Dear JJ & C This might be the last chance I'll have to e-mail you for a while. We are losing our computers on Friday, then I'm out on the street as of the 30th. I'm going to have to stake out a grate somewhere, but I'll probably stay away from the White House. I came up with a name for my dog-walking/sitting service: "Canine Comfort and Crate Relief" (get it?) I will probably go up to Boston for a couple of weeks in October to help out. I am concerned that Matthew is alienating himself. I understand his reservations about Dad buying another house, and frankly I don't think its such a smart idea either, especially since he hasn't sold the Hingham house yet. But Maureen is the one he trusts and relies on, that's just the way it is. Somebody had to start taking action on something, so she took on that responsibility. It's not fair to her to be so antagonistic. I think Matthew would listen to you though. The past 2 weeks have been insane here, trying to tie up loose ends only to find new ones that have all kinds of knots and tangles. I got to work on our final report that goes to Congress, it ain't no Starr Report, but we can all feel that we accomplished something. I hope you are doing well, I have been meaning to write to Jason for the past 2 months, I have a card and that's as far as I got. I feel badly about that, I hope he's doing okay. Well, I have to go. If you want to respond, do so before
