Subject: Status of Information Requests, CIA

From our records (which are scanty on the subject), from Barry's records, and from my own personal knowledge, the current status of our requests for additional information and records from CIA is as follows:1. CIA has responded in full to CIA-1, a lengthy list including requests for various sorts of organizational charts. This material is being held for our use at CIA.2. CIA responded in full to CIA-2, 4 and 5 (I don't believe there was a CIA-3). These were requests from CIA team for information on crypts, pseudos, station prefixes, and file numbers/indicators. 3. Barry is going to check the status of CIA-6, which dealt with cable traffic between Mexico City, headquarters, and JMWAVE.4. In response to CIA-7, CIA has made the Mexico City Station history available to us (restricted access), and is one step away from being able to make its index to CIA histories available. The Agency has no record of a JMWAVE station history ever having been written, but is looking into it. The rest of our request, especially for histories/studies/reports on CIA activities with respect to Cuba from October 1, 1962 to January 1, 1964, are "subject to further discussion."5. CIA has only recently received CIA-8 (for Intelligence Community staff records) and CIA-9 (for serial publications) and has not yet had a chance to respond.As for the "Monster Plot" document, which Charlie Battaglia recommended that we ask CIA for, Barry hadn't heard of it. Chuck Brigg's hadn't heard of it by that name, either, but speculated that it might be the lengthy document dealing with Nosenko. I don't know, either--what did Charlie say? (If it's the Nosenko document, it is readily available).
