Subject: Review Forms

We have noticed a potential area for confusion in our reviews: we have three different categories of issues that could be considered "released."1) Items that have been voted on by the Board, the Agency has decided not to appeal, and the President has approved (fully released).2) Items that the Board has voted to release, but have not gone through the 30 days or appeal process yet (release pending).3) Items that CIA has conceded to staff that no longer need protection, but the Board has yet to take action on (release will not be appealed).With only one "Released" box in the review form, it is difficult to differentiate among these three different types of releases; procedurally, it is very important to distinguish them. Is there any way we can add boxes to the form to indicate what types of releases are meant by the analyst? Is there a better solution to this problem? Thanks.
