Specimen received October 23, 1985, from SAC, Miami, under cover of communication dated October 21, 1985 (51023028 D SQ VF):

Q13 Postal card bearing typewritten address "Rep Dan Rostenkowski, Democrat- Illinois The "house" Washington, D. C. 20515"

Result of examination:

It was determined that the specimen K2 typewriter which was used to prepare specimen K1 was also used to prepare questioned typewritten impressions on specimens Q1 through Q8, Q12 and Q13 in this case and the typewritten impressions on specimens Q1 through Q4 in the case whose title includes "COMMITTEE OF VIGILANCE" and various Congressman. The "COMMITTEE OF VIGILANCE" case has Bureau File #9-67866.

An examination of the original copy of the photocopy specimen Qc11 would probably indicate that the typewritten impressions on this specimen were prepared using the specimen K2 typewriter.

The specimen K2 typewriter was not used in the preparation of specimens Qc9 and Qc10.

Specimens Q8, Q12 and Q13 appear to be ordinary United States Postal Service postcards. No indented writing or other marks of value which could indicate the immediate source of these specimens were noted.

No significant indented writing, watermarks or other marks of value which could indicate the immediate source of specimens Qc9 and Qc10 were noted.

The result of the requested psycholinguistic examination of specimens Q12 and Q13 will be the subject of a separate report.

The disposition of specimens Q8, Qc9, Qc10, Q12 and Q13 and the result of the requested latent fingerprint examinations of these specimens will be reported separately.

Specimens Qc11 and K1 are returned herewith.

Photographs of specimens Q8 through Q13 and K1 are retained.

The specimen K2 typewriter will be returned at a later date.

It was det that the spec K2 ltr which was used to prepare K1 was also used to prepare the two impressions spec Q1 → Q8, Q12 and Q13 in this case and the two impressions spec Q1 → Q4 in the case which included "COMMITTEE OF VIGILANCE" and various Congressmen. The "COMMITTEE OF VIGILANCE" case has Bureau File # 9-67866.

The spec K2 ltr will be returned in the near future.

An exam. of the original copy of the photocopy spec Qc11 would probably indic that the two breaks in this spec ... were prepared using the spec K2 ltr.

Result of examination:

It could not be definitely determined if the typewriter used to prepare specimen K1 was or was not used to prepare questioned typewriting on the previously submitted specimens Q1 through Q7 and on specimens Q8, Qc11 and Q12 because possible identifying defects cannot be discerned.

However, the typewritten impressions on the aforementioned questioned specimens and on specimen K1 all have horizontal spacing of 251.5 (100 characters occupy 251.5 millimeters of horizontal space). This horizontal spacing and the accompanying coding of the questioned and known typewriting is extremely unusual and is included neither in Federal Bureau of Investigation Typewriter Standards nor in Interpol Typewriter Standards. Additionally, the aforementioned questioned and known typewritten impressions are all of the same style.

A more definite determination would require the submission of the specimen K1 typewriter to the Laboratory for examination.

The specimen K1 typewriter was not used in the preparation of specimens Qc9 and Qc10.

The information in the first three paragraphs above applies regarding typewritten impressions on specimens Q1 through Q4 in the Bureau case whose title includes, "THE COMMITTEE OF VIGILANCE" and various Congressman. This case has Bureau File #9-67866.

and Q13

Specimens Q8 and Q12 appear to be ordinary United States Postal Service postcards. No indented writing or other marks of value which could indicate the immediate source of these specimens were noted.

No significant indented writing, watermarks or other marks of value which could indicate the immediate source of specimens Qc9 and Qc10 were noted.

The result of the requested psycholinguistic examination of specimens Q12 and Q13 will be the subject of a separate report.

The disposition of specimens Q8, Qc9, Qc10, +Q13 Q12, and the result of the requested latent fingerprint examinations of these specimens will be reported separately.

Specimens Qc11 and K1 are returned herewith.

Photographs of specimens Q8 through Q13 and K1 are retained.

The specimen K2 tape will be returned at a later date.

CHARLES OTTO FOX;
ATTORNEY [redacted]
CONGRESSMAN JOSEPH KENNEDY-VICTIM
SENATOR EDWARD M. KENNEDY-VICTIM
EXTORTION (A)

CHARLES OTTO FOX, date of birth November 28, 1907, FBI Number 373116, is a white male residing in Terre Haute, Indiana. He is suffering from Schizophrenia and is an outpatient of the HAMILTON MENTAL HEALTH CENTER, 620 Eighth Avenue, Terre Haute, Indiana, where he was involuntarily detained on May 10, 1988, by the TERRE HAUTE, INDIANA, POLICE DEPARTMENT. The detention stemmed from complaints of Terre Haute residents that FOX was verbally harassing individuals in a local supermarket.

When not in treatment at the HAMILTON CENTER, FOX spends the great majority of his time at the VIGO COUNTY LIBRARY, the downtown MC DONALDS RESTAURANT, or walking the streets of Terre Haute, Indiana. While at the VIGO COUNTY LIBRARY, FOX engages in reading any materials at hand, by primarily periodicals. It is from his reading that he is stimulated to write threatening letter. After reading something that disturbs him, FOX will write to the public figure he feels is responsible for the perceived injustice or moral wrong; most of his letters are of a threatening nature, and include anti-black and anti-Jewish sentiment.

This document contains neither recommendations nor conclusions of the FBI. It is the property of the FBI and is loaned to your agency; it and its contents are not to be distributed outside your agency.

All of FOX's letters in the recent past have been handwritten, the majority of which appear on white, unlined, legal size paper with a photostatic Ku Klux Klan letterhead at the top of the page. FOX always signs his letters, and includes a business reply of "Imperial Wizard of America," Attorney [redacted], 211 Masonic Temple Building, Decature, Georgia. b6 b7C He frequently makes reference to "Secret Criminal Society" and includes a photostatic copy of page 509 of Volume 24 of the "Encyclopedia America" regarding secret societies.

On June 1, 1988, [redacted] was interviewed by the FBI Atlanta. [redacted] advised he has known FOX for approximately 15 years through his [redacted] long time association with the Ku Klux Klan. At one time, FOX had been denied membership in the Ku Klux Klan because [redacted] thought he was "crazy" and "mentally ill." [redacted] has received numerous letters, almost daily, from FOX in which FOX has criticized different individuals.

FOX first came to the attention of the UNITED STATES SECRET SERVICE (USSS) in 1968. He was interviewed by USSS in 1986 and a subsequent threat analysis declared him non-threatening.

The FEDERAL BUREAU OF INVESTIGATION's Terre Haute, Indiana, Resident Agency is aware of six letters written by FOX since 1986 which contained threats of varying degrees against individuals ranging from local public figures to officials of the UNITED STATES GOVERNMENT.

On January 24, 1986, FOX mailed a letter to Indiana State Senator JULIA M. CARSON, Indianapolis, Indiana, which contained his reactions to her attempting to initiate legislation to declare the birthday of the Reverend MARTIN LUTHER KING, JR., an Indiana State Holiday; the letter also contained threats against Senator EDWARD KENNEDY. Prosecution was declined by Assistant United States Attorney [redacted] Southern District of Indiana, on April 1, 1986.

On July 16, 1987, FOX authored a letter which was eventually mailed to a local Terre Haute columnist which contained rambling inferences to [redacted] the Rotarian Group, France, Poland, Germany, Russia, Senator EDWARD KENNEDY, and satellite communication dishes. No specific death threats were contained in this letter.

On April 7, 1988, FOX mailed a letter to U.S. Representative JOSEPH KENNEDY which contained threats against Senator EDWARD M. KENNEDY if he were to visit England.

On April 14, 1988, FOX mailed a postcard to ROBERT H. BORK, U.S. Courthouse, Washington, D.C., which claimed there was no reason BORK would live through 1988.

On April 15, 1988, FOX mailed a letter to Congressman DAN ROSTENKOWSKI, claiming there is no reason to believe ROSTENKOWSKI would live through 1988.

On April 22, 1988, FOX mailed a letter to Representative JOSEPH P. KENNEDY that claimed JOSEPH P. KENNEDY has no reason to believe he would live through 1988.

On July 1, 1988, Assistant United States Attorney [redacted] Southern District of Indiana, advised she would decline prosecution of CHARLES OTTO FOX regarding the four letters he wrote in April of 1988 due to FOX's lack of intent and available means to carry out the threats. b6 b7C

Previous record checks by the USSS have failed to identify any violent behavior by FOX in the past; records at TERRE HAUTE, INDIANA, POLICE DEPARTMENT do not reflect any instances wherein FOX was involved in violent acts.

The HAMILTON MENTAL HEALTH CENTER diagnosed FOX as a Schizophrenic who responds well to treatment, but suffers periods of increased anxiety during times of national crises such as the United States Military strike against Libya in April 1986.

FOX remained in emergency detention at the HAMILTON MENTAL HEALTH CENTER until August 4, 1988, at which time he was released under the Semi-Independent Living Program (SILP). At this time, FOX resides at 1616 1/2 South Fourth Street, Terre Haute, Indiana, and receives two hours of supervision per week from HAMILTON MENTAL HEALTH CENTER Counselor [redacted] telephone number [redacted] FOX is reported to be responding well to treatment. His only means of support is social security, he does not own or drive a motor vehicle, and has no close associates. b6 b7C

On 5/18/92, the writer attended a meeting which was convened at the offices of the United States Attorney for the District of Columbia, 555 Fourth Street, N.W., Washington, D.C. Also present at this meeting were Assistant United States Attorneys (AUSA's) [redacted] and [redacted] The purpose of this meeting was to request the assistance of the Washington Metropolitan Field Division of the FBI in the captioned matter.

[redacted] advised that there is currently an ongoing investigation involving the United States House of Representative's Post Office which includes the captioned individuals. This investigation is being led by the United States Attorneys Office and is being conducted by personnel from the United States Capitol Police and Inspectors of the United States Postal Service. The investigation was initiated upon information received from House staffers who were employed at the House Post Office and subsequently lost their positions due to unauthorized usage of Government monies. Several of these individuals have entered into cooperation agreements with the Government in this matter.

As an important point of information, the House Post Office is not an official branch operation of the United States Postal Service. Rather, it is operated by agreement between that Agency and the House of Representitives and uses House staffers as employees. The House Post Office is authorized, however, to perform the common functions of an actual post office.

[redacted] stated that this investigation basically is composed of allegations in two areas. The first centers on allegations that Representatives utilized the House Post Office to obtain cash for themselves from their campaign fund accounts and from their accounts appropriated to them for postal expenses. [redacted] advised that evidence exists which indicates that checks from various Representative's campaign fund accounts were written out to the House Post Office for postage expenses. These checks were then cashed by the House Post Office for the full amount and the money provided to the House staffer who presented the check. [redacted] stated that their information indicates that this money was then given directly to the Representative. b6 b7C

Additionally, there are allegations that certain representatives misused their appropriated postal expense accounts. This was done by issuing vouchers for postal expenses and then having the House Post Office redeem these vouchers for cash. These funds also were allegedly provided to the Representative. [redacted] advised that these aforementioned misuses of the House Post Office would be false statements and could be in violation of 18 USC, Section 1001. b6 b7C

The second area of the investigation involves the use of United States Post Office boxes to circumvent campaign fund laws. [redacted] stated that Representatives are allowed to maintain post office boxes, free of charge, to receive U.S. mail. These boxes were initially set up to allow the speedy receipt of mail by the Representative as the mail would not be required to be processed through the House Post Office. It is thought that the majority of these boxes are maintained at the Main Post Office or the Brentwood Station. [redacted] advised that Representatives had campaign fund contribution checks sent to these post office boxes. They would then send staffers to retrieve these checks for them. [redacted] advised that the representatives are doing this to avoid the checks being sent directly to their House office, which could be a violation of 18 USC, Section 607. b6 b7C

[redacted] stated that the assistance of the FBI was needed as primary jurisdiction for 18 USC, Section 607 lies with the Bureau and, additionally, it is anticipated that there will be a requirement in this matter for FBI laboratory assistance. It is contemplated that the FBI will be the lead investigative Agency with regard to the campaign fraud violations. b6 b7C

Initially, it will be required of the FBI to attempt to locate the post office boxes maintained by Representatives at these two postal facilities. [redacted] advised that the United States Attorneys Office was prepared to issue Grand Jury subpoenas to obtain this information if necessary.

It is recommended that this matter be opened and assigned.

THIS MATTER WAS INITIATED UPON CONTACT WITH WMFO BY DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA AUSA [redacted] CHIEF, CRIMINAL DIVISION, AND AUSA [redacted] CHIEF, PUBLIC CORRUPTION SECTION, WHO REQUESTED WMFO'S ASSISTANCE WITH AN ONGOING INVESTIGATION BEING CONDUCTED BY THE U.S. POSTAL SERVICE AND U.S. CAPITAL POLICE. THIS INVESTIGATION IS BEING LED BY THE UNITED STATES ATTORNEYS OFFICE AND IS BEING CONDUCTED BY PERSONNEL FROM THE UNITED STATES CAPITOL POLICE AND INSPECTORS OF THE UNITED STATES POSTAL SERVICE. THE INVESTIGATION WAS INITIATED UPON INFORMATION RECEIVED FROM HOUSE STAFFERS WHO WERE EMPLOYED AT THE HOUSE POST OFFICE AND SUBSEQUENTLY LOST THEIR POSITIONS DUE TO UNAUTHORIZED USAGE OF GOVERNMENT MONIES. SEVERAL OF THESE INDIVIDUALS HAVE ENTERED INTO COOPERATION AGREEMENTS WITH THE GOVERNMENT IN THIS MATTER.

AS AN IMPORTANT POINT OF INFORMATION, THE HOUSE POST OFFICE IS NOT AN OFFICIAL BRANCH OPERATION OF THE UNITED STATES POSTAL SERVICE. RATHER, IT IS OPERATED BY AGREEMENT BETWEEN THAT AGENCY AND THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES AND USES HOUSE STAFFERS AS EMPLOYEES. THE HOUSE POST OFFICE IS AUTHORIZED, HOWEVER, TO PERFORM THE COMMON FUNCTIONS OF AN ACTUAL POST OFFICE.

ADDITIONALLY, THERE ARE ALLEGATIONS THAT CERTAIN REPRESENTATIVES MISUSED THEIR APPROPRIATED POSTAL EXPENSE ACCOUNTS. THIS WAS DONE BY ISSUING VOUCHERS FOR POSTAL EXPENSES AND THEN HAVING THE HOUSE POST OFFICE REDEEM THESE VOUCHERS FOR CASH. THESE FUNDS ALSO WERE ALLEGEDLY PROVIDED TO THE REPRESENTATIVE. PROCESSED THROUGH THE HOUSE POST OFFICE. IT IS THOUGHT THAT THE MAJORITY OF THESE BOXES ARE MAINTAINED AT THE MAIN POST OFFICE OR THE BRENTWOOD STATION. [redacted] ADVISED THAT ACCORDING TO INFORMATION AVAILABLE, REPRESENTATIVES HAD CAMPAIGN FUND CONTRIBUTION CHECKS SENT TO THESE POST OFFICE BOXES. THEY WOULD THEN SEND STAFFERS TO RETRIEVE THESE CHECKS FOR THEM. IT IS CONTEMPLATED THAT THE FBI WILL BE THE LEAD INVESTIGATIVE AGENCY WITH REGARD TO THE CAMPAIGN FRAUD VIOLATIONS.

IT IS ANTICIPATED THAT, OVER THE NEXT 30 DAYS, WMFO WILL BE REQUESTED TO OBTAIN CAMPAIGN RECORDS SUBMITTED TO THE FEDERAL ELECTION COMMISSION, IDENTIFY CAMPAIGN ORGANIZATIONS UTILIZED BY THE CAPTIONED REPRESENTATIVES, AND SUBMIT VARIOUS Probe widens: Rep. Dan Rostenkowski and former Sergeant-at-Arms Jack Russ are targets of the investigation.

5 subpoenaed in postal probe

By Paul M. Rodriguez
THE WASHINGTON TIMES

House Speaker Thomas S. Foley was forced yesterday to reveal details of a widened federal investigation into the House Post Office, including grand jury subpoenas for records from three congressmen and two top officers in the House.

The speaker, confronted on the House floor by angry House Republicans, acknowledged but defended the fact that he had kept secret subpoenas issued May 6 by U.S. Attorney Jay B. Stephens to:

- Rep. Dan Rostenkowski, Illinois Democrat and chairman of the House Ways and Means Committee.
- Rep. Joe Kolter, Pennsylvania Democrat.
- Rep. Austin J. Murphy, Pennsylvania Democrat.
- Clerk of the House Donnald Anderson.
- Werner Brandt, acting House sergeant-at-arms.

The grand jury has been investigating the post office since last fall, when the U.S. Postal Inspection Service reported widespread mismanagement and criminal activities, allegations of embezzlement, illegal narcotic sales and check kiting, and a conspiracy by current and former House Post Office employees to conceal the criminal activities.

Thus far, five current and former postal clerks have either been indicted or have pleaded guilty to a variety of charges, including sales of cocaine, embezzlement and charges of engaging in a conspiracy to hide the wrongdoing.

Congressional and federal law enforcement officials have told The Washington Times that the grand jury is also looking into allegations of "ghost employees," the sale of stamps for cash and the conversion of campaign checks into cash.

The probe also includes whether any laws were broken by having the House Post Office maintain special post office boxes for a select number of senior House lawmakers, including Mr. Rostenkowski, who had campaign funds and other mail collected by postal employees.

Until yesterday, no members had been directly caught up in the ongoing criminal investigation.

The Washington Times, in a series of articles beginning Jan. 22, first revealed details of the grand jury probe and the contents of a major investigation by the Postal Inspection Service.

POSTAL

The subpoenas, which covered the period between Jan. 1, 1986, and April 15, 1992, were for expense vouchers by the members, their offices and the former sergeant-at-arms.

Vouchers, which are paid by the House Finance Office operated by Mr. Anderson, are needed to buy any goods and services that are not purchased from the House supply store.

Of particular interest to the grand jury were voucher records involving the purchases of stamps and other items that could be purchased at the post office, an independent contractor for the U.S. Postal Service.

The subpoenas had to be produced when the House voted 324-3 for a Republican resolution demanding them and an explanation from Mr. Foley on why the chamber had not been immediately informed as provided by House rules.

In an extraordinary move, Mr. Foley apologized from the speaker's chair for not informing his Republican counterparts.

"There was no slight intended in any way," Mr. Foley said. "I take that responsibility on myself in the future" to avoid what was in this case "a failure in staff communications."

Republicans, including House Minority Leader Robert H. Michel of Illinois, seized on the subpoena issue as yet another example of Mr. Foley's inability to work in a bipartisan way and avoid confusion in the House.

"First and foremost, with respect to real critical matters of this nature, we were to be simultaneously informed and brought up to speed on these [types of] matters so we could work with one another in good faith," Mr. Michel said.

"That hasn't taken place . . . [and] I've got to know . . . who's to communicate with me on matters of this kind," Mr. Michel said. "Now if there had been one instance of slippage, you know, we can forgive and look for another day. But it's a pattern, so we have no course but to air it publicly, as we are today."

Mr. Foley was not defended by Democratic colleagues already plagued by scandals involving their leadership's failure to properly manage the now-closed House bank.

The speaker repeated several times his apology but said he had done nothing improper. "The rules were being observed," he said.

At first, Mr. Foley was willing to release information on only three of the subpoenas. But after persistent Republican questions as to how many more had been issued and discussed with Mr. Stephens, the speaker acknowledged there were five in total, including the one belonging to Mr. Rostenkowski.

Rep. Joe Kolter

Minority Whip Newt Gingrich of Georgia said Republicans would not have found out about the subpoenas if questions about them had not been raised by a reporter. He said that, contrary to Mr. Foley's assertions that Republicans only had to ask, "the fact is that since we did not know, it's a little difficult for us to ask."

A spokesman for Mr. Rostenkowski said the congressman did not reveal he had been subpoenaed because it was "so unspecific" that he did not know what the grand jury was investigating.

"We weren't sure at first whether the subpoena pertained to the House bank issue or whether it had to do with the [House] Post Office," said Patrick Jones, a spokesman for the 16-term chairman of the tax-writing Ways and Means panel.

"I'm not worried, I don't think this is something to worry about," Mr. Jones added. "One thing you can't say about Rostenkowski is that he's corrupt. He's not corrupt."

Mr. Kolter, a Pittsburgh-area Democrat who lost his primary bid last month for a sixth term, said in a prepared statement that his political opponents had leaked information about his connection to the federal investigation "which I did not know about . . . until the subpoena was served."

Mr. Kolter ran last in a three-way Democratic primary won by a former TV news anchor, Ron Klink. "I welcome this investigation because I have done nothing wrong," Mr. Kolter said.

Mr. Murphy said that based on the type of information requested, "I do not believe my office is the subject or target of any inquiry."

Robert V. Rota, who resigned as postmaster last month as a result of the scandal, has testified before the grand jury.

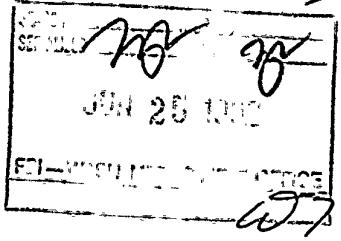
Postal Aide Says He Exchanged Vouchers From Rostenkowski

By Michael York
and Kenneth J. Cooper
Washington Post Staff Writers

A supervisor at the House Post Office has told federal prosecutors that he improperly exchanged postage vouchers from House Ways and Means Committee Chairman Dan Rostenkowski (D-Ill.) for cash, in amounts that varied from several hundred dollars to more than $2,000, according to sources familiar with the grand jury investigation.



The supervisor, James C. Smith, who has been granted immunity from prosecution by U.S. Attorney Jay B. Stephens, alleged that the cash transactions totaled between $18,000 and $20,000 over the last five years, sources said. House records show Rostenkowski has submitted postage vouchers totaling more than $24,000 since 1986.

Vouchers are essentially purchase orders drawn on the office accounts of members of Congress and are used to buy goods and services for official purposes from various congressional facilities, including the House Post Office.

Knowingly converting office funds to personal use could constitute a crime, but sources said yesterday that prosecutors are still seeking to determine whether money obtained through the post office was used for personal expenses. If money was used for official office expenses, sources suggested, it would be considered more of a technical infraction for which criminal prosecution would be unlikely.

House Aide Says He Improperly Exchanged Postage Vouchers From Rostenkowski

Rostenkowski's spokesman said yesterday that Rostenkowski had not received any cash in return for postage vouchers. He said the congressman's staff has not reconciled the office records to verify that stamps were received for the vouchers, but he said all of the subpoenaed records have been turned over to the grand jury.

Asked last week whether he or an aide had signed the vouchers, Rostenkowski said, "I sign vouchers."

Rostenkowski was among three House members who received subpoenas three weeks ago for office records, including records of stamp purchases. It was the first indication that a grand jury investigating alleged criminal violations at the House Post Office was focusing on House members.

Although House members are allowed to mail letters and packages free simply by using envelopes or address labels with their printed signatures, this franking privilege does not extend to all forms of mail. House members must pay for overseas mail, certified and registered mail. In addition, they must use stamps to return pre-addressed envelopes, such as those that accompany invitations.

Smith, who has worked for the House Post Office more than 20 years, is on leave from his position as supervisor of "accountable paper." Sources said that information provided by Smith led to the issuance of subpoenas on May 6 for office records of Rostenkowski as well as Reps. Austin J. Murphy and Joe Kolter, both Pennsylvania Democrats.

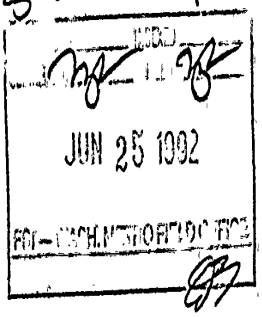
In addition, the grand jury subpoenaed records from House Clerk Donnald K. Anderson and acting Sergeant-at-Arms Werner W. Brandt. Among the records sought was a statement of House police "regarding the proper use of stamp allotments for congressional offices."

Vouchers are essentially purchase orders drawn on office accounts of members of Congress and used to buy goods and services for official purposes from congressional facilities.

Those subpoenas were made public during the House session on May 14. Today House Administration Committee Chairman Charlie Rose (D-N.C.) and the committee's ranking minority member, Rep. William M. Thomas (R-Calif.), are scheduled to report on the progress of the House task force investigation of the post office.

Although Smith has worked as a patronage employee sponsored by Rostenkowski, a source close to Rostenkowski said, the congressman has seen Smith only about four times.

Smith's lawyer, Kenneth M. Robinson, confirmed that Smith is cooperating with the investigation, but declined to comment further. Sources also have said the grand jury is seeking to determine whether some members converted campaign funds to personal use through cashing checks at the post office, or by purchasing stamps at the post office and then redeeming the stamps for cash.



Rostenkowski has said his office has spent thousands of dollars in postage on overseas mail. He told The Washington Post on May 19, "I mail a lot. I mail a lot."

Congressional Quarterly reported on Monday that Rostenkowski has spent $24,776 on postage since 1986. CQ also found that Rostenkowski's reported expenditures on stamps were considerably higher than that of other members of the House leadership. For example, CQ said, Majority Whip David E. Bonior (D-Mich.) bought $145 in stamps between 1986 and 1991. Rostenkowski's reported expenditures were more than twice as much as any other member of the Illinois House delegation, CQ reported.

A review of Rostenkowski's records by The Post showed that the congressman spent more than $20,000 in 10 postage transactions of between $1,400 and $3,000 between 1986 and 1991.

One of the Rostenkowski vouchers, dated March 17, 1988, was for $3,000 worth of 22-cent stamps, an amount that does not work out evenly. Several of the vouchers simply stated the amounts, but did not itemize the purchases. For instance, purchases of $2,100 on Aug. 7, 1986, and $2,800 on April 8, 1987, were listed as being for "postage stamps."

Rostenkowski Calls Allegations Untrue

Citing Ongoing House Post Office Probe, Lawmaker Limits Comment

By Edward Walsh
and Kenneth J. Cooper
Washington Post Staff Writers

House Ways and Means Committee Chairman Dan Rostenkowski (D-Ill.) yesterday described as "totally untrue" allegations by a House Post Office employee that Rostenkowski's office received cash in exchange for official expense vouchers written for postage stamps.

"Since there is an ongoing investigation, I will have nothing to say beyond this statement," Rostenkowski told reporters at his district office in Chicago. He refused to answer questions.

Sources have said that James C. Smith, who is on leave as director of the House Post Office's counter clerks, has told federal prosecutors that cash transactions totaled between $18,000 and $20,000 over the past five years. U.S. Attorney Jay B. Stephens has granted Smith immunity from prosecution.

"First, recent allegations in the press are totally untrue. I am confident that this inquiry will conclude that the rumors are totally without foundation," Rostenkowski said in the statement.

"Second, as I've said before, I'm cooperating fully with the U.S. attorney and have given them all the records they requested. And finally, I hope I am not going to be subjected to continued groundless innuendo and hearsay from anonymous sources in the press," he said.

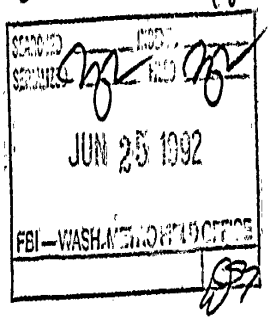
A federal grand jury has subpoenaed expense vouchers from 1986 to April 1992 for Rostenkowski, Rep. Austin J. Murphy (D-Pa.), Rep. Joe Kolter (D-Pa.) and former House sergeant-at-arms Jack Russ. Russ, who ran the House Bank, had few official expenses during that period, based on a Washington Post review of expense reports compiled by the House Clerk's office.

In Washington, the House was notified of three new subpoenas that apparently are unrelated to the May 6 subpoenas to Rostenkowski, Murphy and Kolter.

Acting Postmaster Michael J. Shinay confirmed that the subpoenas were served to three employees.

A source identified two of the employees as Griff Williams, a passport clerk and son of Rep. Pat Williams (D-Mont.), and Kimberly C. Scrogum, who was a secretary to then-Postmaster Robert Rota late last year. The third employee, whose name could not be learned, was described as a passport clerk.

Williams and the third employee, according to the source, have been drivers whose work involves the pickup and delivery of passports and visas for congressional trips abroad.



The source suggested the latest subpoenas were directed at exploring allegations of ghost employees and the unlawful use of official vehicles at the post office.

Rep. Charlie Rose (D-N.C.), chairman of the House Administration Committee and a leader of a bipartisan task force that is conducting a separate investigation of the post office, said in the panel's preliminary report that it would make its final report next month, after the May 30 deadline. One source of delay has been Stephens's threat to revoke Smith's immunity if he testified to task force investigators earlier this month.

Rose said he had "seen no evidence of ghost employees at the House Post Office," as some news reports have alleged.

Walsh reported from Chicago, Cooper from Washington.

Hill Aide Says He Carried Campaign Mail

Congressman's Son Among 3 Subpoenaed in House Post Office Probe

Associated Press

Two House employees were ordered to pick up and deliver mailed campaign contributions to offices in the Capitol complex, despite prohibitions against receiving political monies in government offices, one of the couriers said yesterday.

Griff Williams, who worked at the House Post Office as a congressional—not Postal Service—staff member, said he picked up campaign mail, sent to a regular post office outside the Capitol grounds, for five lawmakers for several months. He said he refused to continue because he questioned the propriety of the action.

Both federal law and House rules restrict the receipt of campaign contributions in government offices. In addition, employees are barred from political work as part of their official duties. Government equipment, such as the House postal vehicles used by the couriers, cannot be used for campaign work.

Williams, the son of Rep. Pat Williams (D-Mont.), is one of three people subpoenaed this week by a federal grand jury investigating operations at the House Post Office.

"It was time-consuming in an already busy schedule, it wasn't in my job descriptions and, because I had been around politics all my life, it just felt like there was something a little inappropriate," Williams said in an interview.

Williams, who spent most of his work hours assisting lawmakers and others in obtaining passports and visas, said he was regularly ordered by post office chief of staff Joanna O'Rourke, who is on medical leave and could not be reached for comment, to go to a post office here and pick up mail at boxes rented by campaign organizations for five House members. The pickups were on official work time, Williams said.

Williams said he brought the mail back to the main post office in the Capitol complex, where someone from the lawmaker's office usually would pick it up. Williams said "it was my assumption" that the mail included political donations.

Others subpoenaed this week were James Jenkins, who also worked as a courier, and Kimberly Scrogum, a secretary to former postmaster Robert Rota. Neither Jenkins nor Scrogum could be reached for comment.

He identified the five as Reps. Nicholas Mavroules (D-Mass.), Dennis M. Hertel (D-Mich.), Mary Rose Oakar (D-Ohio), Jim Moody (D-Wis.) and Edward F. Feighan (D-Ohio).

Oakar has said previously that she rented a post office box as an address for campaign contributions but stopped the practice immediately after learning that "a courier on his regular rounds to the post office was picking up mail from this post office box."

Feighan aide Dan Clark said in April, when stories first appeared about the courier service, that the lawmaker used the post office box for campaign contributions. A campaign volunteer would retrieve mail from the box and send it to Feighan's Ohio campaign office, Clark said. Feighan is not seeking reelection.

Moody spokesman Marcus Kunian said when his office learned that House Post Office employees were picking up the mail and bringing it to the lawmaker's congressional office heimmediately ordered it stopped.

Hertel spokeswoman Mary Conklin said, "We never asked for the service."

Mavroules said he was unaware that a former staff aide had ob-

Oakar Wins Primary Despite Hill Scandals

Other House Contests Test Impact of Rights Act

By Kenneth J. Cooper
Washington Post Staff Writer

Rep. Mary Rose Oakar (D-Ohio) yesterday defied conventional political wisdom and headed off primary challengers despite widespread anti-Congress sentiment in her Cleveland area district.

Oakar, seeking a ninth term, led a seven-candidate field with less than a majority of votes, according to incomplete returns late last night. Her principal competitor and the apparent runner-up, Cuyahoga County Commissioner Timothy F. Hagan, conceded defeat after 11 p.m.

About six of 10 ballots were going to candidates other than Oakar, but Hagan, an intense intellectual with liberal politics, was hurt by an unexpectedly large vote for minor candidates in the race.

It appeared that Oakar, who had 213 overdrafts at the now-closed House Bank, would become the first of the top 22 "abusers" of checking privileges to survive a primary challenge. Rep. Charles A. Hayes (D-Ill.) and Rep. Bill Alexander (D-Ark.) were defeated in earlier primaries.

Besides her bad checks, which Hagan featured in a television advertisement late in the campaign, Oakar has chaired the House Administration subcommittee that oversees the House Post Office, which has been embroiled in a grand jury investigation.

In southern Ohio, another House member dogged by the House Bank scandal was leading in a primary race between two Republican incumbents. Partial returns showed Rep. Bob McEwen, who had 166 bad checks, defeating Rep. Clarence E. Miller.

In a North Carolina runoff between the top Democratic finishers in the May 5 primary, Eva Clayton, a Warren County commissioner, handily defeated Walter B. Jones Jr., the son of a retiring House member. Clayton, who is black, had been expected to beat Jones, who is white, in the heavily minority district created under the Voting Rights Act.

she is expected to become the first North Carolina woman elected to a full term in Congress and one of the first black members to represent the state since George Henry White left office in 1901.

Clayton told supporters in Rocky Mount that the election had been "a people's process," but Jones compared the creation of the predominantly minority district to "going back to segregation," the Associated Press reported.

Besides Ohio and California, congressional primaries also were being held in Alabama, Iowa, Montana, New Jersey and New Mexico.

The cluster of congressional elections was likely to provide clues about the changing composition of the House, which many observers expect to get 100 or more new members. It is already certain to have at least 65 newcomers, having lost nine members to primary defeats and 56 others to voluntary retirements, a new high since World War II.

More incumbents, mostly but not all Democrats, are considered vulnerable because they had a number of overdrafts at the House Bank. The expected turnover, coupled with redistricting that generally favors Republican strongholds in the suburbs, South and West, has raised hopes in the GOP minority of breaking 38 years of continuous Democratic control of the House.

Political analysts have predicted that the Voting Rights Act, which has compelled states to draw more districts with large minority populations, is likely to result in a large increase in black and Hispanic members.

During a short campaign in a redrawn district, Oakar emphasized her record of constituent service, bringing federal dollars to the Cleveland area and keeping government jobs there. She exhibited her skills as a campaigner with a personal touch, and loaned her campaign $135,000.

In Alabama, three elected officials were vying in a Democratic field of six candidates to become that state's first black member of Congress since Jeremiah Haralson in 1876. Each of the three had a different geographic base in a district shaped by the Voting Rights Act: state Sen. Earl F. Hilliard of Birmingham, state Sen. Henry Sanders of Selma and Montgomery County Commissioner John Knight.

In the Democratic primary for a Senate seat from Alabama, incumbent Richard C. Shelby defeated Chris McNair, a Jefferson County commissioner whose daughter was among four black girls killed when a Baptist church was bombed in 1963, and two other challengers.

Ex-Postal Clerk In House Guilty

A former clerk at the House Post Office yesterday pleaded guilty to embezzlement and drug charges and promised to cooperate with a grand jury investigation of alleged corruption on Capitol Hill.

Wendell Magruder, 33, was ordered held without bond pending the outcome of a urine test. U.S. District Judge Norma Holloway Johnson said she was concerned about Magruder's admission that he sold crack cocaine, cocaine powder and marijuana to former co-workers in the Post Office.

"I'm concerned about the drugs," Johnson said. "It is an ever-present danger to this community."

Under his agreement with federal prosecutors, Magruder pleaded guilty to embezzling more than $13,000 from his stamp drawer at the House Post Office, concealing a material fact from investigators and conspiring to distribute drugs. In return, prosecutors agreed to drop a fourth charge, distribution of cocaine.

Magruder is the fifth employee of the House Post Office to plead guilty to corruption charges. Johnson scheduled sentencing for Aug. 28.

Immunity bid fails for House postal official

Democrats prevail in vote

By Paul M. Rodriguez
THE WASHINGTON TIMES

House Democrats yesterday blocked Republican efforts to get immunity from prosecution for the House post office's chief of staff, whose testimony could taint some lawmakers and top Democratic officials.

Democrats, concerned over a pending criminal probe, outvoted Republicans on the House Administration Committee 12-4 to reject the immunity request for Joanna O'Rourke.

"Many trails lead back to her," Rep. Pat Roberts, the Kansas Republican who sought the immunity, told his colleagues.

"Her testimony, if willing or full, will either corroborate or not corroborate many of the allegations" of criminal wrongdoing and mismanagement at the post office, he said.

Under the proposal, Mrs. O'Rourke's testimony before a special House task force investigating the post office could not be used against her in a court of law. Congress would have to obtain approval of such immunity from a U.S. District Court judge.

But senior Democratic members of the panel said they were concerned about hampering the ongoing criminal probe being conducted by U.S. Attorney Jay B. Stephens and a federal grand jury.

Rep. Steny Hoyer, Maryland Democrat, referring to the Iran-Contra scandal, cited problems in the past when Congress has sought and obtained court approval for immunity of witnesses under criminal investigation.

"We have had bad experiences," said Mr. Hoyer, who is also the House Democratic Caucus chairman.

"We are not a criminal investigatory committee and the grant of immunity could well undermine the criminal prosecution and investigation that is ongoing," he said.

"I will tell you," Mr. Hoyer said in forceful terms, "if Joanna O'Rourke committed crimes I want to see her prosecuted, indicted, convicted and incarcerated if necessary."

"This has been a blight on the House," Mr. Hoyer said in reference to the ridicule the House has suffered because of the post office scandal and the bad-check debacle at the shuttered House bank.

"I'm for indicting, convicting and incarcerating every person who has undermined the honesty of this institution," he said.

The Administration Committee, chaired by Rep. Charlie Rose, North Carolina Democrat, in February began a bipartisan task force investigation of allegations of cocaine sales, embezzlement and mismanagement at the post office.

Mr. Roberts, task force co-chairman with Mr. Rose, said yesterday that so far, 61 witnesses have provided testimony. But "if the task force cannot conduct a thorough investigation and speak with the post office chief of staff, Congress is unwilling or unable to investigate its own affairs," he said.

In a partisan swipe at Democrats, Mr. Roberts also said that "at no time did any witness make allegations of a Republican staffer or a Republican" having committed any wrongdoing at the post office.

"In fact, Republicans at no time had anything to do with [running or managing] the post office," he said.

Since Jan. 22, The Washington Times has published a number of articles on alleged wrongdoing at the post office, as well as allegations that members of Congress converted stamps for cash, used post office employees for non-postal functions, circumvented restrictions on "franked" mail and made use of special post office boxes to collect campaign contributions.

The Times has reported that unnamed House members have converted campaign checks into cash at the post office and also cashed personal checks there when they no longer could do so at the House bank.

Postmaster Robert V. Rota was forced to resign in mid-March as a result of the publicized practices, many of which violate House rules and possibly break criminal and campaign laws.

Mr. Stephens already has secured guilty pleas from five former post office employees, including one supervisor.

Along with those five former employees, James C. Smith, an assistant postmaster for accounts, reportedly is cooperating with Mr. Stephens' investigation.

Based on such cooperation, Mr. Stephens recently issued subpoenas to three Democratic lawmakers for their office accounts going back to 1986, including their records involving purchases of postage stamps. The lawmakers, who are said to be complying with the requests, include Reps. Dan Rostenkowski of Illinois, and Joe Kolter and Austin Murphy, both of Pennsylvania.

Mrs. O'Rourke, who recently invoked her rights against self-incrimination during an appearance before the task force, is reportedly willing to cooperate with either the House task force or Mr. Stephens' office, but only if granted immunity from prosecution.

Rep. Leon Panetta, California Democrat, raised concerns shared by both Democrats and Republicans that "providing immunity to anybody should only be done if we have a very clear indication that [they] will testify."

John Napier, a Democratic lawyer on the panel, said he was not aware of any guarantees that Mrs. O'Rourke would testify fully about her knowledge of alleged wrongdoing at the post office.

He also raised questions — based on the experiences of giving former White House aides Oliver North and John Poindexter immunity from prosecution in the Iran-Contra scandal — that convictions might be difficult to obtain if the committee sought immunity for Mrs. O'Rourke. The convictions of Col. North and Adm. Poindexter, national security advisers to President Reagan, were overturned.

Mr. Roberts acknowledged it was "a tough call" but argued that without Mrs. O'Rourke's immunized testimony, there are "great discrepancies in the testimony of the 61 witnesses. . . .

"We're going to have a report with holes in it . . . and I'm not sure what good that report is going to do as a result," he said.

The six-member task force is scheduled to make a report on its investigation to the House on July 6.

As House Post Office Prepares for Historic Change (Bringing in USPS), Doubts Raised

By Karen Foerstel

Five months after reports of embezzlement and drug dealing in the House Post Office hit the headlines, the new Postmaster is preparing his staff for a historic change — shifting major parts of the operation to the US Postal Service.

Also, the Postmaster, Michael Shinay, himself a veteran of the USPS, said his House employees recently passed two surprise audits with flying colors.

The recently reorganized Post Office is also testing a new Saturday work schedule that is expected to save the House more than $37,000 in overtime each year.

The surprise audits came last Tuesday and Wednesday when the USPS dropped in to check the money and stamp drawers of six House postal windows located in the Ford Annex building and the Capitol.

The money count at one station was just $3.25 short. The second station actually came out about $60 over.

"That's more than acceptable considering you're dealing with nickels and dimes," said Shinay, who was named three months ago by Speaker Tom Foley (D-Wash) to head the House Post Office on a temporary basis. "I was real pleased with the audits. I felt great for the employees."

Roll Call first published reports last August of a postal worker who allegedly stole several thousand dollars from the Post Office and fled to the Caribbean. Capitol Police investigators launched a probe into the theft and possible other crimes within the Post Office. The Subsection (d) reads: "The function and entities referred to in subsection (a) are: Inside Mail and Internal Mail Operations (including coordination with postal substations to be operated by the United States Postal Service)."

But Rep. Bill Thomas (R-Calif.), a member of the Post Office Task Force, said Thursday that bringing the USPS to the House is not a certainty and is being reviewed by the task force.

But in preparation of a possible USPS takeover of outside mail operations, Shinay said his staff this week is conducting an accounting of all transactions.

Shinay added that a USPS changeover would mean the elimination of 14 current positions. He said he hoped the remaining 134 positions could be absorbed into the reorganized House operation.

Another change that the House Post Office implemented last week was a new compressed Saturday work schedule.

The Post Office has reduced its Saturday hours, cutting from two to one the number of mail pick-ups and deliveries to House offices. Mail will now be delivered and dropped off at 11:30 a.m. every Saturday. In the past, there were two deliveries and drop-offs, at 10 a.m. and 4 p.m.

The Post Office will also trim three hours from its Saturday workday, with the Longworth mail room open from 9 a.m. to 1 p.m.

The new schedule, which will be tested for about five weeks, is expected to save about $3,100 every month in overtime costs, or about $37,225 a year, according to Post Office officials.

To compensate for the reduced hours, Members can drop off franked mail in a box outside the Longworth stamp counter. Members, however, are asked to have their franked mail ready for the 11:30 pick-up.

passed two ... audits this week with flying colors.

USPS then took over the investigation along with the US Attorney's Office.

Then, in early February, the Washington Times reported that the probe included allegations of drug sales to Hill employees.

Former House Postmaster Bob Rota resigned in the wake of the scandal in March, and Shinay, who was executive assistant to the US Postmaster General at USPS, took over in April.

In an interview this week, Shinay said he is uncertain how long he will remain with the House and is awaiting a final report by a Congressional bipartisan task force reviewing the Post Office scandal. That report is due on July 6.

The task force, made up of six members of the House Administration Committee, is also reviewing details of the changeover — bringing the USPS to the House to handle outside mail operations. Internal mail delivery would continue to be under House management.

While the changeover appeared to be a fait accompli under a sweeping reform package passed in April, at least one Member says that bringing in the USPS is not definite, and Shinay himself expressed some uncertainty.

Among other things, the reform package called for the elimination of the Postmaster position by July 8 and the use of the USPS for outside mail operations. The bill also established the position of Director of Non-legislative and Financial Services, who would oversee all financial House operations including internal mail operations.

The exact language of the bill reads: "As soon as practicable, but not later than the

Rostenkowski's gumshoe seeks alibi at post office

By Paul M. Rodriguez
THE WASHINGTON TIMES

A private investigator working for Rep. Dan Rostenkowski has been calling House post office employees asking for information that might lift a cloud of suspicion dangling over her client.

The investigator, lawyer Barbara Rowen, has been calling postal employees in an attempt to determine whether it was Mr. Rostenkowski or one of his top aides who had the most dealings with the scandal-plagued post office, according to congressional officials who spoke with The Washington Times.

Ms. Rowen's questions seem to suggest that one particular aide to Mr. Rostenkowski may have acted improperly, according to one of the officials who spoke on condition of anonymity.

Ms. Rowen deferred a reporter's call to Washington lawyer Stanley Brand.

Mr. Rostenkowski, Illinois Democrat and chairman of the House Ways and Means Committee, hired Mr. Brand after a federal grand jury earlier this year subpoenaed him to produce six years of office expense records.

The grand jury is investigating allegations of criminal wrongdoing at the House post office.

U.S. Attorney Jay B. Stephens, who is running the grand jury probe, has sought not only Mr. Rostenkowski's records from 1986 to '92, but also those of Pennsylvania Democratic Reps. Austin Murphy and Joe Kolter.

Mr. Stephens also requested the three lawmakers' records on stamp purchases during the six-year period. All three members, who are said to be cooperating, have denied any wrongdoing.

Rep. Dan Rostenkowski

House postal employees, already under intense scrutiny because five former co-workers have pleaded guilty to illegal drug charges and embezzlement, have complained to acting House postmaster Michael Shinnay about Ms. Rowen's calls to their homes and during office hours.

"The postmaster had to tell her to stop making phone calls during the day to the office," one official familiar with the situation told The Times. "He [the postmaster] told her to also not come into the post office and talk to the employees anymore," the official said.

The grand jury is looking into allegations that some current and former lawmakers improperly sold postage stamps for cash, converted campaign checks for cash and cashed personal checks after having lost that privilege at the now-closed House bank.

The Washington Post has reported that James C. Smith, an assistant postmaster for accounts now on leave from the House post office, has told investigators that Mr. Rostenkowski converted about $20,000 in office stamps for cash. The congressman has denied these charges.

Calls to Mr. Shinnay and Mr. Brand were not returned yesterday.

In 1980, WMFO conducted an investigation with parallel allegations regarding this "stamps for cash" scheme. This investigation, which was initiated upon a request for a preliminary investigation from the Department of Justice, centered around information that retiring Members from the House of Representatives were leaving office with large amounts of postage stamps obtained from the House Post Office. This matter was eventually closed as prosecution was declined by the Public Integrity Section of the Department of Justice due to lack of criminal intent on the part of the Members involved.

THE PURPOSE OF THIS COMMUNICATION IS TO PROVIDE BACKGROUND INFORMATION TO FBIHQ REGARDING INDIVIDUALS WHO HAVE PLEADED GUILTY TO VARIOUS CHARGES PRIOR TO THE INVOLVEMENT OF WMFO IN THIS MATTER, TO IDENTIFY TO FBIHQ INDIVIDUALS WHO WILL BE CHARGED IN THIS MATTER IN THE NEAR FUTURE AND TO UPDATE FBIHQ ON THE RESULTS OF CURRENT INVESTIGATION.

FOR THE INFORMATION OF FBIHQ, THIS MATTER WAS INITIALLY PREDICATED UPON A COMPLAINT FROM THE STAFF OF THE U.S. HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES POST OFFICE (HPO) TO THE U.S. CAPITOL POLICE IN APRIL OF 1991. THE SUBSTANCE OF THIS COMPLAINT WAS THAT THE STAMP AND CURRENCY DRAWER OF AN AWOL HPO STAMP CLERK WAS SHORT APPROXIMATELY $7000.00. THIS INITIAL COMPLAINT AND SUBSEQUENT AUDIT CONDUCTED BY THE CAPITOL POLICE LED TO THE NOTIFICATION AND INVOLVEMENT OF THE U.S. POSTAL INSPECTION SERVICE (USPIS) IN JULY OF 1991. AUDITS AND OTHER INVESTIGATION CONDUCTED BY THE USPIS FOUND THAT 9 OF THE 12 EMPLOYEES RESPONSIBLE FOR CASH AND STAMPS AT THE HPO WERE SHORT A TOTAL OF APPROXIMATELY $37,000.00 OUT OF A TOTAL CASH AND STAMP ACCOUNTABILITY OF APPROXIMATELY $475,000.00. THE USPIS AND THE CAPITOL POLICE DETERMINED THAT CERTAIN HPO EMPLOYEES WERE INVOLVED IN THE EMBEZZLEMENT OF GOVERNMENT FUNDS AND OTHER ILLEGAL ACTIVITIES SUCH AS DRUG TRAFFICKING, CHECK KITING, FAILURE TO WORK OVERTIME THAT WAS CLAIMED, BACKDATING OF MAIL AND THE USE OF SPECIAL HPO ACCOUNTS TO "EXPRESS MAIL" PERSONAL ITEMS.

A TOTAL OF FIVE INDIVIDUALS HAVE PLEADED GUILTY AS A RESULT OF THIS INITIAL INVESTIGATION CONDUCTED BY THE CAPITOL POLICE AND THE USPIS. THESE INDIVIDUALS AND THE CRIMES THAT THEY HAVE PLEADED TO ARE AS FOLLOWS:

PER THEIR PLEA AGREEMENTS, THE ABOVE NAMED INDIVIDUALS ALL AGREED TO COOPERATE FULLY WITH THE GOVERNMENT IN ITS INVESTIGATION OF THE HPO.

THE INTERVIEWS OF THESE INDIVIDUALS AS WELL AS INDEPENDENT INVESTIGATION CONDUCTED BY THE CAPITOL POLICE AND THE USPIS DETERMINED, IN ADDITION TO THESES INDIVIDUALS AND CHARGES, THAT THE MANAGEMENT OF THE HPO AND VARIOUS REPRESENTATIVES WERE INVOLVED IN CERTAIN ILLEGAL ACTIVITIES. THESE ILLEGAL ACTIVITIES INCLUDED THE IMPROPER CONVERSION OF U.S. FUNDS ALLOCATED FOR POSTAL EXPENSES TO CASH FOR THE REPRESENTATIVE'S PERSONAL USE AND THE UTILIZATION OF THE HPO

TO CONVERT CHECKS, DRAWN ON THE REPRESENTATIVE'S CAMPAIGN FUND ACCOUNTS, TO CASH FOR THE REPRESENTATIVE'S PERSONAL USE.

THIS SECOND PHASE OF THIS INVESTIGATION HAS IDENTIFIED OTHER INDIVIDUALS WHO HAVE BEEN INVOLVED IN THIS SCHEME. AS A RESULT, THE INDICTMENT OF THE FOLLOWING HOUSE STAFFERS CAN BE EXPECTED IN THE NEAR FUTURE:

House postal probers divided

By Paul M. Rodriguez
THE WASHINGTON TIMES

A House task force failed yesterday to reconcile two vastly different and partisan reports on its three-month probe of alleged mismanagement and criminal activity at the House post office.

The bipartisan panel has grown increasingly partisan in recent weeks as its six members have struggled to draft a final report on its closed-door deliberations by July 6, as required by a House resolution.

Rep. Charles Rose, North Carolina Democrat and chairman of the task force, told reporters yesterday that "we hope to have a report out [today] or Thursday by the latest."

He said the schedule was moved forward because of a delay in sharing draft documents, which he characterized as "an exchange of prisoners at the bridge."

Rep. Pat Roberts, Kansas Republican and vice-chairman of the task force, agreed and warned that if there can be no agreement on a single report, "we will vote to report a majority and minority report."

The House Administration Committee, which Mr. Rose heads and Mr. Roberts belongs to, must approve whatever findings the task force wants to report to the full House.

Congressional officials familiar with the behind-the-scenes deliberations said the two draft reports are completely different in scope, context and conclusions. They are about equal length, roughly 100 pages each, double-spaced.

"The only thing [Democrats and Republicans] seem able to agree on is that the post office was a mess and it needs to be totally reorganized," said one of several officials who spoke on condition of annoymity.

Mr. Rose and Mr. Roberts previously agreed that allegations involving some congressmen and staffers would be referred to the House ethics committee for follow-up investigations of possible wrongdoing.

U.S. Attorney Jay B. Stephens and a federal grand jury are conducting a separate criminal investigation of alleged embezzlement and illegal narcotic sales at the post office.

Four former clerks and one supervisor were indicted and pleaded guilty to a variety of charges and reportedly are cooperating with the ongoing federal probe. At least one current high-level postal official has reportedly linked some lawmakers to illegal activities.

The task force was created to investigate allegations of wrongdoing at the post office after a series of articles in The Washington Times, beginning Jan. 22, detailing allegations of embezzlement, illegal narcotic sales, padded and falsified payrolls, sale of office stamps for cash, and conversion of campaign checks for cash.

Poll Finds Phone Fraud Rampant

Scam Artists Have Approached 9 Out of 10 People, Survey Indicates

By Alex Pham
Washington Post Staff Writer

Sonya Louis received a call from a Houston company last month telling her she had won a new car. All she had to do was send $599 to ship it.

Louis, who suffers from the blood disease sickle cell anemia, told the caller she was poor, disabled and could not afford to be swindled. But the caller insisted that the offer was legitimate. Louis had hoped for her own car for so many years that she believed it, according to her mother.

The 29-year-old Californian borrowed the money from her grandmother, who took out a cash advance from her credit card. She even picked out the color of the car, sky blue.

The company stuck around just long enough to take her money.

"She wanted it so badly," said Louis's mother, Zella Elijah, who lives with her daughter in Northridge, Calif. "How could they do that to her?"

As it turns out, telemarketing thieves have approached nine of 10 Americans with such prize schemes, according to the responses to a Louis Harris and Associates survey to be released today. Three out of 10 answering the survey also said they have responded at some time to these offers.

"It's often the people who can least afford to lose money who get caught," said Linda Golodner, president of the National Consumers League, a District-based nonprofit consumer protection agency that sponsored the survey. "They're desperate, and they really believe they're going to win this time."

The survey, part of a campaign against such fraud, was paid for by a group of companies that often has to pick up the tab for phone schemes, including MasterCard International Inc., MCI Communications Corp., Citibank's credit card subsidiary and Visa USA Inc. The campaign is being sponsored by the Consumers League and the Reference Point Foundation of Newark.

The league today also is releasing a list of the top five new phone schemes. Topping the list is a scheme that tries to overcome consumer skepticism about postcards or phone calls that promise "you may already have won" a big prize. Consumers swindled once by bogus prize notifications are contacted again by scam artists posing as "recovery service" operations and offering a second chance to win, or simply offering bigger prizes.

Another scam solicits people to call supposedly toll-free numbers; they end up making expensive overseas calls for useless information on topics such as "Dating Etiquette for the '90s," with the scam artists collecting money for the cost of the call.

A third scam promises to help parents recover child support money from deadbeat exspouses at a cost of $40, plus $3.95 for every minute spent on the phone with a "consultant" promising to help the parent.

A fourth scheme involves solicitors who sell goods made by "handicapped" workers. These handicaps often turn out to be not physical, but social—specifically, criminal records, according to the league. The fifth type of fraud bilks investors who hope to buy dirt-cheap Florida land, but get only bogus deeds.

Less than 10 percent of those who say they were swindled report the crime, according to the poll. Consumer advocates argue that if more people reported fraud, more could be done to combat it.

"So many people don't complain because they're embarrassed or think that they don't have the time, so they just let it go," said Shirley Rooker, president of Call for Action Inc., a national consumer hot line company based in the District. "What you should be doing is complain loudly and fiercely when you've been ripped off because that's when things" are corrected.

And what should you do to prevent being scammed in the first place?

John Barker, a project adviser with the Consumers League, said the people who are cheated tend to react on impulse. He advised: "Wait. Tell them to send you material. Any legitimate business or charity will send you a form. Then you can think about it."

Democrats Call House Post Office Probe a 'Political Witch Hunt'

By Eric Pianin
Washington Post Staff Writer

Ways and Means Committee Chairman Dan Rostenkowski (D-Ill.) and two other House Democrats who were subpoenaed to appear before a federal grand jury investigating the House Post Office said yesterday they will refuse to testify. They dismissed the probe as a "political witch hunt."

In a letter to the U.S. attorney here, Rostenkowski, Reps. Joe Kolter (D-Pa.) and Austin J. Murphy (D-Pa.) said they had been exonerated by a congressional inquiry of the post office completed this week and that the grand jury's request that they appear next Tuesday was unwarranted.

"We can only conclude that the subpoenas for us are a product of an overall fishing expedition in an election year," the three Democrats said.

Citing their Fifth Amendment constitutional right against self-incrimination, they said, "We decline to lend any credence to an inquiry that lacks credibility and should be promptly closed."

The three pointedly avoided invoking legislative privilege in refusing to respond to the subpoenas, which were issued Wednesday.

The office of U.S. Attorney Jay B. Stephens is investigating allegations that some House members received thousands of dollars through transactions portrayed as stamp purchases. The probe began in February after reports of alleged embezzlement and drug dealing by post office employees had embarrassed the House.

The 64-page Democratic report concluded that interviews with more than 60 witnesses found no House members were "credibly alleged to have committed any wrongdoing, by violating either a specific statutue or rule of the House." However, the 96-page Republican report suggested that 11 members and four former members—all but one Democrats—were connected to questionable practices, although Republicans later apologized for mistakenly including a Democratic member in that list.

Rostenkowski and the two other Democrats subpoenaed based their decision not to testify in part on the Democratic report's findings that James C. Smith, a postal official, said he had no knowledge of any instances when House members engaged in unlawful or questionable practices—such as exchanging expense vouchers for cash or exchanging stamps for cash.

But Daniel J. Swillinger, special Republican counsel to the congressional task force, said yesterday that it was incorrect for Democrats to say that Smith had exonerated Rostenkowski.

"To say that James Smith in his interview somehow vindicated him [Rostenkowski] is just an outrageous misrepresentation of what occurred," Swillinger said.

Smith was interviewed for about two hours by task force lawyers and investigators on March 9, Swillinger said. After the interview, during which Swillinger said Smith was "very evasive," task force members decided they would have to subpoena Smith to testify under oath.

That did not happen, however, because Smith obtained a lawyer and entered into negotiations with federal prosecutors that produced an immunity agreement contingent on his not cooperating with the congressional task force.

The Washington Post and other publications, citing sources, reported that Smith told federal prosecutors that Rostenkowski's office in the past five years received about $20,000 in exchange for expense vouchers written for postage stamps.

A federal grand jury has subpoenaed the expense records from 1986 to April 1992 for Rostenkowski, Kolter and Murphy. Rostenkowski purchased more than $25,000 in postage stamps during that period, while Kolter and Murphy bought smaller amounts.

In the House Bank probe, House leaders were informed that Wilkey had subpoenaed four House employees and one former employee to testify before a grand jury on the bank overdraft investigation, a House official said. Current and former House members wrote about 24,000 overdrafts worth millions of dollars at the bank over a 39-month period.

Staff writers Mike York and Sharon LaFraniere contributed to this report.

FBI/DOJ

The response to Stephens by the three Democrats comes at a time when Justice Department special counsel Malcolm R. Wilkey is stepping up his investigation of check kiting by House members at the now-defunct House Bank. That investigation initially was handled by Stephens, but was reassigned to Wilkey by the attorney general to avoid any appearance of being politically inspired.

Some Democrats have said they fear indictments will be returned shortly before the November election to boost Republican prospects.

"It is amazing that the U.S. attorney is continuing this investigation when the [House] task force report so thoroughly resolves any of the issues within the proper scope of the investigation," Rostenkowski, Murphy and Kolter wrote House Speaker Thomas S. Foley (D-Wash.) yesterday. "Moreover, every report of every former employee of the House Post Office has refuted any notion that we engaged in any conduct that the U.S. attorney could legitimately investigate."

In a statement, Stephens said: "Our responsibility is to enforce the laws of the United States. The purpose of the ongoing grand jury investigation is to determine whether any laws have been broken."

The subpoenas, reported yesterday by the Washington Times, were delivered to Rostenkowski, Murphy and Kolter the same day the House task force issued Democratic and Republican reports on the post office's operations.

The two reports offered a portrait of the post office as a mismanged patronage haven that excelled in small but questionable po-

Subpoenaed trio's postage purchases don't add up

Did taxpayers buy campaign stamps?

By George Archibald
THE WASHINGTON TIMES

Three Democratic congressmen subpoenaed in the House post office probe have apparent discrepancies in campaign postage and printing expenditures and large, unexplained postage purchases with their taxpayer-funded office allowances, according to government records.

In past election cycles going back to 1985, large campaign postage stamp purchases by Reps. Dan Rostenkowski of Illinois and Joe Kolter of Pennsylvania are not matched by comparable campaign disbursements for printing and mailings, according to a study of Federal Election Commission records by The Washington Times.

Rep. Austin Murphy of Pennsylvania purchased large quantities of postage stamps with congressional office funds, but no postage with campaign funds in years when he conducted aggressive political fund-raising efforts involving dozens of receptions and dinners and hundreds of contributors. House records and FEC filings show.

Stamps purchased with taxpayer funds may not be used for campaign purposes, although there is no system in Congress to ensure this. Converting official funds to personal or campaign use and falsification of official transaction documents are felonies punishable by imprisonment and fines.

A federal grand jury probing the House post office is reportedly looking at the stamp purchases by Mr. Rostenkowski, the powerful chairman of the tax-writing House Ways and Means Committee, and Mr. Kolter and Mr. Murphy.

The three congressmen are close friends of former House Postmaster Robert V. Rota, a Pennsylvania native who served in the patronage post for 20 years before his forced resignation earlier this year. Mr. Rota reportedly is cooperating with federal prosecutors.

The re-election committees of the three congressmen purchased at least, $162,107 worth of postage stamps with campaign donations from 1985 to March of this year, according to reports filed with the Federal Election Commission.

They bought at least $58,948 worth of postage stamps with official House allowances during the same period, although they have the free-mail congressional "franking privilege," according to House records.

Expenditures since March have not been made public.

House members may use the franking privilege to mail most letters, publications and packages free by using envelopes or labels with their imprinted signature. The frank may not be used for political campaign purposes.

According to House records and federal campaign reports:

• Mr. Rostenkowski spent $29,726 in congressional office funds and $118,325 in campaign funds for stamps from 1985 to March 1992.

He purchased $16,750 worth of postage stamps with campaign funds during the 1989-1990 election cycle — enough to mail 67,000 first-class letters or more than twice as many bulk-mail circulars — even though he had no opponents.

All but $3,500 of the campaign postage was bought at the House post office in Washington rather than in Chicago, where Mr. Rostenkowski's re-election committee is located.

The congressman's campaign printing, stationery and envelope disbursements for the same period totaled less than $2,000.

No one on Mr. Rostenkowski's House or re-election committee staffs would respond to inquiries by The Times.

• Mr. Kolter from 1985 to March 1992 used $18,461 in office money and $38,202 in campaign funds to buy stamps.

Faced by an aggressive Republican challenger in 1990, Mr. Kolter bought $10,777 worth of postage with campaign funds.

But two of the reported postage disbursements for campaign mailings — $2,500 on June 8, 1990, and $4,800 on Oct. 17, 1990 — are not matched by any printing or direct-mail expenditures by the campaign committee for production of such large mailings.

Caught in the House bank scandal, Mr. Kolter was defeated for re-election in this year's Democratic primary. For the contest, he bought $4,502 worth of postage with campaign funds — enough to mail more than 15,000 first-class letters or, twice as many bulk-mail circulars to his rural, steel-producing Pennsylvania district.

But Mr. Kolter's campaign committee spent only $1,830 for printing — primarily for invitations and reply cards for political fund-raisers. No expenditures were listed for printing or production of large campaign mailings.

Jerry Weaver, the congressman's principal campaign adviser since 1982 and a Washington lawyer, referred inquiries to Mr. Kolter's campaign treasurer, Anthony B. Cosentino, in Beaver Falls, Pa. Mr. Cosentino did not respond to messages left on his home telephone answering machine.

• From 1985 to March 1992, Mr. Murphy spent $10,761 in office funds and $5,580 in campaign funds on stamps.

While Messrs. Rostenkowski and Kolter's stamp purchases appeared to dwarf their printing outlays, the opposite was the case for Mr. Murphy.

In the 1985-1992 period, Mr. Murphy reported spending about $10,000 for campaign-related printing and more than $60,000 for entertainment and catering involving about 100 re-election fund-raising events or meetings.

He annually spent about $11,000 of official House funds for stationery and other supplies for mailings to voters in his heavily Democratic, steel-producing district.

Congressional sources and Washington political activists who know Mr. Murphy, the chairman of the House Education and Labor subcommittee on labor standards, said he mails invitations for several major, yearly fund-raising events to hundreds of political action committee representatives.

"And thank-you letters go to hundreds of contributors who made large donations, the sources said."

Mr Murphy was reprimanded by the House in 1987 for misappropriating government property for his law firm, getting another House member to vote for him in his absence on the House floor and authorizing improper House payments to a "ghost employee."

Mr. Murphy did not respond to messages left with staff aides in his Washington and Charleroi, Pa., offices.

The three congressmen denied wrongdoing earlier this year when the office of U.S. Attorney Jay Stephens subpoenaed their official House expense records related to postage-stamp purchases for the past six years.

The three congressmen are using their Fifth Amendment protection to reject subpoenas.

Now they are using their Fifth Amendment protection against self-incrimination to reject subpoenas for personal appearances before the grand jury investigating the House post office.

The congressmen say Mr. Stephens is engaging in a "political witch hunt" and that they have been cleared of wrongdoing by a congressional task force whose reports on the scandal-plagued post office were released last week.

But the task force, in spite of a partisan split in its findings, made no such claim. Rep. Al Swift, Washington Democrat and a member of the task force, said Friday that its probe did not cover possible violations of House ethics rules or criminal statutes.

The Washington Post reported in May that James C. Smith, the former assistant House postmaster, for accounts, said Mr. Rostenkowski had been given cash in place of stamps when submitting official expense vouchers at the post office.

Mr. Smith has since been quoted as saying that the allegation in The Post is untrue.

The House has no controls on the use of postage stamps purchased by congressmen with official funds beyond written rules on the use of official resources. There is no apparent enforcement policy unless abuses are publicized.

Also, there is no apparent limit on the amount of postage stamps that lawmakers can purchase with official funds as long as they have not used all their House allowances, which can be transferred from one purpose to another.

Rostenkowski, 2 colleagues get reprieve in postal probe

Subpoenas still not withdrawn

By Paul M. Rodriguez
THE WASHINGTON TIMES

U.S. Attorney Jay B. Stephens backed down yesterday from forcing three Democratic congressmen, including Rep. Dan Rostenkowski, to honor subpoenas to testify before a federal grand jury probing wrongdoing at the House post office.

The congressmen, who also include Pennsylvania Reps. Austin Murphy and Joe Kolter, were served with the subpoenas last week. Last Friday, all three lawmakers informed Mr. Stephens they would not appear and would invoke their Fifth Amendment rights against self-incrimination.

Joseph diGenova, an attorney for Mr. Murphy and the lead counsel for all three congressmen, said yesterday that Mr. Stephens' office had agreed to a reprieve but that discussions were still under way.

"We have been discussing the

matter in a cordial atmosphere with the U.S. Attorney's Office," Mr. diGenova told The Washington Times yesterday. "I am satisfied with the disposition of the matter up to this point. Other than that, I just have no further comment."

Mr. Stephens was silent on the day's events despite several calls for comment.

Meanwhile, congressional officials have confirmed that records and transcripts for more than half of the 62 witnesses who testified before a House task force that probed the post office scandal are either nonexistent or incomplete.

The discovery of only 28 complete sets of transcripts and partial notes or audio tapes on the remaining 34 witnesses was made after Republicans began urging colleagues on the House floor last week for public disclosure of all records — not just summary reports of the task force's findings.

Attention yesterday was focused more on the issue of whether Messrs. Rostenkowski, Murphy and Kolter would have to appear before the federal grand jury.

One of several congressional officials and others familiar with the matter said the issue was decided by late morning after Mr. Stephens "blinked" during a standoff with the members, who vowed they would not appear.

Despite the U.S. attorney's decision not to compel their testimony, Mr. Stephens did not let the members off the hook by withdrawing subpoenas, said one of the officials familiar with the matter.

"That's a matter still to be decided," said one of the officials, who asked not to be named. "It is now up to him [Mr. Stephens] to decide if he still wants the members to testify before the grand jury."

In a blistering attack on Mr. Stephens last week, the three congressmen accused the U.S. attorney of conducting a "political witch hunt," and a "fishing expedition."

The members also repeated earlier statements that they had been exonerated by a House task force report on the post office scandal, which ostensibly failed to find any proof that any members were directly involved in allegations of criminal wrongdoing.

The members' statements were correct in part, but only insofar as they relied on one of two reports released by the bipartisan task force. The Democrats' version of the report argued that there was no evidence of criminal wrongdoing by members.

The Republicans' version said there was no conclusive evidence either way — to vindicate or condemn — any member whose name became linked to the scandal during the task force's five-month probe.

Over strong objections by Democrats, the Republicans included the names of 11 members in their report and said they did so to avoid charges of a cover-up or a whitewash.

Democrats blasted the GOP move and took angrily to the House floor to denouce Republicans for naming names for the sake of political gain. All but one member in the GOP version of the report were Democrats.

Despite such partisan squabbles, the task force did uncover widespread mismanagement and abuse of the Democratic patronage system in the post office and the inflation of the mail count by as much as 100 million pieces a year.

The inflated mail counts were used to justify hiring more people to do the work of patronage employees, who were incompetent in many cases, the task force said.

As to some of the more serious allegations of wrongdoing, the task force said it was blocked from getting at the truth because the Justice Department prevented interviews of several key witnesses who might have known about wrongdoing, such as stamps for cash and the conversion of campaign checks into cash — or stamps that later were redeemed for money.

One of these people, James C. Smith, a former assistant postmaster for accounts, reportedly is cooperating with the Justice Department and, according to The Washington Post, has said Mr. Rostenkowski received about $20,000 in cash by improperly converting office-supply and stamp vouchers.

What is contained in such testimony, however, has not been made public by the task force. Instead, all its investigatory files and testimony were turned over to the House ethics committee and the Justice Department for follow-up investigations.

Task force members, mostly Democrats, said release of the records could damage the reputation of House employees because a lot of it was not documented.

Republicans are seeking full release of all task force documents, however, to avoid lingering doubts about what the panel may have unearthed.

Five aides subpoenaed in House postal probe

By Paul M. Rodriguez
THE WASHINGTON TIMES

U.S. Attorney Jay B. Stephens, thwarted in his effort to get three Democratic congressmen to testify before a grand jury probing the House post office, has issued subpoenas to five of their aides.

The subpoenas, which were delivered yesterday, require each of the aides to appear before the grand jury sometime in mid-August, according to congressional and federal officials.

The aides work for Rep. Dan Rostenkowski of Illinois and Reps. Austin J. Murphy and Joe Kolter, both of Pennsylvania.

Mr. Stephens also sent a separate letter yesterday to House Speaker Thomas S. Foley protesting plans by Democrats on a House task force to release confidential U.S. Capitol Police files that the panel obtained during its post office probe.

The two-page letter said that "some of those documents contain sensitive and confidential law enforcement information directly relevant to the ongoing criminal investigation."

Any use of them in a public report, the Stephens letter said, "could jeopardize the integrity of the ongoing criminal investigation and unnecessarily undermine the grand jury's consideration of this matter."

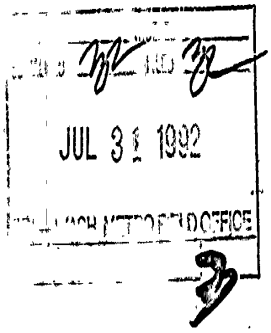
A bitter partisan fight has ensued over the release of all investigatory materials and testimony the task force collected, including the police files. That dispute has contributed to a delay in getting the appendix out, officials said.

Democrats want to limit the number of documents made public, while Republilcans want all records released. The six-person bipartisan task force did agree to give all its records to the House Ethics Committee and the Justice Department.

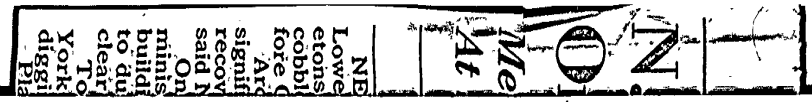
The partisan squabbling already has spilled out into the open as Democrats blasted Republicans for naming 11 lawmakers in a GOP version of the task force report.

The Democrats, including Rep. Charlie Rose of North Carolina, chairman of the task force, have said that releasing the lawmakers' names was unfair since no evidence was uncovered linking the members to criminal or ethical wrongdoing.

Messrs. Rostenkowski, Murphy and Kolter have seized on such statements as well as a Democratic version of the task force's report to contend they have been totally exonerated from allegations of wrongdoing.



Mr. Rostenkowski, chairman of the powerfull Ways and Means Committee, also has cited a section in the Democrats' report that appeared to refute statements attributed to a former post office official. The official told The Washington Post that the Illinois Democrat had improperly cashed office expense vouchers in return for $20,000 in cash.



Last week, Mr. Stephens issued subpoenas to the three congressmen to appear Tuesday before the grand jury. After consulting with Joseph diGenova, Mr. Murphy's attorney and the former U.S. attorney in the District, the members invoked their Fifth Amendment rights against self-incrimination and said they would not appear.

Although Mr. Stephens backed down from a public showdown with the members, he did not withdraw the subpoenas and said their appearances would be rescheduled, said officials familiar with the matter who spoke with The Washington Times on condition of anonymity.

Grand Jury Targets Half Dozen From Staffs of Three Democrats Under Investigation

By Kenneth J. Cooper
Washington Post Staff Writer

A federal grand jury has subpoenaed about a half-dozen aides who work for three House Democrats under investigation in connection with the House Post Office, House officials said yesterday.

The three Democrats—Rep. Dan Rostenkowski (Ill.), Rep. Joe Kolter (Pa.) and Rep. Austin J. Murphy (Pa.)—refused to appear Tuesday before the grand jury, asserting their rights against self-incrimination. They described the criminal inquiry being directed by U.S. Attorney Jay B. Stephens, a Republican appointee, as politically motivated.

The House officials would not say exactly how many aides received subpoenas this week, and there appeared to be a coordinated effort among Democratic leaders to conceal their names.

A House rule requires public notice within three legislative days of members or employees who have received subpoenas, but not disclosure of the documents, according to Steven R. Ross, counsel to the House clerk.

Likely recipients of the subpoenas would include the three members' administrative assistants and other aides involved in making or accounting for official expenditures.

The House clerk and the members have already turned over subpoenaed records of the three members' expense accounts from January 1986 to last April.

During that period, Rostenkowski, chairman of the Ways and Means Committee, has employed one administrative assistant, Virginia C. Fletcher. Murphy also has had one, Frederick P. McLuckie Jr.

[redacted] advised that subsequent to her graduation from [redacted], she was contacted by [redacted], who was an aid to Congressman JOE KOLTER, regarding employment on KOLTER's Washington, D.C., staff. She accepted an employment offer from KOLTER's office and started work in the Congressmen's administrative office in January of 1989, and continued to be employed there through March of 1989. [redacted] advised that she performed general office duties such as being the office receptionist, answering phones, distributing mail and was in charge of arranging tours of the White House for constituents as guests of the Congressman.

[redacted] advised that, while she was working at this office, she did not believe that KOLTER maintained a Washington residence and that he stayed in his office at night, using the Representatives gym facilities to shower. She recalled that it was one the standing office rules that all of the staff were to vacate the office at 5:00 p.m. each day.

She stated that she was given this assignment by [redacted] and was told by him that what she was doing was illegal and that she was to be very discreet in completing the assignment. [redacted] also told her that this practice was widespread on the Hill.

[redacted] stated that she was instructed to go into KOLTER's office and to make sure that the door was closed at all times while she was working on this assignment. She stated that she assembled hundreds, possibly as many as one thousand, letters and that she placed a postage stamp on each of the envelopes. She advised that the stamps were provided to her by [redacted] and that she did not know where he got them from. [redacted] advised that she worked on this assignment for about a day and a half.

[redacted] stated that [redacted] helped her with this task and that all of the staffers in KOLTER's office were well aware of this job she was doing as everyone else in the office also received a portion of the job to do. [redacted] was of the opinion that the material for this fund raiser could have come from the U.S. House of Representative's print shop. [redacted] recalled that the fund raiser was to be held at the National Democratic Club of Washington and that she was given this job within the first two weeks of January, 1989. She further advised that she was also given the assignment of mailing the completed envelopes. She stated that [redacted] instructed her to put all of the finished envelopes in brown paper grocery bags and to carry them to and place them in mail boxes that were away from Capitol Hill.

[redacted] advised that she was sure that KOLTER was aware of this fund raiser mailing because it was his own money and he wanted to maintain strict control over it. Additionally, [redacted] was not the type of person to do anything like this on his own and she was sure he was given this assignment by KOLTER.

[redacted] stated that KOLTER was not well respected by the staffers who worked for him and that he was thought of as a [redacted]. She stated that stories circulated around the office about the incorrect things that he would say at meetings and [redacted] advised that KOLTER was very good friends with the House [redacted] and that they were together daily. [redacted] stated that on one occasion she was instructed to take a dry cleaning ticket to [redacted] so that he could arrange for the pick up of KOLTER's clothes at the cleaner's. She recalled that she gave this ticket to a black woman at the House Post Office but she did not know her name.

Instructions

Subject Priorities for FBI Arrest or Locates:
- A - Subject wanted for crimes of violence (i.e. murder, manslaughter, forcible rape, robbery and aggravated assault) or convicted of such crimes in the past five years.
- B - Subjects wanted for crimes involving the loss or destruction of property valued in excess of $25,000 or convicted of such crimes in the past five years.
- C - All others

Claiming Non-Federal Arrests, Summonses, Recoveries or Convictions:
It is permissible to claim a local arrest, summons, recovery or conviction if the FBI significantly contributed to the accomplishment. A succinct narrative setting forth the basis for the claim must accompany this report. When claiming a local recovery, enter the word "LOCAL" to the right of the amount. Enter "LF" in the "In-Jail" block for all life sentences and "CP" for capital punishment sentences.

Reporting Convictions:
Convictions should not be reported until the sentence has been issued. There are two exceptions to this rule. The conviction information can be submitted by itself if:
1. The subject becomes a fugitive after conviction but prior to sentencing.
2. The subject dies after conviction but prior to sentencing.

An explanation is required in the Remarks section for either of the above exceptions.

Rule 20 Situations:
The field office that obtained the process (normally the office of origin) is the office that should claim the conviction, not the office where the subject enters the plea in cases involving Rule 20 of the Federal Rules of Criminal Procedures.

Investigative Assistance or Techniques (IA/Ts) Used:
-Since more than one IA/T could have contributed to the accomplishment, each IA/T used must be rated.
-The IA/T used must be rated each time an accomplishment is claimed. (For example - if informant information was the basis for a complaint, an arrest, a recovery and a conviction and if separate FD-515s are submitted for each of the aforementioned accomplishments, the "Informant Information" block must be rated on each FD-515 even if it was the same information that contributed to all the accomplishments.)

Race Codes:
C = Chinese; I = Indian/American; J = Japanese; B = Black; O = All other; U = Unknown; W = White

Memorandum

To : SAC, WMFO (58C-WF-180673) (P) Date 8/26/92

From : SA [redacted] (C-9) b6 b7C

Subject: PLATE BLOCK
OO:WF

The purpose of this memorandum is to request SAC approval for the purchase of a portable computer to be used in conjunction with the captioned matter.

The investigation into the subject case centers around U.S. House of Representative vouchers which can be used by Representatives (Members) for the acquisition of goods for official use. Investigation has revealed that certain Members have abused this official privilege by the utilization of these vouchers to obtain large dollar amounts of U.S. postage stamps from the House Post Office that were converted into cash for the Member's personal use. To date, 299 vouchers totalling $126,743.65 are being examined as submitted by five separate Members that pertain to the postage stamp allegations. Additionally, these vouchers were also used to obtain other materials, essentially large amounts of office supplies, which were then taken for the Member's personal use. This practice has been occurring over a period of many years and it is anticipated that the total number of vouchers involved in this matter will multiply as additional Members are identified as subjects.

Two individual data bases have been created, one by the U.S. Postal Inspection Service and one by the FBI, to organize the vouchers that have been utilized by the subjects in this matter. Also, one other data base has been created and data loaded which will be utilized to examine the question if any Federal Election Commission (FEC) violations were committed by the subject Members. These data bases have been used extensively in this matter and it is anticipated that usage will increase. There is also the strong possibility that there will eventually be a link established between the captioned matter and the "Big Bounce" investigation (46A-WF-179870, OO:WF), as it is suspected that certain Member's utilized monies obtained from the House Post Office to cover insufficient fund checks written on their House Bank accounts.

This case is currently being worked by the FBI in conjunction with the U.S. Capitol Police and the U.S. Postal Inspection Service using a "Task Force" approach. Much of this investigation, due to the extreme sensitivity of this matter, is conducted from and under the direction of the United States Attorney for the District of Columbia. There exists the need to have the capacity to query these data bases, and others as they are established, for the purpose of making investigative decisions and assignments. There also exists the real need for this capability to be under the control of the FBI. A portable computer, loaded with the appropriate software and data would facilitate this need.

On 8/25/92 ISA [redacted] was contacted and concurred with this proposal. ISA [redacted] advised that, if this request were approved, he could assist with the specifications for this computer and that he could provide the necessary software that would be required for this task.

The Grand Jury charges that:

COUNT ONE

CONSPIRACY TO DEFRAUD THE UNITED STATES

1. At all times material to this indictment, the United States House of Representatives Post Office (the House Post Office) was an Agency of the United States House of Representatives and functioned as a contract post office for the United States Postal Service.

2. At all times material to this indictment, the official function of the House Post Office was to provide postal services to members of the United States House of Representatives and others on Capitol Hill. These services included the delivery of United States mail, the sale of United States postage stamps, the sale of United States Postal money orders, and the provision of other special services relating to the transportation of the United States mail.

3. At all times material to this indictment, the employees of the House Post Office were patronage employees of the United States House of Representatives.

4. At all times material to this indictment, defendant JOANNA G. O'ROURKE was an employee of the House Post Office serving at various times as a secretary to the Postmaster, as Office Manager, as the Executive Assistant to the Postmaster, and as the Chief of Staff of the House Post Office. Her duties as the Executive Assistant and Chief of Staff included the supervision of other House Post Office employees, as directed by the Postmaster.

5. At all times material to this indictment, one House Post Office employee was appointed as the Director of Accountable Papers. The Director of Accountable Papers reported to the defendant JOANNA G. O'ROURKE during the period of time in which she was the Chief of Staff. The Director was charged with the safe-keeping and disbursal of public money related to the postal services of the House Post Office. The Director also supervised 14 stamp clerks.

6. At all times material to this indictment, the Director of Accountable Papers would obtain from the United States Postal Service an allotment of United States postage stamps to be used for the operation of the House Post Office. This allotment was known as the House Post Office "accountability," the amount of which would be increased by the United States Postal Service upon request of the Director of Accountable Papers. In July of 1991, the "accountability" stood at $442,812.92.

7. At all times material to this indictment, the cash and United States postage stamps used by the Director of Accountable Papers for the operation of the House Post Office were the property of the United States Postal Service.

8. At all times material to this indictment, the Director of Accountable Papers would distribute a portion of his "accountability" to the various stamp clerks at the five post office facilities located at various office buildings on Capitol Hill. As the stamp clerks sold their allotment of United States postage stamps, they would give money in the form of checks, cash, and United States House of Representatives vouchers to the Director of Accountable Papers in order to purchase additional postage stamps from the United States Postal Service.

9. At all times material to this indictment, the Director of Accountable Papers was responsible for depositing the cash and checks from the sale of postage stamps and United States postal money orders with Riggs National Bank, Washington, D.C., on a daily basis.

10. At all times material to this indictment, the P-300 Account was a charge account obtained by the United States House of Representatives for payment of Express Mail overnight delivery of packages relating to the official business of the House Post Office. Defendant JOANNA G. O'ROURKE, while employed as a supervisor at the House Post Office, was responsible for using and approving charges to the P-300 Account.

11. At all times material to this indictment, the House Post Office Round Dater was a device used to postmark United States mail deposited at the House Post Office. The Round Dater indicated the station where the mail was deposited and the date of cancellation. The date on the Round Dater could be manually changed by certain House Post Office employees.

The Conspiracy

12. From at least in or about January 1983, and continuing through in or about February 1992, the exact dates being unknown to the Grand Jury, within the District of Columbia, the defendant JOANNA G. O'ROURKE willfully and knowingly did combine, conspire, agree, and confederate with other persons, known and unknown to the Grand Jury, to defraud the United States and an agency of the United States, that is:

(A) by defrauding the House Post Office and the citizens of the United States of America of their right to have the House Post Office business and affairs conducted honestly, impartially, and with integrity, free from corruption, conflict of interest, deceit and fraud; and

(B) by defrauding the House Post Office and citizens of the United States of America of their right to the conscientious, loyal, honest, faithful, unbiased, impartial, and disinterested service, actions and performance of official duties of House Post Office officers and employees, necessary for the performance of lawful governmental functions, free from corruption, influence, conflict of interest, deceit, dishonesty, fraud, partiality, and favoritism.

Goals of the Conspiracy

13. It was a goal of the conspiracy that defendant JOANNA G. O'ROURKE and other co-conspirators would use funds belonging to the United States, and would use United States government employees, to perform personal and campaign services for Members of the United States House of Representatives, thereby diverting those funds and those employees from governmental functions.

14. It was a further goal of the conspiracy that defendant JOANNA G. O'ROURKE and other co-conspirators would enrich themselves and their friends by using government funds, equipment, and employees for personal matters.

Means and Methods Used in Seeking to Achieve the Goals of the Conspiracy

15. In order to further the goals of said conspiracy defendant JOANNA G. O'ROURKE and other co-conspirators would and did use the following means and methods, among others:

16. It was a part of the conspiracy that defendant JOANNA G. O'ROURKE and a co-conspirator would and did allow the Director of Accountable Papers to forego making daily deposits of the money he accumulated during the performance of his duties, in order to have funds available to cash checks and to provide other monetary services outside the official functions of the House Post Office for the personal convenience of the co-conspirators and others, including legislative officials.

17. It was further a part of the conspiracy that defendant

JOANNA G. O'ROURKE would and did direct employees of the House Post Office to cash personal checks for her using the public money intrusted to them as public officers, and to "hold" her checks by not depositing them in the bank for a period of time, until her personal bank account would have sufficient funds to cover the checks.

18. It was further a part of the conspiracy that defendant JOANNA G. O'ROURKE and other co-conspirators would and did charge the P-300 Account for the expense of sending certain personal items by United States Express Mail to the home district of a Member of the United States House of Representatives, which personal items had been delivered to them by the staff of the Member, with the instruction that the items be sent by Express Mail.

19. It was further a part of the conspiracy that defendant JOANNA G. O'ROURKE would and did charge the P-300 Account for the expense of sending her own overtime checks by United States Express Mail to her out-of-state bank.

20. It was further a part of the conspiracy that defendant JOANNA G. O'ROURKE and other co-conspirators would and did cause employees of the House Post Office to use the Round Dater to back-date the postmark on United States mail to give the fraudulent impression that the mail was deposited in the United States government mail on an earlier date than it was, in fact, deposited.

21. It was further a part of the conspiracy that defendant JOANNA G. O'ROURKE would and did obtain and renew post office boxes at the Main Post Office, Brentwood Station, for selected Members of the United States House of Representatives for the receipt of solicited campaign contributions and other mail.

22. It was further a part of the conspiracy that defendant JOANNA G. O'ROURKE and others would and did divert House Post Office employees from their regular postal duties and require them to collect campaign contributions mailed to the Brentwood Station and to deliver them directly to the offices of Members of the United States House of Representatives.

Overt Acts

23. In furtherance of the above-described conspiracy and to accomplish its purposes, objectives, and goals, defendant JOANNA G. O'ROURKE and other co-conspirators together committed the following overt acts, among others, within the District of Columbia:

a) Between on or about December 1, 1990, and December 31, 1990, the exact date being unknown to the Grand Jury, defendant JOANNA G. O'ROURKE charged the P-300 Account for the expense of sending certain personal items by United States Express Mail to the home district of a Member of the United States House of Representatives, which personal items had been delivered to her by a staff member of the Representative, with the instruction that the items be sent by Express Mail.

b) On or about April 3, 1990, defendant JOANNA G. O'ROURKE charged the P-300 Account for the expense of sending her own overtime check by United States Express Mail to her out-of-state bank.

c) On or about April 16, 1985, the exact date being unknown to the Grand Jury, defendant JOANNA G. O'ROURKE caused an employee of the House Post Office to back-date a postmark on a mailing to the Internal Revenue Service relating to a Federal Income Tax Return.

d) Between in or about January 1990 and January 1992, the exact dates being unknown to the Grand Jury, defendant JOANNA G. O'ROURKE directed employees of the House Post Office to pick up campaign-related mail at the Brentwood Station and deliver it to the offices of Members of the United States House of Representatives.

e) On or about June 3, 1991, defendant JOANNA G. O'ROURKE requested that an employee of the House Post Office under her supervision cash a $1,500.00 personal check for her, using the public money intrusted to the employee, and that the employee "hold" the check without depositing it until O'ROURKE'S bank account had sufficient funds to cover the check.

(In Violation of Title 18, United States Code, Sections 371 and 2.)

COUNT TWO

EMBEZZLEMENT OF GOVERNMENT PROPERTY

1. The Grand Jury incorporates by reference Paragraph 10 of Count One.

2. From in or about December 1990, and continuing to on or about April 3, 1990, the exact dates being unknown to the Grand Jury, within the District of Columbia, defendant JOANNA G. O'ROURKE willfully and knowingly did embezzle and convert to her own use and the use of others, without authority, a thing of value, that is, funds of the United States Government, by improperly and unlawfully charging to the P-300 Account the expense of sending personal items by United States Express Mail, such items consisting of O'ROURKE's own overtime checks, as well as personal property that staff members of a Congressman had instructed her to send by Express Mail.

(In Violation of Title 18, United States Code, Sections 641 and 2.)

COUNT THREE

PUBLIC OFFICER MISUSING PUBLIC FUNDS

From on or about August 25, 1989, and continuing to on or about June 3, 1991, the exact dates being unknown to the Grand Jury, in the District of Columbia, the defendant JOANNA G. O'ROURKE did cause employees of the House Post Office, being public officers charged with the safe-keeping of public monies, to willfully and knowingly embezzle public money by giving her interest-free loans out of public monies that had been intrusted to the employees to be used for official purposes, and not for personal loans.

(In Violation of Title 18, United States Code, Sections 648 and 2.)

At times, Congressman KOLTER would request [redacted] to issue a check for campaign ads on local radio spots and newspapers in connection with his re-election. These checks would be in the amount of $25.00 to as high as $100.00. [redacted] b6 b7C stated that he would also issue checks at the local Beaver Falls Post Office for "metered mail and bulk mail" permits for various campaign literature. He stated that he often times would receive donations in check or cash, however, he stated he never maintained a "petty cash fund", and always deposited any cash donations in the Congressman's campaign fund account.

b6 b7C [redacted] stated that he would travel to Washington, D. C., approximately two times a year for fund raising parties at the Democratic Club located on Capitol Hill. He stated that while he was only at the Congressman's office twice a year, he never noticed any of his (Congressman KOLTER's) staff members working during normal working hours on the Congressman's campaign (i.e. stuffing envelopes, placing stamps on envelopes, etc.). He stated that it was his understanding that all this work was done at night and/or on weekends.

[redacted] was asked specifically about three checks that were entered on reports submitted to the F.E.C.: June 8, 1990, payable to the Postmaster, Washington, D. C. 20515, in the amount of $2,500.00 for campaign mailing; October 1, 1990, payable to the Postmaster, Washington, D. C., in the amount of $4,800.00 for campaign mailing; and May 2, 1991, payable to the Postmaster, Washington, D. C., in the amount of $2,000.00 for postage mailing.

[redacted] stated that to the best of his knowledge b6 b7C either the $2,500.00 check or the $4,800.00 check was originally requested by [redacted] for a "pro-life group" donation, the name of which [redacted] cannot recall. However, [redacted] learned that whichever of these checks was suppose to be for the pro-life group, it was ultimately used for campaign mass mailing, and that Congressman KOLTER had changed his mind regarding the donation to the pro-life group. [redacted] stated that it was common practice that when the Congressman requested a check for campaign mass mailing it was forwarded directly to his office in Washington, D. C.

[redacted] stated that it was the practice that each b6 b7C and every check that was issued to Congressman KOLTER was followed by a receipt, which [redacted] maintained with his records, including the canceled checks when returned from the bank. He stated however that for the $2,000.00 check and the $2,5000.00 check he received no receipts, even though he requested these receipts several times, and was told by the Congressman that these checks were for mass campaign mailing. [redacted] stated that this troubled him as this was contrary to general accounting principles and he had misgivings about reporting these amounts to the F.E.C. because of this. b6 b7C

Regarding the $4,800.00 check, [redacted] advised that he asked several times for a receipt for this expenditure and that he was finally provided a handwritten receipt that was dated 10/10/90, bearing the title "U.S. House of Representatives, Office of the Postmaster, Washington, D.C., 20515", in the amount of $4,800.00 and signed by [redacted] b6 b7C

[redacted] was asked about an entry on his F.E.C. report dated December 3, 1986, payable to the U.S. Postmaster, 900 Brentwood Road, N.E., Washington, D.C., in the amount of $50.00, the purpose of which was a 1987 permit used by committee for fund raisers. [redacted] stated that he was aware of the payment of monies for postal permits for mailings, but he knows nothing about any arrangements or procedures for a permit at the post office in Washington, D. C. He stated that the only postage permit that he was familiar with was at the local post office in Beaver Falls, Pennsylvania, which was obtained for metered mail and bulk mail. b6 b7C

[redacted] was asked about the following checks, reported to the F.E.C., which were all issued to the Postmaster, Washington, D. C.: October 28, 1985, $700.00; February 18, 1986, $506.00; February 19, 1986, $300.00; October 7, 1986, $8,225.00; April 22, 1987, $1,200.00; and May 20, 1987, $1,000.00 and June 8, 1990, for $2,500.00. b6 b7C

[redacted] stated that he maintains F.E.C. reports for only a three year period, and that all previous reports are destroyed, and therefore he can only speculate based on the information provided by SAs [redacted] and [redacted] what these amounts were for. He stated that the $700.00 amount was for postage for fund raising. He stated that the check for $506.00 was for stamps used for a fund raiser benefit on March 19, 1986, and that b6 b7C the $300.00 check issued the following day was for thank you letters to all the contributors.

Regarding the check in the amount of $8,250.00, [redacted] stated that he can't recall specifically, however, due to the large amount of the check it was quite possibly for bulk mail campaign literature for Congressman KOLTER's district in Pennsylvania. Regarding the checks in the amount of $1,200.00 and $1,000.00 and $2500.00, [redacted] stated that he could only speculate, however, they could possibly have been for postage for mass mailing of campaign literature which could possibly have been directed to various senior citizens groups.

[redacted] stated that he never paid attention to the amount of each check requested by Congressman KOLTER regardless of how large. He stated that it was not uncommon for various Congressmen to spend several thousands of dollars on their campaign for campaign literature and/or postage.

[redacted] was asked if he had observed any items such as coasters, ash trays, or crystal glasses in Congressman KOLTER's District Offices, and if so, what was done with these items. [redacted] stated that he had noticed these items and it was his impression that these items were given (not sold) to constituents to give to various supportive organizations for "give aways" and/or door prizes for various social functions.

[redacted] was asked if he had ever noticed large numbers of American flags in the District Offices. [redacted] stated that he had noticed large numbers of American flags, and that these flags were sold for various amounts at the Beaver Falls District Office. He stated that these flags were in three sizes.

[redacted] stated that the most recent check issued, according to the F.E.C. report, was dated May 2, 1991, to the U.S. Postmaster, Washington, D. C. in the amount of $2,000.00, and was issued for postage for mailing.

[redacted] stated that the only time that he was aware that Congressman KOLTER gave stamps to "someone else" was for a friend who was running for a political office (whose name [redacted] cannot recall) in the State of Pennsylvania. He stated that these stamps were given to this individual for mailing out campaign literature. [redacted] was asked about his knowledge of [redacted] He stated that he had first met [redacted] in 1982 when he was [redacted] for Congressman KOLTER. Then, in approximately the year 1986 or 1987, [redacted] went to work in Washington, D. C. as Congressman KOLTER's [redacted] stated that he knew little else regarding [redacted] background. b6 b7C

[redacted] was asked about his knowledge of checks issued in the amount of $200.00 (almost on a monthly basis) to Computer Services Incorporated, during the period January, 1988 to April, 1990. [redacted] explained that this company is "owned" by [redacted], who is currently KOLTER's [redacted] He stated that this company's purpose was to computerize mailings that were sent out by KOLTER and to organize various campaign information for the Congressman including F.E.C. reports prepared by [redacted] himself. He stated that the $200.00 per check issued was a constant fee, and he noted that at times he felt that the work done for this service was sub-par, while at other times he felt the work done was more than the standard $200.00 payment. He stated that all in all, this amount balanced out over the months that the work was done. b6 b7C

[redacted] was asked of his knowledge of a republican in the State of Pennsylvania by the last name of [redacted] (phonetic). He stated that he was aware that this individual was a [redacted] for the Republican Party, however, he himself cannot recall ever making a check out to him, and he cannot recall Congressman KOLTER ever contributing anything to this individual. b6 b7C

[redacted] summarized by stating that he "is not a political person", and only became involved in the Congressman's re-election committee for something to do. He stated that he personally likes Congressman KOLTER, however, stated that at times he was "absent minded," which could explain why he did not forward to [redacted] a receipt for a large check issued by him. Also, he stated that he does not know the Congressman's future plans inasmuch as he was not nominated for re-election, however, noted that the Congressman is currently suffering from prostate cancer. The extent of this illness is not immediately known by [redacted] b6 b7C

At the conclusion of the interview, [redacted] voluntarily provided to the interviewing agents canceled checks for Congressman KOLTER's re-election campaign as well as accompanying receipts, for the period July 1, 1989 to June 30, 1992.

[redacted] Congressman AUSTIN MURPHY (Democrat - Pennsylvania) appeared at the Judiciary Center, 555 Fourth Street, N.W., Washington, D. C. 20001. Those present for the interview were Special Agent (SA) [redacted] Federal Bureau of Investigation, Washington, D. C., Assistant United States Attorneys (AUSA) [redacted] and [redacted] Accompanying [redacted] at the interview was her attorney, [redacted] was asked to provide information regarding her job description and relationship with Congressman MURPHY. She provided the following information: b6 b7C

While working for a law firm in Dallas, Texas, her father became terminally ill and in 1985 she returned to Lincoln to care for him. She stated that in 1987 she came to Washington, D. C., subsequent to her father's death, and became employed on a Congressional Judiciary Committee in the House of Representatives. In June, 1988, she became aware of the fact that Congressman MURPHY was in need of a [redacted] applied for this position which she eventually acquired. She stated that she was originally hired as Congressman MURPHY's [redacted] and now holds the job description of [redacted] She stated that she was first interviewed by Congressman MURPHY's [redacted] (AA) [redacted] and again was interviewed by [redacted] and Congressman MURPHY. secretaries in the district offices in Pennsylvania. She stated that she was never "formally trained" in her position, however, she stated that she is a quick learner and acquired most of her skills and the operations of this office on her own. b6 b7C

[redacted] was asked to describe Congressman MURPHY's schedule. She stated that the Congressman's schedule often depended on the Congressional schedule. Generally, she stated that if the Congressman had nothing on the agenda for a Friday, he would often times leave for home (Pennsylvania) on Thursday evening and return on Sunday evening. Otherwise, he would leave on Friday evening and return on Sunday evening. b6 b7C

[redacted] stated that although [redacted] is the Congressman's [redacted] and supervises the other employees in the Congressman's office. she stated, however, that she reports directly to the Congressman. She stated that the only time that [redacted] "supervises her", is for matters such as scheduling annual and/or sick leave. She stated that from time to time [redacted] has given her "case work", however, this work is not in her general job description. b6 b7C

[redacted] was asked to explain the procedure in the Congressman's office for obtaining supplies. She stated that generally each employee would purchase supplies on their own, or a list of supplies would be compiled as needed, and given to the Congressman's [redacted] Generally, there is no set procedure for obtaining supplies from the supply store, and no "voucher" is needed. She stated that when supplies are needed from anyone of the six district offices, the request is passed on to [redacted] who is responsible for obtaining these supplies. b6 b7C

[redacted] stated that in a normal week, she may send out anywhere from two to twenty pieces of mail that require "franked" envelopes. Regarding the procedure for obtaining postage stamps, [redacted] stated that a voucher with a control number must be filled out either in typewritten form or in pen and taken to the House Post Office. She stated that when the postage stamps are obtained, the employee must show his or her identification and sign the voucher which shows receipt of the stamps. She stated that she believes that the members are not required to sign the vouchers inasmuch as the postal employees probably know all of them by sight. She stated that the only b6 b7C person in Congressman MURPHY's office who may request stamps is Congressman MURPHY himself. He also must sign the voucher authorizing the purchase of these stamps. She stated that the Congressman always prefers his stamps in sheets, rather than in rolls. She could think of no reason why he had this preference. She stated that the Congressman kept these sheets of stamps in his desk drawer. She stated that she was unaware of how many sheets at one time he kept there, or what was the greatest amount of stamps he kept at any one time. She stated that she was always allocated a specific amount of stamps for her need, and that when the other staffers needed stamps, they would come to her. She stated that she could recall no time when the staffers would go directly to Congressman MURPHY for stamps.

She stated that her need for stamps per month varied depending upon how many "non-frankable items" she mailed out. She stated that generally those items which required postage stamps were thank you cards, congratulatory letters/cards, overseas mail, and correspondence which contained a self-addressed return envelope. She stated that she could not give an "average" number of items which required stamps per month. She could only guess that ten would be an average number. She stated that twenty to thirty items "could be a lot". She stated that it was not uncommon for other staffers in the office to come to her for stamps. Generally one, two, three, or four were requested at a time for non-frankable correspondence. She stated that she can recall no one staffer who would come to her more often than the others for stamps. She stated that generally when she gets down to two to four postage stamps herself, she would go to Congressman MURPHY for an additional supply. She stated that he would generally tear off a portion of stamps from a sheet and give them to her. She stated that there was no set number of stamps he would give her each time. On a few occasions when the Congressman was not in his office, she would go into his drawer where the stamps were kept (which was unlocked) and take whatever she needed. She stated that she did not know how many sheets of stamps were in there on these occasions. [redacted] stated that she never bought stamps from the House Post Office on her own but only at the request of Congressman MURPHY. It was her impression that he kept track of the amount of stamps in the office, and made decisions on when to purchase them. She can recall no time when he never had any stamps in the office.

b7C

[redacted] was asked to describe the relationship that Congressman MURPHY had with former House Post Office Postmaster [redacted] She stated that on occasion, [redacted] would come to the office to visit with the Congressman, however, she herself does not know the extent of their friendship.

[redacted] stated that since January 1, 1990, she has as part of her responsibilities maintained the expense journals for the office. She stated that these journals were ledger books where she records the expenses incurred not only at the Congressman's Washington, D. C. office but the six district offices as well. She stated that she does not record each expense every time it is received by her, and noted that sometimes she does not get to the ledger book for several weeks. She stated that the expenses incurred for each month are represented either by receipts and vouchers and/or the monthly expense report that she receives.

[redacted] stated that the vouchers for purchase of stamps are to be maintained in a file cabinet which is in close proximity to her desk. She stated that these vouchers are "open to anybody" in the office. She stated that there was no reason why any of the staff members could not keep a group of vouchers in their desk, however, the bulk of the vouchers are supposed to be maintained in the file cabinet next to her desk. She stated that prior to the time that she maintained the ledger books, [redacted] and [redacted] maintained these books.

Regarding [redacted] opinion on the number of stamp purchases made in Congressman MURPHY's office, she responded by saying she never questioned the reasons or the purpose. She stated that these stamps could often times been sent to anyone of the district offices either by mail or hand carried by Congressman MURPHY or any of the other staff members who live in the Congressman's district in Pennsylvania. She stated that she had never discussed stamp purchases or questioned Congressman MURPHY's request for her to purchase stamps until May, 1992 when the investigation of the House Post Office was made public by the media. At the time, Congressman MURPHY stated that his office was not going to change it's stamp purchase procedure.

In July, 1992, Congressman MURPHY had requested her to prepare a stamp purchase voucher for the next day for her to purchase stamps. She stated that feeling uncomfortable with this in light of the media coverage, she went to [redacted] and told him that she did not want to purchase these stamps. She stated that [redacted] gave her a sheet of paper with approximately the last four or five stamp purchase amounts for her to give to Congressman MURPHY. She stated that she took this sheet along with the voucher to Congressman MURPHY and told him she was uncomfortable in his request to purchase these stamps. He took the voucher along with the sheet prepared by [redacted] and laid it on the corner of his desk. She stated that this was the last she heard of this incident. She stated that to her knowledge, no other stamps had been purchased in his office since that time. After [redacted] had received grand jury subpoenas in July, 1992, Congressman MURPHY had a meeting in his office and discussed the procedure for stamp purchases with his staff members and advised them that he would provide legal representation for them if needed.

b3

Regarding mass mailing procedures in Congressman MURPHY's office, [redacted] stated that she does not handle anything in this regard. She stated that [redacted] is in charge of this. She stated that in general, she has nothing to do with the Congressman's campaign and/or re-election efforts, and she stated that she can recall no time when stamps were purchase by either her or anyone in the office with campaign checks.

b7C

Regarding her relationship with the other staff members in Congressman MURPHY's office, [redacted] stated that she gets along well with everyone, however, does not "socialize" with them. She stated that she knows little of what the other staff members do in the office, and stated that she has never questioned their duties, particularly the amount of stamps that they had signed for on the vouchers that she receives to record her monthly expenses. She stated that the only information that she knows about Congressman MURPHY's stamp purchases was through the media. Subsequent to the time that she received her subpoena for the grand jury, her attorney, [redacted] advised her to discuss this matter with no one, particularly her co-workers in Congressman MURPHY's office.

Throughout the interview, AUSA [redacted] showed [redacted] various vouchers which were used for purchases of stamps and questioned her as to whether she had any knowledge why they were purchased. In particular, she was asked why on November 7,

1991, one thousand stamps were purchased for $290.00; on November 14, 1991, one hundred stamps were purchased for $29.00; and on November 18, 1991, seventeen hundred stamps were purchased for $493.00. She stated that she had never questioned why the stamps were purchased in large amounts so chronologically close together. Also, while she was shown these copies of vouchers by AUSA [redacted] she stated that it was not uncommon for these vouchers to be out of number sequence, and reiterated that the vouchers are not always maintained in number sequence in the file cabinet, and again stated that other staff members may have vouchers in their desk drawers. b6 b7C

She remembers that the only occasion that Congressman MURPHY asked her about the current balance on his budget was on December 24, 1991. He had come to her and asked her if there was enough money left in the budget to purchase one thousand stamps (for $290.00). She told him that there would be enough money for this purchase, and therefore, he went ahead and bought these stamps.

[redacted] concluded the interview by stating that she has no loyalty to the Congressman other than wanting to do the best job that she can. She stated that she has never made any questionable or illegal stamp purchases herself, and has never questioned the amount of the stamps purchased in his office, or any other expense for that matter. She stated that she more or less keeps to herself, and as she stated earlier she does have a good relationship with the other staff members. However, since she is not from the State of Pennsylvania or from the Congressman's district, she does not have as good a relationship with others as probably other secretaries for other congressmen do with their staff members. b6 b7C

CONDUCTED TO DATE HAS DETERMINED THAT CURRENT AND FORMER FIELD STAFF MEMBERS OF ROSTENKOWSKI, AS WELL AS HIS CURRENT AND FORMER CAMPAIGN STAFF, WILL NEED TO BE INTERVIEWED AS TO THEIR KNOWLEDGE OF THAT REPRESENTATIVE'S FIELD AND CAMPAIGN OFFICE OPERATIONS. IT IS ESTIMATED THAT BETWEEN 12 AND 18 INDIVIDUALS RESIDING IN THE CHICAGO METROPOLITAN AREA WILL NEED TO BE CONTACTED AND INTERVIEWED IN THIS MATTER. IDENTITIES OF THESE INDIVIDUALS WILL BE PROVIDED TO CHICAGO AT A LATER DATE.

IT HAS BEEN REQUESTED BY THE UNITED STATES ATTORNEY FOR THE DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA THAT THE CURRENT MULTI-AGENCY TEAM OF INVESTIGATORS ASSIGNED TO THIS MATTER IN WASHINGTON, D. THIS REQUEST IS BASED ON THE COMPLEXITY OF THE CASE AS IT HAS DEVELOPED AND THE ABILITY OF THOSE AGENTS WHO HAVE A THOROUGH KNOWLEDGE OF THIS CASE TO RECOGNIZE KEY INFORMATION THAT MAY BE PROVIDED BY THE INTERVIEWEES.

THE INVESTIGATIVE TEAM WHICH WILL TRAVEL TO CHICAGO WILL BE COMPRISED OF TWO WMFO SAS, TWO TO FOUR INSPECTORS FROM THE UNITED STATES POSTAL INSPECTION SERVICE (USPIS) AND ONE TO

TWO DETECTIVES FROM THE U.S. CAPITOL POLICE (USCP). AT THE PRESENT TIME, IT IS BELIEVED THAT THIS MANPOWER WILL BE SUFFICIENT AND THAT NO ADDITIONAL SAS FROM THE CHICAGO FIELD DIVISION WILL BE REQUESTED. SHOULD THIS OCCUR, CHICAGO MAY BE REQUESTED TO PROVIDE PERSONNEL TEMPORARILY TO ACCOMPANY A MEMBER OF THIS WMFO TEAM AS HE/SHE CONDUCTS THE LEAD. IT IS CURRENTLY PLANNED TO COMPLETE ALL OF THE CHICAGO LEADS IN TWO TO THREE DAY PERIOD STARTING 11/4/92.

THIS WMFO TEAM WILL MAKE ALL ATTEMPTS TO COMPLETELY LOCATE THESE INTERVIEWEES PRIOR TO THE TEAMS DEPARTURE. IN THE EVENT THAT ALL OF THE INDIVIDUALS CANNOT BE LOCATED, CHICAGO MAY BE REQUESTED TO PROVIDE SUPPORT FROM THAT OFFICE'S RESOURCES TO ASSIST IN THE ACQUISITION OF RESIDENCE AND BUSINESS ADDRESSES OF INTERVIEWEES.

The grand jury said Weaver cashed $2,800 in checks at the Post Office to buy cocaine but lied and said the cash was used to buy stamps.

Weaver is the first congressional of justice, tampering with a witness and conspiring to commit wire fraud. If convicted on all charges, Weaver could face a maximum sentence of 49 years and fines up to $500,000. Federal sentencing guidelines could provide for a substantially shorter sentence.

The indictment alleged that Weaver attempted to persuade Magruder not to cooperate with the grand jury by promising him a job in Weaver's lobbying firm, a loan and assistance in finding a lawyer. In addition, the indictment charged Weaver with conspiring with Magruder and others to stage a theft of a car owned by Weaver's wife and then file a false automobile insurance claim.

Magruder admitted embezzling more than $13,000 from his stamp drawer at the House Post Office, concealing a material fact from federal investigators and conspiring to distribute drugs. In return, prosecutors agreed to drop a fourth charge, distribution of cocaine, which carries a maximum 25-year sentence.

Earlier this year, the grand jury subpoenaed the expense records from 1986 to April 1992 for Kolter, House Ways and Means Committee

Ex-aide on Hill indicted on House postal charges

By Paul M. Rodriguez
THE WASHINGTON TIMES

A former top aide to Rep. Joe Kolter of Pennsylvania was indicted yesterday by a federal grand jury on charges of obstruction of justice and cashing $2,800 worth of personal checks at the House post office to buy cocaine.

Gerald W. Weaver II, 37, also was charged with a conspiracy to have his wife's 1987 Toyota Celica stolen in an insurance-fraud scheme, according to the 14-count indictment announced yesterday by U.S. Attorney Jay B. Stephens.

Mr. Weaver, a lawyer and lobbyist in the District, also was charged with tampering with a witness and with conspiring with a former business associate to conceal the nature of the checks used to buy cocaine.

Mr. Stephens said the indictment "demonstrates that we will hold accountable those who seek to impede the ongoing criminal investigation into the operation of the House post office." Six former employees were convicted of a variety of charges, including sales of illegal narcotics and embezzlement.

Three Democratic congressmen — Reps. Dan Rostenkowski of Illinois, Austin Murphy of Pennsylvania and Mr. Kolter — were implicated in the scandal and served subpoenas to appear in person before the grand jury, which is probing whether House expense vouchers used to buy stamps were improperly converted to cash.

While all three congressmen denied any wrongdoing and invoked their Fifth Amendment rights to avoid testifying before the grand jury, they cooperated with other subpoenas for detailed office expense records and access to dozens of current and former congressional and campaign aides.

The indictment of Mr. Weaver alleges that he attempted to impede the grand jury's investigation by getting a former business associate to write a letter falsely stating that he purchased about $2,900 worth of postage for the company at the House post office.

Mr. Weaver allegedly tried to get a former post office employee, Wendell Magruder, to conceal his knowledge of the cocaine purchases in return for a loan and a job.

Magruder pleaded guilty to embezzlement and cocaine-related charges and is cooperating with the federal probe, which started after cash shortages were discovered at the post office.

After a series of stories in The Washington Times beginning on Jan. 22, 1992, House leaders launched an investigation of the post office. The lawmakers fired Postmaster Robert V. Rota, 57, in mid-March.

After a six-month inquiry, a special House task force concluded that the post office, which operates as a contractor for the U.S. Postal Service in several locations on the House side of the Capitol, was grossly mismanaged.

Congressional and federal law enforcement officials who spoke on the condition that they not be identified said that the post office also was used for a variety of illegal activities such as cashing personal and campaign checks for cash and "other monetary services."

The grand jury is probing allegations of embezzlement and narcotics trafficking, said the officials.

In the indictment, Mr. Weaver is charged with buying cocaine from 1984 through Nov. 13, just five days before he allegedly gave false testimony before the grand jury.

Mr. Weaver, whose attorney, Russell F. Canan said "strongly denies these charges," worked for Mr. Kolter from 1983 until 1987, when he became a lobbyist-lawyer.

If convicted of all 14 counts, Mr. Weaver faces a maximum penalty of 49 years in prison and $2.7 million in fines.

Federal probe threatens Rostenkowski

NEW YORK — House Ways and Means Committee Chairman Dan Rostenkowski could be severely shaken — if not toppled — by the results of a criminal probe into the alleged misuse of $1.3 million in campaign funds, Time magazine reported yesterday.

Rostenkowski

The 18-month-old investigation initially focused on a money-laundering scheme involving the House post office and House members whose stamp purchases appeared excessive.

But the newsweekly reports that investigators believe the stamp purchases by the Illinois Democrat and others were only a small part of a larger scheme to launder campaign funds and convert them for personal use.

The Time story, released to the media yesterday, is in the edition of the magazine that goes on sale today.

Subpoenas issued in the case have made it clear that investigators are looking into whether lawmakers or their aides illegally channeled campaign contributions through the House post office, Time says.

Rep. Rostenkowski Faces New Pressure Over Use of Funds

By JOHN HARWOOD
Staff Reporter of THE WALL STREET JOURNAL

WASHINGTON — Reports that Rep. Dan Rostenkowski spent $99,000 in political contributions to rent office space in a family-owned building and to purchase stamps from the House post office could signal mounting political problems for the powerful House Ways and Means chairman.

The Chicago Sun-Times reported that the Illinois Democrat has spent $73,000 in campaign funds to rent what appears to be a vacant office in a building he owns with his sister. The newspaper also said that two Rostenkowski-controlled political committees had indicated that they spent $26,000 on stamps from the House post office, in addition to the widely reported $29,000 in stamp purchases made by his congressional office.

Mr. Rostenkowski disputed the newspaper's claim that he had paid himself to rent a "phantom office," saying he uses the space to store campaign materials and monitor congressional activity on cable television. Aides to the veteran lawmaker yesterday noted that the newspaper reports didn't accuse the lawmaker of illegal actions. "He just is reiterating his previous statement that he has done nothing improper," said a spokesman.

The post office's operations are the subject of a federal grand jury investigation here. Mr. Rostenkowski and two other House members, Pennsylvania Democrats Joseph Kolter and Austin Murphy, declined to testify before the grand jury in July, dismissing the inquiry as a "fishing expedition." The grand jury has subpoenaed at least 20 current and former aides to Mr. Rostenkowski. The lawmaker has denied any wrongdoing, and his aides have said he hasn't been told that he is a target of an investigation.

Earlier this year, it was reported that a former post office employee told prosecutors that the 17-term lawmaker had received cash in exchange for vouchers intended for postage stamps for official use. Six post office employees have pleaded guilty to various charges arising from a criminal investigation of the office's operations that was begun last year by the U.S. attorney.

Renting office from self

Rostenkowski on hook again

By Paul M. Rodriguez
THE WASHINGTON TIMES

Rep. Dan Rostenkowski has reported little or no income on his annual financial disclosure statements for a building he owns in Chicago, although his campaign has paid at least $73,000 to rent space there during the past six years.

The Illinois Democrat, who chairs the powerful tax-writing Ways and Means Committee, listed one of two addresses for the building in Northside Chicago as a "rental" in his May 1992 disclosure form but said the venture produced no income. The 1992 form covered calendar year 1991.

The building, which is worth from $50,000 to $100,000, generated from $200 to $1,000 in rental income in 1990, according to Mr. Rostenkowski's 1991 disclosure statement.

The Chicago Sun-Times reported this week that his campaign has been renting an office space in the building from at least 1986 and has paid from $500 to $1,250 a month for an office in the building the congressman and his elder twin sisters inherited from their father in 1970.

The campaign funds, which have been paid to Nobel Building Accounts, have been listed as rent on public campaign expense reports filed several times a year with the Federal Election Commission. However, until the Sun-Times report, it was not known that Nobel Building Accounts was a venture affiliated with the congressman's family.

Mr. Rostenkowski's sister, Gladys, told the newspaper Friday that the ground-floor space has been vacant for years and she knew nothing about it being leased for campaign purposes.

But Mr. Rostenkowski, who maintains two full-time congressional offices in Chicago, told the newspaper: "It is a normal office," and when asked who staffs it, he replied: "I am the staff."

Mr. Rostenkowski currently is being investigated by a federal grand jury in the District for alleged wrongdoing at the House post office, including a stamps-for-cash scheme involving thousands of dollars in congressional expense vouchers.

Mr. Rostenkowski charged taxpayers and political funds $55,000 for stamps from the post office since 1986 in several large transactions, the Sun-Times reported yesterday.

The newspaper said Mr. Rostenkowski bought $1,000 or more in stamps from the House post office on at least 27 occasions.

On the Chicago rental property, a spokesman in Mr. Rostenkowski's office could not explain yesterday why it was reported as a minor profit-making venture in 1990, but not an income producer a year later. The spokesman also could not provide details about the congressman's ties to the property or any financial connections Mr. Rostenkowski has with Nobel Building Accounts.

In a 1972 campaign filing, Mr. Rostenskowski listed the Chicago property — located at 1349 West Nobel St. — as headquarters of "Rostenkowski for Congress Committee." He also listed his personal residence in an adjacent building around the corner at 1372 West Evergreen St.

It is in this back-to-back building complex bordered by Nobel and Evergreen streets that Mr. Rostenkowski's family built at the turn of the century and he has lived in for years.

The business and residence buildings apparently are connected inside in at least one section, according to sources familiar with the structures, where Mr. Rostenkowski and his surviving sister maintain separate residences.

Although Mr. Rostenkowski is a well-known public figure after 34 years in the House, he keeps his personal life and finances well protected.

For example, while his campaign committee now rents the original campaign headquarters on Nobel Street and pays $1,250 a month to Nobel Building Accounts, Mr. Rostenkowski does not list such a venture on his private financial disclosure statements reviewed yesterday by The Times.

House officials and associates of the congressman suggested yesterday that Mr. Rostenkowski has avoided publicly disclosing his ties to Nobel Building Accounts through a series of complicated tax maneuvers that involve his family, including his elder sister and a daughter.

"Just because the man may be intimately involved with his family's affairs doesn't mean that he's done anything illegal," said one of the congressman's associates.

In fact, federal election laws are unclear about such arrangements, as are House ethics rules. Generally, the rules prohibit transactions that may cause a conflict of interest for a member. Lawmakers are also banned from enriching themselves with public funds, such as campaign monies.

The rules, however, do provide loopholes, such as allowing members to lease office spaces to their campaign organizations so long as the rents are similar to those charged in the same area.

Re: Chicago telcall of 12/16/92 from SSA [redacted] to WMFO SSA [redacted]

For the information of FBIHQ, in referenced telcall, Chicago requested a summary of the captioned matter due to the increasing involvement of the Chicago Field Division in the investigation of this case and this matter's sensitivity. Inasmuch as this is an up-to-date summary of this investigation, this is also being provided to FBIHQ for informational purposes.

This case was initially predicated upon a complaint from the staff of the U.S. House of Representatives Post Office (HPO) to the U.S. Capitol Police in April of 1991. The substance of this complaint was that the stamp and currency drawer of an AWOL HPO Stamp Clerk was short approximately $7000.00. This initial complaint and subsequent audit conducted by the Capitol Police led to the notification and involvement of the U.S. Postal Inspection Service (USPIS) in July of 1991.

Audits and other investigation conducted by the USPIS found that 9 of the 12 employees responsible for cash and stamps at the HPO were short a total of approximately $37,000.00 out of a total cash and stamp accountability of approximately $475,000.00. The USPIS and the Capitol Police determined that certain HPO employees were involved in the embezzlement of Government funds and other illegal activities such as drug trafficking, check kiting, failure to work overtime that was claimed, backdating of mail and the use of special HPO accounts to express mail personal items.

A total of five individuals have pleaded guilty as a result of this initial investigation conducted by the Capitol Police and the USPIS. These individuals and the crimes that they have pleaded to are as follows:

1. [redacted] b6 b7C

2 [redacted]

3. [redacted]

4. [redacted]

5. [redacted]

Per their plea agreements, the above named individuals all agreed to cooperate fully with the government in its investigation of the HPO.

Interviews of these individuals as well as independent investigation conducted by the Capitol Police and the USPIS determined, in addition to these individuals and charges, that the management of the HPO and various Representatives were involved in certain illegal activities. These illegal activities included the improper conversion of U.S. funds allocated for postal expenses to cash for the Representative's personal use and the utilization of the HPO to convert checks, drawn on the Representative's Campaign Fund accounts, to cash for the Representative's personal use.

Involvement of the Washington Field Division of the FBI into this matter was predicated upon the corroborative

Besides these three Congressman which are currently under active investigation, this second phase of this investigation has led to the identification of other House officers, staffers and other individuals who have been involved in this scheme or have attempted to obstruct this investigation. These individuals and their current status in this investigation are as follows:

In the way of background information for the Chicago Field Division, the aforementioned vouchers involved in these allegations are used to obtain various office services and supplies, including postage stamps for official mailings. To utilize a voucher to obtain postage stamps, a Member completes the voucher specifying the quantity and price of the item requested, and submits it to the House Post Office. The Member receives the stamps and a copy of the voucher. The original voucher is kept by the Director of Accountable Papers until he forwards it to the House Finance Committee for reimbursement. After the voucher is paid, the Member's administrative expense account is debited in the amount of the voucher. The paid voucher itself is stored with the disbursing office of the Clerk of the House.

In 1980, WMFO conducted an investigation with parallel allegations regarding this "stamps for cash" scheme. This investigation, which was initiated upon a request for a preliminary investigation from the Department of Justice, centered around information that retiring Members from the House of Representatives were leaving office with large amounts of postage stamps obtained from the House Post Office. This matter was eventually closed as prosecution was declined by the Public Integrity Section of the Department of Justice due to lack of criminal intent on the part of the Members involved.

During this 1980 investigation, however, [redacted] were both interviewed by Trial Attorneys from the Public Integrity Section. During these interviews, which were conducted on [redacted] United States Attorney for the District of Columbia summoned [redacted] before the Federal Grand Jury and question him as to his knowledge as it may pertain to the current ongoing investigation. All three of these [redacted] refused to testify before that or any other session of the Grand Jury [redacted] b3

Since this time, the Plate Block investigative team, which contains personnel from WMFO, the USPIS and the U.S. Capitol police as well as the three Assistant United States Attorneys assigned to this matter, have subpoenaed [redacted] and have subpoenaed and interviewed numerous [redacted] as well as other persons who may have knowledge of these allegations. b3

The sum and substance of these interviews has been to verify that very few, if any, postage stamps were used in the Washington or District offices of the subjects as Members have the Franking privilege, and most had no knowledge whatsoever that large amounts of stamps were being purchased. Also, corroborative information has been obtained concerning the conversion of campaign funds to cash by creating checks made payable to the HPO for postage expenses and then having these checks redeemed by the HPO Postmaster for cash.

Further, it is realized that there exists the distinct possibility that this practice may not have been limited to just the three Representatives currently under investigation. Efforts are being made to determine if additional members of Congress were involved in this scheme. It is WMFO's belief that additional allegations identifying more subjects may be realized if [redacted] cooperation is obtained. [redacted] his cooperation could prove invaluable to this investigation. Efforts will also be made to obtain the cooperation of [redacted] who is under investigation for his involvement [redacted] which is concurrently being investigated by WMFO. This is being followed and coordinated with Agents assigned to that matter.

Additionally, recent allegations have arisen regarding the possibility that U.S. Government funds as well as campaign funds mays have been illegally utilized by Rostenkowski. These allegations stem from Federal Grand Jury testimony as well as recent articles published in various newspapers. These allegations, which currently are being actively pursued, center around the questionable ownership and payments of rent of office space in Chicago at 1347-1349 North Noble St., which Rostenkowski claims to be a campaign office but appears to be vacant, and the ownership and payment of rent for his District office located at 2148 North Damen St., also in Chicago. It is believed, from initial investigation, that Rostenkowski may be returning all, or a portion, of the rents paid for these properties to himself.

The captioned matter is receiving the highest priority at WMFO and at the office of the United States Attorney. It is the intent of the prosecutors assigned to this matter, as well as the Department of Justice, to proceed toward returning felony indictments against Rostenkowski, Kolter and Murphy at the earliest possible date and to expeditiously pursue investigation of any other Members who are identified as having participated in this scheme as well as staff employees and or associates who may have assisted or participated in any criminal activity.

The above is provided for informational purposes and to update Chicago as it is anticipated that additional leads for the Chicago Field Division will be forthcoming. Chicago's assistance in this matter to date has been outstanding and leads have been thoroughly covered in an expeditious manner which has greatly enhanced this investigation.

WMFO greatly appreciates Chicago's assistance in this matter.

Rostenkowski caught between powerful forces

FROM COMBINED DISPATCHES

House Ways and Means Committee Chairman Dan Rostenkowski faces two serious challenges to his power from a Justice Department investigation and disgruntled colleagues.

The Chicago Democrat, whose role as chief tax writer makes him one of the most powerful men in the House, is poised to play a key role in the coming year as gatekeeper to President-elect Clinton's economic and health care proposals.

Rostenkowski

House Democrats, responding in part to complaints that Mr. Rostenkowski seemed more responsive to President Bush than fellow Democrats over the past two years, voted to check the powers of all committee chairmen.

Fifty-three of the 258 Democrats expressed special displeasure with Mr. Rostenkowski, casting secret ballots to end his reign.

And two publications carried reports last week of possible fiscal impropriety by Mr. Rostenkowski, who earlier this year used the Fifth Amendment shield against self-incrimination before a grand jury investigating the House post office scandal.

The Chicago Sun-Times reported he spent $55,000 on stamps at the House post office in the last five years. The newspaper said Mr. Rostenkowski had rented vacant space in a house owned by himself and his sister with $73,000 in campaign funds, which violates no law.

Time Mazagine reported investigators believe stamp purchases by Mr. Rostenkowski and others may be part of a larger scheme to launder campaign funds and convert them for personal use.

Subpoenas issued in the case have made it clear that investigators are looking into whether lawmakers or their aides illegally channeled campaign contributions through the House post office, the magazine says.

Since Jan. 22, The Washington Times has published a number of articles on wrongdoing at the post office, including allegations that members of Congress converted stamps for cash, used post office employees for non-postal functions, circumvented restrictions on franked mail and made use of special post office boxes to collect campaign contributions.

The Times, citing government records, has reported apparent discrepancies in campaign postage and printing expenditures by Mr. Rostenkowski and other Democratic congressmen.

According to House records and federal campaign reports, for example, Mr. Rostenkowski purchased $16,750 worth of postage stamps with campaign funds during the 1989-1990 election cycle — enough to mail 67,000 first-class letters or more than twice as many bulk-mail circulars — even though he had no opponents. A first-class-mail stamp was then 25 cents.

The congressman's campaign printing, stationery and envelope disbursements for the same period totaled less than $2,000.

District of Columbia U.S. Attorney Jay Stephens has issued subpoenas to Mr. Rostenkowski and two other House members for their office accounts going back to 1986, including their records involving purchases of postage stamps.

Mr. Stephens told a news conference last week that "substantive progress" was being made in the Rostenkowski and House post office investigations, and that he would pursue them to "an appropriate conclusion."

In the meantime, Mr. Rostenkowski will need to be looking over his shoulder at fellow Democrats. Congressional sources say Democrats tightened up rules covering committee chairman as a shot across the bow of Mr. Rostenkowski and other powerful chairmen.

"It's certainly not viewed that way from here," said a spokesman for Mr. Rostenkowski. "I know of no instance in which the leadership asked him for something and he didn't deliver."

Mr. Rostenkowski's opponents are ready to enumerate cases — but anonymously, a reflection of the Chicago congressman's power on Capitol Hill.

They accuse him of delaying action on extending jobless benefits, which set Democrats on a collision course with Mr. Bush. Mr. Rostenkowski liked to characterize himself as a friend of the president's.

They also say he stalled for a year a vote opposed by Mr. Bush to cut taxes on the middle class and raise them on the rich. Critics say, too, that Mr. Rostenkowski stalled consideration of health care legislation.

"It's all not true," the Rostenkowski spokesman said. "Obviously you can print whatever you want."

The spokesman also said Mr. Rostenkowski has led the way in promising to cooperate with Mr. Clinton's program in the coming year.

His colleagues will be watching, backed up by new rules, including one that requires a vote on removing a chairman if 50 members sign a petition.

Rostenkowski Probe Grows In Its Scope

Grand Jury Gathering Records of All Funds

By Michael York and Eric Pianin
Washington Post Staff Writers

A federal grand jury has broadened its investigation of House Ways and Means Committee Chairman Dan Rostenkowski (D-Ill.), seeking records of all funds he has received or spent during the past several years, according to sources familiar with the inquiry.

Investigators, supervised by U.S. Attorney Jay B. Stephens, have obtained records here and in Chicago of Rostenkowski's bank accounts as well as financial records of his campaign organization, congressional offices, business accounts and statements filed with financial institutions, the sources said.

In a telephone interview yesterday, Rostenkowski complained about the widening nature of the investigation, which he said included subpoenas to some employees who had worked for him only a few months. "My lawyers tell me I'm not a target and then I see all these leaks. I think I'm being tried in the press. They don't have anything, but it makes me look guilty," he said.

The "net worth investigation" goes well beyond the scope of the original probe begun last spring, which sought to determine whether Rostenkowski and two other House Democrats converted congressional expense vouchers or campaign funds to cash through transactions that were made to look like stamp purchases at the House Post Office.

In addition, sources said, at least two criminal investigators from the Internal Revenue Service have been assigned to work full time on the investigation here and in Chicago.

Such an investigation usually requires approval by the Justice Department's Tax Division as well as by senior officials of the Internal Revenue Service.

CNN reported last night that the grand jury is investigating "possible income tax violations," and quoted sources saying that "felony charges including tax fraud may soon be brought."

"The fact is, they've subpoenaed a lot of paper," a Rostenkowski aide said yesterday. "It [the investigation] has been pretty broad. They've laid their hands on just about any conceivable thing."

The federal probe has examined the purchase of more than $55,000 worth of stamps by Rostenkowski's campaign and congressional office, as well as allegations that some vouchers that were supposed to be used for stamps were exchanged for cash.

Federal Grand Jury Expands Probe Of Chairman Rostenkowski's Funds

The probe also is examining more than $73,000 in payments made by Rostenkowski's campaign committees since 1986 to rent office space in a building adjacent to Rostenkowski's North Side Chicago house. Rostenkowski and his two sisters jointly own the building.

Stephens has said the grand jury also is investigating possible obstruction of justice, and sources said yesterday that inquiry focuses on whether Rostenkowski, several of his aides and their lawyers have improperly agreed to impede the investigation.

At least two of the lawyers for Rostenkowski aides have been paid with funds from the congressman's campaign or from a political action committee controlled by Rostenkowski, the sources said. While such financial arrangements are not illegal, the sources said, an agreement to withhold evidence could violate federal law.

House counsel Steven Ross declined to comment Thursday about the legal representation of Rostenkowski aides, but sources familiar with the defense said it is not unusual, or improper, for lawyers and witnesses to share information about the investigation among themselves while at the same time declining to cooperate with the grand jury.

The grand jury met for four hours Thursday and heard testimony from several witnesses, including Robert J. Leonard, former chief counsel and staff director of the Ways and Means Committee. Leonard, who spent nearly three hours with the jury, was accompanied by Ross and two other House lawyers.

House Sergeant-at-Arms Werner Brandt and the director of House members' payroll, George Chapin, also made brief appearances before the grand jury, apparently to deliver subpoenaed documents. Ways and Means Committee press secretary James M. Jaffe also is scheduled to testify before the grand jury.

At least 18 aides in Rostenkowski's congressional office and on the committee staff were supoenaed by the grand jury between Nov. 6 and Dec. 31, according to formal notices filed this week with House Speaker Thomas S. Foley (D-Wash.).

The grand jury previously subpoenaed expense vouchers dating from 1986 to April 1992 for Rostenkowski and two others, Rep. Austin J. Murphy (D-Pa.) and former representative Joe Kolter (D-Pa.), who also are being investigated for possible misuse of vouchers written for postage stamps.

Besieged at the Pinnacle of Power

Ways and Means Chairman Rostenkowski Dogged by Ethics Questions as He Starts 18th Term

By Edward Walsh and Eric Pianin
Washington Post Staff Writers

During the first week of the new year, Rep. Dan Rostenkowski (D-Ill.) celebrated his 65th birthday and began his 18th term in Congress. He is at the pinnacle of power, and after 12 often frustrating years of dealing with Republican presidents he can look forward to a burst of legislative activity under a new Democratic chief executive when Bill Clinton takes office on Jan. 20.

So how is the chairman of the House Ways and Means Committee feeling these days?

"He feels sort of besieged," said a Rostenkowski aide on Capitol Hill.

In fact, these are far from the best of times for the gruff Chicago Democrat who has held public office since the age of 24. In Washington, a federal grand jury is investigating whether Rostenkowski used unusually large, purported purchases of stamps from the House Post Office in an elaborate money-laundering scheme to convert campaign contributions and office expense vouchers into personal funds. That investigation has been broadened to include subpoenas of records of virtually all of Rostenkowski's financial transactions in recent years.

In Chicago, the Sun-Times has been in hot pursuit of Rostenkowski, most recently questioning why his campaign organization is paying $1,250 a month to rent an apparently little-used office in a building owned by the congressman and his sister, who lives in an apartment above the storefront office.

"No one likes to be a punching bag," Rostenkowski said in a telephone interview from his home in Chicago. He described himself as "frustrated and somewhat forlorn" over the continuing grand jury investigation and its possible impact on his leadership role in Congress.

"I want to be a strong leader and chairman," he said. "I want to participate. That's why I ran again after 34 years. I didn't need 36 years."

The federal probe of allegations that Rostenkowski may have illegally pocketed nearly $56,000 in public and campaign funds through an arrangement with House Post Office officials has left many of his

..."I want to be a strong leader"

Democratic and Republican colleagues baffled and disbelieving.

Why, some ask, would a powerful political figure who could have retired this year and lawfully kept more than $1 million in his campaign war chest risk all by chiseling on the purchase of postage stamps?

"As far as any of us are concerned, it's a non-issue," said Rep. Benjamin C. Cardin (D-Md.), a member of the Ways and Means Committee.

A similar skepticism exists among Rostenkowski allies in Chicago. "The initial reaction of people is that this is impossible," said Alderman Patrick J. O'Connor. "He had all that money in the campaign fund and he could have taken it. [The Post Office allegation] seems kind of inconsequential and most people are saying it doesn't make sense."

Because of a change in the law, this month marked the last time retiring members of Congress could retain accumulated campaign funds for personal use. When he took the oath of office as a member of the 103rd Congress last week, Rostenkowski forfeited that right. "He raised his hand and gave away $1 million," said Chicago banker William M. Daley, the brother of Mayor Richard M. Daley and a Rostenkowski confidant.

Still, U.S. Attorney Jay B. Stephens is pressing ahead and apparently widening the investigation. Last week he began calling Rostenkowski aides before the grand jury. And while Rostenkowski's friends are quick to point to the forgone campaign funds as evidence that he is not driven by a desire to enrich himself, Rostenkowski has never fully explained why a member of Congress who enjoys free mailing privileges would need thousands of dollars in stamps.

In the recent telephone interview, Rostenkowski, citing his lawyers' advice, said he would not discuss the House Post Office investigation. He said he offered to meet informally with prosecutors and again cited his lawyers' advice as the reason he refused last summer to testify before the grand jury. Asked if there is a plausible explanation for his large stamp purchases, he said, "I think so."

Rostenkowski's allies in Chicago and in Washington hope that is the case, for the importance of the man they call "Rosty"—both to his city and his party—has never been greater. When Clinton bypassed William Daley for the post of transportation secretary, it left Chicago without a representative in the president's Cabinet for the first time in decades. Should the city's most powerful member of Congress then be toppled by the grand jury investigation, "that would be a tremendous blow to Illinois and Chicago," said Daley, reflecting the views of downtown business and political leaders.

But not everyone sees Rostenkowski that way. According to David Axelrod, a Chicago political consultant who worked for Rostenkowski in the Democratic primary last March, there is "a vast disparity between the two worlds" of Rostenkowski's life in Washington and Chicago. "He's exalted in Washington," Axelrod said. "He comes back here and he's just another old ward committeeman."

In November, running against a political unknown, Rostenkowski won 57 percent of the vote, a respectable showing but well below the overwhelming landslide margins he has enjoyed against hapless Republican opponents in the past. There were mitigating circumstances: He was beaten up by his primary opponent's negative campaign; he was a longtime incumbent in a year in which many other incumbents didn't survive; and about 80 percent of his district was new territory, including areas where Rostenkowski's antiabortion stance was unpopular.

But, Axelrod said, "there's been damage, no question about it. Right now the only stories you see associated with his name are negative. The question is what happens when he starts to move health-care reform and other major legislation through Congress."

Rostenkowski, who has chaired the Ways and Means Committee since 1981, is being counted on by many to play a crucial role in guiding Clinton's fiscal and health-care proposals through Congress.

By all accounts, he has quickly developed a close working relation-

Rostenkowski Asks Court To Bar Leaks

Associated Press

Rep. Dan Rostenkowski (D-Ill.) asked a federal court yesterday to prevent what he called prosecution leaks in a grand jury investigation of the House Post Office, an aide to the lawmaker said.

The motion was immediately placed under seal by the chief judge of U.S. District Court, John Garrett Penn. The judge's chambers said court rules require that all grand jury matters be sealed.

Rostenkowski has acknowledged the grand jury is investigating his purchase of stamps at the House Post Office to determine whether he illegally obtained cash through stamp transactions. But he has denied any wrongdoing and accused U.S. Attorney Jay B. Stephens, a Republican, of conducting a political fishing expedition.

A Rostenkowski aide said the lawmaker's attorneys objected to placing the motion under seal, adding that Rostenkowski originally intended to make it public.

A number of news stories, quoting sources, have said that the original investigation of possibly illegal stamp transactions has expanded significantly. Areas now under investigation, according to the stories, include Rostenkowski's tax, financial and campaign records, campaign payments for office space in a Chicago building owned by the Rostenkowski family and alleged attempts to obstruct the probe.

Scandals tax Rostenkowski

Dealings are target of probe

By Leslie Phillips
USA TODAY

Dan Rostenkowski, a consummate Washington insider, finds himself at the center of a criminal investigation as he prepares to steer the incoming Clinton administration's crucial economic and health-care proposals through Congress.

Rostenkowski is the gruff, 18-term Democratic congressman from Chicago, longtime chairman of the tax-writing House Ways and Means committee and one of Washington's most influential elected officials.

But he's in hot water:

▶ A series of Chicago Sun-Times articles criticized him for spending $73,000 in campaign money for renting office space in a building he co-owns. Rostenkowski said the space was a campaign office.

The Sun-Times questioned the use of the room, saying the arrangement was "sleazy." House members aren't allowed to use campaign money for personal use.

▶ He also came under fire after the paper reported he used the $55,000 supposedly used to purchase stamps from the House Post Office since 1986 for his own use. House members don't have to pay for stamps under franking privileges. A federal grand jury is probing the House Post Office and has subpoenaed some of his campaign records.

Time magazine said he was the worst of the House members, pretending to buy massive amounts of stamps in a plot to transfer campaign funds to their personal use.

Rostenkowski denies wrongdoing. He has accused U.S. Attorney Jay Stephens, a Republican, of political witch-hunting and excessive ambition. Stephens has refused to comment on the Rostenkowski probe.

By H. Darr Beiser, USA TODAY

BESIEGED: Rep. Dan Rostenkowski has been linked to the House post office scandal and criticized on campaign funds.

> "The chairman's just going to fight back. He's been getting slowly bled white by these leaks and he feels it's time he defend himself."
> — Pat Jones, press secretary

Rostenkowski filed a motion this week to prohibit the Justice Department from — he claimed — leaking grand jury information.

"It's not only brazen, it's illegal," says Rostenkowski's press secretary Pat Jones about the reported leaks.

"The chairman's just going to fight back," Jones says. "He's been getting slowly bled white by these leaks and he feels it's time that he defend himself."

"Rostenkowski is a supreme pork politician," says Chicago political consultant Don Rose, who informally advised his Democratic primary opponent last year.

"He's a classic machine pol in this regard ... and the way of the Chicago machine politician is to beat the game. It doesn't matter if you're beating the game for pennies, nickels or dimes."

Chicago media consultant David Axelrod, who worked on behalf of Rostenkowski in the last campaign, has a different point of view.

"This guy's got some big issues on his mind," Axelrod says. "The notion of him sitting down there plotting and scheming to get $500 in walking around money is crazy. It just doesn't make sense."

Rostenkowski's decision to run for an 18th term last year means he forfeits $1 million in campaign funds he could've kept had he retired.

First elected to the House in 1959, Rostenkowski enjoyed comfortable victory margins for years — often running unopposed.

But the 1992 election was his hardest race. He had a primary opponent for the first time in his career and he won his general election in November by his smallest winning margin ever — winning with only 59% of votes.

During the course of the post office investigation, six postal employees have pleaded guilty and former postmaster Robert Rota resigned.

Rostenkowski and Reps. Austin Murphy and Joe Kolter, both Democrats from Pennsylvania, were subpoenaed before a grand jury last summer but invoked their Fifth Amendment rights against self-incrimination.

Aides to the congressmen have since been subpoenaed and questioned.

The investigation "is clearly already interfering with his ability to run his committee and move legislation through Congress, by his own admission," says Heritage Foundation congressional analyst David Mason.

"He's distracted as one naturally would be," he says.

Democratic Caucus rules would require Rostenkowski to step down as chairman of Ways and Means if indicted.

Stephens, who serves at the pleasure of the president, surely will be replaced within the next several months.

But his Democratic replacement might find it difficult to end a longstanding investigation that also has an impaneled grand jury.

Any decision to indict a political figure as prominent as Rostenkowski would likely need approval from high Justice Department officials.

But the incoming Democratic president might be expected to remain uninvolved to maintain the appearance of impartiality.

FEDERAL BUREAU OF INVESTIGATION

Date of transcription 12/21/92

On December 17, 1992, Special Agent [redacted] took photographs of property thought to be 2154 and 2158 North Damen Avenue, Chicago, Illinois, and 1362 West Evergreen, Chicago, Illinois. In addition, SA [redacted] took photographs of the northeast corner of Blackhawk and Noble, Chicago, Illinois, and the southwest corner of Ada and Evergreen, Chicago, Illinois. A total of 73 photographs were taken, a log identifying the photographs is attached, and the following observations were made:

Photographs 5 and 6 are photographs of an empty lot located on the southwest corner of Damen and Webster, Chicago, Illinois. The empty lot would have to be 2156 or 2158 N. Damen Avenue if buildings existed on that property, as all even numbered buildings in Chicago are located on the west or south sides of each street. A check of the 1992 Chicago Haines Directory indicates that the next Damen address north of 2154 N. Damen, on the west side of the street, is 2320 N. Damen.

Photographs 11 through 15 are photos of a garage located where 1362 W. Evergreen, Chicago, Illinois, would be if a home was located on the property. The property is located between 1360 and 1368 W. Evergreen, and there are no signs or markings which identify the property. In addition, there is no listing in the 1992 Chicago Haines Directory for a 1362 W. Evergreen. The property appears to be a courtyard for 1368 W. Evergreen. Photo number 15 is a photograph of a building permit which was affixed to the garage.

Photographs 18 through 21 are photos of a vacant lot located on the northwest corner of Ada and Evergreen, Chicago, Illinois. The vacant lot is overgrown, located next to an expressway, and has no signs or markings which indicate that it is a play lot or play ground.

Photographs 27 through 31 are photos of a vacant lot located on the northeast corner of Blackhawk and Noble, Chicago,

On December 15, 1992, Special Agent [redacted] took photographs of property identified as 2148 through 2152 North Damen Avenue, Chicago, Illinois; 1347-1349 North Noble, Chicago, Illinois; and 1368-1372 West Evergreen, Chicago, Illinois. A total of 29 photographs were taken, a log identifying the photographs is attached, and the following observations were made:

Photographs 6-9 and 14-17 are photographs of 2150 N. Damen Ave., Chicago, Illinois. 2150 N. Damen appears to be an office used by 32nd Ward Alderman TERRY (THERIS M.) GABINSKI. 2150 N. Damen does have a separate operable entrance at the front and rear of the building. It appears however that the front entrance is not being used, as a sign in the window indicates that individuals should "Enter At Corner" (2148 N. Damen). It should also be noted that 2150 N. Damen does not have a receptacle for the delivery of U.S. Mail, which is accessible from the street. It appears that all mailings to 2150 N. Damen, must be delivered to 2148 or 2152 N. Damen Avenue, Chicago, Illinois.

Rosty's Bank Records Reportedly Subpoenaed

By Michael Briggs
Washington Bureau / Chicago Sun-Times

WASHINGTON—Personal banking records of Rep. Dan Rostenkowski (D-Ill.) reportedly have been subpoenaed by a federal grand jury investigating embezzlement from the House Post Office.

The latest demand for Rostenkowski's financial records was a signal that the Chicago congressman is a main focus of the investigation by federal prosecutors.

Widespread speculation that Rostenkowski faces indictment soon was disputed, however, by a source familiar with the investigation.

Tucked into Wednesday's Congressional Record was formal notice by Rostenkowski to House Speaker Thomas S. Foley (D-Wash.) that subpoenas were served on 18 aides in Rostenkowski's congressional office and on the House Ways and Means Committee between Nov. 6 and Dec. 31.

The Congressional Record also disclosed that House Sergeant-at-Arms Werner W. Brandt had notified Foley of subpoenas for records but did not say what information was sought.

Lynn Martin's high hopes; Capital Letters, Page 20.

Rostenkowski's personal account records from the defunct House Bank, including deposits and checks, were demanded by the grand jury in a subpoena to Brandt, according to a Washington Times report that a Rostenkowski spokesman did not dispute.

The grand jury also ordered George H. Chapin, the chief payroll clerk of the House, to turn over records on Rostenkowski paychecks that were deposited in his House Bank account, the Times reported.

Brandt and Chapin did not return telephone calls.

A spokesman for Rostenkowski said he could not confirm that the records were subpoenaed but did not dispute the report.

An assistant to Jay B. Stephens, U.S. attorney for the District of Columbia, would not comment.

Rostenkowski has denied any wrongdoing, and his spokesmen have said the congressman's lawyers have been assured that he is not a target of the grand jury investigation.

What had been a minor scandal by House standards took on greater dimensions last summer when the grand jury made Rostenkowski and two Democratic congressmen from Pennsylvania turn over office expense records, including those for stamp purchases from the post office. The records that detail purchases of thousands of dollars worth of stamps on behalf of the three congressmen were questioned because members of Congress may use the mail without stamps for official letters.

All three congressmen cooperated with the initial request for records, but later invoked their Fifth Amendment right and refused to appear in person to provide testimony.

Several Rostenkowski aides have testified in recent weeks, and senior aides on his House Ways and Means Committee staff were ordered to appear today before the grand jury.

There is speculation that the grand jury is looking into whether stamp purchases were used to launder campaign funds for personal use.

Confirmation Hearing Is A Breeze For Brown

By David S. Broder
Washington Post

WASHINGTON—The Clinton Cabinet confirmation process got off to a smooth start Wednesday when Commerce Secretary-designate Ronald H. Brown sailed unscathed through a gentle three-hour hearing of the Senate Commerce, Science and Transportation Committee.

Vowing to take a hard line against predatory trade practices and use "sharp elbows" to assure that the Commerce Department is not muscled out of the economic policy debate, the Democratic National Committee chairman and longtime Washington lawyer easily fended off Republican questions about his past lobbying clients and business deals and emerged

Prosecutors Deny Leaks in Rostenkowski Case

Associated Press

Federal prosecutors denied yesterday that they have leaked information about the House Post Office scandal and asked a judge to reject efforts to have them held in contempt in the case.

U.S. Attorney Jay B. Stephens suggested that virtually all of the information in the news media on the investigation has come from House investigators.

His remarks came in response to an effort by Rep. Dan Rostenkowski (D-Ill.) to have prosecutors held in contempt of court because of news reports concerning the investigation.

Rostenkowski, chairman of the tax-writing House Ways and Mean Committee and under scrutiny in the Post Office case, had accused the prosecutors of leaking information. He asked District Judge John Garrett Penn for a court order to prevent further disclosures.

Stephens said none of 13 newspaper and magazine articles and two television reports that Rostenkowski cited as prosecution leaks in the grand jury investigation could be attributed to himself or other prosecutors.

Rostenkowski has acknowledged that the grand jury is investigating his purchases of stamps at the House Post Office and whether the transactions were used to convert money for his personal or campaign use. But he has denied any wrongdoing and accused Stephens, a Republican, of conducting a political fishing expedition.

Several news reports, quoting sources, have said the investigation has expanded significantly in recent months to include Rostenkowski's tax, financial and campaign records and alleged attempts to obstruct the probe.

U.S. attorney under fire

A federal judge in Washington, D.C., on Tuesday ordered U.S. Attorney Jay Stephens to explain why he shouldn't be cited for contempt over leaks about a grand jury probe of House Ways and Means Committee Chairman Dan Rostenkowski, D-Ill. Federal Judge John Garrett Penn said six newspaper articles and one TV news report "contain information disclosing matters before the grand jury." Stephens suggests the leaks were outside his office. The jury is investigating improprieties at the House Post Office. Rostenkowski denies wrongdoing.

U.S. Attorney Is Ordered to Explain Apparent Leaks About Rostenkowski

By Joan Biskupic
Washington Post Staff Writer

A federal district judge has ordered U.S. Attorney Jay B. Stephens to explain apparent leaks from a grand jury investigation of House Ways and Means Committee Chairman Dan Rostenkowski and misconduct at the House Post Office.

Federal law bars prosecutors from disclosing grand jury proceedings, and if Stephens or his assistants are found in violation, they may be held in contempt of court. The resulting civil penalty could be an order to stop the leaks, a fine or, unlikely in this case, imprisonment.

Stephens, chief federal prosecutor in the District of Columbia, yesterday contended that the news stories at issue did not disclose grand jury material, but added, "In any event, we expect to establish to the satisfaction of the court that this office is not the source of those comments." No hearing date has been set.

Since the fall of 1991, a federal grand jury has been investigating whether Rostenkowski (D-Ill.) used large purchases of stamps from the House Post Office to convert campaign contributions and office expense vouchers into personal funds. Rostenkowski has denied any wrongdoing.

Nonetheless, Rostenkowski's legal problems and ethics questions have made headlines in Washington, his home town of Chicago and around the country.

Public officials under investigation typically decry news stories containing inside information about their cases, but it is rare that an individual will bring a legal challenge. It is even rarer that a judge will order a hearing at which the government must respond to the allegations that officials gave out secret information.

But after reviewing 15 exhibits submitted by Rostenkowski in a motion to compel government compliance with grand jury rules, Judge John Garrett Penn concluded in an order late Monday that six news articles and one videotaped news report contained information that revealed matters before the grand jury.

Among the reports Penn cited were articles in The Washington Post, the Chicago Tribune, Time, Newsweek and the Washington Times and a broadcast on Cable News Network.

The order from Penn, who is chief judge for U.S. District Court here, included a detailed reading of all the Rostenkowski exhibits and Penn's account of why the information likely came from grand jury proceedings or sources outside the government team directing the grand jury.

Penn referred to a May 28, 1992, Washington Post story that quoted "sources familiar with the grand jury investigation" saying "a supervisor at the House Post Office has told federal prosecutors that he improperly exchanged postage vouchers . . . from Rostenkowski . . . for cash, in amounts that varied from several hundred dollars to more than $2,000." The judge said revelation of such testimony violates federal rules.

CNN reported sources saying "the investigation has now widened even more to include possible violations of tax law" by Rostenkowski.

Commented Penn, "A statement such as this, revealing the specific nature of the investigation, would tend to reveal matters occurring before the grand jury."

Responding yesterday to the court order, Rostenkowksi aide Pat Jones said only that the congressman was pleased with the order.

Plato Cacheris, a Washington lawyer who has defended several high-profile criminal defendants, said, "People do have complaints about leaks a lot, but it's not very often that judges go to these lengths" ordering the government to respond.

Such challenges usually are not successful.

In 1990, a federal judge threw out a lawsuit brought by former D.C. mayor Marion Barry against federal prosecutors, ruling that federal officials did not disclose secret grand jury information. That case involved a 1987 investigation of alleged corruption in city government and a 1984 probe of Barry's relationship with convicted cocaine distributor Karen K. Johnson. It did not involve the grand jury investigation that led to Barry's indictment in 1990.

In an opinion by Lewis F. Powell Jr., the court said the constitutional guarantee of equal protection does not require that courts apply the strictest level of scrutiny to state decisions on how to finance public schools.

Marshall favored a different standard for determining whether state or federal laws violated equal protection guarantees, and his sliding scale approach influenced the court in later years to give greater scrutiny to government decisions and more broadly read equal protection guarantees.

In the years closer to his retirement, Marshall increasingly assumed a defensive role.

Until his close friend Brennan retired in 1990, it was just the two

Rostenkowski's Deals On Vehicles Examined

Government Lease Arrangements at Issue

By Kenneth J. Cooper
Washington Post Staff Writer

House Ways and Means Committee Chairman Dan Rostenkowski (D-Ill.) appears to have purchased three vehicles from a Chicago-area dealer since 1987 and then arranged for the federal government to make payments under official leases, Chicago newspapers reported yesterday.

The confusing arrangement, in which Rostenkowski seemed to simultaneously buy and lease the vehicles, could violate House regulations governing the use of member expense accounts. House members are not allowed to own an interest in vehicles leased for official purposes or secure the option to buy them as a condition of a government lease.

The questions about Rostenkowski's financial arrangements for official vehicles come amid a federal grand jury investigation here into whether large purchases reported at the House Post Office concealed an alleged scheme to convert office and campaign funds to personal use. That inquiry has broadened into a examination of Rostenkowski's personal finances. Common Cause recently asked the House ethics committee to investigate Rostenkowski's leasing an office—which he and a sister own—to his campaign committee.

The grand jury inquiry, which Rostenkowski has condemned as baseless, has distracted the chairman as the Ways and Means Committee prepares to consider elements of President Clinton's economic package and his health care overhaul.

The president of a suburban Chicago car dealership told the Chicago Tribune that the vehicle arrangements involved a "direct sale," and House members are not allowed to own an interest in vehicles leased for official purposes or secure the option to buy them as a condition of a government lease.

Rostenkowski spokesman Pat Jones confirmed that the lawmaker's name did appear on the Illinois state titles of the leased vehicles. The Chicago Sun-Times first reported the unusual circumstances under which the government paid a total of $68,250 to lease two vans and a station wagon.

"He came in and he bought cars, and we made a profit on it. We ran a tab on him. We just got a check, as you know. Every month the check came in," said Donald Roberts, president of Wil-Shore Motor Sales Inc. in Wilmette, Ill. He did not indicate whether Rostenkowski signed a purchase agreement in addition to an official lease.

A Democratic aide to the House Administration Committee said that it was virtually impossible for an official lease to convey ownership to a member. The aide, Heidi Pender, said committee staff members scrutinize each lease, strike clauses that violate House regulations and require the leasing agent to accept the changes before any official payments are made.

"There is no way an official car vests interest in any member," Pender said. "Our regulations do not permit them to have an interest in those vehicles."

Jones, the Rostenkowski spokesman, said the Chicago newspapers had misinterpreted the vehicle titles.

"They're drawing the wrong conclusion from an incomplete set of facts. The fact his name was on the title did not mean he considered himself the owner of the vehicle," Jones said.

Stanley Brand, Rostenkowski's lawyer, also dismissed the titles as legally insignificant. "A title is an accident of convenience," he told the Tribune.

Under House rules, vehicle leases cannot last longer than two years. At the end of the leases, Jones said, one van was returned to the dealership, Rostenkowski's campaign bought one van and either the lawmaker or his campaign committee purchased the station wagon. Such purchases, if not authorized in the leases, would not violate House rules, Pender said. It was unclear how the price was determined or who the seller was.

House records indicate Rostenkowski reported expenses of at least $1,050 a month since 1987 for a "mobile office," a use of official vehicles more common in sprawling rural districts than the dense urban neighborhoods that Rostenkowski represents on Chicago's northwest

Rosty Legal Bills Up to $153,000

2nd Aide's Lawyers Paid by Campaign Fund

By Chuck Neubauer and Ray Long
Staff Writers

Rep. Dan Rostenkowski (D-Ill.) now has spent more than $153,000 in campaign funds to pay lawyers representing him and his aides in a federal grand jury investigation, records show.

Federal Election Commission reports released Monday indicate that the Rostenkowski for Congress committee paid $62,507 in the last five weeks of 1992 as an investigation of improprieties at the House Post Office widened to include aspects of the Northwest Side congressman's personal finances.

Rostenkowski's mounting legal bills are one barometer of how seriously federal prosecutors are pursuing the investigation.

Dan Rostenkowski

The Rostenkowski fund reported for the first time that it is paying lawyer bills for Mary A. Lesinski, a legislative aide in Rostenkowski's congressional office in Washington.

Lesinski, whose annual federal salary is about $29,000, received $36,403 from the campaign to reimburse her for legal expenses. Lesinski's name had not previously surfaced in the investigation.

The campaign fund also paid $16,113 between Nov. 24 and Dec. 31 to reimburse Virginia C. Fletcher, Rostenkowski's top aide in his Washington office, for her legal expenses. Earlier, Fletcher had received $19,393 from the campaign for her legal bills.

Fletcher, who oversees Rostenkowski's office expenses as his $95,000-a-year administrative assistant, has worked for him since 1963.

In November, the federal grand jury subpoenaed about 20 current or former staffers from Rostenkowski's office and records from his 1992 campaign.

The grand jury had been investigating whether Rostenkowski and two other congressmen or their staffs used the House Post Office to convert government vouchers or campaign checks into cash through phony transactions disguised as stamp purchases.

The investigation has broadened into other Rostenkowski transactions, including one reported Dec. 13 by the Chicago Sun-Times in which the congressman paid himself and his sisters rent for a little-used campaign office in a building they own adjacent to his home.

Rostenkowski's payment of the legal bills with campaign funds is permitted by the House of Representatives. But federal prosecutors appear to view with suspicion the arrangement to reimburse his aides. One former Rostenkowski staffer who went before the grand jury said he was questioned about who was paying his lawyer.

A Rostenkowski spokesman has said the practice is legal and proper.

Rostenkowski's own lawyers at Brand & Lowell were paid $5,912 in campaign funds during the latest reporting period, records show. They had received $66,000 previously from the campaign.

The campaign also has paid about $10,000 to the Chicago law firm of Katten Muchin Zavis & Dombroff. Rostenkowski aides would not say what role the law firm has in the investigation.

Meanwhile, state campaign reports showed that Republicans are positioned much better financially than Democrats for 1994 races for governor and secretary of state.

Gov. Edgar had $2,371,341 in his campaign fund on Dec. 31, while his fellow Republican, Secretary of State George Ryan, had $1,015,772.

The three Democrats holding statewide offices reported the following balances: Attorney General Roland W. Burris, $305,989; Treasurer Patrick Quinn, $112,211, and Comptroller Dawn Clark Netsch, $55,647. Another potential candidate for governor, Cook County Board President Richard J. Phelan, reported last week that his campaign had $383,490 in the bank.

Mayor Daley has $895,483 in his fund.

The disclosure reports also showed that former Senate President Philip J. Rock (D-Oak Park) paid back $10,000 in personal loans from his campaign committee. Rock has said the loans were used to pay for college expenses for his children. His campaign fund still has $627,474.

Prosecutors quizzed on Rostenkowski leaks

WASHINGTON—A federal judge wants government prosecutors to explain alleged leaks about a grand jury investigation of House Ways and Means chairman Dan Rostenkowski (D-Ill.). Judge John Garrett Penn said six newspaper and magazine articles and a TV broadcast dating back to last May "appear to reveal information that was presented to the grand jury." The Chicago congressman asked Penn last week to hold U.S. Atty. Jay Stephens in contempt of court, blaming him for leaks. For 15 months, Stephens' office has been leading a grand jury investigation into the House post office scandal, in which Rostenkowski is under suspicion of diverting campaign money to personal use, taking money from the post office and violating tax laws. Stephens has denied his office leaked any information. No date was set for the contempt hearing.

Moseley-Braun Debt Grows

By Lynn Sweet
Political Writer

Sen. Carol Moseley-Braun's political fund will have to dig deeper to climb out of campaign debt, with a report released Tuesday showing that the committee owes $543,871, or $97,182 more than previously stated.

Moseley-Braun's latest Federal Election Commission report shows a total of $6.5 million in expenditures and debts of $541,871. Most of the increase in spending was because of bills received by the campaign after the Nov. 3 election.

The new report shows a $7,500 debt to Kgosie Matthews, Moseley-Braun's campaign manager, whom she acknowledged dating after her return from Africa and England in December.

The senator has done relatively little fund-raising since the election, raising only $49,637.

In contrast, her Republican opponent, Richard S. Williamson, raised $24,555 during the same Nov. 24-Dec. 31 reporting period. His disclosure report shows he still owes $172,462 on a $2.4 million campaign.

According to FEC reports made public Tuesday:

- Braun's campaign used the private planes of two politically connected Downstate lawyers, Paul Pratt and L. Thomas Lakin.

Planes from Pratt's East Alton law firm were used for trips in June and July, said Michael Frazier, the senator's chief of staff. However, billings of $5,147 for those trips are just appearing on the new report.

Lakin, a political associate of state Rep. James McPike (D-Alton), had his Wood River law firm plane provide $8,868 in charter service in July and on Nov. 2.

- A political action committee controlled by Rep. Dan Rostenkowski (D-Ill.) gave Braun $5,000. State Lottery Director Desiree Rogers, who works for Republican Gov. Edgar, gave $1,000. Her husband, Jonathan, was a finance chair for Moseley-Braun.
- Another report filed Jan. 28 shows Braun still owes $8,800 to a campaign fund that financed her previous recorder of deeds campaign. Braun lent herself $10,000 from the fund to pay for personal expenses. She repaid $1,200 to the fund Aug. 12, the report shows.

Senator Leaving Costly Tower

Sen. Carol Moseley-Braun (D-Ill.) is leaving the $3,000-a-month luxury Lake Point Tower penthouse apartment she had moved into last Thanksgiving after selling her South Shore condominium.

The Lake Point Tower lease expired Jan. 31, and the senator is close to buying a home in the city, said chief of staff Michael Frazier.

Meanwhile, Frazier said, Moseley-Braun's Chicago home will be the South Shore residence of her brother, Joey, a Chicago homicide detective. In Washington, D.C., Moseley-Braun has rented a two-bedroom apartment in the Kalorama section.

The move to Lake Point Tower had been a political problem for Moseley-Braun because it seemed to clash with the working-mother image she cultivated during the campaign. Frazier said it was not intended as a permanent residence.

Hearing Ordered on Leaks in Rosty Case

By Michael Briggs
Washington Bureau / Chicago Sun-Times

WASHINGTON—A federal judge has ordered prosecutors to explain why they should not be held in contempt of court for what Rep. Dan Rostenkowski (D-Ill.) has charged are illegal leaks to reporters about a grand jury investigation of him.

Chief U.S. District Court Judge John Garrett Penn said Rostenkowski is entitled to a hearing on his complaint that U.S. Attorney Jay B. Stephens or his assistants were the source of stories about the grand jury investigation of Rostenkowski's possible role in the House post office scandal.

Stephens had argued that any information about the case that he made public did not violate a rule on grand jury secrecy. He also told the judge that information about the grand jury investigation could have come from the congressman himself, his aides, witnesses or lawyers for witnesses before the grand jury.

In a statement Tuesday, Stephens said he expects "to establish to the satisfaction of the court that this office is not the source of [prohibited] comments" involving matters before the grand jury.

The judge determined that, out of a recent spate of 15 stories that Rostenkowski complained about, six newspaper and magazine articles and one television report "contained information disclosing matters occurring before the grand jury."

The secrecy rule could have been violated, he said, if information about the grand jury in those seven stories came from prosecutors or other government officials.

The judge said he found it "noteworthy that the government has not submitted any affidavits denying that it disclosed this information."

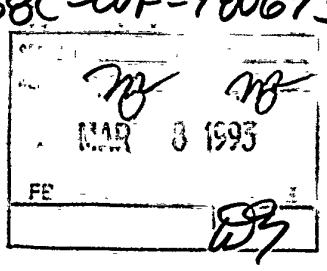
He also noted that the "government is in the best position to know whether it has disclosed such statements," so Penn put the burden on the U.S. attorney's office to "show cause as to why it should not be held in contempt" for violating a grand jury secrecy rule.

An official in the judge's chamber said no date had been set for a hearing on Rostenkowski's contempt motion.

The investigation of embezzlement from the House post office has resulted in the convictions of six postal workers.

The probe broadened last May when subpoenas, made public under House rules, were issued for congressional expense records for Rostenkowski and two Pennsylvania congressmen.

House Speaker Thomas S. Foley (D-Wash.) said last week that House officers had complied with all subpoenas for records in the investigation, which reportedly include demands on the House sergeant at arms to turn over Rostenkowski's payroll and House Bank account records.



Rostenkowski has acknowledged that his stamp purchases are under investigation, but he has denied any wrongdoing.

Moseley-Braun owes $544,000, report says

Rostenkowski pays $153,000 in fees

By Ray Gibson

U.S. Sen. Carol Moseley-Braun, who raised more than $6.5 million for her Senate race last year, owes nearly $544,000, according to campaign finance reports filed Tuesday.

Moseley-Braun's cash-strapped political fund has been mired in debt since the November election, and without the benefit of any large fundraiser, the debt has continued to increase, the report shows.

Michael Frazier, Moseley-Braun's chief of staff, said the debt was typical of many Senate candidates and that it eventually will be erased.

In another congressional filing, U.S. Rep. Dan Rostenkowski's political committee revealed it has now paid out more than $153,000 for legal expenses stemming from the ongoing federal grand jury probe in Washington of his personal finances.

Moseley-Braun, a Democrat, filed a report in December showing campaign debts of $477,000. In the final weeks of 1992, the debt increased to $544,000 as the campaign paid past due bills and salaries of former staffers.

During the final weeks of the year, Moseley-Braun became mired in controversy. She was forced to defend her hiring of patronage employees at the Cook County recorder of deeds office, her handling of a sexual harassment investigation of campaign workers' charges, and her 26-day vacation in Africa with her campaign manager, Kgosie Matthews.

The controversies took a toll on fundraising. Campaign reports show she raised only $49,637 in 1992's final five weeks. Her campaign spent $83,201 in the same period.

According to Federal Election Commission reports, only six other candidates for Senate had debt levels higher than Moseley-Braun's. Brook Johnson, a Connecticut millionaire who unsuccessfully challenged U.S. Sen. Christopher J. Dodd, was the leader, ending his campaign with $1.9 million owed to himself and others.

While Moseley-Braun was in debt, Rostenkowski was dipping into one of his political war chests, which holds $1.3 million [illegible] the legal bills for his staff and himself.

The federal probe began last year and originally focused on whether the Northwest Side Democrat illegally converted postage stamps purchased from the House Post Office for cash. It has broadened into a more wide-ranging investigation of his personal finances.

Rostenkowski's congressional campaign fund paid $62,500 in the final weeks of 1992 to his Washington lawyers as well as paying the legal expenses of two aides and other Washington staff members.

The lastest disclosure shows Rostenkowski's committee reimbursed legislative aide Mary Lesinski more than $36,000 for her legal bills in late November.

Lesinski, who could not be reached for comment Tuesday, receives a salary of about $25,000, federal reports show.

Rostenkowski previously disclosed that he was paying legal fees for his longtime administrative assistant, Virginia Fletcher, and that another law firm had been hired to represent other aides.

In late November, Rostenkowski's committee paid another $16,113 for Fletcher's legal expenses and $4,079 in expenses for other Washington staff members, according to the report and interviews.

Fletcher, who receives more than $90,000 annually as Rostenkowski's top aide, has now received $35,506 for legal fee reimbursement, while the law firm of Katten Muchin Zavis & Dombroff has received more than $10,000 on behalf of other Washington staffers.

Judge Rejects Rostenkowski's Complaint Against Prosecutors

Associated Press

A federal judge yesterday dismissed House Ways and Means Committee Chairman Dan Rostenkowski's complaint that prosecutors leaked details about a grand jury's investigation of him to the news media.

"The court is satisfied that the government has shown that it was not the source of the leaks," said Chief U.S. District Judge John Garrett Penn.

Based on denials in sworn affidavits from U.S. Attorney Jay B. Stephens, former attorney general William P. Barr, FBI Director William S. Sessions and 71 other prosecutors, federal officials or law enforcement officers, Penn said he is convinced "that the government did not divulge the information," related to the grand jury's probe of irregularities at the House Post Office.

Rostenkowski (D-Ill.) has acknowledged that stamp purchases by his office and their alleged conversion into cash are being probed. But he has denied any wrongdoing and accused Stephens, a Republican, of politicizing the investigation.

Rostenkowski last week asked Penn to hold an open-court hearing on why Stephens should not be held in contempt for violating grand jury secrecy rules. The congressman cited 13 newspaper and magazine articles and two television broadcasts about various aspects of the investigation.

Stephens had suggested that virtually all of the information in the articles or newscasts cited by Rostenkowski originated from either Rostenkowski, his staff and attorneys, other House colleagues, or grand jury witnesses or their attorneys not subject to the secrecy rules.

Rostenkowski again target of an old foe

By Thomas Hardy
Political writer

Their campaign was a year ago, but former Ald. Dick Simpson was still lobbing grenades Thursday at U.S. Rep. Daniel Rostenkowski, alleging that the powerful incumbent illegally used political funds to win re-election.

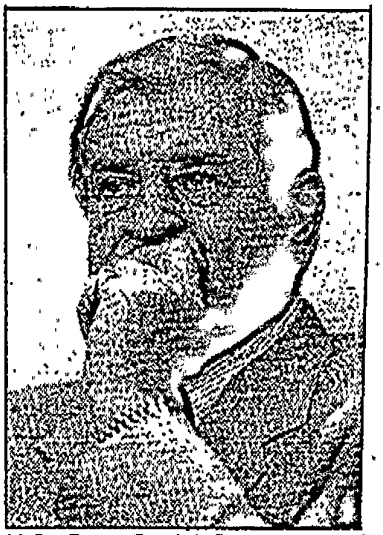
At a downtown news conference, Simpson said he will file formal complaints against Rostenkowski with the Federal Election Commission and the House Ethics Committee, asking them to investigate $37,750 in spending by the Northwest Side Democrat from his America's Leaders Fund.

The Chicago-based political action committee, one of five that Rostenkowski controls, is registered as a state campaign fund and cannot be used to supplement the congressman's federal fund in his election efforts.

But Simpson, who unsuccessfully challenged Rostenkowski in the March primary, maintains that the money was transferred from the America's Leaders Fund to the campaign committees of six other candidates and 11 party leaders in the new 5th Congressional District to benefit Rostenkowski's campaign.

Because of reapportionment, Rostenkowski ran in a city-suburban district that was largely unfamiliar to him. Nearly $22,000 of the America's Leaders Fund contributions were doled out to political organizations in the new district.

Moreover, Simpson said, Rostenkowski has used the committee as a "slush fund" to get around federal campaign-financing laws prohibiting corporations from contributing to congressional campaigns.



A spokesman for Rostenkowski, the House Ways and Means Committee chairman, denied that anything illegal occurred. "Dick Simpson is wrong on the facts and wrong on the law, as usual," the spokesman said from Washington.

Simpson acknowledged that he is exploring a second bid for the 5th District seat in 1994.

In the last year, Rostenkowski has become the target of a federal grand jury investigation in Washington over transactions at the House Post Office and has come under fire for using campaign funds to pay himself and relatives rent for office space and for leased cars. Last month, the watchdog group Common Cause asked the Ethics Committee to investigate his finances.

Campaign-finance reports filed by the America's Leaders Fund show that the committee disbursed amounts ranging from $500 to $3,000 to suburban mayors, Democratic ward committeemen and candidates running with Rostenkowski on the organization slate.

Though he acknowledged that he could not prove anything illegal, Simpson asserted that it was up to Rostenkowski and his allies to prove that the money from the America's Leaders Fund did not wind up helping the Ways and Means chairman's campaign.

U.S. Rep. Daniel Rostenkowski (above) misused a political fund, says opponent Dick Simpson.

Franklin Park Mayor Jack Williams, whose political organization received $500 from the America's Leaders Fund, said: "He [Rostenkowski] knows we're the head of the Franklin Park precinct organization, and he thought this would help out on Election Day for precinct captains."

Rostenkowski's spokesman said the fund "exists for the explicit purpose of giving money to candidates. There was no quid pro quo in terms of them getting the money."

Tribune reporter Ray Gibson contributed to this article.

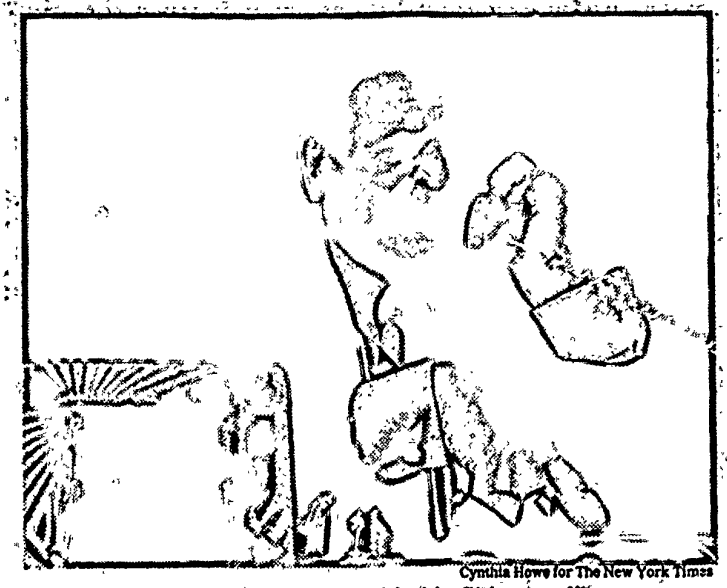
Economic Plan Tied to Rostenkowski Fate

By DAVID E. ROSENBAUM
Special to The New York Times

WASHINGTON, March 5 — In public they talk about economic stimulus, energy taxes, Medicare cuts and the proper ratio of tax increases to spending reductions.

But in the privacy of White House offices and Capitol cloakrooms, President Clinton's top economic advisers and the senators and representatives responsible for pushing the Clinton economic plan through Congress express a bigger worry: Will Dan Rostenkowski be indicted?



"The fate of the plan could lie in the balance," said a top Administration official.

Out of Their Control

A Congressman called it "the Damocles' sword that hangs over everything ahead."

What they find most frustrating is that they have no facts about the situation and no control over it.

Mr. Rostenkowski, a Democrat from Chicago and the chairman of the House Ways and Means Committee, is probably the single most important lawmaker on economic and social policy issues. All legislation on taxes, Social Security, health care, welfare, unemployment compensation and most other items high on Mr. Clinton's agenda must originate in Mr. Rostenkowski's committee. A master-ly legislator and unwavering supporter of Mr. Clinton, he is also perhaps the President's strongest hand in Congress.

But for a year Mr. Rostenkowski has been under investigation by a grand jury led by Jay B. Stephens, the United States Attorney for the District of Columbia, a Republican who once worked in the Reagan White House and who seems to enjoy cases that put him in the limelight.

If Mr. Rostenkowski is indicted, he must step aside as committee chairman, and the consensus in the Administration and in Congress is that no one else is remotely his equal when it comes to managing a fractious committee and handling controversial legislation.

Representative Sam M. Gibbons

Clinton and the Rostenkowski Factor

would become acting chairman in Mr. Rostenkowski's absence. He is a Democrat from Florida in his 16th term who has specialized in trade issues and has never become heavily involved in matters like taxes and health policy.

The Rostenkowski case initially involved his office's purchase of an unusually large number of stamps from the House post office and the apparent suspicion by the authorities that this was part of a money-laundering scheme to convert campaign donations and office expenses into personal funds. Recently, the investigation seems to have been expanded into other financial areas. Subpoenas have been issued for virtually all of Mr. Rostenkowski's financial records, personal and political.

Mr. Rostenkowski, who is 65, says he has done nothing wrong, has no idea what the prosecutors are looking for and is the victim of a political witch hunt. He says his lawyers have been told that he is not a target of the investigation. Indeed, no solid evidence of illegal activity by Mr. Rostenkowski has become public.

His friends say they cannot imagine that he had his hand in the petty-cash drawer. He could have retired and not run for re-election last year and kept more than $1 million in leftover campaign funds, the last year it was legally possible for him to do so. If he were crooked, some supporters said, he could have found lobbyists in town who would have backed up a Brinks truck to his office and dropped off whatever loot he wanted.

But Mr. Stephens, who has said little about the case publicly, appears to have something, and he is pursuing it with an aggressiveness that seems to indicate that he thinks he can win an indictment. Time magazine reported last week, without saying where the information came from, that an indictment was expected this spring or summer.

If it happens, Mr. Clinton will lose the strong arm of perhaps Congress's most skillful manipulator of the legislative process. "Rostenkowski has an enormous talent for moving Congress in the direction he wants to take it," said a Senator who has dealt with him for years in House-Senate conferences to work out the differences in important legislation.

The situation is so ticklish that this Senator and the other officials and lawmakers interviewed would discuss it only on the condition that their names not appear in the article.

The main source of Mr. Rostenkowski's strength is the loyalty his fellow Democrats on the Ways and Means Committee feel toward him. Years of mastering the substance and politics of the tax code, of passing out political rewards and punishment, of carefully testing the waters so he knows where each member stands on every issue have left him in a position in which he almost never loses a vote in his committee.

"You may not like Danny," said a colleague who is sometimes at odds with him. "You may disagree with his politics. You may think he's a bully. But there's no denying he is a master at pulling together legislation."

With Mr. Rostenkowski as chairman, it is a safe bet that the House will approve Mr. Clinton's economic plan mostly the way the President proposed it. But if Mr. Rostenkowski is indicted, all bets are off.

Under the rules of House Democrats, committee chairmen who are indicted on felony charges must give up the chairmanship until the matter is settled, and the Democratic committee member with the most seniority automatically becomes acting chairman. That is Mr. Gibbons.

The current thinking is that if Mr. Rostenkowski is forced to step aside, Richard A. Gephardt of Missouri, a member of the Ways and Means Committee until he was elected majority leader in 1989, would move in and become the chairman in fact, though not in name.

But even Mr. Gephardt does not have Mr. Rostenkowski's ability to force his will on the committee. And no one knows whether Mr. Gibbons would willingly turn over authority to the Democratic leader or how the Rostenkowski loyalists on the committee staff would respond.

Frustrating Situation

What frustrates Administration officials most is that they do not have any feel for the prospects of an indictment. With no Attorney General, no one can go to the prosecutor and get a rundown.

Officials said that it would be improper for Mr. Clinton or others in his Administration to put pressure on Mr. Stephens or even to learn the facts of the case and that no one in the Administration would do so. But they said that as a practical matter an Attorney General might be able to get a general idea of the likelihood of an indictment.

"We need to know whether we have to have a Plan B," an official said.

House post office chief takes pride in reforms

By Paul M. Rodriguez
THE WASHINGTON TIMES

Since he took over the House post office last spring, Michael Shinay has worked diligently to upgrade and depoliticize the facility.

"I think I've succeeded," Mr Shinay said in an interview with The Washington Times. "This is a much better place, I hope."

"People have worked very hard, and I think it shows," the former senior executive with the U.S. Postal Service said, happily pointing out the changes he has instituted since taking over.

For starters, he has cut the staff from around 160 to about 145, eliminated much of the overtime budget his predecessor had built into the system and made better use of high-speed, high-tech mail handling equipment.

In all, Mr. Shinay said, he's helped save about $350,000 in operating costs, including reduced overtime, in the short time he's been postmaster.

"Don't give me any more money," he said, recalling a recent request to the House Appropriations legislative subcommittee. "That's what I told them. I want to use some of what we've saved to pay staff more and to upgrade some jobs....

"We mail out about 100 million pieces of mail each year," Mr. Shinay said during a tour of the underground processing center in the Rayburn House Office Building. "That's a lot of mail, but nothing that we can't do, and do better."

A House panel, formed last year to investigate the post office amid allegations of embezzlement and drug sales, concluded that the facility was grossly mismanaged.

The panel, which spent six months looking into the scandal, also concluded that the former postmaster, Robert V. Rota, had inflated the volume of mail received and sent out by millions of pieces to justify a bloated budget that paid for unqualified patronage employees.

Mr. Shinay said those days were over, noting that he has terminated 15 or so employees since taking the job.

He also said he has not been asked for favors from members of Congress, such as free mailings, and has not been pressured to hire or fire anyone.

"We have an evaluation system now to hiring employees," Mr. Shinay said, noting that all jobs are awarded on merit, not patronage.

Interviews with staff members offered a mixed bag of praise and complaints about the new management, but overall, employees said things were better.

"I don't feel like I'm just a piece of meat anymore," a clerk said. "If I've got a complaint, I don't have to be afraid anymore about losing my job."

Mr. Shinay said he encourages his workers to talk to him about complaints and to suggest how to make things work more efficiently. "My door's always open to them," he said, adding with a chuckle, "and they use it."

The postmaster said he has other changes in the works, like getting new equipment to process the mail. He said that will help double the $70,000 he plans to save this year through the bar-coding system he instituted.

Mr. Shinay said he also has instituted an internal audit system where each window teller who sells stamps and takes mail from walk-in customers is audited at least once every 90 days.

"We don't take trade-ins on stamps, either," he said, referring to his predecessor's practice of allowing members and staff to sell back stamps for cash. "We will exchange stamps for other stamps, but that's it. No cash."

Mr. Shinay also started a system to track vouchers used by members and their offices to buy stamps. Every one of them is now logged in and tracked by computer. "No excuses that way," he said, referring to the old system where vouchers and cash were left laying around in shoeboxes, sometimes for weeks.

He said that there is still an outstanding balance of about $24,000 from stamps and money stolen by clerks last year, but that the money is being paid off.

New allegations slow House postal probe

Investigation into drug sales includes lawmaker

By Paul M. Rodriguez
THE WASHINGTON TIMES

What started last year as a straightforward criminal probe of embezzlement and drug sales at the House post office has been bogged down by a variety of new allegations uncovered by prosecutors on and off Capitol Hill.

Despite the seemingly slow pace of U.S. Attorney Jay B. Stephens' probe, however, prosecutors are said to be confident that by spring they can hand up criminal indictments against several people, including Rep. Dan Rostenkowski, chairman of the powerful House Ways and Means Committee.

Complicating matters is the uncertain status of the chief prosecutor in the case, Mr. Stephens, a Republican appointee who could be removed from office any day and replaced by a Clinton administration nominee.

Current and former federal law enforcement, congressional and other sources who agreed to speak to The Washington Times on the condition of anonymity said the latest allegations involve everything from petty crimes to more serious violations of campaign finance laws to illegal drug sales by lobbyists, staff members and, in at least one case, a member of Congress.

"It's like a family tree," said one source. "You end up finding relatives you never knew you had."

In addition, The Times has been told that illegal drug activities, including sales of cocaine and PCP, continue at the House post office, despite the cleanup efforts initiated by the badly embarrassed House leadership last year.

Michael Shinay, the House postmaster, said he is unaware of these activities but acknowledged that he has not instituted a drug screening process for his employees despite the House post office's past problems in this area. When he has heard about an employee's involvement with drugs, Mr. Shinay said, he has referred the employee to an assistance program.

The postmaster has set up workshops with the House employee assistance program to conduct seminars about drug and alcohol abuse. "Yes, we have several people who are in the program," he said. "Some have gone on their own, and some we have sent."

Regarding the drug allegations, the U.S. Attorney's Office has been told that:

- Lobbyists have bought and sold tens of thousands of dollars of cocaine in the past few years while conducting business in the House and Senate. The illegal drug sales are said to involve people who work or have worked in congressional offices and suppliers affiliated with local street gangs.
- One or more members of Congress are suspected of illegal drug use, such as cocaine use at private parties both on and off Capitol grounds.
- Lobbyists and House employees have bought and sold cocaine at the Democratic Club and the Capitol Hill Club, locations where Democrats and Republicans, respectively, gather during lunch and dinner to discuss business and socialize.

Whether any of the new allegations leads to charges is up to Mr. Stephens' office and the federal grand jury investigating the House post office. Both are said to be overwhelmed with the amount of information being generated by the investigation.

Mr. Stephens has declined all requests for comment.

Prosecutors already have secured five guilty pleas from former low- to mid-level post office clerks and the conviction of the former post office chief of staff on charges ranging from drug peddling and use to embezzlement.

House Postmaster Robert V. Rota, who was forced to resign last March, is still under investigation for possible civil and criminal violations. An aide to then-Rep. Joe Kolter, Pennsylvania Democrat, has been indicted on charges of cocaine distribution, mail and wire fraud, and filing a false claim of an automobile theft.

Along with Mr. Kolter, two current senior House Democrats — Mr. Rostenkowski, of Illinois, and Austin Murphy of Pennsylvania — are under scrutiny by the grand jury, as are current and former staff aides to the members.

The high-profile position of Mr. Rostenkowski, chairman of the tax-writing Ways and Means Committee, has overshadowed much if not most of the media's attention since a House task force last summer released the results of an internal six-month probe into the post office scandal.

That task force, itself a first in Congress by nature of its bipartisan composition, concluded that the Democratic-controlled House patronage system was at the root of most of the post office's problems.

Besides patronage, the power of members to place family and friends in congressional positions, the task force found gross mismanagement at the postal facility and a pattern of abuse involving free mail worth hundreds of thousands of dollars arranged for certain powerful House members.

The post office, which operates in five locations on the House side of the Capitol, serves as an independent contractor for the U.S. Postal Service.

While the task force sent recommendations and the names of up to a dozen House members and staff to the House ethics committee for follow-up investigation, no activity on the referrals has occurred pending the outcome of the criminal probe by the U.S. Attorney's Office.

Sources told The Times that hundreds of people have been interviewed in the criminal investigaton about the new allegations. Prosecutors, the sources said, are tracking down all leads, but, said one, "You've got to remember, Stephens only has three prosecutors working on this."

Even when indictments are made public, "this thing is far from over. I expect they're in it for the long haul," another source said, adding that new allegations are being investigated almost daily.

"This isn't a Lawrence Walsh type of thing," one source said, referring to the $35-million-plus, six-year investigation by the Iran-Contra independent counsel.

"They don't have unlimited resources like Walsh had," the source said. "It's not like they don't have other cases to work on."

Involvement of the Washington Metropolitan Office of the Federal Bureau Of Investigation (FBI) in this matter was a result of a request for assistance by the United States Attorney (USA) for the District of Columbia in May of 1992. The USA's office, aided by the United States Postal Inspection Service (USPIS) and the United States Capitol Police (USCP), had been involved in an investigation into improprieties at the United States House of Representatives Post Office (HPO) since April of 1991.

The initial allegations under investigation by the USA centered around crimes committed by HPO Stamp Clerks and other HPO Staffers that included conspiracy, drug possession, embezzlement and other charges. As a result of this initial investigation six HPO employees have pleaded guilty to felony charges, one has been indicted and is currently awaiting trial, and one is expected to be indicted within the next 30 days. All of the individuals who have pleaded guilty have entered into cooperation agreements with the Government.

Specifically, involvement of the FBI was predicated upon corroborative information provided by one of the individuals who had entered into a cooperation agreement with the Government. This information corroborated previous information that at least three U.S. Congressmen and the former House Sergeant-at-Arms, b6 aided by [redacted], utilized the HPO b7C to obtain sums of cash through the illegal use of a voucher system that is available to Members of Congress. These Congressmen have been identified as Dan Rostenkowski, Joe Kolter and Austin Murphy. The former House Sergeant-at-Arms is Jack Russ.

Investigation conducted into this matter has developed information that these Representatives were also utilizing the HPO to obtain cash from their respective campaign funds. This was accomplished by the Representatives authorizing checks, which were written on campaign accounts for postage expenses, made payable to the Postmaster of the HPO. In reality, no postage expenses were incurred. These checks were then cashed at the HPO and the funds were provided to the Representatives. Additionally, investigation is being conducted regarding Rep. Rostenkowski's payments for District Office space in Chicago, his payments for campaign office space and the leasing of three automobiles which were intended for use by his District Office.

The USA has provided a favorable prosecutive opinion in this matter and aggressive investigation of this case is continuing.

For the information of receiving offices, Plate Block is the code name of the investigation involving the United States House of Representatives Post Office (HPO) and includes as the main subjects current Representatives Dan Rostenkowski (IL) and Austin Murphy (PA) and former Representative Joe Kolter (PA).

For the information of Dallas and Miami, this investigation involves the misuse of a voucher system that is available to Representatives to obtain certain goods and services. The subjects in this matter allegedly utilized these vouchers to obtain cash from the HPO by misstating that certain vouchers were for postage stamps for official mailing purposes. In reality, these vouchers were redeemed for cash at the HPO with the assistance of high level HPO staffers. b6 b7C b7D

Beginning in the early 1980's, [redacted] A copy of this list, which is dated 11/14/88, is enclosed with this communication. This list was obtained from the Special House Task Force which looked into possible wrong-doing at the HPO.

According to multiple witnesses that have been questioned about this list, [redacted] The United States Attorney for the District of Columbia (USA) has requested that the current [redacted] and former Speakers [redacted] Thomas "Tip" O'Neill Be interviewed to ascertain their knowledge of this list. The interview of [redacted] will be conducted by WMFO. Former Speaker O'Neill is currently residing in Bal Harbor, Florida, and [redacted] is known to maintain a business office in [redacted] b6 b7C b7D

Additionally, the USA has requested that [redacted] be interviewed regarding his recollection of a certain patronage appointment that was made at the HPO. The background regarding this appointment is as follows:

The HPO formerly had an employee named [redacted] (pronounced [redacted] from Texas who served at the HPO as [redacted]. [redacted] was a patronage employee of [redacted] and supposedly was a family friend of [redacted] Investigation conducted indicates that [redacted] for whatever reason, would not participate in this "stamps for cash" scheme. When [redacted] left this position to work for a House Subcommittee, [redacted] initially made the necessary arrangements to fill the job that he vacated. Not much is known about this replacement that [redacted] lined up to replace [redacted] other than he was also from the state of Texas and that he was confined to a wheelchair. b6 b7C

[redacted] replacement, however, ultimately turned out to be an individual named [redacted] Investigation has determined that [redacted] was a critical link in this stamps for cash scheme and it was he who actually obtained the cash from the HPO which was provided to [redacted] who, in turn, provided the cash to the subject Representatives in exchange for fraudulent vouchers. [redacted] b6 b7C b7D

Investigation has also determined that Rep. Rostenkowski and [redacted] both may have approached then Speaker [redacted] and asked him not to appoint the replacement that he had previously lined up to fill this position, but to promote [redacted] internally to this job. The motivation for Rostenkowski and [redacted] to do this and place [redacted] into this position would have been that he was willing to facilitate this scheme. As [redacted] did, in fact, receive this patronage position, which was [redacted] the USA requests that [redacted] be interviewed to obtain all possible detail regarding his recollection of the appointment of [redacted] to replace [redacted] b6 b7C

For the information of Dallas, the following information has been obtained regarding [redacted]

Broderick faces trial in 2 deaths

Actor Matthew Broderick goes on trial today in Northern Ireland on charges of causing two deaths by reckless driving in an Aug. 5 accident.

Matthew Broderick

Broderick, 25, starred in the box office hits "WarGames" and "Ferris Bueller's Day Off" and won a Tony award for his performance in the Broadway hit "Brighton Beach Memoirs."

Broderick was on vacation in Ireland with his girlfriend, actress Jennifer Gray, when the car he was driving collided with an oncoming vehicle on a country road about six miles outside Enniskillen, in the British province of Northern Ireland.

Anna Gallagher, 28, and her 60-year-old mother, Margaret Doherty, were killed in the collision and Broderick was hospitalized with a badly fractured leg. Gray was not injured.

Broderick spent a month recovering in a private ward in the Royal Victoria Hospital in Belfast and attended a preliminary hearing Sept. 7 in a makeshift court set up in the hospital. He was charged with causing death by reckless driving and was freed on about $4,100 bail.

If the court accepts a guilty plea to a lesser charge of reckless driving, Broderick might only be fined. If convicted of causing deaths by reckless driving, he could be sentenced to five years in prison.

Lines formed quickly for the after-noon sale. The tickets went only to those who had received wrist bands a week ago to keep them from camping out overnight after the dates were announced.

Worked on campaigns for Sen. Alan Dixon, Alex Seith, Jim Donnewald. Toiled in Dixon's press office here and in Washington. Ran Gary Hart's regional Midwest office until the Donna Rice debacle.

A GOOD CANDIDATE IS

"A man or woman who's willing to go the distance for what he or she believes in. There's not too much of that anymore, unfortunately."

DO CONSULTANTS KEEP COUNT?

BEST, WORST ADVICE RECEIVED

Best: "A politician once told me, 'Know everything you talk about but don't talk about everything you know.' " Worst: "Do it for the money."

PHILOSOPHY

"Casmir" - [redacted] was in the florist buisness - member Polish American Club became friends DAN was introduced to [redacted] at Wilshire aprox 74 or 1975. First car [redacted] to DAN was a Thunderbird (longer model). [redacted] could not recall if the '75 Thunderbird was the first or if he sold in the 74'.

b7C

[redacted] was not sure how long DAN had an open tab in the past for the purchase. DAN told [redacted] that checks were coming in monthly for the cars from U.S. government. (for sure re DAN '73)

[redacted] recalls Date Unknown DAN said he's leasing the cars from Wilshire but at the end of the year DAN would settle payoff what he owed or traded the car in for another car.

DAN insisted on saying that he was leasing his cars, DAN never changed his story.

That why [redacted] asked [redacted] about how Wilshire was getting paid, because DAN never actually leased the cars.

The reason the leasing company wasn't used, because it would have cost more money for DAN and would be more paper work, (supposedly)

b7C

Dan filled out purchase documents, no lease documents were ever filled out, DAN would come into Wilshire or call in his new order for a car.

[redacted] Never saw a subsidy check, but could recall that DAN or [redacted] told [redacted] that the U.S. government was making payments on DAN's VAN. - 1987 Ford Econoline

The accident on or about 7/23/84 was a car driven by DAN, rented not leased by DAN ~~[redacted]~~ for a four week period, for personal use, [redacted] # ~~[redacted]~~ went with. [redacted] on [redacted] upon inspection. [redacted] stated/verified that the rental agreement # for the accident was 0809, Customer name Rostenkowski for Carpenter Contr. signed by DAN.

b7C

DAN rented this car for the summer

b7C

- [redacted] did not know if RFCC paid or DAN. could not recall if DAN paid up front or after rental. but stated that the 84 must have been paid after the wreck because the rent on the ~~the~~ 300 deductable paid.

DAN rented ~~[redacted]~~ mustang convertables for around 4 mths at a time for four diff. occasions 1984

b3
b7C

2/21/87 [redacted] DAN's secretary, traded in a 1983 Mustang for a 1987 Ford Mustang. [redacted] her husband purchased funds from Wilshire. The 83 was sold to [redacted] for Wilshire. [redacted] always financed cars thru FMCC. [redacted] for [redacted] (low interest rate thru FMCC.) [redacted] paid ford NOT Wilshire for monthly payment.

At the time the deals were made DAN said he wanted to "lease" the cars, DAN said that the gov. was going to pay for the cars a monthly basis, the ~~lease~~ the amount paid was to determined by DAN. pay the car off - not a lease payment a lease payment would have been less, when the "lease was up" car returned, if it was paid for - DAN got it, if the car wasn't totally paid for, DAN would pay the diff.

The titles for the cars were put in DAN name, with Wilshire added as a lienholder, because DAN didn't outright pay for the car who he took the car.

Wilshire had its own leasing co., but we didn't use it - Don't know why

... DAN rented vehicles for other dealers - a Lincoln for (LIPIN) that [redacted] had seen [redacted] driving around and b6 b7C a large ~~van~~ camper like van. Rather than a van like a camper.

DAN got special treatment because he was a U.S. Congressman and that payments for the U.S. government would be coming in very soon.

[redacted] b6 b7C
never saw any payments for cars.

1987 Ford Econoline Van

- Da said he was going to use it for campaigning
2 phone installed - one in front & back

DAN currently has VAN. - DAN owns, gov. paid monthly

1988 - Same deal
Ford Escort. - when DAN wasn't in town his daughter used the car.

b6 b7C

1989 Ford Probe Same deal (Last car sold by [redacted]

Dear [redacted]:

As of March 31, 1983 I will no longer require the space that I have been leasing in the Kluczynski Building.

I would like to have the furnishings and the Karastan carpeting in that office moved to (and in the case of the carpeting, installed in) my district office. The address of my district office is 2148 North Damen Avenue; Chicago, Illinois 60647.

Please have a member of your staff contact my secretary, Nancy Panzke, at 312-276-6000 to make arrangements for this move.

Thanking you for your past and future cooperation, I remain

Sincerely yours,

Dan Rostenkowski
Member of Congress

78-80 at 230 S. Dearborn b6 b7C

DR. had a corner office and Morgan Murphy was between them.

Eleanor Georgadas was at DR's office all the time on a daily basis - did Immigration basically

~~His AA: Ed Pienczak~~ I think. [redacted] stated that EG use to help [redacted] w Immigration questions had.

(not sure how)

Fary AA. - would know who's D.R.'s AA was [redacted]

[redacted] stated that DR had a few employees at 230 S. Dearborn but could not remember who they were Never heard of [redacted] then realized that she was if not sure EP ever worked for DR.

[redacted] knows EP. but [redacted] doesn't know if E.P. worked for DR. b6 b7C

ACTORS ACADEMY OF CHICAGO is the Midwest's only non-affiliated conservatory for actor training. Its program of classes are taught by specialists in acting, voice and movement within a team-teaching format. On-stage work for the student, as is this evening's production, is an integral part of the Academy's curriculum.

PICK is the culmination of ten weeks' study and rehearsal by its creators and performers.

AUTHOR'S NOTE

Having been born and raised, and having spent a portion of my adult life in central Illinois, I have grown to wonder at the almost-stoic fear of the new, the different and the individual that is perpetuated throughout the region. Knowing it was not unique to Illinois, yet aware of my own roots, I began to investigate both its history and my own imagination. PICK is an attempt to explore that first period of growth when the first towns were built and the fear was first implanted.

DIRECTOR'S NOTE

I believe PICK represents a part in all of us that we wish to ignore, the core of what we have not truly come to understand: that we will continue repeating the tragic and senseless in life because we refuse to take responsibility for one another. We refuse to learn. We prefer our fear and our prejudice and our ignorance, growing only more numb as they continue rather than more aware. Also, I wish to express my heartfelt thanks to everyone who has worked so hard and learned so much [illegible] will be able to take it with you as you go.

[redacted] stated that she received a monthly rent payment from DAN for the Damen property, but [redacted] could not recall how much DAN paid. [redacted] added that DAN stopped paying rent when he moved his District office out of 2148 N. Damen. [redacted] also assumed that Alderman TERRY GABINSKI paid rent, but [redacted] indicated that she never saw or received a check or monies from GABINSKI.

[redacted] stated that MARCIA ROSTENKOWSKI (hereafter identified as MARCIA) was GABINSKI's secretary for approximately 14 years prior to her retirement in 1991. [redacted] stated that GABINSKI was an Alderman before MARCIA became his secretary, and at GABINSKI's request, MARCIA started working for him. [redacted] stated that neither her, nor MARCIA, ever worked in DAN's offices. b6 b7C

[redacted] was then asked if she knew [redacted] and [redacted] stated that [redacted] was a lawyer, but [redacted] could provide no details as to [redacted] activities. [redacted] was asked if she knew [redacted] and [redacted] advised that [redacted] was an acquaintance of hers. [redacted] was asked if [redacted] ever visited her, or had control over the NOBLE BUILDING ACCOUNT, and [redacted] responded by saying that [redacted] does not visit [redacted] and does not have control over the NOBLE BUILDING ACCOUNT. [redacted] added that the only time she speaks to [redacted] is when [redacted] wants to get in touch with DAN. b6 b7C

[redacted] was then asked if she had ever heard of the CONFIDENCE INSURANCE AGENCY, and [redacted] responded that she had never heard of the CONFIDENCE INSURANCE AGENCY.

[redacted] was asked about [redacted] b6 b7C b3 [redacted] stated that she knows of no work done [redacted] and doesn't recall [redacted] nor having them installed in the Noble building. [redacted] could not recall what the checks were for, and stated that she never questioned any of the bills that DAN gave her, she just paid them.

[redacted] has no knowledge of any carpet being installed on the first floor of 1347-49 N. Noble, and advised that she never saw any carpet trucks outside the building. [redacted] did state however that [redacted] MARCIA had EMPIRE CARPET install a new carpet in their apartment approximately four years ago. b6 b7C b6 b7C

[redacted] was then asked about a SONY Trinitron television set that was located in her living room. [redacted] stated that she ordered it from a small business, name unknown, located in Glenview, Illinois; and had it delivered approximately three to four years ago. [redacted] was asked if a satellite dish was installed on the roof of 3147-49 N. Noble, and [redacted] stated that she didn't know about a satellite dish, and didn't get any cable channels. [redacted] also stated that she never had a video cassette recorder (VCR).

[redacted] has never heard of the ROSTENKOWSKI PLAYLOT, located on Greenview and LeMoyne Streets in Chicago, but [redacted] did state that the City of Chicago dedicated a park to [redacted] JOSEPH ROSTENKOWSKI. b6 b7C

[redacted] started out as [redacted] with WMS, and a couple years later his job title changed to [redacted] remained the [redacted] of WMS until his retirement in approximately December 1988. b6 b7C

[redacted] was then asked how he had originally met ROSTENKOWSKI, and [redacted] indicated that [redacted] CASMIR introduced ROSTENKOWSKI to him. [redacted] stated that [redacted] met ROSTENKOWSKI through CASMIR's florist business, and the fact that CASMIR was a member of the POLISH AMERICAN CLUB. CASMIR, who is now deceased, became friends with Congressman DAN ROSTENKOWSKI, and ROSTENKOWSKI was introduced to [redacted] at WMS approximately 1974 or 1975. b6 b7C verified that the first car WMS sold to ROSTENKOWSKI was a long model Thunderbird. [redacted] remembered selling the 1975 Thunderbird to ROSTENKOWSKI, but could not recall if he had sold him the 1974. [redacted] also stated that he could not recall how ROSTENKOWSKI paid for the 1975 Thunderbird.

related to an accident on or about 7/23/84, involving a car driven by ROSTENKOWSKI and rented from WMS.

[redacted] b6 b7C b3

[redacted] stated that [redacted] was correct in that the car driven by ROSTENKOWSKI was used by ROSTENKOWSKI for his personal use, but added that [redacted] stated that the car driven by ROSTENKOWSKI was a rental car, [redacted] stated that ROSTENKOWSKI rented the car for a period of four months, and verified that the correct RA number was 0809, not [redacted] could not explain the error [redacted] but did state that the RA number meant nothing to WMS.

[redacted] also verified that ROSTENKOWSKI was the individual who signed the RA, and that the customer listed on the RA was the RFCC. [redacted] however, did not know who paid for the rental, and could not recall if the rental was paid in advance, or after the rental was returned to WMS. b6 b7C

[redacted] advised that ROSTENKOWSKI rented Mustang convertibles, usually four months at a time, on four different occasions. [redacted] was not sure how ROSTENKOWSKI paid for these rentals, and stated that he never saw any payments for any cars that ROSTENKOWSKI rented, paid for, or leased from WMS. [redacted] stated that he usually completed the paperwork for ROSTENKOWSKI, but was not involved in receiving payments from ROSTENKOWSKI.

[redacted] and [redacted] verified that ROSTENKOWSKI signed them. [redacted] could not recall any additional cars that ROSTENKOWSKI had rented from WMS, but [redacted] did state that ROSTENKOWSKI had rented vehicles from other car dealers. [redacted] stated that he remembered a Lincoln that ROSTENKOWSKI b6 b7C b3 had rented from another dealer, and that LAVERNE ROSTENKOWSKI drove. [redacted] also recalled seeing LAVERNE ROSTENKOWSKI driving around a large camper-like vehicle. b6 b7C b3

The interviewing Agents then asked [redacted] questions regarding DAN ROSTENKOWSKI's auto transactions with WMS. Prior to answering any questions however, [redacted] When [redacted] was asked if the transactions were purchases or leases, [redacted] responded by saying that ROSTENKOWSKI leased the vehicles. [redacted] also stated that ROSTENKOWSKI wouldn't have excepted the vehicles unless they were leases.

[redacted] was then asked if ROSTENKOWSKI ever filled out a lease agreement, and [redacted] stated that neither ROSTENKOWSKI nor WMS ever completed any lease documents or agreements. b6 b7C [redacted] also stated that WMS had its own leasing company, and ROSTENKOWSKI didn't finance the cars through WMS's leasing company. [redacted] could not explain why lease agreements were not executed, and did not know why WMS did not use it's own leasing company for the transactions. [redacted] stated that he believed the leasing company wasn't used, because it would have cost ROSTENKOWSKI more money, and would have created more paperwork.

[redacted] stated that, at the time the deals were made, ROSTENKOWSKI insisted on saying that he was leasing his cars, and never changed his story. [redacted] advised that when ROSTENKOWSKI wanted a new car, he (ROSTENKOWSKI) would either call in his order, or would go to WMS directly. [redacted] also stated that ROSTENKOWSKI said that the federal government was going to pay for the cars on a monthly basis. [redacted] indicated that the monthly payments were determined by [redacted] of WMS, and were calculated so that the car would be paid off when the "lease was up" or the car was returned. [redacted] stated that when ROSTENKOWSKI returned the cars, if the cars were paid for, ROSTENKOWSKI got them or traded them in for a new car; but if the cars were not totally paid for, ROSTENKOWSKI paid the difference. b6 b7C

[redacted] advised that ROSTENKOWSKI got special treatment from WMS, because he was a U.S. Congressman, and WMS trusted that the government would pay for the vehicles. [redacted] stated that ROSTENKOWSKI had an open tab with WMS, but [redacted] b6 b7C did not know how long ROSTENKOWSKI had that arrangement. [redacted] stated that ROSTENKOWSKI had the titles for the cars put in ROSTENKOWSKI's name, but believed that WMS was added on as a lienholder, because ROSTENKOWSKI hadn't paid for the cars when he took them.

[redacted] advised that [redacted] was ROSTENKOWSKI's secretary, and purchased both the 1983 and 1987 Mustangs from WMS. [redacted] indicated that [redacted] and her husband always financed their cars through FORD MOTOR CREDIT COMPANY (FMCC), because of the low finance rates. [redacted] added that [redacted] made monthly payments to FMCC, not WMS, and the [redacted].

[redacted] stated that ROSTENKOWSKI owns the van, and ROSTENKOWSKI told [redacted] that he was going to use the van for campaigning. [redacted] also recalled two phones being installed in the van, one placed in the back, and the other in the front of the van. [redacted] also verified that additional conversions were made to the van by CROWN CUSTOM COACH, and the additional costs were included in the sale price of the van. [redacted] stated that the federal government paid for the van, by making monthly payments. The interviewing Agents then asked [redacted] how he could have known that the government was making monthly payments on the van, when he had previously advised that he had never seen any of the monthly checks. [redacted] responded by saying that [redacted] told him about the government payments.

b7C
b3

[redacted] stated that ROSTENKOWSKI owns the

1988 Ford Escort, but when ROSTENKOWSKI isn't in Chicago, [redacted] had seen ROSTENKOWSKI's daughters using the car.

[redacted] stated that the last car he sold to ROSTENKOWSKI was a 1989 Ford Probe, [redacted] advised that ROSTENKOWSKI came into WMS with [redacted] and bought the Probe for her. b6 b7C b3

The interviewing Agents then asked [redacted] if he had any information on a 1989 Ford Aerostar, or 1991 Ford Taurus that ROSTENKOWSKI had purchased from WMS after [redacted] retired. [redacted] responded by saying that he had no information on a Taurus, but had heard from [redacted] that ROSTENKOWSKI was using an Aerostar for campaigning. b6 b7C

In Making His Case to Stay, Stephens Cites Rostenkowski Probe

By Michael York
and Michael Isikoff
Washington Post Staff Writers

U.S. Attorney Jay B. Stephens yesterday made the investigation of House Ways and Means Committee Chairman Dan Rostenkowski (D-Ill.) Exhibit A in his case for staying on as the District's chief federal prosecutor. Being forced to leave now, Stephens said, would disrupt the sensitive probe of the powerful Democratic congressman.

Attorney General Janet Reno asked Tuesday for the resignations of all the nation's U.S. attorneys. From appearances on network television shows yesterday morning to late-afternoon interviews with reporters, Stephens repeated his theme that he was close to deciding whether to seek indictments in the Rostenkowski case and that changing U.S. attorneys now would mean a needless delay.

"There [would be] no leadership in the U.S. attorney's office, and there is a void at the Department of Justice," Stephens said, referring to several vacancies in high-level Justice posts. "Effectively, the decision [on a possible indictment] can be delayed for months."

Stephens was appointed by President Reagan, and Rostenkowski is considered a key figure in guiding President Clinton's economic package through the House. But White House and Justice Department officials said yesterday that the request for Stephens's resignation was not politically motivated and would not affect the handling of the investigation.

Sources familiar with the investigation said prosecutors have been gathering evidence that more than $100,000 was diverted from Rostenkowski's campaign and office funds since 1988.

Assistants in Stephens's office have been told to produce detailed memos on how a possible case against Rostenkowski could be structured and how it could be proved, the sources said. Such memos would become the basis for a decision by supervisors in Stephens's office on whether to draft an indictment, the sources said.

Those sources emphasized yesterday that no decision has been made on whether to seek an indictment against Rostenkowski or whether there is enough evidence to ensure a conviction.

Rostenkowski has vigorously maintained that he has not violated the law, and in an interview published last week in the Chicago Tribune, he sounded a beleaguered theme. "They [federal investigators] have done a clean sweep on me. I may wind up very well charged with not having any licenses for my dogs," he said.

Stephens said he was asked to submit his resignation immediately and that it would be accepted when a temporary successor is named. He said he was told by the Justice Department that Reno would name a successor within 10 days, but a Justice spokesman has said there is no such deadline. The spokesman said each office will be filled on a case-by-case basis.

Stephens called Reno's request for across-the-board resignations "unprecedented," and he said the decision "essentially eliminates leadership in federal law enforcement across the country."

In past transitions, Justice Department officials said yesterday, most U.S. attorneys have been replaced gradually, as their successors were chosen by the incoming president and attorney general.

But the officials said that in recent memory, each administration has made it clear that it expected to quickly name its own team of chief federal prosecutors in the nation's 93 districts and its various territories.

In the eastern district of Virginia, U.S. Attorney Richard Cullen rejected an offer from Democratic Gov. L. Douglas Wilder to go to bat for him with the Clinton administration and said he plans to vacate his office Monday. Cullen worked closely with Wilder on a handgun-limit bill that Wilder signed into law Tuesday.

"As much as I appreciate the governor's interest—he's a good friend—it would be inappropriate," Cullen said. "The president has made it clear he wants to name his own team. That's the way the system works. I'm a Republican."

Cullen is considering a run next year for the U.S. Senate seat held by Democratic Sen. Charles S. Robb. Iran-contra figure Oliver L. North also is interested in the Republican nomination.

Rostenkowski has been the subject of a grand jury investigation for more than a year. The probe began, sources said, with allegations that Rostenkowski improperly exchanged office stamp vouchers for cash at the House Post Office. The investigation broadened to include more than $55,000 in postage purchases by both Rostenkowski's House office and his campaign treasury. Ultimately, sources said, agents from the FBI and the IRS have conducted a net-worth investigation of his finances and have subpoenaed virtually every personal record of income and expenses for the past decade.

Sources said yesterday that the decision to ask for the immediate resignation of the U.S. attorneys was prompted by pressure on White House aides from U.S. senators anxious to nominate their own candidates.

Those sources noted that the long delay in appointing an attorney general also delayed the appointment of Democratic job seekers to Justice Department posts. That led to pressure to open U.S. attorney slots for them, the sources said.

For months, U.S. attorneys had been receiving verbal assurances from the department that there would be an "orderly" transition in which they would be permitted to remain until their successors had been named, the sources said.

When Reno asked for the resignations Tuesday, "it came as a real shock," said one U.S. attorney who asked not to be identified.

One source said the Justice Department expects "to cut deals" with some prosecutors that could extend their stay for months.

Clinton Defends Ousting U.S. Attorneys

GOP Steps Up Criticism of Attorney General's 'March Massacre'

By Dan Balz
Washington Post Staff Writer

President Clinton yesterday attempted to rebut Republican criticism of the administration's decision to seek resignations from all U.S. attorneys, saying what he was asking was routine and less political than piecemeal replacements.

"All those people are routinely replaced and I have not done anything differently," Clinton told reporters during a photo opportunity in the Oval Office. He called the decision more politically appropriate "than picking people out one by one."

But Republicans in Congress pressed their criticism of the decision, announced Tuesday by Attorney General Janet Reno, with Senate Minority Leader Robert J. Dole (R-Kan.) describing the decision as "Reno's March Massacre."

Rep. Richard K. Armey (R-Tex.) urged the administration to allow Jay B. Stephens, the U.S. attorney for the District of Columbia, to stay on the job until he completes his investigation of the House Post Office scandal and the role House Ways and Means Committee Chairman Dan Rostenkowski (D-Ill.) may have played in it.

Stephens said Tuesday he was about a month away from "a critical decision with regard to resolution" of the probe.

> "All those people are routinely replaced and I have not done anything differently."
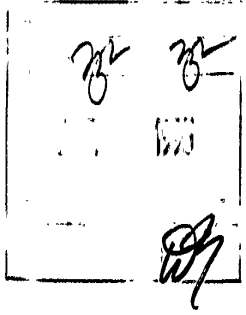
> —President Clinton

Armey, in a statement, said, "Removing Jay Stephens from his post before his job is done would reek of politics, undermining the public's confidence in the Justice Department."



Asked whether Stephens should be allowed to stay on, Clinton said, "I support the attorney general. She made the decision about what the best way to handle this was . . . and I support her decision."

Presidential spokesman George Stephanopoulos said it was not unusual for a president to ask for such resignations, although Republicans said presidents in the past have not asked for mass resignations, replacing them over a period of time as replacements were found.

Stephanopoulos said only those U.S. attorneys who are in the middle of trials will be allowed to continue working and said an interim appointee could capably pick up Stephens's investigation of the House Post Office scandal, with no serious disruption or political interference.

Dole said that with most top Justice Department jobs still vacant, the decision to sack the prosecutors means "justice will suffer." Dole accused Clinton of politics and "yes, impatience" in supporting Reno's decision and said the delays in naming replacements "will force much of the department's important work to come to a screeching halt."

Jay Stephens Strikes Out

THE INNUENDO in which U.S. Attorney Jay Stephens has indulged in the past few days can only be calculated to undermine the integrity and reputation of the prosecutorial process he claims it is his goal to protect. Attorney General Janet Reno announced at a news conference Tuesday that all U.S. attorneys across the country were being asked for their resignations. No surprise there. These are political appointees who owed their jobs to the last administration and have expected to be replaced ever since last November's election. It would likely have happened earlier had the Clinton administration not made such an adventure out of the appointment of an attorney general.

Most of Mr. Stephens's fellows took the announcement with good grace. Richard Cullen of the eastern district of Virginia even declined an offer by Democratic Gov. L. Douglas Wilder to intercede on his behalf, that he might keep his job. "It would be inappropriate," said Mr. Cullen. "The president has made it clear that he wants to name his own team. That's the way the system works. I'm a Republican."

But Mr. Stephens has conveyed the idea that he is different from and more important than his colleagues because his office has been conducting the lengthy investigation of House Ways and Means Committee Chairman Dan Rostenkowski and some lesser other investigations arising out of what has come to be known as the House post office scandal. The suggestion is that were Mr. Stephens to go, there would be "no leadership in the U.S. attorney's office, and there is a void at the Department of Justice," such that "effectively, the decision" to proceed or not in Mr. Rostenkowski's case "can be delayed for months." As if it hadn't been already.

Mr. Stephens is not indispensable. Does he really want people to think that he has been such a poor manager that his office could not survive his departure? Or is the implication supposed to be that Democrats cannot be trusted to proceed with the investigation he has been taking forever to conclude? We have no idea whether what Mr. Rostenkowski has or has not done warrants prosecution or not—he says emphatically not—but surely someone other than Mr. Stephens is capable of making that decision. And surely it is not fair to assume that his successor will be some kind of political hack who would quash an investigation that was getting the goods on the Chicago Democrat. Mr. Stephens himself hasn't indicted Mr. Rostenkowski. Will it now be his position, if his successor doesn't do so either, that the absence of the indictment that he no more than the successor was able to secure was political?

A graceful and constructive prosecutor might have expressed regret at the interruption of his work but confidence that his staff and successor would pursue it in the tradition and with the integrity that made him proud to have served in the Department of Justice. Mr. Stephens doesn't hold with that tradition. His reaction has been neither graceful nor constructive.

The apparent breakdown in the negotiations came after an intensification of Serbian attacks on government-held enclaves in eastern Bosnia and the country's capital, Sarajevo. There was a lull in the shelling of Sarajevo on Tuesday.

The focus of the talks has been a plan drawn up by Owen and the UN-appointed negotiator, Cyrus Vance, that would divide Bosnia-Herzegovina into 10 autonomous provinces, reducing Serbian lands from the 70 percent they now hold to 43 percent.

In addition to the blame placed on Karadzic, Owen attributed much of the responsibility for the deadlock to Bosnian President Alija Izetbegovic, who has boycotted the proposed negotiating session this week and resisted the mediators' appeal to endorse the Vance-Owen plan.

The mediators' strategy had been to get Izetbegovic's support for the plan and then muster international pressure on Karadzic to follow suit. But mediators never got the chance to do so.

It was unclear Tuesday night whether Izetbegovic would accept the boundaries of the Vance-Owen plan later this week, thereby opening the possibility of the talks resuming.

While Croatians have accepted the peace plan in its entirety, the Serbs and Muslims are refusing to sign the map the mediators have drawn up setting out the actual provincial boundaries in a new Bosnia.

On Tuesday, Russia finally agreed to support a new UN Security Council resolution authorizing NATO warplanes to shoot down aircraft violating the council's ban on flying over Bosnia.

The accord, worked out in Washington between visiting Russian Foreign Minister Andrei Kozyrev and U.S. Secretary of State Warren Christopher, provides for the resolution to be voted on as early as Wednesday. But it will not take effect for seven days, and actual enforcement of the no-flight zone will start only after a further seven-day grace period.

In Sarajevo, UN officials Tuesday said that French and British helicopters would fly wounded out of besieged Srebrenica beginning Wednesday, testing a promise of safe passage from Karadzic.

Gen. Philippe Morillon, commander of UN peacekeeping forces in Bosnia, has based his headquarters in Srebrenica for nearly two weeks, vowing to save 60,000 people trapped in the town by Serbian militiamen.

Karadzic's promises of allowing humanitarian missions to help the town have not always been honored by the militias.

Rostenkowski probe decision due in month

By Michael Tackett
Chicago Tribune

WASHINGTON—U.S. Atty. Jay Stephens said Tuesday that a decision to "resolve" the criminal investigation of Rep. Dan Rostenkowski (D-Ill.) and the House Post Office scandal would come within 30 days.

Stephens' announcement came on the day President Clinton called for the resignation of him and all other U.S. attorneys, a standard practice for an incoming president of a different political party.

Stephens said he had informed the Justice Department of his 30-day timetable on the investigation of Rostenkowski and the House scandal.

"It is a very active investigation, we have made substantial progress, this investigation is ongoing," Stephens said at a news conference called just hours after Atty. Gen. Janet Reno announced the requests for the resignations.

Stephens, a Republican holdover, was never expected to be kept on, but because he was focusing his criminal probe on a prominent Democrat linked so closely the success of Clinton's economic plan, any move regarding his status was politically charged.

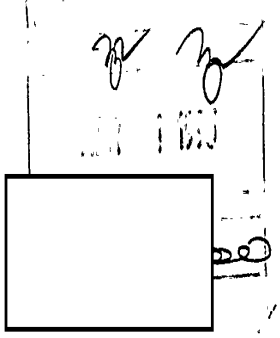
He is expected to leave office within 10 days, when the Clinton administration names an interim replacement. He urged the Justice Department to allow the investigation to proceed under the staff prosecutors assigned to the case.

"The investigation is being conducted by experienced, career prosecutors under my leadership," Stephens said. "I would expect those prosecutors to be permitted to carry this investigation to its logical conclusion . . . without political interference."

Rostenkowski has accused Stephens of conducting a political witchhunt.

The House Post Office case revolves around allegations that members of Congress exchanged stamps for cash from their congressional office and campaign expense accounts.

Prosecutors also have subpoenaed scores of Rostenkowski's documents and called more than 20 of his current and former staff members before the grand jury exploring his financial transactions in addition to his unusually large purchases of stamps.



Fred Foreman, U.S. attorney for the Chicago area, already has announced his resignation. Sens. Paul Simon and Carol Moseley-Braun of Illinois said Tuesday they have established commissions to help recommend candidates for U.S. attorney positions and vacant federal judgeships in the state.

Reno, speaking at her first news conference since her confirmation as attorney general, also said she would push for legislation to provide women with greater protection and ensure access to abortion clinics. Bills to do that have been introduced in the House and Senate.

Rosty Investigator May Leave Soon

He Says 10-Day Limit Given, But Justice Official Denies It

By Michael Briggs and Basil Talbott
Sun-Times Washington Bureau

WASHINGTON—U.S. Attorney Jay B. Stephens said he was told Tuesday that he will be replaced within 10 days, even though he has almost wrapped up the investigation of Rep. Dan Rostenkowski (D-Ill.).

Attorney General Janet Reno, who called for the resignations of all holdover U.S. attorneys appointed by Republican presidents, said Stephens "is not being singled out in any way." A spokeswoman for Reno said Stephens, who was appointed by President Ronald Reagan, had not been given a deadline to leave.

Stephens did not back off his assertion that he was told that he would be fired by a week from Friday.

Some Republican members of Congress quickly raised objections to Reno's call for resignations.

Rep. George W. Gekas (R-Pa.), a former prosecutor who is on the House Judiciary Committee, called the action "the Tuesday afternoon massacre," and Republican Whip Newt Gingrich (Ga.) said he would call for hearings into the matter.

"It looks very political," Sen. Don Nickles (R-Okla.), chairman of the Senate Republican Policy Committee, said of Reno's removal of all 93 U.S. attorneys. "It catches many cases in midstream. It's not only political, it's not wise."

New presidents customarily replace U.S. attorneys, especially when political control of the White House changes hands, but it has taken previous presidents more than a year to fill the posts.

At a press conference Tuesday afternoon, Reno said there was "no linkage whatsoever" between her call for holdover prosecutors to resign and the investigation of Rostenkowski.

Reno said she was "not familiar with the Rostenkowski case."

Stephens' investigation, which began last spring as a case involving questionable postage stamp purchases at the House post office, has widened to include Rostenkowski's congressional, campaign and personal finances. A number of Rostenkowski's aides have appeared under subpoena before the grand jury convened by Stephens, but the Chicago Democrat himself has declined to testify, citing his Fifth Amendment rights. He has denied wrongdoing.

Reno set no timetable for replacing any of the federal prosecutors.

Stephens said at a press conference after Reno's that he was told by a senior Justice Department official that he would be replaced within 10 days by an interim prosecutor who will run the largest U.S. attorney's office until President Clinton nominates and the Senate confirms a successor.

He said the short notice came after he informed the Justice Department that he "expected to make a critical decision to resolve this investigation within 30 days." Stephens would not be more precise, but a source said the imminent "critical decision" was whether to ask a grand jury to indict Rostenkowski.

Stephens asserted that "substantial progress" had been made in the "very active investigation" of Rostenkowski and he expressed hope that career prosecutors on his staff who have conducted the Rostenkowski inquiry will be allowed to finish it.

Rostenkowski was said to be in Chicago and a spokesman at his Washington office had no reaction to the announcements by Reno or Stephens.

Caroline Aronovitz, the attorney general's spokeswoman, disputed Stephens' assertion that he was given 10 days to clean out his desk. "That's not the case at all. He was not given any sense of a time line. All we said was that we would do it as quickly as possible," Aronovitz said. She accused Stephens of "making a big to-do," but she said, "he doesn't know more than anyone else about what's going to happen in the future and he wouldn't have any idea of the timing."

Reno had said that some holdover prosecutors would be asked to stay on to complete investigations. Clinton will consult with Democratic senators and fill the posts in "an orderly way that does not impact on any pending investigations," Reno said.

Rostenkowski has accused Stephens of engaging in "a political witch-hunt" after the grand jury last May subpoenaed congressional office expense records from him and two Pennsylvania congressmen as part of its post office embezzlement inquiry. The FBI, the Internal Revenue Service and other law enforcement agencies also have scrutinized Rostenkowski's personal finances.

Associated Press

At a press conference Tuesday, U.S. Attorney Jay B. Stephens discusses the investigation of Rep. Dan Rostenkowski.

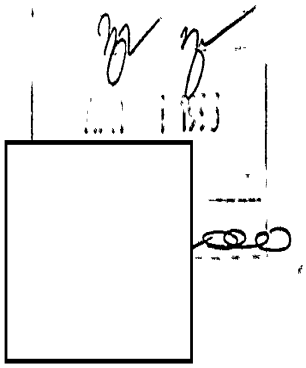
Original Probe Has Been Expanded

By Mark Brown
Staff Writer

The investigation of a fairly mundane drug scandal at the House Post Office took a twist May 6 when a federal grand jury subpoenaed the records of Rep. Dan Rostenkowski (D-Ill.) and two other congressmen.

Later reports in the Washington Post and Congressional Quarterly magazine revealed that a House Post Office supervisor had told investigators he helped Rostenkowski and others get thousands of dollars in cash through phony transactions disguised as stamp purchases.

Since those revelations, the federal investigation has embarked on a more wide-ranging scrutiny of Rostenkowski's finances, including follow-up investigation of reports in the Chicago Sun-Times.



Despite complaints from Rostenkowski and supporters about news media leaks from the grand jury, little is known about U.S. Attorney Jay B. Stephens' investigation.

After the Sun-Times reported Dec. 13 that Rostenkowski had paid more than $73,000 in campaign funds to himself and his sisters for a little-used office, the grand jury began investigating the lease arrangement.

The grand jury issued subpoenas relating to a Jan. 24 Sun-Times report that the congressman took personal ownership of three vehicles for which he had charged taxpayers at least $68,250.

There have been suggestions that prosecutors are pursuing obstruction of justice charges because of a lack of cooperation from Rostenkowski and his staff. Witnesses before the grand jury reportedly have been asked about who is paying their legal bills. Rostenkowski's campaign fund has provided lawyers for staffers called to testify.

City School Summit Deserves a Big Class

Chicagoans, tune in.

School reform in Chicago and dire issues confronting the city's public schools will be the focus of a daylong television special this Saturday, beginning at 11 a.m.

The live event, to be broadcast by WTTW-Channel 11 and WBBM-AM radio, will bring together a host of important players. They include School Board members, principals, teachers, local school council members, Mayor Daley and Gov. Edgar.

They're certain to discuss overwhelming problems with city schools. The Board of Education is confronting a budget deficit of about $383 million; negotiations with the Chicago Teachers Union and 22 other unions are pending; state aid for education is shrinking on a proportional basis; a search for a new general superintendent is under way, and proposals to revise portions of the 1988 School Reform Act are on the table in Springfield.

Yet, every crisis presents opportunities for rebirth. We hope Saturday's program serves as a catalyst for parents, students and taxpayers across the city to commit themselves anew to revitalizing our schools. Chicago public schools ought to be the vehicle for the ordinary and not-so-ordinary children of this city to achieve their highest aspirations, and to fulfill their parents' noblest dreams. Let's make the tough choices, and make it happen.

As students in Berwyn and Cicero demonstrated last week when they walked out of school and pushed their school board to change, democracy works when ordinary people take ownership of their institutions and become engaged in making them work.

Thanks go to the Chicago Community Trust, the John D. and Catherine T. MacArthur Foundation, the Joyce Foundation, the Wieboldt Foundation and the Spencer Foundation for funding the program. WTTW is donating its studio, equipment and staff, and Roosevelt University's Institute for Metropolitan Affairs is coordinating the event.

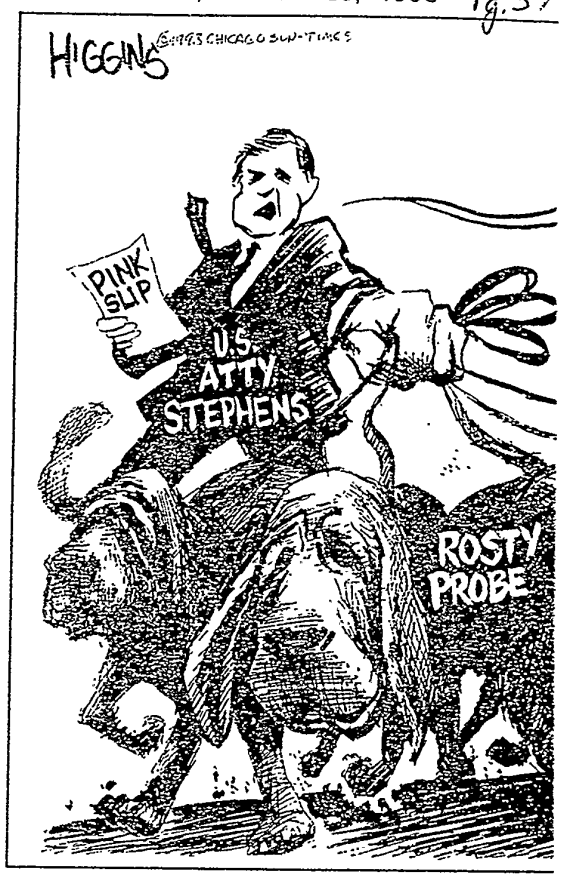
This is the sort of public debate that's crucial for the future of our schools and of our city. Tune in and listen up.

Don't Mess With Rosty Probe

It's not unusual for a new attorney general to want to fill all U.S. attorney positions with his or, in Janet Reno's case, her own choices. These are political jobs, after all.

However, Reno's call for resignations of all holdover U.S. attorneys shouldn't alter the investigation of Rep. Dan Rostenkowski (D-Ill.), as both the clout-heavy congressman and his reputation sway in the wind.

Since last May, when a grand jury subpoenaed the congressional office expense records of Rostenkowski and two Pennsylvania congressmen, the case has expanded to include Rostenkowski's congressional, campaign and personal finances.



Both Rostenkowski and the public deserve to have the investigation concluded free of political manipulation, with or without U.S. Attorney Jay B. Stephens in charge. How that happens is up to Reno to decide.

But Reno should remember: Justice must be served.

New Park Program a Big Hit

For thousands of working parents, the end of school each day brings concern about keeping their children supervised until they get home. They'll get some relief through a pilot program of the Chicago Park District and a consortium of 56 North Side community groups.

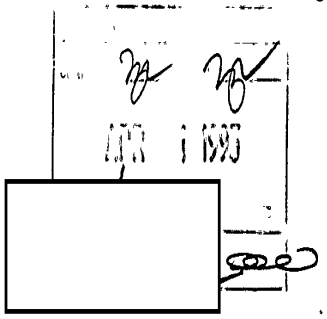
Starting April 5, "Parks Are for Kids" will go into full swing,

Are Faster Trucl

It's springtime in Springfield, which means that a load of new trucking legislation has arrived that would allow the big trucks that are driven in the state to be even longer, wider, heavier and faster.

While most of the bills are technical, dealing with such things as axle weights and the use of portable scales by law enforcement officials to measure truck weights, the one that ought to draw the most public interest is House Bill 451, which would allow trucks to drive as fast as motorists on some highways.

Denni Byrne



Actually, the bill, sponsored by Representatives Larry W. Hicks (D-Mount Vernon) and Charles A. Hartke (D-Teutopolis), is more broad-minded; it also would raise speed limits for buses, campers, vehicles towing vehicles, and the like. In a nutshell, where the speed limit for cars now is 65 m.p.h., as on rural interstate highways, the speed limit for trucks and the other vehicles would be raised from the current 55 m.p.h. to 65 m.p.h.

I'd guess that most people's instinctive reaction would be like mine—we don't need any trucks driving faster than they do now. But don't count this bill out. A similar bill passed the House in 1987 and was only narrowly defeated in the Senate.

Here are the pros and the cons:

The Illinois Transportation Association, backing the bill on behalf of its hundreds of trucking company members, says studies show that what kills is

Rosty Investigator Rips Resignation Call

By Michael Briggs
Sun-Times Washington Bureau

WASHINGTON—U.S. Attorney Jay B. Stephens said Wednesday the Clinton administration's decision to replace him may drag out his nearly completed investigation of Rep. Dan Rostenkowski (D-Ill.) "for months and months" in a way that could have a "significant impact" on the case.

A White House spokeswoman said Stephens and others had concluded wrongly that Attorney General Janet Reno's call for the resignations of all of the nation's federal prosecutors—who were appointed by previous presidents—means they must clean out their desks within 10 days.

"That is not true," press secretary Dee Dee Myers said. "That was the impression that some of the U.S. attorneys may have unfortunately taken away, but that was not what [Reno] intended to convey."

Rostenkowski, meanwhile, kept quiet about developments in the investigation by Stephens that has dogged the Chicago congressman since last May. Rostenkowski's congressional, campaign and personal finances have been under scrutiny since Stephens opened his inquiry into possible embezzlement at the House Post Office.

Under House rules, Rostenkowski would have to give up his chairmanship of the Ways and Means Committee if he were indicted. His chairmanship is considered crucial to the fate of President Clinton's economic package, most of which must pass through the committee before it can be considered by the House.

In television interviews, Stephens insinuated that politics was a factor in what he portrayed as a decision to take him off the Rostenkowski case. "The issue will be whether or not the ultimate decision in this case is somehow unnecessarily impacted by political considerations," he said.

Stephens also voiced concern that the investigation would be jeopardized by the appointment of an interim U.S. attorney until the Senate confirms his successor. So far, he said, Reno is the only Senate-approved Clinton appointee in the Justice Department.

"If there is no one in place to make a decision at the United States attorney's office, if there is no presidentially confirmed United States attorney, if there is no one in place at the Justice Department . . . the result of that may well be that there is no decision made in this case for months and months and months. And that alone could have a significant impact on an investigation such as this," Stephens said.

Stephens previously said he had informed the Justice Department that he was within 30 days of making a "critical decision" about the Rostenkowski investigation.

Stephens assailed what he called an "unprecedented" decision by the administration to call for the immediate resignations of all 93 federal prosecutors. Such a wholesale turnover "can have unnecessarily destabilizing impact on the continuity of law enforcement operations," Stephens said.

Prosecutors normally are replaced when political control of the White House changes hands, but in the past the process has been gradual.

The White House press secretary said Stephens and other prosecutors misconstrued how soon their resignations would be accepted. "Some will be leaving more quickly than others, and in the interim will be replaced mostly with career attorneys, professionals," Myers said.

However, Stephens was not alone among prosecutors who reported being told they would be gone soon. "What I was told was probably the longest I would be here is a week," said J. William Roberts, the U.S. attorney based in Springfield, Ill. "As best I can discern, we're all gone by the end of next week.

"There is some real shock on the part of a number of very able U.S. attorneys."

Rostenkowski probe decision due in month

By Michael Tackett
Chicago Tribune

WASHINGTON—U.S. Atty. Jay Stephens said Tuesday that a decision to "resolve" the criminal investigation of Rep. Dan Rostenkowski (D-Ill.) and the House Post Office scandal would come within 30 days.

Stephens' announcement came on the day President Clinton called for the resignation of him and all other U.S. attorneys, a standard practice for an incoming president of a different political party.

Stephens said he had informed the Justice Department of his 30-day timetable on the investigation of Rostenkowski and the House scandal.

"It is a very active investigation, we have made substantial progress, this investigation is ongoing," Stephens said at a news conference called just hours after Atty. Gen. Janet Reno announced the requests for the resignations.

Stephens, a Republican holdover, was never expected to be kept on, but because he was focusing his criminal probe on a prominent Democrat linked so closely the success of Clinton's economic plan, any move regarding his status was politically charged.

He is expected to leave office within 10 days, when the Clinton administration names an interim replacement. He urged the Justice Department to allow the investigation to proceed under the staff prosecutors assigned to the case.

"The investigation is being conducted by experienced, career prosecutors under my leadership," Stephens said. "I would expect those prosecutors to be permitted to carry this investigation to its logical conclusion . . . without political interference."

Rostenkowski has accused Stephens of conducting a political witchhunt.

The House Post Office case revolves around allegations that members of Congress exchanged stamps for cash from their congressional office and campaign expense accounts.

Prosecutors also have subpoenaed scores of Rostenkowski's documents and called more than 20 of his current and former staff members before the grand jury exploring his financial transactions in addition to his unusually large purchases of stamps.

Fred Foreman, U.S. attorney for the Chicago area, already has announced his resignation. Sens. Paul Simon and Carol Moseley-Braun of Illinois said Tuesday they have established commissions to help recommend candidates for U.S. attorney positions and vacant federal judgeships in the state.

Reno, speaking at her first news conference since her confirmation as attorney general, also said she would push for legislation to provide women with greater protection and ensure access to abortion clinics. Bills to do that have been introduced in the House and Senate.

Original Probe Has Been Expanded

The investigation of a fairly mundane drug scandal at the House Post Office took a twist May 6 when a federal grand jury subpoenaed the records of Rep. Dan Rostenkowski (D-Ill.) and two other congressmen.

Later reports in the Washington Post and Congressional Quarterly magazine revealed that a House Post Office supervisor had told investigators he helped Rostenkowski and others get thousands of dollars in cash through phony transactions disguised as stamp purchases.

Since those revelations, the federal investigation has embarked on a more wide-ranging scrutiny of Rostenkowski's finances, including follow-up investigation of reports in the Chicago Sun-Times.

Despite complaints from Rostenkowski and supporters about news media leaks from the grand jury, little is known about U.S. Attorney Jay B. Stephens' investigation.

After the Sun-Times reported Dec. 13 that Rostenkowski had paid more than $73,000 in campaign funds to himself and his sisters for a little-used office, the grand jury began investigating the lease arrangement.

The grand jury issued subpoenas relating to a Jan. 24 Sun-Times report that the congressman took personal ownership of three vehicles for which he had charged taxpayers at least $68,250.

There have been suggestions that prosecutors are pursuing obstruction of justice charges because of a lack of cooperation from Rostenkowski and his staff. Witnesses before the grand jury reportedly have been asked about who is paying their legal bills. Rostenkowski's campaign fund has provided lawyers for staffers called to testify.

Probe Unlikely to Be Dropped, Experts Say

By Adrienne Drell
Staff Writer

It's almost impossible to dump a hot U.S. Justice Department investigation even after a change in command or political party, legal scholars and former top prosecutors say.

But veteran department staffers acknowledge that long transitions between U.S. attorneys can delay decisions or the resolution of important cases.

Concern this week that a federal grand jury investigation of Rep. Dan Rostenkowski (D-Ill.) could be dropped is ill-founded, says Georgetown University Law Center Professor William Greenhalgh.

Concern arose after new Attorney General Janet Reno called for the resignations of all U.S. attorneys. Most U.S. attorneys voluntarily resign when a new president takes office.

Greenhalgh said return of an indictment "depends on whether a case itself is strong or weak. For the most part, the turnover in the top job does not affect the day-to-day operations of a prosecutor's office."

Gregory Jones, who was a federal prosecutor for 13 years and twice served as acting U.S. attorney here, noted that "major investigations take years to complete and often cross different administrations.

"But in my experience I have noticed no impact on an investigation because of a change of politics," said Jones, who joined the prosecutor's office in 1972 under Republican appointee James R. Thompson and left to go into private practice in 1985 shortly after serving as acting boss between outgoing U.S. Attorney Dan K. Webb and successor Anton Valukas. Both were Republicans.

Jones also headed up the office on an interim basis in 1977 before Webb took over from Democrat Tom Sullivan. Investigations into welfare fraud, judicial corruption and the Roman Catholic Archdiocese of Chicago began under Sullivan and continued unabated with Webb.

"Tom Sullivan spent considerable time educating me," Webb said.

Webb's office eventually returned indictments in the welfare fraud cases and in the Operation Greylord court scandal case. Webb said the church investigation was dropped a few months after he took office because John Cardinal Cody had died.

The controversy over the Rostenkowski inquiry mirrors the national furor in 1978 when former U.S. Rep. Joshua Eilberg, a Democrat under investigation for conflict of interest, called for the ouster of Republican U.S. Attorney David Marston in Philadelphia.

Democratic President Jimmy Carter replaced Marston with Peter Vaira, a former chief of the U.S. Justice Department's Organized Crime Strike Force in Philadelphia and Chicago, who picked up the Eilberg investigation.

"I came in and energized the case, brought it to fruition and convicted the guy," said Vaira, now in private practice in Philadelphia.

"You can't dump a case. You would have to get rid of the career prosecutors on the job, and they won't stand for it. If you [a U.S. attorney] come in and kill an investigation, you'd better be ready to stand behind it and explain it."

Former Hill Aide Pleads Guilty in House Post Office Scandal

Associated Press

A onetime top aide to former representative Joe Kolter (D-Pa.) pleaded guilty yesterday to reduced charges of obstructing justice and distributing cocaine in the House Post Office scandal.

Prosecutors agreed in a plea bargain to dismiss 19 other charges against Gerald W. Weaver II later, in exchange for Weaver's promise to testify before a grand jury and in future trials about "the embezzlement of government funds, misappropriation of stamps and misuse of campaign funds."

For nearly two years, the panel has been investigating allegations that the House Post Office was used illegally to convert congressional expense vouchers into campaign funds or cash through transactions disguised as stamp purchases.

Last May, the grand jury subpoenaed expense vouchers dating from 1986 to April 1992 for Kolter and Reps. Dan Rostenkowski (D-Ill.) and Austin J. Murphy (D-Pa.). The three have refused to testify and have denied any wrongdoing while accusing prosecutors of conducting a political witch hunt. None of the lawmakers has been indicted.

U.S. Attorney Jay B. Stephens, who says he will leave office on Friday, told reporters last week that he expected a "critical decision" within a month on whether his office would seek more indictments.

Weaver, 37, pleaded guilty to one count of obstructing justice, one count of distributing cocaine and one count of conspiring to distribute cocaine. He could be sentenced to up to 45 years in prison and fined as much as $2.25 million at his sentencing June 28.

Under the plea agreement, Weaver admitted cashing $2,800 in personal checks at the House Post Office while working as a private lobbyist after leaving Kolter's staff. Under the guise of buying stamps, he used the money to instead purchase cocaine from Wendell Magruder, then an employee of the facility.

Clinton Reciprocates Perot's Criticism

President Questions Why Texan Has Not Endorsed Economic Plan

By Ann Devroy
Washington Post Staff Writer

ANNAPOLIS, April 1—President Clinton yesterday rebuked Ross Perot for recent criticisms and questioned why Perot had not endorsed his economic plan when "it's almost identical to the one he ran on."

The comments came when the president was questioned at the American Society of Newspaper Editors gathering here about statements Perot made to the same group on Wednesday. The questioner said Perot had criticized Attorney General Janet Reno's call for the resignation of the nation's politically appointed U.S. attorneys, particularly when District of Columbia U.S. Attorney Jay B. Stephens was in the midst of a politically sensitive investigation. Perot also had repeated a story about a military officer who said someone at the White House told him to leave quickly because she was uncomfortable with uniformed military personnel.

Clinton said the military story "like all those military stories . . . is an abject lie." Stories about discomfort by him or his staff with the military are "all made up out of whole cloth," he said, "and people who run them or people who talk about them from podiums ought to be ashamed of themselves without knowing they're true." (Army Lt. Gen. Barry R. McCaffery has said that a White House aide, during the first week of the Clinton administration, said she did not speak to members of the military.)

Clinton also said that Perot had attacked White House Chief of Staff Thomas F. "Mack" McLarty in congressional testimony as "not being a real business person" and then had to call to apologize. "I mean people can say anything from a podium," he said.

Clinton said he was "more interested" in "why my economic program, which is 85 percent what Ross Perot recommended in the campaign . . . hasn't been endorsed since it is almost identical to the one he ran on."

Clinton strongly defended his move to replace the currently Republican-appointed U.S. attorneys with his own choices.

The president argued replacement of Stephens had nothing to do with the grand jury investigation of House Ways and Means Committee Chairman Dan Rostenkowski (D-Ill.). "To say that some people were singled out is absurd," he said. "The real flip side is some of the people in the other party are saying why didn't we leave him [Stephens] in there all by himself because this is the most important case in America and no one else can pursue it. I just dispute that."

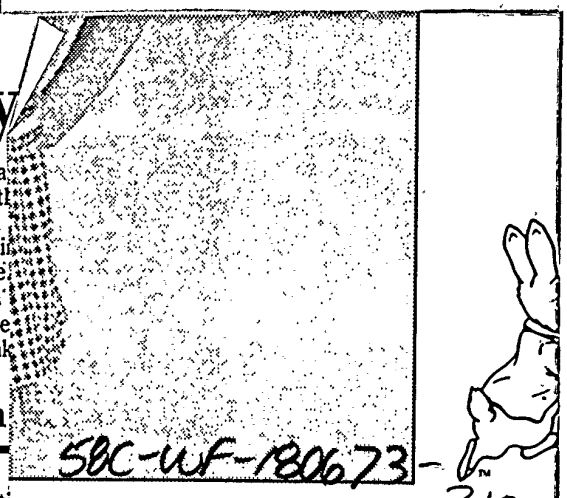
U.S. Attorneys: A Disorderly



The Post's March 26 editorial flagrantly misrepresents my public statements regarding the unprecedented decision by the White House to eliminate immediately all presidentially appointed U.S. attorneys. In the rush to deflect the impression conveyed by the White House that it was injecting political considerations into the prosecutive decision-making process, the editorial reflected contempt for the facts and disregard for the historical record.

First, the facts. I repeatedly have acknowledged the prerogative of the president to appoint whom he chooses as U.S. attorney. Indeed, within hours of the attorney general's announcement conveying the White House demand for resignations, I publicly announced my intention to submit my resignation and my commitment to a smooth transition of the operations and management of this office. In response to a question regarding our ongoing corruption probe involving the U.S. House of Representatives Post Office and Rep. Dan Rostenkowski and the timing of the resignation demand, I noted that the Department of Justice was aware that we had expected to make a critical decision regarding the resolution of this investigation within 30 days when I was specifically advised that my resignation would be accepted within 10 days. Further, I expressed confidence in the experienced, career prosecutors conducting this investigation under my leadership a sized that, in the long tradition of t ment of Justice, I hoped they would ted to complete this investigation i manner without political interference

The uniform insult at the White House

ANNAPOLIS

Bill Clinton had a perfectly good opportunity to polish his skills as the commander in chief yesterday, and he blew it.

He came to the Naval Academy on a balmy early spring day to speak to the nation's newspaper editors, and the storied campus, steeped in heroic military lore and seagoing tradition, was alive with Navy officers eager to help. Any one of them would have happily given the president much-needed tutoring in the art of returning a salute.

Mr. Clinton, who was after all the commander of the Arkansas National Guard (one of the nation's most decorated militias) for 12 years, instead complained of abuse at the hands of the nation's newspaper editors — editors who, like angels before the throne of Zion, compete to be the first to fall prostrate at the feet of the king.

Mr. Clinton, who had just completed a very nice speech about why the United States should help Russia, stepped up manfully to do what he hates most, to answer questions from people who are neither children nor television emcees.

He got the usual softballs thrown from editors, who nearly always ask the kind of questions that would get a reporter thrown off any self-respecting press bus.

"You in this country have taken some hits, some heavy hits, in the campaign and as president from a critical, probative, intrusive, at times abusive press," said an editor from Tennessee, no doubt pushed by his missus to coax an invitation to dinner at the White House. "I wonder if you could give us your feelings, perhaps words of philosophy, as to how you view the press' freedom, given its critical and at times abusive nature?"

Mr. Clinton waxed philosophic for a few minutes, so philosophic that even the transcriber went to sleep, until he was interrupted by an editor from Kansas who demanded to know whether the president would condemn mass rape and child abuse in Bosnia. The president, trying hard not to go to sleep himself, said yes, he would. He did, too.

Dan Rostenkowski

Next up was the only woman who got in a question, and she promptly did the work of all the men there: "Ross Perot spoke to us yesterday, and he said as he travels around the country, he finds his supporters asking him about and are upset about two recent events in Washington. . . . One is the dismissal of Jay Stephens as district attorney [in Washington] as he was pursuing the Dan Rostenkowski case . . . and the other was the story about the general who was supposedly told at the White House that he should leave quickly because the White House staff was not comfortable with uniformed military personnel. Could you comment on both of those?"

The president's jaw tightened, as it always does when he sees a flash of khaki, and his eyes narrowed. But Mr. Clinton is never at a loss for lots of words, and his explanation was slick: Jay Stephens was not "dismissed," he was only "replaced," and besides, Ronald Reagan did the same thing when he succeeded Jimmy Carter. The Carter district attorney did not have an investigation pending against the congressman that Ronald Reagan was counting on to get his tax cuts through the House of Representatives, Mr. Clinton neglected to say, since that renders the comparison entirely specious.

And not only that, the story about White House contempt of the military uniform was an "abject lie" and the editors and reporters should be ashamed of themselves, trying to make Bill Clinton look bad. ". . . people at the Pentagon . . . have been disputing some of these specific stories, like the lieutenant general that was allegedly told by someone in my — on the White House staff — that she didn't speak to people in the military. Those kind of stories, they're all just made up out of whole cloth."

Well, not quite. The lieutenant general, Barry R. McCaffrey, a combat veteran of the war Mr. Clinton dodged, confirmed last night that he was in fact snubbed by a female White House staffer who answered his polite "Good morning" with the calculated insult that the Kids R Us in the White House imagine is so cute: "I don't talk to the military."

Rostenkowski probe haunts Clinton plans

By Michael Tackett
and Ray Gibson
Chicago Tribune

WASHINGTON—Does U.S. Atty. Jay Stephens, after more than a year of examining dozens of witnesses and hundreds of pages of records, have the evidence to indict Rep. Dan Rostenkowski?

Stephens took a low-level drug case involving workers at the House Post Office and expanded it to a major inquiry that includes possible charges of fraud, theft and tax violations.

In the last few weeks, the case has taken on even greater significance because President Clinton is counting heavily on the veteran Illinois Democrat to steer his economic plan through the House Ways and Means Committee.

How important is Rostenkowski to Clinton? "Very important. Very important. Very important," said the normally reserved Budget Director Leon Panetta. Pausing for effect, he added: "Very important."

Rostenkowski is important because he maintains tight control over his tax-writing committee. As much as any committee chairman, Panetta said, Rostenkowski can deliver his members.

If indicted, Rostenkowski would be required by House Democrat rules to step down from his committee chairmanship until the matter is resolved. The Chicago congressman has conceded that the investigation has been a constant distraction, and colleagues on the committee say the inquiry weighs heavily on him.

Under normal circumstances, Clinton would be likely to replace Stephens, a Republican, rather quickly. But any decision the president makes will be read in a larger political context.

Jimmy Carter was sharply criticized in his first year for dismissing David Marston, a Republican U.S. attorney in Pennsylvania, after taking a phone call from a Democratic congressman whom Marston was investigating. Like Stephens, Marston had been accused by many Democrats of conducting politically motivated prosecutions.

During her confirmation hearings, Atty. Gen. Janet Reno was asked if she would attempt to find out the status of the Rostenkowski investigation for the White House. Reno insisted she would not.

But Reno or one of her senior deputies would be likely to take a role in approving an indictment, according to lawyers familiar with Justice Department procedures on such sensitive cases.

Although several details of the investigation have been reported, Stephens has said little about the case since Rostenkowski's lawyers accused him in court of leaking information to the media in violation of grand jury secrecy rules, a contention rejected by a federal judge.

The investigation has been unusually lengthy for what at first appeared to be a straightforward case. But it concentrates on one of the most subtle and difficult subjects for prosecutors to pin down: Whether public money was converted to personal use.

Financial records cases can be painstakingly slow, and even those critical of Stephens concede he would not rush to bring charges against such a high-profile figure.

Rostenkowski is responsible for some of the delay because he has fielded a large legal team for himself and many of the 20 current and former aides subpoenaed by the grand jury.

This much is known. Prosecutors have information that stamps from the House Post Office were exchanged for cash. What is not publicly known is where the money went. To charge Rostenkowski with a criminal offense, the money must be traced to his own pocket.

Prosecutors have requested records from the 32nd Ward organization in Chicago, Rostenkowski's congressional campaign committee, his congressional office account and other documents linked to his personal finances. They have called some two dozen of Rostenkowski's current and former aides before the grand jury.

Some lawyers who have detailed knowledge of the case believe Stephens will seek an indictment. To them the issue is simply when.

At the same time, doubters abound. "It sounds like a fairly slim reed they have been on," said one well-known defense lawyer.

For every argument made about the case, there is a counterargument and each is plausible. But Rostenkowski finds his chairmanship and his national stature marred by the investigation.

"They have done a clean sweep on me," Rostenkowski, 65, said in a recent interview. "I may wind up very well charged with not having any licenses for my dogs."

Asked if he denies any wrongdoing, Rostenkowski answered firmly: "Yes, that's what I have been saying all the time."

The investigation flows from allegations that Rostenkowski may have enriched himself by obtaining cash from the House Post Office under the guise of buying stamps.

From 1986 to 1992, Rostenkowski's office purchased more than $68,000 in stamps, often in unusually large amounts considering that members of Congress can send their official mail with the so-called franking privilege.

In 1991 Rostenkowski's franked

mail cost taxpayers $167,000.

Rostenkowski said his office did not keep track of the volume of his mailings and has no lists or receipts to account for the large stamp expenditures. But he said that his committee generates an exceptional volume of mail because it has jurisdiction over issues such as taxes and Social Security.

Former postal employees have told investigators that stamp vouchers were exchanged for cash. So far, however, no evidence tracing where the money went has become public.

Rostenkowski said none of his personal financial records have been subpoenaed, but acknowledges that prosecutors could get them from financial institutions or the Internal Revenue Service without his knowledge.

Despite his consistent claims that members of Congress are underpaid, Rostenkowski, who has outlasted eight presidents and survived 18 elections, has assets worth at least $2.2 million.

Such wealth is possible given his congressional salary, which now is $133,600. But it would require frugal spending for his family of six, making near the maximum in allowable outside income for speeches when that was permitted and an exceptional return on investments.

Rostenkowski also draws political money, from five funds from the federal to the ward level. He maintains a state political action committee with the same name as his federal political action committee that corporations have used to circumvent federal contribution limits. Federal election law prohibits the use of a state fund to directly affect a federal election.

The grand jury reportedly is also looking into alleged improprieties in the way Rostenkowski handled lease payments on cars and office space in his Northwest Side district, but the congressman has said the payments didn't involve anything improper.

METRO

Is There Life After Rostenkowski?

His Fifth District seat isn't even empty, much less cold, but Rosty wannabes are dreaming dreams.

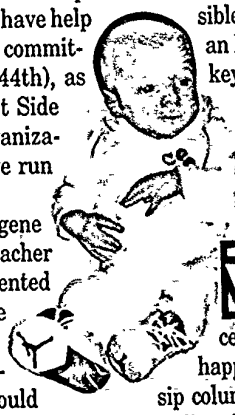
Daniel Rostenkowski so far has survived his tangle with the Washington, D.C., grand jury that's been probing his financial dealings. But all the negative publicity has had an effect on the veteran Democratic leader. At least half a dozen big-name pols from Rosty's Fifth Congressional District have begun a death watch of sorts, anticipating that the congressional seat he's held since 1959 soon might be open.

Among those currently talking to political backers, scheduling fundraisers, or otherwise displaying active interest in the Fifth District seat:

• State senator John Cullerton (D-6th), a 44-year-old lawyer from Chicago's Lake View neighborhood who already is using his many media contacts to spread word of his possible race. Cullerton says he'd "never" run against Rostenkowski, but quickly adds that the Fifth District would be "very interesting" in the event Rostenkowski quits in midterm or decides not to run for re-election next year. Cullerton has scheduled a fundraiser for April 26th that could launch a bid for either Congress or Cook County Board president. Cullerton likely would have help from lakefront Democratic committeeman Bernard Hansen (44th), as well as from the Northwest Side 38th Ward Democratic organizations that his relatives have run most of this century.

• Chicago alderman Eugene Schulter (47th), a former teacher who since 1975 has represented the Lake View area in the City Council. Schulter, too, will be holding a fundraiser, in May—and says he would be "interested" if Rostenkowski were out of the picture. Schulter, 45, argues that his City Hall work has given him "an edge" on such issues as economic development and tax policy. It also may help him with some City Hall insiders.

• Former Chicago alderman Dick Simpson (44th), an associate professor of political science at the University of Illinois at Chicago. Simpson, 52, is an unabashed populist reformer who got 42 percent of the vote against Rostenkowski in the 1992 primary. For now, Simpson stops just short of declaring his candidacy, but makes it clear his dream is to be the only Rostenkowski foe in the 1994 primary. "He's lost so much credibility, I could beat him in a one-on-one race," Simpson says.



• Former state representative Gary Marinaro (D-Melrose Park), the Proviso Township Democratic committeeman. Marinaro, who heads family-counseling services for the Cook County Circuit Court, has begun quietly discussing a possible race with other party chiefs. As an Italian American, he comes from a key ethnic group, but his background in Proviso Township politics may not play well elsewhere in the district. Marinaro, 50, says Rostenkowski "needs more contact" with constituents—and adds that, "with the proper backing and support, [he] probably would be interested in running" against Rostenkowski.

• Freshman state representative Rod Blagojevich (D-33rd), a lawyer from the Logan Square area. Blagojevich, 36, is the son-in-law of Democratic committeeman Richard Mell (33rd). He'd like to get a little more government experience under his belt before seeking higher office, but says he'd "be interested in taking a look" if Rostenkowski were out of the picture—and leaves the door open a crack even if Rostenkowski runs again.

• County commissioner Maria Pappas, a lawyer now in her first term on the Cook County Board. Pappas, 41, says it's "possible" she will run for either Congress or County Board president next year. Pappas would have to move into the district—she now lives in an apartment just to the east, in the Streeterville area—but confirms political gossip that she is looking for a house to buy.

Among other rumored candidates—though they all insist they're not now interested—are clerk of the circuit court Aurelia Pucinski (the daughter of former Northwest Side congressman Roman Pucinski), Chicago alderman Bill Banks (36th), and the alderman of Rostenkowski's own 32nd Ward, Terry Gabinski.

Of course, much of this maneuvering presumes that Rostenkowski will either be indicted and convicted, or decide to give up the political hassle and retire. Aides to the powerful Ways and Means Committee chairman dismiss both possibilities. "The boss may be a bit down now," says one. "But, six months from now, he's going to be having so much fun passing things for Bill Clinton that he'll get caught up and stay." ~

Media Darling

Who's really got clout with Chicago media? When PR exec Christine LaPaille recently gave birth to her second son, the happy event was a triple hit in local gossip columns, rating a mention from both the Sun-Times's Michael Sneed and Irv Kupcinet, plus a full paragraph in the Tribune's "Inc." The tot's name—Samuel Clinton LaPaille—was a catchy hook, given the recent prominence of another young fellow named Clinton. But it also may have helped that both mother Christine and father Gary, a state senator and state Democratic Party chairman, are among the better news sources in town.

Eat your hearts out, Di and Liz. ~

No Politics in Rosty Probe, Says Prosecutor

By Michael Briggs
Washington Bureau / Chicago Sun-Times

WASHINGTON—U.S. Attorney Jay B. Stephens said politics will not affect a "very active investigation" of Rep. Dan Rostenkowski (D-Ill.), the Ways and Means Committee chairman whose finances are under the scrutiny of the IRS and the FBI.

A Republican holdover, the federal prosecutor said the investigation of one of the most powerful Democrats on Capitol Hill "is being conducted by career prosecutors in this office."

Stephens added, "I would expect we would be permitted to pursue the investigation to its logical conclusion."

He pointed to testimony by Janet Reno last week to the Senate Judiciary Committee before her nomination to be attorney general was approved.

"At her confirmation hearing, the attorney general assured the Senate that there would be no political interference with this or any other investigation," Stephens said.

Reno told Sen. Charles E. Grassley (R-Iowa) at the hearing that she would not discuss the likelihood of a Rostenkowski indictment with anyone at the White House. "I keep politics out of what I do," Reno said.

Under normal Justice Department procedures, the attorney general would be alerted to a federal prosecutor's plans to ask a grand jury for an indictment of a prominent public official. Theoretically the attorney general could block an indictment.

There would be political risks for the Clinton administration, however, if the White House or Justice Department were perceived to have interfered with the investigation of a powerful Capitol Hill ally.

Although Stephens' term as U.S. Attorney expired last November, he remains in charge until a successor is chosen by the Clinton administration, a common practice in past transitions of power.

The last time political control of the White House switched hands in 1981, it took 18 months to replace the Democratic District of Columbia prosecutor. Four years earlier, it took about as long to replace a Republican holdover.

Stephens' associates consider it unlikely he'll stay for as long as another year, but they know of no imminent plans for him to step down. Stephens said, "I will continue to provide leadership for this office until such time as a successor is confirmed by the Senate."

Rostenkowski sympathizers recently have faulted Stephens for what they contend is an unfairly protracted investigation.

Roll Call, the Capitol Hill newspaper, editorialized Feb. 4 that Stephens should "make public any concrete evidence of wrongdoing and end the process of forcing one of the most talented men in Congress to dangle slowly in the wind."

The point has been echoed in newspaper columns, including one carried in the Sun-Times by Otis G. Pike, a former Democratic congressman from New York who served with Rostenkowski on the Ways and Means Committee.

Since the probe of the House Post Office was launched in 1991, six former employees have been convicted of embezzlement and drug charges.

The investigation expanded May 6, when a grand jury subpoenaed congressional office expense records of Rostenkowski and two Pennsylvania congressmen. The probe apparently sought to determine if government vouchers or campaign checks were converted into cash through bogus transactions disguised as stamp purchases.

Investigators in the Rostenkowski case also are looking into matters unrelated to the House Post Office. The grand jury as recently as March 8 subpoenaed from the House records of Rostenkowski vehicle leases, according to a report last Friday in The Washington Times.

The Sun-Times previously reported that Rostenkowski took ownership of three vehicles that were leased with taxpayer funds.

The prosecutorial loose cannon aimed at Rostenkowski

WASHINGTON—Though all of the evidence is not in, and though the prudent observer will refrain from assuming guilt until guilt is proven, after almost a year of intensive investigation into the doings of Rep. Dan Rostenkowski, it becomes increasingly apparent that an unscrupulous politician whose ambition is out of control holds a pivotal position in the U.S. government.

There is no doubt that the chairman of the House Ways and Means Committee, Rostenkowski's title since 1981, holds a pivotal position in the government. At this point, though, the chairman is not the one whose misdeeds are obvious. Jay Stephens is.

Stephens is the U.S. attorney for Washington, who

since last spring has been looking into whether Rostenkowski may have diverted some government postage stamp vouchers into cash for his own use.

On the face of it, the investigation was not without merit. There was some prodigious corruption going on in the House Post Office, and Rostenkowski's office used many more of the vouchers than did the typical representative.

But as crimes go, this one, if it is one, is not very complicated. If funds were in fact shifted about, they were not diverted through banks in far-off Araby, nor were they stashed in numbered accounts in some licentious Carribbean fiefdom. After all these months, a minimally competent investigation should have come up with enough evidence to charge someone were anyone chargeable.

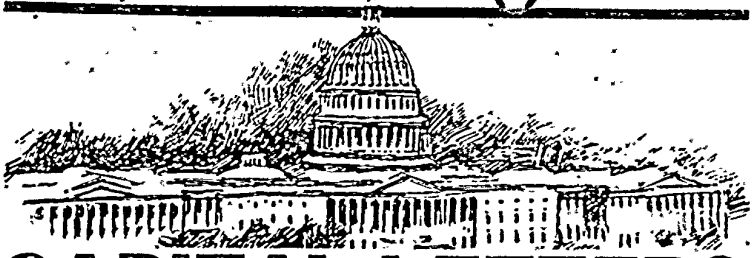
Because no one has been charged, the reasonable citizen could reasonably conclude that no crime has been committed. But hold, said Stephens, just as quite a number of reasonable citizens were so concluding, there is more to this than postage stamps. The investigation, he (or "sources close" to him) said a few weeks ago, was "broadening," and investigators were seeking access to Rostenkowski's tax returns and bank accounts. So far as is known, at least, Stephens has not subpoenaed Rostenkowski's neighborhood videocassette shop to see what the congressman's favorite movies are.

At this point, the reasonable citizen could reasonably conclude that this guy is indictment-shopping, scrounging around for something, anything, that might constitute a crime. If Rostenkowski didn't steal stamps, why maybe he cheated on his taxes, or wrote a bad check or printed money in the basement.

It is possible that Stephens is not running a minimally competent investigation. He is, after all, most famous for his less-than-competent 1990 prosecution of Marion Barry, then Washington's mayor. Barry was convicted of only the most minor of the several charges Stephens brought against him after hiring one of the mayor's ex-girlfriends to lure him to a hotel room, there to offer him crack cocaine in view of a hidden video camera.

The tape, as it turned out, was less incriminating than exculpatory because it showed that Barry first

The tape, as it turned out, was less incriminating than exculpatory because it showed that Barry first declined the drug, accepting some only after repeated invitations.



It is hard to arouse much sympathy for Barry, because he is an odious fellow. Still, he is a citizen, and less odious than the prosecutor who used sex as entrapment bait. There may be a few healthy males between the ages of 8 and 86 who can resist the suggestion to accompany a comely ex-lover to a private spot. But not many. And weakness of character is not a crime.

Not that Stephens is without talent. Then and now he displayed a real knack for self-promotion and self-aggrandizement, mostly by judicious use of selective disclosures to selected journalists. Well, to people who write for newspapers.

Among history's more amusing judicial decisions was the one last month dismissing Rostenkowski's claim that prosecutors have been leaking details of the current grand jury investigation. It is only necessary to be on friendly terms with a few newspersons here to conclude beyond a reasonable doubt that Rostenkowski's claim was absolutely correct. Compared to Stephens, a collander holds water.

Happily unindicted in a separate matter, Sen. Charles Robb (D-Va.) noted that a prosecutor can usually get a grand jury to "indict a ham sandwich." Yes, and on the basis of chicken salad, too. A prosecutor with lots of energy and no scruples to speak of can probe and subpoena and leak his own version of information about Robb or Rostenkowski, or you or me, forcing anyone to spend thousands of dollars on lawyers, suffer a damaged reputation and fear for the future. Such men are dangerous.

If Rostenkowski wanted money, he had both proper and improper alternatives to get far more than he would have by filching some stamp vouchers. That's no proof of his innocence. But no one should have to prove his innocence. And if Rostenkowski turns out to be the biggest crook in American history, he would still not be nearly as great a threat to liberty and decency as Jay Stephens already has proven himself to be.

Can Rep. Dan Rostenkowski breathe easier about a federal grand jury investigation now that fellow Democrat Janet Reno is the attorney general? During her Senate confirmation hearings, Reno was asked if she would tell the White House if she found out the Chicago congressman was about to be indicted. "No," she said. "I keep politics out of what I do." Sen. Charles Grassley (R-Iowa) told Reno that he was curious because of the pivotal role that Rostenkowski, the House Ways and Means Committee chairman, will play in shepherding President Clinton's economic package through Congress—unless Rosty is indicted and forced to give up his chairmanship. "We need to know whether we have to have a Plan B in regard to getting the president's tax bills through the House Ways and Means Committee," Grassley said.

It's clear the Clinton administration is banking on Rostenkowski remaining at the committee helm. White House budget chief Leon Panetta was asked after testifying before Rosty's committee how important the chairman was to the success of Clinton's agenda. "Verrrrrry," Panetta said with emphasis. Mayor Daley voiced the same sentiment on his last lobbying trip here. "He's my right arm and my left arm," the mayor said of Rostenkowski.

Lobbyists aren't the bogeymen they have been made out to be, according to The Hollow Core, a book by two Northwestern University professors. "Washington is full of interest groups of every conceivable stripe who lobby for many different positions, and as a result politicians have a lot of room for choice on most issues," said law Professor John P. Heinz. "All the rhetoric about special interest groups is a way for politicians to avoid responsibility."

Sen. Carol Moseley-Braun talked about some of her special interests with the president at a private meeting in the Oval Office. The half-hour session was winding up when she blurted out one last question: "Is it OK to kiss the president?" Clinton wasn't fazed. "YOU can," he told her. Did she take him up on the offer? "I sure did," she said.

Clinton's schmoozing also has wowed Rep. Cardiss Collins, who has made two trips to the White House. She says Clinton is far better at lining up support than Jimmy Carter was. Collins was part of a Congressional Black Caucus meeting with Clinton last week and was in a group called in for consultation before Clinton's speech to Congress on the economy last month. "He sat in a chair right with us; there was no separation. He listened to us for more than an hour and took a lot of notes," Collins said. "He knows everybody's name. He looks you in the eye and says, 'Cardiss.' Clinton Will Win Military Over: Aspin

Reuters

WASHINGTON—Defense Secretary Les Aspin said Sunday that some in the U.S. armed forces have a "wait and see" attitude toward President Clinton, the military's commander in chief.

But Aspin said he expects the president, the first since World War II with no military experience, to win over service personnel within a couple of years.

"I think this is an eminently winnable constituency for Bill Clinton," Aspin said. "I think that in a couple of years you will see a really strong support for the president of the men and women in uniform."

Aspin made his comments in response to a report on the president's visit Friday to the aircraft carrier Theodore Roosevelt.

The Washington Post said an "undercurrent of mockery" pervaded the ship during the visit. It quoted the captain, Stanley Bryant, as having told his crew earlier that "regardless of the president's politics, we need to show support for the president . . . whether you voted for him or not."

The Probe: Grand Jury Faces Stalling Tactics, Lawyers Charge

By Michael Briggs
Sun-Times Washington Bureau

WASHINGTON—The federal grand jury investigation of Rep. Dan Rostenkowski (D-Ill.) has been hampered by uncooperative associates of the Chicago congressman, according to lawyers familiar with the investigation.

Tactics that have impeded investigators range from delays in turning over records to witnesses invoking the Fifth Amendment protection against self-incrimination.

Jay B. Stephens, U.S. attorney for the District of Columbia, repeatedly has referred to obstruction of justice in connection with the investigation of Rostenkowski, although no one close to the congressman has been charged with that or any other crime.

Stephens' investigation, which initially focused on whether members of Congress had illegally converted government vouchers or campaign checks into cash at the House post office, has been broadened since last spring. Other financial dealings of Rostenkowski's are being investigated and a wide range of his records, associates and former associates have been subpoenaed.

Stephens recently said "substantial progress" also had been made in the post office embezzlement investigation.

"Efforts to obstruct that investigation" also were being looked into, Stephens said.

Although Stephens would not talk about those efforts, one source indicated that House officials sympathetic to Rostenkowski had thumbed their noses at requests for records, such as Rostenkowski's checking account at the now-defunct House bank and the congressman's payroll records.

Sergeant-at-Arms Werner W. Brandt did not return telephone calls about a subpoena served on him for Rostenkowski's bank records.

Steven R. Ross, the general counsel to House Clerk Donnald K. Anderson, declined to discuss subpoenas for Rostenkowski's payroll records. Nor would Ross say whether he had talked about subpoenas or other developments in the investigation with Stanley M. Brand, Rostenkowski's attorney.

House Speaker Thomas S. Foley (D-Wash.) said he believed all requested records have been turned over to the grand jury.

There had been "difficulties" complying with some subpoenas, a House source acknowledged, but the official, who spoke on condition that he not be identified, insisted that "nobody was trying to stonewall" and asserted that "whatever problems there were have been resolved."

Some two dozen current and former aides on Rostenkowski's congressional payroll and on the staff of the House Ways and Means Committee that he chairs were subpoenaed after Rostenkowski was re-elected last November. As recently as last Feb. 9, Rostenkowski formally notified the House speaker that a subpoena was served on a Ways and Means Committee employee.

Prosecutors have questioned whether Rostenkowski has attempted to influence testimony of his aides by paying their legal bills. Rostenkowski has used campaign funds to cover more than $153,000 in legal expenses for himself and aides subpoenaed to testify before the grand jury. Questions that prosecutors put to witnesses have underscored that so many witnesses "have fallen into the hands of a small group of lawyers," an attorney said.

Among the subpoenaed aides was Mary A. Lesinski, who initially cited the Fifth Amendment in refusing to testify, a lawyer said. Lesinski last year ran up $36,403 in legal bills that were paid from Rostenkowski's political campaign fund.

Jay B. Stephens

Lesinski was a secretary to Virginia C. Fletcher, the longtime manager of Rostenkowski's congressional office on Capitol Hill.

In an effort to force Lesinski to provide information, sources said she was granted immunity from prosecution, which canceled her legal right not to testify.

Reached at the congressman's Capitol Hill office, Lesinski would not comment. Now a legislative aide, she previously worked in a part of the congressional office with duties that put her in a position to know about office expenses. She could have known, for example, whether post office vouchers were signed by Rostenkowski or by Fletcher.

Rostenkowski himself invoked his Fifth Amendment right not to testify last June.

The investigation of the House post office so far has resulted in six convictions of post office employees on charges that include embezzlement and drug dealing.

Obstruction-of-justice and witness-tampering allegations were among the charges in the most recent indictment returned by the grand jury. The charges last Nov. 24 against Gerald W. Weaver II involve alleged attempts to cover up drug deals and have no apparent bearing on the Rostenkowski investigation.

The Power: Chairman Takes Lead on Clinton's Economic Plan

By Basil Talbott
Sun-Times Washington Bureau

WASHINGTON—Rep. Dan Rostenkowski's fabled clout, jeopardized by his legal troubles, is today facing its biggest test: Can Rostenkowski deliver President Clinton's economic plan?

As chairman of the House Ways and Means Committee, Rostenkowski rules the congressional panel with the greatest say over the president's tax proposals and much to say about his spending cuts, welfare and health reform plans, and trade initiatives.

There is little question that the White House has been counting on the Chicago power broker. "Rosty is crucial to success of the package," said Democratic National Chairman David Wilhelm, who sits in on strategy sessions at the White House.

Clinton has made sure to court Rostenkowski, who has been a Capitol fixture since the president was in grammar school. He has summoned Rostenkowski to the White House three times—twice on the eve of Clinton's State of the Union speech, when he presented his economic program to the nation. The president also has dropped in to see the Ways and Means chairman on three visits to Capitol Hill.

Rostenkowski's role under Clinton is different than during budget battles with prior administrations. "I was the coach of the other team," Rostenkowski said of his dealings with former presidents Ronald Reagan and George Bush. "Now I am the downfield blocker for the administration."

In his supporting role, he has promised to work to see that Clinton's package moves unmolested to the House floor. "I'm going to move some commas and semicolons as we review the legislation," he said in an interview.

But in his more typically brusque fashion, Rostenkowski reminded Clinton's budget director, Leon E. Panetta, on Tuesday just how key a role he plays. "It all begins here," a smiling Rostenkowski said as he thumped his finger on the desk facing Panetta, who appeared for the first hearings on Clinton's program before Rostenkowski's committee.

Rostenkowski's value, according to longtime observers of the budget ritual, is inestimable. "Rosty has never seemed so valuable to Congress and the Democratic Party," said Thomas Mann, director of governmental studies of the Brookings Institution. "There is a great dread at the possibility that he might be indicted and leave the Ways and Means Committee rudderless."

David Mason, who assesses Congress for the conservative Heritage Foundation, agreed that the ongoing investigation of Rostenkowski's financial dealings "produces a question mark." But, Mason said, "I'm not willing to dismiss his abilities. If the investigation winds down, he probably won't be hurt much."

There is no sign that Rostenkowski's effectiveness has been hurt yet. But some House colleagues report that the 65-year-old chairman often has looked tired. And Rostenkowski conceded that he has been affected.

"It's uncomfortable. It's embarrassing," Rostenkowski said. "It breaks my heart to see my friends subpoenaed by a grand jury because they are my friends. I call and apologize. It's tough being Rosty's friend at this time."

For almost a year, U.S. Attorney Jay B. Stephens has been on Rostenkowski's trail, leaving the impression he has something. In addition to questions about whether Rostenkowski may have abused his perks at the House post office by exchanging stamp vouchers for cash, the grand jury is examining other financial dealings, including disclosures by the Chicago Sun-Times that Rostenkowski paid $73,000 in campaign funds to himself and his sisters to rent a little-used campaign office and that he took ownership of three vehicles leased with taxpayers' money.

Through a spokesman, Rostenkowski has denied doing anything improper. Meanwhile, Stephens has continued to subpoena Rostenkowski's records, staff and former associates, and some publications have speculated that there will be an indictment. The inquiry won't dissolve even when Clinton finally gets his choice for attorney general installed at the Justice Department.

If Rostenkowski is indicted, party rules require him to step down from the chairmanship until he is cleared. House leaders have expressed confidence that he will be vindicated. One of them, Speaker Thomas S. Foley (D-Wash.), insisted that Rostenkowski has lost absolutely no clout.

In the culture of Capital Hill, even liberal Democrats who were offended in the past by Rostenkowski's coziness with Bush, an old friend, are loath to take cracks at him now.

"Some think it would be a real tragedy if an overanxious prosecutor and a press all too willing to string him up undermines a person who now seems crucial to the success of a new adminstration," Mann said.

Behind worries about an indictment is the concern among party leaders about who would take over trying to steer the unruly Ways and Means Committee should Rostenkowski be forced aside. Beyond the influence he wields by virtue of the broad scope of his committee, Rostenkowski has gained a reputation for strong handling of the panel's 38 fractious members. His predecessor as chairman, Al Ullman of Oklahoma, was amiable and fair but couldn't keep legislation on track.

"The chairman has the full respect of his membership," said Rep. Robert T. Matsui (D-Calif.), a panel member in whom Rostenkowski has confided. "They would go off the cliff for him."

"He's a good chairman," agreed Rep. William M. Thomas, a California Republican on the panel who differs with Rostenkowski on some issues. As to whether the chairman's clout is diminished, Thomas said, "It's an on-and-off switch," depending on whether there is an indictment.

If Rostenkowski were indicted and forced to step aside, the next in seniority on Ways and Means is Rep. Sam M. Gibbons (D-Fla.), a slightly more conservative member. But Democratic leaders doubt he could control the panel, and chances are the House leadership would assume control to move through Clinton's program if Rostenkowski was out of the picture.

Probe Unlikely to Be Dropped, Experts Say

By Adrienne Drell
Staff Writer

It's almost impossible to dump a hot U.S. Justice Department investigation even after a change in command or political party, legal scholars and former top prosecutors say.

But veteran department staffers acknowledge that long transitions between U.S. attorneys can delay decisions or the resolution of important cases.

Concern this week that a federal grand jury investigation of Rep. Dan Rostenkowski (D-Ill.) could be dropped is ill-founded, says Georgetown University Law Center Professor William Greenhalgh.

Concern arose after new Attorney General Janet Reno called for the resignations of all U.S. attorneys. Most U.S. attorneys voluntarily resign when a new president takes office.

Greenhalgh said return of an indictment "depends on whether a case itself is strong or weak. For the most part, the turnover in the top job does not affect the day-to-day operations of a prosecutor's office."

Gregory Jones, who was a federal prosecutor for 13 years and twice served as acting U.S. attorney here, noted that "major investigations take years to complete and often cross different administrations.

"But in my experience I have noticed no impact on an investigation because of a change of politics," said Jones, who joined the prosecutor's office in 1972 under Republican appointee James R. Thompson and left to go into private practice in 1985 shortly after serving as acting boss between outgoing U.S. Attorney Dan K. Webb and successor Anton Valukas. Both were Republicans.

Jones also headed up the office on an interim basis in 1977 before Webb took over from Democrat Tom Sullivan. Investigations into welfare fraud, judicial corruption and the Roman Catholic Archdiocese of Chicago began under Sullivan and continued unabated with Webb.

"Tom Sullivan spent considerable time educating me," Webb said.

Webb's office eventually returned indictments in the welfare fraud cases and in the Operation Greylord court scandal case. Webb said the church investigation was dropped a few months after he took office because John Cardinal Cody had died.

The controversy over the Rostenkowski inquiry mirrors the national furor in 1978 when former U.S. Rep. Joshua Eilberg, a Democrat under investigation for conflict of interest, called for the ouster of Republican U.S. Attorney David Marston in Philadelphia.

Democratic President Jimmy Carter replaced Marston with Peter Vaira, a former chief of the U.S. Justice Department's Organized Crime Strike Force in Philadelphia and Chicago, who picked up the Eilberg investigation.

"I came in and energized the case, brought it to fruition and convicted the guy," said Vaira, now in private practice in Philadelphia.

"You can't dump a case. You would have to get rid of the career prosecutors on the job, and they won't stand for it. If you [a U.S. attorney] come in and kill an investigation, you'd better be ready to stand behind it and explain it."

Rosty Investigator Rips Resignation Call

By Michael Briggs
Sun-Times Washington Bureau

WASHINGTON—U.S. Attorney Jay B. Stephens said Wednesday the Clinton administration's decision to replace him may drag out his nearly completed investigation of Rep. Dan Rostenkowski (D-Ill.) "for months and months" in a way that could have a "significant impact" on the case.

A White House spokeswoman said Stephens and others had concluded wrongly that Attorney General Janet Reno's call for the resignations of all of the nation's federal prosecutors—who were appointed by previous presidents—means they must clean out their desks within 10 days.

"That is not true," press secretary Dee Dee Myers said. "That was the impression that some of the U.S. attorneys may have unfortunately taken away, but that was not what [Reno] intended to convey."

Rostenkowski, meanwhile, kept quiet about developments in the investigation by Stephens that has dogged the Chicago congressman since last May. Rostenkowski's congressional, campaign and personal finances have been under scrutiny since Stephens opened his inquiry into possible embezzlement at the House Post Office.

Under House rules, Rostenkowski would have to give up his chairmanship of the Ways and Means Committee if he were indicted. His chairmanship is considered crucial to the fate of President Clinton's economic package, most of which must pass through the committee before it can be considered by the House.

In television interviews, Stephens insinuated that politics was a factor in what he portrayed as a decision to take him off the Rostenkowski case. "The issue will be whether or not the ultimate decision in this case is somehow unnecessarily impacted by political considerations," he said.

Stephens also voiced concern that the investigation would be jeopardized by the appointment of an interim U.S. attorney until the Senate confirms his successor. So far, he said, Reno is the only Senate-approved Clinton appointee in the Justice Department.

"If there is no one in place to make a decision at the United States attorney's office, if there is no presidentially confirmed United States attorney, if there is no one in place at the Justice Department ... the result of that may well be that there is no decision made in this case for months and months and months. And that alone could have a significant impact on an investigation such as this," Stephens said.

Stephens previously said he had informed the Justice Department that he was within 30 days of making a "critical decision" about the Rostenkowski investigation.

Stephens assailed what he called an "unprecedented" decision by the administration to call for the immediate resignations of all 93 federal prosecutors. Such a wholesale turnover "can have unnecessarily destabilizing impact on the continuity of law enforcement operations," Stephens said.

Prosecutors normally are replaced when political control of the White House changes hands, but in the past the process has been gradual.

The White House press secretary said Stephens and other prosecutors misconstrued how soon their resignations would be accepted. "Some will be leaving more quickly than others, and in the interim will be replaced mostly with career attorneys, professionals," Myers said.

However, Stephens was not alone among prosecutors who reported being told they would be gone soon. "What I was told was probably the longest I would be here is a week," said J. William Roberts, the U.S. attorney based in Springfield, Ill. "As best I can discern, we're all gone by the end of next week.

"There is some real shock on the part of a number of very able U.S. attorneys."

The investigation of a fairly mundane drug scandal at the House Post Office took a twist May 6 when a federal grand jury subpoenaed the records of Rep. Dan Rostenkowski (D-Ill.) and two other congressmen.

Later reports in the Washington Post and Congressional Quarterly magazine revealed that a House Post Office supervisor had told investigators he helped Rostenkowski and others get thousands of dollars in cash through phony transactions disguised as stamp purchases.

Since those revelations, the federal investigation has embarked on a more wide-ranging scrutiny of Rostenkowski's finances, including follow-up investigation of reports in the Chicago Sun-Times.

Despite complaints from Rostenkowski and supporters about news media leaks from the grand jury, little is known about U.S. Attorney Jay B. Stephens' investigation.

After the Sun-Times reported Dec. 13 that Rostenkowski had paid more than $73,000 in campaign funds to himself and his sisters for a little-used office, the grand jury began investigating the lease arrangement.

The grand jury issued subpoenas relating to a Jan. 24 Sun-Times report that the congressman took personal ownership of three vehicles for which he had charged taxpayers at least $68,250.

There have been suggestions that prosecutors are pursuing obstruction of justice charges because of a lack of cooperation from Rostenkowski and his staff. Witnesses before the grand jury reportedly have been asked about who is paying their legal bills. Rostenkowski's campaign fund has provided lawyers for staffers called to testify.

Rostenkowski probe decision due in month

By Michael Tackett

WASHINGTON—U.S. Atty. Jay Stephens said Tuesday that a decision to "resolve" the criminal investigation of Rep. Dan Rostenkowski (D-Ill.) and the House Post Office scandal would come within 30 days.

Stephens' announcement came on the day President Clinton called for the resignation of him and all other U.S. attorneys, a standard practice for an incoming president of a different political party.

Stephens said he had informed the Justice Department of his 30-day timetable on the investigation of Rostenkowski and the House scandal.

"It is a very active investigation, we have made substantial progress, this investigation is ongoing," Stephens said at a news conference called just hours after Atty. Gen. Janet Reno announced the requests for the resignations.

Stephens, a Republican holdover, was never expected to be kept on, but because he was focusing his criminal probe on a prominent Democrat linked so closely the success of Clinton's economic plan, any move regarding his status was politically charged.

He is expected to leave office within 10 days, when the Clinton administration names an interim replacement. He urged the Justice Department to allow the investigation to proceed under the staff prosecutors assigned to the case.

"The investigation is being conducted by experienced, career prosecutors under my leadership," Stephens said. "I would expect those prosecutors to be permitted to carry this investigation to its logical conclusion . . . without political interference."

Rostenkowski has accused Stephens of conducting a political witchhunt.

The House Post Office case revolves around allegations that members of Congress exchanged stamps for cash from their congressional office and campaign expense accounts.

Prosecutors also have subpoenaed scores of Rostenkowski's documents and called more than 20 of his current and former staff members before the grand jury exploring his financial transactions in addition to his unusually large purchases of stamps.

Fred Foreman, U.S. attorney for the Chicago area, already has announced his resignation. Sens. Paul Simon and Carol Moseley-Braun of Illinois said Tuesday they have established commissions to help recommend candidates for U.S. attorney positions and vacant federal judgeships in the state.

Reno, speaking at her first news conference since her confirmation as attorney general, also said she would push for legislation to provide women with greater protection and ensure access to abortion clinics. Bills to do that have been introduced in the House and Senate.

Don't Mess With Rosty Probe

It's not unusual for a new attorney general to want to fill all U.S. attorney positions with his or, in Janet Reno's case, her own choices. These are political jobs, after all.

However, Reno's call for resignations of all holdover U.S. attorneys shouldn't alter the investigation of Rep. Dan Rostenkowski (D-Ill.), as both the clout-heavy congressman and his reputation sway in the wind.

Since last May, when a grand jury subpoenaed the congressional office expense records of Rostenkowski and two Pennsylvania congressmen, the case has expanded to include Rostenkowski's congressional, campaign and personal finances.

Both Rostenkowski and the public deserve to have the investigation concluded free of political manipulation, with or without U.S. Attorney Jay B. Stephens in charge. How that happens is up to Reno to decide.

But Reno should remember: Justice must be served.

City School Summit Deserves a Big Class

Chicagoans, tune in.

School reform in Chicago and dire issues confronting the city's public schools will be the focus of a daylong television special this Saturday, beginning at 11 a.m.

The live event, to be broadcast by WTTW-Channel 11 and WBBM-AM radio, will bring together a host of important players. They include School Board members, principals, teachers, local school council members, Mayor Daley and Gov. Edgar.

They're certain to discuss overwhelming problems with city schools. The Board of Education is confronting a budget deficit of about $383 million; negotiations with the Chicago Teachers Union and 22 other unions are pending; state aid for education is shrinking on a proportional basis; a search for a new general superintendent is under way, and proposals to revise portions of the 1988 School Reform Act are on the table in Springfield.

Yet, every crisis presents opportunities for rebirth. We hope Saturday's program serves as a catalyst for parents, students and taxpayers across the city to commit themselves anew to revitalizing our schools. Chicago public schools ought to be the vehicle for the ordinary and not-so-ordinary children of this city to achieve their highest aspirations, and to fulfill their parents' noblest dreams. Let's make the tough choices, and make it happen.

As students in Berwyn and Cicero demonstrated last week when they walked out of school and pushed their school board to change, democracy works when ordinary people take ownership of their institutions and become engaged in making them work.

Thanks go to the Chicago Community Trust, the John D. and Catherine T. MacArthur Foundation, the Joyce Foundation, the Wieboldt Foundation and the Spencer Foundation for funding the program. WTTW is donating its studio, equipment and staff, and Roosevelt University's Institute for Metropolitan Affairs is coordinating the event.

This is the sort of public debate that's crucial for the future of our schools and of our city. Tune in and listen up.

New Park Program a Big Hit

For thousands of working parents, the end of school each day brings concern about keeping their children supervised until they get home. They'll get some relief through a pilot program of the Chicago Park District and a consortium of 56 North Side community groups.

Starting April 5, "Parks Are for Kids" will go into full swing.

Are Faster Trucl

It's springtime in Springfield, which means that a load of new trucking legislation has arrived that would allow the big trucks that are driven in the state to be even longer, wider, heavier and faster.

While most of the bills are technical, dealing with such things as axle weights and the use of portable scales by law enforcement officials to measure truck weights, the one that ought to draw the most public interest is House Bill 451, which would allow trucks to drive as fast as motorists on some highways.

Denni Byrne

Actually, the bill, sponsored by Representatives Larry W. Hicks (D-Mount Vernon) and Charles A. Hartke (D-Teutopolis), is more broad-minded; it also would raise speed limits for buses, campers, vehicles towing vehicles, and the like. In a nutshell, where the speed limit for cars now is 65 m.p.h., as on rural interstate highways, the speed limit for trucks and the other vehicles would be raised from the current 55 m.p.h. to 65 m.p.h.

I'd guess that most people's instinctive reaction would be like mine—we don't need any trucks driving faster than they do now. But don't count this bill out. A similar bill passed the House in 1987 and was only narrowly defeated in the Senate.

Here are the pros and the cons:

He Says 10-Day Limit Given, But Justice Official Denies It

WASHINGTON—U.S. Attorney Jay B. Stephens said he was told Tuesday that he will be replaced within 10 days, even though he has almost wrapped up investigation of Rep. Dan Rostenkowski (D-Ill.).

Attorney General Janet Reno, who called for the resignations of all holdover U.S. attorneys appointed by Republican presidents, said Stephens "is not being singled out in any way." A spokeswoman for Reno said Stephens, who was appointed by President Ronald Reagan, had not been given a deadline to leave.

Stephens did not back off his assertion that he was told that he would be fired by a week from Friday.

Some Republican members of Congress quickly raised objections to Reno's call for resignations.

Rep. George W. Gekas (R-Pa.), former prosecutor who is on the House Judiciary Committee, called the action "the Tuesday afternoon massacre," and Republican Whip Newt Gingrich (Ga.) said he would call for hearings into the matter.

"It looks very political," Sen. Don Nickles (R-Okla.), chairman of the Senate Republican Policy Committee, said of Reno's removal of all 93 U.S. attorneys. "It catches many cases in midstream. It's not only political, it's not wise."

New presidents customarily replace U.S. attorneys, especially when political control of the White House changes hands, but it has taken previous presidents more than a year to fill the posts.

At a press conference Tuesday afternoon, Reno said there was "no linkage whatsoever" between her call for holdover prosecutors to resign and the investigation of Rostenkowski.

Reno said she was "not familiar with the Rostenkowski case."

Stephens' investigation, which began last spring as a case involving questionable postage stamp purchases at the House post office, has widened to include Rostenkowski's congressional, campaign and personal finances. A number of Rostenkowski's aides have appeared under subpoena before the grand jury convened by Stephens, but the Chicago Democrat himself has declined to testify, citing his Fifth Amendment rights. He has denied wrongdoing.

Reno set no timetable for replacing any of the federal prosecutors.

Stephens said at a press conference after Reno's that he was told by a senior Justice Department official that he would be replaced within 10 days by an interim prosecutor who will run the largest U.S. attorney's office until President Clinton nominates and the Senate confirms a successor.

He said the short notice came after he informed the Justice Department that he "expected to make a critical decision to resolve this investigation within 30 days." Stephens would not be more precise, but a source said the imminent "critical decision" was whether to ask a grand jury to indict Rostenkowski.

Stephens asserted that "substantial progress" had been made in the "very active investigation" of Rostenkowski and he expressed hope that career prosecutors on his staff who have conducted the Rostenkowski inquiry will be allowed to finish it.

Rostenkowski was said to be in Chicago and a spokesman at his Washington office had no reaction to the announcements by Reno or Stephens.

Caroline Aronovitz, the attorney general's spokeswoman, disputed Stephens' assertion that he was given 10 days to clean out his desk. "That's not the case at all. He was not given any sense of a time line. All we said was that we would do it as quickly as possible," Aronovitz said. She accused Stephens of "making a big to-do," but she said, "he doesn't know more than anyone else about what's going to happen in the future and he wouldn't have any idea of the timing."

Reno had said that some holdover prosecutors would be asked to stay on to complete investigations. Clinton will consult with Democratic senators and fill the posts in "an orderly way that does not impact on any pending investigations," Reno said.

Rostenkowski has accused Stephens of engaging in "a political witch-hunt" after the grand jury last May subpoenaed congressional office expense records from him and two Pennsylvania congressmen as part of its post office embezzlement inquiry. The FBI, the Internal Revenue Service and other law enforcement agencies also have scrutinized Rostenkowski's personal finances.

The investigation of a fairly mundane drug scandal at the House Post Office took a twist May 6 when a federal grand jury subpoenaed the records of Rep. Dan Rostenkowski (D-Ill.) and two other congressmen.

Later reports in the Washington Post and Congressional Quarterly magazine revealed that a House Post Office supervisor had told investigators he helped Rostenkowski and others get thousands of dollars in cash through phony transactions disguised as stamp purchases.

Since those revelations, the federal investigation has embarked on a more wide-ranging scrutiny of Rostenkowski's finances, including follow-up investigation of reports in the Chicago Sun-Times.

Despite complaints from Rostenkowski and supporters about news media leaks from the grand jury, little is known about U.S. Attorney Jay B. Stephens' investigation.

After the Sun-Times reported Dec. 13 that Rostenkowski had paid more than $73,000 in campaign funds to himself and his sisters for a little-used office, the grand jury began investigating the lease arrangement.

The grand jury issued subpoenas relating to a Jan. 24 Sun-Times report that the congressman took personal ownership of three vehicles for which he had charged taxpayers at least $68,250.

There have been suggestions that prosecutors are pursuing obstruction of justice charges because of a lack of cooperation from Rostenkowski and his staff. Witnesses before the grand jury reportedly have been asked about who is paying their legal bills. Rostenkowski's campaign fund has provided lawyers for staffers called to testify.

Reno demands resignations of U.S. attorneys

By Jerry Seper
THE WASHINGTON TIMES

Attorney General Janet Reno yesterday asked for the resignation of the country's 93 U.S. attorneys, saying President Clinton wants to build his own team of federal prosecutors.

The call for resignations includes Jay B. Stephens in the District, Richard D. Bennett in Maryland, Richard Cullen in Northern Virginia and E. Montgomery Tucker in Southern Virginia.

"We're asking for the resignations so the U.S. attorneys presently in position will know where they stand and we can begin to build a team that represents a Department of Justice that represents my views and the views of President Clinton," she said.

Miss Reno denied the request had anything to do with an ongoing investigation by Mr. Stephens of Rep. Dan Rostenkowski, Illinois Democrat and chairman of the House Ways and Means Committee. She said there was "no linkage whatsoever" with the Rostenkowski probe and that Mr. Stephens was "not being singled out."

The House Ways and Means Committee chairman is integral to Mr. Clinton's efforts to pass an economic package.

A federal grand jury is looking into allegations that Mr. Rostenkowski used the House Post Office as a cover to convert funds to his personal use. The probe has also focused on Rep. Austin Murphy and former Rep. Joseph P. Kolter, Pennsylvania Democrats.

During a separate press conference yesterday, Mr. Stephens said he was told before the Reno announcement that his resignation would be effective in 10 days with the appointment of an interim U.S. attorney. He declined to discuss the Rostenkowski case but said he recently told the Justice Department he would be making "a critical decision" within the next 30 days to "resolve the investigation."

Messrs. Rostenkowski, Murphy and Kolter have denied any wrongdoing.

Five former clerks and the former chief of staff at the House mail facility, an independent contractor for the U.S. Postal Service, have pleaded guilty to charges ranging from the sale of illegal drugs to embezzlement.

Speaking at her first Washington press conference since her confirmation two weeks ago, Miss Reno said no replacement U.S. attorneys had yet been named, but a review process is under way. She said some names have been suggested by several U.S. senators.

"I think the U.S. attorneys ... are absolutely integral to the whole success of the Department of Justice," Miss Reno said. The veteran Florida prosecutor, whose nomination as the first woman ever to head the Justice Department was approved by the Senate on a 98-0 vote, said her formal call for the resignations went out yesterday morning.

Most of the nation's U.S. attorneys were appointed by Presidents Reagan and Bush, and the call for their resignations is standard partisan politics.

Miss Reno said she was still reviewing a Justice Department report on alleged financial irregularities by FBI Director William S. Sessions and has not decided on a recommendation to the president regarding whether he should be fired.

Mr. Sessions has five years remaining on a 10-year term but is considered a long shot to keep his job. He reportedly has lost the confidence of many of the bureau's 9,500 agents, including some of his top deputies.

Mr. Clinton yesterday denied published reports that he already has decided to replace the embattled director. "I am going to wait for her judgment," the president said.

With regard to violence at abortion clinics, Miss Reno said she will push for legislation giving federal agencies a larger role in protecting women at abortion clinics. She said a Supreme Court ruling that federal judges cannot stop protesters who try to block access had undercut federal authority to intervene.

Dr. David Gunn, who ran an abortion clinic in Miss Reno's home state, was killed March 10 outside his Pensacola, Fla., office. She said she has ruled out Justice Department involvement in the case and was satisfied state authorities were making progress.

Miss Reno was the last member of the Clinton Cabinet to be confirmed.

Washington Area to Lose 2 High-Profile Prosecutors

All U.S. Attorneys Told to Tender Resignations

By Michael York
and Donald P. Baker
Washington Post Staff Writers

The Clinton administration yesterday requested that the nation's 93 U.S. attorneys submit their resignations, a move that likely will mean the quick departure of two figures who have played prominent roles in the politics of the District and Virginia.

In the District, U.S. Attorney Jay B. Stephens said he expects to leave office within 10 days.

Stephens's office successfully prosecuted then-Mayor Marion Barry on a drug possession charge and has been involved in several high-profile cases. One is an ongoing investigation of the operations of the House Post Office, a case that involves allegations of wrongdoing by House Ways and Means Committee chairman Rep. Dan Rostenkowski (D-Ill.).

In Virginia, Richard Cullen, the prosecutor for the eastern half of the state, said he expects to be gone by Monday.

Cullen, a Richmond lawyer long active in state Republican circles, may seek the GOP nomination for the Senate seat now held by Democrat Charles S. Robb, a nomination Iran-contra figure Oliver L. North also may pursue.

Cullen and his Maryland counterpart, Richard D. Bennett, said they were surprised by U.S. Attorney General Janet Reno's request that they and other Republican prosecutors tender their resignations.

JAY B. STEPHENS
... expects to leave within 10 days

Bennett, a former Maryland GOP chairman, has told reporters he may run in the party primary for state attorney general next year.

Reno, who announced the requests for resignations of U.S. attorneys, depicted the move as routine for a new administration. Some former department officials complained it came without warning and could create turmoil in some U.S. attorney's offices conducting sensitive investigations.

One such office cited was Stephens's in the District because of its investigation of the House Post Office and its bearing on Rostenkowski, a key member of the House leadership who has an influential role in pressing for enactment of Clinton administration initiatives.

Rostenkowski has aggressively defended himself against allegations that he misused his position, and he has claimed that Stephens's investigation was politically motivated.

Stephens said at a news conference that he had expected within a month "to make a critical decision with regard to the resolution" of the House Post Office inquiry. He said that the decision whether to seek indictments in the investigation would not be affected by Reno's request, although he suggested that the timing meant he would not be involved in the decision.

Eleanor Holmes Norton, the District's delegate to the U.S. House, said the White House had agreed for the first time to let the delegate nominate candidates for the prosecutor's job, as well as federal judgeships. "This is a tremendous victory for the District," Norton said. "It's an important indication that District residents can increase their power even before we get the statehood we deserve."

Norton said she will appoint a panel of advisers to help her screen candidates for U.S. attorney. Among those mentioned yesterday as possible successors to Stephens were D.C. Superior Court Judges Noel A. Kramer, Zenora M. Mitchell-Rankin and Eric H. Holder Jr. and Assistant U.S. Attorney June M. Jeffries.

At a Richmond news conference, Cullen said that he had hoped his bipartisan support of gun legislation signed into law yesterday by Democratic Gov. L. Douglas Wilder might have allowed him to remain the chief federal prosecutor for eastern Virginia. He also said that although North enjoys "tremendous name recognition" Cullen was "not convinced he's the most electable Republican."

The names of several Democrats quickly emerged as possible successors to Cullen, including Arlington Commonwealth's Attorney Helen F. Fahey. Also mentioned were Richmond lawyer Lawrence W. Framme III, a former state party official and former Wilder Cabinet member, and former state senator Moody E. "Sonny" Stallings, of Virginia Beach.

Robb, as the state's highest-ranking Democratic official in Washington, is likely to have the last word on Cullen's successor. His office said that several people have expressed interest in the job, but that Robb would have no comment, for fear of discouraging qualified applicants. E. Montgomery Tucker, the U.S. attorney for western Virginia, based in Roanoke, also will be replaced.

In Maryland, political insiders said Bennett's likely successor is Lynne Ann Battaglia, chief of staff for Sen. Barbara A. Mikulski (D-Md.) and a former state prosecutor. If nominated and confirmed, Battaglia would be the state's first woman U.S. attorney.

Staff writers Kent Jenkins Jr. and Paul W. Valentine contributed to this report.

Panel Widens Request In Rostenkowski Probe

Chicago Tribune

The criminal investigation of Rep. Dan Rostenkowski (D-Ill.) took a new turn with disclosures that a federal grand jury has for the first time requested financial records from the House Ways and Means Committee during the congressman's tenure as chairman.

The grand jury also requested records from Rostenkowski's congressional office dating to the late 1970s, a period at least seven years longer than the previous scope of its investigation.

The announcement Friday came on the last day in office for Washington-area U.S. Attorney Jay B. Stephens, who had been leading the investigation of Rostenkowski. The Clinton administration demanded the resignation of all U.S. attorneys.

At a recent news conference, Stephens said he had informed the Justice Department that a "critical decision" in the Rostenkowski case would be made within 30 days, about three weeks from Friday. Attorney General Janet Reno declined comment on the case, other than to say Stephens's replacement would be named soon.

The new subpoenas suggest that the investigation will proceed despite Stephens's absence. As many as five staff prosecutors who have been involved in the House Post Office investigation will remain in place. Rostenkowski consistently has denied any wrongdoing.

New challenges: Jay Stephens may run for Senate in Virginia.

Stephens sought more time

House probe was near end, he says

By Catherine Toups
THE WASHINGTON TIMES

Former U.S. Attorney Jay B. Stephens said yesterday his forced departure was ordered despite his warnings to the White House that a sensitive probe of a powerful Democratic congressman would be delayed and perhaps derailed.

The former federal prosecutor for the District also said he is weighing a 1994 run for the Senate from Virginia and is concerned about the direction the Clinton administration is taking on criminal justice matters.

In a luncheon interview with reporters and editors of The Washington Times, Mr. Stephens said he requested time to complete his work when he was asked March 23 to resign with the other 92 U.S. attorneys.

He said he was close to deciding whether to seek indictments against Rep. Dan Rostenkowski, the chairman of the House Ways and Means Committee and a key figure in President Clinton's economic plans.

Mr. Stephens has investigated claims that the Illinois Democrat illegally diverted thousands of dollars in public money for personal use.

Mr. Stephens, 46, was credited locally with prosecuting the District's violent drug gangs and corrupt politicians and known nationally for his aggressive pursuit of international terrorists.

He said the blanket firing of federal prosecutors is unprecedented and sends troubling signals.

"Traditionally, U.S. attorneys were replaced one at a time," he said. "By eliminating all of the U.S. attorneys, effectively you've made a substantial statement about law enforcement. ... You have knocked out across the United States all the leadership of federal law enforcement."

Attorney General Janet Reno's dismissal of the federal prosecutors "raises the question of what is the commitment of this administration, this Justice Department, and whether there is a genuine commitment," he said.

Mr. Stephens, whose ambitious career included the prosecution of then-Mayor Marion Barry and drug kingpin Rayful Edmond III, said he has made no decisions about his future. He said he will spend the next 30 to 60 days enjoying time with his family and "figuring out what I really want to do."

He said he has spent 15 years in federal criminal justice and "I feel strongly about public service. ... I will consider a variety of options. One of those options will be the 1994 Senate race in Virginia. That's one thing I would consider along with the whole range of other things."

If Mr. Stephens entered the Senate race, he would join retired Lt. Col. Oliver North in a field of potential challengers to Democratic Sen. Charles S. Robb.

Col. North, the Iran-Contra figure, is the most prominent GOP hopeful so far. He has been raising money and appearing on behalf of Republican candidates around the state the past year.

Mr. Robb's political reputation has been damaged the past two years by stories of personal misconduct, prompting an unusual number of candidates to line up against him.

Mr. Stephens could be a contender, political insiders said.

"I'm not sure whether he has the name identification to run statewide or whether he has the time to build up his name recognition, but I think he would be a fine candidate," said Pat Mullens, Republican chairman of the 10th Congressional District, which includes part of Fairfax County.

"He's a very attractive candidate. We're going to have a very spirited contest next year," state GOP Chairman Patrick McSweeney said.

Who will succeed Mr. Stephens is a question for D.C. Delegate Eleanor Holmes Norton. For the first time, the White House agreed to let the delegate nominate candidates for the prosecutor's job and for District judgeships.

Mrs. Norton said she is forming an advisory panel to help in her search. Among the names that have emerged as possible successors are D.C. Superior Court Judge Eric Holder and Corporation Counsel John Payton.

On Monday, a 16-year veteran of the federal prosecutor's office, J. Ramsey Johnson, was sworn in as interim U.S. attorney. Mr. Johnson, 47, a classmate of the president's at Georgetown University, had been chief of the office's D.C. Superior Court division since 1989.

Mr. Stephens predicted that local court systems across the country will go through major reforms in the next decade, adopting many federal court practices, such as mandatory sentencing, speedy-trial laws and bail reform.

He said the District's effort to turn the prosecution of local crimes over to a local prosecutor is a mistake.

"Seeing both systems of justice, the federal system and the local system, the federal system is a much more effective way of developing evidence and presenting that evidence in a speedy fashion, resolving cases and having sentences imposed in a fair manner," he said.

Rostenkowski probe ordered on 'full steam ahead'

By Carolyn Skorneck
ASSOCIATED PRESS

Attorney General Janet Reno said yesterday that she told federal lawyers investigating Rep. Dan Rostenkowski, a powerful Democrat, to go "full steam ahead."

Miss Reno said she called J. Ramsey Johnson, the District of Columbia's interim U.S. attorney. Mr. Johnson succeeded Republican Jay Stephens, who had suggested the department sought his resignation to interfere with the probe of the Illinois Democrat who chairs the tax-writing House Ways and Means Committee.

"I told him if there was anything he needed, full steam ahead," Miss Reno said in an interview, amplifying on comments made to a group of reporters earlier.

After the call to Mr. Johnson, she said, she called Marshall Jarrett, who heads the criminal division at the U.S. Attorneys' Office, and "told him the same thing.... I talked to the person who I thought was supervising" the case that is being handled by three assistant U.S. attorneys.

Mr. Rostenkowski's office said he would have no comment. The congressman said last July that prosecutors were on a "fishing expedition" to see whether he illegally obtained cash from the House post office, possibly through the conversion of stamps.

On other matters, Miss Reno told reporters she:

- Has ordered a Justice Department review of the controversial U.S. policy of kidnapping suspects abroad.
- Hoped people would accept whatever verdict is returned in the trial of three Los Angeles police officers and one former officer accused of violating Rodney King's civil rights and would understand that federal prosecutors made their best effort to win a conviction.
- Has directed the civil rights division to investigate deaths in Mississippi jails to determine if there was any criminal activity and, if not, to find a way to prevent future deaths.

The hanging death of 18-year-old Andre Jones last August drew attention to 47 hanging deaths in Mississippi jails over the last six years.

- Has still made no decision on the future of FBI Director William Sessions because she wants to make sure she has all the necessary information about allegations he used his office for personal gain.

The Rostenkowski case got considerable publicity after Miss Reno asked for the resignations of 77 politically appointed U.S. attorneys March 23 so she and President Clinton could install new political appointees.

Mr. Rostenkowski is a key figure in the effort to win congressional approval for Mr. Clinton's economic proposals.

Asked how she deals with such a delicate situation, Miss Reno told reporters: "You say, 'Investigate as completely and as thoroughly as possible, research the law as carefully as possible and then make the best judgment, Mr. prosecutor and U.S. Attorney's Office, that you can, based on the evidence and the law.' "

Despite Mr. Stephens' departure, "it's my understanding that the person who's handling that investigation is still there and going strong," she said.

Of the King case, which sparked riots in Los Angeles when the four men were acquitted of most state charges a year ago, Miss Reno expressed the hope that "whatever the verdict ... we work with the residents of Los Angeles; state and local governments, to do what we can to heal the wounds caused by that case."

As for Mr. Sessions, accused in a Justice Department report of misusing government vehicles and avoiding taxes on his transportation to and from work, Miss Reno said, "I have made no judgment because I have tried to read the report very carefully, follow up on details of the report that I needed information on."

Reno Urges Full Probe of Rostenkowski

'Full Steam Ahead,' Investigators Are Told

Associated Press

Attorney General Janet Reno told attorneys investigating House Ways and Means Committee Chairman Dan Rostenkowski (D-Ill.) to go "full steam ahead," she said yesterday.

Reno said she made the comments to J. Ramsey Johnson, the District's interim U.S. attorney. Johnson succeeded Republican Jay B. Stephens, who had complained that the administration's request for the resignations of all U.S. attorneys could impede the Rostenkowski investigation.

"I told him if there was anything he needed, full steam ahead," Reno said.

After the call to Johnson, she said, she called Marshall Jarrett, who heads the criminal division at the U.S. attorneys office, and "told him the same thing," she said. "I talked to the person who I thought was supervising" the case that is being handled by three assistant U.S. attorneys.

Rostenkowski's office said he would have no comment. Rostenkowski said last July that prosecutors were on a "fishing expedition" to see whether he illegally obtained cash from the House Post Office, possibly through the conversion of stamps.

The Rostenkowski case got a great deal of publicity after Reno asked for the resignations of 77 politically appointed U.S. attorneys March 23 so she and President Clinton could install new appointees.

Asked how she deals with such a delicate situation, Reno told reporters, "You say, 'Investigate as completely and as thoroughly as possible, research the law as carefully as possible and then make the best judgment, Mr. Prosecutor and U.S. attorney's office, that you can, based on the evidence and the law,' " she said.

After being shown a diagram representing the offices at 2148 and 2150 N. Damen, [redacted] stated that the office building at 2150 Damen was not always configured as it currently is. A portion of the rear of the 2150 building was added some years prior, although [redacted] could not recall exactly when this construction occurred. Representative DAN ROSTENKOWSKI moved into this newly created space, which was located at the rear of the building, in the early 1970's. Approximately in the year [redacted] advised that [redacted] back in the year 1969 [redacted] subsequently, [redacted]

b6

In 1969 there were about 50 viable Ward organizations in the city. By viable, [redacted] explained that the Ward could completely man all of the polls in an election of any type, and that they could effectively canvass the Ward on political initiates and to campaign for endorsed Democratic candidates, either local or national.

b7D

[redacted] estimates that today there are about five viable Ward organizations in existence in Chicago, among them the 32nd, the 11th, the 19th and the 14th Ward. The main reason for the demise of the effective political Ward was that it was extremely difficult to staff a Ward with the sufficient number of unpaid volunteers which are necessary to perform the various tasks. Additionally, the 32nd Ward was redistricted in 1981, 1983, 1986 and one year after the national census in 1991. This also contributed to fragment the 32nd as well as other Wards in the city.

[redacted] Before the year 1988, it was ROSTENKOWSKI who had been in the position of Ward Committeeman for the previous 30 years. This is a party position that is elected every four years. The duties of this position are to sit in council with the other Ward Committeemen of the city, and periodically to meet with the Committeemen of those Wards that are outside the city. Other duties include the responsibility of insuring that elections are run properly and fairly, and to name the various election judges that are required. b6 b7C b7D

[redacted] stated that the 32nd Ward will have between 66 and 48 Precincts, depending on a possible Chicago mandate to increase the size on the various precincts to cut election costs and other expenses. Once per year, the 32nd Ward will hold a fund raiser to collect money to offset annual expenses. Normally this fund raiser will collect about $50,000. About 5 or 6 years ago, about $45,000 would have been collected.

[redacted] 1969, although ROSTENKOWSKI was Committeeman, it was NEGA who actually ran the day-to-day operations of the 32nd Ward party organization. Most of the work which was done by the Ward organization was done at night because the people performing the work were employed full time during the day. In December of 1986, when NEGA died, [redacted] b6 b7C b7D

[redacted] advised that he probably had a [redacted] about [redacted] stated that this particular subject did not matter much to him, although when questioned further, [redacted] admitted that he believed that ROSTENKOWSKI owned the building. [redacted] stated that very [redacted] b6 b7C b7D

Additionally, when the city switched to this voucher system, they informed [redacted] that they would not remit [redacted] file. It was at this time and for this reason that [redacted]

[redacted] was informed that a review of his financial records for the year 1991 reveal that he was [redacted] during the year 1991. [redacted] advised that this was correct, and that [redacted] told him at the end of that year that he should not worry about [redacted] stated that he assumed that this decision was not hers and that it came from somewhere else, but that he has no idea who made that [redacted] also advised that he could not recall [redacted]

When Rostenkowski's Federal staff moved out of the office, they took all of the office furniture with them. [redacted]

advised that most of the work is done on Monday and Thursday evenings. The two employees that work for [redacted] during the day at the current time are [redacted] also does part-time work for [redacted] and is paid about [redacted] per year for her services of performing general clerical work and report filing. b6 b7C b7D

[redacted] advised that he has no actual involvement with either the ROSTENKOWSKI FOR CONGRESS COMMITTEE (RFCC) or ROSTENKOWSKI's Political Action Committee (PAC) the AMERICAN LEADER'S FUND (ALF). [redacted] recalled that ALF contributed $10,000.00 to his CFTG in the year 1987 but stated that he could not recall a contribution from ALF to CFTG in the year 1991. [redacted] stated that he has personally done [redacted] ROSTENKOWSKI and that the 32nd Ward Democratic Political Organization consistently and wholeheartedly supported all of ROSTENKOWSKI's campaigns.

[redacted] advised that during local campaigns, it was advantageous to [redacted] the 32nd Ward to lead with ROSTENKOWSKI's name when soliciting door-to-door for support due to the fact that ROSTENKOWSKI's name was so well known and because he was such a popular politician. This work was performed by the Ward precinct volunteers and coordinated by the precinct captains. Currently, not all of the Wards have captains, but in the year 1990, [redacted] recalled that all of the Wards did have captains. b6 b7C b7D

During the year 1987, [redacted] advised that there was a lot of activity for ROSTENKOWSKI's campaign and that work started around Thanksgiving by the 32nd Ward Organization. Signatures were solicited and between 8000 and 9000 names were collected to nominate ROSTENKOWSKI for re-election. The campaign for ROSTENKOWSKI changed at this time because ROSTENKOWSKI was no longer Democratic Party Committeeman. Additionally, the strength of the campaign for ROSTENKOWSKI would depend on the viability of the candidate he faced. [redacted] recalled that in 1986, ROSTENKOWSKI faced a strong opponent, but in the years 1988 and 1990 there was less serious opposition. b6 b7C b7D

[redacted] advised that in January of every year there would be a general election and there would be campaign mailings which would be sent out 30 days before that. Also, in October of the preceding year, there would be a voter registration drive for the election which would follow in November. 32nd Ward volunteers would man the voter registration areas and collect names and addresses of those who registered. Campaign literature would then be mailed to these people. [redacted] stated that some years the total number of letters sent out numbered as high as 3800, but usually the number was between 2000 and 2500. [redacted] stated the stamps for these mailings would come from ALF. b6 b7C b7D

[redacted] advised that one of NEGA's job responsibilities was that of election coordinator. [redacted] b6 b7C b7D

[redacted] In one [redacted] When [redacted] he [redacted] stated that there sometimes as many as [redacted] in the file [redacted] had knowledge of.

[redacted] stated that he has [redacted] from NEGA. [redacted] further advised that [redacted] b6 b7C b7D

[redacted] petitions. [redacted] advised that sometimes [redacted]

[redacted] recalled that on the date of November 5, 1992, when Agents came to the offices [redacted] to serve subpoenas and conduct interviews, [redacted] about 1:00 in the afternoon and was told that the Agents had come to the office and were still present, [redacted] At about 8:00 in the evening of that same day, Agents came to his home a gave him a subpoena. [redacted] stated that this was the first knowledge that [redacted] b3

[redacted] informed him that [redacted] had talked to the Agents. [redacted] did not speak to ROSTENKOWSKI on that day but he did speak him on the next day. [redacted] recalled that they spoke of it being difficult to serve the public over a period of decades and then in one moment your reputation could be gone. b6 b7C b7D

On March 4, 1992, an interview was conducted with an employee of the Cook County Tax Assessor's Office. The Tax Assessor's Office bases its valuation of the property on the estimated market value of the surrounding property. Furthermore, the tax assessment would be on the entire property, not just the offices of the business which may be contained in the building.

THOMAS P. (TIP) O'NEILL, former Speaker of the United States House of Representatives, was interviewed at the law offices of O'Neill and Athy, 1310 19th Street, N.W., Washington, D.C. Also present at this interview were O'Neill's son and attorney [redacted] and Assistant United States Attorney for the District of Columbia, [redacted] After being advised of the official identity of the interviewers and the nature of the interview, O'NEILL provided the following information: b6 b7C

O'NEILL advised that, when he was Speaker, he had very little contact with the House Post Office (HPO) due to the fact that all business with the HPO was conducted by staff members. O'NEILL never personally purchased stamps or any other services at the HPO. O'NEILL recalled that he did attend two parties which were held in the HPO, one of which was a Christmas party and the other was a birthday party that was given for HPO Postmaster [redacted] b6 b7C

O'NEILL stated that he knew [redacted] prior to his becoming the HPO Postmaster when he was in charge of the House Pages. O'NEILL also recalled the routine reports that [redacted] would give to House leadership when he was Postmaster regarding HPO operations. O'NEILL advised that [redacted] was sponsored by [redacted] and that after he became Postmaster, there was an election every two years where his position, and others at the House, were voted on "in block" by the Membership. b6 b7C

O'NEILL stated [redacted] was the type of person that would do anything for a Member to gain his favor and was very patronizing towards the House Membership. O'NEILL added that, in reality, [redacted] could do little of importance for the Members. O'NEILL advised that he was not familiar with the names [redacted] or [redacted] of the HPO as his staff would handle HPO business. b6 b7C

O'NEILL was shown two lists of House Members listing those Members by postage stamp purchases at the HPO. One list was dated 11/14/88 and listed Members in rank order by total stamp purchases and one list dated 11/6/91 which listed the Members in alphabetical order with their related postage purchases. O'NEILL advised that he had never seen either of these lists before and had no knowledge as to why these lists would have been kept. O'NEILL advised that, while he was Speaker, he never requested the Postmaster keep such a list and he had no information as to why the Speaker would ever need such a list. O'NEILL further advised that he never spoke to [redacted] about such a list at any time. b6 b7C

O'NEILL stated that the total stamp purchases at the HPO by a Member would depend on the amount of mailings which were done by that office, although the franking privilege of a Member should have been able to be utilized instead of actual postage stamps.

Investigation on 7/19/93 at Chicago, Illinois File # 58C-WF-180673 - 415

by SA [redacted] SA Date dictated 7/19/93 b6 b7C

This document contains neither recommendations nor conclusions of the FBI. It is the property of the FBI and is loaned to your agency; it and its contents are not to be distributed outside your agency.

[redacted] was asked about how WMS determines the monthly lease payments for customers, and [redacted] stated that the monthly price to lease vehicles came from the printed rules provided by FORD MOTOR CREDIT (FMCC). [redacted] advised that, when he was the [redacted] at WMS, WMS only used two leasing companies; CITICORP and FMCC. [redacted] stated that if a customer wanted to lease a car, the only lease documents that were used were either from the FMCC or CITICORP. b6 b7C

[redacted] stated that he could not recall any specific details regarding purchases or leasing arrangements between ROSTENKOWSKI and WMS. [redacted] did however remember that ROSTENKOWSKI purchased a 1987 customized van from WMS, but could provide no specific information regarding the deal. [redacted] stated that he did not believe that there was a FORD lease contract signed for the van, but if it was leased, an informal agreement was probably made. [redacted] stated that [redacted] could authorize such an arrangement, but that he was not personally aware of such a deal. [redacted] stated that if ROSTENKOWSKI had a special arrangement with [redacted] to lease vehicles when bill of sales were completed, [redacted] would have no knowledge of the special arrangement. [redacted] stated that he did not complete personal loan/lease contracts for [redacted] b6 b7C

[redacted] advised that he had only met ROSTENKOWSKI on one occasion. He advised that during this visit, ROSTENKOWSKI was at the car dealership on more of a social call rather than to purchase or look at any vehicles. [redacted] stated that ROSTENKOWSKI dealt strictly with [redacted] for any car purchasing or leasing arrangements. [redacted] advised that [redacted] signed all the sales documentation for ROSTENKOWSKI, and was not aware if [redacted] had permission to do so. [redacted] advised that he asked [redacted] why he signed the forms for ROSTENKOWSKI, and [redacted] stated that ROSTENKOWSKI was to busy to handle such matters. b6 b7C

[redacted] stated that he remembered preparing the paperwork for vehicles bought or leased by family members of ROSTENKOWSKI. He advised that his daughters often used a shorter version of the family name, (ie. ROSTEN), when purchasing automobiles. b6 b7C

[redacted] advised that he was aware that certain customers received preferential treatment, and ROSTENKOWSKI was among those type of customers. [redacted] stated that he did not know of any instances where ROSTENKOWSKI was part of any arrangement or money making scheme with WMS.

[redacted] stated that it was possible that a customer may not be expected to put a down payment on a leased car, especially if the customer had good credit. He advised that on occasion the management might help out a personal friend by waiving the need for a down payment.

[redacted] advised that he had no knowledge that ROSTENKOWSKI had leased three to four vehicles from WMS, that were actually documented as sales.

[redacted] stated that a customer could get a title for a leased vehicle, but it would be up to WMS to indicate any lien or lienholder on the title. [redacted] stated that it was not mandatory for WMS to include themselves as a lienholder on a vehicle title, if WMS had a personal arrangement with the customer.

For the information of Milwaukee, PLATE BLOCK is the code name of the investigation involving the U.S. House of Representatives Post Office and includes, among others, ROSTENKOWSKI as a subject.

Investigation into this matter has produced information that ROSTENKOWSKI has demanded "kick-backs" from various employees of his District Office in the city of Chicago. ROSTENKOWSKI would place certain persons on his official District Office Payroll and then would demand that a portion of their U.S. Treasury paychecks be provided to him.

Re WMFO telcall of 9/9/93 from SA [redacted] to SSA [redacted]

For the information of the Milwaukee Field Division, captioned matter has determined that subject Rep. DAN ROSTENKOWSKI has improperly obtained the personal ownership of three motor vehicles over a six year period utilizing funds from the U.S. Treasury. ROSTENKOWSKI has accomplished this by falsely stating to the U.S. House of Representatives that he was leasing these vehicles for official District Office use.

In actuality, ROSTENKOWSKI had entered into a unique sales arrangement with WIL-SHORE MOTORS, of Wilmette, Illinois, which collected the "lease payments" over a two year period which totally paid for each vehicle. Three "leases were entered into successively from 1987 through 1991, one lease per vehicle. At all times, ROSTENKOWSKI held unencumbered title for these vehicles, which have been identified as a 1987 Ford Econoline Van, a 1989 Ford Probe, and a 1991 Ford Taurus station wagon.

At the outset of the interview, he was advised of the identities of the interviewing agents and the purpose of the interview. Present during the interview was his wife, IRENE RUSSO, [redacted] ROBERT RUSSO, who indicated he suffers from Parkinson's Disease, advised as follows: b6 b7C

He was employed by the City of Chicago, Illinois, Water Department at the inflow water valve located off-shore in Lake Michigan. He had to take a disability retirement because of his disease. While working for the City of Chicago, he would spend one week at the inflow valve location called "the crib" and would have the next week off. It was during this every other week off that he worked for Congressman ROSTENKOWSKI. His job was general clean up and his supervisor was [redacted] He was paid by government check with Social Security withheld. His disease also caused him to leave his employment with the congressman. b6 b7C

His duties were to clean the ward office at 2150 North Damon Avenue, Chicago, as well as ROSTENKOWSKI's office at his home located at 1372 Evergreen. RUSSO denied cleaning the rest of ROSTENKOWSKI's home. He also denied paying money to ROSTENKOWSKI or anyone else to get his job or to retain it. Once, early in his employment, he was asked to trim some bushes at the ROSTENKOWSKI cottage in Wisconsin. It only took a couple of hours and this was the only time he did any work at the cottage.

It was during the questioning concerning the ROSTENKOWSKI cottage that RUSSO started shaking and appeared upset. A break was taken. RUSSO took medication and shortly thereafter the interview resumed.

RUSSO indicated the only donations to ROSTENKOWSKI were fund raisers that his wife described to the interviewing agents.

RUSSO knew of no employees of ROSTENKOWSKI who paid back money they earned to get or keep their job. He denied knowing of any employee who did personal work for ROSTENKOWSKI while being paid with government funds.

RUSSO was not able to say if he was paid by the hour or weekly or monthly. He did not punch a time clock or fill out a time sheet. He would just show up to do the cleaning. [redacted] knew when he worked so he must have approved his getting paid. [redacted] was aware of everything that was going on at the ward office.

It was pointed out to RUSSO that the interviewing agents had his work records that showed employment from 1976 through 1986. RUSSO believes this was the period of time of his employment. It was also pointed out that during some quarters there were no wages reported. RUSSO responded that he was told when to report for work by [redacted] and there were times, such as during re-election campaigns, that he was not asked to work so as not to get in the way. RUSSO stated he did not know who cleaned the ward office during the periods he did not work.

IRENE RUSSO, date of birth January 22, 1928, 1902 North Leavitt, Chicago, Illinois, telephone (312) 342-3133, was interviewed at 119 Park Drive, Twin Lakes, Wisconsin, telephone (414) 877-2058, concerning U.S. Congressman DAN ROSTENKOWSKI. At the outset of the interview, she was advised of the identities of the interviewing agents and the purpose of the interview. Present during the interview was [redacted], and after the first 15 minutes RUSSO's husband, ROBERT RUSSO, was also present. IRENE RUSSO supplied the following information: b6 b7C

She and her husband live with their [redacted] at the [redacted] address and also share the house in [redacted] during the summer. Prior to 1975, ROSTENKOWSKI's wife would visit RUSSO's beauty shop in Chicago. That is how the RUSSOS knew the ROSTENKOWSKIS. IRENE RUSSO could not keep the beauty shop because of bronchial problems, so for a period in 1975 and 1976 she worked for Congressman ROSTENKOWSKI at his ward office at 2150 North Damon Avenue, Chicago, where her duties consisted of answering the telephone and general clean up. She left the employment there in 1976 because "she didn't want to work anymore." Her supervisor was [redacted] She was paid by government check. She denied ever paying any money out of her paycheck to ROSTENKOWSKI or any of his staff in order for her to get that job or to keep it. She denied ever being asked or doing work which was of a personal nature for ROSTENKOWSKI during the time she was being paid by the government. She could not tell the interviewing agents if she was being paid by the hour or on a weekly or monthly basis. She did not punch a time clock or fill out a time sheet. The only time they "donated" anything to the ROSTENKOWSKI campaign was when they bought $100 tickets for a dinner/dance fund raiser where both the RUSSOS attended, as well as their [redacted] b6 b7C

She denied knowing if any other employee was asked for or had given part of their wages back to ROSTENKOWSKI and/or his staff and indicated that would have been a "personal" thing she would have no knowledge of. She also denied any knowledge of any other employee doing personal things for the ROSTENKOWSKIS while on government time.

Investigation on 8/14/93 at Twin Lakes, Wisconsin File # 58C-WF-180673 -428

by SA [redacted] SA [redacted] (RLE:dg) Date dictated 8/14/93

This document contains neither recommendations nor conclusions of the FBI. It is the property of the FBI and is loaned to your agency; it and its contents are not to be distributed outside your agency.

The RUSSOS at one time lived in the same building as the ROSTENKOWSKIS. The RUSSOS had to move out of the building they were living in and she asked [redacted] for help in finding an apartment and they ended up moving into the ROSTENKOWSKI building and living there from 1974 through 1990. b6 b7C

She confirmed that the ROSTENKOWSKIS had a cottage on Benedict Lake which is not far from Twin Lakes, Wisconsin. She has been there on a few occasions when her daughter was asked to go swimming by the ROSTENKOWSKI daughters. She and her husband do not get invited there by the ROSTENKOWSKIS because they are "not in their league." She denied ever doing work for the ROSTENKOWSKIS at their cottage but did agree with the statement from ROBERT RUSSO that he went to the cottage once to trim bushes when requested to do so. This was quite a long time ago and stated this only happened once. She further stated her husband was not good at yard work. An individual called "Cowboy" cut the grass at the ROSTENKOWSKI cottage for a period of time. He is a local man who did that sort of thing for a living.

At the beginning of the interview, IRENE RUSSO wanted it to be known to the interviewing agents that she has a great deal of respect for Congressman ROSTENKOWSKI and wished people would talk about the good things he has done. Also at the beginning of the interview, prior to the arrival of her husband, when she was told she was being interviewed concerning the employment of her and her husband by ROSTENKOWSKI, she stated her husband had worked for the City of Chicago and only after additional discussion did she agree that her husband also worked for ROSTENKOWSKI.

Attorney [redacted], white male, date of birth (DOB) [redacted], work address [redacted] was advised of the identity of the interviewing Agent and the purpose of the interview. He provided the following information: b6 b7C

[redacted] first met representative JOE KOLTER by working for him on his campaign for U.S. Congress, beginning in June 1982. KOLTER won the election and asked [redacted] to work for him on his staff as a congressional legislative assistant. [redacted] accepted the position and began work at KOLTER's office in Washington, DC, on January 3, 1983. [redacted] resigned from the position in mid-August 1986. [redacted] job required him to be an expert about some of the issues in which Congressman KOLTER was interested. [redacted] also wrote speeches for KOLTER, drafted generic response letters from KOLTER to his constituents and met with lobbyists, business persons and KOLTER's constituents. [redacted] had minimal contacts with the business and accounting part of KOLTER's office. [redacted] said that KOLTER kept very tight control of his office finances and accounting procedures. [redacted] mentioned that only KOLTER had the card necessary to use the house office supply store which provided free office supplies to members of congress. b6 b7C

[redacted] knows nothing about any improper postage stamp usage by KOLTER. [redacted] said that the office almost always used the congressional frank for its outgoing mail. Very occasionally, if it was determined that use of the congressional postage frank was inappropriate, the office would obtain stamps from the U.S. House of Representatives Post Office. It was [redacted] impression that the stamps were paid for out of the office budget but he knows no details about how this was done. [redacted] never had any reason to believe that KOLTER engaged in any questionable or illegal activities. b6 b7C

[redacted] left KOLTER's employment under good circumstances; [redacted] said that the position did not pay well and it was time for him to move to a new job. [redacted] noted that he spent nearly three years as a legislative assistant whereas most people leave after only eighteen months. [redacted] does not maintain contact with KOLTER.

'Unusual' setup: Illinois Rep. Dan Rostenkowski's payroll records are sought in a House probe.

Files missing in House probe

Rostenkowski's payroll records, special arrangements investigated

By Paul M. Rodriguez
THE WASHINGTON TIMES

House officials responding to a federal grand jury subpoena focusing on possible ghost employees on Rep. Dan Rostenkowski's staff found a number of the congressman's personnel and payroll records missing, The Washington Times learned.

House officials also learned of "unusual" arrangements set up at the House finance office for the Illinois Democrat, such as providing him the same payroll counselor for the past 13 years instead of rotating the counselor every two years to other congressmen.

The discovery of the missing documents in late September prompted an internal House investigation and speculation among some officials that the missing records relate to the ongoing federal probe of the House post office.

House officials do not know at this time if payroll records for other congressmen may be missing as well, according to current and former congressional and law enforcement officials who spoke to The Times on the condition of annoymity.

Besides the missing documents, officials confirmed that the payroll counselor assigned to Mr. Rostenkowski was recently dismissed and that he since testified before the grand jury about operations at the finance office.

Since his dismissal two weeks ago, the former payroll counselor denied any wrongdoing and is considering legal action against his supervisors to clear his name, other sources said.

The finance office controls the personnel and payroll records for the House and is supposed to rotate its counselors, who handle hiring and salary records for employees, with every Congress or every two years at a minimum.

The officials said the grand jury has a keen interest in the possibility that there may have been ghost employees on Mr. Rostenkowski's payrolls who were paid without working.

As chairman of the House Ways and Means Committee, Mr. Rostenkowski can hire staff not only for his congressional district and Washington offices, but also for the tax-writing Ways and Means panel and for the Joint Committee on Taxation. The latter panel consists of members from the House and the Senate who meet on tax policy.

"There are a lot of questions [from the grand jury] about employees that appear on the official House payroll records but who may not have actually worked," said one of the officials.

Besides the subpoena for Mr. Rostenkowski's payroll records, the grand jury also issued subpoenas to top aides on the House Administration Committee, the Joint Committee on Taxation and the finance office to testify this week about personnel and office expense vouchers controlled by the congressman.

The grand jury is trying to determine whether Mr. Rostenkowski is involved in an embezzlement scheme to improperly convert office stamps and expense vouchers for cash and for fraudulent lease arrangements for official cars and offices, sources said.

Along with Mr. Rostenkowski, two Pennsylvania Democrats — former Rep. Joe Kolter and Rep. Austin J. Murphy — were linked to the post office scandal. All three lawmakers denied any wrongdoing and invoked their Fifth Amendment right not to testify before the grand jury.

At least seven former post office employees, including former Postmaster Robert V. Rota, and a former top aide to Mr. Kolter pleaded guilty to various charges, including embezzlement and illegal drug distribution. All are said to be cooperating with the U.S. attorney's ongoing probe.

The new U.S. attorney, former District Judge Eric H. Holder Jr., is expected to decide whether to proceed with the case prosecutors reportedly prepared against Mr. Rostenkowski and others involved in the post office scandal.

His decision — possibly as early as this week — will determine whether the grand jury's authority lapses at the end of this month or is extended under special circumstances with the approval of the Justice Department and the courts.

The former payroll counselor denied any wrongdoing.

The fired payroll counselor, who was said to be visiting his parents in Pennsylvania, could not be reached for comment.

Officials in the House and the U.S. Attorney's Office would not comment about their separate probes. A spokesman for Mr. Rostenkowski referred questions to Robert Bennett, the congressman's attorney, but he could not be reached late yesterday.

The House's internal probe is trying to determine how and why confidential personnel and payroll records may have disappeared without being noticed by supervisors over a period of several years.

"There will have to be some sort of public hearing on this because this is not the first time something like this has happened and we find out after the fact," said one of several sources familiar with the issue.

"It certainly has us concerned," said another source. "We just don't know what's missing, and what's worse is we wouldn't have found out that anything was missing if there hadn't been a search to comply with the subpoena."

House officials also are interested in finding out why the normal procedure for rotating payroll counselors at least every two years was not applied in Mr. Rostenkowski's case.

The concept of rotating such clerks is supposed to "cut down on possible fraud or tampering with the records," one of the sources said. "With Rosty, the counselor never rotated off ... even though he [the counselor] would be rotated like everybody else" when it involved other members.

The sources said the fired employee was the only counselor allowed to work on Mr. Rostenkowski's records since at least 1982. Otherwise, he rotated working for other congressmen on a regular basis like other counselors.

"This [arrangement] was done years ago at the specific request of Mr. Rostenkowski," said one of the sources. "Only he [Mr. Rostenkowski] could talk to [the counselor] and that special arrangement was known and approved by everybody in a higher authority" at the finance office, another source said.

Irregularity denied in Rostenkowski files

But Foley says records were missing

By Paul M. Rodriguez
THE WASHINGTON TIMES

Speaker Thomas S. Foley yesterday confirmed that payroll records for Rep. Dan Rostenkowski's office were missing when subpoenaed by a federal grand jury investigating the Illinois Democrat's role in the House post office scandal.

Mr. Foley was asked numerous questions at his daily news conference following a report on the missing documents in yesterday's editions of The Washington Times.

The Washington Democrat said the missing paperwork authorizes the hiring of an employee or a change in salary.

"There is no indication that there is any payroll irregularity," Mr. Foley told reporters at his regular news conference. "As far as I know, all of the payroll records are in order. . . .

"As far as I know, all of the payroll records [for Mr. Rostenkowski] are in order . . . ," Mr. Foley said. "I don't think there is any evidence of" any ghost employees who may have been hired by the congressman.

"I mean, obviously that would be a matter of great concern, but I don't think there is any evidence of it at all," Mr. Foley said.

The speaker said that he was briefed on the matter recently and that as soon as he found out about the missing documents, he ordered staff to inform the U.S. Attorney's Office immediately.

Current and former federal and congressional officials told The Times that the grand jury has been asking numerous questions about the possibility that ghost employees who were paid without working may have been hired by Mr. Rostenkowski, especially in his Chicago district office.

Aides to Mr. Rostenkowski denied there were any employees on the congressman's payroll that did not work.

Among those questioned by the grand jury lately is a fired payroll counselor, who worked exclusively on Mr. Rostenkowski's payroll records for nearly 13 years, instead of being rotated every two years like other counselors.

Mr. Foley said that "in the past, it would not have [been] the same payroll counselor" who would have been assigned to a congressman for so long.

"The routine was to change them," Mr. Foley confirmed. "But I am not aware of any particular circumstances where others were not kept, but there is no strict rule, as I understand, against keeping the same counselor if a member requests it."

Meanwhile, House Republican leaders were reportedly considering holding public hearings on the matter to air out what many consider to be unusual circumstances surrounding the discovery of the missing files and the firing of the career payroll counselor involved.

Another option under Republican consideration is to assign the matter to a newly created office for an inspector general, who is expected to be appointed within the next week to 10 days.

"Something stinks down there, and we need to get to the bottom of it," one Republican member said yesterday, echoing comments of other GOP members when asked if they knew any details about the missing records in the House finance office.

Democratic officials, however, downplayed the seriousness of the missing files based on a preliminary search of backup computer and after-action payroll memos that they believe account for all of the employees hired by Mr. Rostenkowski going back to the late 1970s.

"There's just nothing there," said one Democratic source who asked not to be further identified. "Yes, there are missing documents, but we've been able to go back into the computer records and reconstruct his [Rostenkowski's] payroll activities."

A key aspect to the missing records is that they contain the original signature of Mr. Rostenkowski authorizing any personnel or payroll changes on his staff.

Without the original request forms, there is no proof that the congressman authorized the hiring, firing or salary changes for any employee.

Sources said that the former payroll counselor denied any wrongdoing and is considering legal action against his supervisors to clear his name.

The finance office controls the personnel, payroll and expense records for the House.

The grand jury has spent nearly two years investigating wrongdoing at the House post office, including embezzlement and illegal drug sales, and allegations of money laundering.

So far, six former post office employees and former Postmaster Robert V. Rota have been found guilty, as has a former administrative assistant to former Rep. Joe Kolter, Pennsylvania Democrat.

Mr. Rostenkowski, Mr. Kolter and Rep. Austin J. Murphy, Pennsylvania Democrat, were caught up in the scandal but denied any wrongdoing. All three lawmakers invoked their Fifth Amendment rights to avoid testifying before the grand jury.

While the criminal probe is far reaching, the central target of prosecutors appears to be Mr. Rostenkowski, who reportedly was accused by Mr. Rota of illegally converting thousands of dollars worth of stamps for cash.

[redacted] On September 10, 1993, Special Agent (SA) [redacted] took photographs of vehicles identified as follows:

(Car #1) Ford Taurus, with a partial Vehicle Identification Number (VIN#) BP30U7GG279141, having Illinois license number KMR.

A total of 12 photographs were taken, photographs 1-4 were taken at 9:30AM, and photographs 5-12 were taken at 2:00PM. All of the cars mentioned above were photographed while they were parked on the east side of North Noble Street, Chicago, Illinois, just outside 1347-49 N. Noble, and 1370 W. Evergreen, Chicago, Illinois. Immediately after taking the photographs of each vehicle, SA [redacted] recorded the VIN# of each vehicle on two pieces of note pad. SA [redacted] was unable to read the entire VIN# for the Ford Taurus because a piece of paper, located inside the vehicle, was covering the first three digits. The pieces of note pad are being maintained in a 1A Envelope, and a log identifying the photographs is attached.

Rosty Ex-Opponent Hits Gifts to Ethics Members

Rep. Dan Rostenkowski (D-Ill.), through a political action committee he controls, gave $2,350 to members of the House ethics committee, which has been asked to investigate Rostenkowski, a former election opponent said Saturday.

Former Ald. Dick Simpson, who was defeated in a 1992 Democratic primary bid for Rostenkowski's seat in Congress, charged the donations "tainted the committee." Simpson called for the appointment of an independent investigator.

The U.S. attorney's office in Washington is trying to determine whether Rostenkowski improperly benefited from his dealings with the House post office.

Simpson said Rostenkowski's America's Leaders Fund donated $1,500 to Rep. Jim McDermott (D-Wash.), who in February became chairman of the House Committee of Standards of Official Conduct, the formal name of the ethics committee. Rostenkowski also contributed $500 to Rep. Nancy Pelosi (D-Calif.) and $350 to Rep. Benjamin L. Cardin (D-Md.). Both are current ethics committee members.

The committee usually waits until a federal investigation is over before it launches its own inquiry.

"Because they accepted the donations, the three congressmen should be disqualified and a temporary chairman must appoint an independent counsel to investigate Rostenkowski," said Simpson.

Reached at home, Rostenkowski declined to listen to Simpson's charges or to comment. "He's just positioning himself to run," the congressman said.

Rostenkowski's PAC use attacked

Former Ald. Dick Simpson charged Saturday that U.S. Rep. Dan Rostenkowski (D-Chicago) "bought off" three members of the House Ethics Committee with campaign contributions.

Simpson said Rostenkowski, chairman of the Ways and Means Committee, "stone-walled" requested investigations of the charges.

Simpson, who ran against Rostenkowski in 1991, said last month that he submitted a complaint to the Ethics Committee about the use of Rostenkowski's state political action committee, called the America's Leaders Fund. He said the Ethics Committee refused to accept the complaint because Rostenkowski contributed $2,350 from the America's Leaders Fund to the campaigns of the Ethics Committee's chairman and two panel members.

Such contributions are a common fundraising practice.

Simpson said the House members who accepted PAC contributions from Rostenkowski "should remove themselves from consideration of this case before the House Ethics Committee, an immediate preliminary investigation should be begun and an outside counsel should be hired."

Rosty Probers Checking Gabinski

WASHINGTON—A federal grand jury investigating Rep. Dan Rostenkowski (D-Ill.) subpoenaed House records on campaign literature and other material printed for the congressman for Ald. Theris M. Gabinski and his 32nd Ward political committee.

The subpoena was served two weeks ago, according to a report prepared for publication in today's Washington Times.

The demand for more records on Rostenkowski and Gabinski, his Northwest Side political protege, indicated the investigation remained active one month after Attorney General Janet Reno demanded the resignation of Jay B. Stephens, the Republican federal prosecutor in the District of Columbia who ran the investigation for the past year.

The subpoena for records of House printer David L. Andrukitis demanded any documents since 1979 related to work performed for Rostenkowski, his campaign committee, or a political action committee that he controls. The grand jury also asked the House printer about any work done for Gabinski or the 32nd Ward Regular Democratic Organization.

Gabinski refused comment Thursday night.

Political briefing

By Lynn Sweet

Rosty probers: Justice Department probers subpoenaed the state Democratic Party last week for a slew of campaign records as part of its investigation of Rep. Dan Rostenkowski (D-Ill.).

The subpoena, one of the first to go out since the departure of U.S. Attorney Jay Stephens, shows the investigation is still alive, as Attorney General Janet Reno promised.

The subpoena asked for records showing anything sent to Rostenkowski's campaign committee or anything received from the congressman or his various campaign funds.

Justice asked for records going back to 1979. But the party sent to Washington documents dating from 1990, when state Chairman Gary J. LaPaille took over.

On another front, the Federal Election Commission sent letters to North and Northwest Side committeemen and some suburban mayors asking for information on contributions they received from America Leaders, a political fund controlled by Rostenkowski.

Ald. William J. P. Banks (36th), the 36th Ward committeeman, said the FEC asked him about funds that may have been spent on Rostenkowski's behalf. Dick Simpson, who lost to Rostenkowski in the primary, had filed a complaint questioning whether the fund should be allowed to send money to other politicians.

Top Rosty Aide Gets Immunity From Probers

By Michael Briggs
Sun-Times Washington Bureau

WASHINGTON—A top aide to Rep. Dan Rostenkowski was granted immunity by prosecutors investigating the congressional, campaign and personal finances of the Chicago Democrat, sources confirmed Monday.

Virginia C. Fletcher, who runs Rostenkowski's congressional office on Capitol Hill, was called back before a grand jury after the government granted her immunity, according to lawyers familiar with the investigation.

Once immunized, witnesses no longer may refuse to cooperate for fear testimony might be used against them.

Fletcher has worked for Rostenkowski since 1963 and is paid more than $90,000 a year to run his congressional office. Rostenkowski also has been paying her legal bills in connection with the grand jury investigation.

Paul Perito, Fletcher's attorney, did not return a telephone call.

Mary A. Lesinski, a former assistant to Fletcher, previously was granted immunity after she invoked her Fifth Amendment protection against self-incrimination.

The grand jury also reportedly has subpoenaed records of the Democratic Party in Illinois and demanded records of official or campaign materials printed for Rostenkowski or for Ald. Terry M. Gabinski (32nd), the congressman's protege.

The investigation of Rostenkowski became public almost a year ago, when the congressman acknowledged that records of his congressional office expenses were subpoenaed in connection with the post office probe.

House records showed purchases of unusually large numbers of stamps for Rostenkowski's office. Taxpayers and Rostenkowski political funds were charged $55,000 for stamps since 1986, even though most congressional mailing does not require regular postage.

The grand jury investigation was expanded after the Sun-Times reported that Rostenkowski paid more than $73,000 in campaign funds to himself and his sisters for a little-used office and that he took personal ownership of three vehicles for which taxpayers were charged at least $71,000 in lease payments.

Immunity grants help Rostenkowski probe

WASHINGTON—The wide-ranging investigation of Rep. Dan Rostenkowski is steaming forward as prosecutors continue to grant immunity to key aides in Washington and Chicago, including Ald. Terry Gabinski, to compel their testimony before a federal grand jury.

Prosecutors began granting immunity to the first of numerous staffers as long ago as last year. Well over a dozen have appeared before the grand jury.

Gabinski succeeded Rostenkowski (D-Ill.) as 32nd Ward Democratic committeeman on the Near Northwest Side and is a protege of the congressman. He also has wide knowledge about the financial records of the 32nd Ward Regular Democratic Organization. The grand jury has subpoenaed the ward records.

Attempts to gain comment from either Gabinski or his Washington lawyer were unsuccessful.

Prosecutors also have granted immunity to Nancy Panzke, who runs Rostenkowski's congressional office in Chicago. The grand jury also has sought spending records from Rostenkowski's congressional office and records from his political funds.

In Washington, prosecutors have granted immunity to Rostenkowski's long-time administrative assistant, Virginia Fletcher, a fact first disclosed in Monday's Los Angeles Times, and to legislative assistant Mary Lesinski.

Immunity typically is granted to witnesses who refuse to answer questions based on their right to protect themselves against self-incrimination. It does not imply any indication of guilt.

The Clinton administration last month called for the resignation of all U.S. attorneys, including Jay Stephens, U.S. attorney in Washington, but sources familiar with the case say that activity before the grand jury has been steady.

Stephens had driven the inquiry since it began more than 18 months ago, and when he departed, he suggested that his dismissal might derail the investigation of Rostenkowski, who as chairman of the House Ways and Means Committee is seen as crucial to the success of the president's economic plans.

But several sources familiar with the case said that federal prosecutors have in no way backed off their investigation, which is exploring allegations that Rostenkowski and others engaged in a stamps-for-cash scandal emanating from the House Post Office.

A Rostenkowski spokesman said the congressman saw "nothing unusual or ominous about the fact that they have asked for and granted immunity" for staff members. "Nor does it imply anything negative," the spokesman said.

Atty. Gen. Janet Reno has said that Rostenkowski's case will be treated no differently because of his prominence, although she acknowledged that she would expect to be informed about the indictment of any member of Congress.

A federal prosecutor's request for immunity is approved by a top deputy in the Justice Department's criminal division, according to a department spokesman.

Sources familiar with the case said that the immunity grants indicate that government lawyers have a circumstantial case against Rostenkowski based on thousands of pages of documents they have subpoenaed over the last decade involving his congressional and campaign expenses.

The sources contend that government lawyers still lack evidence that Rostenkowski received any money.

The witnesses could fill in those gaps. At the same time, their testimony could bolster Rostenkowski's long-standing contention that he has done nothing wrong.

Sources said they believe any decision about an indictment of Rostenkowski might be at least two months away.

Fletcher, who has served on Rostenkowski's staff since the early 1960s, has been before the grand jury at least five times, sources said.

Rostenkowski has been paying thousands of dollars in legal bills for his aides, including Fletcher, out of his political funds.

Ald. Terry Gabinski (32nd) has been granted immunity in the Rostenkowski probe.

Office Expenses Pay Off for Pols

Making a few extra bucks off their office expense allowances is a long-standing custom for Chicago politicians.

Enterprising officeholders have developed a system of buying a building for cheap and leasing it to themselves and their political allies, who generally tap their office allowances to pay the rent.

Rep. Dan Rostenkowski (D-Ill.) practically perfected the system.

During the last 25 years, Rostenkowski's family has received hundreds of thousands of dollars in government rents from two simple storefront buildings they own on North Damen Avenue.

The adjoining buildings at 2148 and 2150 N. Damen have served for years as the combined offices of Rostenkowski, Ald. Terry Gabinski (32nd) and the 32nd Ward Regular Democratic Organization.

In addition to the government-paid rents, records show, Rostenkowski's daughters have received additional income from one of the Damen buildings, possibly from secret 32nd Ward campaign funds the congressman once controlled.

The Damen building lease arrangements are separate from the $73,000 rent the Sun-Times previously reported Rostenkowski's congressional campaign committee has paid him and his sisters since 1986 for a little-used office in a building at 1347-49 N. Noble. That office connects to his home.

A federal grand jury is investigating Rostenkowski's lease deals at both the Damen and Noble locations as part of its wide-ranging probe of the congressman's finances, sources said.

In an interview last year, Rostenkowski deflected questions about the Damen building leases, observing only that "values have skyrocketed" in the surrounding Bucktown neighborhood.

Both Damen buildings are held in land trusts and are leased through nominees for the Rostenkowski family, obscuring the ownership from the public. While Rostenkowski would be prohibited by law from renting his congressional office from himself, he is allowed to rent from a family member.

Rostenkowski's father, Joseph, bought the 2148 N. Damen building in 1967 for $14,000. The congressman then moved his district office into the building and used his federal expense allowance to pay rent.

The congressman's two sisters became the building's owners after Joseph Rostenkowski's death and retained the lease. Last year alone, the sisters were paid $18,000 rent from the federal government. Taxpayers also paid the utility bills for the office. Rostenkowski's lease with his sisters was first disclosed in a published report in 1977.

Rostenkowski bought the adjoining storefront at 2150 N. Damen in 1968 for $6,000 and added an addition. The 2150 building then became the headquarters of Gabinski and the ward organization.

The congressman transferred ownership of the building to his four daughters in December, 1977, three days before he would have been required to disclose his income from the building under new federal ethics guidelines.

Records obtained by the Sun-Times show the building provided the daughters with gross income of $16,000 in 1985, $21,040 in 1986 and $27,400 in 1987.

Some of that money came from Gabinski's aldermanic expense allowance. Gabinski has been paying $12,000 a year in city funds since 1989 to rent his office from Rostenkowski's daughters, records show. Before 1989, aldermen didn't have to disclose how they spent their office allowances.

The source of the rest of the money the daughters got from the 2150 building for those years can't be discerned from public records.

The most likely source is secret political funds maintained by the 32nd Ward organization, the other occupant of the 2150 building.

Secret funds: Rostenkowski was allowed legally to control secret campaign funds, a luxury available to few national politicians, because he was the 32nd Ward Democratic committeeman from 1960 to 1988. Gabinski then became committeeman.

Loopholes in Illinois campaign finance laws allow committeemen to maintain campaign funds that are exempt from the normal public disclosure requirements.

In addition to its publicly reported campaign fund, Rostenkowski's ward organization has kept both a 32nd Ward Committeeman's Fund and a 32nd Ward Civic Fund, neither of which makes public reports.

The existence of the secret funds is shown in reports submitted by other campaign committees controlled by Rostenkowski and Gabinski. Those committees transferred at least $42,000 to the two secret funds from 1987 to 1991, records show.

Committeemen are the elected leaders of their political party, and their funds are considered exempt from disclosure because the filing requirements apply only to candidates for public offices.

Because the funds do not report their finances, it is impossible for the public to determine how much money they control, the sources of that money or how it is spent.

Committeeman funds are supposed to lose their exemption from filing public reports if they spend $1,000 or more to back a candidate for public office. The 32nd Ward appears to have exceeded that limit when it shifted $3,056 from a non-reporting fund to Gabinski's aldermanic campaign fund on Oct. 22, 1991, Gabinski's records show.

Rostenkowski was forced to move his congressional office this year when redistricting put the Damen location in Rep. Luis Gutierrez's district. But the ward offices remain in the Damen buildings.

Gabinski Quiet on Home Front

Ald. Terry Gabinski (32nd) is Dan Rostenkowski's guy in Chicago.

Rostenkowski tapped the unknown 30-year-old former schoolteacher to represent the 32nd Ward at City Hall in 1969, passing over several more-senior members of his Democratic ward organization.

Gabinski, 54, has repaid his mentor since with unquestioned loyalty. "He's the boss, and that's fine with me," Gabinski told Chicago magazine in 1991. "It's always been fine with me to be able to say, 'I'm with Dan Rostenkowski.' "

"Terry's always thought of himself as a surrogate to Danny," said talk show host /media consultant Dave Baum, who struck up a lasting friendship with Gabinski when each was a newcomer at City Hall.

Prosecutors investigating Rostenkowski in Washington, D.C., have tried to put that loyalty to the test, granting Gabinski immunity in an effort to compel his testimony before a federal grand jury.

Gabinski, who rarely wastes his breath on reporters, refused to answer questions from the Sun-Times.

Keeping quiet is the trait that has most distinguished Gabinski during his 24 years at City Hall. Rather than get involved in speechmaking on the Council floor, he has made his mark by taking care of day-to-day ward problems.

Gabinski has shown little ambition for higher office, even though he is liked well enough by his City Council colleagues that he almost became mayor in 1987 when Harold Washington died. White aldermen attempted to advance Gabinski as a compromise successor before settling on Eugene Sawyer.

Gabinski is the city's vice mayor, a position that gives him a small staff and little power. As vice mayor, Gabinski would become acting mayor if for some reason Mayor Daley were unable to serve. He is considered one of Daley's closest friends on the Council.

In addition to the aldermanic post, Gabinski also is the 32nd Ward Democratic committeeman, a position he inherited from Rostenkowski in 1988 after patronage reforms had eliminated most of its clout. Gabinski is still believed to consult Rostenkowski on major ward or political matters.

Like his mentor, Gabinski is an avid golfer. He built a summer home within a mile of Rostenkowski's house in southeastern Wisconsin.

Also like Rostenkowski, Gabinski bills his campaign fund for Wisconsin golf outings and for dinners at Gibson's Steakhouse, 1028 N. Rush.

Gabinski takes full advantage of the perks of his office, charging city taxpayers for the rent and insurance on his Lincoln Town Car and for all of his mobile telephone bills—which have included many calls to his Wisconsin home, to the law offices of former Ald. Edward R. Vrdolyak, and to the office of his good friend Peter Huizenga, a major stockholder in Waste Management Inc. who runs an investment company, city records show.

On a 1985 questionnaire, Gabinski told the Sun-Times that his best quality was his patience, which came as news to those at City Hall who had witnessed his occasionally fiery temper. Some say he has been calmer since a 1991 heart attack.

Baum describes Gabinski as "a wonderful person—bright, articulate and family-oriented."

Gabinski was a bachelor until age 49. Until then, he listed his residence as his mother's house.

In 1987, he married Celeste Kropidlowski, who had long worked on Rostenkowski's congressional payroll. They now live with their two children in a town house in the 1400 block of West Altgeld that they bought for $172,000 in 1987.

Gabinski built his summer home on Powers Lake, Wis., in 1988. Wisconsin tax records show the property is valued at $427,000. Two other lots near the lake were recently bought in Gabinski's children's names for $40,000 each.

Gabinski, whose current city salary is $55,000, has always been thought to be a full-time alderman with no outside business interests. But state records show that he is a licensed insurance agent.

He has told associates he is affiliated with Near North Insurance Agency, once owned by former Cook County Board President George Dunne and now operated by Democratic insider Michael Segal. Gabinski and Segal are partners with Rostenkowski's blind trust in a Wisconsin real estate deal.

Getting the Alderman's Blessing

Every Monday night, the residents and business people of the 32nd Ward line up for the opportunity to meet one-on-one with their alderman, Terry Gabinski.

They come to complain. They come for help. Whatever the grievance or problem, they get a chance to tell him to his face. First come, first served. Doors open at 7 p.m.

"Ward night," they call it, a tradition still followed by most of Chicago's aldermen. This is the good side of Chicago's old Democratic Machine—solving people's problems, clearing up gripes before they fester, earning loyalty and votes. On ward night, the alderman is equal parts political boss, ombudsman and social worker.

Ward night is just one of the techniques that has helped U.S. Rep. Dan Rostenkowski (D-Ill.) maintain control of his political base, the 32nd Ward, his launching pad to Congress and eventually to the chairmanship of the powerful House Ways and Means Committee.

The Rostenkowskis have controlled 32nd Ward politics for six decades, with no serious opposition for the last three. In younger days, Rostenkowski himself attended ward night, as had his father before him, Ald. Joseph Rostenkowski.

While Rostenkowski was dining with President Clinton just a few miles away in Lincolnwood recently, Gabinski carried on the ward night tradition at 32nd Ward headquarters, 2148 N. Damen.

Jose Venzor, a nattily dressed businessman, was first to sign in. He told Gabinski about plans to rehab a commercial building at Lincoln and Belmont. The development will require a zoning change and other help from City Hall.

"You have to go to the alderman first to get his blessing," Venzor explained. Gabinski was "receptive," he reported. "He said he would do whatever he can to help."

A group of about 30 residents showed up later to voice suspicions that Gabinski hadn't recognized their concerns about another development project.

The group, which included both recently arrived yuppies and older ethnic residents, demanded that Gabinski prevent a Milwaukee Avenue grocery from acquiring city property to expand its parking lot. The property on a dead-end street has been transformed by neighbors into a sculpture garden.

Gabinski told the residents that he was unaware of the expansion plans and promised to put a stop to them. Even the yuppies were impressed.

"I'm an anti-Daley voter, and I didn't trust him. But I've come to trust him," said Ed Pino, 42, recalling similar matters on which he and others have sought Gabinski's help. "As a liberal, it's real hard to vote for him. But he's come through."

Janet Jaffke, a 37-year-old clothing designer who was spokeswoman for the group, said Gabinski gets her vote, too.

"He's always tried to work something out for us," she said.

Gabinski also fielded a typical array of concerns from anyone willing to sign in and wait for an audience. A gaggle of aides and precinct captains waited nearby to help.

Miguel and Genevieve Arroyo, of the 1500 block of North Bosworth, wanted help with their water bill, which they said was too high because of a leaky water meter. Gabinski promised to take care of it, they said.

Mrs. Arroyo said she and her neighbors had come to ward night for similar problems many times before. "When we have little things, they do it for us," she said.

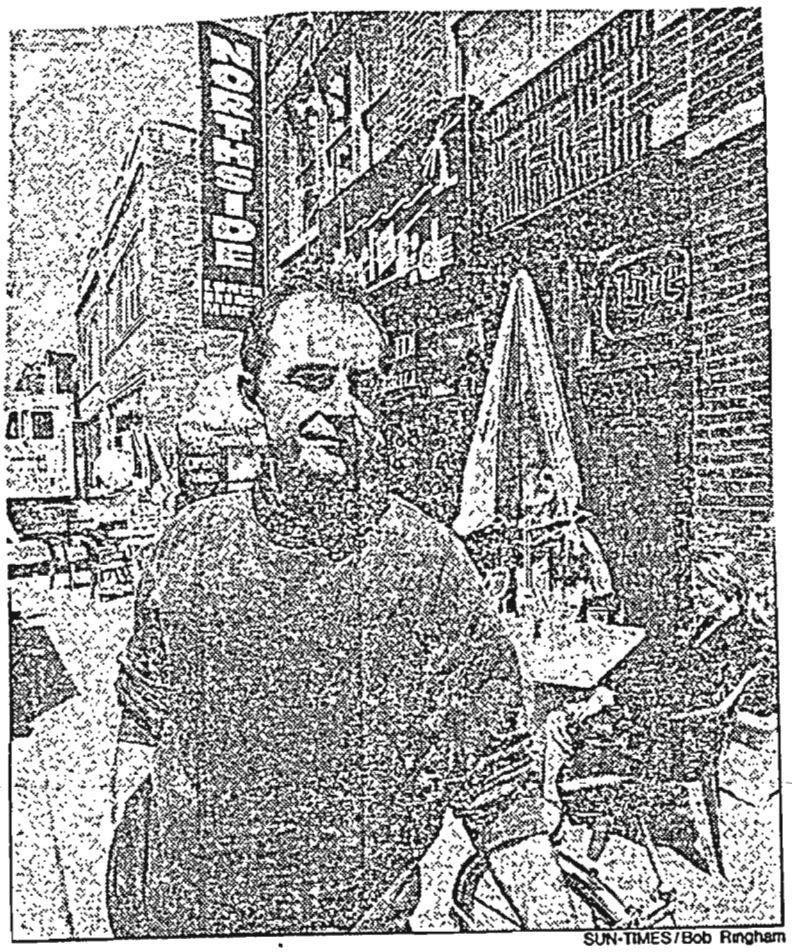
Mauro Sanchez said he had paid several visits to the alderman to enlist his help in a fight with City Hall over a complicated home remodeling project.

If you don't know anybody, it's difficult to get anything accomplished at City Hall, said Sanchez, a carpenter who lives in the 1800 block of North Winchester. When he tried to get the proper permits on his own, Sanchez found himself "bouncing back and forth from one desk to the next."

Gabinski assigned his top aide to straighten out the matter, Sanchez said. He said the aide asked only that he support Gabinski in his next election.

Unlike the ward night regulars, Emily Stromdahl, 32, was making her first visit. She was angry because city crews had posted temporary "no parking" signs on her street four days earlier and left them there. Nobody had shown up to do any work, leaving residents without daytime parking, she said.

She said she got madder when she called the alderman's office to complain and was given the brush-off. Stromdahl marched in on ward night with her children, Kathryn, 2, and Kenneth Jr., 1, in their stroller.



"My neighbors won't come here because they don't think they'll do anything," said Stromdahl, visibly exhilarated by her own assertiveness. She reported Gabinski told her that "he'll see what he can do."

Book Binds Businesses

Every fall, the 32nd Ward Regular Democratic Organization publishes its "ad book"—a bound collection of advertisements from businesses and individuals who make campaign donations.

The 1992 book had 184 pages and more than 300 ads, mostly from businesses in the ward, but also from businessmen outside the ward who are friends of U.S. Rep. Dan Rostenkowski (D-Ill.) or Ald. Terry Gabinski (32nd).

A donation of $500 or more gets you a gold page in the front. At the bottom of each page is a reminder: "Please patronize our advertisers."

"That's our ward. We like to help them out in case we need help," said advertiser Elliott Slutzky, owner of Coffee Unlimited, 2450 N. Greenview. Slutzky said he occasionally needs to have an abandoned car removed. "You put an ad in there, and at least they know your name when you call."

Patronage workers are expected to sell the ads.

"It's not like they put a gun to your head," said one former 32nd Ward captain.

Rosty's Dad Blazed Trail

Joseph P. Rostenkowski, a Chicago alderman from 1931 to 1955, wanted something better for his son, Daniel.

So with the help of then-Mayor Richard J. Daley, he made his son a congressman in 1958.

Daley owed him. The elder Rostenkowski had been defeated for reelection in 1955 when he had supported Daley for mayor over a Polish candidate, Benjamin C. Adamowski.

Joseph P. Rostenkowski

"Big Joe Rusty," as he was called, represented the 32nd Ward from 1931 to 1933. A change of ward boundaries put him in the 32nd Ward in 1933, marking the beginning of his family's political dynasty in that ward.

After his 1955 defeat, Joseph Rostenkowski told reporters: "I'm going to get young men and young women into the organization to give it life. And I'm going to build around my son, the senator." He gave the interview from his insurance office at 1372 W. Evergreen, which is now his son's home.

At the time, Dan Rostenkowski was a state senator, following the same path that his father had used to get to the City Council.

Joseph Rostenkowski made good on his comeback pledge, retaining the 32nd Ward Democratic committeeman's post at the next election. He passed along the office to Dan in 1960.

He died in 1970 at age 77, spending his final years in a federal patronage post, U.S. collector of customs for the Port of Chicago. President John F. Kennedy made the appointment.

Rosty Keeps Payroll Jobs All in the Family

Government always has been a family affair for U.S. Rep. Dan Rostenkowski.

Rostenkowski, who followed in his father's political footsteps, has been joined on the public payroll at one time or another by each of his four daughters and his two sisters.

The Rostenkowski women mainly have gravitated to jobs with the Illinois General Assembly or City Council, where they obtained positions with legislators or aldermen beholden to his 32nd Ward Democratic organization.

The congressman, meanwhile, sometimes has been able to find jobs on his federal payroll for relatives of the politicians who hire his family members.

James E. Nedza is a notable example. Nedza, the son of former state Sen. Edward Nedza (D-Chicago), found a $12,000-a-year spot with Rostenkowski's congressional staff from 1983 through 1986.

During that same four-year stretch, the senior Nedza hired Rostenkowski's youngest daughter, Stacy, and oldest daughter, Dawn, to his legislative staff, also at $12,000 a year.

Stacy, now 32, was hired by Nedza in 1983 to "provide assistance in responding to constituent requests and researching issues," her contract states. Dawn, who is now 41, assumed her contract in mid-1985.

"I remember my father saying at one point that one of Dan's daughters was working for him," said the younger Nedza. But Nedza, now 36, said he was not aware of any job-swapping agreement between his father and Rostenkowski.

Nedza said he worked as a clerk for Rostenkowski while he was a college student at Illinois Institute of Technology.

Records show Stacy is a veteran of the state payroll, getting her first part-time job at age 15 for Sen. Norbert Kosinski, who was the 32nd Ward's man in Springfield until his death in 1978.

When Kosinski died, Stacy got a $15,000-a-year contract with his replacement, Sen. Walter J. Nega, who had been Rostenkowski's longtime administrative assistant.

Nega's son Joseph has worked for the congressman for more than a decade. He is a $77,628-a-year attorney for the Joint Committee on Taxation, which is part of Rostenkowski's Washington domain.

Another Rostenkowski daughter, Gayle, held jobs in the Aviation Department from 1975 to 1977, as a City Council investigator for 10 weeks in 1980, and as an aldermanic secretary from 1981 to 1984.

Gayle, 37, most recently surfaced on the state payroll in 1990, when she received $6,000 in contracts to research and analyze environmental legislation for then-Rep. Myron Kulas (D-Chicago), the 32nd Ward's last man in the Legislature.

"She was between jobs," said Kulas, who was defeated for re-election and now has a county job. "She needed some help. I helped her out for a time."

Kulas said the congressman did not ask him to hire his daughter.

Rostenkowski's other daughter, Kristie, 39, held jobs with former U.S. Rep. Morgan Murphy (D-Ill.) and former U.S. Sen. Alan J. Dixon. The daughters also have held private-sector jobs.

Rostenkowski's sisters also were government payroll veterans dating back to their father Joseph's days as 32nd Ward alderman.

Rostenkowski's late sister Marcia started working for the city in 1941 and made $37,600 in 1991, the year she retired at age 71. She held mostly secretarial jobs for the City Council, working for then-Ald. Joseph Kotlarz (35th) and for Ald. Terry Gabinski (32nd), whose wife worked for the congressman.

Marcia's twin sister, Gladys, got her first City Council job in 1944 and retired from the court system in 1986.

ROSTY'S EMPIRE UNDER SIEGE

Investigation Threatens Dynasty as Remaps Cut Power Base

Associated Press

Dan Rostenkowski

By Mark Brown and Chuck Neubauer
Staff Writers

As a precinct captain for the 32nd Ward Regular Democratic Organization, George Rendon is a supporting player in one of Chicago's last great political dynasties.

For more than 60 years, the family of U.S. Rep. Dan Rostenkowski has controlled 32nd Ward politics, and for the last 20 years, Rendon has delivered the votes in Rostenkowski's home precinct.

His credo: "When you help people, people never forget."

It's a tougher job than it used to be, what with patronage reforms at City Hall and racial changes in the neighborhood.

"You can't do what you used to do for the people," Rendon lamented recently, fondly recalling the days when the ward organization kept a "little kitty" of funds that precinct captains could draw on when a special need arose for a constituent.

But Rendon, 44, figures he has done his part to keep the organization strong by providing whatever little service might bring him the loyalty of his precinct's voters—even when that meant cutting their grass, painting their garages or bailing their sons out of jail.

But now Rostenkowski's Chicago empire is facing its most serious challenge ever, not from political opposition within the ward but from a federal grand jury in Washington, D.C. There's not much a precinct captain can do about that.

Investigators have focused increasingly on Rostenkowski's district office operation, especially its relationship to Ald. Terry Gabinski and the 32nd Ward Democratic organization. The grand jury apparently is trying to determine, among other things, whether federal funds were used improperly to support either the aldermanic or political operations.

Rostenkowski, Gabinski and the 32nd Ward organization shared office space for about 25 years in a building rented with taxpayer funds from the congressman's family. Rostenkowski moved out in January after a remap put the office out of his district.

Such shared office arrangements are a hallmark of traditional Chicago Democratic Machine organizations, which treat ward politics as a sort of family business with many moneymaking opportunities.

Rostenkowski's 32nd Ward has maintained many other Machine traditions—a patronage army of loyal government jobholders, unreported political funds, family members on public payrolls, and a family-owned insurance business operating out of the ward office.

As would be expected from a good precinct captain, Rendon won't discuss such things.

But he is not shy about espousing the virtues of the system that allowed him to rise from a job as the rear man on a garbage truck to his position as a $55,000-a-year ward superintendent for the Streets and Sanitation Department. That makes him the boss of eight garbage crews and the point man for other 32nd Ward housekeeping chores.

"I was the first Latino precinct captain in the 32nd Ward organization," Rendon said. "They always treated me real good. For being a minority, they treated me good."

Rendon's parents were one of the first Mexican-American families to move into St. Stan's parish—more formally, St. Stanislaus Kostka—the Near Northwest Side neighborhood where Rostenkowski still lives.

While the once-Polish area is now predominantly Hispanic, the seeds of gentrification have been sown as rehabbers buy up the 100-year-old brick homes.

Rostenkowski grew up there, as did many of the boyhood chums whom he later sponsored for judgeships and other government positions. He still can be spotted occasionally walking his dog and attending church or a wake. But he no longer hosts the big Christmas and Easter parties for children at Pulaski Park that were a neighborhood tradition.

"Many of our people don't know who he is," said Dora Gomez, 52, a neighborhood resident who volunteers at Centro Sin Fronteras, a community group that is a thorn in the side of the 32nd Ward organization.

The congressman and his wife reside in a compound of buildings on the northeast corner of Evergreen and Noble, just across from the church and the park. His home is isolated on a narrow strip between the Kennedy Expy. on the east and the park on the west, which serves somewhat as a buffer from the impoverished area on the other side.

Rostenkowski inherited the property from his father, Joseph, who started the family dynasty by getting elected alderman in 1931.

Joseph Rostenkowski held the seat until 1955, when he lost in an upset. Even then he kept the Democratic ward committeeman's post until his organization could recover the City Council seat at the next election.

He passed along the committeeman's job in 1960 to his son, who passed it on in 1988 to Gabinski. But Rostenkowski remains the ward's unquestioned political power, said David K. Fremon, author of the Almanac of Chicago Politics.

Joseph Rostenkowski, who died in 1970, would scarcely recognize the new 32nd Ward. Recent city redistrictings have dramatically shifted the ward boundaries north and east.

And in the new 5th Congressional District, very little of Rostenkowski's old turf remains. The new district starts in Lincoln Park and sweeps through the Northwest Side into the near west suburbs, stopping at the county line.

Milwaukee Avenue, the street most closely identified with Chicago's Polish community, once practically bisected the 32nd Ward. But the 1992 remap version contains only a three-block stretch. In place of Milwaukee are long stretches of the diagonal streets more associated with Chicago's yuppies: Clybourn and Lincoln avenues.

Instead of Sophie's Busy Bee, the landmark Polish diner beneath the L tracks at Damen and North Avenue, the new 32nd Ward has the Bub City Crabshack, a Lettuce Entertain You theme restaurant in the Clybourn corridor.

Damen Avenue, one of the ward's other main arteries, has been transformed from a seedy commercial-industrial strip into the bustling hub of Bucktown, one of Chicago's hottest neighborhoods.

"Even three summers ago, there was a crack house across the street," recalled Cyril Landise, 47, who now has roller bladers skating up to the sidewalk tables of his Northside Cafe, 1635 N. Damen, just down the street from the 32nd Ward office.

Even the ward office has a new, upscale next-door neighbor, the Babaluci, an Italian eatery where Gabinski and his workers occasionally can be spotted spooling pasta.

Frank Amanti, 30, the restaurant's owner, caters to yuppies but said he still draws some of the older Polish residents who caution "no spice."

Most striking of all, however, are the changes in Rostenkowski's home precinct, which is one of the most run-down in the ward. But the 1992 city remap cut most of the precinct out of the 32nd Ward, leaving only the lonely little strip where Rostenkowski lives. The rest of the neighborhood is now part of the 1st Ward.

"The neighborhood where he ran around as a snot-nose kid isn't even in the ward anymore," Emma Lozano said with a laugh.

And Lozano would like to think she is at least partly responsible.

"I think Rostenkowski thought he had to give up on this neighborhood when the Rostenkowski Playlot became the Rudy Lozano school," said Lozano, a neighbor of the congressman and director of Centro Sin Fronteras.

Lozano was referring to a new school that is being built just down the street on what had been the site of a Park District playlot. The little park was named for Joseph Rostenkowski, the organization's patriarch.

The new school building is to be named for Rudy Lozano, a onetime independent aldermanic candidate on the Southwest Side whose 1983 murder remains a rallying point for Hispanic political activists.

Lozano, Rudy's sister, has teamed up with Uptown activist Walter "Slim" Coleman to serve as an irritant to the 32nd Ward organization, even though both were soundly trounced in respective campaigns for alderman and Democratic committeeman. They did manage to get elected to the local school council. Lozano is president.

Rendon said, "The alderman told us not to get involved in the school board. We would have beat them if we ran our own candidates."

The 32nd Ward organization was not about to stand on the sidelines, however, when Lozano and Coleman tried to organize a local advisory council at Pulaski Park. The Regulars did a better job of stacking the meeting and elected their own slate with Rendon as president.

Although Lozano's group sees discrimination against Mexicans in such tactics, other longtime residents complain that the organization favors them.

"Rostenkowski is bending over backward for the Spanish people," said Ted Kozlowski, 62, a retired Cook County sheriff's employee who lives down the street from Rendon. "Almost every job in this neighborhood is going to Spanish."

Rendon is one of at least 11 city workers on the 18-member executive committee of precinct captains that advises Gabinski on ward affairs, records show. Many of them work in the Water Department, a 32nd Ward stronghold. Several have worked on the alderman's staff.

Rendon remains one of the few Hispanics in important positions in the 32nd Ward organization, even though Hispanics comprised about half of the ward's residents before the 1992 remap.

Rostenkowski still enjoys idol status among Polish Americans, while Gabinski is known as the one who handles everyday problems.

"The old-timers talk very, very highly of them," said Sophie Madej, proprietor for the last 28 years of the Busy Bee, where Rostenkowski is known to place a carry-out order for grilled pork chops and chicken noodle soup when he's in town.

"They've been doing a good job. People like them. Why change something if you don't have to?"

New Luxury Wheels Take Rosty to Work

By Michael Briggs
Sun-Times Washington Bureau

WASHINGTON—Rep. Dan Rostenkowski (D-Ill.) is being chauffeured to and from his Capitol Hill office this week in a new Lincoln.

The congressman's chief spokesman, James M. Jaffe, said no taxpayer money was spent on the car used by Rostenkowski, whose vehicle leases in Chicago have been scrutinized as part of a grand jury investigation of his finances.

The white Lincoln Town Car was purchased, according to the spokesman, by William T. Crippen, a longtime staff assistant to the House Ways and Means Committee, which Rostenkowski chairs.

List prices for the luxury car range from $35,000 to $39,000, according to a salesman at the suburban Virginia dealership that issued a temporary license for the vehicle.

Crippen was paid $59,123 last year from Ways and Means Committee funds, including a $3,000 Christmas bonus.

Crippen's main job is to prepare the committee room for meetings, keep people who are not congressmen out of closed sessions and otherwise, as Jaffe put it, "to keep everything under control" for the committee that writes tax laws.

In addition, he is the chairman's driver. Before buying the new car, he drove the chairman around Washington in a 1987 Lincoln Town Car registered in his own name in the District of Columbia.

Congress provides cars and drivers in Washington for its highest ranking leaders, but not for committee chairmen.

The new car was parked this week on a street corner outside the Longworth House Office Building, where the committee is headquartered, at a space in front of a fire hydrant and a "no parking anytime" sign.

Crippen could not be reached for comment. A call to him at the Ways and Means Committee was diverted by a receptionist to Rostenkowski's press office.

In the House, the speaker, the majority leader and minority leader are provided cars and drivers. Each party's chief whip is entitled to a car and driver as well, but neither Majority Whip David E. Bonior (D-Mich.) nor Minority Whip Newt Gingrich (R-Ga.) takes advantage of the "perk."

Other members may use office expense accounts to lease cars in their district or in Washington for use on official business, as Rostenkowski has done in Chicago.

As part of a wide-ranging investigation of Rostenkowski's personal, campaign and congressional finances, a grand jury here has subpoenaed records relating to the congressman's ownership of three vehicles in Illinois for which taxpayers were charged at least $73,000 in lease fees.

Rostenkowski Regains His Stride

Rep. Dan Rostenkowski, the Northwest Side's most renowned Democrat, is back at the top of his game.

Rostenkowski, 65, seems to be surviving the most grueling year of a political career that spans five decades. Not just surviving but doing quite well. He is emerging as President Clinton's chief legislative ally. If there was a Comeback of the Year award for major league politics, Rosty would have it just about locked up for the '93 season.

Steve Neal

More than anyone else, Rostenkowski was responsible for Clinton's first major legislative victory: the House of Representatives' approval of a $250 billion tax increase. Rostenkowski guided the bill through his Ways and Means Committee, made an impassioned speech in behalf of Clinton's tax hike before a reluctant Democratic caucus, and lined up endorsements for Clinton's program from prominent business leaders. "My agenda is your agenda," Rostenkowski told Clinton last winter. And Rostenkowski has kept his word.

Hillary Rodham Clinton, who is leading the president's health care task force, is no less dependent on Rostenkowski than her husband. Rostenkowski will be a major player in shaping the Clinton administration's health care initiatives.

For more than a year, Rostenkowski has been troubled about a probe into his office by the U.S. attorney's office in the District of Columbia. There have been allegations of possible money laundering in connection with the House Post Office. Rostenkowksi vehemently denies that he has done anything wrong; and he contends that the investigation was a "political fishing expedition.

The Rosty probe was launched by lame-duck Republican U.S. Attorney Jay Stephens, who has since been removed by Clinton and has dropped hints about running for the U.S. Senate. Stephens has a flair for publicity. He once indicted Bobby Fischer for playing chess in Yugoslavia. Stephens was guilty of overkill in the prosecution of former Washington D.C. Mayor Marion Barry. Stephens chatted about the Rostenkowski probe on national television, which boosted the prosecutor's profile but wasn't entirely fair to the Chicago congressman. There is a growing perception that Stephens may have wanted Rostenkowski as a trophy to launch a political career. Acting U.S. Attorney Ramsey Johnson, a career prosecutor who is now conducting the investigation, is more interested in practicing law than in making headlines. A decision is expected soon.

Rostenkowski, who won reelection by the thinnest margin of his 34-year congressional career in '92, told confidants last winter that he may have stayed on too long. But Rostenkowski, who enjoys his working relationship with Clinton, is making plans to seek re-election in '94. Lawyer and City Colleges Board member Ed Czadowski, a longtime associate, is putting together Rostenkowski's re-election committee.

State Sen. John Cullerton (D-Chicago) and Ald. Eugene Schulter (47th) have explored the possibility of challenging Rosty. Former Ald. Dick Simpson, who lost to Rostenkowski in the '92 primary, is making another attempt. Rostenkowski, though, isn't concerned about such competition. Rep. Nancy Kaszak (D-Chicago), though, could be a formidable rival. Rostenkowski wouldn't take her challenge lightly.

Rosty Buys First Stamps Since Postal Probe Began

By Michael Briggs
Sun-Times Washington Bureau

WASHINGTON—Rep. Dan Rostenkowski has charged stamps to his congressional expense account for the first time in the year since a federal grand jury subpoenaed records of the Chicago Democrat's unusually large stamp purchases.

A new report on congressional spending shows that a voucher was submitted Feb. 3 for 1,000 29-cent stamps purchased Dec. 1 from the House post office.

The last time stamps were bought for Rostenkowski with taxpayer money was May 4, 1992, when his office bought 1,724 stamps worth $499.96. That was two days before a federal grand jury subpoenaed Rostenkowski's records as part of an investigation of the House post office.

Rostenkowski has billed taxpayers for more stamps than any other House member. Since 1986, during the period covered by the first subpoena for Rostenkowski's expense records, his office was billed for more than $29,000 worth of stamps. His political committees spent another $26,000 at the House post office.

Rostenkowski has denied any wrongdoing. One line of inquiry in the grand jury probe apparently is whether congressmen or their aides illegally exchanged government expense vouchers or campaign checks for cash from the House post office through sham transactions disguised as stamp purchases.

It remains unclear why Rostenkowski's office would need to buy so many stamps, as the franking privilege lets members of Congress send almost all their official mail without stamps.

There are legitimate reasons to put stamps bought with congressional funds on official business packages not covered by the franking privilege, for instance, for special postal services such as Express Mail, overseas or registered mail.

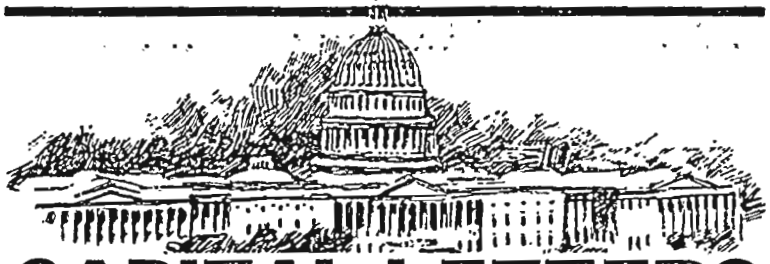
A spokesman for Rostenkowski declined to comment Thursday.

"I mail a lot," was how Rostenkowski once explained his large postage purchases.

The latest stamp charges billed to Rostenkowski's congressional office were detailed in a report on payrolls and expenses published quarterly by the House clerk.

The report shows that Rostenkowski no longer rents a mobile office, which came under grand jury scrutiny after the Chicago Sun-Times disclosed that he had charged taxpayers at least $68,250 to lease three vehicles that became his personal property.

The report also showed Rostenkowski's office was paying $1,500-a-month rent through January for space at 2148 N. Damen in Chicago in a building owned by his sisters. Because Rostenkowski's congressional district boundaries were redrawn after the 1990 census and the building now is outside his district, he opened new offices this year at 818 W. Fullerton, which he rents for $2,360 a month, and at 4849 N. Milwaukee, which he rents for $2,000 a month, according to House records.



In the latest development in the post office probe, Gerald W. Weaver II, a former aide to a Pennsylvania congressman, was sentenced Wednesday to two years in prison for obstruction of justice and drug dealing on Capitol Hill. R. Kenneth Mundy, Weaver's attorney, asked the judge to lighten Weaver's sentence because he cooperated with prosecutors.

Budget Talks Will Test Dems' Clout

By Eric Pianin
Washington Post

WASHINGTON—This week's House and Senate negotiations on a budget package will provide the most telling test yet of the Democrats' ability to rule after 12 years of Republican control of the White House.

With congressional Republicans opposed to President Clinton's tax policies, House and Senate Democrats have been left on their own to craft and pass major deficit reduction packages.

Democratic negotiators, led by Senate Finance Committee Chairman Daniel Patrick Moynihan of New York and House Ways and Means Committee Chairman Dan Rostenkowski of Illinois, must reconcile differences in the two budget bills without destroying the coalitions forged to pass them.

"We're all very much aware of what the constraints are on both sides, and the business both these chairmen are about is nothing less than saving the Democratic presidency and showing that the Democratic Party can govern," said Lawrence F. O'Donnell Jr., the Finance Committee's staff director and chief counsel.

Western and southern conservative Democrats in the Senate, who forced the leadership to drop the president's broad-based energy tax and cut more deeply into Medicare and other spending, are warning that their support could evaporate if those changes are lost during the negotiations.

Moderate and liberal House Democrats are urging conferees to scrap the gasoline and Btu taxes in favor of higher taxes on corporations and wealthy Americans.

Black and Hispanic House Democrats, meanwhile, are threatening to withdraw support unless negotiators agree to funds for "empowerment zones" that would promote investments in 10 depressed urban and rural areas.

Rosty Expected to Hang Tough

Allies Are Unwilling to Abandon Him

WASHINGTON—It was unclear Monday what effect the new disclosures in the House post office scandal would have on Rep. Dan Rostenkowski's ability to negotiate a deficit reduction agreement in Congress on behalf of President Clinton, but associates said they expected the powerful lawmaker to tough out the assault.

Guessing an indictment of the Chicago Democrat was in the works, former Rostenkowski aide Tom Sneeringer predicted, "He will gut it out. He'll file in November and be re-elected while he is standing for trial."

Rostenkowski, chairman of the House Ways and Means Committee, is viewed as the key to fashioning a deficit reduction package with just the right mix of taxes and spending cuts that can pass House muster. He heads the House group in the House-Senate conference committee that began negotiations last week and is expected to hammer out a compromise before the summer ends.

"This couldn't have come at a worse time for him or for the administration," said Chicago-based Democratic consultant David Axelrod.

The administration had no comment on the latest development, but an official indicated the White House would support its key legislative ally.

"He's been a true champion of the president's program," Rahm Emanuel, an assistant to the president and deputy director of communications, said of Rostenkowski. "He's been not only a loyal soldier, but a real leader."

For the moment, House Democratic leaders were geared to defend Rostenkowski, while Republicans generally seemed not too eager to take on the powerful chairman personally, settling instead for broad partisan swipes.

"Democrats have proven once again that power corrupts and absolute power corrupts absolutely," said Rep. Dick Armey (R-Texas). "After 40 years of uninterrupted House rule, it's sad but not surprising that Democrats don't realize it's wrong to chisel taxpayers out of thousands of dollars."

In Democratic leaderhsip offices, aides noted that Rostenkowski was not mentioned by name in the Justice Department documents and had not been indicted. Any committee chairman who is indicted must give up the chairmanship, according to a Democratic rule.

The Democratic aides surmised Rostenkowski would keep his committee chairmanship and remain a negotiator on the House-Senate conference committee.

"This will blow over," predicted Rep. Bill Richardson (D-New Mexico), another member of the conference committee. Without an indictment, Rostenkowski's influence and ability will be unaffected, he said.

Another reason Democrats have their fingers crossed is that the party has no strong backup to replace Rostenkowski. Next in seniority and Rostenkowski's presumed successor as Ways and Means chairman is Rep. Sam Gibbons (D-Fla.), who walked out of the first conference committee meeting last week minutes after it began muttering loudly "this is political BS."

One Democratic staffer who would like to get rid of Rostenkowski said, "there are no good choices for that job."

One Republican on the conference committee, Rep. John T. Myers (R-Ind.), remarked otherwise: "He should get off the committee for the good of Congress and for his own good. He will need the time."

Myers' call opens the GOP to charges of hypocrisy. While Democrats have a rule that automatically removes chairmen under indictment, Republicans have none. They have refused to remove indicted Rep. Joseph M. McDade (R-Penn.) from his ranking post on the Appropriations Committee.

Also, Republicans have never been eager to go after Rostenkowski, who they have viewed as a Democrat with whom they can deal.

Rostenkowski also has powerful Republican friends in the House, including Minority Leader Rep. Robert Michel and Rep. Henry J. Hyde (R-Ill.), the fourth-ranking member in the GOP leadership.

"I am reluctant to say that Dan is one of the congressmen referred to in the documents," said Hyde. "He hasn't been named and he is a friend."

How the Case Has Unfolded

How Rep. Dan Rostenkowski's problems with an investigation of the House post office have developed:

■ May 6, 1992: A federal grand jury investigating criminal activity by House post office employees issues subpoenas for the expense records of three congressmen, including Rostenkowski.

■ May 23, 1992: Congressional Quarterly magazine reports that James C. Smith, a House post office supervisor, has told federal investigators he helped members of Congress get thousands of dollars in cash through phony transactions disguised as stamp purchases. The magazine reports Rostenkowski had charged the government $24,776 for stamps in six years, the most of any congressman.

Jay Stephens

■ July 24, 1992: Rostenkowski and the other two congressmen under investigation in the stamp probe announce they will refuse to testify before the grand jury, asserting their Fifth Amendment right against self-incrimination. They call the probe a "politically motivated witch-hunt."

■ Sept. 17, 1992: Former House post office Chief of Staff Joanna G. O'Rourke pleads guilty to misdemeanor charges after prosecutors agree to drop a felony charge in exchange for her cooperation in the investigation.

■ Nov. 3, 1992: Rostenkowski wins 18th term in Congress.

■ Dec. 1, 1992: The Chicago Sun-Times reports that the grand jury has subpoenaed records from Rostenkowski's 1992 re-election campaign.

■ Dec. 13, 1992: A Sun-Times investigation discloses that Rostenkowski has paid more than $73,000 in campaign funds to himself and his sisters for a little-used campaign office.

■ Dec. 14, 1992: In addition to buying $29,000 in stamps from the House post office with tax dollars since 1986, Rostenkowski also used $26,000 in political funds for stamp purchases, the Sun-Times reports.

■ Jan. 7, 1993: Media reports disclose that the grand jury probe has widened to include Rostenkowski's campaign office lease arrangement and other aspects of his personal finances.

■ Jan. 11, 1993: Lawyers for Rostenkowski ask a federal judge to plug what the congressman complains are leaks to reporters by prosecutors.

■ Jan. 24, 1993: A Sun-Times investigation discloses that Rostenkowski took personal ownership of three vehicles for which taxpayers had been charged at least $68,250 in lease payments to a Wilmette car dealer.

■ Feb. 10, 1993: The Sun-Times reports the grand jury has subpoenaed the Wilmette car dealer's records involving Rostenkowski's vehicle acquisitions.

■ Feb. 12, 1993: A federal judge dismisses Rostenkowski's complaint that prosecutors leaked information to reporters about the grand jury investigation.

■ March 23, 1993: Controversy arises when new U.S. Attorney General Janet Reno asks for the immediate resignation of all holdover U.S. attorneys, including the prosecutor in the Rostenkowski case, Jay Stephens. Stephens says he was within 30 days of making a "critical decision" in the case. Reno says later that she has ordered Stephens' replacement to go "full steam ahead" in the post office investigation.

■ May 23, 1993: The Sun-Times reports that Rostenkowski's family has received hundreds of thousands of dollars in government-paid office rents from two storefront buildings they own on Damen Avenue. The lease deals are under investigation by federal probers looking increasingly at Rostenkowski's Chicago operations, including the 32nd Ward Regular Democratic Organization.

■ July 19, 1993: Former House Postmaster Robert V. Rota pleads guilty to conspiracy and embezzlement while admitting he allowed his office to be used as a convenient and largely untraceable source of illegal cash for congressmen. Court documents cite one of the recipients of illegal cash as Congressman A, whose description fits Rostenkowski.

Biography of Congressional Powerhouse

Rep. Dan Rostenkowski (D-Ill.) is Chicago's most powerful congressman.

He's the guy Mayor Daley and Gov. Edgar count on to bring home the bacon, as have mayors and governors before them. And aside from the president, there's probably nobody with more influence on the nation's tax policy.

Here are the biographical facts:

Political career: Chairman of the tax-writing House Ways and Means Committee since 1981. As chairman, he played a major role in the tax reform bill of 1986.

—Elected to the Illinois House in 1952 at age 24, becoming its youngest member. Two years later, he became the youngest member of the Illinois Senate. Became the youngest member of Congress in 1958. Re-elected 17 times, rarely getting less than 60 percent of the vote. 32nd Ward Democratic committeeman from 1960 to 1988.

Personal: Born Jan. 2, 1928, to Joseph and Priscilla (Dombrowski). Married La Verne Pirkins in 1951. They have four daughters. Probe Tightens On Rostenkowski

Court Case Ties Congressman To Post Office Embezzlement

WASHINGTON—Rep. Dan Rostenkowski (D-Ill.) was implicated Monday in the embezzlement of tens of thousands of dollars from the House post office.

Without identifying Rostenkowski by name, prosecutors divulged information pointing to the Chicago congressman in federal court where the former House postmaster, Robert V. Rota, pleaded guilty to misdemeanor charges.

Those charges detailed bogus stamp purchases by a "Congressman A." The Chicago Sun-Times reviewed expense reports for all 435 House members and spending by "Congressman A" matched only that of Rostenkowski.

Rota agreed to cooperate with prosecutors in pleading guilty to misdemeanor charges of conspiracy to violate U.S. laws, embezzlement and aiding and abetting a scheme to give cash out of funds from the House post office to members of Congress.

Interim U.S. Attorney J. Ramsey Johnson said the plea bargain will "greatly aid our ability to resolve the allegations of corruption at the House post office."

Rostenkowski has denied wrongdoing. He had no comment on the latest development in the investigation, which has dogged him for more than a year and cast a shadow over his leading role in negotiations on President Clinton's budget and health reform programs. If indicted, Rostenkowski would have to step down from his Ways and Means Committee chairmanship.

In court and in legal papers detailing the charges against Rota, prosecutors said the former postmaster funneled as much as $40,000 in public money to House members in sham transactions disguised as stamp purchases for their congressional offices. Documents indicated that about $21,300 was given to Rostenkowski.

Robert V. Rota

"Mr. Rota personally allowed the House post office to be used as a convenient and, until this investigation, largely untraceable source of illegal cash for selected congressmen," Assistant U.S. Attorney Thomas J. Motley told U.S. District Judge Norma Holloway Johnson.

The charges against Rota listed false stamp purchases by two House members: "Congressman A" and "Congressman B." The Sun-Times' review of all House members' quarterly expense reports showed that only Rostenkowski's filings matched amounts and dates of expenditures attributed to "Congressman A."

The same House records of ostensible stamp purchases for former Rep. Joseph Kolter (D-Pa.) match all seven transactions that Rota admitted arranging for "Congressman B."

A former federal prosecutor in Chicago said there was no legal reason not to identify the congressmen by name, but he speculated that the code-name device was a tactic intended to aid investigators trying to squeeze more information from witnesses.

There were other references in the charges that pointed to Rostenkowski.

Prosecutors said "Congressman A" insisted that Rota install a trusted patronage worker in a post office job handling cash. The prosecutors' description, again without naming names, fits James C. Smith, who owed his patronage job in the post office to Rostenkowski. Smith retired from the post office in April.

Prosecutors also told the judge that Rota cashed checks at the post office that were written on congressional campaign and political action committee accounts. Rostenkowski is one of the few congressmen who controls a PAC. Of the $55,000 in stamps supposedly purchased since 1986 at the House post office for Rostenkowski, about $26,000 was reported to have been bought by the Rostenkowski for Congress Committee and his America's Leaders Fund.

The more than $29,000 billed to Rostenkowski's congressional office for stamps was more than for any other House member during the period covered by a grand jury subpoena for Rostenkowski's records, an amount that raised questions because members of Congress may mail almost all correspondence without stamps by using franking privileges.

After Monday's hearing, Rota brushed by reporters without commenting. He faces up to three years in prison and a $300 fine, but prosecutors may recommend a lighter sentence.

Rota, 58, was postmaster from 1972 until 1992, when he was forced out of his $119,000-a-year job in the preliminary stages of the investigation, sparked by a stamp clerk's theft of $20,000.

Federal investigators first had heard complaints in 1979 about sham stamp purchases by House members. A former secretary, angry because she was fired, is said to have blown the whistle. At that time, Rota lied to investigators about the payments and urged another post office worker to help cover up the arrangement, he admitted at Monday's court hearing.

The practice continued "after this successful cover-up," the prosecutor told the judge. Rota personally handled stamp vouchers totaling $11,500 for "Congressman A" during a two-year period from 1985 to 1987, Motley said.

The transactions stopped for a while after the longtime supervisor of accounts at the post office retired in 1987 and was replaced by a stranger to Rota, the prosecutor said. Congressmen still pressed Rota for money, but he said that he refused because he did not trust the new worker. Rostenkowski's congressional expense records indicate he continued to buy stamps, including a $3,000 purchase.

By 1989, however, the supervisor of accounts job opened up again. "With the personal intervention and insistence of Congressman A, Mr. Rota promoted a longtime House post office employee, who was a patronage employee of Congressman A, to be the new supervisor of accounts," the prosecutor said. That description fits Smith, a former Rostenkowski protege who cooperated with investigators.

Shortly after the new supervisor was installed, "Mr. Rota explained to him that they would give cash to Congressman A in exchange for postage vouchers because Congressman A took care of them and they should take care of Congressman A in return," Motley said.

The payments resumed, according to the prosecutor, and in a 21-month period in 1989-91, Rota handled stamp vouchers totaling $9,800 for "Congressman A."

There was no evidence that Rota pocketed any money himself.

Above are excerpts of the criminal information filed by federal prosecutors against former House postmaster Robert V. Rota. The document implicates "Congressman A" and "Congressman B." A Sun-Times review of all 435 House members' quarterly expense reports found that only Rep. Dan Rostenkowski's filings matched the amounts and dates attributed to "Congressman A."

11 Transactions Match Up

Among the charges to which former House postmaster Robert Rota pleaded guilty Monday are allegations that he helped an unnamed "Congressman A" embezzle government funds through at least 12 phony stamp purchases.

Eleven of the 12 transactions exactly match the dates and amounts of alleged stamp purchases by Rep. Dan Rostenkowski (D-Ill.), congressional expense reports show. The 12th transaction could not be checked because no date or voucher number was listed.

According to court documents, Congressman A improperly received cash from Rota at least 12 times between May 1, 1985, and April 17, 1986, either in exchange for a voucher made out for postage or for stamps that had been obtained previously by voucher.

The only alleged payment not matching Rostenkowski's expense reports is a $2,000 transaction on an unspecified date in December, 1990.

Here are the occasions on which Congressman A received cash and Rostenkowski reportedly purchased stamps:

5/1/85	$1,100
12/20/85	$2,000
4/10/86	$1,200

Conviction a Plus for Reno

By Michael Briggs
Sun-Times Washington Bureau

WASHINGTON—The guilty plea by former House Postmaster Robert V. Rota to embezzlement charges may quiet critics who faulted Attorney General Janet Reno for her abrupt dismissal last March of the federal prosecutor in charge of the investigation.

Janet Reno

There was no evidence of Justice Department interference with the decision to obtain Rota's conviction in a way that intensified the investigative spotlight on Rep. Dan Rostenkowski (D-Ill.), an important Capitol Hill ally of President Clinton.

There was criticism that Reno was vulnerable to political influences after she demanded the resignation of every federal prosecutor appointed by past Republican presidents. She then let some stay in office, but U.S. Attorney Jay B. Stephens, accused by Rostenkowski of engaging in a "political witch-hunt" in the House post office case, was among the first ordered to clear out.

Reno later said she told the career prosecutors who had worked for Stephens and who still are handling the post office investigation to proceed "full steam ahead."

The team of assistants who obtained Rota's conviction—Thomas J. Motley, Wendy L. Wysong and Larry R. Parkinson—was the same one that previously convicted six former House post office workers and one former congressional aide. They throttled up the investigation with the guilty plea by the ex-postmaster and his agreement to cooperate.

Stephens had voiced concern as he was being given the boot that his departure would drag out the investigation and perhaps derail it. Even he sounded a magnanimous note after Rota pleaded guilty. "Within 30 to 60 days, this investigation should be completed with respect to members of Congress," he told a television interviewer.

Rostenkowski woes could hurt Clinton

WASHINGTON—A key break in the House post office inquiry that may mean legal troubles for Rep. Dan Rostenkowski comes at a crucial moment for President Clinton, who is counting on the veteran Chicago Democrat to forge a compromise on Clinton's economic plan.

House and Senate negotiators are trying to do that over the next few weeks, and Rostenkowski, as chairman of the House Ways and Means Committee, is perhaps Clinton's most valuable lieutenant.

It was Rostenkowski who spearheaded the drive to pass the first version of Clinton's tax proposal in the House. It passed by only six votes, its approval due largely to the crafty way in which Rostenkowski tailored it in his committee, and to his and Clinton's salesmanship.

Rostenkowski has met with the president regularly throughout the budget process and has become something of a mentor to the new president.

It was the 65-year-old chairman, for example, who counseled Clinton that he needed "cheerleaders" for his plan if he ever expected it to get through Congress, and it was Rostenkowski who met with business leaders to get them on board. Rostenkowski has described himself as the "downfield blocker" for "quarterback" Clinton.

Rostenkowski has maintained his innocence throughout the two-year probe into the mishandling of money at the House Post Office. But on Monday, former House postmaster Robert Rota pleaded guilty to conspiracy and embezzlement charges for helping two members of Congress obtain cash illegally by submitting vouchers for federal money to his office. While Rostenkowski was not named in the plea agreement, federal officials and lawyers said he was one of the congressmen.

Monday's disclosures could diminish Rostenkowski's influence. Some members of the House may not feel the same loyalty to the man they universally call "the chairman" as they once did.

At least publicly, Rostenkowski may be induced to concentrate more heavily on his duties in the House-Senate conference, if only to prove he is still in command or to take his mind off his legal troubles.

Asked in May how he was bearing up under the investigation, Rostenkowski said it was "on my mind, but I'm getting the product [the economic bill] out. It's when I'm alone that I'm not so good," he said.

Rostenkowski will have few chances to be alone in the next few weeks. The conference committee begins meeting in earnest Tuesday with a goal of completing its work by the start of Congress' summer recess Aug. 6. It will be an intense time and one in which Rostenkowski can ill afford to be distracted.

Rostenkowski is scheduled to meet with Clinton Tuesday morning, along with Sen. Daniel Patrick Moynihan (D-N.Y.), chairman of the Finance Committee, who is Rostenkowski's Senate counterpart. Rostenkowski and Moynihan together will fashion the tax component of the economic plan.

Conference committees in general, and those on tax bills in particular, are the strange animal of Congress. Meeting most often behind closed doors, they cut deals and fashion compromises in a personal way. In recent weeks, there have been countless evaluations in the news media and in Congress' corridors about how Rostenkowski and Moynihan would get along and what kind of deal they would fashion. Any perceived weakness would hamper Rostenkowski and the House in that effort.

Rostenkowski goes into the conference already somewhat weakened because the administration appears to be giving up on one of its most controversial points in the budget package, a broad-based tax on energy that was to have raised about $72 billion.

The House accepted the so-called Btu tax, but the Senate rejected it and substituted a 4.3-cent-a-gallon increase in the gasoline tax, which raises far less money. Over the weekend, administration officials indicated they were willing to give in on the broad energy tax, the House's hard-fought position.

White House press secretary Dee Dee Myers said she would wait for more details about the Rota plea before commenting on how it might affect Clinton's economic plan and his relationship with Rostenkowski.

Rostenkowski could not be reached for comment Monday. But in the past he has charged that the investigation was politically motivated, dating to the Bush administration, and was kept alive by Republicans.

If the investigation is not enough to distract Rostenkowski in the next three weeks of budget negotiations, Chicago politicians may give him pause. Several are considering a run for Rostenkowski's congressional seat.

Among those considering a campaign include Chicago Ald. Eugene Shulter, State Sen. John Cullerton (D-Chicago), State Rep. Ron Blagojevich (D-Chicago), former Ald. Joseph Kotlarz (35th) and Rostenkowski's most recent opponent, Dick Simpson, a University of Illinois professor and former 44th Ward alderman.

Simpson, who got 43 percent of the vote against Rostenkowski in the last campaign, will likely run again. On Monday, he called for Rostenkowski to resign.

"It is widely assumed by the media that the 'Congressman A' is Congressman Rostenkowski. If it is, these charges are serious enough that he should resign his position," Simpson said.

Rep. Dan Rostenkowski has maintained his innocence in the House Post Office probe.

House scandal guilty plea

Rostenkowski is linked to fund scheme

WASHINGTON—A former House postmaster pleaded guilty Monday to federal charges that for years he provided a "largely untraceable source of illegal cash" to several members of Congress, one of whom, federal officials say, is Rep. Dan Rostenkowski.

In presenting the guilty plea of former postmaster Robert Rota to a federal judge, prosecutors said Rota facilitated the "embezzlement" of more than $30,000 of government funds in a conspiracy that involved at least two House members identified in court as "Congressman A" and "Congressman B."

Rostenkowski was not named in the court papers accompanying Rota's pleas. But federal prosecutors detailed a dozen transactions involving the exchange of stamp expense vouchers for cash made by "Congressman A" between 1985 and 1992 that correspond precisely with expense records the Chicago Democrat has filed with the House clerk.

In addition, several federal officials and lawyers with knowledge of the case said "Congressman A," who received $20,300 of the payments, was Rostenkowski.

The same sources and records indicated that "Congressman B" was former Rep. Joe Kolter (D-Pa.), who served in Congress from 1982 until he was defeated in last year's elections.

The government's filing indicated several additional members of Congress may have participated in the scheme.

Rostenkowski and Kolter have not been charged and have repeatedly denied any wrongdoing. A spokesman for Rostenkowski said Monday that his lawyers advised him not to comment. Kolter could not be reached for comment.

In addition to the case in Washington, federal officials also are investigating Rostenkowski in Chicago and have subpoenaed voluminous records of his personal finances and his expenditures from various political funds totaling more than $1 million. Prosecutors are likely to weigh the evidence in both inquiries before making any decision to take action against Rostenkowski.

The investigation has major political implications because Rostenkowski is shepherding President Clinton's budget through the House-Senate conference committee. He also was expected to play a critical role in Clinton's health-care reform plan.

If indicted, Rostenkowski would have to give up his chairmanship of the tax-writing House Ways and Means Committee, although he could keep his seat in Congress.

J. Ramsey Johnson, interim U.S. attorney for the District of Columbia, called Rota's guilty plea "a significant step forward" that "underscores our commitment to hold accountable those who have engaged in such corruption."

A Justice Department spokesman said high-level department officials appointed by Clinton signed off on the government's acceptance of the guilty plea.

"In addition to the possible receipt of embezzled funds, the prosecutors accused "Congressman A" (Rostenkowski) of directly manipulating the post office staff to ensure that he and others could continue to exchange stamps for cash and otherwise "enrich" themselves with federal money.

Rota, 58, pleaded guilty to three misdemeanors for his role in the scheme in which prosecutors contend he essentially served as a bagman for several House members almost from the day he took his post in 1972. Rota vowed to cooperate fully with prosecutors.

"Over the course of two decades, at the insistence of certain congressmen, Mr. Rota repeatedly took cash from House Post Office funds and turned it over to these members," prosecutors contended.

Documents filed by the prosecutors indicated that the transactions continued even after federal officials tried to investigate them in 1979 and 1980. The documents also indicated that "Congressman A" used his patronage powers in the late 1980s to place someone he knew in a key position to disburse the money.

A knowledgeable federal law enforcement source said the highly public, richly detailed plea agreement was part of a strategy to pressure lawmakers and the Clinton administration to go forward with the case.

"It would take an awful lot of explaining to walk away from it now," the source said.

Another source with detailed knowledge of the case said Rostenkowski may contend that Rota was coerced by prosecutors to enter into the plea agreement.

Rota's lawyer, Charles Leeper, presented a different view. "Mr. Rota acknowledges responsibility for aiding and assisting the members who are referred to in the court documents," Leeper said. Prosecutors said Rota did not take any money for himself.

Described by one source as "a shoe waiting to drop," Rota's testimony would be vital in any case against Rostenkowski or others. He had a relationship with Rostenkowski that spanned 20 years. And unlike others who have been charged in the case, Rota, officials said, would be the one witness who could provide a first-hand account of illegal payments.

The documents describe a two-decade-long system of abuse of the patronage system in the House in which workers such as Rota were beholden to members for high-paying jobs. In his final years, Rota was paid more than $100,000 annually.

According to the government, Rota provided cash to members of Congress in three ways: He gave members cash in exchange for official congressional vouchers for which the members falsely certified they had received stamps; he exchanged stamps for cash; and he would cash checks drawn on congressional campaign and political action committee accounts, though prosecutors gave no details.

Members would come to Rota with vouchers on their congressional expense account or with large sheets of previously purchased stamps. He would exchange them for cash. Rota obtained the cash from the post office's supervisor of accounts, another patronage post.

That position became critical to pulling off the scheme, prosecutors said. From about 1978 to 1987, Rota obtained the cash from the then-supervisor of accounts, indentified as Mary C. Bowman. She could not be reached for comment.

In 1987, Bowman was replaced by lawyer Paul Tomme. At that point, prosecutors said, Rota discontinued the payments "despite the requests from" "Congressman A" (Rostenkowski) and "Congressman B" (Kolter). Rota told them that Tomme was beyond their political control because Tomme owed his job to former House Speaker Jim Wright.

In 1989, however, Tomme was replaced by James Smith, an appointment prosecutors said "Congressman A" orchestrated.

"With the personal intervention and insistence of Congressman A, Mr. Rota promoted a long-time House Post Office employee, who was a patrongage employee of Congressman A, to be the new supervisor of accounts," the court papers said.

Rota then instructed Smith to give "cash to Congressman A in exchange for postal vouchers, because Congressman A took care of them and they should take care of Congressman A in return," the papers said.

Between July 1989 and April 1991, Rota personally handled stamp vouchers to pay Rostenkowski $9,800, based on the plea agreement and Rostenkowski's expense records.

The documents said that in the summer of 1989, Rota "twice delivered large sums of cash to Congressman A."

The scheme had gone on since at least 1978, prosecutors charged, and authorities were told at least once that members were illegally receiving cash for stamps.

In 1979, a House postal employee reported a cash-for-voucher exchange to law enforcement authorities. On May 5, 1980, Justice Department lawyers interviewed Rota and Bowman. Prosecutors said Rota instructed his subordinate of the need "to protect the members of Congress." The two then lied to investigators, the government contends.

Rota continued to give members cash.

Prosecutors subpoenaed all stamp records from at least 1985, and they contended in the plea agreement that "Congressman A" received $11,500 in cash from Rota between May 1985 and May 1987.

Except for the 1979 complaint, the stamps-for-cash activity attracted little attention and never implicated members of Congress. But near the end of April 1991, stamp clerk James Pogue stole cash from the House Post Office, setting off what would become a wide-ranging investigation. Rota remained what his lawyer called "a loyal servant," lying to investigators to protect members of Congress.

"What Mr. Rota did was to place the services of his office, and the United States funds under his control, at the disposal of certain United States congressmen, knowing full well that he was aiding the embezzlement of money of those funds," the court papers said. "What Mr. Rota got in return was to keep his job as an officer of the United States House of Representatives."

Eventually, the pressure of the federal case against him mounted to the point that he decided to cooperate with prosecutors. On July 1, he signed the plea agreement.

Prosecutors say Robert Rota essentially served as a bagman for some House members.

Rostenkowski linked to theft in House bank

WASHINGTON (AP) — Prosecutors secured a key guilty plea Monday in their probe of the House Post Office, and court documents suggested that Rep. Dan Rostenkowski, one of the most powerful members of Congress, may have been a recipient of embezzled funds in the case.

The New York Times reports in today's editions that former House Postmaster Robert V. Rota told prosecutors that he helped Rostenkowski embezzle $21,300.

Rota pleaded guilty to conspiracy and embezzlement charges for helping one former lawmaker and one current member of Congress obtain cash illegally for personal use, by submitting official House vouchers.

Case papers released in the case said Rota, in the 1970s and 1980s, aided and abetted a 'Congressman A and Congressman B" in "willfully and knowingly" embezzling money which was converted to the lawmakers' personal use.

One embezzlement count says Rota "aided and abetted Congressman A in willfully and knowingly embezzling and converting to Congressman A's own use" the post office funds.

The same language is used for Congressman B.

While no names are mentioned, the court papers contain dates and amounts of vouchers submitted to the post office for stamp purchases. And those dates and amounts match vouchers submitted by Rostenkowski and former Rep. Joseph Kolter (D-Pa.) as recorded in public records issued by the House.

A source close to the investigation, speaking on condition of anonymity, also confirmed that Rostenkowski was Congressman A and Kolter was Congressman B.

Adding figures in the indictment, Rostenkowski would have received $21,300 between May 1985 and April 1991 — about the time the current investigation began. Kolter would have received

Rostenkowski's office had no immediate comment and attempts to reach Kolter here and in Pennsylvania were not successful.

Both Rostenkowski, chairman of the tax-writing House Ways and Means Committee, and Kolter have previously denied wrongdoing.

Prosecutors said Rota had agreed to cooperate in their probe. U.S. Attorney J. Ramsey Johnson called the guilty plea "a significant step forward" in the case.

The court papers said other members of Congress participated in similar schemes with Rota but were not part of Monday's plea.

As Ways and Means chairman, Rostenkowski is leading his chamber's effort in House-Senate negotiations to win passage of President Clinton's deficit reduction package. If he should be indicted for a felony, House caucus rules require that he step down until the case is settled.

A statement submitted by federal prosecutors to U.S. District Court said Rota "gave cash to certain members of Congress directly in exchange for official vouchers (each of which falsely certified that the member had received postage stamps for the voucher)."

Prosecutors said members sometimes received cash directly for the vouchers. Other times they received stamps, which later were returned for cash.

Rostenkowski, Kolter and Rep. Austin Murphy, D-Pa., have previously revealed they were under investigation in the case, and called the probe a "witch hunt" by the U.S. attorney's office.

Nine people have pleaded guilty in the investigation of the post office, which is a contract agency of the U.S. Postal Service staffed solely by House employees.

Motley, stating what the government would have proved at trial, said that "Congressman A and Congressman B" obtained cash by turning in stamps purchased from their office accounts, and by submitting official vouchers for stamps, but receiving money instead.

Motley said Rota also was involved in a scheme to give lawmakers cash for political action committee and campaign checks, although these transactions weren't part of the three counts to which Rota pleaded guilty.

Rota, who pleaded to three misdemeanors, was one of the highest-ranking House officials for 20 years until he resigned under fire in 1992.

Motley said that from May 1985 through May 1987, Rota "personally handled stamp vouchers totaling $11,500 for Congressman A and $4,300 for Congressman B."

He added that "during a 21-month period between July 1989 and April 1991, Rota personally handled stamp vouchers totaling $9,800 for Congressman A and $5,000 for Congressman B."

Rota, the agreement said, was permitted to keep his job in return for helping the lawmakers.

Can Rostenkowski twist arms to pass deficit-reduction bill?

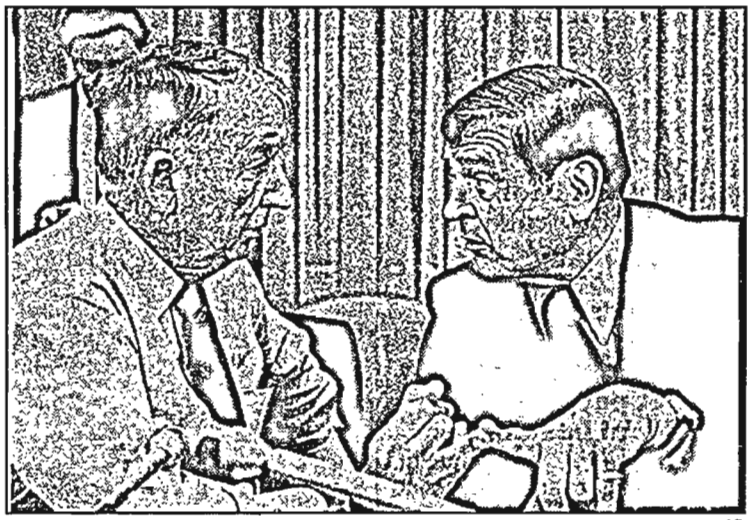
By Major Garrett
THE WASHINGTON TIMES

NEWS ANALYSIS

The timing could not have been worse for President Clinton or the congressional leaders he will lean on to guide his deficit-reduction bill through delicate negotiations.

One of the two most important congressional deal-makers, House Ways and Means Committee Chairman Dan Rostenkowski, while unnamed by federal prosecutors, was clearly linked by evidence to the widening House post office scandal yesterday.

Mr. Rostenkowski has not been charged with any wrongdoing and his aides yesterday repeated his claims of innocence.



But congressional aides tracking the budget bill's progress wonder if the ensuing uncertainty will undercut his legendary vote-counting and arm-twisting prowess.

The chairman was out of town yesterday. When he arrives on Capitol Hill today, reporters are expected to press him to explain his side of the post office case.

If questions of conduct dog Mr. Rostenkowski during closed-door negotiations on raising taxes and cutting spending, his ability to serve as a go-between and vote counter could be undermined.

Lawmakers, congressional aides and lobbyists wonder how Mr. Rostenkowski will hold up in the pivotal three weeks of dickering on the Clinton tax bill.

"I think he has handled the stress of that very well, remarkably well," said Rep. Sam M. Gibbons, Florida Democrat and second-ranking member of the Ways and Means Committee. "I would assume he'd be able to handle those things. I don't think it would have any effect."

It's hard to overstate Mr. Rostenkowski's clout in the current negotiations. He has headed the Ways and Means Committee since 1980 and is by far the most experienced lawmaker in dealing with tax law and the politics of getting votes for unpopular policies.

He and the Senate Finance Committee chairman, Daniel Patrick Moynihan, are expected to dominate the decision-making process as Congress tries to pass a $500 billion deficit-reduction bill — half of it coming in higher taxes — with no Republican votes.

Many congressional aides said Mr. Rostenkowski's power is such that only foolhardly lawmakers would consider trying to capitalize on the Rota revelations. The chairman's power base remains substantial, they said, especially since the work ahead has more to do with politics than tax policy.

If Mr. Rostenkowski had to sell a certain tax change to outside businesses and use their support to lobby wavering lawmakers, he might suffer from the negative publicity, said Steve Bell, a consultant with Soloman Bros. and former Republican staff director of the Senate Budget Committee.

"I think it will hamper him a little bit, but I don't think it should be overstated," Mr. Bell said. "He has over a decade of working deals and making them stick."

Since what remains is largely an inside game, Mr. Rostenkowski should be able to withstand all but an indictment.

The rules of the Democratic caucus require that any committee chairman subject to a felony criminal indictment must give up his chairmanship.

An indictment would force Mr. Rostenkowski to hand his chairman's gavel to Mr. Gibbons, who has long advocated free trade, health care reform and creating a national sales tax as part of an overhaul of the federal tax system.

Calculating the Rostenkowski Factor

By DAVID E. ROSENBAUM
Special to The New York Times

WASHINGTON, July 19 — If Representative Dan Rostenkowski is indicted, he will have to step aside as chairman of the House Ways and Means Committee, and President Clinton will lose his strongest ally in Congress on many of the issues that are central to his Presidency.

Lawmakers and their staff members said today that they doubted the new developments would affect the way the House-Senate conference committee deals in the next few weeks with the President's deficit-reduction program.

Prosecutors said it could be weeks before charges were filed against Mr. Rostenkowski, so he is expected to continue to lead the House conferees in the tense negotiations with the Senate this month over tax increases and spending cuts.

Unwavering Support for Clinton

But the prevailing view on Capitol Hill is that if an indictment is forthcoming it could widen the odds that the President would succeed in winning approval of his plans for health care, trade, welfare and other areas under the Ways and Means Committee's jurisdiction.

Mr. Rostenkowski, a 65-year-old Democrat from Chicago who was trained by the late Mayor Richard J. Daley, is seen by his friends and foes as a peerless legislative tactician. This year, his support for the Clinton Administration has been unwavering.

Just before his committee took up the budget package last spring, he told an interviewer: "I'm going to be as publicly engaged in the Clinton crusade as I can. I'm not the quarterback. I'm more the downfield blocker."

The budget conference is expected to be wrapped up in the next three weeks. A senior Administration official who has been working on the legislative program said he did not believe that the prospects of a Rostenkowski indictment would have any affect on this particular conference. "This is going to happen very quickly," the official said.

But what about legislation this fall and next year? "I don't want to think about it," the official replied.

Possible Successor

The rules of the Democratic Caucus in the House require a chairman under indictment to relinquish the chairmanship until the legal situation is resolved.

In this case, Representative Sam M. Gibbons, a Democrat from Florida who is second to Mr. Rostenkowski in seniority, would become acting chairman. Over the years, Mr. Gibbons, who is 73 and is in his 16th term in Congress, has specialized in trade issues and has never been heavily involved in taxes, health policy or welfare.

In an interview today, Mr. Gibbons said he hated the thought of "moving ahead at someone else's expense," but he added: "I have prepared myself to move to take over the committee if the time arrives. I've thought about it a lot and made whatever preparations I could."

The Senate was not in session today and no votes were scheduled in the House, so few lawmakers were in their offices here. Many who could be reached declined to speak on the record about Mr. Rostenkowski and Mr. Gibbons, but their general view was that Mr. Rostenkowski's legislative skill could not be matched.

'Irreplaceable' Chairman

Former Representative Thomas J. Downey, a Democrat from Long Island who served on the Ways and Means Committee and was especially close to Mr. Rostenkowski, put the case this way: "Sam's a terrific guy, and I don't mean to denigrate him in any way. But it's not just that Rostenkowski has command of the Ways and Means Committee. His strong leadership ability forces the House and the Senate to focus on what has to be done, and his unwavering support is irreplaceable."

Mr. Rostenkowski's principal talent, said a staff assistant to another Congressman who has observed the chairman closely for years, is "an unbelievable sense of knowing how much he has to give and how much he can take and still hold a majority vote."

That was what Mr. Rostenkowski did this spring when he made just enough changes in the President's budget plan so that he could be sure of the support of all 24 Democrats on his committee. The measure was approved in May on a straight party-line vote.

Then, when the bill reached the House floor in June, the Democrats from the Ways and Means Committee, guided by the chairman, were responsible for rounding up votes from other Democrats. Eventually, the measure was approved by 219 to 213, with all the Republicans in the House in opposition.

Friends Can't Believe Charge

The one way the expectation of an indictment could directly affect the conference negotiations, lawmakers said, would be if his personal problems distracted Mr. Rostenkowski from the legislative business at hand.

So far this year, that has not been the case. "With this big cloud and all its political weight that's been on the chairman's mind and shoulders throughout this process, it has not affected his ability to lead the committee," said Representative Charles B. Rangel of Manhattan, the fourth-ranking Democrat on the Ways and Means Committee.

Since rumors began spreading last year about the criminal investigation, Mr. Rostenkowski's friends have been saying they could not believe that he had his hand in the petty-cash drawer. He could have retired and not run for re-election last year and kept more than $1 million in leftover campaign money, the last year it was legally possible to do so.

Mr. Rostenkowski, who had no public comment today, has said in the past that he has done nothing wrong, has no idea what prosecutors are looking for and is a victim of a political witch hunt begun by the Bush Administration's Justice Department.

Mr. Rangel and several others said that for the time being at least Mr. Rostenkowski's authority would not be diminished. Lawmakers continue to hope that Mr. Rostenkowski will not be indicted, Mr. Rangel said, and if he is indicted, they will prefer to believe that he will be acquitted.

POST OFFICE CASE

Representative Dan Rostenkowski at a hearing last week.

Ex-Official's Plea Is Seen as Step to Indictment of Rostenkowski

By STEPHEN LABATON
Special to The New York Times

WASHINGTON, July 19 — The former Postmaster of the House of Representatives has told prosecutors that he helped Representative Dan Rostenkowski, the powerful Illinois Democrat, embezzle $21,300, according to prosecutors, defense lawyers and public records that describe some of the transactions.

The Postmaster, Robert V. Rota, pleaded guilty in Federal District Court in Washington today to one count of conspiracy and two counts of embezzlement and said he had helped an undisclosed number of lawmakers embezzle tens of thousands of dollars since his appointment in 1972 until 1991, when he resigned.

Government and defense lawyers said the guilty plea was a significant step toward indicting Mr. Rostenkowski, but could be weeks before the Government moves against the Chicago Democrat. Still, the plea today by Mr. Rota, who has agreed to testify against Mr. Rostenkowski, came at a delicate moment, when the House and Senate have just begun negotiations on Mr. Clinton's economic program.

As chairman of the House Ways and Means Committee, Mr. Rostenkowski will be one of the central figures in those talks, and Mr. Clinton will also need him badly in months to come as Congress considers health care, welfare, trade and other issues.

'Congressman A'

In a court appearance today, Mr. Rota did not identify Mr. Rostenkowski, referring instead to "Congressman A" and to "Congressman B," who the former official said, had stolen $9,300.

58C-WF-180673 N-28

SEP 2 1993

The Government also did not identify either lawmaker, but documents supporting Mr. Rota's plea arrangement clearly showed that Mr. Rostenkowski was Congressman A and that Joe Kolter, a Democrat who lost his Pennsylvania seat last year, was Congressman B.

Mr. Rostenkowski's aides said the lawmaker was in Chicago today and could not be reached for comment. A reporter was unable to find the lawmaker at his home in Chicago, and the aides in Washington declined to discuss Mr. Rota's guilty plea. The lawmaker's Washington lawyer, Stanley Brand, did not return telephone calls.

"Mr. Rota has admitted that he allowed the House Post Office to be used as a convenient and, until this investigation, largely untraceable source of illegal cash for selected members of Congress," said J. Ramsey Johnson, the interim United States Attorney in Washington. "Over the course of two decades, at the insistence of certain Congressmen, Mr. Rota repeatedly took cash from House Post Office funds and turned it over to these members." There is as yet no indication of how many lawmakers were involved or who any of the other might be.

Provided Cover for Theft

Mr. Rota, a 58-year old career Congressional official who resigned as the post office scandal erupted last year, admitted today that he had provided the lawmakers with a cover so that they could steal from expense accounts for office supplies through transactions that appeared to be legitimate.

Members of Congress are given allowances to pay for office expenses like pens, stationary and postage. They spend this allowance by drawing on their accounts with vouchers that are exchanged for supplies from outlets run by House employees. Lawmakers can send ordinary mail without stamps but need them for overseas mail and to use specialized services like certified mail and insured mail.

Mr. Rota said that in some cases he had taken vouchers from members of Congress that showed postage purchases but instead of stamps he had given them cash. In other instances, he said, he exchanged the vouchers for stamps, but he would then take the stamps back for cash.

> An indictment of Rostenkowski in the scandal seems to be near.

Mr. Rota's story, which emerged today from his own words and through Federal prosecutors, provided a startling glimpse into the life of a figure familiar on Capitol Hill but seldom seen outside Washington — the Federal patronage employee eager above all to please those who gave him his job.

Seen as Political Favors

Throughout the scheme, prosecutors said, Mr. Rota did not make any money. Rather, he helped others profit illegally as a political favor.

The former Postmaster is a Pennsylvanian who began his career by working in the cloakroom and rose through the ranks of the House bureaucracy under the patronage of Representative Thomas Morgan, a Pennsylvania Democrat who was the chairman of the Foreign Relations Committee and retired in 1976 after serving 32 years.

Mr. Rota, who oversaw a staff of 160 and an annual budget of $4.4 million, was well known in Congress for doing favors for various lawmakers. One recalled recently that Mr. Rota would routinely approach members and ask, "What can I do for you?"

Mr. Rota said he gave $11,500 in cash to Congressman A and $4,300 to Congressman B, from May 1985 to May 1987. He also said he gave $9,800 in cash to Congressman A and $5,000 to Congressman B from July 1989 to April 1991. The amounts ranged from $900 to $2,800 for Congressman A and from $600 to $2,000 for Congressman B.

The court records provided the numbers of the vouchers that Mr. Rota said were used to cover up the transactions. Publicly available records shows that in each case where a voucher by Congressman A was listed, the voucher number corresponded to one signed by Mr. Rostenkowski and that the vouchers attributed to Congressman B were signed by Mr. Kolter.

Accusation Denied

Mr. Kolter, who lives in New Brighton, Pa., did not return a telephone message left today on his answering machine. His Washington lawyer, Alan Baron, said he had not seen the court papers but heard speculation today that his client was Congressman B. Mr. Baron said his client had done nothing improper and had not been involved in any plea bargaining.

Mr. Rota said the two-year hiatus in the payments occurred because a new Supervisor of Accounts at the Post Office was installed whom Mr. Rota did not know and could not trust to carry out the scheme. But after that supervisor left, Mr. Rota said, he put a patronage employee whom he did not identify today other than to say that he was sponsored by Congressman A in the job.

The position described by the prosecutors had been occupied James C. Smith, who worked in a basement office of the Postmaster across the street from the Capitol, single-handledly controlling the disbursement of thousands of dollars in cash and stamps. He was sponsored for his job by Mr. Rostenkowski, according to Congressional documents.

Employee Granted Immunity

Lawyers involved in the case said Mr. Smith, who no longer in the job, had been granted immunity by prosecutors and had been lined up to testify against Mr. Rota if he had failed to reach a plea agreement. Mr. Smith is also prepared to testify against Mr. Rostenkowski, the lawyers said.

Mr. Rota also confessed that he had lied to investigators at least three times to cover up the scheme. If he is used as a witness in a trial against lawmakers, his credibility could be attacked because of this admission.

The plea was the culmination of a two year-long investigation that began when a Post Office clerk was discovered stealing cash from one of branches on Capitol Hill. That investigation and a separate inquiry last year involving significant overdrafts at the House Bank came to symbolize ethical laxity in Congress and led, in turn, to a perception that contributed to an anti-incumbent fever that sent scores of legislators down to defeat or forced them to retire.

Prosecutors said Mr. Rota was scheduled to be sentenced Oct. 12 and faced a maximum prison sentence of three years and fines of as much as $300,000.

"What Mr. Rota did was to place the services of his office and the United State funds under his control at the disposal of certain United States Congressmen, knowing full well that he was aiding the embezzlement of money from those funds." Mr. Johnson said. "What Mr. Rota got in return was to keep his job as an officer of the United States House of Representatives."

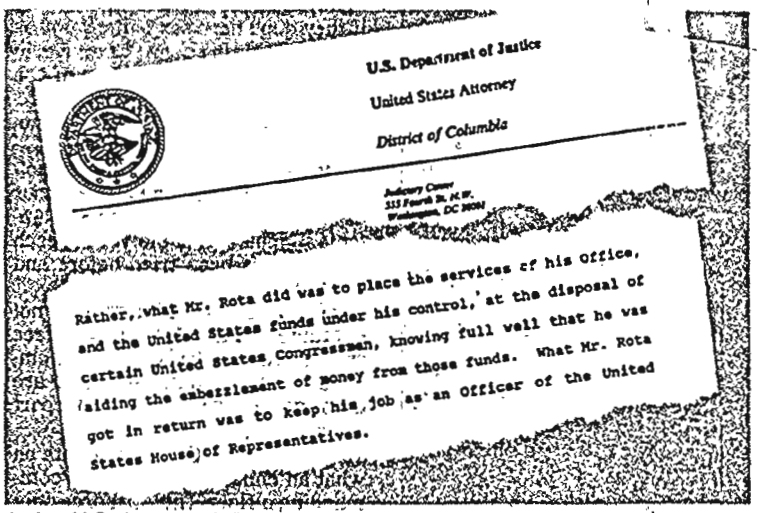
critical time for President Clinton, whose economic plan and health care reform proposals are under debate in Congress.

Mr. Rostenkowski, Mr. Kolter and another congressman — Rep. Austin Murphy, Pennsylvania Democrat — had been served subpoenas in connection with the federal probe. They have denied any wrongdoing and have invoked their Fifth Amendment rights against testifying before the federal grand jury.

Calls for comments to Messrs. Rostenkowski, Kolter and Murphy were not returned yesterday.

Mr. Rota, who faces three years in prison and a fine up to $300,000 when he is sentenced Oct. 12, declined to speak to reporters yesterday. In a brief telephone conversation Sunday, Mr. Rota said: "When I have something to say, I'll say it. Thank you for your call."

In remarks before Judge Johnson, Assistant U.S. Attorney Thomas Motley said that had the case against Mr. Rota gone to trial, the government would have proved that the former postmaster was a cash conduit to members of Congress.



"Over the course of two decades, at the insistence of certain congressmen, Mr. Rota repeatedly took cash from House post office funds and turned it over to these members," Mr. Motley said.

Mr. Johnson said yesterday, at an afternoon news conference to announce the guilty plea accepted by Judge Johnson, that Mr. Rota did not benefit personally from any of the illegal activities.

However, Mr. Johnson said, Mr. Rota's actions enabled him to maintain his position as one of the four elected officers of the House "by earning the favor and support of particular members ... by providing cash to them in exchange for vouchers and postage stamps."

Mr. Rota carried out the conspiracy, stretching from 1978 to 1992, by three methods:

- Providing cash for vouchers, which "falsely certified that the congressmen had received postage stamps for the vouchers."
- Supplying cash, for postage stamps, "which the congressmen had previously obtained with the vouchers."
- Cashing checks drawn on congressional, campaign and political action committee accounts.

Rather, what Mr. Rota did was to place the services of his office, and the United States funds under his control, at the disposal of certain United States Congressman, knowing full well that he was aiding the embezzlement of money from those funds. What Mr. Rota got in return was to keep his job as an officer of the United States House of Representatives.

Acting U.S. Attorney J. Ramsey Johnson's press release explained the conspiracy facilitated by former House Postmaster Robert V. Rota.

Mr. Rota carried out the conspiracy, stretching from 1978 to 1992.

The guilty plea focused on the first two methods, "each of which involved the embezzlement of United States funds by certain congressmen."

In addition, Mr. Rota also admitted — but was not charged with — obstruction of justice and lying to federal investigators in 1979, when the allegations of stamps for cash first surfaced.

Mr. Johnson also said Mr. Rota lied to congressional investigators in April 1992, when he told a House task force probing the post office that he did not know of any improper or illegal activities involving members of Congress.

Mr. Rota, forced to resign from his job in March 1992 after a series of stories on the post office scandal in The Washington Times beginning in January 1991, was visibly nervous when he appeared in court yesterday morning.

"I can't remember specific dates and dollar amounts," Mr. Rota told Judge Johnson after she read him a 13-page criminal information document. "But the substance of [the charges] is correct," he said.

Mr. Motley said in court, as did Mr. Johnson at his news conference in which he took no questions, that Mr. Rota "personally" delivered thousands of dollars to the members involved in the illegal scheme and that he conspired with at least one former post office supervisor who was elevated to his job at the behest of one of the members accused but not yet charged with embezzlement and fraud.

What started initially as a probe of low-level drug dealers and embezzlers in the spring and summer of 1990 has grown into a major federal probe of corruption in the House that includes a grand jury, the FBI, the Internal Revenue Service, the U.S. Postal Inspection Service, the U.S. Capitol Police and the Justice Department.

Former Postmaster For House Pleads Guilty in Scandal

Admission of Embezzling Scheme Appears to Threaten Rostenkowski

By Kenneth J. Cooper
Washington Post Staff Writer

Former House postmaster Robert V. Rota yesterday pleaded guilty to helping several congressmen embezzle money from the House Post Office. Evidence contained in court papers in the case indicated that powerful Ways and Means Chairman Dan Rostenkowski (D-Ill.) was one of those who allegedly received thousands of dollars in the scheme.

Rota's guilty plea and agreement to cooperate with federal prosecutors represented a major breakthrough in the House Post Office investigation, which on Capitol Hill was widely assumed to have stalled after two years of focusing on the misdeeds of House employees. Rota was forced to resign in March 1992 amid the scandal.

The former postmaster's admissions are especially damaging because they at least partly corroborate statements that a top assistant, James C. Smith, made to federal prosecutors a year ago. Based on Smith's allegations, prosecutors in May 1992 subpoenaed the official expense records of Rostenkowski, then-Rep. Joe P. Kolter (D-Pa.) and Rep. Austin J. Murphy (D-Pa.).

Rota's plea agreement comes as Rostenkowski takes center stage as the House leader in negotiations on President Clinton's budget package. Rostenkowski also is expected to be a key player in the debate over Clinton's proposed health care reforms. If indicted, he would have to step down from his Ways and Means chairmanship.

Prosecutors declined to indicate whether or when they might seek indictments from a federal grand jury that has been investigating criminal activities at the House Post Office. No congressman was named in court documents or by the prosecutors.

Rostenkowski's Post Office Problems Shake Hill

Ex-Official's Allegations Threaten to Derail Ways and Means Chief, a Key Budget Player

By Eric Pianin
Washington Post Staff Writer

Democrats on Capitol Hill were uneasy about yesterday's developments in the probe of the House Post Office and their implications for House Ways and Means Chairman Dan Rostenkowski (D-Ill.). But few doubted the news would diminish his effectiveness in negotiating a compromise on President Clinton's budget package.

Former House postmaster Robert V. Rota yesterday pleaded guilty to conspiracy and embezzlement charges and federal prosecutors released documents that pointed to Rostenkowski as "Congressman A"—one of two members who for decades illegally converted government postage stamps to cash and then pocketed the money.

But despite earlier fears that the investigation of alleged wrongdoing at the House Post Office might jeopardize Rostenkowski's role in the budget negotiations, Democrats insisted yesterday that with the House-Senate conference already underway, it is unlikely that the latest revelations will affect the powerful chairman's influence.

Even if Rostenkowski were to be indicted and forced to step aside as chairman, as required under House Democratic rules, House and Senate aides said that he unquestionably would remain as the Ways and Means Committee's chief negotiator and strategist during these final three crucial weeks of negotiations and congressional action.

"Whatever happens in this matter, I'm sure it won't complicate what we have to do in the budget reconciliation process and beyond in selling the package to both houses," said a House leadership aide.

"People have been aware this investigation has been going on in the background and it hasn't affected the way anyone deals with Rostenkowski," said Lawrence O'Donnell Jr., top aide to Sen. Daniel Patrick Moynihan, chairman of the Senate Finance Committee. "There's no one who has worked with Danny Rostenkowski who thinks any of this stuff could possibly be true and everyone thinks he will be here a very long time and everyone deals with him accordingly."

Rostenkowski was out of town yesterday and unavailable for comment. He and Moynihan were scheduled to resume talks on the five-year deficit-reduction package today.

Although Rostenkowski's problems with federal prosecutors have been the subject of intense speculation on Capitol Hill for months, aides to the leadership said yesterday that there has been no contingency planning for the possibility that Rostenkowski would have to relinquish his chairmanship.

Rep. Sam M. Gibbons (D-Fla.), ranking Democrat on the Ways and Means Committee and next in line to be chairman, said he had approached House Speaker Thomas S. Foley (D-Wash.) and House Majority Leader Richard A. Gephardt (D-Mo.) early this year to discuss the possible succession but, "I didn't elicit any response from them."

"I told them I am able to take over at any time as the need arises," said Gibbons, 73, a prominent free-trade advocate who has clashed with Rostenkowski from time to time. "I figured that was my responsibility."

Gibbons has warned that the budget negotiations could prove to be among the most difficult in memory because of the deep divisions between the House and Senate, and that a sudden change in the committee's chairmanship could further complicate the process.

"There's not any clearly defined avenue," he said, "but I'm sure we'd continue to work closely and collegially together."

Rostenkowski, 65, began his 18th term in Congress in January with high hopes of capping his career by helping a new Democratic president enact his economic policies and launch a major national health care reform initiative.

But since then, the gruff Chicago Democrat has been buffeted by reports of the grand jury probe of allegations that he may have illegally pocketed nearly $56,000 in public and campaign funds through an arrangement with House Post Office officials—reports that left many of his Democratic and Republican colleagues baffled and disbelieving.

Why, some asked, would a powerful politician who could have retired this year and lawfully kept more than $1 million in his campaign war chest risk all by chiseling on the purchase of postage stamps?

Rostenkowski's staff did its best to cope with the latest report yesterday, but clearly some were shaken.

"This has been a very, very weird experience," said one aide.

more than $30,000 in cash to two congressmen in 19 specific transactions between May 1985 and April 1991. Rota said he provided the money either in exchange for official expense vouchers made out for postage or for stamps previously obtained with a voucher from the House Post Office, which operates under a contract with the U.S. Postal Service.

The documents refer to the two representatives as "Congressman A" and "Congressmen B." But the dates, amounts and descriptions of the goods bought by "Congressman A" correspond—except for one with an incomplete date and "unknown" description—to postage purchases that were made by Rostenkowski and itemized in published quarterly reports of the House clerk's office. They total $21,300.

The $9,300 in purchases attributed to "Congressman B" correlate with those of Kolter, who was defeated in last year's primary.

The court documents made clear that more than two congressmen were involved. "Rota gave cash from funds maintained at the House Post Office to each of several members of the House of Representatown, and his lawyers did not return several phone calls. A phone message left at Kolter's home in New Brighton, Pa., was not returned.

The plea agreement filed with U.S. District Judge Norma H. Johnson cited a "readily provable monetary loss to the United States" of between $20,000 and $40,000 since 1978. The government asserted, and Rota assented in court, that he "began giving cash from funds and one count of aiding and abetting embezzlement with each of the two congressmen. He could receive a maximum of three years in prison, three years on probation and a fine of $300,000. Sentencing was set for Oct. 12.

After Assistant U.S. Attorney Thomas J. Motley recited the government's evidence, Judge Johnson asked Rota if the allegations were true. "I can't remember exactly the postage stamps, the government charges in its summary of evidence. Each transaction, the summary alleges, "involved the embezzlement of United States funds by certain United States congressmen."

The summary said Rota participated in a "successful coverup" as far back as 1980, when Justice Department lawyers questioned him and Mary C. Bowman, then Post Office supervisor of accounts. Another employee had reported a cash-for-vouchers exchange.

Rota stopped the exchanges, "despite the requests from Congressman A and Congressman B," between May 1987 and May 1989 because a new employee whom Rota "could not trust" replaced Bowman as supervisor of accounts, prosecutors said. The new supervisor was Paul Tomme, according to House clerk's office reports.

The practice resumed when Smith was placed in the position "with the personal intervention and insistence of Congressman A," who was Smith's House patron. Last year, Rostenkowski acknowledged he became Smith's patron when his prior patron left Congress. Most House Post Office employees, including Rota, were patronage hires until reforms adopted last year.

Rostenkowski was subpoenaed last year to testify before the grand jury, but he did not testify and sent word through his lawyer that he would use his Fifth Amendment right against self-incrimination. He once suggested that his office was a heavy consumer of postage stamps because of overseas correspondence, which cannot be mailed free under the congressional frank. Rostenkowski has said little else about the investigation, except to suggest its origins were political.

The Clinton administration ousted former U.S. attorney Jay B. Stephens with other GOP-appointed prosecutors across the nation. Interim U.S. Attorney J. Ramsey Johnson called Rota's plea "a significant step forward" in the investigation.

So far seven former House Post Office employees and a former Kolter aide have been convicted. A House Administration Committee inquiry also pointed at Post Office employees, and House Speaker Thomas S. Foley repeatedly has predicted that no House member will be indicted.

WASHINGTON — The House's former postmaster pleaded guilty to embezzlement charges in an important breakthrough for prosecutors seeking to build a case against Ways and Means Committee Chairman Dan Rostenkowski in the cash-for-stamps scandal.

The Chicago Democrat has repeatedly denied any wrongdoing, but former Postmaster Robert Rota's plea and accompanying court papers represent a serious blow to the chairman at a time when he is focusing on final negotiations shaping the Clinton administration's deficit-reduction plan.

Dan Rostenkowski

Documents filed by government investigators list a series of transactions totaling more than $30,000 in which Mr. Rota allegedly helped two congressmen convert stamps or official postal vouchers into cash. While the papers listed the two lawmakers only as "Congressman A" and "Congressman B," a law-enforcement official later identified them as Mr. Rostenkowski and former Pennsylvania Democrat Joe Kolter, respectively. And this identification appears supported by House records related to Post Office transactions corresponding to the dates listed.

Mr. Rostenkowski's office declined to comment last night. Efforts to reach Mr. Kolter, who was defeated by a fellow Democrat in a Pennsylvania primary last year, were unsuccessful, but in the past he also has denied any wrongdoing.

In Mr. Rostenkowski's case, the documents also refer to a change of Post Office personnel in mid-1989 when a patronage employee of the anonymous Congressman A was elevated by Mr. Rota to the role of supervisor of accounts. This history closely parallels the rise of James Smith, who assumed the supervisor role in the same 1989 period and had past patronage ties to Mr. Rostenkowski.

Mr. Smith has been cooperating with the investigation after receiving a grant of immunity last year, and the significance of the Rota plea is that it appears to give prosecutors a second witness to back up allegations of cash-for-stamps transactions.

Such testimony would be directly at odds with prior statements by the lawmakers involved. And unlike most ethics cases, where both sides argue about how to interpret a common set of facts, this case is striking for the flatly contradictory accounts of what happened.

"Today's guilty plea. . . . is a significant step forward in what has become known as the House Post Office investigation," said U.S. Attorney J. Ramsey Johnson. And though the White House sought to play down any speculation regarding Mr. Rostenkowski's position, House Republicans demanded that all the related vouchers be released as part of a renewed inquiry into Mr. Rota's Post Office tenure.

President Clinton is to lunch today with Mr. Rostenkowski and Senate Finance Committee Chairman Daniel Patrick Moynihan regarding the pending tax negotiations. While the testimony of Mr. Rota, who is cooperating with investigators, could make an indictment of Rep. Rostenkowski more likely, such a development isn't seen as imminent and there are still questions as to what was done with the cash.

If an indictment should result, the Chicago Democrat would be forced to give up his chairmanship under Democratic rules. And at a minimum, Republicans see an opportunity to embarrass the Democratic leadership at a time when it is already struggling to hold its party together behind the massive deficit-reduction plan.

"This is not just a 'Congress' scandal,"

The Post Office inquiry, which began in late 1991, focused first on alleged embezzlement and drug dealing among low-level employees, then turned to allegations that higher-ranking officials and lawmakers were using stamp transactions to launder political and office funds. In Mr. Rostenkowski's case, his Chicago politico lifestyle has drawn increased attention, and late last year, a wave of new subpoenas went out seeking financial documents and testimony from Rostenkowski aides and family members.

Though the lawmaker complained bitterly of the tactics used at the time by the Republican prosecutor in the District of Columbia, the case has continued under the new Democratic Justice Department. The chairman was described as particularly upset when family members were called as witnesses early this summer, and he himself has refused so far to testify, invoking his Fifth Amendment protection against self-incrimination.

ROSTENKOWSKI'S ROLE in Clinton's budget deficit-cutting plan could be threatened by the guilty plea a former House postmaster entered over embezzlement charges. Papers filed in the case indicate the postmaster helped Democrat Rostenkowski improperly convert stamps to cash, a law-enforcement official said.

Support for dropping any form of energy tax from the deficit-reduction bill has spread from the House to the Senate, as two senior Democratic senators have begun pushing the idea.

Rostenkowski Linked to House Postal Scam

By DOUGLAS FRANTZ
TIMES STAFF WRITER

WASHINGTON—The former head of the House post office pleaded guilty Monday to providing lawmakers with illegal cash for 20 years and implicated a congressman identified as House Ways and Means Chairman Dan Rostenkowski (D-Ill.) in the scandal.

Former House Postmaster Robert V. Rota admitted in federal court here that he conspired with members of Congress to provide them with thousands of dollars in cash in exchange for expense vouchers and stamps purchased with taxpayer money.

The plea agreement identified two congressmen who received cash from Rota only as "Congressman A" and "Congressman B." Other documents and two sources close to the federal investigation confirmed that Rostenkowski is Congressman A. Records indicate that the Chicago Democrat received at least $21,300 in cash.

Rostenkowski, regarded as one of the most powerful members of Congress, had no comment Monday, according to a spokesman. He has vehemently denied any wrongdoing and criticized the 2-year-old investigation as politically motivated.

"Rota's agreement to cooperate with prosecutors is a very big step in the direction of possible charges against Rostenkowski," said a source involved in the investigation, which is being conducted by the U.S. attorney's office here.

Democratic rules would force Rostenkowski to give up the chairmanship of the tax-writing committee if he is indicted. But it is uncertain what impact the new disclosure will have on his ability to continue to negotiate a compromise agreement with the Senate in closed-door meetings this week on President Clinton's deficit-reduction bill, which raises taxes and cuts spending by $500 billion.

Rota's surprise agreement to cooperate with prosecutors provides a major boost to an investigation that began after a low-level clerk was discovered to have stolen money from the post office. Rota became the ninth and highest-ranking former official to plead guilty in the inquiry.

Rostenkowski has long been identified by sources close to the investigation as the primary target. Last year, he refused to appear before a federal grand jury, citing the Fifth Amendment protection against self-incrimination.

Since then, several members of Rostenkowski's personal staff and the Ways and Means Committee have been granted immunity and compelled to testify before the grand jury. Sources have indicated that the investigation has expanded beyond Rostenkowski's dealings with the post office to include allegations about campaign spending and other office expenses.

Prosecutors negotiated for several months to obtain Rota's cooperation. He agreed to plead guilty to three misdemeanors, provide information about the alleged scheme to investigators and possibly testify in court.

Calling the plea bargain a "significant step forward," interim U.S. Atty. J. Ramsey Johnson said that Rota had admitted turning the House post office into "a convenient ... and largely untraceable source of illegal cash for selected members of Congress."

As described in court documents, the scheme was a relatively simple means of converting government funds into cash.

Each congressman has an office budget upon which vouchers can be drawn. Congressmen or staff members use vouchers to buy stamps at the post office for official mail that does not qualify for the free franking privilege.

However, Rota told prosecutors that soon after he started as postmaster in 1972, he conspired with congressmen to transform the operation into a small-scale money laundry. Court papers and prosecutors outlined two primary means for converting stamps and vouchers into cash.

In some cases, congressmen returned the stamps to Rota and received cash, which they pocketed. In other instances, Rota told prosecutors that he did not bother with stamps—he simply gave the congressmen cash in exchange for vouchers. Each act would constitute embezzlement of U.S. funds.

The charges against Rota list 12 separate instances in which Congressman A exchanged stamps or vouchers for cash from 1985 to 1987 and 1989 to 1991. The amounts ranged from a low of $900 to a high of $2,800.

Prosecutors also said that Rota gave lawmakers cash for political action committees but those transactions were not part of his plea bargain.

Johnson said that Rota acted at the insistence of certain congressmen and operated the scheme to keep his patronage job. Johnson said that Rota did not receive any money himself.

At various points over the years, Rota lied to federal and congressional investigators about exchanging stamps for cash. The scheme was interrupted in May, 1987, when Rota allegedly told Rostenkowski that he did not trust a new employee to carry out the scheme, according to court records.

Two years later, the employee was replaced by a patronage worker sponsored by Rostenkowski and the scheme resumed, according to the files. The patronage worker has been identified in other documents as James C. Smith, who also is cooperating with prosecutors.

Jay B. Stephens, the former U.S. attorney who initiated the investigation, said that he expects action soon.

"A speedy conclusion and action regarding members of Congress allegedly involved should come shortly unless there is some intervening action by the Administration," said Stephens.

Congressman B was identified by sources and records as former Rep. Joe Kolter (D-Pa.). Attempts to reach him for comment were unsuccessful but he has previously denied wrongdoing.

The first impact of Rota's cooperation is likely to be felt this week in the House-Senate negotiations over the federal budget. Democrats fear that Rostenkowski's authority will be weakened there and as a chief proponent of the upcoming health care reform legislation and other key measures.

"It doesn't look good for him," said one House Democrat who said that he believes the tough-talking Chicagoan would be almost irreplaceable in passage of health care, trade and welfare reform legislation as well as the budget package. "It's a disaster for the President and the party and the country—it's our worst nightmare."

Republicans gloated. "Just as in Japan, this is about corrupt one-party rule for four decades," said Rep. Newt Gingrich (R-Ga.), the House Republican whip.

BACKGROUND

■ The House post office scandal came to light when low-level clerks were investigated on drug and embezzlement charges. The probe spread to include use of the mail operation as a place where House members could obtain cash illegally. Nine people have pleaded guilty in the investigation of the post office, which is a contract agency of the U.S. Postal Service staffed solely by House employees.

Guilty Plea Refocuses Attention On How the House Is Managed

Implicated in Post Office Scandal, Rostenkowski Has 'No Comment'

By Kenneth J. Cooper
Washington Post Staff Writer

Democratic leaders tried for more than a year to shift public attention from the House's own affairs to the business of writing laws, but new evidence of embezzlement at the House Post Office has turned the focus back on internal management issues.

Speaker Thomas S. Foley (D-Wash.) said he found "deeply distressing" Robert V. Rota's courtroom admissions that he illegally gave several House members cash for postage vouchers during his two decades as the House's elected postmaster. Rota, who resigned last March, pleaded guilty Monday to three misdemeanors and agreed to cooperate with federal investigators.

"Well, obviously I am surprised by the extent of them and distressed by them," Foley said of Rota's allegations. "You know, I have a deep concern that the public confidence in the House needs to be strengthened, not to be further eroded."

Republican leaders, as they did last year amid the House Bank and Post Office scandals, pressed for the disclosure of confidential documents to distance themselves from any instances of wrongdoing.

"Public disclosure, like with the bank thing, is the best thing to do," said Rep. Pat Roberts (R-Kan.), who participated last year in an internal investigation of the post office.

Roberts, for instance, said House leaders should release the numbers of 19 postage vouchers cited in court papers as ones that Rota exchanged with "Congressman A" and "Congressman B" for more than $30,000. The dates, amounts and descriptions of the vouchers match those of Ways and Means Committee Chairman Dan Rostenkowski (D-Ill.) and former representative Joe P. Kolter (D-Pa.).

"No comment," Rostenkowski told reporters before going to a White House lunch, where he sat next to President Clinton. Rostenkowski, a leader of House negotiators on Clinton's economic package, indicated he was following lawyers' advice to remain silent about Rota's allegations.

On CNN's "Larry King Live" last night, Clinton said he was not involved in the case but that "like every other American," Rostenkowski "should be given a presumption of innocence." He also praised Rostenkowski's efforts on behalf of the economic package.

Three sources close the federal investigation said that Virginia C. Fletcher, a Washington aide to Rostenkowski for 30 years, invoked her Fifth Amendment right against self-incrimination but has been compelled to accept immunity from prosecution and testify before a federal grand jury. The sources said Fletcher's testimony has not aided prosecutors. "It would be inappropriate to comment," said Paul L. Perito, Fletcher's lawyer.

Kolter did not return a telephone call, but his lawyer, Alan Baron, said: "Kolter denies any wrongdoing."

Roberts urged the House to dispel any doubts about the identities of "Congressman A" and "Congressman B." "I don't understand why we can't say, 'Here's the voucher numbers. That's who it is,' " he said.

The Republican leadership also prepared a resolution to authorize public release of all documents from last year's internal investigation, including the transcripts of interviews of Rota and 37 other witnesses. In court documents, Rota acknowledged lying in his interview about whether there were cash-for-stamps exchanges at the House Post Office.

Almost exactly a year ago, the House twice defeated GOP-sponsored amendments to release the investigative documents, 207 to 200 and 223 to 196.

Democratic leaders, having learned a lesson or two from a horrible 1992, moved to head off embarrassing votes and held an afternoon meeting with their GOP counterparts.

Rep. David Dreier (R-Calif.), a vice chairman of a congressional reorganization panel, suggested Rota's statements could "provide an impetus" for the committee's recommendations, due in September.

"Some members would love to sweep it under the rug. It makes it more difficult for those members who are not reform-minded to stay that way," Dreier suggested.

In defense of the House, Foley cited management reforms at the post office last year. Michael J. Shinay, an experienced executive with the U.S. Postal Service, was hired as Rota's successor. Shinay said he has eliminated patronage hiring, relying instead on a two-part examination.

Leonard P. Wishart, a retired Army general, was hired to oversee nonlegislative operations such as the post office and House restaurants. Wishart said nonpartisan hiring procedures for the 700 to 900 employees under his jurisdiction would be submitted to the House Administration Committee later this month.

"There is no possible way . . . these events could take place today," Foley told reporters.

They never did, according to Rostenkowski's many Democratic defenders. "It's inconceivable to me that he did it," said Rep. Dan Glickman (D-Kan.), chairman of the Permanent Select Committee on Intelligence.

Staff writers David S. Hilzenrath, Kevin Merida, Eric Pianin and, Michael York contributed to this report.

House postal task force agrees to bare secrets

Democrats fear budget impact

By Paul M. Rodriguez
THE WASHINGTON TIMES

House Democrats, under pressure from Republicans and shocked by the revelations of former House Postmaster Robert V. Rota, have tentatively agreed to make public all documents and secret testimony from a congressional task force probe of the House Post Office.

To formalize the process, GOP leaders are prepared later today to introduce a resolution in the House they believe many Democrats, especially freshmen, will approve to make public the materials that so far have been seen only by the task force, the House ethics committee and the Justice Department.

"Yes, we expect to make public all of these documents," said Rep. Charlie Rose, North Carolina Democrat and chairman of the House Administration Committee.

Included are depositions taken under oath from Heather Foley, wife of House Speaker Thomas S. Foley, who reportedly attempted to deflect an investigation of the post office.

The action came as Democrats met with President Clinton to rally behind his budget package.

The president and other Democratic leaders said publicly they were not concerned for now about any fallout from the widening post office probe and indications that Rep. Dan Rostenkowski, powerful chairman of the House Ways and Means Committee and a key budget player, was involved in a postal embezzlement conspiracy.

"No," Mr. Clinton said. "We've got a lot of work to do. Chairman Rostenkowski's done a great job with this budget so far, and we've worked very closely together. And we're going to work today. I don't know anything about the rest of it."

Sen. Daniel Patrick Moynihan of New York, chairman of the Senate Finance Committee, agreed: "Not one bit. Not the least bit. His status hasn't changed."

Privately, however, many acknowledged that if Mr. Rostenkowski were indicted in the next three weeks in connection with the probe, it could have a major impact on budget talks.

Mr. Rota, admitting to a 20-year conspiracy to embezzle post office funds by using congressional vouchers, implicated two congressmen believed to be Mr. Rostenkowski, Illinois Democrat, and former Rep. Joe Kolter, Pennsylvania Democrat.

Mr. Rostenkowski and Mr. Kolter were not named by prosecutors, but dates and amounts for their vouchers matched those listed in the criminal information filed by U.S. Attorney J. Ramsey Johnson. Both have previously been subpoenaed by a federal grand jury but have refused to testify on Fifth Amendment grounds.

Neither was talking yesterday.

"I have no comment to make," Mr. Rostenkowski said prior to a luncheon date with Mr. Clinton to discuss ongoing budget negotiations. He acknowledged to reporters that his silence was on the advice of his attorneys.

"Like every other American, he should be given a presumption of innocence," Mr. Clinton said last night on CNN's "Larry King Live." The president said he was "not involved [in the case] and shouldn't be."

Mr. Foley told reporters yesterday he was "surprised by the extent" of Mr. Rota's allegations, made in a plea agreement with federal prosecutors that was announced Monday.

"I have a deep concern that confidence in the House needs to be strengthened, not further eroded," said Mr. Foley, Washington Democrat.

Mr. Foley said it was unfair to Mr. Rostenkowski to be tried and convicted in the press. "There is no information from the Justice Department, from any source, that indicates that any member of Congress is about to be indicted. To make assumptions about any individual prior to such circumstance would be totally unjustified," Mr. Foley said.

House rules would require Mr. Rostenkowski to step aside as chairman of the Ways and Means Committee if he is indicted. The next most senior member of the committee, Rep. Sam Gibbons, Florida Democrat, would then assume the chairmanship.

Mr. Gibbons, 73, sought to downplay any speculation that he would be replacing Mr. Rostenkowski.

"He seems to be doing all right. It hasn't affected him at all, as far as I can tell," Mr. Gibbons said. "I don't think it's going to happen any time soon. We're going to get over this thing [the conference] in a few weeks."

Other Democrats were quick to rally around Mr. Rostenkowski as the first day of earnest negotiations on the budget plan got under way.

"I told him to relax, he's going to win this fight," said Jack Brooks, Texas Democrat and chairman of the House Judiciary Committee.

Preparing for the release of the post office documents, Mr. Rose said he and Rep. Bill Thomas, California Republican, had begun to work on "how best to get these documents out into the public." Mr. Thomas is the ranking Republican on the Administration Committee.

"I cannot tell you if it will be today or tomorrow, but it's being worked on," Mr. Rose said. It was a sub-group of his panel that constituted the task force that investigated allegations of corruption at the post office last year.

Included in the documents are depositions from Mr. Rota, former House Counsel Steven R. Ross, Mrs. Foley, wife and unpaid chief of staff to Mr. Foley, and scores of other people who were interviewed by the task force during a four-month probe into allegations of illegal drug sales, embezzlement and campaign irregularities.

Details of the probe were reported in The Washington Times in a series of articles beginning in January 1992.

Mr. Foley told reporters yesterday that he did not "believe that we will interrupt the proceedings" underway at the budget conference to pass the president's budget proposals.

The speaker reminded reporters that all of the circumstances that led to Mr. Rota's conviction and that of seven other former post office employees no longer exist because of major reforms instituted by the House last year after the scandal and separate disclosures about the now-closed House bank.

Mr. Rota was forced to resign in March 1992.

The pettiness of 'Congressman A'

Perhaps not since Esau traded his birthright for a mess of porridge has so much apparently been jeopardized for so little.

That's what most startles about the newest bombburst in the House of Representatives postage stamp scandal—the smallness of the winnings in comparison to the enormity of the potential loss.

The federal investigation has been unfolding for months, but not until Monday, when former House Postmaster Robert Rota pleaded guilty to conspiracy and embezzlement, has the public gotten a clear fix on what happened and how much—or more accurately, how little—was involved.

Rota admitted to helping an undisclosed number of congressmen swap postage stamps and stamp vouchers for cash from the years 1972 through 1991. His plea statement didn't name names, but Rota said he helped a "Congressman A" illegally collect $21,300 and a "Congressman B" collect $9,300.

Other court documents indicate that Congressman B is probably former Pennsylvania Rep. Joe Kolter, and that Congressman A is likely to be Chicago's own Rep. Dan Rostenkowski.

The timing couldn't have been worse.

As chairman of the House Ways and Means Committee, "Rosty" has been trying to steer President Clinton's deficit reduction legislation through Congress. Indeed, Monday's revelations occurred just as Rostenkowski and Sen. Daniel Moynihan were tackling the critical job of reconciling House and Senate versions of the deficit package so as to preserve paper-thin majorities in both chambers. Many feel that nothing less than the success of the Clinton presidency rides on the outcome of their effort.

It must be remembered that Rostenkowski has been charged with nothing so far. And that even if he is indicted, he will have every opportunity to defend himself in court.

Still, the implications of Rota's guilty plea are as perplexing as they are enormous. Could it be that Dan Rostenkowski, the master of the six-figure fundraiser and the five-figure speakers' fee, risked everything for $2,000 to $4,000 a year in pocket cash?

Then again, other questions have been raised about Rostenkowski's use of campaign funds to rent a family-owned office in Chicago, and his purchase of government-funded leased cars. There appears to be a pattern of pettiness here, a pattern that has officials from City Hall to the White House fretting that the answer might be yes.

House Once OKd Scheme, Say Veterans

WASHINGTON—Cashing in office postage stamps for pocket money—which is at the heart of the embezzlement scheme in which Rep. Dan Rostenkowski has been implicated—was a permitted House practice decades ago, three veterans of Congress maintained Tuesday.

"Thirty years ago some people might have done that to have some going-home money," said Rep. Jack Brooks (D-Texas), minimizing the accusations involving Rostenkowski.

Brooks, who has been in Congress since 1954, dismissed the grand jury investigation of the House post office as part of a "vendetta against Congress" by Republican holdovers in the U.S. attorney's office and he urged Rostenkowski to "relax."

Jack Brooks

Rep. Steny H. Hoyer (D-Md.), who was elected in 1980, agreed that stamps-for-cash had been House policy. "It was a bad policy then, and it was right that it was changed," Hoyer said. "It used to be that if you have not used up the stamps you were allotted, you could covert them to money."

Hoyer did not recall when or by whom the policy was changed.

Rep. John P. Murtha (D-Pa.), first elected to Congress in 1974, said he never converted stamps to money but added, "a lot of members probably did." Members also were once able to convert money allotted for office stationery to personal use, he said.

A House leadership aide said he wasn't familiar with the practice.

Was Rostenkowski, who was first elected to Congress in 1958, aware of the supposed policy and did he take advantage of it? "I don't know if he was familar with it," said a spokesman.

Scandals over House members' spending practices prompted reforms in 1977 by the Commission on Administrative Review, headed by Rep. David Obey (D-Wis.).

In the embezzlement scheme outlined in court documents, the former head of the House post office, Robert V. Rota, has admitted giving several House members cash in exchange for office vouchers or for postage stamps obtained with vouchers.

Members of Congress obtain stamps at the post office for official mail that does not qualify to be sent free under the congressional franking privilege, such as overseas mail.

The charges against Rota list 12 separate instances in which a "Congressman A"—whom documents show to be Rostenkowski—exchanged stamps or vouchers for cash from 1985 to 1987 and 1989 to 1991. The amounts ranged from $900 to $2,800.

Rep. Steny H. Hoyer (D-Md.), who was elected in 1980, agreed that stamps-for-cash had been House policy. "It was a bad policy then, and it was right that it was changed," Hoyer said. "It used to be that if you have not used up the stamps you were allotted, you could covert them to money."

Hoyer did not recall when or by whom the policy was changed.

Rep. John P. Murtha (D-Pa.), first elected to Congress in 1974, said he never converted stamps to money but added, "a lot of members probably did." Members also were once able to convert money allotted for office stationery to personal use, he said.

A House leadership aide said he wasn't familiar with the practice.

Was Rostenkowski, who was first elected to Congress in 1958, aware of the supposed policy and did he take advantage of it? "I don't know if he was familar with it," said a spokesman.

Scandals over House members' spending practices prompted reforms in 1977 by the Commission on Administrative Review, headed by Rep. David Obey (D-Wis.).

In the embezzlement scheme outlined in court documents, the former head of the House post office, Robert V. Rota, has admitted giving several House members cash in exchange for office vouchers or for postage stamps obtained with vouchers.

Members of Congress obtain stamps at the post office for official mail that does not qualify to be sent free under the congressional franking privilege, such as overseas mail.

The charges against Rota list 12 separate instances in which a "Congressman A"—whom documents show to be Rostenkowski—exchanged stamps or vouchers for cash from 1985 to 1987 and 1989 to 1991. The amounts ranged from $900 to $2,800.

accomplishments that indicated that he has been thinking about what life without "Rosty" would be like for the city: the passenger fee for airports; Kennedy Expressway reconstruction funding; the downtown circulator project; low-income housing tax credits; federal flood assistance for Chicago's South Side; and the expensive Deep Tunnel storm sewer project.

While he hastened to tell reporters that he wasn't calling the Rostenkowski probe a political witch hunt, Daley did say that he was "shocked" that the former U.S. attorney who initiated the grand jury investigation, Jay Stephens, has announced his candidacy for U.S. senator in Virginia.

Daley said such a blatant political move can raise some doubts about whether the investigation might have political motivations.

Axelrod recommended that anyone eager to replace Rostenkowski ought to "hold their fire."

He said: "This guy has been tried and convicted in the newspapers, but no action has been taken against him in the courts. We don't know if such action will be taken, and even if it is, we don't know that it will result in a conviction."

Line forming to succeed Rostenkowski

By Robert Davis
and Thomas Hardy
TRIBUNE STAFF REPORTERS

The greatest measure of success in politics is the ability to look beyond the present, to play chess instead of checkers, to assess immediately a development and mentally play it out to the end, all the time asking the age-old question: "What's in it for me?"

In City Hall—where political plots unfold constantly and careers are often made or broken on all levels—and in ward offices from the lakefront to the Far Northwest Side, the talk Tuesday was of U.S. Rep. Dan Rostenkowski's troubles and the future of his congressional seat.

The House Ways and Means Committee chairman reputedly is the "Congressman A" incriminated Monday by a former House postmaster's guilty plea to three federal misdemeanor charges in an embezzling scheme.

Rostenkowski, 65, brushed past reporters outside his committee office with a terse "no comment" Tuesday morning.

Although there have been no formal charges filed against him, there was heavy betting on Capitol Hill and in Chicago that the 34-year member of Congress will have his term cut short by a federal grand jury or that he will not stand for re-election next year.

Under House rules, committee chairmen must resign their posts if they are indicted, although they can remain in Congress until their case is adjudicated.

But Rostenkowski "won't sit and be jerked around by this process, and he won't stay in Congress without his chairmanship," predicted one Chicago Democrat who is close to him.

The result was unbridled speculation about who might have the upper hand to replace Rostenkowski in the new 5th Congressional District, which sprawls from the 43rd Ward and the lakefront to the Northwest Side and suburban Schiller Park.

"Obviously there's going to be a lot of people looking at this situation, a lot of ambitions in play," said media consultant David Axelrod, who worked on the Democrat's campaign last year.

In deference to Rostenkowski and the uncertainty of his situation, most Democrats tried to be discreet in discussing their interest in the congressional seat.

The exception was former Ald. Dick Simpson, who lost his primary challenge to Rostenkowski last year and has publicly conducted a death watch of the laborious grand jury probe. Simpson renewed his demand for Rostenkowski to resign immediately.

The typical reaction, however, was along the lines of remarks by Ald. Eugene Schulter (47th), who formed a congressional campaign exploratory committee four months ago.

"I want to make it clear that at this stage of the game, I have no intentions to run against [Rostenkowski] if he decides to seek re-election," Schulter said. "But if it's a level playing field and he's not going to be there, I certainly want to be able to present my credentials to the district folks."

Counting herself among them, Marge Laurino said: "I suspect the congressional wanna-bes certainly aren't going to make any moves on this until Rostenkowski decides what he's going to do."

Laurino, a Democratic state central committeewoman and daughter of Ald. Anthony Laurino (39th), said Rostenkowski's reputation among local voters was hurt more by a highly publicized 1989 confrontaton with senior citizens over health-care benefits than by the post office scandal.

In addition to Laurino and Schulter, Democrats mentioned as possible candidates to replace Rostenkowski, who is in his 18th term, include: state Sen. John Cullerton; first-term state Reps. Nancy Kaszak, Joseph Kotlarz and Rod Blagojevich; Cook County Commissioner Ted Lechowicz; and Ald. Michael Wojcik (35th).

The list is expected to grow, as is the level of confusion.

In the event that Rostenkowski were to resign more than 180 days before the November 1994 election, Gov. Jim Edgar would have to declare the seat vacant and a special election would then be held within 120 days.

Special and regular election campaigns for the seat could be under way almost simultaneously.

Apart from Simpson, the most active player Tuesday was Ald. Richard Mell (33rd), a well-known political weather vane who in recent times has been hawking the talents of Blagojevich, his son-in-law.

Mell himself toyed with the idea of running for Congress just last year in the new heavily Hispanic 4th District eventually taken over by former Ald. Luis Gutierrez (26th).

Mell again was floating the idea of sending his son-in-law to Congress, and he was even proudly showing reporters examples of the campaign handiwork he used to send Blagojevich to Springfield. One, featuring pictures of the Statue of Liberty and the candidate, the son of Serbian immigrants, "still brings tears to my eyes," Mell said.

Mayor Richard Daley, meantime, was cautious Tuesday when asked what he thought the future holds for Rostenkowski, his friend and ally. Again, confusion and uncertainty about the Rostenkowski case pervaded a City Hall news conference.

"No one knows. I don't know. You just don't know," said Daley, a former county prosecutor, who nonetheless expressed bewilderment about what the legal developments meant to Rostenkowski.

Asked to explain what Rostenkowski has done for Chicago, Daley quickly ticked off a list of

Probers Look for a Pattern

Campaign Funds, Payrollers Examined

By Michael Briggs and Mark Brown
Staff Writers

The federal investigation that has implicated Rep. Dan Rostenkowski (D-Ill.) in a scheme to embezzle cash from the House post office continues to examine other financial affairs of the Chicago congressman as well.

Agents of the FBI, the Internal Revenue Service and other investigators have tried to determine if there is a pattern of Rostenkowski using his congressional or campaign expense funds to enrich himself and his relatives.

Federal investigators also have examined whether Rostenkowski carried "ghost payrollers" on his congressional staff who really worked for his 32nd Ward organization in Chicago.

Former House Postmaster Robert V. Rota on Monday pleaded guilty to embezzlement and conspiracy and, without naming Rostenkowski, admitted providing tens of thousands of dollars in embezzled funds to several congressmen. Rostenkowski, sources and records indicated, was one of the House members Rota fingered.

A decision on whether to seek an indictment of Rostenkowski apparently is not imminent as investigators continue to piece together evidence in Illinois and in Washington. One source said "a more attractive case" could be made if it could be showed that embezzlement from the post office fit a pattern.

The grand jury that turned its sights on Rostenkowski more than a year ago has heard this summer from witnesses who worked on the federal payroll at a Chicago office shared by Rostenkowski's congressional and political operations and by Ald. Terry Gabinski (32nd).

Gabinski, Rostenkowski's protege, was subpoenaed and, like many other Rostenkowski associates, was granted immunity from prosecution as part of the government's effort to pry information from reluctant lovalists to the 65-year-old legislator.

The grand jury was attempting to determine if workers on the government payroll in the offices at 2148-2150 N. Damen did any work for the federal government. In interviews with the Sun-Times, some of those witnesses said they were even asked to draw charts of the office seating arrangements in order to help grand jurors understand which employees performed what functions.

The Damen buildings have been owned by Rostenkowski's sisters and daughters, who were paid hundreds of thousands of dollars in rent over the years from the federal government and city of Chicago.

The grand jury also has subpoenaed present and former workers at a Wilmette car dealership that provided cars for Rostenkowski. Prosecutors were following up on reports in the Sun-Times Jan. 24 that Rostenkowski took ownership of three vehicles for which he had charged the government at least $68,250. One former employee of the dealership said he was asked at a grand jury session this summer to go through a large stack of records to help sort out the Rostenkowski transactions.

There also were subpoenas issued following a Sun-Times report last Dec. 13 that Rostenkowski paid more than $73,000 in campaign funds to himself and his sisters for a little-used office in a family-owned building adjacent to his home.

Rostenkowski's name first surfaced more than a year ago as a player in what had been a scarcely noticed investigation of theft and drug dealing by low-level workers at the House post office.

The dimensions of the probe expanded when Rostenkowski disclosed, as he w required to do under House rules, that May 6, 1992, a grand jury subpoena records of his congressional office expen Records of two Democratic colleagues fr Pennsylvania also were subpoenaed.

Rostenkowski at first cooperated with demand for what were mostly public cords, but he spurned a follow-up subpo for him to appear before the grand jury. claimed that he was a victim of a polit witch hunt and invoked his Fifth Amer ment right not to provide testimony t prosecutors might use against him.

Last spring, U.S. Attorney Jay B. S phens, a Republican, was forced out office by newly appointed Attorney Gen Janet Reno, who later instructed prose tors to pursue the investigation.

Stephens, no longer privy to details the grand jury investigation that he o ran, said Tuesday that the conviction of postmaster should "effectively bring t near conclusion the investigative activ related to the post office activity, and a result, prosecutors should be able to reac decision on whether or not any member Congress would be indicted in the relativ near future unless there is some effor derail or delay the investigation further political reasons."

Stephens said the decision to remove prolonged the investigation. "The Clint administration action in April either design or otherwise had the effect of del ing the investigation by 90 to 120 day Stephens said. "The issue now will whether they take any additional politic action."

Nothing to Say On Stamp Scandal

Sun-Times Washington Bureau

WASHINGTON—Rep. Dan Rostenkowski (D-Ill.) declined Tuesday to comment on new developments in the House post office scandal.

"I have no comment," he said. Asked if that was on advice of his lawyer, he said, "Yup. That's right."

Rostenkowski had lunch with President Clinton, who said he did not believe Rostenkowski's legal problems would diminish his effectiveness.

On Tuesday, Rostenkowski declined to comment on the investigation. His spokesman specifically declined to comment on questions about his alleged misuse of the political funds and the total amount of money he received.

The campaign fund that contains more than $1 million is called Rostenkowski for Congress. He also has a federal political action committee and a state political action committee, both of which carry the name American Leaders.

Federal investigators have subpoenaed expense records from all three funds, and the documents relating to Rota's guilty plea Monday maintained that Rota had given illegal cash payments to unnamed congressmen in exchange for checks drawn on political funds.

But the documents provided no details of such exchanges and did not specifically link Rostenkowski to them.

The sources said Rostenkowski also is under scrutiny for the way he handled lease payments for three vehicles and office space in his Near Northwest Side district.

Since 1987, government records show, Rostenkowski's office billed taxpayers more than $68,000 to lease two vans and a station wagon as "mobile offices" in his district. He later purchased the vehicles for amounts that he said he does not recall.

Records also show that his office has paid $73,000 in rent to his sisters for space in a building they owned in his district.

Disclosures in the Sun-Times initially prompted federal interest in the vehicle and office leases. Investigators in Chicago are working with prosecutors in Washington on this part of the inquiry.

More than a dozen of Rostenkowski's current and former aides have testified before a federal grand jury in Washington. A number of them have received immunity from prosecution in exchange for their testimony.

'Congressman A'

There are those who can't seem to fathom the notion that Rep. Dan Rostenkowski might soon be indicted in the House Post Office scandal. As all of Washington knows by now, former House Postmaster Robert V. Rota's plea agreement with federal prosecutors, named two congressmen, identified only as congressmen A and B, as conspiring with him to embezzle Post Office funds by using congressional vouchers. And it so happens that the records identified by Mr. Rota appear to match those of Mr. Rostenkowski and former Rep. Joe Kolter. People who have sprung to Mr. Rostenkowski's defense have not done so because he has been the Mother Teresa of American politics — Mr. Rostenkowski is a classic Chicago machine pol whose reputation has been built upon a knack for horse-trading, arm-twisting and other sorts of political calculation and manipulation. No, the widespread disbelief is rooted in the size of the scandal. "Why," people ask, "would Rosty jeopardize everything for a measly $15,000 or $20,000?"

These supporters go on to point out that had the Illinois Democrat retired last year from the House, he could have quite legally transferred the million bucks in his campaign war chest directly into his personal savings account. If Mr. Rostenkowski were in it for the cash, goes the argument, he would have snagged the big pot of gold. If he didn't sell out for a million, comes the conclusion, then how on earth would Mr. Rostenkowski have been corrupted for pathetic small change?

Ultimately this is a curious defense — Rosty supporters are not arguing that the congressman is above reproach, merely that had he run a scam it would have been for real money. And it is a defense that doesn't even hold up, neither logically nor given the evidence of Mr. Rostenkowski's pattern of financial shenanigans.

In simple terms of logic, the defense doesn't hold up because big scams are not always the best scams. There is, after all, the old maxim that it is easier to steal one dollar each from a million people than it is to steal 1 million dollars from one person. Similarly, it may be easier and safer to run a multitude of small-potatoes scams that net $20,000 each than it is to hold together one big conspiracy in which the stakes are higher. And if the scams are always for small amounts a politician can then say, "Why would I threaten my career for such a tiny sum?"

One reason might be that enough tiny sums lumped together make a tidy sum. And if there is any truth to a slew of articles over the years in publications as varied as the Chicago dailies and Congressional Quarterly, Mr. Rostenkowski knows how to collect substantial money through a multiplicity of low-dollar, ethically questionable financial arrangements. For one, Mr. Rostenkowski pays most of his day-to-day expenses (lunches at Morton's, for example) through his political action committee or personal re-election campaign. Making personal use of campaign dollars is verboten, of course, but the rules are elastic. According to Congressional Quarterly, "Nearly a third of $358,331 in operating expenditures reported by Rostenkowski's campaign and his PAC in 1990 and 1991 went for items that enhanced his lifestyle — travel, chauffeurs, car insurance, cable TV bills, dinner out, a golf caddy and rental payments to himself and his family."

The rental payments to himself and his family are perhaps the most interesting part of this pattern of what, but for the bendability of campaign finance laws, might be characterized as petty corruption. Mr. Rostenkowski rents part of a house he owns with his sisters to his campaign. And another part of the house is rented by his House of Representatives office as a Chicago district office. As of 1991, Mr. Rostenkowski's campaign was giving Mr. Rostenkowski and his sisters $1,250 a month in rent. The House of Representatives was paying the family $1,500 a month for its space. And then there are the expenses picked up by the campaign, paying to fix the air conditioning and the furnace in the house, and to replace the carpeting — which in 1990 cost more than $5,000. Could it be that Mr. Rostenkowski knows not only how to subsidize his own lifestyle but also that of his sisters, who live in the house that is so effectively underwritten by taxpayers and campaign contributors?

These payments may not be illegal (though, then again, a court might have an interesting time determining just how legal they are), but they are clearly dubious. What they show is that Mr. Rostenkowski is not above muddying himself in dubious transactions for small change. That by no means proves that the congressman is guilty of criminal wrongdoing in the Post Office scandal: It simply puts the lie to the idea that Mr. Rostenkowski would never risk his reputation for pocket money.

As to the idea that Mr. Rostenkowski could have cashed in his campaign fund for a quick million had he been interested in the high life, that assumes the congressman would have been willing to get out of politics. And there seems to be no disagreement that that is the one thing Mr. Rostenkowski would not have been willing to do.

U.S. probes Rostenkowski campaign fund use

By Christopher Drew and Michael Tackett
TRIBUNE STAFF WRITERS

WASHINGTON—Federal prosecutors are investigating whether Rep. Dan Rostenkowski may have pocketed as much as $100,000 by exchanging checks drawn on political campaign funds and government expense vouchers for cash at the House post office, sources said Tuesday.

While federal authorities have disclosed allegations that the Chicago Democrat may have embezzled at least $20,000 by misusing office expense vouchers, they also have evidence suggesting that he may have converted tens of thousands of dollars in campaign funds to his own use in the guise of stamp purchases, the sources said.

Investigators believe that over the last decade, the 18-term member of Congress may have received "in the ballpark" of $80,000 to $100,000 through the two types of transactions, said the sources, who spoke on condition of anonymity.

They said investigators in Washington and Chicago also are examining Rostenkowski's arrangements for leasing vehicles and office space in the Chicago area as part of an intensifying effort to determine whether he has abused his position to enhance his lifestyle.

Former House postmaster Robert Rota, who pleaded guilty to federal charges Monday, said that for years he had provided a "largely untraceable source of illegal cash" to several members of Congress.

Federal law-enforcement officials said that Rostenkowski, 65, the powerful chairman of the House Ways and Means Committee, is by far the most prominent of a handful of current and former House members who participated in the alleged scheme. Rostenkowski has denied wrongdoing and declined to discuss the allegations.

On Monday, the officials and court documents revealed that Rota has told authorities he gave Rostenkowski $20,300 in government cash from 1986 to 1992 in exchange for vouchers normally used to bill House offices for the purchase of stamps.

But investigators also believe Rostenkowski used the House post office on a number of occasions over the last decade to improperly cash checks drawn on his re-election campaign and political action committees, the sources said.

They said the checks were made out to the post office and were listed in the records of the political funds as being for stamp purchases.

But investigators believe that Rota gave cash to Rostenkowski instead of stamps in transactions that could have violated federal election laws by defrauding the political funds, the sources said.

Rota has agreed to cooperate with the investigation. Prosecutors are asking him about the range of his dealings with Rostenkowski and are seeking corroborating evidence. Rota, reached by telephone, declined to discuss the investigation.

While Rostenkowski's ties to Rota remain the prime focus of the investigation, the authorities are seeking to determine if Rostenkowski has engaged in a broad pattern of self-dealing before seeking any charges against him, the sources said.

In the past, Rostenkowski has forcefully advocated that congressmen should be paid more, and his open enjoyment of the perks of his position have drawn him into controversy.

During a debate over whether to raise congressional salaries in 1989, for example, Rostenkowski suggested allowing members to set their own salaries within a range, and he added, "I would sign for the highest end of the scale."

He takes frequent trips to golf resorts with lobbyists and often charges expensive dinners with associates to his political funds. For years, he was one of the leaders in the House in accepting honorariums for speeches.

In an interview earlier this year, Rostenkowski scoffed at the idea that he would illegally pocket relatively small amounts of money. Noting that if he had retired last year, he could have kept more than $1 million in campaign funds under a special House rule that now has expired, Rostenkowski added: "That's why this is so ridiculous. I am going to dabble in 10, 9, 8 thousand dollars when I could have taken a million?"

Prosecutors Reported Seeking to Widen Inquiry on Rostenkowski

By STEPHEN LABATON
Special to The New York Times

WASHINGTON, July 20 — As Capitol Hill buzzed about the news that one of its most powerful members had been accused of embezzlement, Federal officials said today that prosecutors were trying to broaden the case against Representative Dan Rostenkowski.

Officials and defense lawyers involved in the long-running investigation of Mr. Rostenkowski said prosecutors had been gathering evidence against him about a series of transactions in Chicago in an effort to link separate accusations of wrongdoing into a single, more serious case.

In doing so, the prosecutors would be following a tactic recently employed against other, less influential members of Congress: bringing charges under the Racketeer Influenced and Corrupt Organizations Act. The law, which provides especially severe penalties and gives prosecutors more time to act, was intended to create a new weapon against organized crime. It has been applied in other areas as well, a practice that has drawn criticism from defense lawyers.

Making Best of Situation

Mr. Rostenkowski, a Democrat, returned to Washington today from Chicago to begin delicate negotiations to move President Clinton's economic program through Congress and tried to act as if nothing had happened.

He refused to answer questions posed by reporters in the hallways of Congress and after emerging from a lunch at the White House with President Clinton and Senator Daniel Patrick Moynihan, the head of the Senate Finance Committee.

Mr. Clinton, too, seemed bent on making the best of the situation. He allowed himself to be photographed with Mr. Rostenkowski during the lunch and insisted in response to a question that the Congressman's legal problems would have no effect on the budget deliberations.

"We've got a lot of work to do," he said in the White House family dining room during the photo session with Mr. Moynihan and Mr. Rostenkowski. "Chairman Rostenkowski's done a great job with this budget so far and we've worked very closely together. And we're going to work today. I don't know anything about the rest of it. I just know that we're going to work."

Fellow lawmakers also said the latest disclosures would have little political impact. Representative Jack Brooks, the Texas Democrat who heads the Judiciary Committee, echoed the views expressed by other colleagues, telling a female reporter:

"It's just a cloud. It's not a rain cloud, honey. It's a light cloud."

Mr. Rostenkowski has firmly controlled the committee he leads, the Ways and Means Committee, which writes tax legislation, and his support for the President's agenda on health care and welfare has been considered critical for passage. Under the House Democratic rules, he would have to step down as head of the committee if he was indicted.

On Monday the former postmaster of the House of Representatives reached a plea agreement with prosecutors and said he had helped the chairman of the House Ways and Means Committee embezzle more than $20,000, according to court papers and Federal prosecutors. The former postmaster, Robert V. Rota, pleaded guilty to three misdemeanor counts of conspiracy and embezzlement and acknowledged that he had helped an undisclosed number of representatives steal tens of thousands of dollars for almost 20 years.

Immunity for Aide

In recent weeks, the authorities have granted immunity to Virginia C. Fletcher, a trusted aide to Mr. Rostenkowski for more than 30 years and his closest personal assistant, in exchange for her cooperation in the investigation, lawyers involved in the case said.

The investigation in Chicago is seeking to determine whether Mr. Rostenkowski converted campaign and taxpayer money for his own use and whether the racketeering law, which offers enormous procedural advantages to the Government, could be applied, Federal officials and defense lawyers said. No indictment is expected for weeks, until the investigation is completed.

To file racketeering charges, prosecutors must have evidence of a pattern of crimes, at a minimum, two felonies within 10 years that show a continuing criminal enterprise.

In his court appearance on Monday, Mr. Rota said he had given $21,300 to a person identified only as "Congressman A" from May 1985 through April 1991. The periodic payments described in court papers ranged from $900 to $2,800. Neither Mr. Rota nor the Government identified "Congressman A." But they provided voucher numbers for some of the transactions which, when matched with publicly available records, showed that the payments had been received by Mr. Rostenkowski.

Disbelief Among Colleagues

Democrats and Republicans said they were puzzled about what could possibly motivate a man who had access to hundreds of millions of dollars in his fund raising and lobbying to steal in the petty amounts prosecutors have suggested.

"We've been friends for such a long time, I just can't believe the son of a gun would get himself involved in something like this," said Representative Robert H. Michel of Illinois, the Republican leader. "I can't believe it. I don't want to believe it."

But Representative Newt Gingrich, the Republican whip from Georgia, used Mr. Rota's guilty plea to attack the Democrats.

"This is not a Congress scandal," Mr. Gingrich said. "Just as in Japan, this is about corrupt one-party rule for four decades. These are Democrats being named by a Democrat appointee under indictment."

House postal task force agrees to bare secrets

Democrats fear budget impact

By Paul M. Rodriguez
THE WASHINGTON TIMES

House Democrats, under pressure from Republicans and shocked by the revelations of former House Postmaster Robert V. Rota, have tentatively agreed to make public all documents and secret testimony from a congressional task force probe of the House Post Office.

To formalize the process, GOP leaders are prepared later today to introduce a resolution in the House they believe many Democrats, especially freshmen, will approve to make public the materials that so far have been seen only by the task force, the House ethics committee and the Justice Department.

"Yes, we expect to make public all of these documents," said Rep. Charlie Rose, North Carolina Democrat and chairman of the House Administration Committee.

Included are depositions taken under oath from Heather Foley, wife of House Speaker Thomas S. Foley, who reportedly attempted to deflect an investigation of the post office.

The action came as Democrats met with President Clinton to rally behind his budget package.

The president and other Democratic leaders said publicly they were not concerned for now about any fallout from the widening post office probe and indications that Rep. Dan Rostenkowski, powerful chairman of the House Ways and Means Committee and a key budget player, was involved in a postal embezzlement conspiracy.

"No," Mr. Clinton said. "We've got a lot of work to do. Chairman Rostenkowski's done a great job with this budget so far, and we've worked very sensitive intelligence and law enforcement posts be exempted from the bill. But the chamber rejected an amendment that would have kept Internal Revenue Service agents and examiners out of politics.

Sen. John Glenn, Ohio Democrat, said the bill would allow the nation's 3 million civil servants to "reclaim their constitutional rights by participating in our national political process on their own times as private citizens."

The Hatch Act has spawned more than 1,500 rulings and interpretations that are "confusing, contradictory and nondefensible," Mr. Glenn said.

Senate Minority Leader Bob Dole of Kansas said that without such restrictions, federal workers would be pressured to make political donations to unions that overwhelmingly support Democrats.

"The Hatch Act gives protections we can kiss goodbye.... Politics will replace merit in the decisions affecting hiring and promotion," he said.

His reservations were echoed by local Republicans, who said that in an overwhelmingly Democratic city such as the District, the work force could be coerced to support and campaign for Democrats.

As an example of the potential for mischief, District GOP officials pointed to an investigation this year of top officials in the Kelly administration who allegedly coerced city contractors to make campaign donations.

"The local government is dominated by one political party. Doing away with the Hatch Act means that the bureaucracy, which is supposed to be independent, is just going to be another extension of the political party in power," said Harry Singleton, D.C. Republican national committeeman.

Advocates for local workers called such fears unfounded and said the Republican Party would reap union contributions if it supported their goals.

"The Hatch Act has shackled local workers and barred them from carrying out their First Amendment rights and expressing their views every other American has," said Joslyn Williams, president of the Metropolitan Washington chapter of the AFL-CIO.

The Hatch Act was passed in 1939, when federal jobs were granted on the basis of political patronage and campaign contributions. District employees are covered by the act in a holdover from when Congress ran the city and city workers were employees of the federal government.

Prosecutors Reported Seeking to Widen Inquiry on Rostenkowski

By STEPHEN LABATON
Special to The New York Times

WASHINGTON, July 20 — As Capitol Hill buzzed about the news that one of its most powerful members had been accused of embezzlement, Federal officials said today that prosecutors were trying to broaden the case against Representative Dan Rostenkowski.

Officials and defense lawyers involved in the long-running investigation of Mr. Rostenkowski said prosecutors had been gathering evidence against him about a series of transactions in Chicago in an effort to link separate accusations of wrongdoing into a single, more serious case.

In doing so, the prosecutors would be following a tactic recently employed against other, less influential members of Congress: bringing charges under the Racketeer Influenced and Corrupt Organizations Act. The law, which provides especially severe penalties and gives prosecutors more time to act, was intended to create a new weapon against organized crime. It has been applied in other areas as well, a practice that has drawn criticism from defense lawyers.

Making Best of Situation

Mr. Rostenkowski, a Democrat, returned to Washington today from Chicago to begin delicate negotiations to move President Clinton's economic program through Congress and tried to act as if nothing had happened.

He refused to answer questions posed by reporters in the hallways of Congress and after emerging from a lunch at the White House with President Clinton and Senator Daniel Patrick Moynihan, the head of the Senate Finance Committee.

Mr. Clinton, too, seemed bent on making the best of the situation. He allowed himself to be photographed with Mr. Rostenkowski during the lunch and insisted in response to a question that the Congressman's legal problems would have no effect on the budget deliberations.

"We've got a lot of work to do," he said in the White House family dining room during the photo session with Mr. Moynihan and Mr. Rostenkowski. "Chairman Rostenkowski's done a great job with this budget so far and we've worked very closely together. And we're going to work today. I don't know anything about the rest of it. I just know that we're going to work."

Fellow lawmakers also said the latest disclosures would have little political impact. Representative Jack Brooks, the Texas Democrat who heads the Judiciary Committee, echoed the views expressed by other colleagues, telling a female reporter:

"It's just a cloud. It's not a rain cloud, honey. It's a light cloud."

Mr. Rostenkowski has firmly controlled the committee he leads, the Ways and Means Committee, which writes tax legislation, and his support for the President's agenda on health care and welfare has been considered critical for passage. Under the House Democratic rules, he would have to step down as head of the committee if he was indicted.

On Monday the former postmaster of the House of Representatives reached a plea agreement with prosecutors and said he had helped the chairman of the House Ways and Means Committee embezzle more than $20,000, according to court papers and Federal prosecutors. The former postmaster, Robert V. Rota, pleaded guilty to three misdemeanor counts of conspiracy and embezzlement and acknowledged that he had helped an undisclosed number of representatives steal tens of thousands of dollars for almost 20 years.

Immunity for Aide

In recent weeks, the authorities have granted immunity to Virginia C. Fletcher, a trusted aide to Mr. Rostenkowski for more than 30 years and his closest personal assistant, in exchange for her cooperation in the investigation, lawyers involved in the case said.

The investigation in Chicago is seeking to determine whether Mr. Rostenkowski converted campaign and taxpayer money for his own use and whether the racketeering law, which offers enormous procedural advantages to the Government, could be applied, Federal officials and defense lawyers said. No indictment is expected for weeks, until the investigation is completed.

To file racketeering charges, prosecutors must have evidence of a pattern of crimes, at a minimum, two felonies within 10 years that show a continuing criminal enterprise.

In his court appearance on Monday, Mr. Rota said he had given $21,300 to a person identified only as "Congressman A" from May 1985 through April 1991. The periodic payments described in court papers ranged from $900 to $2,800. Neither Mr. Rota nor the Government identified "Congressman A." But they provided voucher numbers for some of the transactions which, when matched with publicly available records, showed that the payments had been received by Mr. Rostenkowski.

Disbelief Among Colleagues

Democrats and Republicans said they were puzzled about what could possibly motivate a man who had access to hundreds of millions of dollars in his fund raising and lobbying to steal in the petty amounts prosecutors have suggested.

"We've been friends for such a long time, I just can't believe the son of a gun would get himself involved in something like this," said Representative Robert H. Michel of Illinois, the Republican leader. "I can't believe it. I don't want to believe it."

But Representative Newt Gingrich, the Republican whip from Georgia, used Mr. Rota's guilty plea to attack the Democrats.

"This is not a Congress scandal," Mr. Gingrich said. "Just as in Japan, this is about corrupt one-party rule for four decades. These are Democrats being named by a Democrat appointee under indictment."

GOP Pressing For Testimony In Postal Probe

House Democratic Leaders Fear More Lawmakers May Become Implicated

By David Rogers
And Joe Davidson
Staff Reporters of The Wall Street Journal

WASHINGTON — Republicans pressed for the release of still-secret testimony regarding House Post Office operations, as Democrats worried that the cash-for-stamps scandal could threaten lawmakers beyond their powerful tax chairman, Dan Rostenkowski.

A resolution ordering the release of transcripts compiled during a task force investigation last year may be offered as early as today on the House floor. Last summer, Democrats blocked release of the material by a narrow 207-200 vote. But in the aftermath of Monday's guilty plea by former Postmaster Robert Rota, Republicans are increasingly confident they can reverse that decision.

Mr. Rota's plea and accompanying court documents directly bear on the government's investigation of Mr. Rostenkowski, chairman of the Ways and Means Committee. But in a summary of the case, prosecutors allege the former postmaster provided cash in exchange for vouchers and stamps for "several lawmakers" during the early and mid 1980s.

Speaker Thomas Foley described himself as "surprised" and "distressed" by the detailed allegations attributed to Mr. Rota. After broad administrative reforms were instituted in the last Congress, the legal proceedings now resurrect a painful history that the leadership would prefer to see long behind it.

Caught center stage is Mr. Rostenkowski, who refused comment even as he went through a day of meetings with President Clinton and House and Senate negotiators on the administration's pending deficit-reduction bill. Court papers filed in the Rota case point to the Chicago Democrat as one of the unidentified congressman alleged to have received cash from Mr. Rota. And a law enforcement official familiar with the court proceedings said that based on the information provided by Mr. Rota, Mr. Rostenkowski could be charged with having made false statements on government vouchers.

The 56-year-old Mr. Rota, a career patronage employee with a penchant for Arabian horses, was a House character in himself. Government papers allege that he testified falsely before the same task force whose records Republicans now want released.

Friends of Mr. Rostenkowski say that he has privately insisted he never took money from the postmaster. And though the chairman has refused so far to testify on the matter, the contradictory accounts are a striking part of the case.

Beyond the Post Office, the wider government investigation of Mr. Rostenkowski has focused on whether he personally benefited from campaign and congressional office expenditures in Chicago. But none of the evidence reflected so far in court papers this week bears on whether the cash allegedly received from the stamp transactions was put to personal use by the chairman or any of the other lawmakers involved.

If the government decides to proceed on the lesser charge of making false statements on vouchers, it would seem small by comparison. But any indictment would be disastrous for the Chicago Democrat because it would force him to give up his powerful chairmanship.

Under House Democratic rules, Florida Rep. Sam Gibbons, as the ranking member of the panel, would become acting chairman. But the transition, however orderly, would expose a major vacuum in the panel's top leadership.

An affable 73-year-old veteran of the Normandy invasion, Mr. Gibbons is a strong advocate of free trade, but critics fault him for taking an often doctrinaire approach to issues and failing to build a strong expert staff around him. His opposition to tax reform in 1986 further strained his relationship with Mr. Rostenkowski, and despite his seniority, the chairman then kept Mr. Gibbons off the House-Senate conference on the landmark bill.

Given this history, Mr. Gibbons, as acting chairman, could be challenged if a more permanent chairman had to be chosen, which could occur if Mr. Rostenkowski left or if the situation extended into the next Congress. Though Rep. Charles Rangel (D., N.Y.) could yet prove a strong candidate, he too is seen as a less forceful leader than Mr. Rostenkowski.

This vacuum only adds to the sense of foreboding now in the party leadership. From the president's cabinet to Republicans themselves, official Washington has seemed almost to resist the detailed charges leveled in the Rota court documents. "I just can't believe it. It's not the Danny I know," said Treasury Secretary Lloyd Bentsen at a breakfast with reporters. Rep. Bob Livingston, a Louisiana Republican, expressed the same sense of disbelief. "Nobody really believes it," said Mr. Livingston. "If it happened, it happened, but it's just one of those hard-to-believe things."

This disbelief is matched against an underlying anger among those who were most intimately involved in prior House investigations into the Post Office's operations. Chief among these is Rep. Pat Roberts, a Kansas Republican and senior member of the House Administration Committee, who sees the Rota plea as confirming all of the suspicions he felt a year ago in leading a task force on the Post Office scandal.

Mr. Roberts is pressing the House leadership to release the vouchers cited in the court papers so as to clearly identify those involved. And he wants the transcripts of past testimony released if only to display the allegedly false statements made by Post Office workers, like Mr. Rota, who have since entered guilty pleas in the government inquiry.

"We've got 110 new members, and given the pertinency of the issue, it's a whole new ball game," he said of the efforts to reverse last year's vote. "I always felt I was riding shotgun on a stagecoach going backwards. After two-and-a-half years, the Rota plea just proves the House can't investigate itself."

Key budget legislator under cloud

Embezzlement rumors have not cramped this powerful chairman's style 'at all'

By Richard Wolf
USA TODAY

His legal woes mounting and his career possibly in jeopardy, the man who for 12 years has exerted more influence over the public's personal finances than anyone in Congress calmly lunched with the president Tuesday.

That's the way it has always been for Rep. Dan Rostenkowski, the career politician from Chicago.

Viewed by many as arrogant, gruff, tyrannical — but not one who'd be caught with a hand in the cookie jar — Rostenkowski usually walks on water in Washington.

But in the wake of Justice Department suggestions that his reach into taxpayers' pockets may have gone beyond the law, the 65-year-old chairman of the House Ways and Means Committee could be skating on thin ice.

If he falls through — an indictment might come within weeks — President Clinton would be without one of his staunchest and most strategically placed allies on Capitol Hill on the budget, health care, trade and welfare reform.

"It would appear to be one hell of a loss for the president if Rosty were taken out of the equation at this juncture," says House Minority Leader Bob Michel, R-Ill., a colleague for many years.

After a career that has spanned parts of five decades, Rostenkowski was reduced in legal papers Monday to "Congressman A" — the unnamed lawmaker who former House Postmaster Robert Rota says received $21,300 in embezzled funds from the post office.

Court documents released by the U.S. Attorney's office didn't name Rostenkowski, but the financial transactions described match those listed by his office in public records.

Rostenkowski offered no comment Tuesday, brushing aside reporters' questions as he shuttled between the power corridors of the White House and Capitol Hill.

The link leaves Rostenkowski — a leader in the battle to enact a five-year, $500 billion deficit reduction package — dangling somewhere between the legal and legislative worlds.

It also angers his friends.

"These types of leaks can be so devastating," says Rep. Charles Rangel, D-N.Y., a potential future chairman of the committee. "There is not one accusation from the United States government, and yet the man is being treated like a common criminal."

But Attorney General Janet Reno, who fired the Republican prosecutor in charge of the post office investigation in March, stands by the probe:

"Every investigation that I have anything to do with is going to be handled based on the evidence and the law, and not political pressure. As I don't do anything based on political considerations, I can't talk to you about the politics."

Officials speculate that any indictment, if there is one, is several weeks away. That should give Rostenkowski time to help muscle Clinton's deficit-cutting plan through Congress.

If indicted, Rostenkowski would have to relinquish his chairmanship temporarily. Under House rules, the ranking Democrat — Rep. Sam Gibbons of Florida, 73, a mild-mannered trade specialist — would take over.

Carrying the scenario one step further offers more interesting possibilities: If Rostenkowski left Congress, Gibbons could face a challenge from another Democrat. Rangel, a 63-year-old ex-prosecutor from Harlem, might fit the bill.

In either case, Democrats fear, the shoes might be too big to fill. Rostenkowski is a master of the committee process.

Like Donald Trump, he loves the art of the deal.

At Tuesday's House-Senate conference on the tax portions of the deficit-reduction bill, Rostenkowski refused to give up on a House-passed tax on all forms of energy since abandoned by the White House. His gambit: to extract concessions from the Senate first.

"As long as he's the chairman," says Rep. John Murtha, D-Pa., Clinton and other budget negotiators "have got to deal with him."

From the power centers of Washington to the Polish neighborhoods of Chicago, allies of the former ward boss are lining up to defend him:

▶ Treasury Secretary Lloyd Bentsen, the former Senate Finance Committee chairman who negotiated many a tax bill with Rostenkowski, says his alleged participation in a cash-for-stamps scheme "doesn't make any sense."

"Here's a guy who could have taken a million dollars," Bentsen says, referring to more than $1 million left in Rostenkowski's campaign coffers after the 1990 election — money he could have pocketed legally for the last time in 1992.

"I just don't believe it. It's not the Danny I know."

▶ Senate Finance Committee chairman Daniel Patrick Moynihan, D-N.Y., Rostenkowski's counterpart in the talks, says the new link publicized by investigators will not impede progress. "His status hasn't changed," Moynihan says.

▶ "Chairman Rostenkowski has done a great job on the budget so far. We've worked very closely together," Clinton says. "I don't know anything about the rest of it."

Clinton's top priority, he says, remains enacting a deficit-reduction bill before Congress' August recess.

And Rostenkowski's backbone, Clinton told Larry King Live, "has been a mile wide and awful stiff" during the budget negotiations.

▶ In Chicago, the reaction to Rosty's plight is mixed. Mayor Richard Daley, son of Rostenkowski's mentor, expresses support, while former Alderman Dick Simpson, his Democratic primary opponent last year, calls on him to resign.

And constituents accustomed to political corruption just shrug their shoulders.

"It doesn't shock us," says Martin Malmin, 20. "It's just how the government works. Everyone probably does it."

"He's just one who maybe got caught," says Al Smith, 57, a laundry machinery salesman who feels Rostenkowski still

Probers Look for a Pattern

Campaign Funds, Payrollers Examined

The federal investigation that has implicated Rep. Dan Rostenkowski (D-Ill.) in a scheme to embezzle cash from the House post office continues to examine other financial affairs of the Chicago congressman as well.

Agents of the FBI, the Internal Revenue Service and other investigators have tried to determine if there is a pattern of Rostenkowski using his congressional or campaign expense funds to enrich himself and his relatives.

Federal investigators also have examined whether Rostenkowski carried "ghost payrollers" on his congressional staff who really worked for his 32nd Ward organization in Chicago.

Former House Postmaster Robert V. Rota on Monday pleaded guilty to embezzlement and conspiracy and, without naming Rostenkowski, admitted that he provided tens of thousands of dollars in embezzled funds to several congressmen. Rostenkowski, sources and records indicated, was one of the House members Rota fingered.

A decision on whether to seek an indictment of Rostenkowski apparently is not imminent as investigators continue to piece together evidence in Illinois and in Washington. One source said "a more attractive case" could be made if it could be showed that embezzlement from the post office fit a pattern.

Jay B. Stephens, the former U.S. attorney who ran the investigation until he was forced out with the change of administrations, said in a television interview Tuesday that an indictment of Rostenkowski is "simply a matter of time."

The grand jury that turned its sights on Rostenkowski more than a year ago has heard this summer from witnesses who worked on the federal payroll at a Chicago office shared by Rostenkowski's congressional and political operations and by Ald. Terry Gabinski (32nd).

Gabinski, Rostenkowski's protege, was subpoenaed and, like many other Rostenkowski associates, was granted immunity from prosecution as part of the government's effort to pry information from reluctant loyalists to the 65-year-old legislator.

The grand jury was attempting to determine if workers on the government payroll in the offices at 2148-2150 N. Damen did any work for the federal government. In interviews with the Sun-Times, some of those witnesses said they were even asked to draw charts of the office seating arrangements in order to help grand jurors understand which employees performed what functions.

The Damen buildings have been owned by Rostenkowski's sisters and daughters, who were paid hundreds of thousands of dollars in rent over the years from the federal government and city of Chicago.

The grand jury also has subpoenaed present and former workers at a Wilmette car dealership that provided cars for Rostenkowski. Prosecutors were following up on reports in the Sun-Times Jan. 24 that Rostenkowski took ownership of three vehicles for which he had charged the government at least $68,250. One former employee of the dealership said he was asked at a grand jury session this summer to go through a large stack of records to help sort out the Rostenkowski transactions.

There also were subpoenas issued following a Sun-Times report last Dec. 13 that Rostenkowski paid more than $73,000 in campaign funds to himself and his sisters for a little-used office in a family-owned building adjacent to his home.

Rostenkowski's name first surfaced more than a year ago as a player in what had been a scarcely noticed investigation of theft and drug dealing by low-level workers at the House post office.

The dimensions of the probe expanded when Rostenkowski disclosed, as he was required to do under House rules, that on May 6, 1992, a grand jury subpoenaed records of his congressional office expenses. Records of two Democratic colleagues from Pennsylvania also were subpoenaed.

Rostenkowski at first cooperated with the demand for what were mostly public records, but he spurned a follow-up subpoena for him to appear before the grand jury. He claimed that he was a victim of a political witch hunt and invoked his Fifth Amendment right not to provide testimony that prosecutors might use against him.

Stephens, the former U.S. attorney, said Tuesday that the conviction of the postmaster should "effectively bring to a near conclusion the investigative activity related to the post office activity, and as a result, prosecutors should be able to reach a decision on whether or not any members of Congress would be indicted in the relatively near future unless there is some effort to derail or delay the investigation further for political reasons."

His prediction of Rostenkowski's indictment was made during an appearance on the ABC television show "Nightline."

Nothing to Say On Stamp Scandal

WASHINGTON—Rep. Dan Rostenkowski (D-Ill.) declined Tuesday to comment on new developments in the House post office scandal.

"I have no comment," he said. Asked if that was on advice of his lawyer, he said, "Yup. That's right."

Rostenkowski had lunch with President Clinton, who said he did not believe Rostenkowski's legal problems would diminish his effectiveness in negotiating a deficit agreement.

Constituents Offer Little Sympathy

Dan Rostenkowski's status as one of the most powerful Democrats in Washington might be threatened, but the folks he represents aren't losing any sleep over his troubles.

"We've got our own problems," said Richard Maldonado, 29. "If he dug his grave, then that's his problem. Basically, everybody's got to pay the piper."

Many echoed that sentiment in Rostenkowski's congressional district, which stretches roughly from Lincoln Park to the near western suburbs. Some took the typical Chicago philosophical approach.

"They're all crooked, but some of them are good crooks who get something done," said George Hackbarth, 74, a retiree who said he has voted for Rostenkowski for years.

Ray Meinsen, who lives outside the district but helps run a manufacturing business in Rostenkowski's 32nd Ward, was less sympathetic.

"Put him in jail," he said. "If they caught him doing that, he's probably done a lot of other things." Scott Fornek

Rostenkowski's foe stamps out fairness

As a liberal reformer, Dick Simpson could be expected to oppose the practice of lynching. And as a University of Illinois at Chicago professor, he surely knows that our legal system holds that a person is presumed innocent until proven guilty.

When he was an anti-Machine alderman from the North Side, Simpson believed in these things. He liked to make speeches praising goodness, fairness and honesty and condemning political opportunists, bullies and treachery. However, few people heard Simpson's speeches since most dozed off after two minutes of his pious preaching.

But now I'm not sure about Simpson's liberal views. Not after the political blood lust and hang-'em-high mentality he displayed Tuesday.

Almost within minutes of the latest allegations about Rep. Dan Rostenkowski's financial mischief, Simpson was publicly yelping that Rostenkowski should immediately resign.

My, how right-wingish of the liberal Simpson. What must his friends at the American Civil Liberties Union be thinking?

It's true that Rostenkowski has been splattered with considerable mud in the media. And maybe it's the beginning of the end of his political career.

But as of now, this is how things stand.

A congressional flunky who ran the House post office has pleaded guilty to three charges of being a petty crook.

The flunky says he allowed a couple of congressmen to swap stamps for cash. That's illegal because the stamps are given to congressman for official purposes.

One of the congressmen is Rostenkowski, according to Justice Department sources.

If these allegations turn out to be true, Rostenkowski's days as a Washington powerhouse and globe-trotting golf guest could be over.

But as of now, he is presumed innocent. Maybe not in the eyes of the media or in your eyes or mine. But in the eyes of the law, he is as pure as a gurgling child. He has been formally accused of nothing. Not yet.

So until he's indicted, he will go on being President Clinton's chief congressional muscleman, twisting arms, whispering promises, kicking butt and doing whatever he must to push Clinton's tax program through Congress.

The stamps scandal can't help these efforts. A lot of skeptical taxpayers might be saying: "Wait a minute. This guy Rostenkowski is suspected of cadging pocket money by swapping stamps for cash. And he's the same guy who decides how much I should pay in taxes?"

But then, Rostenkowski has never worried about what the voters outside of his Chicago district think. If he depended on their good will, he couldn't be elected to sweep streets.

Of course, if indicted, he'll have to quit as chairman of the House Ways and Means Committee, the tax-juggling job that has made him one of the most powerful guys in Washington.

This is the job that causes lobbyists to slobber on his shoes and big corporations to hurl large speaker fees at him for mumbling a few cliches at private luncheons. It's why his blacksmith-like golf swing is in such demand at the most exclusive clubs and the biggest celebrity outings. It's why Clinton lovingly acts like he and Rostenkowski used to hang out together at Stash and Stella's Bar on Milwaukee Avenue.

And if he is put on trial and convicted, that will be the end of his career in politics, which began when he was about 2 minutes old. (His father was an old-time Chicago alderman and ward boss who plunked his precocious lad into the legislature when he was only 24.)

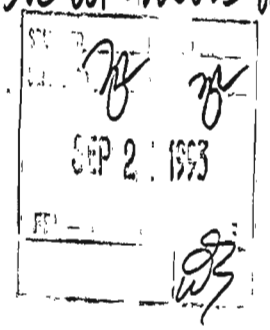
But none of this has happened yet. So it's unseemly of Simpson to prematurely howl for Rostenkowski's scalp. My, what must his friends at the ACLU think of such behavior.

Of course, even do-gooder liberals like Simpson can be gripped by crude political lust. And this vice seems to have seized him.

In the last election, Simpson ran against Rostenkowski, spent a lot of money, portrayed Rostenkowski as a scheming lug, but still lost big. Maybe Chicagoans prefer a scheming lug to a professor who once described himself as an "intellectual humanist." Intellectual humanists have never gone over big on Pulaski Road.

Now, he is panting to run again. And he obviously figures his chances would be enhanced if Rostenkowski groveled, crawled, confessed his sins and flung himself off the Capitol dome.



(Some might say that this attitude confirms Simpson's liberal credentials since he appears to be looking for a free ride.)

Or maybe Simpson is merely creating an issue that he can use as a teaching tool in one of his political science classes. The class could have discussions and do papers on the question: "Under our legal system, should a scheming lug be denied the presumption of innocence and due process of law—especially if he is running against the professor who gives out the grades in this class?"

If Simpson hasn't thought about this, he should. And it is his chance to have an attentive audience. The students have to stay awake and pay attention when he talks.

But I don't. Yawn.

The Rostenkowski Story

WHEN FORMER U.S. attorney Jay Stephens was asked as a Republican to submit his resignation to the new Democratic administration earlier this year, he suggested that the request might be part of a Democratic effort to derail an investigation of House Ways and Means Committee Chairman Dan Rostenkowski. Mr. Rostenkowski was regarded as crucial to the enactment of President Clinton's legislative agenda; Mr. Stephens's office was investigating whether Mr. Rostenkowski had broken the law in certain financial transactions involving, among other things, the House Post Office. The prosecutor implied on his way out that perhaps the Democrats were plotting to call the prosecution off.

Some plot. Under Democratic auspices, Mr. Stephens's former subordinates and acting successors have done just fine. They have wrung a guilty plea from former House postmaster Robert Rota that he helped several members of Congress embezzle funds from the post office. Court papers filed in connection with the plea suggest without naming him that Mr. Rostenkowski is one of the members Mr. Rota is accusing. We'll see what happens, of course. Mr. Rostenkowski has not been charged, and throughout the long investigation he has denied that he did anything wrong. But on the record so far, the Democratic Justice Department seems to be proceeding about as it ought to proceed with regard to this senior Democrat. Regular order, no pulling of punches.

There's a lesson in that, perhaps for both parties. Congress is even now moving to extend the lapsed independent counsel statute, providing for independent investigation and prosecution of senior executive branch officials credibly accused of crimes. The theory is that no administration can be expected to prosecute itself impartially at the highest levels; it would have a conflict of interest. Past administrations have nonetheless protested that the law encroaches on executive prerogative. To its credit, the Clinton administration has taken the opposite view.

But the question then is whether the law should also be broadened to apply to Congress. Can a party in power be trusted to prosecute its senior members in the legislative branch any more than the executive? The current case is a kind of test; so far it confirms us in our view that the answer is yes, that the regular prosecutorial system can be trusted and that the act should be limited to the executive branch.

As to Mr. Rostenkowski, he continues as Ways and Means chairman to serve as the principal House conferee on the huge bill to reduce the deficit; he met with the president on the measure yesterday. It's awkward, but we see no cure. If indicted, he will have to step aside. But surely a member maintaining his innocence cannot be compelled to step aside before, on the strength of no more than even a flourishing investigation. Our own sense is that, in purely legislative terms, less is at stake in this case than lore would have it. We recall that there was much rending of garments when former senator Lloyd Bentsen gave way to Daniel Patrick Moynihan as chairman of the Senate Finance Committee, which has the same jurisdiction as Ways and Means, and lo and behold, Mr. Moynihan did just fine. So, if the need arises, will any successor to Mr. Rostenkowski, important as he has been to the president in the budget process. Justice may be at issue here; the president's legislative agenda is not.

Line forming to succeed Rostenkowski

By Robert Davis
and Thomas Hardy
TRIBUNE STAFF REPORTERS

The greatest measure of success in politics is the ability to look beyond the present, to play chess instead of checkers, to assess immediately a development and mentally play it out to the end, all the time asking the age-old question: "What's in it for me?"

In City Hall—where political plots unfold constantly and careers are often made or broken on all levels—and in ward offices from the lakefront to the Far Northwest Side, the talk Tuesday was of U.S. Rep. Dan Rostenkowski's troubles and the future of his congressional seat.

The House Ways and Means Committee chairman reputedly is the "Congressman A" incriminated Monday by a former House postmaster's guilty plea to three federal misdemeanor charges in an embezzling scheme.

Rostenkowski, 65, brushed past reporters outside his committee office with a terse "no comment" Tuesday morning.

Although there have been no formal charges filed against him, there was heavy betting on Capitol Hill and in Chicago that the 34-year member of Congress will have his term cut short by a federal grand jury or that he will not stand for re-election next year.

Under House rules, committee chairmen must resign their posts if they are indicted, although they can remain in Congress until their case is adjudicated.

But Rostenkowski "won't sit and be jerked around by this process, and he won't stay in Congress without his chairmanship," predicted one Chicago Democrat who is close to him.

The result was unbridled speculation about who might have the upper hand to replace Rostenkowski in the new 5th Congressional District, which sprawls from the 43rd Ward and the lakefront to the Northwest Side and suburban Schiller Park.

"Obviously there's going to be a lot of people looking at this situation, a lot of ambitions in play," said media consultant David Axelrod, who worked on the Democrat's campaign last year.

In deference to Rostenkowski and the uncertainty of his situation, most Democrats tried to be discreet in discussing their interest in the congressional seat.

The exception was former Ald. Dick Simpson, who lost his primary challenge to Rostenkowski last year and has publicly conducted a death watch of the laborious grand jury probe. Simpson renewed his demand for Rostenkowski to resign immediately.

The typical reaction, however, was along the lines of remarks by Ald. Eugene Schulter (47th), who formed a congressional campaign exploratory committee four months ago.

"I want to make it clear that at this stage of the game, I have no intentions to run against [Rostenkowski] if he decides to seek re-election," Schulter said. "But if it's a level playing field and he's not going to be there, I certainly want to be able to present my credentials to the district folks."

Counting herself among them, Marge Laurino said: "I suspect the congressional-wanna-bes certainly aren't going to make any moves on this until Rostenkowski decides what he's going to do."

Laurino, a Democratic state central committeewoman and daughter of Ald. Anthony Laurino (39th), said Rostenkowski's reputation among local voters was hurt more by a highly publicized 1989 confrontaton with senior citizens over health-care benefits than by the post office scandal.

In addition to Laurino and Schulter, Democrats mentioned as possible candidates to replace Rostenkowski, who is in his 16th term, include: state Sen. John Cullerton; first-term state Reps. Nancy Kaszak, Joseph Kotlarz and Rod Blagojevich; Cook County Commissioner Ted Lechowicz; and Ald. Michael Wojcik (35th).

The list is expected to grow, as is the level of confusion.

In the event that Rostenkowski were to resign more than 180 days before the November 1994 election, Gov. Jim Edgar would have to declare the seat vacant and a special election would then be held within 120 days.

Special and regular election campaigns for the seat could be under way almost simultaneously.

Apart from Simpson, the most active player Tuesday was Ald. Richard Mell (33rd), a well-known political weather vane who in recent times has been hawking the talents of Blagojevich, his son-in-law.

Mell himself toyed with the idea of running for Congress just last year in the new heavily Hispanic 4th District eventually taken over by former Ald. Luis Gutierrez (26th).

Mell again was floating the idea of sending his son-in-law to Congress, and he was even proudly showing reporters examples of the campaign handiwork he used to send Blagojevich to Springfield. One, featuring pictures of the Statue of Liberty and the candidate, the son of Serbian immigrants, "still brings tears to my eyes," Mell said.

Mayor Richard Daley, meantime, was cautious Tuesday when asked what he thought the future holds for Rostenkowski, his friend and ally. Again, confusion and uncertainty about the Rostenkowski case pervaded a City Hall news conference.

"No one knows. I don't know. You just don't know," said Daley, a former county prosecutor, who nonetheless expressed bewilderment about what the legal developments meant to Rostenkowski.

Asked to explain what Rostenkowski has done for Chicago, Daley quickly ticked off a list of accomplishments that indicated that he has been thinking about what life without "Rosty" would be like for the city: the passenger fee for airports; Kennedy Expressway reconstruction funding; the downtown circulator project; low-income housing tax credits; federal flood assistance for Chicago's South Side; and the expensive Deep Tunnel storm sewer project.

While he hastened to tell reporters that he wasn't calling the Rostenkowski probe a political witch hunt, Daley did say that he was "shocked" that the former U.S. attorney who initiated the grand jury investigation, Jay Stephens, has announced his candidacy for U.S. senator in Virginia.

Daley said such a blatant political move can raise some doubts about whether the investigation might have political motivations.

Axelrod recommended that anyone eager to replace Rostenkowski ought to "hold their fire."

He said: "This guy has been tried and convicted in the newspapers, but no action has been taken against him in the courts. We don't know if such action will be taken, and even if it is, we don't know that it will result in a conviction."

Rosty Lawyer Tried To Delay Plea Deal

WASHINGTON—An attorney for Rep. Dan Rostenkowski (D-Ill.) tried to head off the court hearing this week at which a former House postmaster pleaded guilty to charges that linked the congressman to embezzlement, Justice Department sources told the Chicago Sun-Times.

In asking for a delay, the lawyer cited Rostenkowski's key role in negotiations on President Clinton's economic program.

The former postmaster, Robert V. Rota, appeared in court as scheduled on Monday, when he pleaded guilty to embezzlement and conspiracy charges and prosecutors released documents indicating that Rota had admitted helping Rostenkowski embezzle at least $21,000. Rota agreed to cooperate with prosecutors in the plea bargain.

Sources said Rostenkowski's attorney had argued that disclosing the government's case against Rota at this time—and its implications for Rostenkowski—would have repercussions for Rostenkowski and his influence on the congressional conference committee now working on Clinton's deficit reduction program.

As chairman of the House Ways and Means Committee, Rostenkowski is a central figure in the negotiations.

The request for a delay was made to what one source described as a "lower-level" official in the Justice Department and was not believed to have been presented to Attorney General Janet Reno.

A spokesman at the White House, where Rostenkowski had lunch with Clinton on Tuesday to discuss the participated in the confernce committee meetings Monday and Tuesday. For more than an hour Tuesday, he managed a routine bill regarding most-favored-nation trade status for China on the House floor.

However, behind Rostenkowski's calm exterior is a worried man, associates said.

"This is tearing him up inside," said Rep. Richard Durbin (D-Ill.), a friend who talked to Rostenkowski after the stories broke Monday. "This whole ordeal has been difficult for him and his family. He feels he has done nothing wrong."

deficit reduction bill, said he knew of no request to anyone in the White House by anyone on Rostenkowski's behalf regarding the timing of the guilty plea by Rota.

A spokesman for Rostenkowski at his office on Capitol Hill referred questions about the case to Stanley M. Brand, one of the congressman's attorneys.

Neither Brand nor Judah Best, another lawyer for Rostenkowski, returned phone calls on Wednesday.

Former U.S. Attorney Jay B. Stephens, a Republican appointee who oversaw the House post office case until he was ousted by Reno last spring, has said his dismissal prolonged an investigation that he was about to wrap up.

Stephens has suggested that a factor in his dismissal was the Clinton administration's interest in protecting Rostenkowski's position as a powerful ally on Capitol Hill.

"The Clinton administration action in April, either by design or otherwise, had the effect of delaying the investigation by 90 to 120 days," Stephens said in an interview after Rota pleaded guilty.

It is not unusual for defense attorneys to ask prosecutors to delay court hearings, and sometimes for prosecutors to go along, but usually it is for more personal reasons.

"I don't think there's anything wrong, under normal circumstances, with a defense lawyer speaking with a prosecutor," said Lawrence C. Marshall, a Northwestern University Law School professor.

He said it would be perfectly appropriate, for example, for a defense lawyer to ask a prosecutor to delay an indictment so a client could attend a child's wedding without being under a legal cloud.

"The question here becomes whether this was basically an effort to cash in a political chit," Marshall said.

Rostenkowski, who was first elected to Congress in 1958 and is among its most powerful members, remains the subject of a federal investigation that is focusing on several areas of his finances in addition to the post office dealings.

Federal investigators are trying to determine whether there is a pattern to Rostenkowski using congressional or campaign expense funds to enrich himself and members of his family, sources have said.

As disclosed earlier by the Sun-Times, investigators have examined whether Rostenkowski carried "ghost payrollers" on his congressional staff, his practice of paying rent from the federal government for office space in buildings owned by family members, and his ownership of autos for which he initially charged the government.

Rostenkowski has denied any wrongdoing but has refused further comment on the case, which he branded last year as a political "witch-hunt."

He has refused to testify before the federal grand jury investigating these matters.

New Charges Put House Democrats on the Defensive

By KAREN TUMULTY

WASHINGTON—Fresh allegations that House Ways and Means Chairman Dan Rostenkowski (D-Ill.) was involved in a House Post Office embezzlement scheme has House members uneasy about the institution's reputation, still bruised from last year's scandals. They fear it could be in for another pounding.

Given Rostenkowski's enormous power, fellow Democrats were leery Wednesday of speaking about their fears publicly. Privately, however, many confided that they are deeply troubled by the position in which they find themselves.

"We should be calling for complete disclosure. Instead, we are on the defensive," said one exasperated freshman, who is part of a huge crop of new lawmakers elected in the wake of last year's scandals involving the House Post Office and its now-defunct bank.

Republicans, however, were quick to fan the accusations in a series of news conferences and speeches on the House floor. "The stink of corruption in the House post office threatens the most powerful of House Democratic leaders," said California Rep. Dana Rohrabacher (R-Huntington Beach).

The controversy erupted into a partisan tug-of-war over a question about releasing secret files and transcripts of testimony taken by a House task force that looked into the scandal after it surfaced last year.

Republicans called for immediate release of the task force's documents. But House Speaker Thomas S. Foley (D-Wash.) said that such disclosure could compromise a Justice Department investigation that is under way.

Late Wednesday afternoon, U.S. Atty. J. Ramsey Johnson sent a letter to Foley and Republican Leader Robert H. Michel (R-Ill.) asking them not to release the task force materials.

"The investigation is continuing, and inevitably involves many of the same witnesses and transactions that the task force inquiry included," he wrote. "For these reasons, I strongly request that the House refrain from releasing additional materials generated by the task force inquiry."

Many Democrats were stunned Monday when former House Postmaster Robert V. Rota admitted that he had conspired with lawmakers to provide thousands of dollars in exchange for stamps that the House members purchased with taxpayer money.

Although the plea agreement did not identify those members allegedly involved, other documents and sources close to the investigation revealed that the individual referred to as "Congressman A" was in fact Rostenkowski. Congressman A received $21,300 in cash, according to the documents.

If Rostenkowski is indicted, as many in the House now expect, he will be forced to step down from his committee chairmanship, effectively giving up his role as chief House steward of President Clinton's economic program.

Foley insisted that he has seen no signs the ethical cloud surrounding the chairman has hurt his effectiveness in negotiations with the Senate to write a final version of the economic plan.

"No one has expressed to me the view that the conference committee is or should be impeded by anything else that is happening outside the conference and the Congress," the Speaker said.

"They're doing well. They're proceeding. We want them to continue to do that."

One House negotiator, Rep. Charles B. Rangel (D-N.Y.), brushed aside questions about whether Rostenkowski might be replaced. "That would be deciding where you want to bury a guy when you visit him in the hospital," he said.

Prosecutors Ask Data Stay Secret In House Probe

By DAVID ROGERS
Staff Reporter of THE WALL STREET JOURNAL

WASHINGTON — Federal prosecutors investigating Ways and Means Committee Chairman Dan Rostenkowski asked the House leadership not to release still-secret testimony from last year's task force inquiry of the House Post Office.

The letter from J. Ramsey Johnson, U.S. attorney for the District of Columbia, provoked angry protests from the Republican leadership. But the prosecutor said he had "serious concern" that releasing the transcripts might hurt his inquiry into allegations of embezzlement involving lawmakers and cash-for-stamps transactions.

"The release of such materials could have a significant adverse effect on the ongoing criminal investigation being conducted by this office into matters associated with the House Post Office," said Mr. Johnson. "Accordingly, I ask you not to authorize the release of such materials."

Former Postmaster Robert Rota pleaded guilty this week to charges growing out of the investigation, and accompanying court papers implicated Mr. Rostenkowski, a Chicago Democrat, as one of two unidentified congressmen alleged to have received thousands of dollars in cash from Mr. Rota.

Republicans seized on the revelations to demand a fuller accounting of the scandal, and despite Mr. Johnson's request, the GOP leadership said last night that it will still press today for the immediate release of the task force transcripts.

A career prosecutor before being named to the U.S. attorney's post this year, Mr. Johnson's task is being made more difficult by widely publicized comments by his predecessor, Republican Jay Stephens. Mr. Stephens, who is running for the U.S. Senate in Virginia, has suggested the Clinton administration is slowing the Rostenkowski investigation until Congress has completed negotiations on the tax bill.

Texas Rep. Richard Armey, chairman of the House GOP caucus, said yesterday that Mr. Rostenkowski should "step aside" from presiding over the negotiations if, in fact, he was among the congressmen cited in the court papers.

The bitterness among Republicans surfaced when a freshman, Rep. John Linder of Georgia, suggested the scandal may yet lead to Speaker Thomas Foley's "bedroom." This allusion was to the fact that Mr. Foley's wife and unpaid aide, Heather Foley, was among those questioned by the task force about her knowledge of the early stages of the Post Office inquiry. And the GOP strategy now appears aimed partly at embarrassing the House speaker by refocusing attention on the Capitol police's complaints of obstruction of its inquiry, which Mrs. Foley denies.

The partisan maneuvering spilled onto the floor of the House last night, provoking a rebuke from Majority Leader Richard Gephardt, who dismissed suggestions that the leadership had sought Mr. Johnson's letter as a means to blunt the GOP pressure. "I hear a lot about law and order," said the Missouri Democrat. "The best way to represent law and order is to cooperate with law enforcement officers."

Rostenkowski's Troubles Could Tarnish Congress

Colleagues are puzzled by small amount of money involved

By Linda Feldmann
Staff writer of The Christian Science Monitor

WASHINGTON

WASHINGTON is reeling over the news that Rep. Dan Rostenkowski (D) of Illinois, one of the most powerful members of Congress, may be set to take a fall.

The burly Chicago ward-heeler has been implicated in a scandal involving embezzlement of funds from the House Post Office. If indicted, he would have to step down as chairman of the House's Ways and Means Committee.

This came as a blow to the White House and to Congress's Democratic leadership, which together have their first chance in 12 years to show Democrats can govern. Mr. Rostenkowski, touted by colleagues as a master of the political process, is the top House negotiator with the Senate in the tough deficit-reduction conference in progress. And he is central to the administration's health-care and welfare reforms.

Rostenkowski's troubles also further tarnish the image of Congress, which in the past year has sought to eliminate patronage and is working on reforms to make it more effective in its primary function, lawmaking.

Around Washington, Democrats and some Republicans are shaking their heads in disbelief that one so powerful and with access to much bigger money than he allegedly took could get wrapped up in such a scheme.

"Everybody's going around [on Capitol Hill] with a stiff upper lip, but I can tell you a lot of people are really aching over this," says an aide to a top House Democrat.

"Well, I just believe the charges against Danny don't make any sense," Treasury Secretary Lloyd Bentsen a Monitor breakfast Tuesday.

Rostenkowski's name had surfaced last year in connection with charges of embezzlement from the House Post Office, but the link grew much stronger Monday with the court testimony of former House Postmaster Robert Rota. In a plea bargain, Mr. Rota admitted to exchanging postage-stamp vouchers for cash to several members of Congress.

Two members cited in court papers were identified only as Congressman A and Congressman B, but comparisons of postal records submitted by Rostenkowski identify him as Congressman A, who Rota says received $21,300 between 1987 and 1991. The other congressman is identified as former Rep. Joe Kolter (D) of Pennsylvania. A Rostenkowski spokesman said the congressman has "no comment."

A senior White House official says the situation is not affecting the House-Senate budget conference, a delicate operation in which virtually every Democratic vote is essential.

"We are proceeding apace; nothing's changed," says the official, who is involved in the conference. But he acknowledges that the White House has had a discussion with Rep. Sam Gibbons (D) of Florida, who would take over as chairman of Ways and Means. And, the official says, life without "Rosty" would make it more difficult to get health care reform through Congress.

Investigations toward a possible indictment will reportedly take several weeks, and the budget conference is expected to finish by early August.

Representative Gibbons says Rostenkowski "seemed himself" in conference Tuesday. "He handles pressure well," he said.

The low-key Gibbons would find filling Rostenkowski's shoes a tall order. "I'm certainly interested in being chairman, though I didn't want it to happen under these circumstances," he said. When asked about his style, he said: "I've been a subcommittee chairman for years, and I try to build consensus. I try to do what's correct."

Gibbons "just doesn't have the sheer force of personality" that Rostenkowski has, says the Democratic leadership aide. "When you say 'the chairman,' that means only one person."

In congressional offices, members and aides are trying to understand a situation that, on the surface, doesn't make sense. Last year, Rostenkowski could have retired from Congress and legally kept his $1 million campaign war chest. Why, Washington is asking, would he take the time and trouble just to take in a spare $1,000 here and there?

Some Republicans, however, seem to be taking the news with a partisan glee, and are working to make sure the public knows the people in trouble are from the Democratic Party, which has run Congress for 40 years. "Just as in Japan, this is about corrupt one-party rule for four decades," said Rep. Newt Gingrich, House Republican Whip, in a fax issued just after Rota's plea.

"Everybody's going around [on Capitol Hill] with a stiff upper lip, but I can tell you a lot of people are really aching over this," says an aide to a top House Democrat.

"Well, I just believe the charges against Danny don't make any sense," Treasury Secretary Lloyd Bentsen a Monitor breakfast Tuesday.

Rostenkowski's name had surfaced last year in connection with charges of embezzlement from the House Post Office, but the link grew much stronger Monday with the court testimony of former House Postmaster Robert Rota. In a plea bargain, Mr. Rota admitted to exchanging postage-stamp vouchers for cash to several members of Congress.

Two members cited in court papers were identified only as Congressman A and Congressman B, but comparisons of postal records submitted by Rostenkowski identify him as Congressman A, who Rota says received $21,300 between 1987 and 1991. The other congressman is identified as former Rep. Joe Kolter (D) of Pennsylvania. A Rostenkowski spokesman said the congressman has "no comment."

A senior White House official says the situation is not affecting the House-Senate budget conference, a delicate operation in which virtually every Democratic vote is essential.

"We are proceeding apace; nothing's changed," says the official, who is involved in the conference. But he acknowledges that the White House has had a discussion with Rep. Sam Gibbons (D) of Florida, who would take over as chairman of Ways and Means. And, the official says, life without "Rosty" would make it more difficult to get health care reform through Congress.

Investigations toward a possible indictment will reportedly take several weeks, and the budget conference is expected to finish by early August.

Representative Gibbons says Rostenkowski "seemed himself" in conference Tuesday. "He handles pressure well," he said.

The low-key Gibbons would find filling Rostenkowski's shoes a tall order. "I'm certainly interested in being chairman, though I didn't want it to happen under these circumstances," he said. When asked about his style, he said: "I've been a subcommittee chairman for years, and I try to build consensus. I try to do what's correct."

Gibbons "just doesn't have the sheer force of personality" that Rostenkowski has, says the Democratic leadership aide. "When you say 'the chairman,' that means only one person."

In congressional offices, members and aides are trying to understand a situation that, on the surface, doesn't make sense. Last year, Rostenkowski could have retired from Congress and legally kept his $1 million campaign war chest. Why, Washington is asking, would he take the time and trouble just to take in a spare $1,000 here and there?

Some Republicans, however, seem to be taking the news with a partisan glee, and are working to make sure the public knows the people in trouble are from the Democratic Party, which has run Congress for 40 years. "Just as in Japan, this is about corrupt one-party rule for four decades," said Rep. Newt Gingrich, House Republican Whip, in a fax issued just after Rota's plea.

Probing Congressman A

The Democrats are doing what must be done

Now that the former postmaster of the House of Representatives has admitted scheming with some lawmakers to embezzle post office funds, the storm clouds are gathering over Rep. Dan Rostenkowski of Illinois — the alleged "Congressman A" of this legal and political drama.

While the widening scandal could present problems for the Clinton administration, and could lower the public's already low regard for Congress, it's also a welcome sign that the Democratic-controlled executive branch is acting responsibly, even relentlessly, in probing other Democrats in Congress.

Many doubted that a full-scale investigation would continue after Attorney General Janet Reno sent form letters to almost all the nation's U.S. Attorneys to clean out their desks. When that happened in March, the Republican U.S. Attorney in Washington, D.C., complained publicly that his office's probe of the post office affair might get deep-sixed for political reasons. Adding credibility to his concern was the identity of one of the people being investigated: Mr. Rostenkowski, a one-man juggernaut for the Clinton economic program.

But Monday's plea bargain by the former postmaster, Robert V. Rota, seems to refute this concern. With his admission of guilt, Mr. Rota effectively identified Mr. Rostenkowski and former Rep. Joe Kolter (D., Pa.) as two members of Congress who benefited from the stamps-for-money exchanges. (Both men have denied any wrongdoing.)

If Mr. Rostenkowski is indicted, it would deprive President Clinton of a key ally on upcoming fights such as health-care reform because the rules would require him to step aside as chairman of the Ways and Means Committee. And if he were found guilty of embezzlement, he might well be expelled from Congress.

That would be an ignominious end to a congressional career whose high points (such as his work for low-income tax relief, loophole-closing and deficit-cutting) have thus far exceeded their low points (such as secretive tax breaks for favored corporations and fat cats).

Whether people like the guy or not, the public should be glad to see this investigation moving forward. Americans want justice to be pursued without regard to politics, and thus far, that's what they're getting.

The Real Rostenkowski Problem

A front-page picture yesterday showed President Clinton lunching amiably with Representative Dan Rostenkowski of Illinois, just a day after the powerful chairman of the House Ways and Means Committee was linked in court to an embezzlement scandal at the House Post Office. The smiles on their faces masked the awkwardness of the moment.

Don't worry, say Democratic lawmakers, Mr. Rostenkowski's troubles won't affect the President's deficit-reduction program. It's hard to believe that Mr. Rostenkowski's legendary legislative skills won't be hurt. But his skills are not the issue; the issue is the cloud that hovers over his head.

His colleagues remain in deep denial about that cloud. True, he says he's innocent, and has not formally been charged with anything. But whether or not the current allegations lead to indictment, he rendered himself unfit for a leadership post a year ago when he refused to testify before a grand jury looking into possible corruption in the House. The latest disclosures merely underscore the cowardice of House Democrats who refuse to offend their influential colleague.

When Attorney General Janet Reno clumsily demanded the resignation of all United States Attorneys back in March, she raised fears that the new Administration might try to derail the financial auditing of Mr. Rostenkowski begun by the Republican U.S. Attorney Jay Stephens. But this week that office — now answerable to a Democratic Administration — reached a plea-bargain agreement with Robert Rota, the former Postmaster of the House of Representatives.

To Ms. Reno's credit, the investigation begun by Mr. Stephens appears to be proceeding without political interference. Mr. Rota pleaded guilty to one count of conspiracy and two counts of embezzlement. He said he had helped Mr. Rostenkowski — identified in court papers as "Congressman A" — steal more than $20,000. Prosecutors are said to be gathering evidence of transactions in Chicago, in an effort to link separate accusations into a more serious case.

Meanwhile Mr. Rostenkowski continues to influence budget, health care, welfare and other areas under the Ways and Means Committee's jurisdiction. That seems increasingly inappropriate.

Some news reports allege other dubious transactions by Mr. Rostenkowski involving misuse of campaign funds. By themselves those reports, along with Mr. Rota's accusation, wouldn't justify depriving Mr. Rostenkowski of his chairmanship — or President Clinton of the Congressman's talents. But last summer Mr. Rostenkowski should have been willing to testify openly and under oath about House operations to a grand jury. He cited his Fifth Amendment right against self-incrimination. That was his right as a citizen, and as a member of Congress. But by evading scrutiny and responsibility he forfeited any claim to his pivotal position.

The Democrats could have acted earlier when a transition would have been less disruptive. No one, not even the able Mr. Rostenkowski, is indispensable. To let him remain front and center in the budget process now can only breed further disrespect for Congress and many more awkward moments for the President. Mr. Rostenkowski's colleagues should ask him to step aside now.

Prosecutor: Keep House probe files secret

WASHINGTON—The prosecutor investigating Rep. Dan Rostenkowski (D-Ill.) is opposing Republican calls for release of confidential information gathered last year in a congressional examination of wrongdoing at the House post office.

In a letter Wednesday to House Speaker Thomas Foley (D-Wash.), U.S. Atty. J. Ramsey Johnson said making the documents public "could have a significant adverse effect on the ongoing criminal investigation."

Johnson asked Foley to keep the documents under wraps because the criminal inquiry "inevitably involves many of the same witnesses and transactions" that the special House task force examined last year.

Foley did not respond immediately, but House Minority Leader Bob Michel (R-Ill.) said he would introduce a resolution Thursday calling for full disclosure of all the documents.

While most Republicans would be likely to vote the resolution, Democrats would face a choice between a desire for openness and concern about being blamed if the action jeopardized the investigation of Rostenkowski, the 65-year-old Chicago Democrat who chairs the House Ways and Means Committee.

Rostenkowski has consistently denied any wrongdoing.

But a former House postal employee who was one of the first to implicate him said court documents were "very accurate" in outlining a scheme through which the congressman allegedly exchanged official stamp vouchers for $20,000 in cash.

In a brief interview with Congressional Quarterly magazine, James C. Smith confirmed press reports that former House Postmaster Robert Rota asked him for the cash and told him that Rostenkowski was one of the House members receiving it.

Rota pleaded guilty Monday to charges that for years he provided a "largely untraceable source of illegal cash" to several congressmen.

"I feel sorry for Rostenkowski," said Smith, who got his job through Rostenkowski's patronage. "I just wonder if he ever sat down and thought about what he was doing. He's not a bad guy, really."

Smith, who will be a key witness if Rostenkowski is indicted and goes to trial, said he thinks the investigation "will probably come to a swift conclusion now."

In televised interviews, the former top prosecutor in the case, Jay Stephens, said he also thinks it is "simply a matter of time" until formal charges are brought against Rostenkowski, who has served in Congress since 1959.

Stephens, who supervised the lengthy investigation until last spring, said on ABC's "Nightline" Tuesday that prosecutors are investigating the possibility that Rostenkowski pocketed "tens of thousands or hundreds of thousands of dollars" through a variety of schemes.

Stephens confirmed reports that investigators are exploring whether Rostenkowski "laundered" significant sums of money by writing checks on his re-election fund and political-action fund under the guise of buying stamps.

He added that investigators are scrutinizing Rostenkowski's car and office leases in Chicago that involve tens of thousands of taxpayer dollars.

Stephens, a Republican appointee as U.S. attorney who was asked to resign by the Clinton administration, also alleged that his removal slowed the inquiry and "bought a substantial amount of time" for President Clinton, who has relied heavily on Rostenkowski in pushing his economic plan.

But in a shouting match with Stephens on CNN's "Crossfire" Wednesday night, Rep. Mel Reynolds (D-Ill.) said it was "reprehensible" for Stephens to publicly discuss the details of allegations against Rostenkowski based on evidence that he was privy to as a prosecutor.

Reynolds, the newest member of the Ways and Means Committee, and Rep. Charles Rangel (D-N.Y.), a veteran on the committee, charged that Stephens was making the TV appearances to drum up publicity for a possible bid for the U.S. Senate in Virginia.

Rangel said Stephens' actions were "really a disgrace to the presumption of innocence."

Congressional officials said some of the files from their inquiry into the House post office scandal last year could touch on the allegations involving Rostenkowski.

House scandal heating up

GOP spotlights Rostenkowski's role

By DAVID HESS
Herald Washington Bureau

WASHINGTON — The controversy over possible thefts from the House Post Office by House Ways and Means Committee Chairman Dan Rostenkowski, D-Ill., and other Democrats continued Wednesday as the U.S. attorney warned that Republican demands for release of House files related to the case could impede his inquiry.

Rostenkowski was identified as a target in an ongoing Justice Department investigation of House Post Office thefts earlier this week when former House Postmaster Robert Rota pleaded guilty to embezzlement charges.

Several Republicans made clear Wednesday that they intend to turn up the heat under majority Democrats by demanding immediate disclosure of the post office files. They believe the files would finger Rostenkowski and perhaps as many as eight or 10 other members, mostly Democrats.

Rostenkowski

Acting U.S. Attorney J. Ramsey Johnson urged House leaders Wednesday to resist the pressure for instant disclosure of the files.

"I am writing to express this office's serious concern that the release of such materials could have a significant adverse effect on the ongoing criminal investigation [of] the House Post Office," Johnson wrote. "Accordingly, I ask you not to authorize the release of such materials."

The papers in question formed the investigative record of a bipartisan task force that last year probed various allegations of wrongdoing by Rota, several post office employees and members of Congress.

The task force excoriated the operations of the post office and forced Rota's departure, but came to no conclusion on whether specific members of Congress had been involved in criminal misdeeds.

Rostenkowski's troubles could not have come at a worse time for President Clinton.

The president and his top advisers have been banking on Rostenkowski's clout and skill to help steer Clinton's controversial budget package through the current House-Senate conference.

But Rostenkowski's reputation has been battered and his influence threatened by Rota's guilty plea.

Rep. Dick Armey, R-Texas, said that if Rostenkowski is the culprit that Rota identified to federal prosecutors as part of the embezzlement scheme, "then he should step aside from presiding over the largest tax increase in American history."

The GOP has insisted that Clinton's budget package, which calls for a $500 billion reduction in the deficit through a combination of tax hikes and spending cuts, is essentially a big tax bill.

Under House rules, Rostenkowski would not be obliged to step aside unless he was indicted.

But Armey said he should do so now.

"It's a matter of trust," the Texas conservative said. "It would be hard for the conference committee to produce a package that would have credibility under his direction."

Over the past two days, Rostenkowski has been lauded and defended by the president and top administration aides. On Wednesday morning, Treasury Secretary Lloyd Bentsen was asked if Rostenkowski's legal troubles were hurting Clinton's bill in the conference.

"I don't think that's a part of the conference, or a part of the problem," Bentsen said.
