accountant on July 1, 2002 and on July 2, 2002 received court authorization. R. 2-15.

On December 27, 2002, at the conclusion of the case, Mr. Tarbox submitted motions for compensation pursuant to 11 U.S.C. 330(a) of the Bankruptcy Code and Fed. R. Bankr. P. 2016. R. 3-43; R. 3-50. On the same day, he submitted his proposed Final Report pursuant to 11 U.S.C. 704(9). R. 3-18. Mr. Tarbox's report proposed the payment of interest on his, his attorney's and his accountant's fees and expenses, based on his assumption that his section 330(a) applications would be approved. R. 3-35. The Final Report reflected unpaid administrative expense claims of $4,541.11 (trustee compensation); $488.63 (trustee expenses); $1,507.50 (attorney compensation); $60.93 (attorney expenses); and $838.00 (accountant compensation). R 3-22. The Report proposed interest payments to unsecured creditor claims in the amount of $35,310.85. R. 3-33; see also R. 3-34 to 3-36. The proposed interest payment amounts or administratiove expense claims were as follows: $259.55 (trustee's fees); $30.01 (trustee's expenses); $92.59 (trustee's attorney expenses), $92.59 (trustee's attorney fees); $3.74 (trustee's attorney expenses); $51.47 (accounting fees); $1.66 (IRS claim); $112.46 (interest on IRS claim). R. 3-35. The United States Trustee objected to Mr. Tarbox's Final Report on the grounds that it proposed to pay interest on section 503(b)(2) administrative expense claims from the date of the petition rather than from the date the claim arose or was allowed. R. 3-58.

There was a surplus in this case after all claims were paid in full. See R. 3-18 to 3-42. Under section 726(a)(5), that meant "claim[s] paid under" section 726(a)(1)-(4) were entitled to post-petition interest "at the legal rate from the date of the filing of the petition." 11 U.S.C. 726(a)(5). The trustee and the United States Trustee agreed that administrative expense claims were "claim[s] paid under" section 726(a)(1), but disagreed on the calculation of the interest.[9]

Following a hearing, the court entered a memorandum opinion on May 16, 2003, and an Order Approving Trustee's Final Report and Allowing Compensation on June 16, 2003. R. 3-89, 3-96. The order awarded the requested compensation to Mr. Tarbox and his professionals under section 330 and authorized payment of such compensation under section 503(b)(2), but denied the payment of interest entirely under section 726(a)(5). R. 3-96. The bankruptcy court found at the threshold that administrative expense claims, such as the [9] On appeal to the district court, the United States Trustee advanced the same position it had in the bankruptcy case, and did not adopt the reasoning of the bankruptcy court. However, upon further review, the United States Trustee now agrees with the reasoning of the courts below that administrative expense claims are not claims paid under section 726(a)(1) so as to be entitled to payment of interest under section 726(a)(5). If this Court finds to the contrary, it should award interest on the trustee's compensation claims dating from the date the award of the compensation under the rule established by United States Trustee v. Fishback (In re Glados, Inc.), 83 F.3d 1360 (11th Cir. 1996) (construing 11 U.S.C. 726(a)(1) as it existed prior to its 1994 amendment).

trustee's fees and professional fees, are not "claim[s] paid under" section 726(a)(1). R. 3-94. The court focused on the plain language of section 726(a)(1), which provides for distribution of estate property, first, "in payment of claims of a kind specified . . . in section 507, proof of which is timely filed under [section 501] or tardily filed before the date on which the trustee commences distribution under this section." R. 3-93; see also 11 U.S.C. 726(a)(1) (emphasis added). The court concluded that even where there is a surplus of estate property, interest is not payable on administrative expense claims under 11 U.S.C. 726(a)(5) which arise during the pendency of a chapter 7 case for which no proof of claim is filed under 11 U.S.C. 501. R. 3-94. The court pointed out that it is impossible for administrative expense claims to meet that criteria, since only "creditors" may file proofs of claim under section 501 and by definition, administrative expense claimants, for purposes of an administrative expense claim, cannot, by statutory definition, be creditors. R. 3-94. The court concluded that trustees' fees were not claims paid under section 726(a)(5) and were not entitled to any interest under section 726(a)(5). R. 3-94. Based on this conclusion, the court denied the payment of interest on the fees and expenses of Mr. Tarbox, his counsel, and his accountant. R. 3-96. Mr. Tarbox filed a notice of appeal to the district court on June 24, 2003. R. 2-1.

The district court adopted and elaborated upon the analysis of the bankruptcy court, and affirmed the holding of the bankruptcy court that interest may not be paid on administrative expense claims under section 726(a)(5). R. 1-34. In reaching its conclusion, the district court "[took] to heart the Supreme Court's instruction that 'interpretations of a statute which would produce absurd results are to be avoided if alternative interpretations consistent with the legislative purpose are available," its "duty to give effect, if possible, to every clause and word of a statute, and its "reluctan[ce] to treat statutory terms as surplusage in any setting." R. 1-43 to 1-44 (citations omitted). Accordingly, the district court noted that section 507 clearly "draws within its compass both [administrative expense claims] and [pre-petition claims]," but refused to "prematurely halt its analysis there." R. 1-45. The court then concluded that "the general, inclusive reference to [section] 507 is limited by the clause referring to [the filing of proofs of claims under section] 501." Id. The district court "refuse[d] to treat the clause as surplusage." Id. Giving meaning to the section 501 clause of section 726(a)(1), the court concluded that the provision is inapplicable to administrative expense claims. R. 1-3.

The court reasoned that section 501 addresses the filing of "proofs of claims" by "creditors." R. 1-45. The court concluded that the trustee and other professionals, as well as other holders of administrative expense claims "do not constitute claim-filing creditors under section 501 since their claims" arose post-petition, and that "although 726(a)(1) seems to include them by reference to" section 507 claims, administrative expense claims are "winnowed out by the reference to [section] 501, because they are not of the kind proof of which is timely filed under [section] 501 for pre-petition claims by creditors." R. 1-45 to 1-46. Conversely, the lack of reference in section 726(a)(1) to section 503 (the administrative expense claim "equivalent" of 501), precludes administrative expense claims from being "draw[n] in" to 726(a)(1). See id. Finally, the court concluded that since 726(a)(1) does not apply to administrative expense claims, then administrative expense claims cannot be "claim[s] paid under" that section and consequently are not entitled to any interest payments under the plain language of section 726(a)(5). Id.

The court, although basing its holding on a plain language construction of the statute, found "no compelling reason to suppose" that the intent of Congress was to allow the payment of interest on administrative expense claims under section 726(a)(5). R. 1-46. Moreover, the court found that "adequate provision is made within the rest of the Code for payment of the trustee's administrative fees and expenses" under section 330 (approval and regulation of fees), section 326 (cap on fees), section 507 (priority of fees), and section 503 (payment of fees). Id. Stating that "[t]here is no reason to suspect that a further rule concerning these disbursements of administrative expenses would be buried within a section concerned with the procedures and priorities for the final distribution of property of the estate to unsecured creditors," R. 1-46, 47; the court then noted this Court's reasoning in Security State Bank v. IRS (In re Van Gerpen), 267 F.3d 453, 456 (5th Cir. 2001), that disbursement of "'estate funds to pay administrative expenses incurred by the trustee in the process of converting estate assets to cash' are 'markedly different'" from distribution within the context of section 726. R. 1-47. Finally, the court noted that the provision for interim compensation under section 331 meant that "the trustee does not have to wait until the final distribution to receive payment," and the "fact that he is allowed to [obtain interim compensation] under a reasonable schedule does not suggest" to the court "that Congress either felt compelled to or intended to provide for interest for those claims, especially within the section dealing with final distributions to unsecured creditors." R. 1-48.

Prior to 1994, it was generally accepted that trustees and professionals could receive interest under section 726(a)(5) of the Bankruptcy Code on commissions awarded under section 330(a). See, e.g., Boldt v. Crake (In re Riverside-Linden Inv. Co.), 945 F.2d 320 (9th Cir. 1991) (allowing interest from the date fees were awarded under 11 U.S.C. 330); United States Trustee v. Fishback (In re Glados, Inc.), 83 F.3d 1360 (11th Cir. 1996) (same). Five statutes combined to produce that result: section 330(a) (authorizing trustee awards); section 503(b)(2) (allowing the payment of section 330(a) awards as administrative expenses); section 507(a)(1) (giving section 503(b) claims priority); section 726(a)(1) (authorizing the satisfaction of section 507 claims); and 726(a)(5) (allowing interest on claims that fell under section 726(a)(1)).

That changed in 1994 because Congress amended section 726(a)(1) to restrict distributions under that section solely to pre-petition creditor claims filed under section 501 of the Code, and to tardily filed pre-petition claims. That meant trustee administrative expense claims fell outside section 726(a)(1) and therefore were no longer entitled to interest under section 726(a)(5). Failing to appreciate the significance of this change, Mr. Tarbox and the amicus curiae focus on the issue adjudicated in Glados and Riverside-Linden– when does interest begins accruing under section 726(a)(5) on section 330 fee awards. But, as the lower courts in this case correctly recognized, that issue is no longer relevant because amended section 726(a) no longer authorizes interest on such claims at all.

Section 726(a)(1) applies only to a claim "proof of which is timely filed under section 501" of the Code, or when such a claim is tardily filed. Mr. Tarbox did not file a claim under section 501. Nor could he. Section 501 applies only to creditor claims and section 101(10) restricts creditor claims to those that arise before the debtor files his bankruptcy petition. Mr. Tarbox's claim arises from work performed after the petition was filed. As the lower courts correctly concluded, his claim constituted a post-petition administrative expense claim based on the trustee and attorneys fees awarded to him under section 330(a) of the Bankruptcy Code.

Because his claims fall outside section 726(a)(1), as amended, he has no right to interest under section 726(a)(5). Instead, his section 330(a) awards, once "allowed" under section 503(b)(2), were eligible for "payment" under section 503(a), which does not provide for interest.

ARGUMENT

The lower courts properly declined to approve post-petition interest on the compensation to be paid to the trustee under sections 330(a), 503(b)(2), and 503(a), where section 726(a) does not authorize interest on such administrative expense claims.

1. The plain language of section 726(a) does not allow the payment of interest on trustee fees because the 1994 amendment to the section limited payment of interest to pre-petition claims of creditors. Prior to 1994, section 726(a) appeared to authorize the payment of trustee fees and other administrative expense claims, but courts were split as to when interest on trustee awards begins to accrue. However, in 1994, section 726(a) was amended so as to apply only to pre-petition creditors and exclude trustee fees and other post-petition claims. See Bankruptcy Reform Act of 1994, 108 Stat. 4106. Accordingly, the issue of when interest accrues on trustee fees under section 726(a)(5) became a non-issue in 1994, and the court decisions on this issue are inapposite to this appeal.[10]

2. The starting point for construing a statute "is the existing statutory text" and "not the predecessor statute[']s." Lamie v. United States Trustee, 124 S. Ct. 1023, 1030 (2004) (citations omitted). See also Richardson v. United States, 526 U.S. 813, 818 (1999) (a court must "look first to the language" of the statutory text); Boyce v. Greenway (In re Greenway), 71 F.3d 1177, 1179 (5th Cir. 1996) (same). Section 726(a)(1), as amended, is inapplicable to trustee fees because trustee fees fail to meet the criteria of having filed a proof of claim under section 501. Section 726(a)(1) provides for distribution of estate property in payment of (1) "claims of a kind specified in and in the order specified in [11 U.S.C. 507]," and (2) "proof of which is timely filed under [11 U.S.C. 501] or tardily filed before the date on which the trustee commences distribution under [section 726]." 11 U.S.C. 726(a)(1). Trustee fees are "of a kind specified under" section 507. 11 U.S.C. 507(a)(1) (administrative expense claims allowed under section 503(b)); 503(b)(2) (compensation and reimbursement awarded under section 330); 330(a) (compensation to trustees and other professionals). However, section 501 is inapplicable to trustee fees. Trustee and professionals seeking compensation never file a "proof of claim" under section 501, which is limited to the claims pre-petition creditors. See 11 U.S.C. 501(a) (limiting the filing of proofs of claims to those filed by "[a] creditor"); 101(10)(A) (defining creditor as one who holds a pre-petition claim); 11 U.S.C. 101(5) (defining claim).

[10] Mr. Tarbox principally relies on two decisions, Vogt and Smith, that neither of which considered the effect of the 1994 amendment, much less applied it. See In re Vogt, 250 B.R. 250 (Bankr. M.D. La. 2000); In re Smith, 267 B.R. 770, 771 (Bankr. W.D. Tex. 2001); compare with 11 U.S.C. 726(a)(1).

A trustee is not a creditor under section 501 because they do not hold a pre-petition claim. 11 U.S.C. 101(10)(A) (defining creditor). Instead, as the lower courts correctly held, trustees and their professionals perform their services entirely post-petition, which takes them out of the Code's definition of creditor and precludes them from filing creditor claims under section 501.[11] R. 2-11, 1-45. In response to the reasoning of the lower courts, Mr. Tarbox asserts that a trustee is a "creditor" under section 501 because he has an unliquidated, contingent, and unmatured claim in every case and may file "proof" under section 501. See Appellant Br. at 12. His reasoning fails to withstand scrutiny for four independent reasons.[12]

First, to be employed to act as a trustee, Mr. Tarbox had to be a "disinterested person" under 11 U.S.C. 701(a)(1), and by definition a "disinterested person" may not be a creditor. 11 U.S.C. 101(14)(A) ("'disinterested person' means person that- (A) is not a creditor * * *."). Under Mr. Tarbox's reasoning, a chapter 7 trustee, as a "creditor," would never be disinterested and could never be appointed in any case, which is a clearly absurd

[11] The Bankruptcy Code and Rules have established very specific procedures for the allowance and payment of professional compensation which are entirely unrelated to section 501. An application is filed under Fed. R. Bankr. P. 2016 and after notice and a hearing, the court may allow compensation under section 330(a) and allow the claim under section 503(b)(2) and authorize its "payment" under section 503(a).

[12] Even if Mr. Tarbox was a creditor entitled to file a proof of claim under section 501, he did not file a proof of claim under section 501. Therefore, his claim for fees would still fail to meet the criteria of section 726(a)(1).

result. Second, a creditor, as defined by section 101(10)(A),[13] must have a claim that arose at the time of or prior to the entry of the order for relief. Mr. Tarbox contends that a chapter 7 trustee is appointed "at the time of" the order for relief, and that "a trustee assumes his duties to the estate upon the petition filing [and simultaneously the order for relief], so as to give rise to a claim at that time." Appellant Br. at 12. Under 11 U.S.C. 701, however, a chapter 7 trustee is appointed "after the order for relief." Third, a chapter 7 trustee does not meet the definition of a creditor under section 101(10)(A), because he is not an entity that has "a claim against the debtor," but rather against the estate. 11 U.S.C. 101(10) (emphasis added); see 11 U.S.C. 323(a) ("The trustee in a case under [title 11] is the representative of the estate."). Fourth, the trustee's claim is an administrative expense claim, and a claim cannot be both a pre-petition creditor claim and a post-petition administrative expense claim. See Midland Cent. Appraisal Dist. v. Midland Indus. Serv. Corp. (In re Midland Indus. Serv. Corp.), 35 F.3d 164, 166 (5th Cir. 1994). Section 326(a) of the Code specifically provides that a chapter 7 trustee's compensation may be allowed under section 330, and section 503(a) and (b)(2) specifically provide that, after notice and a hearing, compensation allowed under section 330 is paid as administrative expense claim, not as a claim of a creditor. 11 U.S.C. 503(a) and (b)(2); compare 11 U.S.C. 501 (creditor may file proof of claim), 502(a) (claim for which proof filed under 501 deemed allowed without notice and a hearing).

3. Section 726(a) applies only to creditor claims, not administrative expense claims, and there is no justification for disregarding the plain language of the statute to include section 330 trustee compensation. Significantly, the position advanced by Mr. Tarbox requires much more than the interpretation of an ambiguous word or phrase – it requires this Court to excise the entire "proof of which is filed under 501" clause added to section 726(a)(1) in 1994. "There is a basic difference between filling a gap left by Congress' silence and rewriting rules that Congress has affirmatively and specifically enacted." Mobil Oil Corp. v. Higginbotham, 436 U.S. 618, 625 (1978). The lower courts recognized this, and accorded proper "deference to the supremacy of the Legislature" in choosing the words of a federal statute. United States v. Locke, 471 U.S. 84, 95 (1985) (Court's unwillingness to "soften the import of Congress' chosen words" longstanding (citation omitted)).

This Court must apply amended section 726(a)(1)'s plain language unless it produces an absurd result. See, e.g., Lamie v. United States Trustee, 124 S. Ct.

1023, 1030 (2004).[14] There is nothing absurd about amended section 726(a)(1)'s treatment of interest on trustee administrative expense claims. As amended, the section continues to allow interest under section 726(a)(5) from the date of the filing of the petition on a series of pre-petition creditor claims that exist as of the date of the filing of the petition.[14] It simply no longer authorizes interest on administrative expense claims, like Mr. Tarbox's, that do not exist as of the date that interest begins to accrue under section 726(a)(5). This rectifies an absurdity that existed under the superceded statute. Prior to 1994, the text of section 726(a)(1) allowed trustees to receive interest from date of the filing of the bankruptcy petition even though they had no fee award on which interest could accrue and they had not yet performed any services in the case. Given this absurdity, the Ninth and Eleventh circuits refused to apply the plain language of the pre-1994 statute, and did not allow interest to begin accruing until trustees obtained final fee awards. United States Trustee v. Fishback (In re Glados), 83 F.3d 1360, 1365-66 (11th Cir. 1996); Boldt v. Crake (In re Riverside-Linden Inv.

[14] As amended, section 726(a)(5) continues to authorize interest on the other section 507 claims incorporated by reference in section 726(a)(1), as well as claims under sections 726(a)(2)-(4). These pre-petition creditor claims exist at the time of the filing of the petition.

Co.), 945 F.2d 320, 323 (9th Cir. 1991). By adding the section 501 requirement to section 726(a)(1) the 1994 amendment took trustee administrative expense claims outside the ambit of section 726(a)(1), and rectified the prior statute's absurdity. Thus, the 1994 amendment is not absurd and should be applied according to its plain language.

4. Nor is there any reason to assume that administrative expense claims must fall under section 726(a) in order to receive payment. The argument of Mr. Tarbox and the amicus curiae for disregarding the plain language of section 726(a)(1) is that the lower courts' reasoning does away with all mechanisms for payment of administrative expense claims. However, section 726(a) is unnecessary to allow payment of administrative expense claims because sections 330(a), 503(b)(2), and 503(a) provide the mechanism for such allowance. 11 U.S.C. 330(a) (award); 502(b)(2) (allowance); 503(a) (payment). See also Milwaukee Engraving Co., Inc. 219 F.3d 635 (7th Cir. 2000) (construing these provisions); F/S Airlease II, Inc. v. Simon (In re F/S Airlease II, Inc.), 844 F.2d 99 (3d Cir. 1988) (same); Cushman & Wakefield of Conn., Inc. v. Keren Ltd. P'ship (In re Keren Ltd. P'ship), 189 F.3d 86 (2nd Cir. 1999).

Further, Mr. Tarbox and the amicus curiae's construction disregards this Court's prior recognition that administrative expense claims are not "paid" under section 726(a). In Security State Bank v. IRS (In re Van Gerpen), this Court, while addressing the proper interpretation of the phrase "commences distribution" under section 726(a), agreed that "while payments made on account of compensation and other administrative expense applications must be accounted for, it is not necessary that they be claims paid within the final distribution." 267 F.3d 453, 456 (5th Cir. 2001) (citations omitted). Mr. Tarbox and the amicus curiae's contention that administrative expense claims must be paid under section 726(a)(1) or not at all cannot stand under Van Gerpen. Instead, administrative expense claims are allowed under section 503(b)(2) and "payment" is made under section 503(a).

5. Finally, the lower courts' interpretation of section 726(a)(1) draws support from a Second Circuit decision holding the term "proof of which is filed under section 501" appearing in 11 U.S.C. 502(a) also excludes post-petition administrative expense claims. Nostas Assocs. v. Costich (In re Klein Sleep Products, Inc.), 78 F.3d 18 (2d Cir. 1996); See also 11 U.S.C. 502(a) ("A claim or interest, proof of which is filed under section 501 of this title * * *"). In Klein Sleep, the Second Circuit held that a damage claim for future rent arising from a trustee's rejection of an assumed lease was an administrative expense. Klein Sleep, 78 F.3d at 28. The court then ruled that section 502(b)(6)'s cap on future rent was inapplicable to administrative expense claims because section 502(a) applies only to claims "proof of which is filed under section 501[,]" and administrative expense claims are not such claims. Id. Because section 726(a)(1) uses the same phrase, it should be interpreted the same way. See, e.g., Ratzlaf v. United States, 510 U.S. 135, 143 (1994) (term appearing in several statutes should be read the same way).

Conclusion

For these reasons, the United States Trustee respectfully asks this Court to affirm the orders entered below.

BASIS OF APPELLATE JURISDICTION

The United States Bankruptcy Court for the Southern District of Mississippi had jurisdiction under 28 U.S.C. §§ 157(b) and 1334(a) to hear the underlying case, commenced by the filing of a voluntary petition under chapter 7 of the Bankruptcy Code, 11 U.S.C. § 701, et seq. On December 18, 2007, the bankruptcy court entered an order granting the United States Trustee's motion to dismiss Troy and Elaine Burris Tate's case for abuse pursuant to 11 U.S.C. § 707(b)(1). On December 26, 2007, the Tates filed a timely notice of appeal from that order. See 28 U.S.C. § 158(c)(2); Fed. R. Bankr. P. 8002(a). This Court has jurisdiction over this appeal under 28 U.S.C. § 158(a)(1).

STATEMENT OF THE ISSUES

Whether the bankruptcy court correctly dismissed the Tates' bankruptcy case under 11 U.S.C. § 707(b)(1) and (2).

STANDARD OF REVIEW

______A district court reviews a bankruptcy court's findings of fact under a clearly erroneous standard. In re Chesnut, 422 F.3d 298, 301 (5th Cir. 2005); *Continental Casualty Co. v. Whether the bankruptcy court erred in dismissing the Tates' bankruptcy case under 11 U.S.C. § 707(b)(1) based on 11 U.S.C. § 707(b)(2)'s presumption of abuse is a question of law subject to de novo review.

STATEMENT OF THE CASE

On January 10, 2007, Mr. Troy Edwin Tate and Mrs. Elaine Burris Tate (the "TATES") filed a petition for relief under chapter 7 of the Bankruptcy Code. On March 19, 2007, the United States Trustee filed a motion to dismiss the Tates' case for abuse under 11 U.S.C. § 707(b)(1) based on a presumption of abuse that arose as a matter of law under 11 U.S.C. § 707(b)(2) and mandated dismissal. On December 18, 2007, the bankruptcy court granted the United States Trustee's motion and dismissed the Tates' case.[1] This appeal followed.

STATEMENT OF THE FACTS

I. Statutory Framework

A. 2005 Reform Act

The Bankruptcy Abuse Prevention and Consumer Protection Act of 2005 (the "2005 REFORM ACT") significantly amended the Bankruptcy Code by, among other things, adding a new means test for determining whether granting a discharge to a chapter 7 individual debtor with primarily consumer debts would be an abuse.[2] See 11 U.S.C. § 707(b)(1). The means test is the "heart" of the 2005 Reform Act's consumer bankruptcy reforms and acts as a "screening mechanism . . . to ensure that debtors repay creditors the maximum they can afford." H.R. Rep. 109-31 at 1 (I) (2005), as reprinted in 2005 U.S.C.C.A.N. 88, 89. Congress enacted the means test to prevent debtors from obtaining chapter 7 relief when they have an ability to repay their creditors. Under prior law, "some bankruptcy debtors [were] able to repay a significant portion of their debts," but were not doing so because the law contained "no clear mandate requiring these debtors to repay their debts." Id. at 5 and n.18, as reprinted in 2005 U.S.C.C.A.N. 88, 92.

Before the 2005 Reform Act was adopted, section 707(b) authorized dismissal based on a finding that granting a discharge of debts would be a "substantial abuse" of chapter 7. It also required courts to presume that a debtor was entitled to a chapter 7 discharge. The 2005 Reform Act repealed the presumption in favor of granting a chapter 7 discharge and replaced it with a new one: granting a chapter 7 discharge to a debtor is now presumed to be an "abuse" of chapter 7 if a detailed mathematical formula set out in the statute, commonly referred to as the "means test," yields to the debtor a minimum amount of monthly disposable income. See 11 U.S.C. § 707(b)(2). The 2005 Reform Act now commands dismissal where the court finds that granting relief would be an "abuse" of chapter 7 under the circumstances described in newly-added subsections (b)(2) and (b)(3). In cases where the presumption of abuse does not arise or is rebutted under subsection (b)(2), section 707(b)(3) allows the court to find abuse where the debtor filed the petition in bad faith or the totality of the circumstances of the debtor's financial situation demonstrates abuse.

B. Section 707(b)(2)'s Means Test

Section 707(b)(2)'s means test requires the bankruptcy court to perform a series of calculations to determine whether granting a chapter 7 discharge to a debtor would be a presumed abuse warranting dismissal of the case or conversion to another chapter of the Bankruptcy Code. See 11 U.S.C. § 707(b)(1), 707(b)(2)(A). If the presumption of abuse under section 707(b)(2) arises, the debtor may attempt to rebut the presumption by demonstrating special circumstances that justify income or expense adjustments for which there is no reasonable alternative. 11 U.S.C. § 707(b)(2)(B). If the presumption does not arise or is rebutted, section 707(b)(3) requires the court to consider whether the case is an abuse due to the debtor's bad faith or the totality of the circumstances of the debtor's financial situation demonstrates abuse. 11 U.S.C. § 707(b)(3)(A) and (B).

The means test only applies to debtors whose income is above the applicable state median. 11 U.S.C. § 707(b)(7). To calculate whether such high-income debtors' cases are presumptively abusive under section 707(b)(2), the Bankruptcy Code requires them to file Form 22A, Statement of Current Monthly Income and Means Test Calculation ("FORM 22A" or "MEANS TEST FORM"). 11 U.S.C. §§ 521 and 707(b)(2)(C). This is an Official Form and a part of the Federal Rules of Bankruptcy Procedure. See Fed. R. Bankr. P. Official Form 22A.

To implement the mathematical formula set out in section 707(b)(2), the Means Test Form first establishes a debtor's "current monthly income" ("CMI"), which is the debtor's average income for the six calendar months preceding the month of the bankruptcy filing. See 11 U.S.C. § 101(10A). If a debtor's annualized CMI is below the applicable state median family income – i.e., if the debtor is a poorer debtor – the debtor's case will not be presumed abusive and cannot be dismissed under the means test. 11 U.S.C. § 707(b)(7). When, however, annualized CMI exceeds the applicable median family income – i.e., the debtor is a higher-income debtor, as is in the Tates' case– section 707(b)(2)(A) prescribes a statutorily mandated calculation that yields the debtor's monthly disposable income by reducing CMI by certain enumerated categories of expenses. See 11 U.S.C. § 707(b)(2)(A)(ii), (iii) and (iv). Under the means test's math, disposable income constitutes the presumptive amount debtors can repay creditors. Id.

If an above-median debtor's monthly disposable income, determined by deducting allowed expenses from CMI, is equal to or exceeds $166.67 per month (or $10,000 over 60 months), the presumption of abuse arises. 11 U.S.C. § 707(b)(2).[3] If the debtor's monthly disposable income is less than $100.00 per month (or $6,000 over 60 months), the presumption of abuse does not arise. 11 U.S.C. § 707(b)(2)(A)(I). If the debtor's monthly disposable income is between $100 per month and $166.67 per month (between $6,000 and $10,000 over 60 months), the presumption of abuse arises if the disposable income, over 60 months, is sufficient to pay 25 percent of the debtor's nonpriorirty unsecured debt. Id.

At issue in this appeal is whether the Tates qualify to deduct on their Means Test Form the transportation ownership expense under the Internal Revenue Services'("IRS") Local Standards to calculate their monthly disposable income.

To determine what expenses can be deducted from CMI in determining current monthly disposable income, section 707(b)(2)(A)(ii)(I) provides that a debtor's "monthly expenses shall be the debtor's applicable monthly expense amounts specified under the National Standards and Local Standards and the debtor's actual monthly expenses for the categories specified as Other Necessary Expenses issued by the Internal Revenue Service for the area in which the debtor resides." 11 U.S.C. § 707(b)(2)(A)(ii)(I) (emphasis added). The IRS' Local Standards include transportation and housing related expenses and apportion transportation expenses in two components. See IRS Collection Financial Standards, under heading "Local Standards: Transportation," available at http://www.irs.gov/individuals/article/0,,id=96543,00.html.[4] The first component includes costs

[3] Pursuant to section 104 of the Bankruptcy Code, dollar amounts set forth in Title 11 applicable to the presumption of abuse determination under the means test were adjusted by the United States Judicial Conference effective April 1, 2007. 72 Fed. Reg. 7082 (Feb. 14, 2007). This case is not subject to the new dollar amounts.

[4] The IRS revised its Collection Financial Standards, effective October 1, 2007, and such revisions were made applicable to bankruptcy cases filed as of January 1, 2008. See IRS Collection Financial Standards, under heading "Local Standards: Transportation," available at http://www.irs.gov/individuals/article/0,,id=96543,00.html.. Because the Tates' case was filed on January 10, 2007, only the Collection Financial Standards in effect prior to associated with operating the vehicle while the second component includes costs associated with financing the vehicle, i.e. vehicle ownership. Id. This appeal involves only the second component – whether the Tates can claim a transportation ownership expense.

If section 707(b)(2) allows the Tates the full transportation ownership expense deduction, the presumption of abuse does not arise and this case should not be dismissed. However, if the bankruptcy court correctly determined that section 707(b)(2) does not allow the Tates to claim these vehicle ownership deductions in this case, then this Court should affirm the bankruptcy court's decision.

II. Factual Background[5]

Mr. Troy Edwin Tate and Mrs. Elaine Burris Tate filed a voluntary petition for relief under chapter 7 of the Bankruptcy Code on January 10, 2007. (DE 1). Mr. Tate works as a ballast control operator for BP America Production Company and Mrs. Tate is a nursery worker for Trinity United Methodist Church of Picayune, Mississippi. (DE 3). The Tates' debt obligations are primarily consumer debts. (Id.). The Tates' nonpriority unsecured debt totals $91,993.29. (Id.).

The Tates filed their Means Test Form on January 10, 2007. (DE 5). It listed their current monthly income as $7,830.35, for an annualized monthly income of $93,964.20. (Id.). The

For the Court's convenience, a true and correct pdf copy of the Collection Financial Standards applicable to this case are attached as Exhibit "A" and incorporated herein by reference. It is important to note, however, that the revisions made by the IRS effective October 1, 2007 do not change any result in this case. As set forth in the current Collection Financial Standards, the Local Standard for Vehicle Operation is still made expressly contingent on the existence of a loan or lease payment on a vehicle. See id. As explained by the IRS, the recent revisions to the Local Standards were made to create equal allowances for first and second vehicles, add a separate public transportation allowance and reorganize the manner in which taxpayers in certain counties calculate their transportation operating expenses. See id., under heading "Recent Revisions."

applicable annualized median family income for a family of four in Mississippi is $47,726.00. (Id.). Accordingly, the Tates' current monthly income exceeded the applicable state median family income amount by $46,238.20, which meant the Tates were required to complete the expense portion of Form 22A. (See 11 U.S.C. § 707(b)(7)).

The Tates owned four vehicles on the date they filed their bankruptcy petition. (DE 3). The Tates own three vehicles free and clear of liens: a 2001 Chevrolet Silverado, a 1992 Chevrolet Silverado and a 1967 Chevrolet Camaro. (Id.). The Tates subsequently abandoned their only secured debt on the fourth vehicle, a 1999 Toyota Solara. (Id.).[6] On February 8, 2007, the bankruptcy court entered an order authorizing the secured creditor to repossess and sell the Toyota Solara. (DE 14).

On the Means Test Form the Tates filled out, they claimed deductions under section 707(b)(2) totaling $7,692.69, which resulted in monthly disposable income of $137.66. (DE 5). That was below the threshold of $166.67 required for the presumption of abuse to arise. (Id.). In making these calculations, the Tates claimed the IRS Standard transportation ownership/lease expenses for two vehicles on Lines 23 and 24 of their Means Test Form, in the amounts of $471.00 and $332.00, respectively. (DE 5).[7] The Tates claimed a total of $1,146.00 for transportation

"The term 'abandonment' is defined to mean 'desert, surrender, forsake, or cede...To give up absolutely ... to relinquish all connection with or concern in; to desert.'" In re Robertson, 72 B.R. 2, 4 (Bankr. D. Colo. 1985) (citations omitted). An abandonment of title to property must be 'clear and unmistakable.' Id.

[7] In addition to these amounts, the Tates claimed a $343.00 deduction for the IRS Standard "transportation, vehicle operation/public transportation expense" for two or more vehicles on Line 22. (Id.). Based on the Internal Revenue Manual, the United States Trustee would permit the Tates an additional $200.00 operating expense per vehicle [for a total deduction of $743.00 on Line 22] because the Tates' vehicles are over six years old. (See Internal Revenue Manual, Part 5 [entitled "Collecting Process"], Chapter 8, § 5.8.5.5.2, Treatment of Non-Business Transportation Expenses, which may be found on the IRS website at http://www.irs.gov/irm/part5/ch08s05.html).

deductions on Means Test Form Lines 22, 23 and 24. (Id.).

11 U.S.C. § 704(b)(1) requires United States Trustees to review all of the materials debtors file to ensure their accuracy. Upon reviewing the Tates' materials, the United States Trustee determined that section 707(b)(2) did not entitle them to claim the transportation ownership expense deductions on Form 22A because the Tates own their vehicles free and clear of liens. (DE 21, 34). The United States Trustee determined, however, that the Tates were entitled to an extra $200.00 per vehicle for operating expenses on Means Test Form Line 22 because of the age of their vehicles. (Id.). Therefore, the United States Trustee calculated that the Tates' total deduction amount for transportation expenses was $743.00. (DE 21). After eliminating the transportation ownership expenses on Means Test Form Lines 23 and 24, the United States Trustee recalculated the Tates' monthly disposable income and determined that the Tates had at least $355.04 per month that could be used to repay creditors. (Id.).

Since the amount the United States Trustee calculated exceeded the presumption threshold of $166.67, the United States Trustee filed a statement under section 704(b)(1) on February 16, 2007, that the presumption of abuse arose in the Tates' case. (DE 16).

On March 19, 2007, the United States Trustee moved to dismiss the Tates' bankruptcy case under 11 U.S.C. § 707(b)(1) based on the presumption of abuse under section 707(b)(2). (DE 21). The Tates objected to the United States Trustee's motion to dismiss on March 27, 2007. (DE 24). In their objection, and later in their response brief, the Tates admitted they own their vehicles free and clear of encumbrances. (DE 24, 36). However, the Tates asserted that the language of the 2005

However, even after allowing this additional expense, the United States Trustee determined that the presumption of abuse still arose in this case. (DE 16, 21).

Committee Notes for Form 22A permitted them to deduct their transportation ownership expenses. (Id.).

After briefing on the transportation ownership expense issue (DE 34 and DE 36), the bankruptcy court granted the United States Trustee's motion and dismissed the Tates' case under section 707(b)(2). (DE 37, 38). The bankruptcy court held the Tates failed the means test because "the transportation ownership expense should not be taken if no actual car payment exists." (DE 37). The Tates timely filed their notice of appeal from the bankruptcy court's December 18, 2007, dismissal order on December 26, 2007. (DE 44). See 11 U.S.C. §158(c)(2); Fed. R. Bankr. P. 8002(a).

SUMMARY OF THE ARGUMENT

The bankruptcy court correctly dismissed this case as an abuse of chapter 7 of the Bankruptcy Code. Under section 707(b)(2) of the Bankruptcy Code, cases are dismissed for abuse when a debtor's income, less statutorily prescribed expenses, leaves more than $166.67 in monthly disposable income. In this case, the bankruptcy court agreed with the United States Trustee that the Tates have at least $355.04 in monthly disposable income because they were not permitted to claim ownership expenses for two vehicles they own free and clear of any loan or lease payment. On appeal, the Tates do not contest the bankruptcy court's conclusion that their case must be dismissed if they improperly claimed transportation expenses for these vehicles. But the Tates argue that they may claim loan or lease payments under the statute even though these payments do not exist.

The bankruptcy court correctly ruled the Tates could not claim vehicle loan or lease payments because the law allows them to claim only "applicable" expenses under section 707(b)(2)(A)(ii)(I), and they own their vehicles free and clear. By using the word "applicable," Congress limited eligibility for expenses under the Local Standards to debtors for whom the expenses apply. Because the vehicle ownership expense, intended for acquisition/financing of a vehicle, does not apply with respect to the Tates' vehicles, the bankruptcy court correctly held that they were not eligible to deduct the expenses under the means test.

The bankruptcy court's reading of the statute is identical to the reading that all five appellate courts to have considered the issue to date have given to section 707(b)(2)(A)(ii)(I). It is the best reading of the statutory language because it gives meaning to all the words in section 707(b)(2)(A)(ii)I). On the other hand, the Tates' proffered construction reads the word "applicable" out of the statute altogether.

Reading "applicable" in section 707(b)(2) as requiring a loan or lease payment as a prerequisite to the deduction also has the salutary effect of applying the means tests in a manner that is consistent with the Internal Revenue Service's longstanding application of this standard. Under section 707(b)(2), the means test employs certain standard expenses issued by the IRS. 11 U.S.C. § 707(b)(2)(A)(ii)(I). In applying its standards to taxpayers, the IRS does not allow taxpayers to claim vehicle ownership expenses absent a monthly car payment expense. See IRS Collection Financial Standards attached hereto as Exhibit A; see also n.4, supra. Congress' use of "applicable" in section 707(b)(2) means this expense should be denied to debtors like the Tates, who do not have a car loan or lease, for the same reasons the IRS does not allow taxpayers to claim such phantom expenses.

Finally, the bankruptcy court's order comports with sound notions of public policy and the primary purpose of Congress in passing bankruptcy reform legislation in 2005 – including the amendments at issue in this appeal. The 2005 legislation was intended to ensure that debtors would repay their debts when they can. By not allowing the Tates to claim phantom expenses for their vehicles, the bankruptcy court furthered that purpose.

ARGUMENT

I. THE BANKRUPTCY COURT PROPERLY DISALLOWED THE TATES' CLAIMED VEHICLE OWNERSHIP EXPENSES BECAUSE SUCH EXPENSES ONLY APPLY TO DEBTORS WHO, UNLIKE THE TATES, MAKE PAYMENTS ON ENCUMBERED VEHICLES.

The Tates agree the bankruptcy court could dismiss their case if it correctly ruled they could not claim loan or lease payments on vehicles they own free and clear of such payments. The bankruptcy court's ruling denying these expenses and dismissing their case merits affirmance because the Bankruptcy Code does not allow the Tates to claim such inapplicable expenses.

A. Transportation Ownership Expenses Are Not "Applicable" to the Tates Because They Do Not Make Any Payments for Ownership of a Vehicle.

The Bankruptcy Code allows debtors to claim only transportation ownership expenses that are "applicable" to them. 11 U.S.C. § 707(b)(2)(A)(ii)(I). The Tates have no "applicable" transportation ownership expenses because they do not have secured debt or lease payment obligations for their vehicles. (DE 3). Their attempt to claim expenses they do not have is prohibited by the Bankruptcy Code.

Section 707(b)(2)(A)(ii)(I) of the Bankruptcy Code provides that a "debtor's monthly expenses shall be the debtor's applicable monthly expense amounts specified under the . . . Local Standards . . . issued by the Internal Revenue Service. . . ." 11 U.S.C. § 707(b)(2)(A)(ii)(I) (emphasis added). The statute thus expressly provides that before the specific IRS expense amounts may be included in the debtor's allowed monthly expenses, the expense must itself first be applicable to the debtor. Id.

The Bankruptcy Code does not define the word "applicable." Where a statutory term is undefined, it is a basic principle of statutory construction that courts should give such terms their ordinary meanings. E.g., Smith v. U.S., 508 U.S. 223, 228 (1993) ("When a word is not defined by statute, we normally construe it in accord with its ordinary or natural meaning.").

The dictionary defines "applicable" to mean "applying or capable of being applied; relevant; suitable; appropriate." Random House Unabridged Dictionary (2006).

This ordinary meaning should be given to the term "applicable" as it appears in section 707(b)(2)(A)(ii)(I) since there is no clear indication that Congress intended to give such term a different meaning. See Thompson v. Goetzmann, 337 F.3d 489, 498 n.20 (5th Cir. 2003) ("[D]ictionaries are a principal source for ascertaining the ordinary meaning of statutory language."). See also In re Meade,[8] EP-07-CV-121-DB, slip op. at 5 (W.D. Tex. Jan 24, 2008); In re Deadmond, 2008 WL 1991165 (D. Mont. Jan. 22, 2008); In re Ransom, 2007 WL 4625248 at *6 (B.A.P. 9th Cir. Dec. 27, 2007) (recognizing that "applicable," in its ordinary sense, means "capable of or suitable for being applied," and concluding that the vehicle ownership expense is not "capable of being applied to the debtor if he does not make any lease or loan payments.").

Like all five appellate courts that have considered this issue to date,[9] the bankruptcy court in the Tates' case applied the ordinary meaning of "applicable" to deny the Tates' ownership

[8] A copy of the Meade slip opinion is attached hereto as Exhibit "B" and incorporated by reference.

[9] To date, all published lower courts in the Fifth Circuit also have held that a debtor must possess a loan or lease payment in order to take the transportation ownership expense on the means test. See Meade, EP-07-CV-121-DB, slip op. at 8 (W.D. Tex. Jan 24, 2008); In re Brown, 376 B.R. 601, 603 (Bankr. S.D. Tex. 2007); In re Ceasar, 364 B.R. 257, 262 (Bankr. W.D. La. 2007); In re Pampas, 369 B.R. 290, 296-97 (Bankr. expenses they do not have. Here, the Tates seek to claim an expense for two non-existent loan or lease payments. By inserting the word "applicable" in section 707(b)(2)(A)(ii)(I), Congress limited eligibility for expenses under the Local Standards to a debtor for whom such expenses are "relevant; suitable; appropriate" – thereby excluding the Tates' non-existent expenses.

In contrast to the ordinary meaning of "applicable" that universally has been adopted by appellate courts, the Tates suggest that "applicable" means that debtors may claim ownership expenses they do not have because "applicable" merely refers to "the number of vehicles owned or leased by the debtor and where the debtor resides." Appellants' Br. at 8. Under the Tates' reading, they can claim a vehicle loan or lease payment as an expense on the Means Test Form for each car they own even if they do not have such an expense. This interpretation strips "applicable" of any meaning in the statute. See, e.g., Deadmond, 2008 WL 191165 at *4 ("The word ['applicable'] must mean something, and if some monthly expenses are applicable, then other monthly expenses are not applicable."); Meade, slip op. at 5 ("If the debtor can claim the deduction, the statute then permits an eligible debtor to select the amount listed in the IRS Standards."); Ransom, 2007 WL 4625248 at *6 (granting debtors an allowance for ownership expenses they do not have would "read[] 'applicable' right out of the Bankruptcy Code"); In re Ross-Tousey,[10] 368 B.R. at 765 (E.D. Wis. 2007) ("Had Congress intended to indiscriminately allow all expense amounts specified in the National and Local Standards, it would have written 707(b)(2)(A)(ii)(I) [without using the word 'applicable.']"); In re Hartwick, 373 B.R. 645, 650 (D. Minn. 2007) (debtor's "actual" expense does not control the amount of the deduction, but the debtor must still have some expense in the first place before the Standard amount becomes "applicable.").

[10] This case is currently on appeal to the Seventh Circuit, Case No. 07-2503.

Further, in arguing for a contrary interpretation, the Tates overextend the distinction between the words "actual" and "applicable" in section 707(b)(2)(A)(ii)(I). See Appellants' Br. at 8-9. They argue that because Congress used both words in the statute, and the words have different meanings, they need not have any "actual" expense for the ownership expense to be "applicable." Id. This logic is misguided, however, because, as the Ross-Tousey court explained, there is no indication in section 707(b)(2)(A)(ii)(I) that Congress intended the words "applicable" and "actual" to have essentially opposite meanings – which is what the Tates argue. Ross-Tousey, 368 B.R. at 765. Rather, the better reading of "applicable" in the context of section 707(b)(2)(A)(ii)(I) is that it may have two meanings: first, the ownership expense is "applicable" if the debtor makes a loan or lease payment on a vehicle, and second, the amount allowed to the debtor is the "applicable" amount provided under the IRS Local Standards, and not the "actual" amount. See Hartwick, 373 B.R. at 653; Ross-Tousey, 368 B.R. at 765 ("This reading gives meaning to the distinction between 'applicable' and 'actual' without taking a further step to conclude that 'applicable' means 'nonexistent' or 'fictional.'").

By giving the term "applicable" its logical, common-sense meaning, a determination of allowable expenses under the means test becomes a two-step process. The first step is eligibility-i.e., does the debtor qualify for a transportation ownership expense? If so, then the second step is to quantify the expense amount the eligible debtor is allowed by looking at the IRS Standard amounts that are specified for the number of vehicles owned by the debtor and where the debtor lives. The Bankruptcy Court properly rejected the Tates' reading because it impermissibly skips the first step of determining whether they are eligible for the ownership expense by virtue of having a loan or lease payment for a vehicle. Instead, it proceeds directly to the second by only considering the amount the IRS would allow eligible taxpayers to claim for ownership of two vehicles. Accord In re Devilliers, 358 B.R. 849, 864 (Bankr. E.D. La. 2007) (concluding that the ownership expense "is not the equivalent of an allowance for depreciation or an invitation for a debtor to 'save' for the ultimate replacement of an existing vehicle . . . . [instead, it is] designed to assist with the acquisition of a vehicle on credit").

B. The Bankruptcy Court's Interpretation of "Applicable" in Section 707(b)(2) has the Salutary Effect of Treating the IRS Transportation Standard the Same Way the IRS Treats These Expenses.

Prohibiting the Tates from deducting nonexistent transportation ownership expenses has the additional benefit of treating inapplicable expenses in bankruptcy cases the same way the IRS has long treated them. In providing which deductions a debtor may take under the means test, Congress specifically stated that a debtor is permitted to deduct "the debtor's applicable monthly expense amounts specified under the . . . Local Standards. . .issued by the Internal Revenue Service." 11 U.S.C. § 707(b)(2)(A)(ii)(I) (emphasis added). Accordingly, how the IRS applies the standards that it developed for its debt collection purposes is instructive on the question of how the same standards might be applied in bankruptcy cases under section 707(b)(2). See, e.g., Hartwick, 373 B.R. at 650-51 ("[I]n order to determine whether the expense Standards issued by the IRS are 'applicable,' the most logical resource to consult is the IRS."). See also In re Slusher, 359 B.R. 290, 309 (Bankr. D. Nev. 2007) ("[I]f guidance is sought on the meaning of the IRS standards that Congress incorporated into the Bankruptcy Code, practical reason would suggest that court should consider the full manner by which the IRS uses these standards.").

Contrary to the Tates' assertion that it would be "inappropriate" to consider how the IRS applies its own standards [Appellants' Br. at 6], legislative history of the 2005 Reform Act fully supports the conclusion that Congress intended for the IRS Standards to govern here. The House Report accompanying the Act provided that "[i]n addition to other specified expenses, the debtor's monthly expenses – exclusive of any payments for debts (unless otherwise permitted) – must be the applicable monthly amounts set forth in the [IRS] Financial Analysis Handbook as Necessary Expenses under the National and Local Standards categories. . ." H.R. Rep. No. 109-31(I), at 99-100 & n.65 (2005) (also noting that transportation expenses under the Local Transportation Standards include expenses for "vehicle payments").

The IRS's Collection Financial Standards in effect when the Tates filed their case corroborate the bankruptcy court's construction of the term "applicable." The Collection Financial Standards note that the transportation standards consist of nationwide figures for monthly loan or lease payments, and additional amounts for monthly operating costs. However, "[i]f a taxpayer has no car payment, or no car, [only] the operating costs portion of the transportation standard is used to come up with the allowable transportation expense." Ex. A; see n.4*, supra*. See also Internal Revenue Manual, Financial Analysis Handbook, Pt. 5, ch. 15, § 5.15.1.7(4.B)); IRS Financial Analysis Handbook, Pt. 5, ch. 15, § 5.15.1.7(4.B) (providing for purposes of IRS collection that if taxpayer has no vehicle loan or lease payments, the ownership cost is not applied), available at www.irs.gov/irm/part5/ch15s01.html.

Those IRS Collection Financial Standards reveal that the IRS's ownership expense was calculated based on car financing data.[11] This offers further guidance that the ownership expense was intended to account for the expense of financing a vehicle over time and is inapplicable if a debtor has no such acquisition financing expense. See Ex. A (stating that the vehicle ownership expense calculated by the IRS is based on the "five-year average of new and used car financing data compiled by the Federal Reserve Board of Governors"). It is not simply a cost associated with owning a car, such as repair or maintenance. Id. As such, the IRS does not treat the "ownership cost" expense as applicable when a taxpayer does not have a monthly expense related to financing a car. The same thing happens under the means test because the means test allows debtors to claim only an "applicable" car expense – not a phantom one.

Finally, as discussed above, considering IRS practice in interpreting "applicable" expenses in section 707(b)(2)(A)(ii)(I) does not, as the Tates suggest [Appellants' Br. at 8-9], negate the section's later allowance of "actual" monthly expenses in the IRS categories of Other Necessary Expenses. Rather, "a natural reading" of section 707(b)(2)(A)(ii)(I) indicates that the words "actual" and "applicable" limit the relevant expense deductions in different ways. Slusher, 359 B.R. at 308 ("Had Congress intended to indiscriminately allow all expense amounts specified in the National and Local Standards, it would have written section 707(b)(2)(A)(ii)(I) to read, 'The debtor's monthly expenses shall be the monthly amounts specified under the National Standards and the Local Standards . . . .' rather than 'The debtor's monthly expenses shall be the debtor's applicable monthly expense amounts specified under the National and Local Standards.'").

C. The Construction of Section 707(b)(2)(A)(ii)(I) Adopted To Date By All Appellate Courts Better Implements Bankruptcy Policy.

The Tates' proffered statutory construction would lead to arbitrary and unfair results, and would contribute to bankruptcy abuse. Under their interpretation of section 707(b)(2)(A)(ii)(I), "debtors who own two unusable cars rusting in their back yard would be entitled to the windfall benefit of both ownership and operating expense deductions although they, in fact, incur no expenses by owning the vehicles." Hartwick, 373 B.R. at 652 (citations omitted). This statutory reading has been rejected by appellate courts because it "defies common sense." Deadmond, 2008 WL 191165 at *4.

The Tates claim that the interpretation of "applicable" suggested by the United States Trustee and adopted by all five appellate courts to consider it, creates an arbitrary distinction between a hypothetical debtor who has a car payment of only $100 per month who would be entitled to the full $471 Local Standard for ownership and another debtor who does not have a car loan and cannot take any deduction. Appellants' Br. at 10. The Tates suggest that this result unfairly discriminates between two similarly situated debtors. This is wrong, however, because these two debtors are not similarly situated. The debtor who does not have a car payment, like the Tates, has no "applicable" expense. For this reason, appellate decisions on 707(b)(2)(A)(ii)(I) have not found such distinctions persuasive. See Ross-Tousey, 368 B.R. at 767-68 (it is "unreasonable to expect that the complex and individualized issues involving a debtor's finances are meant to be addressed through an objective and standardized system like the means test."); Hartwick, 373 B.R. at 652 ("[A] line must be drawn somewhere, and any interpretation will result in some unfairness.").[12] [12] Moreover, the Tates' hypothetical fails to recognize that the result of the means test is not necessarily a guarantee that the hypothetical debtor with a car payment will receive a discharge while the debtor with no applicable expense will not. A case filed by either debtor could still be subject to dismissal under section 707(b)(3) based on the totality of the circumstances of their financial situation if the debtor has an ability to repay his or her debts. Section 707(b) allows cases to be dismissed in two ways. First, above-median income debtors can have their cases dismissed under section 707(b)(2) when they fail the means test. Second, debtors with an actual ability to repay creditors can have their cases dismissed under section 707(b)(3) even if they pass the means test. See 11 U.S.C. § 707(b)(3)(B) (requiring that in cases where presumption of abuse "does not arise or is rebutted," the court shall consider whether dismissal is proper because "the totality of the circumstances . . . of the debtor's financial situation demonstrates abuse"). Cf. In re Cortez, 457 F.3d 448, 456 (5th Cir. 2006) (considering a debtor's ability to pay in deciding whether to dismiss a debtor's case under the "totality of the circumstances" analysis that applied to the pre-2005 Reform Act section 707(b)).

By allowing debtors to deduct only "applicable" expenses, section 707(b)(2)(A)(ii)(I) ensures debtors do not evade repaying their debts when they can. See H.R. Rep. No. 109-31 (I) at 1 (2005), reprinted in 2005 U.S.C.C.A.N. 88, 89 (noting that the "heart" of the 2005 Reform Act was to "ensure that debtors repay creditors the maximum they can afford.").

Not surprisingly, all five appellate courts that have decided the issue in this appeal have interpreted "applicable" in section 707(b)(2)(A)(ii)(I) in the same manner as the court below, in part, because the Tates' proffered reading is not faithful to the purpose underlying section 707(b)(2)'s means test. As the Ross-Tousey court noted, "if it really is that simple, the statute would not seem to achieve its purpose" of ensuring that debtors are allowed expenses for the necessities of life but pay creditors from what remains. Ross-Tousey, 368 B.R at 766 (E.D. Wis. 2007). A debtor's ability to pay creditors is not affected by mere vehicle ownership but by payments on a car. Accordingly, section 707(b)(2)(A)(ii)(I) does not focus on how many cars a debtor owns, but how many cars he or she makes payments on every month. Id. ("The statute is only concerned about protecting the debtor's ability to continue owning a car, and if the debtor already owns the car, the debtor is adequately protected."); see also Hartwick, 373 B.R. at 652 (same). As such, interpreting "applicable" in section 707(b)(2)(A)(ii)(I) to permit the Tates to claim vehicle expenses based not on their actual car payments, but solely based on the number of vehicles they own, would not further the means test's goal of maximizing payments to creditors where possible.

D. The Committee Notes to Official Form 22A Do Not Support the Tates' Interpretation of 11 U.S.C. § 707(b)(2)(A)(ii)(I).

The Tates contend that their interpretation of section 707(b)(2)(A)(ii)(I) is supported by Official Form 22A. Appellants' Br. at 10-12. Specifically, the Tates cite the Advisory Committee

Note to the Form, which provides that "amounts specified by the IRS in the Local Standards are treated by the IRS as a cap on actual expenses, but because § 707(b)(2)(A)(ii)(I) provides for deduction in the 'amounts specified under the Local Standards,' the forms treat these amounts as allowed deductions." Advisory Comm. Notes on Forms 22A, 22B, & 22C, p. 3, available at http://www.uscourts.gov/bkforms/bankruptcy_forms.html.

The Tates' reliance on the Form and the Committee Note is wrong for two reasons.

First, not even the Bankruptcy Rules, much less the notes to them, may substitute Bankruptcy Code provisions. See 28 U.S.C. § 2075 (bankruptcy rules cannot modify rights). For that reason, the Committee Note to the Rules cannot change what "applicable" means in 11 U.S.C. § 707(b)(2)(A)(ii)(I). "[N]ational or local forms are only valid to the extent that they conform to the substantive provisions of the Bankruptcy Code," and "it is axiomatic that guidelines in a form cannot stand as independent authority in opposition to the Bankruptcy Code itself." See Ransom, 380 B.R. at 805, n.13.

______Second, the Tates misread the Committee Note because the question here is not whether the expense categories covered by the IRS Standards apply in bankruptcy as an allowance (i.e., debtors get the full amount if eligible) or a cap on actual expenses (i.e., debtors get the lesser of the Standard or their actual car payment). Instead, the question is whether a debtor qualifies for the IRS Standard allowance in the first place for an expense he does not even incur. If the debtor qualifies for the expense because he has an applicable monthly expense, he can deduct the full amount of the applicable expense that is specified under the IRS Local Standards under the means test, regardless of the amount he actually spends. Even though the amount of the expense deduction is an allowance and is not variable based on a debtor's "actual" expenses, the expense deduction is, like other expense deductions, only available if a debtor in fact incurs expenses in the first place – if it is applicable. See Ross-Tousey, 368 B.R. at 766 (analogizing the eligibility requirement for vehicle ownership expenses under the IRS Local Standards to eligibility requirements to claim individuals as dependents and receive a standardized income tax exemption under the Internal Revenue Code).

______As discussed above, the Bankruptcy Code prohibits debtors who, like the Tates, have no "applicable" vehicle ownership expense from deducting such expenses under the means test. As a result, neither the Means Test Form nor the committee note to the form may be read to contravene this prohibition.

CONCLUSION

Collection Financial Standards

General

Collection Financial Standards are used to help determine a taxpayer's ability to pay a delinquent tax liability.

Allowances for food, clothing and other items, known as the National Standards, apply nationwide except for Alaska and Hawaii, which have their own tables. Taxpayers are allowed the total National Standards amount for their family size and income level, without questioning amounts actually spent.

Maximum allowances for housing and utilities and transportation, known as the Local Standards, vary by location. Unlike the National Standards, the taxpayer is allowed the amount actually spent or the standard, whichever is less.

Food, Clothing and Other Items

National Standards for reasonable amounts have been established for five necessary expenses: food, housekeeping supplies, apparel and services, personal care products and services, and miscellaneous.

All standards except miscellaneous are derived from the Bureau of Labor Statistics (BLS) Consumer Expenditure Survey (CES). The miscellaneous standard has been established by the IRS.

Alaska and Hawaii

Due to their unique geographic circumstances and higher cost of living, separate standards for food, clothing and other items have been established for Alaska and Hawaii .

Housing and Utilities

The housing and utilities standards are derived from Census and BLS data, and are provided by state down to the county level.

Transportation

The transportation standards consist of nationwide figures for monthly loan or lease payments referred to as ownership costs, and additional amounts for monthly operating costs broken down by Census Region and Metropolitan Statistical Area (MSA). Public transportation is included under operating costs. A conversion chart has been provided with the standards which shows which IRS districts fall under each Census Region, as well as the counties included in each MSA. The ownership cost portion of the transportation standard, although it

tabbies EXHIBIT "A"

applies nationwide, is still considered part of the Local Standards.

The ownership costs provide maximum allowances for the lease or purchase of up to two automobiles if allowed as a necessary expense. The operating costs are derived from BLS data.

If a taxpayer has a car payment, the allowable ownership cost added to the allowable operating cost equals the allowable transportation expense. If a taxpayer has no car payment, or no car, only the operating costs portion of the transportation standard is used to come up with the allowable transportation expense.

Recent Revisions

The Local Standards for housing and utilities and transportation were revised on 02/01/06 to:

- add family size to the housing and utilities allowances (two or less, three, and four or more);
- base automobile ownership/leasing costs on the five-year average of new and used car financing data compiled by the Federal Reserve Board of Governors; and,
- reflect updated information from the Bureau of Labor Statistics.
- Housing and Utility Standards have been established in 2006 for U.S. Territories

The revised Local Standards for housing and utilities and transportation are effective for financial analysis conducted on or after January 1, 2006.

APPEAL FROM THE UNITED STATES BANKRUPTCY COURT
WESTERN DISTRICT OF TEXAS
EL PASO DIVISION
CASE NO. 06-31066-RCM, CHAPTER 7

Appellant Lynn Meade ("Meade") filed a brief on April 20, 2007, appealing the United States Bankruptcy Court's ("Bankruptcy Court") February 28, 2007 "Order On Motion Of The United States Trustee To Dismiss Under 11 U.S.C. § 707(b)." On May 7, 2007, Appellee Charles F. McVay, United States Trustee, Region 7 ("U. S. Trustee"), filed a "Brief Of The Appellee Charles F. McVay United States Trustee" ("Response"). After due consideration, the Court affirms the Bankruptcy Court's dismissal of Meade's Petition for the reasons that follow.

BACKGROUND

This is an appeal arising from an Order of the United States Bankruptcy Court, dismissing a Petition on September 30, 2006, wherein Meade sought relief under Chapter 7 of the Bankruptcy Code. The case stems from Meade's attempt to claim a Transportation Ownership/Lease Expense without having an ownership payment. On said date, Meade filed a petition for relief under Chapter 7 of the Bankruptcy Code, which included the Statement of

EXHIBIT

Current Monthly Income and Means Test Calculation ("Means Test"). The Means Test uses a complex mathematical formula - set out in § 707(b)(2) - to calculate a debtor's disposable monthly income. A disposable monthly income greater than $166.67 gives rise to a presumption of abuse and requires dismissal of the case as an abuse of Chapter 7 Bankruptcy proceedings. See 11 U.S.C.A. § 707(b)(2)(A)(ii)(I).

Because Meade's monthly income exceeded the median Texas monthly income,[1] she was required to complete the expense portion of the Means Test. Therein, Meade claimed monthly expenses greater than her income, resulting in a negative monthly income.[2] Although Meade did not have a vehicle purchase or lease payment, she deducted $471.00 as a "Local Standards" Transportation Ownership/Lease Expense. Meade owns one vehicle, a 1996 Subaru Legacy Wagon, outright and free of any liens. The U.S. Trustee contested this deduction, and substituted a $200 deduction, pursuant to Internal Revenue Service ("IRS") guidelines.[3] Meade's disposable monthly income was then calculated at $303.97, based on the U.S. Trustee's expense

[2] Meade's disposable monthly income was calculated at negative $6.03 after deducting $3,836.33 in monthly expenses.

[3] The IRS permits a $200 deduction for operating a vehicle over six years old, and/or with reported mileage of at least 75,000 miles, with no reported loan or lease payment obligation. See INTERNAL REVENUE SERVICE, UNITED STATES DEP'T OF TREASURY, INTERNAL REVENUE MANUEL, FINANCIAL ANALYSIS HANDBOOK, TREATMENT OF NON-BUSINESS TRANSPORTATION EXPENSES, OWNERSHIP EXPENSES, Part 5, Chapter 15 § 5.8.5.5.2(3), [hereinafter FINANCIAL ANALYSIS HANDBOOK] http://www.irs.gov/irm/part5/ch08s05.html.

adjustment, along with other minor adjustments,[4] giving rise to a presumption of abuse of the bankruptcy proceedings.

On December 8, 2006, the U.S. Trustee filed a Motion to Dismiss for an abuse of Chapter 7 Bankruptcy Proceedings. The Bankruptcy Court granted the Motion to Dismiss, finding that Meade's case was presumptively abusive, and that the debtor failed to demonstrate special circumstances to rebut that presumption.[5] The appeal from the Bankruptcy Court's ruling ensued.

STANDARD OF REVIEW

Title 28 U.S.C. § 158 confers jurisdiction on district courts to hear appeals from the final judgments, orders, and decrees of bankruptcy courts sitting within the same judicial district. 28 U.S.C.A. § 158(a)(1) (West 2006). When a district court reviews a bankruptcy court's decision, it functions as an appellate court and utilizes the same standard of review generally applied by a federal court of appeals. In general, "a bankruptcy court's findings of fact are subject to the clearly erroneous standard of review and conclusions of law are reviewed de novo." In re Smyth, 207 F.3d 758, 761 (5th Cir. 2000) (citing Matter of Sadkin, 36 F.3d 473, 475 (5th Cir. 1994)). The issue on appeal is whether a debtor is allowed, under 11 U.S.C. § 707(b)(2)(A)(ii)(I), to claim an expense for vehicle financing when the debtor has no vehicle financing expense. As the issue before the Court involves a question of law, the Court reviews the Bankruptcy Court's decision de novo.

[4] Meade did not contest these incidental adjustments, nor does she raise the issue in the instant appeal.

[5] Meade does not appeal the Bankruptcy Court's decision stating that she failed to demonstrate special circumstances to rebut the presumption of abuse.

DISCUSSION

In her appeal, Meade argues three points of law: (1) the plain language of the Bankruptcy Code allows her to deduct a Transportation Ownership/Lease Expense even though she does not have an ownership payment; (2) case law precedent allows her to claim said deduction; and (3) public policy should allow for said deduction. The Court addresses Meade's contentions in turn.

1. The Bankruptcy Code

Meade contends that a plain reading of § 707(b)(2)(A)(ii)(I) allows her to deduct a transportation ownership expense in the amount of $471.00, although Meade does not have an existing vehicle ownership payment. In other words, Meade argues that the statute permits debtors to claim the Local Standard ownership expense based on their possession of a vehicle. The U.S. Trustee responds that the statute plainly requires a two-step determination to deduct the appropriate transportation expense, the first of which requires the debtor to have an ownership expense. The Court finds Meade's argument unconvincing.

The plain language of a statute is regarded as conclusive, with the exception of rare circumstances in which the result of a literal application directly contradicts the drafters' intent. See United States v. Ron Pair Enter. Inc., 489 U.S. 235, 242 (1989). Generally, statutory interpretation requires a court to accord undefined statutory terms their ordinary and common meaning. See Burns v. Alcala, 420 U.S. 575, 580-81 (1975).

The statute at issue reads, in relevant part:

> The debtor's monthly expenses shall be the debtor's applicable monthly expense amounts specified under the National Standards and Local Standards, and the debtor's actual monthly expenses for > the categories specified as Other Necessary Expenses issued by the Internal Revenue Service for the area in which the debtor resides . . .

11 U.S.C.A. § 707(b)(2)(A)(ii)(I) (West 2005) (emphasis added). The statute permits a debtor to deduct "applicable" monthly expenses as defined by the IRS National and Local Standards ("IRS Standards"), and "actual" monthly expenses that the IRS defines as "Other Necessary Expenses." In re Pampas, 369 B.R. 290, 295-96 (Bankr. M.D. La. 2007). The outcome of the instant case hinges on the plain meaning of the term "applicable" and in reconciling Congress' intent with use of the term "actual" in the same sentence.

"Applicable" is defined as "capable of or suitable for being applied: APPROPRIATE." MERRIAM WEBSTER'S COLLEGIATE DICTIONARY 56 (10th ed. 1996). In the statute, "applicable" is positioned before the phrase "monthly expense amounts specified under the [standards]."[6] Placement of the term "applicable" indicates that the transportation ownership expense is to be deducted only by the appropriate debtor. In other words, the debtor must be eligible to claim the deduction by having an existing monthly transportation ownership expense. If the debtor can claim the deduction, the statute then permits an eligible debtor to select the amount listed in the IRS Standards. Pursuant to Meade's reading, the debtor would be automatically eligible for a standard deduction - the sole determination being the selection of an amount based on the applicable geographic location. Contrary to Meade's contention, the Court finds that the plain reading of the Bankruptcy Code allows a deduction for transportation ownership expenses, but only by those debtors who are eligible to declare such deductions.

[6] The statute does not state, "The debtor's monthly expenses shall be the debtor's monthly expense amounts specified under the applicable [] Standards," as argued by Meade.

Further, Meade posits that Congress' decision to use "applicable" rather than "actual" evinces congressional intent that a debtor's existing, or non-existing, expense is irrelevant for purposes of claiming the transportation ownership deduction. "Actual" is defined as "existing in act and not merely potentially . . . . existing in fact or reality." MERRIAM WEBSTER'S COLLEGIATE DICTIONARY 12. The term "actual" is positioned before the phrase, "for the categories specified as Other Necessary Expenses," indicating that debtors may deduct their existing costs in this specific category. Thus, the statute permits deductions in an amount equal to debtors' existing costs in "other" categories. In contrast, for the transportation category, Congress intended all eligible debtors - but only eligible debtors - to have a standard across-the-board deduction. See In re Pampas, 369 B.R. at 296.

Additional support for the Court's statutory interpretation is found in the IRS Standards.[7] The IRS Standards recognize two sub-categories of transportation expenses: "ownership costs," and "operating costs."[8] "Ownership costs" are based on the "five-year

[7] Congress intended courts to utilize current IRS policies to define statutory terms and calculate expenses. See Pampas, 369 B.R. at 296-97. See also, e.g., In re Medina, 362 B.R. 799, 802 (Bankr. S.D. Tex. 2007) (discussing the utilization of IRS guidelines as one of three possible means for interpreting a term not expressly defined in the Bankruptcy Code). While courts are not bound to follow IRS procedures and standards, they should be used as guides for interpreting the Bankruptcy Code. See In re Ceasar, 364 B.R. 257, 262 (Bankr. W.D. La. 2007); see also Pampas, 369 B.R. at 297 n.29.

[8] According to the IRS:

> The transportation standards consist of nationwide figures for monthly loan or lease payments referred to as ownership costs, and additional amounts for monthly operating costs . . . . If a taxpayer has a car payment, the allowable ownership cost added to the allowable operating cost equals the allowable transportation expense. If a taxpayer has no car payment only the operating costs portion of the transportation standard is used to come up with the average of new and used car financing data compiled by the Federal Reserve Bureau of Governors."[9] Thus, the IRS Standards emphasize acquisition expenses, rather than maintenance or operating expenses, indicating that ownership and maintenance are separate and distinct expenses. See id. In fact, the IRS indicates in the Financial Analysis Handbook that car owners without a car payment should exclude that expense in calculating the total transportation expense. FINANCIAL ANALYSIS HANDBOOK § 5.15.1.7(4.B). Thus, like the IRS, the Court interprets the Bankruptcy Code as excluding a debtor's deduction of an "ownership" expense when the debtor does not have an existing car payment. Therefore, the Court is of the opinion that the plain meaning of "applicable" necessitates an existing ownership or lease payment for a debtor to claim an ownership or lease payment deduction.

Here, it is undisputed that Meade does not have an ownership or finance payment on her sole vehicle, a 1996 Subaru. As a result, Meade is not eligible to claim a Transportation Ownership/Lease Expense in the amount of $471. Therefore, the Court is of the opinion that the Bankruptcy Court's decision denying Meade's deduction was accurate, and its decision to dismiss Meade's bankruptcy proceeding is affirmed.

2. Existing Case Law

Meade avers that a "plethora" of case law supports her reading of the Bankruptcy allowable transportation expense.

Code. In that regard, Meade posits that In re Fowler, 349 B.R. 414 (Bankr. D. Del. 2006), and its progeny[10] hold precedential value before the Court. Unfortunately for Meade, her cited cases are not precedent in the United States Court of Appeals for the Fifth Circuit ("Fifth Circuit"). Further, the bankruptcy court decisions from within the Fifth Circuit have expressly rejected Fowler and Meade's line of reasoning.[11] What is more, Meade concedes that Fifth Circuit case law does not support her contention. Thus, the Court finds the decisions issued by the bankruptcy courts within the Fifth Circuit persuasive. Therefore, the Court is of the opinion that the Bankruptcy Court properly dismissed Meade's claim, and its decision is affirmed.

3. Public Policy

Lastly, Meade argues that the Court's affirmation of the Bankruptcy Court's judgment "could lead to some absurd result," based on public policy grounds. Meade's public policy argument mirrors the line of reasoning found in the Fowler opinion. See Fowler 349 B.R. at 418. As stated above, the Court declines to follow the Fowler decision. Therefore, as the Court had disposed of Meade's argument above, it need not address her public policy argument. Thus, the Court is of the opinion that the Bankruptcy Court's decision was appropriate and should be affirmed.

CONCLUSION

The Court finds that the Bankruptcy Court properly dismissed Meade's Chapter 7 Petition as an abuse of bankruptcy proceedings, and affirms its decision. First, the plain reading of § 707(b)(2)(A)(ii)(I) requires the debtor to qualify for a deduction by having an existing ownership or lease payment on a vehicle before selecting the applicable deduction amount. Second, Meade's cited case law has been expressly rejected by a line of decisions issued from bankruptcy courts within the Fifth Circuit, which the Court finds persuasive. Finally, the Court declines to address Meade's policy argument, because it stems from case law the Court rejects. Based on the foregoing analysis, the Court affirms the decision of the Bankruptcy Court.

Accordingly, IT IS HEREBY ORDERED that the United States Bankruptcy Court's Order Granting Motion to Dismiss entered on February 28, 2007, is AFFIRMED.

JURISDICTIONAL STATEMENT

On December 18, 2007, the United States Bankruptcy Court for the Southern District of Mississippi entered a final order granting the United States Trustee's motion to dismiss Troy Edwin Tate's and Elaine Burris Tate's (the "Tates") case under 11 U.S.C. §§ 707(b)(1) and (2). (R. 1).[1] The bankruptcy court had jurisdiction over that proceeding under 28 U.S.C. §§ 157 and 1334. (R. 2). On December 26, 2007, the Tates timely filed a notice of appeal from that order to the United States District Court for the Southern District of Mississippi under 28 U.S.C. § 158(c)(2) and Fed. R. Bankr. P. 8002(a). (R. 3). On September 29, 2008, the district court entered a final order affirming the bankruptcy court's December 18, 2007, order dismissing the Tates' bankruptcy case. (R. 4). On October 6, 2008, the Tates timely filed a notice of appeal to this Court under Fed. R. App. P. 4(a)(1)(B). (R. 5). This Court has jurisdiction pursuant to 28 U.S.C. §§ 158(d)(1) and 1291.

STATEMENT OF THE ISSUE

The Bankruptcy Code allows debtors to claim a vehicle ownership expense, in a set amount, when that expense is "applicable." See 11 U.S.C. § 707(b)(2)(A)(ii)(I). The expense amount is a standardized dollar value debtors may claim to account for vehicle loan or lease payments. The debtors in this case claimed such a set amount for two vehicles, even though they had no loan or lease payments for either vehicle.

The question presented is: Did the bankruptcy court and the district court err in ruling that the Tates could not claim vehicle ownership expense amounts on vehicles for which they have no vehicle ownership expenses?

STATEMENT OF THE CASE

On January 10, 2007, the Tates filed a joint voluntary petition for relief under the debt liquidation provisions of chapter 7 of the Bankruptcy Code. See 11 U.S.C. § 701 et seq. On March 19, 2007, the United States Trustee filed a motion to dismiss the Tates' case for abuse under 11 U.S.C. § 707(b)(1) because a presumption of abuse arose as a matter of law under 11 U.S.C. Section 707(b)(2). On December 18, 2007, the United States Bankruptcy Court for the Southern District of Mississippi granted the United States Trustee's motion and entered an order dismissing the Tates' case. On December 26, 2007, the Tates timely filed a notice of appeal from the bankruptcy court's order to the United States District Court for the Southern District of Mississippi. On September 29, 2008, the district court entered an order affirming the bankruptcy court's December 18, 2007, dismissal order. This appeal followed.

STATEMENT OF THE FACTS

I. STATUTORY BACKGROUND.

United States Trustees are Department of Justice Officials appointed by the Attorney General, who supervise the administration of chapter 7 and 13 bankruptcy cases in all federal judicial districts within this circuit. See 28 U.S.C. § 581-589(a). See also H.R. Rep. No. 95-595, at 88 (1977), as reprinted in 1978 U.S.C.C.A.N. 5963, 6049 (United States Trustees "serve as bankruptcy watch-dogs to prevent fraud, dishonesty, and overreaching in the bankruptcy arena.").

During fiscal year 2007, according to data collected by the United States Trustee Program, 451,012 non-business chapter 7 cases were filed nationwide, excluding the judicial districts of Alabama and North Carolina, whose data were not collected. Of these cases, the United States Trustees filed 3,370 motions to dismiss under section 707(b)(2) of the Bankruptcy Code, and 1,441 statements declining to seek dismissal when a presumption of abuse existed.

This appeal involves the interpretation of section 707(b)(2), which Congress added to the Bankruptcy Code in the Bankruptcy Abuse Prevention and Consumer Protection Act of 2005 (the "2005 Act").[2] The 2005 Act significantly altered how debtors obtain chapter 7 bankruptcy relief.

One of the innovations of the 2005 Act is means testing. Under the means test, above-median income debtors' cases are presumed abusive as a matter of law when their historic income reduced by prescribed expenses and expense amounts yields a net income that exceeds $166.66 per month.[3] By enacting the means test, Congress mandated that debtors who can pay that amount per month or more should not receive chapter 7 relief.

The means test lies at the "heart" of the 2005 Act's consumer bankruptcy reforms and acts "to ensure that debtors repay creditors the maximum they can afford." H.R. Rep. 109-31 at 1 (I) (2005), as reprinted in 2005 U.S.C.C.A.N. 88, 89. Under prior law, "some bankruptcy debtors [were] able to repay a significant portion of their debts," but were not doing so because the law contained "no clear mandate requiring these debtors to repay their debts." Id. at 5 and n.18, 2005 U.S.C.C.A.N. at 92. Congress enacted the means test to prevent debtors from obtaining chapter 7 relief when they have an ability to repay their creditors.

In section 707 of the Bankruptcy Code – which addresses dismissal of abusive chapter 7 petitions – Congress implemented the means test by establishing special rules for debtors whose

[2] Pub. L. No. 109-8, 119 Stat. 23 (2005). The 2005 Act applies to the Tates' case, because the Act's general effective date is for cases filed on or after October 17, 2005.

[3] The dollar amounts went up slightly for cases filed after April 1, 2007. 72 Fed. Reg. 7082 (Feb. 14, 2007). See also 11 U.S.C. § 104. This case is not subject to the new dollar amounts.

current monthly income, reduced by permitted expenses, exceeds a threshold for abuse under a specified formula. See 11 U.S.C. § 707(b)(2). The means test requires a court to perform a series of calculations to determine whether the grant of a chapter 7 discharge to a debtor would be a presumed abuse warranting dismissal of a case (or, if the debtor consents, conversion to another chapter of the Bankruptcy Code). See 11 U.S.C. § 707(b)(1) and (b)(2)(A).

The means test only applies to debtors whose income exceeds the median for their state. See 11 U.S.C. § 707(b)(7). Under the means test, debtors first determine their average income for the six calendar months preceding the month of their bankruptcy filing. See 11 U.S.C. § 101(10A). If this averaged amount, multiplied by twelve, is below the median income for the debtor's state and household size, the debtor's case cannot be dismissed under the means test. See 11 U.S.C. § 707(b)(7).

However, if this averaged amount exceeds the median income for the debtor's state and household size – as in the Tates' case – section 707(b)(2)(A) prescribes a statutorily mandated calculation that yields an amount a debtor is presumed to be able to repay her creditors. This presumptive amount, commonly referred to as a debtor's monthly disposable income, is obtained by reducing a debtor's averaged income by certain enumerated categories of expenses. See 11 U.S.C. § 707(b)(2)(A)(ii), (iii) and (iv).

To calculate whether such higher income debtors' cases are presumptively abusive, debtors file a means test form. See 11 U.S.C. §§ 521 and 707(b)(2)(C). The Bankruptcy Code prescribes what expenses are deducted on the means test form in determining a debtor's monthly disposable income. Section 707(b)(2)(A)(ii)(I) permits debtors to deduct:

(a) certain prescribed "actual" expenses; and

(b) other “applicable” expense amounts.

See 11 U.S.C. § 707(b)(2)(A)(ii)(I). A debtor may also deduct additional expenses identified in other subsections of section 707(b)(2)(A). See 11 U.S.C. § 707(b)(2)(A)(ii)(II)-(V), and 707(b)(2)(A)(iii) and (iv).

“Applicable” expense amounts are not the debtor’s actual expenses. Instead, they are the static amounts listed in the Internal Revenue Service’s Local and National Standards. See 11 U.S.C. § 707(b)(2)(A)(ii)(I).

After subtracting these permitted expenses, if an above-median debtor’s monthly disposable income exceeds $166.66 per month (or $10,000 over a 60 month period), the debtor’s case is presumed to be an abuse. See 11 U.S.C. § 707(b)(2)(A)(i). If the debtor’s monthly disposable income is less than $100.00 per month (or $6,000 over a 60 month period), the presumption of abuse does not arise. Id. Finally, if the debtor’s monthly disposable income is between $100 per month and $166.67 per month (i.e., between $6,000 and $10,000 over a 60 month period), the presumption of abuse arises if the debtor’s monthly disposable income, over a 60 month period, is sufficient to pay 25 percent of the debtor’ s nonpriority unsecured debt.[4] Id.

If, as in the Tates’ case, the presumption arises, the case is presumed to be an abuse of chapter 7 as a matter of law. See 11 U.S.C. § 707(b)(2)(A)(i). Section 707(b) generally requires such cases to be dismissed, or if the debtor consents, converted to chapter 13.[5] See 11 U.S.C. §

[4] The amount of a debtor’s nonpriority unsecured debt is generally determined by reference to a debtor’s bankruptcy Schedule F.

[5] The only alternative occurs when a debtor is able to rebut the presumption of abuse by demonstrating special circumstances that justify additional expenses or adjustments of income for which there is no reasonable alternative. See 11 U.S.C. § 707(b)(2)(B).

707(b)(1). In a chapter 13 case, a debtor must use all of her income to repay creditors over a five year period. See 11 U.S.C. § 1325.

This appeal poses a question about one part of the means test's expense-side calculation of disposable income related to vehicle ownership expenses under the IRS Local Standards. Transportation expenses incorporate two components: (1) monthly expenses for costs associated with operating vehicles and (2) monthly expenses for costs associated with purchasing or leasing vehicles. See IRS Collection Financial Standards, under heading "Local Standards: Transportation," available at http://www.irs.gov/individuals/article/0,,id=96543,00.html.[6] All debtors receive monthly transportation expenses based on either public transportation costs or the costs associated with operating one or two vehicles. Id. Operating expenses include amounts for vehicle maintenance, fuel, state and local registration, required inspection, parking fees, tolls, and driver's license fees. Id. The ownership expense allowance under the IRS Standards is one amount for each vehicle that is based on the average cost of financing a vehicle as determined annually by the Federal Reserve Board. Id. Independent of operating expenses, when applicable, debtors can claim a standardized amount to reflect a loan or lease payment. Id. Like the operating expense, the ownership expense, which covers vehicle lease or purchase payments, is limited to no more than two vehicles. Id.

[6] The IRS revised its Collection Financial Standards, effective October 1, 2007, and such revisions were made applicable to bankruptcy cases filed as of January 1, 2008. See IRS Collection Financial Standards, under heading "Local Standards: Transportation," available at http://www.irs.gov/individuals/article/0,,id=96543,00.html. Because the Tates' case was filed on January 10, 2007, only the Collection Financial Standards in effect prior to October 1, 2007, are applicable to their case. For the Court's convenience, a true and correct pdf copy of the Collection Financial Standards applicable to this case, which the United States Trustee hereby incorporates by reference, can be found at United States Trustee Appendix "A".

Specifically at issue in this appeal is whether a standardized vehicle ownership deduction is "applicable" under section 707(b)(2)(A)(ii)(I) when the Tates have no associated vehicle ownership expenses.

II. THE FACTS AND PROCEEDINGS BELOW

The Tates live in Carriere, Mississippi. On January 10, 2007, they filed a joint voluntary petition for relief under the liquidation provisions of chapter 7 of the Bankruptcy Code. (R. 6). The Tates own three Chevrolets.[7] (R. 7). Each of those vehicles is owned free and clear of liens, which means that the Tates have no monthly payments on them. (Id.).

The Tates have $7,830.35 in average monthly income, or $93,964.20 per year. (R. 9, at lines 12 and 13). The Tates' income is almost double the $47,726.00 annual median income for the Tates' household size in Mississippi. (Id. at line 14). Because the Tates' income was well above the Mississippi median, sections 707(b)(2) and (7) of the Bankruptcy Code required them to complete their means test form to determine whether their filing was an abuse as a matter of law. (Id. at lines 19-56).

The Tates listed expense deductions of $7,692.69 on their means test form. (Id. at line 47). In making these calculations, the Tates claimed the IRS Local Standard transportation ownership expense for two vehicles in the amounts of $471.00 and $332.00, respectively.[8] (Id. at lines 23 and 24). This resulted in claimed monthly disposable income on their means test form in the amount of [7] On February 8, 2007, the bankruptcy court entered an order authorizing secured creditor Trustmark National Bank to repossess and sell a Toyota owned by the Tates. (R. 8, at Dkt. No. 14).

[8] In addition, the Tates claimed a $343.00 deduction for the IRS Local Standard "transportation, vehicle operation/public transportation expense" for two or more vehicles (Id. at line 22).

$137.66 which was slightly below the $166.67 required for the presumption of abuse to arise. (Id. at lines 50-52).

On March 19, 2007, the United States Trustee, pursuant to section 704(b)(2) of the Bankruptcy Code, filed his section 707(b)(2) motion to dismiss the Tates' case for abuse. (R. 2; R. 8, at Dkt. No. 21). The motion claimed the Tates miscalculated their claimed expenses on the means test.[9] (R. 2). The United States Trustee also alleged that the Tates failed the means test when their expenses were calculated correctly. (Id.).

The crux of the dispute concerned the Tates' attempt to claim two standardized vehicle ownership expense amounts for vehicles for which they had no loan or lease payments. (Id.). The United States Trustee sought dismissal because his adjustments gave the Tates $355.04 in monthly disposable income that could be used to repay creditors. (Id.). This yielded a presumption of abuse in the Tates' case because it exceeded the statutory abuse threshold established by $188.37 per month. (Id.).

On March 27, 2007, the Tates filed an opposition to the United States Trustee's motion. (R. 8, at Dkt. No. 24; R. 10). The opposition conceded the Tates owned their vehicles free and clear of liens, but asserted that language contained in the Advisory Committee Notes to the means test form [see Fed. R. Bankr. P. Official Form 22A (which is the form debtors use to determine whether the presumption of abuse arises under section 707(b)(2) of the Bankruptcy Code)] permitted the Tates

[9] The United States Trustee permitted the Tates' $343.00 deduction for vehicle "operating" expenses. In addition, based on the Internal Revenue Manual, the United States Trustee permitted the Tates an additional $200.00 operating expense for each of these vehicles because the IRS allows additional deductions for such older cars. See IRS Internal Revenue Manual, Part 5, Ch. 8, § 5.8.5.5.2, available at http://www.irs.gov/irm/part5/ch08s05.html (providing for additional $200.00 operating expense under specified conditions). However, even after allowing this additional expense, the United States Trustee still determined that the presumption of abuse arose in this case.

to deduct vehicle ownership expense amounts for vehicles with no corresponding ownership expenses. (R. 10).

On December 18, 2007, the bankruptcy court granted the United States Trustee's motion to dismiss the Tates' case pursuant to 11 U.S.C. § 707(b)(1). (R. 1). In doing so, the bankruptcy court considered a variety of authorities related to the United States Trustee's motion, and determined that the United States Trustee's construction of section 707(b)(2)(A)(ii)(I) was the better one. (Id.).

The Tates appealed, and on September 29, 2008, the United States District Court for the Southern District of Mississippi entered a final order and memorandum opinion affirming the bankruptcy court's December 18, 2007, order. (R. 4). In its memorandum opinion, the district court noted that while the transportation ownership expense issue had not been conclusively resolved in this Circuit, "the weight of persuasive authority in this Circuit holds that a 'debtor may not deduct the vehicle ownership expense unless the debtor has a monthly note or lease payment on a vehicle.'" (Id.).

On October 6, 2008, the Tates then filed a notice of appeal to this Court under Fed. R. App. P. 4(a)(1)(B). (R. 5).

STANDARD OF REVIEW

This appeal involves a question of law, which this Court reviews de novo. See Robertson v. Dennis (In re Dennis), 330 F. 3d 696, 701 (5th Cir. 2003).

SUMMARY OF ARGUMENT

Both the district court and the bankruptcy court ruled that the Tates have no "applicable" vehicle ownership expense amount to claim under section 707(b)(2)(A)(ii)(I) of the Bankruptcy Code because they have no associated loan or lease expenses on their vehicles. Their rulings best interpret section 707(b)(2)(A)(ii)(I) for five reasons:

First, the Tates cannot claim a standardized vehicle ownership expense amount on their vehicles because section 707(b)(2)(A)(ii)(I) allows a debtor to claim it only when it is "applicable" to the debtor's vehicles. The standardized vehicle ownership amount deduction is not applicable here because the Tates have no associated vehicle ownership expenses. Reading the word "applicable" in section 707(b)(2)(A)(ii)(I) as limiting expense amounts to debtors who have associated expenses is the best construction of this section because it:

> (a) uses the ordinary dictionary meaning of "applicable," and does so in a way that gives meaning to each word in the section;
> (b) fulfills Congress' stated reasons for enacting the section; and
> (c) most equitably implements bankruptcy policy - both for debtors and for creditors.

Second, this construction also gives meaning to every word in section 707(b)(2)(A)(ii)(I), something the Tates' construction does not because their reading renders the word "applicable" superfluous.

Third, the 2005 Act's legislative history supports this interpretation of section 707(b)(2)(A)(ii)(I). It reveals Congress enacted the new law to ensure debtors would repay their debts when they were able, and to eliminate loopholes and incentives for debtor abuse in discharging debts when a portion could be repaid. Allowing the Tates to claim a fictional expense amount diverges from the purposes of the 2005 Act.

Fourth, reading "applicable" in section 707(b)(2)(A)(ii)(I) to require a loan or lease payment fosters sound public policy. Barring above-median-income debtors like the Tates from claiming inapplicable ownership expense amounts is fair because it simply prevents them from claiming a monthly expense for an expense they do not have. This interpretation does not hurt lower-income debtors because they are not subject to section 707(b)(2)(A)(ii)(I) in the first place. See 11 U.S.C. § 707(b)(7). It is also fair to creditors because they will receive payments on their debts when debtors have the financial ability to repay.

Fifth, the bankruptcy system has four safety valves to ensure that higher-income debtors without loan or lease payments will not suffer by being denied phantom vehicle expenses. First, when they have older vehicles, they receive an additional $200 monthly expense allowance for up to two vehicles to fund the operation of these older vehicles. Second, even if the presumption of abuse arises, they may nonetheless obtain bankruptcy relief. Indeed, if the debtor's case presents an abuse of chapter 7, the debtor may elect to convert her chapter 7 case to a case under chapter 13 or chapter 11, both of which, unlike chapter 7, require that a debtor repay a portion of her debts over time through a repayment plan. See 11 U.S.C. 707(b)(1). Third, nothing prevents an above-median-income chapter 7 debtor whose case is dismissed from later refiling, and appropriately deducting expenses for loan or lease payments for a vehicle obtained on credit after the dismissal. Finally, the United States Trustee has express statutory authority to decline to bring a motion to dismiss. See 11 U.S.C. § 704(b)(2). Thus, the government need not move to dismiss a case that fails the means test if the debtor will experience a significant reduction in income, or if the debtor establishes the need to purchase a vehicle shortly after the filing of her case.

Conversely, the Tates' interpretation of the statute (a) renders the term "applicable" superfluous; (b) confuses the distinction between the words "applicable" and "actual" found in section 707(b)(2)(A)(ii)(I); and (c) misconstrues the phrase "shall not include payments for debts" found in section 707(b)(2)(A)(ii)(I). Further, the Tates' reliance on the means test form and the Advisory Committee Notes to that form is misplaced because neither purports to alter the statute and could not alter the statute even if it sought to do so.

Finally, while the United States Court of Appeals for the Seventh Circuit recently decided this issue in favor of the Tate's position [see Ross-Tousey v. Neary, -- F.3d -- , 2008 WL 5234070 (7th Cir. Dec. 17, 2008)], that decision should not be followed by this Court for two reasons. First, Ross-Tousey primarily relied on a majority opinion of a divided Sixth Circuit Bankruptcy Appellate Panel, whose decision was entered after briefing was completed in Ross-Tousey. See Ross-Tousey, 2008 WL 5234070 (citing and quoting extensively from Hildebrand v. Kimbro (In re Kimbro), 389 B.R. 518 (B.A.P. 6th Cir. 2008)). Accordingly, the Seventh Circuit did not have the benefit of the government's views regarding the divided Sixth Circuit bankruptcy appellate panel's opinion prior to reaching its own decision. Second, the opinion on which Ross-Tousey primarily relies, Kimbro, has been described as "a superb effort to weave a seemingly robust cloth from somewhat thin threads." Kimbro, 389 B.R. at 532 (Fulton, J., dissenting). Specifically, the majority in Kimbro (a) misapprehended the United States' construction of the words "applicable" and "actual" in section 707(b)(2)(A)(ii)(I); (b) erroneously concluded that the vehicle ownership amount was necessary to cover operating costs, when a different IRS expense standard governs those types of expense; (c) erroneously ruled section 707(b)(2)(A)(ii)(I)'s statement that "monthly expenses of the debtor shall not include any payments for debts" justifies the allowance; (d) erroneously relied upon legislative history of a statute never enacted; and (e) inappropriately declined to adopt the dictionary meaning of the word "applicable." See Kimbro, 389 B.R. at 518-31.

ARGUMENT

I. A VEHICLE OWNERSHIP EXPENSE AMOUNT IS "APPLICABLE" UNDER SECTION 707(b)(2)(A)(ii)(I) OF THE BANKRUPTCY CODE ONLY WHEN DEBTORS ARE MAKING A CORRESPONDING LOAN OR LEASE PAYMENT ON THEIR VEHICLES, WHICH THE TATES ARE NOT.

A. Vehicle ownership expense amounts are not "applicable" to debtors who make no loan or lease payments.

The Bankruptcy Code permits above-median-income debtors like the Tates to claim a vehicle ownership expense amount in a set amount when that expense is "applicable." See 11 U.S.C. § 707(b)(2)(A)(ii)(I). Section 707(b)(2)(A)(ii)(I) provides that a debtor's "monthly expenses shall be the debtor's applicable monthly expense amounts specified under the . . . Local Standards . . . issued by the Internal Revenue Service. . . ." 11 U.S.C. § 707(b)(2)(A)(ii)(I) (emphasis added).

The Bankruptcy Code does not define the term "applicable." Nor has the United States Trustee identified any Supreme Court or Fifth Circuit decision providing a definition in the bankruptcy court context. Accordingly, where, as here, a statutory term is undefined, the term should be given its ordinary meaning. Smith v. United States, 508 U.S. 223, 228 (1993) ("When a word is not defined by statute, we normally construe it in accord with its ordinary or natural meaning."); Hamilton v. United Healthcare of Louisiana, Inc., 310 F.3d 385, 391 (5th Cir. 2002) ("A fundamental canon of statutory construction instructs that in the absence of a statutory definition, we give terms their ordinary meaning.").

The dictionary defines "applicable" to mean "capable of being applied: having relevance . . . fit, suitable, or right to be applied: APPROPRIATE" Webster's Third New International Dictionary, at 105 (1981) (emphasis in original). Such a meaning should therefore be imparted to the term "applicable" used in section 707(b)(2)(A)(ii)(I). See Hartford Underwriters Ins. Co. v.

Union Planters Bank, N.A., 530 U.S. 1, 6 (2000) ("when the statute's language is plain, the sole function of the courts-at least where the disposition required by the text is not absurd-is to enforce it according to its terms.") (internal quotations omitted). See also Thompson v. Goetzmann, 337 F.3d 489, 498 n.20 (5th Cir. 2003) ("[D]ictionaries are a principal source for ascertaining the ordinary meaning of statutory language.").

The bankruptcy and district courts' interpretations of section 707(b)(2)(A)(ii)(I) is consistent with this ordinary meaning because they do not allow debtors to claim a monthly vehicle ownership expense amount when they have no associated monthly loan or lease expenses.

As articulated by the Ninth Circuit bankruptcy appellate panel in Ransom, "[g]iven the ordinary sense of the term 'applicable,' how is the vehicle ownership expense allowance capable of being applied to [a] debtor if he does not make any lease or loan payments on the vehicle?" Ransom v. MBNA America Bank, N.A. (In re Ransom), 380 B.R. 799, 807-8 (B.A.P. 9th Cir. 2007) (emphasis in original). The answer is, it is not. If a debtor, like the Tates, has no loan or lease payments on her vehicle, then there is simply no expense capable of being applied. For this reason alone, the lower courts' orders, which applied the dictionary meaning of the term "applicable" in dismissing the Tates case as abusive, should be affirmed.

Indeed, if there were ever any doubt regarding what Congress intended the term "applicable" to mean under section 707(b)(2)(A)(ii)(I), it would be answered in the next subsection of the Bankruptcy Code: subsection 707(b)(2)(A)(ii)(II). That subsection states, in relevant part, that a "debtor's monthly expenses may include, if applicable, the continuation of actual expenses paid by the debtor . . . for care and support of an elderly, chronically ill, or disabled household member or member of the debtor's immediate family. . . ." 11 U.S.C. § 707(b)(2)(A)(ii)(II) (emphasis added).

Thus, Congress used the term "applicable" under section 707(b)(2)(A)(ii)(II) to only allow expenses to debtors if those expenses literally apply to that particular debtor.

Accordingly, because it is a basic rule of statutory construction that "'identical words used in different parts of the same act are intended to have the same meaning[,]'" Comm. of Internal Revenue v. Lundy, 516 U.S. 235, 250 (1996) (citations omitted), the same meaning of the term "applicable" in section 707(b)(2)(A)(ii)(II) should be given to the term "applicable" in section 707(b)(2)(A)(ii)(I).

Many appellate decisions agree with the bankruptcy court and district court in this case that when debtors, such as the Tates, have no loan or lease expenses on their vehicles, they cannot deduct a monthly vehicle loan or lease expense amount on their means test form pursuant to section 707(b)(2)(A)(ii)(I). See Babin v. Wilson (In re Wilson), 383 B.R. 729 (B.A.P. 8th Cir. 2008); Grossman v. Sawdy (In re Sawdy), 384 B.R. 199 (E.D. Wis. 2008), overruled sub nom. Ross-Tousey, 2008 WL 5234070; Wieland v. Thomas (In re Thomas), 382 B.R. 793 (D. Kan. 2008); Meade v. McVay (In re Meade), 384 B.R. 132 (W.D. Tex. 2008); United States Trustee v. Deadmond (In re Deadmond), 2008 WL 191165 (D. Mont. Jan. 22, 2008); Ransom, 380 B.R. at 799, appeal pending Case No. 08-15066 (9th Cir. Jan. 4, 2008); Fokkena v. Hartwick (In re Hartwick), 373 B.R. 645 (D. Minn. 2007). But see Ross-Tousey, 2008 WL 5234070; Pearson v. Stewart (In re Pearson), 390 B.R. 706 (B.A.P. 10th Cir. 2008), appeal pending Case No. 08-8060 (10th Cir. Aug. 19, 2008); Kimbro, 389 B.R. at 518, appeal pending Case No. 08-5871 (6th Cir., Aug. 24, 2008); Clippard v. Ragle (In re Ragle), 395 B.R. 387 (E.D. Ky. 2008); Brunner v. Armstrong (In re Armstrong), 395 B.R. 127 (E.D. Wash. 2008); Musselman v. eCast Settlement Corp., 394 B.R. 801 (E.D. N.C. 2008).

The bankruptcy and district courts' rulings in this case are consistent with the bulk of the published Fifth Circuit bankruptcy court opinions on this topic as well. See In re Owsley, 384 B.R. 739 (Bankr. N.D. Tex. 2008); In re White, 393 B.R. 436 (Bankr. N.D. Miss. 2008); In re Brown, 376 B.R. 601 (Bankr. S.D. Tex. 2007); In re Pampas, 369 B.R. 290 (Bankr. Tex. 2006). But see In re Leary, 2008 WL 1782636 (Bankr. S.D. Tex. 2008).

B. The Tates' reading of Section 707(b)(2)(A)(ii)(I) renders the term "applicable" superfluous.

Under the Tates' interpretation of section 707(b)(2)(A)(ii)(I), the term "applicable" modifies the phrase "amounts specified under the . . . Local Standards" not the debtor's "monthly expense." See Appellant's Brief, at 8-9 (citing Kimbro, 389 B.R. at 518; In re Chamberlain, 369 B.R. 519, 524 (Bankr. D. Ariz. 2007)). However, if that were so, Congress could just have easily stated in section 707(b)(2)(A)(ii)(I) that:

> a "debtor's monthly expenses shall be the debtor's ~~applicable~~ monthly expense amounts specified under the . . . Local Standards . . . issued by the Internal Revenue Service. . . ."

See Ransom, 380 B.R. at 808 (concluding that such a construction would "read[] 'applicable' right out of the Bankruptcy Code."). After all, striking out the word "applicable" would still lead debtors to the same line under the IRS Local Standards, and if that is all Congress intended, there was no need to use the word "applicable" at all. Instead, Congress deliberately chose to include the term "applicable" in section 707(b)(2)(A)(ii)(I). Accordingly, because "courts should strive to give operative meaning to every word in a statute," see Cooper Indus., Inc. v. Aviall Servs., Inc., 543 U.S. 157, 167 (2004), Tesfamichael v. Gonzales, 411 F.3d 169, 175 (5th Cir. 2005), the word "applicable" must be read as adding something to the statute, and the Tates' interpretation of section 707(b)(2)(A)(ii)(I) fails. See Deadmond, 2008 WL 191165, at *4 ("The word ['applicable'] must mean something, and if some monthly expenses are applicable, then other monthly expenses are not applicable.").

Because the Tates' reading of section 707(b)(2)(A)(ii)(I) renders the term "applicable" superfluous, the term must have a different meaning than the one they ascribe. See generally Cooper Indus., Inc., 543 U.S. at 167; Tesfamichael, 411 F.3d at 175. As we explain above, the word "applicable" does have a different meaning. Under its dictionary meaning, the word exists to allow debtors to claim a standard vehicle expense amount that is applicable because they have a loan or lease expense.

C. The Tates confuse the distinction between the words "applicable" and "actual" in section 707(b)(2)(A)(ii)(I).

In their brief, the Tates suggest that requiring debtors to incur a monthly cost in an expense category before deducting the corresponding IRS standard expense amount would read "applicable" as meaning "actual." Appellant's Brief, at 8-9. This leads the Tates to conclude that the term "applicable" cannot mean debtors have a corresponding expense because that would give identical meaning to two different terms Congress used in the same statute. Id. at 9 (construing section 707(b)(2)(A)(ii)(I), which uses both terms).

What the Tates' argument fails to recognize, however, is that the lower courts' construction gives the words "applicable" and "actual" entirely different meanings in section 707(b)(2)(A)(ii)(I).

Contrary to the Tates' suggestion, vehicle expense amounts under section 707(b)(2)(A)(ii)(I) are not the debtor's "actual," or literal, vehicle ownership expenses. To the contrary, they are static, fixed-amounts, drawn from the IRS Standards, used regardless of the debtor's "actual" expenses. See Hartwick, 373 B.R. at 650 (recognizing that a debtor's "actual" expense does not control the amount of the vehicle ownership deduction under section 707(b)(2)(A)(ii)(I)). Debtors receive $471.00 for the first vehicle that has an associated loan or lease payment, and $332.00 for the second. See United States Trustee Appendix "A." These are the opposite of "actual" expenses.

Under the bankruptcy court's and district court's interpretation of section 707(b)(2)(A)(ii)(I), all a court is required to do is determine whether a vehicle ownership cost exists. See Sawdy, 384 B.R. 214 (the standard vehicle ownership expense amount "is to be used if and only if the debtor actually has the monthly expense of an actual car payment"). Once it is determined that a debtor has a loan or lease payment, the standardized $471.00 and $332.00 amounts are used in the means test, not a debtor's actual, literal, monthly expenditures. Thus, the bankruptcy court's and district court's interpretation of section 707(b)(2)(A)(ii)(I) gives each word in the statute its proper meaning – that is, debtors may claim actual expenses for some expense categories, but must claim standardized expense amounts for vehicles that have associated loan or lease payments. See Thomas, 382 B.R. at 797 (use of the word "'applicable' . . . does not suggest an intent by Congress that the numbers should simply be plucked from the Standards for a debtor's expenses under the means test as if in a vacuum, without reference to the context and meaning of those numbers.") (emphasis in original).

Because the terms "applicable" and "actual" have different meanings under section 707(b)(2)(A)(ii)(I), the Tates' concern regarding an overlap of definitions is erroneous. See Thomas, 382 B.R. at 793 (finding that "the juxtaposition of 'applicable . . . amounts' and 'actual . . . expenses' in the statute is not inconsistent with the Court's interpretation" that vehicle ownership expense amounts are only applicable if a debtor is making loan or lease payments on a vehicle); Meade, 384 B.R. at 136 (explaining how the terms "applicable" and "actual" have different meanings under section 707(b)(2)(A)(ii)(I)).

Indeed, even if the terms "applicable" and "actual" meant the same thing in section 707(b)(2)(A)(ii)(I), the Supreme Court has recognized that there is nothing wrong with two different words within a single section of a statute being synonymous. See Wachovia Bank v. Schmidt, 546 U.S. 303, 314 (2006) ("Congress may well have comprehended the words 'located' and 'established,' as used in [28 U.S.C.] § 1348, not as contrasting, but as synonymous or alternative terms."). Thus, the Tates' argument fails for this reason as well.

A reconciliation of terms within a statute should do the least damage to the language enacted by Congress, and should afford the maximum amount of credence to the canon that all words in a statute should be given effect. Accordingly, because the Tates' reconciliation of the terms "applicable" and "actual" found in section 707(b)(2)(A)(ii)(I) fails to accomplish this, it should be rejected.

D. The Tates also misapprehend the purpose and meaning of the phrase "shall not include payments for debts" in section 707(b)(2)(A)(ii)(I).

Section 707(b)(2)(A)(ii)(I) also provides that "Notwithstanding any other provision of this clause, the monthly expenses for the debtor shall not include any payments for debts." See 11 U.S.C. § 707(b)(2)(A)(ii)(I). The Tates suggest, without further explanation, that this phrase supports their position that Congress intended to allow an ownership expense even when a debtor has no payment or lease obligations. See Appellant's Brief, at 8 (citing Kimbro, 539 B.R. at 518, which in turn cites section 707(b)(2)(A)(ii)(I) for the proposition stated).

The Tates' reading suffers from three flaws. First, the Tates misunderstand why section 707(b)(2)(A)(ii)(I) includes the prohibition against deduction of debts. It does so to clarify that debtors must deduct applicable standardized expense amounts from their income rather than their debt payments. Cf. In re Knight, 370 B.R. 429, 436-37 (Bankr. N.D. Ga. 2007) (holding section 707(b)(2)(A) "preclude[d] deduction" of a debt on the means test).[10]

Second, the Tates' reading fails to appreciate why the means test uses standardized expense amounts in the first place. It uses them not to deduct "debt" from income, but to deduct reasonable, standardized expense amounts from income. It does that in order to determine whether a debtor, after deducting "applicable" standardized expenses, has $166.67 or more left over each month to repay unsecured debts. Thus, the expense amounts exist to determine how much will be left over to pay debts; they do not themselves constitute debts.

Finally, the Tates' reading leads to an inequitable result. Under their reading, only debtors who have no car payments could claim the standardized deduction. Those who actually have a corresponding loan or lease obligation could not claim the standardized expense amount because it would be prohibited as a "payment for debt" under section 707(b)(2)(A)(ii)(I).

That reading turns the statute upside down. Under it, debtors with indebtedness could not claim an "applicable" standardized expense amount. But debtors who at least need the standardized expense amount deduction - because they have no associated indebtedness, could. That construction makes no sense.

[10] Section 707(b)(2)(A)(iii) allows debtors to deduct secured debt payments. It does so because the means test is used to determine how much income is left over to pay unsecured debt. To obtain that figure, it is necessary to deduct secured debt payments.

II. AFFIRMING THE LOWER COURT'S READING OF SECTION 707(b)(2)(A)(ii)(I) AS LIMITING VEHICLE OWNERSHIP EXPENSE AMOUNTS TO DEBTORS WHO HAVE LOAN OR LEASE PAYMENTS FULFILLS TWO GOALS CONGRESS EXPRESSED IN ENACTING THE 2005 ACT: ENSURING THAT ABOVE-MEDIAN INCOME DEBTORS REPAY THEIR DEBTS WHEN THEY CAN, AND ELIMINATING ABUSE.

A. Congress passed the 2005 Act to maximize debtor repayment to creditors and to eliminate opportunities for bankruptcy abuse.

In interpreting "applicable" in § 707(b)(2)(A)(ii)(I), this Court may consider the relevant legislative history to determine the statute's objectives and illuminate its text. See Almendarez-Torres v. United States, 523 U.S. 224, 228 (1998) ("We therefore look to the statute before us and ask what Congress intended...In answering this question, we look to the statute's language, structure, subject matter, context, and history-factors that typically help courts determine a statute's objectives and thereby illuminate its text."); Crandon v. United States, 494 U.S. 152, 158 (1990) ("In determining the meaning of the statute, we look not only to the particular statutory language, but to the design of the statute as a whole and to its object and policy.").

The "heart" of the 2005 Act is the means test, which seeks to "ensure that debtors repay creditors the maximum they can afford." H.R. Rep. No. 109-31 (I), at 1, U.S.C.C.A.N. at 89.[11] See also Schultz v. United States, 529 F.3d 343, 347 (6th Cir. 2008) ("The centerpiece of the [2005 Act] is the imposition of a 'means test' for chapter 7 filers."). Cf. Thomas, 382 B.R. at 798 ("If a debtor were permitted a car ownership allowance when he actually incurs no such expense, application of the means test would not accurately reflect the debtor's ability to repay creditors, and the purpose of the statute would be frustrated.").

Congress felt this aspect of bankruptcy reform legislation was so important that it included this language in the very first paragraph, of the very first page, of the 2005 Act's legislative history. See H.R. Rep. No. 109-31 (I), at 1, 2005 U.S.C.C.A.N. at 89.

[11] There is no Senate Report or Conference Report to the 2005 Act.

Congress saw fit to reiterate this point when it addressed this specific provision in the legislative history. Id. at 97-100. Given how important this was to Congress, the statute should be interpreted in accordance with the overarching goal that underpins the 2005 Act.

Further, the 2005 Act also sought to eliminate "loopholes and incentives" in the system "that allow and – sometimes – even encourage opportunistic personal filings and abuse." H.R. Rep. No. 109-31 (I), at 5, 2005 U.S.C.C.A.N. at 92.

Ensuring, as the lower courts did here, that above-median-income debtors are eligible to claim standardized deductions for vehicle ownership expenses only when they have such expenses honors congressional intent that debtors repay their debts when they are able. See Ransom, 380 B.R. at 807 ("[W]hat is important is the payments that debtors actually make, not how many cars they own, because the payments that debtors make are what actually affect their ability to make payments to their creditors."); Wilson, 383 B.R. at 733 (noting that for above-median-income chapter 13 debtors, the "purpose" of the 2005 Act was to "require" such debtors "to make more funds available to their unsecured creditors"); Hartwick, 373 B.R. at 652.

B. The Tates' interpretation of section 707(b)(2)(A)(ii)(I) would yield inequitable results not contemplated by Congress.

The Tates' interpretation of section 707(b)(2)(A)(ii)(I) would frustrate the 2005 Act's goal of proper repayment by allowing above-median-income debtors to claim phantom expenses that do not apply to them. Under the Tates' reading of section 707(b)(2)(A)(ii)(I), a higher-income debtor with an inoperable car "rusting away in his backyard" could claim the ownership expense amount simply because the car is an "automobile" and he "owns" it. Neary v. Ross-Tousey (In re Ross- Tousey), 368 B.R. 762, at 768 (E.D. Wis. 2007), rev'd, 2008 WL 5234070. This statutory reading has been rejected by a number of appellate courts because it "defies common sense." Deadmond, 2008 WL 191165 at *4.

III. ALTHOUGH THE DISTRICT COURT DID NOT CHOOSE TO RELY ON THE IRS' METHODOLOGY AS A GROUND FOR ITS DECISION, THE DISTRICT COURT'S INTERPRETATION OF SECTION 707(b)(2)(A)(ii)(I) IS CONSISTENT WITH THE IRS'S REFUSAL TO ALLOW PARTIES TO CLAIM NONEXISTENT VEHICLE OWNERSHIP EXPENSES UNDER ITS LOCAL STANDARDS.

In their brief, the Tates make much of the fact that several of the cases supporting the United States Trustee's position apparently look to language contained in the Internal Revenue Manual and the Internal Revenue Service's Collection Financial Standards for support.[12] See Appellant's Brief, at 9-10 (citing Ransom, 380 B.R. at 799; Meade, 384 B.R. at 132; Wilson, 383 B.R. at 729; Sawdy,

[12] Criticism of these cases primarily stems from the fact that Congress did not expressly incorporate the documents in question into the Bankruptcy Code. See, e.g., Kimbro, 389 B.R. at 524-27; Ross-Tousey, 2008 WL 5234070, at *9. While that is true, consideration of the Internal Revenue Manual and the Internal Revenue Service's Collection Financial Standards is still entirely appropriate for two reasons.

First, the language of the 2005 Act does not indicate any intent to preclude reference to the IRS's application of its own expense standards. See Pub. L. No. 109-8, 119 Stat. 23 (2005). Indeed, it requires that deductions be taken "under" the Local Standards. Id. Further, the legislative history of the 2005 Act specifically references the IRS Financial Analysis Handbook in describing applicable expense amounts. See H.R. Rep. No. 109-31(I), 2005 U.S.C.C.A.N. at 99-100.

Second, many of the cases critical of consideration of the Internal Revenue Manual and the Internal Revenue Service's Collection Financial Standards rely themselves on legislative history, from a statute never enacted, to support such criticism. See, e.g., Ross-Tousey, 2008 WL 5234070, at *9 (referencing house report to 1998 reform bill never enacted), Kimbro, 389 B.R. at 525-26 (same). However, the law of this Circuit expressly precludes such an approach. See Interstate Natural Gas Co. v. Federal Power Comm., 156 F.2d 949, 952 (5th Cir. 1946) ("the legislative history of a bill that was not adopted cannot be resorted to to construe a bill that was.") (emphasis added), aff'd. 331 U.S. 682 (1947). See also Com. of Puerto Rico v. Blumenthal, 642 F.2d 622, 635 n.23 (D.C. Cir. 1980) ("[Appellant's] argument that we should not consider the legislative history of a bill that was never enacted represents a correct statement of the law.").

Accordingly, because "the essence of statutory construction is to find the thought beneath the words," consideration of the Internal Revenue Manual and the Internal Revenue Service's Collection Financial Standards is proper. United States ex. rel. Knauff v. Shaughnessy, 338 U.S. 537, 547 (1950) (Frankfurter, J., dissenting).

384 B.R. at 199; Hartwick, 373 B.R. at 645; and Neary, 368 B.R. at 762). What the Tates fail to mention, however, is that none of these cases rely exclusively on the Internal Revenue Manual and the Collection Financial Standards to reach their conclusions. Rather, each engaged in an extensive statutory analysis of section 707(b)(2)(A)(ii)(I) prior to determining that debtors should not be allowed to claim a nonexistent ownership expense under section 707(b)(2)(A)(ii)(I). That is what the lower courts did here. It is what the United States Trustee asks this Court to do in this case. Indeed, the district court did not even mention the Internal Revenue Manual or the Collection Financial Standards in its opinion. Accordingly, to ask this Court to reverse the district court for improperly relying on a theory it never adopted, as the Tates appear to do, is inappropriate.

Nevertheless, had the district court relied on such support, there are two reasons why the IRS's eligibility criteria for deductions under its Local Standards support the district court's interpretation of the textual phrase this Court is called upon to interpret in this appeal.

First, section 707(b)(2)(A)(ii)(I)'s text requires that expense amounts be those established "under" the IRS standards. See 11 U.S.C. § 707(b)(2)(A)(ii)(I). This textual "reference to amounts specified 'under' the Standards indicates that one should use the numbers that result when the Standards are applied as they usually are." Thomas, 382 B.R. at 798. Indeed, as explained by one appellate court, given the text of the statute, "the most logical resource to consult is the IRS." Hartwick, 373 B.R. at 650.

Under its Local Standard for vehicle ownership, the IRS prohibits vehicle ownership deductions if an individual has no loan or lease payments.[13] See IRS Internal Revenue Manual, Pt.

[13] For individuals with existing vehicle ownership costs, the IRS applies the expense deduction as a "cap," under which an individual may take the lower of his actual expense or the standardized expense amount. See IRS Collection Financial Standards (stating that under the Local (continued...)

5, Ch. 15, § 5.15.1.7(4.B), available at http://www.irs.gov/irm/part5/ch15s01.html (providing that if a taxpayer has no vehicle loan or lease payments, the Local Standard ownership cost cannot be claimed by the taxpayer). The district court's construction similarly applies section 707(b)(2)(A)(ii)(I) to deny nonexistent transportation expenses, albeit on a conclusion grounded on the statute's text. Accord Sawdy, 384 B.R. at 204 (finding it "logical to look at the actual IRS Collection Financial Standards in determining the applicable expense Standards in bankruptcy actions"); Thomas, 382 B.R. at 798 ("[I]t does not appear that Congress intended to adopt only the numbers contained in the Standards without the context and meaning provided by the IRS in creating the Standards and in its normal application of those numbers.").

Second, Congress was interested in more than the mere numbers found in the IRS Local Standards in crafting section 707(b)(2)(A)(ii)(I). The House Report to the legislation provides that the debtor's monthly expenses "must be the applicable monthly amounts set forth in the [IRS] Financial Analysis Handbook as Necessary Expenses under the National and Local Standards categories." H.R. Rep. No. 109-31 (I), 2005 U.S.C.C.A.N. at 99-100 (2005). The Financial Analysis Handbook provides that the Local Standard ownership cost cannot be claimed if a taxpayer has no vehicle loan or lease payments.[14] See IRS Internal Revenue Manual, Pt. 5, Ch. 15, § 5.15.1.7(4.B), available at http://www.irs.gov/irm/part5/ch15s01.html.

Standards, "the taxpayer is allowed the amount actually spent or the standard, whichever is less"). The Bankruptcy Code, in turn, prescribes a different application for debtors with existing ownership costs: in calculating disposable income, it permits debtors the entire expense amount. See 11 U.S.C. 707(b)(2)(A)(ii)(I) (providing that the applicable expense amount "shall be" the amount "specified" under the IRS Local Standard).

[14] Thus, for the other reasons advanced in this brief, the district court ruling should be affirmed even if this Court concludes that the IRS's application has no bearing.

IV. THE BANKRUPTCY AND DISTRICT COURTS' CONSTRUCTION OF SECTION 707(b)(2)(A)(ii)(I) IMPLEMENTS SOUND BANKRUPTCY POLICY.

A. Their interpretation is fair to debtors and creditors.

The district court's interpretation of section 707(b)(2)(A)(ii)(I) is fair. It does not hurt below-median-income debtors – those who comprise the vast majority of bankruptcy filers – because such debtors are not subject to section 707(b)(2)'s means test in the first place. See 11 U.S.C. 707(b)(7).

The bankruptcy and district courts' reading of section 707(b)(2)(A)(ii)(I) are also fair because they ensure that above-median-income debtors will repay their debts when they can. In enacting the 2005 Act, Congress was concerned that under the prior system, "some bankruptcy debtors are able to repay a significant portion of their debts" but are not required to do so. H.R. Rep. No. 109-31 (I), at 5, 2005 U.S.C.C.A.N. at 92.

Finally, the lower courts' interpretation is fair to creditors because they recognize that debtors with a financial ability to repay creditors a monthly amount above the statutory threshold in section 707(b)(2) should be subject to paying back their creditors outside of chapter 7. By contrast, the Tates' interpretation is unfair to creditors because it would allow above-median-income debtors to use nonexistent expenses to lower their disposable income below the threshold for the presumption of abuse. Rather than being subject to higher repayments outside chapter 7, such debtors would instead discharge debts they are able to pay.[15]

[15] It has been argued that permitting the vehicle ownership expense deduction only when a debtor has loan or lease payments would allow an unfair windfall for a hypothetical debtor with only a few or a single monthly payment remaining on his vehicle. See Neary, 368 B.R. at 767-68, rev'd., 2008 WL 5234070. This argument fails to recognize that even when such debtors pass the means test their cases may still be dismissed based on the totality of the circumstances of their financial situations (e.g., their ability to repay debts going forward given the imminent satisfaction of their vehicle loan or lease obligation). See 11 U.S.C. § 707(b)(3)(B) (providing for the dismissal of cases for abuse based on the totality of the circumstances of a debtor's financial situation).

B. Their interpretation protects debtors who lack vehicle ownership expenses from hardship.

Under the bankruptcy and district courts' interpretations, at least four safety valves are available to prevent hardships against above-median-income debtors who have no vehicle ownership expenses. First, where debtors own older or higher-mileage vehicles, they are afforded special protection. Debtors who own unencumbered vehicles over 6 years old or with 75,000 or more miles are entitled to an additional $200 in monthly operating expenses per vehicle. See IRS Internal Revenue Manual, Pt. 5, Ch. 8, § 5.8.5.5.2, available at http://www.irs.gov/irm/part5/ch08s05.html. See also Ransom, 380 B.R. at 808 (recognizing $200 additional allowance); Hartwick, 373 B.R. at 652 (same); Wilson, 383 B.R. at 729 (same).

Second, even if the presumption of abuse arises for an above-median-income debtor, the debtor may nonetheless obtain bankruptcy relief. Indeed, if the debtor's case presents an abuse of chapter 7, the debtor may elect to convert her chapter 7 case to a case under chapter 13 or chapter 11, both of which, unlike chapter 7, require that a debtor repay debts over time through a repayment plan. See 11 U.S.C. 707(b)(1).

Third, nothing prevents an above-median-income chapter 7 debtor whose case is dismissed from later refiling, and appropriately deducting expenses for loan or lease payments for a vehicle obtained after the dismissal. A debtor whose monthly disposable income drops below the statutory presumption of abuse threshold is also free to refile and obtain a discharge.[16]

[16] Upon refiling, the debtor will face the possibility of a time-limited automatic stay if she files within a year of the dismissal. See 11 U.S.C. 362(c)(3)(A). However, the debtor may also obtain relief from this limitation under section 362(c)(3)(B). See 11 U.S.C. § 362(c)(3)(B) (providing for extension of automatic stay upon demonstration that current case was filed in good faith).

Fourth, the United States Trustee may decline to bring a motion to dismiss in the event a debtor experiences a significant reduction in income, or in the event a debtor establishes the need to purchase a vehicle shortly after the filing of her case. See 11 U.S.C. § 704(b)(2) (providing for the filing of a statement indicating why United States Trustee does not consider a motion to dismiss to be appropriate notwithstanding that a presumption of abuse arises). Indeed, as previously noted, the United States Trustee declined to seek dismissal when a presumption of abuse arose in 1,441 separate cases filed during fiscal year 2007. See United States Trustee's Brief, supra, at 2-3.

V. THE TATES' RELIANCE ON THE MEANS TEST FORM AND THE BANKRUPTCY ADVISORY COMMITTEE NOTES TO THE MEANS TEST FORM IS MISPLACED FOR TWO REASONS – THEY DO NOT ADDRESS THE ISSUE BEFORE THIS COURT, AND COULD NOT SUPERCEDE A STATUTE EVEN IF THEY DID.

The Tates argue that because their means test form fails to contain any language limiting the ownership expense under section 707(b)(2)(A)(ii)(I) to debtors with debt payments, this Court should follow suit. See Appellant's Brief, at 11. The Tates reliance on the means test form is misplaced. First, the text of the statute controls, not a form.[17] See 28 U.S.C. § 2075 (stating that the "Supreme Court shall have the power to prescribe by general rules, the forms of process, writs, pleadings, and motions, and the practice and procedure in cases under title 11" but that "[s]uch rules shall not abridge, enlarge, or modify any substantive right."); Fed. R. Bankr. P. 9009 ("forms shall be construed to be consistent with these rules and the Code."). Second, the means test form does not even opine on this subject. See Fed. R. Bankr. P. Official Form 22A. Rather, it merely states "Check the number of vehicles for which you claim an ownership/lease expense (You may not claim an ownership/lease expense for more than two vehicles.)." Id. (Emphasis added). Third, the Tates fail to cite any authority to support this conclusion, and those courts that have opined on the subject of form versus statute have concluded that statutory language prevails. See Coop v. Lasowski (In re Lasowski), 384 B.R. 205, 210 (B.A.P. 8th Cir. 2008) (noting that the Bankruptcy Code, not the chapter 13 means test form, controls the calculation of disposable income); In re Anderson, 383 B.R. 699, 703 n.8 (Bankr. S.D. Ohio 2008) (same); In re Graham, 363 B.R. 844, 850 (Bankr. S.D. Ohio 2007) (same); In re Arnold, 376 B.R. 652 (Bankr. M.D. Tenn. 2007) (same). See also Dove-Nation v. eCast Settlement Corp. (In re Dove-Nation), 318 B.R. 147, 153 (B.A.P. 8th Cir. 2004) (instructional language contained on form does not override clear statutory language).

[17] Beyond that, an advisory committee's comments cannot alter statutorily adopted language either. See generally Whitehouse v. United States Dist. Court for Dist. of Rhode Island, 53 F.3d 1349, 1364-65 (1st Cir. 1995) (referencing advisory committee comment to Fed. R. Crim. P. 57). See also 28 U.S.C. § 2075 (described above); Term Loan Holder Comm. v. Ozer Group, L.L.C. (In re Caldor Group), 303 F.3d 161, 170 (2d. Cir. 2002) ("forsaking the plain meaning of a provision of the Bankruptcy Code solely because that meaning conflicts with a bankruptcy rule would run afoul of 28 U.S.C. § 2075.").

VI. THIS COURT SHOULD NOT FOLLOW THE SEVENTH CIRCUIT'S DECISION IN ROSS-TOUSEY.

On December 17, 2008, the United States Court of Appeals for the Seventh Circuit decided Ross-Tousey v. Neary. See Ross-Tousey, 2008 WL 5234070. Ross-Tousey is the first circuit decision to interpret the word "applicable" in section 707(b)(2)(A)(ii)(I).[18] Ross-Tousey primarily relied on interpretive conclusions reached by a divided Sixth Circuit bankruptcy appellate panel in Kimbro, whose decision was entered after briefing was completed in Ross-Tousey. See Ross-Tousey, 2008 WL 5234070, at *5-10 (citing and quoting extensively from Kimbro, 389 B.R. at 518). Accordingly, the Seventh Circuit did not have the benefit of the government's views regarding the Kimbro decision prior to reaching its own decision in Ross-Tousey.

Had the United States Trustee had the opportunity to share those views with the Seventh Circuit he would have argued the following:

First, while the majority in Kimbro concluded that the United States Trustee's construction of section 707(b)(2)(A)(ii)(I) improperly gave the same meaning to the words "applicable" and "actual" in section 707(b)(2)(A)(ii)(I), the government's reading actually gives them different ones. Compare Kimbro, 389 B.R. at 523-24 with United States Trustee's Brief, supra. at 16-19. Indeed, this juxtaposition of terms was explained by the dissent in Kimbro when it stated that "Congress intended and used the phrases 'applicable monthly expense amounts' . . . and 'actual expenses' . . . simply in recognition of the differing ways in which the IRS uses the National Standards and Local Standards versus the Other Necessary Expense Categories." Kimbro, 389 B.R. at 533 (Fulton, J., dissenting).

Second, while the majority in Kimbro concluded that the vehicle ownership amount was necessary to cover operating costs, see Kimbro, 389 B.R. at 531 (referencing "depreciation, insurance, licensing fees and taxes"), that is factually wrong. To the contrary, a wholly different IRS expense standard governs those types of vehicle expenses. As explained previously, the IRS local standard for transportation is broken down into two subcategories – "ownership costs" and "operating costs;" and "operating costs" include expenses for vehicle maintenance, fuel, state and local registration, required inspection, parking fees, tolls, and driver's license fees. See United States Trustee's Brief, supra, at 6-7 (citing IRS Collection Financial Standards, available at United States Trustee Appendix "A" and at http://www.irs.gov/individuals/article/0,,id=96543,00.html.)

Third, while the Kimbro majority ruled that the phrase "monthly expenses of the debtor shall not include any payments for debts" found in section 707(b)(2)(A)(ii)(I) justifies an ownership expense allowance, see Kimbro, 389 B.R. at 523, it does not. Rather, debtors for whom the ownership expense is applicable receive a fixed standard allowance that is the dollar amount under the applicable standard, not the dollar amount associated with a "payment for a debt." See United States Trustee's Brief, supra, at 19-20.

Fourth, while the Kimbro majority relied upon the legislative history of a statute never enacted in order to support its conclusion, see Kimbro., 389 B.R. at 525-27, such an approach has been expressly rejected by at least two circuit courts of appeal (including this Circuit) presumably because it opens the door to the potential subversion of statutory language actually voted on by Congress and signed into law by the President. See, e.g., Interstate Natural Gas Co., 156 F.2d at 952 ("the legislative history of a bill that was not adopted cannot be resorted to construe a bill that was."), aff'd, 331 U.S. 682 (1947) (emphasis added). See also Blumenthal, 642 F.2d at 635 n.23 ("[Appellant's] argument that we should not consider the legislative history of a bill that was never enacted represents a correct statement of the law."). Morever, as we discuss above, the legislative history of this statute supports the statutory construction of the word "applicable" adopted by both the bankruptcy court and district court in this case. See United States Trustee's Brief, supra, at 20-22.

Fifth, and most significantly, the Kimbro majority declined to apply the dictionary meaning of the word "applicable" during the course of its statutory analysis of section 707(b)(2)(A)(ii)(I). See Kimbro, 389 B.R. at 522-23. Had Kimbro applied its definition, as the lower courts in this case did, it would have invariably ended up asking how the vehicle ownership expense allowance is "capable of being applied" to a debtor if the debtor does not make any lease or loan payments on a vehicle. See, e.g., Ransom, 380 B.R. at 807-808. Accordingly, because the majority in Kimbro failed to take this fundamental step as part of its statutory analysis, its construction of section 707(b)(2)(A)(ii)(I) is suspect.

For each of these reasons, Ross-Tousey, which primarily relied on the majority opinion in Kimbro, should not be followed by this Court.

CONCLUSION

For these reasons, the United States Trustee respectfully asks the Court to affirm the order entered below.

RESPECTFULLY SUBMITTED, this the 30th day of December, 2008.

I. INTRODUCTION AND STATEMENT OF JURISDICTION

Appellants Chana Taub (the "Debtor") and Esther Newhouse ("Ms. Newhouse") (collectively, the "Appellants") appeal an order of the United States Bankruptcy Court for the Eastern District of New York, Brooklyn Division, entered on April 9, 2010 (the "Trustee Order"), which directed the United States Trustee to appoint a chapter 11 trustee in the Debtor's case under 11 U.S.C. § 1104(a)(2), because appointment of a trustee is in the best interests of creditors and the estate, and 11 U.S.C. § 1104(a)(3), because there was cause to convert or dismiss the case under 11 U.S.C. § 1112(b). [ER, Vol. 1, Ex. 3, at 5.][1] The United States Trustee respectfully requests that this Court affirm the Trustee Order.[2]

The bankruptcy court entered the Trustee Order pursuant to an order to show cause (the "Order to Show Cause" entered on January 21, 2010. [ER, Vol I, Exhibit 13, at 104.] The Trustee Order is a final order under 28 U.S.C. § 158(a)(1). See In re American Preferred Prescription, Inc., 255 F.3d 87, 92 (2d Cir. 2001) (a bankruptcy court order directing the appointment of a chapter 11 trustee is a final judgment for purposes of appeal). See also In re Pegasus Agency, Inc., 101 F.3d 882, 885 (2d Cir. 1996) (a bankruptcy court order is final if it "completely resolve[s] all of the issues pertaining to a discrete claim, including issues as to the proper relief") (citations omitted). The Debtor and Ms. Kaufman filed timely notices of appeal on April 16 and 23, 2010, respectively. [ER, Vol. I, Ex. 2, at 3, and Ex. 1, at 1.] See 28 U.S.C. § 158(c)(2) and Fed. R. Bankr. P. 8002(a). This Court, therefore, has jurisdiction to hear the appeal under 28 U.S.C. § 158(a)(1).

[2] Under 11 U.S.C. § 307, the United States Trustee may appear and be heard on any issue in any case or proceeding under the Bankruptcy Code.

II. STATEMENT OF THE ISSUES ON APPEAL

A. Whether the bankruptcy court abused its discretion when it directed the appointment of a chapter 11 trustee under 11 U.S.C. §§ 1104(a)(2);

B. Whether the bankruptcy court abused its discretion when it directed the appointment of a chapter 11 trustee under 11 U.S.C. § 1104(a)(3);

C. Whether the bankruptcy court abused its discretion when it simultaneously entered the Trustee Order and the order restraining the Debtor's estranged husband, Simon Taub ("Mr. Taub"), from interfering with the Debtor's management of property of the bankruptcy estate (the "Restraining Order"); and

D. Whether the bankruptcy court abused its discretion when it declined to authorize the chapter 11 trustee (the "Trustee") to administer property in which the Debtor claims an equitable interest.

A bankruptcy court abuses its discretion when it bases its decision on "an error of law or a clearly erroneous finding of fact, or a decision that, 'though not necessarily the product of legal error or a clearly erroneous factual finding[,] cannot be located within the range of permissible decisions.'" In re Dana Corp., 574 F.3d 129, 145 (2d Cir. 2009) (citations omitted). The court reviews a finding that there is cause to convert or dismiss a chapter 11 case under 11 U.S.C. § 1112(b) for clear error. In re C-TC 9th Avenue Partnership, 113 F.3d 1304, 1312 (2d Cir. 1997).

IV. SUMMARY OF ARGUMENT

The bankruptcy court properly exercised its discretion when it ordered the appointment of a chapter 11 trustee under 11 U.S.C. § 1104(a)(2) because appointment of a trustee was in the best interests of creditors and the estate. There was clear and convincing evidence in the record to support the court's findings that (1) the Debtor's retention, or attempted retention, of eight bankruptcy lawyers over twenty-one months impaired her ability to manage her case effectively; (2) the Debtor did not meet her administrative obligations as a chapter 11 debtor in possession; (3) the acrimony between the Debtor and her creditors impaired her ability to reorganize; (4) the Debtor's conflicting roles interfered with her ability to act in the best interest of creditors and the estate; and (5) the appointment of a trustee would benefit the bankruptcy estate.

The bankruptcy court properly exercised its discretion when it ordered the appointment of a chapter 11 trustee under 11 U.S.C. § 1104(a)(3) on grounds that cause existed to convert or dismiss the case under 11 U.S.C.§ 1112(b). There was substantial evidence of continuing loss to or diminution of the bankruptcy estate and the absence of a reasonable likelihood of rehabilitation under 11 U.S.C.§ 1112(b)(4)(A).

The bankruptcy court properly exercised its discretion when it entered the Restraining Order and the Trustee Order at the same time a year after the Debtor filed the Motion to Restrain. Mr. Taub has failed to comply with prior restraining orders and there was no evidence in the record demonstrating that the Restraining Order would be any more effective, and the record shows that it was the Debtor, not the court, who caused the delay in adjudicating the motion.

The bankruptcy court properly exercised its discretion when it declined to authorize the Trustee to manage properties in which the Debtor claimed an equitable interest. Chapter 11 trustees are only authorized to take possession and control of property of the bankruptcy estate. The equitable interests were inchoate and not property of the estate, and accordingly, the Trustee had no authority over them. This Court should, therefore, affirm the Trustee Order.

V. STATEMENT OF THE FACTS

A. The Debtor

The Debtor filed an individual voluntary chapter 11 case pro se on July 1, 2008 (the "Petition Date"). [ER, Vol. II, Ex. 15, at 210.] On July 16, 2008, the Debtor filed an application to retain Rachel S. Blumenfeld as her bankruptcy counsel. [ER, Vol. II, Exhibit 14, at 112-113, ECF Doc. No. 11.] On July 25, 2008, the Debtor filed an application to substitute Joel M. Shafferman as her bankruptcy counsel. [ER, Vol. II, Exhibit 14, at 114, ECF Doc. No. 20.] On August 4, 2008, the bankruptcy court entered an order approving Mr. Shafferman's retention. [ER, Vol. II, Exhibit 14, at 116, ECF Doc. No. 33.]

The Debtor managed the property of her estate as a debtor in possession until the appointment of the Trustee on April 13, 2010. The United States Trustee was unable to form a committee of unsecured creditors in the case. The case involves four main parties, the Debtor and her sister, Ms. Newhouse, on one side, and the Debtor's estranged spouse, Mr. Taub, and his sister, Pnina Kaufman ("Ms. Kaufman"), on the other.

In May 2007, the Debtor sued Mr. Taub for divorce in the New York State Supreme Court, King's County.[3] [ER, Vol. I, Ex. 6, at 53.] On June 1, 2007, the state court entered an order (the "State Court Restraining Order") (i) authorizing the Debtor to manage rental real properties held in her name, located at 4819 14th Avenue, Brooklyn, New York (the "14th Avenue Property") and 1259 52nd Street, Brooklyn, New York (the "52nd Street Property"), including collecting rents and paying all expenses; and (ii) directing Mr. Taub to provide support to this two youngest children and to pay all expenses, including the mortgage, of the marital residence located at 4823 49th Avenue (the "Marital Residence"), which is also held in the Debtor's name, and to keep the Marital Residence out of foreclosure. [ER, Vol. II, Ex. 23, at 233-236.] On October 30, 2007, the court vacated the portion of the order that authorized the Debtor to collect rents, in light of litigation pending before another judge. See Appellant's Exhibit B, Part 3. The Debtor has repeatedly alleged that Mr. Taub violated the order, which resulted in foreclosure complaints against all three properties. [ER, Vol. II, Ex. 6, at 57, and Vol. III, Ex. 34, at 329, and Ex. 36, at 332.] Mr. Taub claims that the Debtor is bound by the order and violates it when she attempts to collect rents. [ER, Vol. II, Ex. 23, at 239-240.] The Debtor filed her chapter 11 case because of the impending foreclosures "as a last resort to save my assets." [ER, Vol. III, Ex. 39, at 359.]

B. Assets and Liabilities

On Schedule A, Real Property, filed on July 16, 2008, the Debtor claims ownership interests in ten real properties with an aggregate value of $40.3 million. [ER, Vol. II, Ex. 16, at [3] The Debtor originally filed for divorce in June 2005 on grounds of "cruel and inhuman treatment." [ER, Vol. 1, Ex. 6, at 52.] That case was dismissed in May 2007. Id.

213-214.] She holds sole title to the Marital Property, which she values at $1.3 million, the 14th Avenue Property, which she values at $1.5 million, and the 52nd Street Property, valued at $1.5 million. Id. According to Schedule D, Creditors Holding Secured Claims, the Marital Property and the 14th Avenue Property are encumbered by mortgages and other liens in the aggregate amount of $1,025,120.12. [ER, Vol. II, Ex. 17, at 215.] Both the Marital Property and the 14th Avenue Property were in foreclosure on the Petition Date. [ER, Vol. II, Ex. 22, at 230-231, Statement of Financial Affairs, Question 4.] The Debtor did not schedule any mortgages or other encumbrances on the 52nd Street Property. [ER, Vol. II, Ex. 17, at 215-216.] The Debtor also claims joint ownership with Mr. Taub in a summer home located at 85 Forshay Road, Monsey, New York (the "Forshay Road Property"). [ER, Vol. II, Ex. 16, at 214.] The Forshay Road Property is encumbered by a mortgage in the amount of $280,000 and a foreclosure was pending on the Petition Date. [ER, Vol. II, Ex. 17, at 216, and Ex. 22, at 230-231, Question 4.] The 52nd Street Property, the 14th Avenue Property and the Forshay Road Property (collectively, the "Rental Properties") generate rent revenues. [ER, Vol. I. Ex. 6, at 55, and Vol. III, Ex. 53, at 447.] The Debtor also scheduled an equitable interest in property located at 27 Grand Avenue, Brooklyn, New York, 10 Grand Avenue, Brooklyn, New York, and 6-8 Grand Avenue, Brooklyn, New York (collectively, the "Grand Avenue Properties"), and claims to own three properties located in Israel but did not state the nature or value of her ownership interest. [ER, Vol. II, Ex. 16, at 213.]

On Schedule E, Creditors Holding Unsecured Priority Claims, the Debtor listed claims in the total amount of $56,414.68 for real property taxes and water and sewer charges related to the 14th Avenue Property, the 52nd Street Property and the Marital Residence. [ER, Vol. II, Ex.

18, at 218-219.] On Schedule F, Creditors Holding Unsecured Nonpriority Claims, the Debtor scheduled general unsecured claims totaling $18,240,872.98. [ER, Vol. II, Ex. 19, at 220-224.] Most of the scheduled unsecured debt is lawyers' claims for legal fees. Id.

C. Income and Expenses

On Schedule I, Current Income of Individual Debtor, the Debtor claimed to have income from real property in the amount of $2,538 per month and support from family members in the amount of $5,000 per month. [ER, Vol. II, Ex. 21, at 225.] Her expenses on Schedule J, Current Expenditures of Individual Debtor, totaled $24,657 per month, including mortgage payments of $12,000 and $3,350 for utilities. [ER, Vol. II, Ex. 22, at 226-227.]

In her monthly operating report for February 2010, the Debtor listed rental income of $4,587.60. [ER, Vol. III, Ex. 52, at 447.] She listed expenses totaling $4,507.44, for among other things, utilities for the 14th Avenue Property and the 52nd Street Property, insurance and repairs for the 52nd Street Property and the 14th Ave. Property. [ER, Vol. III, Ex. 52, at 447.] The Debtor claims that the Rental Properties were fully rented, she would earn $11,850 per month. [ER, Vol. III, Ex. 45, at 375-376.]

The Debtor has admitted that she has not paid the mortgages for the Marital Residence, the Forshay Road Property and the 14th Street Property since the Petition Date. [ER, Vol. 1, Ex. 6, at 66.] The monthly mortgage payment for the Marital Residence is $5,019.19 and the post petition arrearages are in excess of $150,978.08. [ER, Vol. III, Ex. 45, at 369 and 376.] The monthly mortgage payment for the Forshay Road Property is $2,974.18. [ER, Vol. III, Ex. 45, at 376.]. Prepetition arrearages for the Forshay Road Property total $96,043.34 and post petition arrearages are $53,535.24. [ER, Vol. III, Ex. 53, at 448, and Vol. I, Ex. 6, at 56.] The monthly mortgage for the 14th Avenue Property is $2,933.17, with pre- and post petition arrearages as of February 2010 of $51,500.56 and $57,750.39, respectively. [ER, Vol. III, Ex. 53, at 448, and Vol. I, Ex. 6, at 56. Post petition arrearages for the 14th Avenue Property, the Forshay Road Property and the Marital Residence total $262,263.71. However, the Debtor claims that the mortgage on the Marital Property is Mr. Taub's responsibility under the State Court Restraining Order. [ER, Vol. III, Ex. 53, at 448.] The Debtor also claims that, since July 2005, Mr. Taub has diverted rents from the Rental Properties in the cumulative amount of $442,460.05. [ER, Vol. I, Ex. 6, at 53 and 67.]

D. Disputes Between the Parties and the Failed Mediation

Mr. Taub's alleged diversion of the rents and the Debtor's authority to manage the Rental Properties have been issues since the beginning of the case. [ER, Vol. II, Ex. 25, at 256-257, and Ex. 23, at 239-240, Vol. III, Ex. 36, at 332 and Ex. 45, at 368.] Mr. Taub and the Debtor have also repeatedly blamed each other for the failure to pay administrative expenses related to the Marital Residence and the Rental Properties in letters and pleadings filed with the bankruptcy court. [ER, Vol. II, Ex. 14, ECF 70 and 76, Ex. 24, at 246-248.]

1. Mr. Taub's First Motion to Dismiss

On July 30, 2008, Mr. Taub filed a motion to dismiss the Debtor's case (the "First Motion to Dismiss"), alleging that the Debtor had misappropriated rents and other funds and had failed to pay mortgages and other expenses related to the Rental Properties and the Marital Residence. [ER, Vol. II, Ex. 24, at 240.] He alleged that the Debtor filed the case in bad faith to obtain a tactical advantage in the divorce case where she had already "lost in scorched earth tactics." [ER, Vol. II, Ex. 24, at 237.] In her opposition, the Debtor called Mr. Taub "immoral, indecent and sadistic." [ER, Vol. II, Ex. 25, at 276.] She accused him of "looting" the properties and "intimidating" her tenants and forging her signature to steal from her bank accounts. [ER, Vol. II, Ex. 25, at 257.]

2. The Debtor's Complaint for Injunctive Relief Against Mr. Taub (Adv. Pro. No. 08-1170 (ESS)

On July 29, 2008, the Debtor filed a complaint for injunctive relief seeking to enjoin Mr. Taub from collecting rents from the Rental Properties (Adv. Pro. No. 08-01170 (ESS)). [ER, Vol. II, Ex. 26, at 280.] The Debtor also sought a preliminary injunction by order to show cause (the "Motion for Preliminary Injunction"), seeking, among other things, an order restraining Mr. Taub from interfering in the management of the Debtor's properties, authorizing the Debtor to collect rents for the properties, directing Mr. Taub to turn over rents collected and to provide an accounting of rents collected and expenses paid. [ER, Vol. II, Ex. 27, at 295.]

On July 30, 2008, the bankruptcy court entered an order scheduling a hearing on the order to show cause and granting limited interim relief (the "TRO"). [ER, Vol. II, Ex. 28, at 312.] Among other things, pending a hearing, the TRO restrained Mr. Taub from collecting rents generated by the Rental Properties until further order of the court and authorized the Debtor to collect rents from the Rental Properties for August 2008 and deposit them in Joel Shafferman's escrow account. [ER, Vol. II, Ex. 23, at 314.] At the hearing held on July 31, 2008, the bankruptcy court also "so ordered" an agreement of the parties that they would not sell, transfer, mortgage the Rental Properties or otherwise diminish them in value. [ER, Vol. II, Ex. 26, at 282, July 31, 2008 Docket Entry.] This order is still in effect. [ER, Vol. I, Ex. 4, at 13.]

The parties attempted to work out a consent order with respect to the collection of rent and payment of expenses related to the Rental Properties to resolve both the First Motion to Dismiss and the Motion for Preliminary Injunction. The Debtor filed a form of proposed order (the "Proposed Consent Order") on August 15, 2008. [ER, Vol. II, Ex. 14, at 117, ECF Doc. No 13.] However, on August 13, 2008, the Debtor filed a motion to substitute Craig Heller as her bankruptcy counsel. [ER, Vol. II, Ex. 14, at 117, ECF Doc. No. 40.] The court never approved Mr. Heller's retention because the Debtor fired him on August 25, 2010. [ER, Vol. III, Ex. 30, at 318.] On October 30, 2008, Erica Itzhak appeared at a hearing on behalf of the Debtor. [ER, Vol. III, Ex. 54, at 454, Lines 14-17.] Although Ms. Itzhak told the court that she would file a retention application that day, she did not, and she never appeared for the Debtor again. [ER, Vol. III, Ex. 54, at 457, Lines 4-22.] On November 12, 2008, the Debtor filed an application to retain the law firm of LaMonica Herbst and Maniscalco ("LaMonica") as bankruptcy counsel. [ER, Vol. II, Exhibit 14, at 124, ECF Doc. No. 92.] On November 20, 2008, however, LaMonica filed a letter withdrawing as proposed counsel. [ER, Vol. II, Exhibit 14, at 125, ECF Doc. No. 96.] Thereafter, the Debtor appeared pro se in the case from August 25, 2008 to December 17, 2008, when she finally retained substitute counsel. [ER, Vol. II, Ex. 14 at 149, ECF Doc. No. 127.] The parties never reached an agreement on the terms of the Proposed Consent Order.

3. Mr. Taub's Motion for Relief from Stay

On September 28, 2008, Mr. Taub filed a motion for abstention and relief from the automatic stay to allow the New York Supreme Court to determine the equitable division of property in the divorce (the "Motion for Relief from Stay"). [ER, Vol. II, Ex. 14, at 122, ECF Doc. Nos. 80-82.] The bankruptcy court adjourned the hearing on the Motion for Relief from Stay several times at both the Debtor's and Mr. Taub's request. [ER, Ex 14, at 121, ECF Doc. No. 86, 125, ECF Doc. No. 96, and 126, ECF Doc. No. 107.]

4. Ms. Kaufman's Adversary Proceeding to Impose a Constructive Trust on the 52nd Street Property in Favor of Moishe Taub (Adv. Pro. No. 08-01424 (ESS))

On December 1, 2008, Ms. Kaufman filed an adversary proceeding against the Debtor seeking to impose a constructive trust on the 52nd Street Property in favor of her and Mr. Taub's father, Moishe Taub. [ER, Vol. II, Ex. 14, at 147, ECF Doc. No. 114.] During the course of the adversary proceeding, the Debtor and Ms. Kaufman became embroiled in numerous discovery disputes that delayed adjudication of the issues.

5. The Mediation

On December 10, 2008, the bankruptcy court entered an order referring all of the pending disputes between the parties to mediation and directing the parties to submit a stipulation and mediation order. [ER, Vol. II, Ex. 14, at 129, ECF Doc. No. 125.] After nearly four months without counsel, the Debtor filed an application and a supplemental application to retain Dennis Houdek as bankruptcy counsel on December 18, 2008. [ER, Vol. II, Exhibit 14, at 130, ECF Doc. Nos. 129 and 131.] On January 30, 2009, the bankruptcy court entered an order approving Mr. Houdek's retention. [ER, Vol. II, Exhibit 14, at 123, ECF Doc. No. 164].

The parties could not agree on the term of a stipulation and mediation order. [ER, Vol. II, Ex. 14, at 129-130, ECF Doc. Nos. 127 and 130-135.] Therefore, the bankruptcy court issued a supplemental order referring the issues to mediation on December 23, 2008, which directed the parties to submit a stipulation authorizing the retention of a mediator and to raise procedural issues with the mediator. [ER, Vol. II, Ex. 14, at 131, ECF Doc. No. 145.] The parties again could not agree to the terms of a stipulation and order. [ER, Vol. II, Ex. 14, ECF Doc. Nos. 152, 253, 155, 158, 160, 161, and 165.] The bankruptcy court, therefore, entered a second supplemental mediation order on February 3, 2009, setting forth the terms of the mediation.

[ER, Vol. III, Ex. 40, at 343.]

The mediator held a number of sessions with the parties, but the mediation was ultimately unsuccessful. On August 6, 2009, the mediator filed a letter informing the Court that the Debtor had refused to pay her portion of his fee. [ER, Vol. II, Ex. 41, at 348.] On October 27, 2009, the Court entered an order directing the Debtor to pay the mediator's fee. [ER, Vol. II, Ex. 42, at 350.] To date, the Debtor has not paid the mediator's fee. [ER, Vol. I, Ex. 4, at 12-13.]

6. The Debtor's Complaint to Avoid Fraudulent Conveyance of the Grand Avenue Properties and to Impose a Constructive Trust (Adv. Pro. No. 09-01027 (ESS))

On February 9, 2009, the Debtor filed a complaint to avoid fraudulent conveyances or to impose a constructive trust in her favor. The complaint alleged that Mr. Taub had transferred the Grand Avenue Properties to his daughters from a previous marriage for no consideration and was claiming that the Debtor no longer had any equitable interest in them. [ER, Vol. III, Ex. 43, at 354.] On June 1, 2009, Mr. Taub filed a motion requesting that the bankruptcy court abstain from deciding the issues in the Adversary Proceeding. [ER, Vol. II, Ex. 43, at 357, ECF Doc. No. 10.] The Debtor and Ms. Newhouse opposed the motion. [ER, Vol. II, Ex. 43, at 357-358, ECF Doc. Nos. 13-16 and 19.] The bankruptcy court held a hearing on the motion on July 22, 2009 and reserved decision. [ER, Vol. II, Ex. 43, at 358, July 22, 2009 Docket Entry.] On August 14, 2009, the Court entered a memorandum decision and order granting the motion. [ER, Vol. III, Ex. 43, at 359, at 32, ECF Doc. Nos. 20 and 21.]

7. The Debtor's Motion to Restrain

On February 23, 2009, the Debtor filed a motion to restrain Mr. Taub from interfering with the Debtor's management of the estate and to compel him to turn over and account for rent and pay rent for his apartment at the 14th Avenue Property (the "Motion to Restrain") in Taub v.

Taub, Adv. Pro. No. 08-01170. [ER, Vol. III, Ex. 45, at 367.] The bankruptcy court set the hearing for March 13, 2009, adjourned the hearing to April 7, 2009, and then further adjourned the hearing at the debtor request. [ER, Vol. II, Ex. 26, at 287-288, March 13, 2009 Docket Entry, ECF Doc. No. 27, and April 7, 2009 Docket Entry.]

On June 1, 2009, Mr. Taub filed a motion to abstain and the parties turned their attention to litigating this motion. [ER, Vol. II, Ex. 26, at 289-290, ECF Doc Nos. 33-38.] On August 14, 2009, the Court entered a memorandum decision and order denying the motion. [ER, Vol. II, Ex. 26, at 289-290, ECF 39 and 40.]

On September 23, 2009, the bankruptcy court entered a scheduling order for the Motion to Restrain, which set a discovery deadline of November 6, 2009, and a pretrial conference for October 27, 2009. [ER, Vol II, Ex. 26, at 291, ECF Doc. No. 41.] On October 21, 2009, the Debtor filed a motion to extend time to complete discovery. [ER, Vol II, Ex. 26, at 291-292, ECF Doc. No. 43.] At a hearing on December 2, 2009, the court extended the discovery deadline until December 7, 2009, and set an adjourned pretrial conference for January 20, 2010. [ER, Vol II, Ex. 26, at 292, December 2, 2009 Docket Entry.] The court set the hearing on the Motion to Restrain for February 25, 2010. [ER, Vol. II, Ex. 26, at 293, January 20, 2010 Docket Entry.]

8. The Motion to Compel

On February 17, 2009, Ms. Kaufman filed a motion to compel the Debtor to pay administrative expenses relating to the 52nd Street Property in the amount of $15,315 (the "Motion to Compel"). [ER, Vol. III, Ex. 44, at 361.] In response, the Debtor filed a cross motion to restrain Ms. Kaufman from interfering in her management of the 52nd Street Property. [ER, Vol. III, Ex. 44, at 361.] Ms. Kaufman filed responses in opposition to the cross motion and in support of the Motion to Compel on April 1, 2009, and April 22, 2009. [ER, Vol. II, Ex. 14, at 139, ECF Do. No.192, and 145, ECF Doc. No. 219.] The Debtor filed a responsive affirmation on April 23, 2009. [ER, Vol. II, Ex. 14, at 145, ECF Doc. No. 223.] Ms. Kaufman and Mr. Taub filed replies on April 23, 2009 and April 26, 2090, respectively. [ER, Vol. II, Ex. 14, at 145, ECF Doc. No. 223 and 224.] The bankruptcy court adjourned the hearing on the Motion to Compel pending completion of mediation. [ER, Vol. II, Ex. 14, at 145, ECF Doc. No. 223 and 224.]

9. The Bankruptcy Court's Order Granting the Motion for Relief from Stay.

After the parties were unable to come to a resolution of the issues between them in mediation, the bankruptcy court set a hearing on the Motion for Relief from Stay for July 22, 2009 and entered a memorandum decision and order on August 14, 2009 (the "Relief from Stay Order"), modifying the automatic stay to allow the state court to proceed to judgment in the divorce case, including determining the equitable division of property. [ER, Vol. II, Ex. 14, at 165, ECF Doc. Nos. 316 and 317.] On August 27, 2009, the Debtor filed a motion for reconsideration of the Relief from Stay Order. [ER, Vol. II, Ex. 14, at 166, ECF Doc. No. 326.] The Court denied the motion in a decision and order entered on December 11, 2009. [ER, Vol. II, Ex. 14, at 179-180, ECF Doc. Nos. 396-397.] On December 18, 2009, the Debtor filed a pro se notice of appeal of the order denying reconsideration of the Relief from Stay Order. [ER, Vol. II, Ex. 14, at 180, ECF Doc. No. 402.] On December 23, 2009, the Debtor filed a motion for stay pending appeal, also pro se, but withdrew it at a hearing held on January 4, 2010. [ER, Vol. II, Ex. 14, at 181, ECF Doc. No. 409, and 182, January 4, 2010 Docket Entry.] The appeal was docketed in this Court on February 2, 2010 (Civil No. 10-cv-00428 (CBA)), but the Debtor withdrew it on June 16, 2010.

10. Disputes Over the Debtor’s Disclosure and Payment of Administrative Expenses

Over the course of the case, the Debtor and Ms. Newhouse, on the one hand, and Mr. Taub and Ms. Kaufman on the other, had numerous formal and informal disputes regarding the Debtor’s disclosure and payment of administrative expenses, in addition to the Motion to Compel. For example, on May 15, 2009, Mr. Taub filed a motion to compel the Debtor to disclose unpaid administrative obligations. [ER, Vol. II, Ex. 14, at 149, ECF Doc. No. 240.] The Debtor opposed the motion, arguing that the information requested was duplicative of disclosures made in her monthly operating reports. [ER, Vol. II, Ex. 14, at 151, ECF Doc. No. 252.] The court set the hearing on the motion for June 29, 2009, and ordered the parties to meet and confer to resolve the issues raised in the motion prior to that time. [ER, Vol. II, Ex. 14, at 155, June 29, 2009 Docket Entry.] At the hearing, the Debtor agreed to file a status report on pre and post petition real estate taxes by July 7, 2009. The Debtor filed the status report on July 16, 2010. [ER, Vol. III, Ex. 47, at 419.] In it, she alleged that Mr. Taub had forged her name on a forbearance agreement with the taxing authorities with respect to prepetition tax liens on the 52nd Street Property that she only learned about when she filed the petition. Id. She disclosed that prepetition tax delinquencies total $1,460.27. She stated that the post petition quarterly tax liability is $1,864.82 and that she was current. Id. at 420.

At a hearing held on December 2, 2009, the Court ordered the Debtor to provide an accounting of post-petition real estate taxes, utilities, Environmental Control Board (“ECB”) violations, and other expenses associated with the Marital Properties and the Rental Properties. ER, Vol. II, Ex. 14, at 179, December 2, 2009 Docket Entry.] In a letter filed with the Court on December 11, 2009, the Debtor provided an accounting for the 52nd Street Property but not the others. [ER. Vol. III, Ex. 48, at 423.] She claimed that she was current on utility payments, insurance and real estate taxes, but behind on water bills because the bill had gone up from $1,000 to $5,000 per month. Id. In addition, she stated that only one out of six tenants was paying rent, which had resulted in post petition rent arrearages of $53,763. Id.

However, Ms. Kaufman, in a letter filed on December 18, 2009, alleged that the Debtor owed real estate taxes on all four properties in the total amount of $11,152.48, representing arrears for two quarters. [ER. Vol. III, Ex. 49, at 425-426.] She also alleged, among other things, that the Debtor had not paid the water bill for the 52nd Street Property since September 2008 and owed $10,206.13 and owed over $10,000 for water service for the Marital Residence. Id. at 426. She also stated that there were outstanding ECB fines on the 52nd Street Property in the amount of $15,000. Id.

11. The Debtor's and Mr. Taub's Cross Motions to Restrain Each Other From Diverting Mail

On December 24, 2009, Mr. Taub filed a motion to restrain the Debtor from diverting his mail (the "Mail Motion"), and on January 15, 2010, the Debtor filed a cross motion pro se to restrain Mr. Taub from diverting her mail (the "Mail Cross Motion"). [ER. Vol. III, Exs. 50-51, at 428-433.] The Debtor filed the Mail Cross Motion pro se even though Mr. Houdek represented her. [ER, Vol. III, Ex. 52, at 440.] At a hearing held on January 4, 2010, the Debtor appeared with John Macron as her proposed substitute counsel and informed Mr. Houdek that she was terminating his services. [ER, Ex. 55, at 462, Lines 10-24, and 463, Lines 1-3.] On January 9, 2010, Mr. Houdek filed a final application for compensation and a motion to withdraw as counsel. [ER, Vol. II, Ex. 14, at 183, ECF Doc. No. 420.] The Debtor filed an application to retain Mr. Macron on January 14, 2010, but withdrew it on January 19, 2010. [ER, Vol. II, Ex. 14, at 183-184, ECF Doc. Nos. 422 and 426.] On January 20, 2010, Mr. Houdek filed a supplemental affirmation in support of the motion to withdraw. [ER, Vol. III, Exhibit 52, at 439.] In it, he stated that the Debtor filed the Cross Motion pro se without his knowledge and that although she had fired him at the January 4, 2010, he understood that he represented the Debtor until the court entered an order approving his withdrawal. Id. at 440. Therefore, on January 20, 2010, he filed an amended Cross Motion for the Debtor to add his signature as Debtor's counsel. Id. On January 22, 2010, the court entered an order approving the motion to withdraw. [ER, Vol. II, Exhibit 14, at 187, ECF Doc. No. 442.] On February 25, 2010, the Court entered an order directing both the Debtor and Mr. Taub to turn over mail and to refrain from interfering with each other's mail delivery. [ER, Ex. 14, at 188, ECF Doc. No. 489.]

12. Mr. Taub's Second Motion to Dismiss

On December 29, 2009, Mr. Taub filed a second motion to dismiss the case (the "Second Motion to Dismiss"). [ER, Ex. 14, at 182, ECF Doc. No. 416.] The bankruptcy court set the hearing on the Second Motion to Dismiss for February 25, 2010. [January 20, 2010 Docket Entry.]

E. The Order to Show Cause

On January 21, 2010, the Court issued the Order to Show Cause why a chapter 11 trustee should not be appointed, with a hearing to be held on February 25, 2010. [ER, Vol. I, Ex.13, at 104.] The United States Trustee, Ms. Kaufman and Mr. Taub filed memoranda in support of an order directing the appointment of a trustee. [ER, Vol. II, Ex. 14, at 190-191, ECF Doc. Nos. 470, 471, and 475.] The Debtor and Ms. Newhouse opposed the appointment of a trustee. [ER, Vol. II, Ex.14, at 190-191, ECF Doc. Nos. 477 and 479.]

The Debtor filed her objection pro se because she had not yet retained counsel after the court approved Mr. Houdek's withdrawal. [ER, Vol. 1, Ex. 6, at 49.] On January 28, 2010, she asked the bankruptcy court to adjourn the Order to Show Cause and all other proceedings for sixty days so that she could find counsel. [ER, Vol. 1, Ex.12, at 102.] On February 2, 2010, the court denied the request. [ER, Vol. 1, Ex. 11, at 100.] On February 23, 2010, the Debtor filed an application to retain David Carlebach as counsel and to borrow funds from Ms. Newhouse to pay a retainer, and Mr. Carlebach represented her at the hearing on February 25, 2010.[4] [ER, Vol. II, Exhibit 14, at 198, ECF Doc. No. 480.]

On February 25, 2010, the Court heard arguments regarding appointment of a chapter 11 trustee, the Motion to Compel and the Motion to Restrain and adjourned the Second Motion to Dismiss. See February 25, 2010 Docket Entries. After the hearing, the Court took the Order to Show Cause, the Motion to Compel and the Motion to Restrain under advisement. Id.

F. The Decision and Trustee Order

On April 9, 2010, the bankruptcy court entered a decision resolving the Motion to Compel and the Cross-Motion and directing the appointment of a chapter 11 trustee, pursuant to the Order to Show Cause, under 11 U.S.C. §§ 1104(a)(2) and (3) (the "Decision"). [ER, Vol. 1, Ex. 3, at 5.] In the Decision, the court noted that the Motion to Restrain sought to direct Mr. Taub to comply with terms of the Bankruptcy Code, which is usually not required because "compliance is expected, by the debtor and creditors alike." [ER, Vol. I, Ex. 4, at 22.] However, the court stated that because of the "difficulties and disputes between the Debtor and Mr. Taub . . the Court is satisfied that the record warrants the entry of an order directing Mr. Taub and his agents not to interfere with the management of property of the estate." [ER, Vol. I, Ex. 4, at 22-

[4] The Debtor amended the application on March 22, 2010. [ER, Vol. II, Ex. 14, at 197, ECF Doc. No. 515.] On June 17, 2010, the bankruptcy court entered a consent order approving Mr. Carlebach's retention from February 23, 2010 through April 12, 2010 and denying approval of a loan to the bankruptcy estate for the retainer. [ER, Vol. II, Exhibit 14, at 209, ECF Doc. No. 601.]

23.] The court also ordered Mr. Taub to account for and turn over any rents he collected from the Rental Properties and to vacate the apartment at the 14th Avenue or pay rent. [ER, Vol. I, Ex. 4, at 23-24.] The court declined to order Mr. Taub to make prepetition payments required under orders of the state court. [ER, Vol. I, Ex. 4, at 26.]

In granting the Motion to Compel, the court noted that, as with the Motion to Restrain, it was unusual to order debtors to comply with the Bankruptcy Code. [ER, Vol. I, Ex. 4, at 2] However, the court held that, of the “unpaid expenses and mounting losses that have marked the Debtor’s management of the estate from its inception in July 2008 show no signs of abating,” and thus an order compelling the Debtor to pay the administrative expenses associated with the 52nd Street Property was warranted. [ER, Vol. I, Ex. 4, at 29.]

The bankruptcy court held that appointment of a trustee was in the best interests of creditors and the estate under Section 1104(a)(2). Specifically, the court found that the Debtor’s retention, or proposed retention, of at least eight counsel over the course of the case impaired her ability to manage her case effectively and to move it toward a prompt resolution. [ER, Vol. I, Ex. 4, at 34-35.] As grounds for the appointment of a trustee, the court also cited the Debtor’s failure to remain current on post-petition expenses and to comply with court orders, the acrimony among the parties, and conflicting roles as debtor in possession, landlord and litigant had eroded her creditors’ confidence in her ability to carry out her duties in bankruptcy. [ER, Vol. I, Ex. 4, at 36.] The court also held that appointment of a trustee was warranted under Section 1104(a)(3) because the diminution in the value of the estate and the absence of a reasonable likelihood of rehabilitation constituted cause to convert or dismiss the case under 11 U.S.C. § 1112(b)(4)(A). [ER, Vol. I, Ex. 4, at 39-43.]

G. Appointment of the Trustee

On April 13, 2010, after consulting with parties in interest, the United States Trustee appointed Lori Lapin Jones as trustee. [ER, Vol. II, Ex. 14, at 198, ECF Doc. No. 522.] The court approved the appointment on April 13, 2010. [ER, Vol. II, Ex. 14, at 198, ECF Doc. No. 524.] The Debtor files a timely notice of appeal of the Trustee Order on April 16, 2010 and Ms. Newhouse filed her notice of appeal on April 23, 2010.

VI. ARGUMENT

A. The Bankruptcy Court Did Not Abuse Its Discretion When It Directed the Appointment of a Chapter 11 Trustee under 11 U.S.C. § 1104(a)(2).

Under 11 U.S.C. § 1104(a)(2),

> (a) At any time after the commencement of the case but before confirmation of a plan, on request of a party in interest or the United States trustee, and after notice and a hearing, the court shall order the appointment of a trustee —
> . . . .
> (2) if such appointment is in the interests of creditors, any equity security holders, and other interests of the estate . . . .

11 U.S.C. § 1104(a)(2).

Under Section 1104(a)(2), the bankruptcy court has the discretion to order the appointment of a chapter 11 trustee when "when to do so would serve the parties' and the estate's interests." Marvel Entertainment, 140 F.3d at 474. See also In re Sharon Steel Corp., 871 F.2d 1217, 1226 (3d Cir. 1989) (Section 1104(a) creates a flexible standard for the appointment of a trustee when it "addresses the interests of creditors, equity security holders and other interests of the estate"). Courts review a variety of factors to determine whether to exercise their discretion, including the debtor's performance in chapter 11 and prospects for rehabilitation, whether the creditors in the case have confidence in the debtor's ability to reorganize, and whether benefits derived from the appointment of a trustee outweigh the burdens. In re Ridgemour Meyer Properties, LLC, 413 B.R. 101, 112 (Bankr. S.D.N.Y. 2008).

The party seeking the appointment of a chapter 11 trustee under Section 1104(a)(2) has the burden of showing, by clear and convincing evidence, that appointment of a trustee is in the best interests of creditors and the estate.[5] In re 1031 Tax Group, LLC, 374 B.R. 78, 85 (Bankr. S.D.N.Y. 2007). See also Sharon Steel, 871 F.2d at 1226 (the movant must show that appointment of a trustee is warranted by clear and convincing evidence).

Here, the bankruptcy court found that, based on the entire record, the appointment of a chapter 11 trustee was warranted for five reasons. First, the Debtor's retention, or proposed retention, of at least eight lawyers during the case impaired her ability to effectively manage the case and to move it toward a prompt resolution. [ER, Vol. I, Ex. 3, at 34-36.] Second, the Debtor failed to meet her administrative obligations. Id. at 35. Third, the relationship between the Debtor and the main creditors in the case was acrimonious and unproductive. Id. at 37. Fourth, as a debtor in possession, the Debtor was "weighed down by conflicting roles and conflicts of interest" and her most active creditors had lost confidence in her ability to carry out her duties as debtor in possession. Id. at 37. Fifth, the record supports the court's finding that the appointment of chapter 11 trustee would benefit the bankruptcy estate. Id. at 37-39.

Because there is clear and convincing evidence in the record to support these findings, none of them is clearly erroneous, and the bankruptcy court did not abuse its discretion in directing the appointment of a chapter 11 trustee under 11 U.S.C. § 1104(a)(2)

[5] The Second Circuit has stated that the United States Trustee has the burden of showing by "clear and convincing evidence" that the appointment of a trustee is warranted. In re Bayou Group, LLC, 564 F.3d 541, 546 (2d Cir. 2009). The United States Trustee respectfully suggests that the burden of proof should only be a "preponderance of the evidence." See, e.g. Tradex Corp. v. Morse, 339 B.R.823, (D. Mass. 2006). Nonetheless, regardless of which burden was used in this case, the bankruptcy court did not abuse its discretion in directing the appointment of a trustee.

1. The Bankruptcy Court Did Not Clearly Err When It Found that the Debtor's Retention, or Proposed Retention, of at Least Eight Attorneys Impaired her Ability to Manage the Case Effectively.

There is clear and convincing evidence in the record to support the court's finding that the Debtor's serial retention, or attempted retention, of eight bankruptcy lawyers impaired her ability to manage her case effectively and to move toward a prompt resolution. This, coupled with her inability to develop cooperative relationships with retained counsel, contributed to the Debtor's utter lack of progress toward proposing and confirming a plan over nearly two years.

In the first two months of the case, the Debtor retained and then fired three bankruptcy lawyers. During the twenty-one months between the Petition Date and the appointment of the Trustee, the Debtor retained, or attempted to retain, a total of at least eight lawyers, and she appeared pro se for significant periods of time.

The Debtor sought bankruptcy court approval of Ms. Blumenfeld's retention after the Petition Date on July 16, 2008. [ER, Vol. II, Ex. 14, at 112-113, ECF Doc. No. 11.] Just nine days later and before the bankruptcy court approved Ms. Blumenfeld's retention, the Debtor filed an application to retain Mr. Shafferman as substitute counsel. [ER, Vol. II, Ex. 14, at 114, ECF Doc. No. 21.] Days after the court approved Mr. Shafferman's retention on August 4, 2008, the Debtor terminated his services. [ER, Vol. II, Ex. 4, at 116-117, ECF Docs. 33 and 40.] The Debtor then filed an application to retain Mr. Heller on August 13, 2008, but then fired him in a letter dated, August 22, 2008, that she filed with the court on August 25, 2008. [ER, Vol. III, Exs. 30 and 31, at 317-324.] Ms. Itzhak appeared at one hearing held on October 30, 2008 but the Debtor did not seek to retain her. [ER, Vol. III, Ex. 54, at 454, Lines 14-17.] On November 12, 2008, the Debtor filed an application to retain LaMonica, but the firm withdrew the application eight days later on November 20, 2008. [ER, Vol. II, Ex. 14, at 124-125, ECF

Doc. Nos. 92 and 96.] After that, the Debtor appeared pro se until December 18, 2008 when she sought court approval of the retention of Mr. Houdek. [ER, Vol. II, Ex. 14, at 130, ECF Doc. Nos.129 and 131.] The court approved Mr. Houdek's application by order entered on January 30, 2009. [ER, Vol. II, Ex. 14, at 134, ECF Doc. No. 164.] The Debtor terminated Mr. Houdek on January 4, 2010 when she appeared in court with Mr. Macron as proposed substitute counsel. [ER, Ex. 55, at 462, Lines 10-24, and 463, Lines 1-3.] The Debtor filed an application to retain Mr. Macron on January 14, 2010, but withdrew it on January 19, 2010. [ER, Vol. II, Ex. 14, at 1183-184, ECF Doc. Nos. 422 and 426.] Finally, the Debtor sought court approval of the retention of Mr. Carlebach on February 23, 2010, and the court approved his retention on June 17, 2010. [ER, Vol. II, Ex. 14, at 191, ECF Doc. No. 480, and 209, ECF Doc. No.601.]

The Debtor's relationships with counsel were contentious and unproductive. In a letter filed with the bankruptcy court, the Debtor stated that she terminated Ms. Blumenfeld because she "constantly deals with Mr. Fox, [Mr. Taub's attorney,] that he is always referring clients and business to her [and she] would not recuse Mr. Fox – that she would rather recuse herself." [ER, Vol. III, Ex. 30, at 320.] According to the Debtor, Mr. Shafferman "seemed to compromise my interests," apparently because he had included in the Proposed Consent Order, "Mr. Fox's ridiculous dictates that were not discussed in court, [and] I felt that I needed an attorney who would not be intimidated and who would honestly pursue my interests." [ER, Vol. III, Ex. 30, at 318.] The Debtor fired Mr. Heller in a letter, dated August 22, 2008 and filed with the court, because "YOU HAVE VIOLATED YOUR OWN CONTRACT TO ADVOCATE ON MY BEHALF[.]" [ER, Vol. III, Ex. 30, at 318.] (Emphasis in original.) The Debtor took issue with Mr. Heller's request, after he had a discussion with Mr. Fox, that she immediately send the August rent checks from the Rental Properties to him by Fed Ex so that he could deposit them in his escrow account in compliance with the parties' agreement. Id. at 318-319. She wrote:

> Why did you not simultaneously demand from Mr. Fox that Simon Taub also Fed-Ex the JULY rents he was illegally keeping from my properties? Why did you assist Mr. Fox in his demands against me, while refusing to advocate likewise on my behalf?

Id. (emphasis in original).

In letter, dated November 21, 2008 filed with the court, the Debtor blamed Mr. Taub for LaMonica's withdrawal, stating that, "It seems that everywhere I turn, Simon Taub is sabotaging and frustrating all my efforts in order to achieve justice." [ER, Vol. III, Ex. 37. at 336.] She alleged that Simon and his "boys' club" had warned prior attorneys to stay away from her case, and that, "It is clear to me that the only logical reason for [LaMonica's withdrawal] is the same as that which happened to my previous attorney." Id. LaMonica responded that the firm had never spoken to Mr. Taub or any of his representatives, except for Mr. Fox, and that Mr. Taub had not threatened or intimidated the firm so that it would withdraw. [ER, Vol. III, Ex. 38 at 339.] Mr. Houdek represented the Debtor for over a year. Yet he learned that the Debtor had terminated his services when he appeared at a court hearing on January 4, 2010 to find Mr. Macron who appeared at the hearing as substitute counsel. [ER, Ex. 55, at 462, Lines 10-24, and 463, Lines 1-3.] In his motion to withdraw, Mr. Houdek stated that the Debtor had ceased communicating with him and that the attorney-client relationship was irrevocably severed. [RA, Vol. III, Ex. 52, at 440.] With respect to all of the attorneys she fired, the Debtor apparently perceived their negotiations or cooperation with Mr. Taub and Mr. Fox and their refusal to litigate or to make demands as a sign of weakness and disloyalty and a failure to zealously represent her interests.

The Debtor's serial retention of counsel and her unproductive relationships with retained counsel, interspersed with periods she represented herself, were significant factors in the lack of progress in the case. For example, firing Mr. Shafferman and then Mr. Heller in rapid succession effectively cut off the negotiations of a settlement of her Motion for Preliminary Injunction and Mr. Taub's First Motion to Dismiss and resulted in delay and a proliferation of contentious litigation. The settlement negotiations were extant in August 2008, but because the Debtor was without counsel, she made no attempt to negotiate and took no effective action until she filed the Motion to Restrain on February 23, 2009, some six months later, after she had retained Mr. Houdek in December 2008. [ER, Vol. III, Ex. 45, at 367.] During the nearly four months that she was pro se, the Debtor requested relief in letters filed with the court, rather than by properly noticed motion, and the record does not reveal that she made any attempts to resolve any issues consensually. On August 22, 2008, for example, the Debtor filed a letter with the court describing Mr. Taub's alleged diversion of rents and asking the court to order an accounting an direct Mr. Taub to per rent for his apartment at the 14th Avenue Property. [ER, Vol. III, Ex. 29, at 315-316.] She wrote letters to the court enclosing her filed contentious correspondence with Mr. Fox over reimbursement of expenses. [ER, Vol. III, Exs. 34, 35 and 36.] On November 21, 2008, the Debtor filed a letter requesting authority to collect rents in which she accused Mr. Taub of sabotage and asked the court to order him to pay her $2,000 per month in rent. [ER, Vol. III, Ex. 37, at 336.]

Even before she terminated Mr. Houdek, the Debtor took it upon herself to file the Mail Cross Motion, without notice to Mr. Houdek, which required him to sign it after the fact to comply with Rule 11. [ER, Vol. III, Ex. 40, at 440.] She filed the notice of appeal of the order denying reconsideration of the Relief from Stay Order and the motion for stay pending appeal herself. [ER, Vol. II, Ex. 14, at 181-182, ECF Doc. Nos. 409 and 414.] On December 28, 2009, the Debtor notified the court that she was without counsel and requested an indefinite adjournment of the hearing on the motion for stay pending appeal until after she retained counsel [ER. Vol. III, Ex. 55, at 466-468.] She withdrew the request and the motion at the hearing on January 4, 2010 after the court admonished her for filing documents pro se when she was represented by counsel. Id. On January 28, 2010, after the court approved Mr. Houdek's withdrawal, the Debtor requested a sixty-day adjournment of all proceedings in the case to allow to time to retain counsel. [ER, Vol. 1, Ex.12, at 102.] She stated, "There is no prejudice to Simon Taub or to anyone else, because as long as my properties are under the protection of the bankruptcy code [sic], nothing will happen in sixty days." Id. On February 2, 2010, the court entered an order denying the request for a stay. [ER, Vol. II, Ex. 14, at 189, ECF Doc. No. 459.] Rather than cooperate with counsel to bring some resolution to a case filed in 2008, the Debtor spent two months pursuing an appeal that she eventually abandoned, attempted to delay the case with a sixty-day adjournment of all matters, and litigated with Mr. Taub over the delivery of mail.

Based on the entire record, the Debtor's serial retention of eight lawyers and her uncooperative and contentious relationships with them contributed to her failure to resolve any issues in nearly two years and impeded the progress of the case. The bankruptcy court did not, therefore, commit clear error.

2. There is Clear and Convincing Evidence in the Record that the Debtor Failed to Meet Her Administrative Obligations.

The bankruptcy court did not clearly err when it found that the Debtor has not met her administrative obligations during the case. The Debtor has admitted that she has not paid the mortgages on the Marital Residence, the14th Street Property and the Forshay Road Property since the Petition Date. [ER, Vol. 1, Ex. 6, at 66.] The monthly mortgage payment for the Marital Residence is $5,019.19 and the post petition arrearages are in excess of $150,978.08.

[ER, Vol. III, Ex. 45, at 369 and 376.] The monthly mortgage payment for the Forshay Road Property is $2,974.18. [ER, Vol. III, Ex. 45, at 376.]. Prepetition arrearages for the Forshay Road Property total $96,043.34 and post petition arrearages are $53,535.24. [ER, Vol. III, Ex. 53, at 448, and Vol. I, Ex. 6, at 56.] The monthly mortgage for the 14th Avenue Property is $2,933.17, with pre- and post petition arrearages as of February 2010 of $51,500.56 and $57,750.39, respectively. [ER, Vol. III, Ex. 53, at 448, and Vol. I, Ex. 6, at 56.] However, the Debtor claims that the mortgage on the Marital Property is Mr. Taub's responsibility under the State Court Restraining Order. [ER, Vol. III, Ex. 53, at 448.] The Debtor also claims that, since July 2005, Mr. Taub has diverted rents from the Rental Properties in the cumulative amount of $442,460.05. [ER, Vol. I, Ex. 6, at 53 and 67.]

The Debtor stated that she was one quarter delinquent on real property tax payments for the 52nd Street Property. [ER, Vol. III, Ex. 48, at 423.] According to Ms. Kaufman, however, the Debtor owes $11,152.48 for two quarters. [ER, Vol. III, Ex. 55, at 164-166.] The Debtor also owes $10,206.13 for post-petition water and sewer charges which encumber the 52nd Street Property. [ER, Vol. III, Ex. 49, at 425-426.]

In addition, the Debtor has incurred significant professional fees. On August 6, 2009, mediator Simeon Baum filed a letter with the court stating that the Debtor owed him $14,732.20. [ER, Vol. II, Ex. 41, at 348-350.] After a status conference, the court entered an order, on October 27, 2009, directing the Debtor to pay Mr. Baum. [ER, Vol. II, Ex. 42, at 350.] To date, however, the Debtor has not paid him. [ER, Vol. I, Ex. 4, at 12-13.] In addition, on February 26, 2010, the court awarded Mr. Houdek fees in the amount of $316,262.60, with the payment to be addressed at a later date. [ER. Vol. II, Ex. 14, at 194, ECF Doc. 492.]

The Debtor has consistently maintained that she is not responsible for the mortgage on the Marital Property under orders issued in the divorce action and she argues on appeal that the court clearly erred in including these payments when it calculated the Debtor's accrued and unpaid administrative expenses. See Brief, at 43. The Debtor also attempts to excuse her failure to pay administrative expenses related to Rental Properties by casting blame on Mr. Taub. [ER, Vol. III, Ex. 53, at 448.]

A debtor in possession has fiduciary duties to the bankruptcy estate. In re Brook Valley VII Joint Venture, 496 F.2d 892, 900 (8th Cir. 2007). The debtor in possession has the powers and duties of a trustee and "must collect the property of the estate[,]" Louisiana World Exposition v. Fed. Ins. Co., 858 F.3d 233, 246 (5th Cir. 1988) (emphasis in original), and account for all property received under 11 U.S.C. §§ 1106(a)(1) and 704(2). Commodity Futures Trading Commission v. Weintraub, 471 U.S. 343, 252 (1985). The debtor in possession also has a fiduciary duty to "protect and conserve property in its possession for the benefit of creditors." Marvel Entertainment, 140 F.3d at 474, quoting In re Ionosphere Clubs, Inc., 113 B.R. 164, 169 (Bankr. S.D.N.Y. 1990) (internal quotation marks omitted). To fulfill these duties, the debtor in possession must "refrain from acting in a manner which could damage the estate, or hinder a successful reorganization . . . ." In re Sharon Steel Corp., 86 B.R. 455, 457 (Bankr. W. D. Pa. 1998). A debtor in possession has a duty to pay post petition taxes as they become due to preserve the value of the estate. In re Berryhill, 189 B.R. 463, 465 (Bankr. N. D. Ind. 1995). Likewise, a debtor in possession must make post petition mortgage payments because the failure to remain current encumbers, rather than preserves, the value of the estate. In re Miell, 419 B.R. 357, 368 (Bankr. N. D. Iowa 2009). A debtor in possession may not delegate its duty to conserve property of the estate where it results in abdication of that duty. In re Mushroom Transp. Co., Inc., 382 F.3d 325, 339 (3d Cir. 2004).

As a debtor in possession, the Debtor had a duty to protect and conserve estate property. See Marvel Entertainment, 140 F.3d at 474 (debtors in possession have a fiduciary duty to conserve estate property). She holds sole title to the Marital Residence, [ER, Vol. II, Exhibit 16, at 213] and by definition, the Marital Property is property of the bankruptcy estate. See 11 U.S.C. § 541. It is, therefore, the Debtor's obligation to, not only preserve the value of the Marital Residence, but also to refrain from diminishing its value. See Sharon Steel, 86 B.R. at 457 (a debtor in possession has a duty to "refrain from acting in a manner which could damage the estate, or hinder a successful reorganization").

The state court orders do not relieve the Debtor of her fiduciary duties as a debtor in possession and the Debtor cannot abdicate her duties based on her position that Mr. Taub is responsible for the payments. See Mushroom Transport, 382 F.3d at 339 (debtor in possession may not delegate fiduciary duties where it results in abdication of those duties). If Mr. Taub is violating the state court orders, the Debtor may seek relief in state court, including entry of money judgment. See Siddiqui v. Siddiqui, 118 A.D.2d 846, 847, 500 N.Y.S.2d 333 (N.Y.A.D. 2 Dept. 1986) (spouse may seek a money judgment for arrears under a temporary support order). To date, there is no evidence in the record that she has taken any steps to enforce them.

3. The Court Did Not Clearly Err When It Found that the Acrimony Between the Debtor and Creditors Impaired the Debtor's Ability to Reorganize.

Grounds exist under Section 1104(a)(2) where "deep seeded conflict and animosity between a debtor and its creditors are at the heart of [a] bankruptcy case" and impair the debtor's ability to reorganize. Marvel Entertainment, 140 F.3d at 474. The appointment of a trustee is warranted where "the parties are sharply divided on many issues, and are presently incapable of solving them[.]" Id. at 475.

As the court noted in the Decision, this case "has been marked from the outset by acrimony, contentiousness, distrust and the Debtor's failure to make any progress over twenty-one months toward the proposal and confirmation of a plan of reorganization." [ER, Vol. I, Ex.4, at 8.] Rather than deal with the issues in the case and attempt to find common ground, the parties have made public personal attacks and inflammatory allegations, filed numerous adversary proceedings and contested matters and litigated every issue, no matter how minor. Every party in this case must bear responsibility for acrimony and its effect on the progress of the case.

Numerous documents in the record of the case show the enmity and mistrust between the Debtor and Mr. Taub. Throughout the case, Mr. Taub and the Debtor have attacked each other's character and made accusations of malfeasance, including misappropriating funds and interference in their financial affairs.

For example, the Debtor accused him of waste and malfeasance because he had "looted" rents from the Rental Properties and deliberately failed to pay related expenses. [ER, Vol. III, Ex. 46 at 408, Vol. II, Ex. 25, at 257, Ex. 27, at 305.] She accused him of "sabotaging" her financial affairs and the bankruptcy case, vandalizing the Rental Properties and threatening her tenants and lawyers. [ER, Vol. 1, Ex. 46, at 413-414, Vol. III, Ex. 37, at 336.] She called the allegations in the First Motion to Dismiss fraudulent and prejudicial. [ER, Vol. II, Ex. 25, at 254.] Mr. Taub accused the Debtor of misappropriating $1 million prior to the Petition Date and labeled her untrustworthy." [ER, Vol. II, Ex. 24, at 238.]

There were also accusations and counter accusations of mismanagement of the Rental Properties. The Debtor disputed Mr. Taub's accounting of receipts and disbursements for July 2009 and Mr. Taub filed motions to compel the Debtor to accurately disclose rents and expenses. [ER, Vol. II, Ex. 14, at 139, ECF Doc. No. 183, and 149, ECF Doc. No. 240, and Vol. III, Ex. 29, at 315.] The Debtor and Ms. Kaufman disputed each other's accounting of unpaid administrative expenses related to the 52nd Street Property in letters to the court and pleadings. [ER, Vol. III, Ex. 44, at 361, Ex. 46, at 399, Ex.48, at 423, and Ex. 49, at 425.]

Based on the record, the parties conducted contentious litigation even over the smallest issues and they could not agree to anything. The parties filed no fewer than 144 letters with the court, many of which requested relief or aired the parties' disputes. [ER., Vol. I1, Ex. 14.] They filed a total of nineteen substantive motions. [ER, Vol. II, Ex. 14, ECF Doc. Nos.26, 71, 80, 82, 155, 172, 179, 184, 222, 240, 260, 326, 354, 409, 412, 416, 425, 444, and 447.] The Debtor filed three adversary proceedings and Ms. Kaufman filed one. The parties spent much of their time embroiled in litigation of discovery disputes. They began discovery in the case on November 26, 2008, but the court did not enter the last discovery order until January 20, 2010. [ER, Vol. 1, Ex. 14, ECF Doc. Nos. 104 and 366.] Over that fourteen-month period, the parties filed twenty-five discovery notices, motions and letters requesting discovery conferences. [ER, Vol. II, Ex. 14, ECF Doc. Nos. 104-106, 108, 126,138,169,188-191, 193, 246-248, 266, 282, 284, 318, 322, 329, 331, 359, and 366.]

There are four appeals pending before this Court. The Debtor appealed the Trustee Order (10-cv-02600 (CBA), the Restraining Order (10-cv-02599) and the Compel Order (10-cv-02492

(CBA) and Ms. Newhouse appealed the Trustee Order (10-cv-2611). In the appeal of the Trustee Order, the Debtor filed a motion for stay pending appeal before the bankruptcy court on May 19, 2010. After the court denied the motion, she filed a motion for stay pending appeal in this Court on June 1, 2010 (10-cv-2493). This Court denied the motion on June 15, 2010.

The Debtor is no closer to proposing and confirming a plan than she was on the Petition Date. The parties' ad hominem remarks and inflammatory accusations and voluminous litigation continued throughout the case. Their enmity and mistrust for each other and their penchant to litigate rather than settle even the smallest disputes show that the parties are incapable of working together productively to resolve the issues in the case. The bankruptcy court, therefore, did no clearly err when it found that the contentious relationships among the parties impaired the progress of the case.

4. The Record of the Case Shows that the Debtor's Conflicting Roles Interfered with Her Ability to Act in the Best Interests of Creditors and the Estate.

The court may also order the appointment of a chapter 11 trustee under Section 1104(a)(2) where the debtor has a conflict of interest that interferes with its ability to carry out its fiduciary duties as a debtor in possession. In re Eurospark Industries, 424 B.R. 621, 629 (Bankr. E.D.N.Y. 2010). Debtors in possession are fiduciaries and must act in the best interests of creditors and the estate. Brook Valley, 496 F.2d at 900. Therefore, the court should direct the appointment of a chapter 11 trustee under Section 1104(a)(2) when a debtor suffers from material conflicts of interest which call into question its ability to make impartial investigations and decisions that are in the best interest of creditors and the estate. In re Ridgemour Meyer Properties, LLC, 413 B.R. 101,113 (Bankr. S.D.N.Y. 2008).

"A debtor in possession does not act in his own interests, but rather in the interests of the creditors." In re J.T.R. Corp., 958 F.2d 602, 605 (4th Cir. 1992). See also In re Bowman, 181 B.R. 836, 843 (Bankr. D. Md. 1995) (a debtor in possession cannot ignore his fiduciary duties by putting his interests ahead of his creditors). A conflict also arises when the debtor in possession seeks to continue litigation, rather than agree to a proposed settlement, because the settlement is insufficient to benefit him personally. Eurospark, 424 B.R. at 629.

When a debtor files a chapter 11 case, the bankruptcy estate is created under 11 U.S.C. § 541. On the petition date, the debtor becomes a debtor in possession with the powers and duties of a trustee under 11 U.S.C. §§ 1101 and 1107(a). In re Vienna Park Properties, 976 F.2d 106, 110 (2d Cir. 1992). The debtor in possession and the debtor are separate entities with different property interests and duties. In re McClelland, 418 B.R. 61, 67 (Bankr. S.D.N.Y. 2009). The debtor in possession has fiduciary duties to creditors and the bankruptcy estate. Id. "Individual chapter 11 debtors may be faced with the inconsistent roles of acting both as a zealous representative of the estate and a champion of their own personal rights." In re Devine, 131 B.R. 952, 956 (Bankr. S. D. Tex. 1991). If these inconsistent roles interfere with the debtor's ability to exercise his or her fiduciary duties to creditors, appointment of a chapter 11 trustee under Section 1104(a)(2) is appropriate. Id. at 956-957.

Here, the Debtor is involved in a bitter divorce with Mr. Taub which involves her entitlement to property, including the equitable division of assets and the determination of the Debtor's equitable interest in the Grand Avenue Properties. [ER, Vol. I, Ex. 6, at 49.] The Debtor's affidavits and letters demonstrate that the Debtor is consumed with her disputes with Mr. Taub and that she is intent on getting what she considers her fair share of the marital estate.

She asked the bankruptcy to take jurisdiction of the Grand Avenue Properties so that she could be "remunerated for her legitimate claims" on the rents and because she perceives that the state court judge is biased against her. [ER, Vol. I., Ex. 6, at 68-70, ER, Vol. III, Ex. 29, at 317, Ex. 36, at 333.]

In bankruptcy court, the Debtor regularly aired her personal disputes with Mr. Taub in letters and affidavits. [e.g., ER, Vol. 1, Ex. 6, at 49, and Vol. III, Ex. 37, at 336 and Ex. 45, at 367.] The Debtor and Mr. Taub sought relief against each other beneficial to one but detrimental to the other. Creditors were harmed because of the time and resources spent in litigating personal disputes. For example, Mr. Taub filed the Mail Motion and the Debtor filed the Counter Mail Motion because they could not agree to exchange mail. Not only did the estate incur attorneys' fees, but the bankruptcy court had to hold a hearing and enter an order wasting time and resources. In addition, the Debtor and Mr. Taub spent over a year litigating discovery disputes which did little more than increase administrative expenses.

5. The Court Did Not Clearly Err When It Found that Appointment of Trustee Would Benefit the Estate.

A chapter 11 trustee is a fiduciary and the estate's sole representative. See 11 U.S.C. §§ 323(a), 1106 and 704. The duties of a trustee include investigating the debtor's acts, conduct, assets, liabilities and financial condition and filing a plan as soon as practicable, filing a report with the court of why the trustee will not file a plan or recommending conversion to chapter 7. 11 U.S.C. § 1106(a)(3) and (5).

Here, the Trustee will be able to objectively investigate the value of the Debtor's assets and assess her ability to reorganize. See Eurospark, 424 B.R. at 633 (a trustee will be able to "preside over the case in an objective and impartial manner to bring this case to a swift and successful conclusion") (citation omitted). As an impartial fiduciary, she will be able to foster a resolution of the case free of the contentious and acrimonious history of the case. The bankruptcy court properly found that appointment of a chapter 11 trustee would be beneficial to the estate.

B. The Bankruptcy Court Did Not Abuse Its Discretion When It Directed the Appointment of a Chapter 11 Trustee under 11 U.S.C. § 1104(a)(3).

Under 11 U.S.C. § 1104(a)(3),

> (a) At any time after the commencement of the case but before confirmation of a plan, on request of a party in interest or the United States trustee, and after notice and a hearing, the court shall order the appointment of a trustee —
> . . . .
> > (3) if grounds exist to convert or dismiss the case under section 1112(b) but the court determines that the appointment of a trustee or an examiner is in the best interests of creditors and the estate.

11 U.S.C. § 1104(a)(3).

11 U.S.C. § 1112(b) governs the conversion or dismissal of chapter 11 cases. It provides, in part, that:

> (1) Except as provided in paragraph (2) of this subsection, subsection (c) of this section, and section 1104(a)(3), on request of a party in interest, and after notice and a hearing, absent unusual circumstances specifically identified by the court that establish that the requested conversion or dismissal is not in the best interests of creditors and the estate, the court shall convert a case under this chapter to a case under chapter 7 or dismiss a case under this chapter, whichever is in the best interests of creditors and the estate, if the movant establishes cause.
> . . . .
> (4) For purposes of this subsection, the term "cause" includes –
> > (A) substantial or continuing loss to or diminution of the estate and the absence of a reasonable likelihood of rehabilitation;
> > . . . .

11 U.S.C. § 1112(b)(1) and (4)(A).

Under Section 1104(a)(3), if there is substantial or continuing loss to or diminution of the estate and the absence of a reasonable likelihood of rehabilitation, there is cause to convert or dismiss the case under Section 1112(b)(4)(A), and the court has the discretion to order the appointment of a chapter 11 trustee. In re LG Motors, Inc., 422 B.R. 110, 115-116 (Bankr. N. D. Ill. 2009). Under Section 1112(b)(4)(A), there is cause to convert or dismiss if there are both continuing loss or diminution of the estate and little reasonable likelihood of rehabilitation. In re Wahlie, 417 B.R. 10, 11 (Bankr. N. D. Ohio 2009). The purpose of Section 1112(b)(4)(A) is to "preserve estate assets by preventing the debtor in possession from gambling on the enterprise at the creditors' expense when there is no hope of rehabilitation." Loop Corp. v. U. S. Trustee (In re Loop Corp., 379 F.3d 511, 517 (8th Cir. 2004), quoting In re Lizerac Realty Corp., 188 B.R. 499, 503 (Bankr. S.D.N.Y. 1995) (interpreting 11 U.S.C. § 1112(b)).[6]

"To determine whether there are continuing losses or diminution, the court must make a full evaluation of the present condition of the estate, not merely look at a debtor's financial statements." In re AdBrite Corp., 290 B.R. 209, 215 (Bankr. S.D.N.Y. 2003). There need not be significant diminution to satisfy the first prong of Section 1112(b)(4)(A). In re East Coast Airways, Ltd., 146 B.R. 325, 336 (Bankr. E.D.N.Y. 1992); In re Kanterman, 88 B.R. 26, 29 (S.D.N.Y. 1988). An estate's liability for administrative expenses in and of itself constitutes a diminution in value. Loop Corp., 379 F.3d at 517; In re Lyons Transportation Lines, Inc., 123 B.R. 526, 531 (Bankr. W. D. Pa. 1991). Specifically, the debtor's failure to pay administrative expenses associated with real property is evidence of diminution. Kanterman, 88 B.R. at 29. Likewise, the failure to pay post petition taxes also evidences a continuing loss to or diminution of the estate. Berryhill, 189 B.R. at 466. See also In re FRGR Managing Member, LLC, 419 B.R. 576, 581 (Bankr. S.D.N.Y. 2009) (accrual of professional fees constitutes continuing losses). A debtor's negative post-petition cash flow and inability to pay current expenses establishes that a debtor has continuing losses. AdBrite, 290 B.R. at 215. Negative cash flow alone may be sufficient to constitute "continuing loss to or diminution of the estate." Loop Corp., 379 F.3d at 515-516.

"[R]ehabilitation means to put back in good condition and reestablish on a sound basis." AdBrite, 290 B.R. at 216. See also Loop Corp., 379 F.3d at 516 (courts have consistently held that "rehabilitation" refers to the debtor's ability to revive its business as a going concern). The issue is whether "the debtor's business prospects justify continuance of the reorganization effort." LG Motors, 422 B.R. at 116. "Rehabilitation does not mean the same thing as reorganization for purposes of Chapter 11 because a reorganization may include a complete liquidation." In re Rundlett, 136 B.R. 376, 380 (Bankr. S.D.N.Y. 1992). Rehabilitation connotes that "the debtor will be reestablished on a sound financial basis, which implies establishing a cash flow from which current obligations can be met." Id. If the debtor is unable or unwilling to formulate a chapter 11 plan within a reasonable amount of time and cannot offer a valid excuse for the failure to do so, there is usually an absence of likelihood of rehabilitation. Hansen, Inc. v. Tiana Queen Motel, Inc., 749 F.2d 146, 151-52 (2d Cir. 1984). The possibility that a meritorious lawsuit will bring funds into the estate is similarly irrelevant, FRGR, 419 B.R. at 583-84, as is the debtor's "boundless confidence" that reorganization will be successful is irrelevant in determining a reasonable likelihood of rehabilitation. Tiana Queen., 749 F.2d at 151.

The court correctly found that there was cause under Section 1112(b)(A(4). There is ample evidence in the record that the estate is suffering continuing losses or diminution. The record shows that Debtor has incurred significant unpaid administrative costs. [RA, Vol. I, Ex. 6, at 56 and 66, ER, Vol. II, Ex. 14, at 194, ECF Doc. No. 492, and Vol. III, Ex. 45, at 376, Ex. 53, at 447-448.]

Based on the record, there is no reasonable likelihood of rehabilitation. The Debtor is nowhere near proposing a plan after nearly two years in chapter 11 and the case has been characterized by antagonism and contentious litigation which makes progress unlikely. The Debtor's plan hinges on a windfall from the equitable division of property in the divorce action and the payment of the large debt that Mr. Taub allegedly owes her, which is speculative at best, since the divorce has already been pending for three years and Mr. Taub would likely vigorously litigate any attempt to collect. [ER, Vol. 1, Ex. 6, at 51 and 55-58, and Vol. III, Ex. 30, at 317.]

Based on the entire record, the court's finding that there was continuing loss to or diminution of the estate and the absence of a likehihood of rehabilitation was not clearly erroneous. The court, therefore, did not abuse its discretion when it ordered the appointment of a chapter 11 trustee under 11 U.S.C. §§ 1104(a)(3) and 1112(b).

C. The Bankruptcy Court Did Not Abuse its Discretion When it Simultaneously Entered the Trustee Order and the Restraining Order.

According to the Debtor, it was an abuse of discretion for the bankruptcy court to order the appointment of a trustee rather than allow the Debtor to remain in possession and reap the benefits of the Restraining Order, to freely manage property of the estate for the first time. See Brief, at 22. This argument ignores, however, that both the state court and the bankruptcy court addressed the issue of Mr. Taub's interference with little apparent impact on his behavior. The state court order compelling Mr. Taub to pay child support and maintain the Marital Residence has been in effect for three years. Yet the Debtor had to request the same relief in the Motion for Preliminary Injunction and the Motion to Restrain in the bankruptcy court.

The Debtor also faults the court for not disposing of the issue earlier. See Brief, at 22.. However, the record shows that it was the Debtor and Mr. Taub, not the court, who delayed consideration of the Motion for Preliminary Injunction and the Motion to Restrain.

After the Debtor filed the Motion for Preliminary Injunction on July 30, 2008, the court scheduled a hearing for July 31, 2008 and issued the TRO to protect the Debtor's rights. [ER, Vol. II, Ex. 28, at 312.] At the hearing, the court "so ordered" an agreement that the parties would not sell, transfer, mortgage or otherwise diminish the value of the Rental Properties. [ER, Vol. II, Ex. 14, at 282, July 31, 2008 Docket Entry.] The court encouraged the parties work out an agreement of this issue and Mr. Taub's First Motion to Dismiss. During the negotiations, the Debtor hired and fired two lawyers and then appeared pro se for the next four months and the negotiations broke down. [ER, Vol. II, Ex. 14, at 115-118, ECF Doc. Nos. 33, 40, 50-53, and Ex. 26, at 282, Vol. III, Ex. 30, at 318, Ex. 54, at 457, Lines 4-22.] The court then referred the parties to mediation, which was not successful. [ER, Ex. II, Ex. 14, at 129-131, ECF Doc. Nos.127 and 130-135, and 145, and Vol. III, Ex. 40, at 343.] The parties then began discovery on November 26, 2008. [ER, Vol. II, Ex. 14, ECF Doc. Nos. 104 and 366.]

After the Debtor retained Mr. Houdek, she filed the Motion to Restrain on February 23, 2009. [ER, Vol. II, Ex. 26, at 286, ECF Doc. No. 22.] The court held regular status conferences on the Motion to Restrain. [ER, Vol. II, Ex. 26, at 286-289.] However, the parties became embroiled in contentious discovery litigation which was not resolved until January 20, 2010.

[ER, Vol. II, Ex. 14, ECF Doc. Nos. 104-106, 108, 126,138,169,188-191, 193, 246-248, 266, 282, 284, 318, 322, 329, 331, 359, and 366.] The next day the court issued the Order to Show Cause, with a return date of February 25, 2010, and set the hearing on the Motion to Restrain for the same date. On January 28, 2010, the Debtor requested a sixty-day adjournment of the hearing on the Motion to Restrain and all other matters, because the Debtor fired Mr. Houdek, who withdrew by order of the court on January 22, 2010. The court, however, denied her request and promptly heard and decided the Motion to Restrain. The bankruptcy court did not, therefore, abuse its discretion when it entered the Restraining Order and the Trustee Order at the same time.

D. The Bankruptcy Court Did Not Abuse its Discretion When it Declined to Authorize the Trustee to Administer Property in Which the Debtor Claims an Equitable Interest.

The Debtor alleges that the bankruptcy court abused its discretion when it refused to authorize the Trustee to administer the Grand Avenue Properties, in which the Debtor claims an equitable interest. See Brief, at 46 A trustee has the right to possession and control of property of the estate. See 11 U.S.C. §§ 323, 541, 1101 and 1106. Under New York law, a spouse's equitable interest in property is inchoate until the entry of a judgment of divorce and that inchoate interest is accordingly not property of the bankruptcy estate. DiGeronimo v. Weissberg (In re DiGeronimo), 354 B.R. 625, 637 (Bankr. E.D.N.Y. 2006). In Taub v. Taub (In re Taub), 413 B.R. 69, 91 (Bankr. E.D.N.Y. 2009), the bankruptcy court held that the Debtor's inchoate equitable interest in the Grand Avenue Properties was not property of the bankruptcy estate. The Trustee, therefore, cannot manage the Grand Avenue Properties and the Court did not abuse its discretion.

VII. CONCLUSION

For these reasons, the United States Trustee respectfully asks this Court to affirm the Trustee Order entered below.

SUMMARY OF THE CASE AND STATEMENT CONCERNING ORAL ARGUMENT

This appeal involves the question of whether debtors-appellees' Gerald E. and Betty A. Taylor's ("Taylors") chapter 7 case was properly dismissed for substantial abuse pursuant to section 707(b) of the Bankruptcy Code. 11 U.S.C. § 707(b). The bankruptcy court dismissed the Taylors' case, holding that they had the ability to pay creditors. The bankruptcy court's decision was based on stipulated facts which state that the Taylors could pay their creditors either 59.91% or 99.84% under a three or five year plan, respectively, if Gerald Taylor's ERISA[1]-qualified pension benefits were included as disposable income in a hypothetical chapter 13 case. On appeal, the district court affirmed, relying on, inter alia, the Eighth Circuit's decisions in In re Walton, 866 F.2d 981, 982 (8th Cir. 1989) and In re Koch,109 F.3d 1285, 1285, 1288 (8th Cir. 1997). In the Koch case, this Court held that property which is otherwise exempt from inclusion in a debtors' estate may be considered in assessing whether a debtor has the ability to pay creditors. The U.S. Trustee believes that the Koch decision is controlling in this case.

Oral argument is unnecessary, because no facts are in dispute and the single issue of law raised in this appeal was conclusively decided in In re Koch, 109 F.3d 1285, 1285, 1288

STATEMENT CONCERNING APPELLATE JURISDICTION

The U.S. Trustee is satisfied with the Statement of Appellate Jurisdiction and, pursuant to Rule 28(b) of the Federal Rules of Civil Procedure, declines to present any alternative formulation thereof.

STATEMENT OF THE ISSUE PRESENTED

The U.S. Trustee disagrees with the Taylors' Statement of Issues Presented. Taylor Brief at 2. Rather than the three issues set forth by the Taylors, only one issue is presented by this appeal: Whether the lower courts erred in considering exempt post-petition pension benefits to be income in a substantial abuse analysis pursuant to 11 U.S.C. § 707(b).

The most apposite cases in this matter are as follows:

In re Koch, 109 F.3d 1285(8th Cir. 1997);

In re Fonder, 974 F.2d 996 (8th Cir. 1992);

In re Harris, 960 F.2d 74 (8th Cir. 1992);

In re Walton, 866 F.2d 981 (8th Cir. 1989).

APPLICABLE STANDARD OF APPELLATE REVIEW

The applicable standard of review on appeal is de novo with respect this issue, which is a question of law. Miller v. Farmers Home Administration, 16 F.3d 240 (8th Cir. 1994).

STATEMENT OF THE CASE AND OF THE FACTS

With one exception, the U.S. Trustee is satisfied with the Statement of the Case, including the Statement of the Facts contained therein, as presented by the Taylors in their brief("Taylor Brief") and, pursuant to Rule 28(b)of the Federal Rules of Civil Procedure declines to present any alternative formulation thereof. The U.S. Trustee disagrees with the last paragraph of the Statement of Facts that asserts the lower courts decisions constitute reversible error. Taylor Brief at 8. That assertion is a conclusion of law and is incorrect.

SUMMARY OF THE ARGUMENT

With the enactment of 11 U.S.C. § 707(b), Congress has authorized courts to dismiss those cases which they determine would constitute a substantial abuse of the bankruptcy system. In re Walton, 866 F.2d 981, 982 (8th Cir. 1989). The Eighth Circuit has determined that where debtors have the ability to pay their creditors, dismissal of their chapter 7 case under section 707(b) is appropriate. Id. Ability to pay is assessed by reference to a debtors' ability to fund a hypothetical plan of reorganization under chapter 13 of the Bankruptcy Code. Id.; In re Koch,109 F.3d 1285(8th Cir. 1997). In funding a chapter 13 plan, courts are guided by § 1325(b), which requires that debtors' "disposable income" will be applied to make payments under their plans. Koch, 109 F.3d at 1289.

Disposable income is defined as income not necessary to support a debtor, a debtor's dependents, or a debtor's business. 11 U.S.C. § 1325(b)(2). Further, nothing in the language of section 1325(b)(2) limits disposable income to non-exempt property. Thus, the lower courts properly ruled that Gerald Taylor's pension benefits may be considered in assessing the Taylors' ability to pay creditors.

In this case, the Taylors have stipulated that they can pay their creditors if they so choose. Taylor Brief at 6-7. They prefer instead to pay nothing, arguing they cannot be compelled to commit ERISA-qualified pension benefits, which they claim may not be alienated to creditors, 29 U.S.C. § 1056(d)(1), to fund a chapter 13 plan. App. at 104-108.[2] Chapter 13, however, contains no language indicating that exempt post-petition income is not "income" under section 1325(b)(2). App. at 108 (Order at 5), citing Koch, 109 F.3d at 1289. Moreover, consideration of exempt income pursuant to section 1325(b)(2) does not alienate Gerald Taylor's pension benefits: Chapter 13 relief is voluntary. As this Court stated in Koch, the disposable income limitation in § 1325(b) simply defines the terms upon which Congress has made the benefits of Chapter 13 available." Koch, 109 F.3d at 1289.

ARGUMENT

THE LOWER COURTS CORRECTLY CONSIDERED TAYLORS' PENSION INCOME AS PART OF ITS SUBSTANTIAL ABUSE ANALYSIS IN ASSESSING THEIR ABILITY TO PAY DEBTS

The Eighth Circuit has recognized that "[w]ith the enactment of the Bankruptcy Amendments and Federal Judgeship Act of 1984

[, Pub. L. 98-353, 98 Stat. 353] ("1984 Act"), debtors no longer have unfettered access to voluntary Chapter 7 relief." In re Walton, 866 F.2d 981, 982 (8th Cir. 1989). Pursuant to the 1984 Act, Congress substantially amended section 707 of the Bankruptcy Code, by adding section 707(b), which provides in relevant part as follows:

> (b) After notice and a hearing, the court, on its own motion or on a motion by the United States trustee, but not at the request or suggestion of any party in interest, may dismiss a case filed by an individual debtor under this chapter whose debts are primarily consumer debts if it finds that the granting of relief would be a substantial abuse of the provisions of this chapter. There shall be a presumption in favor of granting the relief requested by the debtor.

11 U.S.C. § 707(b) (emphasis added).

The Eighth Circuit has determined, in light of its legislative history, that section 707(b) was "aimed primarily at stemming the use of Chapter 7 relief by unneedy debtors." Walton, 866 F.2d at 983 (citing S. Rep No. 65, 98th Cong., 1st Sess. 3 (1983)). (emphasis added). Consequently, the Eighth Circuit has expressed the belief that section 707(b) "upholds creditors' interests in obtaining repayment where such repayment would not be a burden on the debtors." Id. at 983 (quoting S. Rep. No. 65 at 53). See also, Fonder v. United States, 974 F.2d 996, 999 (8th Cir. 1992) and United States v. Harris, 960 F.2d 74, 76 (8th Cir. 1992)(both reaffirming the Walton decision). Although the term "substantial abuse" is not defined in section 707(b) or elsewhere in the Bankruptcy Code, the Eighth Circuit has determined that Congress expressly declined to adopt a rigid, mechanical approach, but opted rather for an undefined, flexible "substantial abuse" standard, the focus of which is a debtor's ability to pay debts owed to creditors. Walton, 866 F.2d at 983.

Most recently, the Eighth Circuit reaffirmed its "substantial abuse" analysis in In re Koch, 109 F.3d 1285, 1288 (8th Cir. 1997), rejecting the debtors' argument that disability payments, exempt under state law, could not be considered in assessing the debtors' ability to pay their creditors. See In re Kornfield, 164 F.3d 778, 784 (2d Cir. 1999) (relying on Koch in determining that lower courts properly considered pension assets, including an ERISA pension). In In re Koch, the Eighth Circuit observed that Walton had resolved two primary issues in a substantial abuse analysis. First, that a crucial issue in determining whether a case should be dismissed is a debtor's ability to pay creditors, noting that "substantial ability to pay creditors standing alone warrants dismissal of a Chapter 7 case for substantial abuse." In re Koch, 109 F.3d at 1288 (emphasis in original). Second, the Eighth Circuit stated that ability to repay creditors for substantial abuse purposes is assessed by evaluating whether a debtor could fund a hypothetical Chapter 13 plan. Id.

In funding a Chapter 13 plan, Congress has required that, if any creditor objects, the plan must "provide[] that all of the debtor's disposable income to be received [during the three year plan] will be applied to make payments under the plan." In re Koch, 109 F.3d at 1289, quoting 11 U.S.C. § 1325(b)(1)(B). "Disposable income" is defined as that income not necessary to support a debtor, a debtor's dependants or a debtor's business. 11 U.S.C. § 1325(b)(2).

In this case, both the bankruptcy court and the district court correctly applied these principles to the stipulated facts of this case and held that Gerald Taylor's pension benefits are properly considered in assessing the Taylors' ability to pay their creditors. App. at 96 (bankruptcy court transcript at 9-11) and App. at 104-108 (district court Order). The debtors stipulated that they have, as a matter of law, the ability to pay their creditors if Gerald Taylor's income from the Deere & Co. pension is considered in the disposable income analysis under a "hypothetical Chapter 13 plan analysis". Specifically, quoting verbatim from their brief, the Taylors concede that:

> 1. The Taylors' income ($4,603.48) exceeded their reasonable monthly expenses ($2,799.64) by $1,803.84 per month (App. p. 63, para. 12);
> 2 In a hypothetical Chapter 13 plan, $1,803.84 monthly would generate a 36-month dividend to unsecured creditors of $64,938.24, and a 60-month dividend of $108,230.40; a 59.91% and 99.84% payout respectively based on the Taylors $108,400.00 total unsecured debt; (App. p. 63, para. 13); and
> 3. If Gerald Taylor's income from the Deere & Co. Pension was includable as disposable income distributable to creditors for purposes of a "hypothetical Chapter 13 plan analysis" pursuant to 11 U.S.C. § 707(b) as a matter of law, the Taylors had the ability to repay a substantial portion of their unsecured consumer debt. (App. p. 64, para. 14).

Taylor Brief, at 4 (emphasis in original).[3]

Rather than taking advantage of the statutory protections available under Chapter 13 that would enable them to pay their debts, the Taylors apparently prefer to pay their creditors nothing, arguing that they cannot be forced to use the proceeds of the Deere & Co. pension, which is a qualified plan under the Employee Retirement Income Security Act of 1974 ("ERISA"). Taylor Brief, at 7. Specifically, the Taylors argue that the pension benefits payable from Deere & Co. are exempt from inclusion in a Chapter 13 plan because of the anti-alienation provision in ERISA contained in 29 U.S.C. § 1056(d)(1). Id. They further rely on the Supreme Court case of Patterson v. Schumate, 504 U.S. 753 (1992) for the proposition that there is no bankruptcy exception to ERISA's anti-alienation provision.

---

The Taylors argument that they cannot be compelled to fund a Chapter 13 plan with exempt income ignores the central question concerning substantial abuse inquiry as developed under Walton and its progeny, including In re Koch. That question is not whether the debtors can be compelled to pay their debt -- no Chapter 7 debtor can be compelled to do so. See Walton, 866 F.2d at 984, fn.6 (citing In re Edwards, 50 B.R. 933, 939 (Bankr. S.D.N.Y. 1985)) ("Although Code § 707(b) may have the effect of relegating a debtor to a Chapter 13 if he wants any bankruptcy relief, any decision to utilize Chapter 13 remains that of the debtor." (emphasis added)); In re Koch, 109 F.3d at 1290 ("Chapter 13 relief remains wholly voluntary, and debtors whose Chapter 7 petitions are dismissed for substantial abuse are not compelled to file for Chapter 13 relief.").

The question is instead whether the debtors have the ability to repay their creditors. Indeed, as the Eighth Circuit stated in In re Fonder,

> While the Walton\Harris test for substantial abuse focuses on whether the debtor can fund a Chapter 13 plan, the essential inquiry > remains whether the debtor's ability to repay creditors with future income is sufficient to make the Chapter 7 liquidating bankruptcy a substantial abuse of the [Bankruptcy] Code.

974 F.2d 996, 999 (8th Cir. 1992). (emphasis added). See also In re Morse, 164 B.R. 651, 656 (Bankr. E.D. Wash. 1994) ("While the court does not dispute that debtors are entitled to any exemption which they may validly claim, the ability to claim an exemption is an independent issue from whether debtors have the ability to repay their debts." (emphasis added)); In re Anatal, 85 B.R. 838 (Bankr. W.D. Mo. 1988) (injecting considerations of exempt property or money into the section 707(b) analysis is inappropriate, where central inquiry is simply whether debtor has the ability to pay creditors).

The Taylors’ argument is that the anti-alienation provision in section 1056(d)(1), as construed in the Patterson v. Schumate decision, precludes a court from considering ERISA-qualified pension proceeds in an “ability to pay” analysis. The district court correctly rejected this premise, noting that while section 1056(d)(1) precludes a creditor in a Chapter 7 liquidation from attaching those proceeds, nothing prevents a debtor from funding a Chapter 13 plan with either exempt or non-exempt income. App. at 94, citing In re Hagel, 184 B.R. 793, 798 (Bankr. 9th Cir. 1995)(despite anti-alienation provision, social security disability benefits are properly considered in assessing the debtors' ability to fund a chapter 13 plan and noting that pursuant to section 1322(b) of the Bankruptcy Code debtors may make payments from either exempt or -non-exempt property). See also In re Morse, 164 B.R. 651 (E.D. Wash. 1994)(social security benefits) and In re Schnabel, 153 B.R. 809 (N.D. Ill. 1993)(same).

This conclusion is wholly consistent with the Eighth Circuit's decision in Koch, wherein the Court stated as follows:

> Congress is free to limit Chapter 7 protection to truly needy debtors who cannot fund a Chapter 13 plan with exempt or non-exempt income. We conclude that Congress did just that when it enacted § 707(b) and § 1325(b) in the 1984 amendments.

In re Koch, 109 F.3d at 1290. The decisions of both the district court and the bankruptcy court are, therefore, consistent with both the relevant statutory provisions and the Eighth Circuit's precedent. Therefore, the district court's decision should be affirmed.

CONCLUSION

For the reasons set forth, the U.S. Trustee respectfully urges this Court to affirm the decision of the district court.

STATEMENT OF JURISDICTION

The bankruptcy court had jurisdiction over this chapter 13 proceeding under 28 U.S.C. § 157(a). The sanctions order below is a final collateral order over which this Court has jurisdiction under 28 U.S.C. § 158(a)(1). See Martin v. Brown, 63 F.3d 1252, 1258 (3d Cir. 1995). The bankruptcy court entered its sanctions order pursuant to Fed. R. Bankr. P. 9011 on April 15, 2009, and the appellants' appeal from this order is timely under 11 U.S.C. § 158(c)(2) and Fed. R. Bankr. P. 8002(a).

STATEMENT OF APPROPRIATE STANDARD OF APPELLATE REVIEW

The bankruptcy court's legal findings are reviewed de novo, and its factual findings are reviewed for clear error. Fellheimer, Eichen & Braverman P.C. v. Charter Techs., Inc., 57 F.3d 1215, 1223 (3d Cir. 1995). The bankruptcy court's findings of fact will not be set aside unless they are either "completely devoid of minimum evidentiary support displaying some hue of credibility or bear[ ] no rational relationship to the supportive evidentiary data." Id.; see also Fed. R. Bankr. P. 8013 ("[F]indings of fact, whether based on oral or documentary evidence, shall not be set aside unless clearly erroneous, and due regard shall be given to the opportunity of the bankruptcy court to judge the credibility of the witnesses.").

Sanctions imposed under Fed. R. Bankr. P. 9011 ("Rule 9011"), which is the bankruptcy counterpart of Fed. R. Civ. P. 11 ("Rule 11"), are reviewed using an abuse of discretion standard, because the trial court "is best acquainted with the local bar's litigation practices and thus best situated to determine when a sanction is warranted to serve Rule 11's goal of specific and general deterrence." Cooter & Gell v. Hartmarx Corp., 496 U.S. 384, 404 (1990).

STATEMENT OF THE CASE

Lorraine Gazzara Doyle is an attorney employed by the Udren Law Offices P.C. (the "Udren Firm"). In the chapter 13 bankruptcy case of Niles and Angela Taylor, Ms. Doyle filed a motion for relief from the automatic stay on behalf of the Taylors' mortgage lender, and also filed a reply to the Taylors' objection to the lenders' proof of claim. Ms. Doyle failed to conduct a reasonable inquiry under Rule 9011(b) before filing these pleadings. As a result, following four evidentiary hearings, the bankruptcy court issued an order on April 15, 2009, imposing remedial non-monetary sanctions under Rule 9011(c) against Ms. Doyle and the Udren Firm. Ms. Doyle, the Udren Firm, and Mark J. Udren have timely appealed this order.

STATEMENT OF FACTS

On September 16, 2007, the Taylors filed a voluntary joint petition under chapter 13 of title 11, United States Code. D.I. 1.[1] The Taylors and their three children resided in a home that the schedules filed in support of their petition valued at $190,000, subject to a $103,000 mortgage held by HSBC Mortgage Corporation (USA) ("HSBC"). Id.

On October 9, 2007, Maria Borreson, an attorney employed by the Denver, Colorado law firm Moss Codillis, L.L.P. ("Moss Codillis"), filed a proof of claim ("Proof of Claim") pursuant to 11 U.S.C. § 501 as authorized agent for HSBC. See Claims Register for Case No. 07-15385, Claim 8-1. The Proof of Claim represented that HSBC held a secured claim of $93,256.29 against the Taylors' home, and it listed that same amount as the value of the Taylors' home. Id. HSBC attached an exhibit to its Proof of Claim stating that, beginning October 1, 2007, the Taylors' monthly payment was $1,264.02. Id. Through an apparent error, the Proof of Claim included as an attachment a copy of a note unrelated to the Taylors or their property.[2] Id.

On January 15, 2008, a motion for relief from the automatic stay ("Motion for Stay Relief") was filed on behalf of HSBC by Ms. Doyle.[3] D.I. 18. Granting such a motion permits secured creditors to foreclose on property held by the debtor. See 11 U.S.C. § 362.

HSBC's Motion for Stay Relief stated that the Taylors had "failed to make the current monthly payments" since the filing of their petition, and alleged three missed payments of $1,455.83 per month, totaling $4,367.49. Id. The Motion for Stay Relief did not acknowledge having received any payments from the Taylors after the filing of their petition. Id. The Motion for Stay Relief alleged that the Taylors owed a balance of $4,302 in post-petition monthly payments and late charges. Id. The Motion for Stay Relief also represented that "Debtor(s) has/have inconsequential or no equity in the premises[.]" Id.

Ms. Doyle, representing HSBC, served the Taylors on January 15, 2008, with a request for admissions pursuant to Fed. R. Bankr. P. 7036 ("Request for Admissions"), which sought to have the Taylors admit that they owed $4,302 in post-petition monthly payments and late charges, that they had not made payments to the chapter 13 trustee under their repayment plan, and that they had inconsequential or no equity in their home. D.I. 20.

[2] The Proof of Claim contained several errors, as HSBC acknowledged by filing two amendments. The first amendment, filed on May 12, 2008, by Ms. Borreson of Moss Codillis, contained only the proof of claim (Official Form 10) and one exhibit; the proof of claim provided no value for the Taylors' home, and the exhibit stated that as of October 1, 2007, the Taylors' monthly payment was $1,455.83. See Claims Register for Case No. 07-15385, Claim 8-2. The second amendment, filed on July 7, 2008, by HSBC Vice President Kimberly Graves, made numerous additions and corrections, including but not limited to the following: reducing HSBC's claim to $92,298.98; stating that the Taylors' home had a value of $190,000; and attaching a Note evincing the Taylors' obligation to Hart Mortgage Corp., the original lender in 1992. See Claims Register for Case No. 07-15385, Claim 8-3.

[3] The Motion for Stay Relief contained the signature line "/s/ Lorraine Gazzara Doyle," which establishes that the document was electronically filed by Ms. Doyle for purposes of Rule 9011 pursuant to the bankruptcy court's Standing Order M03-3005, Provisions for Electronic Case Filing.

On February 4, 2008, the Taylors filed an objection to the Motion for Stay Relief, and on March 17, 2008, the Taylors filed an objection to the Proof of Claim. D.I. 22, 31. Among other contentions, the Taylors stated that the amount claimed as due by HSBC was inaccurate because HSBC was improperly charging the Taylors for flood insurance. D.I. 31.[4]

On March 19, 2008, the Taylors' counsel filed an amended objection to the Motion for Stay Relief. D.I. 33. The amended objection attached six checks payable by the Taylors to HSBC in the amount of $1,277.12. Id. The Taylors alleged those checks constituted payments for October 2007 through December 2008. Id. For the October 2007 through January 2008 payments, both the front and back of the checks were provided, indicating that HSBC had received the payments as of March 19, 2008. Id. The February 2008 payment was dated March 8, 2008, and the March 2008 payment was dated March 17, 2008; only the front of those checks was provided, indicating that HSBC had not yet received these payments as of March 19, 2008. Id.

[4] The Taylors' proof of claim objection alleged that the Taylors did not require flood insurance as they did not actually reside in a flood zone. The Taylors accordingly asked the bankruptcy court to order HSBC to (i) provide an accounting, (ii) cease and desist from charging the Taylors additional unnecessary flood insurance premiums, and (iii) credit the Taylors the portion of their past payments that had been applied to unnecessary flood insurance premiums. D.I. 31. As of July 15, 2008, their home was removed from the flood zone. See D.I. 65 (Transcript of July 23, 2008, hearing) at 34:3-4. HSBC subsequently credited some flood insurance premiums and late fees to the Taylors' account. Id. at 36:13-18.

Ms. Doyle filed a reply to the objection to the Proof of Claim on March 27, 2008 ("Reply to Proof of Claim Objection").[5] D.I. 36. The Reply to Proof of Claim Objection stated that "[a]ll figures contained in the proof of claim accurately reflect actual sums expended or costs incurred by Mortgagee prior to the date of the Debtors' bankruptcy filing and/or charges to which Mortgagee is contractually entitled and which the Debtors are contractually obligated to pay." Id.

On May 1, 2008, a hearing was held on the Motion for Stay Relief and the objection to the Proof of Claim. D.I. 54 (Transcript of May 1, 2008, Hearing). David Fitzgibbon, an Udren Firm associate who argued Ms. Doyle's Motion for Stay Relief at the hearing, acknowledged that HSBC had indeed received the Taylors' October and November payments as of the date the Motion for Stay Relief was filed. Id. at 7:6-14. As the payments did not include the disputed flood insurance premium, however, they were "put in suspense." Id. at 7:8, 11-12. Mr. Fitzgibbon conceded that a portion of the November payment was taken from "suspense" to make whole the allegedly deficient October payment, and the remaining $1,040.18 from the November payment was held "in suspense" until the Taylors made additional payments from which funds could be applied to make the allegedly deficient November payment whole. Id. at 7:12-17.

The only evidence presented in support of the Motion for Stay Relief was the Request for Admissions, which had not been answered by the Taylors. Id. at 9:5-16. The bankruptcy court, however, realized that by February 15, 2008 – i.e., the date answers to the Request for Admissions were due – HSBC had received the December and January payments (albeit minus the disputed flood insurance premium). Id. at 35:17-19. As a result, the bankruptcy court found that the admissions relied upon by the Udren Firm were "not accurate" as of the date of the hearing, yet "[the Udren Firm] had that evidence in your possession and you went ahead like you never saw it."[6] Id. at 35:10, 36:3-4; 42:2-3.

The bankruptcy court denied the Motion for Stay Relief as "questionably in bad faith." Id. at 41:17-19, 45:21-22. In addition, the bankruptcy court directed Mr. Fitzgibbon to "pass it up the line that I was not pleased with this motion for relief," but that the court was "cutting them a break this time." Id. at 45:16-17, 45:20-21. An order was entered denying the Motion for Stay Relief "for reasons stated on the record." D.I. 49.

As for the Proof of Claim – which addressed only the pre-petition amount owed by the Taylors to HSBC – the hearing on the Taylors' objection was adjourned to June 5, 2008, and the Udren Firm was directed to obtain an accounting from HSBC of its handling of the Taylors' pre-petition payments to determine the amount of the Taylors' arrearage.[7] D.I. 54 at 43:13 through 45:12.

At the June 5, 2008 hearing, which took place on the return date of the Taylors' objection to the Proof of Claim, Mr. Fitzgibbon stated that he had requested an accounting, but that HSBC had not yet provided it. D.I. 55 (Transcript of June 5, 2008, Hearing) at 5:5-6. He informed the court that the Udren Firm uses "a program called NewTrak to communicate with them," and he had made a NewTrak inquiry but had yet to receive a response. Id. at 8:10-17. Mr. Fitzgibbon also stated that he had no way to contact his client other than by making an electronic inquiry through the NewTrak system. Id. at 9:1-4. Mr. Fitzgibbon further stated that, because Moss Codillis, HSBC's national counsel, had filed the Proof of Claim, the Udren Firm did not have the NewTrak "screen prints" used to prepare the Proof of Claim. Id. at 8:12-14, 9:9. The bankruptcy court stated that it would enter an order directing Moss Codillis "and anybody who had anything to do with it" to appear and testify so that the court could "find out what the debtor [sic] owes." Id. at 21:16-24. The bankruptcy court also advised Mr. Fitzgibbon that it was "issuing an order to show cause on [the Udren Firm], too, for filing these things with – without having any knowledge. . . [a]nd filing answers that – without any knowledge." Id. at 22:3-6.

[6] In addition to the monthly payment information, the other "admissions" requested by the Udren Firm were apparently also false, as the Taylors were making payments to the trustee and had equity in their home. See D.I. 54 (Transcript of May 1, 2008, Hearing) at 46:10-11 (Court: "And [Mrs. Taylor]'s making current payments?" Chapter 13 Trustee's Counsel: "She is, Your Honor."); Claims Register for Case No. 07-15385, Claim 8-3 (amended proof of claim acknowledging $190,000 as value of the Taylors' home).

[7] Confirmation of the Taylors' repayment plan was also continued to June 5, 2008. D.I. 46. This was apparently because the Taylors' proposed plan payments would not cover the arrearage claimed in the Proof of Claim; thus, the pre-petition accounting to be provided by HSBC, which would determine the Taylors' actual arrearage, was necessary to determine plan feasibility. D.I. 54 at 43:25 through 44:7 (underfunding of claimed arrearage); 46:7-8 (confirmation was among the matters adjourned to June 5, 2008).

Thereafter, on June 9, 2008, the bankruptcy court entered an order that required specified persons to appear and provide testimony regarding whether sanctions should be imposed given the "questionable practices" identified at the May 1, 2008, and June 5, 2008, hearings. D.I. 52. The questionable practices regarding which the court sought testimony included "pressing a relief motion on admissions that were known to be untrue, and signing and filing pleadings without knowledge or inquiry regarding the matters pled therein." Id. n.1. The specific persons directed to appear and provide testimony included, among others, Mr. Fitzgibbon, Ms. Doyle, and "[t]he partner in charge of HSBC's bankruptcy work" at the Udren Firm. Id. In appearing to testify regarding their questionable practices, the specified Udren Firm attorneys were advised that the purpose of the hearing included "to investigate the practices employed in this case by HSBC and its attorneys and agents and consider whether sanctions should issue against HSBC, its attorneys and agents."[8] Id. n.5 (emphasis added).

The resulting investigation took place over four evidentiary hearings at which a number of witnesses from HSBC, Moss Codillis, and the Udren Firm testified. See D.I. 65 (Transcript of July 23, 2008, Hearing); D.I. 70 (Transcript of August 8, 2008, Hearing); D.I. 122 (Transcript of October 23, 2008, Hearing); D.I. 169 (Transcript of December 17, 2008, Hearing).

At the beginning of the first of these hearings, on July 23, 2008, the bankruptcy court stated, "as a prefatory matter" to clarify "what [its] concerns were," the following:

> [E]very Proof of Claim objection needs to be defended in good faith. We have a situation here where one person is filing the Proof of Claim, another one is defending. I have a question about access to client files, access to information, the communication and so forth. Related to that is the Rule 11 obligation; there must be a colorable basis for a claim after due inquiry. Again, that comes back to the reference to data and information, the review of filings that are made with the client, discovery duties.

D.I. 65 at 8:25, 9:1, 9:14-22 (emphasis added). Similarly, at the second evidentiary hearing on August 8, 2008, the bankruptcy court stated as follows during Mr. Fitzgibbons' direct testimony:

> I'm not trying to elicit whether [the Udren Firm was] correct in [the] motion for relief or correct in [the] objection to claim. But what I'm trying to elicit is what do creditors do in preparation for filing these motions to ensure that they are – and what did they look at? . . . . What did they verify?

[8] The bankruptcy court's June 9, 2008, order also invited the Office of the United States Trustee to participate, and the Office of the United States Trustee began its own investigation into the practices of Moss Codillis and HSBC's loan servicer in this case, Lender Processing Services, Inc., f/k/a Fidelity National Information Services, Inc. ("LPS"), creator of NewTrak. The Office of the United States Trustee's investigation is ongoing.

D.I. 70 at 35:9-16 (emphasis added). Members of the Udren Firm, including Ms. Doyle, were present at both of these hearings. D.I. 65 at 1-2 (appearances at July 23, 2008, hearing); D.I. 70 at 1 (appearances at August 8, 2008, hearing).

During the course of the evidentiary hearings, the following relevant testimony was elicited regarding NewTrak and the documents filed in the Taylors' case:

HSBC's case management system, which is used to track payments received from borrowers such as the Taylors, can be accessed by its national counsel, Moss Codillis, but cannot be accessed by local counsel such as the Udren Firm. D.I. 65 at 67:13-14. Local counsel only have access to NewTrak, which is simply a communication tool provided by LPS through which a case can be electronically referred to local counsel and local counsel can communicate with HSBC and LPS. Id. at 68:22-23; 73:5-6, 16-19; 74:24-25; 172:17-24. When a stay relief motion is desired, NewTrak "provid[es] the attorney with minimal – the minimal information that they would need to file" the motion. Id. at 78:5-7 (testimony of HSBC Vice President Kimberly Graves). If communication through NewTrak is not sufficient or a timely response is not received, HSBC has an "escalation procedure" whereby local counsel can communicate directly with HSBC personnel. D.I. 65 at 109:14-25; 110:1-4; 114:25; 115:1-4. Notwithstanding this escalation procedure, however, the Udren Firm instructs its employees to communicate through NewTrak. D.I. 169 at 79:22-23.

Mark J. Udren is the Udren Firm's president and sole shareholder. D.I. 122 at 90:13-15. Mr. Udren has been a practicing attorney for many years. Id. at 90:5-6. He testified that because "time frames . . . drive[ ] the clients," his firm is "time frame driven." Id. at 124:22-23, 125:6. As a result, Mr. Udren strives to be the "fastest attorney" in relation to others to whom a servicer might refer business. Id. at 125:7. Given this perceived need to quickly turn around matters such as motions for stay relief, the Udren Firm "rel[ies] on [NewTrak] dramatically." Id. at 91:23-25. Despite its alleged importance to his firm's turnaround time, however, Mr. Udren acknowledged that he is not familiar with how NewTrak works, as it is "beyond [his] capabilities." Id. at 127:22-23.

In the Taylors' case, the Proof of Claim was prepared by a "processor" at Moss Codillis who is not legally trained. D.I. 65 at 137:20-21. Maria Borreson, the Moss Codillis attorney who signed and filed the Proof of Claim, did not actually review it before it was filed. Id. at 151:1-6. Although the Moss Codillis processors review HSBC's actual payment information in preparing proofs of claim, Ms. Borreson acknowledged that she does not know whether the information received from HSBC is accurate. Id. at 122:25; 123:1-3; 150:23. Indeed, Ms. Borreson acknowledged that the Proof of Claim in the Taylors' case had the wrong Note attached and also contained erroneous information regarding the monthly payment amount. Id. at 144:13-15.

Ms. Doyle, managing attorney of the Udren Firm, has been a practicing attorney for over 28 years. D.I. 169 at 5:15, 21. She acknowledged that, in preparing the Reply to Proof of Claim Objection, she simply relied on the erroneous and unreviewed Proof of Claim filed by Moss Codillis. D.I. 169 at 58:19-20. Although she reviewed the reply before it was filed in her name, she testified that she conducted no inquiry beyond reviewing the information received through NewTrak because that information "seemed accurate." Id. at 55:8-10; 57:4. Ms. Doyle presumed that the information on NewTrak had originated with HSBC and not the loan servicer, LPS, but she did not know and had not sought to verify the information because she "had no reason to disbelieve" it. Id. at 56:24, 57:3-5; 61:1-8.

Similarly, Ms. Doyle did nothing to verify the Taylors' payment history before signing and filing the Motion for Stay Relief, as her practice is to "rely on the allegations supplied by my client or on behalf of my client." Id. at 30:14-17. Instead, she merely reviewed hard copies of the "screen prints" provided through NewTrak. Id. at 7:17-18; 8:4, 8-9; 9:1; 31:11. The Udren Firm processors who prepared the motion had also relied solely on the "screen prints," as did Mr. Fitzgibbon in his initial review. D.I. 70 at 36:4-5; 36:19; 104:14; 120:21, 25; 121:4-5. Ms. Doyle acknowledged that she neither accessed NewTrak nor contacted HSBC to verify the accuracy of the information contained in the "screen prints." D.I. 169 at 50:4; 39:8. Indeed, Ms. Doyle did not know who had put the information onto NewTrak; she "presume[d] it was somebody from [LPS]," the loan servicer, and not HSBC, and she simply assumed that the information had been supplied to LPS by HSBC. Id. at 31:5-23; 40:23, 41:1-7. In addition, despite the explicit statement in the Motion for Stay Relief regarding the Taylors' alleged lack of equity in their home, Ms. Doyle testified that she made absolutely no inquiry into the veracity of that factual allegation. Id. at 38:15-25, 39:1.

After the completion of testimony, the parties submitted briefs regarding the issues raised during the court's investigation resulting from the June 9, 2008, order. D.I. 160 (submission filed under seal on behalf of the Udren Firm in response to the Acting United States Trustee's supplemental memorandum of law filed under seal on January 21, 2009, in support of her motion to conduct an examination of LPS pursuant to Fed. R. Bankr. P. 2004).

On April 15, 2009, the bankruptcy court issued an opinion in which it made findings based on its investigation and issued non-monetary sanctions against Ms. Doyle and Mr. Udren. D.I. 193. The bankruptcy court found that "certain practices and procedures employed by HSBC, its agents and attorneys . . . have created an environment where Rule 9011 duties have been subordinated to efficiency and cost-savings so as to require sanctions." Id., slip op. at 3. The bankruptcy court found that Mr. Fitzgibbon violated Rule 9011 by advocating the Motion for Stay Relief "on admissions he knew to be then untrue." Id., slip op. at 51. The bankruptcy court also found that Ms. Doyle had violated Rule 9011 because she had "failed to observe her duty to make reasonable inquiry" regarding the Motion for Stay Relief and Reply to Proof of Claim Objection. Id., slip op. at 50-51. The bankruptcy court also found that "the Udren Firm . . . is jointly responsible with [its attorneys] Doyle and Fitzgibbon for these breaches." Id., slip op. at 52.

The bankruptcy court did not impose a sanction upon Mr. Fitzgibbon because he was a young and inexperienced lawyer when he committed his Rule 9011 violation. Id. Ms. Doyle, however, was found to "be so enmeshed in the assembly line of managing the bankruptcy department's volume mortgage lender practice that she has lost sight of her duty to the court and has compromised her ethical obligations." Id. As a result, the bankruptcy court held that Ms. Doyle must take three continuing legal education credits in professional responsibility and ethics over and above any general continuing legal education obligation she already has. Id.

As for the Udren Firm, "since policy emanates from the top" the bankruptcy court held that (i) Mr. Udren, who "sets the tone and establishes [the Udren Firm's] culture," must obtain training in NewTrak, (ii) Mr. Udren must spend one day observing his employees as they handle NewTrak referrals, and (iii) Mr. Udren and Ms. Doyle must "conduct a training session for all members of the [Udren Firm's] bankruptcy department in the appropriate use of [HSBC's] escalation procedure and the requirements of Rule 9011 with respect to pre-filing due diligence." Id., slip op. at 52-53.

The bankruptcy court entered an order embodying its decision on April 15, 2009.[9] D.I. 194. A timely notice of appeal was filed on April 27, 2009, by Ms. Doyle, Mr. Udren, and the Udren Firm ("Appellants"). D.I. 207.

SUMMARY OF ARGUMENT

Every written paper presented to the bankruptcy court is subject to Rule 9011(b), which imposes an affirmative duty on every attorney signing or filing a document to first conduct "an inquiry reasonable after the circumstances" to ensure the validity of the factual and legal assertions contained in the document. To avoid sanction under Rule 9011(c), the attorney must show not only that the document was accurate, but also that the pre-signing inquiry was reasonable under the circumstances. The applicable standard is an objective standard, not a subjective, "akin to contempt" standard.

When a bankruptcy court seeks to impose Rule 9011(c) sanctions sua sponte, it must first issue an order describing the specific conduct that appears to violate Rule 9011 and directing the attorney or law firm to show cause why it has not violated Rule 9011(b). The reason for this requirement is to ensure due process. Here, the bankruptcy court entered an order that ordered the Udren Firm attorneys involved in this case to appear and testify, regarding specific conduct

[9] The April 15, 2009, order also directed HSBC to transmit to each all law firm it employs a letter outlining HSBC's escalation procedure, explaining that HSBC is to be contacted directly when necessary, and instructing the law firm to circulate among all attorneys in its bankruptcy department a copy of the bankruptcy court's April 15, 2009, opinion. D.I. 194. This paragraph of the April 15, 2009, order formed the basis of a motion for a stay pending appeal filed by the Appellants on May 7, 2009, and granted on June 4, 2009. D.I. 208 (motion for stay pending appeal); D.I. 248 (order granting stay pending appeal). As the HSBC portion of the order is not addressed in the Appellants' Brief, however, they apparently no longer consider the directive to HSBC to be a reversible "sanction" against the Udren Firm. Moreover, the HSBC portion of the order is not properly before this Court on appeal because HSBC, the party to whom it is directed, has not appealed the April 15, 2009, order.

taken by Udren Firm attorneys, at a hearing at which sanctions would be considered. At the outset of those hearings, moreover, the bankruptcy court specifically noted that the scope of its inquiry included consideration of possible Rule 9011 sanctions. After four evidentiary hearings at which the Udren Firm attorneys testified, and after reviewing written submissions by the parties, the bankruptcy court issued an order finding that Mr. Fitzgibbon and Ms. Doyle had violated Rule 9011(b) and imposing nonmonetary sanctions on Ms. Doyle and the Udren Firm under Rule 9011(c). The procedure used by the bankruptcy court provided sufficient due process, was not an abuse of discretion, and was, at most, harmless error.

The finding that Ms. Doyle had violated Rule 9011(b) was not an abuse of discretion, as her own testimony revealed that she did not conduct an inquiry reasonable under the circumstances before filing two documents with the bankruptcy court. The bankruptcy court's sanction – that Ms. Doyle obtain three additional credits of continuing legal education in professional responsibility and ethics – was not an abuse of discretion.

As Ms. Doyle was properly found to have violated Rule 9011(b), the Udren Firm was also subject to sanction under Rule 9011(c). The bankruptcy court's sanction – that Mr. Udren learn about the NewTrak system, observe his staff in its handling of NewTrak referrals for one day, and that Mr. Udren and Ms. Doyle conduct an in-house educational seminar regarding HSBC's escalation procedure and the due diligence requirements of Rule 9011 – was not an abuse of discretion.

ARGUMENT

I. THE PROCEDURE USED BY THE BANKRUPTCY COURT WAS CONSISTENT WITH RULE 9011(c)(1)(B), AND DOES NOT CONSTITUTE REVERSIBLE ERROR

A. Ms. Doyle, Mr. Udren, and the Udren Firm Had Notice of the Conduct For Which Sanctions Were Imposed

Every written paper[10] presented to the bankruptcy court is subject to Rule 9011, subsection (b) of which provides that, "[b]y presenting to the court (whether by signing, filing, submitting, or later advocating) a . . . written motion, or other paper, an attorney . . . is certifying that to the best of the [attorney]'s knowledge, information, and belief, formed after an inquiry reasonable under the circumstances," the document is not presented for an improper purpose, contains legal contentions warranted by existing law, contains factual contentions with evidentiary support, and contains denials of factual contentions that are either warranted on the evidence or reasonably based on a lack of information or belief. Fed. R. Bankr. P. 9011(b) (emphasis added). Under Rule 9011(c), sanctions may be imposed "upon the attorneys, law firms, or parties that have violated subdivision (b) or are responsible for the violation."

To avoid Rule 9011 sanctions, an attorney must not only show the legal and factual validity of a document she signed and filed – she must also show that, before signing and filing it, she conducted a reasonable inquiry.[11] Business Guides, Inc. v. Chromatic Commc'ns Enters., Inc., 498 U.S. 533, 551 (1991) (Rule 11 "states unambiguously that any signer must conduct a ‘reasonable inquiry’ or face sanctions”); see also Vista Mfg. Inc. v. Trac-4 Inc., 131 F.R.D. 134, 138 (N.D. Ind. 1990) (“[A party] may not demonstrate compliance with Rule 11 by showing that it was right. It must demonstrate compliance by showing that its pre-filing inquiry was reasonable.”). Failure to conduct a reasonable inquiry is sanctionable even if the pleading is factually and legally correct, as “a signer making an inadequate inquiry into the sufficiency of the facts and law underlying a document will not be saved from a Rule 11 sanction by the stroke of luck that the document happened to be justified.” Garr v. U.S. Healthcare, Inc., 22 F.3d 1274, 1279 (3d Cir. 1994).

[10] Pursuant to Fed. R. Bankr. P. 5005(a)(2), any document filed by electronic means constitutes a written paper for purposes of the Federal Rules of Bankruptcy Procedure, including Rule 9011.

[11] As Rule 9011 is the bankruptcy equivalent of Fed. R. Civ. P. 11, cases interpreting Rule 11 are used when necessary to analyze the propriety of sanctions under Rule 9011. See Landon v. Hunt, 977 F.2d 829, 833 n.3 (3d Cir. 1992).

In this case, the bankruptcy court was concerned that the Motion for Stay Relief and Reply to Proof of Claim Objection were signed, filed, and later advocated without Udren Firm attorneys conducting an inquiry reasonable under the circumstances. The bankruptcy court stated as much at the June 5, 2008, hearing, by telling Mr. Fitzgibbon “I’m issuing an order to show cause on your firm, too, for filing these things with – without having any knowledge. And filing answers that – without any knowledge.” See D.I. 55 at 22:3-6. In addition, the June 9, 2008, order expressly stated that the “questionable practices” to be investigated included “pressing a relief motion on admissions that were known to be untrue, and signing and filing pleadings without knowledge or inquiry regarding the matters pled therein.” D.I. 52 n.1 (emphasis added). It is disingenuous for the Appellants to protest that they had no idea why the bankruptcy court was conducting its investigation.

In any case, the Appellants do not explain how placing a different title on the bankruptcy court’s proceedings would have affected the substantive outcome of those proceedings, nor do they suggest that any part of the bankruptcy court’s analysis would be different if the court was forced to reconsider those same sanctions on remand under the rubric of Rule 9011. The Appellants do not contend they were confused about the subject matter of the bankruptcy court's investigation, and they do not suggest that their defense was affected by uncertainty over the statutory basis for sanctions. Accordingly, even if the bankruptcy court erred by not referencing Rule 9011 more explicitly in connection with its investigation of the Appellants, such error was harmless.

B. The Bankruptcy Court Did Not Err By Looking To Objective Conduct, And Not Subjective Bad Faith, When Determining Whether Rule 9011 Sanctions Were Warranted

The Third Circuit has held that "[t]he imposition of Rule 11 sanctions . . . requires only a showing of objectively unreasonable conduct," and does not require a showing of subjective bad faith. Fellheimer, Eichen & Braverman P.C. v. Charter Techs., Inc., 57 F.3d at 1225 (awarding sanctions upon motion of opposing party). The Appellants nevertheless ask this Court to adopt a subjective, "akin to contempt" standard where the Rule 9011 action is brought by the court sua sponte rather than by a party on motion. Appellant's Brief at 18-19. This subjective standard, which has only been adopted by the Second Circuit (over a strong dissent),[12] is apparently based on the fact that Rule 9011(c)(1)(A) provides a 21-day “safe harbor” when the action is brought on motion, while Rule 9011(c)(1)(B) contains no “safe harbor” when the action is brought by the court sua sponte. See In re Pennie & Edmonds LLP, 323 F.3d 86, 91 (2d Cir. 2003).

[12] Other Circuits have acknowledged that the 1993 Advisory Committee Notes state that sua sponte Rule 11 motions will arise only in situations "akin to contempt," but not one has adopted the substantive, "bad faith" standard urged by the Appellants. See, e.g., Kaplan v. Daimlerchrysler, A.G., 331 F.3d 1251, 1255-56 (11th Cir. 2003) (agreeing with courts adopting "akin to contempt" rationale in dicta, but declining to adopt Second Circuit mens rea requirement); Hunter v. Earthgrains Co. Bakery, 281 F.3d 144, 151, 153 (4th Cir. 2002) (noting in dicta that courts are "obliged to use extra care in imposing [sua sponte] sanctions on offending lawyers" and noting the "Advisory Committee contemplated that a sua sponte show cause order would only be used 'in situations that are akin to a contempt of court,'" but nonetheless stating that the appropriate Rule 11 standard is one of objective reasonableness); cf. MHC Inv. Co. v. Racom Corp., 323 F.3d 620, 623-24 (8th Cir. 2003) (stating that Rule 11 standard "is applied with particular strictness where, as here, the sanctions are imposed on the court's own motion," but affirming $25,000 sanction without finding subjective bad faith).

Although the Third Circuit has not yet ruled on the issue, other courts have rejected the holding of Pennie & Edmonds and have not required proof of subjective bad faith where the sanctions proceeding is initiated by the court sua sponte. See, e.g., Jenkins v. Methodist Hosps. of Dallas, Inc., 478 F.3d 255, 264 (5th Cir. 2007), cert. denied, 128 S. Ct. 181 (2007); Young v. City of Providence, 404 F.3d 33, 39 (1st Cir. 2005). The Fifth Circuit found that, notwithstanding the procedural differences between actions brought sua sponte and those brought on motion, regardless of who initiates the inquiry “the party subject to sanctions is given the opportunity to show why they should not be imposed.” Jenkins v. Methodist Hosps. of Dallas, Inc., 478 F.3d at 264. The First Circuit noted that the “akin to contempt” theory is based on a statement in the 1993 Advisory Committee Notes, but not on the actual text of Rule 11. Young v. City of Providence, 404 F.3d at 39. Indeed, it is far more likely that an adversarial party would invoke Rule 9011 for slight cause, so it makes little sense to impose a stricter standard on actions brought by the court sua sponte. Id. at 40.

The language of Rule 9011 supports the holding of Jenkins and Young. Rule 9011 imposes an affirmative duty to conduct an “inquiry reasonable under the circumstances.” Fed. R. Bankr. P. 9011(b) (emphasis added); see also Business Guides, Inc. v. Chromatic Commc’ns Enters., Inc., 498 U.S. at 551 (Rule 11 “imposes . . . an affirmative duty to conduct a reasonable inquiry into the facts and law before filing”). Although Rule 9011(c)(1)(A) was amended to add the “safe harbor” provision, no change was made to Rule 9011(b) or elsewhere to change the inquiry from an objective “reasonable under the circumstances” inquiry to a subjective, good-faith inquiry. Had the drafters of the Rule intended to provide for a heightened mens rea standard for court-initiated proceedings, they would have included appropriate language in the Rule itself, as the language of the Rule holds more weight than do the Advisory Committee Notes. See First Nat’l Bank of Lincolnwood v. Levine (In re Evanston Motor Co.), 735 F.2d 1029, 1031-32 (7th Cir. 1984) (interpreting rule so as to not “give the Advisory Committee’s general guidance greater vitality than the clear language of the rule itself”); cf. United States v. Carey, 120 F.3d 509, 512 (4th Cir. 1997), cert. denied, 522 U.S. 1120 (1998) (with regard to the Federal Rules of Criminal Procedure, “the Advisory Committee Note is not the law; the rule is”).

Even if this Court thought a substantive bad faith standard should apply when the Rule 9011 action is initiated by the bankruptcy court sua sponte, it “would not be free to implement this standard outside of the rulemaking process.” See Business Guides, Inc. v. Chromatic Commc’ns Enters., Inc., 498 U.S. at 549 (refusing to read a subjective bad faith standard into Rule 11 for sanctions against represented parties). As Rule 9011 is written, there is no difference in the standard regardless of whether the action is initiated by a party or by the court. In each instance the signer of the document must show that it conducted an inquiry reasonable under the circumstances.[13]

In light of the foregoing, the Appellants’ request to apply a subjective standard should be rejected. As the objective standard applied by the bankruptcy court was consistent with Supreme Court and Third Circuit precedent interpreting Rules 11 and 9011, it was not reversible error.

[13] To the extent that this Court does adopt a subjective bad faith standard for Rule 9011 sanctions, this case should be remanded to the bankruptcy court to determine if such standard has been met.

C. The Bankruptcy Court Provided the Appellants With Ample Due Process Before Imposing Sanctions

Rule 9011(c) requires "notice and a reasonable opportunity to respond" before a sanction may be imposed. Under Rule 9011(c)(1)(B), the bankruptcy court may initiate Rule 9011 proceedings by "enter[ing] an order describing the specific conduct that appears to violate subsection (b) and directing an attorney, law firm, or party to show cause why it has not violated subdivision (b) with respect thereto." The Rule 9011(c)(1)(B) requirements are intended to ensure that sanctioned parties receive due process.

The Third Circuit has held that, when sanctioning attorneys, due process requires "particularized notice" and "a meaningful opportunity to be heard." Fellheimer, Eichen & Braverman P.C. v. Charter Techs., Inc., 57 F.3d at 1225-27. The notice required, however, need not necessarily state the precise provision under which sanctions are to be imposed, provided the attorney has advance notice that the court is considering sanctions for specified actions. Id. at 1226 (where notice did not state that court would use its inherent power to impose sanctions, law firm nevertheless had sufficient advance notice that sanctions for bad faith conduct were being considered). As for an attorney's opportunity to be heard, it is sufficient if after receiving notice of the sanctionable conduct the attorney has ample opportunity to be heard on the record and sufficient time to brief the issue. Id. at 1227.

The bankruptcy court below initiated Rule 9011 proceedings by means of the June 9, 2008, order. Although that order was not termed an "order to show cause," it did order Ms. Doyle and "[t]he partner in charge of HSBC's bankruptcy work" at the Udren Firm to appear and testify. In addition, it ordered them to testify regarding specific conduct taken by the Udren Firm, namely advocating the Motion for Stay Relief by presenting "admissions" known to be false, and filing documents without first conducting a reasonable inquiry. Also, it expressly warned that sanctions for this conduct were being considered. Although the June 9, 2008, order did not expressly refer to Rule 9011(b), it is difficult to imagine what other sanctions the Udren Firm thought could be applicable to its filing papers without conducting a reasonable inquiry. If there was any doubt, it was clearly dispelled when, at the beginning of the first hearing held on the June 9, 2008, order, the bankruptcy court stated that Rule 11 was implicated by papers filed by the Udren Firm without a reasonable inquiry.

In objecting to the procedure used by the bankruptcy court, the Appellants seek to exalt form over substance. They received all of the process to which they were due under Rule 9011(c), especially in light of the exceptionally lenient educational "sanctions" ultimately imposed by the bankruptcy court. The Appellants were sanctioned over ten months after the bankruptcy court issued its June 8, 2008, order. During that extended period the Appellants had the opportunity to provide extensive testimony at four evidentiary hearings as well as a written submission. They knew from at least July 23, 2008, if not June 9, 2008, that they were subject to Rule 9011 sanctions based on the filing of documents without reasonable inquiry. As a result, they were not blindsided by the bankruptcy court's imposition of Rule 9011 sanctions in April 2009.

Indeed, the Appellants have not been hamstrung in presenting their position to the bankruptcy court. Through counsel, they have exhaustively presented their position – they simply believe they did nothing sanctionable. It is difficult to imagine how much more of a showing they could have made if the bankruptcy court's order had been called an "order to show cause" and had expressly referred to Rule 9011(b). Given the thorough record developed below, a remand for further proceedings would be a waste of judicial time and resources.

The procedure used by the bankruptcy court was consistent with Rule 9011(c)(1)(B). Even if such procedure was erroneous, moreover, such error was harmless. Accordingly, the ruling of the bankruptcy court should be affirmed.

II. THE BANKRUPTCY COURT DID NOT ERR IN SANCTIONING MS. DOYLE UNDER RULE 9011 FOR HER FAILURE TO CONDUCT A REASONABLE INQUIRY BEFORE SIGNING AND FILING DOCUMENTS

A. Ms. Doyle Did Not Conduct an Inquiry Reasonable Under the Circumstances

The bankruptcy court imposed a mild non-monetary sanction on Ms. Doyle because she "failed to observe her duty to make reasonable inquiry of the two documents she signed." D.I. 193, slip op. at 50. By Ms. Doyle's own admission, her "inquiry" regarding the Motion for Stay Relief was limited to a review of the same NewTrak "screen prints" that a Udren Firm processor had used to draft the document, and she made no inquiry whatsoever as to facts underlying the Reply to Proof of Claim Objection since it "seemed accurate." D.I. 169 at 7:17-18; 8:4, 8-9; 9:1; 31:11; 55:8-10; 58:19-20. Although she was content to simply rely on the Proof of Claim and NewTrak "screen prints," she had no idea what the source of those numbers was. Id. at 31:5-23; 40:23, 41:1-7; 56:24, 57:3-5; 61:1-8. There was no sworn testimony or other evidence that time pressures precluded her from doing a more thorough inquiry. Indeed, it apparently never occurred to Ms. Doyle to do any further inquiry, as the Udren Firm's policy appears to have been to simply review NewTrak "screen prints" in preparing documents for filing with the court.

The bankruptcy court's finding that the documents signed and filed by Ms. Doyle were "rote averments from form pleadings signed without any inquiry" was consistent with the record developed below, and so was not reversible error. A reasonable attorney would not have signed and filed such pleadings without first conducting an inquiry beyond blind reliance on unverified numbers provided from an unknown source.

The Appellants' brief does not even address the reasonableness of Ms. Doyle's pre-signing inquiry. Instead, it concentrates on whether the pleadings filed were factually accurate. Appellants' Brief at 21-25, 27. But, as the Third Circuit has held, an attorney who signs a pleading without conducting a reasonable inquiry is subject to Rule 11 sanction even if the information in the document turns out to be correct.[14] Garr v. U.S. Healthcare, Inc., 22 F.3d at 1279.

When she signed and filed the Motion for Stay Relief, Ms. Doyle knew only that it was consistent with the "screen prints" received from NewTrak; she had no idea whether the information was accurate, or even whether HSBC or an agent acting on its behalf had put the information on NewTrak. Although the Appellants will presumably argue that they reasonably relied on information provided by their client, that argument is unavailing because "[b]lind reliance on the client is seldom a sufficient inquiry" for Rule 9011 purposes. See In re Kunstler, 914 F.2d 505, 514 (4th Cir. 1990); Southern Leasing Partners, Ltd. v. McMullan, 801 F.2d 783, 788 (5th Cir. 1986); Brubaker Kitchens, Inc. v. Brown, 2006 WL 3682180 *3 (E.D. Pa. Dec. 11, 2006), aff'd, 280 F. App'x 174 (3d Cir. 2008).

Similarly, when she signed the Reply to Proof of Claim Objection, Ms. Doyle knew only that it was consistent with the Proof of Claim filed by Moss Codillis; she had no idea whether the information was accurate. Although Ms. Doyle might have counted on Ms. Borreson of Moss [14] In any event, both the Motion for Stay Relief and the Reply to Proof of Claim Objection stated that the Taylors had no equity in their home – which was not accurate, in light of HSBC's second amended proof of claim's acknowledgment that the Taylors' home is valued at $190,000. See Claims Register for Case No. 07-15385, Claim 8-3.

Codillis having conducted a reasonable inquiry before filing the Proof of Claim, she had no way of knowing whether Ms. Borreson actually had conducted such an inquiry (and indeed, Ms. Borreson had not). This case shows the wisdom in the Third Circuit's directive that "Rule 11 requires that an attorney signing a pleading must make a reasonable inquiry personally," as signing counsel can never be certain that prior reviewing counsel (or paralegals, or processors) actually conducted an inquiry. See Garr v. U.S. Healthcare, 22 F.3d at 1280 (emphasis in original)

The Appellants' Brief attempts at 22-24 to deflect attention to the Taylors' counsel. These arguments are unavailing, however, as the Taylors' counsel's actions had no affect whatsoever on Ms. Doyle's pre-signing inquiry. The question on appeal is whether Ms. Doyle conducted an inquiry reasonable under the circumstances, not whether the Taylor's counsel acquitted herself well in this case.

The Appellants' Brief also assumes that Ms. Doyle's sanction was imposed vicariously based on the actions of Mr. Fitzgibbon. Appellants' Brief at 26-27. As the bankruptcy court's decision makes clear, however, Ms. Doyle was appropriately sanctioned due to her own failure to conduct an inquiry reasonable under the circumstances before signing and filing documents with the bankruptcy court. See In re Mroz, 65 F.3d 1567, 1573 (11th Cir. 1995) (holding that where "an attorney has failed to conduct a reasonable inquiry into the matter, then the court is obligated to impose sanctions even if the attorney had a good faith belief that the claim was sound").

B. The Sanction Imposed by the Bankruptcy Court Was Reasonable

Under Rule 9011(c)(2), sanctions may include "directives of a nonmonetary nature." Sanctions "shall be limited to what is sufficient to deter repetition of such conduct or comparable conduct by others similarly situated." Fed. R. Bankr. P. 9011(c)(2). The order imposing sanctions "shall describe the conduct determined to constitute a violation of [Rule 9011] and explain the basis for the sanction imposed."

The bankruptcy court below ordered Ms. Doyle to obtain three continuing legal education credits in professional responsibility and ethics. This is the kind of "nonmonetary sanction" envisioned by Rule 9011(c)(2). See 1993 Advisory Committee Notes to Rule 11 ("The court has available a variety of possible sanctions to impose for violations, such as . . . requiring participation in seminars or other educational programs[.]"). In addition, although the April 15, 2009, order did not itself describe the sanctionable conduct, it expressly provided that it was based on "the reasons stated in the accompanying Opinion" – and the bankruptcy court's 58-page opinion describes the conduct determined to violate Rule 9011 and explains the basis for the sanction imposed. As a result, the only remaining question is whether the nonmonetary sanction imposed is the least sanction that will deter Ms. Doyle and others similarly situated from signing and filing documents without conducting an independent inquiry reasonable under the circumstances.

The Appellants assert that Ms. Doyle's mild sanction is "a manifest injustice" and "in the nature of an ethical violation." Appellants' Brief at 27. Given the record developed below, requiring Ms. Doyle to obtain an additional three hours of continuing legal education is hardly a "manifest injustice"; indeed, the bankruptcy court could easily have imposed a monetary sanction, but chose not to. Cf. In re Ulmer, 363 B.R. 777, 785 (Bankr. D.S.C. 2007) (imposing sanction of $500 per violation where pleadings were filed without review of attesting attorney); In re Rivera, 342 B.R. 435, 464 (Bankr. D.N.J. 2006), aff'd, 2007 WL 1946656 (D.N.J. June 29, 2007) (imposing sanction of $500 per violation where attorney filed faked certification with court, notwithstanding alleged accuracy of data contained therein). Similarly, had the bankruptcy court actually wanted to make an ethics referral, it easily could have done so on this record. See In re Rivera, 342 B.R. at 468 (referring signing attorney and firm's managing partner to Chief Judge of District Court for further review and ethics disciplinary proceedings). Learning about ethics and being referred to the state ethics authorities are two dramatically different things. Indeed, as attending an educational course can only lead to Ms. Doyle's betterment, it can hardly be called a "sanction" at all.

In this case, the evidence demonstrates that Ms. Doyle's errors were caused in part by a firm culture that emphasizes speed over reasonable inquiry. Consequently, the bankruptcy court did not abuse its discretion when it concluded that a sanction greater than a mere reprimand was necessary to deter Ms. Doyle and other Udren Firm attorneys from similar violations of Rule 9011 in the future.

III. THE BANKRUPTCY COURT DID NOT ERR IN SANCTIONING THE UDREN FIRM IN LIGHT OF MS. DOYLE'S VIOLATIONS OF RULE 9011

A. The Bankruptcy Court Did Not Err in Sanctioning the Udren Firm for the Rule 9011 Violations of its Attorneys

The introductory paragraph to Rule 9011(c) and Rule 9011(c)(1)(B) both expressly refer to "law firms" as being subject to sanction for Rule 9011(b) violations. As law firms can only act through the humans that comprise them, these references to "law firms" can only mean that law firms are subject to sanction under Rule 9011(c)(1)(B) if their partners, associates, or employees are found to have violated Rule 9011(b). See In re Rivera, 342 B.R. at 463 (holding law firm and attorney jointly liable for lawyer's Rule 9011 violation).

In addition, while Rule 9011(c)(1)(A) expressly states that "[a]bsent exceptional circumstances, a law firm shall be held jointly responsible for violations committed by its partners, associates, and employees," that does not mean law firms may only be sanctioned when a party moves under Rule 9011(c)(1)(A). There is no logical reason for such a distinction; just because law firms are expressly sanctionable under Rule 9011(c)(1)(A) does not mean they are not sanctionable under Rule 9011(c)(1)(B). After all, the statement in Rule 9011(c)(1)(A) lays out a default – law firms are to be sanctioned for violations committed by their partners, associates, and employees "absent extraordinary circumstances." If sanctioning law firms is the rule, then it is no less the rule when sanctions are initiated by the court rather than a party.[15]

The bankruptcy court below found that Mr. Fitzgibbon and Ms. Doyle had both committed Rule 9011(b) violations. As Rule 9011 provides for the sanction of a law firm whose attorney commits a Rule 9011(b) violation, the bankruptcy court did not err in imposing a sanction on the Udren Firm.

Although the bankruptcy court's April 15, 2009, sanction order named Mr. Udren and [15] In Rule 11, the language regarding law firms being jointly responsible is located in the "general" section of Rule 11(c)(1), which corresponds to the introductory, unnumbered paragraph of Rule 9011(c). When Rule 9011 was amended in 1997 to conform with the 1993 amendments to Rule 11, however, this language was inserted into Rule 9011(c)(1)(A) – which is actually the equivalent of Rule 11(c)(2). It would appear that the language was simply inserted into the wrong paragraph; as the 1997 amendments were intended to bring Rule 9011 in line with Rule 11, the language should have been inserted into the introductory paragraph to Rule 9011(c). See 1997 Advisory Committee Note to Rule 9011 ("This rule is amended to conform to the 1993 changes to [Rule] 11.").

Ms. Doyle, rather than the Udren Firm itself, in imposing the sanction to learn about NewTrak and teach about the escalation procedure and Rule 9011 due diligence, this is simply because the bankruptcy court imposed an educational "sanction" that must of necessity must be imposed on an individual rather than an entity. Had the bankruptcy court imposed a monetary sanction, it could have been separately imposed against the Udren Firm's coffers, which are distinct from the personal accounts of Mr. Udren and Ms. Doyle. A non-monetary educational sanction, on the other hand, must necessarily be imposed not on the artificial entity "the Udren Firm" but on the persons responsible for the firm's bankruptcy practice – namely, Mr. Udren (its president and 100% shareholder) and Ms. Doyle (its managing attorney). Thus, the bankruptcy court's naming of Mr. Udren in the April 15, 2009, order is best viewed as a sanction against the Udren Firm, not against Mr. Udren personally.

B. The Sanction Imposed by the Bankruptcy Court Was Reasonable

As with the sanction imposed on Ms. Doyle, the bankruptcy court only directed the Udren Firm to engage in education. Although it is unclear in any case why the Udren Firm would resist an opportunity to correct practices that have led to erroneous filings, they cannot demonstrate that such a remedy is inappropriate or burdensome. Cf. U.S. Nat'l Bank Ass'n v. Sullivan-Moore, 406 F.3d 465, 471-72 (7th Cir. 2005) (finding "nothing excessive or unduly burdensome" with ordering law firm attorneys to attend 16-hour course in civil procedure where firm attorney had violated Rule 11 in foreclosure proceedings).

As the bankruptcy court decided not to impose a monetary sanction on the Udren Firm, an imaginative nonmonetary sanction was required.[16] A sanction against the firm in addition to

[16] Although the Appellants' Brief at 26 n.8 states that the Udren Firm has arranged for training on NewTrak, there is no suggestion that the Udren Firm has also scheduled internal education

Ms. Doyle was necessary because, given the internal and external forces on Udren Firm attorneys to process documents quickly, imposing a sanction only against Ms. Doyle will not ensure that other Udren Firm attorneys comply with Rule 9011 in the future. See 1993 Advisory Committee Note to Rule 11 (an inquiry regarding sanctioning a law firm in addition to an individual attorney "may be appropriate in cases involving . . . institutional parties that frequently impose substantial restrictions on the discretion of individual attorneys employed by it"). Similarly, a mere reprimand would do nothing in the face of the internal and external pressure to cut corners so as to file pleadings faster than the competition.

Given the Udren Firm's "speed" culture, which led to Mr. Fitzgibbon's and Ms. Doyle's Rule 9011 violations, the educational sanction arrived at by the bankruptcy court is the mildest sanction likely to get the Udren Firm's attorneys to ensure that their pre-filing inquiries and subsequent advocacy of documents filed with the court in future cases do not run afoul of Rule 9011. And, education regarding Rule 9011 appears to be sorely needed at the Udren Firm. Even with their decades of experience, Ms. Doyle and Mr. Udren see nothing wrong with cutting ethical corners by filing documents without doing any more of an inquiry than simply ensuring that the numbers on the page equal the numbers on a screen displaying data input by an unknown source. While the Udren Firm's desire to process documents quickly may be understandable, when the end result of these documents is to remove a family from its home it is not too much to ask creditors and their counsel to turn sharp corners.

As the bankruptcy court's sanction against the Udren Firm is consistent with the regarding HSBC's escalation procedure and the due diligence requirements of Rule 9011 – which is actually more important than the bankruptcy court's direction that Mr. Udren familiarize himself with the workings of NewTrak.

nonmonetary sanctions contemplated by Rule 9011, it was not an abuse of discretion, and should be affirmed.

CONCLUSION

For these reasons, the Acting United States Trustee respectfully asks this Court to affirm the bankruptcy court's order.

STATEMENT OF BASIS OF APPELLATE JURISDICTION

The bankruptcy court had jurisdiction over this chapter 13 proceeding under 28 U.S.C. § 157(a). The district court had appellate jurisdiction over the bankruptcy court's final order imposing sanctions pursuant to Fed. R. Bankr. P. 9011 as to appellants Mark J. Udren, Lorraine Doyle, and the Udren Law Offices, P.C. (collectively, "Udren" or the "Udren Firm") under 28 U.S.C. § 158(a)(1). The district court lacked appellate jurisdiction over the bankruptcy court's order as to HSBC Mortgage Corporation (USA) ("HSBC"). HSBC did not file a notice of appeal of the bankruptcy court's decision and was not otherwise a party to the appeal filed by Mr. Udren, Ms. Doyle, and the Udren Firm.

The United States Trustee timely filed a notice of appeal from the district court's order on April 19, 2010. This Court has jurisdiction over the district court's final order under 28 U.S.C. § 158(d).

STATEMENT OF ISSUES

1. Did the district court err when it reversed the bankruptcy court's order imposing sanctions and remedial relief against the Udren Firm, Mr. Udren, and Ms. Doyle?

2. Did the district court exceed its appellate jurisdiction when it reversed the bankruptcy court's order as to HSBC, notwithstanding HSBC's failure to file a notice of appeal from the order of the bankruptcy court?

STATEMENT OF RELATED CASES

The United States Trustee is aware of no proceedings or cases on appeal before this Court that are related to this case.

STATEMENT OF THE STANDARD OF REVIEW

This Court reviews the legal findings of the bankruptcy court de novo, and reviews the factual findings of the bankruptcy court for clear error. Fellheimer, Eichen & Braverman P.C. v. Charter Techs., Inc., 57 F.3d 1215, 1223 (3d Cir. 1995). Under the clearly erroneous standard, the bankruptcy court's findings may be set aside only if they are either "completely devoid of evidentiary support" or "bear[] no rational relationship to the supportive evidentiary data." Id.

A trial court's decision to impose sanctions is reviewed for abuse of discretion. See Cooter & Gell v. Hartmarx Corp., 496 U.S. 384, 404 (1990) (holding that "an appellate court should apply an abuse-of-discretion standard in reviewing all aspects" of a trial court's sanctions decision); In re Gioioso, 979 F.2d 956, 961 (3d Cir. 1991) (holding that sanctioning court is vested with "considerable discretion" in choosing what sanction to impose) (internal citations omitted); Travelers Ins. Co. v. St. Jude Hosp. of Kenner, La., Inc., 38 F.3d 1414, 1417 (5th Cir. 1994) ("In sum, in reviewing the imposition of sanctions, we do not substitute our judgment for that of the district court in enforcing acceptable standards of conduct."), citing Topalian v. Ehrman, 3 F.3d 931, 935 (5th Cir.1993); see also Evans v. Buchanan, 555 F.2d 373, 378-79 (3d Cir. 1997) (noting that an "improper use of discretion exists only when the judicial action is arbitrary, fanciful, or unreasonable or when improper standards, criteria, or procedures are used . . .our task on review is not to substitute the remedy we could have imposed[.]"). Because this is the same standard of review that the district court was required to apply in itsreview of the bankruptcy court's order, this Court's standard of review over the district court's ruling is plenary. In re Goody's Family Clothing Inc., 610 F.3d 812, 816 (3d Cir. 2010).

STATEMENT OF THE CASE

A. Statutory Framework

1. The proof of claim process

In bankruptcy cases, a creditor typically establishes its rights against the debtor by filing a document known as a proof of claim. Fed. R. Bankr. P. 3001(d); Official Form 10. By rule, the proof of claim must include a statement of the amount of the claim, the nature of the claim, and, if the claim is secured, a description of the property securing the claim. Official Form 10. In addition, when the claim is based on a writing, the proof of claim must attach documentation for the claim, including evidence that any lien securing the claim has been perfected. Fed. R. Bankr. P. 3001(c), (d).

The bankruptcy system relies on creditors themselves, in the first instance, to ensure the accuracy of their own claims. In particular, under the Bankruptcy Code, a properly filed proof of claim is presumptively deemed valid in the amount stated, and such a claim may be automatically allowed unless the debtor or another party objects. 11 U.S.C. § 502(a); see also Fed. R. Bankr. P. 3007. For this reason, Rule 9011 requires that a party filing a proof of claim must make a good faith investigation into the claim's validity and accuracy before submitting the claim. See Adair v. Sherman, 230 F.3d 890, 895 n.8 (7th Cir. 2000) (noting that party filing proof of claim that lacked evidentiary support could be sanctioned under Rule 9011).

2. The bankruptcy automatic stay

Once a bankruptcy case commences, a secured lender is initially precluded from foreclosing on its collateral by section 362 of the Bankruptcy Code, which imposes an "automatic stay" of most debt collection activities. 11 U.S.C. § 362(a). The creditor may, however, file a motion requesting that the court modify the stay "for cause" in order to permit it to commence or continue foreclosure proceedings. 11 U.S.C. § 362(d)(1). Such "cause" may include, among other things, a debtor's failure to make required payments on the secured debt during the period after the bankruptcy filing. See In re Johnson, 196 F. App'x 112, 115 (3rd Cir. 2006).

3. Sanctions under Bankruptcy Rule 9011

This is an appeal of a bankruptcy court order imposing non-monetary sanctions under Rule 9011 of the Federal Rules of Bankruptcy Procedure. Rule 9011 is the bankruptcy analog to Federal Rule of Civil Procedure 11. In re Schaefer Salt Recovery, Inc., 542 F.3d 90, 97 (3d Cir. 2008) ("Rule 9011 [is] in most respects a twin of Rule 11 tweaked for the bankruptcy setting."). Under Rule 9011(b), an attorney or unrepresented party who signs or advocates a pleading before the court "is certifying that to the best of the person's knowledge, information, and belief, formed after an inquiry reasonable under the circumstances, . . . the allegations and other factual contentions have evidentiary support or, if specifically so identified, are likely to have evidentiary support after a reasonable opportunity for further investigation or discovery." Fed. R. Bankr. P. 9011(b)(3) (emphasis added).

When a court determines that Rule 9011(b) has been violated, it may impose an "appropriate sanction" on the attorneys, law firms, or parties that violated that section, or who are "responsible for the violation." Fed. R. Bankr. P. 9011(c). Such a sanction "shall be limited to what is sufficient to deter repetition of such conduct or comparable conduct by others similarly situated," and may take the form of, among other things, "directives of a nonmonetary nature." Fed. R. Bankr. P. 9011(c)(2).

B. Course of Proceedings and Disposition Below

This appeal arises out of an order issued by the bankruptcy court on June 9, 2008, directed to HSBC and its attorneys, following the bankruptcy court's determination that HSBC had engaged in questionable practices in a bankruptcy case in connection with its filing of an erroneous proof of claim and a factually inaccurate motion for relief from the automatic stay. (App. 96). Following four lengthy evidentiary hearings, the bankruptcy court issued a decision finding violations of Rule 9011 by HSBC and certain of its attorneys, and exercised its discretion to impose modest non-monetary sanctions against HSBC, the Udren Firm, and two senior Udren attorneys, Mr. Udren and Ms. Doyle. (App. 181). The Udren Firm and its attorneys, but not HSBC, appealed the bankruptcy court's order to the district court. (App. 240). Notwithstanding HSBC's failure to file a notice of appeal, on February 18, 2010, the district court reversed as to all parties. (App. 15). On April 19, 2010, the United States, which defended the bankruptcy court's order before the district court, filed a timely notice of appeal to this Court. (App. 16).

STATEMENT OF THE FACTS

A. HSBC files an erroneous proof of claim in the Taylor bankruptcy case.

On September 16, 2007, Niles and Angela Taylor filed a voluntary petition for relief under chapter 13 of the Bankruptcy Code. (App. 58). In schedules accompanying the petition the Taylors listed HSBC as a creditor holding a mortgage on their personal residence.

On October 9, 2007, HSBC filed its proof of claim. (App. 242). HSBC delegated the task of drafting its proof of claim to the law firm of Moss Codilis, LLP, which serves as HSBC's national claims agent, and which prepared the claim based on information retrieved from HSBC's computerized mortgage servicing database. Jul. 23, 2008 Tr. at 134 (testimony of Maria Borresen, Compliance Director of Moss Codilis) (App. 138). That proof of claim was not, however, reviewed by any employee of HSBC prior to filing. Id. at 69 (testimony of Kimberley Graves, HSBC's Vice President in charge of bankruptcy) (App. 125). As it later turned out, that initial proof of claim contained several errors: the amount of the Taylors' monthly payment was incorrectly stated, a copy of the wrong mortgage note was attached as an exhibit, and the value of the Taylors' home was understated by approximately $100,000. Id. at 144 (testimony of Ms. Borresen) (App. 140). See also Claims Register for Case No. 07-15385, Claim 8-3 (amended proof of claim by HSBC correcting errors) (App. 257).

At the time of the Taylors' bankruptcy filing, the administration of the Taylors' loan was further complicated by the existence of an ongoing payment dispute between the Taylors and HSBC. Prior to the Taylors' bankruptcy, HSBC determined that the Taylors were required to carry flood insurance, and accordingly force-placed a flood insurance policy on the Taylors' property. The premiums for that insurance were added to the Taylors' payment obligation. The Taylors disputed that any flood insurance was necessary, and began withholding an amount equal to their flood insurance premium from their monthly payments. May 1, 2008 Tr. at 15 (testimony of Ms. Taylor) (App. 105).

B. The Udren Firm files inaccurate pleadings and makes misleading representations to the court in the course of its representation of HSBC.

As a result of the flood insurance dispute and the payment discrepancy, by January, 2008, HSBC's internal records indicated that the Taylors were delinquent on their mortgage. Following its standard procedures, HSBC then retained the Udren Firm to seek relief from the automatic stay. Dec. 17, 2008 Tr. at 6 (testimony of Ms. Doyle) (App. 164). The Udren Firm is one of the law firms used by HSBC for cases filed in the Eastern District of Pennsylvania. Oct. 23, 2008 Tr.

at 93 (testimony of Mr. Udren) (App. 155). Mr. Udren is the sole shareholder of the Udren Firm, which employs approximately ten attorneys and more than one hundred paralegals. Id. at 95 (App. 157). Ms. Doyle is a managing attorney at the Udren Firm with more than twenty-seven years of experience as a lawyer. Dec. 17, 2008 Tr. at 5-6 (App. 163-64).

Notably, virtually all of the communications between the Udren Firm and its client relevant to the Taylor case were conducted through a computerized intermediary, NewTrak. NewTrak, which was described at trial as a "communication tool," is a computer program designed and maintained by a third-party contractor, Lender Processing Services ("LPS"), which manages much of the day-to-day administration of HSBC's mortgage portfolio.[1] Jul. 23, 2008 Tr. at 171 (testimony of Ms. Graves) (App. 141). Among other functions, NewTrak automatically selected the Udren Firm as HSBC's counsel in the Taylor case, and automatically generated a set of instructions and background information on the basis of which the Udren Firm was directed to prepare the motion for relief from stay. Id. at 73-74, 78 (App. 129-30, 134). Both the selection of counsel and the generation of the instructions were performed by NewTrak without any direct human involvement or oversight. Id. at 76-77 (App. 132-33).

According to Mr. Udren, the Udren Firm relies "dramatically" on NewTrak, without which the firm would be unable to practice at its current fee levels. Oct. 23, 2008 Tr. at 91 (App. 153) (testimony of Mr. Udren). Despite its alleged importance to his firm, however, Mr. Udren is not familiar with how NewTrak works, as it is "beyond [his] capabilities." Id. at 127 (App. 162).

The Udren Firm does not enjoy full access to HSBC's mortgage servicing database. Instead, the background information transmitted to the Udren Firm by NewTrak is limited to the "minimal information that [the Udren Firm] would need." Jul. 23, 2008 Tr. at 78 (testimony of Ms. Graves) (App. 134). This information was compiled and transmitted by NewTrak along with the referral, and was limited to a statement of the loan number, mortgagor's name and address, payment amounts, late fees, and amounts past due. Id.

1. Ms. Doyle files a factually inaccurate motion for relief from stay and set of requests for admission.

On January 15, 2008, Ms. Doyle entered her appearance as counsel for HSBC. (App. 64). On that same date, Ms. Doyle filed a motion for relief from the automatic stay seeking to foreclose on the Taylors' residence. (App. 65). Among other things, that motion recited that the Taylors had "fail[ed] to make . . .

post-petition monthly payments and late charges" for the dates "11/1/2007 through 1/15/2008," and further stated that "[d]ebtor(s) has/have inconsequential or no equity in the premises." Id. Ms. Doyle's motion stated that the amount of the Taylors' monthly payment was $1,455.83, an amount that was higher than the erroneous monthly payment listed on the proof of claim. (App. 66). Finally, the motion alleged, in the alternative, that the Taylors were in default on their other payments under their chapter 13 plan.[2] Id. The motion did not discuss or mention the ongoing flood insurance dispute.

According to the testimony of David Fitzgibbon, the Udren Firm associate who handled the Taylor case on behalf of HSBC, the motion for relief from stay was actually prepared by non-attorney employees of the Udren Firm, who relied exclusively on the limited information furnished through NewTrak. Aug. 8, 2008 Tr. at 36, 104, 120-21 (App. 147, 149-51). For her part, Ms. Doyle testified that she did nothing to verify the Taylors' payment history before signing and filing the motion for relief from stay, as her practice is to "rely on the allegations supplied by my client or on behalf of my client." Dec. 17, 2008 Tr. at 30. (App. 168). Instead,

[2] The Taylors' chapter 13 plan proposed that they would pay $541.48 per month for sixty months in satisfaction of the claims of unsecured creditors. (App. 61). These payments were to be collected and disbursed by the chapter 13 trustee, an individual appointed by the United States Trustee to administer chapter 13 estates in the Eastern District of Pennsylvania. 11 U.S.C. § 1302.

she merely reviewed hard copies of the "screen prints" provided through NewTrak. Id. at 7-9, 31 (App. 165-67, 169).

Ms. Doyle acknowledged that she neither accessed NewTrak nor contacted HSBC to verify the accuracy of the information contained in the "screen prints." Id. at 39, 50 (App. 171, 174). Indeed, Ms. Doyle did not know who had put the information onto NewTrak; she "presume[d] it was somebody from [LPS]," HSBC's contractor, and not HSBC, and she simply assumed that the information had been supplied to LPS by HSBC. Id. at 31, 40-41 (App. 169, 172-73). In addition, despite the explicit statement in the motion for relief from stay regarding the Taylors' alleged lack of equity in their home, Ms. Doyle testified that she made absolutely no inquiry into the veracity of that factual allegation. Id. at 39-39 (App. 170-71).

At the same time that the Udren Firm filed its motion for relief from stay on behalf of HSBC, it served the Taylors with a set of requests for admission pursuant to Fed. R. Bankr. P. 7036. (App. 68). The requests for admission mirrored the allegations of the motion, and requested that the Taylors admit that they had made no monthly mortgage payments from November 2007 until January 2008, that they had made no payments under the chapter 13 plan, and that they had no equity in their home. Id.

The principal factual allegations of the motion and the requests for admission were incorrect. As the documentation submitted by the Taylors would reveal, and as HSBC's amended proof of claim would eventually acknowledge, the Taylors had tendered checks to HSBC for every month from October, 2007 through January, 2008, although in an amount that excluded the disputed flood insurance premium. (App. 79). Each of these checks had been cashed by HSBC. Id. In addition, testimony at trial would confirm that the Taylors were current on their other payments under their chapter 13 plan. See May 1, 2008 Tr. at 46 (Court: "And [Ms. Taylor]'s making current payments?" Chapter 13 Trustee's Counsel: "She is, Your Honor.") (App. 113). Lastly, as noted, the claim that the Taylors lacked equity in their home was also incorrect. See Claims Register for Case No. 07-15385, Claim 8-3 (amended proof of claim acknowledging $190,000 as value of the Taylors' home) (App. 257).

On February 4, 2008, the Taylors filed a response to the motion for relief from stay in which they specifically disputed the allegation that they had failed to make payment to HSBC. (App. 70). In an amended pleading, the Taylors documented their contentions by submitting copies of six checks they had tendered to HSBC during the period they had allegedly failed to make payment, four of which HSBC had already cashed. (App. 79).

2. Ms. Doyle files an inaccurate response to the Taylors' objection to the proof of claim, again without performing any investigation.

On March 17, 2008, the Taylors filed an objection to HSBC's proof of claim. (App. 74). Among other contentions, the Taylors stated that the monthly mortgage payment was inaccurate because HSBC was improperly charging them for flood insurance. Id. According to the Taylors, the $178.71 difference between the $1,277.12 monthly payment by the Taylors and the $1,455.83 per month sought by HSBC was attributable to the dispute over the necessity of flood insurance. Id. The Taylors did not , however, reply to the requests for admission, apparently because of their counsel's erroneous belief that their objection to the motion for relief from stay made such a response unnecessary.

On March 27, 2008, the Udren Firm, through Ms. Doyle, filed a response to the claim objection. (App. 96). Although the Taylors' pleading had made clear that the flood insurance issue was the principal point of contention, the Udren Firm's response did not address that topic at all, but instead contained only a boilerplate statement that "[a]ll figures contained in the proof of claim accurately reflect actual sums expended or costs incurred by Mortgagee prior the date of Debtors' bankruptcy filing and/or charges to which Mortgagee is contractually entitled and which the Debtors are contractually obligated to pay." Id. That statement was inaccurate because the HSBC proof of claim set forth an incorrect monthly payment, which also differed from the higher payment amount the Udren Firm claimed was due in the motion for relief from stay. Jul. 23, 2008 Tr. at 144 (testimony of Ms. Borresen) (App. 140).

As with the earlier motion for relief from stay, Ms. Doyle testified that she made no inquiry beyond reviewing the information received through NewTrak because that information "seemed accurate." Dec. 17, 2008 Tr. at 55, 57 (App. 175, 177). Ms. Doyle presumed that the information on NewTrak had originated with HSBC and not LPS, but she did not know and had not sought to verify the information because she "had no reason to disbelieve" it. Id. at 56-57, 61 (App. 176-77, 180).

3. The Udren Firm advocates the motion for relief from stay based on "admissions" that it knows to be untrue.

On May 1, 2008, the bankruptcy court held a hearing with respect to the motion for relief as well as the Taylors' objection to HSBC's proof of claim. (App. 100). Representing HSBC at that hearing was Mr. Fitzgibbon, a recent law school graduate who had been employed by the Udren Firm for less than six months. Aug. 8, 2008 Tr. at 26-27 (testimony of Mr. Fitzgibbon) (App. 144-145). At the hearing, Mr. Fitzgibbon acknowledged that at the time the motion for relief from stay was filed, HSBC had already received a mortgage payment for November, 2007.[3] This was contrary to the assertion in the motion for relief from stay that HSBC had not received post-petition monthly mortgage payments for November 2007 through January 2008. While there was a legitimate dispute between the parties as to the appropriate amount for the mortgage payments, the representation in the motion for relief that the Taylors had made no payment in November 2007 was not correct.

Although he acknowledged the existence of the payments received since November, Mr. Fitzgibbon nevertheless urged the bankruptcy court to grant the motion for relief from stay, based on the Taylors' failure to file a separate response to the admittedly erroneous requests for admission. May 1, 2008 Tr. at 9 (App. 102). The bankruptcy court rejected this argument, observing that the requests for admission were "not accurate" as of the date of the May 1 hearing, yet "[the Udren Firm] had that evidence in your possession and you went ahead like you never saw it." Id. at 35-36, 41 (App. 106-07, 109). As a result, the bankruptcy court denied the motion for relief from stay as "questionably in bad faith." Id. at 41, 45 (App.

[3] According to Mr. Fitzgibbon, because the amounts paid by the Taylors did not include payment for a disputed flood insurance premium, they were "put in suspense." Upon receipt of the November 2007 payment, HSBC allocated a portion of that payment to make up for the alleged October shortfall between the $1,277.12 payment sent by the Taylors and the $1,445.83 claimed due by HSBC. May 1, 2008 Tr. at 7 (App. 100). None of this was explained in the motion for relief from stay or in the requests for admission.

108, 112). In addition, the bankruptcy court directed Mr. Fitzgibbon to "pass it up the line that I was not pleased with this motion for relief," but that the court was "cutting them a break this time." Id. at 45 (App. 112).

4. Mr. Fitzgibbon states his mistaken belief that he is prohibited from communicating with HSBC directly.

Following the May 1, 2008 hearing, the bankruptcy court directed the Udren Firm to obtain an accounting from HSBC of its handling of the Taylors' prepetition payments to determine the correct amount of the Taylors' arrearage. Id. at 43-45 (App. 110-112)

At the next hearing before the bankruptcy court, on June 5, 2008, Mr. Fitzgibbon stated that he had requested an accounting, but that HSBC had not yet provided it. Jun. 5, 2008 Tr. at 5 (App. 114). When pressed for an explanation, Mr. Fitzgibbon informed the court that he had placed "numerous requests" for accountings via NewTrak, but had yet to receive any response. Id. at 8 (App. 117). Mr. Fitzgibbon further explained that he had no ability to communicate with HSBC except through NewTrak. Id. at 8-9. (App. 117-18).[4] [4] THE COURT: Well, you can't get – you can't even – you – all you can do is open up a computer. You can't even speak to anybody you're telling me.

MR. FITZGIBBON: Yes.

THE COURT: There's nobody that will return your call.

Mr. Fitzgibbon's belief that no direct communication was possible appears to have been mistaken. According to the testimony of Ms. Graves, an "escalation matrix" exists that would permit outside counsel to bypass NewTrak and communicate directly with higher-level HSBC employees. Jul. 23, 2008 Tr. at 114-15 (App. 135-36). There was no evidence that such a procedure was ever made known to Mr. Fitzgibbon, however, and the bankruptcy court found Mr. Fitzgibbon to be credible when he stated that he believed that NewTrak was his only permissible means of communication. (App. 198).

C. The bankruptcy court holds an evidentiary hearing and orders non-monetary sanctions against HSBC, the Udren Firm, Mr. Udren and Ms. Doyle.

On June 9, 2008, the bankruptcy court entered an order directing, among other persons, Mr. Fitzgibbon, Ms. Doyle, and Mr. Udren to appear and provide testimony regarding whether sanctions should be imposed given the "questionable practices" identified at the May 1 and June 5 hearings. (App. 96). These questionable practices included "pressing a relief motion on admissions that were known to be untrue, and signing and filing pleadings without knowledge or inquiry regarding the matters pled therein." Id. n.1. The bankruptcy court further stated that a purpose of the hearings was "to investigate the practices employed in this case by HSBC and its attorneys and agents and consider whether sanctions should issue against HSBC, its attorneys and agents." Id. n.5 (emphasis added).

As the bankruptcy court made clear at the outset of the hearing, a principal focus of its inquiry was the "Rule 11 obligation" and the question of whether HSBC's attorneys had engaged in sanctionable conduct by their failure to conduct a "due inquiry" when filing their pleadings. Jul. 23, 2008 Tr. at 8-9 (App. 120-21). The bankruptcy court further explained that it was "not trying to elicit whether [the Udren Firm was] correct in [the] motion for relief or correct in [the] objection to claim," but that it was "trying to elicit . . . [what] creditors do in preparation for filing these motions." Aug. 8, 2008 Tr. at 35 (App. 146) (emphasis added).

The investigation took place over four evidentiary hearings at which a number of witnesses from HSBC, Moss Codilis, and the Udren Firm testified. (App. 120, 144, 152, 163). The testimony concerned both the automated process generally used by HSBC and its agents in pursuing claims as a mortgage servicer as well as the specific problems with the filings in the Taylor case.

Based on the evidence received at the four hearings, the bankruptcy court ordered non-monetary sanctions against HSBC, the Udren Firm, Mr. Udren, and

Ms. Doyle. (App. 181). The bankruptcy court based these sanctions on its finding that "certain practices and procedures employed by HSBC, its agents and attorneys . . . have created an environment where Rule 9011 duties have been subordinated to efficiency and cost-savings so as to require sanctions." (App. 183).

The bankruptcy court found that Mr. Fitzgibbon violated Rule 9011 by advocating the motion for relief from stay "on admissions he knew to be then untrue." (App. 231). The bankruptcy court also found that Ms. Doyle had violated Rule 9011 because she had "failed to observe her duty to make reasonable inquiry" regarding the motion for relief from stay and the response to the claim objection. (App. 230-31). The bankruptcy court also found that "the Udren Firm . . . is jointly responsible with [its attorneys] Doyle and Fitzgibbon for these breaches." (App. 232).

The bankruptcy court did not impose a sanction upon Mr. Fitzgibbon because he was a young and inexperienced lawyer when he committed his Rule 9011 violation. Id. The bankruptcy court found Ms. Doyle, however, to "be so enmeshed in the assembly line of managing the bankruptcy department's volume mortgage lender practice that she has lost sight of her duty to the court and has compromised her ethical obligations." Id. As a result, the bankruptcy court held that Ms. Doyle must take three continuing legal education ("CLE") credits in professional responsibility and ethics over and above any general continuing legal education obligation she already has. Id.

As for the Udren Firm and Mr. Udren, "since policy emanates from the top" the bankruptcy court held that (i) Mr. Udren, who "sets the tone and establishes [the Udren Firm's] culture," must obtain training in NewTrak, (ii) Mr. Udren must spend one day observing his employees as they handle NewTrak referrals, and (iii) Mr. Udren and Ms. Doyle must "conduct a training session for all members of the [Udren Firm's] bankruptcy department in the appropriate use of [HSBC's] escalation procedure and the requirements of Rule 9011 with respect to pre-filing due diligence." (App. 232-33).

The bankruptcy court also found the Udren Firm "jointly responsible with Doyle and Fitzgibbon for these breaches." (App. 232). However, the court found that because "[t]he Udren Firm has incurred the cost of retaining counsel who has appeared and filed written memoranda on its behalf [and] its attorneys and paraprofessionals have lost valuable time in connection with the hearings and depositions conducted in furtherance of these proceedings" the court considered these costs adequate penalties. Id.

The bankruptcy court ordered HSBC to send a copy of the court's opinion to all the law firms it uses in bankruptcy proceedings together with a letter setting forth HSBC's escalation policy and assuring the law firms "that use of direct contact by a firm with HSBC would not reflect adversely on the firm." (App. 235). Finally, the bankruptcy court found that sanctions were not warranted against LPS of Moss Codilis based on the existing record.[5] (App. 234).

Ms. Doyle, Mr. Udren, and the Udren Firm filed a timely notice of appeal of the bankruptcy court's order on April 27, 2009. (App. 240). HSBC did not appeal the bankruptcy court's order.

D. The district court reverses the sanctions order as to the appellants and HSBC.

On February 18, 2010, the United States District Court for the Eastern District of Pennsylvania issued an order reversing the order of the bankruptcy court. The district court held that the bankruptcy court had abused its discretion in ordering sanctions against Ms. Doyle, Mr. Udren, and the Udren Firm. (App. 15). The district court's decision rested on two principal grounds. First, because the district court concluded that the Taylors' attorney was "at least equally at fault" for the delay in resolving the payment dispute, sanctions against HSBC and its attorneys were inappropriate. Second, the district court criticized the bankruptcy court for using a Rule 9011 sanction to "send a message" to other similarly situated law firms and lenders. Finally, with respect to Mr. Udren individually, the district court concluded that Rule 9011 was inapplicable because Mr. Udren did not personally sign any pleading in the case. (App. 11). The district court also reversed the sanctions ordered against HSBC, on the grounds that the requirement that it disseminate the bankruptcy court decision was "inextricably intertwined with the sanctions against the appellants and must be reversed as well." Id. On April 20, 2010, the United States Trustee filed a timely notice of appeal of the district court's order. (App. 16).

[5] The bankrupcy court declined to sanciton Moss Codilis based on its observation that the United States Trustee was engaged in an ongoing investigation of Moss Codilis's conduct, and that a sanction based on Moss Codilis's activities in the Taylor case would therefore be "premature on this record." (App. 234). Accordingly, the bankruptcy court "le[ft] the matter of Moss to the UST's contemplated further investigation." Id.

SUMMARY OF ARGUMENT

The bankruptcy court properly exercised its discretion by sanctioning the Udren Firm, Mr. Udren, and Ms. Doyle. At the behest of its client, HSBC, the Udren Firm and its attorneys adopted a series of procedures that effectively sacrificed accuracy and oversight in favor of speed and efficiency. In this case, however, that lack of oversight led to errors in the Udren Firm's pleadings and representations, causing needless delay and a waste of judicial resources over what should have been a routine and easily resolvable payment dispute. Neither the pursuit of efficiency nor the wishes of their client justifies the Udren Firm's and its senior attorneys' decision to abdicate their responsibilities to the court under Rule 9011.

The actual remedies imposed by the bankruptcy court, moreover, are exceptionally mild, and do little more than require that the Udren Firm and its senior attorneys take steps to ensure that they are mindful of their professional obligations in the future.   Given the clear record of multiple Rule 9011 violations by the Udren Firm, Mr. Udren and Ms. Doyle in this case, those sanctions are not excessive.

The bankruptcy court's sanctions should also be affirmed as to HSBC. Although those sanctions are, in any case, also well supported by the record, HSBC failed to appeal that order, and by reversing a sanctions order against a non-appellant, the district court exceeded its jurisdiction.

ARGUMENT

I. The district court erred when it reversed the bankruptcy court's order imposing sanctions and remedial relief against the Udren Firm, Mr. Udren, and Ms. Doyle.

A. The bankruptcy court's finding that the Udren Firm and its attorneys violated Rule 9011(b) was supported by the evidence at trial.

Pursuant to Rule 9011(b), every time an attorney files a paper in bankruptcy court that attorney is certifying that, to the best of his or her "knowledge, information and belief," the factual contentions in that filing "have evidentiary support or . . . are likely to have evidentiary support after a reasonable opportunity for further investigation or discovery." Fed. R. Bankr. P. 9011(b)(3). This knowledge, information, and belief must be based on "an inquiry reasonable under the circumstances." Fed. R. Bankr. P. 9011(b). The duty of inquiry is a "personal, nondelegable responsibility" of the signer. Garr v. U.S. Healthcare, Inc., 22 F.3d 1274, 1278 (3d Cir. 1994) (quoting Pavelic & LeFlore v. Marvel Entm't Gr., 493 U.S. 120, 127 (1989)).

It is the degree of inquiry that determines whether an attorney has violated Rule 9011(b). An attorney has not violated the rule where despite a reasonable inquiry, a factual contention is later determined to be incorrect. Garr, 22 F.3d. at 1279. Likewise, however, an attorney is not spared sanctions where they made no reasonable inquiry but "by the stroke of luck that the document happened to be justified." Id. (quoting Vista Mfg. v. Trac-4 Inc., 131 F.R.D. 134, 138 (N.D. Ind. 1990) ("A shot in the dark is a sanctionable event, even if it somehow hits the mark.")).

1. Rule 9011(b) authorizes courts to impose sanctions based on an objective, rather than subjective, standard of liability.

In this case, the uncontroverted evidence at trial demonstrates that the Udren Firm and its attorneys engaged in objectively unreasonable conduct by representing facts to the bankruptcy court that it did little or nothing to verify. No separate finding of bad faith was required because, as this Court consistently has held, the objective unreasonableness of the Udren Firm's conduct alone is sufficient to trigger Rule 9011 sanctions. See Fellheimer, 57 F.3d at 1225; Bradgate Assocs. v. Fellows, Read & Assocs., 999 F.2d 745, 753 (3d Cir. 1993) ("We have consistently noted that the Rule 11 test is now an objective one of reasonableness which seeks to discourage pleadings without factual foundation, even though the paper was not filed in subjective bad faith.") (internal quotations omitted).

The fact that sanctions were imposed as part of a proceeding issued by the bankruptcy court sua sponte, rather than on the motion of a party, does not alter this standard. As a majority of circuits have concluded, the plain language of Rule 9011 dictates an objective standard of liability, even in circumstances where the offending party has no practical ability to withdraw the pleading. See Young v. City of Providence ex rel. Napolitano, 404 F.3d 33, 39-40 (1st Cir. 2005) (noting that "a specific purpose of the 1993 revision of Rule 11 was to reject . . . a bad faith requirement" and applying objective standard to court-initiated sanctions proceeding); see also Jenkins v. Methodist Hospitals of Dallas, Inc., 478 F.3d 255, 264 (5th Cir. 2007) (same).

In so ruling, the First and Fifth Circuits rejected a contrary ruling from the Second Circuit, which imposed a subjective standard of liability in a case where the attorney violating Rule 11 was not given a safe harbor within which to withdraw the pleading. In re Pennie & Edmonds LLP, 323 F.3d 86 (2d Cir. 2003). Pennie, which was decided over a sharp dissent, has not been adopted by any other circuit, and this Court should reject its holding for the same reasons as did the First and Fifth Circuits. In particular, as the Pennie dissent noted, the Pennie majority impermissibly imported a procedural distinction from Rule 11(c) (equivalent to Bankruptcy Rule 9011(c)), which addresses how sanctions may be initiated, into Rule 11(b), which deals with the separate question of whether sanctionable conduct has occurred. Pennie, 323 F.3d at 94. As both the First and Fifth Circuits have observed, the Pennie majority created a substantive exception to Rule 11(b) that has no basis in the text of the rule and which contradicts its express purpose. See Jenkins, 478 F.3d at 264 (finding "[no] basis" for the Pennie's distinction between court-initiated and party-initiated sanctions); Young, 404 F.3d at 40 (finding that the holding of Pennie could not be reconciled with text or purpose of Rule 11). Accordingly, this Court should follow the First and Fifth circuits by applying an objective, rather than subjective, standard to the Rule 9011 sanctions in this case.

2. The bankruptcy court's finding that the Udren Firm and its attorneys acted in an objectively unreasonable manner is supported by the evidence.

The bankruptcy court's finding that the conduct of the Udren Firm and its attorneys was objectively unreasonable is not clearly erroneous. The bankruptcy court based this finding on three separate pleadings that were prepared based on an objectively inadequate factual investigation: the motion for relief from stay, the requests for admission, and the response to the claim objection. It also is undisputed that each of these pleadings was materially inaccurate. Both the motion for relief from stay and the requests for admission averred that the debtors had made no post-petition payments to HSBC, had no equity in their home, and had not made plan payments. The response to the claim objection was also inaccurate in that it claimed the monthly post-petition amount was accurate despite earlier filings by the Udren Firm setting forth a different amount.

a. Ms. Doyle.

A reasonable inquiry by Ms. Doyle would have uncovered the factual inaccuracies in her pleadings. Ms. Doyle's own testimony confirms that she conducted no meaningful inquiry into the accuracy of filings prior to filing them. By Ms. Doyle's own admission, her "inquiry" regarding the motion for relief from stay was limited to a review of the same NewTrak "screen prints" that an Udren Firm processor had used to draft the document, and she made no inquiry whatsoever as to facts underlying the response to the claim objection since it "seemed accurate." Dec. 17, 2008 Tr. at 7-9, 31, 57-58 (App. 165-68,175-77).

In fact, Ms. Doyle had no idea whether the information was accurate, or even whether HSBC or an agent acting on its behalf had put the information on NewTrak. Ms. Doyle served less as counsel and more as a proofreader. So long as the numbers inputted by staff at her firm matched what appeared on the screen they used to prepare the filing, she was satisfied. As the bankruptcy court explained:

> Doyle did not function as a lawyer but rather acted as a blind signatory who at best checked numbers. She signed off on her paralegal's preparation of a form motion and admissions and was prepared to press for relief from stay when, by Udren's own admission, the problem was a dispute over a $180 monthly shortfall in the payment amount due to the insurance premium dispute.

(App. 230).

b. Mr. Udren and the Udren Firm.

The bankruptcy court also did not err by imposing sanctions against Mr. Udren and the Udren Firm. The text of Rule 9011 and the advisory committee notes to Rule 11 make it clear that sanctions may be imposed on persons beyond the signer. Subdivision (c) provides that "the court may, subject to the conditions stated below, impose an appropriate sanction upon the attorneys, law firms, or parties that have violated subdivision (b) or are responsible for the violation." Fed. R. Bankr. P. 9011(c) (emphasis added). See also U.S. Bank Nat. Ass'n, N.D. v. Sullivan-Moore, 406 F.3d 465 (7th Cir. 2005) (imposing sanctions on law firm representing mortgagee in foreclosure proceeding). The 1993 advisory committee notes to Rule 11 state that "[t]he revision permits the court to consider whether other attorneys in the firm, co-counsel, other law firms, or the party itself should be held accountable for their part in causing a violation." Fed. R. Civ. P. 11 advisory comm. notes (1993) (emphasis added). The district court was wrong to reverse the sanctions against Mr. Udren simply because he did not sign the pleadings at issue.

The evidence at trial supports the bankruptcy court's conclusion that the errors in the Taylors' case were due not just to the personal mistakes of Mr. Fitzgibbon and Ms. Doyle, but to objectively unreasonable firm policies and a firm culture that fostered those errors. (App. 233) (attributing errors to "[t]he culture of the firm [Mr. Udren] has fostered [that] appears to value production over professionalism . . . ."). The testimony before the bankruptcy court revealed a firm that assembles pleadings according to a process resembling an assembly line, where junior attorneys are not trained in how to corroborate their pleadings, and where communications between attorney and client were at least implicitly discouraged. For this reason, the bankruptcy court did not err in finding a violation of Rule 9011 by the Udren Firm, as well as by Mr. Udren, who is ultimately responsible for his firm's culture and policies.

B. The alleged incompetence of the Taylors' attorney does not negate the Rule 9011 violations by the Udren Firm and its attorneys.

Although the district court placed great emphasis on what it perceived as the inadequate performance in the Taylors' bankruptcy counsel when it reversed the bankruptcy court's sanctions order, such fact is not relevant to the underlying question of whether the Udren Firm itself violated Rule 9011. The district court's determination that the Taylors' counsel was "equally at fault" for the errors in the Taylors' case is inconsistent with the facts of the case. At most, the Taylors' counsel erred by neglecting to respond to the requests for admission and by filing a pleading in response to the motion for relief from the stay which contained factual errors of its own. Both of these acts, however, occurred after two of the principal Rule 9011 violations of the Udren Firm and its attorneys– specifically, the filing of the erroneous motion and requests for admission– were already complete.

Nor is this a case where the sanctions should be reversed based on some theory of unclean hands. The remedies in this case were not requested by the Taylors, and do nothing to benefit the Taylors personally. Rather, the nonmonetary relief ordered against the Udren Firm and its attorneys is designed to protect the administration of justice in future cases. See Estate of Calloway v.

Marvel Entm't Gp., 9 F.3d 237, 241 (2d Cir. 1993) ("Rule 11 is not a fee-shifting mechanism and does not create an entitlement in adverse parties to compensatory damages or attorney's fees . . . [r]ather it is intended "to maintain the integrity of the system of federal practice or procedure"). As such, any question of the Taylors' conduct is not relevant to the issue of whether the sanctions against the Udren Firm was an abuse of discretion.

C. The nonmonetary nature of the sanctions imposed by the bankruptcy court was appropriate.

The type of sanctions a court may impose are "limited to what is sufficient to deter repetition of such conduct or comparable conduct by others similarly situated." Fed. R. Bankr. P. 9011(c)(2). Nonetheless, the sanctioning court has broad latitude in the type of sanctions it may impose. See Fed. R. Civ. P. 11 advisory comm. notes (1993) ("The court has significant discretion in determining what sanctions, if any, should be imposed.").

The sanctions imposed here were not particularly onerous: three hours of continuing legal education, a requirement that Mr. Udren spend a day familiarizing himself with his employees' day-to-day work, and a requirement that the firm as a whole undertake in-house training to prevent the recurrence of the errors in this case. It is well-established in this circuit that such remedies are an appropriate form of relief for Rule 9011 violations. See Balthazar v. Atlantic City Med. Ctr., 137 F. App'x 482, 490-91 (3d Cir. 2005) (affirming sanctions order that imposed compulsory legal education); Langer v. Monarch Life Ins. Co., 966 F.2d 786, 811 (3d Cir. 1992) ("What is "appropriate" may be a warm friendly discussion on the record, a hard-nosed reprimand in open court, compulsory legal education, monetary sanctions, or other measures appropriate to the circumstances.") (quoting Thomas v. Capital Security Svcs., Inc., 836 F.2d 866, 878 (5th Cir. 1988) (en banc) (emphasis added).

Furthermore, the bankruptcy court did not abuse its discretion by imposing a form of sanction that was intended, at least in part, to deter misconduct by other similarly-situated attorneys. As the text of Rule 9011 makes clear, sanctions may be imposed for, among other things, the purpose of "deter[ring] repetition of such conduct by others similarly situated." Fed. R. Bankr. P. 9011(c)(2). As this Court has observed, the public nature of a sanction against an attorney may serve an important public policy by educating other attorneys. See Gary v. Braddock Cemetery and Consol Energy, 334 F. App'x 465, 467 (3d Cir. 2009) (affirming reprimand as appropriate sanction under Rule 11 because it would "reverberate" within the legal community).

D. The bankruptcy court provided the appellants with ample notice before imposing sanctions.

Rule 9011(c) permits a court to impose sanctions only “after notice and a reasonable opportunity to respond.” Fed. R. Bank. P. 9011(c); see also Fellheimer, 57 F.3d at 1225 (“‘[P]rior to sanctioning an attorney, a court must provide the party to be sanctioned with notice of and some opportunity to respond to the charges’ in order to satisfy the requirements of due process.”) (quoting Jones v. Pittsburgh Nat’l Corp., 899 F.2d 1350, 1357 (3d Cir. 1990)). Subdivision (c)(1)(B) requires that, when the sanctions process is initiated by a court, the court must “enter an order describing the specific conduct that appears to violate and directing attorney, law firm, or party to show cause why it has not violated subdivision (b) with respect thereto.” Fed. R. Bankr. P. 9011(c)(1)(B).

The sum of the bankruptcy court’s statements before and during its four evidentiary hearings, as well as the court’s June 9, 2008 order, placed the Udren Firm and its attorneys on ample notice of the nature of the court’s inquiry and the specific conduct for which they might be held liable. In particular, at the June 5, 2008 hearing on the Taylors’ objection to the proof of claim the bankruptcy court informed Mr. Fitzgibbon that “I’m issuing an order to show cause on your firm, too, for filing these things with – without having any knowledge. And filing answers that – without any knowledge.” Jun. 5, 2008 Tr. at 22 (App. 119).

In its very next order, entered four days later on June 9, 2008, the bankruptcy court noted that "during the course of . . . hearings [on the motion for relief from stay and the objection to the proof of claim] certain questionable practices engaged in by attorneys and agents of HSBC were revealed." (App. 96). The bankruptcy court identified these practices as "includ[ing] pressing a relief motion on admissions that were known to be untrue, and signing and filing pleadings without knowledge or inquiry regarding the matters pled therein." Id. Finally, the bankruptcy court identified one of the purposes of the hearing was to "consider whether sanctions should issue against HSBC, its attorneys and agents." (App. 98).

The fact that the bankruptcy court did not specifically identify the pleadings at issue is also irrelevant. As of the June 9 order, the only filings the Udren Firm had made on behalf of HSBC were: a notice of appearance; the motion for relief; the requests for admission and a certification of no response to those requests; and the response to the Taylors' objection to the proof of claim. There was no need to be more specific because, apart from the non-substantive notice of appearance, every filing the Udren Firm made in the Taylors' case was at issue.

Although this order was not captioned an order to show cause and does not cite directly to Rule 9011, it follows closely on the heels of the bankruptcy court's stated intention of issuing such an order and closely tracks the language of Rule 9011 when it suggests that attorneys and agents of HSBC "sign[ed] and fil[ed] pleadings without knowledge or inquiry regarding the matters pled therein. (App. 96). It strains credulity for the appellees to argue that this order was not the order to show cause the bankruptcy court promised just four days earlier and it is difficult to believe that the attorneys at the Udren Firm were not on notice that the bankruptcy court was considering sanctions pursuant to Rule 9011.

Any lingering uncertainty of the appellees should certainly have been dispelled by the bankruptcy court's opening statement at the June 9, 2008 hearing (at which Ms. Doyle and Mr. Udren were present):

> [E]very Proof of Claim objection needs to be defended in good faith. We have a situation here where one person is filing the Proof of Claim, another one is defending. I have a question about access to client files, access to information, the communication and so forth.
> Related to that is the Rule 11 obligation; there must be a colorable basis for a claim after due inquiry. Again, that comes back to the reference to data and information, the review of filings that are made with the client, discovery duties.

Jul 23, 2008 Tr. at 8-9 (App. 120-21) (emphasis added).

In addition to adequate notice, the appellees had an adequate opportunity to be heard. The bankruptcy court conducted four evidentiary hearings on possible sanctions against HSBC and its attorneys and agents. Members of the Udren Firm testified at three of these hearings. Particularly in light of the minimal sanctions ultimately imposed, a CLE course and a day spent observing and training employees, such notice and opportunity to be heard more than satisfied the procedural rights of the appellees.

II. The district court lacked jurisdiction to reverse the bankruptcy court's decision to impose sanctions against HSBC.

HSBC did not join in Ms. Doyle and Mr. Udren's appeal of the bankruptcy court's decision and did not file a separate notice of appeal. Nonetheless, the district court found that the sanctions ordered against HSBC were "inextricably intertwined" with the sanctions ordered against Ms. Doyle, Mr. Udren and the Udren Firm, and reversed the order as to HSBC. (App. 15). The district court did not, however, discuss any evidence or make any findings in support of its conclusion that the remedies ordered by the bankruptcy court against HSBC were intertwined with those against the appellants.

"As a general rule, a party aggrieved by a decision of the district court must file an appeal in order to receive relief from the decision." United States v. Tabor Court Realty Corp., 943 F.2d 335, 342 (3d Cir. 1991) (citing United States v. Hickey, 84 U.S. (17 Wall.) 9, 13, 21 L.Ed. 559 (1872)). However, an appellate court may reverse as to a non-appealing party if the interests of an appellant and a non-appealing party are "inextricably intertwined." Tabor Court, 943 F.2d at 344.

This Court has limited this situation to cases where it would be "impossible to grant relief to one party without granting relief to the other." Id. (emphasis added); see also Repola v. Morbark Indus., 980 F.2d 938, 940-41 (3rd Cir. 1993) (refusing to extend Tabor to case where failure to grant relief to non-appellant would create results that were logically inconsistent, but not impossible).

In this case it is possible to reverse as to the Udren Firm and its attorneys without also reversing as to HSBC. The bankruptcy court ordered HSBC to disseminate its decision to ensure that HSBC's other network attorneys would be aware both of the errors that occurred in this case, and of fact that an escalation procedure was available to correct similar errors in the future. Even if this Court concluded that the sanctions against the Udren Firm and its attorneys were somehow defective, that result would not change the historical fact of the errors in the Taylors' case, which are not in dispute. Because the purpose of the bankruptcy court's order as to HSBC was to educate HSBC's other law firms of the facts and history of this case, it could be logically consistent to preserve that part of the order even in the event that the remaining sanctions were vacated. Accordingly, the district court erred by concluding that the remedies in this case are intertwined, and erred by reversing as to HSBC in the absence of a notice of appeal.

CONCLUSION

For the reasons set forth above, the United States Trustee requests that this Court reverse the decision of the district court and affirm the decision of the bankruptcy court.

STATUTES AND RULES

STATEMENT OF JURISDICTION

The United States Trustee filed a motion seeking dismissal of the bankruptcy case of Tbyrd Enterprises L.L.C. (“Tbyrd”) and seeking an order to show cause why Thomas Wayland, Timothy Byrd, and John E. Villegas should not be sanctioned for filing Tbyrd’s voluntary petition in bad faith. Dkt. 22. Such relief was sought pursuant to 11 U.S.C. § 1112(b) (governing dismissal of a chapter 11 bankruptcy case), 11 U.S.C. § 105, and Federal Rule of Bankruptcy Procedure 9011. The motion initiated a “core proceeding" under 28 U.S.C. § 157(b)(2), as it called into question the very filing of the bankruptcy case and the responsibility of the named persons for that filing. Consequently, the Bankruptcy Court properly exercised jurisdiction under 28 U.S.C. § 157(b)(1).

On February 8, 2006, following a hearing on the United States Trustee’s motion, the Bankruptcy Court issued the requested order directing Thomas Wayland, Timothy Byrd, and John E. Villegas to show cause why they should not be sanctioned for filing Tbyrd’s case in bad faith. Dkt. 39.

On March 8, 2006, the Bankruptcy Court conducted the final evidentiary hearing on the order to show cause and announced its rulings. March 8, 2006 Transcript. Unfortunately, the entry of the Bankruptcy Court’s memorandum opinion and sanctions orders on two dockets resulted in a series of related appeals. The opinion and orders reflect Tbyrd’s caption, Case No. 06-30078-H1-11, but they also include the caption of an adversary proceeding from a different case, In re BFG Investments, L.L.C., Adv. Proc. No. 05-07029. The Tbyrd case was the locus of the United States Trustee’s motion, the order to show cause, the relevant pleadings by the parties, and all the hearings on the matters raised by the United States Trustee. The BFG adversary proceeding, however, addressed the same real estate, and presumably that was the reason for the dual caption. See Order Denying Motions to Vacate, dkt. 101. In any event, clerical error resulted in different dates for entry of the opinion and the sanctions orders in the Tbyrd case and the BFG adversary proceeding. See Tbyrd docket entries 79, 80, 81, 82, 83 (summarily describing clerical error).

On March 13, 2006, the bankruptcy clerk's office entered the memorandum opinion and the sanctions orders in the BFG adversary proceeding. BFG adv. dkt. 22 through 26. Thomas Wayland, Timothy Byrd, and John Villegas filed timely notices of appeal from the sanctions orders on March 23, 2006. BFG adv. dkt 34, 42. They then stated the issues on appeal and designated the record on appeal by way of filings in the BFG case, docket entries 37, 38, 41. Mr. Villegas' appeal was docketed in the District Court as Civil Action 06-CV-109, and assigned to the Honorable Randy Crane (McAllen Division). The appeals of Mr. Wayland and Mr. Bird were docketed as Civil Action 06-CV-87, and assigned to the Honorable Ricardo H. Hinojosa.

On March 29, 2006, the Bankruptcy Court's opinion and sanctions orders were entered on the Tbyrd bankruptcy case docket. Each docket entry recites that clerical error caused the delay in docketing. The opinion and sanctions orders are identical to those filed previously in the BFG adversary proceeding. With respect to these orders, the notices of appeal did not comply with Federal Rule of Bankruptcy Procedure 8002(a) (notice of appeal must be filed within ten days of denial of motion for reconsideration).[1] See docket entries 90, 101, 103, 104. All of these appeals on the Tbyrd docket were assigned to the Honorable Kenneth Hoyt, Civil Action 06-1925. Subsequently, all appeals have been consolidated within Civil Action 06-CV-87 (McAllen Division).

Irrespective of the late appeals in the Tbyrd case, the timely appeals filed in the BFG case support jurisdiction in this Court from the BFG orders. The Bankruptcy Court has already held, in the Tbyrd case, that the sanction orders contemplate a single payment by each of the sanctioned persons, irrespective of the each order being entered in two matters. Dkt. 101. Consequently, this Court has effective jurisdiction over the sanctions orders under 28 U.S.C. § 158(a), based on the timely appeals in the BFG case.

STATEMENT OF THE ISSUES

Thomas Wayland and Timothy Byrd filed a joint appellants' brief, and raise the following issues:

(i) Did the Bankruptcy Court lack jurisdiction because it issued criminal sanctions, and should the District Court conduct a de novo trial?

(ii) Did the Bankruptcy Court violate appellants' due process rights by giving no advance notice of the hearing on Wayland's recusal request and by denying that request?

[1] It appears that the untimeliness may not be excusable neglect under Federal Rule of Bankruptcy Procedure 8002(c)(2). See United States v. Eluterio Mauro Leijano-Cruz, 2006 WL 3734214 (5th Cir. Dec. 20, 2006) (addressing excusable neglect where untimely notice of appeal filed in a criminal case).

(iii) Did the Bankruptcy Court abuse its discretion by imposing sanctions on the appellants?

STANDARDS OF REVIEW

On appeal, this Court reviews the Bankruptcy Court's conclusions of law de novo. In re First City Bancorporation of Texas, Inc., 282 F.3d 864, 867 (5th Cir. 2002). This Court must uphold the Bankruptcy Court's findings of fact unless they are clearly erroneous. Id.; Fed. R. Bankr. Proc. 8013. The Bankruptcy Court's imposition of sanctions is discretionary, and therefore this Court must review such sanctions for an abuse of discretion. Id.; In re Terrebonne Fuel and Lube, Inc., 108 F.3d 609, 613 (5th Cir. 1997).

STATEMENT OF THE CASE

I. PRE-PETITION EVENTS

Prior to the filing of Tbyrd's bankruptcy case, BFG Investments, L.L.C. ("BFG") filed its chapter 11 petition, Case No. 05-70173 (McAllen Division). BFG's counsel was Kelly K. McKinnis ("McKinnis"). John E. Villegas is the majority equity owner and the manager of BFG. BFG's assets included various parcels of real estate as to which Texas State Bank held deeds of trust. March 8, 2006 Transcript at 92-93.

On April 11, 2005, the Bankruptcy Court entered an agreed order authorizing BFG's use of cash collateral arising from BFG's real estate. BFG dkt. 32. The agreed order provided that the automatic stay would automatically terminate as to Texas State Bank's remedies with respect to the real estate should BFG fail to timely cure an event of default declared by Texas State Bank. Id.

On or about October 11, 2005, Texas State Bank declared an event of default. On November 1, 2005, BFG commenced an action in state court seeking to enjoin Texas State Bank from selling the real estate through foreclosure proceedings. On November 3, 2005, Texas State Bank removed the state court action to the bankruptcy court, Adv. Proc. 05-7029. Texas State Bank then noticed a foreclosure sale for January 3, 2006 at 10:00 a.m.

On or about December 29, 2006, Thomas Wayland received a power of attorney from an investor-client, Angel Sanchez-Torres. According to Mr. Wayland, the power of attorney authorized him to purchase property on behalf of Mr. Sanchez-Torres. March 8, 2006 Transcript at 32-33.

On December 30, 2005, the Bankruptcy Court entered an agreed temporary restraining order that permitted Texas State Bank to proceed with matters preparatory to the foreclosure sale of BFG's real estate, but temporarily enjoined the actual sale pending further consideration of a preliminary injunction on January 3, 2006 at 8:30 a.m. BFG dkt. 12.

On January 1, 2006, Thomas Wayland met with Tim W. Byrd, the owner of a corporate shell named Tbyrd Enterprises, L.L.C. ("Tbyrd"). They accomplished a sale of the corporate shell from Mr. Byrd to Mr. Sanchez-Torres for the price of $1,000 cash. March 8, 2006 Transcript at 30-31.

On January 2, 2006, Mr. Wayland met with John Villegas at approximately 10:00 p.m. The meeting resumed at approximately 7:00 a.m. on January 3, 2006. Id. at 23, 28; Order at 6. At the latter meeting, Mr. Villegas deeded essentially all of BFG's assets to Tbyrd Enterprises, L.L.C. ("Tbyrd"), in exchange for a $1,000,000 promissory note secured by a wraparound mortgage. Id. In other words, Tbyrd received title subject to the liens of Texas State Bank and BFG.

During the morning meeting on January 2, 2006, Thomas Wayland states that John Villegas and he discussed the possibility that a bankruptcy petition might need to be filed for Tbyrd, depending on the outcome of the hearing on January 3, 2006. Mr. Wayland testified that he assumed the hearing was for a secured creditor's motion seeking relief from the automatic stay. Id. at 33-35. Mr. Wayland further testified that he thought there would be "a grace period" during which the Tbyrd bankruptcy case could be filed, and he testified that he prepared a couple of pages for a bankruptcy filing but that he couldn't print them. Id. at 38.

Mr. Villegas disputes that he discussed the filing of the Tbyrd bankruptcy petition in advance of the fact, either at the 7:00 am meeting or after the preliminary injunction hearing was concluded. He stated that he thought the property transfer itself would stop the foreclosure. Id. at 125.

At the conclusion of the 7:00 a.m. meeting, Kelly McKinnis arrived at Thomas Wayland's office and escorted Mr. Villegas to the preliminary injunction hearing before Judge Isgur. Mr. Wayland testified that he did not tell Kelly McKinnis of the asset transfer, and there is no evidence that Mr. McKinnis learned of the transfer until after the preliminary injunction hearing was concluded. After Villegas and McKinnis left, Mr. Wayland proceeded to record the deed. Id. at 34. He then had no further contact with Mr. Villegas and Mr. McKinnis until after the injunction hearing.

Mr. Villegas did not disclose the sale at the injunction hearing, although he testified on behalf of BFG as the owner of the real estate that was being foreclosed. The primary issue at the hearing was whether there was an insurance default (which would justify the termination of the stay so that the foreclosure sale could proceed as early as 10:00 on the same day). At the conclusion of the injunction hearing, the Bankruptcy Court determined that there was an insurance default and he therefore declined to enjoin the foreclosure sale. BFG adv. dkt. 14.

After recording the deed, Thomas Wayland asserts that he received a telephone call from John Villegas stating that BFG had lost the preliminary injunction hearing and that Mr. Wayland needed to file the bankruptcy petition for Tbyrd. Mr. Villegas disputes that conversation. Messrs. Wayland and McKinnis then discussed by phone Mr. Wayland's inability to print the Tbyrd bankruptcy petition, and Mr. Wayland prevailed upon Mr. McKinnis to electronically file the Tbyrd bankruptcy petition. Id. at 39-40. After it was electronically filed, Kelly McKinnis faxed confirmation of the filing to Mr. Wayland, who had that fax presented to Texas State Bank's agent at the foreclosure sale. Id. at 42-43. Tbyrd's bankruptcy petition thus had the effect of stopping Texas State Bank's foreclosure sale due to imposition of the automatic stay to protect Tbyrd.

On January 4, 2006, Texas State Bank filed an emergency motion seeking conversion of the BFG case to chapter 7 or, alternatively, the appointment of a chapter 11 trustee. On January 5, 2006, Judge Richard S. Schmidt conducted the emergency hearing in the BFG case, and entered an order that same date converting the case to chapter 7. BFG dkt. 73. On January 6, 2006, Judge Schmidt entered a further order with detailed findings and conclusions of law. That order directed court personnel to transmit a transcript of the January 5, 2006 hearing together with exhibits to the United States Attorney, to consider criminal investigation and prosecution. In a separate paragraph of the order, the bankruptcy court directed the court's personnel to send the same materials to the United States Trustee's Office, and directed the United States Trustee to investigate to consider whether the actions of BFG, Mr. Villegas, McKinnis, Mr. Byrd, or Wayland rise to the level of civil and criminal contempt, and to file a motion to show cause with the bankruptcy court or the district court as appropriate. BFG dkt. 76.

II. EVENTS IN TBYRD'S BANKRUPTCY CASE

On January 3, 2006, Messrs. McKinnis and Thomas Wayland filed the chapter 11 bankruptcy petition on behalf of Tbyrd, thereby stopping Texas State Bank's foreclosure sale. The petition had typed "signatures" of Mr. Wayland as counsel and Tim Byrd as managing member. Dkt. 1. Kelly McKinnis electronically filed the docket on Mr. Wayland's behalf.

On January 9, 2006, Texas State Bank filed a motion seeking relief from the automatic stay in the Tbyrd case. On January 10, 2006, Judge Isgur conducted a hearing on the motion. Tbyrd was not represented at the hearing, but consented to the relief sought by Texas State Bank. The Office of the United States Trustee indicated at the hearing its intention to file a motion to examine the transactions, with the likely respondents being BFG and TBYRD, their counsel, and their corporate representatives. Judge Isgur indicated that he could hear the matter on February 8, 2006. See docket entry dated January 10, 2006. He then issued a stay relief order that terminated the automatic stay as to Tbyrd and enjoined Tbyrd from transferring any interest in the real estate. He also determined that it was appropriate to enter a separate order turning possession of the real estate over to the Bank

On January 24, 2006, Judge Isgur issued an order that referenced the United States Trustee's announcement of the intent to file a sanctions motion, and directed the United States Trustee to file a status report by January 31, 2006. The order also directed the Debtor to file its schedules by January 31, 2006. The order also set a status conference for February 8, 2006, and directed Tbyrd's counsel, Tbyrd's principal owner and its principal operating officer to appear at the status conference.

On January 25, 2006, the United States Trustee filed the United States Trustee's Motion to Show Cause in Tbyrd's bankruptcy case. Dkt. 22. The Motion sought an order directing various persons to appear and show cause why they should not be sanctioned and the bankruptcy case dismissed. The United States Trustee identified the following persons as respondents: Tbyrd; BFG; Thomas Wayland; Kelly McKinnis; Tim Byrd; and John Villegas. The United States Trustee requested such relief pursuant to 11 U.S.C. §§ 105(a), 521(a)(1), and 1112(b)(1), and also pursuant to Federal Rule of Bankruptcy Procedure 9011. The United States Trustee alleged that the respondents attempted to frustrate foreclosure sales of BFG's real property by transferring the property to Tbyrd and then filing a bankruptcy petition for Tbyrd after the Bankruptcy Court lifted the automatic stay and denied BFG's request for injunctive relief. The United States Trustee also alleged that Tbyrd's failure to prosecute its chapter 11 case demonstrated its lack of good faith in filing the case. On January 31, the United States Trustee filed a status report which recite the general facts leading to the filing of the United States Trustee's motion.

Beginning on January 31, 2006, Thomas Wayland filed a series of pleadings, and Judge Isgur issued a series of orders, as follows:

(i) On January 31, 2006, Mr. Wayland filed a Notice to the Court in response to the January 24, 2006 order to show cause (directing the filing of schedules and statements by January 31, 2006). Mr. Wayland stated that the new managing partner of Tbyrd was Angel Sanchez Torres. Mr. Wayland further stated that he had been removed as counsel and that Mr. Byrd had been removed as principal of Tbyrd. Consequently, Messrs. Wayland and Byrd allegedly could not sign and file the required bankruptcy documents.

(ii) On February 1, 2006, the Bankruptcy Court issued an Order to Show Cause directing that Mr. Byrd and Mr. Wayland appear at the February 8, 2006 hearing to explain why the schedules and statements had not been timely filed and why they should not be held in civil contempt for such failure. The Bankruptcy Court also held that Thomas Wayland remained counsel of record until the Court allowed his withdrawal from the case.

(iii) On February 7, 2006, Mr. Wayland filed an Unopposed Motion for Extension of Time (dkt. 31) requesting that the February 8, 2006 hearing be continued so as to afford him time to travel to Mexico to attempt to convince Angel Sanchez Torres to change his position as to the case and to sign the schedules. On February 8, 2006, the Bankruptcy Court entered an order that denied the motion for continuance, holding that Mr. Wayland had given no bona fide basis for not appearing at the hearing.

(iv) On February 8, 2006, Mr. Wayland filed various documents, including two more motions (dkt. nos. 33, 34) seeking continuance of the orders to show cause that the Bankruptcy Court had issued for failure to file the schedules, and also including a Response and Objection to Judge's Order to Show Cause for No Schedules (dkt. 37). That document included the following statement:

> "Tbyrd never received one asset, nor one dime after the warranty deed that would make filling out the schedules anything but mere speculation at this point. So, the signed order is asking for impossibility, except to file one as of this date, which would be zero. What is the point? This does appear to have the making of being strictly punitive in nature, if not the Court over-reaching its judicial purview and it trying to entrap and setup the Respondents."

Id. at 3-4. The Response also included some inappropriate and disrespectful language. Id. at 5.

At the hearings on February 8, 2006, the Bankruptcy Court denied both continuance motions and chastised Mr. Wayland for the offensive language contained in the Response. February 8, 2006 Transcript at 17; dkt. nos. 40, 41. The Bankruptcy Court declined, however, to find Mr. Wayland in contempt under the Court's order to show cause, but issued an arrest warrant for Mr. Byrd, providing for his release upon production of the required schedules and statements. Memorandum Opinion Regarding Civil Contempt and Order Imposing Sanctions and Ordering Confinement, dkt. no. 43. The Court also sanctioned Tbyrd $500 per day until such documents were prepared and filed. Id.

Also on February 8, 2006, the Bankruptcy Court briefly addressed a document titled "Texas State Bank's Notification of Action of John Villegas, Principal of BFG Investments, LLC (Said Actions Relate to the U.S. Trustee's Show Cause Action)," dkt. no. 32. This document addressed John Villegas' filing of pleadings in state court on February 6, 2006, seeking to obtain a temporary restraining order against Texas State Bank's foreclosure sale of the real estate. The Court declined to consider the document as Texas State Bank acknowledged that it was not currently seeking any relief with respect to Mr. Villegas' action. Judge Isgur, however, verbally warned Mr. Villegas to cease any efforts to interfere, stating that the property belongs to one of the two bankruptcy estates and Mr. Villegas "need[s] to stop breaking the law. Stop, period." Febr. 8, 2006 Transcript at 22.

The Bankruptcy Court addressed the United States Trustee's motion on a preliminary basis. The United States Trustee suggested that the motion should be treated as a two-step procedure, whereby the Court would first issue the order to show cause, and then the substance of the issues could be addressed at a subsequent hearing following the passage of at least 21 days. Id. at 20. While Federal Rule of Bankruptcy Procedure 9011 does not allow for 21 days to withdraw or correct a petition (that time period is provided for respondents to withdraw or correct other types of documents that they filed), the two-step procedure allowed time for the parties to respond to an order to show cause. All respondents present at the hearing (i.e. not Mr. Byrd) indicated their consent to that procedure. Id. at 20-22. All persons also stated on the record that they did not require additional detail in the United States Trustee's proposed order to show cause. Id at 23. The Bankruptcy Court then issued the short order to show cause based on the United States Trustee's motion, scheduling the hearing for March 8, 2006. Dkt. 39

In response to the Court's civil contempt order and the arrest warrant, Tbyrd filed schedules and statements (dkt. nos. 44,45). Judge Isgur issued an order on February 13, 2006, finding the documents deficient. (dkt. 52). Tbyrd filed a motion to reconsider (dkt. 54), and Mr. Byrd appeared to testify on February 13, 2006 with respect to his inability to prepare adequate schedules and statements. The Bankruptcy Court made the following statement at the hearing:

> "The more I hear about this case, the worse it gets. I cannot believe that a lawyer would contact a client and ask him to do what Mr. Byrd was asked to do and to file a petition in bankruptcy for a corporation which had absolutely no assets, no capital, no bank account, and was attempting to acquire assets illegally out of another bankruptcy estate. For a lawyer to involve his client in that is, from what I've heard so far, inexcusable conduct. We'll see.
> That may leave Mr. Byrd, who's still signing this petition – and he's charged with signing the petition – liable for sanctions of the Court, perhaps liable for criminal charges, from what Judge Schmidt has put down in his case. I don't know. But it doesn't leave him in civil contempt of this Court, because it is a defense to civil contempt if it is impossible to comply, and Mr. Byrd is not able to comply."

February 8, 2006 Transcript. On the basis of Mr. Byrd's testimony, the Court therefore issued an amended order removing Mr. Byrd from civil contempt with respect to Tbyrd's schedules and statements, but continued to require Tbyrd to correct the deficiencies in those documents. Dkt. 55.

On February 23, 2006, Mr. Wayland filed a motion seeking to withdraw as Tbyrd's counsel. Dkt. 60. He also filed a motion seeking to "withdraw" the bankruptcy petition or, in the alternative, requesting that the March 8, 2006 hearing be continued for 20 days. This motion was based largely on Mr. Wayland's belief that BFG may not have had good title to the property or may not have been a "legal entity." He also asserted that the events since the filing of the case, i.e. the relief granted to Texas State Bank, made the bankruptcy case moot. Dkt. 61.

On March 7, 2006, Kelly McKinnis filed a motion seeking to have the United States Trustee's motion for sanctions dismissed or transferred to the McAllen Division based on improper venue. Dkt. 68. Mr. McKinnis argued that the real estate at issue was located in the McAllen Division, and BFG itself was in McAllen. Mr. McKinnis alleged that trying the matter in Houston deprived BFG of due process. The Bankruptcy Court denied the motion, in part, because venue is a "district" issue, and also because the dispositive action – the filing of the bankruptcy petition for Tbyrd – was done in the Houston Division. Dkt. 71.

On March 8, 2006, Thomas Wayland filed an Amended Response and Objections to Show Cause Hearing. Dkt. 55. Included in the document, at page 14, is the following language:

> Respondent submits that trying claims against Respondents by a Judge that made the ruling against the seller in the underlying case pending in the McAllen Division deprives Respondent of due process."

Id. at 14. This statement might be viewed as suggesting that Judge Isgur should recuse himself based on the fact that he was the judge who denied the injunction sought by BFG to forestall foreclosure.

At the March 8, 2006 trial, Judge Isgur addressed Thomas Wayland's apparent suggestion that Judge Isgur should recuse himself, and the court invited Mr. Wayland to present any evidence supporting recusal. Mr. Wayland generally referenced the series of motions he had filed, and the court's denial of those motions. He also stated that "the fact that the Court has indicated that there might be some criminal conduct has been very alarming and upsetting to me and gives me the appearance that there is not total objectivity, which I can understand the aggravation for making a prior ruling in another case, that my clients did not understand the scope that would have on the court." He also stated: "And to the degree that the Court's prior ruling in the other case affects this, you know, I think we've been tainted." He concluded "Now, for BFG, you know, I understand the Court, but it appears to me that my client, Mr. Byrd, and myself and have been lumped into a bundle with them . . we just don't feel like we're a part of them. We've been lumped into that bundle." Id. at 5-10. The Court reviewed the case law and held that there was no basis for recusal. Id. at 13-16. This holding was memorialized in an order entered March 8, 2006. Dkt. no. 71.[2]

Messrs. Wayland, Byrd, Villegas and McKinnis testified at trial. None of the [2] No appeal was taken directly from the order denying recusal, but a recusal order is interlocutory, and for purposes of appeal was presumably merged into the final sanctions orders. See generally C. A. May Marine Supply Company, v. Brunswick Corp., 649 F.2d 1049, 1056 (5th Cir. 1981) (where claims or issues are inextricably entwined, each may be reviewed even though not referenced in the notice of appeal).

respondents asserted any lack of personal jurisdiction. As noted above, the respondents had all acknowledged, at the February 8, 2006 hearing, that the order to show cause contained sufficient detail to inform them of the general grounds for which sanctions were being sought.

The basic facts developed at trial were, in large measure, uncontested -- with just a few exceptions. John Villegas disputed Thomas Wayland's assertion that they discussed the filing of the Tbyrd bankruptcy petition in advance of the fact. Mr. Villegas stated that he thought the property transfer itself would stop the foreclosure. March 8, 2006 Transcript at 125. Mr. Wayland acknowledged that he pressured Mr. McKinnis into electronically filing the petition on Mr. Wayland's behalf, after he learned that the foreclosure sale would be going forward. Mr. Wayland stated, however, that he did not believe any harm would come from the filing, as it would afford time to work out a deal with Texas State Bank. He said he "fully intended for Texas State Bank to get paid." Id. at 39-41, 175.

The United States Trustee's counsel explored the sanctions issue with Mr. Wayland on the stand:

> Q. Do you think you violated Rule 9011 in this case by your actions or inactions?
> A. In evaluating that and doing a lot of soul searching and now have a much better understanding of the Reform Act, to the degree that I didn't investigate the transaction, yes. To the degree of TByrd's, no, because they had no bad past and I knew what their future could be." He further acknowledged the options that the court had available for sanctions:
> Q. You realize that the Court in this proceeding has a lot of options available to it?
>
> A. I do.
> Q. Those options can be restricting your practice before it. Agreed?
> A. Bankruptcy Court, yes.
> Q. You can be subject to monetary fines or sanctions?
>
> A. Yes.
> Q. You could be directed to take additional CLE or ethics courses?
> A. Yes.

When asked what monetary sanctions Mr. Wayland himself thought the court should impose – if the court found that he violated Rule 9011 or participated in a bad faith filing -- Mr. Wayland ultimately suggested $2,5000 as a maximum penalty. Id. at 54-56.

III. THE SANCTIONS ORDERS

The Bankruptcy Court found that Mr. Wayland arranged the purchase of BFG's assets by Tbyrd, and that he was Tbyrd's "principle business decision maker and the sole lawyer. Accordingly, he holds primary responsibility for all of Tbyrd's conduct."

Memorandum Opinion, dkt. 79, at 8. Mr. Wayland had his “printed” signature and that of Tim Byrd placed on the voluntary petition. Dkt. 1. Mr. Wayland had testified that he knew of BFG’s bankruptcy case and the hearing scheduled for January 3, 2006, and that he had the petition prepared and filed after learning that the real estate foreclosure sale was about to proceed. The Bankruptcy Court found that “Mr. Wayland conducted no investigation into whether the Bankruptcy Court had authorized the sale of BFG’s assets.” Memorandum Opinion, dkt 79, at 9. “Mr. Wayland knew that he had placed the newly acquired real estate into a corporate shell with no assets. Nevertheless, he caused BFG (sic) to file a chapter 11 petition within three hours of the time that it received the deed.” Id. at 10. The Court further found that Mr. Wayland was not “disinterested” – a requirement to serve as chapter 11 counsel for a debtor in possession. Id.; see 11 U.S.C. §§ 101(14), 327 and 1107(a) (imposing disinterestedness requirement on counsel for a chapter 11 debtor in possession).

The Bankruptcy Court found that Mr. Villegas transferred all of BFG’s assets to Tbyrd in return for a $1,000,000 promissory note, in contravention of the Bankruptcy Code, 11 U.S.C. § 363 (precluding sales of estate assets “outside the ordinary course of business” unless court approval is obtained). The Court found that Mr. Villegas also discussed with Mr. Wayland the filing of the bankruptcy case for Tbyrd, and that he indeed demanded that the bankruptcy case be filed. Memorandum Opinion at 7.

The Bankruptcy Court found that "in the space of a few hours, Mr. Byrd willingly executed a $1,000,000 promissory note by Tbyrd, a deed of trust for recording in the real property records, and Tbyrd's chapter 11 bankruptcy petition. Mr. Byrd conducted no investigation. Instead, he blindly did as instructed by Mr. Wayland." Id. at 10-11. "The court finds him to be a willing actor." Id. at 11.

The Bankruptcy Court sanctioned Thomas Wayland $25,000, John Villegas $25,000, and Tim Byrd $5,000. In addition, he barred Mr. Wayland from representing clients before him in the future, and he enjoined Mr. Villegas and Mr. Byrd from taking certain actions with respect to bankruptcy matters.

The Bankruptcy Court also made referrals to other authorities. Finding that each of the appellants "willfully transferred property out of BFG's bankruptcy estate with the intent to defeat the provisions of title 11," so that there were violations of 18 U.S.C. 152(5), Judge Isgur made criminal referrals with respect to Wayland and Mr. Villegas under 18 U.S.C. 3057(a). In addition, Judge Isgur referred Wayland to the Texas Bar pursuant to Rule 8.04 of the Texas Disciplinary Rules of Professional Conduct and to the District Court pursuant to Rule 5 of the Rules of Discipline of the U.S. District Court for the Southern District of Texas.[3]

[3] The sanctions orders did not resolve the issue of dismissal of Tbyrd's case. Post-trial, the United States Trustee filed a new motion to dismiss the case asserting further grounds for dismissal. The Bankruptcy Court issued an order abating that motion pending resolution of the appeals. Dkt. 107, 121.

SUMMARY OF THE ARGUMENT

The United States Trustee did not seek criminal sanctions, and none of the orders or proceedings indicate otherwise. The United States Trustee's motion sought dismissal of the bankruptcy case and sanctions for the filing of the case in bad faith. The United States Trustee sought that relief under 11 U.S.C. §§ 105 and 1112(b), and Federal Rule of Bankruptcy Procedure 9011, and thereby commenced a core proceeding within the Bankruptcy Court's primary grant of bankruptcy jurisdiction. Appellants mistakenly argue that the Bankruptcy Court lacked appropriate jurisdiction to address sanctions, because the monetary sanctions are criminal in nature. The Bankruptcy Court, however, clearly did not intend to impose any criminal sanctions. This is clear from the express language of the sanctions orders, which provide that the matter is referred to the United States Attorney to consider whether criminal investigation and prosecution may be appropriate. Nonetheless, the United States Trustee concludes that as a matter of law the monetary sanctions imposed by the Bankruptcy Court did exceed the Court's inherent authority to sanction persons for bad faith conduct. For that reason, the United States Trustee suggests that the District Court should reverse and remand with respect to the monetary sanctions, so that the Bankruptcy Court may determine appropriate monetary sanctions, if any, in accordance with the Bankruptcy Court's inherent authority and/or pursuant to Federal Rule of Bankruptcy Procedure 9011.

ARGUMENT

The United States Trustee's motion sought sanctions against the appellants pursuant to Federal Rule of Bankruptcy Procedure 9011 and the court's inherent authority under 11 U.S.C. § 105. This commenced a "core proceeding" under 28 U.S.C. § 157. The Bankruptcy Court then imposed sanctions under its inherent authority and 11 U.S.C. § 105. The Bankruptcy Court did not rule upon the United States Trustee's request for sanctions under Fed. R. Bankr. P. 9011. The United States Trustee concedes that the monetary sanctions should be reversed because they cannot be supported under the Bankruptcy Court's inherent power. The matter, however, should be remanded for the Bankruptcy Court to determine appropriate sanctions consistent with its inherent authority and/or Rule 9011.

I. THE UNITED STATES TRUSTEE'S MOTION COMMENCED A CORE PROCEEDING WITHIN THE BANKRUPTCY COURT'S JURISDICTION

The Appellants err in concluding, based on the nature of the monetary sanctions, that the Bankruptcy Court lacked jurisdiction to impose any sanctions at all. The Bankruptcy Court has jurisdiction to enter final orders in all "core proceedings." A core proceeding includes all "matters concerning the administration of the estate." 28 U.S.C. § 157. A "proceeding is core under [§]157 if it invokes a substantive right provided by title 11 or if it is a proceeding that, by its nature, could arise only in the context of a bankruptcy case. In re Case, 937 F.2d 1014, 1019 (5th Cir. 1991) (quoting Matter of Wood, 825 F.2d 90 (5th Cir. 1987). The filing of the bankruptcy petition pursuant to 11 U.S.C. § 301, as well as a motion seeking dismissal of such a case under 11 U.S.C. § 1112(b), concern the appropriateness of the Bankruptcy Court's administration of the case at all, and thus it profoundly impacts the rights of all parties in the case to have their concerns addressed by the Bankruptcy Court. It is therefore difficult to conceive of a proceeding that is more "core" to the Bankruptcy Court's responsibilities. The mere fact that the relief is sought, inter alia, under the Bankruptcy Court's inherent authority does not render it non-core, or render the Bankruptcy Court's decision subject to de novo review. See First City Bancorporation of Texas, Inc., 270 B.R. 807 (N.D. Tex. 2001), aff'd 282 F.3d 864 (5th Cir. 2002) ("The court does not determine de novo the level of sanctions, if any, to be imposed, only whether the bankruptcy court abused its discretion.") In its First City decision affirming the bankruptcy court, the Fifth Circuit reviewed the bankruptcy court's sanctions for an abuse of discretion, using a clearly erroneous standard as to findings of fact and only deciding issues of law de novo. 282 F.3d at 867. The Appellants reliance on In re Continental Air Lines, Inc. (Continental Airlines, Inc. v. Hillblom), 61 B.R. 758 (S.D. Tex. 1986), is thus misplaced because the case is dated. See In re Skinner, 917 F.2d 444, 448 (10th Cir. 1990) (citing case law regarding contempt proceedings as "core," and referencing earlier contrary authority); see also 2001 Advisory Committee Note to Federal Rule of Bankruptcy Procedure 9020 (describing the basis for the amendment in new circuit court authority for bankruptcy courts' civil contempt power, and describing the earlier rule's de novo review requirement as unnecessarily restrictive)

II. THE BANKRUPTCY COURT'S ORDER, THOUGH BASED ON THE COURT'S INHERENT AUTHORITY, EXCEEDED THE SCOPE OF THAT AUTHORITY WITH RESPECT TO THE IMPOSITION OF THE

MONETARY SANCTIONS.

A. THE BANKRUPTCY COURT'S INHERENT AUTHORITY TO SANCTION MISCONDUCT

The Bankruptcy Court based its monetary sanctions on the Court's "inherent authority," relying upon Chambers v. NASCO, Inc., 501 U.S. 32 (1991). In Chambers, the U.S. Supreme Court affirmed a federal court's imposition of monetary sanctions in the form of attorney fees based on the court's "inherent authority" to sanction certain kinds of misconduct. Specifically, federal courts are not limited to the sanctions permitted or required by express statutes and rules, but may impose sanctions pursuant their inherent authority.

Although the monetary sanctions imposed in Chambers were compensatory attorneys' fees, Judge Isgur rejected the notion that permissible sanctions are limited to attorney fees. Judge Isgur looked to Federal Rule of Bankruptcy Procedure 9011(c) for guidance as to the kinds of sanctions that may be imposed. Pursuant to Rule 9011(c), the court may impose both monetary and non-monetary sanctions, but such sanctions "shall be limited to what is sufficient to deter repetition of such conduct or comparable conduct by others similarly situated." The Bankruptcy Judge's legal analysis follows that from a decision that he issued a few months earlier, In re Porcheddu, 2006 WL 360530 (Bankr. S.D. Tex. Febr. 6, 2006) (sanctioning a law firm under Rule 9011 for misrepresenting the accuracy of time records)

Chambers remains good precedent for the proposition that, when imposing sanctions for misconduct, federal courts are not limited to the sanctions permitted or required by express statutes and rules. Federal courts retain "inherent" authority to address certain kinds of misconduct:

> It has long been understood that "[c]ertain implied powers must necessarily result to our Courts of justice from the nature of their institution," powers "which cannot be dispensed with in a Court, because they are necessary to the exercise of all others." United States v. Hudson, 7 Cranch 32, 34, 3 L.Ed. 259 (1812); see also Roadway Express, Inc. v. Piper, 447 U.S. 752, 764, 100 S.Ct. 2455, 2463, 65 L.Ed.2d 488 (1980) (citing Hudson). For this reason, "Courts of justice are universally acknowledged to be vested, by their very creation, with power to impose silence, respect, and decorum, in their presence, and submission to their lawful mandates." Anderson v. Dunn, 6 Wheat. 204, 227, 5 L.Ed. 242 (1821); see also Ex parte Robinson, 19 Wall. 505, 510, 22 L.Ed. 205 (1874). These powers are "governed not by rule or statute but by the control necessarily vested in courts to manage their own affairs so as to achieve the orderly and expeditious disposition of cases." Link v. Wabash R. Co., 370 U.S. 626, 630-631, 82 S.Ct. 1386, 1388-1389, 8 L.Ed.2d 734 (1962).

Chambers v. NASCO, Inc., 501 U.S. 32, 43 (1991). Unfortunately, the Chambers decision provides little guidance as to how such inherent authority should be exercised with respect to sanctions other than attorneys fees awarded to opposing counsel. The Bankruptcy Court's reliance on Rule 9011(c) for guidance led the Court to issue sanctions under the Court's inherent authority in a manner contrary to prevailing case law.

B. THE BANKRUPTCY COURT'S INHERENT AUTHORITY DOES NOT EXTEND TO CRIMINAL SANCTIONS

Irrespective of the court's "inherent authority" under Chambers, a federal court may not impose "criminal" sanctions without providing criminal due process protections, and such specialized procedures were not employed here. The possible exceptions are for "direct contempt sanctions" (to maintain order in open court) and "petty fines," because these do not give rise to immediate and extensive criminal due process protections. See Hicks v. Feiock, 485 U.S. 624, 632 (1988) ("criminal penalties may not be imposed on someone who has not been afforded the protections that the Constitution requires of such criminal proceedings"); International Union, United Mine Workers of America v. Bagwell, 512 U.S. 821, 827-34 (1992) (reviewing the limited circumstances where criminal due process protections may not apply).

The monetary sanctions in this case are contrary to established Fifth Circuit and Supreme Court precedent with respect to courts' inherent authority. See In re Hipp, Inc., 895 F.2d 1503, 1509 (5th Cir. 1990); In re Terrebonne Fuel and Lube, Inc., 108 F.3d 609, 613, n.3 (5th Cir. 1997) (citing Hipp with approval); see also Crowe v. Smith, 151 F.3d 217, 226 (5th Cir. 1998) (reversing district court fines payable to court because they were imposed in civil proceeding and thus violated criminal due process right to independent prosecutor). The distinction between civil and criminal contempt can sometimes be difficult to draw. "[W]hether a contempt is civil or criminal turns on the 'character and purpose' of the sanction involved." International Union, United Mine Workers of America v. Bagwell, 512 U.S. 821, 827 (1992). "Most contempt sanctions, like most criminal punishments, to some extent punish a prior offense as well as coerce an offender's future obedience." Id. at 828. With respect to fines, however, the rule is that a non-compensatory fine issued for contempt "is civil only if the contemnor is afforded an opportunity to purge . . . Thus, a 'flat, unconditional fine' totaling even as little as $50 announced after a finding of contempt is criminal if the contemnor has no subsequent opportunity to reduce or avoid the fine through compliance." Id. at 829 (citations omitted).

The monetary sanctions on appeal cannot be construed as "petty" fines payable to the court. Judge Isgur took care to set the amounts high enough to effectively deter others from similar wrongful conduct. See generally Crowe v. Smith, 151 F.3d 217, 229 n.12 (5th Cir. 1998) ("We need not decide today what the precise limit is for a "petty" fine, because $75,000 is manifestly non-petty in the case of an individual, just as $5 million is non-petty in the case of a corporation. We note, however, that the Bagwell Court strongly suggested, without deciding, that $5000 was an appropriate limit for individuals, and $10,000 for corporations.") (citing Bagwell, 512 U.S. at 837 n. 5).

A strict standard of review further weighs against support for Judge Isgur's monetary sanctions. Although the appellate court reviews the imposition of sanctions under a federal court's inherent power for an "abuse of discretion," such a standard of review is actually a high standard in this context, because the court's ability to impose sanctions under its inherent authority is itself limited. The Fifth Circuit describes the standard at some length in Crowe, 151 F.3d at 226:

> We review a district court's imposition of sanctions under its inherent power for abuse of discretion. Dawson v. United States, 68 F.3d 886, 895 (5th Cir.1995); Chambers v. NASCO, Inc., 501 U.S. 32, 55, 111 S.Ct. 2123, 115 L.Ed.2d 27 (1991). Nonetheless, "the threshold for the use of inherent power sanctions is high." Elliott v. Tilton, 64 F.3d 213, 217 (5th Cir.1995). The inherent power "is not a broad reservoir of power, ready at an imperial hand, but a limited source; an implied power squeezed from the need to make the court function." Chambers, 501 U.S. at 42, 111 S.Ct. 2123 (quoting NASCO, Inc. v. Calcasieu Television and Radio, Inc., 894 F.2d 696, 702 (5th Cir.1990)). Perhaps for this reason, we have repeatedly emphasized that, where the inherent power is involved, " 'our review is not perfunctory.' " Dawson, 68 F.3d at 896 (quoting Shepherd v. American Broadcasting Companies, 62 F.3d 1469, 1475 (D.C. Cir.1995)). "As the Supreme Court has explained, '[b]ecause inherent powers are shielded from direct democratic controls, they must be exercised with restraint > and discretion.' " Shepherd, 62 F.3d at 1475 (quoting Roadway Express, Inc. v. Piper, 447 U.S. 752, 764, 100 S.Ct. 2455, 65 L.Ed.2d 488 (1980)).

The Supreme Court has described the danger of abuse even more expansively:

> Unlike most areas of law, where a legislature defines both the sanctionable conduct and the penalty to be imposed, civil contempt proceedings leave the offended judge solely responsible for identifying, prosecuting, adjudicating, and sanctioning the contumacious conduct. Contumacy "often strikes at the most vulnerable and human qualities of a judge's temperament," Bloom, 391 U.S., at 202, 88 S.Ct., at 1482, and its fusion of legislative, executive, and judicial powers "summons forth ... the prospect of 'the most tyrannical licentiousness,' " Young v. United States ex rel. Vuitton et Fils S.A., 481 U.S. 787, 822, 107 S.Ct. 2124, 2145, 95 L.Ed.2d 740 (1987) (SCALIA, J., concurring in judgment), quoting Anderson, 6 Wheat., at 228.

International Union, United Mine Workers of America v. Bagwell, 512 U.S. 821, 831 (1992).

As a result of such potential for abuse, case law has focused extensively on the nature of the contemptuous conduct and the extent of procedural protections to be afforded in such circumstances. The Supreme Court's "jurisprudence in the contempt area has attempted to balance the competing concerns of necessity and potential arbitrariness by allowing a relatively unencumbered contempt power when its exercise is most essential, and requiring progressively greater procedural protections when other considerations come into play." Id. at 832. As the contempt sanction becomes criminal in nature, "an even more compelling argument can be made [than in ordinary criminal cases] for providing a right to jury trial as a protection against the arbitrary exercise of official power." Id. at 831-32 (quoting Bloom v. Illinois, 391 U.S. 194, 202 (1968).

Much of the above-described case law has developed in regard to the courts' inherent ability to sanction contempt. In the instant case, however, Judge Isgur was not called upon to sanction persons for contempt of a prior court order. Rather, the United States Trustee sought sanctions for bad faith conduct in connection with the filing of the Tbyrd bankruptcy petition. But this distinction should not give rise to a different legal standard, as the criminal due process protections would be the same.

Where a court has sought to impose sanctions as part of a civil proceeding but some of the sanctions are criminal in nature, the criminal sanctions are appropriately reversed and the matter remanded for further proceedings consistent with that ruling. See Crowe v. Smith, 151 F.3d 217, 235-36 (5th Cir. 1998) (court may vacate criminal sanction for failure to comply with criminal procedure, yet affirm the civil sanctions that were imposed) (citing Lamarf Financial Corp. v. Adams, 918 F.2d 564, 567 (5th Cir. 1990).

III. THE BANKRUPTCY COURT DID NOT ERR IN DENYING RECUSAL

The Appellants argue that the Bankruptcy Court denied them due process of law because there was not sufficient notice that the issue of recusal was going to be heard at the trial on March 8, 2006. Mr. Wayland, however, did not timely seek recusal, and indeed he did not expressly request such relief, either by using the term itself or by reference to the applicable statute, 28 U.S.C. § 455. The Bankruptcy Court appropriately raised the issue on March 8, 2006 because, on that same date, in Mr. Wayland's Amended Response and Objections to Show Cause Hearing, Mr. Wayland appeared to perhaps be seeking recusal. The Bankruptcy Court therefore raised the matter as a necessary prelude to conducting the trial, even though the document at issue did not reference recusal in either its caption or in any prayer for relief. Appellants presented no evidence of bias on the part of Judge Isgur, but simply argued in a general manner on the basis of his past rulings and comments in the BFG and Tbyrd cases. The Bankruptcy Court appropriately relied on the basis of well-established case law that recusal was not required. Liteky v. United States, 510 U.S. 540 (1994) ("Opinions formed by the judge on the basis of facts introduced or evidence occurring in the course of the current proceedings, or of prior proceedings, do not constitute a basis for a bias or partiality motion unless they display a deep seated favoritism or antagonism that would make fair judgment impossible. Judicial remarks during the course of a trial that are critical or disapproving of, or even hostile to, counsel, the parties, or their cases, ordinarily do not support a bias or partiality challenge. They may do so if they reveal an opinion that derives from an extrajudicial source; and they will do so if they reveal such a high degree of favoritism or antagonism as to make fair judgment possible."); see also United States v. Bremers, 195 F.3d 221 (5th Cir. 1999).

CONCLUSION

For these reasons, the United States Trustee respectfully asks this Court to vacate the monetary sanctions entered below, reverse the Bankruptcy Court's orders to that extent, and remand this proceeding to the Bankruptcy Court with instructions to determine what relief, if any, to impose under it's inherent authority or under Federal Rule of Bankruptcy Procedure 9011.

STATUTES AND RULES

STATEMENT OF JURISDICTION

On January 25, 2006, the United States Trustee filed a motion in the United States Bankruptcy Court for the Southern District of Texas (the "Bankruptcy Court") seeking dismissal of the bankruptcy case of Tbyrd Enterprises L.L.C. ("Tbyrd") and seeking an order to show cause why Thomas Wayland and Timothy Byrd (the "Appellants") should not be sanctioned for filing Tbyrd's voluntary petition in bad faith. Bankr. Case No. 06-30078-H1-11, dkt. 22. The United States Trustee sought sanctions under the Bankruptcy Court's "inherent authority" and Fed. R. Bankr. P. 9011 (which is modeled after Fed. R. Civ. P. 11). The motion initiated a "core proceeding" under 28 U.S.C. § 157(b)(2), as it called into question the very filing of the bankruptcy case and the responsibility of the Appellants for that filing. The Bankruptcy Court properly exercised jurisdiction of that core proceeding under 28 U.S.C. § 157(b)(1). See Citizens Bank & Trust Co. v. Case (In re Case), 937 F.2d 1014 (5th Cir. 1991) ("a proceeding is core under [§] 157 if it invokes a substantive right provided by title 11 or if it is a proceeding that, by its nature, could arise only in the context of a bankruptcy case.") (quoting Matter of Wood, 825 F.2d 90, 97 (5th Cir. 1987)).

On March 29, 2006, the Bankruptcy Court entered a memorandum opinion and orders imposing sanctions on the Appellants. Tbyrd dkt. 79, 82, 83.[1] The Appellants timely appealed to this Court, which exercised appellate jurisdiction under 28 U.S.C. § 158(a). See Case No.

[1] Many of the docket entries in the Tbyrd bankruptcy case are duplicated in a separate adversary proceeding in the bankruptcy case of BFG Investments, L.L.C., Case No. 05-70173, Adv. Proc. No. 05-07029. Because the latter entries are duplicative, the United States Trustee has limited his Bankruptcy Court citations to those found on the Tbyrd docket.

On March 30, 2007, this Court affirmed most of the Bankruptcy Court's findings of fact and conclusions of law, but remanded the matter for the Bankruptcy Court to assess civil monetary sanctions and to consider whether the bankruptcy court should certify any criminal contempt issue to the District Court. Dkt. 58.

On remand, the Bankruptcy Court conducted an evidentiary hearing on September 18, 2007. The issue of civil sanctions was again a "core proceeding" as defined by 28 U.S.C. § 157(b)(2), and the District Court's order contemplated the Bankruptcy Court's final resolution of the civil sanctions issue. By contrast, the District Court directed the Bankruptcy Court merely to determine whether it should certify any criminal contempt issue to the District Court for the District Court to resolve, leaving any actual criminal contempt to be determined by the District Court. The Bankruptcy Court never sought to exercise any criminal contempt authority, and the Bankruptcy Court eventually determined that it was inappropriate even to certify such an issue to the District Court. On December 7, 2007, the Bankruptcy Court entered its memorandum opinion and orders imposing civil monetary sanctions on the Appellants under Fec. R. Bankr. P. 9011 and declining to certify any criminal contempt issue. Tbyrd dkt. 171 through 174.

On December 17, 2007, the Appellants timely appealed the December 7, 2007 orders to this Court. Tbyrd dkt.179. The orders on appeal conclusively resolved all matters pending on remand. This Court has jurisdiction over appeals of the Bankruptcy Court's final orders under 28 U.S.C. § 158(a).

Mr. Wayland challenges the Bankruptcy Court's imposition of sanctions under Rule 9011 as tantamount to the imposition of criminal contempt sanctions that exceed the Bankruptcy Court's jurisdiction. Because the sanctions are appropriate civil sanctions, Mr. Wayland's jurisdictional argument necessarily fails. The United States Trustee addresses the civil nature of the sanctions in the Argument section of this brief.

STATEMENT OF THE ISSUES

This appeal presents the following issue: Did the Bankruptcy Court err by imposing criminal contempt sanctions under Federal Rule of Bankruptcy Procedure 9011?

STANDARDS OF REVIEW

On appeal, this Court reviews the Bankruptcy Court's conclusions of law de novo. In re First City Bancorporation of Texas, Inc., 282 F.3d 864, 867 (5th Cir. 2002). This Court must uphold the Bankruptcy Court's findings of fact unless they are clearly erroneous. Id.; Fed. R. Bankr. P. 8013. The Bankruptcy Court's imposition of sanctions under Fed. R. Bankr. P. 9011 is discretionary, and therefore this Court must review such sanctions for an abuse of discretion. See Krim v. First City Bancorporation Inc. (In re First City Bancorporation Inc.), 282 F.3d 864, 867 (5th Cir. 2002) (per curiam). "A court abuses its discretion when its ruling is based on an erroneous view of the law or on a clearly erroneous assessment of the evidence." Id. (citing Chaves v. M/V Medina Star, 47 F.3d 153, 156 (5th Cir. 1995)).

STATEMENT OF THE CASE

I. NATURE OF THE CASE

This appeal is taken from a remand issued in a prior appeal, Case No. 7:06-cv-87. The Bankruptcy Court had sanctioned the Appellants for the bad faith filing of Tbyrd's bankruptcy case. The Bankruptcy Court found that Mr. Wayland had arranged Tbyrd's purchase of assets from another bankruptcy debtor, BFG Investments, L.L.C. ("BFG") in order to frustrate the foreclosure sale of BFG's assets after the Bankruptcy Court had refused to stop the sale. In regard to Tbyrd's bankruptcy filing, the Bankruptcy Court found that Mr. Wayland was Tbyrd's "principle business decision maker and the sole lawyer. Accordingly, he holds primary responsibility for all of Tbyrd's conduct." Memorandum Opinion, dkt. 79, at 8. Mr. Wayland had his "printed" signature and that of Tim Byrd placed on Tbyrd's voluntary petition. Dkt. 1. Mr. Wayland knew of BFG's bankruptcy case and the hearing scheduled for January 3, 2006, and he had the petition prepared and filed after learning that the real estate foreclosure sale was about to proceed. The Bankruptcy Court found that "Mr. Wayland conducted no investigation into whether the Bankruptcy Court had authorized the sale of BFG's assets." Memorandum Opinion, dkt 79, at 9. "Mr. Wayland knew that he had placed the newly acquired real estate into a corporate shell with no assets. Nevertheless, he caused BFG (sic) to file a chapter 11 petition within three hours of the time that it received the deed." Id. at 10. The Bankruptcy Court also found that Mr. Wayland was not even qualified under the bankruptcy laws to serve as Tbyrd's bankruptcy counsel. Id.

The Bankruptcy Court similarly found Mr. Byrd responsible for the Tbyrd bankruptcy filing. The Bankruptcy Court found that "in the space of a few hours, Mr. Byrd willingly executed a $1,000,000 promissory note by Tbyrd, a deed of trust for recording in the real property records, and Tbyrd's chapter 11 bankruptcy petition. Mr. Byrd conducted no investigation. Instead, he blindly did as instructed by Mr. Wayland." Id. at 10-11. "The court finds him to be a willing actor." Id. at 11.

On March 29, 2006, the Bankruptcy Court entered a memorandum opinion and orders imposing sanctions on the Appellants. Tbyrd dkt. 79, 82, 83. The Bankruptcy Court sanctioned Mr. Wayland $25,000 and Mr. Byrd $5,000. The Bankruptcy Court also sanctioned two other persons who were not parties in the Tbyrd bankruptcy case.[2] Id. The Bankruptcy Court chose to sanction all four persons under its inherent power, but used Fed. R. Bankr. P. 9011(c) for guidance as to the types of sanctions that the could be imposed. Tbyrd dkt. 79, Memorandum Opinion, at 16.

On March 30, 2007, this Court entered its judgment affirming most of the Bankruptcy Court's findings of fact and conclusions of law, and affirming its finding that the Appellants filed the Tbyrd bankruptcy petition in bad faith. Case No. 7:06-cv-87, dkt. 58.

The District Court reversed the Bankruptcy Court's orders in part, however, finding that the Bankruptcy Court had imposed non-compensatory sanctions in a manner that exceeded its inherent authority. Id. The District Court remanded the matter for the Bankruptcy Court to: (i) assess civil monetary sanctions and (ii) determine whether it would be appropriate to certify any criminal contempt to the District Court for the District Court to address. Id.

On remand, the Bankruptcy Court conducted an evidentiary hearing to address the [2] Kelly McKinnis was counsel for BFG; he did not appeal the Bankruptcy Court's first order. John Villegas was a principal of BFG and an appellee in the first appeal. On remand, the Bankruptcy Court held that Rule 9011 did not support sanctions against Mr. Villegas and no appeal has been taken from that ruling.

imposition of sanctions under the Bankruptcy Court's inherent authority and Fed. R. Bankr. P. 9011. After hearing the evidence and arguments, the Bankruptcy Court entered orders declining to certify any criminal contempt to the District Court but imposing civil monetary sanctions. It relied solely upon Fed. R. Bankr. P. 9011 as authority for the sanctions. Tbyrd dkt. 171 through 174.

II. FURTHER COURSE OF THE PROCEEDINGS

On March 20, 2008, this Court conducted a status conference with respect to the earlier appeal, Case No. 7:06-cv-87. In that appeal, the Appellants had filed a post-judgment motion for rehearing, as well as a motion seeking to stay the Bankruptcy Court from proceeding on remand. The Court denied both motions, and concluded that the absence of a stay allowed the Bankruptcy Court to proceed on remand.[3] Dkt. 83, 84.

On March 20, 2008, the Court also conducted a status conference in the instant appeal. The Court granted Mr. Wayland's motion to withdraw as counsel for Mr. Byrd. The Court also

[3] The Appellants filed a notice of appeal to the Fifth Circuit from the post-judgment orders. Because the orders were non-appealable, the notice of appeal to the Fifth Circuit should not have any jurisdictional significance for either the remand or the instant appeal. United States v. Hitchmon, 602 F.2d 689, 694 (5th Cir. 1979) (". .. [F]iling a notice of appeal from a nonappealable order should not divest the district court of jurisdiction . . . The contrary rule leaves the court powerless to prevent intentional dilatory tactics, forecloses without remedy the nonappealing party's right to continuing trial court jurisdiction, and inhibits the smooth and efficient functioning of the judicial process.") The Court's orders were nonappealable because the remand to the Bankruptcy Court rendered the entire matter interlocutory and the Appellants never sought leave to pursue an interlocutory appeal. Indeed, the United States Court of Appeals has also denied the Appellants' petition for writ of mandamus which similarly sought to prevent the Bankruptcy Court from proceeding on remand. Court of Appeals Case No. 07-40770, dkt. entry of Aug. 14, 2007.

established a briefing schedule and scheduled oral argument for June 11, 2008. Minute entry of March 20, 2007.

Mr. Wayland filed an amended brief as appellant on May 4, 2008, to which this Brief responds. Dkt. 14. Mr. Byrd has not filed a brief in support of his appeal, nor did he seek to adopt Mr. Wayland's brief.

III. STATEMENT OF THE FACTS ESTABLISHED ON REMAND

A. The Evidentiary Record on Remand

On remand, the Bankruptcy Court directed the parties to establish a further evidentiary record for the determination of appropriate civil sanctions, if any. The Bankruptcy Court directed the Appellants to file various financial documents with the Bankruptcy Court, including financial statements, tax returns, bank statements, listings of assets, documents reflecting the source of funds used for posting bonds in the cases, and any collateral pledged to secure the bonds. Tbyrd dkt. 144. The Appellants submitted these documents under seal to the Bankruptcy Court. Tbyrd Dkt. 148,149, 150,152. The Bankruptcy Court also directed the United States Trustee, the chapter 7 trustee and the Appellants to file briefs on various issues, including whether sanctions could be imposed under Fed. R. Bankr. P. 9011(c)(1)(B) or under the court's inherent authority against persons who filed or orchestrated the filing of, a chapter 11 petition in bad faith, and how such sanctions should be determined. Tbyrd dkt. 144, 158 through 159.

On September 18, 2007, the Bankruptcy Court conducted an evidentiary hearing regarding the imposition of civil sanctions under either the Court's inherent authority or Fed. R. Civ. P. 9011. As a preliminary matter, the Bankruptcy Court granted an unopposed request by the United States Trustee to carry forward the evidence from the original March 8, 2006 evidentiary hearing for the purpose of determining appropriate sanctions on remand. Transcript at 12-13. At the September 18, 2007 hearing, each of the Appellants then testified regarding their respective backgrounds, employment, health, and financial conditions. Transcript, at 13-34 (Mr. Wayland) and 34-43 (Mr. Byrd). Additionally, Mr. Wayland introduced various exhibits into evidence, including a promissory note with which he obtained funds for an appeal bond, certain medical documentation, and checking account information. Id. at 27-28.

B. Mr. Wayland's Testimony Regarding his Conduct and Appropriate Sanctions

During the evidentiary hearing, Mr. Wayland testified regarding his acceptance of responsibility for the Tbyrd filing:

> Q: Mr. Wayland, you obviously reviewed the initial opinion that was issued from the March the 8th, 2006 hearing?
> A: Yes.
> Q: And you understand the Court's concerns in the findings regarding your role and the role of the other respondents in the Tbyrd bankruptcy case?
> A: I do now.
> Q: And you understand that the Court's factual findings regarding the rule have been upheld by the district court on appeal?
> A: Yes I do.
> Q: Do you accept responsibility for the conduct that was found to have occurred by the Court?
> A: Yes I do.
> Q: And you understand that your acceptance of that responsibility may, and in all probability will, have additional consequences?
> A: Yes, I understand.

Transcript at 13-14.

Mr. Wayland also testified regarding the sanctions that he might be able to pay:

> The Court: And although you think that you should pay Mr. Statham's fees, you don't think that I can order it and you haven't voluntarily paid the fees to him: is that right?
> The Witness: (No verbal response)
> The Court : So I can't order it and make you do it and you haven't agreed to voluntarily do it but you think it's the right thing to do?
> The Witness: Your Honor, I would love to end everything today and I would be willing to agree to that today.
> The Court: I'm not making a compromise. What I want to know is: what are you taking responsibility for? Have you voluntarily agreed to pay his fees?
> The Witness: Your honor, I have offered numerous times to his office and when he gets up here, I will ask him on the stand to try and settle this thing.
> The Court: I'm not talking about whether you've trying to settle, I want to know whether you're taking responsibility independently here?
> The Witness: I've offered him more than the amount to try and take responsibility for that.
> The Court: Have you paid him anything?
> The Witness: Your Honor, it - - his response to me is his office was unwilling to accept my offer. I offered him $ 10,000. [4]

Transcript at 33-34. During closing argument, Mr. Wayland then repeated his willingness to resolve the sanctions issue for the sum of $10,000, requesting ". . . that the Court take into consideration, you know, our limited financial resources and, again, to lay, as an offer or judgment of such, the $10,000." Transcript at 82.

C. Mr. Byrd's Testimony Regarding His Culpability

Mr. Byrd also testified regarding his culpability for the filing of the Tbyrd bankruptcy petition:

> The Court: Anything you want to add?
> The Witness: No, I think I've said - - just apologize to you and the Court for anything I may have done wrong.
> The Court: What did you think you did wrong?

[4] It was the position of the United States Trustee that he could not unilaterally compromise the Bankruptcy Court's show cause order.

> The Witness: I don't know. I mean, at the time - - I mean, I understand what your statement was but at the time it occurred, I didn't deliberately do it.
> The Court: But looking back, do you think you did - - I mean, I understand you're apologizing but do you have any idea what you're apologizing for, for what you did wrong?
> The Witness: Yes.
> The Court: What is it?
> The Witness: That I shouldn't have acted as the agent when I sold it. I'm kind of confused on this thing, your Honor.
> The Court: What I'm concerned about is: if you don't know what you did wrong, how are you going to know not to do it again?
> The Witness: well, I'm just stating that I went on the advice of an attorney who relied on the advice of another attorney that what I was doing at the time was legal or else I wouldn't have got involved with anything.
> The Court: I understand that part but it sounds like you don't know - - you're apologizing because somebody told you to apologize but you don't know what you did wrong; it that - -
> The Witness: I'm apologizing because the Court feels like I did something wrong or ruled that I did something wrong.
> The Court: And what did you do wrong?
> The Witness: All this legal stuff is just over my head, Your Honor.
> The Court: All right, sir. You can step down, Mr. Byrd.

Transcript at 42-43. At the conclusion of closing arguments, the Court commented on Mr. Byrd's testimony:

> "And it's the wrong answer that you won't trust any lawyer when, Mr. Byrd, if you're asked to serve in a capacity that you know you can't serve in and when you know you have nothing to do with the entity and when you know you're just a straw man for somebody else, you know it was wrong when you did it . . . ."

D. The Bankruptcy Court's Ruling

On December 7, 2007, the Bankruptcy Court issued its Memorandum Opinion and orders on remand. Tbyrd dkt. 171, 172, 174. The Bankruptcy court found that the "sole purpose of the filing of Tbyrd's bankruptcy purpose was to stop a planned foreclosure sale by Texas State Bank." Memorandum Opinion at 3. "There is no question that the filing of the chapter 11 petition was done in bad faith in violation of Rule 9011. The reasons why this Court determined the filing to be in bad faith, which were affirmed by the District Court, are patent. The conduct was directly under taken . . . by Wayland and Byrd." Id. at 10.

The Bankruptcy Court acknowledged Mr. Byrd's financial limitations when imposing sanctions, but held that a $5,000 sanction was nonetheless necessary for deterrence of such conduct by Mr. Byrd in the future:

> ". . . [T]he Court concludes that Byrd's expressions of remorse were insincere. Byrd completely failed to grasp his own wrongdoing. He had apparently decided to express remorse, only because such expressions are expected in a sanctions hearing. He had no comprehension of his own conduct or why it was wrong. Meaningful remorse would require a sufficient amount of inquiry to assure that one did not repeat the wrongful conduct . . . The Court rejects his expressions of remorse. His future conduct will not be deterred in the absence of a monetary sanction. The Court imposes monetary sanctions against Byrd to assure he will finally inquire as to why his conduct was wrong. The Court originally imposed a $5,000 sanction against Byrd. Given his financial situation, that is a substantial sanction. It is imposed solely for his conduct that violated Rule 9011. It is necessary for deterrence. No adjustment is appropriate."

Id. at 13. In contrast, the Bankruptcy Court accepted Mr. Wayland's expressions of remorse. The Bankruptcy Court also accepted Mr. Wayland's "offer" of $10,000 as an appropriate sanction, concluding that it was a sufficient sanction to deter others who may be similarly situated:

> ". . . Wayland requested that this Court reduce the sanction against him from $25,000 to $10,000. The Court finds that request reasonable and a bona fide acceptance of responsibility, assuming it is carried to fruition. The Court is aware that a State Bar Disciplinary proceeding has been commenced against Wayland arising out of his conduct in this case. That proceeding along with a $10,000 sanction is sufficient to deter others who are similarly situated."

SUMMARY OF THE ARGUMENT

The Bankruptcy Court previously found, and this Court affirmed, that the Tbyrd bankruptcy petition was filed in bad faith. On remand, Mr. Wayland acknowledged his responsibility for the filing of the bad faith petition. Mr. Byrd purported to do the same, though with little remorse. The Bankruptcy Court then imposed civil sanctions under Fed. R. Bankr. P. 9011. Mr. Wayland now argues that the Rule 9011 sanctions are impermissible "criminal contempt orders" that exceed the Bankruptcy Court's jurisdiction. That objection must fail for two reasons.

First, the Bankruptcy Court expressly rejected any conclusion that the Appellants engaged in criminal contempt, and instead imposed sanctions under the strict requirements of Fed. R. Bankr. P. 9011(c)2). The Bankruptcy Court carefully reviewed the Appellants' financial situation, their understanding of their actions, and their willingness to accept responsibility for those actions. The Bankruptcy Court then limited the monetary penalties to those amounts necessary to achieve the deterrence function required under Rule 9011, in this case $10,000 to be paid by Mr. Wayland and $5,000 to be paid by Mr. Byrd. The Bankruptcy Court fully complied with the dictates of Rule 9011(c)(2).

Second, Mr. Wayland argues that the sanctions are impermissible "criminal contempt" sanctions under case law interpreting federal courts' "inherent authority." Because the Bankruptcy Court properly imposed sanctions under Rule 9011, case law limiting sanctions under the courts' "inherent authority" does not apply. The Bankruptcy Court therefore did not exceed its jurisdiction by imposing criminal contempt sanctions.

ARGUMENT

I. THE BANKRUPTCY COURT IMPOSED APPROPRIATE CIVIL SANCTIONS ON THE APPELLANTS UNDER FED. R. BANKR. P. 9011

______Mr. Wayland and Mr. Byrd were both responsible for the bad faith filing of Tbyrd's bankruptcy petition. Tbyrd Dkt. 171, Memorandum Opinion, at 10. Federal Rule of Bankruptcy Procedure 9011 provides a mechanism for bankruptcy courts to impose sanctions on attorneys and parties who present a petition to the court "for any improper purpose, such as to harass or to cause unnecessary delay or needless expense in the cost of litigation; . . . ." Fed. R. Bankr. P. 9011(b)(1). Sanctions may be sought by motion or imposed on the court's own initiative. Fed. R. Bankr. P. 9011(c)(1). But the sanctions must be appropriate. This appeal raises the issue of whether the Bankruptcy Court imposed sanctions of the type and nature prescribed under Rule 9011(c)(2).

Sanctions imposed under Fed. R. Bankr. P. 9011 are, like sanctions under Fed. R. Civ. P. 11, reviewed "under the abuse of discretion standard." Krim v. First City Bancorporation Inc. (In re First City Bancorporation Inc.), 282 F.3d 864, 867 (5th Cir. 2002) (per curium); In re Dragoo, 186 F.3d 614, 616 (5th Cir. 1999); Keiter v. Straka, 192 B.R. 150, 154 (S.D. Tex. 1996). The lower court "would necessarily abuse its discretion if it based its ruling on an erroneous view of the law or on a clearly erroneous assessment of the evidence." Cooter & Gell v. Hartmarx Corp., 496 U.S. 384, 405 (1990).

The abuse of discretion standard of review has a solid basis in the policies that underlay

Rule 11. The trial court

> ". . . is best acquainted with the local bar's litigation practices and thus best situated to determine when a sanction is warranted to serve Rule 11's goal of specific and general deterrence. Deference to the determination of courts on the front lines of litigation will enhance these courts' ability to control litigants before them. Such deference will streamline the litigation process by freeing appellate courts from the duty of reweighing evidence and reconsidering facts already weighed and considered by the [lower] court; it will also discourage litigants from pursuing marginal appeals, thus reducing the amount of satellite litigation."

Id. at 404; see also Whitehead v. Food Max of Miss., Inc., 332 F.3d 796, 803 (5th Cir. 2003)(quoting Cooter & Gell) . Nonetheless, the trial court's discretion is necessarily limited by Rule 9011 itself.

Rule 9011(c)(2) prescribes the sanctions that may be imposed for violations of the rule:

> "A sanction imposed for violation of this rule shall be limited to what is sufficient to deter repetition of such conduct or comparable conduct by others similarly situated. Subject to the limitations in subparagraphs (A) and (B), the sanction may consist of, or include, directives of a nonmonetary nature, an order to pay a penalty into court, or, if imposed on motion and warranted for effective deterrence, an order directing payment to the movant of some or all of the reasonable attorneys' fees and other expenses incurred as a direct result of the violation."

(emphasis added). Rule 9011 thus expressly authorizes the Bankruptcy Court to order the payment of a penalty into the court. That penalty, however, must be limited to what is sufficient to deter repetition of the conduct either by the person being sanctioned or by others similarly situated.

On remand, the Bankruptcy Court's rulings were based on a thorough evidentiary record, including extensive exhibits and testimony from the Appellants regarding their respective backgrounds, employment, health, and financial conditions. See especially Transcript, at 13-34

(Mr. Wayland) and 34-43 (Mr. Byrd). Most important, the Bankruptcy Court carefully reviewed the Appellants' conduct as well as their understanding of that conduct and the deterrent function to be served by any sanction. See Memorandum Opinion, at 2-3, 13-14.

The Bankruptcy Court considered Mr. Wayland's apparent acceptance of responsibility and concluded that a $10,000 sanction, together with a State Bar Disciplinary proceeding that had been commenced against him, would be sufficient to deter others who were similarly situated. Memorandum Opinion at 14. This sanction was a sixty percent reduction of the previous, $25,000 sanction imposed on Mr. Wayland. More important, the sanction was the very same amount that Mr. Wayland himself offered to pay. September 18, 2007 Transcript, at 33-34, 82. Mr. Wayland's characterization of the sanction as a "scorch earth policy" in his Brief (at p. 6) is thus contradicted by his own testimony at trial. Consequently, this Court should conclude that the Bankruptcy Court did not abuse its discretion in imposing a sanction of that amount.

When determining Mr. Byrd's sanction, the Bankruptcy Court considered both his conduct and his financial condition. The Bankruptcy Court had previously imposed a $5,000 sanction on Mr. Byrd. Order, Tbyrd dkt. 82. On remand, the Bankruptcy Court considered his lack of remorse for his own improper conduct and, most important, his apparent failure to have ever inquired as to what he had done wrong. Transcript at 42-43; Memorandum Opinion at 13. While the Bankruptcy Court found that Mr. Byrd had limited financial means, the Court concluded that anything less that a $5,000 sanction would not have a sufficient deterrent effect on Mr. Byrd. Id. Insofar as the prior $5,000 sanction had not already caused Mr. Byrd to reflect seriously upon his actions in the Tbyrd, it can hardly be maintained that a lesser sum would have the required effect. This Court should therefore also conclude that the sanction of Mr. Byrd was also not an abuse of discretion.

II. THE BANKRUPTCY COURT DID NOT EXCEED ITS JURISDICTION BY IMPOSING "CRIMINAL CONTEMPT" SANCTIONS USING ITS INHERENT AUTHORITY

Mr. Wayland asserts that the Bankruptcy Court exceeded its authority by imposing "criminal contempt" sanctions using its inherent authority. Amended Brief, at xx, 3-8. The Bankruptcy Court, however, did not base its sanctions on its inherent authority, and only imposed sanctions under Rule 9011. Rule 9011 precisely defines the conduct that is subject to that rule, and it also prescribes the sanctions that a court may impose based on such conduct. The Bankruptcy Court followed the requirements of Rule 9011(c)(2) in imposing sanctions and, because the payment of penalties to the Bankruptcy Court is expressly authorized by Rule 9011(c)(2), the sanctions are not "criminal contempt" sanctions merely because they are payable to the Bankruptcy Court. Indeed, the Bankruptcy Court expressly determined that there was no criminal contempt and therefore declined to certify such an issue to this Court. The Bankruptcy Court therefore did not exceed its jurisdiction by imposing "criminal contempt" sanctions on the Appellants.

CONCLUSION

For these reasons, the United States Trustee respectfully asks this Court to affirm the Bankruptcy Court's ruling following remand.

JURISDICTIONAL STATEMENT

On December 7, 2007, the United States Bankruptcy Court for the Southern District of Texas entered orders imposing civil sanctions against appellants Thomas G. Wayland and Timothy W. Byrd pursuant to Fed. R. Bankr. P. 9011. The bankruptcy court had jurisdiction over that proceeding under 28 U.S.C. §§ 157 and 1334. On December 17, 2007, Mr. Wayland and Mr. Byrd filed timely notices of appeal to the United States District Court for the Southern District of Texas under 28 U.S.C. § 158(c)(2) and Fed. R. Bankr. P. 8002(a). On September 30, 2008, the district court entered a final order affirming the orders of the bankruptcy court. On October 10, 2008, Mr. Wayland and Mr. Byrd filed timely notices of appeal to this Court under Fed. R. App. P. 4(a)(1)(B). This Court has jurisdiction pursuant to 28 U.S.C. §§ 158(d)(1) and 1291.

STATEMENT OF THE ISSUES PRESENTED FOR REVIEW

Although Mr. Wayland's brief purports to identify seven issues on appeal, his opening brief, which was subsequently adopted by Mr. Byrd, consolidates those seven issues into the following four distinct questions:

1. Did the bankruptcy court commit clear error when it concluded that Mr. Wayland violated Fed. R. Bankr. P. 9011?

2. Did the bankruptcy court have subject matter jurisdiction under 28

U.S.C. §§ 157 and 1334 to enter a final order sanctioning Mr. Wayland under Fed. R. Bankr. P. 9011?

3. Did the sanctions order entered by the bankruptcy court under Fed. R. Bankr. P. 9011 constitute a finding of criminal contempt, which the bankruptcy court lacked authority to determine?

4. Did the district court lack jurisdiction to remand the bankruptcy court's initial order for further proceedings regarding monetary sanctions, under the rule announced by this Court in United States v. Coscarelli, 149 F.3d 342 (5th Cir. 1998) (en banc)?

STATEMENT OF THE CASE

On January 3, 2006, TByrd, Enterprises, LLC ("TByrd") filed a voluntary petition for relief in the United States Bankruptcy Court for the Southern District of Texas under chapter 11 of the United States Bankruptcy Code, 11 U.S.C. §§ 101-1532 (the "Bankruptcy Code"). [TByrd Dkt. 1].[1] Mr. Wayland and Mr. Byrd each signed TByrd's chapter 11 petition. [Id.]. On February 8, 2008, the bankruptcy court issued an order to show cause why Mr. Wayland and Mr. Byrd should not be sanctioned for filing the TByrd bankruptcy petition in bad faith. [TByrd Dkt. 39]. On March 13, 2006, following an evidentiary hearing, the bankruptcy court issued orders imposing monetary and non-monetary sanctions against Mr. Wayland and Mr. Byrd. [TByrd Dkt. 82, 83]. On March 30, 2007, the district court entered an order affirming the bankruptcy court's factual findings and the non-monetary sanctions, but remanding the matter for further proceedings regarding the monetary portion of the sanctions order. [Dist. Ct., Case No. 06-00087, Dkt. 58]. On December 7, 2007, following an additional evidentiary hearing on remand, the bankruptcy court again imposed civil monetary sanctions against Mr. Wayland and Mr. Byrd under Fed. R. Bankr. P. 9011. [TByrd Dkt. 172, 174]. On September 30, 2008, the district court affirmed the bankruptcy court's order following remand. [Dist. Ct., Case No. 07-00304, Dkt. 29]. This appeal followed.

STATEMENT OF THE FACTS

_____This appeal arises out of a scheme to circumvent the authority of the United States Bankruptcy Court in one case through the filing of a bad faith chapter 11 petition in another case. The bankruptcy court imposed modest monetary sanctions against Mr. Wayland and Mr. Byrd after determining that they were willing participants in that scheme, and Mr. Wayland and Mr. Byrd now appeal from that order.

1. Mr. Wayland and Mr. Byrd participate in a scheme to circumvent the authority of the bankruptcy court through the unauthorized transfer of estate assets.

In March 1, 2005, BFG Investments, LLC ("BFG") filed a petition for chapter 11 relief in the United States Bankruptcy Court for the Southern District of Texas, docketed as case no. 05-70173. At the time of its bankruptcy filing, BFG was a real estate investment company that owned certain properties encumbered by liens in favor of Texas State Bank ("TSB"). See Mar. 8, 2006 Tr. at 93 [TByrd Dkt. 100] (testimony of Mr. Villegas). John E. Villegas was the equity owner and principal manager of BFG. Id. at 92. BFG was represented by Kelly K. McKinnis as its bankruptcy counsel. Id. at 149 (testimony of Mr. McKinnis).

On April 11, 2005, the bankruptcy court entered an agreed order authorizing BFG to use collateral in which TSB had a security interest, subject to certain conditions designed to protect the interests of TSB. [BFG Dkt. 10, Ex. 1]. Although 11 U.S.C. § 362(a) ordinarily prohibits secured creditors from exercising any remedies against the property of debtors in bankruptcy, one of the terms of the cash collateral order was that a default by BFG would permit TSB to proceed with a foreclosure action without any further action by the bankruptcy court. [Id.].

After BFG violated the cash collateral agreement by failing to maintain insurance on the properties subject to TSB's security interest, TSB declared BFG in default and posted those properties for foreclosure pursuant to the terms of that order. In response, BFG obtained an ex parte temporary restraining order in state court that enjoined the foreclosure. TSB then removed BFG's state court injunction action to the bankruptcy court, which issued an agreed temporary stay and scheduled a hearing on BFG's request for a preliminary injunction for January 3, 2006, at 8:30 a.m. [BFG Dkt. 12].

Mr. Villegas later testified that he prepared to place BFG's property beyond the reach of TSB if, as seemed likely, the bankruptcy court denied his request for injunctive relief. See Mar. 8, 2006 Tr. at 94 (testimony of Mr. Villegas). Mr. Villegas's plan was to "buy some time" by engineering an undisclosed sale of virtually all of BFG's assets to a third party, which would immediately file a bankruptcy petition of its own. Id. at 100. Mr. Villegas apparently hoped that his stratagem would delay TSB's ability to exercise its foreclosure rights, since the purchaser's bankruptcy filing would give rise to a fresh automatic stay under 11 U.S.C. § 362(a) from which TSB would be forced to seek relief.[2]

[2] Section 362(a) of the Bankruptcy Code provides that the filing of a bankruptcy petition "operates as a stay, applicable to all entities, of . . . any act to obtain possession of property of the estate or of property from the estate or to exercise control over property of the estate." 11 U.S.C. § 362(a)(3). As a result, a secured creditor generally may not enforce its state law foreclosure remedies against property in the debtor's possession unless, after notice and a hearing, it obtains an order from the bankruptcy court granting it relief from the automatic stay. 11 U.S.C. § 362(d).

Mr. Villegas's strategy had at least one major flaw. As the bankruptcy court later concluded, it violated the Bankruptcy Code and gave rise to possible criminal violations. [TByrd Dkt. 79 at 12-13]. Under 11 U.S.C. § 363, bankruptcy debtors are prohibited from disposing of assets outside the ordinary course of business absent bankruptcy court approval, which Mr. Villegas did not seek to obtain. The diversion of assets from a bankruptcy estate is also a federal criminal offense under 18 U.S.C. § 152, which prohibits the transfer or receipt of property with the intent of defeating the provisions of the Bankruptcy Code. In addition, under 18 U.S.C. § 157, it is a crime to file a bankruptcy petition for the purpose of executing or concealing a fraud.

In the days leading up to the January 3, 2006 hearing, Mr. Villegas sought to recruit partners who would assist his scheme by taking title to the BFG assets. Id. at 97. Mr. Villegas found such partners in Mr.Wayland and Mr. Byrd. Mr. Wayland is an attorney whose practice includes the acquisition of distressed properties on behalf of foreign investors. Id. at 27 (testimony of Mr. Wayland). Mr. Byrd was a former client and occasional employee of Mr. Wayland who owned TByrd, a dormant corporate shell that, as of late 2005, had no assets or business. Id. at 83-84, 87 (testimony of Mr. Byrd). On or about December 31, 2005, Mr. Byrd sold the TByrd shell for $1,000 to a foreign client of Mr. Wayland.

Id. at 85. Mr. Wayland made this purchase under a power of attorney that authorized him to locate and invest in assets on his client's behalf. Id. at 29, 32 (testimony of Mr. Wayland).

During the night of January 2, 2006, on the eve of the bankruptcy court's hearing on BFG's motion for an injunction, Mr. Villegas and Mr. Wayland reached an agreement for BFG to sell substantially all of its assets to TByrd in exchange for a promissory note and deed of trust. Id. at 23. Mr. Wayland negotiated this sale despite the fact that he was aware both that BFG was a debtor in a bankruptcy case, and that a preliminary injunction hearing regarding those same assets was scheduled for the next morning. Id. at 25-26.

Mr. Byrd, acting at Mr. Wayland's direction, signed the deed of trust and promissory note as president of TByrd. Id. at 85-86 (testimony of Mr. Byrd). Mr. Byrd testified that he agreed to execute these documents in return for Mr. Wayland's promise to pay him $1,500 and to hire him at $20 per hour for website design services. Id. at 66 (testimony of Mr. Wayland); 86 (testimony of Mr. Byrd).

2. Immediately after acquiring the assets of BFG, Mr. Wayland and Mr. Byrd cause TByrd to file its own bankruptcy petition.

At the injunction hearing held on January 3, 2006, Mr. Villegas testified but did not disclose to the bankruptcy court that BFG had purportedly sold the properties on which TSB was seeking to foreclose. Id. at 126 (testimony of Mr. Villegas). At that hearing, the bankruptcy court concluded that BFG had breached its agreement with TSB, lifted its temporary stay, and denied BFG's request for an injunction. [BFG Dkt. 14]. As he left the hearing, Mr. Villegas telephoned Mr. Wayland and demanded that he immediately place TByrd into bankruptcy. See Mar. 8, 2006 Tr. at 39 (testimony of Mr. Wayland). Mr. Wayland complied with this request, and at 9:55 a.m. on January 3, 2006, TByrd filed a petition for chapter 11 bankruptcy relief, just five minutes before the start of the scheduled foreclosure sale of the BFG properties. [TByrd Dkt. 1].

At the time that it filed for chapter 11 relief, TByrd had no capital, no employees, and no books and records. TByrd's only assets were the properties it acquired within hours of its bankruptcy filing, and its only debt was the promissory note it issued in connection with that transaction. As the bankruptcy court later concluded, the "sole purpose" of the TByrd bankruptcy petition was "to achieve delay and to find a way to avoid the effects of the orders issued in BFG's bankruptcy case." [TByrd Dkt. 79 at 15] .

The TByrd bankruptcy petition also contained at least two misstatements that had the effect of concealing the true roles of Mr. Wayland and Mr. Byrd. Mr.

Wayland signed the chapter 11 petition as TByrd's attorney, without disclosing that he held a power of attorney that effectively made him TByrd's sole decision maker. Had Mr. Wayland disclosed this fact, he would have been precluded from acting as TByrd's attorney under section 327 of the Bankruptcy Code, which provides that only attorneys who are disinterested may represent chapter 11 debtors.[3] The TByrd petition was also signed by Mr. Byrd, who inaccurately represented that he was the "managing member" of TByrd. [TByrd Dkt. 1].

TSB learned of the sale of the BFG assets and TByrd's bankruptcy at approximately 11:30 a.m. on January 3, 2006, when, at Mr. Wayland's direction, a legal assistant employed by Mr. McKinnis met the representatives of TSB at the foreclosure sale and presented them with a copy of the deed to TByrd and the TByrd bankruptcy petition. See Mar. 8, 2006 Tr. at 44 (testimony of Mr. Wayland). As a result of Mr. Wayland's actions, the foreclosure sale of the BFG properties did not go forward. Id.

On January 9, 2006, TSB filed a motion in the TByrd bankruptcy case

[3] Under section 327 of the Bankruptcy Code, a chapter 11 debtor may employ attorneys "that do not hold or represent an interest adverse to the estate, and that are disinterested." 11 U.S.C. §327(a). The Bankruptcy Code further defines "disinterested person" as a person who, among other things, is not an "insider" of the debtor. 11 U.S.C. §101(14)(A). The term "insider," in turn, includes a "person in control of the debtor" if the debtor is a corporation or partnership. 11 U.S.C. §101(31)(B)(iv), (C)(v). The bankruptcy court found, and Mr. Wayland appears not to dispute, that Mr. Wayland was not "disinterested" and was consequently ineligible for employment as an attorney under these provisions. [TByrd Dkt. 79 at 10].

seeking relief from the automatic stay in order to take possession of the BFG assets. [TByrd Dkt. 11]. Despite the fact that the BFG assets were also the only assets of TByrd, Mr. Wayland did not appear at the hearing on TSB's motion and did not file any opposition to TSB's request for relief. On January 10, 2006, the TByrd bankruptcy court entered orders granting TSB's motion and giving TSB immediate possession of the properties illegally transferred to TByrd. [TByrd Dkt. 12, 13].

3. The bankruptcy court sanctions the participants in the BFG-TByrd transactions, including Mr. Wayland and Mr. Byrd.

On January 25, 2006, the United States Trustee filed a motion in the TByrd bankruptcy case for an order to show cause why TByrd, BFG, Mr. Byrd, Mr. Wayland, Mr. Villegas, and Mr. McKinnis should not be sanctioned pursuant to Fed. R. Bankr. P. 9011 ("Rule 9011") for their misconduct relating to BFG and TByrd. [TByrd Dkt. 79].[4] On February 8, 2006, the bankruptcy court granted the United States Trustee's motion and scheduled an evidentiary hearing for March 8, [4] The United States Trustee Program is the component of the Department of Justice that enforces federal bankruptcy law. See H.R. Rep. No. 95-595 at 110 (1977) (describing United States Trustees' "obligation to execute and enforce the bankruptcy laws"). Among other duties, United States Trustees are authorized to commence "proceedings in the bankruptcy courts in particular cases in which a particular action taken or proposed to be taken deviate[d] from the standards established by the . . . bankruptcy code." H.R. Rep. No. 95-989 at 88, 109 (1977), quoted in In re A-1 Trash Pickup, 802 F.2d 774, 775 (4th Cir. 1986). 2006 on whether sanctions should be issued. [TByrd Dkt. 39]. At that hearing, the bankruptcy court heard sworn testimony from Mr. Wayland, Mr. Byrd, Mr. Villegas, and Mr. McKinnis regarding the circumstances of the sale of BFG's assets to TByrd and the subsequent TByrd bankruptcy filing.

On March 13, 2006, the bankruptcy court issued an order imposing sanctions against all four individual respondents (the "First Sanctions Order"). [TByrd Dkt. 79].[5] That order contained, among other things, the following findings of fact relating to Mr. Wayland and Mr. Byrd, none of which Mr. Wayland and Mr. Byrd appear to dispute:

- Acting through his power of attorney, Mr. Wayland was "the principal business decision maker and the sole lawyer" for TByrd at all times relevant to the events in question. Mr. Wayland made the decisions to have TByrd acquire BFG's assets and file a bankruptcy petition. Id. at 8.
- Although Mr. Wayland knew that BFG was a debtor in bankruptcy and was aware of the preliminary injunction hearing, he "conducted no investigation into whether the Bankruptcy Court had authorized the sale of BFG's assets."

[5] Due to a clerical error by the clerk of the bankruptcy court, the First Sanctions Order initially was entered on the docket of the BFG preliminary injunction proceeding, and it was from that order that Mr. Wayland and Mr. Byrd appealed. On March 29, 2006, the clerk of the bankruptcy court corrected its error and entered the First Sanctions Order on the TByrd bankruptcy docket.

Id. at 10.

- TByrd's bankruptcy petition, which stated that Mr. Byrd was TByrd's "Managing Member," was false because Mr. Wayland, and not Mr. Byrd, was the only person with actual authority over TByrd. Id. at 10.
- Mr. Wayland signed the TByrd bankruptcy petition as its attorney despite the fact that, as the person in control of TByrd, he was not "disinterested" and therefore ineligible to serve as counsel to a chapter 11 debtor under 11 U.S.C. § 327. Mr. Wayland failed to disclose his true relation to TByrd to the bankruptcy court. Id.
- Mr. Byrd signed the documents relating to TByrd's purchase of the BFG assets and the factually inaccurate TByrd bankruptcy petition without conducting any investigation. Instead, Mr. Byrd, who understood that he was being used as a straw man, "blindly did as instructed by Mr. Wayland." Id. at 11. Mr. Byrd did so "in exchange for money" because Mr. Wayland had promised to retain him as a consultant for TByrd. Id. at 22. Despite his claims of ignorance, Mr. Byrd was a "willing actor" in the BFG-TByrd fraud. Id. at 11.

The bankruptcy court imposed monetary sanctions of $25,000 against Mr. Villegas, $25,000 against Mr. Wayland, $5,000 against Mr. Byrd, and $5,000 against Mr. McKinnis. Id. at 19-23. In Mr. Wayland's case, the bankruptcy court further found that his conduct would have justified a much higher sanction, but exercised its discretion to impose a smaller sanction based on Mr. Wayland's limited financial resources. Id. at 21. In addition, the bankruptcy court issued an injunction requiring Mr. Villegas and Mr. Byrd to obtain advance, written court approval before filing any future bankruptcy petitions. The bankruptcy court referred Mr. Wayland and Mr. McKinnis to the state and federal bar authorities for possible professional discipline, and issued a criminal referral of Mr. Wayland and Mr. Villegas to the United States Attorney. Id. at 19, 22.[6]

Although the United States Trustee's motion to show cause had requested sanctions under Rule 9011, the First Sanctions Order appeared to rely on a separate source of sanctioning authority, the inherent powers of the bankruptcy court. See Chambers v. NASCO, Inc., 501 U.S. 32 (1991). The First Sanctions Order did not expressly reach the issue of whether sanctions were also appropriate under Rule 9011.

[6] The bankruptcy court referred Mr. Villegas and Mr. Wayland to the United States Attorney pursuant to 18 U.S.C. § 3057, which requires a bankruptcy judge to report criminal conduct to the United States attorney whenever he has a "reasonable grounds for believing" that a party has committed a federal bankruptcy crime under 18 U.S.C. §§ 151-158.

4. On remand, the bankruptcy court issues a second order clarifying the basis for the civil monetary sanctions against Mr. Wayland and Mr. Byrd.

All sanctioned parties except Mr. McKinnis appealed the First Sanctions Order to the United States District Court. The United States filed a brief in partial support of the bankruptcy court's ruling. [Dist. Ct., Case No. 06-00087, Dkt. No. 44]. Although the United States defended the bankruptcy court's factual findings, it requested that the district court remand the case in order for the bankruptcy court to clarify the basis for its ruling in light of In re Hipp, Inc., 895 F.2d 1503, 1509 (5th Cir. 1990), a decision by this Court that limits the power of bankruptcy courts in this circuit to impose criminal penalties under its inherent powers. Accordingly, the United States requested the district court order remand in order for the bankruptcy court to determine whether it could order civil sanctions under Rule 9011.

The district court conducted a consolidated hearing on the appeals on March 29, 2007. On March 30, 2007, the district court affirmed the First Sanctions Order with the exception of the portion of that order that imposed monetary sanctions. [Dist. Ct., Case No. 06-00087, Dkt. No. 58]. The district court remanded the order to the bankruptcy court to consider two issues: (1) whether civil monetary sanctions should be assessed, and (2) whether any criminal contempt issue should be certified to the district court.

Mr. Wayland and Mr. Byrd filed a motion for rehearing in the district court and a motion to stay the remand to the bankruptcy court, both of which the district court denied. [Dist. Ct., Case No. 06-00087, Dkt. No. 83, 84]. Mr. Wayland and Mr. Byrd subsequently attempted to appeal the district court's interlocutory order denying rehearing to this Court. This Court dismissed that appeal due to lack of jurisdiction on August 18, 2008.

On remand, the bankruptcy court conducted a further evidentiary hearing to consider sanctions against Mr. Villegas, Mr. Wayland, and Mr. Byrd. On December 7, 2007, after hearing the evidence and arguments, the bankruptcy court issued an order in which it clarified that the basis for the civil monetary sanctions against Mr. Wayland and Mr. Byrd was Rule 9011, and declined to certify a criminal contempt matter to the district court (the "Second Sanctions Order"). [TByrd Dkt. 171]. The court withdrew the monetary sanction against Mr. Villegas and reduced Mr. Wayland's Rule 9011 sanction to $10,000, based on his perceived remorse. Because the bankruptcy court concluded that Mr. Byrd's remorse was not sincere, it did not reduce the $5,000 sanction against Mr. Byrd.

On September 30, 2008, the district court affirmed the Second Sanctions Order. [Dist. Ct., Case No. 07-00304, Dkt. 29]. On October 10, 2008, Mr.

Wayland and Mr. Byrd filed a timely notice of appeal to this Court.[7]

STATEMENT OF THE STANDARD OF REVIEW

This Court reviews the district court's affirmance of the bankruptcy court's Rule 9011 order "by applying the same standard of review to the bankruptcy court decision that the district court applied." In re Martinez, 564 F.3d 719, 725 (5th Cir. 2009). Accordingly, this Court reviews the bankruptcy court's conclusions of law de novo. In re First City Bancorporation of Texas, Inc., 282 F.3d 864, 867 (5th Cir. 2002). The bankruptcy court's findings of fact must be upheld unless they are clearly erroneous. Id. The Court reviews the bankruptcy court's decision to impose sanctions under Rule 9011 for abuse of discretion. Id. Under that standard, the bankruptcy court's sanctions must be upheld unless this Court determines that the bankruptcy court's ruling "is based on an erroneous view of the law or on a clearly erroneous assessment of the evidence." Id. (internal citation omitted).

SUMMARY OF ARGUMENT

The bankruptcy court did not err by imposing Rule 9011 sanctions against Mr. Wayland and Mr. Byrd. As the undisputed evidence of this case demonstrates, Mr. Wayland and Mr. Byrd engaged in a serious abuse of the bankruptcy process, first by assisting Mr. Villegas in his unlawful scheme to conceal the assets of BFG, and afterwards by filing an inaccurate bankruptcy petition in a bad faith effort to frustrate the bankruptcy court's order permitting TSB to foreclose on its collateral. Under these circumstances, the bankruptcy court did not abuse its discretion in concluding that monetary Rule 9011 sanctions were warranted.

[7] Mr. Villegas did not appeal the Second Sanctions Order and is not a party to this appeal.

Mr. Wayland and Mr. Byrd have not demonstrated that the bankruptcy court's finding that they violated Rule 9011 was clearly erroneous. The bankruptcy court made numerous specific and independent factual findings regarding the intentional nature of Mr. Wayland and Mr. Byrd's misconduct, all of which are amply supported by the sworn testimony and evidence in the record below. Mr. Wayland and Mr. Byrd have not identified any instance in which the bankruptcy court misconstrued a fact or overlooked relevant evidence. Furthermore, despite their attempt to portray the decision to place TByrd into bankruptcy as a legitimate legal tactic that was made in good faith, there was a sufficient evidentiary basis for the bankruptcy court to conclude otherwise. Accordingly, there is no basis to overturn the bankruptcy court's factual findings regarding Mr. Wayland and Mr. Byrd's misconduct.

The bankruptcy court had subject matter jurisdiction to sanction Mr.

Wayland and Mr. Byrd. Under the bankruptcy jurisdictional scheme established by title 28, United States Code, a proceeding for sanctions under Rule 9011 is considered to be a matter which "aris[es] in" a bankruptcy case, and is therefore a matter for which bankruptcy courts are authorized to issue final orders under 28 U.S.C. §§ 157 and 1334.

Mr. Wayland and Mr Byrd misconstrue the record of this case by their argument that the sanctions entered against them constitute an impermissible criminal contempt order. As the bankruptcy court made abundantly clear in the Second Sanctions Order, the sanctions are based on Rule 9011, not on any theory of criminal contempt, and the bankruptcy court expressly declined to certify any matter for a criminal contempt prosecution. Moreover, to the extent Mr. Wayland and Mr. Byrd argue that any Rule 9011 sanction that is payable to the clerk of the court automatically must be recharacterized as a criminal contempt judgment, such theory is devoid of legal support and lacks merit.

Finally, Mr. Wayland and Mr. Byrd's assertion that the bankruptcy court was precluded from sanctioning them on remand because of the United States' failure to appeal from the First Sanctions Order lacks merit. The First Sanctions Order did not result in any adverse judgment from which the United States could have appealed, and the district court had jurisdiction to order a remand for clarification regarding an issue that was raised but not addressed in the First Sanctions Order.

ARGUMENT

A. THE BANKRUPTCY COURT'S FINDING THAT MR. WAYLAND AND MR. BYRD VIOLATED RULE 9011 WAS NOT CLEARLY ERRONEOUS

1. The record supports the bankruptcy court's determination that Mr. Wayland and Mr. Byrd filed the TByrd bankruptcy petition for an improper purpose.

Under Rule 9011, parties and attorneys are liable for sanctions if they present a "petition pleading, . . . or other paper" to the court that is filed for an "improper purpose," that is frivolous or factually unsupported, or that is filed without reasonable inquiry. Fed. R. Bankr. P. 9011(a), (b). Like any other pleading, the filing of a bankruptcy petition is subject to Rule 9011, and the filing of a false or abusive petition is among the conduct that may trigger Rule 9011 sanctions. See In re Thomas, 223 Fed. App'x 310, 315 (5th Cir. 2007) (affirming sanctions under Rule 9011 against attorney who filed bankruptcy petition for improper purpose).

Among other circumstances, this Court has recognized that Rule 9011 sanctions are appropriate where a bankruptcy petition is filed for the purpose of the "hindrance and delay" of creditors . . . and "without any bona fide reorganization intent." In re Bourroughs, 240 F.3d 1074, 2000 WL 1835304 (5th Cir. Nov. 30, 2000). The bankruptcy court correctly found that both circumstances were present in this case. As Mr. Wayland's own testimony demonstrates, the filing of the TByrd bankruptcy petition was in response to the decision of the bankruptcy court that cleared the way for TSB to conduct its foreclosure sale of the properties that had been illegally acquired by TByrd. That filing had the sole purpose and, at least in the short term, the effect of hindering TSB from realizing the relief it had obtained from the bankruptcy court.

Although Mr. Wayland and Mr. Byrd do not suggest any other motive for filing the TByrd bankruptcy petition, they dispute the bankruptcy court's conclusion that TByrd never had any legitimate reorganization purpose. Rather, Mr. Wayland and Mr. Byrd argue that "there was an extremely high probability of a successful reorganization," but for the bankruptcy court's action in awarding possession of the BFG properties to TSB. (Br. 11). As such, Mr. Wayland and Mr. Byrd argue that it was this action of the bankruptcy court, and not any misconduct by Mr. Wayland or Mr. Byrd, that "caused the harm to the creditors" in this case. Id.

Mr. Wayland and Mr. Byrd's suggestion that TByrd had a "high probability" of reorganization finds no support in the evidence. TByrd had no business and, outside of any claims against it arising from the BFG transaction, no creditors.[8] TByrd's only assets were the properties it had illegally acquired from BFG, which were the subject of a pending foreclosure proceeding. Despite this, TByrd never opposed TSB's motion for immediate possession of the BFG properties, and Mr. Wayland himself advised TSB that TByrd would consent to that relief. As the bankruptcy court correctly noted, had Mr. Wayland sincerely intended to reorganize TByrd, his complete inaction in response to the TSB motion would be inexplicable.

At best, Mr. Wayland and Mr. Byrd's apparent business plan consisted of nothing more than an attempt to force TSB to renegotiate for relief it had already obtained while TByrd retained assets that it had acquired illegally. Mr. Wayland and Mr. Byrd fail to explain why this strategy should be treated as a legitimate reorganization tactic. For this reason, Mr. Wayland and Mr. Byrd's contention that the TByrd bankruptcy petition suffered from only "a technical or procedure [sic] shortcoming" has no merit. (Br. 12). In any event, the bankruptcy court did

[8] Because of this, Mr. Wayland and Mr. Byrd's repeated insistence that their reorganization strategy would have enable all creditors to be "paid in full" is particularly disingenuous. At most, TByrd's creditors would have consisted of BFG and TSB. Because BFG's claim arose from the sale of property that it had no right to sell, its right to any payment from TByrd was, at the very best, highly questionable. In any event, Mr. Wayland and Mr. Byrd do not explain how continued evasion of the bankruptcy court's order permitting foreclosure would have benefitted TSB.

not commit clear error by rejecting Mr. Wayland and Mr. Byrd's justification of their behavior, and its factual finding that Mr. Wayland and Mr. Byrd acted in bad faith should be affirmed on appeal.

2. Mr. Wayland and Mr. Byrd's Rule 9011 violation is not excused by their claim that no party was harmed by their misconduct.

In the alternative, Mr. Wayland and Mr. Byrd contend that the bankruptcy court should not have sanctioned them for filing a bad faith bankruptcy petition "without a showing of detriment to the bankruptcy estate or its creditor/s." (Br. 12). The fraudulent transactions involving BFG and TByrd were not, however, a victimless wrong. Rather, as the record reflects, Mr. Wayland and Mr. Byrd's filing of a bad faith bankruptcy petition forced TSB to endure an unwarranted additional delay before it could exercise its foreclosure remedies, and forced TSB to incur additional expenses and risk before it could unwind the fraudulent sale of BFG's assets. In addition, the bankruptcy court itself was harmed by Mr. Wayland and Mr. Byrd's misconduct. By filing a frivolous chapter 11 petition, Mr. Wayland and Mr. Byrd caused an unnecessary drain on judicial resources, and forced the bankruptcy court to expend considerable time and attention disposing of TByrd's bankruptcy case. In this case, the harm to both TSB and the court system was a sufficient basis for sanctions. See In re Merrill, 192 B.R. 245, 251

(Bankr. D. Colo. 1995) (noting that one of the purposes of Rule 9011 is to deter abusive filings that consume scarce judicial resources).

Even if this Court were to accept Mr. Wayland and Mr. Byrd's contention that no party was harmed by their misconduct, moreover, this would not negate their violation of Rule 9011. One principal purpose of Rule 9011 is deterrence, see Smith Int'l, Inc. v. Texas Commerce Bank, 844 F.2d 1193, 1197 (5th Cir. 1988), and actual damages are not a prerequisite to liability under that rule. In this case, the sanctions ordered by the bankruptcy court are intended to deter, not compensate. As a result, Mr. Wayland and Mr. Byrd's contention that no party was harmed has no relevance to the issue of whether their conduct violated Rule 9011.

3. In the alternative, the bankruptcy court's undisputed findings that Mr. Wayland and Mr. Byrd failed to conduct a reasonable investigation and filed a factually inaccurate petition are each an independent basis for Rule 9011 liability.

Finally, although Mr. Wayland and Mr. Byrd dispute the bankruptcy court's finding that they filed the TByrd petition for an improper purpose, that was only one of several independent findings on which the bankruptcy court based its Rule 9011 sanction. In particular, the bankruptcy court also found that Mr. Wayland and Mr. Byrd failed to conduct a reasonable investigation prior to filing the TByrd bankruptcy petition, and that Mr. Wayland and Mr. Byrd misstated facts on that petition. [TByrd Dkt. 79 at 10]. Mr. Wayland and Mr. Byrd do not challenge either of these findings on appeal. Under Rule 9011, each of these findings is an independently sufficient basis for sanctions. See Fed. R. Bankr. P. 9011(b), (c)(3); In re Tucker, 224 F.3d 766, 2000 WL 992448 (5th Cir. June 28, 2000) (unpublished decision) (affirming Rule 9011 sanction against attorney who filed reaffirmation agreement without conducting any investigation of whether agreement was valid); Thomas, 223 Fed. App'x at 314 (affirming Rule 9011 sanction against attorney who filed false bankruptcy petition).

As a result, even if this Court were to accept Mr. Wayland and Mr. Byrd's factually unsupported assertion that they filed the TByrd bankruptcy petition in good faith, they have not demonstrated any basis for disturbing the bankruptcy court's ruling that they violated Rule 9011.

B. UNDER 28 U.S.C. §§ 157 AND 1334, THE BANKRUPTCY COURT HAD CORE SUBJECT MATTER JURISDICTION TO IMPOSE RULE 9011 SANCTIONS AGAINST MR. WAYLAND AND MR. BYRD.

In this case, the monetary sanctions imposed by the bankruptcy court are specifically authorized by Rule 9011. See Fed. R. Bankr. P. 9011(c)(2) (listing "an order to pay a penalty into court" among sanctions that may be ordered by the bankruptcy court). Mr. Wayland and Mr. Byrd argue that this rule violates the jurisdictional scheme established by 28 U.S.C. § 1334 to the extent that it permits the bankruptcy judge, an Article I judge, to impose monetary sanctions. (Br. 3-4). Mr. Wayland and Mr. Byrd's argument, for which they offer no pertinent support, appears to be based on a mistaken reading of the bankruptcy jurisdictional statutes. In any event, this Court has consistently recognized that bankruptcy judges have jurisdiction to issue final orders that sanction misconduct in their own proceedings, and Mr. Wayland and Mr. Byrd offer no persuasive reason to depart from this long-established principle.

Congress enacted the jurisdictional scheme set forth in section 1334 of title 28 in response to the Supreme Court's decision in Northern Pipeline Constr. Co. v. Marathon Pipe Line Co., 458 U.S. 50 (1982). That section specifies that district courts have original and exclusive jurisdiction over all cases under title 11. See 28 U.S.C. § 1334. In addition, district courts have original bankruptcy subject matter jurisdiction over three types of civil proceedings: (1) matters "arising under title 11," (2) matters "arising in" a bankruptcy case, and (3) matters "related to" a bankruptcy case. 11 U.S.C. § 1334(b).[9] The significance of this classification is that under 28 U.S.C. § 157(b)(1) and (c)(1), “arising under” and “arising in” matters are treated as “core” bankruptcy matters, for which the bankruptcy court can enter a final judgment, while “related to” matters are non-core proceedings in which the bankruptcy court’s power is limited to submitting proposed findings of fact and conclusions of law to the district court, unless all parties consent to its entry of a final judgment. See In re Allegheny Health, Education and Research Foundation, 383 F.3d 169, 175 (3d Cir. 2004).

[9] Under 28 U.S.C. § 157(a) and District Court General Order 2005-6, all "arising in," "arising under," and "related to" bankruptcy proceedings in the Southern District of Texas are automatically referred to the bankruptcy court.

In this case, Mr. Wayland and Mr. Byrd presume, without explanation, that a Rule 9011 sanctions proceeding falls within the bankruptcy court’s “related to” jurisdiction, but that it is not a “core” bankruptcy matter involving the restructuring of debtor-creditor relations. (Br. 3). This presumption is mistaken. As this Court has previously observed, “[a] sine qua non in restructuring the debtor-creditor relationship is the court’s ability to police the fiduciaries . . . who are responsible for managing the debtor’s estate in the best interest of creditors.” In re Southmark Corp., 163 F.3d 925, 931 (5th Cir. 1999) (holding that lawsuit alleging malpractice by attorneys of chapter 11 debtors was core). In particular, by its own terms, Rule 9011 only relates to misconduct that occurs in connection with a bankruptcy case, and a Rule 9011 proceeding cannot exist outside of bankruptcy. For this reason, a Rule 9011 sanction is a paradigmatic example of an "arising in" matter over which the bankruptcy court exercises core subject matter jurisdiction. See In re U.S. Brass Corp., 301 F.3d 296, 304 (5th Cir. 2002) (defining "arising in" matter as "a proceding that, by its nature, could arise only in the context of a bankruptcy case").

As a result, as every court to have considered the matter has agreed, sanctions proceedings are core matters over which bankruptcy judges have jurisdiction to issue final orders. See In re Memorial Estates, Inc., 950 F.2d 1364, 1370 (7th Cir. 1991) (holding that motion for sanctions under Rule 9011 was core); In re Menk, 241 B.R. 896, 912 (B.A.P. 9th Cir. 1999) (same); In re Akl, 397 B.R. 546, 555 (Bankr. D.D.C. 2008) (same); In re Kitchin, 327 B.R. 337, 359 (Bankr. N.D. Ill. 2005) (same). This conclusion, moreover, is consistent with numerous decisions of this Court affirming sanctions orders by bankruptcy courts. See In re Yorkshire, LLC, 540 F.3d 328, 333 (5th Cir. 2008) (affirming award of sanctions pursuant to bankruptcy court's inherent powers); In re Williams, 226 Fed. App'x 384, 388 (5th Cir. 2007) (affirming bankruptcy court order awarding Rule 9011 sanctions); Thomas, 223 Fed. App'x at 315 (same).[10] Accordingly,

[10] In arguing that the Rule 9011 sancitons proceeding in this case was non-core, Mr. Wayland and Mr. Byrd rely on In re Continental Air Lines, 61 B.R. 758 (S.D. Tex. 1986), a case decided shortly after the enactment of the present bankruptcy jurisdictional system, which held that a bankruptcy court could not hold a non-debtor in civil contempt for filing a lawsuit in a separate forum in violation of an injunction that the bankruptcy court had improperly issued. Continental is not persuasive authority in the present case, for at least three reasons: first, the

there is no merit to Mr. Wayland and Mr. Byrd's argument that the bankruptcy court lacked subject matter jurisdiction to issue a final sanctions order against them.

C. MR. WAYLAND AND MR. BYRD'S ARGUMENT THAT THE BANKRUPTCY COURT LACKS CRIMINAL CONTEMPT POWER IS INAPPOSITE BECAUSE THE BANKRUPTCY COURT IMPOSED SANCTIONS UNDER RULE 9011 AND NOT THROUGH A CRIMINAL CONTEMPT PROCEEDING.

Following a remand that was ordered for the express purpose of clarifying the nature of the sanctions in this case, the bankruptcy court declined to certify this matter for criminal contempt and issued sanctions under the specific authority of Rule 9011(c). Despite this clarification, however, Mr. Wayland and Mr. Byrd continue to characterize the sanctions against them as "akin" to criminal contempt sanctions, for no reason other than because they are payable to the clerk of the Continental holding is limited to the specific question of the bankruptcy court's inherent contempt jurisdiction, and does not purport to address the jurisdiction of the bankruptcy court to exercise its rule-based sanction powers. Id. at 774-75. Second, the reasoning of Continental was based largely on the then-existing version of Fed. R. Bankr. P. 9020, which required motions for contempt to be filed in district courts. Id. at 775. Since Continental was decided, however, Fed. R. Bankr. P. 9020 has been rewritten, and the specific language on which the Continental court relied has been removed from the rule. See In re Xacur, 116 Fed. App'x 516, 518 (5th Cir. 2004) (noting that as a result of amendment to Rule 9020, there is no longer doubt that bankruptcy judges have authority to hold parties in civil contempt). Third, even before the amendment to Rule 9020 was enacted, Continental's principal holding that bankruptcy courts lack civil contempt power was overturned by a decision of this Court, which recognized the power of bankruptcy courts to issue civil contempt orders under section 105 of the Bankruptcy Code. See In re Terrebone Fuel & Lube, Inc., 108 F.3d 609, 613 (5th Cir. 1997). For each of these reasons, Continental fails to support Mr. Wayland and Mr. Byrd's argument that the bankruptcy court lacked core jurisdiction to issue a Rule 9011 sanction.

---

court. (Br. 6-7).

Mr. Wayland and Mr. Byrd's argument rests on the false premise that because criminal contempt sanctions are not compensatory, any non-compensatory sanction (including a Rule 9011(c) sanction) automatically constitutes criminal contempt. This argument overlooks the fact that contempt sanctions and Rule 9011 sanctions are distinct remedies, which serve different purposes and raise different due process concerns. In particular, contempt is "committed when a person violates an order of court which requires that person in specific and definite language to do or refrain from doing an act or series of acts." Lichtenstein v. Lichtenstein, 425 F.2d 1111, 1113 (3d Cir. 1970). By contrast, in this case, although Mr. Wayland and Mr. Byrd abused the bankruptcy process and participated in a violation of a criminal statute, they were not sanctioned for violating any specific court directive. As the bankruptcy court correctly found, while such misconduct is sanctionable, it is not contempt. [TByrd Dkt. 171 at 5].

A second fundamental difference between a contempt sanction and a Rule 9011 sanction is that they serve different purposes. A non-compensatory sanction under Rule 9011(c) is designed to deter future misconduct, and the amount of that sanction is limited to whatever is "reasonably necessary to deter repetition of the conduct." In re Deville, 361 F.3d 539, 553 (9th Cir. 2004). By contrast, criminal contempt is punitive and is directed to past conduct. Id.; see also United States v. Kouri-Perez, 187 F.3d 1, 6-7 (1st Cir. 1999) (noting distinction between punitive contempt sanctions and other non-compensatory sanctions).

As a result, as both this Court and every other appellate court to have considered the issue has agreed, federal courts may issue non-compensatory sanctions without resorting to their criminal contempt powers. See United States v. Alves, 136 Fed. App'x 616, 617 (5th Cir. 2005) (rejecting argument that $750 fine ordered against attorney was in the nature of criminal contempt); Deville, 361 F.3d at 553 (rejecting argument that bankruptcy court was required to conduct criminal contempt trial before sanctioning debtor and his counsel under Rule 9011); Kouri-Perez, 187 F.3d at 9 (rejecting "contention that the sanction imposed against appellants necessarily amounted to an adjudication of criminal contempt" simply because it was non-compensatory); Eisenberg v. Univ. of New Mexico, 936 F.2d 1131, 1137 (10th Cir. 1991) (trial court could order non-compensatory sanction against attorney who filed pleading without adequate investigation "without the more stringent due process afforded upon a finding of criminal contempt"); Donaldson v. Clark, 819 F.2d 1551, 1558-59 (11th Cir. 1987) (holding that it was not necessary for court to follow procedures applicable to criminal contempt proceeding when sanctioning attorney pursuant to Fed. R. Civ.

P. 11).

Although this Court has held that bankruptcy judges lack the power to punish criminal contempt under their inherent powers, see In re Hipp, Inc., 895 F.2d 1503, 1509 (5th Cir. 1990), it has never extended that holding to prohibit bankruptcy courts from issuing the deterrent sanctions specifically authorized under Rule 9011(c)(2). Significantly, although Hipp was decided nearly two decades ago, no lower court within this circuit has ever suggested (as Mr. Wayland and Mr. Byrd do here) that Hipp circumscribes the bankruptcy court's Rule 9011 sanction powers. Rather, non-compensatory monetary civil sanctions under that rule continue to be routine in this circuit. See, e.g., In re Brown, Case No. 06-80516, 2007 WL 4105967 (Bankr. S.D. Tex. Nov. 16, 2007) (ordering attorney to pay $300 to court as deterrent sanction under Rule 9011(c)); In re Schaefer, 154 B.R. 227, 232 (Bankr. S.D. Tex. 1993) (ordering sanction against pro se debtor of $2,000, payable to the United States Treasury, pursuant to Rule 9011). Accordingly, Mr. Wayland and Mr. Byrd's characterization of the bankruptcy court's Rule 9011 order as a criminal contempt judgment is without merit.

D. COSCARELLI DID NOT PRECLUDE THE BANKRUPTCY COURT FROM IMPOSING RULE 9011 SANCTIONS ON REMAND

Lastly, Mr. Wayland and Mr. Byrd argue that the bankruptcy court was powerless to impose sanctions on remand, because the United States and the chapter 7 trustee did not file a notice of appeal from the First Sanctions Order. In so arguing, Mr. Wayland and Mr. Byrd rely on this Court's decision in United States v. Coscarelli, 149 F.3d 342 (5th Cir. 1998) (en banc). (Br. 1-2). Mr. Wayland and Mr. Byrd's reliance on this decision in misplaced.

In Coscarelli, a defendant was convicted of a federal crime, but was given a sentence that did not comport with the statutory sentencing guidelines. On appeal, a panel of this Court reversed the underlying conviction, despite the defendant's failure to file a notice of appeal relating to his conviction. Following an en banc hearing, this Court reversed the panel decision on the grounds that the panel lacked jurisdiction to consider the merits of the conviction because no notice of appeal had been filed. Id. at 343.

Mr. Wayland and Mr. Byrd's attempt to analogize this case to Coscarelli is unpersuasive. Although Mr. Wayland and Mr. Byrd suggest that the bankruptcy court expressly "fail[ed] to impose civil sanctions" in the First Sanctions Order, which they treat as a substantive ruling equivalent to the criminal conviction in Coscarelli, the bankruptcy court made no such determination. Rather, the bankruptcy court issued an order that imposed civil sanctions but erroneously cited to its inherent authority, rather than Rule 9011, as the source of its sanctioning authority. At no point of that decision, however, did the bankruptcy court ever hold that Rule 9011 sanctions were unavailable. Rather, because of its decision to rely on its inherent powers, the bankruptcy court never found it necessary to reach the issue of sanctions under Rule 9011. Under these circumstances, it is appropriate and within the appellate court's jurisdiction to remand in order to permit the lower court to clarify the basis for its ruling. See, e.g., Wright v. Allstate Ins. Co., 415 F.3d 384, 391 (5th Cir. 2005) (remanding trial court's denial of motion to amend complaint where there were several possible bases for denial, and it was not clear on which basis the court issued its ruling); Crowe v. Smith, 151 F.3d 217, 240 (5th Cir. 1998) (vacating trial court order that issued sanctions under incorrect theory, and remanding case for determination of whether sanctions could be sustained under alternative theory).

In addition, the United States could not have filed a notice of appeal of the First Sanctions Order because that order did not result in any judgment adverse to the United States, and there was consequently nothing for the United States to appeal. Although it did not rely on the same theory argued by the United States, the First Sanctions Order granted the precise relief that the United States had sought in its original motion for an order to show cause. As a result, the United States was not aggrieved by the First Sanctions Order, and there was no basis for it to file a cross-appeal. See Chouinard v. Chouinard, 568 F.2d 430, 433 (5th Cir. 1978) (holding that only "party aggrieved" by original judgment may file cross appeal). Moreover, a party defending a ruling on appeal may argue, as the United States did here, that the appellate court should affirm on a different theory than that relied on by the trial court. Id. As a result, the district court did not exceed its jurisdiction by remanding the case to the bankruptcy court for clarification of an issue that was raised but not fully addressed in the First Sanctions Order.

CONCLUSION

For these reasons, the United States respectfully asks this Court to affirm the judgment of the district court.

SUMMARY OF THE CASE

The Thermadyne creditors’ committee filed an application under 11 U.S.C. 1103(a) seeking court permission to retain Houlihan, Lokey, Howard & Zukin as a bankruptcy professional. In ruling on that application, the bankruptcy court declined to approve one of the terms and conditions of employment the Committee sought for Houlihan - indemnification and exculpation of Houlihan for wrongful acts. Appellants are challenging the bankruptcy appellate panel’s decision affirming that holding. Appellants contend (1) that the BAP incorrectly held that the bankruptcy court had not applied a per se rule against indemnification provisions; and (2) that the bankruptcy court clearly erred in finding that the indemnification provisions were not reasonable in this case.

The BAP’s decision in this case constitutes a final order over which this Court has jurisdiction. The BAP, furthermore, correctly held that the bankruptcy court did not apply a per se rule and instead found that the proposed indemnification provisions were not reasonable in this case. Finally, the BAP, applying the appropriate standard, correctly determined not only that the bankruptcy court’s factual findings were not clearly erroneous, but also that they were well supported by the record before the bankruptcy court. The government stands ready to present oral argument if the Court believes argument will facilitate its deliberations in this case.

PANEL FOR THE EIGHTH CIRCUIT

BRIEF FOR FEDERAL APPELLEE

STATEMENT OF JURISDICTION

The bankruptcy court had jurisdiction over the creditors' committee's application to employ Houlihan, Lokey, Howard & Zukin, under 28 U.S.C. 157(a) and (b). The bankruptcy appellate panel (BAP) had jurisdiction to hear the appeal from the bankruptcy court's order declining to approve the proposed exoneration and indemnification provisions under 28 U.S.C. 158. The BAP entered judgment on October 3, 2002. A timely notice of appeal was filed on October 11, 2002. Although this Court has not addressed whether an order ruling upon an application to employ a bankruptcy professional under 11 U.S.C. 1103(a), and declining to approve a term or condition of employment under 11 U.S.C. 328(a), is final for purposes of appellate jurisdiction, we submit that under this Circuit's test of finality, such an order should be held to be final. This Court accordingly would have jurisdiction under 28 U.S.C. 158(d). See discussion infra at 17-20.

STATEMENT OF THE ISSUES

The bankruptcy court held that the exoneration and indemnification provisions sought by Houlihan Lokey Howard & Zukin Financial Advisors (Houlihan) were unreasonable in this case and accordingly granted the application of the Official Unsecured Creditors' Committee (Committee) to employ Houlihan, but without those provisions. The bankruptcy appellate panel affirmed. The issues raised on this appeal are:

   B. Statutes and Rules:

2. Whether the bankruptcy court's decision was the application of a per se rule, or, as the court stated and the BAP held, a conclusion about this case.

STATEMENT OF THE CASE

Houlihan Lokey Howard & Zukin Financial Advisors (Houlihan) and the Official Unsecured Creditors’ Committee (Committee) are challenging the bankruptcy court’s decision denying the Committee’s application to retain Houlihan as its financial advisor under broad indemnification provisions. On appeal, they argue that the bankruptcy court failed to examine the particulars of this case and instead rejected the proposed terms based on a finding that such terms are per se unreasonable in the bankruptcy context. They also argue that the bankruptcy appellate panel (BAP), in affirming the decision of the bankruptcy court, erred by asking whether the proposed exoneration and indemnification provisions were in the best interests of the estate, and accordingly, that it erred in holding that the bankruptcy court’s factual finding that the proposed indemnification terms were not reasonable was clearly erroneous.

STATEMENT OF FACTS

A. Statutory Provisions Involved.

1. 28 U.S.C. 158(d). 28 U.S.C. 158(d) provides:

> The courts of appeals shall have jurisdiction of appeals from all final decisions, judgments, orders, and decrees entered under subsections (a) and (b) of this section.

Subsection (b) provides for the establishment of a bankruptcy appellate panel with jurisdiction to hear and determine appeals.

2. 11 U.S.C. 1102(a)(1). 11 U.S.C. 1102(a)(1) provides, with an exception not relevant to this case:

> [A]s soon as practicable after the order for relief under chapter 11 of this title, the United States trustee shall appoint a committee of creditors holding unsecured claims and may appoint additional committees of creditors or of equity security holders as the United States trustee deems appropriate.

3. 11 U.S.C. 1103(a). 11 U.S.C. 1103(a) provides:

> At a scheduled meeting of a committee appointed under section 1102 of this title, at which a majority of the members of such committee are present, and with the court's approval, such committee may select and authorize the employment by such committee of one or more attorneys, accountants, or other agents, to represent or perform services for such committee.

4. 11 U.S.C. 328(a). 11 U.S.C. 328(a) provides:

> The trustee, or a committee appointed under section 1102 of this title, with the court’s approval, may employ or authorize the employment of a professional person under section 327 or 1103 of this title, as the case may be, on any reasonable terms and conditions of employment, including on a retainer, on an hourly basis, or on a contingent fee basis. Notwithstanding such terms and conditions, the court may allow > compensation different from the compensation provided under such terms and conditions after the conclusion of such employment, if such terms and conditions prove to have been improvident in light of developments not capable of being anticipated at the time of the fixing of such terms and conditions.

Pertinent Facts.

1. Bankruptcy Proceedings.

Thermadyne Holdings Corporation (“Thermadyne”), through its direct and indirect operating subsidiaries, is a global manufacturer of cutting and welding products with approximately 1400 employees. In November 2001, Thermadyne and various subsidiaries filed petitions for relief under Chapter 11 of the Bankruptcy Code. JA 11.

In December 2001, the United States Trustee appointed an unsecured creditors’ committee (the Committee).[1] Shortly

Pursuant to 11 U.S.C. 1102, the United States Trustee appoints and determines the membership of an unsecured creditors’ committee. The committee’s membership generally includes a number of the largest unsecured creditors. The committee is different from the debtor in possession who controls the estate. thereafter, the Committee filed an application, pursuant to 11 U.S.C. 1103(a), to retain Houlihan, Lokey, Howard & Zukin Financial Advisors, Inc. (“Houlihan”) as a bankruptcy professional to provide an array of financial services, including evaluating the assets and liabilities of the debtors and their subsidiaries; analyzing and reviewing the financial and operating statements of the debtors; evaluating all aspects of any debtor financing and exit financing; providing valuation or other financial analyses as the Committee might require; assessing the financial issues and options concerning a sale of the debtors or reorganization plan; preparing, analyzing, and explaining any plan to the Committee; and providing testimony in court on behalf of the Committee if necessary. JA 95-6.

The proposed terms and conditions of Houlihan’s employment included a suggested compensation package of $125,000 per month, and a transaction fee of one percent of the value of the cash and securities received by holders of Committee Debt upon the conclusion of any transaction.[2] JA 96.

(Although Section 327 refers to the “trustee”, the provisions of Section 327 apply equally to debtors in possession. See 11 U.S.C. § 1107(b) (describing rights of debtor in possession); In re First Jersey Securities, Inc., 180 F.3d 504, 509 (3d Cir. 1999).)

[2] The proposed transaction fee specified that notwithstanding the formula, it was not to exceed $2 million nor be less than $350,000.

The engagement letter, whose proposed terms were incorporated within the Committee's 11 U.S.C. 1103(a) application, also contained extensive indemnification and exculpation provisions that the Committee's 1103(a) motion asked the bankruptcy court to approve. These provisions were designed to enable Houlihan to avoid the risk and responsibility for any losses, claims, damages, or liabilities arising out of the agreement, out of any actions taken or omitted, or out of any transaction or proposed transaction. All indemnification was to be provided by the debtors. The Committee's application also sought court authorization to require the debtors to reimburse Houlihan for costs and legal fees in the event Houlihan was sued in connection with, or otherwise held liable for, its work on behalf of the Committee. JA 177.[3] Prior to the bankruptcy court's ruling on the application to employ, the Committee and Houlihan conceded that Houlihan could not be indemnified for losses judicially determined to have resulted from its willful misconduct or gross negligence and modified the application accordingly. JA 11.

In January 2002, the U.S. Trustee filed an Objection to the Application focusing on the indemnification provisions and advocating a per se prohibition on such provisions as contrary to public policy and professionalism. JA 11. The bankruptcy court held a hearing later that month, and in February 2002, issued its Memorandum Opinion and Order ("bankruptcy court opinion").

2. Bankruptcy Court Opinion.

In the bankruptcy court opinion, the court held that "in this case the indemnification provisions are unreasonable." JA 10. The court first looked to Section 328 of the Bankruptcy Code which provides that a professional person may be employed "'on any reasonable terms and conditions of employment.'" JA 12 (emphasis bankruptcy court's). The court accordingly stated that the "focus" of its analysis is on the term "'reasonable'" and "specifically whether the terms of the indemnity agreement included in the engagement letter are reasonable." JA 12. The bankruptcy court noted that Houlihan and the Committee had identified three reasons for which their proposed terms were reasonable: market conditions, economic conditions, and the choice of the Committee.

As to market conditions, the bankruptcy court rejected the argument that prevalent terms outside the bankruptcy environment automatically rendered reasonable those same terms for professionals working in a bankruptcy. JA 13. The court found that "[p]revailing employment terms and conditions are to be considered, but should only be one factor in the analysis of 'reasonable' in the totality of the circumstances." JA 13. The bankruptcy court noted that cases "rightly held" that rates of pay should not be diminished merely because a professional was employed by a chapter 11 debtor or committee, and accordingly, the bankruptcy court approved the proposed payment to Houlihan of $125,000 per month.

The bankruptcy court held, however, that the other terms of engagement, especially non-monetary terms, “should be considered in terms of the debtor’s bankruptcy environment.” JA 14. “What is reasonable must be assessed with due regard for the particular and unique circumstances of each bankruptcy case and for the fair and equitable administration of the bankruptcy estate.” JA 14.

In this case, the court noted that Houlihan had been selected as a “professional financial advisor” chosen for its “superior knowledge and experience relative to the Committee.” Particularly in light of that superior expertise that Houlihan was to provide, the court held that the estate should not be “expos[ed] . . . to unlimited liability through indemnity and exculpation” and that it was “simply unreasonable” for the estate through the Committee to bear such a risk. JA 14.

The bankruptcy court then turned to Houlihan’s second argument, that “in each of their ‘over 100 engagements per year’ there are dissatisfied parties who pose an economic risk to Houlihan Lokey,” JA 14 (quoting Declaration of Jonathan B. Cleveland, ¶ 8), and that “[b]ecause Houlihan Lokey is a relatively small private investment banking firm (notwithstanding the one hundred plus engagements and the restructuring of over $40 billion), they do not and cannot insure against this risk,” JA 15 (citing id. ¶ 9). The bankruptcy court found that if, as Houlihan and the Committee were contending, economic conditions are such as to spur litigation, there is “even greater cause to protect the estate from this risk.” JA 15. The bankruptcy court further found that “[i]t will be impossible to secure and maximize the value of the estate where the negligent actions of a highly compensated, professional service provider could cause the estate’s liquidation.” JA 15.

The bankruptcy court also relied on the fact that Houlihan, although indicating that it could not insure against the risk of negligence, also stated that it would require a substantial increase in fees to adequately insure. Particularly concerned with what the bankruptcy court perceived in this case to be an “uncapped risk to the estate” flowing from the indemnification provisions, the bankruptcy court determined that such quantifiable higher fees would be preferable to the proposed unlimited indemnification provisions because the fees would impose a finite cost to the estate such that “the impact on the value of the estate is certain.” JA 15.

Finally, with respect to Houlihan’s contention that without the indemnification provisions, it would have to decline the engagement, thereby depriving the Committee of its expertise and of the Committee’s choice of service provider, resulting in “‘real and substantial economic costs’” to the estate from higher fees or the forced selection of a less qualified advisor, JA 16 (quoting Houlihan’s Response to UST Objection to Application at 18), the bankruptcy court held that the argument “propounds rank speculation.” JA 16. The Committee, the bankruptcy court held, remained free to choose whichever service provider it wanted on any reasonable terms and conditions. The bankruptcy court found, however, that the proposed indemnification provisions were not reasonable in this case. The "[f]ees should be finite, the impact on the value of the estate should be certain, and there should not be an uncapped risk to the estate which saddles it with unlimited liability." JA 16.

Houlihan and the Committee filed a motion to reconsider which was denied by the bankruptcy court. They then appealed to the Bankruptcy Appellate Panel for the Eighth Circuit.[4]

3. Bankruptcy Appellate Panel Decision.

Reviewing the bankruptcy court's "findings of fact for clear error and review[ing] its legal conclusions de novo," the bankruptcy appellate panel unanimously affirmed the bankruptcy court's decision. Bankruptcy Appellate Panel Opinion ("BAP Op.") at 6-7, 16.[5] The BAP first rejected Houlihan's contention that the bankruptcy court had applied a per se rule in finding that the proposed indemnification provisions were not reasonable. Although the BAP noted that the bankruptcy court "in isolated

[4] The bankruptcy court also denied the proposed indemnification provisions for Rothschild, Inc. as investment bankers to the debtors. Rothschild appealed its adverse decision to the District Court for the Eastern District of Missouri. That decision is pending.

[5] The BAP also had before it a challenge to the bankruptcy court's denial of Houlihan's motion to reconsider. The BAP reviewed this claim for abuse of discretion and affirmed as to it as well. BAP Op. 16. Appellants have not appealed from that aspect of the BAP's holding.

statements” expressed “strong views” on indemnification and exculpation of professionals “employed in a bankruptcy case in general,” the BAP held that the bankruptcy court “did not apply a per se rule in this case.” BAP Op. at 8. “Reading the bankruptcy court’s opinion in totality, we find that the opinion definitely discusses reasons why the indemnity and exculpation provisions were not reasonable under the circumstances of this case.” Id. at 8-9. The BAP noted the bankruptcy court’s attentiveness to the particular facts and circumstances of this case exemplified by, inter alia, the bankruptcy court’s findings that “‘in this case the indemnification provisions are unreasonable,’” BAP Op. at 9 (quoting Bankruptcy Court Opinion at 1) (emphasis BAP’s); that “‘under the circumstances of this case . . . non-monetary terms, should be considered in terms of the debtors’ bankruptcy environment,’” BAP Op. at 9 (quoting Bankruptcy Court Opinion at 4-5) (emphases BAP’s); that “for this estate to bear the risk of unlimited liability and exculpation was simply unreasonable,” BAP Op. at 9, 10 (citing Bankruptcy Court Order at 5); that “the impact and financial risk to this estate should be finite and certain,” and that because “such risks were not [finite and certain], it was unreasonable under the circumstances of this case to approve the indemnification and exculpation provisions,” BAP Op. at 10.

The BAP then evaluated whether the bankruptcy court had erred in finding that the provisions were unreasonable, and held that it had not. The BAP noted that Houlihan and the Committee bore the burden of establishing that such terms of employment were reasonable under the circumstances and that they had not met that burden. Like the bankruptcy court, the BAP noted that Houlihan and the Committee argued in effect that because indemnification provisions are “routine outside of bankruptcy” they are “per se reasonable” in bankruptcy. BAP Op. at 11. (emphasis BAP’s). And like the bankruptcy court, the BAP rejected this argument. Ibid. The BAP held that Houlihan and the Committee had failed to present evidence of why such provisions would be reasonable in the context of this case. “[A]ppellants neglect the fact that 11 U.S.C. § 328(a) requires that they prove the disputed provisions are reasonable under the circumstances of this case, and the appellants simply do not address this issue.” Ibid. (emphasis BAP’s).

The BAP also noted that Houlihan and the Committee argued for the need for indemnification in the existing economic and corporate litigation climates. In response to these arguments before the bankruptcy court, the BAP noted, the bankruptcy court had found that “if economic conditions are such as to spur dissatisfied parties to litigation, there is even greater cause to protect the estate from that risk” and “under the circumstances, it is prudent and reasonable that such a risk be borne by the party providing the service.” BAP Op. at 13. The BAP held that these findings were not clearly erroneous.

The BAP further held that there was insufficient evidence to support Houlihan’s contention that it could not obtain indemnity insurance, or that the Committee would not be able to obtain comparable services to those offered by Houlihan for the same price without such indemnity provisions.[6] The BAP found that "[a]gain, the appellants are arguing why indemnity and exculpation is reasonable for itself, not why it is reasonable for the estate to bear such a risk in the totality of the circumstances." Ibid. (emphasis BAP's).

The BAP also examined Houlihan's contention that the estate would be burdened with increased economic costs if the proposed indemnification provisions were not approved. The BAP noted that the bankruptcy court had held as to this argument that even assuming higher fees would be required, such fees would have a finite and certain impact on the value of the estate which the court found preferable to the potentially unlimited financial risk the estate would face if the indemnification provisions were approved. The BAP held that this finding of the bankruptcy court was not clearly erroneous. BAP Op. at 13-14.

Finally, the BAP noted the unusual circumstances of this case: "a professional firm hired by the committee for its own use during the bankruptcy, yet requiring the debtor, a non-client, to indemnify the firm." BAP Op. at 14.[7] The BAP held that [6] The BAP, like the bankruptcy court, rejected Houlihan's reliance on the Declaration of Jonathan Cleveland that Houlihan could not adequately insure, finding that the statement both "lacks foundation" and is "internally inconsistent." BAP Op. at 13 n.10.

"[n]eglecting this unique difference causes the appellants' argument, that market conditions warrant the finding that the disputed provisions under the circumstances of this case are reasonable," to be "highly speculative at best," since when the debtor is not the client, it has virtually no control over any negligent acts the firm may commit. Ibid.

The BAP accordingly held that "[t]he bankruptcy court found that the indemnity and exculpation provisions in the Houlihan Lokey engagement agreement were not reasonable under the circumstances of the case. This finding was not clearly erroneous." It further held that "the bankruptcy court did not abuse its discretion in not approving the employment under the proposed terms." BAP Op. at 16.

STANDARD OF REVIEW

This Court's standard of review is the same as that of the BAP. "[W]e review the bankruptcy court's factual findings for clear error and its conclusions of law de novo." In re Vote, 276 F.3d 1024, 1026 (8th Cir. 2002). This Court has noted that "[w]hile our review is a searching and independent one, we also realize that we are the second court charged with reviewing the bankruptcy court's factual findings for clear error," and that accordingly, "'[t]o be clearly erroneous, a decision must strike us as more than just maybe or probably wrong; it must . . . strike us as wrong with the force of a five-week old, unrefrigerated dead fish.'" In re Papio Keno Club, Inc., 262 F.3d 725, 729 (8th Cir. 2001) (quoting Parts and Elec. Motors, Inc. v. Sterling Elec., Inc., 866 F.2d 228, 233 (7th Cir. 1988), cert. denied, 493 U.S. 847 (1989)). Thus while this Court is "always mindful of our duty to independently review the record, we think this description is a particularly accurate reflection of when we will reverse a bankruptcy court's factual finding that has been upheld by the BAP – we do not treat the BAP as a mere way station on the road to this court." In re Papio Keno Club, 262 F.3d at 729.

SUMMARY OF ARGUMENT

1. The Court should exercise jurisdiction over this appeal. Although this Court has not explicitly addressed whether an appeal from an order denying proposed indemnification provisions for a bankruptcy professional constitutes a final order for purposes of appellate review, such an order should be held to be final under this Court's finality test. The order at issue in this case fully resolves this discrete segment of the Thermadyne bankruptcy case, there remain no additional procedures for the bankruptcy court to perform as to this issue following this Court's decision, and a delay in obtaining review could potentially prevent the aggrieved party from obtaining effective relief. Although a later reversal on this issue likely would not require recommencement of the entire proceeding, there is no interest to be served from a delay.

2. The BAP correctly held that the bankruptcy court did not apply a rule of per se unreasonableness to this case. Instead, the bankruptcy court examined the evidence put forth by Houlihan and the Committee and held that they had not satisfied their burden of establishing that the proposed indemnification provisions were reasonable under the facts and circumstances of this case.

3. As the bankruptcy court found, Houlihan and the Committee failed to meet their burden of proof, as the moving party, that, under the circumstances of this case, the proposed indemnification provisions were reasonable. Appellants failed to present sufficient evidence to support such a finding. They further failed to justify the broad unlimited exposure that the proposed indemnification provisions would impose on the debtors in this case. The bankruptcy court’s factual finding that the proposed indemnification provisions are unreasonable is, as the BAP held, well supported by the record in this case and not clearly erroneous.

ARGUMENT

I. THE ORDER IN THIS CASE CONSTITUTES A FINAL APPEALABLE ORDER OVER WHICH THIS COURT HAS JURISDICTION.

Under the Bankruptcy Code, this Court has jurisdiction over "all final decisions, judgments, orders, and decrees" entered by a district court or a bankruptcy appellate panel on appeal from a bankruptcy court. 28 U.S.C. 158(d).[8] The test of finality in a bankruptcy case is more flexible than in other cases. See, e.g., In re Jenkins & Assocs., 296 F.3d 730, 731 (8th Cir. 2002). This Court has identified three factors it uses in determining when an order is final for purposes of Section 158(d): (1) "'the extent to which . . . the order leaves the bankruptcy court nothing to do but execute the order; (2) the extent to which delay in obtaining review would prevent the aggrieved party from obtaining effective relief; (3) the extent to which a later reversal on that issue would require recommencement of the entire proceeding.'" In re Koch, 109 F.3d 1285, 1287 (8th Cir. 1997) (quoting In re Olson, 730 F.2d 1109, 1109 (8th Cir. 1984)). This Court has found, however, that the absence of one of the factors is not fatal to a determination of finality. See, e.g., ibid. (holding that orders granting or denying dismissal of Chapter 7 case for substantial abuse are appealable even though the first factor was not satisfied because the district court had remanded the case to the bankruptcy court for further proceedings).

Under this Court's finality test, an order denying indemnification provisions for a bankruptcy professional should be held to be final and appealable. As to the first prong of this Court's test, the order from this Court will leave the bankruptcy court with nothing to do but execute the order. There are, for example, no additional fact-finding proceedings required in this case. Compare, e.g., In re Vekco, 792 F.2d 744 (8th Cir. 1986) (not a final order where the district court in remanding specifically anticipated that the bankruptcy court would further develop the record and exercise considerable discretion in resolving the issue remanded to it).

As to the second prong of the test, a delay in obtaining review could prevent Houlihan from obtaining relief. A bankruptcy plan which could interfere with Houlihan's ability to collect indemnification funds could be approved in the interim. In that circumstance, a subsequent decision authorizing the indemnification provisions either could be difficult to enforce, or might interfere with the approved plan.

As to the third prong of this Court's finality test, although recommencement of the entire proceeding likely would not be required if the bankruptcy court's decision were reversed at a later time, even absent this concern, overall the test weighs in favor of a determination that the BAP's decision is final.

This Court has noted that “[f]inality for bankruptcy purposes is a complex subject and courts deciding appealability questions must take into account the peculiar needs of the bankruptcy process.” In re Yukon Energy Corp., 138 F.3d 1254, 1258 (8th Cir. 1998) (internal quotation marks omitted). In this case, there is arguably no purpose which would be served by a delay in the decision at issue, and the order at issue here “finally resolve[s] a discrete segment of th[e] proceeding.” In re Kasden, 141 F.3d 1288, 1290 (8th Cir. 1998).

On a related issue, the circuit courts of appeals disagree as to whether an order denying the retention of professionals is a final appealable order. See, e.g., In re Kurtzman, 194 F.3d 54, 57 (2d Cir. 1999) (holding such an order is final); In re First Jersey Sec., Inc., 180 F.3d 504, 508 (3d Cir. 1999) (same), but see In re S.S. Retail Stores, Corp., 162 F.3d 1230 (9th Cir. 1998) (holding order denying approval is not final); In re Smyth, 207 F.3d 758 (5th Cir. 2000) (same).[9] The only circuit court to have addressed whether an order approving or denying indemnification for bankruptcy professionals is final, held that such an order was final for purposes of review. See In re United Artists, 315 F.3d 217, 225 (3d Cir. 2003) (interpreting the order as an order approving a professional’s retention). We submit that the order of the BAP in this case should be held to be a final and appealable order.

[9] The BAP in this case treated the order of the bankruptcy court as an order denying the application for employment of Houlihan under the proposed terms. See BAP Op. at 6 n.6.

II. THE BAP CORRECTLY HELD THAT THE BANKRUPTCY COURT DID NOT APPLY A PER SE RULE AGAINST INDEMNIFICATION AGREEMENTS.

Subject to certain restrictions, the unsecured creditors' committee in a bankruptcy may apply to the court to obtain permission to employ professionals to "represent or perform services" for the committee. 11 U.S.C. 1103(a). If the bankruptcy court determines it is appropriate to retain the professional, the court must then review the proposed terms of employment to determine whether they are reasonable. See 11 U.S.C. 328(a). When doing so, the bankruptcy court must exercise its discretion in a manner that takes into account the particular facts and circumstances surrounding each case. See, e.g., In re Arochem Corp., 176 F.3d 610, 621 (2d Cir. 1999) (citing 3 Collier on Bankruptcy, ¶ 327.04[1][a]).

On appeal, Houlihan and the Committee contend that the BAP "ignored the Bankruptcy Court's adoption of the per se rule." App. Br. 15. It is appellants, however, that misread the bankruptcy court's opinion. As the BAP found, the bankruptcy court did make statements expressing strong views about indemnification and exculpation, but, as the BAP also held, it is clear that the bankruptcy court examined the evidence in this case and found it lacking.

The bankruptcy court stated throughout its opinion that it needed to evaluate the reasonableness of the proposed terms within the context of this case. See, e.g., JA 10 ("the Court concludes that in this case the indemnification provisions are unreasonable"); JA 12 (the focus of the Court's analysis under Section 328(a) is “specifically whether the terms of the indemnity agreement included in the engagement letter are reasonable”); JA 13 (finding Houlihan’s argument “unavailing under the circumstances of this case”); JA 14 (“What is reasonable must be assessed with due regard for the particular and unique circumstances of each bankruptcy case and for the fair and equitable administration of the bankruptcy estate.” (all emphases added)). Houlihan and the Committee ignore these numerous references which indicate that the bankruptcy court was well aware of and fulfilling its duty of examining the unique circumstances of the particular case before it in evaluating whether the proposed indemnification provisions were reasonable.

Moreover, these numerous references to the particular facts of this case were not mere lip service to the requirement that the bankruptcy court conduct an analysis of the particular case. Throughout its opinion, the bankruptcy court found that Houlihan and the Committee had failed to meet their burden, as the movants, in establishing that for this case the proposed indemnification provisions were reasonable. Thus, for example, in rejecting their contention that economic conditions required such indemnification provisions, the bankruptcy court noted that while Houlihan claimed that it does not and cannot insure against the economic risk, the firm also noted that an employment agreement that did not include the proposed indemnification provisions would require a substantial increase in fees to adequately insure against these risks. The bankruptcy court determined that the increase in fees was preferable in this case to the uncapped blank check liability that the estate would face under the indemnification provisions. Accordingly, the bankruptcy court found Houlihan’s argument insufficient justification for sustaining a finding that the provisions were reasonable.

The record in this case fully supports the bankruptcy court’s decision, given the lack of any showing by Houlihan and the Committee to support the reasonableness of the indemnification provisions in this case. The court could have reached a different result if, for example, Houlihan and the Committee had demonstrated that the estate’s liability under the indemnification provisions was, in some way, limited. Similarly, the bankruptcy court’s decision could have been different if the liability proposed did not include the cost of defense, the cost of settlements, or if it was proposed in light of some clearly pending claim. There is no basis for finding that a difference in these or other factors might not have changed the bankruptcy court’s decision.

The bankruptcy court also evaluated the particular circumstances of this case with respect to Houlihan’s argument that the Committee would be unable to select the advisor it wanted in the absence of the proposed indemnification provisions. Here, too, the bankruptcy court found that there was insufficient evidence to support such a finding in this case. As the bankruptcy court indicated, “[t]his argument propounds rank speculation.” JA 16. Again, however, if Houlihan and the Committee had presented evidence that the Committee was unable to select the advisor it wanted or was unable to find a service provider without including such provisions, the bankruptcy court under those circumstances might not have refused the proposed provisions. Houlihan and the Committee seek to obscure the fact that they failed to meet their evidentiary burden by arguing that the bankruptcy court applied a per se test in this case. But as the BAP held, it was appellants’ own failure to address the circumstances of the case and present evidence justifying the inclusion of the proposed provisions in this case that led the bankruptcy court to find that the provisions were not reasonable here.

III. THE BANKRUPTCY COURT’S FINDING THAT HOULIHAN AND THE COMMITTEE FAILED TO SATISFY THEIR BURDEN OF ESTABLISHING THAT THE PROPOSED INDEMNIFICATION PROVISIONS WERE REASONABLE WAS, AS THE BAP HELD, NOT CLEARLY ERRONEOUS.

Based on the evidence before it, the bankruptcy court in this case held that the proposed indemnification provisions were not reasonable. That factual finding, well supported by the record in this case, was affirmed by the BAP, and Houlihan and the Committee fall well short of establishing on appeal that the finding is clearly erroneous.

As Houlihan and the Committee concede, see, e.g., App. Br. 21-22, they, as the moving party, had the burden of establishing that the proposed indemnification provisions were reasonable in this case. See, e.g., In re Geraci, 138 F.3d 314, 318 (7th Cir.), cert. denied, 525 U.S. 821 (1998); Zolfo, Cooper & Co. v.

Sunbeam-Oster Co., 50 F.3d 253, 259 n.5 (3d Cir. 1995); In re Gillett Holdings, Inc., 137 B.R. 452, 455 (Bankr. D. Colo. 1991).

Only one circuit court of appeals has addressed the use of indemnification provisions for bankruptcy professionals. In In re United Artists, 315 F.3d 217 (3d Cir. 2003), the Third Circuit faced an appeal from a bankruptcy court order (and the district court's affirmance of that order) approving the retention of bankruptcy professionals under terms including an indemnification provision. The U.S. Trustee argued in that case that such provisions were per se unreasonable, but the Third Circuit disagreed. The court held that indemnification provisions were not per se unreasonable in every bankruptcy case. See 315 F.3d at 235 (Alito, J., concurring) ("The opinion of the court, as I understand it, holds only that the 'reasonableness' standard of 11 U.S.C. § 328(a) does not categorically prohibit indemnification of financial advisors, as the United States Trustee argues.").

The United Artists case is inapposite here. In United Artists, the United States Trustee did not litigate the reasonableness in that particular case of the proposed provisions. The only question before the Third Circuit was whether indemnification clauses are per se unreasonable in all cases.

Although the United States pressed such an argument before the bankruptcy court in this case, that court failed to adopt a per se prohibition. The bankruptcy court in this case did not hold that indemnification provisions are per se unreasonable. Instead, it held that the proposed provisions were not reasonable in this case. Given the bankruptcy court’s holding, the United States Trustee argued before the BAP that it could affirm either upon the bankruptcy court’s conclusion that the moving parties had failed to meet their burden of establishing reasonableness in this particular case, or, alternatively, on the per se argument. Affirming the bankruptcy court, the BAP held that Houlihan and the Committee failed to demonstrate that the proposed indemnification provisions were reasonable. On this appeal, the U.S. Trustee argues only that the holdings of the bankruptcy court and the BAP were correct and does not argue for a per se rule.

In support of their contention that they presented “undisputed evidence” of reasonableness to the bankruptcy court, Houlihan and the Committee argue on appeal that they established (1) that the indemnification provisions were standard terms and conditions of employment in the marketplace; (2) that Houlihan made modifications to the agreement that, when combined with the fact that it had never invoked indemnification in any other engagement, significantly reduced the potential risk to the debtors; (3) in light of the economic and litigation environment, there was a significant need for these provisions; and (4) the provisions were negotiated at arms-length by sophisticated professionals. App. Br. 23-24. Remarkably, Houlihan and the Committee continue to make the same mistake that they accuse the bankruptcy court of making: failing to establish reasonableness for this case. Virtually all of appellants' evidence is not specific to this case. Rather, appellants continue to rely on the market approach and the fact that Houlihan frequently obtains such indemnification in other cases and contexts. They fail, however, to indicate why such provisions are appropriate in this particular bankruptcy.

Indeed, appellants continue to maintain that it is the market's standard "'that is to be the controlling standard under the relevant provisions of the Bankruptcy Code.'" Appellants Br. 30 (quoting In re Comdisco, No. 01 B 24795 (Bankr. N.D. Ill. 2002)). There is, however, no basis for finding that the market approach is the sole determinant of reasonableness. Indeed, the market approach is not mentioned anywhere in the analysis of the reasonableness of terms and conditions under Section 328(a). Instead, Houlihan and the Committee import this factor from the last of a list of considerations set out in Section 330(a)(3) for use in determining whether, at the time of payment, actual compensation sought by a bankruptcy professional is reasonable. See 11 U.S.C. 330(a) (after notice and hearings, the bankruptcy court may award to a professional "reasonable compensation for actual, necessary services rendered" by the professional and in determining "the amount of reasonable compensation to be awarded" the court shall consider all relevant factors including the time spent on the services, the rates charged, whether the services were necessary, whether the services were performed in a reasonable amount of time, and whether the compensation is reasonable based on the “customary compensation charged by comparably skilled practitioners” in non-bankruptcy cases).

While it may make sense for bankruptcy courts to consider the non-bankruptcy market in evaluating the reasonableness of proposed terms – and both the bankruptcy court and the BAP explicitly considered it in evaluating reasonableness –, it alone is not dispositive of the question of reasonableness, and no court of appeals ever has suggested that it is.

The only circuit court to address indemnification provisions for bankruptcy professionals at all, held as to market conditions that the fact that indemnification provisions are common in the marketplace “does not automatically make them ‘reasonable’” in the bankruptcy context since the court’s approach is “‘market driven’” not “‘market-determined.’” In re United Artists, 315 F.3d at 229. And it certainly was not clearly erroneous for the bankruptcy court to find that it should consider other factors in addition to the practice of the non-bankruptcy market.[10] [10] Houlihan and the Committee also overstate the prevalence and breadth of these provisions in bankruptcy cases. A number of bankruptcy courts have rejected efforts to include such provisions, or have approved them only with scopes much narrower than those of the proposed agreements in this case. See, e.g., In re Metricom, Inc., 275 B.R. 364 (Bankr. N.D. Cal. 2002); In re Gillett Holdings, Inc., 137 B.R. 452 (Bankr. D. Colo. 1991); In re Mortgage & Realty Trust, 123 B.R. 626 (Bankr. C.D. Cal. 1991); In re Allegheny Int’l, Inc., 100 B.R. 244 (W.D. Pa. 1989); see also In re DEC Int’l, Inc., 282 B.R. 423, 426-29 (W.D. Wis. 2002)(summarizing cases). Even the district court in In re Comdisco, the case on which Appellants heavily rely, noted that while the courts have “almost uniformly declined to impose a blanket prohibition against their use,” “[m]ost of the courts

Houlihan and the Committee also argue that the bankruptcy court "imposed upon the Committee a mandate that it attempt to find a financial advisor that would take the engagement without the market indemnification provisions." Appellants Br. 33. The court imposed no such requirement; it simply found that appellants had failed to establish reasonableness. If the Committee had shown that it could not find a financial advisor absent such provisions, that might have weighed in favor of a finding that the proposed indemnification provisions were reasonable; nevertheless, there was no requirement that such evidence be presented, and even if it had, no reason to conclude that countervailing factors still might not have led a court to find the proposed terms unreasonable. Appellants simply confuse what was necessary with what might have been sufficient.

Houlihan and the Committee further contend that while "no evidence" was presented, the BAP and the bankruptcy court concluded that the indemnification provisions could pose potentially unlimited risk upon the estate if approved. Again appellants erroneously shift the burden in this case. It was not incumbent upon the courts below or U.S. Trustee to establish that there was an unlimited risk; rather, the burden was on appellants to establish that any risk was reasonable.

10 addressing indemnity clauses for financial advisors have expressed reservations about them." In re Comdisco, 2002 WL 31109431 (N.D. Ill. 2002). (The district court in In re Comdisco did not address the reasonableness of the particular agreements in the case and held only that there was no per se bar against such agreements.)

Moreover, the risk was obvious from the work Houlihan was being retained to do. Houlihan was retained to value this debtors’ assets and assist in evaluating the liabilities of the debtors and their subsidiaries; analyze and review the financial and operating statements of the debtors; evaluate all aspects of any debtor financing and exit financing; provide valuation or other financial analyses as the Committee might require; assess the financial issues and options concerning a sale of the debtors or reorganization plan; and prepare, analyze, and explain any plan to the Committee. These are among the most important tasks that can be performed in a Chapter 11 reorganization case. The court knew, as would any participant in the bankruptcy process, that significant losses could occur if Houlihan performed them negligently.

Appellants’ claim that there was no evidence of the potentially unlimited impact on the estate is also absurd in light of the fact that the liability protection afforded under the proposed indemnification provisions is wholly uncapped. The provision serves as a potential blank check for Houlihan, including indemnification for costs of defense and settlements. Indeed, the very case which is touted as the justification for indemnification provisions, see, e.g., In re United Artists, 315 F.3d at 229, demonstrates the enormous potential liability that the estate here could face. See In re Merry-Go-Round Enters., Inc., 244 B.R. 327 (Bankr. D. Md. 2000) (accounting firm settled negligence, malpractice, fraud, and fraudulent concealment suit for $185 million). And even if the risk were not so extensive, it is nonetheless unknown and unknowable under the proposed provisions.[11] One of the principal objectives in bankruptcy is to quantify with specificity the liabilities of the estate. An indemnification provision such as the one proposed by Houlihan renders that effort unfeasible.[12]

Houlihan and the Committee do make one case-specific argument: that the indemnification provisions were the product of arms-length negotiations. This one factor – even if true – is insufficient to make the provisions reasonable and in any event, is certainly insufficient to render the bankruptcy court's factual finding, that the provisions were unreasonable, clearly erroneous.

Houlihan and the Committee seek to divert this Court's attention from the BAP's affirmance of the bankruptcy court's decision by claiming that the BAP mistakenly required them to establish that the provisions would be in the best interest of [11] Appellants misleadingly state that "even the BAP had to admit that the risk . . . was likely de minimis." App. Br. at 38. What the BAP actually stated was that even if the risk were de minimis, that risk was not necessarily reasonable to impose on the estate.

[12] Furthermore, as the BAP recognized, the risk from the uncapped indemnification provisions in this case is exacerbated by the fact that it is the debtors who are responsible for the payments, but the Committee that is Houlihan's client. The debtors are thus being asked in this case to provide unlimited indemnification for a professional over which they have no control.

the estate. This argument is a red herring. The BAP clearly applied a test of whether the indemnification provisions were reasonable. See, e.g., BAP Op. at 9 (discussing whether the bankruptcy judge erred in finding that the indemnification provisions were "unreasonable" under the circumstances of this case); id. at 10 ("the appropriate inquiry, and the inquiry made by the bankruptcy court, is whether taken as a whole the terms of the retention are unreasonable"); ibid. (holding that the bankruptcy court discusses reasons why the indemnity and exculpation provisions were not reasonable under the circumstances of this case); ibid. (bankruptcy judge considered factors to ultimately find that the indemnity and exculpation provisions were not reasonable under 11 U.S.C. 328(a)); id. at 9-10 ("[k]eeping within the analysis of reasonableness under the circumstances . . . the bankruptcy court found that . . . the risk of unlimited liability and exculpation was simply unreasonable"); id. at 10 (bankruptcy court found that because the impact and financial risk to the estate were not finite and certain, it was "unreasonable" under the circumstances of this case to approve the indemnification and exculpation provisions); id. at 11 ("the question for the bankruptcy court was whether the terms and conditions of Houlihan Lokey's employment were reasonable under the circumstances"); id. at 12 (agreeing with the bankruptcy court that "what is reasonable is not and has not been defined solely by what market conditions suggest" and that the market is "but one factor in the analysis of what is reasonable under the circumstances”); id. at 13 (finding that appellants failed to argue why it is “reasonable” for the estate to bear the risk of liability).[13]

Furthermore, even if the BAP had adopted a “best interests” test, and assuming arguendo that such a test was not the correct test, any such error would be immaterial to this appeal. It is well established that this Court applies the same standard of review to the bankruptcy court decision as does the BAP. Appellants do not contend that the bankruptcy court applied the wrong test, so even if the wrong test were applied by the BAP, Houlihan and the Committee cannot establish that the bankruptcy court’s factual finding that the provisions were unreasonable – the finding that this Court reviews – is clearly erroneous.[14]

[13] Moreover, there is nothing wrong with asking whether a term or condition of employment will benefit the bankruptcy estate. The purpose of chapter 11 cases is to produce a plan of reorganization that can be approved and which will maximize creditor recoveries. Indeed, much of the work Houlihan was employed to do was help devise a feasible plan. If a bankruptcy court were to determine that a term of employment was not in the best interest of the estate, it would be the court’s duty to reject it. Certainly it was not unreasonable here for the lower court to find it significant that Houlihan sought a blank check that could have imposed very large losses upon this bankruptcy estate.

[14] Appellants’ heavy emphasis on the analysis of reasonableness with respect to compensation, see App. Br. 19-21, is also misplaced. Most of the factors cited by appellants in their brief – time spent on services, rates charged for services, amount of time spent compared with the complexity of the case – obviously have no bearing on the reasonableness of indemnification provisions. Cf. In re Mortgage & Realty Trust, 123 B.R. at 631 (“compensation” as used in 11 U.S.C. 330 “is to be provided in money or money’s worth” and an indemnification provision “does not fall within the scope of this statutory language”). The bankruptcy court in this case explicitly held (continued...)

The bankruptcy court determined that the evidence presented by Houlihan and the Committee was insufficient, for the purposes of this case, to establish that the proposed indemnification provisions were reasonable. That finding was well supported by the record in this case and, as the BAP held, was not clearly erroneous. Furthermore, based on that finding, the bankruptcy court did not abuse its discretion in rejecting the proposed provisions.[15] that the proposed compensation here was reasonable. What appellants failed to establish was that the indemnification provisions were reasonable.

CONCLUSION

[15] Houlihan and the Committee do not appear to argue that if the bankruptcy court was not clearly erroneous in finding the provisions unreasonable, the court's rejection of the provisions constituted an abuse of discretion. Nor would there by any basis for such an argument. There is no reason in this case, and appellants point to none, for the bankruptcy court to have determined that it should approve provisions it had held are unreasonable.

STATEMENT OF JURISDICTION

The United States Bankruptcy Court for the Northern District of Illinois had jurisdiction over Mr. Thigpen's chapter 7 bankruptcy case under 28 U.S.C. § 157(a) and (b). That court entered its Order Granting Trustee's Motion to Dismiss Case on February 6, 2006 and its Order Denying Mr. Thigpen's Request to Continue/Reschedule Hearing on February 7, 2006. Mr. Thigpen timely appealed these orders to this Court under 28 U.S.C. § 158(c)(2) and Fed. R. Bankr. P. 8002(a) on February 15, 2006. This Court has jurisdiction over this appeal under 28 U.S.C. § 158(a).

STATEMENT OF THE ISSUE

11 U.S.C.§ 109(h) prohibits individuals from seeking bankruptcy relief unless they complete a credit counseling course prior to filing for bankruptcy to help them assess their financial situation and to explore possible alternatives to bankruptcy. Douglas M. Thigpen, the Appellant, failed to do that. Given this failure, did the bankruptcy court err when it refused to continue the hearing on the motion to dismiss, and dismissed Mr. Thigpen's bankruptcy case, when he filed his Motion to Continue after the statutory limit of 45 days for requesting a temporary deferral to obtain credit counseling?

STANDARD OF APPELLATE REVIEW

This Court reviews the bankruptcy court's findings of fact with the clearly erroneous standard. Conclusions of law are reviewed de novo. In re Woodbrook Assoc., 19 F.3d 312, 316 (7th Cir. 1994).

STATEMENT OF THE CASE

Douglas M. Thigpen, the debtor and appellant, filed a voluntary chapter 7 petition on December 14, 2005. [Docket #1].[1] Mr. Thigpen did not file with his petition a certificate of credit counseling establishing that he had received credit counseling before filing for bankruptcy, or a temporary deferral certification requesting additional time to obtain credit counseling due to exigent circumstances. See 11 U.S.C. §§ 109(h) and 521(b). Based on this failure, the United States Trustee filed his Motion to Dismiss Case (the "Motion to Dismiss") asserting that Mr. Thigpen was ineligible to be a debtor under the Bankruptcy Code. [Docket #9]. On February 2, 2006, Mr. Thigpen filed his Motion to Continue/Reschedule Hearing (the "Motion to Continue"). [Docket #11]. At the February 3, 2006, hearing on the Motion to Dismiss, the bankruptcy court denied the Motion to Continue and dismissed the bankruptcy case. Mr. Thigpen timely appealed these orders on February 15, 2006. [Docket #17].

[1] Mr. Thigpen timely filed his Notice of Appeal of the Order Granting the Trustee's Motion to Dismiss Case and the Order Denying Motion to Continue/Reschedule on February 15, 2006. However, Mr. Thigpen never filed a designation of the items to be included in the record on appeal or a statement of the issues to be presented as required by Fed. R. Bankr. P. 8006. Even though the record was not complete for purposes of appeal, the bankruptcy clerk transmitted the appeal to the clerk of this Court. See Fed. R. Bankr. P. 8007(b). To assist this Court in deciding this appeal, contemporaneously with filing this brief, the United States Trustee filed a motion requesting leave to designate items to be included in the record on appeal.

STATEMENT OF THE FACTS

I. Statutory Framework

On April 20, 2005, the President signed the Bankruptcy Abuse Prevention and Consumer Protection Act of 2005 ("BAPCPA"), Public Law 109-8, 119 Stat. 23. The BAPCPA made the most substantial changes to the Bankruptcy Code since 1978. Included in the BAPCPA's amendments is a new debtor eligibility requirement added as subsection (h) to section 109 of title 11.

11 U.S.C. § 109(h)(1) requires that all individual debtors, with limited exceptions, obtain a "briefing that outlined the opportunities for available credit counseling," commonly referred to as credit counseling, before filing for bankruptcy.[2] This requirement is imposed upon all individual debtors as an eligibility pre-requisite before entering the bankruptcy system. A debtor can seek a temporary deferral from this credit counseling requirement if the debtor can demonstrate to the bankruptcy court that he or she could not obtain credit counseling before filing bankruptcy due to exigent circumstances. 11 U.S.C. § 109(h)(3).[3] If the bankruptcy court determines that exigent circumstances exist, the debtor may be granted additional time to receive the required credit

[2] Specifically, Section 109(h) provides that "an individual may not be a debtor under this title unless such individual has, during the 180-day period preceding the date of filing of the petition by such individual, received from an approved nonprofit budget and credit counseling agency described in section 111(a) an individual or group briefing (including a briefing conducted by telephone or on the Internet) that outlined the opportunities for available credit counseling and assisted such individual in performing a related budget analysis."

[3] In order to qualify for this temporary deferral, a debtor must also show that he or she requested credit counseling from an approved agency, but that the agency was unable to provide counseling within five days of the debtor's request, and that the request is "satisfactory" to the court. 11 U.S.C. § 109(h)(3)(A)(ii) and (iii).

counseling, up to a maximum of 45 days. However, in "no case" may the bankruptcy court extend the temporary deferral beyond this statutory deadline of 45 days. 11 U.S.C. § 109(h)(3)(B).

A debtor may obtain a permanent waiver from the credit counseling requirement if the United States Trustee waives an entire judicial district due to inadequate credit counseling agencies or if a debtor demonstrates to the bankruptcy court, after notice and a hearing, that the debtor, after reasonable effort, is either incapacitated, disabled, or on active military duty in a military combat zone. 11 U.S.C. §109(h)(2) and (4).

II. Factual Background

On December 14, 2005, Mr. Thigpen filed a voluntary chapter 7 petition pro se. [Docket #1]. Mr. Thigpen did not file with his petition a certificate of credit counseling establishing that he had received credit counseling before filing for bankruptcy, or a temporary deferral certification requesting additional time to obtain credit counseling due to exigent circumstances.

The United States Trustee filed the Motion to Dismiss on January 24, 2006, which was noticed for hearing on February 3, 2006. [Docket #9]. On January 30, 2006, Mr. Thigpen delivered his Motion to Continue to the prison authorities where he was incarcerated, and it was filed on February 2, 2006. [Docket #11]. The Motion to Continue requests an extension of time to respond to the Motion to Dismiss and to hire counsel to represent him in the case. Id.

At the February 3, 2006 hearing, the bankruptcy court denied the Motion to Continue and dismissed the bankruptcy case. [Docket ## 13 and 14]. Mr. Thigpen timely appealed these orders on February 15, 2006. [Docket #17].

SUMMARY OF ARGUMENT

Mr. Thigpen suggests the bankruptcy court violated his due process rights when it denied his Motion to Continue to obtain counsel and to respond to the United States Trustee's Motion to Dismiss. See Appellant's Brief, p.7 - 9. Mr. Thigpen is mistaken for three reasons: (1) the statutory deadline for credit counseling extensions had already expired before he filed his continuance motion so an attorney, even if one could have been obtained, could not have changed the outcome; (2) similarly, continuing the case would only have delayed dismissal because the bankruptcy court did not possess the authority to grant Mr. Thigpen additional time to obtain credit counseling due to the statutory deadline; and (3) continuance motions are within the discretion of the bankruptcy court and the court did not abuse that discretion in denying Mr. Thigpen's request based on the facts of this case.

11 U.S.C. § 109(h) requires debtors to obtain credit counseling before filing a bankruptcy petition to be eligible for bankruptcy relief. The only exception that allows for post-petition credit counseling is found in section 109(h)(3). This exception authorizes a court to grant a temporary deferral for obtaining credit counseling up to a maximum of 45 days post-petition if the court is satisfied with the debtor's certification of exigent circumstances. Mr. Thigpen never obtained credit counseling pre-petition and did not file a certification of exigent circumstances requesting a temporary deferral. Even if Mr. Thigpen's Motion to Continue could be construed as a certification of exigent circumstances that warrant a temporary deferral, the court could not grant Mr. Thigpen additional time to obtain credit counseling since the Bankruptcy Code expressly limits a court's discretion to grant additional time to a maximum of 45 days. Mr. Thigpen delivered his Motion to Continue to prison authorities after these 45 days had already lapsed. Because the court did not possess the authority to extend the time for Mr. Thigpen to obtain credit counseling, there was no reason to allow Mr. Thigpen additional time to respond to the United States Trustee's Motion to Dismiss or to obtain counsel. Even if Mr. Thigpen obtained legal representation, his counsel could not change the fact that his Motion to Continue was filed too late and the court was bound to dismiss his case.

Further, continuance motions are within the discretion of the trial court and will only be reversed if the court acted unreasonably. Because the court lacked the authority to grant Mr. Thigpen additional time to obtain credit counseling, the court acted within its discretion in denying Mr. Thigpen's Motion to Continue. Accordingly, the court properly dismissed Mr. Thigpen's case.

ARGUMENT

Section 109 of the Bankruptcy Code unequivocally requires debtors to obtain credit counseling before filing for bankruptcy. See 11 U.S.C. § 109(h). In so doing, section 109(h) effectuates Congress' stated intent to compel "debtors to participate in credit counseling programs before filing for bankruptcy relief... [in order] to give consumers in financial distress an opportunity to learn about the consequences of bankruptcy... before they decide to file for bankruptcy relief." H.R. Rep. No. 109-31, part 1, at 18 (2005) (Conf. Rep.).

Failure to obtain credit counseling prior to filing a bankruptcy petition renders an individual ineligible to be a debtor under the Bankruptcy Code. See In re Gossett, 369 B.R. 361, 365 (Bankr. N.D. Ill. 2007) (Section 109(h)(1) "is sometimes referred to as the ticket into consumer bankruptcy for individual debtors, and is an eligibility requirement for relief with certain exceptions"); In re Cobb, 343 B.R. 204, 207 (Bankr. E.D. Ark. 2006) ("[m]ake no mistake about Congress' intention: individual debtors must have credit counseling before they are eligible for relief under any chapter of the Bankruptcy Code"); In re Rios, 336 B.R. 177, 179 (Bankr. S.D.N.Y. 2005) ("Under the BAPCPA, Congressional intent is clear that credit counseling is required prior to filing, as a prerequisite for bankruptcy relief, to provide putative debtors with the opportunity to make informed choices as to financial alternatives available"); In re Valdez, 335 B.R. 801, 803 (Bankr. S.D. Fla. 2005) (holding that individual who filed pro se Chapter 13 petition did not qualify as a debtor as she did not fulfill the pre-petition budget and credit counseling requirement); In re Gee, 332 B.R. 602, 604 (Bankr. W.D. Mo. 2005) ("[w]ithout a waiver, Debtor is clearly ineligible to be a debtor under § 109(h)(1) because she did not obtain the required credit counseling services within 180 days prior to the filing of the petition").

There are only three exceptions to this requirement, which include: (1) residing in a district where the United States Trustee has waived the credit counseling requirement; (2) filing a certification of exigent circumstances that the court determines warrant a 45 day temporary deferral; and (3) being unable, after reasonable effort, to obtain credit counseling due to incapacity, disability, or active military duty in a combat zone. 11 U.S.C. § 109(h)(2),(3), and (4). None of these exceptions apply in the present case, nor has Mr. Thigpen presented any evidence or even alleged that he qualifies for any of these exceptions.

Section 109(h)(3) permits a debtor to obtain a temporary deferral to receive credit counseling after filing the petition if exigent circumstances exist and if the credit counseling is received no more than 45 days after the date the bankruptcy petition is filed. Congress emphasized that the 45th day was the outer limit for compliance: "in no case may the exemption apply to that debtor after the date that is 30 days after the debtor files a petition, except that the court, for cause, may order an additional 15 days." 11 U.S.C. § 109(h)(3)(B).

Even if the bankruptcy court had construed Mr. Thigpen's Motion to Continue to be a request for a temporary deferral to receive credit counseling due to exigent circumstances under section 109(h)(3)(A), that exception does not apply in this case because the Motion to Continue was delivered to prison authorities on January 30, 2006, and filed on February 2, 2006. These dates are more than 45 days after the December 14, 2005, date of filing the petition in this case. Section 109(h)(3)(B) expressly limits a court's authority to grant temporary deferrals to 45 days after the petition is filed. Therefore, the court did not possess the authority to grant Mr. Thigpen additional time to obtain credit counseling when he filed his Motion to Continue. See Clippard v. Bass. 365 B.R. 131 (W.D. Tenn. 2007) (in reversing the bankruptcy court for granting a debtor 49 days to obtain counseling post-petition, the district court stated, "the plain language of 11 U.S.C. 109(h)(3)(B) states that in 'no case' may a temporary deferral extend beyond forty-five days").[4] Because the court could not grant Mr. Thigpen more time, there was no reason for a continuance of the hearing on the Motion to Dismiss.

[4] In addition to being filed too late to be considered a valid certification of exigent circumstances that warrant a temporary deferral, Mr. Thigpen's Motion to Continue fails to satisfy the substantive requirements of such a certification by failing to identify the exigency that caused him to file bankruptcy without first obtaining credit counseling, as well as indicating that he requested credit counseling from an approved credit counseling agency pre-petition, but was unable to obtain the counseling within five days of his request. 11 U.S.C. § 109(h)(3)(A)(i) and (ii). See also In re McBride, 354 B.R. 95 (Bankr. D.S.C. 2006)(court denied incarcerated debtor's request for exigent circumstances temporary deferral because, among other things, debtor failed to comply with section 109(h)(3)(A)(ii) requirement that debtor request credit counseling before filing petition); In re Latovljevic, 343 B.R. 817 (Bankr. N.D. W.Va. 2006) (same).

Furthermore, the Supreme Court has ruled that continuance motions are within the discretion of the trial court, and that "there are no mechanical tests for deciding when a denial of a continuance is so arbitrary as to violate due process. The answer must be found in the circumstances present in every case, particularly in the reasons presented to the trial judge at the time the request is denied." Ungar v. Sarafite, 376 U.S. 575, 589 (1964). See also Research Systems Corp. v. IPSOS Publicite, et al., 276 F.3d 914, 919 (7th Cir. 2002) ("'We review the trial court's denial of a continuance for abuse of discretion.... Matters of trial management are for the district judge; we intervene only when it is apparent that the judge has acted unreasonably'") (quoting United States v. $94,000 in United States Currency, 2 F.3d 778, 787 (7th Cir. 1993), and N. Ind. Pub. Serv. Co. v. Carbon County Coal Co., 799 F.2d 265, 269 (7th Cir. 1986)).

In Mr. Thigpen's Motion to Continue, he asserts that he does not understand the law and needs an attorney "to file the needed petitions or documents in this matter." See Appellant's Motion to Continue, p. 1. However, Mr. Thigpen filed his petition pro se on December 14, 2005, and had over a month to locate an attorney to assist him in his bankruptcy. Further, it is well established that legal counsel is not a right in bankruptcy; "the right to counsel only exists in favor of an indigent whose physical liberty is at stake." In re Eagle, 373 B.R. 609, 612 (B.A.P. 8th Cir. 2007) (citing Lassiter v. Dep't of Soc. Servs. of Durham County, 452 U.S. 18, 26-27 (1981)). See also In re Merritt, 186 B.R. 924, 934 (Bankr. S.D. Ohio 1995) (bankruptcy court denied incarcerated debtor's request for an attorney, stating that "[t]here is no right to counsel in a civil case") (citations omitted). Even if the court granted Mr. Thigpen time to obtain counsel, his case would have been dismissed for failure to obtain credit counseling since the 45 day statutory deadline in section 109(h)(3)(B) had already lapsed when he filed his Motion to Continue. Obtaining legal counsel could not change that result. Therefore, if any error exists it is harmless error.

The facts in this case demonstrate the bankruptcy court did not abuse its discretion. Mr. Thigpen did not obtain credit counseling before filing his petition as the Bankruptcy Code requires, nor does he qualify for an exception. The bankruptcy court was not empowered to grant Mr. Thigpen additional time to obtain credit counseling since he filed his Motion to Continue after the 45 day limit established in Section 109(h)(3)(B). Therefore, the bankruptcy court acted reasonably, and within its discretion, in denying Mr. Thigpen's Motion to Continue. Finally, Mr. Thigpen has not provided any case law that supports his position that the bankruptcy court abused its discretion. Accordingly, Mr. Thigpen's due process rights were not violated since the bankruptcy court was bound to dismiss his case due to his ineligibility to be a debtor. Thus, the bankruptcy court properly denied Mr. Thigpen's Motion to Continue and dismissed his case.[5] [5] Mr. Thigpen is not without a remedy. He may obtain credit counseling at any time and file a new bankruptcy petition.

CONCLUSION

For these reasons, the United States Trustee respectfully asks this Court to affirm the orders entered below.

JURISDICTIONAL STATEMENT

The United States Bankruptcy Court for the District of Kansas had jurisdiction under 28 U.S.C. §§ 157(b) and 1334(a) to hear the underlying case, commenced by the filing of a voluntary petition under chapter 7 of the Bankruptcy Code, 11 U.S.C. § 701, et seq. On October 2, 2007, the bankruptcy court entered an order denying the United States Trustee's motion to dismiss Richard and Kathy Thomases' case for abuse of chapter 7. On October 12, 2007, the United States Trustee filed a timely notice of appeal from that order. See 28 U.S.C. § 158(c)(2); Fed. R. Bankr. P. 8002(a). This Court has jurisdiction over this appeal under 28 U.S.C. § 158(a)(1).

STATEMENT OF THE ISSUE

Did the bankruptcy court err by ruling that the Thomases could claim transportation "ownership expenses," for purposes of the section 707(b)(2) means test, for vehicles on which they are not making any loan or lease payments?

STATEMENT OF THE CASE

This appeal challenges a bankruptcy court order denying the United States Trustee's motion to dismiss a chapter 7 case for presumed abuse under the means test in section 707(b)(2).

On July 27, 2006, Richard and Kelly Thomas filed a voluntary petition for relief under chapter 7 of the Bankruptcy Code. In their required bankruptcy filings, the Thomases claimed ownership expenses for two vehicles they owned free and clear. Without credit for the deductions, the Thomases' case would be presumptively abusive of chapter 7. The Thomases also acknowledged that they had $1,513.04 in actual monthly net income based on their Schedules I and J. Therefore, the United States Trustee filed a motion to dismiss for abuse of chapter 7.[1] The United States Trustee claimed that the Thomases' case was a presumed abuse under section 707(b)(2), and alternatively that that the totality of the circumstances of their financial situation demonstrated abuse under section 707(b)(3)(B).

The bankruptcy court denied the United States Trustee's motion to dismiss in its entirety. It ruled that the Thomases could take the transportation ownership expense deduction, even though they had no loan or lease payments on their vehicles. Therefore, the bankruptcy court held their case was not presumptively abusive under section 707(b)(2). The bankruptcy court also ruled that the debtors' case did not demonstrate abuse under section 707(b)(3)(B). This appeal followed.

STATEMENT OF THE FACTS

I. Statutory Framework

An individual who seeks to discharge past debts may file a petition under chapter 7 of the Bankruptcy Code. See 11 U.S.C. § 701, et seq. By filing such a petition, the individual "commences" a bankruptcy case and becomes a "debtor." See 11 U.S.C. § 301(a), 101(13). Barring debtor misconduct or other special situations, the bankruptcy court will eventually issue an order discharging most of the debtor's pre-petition financial obligations. See 11 U.S.C. § 727.

The Bankruptcy Abuse Prevention and Consumer Protection Act of 2005 ("2005 Reform Act") made significant changes to the Bankruptcy Code, including a new means test for chapter on any issue in any case or proceeding" under the Bankruptcy Code. 11 U.S.C. § 307. United States Trustees are senior officials of the Department of Justice appointed by the Attorney General to supervise the administration of bankruptcy cases. 28 U.S.C. §§ 581-89 (specifying the powers and duties of United States Trustees). See generally Morganstern v. Revco D.S. Inc. (In re Revco D.S., Inc.), 898 F.2d 498, 500 (6th Cir. 1990) (explaining that United States Trustees oversee the bankruptcy process, protect the public interest, and ensure that bankruptcy cases are conducted according to law).

7 individual debtors with primarily consumer debts.[2] See 11 U.S.C. § 707(b)(1). "The heart of the bill's consumer bankruptcy reforms consists of the implementation of an income/expense screening mechanism . . . which is intended to ensure that debtors repay creditors the maximum they can afford." H.R. Rep. 109-31 at 1 (I) (2005), as reprinted in 2005 U.S.C.C.A.N. 88, 89.

The legislative history to the 2005 Reform Act reveals that Congress meant to prevent debtors from obtaining chapter 7 relief if they had an ability to repay their creditors. Although "some bankruptcy debtors are able to repay a significant portion of their debts," Congress was driven to act because existing law had "no clear mandate requiring these debtors to repay their debts." Id. at 5 & n.18, as reprinted in 2005 U.S.C.C.A.N. 88, 92.

As part of this effort, Congress significantly amended section 707(b) of the Bankruptcy Code, which governs dismissal of chapter 7 bankruptcy cases. As it existed prior to the 2005 Reform Act, section 707(b) only authorized dismissal based on a finding that allowing the debtor relief (i.e., granting a discharge of debts) constituted a "substantial abuse" of chapter 7. Prior to its 2005 amendment, section 707(b) also required courts to presume that a debtor was entitled to relief under chapter 7 of the Bankruptcy Code. Section 707(b) now authorizes dismissal where the court finds that the granting of relief would be an "abuse" of chapter 7. "Abuse" may be found by the bankruptcy court under the circumstances described in newly added subsections (b)(2) and (b)(3). Further, section 707(b)(2) repealed the former presumption in favor of a debtor obtaining bankruptcy relief and replaced it with a new presumption: a case will be presumed to be an "abuse" of chapter 7 if a detailed mathematical formula set out in the statute, commonly referred to as the "means test," yields a minimum amount of monthly disposable income. See 11 U.S.C. § 707(b)(2).

[2] S. 256, Pub. L. No. 109-8, 119 Stat. 23. The 2005 Reform Act's general effective date is for bankruptcy cases filed on or after October 17, 2005.

When a presumption of abuse does not arise or is rebutted under subsection (b)(2), section 707(b)(3) allows the court to find abuse where the debtor filed the petition in bad faith, or the totality of the circumstances demonstrates abuse.

A. Section 707(b)(2)

The means test of section 707(b)(2) requires the bankruptcy court to use a series of calculations when determining whether the presumption of abuse arises. See 11 U.S.C. § 707(b)(2)(A). Specifically, the means test calculates a debtor's "current monthly income" ("CMI") based on the debtor's average income for the six calendar months preceding the month of the bankruptcy filing. See 11 U.S.C. § 101(10A). If a debtor's annualized CMI is below the applicable state median family income, the debtor's case will not be presumed abusive under 11 U.S.C. § 707(b)(7). When the annualized CMI is above the applicable median family income, however, as is the case here, section 707(b)(2)(A) refers bankruptcy courts next to the debtor's monthly disposable income available to repay creditors by reducing CMI by certain enumerated categories of expenses. See 11 U.S.C. § 707(b)(2)(A)(ii), (iii), and (iv).

If the debtor's monthly disposable income, determined by deducting allowed expenses from CMI, is less than $100 per month (or $6,000 over 60 months), the presumption of abuse does not arise. 11 U.S.C. § 707(b)(2)(A)(I).[3] If the debtor's monthly disposable income is equal to or exceeds $166.67 per month (or $10,000 over 60 months), the presumption of abuse does arise. Id. If the debtor's monthly disposable income is between $100 and $166.67 per month (between $6,000 and $10,000 over 60 months), the presumption of abuse arises if the disposable income, over 60 months, is sufficient to pay 25 percent of the debtor's nonpriority unsecured debt. Id. If the presumption of abuse under section 707(b)(2) arises after completion of the means test, the debtor may attempt to rebut the presumption by demonstrating special circumstances that justify income or expense adjustments for which there is no reasonable alternative. 11 U.S.C. § 707(b)(2)(B).[4]

[3] Under section 104 of the Bankruptcy Code, statutory dollar amounts set forth for the determination of presumed abuse under the means test were adjusted by the Judicial Conference of the United States effective April 1, 2007. 72 Fed. Reg. 7082 (Feb. 14, 2007). This case is not subject to the recent dollar amount adjustments.

Each debtor who, like the Thomases, has primarily consumer debts is required to file, in conjunction with the bankruptcy schedules and statement of financial affairs, a Statement of Current Monthly Income and Means Test Calculation, Official Form 22A ("Form 22A"). 11 U.S.C. §§ 521 and 707(b)(2)(c). The purpose of Form 22A is to calculate monthly disposable income following the formula set forth in section 707(b)(2), and determine whether the presumption of abuse arises.

At issue in this appeal is whether the Thomases correctly deducted transportation ownership costs under the Local Standards issued by the Internal Revenue Service in preparing their Form 22A and calculating their monthly disposable income. In determining the expenses to be deducted from CMI in arriving at monthly disposable income, section 707(b)(2)(A)(ii)(I) provides that a debtor's "monthly expenses shall be the debtor's applicable monthly expense amounts specified under the National Standards and Local Standards and the debtor's actual monthly expenses for the categories specified as Other Necessary Expenses issued by the Internal Revenue Service for the area in which the debtor resides . . . ." 11 U.S.C. § 707(b)(2)(A)(ii)(I) (emphasis added).

The Local Standards issued by the IRS apportion transportation expenses into two components.[5] The first component includes costs associated with financing vehicle acquisition, i.e., the vehicle ownership costs. Id. The second component is associated with the costs of vehicle operation. Id. The Thomases deducted two vehicle ownership expenses on their Form 22A, but they admit that they do not have any "ownership" expenses (i.e., a loan or lease payment).

II. Factual Background

The Thomases filed a chapter 7 bankruptcy petition on July 27, 2006 to discharge almost $120,000 in credit card debt and other unsecured consumer debt. Bankruptcy Docket ("BD") 1, pp. 20-22. On their Form 22A, the Thomases reported their CMI as $4,786.70, which translates into annualized gross income of $57,440.40. See id, p. 39. Because this gross income exceeded the applicable Kansas state median family income, they were required to complete the expense portion of Form 22A. See 11 U.S.C. § 707(b)(7).

In computing expenses on Form 22A, the Thomases claimed transportation ownership expenses for two vehicles. BD 1, p. 40. On Line 23, they claimed a transportation ownership expense of $471 for a 2000 Ford F-150 truck. Id. On Line 24, they claimed a transportation ownership expense of $332 for a 1996 Mercury Villager LS minivan. Id. The Thomases own these vehicles free and clear of any debt. Id., p. 17; BD 18, p. 1.

Standards is attached as Exhibit A and incorporated herein by reference. The IRS revised its Collection Financial Standards, effective October 1, 2007, and such revisions will be made applicable to bankruptcy cases filed as of January 1, 2008. See IRS Collection Financial Standards, "Local Standards: Transportation," at http://www.irs.gov/individuals/article/0,,id=96543,00.html. Because the Thomases filed their case on July 27, 2006, only the Collection Financial Standards in effect prior to October 1, 2007, are applicable. See 11 U.S.C. § 707(b)(2)(A)(ii)(I) (stating that the IRS standards will be those "in effect on the date of the order for relief"). Moreover, the revisions made by the IRS effective October 1, 2007 would not change the result in this case. As the revised standards set forth, the Local Standard for ownership costs is still made expressly contingent on the existence of a loan or lease payment on a vehicle. See id.

As required by 11 U.S.C. § 704, the United States Trustee reviewed all materials submitted by the Thomases, including Form 22A, and concluded that the presumption of abuse arose. BD 9.[6] The United States Trustee moved to dismiss the Thomases' case as an abuse under 11 U.S.C. § 707(b)(1). BD 11. The United States Trustee determined that the Thomases' claimed deductions for transportation ownership on Form 22A were not allowable under section 707(b)(2)(A)(ii)(I) because they owned their vehicles outright and therefore had no applicable transportation ownership expense. BD11, pp. 12-14, 27.[7] The United States Trustee calculated that the Thomases had monthly disposable income of $389.39 under the means test of section 707(b)(2). BD 11, p. 27. This exceeded the $166.67 presumption of abuse threshold under section 707(b)(2)(A) by $222.72.

Under oath, the Thomases disclosed in their required Schedules I and J that their actual monthly net income available for repaying unsecured debt was $977.05, BD 1 pp. 25-27, but later acknowledged that these forms inadvertently included a nonexistent $535.99 auto payment expense. BD 1, p. 17; BD 11, p. 16; BD 18, p. 1. Therefore, by their own account, the Thomases had $1,513.04 in monthly net income. After reviewing the materials filed by the Thomases, including their schedules, the United States Trustee concluded that the totality of the circumstances of the debtors' financial situation demonstrated abuse. Accordingly, in his motion to dismiss, the United States Trustee also alleged that the totality of the circumstances of the Thomases' financial situation demonstrated abuse of chapter 7 under section 707(b)(3).

[6] Section 704(b)(1) requires that the United States Trustee review all materials filed by individual chapter 7 debtors and file a statement as to whether the debtor's case would be presumed to be an abuse of section 707(b). See 11 U.S.C. § 704(b)(1)(A).

[7] Due to the age of the Thomases' vehicles and the inapplicability of the ownership expenses, the United States Trustee determined that the Thomases were entitled to additional operating expenses of $200 for each of their two vehicles. See Internal Revenue Manual at section 5.8.5.5.2, available at: http://www.irs.gov/irm/part5/ch08s05.html.

The Thomases objected to the section 707(b)(2) portion of the United States Trustee's dismissal motion on November 11, 2006. BD 18. The parties then briefed the section 707(b)(2) issue. See BD 23, 24.

On October 2, 2007, the bankruptcy court entered an order denying the United States Trustee's motion to dismiss in its entirety. BD 27. The bankruptcy court ruled that the Thomases were entitled to claim the transportation ownership expense for their two vehicles even though they did not have any car payments. Id., pp. 2-4. The bankruptcy court also ruled that, because the Thomases could claim the transportation ownership expenses, the "totality of the circumstances" test under section 707(b)(3) "fails to establish abuse." Id., p. 2.

On October 12, 2007, the United States Trustee timely filed a notice of appeal, and filed an election under 28 U.S.C. § 158(c)(1) to have this appeal heard by the United States District Court for the District of Kansas. BD 31, 34.

SUMMARY OF ARGUMENT

The bankruptcy court erred in denying the United States Trustee's motion to dismiss for presumed abuse because it misinterpreted when debtors can claim transportation ownership expenses under section 707(b)(2). The court held that the Thomases were entitled to deduct transportation ownership expenses for both of their vehicles, even though they owned these vehicles free and clear. This conclusion is incorrect because the Thomases may claim only "applicable" ownership expenses under section 707(b)(2), and they had no applicable expenses for ownership of a car because neither of their vehicles was subject to a loan or lease payment. By using the word "applicable," Congress limited eligibility for expenses under the Local Standards to debtors for whom the expenses apply. Because the transportation ownership expense does not apply with respect to the Thomases' vehicles, the bankruptcy court erred in holding that the Thomases were eligible to deduct the expenses under the means test. Therefore, the presumption of abuse arose in their case under section 707(b)(2).[8]

Reading "applicable" in section 707(b)(2) this way has the salutary effect of applying the means test in a manner that is consistent with the IRS's longstanding application of the transportation ownership expense. In applying its Local Standards to taxpayers, the IRS does not allow taxpayers to claim transportation ownership expenses absent a monthly car payment expense. See Ex. A.

The bankruptcy court's order also conflicts with the primary purpose of Congress in passing the 2005 bankruptcy reform amendments at issue in this appeal. The 2005 Reform Act was intended to ensure that debtors repay their debts when they can. By allowing the Thomases to claim non-existent ownership expenses for their vehicles, the bankruptcy court frustrated that purpose.

STANDARD OF REVIEW

A court's interpretation of the Bankruptcy Code is a legal conclusion subject to de novo review. In re M & L Business Mach. Co., Inc., 84 F.3d 1330, 1334-35 (10th Cir. 1996). The bankruptcy court's legal conclusion that section 707(b)(2) allowed the Thomases to deduct transportation ownership expenses for two vehicles when they had no loan or lease payments is a question of law subject to de novo review.

[8] The United States Trustee asks that this Court remand so the Thomases can seek to establish special circumstances to rebut the presumption of abuse. See 11 U.S.C. § 707(b)(2)(B). The United States Trustee is not appealing the section 707(b)(3) portion of the bankruptcy court's order. The bankruptcy court decided the section 707(b)(3) issue sua sponte without briefing by the parties, so the issue has not been fully developed, and the United States Trustee believes that reversal and remand is appropriate on the section 707(b)(2) issue.

ARGUMENT

I. Transportation ownership expenses were not "applicable" to the Thomases, because no such expenses existed.

A. The bankruptcy court erred in holding that the Thomases were eligible to claim the IRS Local Standards for ownership for their vehicles because the expense was not applicable to them.

The bankruptcy court's order denying the United States Trustee's motion to dismiss should be reversed because it fails to recognize that the Bankruptcy Code only allows a debtor to claim transportation ownership expenses that are "applicable" to that debtor. 11 U.S.C. § 707(b)(2)(A)(ii)(I). The Thomases do not have any "applicable" transportation ownership expense because they own their vehicles outright. Their attempt to claim an expense that they do not have is prohibited by the Bankruptcy Code. The Code allows a debtor to claim only "applicable" expenses, not fictional ones. For this reason, the order entered below merits reversal.

1. Transportation ownership expenses are allowable only if "applicable" to the debtors.

Section 707(b)(2)(A)(ii)(I) of the Bankruptcy Code provides that a "debtor's monthly expenses shall be the debtor's applicable monthly expense amounts specified under the . . . Local Standards . . . issued by the Internal Revenue Service. . . ." 11 U.S.C. § 707(b)(2)(A)(ii)(I) (emphasis added). The statute expressly provides that before the specific IRS expense amounts may be included in the debtor's allowed monthly expenses, the expense must itself first be applicable to the debtor. Id.

The Bankruptcy Code does not define the word "applicable." Nor has the United States Trustee identified any Supreme Court or Tenth Circuit decision providing a definition in the bankruptcy context. Where, as here, a statutory term is undefined, a basic principle of statutory construction provides that courts should give such terms their ordinary meanings. E.g., Smith v. U.S., 508 U.S. 223, 228 (1993) ("When a word is not defined by statute, we normally construe it in accord with its ordinary or natural meaning."); United States v. Gonzales, 456 F.3d 1178 , 1182 (10th Cir. 2006) ("When a statute does not specifically define a term, we construe the term in accord with its ordinary or natural meaning."). The dictionary defines "applicable" to mean applying or capable of being applied; relevant; suitable; appropriate. Random House Unabridged Dictionary (2006). Accordingly, such a meaning should be imparted to the term "applicable" as it appears in section 707(b)(2)(A)(ii)(I) absent clear indication that Congress intended to give such term a different meaning. See Mississippi v. Louisiana, 506 U.S. 73, 78 (1992) (using dictionary to define the word "exclusive"); United States v. Montgomery, 468 F.3d 715, 720 n.3 (10th Cir. 2006) (applying dictionary definitions to the word "involving").

The bankruptcy court's order is inconsistent with the ordinary or natural meaning of "applicable" because it allows debtors like the Thomases to deduct expenses that do not apply to them. Here, the Thomases seek to claim an expense for two non-existent loan or lease payments. By inserting the word "applicable" in section 707(b)(2)(A)(ii)(I), Congress limited eligibility for expenses under the Local Standards to a debtor for whom such expenses are "relevant; suitable; appropriate" – thereby excluding non-existent expenses. Because the Thomases did not have vehicle financing expenses for either of their vehicles, the IRS vehicle ownership expense did not apply.

Not surprisingly, both appellate courts that have interpreted "applicable" in section 707(b)(2)(A)(ii)(I) have rejected the bankruptcy court's interpretation. In re Ross-Tousey, 368 B.R. 762, 766 (E.D. Wis. 2007); In re Hartwick, 373 B.R. 645, 649-50 (D. Minn. 2007). They did so, in part, because the bankruptcy court's reading is not faithful to the purpose underlying section 707(b)(2)'s means test. As the Ross-Tousey court noted, "if it really is that simple, the statute would not seem to achieve its purpose" of ensuring that debtors are allowed expenses for the necessities of life but pay creditors from what remains. Ross-Tousey, 368 B.R at 766 (E.D. Wis. 2007). See also In re Howell, 366 B.R. 153, 157 (Bankr. D. Kan. 2007) ("[D]enying debtors the ownership allowance when they have no ownership expense (i.e. loan or lease payments) is entirely consistent with one of the apparent objectives of BAPCPA: to ensure that debtors actually pay what they are capable of paying to unsecured creditors.").

The bankruptcy court's interpretation also fails to appreciate that a debtor's ability to pay creditors is not affected by mere vehicle ownership but by payments on a car. Accordingly, section 707(b)(2)(A)(ii)(I) does not focus on how many cars a debtor owns, but how many cars he or she makes payments on every month. Ross-Tousey, 368 B.R. at 766 ("The statute is only concerned about protecting the debtor's ability to continue owning a car, and if the debtor already owns the car, the debtor is adequately protected."); see also Hartwick, 373 B.R. at 652 (same).

The bankruptcy court also overextended the distinction between the word "actual" and "applicable" in section 707(b)(2)(A)(ii)(I). See BD 27 at p. 3. The bankruptcy court concluded that because Congress used both words in the statute, and the words have different meanings, debtors like the Thomases need not have any "actual" expense for the ownership expense to be "applicable." Id. This logic is misguided, however, because, as the Ross-Tousey court explained, there is no indication in section 707(b)(2)(A)(ii)(I) that Congress intended the words "applicable" and "actual" to have essentially opposite meanings. Ross-Tousey, 368 B.R. at 765. Rather, the better reading of "applicable" in the context of section 707(b)(2)(A)(ii)(I) is that it may have two meanings: first, the ownership expense is "applicable" if the debtor makes a loan or lease payment on a vehicle, and second, the amount allowed to the debtor is the "applicable" amount provided under the IRS Local Standards, and not the "actual" amount. See Hartwick, 373 B.R. at 653; Ross-Tousey, 368 B.R. at 765 ("This reading gives meaning to the distinction between 'applicable' and 'actual' without taking a further step to conclude that 'applicable' means "nonexistent' or 'fictional.'").

By giving the term "applicable" its proper meaning, a determination of allowable expenses under the means test is a two-step process. The first step is eligibility—i.e., does the debtor qualify for a transportation ownership expense? If so, then the second step is to quantify the expense amount the eligible debtor is allowed by looking at the IRS Standard amounts that are specified for the number of vehicles owned by the debtor and where the debtor lives. The bankruptcy court's ruling impermissibly skips the first step of determining whether the Thomases are eligible for the ownership expense by virtue of having a loan or lease payment for a vehicle. Instead, it proceeds directly to the second by only considering the amount the IRS would allow eligible taxpayers to claim for ownership of two vehicles. Accord In re Devilliers, 358 B.R. 849, 864 (Bankr. E.D. La. 2007) (concluding that the ownership expense "is not the equivalent of an allowance for depreciation or an invitation for a debtor to 'save' for the ultimate replacement of an existing vehicle . . . . [instead, it is] designed to assist with the acquisition of a vehicle on credit").

2. The United States Trustee's construction of "applicable" in section 707(b)(2) has the salutary effect of treating transportation costs the same way in bankruptcy cases that the IRS treats them.

Reversal of the bankruptcy court's order allowing the Thomases to deduct nonexistent transportation ownership expenses has the additional benefit of treating inapplicable expenses in bankruptcy cases the way the IRS has long treated them. In providing which deductions a debtor may take under the means test, Congress specifically stated that a debtor is permitted to deduct "the debtor's applicable monthly expense amounts specified under the . . .Local Standards . . .issued by the Internal Revenue Service." 11 U.S.C. § 707(b)(2)(A)(ii)(I) (emphasis added). Accordingly, how the IRS applies the standards that it developed for its debt collection purposes is instructive on the question of how the same standards might be applied in bankruptcy cases under section 707(b)(2). See, e.g., Hartwick, 373 B.R. at 650-51 ("[I]n order to determine whether the expense Standards issued by the IRS are 'applicable,' the most logical resource to consult is the IRS."). See also In re Slusher, 359 B.R. 290, 309 (Bankr. D. Nev. 2007) ("[I]f guidance is sought on the meaning of the IRS standards that Congress incorporated into the Bankruptcy Code, practical reason would suggest that court should consider the full manner by which the IRS uses these standards.").

The IRS Collection Financial Standards in effect when the Thomases filed their case fully support the United States Trustee's construction of the term "applicable," and provide as follows:

> The transportation standards consist of nationwide figures for monthly loan or lease payments referred to as ownership costs, and additional amounts for monthly operating costs . . . . The ownership costs provided maximum allowances for the lease or purchase of up to two automobiles if allowed as a necessary expense . . . . If a taxpayer has a car payment, the allowable ownership cost added to the allowable operating cost equals the allowable transportation expense. If a taxpayer has no car payment, or no car, the operating costs portion of the transportation standard is used to come up with the allowable transportation expense.

Ex. A; see supra n.5. See also BD 11, Ex. C (Internal Revenue Manual, Financial Analysis Handbook, Pt. 5, ch. 15, § 5.15.1.7(4.B)); IRS Financial Analysis Handbook, Pt. 5, ch. 15, § 5.15.1.7(4.B) (providing for purposes of IRS collection that if taxpayer has no vehicle loan or lease payments, the ownership cost is not applied), available at www.irs.gov/irm/part5/ch15s01.html.

Those IRS Collection Financial Standards reveal that IRS's ownership expense was calculated based on car financing data.[9] This offers further guidance that the ownership expense was intended to account for the expense of financing a vehicle over time and is inapplicable if a debtor has no such acquisition financing expense. See Ex. A (stating that the vehicle ownership expense calculated by the IRS is based on the "five-year average of new and used car financing data compiled by the Federal Reserve Board of Governors).

As of the date the Thomases filed their bankruptcy petition, the "ownership cost" was specifically calculated by the IRS based on the cost to finance the acquisition of a vehicle, and not simply a cost associated with owning a car, such as repair or maintenance. As such, the IRS does not treat the "ownership cost" expense as applicable when a taxpayer does not have a monthly expense related to financing a car. The same thing happens under the means test because the means test allows debtors to claim only an "applicable" car expense – not a phantom one.

Further, considering IRS practice in interpreting "applicable" expenses in section 707(b)(2)(A)(ii)(I) does not negate the section's later allowance of "actual" monthly expenses in the IRS categories of Other Necessary Expenses. Rather, "a natural reading" of section 707(b)(2)(A)(ii)(I) indicates that the words "actual" and "applicable" limit the relevant expense deductions in different ways. Slusher, 359 B.R. at 308 ("Had Congress intended to indiscriminately allow all expense amounts specified in the National and Local Standards, it would have written section 707(b)(2)(A)(ii)(I) to read, 'The debtor's monthly expenses shall be the monthly amounts specified under the National Standards and the Local Standards . . . .' rather than 'The debtor's monthly expenses shall be the debtor's applicable monthly expense amounts specified under the National and Local Standards.'") Id.

B. The bankruptcy court's order conflicts with the major goals of the 2005 amendments to the Bankruptcy Code.

The bankruptcy court's order is also inconsistent with Congress' purpose in implementing bankruptcy reform. Congress amended the Bankruptcy Code in 2005 to rectify perceived abuses in the bankruptcy process. The "heart" of these reforms was to "ensure that debtors repay creditors the maximum they can afford." H.R. Rep. No. 109-31 (I) at 1 (2005), reprinted in 2005 U.S.C.C.A.N. 88, 89. In cases such as this one, where the Thomases have no loan or lease payment, Congress has established a system which does not provide them an expense deduction for vehicle financing. "Allowing debtors to deduct from their disposable income a fictional ownership allowance would give debtors with unencumbered vehicles a windfall at the expense of their unsecured creditors." In re Howell, 366 B.R. 153, 157 (Bankr. D. Kan. 2007).

CONCLUSION

For all of these reasons, the United States Trustee respectfully asks this Court to reverse the October 2, 2007 order entered by the bankruptcy court denying the United States Trustee's motion to dismiss, and remand this case to the bankruptcy court for further proceedings.

Respectfully submitted,

Collection Financial Standards

General

Collection Financial Standards are used to help determine a taxpayer's ability to pay a delinquent tax liability.

Allowances for food, clothing and other items, known as the National Standards, apply nationwide except for Alaska and Hawaii, which have their own tables. Taxpayers are allowed the total National Standards amount for their family size and income level, without questioning amounts actually spent.

Maximum allowances for housing and utilities and transportation, known as the Local Standards, vary by location. Unlike the National Standards, the taxpayer is allowed the amount actually spent or the standard, whichever is less.

Food, Clothing and Other Items

National Standards for reasonable amounts have been established for five necessary expenses: food, housekeeping supplies, apparel and services, personal care products and services, and miscellaneous.

All standards except miscellaneous are derived from the Bureau of Labor Statistics (BLS) Consumer Expenditure Survey (CES). The miscellaneous standard has been established by the IRS.

Alaska and Hawaii

Due to their unique geographic circumstances and higher cost of living, separate standards for food, clothing and other items have been established for Alaska and Hawaii .

Housing and Utilities

The housing and utilities standards are derived from Census and BLS data, and are provided by state down to the county level.

Transportation

The transportation standards consist of nationwide figures for monthly loan or lease payments referred to as ownership costs, and additional amounts for monthly operating costs broken down by Census Region and Metropolitan Statistical Area (MSA). Public transportation is included under operating costs. A conversion chart has been provided with the standards which shows which IRS districts fall under each Census Region, as well as the counties included in each MSA. The ownership cost portion of the transportation standard, although it applies nationwide, is still considered part of the Local Standards.

The ownership costs provide maximum allowances for the lease or purchase of up to two automobiles if allowed as a necessary expense. The operating costs are derived from BLS data.

If a taxpayer has a car payment, the allowable ownership cost added to the allowable operating cost equals the allowable transportation expense. If a taxpayer has no car payment, or no car, only the operating costs portion of the transportation standard is used to come up with the allowable transportation expense.

Recent Revisions

The Local Standards for housing and utilities and transportation were revised on 02/01/06 to:

- add family size to the housing and utilities allowances (two or less, three, and four or more);
- base automobile ownership/leasing costs on the five-year average of new and used car financing data compiled by the Federal Reserve Board of Governors; and,
- reflect updated information from the Bureau of Labor Statistics.
- Housing and Utility Standards have been established in 2006 for U.S. Territories

The revised Local Standards for housing and utilities and transportation are effective for financial analysis conducted on or after January 1, 2006.

ARGUMENT

In his opening brief, the United States Trustee established that the Thomases are not entitled to vehicle ownership expenses because these expenses are only available under the Bankruptcy Code if debtors are making loan or lease payments. The Thomases are not. This construction of section 707(b)(2)(A)(ii)(I) has been adopted by all five appellate courts that have interpreted the statute.[1] In their response, the Thomases ignore the common-sense reality that the ownership expenses must be "applicable" in the first place for debtors to claim them. Because the Thomases do not have any vehicle payments, the vehicle ownership expense is not applicable to them.

The Thomases suggest that legal authority interpreting section 707(b)(2)(A)(ii)(I) has shown a trend in their favor, Thomas Brief at 13, but their list of cases is incomplete and inaccurate. And all five appellate decisions interpreting "applicable" in section 707(b)(2)(A)(ii)(I) – including three since the United States Trustee filed his opening brief – have read the statute like the United States Trustee does.

The Thomases make a series of policy arguments in support of their interpretation. None are new. Many were made to the other appellate courts that have already rejected the Thomases' construction of section 707(b)(2)(A)(ii)(I). And as we explain below, the appellate courts' interpretation of section 707(b)(2)(A)(ii)(I) is fair because it ensures cases are fairly and properly administered.

[1] See Meade v. McVay, No. EP-07-CV-121-DB (W.D. Tex. Jan. 24, 2008)(a copy of this decision is attached hereto as Exhibit "A"); United States Trustee v. Deadmond (In re Deadmond), No. CV 07-15-H-CCL, 2008 WL 191165 (D. Mont. Jan. 21, 2008); Ransom v. MBNA America Bank, N.A. (In re Ransom), – B.R. –, 2007 WL 4625248 (B.A.P. 9th Cir. Dec. 27, 2007); Neary v. Ross-Tousey (In re Ross-Tousey), 368 B.R. 762 (E.D. Wis. 2007); Fokkena v. Hartwick (In re Hartwick), 373 B.R. 645 (D. Minn. 2007).

I. The appellate courts' interpretation of 11 U.S.C. § 707(b)(2)(A)(ii)(I) recognizes that nonexistent expenses cannot be "applicable" to debtors.

By its plain terms, section 707(b)(2)(A)(ii)(I) requires that the IRS expenses be "applicable" before a debtor may claim the expenses. See Meade v. McVay (In re Meade), EP-07-CV-121-DB, slip op. at 5 (W.D. Tex. Jan. 24, 2008) (affirming bankruptcy court after concluding that "[p]lacement of the term 'applicable' indicates that the transportation ownership expense is to be deducted only by the appropriate debtor . . . [who is] eligible to claim the deduction by having an existing monthly transportation ownership expense"); United States Trustee v. Deadmond (In re Deadmond), No. CV 07-15-H-CCL, 2008 WL 191165 at *4 (D. Mont. Jan. 21, 2008) (reversing bankruptcy court order after concluding that the "plain meaning" of section 707(b)(2)(A)(ii)(I) "requires that debtors who have no vehicle lease or loan payment be allowed no applicable monthly transportation ownership expense amount"); Fokkena v. Hartwick (In re Hartwick), 373 B.R. 645, 650 (D. Minn. 2007) (reversing bankruptcy court after concluding that under the "plain meaning" of "applicable" in section 707(b)(2)(A)(ii)(I), "the debtor must actually have a loan or lease payment obligation" to claim the ownership expenses). Since the Thomases did not have any "applicable" vehicle payments, the ownership expense should not have been allowed by the bankruptcy court.

The Thomases' contrary reading of the statute renders the word "applicable" superfluous. The Thomases argue that "applicable" means solely that "debtors are permitted to claim the Local Standards ownership expenses based on the number of vehicles the debtor owns, rather than on the number for which the debtor makes payments." Thomas Brief at 5-6. But this interpretation strips "applicable" of any meaning. See Neary v. Ross-Tousey (In re Ross-Tousey), 368 B.R. 762, 765 (E.D. Wis. 2007) ("Had Congress intended to indiscriminately allow all expense amounts specified in the National and Local Standards, it would have written 707(b)(2)(A)(ii)(I) [without using the word 'applicable.']").

The Thomases' reading allows debtors to claim expenses that do not exist by claiming the expense amount on the IRS tables based on the number of cars owned, regardless of whether ownership expenses actually apply. See Ransom v. MBNA America Bank, N.A. (In re Ransom), – B.R. –, 2007 WL 4625248 at *6 (B.A.P. 9th Cir. Dec. 27, 2007) (warning that granting debtors an allowance for ownership expenses they do not have would "read[] 'applicable' right out of the Bankruptcy Code"); Deadmond, 2008 WL 191165 at *4 ("The word ['applicable'] must mean something, and if some monthly expenses are applicable, then other monthly expenses are not applicable."); Meade, slip op. at 5 ("If the debtor can claim the deduction, the statute then permits an eligible debtor to select the amount listed in the IRS Standards.").

Rather than being empty verbiage in the statute, the word "applicable" prohibits debtors from claiming deductions they do not have. As the appellate courts that have interpreted section 707(b)(2)(A)(ii)(I) agree, "applicable" should be given its ordinary definition in the statute. See Meade, slip op. at 5; Deadmond, 2008 WL 191165 at *4; Ransom, 2007 WL 4625248 at *6 (recognizing that "applicable," in its ordinary sense, means "'capable of or suitable for being applied,'" and concluding that the vehicle ownership expense is not "capable of being applied to the debtor if he does not make any lease or loan payments . . . ."). See also Dole Food Co. v. Patrickson, 538 U.S. 468, 476 - 77 (2003) ("Absent a statutory text or structure that requires us to depart from normal rules of construction, we should not construe the statute in a manner that is strained and, at the same time, would render a statutory term superfluous.") (citing Mertens v. Hewitt Assocs., 508 U.S. 248, 258 (1993) ("We will not read the statute to render the modifier superfluous."); United States v. Nordic Village, Inc., 503 U.S. 30, 36 (1992) (declining to adopt a construction that would violate the "settled rule that a statute must, if possible, be construed in such fashion that every word has some operative effect").

Under the ordinary meaning of "applicable," debtors need loan or lease payments in order to claim a vehicle ownership expense. See United States Trustee's Opening Brief at 14. Therefore, this expense is inapplicable in the Thomases' case because they have no such payment on their vehicles.

II. The Thomases ignore the unbroken line of appellate case law holding that nonexistent expenses cannot be "applicable" to debtors.

To bolster their contention that a "growing number" of bankruptcy courts do not support the United States Trustee's interpretation, the Thomases attached to their brief a list of cases. See Thomas Brief at 13, 17-19. But this list omits nine cases that adopted the United States Trustee's position,[2] while misconstruing the holdings of a number of other cases the Thomases did include.[3]

Haw. 2007); In re McDaniel, Case No. 06-62786 (Bankr. N.D. Ga. August 24, 2007).

[3] Some of the cases listed by the Thomases do not hold that a vehicle ownership allowance is permitted regardless of any car expense. See, e.g., In re Williams, Case No. 07-00396 (Bankr. E.D.N.C. October 25, 2007) (holding that a debtor may take the full mortgage allowance, even if his actual mortgage payment is less; the United States Trustee concurs with this opinion); In re Aprea, 368 B.R. 558 (Bankr. E.D. Tex. 2007) (holding that a single debtor with no dependants may not claim vehicle ownership expenses for two vehicles); In re Demonica, 345 B.R. 895 (Bankr. N.D. Ill. 2006) (holding that a debtor who does not own a vehicle, but makes payments for use of vehicle is entitled to ownership expense; in dicta, court noted that it agreed with case law adopting the United States Trustee's position on the vehicle ownership expense issue). Similarly, no relevant opinion or order appears to have been issued in the listed case In re Davis, Case No. 06-06978 (Bankr. M.D. Tenn. 2007).

More significant than an arithmetic tally of bankruptcy court decisions is the fact that a growing and unbroken line of appellate case law now holds that nonexistent vehicle expenses cannot be "applicable" under section 707(b)(2)(A)(ii)(I). See Meade, slip op. at 5; Deadmond, 2008 WL 191165; Ransom, 2007 WL 4625248; Ross-Tousey, 368 B.R. 762; Hartwick, 373 B.R. 645. The appellate courts have unanimously rejected the reading proposed by the Thomases. Id.

Beyond the textual reasons already discussed in this brief, these appellate courts rejected the same interpretation the Thomases are proferring now because disallowing nonexistent vehicle operating expenses is fully harmonious with congressional intent. See, e.g., Ransom, 2007 WL 4625248 at *7 ("Denying debtors the ownership allowance when they have no ownership expense (i.e. loan or lease payments) is entirely consistent" with the objective of the 2005 Reform Act to ensure that debtors repay as much of their debt as reasonable possible.); Ross-Tousey, 368 B.R. at 768 (concluding that section 707(b)(2)(A)(ii)(I) "is only concerned about protecting the debtor's ability to continue owning a car, and if the debtor already owns the car, the debtor is adequately protected"); Hartwick, 373 B.R. at 652.

III. The appellate courts' construction of section 707(b)(2)(A)(ii)(I) better implements bankruptcy policy.

The Thomases' proferred statutory construction would lead to arbitrary and unfair results, and would contribute to bankruptcy abuse. Under their interpretation of section 707(b)(2)(A)(ii)(I), "debtors who own two unusable cars rusting in their back yard would be entitled to the windfall benefit of both ownership and operating expense deductions although they, in fact, incur no expenses by owning the vehicles." Hartwick, 373 B.R. at 652 (citing Ross-Tousey, 368 B.R. at 767-69). This statutory reading "defies common sense." Deadmond, 2008 WL 191165 at *4. By allowing debtors to deduct only "applicable" expenses, section 707(b)(2)(A)(ii)(I) ensures debtors do not evade repaying their debts when they can.

The Thomases claim that the interpretation of "applicable" suggested by the United States Trustee and adopted by all five appellate courts to interpret it, creates an arbitrary distinction between a hypothetical Debtor A who pays off her car loan the month before filing and a Debtor B with a single payment remaining at the time she files her case. Thomas Brief at 11-12. In that hypothetical, Debtor A would not be entitled to a vehicle ownership expense while Debtor B would receive the full allowance.

The appellate decisions on 707(b)(2)(A)(ii)(I) have not found this hypothetical persuasive. See Ross-Tousey, 368 B.R. at 767-68 ("Congress has chosen to employ an objective framework rather than authorizing courts to delve into much detail about the condition of debtors' automobiles and the number of payments remaining."); Hartwick, 373 B.R. at 652 ("[A] line must be drawn somewhere, and any interpretation will result in some unfairness."). Moreover, the Thomases' hypothetical fails to recognize that Debtor B's case would likely be dismissed under section 707(b)(3) based on the totality of the circumstances of her financial situation. Section 707(b) allows cases to be dismissed in two ways. First, above-median income debtors can have their cases dismissed under section 707(b)(2) when they fail the means test. Second, debtors with an actual ability to repay creditors can have their cases dismissed under section 707(b)(3) even if they pass the means test. See 11 U.S.C. § 707(b)(3)(B) (requiring that in cases where presumption of abuse "does not arise or is rebutted," the court shall consider whether dismissal is proper because "the totality of the circumstances . . . of the debtor's financial situation demonstrates abuse"). Cf. In re Stewart, 175 F.3d 796, 809 (10th Cir. 1999) (holding that a debtor's ability to pay is a primary factor in deciding whether to dismiss a debtor's case under the "totality of the circumstances" analysis that applied to the pre-2005 Reform Act section 707(b)).

Whenever a debtor, like Debtor B in the Thomases' hypothetical, can repay debts because the imminent satisfaction of a car loan will result in hundreds of dollars more each month in disposable income, his or her case will merit dismissal under section 707(b)(3). Cf. Stewart, 175 F.3d at 809 (upholding bankruptcy court's dismissal under pre-2005 Reform Act section 707(b) where the debtor's "earning potential well exceeds his monthly expenses").

The Thomases alternatively argue that requiring that expenses exist before they are "applicable" discriminates against debtors who cannot afford newer cars that are more likely to involve loan or lease payments. See Thomas Brief at 12-13.

This argument has also been uniformly rejected by the appellate courts. See Ransom, 2007 WL 4625248 at *6; Hartwick, 373 B.R. at 652. The Thomases' argument is also incorrect for three reasons. First, the means test does not apply to a debtor whose income is below the applicable median family income in the state in which the debtor resides at the time of filing. 11 U.S.C. § 707(b)(7).[4] Thus, the vast majority of debtors are never subject to the means test – and therefore the vehicle ownership expense requirement – at all.

Second, where higher-income debtors do have older or higher-mileage vehicles, those debtors are shielded from potential harm. Debtors who own a vehicle over 6 years old and/or with 75,000 or more miles without a loan or lease payment are entitled to an additional $200 in monthly operating expenses. See Internal Revenue Manual, Pt. 5, ch. 8, § 5.8.5.5.2 ("Treatment of Non-

Third, debtors are also shielded from potential harm by the "special circumstances" allowance built into the chapter 7 means test. See 11 U.S.C. § 707(b)(2)(B); Ransom, 2007 WL 4625248 at *6. This provision allows debtors to overcome failing the means test under section 707(b)(2) if they can demonstrate special circumstances "for which there is no reasonable alternative" that justify increased expenses. See id.; United States Trustee's Opening Brief at 5 n.4.

As a final policy argument, the Thomases suggest that the appellate courts' interpretation of section 707(b)(2)(A)(ii)(I) will foster abuse, because debtors will have a new incentive to incur new vehicle debt just prior to filing bankruptcy. See Thomas Brief at 15. The Thomases' argument overlooks the key fact that a debtor's passing the means test does not end the Bankruptcy Code's inquiry into whether a case presents an abuse of chapter 7. For such situations, Congress permits dismissal for filings in bad faith or when the totality of a debtor's financial situation demonstrates abuse. See 11 U.S.C. § 707(b)(3)(A), (B) (requiring that in cases where presumption of abuse "does not arise or is rebutted," the court shall consider whether dismissal is proper because "the debtor

[5] The Thomases misunderstand the vehicle ownership expense's purpose. The vehicle ownership expense allows debtors to claim a standardized amount when they are making payments on a car. See In re Devilliers, 358 B.R. 849, 864 (Bankr. E.D. La. 2007) (recognizing that the ownership allowance "is not the equivalent of an allowance for depreciation or an invitation for a debtor to 'save' for the ultimate replacement of an existing vehicle. Instead, the deduction is designed to assist with the acquisition of a vehicle on credit."). Car maintenance, by contrast, is covered by a different IRS standard expense that covers operating expenses. The vehicle operating expense gives debtors, including the Thomases, an allowance for all vehicles owned, regardless of loan or lease payments. See UST Brief, Ex. A; IRS Financial Analysis Handbook, Pt. 5, ch. 15, § 5.15.1.7(4.B) ("If a taxpayer has no car payment only the operating costs portion of the transportation standard is used to figure the allowable transportation expense."), available at www.irs.gov/irm/part5/ch15s01.html.

filed the petition in bad faith" or "the totality of the circumstances . . . of the debtor's financial situation demonstrates abuse").[6]

Thus, were a debtor prepared to incur debt for the sole purpose of filing chapter 7 bankruptcy, his or her case could be dismissed under section 707(b)(3). It was established, under the more demanding "substantial abuse" standard for dismissal that predated the 2005 Reform Act,[7] that a debtor's purposeful accumulation of debt in contemplation of bankruptcy could justify dismissal. See In re Price, 353 F.3d 1135 1139-40 (9th Cir. 2004) (describing factors relevant to justifying dismissal, including "[w]hether the debtor has engaged in eve-of-bankruptcy purchases"); see also, e.g., In re Higuera, 199 B.R. 196, 199 (Bankr. W.D. Okla. 1996) (recognizing that eve-of-bankruptcy purchases or transactions are a factor to consider in dismissing a debtor's petition); In re Charles, 334 B.R. 207, 222 (Bankr. S.D. Tex. 2005) ("It is settled law that a debtor's good faith should be questioned if the debtor makes purchases in contemplation of a bankruptcy case."); In re

[6] The Thomases also suggest that section 526(a)(4), which prohibits attorneys from encouraging debtors to incur more debt in anticipation of bankruptcy, is unconstitutional. Thomas Brief at 15. That issue is before the Second, Fifth, Eighth and Ninth circuits, but it is irrelevant here. Section 526(a)(4) regulates attorney conduct, not debtors' decisions to take on new debt on the eve of bankruptcy. It is universally accepted that debtors who engage in pre-bankruptcy spending sprees can have their cases dismissed for that misconduct. See In re Stewart, 175 F.3d 796, 809-10 (10th Cir. 1999) (affirming dismissal under pre-2005 Reform Act version of section 707(b) after noting that bankruptcy relief "is not intended to remedy the consequences of extravagant spending" and questioning a debtor's good faith in filing a bankruptcy petition); In re Krohn, 886 F.2d 123, 126 (6th Cir. 1989) (holding "eve of bankruptcy purchases" can justify dismissal under pre-2005 Reform Act version of section 707(b)). Debtors who load up on debt by buying cars they do not need and cannot afford will have their cases dismissed under section 707(b)(3), just like other debtors have in years past.

[7] Section 707(b) now permits dismissal for simple "abuse." See 11 U.S.C. § 707(b)(1).

Rathbun, 309 B.R. 901, 904 (Bankr. N.D. Tex. 2004); In re Aiello, 284 B.R. 756, 761 (Bankr. E.D.N.Y. 2002).[8]

The appellate courts' interpretation of section 707(b)(2)(A)(ii)(I) is fair. It credits a critical objective of the 2005 Reform Act: ensuring "that debtors repay as much of their debt as reasonably possible." Ransom, 2007 WL 4625248 at *7. In the context of the Act, shielding money from creditors by allowing debtors to claim a nonexistent expense runs afoul of congressional intent. See Deadmond, 2008 WL 191165 at *4. The appellate courts' interpretation also dovetails with other provisions of the Bankruptcy Code that ensure that needy debtors can receive credit for vehicle operating expenses and that there is a remedy for abusive claims of these expenses.

CONCLUSION

For these reasons, and for those set forth in his opening brief, the United States Trustee respectfully asks this Court to reverse the order entered below, and remand this case to the bankruptcy court for further proceedings.

APPEAL FROM THE UNITED STATES BANKRUPTCY COURT
WESTERN DISTRICT OF TEXAS
EL PASO DIVISION
CASE NO. 06-31066-RCM, CHAPTER 7

Appellant Lynn Meade ("Meade") filed a brief on April 20, 2007, appealing the United States Bankruptcy Court's ("Bankruptcy Court") February 28, 2007 "Order On Motion Of The United States Trustee To Dismiss Under 11 U.S.C. § 707(b)." On May 7, 2007, Appellee Charles F. McVay, United States Trustee, Region 7 ("U. S. Trustee"), filed a "Brief Of The Appellee Charles F. McVay United States Trustee" ("Response"). After due consideration, the Court affirms the Bankruptcy Court's dismissal of Meade's Petition for the reasons that follow.

BACKGROUND

This is an appeal arising from an Order of the United States Bankruptcy Court, dismissing a Petition on September 30, 2006, wherein Meade sought relief under Chapter 7 of the Bankruptcy Code. The case stems from Meade's attempt to claim a Transportation Ownership/Lease Expense without having an ownership payment. On said date, Meade filed a petition for relief under Chapter 7 of the Bankruptcy Code, which included the Statement of Current Monthly Income and Means Test Calculation ("Means Test"). The Means Test uses a complex mathematical formula - set out in § 707(b)(2) - to calculate a debtor's disposable monthly income. A disposable monthly income greater than $166.67 gives rise to a presumption of abuse and requires dismissal of the case as an abuse of Chapter 7 Bankruptcy proceedings. See 11 U.S.C.A. § 707(b)(2)(A)(ii)(I).

Because Meade's monthly income exceeded the median Texas monthly income,[1] she was required to complete the expense portion of the Means Test. Therein, Meade claimed monthly expenses greater than her income, resulting in a negative monthly income.[2] Although Meade did not have a vehicle purchase or lease payment, she deducted $471.00 as a "Local Standards" Transportation Ownership/Lease Expense. Meade owns one vehicle, a 1996 Subaru Legacy Wagon, outright and free of any liens. The U.S. Trustee contested this deduction, and substituted a $200 deduction, pursuant to Internal Revenue Service ("IRS") guidelines.[3] Meade's disposable monthly income was then calculated at $303.97, based on the U.S. Trustee's expense

[2] Meade's disposable monthly income was calculated at negative $6.03 after deducting $3,836.33 in monthly expenses.

[3] The IRS permits a $200 deduction for operating a vehicle over six years old, and/or with reported mileage of at least 75,000 miles, with no reported loan or lease payment obligation. See INTERNAL REVENUE SERVICE, UNITED STATES DEP'T OF TREASURY, INTERNAL REVENUE MANUEL, FINANCIAL ANALYSIS HANDBOOK, TREATMENT OF NON-BUSINESS TRANSPORTATION EXPENSES, OWNERSHIP EXPENSES, Part 5, Chapter 15 § 5.8.5.5.2(3), [hereinafter FINANCIAL ANALYSIS HANDBOOK] http://www.irs.gov/irm/part5/ch08s05.html.

adjustment, along with other minor adjustments,[4] giving rise to a presumption of abuse of the bankruptcy proceedings.

On December 8, 2006, the U.S. Trustee filed a Motion to Dismiss for an abuse of Chapter 7 Bankruptcy Proceedings. The Bankruptcy Court granted the Motion to Dismiss, finding that Meade's case was presumptively abusive, and that the debtor failed to demonstrate special circumstances to rebut that presumption.[5] The appeal from the Bankruptcy Court's ruling ensued.

STANDARD OF REVIEW

Title 28 U.S.C. § 158 confers jurisdiction on district courts to hear appeals from the final judgments, orders, and decrees of bankruptcy courts sitting within the same judicial district. 28 U.S.C.A. § 158(a)(1) (West 2006). When a district court reviews a bankruptcy court's decision, it functions as an appellate court and utilizes the same standard of review generally applied by a federal court of appeals. In general, "a bankruptcy court's findings of fact are subject to the clearly erroneous standard of review and conclusions of law are reviewed de novo." In re Smyth, 207 F.3d 758, 761 (5th Cir. 2000) (citing Matter of Sadkin, 36 F.3d 473, 475 (5th Cir. 1994)). The issue on appeal is whether a debtor is allowed, under 11 U.S.C. § 707(b)(2)(A)(ii)(I), to claim an expense for vehicle financing when the debtor has no vehicle financing expense. As the issue before the Court involves a question of law, the Court reviews the Bankruptcy Court's decision de novo.

[4] Meade did not contest these incidental adjustments, nor does she raise the issue in the instant appeal.

[5] Meade does not appeal the Bankruptcy Court's decision stating that she failed to demonstrate special circumstances to rebut the presumption of abuse.

DISCUSSION

In her appeal, Meade argues three points of law: (1) the plain language of the Bankruptcy Code allows her to deduct a Transportation Ownership/Lease Expense even though she does not have an ownership payment; (2) case law precedent allows her to claim said deduction; and (3) public policy should allow for said deduction. The Court addresses Meade's contentions in turn.

1. The Bankruptcy Code

Meade contends that a plain reading of § 707(b)(2)(A)(ii)(I) allows her to deduct a transportation ownership expense in the amount of $471.00, although Meade does not have an existing vehicle ownership payment. In other words, Meade argues that the statute permits debtors to claim the Local Standard ownership expense based on their possession of a vehicle. The U.S. Trustee responds that the statute plainly requires a two-step determination to deduct the appropriate transportation expense, the first of which requires the debtor to have an ownership expense. The Court finds Meade's argument unconvincing.

The plain language of a statute is regarded as conclusive, with the exception of rare circumstances in which the result of a literal application directly contradicts the drafters' intent. See United States v. Ron Pair Enter. Inc., 489 U.S. 235, 242 (1989). Generally, statutory interpretation requires a court to accord undefined statutory terms their ordinary and common meaning. See Burns v. Alcala, 420 U.S. 575, 580-81 (1975).

The statute at issue reads, in relevant part:

> The debtor's monthly expenses shall be the debtor's applicable monthly expense amounts specified under the National Standards and Local Standards, and the debtor's actual monthly expenses for > the categories specified as Other Necessary Expenses issued by the Internal Revenue Service for the area in which the debtor resides . . .

11 U.S.C.A. § 707(b)(2)(A)(ii)(I) (West 2005) (emphasis added). The statute permits a debtor to deduct "applicable" monthly expenses as defined by the IRS National and Local Standards ("IRS Standards"), and "actual" monthly expenses that the IRS defines as "Other Necessary Expenses." In re Pampas, 369 B.R. 290, 295-96 (Bankr. M.D. La. 2007). The outcome of the instant case hinges on the plain meaning of the term "applicable" and in reconciling Congress' intent with use of the term "actual" in the same sentence.

"Applicable" is defined as "capable of or suitable for being applied: APPROPRIATE." MERRIAM WEBSTER'S COLLEGIATE DICTIONARY 56 (10th ed. 1996). In the statute, "applicable" is positioned before the phrase "monthly expense amounts specified under the [standards]."[6] Placement of the term "applicable" indicates that the transportation ownership expense is to be deducted only by the appropriate debtor. In other words, the debtor must be eligible to claim the deduction by having an existing monthly transportation ownership expense. If the debtor can claim the deduction, the statute then permits an eligible debtor to select the amount listed in the IRS Standards. Pursuant to Meade's reading, the debtor would be automatically eligible for a standard deduction - the sole determination being the selection of an amount based on the applicable geographic location. Contrary to Meade's contention, the Court finds that the plain reading of the Bankruptcy Code allows a deduction for transportation ownership expenses, but only by those debtors who are eligible to declare such deductions.

[6] The statute does not state, "The debtor's monthly expenses shall be the debtor's monthly expense amounts specified under the applicable [] Standards," as argued by Meade.

Further, Meade posits that Congress' decision to use "applicable" rather than "actual" evinces congressional intent that a debtor's existing, or non-existing, expense is irrelevant for purposes of claiming the transportation ownership deduction. "Actual" is defined as "existing in act and not merely potentially . . . . existing in fact or reality." MERRIAM WEBSTER'S COLLEGIATE DICTIONARY 12. The term "actual" is positioned before the phrase, "for the categories specified as Other Necessary Expenses," indicating that debtors may deduct their existing costs in this specific category. Thus, the statute permits deductions in an amount equal to debtors' existing costs in "other" categories. In contrast, for the transportation category, Congress intended all eligible debtors - but only eligible debtors - to have a standard across-the-board deduction. See In re Pampas, 369 B.R. at 296.

Additional support for the Court's statutory interpretation is found in the IRS Standards.[7] The IRS Standards recognize two sub-categories of transportation expenses: "ownership costs," and "operating costs."[8] "Ownership costs" are based on the "five-year

[7] Congress intended courts to utilize current IRS policies to define statutory terms and calculate expenses. See Pampas, 369 B.R. at 296-97. See also, e.g., In re Medina, 362 B.R. 799, 802 (Bankr. S.D. Tex. 2007) (discussing the utilization of IRS guidelines as one of three possible means for interpreting a term not expressly defined in the Bankruptcy Code). While courts are not bound to follow IRS procedures and standards, they should be used as guides for interpreting the Bankruptcy Code. See In re Ceasar, 364 B.R. 257, 262 (Bankr. W.D. La. 2007); see also Pampas, 369 B.R. at 297 n.29.

[8] According to the IRS:

> The transportation standards consist of nationwide figures for monthly loan or lease payments referred to as ownership costs, and additional amounts for monthly operating costs . . . . If a taxpayer has a car payment, the allowable ownership cost added to the allowable operating cost equals the allowable transportation expense. If a taxpayer has no car payment only the operating costs portion of the transportation standard is used to come up with the average of new and used car financing data compiled by the Federal Reserve Bureau of Governors."[9] Thus, the IRS Standards emphasize acquisition expenses, rather than maintenance or operating expenses, indicating that ownership and maintenance are separate and distinct expenses. See id. In fact, the IRS indicates in the Financial Analysis Handbook that car owners without a car payment should exclude that expense in calculating the total transportation expense. FINANCIAL ANALYSIS HANDBOOK § 5.15.1.7(4.B). Thus, like the IRS, the Court interprets the Bankruptcy Code as excluding a debtor's deduction of an "ownership" expense when the debtor does not have an existing car payment. Therefore, the Court is of the opinion that the plain meaning of "applicable" necessitates an existing ownership or lease payment for a debtor to claim an ownership or lease payment deduction.

Here, it is undisputed that Meade does not have an ownership or finance payment on her sole vehicle, a 1996 Subaru. As a result, Meade is not eligible to claim a Transportation Ownership/Lease Expense in the amount of $471. Therefore, the Court is of the opinion that the Bankruptcy Court's decision denying Meade's deduction was accurate, and its decision to dismiss Meade's bankruptcy proceeding is affirmed.

2. Existing Case Law

Meade avers that a "plethora" of case law supports her reading of the Bankruptcy allowable transportation expense.

Code. In that regard, Meade posits that In re Fowler, 349 B.R. 414 (Bankr. D. Del. 2006), and its progeny[10] hold precedential value before the Court. Unfortunately for Meade, her cited cases are not precedent in the United States Court of Appeals for the Fifth Circuit ("Fifth Circuit"). Further, the bankruptcy court decisions from within the Fifth Circuit have expressly rejected Fowler and Meade's line of reasoning.[11] What is more, Meade concedes that Fifth Circuit case law does not support her contention. Thus, the Court finds the decisions issued by the bankruptcy courts within the Fifth Circuit persuasive. Therefore, the Court is of the opinion that the Bankruptcy Court properly dismissed Meade's claim, and its decision is affirmed.

3. Public Policy

Lastly, Meade argues that the Court's affirmation of the Bankruptcy Court's judgment "could lead to some absurd result," based on public policy grounds. Meade's public policy argument mirrors the line of reasoning found in the Fowler opinion. See Fowler 349 B.R. at 418. As stated above, the Court declines to follow the Fowler decision. Therefore, as the Court had disposed of Meade's argument above, it need not address her public policy argument. Thus, the Court is of the opinion that the Bankruptcy Court's decision was appropriate and should be affirmed.

Tex. 2006) (same); In re Oliver, 350 B.R. 294 (Bankr. W.D. Tex. 2006) (same).

CONCLUSION

The Court finds that the Bankruptcy Court properly dismissed Meade's Chapter 7 Petition as an abuse of bankruptcy proceedings, and affirms its decision. First, the plain reading of § 707(b)(2)(A)(ii)(I) requires the debtor to qualify for a deduction by having an existing ownership or lease payment on a vehicle before selecting the applicable deduction amount. Second, Meade's cited case law has been expressly rejected by a line of decisions issued from bankruptcy courts within the Fifth Circuit, which the Court finds persuasive. Finally, the Court declines to address Meade's policy argument, because it stems from case law the Court rejects. Based on the foregoing analysis, the Court affirms the decision of the Bankruptcy Court.

Accordingly, IT IS HEREBY ORDERED that the United States Bankruptcy Court's Order Granting Motion to Dismiss entered on February 28, 2007, is AFFIRMED.

INTEREST OF THE UNITED STATES

This United States Trustee submits this brief as amicus curiae supporting reversal of the bankruptcy court's orders. Cf. Fed. R. App. P. 29(a) (permitting the United States to file an amicus curiae brief without the consent of the parties or leave of court). This appeal calls upon this Court to examine a statutory provision affecting chapter 13 bankruptcy cases, 11 U.S.C. § 1325(b). Section 1325(b) makes two chapter 7 provisions – 11 U.S.C. § 707(b)(2)(A) and (B) – applicable to chapter 13 cases.

The United States has a direct interest in the proper construction of these provisions because United States Trustees, who are Justice Department officials appointed by the Attorney General, supervise the administration of chapter 7 and chapter 13 bankruptcy cases in all federal judicial districts within this circuit. 28 U.S.C. § 581-589a. See also H.R. Rep. No. 95-595, at 88 (1977) (United States Trustees "serve as bankruptcy watch-dogs to prevent fraud, dishonesty, and overreaching in the bankruptcy arena."); In re Revco D.S., Inc., 898 F.2d 498, 500 (6th Cir. 1990).

This appeal affects the United States' interests for two distinct reasons:

First, by applying section 1325(b), this Court will determine how much above-median-income chapter 13 debtors must repay their creditors in their chapter 13 repayment plans. The United States has an interest in that question because United States Trustees "supervise the administration of [chapter 13] cases and trustees," monitor chapter 13 plans, and file comments with the court regarding such chapter 13 plans in connection with plan confirmation hearings under section 1324 of the Code. 28 U.S.C. § 586(a)(3)(C).

Second, because section 1325(b) incorporates the chapter 7 means test under section 707(b)(2), this appeal may also impact what expenses above-median-income chapter 7 debtors can claim on the means test. The means test determines whether an above median-income-debtor's chapter 7 case should be dismissed as abusive. See 11 U.S.C. § 707(b)(1) and (2).

United States Trustees play a unique role in chapter 7 cases because section 704(b) requires them to review all such cases and, whenever a case is deemed presumptively abusive under the statutory means test, either (a) seek its dismissal, or (b) file a statement declining to seek dismissal. See 11 U.S.C. § 704(b). In fiscal year 2007, United States Trustees filed 3,370 motions to dismiss under section 707(b)(2) and 1,441 statements declining to seek dismissal when a presumption of abuse existed in a case. One of the allowed means test expenses implicated in this appeal – payments on secured debts under section 707(b)(2)(A)(iii) – is critical to the United States Trustee's analysis of whether the presumption of abuse arises.

In light of these interests, the United States submits this brief to share its views on the interpretation of sections 1325(b) and 707(b)(2)(A). See 28 U.S.C. § 517 (authorizing Department of Justice "to attend to the interests of the United States in a suit pending in a court of the United States").

STANDARD OF REVIEW

On appeal, the bankruptcy court's findings of fact are reviewed under the clearly erroneous standard but the appellate court reviews the bankruptcy court's conclusions of law de novo. Rembert v. AT&T Universal Card Servs., 141 F.3d 277, 280 (6th Cir. 1998); Michel v. Federated Dept. Stores, Inc., 44 F.3d 1310, 1315 (6th Cir. 1995). No disputed questions of fact exist, so review here is de novo.

STATEMENT OF THE ISSUE

Whether the bankruptcy court erred in confirming the debtors' chapter 13 plans over the chapter 13 trustee's objections, when the plan payments were predicated on disposable income calculations that included deductions for payments on property the debtors would never make because they were surrendering the property to secured creditors.

STATEMENT OF THE FACTS

I. Statutory Framework

The Bankruptcy Abuse Prevention and Consumer Protection Act of 2005 ("Reform Act")[1] significantly altered how chapter 13 debtors obtain chapter 13 bankruptcy relief.

In a chapter 13 case, a debtor's unsecured creditors or trustee may insist the debtor devote all of his "projected disposable income" to repay unsecured creditors. See 11 U.S.C. § 1325(b)(1). Disposable income is a net number: income less expenses.

Under the Reform Act, an above-median-income debtor, like the debtors in these appeals, determines disposable income by first calculating his gross income.[2] Next, the debtor deducts his permitted expenses, which include "amounts reasonably necessary to be expended" for maintenance or support or necessary business expenses. See 11 U.S.C. § 1325(b)(2) and (3).

Above-median-income chapter 13 debtors determine "amounts reasonably necessary to be expended . . .in accordance with" 11 U.S.C. § 707(b)(2)(A)(ii), (iii), and (iv). 11 U.S.C. § 1325(b)(3) (incorporating those provisions). Relevant to the issues involved in this appeal is section 707(b)(2)(A)(iii), which allows as payments on secured debt amounts that will be "due in each month of the 60 months following the date of the petition." 11 U.S.C. § 707(b)(2)(A)(iii). Deducting allowed expenses from a debtor's income yields a net number - disposable income.

Under section 1325(b)(1), when the chapter 13 trustee or an unsecured creditor objects to confirmation, the plan must provide "that all of the debtor's projected disposable income to be received in the applicable commitment period beginning on the date that the first payment is due under the plan will be applied to make payments to unsecured creditors under the plan." 11 U.S.C. § 1325(b)(1).

II. Factual Background

Debtors Gordon Thomas, Jr. and Doris Ann Thomas (Case No. 08-8014) and Anthony Shane Jones and Shana Lee Jones (Case No. 08-8015) filed petitions under Chapter 13 of the Bankruptcy Code in the United States Bankruptcy Court for the Middle District of Tennessee.[3] Both cases present similar facts. Both the Thomases and the Jones are above-median income debtors and represented by the same attorney. Aplt. App. A, D p. 2, M, P p. 2. Both debtors also filed chapter 13 plans that indicated an intent to surrender property that was subject to secured liens. Aplt. App. C p. 3, O p. 3. In particular, the Thomases scheduled secured debts for four vehicles but filed a plan stating their intent to surrender three of them.[4] Aplt. App. N pp. 16-17, O p. 3. The Jones's plan proposed to surrender real property valued at $121,000. Aplt. App. B p. 10, C p. 3.

Both debtors also calculated their disposable income by completing a Statement of Current Monthly Income and Calculation of Commitment Period and Disposable Income (Official Form 22C). Aplt. App. D, P. In their respective Official Forms 22C, the debtors both calculated their disposable income by deducting as future expenses the monthly payments on property that they intended to surrender. Aplt. App. D p. 5, P p. 5. Specifically, the Thomases deducted monthly payments on the three vehicles they intended to surrender, which totaled $1,344.10. Aplt. App. P p. 5. The Jones deducted $1,007 as a future monthly debt payment on the real property they were surrendering, even though their actual rent payment was only $800. Aplt. App. B p. 26, D p. 5.

[3] By order entered on March 28, 2008, his Court consolidated the cases for all purposes.

[4] Despite surrendering these vehicles, however, the Thomases would not have to do without transportation: they intended to continue making payments on a fourth vehicle and to use a company truck provided by Mr. Thomas's employer. (Chapter 13 plan; Schedule J).

By including in their Form 22C secured debt payments they would never make, the debtors substantially reduced their disposable income. Aplt. App. D p. 5, P pp. 5-6. Since the debtors used their Form 22C disposable income calculation to calculate their plan payment, both chapter 13 plans proposed to pay unsecured creditors substantially less than the debtors had the ability to pay. Aplt. App. C, D, O, P. Specifically, the Thomases' plan payment was reduced by $1344.10, and the Jones reduced their plan payment by at least $207.[5] Aplt. App. C, D, O, P.

The Chapter 13 trustee objected to plan confirmation in both cases because the proposed plans failed to provide for the payment of all the debtors' disposable income to unsecured creditors, as required by 11 U.S.C. §1325(b)(1). Aplt. App. E, Q. The bankruptcy court denied the trustee's objection and confirmed the debtors' proposed plans. Aplt. App. G, S. In an oral opinion, the bankruptcy court held that the debtors' intent in surrendering the collateral was irrelevant. Aplt. App. L p. 6, X p.6. Instead, the bankruptcy court found that the debtors were required to deduct those collateralized debt payments contractually due in each of the 60 months following the date of the petition. Aplt. App. L p. 5, X p. 5. The bankruptcy court interpreted the phrase "contractually due" in section 707(b)(2)(A) as those debts owed under legal contract as of the petition date. Aplt. App. L p. 6, X p. 6.

SUMMARY OF ARGUMENT

This Court should reverse the orders entered below for any of three independent reasons. First, when a creditor or the chapter 13 trustee objects to confirmation of a chapter 13 plan, section 1325(b)(1) prohibits bankruptcy courts from confirming the plan unless the debtor provides all of his projected disposable income to repay unsecured creditors during the applicable commitment period. Projected disposable income is a forward-looking concept that requires the court to exclude expenses that the debtors do not or will not incur. Accordingly, bankruptcy courts cannot confirm chapter 13 plans when the plan payment is based on disposable income calculations that include deductions for payments on property that the debtor will surrender to secured creditors.

[5] Over the 60 month chapter 13 plan term, the net effect of the reduced plan payments would be to substantially reduce the distribution to unsecured creditors.

Second, in calculating their disposable income under section 1325(b)(2), debtors may only deduct from their current monthly income "amounts reasonably necessary to be expended". Payments on property the debtor is surrendering, by definition, will never be "expended," and therefore cannot be "reasonably necessary". Thus, the Bankruptcy Code erred in confirming the debtors' chapter 13 plans, because they included secured debt payments on property the debtors were surrendering.

Third, in accordance with section 707(b)(2)(A)(iii), which is incorporated in above-median-income chapter 13 cases by section 1325(b)(3), excluding payments on property a debtor is surrendering from a debtor's disposable income calculations is the proper interpretation of section 707(b)(2)(A)(iii), which only allows deduction of amounts "scheduled as contractually due" to secured creditors.

ARGUMENT

I. Section 1325(b)(1) requires debtors to commit all of their "projected disposable income" to creditors over the applicable commitment period.

Under section 1325(b)(1), bankruptcy courts may not confirm chapter 13 plans over the chapter 13 trustee's objection unless "the plan provides that all of the debtor's projected disposable income to be received in the applicable commitment period. . .will be applied to make payments to unsecured creditors under the plan." 11 U.S.C. § 1325(b)(1). The chapter 13 trustee objected to the chapter 13 plans filed by the Joneses and the Thomases. Accordingly, the bankruptcy court should not have confirmed the plans because they failed to provide for payment of all the debtors' projected disposable income over the applicable commitment period.

A. Under section 1325(b)(1), "projected disposable income" is a future-oriented concept that does not permit debtors to subtract secured debt payments as expenses when the property at issue will be surrendered under the plan.

This Court has not interpreted the phrase "projected disposable income" in light of the Reform Act's amendments to section 1325(b).[6] In considering this phrase, this Court should adopt an interpretation of section 1325(b) that not only gives meaning to the definition of "disposable income" under section 1325(b)(2), but that also properly treats "projected" as a future-oriented concept, as required by the language of section 1325(b)(1). Under this approach, the debtor's historical income and expense deductions under section 707(b)(2)(A)(ii), (iii), and (iv) are a starting point, and should be carried forward throughout the term of the plan, absent evidence to the contrary. However, where evidence demonstrates that the debtor is likely to have a significant change in income or expenses during the life of the chapter 13 plan, the Court should consider this evidence in its calculations of the debtor's projected disposable income.

Prior to the Reform Act, section 1325(b)(1) provided that "all of the debtor's projected disposable income to be received in the three-year period beginning on the date that the first payment is due under the plan will be applied to make payments under the plan." 11 U.S.C. § 1325(b)(1). The Bankruptcy Code defined "disposable income" as "income not reasonably necessary for maintaining or supporting the debtor or a dependent, with that determination made on an estimated basis of plan confirmation." In re Pak, 378 B.R. 257 (B.A.P. 9th Cir. 2007) quoting, In re Slusher, 359 B.R. 290, 294 (Bankr. D. Nev. 2007); 11 U.S.C. § 1325(b)(2). Courts routinely projected or estimated a debtor's disposable income during the plan confirmation process by taking into account anticipated changes in their financial circumstances, primarily by utilizing Schedules

[6] The issue is, however, currently pending before this Court in another case, In re Petro, BAP No. 08-8009. The United States Trustee filed an amicus brief in support of the chapter 13 trustee in that case, advocating reversal of the bankruptcy court on the issue.

I and J. See In re Pak, 357 B.R. 549, 553 (Bankr. N.D. Cal. 2006) aff'd In re Pak, 378 B.R. 257 (B.A.P. 9th Cir. 2007).

Section 1325(b)(1) now requires that all of the debtor's projected disposable income "be applied to make payments to unsecured creditors. . ." 11 U.S.C. § 1325(b)(1). "Projected disposable income" remains undefined; however, section 1325(b)(2) now defines "disposable income" as "current monthly income received by the debtor . . .less amounts reasonably necessary to be expended" for maintenance or support or necessary business expenses. In other words, to calculate "projected disposable income," a court must now start with the historical data from the six months prior to filing, i.e., current monthly income and the debtor's allowed and actual expenses, and "project" that difference over the applicable commitment period.

Statutory words must be construed in context. Hibbs v. Winn, 542 U.S. 88, 101 (2004). In this context the term "projected" refers to a forecast or estimate of an expected future financial reality.[7] The calculation of "projected" financial data may well begin with historical data, but it does not end there, and it certainly does not entail a rigid and inviolable assumption that projected income will necessarily be identical to the debtor's past financial condition even when the available facts demonstrate otherwise. The forward looking nature of projected disposable income is reinforced by the requirement that a plan provide all the debtor's projected disposable income "to be received" during the plan period, and that these amounts "will be applied to make payments" to unsecured creditors. 11 U.S.C. § 1325(b)(1)(B).

[7] See The Random House Dict. of the English Lang., 1546 (2d ed. 1987) (defining to "project" as inter alia, "to set forth or calculate (some future thing); They projected the building costs for the next five years.") Webster's Third New Int'l Dict. 1813 (1993) (defining "projected" as, inter alia, "planned for future execution: contrived, proposed," as "[projected] outlays for new plant and equipment"). See also In re Chriss-Price, 376 B.R. 648 (Bankr. M.D. Tenn. 2006) (applying dictionary definition of "projected" and finding that projected "refers to the future" and that courts "must consider both future and historical finances of the debtor in determining compliance with 11 U.S.C. § 1325(b)(1)(B).").

Three appellate courts have embraced this approach. They read "projected disposable income" in section 1325 as presumptively starting with the historical disposable income figure but allow significant changes in the debtor's income or expenses to be considered when that figure inaccurately projects the debtor's ability to fund a chapter 13 plan over the life of that plan. See In re Lanning, 380 B.R. 17 (B.A.P. 10th Cir. 2007); In re Pak, 378 B.R. 257 (B.A.P. 9th Cir. 2007); In re Kibbe, 361 B.R. 301 (B.A.P. 1st Cir. 2007). But see In re Frederickson, 375 B.R. 829 (B.A.P. 8th Cir. 2007) (finding, in dicta, that "projected disposable income is the disposable income calculated on Form 22C extrapolated over the applicable commitment period."); In re Mancl, 381 B.R. 537 (W.D. Wis.2008) (projected disposable income is simply disposable income projected forward over term of plan).

This interpretation not only is faithful to the new definition of "disposable income" in section 1325(b)(2) as an historical number but also treats "projected" disposable income as a future-oriented concept, as required by the language of section 1325(b)(1). See In re Pak, 378 B.R. at 264-65; In re Kibbe, 361 B.R. at 307-08. Accordingly, it is unsurprising that courts have applied this forward-looking analysis in denying plan confirmation when debtors' disposable income calculations included payments for secured debts on surrendered property. See In re Smith, 383 B.R. 441, 453-54 (Bankr. E.D. Wis. 2008) (denying plan confirmation where debtors subtracted mortgage payments on home they were surrendering because they failed to commit all of their "projected disposable income" as required under 11 U.S.C. § 1325(b)); In re Love, 350 B.R. 611 (Bankr. M.D. Ala. 2006) ("One would not project or anticipate that a payment would be made on a secured indebtedness where the collateral had been returned. Similarly, a Chapter 13 plan is necessarily a forward looking document.").

Because projected disposable income under section 1325(b)(1) is a forward-looking concept, the bankruptcy court should not have confirmed the debtors' chapter 13 plans when the debtors would never make payments on property they were surrendering under their chapter 13 plans.

B. Under section 1325(b)(3), "disposable income" is a future-oriented concept that does not permit debtors to subtract amounts they will never "expend" because they are surrendering the property under the plan.

Section 1325(b)(2) defines disposable income to include "current monthly income received by the debtor. . .less amounts reasonably necessary to be expended. . ." 11 U.S.C. § 1325(b)(2). For above-median-income debtors, section 1325(b)(3) provides that "amounts reasonably necessary to be expended . . .shall be determined in accordance with [section 707(b)(2)(A) and (B)]." 11 U.S.C. § 1325(b)(3).

The phrase "reasonably necessary to be expended" in section 1325(b)(3) is future-oriented. "It requires debtors, and courts, to look into the future to determine, inasmuch as possible, what expenses the debtor will have during the life of the plan." In re Smith, 383 B.R. 441, 454 (Bankr. E.D. Wis. 2008). Indeed, to give this phrase meaning, one must consider whether the debtor will actually "expend" any amounts going forward. Id. See also In re Renicker, 342 B.R. 304, 309 (Bankr. W.D. Mo. 2006) (concluding that the "plain language of section 1325(b)(2) unambiguously indicates that prospective - not historical - expenses are to be used to calculate disposable income"). Payments on property a debtor is surrendering, by definition, will never be "expended," and therefore cannot be "reasonably necessary" for the debtor's support. In re Coleman, 382 B.R. 759, 763 (Bankr. W.D. Ark. 2008); In re McPherson, 350 B.R. 38, 45-46 (Bankr. W.D. Va. 2006) (payments the debtor does not propose to make, and is not required to make under the debtor's plan cannot be reasonably necessary for the debtor's support).

Because they will never be "reasonably necessary to be expended," section 1325(b)(3) prohibits debtors such as the Thomases and the Joneses from deducting from their disposable income secured debt payments on property they are surrendering. Therefore, this Court should reverse the bankruptcy court's confirmation orders entered below.

II. Section 707(b)(2)(A)(iii) prohibits debtors from subtracting from their disposable income calculations payments for collateral the debtors are surrendering under their chapter 13 plans.

In confirming the debtors' chapter 13 plans, the bankruptcy court incorrectly ruled that the debtors could claim secured debt expenses under section 707(b)(2)(A)(iii) for property the debtors were surrendering. See Aplt. App. L p. 6, X p. 6. There are four reasons why this is so.

First, the terms of section 707(b)(2)(A)(iii) contemplate that future expenses will be used to determine whether a debtor will have sufficient disposable income going forward. The statute provides: "[t]he debtor's average monthly payments on account of secured debts shall be calculated as the sum of . . .the total of all amounts scheduled as contractually due to secured creditors in each month of the 60 months following the date of the petition."[8] In examining the meaning of a statute, courts begin with the statute's plain language, and avoid constructions that render some words redundant or another part of the same statute superfluous. United States v. Alaska, 521 U.S. 1, 59 (1997) ("The Court will avoid an interpretation of a statute that renders some words altogether

> (II) any additional payments to secured creditors necessary for the debtor, in filing a plan under chapter 13 of this title, to maintain possession of the debtor's primary residence, motor vehicle, or other property necessary for the support of the debtor and the debtor's dependents, that serves as collateral for secured debts;

The dictionary defines "following" as "subsequent to," "next in the order of time" or in the future. Merriam-Webster Online Dictionary (2007).[9] This meaning should be imparted to the term "following" as it appears in section 707(b)(2)(A)(iii), absent clear indication that Congress intended to give the term a different meaning. Bailey v. United States, 516 U.S. 137, 144-45 (1995) (turning to the dictionary definition of a term in order to determine its statutory meaning). Using the common, ordinary meaning of "following," section 707(b)(2)(A)(iii) would only allow deductions for payments to secured creditors that will be made 'subsequent to" or "after" the petition date, and payments for surrendered property that will never be made do not qualify. See In re Naut, 2008 WL 191297 at *9 (Bankr. E.D. Pa. Jan. 22, 2008) (applying dictionary definition of "following" to conclude that loan payments must actually be due in each of the 60 months after the bankruptcy filing before the debtor can claim the expense under the means test).

Second, the fact that Congress employed the phrase "scheduled as contractually due" in the section is consistent with this reading of the term "following." Significantly, Congress has "used the phrase 'scheduled as' several times in the Bankruptcy Code. . .to refer to whether a debt is identified on a debtor's bankruptcy schedules." In re Skaggs, 349 B.R. 594, 599 (Bankr. E.D. Mo. 2006).[10] This use of the phrase "scheduled as contractually due" thus signals that secured debts are permissible deductions under section 707(b)(2)(A)(iii) only to the extent they are legitimately on [10] See, e.g., 11 U.S.C. § 1111(a) ("wherein a claim or interest is not deemed filed if it is scheduled as disputed, contingent or unliquidated"). Other examples where the term "scheduled" is used to refer to a debtor's bankruptcy schedules include 11 U.S.C. § 523(a)(3) (individual debtor not discharged from debt "neither listed nor scheduled under section 521(l)[sic] of this title. . .") and 11 U.S.C. § 554(c) ("Unless the court orders otherwise, any property scheduled under section 521(l) of this title not otherwise administered at the time of the closing of a case is abandoned to the debtor and administered for purposes of section 350 of this title.").

the debtor's schedules as a debt to be paid in the 60 months after the debtor filed bankruptcy. Where, as here, the debtors filed chapter 13 plans with their petition indicating an intent to surrender secured property, the debtors' disposable income calculations cannot include payments on the surrendered property.

"When Congress amends the bankruptcy laws, it does not write 'on a clean slate'". Dewsnup v. Timm, 502 U.S. 410, 419 (1992). The prior bankruptcy law's ". . .longstanding meaning forms the background against which Congress legislates. . .[and] [t]he courts presume that Congress will use clear language if it intends to alter an established" meaning. Skaggs, 349 B.R. at 599 (citing Firstar Bank v. Faul, 253 F.3d 982, 988 (7th Cir. 2001)). Accordingly, a debtor's "schedules and statements form the basis from which . . .[a] court should determine whether a debt is 'scheduled as contractually due.'" Id. The entire phrase "average monthly payments on account of secured debts scheduled as contractually due in each month of the 60 months following the date of the petition" is best construed as contemplating a forward-looking calculation. In re Ray, 362 B.R. 680, 685 (Bankr. D. S.C. 2007). The Joneses' and Thomases' schedules and statements, including their statements in their chapter 13 plans that they intended to surrender collateral to their secured creditors, form the basis from which this Court should determine whether they will be making future payments "with respect to the property of the estate which secures those debts."

Third, an examination of section 707(b)(2)(A)(iii)(I) in context with its "conjunctive partner," section 707(b)(2)(A)(iii)(II), "reinforces the conclusion that § 707(b)(2)(A)(iii)(I) applies only to payments on debts secured by collateral that a debtor intends to keep." In re Burden, 380 B.R. 194, 202 (Bankr. W.D. Mo. 2007). Section 707(b)(2)(A)(iii)(II) allows, in addition to secured debt payments scheduled as contractually due, deductions for "any additional payments to secured creditors necessary for the debtor, in filing a plan under chapter 13 of this title, to maintain possession of the debtor's primary residence. . ." Allowing only debtors who intend to retain property to deduct secured debt expenses is harmonious with the explicitly forward-looking nature of section 707(b)(2)(A)(iii)(II), which contemplates an evaluation of a debtor's intention to maintain possession of property." Id. at 201-02.

Two lines of cases take an opposite view of section 707(b)(2)(A)(iii), one holding that the words "contractually due" are controlling, and the other holding that the words "contractually due" control unless the collateral is actually surrendered.[11] The "contractually due unless actually surrendered" courts allow chapter 7 debtors to deduct payments on secured debt except when the collateral has actually been surrendered to the secured creditor. These cases, however, and their analysis, should be rejected.[12]

These lines of cases present no unified structure for the analysis of section 707(b)(2)(A)(iii). Their analyses are fundamentally irreconcilable – the first holds that the means test is designed to be an historic reading of a debtor's financial condition as of the petition date, while the second requires consideration of some events occurring after the petition date be considered. More importantly, neither line takes into account or gives effect to all words and provisions of section 707(b)(2)(A)(iii), whereas the construction advanced by the United States Trustee does.

Section 707(b)(2)(A)(iii) "allows debtors to deduct their average monthly payments on secured debts based upon those amounts that will be contractually due during the 60 month period

[11] See e.g., In re Walker, 2006 WL 1314125, at *4 (Bankr. N.D. Ga. May 1, 2006) (surrender of collateral does not change fact that payments are contractually due); see also Fokkena v. Hartwick, 373 B.R. 645, 653-55 (D. Minn. 2007); In re Mundy, 363 B.R. 407, 412-13 (Bankr. M.D. Pa. 2007).

Wis. May 15, 2007) (finding mortgage debt not "scheduled as contractually due" as of date of state law foreclosure sale).

following the petition." In re Edmunds, 350 B.R. 636, 645 (Bankr. D. S.C. 2006). The method used to determine whether an expense for secured debt may be deducted under the statute must therefore consider the amount, if any, that will actually be paid by the debtor in the future. Proper application of section 707(b)(2)(A)(iii) thus requires courts to credit a debtor's intent to surrender collateral and make no future payments to secured creditors.

Fourth, the United States Trustee's approach is also consistent with Congress' stated intent in enacting the Reform Act, which was to make certain that debtors "repay creditors the maximum they can afford." H.R. Rep. No. 109-31 (I) at 1 (2005), reprinted in 2005 U.S.C.C.A.N. 88, 89. Permitting the Joneses and the Thomases to reduce their disposable income by secured debt expenses for collateral they intend to surrender would conflict with Congress' intent in enacting the Reform Act.

CONCLUSION

For these reasons, we respectfully ask this Court to reverse the order of the bankruptcy court in its entirety.

STATEMENT OF RELATED CASES

There are no prior appeals in this case. There is a separate appeal arising from the same underlying bankruptcy case that this appeal arises from. See Thomas v. RCB Bank of Nichols Hills (In re Thomas), No. 10-6228 (10th Cir. filed Oct. 5, 2010).

STATEMENT OF APPELLATE JURISDICTION

The bankruptcy court had jurisdiction over Ms. Chaya Chalon Thomas's chapter 13 bankruptcy case under 28 U.S.C. §§ 157 and 1334(a). The bankruptcy court's final order dismissing Ms. Thomas's case under 11 U.S.C. § 1307(c) for bad faith was entered on October 29, 2009. Ms. Thomas filed a motion to alter or amend judgment on November 11, 2009. The bankruptcy court denied that motion on December 9, 2009. Ms. Thomas then timely filed a notice of appeal from both orders under 28 U.S.C. § 158(c)(2) and Fed. R. Bankr. P. 8002(a) on December 21, 2009.

The United States District Court for the Western District of Oklahoma had jurisdiction over Ms. Thomas's appeal under 28 U.S.C. § 158(a)(1). The district court order dismissing Ms. Thomas's appeal for failure to pay her filing fees under Fed. R. Bankr. P. 8001(a) was entered on August 18, 2010. Ms. Thomas timely filed a notice of appeal from that dismissal order under Fed. R. App. P. 4(a)(1)(B) on October 5, 2010.

This Court has jurisdiction to review the district court's dismissal order under 28 U.S.C. § 158(d)(1).

STATEMENT OF THE ISSUES

Did the district court abuse its discretion when it dismissed Ms. Thomas's bankruptcy appeal because she did not pay her filing fees and failed to demonstrate her eligibility to proceed in forma pauperis under 28 U.S.C. §§ 1915 or 1930(f)?

STANDARD OF REVIEW

This Court reviews a dismissal based on failure to comply with procedural rules or a court order for abuse of discretion. Nielsen v. Price, 17 F.3d 1276, 1277 (10th Cir. 1994). This Court also reviews a court's denial of an application to proceed in forma pauperis for abuse of discretion. Lister v. Dep't of Treasury, 408 F.3d 1309, 1312 (10th Cir. 2005).

"An abuse of discretion occurs when the district court's decision is arbitrary, capricious, or whimsical, or results in a manifestly unreasonable judgment." Moothart v. Bell, 21 F.3d 1499, 1504-05 (10th Cir. 1994). Under the abuse of discretion standard, the district court's decision will not be disturbed unless "it finds no support in the record, deviates from the appropriate legal standard, or follows from a plainly implausible, irrational, or erroneous reading of the record." United States v. Robinson, 39 F.3d 1115, 1116 (10th Cir. 1994).

Questions of statutory interpretation are reviewed de novo. United States v. McGinty, 610 F.3d 1242, 1245 (10th Cir. 2010).

STATEMENT OF THE CASE

I. Statutory Framework

A. Dismissals for Failure to Comply With Procedural Rules Under Fed. R. Bankr. P. 8001(a)

The Federal Rules of Bankruptcy Procedure “govern procedure in cases under title 11 of the United States Code.” Fed. R. Bankr. P. 1001. The 8000-series Bankruptcy Rules govern appeals to the district courts and the bankruptcy appellate panels.

Under Fed. R. Bankr. P. 8001(a), “[a]n appellant’s failure to take any step other than timely filing a notice of appeal does not affect the validity of the appeal, but is ground only for such action as the district court or bankruptcy appellate panel deems appropriate, which may include dismissal of the appeal.”

B. The Availability of Fee Waivers in Bankruptcy Appeals

There is no 8000-series Bankruptcy Rule governing fee waivers on appeal. But under 28 U.S.C. § 1930(f) a court may wave bankruptcy fees in three circumstances. First, when an individual chapter 7 debtor has “income less than 150 percent of the income official poverty line” and “is unable to pay the fee in installments,” the court may waive the fee for the commencement of the case. 28 U.S.C. § 1930(f)(1). Second, the court may waive all other fees for “such debtors.” 28 U.S.C. § 1930(f)(2). Third, “in accordance with Judicial Conference policy,” the court may waive fees “for other debtors and creditors.” 28 U.S.C.

§ 1930(f)(3). The Bankruptcy Court Miscellaneous Fee Schedule, however, does not contain a provision allowing a court to waive the fees for filing an appeal. Administrative Office of the U.S. Courts, Bankruptcy Court Miscellaneous Fee Schedule § 14 (2010), available at http://www.uscourts.gov/FormsAndFees/Fees/BankruptcyCourtMiscellaneousFeeSchedule.aspx.

Under 28 U.S.C. § 1915(a)(1), "any court of the United States" may waive filing fees for any person who submits an affidavit including a statement of all assets demonstrating the inability to pay the filing fees, and a statement explaining the nature of the appeal and the belief that the person is entitled to redress.

II. Statement of the Facts and Proceedings Below

A. Ms. Thomas files for chapter 13 bankruptcy relief with over $700,000 in declared assets and under $30,000 in liabilities.

Ms. Chaya Chalon Thomas filed a pro se voluntary petition for relief under chapter 13 of the Bankruptcy Code on July 20, 2009. Chapter 13 Voluntary Petition dated 7/20/2009, B.C. Dkt. No. 1.[1] Ms. Thomas claims to be a self-employed paralegal. Summary of Schedules and Statement of Financial Affairs dated 8/3/2009, B.C. Dkt. No. 10 at 23. She reported earning $1,250 per month in business income and receiving $500 per month in child support payments. Id. at 41. She scheduled $29,481 in liabilities, primarily in credit card and student loan debt. Id. at 17-20. And she disclosed over $713,900 in assets.[2] Id. at 1.

Ms. Thomas's assets include (1) $5,000 in cash located in her home, id. at 8; (2) an unknown amount of shares in a corporation named "The Phoenix Syndicate," id. at 9; (3) 50% of a rental property worth $140,000, id.; and (4) $576,000 in accounts receivable. Id. at 10. The $576,000 in receivables came from two sources. First, $72,000 for rents on a property located at 2455 Unit 5 Manchester Drive in The Village, Oklahoma from "Ms. Betty Jean Wagner, Rick Wagner, Judy Davis & G. Von Thomas Atty. Inc." Id. Second, $504,000 for unpaid salary from "G. Von Thomas, Attorney, Inc., Essex & Associates, Ltd., The Phoenix Syndicate, Versatility Inc. Plus, and Village Investments Plus Fund." Id.

B. Ms. Thomas lists property she does not own in her bankruptcy schedules.

In addition, Ms. Thomas claimed an "Undetermined Equitable Interest" in her home at 4200 Bristol Lane in Edmond, Oklahoma. Id. at 4. But the property records for Oklahoma County do not show that Ms. Thomas owns the Bristol Lane property. Instead, property records list Mr. Clyde A. Riggs as the sole owner of the property. United States Trustee's Mot. to Dismiss dated 9/30/2009, B.C. Dkt. No. 25 at Ex. A. Mr. Riggs purchased the Bristol Lane property in 2001. Id. at Ex. C. Ever since, Mr. Riggs has been the sole taxpayer on the property. Id. at Ex. B.

[2] Ms. Thomas declared over $1 million in assets on the face of her bankruptcy petition. Chapter 13 Voluntary Petition dated 7/20/2009, B.C. Dkt. No. 1 at 1. But in her bankruptcy schedules, she values her home at an "unknown" value, personal property at $713,900, and lists no other assets. Summary of Schedules and Statement of Financial Affairs dated 8/3/2009, B.C. Dkt. No. 10 at 1. Although the difference between her petition and her schedules indicate that the house should be valued at around $300,000, this brief will only refer to the value of the assets quantified in her schedules.

Mr. Riggs originally leased the property to The Phoenix Syndicate, through Judy Davis — Ms. Thomas's business partner. Tr. at 17-18. The lease expired by its own terms. Id. at 18. The tenants stopped paying rent, but they never left. Id. at 17.

Ultimately, Mr. Riggs brought a forcible entry and detainer lawsuit to remove Ms. Thomas and her family from the premises. See United States Trustee's Mot. to Dismiss dated 9/30/2009, B.C. Dkt. No. 25 at 2; see also Riggs v. Thomas, No. SC-2009-13866 (D. Okla. Cty. filed July 21, 2009), available at http://www.oscn.net. Ms. Thomas's bankruptcy filing created an automatic stay under 11 U.S.C. § 362, which stopped the eviction.

C. Ms. Thomas requests a continuance at the meeting of her creditors to retain counsel, but never again appears at any proceeding, either in person or through counsel.

On August 20, 2009, Ms. Thomas appeared at the initial meeting of her creditors, which is mandatory under 11 U.S.C. § 341 (requiring the debtor to answer questions posed at the meeting). She testified under oath that the information in her schedules was accurate. Tr. at 27-28. But after realizing that Mr. Riggs's attorney was present, Ms. Thomas requested a continuance to retain counsel. Id. at 32-33. The chapter 13 trustee conducting the meeting consented, and ordered Ms. Thomas to provide affidavits verifying the accuracy of the information listed in her schedules when the meeting resumed. Id. at 34. After consulting with Ms. Thomas, the chapter 13 trustee suspended the meeting by announcing that it would be continued until September 10, 2009, and warned Ms. Thomas that if she did not reappear, he would file a motion to dismiss her case. Id.

Ms. Thomas never obtained counsel, produced documents, or appeared at the meeting on September 10, 2009. Id. at 33-34; Docket Text Entry dated 9/15/2009. The chapter 13 trustee subsequently filed a motion to dismiss her case. Trustee's Mot. to Dismiss Case for Failure to Appear dated 9/14/2009, B.C. Dkt. No. 16. On the day the motion to dismiss was scheduled for a hearing, September 22, 2009, Ms. Thomas filed a 14-page objection to the chapter 13 trustee's motion to dismiss (1) denying that she failed to appear at the original section 341 meeting, (2) blaming the chapter 13 trustee for delays in the case, (3) contesting her legal obligations under section 341, and (4) requesting sanctions against the chapter 13 trustee "for its disregard of the law." Objection dated 9/22/2009, B.C. Dkt. No. 21. Ms. Thomas, however, did not appear at the hearing, so the bankruptcy court postponed it until October 14, 2009, to give her an opportunity to participate. Minute Order dated 9/23/2009, B.C. Dkt. 22.

D. Ms. Thomas files a complaint against RCB Bank for a violation of the automatic stay in a case that was dismissed in 2001.

On September 30, 2009, the United States Trustee moved to dismiss Ms. Thomas's chapter 13 case for bad faith.[3] United States Trustee's Mot. to Dismiss dated 9/30/2009, B.C. Dkt. No. 25. The United States Trustee argued that Ms. Thomas was squatting on Mr. Riggs's property and her misconduct in the case — lying about her ownership of the Bristol Lane property, failure to attend her continued section 341 meeting, and failure to appear in court to defend her objection — was intended to cloud title to the Bristol Lane property, delay her bankruptcy case, and frustrate Mr. Riggs's state court litigation. Id. at 5-6.

Two days later, Ms. Thomas filed a complaint against RCB Bank of Nichols Hills for allegedly violating the automatic stay when the bank foreclosed in 2001 on a residence located at 1403 Cassidy Lane, where Ms. Thomas lived with her parents at the time. Adversary Case 09-1153, Compl. dated 10/2/2009, B.C. Dkt. 26; see Thomas v. RCB Bank of Nichols Hills, No. 09-1153 (Bankr. W.D. Okla

[3] The United States Trustee is an official of the United States Department of Justice appointed by the Attorney General to supervise the administration of bankruptcy cases. 28 U.S.C. § 581. "The United States trustee may raise and may appear and be heard on any issue in any case or proceeding under this title but may not file a plan pursuant to section 1121(c) of this title." 11 U.S.C. § 307. Courts have repeatedly held that the United States Trustee has standing under section 307 to appear and be heard on any issue in any bankruptcy case, despite the lack of pecuniary interest in the outcome. See Morgenstern v. Revco D.S., Inc. (In re Revco D.S., Inc.), 898 F.2d 498, 500 (6th Cir. 1990); see also Adams v. Zarnel (In re Zarnel), 619 F.3d 156, 161 (2d Cir. 2010); Stanley v. McCormick (In re Donovan Corp.), 215 F.3d 929, 930 (9th Cir. 2000) ("The United States trustee may . . . intervene and appear at any level of the proceedings from the bankruptcy court on . . . as either a party or an amicus.").

filed Oct. 2, 2009). Ms. Thomas demanded a million dollars in damages for stay violations that allegedly occurred a decade earlier in the bankruptcy cases of her parents, Gerald Von Thomas and Shirley Levingston Thomas. Id. at 6.

Soon after Ms. Thomas filed that complaint, she filed a 16-page objection to the United States Trustee's motion to dismiss her chapter 13 case. Objection dated 10/7/2009, B.C. Dkt. No. 33. According to Ms. Thomas, the existence of her adversary complaint "weighed heavily" against dismissing her case. Id. at 4. Ms. Thomas also raised seven objections to the United States Trustee's alleged "veiled" activities, such as the "Veiled Representation of a Private Citizen." Id. at 7-15. She provided no evidence or legal authority in support of these objections. Id.

Ms. Thomas's filings mirrored those her mother, Shirley Levingston Thomas, had filed in 2007 as part of her chapter 13 bankruptcy case. Response to Mot. for Miscellaneous Relief dated 11/17/2009, B.C. Dkt. No. 47 at 2. In that case, the bankruptcy court sanctioned Shirley Thomas for asserting an interest in property in which she had no title, and awarded attorneys' fees multiple times because she had "repeatedly filed frivolous bankruptcies, adversary proceedings, and pleadings, and she had repeatedly failed to appear in prosecution of her frivolous filings." Harmon Family Trust v. Thomas (In re Thomas), No. 09-6015, 348 F. App'x 413, 2009 WL 3241288 (10th Cir. Oct. 9, 2009) (unpublished); see In re Thomas, No. 07-10442 (Bankr. W.D. Okla. filed Feb. 21, 2007) (lead bankruptcy case). This Court affirmed those sanctions, and additionally sanctioned Shirley Thomas for bringing a frivolous appeal, awarding $8,500 in attorneys' fees to the appellees in that case. Id.

E. The bankruptcy court dismisses Ms. Thomas's case for bad faith.

The bankruptcy court rescheduled the October 14, 2009, hearing until October 27, 2009, to consider both the United States Trustee's and the chapter 13 trustee's motions at the same time. Docket Text Entry dated 10/14/2009, B.C. Dkt. No. 37.

Ms. Thomas did not appear at the hearing. The United States Trustee called Mr. Riggs, who testified that he had never met Ms. Thomas. Tr. at 13. Mr. Riggs explained that he was the sole owner of the property. Id. at 14. He had, however, previously leased it to The Phoenix Syndicate, through Judy Davis — Ms. Thomas's business partner. Id. at 17-18. That lease expired by its own terms. Id. at 18. The tenants stopped paying rent, but they never left the premises. Id. at 17.

The chapter 13 trustee then testified about what occurred at the section 341 meeting on August 20, 2009. Id. at 23. He recalled how Ms. Thomas requested the continuance immediately after Mr. Riggs's attorney announced himself, and how she agreed to provide documents and affidavits to verify the information in her bankruptcy petition. Id. at 24-25. To date, she has never provided any of that information. Id. at 25. In further support, he introduced an audio recording of the testimony Ms. Thomas gave at the section 341 meeting. Id. at 27-42.

After hearing all of the testimony, the bankruptcy court stated it was intending to dismiss her chapter 13 case with prejudice to re-filing for 180 days. Id. at 44. On October 29, 2009, the bankruptcy court issued a written order dismissing Ms. Thomas's case under section 11 U.S.C. § 1307(c) for bad faith and under 11 U.S.C. § 109(g) for willful failure of the debtor to appear before the court. Order Granting Mot. to Dismiss Case dated 10/29/2009, B.C. Dkt. No. 43.

On December 9, 2009, Ms. Thomas filed a motion to alter or amend the judgment, requesting that the bankruptcy court (1) explain what had happened at the hearing on the motion to dismiss, (2) update her on the status of her outstanding motions, and (3) clarify its order. Mot. to Alter or Amend dated 11/09/2009, B.C. Dkt. No. 46. The bankruptcy court set the motion for a hearing on December 8, 2009. Notice dated 11/25/2009, B.C. Dkt. No. 48.

For the fourth time in a row, Ms. Thomas failed to appear. Order Denying Mot. dated 12/09/2009, B.C. Dkt. No. 55. The bankruptcy court denied the motion for failure to prosecute on December 9, 2009. Id.

F. Ms. Thomas files an application to proceed in forma pauperis on appeal that is inconsistent with her bankruptcy schedules.

On December 21, 2009, Ms. Thomas timely filed a notice of appeal from the orders dismissing her chapter 13 case and denying her motion to alter or amend judgment. Notice of Appeal to District Court dated 12/21/2009, B.C. Dkt. No. 61. At the same time, she filed an application to proceed in forma pauperis on appeal. Appl. to Proceed in District Court Without Prepaying Fees or Costs re: Appeal dated 11/21/2009, B.C. Dkt. No. 63.

Ms. Thomas's declaration of penury was inconsistent with the assets she listed in her bankruptcy schedules under penalty of perjury. Ms. Thomas's IFP application "incorporated by reference" those bankruptcy schedules. Id. at 2. But her schedules list $500 per month in child support payments that she did not include on her IFP application, and $713,900 worth of personal property, including $5,000 in cash on hand and ownership rights in various corporations, joint ventures, and investment funds. Summary of Schedules and Statement of Financial Affairs dated 8/3/2009, B.C. Dkt. No. 10 at 7-9, 23. Her IFP application did not explain why she could no longer pay her own costs or how her financial situation had changed. Appl. to Proceed in District Court Without Prepaying Fees or Costs re: Appeal dated 11/21/2009, B.C. Dkt. No. 63. She also failed to provide any authority in support of her application. Id.

G. The bankruptcy court denies Ms. Thomas's application to proceed in forma pauperis on appeal and orders her to pay the filing fee within seven days.

On February 26, 2010, the bankruptcy court denied the IFP application under 28 U.S.C. §§ 1915 or 1930(f), citing four reasons. Order Denying Mot. dated 2/26/2010, B.C. Dkt. No. 76. First, Ms. Thomas's application was deficient on the merits regarding her inability to pay the filing fee. Id. at 2. Second, a bankruptcy court is not a "court of the United States" that could grant relief under section 1915(a)(1). Id. Third, Ms. Thomas was ineligible for a fee waiver under section 1930(f)(2) because it only applies to a debtor who was granted a fee waiver under section 1930(f)(1), which she had not received. Id. at 4. Finally, Ms. Thomas was ineligible under section 1930(f)(3) because the Bankruptcy Court Miscellaneous Fee Schedule does not provide authority to waive the filing fee for an appeal. Id. at 5. Therefore, the court ordered Ms. Thomas to pay the filing fee within seven days. Id.

Ms. Thomas never appealed that order, nor did she ever pay the filing fee. Order Regarding Non-payment of Filing Fee for Notice of Appeal dated 3/11/2010, B.C. Dkt. 79.

H. The district court, after giving Ms. Thomas notice and an opportunity to respond, dismisses Ms. Thomas's appeal for failure to pay the filing fee.

Ten days after the bankruptcy court's deadline expired, on March 15, 2010, the district court entered an order directing Ms. Thomas to show cause why her appeal should not be dismissed for failure to pay the filing fee. Order to Show Cause dated 3/15/2010, D.C. Dkt. No. 12.

Ms. Thomas responded with an 18-page brief raising a variety of arguments. Resp. to Order to Show Cause dated 3/26/2010, D.C. Dkt. No. 13. Ms. Thomas argued that her case should not be dismissed because the bankruptcy court erred in holding that it did not have the authority to grant her IFP application. Id. at 5-8. Her other arguments included (1) the bankruptcy court did not have the authority to grant her IFP application, id. at 11; (2) the language used in her declaration conformed to the requirements of 28 U.S.C. § 1746 (requiring declarations made under penalty of perjury be evidenced in a standardized manner), id. at 14; (3) her arguments on appeal were meritorious, id.; (4) the merits of her underlying bankruptcy appeal were not frivolous, id. at 15; and (5) the United States Trustee engaged in sanctionable conduct under United Student Aid Funds, Inc. v. Espinosa, 130 S.Ct. 1367 (2010) (concerning the finality of an order erroneously discharging a student loan). Id. at 16.

After waiting five months, the district court dismissed the appeal on August 18, 2010. Order Dismissing Appeal dated 8/18/2010, D.C. Dkt. No. 22. The district court, agreeing with the bankruptcy court's reasoning, found Ms. Thomas's response unpersuasive. Id. at 2. The court observed how "Debtor in this case has wholly failed to comply" with the statutory requirement that she document her inability to pay the appellate filing fee. Id. at 3. The "balance of Debtor's response" to the show cause order did not "demonstrate good cause for her failure to pay the required filing fee to pursue this appeal." Id.

Ms. Thomas timely filed a notice of appeal to this Court on October 5, 2010. Notice of Appeal dated 10/5/2010, D.C. Dkt. No. 23.

SUMMARY OF THE ARGUMENT

An appellant must pay a filing fee with their notice of appeal. Ms. Thomas did not. Nor did she meet her burden of establishing her eligibility to proceed in forma pauperis. To the contrary, her bankruptcy schedules, which she never repudiated, represented to the bankruptcy court and to her creditors — under penalty of perjury — that she had monthly income and over $700,000 in assets. The bankruptcy court denied Ms. Thomas's application to proceed in forma pauperis and directed her to pay the filing fee.

After Ms. Thomas refused to pay the filing fee, the district court issued a show cause order notifying Ms. Thomas that it was intending to dismiss her case for failure to pay it. That order also instructed her to explain why she had failed to comply with the bankruptcy court's order. Ms. Thomas responded with a variety of inapposite arguments, including a collateral attack on the bankruptcy court's order, but evaded the issue of her non-compliance. After waiting for five months, and after carefully considering Ms. Thomas's response, the district court dismissed her appeal.

The district court's dismissal of Ms. Thomas's case was appropriate for two reasons. First, Ms. Thomas was not eligible for a fee waiver — as a matter of fact or as a matter of law — under 28 U.S.C. §§ 1915 or 1930(f). That conclusion is unremarkable, as Ms. Thomas's application to proceed in forma pauperis "incorporates by reference" her bankruptcy schedules, in which she claims to have regular business income, over $700,000 in assets, and under $30,000 in liabilities.

Second, the district court dismissed her appeal only after carefully considering the circumstances of Ms. Thomas's case. The district court (1) gave Ms. Thomas extra time to pay her appellate filing fees, (2) issued a show cause order providing her with notice it was considering dismissal and an opportunity to respond, and (3) responded to Ms. Thomas's arguments and explained that she did not provide good cause for refusing to pay her filing fees.

On appeal, Ms. Thomas makes nine arguments. But only three pertain to the district court's alleged error, and none present anything more than conclusory statements of error, made without any supporting references to the record or relevant legal authority. The remaining six arguments have nothing to do with the order on appeal. Therefore, this Court should not consider them, as Ms. Thomas shows no reason why this Court should deviate from the general rule of refusing to consider issues not decided in the order below.

ARGUMENT

I. The district court did not abuse its discretion when it dismissed Ms. Thomas's appeal for failure to pay the filing fee.

A. Ms. Thomas is not eligible to proceed in forma pauperis on appeal.

There is no 8000-series-appellate Bankruptcy Rule governing requests to proceed in forma pauperis in a bankruptcy appeal, and neither the bankruptcy court nor the district court has a local rule that incorporates Fed. R. App. P. 24. Nor do the two statutes that allow fee waivers in other circumstances allow Ms. Thomas to proceed IFP on appeal.

The first statute is 28 U.S.C. § 1930(f). It allows courts to waive only those fees that are promulgated under the Bankruptcy Court Miscellaneous Fee Schedule. 28 U.S.C. § 1930(f); see Administrative Office of the U.S. Courts, Bankruptcy Court Miscellaneous Fee Schedule (2010), available at http://www.uscourts.gov/FormsAndFees/Fees/BankruptcyCourtMiscellaneousFeeSchedule.aspx (establishing the filing fee for bankruptcy appeals). The second statute is 28 U.S.C. § 1915, which allows a "court of the United States" to waive filing fees when the litigant is unable to pay them. 28 U.S.C. § 1915. Ms. Thomas's IFP application was properly denied under both statutes.

1. The district court was entitled to deny Ms. Thomas's in forma pauperis application under 28 U.S.C. § 1930(f).

A court may wave bankruptcy fees in only three circumstances under section 1930(f). None of these circumstances apply to Ms. Thomas's appeal from the dismissal of her chapter 13 case.

First, when an individual chapter 7 debtor has "income less than 150 percent of the income official poverty line" and "is unable to pay the fee in installments," the court may waive the fee for the commencement of the case. 28 U.S.C. § 1930(f)(1). Second, the court may waive all other fees for "such debtors." 28 U.S.C. § 1930(f)(2). Third, "in accordance with Judicial Conference policy," the court may waive fees "for other debtors and creditors." 28 U.S.C. § 1930(f)(3). The Bankruptcy Court Miscellaneous Fee Schedule, however, does not contain a provision allowing a court to waive the fees for filing an appeal. Bankruptcy Court Miscellaneous Fee Schedule § 14.

There is no circuit court authority on whether a court may waive appellate filing fees under section 1930(f)(3). And of the few lower court decisions applying the fee waiver provisions of section 1930(f), none provide useful guidance for interpreting this statute. See, e.g., In re Belcher, 410 B.R. 206, 218 (Bankr. W.D. Va. 2009) (restating the statutory language).

The legislative history on section 1930(f) is limited as well. It describes the fee waiver provisions as allowing the court "to waive the chapter 7 filing fee for an individual and certain other fees under subsections (b) and (c) of section 1930 if such individual's income is less than 150 percent of the official poverty level . . . and the individual is unable to pay in installments." H.R. Rep. 109-31 (2005) at 89, reprinted in 2005 U.S.C.C.A.N. 88, 155.

Here, the district court correctly held that Ms. Thomas is not eligible to proceed IFP on appeal from the dismissal of her chapter 13 case under section 1930(f). First, Ms. Thomas's IFP application could not be granted under subsection (f)(2) because she is a chapter 13 debtor. Chapter 13 Voluntary Petition dated 7/20/2009, B.C. Dkt. No. 1. That provision applies only to chapter 7 debtors who meet the income eligibility criteria set forth in subsection (f)(1). § 1930(f)(2).

Second, her IFP application could not be granted under subsection (f)(3) because a court may only waive fees under subsection (f)(3) in accord with Judicial Conference policy. § 1930(f)(3). The Bankruptcy Court Miscellaneous Fee Schedule does not provide for a waiver of the appellate filing fee. Compare Bankruptcy Court Miscellaneous Fee Schedule § 4 (authorizing a bankruptcy judge to waive, for "good cause," the fee for amending the debtor's schedules, lists of creditors, or mailing lists) with id. § 14 (providing no authorization for waiving the filing fee for a bankruptcy appeal).

Furthermore, even if this Court holds that the appellate filing fee could be waived under subsection (f)(3), Ms. Thomas did not show that she needs such relief. That is because of the regular monthly income and the assets she claimed under penalty of perjury in her bankruptcy schedules. See infra Part I.A.2. Accordingly, Ms. Thomas is not eligible for relief under section 1930(f).[4]

[4] The bankruptcy court, whose reasoning the district court relied upon, committed harmless error in holding the phrase "such debtors" in subsection (f)(2) to mean that subsection (f)(2) only applies when a debtor commences a chapter 7 case under a subsection (f)(1) fee waiver. Order Denying Mot. dated 2/26/2010, B.C. Dkt. No. 76.at 4.

Rather, the phrase "such debtors" in subsection (f)(2) refers to individual chapter 7 debtors who meet the income eligibility criteria set forth in subsection (f)(1). This position is consistent with the legislative history, which describes the statute as waiving "the chapter 7 filing fee for an individual and certain other fees under subsections (b) and (c) if . . . such individual's income" is less than the statutory criteria. H.R. Rep. 109-31 at 89. The operative phrase "such individual's income" links the availability for a fee waiver to the chapter 7 debtor's income, not their initial filing status.

Had Congress intended to limit those "other fees" only to chapter 7 debtors who filed under subsection (f)(1), there would be no reason for subsection (f)(2) to be distinct because there would be only one class of eligible individuals. Instead, the division of subsections (f)(1) and (f)(2) make sense because debtors do not always finish a bankruptcy case in the same chapter the case was filed under. The lower courts' interpretation would prevent debtors whose cases are converted to chapter 7 from other chapters of the Bankruptcy Code from obtaining relief, no matter how desperate their financial situation is. That was not Congress's intent.

Nevertheless, this error is harmless because Ms. Thomas is a chapter 13 debtor and is therefore ineligible for relief under any provision of section 1930(f).

2. Alternatively, the district court correctly held that Ms. Thomas did not establish her eligibility to proceed in forma pauperis under 28 U.S.C. § 1915.

The district court was also correct when it held that Ms. Thomas's IFP application could not be granted under 28 U.S.C. § 1915. Section 1915(a)(1) provides that "any court of the United States may authorize the commencement . . . of any suit, action or proceeding . . . or appeal therein, without prepayment of fees" for any person who submits an affidavit including a statement of all assets demonstrating the inability to pay the filing fees, and a statement explaining the nature of the appeal and the belief that the person is entitled to redress. Lister v. Dep't of Treasury, 408 F.3d 1309, 1312 (10th Cir. 2005) (explaining section 1915).

"[I]n order to succeed on a motion to proceed IFP, the movant must show a financial inability to pay the required filing fees, as well as the existence of a reasoned, nonfrivolous argument on the law and facts in support of the issues raised in the action." Id. A "bald assertion" that the applicant is not employed or does not have enough money is insufficient. Id. at 1313. A court does not abuse its discretion by denying an IFP application when an individual has "failed to provide the court with sufficient information from which the court can ascertain her financial status." Id.

Although there is no binding Tenth Circuit precedent, this Court has stated its belief that a bankruptcy court is not a "court of the United States" that can grant relief under section 1915. Satterfield v. Malloy (In re Satterfield), No. 08-5185, 337 F. App’x 739, 2009 WL 1788987 (10th Cir. Jun 24, 2009) (unpublished). Therefore, the bankruptcy court below correctly held that it could not grant Ms. Thomas’s IFP application under section 1915, even if she had shown herself to be indigent.

In this appeal, the government takes no position with respect to whether a bankruptcy court is “a court of the United States” that has authority to waive filing fees under section 1915. Answering that question is not necessary for this Court to affirm the order below, because the district court considered the merits of Ms. Thomas’s IFP application and found that she had failed to provide a factual basis for granting that relief. The record fully supports that finding.

Ms. Thomas’s IFP application primarily incorporated her bankruptcy schedules. Appl. to Proceed in District Court Without Prepaying Fees or Costs re: Appeal dated 11/21/2009, B.C. Dkt. No. 63 at 2. Even if that is considered an acceptable method of providing “sufficient information,” see Lister, 408 F.3d at 1313, it shows that Ms. Thomas has regular monthly income, plus substantial resources inconsistent with her declaration of penury — over $700,000 in assets, by her own admission.

In her bankruptcy schedules, Ms. Thomas listed “unknown” amounts of real property and $713,900 worth of personal property, including $5,000 in cash on hand and ownership rights in various corporations, joint ventures, and investment funds. Summary of Schedules and Statement of Financial Affairs dated 8/3/2009, B.C. Dkt. No. 10 at 7-9. The application does not explain why she cannnot pay her own costs with those assets or how her financial situation has changed since then. Appl. to Proceed in District Court Without Prepaying Fees or Costs re: Appeal dated 11/21/2009, B.C. Dkt. No. 63.

Ms. Thomas also fails to provide any authority in support of her application or the required statement explaining the nature of the appeal. Id. That is significant, because based on the face of the application, Ms. Thomas cannot in good faith assert that her appeal is meritorious. It is impossible to reconcile her request to continue her chapter 13 bankruptcy case — in which she must repay her creditors out of her current income — at the same time she swears that she cannot even afford to pay the $225 filing fee for an appeal.

In sum, Ms. Thomas's IFP application is not only without any factual basis under either section 1915 or section 1930(f), it is internally inconsistent. She cannot show that she qualifies to proceed IFP on appeal.[5] Lister, 408 F.3d at 1313.

[5] The district court's order may also be affirmed under 28 U.S.C. § 1915(e)(2)(B), which requires the court to dismiss a case "at any time if the court determines that . . . the allegation of poverty is untrue" or that "the action . . . is frivolous or malicious [or] fails to state a claim on which relief may be granted." Lister, 408 F.3d at 1312. This Court may affirm a lower court's decision on any grounds for which there is a sufficient record to make a legal conclusion. Jenkins v. Hodes (In re Hodes), 402 F.3d 1005, 1011 (10th Cir. 2005).

B. The district court carefully considered the circumstances of Ms. Thomas's case before dismissing her appeal.

Under Fed. R. Bankr. P. 8001(a), a district court has the discretion to dismiss an appeal for failure to comply with procedural rules or a court order. Nielsen v. Price, 17 F.3d 1276, 1277 (10th Cir. 1994); Wallin v. Martel (In re Martel), No. 08-1488, 328 F. App'x 584, 2009 WL 1313915 (10th Cir. May 13, 2009) (unpublished) ("Bankruptcy Rule 8001(a) expressly confers authority on the [district court] to take action it deems appropriate, including dismissal, when litigants fail to comply with its filing requirements.").

When making this determination, the court must consider whether dismissal is appropriate within the circumstances of the case. Nielsen, 17 F.3d at 1277 (citing Balaber-Strauss v. Reichard (In re Tampa Chain Co.), 835 F.2d 54, 56 (2d Cir. 1987). Although it should be imposed "carefully," this Court has explained that "dismissal is an appropriate disposition against a party who disregards court orders and fails to proceed as required by court rules." Lundahl v. Eves (In re Lundahl), No. 04-4040, 109 F. App'x 384, 2004 WL 2110724 (10th Cir. Sept. 23, 2004) (unpublished).

This rule equally applies to pro se litigants. Although pro se filings must be construed liberally, this Court "has repeatedly insisted that pro se parties follow the same rules of procedure that govern other litigants." Nielsen, 17 F.3d at 1277; see Garret v. Selby Connor Maddux & Janer, 425 F.3d 836, 840 (10th Cir. 2005) (observing that such allowances extend to "the pro se plaintiff's failure to cite proper legal authority . . . or his unfamiliarity with pleading requirements"). And this Court has previously affirmed dismissals for failure to pay filing fees under Fed. R. Bankr. P. 8001(a) when, after receiving notice and an opportunity to respond, a pro se appellant failed to pay filing fees. See Martel, 328 F. App'x 584 (unpublished) (finding no abuse of discretion in dismissing bankruptcy appeal after the appellant was given four months, two written warnings, and clear instructions to pay his filing fees).

Here, the district court did not abuse its discretion in dismissing Ms. Thomas's appeal. The court carefully and fully considered the circumstances of Ms. Thomas's case before ordering its dismissal. It did so by (1) giving Ms. Thomas extra time to pay her filing fees before dismissing her appeal; (2) issuing a show cause order that (a) put her on notice it was considering dismissing her appeal for her failure to pay filing fees and (b) provided an opportunity for her to respond; and (3) addressed Ms. Thomas's arguments and explained that she demonstrated a lack of "good cause." Finally, this process led to the correct result. The record, which is replete with examples of Ms. Thomas's misconduct, fully supports the district court's decision to dismiss her appeal.

1. The district court gave Ms. Thomas extra time to pay the appellate filing fee before dismissing her appeal.

First, the district court was patient with Ms. Thomas and acted with repose throughout the appeal. The bankruptcy court originally granted Ms. Thomas a seven-day extension to pay the filing fee, which expired on March 5, 2010. Order Denying Mot. dated 2/26/2010, B.C. Dkt. No. 76 at 5. When that deadline passed, the district court waited ten days, until March 15, 2010, to issue its show cause order. Order to Show Cause dated 3/15/2010, D.C. Dkt. No. 12. The district court had possession of the record and, after receiving Ms. Thomas's show cause response on March 26, 2010, the court took the issue under consideration for nearly five months before dismissing the appeal on August 18, 2010. Order Dismissing Appeal dated 8/18/2010, D.C. Dkt. No. 22. That gave her extra time to pay the filing fee or submit better proof that she could not.

This demonstrates that the district court carefully considered its decision and did not act in haste. This Court has affirmed dismissals where litigants have been given shorter periods of time to comply with a court order to pay filing fees. See Martel, 328 F. App'x 584 (unpublished) (waiting four months); see also Fitzsimmons v. Nolden (In re Fitzsimmons), 920 F.2d 1468, 1474 (9th Cir. 1990) (observing that "placing the case at the bottom of the calendar" evidences consideration of the sanction prior to dismissing an appeal).

2. The district court's show cause order notified Ms. Thomas it was considering dismissal and provided her with an opportunity to respond.

Second, the district court gave Ms. Thomas ample notice and opportunity to respond. The district court's show cause order stated that the bankruptcy court had denied her IFP application, the extended deadline for paying the filing fee had expired, and the fee had not been paid. Order to Show Cause dated 3/15/2010, D.C. Dkt. No. 12. The district court explained that it was authorized to dismiss her appeal under Fed. R. Bankr. P. 8001(a), and directed Ms. Thomas "to show cause why the appeal should not be dismissed for her failure to timely pay the filing fee."[6] Id. The court gave Ms. Thomas 11 days to respond, and notified her that "failure to comply with this order will result in dismissal of the appeal." Id.

Ms. Thomas responded by filing an 18-page brief. Resp. to Order to Show Cause dated 3/26/2010, D.C. Dkt. No. 13. Her brief addressed the merits of the bankruptcy court's order denying her IFP application and argued the merits of her bankruptcy appeal as cause against dismissal. Id. Even though she is a pro se litigant, Ms. Thomas understood (1) the district court was intending to dismiss her case and (2) the reason why the district court was intending to dismiss her case.

[6] The show cause order literally refers to "11 U.S.C. § 8001(a)." This mistake did not prejudice Ms. Thomas's ability to respond, as she referred to Fed. R. Bankr. P. 8001(a) throughout her response to the show cause order. Resp. to Order to Show Cause dated 3/26/2010, D.C. Dkt. No. 13 at 10.

Thus, she had free and fair opportunity to raise any arguments against dismissal, offer mitigating circumstances, or remedy her problem by paying the filing fee.

This demonstrates that the district court provided the litigant with due process. When a court provides a litigant with due process, there is no abuse of discretion. See Martel, 328 F. App'x 584 (unpublished) (finding no abuse of discretion in dismissing bankruptcy appeal when the appellant had notice and opportunity to respond, but still failed to pay filing fees).

3. The district court addressed Ms. Thomas's arguments and explained that she did not demonstrate "good cause."

Third, the district court accounted for Ms. Thomas's arguments and the circumstances of the case in general. For example, in its opinion, the court carefully distinguished the Seventh Circuit decision that Ms. Thomas substantially relied upon and suggested was binding authority. Order Dismissing Appeal dated 8/18/2010, D.C. Dkt. No. 22 at 2. The district court discussed what the holding of the case was, why the case did not represent the position that Ms. Thomas offered it as authority for, and even explained to Ms. Thomas that it was not required to follow case law from the Seventh Circuit. Id. The district court then reviewed the arguments that the bankruptcy court made and, articulating those same reasons, agreed that Ms. Thomas was not eligible for relief under 28 U.S.C. §§ 1915 or 1930(f).[7] Id. at 2-3.

Furthermore, the district court (1) pointed out that the bankruptcy court had also ruled on the merits, an essential fact that Ms. Thomas "ignores," id. at 3; (2) found that Ms. Thomas had failed to sufficiently document her inability to pay the appellate filing fee, id.; and (3) found that Ms. Thomas did not "demonstrate good cause" for failing to pay the filing fee. Id. The court also noted that Ms. Thomas "fails to present an argument" as to why she is refusing to comply with the bankruptcy court's order, and instead chose to argue the merits of her bankruptcy appeal. Id.

These findings are substantially supported by the record. As discussed above, rather than demonstrate her financial inability to pay the filing fees, Ms. Thomas's IFP application alleges regular business income and over $700,000 in assets. See supra Part I.A.2. And the record evidences Ms. Thomas's propensity for disregarding any obligation to produce information in support of her claims. See, e.g., Tr. at 24-25 (describing Ms. Thomas's failure to appear at or produce documents for her continued section 341 meeting); Response to Mot. for [7] The lower courts harmlessly erred in holding that section 1930(f)(2) only applies when a debtor commences a chapter 7 case under a section 1930(f)(1) fee waiver, because it did not effect Ms. Thomas's eligibility for relief under section 1930(f). See supra at Part I.A.1.

Miscellaneous Relief dated 11/17/2009, B.C. Dkt. No. 47 at 1-2 (describing Ms. Thomas's failure to respond to the United States Trustee's subpoena).

This demonstrates that the district court paid close attention to the record and considered all of the circumstances of the case when it rendered judgment. Therefore, the court's decision was not arbitrary, capricious, whimsical, or manifestly unreasonable. See Moothart v. Bell, 21 F.3d 1499, 1505 (10th Cir. 1994) (finding no abuse of discretion when a trial court held that a single statement could not be construed as a waiver after the court took the opportunity to review that statement in the wider context of the record).

II. This Court may dismiss Ms. Thomas's appeal because it is frivolous.

Allegations of error that are merely listed without supporting argument are deemed waived. Christian Heritage Acad. v. Okla. Secondary Sch. Activities Ass'n, 483 F.3d 1025, 1031 (10th Cir. 2007). Although this Court may make some allowances for a pro se litigant's unfamiliarity with technical requirements, under Fed. R. App. P. 28 the brief must contain more than generalized assertions of error. Garrett v. Selby Connor Maddux & Janer, 425 F.3d 836, 841 (10th Cir. 2005).

When a pro se litigant fails to comply with Rule 28, this Court "cannot fill the void by crafting arguments and performing the necessary legal research." Id. (quotation omitted). A list of issues and a statement of support consisting of conclusory allegations with no citations to the record or supporting legal authority is not considered adequate briefing. Id.

Of the nine arguments that Ms. Thomas raises, only three pertain to the dismissal order now on appeal: issues one, three, and four. And those arguments lack factual and legal support.

Under issues one and three, Ms. Thomas argues that the district court violated her constitutional due process and equal protection rights by denying her IFP application and dismissing her case. But Ms. Thomas never explains how the district court violated her constitutional rights and cites wholly irrelevant case law. Appellant's Br. at 16-18 (citing Boddie v. Connecticut, 401 U.S. 371 (1971) (holding that state courts could not deny indigent litigants access to the courts to bring an action for divorce) and Lister v. Dep't of Treasury, 408 F.3d 1309, 1312 (10th Cir. 2005) (holding that the denial of IFP applications are final, appealable orders)).

Under issue four, Ms. Thomas alleges that the district court's findings of fact were unsupported by the record. Id. at 18. Yet she fails to show what findings of fact she contests and what in the record is contradictory. Id. at 19.

Notably, Ms. Thomas's only factual contention is one that she raises in her constitutional claim, instead of in her evidentiary claim. Under issue three, she asserts that her IFP application "comports with 28 U.S.C. § 1746." Id. at 18.

Section 1746 requires that declarations made under penalty of perjury be evidenced in a standardized manner. 28 U.S.C. § 1746. That Ms. Thomas validly swore to the accuracy of her IFP application under penalty of perjury does not mean that the statements she made within are factually correct. Nor does it mean that the lower courts had to accept that allegation of indigency when her bankruptcy schedules, which she also filed under penalty of perjury, shows she has both income and assets with which to pay the filing fee. See supra Part I.A.2.

This Court has dismissed substantially similar appeals as frivolous. See Harmon Family Trust v. Thomas (In re Thomas), No. 09-6015, 348 F. App'x 413, 2009 WL 3241288 (10th Cir. Oct. 9, 2009) (unpublished) (dismissing Ms. Thomas's mother, Shirley Thomas, for raising similar arguments). Here too Ms. Thomas's allegations of error are unsupported and are therefore waived. See id.; see also Garret, 425 F.3d at 841. Thus, she cannot demonstrate that the district court abused its discretion in dismissing her bankruptcy appeal.

III. Additionally, this Court should ignore Ms. Thomas's arguments on the merits of her bankruptcy appeal and her other requests for relief.

Although Ms. Thomas's other six arguments are similarly flawed, this Court need not consider whether it should reach those arguments because they have been improperly raised.

The "general rule" is that "a federal appellate court does not consider an issue not passed upon below." Walker v. Mather (In re Walker), 959 F.2d 894, 896 (10th Cir. 1992). This means that on an appeal from a district court's dismissal for failure to prosecute, the merits of the bankruptcy appeal are not on review. Nielsen, 17 F.3d at 1277. An appellant "cannot bootstrap its argument on the merits into a defense against having to comply with the procedural rules." M.A. Baheth & Co. v. Schott (In re M.A. Bahehth Constr. Co.), 118 F.3d 1082, 1084 (5th Cir. 1997).

The order on appeal to this Court dismissed Ms. Thomas's case only because of her failure to pay the filing fee for her bankruptcy appeal. But Ms. Thomas asserts six arguments that do not arise from the order decided below. Appellant's Br. at 16-25 (issues 2, 5-9). Instead, she litigates the merits of her bankruptcy appeal and seeks to obtain relief with respect to other issues in her chapter 13 bankruptcy case. Id. at 29 (requesting relief with respect to Ms. Thomas's motion to quash the United States Trustee's subpoena).

This Court has previously refused to consider issues not decided by the order on appeal. See In re Thomas, 348 F. App'x 413 (unpublished) (refusing to consider other arguments for relief); see also Tollefsen v. U.S. Bank Nat'l Ass'n (In re Tollefsen), No. 08-5059, 315 Fed. App'x 683, 2009 WL 500659 (10th Cir. Mar. 2, 2009) (unpublished) (refusing to address merits arguments on review of a procedural dismissal). Ms. Thomas provides no cause for this Court to deviate from that rule. Therefore, those arguments need not be considered.

CONCLUSION

For these reasons, the United States Trustee respectfully asks this Court to affirm the order entered below.

ORDER

On December 21, 2009, Debtor Chaya Chalon Thomas ("Debtor") filed a Notice of Appeal of several Orders entered by the United States Bankruptcy Court for the Western District of Oklahoma in her Chapter 13 Bankruptcy proceeding. Specifically, Debtor seeks this Court's reversal of the Bankruptcy Court's October 29, 2009 Order Dismissing Case with Prejudice and its December 9, 2009 Order Denying the Debtor's Motion to Alter or Amend and her Motion for Findings of Fact and Conclusions of Law.

Debtor, who appears pro se, filed in the Bankruptcy Court an Application to Proceed In Forma Pauperis on Appeal; on February 26, 2010, the Bankruptcy Court denied the Application and directed Debtor to pay the $255 filing fee within seven days to avoid striking the Notice of Appeal. The Bankruptcy Court's Order, filed in the Bankruptcy Court as Document No. 76, was transmitted to this Court in a supplemental transmittal of Notice of Appeal [Doc. No. 10]. Debtor did not pay the filing fee. On March 15, 2010, the undersigned entered an Order [Doc. No. 12] directing Debtor to show cause why her appeal should not be stricken by this Court in accordance with 11 U. S. C.

Debtor responded to the show cause order by arguing the Bankruptcy Court's Order denying her in forma pauperis application was erroneous. Construing the Order as concluding only that the Bankruptcy Court lacked authority to grant the application, Debtor argues that such authority is conferred on the Bankruptcy Court and, in effect, asks this Court to overrule the Bankruptcy Court's Order. In support of her contention, she relies on and discusses at length an unpublished Seventh Circuit Court of Appeals decision, In re Richmond, 247 F. App'x 831 (7th Cir. 2007), in which the Seventh Circuit held that, under a previous version of the Bankruptcy Code, a bankruptcy court had authority to consider a creditor's application to bring an adversary proceeding in forma pauperis in a pending Chapter 7 bankruptcy proceeding. The Seventh Circuit discussed at length the rights of creditors, and expressly limited its ruling to creditor applications in connection with adversary proceedings. 247 F. App'x at 833-34. The Seventh Circuit did not, as Debtor suggests, extend that ruling to a debtor's application to proceed in forma pauperis on appeal; in fact, it discussed the distinction between creditor and debtor rights in such cases. The facts of Richmond and the holding of the Seventh Circuit, are distinguishable from this case; in any event, this Court is not required to follow the ruling of the Seventh Circuit.

As the Bankruptcy Court discussed in some detail in its Order denying Debtor's in forma pauperis application, the provisions of 28 U. S. C. § 1930(f) regarding a bankruptcy court's authorization to waive fees do not apply to this case. See Bankruptcy Court Order, pages 4-5. None of the provisions of § 1930(f) apply to Debtor; moreover, the general § 1930(f)(3) provision authorizing waiver of fees for "other debtors" is limited to circumstances which are "in accordance with Judicial Conference Policy." 28 U. S. C. § 1930(f)(3). As the Bankruptcy Court noted, the Judicial Conference has prescribed a Bankruptcy Court Miscellaneous Fee Schedule, and § 1930(f)(3) authorizes waiver only of the fees listed in the Fee Schedule. The Fee Schedule prescribes a filing fee for an appeal of a bankruptcy order; however, the Fee Schedule contains no provision authorizing the waiver of the filing fee.

Although Debtor disagrees with the Bankruptcy Court's foregoing determinations regarding its authority to grant her in forma pauperis application, she ignores the fact that the Bankruptcy Court also considered the merits of her application. In the Order, the Bankruptcy Court noted that, assuming it had the authority to grant the application, the provisions of 28 U. S. C. 1915(a)(1) govern a court's consideration of the merits of an in forma pauperis application. As the Bankruptcy Court correctly concluded, Debtor in this case has wholly failed to comply with the statutory requirement that she submit "an affidavit that includes a statement of all assets," documenting her inability to pay the appellate filing fee. 28 U. S. C. § 1915(a)(1). In this case, Debtor has never presented the required affidavit or other information required by § 1915(a)(1) to the Bankruptcy Court or to this Court. Thus, her application was properly denied by the Bankruptcy Court on that basis.

The balance of Debtor's response to this Court's March 15, 2010 Order [Doc. No. 12] does not demonstrate good cause for her failure to pay the required filing fee to pursue this appeal. She devotes most of her argument to the purported merits of her appeal, and fails to present an argument in response to this Court's Order that she show cause for her failure to pay the required filing fee by the extended deadline provided by the Bankruptcy Court. Notwithstanding her subsequent efforts to amend her notice of appeal, Debtor has ignored the requirements of the Court's show cause order. Her arguments do not warrant the waiver of the requirement that she pay the filing fee to proceed with her appeal.

In accordance with 11 U. S. C. § 8001(a), the District Court is authorized to dismiss the appeal for Debtor's failure to "take any step other than timely filing a notice of appeal." In this case, Debtor was given ample opportunity to comply with the Court's orders regarding payment of the filing fee or submission of the material required by 28 U. S. C. § 1915(a). She has failed to do so, and she has not shown good cause for that failure. Accordingly, the appeal is hereby DISMISSED.[1]

IT IS SO ORDERED this 18th day of August, 2010.

Historical and Revision Notes

Based on title 28, U.S.C., 1940 ed., §§549, 553 and 555 (R.S. §828; June 28, 1902, ch. 1301, §1, 32 Stat. 476; Feb. 11, 1925, ch. 204, §§2, 6, 8, 43 Stat. 857, 858; Jan. 22, 1927, ch. 50, §2, 44 Stat. 1023; Jan. 31, 1928, ch. 14, §1, 45 Stat. 54; Mar. 3, 1942, ch. 124, §2, 56 Stat. 122; Sept. 27, 1944, ch. 414, §§1, 4, 5, 58 Stat. 743, 744).

Section consolidates sections 549, 553, and 555 of title 28, U.S.C., 1940 ed., as amended with necessary changes of phraseology.

The phrase ‘‘filing fee’’ was substituted for the inconsistent and misleading words of sections 549 and 553 of title 28, U.S.C., 1940 ed., ‘‘as full payment for all services to be rendered by the clerk’’ etc. thus removing the necessity for including exceptions and referring to other sections containing provisions for additional fees.

The provision in section 549 of title 28, U.S.C., 1940 ed., for payment of fees by the parties instituting criminal proceedings by indictment or information, was omitted. Such proceedings are instituted only by the United States from which costs cannot be exacted.

The provision in section 549 of title 28, U.S.C., 1940 ed., for taxation of fees as costs, was omitted as covered by section 1920 of this title.

Words ‘‘or appeal from a deportation order of a United States Commissioner’’ in section 553 of title 28, U.S.C., 1940 ed., were omitted as obsolete since repeal of the Chinese Exclusion Act by act Dec. 17, 1943, ch. 344, §1, 57 Stat. 600. Appeal was formerly conferred by section 282 of title 8, U.S.C., 1940 ed., Aliens and Nationality.

Subsection (d) excepting the District of Columbia, was added to preserve the existing schedule of fees prescribed by section 11–1509 of the District of Columbia Code, 1940 ed.

L. 102–140, set out as a note under section 1913 of this title.

§1915. Proceedings in forma pauperis

(a)(1) Subject to subsection (b), any court of the United States may authorize the commencement, prosecution or defense of any suit, action or proceeding, civil or criminal, or appeal therein, without prepayment of fees or security therefor, by a person who submits an affidavit that includes a statement of all assets such prisoner possesses that the person is unable to pay such fees or give security therefor. Such affidavit shall state the nature of the action, defense or appeal and affiant's belief that the person is entitled to redress.

(2) A prisoner seeking to bring a civil action or appeal a judgment in a civil action or proceeding without prepayment of fees or security therefor, in addition to filing the affidavit filed under paragraph (1), shall submit a certified copy of the trust fund account statement (or institutional equivalent) for the prisoner for the 6-month period immediately preceding the filing of the complaint or notice of appeal, obtained from the appropriate official of each prison at which the prisoner is or was confined.

(3) An appeal may not be taken in forma pauperis if the trial court certifies in writing that it is not taken in good faith.

(b)(1) Notwithstanding subsection (a), if a prisoner brings a civil action or files an appeal in forma pauperis, the prisoner shall be required to pay the full amount of a filing fee. The court shall assess and, when funds exist, collect, as a partial payment of any court fees required by law, an initial partial filing fee of 20 percent of the greater of—

(A) the average monthly deposits to the prisoner's account; or

(B) the average monthly balance in the prisoner's account for the 6-month period immediately preceding the filing of the complaint or notice of appeal.

(2) After payment of the initial partial filing fee, the prisoner shall be required to make monthly payments of 20 percent of the preceding month's income credited to the prisoner's account. The agency having custody of the prisoner shall forward payments from the prisoner's account to the clerk of the court each time the amount in the account exceeds $10 until the filing fees are paid.

(3) In no event shall the filing fee collected exceed the amount of fees permitted by statute for the commencement of a civil action or an appeal of a civil action or criminal judgment.

(4) In no event shall a prisoner be prohibited from bringing a civil action or appealing a civil or criminal judgment for the reason that the prisoner has no assets and no means by which to pay the initial partial filing fee.

(c) Upon the filing of an affidavit in accordance with subsections (a) and (b) and the prepayment of any partial filing fee as may be required under subsection (b), the court may direct payment by the United States of the expenses of (1) printing the record on appeal in any civil or criminal case, if such printing is required by the appellate court; (2) preparing a transcript of proceedings before a United States magistrate judge in any civil or criminal case, if such transcript is required by the district court, in the case of proceedings conducted under section 636(b) of this title or under section 3401(b) of title 18, United States Code; and (3) printing the record on appeal if such printing is required by the appellate court, in the case of proceedings conducted pursuant to section 636(c) of this title. Such expenses shall be paid when authorized by the Director of the Administrative Office of the United States Courts.

(d) The officers of the court shall issue and serve all process, and perform all duties in such cases. Witnesses shall attend as in other cases, and the same remedies shall be available as are provided for by law in other cases.

(e)(1) The court may request an attorney to represent any person unable to afford counsel.

(2) Notwithstanding any filing fee, or any portion thereof, that may have been paid, the court shall dismiss the case at any time if the court determines that—

- (A) the allegation of poverty is untrue; or
- (B) the action or appeal—
  - (i) is frivolous or malicious;
  - (ii) fails to state a claim on which relief may be granted; or
  - (iii) seeks monetary relief against a defendant who is immune from such relief.

(f)(1) Judgment may be rendered for costs at the conclusion of the suit or action as in other proceedings, but the United States shall not be liable for any of the costs thus incurred. If the United States has paid the cost of a stenographic transcript or printed record for the prevailing party, the same shall be taxed in favor of the United States.

(2)(A) If the judgment against a prisoner includes the payment of costs under this subsection, the prisoner shall be required to pay the full amount of the costs ordered.

(B) The prisoner shall be required to make payments for costs under this subsection in the same manner as is provided for filing fees under subsection (a)(2).

(C) In no event shall the costs collected exceed the amount of the costs ordered by the court.

(g) In no event shall a prisoner bring a civil action or appeal a judgment in a civil action or proceeding under this section if the prisoner has, on 3 or more prior occasions, while incarcerated or detained in any facility, brought an action or appeal in a court of the United States that was dismissed on the grounds that it is frivolous, malicious, or fails to state a claim upon which relief may be granted, unless the prisoner is under imminent danger of serious physical injury.

(h) As used in this section, the term "prisoner" means any person incarcerated or detained in any facility who is accused of, convicted of, sentenced for, or adjudicated delinquent for, violations of criminal law or the terms and conditions of parole, probation, pretrial release, or diversionary program.

1948 ACT

Based on title 28, U.S.C., 1940 ed., §§ 9a(c)(e), 832, 833, 834, 835, and 836 (July 20, 1892, ch. 209, §§ 1–5, 27 Stat. 252; June 25, 1910, ch. 435, 36 Stat. 866; Mar. 3, 1911, ch. 231, § 5a, as added Jan. 20, 1944, ch. 3, § 1, 58 Stat. 5; June 27, 1922, ch. 246, 42 Stat. 666; Jan. 31, 1928, ch. 14, § 1, 45 Stat. 54).

Section consolidates a part of section 9a(c)(e) with sections 832–836 of title 28, U.S.C., 1940 ed.

For distribution of other provisions of section 9a of title 28, U.S.C., 1940 ed., see Distribution Table.

Section 832 of title 28, U.S.C., 1940 ed., was completely rewritten, and constitutes subsections (a) and (b).

Words "and willful false swearing in any affidavit provided for in this section or section 832 of this title, shall be punishable as perjury as in other cases," in section 833 of title 28, U.S.C., 1940 ed., were omitted as covered by the general perjury statute, title 18, U.S.C., 1940 ed., § 231 (H.R. 1600, 80th Cong., sec. 1621).

A proviso in section 836 of title 28, U.S.C., 1940 ed., that the United States should not be liable for costs was deleted as covered by section 2412 of this title.

The provision in section 9a(e) of title 28, U.S.C., 1940 ed., respecting stenographic transcripts furnished on appeals in civil cases is extended by subsection (b) of the revised section to include criminal cases. Obviously it would be inconsistent to furnish the same to a poor person in a civil case involving money only and to deny it in a criminal proceeding where life and liberty are in jeopardy.

The provision of section 832 of title 28, U.S.C., 1940 ed., for payment when authorized by the Attorney General was revised to substitute the Director of the Administrative Office of the United States Courts who now disburses such items.

Changes in phraseology were made.

1949 ACT

This amendment clarifies the meaning of subsection (b) of section 1915 of title 28, U.S.C., and supplies, in subsection (e) of section 1915, an inadvertent omission to make possible the recovery of public funds expended in printing the record for persons successfully suing in forma pauperis.

CHANGE OF NAME

"United States magistrate judge" substituted for "United States magistrate" in subsec. (c) pursuant to section 321 of Pub. L. 101–650, set out as a note under section 631 of this title.

§ 1915A. Screening

(a) SCREENING.—The court shall review, before docketing, if feasible or, in any event, as soon as practicable after docketing, a complaint in a civil action in which a prisoner seeks redress from a governmental entity or officer or employee of a governmental entity.

(1) is frivolous, malicious, or fails to state a claim upon which relief may be granted; or

(2) seeks monetary relief from a defendant who is immune from such relief.

(c) DEFINITION.—As used in this section, the term "prisoner" means any person incarcerated or detained in any facility who is accused of, convicted of, sentenced for, or adjudicated delinquent for, violations of criminal law or the terms and conditions of parole, probation, pretrial release, or diversionary program.

(Added Pub. L. 104–134, title I, §101[(a)] [title VIII, §805(a)], Apr. 26, 1996, 110 Stat. 1321, 1321–75; renumbered title I, Pub. L. 104–140, §1(a), May 2, 1996, 110 Stat. 1327.)

(June 25, 1948, ch. 646, 62 Stat. 955.)

HISTORICAL AND REVISION NOTES

Based on title 28, U.S.C., 1940 ed., §837 (June 12, 1917, ch. 27, §1, 40 Stat. 157; July 1, 1918, ch. 113, §1, 40 Stat. 683).

Changes in phraseology were made.

§ 1917. District courts; fee on filing notice of or petition for appeal

Upon the filing of any separate or joint notice of appeal or application for appeal or upon the receipt of any order allowing, or notice of the allowance of, an appeal or of a writ of certiorari $5 shall be paid to the clerk of the district court, by the appellant or petitioner.

(June 25, 1948, ch. 646, 62 Stat. 955.)

HISTORICAL AND REVISION NOTES

Based on title 28, U.S.C., 1940 ed., §552 (Feb. 11, 1925, ch. 204, §5, 43 Stat. 857; Jan. 31, 1928, ch. 14, §1, 45 Stat. 54; Sept. 27, 1944, ch. 414, §3, 58 Stat. 744).

Words "as an additional fee in said suit or action, or proceeding in bankruptcy" were omitted. The entire text of the basic 1944 act shows that Congress intended it to apply to all actions, suits and proceedings, including bankruptcy proceedings, and nowhere else in such act is any reference made to bankruptcy proceedings.

Changes were made in phraseology.

COURT FEES FOR ELECTRONIC ACCESS TO INFORMATION

Judicial Conference to prescribe reasonable fees for collection by courts under this section for access to information available through automatic data processing equipment and fees to be deposited in Judiciary Automation Fund, see section 303 of Pub. HISTORICAL AND REVISION NOTES

Based on title 28, U.S.C., 1940 ed., § 829 (R.S. § 982).

Word ''personally'' was inserted upon authority of Motion Picture Patents Co. v. Steiner et al., 1912, 201 F. 63, 119 C.C.A. 401. Reference to ''proctor'' was omitted as covered by the revised section.

See definition of ''court of the United States'' in section 451 of this title.

Changes were made in phraseology.

AMENDMENTS

1980—Pub. L. 96–349 substituted judicial authorization to require attorneys to satisfy excess costs, expenses, and attorneys' fees reasonably incurred because of multiplication of proceedings for such prior authority to impose liability for increased costs based on multiplication of proceedings.

§ 1928. Patent infringement action; disclaimer not filed

Whenever a judgment is rendered for the plaintiff in any patent infringement action involving a part of a patent and it appears that the patentee, in his specifications, claimed to be, but was not, the original and first inventor or discoverer of any material or substantial part of the thing patented, no costs shall be included in such judgment, unless the proper disclaimer has been filed in the United States Patent and Trademark Office prior to the commencement of the action.

(June 25, 1948, ch. 646, 62 Stat. 957; Pub. L. 106–113, div. B, § 1000(a)(9) [title IV, § 4732(b)(17)], Nov. 29, 1999, 113 Stat. 1536, 1501A–585.)

Based on title 28, U.S.C., 1940 ed., § 821 (R.S. § 973).

Word ''action'' was substituted for ''any suit at law or in equity'' to conform with Rule 2 of the Federal Rules of Civil Procedure.

Words ''or decree'' were omitted after ''judgment,'' because a judgment under Rule 54(a) of the Federal Rules of Civil Procedure by definition includes a decree.

Changes were made in phraseology.

AMENDMENTS

1999—Pub. L. 106–113 substituted ''United States Patent and Trademark Office'' for ''Patent Office''.

EFFECTIVE DATE OF 1999 AMENDMENT

Amendment by Pub. L. 106–113 effective 4 months after Nov. 29, 1999, see section 1000(a)(9) [title IV, § 4731] of Pub. L. 106–113, set out as a note under section 1 of Title 35, Patents.

§ 1929. Extraordinary expenses not expressly authorized

Where the ministerial officers of the United States incur extraordinary expense in executing Acts of Congress, the payment of which is not specifically provided for, the Attorney General may allow the payment thereof.

(June 25, 1948, ch. 646, 62 Stat. 957.)

HISTORICAL AND REVISION NOTES

Based on title 28, U.S.C., 1940 ed., § 577 (R.S. § 846; Feb. 18, 1875, ch. 80, § 1, Stat. 318; May 28, 1896, ch. 252, § 13, 29 Stat. 183; May 27, 1908, ch. 200, § 1, 35 Stat. 375; Mar. 3, 1911, ch. 231, § 291, 36 Stat. 1167; Feb. 26, 1919, ch. 49, § 7, 40 Stat. 1182; Oct. 13, 1941, ch. 431, § 1, 55 Stat. 736).

Provision for payment of expenses under section 577 of title 28, U.S.C., 1940 ed., from appropriations for expenses of the judiciary was omitted as unnecessary. Such expenses are carried in the Judiciary Appropriation Acts and will continue without this provision.

The first sentence of said section 577 is incorporated in section 551 of this title.

The qualifying phrase ''under the special taxation of the district court in which the said services have been or shall be rendered, to be paid from the appropriation for defraying the expenses of the Judiciary,'' was omitted, and the functions of allowing extraordinary expenses was vested in the Attorney General instead of the President. Neither the President nor the district judge should be burdened with such duty since the Attorney General only has the information upon which to act.

Changes were made in phraseology.

§ 1930. Bankruptcy fees

(a) The parties commencing a case under title 11 shall pay to the clerk of the district court or the clerk of the bankruptcy court, if one has been certified pursuant to section 156(b) of this title, the following filing fees:

(1) For a case commenced under—

(A) chapter 7 of title 11, $245, and

(B) chapter 13 of title 11, $235.

STATEMENT OF JURISDICTION

The United States Bankruptcy Court for the Southern District of Indiana had jurisdiction over this Chapter 13 bankruptcy case pursuant to 28 U.S.C. §157(b). This appeal is taken from an order the bankruptcy court entered on March 16, 2006 striking the Thompson's petition in bankruptcy based on their failure to comply with 11 U.S.C. § 109(h) and closing the Thompson's case. In addition, this appeal is taken from a related order the bankruptcy court entered on June 5, 2006, denying the United States Trustee's motion seeking reconsideration of the March 16 order and asking instead that the Thompson's bankruptcy case be dismissed. The United States Trustee filed a timely notice of appeal from the orders pursuant to 28 U.S.C. §158(c)(2) and Fed. R. Bankr. P. 8002(a) on June 8, 2006.[1] This Court has jurisdiction over this appeal pursuant to 28 U.S.C. §158(a)(1).

STATEMENT OF THE ISSUE

Under section 301 of the Bankruptcy Code, the filing of a petition commences a bankruptcy case. In a variety of contexts, federal courts routinely dismiss cases that lack merit, including cases brought in the absence of subject matter jurisdiction. Given that law, did the Bankruptcy Court err when it ruled that the Thompsons' petition had not commenced a case, and terminated the bankruptcy proceeding by striking the case on its own initiative, while denying the motion to reconsider and instead to dismiss the case?

[1] Congress has authorized the United States Attorney General to appoint 21 United States trustees, each to serve in a specific geographic region of the United States. See generally 28 U.S.C. §581 et seq. (establishing the United States Trustee Program). United States Trustees "supervise the administration of cases and trustees" in all bankruptcy cases within his or her region through the exercise of a range of oversight responsibilities. 28 U.S.C. §586(a)(3). See generally In re Revco D.S., Inc., 898 F.2d 498, 500 (6th Cir. 1990) (explaining that United States trustees oversee the bankruptcy process, protect the public interest, and ensure that bankruptcy cases are conducted according to law). United States Trustees may raise, appear, and be heard on any issue in any case or proceeding under Title 11. 11 U.S.C. §307; See also In re Revco D.S., Inc., 898 F.2d at 500 (upholding broad appellate standing of United States trustees).

STANDARD OF REVIEW

The bankruptcy court is the finder of fact in a bankruptcy case. Matter of Lefkas General Partners, 112 F.3d 896, 900 (7th Cir. 1997). When the district court is the appellate court for a bankruptcy case, it reviews the bankruptcy court's factual findings under the clearly erroneous standard and its conclusions of law de novo. Id. This appeal presents only a legal question. A bankruptcy court's construction of a bankruptcy statute is a legal conclusion which the court on appeal reviews de novo. Meyer v. Rigdon, 36 F.3d 1375 (7th Cir. 1994).

STATEMENT OF THE CASE

This appeal presents an important recurring issue that has arisen under the Bankruptcy Code as amended by the Bankruptcy Abuse Prevention and Consumer Protection Act of 2005 (BAPCPA). That new law requires individuals to obtain credit counseling from an approved agency before seeking bankruptcy relief. See 11 U.S.C. §109(h). On March 15, 2006, Gregory Arlen Thompson and Suzanne Annette Thompson ("The Thompsons") filed a petition under Chapter 13 of the Bankruptcy Code without satisfying the Code's pre-filing credit counseling requirement. As a result, the Court ordered on March 16, 2006 that the Thompsons' petition be stricken. The United States Trustee, however, was not provided an opportunity to object to the portion of the order striking the petition. Accordingly, the United States Trustee filed a request to reconsider the entry of the order and asked the Court instead to dismiss the case. The United States Trustee did so because the nature of the relief granted could have substantial impact upon the Thompsons' creditors. On June 5, 2006, the Bankruptcy Court, following a minority line of cases, entered an order denying the United States Trustee's Motion to Reconsider and ordered the petition stricken. The United States Trustee then timely filed these appeals.

STATEMENT OF FACTS

1. Statutory Framework

Chapter 3 of the Bankruptcy Code, 11 U.S.C. §301, et seq., governs the commencement and administration of bankruptcy cases. Under section 301, "a voluntary case under a chapter of [the Bankruptcy Code] is commenced by the filing with the bankruptcy court of a petition under such chapter by an entity that may be a debtor under such chapter." 11 U.S.C. §301. The commencement of a case under section 301 is significant for many reasons. For example, under 28 U.S.C. §1930(a), "parties commencing a case under title 11" are required to pay the clerk of the bankruptcy court a fee. 28 U.S.C. §1930(a). When a debtor commences a chapter 13 case under section 301, the court assigns the debtor a case number and the automatic stay goes into effect.

Section 109 establishes rules that govern eligibility to be a debtor under the Bankruptcy Code. This section includes general rules that affect the eligibility of individuals to proceed as debtors under each chapter of the Bankruptcy Code. For example, under §109(g), no individual may be a debtor if that individual had a case pending at any time during the preceding 180 days if the prior case "was dismissed by the court for willful failure of the debtor to abide by orders of the court." 11 U.S.C. §109(g)(1). Section 109 also places restrictions on the types of individuals who may proceed as debtors under specific chapters of the Bankruptcy Code. See 11 U.S.C. §109. The section provides that only individuals with regular income who have unsecured debts of less than $307,675 and secured debts of less than $922,975 may be debtors under chapter 13 of the Bankruptcy Code. See 11 U.S.C. §109(e).

The BAPCPA amended §109 in 2005 to require, as an additional element of eligibility to be a debtor under any chapter of the Bankruptcy Code, that all individuals receive credit counseling during the 180-day period prior to filing a petition in bankruptcy. See 11 U.S.C. §109(h)(1). [2]

Section 707, of Chapter 7, entitled Dismissal of a case or conversion to a case under chapter 11 or 13, establishes that "a court may dismiss a case under [Chapter 7] . . . for cause..." 11 U.S.C. 707(a). It includes a nonexhaustive list of reasons that may constitute cause to dismiss a Chapter 7 bankruptcy case. See 11 U.S.C. §707(a). Section 1307, of Chapter 13, entitled *Conversion or dismissal, establishes that a debtor may convert a case to Chapter 7 at any time, that the court shall dismiss a case upon request of a debtor whose case has not previously been converted from another chapter, and that "...the court may convert a case under [Chapter 13] to a case under Chapter 7 of [Title 11], or may dismiss a case under [Chapter 13], whichever is in the best interest of creditors and the estate, for cause..." 11 U.S.C. § 1307. It also includes a nonexhaustive list of reasons that may constitute cause to convert or dismiss a Chapter 13 case.

2. Factual Background

The Thompsons are not strangers to the bankruptcy process. The above bankruptcy case is their sixth bankruptcy filing[3]. The Thompsons filed a chapter 7 (Transcript of hearing held April 21, 2006 at 5, hereinafter "Tr.") on January 20, 1995,[4] and received a discharge. They next filed a Chapter 13 on

---

[2] Under this new provision, debtors may seek an extension of the pre-filing requirement of up to forty-five days after filing if they can establish, among other things, that exigent circumstances required that they file for bankruptcy protection before obtaining the required credit counseling. See 11 U.S.C. §109(h)(3). In addition, upon notice and a hearing, a debtor may seek waiver of the credit counseling requirement altogether if the debtor can establish that he or she is incapacitated, disabled or on active military duty in a military combat zone. See 11 U.S.C. §109(h)(4). Those sections are not at issue in this appeal.

[3] Since the striking of the case at issue on this appeal, the Thompsons filed a seventh bankruptcy case. On July 19, 2006, they filed Case Number 06-03998 under Chapter 13.

[4] Case Number 95-00435. Although this case was not identified by number at the April 21, 2006 hearing, the docket is an official record of this court.

June 11, 2002.[5] That case was eventually dismissed on April 1, 2003. (See f.n.5). The Thompsons filed their third case on February 19, 2004.[6] (Tr. at 6, UST Exhibit-2, hereinafter "UST Ex-"). That case was under chapter 13 and was dismissed on October 5, 2004, for failure to make plan payments. (Id). On February 17, 2005, they filed another Chapter 13.[7] (Tr. at 6, UST Ex-3). That case was dismissed on March 3, 2005, for failure to complete the filing. (Id). On September 14, 2005, the Thompsons filed their fifth case, a Chapter 13,[8] which was again dismissed for failure to complete the filing. (Tr. at 6, UST Ex-4). That case was dismissed twice. After it was dismissed the first time on September 22, 2005, the Thompsons requested it be reinstated. (UST Ex- 4). The court granted their motion to reinstate but ultimately dismissed the case again on December 20, 2005, when the Thompsons still failed to complete the filing. (Id).

The present case was filed on March 15, 2006. (Tr. at 7, D.[9] at 1). The Thompsons did not file a credit counseling certificate with their petition or a certification of exigent circumstances as required for all cases filed after October 17, 2005, pursuant to the BAPCPA. The Bankruptcy Code requires a debtor to file a certificate from an approved credit counseling agency as proof that the debtor has fulfilled the credit counseling requirement of 11 U.S.C. §109(h). See 11 U.S.C. §521(b)(1). Interim Rules 1007(b)(3) and (c) require that the certificate of credit counseling be filed with the bankruptcy petition in a voluntary case.[10] See Int. R. Fed. Bankr. P.1007(b)(3) and (c). Thus, the Thompsons may not be debtors under the Bankruptcy Code. 11 U.S.C. § 109(h).

Rather than dismissing the case, the Bankruptcy Court struck the petition and closed the case. (D. at 5). The United States Trustee filed a request to reconsider the entry of the order striking the petition and asked the Court instead to, dismiss the case. (D. at 8). The court held a hearing on April 21, 2006 (D. at 16) and issued it's order denying the United States Trustee's motion to reconsider. (D. at 17). The bankruptcy court ruled that it was appropriate to strike the Thompson's petition. Id. The bankruptcy court noted that under changes made by the BAPCPA, the automatic stay under 11 U.S.C. §362 has been modified with respect to people who file successive bankruptcy cases. Id. Under section 362(c)(3), when a debtor has had a prior case pending within the preceding one-year period that was subsequently dismissed, the automatic stay in the next case shall terminate automatically on the thirtieth day after the filing of that case unless a debtor is able to establish by motion that the later case is in good faith as to the creditors to be stayed. See 11 U.S.C. § 362(c)(3). In order to protect the Thompsons from the impact of this new change in a subsequent case, and to deny their creditors of its advantage, the bankruptcy court ordered that the petition be stricken. (D. at 17). The United States Trustee timely appealed that order to this Court. (D. at 19; Notice of Appeal).

SUMMARY OF THE ARGUMENT

Federal courts dismiss improperly filed cases - they do not strike them. Courts dismiss cases for many reasons, including lack of jurisdiction, and failure to state a claim upon which relief may be

---

[10] The Interim Bankruptcy Rules were prepared by the Advisory Committee on Bankruptcy Rules and recommended for local court adoption to implement changes made by the BAPCPA. Pursuant to a standing order dated October 17, 2005, the Bankruptcy Court for the Southern District of Indiana adopted the Interim Rules. See October 17, 2005 General Order 05-0002 on Adoption of Interim Bankruptcy Rules.

granted. The same has always been true in bankruptcy. Under section 301 of the Bankruptcy Code, the filing of a petition commences a bankruptcy case. The Bankruptcy Code, consistent with other federal law, makes no provision for striking petitions or cases as a method of disposing of bankruptcy cases.

Despite this, the court below denied the United States Trustee's motion to reconsider the entry of the order striking the case and instead to dismiss the Thompsons' bankruptcy case, even though there is no question that the case was filed improperly. Instead, the court, on its own initiative, entered an order striking the case even though no federal statute professes to authorize the closure of federal cases by striking. That was error.

That error circumvents important statutory directives, and harms both debtors and creditors. It also engenders confusion because the Bankruptcy Code explains in detail what happens to dismissed cases and how dismissal affects the rights of the various parties to a bankruptcy case, but it says nothing about the effect of striking. See 11 U.S.C. § 349. For these reasons, this case should be remanded with instructions that the court below dismiss the Thompsons' improperly filed bankruptcy case.

ARGUMENT

1. Dismissal Is the Only Proper Disposition of the Thompsons' Improperly Filed Bankruptcy Case.

Federal district courts routinely dismiss improperly pleaded cases under Fed. R. Civ. P. 12(b) - they do not strike them.[11] See, e.g., Kirksey v. R.J. Reynolds Tobacco Co., 168 F.3d 1039 (7th Cir. 1997)(Seventh Circuit affirmed district court's dismissal of case for failure to state a claim upon which relief could be granted); Small v. Chao, 398 F.3d 894 (7th Cir. 2004)(affirming dismissal for lack of subject matter jurisdiction and for failure to state a claim); Cont'l Cas. Co. v. American Nat. Ins.

[11] Bankruptcy courts are units of the district courts. 28 U.S.C. §151

Co.,417 F.3d 727, 733 (7th Cir. 2005); ("[t]he district court ultimately dismissed this case because the forum selection clauses in the [contract] required arbitration in other districts... [w]e have held dismissal under these circumstances to be appropriate"); Continental Insurance Company v. M/V Orsula, 354 F.3d 603 (7th Cir. 2003)(same); United States ex rel. Garst v. Lockheed-Martin Corporation, 328 F.3d 374 (7th Cir. 2003), cert. denied 540 U.S. 968, 124 S.Ct. 450, 157 L.Ed.2d 313 (2003), reh. denied 540 U.S. 1097, 124 S.Ct. 975, 157 L.Ed.2d 809 (2003)(dismissal under Fed.R.Civ.P. 9(b) for failure to conform complaint to pleading rules affirmed).

Indeed, the United States Code makes clear that even cases filed without jurisdiction are dismissed. See 28 U.S.C. §1919 (governing the imposition of costs in district court cases "dismissed" for "want of jurisdiction"). See also, Capitol Leasing Co. v. FDIC, 999 F.2d 188 (7th Cir. 1994)(affirming Fed. R. Civ. P. 12(b)(1) dismissal of claims for lack of subject matter jurisdiction); Smith v. United States, 196 F.3d 774 (7th Cir. 1999), cert. denied 529 U.S. 1068, 120 S.Ct. 1676, 146 L.Ed.2d 485 (2000)(same). Bankruptcy is no different. The filing of a petition commences a case. 11 U.S.C. §301. Every chapter of the Bankruptcy Code includes a separate section expressly providing for the "dismissal" of a debtor's case for "cause" when it is improper for the case to proceed. See 11 U.S.C. §707(a) (providing for "dismiss[al]" of a chapter 7 case for "cause"); see also 11 U.S.C. §1112(b) (providing for dismissal or conversion of a chapter 11 case for "cause"); see also 11 U.S.C. §1208 (providing for dismissal or conversion of a chapter 12 case for "cause"); see also 11 U.S.C. §1307(c) (providing for dismissal or conversion of a chapter 13 case for "cause").[12]

[12] Each section contains a non-exclusive list of grounds for dismissal. The terms "includes" and " including" in those sections are not limiting. 11 U.S.C. § 102(3). See In re C-TC 9th Avenue Partnership, 113 F.3d 1304, 1311 (2d Cir. 1997); In re Griffieth, 209 B.R. 823, 827 (Bankr. N.D.N.Y. 1996; In re Zick, 931 F.2d 1124, 1126-1127 (6th Cir. 1991); In re Prud'Homme, 161 B.R. 747, 749 (Bankr. E.D.N.Y. 1993). Cf. In re Eclair Bakery, Ltd., 255

In fact, prior to changes made by the BAPCPA, bankruptcy courts routinely dismissed cases where individuals were determined to be ineligible to be debtors by operation of 11 U.S.C. §109. The government has reviewed over 800 decisions entered prior to the enactment of the BAPCPA where eligibility under § 109 was at issue, and it is not aware of a single case or petition that was stricken as a method of disposing of the underlying case. Bankruptcy courts have consistently dismissed cases when individuals or entities were ineligible to be debtors. See, e.g., In re Hubbard, 333 B.R. 377, 388 (Bankr. S.D. Tex. 2005)(noting that "[t]his Court and others have generally 'dismissed' cases that were filed by ineligible debtors").

Historically, bankruptcy courts, like district courts, have dismissed cases for a variety of reasons, including jurisdictional defects and improper venue. See Fed. R. Bankr. P. 1014 (providing that cases filed in an improper district shall either be dismissed or transferred); see also 28 U.S.C. §1930(d)(providing that "[w]henever any case or proceeding is dismissed in any bankruptcy court for want of jurisdiction, such court may order the payment of just costs") (emphasis added).

Given this settled law, it is not surprising that the vast majority of courts have dismissed cases upon concluding the person seeking bankruptcy protection was ineligible to be a debtor under 11 U.S.C. §109(h). See, e.g., Dixon v. LaBarge, Jr. (In re Dixon), 338 B.R. 383, 389 (8th Cir. B.A.P. 2006); In re Afolabi, 343 B.R.195, 200 (Bankr. S.D. Ind. 2006) ("The Court has no discretion but to dismiss a case when the debtor fails to file a certification in compliance with [§109(h)]"). In addition, most courts that have considered the issue have dismissed rather than struck cases in which individuals have been

The bankruptcy court identified no provision of the Bankruptcy Code or other federal law that specifically allows courts to terminate federal bankruptcy cases by striking the pleading that commenced the case while leaving the underlying case in limbo. Nor can they, because no such provision exists.[13]

---

[13] In addition, the only reference to the "striking" of any document in the Federal Rules of Bankruptcy Procedure is found in Fed. R. Bankr. P. 7012(b) and 9011. Rule 7012(b), incorporates by reference Fed. R. Civ. P. 12(e) and (f). Rule 12(e) allows a court to strike a pleading where there is a prior existing order to amend the pleading and the order has not been obeyed. Rule 12(f) allows for motions to strike in the context of adversary proceedings. According to this rule, such motions may be made by a party before responding to a pleading or by a court on its own initiative, and the court may "order stricken from any pleading any insufficient defense or any redundant, immaterial, impertinent, or scandalous matter." Fed. R. Civ. P. 12(f). Motions to strike, however, are not favored. Salcer v. Envicon Equities Corp., 744 F.2d 935, 939 (2d Cir. 1984), cert. granted and judgment remanded on other grounds, 478 U.S. 1015 (1986); FDIC v. Abel, et al., 1995 WL 716729 at * 12 (S.D.N.Y. 1995); Brokke v. Stauffer Chem. Co., 703 F. Supp. 215, 223 (D. Conn. 1988). A motion to "strike" under Rule 12(f) also only pertains to the striking of material contained in a pleading. In re Kershaw, 59 B.R. 618, 620 (Bankr. D. Tenn. 1986). Moreover, such motions are not intended to raise substantial, disputed questions of law. Mohegan Tribe v. Conn., 528 F. Supp. 1359, 1362 (D. Conn. 1982) ("The presence of a substantial or seriously disputed question of law will preclude a district court from granting a motion to strike."). Rule 9011 requires that papers filed in bankruptcy courts be signed by at least one attorney of record or by the party herself if she is unrepresented. Rule 9011(a) provides that "an unsigned paper shall be stricken unless omission of the signature is

As discussed above, improperly filed federal cases are dismissed, not stricken, and each chapter of the Bankruptcy Code contains a provision for dismissing - not striking - improperly filed cases.

2. Section 109 is Not a Jurisdictional Statute and Even if it Were, Cases Filed in Violation of Section 109 Would Need to be Dismissed Rather than Stricken.

Although the court below expressly held that it had jurisdiction, some bankruptcy courts have erroneously stricken cases because they believe (1) section 109(h) is a jurisdictional statute and (2) courts must strike petitions filed without jurisdiction under section 109. Both of these conclusions are wrong.

Supreme Court precedent makes clear that eligibility statutes like section 109 are not jurisdictional. Instead, jurisdictional provisions are those that actually define the jurisdiction of federal courts, most typically those set forth in title 28 of the United States code. Most recently in Arbaugh v. Y & H Corp.,--- U.S. ----, 126 S.Ct. 1235, 163 L.Ed.2d 1097 (Feb. 22, 2006), the Supreme Court ruled that eligibility provisions in federal statutes do not confer or contract subject-matter jurisdiction. In Arbaugh, the Supreme Court was asked to determine whether an employee-numerosity requirement in Title VII for establishing a defendant/restaurant's “employer” status was jurisdictional, or whether it was merely an element of a bartender/waitress's claim for relief under Title VII. Id. The Court held that the definition of an “employer” in the statute was an element of the plaintiff’s claim for relief, the satisfaction of which the defendant employer conceded when it failed to raise the issue prior to the trial on the merits. Id. at 1245. The Supreme Court declined to find that the defendant’s status as an “employer” was a jurisdictional requirement that could be questioned at any stage of litigation. Id. In making its determination, the Supreme Court noted that courts have an obligation to determine whether corrected promptly after being called to the attention of the attorney or party.” Fed. R. Bankr. P. 9011(a).

subject-matter jurisdiction exists, even in the absence of a challenge from any party. Id. It concluded that nothing in Title VII's text indicated that Congress intended courts, on their own motion, to assure that the employee-numerosity requirement is met. Id. at 1244.

In rendering its decision, the Supreme Court commented that courts have been imprecise regarding jurisdictional issues noting that "[s]ubject matter jurisdiction in federal-question cases is sometimes erroneously conflated with a plaintiff's need and ability to prove the defendant bound by the federal law asserted as the predicate for relief-a merits-related determination." Id. at 1242 (quoting 2 J. Moore et al., MOORE'S FEDERAL PRACTICE § 12.30[1], p. 12-36.1 (3d ed. 2005). In addition, in order to avoid the "'unfair[ness]" and 'waste of judicial resources. . . entailed in tying the employee-numerosity requirement to subject-matter jurisdiction," the Supreme Court advised courts to "to refrain from constricting § 1331 or Title VII's jurisdictional provision, 42 U.S.C. § 2000e-5(f)(3), and to leave the ball in Congress' court." Arbaugh, 126 S.Ct. at 1245. It noted that Congress is free to instruct that certain elements of a claim for relief "shall count as jurisdictional, ... [b]ut when Congress does not rank a statutory limitation on coverage as jurisdictional, courts should treat the restriction as nonjurisdictional in character." Id.

Nothing under Title 11 indicates that Congress intended courts, on their own motion, to assure that the debtor eligibility provisions are satisfied. In addition, 28 U.S.C. §§1334 and 157 are the jurisdictional statutes that confer bankruptcy jurisdiction. See, e.g., Rudd v. Laughlin, 866 F.2d 1040, 1041 (8th Cir. 1989); Promenade Nat'l Bank v. Phillips (In re Phillips), 844 F.2d 230, 235-36 n.2 (5th Cir. 1988); In re Republic Trust & Savings Co., 59 B.R. 606, 609 (N.D. Okla. 1986). Section 109 does not speak in jurisdictional terms, and does not refer in any way to the jurisdiction of the bankruptcy courts. Arbaugh, 126 S.Ct. at 1245. Therefore, the Thompsons commenced a case under the Bankruptcy Code despite the fact that they were ineligible to be debtors, and the bankruptcy court possessed the jurisdiction to dispose of the case under the Bankruptcy Code.

3. Other Federal Statutes Make Clear that the Thompsons Filed a Bankruptcy Case, and Everything That Happened in Their Case Underscores That Fact.

Other federal statutes and the administration of the Thompsons' case make clear they had a bankruptcy case that needed to be dismissed. Among other things, (i) a "case" number was assigned to their case, (ii) the bankruptcy court accepted a filing fee under 28 U.S.C. §1930(a),[14] and (iii) the automatic stay went into effect.[15] Each of these actions underscores the obvious fact that the Thompsons' decision to file a bankruptcy petition commenced a bankruptcy case.

4. Striking Petitions Creates Substantial Uncertainty under the Bankruptcy Code That Is Harmful to Debtors and Creditors Alike, and Creates Confusion Regarding the Rights of Interested Parties.

The Bankruptcy Code dedicates an entire section of the Code, 11 U.S.C. §349, to explaining the effect of a dismissed case on the rights of the various parties to a bankruptcy proceeding. See 11 U.S.C. §349. Section 349 provides, among other things, that: (i) dismissal of a bankruptcy case reinstates any proceeding or custodianship superseded under section 521; (ii) dismissal vacates any order under sections 522(i)(1), 542, 550, or 553, and (iii) dismissal revests the property of the estate in the entity in which such property was vested immediately before commencement of the case. 11 U.S.C. §349. Therefore, terminating a case through striking rather than dismissal will engender substantial confusion

[14] Under 28 U.S.C. §1930(a), "parties commencing a case under title 11" are required to pay the clerk of the bankruptcy court a fee for a case commenced under chapter 7 or 13 of the Bankruptcy Code. 28 U.S.C. 1930(a). The bankruptcy court collected a filing fee of $189.00 from the Thompsons when they commenced their case. See Unnumbered docket entry dated 03/15/2006.

[15] See 11 U.S.C. §362(a) (stating that a petition filed under section 301, 302, or 303 of title 11 operates as a stay of various debt collection and enforcement actions).

and potential prejudice because there are no corresponding instructions in the Code or elsewhere regarding the impact of striking a petition.[16]

Furthermore, the bankruptcy court's construction of 11 U.S.C. § 301 is wholly unworkable. The bankruptcy court found that a "'case' has not 'commenced' until it is determined that the debtor filing the petition is eligible for bankruptcy relief under § 109(h)." (D. at 17, Order at p. 13). Applying this construction of § 301 to the other debtor eligibility provisions of § 109 underscores the error of the court's logic. For example, section 109(e) conditions chapter 13 eligibility on debt and income thresholds. Whether a debtor satisfies those thresholds will not be apparent in all cases. A debtor could conduct a case for weeks or months until it is determined whether the debtor is eligible to be a debtor. Under the bankruptcy court's logic, no case would have existed even though litigation would have proceeded for months. That is an impossible construction of section 301 and is wholly foreign to the way it has been applied and the way courts have consistently dealt with improperly filed cases – both in bankruptcy and outside.

Nor does the text of section 301 mandate the result the lower court suggests. All section 301 does is define when a case is a proper one - when it is filed by an eligible debtor. But the Thompsons, like many other ineligible debtors, filed a case that was docketed as a case, and was treated as such - including by the court below.[17] Nothing in the text of section 301 prohibits dismissal of such improperly

[16] In addition, striking a case, rather than dismissing creates substantial uncertainty about the rights and obligations of debtors and creditors in stricken cases. See, e.g., In re Ross, 338 B.R. 134, 139 (Bankr. N.D. Ga. 2006)(explaining that striking cases could have an unintended result of harming debtors who have had their homes foreclosed due to the absence of the stay in a voided case).

[17] On March 17, 2006, for example, the bankruptcy court sent the Thompsons a deficiency notice telling them they had failed to sign their bankruptcy petition, and it noted that if the deficiency was not remedied by March 29, 2006, the Thompsons' "Bankruptcy case [would] be filed cases. To the contrary, section 301 says absolutely nothing about how cases filed by ineligible debtors should be terminated. As we explain above, we have reviewed hundreds of such cases, and bankruptcy courts dismissed them all. That bankruptcy court practice is wholly consistent with the way all other improperly filed cases are terminated in the federal system, through dismissal. Given that section 301 says nothing about how improperly filed cases should be terminated, it cannot fairly be read as prohibiting dismissal.

5. Striking Petitions Circumvents Statutory Restrictions Upon Debtors Who Have Previously Had a Bankruptcy Case Dismissed.

Congress amended the automatic stay provisions of section 362 of the Bankruptcy Code in 2005 in order to limit a debtor’s right to operate under the automatic stay when the debtor has previously had a case "dismissed" by a bankruptcy court. 11 U.S.C. §362(c)(3) (imposing these new restrictions in cases succeeding previously "dismissed" cases). Congress did so because it concluded it was unfair to allow debtors to file multiple bankruptcy cases and automatically reap the substantial benefits of the automatic stay of creditor actions in each case. See H.R. Rep. No. 109-31, pt. 1, at 2 (2005), U.S. Code Cong. & Admin. News 2005, pp. 88, 89 (setting forth Congress’ conclusions on this point).

Section 362(c)(3) provides that where a debtor has had a prior case "dismissed" within the preceding one-year period, the automatic stay in the next case shall terminate automatically on the thirtieth day after the filing of that case unless a debtor is able to establish by motion that the later case is in good faith as to the creditors to be stayed. See 11 U.S.C. §362(c)(3).

By striking rather than dismissing the Thompsons’ case, the order entered below risks dismissed immediately without further notice at the expiration of the due date . . ." (D. at 4). By sending its deficiency notice, the bankruptcy court correctly recognized that a case existed despite deficiencies in the petition and that the appropriate disposition of that case required its dismissal.

circumventing section 362(c)(3)'s new limitation by disposing of a case without "dismissing" it. Some courts have concluded that striking a case rather than dismissing it - the term employed in section 362(c)(3) - frees debtors from section 362(c)(3)'s restrictions upon the use of the automatic stay in a subsequent case. In the government's view, it is not appropriate to vitiate Congress' mandate in section 362(c)(3) by refusing to dismiss cases filed in violation of section 109. For the Bankruptcy System to function optimally, creditors and debtors alike must have faith that time-honored procedures - like dismissing improperly filed cases - will be neutrally applied in all cases. Conversely, faith in the Bankruptcy System will diminish were parties in interest to conclude that neutral bankruptcy rules were being ignored simply to evade policy dictates mandated by Congress that a particular court might deem unwise.

That is not to say the Thompsons cannot take full advantage of the automatic stay in a subsequent bankruptcy case. To the contrary, section 362 allows debtors to obtain the full benefit of the stay in a subsequent case if they prove their first case was filed in "good faith." See §362(c)(3) (allowing a debtor to obtain the full benefit of the stay if the debtor establishes the first case was filed in "good faith"). See also In re Seaman, 340 B.R. 698, 706 (Bankr. E.D.N.Y. 2006) (discussing this point). As some courts have stated, "a dismissal under Section 109(h) . . . does not appear to establish any lack of good faith." Id. See also In re Carr, 344 B.R. 776 (Bankr. N.D.W.Va. 2006) (concluding a debtor's second filed bankruptcy case was in good faith so as to warrant extension of the automatic stay beyond 30 days as provided in section 362(c)(3)). Under those courts' rationale, the Thompsons might well be able to take full advantage of the automatic stay notwithstanding the dismissal of their prior cases if they can demonstrate good faith to the court. If they are unable to demonstrate such good faith, then the absence of a stay in the subsequent case is appropriate. At a minimum, the necessity under section 362(c)(3) of filing a motion to extend the stay in a second case is the procedure Congress mandated. This carefully conceived balance should not be vitiated by striking rather than dismissing bankruptcy cases.

CONCLUSION

For these reasons, the United States Trustee respectfully asks this Court to reverse the order entered below and remand this case with instructions to the bankruptcy court to enter an order dismissing the Thompsons' bankruptcy case.

(C) is unable to negotiate with creditors because such negotiation is impracticable; or

(D) reasonably believes that a creditor may attempt to obtain a transfer that is avoidable under section 547 of this title.

(e) Only an individual with regular income that owes, on the date of the filing of the petition, noncontingent, liquidated, unsecured debts of less than $307,675 [FN1] and noncontingent, liquidated, secured debts of less than $922,975 [FN1], or an individual with regular income and such individual's spouse, except a stockbroker or a commodity broker, that owe, on the date of the filing of the petition, noncontingent, liquidated, unsecured debts that aggregate less than $307,675 [FN1] and noncontingent, liquidated, secured debts of less than $922,975 [FN1] may be a debtor under chapter 13 of this title.

(1) the case was dismissed by the court for willful failure of the debtor to abide by orders of the court, or to appear before the court in proper prosecution of the case; or

(2) the debtor requested and obtained the voluntary dismissal of the case following the filing of a request for relief from the automatic stay provided by section 362 of this title.

(h)(1) Subject to paragraphs (2) and (3), and notwithstanding any other provision of this section, an individual may not be a debtor under this title unless such individual has, during the 180-day period preceding the date of filing of the petition by such individual, received from an approved nonprofit budget and credit counseling agency described in section 111(a) an individual or group briefing (including a briefing conducted by telephone or on the Internet) that outlined the opportunities for available credit counseling and assisted such individual in performing a related budget analysis.

(2)(A) Paragraph (1) shall not apply with respect to a debtor who resides in a district for which the United States trustee (or the bankruptcy administrator, if any) determines that the approved nonprofit budget and credit counseling agencies for such district are not reasonably able to provide adequate services to the additional individuals who would otherwise seek credit counseling from such agencies by reason of the requirements of paragraph (1).

(B) The United States trustee (or the bankruptcy administrator, if any) who makes a determination described in subparagraph (A) shall review such determination not later than 1 year after the date of such determination, and not less frequently than annually thereafter. Notwithstanding the preceding sentence, a nonprofit budget and credit counseling agency may be disapproved by the United States trustee (or the bankruptcy administrator, if any) at any time.

(iii) is satisfactory to the court.

(B) With respect to a debtor, an exemption under subparagraph (A) shall cease to apply to that debtor on the date on which the debtor meets the requirements of paragraph (1), but in no case may the exemption apply to that debtor after the date that is 30 days after the debtor files a petition, except that the court, for cause, may order an additional 15 days.

(4) The requirements of paragraph (1) shall not apply with respect to a debtor whom the court determines, after notice and hearing, is unable to complete those requirements because of incapacity, disability, or active military duty in a military combat zone. For the purposes of this paragraph, incapacity means that the debtor is impaired by reason of mental illness or mental deficiency so that he is incapable of realizing and making rational decisions with respect to his financial responsibilities; and "disability" means that the debtor is so physically impaired as to be unable, after reasonable effort, to participate in an in person, telephone, or Internet briefing required under paragraph (1).

11 U.S.C. §301 – Voluntary cases

(a) A voluntary case under a chapter of this title is commenced by the filing with the bankruptcy court of a petition under such chapter by an entity that may be a debtor under such chapter.

(b) The commencement of a voluntary case under a chapter of this title constitutes an order for relief under such chapter.

11 U.S.C. §707(a) – Dismissal of a case or conversion to a case under chapter 11 or 13

(a) The court may dismiss a case under this chapter only after notice and a hearing and only for cause, including--

(1) unreasonable delay by the debtor that is prejudicial to creditors;

(2) nonpayment of any fees or charges required under chapter 123 of title 28; and

(3) failure of the debtor in a voluntary case to file, within fifteen days or such additional time as the court may allow after the filing of the petition commencing such case, the information required by paragraph (1) of section 521, but only on a motion by the United States trustee.

11 U.S.C. §1307(c) - Dismissal or Conversion.

(c) Except as provided in subsection (e) of this section, on request of a party in interest or the United States trustee and after notice and a hearing, the court may convert a case under this chapter to a case under chapter 7 of this title, or may dismiss a case under this chapter, whichever is in the best interests of creditors and the estate, for cause, including--

(1) unreasonable delay by the debtor that is prejudicial to creditors;

(2) nonpayment of any fees and charges required under chapter 123 of title 28;

(3) failure to file a plan timely under section 1321 of this title;

(4) failure to commence making timely payments under section 1326 of this title;

(5) denial of confirmation of a plan under section 1325 of this title and denial of a request made for additional time for filing another plan or a modification of a plan;

(6) material default by the debtor with respect to a term of a confirmed plan;

(7) revocation of the order of confirmation under section 1330 of this title, and denial of confirmation of a modified plan under section 1329 of this title;

(8) termination of a confirmed plan by reason of the occurrence of a condition specified in the plan other than completion of payments under the plan;

(9) only on request of the United States trustee, failure of the debtor to file, within fifteen days, or such additional time as the court may allow, after the filing of the petition commencing such case, the information required by paragraph (1) of section 521;

(10) only on request of the United States trustee, failure to timely file the information required by paragraph (2) of section 521; or

(11) failure of the debtor to pay any domestic support obligation that first becomes payable after the date of the filing of the petition.

28 U.S.C. §157 – Procedures

(a) Each district court may provide that any or all cases under title 11 and any or all proceedings arising under title 11 or arising in or related to a case under title 11 shall be referred to the bankruptcy judges for the district.

(b)(1) Bankruptcy judges may hear and determine all cases under title 11 and all core proceedings arising under title 11, or arising in a case under title 11, referred under subsection (a) of this section, and may enter appropriate orders and judgments, subject to review under section 158 of this title.

(2) Core proceedings include, but are not limited to--

(A) matters concerning the administration of the estate;

(B) allowance or disallowance of claims against the estate or exemptions from property of the estate, and estimation of claims or interests for the purposes of confirming a plan under chapter 11, 12, or 13 of title 11 but not the liquidation or estimation of contingent or unliquidated personal injury tort or wrongful death claims against the estate for purposes of distribution in a case under title 11;

(C) counterclaims by the estate against persons filing claims against the estate;

(D) orders in respect to obtaining credit;

(E) orders to turn over property of the estate;

(F) proceedings to determine, avoid, or recover preferences;

(G) motions to terminate, annul, or modify the automatic stay;

(H) proceedings to determine, avoid, or recover fraudulent conveyances;

(I) determinations as to the dischargeability of particular debts;

(J) objections to discharges;

(K) determinations of the validity, extent, or priority of liens;

(L) confirmations of plans;

(M) orders approving the use or lease of property, including the use of cash collateral;

(N) orders approving the sale of property other than property resulting from claims brought by the estate against persons who have not filed claims against the estate;

(O) other proceedings affecting the liquidation of the assets of the estate or the adjustment of the debtor-creditor or the equity security holder relationship, except personal injury tort or wrongful death claims; and

(P) recognition of foreign proceedings and other matters under chapter 15 of title 11.

(3) The bankruptcy judge shall determine, on the judge's own motion or on timely motion of a party, whether a proceeding is a core proceeding under this subsection or is a proceeding that is otherwise related to a case under title 11. A determination that a proceeding is not a core proceeding shall not be made solely on the basis that its resolution may be affected by State law.

(4) Non-core proceedings under section 157(b)(2)(B) of title 28, United States Code, shall not be subject to the mandatory abstention provisions of section 1334(c)(2).

(5) The district court shall order that personal injury tort and wrongful death claims shall be tried in the district court in which the bankruptcy case is pending, or in the district court in the district in which the claim arose, as determined by the district court in which the bankruptcy case is pending.

(c)(1) A bankruptcy judge may hear a proceeding that is not a core proceeding but that is otherwise related to a case under title 11. In such proceeding, the bankruptcy judge shall submit proposed findings of fact and conclusions of law to the district court, and any final order or judgment shall be entered by the district judge after considering the bankruptcy judge's proposed findings and conclusions and after reviewing de novo those matters to which any party has timely and specifically objected.

(2) Notwithstanding the provisions of paragraph (1) of this subsection, the district court, with the consent of all the parties to the proceeding, may refer a proceeding related to a case under title 11 to a bankruptcy judge to hear and determine and to enter appropriate orders and judgments, subject to review under section 158 of this title.

(d) The district court may withdraw, in whole or in part, any case or proceeding referred under this section, on its own motion or on timely motion of any party, for cause shown. The district court shall, on timely motion of a party, so withdraw a proceeding if the court determines that resolution of the proceeding requires consideration of both title 11 and other laws of the United States regulating organizations or activities affecting interstate commerce.

(e) If the right to a jury trial applies in a proceeding that may be heard under this section by a bankruptcy judge, the bankruptcy judge may conduct the jury trial if specially designated to exercise such jurisdiction by the district court and with the express consent of all the parties.

28 U.S.C. §1334 – Bankruptcy cases and proceedings

(a) Except as provided in subsection (b) of this section, the district courts shall have original and exclusive jurisdiction of all cases under title 11.

(b) Except as provided in subsection (e)(2), and notwithstanding any Act of Congress that confers exclusive jurisdiction on a court or courts other than the district courts, the district courts shall have original but not exclusive jurisdiction of all civil proceedings arising under title 11, or arising in or related to cases under title 11.

(c)(1) Except with respect to a case under chapter 15 of title 11, nothing in this section prevents a district court in the interest of justice, or in the interest of comity with State courts or respect for State law, from abstaining from hearing a particular proceeding arising under title 11 or arising in or related to a case under title 11.

(2) Upon timely motion of a party in a proceeding based upon a State law claim or State law cause of action, related to a case under title 11 but not arising under title 11 or arising in a case under title 11, with respect to which an action could not have been commenced in a court of the United States absent jurisdiction under this section, the district court shall abstain from hearing such proceeding if an action is commenced, and can be timely adjudicated, in a State forum of appropriate jurisdiction.

(d) Any decision to abstain or not to abstain made under subsection (c) (other than a decision not to abstain in a proceeding described in subsection (c)(2)) is not reviewable by appeal or otherwise by the court of appeals under section 158(d), 1291, or 1292 of this title or by the Supreme Court of the United States under section 1254 of this title. Subsection (c) and this subsection shall not be construed to limit the applicability of the stay provided for by section 362 of title 11, United States Code, as such section applies to an action affecting the property of the estate in bankruptcy.

(e) The district court in which a case under title 11 is commenced or is pending shall have exclusive jurisdiction--

(1) of all the property, wherever located, of the debtor as of the commencement of such case, and of property of the estate; and

(2) over all claims or causes of action that involve construction of section 327 of title 11, United States Code, or rules relating to disclosure requirements under section 327.

I. Introduction

A. This appeal merits adjudication because it presents a pure question of law, one that will determine whether the Thompsons' chapter 7 case must be presumed abusive as a matter of federal law - an issue that recurs every time a chapter 7 debtor contends a 401(k) loan payment alters the Congressionally mandated Means Test analysis that United States Trustees are statutorily obligated to perform in every chapter 7 case.

This Court contacted the parties to this appeal on February 16, 2007, to ask them to participate in a telephonic conference later that day. At that conference, this Court posed two questions to counsel for the United States Trustee[1]: (1) whether the United States Trustee still wishes to proceed with the appeal in light of this Court's expressed view that this case might not constitute a good test case to determine the question of law presented by this appeal - whether debtors may deduct 401(k) loan repayments under 11 U.S.C. § 707(b)(2)'s means test, and (2) whether the United States Trustee deems that question of law to be one of national importance.[2]

[1] United States Trustees are senior officials of the Department of Justice appointed by the Attorney General of the United States. 28 U.S.C. § 581. Each United States Trustee "supervise[s] the administration of [bankruptcy] cases and trustees" within his or her geographic region. 28 U.S.C. §581 - 589. See generally Morgenstern v. Revco D.S. Inc. (In re Revco D.S., Inc.), 898 F.2d 498, 500 (6th Cir 1990).

[2] This Court entered a minute entry after the hearing, which states:

> Minutes of proceedings [non-document]. Telephone Conference held on 2/16/07 before Judge Dan Aaron Polster. The Court held a teleconference with counsel in this case on February 16, 2007. The Trustee has agreed to take a fresh look at this case and if it still wishes to proceed with the appeal, to file a reply brief addressing not only the issues raised in the debtors' response brief, but also why this case, which presents only a theoretical possibility of paying creditors back beginning in 2009, is of national importance (i.e., it involves a new federal bankruptcy statute about which cases are arising daily across this country). The Trustee's new deadline for filing its reply brief is March 22, 2007, and the Debtor's shall file a surreply brief no later than April 23, 1007. See Docket entry dated February 16, 2007, as modified on February 21, 2007.

The United States Trustee Program brought this appeal because prompt resolution of this recurring legal issue will benefit debtors, creditors, the Program, and the lower courts. This issue merits prompt resolution because The Bankruptcy Abuse Prevention and Consumer Protection Act of 2005 requires United States Trustees to conduct a means test analysis for every chapter 7 debtor.

In this case, the United States Trustee and the Thompsons disagree how the United States Trustee and the bankruptcy court should account for a 401(k) loan repayment when calculating the Thompsons' means test. Just like this United States Trustee, each of the nation's twenty-one United States Trustees must factor in 401(k) loan repayments when performing the means test calculations Congress requires them to perform in every chapter 7 case. How United States Trustees should account for those loan repayments in their means test calculations is a recurring issue because debtors often borrow from 401(k) plans prior to entering bankruptcy. Cf. Bill Lubinger, Try to Avoid Retirement Plan Loans, Clev. Plain Dealer, July 11, 2004 at G3 (noting that almost a quarter of 401(k) plan participants borrowed from their 401(k) loans in 2002, at an average amount of $6,765 per borrower). The published decision entered below squarely addresses this pure question of law. Bankruptcy courts in the Southern District of Ohio, the Western District of Texas, and the Central District of California have acknowledged that decision in addressing this same legal issue.

The court below presumably published its decision in recognition that this is a recurring issue of some significance. And that is so. In the 2005 Abuse Prevention Act, Congress created a new statutory presumption of abuse in chapter 7 cases. 11 U.S.C. § 707(b)(2). Congress statutorily mandated that a presumption of abuse arises whenever chapter 7 debtors can repay as little as $167 a month, or $10,000 over five years, as that number is calculated under the means test. 11 U.S.C. § 707(b)(2)(A)(2). Congress thus mandated as a matter of federal law that debtors shall not receive chapter 7 relief whenever they can pay as little as $10,000 over 60 months - as that number is determined under its means test.[3]

Congress went further in the Abuse Prevention Act. It also required every United States Trustee to file a motion to dismiss every chapter 7 case in which the means test yields a calculation that specifies debtors can pay as little as $10,000 over five years. 11 U.S.C. § 704(b)(2).[4] This United States Trustee would violate that statutory charge if he did not determine whether the Thompsons' monthly disposable income is more than $167 under the means test, or if he were to fail to move dismiss their case once he concludes it exceeds $167.

The United States Trustee conducted a means testing analysis in the Thompsons' case. Under his understanding of the law, the Thompsons' means test establishes they can pay roughly $26,760, Open. br. at 10, more than double what Congress decreed mandates dismissal of their case absent special circumstances they have not proven.

The Thompsons and the court below disagreed with the United States Trustee's means test calculation. In their view, the Thompsons' 401(k) loan repayment obligation constitutes a secured debt that increases the Thompsons' expenses and allows them to pass the means test.

The impact of the parties' disagreement is profound - if the United States Trustee is correct, the Thompsons' chapter 7 case is abusive as a matter of federal law and this United States Trustee has a statutory obligation to move to dismiss it. If the Thompsons are right, they will be able to discharge all their debts in chapter 7 rather than allowing their creditors to pursue payment outside bankruptcy or through a chapter 13 repayment plan.

The significance of the United States Trustee's statutory responsibility to seek dismissal of cases deemed abusive under the means test takes sharp focus when one reflects that more than 833,000 chapter 7 bankruptcy cases were filed in 2006. Marrama v. Citizens Bank of Massachusetts, 127 S.Ct. 1105, 1111, n. 10 (2007). In each such chapter 7 case, the Bankruptcy Code specifically requires the United States Trustee to review all materials filed in every non-business chapter 7 case to determine whether a presumption of abuse arises under section 707(b)(2)'s means test.

The United States Trustee presses this appeal based upon a studied legal conclusion - firmly grounded in the Code's text and Sixth Circuit decisions analyzing secured debt - that 401(k) loan repayments are not secured debt and therefore cannot alter the formula specified in the Abuse Prevention Act's section 707(b)(2) means test.

Given the United States' views in this regard, it is important that this legal question be resolved by the courts as quickly as possible. Expeditiously removing doubt about the status of section 401(k) loan repayments is fair to United States Trustees and debtors alike - and to creditors and bankruptcy courts as well. Because the pure question of law presented by this appeal must be applied neutrally across a wide spectrum of debtors in many different financial circumstances, it is appropriate to address the issue on its merits, not with reference to the circumstances of any specific set of debtors, and to do so as quickly as possible. This appeal helps accomplish those goals.

Finally, this Court questioned at the telephonic hearing whether a presumption under

Congress' means test that these debtors can pay $21,000 is a meaningful number.[5] Congress foreclosed that inquiry by enacting section 704(b)(2), which mandates that an ability to repay $167 or more per month - $10,000 in total - creates a presumption of abuse, and by requiring the United States Trustee to move to dismiss these debtors' chapter 7 case because their means test yields a number more than double that. Thus, under federal law, a $21,000 repayment figure is not merely legally significant, it creates a statutory presumption in favor of dismissal.[6]

B. Background

The United States Trustee's opening brief established that the bankruptcy court erred when it ruled that 11 U.S.C. § 707(b)(2)(A)(iii) permits debtors to deduct retirement loan repayments, and that the debtors therefore passed section 707(b)(2)'s means test. The debtors have proffered a variety of arguments to support the bankruptcy court's ruling. In the end, however, they critically fail to explain how money a debtor borrows from his own retirement account can ever be a "debt"

---

[5] The means test figure calculated by the United States Trustee resulted precisely in a sixty month repayment figure of $26,764.20 ($446.07 per month times 60 months). See Open. br. at 10.

[6] In chapter 7 cases, $21,000 is actually a large number. Under pre-Abuse Prevention Act law, approximately 96% of chapter 7 cases produced no recovery for creditors. Brief of Respondent in Lamie v. United States Trustee, 2003 WL 21839367 at 38 ("The data that the United States Trustees maintain on chapter 7 cases in the regions they supervise reveal that 96% of chapter 7 cases closed during 2002, i.e., 1,001,697 of the 1,041,065 chapter 7 cases, had no assets in the estate to pay anything to counsel (or creditors for that matter)."). Nor has the Supreme Court declined to grant certiorari to decide a recurring bankruptcy issue because the amount at issue was small. In Lamie v. United States Trustee, 540 U.S. 526 (2004), for example, the Supreme Court granted certiorari to decide a recurring question of law under chapter 7 even though the amount at issue was $1,000. See Brief of Respondent in Lamie v. United States Trustee, 2003 WL 21839367 at 3 ("The United States Trustee objected to the application to the extent that it requested $1000 in compensation for services rendered after the case was converted to a chapter 7 proceeding."). See also Jenkins v. United States Trustee (In re Boldt), 130 F.3d 1335, 1337 (9th Cir. 1997) (United States court of appeals deems it appropriate to issue a precedential decision to adjudicate an issue under chapter 7 that arose from a $353.50 dispute).

– much less a secured debt owed to a secured creditor – within the meaning of the Bankruptcy Code. The unavoidable fact is that section 707(b)(2)(A)(iii) only allows a deduction under the means test for payments on account of "debts" that are "secured," calculated with reference to amounts due to "secured creditors." Mr. Thompson's retirement plan loan repayments do not qualify under section 707(b)(2)(A)(iii) for at least three reasons.

First, retirement loans are not "debts" under 11 U.S.C. § 101(12) of the Bankruptcy Code because no debtor-creditor relationship exists between the debtors and their retirement plan administrator. Second, retirement loans are not "secured" obligations owed to a "secured creditor" under the Bankruptcy Code because Mr. Thompson's interest in his retirement account was never property of the debtors' bankruptcy estate. Third, allowing debtors to claim retirement loan repayments under the means test would contravene the public policy objectives of bankruptcy reform legislation – to require debtors to repay their debts when they can.

Alternatively, debtors incorrectly assert that if Mr. Thompson's 401(k) loan repayments are not "debts" under the Bankruptcy Code, they are nevertheless allowed under the means test as involuntary deductions within the Internal Revenue Service's categories of "other necessary expenses" under section 707(b)(2)(A)(ii)(I). To the contrary, 401(k) loan repayments are not "involuntary deductions" because they are not a requirement of Mr. Thompson's employment.

Without the deduction for retirement plan loan repayments, the parties agree that the statutory presumption of abuse arises in this case. The debtors can only rebut this presumption by establishing "special circumstances" as defined in 11 U.S.C. § 707(b)(2)(B). As the United States Trustee established in his opening brief, the bankruptcy court erred by holding these debtors established special circumstances to rebut their failure to pass the means test because their 401(k) loan repayment is not a special circumstance for which there is no reasonable alternative. 11 U.S.C. § 707(b)(2)(B).

II. Section 707(b)(2)(A)(iii) does not permit debtors to deduct retirement account loan repayments.

A. Debtors have not established that amounts borrowed from Mr. Thompson's own retirement accounts qualifies as a "debt" under the Bankruptcy Code.

In our opening brief, we established that a debtor's retirement loan is not a "debt" under the Bankruptcy Code – a conclusion the Second Circuit has reached, and which the Sixth Circuit has followed. In re Mullen, 696 F.2d 470 (6thCir. 1983); In re Villarie, 648 F.2d 810 (2d Cir. 1981). In response, the debtors ask this Court to split with the Second and Sixth Circuits by ruling that retirement loans are debts under the Code. They do so under a misplaced theory that the Abuse Prevention Act's amendments to sections 362(b)(19) and 523(a)(18) of the Bankruptcy Code somehow expand the Code's definition of "debts" to include 401(k) loan repayments. Debtors' Brief at 10.

These statutes, however, are irrelevant. Neither purports to expand or alter the definition of "debt" under 11 U.S.C. § 101(12). Instead, they reflect a "functional approach" that does not resolve the question of whether retirement loans are "debts" under the Code. 4 Collier on Bankruptcy ¶ 523.24A (15th ed. Rev. 2006). The first, section 362(b)(19), simply provides that withholding from a debtor's wages for retirement loan repayments is not subject to the automatic stay of actions that arises when a bankruptcy case is filed.[7] Id. Likewise, if a debtor's retirement loan is a debt, the second, section 523(a)(18), merely provides that it cannot be discharged in bankruptcy. Id.

Debtors also misstate the holdings of two pre-Abuse Prevention Act cases, In re

[7] See 11 U.S.C. § 362(a).

Harshbarger, 66 F.3d 775 (6th Cir. 1995) and In re Anes, 195 F.3d 177 (3rd Cir. 1999), contending that "based on this and similar precedent, other courts have held that pension loans do not constitute secured 'claims' or 'debts' under the Bankruptcy Code." Debtors' Brief at 8-9. Both of these cases held that retirement loan repayments were not reasonable or necessary for a debtor's maintenance or support in proposing a chapter 13 repayment plan. But they also expressly declined to consider whether retirement loan repayments were debts or secured debts under the Bankruptcy Code. In re Anes, 194 F.3d 177, 181 n. 3 (3rd Cir. 1999)("Having determined that the proposed payments are an inappropriate use of disposable income, we need not consider whether Debtors have secured debts to their retirement systems."); In re Harshbarger, 66 F. 3d 775, 778 (6th Cir. 1995)("As we hold that the District Court was correct in upholding the decision to reject debtors' Plan based on § 1325(b), it is unnecessary to reach the question of whether, under bankruptcy law, the loan taken against debtors' ERISA-qualified account was an enforceable debt.").

B. Debtors have not established that repayments on account of funds Mr. Thompson borrowed from his 401(k) account are payments on account of "secured debts" to a "secured creditor."

Section 707(b)(2)(A)(iii) allows debtors to deduct payments on account of "secured debts" which are calculated with reference to amounts scheduled as contractually due to "secured creditors." In our opening brief, we acknowledged that, outside of bankruptcy, ERISA law only permits loans that are "adequately secured" (See 29 U.S.C. §§ 1106 & 1108) and that Mr. Thompson granted a "lien" against the balance of his retirement account. However, the Bankruptcy Code defines secured obligations more narrowly than nonbankruptcy law, and that a retirement loan is not a secured debt owed to a secured creditor within the meaning of the Bankruptcy Code for bankruptcy purposes. In particular, we argued that Mr. Thompson's obligation falls outside the Bankruptcy Code's concept of a secured debt, which is predicated on the estate holding an interest in the property. 11 U.S.C. § 506. Debtor's Brief at 18-21.

Debtors concede that Mr. Thompson's interest in his 401(k) account is not property of debtors' bankruptcy estate. Debtors' Brief at 13. Nevertheless, debtors suggest that Mr. Thompson's 401(k) plan administrator is a "secured creditor" because the debtors' estate has "an interest in" Mr. Thompson's 401(k) account. The debtors' argument fails for two reasons.

First, Mr. Thompson's 401(k) plan administrator does not qualify as a "secured creditor" as a matter of Sixth Circuit law. As the Sixth Circuit has explained, a bankruptcy creditor may only qualify as a "secured creditor" if it has an interest in collateral that is property of the debtor's bankruptcy estate. In re Foremost Mfg. Co., 137 F.3d 919, 924 (6th Cir. 1998) ("Although the bankruptcy court argued that ABC is in a position similar to that of a secured creditor, it was wrong in at least one important sense. A secured creditor has an interest in collateral, but that collateral is the property of the estate."). Because Mr. Thompson's 401(k) plan administrator does not have an interest in collateral that is property of the debtors' bankruptcy estate, the plan administrator cannot be a secured creditor.

Second, the primary case on which debtors rely for their argument that their bankruptcy estate holds an interest in Mr. Thompson's 401(k) account, In re Perkins, 134 B.R. 408, 411 (Bankr. E.D. Cal. 1991), is wrong as a matter of law. As we discussed in our opening brief, section 541(c)(2) of the Bankruptcy Code, which defines property of the estate, excludes any interest in a debtor's ERISA-qualified retirement account, including a 401(k) account, from ever entering the bankruptcy estate. Patterson v. Shumate, 504 U.S. 753, 758-760 (1992); United States Internal Revenue Service v. Snyder, 343 F.3d. 1171, 1178 (9th Cir. 2003) ("[Section 541(c)(2)] provides that trust anti-alienation provisions otherwise enforceable under nonbankruptcy law will operate in a bankruptcy estate to prevent the transfer of the debtor's interest in the trust to the bankruptcy estate."). Furthermore, the Ninth Circuit has rejected the rationale of Perkins and held that "[b]ecause [the debtor's] interest in [his ERISA-qualified pension plan] is not property of the bankruptcy estate, it cannot be used to secure the IRS's claim under § 506(a)."). Accordingly, under the plain language of section 541(c)(2), Mr. Thompson's interest in his 401(k) account was never transferred to the debtors' bankruptcy estate. As we argued in our opening brief, property in which the estate has no interest cannot be the basis for a secured claim.

The second case cited by the debtors, In re May, 194 B.R. 853 (Bankr. D.S.D. 1996), similarly fails to support the debtors' argument. It merely holds that the phrase "property in which the estate has an interest" under section 506(a) of the Bankruptcy Code "may include a debtor's exempt property when valuing a secured claim for compliance with § 1325(a)(5)." Id. at 858. The court recognized, however, that "[p]roperty that secured a claim against the debtor that was never a part of the bankruptcy estate, such as assets of a third party, will not, of course, be included in the creditor's secured claim for plan treatment." Id.

C. Sound notions of public policy support the United States Trustee's reading of the means test

In our opening brief, we argued that allowing debtors to claim retirement loan repayments under the means test would contravene the explicit and reasonable public policy objectives of the Abuse Prevention Act, which was enacted to require above median income debtors to repay their debts when Congress' means test determines they can. We also argued that the debtors could repay over $21,000 to unsecured creditors in a chapter 13 case. United States Trustee's Brief at 24. In response, debtors argue that our interpretation renders the statute absurd because if the debtors converted their case to chapter 13, they would be permitted to continue making Mr. Thompson's 401(k) loan repayments in accordance with 11 U.S.C. § 1322(f). Debtors' Brief at 15-16. As a result, they might not have sufficient disposable income to immediately fund a chapter 13 repayment plan, and their expenses might increase in the future, eliminating their ability to pay in the future.

As an initial matter, disallowing 401(k) loan repayments in a chapter 7 case will not lead to "absurd" results merely because the payments are allowed in chapter 13. A statute only produces an "absurd" result when "the interpretation is clearly at odds with Congress's intent in drafting the statute. . ." U.S. v. Coatoam, 245 F.3d 553, 558 (6th Cir. 2001) citing United States v. Ron Pair Enters., Inc., 489 U.S. 235, 242 (1989)("The plain meaning of legislation should be conclusive, except in the rare cases in which the literal application of a statute will produce a result demonstrably at odds with the intentions of its drafters. In such cases, the intention of the drafters, rather than the strict language, controls.")[8]. As we argued in our opening brief, the purpose of the Abuse Prevention Act's amendments to the Bankruptcy Code was to ensure that where debt repayment is possible, debtors should not receive chapter 7 relief without attempting to repay their debts. Appellant's Brief at 5. Requiring debtors to attempt repayment before eliminating their debt is consistent with this purpose.

Further, nothing in section 707(b) of the Bankruptcy Code directs bankruptcy courts to consider results that may occur in a chapter 13 case. Because the debtors filed their case under chapter 7, and not under chapter 13, the relevant circumstances for determining whether the presumption of abuse arises should not be viewed from the standpoint of a hypothetical chapter 13

[8] The high threshold that must be met to establish absurdity is made clear by the paucity of Supreme Court decisions relying upon it as a ground for recasting federal statutes.

case. In re Johns, 342 B.R. 626, 629 (Bankr. E.D.Okla. 2006). More significantly, however, nothing in the record indicates that the debtors will not be able to repay a significant portion of their debt when Mr. Thompson's 401(k) loans are repaid in November 2008. While debtors' expenses may increase in the next two years, their wages may also increase. If debtors' circumstances change in the future and they are unable to repay their debts, nothing prevents them from filing a new bankruptcy case or, if they elect to convert to chapter 13, converting their case back to chapter 7 if their circumstances change.

III. The bankruptcy court correctly determined that Mr. Thompson's 401(K) loan repayments do not qualify as an "Other Necessary Expense" under 11 U.S.C. § 707(b)(2)(A)(ii).

Under the means test, debtors may deduct their "actual monthly expenses for the categories specified as Other Necessary Expenses issued by the Internal Revenue Service. . ." except to the extent the IRS's categories of "Other Necessary Expenses" permit repayment of debts. 11 U.S.C. § 707(b)(2)(A)(ii)(I).[9] The bankruptcy court held that Mr. Thompson's 401(k) loan obligation was a "debt" under the Bankruptcy Code. Accordingly, the bankruptcy court concluded that the loan repayments could not qualify as an allowed expense under section 707(b)(2)(A)(ii)(I). The debtors argue that if Mr. Thompson's 401(k) loan obligation is not a secured debt, then the payments are allowed as "Other Necessary Expenses."

Section 5.15.1.10 of the IRS's Internal Revenue Manual identifies sixteen categories of "Other Expenses" allowed if they meet the "necessary expense test" because they provide for the taxpayer's health and welfare or for the production of income.[10] None of these categories specifically address 401(k) loan repayments. Debtors assert, however, that Mr. Thompson's 401(k) loan repayments qualify within one category of Other Necessary Expenses, titled "involuntary deductions." To qualify as an "involuntary deduction," the expense must be "a requirement of the job; i.e., union dues, uniforms, work shoes."

For example, an employee's failure to pay union dues or wear a required uniform or shoes may result in the employee losing his job. See, e.g., St. John's Mercy Health Systems v. N.L.R.B., 436 F.3d 843, 844 (8th Cir. 2006)(noting that the National Labor Relations Act authorizes collective bargaining agreements containing union security provisions that require union membership and payment of dues as a condition of continued employment). In contrast, the debtors did not provide any evidence below that failure to repay the loan will have any adverse impact on his job. Mr. Thompson's 401(k) loan documents do not require Mr. Thompson to repay his 401(k) loan as a condition of his employment. (Debtors' Ex. 1-10).

Thus, Mr. Thompson's voluntary agreement to repay his retirement loan via automatic payroll deduction simply is not a job requirement. See In re Barraza, 346 B.R. 724, 730-31 (Bankr. N.D.Tex. 2006)(holding debtor's 401(k) loan repayment did not qualify as an "other necessary expense"); In re Lenton, 2006 WL 3850011, *3-*4 (Bankr. E.D. Pa. Dec. 15, 2006)("The fact that Debtor took a loan . . .under terms that mandate repayment by payroll deduction does not change the nature of the funds when Debtor repays them."). Because Mr. Thompson voluntarily contributed funds to his 401(k) account, and voluntarily borrowed those funds from the plan, his repayment of amounts borrowed "represent repayment of voluntary contributions." In re Lenton, 2006 WL 3850011 at *4.

IV. Debtors have not established that repaying Mr. Thompson's 401(k) loan is a special circumstance for which they have no reasonable alternative under 11 U.S.C. § 707(b)(2)(B).

Section 707(b)(2)(B) permits debtors to rebut the presumption of abuse by establishing "special circumstances, such as a serious medical condition or call or order to active duty in the Armed Forces . . .for which there is no reasonable alternative." Our opening brief explained the bankruptcy court erred by ruling that, even presuming the debtors failed the means test, the debtors established special circumstances under section 707(b)(2)(B), which precluded dismissal. Specifically, we argued this ruling constituted error for three separate and independent reasons. United States Trustee's Brief at 25-28.

First, as we argued in our opening brief, under the doctrine of ejusdem generis, Mr. Thompson's 401(k) loan repayments are not special circumstances as a matter of law because they are not similar to the two special circumstances identified in section 707(b)(2)(B). United States Trustee's Brief at 26-27. Applying a similar principle of statutory construction known as noscitur a sociis, results in the same conclusion. Under this principle, "a general term is interpreted within the context of the accompanying words 'to avoid the giving of unintended breadth to the Acts of Congress." Kurinsky v. U.S., 33 F.3d 594, 597 (6th Cir. 1994).

Second, the phrase "such as" includes "other matters of the same kind which are not specifically enumerated by the standard." Donovan v. Anheuser-Busch, Inc. 666 F.2d 315, 327 (8th Cir. 1981). The examples that Congress used to give meaning to the term "special circumstances" in section 707(b)(2)(B) concern circumstances beyond the debtors' control. In re Delunas, 2007 WL 737763 at *2 (Bankr. E.D. Mo. March 6, 2007). Thus, it follows that circumstances that can qualify as "special" to rebut the presumption of abuse must relate to similar circumstances.

The phrase "such as" is more limiting than the term "including," which is a defined term under the Bankruptcy Code that Congress could have (but did not) use in section 707(b)(2)(B). Under the Bankruptcy Code's rules of construction, the term "including" is not limiting, and is used as a word of extension or enlargement. 11 U.S.C. §102(3). Am. Surety Co., v. Marotta, 287 U.S. 513, 517 (1933)("Include" is used as a word of extension or enlargement rather than one of limitation.) If Congress had intended "special circumstances" to have an expansive definition and scope, as debtors would have the Court believe, it would have stated that "special circumstances include" a serious medical condition or a call to active duty. It did not. Instead, Congress used the more restrictive term "such as" when identifying the situations that might constitute special circumstances.

Debtors' brief fails to address the language of section 707(b)(2)(B) and instead focuses on Congressional floor statements, made prior to the Abuse Prevention Act's enactment, that purport to explain that Congress did not intend the statutory examples to be limiting. Debtors' Brief at 23. Debtors' resort to legislative history is inappropriate because the statute is not ambiguous and limiting "special circumstances" does not produce a result demonstratively at odds with the purpose of bankruptcy reform legislation. United States v. Ron Pair Enterprises, 489 U.S. 235, 242, (1989). In addition, "[t]o the extent legislative history of [the Abuse Prevention Act] can be used to resolve any arguable ambiguity in the statutory language, it is of dubious assistance" because no joint conference statement or report of floor managers exists. In re Sorrell, 2007 WL 211276 at *7 (Bankr. S.D. Ohio Jan. 26, 2007) citing Begier v. IRS, 496 U.S. 53, 64 (1990).

Alternatively, debtors argue that the universe of allowable special circumstances is broad enough to include almost any circumstance that may befall a debtor, and that limiting special circumstances to the two mentioned in section 707(b)(2)(B) would render the statute "impotent". Debtors' Brief at 23. Special circumstances are not limited to the two statutory examples. However, special circumstances must be within the same exceptional category as a serious medical condition or a call to active duty.

In addition, debtors' argument ignores the fact that special circumstances permit adjustments to income as well as expenses. Debtors assert, without explanation, that the means test itself provides a mechanism to adjust a debtor's income. Debtors' Brief at 23-24. This is incorrect. Income under the means test is strictly defined by statute, 11 U.S.C. § 101(10A), and the special circumstances provision is the only mechanism that can adjust a debtor's income. Thus, for example, if a debtor who worked prior to his bankruptcy filing was diagnosed with a serious medical condition that left him unable to work, that could qualify as a special circumstances.

In this case, the bankruptcy court erred by finding that the mere repayment of 401(k) loans is within the same class of extraordinary special circumstances beyond the debtors' control, such as a serious medical condition or call to active duty. The repayment of the loans is not within the same class as a serious medical condition or call to active duty. Because 11 U.S.C. §707(b)(2)(B)(I) limits and restricts the special circumstances to those of the same type as the statutory examples, the Bankruptcy Court's conclusion of law that a 401(k) loan repayment constitutes a special circumstance should be reversed.

V. Conclusion

For these reasons, the United States Trustee respectfully asks this Court to reverse the order denying the motion to dismiss the case entered below and remand this case with instructions to the bankruptcy court to correctly apply the statutory provisions of 11 U.S.C. § 707(b)(2).

Debtor.	)

The United States Trustee ("U.S. Trustee") objects to the Chapter 7 Trustee's Motion for Authority to List and Sell Property and files this memorandum of law in support of the U.S. Trustee's objection.

STATEMENT OF THE FACTS

The debtor, Julia Kerrine Todd, filed a voluntary petition under Chapter 7 of the Bankruptcy Code on March 6, 2001. Michael B. McCarty was appointed to serve as Chapter 7 Trustee in this case. On June 4, 2001, the debtor filed a motion to compel the trustee to abandon real property, i.e., the debtor's residence at 18333 - N.E. 146th Way, Woodinville, Washington. The real property is listed in the debtor's Schedule A with a value of $370,000. As set forth in the debtor's Schedule D, the property is subject to the following liens and encumbrances:

Washington Mutual Bank	$220,242.00
U.S. Bank	$25,000.00
Sun Mountain Sports, Inc. Judgment	$21,233.25
Federal Tax Lien	$117,727.12
TOTAL LIENS AND ENCUMBRANCES	$384,202.37

The foregoing does not include any accrued interest on the Sun Mountain Sports judgment or federal tax lien after the date of filing of the petition. The debtor' schedules indicate that the debtor has no unencumbered or nonexempt assets. See debtor's Schedules A, B, C, and D.

On or about June 8, 2001, the Chapter 7 Trustee filed a Response to Debtor's Motion to Compel Abandonment, Objection to Exemptions, and Motion for Authority List and Sell Property, wherein the Trustee opposed the debtor's motion to compel abandonment and requested that the Court authorize the Trustee to sell the debtor's residence free and clear of liens for the benefit of the Internal Revenue Service ("IRS") and other secured creditors and to subordinate the tax lien to pay administrative expenses, i.e., the trustee's fees and expenses associated with the sale of the property. The Trustee has neither shown nor suggested that unsecured creditors would benefit from the sale.[1]

ARGUMENT

A. UNDER THE CIRCUMSTANCES, THE TRUSTEE SHOULD NOT BE PERMITTED TO SELL PROPERTY IN WHICH THE ESTATE HAS NO INTEREST.

First and foremost among the statutory duties of a Chapter 7 bankruptcy trustee is the duty

[1] Although the Trustee has objected to the debtor's exemptions to the extent that such exempt property may be used to pay a tax lien under 11 U.S.C. § 522(c)(2)(B), the debtor's exempt property consists primarily of household goods of minimal value. See debtor's Schedule C.

to "collect and reduce to money the property of the estate for which such trustee serves, and close such estate as expeditiously as is compatible with the best interests of parties in interest". 11 U.S.C. § 704(1). The trustee, as fiduciary, represents all creditors of the debtor, secured and unsecured. However, the trustee primarily represents unsecured creditors, and represents secured creditors only in his capacity as a custodian of property in which they have a lien. Ford Motor Credit Co. v. Weaver, 680 F.2d 451, 462 n.8 (6th Cir. 1982); In re Speir, 190 B.R. 657 (Bankr. N.D. Ala. 1995); In re Peckinpaugh, 50 B.R. 865, 869 (Bankr. N.D. Ohio 1985).

The primary role of the trustee is to administer the estate, turning over to the secured creditors by appropriate action the property to which they are entitled and in which there is no equity for the estate, and to marshal for the benefit of the general creditors the maximum funds available for distribution. It is only where the secured property has a potential equity for general creditors or to protect that secured property that the trustee should become involved therein. In re Crutcher Concrete Construction, 218 B.R. 376, 380 (Bankr. W.D. Ky. 1998); In re Crisp, 26 B.R. 274 (Bankr. W.D. Ky. 1982). A Chapter 7 trustee may sell a debtor's property under 11 U.S.C. § 363, but generally only to benefit the unsecured creditors. In re Crutcher Concrete Construction, 218 B.R. at 380; In re Williamson, 94 B.R. 958, 962 (Bankr. S.D. Ohio 1988); see also In re Riverside Investment Partnership, 674 F.2d 634, 640 (7th Cir. 1982) ("As a general rule, the bankruptcy court should not order property sold 'free and clear of' liens unless the court is satisfied that the sale proceeds will fully compensate secured lienholders and produce some equity for the benefit of the bankrupt's estate."). Secured creditors by consent and the trustee by acquiescence cannot impose upon the Court the duty to serve as a foreclosure or collection forum. In re Crisp, 26 B.R. at 275.

Secured creditors, for the most part, should be able to look to their collateral for satisfaction of their claims. If there is no equity in the collateral for the bankruptcy estate, the trustee may abandon the property pursuant to 11 U.S.C. § 554(a).[2/] In re Pearson Industries, Inc., 178 B.R. 753, 761 (Bankr.
