PROPOSED PLAN FOR INTELLIGENCE COVERAGE IN ALASKA IN THE EVENT OF AN INVASION

I PURPOSE

The purpose of this plan is to provide for an organization within Alaska designed to obtain, collect, and transmit such intelligence information as may be of value to the United States in the event that Alaska or a part thereof is invaded and occupied by the armed forces of an enemy.

II SCOPE

The plan will provide for the collection and transmittal to proper authority information which would be essential to the defense of the United States and the retaking of Alaska. It is contemplated that the plan will be sufficiently flexible to be adapted to unpredictable exigencies and situations. Within the limits prescribed by authorities of the United States and those imposed by such problems as climate, terrain, availability or proper quantity of agents, and the ruthlessness and efficiency of potential enemies, this plan contemplates informational coverage throughout all Alaska and the islands adjacent thereto, including the Aleutian Archipelago.

III ADMINISTRATION

This plan will be administered by agency or agencies designated by the proper United States authorities. The designated principal of this agency will have its headquarters outside the limits of the Territory of Alaska to preclude the possibility of capture, occupation of its location, and complete breakdown of the system.

ENCLOSURE

1 65-59264-3X

COPIES DESTROYED
R584NOV 22 1960

Constant liaison will be had and conferences will be held between the principal of this plan and the proper authorities of the F.B.I., Army, Navy, and Air Force in order that the total effort of these departments and agency may be correlated and data obtained may be passed on to those most vitally interested for use in tactical operations.

IV DEFINITIONS

For the purpose of this plan, the following definitions are applied:

1. Administrator denotes the agency or agencies (referred to in Roman Numeral III above) assigned to the administration and execution of this plan.

2. Principal denotes the person or persons directly responsible for the actual operation of the plan.

3. Agents denote those individuals selected, appointed, trained, and strategically placed and left behind after occupation to gather the desired information. He will receive his training, orders, remuneration, and will be directly responsible to the principal. Likewise he will pass all information gathered on to his principal by the chosen means of communication.

4. Informants denote individuals selected by the agents with or without the authority or acquiescence of the principal. These will change from time to time as necessity dictates and will be sources of information for the agents.

V SELECTION OF AGENTS

The following will apply to the selection of agents and the organization of such persons into an effective network:

1. It must be assumed that enemy agents and enemy military forces will neutralize a number of those agents selected for this plan immediately upon occupation. Hence, a sufficient number of agents should be selected and appointed in the particular vicinity of the most strategic areas. (Noted below). In addition, it is necessary that the agents be persons of varied backgrounds and occupations.

2. The agents selected should be trained, appointed, given orders, and contacted individually by liaison men of the principal to insure that the capture or corruption of one will not result in the identification of any others.

3. In view of the climate, difficult terrain, and physical difficulties in the Territory of Alaska, agents will be obtained in strategically located towns and villages where possible.

4. The selection of agents will be made with the approval of and clearance by the interested departments and agency of the United States Government.

Agents selected should be permanent residents of Alaska and have established means of livelihood and logical reasons for being placed where they intend to operate.

5. Agents should not have been members of the armed forces of the United States nor employees of the United States Government.

6. Agents should be chosen from those persons who will not be logical internees or victims of the enemy.

7. To lend mobility to this plan, consideration should be given to carefully selected bush pilots as potential agents. Likewise, consideration should be given to recruitment of persons who are businessmen, farmers, trappers, and fishermen.

8. The selection of agents from the Eskimo, Indian, and Aleut groups in the Territory should be avoided in view of their propensities to drink to excess and their fundamental indifference to constituted governments and political philosophies. It is pointed out that their prime concern is with survival and their allegiance would easily shift to any power in control.

VI LOCATION OF AGENTS

The following noted locations are places wherein agents should operate, although this list is not to be construed as being all inclusive:

a. Anchorage
b. Fairbanks
c. Kodiak
d. Nome
e. Hooper Bay Area
f. Kuskoquim River Area
g. Seward
h. Valdez
i. Cordova
j. Juneau
k. Skagway
l. Ketchikan
m. Palmer
n. Big Delta

VII TRAINING OF AGENTS

The training of an agent must conform to his physical location in the Territory, the means of communication to be used, and the business or vocation in which he is engaged. Certain of these must be trained in Arctic survival and supplied with proper gear to effect this. All agents should be trained singly, and their identities withheld from each other. The locale of training must be chosen by the administrator.

In the training of agents, the following items are being suggested to be included in training programs:

a. Cover stories, pretexts and deception

b. Simple encoding and decoding of messages

c. Surrepticious photography and microphotographs

d. Surrepticious methods of entry

e. Secret inks

f. Essential information and methods of deduction

g. Methods of selection and training of sub-agents and informants

h. Methods of observation and communication

i. Methods of interview and interrogation

j. Air drop and pick-up techniques and recognition

k. Scouting, patroling, and map reading and sketching

l. Guerilla techniques and close combat

m. Russian secret-police techniques

n. Russian military organization, uniforms and equipment

VIII PAYMENT OF AGENTS

The payment of agents will be handled by the principal and worked out on an individual basis.

IX TYPES OF INFORMATION TO BE OBTAINED

After invasion and occupation, agents may be expected to furnish the following general types of data:

a. Military information as requested or indicated by the principal.

b. Non-military information as indicated or requested by the principal.

c. Information coming to the attention of the agent, both military and non-military, which obviously would be essential to the success of this plan.

X COMMUNICATIONS

Communications between the principal and the agent will depend largely upon the location of the agent, his abilities, and his availability to the principal. Communications will be handled in a vertical line only, that is, it will be between the principal and the agent, but never between agents.

The following types of communications will be considered but are not meant to be all inclusive:

1. Short wave radio to submarine.
2. Short wave radio to airplane.
3. Short wave radio to listening post in unoccupied territory.
4. Airplane pickup of material at designated spots.

5. Courier

6. Weak and mobile radio transmitters to nearby listening posts.

XI EQUIPMENT

The equipment to be placed at the disposal of the agent will depend entirely upon the physical location of the agent. Obviously, if he is located in an outlying section, he must be trained in survival and provided with the proper gear and weapons. If he is located in a town or settlement, he will need little, except that necessary for communication.

PROPOSED PLAN FOR INTELLIGENCE COVERAGE IN ALASKA IN THE EVENT OF AN INVASION

I PURPOSE

The purpose of this plan is to provide for an organization within Alaska designed to obtain, collect, and transmit such intelligence information as may be of value to the United States in the event that Alaska or a part thereof is invaded and occupied by the armed forces of an enemy.

II SCOPE

The plan will provide for the collection and transmittal of information to CINCAL (Commander in Chief, Alaska Command) or to whatever other command may be charged with the responsibilities of operations in the Territory of Alaska. It is contemplated that the plan will be sufficiently flexible to be adapted to unpredictable exigencies and situations. Within the limits prescribed by authorities of the United States and those imposed by such problems as climate, terrain, availability or proper quantity of agents, and the ruthlessness and efficiency of potential enemies, this plan contemplates informational coverage throughout all Alaska and the islands adjacent thereto, including the Aleutian Archipelago.

III ADMINISTRATION

This plan will be administered by agency or agencies designated by the proper United States authorities. The designated principal of this agency will have its headquarters outside of combat territory, preferably in an invulnerable area and the headquarters of the principal will be mobile and accessible to CINCAL, consideration being given to the necessity for precluding capture, occupation, compromise and complete breakdown of the system.

Constant liaison will be had and conferences will be held between the principal of this plan and the proper authorities of the F.B.I., Army, Navy, and Air Force in order that the total effort of these departments and agencies may be correlated and data obtained may be passed on to those most vitally interested for use in tactical operations.

IV. DEFINITIONS

For the purpose of this plan, the following definitions are applied:

1. Administrator denotes the agency or agencies (referred to in III above at theater level) assigned to the administration and execution of this plan.
2. Principal denotes the person or persons directly responsible for the operation of the plan, including the selecting, training and paying of Agents, as well as establishing communications with them and liaison with the administrator. The principal will be chosen with the aid and advice of representatives of the FBI and interested military and naval forces in Washington, D. C., inasmuch as persons having the qualifications necessary to handle this assignment will be best known to them.
3. Agents denote those individuals selected, appointed, trained, and strategically placed and left behind after occupation to gather the desired information. He will receive his training, orders, remuneration, and will be directly responsible to the principal. Likewise, he will pass all information gathered on to his principal by the chosen means of communication.

4. Informants denote individuals selected by the agents with or without the authority or acquiescence of the principal. These will change from time to time as necessity dictates and will be sources of information for the agents.

V. SELECTION OF AGENTS

Consideration in addition to those that would normally be applicable in selecting agents will be borne in mind due to the peculiarities and unusual exigencies existing in Alaska:

1. The selection of agents will be made with the approval of and clearance by the interested departments and agency of the United States Government.

Agents selected should be residents of Alaska and have established means of livelihood and logical reasons for being placed where they intend to operate.

2. To lend mobility to this plan, consideration should be given to carefully selected bush pilots as potential agents and couriers. Likewise, consideration should be given to recruitment of persons who are businessmen, farmers, trappers, and fishermen.

3. The selection of agents from the Eskimo, Indian, and Aleut groups in the Territory should be avoided in view of their propensities to drink to excess and their fundamental indifference to constituted governments and political philosophies. It is noted that their prime concern is with survival and their allegiance would easily shift to any power in control.

VI LOCATION OF AGENTS

The location of agents in the Territory of Alaska will be left to the discretion of the principal and administrator, it being noted that in the opinion of CINCAL their importance generally will be in strategic places from west to east in the Territory of Alaska, with particular emphasis on areas where airfields and ports are located. These should include the following, which are listed not necessarily according to their degree of importance:

Nome

McGrath

Galena

Aleutian Islands

Fairbanks area

Anchorage area

Seward area

Kodiak

Southeastern Alaska is regarded at this time as having less strategic value than other parts of the Territory of Alaska for the placement of agents.

VII TRAINING OF AGENTS

Agents should be trained singly and their identities withheld from each other.

In addition to the normal training which should be given agents, particular attention should be paid to those subjects which have peculiar significance and importance due to the nature of the Territory of Alaska. These, not to be considered all inclusive, are listed below:

Arctic survival

Air drop and pick-up techniques and recognition

Scouting, patroling, and map reading and sketching

VIII PAYMENT OF AGENTS

The payment of agents will be handled by the principal and worked out on an individual basis.

IX TYPES OF INFORMATION TO BE OBTAINED

After invasion and occupation, agents may be expected to furnish the following general types of data desired by the administrator:

1. Military information as requested or indicated by the principal.
2. Non-military information as indicated or requested by the principal.
3. Information coming to the attention of the agent, both military and non-military, which obviously would be essential to the success of this plan.

X COMMUNICATIONS

Communications between the principal and the agent will depend largely upon the location of the agent, his abilities, and his availability to the principal. Communications will be handled in a vertical line only, that is, it will be between the principal and the agent, but never between agents.

The following types of communications will be considered, but are not meant to be all inclusive:

1. Short wave radio to submarine.

2. Short wave radio to airplane.

3. Short wave radio to listening post in unoccupied territory.

4. Airplane pickup of material at designated spots.

5. Courier

6. Weak and mobile radio transmitters to nearby listening posts.

XI EQUIPMENT

The equipment to be placed at the disposal of the agent will depend entirely upon the physical location of the agent. Obviously, if he is located in an outlying section, he must be trained in survival and provided with the proper gear and weapons. If he is located in a town or settlement, he will need little, except that necessary for communication.

20 August 1947

SUBJECT: Operation White Tower

TO: Commanding General
Alaskan Air Command
APO 942, U S Army

1. In planning the expedition the biggest problem was the weather. Flying the outfit into their base camp, scouting and laying out the trail up the glacier and mountain, taking pictures, surveying and the dropping of supplies all depended on good clear weather. In view of this fact the trip was planned for 75 or 80 days with rations up to 100 days in case of an emergency. From the time the first man went into the glacier until the last man arrived back at Wonder Lake was 94 days. All delays and getting behind schedule was due to bad weather. One stretch of bad weather held the party up for 11 days.

Supply and re-supply is very important on an expedition of this sort. Problems come up from time to time that need the supervision of an experienced climber. Therefore a large party operating in the field should have a representative of the party at their supply base.

Ski equipped planes were used to haul the initial supplies and personnel to the Base Camp at 6000 feet on Muldrow Glacier. They also hauled supplies to Wonder Lake for the radio station. Civilian aircraft used for this purpose were a Waco and a Norseman. Nine flights were made from Anchorage to the glacier and two to Wonder Lake. The last trip was made 28 April.

Army aircraft used for this was a ski equipped C-45. It landed twice on the glacier and once at Wonder Lake. Snow conditions were good for landing on the glacier at this time. Conditions were also suitable for making landing strips at higher evaluations on Muldrow Glacier but the performance of a plane on landing and take-off is questionable.

2. Camps were established at close intervals enroute up the mountain. Camp sites were chosen for the convenience of relaying supplies and personnel, as well as making them convenient to the work that the party wanted to accomplish. These camps were set up in areas that were away from avalanche and snowslide danger. An advance party of three men broke out and marked the trail with trail markers and set up the camps. The camp would then enlarge to take care of the personnel as they arrived. When all or most of the party of 13 were in camp a 9' x 12' wall tent was used as the cook tent. Tents were relayed from one camp to another. Caches of food and gasoline were made at various points to take care of an emergency or the return trip.

Base camp at McGonagal Pass was at 6000 feet on the Muldrow Glacier. It was occupied from 30 March until 26 April. The camp site was located in a snow covered depression of the glacier moraine. Seven tents and one snow house was set up at this camp. The snow house was used for sleeping two men and the 9x12 wall tent was used as the cook tent.

Camp 1 was at 7400 feet on the Muldrow Glacier. It was occupied from 16 April to 5 May. This camp was located in a depression in the glacier in the deep snow. Four tents and two snow houses were set up here. The snow houses slept six of the party.

Camp 2 was at the foot of the Great Serac at the 9000 foot level of Muldrow Glacier. It was occupied from 29 April until 12 May. Four tents and two snow houses were set up. The snow houses slept six of the party.

Camp 3 was at the head of Muldrow Glacier on the 11000 foot level. It was occupied from 7 May until 15 June. Five tents and four snow houses comprised this camp, one of the snow houses being used for food storage.

Camp 4 was at 12000 feet on Karstens Ridge. It was occupied 14-15 May and was only one snow house.

Camp 5 was at Parker Pass on the upper end of Karstens Ridge at 15000 feet. It was occupied from 15 May thru 5 June. Two snow houses were built here to supplement the one tent.

Camp 6 on Harper Glacier was occupied by two men during 20-26 May. This one snow house was built at 16500 feet.

Camp 7 was the Denali Pass camp at 18150 feet. This camp was occupied from 26 May until 27 June. The camp was set up on deep, hard packed snow. Three tents and three snow houses were used. One plywood 9x9 sectional house was used for the cosmic ray equipment.

3. Loads up to 100 lbs were carried on packboards without too much difficulty below 11000 feet. Efficiency seemed to decrease along with the increase in altitude. Between the altitudes of 11000 feet and 15000 feet pack weights were less than 70 lbs per person. This weight dropped to less than 50 lbs per person at the 18000 foot level.

The ability to work efficiently and quickly was also greatly retarded at the higher levels. There breathing is a chore instead of a natural function. The demand for oxygen in the system at that altitude is high and the oxygen content of the air is low. This necessitates deep breathing whenever any physical exercise is done.

Three pack horses were used to pack about 1500 lbs of equipment from the foot of McGonogal Pass, 5500 feet, to Wonder Lake. This was a distance of 20 miles. The horses belonged to [redacted] of Lignite, Alaska.

A dog team of nine dogs was used between the 6000 feet and 11000 feet camps to haul supplies and equipment. The dog team and sleight was shipped to McKinley Station by rail and proceeded to the 6000 foot camp overland. This trip of 100 miles took four days. The dogs were able to freight most of the way between the 6000 foot camp and the 11000 foot camp. Over the Great Serac at 9000 feet most of the supplies has to be back packed. Coming down the mountain the dogs moved 1500 lbs of equipment from 11000 feet to 6000 feet in two days. This was a trail distance of 13 miles. Food for the dogs was mostly dried fish and tallow. Some cereal and fat was cooked for them at the 11000 foot camp. They had good appetites at all times.

Back packing was done by members of the party to move their personal equipment from 6000 to 18000 feet. Cameras and survey equipment were moved to all places including the north and south peaks.

All equipment and supplies that went over the Great Serac had to be carried. Everything that was moved from 11000 to 18000 feet also had to be packed.

4. Weather in general was milder than anticipated throughout the trip. The number of all clear days was very disappointing. On the Muldrow Glacier from April until 15 May the average temperature was about 0° with a snowfall of about 2½ feet. On two occasions there were strong winds of 50-75 mph. From 15 May thru 20 May there was a big drop in temperature. The average minimum for that time was -22°. This was while the trail was being broken up Karstens Ridge and establishing the camp at the 15000 foot level.

There were blizzards from 20 May until the end of the month with an average minimum temperature of -8° at the 16500 foot level. Winds were encountered that reached 90 mph and another two feet of snow fell.

For June the average minimum temperature at 18150 feet was about -15°. Coldest temperature for that time was -29° and the warmest about plus 6°. Average winds for this period were 25-35 mph accompanied by a snowfall of three feet.

The snowfall at high altitude was considerably greater than expected. This was undoubtedly due to the extreme updrafts carrying moist air up the sides of the mountains. A good part of the time the mountain seemed to have a cloud cap on it. Snow at this altitude was like powder and considerable drifting was caused by the wind, packing the snow very hard. Most winds were from the southeast or south.

A complete weather record is forthcoming from Operation White Tower.

5. The conditions were ideal for aerial drops at 6000 feet. There was two feet of hard packed snow and the planes were able to come in at any altitude they wanted to fly. About fifty bundles were dropped free fall and another eight were dropped with G-1 chutes attached. The chutes were dropped from 200-500 feet and the heaviest load was 250 lbs. There were no failures nor damage to the equipment. One automatic release mechanism was used and worked perfectly. The free fall bundles were dropped with little damage to the contents. One 10 gallon gasoline drum, of the six dropped, broke upon hitting an ice bump. The E-rations dropped suffered considerably more damage than the 10 in 1. It might be well to note here an old cache was found intact. It contained cases of 10 in 1 rations that had been free dropped left by the C-47 crash party in November 1944. The rations were in almost perfect condition. We also left several caches on the mountain. Food, tents and equipment were left at 6000 feet. 1½ cases of 10 in 1 rations and three gallons of gasoline were left at 15000 feet. Rations, tents, gasoline and a supply of cosmic ray equipment was left at 18150.

The 11000 foot drop area was a little more difficult to approach than the one at 6000 feet. The planes were forced to come in 500-600 feet above the camp because they had to clear a small ridge. The drops here were perfect in spite of this handicap. At the time of the first drop the condi-tions were ideal. The snow was deep and very softly packed. Four 10 gallon gasoline drums were dropped without any damage. The eight cases of E-rations were somewhat damaged.

This damage was caused by the fact that the cans in this type ration are loosely packed. One parapack was dropped. It opened and landed but one of the risers was town loose from the container by the opening shock. The load on the chute was 150 lbs. Another drop was made after the wind had blown some of the snow away. There was some loss of gasoline on this drop as well as two bundles that dropped into crevasses.

6. The drop made by the C-47 at 15000 feet was very accurate considering the conditions. A small ridge necessitated coming in and dropping 1200 feet over the camp. Three cases of E-rations were dropped within 100 yards of the camp. There was 2½ feet of soft snow here and the cases were in very good condition, but the cans inside were considerably damaged.

Conditions at Denali Pass, 18150 feet, varied from one drop to another. The snow was generally hard packed by the wind with occasional spots of ice. An advance drop of five cases of rations and 10 gallons of gasoline was made 30 April. The gasoline was dropped by G-1 chute. The five cases of rations were dropped right in the pass and they were found by the party. Wind had drifted the G-1 chute and gasoline over the west wall of the pass at the time of the drop and it was never found.

The next drop was made at this spot 29 May. Eleven days of bad weather had caused the delay on this drop. The plane came in at 1400 AST and made radio contact. The air was very turbulent with a gusty ground wind of 35 mph. This drop of five chutes was made at an approximate 900 feet. Of the five chutes aboard, four released and one became stuck in the bomb bay. This was a perfect drop. The chutes straddled the marked and were not over 80 yards away. Teh 40 gallons of gasoline was dropped on two chutes and two A-6 container on the other chutes. The heaviest load was 155 lbs. A free fall drop was made later the same evening. On the following day another drop was made. It consisted of four G-1 chutes with A-6 containers and two para packs. The drop was accurate but the opening shock was very rough on all loads. On one of the para packs, weight 75 lbs, the container tore loose at the risers and the bundle was destroyed. One riser tore loose on the other one. The G-1 chutes took the drop OK bu the A-6 containers were twisted out of shape and some of the contents damaged. They did not land hard but the opening shock caused the bumper pads to snap off. There is no doubt that the airplane had too much airspeed for the drop.

On 31 May we had a big drop. There were four G-1 chutes and 18 free fall packages. They all landed OK but they were very inaccurate. This might have been caused by turbulent air and a 25-35 mph west wind. On 4 June the sectional houses were dropped without any damage.

7. Eight chute loads of cosmic ray equipment was dropped on 6 June. G-1 chutes were used and all equipment was packed in A-6 containers. Some chutes had two A-6 containers on them and the equipment was light. The heaviest chute load was 140 lbs. This was a perfect drop and very accurate. The bumper pads had been re-tied and stayed secure. No damage was done this time on the opening shock or on landing. Four more chutes and two free fall bundles were dropped 16 June. This was the last of the cosmic ray equipment and had the Geiger counters, the most fragile of the equipment. A perfect drop was made within 100 yards of the marker. The Geiger counters were wrapped in cotton and packed in a wooden box; this box was wrapped in two old mattresses and bound up tight. This bundle was dropped by G-1 chute. There was no damage to this bundle by either opening shock or upon impact with the ground. One more drop was made later consisting of one chute and two free fall ten gallon gasoline drums. This was a perfect drop in two passes. All bundles were within 36 feet of the marker. One of the gasoline drums broke on landing and half of the gasoline was lost.

Parachute, Aerial Delivery, Type G-1, 24 foot, yellow. About 35 drops were made with this type chute at all altitudes. No failure of any kind was noted. This chute was with A-6 containers, boxes and other wrapped bundles. The risers were never clipped (snapped) to ropes in any drop. This has a tendency to cut the rope. Instead they were firmly knotted to heavy ropes especially provided on all boxes. Snaps were used on A-6 container D-rings at all times. The chutes made excellent insulation for floors and beds and were also used as tent flaps.

Parapack, Aerial Delivery, 24 ft. red and blue. Four of these were used at different altitudes. The color was not good for easy spotting. The containers are hard to pack and too small. One of these containers, with a 75-lb load, parted with the chute on opening shock at 18150 ft. Two of them had one riser parted. This is not a very practical container and chute for dropping equipment and supplies. I am of the opinion that the parapack is weak in construction where risers are attached as well as being old equipment.

Container, Aerial Delivery, type A-6. Twenty-seven of these were used, about half of them for cosmic ray equipment. Almost all of them were dropped at 18150 feet camp with loads up to 140 lbs. They were easy to load, store and handle both on the ground and in the air. They were also easy to hang G-1 chutes onto and hand in the bomb bays. The bumper pads were efficient but should be attached much stronger. The canvas bag from the A-6 containers were used for storage bags. The bumper pads made good seats and when they were opened the felt made good insulation material.

Chutes dropped at 6000 feet were loaded up to 250 lbs and were dropped from 200-500 ft. For heavily loaded chutes 200 ft. was a little too low. The best altitude would be 300-400 ft. At 11000 ft. it was not possible to get below 500 ft. but that seemed to be just about right. At 18150 ft. chutes were loaded up to 155 lbs and dropped from altitudes of 700-1200 ft. The average was about 900 ft. At 700 ft. the chutes opened nicely with plenty of time to take up landing shock. Planes flying speed should be cut down to as slow as conditions will permit, this will cut down on the opening shock. All of the accurate dropping at high altitudes was done from the bomb-bay with a bombardier doing the dropping. Salvo drops of eight chutes were made with no failures. It was tried to have the signal given from the ground by radio as to time of drop. This did not work very well because it was hard to judge the position, altitude and speed of the plane. The best all-around color for chutes are bright yellow or orange. Red chutes look black in snow. A chute was used as a marker to drop to. A light cargo net would be ideal for making chute loads of small bundles and gas cans.

Free fall delivery will take care of 75% of the needs in the field. The conditions of the landing areas is important and will make it possible to free drop or not to free drop at lot of items. Loose packed two or more feet of snow was ideal. Wrapping and packaging is important and experience in this cuts down on the damage done. Free fall loads should not be heavy; packed in units of 50-70 lbs when possible. 10 in 1 and E-rations were dropped together on hard packed snow. The 10 in 1 suffered little damage while the E-ration had about 50% damage. The E-ration is a case of loosely packed cans while the 10 in 1 is four small tight packed cartons in a case. Gasoline was dropped free in ten gallon drums; they were filled with eight gallons and vented before dropping. Damage was about 10% on deep packed snow. Where the snow was very hard packed and icy the loss was 50%. A chute is more than 25% of the weight and about 30% of the bulk in dropping 100-lb loads.

Communications was taken care of with three Forest Service Radio phone type SPF (model AF-SC-486A) in the camps on the mountains and an ACS station at Wonder Lake or Camp Eulson. The SPF set is battery operated. With the light portable batteries it weighs 22 lbs. The heavy duty battery was used for this trip, they made the set weigh 30-35 lbs. It was operated on 3135kc. Intercamp and station schedules were kept four times and more a day over a distance of 90 miles. Good contacts were made with McKinley Park Headquarters Radio over a distance of 90 miles. Good contacts were made with planes. Burgess batteries were used for five weeks without any care such as keeping them warm or warming them before using. This radio was very easy to operate and set up. The antenna was merely laid out over snow for most operations. It was very effective when used over visual line. These sets were used throughout the trip and were transported from camp to camp and gave no trouble of any kind. This would be reliable and ideal radio for base camp work in a rescue. It would fill a big gap in communications between Handie-Talkie and airplane or mobile radio. It would be a portable radio that would give intercamp as well as good contact with the planes or station.

Tents: A number of different types of tents were used.

a. Tent, mountain, QM - Unsatisfactory
b. Tent, pentagonal, 6 man QM - Fair. Very hard to erect in deep snow or wind. Dark at all times because of OD color. It has no floor, is hard to pack and the pole is very weak.
c. Tent, small, wall, khaki, modified QM - Good, this tent is hard to set up in wind and has to have a floor piece. Also rather heavy to pack. Has room for five or six men to sleep. It is light inside and has plenty of head room.
d. Logan, pyramidal, type, 7X7, commercial - Excellent. This has a liner of 2 oz. balloon cloth, tunnel door attached floor and a duraluminum sectional pole. Was made of yellowish orange color. Easy to erect, took high winds very well, easy to warm up, light inside, plenty of head room. This tent would sleep three men and was very comfortable for two men to live in.
e. Logan, pyramidal type, 9X9, commercial - Excellent. This tent had no liner but was similar to the 7X7 in every other way. The tent would sleep 5 men and house 4 men very comfortably.

There is a great need for a small number of tents in rescue work that are similar to the Logan type. They are light weight to facilitate transportation by ground parties where shelter must be back packed. They would be easy to erect even in high winds and could stand winds of 50-100 mph velocity once they were erected as well as give protection and warmth in extreme weather. The exact size could be figured by the various ways that they would be used. A 9X9 would be about right. This size would take care of a four man crew or three casualties as well as having plenty of room for the medical men to work in, materials should be strong, lightweight and not over 5 oz. A light removable liner of reinforced 2 oz. balloon cloth should also be a part of this tent. The color should be yellowish orange. The tent should also have a floor, tunnel dorr and a drualuminum pole. The total weight of the tent, pegs and pole should not be over 30 lbs. By removing the balloon cloth liner and installing a mosquito netting liner this tent could also be used for summer. I can see no reason why a tent of this sort could not be used in survival equipment on planes and be available to drop to grounded personnel. In addition to the tents sixteen snowhouses were built for shelter and storage. Most of them were built on deep snow at least four feet deep. The sizes of them were 8' x 10' by 6 or 6½' high. They were built out of snow blocks and dome shaped. The entrance tunnel was dug under the wall and came up just inside. A ventilation vent was placed in the tip. Snow conditions varied from camp to camp, from fresh drifted snow to very hard packed. Blocks were cut with a hand saw or snow knife. The time of erecting them varied with the snow conditions and altitude. One snowhouse was set up at 16500 feet by two men in 3⅓ hours, this was with good snow conditions. They were used mostly for sleeping and took care of three men each, at one time five men slept in one house. They were very good in storms with high winds. Once set up they made a permanent shelter and could be used at any time while tents could not be left standing and unattended to.

Stoves: There were three kinds of gasoline stoves used. They were the One-Burner, M-1941; one-burner M-1942 Modified and the Two-Burner M-1942. They all proved satisfactory even at high altitudes, for high altitudes the gasoline should be of a very good quality to obtain complete combustion. Above 9000 feet a three legged ring stand was used to support utensils from one to two inches above the burner. This greatly reduced the fumes which were otherwise unbearable.

Coleman Fire Pot, large single burner, commercial. This was a very excellent item and was used constantly. It would hold 3 gallons of gasoline and weight of the item was about 25 lbs. It was perfect to cook on as the burner could be regulated and combustion was complete even at 18150 feet. It gave out a lot of heat and the cook tent was thus kept very comfortable. This would be an excellent item for base camps or hospital tents in an emergency.

Clothing: Jacket, emergency, woolen - Excellent. This article was used constantly. It gave best insulation as an underlayer with a wind-proof outer shell.

Suit, flying, type K-1 (Byrd Cloth) - Excellent. This article was used constantly in all types of weather as a windproof and snowproof coverall over various combinations of clothing. The multiple zipper pockets are very handy.

Muk-Luk (AAF) - Excellent. This was used constantly by some members above 11000 ft. It had a good fit, good traction and proved very good with snow shoes or crampons. The zipper proved excellent and made it easy for putting on over heavy pants. It did not freeze in any way.

Felt Shoe, flying, type F-2 - Excellent. This was used constantly by some members of the party above 11000 feet. It was the most practical shoe around camp with its composition sole and rubber heel. It was used with one pair of insoles and two pairs of heavy wool socks and proved very good in all-dry snow conditions. Used with snow shoes and crampons it was satisfactory.

Mitten, Arctic, (AAF) - Excellent. This mitten was worn by the party at low temperatures and where the wearer was inactive. It proved very satisfactory and necessary at high altitudes.

Bag, sleeping, type X-A4 (AAF experimental) Two of these bags were used by the party. Also type A-3 and Arctic mountain bag, QM. All bags proved satisfactory. The X-A4 is a much better bag than the A-3 and for a casualty bag it is far superior. It has a supplementary zipper sliders which permit easy access to an injured part. The objectional head part of the A-3 has been done away with.

Snow shovels. Commercial snow shovels were used with handles about 48 inches long. They proved very satisfactory. It is important to have good strong shovels, not too heavy but with long handles.

Glasses, Arctic, sun with rose smoked lenses. Type F-1 (AAF) This item was worn constantly and proved very excellent. It gave ample protection to the eyes, and was not overly cold on the bridge of the nose or the ears. It did not fog up excessively upon exertion of the wearer. This item proved superior to any QMC or commercial glasses worn.

Packboards were used throughout the trip, both the Yukon type and the plywood type were used and found very satisfactory.

Trail markers. The markers were black tipped for 18 inches. These were easier to see under any conditions than the ones that were yellow tipped for 8 inches.

Rations. We had a very complete diet with plenty of sugar, butter, cereal and an odd 1500 lbs of Birdseye Frozen Foods (vegetables, fruits, and meats). The frozen food was ideal and very easy to handle and store. E-rations and 10-in-1 rations were also used. As has been previously mentioned the 10-in-1 rations dropped in much better condition and were more of a variety than the E-rations.

Pressure cookers, commercial, EKCO Co. Without this item it would have been impossible to prepare a sufficient quantity of meals at the 18150 foot camp. These cookers were the four quart size. Besides being used for cooking they were used to keep the water supply from freezing. In the evening the cookers were filled with water and heated up to full pressure and set aside. In the morning the water would still be warm. This saved time and simplified the water situation. They are a great saver of gasoline at high altitude when used with the gas stoves. It only takes a few minutes to cook vegetables and cereals that would otherwise have to be cooked 1 to 1½ hours.

8. Evacuation of personnel

The evacuation of personnel from high altitude and mountainous terrain in Alaska runs into a major project. A good many problems present themselves. Among them are distance, climate, supply and altitude as well as the dangers of glaciers and avalanches.

It is possible to land with ski equipped planes on the glaciers in both summer and winter. Summer operations present more of a problem because ski equipped planes cannot operate from bases and the glaciers are much rougher. Planes will operate off glaciers at 6000 ft. and it is possible to make landing strips at higher elevations. The M-29C Weasel could be used to good advantage on glaciers. On this operation in April a weasel could have come into 6000 ft. overland and the next five miles up the glacier would have been perfect going for it. Possible could have used it to 9000 ft. on this glacier. Dogs were used to 11000 ft. It is possible to use dog teams the year around on glaciers. It is possible to locate suitable landing places for parachute troppers on glaciers but don't believe it too safe to land at very high elevation. In most of the high terrain all evacuation would have to be done with man power to a lower point where travel becomes smoother. All personnel that would be on the ground on this operation should have glacier and mountain training and be in top physical condition. At least half the personnel should be highly skilled and trained in northern glaciers and mountains. They should also be experienced in Arctic camping and survival.

Above 7000 feet summer conditions are little different than winter. The temperature would be a little warmer but it would require winter equipment. In an emergency ground crew should be equipped to operate in all weather.

Besides their personal equipment they would need gas stoves, gasoline, and tents that provide sufficient shelter and could be back packed, regular mountain climbing equipment of ice axe, crampons, trail markers and rope is a must. Trail would be marked and made by parties of 3 or 4 men on a rope and camp should be established along the route. If possible planes would drop these camps. At site of the crash or where possible camp would be set up and injured taken care of. Any equipment needs such as litters, ropes, extra climbing equipment, etc., could be dropped here for the evacuation. If any personell to be evacuated can walk out they should be taken on a rope with at least two experienced men. Injured personnel should be in the Stokes litter which can be dragged over the snow and down the slopes. This should have at least six men to a litter and they still want to be roped. On the steep slopes and ridges fixed ropes should be put in and anchored, every so often with a strong straight grained 60" x 1" x 1". Litter can be fastened to this, also men will have something to hang on to. Bamboo poles, light, 8 or 9 ft. long are very good for testing for crevasses on glaciers and make good cache markers and can be used for tent poles. Progress would be very slow so camp would have to be set up at short intervals. A person's circulation is very low at high altitude so be extra careful about freezing.

SOVIET PRISONER-OF-WAR INTERROGATION

Captives taken by Communists in any future war can expect to be ruthlessly exploited through methods designed to extract every bit of worthwhile information.

Soviet prisoner-of-war interrogation, unlike that of other nations, is intended not only to gather military information, but also to further the political aims of the Soviet Union and to provide agents and subversives within enemy forces.

Organizationally, the interrogation function, while partly performed by military personnel, charged with the collection of tactical information, is mainly the responsibility of specially trained interrogation teams of the Ministry of Internal Affairs (MVD).[1]

Military interrogation in the Soviet Army is hampered by the use of poorly trained interrogation personnel and excessively rapid evacuation of prisoners. MVD interrogation, on the other hand, is subject to few limitations and is thorough. Prisoners interrogated by the MVD are liable to almost unlimited duress.

DEVELOPMENT OF INTERROGATION POLICIES AND PRACTICES

The techniques of Soviet interrogation are based on the tradition of the Soviet Union and the doctrine of the Soviet Army.

[1]There is some evidence that this function may now be assigned to the MGB (Ministry of State Security) with certain other now transferred responsibilities.

Basically, it is the nature of Soviet belief that intelligence on the enemy forces can be best obtained through reconnaissance and the use of agents behind the enemy lines.

Early in World War II, few prisoners were taken; and, of those who were, a considerable number were killed after only the most superficial interrogation or without being questioned at all. During this period there was little organized interrogation of military prisoners and almost no appreciation of their value.

The habitual use of slave labor within the Soviet Union, and the growing demand for such manpower during the war, however, caused a modification of this attitude. After 1942, the requirements of the economy forced a centralization of prisoner handling. At the same time the Soviets began to realize that considerable information could be derived from captured personnel.

Since the Army had been trained to "destroy the enemy," and since the Commissariat of Internal Affairs (NKVD)[1] was, by tradition and training, qualified to handle the prisoners taken, the entire program for the exploitation of prisoners was centralized under NKVD control. During this period, interrogation was ruthless, and the exploitation of prisoners was subject to few if any restraints.

By VJ-day, however, prisoners - whose usefulness in the labor

camps had become apparent - were accorded somewhat better treatment so that they might be exploited as a labor force. However, differentiation was made between purely military and "political" prisoners. The lot of the latter was considerably worse than that of purely military types.

The Soviets had developed interrogation and exploitation methods to a high level by VJ-day. Prisoners were quickly and effectively exploited, and were equally promptly put to work in forced labor camps.

ORGANIZATION AND MISSION

Future Soviet wartime interrogation procedures probably will serve two ends: (1) The tactical requirements of the local commander; and (2) the higher requirements of the Soviet State and the Communist Party.

Current doctrine indicates that the MVD is the responsible agency for meeting the higher requirements and possibly also for some of the interrogation at tactical level.

Nonetheless, Army units do conduct some interrogation of prisoners, even though the time allowed for such interrogation may be very limited. High-ranking, politically important, and technically skilled personnel, in particular, are quickly dispatched to MVD interrogation units; their stay in field intelligence agencies is very brief.

Interrogation at battalion and regimental level normally will be done by unit intelligence officers, assisted by interpreters.

Personnel at this level normally are not trained interrogators but are considered capable of securing necessary Order of Battle information to assist the local commander in arriving at a sound military decision.

At the division level, where a further interrogation regularly takes place, better qualified personnel are employed. But even here, exploitation usually is rapid and of limited extent. Immediately following military interrogation at division headquarters, prisoners normally are sent to prisoner-of-war cages at army level. Here a preliminary determination of their worth is made by trained MVD interrogators, in conjunction with Army personnel. Depending upon the estimated value of the individual prisoners, they are then forwarded either to special interrogation centers or to base camps, all of which are controlled and operated by the MVD.

Low-ranking officers and enlisted men who obviously are not knowledgeable, and against whom no particular "war crime" is established, are almost immediately sent to base camps. Even at the base camps, however, interrogation sections are maintained. Eventually, all the inmates are reinterrogated.

Prisoners who are believed to be guilty of political "crimes" or to be particularly knowledgeable are sent to special interrogation camps where detailed interrogations normally are conducted.

Operation of these camps is entirely a function of the MVD. While their organization is not clearly established, it is known that they are carefully guarded and amply supplied with highly trained military, technical, scientific, and political interrogators.

Particularly important prisoners are sometimes sent to prisons where the regimen is even more rigorous than in special interrogation camps. During World War II the notorious Lubyanka Prison in Moscow was used for this purpose.

It is the mission of these camps and prisons to elicit all information possessed by the prisoners of war under interrogation, to establish "proof of war guilt," and to recruit prisoners of war as informers, agents, or participants in prison-of-war political organizations. A notable example of the last was the "Free Germany" Committee, made up principally of German prisoners of all ranks captured at Stalingrad.

INTERROGATION METHODS AND PROCEDURES

Three factors influence Soviet interrogation methods and procedures: (1) The Soviets have always shown a cynical disregard for human life; (2) the Soviet Union is not a party to the Geneva Convention or similar agreement concerning the treatment of war prisoners,[1] and (3) Soviet interrogation personnel are expected - and required - to produce results.

All Soviet interrogations are based upon the assumptions that:

[1]In Aug 1941, the Soviets issued a formal statement promising to abide by the principles of the previous Hague Convention (similar in content to those of the Geneva Convention), provided the Germans did likewise; however, both belligerents flagrantly violated these principles throughout the war in treatment of each other's prisoners.

BEST AVAILABLE COPY

(1) all prisoners are liars; (2) most Westerners can be bought; (3) those who cannot be bought can be broken; and (4) the process of breaking the prisoner can be continued as long as necessary to acquire the desired information.

It is to be expected, therefore, that interrogations will be thorough and may involve extreme forms of duress. However, initial interrogations by field units are not detailed and time does not permit extensive maltreatment. Usually at divisions and lower levels, interrogation is restricted to registration of prisoners and the completion of standard questionnaires. In addition, information is obtained on tactical matters of direct concern to the command.

Subordinate Army units probably will take few pains in interrogations, because: (1) They are taught to distrust statements by prisoners of war; (2) they place great reliance upon extensive reconnaissance. While considerable emphasis in Soviet doctrine has been placed upon the necessity of taking prisoners, the troops themselves are equally carefully indoctrinated with the concept of "destroying the enemy with fire." The contradictory battle training places the prisoner's life during the first few moments of capture in considerable jeopardy. If the prisoner does survive his initial capture, however, he probably will live to be interrogated by the MVD.

The two primary methods employed by the MVD to gain information from stubborn prisoners are: (1) Punishment for refusal to give information; and (2) use of informers among the prisoners.

The most common form of punishment used to force prisoners of war to give information is solitary confinement. Prisoners are often confined for months - there is a recorded case of 33 months - in dark, unheated cells on limited rations and water. At night, a narrow wooden bench is placed in the cell as a couch. In the coldest part of winter, one blanket is furnished. During the day the prisoner must exercise ceaselessly to protect himself from freezing. Prisoners so confined are interrogated at intervals and then returned to their cells until such time as the interrogator is satisfied with their statements.

Exact records are kept of the results of all interrogations and are closely studied to determine whether the prisoner has made contradictory statements. Thus the slightest contradiction in the statements of a prisoner, even though made months apart, is cause for further interrogation.

The practice of employing informers among the prisoners of war is widespread. Prisoners who have committed punishable offenses, such as theft or homosexual relations, and those particularly susceptible to intimidation are usually recruited for this purpose. The use of informers is so general that prisoners confined in common cells must always be careful to reveal no classified information to their fellow prisoners.

There are reported cases of the use of physical torture to elicit information from prisoners. Such practices appear to be the exception rather than the rule and are the result of sadistic tendencies in the individual interrogator. Threats of execution and other forms of mental torture are more common.

CONCLUSIONS

It is to be expected that, in any future war, prisoners taken by the Soviet Army, or by any other Army trained in Soviet methods will be ruthlessly exploited. They will be interrogated in detail, and the methods used will be designed to extract the last bit of information from them.

It must be anticipated that knowledgeable prisoners particularly will be subjected to vigorous inducements to disclose such information as they possess. (CONFIDENTIAL) End.

"E & E AIDS" - FOR THE SOVIET NORTH POLAR REGIONS

The following article is an abridged version of a forthcoming Eskimo[1] language phrase book. This booklet, scheduled for production by the Alaskan Air Command, is designed primarily to serve as a possible aid for Tactical units in Escape and Evasion training, and to provide for the stockpiling of "E & E" materials for D-Day use. This original text was compiled and translated into the English language by [redacted] who served with the Chaplains Corps in Alaska during World War II. At the present time he is on active duty as a Captain, assigned to the AAC. [redacted] is especially well qualified with his subject matter - having lived and hunted for approximately seventeen years with the various Eskimo tribes inhabiting the North American Continent.

To the best of our knowledge, this book will be the first of its kind ever to be presented.

SOMETHING "BRAND"- NEW

The Eskimo words and phrases used in this booklet can be understood by all the Eskimos in the Arctic from Nome around the Arctic coast, across northern Canada, as far as and including Greenland. In this region the language is called the Northern Eskimo language. In every village local dialect changes are found, but if a person knows the booklet thoroughly, he can be understood in any part of the regions mentioned.

---

[1]The Eskimo language as spoken by the native tribes of North America is understood and spoken by several of the indigenous tribes inhabiting that section of the USSR known as Northeast Siberia. Of all the aboriginal tribes existing in NE Siberia, it is believed that the CHUKCHI, KORYAKS, and the KAMCHADALS are more closely akin, anthropologically, to the Eskimos of North America. See attached illustrated map of Siberia.

This language is also spoken by more than half the Eskimos in Siberia from St. Lawrence Bay to the extreme north. The Eskimos around Chaplina speak another language, although the Northern Eskimo language can be understood. The language spoken by Siberian Eskimos in the vicinity of Chaplina is also spoken by American Eskimos on St. Lawrence Island along the Yukon River and as far south as Bethel (60°46'N-161°44'W) on the Kuskokwim River.

The language as given in this booklet is spoken on the Siberian coast from St. Lawrence Bay to East Cape and on to a point about 150 miles northwest of East Cape.

The two languages have in common the roots of about 50% of the words, but the build-up of the words differs from Eskimo as much as Spanish differs from English. But most Chukchi speak one or the other of the Eskimo dialects as a second language.

The Eskimo language has many peculiarities. It is a very rich language using many more words in ordinary conversation than most other languages. The rules of grammar are many and precise and the person who speaks Eskimo cannot make any ambiguous statements.

The peculiarities of the language make the learning of it very difficult, but it is necessary to know some points of grammar in order to make this booklet practicable. There are no generic words. Adjectives and adverbs as we understand them do not exist. They are part of a verb or a declension of the substantive. There are no possessive pronouns. The possessive is expressed by the suffix ending of the word. All nouns are declined as in Latin. The possessive case is also declined. Thus, in some nouns you find a double declension. For example, to translate the words "in our houses," there is a double declension, the second last syllable showing the possessive case and the last syllable denoting the ordinary declensional ending. "In-nee" is the word for house. "Clip-tik" is the possessive particle of the second person plural and "nee" is the declensional ending to denote location. Thus, "in-ee clip-tik nee" translates the phrase "in our houses."

There is only one conjugation in Eskimo and the various moods and tenses are expressed by inserting an infix between the root of the word and the personal transitive or intransitive ending. There are numerous examples of this all through the booklet.

There are two ways of forming a sentence in Eskimo. In one case a transitive verb is used and the other the intransitive verb. It would be advisable when making up an Eskimo sentence to use a transitive verb as it is so much easier. The Eskimos themselves use the intransitive form much more often, but the method suggested will, in most cases, be understood. All through the booklet the intransitive form is most used, but a sentence made up using the transitive form will be understood, although the Eskimos themselves in conversation, might not use it. It is grammatically correct, but not the "King's English."

DETERMINING LOCATION IN ESKIMO LANGUAGE IS UNIQUE

If you ask an Eskimo whence comes the "nay-ek", which is the Eskimo word for North Wind, he will automatically make a motion toward the North. The Eskimo, as a rule, does not know the points of the compass, but he has different names for different points of the compass accordingly, as they vary in the locality. If a person knows one point, such as the direction of the North Wind, then other points of the compass can be figured out.

The word for sun is "mas-soc" and the East can be found out by asking, "na-gin mas-soc my-yak pa" - which means literally, whence does the sun rise up. The expression for sunset is "mas-soc at-ka-tok." With these few expressions, the compass points can be worked out. When asked these questions the Eskimo will automatically point to the direction desired.

HOW DOES ALL THIS AID IN "E & E"!

Escape and Evasion in a future war, especially in the relatively isolated North Polar Regions of the USSR, will possibly be over longer distances, in an area where the population is not friendly. The influence of the International Red Cross and the Geneva Convention does not apply. Such a factor as having a brief knowledge of the Eskimo language could do much to provide a method of getting home. (SECRET) End.

This will reply to your letter of 3 March 1950, subject: as above, requesting that consideration be given toward establishing a policy which will prevent duplication of effort and possible interference between interested agencies in preparing a plan which will provide means for obtaining intelligence information in the event Alaska, or any part of it, is occupied by an enemy force.

2. Upon presentation of the above subject to the Central Intelligence Agency, that Agency pointed out that Alaska was not within its jurisdiction, and recommended that the Defense Department discuss the matter with the Federal Bureau of Investigation. [redacted]

3. The matter of coordination of F.B.I. and Office of Special Investigations, Department of the Air Force intelligence activities in Alaska is presently being developed by those agencies, and your planning for underground intelligence activities in the event of enemy occupation of Alaska should be conducted in cooperation with local F.B.I. and O.S.I. representatives. However, Evasion and Escape activities are a responsibility delegated to the C.I.A. under the provisions of NSC 10/1, and that subject should not be included in your planning with the F.B.I. and O.S.I. at this time. The jurisdictional problems with respect to Evasion and Escape activities in Alaska are under active consideration, and you will be further advised when they have been resolved.

PROPOSALS IMPLEMENTING THE PROSED PLAN FOR INTELLIGENCE COVERAGE IN ALASKA

Pursuant to a directive received by the Anchorage office, Federal Bureau of Investigation, directing the submission of concrete proposals for the execution of the proposed plan for intelligence coverage in Alaska, the representatives of the Anchorage office, Federal Bureau of Investigation, and representatives of the Office of Special Investigations, Alaskan Air Command, after preliminary conferences submit the following as proposals to implement the proposed plan.

I. ADMINISTRATION

1. The overall administration of the plan within Alaska will be accomplished by a committee composed of four (4) persons; that is, the Special Agent in Charge and the Assistant Special Agent in Charge, Anchorage office, Federal Bureau of Investigation, United States Department of Justice, and the Director and Deputy Director, Office of Special Investigations, Alaskan Air Command. Proper administration requires that the administratorsbe familiar and conversant with the people and their customs as well as the terrain. Limitations upon the execution of the plan must be known by the administrators thereof, and such limitations are imposed by the people and the terrain.

ALL FBI INFORMATION CONTAINED HEREIN IS UNCLASSIFIED DATE 3-31-94 BY

II. DEFINITIONS

1. To the definitions enunciated in the plan there shall be added the following:

a. CELL - a group of individuals generally consisting of a principal and a number of agents which the principal has recruited (the number depending upon the location and availability of agents; the usual number being 4 or 5); and, in addition, a number of subagents, which each agent has recruited. It is required that the subagents are not aware of the identity of the principal, and that neither the agents nor the subagents know each other in any given cell. More than one cell will be recruited in the urban districts and thus the cell is to be considered, for purposes of secrecy, a unit compartmentalized vertically.

III. SELECTION OF PERSONNEL

1. Because of the recognized policy the Soviets use to immobilize and/or liquidate large masses of populated areas a "saturation" of agents under this plan is required. Insofar as possible as wide a variation of occupation should be considered. Thus within Anchorage and Fairbanks it is deemed highly desirable to create as many cells as the availability of proper personnel permits. It is considered that one cell per five thousand (5,000) of population should be considered the maximum saturation; this would amount to a principal, 5 or 6 agents, and approximately 30 subagents plus such informants as could be acquired. This contemplates a total of approximately 35 persons in 5,000 (plus informants) which is a reasonable saturation; and in a town of 40,000, 8 such cells would be the desirable coverage.

2. An example of a typical person to be one of the principals, as suggested by OSI, is a professional photographer in Anchorage; he has only one arm and it is felt that he would not benefit the enemy in any labor battalion; he is an amateur radio operator; he is a professional photographer; he is licensed as a hunting or fishing guide, and well versed in the art of survival; he is a pilot of small aircraft; he is reasonably intelligent, particularly crafty, and possessed of sufficient physical courage as is indicated by his offer to guide a party which was to have hunted Kodiak bear armed only with bow and arrow. If such an individual were chosen it is believed that he would be eminently satisfactory as a principal and would be capable of choosing agents who would be capable of performing their assigned missions.

3. Concerning the recruitment of personnel it is pointed out that methods which are practical in urban areas of Alaska are not precisely adaptable to rural areas. As a typical urban area, the establishment of the system in Anchorage, with a population of approximately 40,000, entails the choise of 8 principals by the administrator. The principals will be carefully screened prior to recruitment. Because most people in Alaska are interested primarily in making money the administrator must be able to offer, within specified limits, the reimbursement to the principal, and also inform him of the reimbursement that he may offer his agents, and this must be done at the time when the principal is first approached in order that any possible appeal to patriotism may not have to be made piecemeal or frittered away entirely. Since the principal will be made responsible for the setting up of his cell, the administrator must deal with him without reservation. The principal, when recruited, will proceed to in turn recruit 5 or 6 agents. Each agent will be recruited only after the principal has cleared his choice of agent with the administrator, in order to preclude 2 or more principals having the same agent and to preclude the recruitment of questionable agents. The principal will not divulge to any of his agents the identity of the other agents, thus the capture of one agent will not lead to a compromise of the whole cell. After the recruitment of an agent, such agent will submit to the principal the names of his nominees to be subagents; such nominees will be screened by the administrator and the principal acting in concert. If approved the agent will approach the subagent and recruit him, but in no case will the subagent be made aware that there is a principal or be aware of a principal's identity; nor will a subagent know the identity of any of the other subagents.

4. In the event of an invasion it is contemplated that the principal will proceed immediately to a point where food and equipment have been cached by and for him. The principal will then operate from a point outside the urban area. The point from which the principal will operate will be at a reasonably inaccessible and not readily discoverable place. All such points will be plotted by the administrator after selection by the administrator and principal acting in concert and proper authorities will be advised of such points where principals may be contacted.

5. In rural areas a somewhat similar cell system will be established wherever possible. Where the lack of sufficient population density is too great, however, the cell system may be modified accordingly. In addition, saturation is neither necessary nor possible.

6. Women will not be used in any operation contemplated by the proposed plan.

IV. LOCATION OF AGENTS

1. Cells of the network will be located in Anchorage, and in the rural areas surrounding Anchorage. Cells will be established in Fairbanks and in the rural areas surrounding Fairbanks. Cells will be established at Nome, and in the rural areas around Nome if possible. A cell should be established at either Kotzebue or Wales if possible. Some modification of the cell structure will be established at Galena, Tanana, Nenana, McGrath, and Bethel.

V. TRAINING OF AGENTS

1. Because it is normal that the inhabitants of Alaska visit in Washington, Oregon, etc, and because a reason for such travel is not hard to establish, the principals and the agents will be trained within the State of Washington. Such training will be concentrated in a populated area such as Seattle, Tacoma, or Spokane. The principals will be trained first and the agents will be trained subsequently.

2. The effectiveness of the system will depend upon the various individuals remaining unknown to each other, and this presents a major problem insofar as training is concerned. Wherever practicable a principal sent to the training school will be given an assumed name which will be used by him during the course of instruction. In addition, principals from the same general area will not be trained at the same time; for example, one principal each from Anchorage, Fairbanks, or Nome, etc, may be trained at the same time, but more than one principal from Anchorage, etc, will not be sent to the school at the same time. The alternative is to establish 2 or more courses of instruction, or 2 or more schools in such a manner as to prevent contact between individuals from the same vicinity.

3. The course of instruction shall consist of the following subjects, the relative importance of each of which is indicated by the number of hours estimated as a requirement for that subject:

a. Cover stories, pretexts, and deception (8 hours)

b. Simple encoding and decoding of messages (10 hours)

c. Surreptitious photography and micro photographs (20 hours)

d. Surreptitious methods of entry (4 hours)

e. Secret inks (2 hours)

f. Essential information and methods of deduction (15 hours)

g. Methods of selection and training of subagents and informants (10 hours)

h. Methods of observation (4 hours)

i. Communication, including telegraph, radio, etc (20 hours)

j. Methods of interviewing and interrogation (3 hours)

k. Air drop and pick-up techniques, including recognition (8 hours)

l. Scouting, patroling, map reading, and sketching (20 hours)

m. Guerrilla techniques and close combat (20 hours)

n. Russian secret police techniques (8-10 hours)

o. Russian military organization, uniforms, and equipment (10 hours)

p. Demolition techniques (20 hours)

q. Survival under arctic conditions (summer and winter) (30 hours)

r. Piloting, maintenance, and concealment of light aircraft (designated agents only) (20 hours)

4. Training will be conducted by the best qualified personnel obtainable. Such instructors will be hired in the United States by the Federal Bureau of Investigation and/or Office of Special Investigations, or where such personnel are available within such organizations they will be detailed as instructors in the school. Former Office of Strategic Service operatives, present or former Central Intelligence Agency operatives, or other present or former government employees will be utilized as instructors. In any case such instructors will be obtained by the FBI and/or OSI. Arrangements for the rental of necessary buildings and equipment will also be made by Headquarters Federal Bureau of Investigation and/or Office of Special Investigations.

VI. PAYMENT OF AGENTS

1. The administrator will purchase and/or requisition all necessary equipment to be furnished all paid personnel, or will cache such equipment as indicated.

2. Personnel will be paid in advance for necessary official travel or reimbursed therefor in accordance with the desires of the individual involved. No receipts will be required in any case. The administrator will control sufficient funds to operate the system insofar as travel expenses and incidentals are concerned.

3. Each principal shall be paid on a stand-by or inactive basis at a rate not to exceed $3,000 per annum. Such money will be paid directly to the principal or deposited to his account at such place and according to such instructions as may be desired by the principal. In the event of active duty (e.g., while attending a course of instruction, etc) or after an invasion has commenced, each principal will receive double the amount agreed upon as stand-by reimbursement. Agents will be paid for stand-by duty at the rate of not to exceed $2500 per annum under the same circumstances as the principal. Informants will not be paid on a salary basis but may be paid for specific information as required. In no case will payment be made in advance to either principal or agent but payment may be made in advance to informant for specified information.

4. Provision will be made to pay all personnel in accordance with their desires after an invasion has begun. In addition, all personnel will be furnished items for bartering. Such items will be those most prized by the invading force and those most prized by the civilian populace. Such items will not be chargeable against the reimbursement of principal or agent. Such items shall consist of, but not be limited to, firearms, ammunition (commercial type), cameras, watches, pen-knives, clothing (civilian type) and staple foods.

VII. TYPES OF INFORMATION TO BE OBTAINED

1. The principal and each agent should be taught to be alert for the following essential elements of information:

   a. Location, strength, disposition and identification of all enemy military forces

b. Tactics and techniques of enemy forces

c. Types of weapons and equipment

d. Logistical situation

e. Indications of reconnaissance

f. Indications of objectives

2. It is believed that 2-way radio communication between the administrator and at least some of the principals will always be possible. In any event it will be easier for the administrator to communicate to the principal any information which the former desires than it will be for the principal to make reply. An enemy can much more easily locate a clandestine radio which is sending messages than he can a radio which is merely receiving. Thus particular items of information desired by the administrator may be fed into the network as required. A general training in what information may be required is deemed to be the most feasible approach to this subject.

VIII COMMUNICATIONS

1. Inasmuch as the present planning contemplates that the principals will proceed immediately, upon invasion, to a predetermined hide-out removed from urban areas, such principal shall be furnished a long-range, heavy-duty combination receiver-transmitter type radio which will be battery operated. Such a radio must have a minimum range of transmission of 1,000 miles and an all-wave-band receiver. Such a radio must be capable of being operated by dry cell batteries which may be resupplied by air drop as required. In addition, each principal will be furnished a small, concealable, pocket-type receiver and transmitter similar to the "Gibson-Girl" for the purpose of communication with agents. This latter equipment should have a minimum transmission range of 200 miles, with a fixed wave transmission. The receiver of the latter equipment should be of a fixed-wave type, tuned to similar equipment furnished agents.

2. Each agent and subagent will be equipped with a "Gibson-Girl" type compact radio receiver-transmitter. The receiver will be tuned to the wave length of the similar equipment issued the principal, and the transmitter will be tuned to the wave length of the receiver issued the principal. Frequencies will vary as between each cell.

3. Each principal will be instructed in the techniques of air drop and air pick-up and will be equipped with panels for ground-to-air communication.

4. Principals and agents will be taught the use of signal-flags, signal-mirrors, and simple flashlight or smoke signaling for local communication. Necessary equipment will be furnished to accomplish such mission.

IX. EQUIPMENT

1. All principals will be furnished the following minimum items of equipment, which will generally be packed in a manner suitable for burial underground or hidden in caves, etc:

a. A small calibre automatic pistol, fitted with a maxim-type silencer.

b. A 30-06 semi-automatic rifle with 4-power telescopic sights.

c. Concealable field glasses, similar to the Mikron, 6X15 power, manufactured by Japan Optical Company, Ltd, Tokyo.

d. 150 Feet of climbing rope, with crampons and petons.

e. A commercial type parka, Eskimo type trousers, mukluks, and gloves, with fur cap.

f. Trail type snow shoes, with bindings.

g. Commercial type skiis, with bindings, poles, and shoes; ski wax.

h. Emergency rations, cooking utensils, portable stove.

i. Commercial type pack.

j. Sleeping bag.

k. Maps and aerial photographs of the area included within the cell.

l. Woolen undergarments and socks.

m. A Leika-type camera with 135 mm telephoto lens and copying facilities.

n. Commercial type ammunition for issued pistol and rifle.

o. 100 Gallons of gasoline in 5-gallon cans.

p. Demolition type explosives sufficient to destroy the cache.

q. Signal panels, signal mirror, flashlight with batteries, and radio equipment.

r. First aid equipment.

s. Folding canvas canoe with small paddle.

t. "Mae West" type life jacket.

u. Sniper scope, complete.

v. $500 in gold or silver coin.

w. Bartering materials as required.

x. Garroting device, commando-type knife, hunting knife, and blackjack.

2. In addition to the minimum equipment above mentioned, it may be necessary in certain instances to provide equipment such as outboard motors, sleds and dogteams (or components thereof), or other items.

3. Agents and subagents will be equipped with the following items:

a. Radio equipment as indicated.

b. Leika-type camera, with copying attachments.

c. Minox-type camera

d. Signal mirror and flashlight.

e. Emergency rations.

f. Bartering material as indicated.

SOVIET PARTISAN WARFARE

SUMMARY AND CONCLUSIONS: In the Soviet concept of war, partisans constitute a useful and flexible weapon, either in defense of home territory or as a disruptive force in the enemy's territory. In World War II, the Soviets skillfully utilized partisans in the U.S.S.R. Since then, in the cold war, the Soviets have sponsored, directly or indirectly, partisan operations in Iran, Greece, Indo-China, Malaya, and, to a lesser extent, in other troubled regions. In accordance with the clandestine and unconventional Communist methods of waging war, partisans often, imperceptibly, are expanded into a formal military force; and, equally readily, Communist military forces may take cover when necessary by going underground and operating as partisans. The Soviets employ partisans, but they know through their own and others' experience that this weapon can be a treacherous one to those who use it. Urgent necessity led them to support and expand a partisan movement in Western Russia during World War II. In the future, however, it is more likely that Communist-led partisans will be employed as a relatively inexpensive agency in foreign countries, either in the preparation and support of Soviet aggression, or as an independent disruptive force.

possibilities of the "poor man's" guerrilla type of defensive war which they observed in Spain.

For many years, in the 1920's and 1930's, the Soviets were able to observe the apparently indestructible Chinese Communist guerrillas and intermittently, when it suited, to lend aid to them. There is no doubt that the Soviets studied these operations and pondered their lessons, probably more profitably than the other Major Powers.

In World War II, circumstances, as much as plan, led the Soviet leadership to utilize the partisan movement in the overrun western districts of the Soviet Union. This Soviet partisan effort eventually achieved notable success in several regions. By VJ-day, the Soviets had abundant proof of the value and effectiveness of organized partisan operations in support of defensive and offensive military operations by regular military forces.

Furthermore, the success of relatively small groups of Communists in France, Italy, and Greece in gaining dominant influence in the anti-Axis national resistance movements set the stage in those war-weakened countries for powerful postwar Communist movements. In Greece and Italy, the wartime achievements of the Communist-controlled partisans were parlayed very nearly into actual postwar seizure of power. The cost to the Soviet Union of these near-successes was negligible. The cost of rescuing the hard-pressed Western-oriented regimes in these countries, on the other hand, was very great.

Communist experience with partisans presumably has led the Soviet leaders to consider them an inexpensive and often effective military weapon. Yet the weapon can sometimes misfire badly. The fiasco of the Soviet-sponsored Azerbaijani "government" in Iran in 1946 was a blow to Soviet influence in the Middle East. The failure of the Communist guerrillas in Greece cost the U.S.S.R. heavily in prestige.

SOVIET WORLD WAR II EXPERIENCE

The Soviets had planned before World War II to organize and employ partisans in minor auxiliary roles. A "Partisan Directive" is said to have been published in 1933. General Staff Academy exercises in 1940 included the use of partisans in a defensive situation in Belorussia. Small Komsomol groups in Western U.S.S.R. were receiving guerrillas training when the war broke out in June 1941.

Early partisan groups in western Russia consisted in part of remnants of shattered Soviet Army units, but chiefly they were formed spontaneously from local inhabitants.

SOVIET PARTISAN WARFARE

COMMUNIST-LED GROUPS OF THIS KIND PROBABLY WILL BE EMPLOYED IN TARGET COUNTRIES AS AN INEXPENSIVE AGENCY FOR EITHER PREPARING OR SUPPORTING SOVIET AGGRESSION

Before the outbreak of hostilities in Korea, the Soviet-controlled North Koreans had been making extensive use of guerrillas in the Republic of Korea. Since last 26 June, however, the scope of Communist partisan operations has been, in large measure, limited to the immediate combat area.

The Soviets had used partisans on a large scale against the Germans in the U.S.S.R. during World War II, and since 1945 in Iran, Greece, Malaya, and Indo-China.

Soviet military doctrine stresses the value of partisan activities, both as an adjunct to conventional military operations and as an independent means of military action. Partisan operations are one element of the broadly inclusive Soviet concept of total war. They also are a particularly convenient means of conducting a localized operation without legally involving the true aggressor. On the defensive, relinquished territory, which has been heavily booby-trapped with organized Communist partisan units, can cost the advancing enemy a heavy price to hold and pacify. And lastly, partisan operations often can be given the appearance of conforming to Communist political pretentions; the partisans can be represented as a righteous people in arms rising against foreign or domestic tyranny.

BACKGROUND OF THE SOVIET PARTISAN IDEA

Very early in its history, the Bolshevik regime made extensive and successful use of partisan groups. The Red Guards and other groups who seized power for the Bolsheviks in October 1917 were in reality, disciplined urban partisans. Much of the Red Army which fought the Russian Civil War in 1918-1921 consisted of local partisan organizations more or less effectively controlled by Bolshevik commissars.

The official Soviet histories of the Civil War later magnified the achievements of these Red Partisans and made them a romantic legend. The Paris Commune of 1871 and the Russian irregulars who helped defeat Napoleon in 1812 were both assimilated to this legend of the power of a people in arms.

The Civil War in Spain - a country with its own prestigious guerrilla tradition - was fought in 1936-39 on a semipartisan basis. The Soviet military advisors to the Republican government probably learned much about the Soviet planning indicated that local Party leaders and NKVD personnel would form the cadre of the partisan bands, but the rapidity of the German advance and the hostility of the people toward the Soviet regime made the local Party leaders' task difficult, and many of them were turned over to the German Army by the local populace. Nevertheless, the local Party underground members acted with resourcefulness and energy in many cases, and they soon established firm contact with the military partisans.

Vigorous measures were taken by the Kremlin, acting through the Party and the main Political Directorate of the Army, to give direction and support to the developing guerrilla forces in the overrun western districts. On 3 July 1941, Stalin issued his first directive to the partisans, whose operations were referred to as the "Second Front" behind the enemy lines. Stalin enjoined the partisans to harry and frustrate the enemy, and to track down and exterminate Soviet individuals who gave comfort to the enemy.

This last order was important, for disaffection was widespread in the overrun regions. If the Germans themselves - chiefly the Nazi race-supremacy believers and the Party carpetbaggers who swarmed eastward in the Army's wake - had not alienated the people of western Russia, the partisan movement probably would not have developed beyond a desultory and inconsequential nuisance to the invaders.

By mid-1942, however, the people of the occupied provinces had become thoroughly disillusioned with their conquerors, and the Kremlin had crystallized its plans and set up the means for developing the partisan network into a major military and propaganda weapon.

A unified Central Staff of the Partisan Movement was set up in Moscow under [redacted] This headquarters drew together the many partisan units which had been formed under local initiative. Representatives of the Central Staff were attached to each army group and regional Party headquarters. Radio and other regular communication channels were established. Supplies were furnished to partisan groups, chiefly by air drop. Trained leaders, technical personnel, and others were sent to join them. Close and effective liaison was established between the staffs of the army groups and partisans in their areas. Partisan missions were coordinated with the Army's plans; in fact, the coordination was so close that the Germans found by experience that marked increase of partisan strength and activity in a given area was usually a firm indication that the Red Army was about to attack on that sector.

By 1943, partisan activites had become important enough in Belorussia to pin down nearly 100,000 German rear-area security troops and to achieve endemic disruption of German lines of communication. An outstanding example of the partisans' capabilities occurred in June 1944, when the Soviet Army launched a major offensive on the central front in eastern Belorussia. On the eve of the offensive, Soviet partisans made 15,000 demolition attempts on railroads behind the German lines. Two-thirds of these were successful, and all railroads in the area were blocked. This temporary paralysis of lines of communication, occurring just at the time of a massive enemy frontal attack, contributed significantly to the defeat and early collapse of the German Army Group Center.

Soviet partisan activity was further damaging to the Germans because it caused the withdrawal of many soldiers from the front line to protect the rear areas and to carry out antipartisan missions. This diversion of force significantly reduced German capabilities at the front. Second-class German troops - men with infirmities or members of older age groups - were widely employed on lines-of-communication duty, but they proved generally unequal to the task of coping with elusive and energetic partisan bands.

As the front moved west of the 1939 borders, however, the partisans became less important. The Communist Party in Poland, the Baltic States, Western Ukrainia, and in most Balkan countries had little authority over the population, and the Red Army was received with suspicion and sometimes with active hostility by the local populace. Partisans contributed little to the Army's successes during the final six months of the fighting.

CHARACTERISTICS - ORGANIZATION AND CONTROL

At its fullest development, the Soviet partisan movement was a well-knit, disciplined organization, built on military lines.

Over-all leadership came from the Central Staff of the Partisan Movement in Moscow. In typical Soviet fashion, channels of command were multiple and parallel. Central Staff representatives were attached to regional Party headquarters, and to headquarters of army groups. The partisan staff of a regional Party headquarters included intelligence (espionage), logistical, NKVD, propaganda, and training sections, and probably others. Local partisan missions were worked out between the partisan leaders and army and army group operations and intelligence officers.

At the same time, important partisan leaders, like the much-publicized General Kovpak, had a direct channel to Moscow. In addition to the special partisan channels, and the Party and Army channels, the NKVD exercised control over partisans for punitive and counter-espionage activities in enemy-occupied areas.

Field units were organized into brigades of from 400 to 3,000 in strength. Brigades had staffs and well-developed service elements. Some brigades had special weapons groups, including light artillery, antitank guns, and even tanks. Under the brigades were smaller groups, sometimes called battalions, each of which consisted of several detachments. A typical brigade consisted of 4 to 6 battalions, together with smaller units of special troops, and each battalion controlled 3 to 7 detachments, each of about 75 to 100 men and women. Although there was great flexibility in organization, these general outlines were adhered to, and units were not allowed to become too large and cumbersome.

Partisan "divisions" were reported, but brigades were normally the largest units. In Belorussia, the most heavily infested area, the Germans estimated that, in the spring of 1943, there were approximately 45 such brigades, as well as more than 50 other miscellaneous splinter groups.

Presumably, all of these groups, amounting possibly to 100,000 or more men, reported directly to their local army and Party contacts. First-rate light radio and other communications made it possible to maintain relatively firm control and close liaison, both laterally among the partisan groups and with headquarters. This control and liaison are recognized as a feature which assisted in the establishment of strict discipline among partisan units.

RECRUITMENT OF PERSONNEL

Partisan leaders in many instances were Regular Army officers. Some had formed bands in the early days of the war, but more often leaders were flown or parachuted in to take command or act as staff officers of existing partisan units. All sorts of trained specialists - radio operators, doctors and nurses, demolition experts, motor mechanics, and armorers - were sent from the zone of the interior. In addition, in many cases persons called up for military service in the zone of interior were invited to volunteer for partisan service; after a brief training they were flown in or parachuted in as replacements. Several cases are reported of groups - up to several hundred in strength - of trained paratroopers being dropped behind German lines with the mission of organizing new partisan bands.

In enemy-occupied areas, the Communist Party and partisans established a half-clandestine Soviet military government. The power of this underground local government often was complete and overt over the broad interstitial areas between main railroads and outside major towns. It regularly called up men of military age for partisan military service, and it did not hesitate in emergency to impress personnel of all ages.

Party members and Komsomols in occupied areas usually were willing volunteers; they had no alternative, as the Germans dealt summarily with captured Party people. Children, veterans of the 1918-21 Civil War, young girls - the female of the species, complained the Germans, was particularly deadly - and priests all joined out of conviction, coercion, or with an eye to the future.

In addition, Russians who had been organized by the Germans into auxiliary military units on the Eastern Front often defected to the partisans, sometimes in whole units. And finally, Soviet citizens, who had collaborated with the Germans, often joined the partisans in an effort to hedge against their earlier unwise choice of sides.

Once in the partisan movement, its members found that they had no choice but to remain; disciplinary and security measures were harsh and often arbitrarily applied.

Finally, as the partisan country was recovered by the Red Army, many of the partisans found themselves summarily inducted en masse into the Regular Army.

SUPPLY

Simple but effective logistical machinery was developed for support of the partisans. The underground government in the partisan-held regions regularly requisitioned food and other supplies for the partisans from local villages, giving promissory notes for what they took. Peasants suspected of collaboration with the Germans were plundered. German dumps, supply trains, and motor convoys were systematically raided, and constituted an important source of munitions and other materiel.

The most interesting logistical procedure, however, was the relatively large-scale use of Soviet air-lift in support of the partisans. Camouflaged airfields were laid out in securely held partisan areas, so that effective two-way air traffic was possible. Personnel and materiel were parachuted in where landing fields were not available. An exceptional instance was cited by the Germans: In May 1943, on the central sector, approximately 2,000 air missions, amounting to about one-fourth of the total Soviet air effort in the sector, were flown in support of the partisans. Regular ground operations were at a standstill then; under normal conditions, the scale of air effort devoted to partisan support was of the order of three to five percent of the total air effort.

The partisan air-lift supply machinery was developed to the point of flying in such special items as generals' uniforms for important partisan leaders, a new set of false teeth for one prominent leader, and a good stock of medals and decorations for distribution to the "Red Army soldiers in the enemy's rear." Motion picture actresses and other entertainers and VIP's visited the partisan front to stimulate morale by their presence.

Within their wooded and marshy areas, the partisans established numerous base camps and cached substantial stores, all protected by an elaborate and cunning system of security outposts.

TRAINING

On the average, Soviet partisans received only the equivalent of basic training. On-the-job training was the rule for ordinary personnel. Specialists and leaders, on the other hand, were often army personnel and well-trained.

Two schools were known, near Moscow, where training was given those who were to be flown or infiltrated into partisan territory. Use of small arms, demolition techniques, map-reading, and orientation were the main subjects taught. A well-thought out and useful little book, "The Partisans Handbook", was published in 1942 and widely disseminated. The Table of Contents is illuminating: (1) Basic Partisan Tactics, (2) German Anti-Partisan Measures, (3) Demolitions, (4) Soviet Weapons, (5) Enemy Weapons, (6) Reconnaissance, (7) Camouflage, (8) Orientation of the Terrain, (9) Antitank Measures, (10) Antiaircraft Measures, (11) Chemical Defense, (12) Close Combat, (13) First Aid, (14) Bivouacs and Field Expedients, and (15) Living Outdoors in Winter.

However sketchy the formal training may have seemed, the partisans' skill was respected by their enemies. Many were outdoor people, accustomed to the difficult wooded and marshy terrain in which they operated.

WEAPONS AND EQUIPMENT

Both Soviet and German weapons were used. Individual arms and machine guns formed the bulk of the partisans' weapons, though antitank guns and, occasionally, artillery and even tanks were encountered. The most important and effective partisan weapon was the explosive charge, ranging in form from conventional antitank mines to home-made box charges used against rail lines. Equipment included: good radio facilities, camouflage suits and sometimes German uniforms, peasant carts for transportation, and light technical materiel which had been flown in or captured.

COMMUNICATION AND INTELLIGENCE

An extensive network of local reliable inhabitants, agents, contact men, and informers kept the partisan bands supplied with information about the enemy. Soviet citizens mobilized by the Germans into auxiliary military units for service tasks on the Eastern Front and individual Soviet civilians employed by the Germans were other sources of intelligence information. The collected information was passed through a series of clandestine message centers to local partisan headquarters. The same channels were used for assignment of missions to the informants and agents.

An extensive communication network was established and maintained by partisan bands. The network linked subordinate partisan groups, provided lateral communications, and tied the partisan units to local Soviet Army headquarters and to the Moscow Headquarters of the Central Staff of the Partisan Movement. Communications, which were always sent in code, were transmitted by messengers, pigeons, dogs, radio, and aircraft.

MISSIONS AND TACTICS

Partisan missions included: destruction of enemy personnel, destruction of enemy installations and materiel, disruption of enemy transportation and communications, reprisals against Soviet citizens collaborating with the enemy, and obtaining intelligence for the Soviet Army. The most important mission was to harass and hamper the enemy's rear-area activities by hit-and-run attacks, ambushes, and demolitions.

Partisan tactics were characterized by meticulous and thorough reconnaissance and planning, surprise and ruse, rapid maneuver, movement and attack usually at night, and special attention to a ready and secure route of withdrawal.

Enemy columns generally were attacked from ambush. The ambush was set up at a point which afforded good camouflage, a good field of fire from the shortest distance, and concealed routes of withdrawal. Strength and weapons of the partisan force occupying an ambush depended on the enemy force and on the assigned task. The raid itself was carried out resolutely, with force and surprise. Raids on moving enemy tanks were carried out from ambush at points where it would be difficult for the tanks to deploy off the road. Tank columns were allowed to approach as close as possible to an ambush, and then were attacked with concentrated charges, antitank guns, and incendiary bottles. Roads were mined beforehand.

Raids on railroad lines were executed most successfully at deep cuts, on slopes, at curves, and on high dams.

Soviet partisans always strove to cause a train wreck by the damage they inflicted to the track or track bed. They were also successful in disrupting railroad traffic by either damaging or destroying bridges, pipes, block houses, switches, crossings, water towers and pumps, turntables, and yard installations.

It was the custom of partisans either to occupy or destroy signal centers first when they attacked railroad installations. In raids of this type, a partisan band was divided into three groups: (1) The battle group, which, by employing stealth, eliminated sentries and occupied the signal center; (2) the demolition group, which destroyed the assigned objective; and (3) the reserve group. Each partisan was fully briefed as to his exact part in the operation.

In ambush raids on troop trains, most of a band would take up a position in such a way that it would be situated at the approximate center of the derailed train. Groups armed with automatic weapons took up positions on both sides of the track near where the front and rear of the stalled train would be. From these positions, they could direct enfilading fire along the cars of the train. Fire was opened or ceased on orders or signals of the partisan band's commander.

Most of the band would take the wrecked train under fire to destroy enemy personnel. Needed supplies were taken from the train whenever possible. Materiel not required, or too heavy to be carried along, would be destroyed.

Demolition of railroad installations necessitated timely and meticulous preparations . Detailed and precise orders were issued by the partisan commander. These included: (1) General and pin-point objectives; (2) composition of the forces to be employed, including demolition specialist groups, size and exact placement of demolition charges; (3) timing of all phases of the operations; and (4) routes of withdrawal and subsequent rendezvous points.

Enemy headquarters were attacked only after careful reconnaissance. The partisans determined the location of staff headquarters, firing positions, guardrooms, officer's billets, POL dumps, and vehicle parks. Also included in the reconnaissance patrols, the routes assigned to patrols, and the enemy's passwords. In raids on enemy headquarters, the partisans always tried to seize enemy documents and archives.

Enemy airports and landing strips also were carefully reconnoitered before raids; and the exact location of hangars and the routes of approach to enemy aircraft and to gasoline and ammunition dumps were established.

In working out operational plans, partisans paid particular attention to the silent annihilation of guard personnel who were billeted in barracks or in tents. The covering section of detachments committed to destroy aircraft and gasoline was always reinforced. This covering section sought to draw the whole fire of surviving enemy guard personnel.

Hangars, aircraft, arsenals, and gasoline tanks were destroyed or set aflame by antitank guns, incendiary small-arms ammunition, grenades, mines, incendiary mixtures, and thermite bombs.

Dumps and supply bases were generally destroyed by arson, after all enemy fire-fighting equipment had been put out of action.

Artillery ammunition dumps were blown up by detonating ammunition boxes stored in them, by introducing infernal machines into the area, or by firing incendiary ammunition at the boxes.

Communication equipment was sabotaged systemically; frequently, parts of field telephone and telegraph lines were cut or destroyed, posts carrying circuits were cut down, or lines short-circuited.

Ruse and deception were the keynote of partisan operations. Partisans worked as laborers on roads and awaited the arrival of a convoy which was attacked at the opportune time. Individual guerrillas dressed in German uniforms would flag German vehicles to a stop and ask to be taken along. Then, at some secluded point, drivers would be killed or forces to drive to a partisan-held area. Partisans and contact men were known to travel camouflaged as Orthodox priests, since these enjoyed greater freedom of movement as well as confidence of the civilian population.

Another ruse was to send a group of partisans wearing German uniforms to a German base of small size at dusk. The partisans would ask for food and shelter in very good German. While some partisans entered the building, others would wait outside, Upon a signal the guerrillas would turn on the Germans and then escape with weapons, ammunition, or other needed supplies. Similar tactics were employed in hit-and-run raids on German billets located on the outskirts of villages and towns.

Explosives and mines were carried by civilians - most often girls - concealed in bundles, from safe hand to safe hand, so that capture of any individual carrier usually would not betray the original source. Swarms of peasant women would cluster around troop trains in stations, offering to barter or sell goods and otherwise attracting attention while their confederates set concealed charges with delayed-action fuzes on the train.

Bases and billets were established on inaccessible terrain in forests or swamps where enemy ground and air observation was impossible. Moreover, partisans changed their operational bases frequently to avoid detection by the Germans, always posted security forces, and maintained constant all-round reconnaissance. These procedures secured them from surprise raids and gave full time for preparations for combat.

When a band was on the march, highways and country roads were carefully scouted. Open terrain was crossed by bounds from cover to cover. If a marching partisan band spotted German aircraft, it would take cover at once. In such a case, the commander would order the march to be continued in more dispersed formation, or a temporary halt would be made.

INFLUENCE OF TERRAIN

As might be expected, Soviet partisan operations were most successful in the wooded, marshy, and largely roadless terrain of Belorussia and the areas of Great Russia to the north and east of Belorussia. Numerous partisan bands operated in mountainous sub-Carpathian Ruthenia and in the forested regions of western Ukrania. Since the people of these areas were largely unsympathetic to the Soviet regime, however, the partisan movement there was largely uncontrolled. It was directed as much against the Soviet Army as against the German Army. The woodless expanses of central and southern Ukraine, on the other hand, offered little cover, and the movement never reached a significant scale in those regions.

PROBLEMS ARISING FROM USE OF PARTISANS - SOVIET METHODS OR CONTROL

Activation and utilization of partisan forces in military operations can lead to unforeseen results, sometimes the opposite of the sponsor's intentions. The Soviets took advantage of the opportunity to utilize the largely spontaneous partisan movement which Nazi Party ineptitude provoked, and from it they organized a successful instrument to assist their military forces.

Effective control of partisans is not easy to establish and maintain. Partisan operations are semiclandestine; in the atmosphere of furtive violence and ephemeral organization in which such operations thrive, persons with the most varied motives and backgrounds are attracted. Social disorganization and easy violence are more readily provoked than exorcised.

The Soviets were thoroughly conscious of this, and they were chary of supporting the partisan groups until strict control had been established. Even so, the Soviet regime and the Communist Party were unable to establish control over numerous partisan bands in western Ukraine, the Baltic States, and eastern Poland. Some of these groups were common brigands; others were uncompromising regional separatists; in any case they were indirectly helpful to the Soviets through their anti-German activities while the Germans occupied their land.

As soon as the Soviets reoccupied those regions, most of these partisans turned against them quite as savagely as they had resisted the Germans. As a consequence, once the Red Army had occupied an area, it took immediate steps to disband and break up partisan groups, to remove the immediate or potential danger which they posed to the Soviet Union. In many cases, this hard-headed procedure must have produced a most sobering disenchantment among the partisans who so lately had been the "darlings" of the Soviet propaganda machine.

ALLIED SUPPORT OF COMMUNIST PARTISANS

Partisans may be ideologically opposed to the very forces which have supported them, thus leaving an armed struggle to settle, once the main fighting has ceased. Moreover, partisan organizations without central control often are opposed to each other and cause a struggle within a struggle.

The Allied position with respect to the wartime Tito-Mikhailovich controversy in Yugoslavia is an outstsnding example of a complicated partisan situation in which attention to immediate considerations led to an unforseen long-term result. Allied support of partisans in Italy and Greece came near to producing a Communist regime in those countries.

GUERRILLAS IN KOREA

For some time before the outbreak of hostilities in Korea, Communist guerrillas, supported by the North Korean Government, had been active in the Republic of Korea south of the 38th parallel. Early in 1950, the Republic had successfully completed a campaign against Communist guerrillas in South Korea and had reduced their strength to negligible proportions. Directly after the 26 June invasion, the ROK took quick and effective action against known or suspected subversives. As a result, the North Korean guerrillas who were sent into the enemy rear found little organized or ready support.

Thus the war in Korea has not yet led to a significant utilization of partisans in their customary role. Instead, it has been limited to infiltration tactics by the North Korean forces. As they withdraw northward, the North Koreans can leave well-equipped partisan detachments behind. The staying power and morale of such elements, however, are an unpredictable factor.

ANTIPARTISAN MEASURES

An effective partisan movement cannot exist in a region unsympathetic to the partisans and their cause. The most desirable and militarily inexpensive defense against partisans lies in winning the active and willing association of the inhabitants of a partisan-infested area. Local antipartisan defense units can be utilized effectively in such situation.

Passive defense measures in a hostile country include: (1) An intelligence network to keep the local commander informed of indigenous activity; and (2) a consolidation of friendly installations and lines of communication to simplify defensive requirements. However, the most effective military defense against active partisan groups is a well-trained, mobile striking force which can strike hard and quickly against the elusive enemy. These striking units must, necessarily, be specially trained, first-class troops which have the ability to seek out and eliminate the partisans. They must, in effect, be able to outdo the partisans at their own game. The complete elimination of partisans' units is necessary, or else their strength and organization are soon augmented and the expensive process begins over again.

2. It has been determined that in view of the fact that Alaska is a territorial possession of the United States, that the Air Force and the Federal Bureau of Investigation have joint responsibility for covert intelligence collection and Evasion and Escape operations in Alaska. Accordingly, the Office of Special Investigations, USAF, and the Federal Bureau of Investigation at the Washington level have prepared a proposed plan for these operations, three (3) copies of which are forwarded herewith for your consideration. Coordination of the proposed plan has been effected between OSI and FBI, and information copies have been made available to G-2, USA; Director, ONI, USN; C.O., Air Rescue Service; Director of Intelligence, DCS/O, Hqs USAF; and DCS/Operations, Hqs USAF.

4. It is suggested that the attached proposed plan be reviewed by and coordinated with appropriate military and FBI representatives in Alaska. In order to preclude conflicting independent action being taken by your Headquarters and the interested agencies in the Zone of the Interior, no further action will be taken by this Headquarters to expand or implement the proposed plan at this time. POSITIVE INTELLIGENCE

TO Director of Special Investigations
Headquarters, USAF
Washington 25, D. C.

1. Reference is made to your letter, with inclosure, file 49-, subject as above, dated 3 November 1950, and particularly to paragraph 4 of referenced letter wherein the comments and/or suggestions of this command are solicited in connection with the proposed plan for covert intelligence, etc.

2. With respect to paragraph 2 of referenced letter, in view of the fact that the responsibility for the establishment of the proposed covert operations has been determined and in view of the fact that such responsibility is joint, it would appear that no comment relative to such jointness of responsibility is required. The unsolicited opinion of this command, however, is that many advantages would accrue had the responsibility been placed upon either one or the other of the responsible agencies. The participation of the Air-Sea Rescue Service could, in such case, be then insured by proper directives as required.

3. With respect to paragraph 4 of referenced letter, it is felt that insufficient background information is available upon which to base the comments and/or suggestions in connection with this plan, particularly as such information affects this command. For example, it is patent that enormous resources and expenditures of material and money are involved in the establishment of an operation of this nature, and that such logistical problems are of vital concern to this command. No mention is made in either the proposed plan or the referenced letter of the sources, availability, or accountability of funds, equipment, or other logistical items. This command is, therefore, unable to estimate what present or future support by this command may be required in this venture.

4. Present commitments in connection with the current mission of this command are such as to preclude the utilization of available funds and/or equipment (including personnel, housing for a training school, aircraft, etc) in support of the proposed plan. The same applies with equal emphasis to the Air-Sea Rescue organization presently in this theater. For example, the latter organization will require additional personnel, with specialized training, and additional aircraft and equipment in order to undertake the functions contemplated by your proposal.

5. The need for the projects contemplated in referenced letter and the attached proposed plan is deemed self-evident. This command, therefore, is prepared to categorically approve the general outline of the projects as presented, with certain minor modifications.

6. Accordingly, it is requested that this command be furnished sufficient additional information upon which to base a reply to referenced letter. Specifically, it is requested that you furnish this command with a detailed outline of the support which will be expected of this command in the establishment of this project. AT KOTZEBUE, ALASKA:

1. On 27 August 1950 Mr. [redacted] Fish and Wildlife Service Agent, advised it was in the Kotzebue Grill where [redacted] remarked that a foreign power desired delivery of over a million gallons of diesel oil per year; that he had letters from the State Department indicating that the State Department would clear him to export 500,000 gallons per year; and that he would not proceed with such plans because he did not have the proper equipment to handle such quantities. [redacted] stated that [redacted] delivers oil in Alaska for the Union Oil Company and has indicated his points of delivery on a map in the Kotzebue Grill with thumb tacks, most of which have fallen from the map. The writer noted thumb tacks on the map marking Noatak, White Mountain, Cape Denbeigh, the mouth of the Selawik River, and Point Banks on Shuyak Island. [redacted] believes that [redacted] is loyal to the United States even though he frequently criticizes domestic policies and regulations.

AT WAINWRIGHT, ALASKA:

2. Located 70°40' N; 159°45' W, Wainwright is a prosperous village of approximately 200 natives who make a living by hunting, fishing, and seasonal longshore work at Barrow. Mr. and Mrs. [redacted], Alaska Native Service (ANS) school teachers, stated that the natives go about their work with little thought to the world situation or to any possibilities of invasion by a foreign power. The [redacted]S feel the Eskimo would probably not resist an invasion and would readily accept foreign rule if the Eskimo is provided the necessities for sustaining life. The Eskimo has been living so long in a land where his primary interests are tangible things which will keep him alive that he just cannot comprehend the feeling of loyalty to the Government. But with an improving educational system, introduction of modern techniques, and membership in the National Guard, it is felt that the Eskimo will learn to know the quality of loyalty. No unusual incidents or activities of a subversive nature were reported.

AT BARROW, ALASKA:

3. Barrow, with a population of 932 natives and approximately 25 whites, is located 71°23' N; 156°31' W. A vessel of 3000 tons can anchor safely .6 mile from the village. The water remains quite deep to the beach which extends approximately 30 yards to a nearly vertical bank about 15 feet high. Beyond is the tundra which can best be traveled over in track vehicles as weasels and "cats". With permafrost from 8 to 16 inches beneath the surface, continued travel in summer over any one route creates a very muddy condition making travel even with track vehicles difficult.

4. On 2 September 1950 Mr. [redacted] Principal, ANS school, stated that the village is ruled by a native council whose effectiveness has decreased because of the size of the village and because of the modern standard of living prevailing since the natives became prosperous. About 75 or 100 natives are employed by the Arctic Contractors on the project at Naval Petroleum Reserve No. 4. They work 7 days a week, 9 hours a day, at a minimum wage of $1.38 per hour. About 14 natives are employed at the Meade River Coal Mine operated by [redacted]. The mine is 80 miles south of Barrow. The other natives for the most part hunt, fish and trap, and sell their catch to those employed.

Organization of a National Guard unit is proceeding satisfactorily. The Eskimo feels proud to belong and is considered excellent for rescue work and, with proper guidance, collection of information about the area. Just how good a combat soldier the Eskimo can be is a debatable point. No unusual occurrences or incidents of subversion have been noted.

5. On 1 September 1950 Mr. [redacted] Official in Charge, Weather Bureau, stated that an air of tension exists between the native and the whites. He explained that the native has the money to live by white man's standards and has become independent and occasionally exhibits a belligerent attitude. Actually, according to [redacted] the native does not like the white and [redacted] feels that the setting is proper for anyone who would want to create unrest among the natives.

Should the petroleum project be discontinued another serious problem will have to be met. Though the natives receive goodwages there is little evidence that they are saving any. One wonders how the native will react if he must revert to his former methods of hunting and fishing to exist, for few of his former methods of existing are in effect. What little carving and skin sewing is being done reflects a rapidly disappearing art. The frame houses which most of the Eskimos have constructed cannot be maintained without financial income. In general conversation with personnel of government agencies presently assisting the Eskimos, the writer learned that many are cognizant of problems which may arise but there is no apparent planning for the future.

6. On 3 September 1950 [redacted], bush pilot, stated substantially the same information as set forth above. In addition he said that the strained relationship between the Eskimo and the whites has been aggravated by the reported attitude of the U. S. Commissioner, [redacted] who discourages association between the two groups. It is rumored that [redacted] without any apparent reason, asked [redacted], a native foreman, to leave the Officers dining hall where he had been invited for dinner. [redacted] also advised that the Presbyterian missionary, [redacted] has just been unable to gain the full confidence of the natives even though the natives are a religious people. Because of his business practices [redacted] descendant of the famous trader, CHARLIE BROWER, is not liked by the natives. CHARLIE BROWER, while alive, maintained an economic stranglehold over the natives. One can still hear natives say that they were [redacted]'S "slaves". [redacted] has no knowledge of a subversive element working among the natives.

AT POINT LAY, ALASKA:

7. This village of approximately 50 people is located on the shore of the Arctic Ocean 69°50' N; 163° W. The only whites here are the families of Mr. and Mrs. [redacted] ANS teachers, who arrived in July 1950 from Elephant Point. On 6 September 1950 [redacted] village chief, advised that the village is governed by a council of seven. Several families have moved to Barrow where it is easier to make a living. [redacted] expects to leave in the spring because the area is poor for hunting. This year the village was supplied with 80 tons of food, fuel oil, lumber and coal.

The Eskimos show little concern over the world situation in general, but during conversation about former visits between Alaskan and Siberian natives [redacted] remarked that maybe the Russians might fly over and drop bombs on the village some day. [redacted] said that white strangers occasionally pass through the village and ask general questions about the Eskimos, their hunting and their manner of living. He has noted nothing unusual about the strangers and has never questioned them concerning their origin or their destination.

AT POINT HOPE, ALASKA:

8. The village is located 68°20' N; 166°30' W. The 275 people are governed by a council of nine. Income is derived through sale of seal skins, seal oil, and receipt of bounty. Hunting and trapping on land is not good. The native store this year purchased 130 tons of foodstuffs and 120 tons of gasoline, fuel oil and lumber. Approximately 30 natives are temporarily employed as longshoremen at Cape Lisburne. Mr. [redacted] Eskimo ANS teacher, arrived in August 1950 to replace Mr. [redacted] who was transferred to Norvik, Alaska.

9. On 7 September 1950 [redacted] only permanent white resident and member of the National Guard, advised that the Eskimos are not concerned about the world situation since none expect to be drafted by virtue of the large families they support. [redacted] has observed no unusual activities in the area. He advised that Dr. and Mrs. [redacted] of the Health Service are wintering at the village for their vacation and have shown no unordinary actions.

10. On 8 September 1950 the writer conversed with Mr. [redacted] (phonetic) who stated he arrived in the village about July 1950 on behalf of an independent group in Fairbanks, who have no company or corporation name, to study the area between Point Hope and Cape Lisburne for mineral deposits and to study the area between these points for possibilities of commercially mining and shipping of barium carbonate he has located. [redacted] said that the West Naco (phonetic) Company is interested in obtaining the barium carbonate for their Monterey, California plant.

[redacted] native, who has served in the armed forces advised that strangers seldom stop in the village and that there have been no unusual occurrences.

AT DEERING, ALASKA:

12. The village, located 66°5' N; 162°45' W, has approximately 165 people of which six are white. Natives live by fishing, seal hunting and selling carved ivory and skin products. About 25 natives from the village are employed at the Casa De Paga gold mine about 20 miles distant.

13. On 13 September 1950 Mrs. [redacted] ANS teacher, stated that the white people living in the village are [redacted] HENRY COFFIN, and [redacted]. Mrs. [redacted] does not trust [redacted] on whom she knows no disloyal information, because of [redacted]s background, [redacted] was born in 1922; [redacted] in southeastern Alaska in 1946 (estimate), [redacted] was employed at the Casa De Paga mine until August 1950; intends to seek employment at the government hospital in Kotzebue. Coverage and Alaskan Command of Interest

1. Reference is made to your letter, subject as above, dated 16 November 1950 regarding the proposed plan for covert intelligence operations submitted by this Headquarters for coordination and approval.

2. On 12 December 1950, representatives of Headquarters, Alaskan Command and Alaskan Air Command conferred at Headquarters USAF with representatives of OSI, DCS Operations and the FBI. During this conference, the details of the referenced plan concerning Evasion and Escape and the stay-behind agents program were discussed. The salient points raised in the above referenced letter were clarified, and a full concept of the problem was reached. It was indicated that the OSI-FBI responsibilities for these operations would be incorporated into the Unconventional Warfare Annex of the war plan for the Territory along the lines of the proposed plan. In this connection, the representatives from Alaska indicated that Headquarters, Alaskan Command would delegate the OSI-FBI responsibilities to the Alaskan Air Command for implementation and direction. Accordingly, this Headquarters is prepared to support your detailed requirements for military personnel, funds and special equipment in accordance with your justified needs. Additionally, this Headquarters is prepared to assist in the formulation of the implementing details for those operations as they affect OSI and FBI, and to assist in such training programs as you may desire.

3. In view of the above, it is requested that your detailed requirements be made available to this Headquarters as soon as practicable, so that the over-all program can be given impetus. In order to facilitate matters at this level, your detailed requirements should be coordinated with all interested staffs prior to submission to this Headquarters. Further, a report of the status of the Evasion and Escape and stay-behind agents program should be provided this Headquarters so that your future requirements can be anticipated and initial steps undertaken at this level to facilitate matters.

HEADQUARTERS EIGHTH AIR FORCE
E&E Section

9 October 1944

MEMORANDUM:

TO : Assistant Chief of Staff, A-2.

I. FUNCTIONS OF E&E SECTION:

A. The E&E Sub-Section Chief maintains liaison with I.S.9 and other organizations responsible for the preservation of Security and assistance to aircrewmen who find themselves forced down in enemy and neutral countries. I.S.9 is the organization assigned to this theater for the purpose of collecting, collating and disseminating any information which could render assistance to all Allied personnel in enemy or neutral territory.

B. The E&E Section is charged with the responsibility of training or cause to be lectured to all combat operational crews, various situations in which crewmembers may find themselves if forced down in enemy or neutral countries. The training is divided into four general categories:

1. Security:

All personnel flying over enemy or enemy-occupied countries are instructed on security and the possible approach the enemy interrogator could employ. Location of microphones and enemy under-cover men in interrogation centers are made known. Behaviour in the presence of the interrogator is stressed. Examples of the enemy utilizing diaries, letters and other personal papers to further gain information is pointed out for the purpose of discouraging crewmembers from carrying personal papers in combat.

2. Escape and Evasion:

Each Wing, Group, and Squadron appoints an E&E Officer who then becomes responsible in all matters concerning escape and evasion from the enemy. Informational bulletins describing methods conducive to frustrate capture by the enemy from the instant personnel is forced to land behind enemy lines until his safe return to friendly territory are distributed through Intelligence channels. Prior to each mission the E&E Officer briefs the participants on clothing to be worn, manner of approach to native population, safe-area routes, areas to be avoided, rights as an evader or escapee under international law, duties of a Prisoner of War, and behaviour to avoid suspicion and detection.

3. Escape Aids:

In preparation for any emergency, each crewmember is issued a Food Kit, and an Escape Purse which contains a compass, money, and maps of the country in which the operation is flown. Other gadgets, such as fine-silk maps and compasses are issued to crews who secret them in their clothing. Since purses are classified as semi-government funds, strict accountability of distribution is maintained. Each month the Wing submits a consolidated report of all purses held by that Wing. Requests for credit for purses lost in combat and requests for replacements are entered on the same report. This Section, in turn, submits a compiled report of all purses held by this Air Force to the original source of issue, I.S.9.

BEST AVAILABLE COPY

4. Neutral Countries:

All directives from the War Department concerning behaviour of personnel and which aircraft or equipment must be destroyed in whole or in part, depending upon the neutral countries concerned, is made known to each crewman. The date the aircrewman received the instruction is entered on his service record.

5. Assistance to Distressed Air Personnel:

Whenever airmen are forced down in enemy territory, the unit concerned advises this Section, who in turn passes such information to organizations responsible for the safe conduct and evacuation of personnel from enemy territory.

C. Interrogation. Twelfth Air Force personnel who return from enemy or enemy-occupied or neutral countries are interrogated by this Section. The experience of each crewmember from the departure from his base to the day he returns to friendly territory is elicited for permanent records. Any information of combat or target value is directed to the Combat Intelligence Section for immediate action. An extract copy of the interrogation is forwarded to the Wing to which the escapee or evader was last attached. The experience is related to aircrews who derive additional experienced information on escape or evasion, and a boost in morale when they are convinced that return to friendly territory is possible.

D. The P&P Section primarily is concerned with the safety and protection of personnel who may fall into enemy custody. To insure that our Allied air effort does not concentrate upon areas where Allied Prisoners of War are incarcerated, the location of such Allied P.O.W. camps are distributed to aircrews.

II. REVIEW OF PAST ACTIVITIES:

A. During the North African campaign and prior to the capitulation of Italy in September 1943, the I.S.9 organization had performed creditably in rescuing personnel shot down in Africa behind enemy lines. Although manned by a limited number of personnel, the strength of the organization had been calculated to care for the expected number of personnel shot down.

B. The period from 10 September to 1 December 1943, following upon the capitulation of Italy, was one of great confusion. Thousands of air and ground force personnel who had been captured were suddenly liberated or succeeded in escaping from prison camps in southern Italy. The mountains in the areas of Sulmona, Chieti, and around the Gran Sasso were crowded with escaped prisoners of war who were faced with recapture or starvation. For several weeks these men wandered in the hills, usually in the areas surrounding their former prison camps, waiting for the expected arrival of the Allies. Unfortunately, stiff resistance halted the expected advance and escapees found themselves shut off. Thousands were recaptured and many were killed.

C. From 1 December 1943 to the end of March 1944, the static line made it practically impossible for escaping personnel to reach Allied territory. Because of the limited number of personnel, I.S.9 was unable to guide large numbers of men through the lines or to evacuate them by boat. To alleviate the situation, I.S.9 inaugurated a system of shuttle-runs of C-47s which dropped food and clothing in areas known to contain escapees. Substantial success was attained by I.S.9 in this operation.

In addition, [redacted] lines were hastily established [illegible]ded by English and American guides working behind the lines, who directed as many men as possible either to a boat rendezvous for escape by water or to routes which might allow them to pass through the German lines, equipping them with maps and compasses and, where possible, a guide. These rat-lines became sufficiently well established to aid many Allied escapers. However, when winter set in travel in certain areas became practically impossible, and escapers wandered from home to home, driven by hunger and cold and lack of clothing. At all times the men were haunted by the fear of recapture. I.S.9 continued to drop food, but the civilians, now starving themselves, were competing with the escapers and in many instances reached the food packets first, thus depriving the escapers of what amounted to their sole source of sustenance.

D. By January 1944, in the area along the Adriatic coast a sufficient number of radio stations had been established to allow the inauguration of a system whereby aircraft which were shot down were reported to I.S.9 by the headquarters concerned. The location was pinpointed and the information forwarded as rapidly as possible to an I.S.9 operator who established contact with the pilot or crew involved and furnished food and clothing. From this development the region from the mountains to the Adriatic coast became a practically safe haven for all escapers and evaders. Number 5 Field Section, headed by Captain [redacted] and F/Lt. [redacted] performed a creditable job in contacting many Italians who later rendered assistance to Allied personnel.

E. On the west coast conditions were much more difficult, especially after the Anzio beachhead was established. Because of the stiff resistance, many combat personnel were shot down north of the lines, too close to the battle area to do anything except remain in hiding. The bad weather and lack of concrete directions also contributed. The storms made it impossible to go over the mountain area to the east coast. Not one man shot down behind the Anzio beachhead was able to return to his base until the end of April. Of approximately 70 shot down in that area, 44 came back after the occupation by the Fifth Army, having evaded capture.

F. A recapitulation of the figures follows:

Total Air Personnel shot down 1 February to 28 June 1944.....359 (Twelfth AF only).
Total Returned to Duty.....56 (Twelfth AF only).

NOTE: (1) Of the total returned to duty there were 6 from 1 February to 30 April 1944, and 50 from 1 May to 28 June 1944; (2) The total number of Air personnel shot down prior to 1 February 1944 is unknown, but in the period under review 192 Twelfth Air Force personnel returned to duty who had been shot down prior to 1 February 1944; (3) During the months of December 1943 through April 1944, only 12 Air Corps personnel crossed into Allied territory.

G. Comments:

1. Before making specific recommendations the following comments should be taken into consideration:

a. Air personnel shot down behind the enemy lines is always a potential source of important information to the enemy.

b. Air personnel shot down who remain behind the enemy lines for periods extending beyond one month are apt to have substantially lowered morale and loss of desire to continue in the fight. The constant fear of capture or of possible death at the hands of the enemy contributes largely to this factor, and the experience of this Section has been that the first question asked by evadors who have been in enemy-occupied territory for any length of time is, "Will I go home?"

c. Three-quarters of the 56 men from the Twelfth Air Force who returned were evadors, and along with other information received tends to substantiate the conclusion that evasion is more probable than capture. In this connection the pin-pointing of the spot where the men are shot down has materially aided the speed with which they can be returned to duty. Of the overall total of 255 Air personnel returned to duty, including the 56 Twelfth Air Force personnel, 150 have had direct contact with I.S.9 or its hired civilian agents. Part of the balance have had partial contact, and a small minority no contact at all with I.S.9 or other clandestine organizations.

2. With the increased number of aircraft operating in this Theater and the added factor of operating in areas closer to Germany, consideration must also be given to the fact that civilian and local assistance would not be so wholeheartedly extended as in Italy.

3. At the present time there are substantially more British personnel in I.S.9 than American.

H. Recommendations:

1. It is recommended that there be assigned to I.S.9 an additional 15 officers and 30 men, not only to increase the number of parties working to bring back downed Air personnel, but also to equalize the number of British and American personnel in I.S.9.

2. It is also recommended that the Army or the Planning Section of Higher Headquarters coordinate with I.S.9 in advance of proposed Ground Force operations so that I.S.9 will be enabled to dispose of its personnel and lay its plans to evacuate downed Air personnel from the battle area and avoid the unfortunate situation during the early days of the Italian campaign.

NOTE: Subject matter in Paragraph II was prepared at the request of Colonel and Major of I.S.9, who were convinced that the aforementioned organization had reached a point where expansion was necessary. The matter was presented to Mediterranean Allied Air Force for the purpose of bringing the matter to the attention of General Eaker. The subject matter was not again discussed until 22 July 1944 when a meeting was called by MAAF, at which the heads of I.S.9 of London, Cairo and Italy were present to learn the requirements of Twelfth and Fifteenth Air Forces. It developed at the meeting that Fifteenth Air Force, backed by strong representation, had conducted a lobby as a result of which the representatives of the Twelfth Air Force were not consulted with regard to the disposition and application of that personnel to be assigned to I.S.9. The result was that the personnel were assigned to A.C.R.U., a Fifteenth Air Force project responsible for the evacuation of airmen out of Yugoslavia exclusively. It is obvious that little or no attention was accorded the necessity of I.S.9, which is the organization chartered to aid all airmen in the theater, or the necessities of Twelfth Air Force, presently depending upon the efforts of three Americans and one British officer of the field service. The field officers, Captain (b)(6);(b) and F/Lt. (b)(6);(b)(7)(C) have continued to do an excellent job, but their success has been lessened by the lack of adequate personnel.

III. INQUIRY OF I.S.9 ACTIVITIES, 15 April 1944:

A. While conferring with Major Lt. and F/Lt. it was agreed that I.S.9 was not producing the results anticipated by this Air Force. The "Gooseberry" runs had failed to rescue any Air Force personnel. This failure can be attributed to the fact that ground sweeps were not conducted by the agents who were to direct personnel to the point of rescue prior to the arrival of the rescue boat. Moreover, "Gooseberries" should be planned several months in advance to coincide with intended operations. Following this meeting, "Gooseberries" were increased to four per month instead of one every three months, but again results were negative. Lt. in charge of dropping operations, expressed the desire to select a landing strip on the Western coast of Italy for the purpose of evacuating the great number of personnel trapped North of Rome. Major then inquired if this Headquarters could assist by supplying a boat or aircraft in a rescue plan. He was informed that if sufficient number of air personnel could be rescued to offset the cost in event of failure, this Headquarters would undoubtedly lend necessary facilities. At this time I.S.9 had approximately five men operating on the West coast of Italy in an attempt to set up communications. It was finally concluded that upon the return of W/C Dennis, a conference would be called between the Twelfth Air Force and Fifteenth Air Force, at which time necessary action would be taken to force the issue of the rescue of Allied personnel.

B. A conference was held with Lt. Col. G-2 Officer of Fifteenth Air Force. The proposed meeting was discussed. Col. assured me that he would extend full cooperation with any requests which would assist flying personnel of the respective Air Forces.

C. At this point, Lt. Col. of 599 Force invited me to his Operations Section, where he disclosed to me all the agents operating in Italy. Force 599 stated that its facilities could be utilized to aid Allied air personnel if the assistance was requested by I.S.9.

D. O.S.S. (S.B.S.), the organization which operates in Yugoslavia, was contacted, and its members offered to lend assistance in rescue operations; but inasmuch as I.S.9 is the organization chartered for this work, S.B.S could not interfere without the request of I.S.9. At this time Major in charge of Greece operations, offered any assistance necessary to further the safety of our Air personnel.

E. A meeting with Special Force was arranged by Lt. Col. This organization operates primarily in Italy. Captain G-2, assured me that their facilities would be rendered available upon request, I.S.9 had not made any effort to enlist the assistance of Special Force, therefore Special Force could not offer its services. Captain suggested that a meeting be called between Twelfth and Fifteenth Air Forces, I.S.9, and Special Force, in an effort to bring necessary coordination in the interest of Allied airmen in distress. It was decided to await the return of W/C Dennis before the meeting would be held.

F. I.S.9 is the agency designated by the War Department and War Office, London in matters of Escape and Evasion. Until recently the duties of I.S.9 were to provide information and gadgets to Allied air personnel. In this they have succeeded commendably.

G. It should be noted that I.S.9 was asked if it had the coordination and cooperation of Special Force, O.S.S., Force 599, to which the reply was, "Yes"; however, each of the above organizations specifically stated that I.S.9 had never sought to enlist the assistance of these agencies.

IV. REORGANIZATION OF "A" FORCE INTO I.S.9:

A. This Headquarters was advised that "A" Force would be organized into I.S.9 under the command of C.S.D.I.C. headed by Commander Rodd, Royal Navy, attached to G-2, AFHQ. The usual routine followed: several conferences were held and request was made for exerted efforts to aid Allied airmen. Commander Rodd assured me that his command would retain perfect liaison with the agencies operating behind enemy lines, assuring that future activities would bring satisfactory results. However, the invasion of Southern France again disclosed the inability of I.S.9 to cope with the situation.

B. Prior to the invasion of Southern France, this Section anticipated two points of invasion based upon the terrain information disseminated by I.S.9. These two points were Southern France and Yugoslavia or Albania. Realizing that assistance could be procured from Fifteenth Air Force if either Yugoslavia or Albania was the designated operation of this Air Force, concentrated effort was made to develop a set-line in Southern France. I.S.9 assured this Headquarters that Troopers for Bait, London, would manage the escape in all of France. This Section refused to accept this plan, since the chain of communication to advise proper agencies that an airman was in distress had to be relayed from this Air Force to London. London would then radio proper agents. By the same token, insufficient information in re safe areas was not available at responsible source, I.S.9. At the last moment, London decided this theater should accept responsibility for establishing direct contact with Southern France. I.S.9 then sent a man in on "D" Day who unfortunately was killed upon disembarking. Several days later an American was attached to 7th Army to develop escape channels. This again illustrates the necessity of coordinating and controlling escape by the Air Force operating over a given area. Fifteenth Air Force was the source from which safe areas in France was acquired for dissemination to subordinate commands of this Air Force.

V. INQUIRY INTO I.S.9 ACTIVITIES, 8 October 1944:

A. A conference was held with Company "D", O.S.S., Siena. The following persons were present: Major [redacted] Captain [redacted] Lt. [redacted] and Mister [redacted] Mr. [redacted] is in charge of Special Operations, the section which could be utilized to assist airmen, Lt. [redacted] was absent.

B. The above-mentioned officers were asked if I.S.9 utilized O.S.S. working on or near the front lines and in enemy territory when an airman was forced down. Captain [redacted] and Mr. [redacted] stated that no effort had been made to enlist their facilities. It is interesting to mention that Commander [redacted] in charge of C.S.D.I.C., of which I.S.9 is a part, assured this Headquarters that I.S.9, O.S.S., Special Force and Force 399, who have agents doing special jobs in enemy-occupied countries, were being utilized to assist Allied airmen forced down in enemy territory. This reveals a second instance which culminated evidence that persons and organizations seeking to control assistance and evacuation of airmen are failing to enlist the aid of all agencies working behind the lines.

C. The conference ended with the following agreements:

1. This Headquarters will advise I.S.9; O.S.S., Siena; O.S.S., 5th Army; and O.S.S., Ancona, when a man is down in enemy territory.

2. O.S.S. will not accept the responsibility of aiding or evacuating Allied airmen reported by this Headquarters, but will, without jeopardizing the success of their primary duty, locate and direct such personnel to safe areas when feasible. Thereafter, at a convenient opportunity, this Headquarters will be advised where the personnel is hiding. Effort will be made by this Headquarters with I.S.9 to evacuate or guide the airmen to Allied territory.

D. The following question was proposed by O[illegible]: "Will Headquarters Twelfth Air Force arrange air transportation for the purpose of making a landing in enemy territory if air personnel (primarily Twelfth Air Force) were collected near a landing strip to be chosen later?" This aircraft would drop off O.S.S. agents and pick up personnel in distress. No commitment was made until this question could be discussed with proper authorities of this Headquarters.

VI. COMMENTS:

A. I.S.9 has sincerely sought to perform its duties but unfortunately its efforts have been hampered by lack of proper personnel and vitally essential equipment.

B. The U.S.A.A.F. cannot continually enjoy the fruits of the British Government without contributing to the support of the project. Therefore, effort should be made to increase the representation of American personnel in escape work.

C. This Air Force may have to operate free of the present inter-Allied organization; consequently, an American equivalent of I.S.9 should be organized.

D. Immediate action should be taken to allot another officer to this Section in order that liaison may be maintained continually with those organizations which can assist Twelfth Air Force (TAF) personnel. In addition thereto, a typist-clerk is necessary.

E. Several months ago, a member of Parliament asked this question: "What is being done for British P.O.W. and personnel in enemy territory?" If this question was proposed in Congress it could prove somewhat difficult to provide a satisfactory reply.

VII. EXPANSION OF RESCUE OPERATIONS:

A. It is suggested that a number of officers, including pilots, and enlisted men be put on detached service with I.S.9 in this theater, for the purpose of intensifying rescue operations in Northern Italy insofar as such operations regard airmen of Twelfth Air Force. It is proposed that this personnel be placed collectively under the command of a U.S. Air Force officer who should be responsible for them to I.S.9. Reasons for these suggestions follow.

B. Problem:

1. A number of Twelfth Air Force flying personnel are stranded daily behind enemy lines. A large percentage of these are rescuable if proper facilities for rescuing them can be found. The value of rescuing a pilot or any member of air crew does not need to be stressed. Through its morale effect on other members of the squadron it has a direct bearing on operations, and rescued personnel perform invaluable service in training new pilots. What is more important is to rescue them at a very early moment rather than over a long period of time. Escapers and evaders represent a menace to security, and personnel who have been behind enemy lines any length of time normally require a period of rehabilitation and training before they can again be of service to the armed forces.

2. In proportion to the military importance of this task, i.e., that of returning crashed airmen to duty at an early moment, it is not felt that sufficient effort is being applied at present.

C. Present Methods of Operation:

1. The organization charged with rescuing Allied escapers and evaders in Italy is an inter-Allied organization known as I.S.9. It attempts to rescue Allied personnel by bringing them through the lines or by evacuating them by sea. It is staffed chiefly by British Army and Navy and RAF personnel: at the moment there are two U.S. officers on Field assignments, and one pilot, in I.S.9.

2. Owing to a restricted war establishment (equals American T/O) this organization is unable to undertake operations sufficient for the task in hand. The deficiencies are felt to be three-fold:

a. Lack of aircraft for dropping personnel and radio equipment behind the lines.

b. Lack of sufficient field personnel to dispatch agents on foot and to establish safe lines of travel from enemy to Allied territory.

c. Insufficient liaison with kindred organizations, such as O.S.S.

d. Lack of priority on equipment.

3. Comment:

a. The first deficiency results in a lack of operating missions to which crashed airmen can be directed, and which could be a collecting agency behind the lines. Such missions should be operative in any area of immediate interest to the Air Force.

b. The second deficiency means that, even if airmen are collected behind the lines, there may be no way to guide them to safety. Owing to insufficient liaison, as in 'c' above, considerable potential help is being neglected. Missions of other organizations could be called on to help in establishing rescue missions, and could even, in the absence of personnel specifically for that task, act as collecting agencies.

c. It is improbable that the situation will be improved in the immediate future, since any increase in I.S.9 strength and facilities is unlikely. On the contrary, even greater difficulties may be encountered.

D. Suggested Action:

1. The situation can, however, be improved by action external to I.S.9 by one of two possible developments:

a. Twelfth Air Force could establish its own escape organization, staffed and operated independently of any other unit.

b. I.S.9 in Italy could intensify its activities with special reference to airmen by means of an increase of men and equipment from the Twelfth Air Force.

2. Comment:

a. The first suggestion, 1a above, seems to be less practicable than the second, since it would be to disregard the vast equipment and especially the experience of I.S.9, which has operated in Italy for more than a year. In this respect, comparison with a similar development in the Fifteenth Air Force is to be noted. That unit has established an independent Air Evacuation section, operated by and for the Fifteenth Air Force. However, the problem in that case was and is largely one of aircraft and pilots, requiring a transport service to and from an area entirely held by partisan allies.

Qualifications for this task are nothing more than the qualifications of a bomber pilot. Operations in Italy, however, are considerably more complicated: the area is controlled by Germans and the work involves overland travel through enemy positions, with the aid of carefully selected and briefed Italian civilians. Thus the experience required would not normally be possessed by a Twelfth Air Force pilot. Such experience is, of course, possessed by I.S.9 personnel.

b. The second alternative, 'b' above, might be put into effect immediately and should prove far more satisfactory.

5. Recommendations:

1. One Escape Section this Headquarters be assigned another officer and another enlisted personnel whose specific duties would be to handle the administration, such as materials and correspondence.

2. These officers to provide a central operational control. One of these would be chief operations officer, and a second his executive with flying experience. The third officer would be responsible for the closest possible connection and coordination of other services, such as O.S.S., I.S.9, Force 399, and S.A.S., whose operations behind the lines might assist the task of rescuing aircrews. This central operational control should be stationed at Headquarters Twelfth Air Force and would in general direct all Field operations insofar as they affect flying personnel and are carried out by Twelfth Air Force. It would be charged, in addition, with full responsibility for air operations, i.e., the dropping of parachutists with radio and stores, or, if possible, the evacuation by air pick-up method).

3. Field Sections: Three officers and one administrative clerk. This personnel would serve to create a new Field Section in addition to those now being operated by I.S.9, and to increase the strength of any Field Section in an area particularly important to the Twelfth Air Force. The function of a Field Section is to dispatch agents to points where aircrews are collected or are known or thought to be in hiding, and to guide such airmen to safety. A Field Section, wherever possible, acts also through its link with a radio set in enemy area.

4. Boating Section: Two officers and one administrative clerk to operate with naval personnel supplied by I.S.9. These officers would, except on technical operations, supervise sea operations for the purpose of evacuating airmen (Air-Sea Rescue has boats attached).

5. Pilots: In order to accomplish the task most efficiently it is recommended that two aircraft with aircrew be placed at the disposition of the central control as described in paragraph '2' above. These aircraft would serve to drop personnel behind the lines and to collect from various points on this side of the lines various stores and personnel needed for immediate operations. The aircraft should be suitable for parachutists: the most practical, from all points of view, is a B-17, however a DC-3 would be adequate in most cases. In addition to two such aircraft, it is recommended that a Lysander likewise be placed under command, with a pilot trained in landing behind the lines and picking up pilots or special persons previously assembled at the landing point.

6. A-1 priority on necessary equipment, such as radios, vehicles, food, and clothing.

F. Conclusion:

1. The personnel enumerated under Paragraph '2' would be under the complete administrative control of Headquarters Twelfth Air Force, coordinating their activities with I.S.S. and, where necessary, with kindred organizations. Rescue operations would be initiated directly from this Headquarters. The desired end of this proposal is not duplication or competition, but rather for the purpose of developing an effective and efficient organization capable of enhancing the safe return of Tactical Air Force personnel.

Assistant A-2.

APPENDIX "A"

I. ORGANIZATION [redacted] ESCAPE SECTION:

A. Suggestion 'a' under paragraph D, page 8, is worthy of consideration for all Air Forces and would provide a form of insurance.

B. An Escape Section attached to each Air Force should have the following organization:

1. Air Force Headquarters:

a. Operations Officer -- Chief of Section.

b. Administrative Officer -- Issuance of escape equipment, bulletins, correspondence, and interrogation.

c. Liaison Officer -- Contact I.S.9, O.S.S., Special Force, and Field Sections.

d. Two typist-clerks.

2. Field Section attached to forward Ground Forces:

a. Two Officers (Paratroopers).

b. Two typist-clerks.

c. Twenty Paratroopers, of training and type similar to O.S.S. personnel.

d. This section would have sufficient strength to cover a 200-mile range. The senior officer should have the authority to hire or direct to be hired all necessary native personnel and arrange for their infiltration and establishment in enemy territory. It would also be his responsibility to arrange for the collection of personnel in enemy territory, determine the best means of evacuation and advise the chief of operations section, who will direct action. The enlisted personnel would be dropped in enemy territory for the purpose of establishing mission bases, radio communications, collecting personnel and take all precautions for their safety and comfort. The situation would be radioed to the field section for necessary action. Conditions warranting, food, clothing and medicine could be dropped to personnel until evacuation could be effected. In addition thereto, all information with regard to crashed aircraft and fate of the crew would be investigated, and the findings could be forwarded to this Headquarters for the purpose of assisting the Battle Casualty Section in clearing and maintaining its records. Native hired personnel would serve as guides and front men to enlisted operators. It must be borne in mind that all activities would be coordinated with other agencies operating behind the lines, thus additional strength and cooperation would be available.

3. Sea Evacuation Section:

a. One officer, who would supervise sea operations for the purpose of evacuating airmen. (This Air Force has Air-Sea Rescue boats attached).

b. One administrative clerk.

4. Air Evacuation Section: As sub-paragraph 2, paragraph B, page 9.

5. A-1 priority for: Fighter aircraft where escort is essential, radio, transportation, food, and clothing.

[redacted] APPENDIX "B"

I. ACTIVITIES IN ENEMY TERRITORY:

A. Under the present circumstances the few Allied officers operating behind enemy lines for the purpose of establishing underground routes are British personnel. This work is highly technical for the reason that the type of operation requires a man with diplomatic characteristics, since it is necessary to convince native citizens to risk their lives for another nation. This operator also supplies food, clothing and necessary funds to partially encourage the risk.

B. Comment:

1. It is suggested that steps be taken to procure such personnel to understudy the British in this phase of field diplomacy.

II. ACTIVITIES AFTER AN AREA HAS BEEN OCCUPIED BY THE ALLIES:

A. Allied personnel are advised to write a chit and present it to any person or persons rendering assistance. In addition thereto, when ex-Prisoners of War or evaders reach their proper station for interrogation, the names and locations of Helpers are recorded and forwarded to I.S.9 who arranges for repayment to these people who have risked their lives to assist Allied personnel to reach friendly territory. Chits are redeemable at Allied Headquarters, either in cash or employment, depending on the situation. Persons whose names have been submitted by this Headquarters are repaid for their risk by a British agency.

B. Comment:

1. It is to the interest of a nation at war to sow a field of friendship and trust based on services rendered to that nation. Under the present condition, no effort is being exercised to express direct appreciation to the native helper for assistance rendered U.S.A.A.F. personnel. British personnel are charged with the duty of rewarding, consequently potential personal alliances are created solely for the uniform expressing the gratitude. Persons who risk their lives to assist an Allied airman are useful in two ways:

a. Propagandist of good will.

b. Agents or friends who could be utilized to insure the security and peace of the nation which has been served and made outward signs of appreciation for this service.

APPENDIX NO.

I. I.S.9 OPERATIONS:

A. I.S.9, Florence, requested an aircraft for the purpose of supplying some one hundred Allied personnel on the West coast of enemy-occupied Italy. Upon receiving proper authority through Assistant Chief of Staff, A-2, and Assistant Chief of Staff, A-3, Mediterranean Allied Tactical Air Force, contact was made with the Twelfth Fighter Command, who agreed to furnish for an aircraft. The I.S.9 representative, however, was unable to determine how the material could be packed for a daylight dropping. The S&E Officer thereby took I.S.9 representative to O.S.S. where arrangements were made for a para-pack outfit, which would be packed by O.S.S. when the material was assembled. It then developed that the only items at the disposal of I.S.9 was money; the other articles, such as clothing, soap, etc., of a personal nature, must be located and drawn before the operation could be effected.

II. COMMENT:

A. I.S.9 Headquarters is located in Bari. All necessary material and equipment is stored either at Bari or Brindisi, consequently too distant to be of any value to this Air Force.

B. I.S.9 is located in a position to be of value only to operations West of Italy, therefore this Air Force is not receiving effective benefits.

C. This particular instance, supplemented by other situations in the past, further demonstrates the inability of I.S.9 to carry out its duties due to lack of personnel, equipment, and proper liaison with organizations which are available to render the service for which I.S.9 is charged.

D. Failure to take direct and immediate action is a betrayal of the trust which the flying personnel of Tactical Air Force have been taught to rely upon.

HEADQUARTERS TWELFTH AIR FORCE
E&E Section

[redacted]

9 October 1944

MEMORANDUM:

TO : Assistant Chief of Staff, A-2.

I. FUNCTIONS OF E&E SECTION:

A. The E&E Sub-Section Chief maintains liaison with I.S.9 and other organizations responsible for the preservation of Security and assistance to aircrewmen who find themselves forced down in enemy and neutral countries. I.S.9 is the organization assigned to this theater for the purpose of collecting, collating and disseminating any information which could render assistance to all Allied personnel in enemy or neutral territory.

B. The E&E Section is charged with the responsibility of training or cause to be lectured to all combat operational crews, various situations in which crewmembers may find themselves if forced down in enemy or neutral countries. The training is divided into four general categories:

1. Security:

All personnel flying over enemy or enemy-occupied countries are instructed on security and the possible approach the enemy interrogator could employ. Location of microphones and enemy under-cover men in interrogation centers are made known. Behaviour in the presence of the interrogator is stressed. Examples of the enemy utilizing diaries, letters and other personal papers to further gain information is pointed out for the purpose of discouraging crewmembers from carrying personal papers in combat.

2. Escape and Evasion:

Each Wing, Group, and Squadron appoints an E&E Officer who then becomes responsible in all matters concerning escape and evasion from the enemy. Informational bulletins describing methods conducive to frustrate capture by the enemy from the instant personnel is forced to land behind enemy lines until his safe return to friendly territory are distributed through Intelligence channels. Prior to each mission the E&E Officer briefs the participants on clothing to be worn, manner of approach to native population, safe-area routes, areas to be avoided, rights as an evader or escaper under international law, duties of a Prisoner of War, and behaviour to avoid suspicion and detection.

3. Escape Aids:

In preparation for any emergency, each crewmember is issued a Food Kit, and an Escape Purse which contains a compass, money, and name of the country in which the operation is flown. Other gadgets, such as fine-silk maps and compasses are issued to crews who secret them in their clothing. Since purses are classified as semi-government funds, strict accountability of distribution is maintained. Each month the Wing submits a consolidated report of all purses held by that Wing. Requests for credit for purses lost in combat and requests for replacements are entered on the same report. This Section, in turn, submits a compiled report of all purses held by this Air Force to the original source of issue, I.S.9.

4. Neutral Countries:

All directives from the War Department concerning behaviour of personnel and which aircraft or equipment must be destroyed in whole or in part, depending upon the neutral countries concerned, is made known to each crewman. The date the aircrewman received the instruction is entered on his service record.

5. Assistance to Distressed Air Personnel:

Whenever airmen are forced down in enemy territory, the unit concerned advises this Section, who in turn passes such information to organizations responsible for the safe conduct and evacuation of personnel from enemy territory.

C. Interrogation. Twelfth Air Force personnel who return from enemy or enemy-occupied or neutral countries are interrogated by this Section. The experience of each crewmember from the departure from his base to the day he returns to friendly territory is elicited for permanent records. Any information of combat or target value is directed to the Combat Intelligence Section for immediate action. An extract copy of the interrogation is forwarded to the Wing to which the escaper or evader was last attached. The experience is related to aircrews who derive additional experienced information on escape or evasion, and a boost in morale when they are convinced that return to friendly territory is possible.

D. The E&E Section primarily is concerned with the safety and protection of personnel who may fall into enemy custody. To insure that our Allied air effort does not concentrate upon areas where Allied Prisoners of War are incarcerated, the location of such Allied P.O.W. camps are distributed to aircrews.

II. REVIEW OF PAST ACTIVITIES:

A. During the North African campaign and prior to the capitulation of Italy in September 1943, the I.S.9 organization had performed creditably in rescuing personnel shot down in Africa behind enemy lines. Although manned by a limited number of personnel, the strength of the organization had been calculated to care for the expected number of personnel shot down.

B. The period from 10 September to 1 December 1943, following upon the capitulation of Italy, was one of great confusion. Thousands of air and ground force personnel who had been captured were suddenly liberated or succeeded in escaping from prison camps in southern Italy. The mountains in the areas of Sulmona, Chieti, and around the Gran Sasso were crowded with escaped prisoners of war who were faced with recapture or starvation. For several weeks these men wandered in the hills, usually in the areas surrounding their former prison camps, waiting for the expected arrival of the Allies. Unfortunately, stiff resistance halted the expected advance and escapers found themselves shut off. Thousands were recaptured and many were killed.

C. From 1 December 1943 to the end of March 1944, the static line made it practically impossible for escaping personnel to reach Allied territory. Because of the limited number of personnel, I.S.9 was unable to guide large numbers of men through the lines or to evacuate them by boat. To alleviate the situation, I.S.9 inaugurated a system of shuttle-runs of C-47s which dropped food and clothing in areas known to contain escapers. Substantial success was attained by I.S.9 in this operation.

In addition, [illegible]lines were hastily established [illegible]ded by English and American guides working behind the lines, who directed as many men as possible either to a boat rendezvous for escape by water or to routes which might allow them to pass through the German lines, equipping them with maps and compasses and, where possible, a guide. These rat-lines became sufficiently well established to aid many Allied escapers. However, when winter set in travel in certain areas became practically impossible, and escapers wandered from home to home, driven by hunger and cold and lack of clothing. At all times the men were haunted by the fear of recapture. I.S.9 continued to drop food, but the civilians, now starving themselves, were competing with the escapers and in many instances reached the food packets first, thus depriving the escapers of what amounted to their sole source of sustenance.

D. By January 1944, in the area along the Adriatic coast a sufficient number of radio stations had been established to allow the inauguration of a system whereby aircraft which were shot down were reported to I.S.9 by the headquarters concerned. The location was pinpointed and the information forwarded as rapidly as possible to an I.S.9 operator who established contact with the pilot or crew involved and furnished food and clothing. From this development the region from the mountains to the Adriatic coast became a practically safe haven for all escapers and evaders. Number 5 Field Section, headed by Captain and F/Lt. performed a creditable job in contacting many Italians who later rendered assistance to Allied personnel.

E. On the west coast conditions were much more difficult, especially after the Anzio beachhead was established. Because of the stiff resistance, many combat personnel were shot down north of the lines, too close to the battle area to do anything except remain in hiding. The bad weather and lack of concrete directions also contributed. The storms made it impossible to go over the mountain area to the east coast. Not one man shot down behind the Anzio beachhead was able to return to his base until the end of April. Of approximately 70 shot down in that area, 44 came back after the occupation by the Fifth Army, having evaded capture.

F. A recapitulation of the figures follows:

Total Air Personnel shot down 1 February to 28 June 1944.....359 (Twelfth AF only).
Total Returned to Duty..... 56 (Twelfth AF only).

NOTE: (1) Of the total returned to duty there were 6 from 1 February to 30 April 1944, and 50 from 1 May to 28 June 1944; (2) The total number of Air personnel shot down prior to 1 February 1944 is unknown, but in the period under review 199 Twelfth Air Force personnel returned to duty who had been shot down prior to 1 February 1944; (3) During the months of December 1943 through April 1944, only 12 Air Corps personnel crossed into Allied territory.

G. Comments:

1. Before making specific recommendations the following comments should be taken into consideration:

a. Air personnel shot down behind the enemy lines is always a potential source of important information to the enemy.

b. Air personnel shot down who remain behind the enemy lines for periods extending beyond one month are apt to have substantially lowered morale and loss of desire to continue in the fight. The constant fear of capture or of possible death at the hands of the enemy contributes largely to this feeling, and the convience of this Section has been that the first question asked by evaders who have been in enemy-occupied territory for any length of time is, "Will I go home?"

c. Three-quarters of the 56 men from the Twelfth Air Force who returned were evaders, and along with other information received tends to sub-stantiate the conclusion that evading is more probable than capture. In this connection the pin-pointing of the spot where the men are shot down has materially aided the speed with which they can be returned to duty. Of the overall total of 255 Air personnel returned to duty, including the 56 Twelfth Air Force personnel, 150 have had direct contact with I.S.9 or its hired civilian agents. Part of the balance have had partial contact, and a small minority no contact at all with I.S.9 or other clandestine organizations.

2. With the increased number of aircraft operating in this Theater and the added factor of operating in areas closer to Germany, consideration must also be given to the fact that civilian and local assistance would not be so wholeheartedly extended as in Italy.

3. At the present time there are substantially more British personnel in I.S.9 than American.

R. Recommendations:

1. It is recommended that there be assigned to I.S.9 an additional 15 officers and 30 men, not only to increase the number of parties working to bring back downed Air personnel, but also to scrutinize the number of British and American personnel in I.S.9.

2. It is also recommended that the Army or the Planning Section of Higher Headquarters coordinate with I.S.9 in advance of proposed Ground Force operations so that I.S.9 will be enabled to dispose of its personnel and lay its plans to evacuate downed Air personnel from the battle area and avoid the unfortunate situation during the early days of the Italian campaign.

NOTE: Subject matter in Paragraph II was prepared at the request of Colonel and Major of I.S.9, who were convinced that the aforementioned organization had reached a point where expansion was necessary. The matter was presented to Mediterranean Allied Air Force for the purpose of bringing the matter to the attention of General Eaker. The subject matter was not again discussed until 22 July 1944 when a meeting was called by MAAF, at which the heads of I.S.9 of London, Cairo and Italy were present to learn the requirements of Twelfth and Fifteenth Air Forces. It developed at the meeting that Fifteenth Air Force, backed by strong representation, had conducted a lobby as a result of which the representatives of the Twelfth Air Force were not consulted with regard to the disposition and application of that personnel to be assigned to I.S.9. The result was that the personnel were assigned to A.C.S.U., a Fifteenth Air Force project responsible for the evacuation of airmen out of Yugoslavia exclusively. It is obvious that little or no attention was accorded the necessity of I.S.9, which is the organization chartered to aid all airmen in the theater, or the necessities of Twelfth Air Force, presently depending upon the efforts of three Americans and one British officer of the field service. The field officers, Captain and F/Lt. have continued to do an excellent job, but their success has been lessened by the lack of adequate personnel.

IV. REORGANIZATION OF "A" FORCE INTO I.S.9:

A. This Headquarters was advised that "A" Force would be organized into I.S.9 under the command of C.S.D.I.C. headed by Commander Royal Navy, attached to G-2, AFHQ. The usual routine followed: several conferences were held and request was made for exerted efforts to aid Allied airmen. Commander assured me that his command would retain perfect liaison with the agencies operating behind enemy lines, assuring that future activities would bring satisfactory results. However, the invasion of Southern France again disclosed the inability of I.S.9 to cope with the situation.

B. Prior to the invasion of Southern France, this Section anticipated two points of invasion based upon the terrain information disseminated by I.S.9. These two points were Southern France and Yugoslavia or Albania. Realizing that assistance could be procured from Fifteenth Air Force if either Yugoslavia or Albania was the designated operation of this Air Force, concentrated effort was made to develop a rat-line in Southern France. I.S.9 assured this Headquarters that Troops for Bolt, London, would manage the escape in all of France. This Section refused to accept this plan, since the chain of communication to advise proper agencies that an airman was in distress had to be relayed from this Air Force to London. London would then radio proper agents. By the same token, insufficient information in re safe areas was not available at responsible source, I.S.9. At the last moment, London decided this theater should accept responsibility for establishing direct contact with Southern France. I.S.9 then sent a man in on "D" Day who unfortunately was killed upon disembarking. Several days later an American was attached to 7th Army to develop escape channels. This again illustrates the necessity of coordinating and controlling escape by the Air Force operating over a given area. Fifteenth Air Force was the source from which safe areas in France was required for dissemination to subordinate commands of this Air Force.

V. INQUIRY INTO I.S.9 ACTIVITIES, 8 October 1944:

A. A conference was held with Company "D", O.S.S., Siena. The following persons were present: Major Captain Lt. and Mister Mr. is in charge of Special Operations, the section which could be utilized to assist airmen. Lt. was absent.

B. The above-mentioned officers were asked if I.S.9 utilized O.S.S. working on or near the front lines and in enemy territory when an airman was forced down. Captain and Mr. stated that no effort had been made to enlist their facilities. It is interesting to mention that Commander R.N., in charge of C.S.D.I.C., of which I.S.9 is a part, assured this Headquarters that I.S.9, O.S.S., Special Force and Force 399, who have agents doing special jobs in enemy-occupied countries, were being utilized to assist Allied airmen forced down in enemy territory. This reveals a second instance which culminated evidence that persons and organizations seeking to control assistance and evacuation of airmen are failing to enlist the aid of all agencies working behind the lines.

C. The conference ended with the following agreements:

1. This Headquarters will advise I.S.9; O.S.S., Siena; O.S.S., 5th Army; and O.S.S., Ancona, when a man is down in enemy territory.

2. O.S.S. will not accept the responsibility of aiding or evacuating Allied airmen reported by this Headquarters, but will, without jeopardizing the success of their primary duty, locate and direct such personnel to safe areas when feasible. Thereafter, at a convenient opportunity, this Headquarters will be advised where the personnel is hiding. Effort will be made by this Headquarters with I.S.9 to evacuate or guide the airmen to Allied territory.

III. INQUIRY OF I.S.9 ACTIVITIES, 15 April 1944:

A. While conferring with Major Lt. and F/Lt. it was agreed that I.S.9 was not producing the results anticipated by this Air Force. The "Gooseberry" runs had failed to rescue any Air Force personnel. This failure can be attributed to the fact that ground sweeps were not conducted by the agents who were to direct personnel to the point of rescue prior to the arrival of the rescue boats. Moreover, "Gooseberries" should be planned several months in advance to coincide with intended operations. Following this meeting, "Gooseberries" were increased to four per month instead of one every three months, but again results were negative. Lt. in charge of dropping operations, expressed the desire to select a landing strip on the Western coast of Italy for the purpose of evacuating the great number of personnel trapped North of Rome. Major then inquired if this Headquarters could assist by supplying a boat or aircraft in a rescue plan. He was informed that if sufficient number of air personnel could be rescued to offset the cost in event of failure, this Headquarters would undoubtedly lend necessary facilities. At this time I.S.9 had approximately five men operating on the West coast of Italy in an attempt to set up communications. It was finally concluded that upon the return of W/C Dennis, a conference would be called between the Twelfth Air Force and Fifteenth Air Force, at which time necessary action would be taken to force the issue of the rescue of Allied personnel.

B. A conference was held with Lt. Col. S&E Officer of Fifteenth Air Force. The proposed meeting was discussed. Col. assured me that he would extend full cooperation with any requests which would assist flying personnel of the respective Air Forces.

C. At this point, Lt. Col. of 399 Force invited me to his Operations Section, where he disclosed to me all the agents operating in Italy. Force 399 stated that its facilities could be utilized to aid Allied air personnel if the assistance was requested by I.S.9.

D. O.S.S. (S.B.S.), the organization which operates in Yugoslavia, was contacted, and its members offered to lend assistance in rescue operations; but inasmuch as I.S.9 is the organization chartered for this work, S.B.S. could not interfere without the request of I.S.9. At this time Major in charge of Greece operations, offered any assistance necessary to further the safety of our Air personnel.

E. A meeting with Special Force was arranged by Lt. Col. This organization operates primarily in Italy. Captain G-2, assured me that their facilities would be rendered available upon request. I.S.9 had not made any effort to enlist the assistance of Special Force, therefore Special Force could not offer its services. Captain suggested that a meeting be called between Twelfth and Fifteenth Air Forces, I.S.9, and Special Force, in an effort to bring necessary coordination in the interest of Allied airmen in distress. It was decided to await the return of before the meeting would be held.

F. I.S.9 is the agency designated by the War Department and War Office, London in matters of Escape and Evasion. Until recently the duties of I.S.9 were to provide information and gadgets to Allied air personnel. In this they have succeeded considerably.

G. It should be noted that I.S.9 was asked if it had the coordination and cooperation of Special Force, O.S.S., Force 399, to which the reply was, "Yes"; however, each of the above organizations specifically stated that I.S.9 had never sought to enlist the assistance of these agencies.

D. The following question was proposed by O[illegible]: "Will Headquarters Twelfth Air Force arrange air transportation for the purpose of making a landing in enemy territory if air personnel (primarily Twelfth Air Force) were collected near a landing strip to be chosen later?" This aircraft would drop off O.S.S. agents and pick up personnel in distress. No commitment was made until this question could be discussed with proper authorities of this Headquarters.

VI. COMMENTS:

A. I.S.9 has sincerely sought to perform its duties but unfortunately its efforts have been hampered by lack of proper personnel and vitally essential equipment.

B. The U.S.A.A.F. cannot continually enjoy the fruits of the British Government without contributing to the support of the project. Therefore, effort should be made to increase the representation of American personnel in escape work.

C. This Air Force may have to operate free of the present inter-Allied organization; consequently, an American equivalent of I.S.9 should be organized.

D. Immediate action should be taken to allot another officer to this Section in order that liaison may be maintained continually with those organizations which can assist Twelfth Air Force (TAF) personnel. In addition thereto, a typist-clerk is necessary.

E. Several months ago, a member of Parliament asked this question: "What is being done for British P.O.W. and personnel in enemy territory?" If this question was proposed in Congress it could prove somewhat difficult to provide a satisfactory reply.

VII. EXPANSION OF RESCUE OPERATIONS:

A. It is suggested that a number of officers, including pilots, and enlisted men be put on detached service with I.S.9 in this theater, for the purpose of intensifying rescue operations in Northern Italy insofar as such operations regard airmen of Twelfth Air Force. It is proposed that this personnel be placed collectively under the command of a U.S. Air Force officer who should be responsible for them to I.S.9. Reasons for these suggestions follow.

B. Problem:

1. A number of Twelfth Air Force flying personnel are stranded daily behind enemy lines. A large percentage of these are rescuable if proper facilities for rescuing them can be found. The value of rescuing a pilot or any member of air crew does not need to be stressed. Through its morale effect on other members of the squadron it has a direct bearing on operations, and rescued personnel perform invaluable service in training new pilots. What is more important is to rescue them at a very early moment rather than over a long period of time. Escapers and evaders represent a menace to security, and personnel who have been behind enemy lines any length of time normally require a period of rehabilitation and training before they can again be of service to the armed forces.

2. In proportion to the military importance of this task, i.e., that of returning crashed airmen to duty at an early moment, it is not felt that sufficient effort is being applied at present.

5. Concl

1. The personnel enumerated under Paragraph '2' would be under the complete administrative control of Headquarters Twelfth Air Force, coordinating their activities with I.S.O and, where necessary, with kindred organizations. Rescue operations would be initiated directly from this Headquarters. The desired end of this proposal is not duplication or competition, but rather for the purpose of developing an effective and efficient organization capable of enhancing the safe return of Tactical Air Force personnel.

Captain, Air Corps,
Assistant A-2.

C. Present Methods of Operation:

1. The organization charged with rescuing Allied escapees and evaders in Italy is an inter-Allied organization known as I.S.9. It attempts to rescue Allied personnel by bringing them through the lines or by evacuating them by sea. It is staffed chiefly by British Army and Navy and RAF personnel: at the moment there are two U.S. officers on field assignments, and one pilot, in I.S.9.

2. Owing to a restricted war establishment (equals American T/O) this organization is unable to undertake operations sufficient for the task in hand. The deficiencies are felt to be three-fold:

a. Lack of aircraft for dropping personnel and radio equipment behind the lines.

b. Lack of sufficient field personnel to dispatch agents on foot and to establish safe lines of travel from enemy to Allied territory.

c. Insufficient liaison with kindred organizations, such as O.S.S.

d. Lack of priority on equipment.

3. Comment:

a. The first deficiency results in a lack of operating missions to which crashed airmen can be directed, and which could be a collecting agency behind the lines. Such missions should be operative in any area of immediate interest to the Air Force.

b. The second deficiency means that, even if airmen are collected behind the lines, there may be no way to guide them to safety. Owing to insufficient liaison, as in 'c' above, considerable potential help is being neglected. Missions of other organizations could be called on to help in establishing rescue missions, and could even, in the absence of personnel specifically for that task, act as collecting agencies.

c. It is improbable that the situation will be improved in the immediate future, since any increase in I.S.9 strength and facilities is unlikely. On the contrary, even greater difficulties may be encountered.

D. Suggested Action:

1. The situation can, however, be improved by action external to I.S.9 by one of two possible developments:

a. Twelfth Air Force could establish its own escape organization, staffed and operated independently of any other unit.

b. I.S.9 in Italy could intensify its activities with special reference to airmen by means of an increase of men and equipment from the Twelfth Air Force.

2. Comment:

a. The first suggestion, 'a' above, seems to be less practicable than the second, since it would be to disregard the men, equipment, and especially the experience of I.S.9, which has operated in Italy for more than a year. In this respect, comparison with a similar development in the Fifteenth Air Force is to be noted. That unit did establish an independent air evacuation system, operated by and for the Fifteenth Air Force. However, the problem in that case was and is largely one of aircraft and pilots, requiring a transport service to and from an area entirely held by partisan allies.

[redacted]

Qualifications for this task are nothing more than the qualifications of a bomber pilot. Operations in Italy, however, are considerably more complicated: the area is controlled by Germans and the work involves overland travel through enemy positions, with the aid of carefully selected and briefed Italian civilians. Thus the experience required would not normally be possessed by a Twelfth Air Force pilot. Such experience is, of course, possessed by I.S.9 personnel.

3. The second alternative, 'b' above, might be put into effect immediately and should prove far more satisfactory.

E. Recommendations:

1. The Escape Section this Headquarters be assigned another officer and another enlisted personnel whose specific duties would be to handle the administration, such as materials and correspondence.

2. Three officers to provide a central operational control. One of these would be chief operations officer, and a second his executive with flying experience. The third officer would be responsible for the closest possible cooperation and coordination of other services, such as O.S.S., I.S.9, Force 399, and S.B.S., whose operations behind the lines might assist the task of rescuing aircrews. This central operational control should be stationed at Headquarters Twelfth Air Force and would in general direct all Field operations insofar as they affect flying personnel and are carried out by Twelfth Air Force. It would be charged, in addition, with full responsibility for air operations, i.e., the dropping of parachutists with radio and stores, or, if possible, the execution by air (Lysander pick-up method).

3. Field Sections: Three officers and one administrative clerk. This personnel would serve to create a new Field Section in addition to those now being operated by I.S.9, and to increase the strength of any Field Section in an area particularly important to the Twelfth Air Force. The function of a Field Section is to dispatch agents to points where aircrews are collected or are known or thought to be in hiding, and to guide such airmen to safety. A Field Section, wherever possible, acts also through its link with a radio set in enemy area.

4. Boating Section: Two officers and one administrative clerk to operate with naval personnel supplied by I.S.9. These officers would, except on technical operations, supervise sea operations for the purpose of evacuating airmen (Air-Sea Rescue has boats attached).

5. Pilots: In order to accomplish the task most efficiently it is recommended that two aircraft with aircrew be placed at the disposition of the central control as described in paragraph '2' above. These aircraft would serve to drop personnel behind the lines and to collect from various points on this side of the lines various stores and personnel needed for immediate operations. The aircraft should be suitable for parachutists: the most practical, from all points of view, is a B-17, however a DC-3 would be adequate in most cases. In addition to two such aircraft, it is recommended that a Lysander likewise be placed under command, with a pilot trained in landing behind the lines and picking up pilots or special persons previously assembled at the landing point.

6. A-1 priority on necessary equipment, such as radios, vehicles, food, and clothing.

I. ORGANIZATION ESCAPE SECTION:

A. Suggestion [illegible] under paragraph D, page 8, is worthy of consideration for all Air Forces and would provide a form of insurance.

B. An Escape Section attached to each Air Force should have the following organization:

1. Air Force Headquarters:

a. Operations Officer -- Chief of Section.

b. Administrative Officer -- Issuance of escape equipment, bulletins, correspondence, and interrogation.

c. Liaison Officer -- Contact I.S.9, O.S.S., Special Force, and Field Sections.

d. Two typist-clerks.

2. Field Section attached to forward Ground Forces:

a. Two Officers (Paratroopers).

b. Two typist-clerks.

c. Twenty Paratroopers, of training and type similar to O.S.S. personnel.

d. This section would have sufficient strength to cover a 200-mile range. The senior officer should have the authority to hire or direct to be hired all necessary native personnel and arrange for their infiltration and establishment in enemy territory. It would also be his responsibility to arrange for the collection of personnel in enemy territory, determine the best route of evacuation and advise the chief of operations section, who will direct action. The enlisted personnel would be dropped in enemy territory for the purpose of establishing mission houses, radio communications, collecting personnel and take all precautions for their safety and comforts. The situation would be radioed to the field section for necessary action. Conditions warranting, food, clothing and medicine could be dropped to personnel until evacuation could be effected. In addition thereto, all information with regard to crashed aircraft and fate of the crew would be investigated, and the findings could be forwarded to this Headquarters for the purpose of assisting the Battle Casualty Section in clearing and maintaining its records. Native hired personnel would serve as guides and front men to selected operators. It must be borne in mind that all activities would be coordinated with other agencies operating behind the lines, thus additional strength and cooperation would be available.

3. Sea Evacuation Section:

a. One officer, who would supervise sea operations for the purpose of evacuating airmen. (This Air Force has Air-Sea Rescue boats attached).

b. One administrative clerk.

4. Air Evacuation Section: As subparagraph 3, paragraph B, page 9.

5. Add priority for: Fighter aircraft where escort is essential, radio, transportation, food, and clothing.

[redacted]

APPENDIX "B"

I. ACTIVITIES IN ENEMY TERRITORY:

A. Under the present circumstances the few Allied officers operating behind enemy lines for the purpose of establishing underground routes are British personnel. This work is highly technical for the reason that the type of operation requires a man with diplomatic characteristics, since it is necessary to convince native citizens to risk their lives for another nation. This operator also supplies food, clothing and necessary funds to partially encourage the risk.

B. Comment:

1. It is suggested that steps be taken to procure such personnel to understudy the British in this phase of field diplomacy.

II. ACTIVITIES AFTER AN AREA HAS BEEN OCCUPIED BY THE ALLIES:

A. Allied personnel are advised to write a chit and present it to any person or persons rendering assistance. In addition thereto, when ex-Prisoners of War or evaders reach their proper station for interrogation, the names and locations of helpers are recorded and forwarded to I.S.9 who arranges for repayment to these people who have risked their lives to assist Allied personnel to reach friendly territory. Chits are redeemable at Allied Headquarters, either in cash or employment, depending on the situation. Persons whose names have been submitted by this Headquarters are repaid for their risk by a British agency.

B. Comment:

1. It is to the interest of a nation at war to sow a field of friendship and trust based on services rendered to that nation. Under the present condition, no effort is being exercised to express direct appreciation to the native helper for assistance rendered U.S.A.A.F. personnel. British personnel are charged with the duty of rewarding, consequently potential personal alliances are created solely for the uniform expressing the gratitude. Persons who risk their lives to assist an Allied airman are useful in two ways:

a. Propogandist of good will.

b. Agents or friends who could be utilized to insure the security and peace of the nation which has been served and made outward signs of appreciation for this service.

APPENDIX "C"

I. I.S.9 OPERATIONS:

A. I.S.9, Florence, requested an aircraft for the purpose of supplying some one hundred Allied personnel on the West coast of enemy-occupied Italy. Upon receiving proper authority through Assistant Chief of Staff, A-2, and Assistant Chief of Staff, A-3, Mediterranean Allied Tactical Air Force, contact was made with the Twelfth Fighter Command, who agreed to arrange for an aircraft. The I.S.9 representative, however, was unable to determine how the material could be packed for a daylight dropping. The S&T Officer thereby took I.S.9 representative to O.S.S. where arrangements were made for a para-pack outfit, which would be packed by O.S.S. when the material was assembled. It then developed that the only items at the disposal of I.S.9 was money; the other articles, such as clothing, soap, etc., of a personal nature, must be located and drawn before the operation could be effected.

II. COMMENT:

A. I.S.9 Headquarters is located in Bari. All necessary material and equipment is stored either at Bari or Brindisi, consequently too distant to be of any value to this Air Force.

B. I.S.9 is located in a position to be of value only to operations West of Italy, therefore this Air Force is not receiving effective benefits.

C. This particular instance, supplemented by other situations in the past, further demonstrates the inability of I.S.9 to carry out its duties due to lack of personnel, equipment, and proper liaison with organizations which are available to render the service for which I.S.9 is charged.

D. Failure to take direct and immediate action is a betrayal of the trust which the flying personnel of Tactical Air Force have been taught to rely upon.

Attn: The Inspector General

1. Reference is made to your letter with inclosure, file AAISI-I, 49(S)-2, dated 14 September 1950, Subject: "Organization of Underground Intelligence System," classified "Top Secret," and to TWX this Headquarters dated 5 October 1950, No. WS-4758.

2. It has been determined that in view of the fact that Alaska is a territorial possession of the United States, that the Air Force and the Federal Bureau of Investigation have joint responsibility for covert intelligence collection and Evasion and Escape operations in Alaska. Accordingly, the Office of Special Investigations, USAF, and the Federal Bureau of Investigation at the Washington level have prepared a proposed plan for these operations, three (3) copies of which are forwarded herewith for your consideration. Coordination of the proposed plan has been effected between OSI and FBI, and information copies have been made available to G-2, USA; Director, ONI, USN; C.O., Air Rescue Service; Director of Intelligence, DCS/O, Hqs USAF; and DCS/Operations, Hqs USAF.

3. In light of CIA's responsibilities for Evasion and Escape in areas adjacent to the Territory of Alaska, coordination of the proposed plan is also being effected with representatives of CIA, so that extensions of the Evasion and Escape program outside the territory can be established uniformly.

4. It is suggested that the attached proposed plan be reviewed by and coordinated with appropriate military and FBI representatives in Alaska. In order to preclude conflicting independent action being taken by your Headquarters and the interested agencies in the Zone of the Interior, no further action will be taken by this Headquarters to expand or implement the proposed plan at this time. It is requested that your comments and/or suggestions in connection with this plan be forwarded to this Headquarters as soon as practicable, as it is deemed essential that joint

1. Reference is made to your letter, with inclosure, file 49-, subject as above, dated 3 November 1950, and particularly to paragraph 4 of referenced letter wherein the comments and/or suggestions of this command are solicited in connection with the proposed plan for covert intelligence, etc.

2. With respect to paragraph 2 of referenced letter, in view of the fact that the responsibility for the establishment of the proposed covert operations has been determined and in view of the fact that such responsibility is joint, it would appear that no comment relative to such jointness of responsibility is required. The unsolicited opinion of this command, however, is that many advantages would accrue had the responsibility been placed upon either one or the other of the responsible agencies. The participation of the Air-Sea Rescue Service could, in such case, be then insured by proper directives as required.

3. With respect to paragraph 4 of referenced letter, it is felt that insufficient background information is available upon which to base the comments and/or suggestions in connection with this plan, particularly as such information affects this command. For example, it is patent that enormous resources and expenditures of material and money are involved in the establishment of an operation of this nature, and that such logistical problems are of vital concern to this command. No mention is made in either the proposed plan or the referenced letter of the sources, availability, or accountability of funds, equipment, or other logistical items. This command is, therefore, unable to estimate what present or future support by this command may be required in this venture.

4. Present commitments in connection with the current mission of this command are such as to preclude the utilization of available funds and/or equipment (including personnel, housing for a training school, aircraft, etc) in support of the proposed plan. The same applies with equal emphasis to the Air-Sea Rescue organization presently in this theater. For example, the latter organization will require additional personnel, with specialized training, and additional aircraft and equipment in order to undertake the functions contemplated by your proposal.

5. The need for the projects contemplated in referenced letter and the attached proposed plan is deemed self-evident. This command, therefore, is prepared to categorically approve the general outline of the projects as presented, with certain minor modifications.

6. Accordingly, it is requested that this command be furnished sufficient additional information upon which to base a reply to referenced letter. Specifically, it is requested that you furnish this command with a detailed outline of the support which will be expected of this command in the establishment of this project. Upon receipt of such information you will be furnished with our comments and/or suggestions.

POSITIVE INTELLIGENCE

Dear Mr. Hoover:

Reference is made to your letters dated September 8 and September 17, 1951, addressed to Major General Joseph F. Carroll, pertaining to the withdrawal by the Federal Bureau of Investigation from further participation in the Stay-behind Agent Program in Alaska. These letters were received after General Carroll had departed for Europe. Prior to his departure, however, General Carroll left specific instructions to give all assistance required by the Alaskan Air Command for Project "WASHTUB" and to give full cooperation to the Federal Bureau of Investigation for the establishment of the Stay-behind Agent phase of this project.

The delay in replying to your letters has been occasioned by necessary communications with the Commander-in-Chief, Alaskan Command, who has now advised that both phases of this program have been assigned to the Alaskan Air Command. I am also informed that the Alaskan Air Command has made arrangements with your Anchorage office in Alaska to recontact all Stay-behind Agents and to receive the documents, materials, and supplies mentioned in your letter of September 17, 1951. This Headquarters, through liaison, has already taken steps to obtain the operational files of Stay-behind Agents and other materials and supplies which you indicated would be turned over in Washington to the Air Force.

The cooperation extended in effectuating an orderly transfer of this program is appreciated.

I. DEFINITIONS: For the purposes of this plan the following terms are defined as indicated:

1. ADMINISTRATOR: the agency charged with the responsibility of establishing, maintaining, implementing and administering the evasion and escape facilities herein contemplated.

2. AGENT: a civilian individual recruited, trained and equipped to perform evasion and escape duties.

3. AGENT POOL: a group of agents who, after invasion of Alaska by hostile forces, are evacuated and retained within friendly territory to be used as replacements for casualties within the evasion and escape organization or for such other missions as may be required.

Copy 7 of 25 copies

4. ASSEMBLY AREA: a definitely designated area of terrain which contains cover (and in which supplies have been or are being stored) which provides a haven for evadees or escapees. This area will provide for the congregation and concealment of several evadees or escapees pending transportation to, or guidance to, an evacuation area.

5. ASSEMBLY POINT: a designated point within an assembly area at which rendezvous will be made between evadees and/or escapees and an agent.

6. ESCAPEE: a member of friendly forces who has been captured, seized, restrained or taken into custody by hostile forces and who has in any manner escaped from such capture, restraint or custody.

7. EVACUATION AREA: a designated geographical area providing sufficient cover and concealment for the secreting of a number of evadees and escapees awaiting evacuation by air or by water vessel or by land transport.

8. EVACUATION POINT: a designated point within an evacuation area where rendezvous between evadees and/or escapees and the evacuating means of transport is accomplished.

9. EVADEE: an individual who has been in a position where capture and custody by hostile forces has been possible and imminent, but who has avoided such capture and custody.

10. EVASION: the avoidance, in any manner, of capture or restraint by hostile forces when such capture is or was possible and imminent.

11. NATIVE: an aborigines of Alaska.

12. PRISONER COLLECTION POINT: any point, place or area where friendly forces or friendly individuals are restrained, imprisoned or held in custody by hostile forces or individuals.

13. RAT LINE: an evasion and escape route, generally depending upon ground transport, by means of which and over which evadees and/or escapees are shuttled from behind enemy lines to points of sanctuary or to areas under the control of friendly forces.

14. STERILE AREA: a designated geographical area wherein no evasion and escape facilities have been established or where such facilities have been abandoned.

15. SPECIAL AGENT: a special agent of the Office of Special Investigations or of the Federal Bureau of Investigation when, for the purpose of this plan, such special agent is performing duties contemplated herein.

16. ZONE: a definite geographical area within which has been established a self-contained evasion and escape procedure.

II. MISSION: To plan, establish, maintain and implement evasion and escape facilities within Alaska.

III. GENERAL:

1. ASSUMPTIONS:

a. Any occupation of Alaska by hostile forces will be based upon a system of strong-points. Because of large areas of virtually impassable terrain, and extreme difficulty of travel, sufficient hostile forces to cover the area will not be available and such occupation is not practical, necessary or desirable.

b. The plan for defense of Alaska assumes the ability of friendly forces to successfully defend the heartland.

c. Alaskan natives can generally be relied upon to render passive assistance to evadees or escapees.

2. BACKGROUND:

a. Evasion and escape facilities will be adapted to climate, terrain and weather.

b. The use of natives in any phase of the plan is not desirable.

c. Evacuation by air and/or water transport is considered the most practical. Long rat-lines are not practical because of weather, difficult terrain and sparseness of population.

d. Basic techniques for individual survival under arctic conditions are applicable.

3. DISCUSSION:

a. Extended or extensive rat-lines are not practical. During winter months with little or no daylight, severe cold and deep snow travel over land is impossible. Under more favorable conditions travel of more than ten miles per day is generally beyond endurance. A rat-line across Alaska requires the caching of enormous quantities of supplies at intervals of approximately fifteen miles. The expense in labor and material makes this prohibitive and not practical.

b. Travel across country is not practical during summer months. Shallow-draft boats operating in streams is generally the best means of transport; rafts are also of value.

c. The severe climate in the area generally north of the Brooks Range makes the establishment of evasion facilities in that area impractical and presently unnecessary.

4. FRIENDLY FORCES:

a. Office of Special Investigations, Alaskan Air Command.

b. Federal Bureau of Investigation, U. S. Department of Justice.

c. Air Sea Rescue Service.

5. ENEMY FORCES: Armed forces of the USSR and/or its satellites.

IV. TASK:

1. RESPONSIBILITY:

a. The Office of Special Investigations, Alaskan Air Command, is assigned the task of planning, establishing, maintaining and implementing evasion and escape facilities in Alaska.

2. COOPERATING AGENCIES:

a. The Federal Bureau of Investigation, U. S. Department of Justice, will render such aid as may be agreed upon.

b. Headquarters, Office of Special Investigations, United States Air Forces, will support the operations contemplated by this plan as required (in accordance with letter from Headquarters USAF, file (AFCSI) 49-5-1-9, subject: "~~(Secret)~~ Proposed Plan for Covert Intelligence and Evasion and Escape Operations in Alaska," dated 27 December 1950).

c. The Air Sea Rescue Service will provide necessary air transport for personnel and materiel, and will participate in evacuation, paradrop and parachute missions as required.

d. The Deputy Chief of Staff, Operations, Alaskan Air Command, is charged with the briefing of air crews concerning the evasion and escape facilities as established under the provisions hereof; the de-briefing of evadees and escapees is also a function of that staff section.

V. CONCEPT OF OPERATIONS:

1. ZONING:

a. The Territory of Alaska will be appropriately divided into zones for the most effective utilization of evasion and escape facilities. Wherever practicable each zone shall be a self-contained evasion and escape unit, within which there shall be designated sterile areas, assembly points and areas, and evacuation points and areas. (See map, Inclosure I)

b. Agents will be stationed within zones to search for, collect, conceal and/or supervise the travel and evacuation of evadees and escapees in respective zones. Within each zone agents will remain unknown to all other agents wherever practical.

c. Sterile areas shall be designated within each zone on the basis of the non-availability, or impracticality of establishing, evasion and escape facilities in such areas.

d. Assembly areas will be chosen on the basis of the availability of cover for concealment of personnel and supplies, the existing facilities (if any), and the accessibility of such area from other areas within the zone. An assembly point will be designated in each assembly area.

e. Evacuation areas will be chosen on the basis of the availability of facilities for the landing of aircraft or marine vessels therein. Consideration will also be given to the availability of cover for concealment of personnel, supplies and means of transport. An evacuation point will be designated within or immediately adjacent to evacuation areas.

f. Consideration will be given to the establishment of alternate facilities within each zone.

g. Whenever practicable agents will be advised by way of existing communication facilities of the approximate location of ditched aircraft or probable location of crew members who have parachuted from aircraft. Agents will take action to search for and find such ditched aircraft or individual crew members and guide or transport crews or individuals to assembly areas. Subsequently, a rendezvous with evacuation transport will be arranged by appropriate communication media and evacuation will be accomplished.

h. Facilities will be established in the vicinity of Prisoner Collection Points to aid escapees in completing their escape. The location, number and extent of such facilities will depend upon the existing situation. After the establishment of such facilities action will be taken to aid prisoners in effecting escape.

i. An agent pool will be provided for use as the situation requires. Agents from the agent pool will be used to replace casualties and augment pre-existing facilities as required.

2. PROCEDURES:

a. Emphasis will be placed upon, and priority will be given to, the establishment of evasion and escape facilities in areas of Alaska most vulnerable to enemy occupation and/or enemy activity. This generally will be deemed to include the western part of Alaska south of the Brooks Range, and especially the Seward Peninsula.

b. As facilities are established within the various zones, such facilities will be plotted on overlays to Inclosure I. Overlays will be supplied from time to time as such facilities are established.

c. All air-crew members will be briefed, prior to missions, on the established evasion and escape facilities.

VI. SUPPLY:

1. Headquarters, Office of Special Investigations, USAF, has agreed to furnish such logistical support as may be required to accomplish the mission herein assigned. (Authority: Letter, Hq USAF, file (AFCSI) 49-5-1-9, subject: "~~(Secret)~~ Proposed Plan for Covert Intelligence and Evasion and Escape Operations in Alaska," dated 27 December 1951.) This includes funds for purchase of required material and necessary travel.

VII. PERSONNEL:

1. Special agent personnel of the Office of Special Investigations will be used in the accomplishment of the assigned mission. Such personnel will be supplied by Headquarters, Office of Special Investigations, USAF.

2. Agent personnel will be recruited as required in accordance with availability. Agent personnel will be properly investigated, screened, trained, and equipped to perform the assigned mission.

3 NOV 1950

SUBJECT: ~~(Secret)~~ Proposed Plan for Covert Intelligence and Evasion and Escape Operations in Alaska
POSITIVE INTELLIGENCE

TO: Commanding General
Alaskan Air Command
APO 942, c/o Postmaster
Seattle, Washington
Attn: The Inspector General

1. Reference is made to your letter with inclosure, file AAISI-I, 49(3)-2, dated 14 September 1950, Subject: "Organization of Underground Intelligence System," classified "~~Top Secret~~," and to TWX this Headquarters dated 5 October 1950, No. TS-4759.

2. It has been determined that in view of the fact that Alaska is a territorial possession of the United States, that the Air Force and the Federal Bureau of Investigation have joint responsibility for covert intelligence collection and Evasion and Escape operations in Alaska. Accordingly, the Office of Special Investigations, USAF, and the Federal Bureau of Investigation at the Washington level have prepared a proposed plan for these operations, three (3) copies of which are forwarded herewith for your consideration. Coordination of the proposed plan has been effected between OSI and FBI, and information copies have been made available to G-2, USA; Director, ONI, USN; C.O., Air Rescue Service; Director of Intelligence, DCS/O, Hqs USAF; and DCS/Operations, Hqs USAF.

3. In light of CIA's responsibilities for Evasion and Escape in areas adjacent to the Territory of Alaska, coordination of the proposed plan is also being effected with representatives of CIA, so that extensions of the Evasion and Escape program outside the territory can be established uniformly.

4. It is suggested that the attached proposed plan be reviewed by and coordinated with appropriate military and FBI representatives in Alaska. In order to preclude conflicting independent action being taken by your Headquarters and the interested agencies in the Zone of Interior, no further action will be taken by this Headquarters to expand or implement the proposed plan at this time. It is requested that your comments and/or suggestions in connection with this plan be forwarded to this Headquarters as soon as practicable, as it is deemed essential that joint

SUBJECT: ~~(Secret)~~ Proposed Plan for Covert Intelligence and Evasion and Escape Operations in Alaska
POSITIVE INTELLIGENCE

TO: Director of Special Investigations
Headquarters, USAF
Washington 25, D. C.

1. Reference is made to your letter, with inclosure, file 49-, subject as above, dated 3 November 1950, and particularly to paragraph 4 of referenced letter wherein the comments and/or suggestions of this command are solicited in connection with the proposed plan for covert intelligence, etc.

2. With respect to paragraph 2 of referenced letter, in view of the fact that the responsibility for the establishment of the proposed covert operations has been determined and in view of the fact that such responsibility is joint, it would appear that no comment relative to such jointness of responsibility is required. The unsolicited opinion of this command, however, is that many advantages would accrue had the responsibility been placed upon either one or the other of the responsible agencies. The participation of the Air-Sea Rescue Service could, in such case, be then insured by proper directives as required.

3. With respect to paragraph 4 of referenced letter, it is felt that insufficient background information is available upon which to base the comments and/or suggestions in connection with this plan, particularly as such information affects this command. For example, it is patent that enormous resources and expenditures of material and money are involved in the establishment of an operation of this nature, and that such logistical problems are of vital concern to this command. No mention is made in either the proposed plan or the referenced letter of the sources, availability, or accountability of funds, equipment, or other logistical items. This command is, therefore, unable to estimate what present or future support by this command may be required in this venture.

4. Present commitments in connection with the current mission of this command are such as to preclude the utilization of available funds and/or equipment (including personnel, housing for a training school, aircraft, etc) in support of the proposed plan. The same applies with equal emphasis to the Air-Sea Rescue organization presently in this theater. For example, the latter organization will require additional personnel, with specialized training, and additional aircraft and equipment in order to undertake the functions contemplated by your proposal.

5. The need for the projects contemplated in referenced letter and the attached proposed plan is deemed self-evident. This command, therefore, is prepared to categorically approve the general outline of the projects as presented, with certain minor modifications.

6. Accordingly, it is requested that this command be furnished sufficient additional information upon which to base a reply to referenced letter. Specifically, it is requested that you furnish this command with a detailed outline of the support which will be expected of this command in the establishment of this project. Upon receipt of such information you will be furnished with our comments and/or suggestions.

AT KOTZEBUE, ALASKA:

1. On 27 August 1950 Mr. [redacted] Fish and Wildlife Service Agent, advised it was in the Kotzebue Grill where [redacted] remarked that a foreign power desired delivery of over a million gallons of diesel oil per year; that he had letters from the State Department indicating that the State Department would clear him to export 500,000 gallons per year; and that he would not proceed with such plans because he did not have the proper equipment to handle such quantities. [redacted] stated that [redacted] delivers oil in Alaska for the Union Oil Company and has indicated his points of delivery on a map in the Kotzebue Grill with thumb tacks, most of which have fallen from the map. The writer noted thumb tacks on the map marking Nostak, White Mountain, Cape Denbeigh, the mouth of the Selawik River, and Point Banks on Shuyak Island. [redacted] believes that [redacted] is loyal to the United States even though he frequently criticizes domestic policies and regulations.

AT WAINWRIGHT, ALASKA:

2. Located 70°40' N; 159°45' W, Wainwright is a prosperous village of approximately 200 natives who make a living by hunting, fishing, and seasonal longshore work at Barrow. Mr. and Mrs. [redacted] Alaska Native Service (ANS) [redacted] stated that the natives go about their work with little thought to the world situation or to any possibilities of invasion by a foreign power. The [redacted] feel the Eskimo would probably not resist an invasion and would readily accept foreign rule if the Eskimo is provided the necessities for sustaining life. The Eskimo has been living so long in a land where his primary interests are tangible things which will keep him alive that he just cannot comprehend the feeling of loyalty to the Government. But with an improving educational system, introduction of modern techniques, and membership in the National Guard, it is felt that the Eskimo will learn to know the quality of loyalty. No unusual incidents or activities of a subversive nature were reported.

AT BARROW, ALASKA:

3. Barrow, with a population of 932 natives and approximately 25 whites, is located 71°23' N; 156°31' W. A vessel of 3000 tons can anchor safely .6 mile from the village. The water remains quite deep to the beach which extends approximately 30 yards to a nearly verticle bank about 15 feet high. Beyond is the tundra which can best be traveled over in track vehicles as weasels and "cats". With permafrost from 8 to 16 inches beneath the surface, continued travel in summer over any one route creates a very muddy condition making travel even with track vehicles difficult.

4. On 2 September 1950 Mr. [redacted] Principal, ANS school, stated that the village is ruled by a native council whose effectiveness has decreased because of the size of the village and because of the modern standard of living prevailing since the natives became prosperous. About 75 or 100 natives are employed by the Arctic Contractors on the project at Naval Petroleum Reserve No. 4. They work 7 days a week, 9 hours a day, at a minimum wage of $1.38 per hour. About 14 natives are employed at the Meade River Coal Mine operated by ED BURNELL. The mine is 80 miles south of Barrow. The other natives for the most part hunt, fish and trap, and sell their catch to those employed.

Organization of a National Guard unit is proceeding satisfactorily. The Eskimo feels proud to belong and is considered excellent for rescue work and, with proper guidance, collection of information about the area. Just how good a combat soldier the Eskimo can be is a debatable point. No unusual occurrences or incidents of subversion have been noted.

5. On 1 September 1950 Mr. [redacted] Official in Charge, Weather Bureau, stated that an air of tension exists between the native and the whites. He explained that the native has the money to live by white man's standards and has become independent and occasionally exhibits a belligerent attitude. Actually, according to [redacted] the native does not like the white and [redacted] feels that the setting is proper for anyone who would want to create unrest among the natives.

Should the petroleum project be discontinued another serious problem will have to be met. Though the natives receive good wages there is little evidence that they are saving any. One wonders how the native will react if he must revert to his former methods of hunting and fishing to exist, for few of his former methods of existing are in effect. What little carving and skin sewing is being done reflects a rapidly disappearing art. The frame houses which most of the Eskimos have constructed cannot be maintained without financial income. In general conversation with personnel of government agencies presently assisting the Eskimos, the writer learned that many are cognizant of problems which may arise but there is no apparent planning for the future.

6. On 3 September 1950 [redacted] bush pilot, stated substantially the same information as set forth above. In addition he said that the strained relationship between the Eskimo and the white has been aggravated by the reported attitude of the U. S. Commissioner, HUGH SALTSMAN, who discourages association between the two groups. It is rumored that SALTSMAN, without any apparent reason, asked [redacted] a native foreman, to leave the Officers dining hall where he had been invited for dinner. [redacted] also advised that the Presbyterian missionary, [redacted] has just been unable to gain the full confidence of the natives even though the natives are a religious people. Because of his business practices [redacted] descendant of the famous trader, CHARLIE BROWER, is not liked by the natives. CHARLIE BROWER, while alive, maintained an economic stranglehold over the natives. One can still hear natives say that they were BROWER'S "slaves". [redacted] has no knowledge of a subversive element working among the natives.

AT POINT LAY, ALASKA:

7. This village of approximately 50 people is located on the shore of the Arctic Ocean 69°50' N; 163° W. The only whites here are the families of Mr. [redacted] AES teachers, who arrived in July 1950 from Elephant Point. On 6 September 1950 [redacted] village chief, advised that the village is governed by a council of seven. Several families have moved to Barrow where it is easier to make a living. [redacted] expects to leave in the spring because the area is poor for hunting. This year the village was supplied with 80 tons of food, fuel oil, lumber and coal.

The Eskimos show little concern over the world situation in general, but during conversation about former visits between Alaskan and Siberian natives [redacted] remarked that maybe the Russians might fly over and drop bombs on the village some day. [redacted] said that white strangers occasionally pass through the village and ask general questions about the Eskimos, their hunting and their manner of living. He has noted nothing unusual about the strangers and has never questioned them concerning their origin or their destination.

AT POINT HOPE, ALASKA:

8. The village is located 68°20' N; 166°30' W. The 275 people are governed by a council of nine. Income is derived through sale of seal skins, seal oil, and receipt of bounty. Hunting and trapping on land is not good. The native store this year purchased 130 tons of foodstaffs and 120 tons of gasoline, fuel oil and lumber. Approximately 30 natives are temporarily employed as longshoremen at Cape Lisburne. Mr. [redacted] Eskimo AES teacher, arrived in August 1950 to replace Mr. [redacted] who was transferred to Norvik, Alaska.

9. On 7 September 1950 [redacted] only permanent white resident and member of the National Guard, advised that the Eskimos are not concerned about the world situation since none expect to be drafted by virtue of the large families they support. [redacted] has observed no unusual activities in the area. He advised that Dr. and Mrs. [redacted] of the Health Service are wintering at the village for their vacation and have shown no unordinary actions.

10. On 8 September 1950 the writer conversed with Mr. [redacted] (phonetic) who stated he arrived in the village about July 1950 on behalf of an independent group in Fairbanks, who have no company or corporation name, to study the area between Point Hope and Cape Lisburne for mineral deposits and to study the area between these points for possibilities of commercially mining and shipping of barium carbonate he has located. [redacted] said that the Host Raco (phonetic) Company is interested in obtaining the barium carbonate for their Monterey, California plant.

11. This village of approximately 120 is located 67°45' N; 164° 30' W. The ANS teacher is Mr. [redacted] who arrived 23 August 1950 and is not yet well acquainted with the natives. [redacted] native, who has served in the armed forces advised that strangers seldom stop in the village and that there have been no unusual occurrences.

AT DEERING, ALASKA:

12. The village, located 66°5' N; 162°45' W, has approximately 165 people of which six are white. Natives live by fishing, seal hunting and selling carved ivory and skin products. About 25 natives from the village are employed at the Casa De Paga gold mine about 20 miles distant.

13. On 13 September 1950 Mrs. [redacted] ANS teacher, stated that the white people living in the village are [redacted] and JOHN SHEAFFER. Mrs. [redacted] does not trust [redacted] on whom she knows no disloyal information, because of [redacted]'S background.

[redacted] was born in 1922; was [redacted] (estimate), [redacted] was employed at the Casa De Paga mine until August 1950; intends to seek employment at the government hospital in Kotzebue. No apparent connection has been noted between [redacted] and the MOTO brothers mentioned below.

[redacted] is an old inactive man who remains at home nearly all the time. No adverse information is known of him.

HENRY COFFIN, 80 years old, leases gold bearing land to mining concerns. He keeps to himself; is considered loyal by [redacted]

JOHN SHEAFFER was born [redacted] in Poland in 1872, is now a naturalized citizen and considered to be loyal by [redacted] He lives alone on money from old age pension.

14. No additional detailed information could be furnished by Mrs. [redacted] concerning activities of TAYLOR MOTO and JAMES MOTO except that they are working at the Casa De Paga mining concern and that their influence upon the natives has not been evident inasmuch as the two come to the village on weekends only. She stated that on one of TAYLOR MOTO'S absences from the village in the spring of 1950 he was observed by [redacted] a native who was hunting beyond Cape Deceit northwest of the village, to be looking through binoculars toward the northwest. Upon asking MOTO about the action [redacted] was told, "It's none of your business." This incident was not verified by the writer because [redacted] was away from the village. Mrs. [redacted] stated that she has noted nothing about the MOTO children in school to reflect any subversive teachings by their parents.

JAMES MOTO was born at Nenana, Alaska on 3 August 1908. [redacted] a native. Children are [redacted]

16. On 13 September 1950 1st Lt. [redacted] O-1112820, Commanding Officer, Deering Detachment, 30th Engineer Battalion stated he has neither observed nor received any report of unusual incidents or activities among the natives. On 7 September 1950, however, while making radio contact on 40.9 megacycles with Kobuk Element No. 2, 537th Engineer Base Survey Company, the frequency was jammed for about 10 minutes by a Russian voice which a Lt. [redacted] who understands Russian said was just patter with no apparent purpose. Under the circumstances [redacted] believes the jamming might have been intentional. The frequency, which [redacted] said was assigned for field party operations, has been similarly jammed on two previous occasions.

AT SHISHMAREF, ALASKA:

17. On 14 September 1950 Rev. [redacted] Lutheran missionary, advised that the village has a population of about 200. No incidents have been observed. [redacted] stated that [redacted] trader and welfare agent, apparently desires to be the key individual in the village and resents the work of the ANS as well as Government shipping of supplies to the villages. As a result friction exists between [redacted] and [redacted] ANS teacher. Interview with [redacted] could not be obtained during the short stop at the village. During the short interview with Mr. [redacted] it was learned that he does not favor Government shipping to native villages, for it is his belief that this practice will ruin private shipping at reasonable rates. [redacted] though not a member of the National Guard, has been acting as person in charge. He has received no information of unusual activity.

AT WALES, ALASKA:

18. This native village has a population of approximately 150 people. Prominent persons are Mr. and Mrs. [redacted] ANS teachers, and Mr. [redacted] native proprietor of the cooperative store. No unusual incidents were reported for the area.

AT TELLER MISSION, ALASKA:

20. The 115 natives of this village live in poverty. Hunting is poor and the natives exist primarily on fish. The families of Rev. [redacted] Lutheran missionary, and [redacted] new ANS teacher, constitute the white population of the village. No unusual incidents were reported.

AT UKOKYUK, WAINWAI ISLAND, ALASKA:

21. No unusual incidents have been noted since survey by OSI personnel in July 1950. Mr. [redacted] who was studying the Eskimo language departed in the early part of August 1950. Mr. [redacted] ANS teacher, and Rev. [redacted] native minister, noted nothing unusual about [redacted]'s activities.

AT ELIM, ALASKA:

SUBJECT: ~~(Secret)~~ Proposed Plan for Covert Intelligence and Evasion and Escape Operations in Alaska. POSITIVE INTELLIGENCE

TO: Commanding General (AIR MAIL)
Alaskan Air Command
APO 942, c/o Postmaster
Seattle, Washington

1. Reference is made to your letter, subject as above, dated 16 November 1950 regarding the proposed plan for covert intelligence operations submitted by this Headquarters for coordination and approval.

2. On 12 December 1950, representatives of Headquarters, Alaskan Command and Alaskan Air Command conferred at Headquarters USAF with representatives of OSI, DCS Operations and the FBI. During this conference, the details of the referenced plan concerning Evasion and Escape and the stay-behind agents program were discussed. The salient points raised in the above referenced letter were clarified, and a full concept of the problem was reached. It was indicated that the OSI-FBI responsibilities for these operations would be incorporated into the Unconventional Warfare Annex of the war plan for the Territory along the lines of the proposed plan. In this connection, the representatives from Alaska indicated that Headquarters, Alaskan Command would delegate the OSI-FBI responsibilities to the Alaskan Air Command for implementation and direction. Accordingly, this Headquarters is prepared to support your detailed requirements for military personnel, funds and special equipment in accordance with your justified needs. Additionally, this Headquarters is prepared to assist in the formulation of the implementing details for these operations as they affect OSI and FBI, and to assist in such training programs as you may desire.

3. In view of the above, it is requested that your detailed requirements be made available to this Headquarters as soon as practicable, so that the over-all program can be given impetus. In order to facilitate matters at this level, your detailed requirements should be coordinated with all interested staffs prior to submission to this Headquarters. Further, a report of the status of the Evasion and Escape and stay-behind agents program should be provided this Headquarters so that your future requirements can be anticipated and initial steps undertaken at this level to facilitate matters.

SUBJECT: Covert Operations in Alaska

MEMORANDUM TO THE COMMANDING GENERAL, ALASKAN AIR COMMAND

1. You are advised that the Director of Plans, Alaskan Air Command; Director of Special Investigations, Alaskan Air Command; and the Executive, Office of Special Investigations, Alaskan Air Command, met in the Teleconference Room at 0900, 26 February 1951, for the purpose of responding to a request from the Director of Special Investigations, Headquarters USAF, for a teleconference relative to the above subject. The following individuals were present at the Headquarters OSI, USAF, end of the telecon:

Lt Colonel [redacted]
Lt Colonel
Lt Colonel
Major
Captain

2. You are advised that the following aspects of the proposed covert operations were considered at the teleconference:

a. Headquarters OSI, USAF, first raised the question as to what is the present status of the War Plan Annex with respect to escape and evasion. Our answer to this was that [redacted] is aware of the requirements and is making an attempt to tie in the overall escape and evasion plans with other covert operations. It is estimated that the plans will be completed in one to two months.

b. Headquarters OSI, USAF, stated that, regardless of whether or not the Alaskan Air Command or the Alaskan Command has the staff responsibility for the overall plan, operation of escape and evasion is an OSI responsibility; the question was posed as to whether or not OSI, AAC, has anticipated requirements, and, if so, what those requirements will be. Our reply was that the initial fund requirements are as stated in T/X from Hq AAC, file AAISI-0523, dated 270650 Zebra January 51; initial plans contemplated additional 10 officers and 12 special agents plus 4 stenographers (military) and 8 clerks (military); elasticity was requested in so far as both fund and personnel allotments are concerned to provide for unforeseen developments; a good Executive Officer to administer the project was requested.

c. Headquarters C/S, USAF, raised the question as to whether or not CSI, AAC, had undertaken any informal preliminaries to recruit persons for the project; it was stated that most of the training of recruits would be undertaken in the zone of the interior under suitable cover, and this applies to both CSI and FBI recruits. It was stated that CSI, AAC, had undertaken few inquiries outside the populated centers; that we were not in a position to take action here without permission of the theater commander; hearty approval of training plans for recruits within the zone of the interior was expressed, and it was mentioned that this plan may necessitate an increase in funds for transportation.

d. Headquarters CSI, USAF, stated that CSI personnel were being screened in the zone of the interior for assignment to CSI, AAC, and it was indicated that such personnel would be given proper indoctrination prior to being sent to Alaska. Approval of this plan was expressed by CSI, AAC; it was suggested that 2 officers be indoctrinated in fiscal procedures and 2 officers be indoctrinated in supply accountability techniques, etc; the comments of Headquarters CSI, USAF, were requested on the renting of buildings in populated areas for use as bases of operation because of the scarcity of buildings on AAC bases. Headquarters USAF, indicated that the suggestion re buildings would be taken under advisement and as soon as possible by mail of the decision.

e. Headquarters CSI, USAF, requested information on what preliminary steps could be taken by them to assist CSI, AAC, in subjection of our ready cadre. CSI, AAC, indicated that the Alaskan Air Command must be directed, through official channels, to carry out the program, and it was suggested that a clear letter be sent through official channels to the Commander-in-Chief, Alaskan Command, directing the desired program; that Headquarters CSI, USAF, furnish information on the overall escape and evasion program, and CSI's escape kit; that steps be taken to insure that the dog teams of the 10th Rescue Squadron are retained in this theater. Headquarters CSI, USAF, stated that the escape and evasion information will be furnished "soonest"; it was indicated that the remainder of the items would be discussed with the appropriate staffs at DA/AF level.

f. Headquarters CSI, USAF, asked what suggestions or recommendations we had for the development and procurement of technical equipment such as radios; whether we want USAF to handle the procurement of such technical equipment, and if so, what our requirements are. We indicated that we would include our suggestions or recommendations concerning technical equipment in a subsequent letter but that at present it is believed that Headquarters CSI, USAF, should prepare to furnish CSI, AAC, with most of the technical equipment; it was requested that CSI, USAF, explore the possibility of obtaining a "silencer" device for pistols and obtain necessary clearance through the Treasury Department under the National Firearms Act; it was suggested that arctic equipment may best be obtained locally;

it was indicated that both G-2, AAC, and the local FBI are now engaged in performing research relative to the packaging of materials for "caching", but any material on this subject available to Headquarters G-2, USA, through the Library of Congress or from other sources would be appreciated.

g. In reply to a question raised by Headquarters G-2, USA, it was requested that an Executive Officer and one each fiscal officer and one each supply officer be sent to Headquarters G-2, AAC, for duty at the earliest possible date. Headquarters CO, USA, was advised that they will be notified by G-2 approximately 2 weeks prior to requirement for the remainder of personnel, and it was requested that such personnel then be sent by the most expeditious means.

it was indicated that both OSI, AAC, and the local FBI are now engaged in performing research relative to the packaging of materials for "caching", but any material on this subject available to Headquarters OSI, USAF, through the Library of Congress or from other sources would be appreciated.

g. In reply to a question raised by Headquarters OSI, USAF, it was requested that an Executive Officer and one each fiscal officer and one each supply officer be sent to Headquarters OSI, AAC, for duty at the earliest possible date. Headquarters OSI, USAF, was advised that they will be notified by TWX approximately 2 weeks prior to requirement for the remainder of personnel, and it was requested that such personnel then be sent by the most expeditious means.

PROPOSED ALASKAN COVERT OPERATIONS

Document downgraded to ~~Secret~~ per 60324 UC BAW/RS on 4/5/2010

I. PURPOSE

The purpose of this proposed plan for covert operations in the Territory of Alaska is to provide an organization within the Territory of Alaska designed to accomplish the following in the event Alaska or a part thereof is invaded or occupied by an enemy force:

1. Establishment of a network for the covert collection and transmittal of intelligence information to the Commander-in-Chief, Alaska Command, or to the Command which may be charged with the responsibility of operations within the Territory of Alaska.
2. Establishment and maintenance of evasion and escape routes in the Territory of Alaska for allied personnel.
3. Provide for the utilization of 1 and 2 above by other allied agencies in the conduct of unconventional warfare as required.

II. SCOPE OF PLAN

Within the limitations prescribed by the authorities of the United States and those imposed by climate, terrain, availability of qualified agents, and the ruthlessness and efficiency of potential enemies, this plan concerns coverage throughout all Alaska and the Islands adjacent thereto, including the Aleutian Archipelago. The implementation and execution of this plan is the joint responsibility of the Office of Special Investigations, Alaskan Air Command, and of the Alaskan Office of the Federal Bureau of Investigation, in accordance with such policies, guidance, and/or such supervision as may be ordered by the Director, Office of Special Investigations, Headquarters United States Air Force, and the Director, Federal Bureau of Investigation, in coordination with the Director of Intelligence, United States Army, and Director of Naval Intelligence, United States Navy.

ALL FBI INFORMATION CONTAINED HEREIN IS UNCLASSIFIED DATE 7-11-94 BY SP1aBTS/SC

III. ADMINISTRATION

The plan will be administered by the Commander-in-Chief, Alaska Command, or his duly appointed representative who will be designated as Administrator. The Administrator will be responsible at the Command level for the issuance of intelligence requirements in accordance with the mission of the Alaska Command. The Administrator, who will have no operational function, will be coordinator for all matters pertaining to this plan requiring logistic support, coordination and correlation of all branches of the allied armed forces. As this plan is concerned primarily with matters of an intelligence nature, it is suggested that consideration be given to the appointment of a Staff Intelligence Officer as Administrator.

IV. OPERATIONS

Direct responsibility for operation of the plan is placed jointly upon the Office of Special Investigations, Alaskan Air Command, and the Federal Bureau of Investigation office in Alaska. The person selected by these two agencies to be in charge of the operation will be referred to as the Principal. In this connection, it is suggested that the Director, Office of Special Investigations, Alaskan Air Command, or his duly appointed representative be designated as the Principal; that the Special Agent in Charge, FBI Office, Alaska, or his duly appointed representative be designated Associate Principal. This arrangement will preserve the military chain of Command. The mission of the Principal is to operate an organization capable of fulfilling the requirements stated in Paragraph I above.

For the purpose of this plan, "covert collection" refers to a network of Agents selected, trained, and strategically placed for the purpose of collecting and reporting counter intelligence, and foreign positive intelligence information. This will be accomplished by stay-behind agents who will remain in the occupied area, and by a reserve pool of qualified agents who have been evacuated prior to enemy occupation and who will subsequently be dropped back into an area from time to time as required.

For the purpose of this plan, the collective phrase, "Evasion and Escape," includes the operation and maintenance of covert channels whereby personnel are enabled to emerge from an enemy held or unfriendly area to areas under allied control.

a. Evasion is the avoidance of capture, of United States or allied military personnel, behind enemy lines or in unfriendly areas.

b. Escape is the gaining of freedom from enemy custody, by United States or allied personnel who have been captured by the enemy.

Evasion and Escape as defined above will be facilitated by use of agents and/or contacts who will establish safe havens and routes for the channeling of evaders and escapees back to friendly areas.

For the purpose of this plan, the phrase, "the utilization of 1 and 2 above by other agencies for unconventional warfare" (Par I,3) is defined as meaning that the intelligence collection network, the evasion and escape routes, and the operational facilities which service and support them are available for the use of other U.S. or allied agencies who may be performing operations involving sabotage, guerrilla or other unconventional warfare in accordance with the desires of the Commander-in-Chief, Alaska Command.

1. AGENTS - The term "agent" as it appears in this plan does not refer to a special agent of the OSI or FBI. It denotes an individual who is recruited, trained, strategically placed and left behind during allied evacuation. It also denotes the individual who is dispatched by air drop into an enemy occupied area as required.

The term "informant" denotes an individual recruited, trained, and utilized by the agent.

In this respect the training and utilization of the informant should be compartmentalized. He should be given only that instruction and knowledge of the organization and its personnel necessary for him to perform his assignments.

The informants constitute the "chain" or "net" of the agent and serve as sources of information in the collection of intelligence and as contacts in the E & E routes.

Utilization of Agents will be the responsibility of the Principal, who will insure that Agents are recruited, trained, equipped and remunerated. The "stay-behind" agents should be selected with special consideration given to their cover, area knowledge, stamina, adaptability, motivation and trustworthiness.

Agents should be chosen from categories which there is every reason to believe will not be molested by enemy counter intelligence agencies. Experience has demonstrated that upon occupation of an area, enemy counter intelligence forces conduct a detailed screening to uncover and neutralize persons who might be useful to or associated with the forces opposing this enemy. Accordingly, the recruitment of agents should provide sufficient numbers to serve as alternates based upon an anticipated attrition. Along these lines, it is suggested that consideration be given to the selection of a number of agents to form a reserve pool to be evacuated just prior to an enemy occupation of Alaska. These agents would subsequently be used from time to time, as the need arises, for air drops into areas with which they are familiar and in which they may be utilized for a period of time, with subsequent evacuation when their mission has been accomplished. The reserve pool of agents would also serve as a means for providing guides in areas in which other unconventional warfare operations are contemplated, and as replacements for agent casualties in occupied areas. This reserve pool plan would obviate an undesirable situation where an agent would stay behind in an area which is currently inactive, waiting for something to happen. It would also preclude the total neutralization of the underground system in an area, in the event of mass evacuation of the population in the area by the enemy. There is the additional advantage that the use of a reserve pool would reduce the possibility of compromise of the agents or the system inasmuch as detailed briefing on the system or of a mission would be withheld until the agent is actually prepared for dispatch. The reserve pool plan should result in a larger recruitment of agents in that some agents might not be too enthusiastic about being left behind in enemy occupied areas for an indefinite period of time, but would be willing to reenter an area covertly from time to time to perform a specific mission.

2. PLACEMENT OF AGENTS - The placement of agents is discretionary with the Principal and the Associate Principal whose decision will be based on the requirements concerning that area. Factors to be considered should include the establishment of an evasion and escape system along the air routes that would be utilized by tactical air units; activities and concentration of the enemy occupation forces; plus any added requirements of the Commander-in-Chief, Alaska Theater.

3. TRAINING OF AGENTS - When practicable, Agents should be trained individually and their true identity known only to those who require that information. Where necessary to train agent personnel in groups, the individual security of the agent should be maintained by appropriate cover. It is recognized that there will be various types of agents who will require different types of training. In each instance, training must be in accordance with the individual needs of an agent, taking into consideration the agent's capabilities, knowledge, background and proposed mission. Facilities for this training should be made available in Alaska, the Zone of Interior, or any other selected area, whichever is most feasible in the interests of security, economy and efficiency. The facilities necessary for training should be drawn from the Air Force, Federal Bureau of Investigation, Army or Navy. It is possible, in light of security requirements, that certain phases of agent training may be accomplished by a special training staff which could be dispatched from the ZI to Alaska for that purpose.

V. SUGGESTED AGENT TRAINING

1. ARCTIC SURVIVAL COURSE - To train agents in survival procedure in Arctic areas with emphasis on how to exist off the land with a minimum of equipment. This includes familiarization with Evasion and Escape kits. An Escape and Evasion training school is presently operating under Air Force sponsorship at Camp Carson, Colorado. Quotas in the school are available for this program.

2. COMMUNICATIONS - Training in radio communication procedures, code and cipher, signal security, operation and maintenance of radio equipment. Facilities for this instruction may be drawn from the Air Force, Army and Navy.

3. AIR DROP TECHNIQUES - Instruction applicable to Arctic areas will be given in parachute drop procedures, pickup techniques, drop-zone marking procedures, and air supply procedures. Facilities for any or all of the foregoing training are available at the Army Airborne School, Fort Benning, Georgia, and at Air Rescue Service facilities.

4. BASIC AGENT COURSE - This training should include the following: security and cover; organization of informant nets; observation and reporting; mapping and sketching; photography; first aid; weapons; close combat; organization of Evasion and Escape lines. Facilities for this type of training exist in OSI and FBI.

GENERAL COMMENTS - During the implementation phase of organizing this program, all participating personnel whether they be scheduled for staff functions or field operations, should be given a familiarization training in all phases of the program. This will insure a uniformity and standardization in the planning and operation of the program.

VI. COMMUNICATIONS

Consideration must be given to the possibility of integrating into this program the facilities of the Air Force Security Section monitoring facilities presently in Alaska. During an enemy occupation in Alaska, this service would provide a fixed radio station in a secure rear area for handling agent radio traffic and a message center for the proposed underground system. Communications between agents in the field will be almost exclusively directed to a fixed radio station and all messages will then be routed by the station to the Principal. For this type of communication, coded radio transmissions will utilize an enciphering system such as the one-time pad. An alternate system of radio communication which may be used extensively is ground-to-air using either the UT4 or a modification of this set.

The problems of communication will be so difficult to solve that pre-occupation with them will considerably hamper agent operations. The development of the entire communications phase of this operation must be guided by experimentation and research in the area prior to enemy invasion to insure that a workable system is developed. Any other means of communication such as radio-to-submarine or to a mobile monitoring station, or by couriers and letter drops may be utilized at the discretion of the Principal.

VII. AIR OPERATIONS

It is envisioned that the covert operation in Alaska will be dependant to a great extent upon the medium of Air Operations for drop and pickup of both supplies and personnel, and for communications. It is generally recognized that surface travel in Alaska is greatly restricted under normal conditions by severity of climate and/or terrain features. This, coupled with the restrictions imposed by an occupying enemy, makes Air Operations the only feasible method which can be utilized. It is pointed out that restrictions imposed by enemy occupation forces would permit travel for only those indigenous personnel who have been thoroughly screened by the enemy. Mobility for agent personnel in the occupied area, therefore, must be considered to be extremely limited.

The Air Rescue Service in Alaska has the facility and capability of conducting necessary air operations for this covert program. It also has natural cover for expansion into the clandestine phases of the plan. Further, the Air Rescue Service has already been assigned the mission of assisting in the Evasion and Escape program elsewhere in the world and is, therefore, the logical service to undertake that operation in Alaska, as well as the operation of dispatching agents and supplying the covert intelligence network. In this connection, Headquarters, Air Rescue Service, Washington, D. C. has indicated that they are prepared to participate in this program.

VIII. SUPPLY AND EQUIPMENT

Immediate action should be taken to requisition necessary stocks of supplies and equipment to be cached in such areas as may be determined by the Principal and the Associate Principal, in coordination with the Administrator. These caches must be accessible to agents for use in both the Covert Intelligence Collection Program and for the Evasion and Escape program, giving consideration to the possibility of pilferage or compromise. Research and evaluation should be undertaken immediately to determine the type and quantity of equipment and supplies best suited for the purpose, bearing in mind such factors as climate, portability, and adaptability. Provision should be made now for the development and procurement of items considered necessary, but which are not now available for issue. In this respect, coordinated action should be taken by the Army, Air Force, Navy and FBI. It is suggested that the caches be stocked with supplies substantially as follows: food; luxury items; clothing; arms and ammunition; technical equipment; monies (various); cooking supplies and fuel; appropriate language dictionaries; barter items; maps; etc.

IX. ORGANIZATION

In order for the Principal and the Associate Principal to fulfill their mission as described above, it is suggested that an organization be established with a logical breakdown of four sections. These would be Evasion and Escape; Covert Intelligence; Operations; and Training and Supply. (Refer to Chart, Page 15)

1. EVASION AND ESCAPE SECTION - This section should be headed by an OSI representative who will be responsible for all activities related to the Evasion and Escape System, in coordination with the Director of Intelligence, Alaskan Air Command. This section will be the direct contact for the agents conducting the Escape and Evasion network and will be responsible for the operation and maintenance of the system.

2. COVERT INTELLIGENCE SECTION - This section should be headed by an FBI representative who will be responsible for all matters pertaining to the handling and maintenance of stay-behind agents participating in clandestine procurement of intelligence. This section is the sole contact for these covert intelligence agents in the field, and accordingly, is responsible for the compilation of intelligence information resulting from this activity and its transmittal to the Principal for the required dissemination.

3. OPERATIONS SECTION - This section will be headed by a representative of the Air Rescue Service. The functions of this section will include all air operations in this plan which pertain to the dispatch of agents and supplies, pickup, evacuation and other related functions of the Air Rescue Service. This section will establish and maintain an adequate communications system as required between agents in the field and the Principal. Should the requirement arise, this section will supervise and coordinate such special operations as may be directed.

4. TRAINING AND SUPPLY SECTION - This section will be headed by a representative of either OSI or the FBI and will be responsible for establishing and operating training areas and schools as required, the development and/or procurement of special equipment and the supervision of general supply, fiscal and administrative matters pertaining to the organization.

GENERAL COMMENTS - It is envisioned that top staff control will be through the Office of the Administrator, who in all probability, will be on the intelligence staff of the Commanding General in the Theater. Requirements and essential elements of information furnished by the Theater Commander will be forwarded to the Office of the Principal. If the requirement pertains to Evasion or Escape, the E & E Section will initiate action to fulfill the requirement using agents and informants of the Evasion and Escape network. In this respect, there must be close coordination with the Covert Intelligence Section as frequently, these two sections will be using similar lines and personnel. Based upon the requirements for E & E that have been handed down, coordination with the Operation Section will usually be made as the services of this section will be used to fill the requirement. In actual practice, any one operation may require the coordinated action of all four sections, each section being responsible for its specialized field of activity. In spite of this interdependence of the four sections, there should be no overlapping of functions or responsibilities. If the requirement received by the Principal pertains primarily to procuring intelligence by clandestine methods, this operation would be conducted by the Covert Intelligence Section. In accomplishing the mission the field agent may rely upon a member of an informant net which he has developed through his own resources. The methods and techniques used by the agent however, will be dictated by the training previously given to the agent.

The Principal and Associate Principal should establish, as soon as possible, a program for the development of counter intelligence information. Whereas the proposed organization contained in this plan concerns primarily the Covert Collection program and the Evasion and Escape program, full cognizance should be taken by OSI and FBI of the delineated spheres of responsibility contained in the Delimitations Agreement. Requirements should be established, therefore, for information concerning such matters as enemy counter intelligence agencies in Alaska, enemy intelligence personalities, sabotage methods and techniques, enemy espionage activity, subversive activities and information concerning enemy plans for penetrations into Canada and the United States. Matters concerning the development of counter intelligence information through this proposed organization is the direct responsibility of OSI and FBI. The requirements for these counter intelligence matters should originate from these two agencies without reference to or coordination with the Administrator.

X. ACTION TO BE TAKEN NOW BY OSI AND FBI IN ALASKA

1. Recruitment and screening of agents and E & E contacts.
2. Appropriate training of agents.
3. Selection and establishment of routes for Evasion and Escape.
4. Selection and stocking of caches.

5. Determination of information collection requirements.

6. Decision and procurement as to type and quantity of equipment to be issued to agents.

7. Determination of priorities of areas having strategic values in Alaska.

8. Conduct of information collection operation to satisfy current requirements.

XI. ACTION TO BE TAKEN BY OSI AND FBI IN ALASKA IMMEDIATELY PRIOR TO EVACUATION OF U.S. FORCES

1. Evacuation of agent reserve pool.

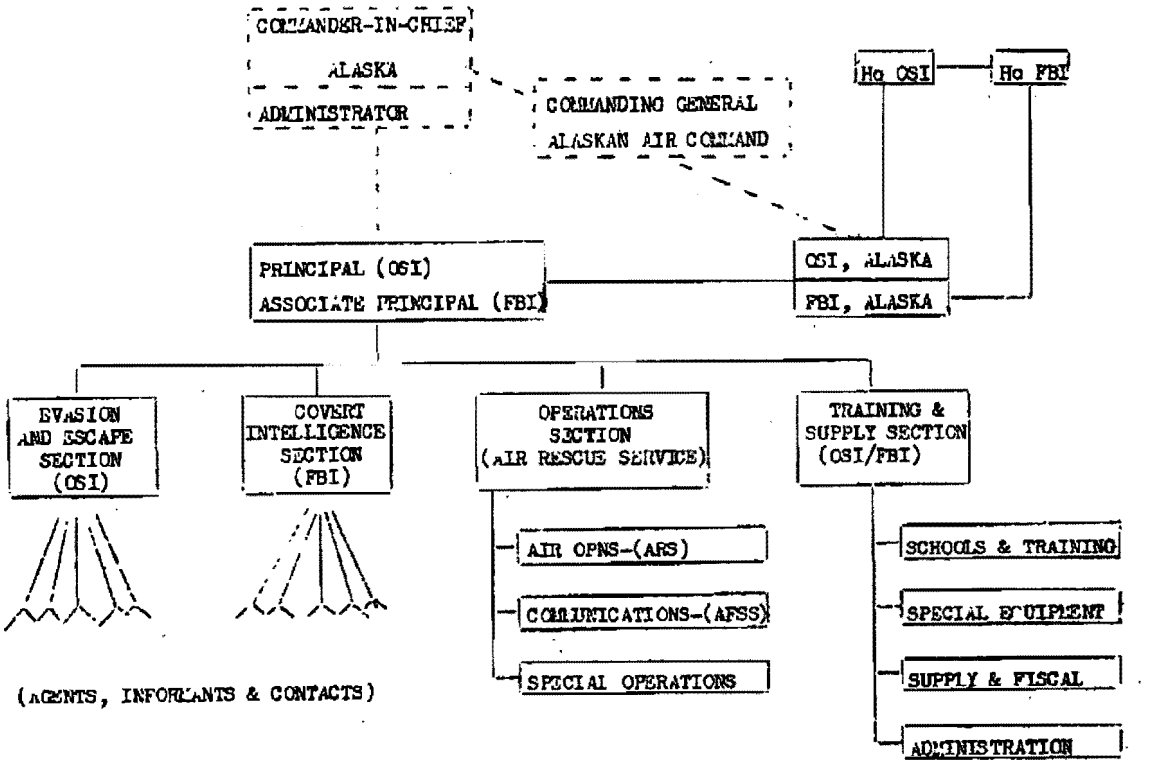

2. Briefing and equipping of stay-behind agents.

3. Issuance of information to Commander-in-Chief, Alaska Command, relative to Evasion and Escape procedures established.

4. Evacuation of organization to pre-determine safe areas.

5. Continued liaison and coordination with Administrator, and all other interested allied staffs and agencies.
