Subject: Scheduling issues next week

Body: On Thursday, September 21, my wife is having surgery on a pinched nerve in her foot and I will need to pick her up afterwards --- requiring my early departure from the office, probably in the vicinity of 3 or 4 PM. I will fill out a form that day once I get the call from the doctor letting me know the procedure is over -- it isn't clear how long it will take. The day before -- Wednesday, September 20th -- the Red Cross is having a blood drive on Capitol Hill (where I have periodically given blood in the past). I've received a "Local Emergency!" letter from the RC informing me that it faces a "critical shortage" of my quite common blood type (A+). I guess I'm inclined to set up an appointment for mid-day and go over, though the total time lost (travel and blood-giving time both) will probably be in the 2-hour range. Let me know if this is OK. Many thanks.
