Subject: Re: no expectations for the new year
Art, I think its a good thing. Not setting any goals for a while can be okay (although I know that it is hard to feel "clueless") if you have a peace about. I mean that if you have reached a plateau of addressing personal goals then maybe it is time to say "Okay God, whatever you want next. I have done what I wanted, these things are no longer in the way of accomplishing whatever you may have in store for me." Open yourself up to His will. (You already do, I am sure.) I have the opposite problem. I need to set goals. I am so worried about not doing God's will that I don't set goals and I don't accomplish anything. I wish I could convince myself that it is okay to do what I want to do. Then at least I would be accomplishing somebodies will because right now I am accomplishing no one's will it feels like. I was out sick yesterday. I feel much better today, although I still have this cold. The weather here has been so strange. It is hot and muggy and rainy. Very weird for January. Take care. Will talk soon. marie.
