Subject: Re: Proposed Experts Conference and Participant Suggestions
I like your suggestion re breaking up the "experts" based on the focus of what they have to offer. We might also want to include Jeff Richelson in the "Interpreting Intelligence Records" group -- not only has he written extensively on the intelligence community but he has probably done the most extensive intelligence agency primary document collecting of anyone around. He'd also be a good source on explaining NSA and NSA capabilities, and would have the added advantage of not requiring a quid pro quo of exclusivity. An alternative to Garrow might be Taylor Branch, who has done lots of work with FBI documents too (and he lives in Baltimore).
