An internal strategy report sent by Ambassador Carlo Jagmetti toSwitzerland in December also spoke of opponents who "cannot betrusted," the SonntagsZeitung newspaper said. The undiplomatic language is likely to provoke new controversyregarding the neutral nation's dealings with Germany during WorldWar II. Jewish organizations in Switzerland demanded that Jagmetti besuspended. The Federation of Swiss Hebrew Congregations said theSwiss Cabinet should distance itself from the comments "as soon aspossible." Jewish groups claim Swiss banks hold up to $7 billion of savingsbelonging to Jews killed in the Holocaust, as well as as gold andother valuables looted from the Jews by the Nazis. Swiss banks say the real figure is a tiny fraction of that. In the confidential document, which was leaked to the newspaperFriday, Jagmetti describes the barrage of allegations against thecountry as a "war" that Switzerland "has to fight and win on twofronts: external and internal." Jewish claims must be settled in one general payment, he said. Then ``peace would return on all levels." He also writes that a ``deal" to end the crisis is possiblebecause Jewish groups and U.S. Sen. Alfonse D'Amato ``must bequickly satisfied," the newspaper said. D'Amato, R-N.Y., claims that newly declassified U.S. wartimearchives indicate that Switzerland profited from dealings in lootedNazi gold. Swiss officials made no comment on the report regarding Jagmetti's comments. It is the second time this month outspoken remarks by top Swissofficials have caused outrage. Outgoing President Jean-Pascal Delamuraz provoked aninternational outcry when he called demands by Jewish groups for areparations fund for Holocaust victims ``blackmail" and ``extortion" in a New Year's Eve interview. The World Jewish Congress and the Jerusalem-based Jewish Agencythreatened boycotts against Swiss banks unless the government distanced itself from the remarks. On Friday, the Swiss government and banking and industryofficials agreed to start discussions on setting up such a fund. AP-NY-01-26-97
