The Commission on the Status of Women, established in 1946, was the first of its kind. It was created by the United Nations to address the needs and concerns of women worldwide. The Commission's mandate was to promote the advancement of women and to ensure their full and equal participation in all spheres of life. It has since become a permanent body, reflecting the commitment of the United Nations to gender equality.

The Commission's work is guided by the principles of the United Nations Charter and the Universal Declaration of Human Rights. It focuses on a wide range of issues, including education, employment, health, and political participation. The Commission's reports and recommendations are presented to the General Assembly of the United Nations, which has adopted numerous resolutions and conventions based on its work.

The Commission's efforts have been instrumental in advancing the status of women around the world. It has played a key role in the development of the Convention on the Elimination of All Forms of Discrimination Against Women (CEDAW), which is the most comprehensive international instrument for the promotion of gender equality.

The Commission's work is also reflected in the Sustainable Development Goals (SDGs), which include a specific goal for gender equality. The Commission continues to work closely with governments, civil society, and the private sector to promote the advancement of women and to ensure that they are fully and equally represented in all spheres of life. The Commission's efforts are a testament to the commitment of the United Nations to gender equality and to the advancement of women worldwide.
