Subject: Re: Zapruder film

Body: Correct on both counts: and Garrison ran off 100 bootleg copies (albeit shitty quality).

As the only one I know who's actually read Pictures of the Pain, and as our in-house expert on the Z-film: is it accurate to say that the showing of the Z-film at the Shaw trial was the first time any members of the general public had seen the film footage in its entirety, in motion? I know both Life and, for that matter, the Warren Commission, had published stills/frames previously, of course (probably lots of others, too). After the Garrison trial, it was 1975 and Groden on "Goodnight America" before the film was shown in public, right? That's my understanding of it, but I wanted to run it by you. I caught most of C-Span's "Media Availability for the Zapruder Film" when it ran yesterday. The Board was mentioned by name several times. Hope all is well.
