MARTIN DARDIS, Chief Investigator, Fla. Attorney General's Office, Miami, on 1/16/62, advised from fisurss and sources they obtained the following information concerning ELUM ADDIE CAUDELL (Miami file 165-6) and his operation: One man, not identified, is stationed at the track with a transistorized transmitter which sends "beep" signals to a house near the track in code. Thereafter, the individual in the house relays the results to CAUDELL who stops at a pay telephone booth every 30 minutes, which corresponds to the time elapsing between each race, and CAUDELL then calls three girls, one of which has been identified as BEATRICE RILEY. These girls each have 9 to 10 telephone numbers of local bookmakers whom they call and furnish the results of the races. DARDIS said he learned JOHN QUATRANO (Miami file 165-21) and RALPH SHEA (Miami file 165-16) use telephone pay booths and after obtaining the results from CAUDELL; they call wire service operations in Boston, Mass., and possibly other locations. He further advised that he learned CAUDELL and his associates are using brass slugs in .25¢ and .10¢ denominations to place all of their telephone calls.
