Date of transcription 02/02/2009

Pursuant to an ongoing criminal investigation currently being conducted by the Albuquerque Division of the Federal Bureau of Investigation (FBI), SA [redacted] telephonically contacted [redacted] at work telephone number [redacted] for the purpose of interviewing her regarding her knowledge of WILLIAM "BILL" RICHARDSON. [redacted] was advised of the identity of the interviewing agent and the purpose of the interview. [redacted] provided the following information:

[redacted] in the White House Counsel's Office in 2000. At that time, RICHARDSON, who was the Secretary of Energy, was under consideration for a nomination to be the United States Representative to the International Atomic Energy Agency (IAEA). The IAEA is affiliated with the United Nations. As part of the typical vetting process for such a nomination, the FBI was asked to conduct a name check on RICHARDSON.

[redacted] recalled the results of that request were returned to her colleague, [redacted] in a brown paper envelope. [redacted] was used to receiving results sealed in such envelopes when there was classified material in the results. [redacted] did not recall whether the envelope was marked "Eyes Only." [redacted] does not recall reviewing the contents of the envelope. In such instances, she would typically notify either [redacted] or [redacted] about the return of results. [redacted] and [redacted] would then retrieve the results from a safe for review.

RICHARDSON's nomination for the IAEA did not proceed. [redacted] was aware of the nomination not proceeding because RICHARDSON, as the Secretary of Energy, a cabinet level Secretary, should have had no trouble in proceeding to such an agency.

Typically, with such nominations, [redacted] and [redacted] coordinated with the Office of Presidential Personnel. [redacted] and [redacted] met regularly with [redacted] and MARIA HALEY, Deputy Director of that office, once or twice a week, regarding the status of such nominations. It was not necessary for [redacted] or [redacted] to coordinate with [redacted], regarding the results of such a background investigation.

The following investigation was conducted by SA [redacted]
[redacted] in Albuquerque, New Mexico, on February 2, 2009:

MARIA HALEY, Executive Director for the Arkansas Economic Development Commission, telephone number (501)682-7351, was contacted telephonically regarding her knowledge of WILLIAM "BILL" RICHARDSON. HALEY served as the Deputy Director with the Office of Presidential Personnel during the Clinton administration. As Deputy Director, HALEY worked in overseeing the appointment of administration officials. HALEY recalled that in 2000, RICHARDSON was the Secretary of Energy at the Department of Energy. HALEY did not recall if RICHARDSON was up for another appointment at the time. HALEY did not recall RICHARDSON being considered for a nomination to be the United States Representative to the International Atomic Energy Agency. HALEY recalled that this may have been a last second appointment but she did not remember.

[redacted] would probably have more information as [redacted] HALEY's boss. [redacted] for the last six years of the Clinton administration.

Presidential appointments are normally grouped into Senate confirmed appointments and presidential nominees. Senate confirmed appointments undergo much more scrutiny than presidential nominees. Both Senate confirmed appointments and presidential nominees undergo some level of background investigation by the FBI.

HALEY did not ever recall receiving negative information with regard to a RICHARDSON background investigation. Typically, negative information about a presidential appointment is first given to the White House General Counsel. The General Counsel then relays that information to the Office of Presidential Personnel. The Office of Presidential Personnel then notifies the candidate up for appointment. If the appointment is a high level appointment, the President or the President's Chief of Staff may contact the appointee.
